Charley's going to the Broker's,[†1] he could not foresee that so good an opening would arise in Barings as had suddenly presented itself. That the Brokers gave Charley the highest character for ability and zeal, and that he wld be glad to take him into Barings (instantly if I pleased) beginning at £50 a year. I immediately sent off to Charley, and he goes to Barings tomorrow. I expect the Broker's to have been a device and trial altogether—to get a telescopic view of a youth with the double suspicion on him arising out of his being an author's son and an Eton boy.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To W. WIGHTWICK,[†2] 24 SEPTEMBER 1855*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Folkestone, Monday Twenty Fourth September | 1855

Dear Sir

I have seen Mr. Francis and have explained to him that in begging you to admit the Members of the Working Mens' Educational Institution, generally, to my reading, at the Working Mens' reduced admission-price of threepence each,[†3] I have full reliance on the privilege not being abused, and feel a conviction that such of their members as do not really belong to what we generally understand by the term "Working Men" will forbear to claim it. He has assured me that he knows me to be right in this trustfulness. He thinks that in a case where a tradesman of the better sort is a member of both Institutions and pays for himself as a member of your more expensive one, he might claim the cheaper privilege in behalf of some member of his own family. I think so too, and that in this he would not be unreasonable.

Within my experience you may safely trust the honor of any class, if you will only appeal to it plainly, and make the case perfectly understood. I hope we shall all be in good humour and good accord in this instance.

I have impressed upon Mr. Francis the great desirability of his letting you know as soon as possible, how many persons will present themselves for that cheap admission on the night, in order that you may be able to arrange for their accommodation. He told me in reply, that he had no doubt of being able to get this information pretty correctly, next Monday night.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. Wightwick Esquire.

To W. H. WILLS, 25 SEPTEMBER 1855

Text from N, II, 693.

Folkestone | Tuesday, Twenty-Fifth September, 1855

My Dear Wills,

I write hastily,[†1] after a day's work.

Half a Life Time Ago[†2] will be well divided, I think, as you propose. I have marked a place at page 235[†3] where the effect would be obviously served by making a new chapter. Is such a thing to be done with that lady? If so, do it.[†4]

I don't like three such short articles in one No. as London Stones, The Caitiff Postman, and The Erards.[†5] Can't you remedy this? It looks so patchy.

I think you ought to set your want of participation[†6] in No. 288[†7] right by reading Out of Town[†8] in every one of Breach's 500 copies.

It would be particularly well-timed if we could hit the Charter House again, hard.[†9] Can anything be done out of private information,[†10] young Hale's pamphlet,[†11] and a communication in reference to Thackeray's distorted praise of it[†12] (which I remonstrated with him about), in the Examiner two Sundays ago?[†13] I should particularly, of course with all respect for and praise of Thackeray,[†14] [like] to knock that destructive bit of sentiment in connexion with the poor brothers slap over as with a rifleshot.

Yours always faithfully | (and at present addle-headedly)

[CD]

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 26 SEPTEMBER 1855

Mention in American Art Association and Anderson Galleries catalogue, 9 & 10 Feb 1938; MS (3rd person); dated Office of Household Words, 26 Sep 55.

To SIR ALEXANDER DUFF GORDON,[†1] 27 SEPTEMBER 1855*

MS Winifred A. Myers (Autographs) Ltd.

Folkestone, Kent. | Twenty Seventh September 1855

My Dear Gordon

I never lecture on any subject whatsoever. Perhaps the letter means to ask me to read my Christmas Carol. I am sorry that I cannot make any appointment to do it. I am very closely occupied with my own pursuits, and have made as many promises to read this book for such Institutions as it will take me two Christmases to fulfil.

Almost every day in the week, I answer three or four similar letters.

Very Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Sir Alexander Duff Gordon

To WILKIE COLLINS, 30 SEPTEMBER 1855

MS Morgan Library.

Folkestone, Sunday Thirtieth September 1855

My Dear Collins.

Welcome from the bosom of the Deep![†2] If a hornpipe will be acceptable to you at any time (as a reminder of what the three brothers were always doing),[†3] I shall be, as the chairman says at Mr. Evans's[†4] "happy to oblige".

I have almost finished No. 3,[†5] in which I have relieved my indignant soul with a scarifier.[†6] Sticking at it day after day, I am the *In*completest Letter Writer[†7] imaginable—seem to have no idea of holding a pen for any other purpose but that book.

My fair Laura[†1] has not yet reported concerning Paris, but I should think will have done so before I see you. And now to that point. I purpose being in town on Monday the 8th. when I have promised to dine with Forster.[†2] At the office between ½ past 11 and 1 that day, I will expect you unless I hear from you to the contrary. Of course the H. W. stories are at your disposition.[†3] If you should have completed your idea[†4] we might breakfast together at the G on the Tuesday morning and discuss it. Or I shall be on town, after 10 on the Monday night. At the office I will tell you the idea of the Xmas No.[†5] which will put you in train, I hope, for a story.[†6] I have postponed the Shipwreck idea[†7] for a year, as it seemed to require more force from me than I could well give it with the weight of a new start upon me.

All here send their kindest remembrances. We missed you very much, and the Plorn was quite inconsolable. We slide down Cæsar[†8] occasionally. I find the elder Little Lemon[†9] makes too much noise (when my attention is rendered free by solitude), in eating biscuits; and she has also a Franconi-like[†10] way of sending her tongue galloping round the arena formed by the inside of her mouth, after taking any kind of sustenance, which has caused me much affliction.

They launched that Boat the rapid building of which you remember, the other day. All the fishermen in the place, all the nondescripts, and all the boys, pulled at it with ropes from [†a]6 A M to 4 P M.[†a] Every now and then the ropes broke, and they all fell down in the shingle. The obstinate way in which the beastly thing wouldn't move, was so exasperating, that I wondered they didn't shoot it or burn it. Whenever it moved an inch they all cheered; whenever it wouldn't move, they all swore. Finally when it was quite given over, some one tumbled against it accidentally (as it appeared to me, looking out of my window here), and it instantly shot about a mile into the sea and they all stood looking at it helplessly.

Kind regards to Pigott,[†11] in which all unite.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

Have you received Peter's "Circular"[†12] about a parting dinner to Thackeray?

To JOHN FORSTER, [30 SEPTEMBER 1855]

Extract in F, XI, iii, 827. Date: 30 Sep 55, according to Forster.

I really am serious in thinking—and I have given as painful consideration to the subject as a man with children to live and suffer after him can honestly give to it—that representative government is become altogether a failure with us, that the English gentilities and subserviences render the people unfit for it, and that the whole thing has broken down since that great seventeenth-century time, and has no hope in it.

To AUGUSTUS PHILLIPS,[†1] 30 SEPTEMBER 1855*

MS Dover Public Library. Address: Augustus Phillips Esquire | Museum and Philosophical Institution | Dover.

Folkestone | Thirtieth September 1855.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Phillips, and begs to say that he cannot have the pleasure of complying with the request preferred in Mr. Phillips's note. He is very busily occupied with his own avocations, and has made as many promises to read for Institutions, as he can hope to find leisure to fulfil within the next two years.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, [25-30 SEPTEMBER 1855]

Mention in To Macready, 4 Oct 55. Date: referred to as "last week" on 4 Oct.

Enclosing a letter from Macready to Miss Coutts, sent to CD first, on behalf of "Little Warner".

October

To PROSPECTIVE CONTRIBUTORS TO HOUSEHOLD WORDS CHRISTMAS NUMBER,[†2] [EARLY OCTOBER 1855]*

MS Huntington Library. Date: soon after 30 Sep, when he broached the idea of the Extra Christmas No. to Collins.

A traveller who finds himself the only person staying at an Inn on Christmas Day, is at his wits' end what to do with himself; the rather as he is of a timid and reserved character, and, being shut up in his solitary sitting-room, doesn't well know how to come out of it and speak to anybody. The general idea of the Number is, that he overcomes this feeling—finds out the stories of the different people belonging to the Inn—or some curious experience that each has had—and writes down what he discovers.

Both for the sake of a variety between this No. and previous Christmas numbers, and also for the preservation of the idea, it is necessary that the stories should not be in the first person, but should be turned as if this traveller were recording them. Thus the Headings will not be The Waiter's Story, the Cook's Story, The Chambermaid's Story, &c, but simply The Waiter—The Cook—The Chambermaid—and under each head the traveller himself is supposed to tell whatever he heard from, or fancied about, or found out about, that particular person.[†1] Thus the person to whom the story belongs may be described, if necessary, as pretty or ugly—of such an age—of such a bringing up—and what is related about him or her may have happened at that Inn, or at another Inn, or at no Inn; and may belong to that person's present condition in life, or to some previous condition in life—and not only to himself or herself, but (if necessary) to other persons encountered in life.

To H. K. BROWNE, [EARLY OCTOBER] 1855

Mention in To Wills, 19 Oct 55. Date: probably written at beginning of month, well before leaving Folkestone on 13 Oct, by when he expected to have heard from Browne.

Explaining to him at length about the illustrations for Little Dorrit.[†2]

To EDWARD CHAPMAN, 4 OCTOBER 1855

MS Mr E. Stanley Brookes.

Folkestone, Kent. | Thursday Fourth October 1855

Dear Sir

I have looked over the accounts, and am glad to see that we suffer less from this sad War than might have been expected.

Please to pay my balance to my account at Coutts's,[†3] as usual.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Edward Chapman Esquire.

To W. C. MACREADY, 4 OCTOBER 1855

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Folkestone, Fourth October 1855. Thursday

My Dearest Macready.

I have been hammering away in that strenuous manner at my book, that I have had leisure for scarcely any such letters but such as I have been obliged to write; having a horrible temptation when I lay down my book-pen to run out on the breezy Downs here, tear up the hills, slide down the same, and conduct myself in a frenzied manner for the relief that only exercise gives me.

Your letter to Miss Coutts in behalf of little Warner,[†1] I dispatched straightway. She is at present among the Pyrenées[†2] (I can't write it plainly), and a letter from her, crossed that one of mine in which I enclosed yours, last week.

Pray stick to that dim notion you have of coming to Paris![†3] How delightful it would be to see your aged countenance and perfectly bald head[†4] in that Capital! It will renew your youth to visit a theatre (previously dining at the Trois frères),[†5] in company with the jocund Boy who now addresses you. Do, do, stick to it.

You will be pleased to hear, I know, that Charley has gone into Baring's house under very auspicious circumstances. Mr. Bates of that firm had done me the kindness to place him at the Broker's where he was. And when said Bates wrote to me a fortnight ago to say that an excellent opening had presented itself at Barings, he added that the Brokers gave Charley "so high a character for ability and zeal" that it would be unfair to receive him as a Volunteer, and he must begin at a Fifty Pound Salary. To which I graciously consented.

As to the suffrage, I have lost hope even in the Ballot.[†6] We appear to me to have proved the failure of Representative Institutions, without an educated and advanced people to support them. What with teaching people to "keep in their stations"—what with bringing up the Soul and Body of the land to be a good child, or to go to the Beershop to go a-poaching and go to the Devil—what with having no such thing as a Middle Class (for, though we are perpetually bragging of it as our safety, it is nothing but a poor fringe on the mantle of the Upper)—what with flunkeyism, toadyism, letting the most contemptible Lords come in for all manner of places—making asses of ourselves for Prince Albert to saddle[†7]—reading the Court Circular for the New Testament—and bearing such positively awful slaver in the Papers, as I saw the other day about a visit of Lord Palmerston's to Woolwich arsenal[†8]—I do reluctantly believe that the English people are, habitually, consenting parties to the miserable imbecility into which we have fallen, and never will help themselves out of it. Who is to do it, if anybody is, God knows. But at present we are on the down-hill road to being conquered, and the people will[†1] be content to hear incapable and insolent Premiers sing Rule Britannia, and will not[†1] be saved.

In No. III of my new book I have been blowing off a little of the indignant steam which would otherwise blow me up;[†2] and with God's leave I shall walk in the same all the days of my life[†3]—but I have no present political faith or hope—not a grain.

I am going to read the Carol here, tomorrow, in a long Carpenter's shop—which looks far more alarming as a place to hear in, than the Town Hall at Birmingham.

Kindest loves from all to your dear sister, Kate, and the darlings. It is blowing a gale here from the S. W.[†4] and raining like mad.

Ever Most affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

W. C. Macready Esquire

To MR FRIEND,[†5] 5 OCTOBER 1855*

MS City of Dunedin Public Library.

Folkestone | Fifth October 1855.

Mr. Charles Dickens sends his compliments to Mr. Friend, and begs to say that he cannot have the pleasure of complying with Mr. Friend's request.[†6] He receives so many similar letters, that he finds it difficult to answer them, however briefly; he is very busily occupied with his own pursuits; and he is about to leave this neighbourhood.

To LADY DUFF GORDON, 6 OCTOBER 1855*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Folkestone, Kent. | Sixth October 1855

My Dear Lady Gordon.

I do not care to have mere translations for Household Words.[†7] They are in many respects objectionable for such a publication. But, a good account of a curious book, introducing translated passages from it—such a description of a book as may present it with the describer's originality and individuality, as well as its own—is a kind of article that I always like.

I should think that the book you mention,[†1] would answer the purpose extremely well.—In answer to your uncle's bailiff,[†2] your slave replies a Guinea a page.[†3]

I do[†4] remember that I once (in a former state of existence, it appears to me) solaced myself with the hope of coming to pass a day with you. But behold, I am on the margin of the deep—working at a new book—going up steep hills all the rest of the day—plunging into salt water at early hours of the morning—and generally living the life of an amiable fighting-man in training for his next match.

Ever Faithfully Yours nevertheless

CHARLES DICKENS

Lady Gordon

To THOMAS BEARD, 7 OCTOBER 1855

MS Dickens House.

Folkestone, Sunday Seventh October 1855

My Dear Beard.

I have been waiting day after day in the hope of hearing from you to the pleasant effect that you were coming down, but, anticipating generally where the Shoe (Lane) pinched, forbore to write.

This morning I received your letter. Some intention had been upon me to start for Paris next Saturday. But you may rest assured that nothing will stir me from this post until the Monday you mention—unless it should be very very fine on Saturday or Sunday, and I should persist in carrying you over to Boulogne. In which case you will put yourself entirely in your old Doctor's hands, and will take all his prescriptions, as of old, with submission and confidence.

Next Thursday I shall be in Town, to preside at a dinner to Thackeray.[†5] Consequently Sir, you will have the goodness to come back with me next Friday[†6] by Day-Express at half past one. Various light restoratives shall be prepared, and if I don't screw that peg up something higher in four and twenty hours—never believe in me again.

It blew a gale of wind last night, and Stone and Egg went across in the Steamer this morning. With a heavy Sou Wester rolling in, about five and thirty feet high, the old Pig of Pigs[†7] persisted in assuring me (wagging his head from side to side), that "it wasn't rough my boy." The passengers were all put below—the Captain having some unaccountable impression that it wasn't smooth—they went out, with the sea curling over the masts and raining down the funnel—and the last sound I heard before they dashed into the uproar and confusion was Stone in the midst of a perfect Stonehenge of white basins, contradicting the Steward.[†1]

Kindest remembrances to all at home.

Ever My Dear Beard | Heartily Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To BERNHARD TAUCHNITZ, 8 OCTOBER 1855

Text from Curt Otto, Der Verlag Bernhard Tauchnitz, 1837-1912, Leipzig, 1912, p. 53.

Folkestone, Kent, Monday, October 8th, 1855.

Many thanks for your letter which was perfectly plain, and written in far more scholarly English than your modesty can imagine.... It is a pleasure to me to renew our former terms,[†2] and to have any dealings with one whom I so highly esteem.

To ALBERT SMITH, [9 OCTOBER 1855]

Mention in next. Date: written the same day.

Giving details of the farewell dinner for Thackeray and referring him to Cunningham.

To PETER CUNNINGHAM, 9 OCTOBER 1855†

MS Berg Collection.

Folkestone, Tuesday October Ninth | 1855

My Dear Cunningham

Arriving here this afternoon, I find the note written on the other side, from Albert Smith.[†3] I have replied to him that the Dinner is on such a day and at such a place and at such a price[†4]—that it is private, and that the lists are closed, but that I suppose he would not be excluded—that the arrangements are, however, under your[†5] charge, and that if he hold to his intention of coming over, he had best write straight to you.[†6]

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To JOHN DOYLE,[†1] 9 OCTOBER 1855*

MS Yale University Library. Address: John Doyle Esquire | 17 Cambridge Terrace | Hyde Park.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS

Tuesday Ninth October 1855

My Dear Sir

I have caused the "little man"[†2] to be written to, but I cannot honestly encourage him to pursue his idea. It would be indefensible conduct on my part to lead him on to write—in German too, to be translated here—articles for these pages, when I have no idea of his capacity as an author, and when he himself requires to be advised what to write about. The result would so probably be his own great disappointment that it is but just to tell him plainly that I fear he had better leave it alone.

My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Doyle Esquire

To F. W. HAMSTEDE,[†3] 9 OCTOBER 1855*

MS University of California, Los Angeles.

Tavistock House | Ninth October 1855.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his Compliments to Mr. Hamstede, and begs Mr. Hamstede to accept his cordial thanks for the obliging communication[†4] dated on the 31st. of August, which Mr. Dickens received only yesterday.

To MRS CHARLES DICKENS, 16 OCTOBER 1855

MS British Library. Address: À Madame | Madame Charles Dickens | Hotel des Bains | Boulogne Sur Mer.

2 Rue St. Florentin[†5] | Tuesday Sixteenth October 1855

My Dearest Catherine.

We have had the most awful job to find a place that would in the least suit us, for Paris is perfectly full, and there is nothing to be got at any sane price. However, we have found two apartments—an entresol[†6] and a first floor—with a kitchen and servants' rooms at the top of the house—at

No. 49 Avenue des champs Elysées

You must be prepared for a regular continental abode. There is only one window in each room, but the front apartments all look upon the main street of the champs Elysées, and the view is delightfully cheerful. There are also plenty of rooms. They are not over and above well furnished, but by changing furniture from rooms we don't care for, to rooms we do care for, we shall be able to make them comfortable and presentable. I think the situation itself, almost the finest in Paris; and the children will have a window from which to look on the busy life outside.

We could have got a beautiful apartment in the Rue Faubourg St. Honoré, for a very little more—most elegantly furnished—but the greater part of it was on a courtyard, and it would never have done for the children. This that I have taken for 6 months, is 700 francs per month,[†1] with 20 more for the concierge.

What you have to expect, is a regular French residence, which a little habitation will make pretty and comfortable—with nothing shewy in it, but with plenty of rooms, and with that wonderful street in which the Barriere de l'Etoile stands, outside. The amount of rooms is the great thing, and I believe it to be the place best suited for us, at a not unreasonable price, in Paris.

Come by the ½ past 12 o'Clock Train, tomorrow (Wednesday), and we will have the place in as good order as we can get it. The servants arrived safely, but I have not yet seen French (having missed him twice), and am now waiting for him.

Georgina and Lady Olliffe[†2] send their loves. Georgina and I add ours to Mamey, Katey, The Plorn, and Harry.

Ever affecy.

CD.

To ARSÈNE HOUSSAYE,[†3] 16 OCTOBER 1855

MS Mr T. W. Hill.

2 Rue St. Florentin | Mardi Octobre 16 1855.

M. Charles Dickens presente ses compliments à M. Arsène Houssaye et regrette extremement qu'il trouve la maison dans la Rue de Lord Byron,[†4] trop petite pour sa famille; [†a]and consequamment[†a] qu'il ne peut pas avoir le plaisir de devenir le locataire de M. Arsène Houssaye.[†5]

To WILKIE COLLINS, 14 AND [19] OCTOBER 1855

MS Morgan Library. Address: L'Angleterre. | W. Wilkie Collins Esquire | 17 Hanover Terrace | Regents Park | London. PM 19 Oct 55. Date: postscript written inside envelope no doubt on day posted.

Hotel des Bains, Boulogne | Sunday Fourteenth October 1855

My Dear Collins.

Behold me in our old quarters, which are as comfortable as usual. Crossed yesterday. Fine overhead, but heaving and surging sea. The Plorn wonderfully sick, but wonderfully good—making no complaint whatever—feeling the unreasonableness and hopelessness of the Ocean.

Address in Paris, 12 Rue de Balzac.[†1] Georgina, finding no medium between an unwholesome little apartment and a perfectly insane-priced handsome one, took a small new house in the afore-mentioned literary street,[†2] belonging to the Director of the Français.[†3] It is a few paces out of the Champs Elysées, close to the Barriere de l'Etoile.[†4]

The Ostler[†5] shall be yours, and I think the Sketch involves an extremely good and startling idea. I am not, however, sure but that it trails off in the sudden disappearance of the woman without any result or explanation, and that some such thing may not be wanted for the purpose—unless her never being heard of any more, could be so very strikingly described as to supply the place of other culmination to the story. Will you consider that point again?[†6]

I purpose being in town on the 13th of November. It is our Audit Day.[†7] Perhaps you will dine at the office at half past 5?

Kindest regards from all, | Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. Wilkie Collins Esquire

[†a]My Dear Collins. Don't believe the enclosed. It's not true. After undergoing the wildest adventures in search of a Roof-Tree (with the enclosed in my pocket all the while), my address is —a regular little pack of closets with the ordinary queer staircase &c, but the most wonderful and amusing view from the windows, ever beheld.

49, Avenue des Champs Elysées, Paris[†8]

In the last haste | Ever Faithfully
CD.[†a]

To CLARKSON STANFIELD, 19 OCTOBER 1855*

MS Yale University Library.

49 Avenue des Champs Elysées, Paris
Friday October Nineteenth 1855

My Dear Stanny.

I write in the greatest haste (after the wildest and most absurd adventures in trying to get established under a roof), to send you, as above, my address in Paris. It is about half a quarter of a mile above Franconi's,[†1] on the other side of the way, and within a few doors of the Jardin d'Hiver.[†2]

Ever Affectionately Yours
CD.

To W. H. WILLS, 19 OCTOBER 1855

MS Huntington Library.

49, Avenue des Champs Elysées, Paris
Friday October Nineteenth 1855

My Dear Wills. After going through unheard-of bedevilments (of which you shall have further particulars as soon as I come right side upwards—which may happen in a day or two), we are at last established here—in a series of closets, but a great many of them—with all Paris perpetually passing under the windows. Letters may have been wandering after me to that house in the Rue de Balzac, which is to be the subject of more law suits between the man who let it to me,[†3] and the man who wouldn't let me have possession,[†4] than any other house that ever was built. But I have had no letters at all, and have been—ha ha!—a Maniac, since last Monday.

Will you give my address to B and E without loss of time, and tell them that although I have communicated at full explanatory length with Browne,[†5] I have heard nothing of or from him. Will you add that I am uneasy and wish they would communicate with Mr. Young,[†6] his partner, at once. Also that I beg them to be so good as send Browne my present address.

I will try my hand at that paper for H. W. tomorrow,[†1] if I can get a yard of flooring to sit upon. But we have really been in that state of topsy-turvyhood, that even that has been an unaittainable[†2] luxury—and may yet be for eight and forty hours or so, for anything I see to the contrary.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?19 OCTOBER 1855]

Extract in F, VII, v, 605-6. Date: probably the same day as To Collins, Stanfield, and Wills.

Giving his address and describing his apartment. Over him was an English bachelor with an establishment consisting of an English groom and five English horses. The concierge and his wife told us that his name was Six, which drove me nearly mad until we discovered it to be Sykes.[†3] The situation was a good one, very cheerful for himself and with amusement for his children. It was a quarter of a mile above Franconi's on the other side of the way, and within a door or two of the Jardin d'Hiver. The Exposition was just below; the Barrière de l'Etoile from a quarter to half a mile below; and all Paris, including Emperor and Empress, coming from and returning to St. Cloud, thronged past the windows in open carriages or on horseback, all day long.

To W. H. WILLS, 21 OCTOBER 1855

MS Huntington Library.

49 Avenue des Champs Elysées Paris
Sunday Night, Twenty First October 1855

My Dear Wills.

Coming home from a walk this afternoon, I found your letter of yesterday awaiting me. I send this reply by my brother Alfred who is here, and who returns home tomorrow. You should get it at the office, early on Tuesday.

I will go to work tomorrow, and will send you, please God, an article by Tuesday's post, which you will get on Wednesday forenoon. Look carefully to the Proof, as I shall not have time to receive it for correction. When you arrange about sending your parcels, will you ascertain and communicate to me the prices of Telegraph messages? It will save me trouble, having no foreign servant (though French is in that respect a Trump), and may be useful on an emergency.

I have two floors here—entresol and first—in a Doll's house, but really pretty within—and the view without, astounding—as you will say when you come. The House is on the Exposition side,[†4] about half a quarter of a mile above Franconi's, of course on the other side of the way, and close to the Jardin d'Hiver. Each room has but one window in it,[†1] but we have no fewer than 6 rooms [†a](besides the back ones)[†a] looking on the Champs Elysées, with the wonderful life perpetually flowing up and down. We have no spare-room, but excellent stowage for the whole family, including a capital dressing room for me, and a really slap-up Kitchen near the stars!—Damage for the whole, 700 francs a month.

But Sir—but—when Georgina, the servants, and I, were here for the first night[†2] (Catherine and the rest being at Boulogne), [†b]I heard my little right hand[†b] restless—turned out—asked "What's the matter?"—"Oh its dreadfully dirty. I can't sleep for the smell of my room." Imagine all my stage-managerial energies multiplied, at day break, by 1,000. Imagine the porter, the porter's wife, the porter's wife's sister, a feeble upholsterer of enormous age from round the corner, and all his workmen (4 boys) summoned. Imagine the partners in the proprietorship of the apartment[†3]—old lady, and martial little man with François Premier Beard[†4]—also summoned. Imagine your inimitable chief briefly explaining that Dirt is not in his way, and that he is driven to madness, and that he devotes himself to no coat and a dirty face until the apartment is thoroughly purified. Imagine co-proprietors at first astounded—then urging that "it's not the custom"—then wavering—then affected—then confiding their utmost private sorrows to the Inimitable—offering new carpets (accepted), embraces (not accepted), and really responding like French Bricks. Sallow, unbrushed, unshorn, awful, stalks the Inimitable through the apartment until last night. Then all the improvements were concluded, and I do really believe the place to be now worth 800 or 900 francs per month.[†5] You must picture it as the smallest place you ever saw, but as exquisitely cheerful and vivacious—clean as anything human can be—and with a moving panorama always outside, which is Paris in itself.

If this should cross a letter and projected No.[†6] from you tomorrow night, I shall of course understand that this announcement of my coming article governs everything else, and that you will arrange accordingly. I mention this now, as I may have no time to write with the MS.

You mention a letter from Miss Coutts as to Mrs. Brown's illness,[†7] which you say is "enclosed to Mrs. C. D."

It is not enclosed —and I am mad to know where she writes from,[†8] that I may write to her. Pray set this right, for her uneasiness will be greatly intensified, if she hears no word from me.

I thought we were to give £1700 for the house at Gad's Hill. Are we bound to £1800? Considering the improvements to be made, it is a little too much, isn't it? I have a strong impression that at the utmost we were only to divide the difference, and not to pass £1750. You will set me right if I am wrong. But I dont think I am.

I write very hastily, with a Piano playing, and Alfred looking for this.

Ever My Dear Wills | Faithfully

CD.

To MRS GORE, 22 OCTOBER 1855*

MS Berg Collection.

49 Avenue des Champs Elysées, Paris.
Monday Twenty Second October 1855

My Dear Mrs. Gore.

I am only this day in receipt of your letter—having been flying about in various directions, and settling here this very morning to work.

Believe me I have no means whatever of disseminating that information.[†1] I have no kind of association with any paper, or with any periodical but Household Words. It assures me of the truth of what I had already heard with tolerable accuracy, and what I heartily condole with you upon; but to help in conveying it to the general knowledge is quite as much out of my power as out of yours.[†2]

I write hastily, fearing this may never reach you after all.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To SIR JOSEPH OLLIFFE, 22 OCTOBER 1855*

MS Miss P. Douglas Ford.

49 Avenue des Champs Elysées
Monday Twenty Second October 1855

My Dear Olliffe

I am sorry that I cannot have the pleasure of complying with the request you prefer to me on behalf of the fair authoress of the Conversations on Harmony.[†3] But she misunderstands the nature of Household Words. It is not a review, nor do I ever appropriate any of its space to notices of books. Occasionally, on some point of social interest, or in reference to some distant country, a curious work or a book of travel is made the ground-work of a paper; but I never pass beyond this line, and keep myself as clear of reviewing as you do.

Will you explain this to the lady, and thank her from me for the book? I have no need, I hope, to tell you that if I could have gratified a friend of yours I should have gratified myself in doing it.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Sir Joseph Olliffe

To W. H. WILLS, 24 OCTOBER 1855

MS Huntington Library.

49 Avenue des Champs Elysées
Wednesday Twenty Fourth October 1855

My Dear Wills. I infer from your letter just now received (the Foreign Post is not delivered in this part of Paris until between 1 and 2), that you had not then got my letter[†1] posted by Alfred. This morning you will have received my article, promised therein. And this, I hope, will have set you up.

No news whatever, of the missing Miss Coutts letter.[†2]

In the Gad's Hill matter, I too would like to try the effect of "not budging". So do not go beyond the £1700. Considering what I should have to expend on the one hand, and the low price of stock on the other, I do not feel disposed to go beyond that mark. They won't let a purchaser escape, for the sake of £100, I think. And Austin was strongly of opinion, when I saw him last, that £1700 was enough.

You cannot be in any doubt about this place, if you will only recall it as the great main road from the Place de la Concorde to the Barrière de l'Etoile. Immediately above the Jardin d'Hiver, is this house.

You cannot think how pleasant it is to me to find myself generally known and liked here. If I go into a shop to buy anything and give my card, the officiating priest or priestess brightens[†3] up, and says "Ah! C'est l'ecrivain celebre! Monsieur porte une nomme très distinguée. Mais! Je suis honoré et interessé de voir Monsieur Dick-in. Je lis un des livres de Monsieur tous les jours" (In the Moniteur).[†4] And a man who brought some little vases home last night, said, "On connait bien, en France, que Monsieur Dickin prende sa position sur la dignité de la Litterature. Ah! C'est grande chose! Et ses caractères (this was to Georgina while he unpacked)[†5] "sont si spirituellement tournées! Cette Madame Tojair (Todgers) Ah! Qu'elle est drole, et precisement comme une dame qui je connais à Calais!"[†6]

Ever Faithfully
CD.

Great haste to save post.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?25-26 OCTOBER 1855]

Extracts in F, VII, v, 606*n* and 606. Date: first extract a day or two after To Wills, 24 Oct; second extract probably same letter.

It is surprising what a change nine years have made in my notoriety here. So many of the rising French generation now read English (and Chuzzlewit is now being translated daily in the Moniteur), that I can't go into a shop and give my card without being acknowledged in the pleasantest way possible. A curiosity-dealer brought home some little knick-knacks I had bought, the other night, and knew all about my books from beginning to end of 'em. There is much of the personal friendliness in my readers, here, that is so delightful at home; and I have been greatly surprised and pleased by the unexpected discovery.

Before he had been a week in his new abode, Ary Scheffer,[†1] a frank and noble fellow, had made his acquaintance.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, [25-27 OCTOBER 1855]

Mention in To Wills, 28 Oct 55. Date: Miss Coutts would have written immediately after Mr Brown's death on 23 Oct and CD had received her two notes by 25 Oct (not 24 Oct: To Wills, that day). He replied at once.

To HENRY AUSTIN, [26-27 OCTOBER 1855]

Telegram. Mention in To Austin, 28 Oct 55. Date: no doubt one or two days before letter, allowing Austin to have telegraphed his reply.

About Mr Brown's death and burial.

To HENRY AUSTIN, 28 OCTOBER 1855*

MS Morgan Library.

49 Avenue des Champs Elysées
Sunday October 28th. 1855

My Dear Henry. Thinking it very likely that you may have been amazed by the receipt of my message, I take the earliest postal opportunity of explaining it.

Miss Coutts and Mrs. Brown are newly arrived here, in the greatest distress. They have been for several weeks past in the South of France; and there (at Montpellier) Mr. Brown has died.[†2] The message referred to her power of burying him under her own Church at Westminster;[†1] and your kind answer, duly received, had filled both herself (I mean Miss Coutts) and Mrs. Brown, with relief and comfort.

You will have paid something, if I understand the proceedings, for the answer. Will you let Wills know what it is, and he will repay you for me?

We have the usual series of little conjuror's boxes to live in; but we have plenty of them for the accommodation of all of us, and the Look-out is as lively and pretty as can be. We have the entresol and the first floor. The cleaning that was necessary to make them habitable, will take its place in the mind of posterity, among the wildest fictions known to mankind.

All send kindest regards to Lætitia and yourself.

Ever affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

Henry Austin Esquire

To W. H. WILLS, 28 OCTOBER 1855

MS Huntington Library.

49 Avenue des Champs Elysées
Sunday Twenty Eighth October 1855

My Dear Wills. Don't be uneasy about the letters. All has come right. Miss Coutts is here and poor Mrs. Brown with her. The instant I received the two notes, I wrote to her at Montpellier. She crossed that letter on her way here. Enquiring at the Hotel Bristol,[†2] I found they were coming directly, and I immediately guessed what had happened. The body has been embalmed, and has been sent home to Stratton Street. She will be able, it being in that condition, to bury it under her own Church—which is a comforting idea to her, and which she thinks Mrs. Brown will like. I shall have to come over to the Funeral, but I hope it will be so long delayed as to bring me near to our Audit day.[†3]

All right as to No. 293.[†4] Also as to getting a Number ahead—which stormy weather may make very desirable; though it but rarely happens that the Mail Boat doesn't cross.

I will in future acknowledge the receipt of your letters, and you will do the like by me. We shall then be sure that we miss nothing.

You may imagine that I have been put out by this unexpected event. In Miss Coutts's peculiar circumstances—so isolated in the midst of her goodness and wealth—it has been a great blow to her. And I have that respect and admiration for her, that I cannot bear to see her distressed. They are both as quiet and well as it is possible to hope, however.

Faithfully Always
CD.

To MESSRS BRADBURY & EVANS, 29 OCTOBER 1855*

MS Johns Hopkins University.

49 Avenue des Champs Elysées Paris
Monday Twenty Ninth October 1855

My Dear B and E.

I have an idea of dividing Little Dorrit[†1] into Two Books, each with a separate title, as BOOK I.

POVERTY

BOOK II.

RICHES

—or to that effect. In this case I shall have to make the two first pages of No. I and of No. XI, blank for the divisional Title. You do not conceive, do you, that there would be any objection to this? I can get the space out of No. I, by taking away the last short chapter[†2] and putting it into No. IV, where it will come as well.[†3] The change I could easily make when I come to town on the 13th. of November. But I should like to know whether you confirm my impression that there would be no publishing-objection to taking those 2 pages away from No. I.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Bradbury and Evans.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, [31 OCTOBER 1855]

Mention in next.

Telegram about Mr Brown's burial.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 31 OCTOBER 1855*

MS Morgan Library.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS,
Wednesday Thirty First October 1855.

My Dear Miss Coutts. You will have received the Telegraphic Message I have just now (3 O'Clock) dispatched. The promised particulars I am now going to give you.

We arrived in town at 8, close to our time, and after so good a passage across, that I begin to fancy myself a British Seaman. On my way home, I sent the letter to Mr.

Waddington[†1] from here; and at 12, Mr. Alcock[†2] and I went to the Home office. He had not come, and we left word that we would call again at ½ past 1. We found him ready for us, and fully charged with the particulars of the case. He said he had no doubt whatever that the remains of our poor friend could be interred in a Vault under your Church, and that no licence from the Home Secretary was needed to authorize their being placed there in their embalmed condition. He would look over the Acts of Parliament,[†3] and write me an official letter in the course of the day, giving this opinion.[†4] We then put to him the point of the future use of the Vault in a similar way.[†5] He replied that after this interment the Home Secretary would instruct Dr. Grainger[†6] to inspect the Vault, and to report to him on the propriety of its being so used in time to come. There could be no doubt what his report would be.[†7]

Well satisfied with this, and finding him perfectly to understand the case, we went off to Mr. Meyrick,[†8] to whom I promised to send, as his authority, Mr. Waddington's promised official letter tomorrow morning. Mr. Meyrick labored under an idea that he must see Mr. Coulthurst[†9] for orders to make the Vault &c. We did not seek to divest his mind (which is a little timorous and ricketty) of this impression, but agreed that Mr. Alcock should see Mr. Coulthurst first, and prepare him for Mr. Meyrick's coming, this afternoon. We then went off to the Board of Health (thinking it advisable to prime Grainger beforehand), and there made all that had passed between us and Mr. Waddington known, in writing. Mr. Alcock and I then parted; he to wait on Mr. Coulthurst, and instruct Banting[†10] to be ready for the performance of the funeral on Tuesday[†1] unless you should otherwise direct him; I to send the telegraph-message and to write this note.

There has evidently been a little too much slow-coaching and feeling of the way in respect of this difficulty: which vanishes when it is thrust at. I particularly hope that you will charge all parties concerned not to leave me out of the question if the slightest hitch, anywhere, should arise. It is the old story of Hercules and the Waggoner.[†2] Nothing is wanted but a shoulder.

When you write—if you do write—will you address here. I shall be here always in the forenoon, and shall have your letters sooner.

Mr. Alcock contemplates returning to Paris for certain, either by the Tidal train via Boulogne, tomorrow, or by the Day Mail via Calais, tomorrow. In either case he will be with you tomorrow night.

Pray offer my affectionate love and sympathy to Mrs. Brown, and believe me to be entirely devoted to you in every happiness or sorrow that can ever befall you.

Ever My Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS CHARLES DICKENS, 31 OCTOBER 1855

MS British Library. Address: France | À Madame | Madame Charles Dickens | 49 Avenue des champs Elysées | Paris.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS
Wednesday Thirty First October 1855

My Dearest Catherine.

It is well we did not send the Telegraph message, as the Mail Train is not due in town until ½ past 7. We were in very good time—had not a bad passage, the time of year considered (I was not ill)—and I brought Mrs. Fitzgerald[†3] and a bonnet, all the way.

Observe what I am going to explain about your getting money. The key of the Cabinet in my study at Paris, is in the drawer of my envelope case. Open the flap of the Cabinet and along with Georgina's passport (on the right hand pigeon-hole) and an old foreign account-book, you will find folded up without any envelope a letter of credit in my favor, addressed by Coutts's to Messrs. Ferrière, Lafitte & Co.[†4] I have been to Coutts's this morning. By the Post which brings this to you, they will write to Ferriere Lafitte & Co. telling them to honor your drafts as well as mine. Therefore all you will have to do on receipt of this, will be to take the letter of credit in your pocket, present it at Ferriere Lafitte's, and draw for whatever sum you want—£25—£30—whatever it is. Their bank is in the Rue Lafitte on the Boulevards[†5]—the next street but one to the Café de Paris,[†6] on the same side of the way. It is the second or third house [†a]on the left[†a]—a large gateway leading into a Courtyard. The Bank is up a flight of stairs on the right hand side of the Inner Court.

I have already (12 o'Clock) been to the Home Office, but Waddington was not come. I am going again at ½ past 1, and will keep this open to report the result of my mission. I saw Charley at breakfast—looking well, but rather too spotty.

———————

I have seen Waddington, and am happy to report that we have succeeded. It has occurred to me that I may advance our Audit day, and get back by Friday or Saturday week. I will tell you about this, when I write next. Let me hear that all are well. With love to Georgy, Mamey, Katey, Harry, and the Plorn.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?END OCTOBER 1855]

Extract in F, VII, v, 606. Date: probably soon after To Forster, 25-6 Oct.

Mamey and Katey are learning Italian, and their master is Manin[†1] of Venetian fame,[†2] the best and the noblest of those unhappy gentlemen.[†3] He came here with a wife and a beloved daughter, and they are both dead.[†4] Scheffer made him known to me, and has been, I understand, wonderfully generous and good to him.[†5]

November

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 2 NOVEMBER 1855

MS Morgan Library.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS,
Friday November Second 1855

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I send a duplicate of this letter to the Pavilion at Folkestone—not that there is any news in it, but because I think it may be a satisfaction to you on your arrival in England to know that your wishes have been fulfilled.

I have seen Banting and carefully arranged everything with him for Wednesday. The time at the Church will be 12 exactly. The mourning carriages three in number, with Ld. Harrowby[†1] in the place you wished. The rest of the Mourners are invited to the Schoolroom[†2] instead of to Stratton Street. Pair-horse, not 4 horse carriages. No difference in the scarves, hatbands &c supplied, but all the Mourners exactly alike. In this respect as in all others, I hope I have understood Mrs. Brown's feeling and yours. All your instructions I have fully impressed upon Banting, and stood over him while he wrote them down. The two plates on the coffin are now in preparation. After stating that our poor friend was the beloved husband of Mrs. Brown, I have added, after her Christian and Surname, "formerly Meredith". The Vault, by reason of the heating and ventilating apparatus, could not be made exactly in the place you wished;[†3] but I am quite sure you will approve of it.

I heard from Banting this morning that on Wednesday night when the workmen were in the Church to begin the Vault (Mr. Alcock and I having charged all parties concerned that there must be no delay) one of your Curates[†4] objected that the Chancel could not be touched[†5] without the consent of the Incumbent; and as Mr. Tennent is in too delicate a state to have a telegraph message sent to him, they went through the absurd form of waiting to begin work until a special messenger had been sent down to him in the country and had telegraphed back his consent! If this had been made known to me, I should have ventured on your behalf altogether to over-ride the objection as an absurd one. I should have got the consent while the work was going on, but shod. have represented that to stop it was a piece of folly, amounting almost, though unintentionally, to an impertinence. However, this would merely have been a natural desire to assert your supremacy in the place and in the case; for everything is ready, and nothing is the worst for it.

—At this moment Mr. Meyrick has appeared. Banting had appointed the funeral for 12 O'Clock exactly at the church, as the most usual, fitting, and convenient time. Mr. Meyrick suggested that there was usually a service at that time and that he "supposed Mr. Garden[†6] would not object" to give notice that such service would not take place. I replied, of course in the most delicate way, that he mustn't object (I did so in effect, not in words), and that the Funeral was to take place at that time.

The letters are probably by this time all gone out.[†7] My dear Miss Coutts I hope and trust you will find everything in perfect train when you arrive, and that both you and your dear charge will pass through this closing part of the trial, with a tender but not painful grief.

The nature of the Service rests with you. That point I have requested to be altogether reserved until you express your wish upon it.[†8]

I will come to you at Lady Falmouth's,[†1] at 12 on Sunday. Ever dear Miss Coutts

Your affectionate friend

CD.

I have received all your three letters, of course.

To MRS BROWN, 3 NOVEMBER 1855

MS Morgan Library.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS
Saturday Third November 1855

My Dear Mrs. Brown.

You will have found (I hope) from a letter I wrote to Miss Coutts at Folkestone that I have anticipated the greater part of your wishes, and that there will only be three carriages from Stratton Street. I am strongly against the proposed innocent fraud respecting the day; firstly, because I do not think it dignified, in the best and right sense of the word; and secondly because it would be fruitless. I am perfectly convinced that whatever lookers-on assemble, would assemble in any case. And Banting (whose opinion I asked as a sensible tradesman when he was here at noon to day) had not a doubt of the inefficacy of such an attempt. Now, adding this objection to the first one—which I feel more strongly, both for the sake of the dead and of the living, than I can well express to you—I earnestly advise you to abandon that idea. I foresee, I am sure, that it would be perverted, moreover, into an attempt to be exclusive; would be twisted into a purpose exactly opposite to your real intention.

As to the clergyman, I think that is a matter of feeling for Miss Coutts. But if I did not have the service performed by the senior Curate,[†2] in Mr. Tennent's absence, I (speaking as if it were my own case) would have it performed by a personal friend—such as Harness.[†3] No reason presents itself to my mind for the calling in of any Westminster or other clergyman in whom you have not an interest. Harness would do it with feeling and emotion. And I cannot but think that this would be comforting to you.

The letters have all gone out to the names on Miss Coutts's list. But observe my dear friend how modestly and simply the arrangement stands. Three carriages will follow your beloved husbands remains from Stratton Street—no preposterous show of horses and feathers; but a quiet, unpretending, necessary means of getting to the church—such as I feel sure that his honest pride and manly feeling would have approved. The other followers who come to the Schoolroom, are not conveyed there in mourning coaches—I perceived the objection to that, and pointed it out to Banting—so that a few gentlemen in mourning arrive there, in an ordinary unrecognizable way during half an hour, and merely pass into the church with the rest when the rest come. You know my own strong feeling in the general matter of parade at such a time, and you know (I feel convinced) how delicately and anxiously I consider everything that concerns you now; but I assure you from my heart that I do not see how you could possibly do what is to be done, in a more unaffected manner.

You might, if you thought right, countermand the order for your own carriage and Miss Coutts's chariot,[†1] following. That we will speak of, when we meet.

God bless you! Only think what a friend you have beside you, in the noblest spirit we can ever know, and what an inestimable blessing you possess in her. A hundred times, God bless you!

Ever Affectionately Yours

CD.

To MRS CHARLES DICKENS, 3 NOVEMBER 1855

MS British Library. Address: La France | À Madame | Madame Charles Dickens | 49 Avenue des champs Elysées | Paris.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS
Saturday Third November 1855

My Dearest Catherine.

It has been (with the exception of one day) the vilest and most intolerable weather here. Perpetual rain. Storms of wind. I have a very bad cold which affects my right eye, and am obliged to go about with a great bottle of Lotion in my pocket, incessantly laving it with a bit of lint.

The Funeral I have fixed for Wednesday. If it should be put off, I shall go distracted or at least turn grey. The contradictory letters I have received from Paris, and the changes and counterchanges suggested, are of a most bewildering nature. I am afraid they will have a very bad passage, if they cross (as they intended), today. I have sent letters down to Folkstone to be ready for them.

The Audit dinner now stands for Thursday, so that I shall be able, I hope, to return on Friday, either by the Day Mail or the Night Mail. You shall know the exact decision, as soon as I can make it. I dine with Forster today, dined with Leech yesterday, dine (Charley and I) with Alfred tomorrow, dine with Albert Smith on Monday, with Lemon on Tuesday, and with Stanfield on Wednesday.

I have tried to work besides, and have done a quantity of Household Words business—but have been constantly taken off by Stratton Street matters.

What you tell me of Miss Power[†2] suggests to me a very graceful and natural opportunity for your calling upon her.[†1] If you will go there with Georgy (to whom my best love), demand Mademoiselle Marguerite, and explain my absence, it will be a very good thing very well done.

There is a tremendous row in the street, occasioned by Anderson the Wizard[†2] having a Morning Performance (apparently a capital house) with the gallery filled by charity children admitted free: who came up to the scratch, in the rain, with horrible shrill cheers.

Your mother is in bed with a neuralgic face—but the weather has been enough to fell anybody. I saw Maclise the day before yesterday. He is profoundly disgusted with Italy[†3] and with everything in it. Stanfield has some idea of returning to Paris with me. Forster had, but I am happy to say that I believe the intention is resigned for the present—"on account, my boy, of my having promised Costello[†4] that I would give him leave to go somewhere".

Love to Georgy, Mamey, Katey, Harry, and the noble Plorn.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To RICHARD GREENE,[†5] 3 NOVEMBER 1855*

MS Henry Sotheran Ltd.

Tavistock House, London | Saturday Evening Third November | 1855

Dear Sir

I am happy to acknowledge the receipt of your kind letter, and to assure you that Mr. Carlyle, Mr. Forster, and myself, hail with the greatest interest and satisfaction the prospect of our appeal[†6] being responded to by the citizens of Lichfield. No help rendered to these poor ladies could possibly be so graceful and welcome as aid coming from the place that boasts of having given Johnson birth.[†7]

As I am at present staying in Paris (where I am very busily occupied with my own pursuits) and as I am obliged to return there immediately, I cannot have the honor of attending the proposed meeting.[†1] But even if this inability were not upon me, I should have had a great desire to excuse myself from obtruding any personal appeal of mine upon your citizens. I feel it so much more natural and becoming in me to leave them to their own generous impulses.

My address in Paris is No. 49 Avenue des Champs Elysées, where I shall hope to have the pleasure of again hearing from you to your convenience.

My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Greene Esquire

To THOMAS CARLYLE, [4] NOVEMBER 1855

Text from N, II, 704-5. Date: Sunday was 4 Nov in 55.

Tavistock House | Sunday, Third November 1855

My Dear Carlyle

I send you such Johnson letters as I have received to this date.[†2]

No. 1 is mere Bosh and Balderdash, to advertise a Society.

No. 2 is from a kind man desiring to do well, according to his lights. I have thanked him.

No. 3 is from a distinguished scholar, who was Charley's Tutor at Eton.[†3] Him likewise I have thanked.

No. 4 is curious. I have told the writer that I suppose the lady to be the same, that I have forwarded it to you, and that you will communicate with him.[†4]

No. 5 is our great hope.[†5] I have written to express our reliance upon them, to urge the meeting by all means, but to add that it should be composed of Lichfield citizens only, and should have no such foreigners in it as yours always Heartily.

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To [THE REV. W. G. COOKESLEY], [4 NOVEMBER 1855]

Mention in To Carlyle, [4] Nov 55 (No. 3). Date: no doubt written the same day.

Thanking him for his response to the appeal on behalf of Dr Johnson's god-child and her sister.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, [4 NOVEMBER 1855]

Mention in To Carlyle, [4] Nov 55 (No. 2). Date: no doubt written the same day.

Thanking him for his response to the appeal on behalf of Dr Johnson's god-child and her sister.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, [4 NOVEMBER 1855]

Mention in To Carlyle, [4] Nov 55 (No. 4). Date: no doubt written the same day.

Supposing the lady[†1] he mentions to be the same, is forwarding his letter to Carlyle.

To MRS HOGGE, 8 NOVEMBER 1855†

MS Mr Walter T. Spencer. Address: Mrs Hogge | Bilney | Lynn.

Tavistock House | Thursday Eighth November 1855

My Dear Mrs Hogge.

A request from you is all powerful with me, and should not be opposed by any removeable obstacle. But I grieve to say that I cannot possibly do what you ask me.[†2] After reading at Peterboro', I am engaged to return to London immediately. I have then to fulfil a promise to read at Sheffield—and then to scamper back posthaste to Paris, whither I return tomorrow, and where we are passing the winter.

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To THE HON. SPENCER LYTTELTON,[†3] 8 NOVEMBER 1855

Text from N, II, 705.

Tavistock House | Thursday Eighth November 1855

My Dear Lyttelton,

Many thanks for the Birds—none the less because they were eaten by my son and heir in my absence. We are in Paris (49 avenue des Champs Elysées), where we are passing the winter, and whence I come and go once a month or so, to the unspeakable discomposure of my sea-legs and sea-stomach. The model (and moral) establishment[†4] is suppressed—the big number taken down—a dull honest trade driving under the gateway—a melancholy respectability has fallen on that fascinating mansion. I shed a tear, over the way, every Sunday.[†5]

Faithfully Yours always
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To CHARLES SIMPSON,[†1] 8 NOVEMBER 1855

Mention in N, II, 705, from catalogue source; MS 1 p.; dated Tavistock House, 8 Nov 55.

Thanking him for a subscription to the fund for the descendants[†2] of Dr Johnson's god-child.

To MRS BATES,[†3] [?1-8 NOVEMBER 1855]*

MS Dickens House.[†4] Date: after sentence was passed on 27 Oct 55; since CD has "seen Mr. Waddington", this must have been when he was in London between 30 Oct and 8 Nov.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mrs. Bates, and begs to assure her that her letter to him needed no apology or excuse. It is with real pain that he has to inform her, that he cannot hold out to her the least hope of her husband's sentence being remitted.[†5] Mr. Dickens has seen Mr. Waddington on the subject.

To MESSRS BRADBURY & EVANS, 10 NOVEMBER 1855†

MS Berg Collection.

Paris, 49 Avenue des Champs Elysées | Saturday November Tenth 1855

My Dear B. and E.

It occurs to me in reference to the Little Dorrit Free list that there really is no need to send it to my two brothers[†6] unless they should apply for it. I would rather that Holdsworth and John at the H. W. Office had it. Therefore please make that change, and substitute the two latter for the two former.

I forgot to mention to you as to my brother Augustus's Crimean idea,[†7] [†a]that, so far as I am concerned, I do not wish you to make any departure in that[†8] case from the ordinary course of business.[†a]

I got home very well, and in good time, and scrambled over an indifferent passage without being ill.

Faithfully Yours Ever

CD.

To THE HON. MRS RICHARD WATSON, 10 NOVEMBER 1855

MS Huntington Library.

Paris, 49 Avenue des Champs Elysées | Saturday November Tenth 1855

My Dear Mrs. Watson.

You will have seen before now, I dare say, that I have changed the title of my book, and adopted one which has a pleasanter sound in my ears, and which is equally applicable to the same story.

Miss Coutts has been here in great distress, occasioned by the death of Mr. Brown at Montpellier. There being all kinds of little obstacles in the way of what she wanted done as to his burial, which the people to whom she entrusted their adjustment conglomerated every hour, I went off to London to set them right for her—have remained there ten days—and returned here only last night.

Now as to Peterboro'. If I can possibly contrive to come to dear old Rockingham on the Monday night, I shall of course do so, and I shall make all conceivable endeavours to do so. But I have been sadly thrown back by this jaunt for Miss Coutts, and must go to work diligently. Time may be so precious to me at that time of the month, that I may be able only to leave here upon the Monday. In that case, I must meet you, either on the Railway or at Peterboro'. I do not know which is the good hotel. Will you let me hear from you by the end of this month (here, of course) telling me which is the good hotel, and whether the two young Etonians[†1] are coming with you. Mr. Wills will then make all arrangements as to rooms, and you need do nothing whatever.

You will have read (I hope) the first No. of my story, when I have the great delight of seeing you. As the second is the great start of my Little Dorrit herself,[†2] I shall bring it in my pocket, in order that you may anticipate the public, in making acquaintance with that young person.

Mrs. Dickens and Georgina send their kindest and best love. We are established in rooms rather larger than meat-safes. But there are plenty of them, and they are pretty and snug, and in the liveliest situation in Paris—just about mid-way between the Barriere de l'Etoile, and the Place de la Concorde.

Looking forward to next month,

Ever My Dear Mrs. Watson | Affectionately Your friend

CHARLES DICKENS

To W. H. WILLS, 10 NOVEMBER 1855

MS Huntington Library.

Paris, 49 Avenue des Champs Elysées | Saturday Tenth November 1855

My Dear Wills.

I had a rather heavy passage, but was not even squeamish. Arrived here in very good time, and with great success.

Will you tell Mark with my love, that I found them playing that piece in Boulogne,[†1] and that I observe it to be becoming very well known, not only among the French, but among our countrymen going to and fro. Consequently, if he do anything with it, it should be done at once.[†2]

There has called on me in my absence, a Mr. John Robertson,[†3] 15 Rue de Monceau, Faubourg St. Roule. I believe this to be the writer of the Erard paper. Will you address a letter to him, explaining that in a multiplicity of communications his letter was unfortunately mislaid, but that you have heard from me that I think that is his address. And that you beg the favor of knowing whether you are right, in order that you may remit him the amount due to him for his contribution.

Don't forget the early almanac[†4] for Miss Coutts.

I am impatient to know how the Gin Punch succeeded with you. It is the most wonderful beverage in the world, and I think ought to be laid on at high pressure by the Board of Health. After sleeping only two hours on the H. W. sofa,[†5] I arose yesterday morning like a dewy flower.

—Mentioning which object, I am reminded by contrast that your friend Wheatstone[†6] was on board yesterday; and that at Boulogne with his boredom developed, and his visage creased, by abject sea-sickness, he was the most terrific phantom—the shrunken spectre of the Ancient Mariner.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

P.S. 1. I think I gave you, sometime ago, some Xmas verses of Townshend's.[†7] If you will send them me in type when you send other things, I will try to put them into shape for the ordinary No.

P.S. 2. About the 1st. or 2nd. of next month, it will be well to write to the hotel at Peterboro', ordering our accommodation; as Mrs. Watson and (I believe) her two boys, will be with us. I have written to her about it, and will prime you with our requirements in good time.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?11-12 NOVEMBER 1855]

Extracts in F, VII, ii, 576 and VII, v, 617-8. Date: CD would write the first extract after return to Paris on 9 Nov; and Forster implies this by giving 8 Nov as date of walk. Second extract soon after return and visit to Exhibition before it closed on 15 Nov; therefore probably same letter.

He had sallied out for one of his night walks,[†1] full of thoughts of his story, one wintry rainy evening (the 8th of November), and pulled himself up, outside the door of the Whitechapel Workhouse,[†2] at a strange sight which arrested him there. Against the dreary enclosure of the house were leaning, in the midst of the downpouring rain and storm, what seemed to be seven[†3] heaps of rags: dumb, wet, silent horrors, sphinxes set up against that dead wall, and no one likely to be at the pains of solving them until the General Overthrow.[†4] He sent in his card to the Master. Against him there was no ground of complaint; he gave prompt personal attention; but the casual ward was full, and there was no help. The rag-heaps were all girls, and Dickens gave each a shilling. One girl, twenty or so,[†5] had been without food a day and night. "Look at me", she said as she clutched the shilling and without thanks shuffled off. So with the rest. There was not a single "thank you". A crowd meanwhile, only less poor than these objects of misery, had gathered round the scene; but though they saw the seven shillings given away they asked for no relief to themselves, they recognized in their sad wild way the other greater wretchedness, and made room in silence for Dickens to walk on.[†6]

He did not think that English art showed to advantage beside the French.[†7] It seemed to him small, shrunken, insignificant, niggling. The general absence of ideas was horribly apparent; and even when one comes to Mulready,[†1] and sees two old men talking over a much-too-prominent table-cloth, and reads the French explanation of their proceedings, "La discussion sur les Principes de Docteur Whiston,"[†2] one is dissatisfied. Somehow or other they don't tell. Even Leslie's Sancho[†3] wants go, and Stanny is too much like a set-scene.[†4] It is of no use disguising the fact that what we know to be wanting in the men is wanting in their works—character, fire, purpose, and the power of using the vehicle and the model as mere means to an end. There is a horrible respectability about most of the best of them—a little, finite, systematic routine in them, strangely expressive to me of the state of England itself. As a mere fact, Frith, Ward, and Egg, come out the best in such pictures as are here, and attract to the greatest extent. The first, in the picture from the Good-natured Man;[†5] the second, in the Royal Family in the Temple;[†6] the third, in the Peter the Great first seeing Catherine[†7]—which I always thought a good picture, and in which foreigners evidently descry a sudden dramatic touch that pleases them. There are no end of bad pictures among the French, but, Lord! the goodness also!—the fearlessness of them; the bold drawing; the dashing conception; the passion and action in them![†8] The Belgian department[†9] is full of merit. It has the best landscape in it, the best portrait, and the best scene of homely life, to be found in the building. Don't think it a part of my despondency about public affairs, and my fear that our national glory is on the decline, when I say that mere form and conventionalities usurp, in English art, as in English government and social relations, the place of living force and truth. I tried to resist the impression yesterday, and went to the English gallery first, and praised and admired with great diligence; but it was of no use. I could not make anything better of it than what I tell you. Of course this is between ourselves. Friendship is better than criticism, and I shall steadily hold my tongue. Discussion is worse than useless when you cannot agree about what you are going to discuss. He talked to English artists, who found French nature all wrong; but surely not because it is French, was his reply. The English point of view is not the only one to take men and women from. The French pictures are "theatrical," was the rejoinder. But the French themselves are a demonstrative and gesticulating people, was Dickens's retort; and what thus is rendered by their artists is the truth through an immense part of the world. I never saw anything so strange. They seem to me to have got a fixed idea that there is no natural manner but the English manner (in itself so exceptional that it is a thing apart, in all countries); and that unless a Frenchman—represented as going to the guillotine for example—is as calm as Clapham, or as respectable as Richmond-hill, he cannot be right.[†1]

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 13 NOVEMBER 1855*

MS Morgan Library.

Paris, 49 Avenue des Champs Elysées
Tuesday November Thirteenth 1855

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I have received the enclosed from Townshend,[†2] with a request that I will send it on to you. Pray when you have a minute to spare and would not feel worried by writing, let me know, no matter how briefly, how you and Mrs. Brown are.[†3]

My return-passage and journey were very good, and I found all well.

In the matter of that Miss Podevin at Sandgate,[†4] I ought to let you know that I finally gave her the Thirty Pounds. I also paid Nine Guineas for the Shepherd's Bush piano.[†5]

We all unite in kindest love to Mrs. Brown and you. I did not tell you that I am going to read at Peterborough in the middle of next month, as a mark of affectionate respect for Watson, poor dear fellow, who was connected with the place;[†6] and that Mrs. Watson is going with me. It will be the first time she has seen the place for many a long day.

Ever My Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

To W. H. WILLS, 15 NOVEMBER 1855

MS Huntington Library.

Paris, 49 Avenue des Champs Elysées
Thursday Fifteenth November 1855

My Dear Wills.

I return the No.[†7]—a most alarmingly shy one,[†8] and really requiring something better to bring it up at last than that Much Ado about Nothing.[†1] Pray overhaul your stock, and see if you can't find something better than that at any rate.

Charter House Charity,[†2] most decidedly first. I would make that the name, and have so altered it in the No. Look to my corrections, and particularly in "Literal Claims",[†3] where the Italics (of which, take care that not one is left),[†4] and the marks of elision[†5] where the vowels are omitted, are as irritating and vulgar as the offences complained of. I suppose it to be Dixon. It is as weak as the Paris flies are in this post.[†6]

I hope, by Monday's post, to send you my part of the Xmas No.[†7]

My people are all gone to see the distribution of prizes at the Exposition[†8] (I recusant); in reference to which demonstration I have been driving Landseer[†9] out of his senses by telling him, that, no matter what the Queen and Lords tell him, if they give him money (as it is said they will), he is bound in self respect and in respect for his Art and his country to send it politely to the Prefect tomorrow for the Poor of Paris.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 16 NOVEMBER 1855

MS Morgan Library.

49 Avenue des Champs Elysées
Friday Sixteenth November 1855

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I will not tell you how interested I have been by your letter, or how glad to receive it.

In reference to your enquiry as to a Secretary,[†1] however, I am not without hope that I can recommend a very eligible and trustworthy person for your consideration. [†a][I assume for the present, that you want done what I cannot do; but I shall ask you when I return home to consider whether a daily messenger with a Dispatch Box could not put me in possession of all such business, and whether I could not, with some small additional remuneration to one of my trustworthy people at the office, do all you want. Of course I should do it in a confidence and with an interest that can hardly be bought to so full an extent, and your friendship will concede to me the right of entreating from my heart to claim a sort of privilege herein. Do not, I beg you, make any such prolonged arrangement for the future as would place it out of your power to discuss this with me. I particularly ask that favor.][†a]

I have written to Mr. Wills,[†2] and told him generally that you will probably write a note to him, asking him to call at a certain time, with a view to helping you to a temporary Secretary. I have mentioned to him two people of different capacities and qualities, of whom he will speak to you. But I have also said to him, as from myself, that I would recommend him also, to suggest himself. It is impossible to find a more zealous, honorable, or reliable man. What you would want done would be perfectly compatible with his daily pursuits, and easily discharged along with them. Finally, you need not have (for he is perfectly sensible and manly) the least reluctance to propose it to him as an engagement for a certain remuneration—whatever you may have thought of.

Yes, if you please, and when you please, as to the payment to my account.[†3]

I write very hastily to save the Post. Affectionate regards to Mrs. Brown.

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

To W. H. WILLS, 16 NOVEMBER 1855

MS Huntington Library.

49 Avenue des Champs Elysées
Friday November Sixteenth 1855

My Dear Wills. A very short note—I am driven into the smallest corner for time.

You will probably receive a note from Miss Coutts, asking you to call upon her. She wants to have, for the present, a confidential Secretary, to write her letters, and see that the money she gives away is well bestowed. For the two things, Saunders[†1] has occurred to me; for the last thing only, Johnson.[†2] Since then, for both and on all grounds, YOU.[†3] And if she tells you that she has communicated with me on the subject, and that I replied I would write to you and tell you my views and the people I had thought of, then I counsel you (if you see no personal objection) to propose yourself. The duties would not be inconvenient at all—the connexion would be extremely valuable and pleasant to you—the money would not be unacceptable—and the post is fit for any gentleman, in association with such a lady.[†4] Don't be amazed by the suddenness of this note. I have an idea that it may possibly be very useful to you. Will write again on Sunday.

[†a]Ever Fy.[†a]

CD.

To W. H. WILLS, 18 NOVEMBER 1855

MS Huntington Library.

49 Avenue des Champs Elysées, Paris
Sunday Eighteenth November 1855

My Dear Wills.

I have just received your letter of yesterday.

XMAS NO.[†5]

I send you my paper complete.[†6] The title of the next one, after we arrange the order, will follow on at the end of it.[†7] There will be a page and a half or two pages, to carry out the idea and close the Number.[†8] These you shall have in the course of the week.

You are mistaken in supposing White to be here.[†9] They are not coming until next Friday. Perhaps you may as well address a line to him at once, at Bonchurch.

SHEFFIELD.[†5]

I think it highly desirable, under the circumstances, to avoid going there[†10]—which will be a great relief to me, and will enable me to get back in better time. Will you write a careful note, to the effect that I highly esteem the plain-dealing of the communication, and that as the particular usefulness I had proposed to myself does not appear to be attainable, I shall consider the redemption of the promise Mr. Whatshisname[†11] obtained from me, postponed for a time.

THE HOME.[†1]

I would take Mr. Jepson's case,[†2] if you see no reason to the contrary.

THE LITERARY FUND[†1] may be paid, if you please.

THE TAILOR'S SOCIETY[†3]

I cannot of course render the required service to, now. Similar answer to all such applications.

GAD'S HILL[†1]

bothers me, because Austin was so strongly of opinion that £1800 would be too much. I should think he has by this time returned from Scotland. Will you write him a note, and let him know how the case stands. IF[†4] he thinks it advisable, let us finally offer £1750. If he does not—let it go, since they won't take our money. I think myself that, all things considered, £1700 is quite enough.[†5] Let my opinion be as one Vote among three. [†a]Observe. They are building on that spot—have begun since you saw it.[†a]

MISS COUTTS.[†1]

I am anxious to hear if it be brought to bear.[†6] It may not be within her plans, but I have strongly recommended it to her.

H. W.[†1]

Will you tell Holdsworth to post me 2 copies of the missing No.[†7]—the No. for November third.

Forster's Bulletins

about things in general, you know pretty well by this time. He certainly doesn't find this one on any report of mine, for I have held no communication whatever with him on the subject of the great G. P. Night.[†8]

Ever Faithfully
CD.

To CHARLES ELIOT NORTON,[†9] 18 NOVEMBER 1855*

MS Houghton Library, Harvard. Address: A Monsieur: | Monsieur Charles Eliot Norton | Hotel Windsor | Rue de Rivoli.

49 Avenue des Champs Elysees
Sunday Night, Eighteenth November 1855

My Dear Sir

I did not answer your kind note at once to day, because I had arranged with Regnier to be at the Français on the first night of a play of his writing,[†1] and had my misgivings that it would be brought out tomorrow, but hoped some good Genius might interpose an obstacle. I therefore resolved to wait until dinner time—and just then received a note from Regnier, telling me that the Play does come out tomorrow, and that I am not a free man.

Otherwise I heartily assure you, it would have given me the greatest pleasure to dine with you, and to renew, in the society of your mother[†2] and sisters,[†3] the gratification I had in seeing you again yesterday.[†4]

I hope you may at this moment be catching a glimpse of a great Fire that is raging and roaring behind here tonight,[†5] and which is worthy of New York—I cannot bestow higher praise upon it.[†6]

With kind remembrances and regards, believe me

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Eliot Norton Esquire

To THOMAS BEARD, [19 NOVEMBER 1855]

Envelope only, MS Private. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Place | Edgeware Rd | London. PM 19 Nov 55.

To FRANÇOIS REGNIER, 21 NOVEMBER 1855

Text from MDGH, I, 411-12.

Wednesday, November 21st, 1855.

My dear Regnier.

In thanking you for the box you kindly sent me the day before yesterday, let me thank you a thousand times for the delight we derived from the representation of your beautiful and admirable piece.[†7] I have hardly ever been so affected and interested in any theatre. Its construction is in the highest degree excellent, the interest absorbing, and the whole conducted by a masterly hand to a touching and natural conclusion.

Through the whole story from beginning to end, I recognise the true spirit and feeling of an artist, and I most heartily offer you and your fellow-labourer[†1] my felicitations on the success you have achieved. That it will prove a very great and a lasting one, I cannot for a moment doubt.

O my friend! If I could see an English actress with but one hundredth part of the nature and art of Madame Plessy,[†2] I should believe our English theatre to be in a fair way towards its regeneration. But I have no hope of ever beholding such a phenomenon. I may as well expect ever to see upon an English stage an accomplished artist, able to write and to embody what he writes, like you.

Faithfully yours ever
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To JOHN MURRAY, 22 NOVEMBER 1855

MS Sir John Murray.

49 Avenue des Champs Elysées, Paris
Thursday November Twenty Second 1855

My Dear Murray.

I am doubtful about going to this man,[†3] and I will tell you why. He evidently expects that if I present myself as a Member of the Shakespeare Society[†4] sent there by you, I shall come prepared to make terms for the picture,[†5] with divers portentous formalities and official expressions of countenance. You will observe his recommendation that somebody should make an excursion to Paris "afin de traiter."[†1] Now, the utmost that I could do, would be, dutifully to adopt the opinion of Waagen,[†2] as to the time when it was painted—reserving at the same time my own opinion that nobody will give any price to speak of, for such a picture with no pedigree or dimly authenticated story attached to it, saving that it belonged to Talma.[†3] Belonging once to Talma and being highly prized by him, I cannot believe (without most lucid explanation), that it would fade out of the possession of such an artist, in such a country as France, and fade for so long a time out of everybody's memory: being of any real worth. To go to the Rue St. Florentin[†4] to carry this unwelcome load of coals to Newcastle, would be a disagreeable function. And to go there and praise the Picture and not bid for it, would be (according to my experience of French dealings in such wise), to pull down an avalanche of correspondence on my head from M. Naudin.

In brief therefore, I would most cheerfully and readily and to the best of my dexterity, execute any defined commission from you, in this or any other matter. But without such credentials I confess that I am shy of a french lawyer with something to sell—and more particularly with a picture and a portrait of Shakespeare! When I think of the agonies that other people have undergone, arising out of portraits of Shakespeare[†5]—when I think how John Payne Collier[†6] would stand aghast at my not having found out some infernally suspicious upstroke in the autograph of the period[†1]—how Dyce would defend me[†2]—how Halliwell[†3] would accuse me—how Charles Knight[†4] would write a treatise about me—how Forster would balance the evidence—how all sorts and conditions of men[†5] who had never been able to find pegs suitable for their hats, in the Temple of Fame, would immediately begin to hang them on my head (and Shakespeare's)—my spirit quails within me. Looming in the troubled perspective I also behold M. Naudin asserting that I said "Oh quel chef d'œuvre d'art! Ah que c'est le vrai portrait de mon si illustre et si respectable compatriot, ce Shakespeare la!"—and myself mildly and ineffectually denying that I ever said more than those words of course "Ah! que c'est ravissant!"—and I become moved to write, in abject fear, this plaintive letter.

Will you tell Ford[†6] when you see him that I have made one or two scientific experiments at the Trois frères, which were attended with the best results. Also that I have assisted at a little course of dissection of pig's feet (and Truffles) at the Café Vefour,[†7] which made me half believe that I was in my own Sunny Spain[†8] again.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

John Murray Esquire.

To ARY SCHEFFER, 23 NOVEMBER 1855

MS Dickens House.

49 Avenue des Champs Elysées
Friday Twenty Third November 1855

My Dear Scheffer.

I hope I shall not inconvenience you by proposing to resume our Seànces[†9] on Monday at a quarter before three, instead of to day. The approach of Christmas brings me so many Proof sheets from England and involves me in so much correspondence (in addition to my regular occupation with my new book), that I am compelled to ask this favor of you. Unless I hear from you to the contrary, I will reappear on Monday; and our appointment for Wednesday I shall of course punctually keep.

With cordial remembrances to Madame Scheffer and all your house,[†1] Believe me

With true regard | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

à Monsieur Äry Scheffer.

To W. H. WILLS, 24 AND 25 NOVEMBER 1855

MS Huntington Library.

49 Avenue des Champs Elysées, Paris
Saturday Night November Twenty Fourth 1855

My Dear Wills.

I begin my letter to you tonight, under the impression that one from you is on its way to me. The post has been so irregular lately, that I may not get it before I shall be obliged to send this off. If I do, I shall of course reply to it on this sheet.

I have received for the Xmas No.—with very blank feelings—besides my own paper and the Inn Pensioner,[†2] A question of mistaken identity, the Landlady,[†3] and the Actor—all running, by an extraordinary fatality, on criminal actions and criminal trials.

The Actor is altogether out of the question. By Miss Lynn, I suppose. By whomsoever,—unmitigated, bawdy[†4] Rot.

The Question of Identity, I can make do, by cancelling at least a page. (I suppose to be Sidney's.)[†5]

Do. the Landlady, by cancelling about half a Column.

I trust in our good stars that we shall get better matter than this, or by Heaven we shall come poorly off![†6] The way in which they don't fit into that elaborately described plan,[†7] so simple in itself, amazes me.

I return the No.[†8] The Poem must really be polished before it can appear: it is so painfully defective and broken. Make the best change you can—taking it out.[†9]

Another Poem received, Amy's Return,[†10] is so full of strange conceits and strange metre, that I am very doubtful of it. Don't put it in, until I mention it again. I take it to be by Ollier. Tennyson is ruining all these Writers.

My corrected Proof of my own Papers (which I do think suitable to the purpose), I return in one letter; the Proof of the new No. in another letter.

MYSELF.[†1]

Will you tell John to get me a new Shower Bath Cap made at the Ironmonger's—like the old one? Any old hat of mine in the Schoolroom cupboard, will give him the size. It will then be ready for me at home, when I come to town. My former one reposes in the Pavilion at Folkestone.

PETERBORO'[†1]

Mrs. Watson warns me that the best Inn is small, and that we had best order our accommodations at once. She also tells me the name of it,[†2] but Mrs. Dickens has cleverly lost her letter, and for the soul of me I can't remember. Will you write her one line (Hon. Mrs. Watson, Rockingham Castle, Northamptonshire), and ask her? Then, what we shall want at the hotel will be

A Bedroom for each of us—You and me
The largest sitting Room,—for all of us.
A bedroom—for Mrs. Watson
Some sort of sitting-room attached, if possible. For do.
A double bedded room for her 2 boys
Dinner at 4—certainly for 5—probably for 7 or 8. [†a]But of this we may perhaps apprize them 2 days before.[†a]

Sunday Twenty Fifth

I want to give Scheffer the Painter, a complete set of H. W. Will you direct one—in the Double Volumes as far as they go[†3]—to be sent to me in a Parcel.

I have received your letter of yesterday, and shall expect you on Wednesday night. Come straight here. We will have a bed ready, near at hand. We shall have the Olliffes and young Bulwer[†4] at dinner that day, but you can go straight into my dressing-room, and preen your feathers. I fully expected your announcement of your intended arrival: feeling that we could never get thro' the No.[†5] without it.

The Almanac

ought to have done more. It is a pity (I observe now), that my name is nowhere upon it.

CEILINGS[†1]

all right. Everything in the apartment right now.

MISS COUTTS[†1]

I have as yet heard no more from.

MYSELF.[†1]

Not working very well at Little Dorrit,[†6] since I went back to her from the Xmas No.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

More Proofs have arrived by this last Post.

To MISS MARGUERITE POWER, 25 NOVEMBER 1855*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: Miss Power | 5 Rue de Courcelles.

Champs Elysées | Sunday Twenty Fifth November 1855

My Dear Miss Power.

Since I came back from London, I have been in that perpetual state of worry, that I have not been able personally to answer your welcome note. Besides being in the busiest time of my year, and having my new book to think of constantly, I am sitting for a Portrait (in redemption of a promise) and rush every day from my desk to the Atelier, with the monotonous regularity of a Pendulum-swing. You can scarcely imagine how this puts me out, and how I find it dark before I have had a moment to myself.

I merely send this note round, to explain my silence, and to enclose my love to my Marchioness.[†1] Every day I have been purposing to come, and now I write in a sort of desperation; with the Portrait—still unfinished—fixing its importunate eyes on my despairing visage, and the Christmas No. of Household Words apparently going so wrong, that it may drag me back to London again at any moment. My only comfort is, that they must be both disposed of soon.

I hope you were pleased with what Smith[†2] was able to do for the settlement of your business.[†3] He was very anxious to do right.

Believe me always | Very faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Power.

To JOHN FORSTER, [25 NOVEMBER 1855]

Extracts in F, VIII, iii, 650-1; VII, v, 606-7. Date: first extract 25 Nov 55, according to Forster; second extract, at earliest, two days after arrival of King of Sardinia in Paris on 23 Nov; third extract soon after 19 Nov (see To Regnier, 21 Nov), therefore probably same letter.

They wouldn't take £1700 for the Gadshill property, but "finally" wanted £1800. I have finally offered £1750. It will require an expenditure of about £300 more before yielding £100 a year.[†4]

At the first play[†5] he went to, the performance was stopped while the news of the last Crimean engagement,[†6] just issued in a supplement to the Moniteur, was read from the stage. It made not the faintest effect upon the audience; and even the hired claqueurs, who had been absurdly loud during the piece, seemed to consider the war not at all within their contract, and were as stagnant as ditch-water. The theatre was full. It is quite impossible to see such apathy, and suppose the war to be popular,[†7] whatever may be asserted to the contrary. The day before, he had met the Emperor and the King of Sardinia[†1] in the streets, and, as usual, no man touching his hat, and very very few so much as looking round.

He had been to the Théâtre Français, where he was enchanted by the acting of Madame Plessy. Of course the interest of it turns upon a flawed piece of living china[†2] (that seems to be positively essential), but, as in most of these cases, if you will accept the position in which you find the people, you have nothing more to bother your morality about.

To E. F. PIGOTT, 30 NOVEMBER 1855*

MS J. N. Bartfield Books, Inc.

49 Avenue des Champs Elysées
Friday Night Thirtieth[†3] November | 1855

My Dear Pigott

Having this afternoon received a note from Collins mentioning your requirements in Genoa,[†4] I write a hasty line to let you know that I will of course be at home at half past one tomorrow, and that I will with the greatest pleasure give you such letters to Genoa as will place you in the best position there for the dispatch of your business. I will write to the consul,[†5] to the English Banker,[†6] and also to the acting partner of a large Swiss Banking House[†7] there, who is powerful with all Foreign authorities—in case you should have any need of them.

Mr. Wills my Household Words sub-Editor has just arrived here to make up the Xmas No: and we are going to dine at the Trois frères tomorrow, and afterwards to see the Medecin des Enfants[†8]—an admirably constructed Melo Drama. I am afraid you may be going on to Marseilles straightway; but I mention this arrangement, in case you should design remaining in Paris tomorrow night, and should be in town and disposed to join us.

Kind regards from my family. | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Edward F. Pigott Esquire

December

To TIMOTHY YEATS BROWN, [1] DECEMBER 1855

Mention in To de la Rue, 1 Dec 55. Date: presumably written same day.

Introducing Pigott.

To EMILE DE LA RUE, 1 DECEMBER 1855*

MS Berg Collection.

Paris, 49 Avenue des Champs Elysées.
Saturday First December 1855

My Dear De la Rue.

We have come here for the winter (I going backwards and forwards to London once a month or so); and I have been amazed to hear on the best authority that you and Madame De la Rue were in this City this last summer! How you can ever have been so near London and never told me, is one of those marvels, far beyond the wildest mesmerism, which I can by no means comprehend!!

However, that is not the purport of my note. I want particularly to commend to your kindness, Mr. Edward Pigott—a gentleman for whom I have a peculiar regard, and whose attainments would interest you, anywhere and everywhere. I am sorry to say that he rushes suddenly to Genoa, in the hope of preventing a fugitive brother from making a mad marriage in that City of my heart. On his way, he has asked me for some serviceable letters. I have written of course, to the only Consul known upon the face of this earth—and have further commended him to dear old Charley Gibbs. But it occurs to me that Mr. Pigott may require some help from, or introduction to, Piedmontese Authority—or Genoese—or some might that is not English might. In that case, pray aid him to get it. I cannot write to you too warmly, in his behalf.

My love to Madame—though I have this Parisian quarrel with her and with you, which must be fought out à l'outrance.[†1] Georgina, Mrs. Dickens, and the girls, send all sorts of kind messages.

Yours affectionately | (and outraged)
CHARLES DICKENS

To CHARLES GIBBS, [1] DECEMBER 1855

Mention in To de la Rue, 1 Dec 55. Date: presumably written same day.

Introducing Pigott.

To MESSRS BRADBURY & EVANS, 2 DECEMBER 1855*

MS Johns Hopkins University.

49 Avenue des Champs Elysées
Sunday Second December 1855

My Dear B and E.

I am delighted indeed—how can I be otherwise!—with your stimulating report of the brilliant triumph of Little Dorrit.[†1] It is a noble start indeed! and I hope that the strength of Nos. 2 and 3 will clinch the blow.

We must take the earliest opportunity of drinking her health, we three together.

Meanwhile and always, I am | Ever Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [?1 AND 2 DECEMBER 1855]

Extracts in F, VII, v, 618 and VIII, i, 624. Date: the Christmas No. was "happily dismissed" by Saturday 1 Dec (see To Pigott, 30 Nov); reference to "Monday" implies Saturday rather than Sunday. Second extract 2 Dec, according to Forster (1872-4, III, 135); probably same letter.

You may faintly imagine what I have suffered from sitting to Scheffer every day since I came back. He is a most noble fellow, and I have the greatest pleasure in his society, and have made all sorts of acquaintances at his house;[†2] but I can scarcely express how uneasy and unsettled it makes me to have to sit, sit, sit, with Little Dorrit on my mind, and the Christmas business too—though that is now happily dismissed. On Monday afternoon, and all day on Wednesday, I am going to sit again. And the crowning feature is, that I do not discern the slightest resemblance, either in his portrait or his brother's![†3] They both peg away at me at the same time.

The sittings were varied by a special entertainment, when Scheffer received some sixty people in his long atelier[†4]—including a lot of French who say (but I don't believe it) that they know English—to whom Dickens, by special entreaty, read his Cricket on the Hearth.[†5]

Little Dorrit has beaten even Bleak House[†1] out of the field. It is a most tremendous start, and I am overjoyed at it.

To MADAME VIARDOT, 3 DECEMBER 1855

MS Mr Laurence H. Eldredge.

49 Avenue des Champs Elysées

Monday Third December 1855

Dear Madame Viardot

Mrs. Dickens tells me that you have only borrowed the first Number of Little Dorrit, and are going to send it back. Pray do nothing of the sort, and allow me to have the great pleasure of sending you the succeeding Numbers as they reach me. I have had such delight in your great genius, and have so high an interest in it and admiration of it, that I am proud of the honor of giving you a moment's intellectual pleasure.

Believe me | Very faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

à Madame Viardot.

To MESSRS HACHETTE & CIE,[†2] 7 DECEMBER 1855

MS Hachette & Cie.

49 Avenue des Champs Elysées | Vendredi, 7 Decembre, 1855

Messieurs.

Je viens de reçevoir la lettre que vous m'avez fait l'honneur de m'addresser. Permettez-moi de repondre, d'abord, que si vous voulez bien me faire le plaisir de m'expliquer votre projet[†3] un peu plus en detail et en pleine confiance, encore par lettre, je vous serai infinement obligé, et je m'empresserai ou de vous entretenir ou de vous ecrire franchement. À present je ne autorise pas aucune traduction de mes livres en Français, et il me parait que presque tout le monde etranger me fait l'honneur tres flattante, de regarder mes ecrits comme une espèce de proprieté publique.[†4]

Reçevez Messieurs l'assurance de ma consideration la plus distinguée

CHARLES DICKENS

À Messrs. De La Hachette et Cie.

To GEORGE FORDHAM,[†1] 8 DECEMBER 1855*

MS Cornell University Library. Address: L'Angleterre. | George Fordham Esquire | Bridge Street East | Mile End | London.

Paris, 49 Avenue des Champs Elysées | Saturday Eighth December 1855

Sir

I fear you will have formed a poor opinion of my courtesy.

Sometime in the course of the summer, when I was at Folkestone, I received an obliging note and a little book from you.[†2] They became mislaid among a number of papers and an enormous correspondence, and have only just now emerged into the light of this place.

Pray accept this as my excuse for a long delay in acknowledging your favor.

I have read your little book with much pleasure, and esteem it as an outspoken and vigorous telling of much that is sorely needful to be told[†3]—therefore highly useful and highly to be commended.

In one or two points I differ from your view of facts, and think it scarcely fair. It is by no means clear to me that England is peculiarly "A 1" in the thirst for gold and the pursuit of trade.[†4] America is a special instance of the over hot pursuit of money, and began a noble race with all the advantages of our long sufferings and strivings. Mr. Barnum[†5] made a fortune out of a wretched little object of a child who couldn't speak plainly,[†6] among Englishmen, no doubt; but the country that engenders Mr. Barnum and on which he first tries his impositions, and which first "endorses" them (to use a word current in the United States)[†7] is not, within my knowledge, Great Britain. Neither did I ever hear of his woolly[†8] horses[†9] or his spotted ladies[†10] doing much—or any thing—in England.[†11] I very much doubt the expediency of decrying

Christmas family festivities—even as festivities.[†1] Hot Cross Buns are a mere harmless relic of old customs[†2]—cost little—hurt nobody—and are not worth quarreling with. Lastly, I must protest against the greengrocer's daughters and the publican's wife, and the cheesemongers' and dustcontractors' families, being selected for pleasantries about would-be gentility.[†3] The[†4] true specimens will be found, much more fairly, something higher in the scale. The old Tories did quite enough about the cheesemongers and so forth, long ago.

Believe me | Yours faithfully and obliged
CHARLES DICKENS

George Fordham Esquire

To MRS BROWN, 9 DECEMBER 1855

Mention in Autograph Prices Current, II, 73; MS 1 p.; dated 49 Avenue des Champs Elysées, 9 Dec 55; addressed Mrs William Brown.

To MARK LEMON, 10 DECEMBER 1855

MS Benoliel Collection.

49 Avenue des champs Elysées, Paris
Monday Night December Tenth 1855

My Dear Mark.

Do you happen to intend to be at home and disengaged, next Sunday? If yes, I would rather join your family-dinner than dine with any body else.

If not intending to be at home, but still disengaged for out of doors next Sunday, I am available for any cosy corner.

If engaged either way or both ways, so much the worse.

If in want of a holiday on Saturday per railway ticket, this is to announce that undersigned purposes to cross from Boulogne at half past one, arriving at Folkestone (I suppose), at about half past three. Stroll at Folkestone, dinner at Pavilion, railroad home at night, might be approved of by Britain's dramatist.

Loves from all. | Ever affectionately
CD.

To WILKIE COLLINS, 12 DECEMBER 1855

MS Morgan Library.

Paris, 49 Avenue des Champs Elysées
Wednesday Twelfth December 1855

My Dear Collins

I suppose you have heard from Pigott how they rescued Hopeful, and paid the Polish Jewess six hundred pounds.

I leave here for town on Saturday, but shall have to start for Peterborough on Monday Morning. If you are free on Wednesday (when I shall return from that reading), and will meet me at the Household Words office at half past five, I shall be happy to start on any Haroun Alraschid expedition.†1

Think of my going down to Sheffield on Friday,†2 to read there!—In the bitter winter—with journey back to Paris before me.

I thought your Christmas Story immensely improved in the working out. The botheration of that No. has been prodigious. The general matter was so disappointing and so impossible to be fitted together or got into the frame, that after I had done the Guest and the Bill and thought myself free for Little Dorrit again, I had to go back once more (feeling the thing too weak), and do the Boots. Look at said Boots,—because I think its an odd idea, and gets something of the effect of a Fairy Story out of the most unlikely materials.†3

Your friend Laura,†4 blooms in the best of black bonnets. Every Frenchman who can write a begging letter, writes one and leaves it for this apartment. He first of all buys any literary composition printed in quarto on tea-paper†5 with a limp cover, scrawls upon it "Hommage à Charles Dickens, l'illustre Romancier"—encloses the whole in a dirty envelope reeking with tobacco smoke—and prowls, assassin-like, for days, in a big cloak and an enormous cache-nez†6 like a counterpane, about the scraper of the outer door.

Ever faithfully
CD.

Reply as to Wednesday, in note to Tavistock House for receipt there on Sunday.

To E. F. PIGOTT, 12 DECEMBER 1855

MS Huntington Library.

49 Avenue des Champs Elysées
Wednesday Night, Twelfth December 1855

My Dear Pigott.

Welcome back!—Your account of Brown amused me beyond measure—especially as I had already received a note from him[†1] reciting the terms of the Polish Capitulation, from which I should have inferred (if I hadn't known him), that he had done the whole business!

De la Rue's is the pleasantest house I know in the world—and the prettiest.[†2] I will tell you a very curious story of our peculiar intimacy,[†3] when you and I are next alone.

This brings me to three epistolary heads I wish to remark upon.

First, you don't say when you think you may arrive in Paris tomorrow. If you come in time to join our family dinner at ½ past 5 punctually, pray take a corner of the table.

Second. I am sorry to say that the said table (not being so expansive as that of Tavistock House), is full on Friday. But if you and your friend[†4] will do us the pleasure of coming early in the evening of that day, you would find Viardot[†5] here, Ary Scheffer, and Regnier.

Third. I go to London by the Tidal Train at 7 on Saturday Morning.[†6] Do you?

I have never seen so fine a Melo Drama as that Medecin des Enfans.[†7] All that I had seen in the book,[†8] and told you of, is rendered most beautifully on the stage.

Very Cordially Your friend
CHARLES DICKENS

I got Wilkie into the Xmas No. by Sledge Hammer force. He has written a charming paper since, about your Cruise.[†9] Nothing can be more pleasant, easy, gay, and unaffected. Full of plain story-telling merit besides. I have just now read the Proof.

To BERNHARD TAUCHNITZ, 12 DECEMBER 1855

Extract from Curt Otto, Der Verlag Bernhard Tauchnitz, 1837-1912, Leipzig, 1912, p. 54.

Paris, 49 Avenue des Champs Elysées, | December 12th, 1855.

Will you tell me what you think of the enclosed proposal,[†1] and whether you would accept an agreement on such terms if you were in my place? I shall not make any arrangement for such a translation at any time, without first consulting you.

To MRS CHARLES DICKENS, 16 DECEMBER 1855

MS British Library. Address: France | À Madame Dickens | 49 Avenue des champs Elysées | Paris.

Tavistock House | Sunday Night | Sixteenth December 1855

My Dearest Catherine

Between Wills and Miss Coutts, I have had so much to do today (not to speak of letters without end), that after dining at Lemon's, I have, with tomorrow's journey before me, but a minute before going to bed, for writing—with the most amazing pen ever used. Walter seems to me unduly deaf—and I am going to try a simple remedy of my own on him between this and Wednesday when I shall be again in town. If it does not greatly improve him, I shall send him to the best Aurist[†2] before he comes to Paris. Your mother still seems very ill. The house is much better kept since my remonstrance; and you may as well tell them, when you write, that I thought so.

I got to town very well—with a very reasonable passage—and very pleasantly altogether. I have been very much put out by Wills's being subpaena'd on a trial (about that Insurance Office that he projected),[†3] and probably being unable to go to Peterboro' and direct the yokels in the business arrangements for me.[†4] However, in his own distress, he had been to Mark; and he, in his usual affectionate way, has engaged to produce himself at Peterboro' by noon on Tuesday, and see everything right for me. They had settled on this, before I arrived.

Little Dorrit is still going amazingly, and the Xmas No. (published yesterday) seemed to have an enormous sale, thank God.

Charley looks well; and is manly and prepossessing altogether, I think.

My best love to Georgy—and to Mamey, Katey, Harry, and the Noble Plorn.

I saw Anne (here) today; but she soon began to cry again, and said she thought she should never "quite" settle down.

Ever affectionately

CD

To MR AND MRS COWDEN CLARKE,[†1] 19 DECEMBER 1855

Text from N, II, 714.

Tavistock House | 19th December 1855

My Dear Mr. and Mrs. Clarke

I cannot tell you how much I am gratified by the receipt of your kind letters, and the pleasantest memorial that has ever been given me to stand upon my writing-desk.[†2] Running over from Paris on Saturday night, I found your genial remembrance awaiting me, like a couple of kind homely faces (homely, please to observe, in the sense of being associated with Home); and I think you would have been satisfied if you could have seen how you brightened my face.

Always faithfully your friend

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 19 DECEMBER 1855

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: France. | Miss Hogarth | Chez M. Charles Dickens | 49 Avenue des Champs Elysées | Paris.

H. W. Office. | Wednesday Nineteenth December 1855

My Dear Georgy. As I wrote to Kate on Sunday night, and as I promised you a letter, I indite the present distracted communication to your extensive Self. Distracted, because I am halfway out of my wits with cold; the weather being intensely severe (hard East wind, and heavy frost last night); and the two hours and forty minutes ride from Peterboro' this morning, being wonderfully frigid.[†3]

Rockingham was inexpressibly sad. There were Cavendish Boyle and his wife, Mary, Bigg,[†4] James and his sister.[†5] The weight upon my own spirits, imposed there by the sight of the place, necessarily fell to some extent on everybody else—everybody knowing I had not been there, since poor dear Watson's death[†6]—and it really was a mournful evening. At a quarter past ten, I left those long low downstairs rooms—now made very comfortable—and retired to the old bedroom, monstrously depressed. I was obliged to read and smoke before my fire till past midnight, before I could become myself again. In the morning, we got on much better, and were much more like our old selves. Georgy and Eddy[†7] (both handsome, and very nice boys) went with all the rest of us to Peterboro' and we were quite merry.

Before we started, I went quietly into the church,[†1] to see poor Watson's grave. He lies in a damp dull vault—I should so much have preferred the churchyard!—among the seats near the Communion Table—a little behind where we sat one Sunday in the play time.[†2] Over the Communion Table, is the stained glass Memorial Window, designed by Mrs. Watson and Boxall.[†3] Not very good, except in color—and with a good deal of landscape (which is an immense fault in stained glass), extremely like bad pickled cabbage. Just as we were going away, Mrs. Watson asked me, in a strange manner, if I had been in the old Gallery upstairs? I said No, and she returned "Then do come!" So we walked up together, and she raised that great iron latch, and we went in, and the furniture was all piled in a great ghostly heap in the middle, and the carpet was up, and the curtains were down. She turned her head away and looked out of a window; and for the life of me I could not decide upon the delicacy or friendliness of making any allusion to her grief. Consequently I turned my head and looked out of another window, until she moved. Then we both came out together, silently and sadly.

Peterboro' was a wonderful success. We were in an extremely clean and comfortable Inn,[†4] and the Reading was prodigious—as fine an audience as could possibly be, and I think I never did it so well.[†5] Wills was unfortunately subpaena'd as a witness on a trial, and couldn't go; so Mark came to the rescue and acted as bottle holder.[†6] Young Fitzwilliam[†7] and Lord Huntley[†8] proposed a vote of thanks.[†9] As they made an awkward pause before beginning, and as I saw they were asses, I walked off, and retired—book, paper-knife, and all,—to the Hotel. Ten minutes afterwards, I hear a violent flutter of petticoats on the stairs, and in come the Boyle's amazingly agitated, to say that Ld. Huntley has spoken for some ten minutes of poor Watson by name (though expressly cautioned not to do it, as she was there), and that she had been greatly shocked and had run out. I packed off Mary to her bedroom without delay, charging her in comforting Mrs. Watson, to assure her that I and Lemon knew nothing of it. This succeeded very well, for she came down about the middle of supper, with signs of having been crying violently, but quite reassured. We were very comfortable for half an hour, and then they went to bed, and Mark and I smoked and drank the Exciseman[†10] away by my bedroom fire. She was very much cut up this morning when I took leave of her. So indeed they all were (I had picked up the Boyles at Weedon,[†1] on my way down); for we had got on very affectionately and well, in the old way, and I dare say Rockingham would look strange again when they reached it. Mrs. Watson looks wonderfully well in health. Little Wentworth[†2] is a nice little boy now; the girl[†3] very nice too; and the poor little posthumous child,[†4] pretty and pleasant.

I have (of course) not seen Charley since I returned, and don't yet know whether he is coming for Xmas Day. But I should think he is, as there is a strong move for the release of bondsmen and bondswomen of all sorts, at that time. I have no other news, of course; except that "the little woman"[†5] was delighted with the napkin rings, and wrote a little note to express her gratification. Tell Catherine with my love that I hope to write to her from Manchester.[†6] Love to Mamey, Katey, Harry, and the Noble Plorn.

—Yes! I have one bit of news. On Sunday I saw Anne at Tavistock House—looking pulled and ill—and she had not been in the dining-room five minutes before she began to cry in the old way. I forget, on consideration, whether I told this to Catherine. On the whole, I am inclined to think I did.

Ever My Dear Georgy | Most affectionately Yours

CD.

To JOSEPH WATSON,[†7] 19 DECEMBER 1855*

MS Mrs S. S. Clephan. Address: Joseph Watson Esquire | Newcastle on Tyne.

Tavistock House, London | Nineteenth December 1855

Dear Sir

I regret that I cannot possibly have the pleasure of complying with your request.[†8] I read at Sheffield on Saturday, (and read last night at Peterborough), in redemption of promises at least a year old. I return to Paris from Sheffield, as I came over—at great inconvenience, and tied to my own avocations. I assure you that I have sat this day, for hours, reading and answering similar invitations. And I mention all this, simply to shew you how manifestly I am obliged to say "No" to you, and to say it as shortly as I can.

Dear Sir | Very faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Joseph Watson Esquire

To WILLIAM BANTING, 20 DECEMBER 1855*

MS Dickens House.

Tavistock House | Twentieth December 1855

Dear Mr. Banting.

I hope you will excuse my letting you know that I have been very much affected and gratified by the perusal of a letter handed to me by Miss Coutts, which you wrote to that lady concerning Mrs. Thompson.[†1] I really cannot refrain from telling you that it displays a manly feeling that I cannot too highly admire; and that I know of few things more delightful and encouraging, than to find a man of your experience and long devotion to business, with so fresh and earnest a heart.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To THE VISCOUNTESS GODERICH,[†2] 20 DECEMBER 1855*

MS Private.

Tavistock House | Tavistock Square
Twentieth December 1855

Dear Lady Goderich

On coming to town from Paris—where we are passing the winter—I find your letter. A misgiving is on my mind that it may have lain here some little time, as five weeks have elapsed since my last trip to this side of the water. But I cannot relieve my mind, or buckle its load firmly upon it, because your note bears no date. It is therefore in a miserably divided and Hamlet-like condition.

I have begged a gentleman associated with Household Words[†3] who has great practical experience of all sorts of Homes, to visit the establishment[†4] in which you are so generously interested, and write whatsoever account of it he can.[†5] If you will give instructions to the manager[†6] to receive any gentleman mentioning my name, with such courtesy and confidence as may be in her, I hope we may render your good scheme[†7] some little aid.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The | Viscountess Goderich

To DR CHARLES LOCOCK,[†1] 20 DECEMBER 1855*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Tavistock House | Twentieth December 1855

My Dear Dr. Locock.

Coming to town from Paris (where we are passing the winter), I found your note and the enclosure.[†2] It is always so pleasant to me to have any sight of you, that your hand-writing is the next best thing I know. The letter of Mrs. Gamp[†3] is wonderfully ridiculous—but upon my soul I don't know a Judge on the Bench who could sum up the facts about an illegitimate child, more concisely. "Gentlemen, frail nature, an unguarded moment, a fellow servant, and the elapse of nine months;[†4]—you will probably not deem it necessary to retire"—

Verdict. Born by the visitation—&c.[†5]

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS CHARLES DICKENS, 21 DECEMBER 1855

MS British Library. Address: France | À Madame | Madame Charles Dickens | 49 Avenue des champs Elysées | Paris.

Manchester, Friday Night | December Twenty First, 1855

My Dearest Catherine.

I write from the last hotel the Dramatic Company were at[†6]—in what was then our Drawing Room—and with the same bedroom allotted to me as on that jovial occasion.

Charley will have got over, I suppose, before you receive this, and will have given you some faint account of the cold in London. When I walked to the Birmingham Railway[†7] this morning, it was Polar—with a black East wind that seemed to freeze the hair off one's head—and the people I met, on their way to offices, were actually sobbing and crying with cold.

Forster (aristocratic to Mrs. Bradbury regarding "my friend Sir James Emerson Tennent", and even "my friend Mr. Sheriff Gordon!),[†8] Evans, Mark, and Peter,[†9] were the only other guests at Bradburys yesterday, besides myself. The young B's did not dine. We had a dinner, without pretension, but the very best cooked dinner I ever sat down to in my life. Afterwards we played at Vingt-et-un, and Lemon and I made a Bank against the company in the wildest manner. Mrs. Bradburys account of Bradbury's setting fire to the Bed on the occasion which has become historical, was wonderful, and we made all sorts of ridiculous superstructures upon it. It seems that, she being hat Brihteen hat the time, he kept the secret of what had happened, until she came home. Then, on composing that luxuriant and gorgeous figure of hers between the sheets, she started and said, "William, where his me bed?—This is not me bed—wot has append William—wot ave you dun with me bed—I know the feelin of me bed, and this is not me bed." Upon which he confessed all.

In consequence of the excessive cold as we came down today, Wills (already drest in a brown cap exactly of the form of my Shower-Bath helmet) wore a very large checked railway Plaid over his shoulders, in the manner of a shawl. I think I never saw so terrific a figure.

Rumours are afloat in the air here that they mean to give me some cutlery at Sheffield[†1] tomorrow night, after the Reading. I hope they may be correct. On Monday I purpose returning by the Day

Mail, viâ Calais. It is due in Paris at Eleven in the evening. Let French be there, to see to my luggage—by "there", I mean at the Railroad.

The post goes out here earlier than I supposed, and I have only just time to scratch this off and make an end of it—especially as Wills is asleep on the other side of the fire (much where my inkstand is, in reference to my hand, at home), and I am constantly leaning forward to put the pen into his wide-opened mouth, instead of the inkstand on the table.[†2]

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 23 DECEMBER 1855*

MS Morgan Library.

Household Words Office
Sunday Night Twenty Third December | 1855

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I enclose the curious letter. I expected the writer[†3] (from her name) to be Jewish; but she has no more of the Jew about her than I. A poor, fair, thoughtfully smiling woman—young, but looking ten or fifteen years older than she is.

Fourteen poor Travellers[†4] will accompany this note.

With love to Mrs. Brown

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To THE HON. MRS RICHARD WATSON, 23 DECEMBER 1855

MS Huntington Library.

Tavistock House | Sunday Twenty Third December 1855

My Dear Mrs. Watson

I have a moment in which to redeem my promise of putting you in possession of my Little Friend No. 2,[†1] before the general public. It is of course at the disposal of your circle, but until the month is out, is understood to be Prisoner in the Castle.

If I had time to write anything, I should still quite vainly try to tell you what interest and happiness I had in once more seeing you among your dear children. Let me congratulate you on your Eton boys. They are so handsome, frank, and genuinely modest, that they charmed me. A kiss to the little fair-haired darling,[†2] and the rest. The love of my heart to every stone in the old house.

Enormous effect at Sheffield.[†3] But really not a better audience, perceptively, than at Peterboro'—for that could hardly be. They were more enthusiastically demonstrative, and they took the line "And to Tiny Tim who did not[†4] die"—with a most prodigious shout and roll of thunder.[†5]

Ever my Dear friend | Most Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To W. H. WILLS, 23 DECEMBER 1855*

MS Huntington Library.

H. W. | Sunday Twenty Third December 1855

My Dear Wills.

First I enclose a letter to be posted to Captain Boyle, with a Post office order for £2..0..6 put inside the envelope. Said order addressed to Weedon.

Secondly, I enclose a note[†6] to be sent by hand to Miss Coutts, with 2 copies of the Seven Poor Travellers.

Thirdly, I enclose an odd letter.[†7] There may be something in it; there may be nothing. But it may be worth while sending Johnson[†8] to make careful examination, for I should like to brighten Somebody's Christmas with a couple of Guineas or so. Give as you think right and needed, if you give at all.

I hope you are not very tired to day. Some Animal Magnetism[†1] in the Sheffield Audience has prevented my sleeping in my usual distinguished manner. Ever Faithfully

CD.

To CAPTAIN CAVENDISH BOYLE, [23 DECEMBER 1855]

Mention in last.

Enclosing a Post Office order.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 25 DECEMBER 1855

Extract in W. E. Benjamin catalogue No. 8; dated Paris, Christmas Day 1855.

I feel this morning like an enormous top in full spin.[†2]

To W. H. WILLS, 26 DECEMBER 1855*

MS Huntington Library.

Paris | Wednesday Twenty Sixth December | 1855.

My Dear Wills.

I let you know of my safe arrival, by Charley returning. Had a rough and wet passage, but a short one (an hour and three quarters), and was brought triumphantly through it by the 15 Drops,[†3] when every one almost was very ill.

We both forgot White's money[†4]—at which he is much surprised. We had best make a parcel as soon as convenient, and you can send it him over. He also wants the cheapest and commonest Edition of Burn's Justice.[†5] And I want my usual little Russia-Leather[†6] Pocket book, with an interleaved almanack. The book is called "Goldsmith. An almanack for 1856. By John Goldsmith. Published by the Stationers' Company, and sold at their Hall, Ludgate Street."[†7] I always buy mine at Murray's, Stationer's,[†8] Oxford Street, a door or two from Berners Street. Price in Russia with gilt edges, 7 or 8 shillings.

—Here Mrs. Wills's letter came in, for which pray thank her in my name.

It is blowing great guns here, and I doubt if Charley will get across tonight with the Mail. However, as business is business, he is going off Pr. train.

I don't know how you may be, but I am very tired indeed—for me, floored.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

[†a]When you receive from Charley, a bill for a Dress-Coat made by Doudney,[†1] will you pay it. I will give you a cheque for the amount.[†a]

To W. H. WILLS, 30 DECEMBER 1855

MS Huntington Library.

Paris, Sunday Thirtieth December 1855

My Dear Wills.

H. W.

No. 203[†2] is not yet arrived, but I think the Post has not come in. I will go over it on Tuesday (shall be busy tomorrow, finishing Little Dorrit No. 4),[†3] and will write a paper for the following No.[†4] and will also think of your enquiry concerning subjects.

Delighted to hear of the Xmas No.

If an article comes to the office from Charles Whitehead,[†5] will you immediately read it, and—unless it is out of the question: which I hope it won't be—immediately get it cast off, and immediately pay for it:[†6] with a turn of the scale in his favor.[†7] He is going to New Zealand.[†8]

To this man[†9] (envelope enclosed) who wrote about a case of Distress that he don't know what to do with, will you write that you forwarded his letter to me at present[†10] in Paris, and that I begged you to say, with great regret, that after giving the subject my best consideration, I could think of no Institution applicable to such a peculiar case, and could not—from this distance, and without personal observation of the unfortunate young lady—advise him what to do.

THE TURKEY[†11]

seems to have been a stunner.

THE HAM[†11]

Ditto.

WHITE[†1]

is in one of his fits of depression, and talks of going home the moment his time is up.

DICK[†1]

is in one of his fits of depression—rather uncommon with him. Thinks he has overworked himself.

Many happy years, | Ever Faithfully

CD.

To SAMUEL SMILES,[†2] 1855

Extract in Phillips catalogue, Sep 1984; MS 1 p.; addressed Samuel Smiles; dated 1855.

Thanking the South Eastern Railway Company for their courteous renewal of my pass-ticket.

APPENDICES

A. Addenda to Volumes I - VI

(1) All letters which came to light too late to include in the appropriate volume. Some are wholly new; others provide a fuller text, replacing a former catalogue extract, summary, or mention. Envelopes, whether or not related to existing letters, are also included.

(2) Additional notes to existing letters. Some are consequent on the added texts, others supply new material. These may entail substitution for original notes.

References are by page and line, every printed line below the running head being counted. Where appropriate, number of note and column are included. These indicate the correct place in former volumes, or occasionally, the corrigenda appended to a reprinted volume.

I, 3.1. To MISS MARIA BEADNELL,†1 [LATE 1831]

MS Dickens House. Date: CD wrote "The Bill of Fare" (see below) in the second half of 1831; 3 Belle Vue, Hampstead, was John Dickens's last address given in The London Gazette, 22 Nov 31, before going before the Insolvent Debtors Court.

3 Belle Vue, Hampstead.†2 | Wednesday Morning

My dear Maria.—(I fear I ought to say "Miss Beadnell" but I hope you will pardon my adhering to the manner in which I have been accustomed to address you.) I have taken the opportunity†3 of returning your sister's Album†4 to write these few hurried lines for the purpose of saying that my Glover made some stupid mistake about your gloves, and I shall therefore be much obliged if you will have the kindness to inclose me one of those I had before in an envelope addressed to me here.†5—Pray do not think this wrong under existing circumstances. You need not fear the fact of your writing being known to any one here for I shall be very busy at home and alone all day tomorrow as my mother and sister will be in town. I have another favour to ask: it is that you will tell me when you think would be a good opportunity†3 for me to bring the Gloves. I am most anxious indeed to see you as I wish much to speak to you particularly about the Annual.—Surely, surely you will not refuse so trivial a present: a mere common place trifle; a common present even among the merest "friends". Do not misunderstand me: I am not desirous by making presents or by doing any other act to influence your thoughts, wishes, or feelings in the slightest degree.—I do not think I do:—I cannot hope I ever shall: but let me entreat of you do not refuse so slight a token of regard from me.

I cannot unless you will grant me an opportunity†3 speak to you either on this, or any other subject;—I hope and trust you will not refuse: consider how long it is since I have seen you.

Trusting you will excuse haste and most anxiously waiting to hear from you which I hope and trust I shall in the course of tomorrow.

I remain | My dear—Miss Beadnell | Ever Yours Sincerely

C. D.

I hope you will like the Lines. I do not think what I write you know.—I allude, particularly to the last four Lines of the Third Verse.†6

I, 41.

n. 1 add John Dickens had in June 1834 written of CD to Joseph Parkes (1796-1865; DNB), Radical politician and Parliamentary solicitor, clearly for transmission to John Black, Editor of the Morning Chronicle: "His capabilities have over & over again been borne testimony to by Peers & Members, and the extraordinary facility with which he writes out [i.e. transcribes from shorthand], (and I would back him against any man in the Gallery in this respect) is a very valuable consideration" (Extract in Sotheby catalogue, Dec 1981).

I, 60.12. To MR COX,[†1] [MAY 1835]

MS (fragment) Miss Audrey Baker. Date: Endorsed "May 1835" in pencil; handwriting and signature support.

will be at home.

Yours truly
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Cox.

I, 121.20. To J. P. HULLAH,[†1] [?JANUARY 1836]*

MS Mrs G. C.E. Rosser. Date: "Dear Hullah" points to date later than To Hullah, ?Jan 36, Vol. I, p. 121 ("My dear Sir"); but perhaps in same month, since in both he invites Hullah to Edward St. Handwriting confirms.

Edward Street.[†2] | Sunday Evening

Dear Hullah.

I am here, and Fanny is at home. We are quite alone; and the Portsmouth people[†3] are very anxious to hear your Music.[†4] If you come let it be soon tonight, in order that I may be at work early tomorrow.

Believe me | Very Sincerely Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

J. P. Hullah Esqr.

I, 128.

n. 2 add Chapman & Hall paid him £10. 2*s.* for the story (Receipt, 19 Feb 36, MS Johns Hopkins University).

I, 177.20. To CHARLES HICKS,[†1] [?28 SEPTEMBER 1836]*

MS[†2] Dickens House. Date: shortly before the publication of Pickwick for October (see below). 28th was a Wednesday.

Furnivals Inn | Wednesday Night[†3]

Mr. Dickens will thank Mr. Hicks to let him know, without FAIL,[†4] of the revise of the over matter (fifty copies)[†5] to be bound up. The single sheet[†6] left attached—after which 1000[†7] may be printed off and sent away and the type kept standing.[†8]

Mr. Dickens will expect the chapters of next[†9] No. [ ] [?if there] should be [line illegible except for] as [and] he then hopes, if it is all right, to reset the copy [three or four words illegible] are with Mr. Hicks [ ] then—most probably by Monday.[†10]

I, 179.24.

Replaces catalogue extract (Vol. I, p. 219).

To J. P. HARLEY, [?30 SEPTEMBER 1836]†

MS Yale University Library. Date: late Sep-Oct 36 on signature; perhaps 30 Sep, the day after the first performance of The Strange Gentleman, when he sent "orders" to Bentley (Vol. I, p. 179).

Furnivals Inn | Friday Evening

My Dear Sir.

I enclose Mr. Leech's Sketch;[†1]—you can tell me what you think of it, when I see you tomorrow morning. I think he has not got the face well, or the hat. The general character is very good.

I have been writing all day, and have been unable to get out, for my orders. If you will do me the favor to write the young gentleman who bears this (and waits) a pass for two, you will oblige me greatly.

Believe me | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

J. P. Harley Esqre.

I, 204.19. To JOHN MACRONE,[†1] [?EARLY DECEMBER 1836]

Extract in John Waller catalogue No. 131 (1881); MS 2 ½ pp. Date: possibly arising out of his "misunderstanding" with Macrone of Nov-Dec 36: see last (Vol. I, p. 204).

Rebuking Macrone for statements which are not facts and which he will regret.

I, 205.16.

Replaces catalogue extract (Vol. I, p. 204).

To PERCIVAL W. BANKS,[†1] [3 DECEMBER 1836]†

MS Mr A. H. Reed. Date: the Saturday before the first night of The Village Coquettes.

Furnivals Inn | Saturday Night.

Dear Bankes.[†2]

I hear from Ainsworth, that he has asked you to write a notice of Crichton[†3] in No. I of the Miscellany. I shall be very happy to receive it from you, but as we can only afford one page, I need not say there will be no room for extracts.[†4]

I inclose you a book of the songs in my new opera, and an admission for two, for Tuesday Evening when it will be represented for the first time. If I see you there, we can settle when we are to have this same chat you speak of.

Believe me | Dear Bankes | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

P. W. Bankes Esqre.
I hope you receive Pickwick regularly.[†4]

I, 219.17. To RICHARD BENTLEY, [?3 JANUARY 1837]*

MS Morgan Library. Date: Bentley's Miscellany No. I appeared on 2 Jan 37; he wrote to J. P. Collier the same Tuesday, saying he had procured copies for the morning papers that morning (Vol. I, p. 219).

Furnivals Inn | Tuesday Morning

My Dear Sir.

I have sent Miscellanies to all the Morning and Evening papers; to the Athenæum, and Carlton Chronicle.[†1] Will you have the goodness to send to all the Sunday papers[†2] without delay, and to let me have three more copies by Bearer—

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

I, 220.1. To CHARLES WHITEHEAD, [?5 JANUARY 1837]*

MS Dr Alan Dilnot. Date: letter endorsed "Jany. 4. 1837.", Wednesday in 1837; probably, therefore, 5 Jan.

Furnivals Inn | Thursday Morning

My Dear Sir

I shall be happy to have a serious paper from you, if you prefer it to a comic one.[†1] Look sharp though, or you will be too late; and I should think that a good contribution just now, might do you some service with Bentley.

Believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Whitehead Esq.

I, 221.34. To BENSON E. HILL,[†1] [? JANUARY 1837]*

MS Mr Brian Lake. Date: clearly the "private note" he told Bentley on ?22 Dec 36 he intended to write; reference to the Miscellany, No. 2 (published 1 Feb 37), strongly suggests he was writing in Jan, probably before the 12th.

15 Furnivals Inn. | Thursday Morning

Sir.

I shall have great pleasure in retaining for insertion in the Miscellany at the very earliest opportunity (I have little doubt, in No. 2) your own paper[†2] and Miss Hill's[†3] Fragment of Romance.[†4] I beg to return The Enchanted Tissue.

I should have replied to your letter before now, had I not been so much occupied this month,[†5] as to have really no time to do so. I trust you will sustain no inconvenience for the delay and begging you to convey to your sister my best thanks for her proffered assistance. I am Sir

Very truly Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Benson E. Hill Esqre.

I, 231.22. To JAMES WINSTON,[†1] 30 JANUARY 1837

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, Oct 1972; MS 1 p.; dated 15 Furnival's Inn, 30 Jan 37; addressed James Winston.

Acknowledging his letter apprising me of my election as a Member of the Garrick club, and informing him that he has paid 16 guineas to Messrs. Cockburn[†2] as requested.

I, 240.18. To J. P. HULLAH, [?JANUARY-MARCH 1837]*

MS Mrs G. C.E. Rosser. Date: Handwriting and signature suggest early 1837; probably before mid-March, since from Furnival's Inn; clearly well after the appearance of "The Ivy Green" in Pickwick (June 36): see below.

Furnivals Inn | Saturday Night

My Dear Hullah.

I have heard nothing more from you about "the Ivy".[†1] I have just received another melody thereunto, from a Devonshire Gentleman,[†2] a friend of Ainsworth's, which I believe Seguin[†3] is to publish. I have no concern or interest in the matter, beyond the charge for the words; and if your Version be not coming out, or you have no objection to its appearing in this form—let it. I am worried about it, morning, noon, and night.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

I, 240.19.

Replaces catalogue extract (Vol. I, p. 464).

To SAMUEL LOVER,†1 [? MARCH 1837]†

MS Mr Robert K. Black. Date: The first three parts of Lover's Handy Andy appeared in the Miscellany during CD's 15 Furnival's Inn period, in Jan, Feb and Apr; the reference here is clearly not to the 1st—probably to No. III; CD would have asked for it in early March.

15 Furnivals Inn | Thursday Morning

My Dear Sir.

Will you let me know at about what time you will be enabled to let me have your contribution for next month and what space I shall keep open for it? I have a special respect for Handy Andy,†2 and want to see some more of him. I hope he will have some complicated adventures—a story; the mass of our contributors were so sketchy last month, that we want tales for next.†3

Believe me | My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

I, 244.

n. 6 add On 20 Aug 38, when he was more prosperous, he agreed with Robert Amiss, stabler, to rent 12 Doughty Mews, consisting of a three stall stable, coach-house, loft, and room above, for £70 p.a. (Memorandum, 20 Aug 38, in CD's hand, MS Brigham Young University). Cf. his payment of £5 to Amiss for "rent of Stable", 26 Nov 39 (Vol. I, p. 646).

I, 255.6. To W. HARRISON AINSWORTH, [?4 APRIL-2 MAY 1837]*

MS Private. Date: between 4 April, first Tuesday after moving to Doughty Street and 2 May, the Tuesday before the death of Mary Hogarth.

Doughty Street | Tuesday Morning

My Dear Ainsworth.

I have returned—and want to know when you will come and dine with me, alone, and take me to Astley's afterwards.

Believe me | Ever faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

William Ainsworth Esqre.

I, 258.20. To [EDWARD CHAPMAN], [9 MAY 1837]*

MS Robert H. Taylor Collection, Princeton. Date: two days after Mary Hogarth's death on 7 May. On mourning paper.

Doughty Street | Tuesday Morning

My Dear Sir

As I did not hear from you after you left yesterday, I am nervously afraid that some note from you, must have miscarried, or been left elsewhere by mistake.†1 It is so likely in our present unhappy state that it might not reach my hands, that I think it better at all events to let you know I have not heard.

I am—I had written happy—glad to say that Mrs. Hogarth is better this morning, and that Mrs. Dickens still continues to bear her trial with more fortitude than could possibly have been expected. I fear she will feel it the more at some future time.

With best regards to Miss Chapman

Believe me | Faithfully Yours
C. D.

Since I wrote the above, Mrs. Hogarth has relapsed into a worse state than ever. It is only by force that she can be kept from the room where poor Mary lies in her coffin.

I, 268.1. To SPENCER HALL, 3 JUNE 1837

Extract in Thomas Thorp catalogue No. 646, 1966 and (aafrom facsimile in Sotheby's catalogue, July 1988; MS 1 p.; dated 48 Doughty Street Mecklenburgh Square, 3 June 37; addressed Spencer Hall. On mourning paper.

Accept my very best thanks for the trouble you have been good enough to take in my behalf. The incident you have forwarded to me is extremely curious, and I hope I shall be able to turn it to good account.†1

May I beg you to take the earliest opportunity of returning Mr. Ballantine†2 my warmest acknowledgements for his kindness†3—and to say that I shall be very happy to aacknowledge it in person, if he will afford me the opportunity?

I am My Dear Sir | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Spencer Hall Esqre.a

I, 273.30. To JOHN FORSTER, [?17 JUNE 1837]

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, Feb 1978. Date: ?17 June 37 if, as seems quite possible, the missing conclusion to To Forster of that date (Vol. I, p. 273): see below. Signature (checked MS Sotheby, above) suggests 1837-8.

Think this over this morning, and let us discuss it. I have considered the matter[†1] in all its bearings for the first time and am bothered.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Forster Esq.

I, 275.35.

Replaces catalogue extract (Vol. I, p. 266).

To MRS C. B. WILSON,[†1] [?21 JUNE 1837]†

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: Mrs. Cornwell Baron Wilson. | 5 Woburn Place. | Russell Square. On mourning paper. Date: Mrs Wilson's "Elegiac Stanzas" appeared in the July Miscellany (II, 16). He expected to have finished his "monthly work" by 26 June (Vol. I, p. 276); he would therefore have sent her the proof the Wednesday before, 21 June.

48 Doughty Street. | Wednesday Night.

My Dear Madam.

I cannot tell you how much affected I have been by your beautiful lines,[†2] or with how much melancholy pleasure I shall insert them in the Miscellany.

I inclose a proof for your correction, for which my servant shall call on Friday Morning.

Let me beg you to accept my most sincere and earnest thanks for this very delicate and warm-hearted contribution; and believe me my dear Madam

Most Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Cornwell Baron Wilson.

I, 276.27. To J. P. HARLEY, [22 JUNE 1837]*

MS Mr Brian Lake. Date: the Friday, on which CD says he is going to Antwerp, was the 30th; the letter, written the previous Thursday, must be 22 June. On mourning paper.

48 Doughty Street. | Thursday Evening

My Dear Sir.

Ainsworth and another friend dine with me, in a friendly way, on Tuesday at five. If you should not contemplate leaving town before, will you give me the very great pleasure of seeing you to meet them?

I am going to Antwerp please God on the Friday following, for a week. Where, oh where, is that leetle portmanteau?[†1] I dare say your messenger left it somewhere, but unfortunately not here.

Believe me | Very faithfully yours
CHARLES DICKENS

J. P. Harley Esqre.

I, 291.25. To MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL, [?EARLY AUGUST 1837]

Summary from Christie's catalogue, Mar 1984; MS 2 pp.; dated Doughty Street, Friday Morning; addressed Chapman & Hall. Date: not long before publication of Pickwick No. XVII for Sep 37 with advertisement of Sketches (see below). On mourning paper.

Enclosing a short address[†1] and an advertisement; and leaving the appearance or non-appearance of the latter to Chapman & Hall. Saying that now the apprehension of Macrone's publishing the Sketches in parts was removed, the advertisement was no longer necessary.

I, 297.11. To THOMAS GASPEY,[†1] [?LATE AUGUST 1837]*

MS Mr Walter L. Pforzheimer. On mourning paper. Date: 1837 on handwriting; May-Dec since on mourning paper; perhaps late Aug since "Grub-Street News" finally appeared in Oct (see below).

Doughty Street. | Saturday Night.

My Dear Sir

"Grub Street News"[†2] is an unhappy length—so convenient that it never gets in. "Make up"—said I to the Printer last month—"Make up, with Grub Street News". Not an article in the Magazine that wasn't double the length it ought to have been (except my own) so we stopped half-way in my list of contents. "Take care" said I to the same man this month "of that Grub Street News".—"Just the thing for the last paper but one Sir"—To night the last sheets come to me without the last paper but one, and four pages over, into the bargain! You know what editorial matters are. Trust this Grub Street News to me, in mercy, for another Month.

My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Gaspey Esqre.

I, 308.9. To DR. J. G. MILLINGEN,[†1] [?MID-SEPTEMBER 1837]*

MS Johns Hopkins University. On mourning paper. Date: May-Dec 37, since on mourning paper. Nos III and IV of Millingen's "The Portrait Gallery" were published during this period, in Aug and Nov. Reference to finishing the series perhaps suggests No. IV; if so, then probably Sep, since "too late" for the Oct Miscellany.

48 Doughty Street | Saturday Evening

My Dear Sir.

Many thanks for the Portrait Gallery.†2 It came too late for the next No. but in good season, I hope, for the one following.

You may recollect that when I expressed a most favorable opinion of the first No. of Matrimonial conversations†3 (which I think excellent) I thought it would be better to defer commencing that Series of papers until we had got through the Portrait Gallery.†4

Accept the assurance of my anxious desire to avail myself of your friendly communications on all possible occasions—and Believe me my Dear Sir

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Dr. Millingen

I, 315.25. To MESSRS BRADBURY & EVANS, [?LATE SEPTEMBER-EARLY OCTOBER 1837]*

MS Private. Address: Messrs. Bradbury and Evans. On mourning paper. Date: May-Oct 37 on handwriting and mourning paper; clearly refers to Pickwick final double No., therefore not later than beginning of Oct.

Doughty Street. | Thursday

My Dear Sirs.

I have one hundred slips of copy ready for you, but cannot send it 'till I see Mr. Browne whom I have expected these two days. If he comes to day, I can send you more than two sheets†1 to-night.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Bradbury and Evans.

I, 343.8. To RICHARD BENTLEY, [?DECEMBER 1837]*

MS Mr Fred D. Bentley, Sr. On mourning paper. Date: Text suggests Dec 37; handwriting supports.

Doughty Street | Monday Morning

My Dear Sir

Will you ascertain in the course of the month what you have to hand over to me on account of the Miscellany. There is something I think (is there not?) and the close of the year will be a good time to settle.

I am confined to the house at present by a severe cold and sore throat, but hope to get over it by Wednesday. What time do you dine? I don't think you told me.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esqre.

I, 349.15. To EDWARD EDWARDS,[†1] [?1837]

Mention in Sotheby's catalogue, Nov 1972. MS 1 p. Date: Handwriting (MS Sotheby's, above) suggests 1837.

Authorising Edwards to add his name to the list of members of the Art Union, as an annual subscriber of one guinea.[†2]

I, 351.6. To MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL, [EARLY 1838]*

MS Dickens House. Date: early 1838 on handwriting. Address: Messrs. Chapman and Hall.

Doughty Street. | Wednesday Evening

Dear Sirs—

Don't get the attack;[†1] at least don't spend the twopence[†2] on my account. Forster has shewn it me, and I am quite satisfied.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Chapman and Hall

I, 357.8. To THOMAS [?LYDDY], 19 JANUARY 1838

Mention in American Book Prices Current, 1977; MS 1 p.; dated 19 Jan 38; addressed Thomas Lydely.[†1]

On literary matters.

I, 369.3. To DR HENRY BELCOMBE,[†1] 8 FEBRUARY 1838*

MS Morgan Library.

48 Doughty Street London | February 8th. 1838.

My Dear Sir.

In this parcel I inclose a copy of Pickwick for Mrs. Belcombe, of which I beg her acceptance, and assign for so doing certain weighty reasons duly stated in a note addressed to her private eye.[†2]

I find I have two copies of Charles Lamb's papers among my books; and although they are both cut and both soiled I am induced to inclose one to you, and to beg you to make it a postchaise companion. I fancy I observed so many pleasant evidences of a kindred spirit in you that I have been anxious ever since we conversed upon the subject, to introduce you—not to John Woodville[†3] or Mr. H.[†4] but to the original, kind-hearted, veritable Elia.[†5]

You will not (I hope) think the worse of Charles Lamb for coming off the shelves of Charles Dickens. He has grown somewhat dingy in that worthy's keeping, but the best minds rust in inferior company, and I confidently hope that your chaise may restore him.

With many very sincere wishes that York were nearer to London by half its present distance at least, and begging my best remembrances to your family

I am | My Dear Sir | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Dr. Belcombe.

I, 373.4. To MRS T. N. TALFOURD, [?13 FEBRUARY 1838]*

MS Yale University Library. Date: Feb 38 on handwriting; perhaps Mrs Talfourd had asked CD's help in persuading Macready to produce Talfourd's tragedy, The Athenian Captive (see To Forster, 16 Jan 38 and To Talfourd, 18 Jan, Vol. I, pp. 355 and 356): if so, probably early Feb, the 6th or 13th.

Doughty Street. | Tuesday Evening

My Dear Mrs. Talfourd.

With the greatest readiness. Command me always on any matter, and believe that I shall be proud and happy to take counsel with you.

I dine out tomorrow, and will call upon you at four o'Clock exactly.

Believe me always | Most Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Talfourd.

I, 377.5. To THOMAS HILL,[†1] [?18 FEBRUARY 1838]*

MS Mr Paul Getty, Jr. Date: Handwriting points clearly to second half of Feb 38; last paragraph almost certainly refers to the meeting on Sat. 17 Feb of the newly-founded Shakespeare Club (see To Talfourd, 12 Feb 38, Vol. I, p. 371 and n).

Doughty Street. | Sunday

My Dear Sir

Very many thanks for the papers,[†2] which I will safely return,—and also for the opportunity of perusing Mr. Hook's[†3] note. I assure you that I am most anxious to improve an acquaintance with him, and shall be delighted if we ever grow intimate,[†4] as I hope we may when the wind takes lodgings in some other quarter.

I am sorry you were not with us last night. It went off exceedingly well.

Ever Faithfully and Sincerely Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Hill Esqre.

I, 396.10. To J. P. HARLEY, [16 APRIL 1838]

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, Dec 1988; MS 2 pp; dated Doughty Street, Monday Morning; addressed J. P. Harley. Date: clearly the dinner given by Mitton on 19 Apr 38 (Diary entry, Vol. I, p. 633).

Inviting him to a dinner next Thursday at the Albion in Aldersgate Street given to his co-partners[†1] by a very old friend of mine, a solicitor who has just entered into a very advantageous partnership.... Except the partners you know the seven who compose the party, for the others are Forster, my father, and myself.

As I am anxious to give as much pleasure as I can on this occasion; and as my friend has (as most men have) a high admiration of your abilities, in no wise diminished by his having met you here at the christening,[†2] I cheerfully take upon myself (at his request) the asking you to join us. Say "no" and I never forgive you. Say "yes" and join us here at ten minutes past six next Thursday, and I shall always remain

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS.

I, 409.32. To MRS S. C. HALL, [?JUNE-JULY 1838]*

MS Massachusetts Historical Society. Date: June-July 38 on "living out of town"; handwriting supports.

Doughty Street. | Saturday Morning.

My Dear Mrs. Hall.

I have written a few lines from Pickwick in your Album, and a little Impromptu on Southey's[†1] Impromptu,[†2] which I couldn't help. I would have returned it before, but we are living out of town just now, and I only saw it this morning.

With best regards to Mr. Hall,

Believe me | Dear Mrs. Hall | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs S. C. Hall.

I, 410.26. To T. N. TALFOURD, [?JUNE 1838]

Extract in Christie's catalogue, April 1981; MS 1 p.; dated Doughty Street, Thursday Morning. Date: 1838-9 on handwriting; before 18 June 38, when he first addresses Talfourd as "My dear Talfourd".

My Dear Sir.

I am most unfortunately engaged to dine with [——][†1] on Sunday, but if you will let me come in after I leave him, I hope I shall find you just going to supper.
Mr. Serjeant Talfourd MP

I, 412.17. for [?9 JULY 1838] read [18 JUNE 1838]

[I, 412.]18.

after Date: read A new letter from Talfourd to Macready (MS Cleveland Public Library), 20 June, makes it clear that Lady Holland's invitation was for Sun 24 June. The correct date for To Talfourd, [?9 July 38], is therefore 18 June.

[I, 412.]29.

after Mrs Dickens add [3] insert [3] The engagement CD had made was clearly for Macready's wedding anniversary, 24 June. Talfourd had to decline it, as he arranged to take his daughter Kate to Kent for her health (Talfourd to Macready, above).

I, 416.

n. 4 add He had seconded the proposal by Talfourd for CD's election to the Athenaeum.

n. 5 2nd col. 4th line from bottom insert second before wife of Charles Smithson,

I, 420.33. To THE REV. W. J.B. ARCHER,[†1] [?LATE JULY 1838]

Extract in Sotheby catalogue, Oct 1978. MS (3rd person) 1 p.; dated Twickenham Park, Monday Evening. Date: during CD's stay at Twickenham; presumably, from the postscript, shortly before his return to Doughty Street.

Presenting his compliments and informing him that he has not yet received any paper bearing the title he names. [In a postscript he adds that] He can address his communication, if he please, to 48 Doughty Street.

I, 424.31. To [JAMES B.] HILL,[†1] [?SUMMER 1838]*

MS Dunedin Public Library, New Zealand. Address:—Hill Esquire | Lamb's Conduit Place. Date: Summer 38 on handwriting.

48 Doughty Street. | Thursday Morning.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Hill, and (the medical gentleman who usually attends his family,[†2] being unfortunately absent from town) will feel greatly obliged if he can make it convenient to call and see his little boy[†3] this morning as early as possible.

I, 425.12. To MRS C. B. WILSON, [? AUGUST 1838]*

MS Dickens House. Date: He returned to Doughty Street from Twickenham in last week of July 38; he was probably writing, therefore, in early Aug. Handwriting supports.

48 Doughty Street | Friday Morning

Dear Mrs. Wilson

I have only just returned to town after an absence of Three Months, or I should have sent you the accompanying papers long since.

I very much regret that there should have been any delay in the publication of any of your verses;[†1] but I do assure you that if the postponements and procrastinations of the Miscellany render the contributors occasionally dissatisfied, they reduce its unfortunate editor to the last stages of nervous uncomfortability.

Believe me always | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Wilson.

I, 432.16. To JOHN HULLAH, 8 SEPTEMBER 1838*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Ventnor Hotel Ventnor Isle of Wight
Sunday Night Septr. 8th. 1838.

My Dear Hullah

In consequence of moving about, I only received your note to-day. I hasten to say that I have not the least objection to Mr. Fraser's[†1] doing the Village Coquettes, provided[†2] he does me the favor of omitting all mention of me in the bills;[†3] but I must make this an indispensable condition.

I shall be in town on Wednesday Night.[†4]

[ ]
[CHARLES DICKENS]

I, 445.1. To THE REV. W. J.B. ARCHER, [25 OCTOBER 1838]

MS (envelope) checked at Sotheby's, Oct 1978; addressed W. J. Bellew Archer. Date: postmarked 25 Oct 1838 (not 1848 as given in catalogue).

I, 445.34. To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, [?JANUARY-OCTOBER 1838]*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: George Cruikshank Esquire. Date: watermark 1838; presumably when Cruikshank was illustrating Oliver Twist Jan-Oct 38.

Saturday.

Illustrious Illustrator

I was unfortunately engaged, and obliged to decline.

Ever Yours
CD

I, 452.38. To J. G. LOCKHART, [?10 NOVEMBER 1838]*

MS New Brunswick University Library. Date: same day as To Talfourd, ?10 Nov 38 (Vol. I, p. 452).

48 Doughty Street | Saturday Morning

My Dear Sir

I lose no time in sending you one of the earliest copies of Oliver, which I beg you to accept with my best wishes and regards.

Believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

J. G. Lockhart Esquire

I, 454.14.

after Papers. add Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, Oct 1981; MS (fragment) 1 p.; first part of letter and addressee's name cut off: see Vol. I, p. 454, n. 10. Date: Handwriting and signature support.

[I, 454.]20.

add new para If you should ever have the time or curiosity to read the tale,([10a] let me entreat you not to allow your abstract idea of the women who figure therein, to be influenced by the plates([10b] ... which I could most willingly have dispensed with. . . .

Believe me to remain | very faithfully yours insert ([10a] Oliver Twist.
CHARLES DICKENS

insert ([10b] i.e. Cruikshank's Nancy and Rose Maylie. For CD's dislike of "Rose Maylie and Oliver" (the "Fireside plate", published in the 1st issue of the edn) and insistence that Cruikshank change it, see Vol. I, pp. 450-1 and nn.

I, 454.20. To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, [?15 NOVEMBER 1838]†

Replaces catalogue extract (Vol. I, p. 456).

MS Library of Congress. Date: The Miscellany of Dec 38 was the only one to contain two Oliver illustrations. The letter must have been written on Thursday, 15 Nov since 22 Nov would be much too late for making up the Miscellany.

Thursday Morning

My Dear Cruikshank

The box will be for Saturday[†1] and will hold six. I will send you the ticket either tomorrow, or early on Saturday Morning. There was not time to secure it for to-night, as they are very full.

Bentley called on me yesterday, and said that he meant to put in Two Oliver plates this month, and one portrait.[†2] So you will not have the trouble of doing another, which I presume—at this late period of the month—you will not be sorry for.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

I, 462.15. To J. P. HARLEY, [?28 NOVEMBER 1838]*

MS Mr E. H. Van Maurik. Date: probably 28 Nov 38, since he expected to have finished The Lamplighter on Tues 4 Dec and he read it to Macready on the 5th (Vol. I, p. 465 and n).

Doughty Street. | Wednesday

My Dear Harley

If you have nothing to do after the Tempest on Saturday Evening,[†1] will you look in here as you go home? Cattermole[†2] will be here, and Jerdan. I have begun the Lamplighter[†3] and if I have finished him by that time (as I hope I shall have done) I want to make an appointment with you to go over it on Sunday Morning. Mum is the word 'till we see how it goes. He promised very well; I have just done your account of an uncle deceased, who committed suicide when gas first came up[†4]—and I think it's funny.

Write me a word. And believe me

always | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

J. P. Harley Esquire

I, 464.19. To MESSRS ELLIS & SONS, [? NOVEMBER 1838]

MS Bodleian Library. Date: Handwriting suggests Nov 38.

48 Doughty Street | Monday Morning

Gentlemen.

You sent me by mistake three bottles of Champagne in quarts, instead of three dozen. Will you complete the order at your convenience?

The sparkling Moselle you have sent me is not the same wine that I had before, neither is the port in quarts. I wish particularly to have the same that you sent me at Twickenham, as I liked both wines very much, and ordered them specially on that account.[†1]

I, 466.6. To MISS CAMILLA TOULMIN,[†1] [?EARLY DECEMBER 1838]†

Replaces catalogue extract.

MS Private. Date: "London by Moonlight" in fact did not appear until Sep 39. CD was probably writing in early Dec, before the Jan Miscellany was made up.

Doughty Street. | Thursday Morning

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Miss Toulmin, and begs to inform her that the "London by Moonlight" has been in the printer's hands for many months—has been, indeed, in the proof sheets, no less than three times—but has been as often displaced by some unforeseen contingency. If it be not in the January number, Mr. Dickens will take care that it appears in February.

I, 477.22. To [?"M. C.M."],[†1] 27 DECEMBER 1838*

MS Dickens House.

48 Doughty Street. | 27th. December 1838.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to M. C.H.,[†2] and begs to inform her that he has destroyed the lines entitled "Woman", thinking the treatment scarcely worthy of the subject.

The other lines Mr. Dickens has retained for insertion with much pleasure. He has to apologize to the young lady unknown, for having been so ungallant as to forget her hand-writing, and begs to assure her, in extenuation, that his better memory corrected him when he found it too late to correct his Notices to Correspondents for last month.

I, 480.31. To GEORGE CATTERMOLE, [?29 DECEMBER 1838]*

MS Dickens House. Date: "Mem George" in CD's diary, 31 Dec 38 (Vol. I, p. 638) probably refers to Cattermole (not Cruikshank, as there stated); he was probably writing, therefore, on Sat. 29 Dec 38.

Doughty Street | Saturday Morning

My Dear Cattermole.

Will you dine with us on the last day of the old year—just to see it jollily out? You did so on the last day of last year, if you remember,: with Stanfield. We shall be quite sans ceremonie and if you don't come, shall miss you sadly.

I inclose a letter from Kate.

Always Faithfully Yours | My Dear Cattermole
CHARLES DICKENS

George Cattermole Esquire

I, 485.22. To J. P. HULLAH, [? 1838]*

MS Dickens House. Date: Handwriting and signature suggest 1838; probably before Hullah's marriage in Dec 38.

Doughty Street | Sunday

My Dear Hullah

I made a mistake the other night of course—being engaged for Friday, and having been engaged for the last ten days—Will you let us say Friday Week? I fear I cannot have the pleasure on an earlier day.

With best regards, believe me

Always Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Hullah Esquire

I, 486.19. To THOMAS MITTON, [1837-8]

Extract in John Waller catalogue, No. 134 (1882); MS 1 p.; addressed Thomas Mitton. Date: before end of 1839, after which "Tom" becomes "Mitton" in address; probably 1837-8 (see below).

Dear Tom, the best way will be to send me the odd fellow,[†1] and I'll mark them off. I suspect that nearly all of them copied, are "Chronicle Sketches",[†2] faithfully yours.

I, 488.19. To CHARLES MACKAY,[†1] [?LATE DECEMBER 1838-EARLY JANUARY 1839]*

MS (fragment) University of California, Los Angeles. Date: Ainsworth's Jack Sheppard began serialization in Bentley's Miscellany in Jan 39; CD was perhaps writing in late Dec 38 or early Jan 39.

[†a]of the parcel, for I have seen none.

It is an exceedingly pleasant paper, and I should be most happy to insert it, but that I fear it would not be very appropriate to our pages just now when Mr. Ainsworth begins a Romance (save the Mark[†2]—say you in your[†a] [†b]I hope you see that this would seem somewhat contradictory? If not, I am "open to conviction" still.

My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Mackay Esquire[†b]

I, 491.16. To MRS FRANCES TROLLOPE, [?6 JANUARY 1839]*

MS County Council of Hereford and Worcester. Date: early Jan on handwriting and signature; on 13 Jan CD was in Manchester; 6 Jan therefore seems most probable.

Doughty Street | Sunday Morning

Dear Mrs. Trollope.

I am sorry to say that on Wednesday next I am engaged.[†1]

This information ought to have reached you two days ago, but for the stupidity of my servant who—taking other notes to deliver—left yours, accidentally, on my desk, where I only discovered it last night.

Very truly Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Trollope.

I, 493.18. To JOHN FORSTER, [21 JANUARY 1839]†

Replaces extract.

MS Professor Gordon N. Ray. Date: 21 Jan 39 according to Forster.

Doughty Street | Monday Morning

My Dear [Forster][2a]

With this you will receive a copy of a letter, which I am going to send to Bentley tomorrow morning. Keep it for I have no other.

[I, 493.]23.

after sending it add for such an attempt would be utterly useless.
after Go it MUST. New para

[I,] 494.6.

after state of feeling. New para

[I, 494.]10.

after drove them. CD wrote and deleted If I consulted merely my own [?feeling]

[I, 494.]19.

ends Always faithfully Yours | CHARLES DICKENS

[I,] 493.

insert [2a] Name erased in MS (but visible), perhaps to disguise origin.

[I,]494.

n. 2. for Whether ... be known read Apart from additions above and two or three tiny punctuation variants, text, as given by Forster, is verbally exactly as CD worded it.

I, 506.7. To THE REV. WILLIAM HARNESS, [?4 FEBRUARY 1839]*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Date: probably the day before he dined with Harness, Tues 5 Feb 39 (Diary entry, Vol. I, p. 639); handwriting supports.

Doughty Street | Monday Morning

My Dear Sir

Tomorrow at a quarter before Seven with the greatest pleasure.

Believe me | Very truly Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Reverend William Harness

&c &c

I, 506.8. To FREDERICK DICKENS, [?7 FEBRUARY 1839]*

MS Patricia, Viscountess Boyd. Date: Winter 1838-9 on handwriting; CD's birthday the most likely dinner.

Doughty Street | Thursday Morning

Dear Fred

If you will come round as soon as you like this evening, I shall be glad to see you. I should have asked you to come to dinner, but we are afraid of making Thirteen.[†1]

Affecy. Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Fredk. Dickens Esquire

I, 508.8. To CHARLES RICHARDS,[†1] 11 FEBRUARY [1839]†

Replaces catalogue extract.

MS University of Michigan. Date: CD had resigned as Editor of Bentley's Miscellany on 31 Jan 39.

48 Doughty Street | Monday Morning Feby 11.

My Dear Sir.

You will remember that when[†2] I had the pleasure of seeing[†2] you, I mentioned that I[†2] had relinquished my old connection with the Miscellany, but that I should be happy to mention your friend's paper to my friend Mr. Ainsworth who has succeeded me as its Editor,[†3] in case I should think it adapted to his purposes. I have not the smallest interest in, or connection with, the Magazine now, but if a word or two from me could be of any service to a friend of yours, I need not say how much pleasure it would afford me.

With this object I sat down to read the paper yesterday, and was nipped in the bud at the very outset. It would be wholly useless to recommend a paper of such extreme length—the inclosed pages form only one third of the story—and even if this were not the case, I fear the translator's uncertainty whether or no any version of it has appeared in English before, would be an insuperable objection to its being received. It is still open to you to offer it in the usual course if you think proper, but I should tell you fairly, that I could not have accepted it (for these reasons) in my time, and that I think it highly improbable that it would be considered available for Magazine purposes—especially for the purposes of a Magazine already over-loaded with "continuations"—in these later days.

For these reasons I lose no time in returning you the MS: not at all regretting that you left it here for a couple of days, for the translation†2 appears to be extremely well done and the tale is a very characteristic†2 and interesting one.

I am | My Dear Sir | Very truly Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Richards Esquire

&c &c

— VIIA - 800 —

I, 508.15. To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 13 FEBRUARY 1839*

Replaces catalogue mention.

MS Salisbury House Library, Iowa.

48 Doughty Street | February 13th. 1839.

My Dear Sir.

I regret more than I can tell you, that an old engagement of long standing prevents my having the pleasure of accepting your kind Invitation for Sunday next, which under more propitious circumstances I should have done with real pleasure.

My Dear Sir, believe me, | Very truly Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

I, 514.2.

replace headnote with MS Yale University Library.

[I, 514.]12.

after unfinished. read A word in reply. Apropos. Kate wants her picture (only for the day) if you can send it by bearer.

I, 523.22. To MRS JOHN DICKENS, [?5 MARCH 1839]

Mention in To Mitton, 6 Mar 39. Date: probably written the day before.

Asking his mother to come down to Alphington.

I, 537.30. To MR MANSELL,†1 [?JANUARY-MARCH 1839]*

MS University of Virginia. Date: Fleming's death was registered in the first quarter of 39; handwriting supports.

48 Doughty Street. | Monday Morning

Sir.

If you will make such arrangements as you think proper with an Undertaker for Mr. Fleming's[†2] funeral, and will pay him what you have in hand for that purpose, you may refer him to me for the balance—provided it is not more than the sum you mention—four pounds. Even this is more than I am quite justified in giving (with many other claims upon me) but the distressing nature of the case overcomes any other considerations.

Your obedt. servant
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Mansell.

I, 538.30. To A. W. ARNOLD,[†1] 1 APRIL 1839

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, June 1979; MS 1 p.; dated Doughty Street, Monday Evening April 1st; addressed A. W. Arnold. Date: Monday was 1 Apr in 1839.

Apologizing for being unable to attend a meeting on the 13th. I am already engaged. He had thought that there was a longer interval between the two Meetings.

I, 539.8. To HENRY COLLINSON,[†1] [?EARLY APRIL 1839]*

MS Private. Date: Handwriting and signature suggest early 1839; perhaps early Apr, the month before Collinson was given his post in the Parcels Delivery Office (7 May).

48 Doughty Street. | Tuesday Morning

My Dear Sir

I am very sorry to say that next Saturday I am engaged, but on that day week, I should be very happy to make one at what Mrs. Malaprop calls "a tete a tete of three."

I trust something may yet come of the Post Office memorial.[†2]

Always believe me | Faithfully yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Henry Collinson Esquire.

I, 540.32. To MRS S. C. HALL, [8 APRIL 1839]*

MS Dickens House. Address (address panel in Henry Bristow of Ringwood catalogue No. 286 (1985)): Mrs. S. C. Hall | The Rosery | Gloucester Road | Old Brompton. Postmark 10 Apr 1839. Date: written on Monday but endorsed "10 April 1839 | Mrs S. C. Hall" on Wednesday, the day it was received.

Doughty Street | Monday Morning.

My Dear Mrs. Hall.

There is a lady, one Mrs. Metze[†1]—who bears or sends this to you—who is very anxious to have an introduction to you, and has been disappointed in obtaining one through the instrumentality of a mutual friend who has gone abroad. She is anxious to write for some annuals, if she can have the opportunity—has written in the Miscellany[†2]—is a lady of great accomplishments and ability—and one whom I should much like to serve if I could.

As annuals are in your way[†3] and are not mine; and as I am fortunately enabled to comply with this lady's request for a letter to you, I trouble you with this—empowering you to retort upon me when, and as often as, you please.

I am always | My Dear Mrs. Hall | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

I, 546.23. To WILLIAM LONGMAN, [?29 APRIL 1839]†

Replaces text from MDGH, I, 24.

MS University of Reading. Date: probably next Monday after 26 Apr: see To Longman, that day.

Doughty Street. | Monday Morning

My Dear Sir.

On Friday I have a family dinner at home—uncles, aunts, brothers, sisters, cousins—an annual gathering which I would most joyfully dispense with.

By what fatality is it that you always ask me to dinner on the wrong days?

While you are tracing this cross-consequence to its cause, I wish you would tell Mr. Sydney Smith that of all the men I ever heard of and never saw, I have the greatest curiosity to see, and the greatest interest to know, him.

Begging my best compliments at home, I am My Dear Sir

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

William Longman Esquire

I, 547.18. To HENRY COLLINSON, 7 MAY 1839*

MS Mr Harlan Crow. Address: Henry Collinson Esquire | Office of the Parcel Delivery Co. | Rolls Buildings | Fetter Lane.

Elm Cottage Petersham. | May 7th. 1839.

My Dear Sir.

I have "smiled" a great many times at your note, but only at your making so great an affair of such a little matter.[†1]

The birds sing so much more sweetly than Mr. Broadhurst,[†2] and the leaves and flowers look so much better than the Lord Mayor[†3] and Sheriffs,[†4] that I cannot prevail upon myself to go to the Literary Fund Dinner.[†5] Otherwise I should have been most ready and willing to accede to your request and to have faced, as best I might, that blaze[†6] of erudition which in the persons of the Jewish advocate and the Rail-road besoiler[†7] would have well nigh overpowered me.

I shall be truly glad to see you any Sunday save next Sunday, and am truly

Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Henry Collinson Esquire

I, 548.24. To JOHN ORRIN SMITH,[†1] 8 MAY [1839]*

MS Private. Address: John Orrin Smith Esquire | 66 Judd Street | Brunswick Square | London. Date: 1839, since from Elm Cottage, Petersham.

Elm Cottage Petersham | Near Richmond
Wednesday Evening May 8th.

My Dear Sir.

I am spending the summer months here, or I should have received your most kind letter (and inclosure) earlier, and answered it sooner.

I should have felt a delicacy on retaining, after so slight an acquaintance, your memorial of poor Chatfield,[†2] did I not know that many deeper and more enduring testimonies of your friendship and his worth are written in your heart, and that a thousand kind and gentle attentions of yours to him in his last hours may be—not unreasonably or presumptuously—supposed to stand foremost among such few delightful recollections he now entertains of this world, as are compatible with the perfect happiness of a better.

Accept my dear Sir, in return, my poor but heartfelt thanks—let me thank you also for those "heads" in which you have so large and prominent a share,[†3] and for that promise relative to heads yet unborn which I shall carefully look for your redemption of[†4]—and believe me truly

And Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

I, 549.6. To FREDERICK DICKENS, [10 MAY 1839][†1]

MS (envelope) Dr Andrew Sanders. Address: Frederick Dickens Esquire | Commissariat | Treasury | London. PM Petersham May 10 1839.

I, 551.27. To HENRY BURNETT, [?16 MAY 1839]*

MS City of Norwich Museums. Date: 1839 since from Petersham; the Thurs before the Shakespeare Club's anniversary dinner on 18 May.

Elm Cottage Petersham. | Thursday Night.

My Dear Burnett.

Stone (not knowing your address I suppose) sent me your ticket for the Shakespeare dinner next Saturday, which, however, I have lost. Will you address a note to him at the Piazza Coffee-House and tell him whether you are going or not?

Faithfully Yours—and hastily—
CHARLES DICKENS

Best love to Fanny.[†1]

I, 551.28. To WILLIAM LONGMAN, [?20 MAY 1839]*

Text from facsimile in Librairie ancienne L'Autographe S. A., Les Mesanges, Geneva catalogue, June 1990. Date: CD was unable to accept Longman's invitation for 3 May (see ?Apr, no doubt 29 Apr) and could not dine on 10 May (26 Apr); he wrote from Petersham on 13 May; so perhaps this letter was written on 20 May, replying to an invitation for Fri 24 May.

Doughty Street | Monday Morning

My Dear Sir.

I shall have much pleasure in dining with you on Friday,

And am | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

William Longman Esquire

I, 560.32

after 16 July. read Address: Laman Blanchard Esquire | Courier Office | 345 Strand | London. PM 13 Jul 39 (envelope, MS Sotheby's, Dec 1964).

I, 561.24. To DANIEL MACLISE, [?JULY 1839]*

MS Cheltenham Ladies' College. Date: presumably between CD's invitation of 28 June, headed with his full address, and his letter of ?24 July, inviting Maclise to "ruralize again"; after 11 July, since he has "done work".

Petersham | Monday Morning

My Dear Maclise

Forster comes down on Wednesday to dine, and to arrange that jovial companionship we were speaking of.

I wish you'd come down tomorrow, and have a day the start of him. Do. I have done work and am all alone.

Yours Faithfully Always
CHARLES DICKENS

I, 572.28. To J. H. DALY,[†1] [?JULY 1839]

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, Oct 1981; MS 1 p.; dated "Tuesday Morning", Elm Cottage, Petersham, Surrey. Date: letter endorsed "July 1839".

Sir

Will you have the goodness to address your future communications to me here. I am residing in this place for the summer and seldom receive letters from town more than once a week. He has had only one of Daly's.

Very truly yours
CHARLES DICKENS

J. H. Daly Esquire.

I, 575.33. To H. K. BROWNE, [?13 AUGUST 1839]

Mention in next.

I, 575.34. To MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL, 13 AUGUST [1839]*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Date: 1839, since from Petersham.

Petersham. | Tuesday August 13th.

Dear Sirs.

I inclose a letter for Browne, containing both the subjects,[†1] and informing him that the last three are also ready.[†2] I think his No. is 13,[†3] but as I don't like to trust my recollection, having made at least thirteen mistakes, I send it to you to be forwarded.

In haste, always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Chapman and Hall.

I, 578.4. To CHARLES HICKS, [MAY-AUGUST 1839]*

MS Mr Fred D. Bentley, Sr. Address: Wait for an answer.[†1] | Mr. Hicks | Messrs. Bradbury and Evans | Whitefriars. Date: May-Aug 39, since from Petersham (watermark 1838).

Petersham | Monday Morning

Dear Mr. Hicks.

Will you let me know by Bearer exactly how much more copy you want—counting the first chapter as ten pages, for there is something to come in which will fill up the tenth? I don't want to go over the Mark, as I wish you to have the whole tomorrow evening as soon as I can possibly send it.

I will come to you the first thing on Tuesday morning, to correct the proofs.[†2]

Faithfully Yours

CD.

I, 582.16. To MESSRS BRADBURY & EVANS, [?20 SEPTEMBER 1839]

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, Aug 1888; MS 1 p.; addressed Bradbury & Evans. Date: He finished Nickleby on Fri 20 Sep (CD's Diary, Vol. I, p. 642).

I send you—I feel sorry for it now—the close of Nickleby!!![†1]

I, 585.1. To MESSRS BRADBURY & EVANS, [?23 SEPTEMBER 1839]

Summary in catalogue of Third Dickens Exhibition, New Dudley Galleries, 1909: dated Doughty Street—Monday Morning; addressed Bradbury & Evans. Date: presumably returning the proofs of the final No. of Nickleby, which he and Forster had finished going through in Doughty St early on 22 Sep (CD's Diary, Vol. I, p. 643).

Alluding to the completion of Nickleby and expressing his deep regret for the death of Mr Hicks.[†1]

I, 588.21. To THE PROPRIETOR OF THE BULL INN, ROCHESTER,[†1] 29 SEPTEMBER 1839*

MS Brigham Young University.

40 Albion Street Broadstairs | Sunday Night September 29th, 1839.

Mr. Charles Dickens begs to inform the Proprietor of the Bull, that on his way to town from Broadstairs on Tuesday next he wishes to stay a night at his house, and will thank him to have a comfortable sitting room and two bedrooms prepared, and dinner for three at half past five o'Clock.

As Mr. and Mrs. Dickens will come to Rochester by a Canterbury coach, Mr.

Dickens would wish the rooms to be ready for him at One or Two o'Clock in the day.

I, 590.7. To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, 4 OCTOBER 1839

MS Mr David Borowitz.

48 Doughty Street | October 4th. 1839

My Dear George.

With great pleasure—partly for your sake, and partly for the sake of the young lady unknown.[†1]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

I, 590.8. To EDWARD WORTHINGTON,[†1] 4 OCTOBER 1839*

MS Mr Alan Gill.

48 Doughty Street London | October 4th. 1839.

Sir.

In reply to your obliging letter, I beg to say that it will afford me very great pleasure to be present on the interesting occasion to which it refers,[†2] and that nothing but the health of Mrs. Dickens (which, however, I do not think will interfere) shall keep me away from Manchester on the 28th.[†3]

I am Sir | Your very obedient Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

Edward Worthington Esquire

I, 604.13. To J. P. HULLAH, [?19 NOVEMBER 1839]*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Date: CD moved to 1 Devonshire Terrace between 7 and 12 Dec (Vol. I, pp. 611 and 615); 19 Nov seems more likely than 26 Nov for this letter.

Doughty Street | Tuesday Morning

My Dear Hullah

I was sorry to find yesterday that you had called "unbeknown" while I was shut up with a man signing and sealing for our new house—into which by the bye we hope to move in a fortnight.

I can have no earthly objection to the performance of the Village Coquettes in Edinburgh, if the manager will have the goodness not to mention my name in the bills or elsewhere—I mean, neither of my names,—Boz or Dickens.

Our best regards to your wife and the baby. And I am always believe me Dear Hullah[†1]

[ ]

[CHARLES DICKENS]

I, 609.6. To R. H. HORNE, [OCTOBER-NOVEMBER 1839]*

MS Private. Date: watermark 1839; signature points to Oct-Nov.

Doughty Street. | Tuesday Morning

My Dear Sir.

Pray assure the provisional committee that they are at perfect liberty to enlist my name among those of the approvers of their excellent object.[†1]

I should have been happy to move the third resolution, were I not prevented by an unlucky engagement (not one of pleasure) which on so short a notice I am unable to postpone with decency.

Always my Dear Sir | Very truly Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

R. H. Horne Esqre.

I, 613.7. To A. W. ARNOLD, [?1837-9]

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, June 1979; MS 1 p.; dated Doughty Street, Wednesday afternoon. Date: in Doughty Street period, before 12 Dec 39.

Declining regretfully an invitation and expressing the hope that it will be renewed. Accept my thanks for your kind recollection of me in the matter of the Free List.

I, 613.8. To JOHN FORSTER, [?1837-9]

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, Oct 1976; MS 1 p.; dated 48 Doughty Street, Wednesday Morning; addressed John Forster. Date: in the Doughty St period before 12 Dec 39.

Saying that he has not sent on Forster's note to Talfourd because he really cannot dine out until Saturday and certainly not on Monday, having in mind my work.

I, 614.1. To E. S. MORGAN,[†1] [?1838-9]*

MS Fales Collection, New York University Library. Date: in the Doughty Street period before 12 Dec 39; handwriting supports. Address: E. S. Morgan Esquire.

Doughty Street | Monday Night

My Dear Sir

"James Hume Esquire[†2] Reform club" is the address, but the gentleman is not the Secretary.[†3]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

E. S. Morgan Esquire

I, 615.13. To ABRAHAM HAYWARD, [?1838-9]

Extract in Kenneth W. Rendell Inc. catalogue No. 48; MS 1 p.; dated 48 Doughty Street; addressed Abraham Hayward. Date: 1837 unlikely since on 30 Oct 37 CD declined Hayward's "intimate acquaintance" and his Quarterly Review notice clearly rankled (Vol. I, p. 325); 1838-9, therefore, probably, before the move from Doughty St c. 12 Dec 39.

Apologizing for breaking an appointment. For many hours after the time, I was at my desk, and hard at work. This is my real and last excuse.

I, 620.31. To HENRY COLLINSON, [?26 DECEMBER 1839]*

MS Mr C. F. Cork. Date: late 1839 on handwriting; clearly the Thursday before New Year's Day 1840 (Wednesday), when Collinson dined with him (CD's Diary entry, Vol. II, p. 461).

1 Devonshire Terrace. | Thursday Morning

My Dear Collinson.

Many thanks from "myself and partner", and all good wishes for Merry Christmases and happy new years to you, beyond all count.

I can't make out a part of your note—explain it to me on Wednesday at half past 5 for 6 exactly.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Henry Collinson Esquire

II, 1.17. To MISS BROTHERTON,[†1] 2 JANUARY 1840

Mention in Sophie Dupré catalogue No. 2/3 (1984); MS 1 p.; dated 1 Devonshire Terrace, 2 Jan 40; addressed Miss Brotherton.

II, 15.15. To EDWARD CHAPMAN, [?JANUARY 1840]*

MS Mr Ashley W. Olmsted. Date: late 1839 or early 1840 on handwriting and signature; perhaps Jan 40, when he began to omit the "1" before "Devonshire Terrace" (though inconsistently).

Devonshire Terrace | Tuesday Morning.

My Dear Sir

A great many thanks to you for the philosophical instruments[†1]—one side of which will always serve to remind me of the warmth of our regard, and the other of my coolness in giving you so much trouble.

I shall not venture to do anything with them (beyond taking them out of the paper) until you are on the spot.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Edward Chapman Esquire

II, 15.16. To EDWARD CHAPMAN, [?JANUARY 1840]*

Fragment, Sotheby's catalogue, July 1982. Date: c. 1839-40 on handwriting and signature; perhaps linked, as a joke, with the "philosophical instruments" of To Chapman, ?Jan 40.

to instruct a cunning worker in iron whom you know to meet us on the premises at two P. M. on the same day, so that he may receive his credentials from a mechanical genius, and their confirmation from a literary ditto of the first water?

Always believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

II, 15.26. To THOMAS LONGMAN,[†1] [?JANUARY 1840]*

MS University of Reading. Date: Handwriting and signature suggest shortly after his move to Devonshire Terrace; perhaps Jan 1840.

Devonshire Terrace | Wednesday Morning

My Dear Sir

I owe you two apologies which please to receive herewith—one for not being up when you called this morning, and the other for not knowing who you were. I had been writing late last night, and heard the girl outside the door uttering a plaintive sound resembling "Long Man". When I got out of bed and thrust a shivering arm out of the half-opened door I received a mysterious roll of Parchment which proved to be a petition in favor of the copyright Bill.[†2] The idea of your walking about at nine o'Clock in the morning with such documents in your pocket never occurred to me as a possibility, and I immediately set the unknown messenger down as Talfourd's Clerk—in which happy delusion I remained until, coming down stairs, I found your card upon my desk. Hence this note, and a great many blushes and self-reproaches, highly creditable to my nature, but not to be expressed in writing.

Believe me always | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Longman Esquire

II, 17.16. To HENRY COLLINSON, 4 FEBRUARY 1840*

MS Mr David Solomon, LDS.

1 Devonshire Terrace | 4th. February 1840

My Dear Collinson

Next Friday is the anniversary of the day that did itself the honor of presenting me to Society. A few friends (but not a formal party which, on such occasions I have a great horror of) are coming in the evening. Will you make one, and be with us no later than 8[†1] (eight)

by Greenwich time?

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

II, 30.44. To W. H. HARRISON, 19 FEBRUARY [1840]*

MS Mr Lewis P. Kinsey. Date: late 1839 or early 1840 on signature; Wednesday was 19 Feb in 1840.

1 Devonshire Terrace, York Gate | Wednesday February 19th.

My Dear Sir

I am greatly obliged to you for your exceedingly kind note, which I lose no time in answering.

Your impression is quite right. [I] [h]ave a[tten]ded[†1] the committee[†2] twice since my election.[†3] Once immediately after it, when Mr. Landon[†4] was Secretary and Sir Henry Ellis in the Chair; and once not long since—in November, as you say. I am quite certain upon this point, for I remember the first occasion perfectly well. There was found to have been some inaccuracy in the summons (I forget what) and no money could be granted. Be this as it may, we were summoned, and I was there.

Understanding your communication as you wish me to understand it, I cannot of course take any steps for the removal of this mistake. I should [†a]certainly regret losing an opportunity[†a] which might be of use one day or other to some person deserving assistance, through a mere misconception, and should feel greatly obliged to you if—having an opportunity of setting me right with these gentlemen—you will have the kindness to do so.

I cannot sufficiently thank you for your communication or the terms in which you make it, but believe me that I am truly sensible of your most obliging and welcome interest in my behalf, and that nothing I meet with affords me such deep and lasting satisfaction as the knowledge that I have the good opinion and esteem of men like you.

Accept my imperfect but most sincere acknowledgements, and believe me always My Dear Sir

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. H. Harrison Esquire

II, 37.24. To DANIEL MACLISE, 1 MARCH [1840]*

Text[†1] from typed transcript at Dickens House. Date: same day as To Mrs CD, 1 Mar 40.

On the 1st of March | 35 Saint James' Square, Bath[†2]

Our dear Mac,

Taking advantage of the Penny Postage Act, and knowing that you reverence it, as a measure sanctioned by the lady of our love, we despatch these hasty lines to let you know that we are well and that we had a fine journey yesterday, though the beauty of Natur' sadly reminded us of our hopeless affection, and called up many sad and painful thoughts which were still further awakened by the Extraordinary number of Queens Heads and Queens Arms that we passed upon the road. Oh our dear friend, what dreadful thoughts does not that last sign awaken, what visions of Albert in the Queens Arms calling for what he likes and having it. The thought is madness.

I (Charles Dickens) wish to God you could see some pictures here.[†3] There's a "Lion by Rubens"[†4] something between a negro and a crocodile which I know would gladden your inmost soul, and which if I could copy I would bring away down to the tip of the tail. There are two or three Temples under various circumstances of dilapidation which would afford you no little pleasure, but if you could only see that one single Lion as he now stands before my eyes—so foreshortened that there is nothing left of him but a perpendicular head and two paws—I would give any reasonable consideration. Our host is most hospitable and kind though, so much so that I am almost ashamed to have smiled at the Lion and to have written a word about him. I can only console myself with the reflection that I must have talked about him when I came back, and that it's all the same.

On Thursday morning we shall see you. Meanwhile Heaven bless you and prosper your glorious works. Don't be too dissipated but keep [up][†5] your spirits—Monday you will get this—so you will be carried over Tuesday—on Wednesday morning you will say "they return tomorrow", and on Thursday you are happy again.

I inclose a statement of mistakes committed by Forster on the journey yesterday.

Forster's Mistakes

1st He couldnt get up to his seat on the roof of the coach and occasioned the driver to remark that he was "worse nor an old 'ooman".

(A thumper—by the Lord! J. F.)

2nd He flourished about with a dress cane when we stopped to lunch (think of a man's carrying a dress cane 100 miles inside a stage coach!) and cracked a pane of glass in an ancient and valuable bureau. (Oh! Another)

3rd He never had to pay anything but he wanted change for a sovereign or a five pound note—and this generally on Moors and other lonely places.

(Too true alas)

4th He would [read][†6] proof sheets in a high wind, which being scattered by the same and dispersed over the face of the country were constantly brought back by the agricultural population. (Again a fact alas.)

The letter then continued by John Forster thus[†7]

We have indeed thought of you our dear Dan and very much wish that you have in like manner bestowed thoughts on your friends and fellow sufferers. Dickens has done nothing but drink beer and hollands since he left Devonshire Terrace—poor Landor having just been obliged to turn the tap of the Lion into his parlor. He is evidently startled and scarcely knows what to do with our fiction-monger. Of course I do what I can to keep matters right. Send us an answer. Say something about the Beloved. I dreamt last night—write on Monday. Always my dear fellow yours affectionately

And here follow the signatures[†8]

CHARLES DICKENS
JOHN FORSTER

II, 43.25. To COUNT D'ORSAY,[†1] 10 MARCH [1840]

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, Oct 1976; MS 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, Tuesday March 10th; PM 1840; addressed Count D'Orsay.

Accepting an invitation to dine at Gore House and informing him that Landor is in a very hearty state, though desperately smitten, reporting that Rose Paynter[†2] is a very charming girl and quite worthy of [Landor's] devotion.[†3]

30

II, 43.26. To WILLIAM HALL, [?13 MARCH 1840]

Text from Vol. II, p. 122. Date: accompanied following letter to Mrs Hall, dated 13 Mar 40; Friday was 13 Mar in 1840.

Devonshire Terrace | Friday Evening

My dear Sir,

My feelings will not admit of my doing more than acknowledging the receipt of your note and enclosures, and begging you to transmit to Mrs. Hall (without delay) the enclosed outpouring of a grateful heart.

Faithfully yours,
[CHARLES DICKENS]

II, 43.27. To MRS HALL, 13 MARCH 1840*

MS Francis Edwards Ltd. Date: Thurs was 12 Mar in 1840, but accompanying letter to William Hall was dated Friday.

Devonshire Terrace | Thursday Evg 13th. March | 1840.

My Dear Mrs. Hall.

The blushes with which my modest countenance was suffused when I learnt that you were acquainted with my melancholy state, were lost—very deep though they were—in the glow of pleasurable surprise with which I opened your beautiful present.[†1] I immediately adjusted the same to four horn buttons attached to different parts of the waistband of my etherials,[†2] and resolved to dine without coat or waistcoat—which I did. I am still in the same condition and have resolved to take my death of cold rather than conceal for the next two days, the work of your hands.

How can I ever thank you or those young ladies who assisted you in your work, and who (being unmarried) must necessarily have found it the more tedious as they did not even know what so strange an engine was for, or what it could be intended to sustain? To you I may state confidentially that it is indeed a happiness to me to know that I am "out of danger"—but to them—I am sure you feel the delicacy of my situation and will invent some expression which will serve them until they are admitted into the Holy State, or at least until the day is fixed, when (and never my dear Mrs. Hall until then) let them know the truth.

That this epoch may be very near at hand and that they may never wear what they have contributed to support so worthily, is my hearty wish, with all kinds of loving and thankful remembrances. And from this time forth, I shall hate my straps for seeming to pull the reverse way from such delicate hands.

Always believe that I have always been since I have known you,

Dear Mrs. Hall, Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

II, 44.1. To [?G. J.] BENNETT,†1 14 MARCH 1840

Summary in Christie's catalogue, Nov 1990; MS (3rd person) 1 p.; dated 1 Devonshire Terrace, York Gate, 14 Mar 40; addressed Mr Bennett.

Agreeing to allow his name to continue in the list of Vice-Presidents of the Drury Lane Theatrical Fund.†2

II, 57.20. To ANGUS FLETCHER, 14 APRIL 1840†

Replaces catalogue extract.

MS Brigham Young University. Address: Angus Fletcher Esquire | Duncliffe | Edinburgh.

1 Devonshire Terrace, York Gate | 14th. April 1840.

My Dear Fletcher.

I am going to write a short note, lest I should despond (being overwhelmed with correspondence to an extent you would scarcely believe) and write none at all.

I wish I could say certainly that I will come to Edinburgh. That I cannot, but I can say that I mean to come, and that I hope to do so, in the Autumn.†1 Now, all you have to do, is, to come to town first at your own time and to stop here—You observe that?—here. Never you mind when I am coming to Edinburgh (which we can talk about) but come you here,†2 at your own will and pleasure. Reform the poor-laws by all means, but if you wait until you have done that, I suspect you'll find me with bleared eyes and a white beard, and a very short memory.

The Clock is doing wonders. It is rather sharp work, but so long as it is a triumph, I don't care for that, a rush. I hope the Edinburgh people like it? Number 3†3 I rather take to, myself.

Kate and I were at Kenilworth†4 when those pictures were exhibiting,†5 or I should have gone to see them. Pray tell the artists so if you have an opportunity. She sends all manner of kind remembrances—and so the short note comes to an end.

Believe me always | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Angus Fletcher Esquire

II, 67.31. To SAMUEL ROGERS, 12 MAY 1840*

MS The Lady Ashcombe.

Devonshire Terrace. | Tuesday May 12th. 1840.

My Dear Sir.

The bright day is Sunday the 14th.[†1] until when, and then, and always afterwards I am faithfully Yours.

CHARLES DICKENS

Samuel Rogers Esquire.

II, 67.32. To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 14 MAY 1840*

MS Mr Peter Harries.

Devonshire Terrace | May 14th. 1840.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Miss Coutts, and has the greatest pleasure in accepting her kind Invitation for next Friday Evening.

II, 73.

n. 1 replace with Cuff and Bacon were the proprietors of the Freemasons' Tavern; the dinner may have been the Macready dinner of July 1839 (see Vol. I, p. 561*n*).

II, 80.7. To THOMAS MITTON, 4 JUNE [1840]

Replaces catalogue extract (Vol. II, p. 92).

MS Yale University Library. Address: Thomas Mitton Esquire | 23 Southampton Buildings | Chancery Lane | London. Date: Thursday was 4 June in 1840, when CD was at Broadstairs.

Broadstairs | Thursday June 4th.

My Dear Mitton.

Will you see after the subject matter of the inclosed,[†1] and if any alteration must be made direct Topping[†2] accordingly? I should like the neighbourly scamp in question (who is, of course, a Jew[†3]) to know that I appreciate the neighbourly manner in which he has made his communication.

In Great haste | Faithfully Yours Ever

CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Mitton Esquire

II, 89.17. To GEORGE CHAPMAN,[†1] 25 JUNE 1840†

Replaces catalogue extract.

Extracts in Maggs's catalogue, 1939 and (aa) Sotheby's catalogue, March 1923; MS 1 ½ pp.; dated Broadstairs, 25 June 40.

Believe me that I am truly and sincerely obliged to you for your hearty Invitation, and that forest scenery, pretty country, old bachelors, birds, beasts and trees, have all strong-holds in my affections. But I no more dare to leave town at present on such a jaunt, than I dare do any conceivable or inconceivable deed, the bare mention of which would make the hair of all human creatures stand on end with wonder.

Every day since I have been here [a](except on Mondays when in common with other vagabonds[†2] I usually make holiday)[a] I have been at my desk for many hours. I came here to escape the miscalled pleasures of town, which are pains and penalties to me, and have been obliged on sunny mornings to put a strong and resolute constraint upon myself and to keep the shadow of my Giant Work[†3] perpetually before me ... [a]my country escapes must be limited for the present to quiet places near at hand, where I can take root and put out my leaves without interruption,[a] ... When you see a young horse in a mill grinding away with all his might and main, perhaps you will do me the favor to link his image with mine.

II, 95.1. To THE MARQUIS OF NORMANBY, 3 JULY 1840*

MS National Library of Australia.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Friday 3rd. July 1840.

My Lord.

I make no apology for addressing a few words to you, as I trust you will feel that none is needed. The subject to which I take the liberty of calling your attention is one of great importance, and one to which the Government of which you are so distinguished and worthy a Member, has long directed its enlightened and merciful attention.[†1]

I believe there are few persons more strongly impressed with the excellence and wisdom of the alterations that have been silently working for some years in our treatment and punishment of criminals, than I am. But I fear that their value is not sufficiently appreciated or felt—and that their effect in deterring offenders from the commission of guilty deeds, is very materially impaired—in consequence of their nature and extent not being sufficiently known. The terrors of transportation and confinement under the present system, are known to few but those who have penetrated to the heart of parliamentary reports and commissioners' enquiries; by that class for whose especial benefit and correction they are intended, they are known least of all.

I have felt this for a long time, and have had my old thoughts upon the subject wakened up afresh by the sentence passed upon the convict Gould[†2] the other day, which is shorn of its impressiveness and example by the one unfortunate circumstance that the people do not know, and do not suspect, what his real punishment is. They remember to have read in the newspapers how some men who were transported to New South Wales thirty years ago, died worth their ten and twenty thousand pounds apiece;[†3] and they have a dim idea that the transport-ships are rather close, and the climates to which they go, very bright and hot; beyond this, they know and think nothing about it.

It has occurred to me that a strong and vivid description of the terrors of Norfolk Island[†4] and such-like places,[†5] told in a homely Narrative with a great appearance of truth and reality and circulated in some very cheap and easy form (if with the direct authority of the Government, so much the better) would have a very powerful impression on the minds of the badly-disposed, and would do a great deal to promote the object that your Lordship and all good Governors have at heart. I think, even, that if it were read in prisons, jails for untried criminals, and houses of correction whither they are sent for short terms, it would have a deep and salutary effect in inspiring all rising convicts with a tremendous fear of the higher penalties of the law. And I am sure that the more these penalties are known and surrounded with terrors, the more they will be avoided by the young and wavering.

If this very hasty and meagre hint of the idea I have, is intelligible to you My Lord, I have merely to add that I am ready, and should be very glad, to undertake this task and to place the best description I could produce in your hands, to be used as you think best, but I would have it on the pillow of every prisoner in England.[†6] You will permit me to add, further, that I make this offer as a humble tribute of my respect for the liberal and wise Government under which the people live at present,[†7] and that so far from seeking any fee or reward, I would beg, if I did this at all, to be understood as doing it quite disinterestedly and gratuitously, otherwise I should lose my chief pride and pleasure in the theme.

I am My Lord | Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

The Right Honorable | The Marquis of Normanby.

II, 97.16. To EDWARD GOULBURN,[†1] 8 JULY 1840

Replaces entry.

Extract in David J. Holmes Autographs catalogue No. 17; MS 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 8 July 40; addressed Edward Goulburn.

I am unfortunate again! I am engaged next Wednesday—not only to dinner at home, but to a party at Miss Coutts's in the evening. I should have written to you sooner, but there was a chance of release from the first of these engagements, which I am sorry to say exists no longer. I cannot tell you how vexed I am.

II, 100.10. To J. WETHERELL,[†1] 13 JULY 1840*

MS Dr William Baker. Address: J. Wetherell Esquire | 9 Anson Street | Pembroke Place | Liverpool.

1 Devonshire Terrace York Gate, | Regents Park, London. | 13th. July 1840.

Sir.

I beg to thank you for the courteous expressions contained in your letter of the 27th. of last month (which I should have answered sooner, but that I have been absent from town) and have great pleasure in adding my mite to your Autograph Collection.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

J Wetherell Esquire.

II, 108.21. To [THOMAS LATIMER],[†1] 30 JULY 1840*

MS (copy) Mr E. C. Gaye. Addressee: Latimer is certainly the addressee, since copy of letter exactly similar to a copy of To Latimer, 13 Mar 41 (Vol. II, p. 232).

Alphington | Thursday July 30th. 1840.

My Dear Sir

If Monday will suit you for going to Sir Robert Newman's,[†2] it will be the most convenient day for me and I shall be exceedingly glad to accompany you.

Believe me | Faithfully yours
CHARLES DICKENS

II, 122.1. To WILLIAM HALL, [?28 AUGUST 1840]

Replaces entry.

MS (envelope) Eastgate House, Rochester. Address: William Hall Esquire | 186 Strand. PM 28 Aug 40.

II, 133.20. To THOMAS MITTON, 8 OCTOBER 1840*

MS Mrs Sheila Caton. Address: Private. | Thomas Mitton Esquire | 23 Southampton Buildings | Chancery Lane | London. PM 9 Oct 1840. Date: postmarked 9 Oct 40.

Broadstairs | Thursday October 8th.

My Dear Mitton

Many thanks for your promptitude. I will see you on Monday Morning—about one o'clock or so.

Chapman is making me out an account for my satisfaction, but the returns cannot be regularly made up except at June and Christmas. He says in a letter I had from him yesterday, "We[†1] don't know yet ourselves how it may be, but we are afraid the first 26 nos will not be very profitable owing to the heavy expence of starting, and the large stock left by the Sale declining more rapidly than it ought.[†2]—All that is altered now."[†3]

I rather drooped at this, supposing that nothing would have been easier than to have accomodated[†4] the Stock to the demand. However, manage as they will, I must pay the Piper and make all the Music.

The face, the night before last, was torturing[†5]—very little sleep, and very great pain. I worked all day yesterday notwithstanding, with my head tied up, and today am greatly better.

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Kate and the children send their best regards.

II, 136.30. To GEORGE REYNOLDS,[†1] 13 OCTOBER [?1840]*

Replaces catalogue mention (Vol. II, p. 403).

MS Parrish Collection, Princeton University Library. Date: "1841" added to MS in another hand; 13 Oct was not Tuesday in 1841, but in 1840; CD used the unusual "Octr" in a letter of 4 Oct 40.

1 Devonshire Terrace. | Tuesday Evening Octr. 13th.

Sir.

I beg you to present to the Society of which you are the President, with my best wishes for its prosperity and success, the accompanying Volumes, to which its members are heartily welcome.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. George Reynolds.

II, 142.14. To DANIEL MACLISE, [29 OCTOBER 1840]

Mention in To Forster, [29] Oct [40].

II, 142.15. To JOHN FORSTER, [29] OCTOBER [1840]

MS Victoria and Albert Museum (FC). Date: abbreviated "Octr." and handwriting point to 1840. CD mistook either day or date (see below).

Thursday Octr. 30th.[†1]

My Dear Forster.

Thank you—going on famously[†2]—I have not forgotten the Sermon[†3] nor our friends—I have written to Maclise—and shall be punctual to the time[†4]—papers returned herewith—and all said that need be said.

Always faithfully
CD.

II, 149.8. To WILLIAM BRADBURY, 13 NOVEMBER 1840*

MS John Murray (Publishers) Ltd.

Devonshire Terrace. | 13th. Nov 1840.

Dear Sir

I shall want to see a revise of No. 35,[†1] but will you send me also—as soon as you can after the receipt of this—a proof, as I wish to have time to look at it, with reference to one or two little points.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr Bradbury.

II, 150.20. To MISS ROGERS,[†1] 13 NOVEMBER [1840]*

MS Private. Address: Miss Rogers | 5 Hanover Terrace. Date: During period CD lived at 1 Devonshire Terrace, Friday was 13 Nov only in 1840 and 1846 (when he was in Switzerland).

Devonshire Terrace | Friday November 13th.

Mr. Charles Dickens has great pleasure in accepting Miss Rogers's kind Invitation for Thursday the Nineteenth.

II, 151.13. To JOHN FORSTER, [?NOVEMBER 1840]*

MS Mr C. E. Wrangham. Date: late 1840 on handwriting; perhaps during his Nov 1840 sittings to Patric Park (see Vol. II, p. 150).

Devonshire Terrace. | Tuesday.

Dear Forster.

I am coming down to Chapman and Hall's after I leave "the young Sculptor",[†1] and will give you a call at about 4.

Faithfully Ever
CD.

II, 159.12. To THOMAS MITTON, 28 NOVEMBER [1840]*

Replaces catalogue summary.

MS Yale University Library. Date: unmistakably 1840 on handwriting.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Eighth November.

My Dear Mitton

I am bound to work tonight. Shall you be away tomorrow night? If so, what say you to Monday at 3, or 4?—I can come to you, if you like, at either hour. If this finds you at the office, send me word by Bearer.

Faithfully Always

CD.

II, 177.9. To JOHN FORSTER, [?SEPTEMBER 1837-DECEMBER 1840]

Extract in F, II, i, 92. Date: the only note of this kind, within this period, of which no original survives.

Is it possible that you can't, oughtn't, shouldn't, mustn't, won't be tempted, this gorgeous day!

II, 184.21. To DANIEL MACLISE, 14 JANUARY 1841

Replaces entry.

MS Washington State University.

Fourteenth January 1841.

My Dear Mac

Have you had any note from Forster about dining there to day? Not having seen or heard from him as yet, I am in doubt whether its off or on.

If you knew what I have been suffering in the death of that child![†1]—

———————————————————

Faithfully Always

CD.

II, 195.14. To BASIL HALL,[†1] [27 JANUARY 1841]†

Replaces catalogue extract.

MS Yale University Library. Date: as in Vol. II.

My Dear Sir

I am sorry to say that I dare not go out in the morning (being very busy) until next Tuesday, sorely tempted as I am to be undutiful for the sake of Miss Edgeworth.[†2] Shall you remain in town so long? Let me know, but don't trouble yourself to send here. Leave a letter out for me in Brewer Street.[†3] As you never read Oliver,[†4] I promise myself the pleasure of sending you a copy this morning, and the bearer of it will bring back your note.

Faithfully Yours always

CD.

I write this in bed, having been at work late last night.[†5]

II, 213.1. To THOMAS HOOD,[†1] 17 FEBRUARY 1841*

Replaces mention (Vol. II, p. 220).

MS Yale University Library.

1 Devonshire Terrace, York Gate | Regents Park.
Wednesday Seventeenth Feby 1841.

My Dear Hood—for though I have only shaken hands with you once in the body, we have had so many pleasant meetings in the Spirit, that I cannot hold you at arm's length and call you "Sir".

When a friend of mine,[†2] critical in such matters, brought me the Athenæum Review of Master Humphrey's Clock, I read it—with no little pleasure as you may suppose—and cried directly "I am sure this was written by Hood." But the friend (and you know it always happens that your friend is much better informed than you are) begged me to strangle this monstrous idea in its birth, for he knew—was sure—positive—all but certain indeed—that it came from the pen of another Writer, whom he could name, but wouldn't. I was unwilling to make head against this strong representation, and gave up at the point; protesting, however, that the unknown must have studied your style very close, and had acquired the power of writing pointedly, with very great success.

Still the matter rankled in my mind, and accordingly I made it up (my mind, that is) to ask Dilke whenever I should see him, whether it was you, or no. I have not seen him anywhere since I made this bold resolve, and the other day had my doubts set at rest most unexpectedly by Bradbury the printer—one of the best of printers and worthiest of men.

What can I say to you, now I know that you are the Reviewer? If I were to say that I believe literary history can furnish no more generous or high-minded action, and that it has delighted and affected me far more than I can describe, I should express the Truth but very feebly and weakly. But feeble and weak as words are to convey to you what I feel, I must—having no better medium in this state of existence—assure you with tears in my eyes, that I have derived more lasting pleasure and real satisfaction from this most honorable and hearty kindness of yours, than from anything that has occurred to me for a long, long time. If you could only know how strongly and earnestly I feel your disinterested and manly conduct—how very much it has moved me—and how proud I feel to be so estimated by you—you would be pleased, I am sure, to think that you had conferred so much happiness on (I hope) an unspoilt man.[†3]

Accept such thanks as are very seldom tendered, because they are but seldom called for. And believe me that if I were to write from this day to the Last, I should fail in saying what I want to say.

I hope your health is better,[†4] and that you have not killed Baily.[†5] I think "die and be d—d" is a foolish curse. "Live and be damned" is my motto to all such vagabonds.

Whenever you come to town, I shall reckon on your coming to see me. We will be as quiet as you please; and if you can't drink wine or strong waters, we will pledge each other in gruel or farinaceous foods, and find a new flavor in it.

In town or out—in all places, circumstances, times, and seasons,

Believe me | Faithfully and truly Yours

CHARLES DICKENS[†6]

Thomas Hood Esquire

P.S I didn't know this paper was greasy when I began, or I would have used a better sheet.

II, 217.24. To W. C. MACREADY, 23 FEBRUARY [1841]*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Date: clearly 1841, from reference to Barnaby.

Devonshire Terrace. | Twenty Third February.

My Dear Macready.

If I am to see anything of you in your coming holidays, I must be a Spartan now.

My labours press so heavily upon me at this time—the end of the Second Volume[†1] bringing with it a necessity for speed—that tomorrow morning I shall be on the box of a Brighton coach, and for a week afterwards shut up alone in the old Ship Hotel, working with the energy of fourteen Dragons.

Drink my health in my absence—wish well to Barnaby,[†2] though he does drive me away—and oh do not—do not—curse me.

With that cue for slow music and closing in with a picture,[†3] I ring down the envelope.

Always My Dear Macready | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

W. C. Macready Esquire
Best regards at home. We have a clear bill of health here.

II, 223.7. To [ALEXANDER] BLACKWOOD,[†1] 5 MARCH 1841*

Replaces entry.

MS Francis Edwards Ltd.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park.
Friday March The Fifth | 1841.

Dear Sir.

I do not know whether the inclosed paper will suit your Magazine. But I desire to recommend it to you very earnestly; and as I am not acquainted with the acting Editor, even by name, to beg (through you) that he will do me the favor to read it.

It is beside the question to tell you, or the gentleman before whose favorable consideration I wish it to go, that it is the work of a very poor, humble, self-taught Mechanic;[†2] because of course that is no business of yours, or your readers, and it must be judged by itself. I cannot, however, help mentioning the circumstance as a reason for the great interest I take in it, and the strong desire I feel to assist its author if I can.[†3]

Believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

—Blackwood Esquire

II, 227.19. To [?G. J.][†1] BENNETT, 9 MARCH 1841*

MS Private.

1 Devonshire Terrace | Tuesday Ninth March | 41.

Mr. Charles Dickens sends his compliments to Mr. Bennett, and begs to say that he will be happy to continue among the list of Vice Presidents for the Drury Lane Theatrical Fund.[†2]

II, 238.7. To W. C. MACREADY, 17 MARCH 1841

Extract in Phillips catalogue, Dec 1986; MS 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 17 Mar 41; addressed Macready.

Asking if he would accompany him to Evans's[†1] that morning, I want to leave a word about the books I have bought of poor Tom Hill's.[†2]

II, 250.11. To DUGALD MACFARLAN,[†1] 2 APRIL 1841*

MS Mr Bronson Pinchot.

Devonshire Terrace. | Friday April the Second | 1841.

Dear Mr. Macfarlan.

A Wine-drinker is going to dine with me who doesn't approve of the light Port I usually drink.[†2] I wish you would send me Two dozen of a fine old fruity kind, but not sweet. A full-bodied, choice flavored wine. Do so as soon as possible if you please, that its condition may not be impaired by the removal.

Yours truly
CHARLES DICKENS

Also a dozen of the old Claret in Magnums.

II, 251.1. To DR THOMAS HODGKIN,[†1] 4 APRIL 1841*

MS Mr Brian Lake.

Private

Devonshire Terrace | Sunday Evening April The Fourth | 1841.

Mr. Charles Dickens sends his compliments to Dr. Hodgkin, and begs to thank him for the pamphlets[†2] he has kindly forwarded through Mr. Sibson;[2[sic]][†3] which he will take an early opportunity of reading attentively.

So far as Mr. Dickens understands Doctor Hodgkin's opinions through the medium of his note, they have (and have always had) his full concurrence.

II, 261.1. To [MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL],[†1] 15 APRIL 1841*

MS Connecticut Historical Society.

Devonshire Terrace. | April The Fifteenth 1841.

Dear Sirs.

The inclosed is from our German translator in chief,[†2] who is very strongly and strenuously commended to me. I hope it may prefer some request you can—without inconvenience or impropriety—comply with.

Faithfully Always
CHARLES DICKENS

II, 267.13. To OCTAVIAN BLEWITT, 21 APRIL 1841*

MS Royal Literary Fund.

1 Devonshire Terrace. | Wednesday April The Twenty First | 41.

My Dear Sir.

I have had a very distressing application from one Mr. J. S. Forsyth,[†1] to whom I have given some temporary relief. He has been twice (or oftener; I am not sure about that) assisted by the Fund.[†2] May I ask you whether he has had any help within a year—and if he is eligible to be recommended to the Committee again, at this time? It is a deplorable case, and I know you require no better apology for this intrusion on your time.[†3]

My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

O. Blewitt Esquire.

II, 275.19. To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, [?APRIL 1841]

Mention in To Colburn, 4 May 41. Date: CD had no doubt written to Colburn about Cruikshank's plates for The Pic Nic Papers since his letter of 1 Apr; the sense of urgency suggests he wrote to Cruikshank in late April.

II, 275.20. To DANIEL MACLISE, [?JANUARY-APRIL 1841]*

Text from typed transcript at Dickens House. Date: probably between ?7 Jan 41, when he promised to bring his wife Kate and Fanny Burnett to see Maclise's "picture" (Vol. II, p. 180) and the RA exhibition in May (see below).

Are you man enough to dine with us today at 5 or R. A. enough to sit poring after that hour over your beautiful dormouse?[†1] Reply.

Ever faithfully
CD

II, 279.9. To [HENRY COLBURN],[†1] 4 MAY [1841]*

MS Professor J. J. Brattin. Date: Tuesday was 4 May 41, the year in which CD was editing The Pic Nic Papers for Colburn (see below).

1 Devonshire Terrace | Tuesday May 4th.

Dear Sir

I much regret that you have called, or sent, twice, when I have been from home.[†2] I shall be at home from 11 to 4 to-day, tomorrow, and Friday, if you wish to see me.

I wrote to Mr. Cruikshank immediately after my last communication with you, and inclose his reply.[†3] I have not yet seen him.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

II, 280.13. To W. H. HARRISON, 11 MAY 1841*

Extract made by Walter Dexter from unknown catalogue, in Dickens House; MS 4 pp.; dated 1 Devonshire Terrace, May 11 41; addressed W. H. Harrison. Marked "Private".

I know, am quite certain that long ago you must have quarrelled with me in your mind, and written me down a viper. Correct the word and put in victim instead. I have never had anything to do with anybody that has given me the annoyance of this simple affair of business with Mr. Colburn.[†1] ... I most heartily and thoroughly regret that I ever took this work in hand, and would, if I could, blot the whole affair from the page of my life.

II, 285.5. To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 24 MAY 1841

Mention in Puttick & Simpson catalogue July 1878; MS 1 p.; dated 24 May 41.

II, 287.15. To COUNT D'ORSAY, 26 MAY 1841

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, 12 Oct 1976; MS 2 pp.; dated 148 King's Road, Brighton, 26 May 41; addressed Count D'Orsay.

Informing him that he came to Brighton to recover his health and is now feeling better, inviting him and Madame[†1] to dine with Forster, Maclise and others at The Trafalgar in Greenwich on Sunday, and stating that Le livre de milady est un grand succes.[†2] Il-y-a beaucoup de choses dans ce livre, tout-a-fait extraordinaire.

II, 298.9. To MESSRS BRADBURY & EVANS, 9 JUNE 1841

MS Mr Wayne H. Phelps.

Devonshire Terrace | Ninth June 1841.

Dear Sirs

Will you get the enclosed set up, and forward a proof to Mr. Browne, with all convenient speed?[†1]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

II, 341.10. To [UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT],[†1] 21 JULY 1841

Unidentified catalogue cutting in Dexter Collection, Dickens House; dated 1 Devonshire Terrace, 21 July 41.

I am obliged to you for your note, and its accompanying prospectus; and I beg to assure you that I am strongly impressed with a sense of the great importance and value of such a society as that whose objects it develops. But I regret to add that I cannot become a member of it at this time; being already connected with so many Institutions, that if I were free of half of them for evermore, I should still be encumbered by the number of the rest.

II, 343.20. To J. C. PRINCE,[†1] 27 JULY 1841

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, July 1988; MS 3 pp.; dated 1 Devonshire Terrace, 27 July 41; addressed Mr Prince.

Apologizing for the delay in answering a letter, owing to his absence in Scotland and stating that he has read his poems with very great interest, pleasure, and delight. I have been greatly struck by the history of your life, and by the struggles and vicissitudes you have undergone.[†2] Your writings have a peculiar charm for me, as I presume they would have for most persons, after reading your adventures; but there are many beautiful pieces in your book[†3] which would have attracted my attention, I think, under any circumstances. Asking him to consider his letter as confidential, because he objects to seeing his opinions quoted as though delivered oracularly and assuring him that he should rely on [William] Howitt's opinion ... in whose books I, for one, have found great improvement and gratification of heart.[†4] ... Believe me that I am always

Your sincere well wisher.

II, 348.11. To JOHN MENZIES,[†1] 2 AUGUST 1841*

MS John Menzies plc. Address: Mr. Menzies | Bookseller | Princes Street | Edinburgh.

Broadstairs, Kent. | August The Second 1841.

Dear Mr. Menzies.

Will you do me the favor to obtain for me, from the clerk to the Town council of Edinburgh, the writing which secures to me my Freedom;[†2] and to forward it to me by your first convenient opportunity?

If you will do so, and will have the goodness to direct to my Town residence No. 1 Devonshire Terrace, York Gate, Regent's Park, you will oblige me very much.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Menzies.

II, 360.14. To DANIEL MACLISE, 16 AUGUST 1841

Replaces catalogue mention.

Extract and facsimile (ᵃᵃ) from Sotheby catalogue, July 1987; MS 2 pp.; dated Broadstairs, 16 Aug 41; addressed Daniel Maclise.

Saying that he is writing the shortest of notes lest Maclise, in his invalid condition should faint before you get as far as the signature, and that he leaves out his normal flourish lest it be too much for him.

Are you a man? If so, he invites Maclise to join him at Broadstairs the following Sunday for the next six weeks, saying he may eat what he likes [a]and drink—get up when you like—and go to bed when you like. There are conveniences of all kinds at Margate (do you take me?) and I know where they live.[†1]

In serious and sober earnestness. No one loves you better than I, and no one is more anxious that you should get well in time, that you may come out strong in the dark days. This place, and sea bathing, will cure you. Ask Joe. Ask Elliotson. Ask anybody. [†b]Do not be a fool, Mac, but come with me on Sunday—forget work for six weeks—and go back whole and cheerful.[†b]

Always your faithful friend
CHARLES DICKENS

(I feel like a quaker, after that signature)
P.S. I expect an answer.[a†2]

II, 368.1. To DR JOHN ELLIOTSON, 24 AUGUST 1841*

MS Mr A. J.M. Anderson. Address: Doctor Elliotson | 37 Conduit Street | Bond Street | London. PM Ramsgate 24 Aug 41.

Broadstairs | Tuesday Twenty Fourth August. | 1841

My Dear Elliotson.

A hundred thanks to you for your kindness in the matter of poor Overs.[†1] He did wrong to tell you I have been more than a father to him. He has never had from me in money, more than Five Pounds. He only had that, after he had been taken ill; and neither asked me for it by word or deed, remotely or directly.

I had been turning over in my mind what was to be done for him, and was speaking to Kate about it on Saturday Morning, when she suggested that possibly Macready might find something for him to do at Drury Lane Theatre.[†2] Knowing that several respectable men are constantly employed in such large establishments, whose duty, beyond mere attendance, is very slight indeed, I wrote to Macready directly, and told him that this was a self-taught man who didn't look upon himself as a genius, and had always worked, while he could, without grumbling or repining. I told him too what I quite believe—that he is a man of that kind that only this country and this time could give birth to.

You know what a good fellow Macready is, and what a generous sympathy he has with all struggling men. He sent me back, that night, a most earnest answer, expressive of his strong interest in the person I had described.—I have no doubt he will give him a post in the Theatre, and that he will go far out of his way to find one to suit him. But he will not open 'till Christmas, and I fear will not have it in his power to appoint Overs to any receipt of wages until near that time.[†3] In the meanwhile I must see what can be done for him, and will gladly receive from you (if you will permit me) the amount you offer with such true humanity and liberality. I will hand it over to him as he requires it; and I have written to tell him that you have placed it at my disposal.

I know that if any man, under God, can set him on his legs, you are he, and I am glad to feel assured that he well and thoroughly deserves your great kindness.

My Dear Elliotson | Always your faithful friend
CHARLES DICKENS

Doctor Elliotson.

II, 372.5. To WILLIAM SHOBERL,[†1] 29 AUGUST 1841†

Replaces entry.

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Broadstairs. | Sunday August Twenty Ninth 1841.

My Dear Sir.

I should have written to you this morning in town, but I left very early, and had not time.

I am much obliged to you for your letter, and am flattered by your suggestion.[†2] My experience of Magazine-editing, however, has been by no means a pleasant one; and I have resolved not to connect myself, even in name, with such duties any more.

It is possible that at some future day I may see reasons for altering this determination. At present I have no reason for breaking it, and every motive for adhering to it, most rigidly. Let me thank you once again for your communication—not the less, because I decline to act upon it.

In haste, believe me | Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. Shoberl Esquire.

II, 373.27. To THE REV. W. J.B. ARCHER, 2 SEPTEMBER 1841

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, 16 Oct 1978; MS (3rd person) 1 p.; dated Broadstairs, Kent, 2 Sep 41; addressed The Rev. W. B. Archer.

Stating that he remembers, now that it has been called to his recollection, the paper to which the inclosed note refers and which he has no longer an opportunity of publishing. It may be pleasant to Mr. Archer to know that it returns quite fresh to Mr. Dickens' memory, although at the time when the note was written he read some three or four score MSS every month.[†1] replace headnote with Extract and facsimile of final page given in Anderson Galleries catalogue, No. 2307 (1929); dated 25 Oct 41.

II, 408.32.

II, 409.4.

following elision replace with with which you have (under God) brought me through this distressing illness. I can only say with all the earnestness of which my not un-earnest nature is capable, "I thank you".

Believe me, ever | Faithfully and Sincerely Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Frederick Salmon Esquire.[1a]

You told me once that Mrs. Salmon laughed too much at my books. I hope she will find some passages in the Old Curiosity Shop to make her cry,—without making her less happy or less charitable than they found her.

insert [1a] Frederick Salmon (1796-1868), MRCS, the surgeon who had operated on CD for fistula on 8 Oct. See Vol. II, p. 404*n.* Last three published lines of letter were written as a postscript following the addressee's name.

II, 418.22. To MR PARKER,[†1] 6 NOVEMBER 1841

Extract in John Wilson catalogue No. 38 (1979); MS 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 6 Nov 41; addressed Mr Parker.

Asking him to send a receipt for the inclosed.[†2]

II, 420.1. To JAMES B. SHARPE,[†1] 12 NOVEMBER 1841*

MS (copy in clerk's hand) University of Reading.

White Hart—Windsor | Friday Twelfth November 1841

My Dear Sir.

I beg you not to suppose for a moment that any apology is necessary on account of the visit you did me the favor to pay me, the night before last.[†2] I assure you that I regarded it at the time (and should have always done so, though I had not heard from you) as a welcome & gratifying attention, & one which was very far from requiring any explanation whatever.

I should have seen you with great pleasure, but I have been for five weeks past very unwell—having been, in fact, recovering during that time from the effects of a painful surgical operation—and I am expressly cautioned by my medical attendants to keep very quiet for a week longer—to lie upon a sofa constantly—and to see as few visitors as possible. I sent my friend, Mr. Forster, to say as much to you. He told me he was in great alarm lest you should take him for me; and I presume that was the cause of the obvious embarrassment to which you allude.

Let me thank you very much for the copy of your oration,[†3] which I have read with great interest and pleasure. I have the deepest possible interest in the Prosperity of Institutions, such as that over which you preside; and nothing connected with them can be matter of indifference to me.

I was particularly pleased with your account of the Great Men who have risen to eminence from a poor origin.[†4] It would be difficult to imagine anything in better taste, more to the purpose, or more directly calculated to stimulate and gratify your audience. Nor could the allusions have been more pointedly or happily made.

I hope you will consider this note as being what I mean it to be—a frank and cordial response to your advance, and an assurance that I am

My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

James Birch Sharpe Esquire.

II, 434.1. To MISS CATHERINE HUTTON,[†1] 30 NOVEMBER 1841*

MS Catherine R. Crossley. Address: Miss Catherine Hutton | Bennett's Hill | near | Birmingham.

1 Devonshire Terrace. | York Gate Regents Park.
Thirtieth November 1841.

My Dear Madam.

It gave me great pleasure t'other day, to hear from you again; and I received the Portraits with no less satisfaction. They arrived safely last night.

I know you now, perfectly well, and am very much obliged to you for giving me the means. In my mind's eye I had you very like your present self, but I can scarcely imagine your ever bearing much resemblance to what I may call the bygone portrait. I don't think it does you justice, for it makes you very much of what is commonly called a Tartar, which I am sure you are not, and never were.

I shall have the small one (representing you as you are) bound up with your edition of your father's[†2] Life—which, as I have already told you, I consider a most remarkable and interesting production, and one which ought to be in every Library.[†3] Your other head I shall frame, and put among very good company I assure you.

Sincerely trusting that you will live, and enjoy life, for many years—and cordially thanking you for your recollection of me, and your welcome note—

I am, Dear Madam | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Georgiana Bennett.

Do you see what I have written here, instead of Catherine Hutton? If I had written "Franklin",[†4] to whom your father bore some resemblance I should not have been surprised, but how this name came upon my pen, I cannot imagine.[†5]

You see that I had some notion of the indifference of the town to the riots? I have mentioned it twice or thrice. It is curious enough for I have never heard of the fact, but from you.[†6]

II, 436.1. To EDWARD JESSE,[†1] [1 DECEMBER 1841]

Mention in To Ross, below.

II, 436.2. To FRANCIS ROSS,[†1] 1 DECEMBER 1841*

Replaces catalogue extract.

MS Brown University Library.

Devonshire Terrace. | First December 1841.

Dear Frank.

The weather being so particularly national at present,[†2] I have written to Jesse, to postpone our Hampton Court explorations until Tomorrow week.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Francis Ross Esquire.

II, 436.6. To MRS SHUTTLEWORTH,[†1] 1 DECEMBER 1841

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, Mar 1972; MS 1 p.; dated 1 Devonshire Terrace, 1 Dec 41; addressed Mrs Shuttleworth, Tottenham Green, Tottenham.

Sending hearty thanks to all those whose signatures are attached to the Round Robin from Tottenham of Monday's date and cordially responding to all their good wishes and kind expressions.

II, 447.9. To SPENCER HALL, 18 DECEMBER 1841*

MS Charles W. Traylen.

Devonshire Terrace. | Eighteenth December 1841.

My Dear Sir

Many thanks for the Ticket,[†1] of which I shall not fail to take advantage.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Spencer Hall Esquire.

II, 447.10. To MESSRS COUTTS & CO., 20 DECEMBER 1841*

MS Mr Brian Lake.

Devonshire Terrace. | Monday Twentieth December | 1841.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Messrs. Coutts and Company and incloses the signatures necessary for the Letter of credit;[†1] which he will call at the banking house for, about the middle of next week. Mr. Dickens will be greatly obliged by having his book[†2] made up in the course of to day and tomorrow. He will send his servant for it, tomorrow afternoon.

II, 450.1. To MRS BURNETT, 22 DECEMBER 1841*

MS Copy in Dickens House.[†1]

My dear Fanny

I am delighted to receive fresh news of your success[†2] which I held to be quite certainly assured to you. In the matter of our worthy Grandmother[†3] (who as you very well know never cared twopence about us until I grew famous and then sent me an affectionate request for Five Pounds or so) I cannot but say that I am utterly indifferent to the fact of her existence; and am only terrified into remembering it by the apprehension that she is attended by a duplicate Sarah.[†4] At the same time I would not willingly hurt her by keeping away and therefore I will go and see her before I embark.

What I wish you would say is this: that you learn I shall be in Liverpool some time on Monday and probably towards the Evening—that you know I shall keep myself very quiet & aloof from the intrusion of strangers—firstly because I have been ill, secondly because we shall naturally be desirous to avoid all worry and disturbance in that short interval of rest, and thirdly because you know I have refused an invitation to a Public Dinner at Glasgow[†5] and must be careful not to appear to have time to hold Levees at Liverpool—that you know I shall call to see her for I have told you so much: but that as to my calling to see or presenting myself to be seen by any strangers whatever (and here I have my Eye on their Doctor)[†6] you can tell them from what you know of me that it is utterly and absolutely out of the question.

Whether you write or speak pray put emphatic stress on that last clause. You have no conception what I underwent when I was in Liverpool before[†7] or what I always undergo in any such place under ordinary circumstances—putting embarkation and so forth quite out of the question.

I shall write express instructions to Radley[†8] to take care that there is no mistake concerning your reception or Fletcher's (who threatens to present himself)—To any body else Man Woman or Child I shall be as invisible as the Air. . . .

II, 457.1. To MISS WILKIE,[†1] [?31 DECEMBER 1841]

Mention in next. Date: probably written the same day.

II, 457.2. To EDWIN LANDSEER, 31 DECEMBER 1841*

MS Houghton Library, Harvard.

Devonshire Terrace | Thirty First December 1841.

My Dear Landseer.

I find myself so pressed by business and appointments, both today and tomorrow, that I have been obliged to write to Miss Wilkie and say I cannot go there.

In haste | Always believe me | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Edwin Landseer Esquire

III, 21.6. To MRS TICKNOR,[†1] 25 JANUARY 1842*

MS Dartmouth College, New Hampshire.

Tremont House. | January Twenty Fifth 1842.

Mr. and Mrs. Dickens have great pleasure in accepting Mrs. Ticknor's kind invitation for Friday Evening.

III, 22.6. To GEORGE TICKNOR,[†1] 26 JANUARY 1842*

MS Dartmouth College, New Hampshire. Address: George Ticknor Esquire | Park Street.

Tremont House. | Twenty Sixth January 1842

My Dear Sir

Mrs. Dickens will be at home at 3, and will be delighted to see Mrs. Ticknor at that hour. I wish I could find a little of that same rest you speak of. I really want it. But everybody who comes here, means so kindly that I feel it almost a duty to see them all.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

George Ticknor Esquire

III, 23.11. To SAMUEL FROTHINGHAM JUNR,[†1] 27 JANUARY [1842]*

MS[†2] Robert H. Taylor Collection, Princeton University Library. Date: clearly Jan 42, when CD was in Boston.

Tremont House Jany. 27

My dear Sir.

Since I saw you I am sorry to say I have been in a manner obliged to engage myself to go to Lowell[†3] in company with two gentlemen of the name of Lawrence,[†4] whom I have no doubt you know. Mrs. Dickens begs me to say that she will be extremely happy to see Mrs. Frothingham any day between 3 and 4 o clock.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Saml Frothingham Junr. Esq

III, 75.6. To HENRY TRIMMER,[†1] 21 FEBRUARY [1842]*

MS[†2] Free Library of Philadelphia. Date: clearly 1842.

Carlton House Feby 21st.

Sir.

I am obliged to you for your letter. I regret to say that the whole of my time is so incessantly engaged, and the period of my departure is so near at hand, that I cannot see you now. But when I return here I shall be very glad to give you the opportunity you seek.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr Henry Trimmer.

III, 99.13. To ASBURY DICKENS,[†1] 6 MARCH 1842*

Replaces catalogue mention.

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

United States Hotel, Philadelphia | 6th March 1842.

My Dear Sir.

I have promised and vowed to some friends in New York, that I will stay at Fuller's Hotel in Washington. I purpose being there on Wednesday[†2] Evening next. If you will do me the favor to bespeak a comfortable sitting room and bedroom for myself and Mrs. Dickens—and also for her maid, and my secretary—in that establishment, you will very greatly oblige me. I shall remain in Washington, a week.[†3]

We hold ourselves engaged to you for Thursday Evening.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Asbury Dickins[†4] Esquire

III, 128.20. To JOHN BARNEY,[†1] 14 MARCH [1842]†

Replaces catalogue extract.

MS David J. Holmes, Autographs.

Fullers Hotel March 14th.

Dear Sir

I shall probably be in Baltimore on Monday night, and I shall remain there two days.

I shall devote an hour of each day to receiving any friends who may do me the favor to call, but I am obliged to deny myself the pleasure of making any other engagements either public or private my time in your City being already fully engaged.[†2]

Thanking you for your kind note.

I am, Dear Sir | [†a]Yours faithfully and obliged
CHARLES DICKENS[†a]

John Barney Esq.[†3]

III, 137.7. To W. C. RIVES,[†1] 16 MARCH 1842*

MS Library of Congress.

Washington. | Sixteenth March 1842.

My Dear Sir.

I am exceedingly obliged to you for your great kindness in preparing and bringing me the letters for Richmond—and for all your courtesy and attention. I very much regret that I did not see you, to shake hands and say "good b'ye"—

Always My Dear Sir | Yours faithfully and obliged
CHARLES DICKENS

The Honorable William C. Rives.

III, 137.8. To MRS RIVES,[†1] 16 MARCH 1842*

MS Library of Congress.

Washington | Sixteenth March 1842.

My Dear Madam.

Let me thank you with all my heart for your kind note, and for your book.[†2] I shall read it on my travels—with pleasure, I am sure, for its association with you would be certain to awaken that feeling, whatever were its merits. But Washington Irving[†3] is no despicable judge—there are few better—and I am prepared, for its own sake, to have great delight and interest in its pages.

In the confidence that I shall not be disappointed—and with the assurance of my earnest and true regard, I am always

Faithfully Your friend
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Rives.

III, 189.25. To DR S. G. HOWE,[†1] 4 APRIL 1842

MS Perkins Institution.

Cincinnati. Ohio. | Monday Fourth of April 1842.

My Dear Sir.

I am glad to have a legitimate excuse for writing to you. You were not at the Blind Institution when I had the happiness of visiting it. As I never was more truly and deeply affected in my life than on that occasion (except when I read your account of Laura Bridgman,[†2] a day or two previous) I never more sincerely regretted the not seeing any man than I did the not seeing you. I am one of God's creatures who to the best of his capacity and ability, loves the rest:—accept the thanks I offer you, in the name of humanity, for the light you have shed on that dark world by which you are surrounded, and in which you labour—to your everlasting honor.

My friend Doctor Elliotson of London has just written me a letter, from which I extract the passage which is the occasion of my troubling you:—

"I beg my best respects to Dr. Howe, and hope for the report of 1842; and am very anxious to know the character of Laura's dreams,[†3] as she has never seen, heard, or smelt. I should esteem it a great favor if Dr. Howe would inform me of all his mesmeric doings and results[†4] with her and others, blind from birth."

I purpose sailing from New York on the seventh of June, and expect to be at the Carlton House, from the first. If you can charge me, between those days, with any communication for Doctor Elliotson, I shall be proud to bear it Home.

I have written to him, and told him that I have addressed you to this effect.

With no common sentiments of regard

I am | My Dear Sir | Faithfully and gratefully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Doctor Howe.

III, 204.9. To THE EARL OF MULGRAVE,[†1] [?APRIL 1842]

Mention in Mulgrave to Lady Normanby, Montreal 22 April (MS Marquis of Normanby). Date: presumably shortly before Mulgrave's letter to his mother.

Concerning his coming visit to Montreal.[†2]

III, 221.1. To ASBURY DICKENS, 30 APRIL 1842†

Replaces entry.

MS Claremont College Libraries.

Niagara Falls. | Thirtieth April 1842.

My Dear Sir.

You will be glad to hear that we have reached this wonderful place in safety; and that we are in perfect health and spirits—off those Western Waters which you hold in so much dread—and looking joyfully towards Home, whence we have had none but pleasant and most cheerful news.

We often speak of you, and your kindness in Washington. I say that you can't be a relation, however distant. If you were, we never could have been, instinctively, on such good terms.

Mrs. Dick*e*ns[†1] unites with me in best regards to Mrs. Dick*i*ns,[†1] and all your family. I shall not fail to report our safe arrival at home; and there—or here—or anywhere—I am always

My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours,

CHARLES DICKENS

Asbury Dickins Esquire

III, 225.4. To [J. S.] WADSWORTH,[†1] 30 APRIL 1842*

Facsimile ([aa]) of first page and extracts in John Wilson catalogue No. 48 (1981); MS 2 pp.

[a]Niagara Falls. | Thirtieth April 1842.

My Dear Sir.

Mrs. Dickens and myself arrived here from our long Western journey, on the Twenty Sixth. We go forward into Canada, on Tuesday morning next.

Our time has melted away so rapidly, and we have now so little left, that we are fain to deny ourselves the pleasure of coming to see you, in accordance with your kind and hospitable Invitation. I have put off writing to you to say thus much until now, in the hope that by some chance or other (it would be hard to say what) we might be able to come to you, even if only for a day. But our Canadian Engagements, coupled with our brief leisure, render this impossible. We can therefore only send[a] regrets. ... Mrs Dickens begs her best regards to yourself, and her best love to your daughter. I crave leave to add something as nearly akin to the latter message as a sober married gentleman may

[a] ——. Wadsworth Esquire[a]

III, 255.8. To MRS BURNETT, 4 JULY 1842*

MS Copy in Dickens House.[†1]

Devonshire Terrace | Fourth July 1842

My Dear Fanny

As you may suppose we were rather anxious to see the children, and flew through Liverpool on the wings of the [?wind][†2] without carrying along with us a single Box or parcel. I was very sorry to hear across the water of Burnett's illness. I hope you have not pitched your Tent near any drain or stagnant water.

We found the Darlings all well, but joy and surprise had such an effect on Charley that he went into convulsions which rendered it necessary for me to summon Morgan[†3] and (in the middle of the night) Elliotson. They considered him in danger but thank God he recovered and is now quite himself except that he is thinner & paler.

Kate sends her best Love and believe me in haste

Ever affectionately Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

III, 269.16. To T. J. THOMPSON, 13 JULY 1842*

Replaces entry.

MS Dartmouth College, New Hampshire.

Devonshire Terrace. | Thirteenth July 1842

My Dear Thompson

I heard a gentleman (in the lower and more active department of the coal trade) say, yesterday, in the Strand, to another gentleman, that he was "an incoherent bugger."—Without applying that expression to you; will you permit me to enquire whether you dine with me on Saturday at 6, or whether you do not?

Faithfully Always

CHARLES DICKENS T. J. Thompson Esquire.

III, 303.10. To CHARLES B. GREATREX,†1 3 AUGUST 1842

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, Oct 1980; MS 1 p.; dated Broadstairs, 3 Aug 42; addressed Charles B. Greatrex, Jr.

Your book,†2 and its accompanying jeu d'esprit,†3 have been forwarded to me here. I am exceedingly obliged for your pleasant recollection of me.

III, 310.23. To THOMAS MITTON, 28 AUGUST 1842

Summary in American Book Prices Current, 1976. MS 1 p.; dated 28 Aug 42; addressed Thomas Mitton.

Agreeing to dine with him for business purposes.

III, 358.10. To JOHN DICKENS,†1 3 NOVEMBER 1842*

Facsimile in John Wilson catalogue, No. 52.

Castle,†2 Taunton | Thursday Evening November Third 1842

My dear Father.

I write a hasty line from this place to say that coming from Okehampton this morning (having left Tintagel yesterday), we did not pass Alphington, but went straight, by some road I don't know, to the New London,†3 where we changed and immediately came on here lest we should be too late for the Train. This is the reason why I did not see you, as I had hoped to do.

We have had a very charming excursion, among much bold and splendid scenery†4—one break-down on a Cornish road, but nobody hurt.

Stanfield, Maclise, and Forster unite in best regards, and I am always, with love to Augustus[†5]

Affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Dickens Esquire.

III, 362.9. To HENRY AUSTIN, [8 NOVEMBER 1842]

Envelope in Sotheby's catalogue, Feb 1978. Address: Henry Austin Esquire | 87 Hatton Garden | PM 8 Nov 42.

III, 375.20. To EDWARD MOXON, 17 NOVEMBER 1842

Replaces shorter catalogue extract.

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, Nov 1889; MS 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 17 Nov 42; addressed Edward Moxon.

I will not apologize to you for troubling you with the enclosed, for I am only executing an American Commission which I am bound to discharge, when I ask you if you are disposed to republish them in a cheap form here?[†1] Pray write me such a reply as I can send to the author of the volumes, and so get absolution for my conscience in this matter.

III, 379.1. To HENRY BURNETT, 25 NOVEMBER 1842*

Replaces mention.

MS Copy in Dickens House.[†1]

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Twenty Fifth Nov 1842

My dear Burnett

I did not write to you on the subject of the Bill simply because there was nothing to be said or done in relation to it. It came here & I was forced to pay it. The receipt of your letter the day before yesterday informing me that you had paid the amount into Mastermans[†2] gave me an amount of pleasure which very few such communications could have awakened within me & which I have seldom if ever had occasion to feel in any money transaction. Not because of the money itself (though in the midst of the numerous claims upon my purse I cannot affect an indifference to it) but because it restored & confirmed that confidence in yourself and Fanny which I have always felt your Industry and Perseverance deserved & which I would not have had destroyed for ten times the sum.

Kate joins in cordial Love to yourself & her & the Children (whom I have a dreamy kind of Idea of coming to see before long) & I AM

Ever affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

III, 422.26. To THOMAS MITTON, 15 JANUARY 1843*

MS Mr Bronson Pinchot.

Devonshire Terrace | Sunday Night | Fifteenth Jany. 1843

My Dear Mitton

As I am in the very height and transport of my No[†1] I am afraid to investigate the subject of the enclosed just now, or to ask what has become of the Quarter's money. I have told him, in reply, to come to you. Will you do, whatever must be done?

I want you to come and dine with me at Jack Straw's Castle at Hampstead next Friday, when I hope to have the No in my pocket. Can you? Let me know. If you can, I will come to Southampton Buildings at halfpast two, to speak of business matters; and we will start in the carriage at 3.

I will ask Henry Austin when I receive your answer. Nobody else.

You will see by father's letter that I have given him leave to try Frederick for Three Months.[†2] I will tell you why, when I see you.

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Mitton Esquire

III, 435.

n. 5 replace with De Gex was elected to the Athenaeum on 6 Feb; CD signed the supporters' sheet.

III, 446.10. To EDWARD BLACKMORE,[†1] 27 FEBRUARY 1843*

MS Charles W. Traylen.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Seventh February 1843

Mr Blackmore.

If you will draw upon me at Two Months from the First of March for the amount of your account, I shall be glad to give you my acceptance.[†2]

Yours truly
CHARLES DICKENS

III, 468.15.

After Literary Fund. add Envelope, MS Private. Address: Octavian Blewitt Esquire | Literary Fund Society | 73 Great Russell Street. PM 6 Apr 43.

III, 491.21

after Ziegler. add Envelope, MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Longman Esquire | Paternoster Row. Date: Handwriting suggests envelope belongs to the letter CD wrote to Longman on 17 May 43. Not sent through the post.

III, 496.1. To MRS BURNETT, 24 MAY [1843]*

MS Copy at Dickens House.†1 Date: Copy has 1847, obviously in error.

My dear Fanny

I am very glad to have heard from you & still more glad to have received so good an account of all your House to whom our united best remembrances.

I have repeatedly promised and vowed—threatened sworn & solemnly protested—that I would come down and see my Godson & the "Tinkling Blackman".†2 Now that I have left off doing so I begin to think I shall be really able to come. So if I do come, bear it with fortitude.

You shall have the Examiner†3 henceforth by every Monday Mornings Post. I wish I had known before that you would have liked to receive it. Chapman & Hall have the Order you wish. They spoke to me about it when the work began†4 but I told them they had best wait until I heard from you.†5

Everything here go[es] on as usual. Setting aside those improvements and arrangements for which the humble Individual who has now the honor to address you was anciently famous—no Room in the House is altered in the least I think. Maclise and Forster come & go as of yore. The former was expressing his opinion the other night at Supper that the crumb of quartern Loaves is rejected even by Orphans. Forster is more silent than in the old Days & his Nose is higher. Topping waxes in Years and redness & knows Town rather less than he used to. His wife is dirtier & more down at Heel. They have 3 children. Timber you don't know. He is a little Dog covered all over face & all with curly white Hair I brought from America & have taught him all manner of tricks.†6 He was stolen not long ago from the kitchen. I cut off the area steps the Day after. He was brought back by Topping & a Policeman—70 years old Six feet four inches high & with enormous whiskers whom Topping introduced with these words—"Me and this Young Man Sir—We've got Him."

Kate sends her best love in which Georgina unites and I am always my dear Fanny

Your Affectionate Brother

CHARLES DICKENS

Tell Burnett to try the effect of a pint of cold water spring water every night before going to Bed and every morning before shaving. I never miss it & am quite serious when I say with Elliotson that I believe it to be the finest Medicine in the World. Feverishness is a word I have lost all use for.

III, 500.18. To ROBERT HUGHMAN,[†1] 2 JUNE 1843

Extract in Christie's catalogue, April 1981; MS 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 2 June 43; addressed Robert Hughman.

I am much gratified by, and am much indebted to you for the Dedication of your Poem;[†2] which I am going to read, luxuriously, this afternoon.

III, 501.9. To EDWIN CHADWICK, [?4 JUNE 1843]

Mention in To Howe, 5 June 43.

III, 501.10. To DR S. G. HOWE, 5 JUNE 1843

MS Perkins Institution.

Monday Morning | June Fifth 1843.

My Dear Howe.[†1]

I have always been so strongly opposed to our Poor Law, that I think it highly probable my introduction of you to this workhouse might not be an agreeable one. I presume I am entitled to commend it to your notice, but I really am not sure, even of that; and I am unwilling to argue the point with inferior functionaries.

But I have written to Chadwick, who is the head and front of this matter in England and with whom my differences of opinion are no cause of division between us, as he has done, unquestionably, much good for the people.[†2] I have begged him to send me such Powers as may be necessary for your object; and I will hand the same to you when we meet, for Tower purposes,[†3] tomorrow.

With best Regards | Believe me always | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

III, 512.3. To CHARLES MANBY, 13 JUNE [1843][†1]

Mention in Chas J. Sawyer Ltd catalogue No. 129 (1936); MS 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 13 June [43]; addressed Charles Manby. Date: misdated 1847 in catalogue (CD's "3"s and "7"s are often confused); CD was living at 1 Chester Place on 13 June 1847.

III, 514.32. To [W].P. FRITH, 21 JUNE 1843

Extract in Phillips catalogue, Sep 1984; MS 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 21 June 43; addressed [H]. P. Frith.

Making arrangements to call at your painting room to see my little pictures.[†1]

III, 520.1. To MADAME SALA,[†1] 6 JULY 1843

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, May 1914; MS 3 pp.; dated Broadstairs, 6 July 43; addressed Madame Sala.[†2]

I fear a letter of introduction to Messrs. Bradbury and Evans would be of no service to you, as they scarcely publish at all except for myself, unless it be for the writers in periodicals of their own proprietorship, etc.

III, 526.1. To ROBERT BROWNING,[†1] 24 JULY 1843*

MS Boston University.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Fourth July 1843.

My Dear Browning

Forster did not know that I was going out tomorrow morning, to sit (oh woe is me!) to Miss Gillies.[†2] Will you tell your German friend[†3] that I will make a point of being at home on Wednesday at one; and that I shall be happy to see him?

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

III, 527.1. To BENJAMIN LUMLEY,[†1] 25 JULY 1843*

MS Dickens House. Address: B. Lumley Esquire | Her Majesty's Theatre.

Devonshire Terrace. | York Gate Regents Park.
Tuesday Evening 25th. July 1843.

Sir.

As chairman of the committee for arranging a benefit at one of the National Theatres, in behalf of the children of the late Mr. Elton,[†2] I am directed to beg that you will do that body of gentlemen the favor of returning an early reply to a letter addressed to you by Mr. Macready,[†3] and left for your perusal by two members of the committee, this day.

The committee are sure that as a private individual you cannot but feel for the great misery of this unfortunate family; and they are equally certain that, being the manager of a large and important establishment, you will feel, with them, the necessity of their proceeding in their object without a moment's delay.

They therefore do not apologize for this intrusion.

Permit me to add that I shall be personally obliged by as prompt an attention to this, as is consistent with your convenience. And that I am

Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

B. Lumley Esquire

III, 534.19. To A. W. FRANKS,[†1] [?SUMMER 1843]

MS (envelope only) Mrs M. B. Marshall. Address: A. W. Franks Esquire | Eton College | Berks. Date: Handwriting suggests 1843, the year in which Franks left Eton, probably at the end of the Summer Half.

III, 535.33. To THOMAS BEARD,[†1] [6 AUGUST 1843]

Envelope in Sotheby's catalogue, Feb 1978. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Place | Edgeware Road. PM 6 Aug 43.

III, 537.13. To MISS JULIA FORTESCUE,[†1] [?6 AUGUST 1843]

Mention in Julia Fortescue to Lord Gardner (MS Lady Iveagh), dated "Thursday". Date: probably 6 Aug when The Rivals was withdrawn (see below).[†2]

Condoling with her on her illness.[†3]

III, 540.1. To MESSRS BRADBURY & EVANS, 13 AUGUST 1843†

Replaces catalogue extract.

MS Private.

Broadstairs | Thirteenth August 1843

I come up to town tomorrow for one night, and dine with Mr. Forster at 5. If you can send a proof of the accompanying MS[†1] there, by that time, I should like to have it.—But don't put yourselves out of the way.

Faithfully Always
CD.

Messrs Bradbury and Evans.
Punch is better than ever.[†1]

III, 555.33. To MRS BURNETT, 6 SEPTEMBER 1843*

MS Copy at Dickens House.[†1]

Broadstairs | Sixth Sept 1843

My dear Fanny

I dare say you know by this time that I have consented to be victimised on the Altars of the Manchester Athenaeum.[†2] You will have a notion from [what][†3] you see on that occasion of the extent & nature of my Public Sufferings.

I was dining with Mitton the other day when greatly to my amazement & slightly to my dumbfounderment he offered to accompany me! having it seems a curiosity to hear me speak. I had not the Heart to throw any obstacle in the way as he does not often see me & so it stands.

I suppose you can take him under your wing on the great Evening. The body of the place is big enough for his accommodation but the Idea of that swelling Form upon a stage (is there a stage?) disconcerts me, especially as my friend from London would be considered as a matter of course to be some distinguished character. I shall be glad to hear your sentiments.[†4]

It has just come to my knowledge that certain newspapers on the other side of the water have been speaking of the overwhelming reception given to Dickens on his visit to America and the quiet and almost friendly acceptance by the Americans of some of his strong assertions after his return home and since then of his setting them up as a Target for his projectiles—that the time has arrived for them to be angry—that if some things lately written he intended for the Americans—which he did—they would never let him open his Lips in America [ ][†5] after Chuzzlewit.

We are all well and all unite in love to yourself Burnett and the Babies. We are quite rejoiced to hear that Harry is doing well & I am strongly disposed to think that you will find his progress in learning something extraordinary in such circumstances.[†6]

Timber desires his duty—he is the wonder of the coast.

Your affectionate Brother
CHARLES DICKENS

III, 560.17. To JOHN OVERS, 12 SEPTEMBER 1843*

MS G. A. Yablon.

Broadstairs, | Kent | 12th September 1843

Dear Mr. Overs

There is no doubt that you are quite right in reference to Mr. Young;[†1] whose conduct is unquestionably kind, and looks honest. I really do hope that if you are not too soon discouraged, and have reasonable health, you will get on well and happily.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

III, 577.6. To MRS BURNETT, [7 OCTOBER 1843]*

MS Copy in Dickens House.[†1] Date: dated by his return to London; Saturday was 7 Oct.

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday Afternoon

My dear Fanny

I reached Town quite safely a little after 5 this morning. The time passed very quickly and of course Mitton who never sleeps in a carriage was snoring two thirds of the way.

The effect of his countenance as it appeared in his sleep—his Mouth open & a very dirty pocket handkerchief tied round his Head was awful in the extreme.

It was rather a tremendous circumstance I think that reaching across the Table for the Sugar Bason at Birmingham I should have it handed me by—John Eustace Giles!!!!![†2] but I heard he was on his way to some Missionary Meeting at Portsmouth. There was some thing so very ridiculous in his turning up again that I laughed all the way to London.

The Door was on the Latch & I got in directly. Kate is better[†3] and sends her best Love. She is very much affected at not having been with me. The children are all well.

Give my Love to Charley who is a capital Fellow. I must send him a token of my Godfathership. Remember me cordially to Burnett. I shall be glad to hear that the Athenaeum proceedings gave general satisfaction.

In great haste, or I lose the Post

Always My dear Fanny | Affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs Burnett

I feel that I am very fond of Miss Ashton.[†4] Mitton is of opinion "that she ain't so bad."

III, 580.

n. 3 delete after 6 Oct adding CD reached London at 5 a.m. on 7 Oct having evidently travelled on the night mail from Liverpool (see To Mrs Burnett, 7 Oct 43, and n, above).

III, 585.9. To GEORGE LOVEJOY,[†1] 24 OCTOBER 1843

Replaces catalogue extract (Vol. III, p. 577).

MS Mr Michael Silverman.

London. 1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Twenty Fourth October 1843

My Dear Sir

Pray do me the favor to assure the committee of your Literary and Scientific Institution, that I am much gratified by their kind remembrances; and that it is not a little matter which should prevent me from accepting their Invitation for the Twenty Fourth.[†2] I regret to add, however, that urgent engagements render it quite out of my power to attend.

I am not the less obliged to the committee and yourself; and with every cordial wish for the success of your new building, and with much pleasure in knowing that my friend Mr. Serjeant Talfourd will be present at its christening, the representative of Literature and champion of its rights; I am Sir

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

III, 597.18.

replace headnote with MS National Library of Scotland. Address: Favored by Miss Helen Faucit. | Sir William Allan | 72 Great King Street | Edinburgh.

[III,]598.4.

for "say fond" read "very fond"

[III, 598.]8.

add Sir William Allan.
delete n. 2.

III, 600.11. To [?JOHN FORSTER], [?17 NOVEMBER 1843]

Undated fragment, almost certainly to Forster, may belong to this letter.

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, Feb 1978. Date: Handwriting supports 1840s.

Since writing this has thought that an application on behalf of an officer in the Navy might be injurious. I mean to go careering out for a stiff walk.[†1]

Ever affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

III, 600.16. To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 17 NOVEMBER 1843

Mention in Puttick & Simpson catalogue, July 1878; MS 1 p.; dated 17 Nov 43.

III, 607.6. To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 8 DECEMBER 184[1-3]

MS Mr Jeffrey C. Smith. Date: "184" is legible, final figure blurred; handwriting suggests 1840-3.

Devonshire Terrace York Gate Regents Park | 8 December 184[1-3]

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

With Compliments[†1]

III, 616.8. To EDWIN CHADWICK, [28 DECEMBER 1843]

Envelope only mentioned in Sotheby's catalogue, July 1976; postmarked 28 Dec 43; addressed Edwin Chadwick Esquire | Office of the Poor Law Commission.

IV, 13.

n. 5 add On Friday, 5 Jan, all those present wrote their signatures (Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, June 1979); CD's was at the head as "Charles Dickens | Fifth January 1844", and the others were W. Harrison Ainsworth, John Forster, Daniel Maclise, Laman Blanchard, George Raymond, W. Francis Ainsworth.

IV, 28.16.

after 23 Jan 44. add Additional extracts from unidentified catalogue cutting in Dickens House

[IV, 28.]17-18.

Replace summary with I was going to send the enclosed to you down at Malvern, in a violent hurry, by what is called "a private hand". But the private hand scratched its private head so long, in a state of uncertainty that here you are back again, as I hear, before it has moved ten yards towards Wiltshire.

[IV, 28.]21.

after my back besides ... insert is there any reason aquatic, rheumatic or otherwise against your coming to dine with me.

IV, 30.22.

replace headnote with MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address (envelope, MS Mr Frederick Koch): Theodore Compton Esquire | The Temperance Society | 30 Moorgate Street.

[IV,]31.2.

for restraining read reclaiming

[IV, 31.]7-8.

for total abstainment read totally abstinent

IV, 39.25.

for SAMUEL read JAMES

n. 5 for Samuel read James

IV, 42.10.

after 11 Feb add [1a]

[IV, 42.]16.

after disappointment add [2a]

insert [1a] His proofs of the 1st edn (II, 63) have a marginal pencil note, not in his hand (probably his secretary's) correcting the date to 11 Feb.

insert [2a] The same hand brackets this sentence and writes "13 Feby" in the margin, obviously using the evidence of the original letter, which has not survived.

IV, 43.26.

after Athenaeum add [6] insert [6] CD had signed supporters' sheets for two candidates, the Rev. Thomas Storks, MA (son of Serjeant Storks who had supported his own candidacy in 1838: see Vol. I, p. 416 & n) and Robert Hutton, MA, FGS (perhaps one of the family of William and Catherine Hutton: see Vol. II, p. 260*n*). Both were elected.

IV, 66.14. To EDMUND FRY,[†1] 7 MARCH 1844*

Text from transcript by Walter Dexter in Dickens House.

London 1, Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Seventh March 1844

Dear Sir

I am very much obliged to you for your courteous letter and for the opportunity of perusing the enclosed; which has afforded me extreme amusement. I should greatly like to be acquainted with the Writer. As a Public Speaker he must be invaluable.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Edmund Fry Esqre.

IV, 90.1. To THOMAS MITTON, 30 MARCH 1844*

MS Mr Colin Taylor Benson.

Devonshire Terrace. | Thirtieth March 1844.

My Dear Mitton

I really have a doubt now, whether it might not be well to go down again.[†1] I think that note of Alfred Smithson's[†2] would render it a graceful act. It would be impossible to write at this time, quite.

Perhaps you will come up, in the course of the Morning. I send you a note just now received by Kate.

Faithfully Always
C DICKENS[†3]
Thomas Mitton Esquire

IV, 95.5. To [I. J.] RICH,[†1] 3 APRIL 1844*

MS Mr A. Burton-Garbitt.

Devonshire Terrace | Wednesday Third April | 1844.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Rich, and begs to apologize for having, in the pressure of his own engagements, omitted to attend to Mr. Rich's note until now.

The enclosed are the only things Mr. Dickens has on hand, addressed to Professor Longfellow.[†2] Perhaps Mr. Rich will still be so kind as to take charge of them, until an opportunity presents itself to Mr. R. for sending them over.

IV, 114.3. To DR SOUTHWOOD SMITH, 26 APRIL 1844

Extract in Surrey Bookshop catalogue, n.d.; MS 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 26 Apr 44; addressed Dr Southwood Smith.

I am going as far as Lincoln's Inn, but shall be at home, I do not doubt, by 5, and do not go out to Dinner until 7.

IV, 116.1. To J. P. HARLEY, 30 APRIL 1844

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, May 1986; MS 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 30 Apr 44.

About the forthcoming Sanatorium dinner at the London Tavern; asking Harley to be a steward, and telling him that ladies will dine with them. It is expected to be very brilliant and cheerful.

IV, 147.10. To [CAPTAIN DI VILLA],[†1] 11 JUNE 1844†

Replaces entry.

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

9 Osnaburgh Terrace. | Tuesday Night Eleventh June | 1844

Dear Sir

I am exceedingly sorry to say, that I cannot comply with your request, in the matter of the Novel and Mr. Newby.[†2] You may recollect my telling you that I had the strongest objection to communicating even with my own Publishers, on such a subject. But I have an objection to communicating with anyone else, which is quite insurmountable.

Even if I had read the book, or had time to read it in Manuscript, my feeling on this point would be equally strong and decided;—I see so many reasons for laying down to myself the principle of never expressing an opinion in such a case, that I cannot possibly depart from it. Mr. Newby is perfectly able to judge of the book and the probability of its success in a business point of view, for himself. I must positively decline having any share in the negociation.

For your kindness in reference to the letters of introduction,[†3] I am much indebted to you. I am going to Bath[†4] almost immediately, but will call on you on Saturday at about half past one; taking the chance of finding you at home, and having an opportunity of thanking you in person.

I am Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

IV, 171.6. To PIERRE-EDOUARD ALLETZ,[†1] 9 AUGUST 1844†

Replaces catalogue extract.

MS Case Western Reserve University.

Albaro | Friday Morning | August Ninth 1844

My Dear Sir.

I shall be truly happy in meeting a writer of such distinguished and eminent genius as M. Lamartine—though it be for only a few moments, and under the unfavorable circumstance of my not being able to speak his language with any degree of correctness or fluency. But I hold myself more than repaid in being able to read it well, since that accomplishment is a source of great delight to me and inspires me with an interest in M. Lamartine which nothing but himself, in his own beautiful productions, could have awakened.

I thank you very much for your kind and friendly note; and with compliments to your Lady and family, am My Dear Sir

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

M. Alletz.

IV, 174.5. To THE MARCHESE DI NEGRO,[†1] 10 AUGUST 1844*

MS Biblioteca Civica Berio, Genoa.

Albaro | Villa Bagnerello | Tenth August 1844.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to the Marquess Negri;[†2] and in forwarding the enclosed letter of introduction from a mutual friend,[†3] begs to assure the Marquess Negri that he would not have lost a moment after his arrival in Genoa, in doing himself the honor of cultivating an acquaintance so much sought and so highly valued by his countrymen, but that he unfortunately mislaid this letter among some other papers, and found it only yesterday. He trusts the Marquess Negri will therefore excuse his delay in forwarding it.

IV, 179.25. To JOHN OVERS, [MID-AUGUST] 1844

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, June 1899; addressed John Overs. Date: probably soon after CD heard of a 2nd edn of Overs's Evenings of a Working Man published on 27 July.

My Dear Overs ... I should have been better pleased to hear of Mr. Newby's having redeemed his pledge of paying you more money if the book succeeded—on the strength of which I wrote him a handsome note:[†1] desiring to make him your honest friend, if it were not wild insanity to entertain such a hope of a bookseller. I say I should be better pleased by his doing that, than by his heading a subscription for you;[†2] as I cannot but love justice before generosity. But this between ourselves. He may practice both virtues, perhaps.

IV, 235.22. To MRS HENRY BURNETT, [6 DECEMBER 1844]*

MS Copy in Dickens House.[†1] Date: the only Friday during CD's London visit was 6 Dec.

Piazza Coffee House Covent Garden | Friday Morning

My Dear Fanny

I am terribly beset as you may suppose & have so much to do that I hardly know where to turn.

I leave London & England again on Sunday night. Your Friends delivered their Letter which by the way being consigned to 3 Ladies[†2] should have been addressed I think to Kate. We happened to have rather a small Dinner Party in hand which happened very well as we invited the "ould" Lady to Dinner and her Daughters in the Evening. We had Music Forfeits and divers other Entertainments and I believed they enjoyed themselves very much. The Young Ladies are exceedingly agreeable and pleasant. I saw them in the Street next Morning on their way Southward & pulled off my Hat with continental grace.

I have written a decided Staggerer of a Book for Christmas. It has made a most extraordinary effect upon a very difficult audience to whom I have read it here.[†3] The Printers have laughed and cried over it strangely and great expectations and predictions are entertained concerning it. It made a great impression on me in the writing. It will be published on Monday the 14th,[†4] and I have given directions for your receiving it through the Manchester Bookseller as usual. When you come toward the end of the 3rd part you had better send upstairs for a clean Pocket Handkerchief.

Let me know at Genoa that you received it duly.

Kate and the Children are all well. By my arrangements for leaving England, callers out of number & my necessary work I have been almost driven wild. But I am perfectly well and have so enlarged upon the cold water (tell Burnett) that I now take a Frosty Shower Bath every morning the moment I am out of Bed.

I am sincerely glad to hear that Harry is so much better poor little Fellow and I hope my Godson is as thriving as when I had the pleasure of a personal Interview with him which I hope to have again when we return for good at Midsummer.

Remember me to Burnett and believe me always

Your affectionate Brother
CHARLES DICKENS

Chickenstalker (our youngest Gent)[†5] is a tremendous success. Blooming and facetious beyond precedent with a touch of absurdity about him which I cultivate with great diligence.

IV, 247.17. To THE MARCHESE DI NEGRO, 14 JANUARY 1845*

MS Biblioteca Civica Berio, Genoa.

Peschiere | Tuesday January Fourteenth | 1845.

My Dear Marquess.

How can I thank you sufficiently, for the Beautiful Sonnet with which you have honored me; and of which I must ever entertain the proudest and most grateful recollection![†1]

I have delayed acknowledging its receipt, because I was possessed with the idea of turning it into English Verse, and shewing it to you in that form.[†2] But I have not indulged this fancy, after all, for two reasons. The first is, that I should vainly try to preserve the Spirit and ease of your composition through such a process. The Second, that you who can so freshly render our English Poets into your own Beautiful Language, would be too good a Judge of the weakness of such an effort.

So I will turn the Sonnet into no Language but the Language of the Heart.[†3] And in that tongue—you speak and write it, also, to perfection—I thank you truly.

Ever Believe me | Yours faithfully and obliged
CHARLES DICKENS

Monsieur Le Marquis Di Negro.

IV, 272.10. To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, [?23 FEBRUARY 1845]

Extract from Goodspeeds Book Shop catalogue No. 174. Date: see To de la Rue, Vol. IV, p. 274 and n.

But I regret to say that I leave Naples very early on Tuesday next and shall be on my way to Rome by seven or eight o'clock in the morning.

IV, 320.5. To THE MARCHESE DI NEGRO, 8 JUNE 1845*

MS Biblioteca Civica Berio, Genoa.

Peschiere | Eighth June 1845

My Dear Marquis

Allow me to present to you Mr. Batson;[†1] an English gentleman and a pupil of our famous architect Mr. Barry;[†2] who is making some able studies of Italian architecture.

I will not apologize to you for taking this liberty: well knowing that nothing which is connected with Literature or the Arts, is indifferent to you. Indeed I only feel in writing this note, that it is quite superfluous, as Mr. Batson could require or have no better presentation to you than his own pursuits and accomplishments.

I have the honor to be | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

M. Le Marquis Di Negro.

IV, 326.15. To DR SOUTHWOOD SMITH, [5 JULY 1845]

Envelope only, MS Mr W. A. Foyle. Address: Dr. Southwood Smith | Finsbury Square. PM 5 July 45.

IV, 330.19. To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, [EARLY JULY 1845]

Extract in Charles de F. Burns catalogue [before Jan 1880]; MS 1 p. Date: shortly after his return from Italy (see To Whitehead, 9 July 45).

I perfectly agree with you on the proposed Institution—I am but just returned from Italy.

IV, 348.6. To GEORGE HODDER, 7 AUGUST 1845

Mention in American Book Prices Current, 1976; MS 2 pp.; dated 7 Aug 45; addressed George Hodder.

Sending him thanks for a book.[†1]

IV, 363.12. To RICHARD JOHNS,[†1] 22 AUGUST 1845*

MS Professor J. D. Swales.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Second August | 1845.

My Dear Johns.

Here is the Enemy's Capitulation. I have written the blandest and freest acknowledgement thereof, and have said that if he will give you my original letter to bring to me, I will alter it.

Before 12, if you can! Don't lose your taste for the Hundred Pounds my dear Johns, because that sort of meat has always a good flavor when honorably got.[†2]

Ever Yours | The Indignant One
Captain Johns

IV, 369.25. To GEORGE CATTERMOLE, 3 SEPTEMBER 1845

Extracts in Sotheby's catalogue, July 1983; MS 4 pp.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 3 Sep 45; addressed George Cattermole.

Expressing his disappointment in receiving too late Cattermole's acceptance of a part in the play[†1] I would have given almost anything to have had you in the Scheme. But Courage! We will have another play, please Heaven, and you shall choose your own part. He invites Cattermole and his wife to dinner. I write to you in an overflowing spirit. I have been bottled up so long, that I bless this Play for serving as a corkscrew. I have often thought, with sincere pain, that Life is not long enough for any separation between such friends as we have been and should be.

IV, 370.14. To WILLIAM HAZLITT,[†1] 4 SEPTEMBER 1845†

Replaces catalogue extract.

MS Private.

Devonshire Terrace. | Fourth September 1845. | Thursday

Dear Hazlitt.

I have given our young friend, a note to Beard: which I will back by the strongest personal recommendation. I have no doubt he will do all he possibly can.

It is very kind of you to interest yourself so actively in the matter. Pray command my services, without the least ceremony, whenever I can assist you in your good object.

Believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. Hazlitt Esquire.

IV, 372.8. To GEORGE CATTERMOLE, 8 SEPTEMBER [1845]

Summary in Sotheby's catalogue, July 1983; MS 2 pp.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 8 Sep; addressed George Cattermole. Date: clearly 1845: see To Cattermole, 3 Sep.

Cattermole should not come to watch a rehearsal, but wait till the performance. CD cannot yet fix a date to meet him as he may have to go to Broadstairs to see family.

IV, 373.10.

after MS Berg Collection. add Envelope in Sotheby's sale May 1986; addressed Miss Kelly | 73 Dean Street | Soho. PM 9 Sep 45.

IV, 384.7. To GEORGE CATTERMOLE, 19 SEPTEMBER 1845

Summary in Sotheby's catalogue, July 1983; MS 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 19 Sep 45; addressed George Cattermole.

Inviting Cattermole and his wife to the performance and the actors' party afterwards.[†1] Wishes Cattermole were playing Downright.

IV, 384.

n. 2 for Sydney Williams read Edmund Sydney Williams replace final sentence with Son of Thomas Sydney Williams who, with his wife, translated books from the German.

IV, 393.11. To THOMAS CROOK,[†1] 30 SEPTEMBER 1845

Summary in Christie's catalogue, 8 Mar 1978; MS 2 pp.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 30 Sep 45; addressed Thomas A. Crook Esq.

Regretting that he is unable to visit the Rochdale Athenaeum[†2] on his way home from Manchester.

IV, 402.6. To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT,[†1] 7 OCTOBER 1845*

MS Churchill College, Cambridge.

Devonshire Terrace | Seventh October 1845

My Dear Sir

I have undertaken to ask you—in the full assurance that I may venture to do so, without the least hazard of being misunderstood—if you will allow Mrs. Hood to publish the Dream of Eugene Aram, in a projected Edition of Hood's Poetical Works in two Volumes.

In case you should desire to qualify your assent with any stipulations, it is scarcely necessary for me, I hope, to add that I will impress them upon her with the greatest care, and will do my utmost towards their strict observance.[†2]

IV, 412.7. To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 20 OCTOBER 1845

Extract in Sophie Dupré catalogue (1987); MS (3rd person) 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 20 Oct 45.

Sending compliments and best wishes for Miss Congreve's[†1] success.

IV, 419.10. To MR KNOTT,[†1] 28 OCTOBER 1845

Mention in American Book Prices Current, 1975; MS 1 p.; dated 28 Oct 45; addressed Mr Knott (see below).

Saying that he has no autograph of Eugène Sue[†2] in his possession.

IV, 419.11. To MR STACEY,[†1] [?LATE OCTOBER 1845]

Extract in Jolly & Sons catalogue, 7 Mar 1969; MS (3rd person) 1 p.; addressed Mr Stacey. Date: clearly related to To Mr Knott, 28 Oct 45.

Saying that he has not an autograph of M. Sue's in his possession.

IV, 437.1. To GEORGE CATTERMOLE, 18 NOVEMBER [1845]

Mention in Sotheby's catalogue July 1983; MS 2 pp.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 18 Nov; addressed George Cattermole. Date: 1845, since related to letters of Sep.

Arranging a dinner with Cattermole, Forster and Maclise.

IV, 440.5. To MRS TALFOURD, 25 NOVEMBER 1845*

Replaces entry.

MS Signore Francesco Pertile.

Devonshire Terrace | Friday Twenty Fifth November | 1845.

My Dear Mrs. Talfourd

Pray excuse this tardy and informal answer to your card; and believe that I shall be delighted to dine with you on Saturday.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

IV, 442.21. To GEORGE HOGARTH,[†1] 30 NOVEMBER 1845*

MS Henry Sotheran Ltd. Address: George Hogarth Esquire.

Devonshire Terrace | Thirtieth November[†2] 1845

My Dear Hogarth.

It's almost an affront to ask you to take care of these Proofs,[†3] and give them no chance of falling into strange hands. But I can't help saying so much.

They are corrected verbally, but are not punctuated. Cut 'em up,[†4] or do anything you like with them to make them the more pleasantly readable; and when you have done with them, let me have them again.

Always affecy.
CD

IV, 448.1. To MESSRS BRADBURY & EVANS, [1-6 DECEMBER 1845]*

MS Bodleian Library[†1] (on letter to CD from John Scott Russell). Date: individual agreements were being drawn up in late Nov and early Dec; letter either shortly before, or just after 5 Dec, when Paxton and Bradbury "settled with Russell abt the Railway Department after a good deal of trouble" (Vol. IV, p. 447*n*).

Scott Russell[†2] understands that he is entitled to literary shares of the paper as originally agreed with the proprietors.[†3]

B & E On this head you must tell me what was agreed, and what you have to say.

As his expenses commence immediately, he requires a first payment of £590 and quarterly thereafter.

B & E. Will this suit you?

IV, 452.7. To J. T. DANSON,[†1] 18 DECEMBER 1845

Extracts from Dawson's Rare Book catalogue, 1980; dated Office of the Daily News. 18 Dec 45; addressed J. T. Danson. In Wills's hand, signed by CD.

In answer to Danson's letter suggesting how his department of the Daily News might make regular use of parliamentary papers.[†2] I have no doubt whatever of the great importance of the suggestions in Danson's letter or of the expediency of carrying the greater part of them into as rigorous effect as may be compatible with the innumerable demands upon the space of the paper. He offers to meet him any day in the following week between twelve and two.[†3]

IV, 452.19. To GEORGE CATTERMOLE, 22 DECEMBER [1845]

Replaces printed extract (Vol. IV, p. 416).

Summary in Sotheby's catalogue, July 1983, and extract from MDGH, I, 143 (where misdated); MS 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 22 Dec; addressed George Cattermole. Date: clearly 1845 (see below).

Invites him to take part in the farce at Miss Kelly's benefit.[†1] Let me know what you decide, like a Kittenmolian Trojan. And with love from all here to all there.[†2]

Believe me Ever | Heartily Yours

CD

IV, 469.

n. 2. add Probably for the same reason, on 14 Jan, CD directed John Dickens to write on his behalf to J. T. Danson: "Sir | Mr. Charles Dickens desires me to say he is very anxious to have a few minutes conversation with you, that he shall be at the Athenaeum from 5 o'Clock until 7 to day, if that should prove to suit your convenience, if not, then here [i.e. the office] about 12 o'Clock tomorrow Morning. I am Sir | your obedient Servt | John Dickens" (MS Brian Lake).

IV, 469.25. To MRS CLARKE,[†1] 13 JANUARY 1846*

MS (incomplete) Mrs Iris Smith White.

Devonshire Terrace | Thirteenth January 1846.

Madam

I have to apologize for detaining your Tragedy so long. But it is not easy for me to find leisure for such employment, as the perusal of Manuscripts.

I think the story a particularly good one. Full of interest, and very dramatic. In its conception it reminds me slightly—and in its conduct here and there, it reminds me very much—of Knowles. But here the resemblance ceases. It is written very unequally and the lines are often so jagged and harsh that it is quite painful to read them. The very first line of the Play (but that may be an error on the part of the copyist) is an example of bad grammar and unmusical construction, and on nearly every page of the whole five acts, a greater attention to and a quicker ear for the melody of blank verse are indispensable.

The first scene between the Heroine and the Nurse has too much the air of Juliet and her Nurse. The Heroine, when she begins to love in earnest, is too pettish and too much given to playing at verbal battledore and shuttlecock with her Maid. Her father telling his own story to the Pit in the beginning of their personal acquaintance, is a very weak and dangerous part of the drama. The father is like the daughter in his over-pettishness and disposition to bandy words with his friends. The whole of the fifth act, in anything like its present speeches and dialogue, is quite out of the question; for it is so poorly written that it lets the whole story down, stark dead and would utterly condemn the Play. Of Peter, I would leave no vestige whatever, unless he were the sort of man who could marry Lisette, and relieve the Piece, with some pleasant scenes in her company (which I would suggest to you as worth trying); and Despenser—also has an unfortunate name for a Theatre in its resemblance to Dispensary—would have a much stronger claim, both upon the love of Marie and the honorable interest of the audience—if he were represented as struggling more between his [love] passion and his manly and remorseful sense of betraying the confidence of Sir Harry Grey. The whole interest of the character, as a Work of Art, would seem to me to lie in this. I consider it quite impossible for the Play to make its way through one night's life without it.

On the other hand, the Story, as I have already said, strikes me as being a very good one; and some of the[†2]

IV, 480.

n. 3. add John Dickens wrote from the office to J. T. Danson on Monday, 26 Jan: "Dear Sir | I am desired by the Editor to request you will do him the favor of condensing your Leader as much as possible on Tuesday Evening (if writing) and that you send it to the Office as soon after 4, as possible. | I am Dear Sir | your obedient Servant | John Dickens" (MS Brian Lake). More space would be needed in Wednesday's paper because of Peel's speech.

IV, 481.6. To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 26 JANUARY 1846

Mention in Puttick & Simpson catalogue, April, 1879; MS 1 p.; dated 26 Jan 46.

IV, 493.1. To J. T. DANSON, 9 FEBRUARY [1846]

Extract in Dawson's Rare Books catalogue, 1980; dated Whitefriars, Monday night Ninth February; addressed J. T. Danson. Date: Monday was 9 Feb in 1846; letter clearly comes between CD's letters to Danson dated 18 Dec 45 and 4 May 46.

Regrets that Danson's leader that day is incompatible with the paper's policy on Corn Law Repeal. From the first moment, all the writers of Leading articles here, have admitted that there is great good in Sir Robert Peel's plan and that there is a great principle asserted in it; but have contended that it is harnessed and yoked to petty drawbacks which impair its efficiency. To say that we "cannot approve of its general scope or of its details", and that it is "miserably unsuited to the occasion, and paltry in the extreme", is to out-Herod Herod,[†1] most violently, and to stand quite alone by yourself and apart from the paper. This opinion is shared by other leader-writers.[†2]

IV, 510.1. To M. E. REYNOLDS,[†1] [NOVEMBER 1845-FEBRUARY 1846]

Fragment in Phillips catalogue, Oct 1982; MS 1 p.; addressed M. E. Reynolds; undated. Date: probably in the Daily News period; handwriting supports.

application to them, it would come within the Foreign Editor's[†2] Department, and should be so addressed.

I am Sir | Your obedient Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

[†a] M. E. Reynolds Esquire[†a]

IV, 520.

n. 3. add CD's fifth and final "Letter on Capital Punishment" appeared on 16 Mar. On 28 Feb Jerrold had written to Gilpin, in reply to two proposals (probably received that day on the publication of CD's second letter): to insert advertisements of the Society, and to arrange an early public meeting. His advice was to arrange for advertisements to coincide with the publication of CD's "next Letter", but to defer any public meeting until after the Corn Law question was settled. "The public will not give due attention to two subjects at a time", and a little delay, he thought, "would give great additional weight to the gathering. I am sure I can promise the co-operation of my friend Dickens" (MS Private).

IV, 526.14. To THOMAS MITTON, 27 MARCH 1846†

MS Dr Masaie Matsumura.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Seventh March | 1846.

My Dear Mitton

I was at your office the other day, but you were at Derby.[†1] I should have come again before now, but my plans are so entirely at Sixes and sevens, and so jumbled and disarranged that I have been waiting until I could get them into some shape.[†2] I think I shall know next week, what to decide upon;[†3] but in the course of it (if I don't see you here) I will come down in any case.

All hearty[†4] | Faithfully Ever

IV, 532.

n. 1. add On 12 May 46 Tennyson wrote to CD with "love to godson and best remembrances to those of your circle whom I know", when consenting to subscribe to "your friend's book" (unidentified): see Letters of Alfred Lord Tennyson, III, 453 (Addenda, 1990) ed. Cecil Y. Lang and Edgar F. Shannon Jr.

IV, 539.28. To SAMUEL PALMER,†1 22 APRIL 1846

Mention in Christie's Red Cross Sale catalogue, April 1915; MS 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 22 Apr 46; addressed Samuel Palmer.

IV, 544.22. To J. T. DANSON, 4 MAY 1846

Extract in Dawson's Rare Book catalogue, 1980; dated Devonshire Terrace, 4 May 46; addressed J. T. Danson.

Answering Danson's letter that day appealing for confirmation of his claim for extra payment by Bradbury & Evans for two special supplements to the Daily News, CD clearly recalled such an arrangement in respect of the first.†1

IV, 545.23.

add Address (envelope in Phillips catalogue, Feb 1984): Octavian Blewitt Esquire | Literary Fund Society | 73 Great Russell Street. | PM 8 May 46.

IV, 545.31. To J. T. DANSON, 7 MAY 1846

Mention in Dawson's Rare Book catalogue, 1980; dated Devonshire Terrace, 7 May 46; addressed J. T. Danson.

Confirming Danson's recollection in his letter of 6 May.

IV, 547.18. To MESSRS BRADBURY & EVANS, 18 MAY 1846†

Replaces entry.

MS Henry Sotheran Limited. Address: Messrs. Bradbury and Evans.

Devonshire Terrace | Eighteenth May 1846. | Monday

Dear Sirs

Pray send me, in the course of the day, if possible, twelve copies of the Pictures from Italy.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Bradbury and Evans.

IV, 558.4. To MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL, 28 MAY 1846

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, June 1899; MS 2 pp.; dated 28 May 46; addressed Messrs Chapman & Hall.

Mrs. Hood[†1]—born to bother mankind I think is perpetually bothering me about a German Book called the Bilder & Lieder,[†2] which poor Hood sent to me to shew you when he proposed a reprint of the Elm Tree[†3] illustrated by Harvey[†4]—The botheration having arrived (in consequence of my approaching departure)[†5] at an alarming heighth[†6] I write to ask whether you have got the book. If not, I must engage a smuggling vessel and fly the country by night.

IV, 608.31. To T. J. THOMPSON, [?21 AUGUST 1846]*

MS William & Victoria Dailey. Address: T. J. Thompson Esquire | Claremont. Date: almost certainly the Friday after H. P. Smith's visit (see below); Christiana Thompson noted in her diary, "Dickens gave us some papers".

Rosemont | Friday

My Dear Thompson. I send you yesterday's paper, an Examiner, and Punch. Would send more, but my Eagle friend[†1] took them away with him when he was here.—You can have a paper every day. Hood[†2] I also send.

It is[†3] a tough day, but it is a great thing to get rid of the heat. I have been writing[†4] my head off since ten o'Clock, and doing (in point of quantity) very little.

The flag that has braved a thousand years the battle and the breeze[†5] is indeed the flag for you and me. And when we

&c &c[†6]
may we never
&c &c

I may perhaps take a boat, for exercise, this Evening after dinner, and if the wind sets towards Claremont steer that way.[†7]

Ever Yours
CD

IV, 622.6. To [?WILLIAM BYROM], 16 SEPTEMBER 1846

Mention in Puttick & Simpson catalogue, June 1876; MS (3rd person), 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 16 Sep 46; addressed H. J. Byrom.†1

IV, 723.3.

For [Unidentified] read: [Mémoires de M. Gisquet, Ancien Préfet de Police, Paris 1840]

V, 30.

n. 5. add Charley (aged ten in 1847) remembered long after how his father called for him at school unexpectedly, took him on a "long tramp round Hampstead Heath ... and finally to Gore House for dinner". Next to him was a vacant chair; Lady Blessington explained that the Prince [Louis Napoleon] was "always late". Then there entered "a rather sullen, heavy-looking man", who took little part in general conversation but talked pleasantly to Charley of the boy's school and his stay in Paris. Very soon after dinner and "an interval of moody silence" he left. "A couple of days afterwards I was seized with a very pronounced attack of scarlet fever ... only a coincidence, but at that time I found it very hard to convince myself that the mysterious Prince had no hand in the disaster." ("Reminiscences of my Father", a lecture first published by Charley's daughter Mary Angela in The Windsor Magazine, Christmas Supplement, 1934, p. 15.)

V, 38.31. To FOX MAULE,†1 18 MARCH 1847*

MS Dickens House.

Devonshire Terrace | Eighteenth March 1847.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his Compliments to Mr. Maule, and begs to thank him very cordially, for the Reverend Mr. Guthrie's†2 pamphlet on Ragged Schools;†3 which he has read with the greatest interest.

Mr. Dickens fears that the pamphlet—which would seem to have been sent, by some mistake, to the offices of two or three publications in which he has no part whatever—is somewhat tardily acknowledged, but he trusts that his having been abroad for nearly a year, and having a great arrear of correspondence, will excuse him.

V, 45.18. To DESMOND RYAN,†1 25 MARCH 1847*

MS Mr Brian Lake. Address: Desmond Ryan Esquire | "Musical World" Office | 60 St. Martin's Lane.

Regents Park | Twenty Fifth March 1847.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Desmond Ryan, and begs to say, in reply to Mr. Ryan's letter of the 8th. of January last, that he has requested the attention of his publishers to its contents.

Mr. Dickens has been abroad for nearly twelve months, and is but now—on his return home—in the receipt of Mr. Desmond Ryan's favor. Otherwise, he would have been happy to have replied to it, long since.

V, 48.21. To W. C. BENNETT,[†1] 31 MARCH 1847

Extract in unidentified catalogue cutting; dated 31 Mar 47.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Bennett, and begs, with many thanks, to acknowledge the receipt of Mr. Bennett's book[†2] and modest note.

V, 55.1. To J. B. BUCKSTONE, [7 APRIL 1847]*

MS Mr Ashley W. Olmsted. Date: on "the night before last" referred to in To Forster, 9 Apr.

Athenaeum. | Wednesday Evening

My Dear Sir

Stanfield, Maclise, and I, are going to the Adelphi tonight to see your new piece.[†1] Have you got such a thing as a Box to bestow upon us?

If so, your petitioners will ever pray &c

As Witness our hands

CHARLES DICKENS
C. STANFIELD
DANL. MACLISE

J. B. Buckstone Esquire

V, 75.21. To [MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL], 2 JUNE 1847*

MS (facsimile) Maggs Bros catalogue, No. 1001 (1979).

Wednesday | Second June 1847.

Please to give the bearer (in a parcel directed "a Monsieur Regnier"),[†1] a bound copy of Nicholas Nickleby, and a copy of the Pictures from Italy—from me.[†2]

CD.[†3]

V, 76.8. To FRANK STONE, 2 JUNE 1847*

MS Mr John Appelholt.

1 Chester Place, Regents Park | Second June 1847.

My Dear Stone.

Firstly, let me thank you for your kind and most acceptable gift—valuable to me, alike for the intrinsic worth and beauty of your works, and for the assurance implied in it of your friendly remembrance and consideration, which I reciprocate most heartily, believe me.

Secondly, let me explain that when your note arrived yesterday, I was hurrying out to meet some foreigners whom I was taking to Greenwich. Otherwise, I would have answered it, immediately.

Thirdly, that I would have been of the party today, with thanks to Mr. Miller[†1] for remembering me, but for being engaged (much against my will) to an old lady named Fitzgerald.

Fourthly, that I did your errand to Maclise, who is engaged also, but not to the same old lady.

Fifthly, that I am going to write you, in a day or so, to beseech your assistance in a new Theatrical Campaign, involving no cost, and extending to Four Nights![†2] I hope you will not refuse it, and feel sure you won't, when I develop the particulars.[†3]

Sixthly, I am always | Yours with true cordiality

CHARLES DICKENS

Frank Stone Esquire

V, 81.22. To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, 9 JUNE 1847*

MS Robert H. Taylor Collection, Princeton University Library.

Broadstairs Ninth June 1847.

My Dear George

Buy Turning the tables[†1]—Duncombe's Edition of the Acting Drama—No. 101, I think—and look at Old Knibbs.[†2] I think you would make it funny. There is not much in it, but there are very few words[†3] (which, in the short time, is a great point, as I believe you are busy, and not a "quick study") and if you will do it, and come prepared on the 17th.[†4] my troubles are over.

Ever Yours Cordially

CD

V, 88.30. To THE HON. SECRETARIES OF THE MANCHESTER ATHENAEUM,[†1] 12 JUNE 1847*

Replaces summary.

MS Private.

Regents Park, London. | Twelfth June 1847.

Dear Sirs.

I write to you, in reference to a scheme to which you may, perhaps, have already seen some allusion in the London Athenaeum of today.

The party of Amateurs connected with Literature and Art, who acted in London two years ago, have resolved to play again at one of the large Theatres here, for the benefit of Mr. Leigh Hunt, and to make a great appeal to all classes of society in behalf of a writer who should have received long ago, but has not yet, some enduring return from his country for all he has undergone, and all the good he has done. It is believed that such a demonstration by Literature on behalf of Literature, and such a mark of sympathy by authors and artists for one who has written so well, would be of more service, present and prospective, to Mr. Hunt than almost any other means of help that could be devised. And we know from himself that it would be most gratifying to his own feelings.

Our arrangements are, as yet, in an imperfect state; for the date of their being carried out, depends on our being able to get one of the large Theatres before the close of the present London season. This is a point that will be, most likely, decided by next Monday. In the event of our succeeding, we purpose acting in London, on Wednesday the 14th of July, and on Monday the 19th. On the first occasion we shall play Every man in his Humour, and a farce; on the second, The Merry Wives of Windsor,[†2] and a farce.

But we do not intend to stop here. Believing that Leigh Hunt has done more to instruct the young men of England and to lend a helping hand to those who educate themselves, than any writer in England, we are resolved to come down, in a body, to Manchester and Liverpool, and to act one night in each place. And the object of my letter, is, to ask you, as the representatives of the great educational establishment for young men, in Manchester, whether we can count on your active assistance—whether you will form a Committee to advance our object—and whether, if we send you our circulars and address, you will endeavour to secure us a full Theatre, and to enlist the general sympathy and interest in behalf of the cause we have at heart.

I address, by this post, a letter, which is almost the counterpart of the present, to my friend Mr. Hodgson of the Mechanics' Institution, Liverpool.[†3] If we find in both towns such a response as we confidently expect, I would propose, on behalf of my friends, that the Liverpool and Manchester Institutions should decide for us at which town we shall first appear, and which play we shall act in which place. The nights we desire to set aside for the purpose, are, Monday the 26th of July, and Wednesday the 28th, supposing (which we should be glad to ascertain through your help) the respective Managers could give us the use of their Theatres on those nights.[†4]

I forbear entering into any more details, however, until I am favored with your reply

Always believe me | My Dear Sirs, | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

The Honorary Secretaries

of

The Athenaeum at Manchester.

V, 94.1. To JOHN BAXTER LANGLEY, 17 JUNE 1847*

Replaces summary.

MS Private.

Regents Park, London | Seventeenth June 1847.

Dear Sir

I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your obliging letter, and heartily thank those gentlemen of Manchester who are bestirring themselves in the cause of Mr. Leigh Hunt. I shall be happy to communicate with them and to send them (if they desire it) a packet of our London Circulars as soon as I hear, from Manchester, to whom, and where I should address myself.

We have concluded to-day for Covent Garden Theatre for our London performances[†1] early next week, with all the preliminary proceedings.

Believe me | My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

J. Baxter Langley Esquire.

V, 100.22. To GEORGE LOVEJOY, 26 JUNE 1847

Mention in Sotheby's catalogue, Nov 1983; MS 1 p.; dated Athenaeum Club, 26 June 47; addressed George Lovejoy.

He has delayed answering Lovejoy's kind invitation, hoping he could arrange his engagements so as to accept it. But he cannot do so, as he is engaged to go into Kent on Monday. He sends his sincere thanks for it.

V, 104.23. To CAPTAIN LOMEX,[†1] [?29 JUNE 1847]

Mention in To Curry, 29 June 47 (Vol. V, p. 104). Date: probably written the same day.

Regretting that he had not received him after his bringing Curry's letter of introduction; but explaining that he had been living in a rented house [1 Chester Place] until 1 Devonshire Terrace was vacated and was now in Broadstairs for three months; adding that he hoped to see him when he returned to London in the autumn.

V, 112.17. To CHARLES RAWLINS,[†1] [3 JULY 1847]

Facsimile (envelope) in Jarndyce Books catalogue No. 33 (1984). Address: Charles Edward Rawlins Esquire Junr. Liverpool.[†2] PM Broadstairs & Ramsgate 3 July 47.

V, 120.29. To WILLIAM JERDAN, 8 JULY 1847†

Replaces catalogue extract.

MS Mr Peter Harries.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Eighth July 1847.

My Dear Jerdan

I shall be in town on the evening of Saturday the 17th. and shall not return here until the Manchester and Liverpool plays for Leigh Hunt—and poor unhappy Poole—are over.[†1] But I am afraid my managerial duties will hold me employed, every evening, from that 17th. until the 25th.—both inclusive. After the latter date, I could do anything in an honest way; and, whate'er betide, I must see Andersen.[†2]

What do you say? If I don't hear from you, I will go to the Garrick at half past one on Sunday the 18th. on the chance of meeting you. If I don't meet you, I will leave a card for you there, with the address at which I shall be staying. If Parliament should have risen, I hope it may be my own house (in which case I could give you and Andersen and one or two more a passable breakfast) but my tenant—MP and Alderman to boot, which is frightful to contemplate—has the right of staying until the end of the month, if he see reason.

Ever My Dear Jerdan | Cordially Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. Jerdan Esquire

V, 12.27. To FRANCIS ROBINSON,[†1] 11 JULY 1847*

MS Private. Address: Francis Robinson Esquire | Manchester. PM 11 July 47.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Eleventh July 1847.

My Dear Sir

Mr Knowles[†2] is "unconscionable" indeed! A hundred pounds for the Manchester Theatre, is just one third more, than we were to have paid for Covent Garden—the largest and handsomest Theatre in Europe—with prices of admission three times as high! Like many grasping gentlemen, I have an idea that he may possibly over-reach himself in this instance, and feel some after-effects in unexpected and damaging places. But this, by the way—

You know Manchester, and I do not, otherwise than as a rare visitor. Therefore I will venture no other remark on the prices, than that I fear they are low, in comparison with such heavy expences. But a full house is distinctly better than what is called, in theatrical slang, a "shy" one.

Some of the ladies will come from London, and some belong to the Manchester or Liverpool Theatres. Miss Montague,[†3] I believe, acts, for instance.[†4] But I have entrusted this matter to Mr Lemon, and am waiting his full report, to send you the complete bill. It will not be necessary for the committee to take any trouble in this regard. I have no doubt Mr Lemon has either already arranged, or will immediately arrange, it. The moment I hear from him, you shall have the bill. In the meantime, let me say that I have reason for attaching some importance to the allusion, in our London circular, to a second author, being printed, at the top of the complete bill, after the words "For the benefit of Mr Leigh Hunt," [†a]and in all coming announcements.[†a] I enclose the passage, in case you should have destroyed it. Here it is

"It is proposed to devote a portion of the proceeds of this benefit, to the assistance of another celebrated writer—whose literary career is at an end, and who has no provision for the decline of his life."

———————————————————

There is no objection whatever, to its being known that this is Mr Poole,[†5] a comic writer of great celebrity—The author of Paul Pry, and Little Pedlington,[†6] and many other productions of great merit, who but for his share in these benefits, has really no resource upon this earth.[†7] Allusion is made to him in Serjeant Talfourd's address.[†8] It would be quite incomprehensible without this previous explanation. Will you give it publicity in any way you can?

The anonymous farce, in the incomplete bill you already have, is Mr Poole's Farce of Turning the Tables.

I am Dear Sir, | Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Francis Robinson Esquire.

The company are very anxious that nobody should come behind the scenes, while the performance is in progress—so anxious, that I mention it.

V, 127.28.

replace headnote with MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

[V,]128.7.

after favour. add [†a]I hope there is as little chance of Mr. Albert Smith,[†1] at Gore House, as of Mr. Boucicault.[†2] I find the first-named gentleman in the pursuit of a style of literature, a professor whereof is not within my toleration.[†a]

[V, 128.]11.

after etc.; add beats them tremendously; groups them around her;

V, 132.4. To FRANCIS ROBINSON, 20 JULY 1847*

MS Private. Address: Francis Robinson Esquire | Manchester. PM 20 July 47.

London. Tuesday Twentieth July 1847.

My Dear Sir

I am able to send you at last the complete bill. Will you have the goodness to let it be issued at once.

I will write to you again tomorrow, begging the favor of your bespeaking dinner and rooms for us, at the best hotel,[†1] for Sunday afternoon; and I will enclose for the landlord (to save you trouble) an exact list of the accommodations we shall require.[†2]

May I beg you to tell Mr Ireland[†3] from me, that we shall be at Liverpool on the Tuesday evening, and that we are engaged to Mr Yates.[†4]

I hope all is going on well with you. We are very busy here, every evening.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Francis Robinson Esquire.

I open this to say, that we wish particularly to secure, if possible, two boxes on the stage for the ladies of our party.[†5]

V, 133.

n. 2 add A notice in CD's hand reads "Nobody to pass, except the gentlemen who play, and Mr. Wilson | Mr. Jerrold's party | Mr. Charles Dickens's party of ladies" (MS Sotheby's, in album clearly belonging to manager of Theatre Royal Liverpool, where the amateur company played on 28 July 47; album also contains a page of signatures of almost all the male members of the cast).

V, 141.24. To DR W. B. HODGSON,[†1] [4] AUGUST 1847

Replaces entry.

Extract in Les Autographes Thierry Bodin, Christmas 1983; MS (retranslated into English) 1 p.; dated Broadstairs, 5 Aug 47; addressed Dr Hodgson. Date: smaller extract in Nouveau Drouot catalogue, June 1980, gives date as Wednesday, 5 Aug 47; Wednesday was 4 Aug in 47 and see similar letter, To Ireland, dated 4 Aug 47 (see below).

He begs him to have the kindness to insert the attached announcement[†2] in all the respectable Liverpool papers, and to let him know the cost of this insertion. He regrets having missed his friend. He gives him an account of the indisposition of Mrs Leech, who had been ill during the train-journey.

V, 141.

n. 2 line 4 after "jeu d'esprit" replace rest of note with The Clarendon Chuzzlewit (1982), Appx G, gives the text of all that survives, based on the proof sent to Frank Stone (as a possible illustrator), now in the Suzannet Collection at Dickens House, with minor variants from Forster, VI, i, and from the limited edition printed in New York in 1899 for the owner of the MS, Lowell M. Palmer. Until 1988 the MS itself (once in the possession of William Wright and sold at Sotheby's in 1899) could not be traced. Now in the possession of Mr Geoffrey Young, it consists of 3 ½ pp., no longer than the printed text, with small verbal differences. It is obviously a first draft with many deletions, but not a fragment, bringing the scene at the railway station to a conclusion. To Lemon and To Lewes, 11 Aug, referring to "the little book", suggest that more was written, but probably not printed. No more is heard of it, and according to Forster the project was "abandoned" after the artists' desertion (F. VI, i, 458-9). In fact, Leech made a sheet of sketches (sold at Sotheby's, 1899) and Cruikshank a trial sketch: see Strand Magazine, 1897, XIV, 188.

V, 152.1. To SIR JOSEPH PAXTON, 25 AUGUST 1847

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, Dec 1990; MS 2 pp.; dated Devonshire Terrace, London, 25 Aug 47 (misdated 5 Aug in catalogue); addressed Joseph Paxton.

Regretfully declining an invitation to attend a meeting with Mr. Strutt,[†1] but all sorts of engagements beckon me to the seaside on Monday.

V, 170.20. To MRS EDMUND TOOTAL,[†1] 5 OCTOBER 1847

Fragment in Sotheby's catalogue, Nov 1983; MS 1 p.; dated 5 Oct 47; addressed Mrs Edmund Tootal.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS
Manchester | Fifth October 1847.

Mrs. Edmund Tootal.

V, 189.27. To THE REV. [HENRY] JONES,[†1] 5 NOVEMBER 1847*

MS Charles W. Traylen.

London, 1 Devonshire Terrace | Fifth November 1847

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to the Reverend Mr. Jones, and begs to be excused for enquiring if a copy of a certificate he has received, purporting to be signed by that gentleman (in recommendation of Daniel Clough)[†2] is authentic. If so, may Mr. Dickens venture to trouble him with a post office order for a guinea?

V, 195.

n. 5 after (F, VI, i, 469). add Material on The Alchemist among Forster's acting copies of plays (FC) shows how seriously they considered and rehearsed it. It includes a complete cast list in CD's hand; printed text, cut and heavily annotated by Forster; and a transcript of the whole play in a clerk's hand.

V, 197.14. To SAMUEL ROBERTS,[†1] 18 NOVEMBER 1847

Text (undated) from Preface to Oswald's Well, 1849. Date: given in copy made by Walter Dexter of original note then in possession of Mr Whitridge of Blackburn.

London Devonshire Terrace | Eighteenth November 1847.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to the Editor of Oswald's Well,[†2] and begs to thank him, with great cordiality, for the numbers of that Magazine, and for the pleasure Mr. Dickens has had in the generous sympathy of the reviewer of his books. Nothing can be more grateful to him than such approval, given on such grounds.[†3]

V, 197.15. To EDWARD CHAPMAN, 19 NOVEMBER 1847

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, 23 July 1979; MS 2 pp.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 19 Nov 47.

Asking him to send the books that he has marked on the enclosed list to Miss Coutts's Home tomorrow, and querying various items. ... I do not quite understand what the 60 sheets of Tablet Lessons of arithmetic, mean. I merely want the elementary rules. The same applies to the next item in the list—tablet[†1] lessons in spelling and reading.[†2] The Christian Knowledge Society[†3] have published some large colored plates (Dingley's,[†4] I think) of animals, with a short description appended to each—some three halfpence or twopence apiece. If you can get me the better known animals and birds in this form, I shall be glad to have them. In any case where the lessons are on sheets, I should prefer stiffened sheets, if they are to be had.

V, 201.23. To FRANCIS ROBINSON, 25 NOVEMBER 1847*

MS Mr W. B. Lauder.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Twenty Fifth November 1847.

My Dear Sir

I am very much obliged to you for your kind note of the 19th. which was quite a relief, as I had really been anxious and uneasy on the subject of my enforced absence from the Soirée.[†1]

Believe me | With regard | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Francis Robinson Esquire.

V, 205.19. To J. B. KINGTON,[†1] 8 DECEMBER 1847*

MS Mr Harry Solomon.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Eighth December 1847.

Dear Sir

It must have a very strange appearance to you, this answer to a very courteous letter of your writing, now nearly twelve months old. Pray allow me to say, that when you did me the favor to address me and to send me your book,[†2] I was abroad.[†3] That your packet got, by some means, among a heap of papers, which I had no reason to examine when I came home. That it has only just now been discovered, and that I have not been many hours in possession of its contents. I thank you very cordially, and entreat you to hold me blameless for this long delay in saying so.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

J. B. Kington Esquire

V, 208.6. To MICHAEL HENRY,[†1] 11 DECEMBER 1847

Extract and envelope in Sotheby's catalogue, July 1982; MS 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 11 Dec 47. Address: M. Henry Esquire | 9 Burton Street[†2] | Burton Crescent.

Regretting that he cannot join his charitable organization.[†3]

V, 224.1. To DR W. P. ALISON, 5 JANUARY 1848†

Replaces catalogue extract.

MS Chas J. Sawyer Ltd.

London, 1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Fifth January 1848.

My Dear Sir

Let me thank you heartily for your very kind and interesting letter. I anticipate the greatest satisfaction and enlightenment from the perusal of your pamphlet.[†1] The subject is deeply important, and I know with what tenderness and truth you handle it.

Mrs. Dickens (still very unwell) unites with me in cordial regards to Mrs. Alison†2—with whose paper knife I broke ground yesterday—and

I am always My Dear Sir | With much regard | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Dr. Alison.

V, 245.7.

replace headnote with MS Heritage Bookshop, Los Angeles.

[V, 245.]8.

insert Devonshire Terrace | Seventh February 1848.

[V, 245.]9.

insert My Dear Sir.

[V, 245.]11.

add new para With many thanks for your constant interest and kindness, I am My Dear Sir
Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

J. C. King†1 Esquire.

V, 245.25.

Replace Kingston Galleries catalogue No. 35 with David J. Holmes catalogue No. 27 (1990).

[V, 245.]26.

add (new para.) before extract I beg to enclose you the scrap you ask for and pray allow me to assure you that

V, 250.4. To DURANCÉ GEORGE,†1 [19 FEBRUARY 1848]

Envelope only, MS Private. Address: Durancé George Esquire | 12 Old Burlington Street. PM 19 Feb 48.

V, 261.23. To S. G. TOVEY,†1 10 MARCH 1848*

MS Ximenes Rare Books Inc., New York.

Brighton | Tenth March 1848.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Tovey, and begs to say that having left town for the purpose of quietly finishing the work†2 on which he is now engaged, he cannot have the pleasure of seeing the picture of the Peschiere[†3] between this, and Tuesday. In expressing his regret, Mr. Dickens begs to assure Mr. Tovey, that nothing but very pressing engagements would have prevented his having had that pleasure, before now.[†4]

V, 267.19. To MRS BURNETT, 31 MARCH 1848*

MS Copy in Dickens House.[†1] Date: by copyist.

My dear Fanny

Of course I shall be delighted to subscribe to Burnetts Songs.[†2] It has occurred to me that the venture might be helped a little—very likely in the subscription and no doubt in other ways—if Burnett could come & take his place at a Dombey Dinner of some twelve or fourteen I am going to have at Home here on Tuesday the 11th. of April to celebrate the conclusion of the Book. There will be Fonblanque—Thackeray—Macready—Jerdan & others of that sort[†3] on whom the rehearsing of the old Songs would make, maybe, a useful impression. And as it would be more than agreeable to me to have such pleasant aid I should be delighted to send Burnett Five pounds for his expences or whatever more they may be and to find him a Bed hard by.

I dont feel any delicacy in offering this, because I am sure you and he will feel none in receiving it, knowing perfectly what I mean & what value I set upon his powers. It may be that it would not suit him to come and it may be that you and he will not think it worth while. I am equally satisfied in any case (though I lose a pleasure in either of the two latter events) & would not for the world propose this unless I felt quite sure that you and he would not be in the least embarrassed by freely consulting your own convenience and wishes.—Only write me an answer as soon as you can, as I will not fill up the Table until I hear from you.[†4]

The Children are looking forward to being introduced to their Cousin.[†5]

I am rather nervous after my hard work and go about perpetually persuading myself that I am choking though I know there is nothing the matter with me.

Kate is tremendously fat. Everybody else as usual

Dombey is prodigiously triumphant and I believe the end of that immortal History is tolerably good.[†6] I have taken great pains with it and have been continually crying over the manuscript.

Fred is still in a fulsome state of Love for the most volatile little Minx in existence.[†7]

It seems the Doctor says the said Minx will never be well until she's married! & that this is urged upon the lost one as a reason for rushing to the Altar. I forbid the Banns, but it's of no use I see.[†8]

Loves from Kate & Georgy to you & Burnett

Ever affectionately
CD.

PS I have been writing so much that I can't write at all now.

V, 280.1.

for [——] read Edward

[V, 280.]2.

after cutting. add [4a]

n. 4 replace with The missing name is certainly "Edward" (i.e. Bulwer Lytton).

insert [4a] For CD's referring to Lytton as "Hirsute" four days later, see Vol. V, p. 283.

V, 284.

n. 4 add On 8 July Poole wrote a long letter to CD, giving him an eye-witness account of "the June days", 23-6 June 48, when civil war broke out briefly in Paris between the moderates of the Second Republic and the radicals; at least 1,500 insurgents were killed and 12,000 arrested. The rising was finally put down by Gen. Cavaignac. A "remembrance for life" was the death of the badly-wounded Gen. Bourgon in Poole's house; Poole also vividly describes the insurgent prisoners: "such hideous faces! scarcely human! ... creatures to look at and shudder!" (given in Horace N. Pym, Chats in the Book-Room, 1896, pp. 85-98). "This is a general letter to you all", Poole adds. "If Forster thinks any paragraph of this worthy the Examiner, he may use it" (p. 97). The letter was in fact found among Mrs Forster's papers and later given to Pym.

V, 294.16.

Replaces extract.

To MRS BURNETT, 3 MAY 1848†

MS Copy in Dickens House.[†1]

Devonshire Terrace | Wednesday Night | Third May 1848

My dear Fanny

All that I hear both from you and from Burnett of your illness, only convinces me that rest is the one great thing you want—I am confident that the benefit of that and cheerful society of old friends and relations will set you up again. And let me most affectionately & earnestly conjure you for the love of your Husband and Children and in the name of God and all the blessings we cannot ask from him unless we do our humble part to secure them—to look that fact steadily in the face and rest at all risks. There is nothing wanting but to make up your mind. Doubt is the anxiety and torture of a slow disease—Decision the sharp tearing out of a Tooth & there an end. It needs decision to determine not to work—make that resolution & you will begin to grow better. It is not in reason to expect that you should be better in such a short lived Holiday as you have had. It is next to impossible. †aAre you in any debt?†a I am sensible of the delicacy of Burnett in telling you that the trifle I was ready with & am ready with was yours in case of your changing your residence. But it is yours for rest. If you decide to take a Holiday and will calmly arrange in the best way you can to do so—I will send you a Hundred Pounds whenever you say the word—I do not think Manchester is healthy for you I confess. But all that can be considered at leisure.

Rest now & get a mind at ease. I am quite sure although I know how much fortitude and energy you have that you are worn out. There are times with me after mental excitement and toil when such a circumstance as the suicide of your Neighbour†2 would become a dreadful idea that I could not shake off.

I have had sufferings of that sort sometimes the oppression of which has been horrible. I am the better able to say that I know you want rest. Pray take it.

There is no Doctor on Earth so certain as the sinking within you. It is a friendly monitor in which there is nothing alarming—if you will only heed it. In any little local difficulty of arrangement with any Schoolmistresses or such like about your lessons—I will come down and see any body for you and arrange any thing with a readiness that I cannot & need not describe.

But do, do, do, decide to stop. Do not get worse when you may under God so easily get better.

I hope you will write me very soon more decisively. I shall be at Birmingham in any case most likely about the end of this month and shall certainly then come on to Manchester to see you. But don't stop for that.

Let me convey something of the earnestness I feel to you. Pray listen to my tender & heartfelt advice.—I write before going to Bed. I meant to say much more but cannot make up my mind to wait till tomorrow.

In haste | Affectionately yours
CHARLES DICKENS

VI, 299.9.

after good master add 1a

insert 1a The Rev. William Giles.

V, 305.12. To MRS BURNETT, 11 MAY 1848*

MS Copy in Dickens House.†1

Devonshire Terrace | Tenth May 1848 Eleventh I mean.

My dear Fanny

As I have heard from Burnett (to whom my Love) that you are not strong enough to work out the rest of the Quarter in this Hot weather—I think it best to send you the Hundred pounds at once.

I have accordingly, through Coutts' made it payable to you at Sir Benjamin Heywoods Bank[†2]—I put this in after having been to Coutts' to arrange it—And you have nothing to do but to go there and write a draft on them for the amount on Saturday Morning. It will not be payable I find before.... I am very glad you have decided not to fag on now—The weather is very trying but the best weather possible to be idle in.

I write in haste being torn to pieces by the whole body of Amateurs and Shakespeare House People.

Ever affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

V, 318.9. To ALEXANDER IRELAND, 24 MAY 1848*

MS Private.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Fourth May 1848

My Dear Sir

Many thanks for your letter. I have written to Mr. Robinson today. On Friday Morning I go to Birmingham. If you write, have the kindness to address me at the Royal Hotel there. In haste Alexande[†1]

V, 319.12.

add Address (Envelope only, MS Mr W. B. Lauder): F. Robinson Esquire | 44 Cross Street | Manchester. PM 24 May 48.

V, 322.20. To FRANCIS ROBINSON, 27 MAY 1848*

Replaces entry.

MS Mr W. B. Lauder.

Royal Hotel, Birmingham. | Saturday Twenty Seventh May 1848.

My Dear Sir

The prices are low, but I have no doubt you know the absolute necessity of making them so. The pit here, is 7/- and the boxes are the same price. †aI presume you will be able to make the whole pit into stalls, if they should be greatly in demand? This seems important.†a

In posting, or announcing in any way, you will oblige me very much if you will not give any greater prominency to my name than to any other. I should like them to be all mentioned in alphabetical order. But you can always, if you please, put after your own name as Honorary Secretary, mine as Stage Manager.

I will come over on Tuesday.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

F. Robinson Esquire

My kind regards to Mr. Ireland.

V, 324.19. To FRANCIS ROBINSON, 28 MAY 1848*

MS Mr W. B. Lauder. Address: Francis Robinson Esquire | Cross Street | Manchester. PM 28 May 48.

Birmingham | Sunday Morning 28th May 1848.

My Dear Sir

I omitted to mention yesterday—and may as well mention now—that Mr Willmott will be at the Manchester Theatre on Friday afternoon at 4 o'Clock, when he will wish to see the master carpenter and his men, the property-man, and the scene painter if there be one attached to the establishment. Will you have the kindness to give them notice of this appointment?

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Francis Robinson Esquire

V, 324.20. To JOHN WILLMOTT,†1 [?28 MAY 1848]

Mention in To Lemon, 28 May 48 (Vol. V, p. 323). Date: No doubt written the same day.

Giving Willmott, as stage manager, full instructions for the Amateurs' performances at Manchester, Liverpool and Birmingham in June.

V, 326.11.

add Address (Envelope only, MS Mr W. B. Lauder): Francis Robinson Esquire | Cross Street | Manchester. PM 1 June 48.

V, 369.33. To RICHARD MONCKTON MILNES, 10 JULY 1848*

MS Trinity College, Cambridge.

T. R. Drury Lane | Monday Morning | Tenth July 1848.

My Dear Milnes.

You understand it is "Court dress" tonight.[†1] D'Eyncourt[†2] is to be a blaze of gold, I am told.

Ever Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

R. M. Milnes Esquire.

V, 371.31. To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 11 JULY 1848

Mention in Puttick & Simpson catalogue, June 1976; MS 2 pp.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 11 July 48.

V, 384.6. To EDWARD CHAPMAN, 4 AUGUST 1848*

Text from facsimile in John Wilson catalogue No. 54 (1984). Address: Edward Chapman Esquire.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Fourth August 1848. | Friday.

Dear Mr. Chapman.

Mr. Macready writes me, that it is the custom to apply for the money for the Queen's Box, which we have not yet received. Will you be so good as to communicate with Sir William Martins[†1] on the subject, and to pay in the amount, when you get it, to Mr. Macready's account at Ransoms.[†2]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

V, 396.4. To FRANÇOIS REGNIER, 25 AUGUST 1848

Extract in Maison Charavay, Paris catalogue Feb 1982; dated Broadstairs, Kent, 25 Aug 48; addressed François Regnier.

Mon cher Regnier
Longue lettre relative à un de ses amis peintre[†1] qui veut faire un tableau de la mort de Molière. Il demande des renseignements historiques en vue de la composition du tableau. Il a l'idée de représenter tout le corps dramatique que remplit les rôles diverses au théatre, la derniere soirée de la vie publique de cet homme extraordinaire. On trouvera son lit dans le tableau entouré de tout le monde du theatre, costumé comme à la représentation.... Je me souviens du salon intéressant, au 'Français', mais malheureusement mon ami ne peut pas faire le voyage. Puis il termine J'ai grand peur que les révolutions ne sont pas generalement favorable aux beaux arts, mais espérons nous que le bon temps reviendra, en France, en Italie et partout!

V, 396.5. To FRANK STONE, [25 AUGUST 1848]

Envelope only, MS Frimärkshuset Auktions, Stockholm. Address: Frank Stone Esquire. | 53 Berners Street | Oxford Street. PM 25 Aug 48.

V, 401.28. To HENRY BURNETT, 5 SEPTEMBER 1848†

Replaces summary.

MS Copy in Dickens House.[†1]

Devonshire Terrace | Tuesday Morning | Sept 5 1848

My dear Burnett

I enclose you the sum we spoke of which is of course quite apart from Friday's expenses & Mr. Kesteven's[†2] account. I will take care to discharge both as soon as I know the amounts. . . .

When poor Fanny first knew how ill she was I promised her that I would faithfully assist and advise you at all times and endeavour to be your true friend & that of the dear Children—I need not tell you in what solemn remembrance I shall hold this pledge or what an Interest I shall always have in all that concerns you and them. . . .

My observation of the sick Bed from which she has risen to the mercy of God has been so small compared with your attendance there that I feel it almost presumption to refer to the last two months. But I must relieve my Heart by saying that I never can forget the patience, gentleness and endurance of your affection for her & that I never can think of it without admiration.

You and I may differ—God knows—little perhaps in the main, if at all, on the most important of all subjects. . . .

I do not think the Gentleman who wrote to you so modestly and kindly yesterday is likely to be very exclusive or vigorous in his own personal teaching—But if I may venture a word of entreaty with you in reference to others who may come about the Children with the best intentions and not with the best discretion, it is, that you will let their young belief include some saving clause for all good people and an equal tenderness for all the Human works of the Almighty's Hand.

My dear Burnett | Affectionately Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Henry Burnett Esq.

V, 404.14.

add Address (Envelope, MS Frimärkshuset Auktions): Frank Stone Esquire | Tavistock House | Tavistock Square. PM 8 Sep 48. Black border.

V, 412.28. To [GEORGE HENRY] HAYDON,[†1] 26 SEPTEMBER 1848

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, July 1991; MS (3rd person) 2 pp.; dated Broadstairs, 26 Sep 48; addressed Mr. Haydon. On mourning paper.

Declining to sit for a portrait. He is always unwilling to sit for any new portrait of himself: and his doing so in one case would involve the fulfilment of several conditional promises.

V, 413.10. To THE LANDLORD OF THE BELL HOTEL, MAIDSTONE,[†1] 29 SEPTEMBER 1848

Extract in Phillips catalogue, Oct 1989; MS (3rd person) 1 p.; dated Broadstairs, 29 Sep 48; addressed The Landlord of the Bell Hotel, Maidstone, Kent.

Asking the Landlord to prepare for him next day (Saturday) a comfortable private sittingroom, with dinner for five persons[†2] at five o'Clock; and four bedrooms. They will arrive early afternoon and leave on Sunday.[†3]

V, 421.7. To HENRY BURNETT, 9 OCTOBER 1848*

MS Copy in Dickens House.[†1]

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Ninth October 1848

My dear Burnett

I have read your Letter with the deepest sympathy and feel the truth of all the sad and touching things you say. Yet I hope that with the purpose in Life which you have before you, a kind and gentle influence will come upon your grief & that soon, and change the current of your mind into a no less tender (God forbid) but a less acute and suffering remembrance.

Do you think it would be well to try to let your present House? I cannot help thinking that you would be happier in another and surely you might manage to compound for the needful notice as to this or to get another Tenant. Has this occurred to you? All the arrangements you have made seem to me most discreet, prudent and honorable. I am sure you could not have done better.... Always remember me as pledged and bound to help you and cheerfully ready to do it, by any counsel or other sort of assistance of any kind in my power.

And pray remember my promise to Fanny as a sacred thing lying close to my Heart not for today & to-morrow but for my whole Life.... Harry has his Stays again & has recovered that sprain.[†2] We had been much affected by the kindness you mention of your Manchester Friends. When such good comes out of sorrow, one best understands why so much sorrow is and why the infinite goodness of God exposes us to such trials as you have had.

Ever yours affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

V, 439.7. To PATRIC PARK, 11 NOVEMBER 1848

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue July 1983; MS 2 pp.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 11 Nov 48; addressed Patric Park. On mourning paper.

Assuring him that he admires his work and asking him to send a cast of the bust of Dickens that pleases him best, explaining that he is sending this letter because he is unable to get out during the day to call on him I am so occupied with my Christmas book[†1] (habitually walking out with the owls and other ill-omened birds) that I think it safest to dispatch this note. Otherwise Park might think that he considered a note of his worth no response.

V, 458.10. To DR JAMES A. WILSON,[†1] 15 DECEMBER 1848

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, May 1981; MS 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 15 Dec 48; addressed Dr Wilson. On mourning paper.

Asking him to accept a little book that will not be published before next Tuesday, and hoping he may find something in it appropriate to the time of year.

V, 476.17. To THE SECRETARY OF THE HIGHLAND SCHOOL SOCIETY,[†1] 15 JANUARY 1849*

Text from transcript by Walter Dexter.

1 Devonshire Terrace | January Fifteenth 1849

Sir,

I regret that my other engagements will not admit of my becoming a steward at the next Dinner of the Highland School Society. If they did, I should have great pleasure in complying with your request.

I am, Dear Sir, | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

V, 477.17. To MISS ROSS, 17 JANUARY 1849

Replaces catalogue extract (Vol. V, p. 465).

MS Mr Michael Silverman. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Seventeenth January 1849.

My Dear Miss Ross.

I thank you, very cordially, for your kind recollection of me. I look forward to putting my feet on the fender tonight, and thoroughly enjoying a prodigious cold in the head, and El Buscapie,[†1] together.

It is comfortable to see this portrait of Cervantes.[†1] It strikes me that the former one[†1] must be a true likeness of the rash and miserable man who produced a second part of Don Quixote;[†1] and that in the lapse of time his unworthy visage has come to be confounded in the mind of some collector with that of our immortal friend.

I am very sorry to hear of your father's[†2] indisposition. But it is very pleasant to me to be remembered by him,—and I hope you will tell him so with my warm regards.

Dear Miss Ross | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Ross

V, 490.10.

add Address (envelope, MS Miss S. J. Flower): Octavian Blewitt Esquire | Literary Fund | 73 Great Russell Street | Bloomsbury. Black border.

V, 492.12. To M. KAYSER,[†1] 7 FEBRUARY 1849

Mention in Sotheby's catalogue, Feb 1984; dated 7 Feb 49; addressed A Monsieur Kayser. In French.

V, 501.14. To JOSEPH KING, 24 FEBRUARY 1849*

MS Mr Robert D. Fellman. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday Night | Twenty Fourth February 1849.

My Dear Sir.

The shortcomings on poor Walter's[†1] part, which your weekly reports of him assure me of, render me desirous to tell you what I think about him.

I have always considered him anything but quick, nor do I believe that he has a very retentive memory, except for what is steadily impressed upon it, and what is not too quickly jostled by something else. I believe that at present he learns with difficulty, and is perplexed; and that he requires more help, and more assistance in the way of explanation, than Charley did when he was much younger.

I therefore take the liberty—for I really feel it to be one—of suggesting to you that I do not so much care for his trying to learn much, as for his learning little, thoroughly, and without confusion or distaste. I have a dread of this kind of capacity being overladen, and would rather err—if there must be error at all for a little while—on the other side.

I write as it were in the dark, not exactly knowing what his amount of daily lessons is, as his books are not here. But rather than defer writing for another week, I trouble you with this.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Joseph C King Esquire

V, 508.36. To MARK LEMON, [MID-MARCH 1849]

Text from N, II, 560. Date: No other season at Sadler's Wells (Islington) when CD was in England and on these terms with Lemon included Richard III, which was to come on "next week" (see below); letter can be no earlier than Monday, 12 Mar 49 and no later than 15th. Misdated [1854] in N.

[My Dear Lemon][†1]

I think we had better postpone the visit to Islington until Richard III.[†2] comes on which is next week, with an entirely new cast.[†3] I've seen the Othello, and oh! what a precious slow nigger he was when I did see him;[†4] but let us go somewhere, say to the public by the Thames where those performing dogs go at night.[†5] I think the travestie may be useful to me, and I may make something out of such an expedition;[†6] it will do us good after such a blue-devilous afternoon as this has been.

Yours ever
[CD]

V, 511.13. To MR CHAPLIN,[†1] [?JANUARY-21 MARCH 1849]

Text from N, II, 210. Date: 1849, the year in which the Cheap Edition of Martin Chuzzlewit was published; presumably before CD decided on the final order of the last four: Chuzzlewit, Oliver, American Notes, Sketches.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Chaplin and begs to say, in reply to Mr. Chaplin's note of enquiry, that Dombey & Son will not be included in the cheap edition,[†2] which is announced to close with Martin Chuzzlewit.[†3]

V, 518.18. To RICHARD MONCKTON MILNES, [?MARCH 1849]*

MS Heritage Bookshop, California. Date: Parliamentary session was Feb to Aug, but there were important debates on agriculture at this time; handwriting suggests late 1840s.

Devonshire Terrace. | Tuesday Night.

My Dear Milnes

My brother (the bearer) has come to me tonight to ask me to get him an order for a country friend (supposed to be a maniac)†1 who wants to get into the House of Commons tomorrow evening, either below the bar, or in the gallery. On so short a notice, I can think of no one so certain to be goodnatured as you. And therefore I impose this penalty of asking you whether you can help the wretched man in question to the fulfilment of his bitter destiny.

Ever Very truly Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Monckton Milnes Esquire.

V, 527.10. To MRS LAING,†1 24 APRIL 1849

Summary from Sotheby's catalogue July 1983; MS 2 pp.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 24 Apr 49; addressed Mrs Laing.

Highly approving in principle of both her objects,†2 but regretting that his engagements prevent him from supporting them more fully.

V, 535.18.

after Jerdan add [1a]

insert [1a] Jerdan had complained that, owing to the delay, he could only purchase a copy for a very brief notice the previous morning (MS Bradbury, Agnew & Co. Ltd).

V, 537.12.

replace headnote with MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

[V, 537.]14.

insert new line Devonshire Terrace | Tenth May 1849.

[V, 537.]14.

replace elision with (and not long ago either)

[V, 537.]16.

for MARTINUZZI read Martinuzzi

[V, 537.]19.

after indigence. begin new para

[V, 537.]20.

add He is not therefore, at this moment, in want—though a very considerable part of that, was forestalled by arrears of rent.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Monckton Milnes Esquire.

V, 545.30. To JAMES S. HUDSON,[†1] 24 MAY 1849

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, July 1985; MS 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 24 May 49; addressed James S. Hudson.

Thanking him for his obliging letter and for the American Magazine, which has afforded me much pleasure.

V, 559.2.

replace headnote with Text in MDGH, I, 207 checked from MS at Sotheby's, July 1983.

[V, 559.]10.

insert new para You spoke to me about a girl for emigration. Is the case on, or off? and, if on, will you let me know more about it straightway? We have a vacancy at Shepherd's Bush, and I have been expecting you to pursue the subject.[1a] insert [1a] Presumably the "very good case" of To Miss Coutts, Vol. V, p. 557, who turned out not to need admission (Vol. V, p. 560).

V, 577.17. To R. H. HORNE, 19 JULY 1849*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: R. H. Horne Esquire | Fallow Lodge | Finchley.

Devonshire Terrace. | Nineteenth July 1849.

My Dear Horne.

I got a fall last Sunday week (in jumping, for the edification of my children, over a big man's head), and so hurt my side that I was obliged to be smartly cupped and blistered,[†1] and to go away to Broadstairs for some sea-bathing. I am but now returned. In the mean time, however, I had put some machinery in motion for getting at Mr. Van Voorst,[†2] and today the story[†3] has gone to him. I have thought it prudent to imply that I think the conclusion might be a little altered, with advantage to the tale, and that in the event of his undertaking it and complying with my conditions, I will answer for its being done.[†4] I think this will strengthen our hands, and I hope you approve?

On Monday I leave town. My address will be Winterbourne Villa
Bonchurch
Isle of Wight

—where I shall remain until the end of September; but my communication with Mr. V. V. is quite as direct, and possesses as much authority (how much I don't know) as if I had him here. I have added to my own influence that of somebody else[†5] to whom he is really obliged, and I really believe that his inclination towards us will not be booksellerish.

As soon as I hear his answer, you shall hear from me.

Ever Faithfully
CD.

R. H. Horne Esquire.

V, 607.4. To BAYLE BERNARD,[†1] 5 SEPTEMBER 1849*

MS Stanford University Libraries.

Winterbourne, Bonchurch, Isle of Wight. | Fifth September 1849.

My Dear Sir

I wish to ask you, in the strictest confidence, what you know of [Mr. Ferdinand Ivers]?[†2] Is he a deserving gentleman; and do you think a small loan to him would be so far well bestowed, as that he would repay it, if he could?

I feel persuaded that you can rely on my silence, and that you will kindly advise me in this matter with perfect sincerity.

The sooner you can do so, the more I shall feel obliged to you.

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Bayle Bernard Esquire.

V, 607.5. To JOSEPH KING, 6 SEPTEMBER 1849*

MS Mr Robert D. Fellman.

Winterbourne, Bonchurch, Isle of Wight. | Sixth September 1849.

My Dear Sir

I beg to enclose you a cheque (crossed) for £68..17..6—being the amount in which I am indebted to you for Charley and Walter.

As Charley's interest and influence are likely, on the best consideration, to be greater in the army than in any other profession, I think it now pretty certain that his destiny will lie that way.[†1] He will go to Eton at Christmas, as you intimated to me that you considered that a good time for his entering on the career of a public school. May I ask you, in the interval, to get him well up in the Eton Latin Grammar,[†2] otherwise he would take a lower rank in the school than your instruction entitles him to.[†3] I am particularly anxious on this point.

Mrs. Dickens and I have kept the boys back thus long, having some doubts whether, in the present sickly[†4] state of London, it would be well to send them into it from the pure air they have been breathing here. We cannot, even now, decide whether to "wait a little longer",[†5] or to send them at once. What do you recommend? If you should not have any misgivings on the subject yourself, I should feel strongly disposed to lose no more time; the rather as they are both quite ready and anxious to return. We shall feel much obliged to you if you will give us the benefit of your opinion.

Mrs Dickens begs her regards to yourself, Mrs King, and all your family, in which I very cordially join.

My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Joseph C King Esquire

V, 666.1. To JOSEPH KING, 3 DECEMBER 1849*

MS Mr Robert D. Fellman.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Evening Third December | 1849.

My Dear Sir

Your kind letter arriving shortly before Charley leaves,[†1] I cannot resist writing these few words to assure you that I perfectly understood, on Saturday, all that you tell me; and had the whole case as plainly before me then, as I have now. I am well convinced that you could not have taken a wiser or more considerate course with him in any respect, and that he never could have done, or can hope to do, better, than with you.

I leave him to tell you what the arrangement is for his morning calls on Mr. Hardisty,[†2] which begin tomorrow. And I am ever My Dear Sir

Yours faithfully and much obliged
CHARLES DICKENS

J. C. King Esquire.

V, 687.22. To JOSEPH HAYDN, [?DECEMBER 1849]*

MS (fragment) Mr D. E. Wickham. Date: signature suggests 1848-9; probably connected with Haydn's financial crisis of late Dec 49 (see Vol. V, p. 685 and n).

I have done nothing, and shall do nothing, without your express permission. But if I might presume to solicit your assent to the course I propose, I would do so.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Joseph Haydn Esquire.

P.S.[†1]

VI, 48.7. To MRS GASKELL, 27 FEBRUARY 1850†

Replaces catalogue extract.

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: Mrs. Gaskell | Plymouth Grove | Manchester.

Household Words Office | Twenty Seventh February 1850.

My Dear Mrs. Gaskell.

I will give you as honest an opinion of your story,[†1] as I faithfully promised I would.

I think it excellent. I have no doubt that in your anxiety you have quite deceived yourself; being unable to get far enough away from it to see it as I do. It interested me greatly, as I read it. And it made me cry—which I mention, because I take that to be an indisputable proof of its effect. I am seriously convinced that it is in all respects worthy of you; or nothing would induce me, I believe, to tell you so.

I have an idea—but I am by no means sure—that it might be brought a little closer in the first part, by the omission of a line or two, here and there, in the Proof. I think I would break it where you propose; and I should like to get, if possible, into the second portion, published in the following week, all that I have now. If your scheme should admit of its being concluded in a third part of about the same length, well. If not, I would divide it, with your permission into two chapters more.

Do not let me interfere with any idea you may have in your mind, when I ask if you propose to make Lizzie dead, at this time? I seem to see through that means, a forcible lesson on the postponement of forgiveness, and the way we have of only leaving that legacy, when we are obliged to leave all legacies—at the point of death. To leave the story with a notion of her child attaching herself to Susan's child (when, in good time she had one) and devoting herself to it would be very pretty, I fancy. But again I earnestly conjure you not to let me interfere with any idea you may have formed.

Pray go on to the end. I know you will be pleased with it afterwards. I have sent all I have, to the Printer. Have you thought of any name? Or shall I try to christen it? I shall be anxious to hear from you again, and to be assured that you do yourself more justice. Mind! I have not the least reservation or doubt, of any sort.

Dear Mrs. Gaskell | Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

VI, 58.13. To RICHARD MONCKTON MILNES, 8 MARCH 1850*

MS Trinity College, Cambridge. Address: Richard Monckton Milnes Esquire, M. P. | 26 Pall Mall | London.

Brighton, 148 Kings Road | Eighth March 1850.

My Dear Milnes

You know, maybe, of my "Household Words". If you should ever find it within your inclination and convenience to write anything in that publication (where I purpose giving no contributors' names) you would gratify me very much, would find yourself in good company, and I think would address a large audience.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Monckton Milnes Esquire

VI, 79.9.

after CD add[2]

n. 2 replace with On the same day Wills wrote to Henry Morley: "Sir | I take the liberty of addressing you at the request of Mr. Dickens in consequence of an article from your pen, which appears in the Examiner of last week. | It is Mr. Dickens's desire to help on the Sanitary movement by any means in his power and he is anxious of obtaining your assistance." He thought an "amusing article, similar in tone and purpose, would have a very good effect" in HW (MS Morley Papers). The letter was sent to be forwarded by Forster. Henry Morley (1822-94; DNB) had studied medicine, as well as arts subjects, at King's College, London, 1838-43, acting as one of the editors of the College magazine for two years. LSA 1843, and in practice 1844-8; after losing his practice through his partner's dishonesty he conducted schools in Manchester and Liverpool. Published his first book of verse, The Dream of the Lilybell, 1845, and two tracts on health, 1847. Wrote on sanitation in the Journal of Public Health 1847-9; after it ceased publication Forster, who had reprinted two articles, agreed in Mar 50 to publish in the Examiner a new series of "How to make Home unhealthy" (also issued as a pamphlet 27 July 50). Morley met Forster—whom he already admired as a "first-rate man, generous and high-minded"— when he visited London in July 50 and was engaged as an unpaid leader-writer for the Examiner (H. S. Solly, The Life of Henry Morley, pp. 75, 83, 145-54).

VI, 79.10-13.

Delete entry: see Vol. VI Corrigenda, p. 862 (reprint 1988).

VI, 84.

n. 6 replace with Probably one of the Charity concerts in May connected with the Royal Society of Musicians.

VI, 149.

n. 2 add On 6 Sep John Dickens, writing from Cowley House (possibly Cowley House, Chertsey, or a house in Cowley Rd, Brixton), sent a cheque for 20 guineas, "as a fee for your professional services during Mrs. Dickens' confinement" (MS Mr Brian Lake), almost certainly to Charles Morgan, CD's family doctor; clearly on behalf of CD, then in Broadstairs; CD paid John Dickens £20 on 1 Oct (Account-book, MS Messrs Coutts), no doubt to cover what he then owed him.

VI, 166.21. To EDMUND FRY, [12 SEPTEMBER 1850]

Envelope in Sophie Dupré catalogue No. 14 (1989). Address: Edmund Fry Esquire, 3 Winchester Buildings, London. PM Ramsgate | 12 Sep 50.

VI, 267.17. To EDWARD CHAPMAN, 25 JANUARY 1851

MS Sir John Colville.

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday evening | Twenty Fifth January 1851

Dear Sir.

I beg to enclose you the book for Mr. Townshend and shall be much obliged by your sending it to him.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Edward Chapman Esquire.

VI, 275.27. To BENJAMIN WEBSTER, [?LATE JANUARY 1851]

Mention in Edward Loomis Davenport, a Biography, ed. Edwin Francis Edgett, New York, The Dunlap Society, No. 14, 1901, p. 41.[†1] Date: no doubt a few days before Davenport's first performance in Black-eyed Susan at the Haymarket on 4 Feb 51.

A note saying he should feel great pleasure in witnessing Davenport's representation of William in Jerrold's Black-eyed Susan.

VI, 378.28. To DUDLEY COSTELLO, [?MAY 1851]

Mention in Sotheby's catalogue, Feb 1918; MS 1 p.; written on inside of an envelope. Date: perhaps a rehearsal of Not so Bad as we Seem, in which Costello acted.

Calling him to a rehearsal with a note admitting him.

VI, 385.

n. 4 add; and, for Hunt's delicate reference to his earlier indebtedness to the Duke, see Hunt to the Duke of Devonshire [1851] (from MS Devonshire Collections, Chatsworth), given in S. Arthur Strong's essay on the Duke, "The Kindest-Hearted of the Great", Critical Studies & Fragments, 1905. In the same letter he thanked the Duke for this invitation to the dress rehearsal, "through my friend Dickens, and the pride and pleasure which it gave me. I sate (owing to my bad health) with cold feet and an aching head, and yet I would not have missed the entertainment for a great deal; for though much of an amateur performance is of necessity crude and awkward (owing to want of practice), yet there was often capital acting before me, especially that of Dickens and Lemon; and I was certain of being for a longer time than usual in the same room with one of the kindest men in the world, [the Duke] who fills my heart with emotions which I cannot express for fear of seeming to write like a child."

VI, 388.18. To F. W. TOPHAM, 13 MAY 1851

Mention in Dawson's Book Shop (Los Angeles) Catalogue No. 323 (1961); dated Devonshire Terrace, 13 May 51; addressed F. W. Topham.

About Mr Jenkins's design[†1] for one of the tickets for the Guild's performance.

VI, 389.18. To MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL, [DECEMBER 1839-14 MAY 1851]

Extract in American Autograph Shop, March 1938; MS 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace. Date: in the Devonshire Terrace period.

You think right in this wise. It is Mr. William [?Farrer][†1] who has the matter in hand.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Chapman & Hall

VI, 389.19. To MRS SODEN,[†1] [?DECEMBER 1839-14 MAY 1851]*

MS (in Catherine Dickens's hand) Hughenden Collection. Date: in the Devonshire House period.

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday Morning.

Mrs. Charles Dickens is requested by Mr. Dickens, to beg Mrs. Soden's acceptance of the enclosed. Mr. Dickens has not had time to make any enquiries into Mrs. Soden's case, but rests solely on the faith of Mrs. Hale's†2 letter. Mr. Dickens much regrets that very many similar applications, prevent him making the enclosed small sum more worth Mrs. Soden's acceptance.

VI, 391.

n. 6 (390 cont.) add Had been imprisoned in Italy after battle of Volturno, 1860; freed by British intervention, and on return to England visited George Eliot and Lewes (George Eliot Letters, ed. Gordon Haight, VIII, 293).

VI, 406.14.

after Wills here. add [4]

insert [4] CD and Wills must also have discussed HW; on 2 June Wills wrote to invite Morley to join the staff. "My dear Sir | ... Mr. Dickens has been discussing a subject with me in which you are deeply concerned. We are in want of help in that branch of our editorial labours which relate to the getting up and superintending (without always actually 'writing up') the various subjects which are pressed upon us." Morley's previous services to HW showed that he would be "an effective coadjutor"; could he therefore "remove to London and engage with us for, say, a year certain at a weekly salary of five guineas?" (MS Morley Papers). Morley, happy and successful in his school teaching (at Liscard near Liverpool), now making £300 a year but not yet free from debt, wrote to consult his fiancée and also "in great perplexity" to his mentor Forster, asking for candid advice and possibly the prospect of some payment from the Examiner (MS ibid.; quoted in Solly's Life of Henry Morley, p. 189). By return he had "a kind and thoughtful reply", mentioning the possibility of getting pupils in London, of a probable £50 to £100 a year from the Examiner and introductions to other periodicals. Forster assured him that CD was "the kindest and most honourable of men ... whatever you do for him, you will be able to reckon steadfastly on his earnest acknowledgment, and liberal desire to make it more and more worth doing" (H. S. Solly, pp. 187-90). In thanking him for the new prospect of Examiner payments ("such pleasant work that I am half ashamed to be paid") Morley recognized his indebtedness to Forster for the HW connection. Within the week his decision was made, mainly influenced by the earlier prospect of paying off his debts (and of marriage); but he was still concerned for his school and asked if Forster could recommend a possible successor. In disclaiming "sufficient knowledge" Forster wished him well in his "new career ... I hope (& indeed, believe) that you have chosen wisely" (letters of 9 and 11 June; MSS ibid.;—Morley's presumably returned to him after Forster's death). So it proved—and Morley had his first ever payment from the Examiner on 11 Oct 51, by which time he had also become a trusted reviewer (H. S. Solly, pp. 203-11). He moved to London on 21 June to look for lodgings and enjoy a meeting with his fiancée (H. S. Solly, pp. 188-93).

VI, 441.

n. 8 add A prefatory note to Pichot's translation of CD's "Our Watering Place" as "Une petite ville au bord de la mer" in Les Contes de Ch. Dickens Traduits de l'Anglais (Troisième Série) 1853 describes how he always tried to visit CD in the summer, but in 1850 and 51 suffered a double disappointment. In 1850 visited the Kent coast, only to learn after he left that he had been near CD; in 1851 he came to visit the Great Exhibition and called at Devonshire Terrace only to find it "tout à fait déserte", with a notice on the door saying that CD and family were away for the whole season and letters should be taken to Wellington Street—"c'est-à-dire" Pichot ruefully adds, "juste une autre extremité de Londres". He went there later, but feared his letter would never reach CD when he saw "l'énorme liasse des lettres de ses correspondants à laquelle la nôtre jointe". Receiving no reply, he offers his readers CD's "réponse indirecte" in the sketch that follows. Though at first uncertain which resort CD was describing ("Est-ce Margate, Ramsgate, Deal ou Broadstairs?"), he decides for Broadstairs.

VI, 474.

n. 7 add Subject evidently suggested to CD by Brougham: Wills to Morley, 20 Aug 51 (MS Morley Papers).

VI, 547.9. To JONAS MILNE,†1 [26 NOVEMBER 1851]

MS (envelope) Dickens House (Sterling Offices Collection). Address: Jonas Milne Esquire | Grove House | Wilmslow | Cheshire. PM 26 Nov 51.

VI, 548.

n. 3 add As a result Catherine wrote to Morley, on 27 Dec 51, inviting him to the Dickens's New Year party. (MS Morley Papers.)

VI, 583.

n. 5 add But see Addenda, To Mrs Dickens, 12 Feb 52, n. 6.

VI, 593.

n. 1 for As proposer ... Wyatt read See To Stone, 22 Feb.

n. 2 replace with Sir Edwin Landseer signed the supporters' sheet, but his signature in fact was appended later than CD's.

VI, 597.

n. 6 (596 cont.) add But Mrs Gaskell, warned in advance by Forster (who called on 22 Feb, giving her "a private admission") that "the play was very heavy", agreed. She and the Winkworths sat in the front row and looking up at "the very much raised stage" made her feel "Braidized" [paralysed, from Braid's writings on hypnotism] and gave her "such a headache". The play was "very very long ... 3 hours and a half, & they omitted one scene.... Forster was sadly too long over his very moral sentences." Fortunately the farce was "capital", especially CD and Lemon. (Mrs Gaskell to Mrs Sandars, Mid-Feb 52: MS Mrs S. Kearney.)

VI, 607.

n. 2 add CD and Forster signed the supporters' sheet, but Stone's name does not appear, which suggests some misunderstanding.

[VI,]608.

n. 3 (607 cont.) delete last 3 lines.

VI, 610.1. To W. WRIGHT,†1 27 FEBRUARY 1852

Extract in Sophie Dupré catalogue No. 14 (1989); MS 1 p.; dated Tavistock House, Tavistock Square, 27 Feb 52; addressed W. Wright, Trinity Bury Wharf, Blackwall.

Sending his compliments to Captain Poulter,†2 and asking Wright to assure him that I feel much obliged for his polite offer†3 ... and promising to make an appointment in acceptance of his proposal, and to send a gentleman down to you to propose a day and hour.

VI, 616.11. To CHARLES DE LA PRYME, 3 MARCH 1852

MS Mr Michael Silverman.

Tavistock House, Tavistock Square | Third March 1852

My Dear Sir

I have such a strong sense, in all these cases, of the danger of making a bad and unhappy Poet out of a good and happy Something-else—and of the miseries and bitternesses so occasioned—that I would rather not praise the Poor Boy's†1 verse in your kind preface.†2 I think it very good—"considering"— but I don't know that the Public can be expected to consider anything in a published book, except the matter that they find in it.

Nevertheless I beg to be allowed the privilege of becoming a subscriber under my initial letters.†3

My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

C. De la Pryme Esquire | &c &c &c

VI, 632.1. To MRS WATSON, 29 MARCH 1852

MS Mr Stephen Brook.

Tavistock House | Twenty Ninth March 1852

My Dear Mrs. Watson

This is a flying note to say that I and my First Lieutenant purpose coming down on Wednesday, by the train which leaves Euston Square at half past ten.

All here blooming.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

VI, 632.2. To R. H. HORNE, [?29 MARCH 1852]

Envelope in Sotheby's catalogue, April 1989. Address: R. H. Horne Esquire | Beaumont Cottage | College Road | Hampstead Road. Date: PM undecipherable; endorsed by Horne "2nd. Vol. of Poems[†1] | March 29 | 52".

VI, 643.18. To THE COUNTESS GREY,[†1] 15 APRIL 1852

MS University of Durham.

Tavistock House | Thursday Fifteenth April | 1852

Dear Lady Grey.

I am exceedingly sorry that I should have been, unintentionally, the means of misrepresenting Lord Grey.[†2] But I feel confident that I need not assure you of my earnest desire to set the matter right.

The article[†3] to which you call my attention was written by a gentleman who ought to be thoroughly acquainted with the subject, and has long known Australia. I will not refer your private communication to him, but will take care to have the substance of Lord Grey's memorandum set forth in a separate paper, carefully prepared for the purpose; which shall be published with the least possible delay and with every publicity that Household Words can ensure.[†4]

Dear Lady Grey | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The | Countess Grey.

VI, 657.22. To JOHN CHAPMAN,[†1] 3 MAY 1852

Extract in Maggs Bros catalogue No. 1120 (1990); MS 1 p.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS
Monday 3rd. May 1852

My Dear Sir

I have a previous appointment on Tuesday morning; but will be with you as early as I can, and before the general hour.[†2]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To | John Chapman Esquire

VI, 678.13. To MISS M. CARPENTER,[†1] 20 MAY 1852*

MS Manchester College, Oxford.

Tavistock House, Tavistock Square | Thursday Twentieth May 1852

Dear Madam

I was out of town yesterday,[†2] and consequently unable to reply to your note.

Miss Coutts's establishment[†3] can scarcely be said to apply to "juvenile delinquency",[†4] and I fear it would be hardly worth your while to visit it, unless it were in my power to go with you and tell you the private history of the different cases. This, I regret to say, is rendered impossible just now by my occupations and engagements.[†5]

Its address is, Urania Cottage, near The White Horse, Shepherds Bush. If you should still desire to go there, and will ask for Mrs. Morson and shew her this note, she will be happy to conduct you over the cottage.[†6]

Lieutenant Tracey, Governor of the Tothill Fields Bridewell, Westminster, has under his charge a vast number of the boy and girl criminals of this town. If you should wish to see that prison and will shew this note to him, he will afford you every facility. I should have been happy to have presented you to him myself, as a lady who has labored so well and so earnestly to check the growth of ignorance and crime.[†7]

The most remarkable collection of Ragged School attendants in London, is to be found (I think) at about ½ past 7 o'Clock in the evening at the Field Lane Ragged School and Dormitory[†8] at the Northern end of Farringdon Street. Mr. Mountstephen[†9] who is indefatigable at that Institution will make you fully acquainted with it, if you will allow me—also through the medium of this note—to introduce you.

Dear Madam | Faithfully yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Carpenter

VI, 682.9.

after Rheumatic gout. add [1a] insert [1a] This included a badly swollen right hand requiring leeches (Forster to Fonblanque, MS Private).

VI, 689.10. To INSPECTOR C. F. FIELD, 2 JUNE 1852*

Replaces catalogue summary.

MS Mr Michael Silverman.

Tavistock House | Wednesday Second June 1852

Dear Mr. Field.

I am unwillingly obliged to postpone our intended expedition tonight. Other occupations require my attention, and render it necessary for me to propose next Wednesday—this night week—instead.

Unless I should in the mean time hear any thing from you to the contrary, I shall expect you at the Household Words office at 8 o'Clock, next Wednesday evening, instead of tonight.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

VI, 711.

n. 2 add Longfellow, who met her in Sep 1849, described her in his Journal, 25 Sep, as having "a very striking face, with wonderfully fine eyes"; Fields on 5 Oct referred to her as the "oculate wonder". By May 1852, Longfellow called her "my friend" (Letters of H. W. Longfellow, ed. Andrew Hilen, III (1972), 217*n,* and 343).

VI, 718.17. To FRANK STONE, [?JULY 1851-16 JULY 1852]*

MS Professor Carl J. Ballhausen. Date: between July 51 and July 52 (before CD went to Dover on 21 July 52), based on handwriting and style of ending.

Friday

My Dear Stone. Are you for a walk tonight? Half past 7?

Ever affecy
CD

VI, 731.8.

after HOTEL: THE GEORGE THE FOURTH add [2a] insert [2a] They paid £36.17*s.* for their stay (cheque, MS George Hotel, Nottingham).

VI, 742.

n. 5 add Hunt's letter to CD of 16 Aug (MS Brian Lake) requests in the introductory paragraph the correction of "James the Fourth" to "James the Fifth" and revisions in the 9th stanza, with apologies for troubling CD. The introduction was omitted, and the other changes made.

VI, 803.

n. 4 (802 cont.) add Morley and Wills attended Mrs Hayden's séance under the assumed names of Brown and Thompson. The article was attacked by Henry Spicer in his Sights and Sounds: the Mystery of the Day (published in Jan 1853), in his introduction, and again on pp. 373-4. He called it "somewhat scurrilous", and ineffective as an exposure because the writer's "buffoonery" and "absurd questions" destroyed the necessary atmosphere. See also K. Tillotson in D, LXXXIV (1988), 4-5.

VI, 808.26.

after that language add [4a] insert [4a] Charley's tutor in German was Dr Otto Fiebig of the Gymnasium zu St Nicolai, Leipzig. He published The College Shakespeare, 1857; edns of Julius Caesar and Romeo and Juliet, both 1859; and A Collection of Letters ... Arranged for Translation, 1857. For his introductions to Charley's edns of Goethe and Schiller, published 1854-6, see To Ryland, 6 Dec 54, fn.

VI, 815.6. To PETER RACKHAM,[†1] 3 DECEMBER 1852*

MS Henry Sotheran Limited. Address: Peter Rackham Esquire | 10 Sise Lane | City. PM 4 Dec 52.

Tavistock House | Tavistock Square | Third December 1852

My Dear Sir.

Will you give Mrs. Dickens and myself the pleasure of dining with us on Wednesday the 29th.[†2] at a quarter to six, to meet our good friends Bradbury and Evans. I do not give you this long notice, to strike formal terror into your mind; but merely because it will be Christmas Week, and I fear you might otherwise be engaged.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Peter Rackham Esquire

Volume VIII

1856 – 1858

1856

January

To JOHN FORSTER,[†1] [1 JANUARY 1856]

Extracts in F, VIII, iii, 65*n* and VII, v, 616-7. Date: first extract 1 Jan, according to Forster; second extract probably same letter; see notes below.

When in London Coutts[†2] advised me not to sell out the money for Gad's Hill Place (the title of my estate, Sir, my place down in Kent) until the conveyance was settled and ready.[†3]

On the entry into Paris of French troops from the Crimea,[†4] the Zouaves[†5] pleased him most. A remarkable body of men, wild, dangerous, and picturesque. Close-cropped head, red skull cap, Greek jacket, full red petticoat trowsers trimmed with yellow, and high white gaiters — the most sensible things for the purpose I know, and coming into use in the line. A man with such things on his legs is always free there, and ready for a muddy march; and might flounder through roads two feet deep in mud, and, simply by changing his gaiters (he has another pair in his haversack), be clean and comfortable and wholesome again, directly.[†6] Plenty of beard and moustache, and the musket carried reverse wise with the stock over the shoulder, make up the sun-burnt Zouave. He strides like Bobadil,[†7] smoking as he goes; and when he laughs (they were under my window for half-an-hour or so), plunges backward in the wildest way, as if he were going to throw a sommersault. They have a black dog belonging to the regiment, and, when they now marched along with their medals, this dog marched after the one non-commissioned officer he invariably follows with a profound conviction that he was decorated. I couldn't see whether he had a medal, his hair being long; but he was perfectly up to what had befallen his regiment; and I never saw anything so capital as his way of regarding the public. Whatever the regiment does, he is always in his place; and it was impossible to mistake the air of modest triumph which was now upon him. A small dog corporeally, but of a great mind. On that night there was an illumination in honour of the army, when the whole of Paris, bye streets and lanes and all sorts of out of the way places, was most brilliantly illuminated. It looked in the dark like Venice and Genoa rolled into one, and split up through the middle by the Corso at Rome in the carnival time.[†1] The French people certainly do know how to honour their own countrymen, in a most marvellous way. He was fairly lost in a mystery of amazement at where the money could come from that everybody was spending on the étrennes[†2] they were giving to everybody else. All the famous shops on the Boulevards had been blockaded for more than a week. There is now a line of wooden stalls, three miles long, on each side of that immense thoroughfare;[†3] and wherever a retiring house or two admits of a double line, there it is. All sorts of objects from shoes and sabots, through porcelain and crystal, up to live fowls and rabbits which are played for at a sort of dwarf skittles (to their immense disturbance, as the ball rolls under them and shakes them off their shelves and perches whenever it is delivered by a vigorous hand), are on sale in this great Fair. And what you may get in the way of ornament for twopence, is astounding.

To W. H. WILLS,[†4] 1 JANUARY 1856

MS Huntington Library.

Paris, First January 1856

My Dear Wills.

Many Happy New Years! And so, as Tiny Tim observed, &c[†5] —

I return the Proofs.[†6] As you observe in your note, they will want to be looked over, very carefully.

The Flag of England — Taboo.

Across the Street[†7] — highly desirable to be postponed for the present. It is too manifestly a remnant from the Xmas No.[†8] and would now come too near that story of Thomas's.[†9]

Lead off the No. with the Guards and the Line.[†10] With the new name I have given it[†1] (see to the proof, the punctuation, and slovenly composition here and there), it is the best thing we can do. [†a]It has a distinct and appropriate purpose.[†a]

Howitt,[†2] all right. But take his German poetry out altogether, or make him render it in English also.[†3]

Zoological Auction,[†4] also licenced and returned herewith.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

I will write again in a day or two.

To JOHN FOWLER,[†5] 2 JANUARY 1856

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, July 1972; MS 1 p.; dated Paris, 49 Avenue des Champs Elysées, 2 Jan 56; Address (envelope MS Free Library of Philadelphia): L'Angleterre | John Fowler Esquire | 50 Occupation Road | Sheffield. PM Paris 2 Jan 56.

It gives me the greatest pleasure to learn from your letter that my reading[†6] has been of solid advantage to your Institution.[†7] Fowler's kind remembrance of the actors[†8] is particularly agreeable to him; CD is much interested to know that members were among the audience.

I can answer your enquiry respecting the audience, in the warmest manner. It was an admirable one; I think I have not read to a better.

To MRS GASKELL,[†9] 2 JANUARY 1856

MS Dickens House. Address: L'Angleterre | Mrs. Gaskell | Plymouth Grove | Manchester.

Paris, 49 Avenue des champs Elysées
Second January 1856

My Dear Mrs. Gaskell.

In case Household Words should not have spoken for itself in the notice that is now regularly appended to it,[†1] or in case you should not have seen that notice, I think I may as well write to let you know that I waited on Madame Mohl[†2] very shortly after she called here with your note. She fully explained its subject to me, and in the next No. we put to Press, I began an announcement that the writers in Household Words reserve the right of translation. On considering the matter it seemed to be best and strongest, to make the formality general and sweeping. It effectually preserves your right.[†3]

I have been going on, hoping to see the end of the story you could not finish (which was not your fault or anybody's) in time for Christmas.[†4] When will it be forthcoming, I wonder! You have not deserted it. You cannot be such an unnatural mother.

With kind remembrances from Mrs. Dickens and her sister and our united regards to Mr. Gaskell,[†5]

Believe me | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MESSRS HACHETTE ET CIE,[†6] 2 JANUARY 1856

MS Librairie Hachette.

49 Champs Elysées | Mercredi Janvier 2, 1856

Messieurs.

Permettez-moi de vous faire savoir que je suis revenue à Paris,[†7] et que je serai bien aise d'avoir l'honneur de vous entretenir, ou Lundi ou Mardi prochain, à deux heures.[†8]

Recevez Messieurs l'assurance de ma consideration profonde.

Votre fidele
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. L. Hachette et Cie.

To LADY STRACEY,[†1] 2 JANUARY 1856

Extract in Maggs catalogue No. 871 (1899); MS 1 p.; addressed Lady Stracey; dated Paris, 2 Jan 56.

We are passing the winter here, and though I make periodical flights to England they are merely for the transaction of business.

To EDMUND YATES,[†2] 2 JANUARY 1856

MS University of Kentucky Library.

Paris, 49 Avenue des Champs Elysées
Wednesday Second January 1856.

My Dear Yates.

Supposing both Corsican Brothers to be available, I think I should prefer being Godfather[†3] to the one who isn't Kean.[†4] With this solitary stipulation, I very cordially respond to your proposal, and am happy to take my friendly and sponsorial seat at your fireside.

I will write you word when I purpose making another flight to London; for I must come and see my boy,[†5] whether we fill the sparkling wine-cup (when I was in America, an Editor[†6] wrote me a note of invitation begging me to come and "crush" that article with him), or not. I am but newly returned here, and hardly expect to be beckoned over for some weeks.

When you represent me at the Font and are renouncing, think that on Christmas Day I had seven sons in the Banquet Hall of this apartment — which would not make a very large warm bath — and renounce my example.

Mrs. Dickens and Miss Hogarth unite with me in kind regards to yourself and Mrs. Yates[†1] — as to whom I now consider myself with much pleasure, a sort of relation.

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Edmund H Yates Esquire.

To W. H. WILLS, 3 AND 4 JANUARY 1856

MS Huntington Library.

49 Champs Elysées
Thursday Third January 1856 | (After Post time)

My Dear Wills.

H. W.[†2]

I am sufficiently irritable — though, as you know, the most amiable of men! — to desire to avoid reading Miss Martineau's[†3] vomit[†4] of conceit,[†5] unless I should feel myself positively obliged to do so. I have therefore put the precious packet by, without opening it. I will come to a decision upon Morley's[†6] notice of it, when I see the Proof of his article.[†7] But my present impression is, that I would rather (if only for the mortification it will cause her), not notice it at all. The Proof has not yet arrived.

You shall have a first paper[†8] from me by Sunday's post, if you don't get it — to start[†9]

— VIII - 7 —

BONBONS[†1]

Mrs. Dickens has already sent to her sister[†2] at Tavistock House,[†3] instructions thereanent. It is to go back there.[†4]

Poole's[†5]

Quarter I have paid him. Enclosed is his proof of life. After you shall have sent me the receipt to sign, and after I shall have signed it, please pay the usual Paymaster General Order, to my account at Coutts's.[†6]

Friday Afternoon

The Proof has arrived. I will read it and write to you about it, when I have done my article. Expect it on Monday morning. From 3 to 4 pages.

I send by this post a paper of White's.[†7] I have not read it, but I know the design and it is a good subject.[†8]

He wants an order on Lafitte's[†9] for all we owe him, including Old Blois[†10] and this paper — an order to pay Revd. James White so many pounds sterling. This will be as advantageous to him as gold. From the total he will be very much obliged if you will deduct the cost of [ ].[†11] — And if you will make a parcel of those books[†12] and so send them to him, he will Ever Pray — &c.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To GEORGE AUGUSTUS SALA,[†1] 4 JANUARY 1856*

MS Private.

49 Champs Elysées | Friday Fourth January 1856

My Dear Mr. Sala.

I shall be at home on Tuesday from 12 to 1, and shall be happy to see you if that time will suit your convenience.[†2]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

George A Sala Esquire.

To JOHN FORSTER, [6 JANUARY 1856]

Extracts in F, VIII, i, 624 and VII, V, 619*n*, 619 and 617*n*. Date: first two extracts dated 6 Jan, according to Forster; third and fourth extracts probably same letter (see notes below).

On Little Dorrit he wrote You know that they had sold 35,000 of number two on new year's day.[†3]

I forget whether I have already told you that I have received a proposal from a responsible bookselling house here, for a complete edition, authorized by myself, of a French translation of all my books. The terms involve questions of space and amount of matter; but I should say, at a rough calculation, that I shall get about £300 by it — perhaps £50 more.[†4]

The nightmare portrait is nearly done; and Scheffer[†5] promises that an interminable sitting next Saturday,[†1] beginning at 10 o'clock in the morning, shall finish it. It is a fine spirited head, painted at his very best, and with a very easy and natural appearance to it. But it does not look to me at all like, nor does it strike me that if I saw it in a gallery I should suppose myself to be the original.[†2] It is always possible that I don't know my own face. It is going to be engraved here, in two sizes and ways — the mere head and the whole thing.[†3]

We have wet weather here — and dark too for these latitudes — and oceans of mud. Although numbers of men are perpetually scooping and sweeping it away in this thoroughfare, it accumulates under the windows so fast, and in such sludgy masses, that to get across the road is to get half over one's shoes in the first outset of a walk.[†4]

To W. H. WILLS, 6 JANUARY 1856

MS Huntington Library.

49 Champs Elysées, Sunday January Sixth 1856

My Dear Wills.

†a I have read Morley's article,†5 and gone very carefully over that part of it which refers to Miss Martineau. Supposing the facts to be closely examined and verified, I think it should be printed, and should go into the opening of the next No.†6 †b as I have arranged it in the enclosed proof.†b I do not quite distinctly see how it is proved that the renunciation of the idea of paying the penalties dates from that Seventh of August beyond all doubt.†7 I should like it made clearer.

Miss Martineau, in this, is precisely what I always knew her to be, and have always impressed her upon you as being. I was so convinced that it was impossible that she could be anything else, having seen and heard her, that I am not in the least triumphant at her justifying my opinion. I do suppose that there never was such a wrong-headed woman born†b — such a vain one — or such a Humbug.†b

If you think any little thing I have put in, too hard, consult Forster. If you both think so, take it out. Not otherwise.†a†8

— VIII - 10 —

I should like Morley to do a Strike article, and to work into it the greater part of what is here.†1 But I cannot represent myself as holding the opinion that all strikes among this unhappy class of society who find it so difficult to get a peaceful hearing, are always necessarily wrong; because I don't think so. To open a discussion of the question by saying that the men are "of course entirely and painfully in the wrong", surely would be monstrous in any one. Shew them to be in the wrong here, but in the name of the Eternal Heavens shew why, upon the merits of this question.†2 Nor can I possibly adopt the representation that these men are wrong because, by throwing themselves out of work, they throw other people, possibly without their consent. If such a principle had anything in it, there would have been no civil war; no raising by Hampden of a troop of Horse, to the detriment of Buckinghamshire Agriculture; no self sacrifice in the political world. And O Good God when Morley treats of the suffering of wife and children, can he suppose that these mistaken men don't feel it in the depths of their hearts, and don't honestly and honorably — most devoutly and faithfully — believe — that for those very children when they shall have children, they are bearing all these miseries now!

I hear from Mrs. Fillonneau†3 that her husband†4 was obliged to leave town suddenly, before he could get your parcel. Consequently he has not brought it, and White's Sovereigns†5 — unless you have got them back again — are either lying out of circulation somewhere, or are being spent by somebody else.

I will write again on Tuesday. My article to begin the Vol.†6 enclosed.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

— VIII - 11 —

To F. BEAUCOURT-MUTUEL,[†1] [?6 JANUARY 1856]

Mention in next.

Engaging the Villa Moulineaux for June.

To MARK LEMON,[†2] 7 JANUARY 1856

Text from MDGH, I, 416-19.

49, Champs Elysees, Paris, Monday, Jan. 7th, 1856.

My dear Mark,

[†a]I want to know how "Jack and the Beanstalk"[†3] goes. I have a notion from a notice — a favourable notice, however — which I saw in Galignani, that Webster[†4] has let down the comic business.[†a†5]

In a piece at the Ambigu,[†6] called the "Rentrée à Paris,"[†7] a mere scene in honour of the return of the troops from the Crimea the other day, there is a novelty which I think it worth letting you know of, as it is easily available, either for a serious or a comic interest — the introduction of a supposed electric telegraph. The scene is the railway terminus at Paris, with the electric telegraph office on the prompt side, and the clerks with their backs to the audience — much more real than if they were, as they infallibly would be, staring about the house — working the needles;[†8] and the little bell perpetually ringing. There are assembled to greet the soldiers, all the easily and naturally imagined elements of interest — old veteran fathers, young children, agonised mothers, sisters and brothers, girl lovers — each impatient to know of his or her own object of solicitude. Enter to these a certain marquis, full of sympathy for all, who says "My friends, I am one of you. My brother has no commission yet. He is a common soldier. I wait for him as well as all brothers and sisters here wait for their brothers. Tell me whom you are expecting." Then they all tell him. Then he goes into the telegraph-office, and sends a message down the line to know how long the troops will be. Bell rings. Answer handed out on slip of paper. "Delay on the line. Troops will not arrive for a quarter of an hour." General disappointment. "But we have this brave electric telegraph, my friends," says the marquis. "Give me your little messages, and I'll send them off." General rush round the marquis. Exclamations: "How's Henri?" "My love to Georges;" "Has Guillaume forgotten Elise?" "Is my son wounded?" "Is my brother promoted?" etc. etc. Marquis composes tumult. Sends message — such a regiment, such a company — "Elise's love to Georges." Little bell rings, slip of paper handed out — "Georges in ten minutes will embrace his Elise. Sends her a thousand kisses." Marquis sends message — such a regiment, such a company — "Is my son wounded?" Little bell rings. Slip of paper handed out — "No. He has not yet upon him those marks of bravery in the glorious service of his country which his dear old father bears" (father being lamed and invalided). Last of all, the widowed mother. Marquis sends message — such a regiment, such a company — "Is my only son safe?" Little bell rings. Slip of paper handed out — "He was first upon the heights of Alma." General cheer. Bell rings again, another slip of paper handed out. "He was made a sergeant at Inkermann." Another cheer. Bell rings again, another slip of paper handed out. "He was made colour-sergeant at Sebastopol." Another cheer. Bell rings again, another slip of paper handed out. "He was the first man who leaped with the French banner on the Malakhoff tower." Tremendous cheer. Bell rings again, another slip of paper handed out. "But he was struck down there by a musket-ball, and — Troops have proceeded. Will arive in half a minute after this." Mother abandons all hope; general commiseration; troops rush in, down a platform; son only wounded, and embraces her.

As I have said, and as you will see, this is available for any purpose. But done with equal distinction and rapidity, it is a tremendous effect, and got by the simplest means in the world. There is nothing in the piece, but it was impossible not to be moved and excited by the telegraph part of it.

I hope you have seen something of Stanny,[†1] and have been to pantomimes with him, and have drunk to the absent Dick. I miss you, my dear old boy, at the play, woefully, and miss the walk home, and the partings at the corner of Tavistock Square. And when I go by myself, I come home stewing "Little Dorrit" in my head; and the best part of my play is (or ought to be) in Gordon Street.[†2]

I have written to Beaucourt about taking that breezy house[†3] — a little improved[†4] — for the summer, and I hope you and yours will come there often and stay there long.[†5] My present idea, if nothing should arise to unroot me sooner, is to stay here until the middle of May, then plant the family at Boulogne, and come with

Catherine and Georgy home for two or three weeks.[†1] When I shall next run across I don't know, but I suppose next month.[†2]

We are up to our knees in mud here. Literally in vehement despair, I walked down the avenue outside the Barrière de l'Étoile[†3] here yesterday, and went straight on among the trees. I came back with top-boots of mud on. Nothing will cleanse the streets. Numbers of men and women are for ever scooping and sweeping in them, and they are always one lake of yellow mud. All my trousers go to the tailor's every day, and are ravelled out at the heels every night. Washing is awful.

Tell Mrs. Lemon,[†4] with my love, that I have bought her some Eau d'Or,[†5] in grateful remembrance of her knowing what it is, and crushing the tyrant of her existence by resolutely refusing to be put down when that monster would have silenced her.[†6] You may imagine the loves and messages that are now being poured in upon me by all of them, so I will give none of them; though I am pretending to be very scrupulous about it, and am looking (I have no doubt) as if I were writing them down with the greatest care.

Ever affectionately

[CD]

To MADAME VIARDOT,[†7] 7 JANUARY 1856*

MS Yale University Library.

49 Champs Elysées | 7 Janvier, 1856

Ma chère Madame Viardot

Samedi prochain me conviendra parfaitement.[†8] Je serai charmé de vous revoir, et de faire connaissance avec cette dame illustre,[†9] chez vous. Madame Dickens sera enchantée de m'accompagner.

Croyez-moi toujours, un des admirateurs de votre genie les plus sincères et les plus constants,
CHARLES DICKENS

À Madame Viardot.

To MISS MARY BOYLE,[†1] 8 JANUARY 1856

MS Morgan Library.

Paris, 49 Champs Elysées, | Tuesday Eighth January 1856.

My Dear Mary.

I am afraid you will think me an abandoned ruffian for not having acknowledged your more than welcome warm-hearted letter before now. But, as usual, I have been so occupied, and so glad to get up from my desk and wallow in the mud (at present about 6 feet deep here), that pleasure-correspondence is just the last thing in the world I have had leisure to take to. Business correspondence with all sorts of conditions of men — and women — O my Mary! is one of the Dragons I am perpetually fighting. And the more I throw it, the more it stands upon its hind-legs, rampant, and throws me.

Yes. On that bright cold morning when I left Peterboro',[†2] I felt that the best thing I could do was to say that word that I would do anything in an honest way to avoid saying,[†3] at one blow, and make off. I was so sorry to leave you all! — You can scarcely imagine what a chill and blank I felt on that Monday Evening at Rockingham.[†4] It was so sad to me, and engendered a constraint so melancholy and peculiar, that I doubt if I were ever much more out of sorts in my life. Next morning, when it was light and sparkling out of doors, I felt more at home again. But when I came in from seeing poor dear Watson's grave, Mrs. Watson[†5] asked me to go up in the Gallery — which I had last seen in the days of our merry Play.[†6] We went up and walked into the bay-part he had made and was so fond of, and she looked out of one window and I looked out of another, and for the life of me I could not decide in my own breast whether I should console or distress her by going and taking her hand, and saying something of what was naturally in my mind. So I said nothing, and we came out again, and on the whole perhaps it was best; for I have no doubt we understood each other very well, without speaking a word.

Sheffield[†7] was a tremendous success and an admirable Audience. They made me a present of table-cutlery after the reading was over,[†8] and I came away by the Mail Train within three quarters of an hour — changing my dress and getting on my wrappers, partly in the Fly, partly at the Inn, partly on the Platform. When we got among the Lincolnshire fens, it began to snow. That changed to sleet, that changed to rain, the frost was all gone as we neared London, and the mud was all come. At two or three o'Clock in the morning, I stopped at Peterboro' again, and thought of you all, disconsolately. The Lady in the Refreshment Room was very hard upon me — harder even, than those fair enslavers usually are. She gave me a cup of tea, as if I were a hyæna, and she my cruel keeper with a strong dislike to me. I mingled my tears with it; and had a petrified bun of enormous antiquity, in miserable meekness.[†1]

It is clear to me that climates are gradually assimilating over a great part of the world, and that in the most miserable time of our year there is very little to choose between London and Paris — except that London is not so muddy. I have never seen dirtier or worse weather than we have had here, ever since I returned. In desperation I went outside the Barriers last Sunday on a headlong walk, and came back with top-boots of mud on, and my very eyebrows smeared with mud. Georgina is usually invisible during the walking time of the day. A turned-up nose may be seen in the midst of a heap of splashes — but nothing more.

I am setting to work again, and my horrible restlessness immediately assails me. It belongs to such times. As I was writing the preceding page[†2] it suddenly came into my head that I would get up and go to Calais. I don't know why. The moment I got to Calais, I should want to come back here. The moment I got here, I should want to go somewhere else. But, as my friend The Boots says (see Xmas No. Household Words) "When you come to think what a game you've been up to ever since you was in your own cradle, and what a poor sort of a chap you are, and how its always Yesterday with you, or else Tomorrow, and never To Day — that's where it is."[†3]

My dear Mary, could you favor me with the name and address of the Professor wot taught you writing? For, I want to improve myself. Many a hand have I seen, with Many characteristics of beauty in it — some, loopy; some, dashy; some, large; some, small; some, sloping to the right; some, sloping to the left; some, not sloping at all; but what I like in your hand Mary, is, — its plainness. It is like Print.[†4] Them as runs, may read — just as well as if they stood still. I should have thought it was copperplate, if I hadn't a known you.

They send all sorts of messages from here, and so do I. With my best regards to Bedgy[†5] and pardner[†6] and the blessed babbies. When shall we meet again I wonder, and go somewhere! Ah! —

Believe me ever my dear Mary, yours truly and affectionately

Joe [†7]

(That doesn't look plain)

JOE [†8]

To W. H. WILLS, 9 JANUARY 1856*

MS Huntington Library.

49 Champs Elysées | Wednesday Ninth January 1856

My Dear Wills. I write very hastily, in order that I may send the No.[†1] back by this Post. It has come from the Printer's; and the same Post that brings it, brings no letter from you.

The No. is rather heavy. Look to Langthwaite,[†2] to see that there is no covert Bawdry in it.[†3] The Cattle Stealer[†4] and the Roving Englishman[†5] obviously dont do together. A change is wanted there.[†6]

I send you for the following No. the Whitechapel case.[†7] Ask Albert Smith[†8] to call in at the office (after it is printed) and look at the Proof. It is perfectly accurate, except that the case is under-stated; but I shod. like him to see it, tell him.

You shall have another letter from me tomorrow, wherein I will tell you about Miss Coutts.[†9]

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 10 JANUARY 1856

MS Morgan Library.

49 Champs Elysées, Paris | Thursday Tenth January 1856

My Dear Miss Coutts.

The noble cake arrived in the best condition — was a great surprise — and was received with the loudest acclamations. I think Mrs. Dickens will have already thanked you for it,[†10] but I cannot omit it from my note in reply to yours received yesterday.

I was very much pleased to receive that note, because I know its effect will be a great pleasure to Wills, and because I am certain of his deserving your confidence, and most zealously delicately and worthily acquitting himself of any function you entrust him with.[†11] My experience of him is close and constant, and I cannot too highly commend him. I feel so much interested in hearing the arrangements you would prefer to make, that I put a strong constraint upon myself in not immediately coming to London. However, I shall try to force myself to write a No. of Little Dorrit first (I am just sitting down to one),[†1] and that will hold me prisoner, if I submit, until early in next Month. Whenever I come to town, of course I shall come to you within a few hours.[†2]

Next month reminds me of Walter.[†3] Being fifteen next month, he will be able to go up for his examination next month twelvemonth. I found him so excessively deaf when he came over here, that I felt it necessary to have him examined by the Chief Surgeon (very famous in that way), of the Asylum for the Deaf and Dumb.[†4] He found him to have an Ulcerated Tympanum, of a very aggravated and peculiar kind. He said it was of long standing, must have caused him great pain, and he should have thought must have forced itself on the attention of the Masters of his school.[†5] He has greatly relieved and improved his patient, but says that his sense of hearing will never be quite delicate. To brush up the patient's French, I send him to a great school in the Faubourg St. Honoré,[†6] two hours a day. An Omnibus comes round for the Pupils, every Morning — a private Omnibus belonging to the school — and the Driver blows a frightful whistle on the box, to announce himself.

I have made arrangements with a large bookselling-house in Paris here, for the publication of a French translation of the whole of my books. A volume will appear about once a month, and it will take a year and a half or two years to complete. It will be a pleasant thing to have done in one's lifetime. It is their venture, and they pay me three or four hundred pounds for it besides. The Portrait for which I have been sitting to Ary Scheffer, is just done.[†7] He is a great painter, and of course it has great merit. I doubt if I should know it, myself — but it is always possible I may know other people's faces pretty well, without knowing my own.

I have omitted to say, in its proper place, that I had not communicated to Wills, what passed between you and me.[†8] It did not seem to me quite decided, and I thought there was time enough: knowing that I could at any time tell him that I had had a reason for reserving it, and that he would be quite satisfied with that assurance.

There seem to be great misgivings here, that a pecuniary crisis[†9] must come.

My kind love to Mrs. Browne,[†10] whom I hope to find very much improved when I next see her.

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Faithfully and affectionately Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To SIR EDWIN LANDSEER,[†1] 10 JANUARY 1856

MS University of Texas. Address: L'Angleterre. | Sir Edwin Landseer | &c &c &c | 1 St. John's Wood Road | London.

49 Champs Elysées, Paris | Thursday Tenth January 1856

My Dear Landseer.

I will not fail to report myself, when I next stand within view of the Village Church of St. Paul. My defection from the Blue Posts,[†2] was caused by my having to read at Sheffield; which, I thought when you were here,[†3] I had escaped. I was perpetually on Railroads, during the whole of my short Flight.

The Royal Couple[†4] shall have my best attention. I will try to express you in the plainest manner, and to allow none of the interest of your argument — a most excellent one — to escape.[†5]

What you say of Nos. 1 and 2, is a real delight to me. For, whenever I speak of men born by Nature to be writers if they had not highly distinguished themselves in some other Art (they are mighty few), I always instance you with your remarkable powers of observation and perception. My Lanny, there are some of your friends in Place-Regions[†6] who will look mightily blue when they see No. 3.[†7] Let me whisper that in your ear.

And now I come to the most portentous part of your letter. Seventy five times over, I read this Postcript:[†8]

"What have you done with the Firs."
— what Firs, I asked myself? I have planted none here; I have no place to plant them in; I have purchased no Firs, sold no Firs, described no Firs, made no reference to any Firs whatsoever. I went to bed, partially delirious. In the dead of the night it came into my head that the Postcript must be:

"What have you done with the Tin."[†9]
I done with the Tin? — I? Don't you know that Mr. Jacob Bell[†10] took the business out of my hands? Don't you know, that in consequence of some difficulty respecting the attestation of your signature by the Consul[†11] in your absence, he comes to me at the Household Words Office and says, says he, "I have therefore entrusted the matter to Mr. Redgrave,[†1] who will get it done"? And now to be asked what I have done with the Tin — I the discarded one! — Ha ha ha!

———————

(Here I broke off, put some straws in my hair, some more straws in my shoes, took a wisp in each hand, and went about the room, theatrically mad, repeating for two hours — "What have I — I — done with the Tin!)

Mrs. Dickens and Georgina send their kindest regards. They think you ought to come back and spend the — ha ha ha! — the Tin — my tin — the tin that I — ho ho ho!

Ever Heartily Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Sir Edwin Landseer.

To W. H. WILLS, 10 JANUARY 1856

MS Huntington Library.

49 Champs Elysées, Thursday January tenth 1856

My Dear Wills.

MISS COUTTS.[†2]

I am happy to find from the enclosed letter[†3] (which you are to read, after reading this), that I exercised a wise discretion in saying nothing to you of a conversation I had with Miss Coutts on the day after my arrival in town last time.[†4] She then told me that she was under particular articles of agreement with her Partners in the Bank, never to associate herself with anyone, in any kind of engagement or business, who was connected with any House or Enterprize; and that she had doubted, since her interview with you, whether your position in respect to Household Words might not be construed in the Strand as coming within the line drawn. Observing my invariable custom of taking the perfectly independent course in any such matter, and of justifying no jealousy or suspicion, and of having nothing in common with anybody's intrigues or approaches towards her, I told her that if she had that doubt it was enough — that it was enough for me — that it would be enough for you — and that there was an end of it. She then begged me to explain it to you. But I thought I saw so distinctly that her mind was not made up and that there was a strong probability of her coming to an opposite conclusion, that I resolved to make no explanation to you for some little time. All this I now disclose to you in the strictest confidence — my confidence with her, being involved therein. You will see from her letter that she now contemplates the kind of relation I pointed out to you as desirable.[†5] I have told her in reply, that I expect to be in town again about the 10th. of February, and that I shall then be very happy to pursue, and I hope settle, the subject with her.[†6]

— VIII - 20 —

ME.[†1]

When you write next, will you enclose some stamps for cheques?

Is there any news of Gad's Hill Place?[†2]

Will you send John[†3] to Mr. Morgan, our family apothecary[†4] (John knows his house near Russell Square), with a note asking him to call upon you at the Office at a certain time? When he comes, will you tell him that you have it in charge from me to beg him to charge his attendance medicines &c for Mrs. Hogarth[†5] in her illness to my account, and just to say nothing at all about the matter to her, or her family, or any one else.

SALA.[†1]

came here at 12 o'Clock on Tuesday, by appointment, at his solicitation.[†6] It was the second appointment. On the first occasion he was 20 minutes behind his time (but I really believe by an accident), and of course I had gone out. He sat here two hours, telling me about his reputable friends at Erith,[†7] and so forth. I had no suspicion that he was postponing a request for money and couldn't make up his mind to make it, until he at last stammered out a petition for £5.[†8] I gave it him. Please place that sum to his debit and my credit.[†9] He told me he had sent two articles to you.[†10]

I derived the idea that he was living very queerly here, and not doing himself much good. He knew nothing, I observed, about the pieces at the Theatres; and suggested a strong flavor of the wine shop and the billiard table.[†11] In Galignani, I see a quotation from the Leader, which, unless my memory deceives me (which I don't think it does), is a part of that article he wrote about the Young Man and his Uncle, and called, I think, Parisian Nights Entertainments.[†12] You didn't give it back to him, did you? If you did, it was a mistake. I meant it to stand over, until Collins[†13] should come here.

H. W.[†1]

Forster does not think those two little poems[†14] are otherwise than original. That is to say, he cannot find them anywhere, though he has my general impression about them. Therefore get them back from him and insert them.

— VIII - 21 —

My head is necessarily so full of my own subjects, that I have not thought of that point to any advantage, though I have thought of it at various times. The Police Enquiry[†1] was never done, though I spoke to you about it when you were here. Accounts of the constitution of foreign armies, especially as to their officering, and as to the officer's professional business being his professional pride and study and not a bore, are highly desirable.[†2] An article on the prices of fares on Foreign Railways, on the cost of making them, on the public accommodation and the nature of the carriages &c — contrasting their law with our law, and their management with our management — would be highly desirable.[†3] I suppose Dixon[†4] could do it directly. Would it be possible to strike out a new man, to write popularly about the monstrous absurdity of our laws, and to compare them with the Code Napoleon? Or has Morley knowledge enough in that direction, or could he get it?[†5] It is curious to observe here that Lord Campbell's[†6] acts for making compensation to bodily-injured people, are mere shreds of the Code Napoleon. That business of the Duke of Northumberland[†7] and his tenantry. Couldn't Sydney[†8] do something about it?[†9] It would be worth sending anybody to that recusant Farmer who leads the opposition.[†10] Similarly, the Duke of Argyll, whom the papers drove out of his mind by agreeing to consider him a Phaenomonon, simply because he wasn't a born ass. Is there no Scotch source from whence we can get some information about that Island where he had the notice stuck upon the Church Door that "no tenant under £30 a year, was to be allowed to use spirits, at any marriage, christening, funeral, or other Gathering".[†11] It would be a capital illustration of the monstrous nonsense of a Maine Law.[†12] Life Assurance. Are proposals ever refused — if so, often — because of their suspicious character as engendering notions that the assured life may possibly be taken? I know of Policies being refused to be paid, on the ground that the person was Murdered — and could insert an anecdote or two.[†1] Poisoning. Can't Morley do something about the Sale of Poisons[†2] — I suppose Miss Martineau's doctrine of never never never interfering with trade, is not a Gospel from Heaven in this case.

For a light article, suppose Thomas[†3] went round, for a walk, to a number of the old coaching houses, and were to tell us what they are about now, and how they look. Those great stables down in Lad Lane whence the horses belonging to the Swan with two Necks, used to come up an inclined plane. What are they doing? The Golden Cross, the Belle Sauvage, the Houses in Goswell Street, the Peacock at Islington, what are they all about? How do they bear the little ricketty omnibuses and so forth? What on earth were the coaches made into? What comes into the Yard of the General Post Office now, at 5 o'Clock in the morning? What's up the yard of the Angel, St. Clements? I don't know. What's in the two Saracens' Heads? Any of the old brains at all?[†4]

Mr. Paine[†5] might do this, if Thomas couldn't. But Thomas would do it best.

— Your letter of yesterday has just arrived as I close this. Morley always wants a little screwing up and tightening. It is his habit to write in a loose way.

Certainly not the Burns at that price for White, I undertake to say. The Xmas Bills in the parcel, if you please. Ever Faithfully CD

To LOUIS HACHETTE,[†6] 14 JANUARY 1856

MS Librairie Hachette. Date: misdated 1855 by CD.

49 Champs Elysées | Monday January 14, 1855

Dear Sir

I have read the agreement you have had the kindness to send me, and I return it enclosed.

When I wrote, hastily, the titles of my Romances,[†7] I forgot Oliver Twist, which is distinctly one of them, which has always been so called and which is as widely known both in England and abroad as any book I have written.[†8] Consequently the number of Romances is not nine, but ten.

As to Hard Times, and the Contes de Noel, they are comparatively short as separate books, and they form part of my Works as published in England, and no French translation could possibly be considered complete without them. I therefore suggest to you that they ought to form (as one Volume in all), part of the series of Romances,[†1] and that it would be an absurdity to include them under the separate title of "Nouvelles" — Nor do I see how we can possibly include in our agreement, the titles of all the papers I have written in Household Words. If you call those "Nouvelles" (which I do not), there are many of them; but of opuscules not published in Household Words, there is only one large separate Volume. It is called "Sketches"[†2] (Esquisses), and contains my juvenile productions. I do not think it would repay you to make any translations from that book.

I cannot say what Romances written by me have been translated in France,[†3] and I wish to avoid embarrassing our agreement with any statement on that head. Your original letter containing nothing about it, I apprehend you will agree with me on the point.

It seems to me that there are only three essential points to be stated in the agreement.

First that I am the author of certain works, some of which appeared before the International Treaty; some of which have appeared since the International Treaty.[†4]

Second. That the following are the dates of the publication of the said books, separately. Consequently that so many were published before the treaty, and that so many have been published since.

Third, that I cede to you the sole and exclusive right of making a translation authorized by me, of these books, into the French language, in consideration of so much money — so much for the books published before the Treaty, and so much for the books published since the Treaty — to be paid in monthly payments of a thousand francs each, commencing on the 1st. of April next.

The whole business would thus be settled in one plain agreement. I should greatly prefer this mode of proceeding, and I hope you will do me the favor to adopt it. Nothing is wanting on my part to render it complete, but a list of the dates of publication of all my books. On receiving your answer, I will write for it to my publishers in England, and obtain it within two days. I will then send it to you, you can alter the agreement in accordance with it, and we can discuss and conclude it here on any afternoon you please at 3 o'Clock.†5

With the assurance of my high consideration, I am Dear Sir

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

A Monsieur L. Hachette.

To SIR EDWIN LANDSEER, 14 JANUARY 1856

Extract in N, II, 728, and mention in next; dated Paris, 14 Jan 56; addressed Sir Edwin Landseer.

I have started the case of Mr. Sims, in what I hope is a pleasant little joke, that will amuse our personal friends and the public.†1 Telling him to expect revise of CD's article.

To W. H. WILLS, 14 JANUARY 1856

MS Huntington Library.

49 Champs Elysées, Paris | Monday Fourteenth January 1856

My Dear Wills.

H. W.†2

I enclose the Proof of the Friend of the Lions. Will you have the corrections made at once, and then enclose a revise, by post, to Sir Edwin Landseer, 1 St. Johns Wood Road. I have told him that you will send it to him, and that he need not answer. He is not a ready writer.

I think I have a good idea for a series of Paris papers into which I can infuse a good deal of myself, if Collins comes here (as I think he will) for some time.

If Sala really has not sent those papers,†3 it is a very, very bad business. But he described one of them to me; and I shall still hope that they may turn out to have been on the road while we have been communicating about them.

POOLE.†2

I enclose the document duly signed.†4 It is to go to my account at Coutts's, you observe; and no remittance is to be made to Paris.

BEGGING LETTERS[†2]

I return three (see P.S); retaining Miss Walpole's[†5] late of the St. James's Theatre. She has been a begging-letter-writer, within my knowledge, these fifteen years.

Mrs. Ramo Samee[†6] is a case that there is no doubt about. John has been there once, and can do the needful again. Something like a couple of guineas, I should think would be the sum most useful to her. But if there were any hope (I fear there is not), of doing her any real good with more, I should not object to more.

The other two letters, I really cannot form a judgment upon. But I a little distrust "E. Martell"[†5] who advertized in the Chronicle.[†7] Do you think them worth enquiring into?

— VIII - 25 —

I bear such a long, long train, that I am never rich, and never was, and never shall be. But (Dixon[†1] excepted), I always want to make some approach towards doing my duty, and I could give away £20 in all just now, to alleviate real distress — should be as happy to do that, as I should be the reverse in lazily purchasing false comfort for myself, under the specious name of charity.

MISS COUTTS.[†2]

When you next see her, will you mention, if you remember it, that there was a sum she was to have paid to my account at the Bank, which I had laid out for her (I forget whether it was forty pounds or sixty, but I gave her the Memorandum) which was not entered in my book when I last saw it.[†3] I have forgotten to mention it in writing to her; but I know she will prefer its being recalled to her recollection, in case there should have been any mistake.

I think that's all at present.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

P.S. To save postage, I return no letter, but describe them.

1 — Mrs. Ramo Samee lives at John knows where.

2 — Mrs. or Miss Martell lives at 18 John Street, Holland Street, Blackfriars

3 — Mrs. Mortlock[†4] — poor woman, unable to pay her rent — husband ran away from her four years ago, and left her with two small children — lives at 8 Molyneux Street, Bryanston Square. Says she never wrote a begging letter before.

P.S.2.[†5]

To MONSIEUR GALIMARD,[†6] 15 JANUARY 1856*

MS Fales Collection, New York University Library.

49 Champs Elysées | Mardi Janvier 15, 1856

Monsieur

Permettez-moi de vous exprimer mes profonds regrets que la lettre que vous m'avez fait l'honneur de m'addresser, a eté le sujet d'une absurde meprise.

J'etais en Angleterre lorsque cette lettre arriva ici. Elle fut renvoyée à mon addresse à Londres. En attendant, je revins à Paris, et je ne l'ai que reçue en ce moment.

Je suis desolé Monsieur d'avoir si longtemps paru indifférent a votre si flattante et si interessante invitation. Je vous prie d'agreer bien mes excuses, et l'assurance de ma plus haute consideration.

Je me manquerai pas (j'espere) d'avoir le plaisir de faire visite a votre atelier, ou Samedi ou Dimanche prochain.[†1] Veuillez-bien accepter mes plus sincères remerçiements, et croyez-moi Monsieur

Votre fidele et obligé
CHARLES DICKENS

À Monsieur Galimard

To [GEORGE] HOGARTH,[†2] 15 JANUARY 1856

Extract in Anderson Auction Co. catalogue No. 1027 (April 1914); dated 15 Jan 56; addressed "My Dear Hogarth".

The Post-Delivery being late today, I have only time to empower you in so many words, to convey to Addison and Co.[†3] my full permission to use the title "Little Dorrit" for the song[†4] you desired. Mary[†5] must add it to her Repertoire,[†6]

To W. H. WILLS, [?15-16 JANUARY 1856]

Mention in To Wills, 19 Jan. Date: probably written soon after 14 Jan.

To E. F. PIGOTT,[†7] 17 JANUARY 1856

Text from T. F. Madigan Autograph Bulletin, Jan 1926; MS 3 pp.; dated 17 Jan 56; addressed E. F. Pigott.

My Dear Pigott

I write hastily in answer to your welcome letter (the sight of your handwriting is the next best thing to the sight of your face, though I greatly prefer the latter), being in the midst of work.

I told the boys when they went back to Boulogne,[†8] to ask Mr. Gibson to send me one of his prospectuses. As it has never arrived I suppose they forgot it, bowled it out of their memories with a large cake they took back with them. However, I think I can give you the needful information.[†1]

The address of the school is, "The Reverend Mr. Gibson, Rue d'Oratorie, Haute Ville, Boulogne Sur Mer". Mr. Gibson was formerly an Eton master.[†2] His partner in the school is the Reverend W. Bewsher,[†3] one of the Protestant clergymen of Boulogne. They take none but English boys, but French is the ordinary language of the boys lives, after they have been there three months. I pay for each of my boys £40. a year. This includes their French and Classical education (the latter as at Eton) and the usual branches of knowledge. Dancing, Fencing, German, Music, &c. are extra and duly set forth on a printed paper. It is a perfectly honorable establishment as to extras, and not a sharking one. An entrance fee of three guineas is substituted for the usual plate and fork business. After a certain age — I think 15 — there is a rise in the annual payment. I do not remember how much, but it is not a large one. Two months vacation in the summer; none at Christmas unless the parents wish. I have three boys there, and they are very happy, and I have found nothing to object to.[†4] One of them was ill there, and was thoroughly comfortable. Their manners are well looked after, and their clothes are reported to me by the domestic authorities as being particularly well kept. Mrs. Bewsher represents the domesticity of the establishment (Mr. Gibson is a widower) and there are an English lady housekeeper and an ancient French Griffin housekeeper. All these authorities I know, and their behaviour to the boys, and the behaviour of the boys to them is just what it should be.

We should all be sorry if you don't come to Paris — but I don't expect you. I am expecting to hear from Jollins as to his coming any day; and if he doesn't write soon, I'll put him in an article and avenge you.[†5]

The family in these palatial rooms, is in consternation at the word "Drawn". Drawn Sir???

PLORN[†6]

Mrs. Dickens thanks you very much for the Leader (so do I too, by the by), and begs me to say that it comes regularly. She and her sister and my daughters unite in kind remembrances. The PLORN sends his pity and forgiveness.

Ever, my dear Pigott | Very cordially your friend,

CHARLES DICKENS

To G. A. SALA, [?18 JANUARY 1856]

Mention in To Wills, 19 Jan. Date: shortly before that letter.

To WILKIE COLLINS, 19 JANUARY 1856†

MS Morgan Library.

49 Champs Elysées | Saturday Nineteenth January 1856

My Dear Collins

I had no idea you were so far on with your book,[†1] and heartily congratulate you on being within sight of Land.

It is excessively pleasant to me to get your letter, as it opens a perspective of theatrical and other lounging evenings, and also of articles in Household Words. It will not be the first time that we shall have got on well in Paris,[†2] and I hope it will not be by many a time the last.

I purpose coming over, early in February (as soon, in fact, as I shall have knocked out No. 5 of Little D.), and therefore we can return in a jovial manner together. As soon as I know my day of coming over, I will write to you again, and (as the Merchants — say Charley — would add) "communicate same" to you.

The Lodging, en garçon, shall be duly looked up, and I shall of course make a point of finding it close here. There will be no difficulty in that. I will have concluded the Treaty before starting for London,[†3] and will take it by the month — both because that is the cheapest way, and because desirable places don't let for shorter terms.

I have been sitting to Scheffer to day — conceive this, if you please, with No. 5 upon my soul — 4 hours!! I am so addle-headed and bored, that if you were here I should propose an instantaneous rush to the Trois frères.[†4] Under existing circumstances I have no consolation. I can't go out with White — What the Devil's the good of him —

I think the Portrait[†5] is the most astounding thing ever beheld upon this globe. It has been shrieked over by the United Family, as "O! The very Image!" I went down to the Entresol, the moment I opened it, and submitted it to the Plorn — then engaged, with a half franc musket, in capturing a Malakoff[†6] of chairs. He looked at it very hard, and gave it as his opinion that it was Misser Higg[†7] — We suppose him to have confounded the Colonel with Jollins.

The appalling generality as to the weakness of the Bean Stalk,[†8] certain ominous praise in Galignani had prepared me for. But the terrific truth respecting the Wigs, is a point of detail so crushing that I have not held up my head since.

I met Madame Georges Sand[†1] the other day, at a dinner got up by Madame Viardot for that great purpose.[†2] The human mind cannot conceive any one more astonishingly opposed to all my preconceptions. If I had been shown her in a state of repose and asked what I thought her to be, I should have said "The Queen's Monthly Nurse." Au reste, she has nothing of the Bas bleu[†3] about her, and is very quiet and agreeable.

The way in which mysterious Frenchmen call and want to embrace me, suggests to any one who knows me intimately, such infamous lurking, slinking, getting behind doors, evading, lying — so much mean resort to craven flights, dastard subterfuge, and miserable poltroonery — on my part, that I merely suggest the arrival of cards like this

Forgues[†4] homme de lettres or

Brouse[†5]
Membre de l'Institut

or

Cregibus Patalanternois[†5]
Ecole des Beaux Arts

— every five minutes. Books also arrive with, on the fly leaf,

Jaubaud[†5]
Hommage a l'illustre Romancier d'Angleterre
Charles De Kean.

— and I then write letters of terrific empressement with assurances of all sorts of profound consideration — and never by any chance become visible to the naked eye.

At the Porte St. Martin they are doing the Orestes,[†6] put into French Verse by Alexandre Dumas.[†7] Really one of the absurdest things I ever saw. The scene of the Tomb, with all manner of classical females in black — with excessively unclassical behinds — grouping themselves — on the lid, and on the steps, and on each other, and in every conceivable aspect of obtrusive impossibility[†8] — is just like the window of one of those artists in hair, who address the friends of deceased persons. Tomorrow week, a fête is coming off at the Jardin d'Hîver,[†1] next door but one here, which I must certainly go to, and which I should think can hardly fail to attract all the Lorettes[†2] in Paris. The fête of the company of the Folies Nouvelles![†3] — The ladies of the Company are to keep stalls, and are to sell to Messieurs the Amateurs, Orange water and Lemonade. Paul leGrand[†4] is to promenade among the Company, dresst as Pierrot — Kelm,[†5] the big-faced comic Singer, is to do the like, dressed as "A Russian Cossack". The entertainments are to conclude with "la Polka des Betes feroces, par la Troupe entière des Folies Nouvelles". I wish, without invasion of the rights of British subjects, or risk of war, Doctor Cumming[†6] could be seized by French Troops, brought over, and made to assist.

The appartement has not grown any bigger since you last had the joy of beholding me, and upon my honor and word I live in terror of asking Adelaide Kemble[†7] to dinner (she lives near at hand), lest she should not be able to get in at the dining room door. I think (am not sure) the dining room would hold her, if she could be once pressed in; but I don't see my way to that. Nevertheless we manage our own family dinners very snugly there, and have good ones — as I think you will say every day at half past Five.

I have a notion that we may knock out a series of descriptions for H. W.[†8] without much trouble. It is very difficult to get into the Catacombs, but my name is so well known here that I think I may succeed. I find that the Guillotine can be got set up in private — like Punch's Show. What do you think of that for an article? I find myself underlining words constantly. It is not my nature. It is mere imbecility after the four hours' sitting.

All unite in kindest remembrances to you, your mother,[†1] and brother.[†2]

Ever Cordially

CD.

P.S. Beaucourt's Pipe has been purchased, engraved, and presented. Cost f.65.

To MESSRS. BRADBURY & EVANS,[†3] 19 JANUARY 1856*

MS Bradbury, Agnew & Co. Ltd.

49 Champs Elysées, Paris
Saturday Night, Nineteenth January | 1856

My Dear B and E.

I am making an agreement with a French publishing house here, for a complete French translation of the whole of my books. Before I can complete it, I must have a list of the dates of their publication at home, severally and separately. Will you, at once, direct one of your people to prepare such a list of all the books you have published for me, and to go to Chapman's[†4] and get a similar list from his books? The date of the original publication of Oliver Twist, I shall also want from Bentley's.[†5] It will be well to distinguish (when the book has been a serial one) both the date of the publication of the first No. and the date of the publication of the completed book. The sooner I can have this list, the more acceptable and convenient it will be.

I hope to see you, early next month. I shall bring No. 5 over, please God, as soon as finished. You have no news, I take it for granted, concerning Little Dorrit.[†6]

Great hopes of peace[†7] here. I don't allow myself to be very sanguine thereof as yet though.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS[†8]

To W. H. WILLS, 19 AND 20 JANUARY 1856

MS Huntington Library.

49 Champs Elysées Paris
Saturday Night, Nineteenth January 1856

My Dear Wills.

YOU[†1]

have forgotten that I asked you to send, in the next letter you should write me, some stamps for cheques. I am demented for want of them.

H. W.[†1]

The No.[†2] did not arrive to day. Will come, I suppose, tomorrow.

Albert Smith has sent me a proof of his pamphlet about Hotels.[†3] I, in my turn, have sent it to Sala, and suggested to him that he may write an article on the subject.[†4] I have begged him to send it to me, here; thinking that may expedite him.

I[†1]

report that White's parcel arrived safely.

Also that if B and E want to buy the collection of criticisms,[†5] for themselves, they are heartily welcome. As to me, I don't want it.

MARK[†1]

with his usual depth of diplomacy has made no mention to me of the Boots at the Adelphi.[†6] Though I had a letter from him two days ago, with a deal about the Adelphi in it.

MUD[†1]

at Paris, is 3 feet and 7/8 deep.

Sunday 20th.

The No. having arrived this morning, I have gone over it, and here it is. It wants careful correction (as usual) for pointing, avoidance of confusion in meaning, and making clear. I never saw such confused writers as we seem to vaccinate.

The Cricket Club paper[†7] is desperately poor; but I have no Taboo to interpose.

BUCKSTONE.[†8]

Does he ask whether I can recommend them to a chairman, or what they are to do for a chairman?[†9] Have I anything to answer on that head?

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To JOHN FORSTER [20 JANUARY 1856]

Extracts in F, VII, v, 617*n*; VIII, ii, 639; VII, v, 619; VII, v, 608; VII, v, 613; VII, v, 613-14; VIII, ii, 636*n*. Date: first two extracts 20 Jan, according to Forster; third extract clearly same letter, and four others probably so (see below).

It is difficult to picture the change made in this place by the removal of the paving stones (too ready for barricades) and macadamisation. It suits neither the climate nor the soil. We are again in a sea of mud. One cannot cross the road of the Champs Elysées here, without being half over one's boots.

Again I am beset by my former notions of a book whereof the whole story shall be on the top of the Great St. Bernard.[†1] As I accept and reject ideas for Little Dorrit, it perpetually comes back to me. Two or three years hence, perhaps you'll find me living with the Monks and the Dogs a whole winter — among the blinding snows that fall about that monastery. I have a serious idea that I shall do it, if I live.

Imagine me if you please with No. 5 on my head and hands, sitting to Scheffer yesterday four hours! At this stage of a story, no one can conceive how it distresses me.

At the Porte St. Martin he had attended a performance of Orestes versified by Alexandre Dumas. Nothing have I ever seen so weighty and so ridiculous. If I had not already learnt to tremble at the sight of classic drapery on the human form, I should have plumbed the utmost depths of terrified boredom in this achievement. The chorus is not preserved otherwise than that bits of it are taken out for characters to speak.[†2] It is really so bad as to be almost good. Some of the Frenchified classical anguish struck me as so unspeakably ridiculous that it puts me on the broad grin as I write.

He had dined at the house of Madame Viardot.[†3] I suppose it to be impossible to imagine anybody more unlike my preconceptions than the illustrious Sand. Just the kind of woman in appearance whom you might suppose to be the Queen's monthly nurse. Chubby, matronly, swarthy, black-eyed.[†4] Nothing of the blue-stocking about her, except a little final way of settling all your opinions with hers, which I take to have been acquired in the country where she lives, and in the domination of a small circle.[†5] A singularly ordinary woman in appearance and manner. The dinner was very good and remarkably unpretending. Ourselves, Madame and her son,[†1] the Scheffers,[†2] the Sartorises, and some Lady somebody (from the Crimea last) who wore a species of paletot and smoked. The Viardots have a house away in the new part of Paris,[†3] which looks exactly as if they had moved into it last week and were going away next. Notwithstanding which, they have lived in it eight years. The opera the very last thing on earth you would associate with the family. Piano not even opened.[†4] Her husband[†5] is an extremely good fellow, and she is as natural as it is possible to be.

Emile de Girardin[†6] gave a banquet in his honour.[†7] No man unacquainted with my determination never to embellish or fancify such accounts, could believe in the description I shall let off when we meet, of dining at Emile Girardin's — of the three gorgeous drawing-rooms with ten thousand wax candles in golden sconces, terminating in a dining-room of unprecedented magnificence with two enormous transparent plate-glass doors in it, looking (across an antechamber full of clean plates) straight into the kitchen, with the cooks in their white paper caps dishing the dinner. From his seat in the midst of the table, the host (like a Giant in a Fairy story) beholds the kitchen, and the snow-white tables, and the profound order and silence there prevailing. Forth from the plate-glass doors issues the Banquet — the most wonderful feast ever tasted by mortal: at the present price of Truffles, that article alone costing (for eight people) at least five pounds. On the table are ground glass jugs of peculiar construction, laden with the finest growth of Champagne and the coolest ice. With the third course is issued Port Wine (previously unheard of in a good state on this continent), which would fetch two guineas a bottle at any sale. The dinner done, Oriental flowers in vases of golden cobweb are placed upon the board. With the ice is issued Brandy; buried for 100 years. To that succeeds Coffee, brought by the brother of one of the convives from the remotest East, in exchange for an equal quantity of Californian gold dust. The company being returned to the drawing-room — tables roll in by unseen agency, laden with Cigarettes from the Hareem of the Sultan, and with cool drinks in which the flavour of the Lemon arrived yesterday from Algeria, struggles voluptuously with the delicate Orange arrived this morning from Lisbon. That period past, and the guests reposing on Divans worked with many-coloured blossoms, big table rolls in, heavy with massive furniture of silver, and breathing incense in the form of a little present of Tea direct from China — table and all, I believe; but cannot swear to it, and am resolved to be prosaic. All this time the host perpetually repeats "Ce petit dîner-ci n'est que pour faire la connaissance de Monsieur Dickens; il ne compte pas; ce n'est rien." And even now I have forgotten to set down half of it — in particular the item of a far larger plum pudding than ever was seen in England at Christmas time, served with a celestial sauce in colour like the orange blossom, and in substance like the blossom powdered and bathed in dew, and called in the carte (carte in a gold frame like a little fish-slice to be handed about) "Hommage à l'illustre écrivain d'Angleterre." That illustrious man staggered out at the last drawing-room door, speechless with wonder, finally; and even at that moment his host, holding to his lips a chalice set with precious stones and containing nectar distilled from the air that blew over the fields of beans in bloom for fifteen summers, remarked "Le diner que nous avons eu, mon cher, n'est rien — il ne compte pas — il a été tout-à-fait en famille — il faut dîner (en vérité, dîner) bientôt. Au plaisir! Au revoir! Au dîner!"

He wrote on one occasion[†1] of a youth who had fallen into a father's weaknesses without the possibility of having himself observed them for imitation. It suggests the strangest consideration as to which of our own failings we are really responsible, and as to which of them we cannot quite reasonably hold ourselves to be so. What A. evidently derived from his father cannot in his case be derived from association and observation, but must be in the very principles of his individuality as a living creature.

To SIR JOSEPH OLLIFFE,[†2] 20 JANUARY 1856

MS Mr Louis J. Heizmann.

49 Champs Elysées | Sunday Twentieth January 1856

My Dear Olliffe

I am vexed to reply that we can't. I have asked a friend here this evening. And as he is a Poet,[†3] I mustn't put him off — or I would.

With kindest regards to Lady Olliffe[†4]

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MESSRS HACHETTE ET CIE, 25 JANUARY 1856

Extract in N, II, 735; dated 25 Jan 56.

You are mistaken in supposing me to have forgotten Master Humphrey's Clock. It is merely another name for the Old Curiosity Shop[†1] and Barnaby Rudge;[†2] which name has long been abandoned, and was never used for those books after their completion.

To FRANK STONE,[†3] 27 JANUARY 1856*

MS Benoliel Collection.

49 Champs Elysées, Paris
Sunday Twenty Seventh January 1856

My Dear Middlesex.[†4]

Your friend is misinformed — but in his misinformation there is just that grain of truth which hangs to the roots of these wonderful Bean Stalks. It became necessary, when I was last in town, that besides the usual Medical attendant[†5] of the Home,[†6] we should have another — able to look in constantly — with a particular object. I mentioned it to Miss Coutts, and she immediately, then and there, decided whom to have. There never, within my knowledge, was any delay, doubt, or discussion about it.

I hoped to have seen you when I was last in town — but I was perpetually on Railroads. There never was such a grinding and snorting week as I had. I hope however to be in town again within ten days or so, and then to Sparkle on you.

I am touched by your affectionate reference to my Little Dorrit. She is an immense success. There is a dash in No. 3 at the great system of abuse under which we live, that will flutter the Doves in the House of Commons Lobby, I flatter myself![†7]

I hope you saw The Boots in the Xmas No. of Household Words?[†8]

Having just laid down the Pen after a pretty long spell at my little friend,[†9] I am in a state of imbecility, and am going out for a rush into the air

With kindest regards from all here to all in Russell House, Ever My Dear Pumpion[†10]

Affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [?27 JANUARY 1856]

Extract in F, VII, v, 617*n* and 607. Date: both probably from his usual weekend letter.

Three days ago the weather changed here in an hour, and we have had bright weather and hard frost ever since. All the mud disappeared with marvellous rapidity, and the sky became Italian. Taking advantage of such a happy change, I started off yesterday morning (for exercise and meditation) on a scheme I have taken into my head, to walk round the walls of Paris. It is a very odd walk, and will make a good description.[†1] Yesterday I turned to the right when I got outside the Barrière de l'Étoile, walked round the wall till I came to the river, and then entered Paris beyond the site of the Bastille. To-day I mean to turn to the left when I get outside the Barrière, and see what becomes of that.

He wrote of the Théâtre Francais whimsically as a kind of tomb, where you went, as the Eastern people did in stories, to think of your unsuccessful loves and dead relations. There is a dreary classicality at that establishment calculated to freeze the marrow. Between ourselves, even one's best friends there are at times very aggravating. One tires of seeing a man, through any number of acts, remembering everything by patting his forehead with the flat of his hand, jerking out sentences by shaking himself, and piling them up in pyramids over his head with his right forefinger. And they have a generic small comedy-piece, where you see two sofas and three little tables, to which a man enters with his hat on, to talk to another man — and in respect of which you know exactly when he will get up from one sofa to sit on the other, and take his hat off one table to put it upon the other — which strikes one quite as ludicrously as a good farce. . . .[†2] There seems to be a good piece at the Vaudeville, on the idea of the Town and Country Mouse.[†3] It is too respectable and inoffensive for me to-night, but I hope to see it before I leave.... I have a horrible idea of making friends with Franconi, and sauntering when I am at work into their sawdust green-room.[†4]

To W. H. WILLS, 28 JANUARY 1856

MS Huntington Library.

49 Champs Elysées | Monday Twenty Eighth January 1856

My Dear Wills

H. W.

This is a very shy No.[†1] and White is a very bad first paper.[†2] I suppose there is nothing else?[†3]

My corrections (which are pretty numerous) are made in pencil, but I hope you will find them legible. The Rector Abroad, most relentlessly and ruthlessly Taboo.

In your Programme of the No. something called "The Russian Budget"[†4] is in that place. Anyway, the Rector is out of the question.

GAD'S HILL.[†5]

I must come to town sooner than I intended, because February is the short month, and I want to get back to my work. I think I shall come on Monday or Tuesday in next week. Will you tell Ouvry[†6] therefore that I shall be glad to complete the purchase at the end of next week,[†7] if he will make the arrangements accordingly.

MISS COUTTS[†5]

I will write to, as soon as I can positively fix my day.

NO MORE[†5]

at present.

From Yours ever faithfully

CD.

To JAMES BALLANTINE,[†8] 29 JANUARY 1856

Extract in Merwin Sales catalogue No. 599 (1915); MS 1 p.; dated Paris, 29 Jan 56; addressed James Ballantine.

Expressing admiration and hearty sympathy with his verses.[†9]

To WILKIE COLLINS, 30 JANUARY 1856

MS Morgan Library.

49 Champs Elysées | Thirtieth January 1856. Wednesday

My Dear Collins

I hope you are out of the wood, and holloaing.[†1]

I purpose coming to town, either on Monday or Tuesday night, and returning (if convenient to you), on the following Sunday or Monday. I will write to you as soon as I arrive, and arrange for our devoting an early evening (I should like Wednesday next) to letting our united observation with extended view survey mankind from China to Peru.[†2] On second thoughts, shall we appoint Wednesday now? Unless I hear from you to the contrary, I will expect you at Household Words, at 5 that day.

Ever Faithfully (working hard)

CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [30 JANUARY 1856]

Extracts in F, VII, v, 615-16*n*; F, VII, v, 619*n* and F, VIII, i, 624. Date: 30 Jan, according to Forster.

It was cold this afternoon, as bright as Italy, and these Elysian Fields crowded with carriages, riders, and foot passengers. All the fountains were playing, all the Heavens shining. Just as I went out at 4 o'clock, several regiments that had passed out at the Barrière in the morning to exercise in the country, came marching back, in the straggling French manner, which is far more picturesque and real than anything you can imagine in that way. Alternately great storms of drums played, and then the most delicious and skilful bands, "Trovatore"[†3] music, "Barber of Seville"[†4] music, all sorts of music with well-marked melody and time. All bloused Paris (led by the Inimitable, and a poor cripple who works himself up and down all day in a big-wheeled car) went at quick march down the avenue, in a sort of hilarious dance. If the colours with the golden eagle on the top had only been unfurled, we should have followed them anywhere, in any cause — much as the children follow Punches in the better cause of Comedy. Napoleon on the top of the column seemed up to the whole thing, I thought.

I have arranged with the French bookselling house to receive, by monthly payments of £40, the sum of £440 for the right to translate all my books: that is, what they call my Romances, and what I call my Stories. This does not include the Christmas Books, American Notes, Pictures from Italy, or the Sketches; but they are to have the right to translate them for extra payments if they choose.[†5] In consideration of this venture as to the unprotected property, I cede them the right of translating all future Romances at a thousand francs (£40) each. Considering that I get so much for what is otherwise worth nothing, and get my books before so clever and important a people, I think this is not a bad move?

I have a grim pleasure upon me to-night in thinking that the Circumlocution Office sees the light, and in wondering what effect it will make.[†1] But my head really stings with the visions of the book, and I am going, as we French say, to disembarrass[†2] it by plunging out into some of the strange places I glide into of nights in these latitudes.

To [FRAU ALBERTI],[†3] 31 JANUARY 1856

MS Messrs Maggs Bros.

49 Champs Elysées, Paris
Thursday Thirty First January 1856

My Dear and highly esteemed Correspondent.

My having been away from here, much occupied with Little Dorrit, has prevented my receiving and replying to your letter as soon as I could have wished. I believe I have never received a more delightful letter in my life, or one that has awakened within me a deeper sense of the loftiest responsibilities and triumphs of a writer. For the earnestness of your feeling towards me, I can never feel sufficiently proud or sufficiently grateful; and for the love you bear to my favorite book[†4] (for your sympathy has truly divined that it is my favorite), I must love you — if I may — in return.

I gratefully accept the proposal you make to me.[†5] To be associated in that way with the first production of so fervent a head and heart as yours must be, is a high grace and privilege. Whatever my deserts and claims to it may be, at least no man could possibly prize it more.

I write briefly, in order not to lose another Post. But I cannot refrain from adding that you do your English great injustice, if you suppose it to be anything less than a natural, eloquent, and charmingly unaffected expression of your feelings.

Dear Madam Ever believe me | Your faithful and affectionate

CHARLES DICKENS

As I cannot clearly read your adopted name, I have cut it from your letter to place on this envelope, that there may be no mistake.

February

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 3 FEBRUARY 1856*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Greenlands | Henley on Thames.

49 Champs Elysées, Paris | Sunday Third February 1856

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I purpose arriving in London tomorrow (Monday) night, and remaining through the week. Will you let me know where I shall find you, and what is the best time for seeing you — I mean, the best time in the day. I have a world of things to do, but of course the foremost among them all is to have a few minutes' glimpse of you.

We can then discuss Mr. Wills.[†1]

If you will write to me at the Household Words office it will be best, as I shall be constantly there.

With love to Mrs. Brown

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 5 FEBRUARY 1856*

MS Private (destroyed in Prestwick air-crash, Dec 1954). Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Meadfoot House | Hesketh Crescent | Torquay | Devon.

HOUSEHOLD WORDS OFFICE,
Tuesday Fifth February 1856

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I will come to Stratton Street on Friday, between 2 and 4.

You will be glad, I know, to hear that Charley was presented with Five Pounds yesterday "for his punctuality" at Barings.[†2]

With my kind love to Mrs. Brown

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

To PETER CUNNINGHAM,[†1] 5 FEBRUARY 1856

Text from N, II, 739.

H. W. Office | Tuesday Fifth February 1856

My Dear Peter,

I return the curious book,[†2] with many thanks.

Come and dine here next Thursday, my birthday, at half past five sharp, or expect the Vengeance of

Yours Ever

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To MRS CHARLES DICKENS, 5 FEBRUARY 1856

MS British Library. Address (envelope in Kitton's Dickens Ana, I, 147): La France | À Madame Charles Dickens | 49 Avenue des Champs Elysées | Paris. PM 6 Feb 56.

Tavistock House — I mean H. W. Office | Fifth February 1856

My Dearest Catherine. I have been so busy all day (commencing with having my tooth out), that this must be the shortest of notes or it will be too late for the Post.

I had a very agreeable journey — with two Glasgow men. We became great friends, dined together at Dover, and parted at London Bridge. The passage was very fine, though there was by no means an absence of motion; moreover, we had to go aboard in small boats. I felt so perfectly well, however, that I did not even take my Laudanum. They charged at the Dover Custom House, eight shillings duty on the Godfather-present.[†3]

Charley looks well, and was, I am most happy to say, presented at Barings only yesterday, with Five Pounds "for his punctuality." I have not seen your mother. I saw your father this morning, and he was looking wonderfully well.

Anne[†4] intends (John tells me) to come and wait on my Birthday.

Old Stone I saw for a few moments this morning. He had an ancient air upon him. The front court has also an ancient and deserted air;[†5] our absence very perceptibly changing the whole place.

Best love to Georgy. And to Mamey, Katey, Walter, Harry, and the Noble Plorn. I found the faithful Mark in attendance at London Bridge; and he and his send all manner of Loves. I have not yet had leisure to see Forster.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To MESSRS WILLIAMS & CLAPHAM,[†1] 5 FEBRUARY 1856*

MS Berg Collection.

Household Words Office
16 Wellington Street North, Strand | Fifth February 1856

Mr. Charles Dickens sends his compliments to Messrs. Williams and Clapham, and begs them to get the little French present sent with this, engraved with the Inscription over-leaf. Mr. Dickens would like to have it on the centre of the plate, and round the cup. In the place left for the purpose on the handle of the spoon, he wishes to have the child's initials C. D. T. Will Messrs. Williams and Clapham be so good as to have it done at once, and to send the case here.

Charles Dickens Theodore Yates
From his Godfather[†2]
Charles Dickens.

To MRS WINTER,[†3] 5 FEBRUARY 1856

MS Comtesse de Suzannet.

49 Champs Elysées, Paris[†4] | Fifth February 1856

My Dear Mrs. Winter

It comes into my head that I have never acknowledged the little letter you wrote me on receipt of my books,[†5] and which was accompanied by another pleasant letter from your other half.[†6] Not that either required an answer, but that you may as well know that I received them, I send this short note.

My own writing so absorbs my time and attention, and my business correspondence is so very large, that the letters I write for pleasure are miraculously few. That they are also laudably short, let this sheet of paper witness.

With my regard to Mr. Winter and my love to little Ella,[†7]

Believe me always | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS CHAMBERS,[†1] 6 FEBRUARY 1856

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Wednesday Sixth February | 1856.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his Compliments to Mrs. Chambers, and begs to say that if the girl in question be brought by her mother, or some authorized person, tomorrow (Thursday) at One, to the Household Words office 16 Wellington Street North, Strand, Mr. Dickens will be happy to consider her case with a view to its fitness for admission into Miss Coutts's Home.

To C. W. DILKE,[†2] 6 FEBRUARY 1856*

MS Churchill College, Cambridge.

Household Words Office | Sixth February 1856

My Dear Mr. Dilke

I should like to speak with you on the subject of the Literary Fund.[†3] I will come over to your house for the purpose and with the hope of finding you at home, tomorrow (Thursday) at One.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Wentworth Dilke Esquire.

To DR JOHN EPPS,[†4] 6 FEBRUARY 1856

Mention in Noel Conway catalogue, ?1893; MS 1 p.; dated HW Office, 6 Feb 56; addressed Dr Epps.

Thanking Dr Epps for some books.[†5]

To DOUGLAS JERROLD,[†6] 6 FEBRUARY 1856[†7]

Text from W. Blanchard Jerrold, The Best of all Good Company. A Day with Charles Dickens, 1872, p. 39, with corrections from MDGH, I, 427.

HOUSEHOLD WORDS OFFICE,
Sixth February 1856.

My dear Jerrold.

Buckstone has been with me to-day in a state of demi-semi-distraction, by reason of Macready's[†1] dreading his asthma so much as to excuse himself (of necessity I know) from taking the chair for the fund[†2] on the occasion of their next dinner.[†3] I have promised to back Buckstone's entreaty to you to take it, and although I know that you have an objection which you once communicated to me, I still hold (as I did then) that it is a reason for and not against. Pray reconsider the point. Your position in connection with dramatic literature has always suggested to me[†4] that there would be a great fitness and grace in your appearing in this post — am convinced that the public would regard it in that light — and I particularly ask you to reflect that we never can do battle with the lords[†5] if we will not bestir[†6] ourselves to go into places which they long monopolised. Now, pray discuss this matter with yourself once more. If you can come to a favourable conclusion, I shall be really delighted, and will of course come from Paris[†7] to be by you; if you cannot come to a favourable conclusion, I shall be really sorry, though I of course most readily defer to your right to regard such a matter from your own point of view.

Ever faithfully yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Douglas Jerrold, Esq.

To DANIEL MACLISE,[†8] 6 FEBRUARY 1856

Text from facsimile in Charles Hamilton catalogue No. 92 (Nov 1975).

[†a]Household Words Office | Sixth February, 1845

My Dear Mac[†a]

Äry Scheffer has been painting my Portrait in Paris, and means to send it to the Exhibition. He seems to me to be contemplating too broad a frame, and I have promised him (being over here for a few days) to ascertain the Academy's regulations in that regard.[†9] Will you kindly tell me what width of frame, the laws of the Medes allow?

Ever affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

To THE REV. EDWARD TAGART,[†1] 6 FEBRUARY 1856

MS Mr Arthur Rogers.

Household Words Office | Wednesday Sixth February 1856

My Dear Mr. Tagart

We are passing the winter in Paris, and as I only make periodical rushes at this capital, I am but now in the receipt of your kind note. Let me heartily assure you that I reciprocate all its friendly feelings and expressions, with great cordiality.

I am afraid I may not be able to help the author of the book you have sent me; simply because I have no sort of association with, or control over, any Journal but this. It is only in exceptional cases that the plan of Household Words admits of books being made the subject of articles in its pages. They are never reviewed; and are described only when their objects have some direct present bearing on social advancement or convenience. If I find, however, that anything can be done in this instance (and I cannot determine that point without reading the book), it shall be done.

I left them all well in Paris. If they knew me to be writing to you they would all join me, I am sure, in kindest regard to Mrs. Tagart[†2] and all your house.

Believe me | Always Faithfully Yours

To BENJAMIN WEBSTER, 6 FEBRUARY 1856*

MS Free Library of Philadephia.

Household Words Office | Wednesday Sixth February 1856

My Dear Webster

I am sorry to say that I leave town on Sunday morning. If I had not made arrangements which involve the convenience of a friend who goes back with me,[†3] I would certainly stay to have the pleasure of accepting your invitation.

On Friday evening I am coming to the Theatre[†4] with Lemon. We can then, I hope, find an opportunity of talking over the Dulwich matter.[†5] I think your movement (so far as I know it from him) to be an admirable one, based on common sense and justice, and undertaken in the becoming spirit of an artist who cares for his order.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Benjamin Webster Esquire.

To MRS CHARLES DICKENS, 7 FEBRUARY 1856

MS British Library. Address: La France | À Madame Charles Dickens | 49 Avenue des champs Elysées | Paris.

Household Words Office | Thursday February Seventh 1856

My Dearest Catherine.

You will be glad, I know, to hear (and therefore I write to tell you) that Charley has been presented with another Five Pounds, and has had his salary raised Ten Pounds a year.

I have been perplexed by the non-arrival of any letter from Georgy, who was to have written to tell me what arrangement she had made for Collins. This failure rendered it impossible for me to tell him last night what had been done for him in the way of quarters,[†1] and made me look rather foolish. I write in the middle of the day (the middle of my birthday by the bye), and even yesterday's foreign post is in, and yet I have no letter. I cannot conceive what she has been about.

You will have seen in the Times perhaps, that Scott Russell[†2] is a bankrupt.[†3] A hundred and eighty thousand pounds is stated to be the little amount of the debts of himself and Co.[†4]

The weather is as vile here as need be. Chokingly warm, very wet, and miserably dark. Last night a violent wind blew from the West, besides. The streets are hideous to behold, and the ugliness of London is quite astonishing.

We purpose crossing to Boulogne on Sunday, if the weather should be reasonable, and coming on to Paris by the Train which leaves Boulogne at Mid Day on Monday. Let French[†5] be at the station to receive us.

A certain Miss Holliday, or Haliday,[†6] or some such name, sent to Tavistock House yesterday for Miss Barrow's[†7] address. I knew nothing about it, of course. After that the same Unknown wrote a note addressed to you, again asking to have it. She might as well have asked Me for a map of the Moon.

Love to Georgy, and to Mamey, Katey, Walter, Harry, and the noble Plorn.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 7 FEBRUARY 1856

MS Dickens House.

Household Words | Seventh February 1856
(Just before dinner)

My Dear Georgy.

Your letters both together, have just come to hand. I have but a moment to reply. Take the Pavilion.[†1] I have no doubt of its being the best place.

I will write you a real letter tomorrow.

Ever Affectionately

CD.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 8 FEBRUARY 1856

MS Dickens House.

Household Words | Friday Eighth February, 1856

My Dear Georgy. I must write this at Railroad speed, for I have been at it all day, and have numbers of letters to cram into the next halfhour. I began the morning in the City for the Theatrical Fund — went on to Shepherd's Bush — came back to leave cards for Mr. Baring[†2] and Mr. Bates[†3] — ran across Piccadilly to Stratton Street — stayed there an hour — and shot off here. I have been in four cabs today at a cost of Thirteen Shillings. Am going to dine with Mark and Webster at 1/2 past 4, and finish the evening at the Adelphi.

The dinner was very successful. Charley was in great force, and floored Peter Cunningham and the Audit Office on a question about some bill transaction with Barings. The other guests were B, He,[†4] Shirley Brooks,[†5] Forster (in bad spirits I think) — and that's all. The dinner, admirable. I never had a better. All the wine, I sent down from Tavistock House. Anne waited, and looked well and happy — very much brighter and better altogether. It gave me great pleasure to see her so improved.[†6] Just before dinner I got all the letters from home. They could not have arrived more opportunely.

The Godfather Present[†7] looks charming now it is engraved, and John is just now going off to take it to Mrs. Yates. Tomorrow Wills and I are going to Gad's Hill. It will occupy the whole day, and will just leave me time to get home to dress for dinner. I arranged with Miss Coutts concerning Wills this morning. He is to have Two Hundred a year — which I think very handsome.

I saw your mother yesterday for the first time. She looks rather better than usual, I think.

And that's about all I have to say, except that I have rescued Mark from a state of the deepest depression, and that the first No. of Little Dorrit has gone to 40,000, and the others are fast following.

My best love to Catherine, and to Mamey and Katey, and Walter, and Harry, and the Noble Plorn. I am grieved to hear about his black eye, and fear that I shall find it in the green and purple state on my return.

Ever affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

To W. H. WILLS, 8 FEBRUARY 1856

MS Huntington Library.

H. W. Office | Friday Eighth February 1856

My Dear Wills. I think you may like to know the result of my talk with Miss Coutts, without waiting until tomorrow.

She asked me if I had thought of any precise acknowledgement for the services you rendered her, as she felt it very difficult to suggest an amount herself — much greater than she would have felt, if she had been able to place everything in your hands.[†1] I said that whatever I might have thought, it seemed right that she should form her own opinion on the subject and suggest her own proposition. She then said, as there would be some little expences incurred now and then in going about, and as she wished her offer to include everything, what did I think of £200 a year? I replied that I thought it was handsome, and that I would communicate it to you.

I hope you approve? You will have a friend for life, who is worth having.

Ever Faithfully
CD.

To MRS WILLS,[†2] 8 FEBRUARY 1856

MS Huntington Library.

H. W. Office | Friday Eighth February 1856

My Dear Mrs. Wills.

Pray accept my hearty thanks (and a halfpenny, or we shall quarrel)[†3] for your welcome remembrance of me yesterday. It gave me the greatest pleasure, and the pretty knife shall be my constant companion.

Always My Dear Mrs. Wills | Very faithfully Yours

CD.

Mrs. Wills

To MRS EDMUND YATES, 8 FEBRUARY 1856*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Friday Eighth February 1856.

My Dear Mrs. Yates.

Will you kindly present to my little Man, with my affectionate regard, the very extraordinarily-shaped box which accompanies this note?

And will you absolve me from any suspicion of neglecting my sponsorial duties in leaving you by 10 tomorrow night?[†1] For I have to go elsewhere, after that time.

Very faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Edmund Yates.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 9 FEBRUARY 1856

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | 1 Stratton Street.

Household Words Office | Saturday Ninth February 1856

My Dear Miss Coutts.

First, as to Teignmouth,[†2] Wills knows it very well. The soil is a red loam, and not naturally damp. But the town itself stands in a rent or gash made among great hills, by the mouth of the river,[†3] and is certainly moist and low — decidedly not advisable for your purpose I should say.[†4] On the other hand, if the house should not be in Teignmouth or in the valley of the river, but should be on the bold hills which rise about it, then the objection to it would be removed. The whole question turns upon the exact position of the house. If it be on the hills, good. If it be in the valley, bad. If it be in neither the one place nor the other, rather dubious.

Secondly, as to Wills himself. I have communicated to him the result of our conversation yesterday, and he is "gratified beyond expression". He says he considers it most generous, and is extremely anxious that I should express his sense of it to you in the most earnest and emphatic words I can employ.

Thirdly, as to Gad's Hill Place — which is the name of my house. If you mean in your kind note, the refusal of it now, I am sorry to say that it is not now available. As I told Mrs. Brown yesterday, the Rector[†5] lives in it, and has lived in it for some years; and the object Wills and I have in view in going down there directly, is to ask him how and when it will suit his convenience to come out — as of course I wish to treat him with all handsome consideration. It is not now a furnished house, but my object is, as soon as I shall have got rid of the tenant, to make it clean and pretty in the papering and painting way, and then to furnish it in the most comfortable and cosey manner, and let it by the month whenever I can. Whenever I cannot, I shall use it for myself and make it a change for Charley from Saturday to Monday. When all this is done, I shall have a delight in taking you down to see it which I shall not try here to express; and if you should like it so well as to think of ever occupying it as a little easy change, I shall be far more attached to the spot than ever. I think you will be very much pleased with it. It is old-fashioned, plain, and comfortable. On the summit of Gad's Hill, with a noble prospect at the side and behind, looking down into the Valley of the Medway. Lord Darnley's[†1] Park of Cobham (a beautiful place with a noble walk through a wood) is close by it; and Rochester is within a mile or two. It is only an hour and a quarter from London by the Railway. To crown all, the sign of the Sir John Falstaff is over the way, and I used to look at it as a wonderful Mansion (which God knows it is not), when I was a very odd little child with the first faint shadows of all my books, in my head — I suppose.

Mr. Austin surveyed it for me, and was greatly struck by it. Large sums of money have been expended on it (for such a small place) at various times, and he found everything about the garden and so forth, in the best order. There is a very pretty garden, and a Shrubbery on the other side of the high road, at which the house looks. When I exhibit it to you with all my contrivances accomplished — of course some of them will be wonderfully ingenious — I will tell you what I paid for it.

With love to Mrs. Brown, who is looking immensely better.

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Yours most faithfully and affecy.

CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [9 FEBRUARY 1856]

Extract in F, VIII, iii, 651. Date: 9 Feb 56, according to Forster.

His first estimate for Gads Hill would have to be increased threefold. The changes absolutely necessary will take a thousand pounds; which sum I am always resolving to squeeze out of this, grind out of that, and wring out of the other; this, that, and the other generally all three declining to come up to the scratch for the purpose.

To JOHN LEECH,[†2] 9 FEBRUARY 1856

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: John Leech Esquire | 32 Brunswick Square.

Household Words | Saturday Ninth February 1856

My Dear Leech.

My short stay, and my having been obliged to plan out each day before I left Paris, have not only prevented my having the pleasure (it would have been a great one to me), of dining with you, but even of getting round to Brunswick Square. Little Dorrits, Household Wordseses, Theatrical Funds, Shepherds Bushes, and miscellaneous affairs (taking me this very day to Rochester among other places) have so used me up and harried me about, that I have not had an hour's freedom. But I am coming to town again next month; and, if you'll have me, I will write from Paris before I leave, and propoge myself for a chop.

With kindest regards to Mrs. Leech[†1] and the Darlings,[†2]

Ever Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

John Leech Esquire.

To GEORGE MOORE,[†3] 11 FEBRUARY 1856†

MS Benoliel Collection.

49 Champs Elysées, Paris | Monday Eleventh February 1856

My Dear Sir

My friend Mr. Mark Lemon is so kind as to take charge of this letter for you, in behalf of a lady in whom we are both greatly interested. Her name is Horne, her husband is in Australia,[†4] she has a remarkably good appearance, a good manner, great perseverance and strength of character, no fine notions of any kind whatsoever, and seeks to live by her own industry.[†5] With this view she taught herself some two or three years since, a new art of preparing glass in imitation of marble.[†6] She has worked at it until this time; but it does not seem to thrive, and she has written to me entreating my interest and remembrance.

Casting about in my head to whom I could represent her case, with any hope of obtaining her employment, it came into my thoughts that you might have in your great house[†7] some means of suitably placing such a person and turning her qualities to account. I know her thoroughly well, and am most willing to become security for her in any responsible trust. I know her reliability and fidelity to be unimpeachable. She is barely thirty, though she looks a little older.

If you should have the means of helping me in this matter I should feel very heartily obliged; and if there should be anything more in reference to Mrs. Horne that you may desire to know, Mr. Lemon is as well acquainted with her history as I am, and will freely communicate it.

My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

George Moore Esquire.

To WILKIE COLLINS, 12 FEBRUARY 1856

MS Morgan Library.

49 Champs Elysées, Paris | Tuesday Twelfth February 1856

My Dear Collins. I am delighted to receive your letter — which is just come to hand — and heartily congratulate you upon it. I have no doubt you will soon appear.[†1] I would recommend you, unless the Boulogne Boat serves to a marvel, to come by the Calais route — the day Mail. Because in the winter there are no special trains on that Boulogne line in France, and waiting at Boulogne is a bore. The Pavilion[†2] is all ready, and is a wonder. Upon my word it is the snuggest oddity I ever saw; the lookout from it, the most wonderful in the world.[†3]

[†a]I told them at home here that you had a touch of your "old complaint", and had turned back to consult your Doctor.[†4] Thought it best, in case of any contretemps hereafter, with your mother on one hand and my people on the other.[†a]

We[†5] had a pleasant trip, and the best dinner at the Bang[†6] I ever sat down to.

So, looking out for your next letter "advising self" of your coming, Ever Faithfully
CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 12 FEBRUARY 1856

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street | Piccadilly | London.

49 Avenue des Champs Elysées, Paris
Tuesday Twelfth February 1856

My Dear Miss Coutts.

My Rector,[†7] having lived in the house six and twenty years, has an ardent desire to stay there until Lady Day next year. I have of course acceded to his wish. In the meantime he purposes building a house for himself somewhere near, as there are very few indeed in that neighbourhood but Farms, and Farm-laborers' cottages. The only house thereabouts (except mine) that would suit you as a Retreat, is a very good one called the Hermitage. But it is in the occupation of the Owner and is not to be let.[†8]

It has occurred to me that Tunbridge Wells might be a good place for your purpose. It is extremely healthy, very beautiful, very accessible, and has many pleasant houses that are let furnished by the month. Anywhere upon or near the Heath is a very fine situation, on light sand. If you should think well of it, Wills would be delighted to go down and look about for you. Or there is an excellent Hotel — The Calvary[†1] — where you might be as private and as comfortable, almost, as in any hired house. If you don't think well of this, anywhere about Croydon, Dorking, or Guildford, is good, and particularly healthy.

Of course you will let me know where you go. I shall have to be in town about the Tenth of next month.

With my love to Mrs. Brown

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Yours most Faithfully and affecy.

CD.

Mrs. Brown will immediately receive from Wills, the result of the London University enquiries.[†2]

I forgot to speak to you about Mrs. Kenney,[†3] 192 Faubourg St. Honoré. Perhaps it might be painful to her if I were to write to her, as she has not written to me. But the plain truth is, that I have no means of employing translators, and that I never do.

To F. M. EVANS, 12 FEBRUARY 1856

MS Rosenbach Foundation.

49 Champs Elysées, Paris | Tuesday Twelfth February 1856

My Dear Evans

I hope you had as good a passage home, as I had journey here. I was at dinner at a quarter past seven, comfortably. The weather changed some twenty miles out of Boulogne, and was bright and pleasant. The whole house I found in a jovial condition.

It occurs to me to say to you (and therefore I write so soon), that if it should be convenient to you, even to increase upon the £200 monthly payment,[†4] it will suit me perfectly well. The circulation being so large, I do not care how much you pay in every month, or by how large[†5] a sum you so diminish the half-yearly balance. It will be as useful to me in six large portions and a moderate lump, as in six small portions and a great lump. All that I care for, is, that it should always be the same appointed sum. I address this to you, as you are the currency man and as you spoke to me on the subject; but of course I refer the point to B and E. Let me know how you propose to proceed.

And be so good as to make up the last halfyear's account[†6] with as little delay as you can, because, having this purchase to make[†7] I am glad just now of all the money

I can get. I know that the usual time has not yet arrived, but you may perhaps be able to anticipate it a little, knowing my desire.

With regard and kind remembrance to B

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

F. M. Evans Esquire

To LORD GRANVILLE,[†1] 12 FEBRUARY 1856

MS Mr D. Atherton.

49 Champs Elysées, Paris | Tuesday Twelfth February 1856

Mr. Charles Dickens regrets that his absence from England prevents his having the honor of accepting Lord Granville's invitation for Wednesday the Thirteenth. It has only reached him to-day, and he hopes Lord Granville will therefore do him the favor to excuse his delay in acknowledging it.

To MADAME JAQUET,[†2] 12 FEBRUARY 1856

MS Berg Collection.

49 Avenue des Champs Elysées
Tuesday Twelfth February 1856

My Dear Madame Jaquet.

If I thought it possible that you could make a mistake, I should humbly submit to you that you achieve that miracle in supposing that it is my friends in Paris whom I treat with terrible rigor, and not myself. For, I assure you, I live under the delusion that when I am writing a book I deny myself a great deal that would be very pleasant to me and observe a seclusion that is not very consistent with my natural inclinations, simply because I have found by my experience that this habit is necessary to my Art, and that I cannot do my best without an entire devotion to it. I do not mean to say that on the evening when I hoped to have come to you, I was writing, or that I write half a dozen evenings in a year. But when I have been thus engaged all day, I cannot relieve my mind or prepare myself for the morrow, unless I am perfectly free from promises and engagements, and can wander about in my own queer way. At such times, hot rooms and society, worry me more than you can easily imagine — nothing but the open air will set me right.

This is the plain truth. I very rarely trouble any one by stating it; but I state it to you, because your kind note is so frank and friendly, and I felt so much sincere pleasure in seeing you again, and I always think so affectionately of the old days in Genoa and of your good father, that I am earnestly anxious you should understand me. If I could have gone anywhere on the night of your soirée, it would have been to you; but my mind was so pre-occupied with my day's employment, that I could go nowhere with comfort but on a ten miles' ramble. From that, I came home quite rested and happy.

I should have written to you sooner, but for my having started for London very soon afterwards, and having only returned to Paris last night. Believe that my terrible rigor is one of the conditions on which I hold my success, and that I am with true regard

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Madame Jaquet.

To W. H. WILLS, 12 FEBRUARY 1856

MS Huntington Library.

49 Avenue des Champs Elysées, Paris
Tuesday Twelfth February 1856

My Dear Wills.

I arrived here in the most brilliant and pleasant manner, to dinner yesterday.

H. W.[†1]

It occurs to me that when you meet to return Forster's bills and note the end of that transaction, the future disposal of that share had better be arranged. What I propose to do with it, is, to divide it between you and me, equally, so long as we both live and you are the Sub-Editor of the Journal. That in the event of your death or your ceasing to be Sub Editor, the whole of it shall revert to me, in trust to bestow it or part of it upon any other Sub-Editor as I may think best and most to the advantage of the property. And that in the event of my death, the whole of it shall revert to the other proprietors, in trust to be similarly employed at their discretion.[†2]

MY BIRTHDAY.[†1]

Stanfield called at the office on Saturday as I was dressing to go out to dinner, and had not the least idea that I was in town. The note of invitation he received did not mention that I was coming, and had no signature to it. He addressed his answer to you at random, and called on Saturday to ask you if he had done right.

Faithfully Ever
CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [13 FEBRUARY 1856]

Extract in F, VIII, iii, 650. Date: 13 Feb, according to Forster.

I was better pleased with Gadshill Place last Saturday, on going down there, even than I had prepared myself to be. The country, against every disadvantage of season, is beautiful; and the house is so old fashioned, cheerful, and comfortable, that it is really pleasant to look at. The good old Rector now there, has lived in it six and twenty years, so I have not the heart to turn him out. He is to remain till Lady-Day next year, when I shall go in, please God; make my alterations; furnish the house; and keep it for myself that summer.

To W. H. WILLS, 15 FEBRUARY 1856

MS Huntington Library.

49 Champs Elysées | Friday February Fifteenth 1856

My Dear Wills.

I enclose you the promised article for H. W.[†1]

I have just received your letter, and am truly pleased to know that you are gratified by what I have done respecting the share. I hoped you would be; and in this, and in all other little ways in which I can ever testify my affection for you and my sense of the value of your friendship and support, I merely gratify myself by doing what you more than merit.

In haste | Ever Faithfully

CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [17 FEBRUARY 1856]

Extracts in F, VII, iv, 597*n*, V, 609 and 611. Date: first extract 17 Feb, according to Forster; second and third extracts almost certainly same letter.

The picture he had given Forster of Napoleon[†2] had changed drearily in less than a year and a half. I suppose mortal man out of bed never looked so ill and worn as the Emperor does just now. He passed close by me on horseback, as I was coming in at the door on Friday, and I never saw so haggard a face. Some English saluted him, and he lifted his hand to his hat as slowly, painfully, and laboriously, as if his arm were made of lead. I think he must be in pain.[†3]

An uncommonly droll piece with an original comic idea in it has been in course of representation here. It is called Les Cheveux de ma Femme.[†4] A man who is dotingly fond of his wife, and who wishes to know whether she loved anybody else before they were married, cuts off a lock of her hair by stealth, and takes it to a great mesmeriser, who submits it to a clairvoyante who never was wrong. It is discovered that the owner of this hair has been up to the most frightful dissipations, insomuch that the clairvoyante can't mention half of them. The distracted husband goes home to reproach his wife, and she then reveals that she wears a wig, and takes it off.

Scribe[†1] had entertained him frequently; his dinners were very handsome and pleasant; as were all his belongings — a charming place in Paris, a fine estate in the country, capital carriage, handsome pair of horses, all made, as he says, by his pen. A guest at the first evening[†2] was Auber,[†3] a stolid little elderly man, rather petulant in manner, who told him he had once lived at Stoke Noonton[†4] to study English, but had forgotten it all. Louis Philippe had invited him to meet the Queen of England, and when L. P.

presented him, the Queen said, "We are such old acquaintances through M. Auber's works, that an introduction is quite unnecessary."

To W. H. WILLS, 17 FEBRUARY 1856

MS Huntington Library.

49 Champs Elysées, Paris
Seventeenth February 1856. Sunday

My Dear Wills.

H. W.[†5]

I will go over the proof[†6] tonight, and write you what I think we had best do in respect of Collins's story,[†7] tomorrow. At the same time I will return my Proof.

Pray take care that they always strike out that infernal dash which I myself have taken out five hundred times, between the heading In so many chapters, and the numbering of the chapter. I am vexed to see it in the last No. after all.

C. D.[†5]

My agreement with the French booksellers for the complete translation, binds me to let them have a copy of everything I have written. Will you have, in the course of a week, a complete collection made of my papers in H. W.? (It would be no bad thing, while our people are about it to have it made in Duplicate, so that we may keep one at the office and regularly keep it up to the time); and when it is finished will you label it "From Mr. Charles Dickens's contributions to Household Words", and send it to B and E, to go into a parcel they are making for the said French booksellers? You will of course except all composite articles, and all such pièces de circonstance as the opening address[†1] and the reference to the almanack.[†2]

And will you ascertain from Augustus,[†3] what Wine of mine has come to hand? There is some very precious champagne wandering about, somewhere.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To W. H. WILLS, 17 FEBRUARY 1856

MS Huntington Library.

49 Champs Elysées
Sunday Night, Seventeenth February 1856

My Dear Wills.

On the principle that one XX number[†4] is better than two X ones always, I would so re-arrange this No. as to begin with Why,[†5] and get Collins (who, so far, is admirable) into the opening.[†6] I have taken some things out of Sala,[†7] where he is wrong. He has not been in Italy, I feel sure.

The Poem,[†8] very good. But it is a remarkable thing, especially when that contrast is to be presented between the flourishing and the wasted Babylon, that the thriving City has not a single living figure in it![†9] It is a very curious example of the incomplete way in which some writers seem to see their pictures.

Looking out of Window,[†10] is so ridiculously printed in the huddling up of the Sentences, that I really cannot understand it. There appears to be a good idea in it, but I have become hopelessly confused by it and have given it up in despair.

The same remark applies to Far East,[†11] which, in one place especially, I can't at all understand. Pray look to the Proof and the Copy.

Reverting to my article, Why,[†12] I am not sure but that in a former article called A Few Conventionalities, I noticed the theatrical way of opening a letter.[†13] Will you refer back? And if I did notice it, take that passage out.

I wish you would write, for 311, a temperate but strong article about the cost of administering the Literary Fund.[†1] It will be the No. before the Annual Meeting.[†2] I would recite the object and intention of the Institution, recite the monstrous expenditure, and plainly call upon the Subscribers to look into the thing at the next Annual Meeting on such a Day. If you are too busy to do it get Morley to do it; but let us have it in that No.[†3] I will go carefully over it.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

[†a]To Mr. Snow,[†4] say it was a mistake of Mr. Carlyle's. We have made no investment in the Mitre office,[†5] and I know nothing about it.[†a]

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 19 FEBRUARY 1856

MS Morgan Library.

49 Champs Elysées | Tuesday Nineteenth February 1856

My Dear Miss Coutts.

Walter was born on 8th. of February 1841. His name (a mild one) is Walter Landor. Birthday, eighth of February eighteen hundred and forty one. Name, Walter Landor.[†6] No vegetable designation, no flower, no beast, no terrors of any description.[†7]

I don't know Dr. Sandwith.[†8]

Your note finds me settling myself to Little Dorrit again,[†9] and in the usual wretchedness of such settlement — which is unsettlement. Prowling about the rooms, sitting down, getting up, stirring the fire, looking out of window, tearing my hair, sitting down to write, writing nothing, writing something and tearing it up, going out, coming in, a Monster to my family, a dread Phenomonon to myself, &c &c &c

With love to Mrs. Brown

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully & affec Yours

CD.

To GABRIEL LEGOUVÉ,[†1] 20 FEBRUARY 1856*

MS M. Jean Paladilhe.

49 Champs Elysées | Mercredi Fevrier 20, 1856

Mon cher Monsieur

Je vous prie de veuiller bien accepter mes plus sincères et vives remerçiements pour votre aimable petite lettre, et votre noble Tragedie. J'ai lu Medée avec les plus profondes emotions, et je vous felicite d'avance, sur la triomphe qu'elle va achever.[†2]

Croyez-moi, cher Monsieur | Votre fidele et obligé

CHARLES DICKENS

À Monsieur Legouvé

To MESSRS. BRADBURY & EVANS, 24 FEBRUARY 1856

Text from N, II, 747.

49 Champs Elysées, Paris | Twenty-Fourth February 1856

My Dear B and E

I have only time before the going out of the Post, to acknowledge your note and the accounts,[†3] and to say that all your arrangements are most convenient and satisfactory.

But, looking over the balance-sheet of the accounts, there seems to me to be a mistake in it, which will unnecessarily embarrass the present half-year. I take the profits on the 2 first Nos. to extend in this account, only to the last Day of 1855.[†4] Then I think you should not charge to my debit in this account, £100 paid on the 1st. of January 1856. Would it not be best to alter the balance and the balance sheet, so as to put that hundred pounds into the half-year to which it belongs?

If you think so, we can make the alteration in these figures when I come to town next month and bring the accounts with me.

Always Faithfully Yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To WILKIE COLLINS, 24 FEBRUARY 1856

MS Morgan Library.

49 Champs Elysées Paris
Sunday Twenty Fourth February 1856

My Dear Collins

The Post still coming in to day without any intelligence from you, I am getting quite uneasy. From day to day I have hoped to hear of your recovery, and have forborne to write, lest I should unintentionally make the time seem longer to you. But I am now so very anxious to know how you are, that I cannot hold my hand any longer. So pray let me know by return. And if you should unhappily be too unwell to write yourself, pray get your brother to represent you.

I cannot tell you how unfortunate I feel this to be, or how disconsolately I look at the uninhabited Pavilion[†1]

To HENRY DAWKINS,[†2] 24 FEBRUARY 1856

Catalogue mention in N, II, 748; MS 1 p.; dated 49 Champs Elysées, Paris, 24 Feb 56: addressed Henry Dawkins.

Regarding repairs at Tavistock House.

To JOHN FORSTER, [24 FEBRUARY 1856]

Extracts in F, VII, V, 620*n* and 611-12. Date: first extract 24 Feb, according to Forster; second extract just after 23 Feb (see below).

About the proposed edition by Hachette. It is rather appropriate that the French translation edition will pay my rent for the whole year, and travelling charges to boot.

Lamartine[†3] had expressed a strong desire to meet him again as "un des grands amis de son imagination." He continues to be precisely as we formerly knew him,[†4] both in appearance and manner; highly prepossessing, and with a sort of calm passion about him, very taking indeed. We talked of Defoe and Richardson, and of that wonderful genius for the minutest details in a narrative, which has given them so much fame in France.[†1] I found him frank and unaffected, and full of curious knowledge of the French common people. He informed the company at dinner that he had rarely met a foreigner who spoke French so easily as your inimitable correspondent, whereat your correspondent blushed modestly, and almost immediately afterwards so nearly choked himself with the bone of a fowl (which is still in his throat), that he sat in torture for ten minutes with a strong apprehension that he was going to make the good Pichot[†2] famous by dying like the little Hunchback[†3] at his table. Scribe and his wife were of the party, but had to go away at the ice-time because it was the first representation at the Opéra Comique of a new opera by Auber and himself, of which very great expectations have been formed.[†4] It was very curious to see him — the author of 400 pieces[†5] — getting nervous as the time approached, and pulling out his watch every minute. At last he dashed out as if he were going into what a friend of mine calls a plunge-bath. Whereat she rose and followed. She is the most extraordinary woman I ever beheld; for her eldest son must be thirty, and she has the figure of five-and-twenty, and is strikingly handsome. So graceful too, that her manner of rising, curtseying, laughing, and going out after him, was pleasanter than the pleasantest thing I have ever seen done on the stage.

To W. H. WILLS, 24 FEBRUARY 1856

MS Huntington Library.

49 Champs Elysées
Sunday Night Twenty Fourth February 1856 | after Post time

My Dear Wills.

I am perfectly confounded and amazed by receiving no letter from you concurrently with the proofs[†6] from B and E. Cannot conceive what on earth is the matter.

The Roving Englishman — Taboo. It has all been done before, and better done. There is not the least pretence or excuse for thus doing it again.[†7]

I have made an addition to the Royal Literary Fund[†8] — but it is generally loose, and wants screwing up. Be tremendously particular as to all the facts. And try and make every sentence as plain as Cobbett.[†9]

Many other marks I have made in the other articles.

Ever Faithfully
CD.

Let me see a Revise of the Fund article, before the No. is worked.

To FERDINAND BEAUCOURT-MUTUEL, [FEBRUARY 1856]

Mention in To Beard, 21 June 56. Date: Feb 56, according to CD.

About their visit to the villa in June.

March

To GABRIEL LEGOUVÉ, 2 MARCH 1856*

MS M. Jean Paladilhe.

49 Champs Elysées | Dimanche Mars 2, 1856

Mon cher Monsieur

Je vous assure que j'ai ete desolé à cause de n'avoir pu assister a votre reception par l'Institute, Jeudi passé. Mais, en sortant de la porte de mon appartement, je reçus, par la poste, une lettre d'Angleterre contenant des "Proof-Sheets" qu'il me fallut corriger et retourner, absolument le meme jour. Ils m'occuperent jusqu'a la derniere moment; et le billet que vous avez-eu la bonté de m'envoyer, reste toujours sur ma table.

Permettez-moi de vous feliciter, avec la cordialité la plus sincère, sur votre si brillante reception. J'en ai lu dans les journaux avec le plus grand plaisir, et on me dit que votre addresse a charmée tout le monde et a ete accablée des louanges.

Votre tout devoué
CHARLES DICKENS

To W. H. WILLS, 2 MARCH 1856

MS Huntington Library.

49 Champs Elysées, Paris | Sunday March Second 1856

My Dear Wills. I have been so occupied with Little Dorrit, that I could not return you the Revise of No. 311,[†1] in time for it to be of any use. I am sorry to see the Cold Water cure classed in Morley's article among the humbugs of the time.[†2] Firstly, because I believe that in reason there is a good deal in it. Secondly, because you were at one of the great Malvern Doctors'[†3] and my wife was at another's.[†4] Perhaps this may have occurred to you and you may have taken it out.[†5]

The Gad's Hill purchase seems to me to be a sort of amateur Chancery Suit which will never be settled.

Will you tell John that Walter is coming home on Tuesday, and that I shall be glad if he will meet him at the London Bridge station on Tuesday night at 10.

If Johnson[†1] has not yet acquitted himself of that selection-job,[†2] the parcel (tell Bradbury and Evans) must come at once without it. The french booksellers are impatient for it, and worry me like sharp Dogs. Pray tell B and E to get it dispatched at once.

[†a]You will see many yet stranger demonstrations in Stratton Street, of that same kind. She would do anything, conceivable or inconceivable, to make herself interesting to Miss Coutts, by keeping herself forcibly in Miss Coutts's attention. You must always be prepared for any eccentric turn that such a propensity may take, and must never shew (because that would pain Miss Coutts) that you wonder at it. Mrs. Brown has many excellent qualities; but, partly from her original character and partly from a long and strange disorder, has got to a morbid exaggeration of this propensity which nothing will ever subdue now. To be perfectly self possessed with her, quietly firm, calmly sensible, and thoroughly easy and natural, is to find the best way out of it.[†a†3]

Ever Faithfully

CD.

P.S. Your letter received, since I wrote the foregoing.

You remember my telling you sometime ago, that I greatly mistrusted Augustus's[†4] affairs.

To the Gentleman who wants to play the Lighthouse,[†5] please say that I am in Paris — that I have referred his request to Mr. Collins the Author of the piece — and that Mr. Collins, with every disposition to oblige him, would desire to keep the MS in his desk where it now lies.

[†b]Polish Priest sends his benediction.[†b]

To JOHN FORSTER, [?2 MARCH 1856]

Extracts in F, VII, v, 612 and 619, and XI, iii, 839. Date: first extract "a week later" than 23 Feb, according to Forster; second extract when "March had come"; third extract probably same letter.

He writes of Auber's opera as most charming. Delightful music, an excellent story, immense stage tact, capital scenic arrangements, and the most delightful little prima donna ever seen or heard, in the person of Marie Cabel.[†1] It is called Manon Lescaut — from the old romance[†2] — and is charming throughout. She sings a laughing song in it which is received with madness, and which is the only real laughing song that ever was written. Auber told me that when it was first rehearsed, it made a great effect upon the orchestra; and that he could not have had a better compliment upon its freshness than the musical director paid him, in coming and clapping him on the shoulder with "Bravo, jeune homme! Cela promet bien!"[†3]

Scheffer finished yesterday; and Collins, who has a good eye for pictures, says that there is no man living who could do the painting about the eyes. As a work of art I see in it spirit combined with perfect ease, and yet I don't see myself. And so I come to the conclusion that I never do see myself. I shall be very curious to know the effect of it upon you.

Lady Franklin[†4] sent me the whole of that Richardson[†5] memoir;[†6] and I think Richardson's manly friendship, and love of Franklin, one of the noblest things I ever knew in my life.[†7] It makes one's heart beat high, with a sort of sacred joy.

To MESSRS BRADBURY & EVANS, 3 MARCH 1856*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

49 Champs Elysées, Paris | Monday Third March 1856

My Dear B and E.[†8]

If you will send up to Tavistock House on Wednesday Morning, your Messenger will find the greater part of No. 6 of Little Dorrit,[†1] under cover for you. I will bring the last Chapter with me when I come — which I purpose doing, this day week. Walter is my avant-courier tomorrow.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To WILKIE COLLINS, 3 MARCH 1856

MS Morgan Library.

Paris, Third March 1856.

The Humble Petition
of
Charles Dickens

A Distressed Foreigner

Sheweth

That your Petitioner has not been able to write one word to day, or to fashion forth the dimmest shade of the faintest Ghost of an idea.

That your Petitioner is therefore desirous of being taken out, and is not at all particular where.

That your Petitioner, being imbecile, says no more, But Will Ever &c — (whatever that may be).

To CLARKSON STANFIELD, 3 MARCH 1856*

MS National Maritime Museum.

49 Avenue des Champs Elysées, Paris
Monday Third March 1856

My Dear Stanny.

I am coming to town on the evening of this day week, and write beforehand (as we arranged), to let you know on what evening I shall be at liberty to dine somewhere with you and to see a Play.

Will you choose between Thursday the 13th. Friday the 14th. and Saturday the 15th. To meet, either day, at the Household Words Office at 5? Will you write me one line when you have chosen, here, that I may map out my time and engagements accordingly?

And will you let me know at the same time, whether you can come down to Gravesend and dine with me at Wate's Hotel on Sunday the 16th. Forster, and my boy Charley, and (I hope) Mark, are going down. We shall be very quiet and there will be no one else.

Catherine and Georgina send their loves to Mrs. Stanfield,[†1] Mrs. George,[†2] and all your house. I hope I may add mine.

To CHARLES KNIGHT,[†3] 6 MARCH 1856

Extract in Alice M. Clowes, Charles Knight, A Sketch by His Grand-daughter, 1892, p. 134.

49, Champs Elysées, Paris. | Thursday, Sixth March, 1856.

My dear Knight,

Of course I shall be with you on Saturday.[†4] Please God, at six o'clock, with his usual punctuality and his invariably pleasant face, the remarkable man will appear.[†5]

My ladies will be here and must drink your health here; but they send all sorts of regards and kindest wishes to all your house, in which I cordially join.[†6]

To CLARKSON STANFIELD, 6 MARCH 1856

MS Dickens House.

49 Champs Elysées, Paris | Thursday Sixth March 1856

My Dear Stanny.

Your note received with joy this morning. Let us say then, Thursday, Household Words, 5. Pray get yourself in to condition for Palm Sunday. The Railroad carriages are warm, and the ride short.

O think of Covent Garden being burnt down,[†7] and you and I not there!

Ever affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

Kindest loves from all to Mrs. Stanfield and all your house. I hear that you have painted the most wonderful picture ever seen.[†8]

To W. H. WILLS, 6 MARCH 1856

MS Huntington Library.

49 Champs Elysées, Paris | Thursday March Sixth 1856

My Dear Wills.

C. G. T.[†1]

I am deeply grieved that such a Fire should have come off in my absence. Am inconsolable.

I[†2]

think I shall come to town in the night of Sunday; being so abominably used up as to the Calais Railway, that I feel desirous to be relieved from the contemplation of that enterprise by daylight. After brightening myself up in my usual beaming manner I will come down to the office; and — as I shall be dining out every day that week — if we dine together in peace at the Office that day (meaning Monday) it will perhaps be the usefullest thing we can do. Come and dine with me at Gravesend on the following Sunday. Forster and Charley are coming down to take a respectful look at the outside of the Giant Property.

MARK[†2]

I understand, is helping the country to that noble representative, Mr. Herbert Ingram.[†3] In case he should return before I come, will you tell him of the change in my arrangements (he supposes me to be due at London Bridge on Monday Night, which was my original intention), and that I am his, at Household Words at 8 on Monday Evening.

JOHN[†2]

perhaps will come to the Station to receive me, at about 8 on Monday Morning. I purpose being there, unless it should blow Great Guns.

GAD'S HILL[†2]

I suppose stands where it did?[†4]

LITTLE DORRIT[†2]

has completed her sixth; and that wonderful man the writer thereof is in that state of weary excitement which is a part of him at such periods.

Will you tear off, put in an envelope, address to my boot-makers Hall & Co.[†5] Quadrant Regent Street, & send at once by John (he knows the place), t'other side.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 11 MARCH 1856

MS Dickens House.

H. W. Office | Tuesday Eleventh March 1856

My Dear Georgy

†a Madame de Bourgon†1 overlooks a point, which I think you may have overlooked too. She credits herself with the money to be paid by the Daughter Family,†2 but she does not remember that if the family do not suit us, we shall leave when our time is up in April. Therefore I will give her for the one month 300 francs, and not a farthing more if she won't take that.†a

I have been in bed half the day with my cold: which is excessively violent. Consequently have to write in a great hurry, to save the Post.

Tell Catherine that I have the most prodigious, overwhelming, crushing, astounding, blinding, deafening, pulverizing, scarifying secret of which Forster is the hero, imaginable by the united efforts of the whole British population.†3 It is a thing of that kind, that after I knew it (from himself) this morning, I lay down flat, as if an Engine and Tender had fallen upon me.

Love to Catherine (not a word of Forster before any one else), and to Mamey, Katey, Harry, and the Noble Plorn. Tell Collins with my kind regard that Forster has just pronounced to me that "Collins is a decidedly clever fellow." I hope he is a better fellow in health, too.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 14 MARCH 1856

MS Dickens House.

Household Words | Friday Fourteenth March 1856

My Dear Georgy.

†b You did "quite right"†4 in rejecting that horrible old woman's conditions, and in closing the bargain upon absolute terms.†b I am amazed to hear of the Snow (I don't know why, but it excited John this morning beyond measure); though we have had the same East wind here, and the cold and my cold have both been intense.

Yesterday evening, Webster, Mark, Stanny, and I, went to the Olympic, where the Wigans†5 ranged us in a row in a gorgeous and immense Private box, and where we saw Still Waters run deep.†6 I laughed (in a conspicuous corner) to that extent at Emery†1 when he received the dinner-company,†2 that the people were more amused by me than by the Piece. I don't think I ever saw anything meant to be funny, that struck me as so extraordinarily droll. I couldn't get over it at all. After the piece we went round, by Wigan's invitation, to drink with him. It being positively impossible to get Stanny off the stage, we stood in the Wing during the burlesque.[†3] Mrs. Wigan [†a]was great — amazing — in her Court-Circular conversation.[†a] Seemed really glad, however, to see her old Manager;[†4] and the company overwhelmed him with embraces. They had nearly all been at the Meeting in the morning.[†5]

I have seen Charley only twice since I came to London, having regularly been in bed until mid-day. To my amazement my eye fell upon him at the Adelphi yesterday.[†6]

This day I have paid the purchase money for Gad's Hill Place. After drawing the cheque, I turned round to give it to Wills (£1790), and said: "Now isn't it an extraordinary thing — Look at the Day — Friday![†7] I have been nearly drawing it half a dozen times when the lawyers have not been ready, and here it comes round upon a Friday as a matter of course."

Kiss the noble Plorn a dozen times for me, and tell him I drank his health yesterday and wished him many happy returns of the day.[†8] Also that I hope he will not have broken all his toys before I come back.

Ever affectionately

CD.

[†a]This is the day of the Evans banquet — and I wish it was not, with all my heart.[†a]

To MISS MARY BOYLE, 15 MARCH 1856*

MS Morgan Library.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS,
Saturday Fifteenth March 1856

My Dear Mary

— A short reply, but better than none.

I cannot at present subscribe to the Hospital[†9] because of other heavy claims. A promise to a dead sister[†1] has been put before me this morning in an urgent form that I cannot resist. And it takes precedence of twenty public subscriptions at a blow.

However, I will not forget it.

I have a cold so unspeakably vile and oppressive, that I have been lying in bed half the day since I came to town, to get myself up for the other half. All night I snort and wheeze to that extent that, waking suddenly, I don't know which is the Inimitable Writer, and which the Engine that is always out of temper at the Nor' Western Station over the way.[†2] A very large Mill, with a stupid old Brute of a horse in it, is always at work, making what appears to me to be either a cannon ball or a dutch cheese, in the centre of my head. Likewise, I weep continually in the most imbecile manner. Then it is my dear that I wish you were with me, occupying Tavistock House and forgetting mankind.

I have promised to go to the Theatrical Fund Dinner on Monday,[†3] and am only waiting to get that over before returning to Paris. I think we shall be in town during the greater part of May, before we go to our queer little country place near Boulogne. Then I really shall hope to see you my Pet, and go to the Theatre with you, and have a good long talk.

My love to Bedgey and pardner.[†4] And when you write to Mrs. Watson pray tell her that I wish she knew how much I think of her, and what a constant interest she is to me.

Ever My Dear Mary | Your loving

Joe.

To HERBERT FRY,[†5] 15 MARCH 1856

MS National Portrait Gallery.

Tavistock House | Saturday Fifteenth March 1856

Dr. Sir.

I regret that you should have been at the trouble of seeking me in vain, owing to my being quite unacquainted with the nature of your business — to my being in town from Paris for a very few days — and to my having, in addition to many engagements, a cold so severe that it has been necessary for me, since my arrival, to keep my bed half the day, to prepare for the other half.

Nor can I have the pleasure of complying with your request.[†6] I have but just now finished sitting to a distinguished French painter, and have thoroughly made up my mind to sit no more.

Your faithful Servant

CHARLES DICKENS

Herbert Fry Esquire.

To SIR EDWIN LANDSEER, 15 MARCH 1856*

MS Exeter University Library.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS,
Saturday Fifteenth March 1856

My Dear Landseer

Will you meet me here (observe the address — opposite Vestris's Theatre[†1] that once was), not later than halfpast 5 on Monday afternoon. I hope Stanny will go with us.

And bring the ticket in your pocket that I now enclose you.[†2]

[†a]"Shall we have Paxton?[†3] Or will he bore us? Is there anybody I shall ask? Well then, we'll have Paxton. And he shall tell us how he hires his men."[†a]

Ever Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

To HENRY BURNETT,[†4] 17 MARCH 1856*

MS Robert H. Taylor Collection, Princeton University.

Tavistock House | Monday Seventeenth March 1856

My Dear Burnett.

I have read your account of your domestic sufferings, with great sympathy.

You will receive a letter by tomorrow's post, telling you at what bank at Manchester you will find remitted to you from Coutts's Bank in London, One Hundred and Five pounds.[†5] That is to say, the one hundred you ask me for, and five as a little present to Charley[†6] from his uncle and godfather.

I will not refuse the pictures, as you wish me to take them. But I will and do refuse the Engravings, because I hope the possession of them will be a pleasure to you. Pray keep them therefore.

I write a short note, being overwhelmed with business before going back to Paris.

But I trust that your sister will recover,[†1] and that the shadow of this great distress will soon pass away from your fireside.

With love to the boy, Believe me | Ever Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

Henry Burnett Esquire

To THE REV. JOSEPH HINDLE, 17 MARCH 1856*

MS W. A. Foyle.

Tavistock House, London | Seventeenth March 1856.

Dear Sir

As I have now completed the purchase of Gad's Hill place, I beg to notify the fact to you, and to ask the favor of your paying the rent in future as it becomes due, to W. H. Wills Esquire Household Words Office 16 Wellington Street North, Strand.

I have the honor to be | Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

The Reverend Joseph Hindle.

To THE REV. CHARLES HOWES,[†2] 19 MARCH 1856

Extract from owner's MS; dated Paris, Wednesday 19 Mar 56; addressed the Rev. Charles Howes.

Thanking him for his letter and explaining that he did not suppose all the inhabitants of Dulwich College to have the name of the founder.[†3]

To W. C. MACREADY, 22 MARCH 1856

MS Yale University Library.

49 Champs Elysées, Paris
Saturday March Twenty Second, 1856

My Dear Macready

I want you — you being quite well again,[†4] as I trust you are, and resolute to come to Paris — so to arrange your order of March as to let me know beforehand when you will come and how long you will stay. We owe Scribe and his wife a dinner, and I should like to pay the debt when you are with us. Ary Scheffer too, would be delighted to see you again. If I could arrange for a certain day, I would secure them. We cannot afford (you and I, I mean) to keep much company, because we shall want to look in at a Theatre or so, I dare say! —

It would suit my work best, if I could keep myself clear until Monday the 7th. of April.[†1] But in case that day should be too late for the beginning of your brief visit, with a reference to any other engagements you have in contemplation, then fix an earlier one, and I will make Little Dorrit curtsey to it. My recent visit to London and my having only just now come back, have thrown me a little behind-hand; but I hope to come up with a wet sail in a few days.

You should have seen the ruins of Covent Garden Theatre![†2] — I went in, the moment I got to London — four days after the fire. Although the audience part, and the stage, were so tremendously burnt out that there was not a piece of wood half the size of a Lucifer Match, for the eye to rest on — though nothing whatever remained but bricks and smelted iron, lying on a great black desert — the Theatre still looked so wonderfully like its old self grown Gigantic, that I never saw so strange a sight. The wall dividing the Front from the stage still remained, and the iron pass-doors stood ajar, in an impossible and inaccessible frame. The arches that supported the stage were there, and the arches that supported the pit; and on the centre of the latter, lay something like a Titanic grape-vine that a hurricane had pulled up by the roots, twisted, and flung down there. This was the great chandelier. Gye[†3] had kept the men's wardrobe at the top of the house, over the great entrance staircase. When the roof fell in, it came down bodily, and all that part of the ruin was like an old babylonic pavement — bright rags tesselating the black ground — sometimes in pieces so large that I could make out the dresses in the Trovatore.

I should run on for a couple of hours if I were to describe the spectacle as I saw it. Wherefore I will immediately muzzle myself. All here unite in kindest loves to dear Miss Macready,[†4] to Katie,[†5] Lillie,[†6] Benvenuta,[†7] my Godson,[†8] and the noble Johnny.[†9] We are charmed to hear such happy accounts of Willie[†10] and Ned,[†11] and send our loving remembrances to them in the next letters.

All Parisian Novelties you shall see and hear for yourself.

Ever My Dearest Macready | Your Affectionate friend

CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. F's Aunt sends her defiant respects.[†12]

To JOHN FORSTER, [23 MARCH 1856]

Extracts in F, VII, v, 615 and 608; Date: first extract 23 Mar, according to Forster; second extract probably from same letter.

Emile Girardin was here yesterday, and he says that Peace is to be formally announced at Paris to-morrow amid general apathy.[†1]

I was at the Porte St. Martin last night, where there is a rather good melodrama called Sang Melé,[†2] in which one of the characters is an English Lord — Lord William Falkland[†3] — who is called throughout the piece Milor Williams Fack Lorn, and is a hundred times described by others and described by himself as Williams. He is admirably played; but two English travelling ladies are beyond expression ridiculous, and there is something positively vicious in their utter want of truth. One "set," where the action of a whole act is supposed to take place in the great wooden verandah of a Swiss hotel overhanging a mountain ravine, is the best piece of stage carpentering I have seen in France. Next week we are to have at the Ambigu Paradise Lost, with the murder of Abel, and the Deluge. The wildest rumours are afloat as to the un-dressing of our first parents.[†4]

To FRANK STONE, 23 MARCH 1856*

MS Benoliel Collection.

49 Champs Elysées, Paris
Sunday Twenty Third March, 1856

My Dear Stone.

A short note, because I have many to write, and proofs to overlook.

It seems to me that the best name for your charming picture, is,

The re-considered choice[†5]

It helps at once to the story, and is unaffected and plain.

All here unite in kindest regard and remembrance to all Russell House.

Ever affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

Frank Stone Esquire

To W. C. MACREADY, 27 MARCH 1856

MS Morgan Library.

49 Avenue des Champs Elysées, Paris
Thursday Night Twenty Seventh March | 1856 | (After Post time)

My Dearest Macready.

If I had had any idea of your coming (see how naturally I use the word when I am 300 miles off!) to London so soon, I would never have written one word about the jump over next week. I am vexed that I did so; but as I did, I will not now propose a change in the arrangements, as I know how methodical you tremendously old fellows are. That's your secret, I suspect. That's the way in which the blood of the Mirabels[†1] mounts in your aged veins, even at your time of life.

How charmed I shall be to see you, and we all shall be, I will not attempt to say. On that expected Sunday you will lunch at Amiens, but not dine — because we shall wait dinner for you. And you will merely have to tell that driver in the glazed hat, to come straight here. When the Whites[†2] left, I added their little apartment to this little apartment. Consequently, you shall have a snug bedroom (is it not waiting expressly for you?) overlooking the Champs Elysées. As to the arm chair in my heart, no man on Earth — but Good God you know all about it.

You will find us in the queerest of little rooms, all alone: except that the son of Collins the painter (who writes a good deal in Household Words), dines with us every day. Scheffer and Scribe shall be admitted for one evening, because they know how to appreciate you. The Emperor we will not ask unless you expressly wish it. It makes a fuss.

If you have no appointed hotel at Boulogne, go to the Hotel des Bains. There, demand "Marguerite", and tell her that I commended you to her especial care. It is the best house, within my experience, in France — Marguerite the best housekeeper in the world.

I shall charge at Little Dorrit tomorrow, with new spirits.[†3] The sight of you is good for my boyish eyes, and the thought of you for my dawning mind. Give the enclosed loves a welcome, then send them on to Sherborne.

Ever Yours most affectionately and truly

CD.

To BENJAMIN WEBSTER, 27 MARCH 1856*

MS Brigham Young University.

49 Champs Elysées | Thursday Night
Twenty Seventh March 1856

My Dear Webster.

I am not at all surprised to find you in Paris today — because you said you were going away![†4] Having administered this stab to your vital citadel, let me answer your note.

With pleasure as to the Odeon tomorrow night.[†1] We shall find the man there, I dare say (perhaps you know that there is a man who goes to the stalls). Collins, objecting to be thrown upon the world for a dinner, suggests that we might dine together at one of the student houses on the other side of the water.[†2] I think it a good notion, and, unless I hear from you to the contrary, shall expect to find you under the Obelisk on the Place de la Concorde at a quarter before 5. We shall want three arm chairs at the Theatre. Shall I take them or will you? If I am to take them, send me one line in the morning, and my servant shall be dispatched straightway. If I don't hear from you I shall conclude that you take them.

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Benjamin Webster Esquire.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?29-30 MARCH 1856]

Extracts in F, VII, v, 608-9; VIII, i, 625; VII, v, 619. Date: first extract later than 24 Mar (see below); second extract towards end of Mar (see below); third extract "at its close", according to Forster.

Rumours about Paradis Perdu were at fever-pitch in London, and CD might have failed to get admission if Webster had not obtained a ticket for him. He went with Collins.[†3] We were rung in (out of the cafe below the Ambigu) at 8, and the play was over at half-past 1: the waits between the acts being very much longer than the acts themselves.[†4] The house was crammed to excess in every part, and the galleries awful with Blouses, who again, during the whole of the waits, beat with the regularity of military drums the revolutionary tune of famous memory — Ça Ira! The play is a compound of Paradise Lost and Byron's Cain; and some of the controversies between the archangel and the devil, when the celestial power argues with the infernal in conversational French, as "Eh bien! Satan, crois-tu donc que notre Seigneur t'aurait exposé aux tourments que t'endures à présent, sans avoir prévu," &c. &c. are very ridiculous. All the supernatural personages are alarmingly natural (as theatre nature goes), and walk about in the stupidest way. Which has occasioned Collins and myself to institute a perquisition whether the French ever have shown any kind of idea of the supernatural; and to decide this rather in the negative. The people are very well dressed, and Eve very modestly. All Paris and the provinces had been ransacked for a woman who had brown hair that would fall to the calves of her legs — and she was found at last at the Odéon. There was nothing attractive until the 4th act, when there was a pretty good scene of the children of Cain dancing in, and desecrating, a temple, while Abel and his family were hammering hard at the Ark, outside, in all the pauses of the revel. The Deluge in the fifth act was up to about the mark of a drowning scene at the Adelphi; but it had one new feature. When the rain ceased, and the ark drove in on the great expanse of water, then lying waveless as the mists cleared and the sun broke out, numbers of bodies drifted up and down. These were all real men and boys, each separate, on a new kind of horizontal sloat.[†1] They looked horrible and real. Altogether, a merely dull business; but I dare say it will go for a long while.

Of Little Dorrit, No. VI, he wrote I had the general idea of the Society business[†2] before the Sadleir affair,[†3] but I shaped Mr. Merdle himself out of that precious rascality. Society, the Circumlocution Office, and Mr. Gowan, are of course three parts of one idea and design. Mr. Merdle's complaint, which you find in the end to be fraud and forgery, came into my mind as the last drop in the silver cream-jug[†4] on Hampstead-heath. I shall beg, when you have read the present number,[†5] to inquire whether you consider "Bar" an instance, in reference to K F, of a suggested likeness in not many touches?[†6]

I have not seen Scheffer since I came back but he told Catherine a few days ago that he was not satisfied with the likeness after all, and thought he must do more to it. My own impression of it, you remember?

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 30 MARCH 1856*

MS Morgan Library. Address: L'Angleterre. | Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street | Piccadilly | London.

49 Champs Elysées, Paris | Sunday March Thirtieth, 1856

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I have gone over the paper[†7] very carefully, and hope you will not find that I have made it — "too good"![†8] My object has principally been, to state everything in its place and order; not often greatly changing your words, and never changing (I hope) your ideas. If I have misunderstood you anywhere, tell me and let me correct the mistake.

The mistress of your schools, I have left twice in blank as to her name. It looks, in your MS, like BUNGAY[†1] — but I was afraid to write it.

The unfortunate Mrs. Cheadle appears to belong to nowhere. I have left a blank for the name of her School.[†2]

I have also left a blank for the names of the eight Pupil Teachers, which certainly ought to go in there.[†3]

I have written the close with an unsteady hand, because I faltered in going so near your heart.[†4] But I hope it is what you would quietly say.

Pray let me know that you have received it; and if you would desire any change in it, send it back.

With loves to Mrs. Brown.

Ever most faithfully & affecy.

CD.

April

To W. H. WILLS, 1 APRIL 1856

MS Huntington Library.

49 Champs Elysées | First April 1856

My Dear Wills.

You will have seen by a letter from me received this morning, that we are all right.

I think, in such a case as that of Collins's the right thing is to give £50.[†5] I think it right, abstractedly, in the case of a careful and good writer on whom we can depend for Xmas Nos. and the like. But further, I know of offers for stories going about — to Collins himself for instance — which make it additionally desirable that we should not shave close in such a case.[†6] I therefore tell him that you have paid in £50.

In great haste (at work) | Ever Faithfully

CD.

To MESSRS BRADBURY & EVANS, 4 APRIL 1856*

MS Dickens House.

Paris, 49 Champs Elysées | Friday Fourth April, 1856

My Dear B and E.

I send you enclosed £100 due from M. Tauchnitz to Household Words, to last month.[†1] I send it in a bill of M. Tauchnitz's for £50, and in a cheque of my own for £50.

All well.

Ever Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To GEORGE AUGUSTUS SALA, [?5-6 APRIL 1856]

Summary and extract from Life and Adventures of G. A. Sala, 1895, pp. 339 and 373. Date: see To Wills, 6 Apr.

Gladly accepting Sala's proposal that CD should send him to St Petersburg and Moscow, for him to write a series of descriptive essays about Russia and the Russians in HW.[†2] You shall have the means of travelling in comfort and respectability.

To W. H. WILLS, 6 APRIL 1856

MS Huntington Library.

49 Champs Elysées, Paris | Sunday Sixth April, 1856

My Dear Wills.

[†a]FIFTY POUNDS[†3] IN ALL ITS ASPECTS[†4]

all right.

SALA.[†4]

I enclose my reply.[†5] Need not repeat its terms, as you will open and read it for your own guidance. I wonder whether you anticipate its contents.[†6] I shall be curious to know.

THE SIGN.[†7]

I think not. I am doubtful, but I think not.[†a]

CHRISTMAS.([2[[sic]]][†4]

Collins and I have a mighty original notion (mine in the beginning) for another Play at Tavistock House. I purpose opening on Twelfth night, the theatrical season of that great establishment.[†8] But now a tremendous question. Is game to do a Scotch Housekeeper, in a supposed country-house with Mary, Katey, Georgina &c. If she can screw her courage to saying Yes, that country house opens the piece in a singular way, and that Scotch housekeeper's part shall flow from the present pen. If she says No (but she won't),[†2] no Scotch Housekeeper can be. The Tavistock House Season of 4 nights pauses for a reply. Scotch song (new and original) of Scotch Housekeeper, would pervade the piece.[†3] had better pause for breath.

MRS. WILLS![†1]

YOU[†1]

Ever Faithfully

CD.

POOLE.[†1]

I have paid him his money. Here is the Proof of Life. If you will get the receipt for me to sign, the money can go to my account at Coutts's.

To JOHN FORSTER, [7 APRIL 1856]

Extracts in F, VIII, i, 625 and VII, v, 607. Date: first extract 7 Apr 56, according to Forster; second extract no doubt part of same letter.

There are some things in Flora in number seven[†4] that seem to me to be extraordinarily droll, with something serious at the bottom of them after all.[†5] Ah, well! was there not something very serious in it once?[†6] I am glad to think of being in the country with the long summer mornings as I approach number ten,[†7] where I have finally resolved to make Dorrit rich. It should be a very fine point in the story.... Nothing in Flora made me laugh so much as the confusion of ideas between gout flying upwards, and its soaring with Mr. F—— to another sphere.[†8]

About a dreary theatrical experience. On Wednesday we went to the Odeon to see a new piece, in four acts and in verse, called Michel Cervantes.[†9] I suppose such an infernal dose of ditch water never was concocted.[†10] But there were certain passages, describing the suppression of public opinion in Madrid, which were received with a shout of savage application to France that made one stare again![†11] And once more, here again, at every pause, steady, compact, regular as military drums, the Ça Ira!

To FRANCOIS RÉGNIER,[†1] 7 APRIL 1856*

MS Comédie Francaise.

49 Champs Elysées | Monday 7 April, 1856

My Dear Régnier

Our friend Macready is staying here for a few days, and we hope very earnestly that you do not act — or at all events that you do not act in the first piece — on Friday next.[†2] Because we wish to have the great pleasure of receiving Madame Regnier and yourself to dinner on that day à 6 1/2 heures exactly. Pray tell me in reply, that you can come.

Always Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

À Monsieur Régnier

To W. H. WILLS, 7 APRIL 1856*

MS Huntington Library.

Paris, Monday Seventh April 1856

My Dear Wills. I return the No.[†3] after going over it carefully.

I should like the Sphynx[†4] to stand over. She is so deserving of the name, that before Heaven I don't yet (though I have read it twice) understand what it means. Have you any idea?

Look carefully to my marks in the Aldershot paper.[†5] Execrably written.

I think Whitehead's[†6] name, Nemesis, one that had best stand.[†7] Go carefully over the paper, and change inverted or obsolete language, as "I like him not",[†8] &c. — Also, if people's eye-balls burst, or anything of that sort, apply some mild remedy.[†9]

Observe that the town of B—— is always to be Battenham.[†10]

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 8 APRIL 1856

MS Morgan Library.

Paris, Tuesday Eighth April, 1856

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I have gone over your draft received on Sunday, and have written it out again on the other side.[†1] It is very slightly altered indeed.[†2] It seems to me to be as plain and unaffected as possible, and to say what you wish to express, in few words. I quite felt what you explain relating to Mrs. Brown, and most heartily perceived and sympathized with your delicate and considerate intention. Nor have I the least doubt that it will be a great happiness to her.[†3]

Mr. Macready has come to stay with us for a few days, and reports that as he passed through town he called in Stratton Street, hoping to see you. He was anxious to ask you what you thought about Young Warner,[†4] and to say that he did not quite know whether he ought to have pursued the subject of his clothes — respecting which (I think he said, but he is at the Louvre, and I can't ask him), he had sent you some letter.

I have no doubt — please to observe particularly — NO DOUBT[†5] — that my reading, and not your writing, is to blame (indeed I generally find it too plain) but the second name of Old Pierre[†6] is an appalling mystery to me. I defy Mr. Wills to read it. I have got to this — old Pierre Mont — old Pierre Montle. I am now going out to the house you give me the direction to, to enquire vaguely whether le vieux Pierre Montle — and then I shall cough — lodges there. If I can get at him by these desperate means, you shall find the report on the other side.[†7].

With kindest regard to Mrs. Brown,

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully & affecy. Yours

CD.

To MISS MARGUERITE POWER,[†8] 8 APRIL 1856

Extract in Anderson Galleries catalogue, Dec 1936. MS 1 p.; dated 49 Champs Elysées, 8 Apr 56; addressed "Doner" by catalogue, clearly in error.

Macready is here, and will be greatly pleased to see you and the marchioness.[†9] Will you come, both of you, and dine with us on Friday at 1/2 past 6 — on which occasion I have asked the Epicurians of La Dressa.[†10] You know the beastly dimensions of our dining table (to say nothing of dining-room), and how we have had the cramp in this apartment for 6 months. I have told my trembling wife to write another note with this, and to rest assured that it will explain itself.

To BERNARD TAUCHNITZ, 8 APRIL 1856

Extract in Kurt Otto, Der Verlag Bernhard Tauchnitz, 1837-1912, Leipzig, 1912, p. 54.

Paris, 49, Champs Elysées, Tuesday, April 8th, 1856.

Having thus disposed of business, let me have the pleasure of adding that we all unite in kindest regards to Mrs. Tauchnitz and your family, and that we shall all remember our meeting here with great pleasure, and shall always look forward to a renewal of that friendship — somewhere.

To GABRIEL LEGOUVÉ, 9 APRIL 1856*

MS M. Jean Paladilhe.

Champs Elysées, 49. | Mercredi 9 Avril, 1856

Mon cher M. Legouvé

Vous devez être l'homme le plus heureux en tout Paris, ce matin!

J'aurai le grand plaisir de vous voir aujourdhui, mais, en attendant, je m'empresse de vous feliciter sur le triomphe que vous venez d'obtenir[†1] — triomphe que vous ne partagez avec personne, car il me parait que la Ristori[†2] ne jouera jamais aussi bien que vous ecrivez.

Votre tout devoué
CHARLES DICKENS

To THOMAS FRASER,[†3] 10 APRIL 1856*

MS Berg Collection. Address: À Monsieur Fraser.

Champs Elysées, 49 | Thursday Tenth April, 1856

My Dear Fraser.

Will you have the kindness to let the two daughters of Mark Lemon[†4] accompany you to London? They will cause you no trouble, as they are too young to require any gallantry. Both he and I will be very sensible of the kindness of your escort, and they shall be produced at the Station of the chemin de fer du Nord at the time you may appoint for your departure.

With kindest regard

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Fraser Esquire

To ROBERT BROWNING,[†1] 12 APRIL 1856*

MS Berg Collection. Address: Robert Browning Esquire.

Champs Elysées | Saturday Twelfth April, 1856

My Dear Browning

Macready found himself obliged, yesterday, to arrange to leave Paris early this morning: having letters that called him home. A torrent of commissions swept him away all day, and he was in a state of semi-distraction until dinner time. He made me solemnly promise to write this morning and make known to you and Mrs. Browning how it came to pass that he went away without repeating his visit.[†2] In discharge of my conscience I write this note.

Always Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Robert Browning Esquire.

To WILKIE COLLINS, 13 APRIL 1856

MS Morgan Library.

Champs Elysées | Sunday April Thirteenth 1856

My Dear Collins.

We checked you off at the various points of your journey all day, but never dreamed of the half gale. You must have had an abominable passage with that convivial club! My soul sickens at the thought of it; and the smell seizes hold of the bridge of my nose exactly half way up, and won't let it go again.

Your porteress duly appeared with the small account and your note. I paid her immediately of course, and she departed rejoicing. The Pavilion looks very desolate, and nobody has taken it as yet. Macready left us at 7 yesterday morning, and I afterwards took a long country walk to get into train for work. It was a noble spring day, and the air most delightful. But I found the evening sufficiently dull, and indeed we all miss you very much.

[†a]The "little Lemons" depart tomorrow, under the charge of an unhappy Englishman whom we have inveigled into taking them. You will be glad to hear that on the day of your departure, Lally began to transfer her Dinner Glares to Macready; and that Macready whenever he observed one of those terrible phenomena supposed it to mean that she wanted water, and instantly overwhelmed her with the largest Decanter.[†a]

He went on Friday to the Rehearsal of Comme il vous plaira[†3] which was produced last night.[†4] His account of it was absolutely stunning. The speech of the Seven Ages, delivered as a Light Comedy joke — Jacques at the Court of the Reigning Duke instead of the banished one, and winding up the thing by marrying Celia — everything as wide of Shakespeare as possible, and confirming my previous impression that she knew just nothing at all about it. She was to have been here on Friday Evening, but had "le migraine" (of which I think you have heard before), but Regnier said, as to the piece "La piece! Il n'y a point de piece" — tapped his forehead with great violence — and threw whatever liquid came out, into the air as an offering to the offended Gods. Girardin said qu'il l'avait trouvé a la repetition, tres interessante, tres interessante, tres interessante — and said nothing more the whole evening. I dine at another of his prodigious banquets, tomorrow.

I am very anxious to know what your Doctor says. If he should fail to set you up by the 3rd. or 4th. of May for me, I shall consider him a Humbug. It occurs to me to mention that if you don't get settled early in May, the Hogarths will then leave Tavistock House to me and Charley, and you know how easily and amply it can accommodate you. Pray don't forget that it is available for your quarters. There will be two or three large airy bedrooms with nobody to occupy them, and the range of the whole sheeted house besides. The Pavilion of the Molyneaux I shall of course reserve for your summer occupation and work. Talking of which latter I am reminded to say that the Scotch Housekeeper is secured.[†1]

You know exactly where I am sitting, what I am seeing, what I am hearing, what is going on around me in every way. I have not a scrap of news, except that Poole at the Français complained bitterly to Macready of your humble servant's neglect — which, considering that he would unquestionably be in some remote English workhouse but for me, I think characteristic. Macready's reply to him appears to have been. Er — really — er — no Poole! — er — must excuse me — host — um — friend — er — great affection — um — cannot permit — er — must therefore distinctly beg.

Miss Power had a story on Friday that they have done something to the Imperial Infant[†2] which has paralyzed one of his arms. My information on the subject is not of a detailed nature, inasmuch as I am supposed to be unapproachable thereupon — as a flunkey question — and sternly to refuse to be enlightened. But I find Mrs. Dickens flying to the window whenever a fast carriage is heard, and then pretending to be so calmly looking towards the Ave de l'Etoile, that I know her to be on the watch for something from the Tuilleries. I am inclined to think that a carriage and four containing the Imperial and damaged infant is expected to go by, on some mission connected with the story.

All unite in kindest regard and best wishes for your speedily coming all right again.

Ever faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

I enclose a letter from Forgues. The book of the Lighthouse accompanies it, which I will bring with me.

P.P.S. According to a highly illegible note I have from Forgues, it would seem that I ought to send you the book, with some idea of your sending it back to me to send to him.[†3] The little Lemons therefore shall bring the book with them.

To W. H. WILLS, 13 APRIL 1856*

MS Berg Collection.

Champs Elysées | Sunday Night Thirteenth April, 1856

My Dear Wills.

H. W.[†1]

I have gone over the No.[†2] and return it. All up with everything[†3] is loose, scrambling, and careless, for a first article. But I suppose you have nothing better?

Look to Nemesis for the same things as in the first part.

Love Memories, Taboo. If the authoress can do anything better — don't discourage her. But this really will not do.

So no more (most absurd title), I see nothing whatever in. I wish you would say to Morley that it is useless to pursue that subject without striking a blow. Wait until there is something to hit, and then in God's name hit it — hard. The article had best stand over until it can be made apropòs of something more — then added to and enlarged upon.[†4]

The British Hadji would do as much towards shutting up Household Words for good and all, as most things could. Most decidedly, Taboo.

In No. 316,[†5] in those articles which I did not see, I observe some things worth mentioning as requiring to be changed. Post to Australia.[†6] 1st. column "to be interfering" is very awkward. Second column same article "the making a railway" is very bad English, and ought to be "the making of a Railway". Same column, "the only man that (instead of whom) they can trust" is bad too. Same article page 306 near the top, it ought to be "and our firm told the authorities that they would break down, or go ashore, and never get to Melbourne." The repetition of the three last words (used in the former part of the sentence), just makes the difference between the sense being plain at a glance, and being confused.[†7]

I hope to send you an article of my own at the end of this coming week.[†8]

"Stories from the State Trials" would make a very good subject, if you ever find anybody in hand, to whom to entrust it.

I mentioned to you sometime ago, that a monthly commentary on the Trials at the Central Criminal Court, with reference to the State of Education, the State of the Law, and the Vices of Society, would make a very remarkable set of papers. I think Collins would do it extremely well. He is now (unwell, and his family moving), at 24 Howland St. Fitzroy Square. Will you see him, mention the subject to him just as I state it, and ask him if he would like to undertake it regularly. In that case, cut out the best Reports for him from day to day. The Central Criminal Court is sitting now. There are really few subjects more distinctly in the way of H. W. or more susceptible of interesting treatment with a great practical object.[†1]

Faithfully Ever

CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [13 APRIL 1856]

Extracts in F, VII, v, 612 and VIII, ii, 639. Date: just after Macready's visit (6-12 Apr).

CD and Macready had been to Ristori's performance as Médée[†2] together and pronounced it to be hopelessly bad. In the day entertainments, and little melodrama theatres, of Italy, I have seen the same thing fifty times, only not at once so conventional and so exaggerated. The papers have all been in fits respecting the sublimity of the performance, and the genuineness of the applause — particularly of the bouquets; which were thrown on at the most preposterous times in the midst of agonizing scenes, so that the characters had to pick their way among them, and a certain stout gentleman who played King Creon was obliged to keep a wary eye, all night, on the proscenium boxes, and dodge them as they came down. Now Scribe, who dined here next day (and who follows on the Ristori side, being offended, as everybody has been, by the insolence of Rachel), could not resist the temptation of telling us, that, going round at the end of the first act to offer his congratulations, he met all the bouquets coming back in men's arms to be thrown on again in the second act.... By the bye, I see a fine actor lost in Scribe. In all his pieces he has everything done in his own way; and on that same night he was showing what Rachel did not do, and wouldn't do, in the last scene of Adrienne Lecouvreur, with extraordinary force and intensity.

Giving Forster a favourable report of Macready's enjoyment of his holiday; then, after recurring to his own old notion of going to settle in Australia, once he had finished Little Dorrit, saying that perhaps Macready, if he could get into harness again, would not be the worse for some such troubles as were worrying himself. It fills me with pity to think of him away in that lonely Sherborne place. I have always felt of myself that I must, please God, die in harness, but I have never felt it more strongly than in looking at, and thinking of, him. However strange it is to be never at rest, and never satisfied, and ever trying after something that is never reached, and to be always laden with plot and plan and care and worry, how clear it is that it must be, and that one is driven by an irresisitible[[sic]] might until the journey is worked out! It is much better to go on and fret, than to stop and fret. As to repose — for some men there's no such thing in this life. The foregoing has the appearance of a small sermon; but it is so often in my head in these days that it cannot help coming out. The old days — the old days! Shall I ever, I wonder, get the frame of mind back as it used to be then? Something of it perhaps — but never quite as it used to be. I find that the skeleton in my domestic closet is becoming a pretty big one.

To W. H. WILLS, 15 APRIL 1856

Extracts in unidentified catalogue at Dickens House; dated Paris, 15 Apr 56; addressed W. H. Wills.

I do not wish personally to exert myself to get Sala's Letters.†1 Firstly, because I would rather not present him personally, except to people to whom I could unreservedly explain myself (and I know none such in America), and secondly because I very much doubt their doing him any service. His getting out anything for himself, is the best necessity he can be put to.... I do not think he can write much while in America.†2 Still if he writes an article or two occasionally.... I don't think they will involve him in any scrape.... If he should find the thing more difficult than he supposes ... then he had best stop ... and write home for instructions. Your letter of yesterday, has just arrived with the No.... but I clearly see that the British Hadji is entirely out of the question.†3 What! Five pages of Quotation from a Book!! I can't believe it, and yet I know the book and glance at the article and can't credit my eyes. What astonishing Lunacy! Pray look up something else, for this can't be.

To HENRY AUSTIN, 17 APRIL 1856*

MS Morgan Library.

Paris, 49 Champs Elysées
Thursday Seventeenth April, 1856.

My Dear Henry.

I will of course place my name and support at Southwood Smith's†4 disposal. Though I little thought ever to see myself in company with Lord Palmerston — whom I think, in his present place, one of the very worst signs of these times.

The word Testimonial has been so much abused, and has become so synonymous with Humbug, that I am fully persuaded it will damage Southwood Smith. It would be immeasurably better, to call it plainly, a Committee for offering a public acknowledgement to Doctor Southwood Smith, in recognition of the services he has rendered to the public health and comfort.†5 Something to that effect. Testimonial is a wet blanket, fifty feet thick.

I purpose coming to town at the end of the week after next — that is to say — about the end of the present month — and staying there through May. We pass the summer at Boulogne, where you and Letitia[†1] will arrange to come and see us (I hope) in the drollest of houses — quite a practical joke — in a really beautiful garden. As quaint a place as you will ever see.

Tuesday the 6th. of May, is our Household Words Audit. Will you come and dine at the office that day, at halfpast 5 sharp? If Yes, send your answer to Wills.

The Gad's Hill purchase is completed, and the (here I gasp) — the money — paid.[†2] I have agreed to let the old Tory Rector stay there until next March. We will then dash in with our improvements and furnish the place. I purpose occupying it for that summer.

With Love from all, Ever affectionately

CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [17 APRIL 1856]

Extracts in F, VII, v, 609-10*n*, 619-20*n*, and VIII, ii, 615. Date: first two extracts 17 Apr 56, according to Forster; third extract after Girardin's dinner on 14 Apr.

After seeing the Médécin des Enfants[†3] he writes The low cry of excitement and expectation that goes round the house when any one of the great situations is felt to be coming, is very remarkable indeed. I suppose there has not been so great a success of the genuine and worthy kind (for the authors have really taken the French dramatic bull by the horns, and put the adulterous wife in the right position), for many years. When you come over and see it, you will say you never saw anything so admirably done. There is one actor, Bignon[†4] (M. Delormel), who has a good deal of Macready in him; sometimes looks very like him; and who seems to me the perfection of manly good sense.

On Monday I am going to dine with all my translators at Hachette's, the bookseller who has made the bargain for the complete edition, and who began this week to pay his monthly £40 for the year.[†5] I don't mean to go out any more. Please imagine me in the midst of my French dressers.

At Girardin's, his host again played Lucullus[†6] in the same style. After dinner he asked me if I would come into another room and smoke a cigar? and on my saying Yes, coolly opened a drawer, containing about 5000 inestimable cigars in prodigious bundles — just as the Captain of the Robbers in Ali Baba might have gone to a corner of the cave for bales of brocade. A little man dined who was blacking shoes 8 years ago, and is now enormously rich — the richest man in Paris — having ascended with rapidity up the usual ladder of the Bourse. By merely observing that perhaps he might come down again, I clouded so many faces as to render it very clear to me that everybody present was at the same game for some stake or other!

To MRS WILLMORE,[†1] 17 APRIL 1856

MS Huntington Library.

Champs Elysées, 49 | Thursday Seventeenth April, 1856

Dear Madam

I am extremely concerned to learn that you are enduring great anxiety on behalf of Mr. Wilmore,[†2] but I beg to give you the most earnest and faithful assurance I can possibly convey in words, that your solicitude, though very natural, has no real foundation. It is absolutely impossible, in these times, that any accident of importance can have happened to any steamer leaving Calais, Boulogne, Dieppe, or Havre, so long ago as last Monday or Tuesday night, without the disaster being known in Paris by means of the Electric Telegraph, within a few hours of that time. Believe me, it cannot be. Delay may have arisen in the arrival of all the steamers at their respective destinations, and I have little doubt that is the case; but you may be sure that nothing of greater importance has occurred, and that nobody is the worse.[†3]

I would on no account offer you this comfort, unless I were as fully convinced of its being true, as I am of my being really alive when I write this note. I have received no letters for two days, although I know that some must have been on their way to me from England, in the ordinary course, since Tuesday. Gales of wind will sometimes arise upon these coasts, which are nothing in themselves, but which prevent the steamers from getting into their ports, in consequence of the wind blowing sheer out of them. In that case, the Mails are stopped, and the passengers are prevented from getting ashore, and endure, for certain hours more or less, the great anxiety of knowing that their friends will be unhappy about them. To such an extent your husband deserves all the sympathy you can give him — but no further. And I have not a doubt that he is alive, and as merry as he can be without you, at this present writing. I shall hope to remind you, at our own house in London this winter, of the absolute confidence with which I sent you this assurance on his behalf. And I know it will be so plain to you, then, that you will not give me the slightest credit for having been such a common-place prophet.

Pray set your mind at ease. A few hours will certainly do so for you — but anticipate them with unquestioning cheerfulness.

Dear Madam | Very truly Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To BERNHARD TAUCHNITZ, 18 APRIL 1856

Extract in Kurt Otto, Der Verlag Bernhard Tauchnitz, 1837-1912, p. 54.

Paris, 49, Champs Elysées, April 18th, 1856.

Leipzig is at present among my castles in the air, mes Châteaux en Espagne, but perhaps Germany and I may make a personal acquaintance yet.[†1]

To THE SECRETARY, ROYAL ACADEMY,[†2] [?19-20 APRIL 1856]

Mention in To Wills, 20 Apr 56. Date: close to that day.

To W. H. WILLS, 20 APRIL 1856

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

Paris, Sunday Twentieth April, 1856

My Dear Wills.

H. W.[†3]

I enclose you what I think is a capital paper, with an odd and novel idea in it.[†4] You must certainly alter the No. so as to make it the first article;[†5] or some of the points of which it treats, will get out of date.[†6] I cannot suggest how the No. is to be altered, inasmuch as I have not yet got it. In case of its coming by the Post to day, I will endeavour to return it by tomorrow's post.

I wish to see a Proof of the enclosed. But in case there should not be time, then ask Forster to correct it, by and with the MS.

You don't quite understand what I mean, I think, by Stories from the State Trials when you say your story is "almost one".[†7] An admirable and picturesque book by Alexandre Dumas, called Crimes Celèbres,[†8] expresses the idea in its execution.

SALA.[†3]

I have no suggestion to offer on the subject of the credits, which seem to be well and carefully arranged. But I think that before he goes, you should draw up, and have legibly copied out, a Memorandum of all the arrangements made and all the understanding entered into, and should attach your signature on my behalf, and make him attach his. In that Memorandum you can state that the question of the partition of the copyright of the completed book, between Sala and H. W. is reserved until the book shall be producible.[†1]

MACREADY'S DRAFT,[†2] AND POOLE'S PENSION RECEIPT.[†3]

I return, duly signed.

ROYAL ACADEMY DINNER.[†3]

I have answered the invitation. But you tell me that the Dinner is on the "tenth of April", which is of course impossible. The tenth of May would be a week later than usual, and therefore I shall be glad if you will tell me on what day it really comes off.[†4] Preserve the ticket, because it accredits one at the door, without reference to a book.

TAVISTOCK GROUND.[†3]

I enclose a cheque in Mr. Cardale's[†5] favor for £20.

The Tenantry

must be regaled on the Estate at Midsummer, I think, and have 15 per cent returned to them in a neat and appropriate.[†6]

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?20 APRIL 1856]

Extract in F, VII, v, 615. Date: written "a few days later" than To Forster, 17 Apr 56, according to Forster.

If you were to see the steps of the Bourse at about 4 in the afternoon, and the crowd of blouses and patches among the speculators there assembled, all howling and haggard with speculation, you would stand aghast at the consideration of what must be going on. Concierges and people like that perpetually blow their brains out, or fly into the Seine, "à cause des pertes sur la Bourse." I hardly ever take up a French paper without lighting on such a paragraph. On the other hand, thoroughbred horses without end, and red velvet carriages with white kid harness on jet black horses, go by here all day long; and the pedestrians who turn to look at them, laugh, and say, "C'est la Bourse!"[†7] Such crashes must be staved off every week as have not been seen since Law's[†8] time.

To W. H. WILLS, [21 APRIL 1856]

Mention in N, II, 761.

To WILKIE COLLINS, 22 APRIL 1856

MS Morgan Library.

Champs Elysées | Tuesday Twenty-Second April, 1856

My Dear Collins.

I have been quite taken aback by your account of your alarming seizure;[†1] and have only become reassured again, firstly by the good fortune of your having left here and got so near your Doctor; secondly, by your hopefulness of now making head in the right direction. On the third or fourth I purpose being in town, and I need not say that I shall forthwith come to look after my old Patient.

On Sunday, to my infinite amazement, Townshend[†2] appeared. He has changed his plans, and is staying in Paris a week, before going to Town for a couple of months. He dined here on Sunday, and placidly ate and drank in the most vigorous manner, and mildly laid out a terrific perspective of projects for carrying me off to the Theatre every night. But in the morning he found himself with dawnings of Bronchitis, and is now luxuriously laid up in lavender at his Hotel — confining himself entirely to precious stones,[†3] chicken, and fragrant wines qualified with iced waters.

Last Friday, I took Mrs. Dickens, Georgina, and Mary and Katey, to dine at the Trois freres. [†a]Mrs. Dickens nearly killed herself, but the others hardly did that justice to the dinner that I had expected.[†a] We then Sir went off to the Français; to see Comme il vous plaira which is a kind of Theatrical Representation that I think might be got up, with great completeness, by the Patients in the Asylum for Idiots.[†4] Dreariness is no word for it, vacancy is no word for it, gammon is no word for it, there is no word for it. Nobody has anything to do, but to sit upon as many grey stones as he can. When Jacques had sat upon seventy seven stones and forty two roots of trees (which was at the end of the second act), we came away. He had by that time been made violent love to by Celia, had shewn himself in every phase of his existence to be utterly unknown to Shakespeare, had made the speech about the Seven Ages out of its right place and apropos of nothing on earth, and had in all respects conducted himself like a brutalized, benighted, and besotted Beast.[†5]

A wonderful dinner at Girardin's last Monday, with only one new (but appropriate) feature in it. When we went into the drawing room after the banquet, which had terminated in a flower pot out of a ballet being set before every guest, piled to the brim with the ruddiest fresh strawberries, he asked me if I would come into another room (a chamber of no account — rather like the last Scene in Gustavus) and smoke a Cigar? On my replying yes, he opened, with a key attached to his watch chain, a species of mahogany Cave, which appeared to me to extend under the Champs Elysées, and in which were piled about four hundred thousand inestimable and unattainable Cigars, in bundles or bales of about a thousand each.[†1]

Yesterday I dined at the booksellers with the body of Translators[†2] engaged on my new Edition — one of them a lady — young and pretty. (I hope by the bye, judging from the questions which they asked me and which I asked them, that it will be really well done.) Among them was an extremely able old Savant who occasionally expressed himself in a foreign tongue which I supposed to be Russian (I thought he had something to do with the Congress perhaps), but which my host told me when I came away, was English! We wallowed in an odd sort of dinner which would have been splashy[†3] if it hadn't been too sticky. Salmon appeared late in the evening, and unforeseen creatures of the lobster species strayed in after the pudding. It was very hospitable and good natured though, and we all got on in the friendliest way. Please to imagine me, for three mortal hours, incessantly holding forth to the translators, and, among other things, addressing them in a neat and appropriate (French) speech. I came home quite light-headed.

On Saturday night, I paid three francs at the door of that place where we saw the wrestling,[†4] and went in, at 11 o-Clock, to a Ball. Much the same as our own National Argyll Rooms.[†5] Some pretty faces, but all of two classes — wicked and coldly calculating, or haggard and wretched in their worn beauty. Among the latter, was a woman of thirty or so, in an Indian shawl, who never stirred from a seat in a corner all the time I was there. Handsome, regardless, brooding, and yet with some nobler qualities in her forehead. I mean to walk about tonight, and look for her. I didn't speak to her there, but I have a fancy that I should like to know more about her. Never shall, I suppose.

Franconi's[†6] I have been to again, of course. Nowhere else. I finished "that" No.[†7] as soon as Macready went away, and have done something for Household Words next week, called Proposals for a National Jest Book, that I take rather kindly to. The first blank page of Little Dorrit No. 8[†8] now eyes me on this desk with a pressing curiosity. It will get nothing out of me to day, I distinctly perceive.[†9] —

†aTownshend's Henri,†10 and Bully (the dog) have just been here — came in with a message at the double dash. Bully disconcerts me a good deal. He dined here on Sunday with his master, and got a young family of puppies out of each of the doors, fell into indecent transports with the claw of the round table, and was madly in love with Townshend's boots. All of which, Townshend seems to have no idea of, but merely says "Bul-ly!" when he is on his hind-legs like the sign of a public house. If he dines here again, I mean to have a trifle of camphor ready for him, and to try whether it has the effect upon him that it is said to have upon the Monks (with which piece of scientific knowledge I taunt Stanfield†11 when we go out together).†a

†aThat swearing of the Academy Carpenters is the best thing of its kind I ever heard of.†1 I suppose the oath to be administered by little Knight. It's my belief that the stout Porter now no more, wouldn't have taken it. — Our cook's going. Says she an't strong enought for †bBoo Lone.†b I don't know what there is particularly trying in that climate. — The Nice little Nurse who goes into all manner of shops without knowing one word of French, took some Lace to be mended the other day, and the Shopkeeper impressed with the idea that she had come to sell it, would give her money; with which she returned weeping, believing it (until explanation ensued) to be the price of shame. All send kindest regard. Ever Faithfully

CD.†a

To [?THE REV. JAMES WHITE],†2 [?17-22 APRIL 1856]

MS (fragment) Mr L. Mastracci. Date: shortly after Girardin's dinner-party (14 Apr): see To Forster, 17 Apr.

above there is a conservatory which is like the South of France — only neither scorched nor dusty.

Think of this:

EMILE GIRARDIN†3

gave another dinner the other day. We were about 15 or 18, and had every possible, impossible, conceivable, and inconceivable, dish — down to a little red flower pot for every guest, full of bright fresh strawberries. The only novelty was, that after dinner when we were in the Drawing Room, he asked me if I would go into another room and smoke a Cigar? On my replying Yes, he opened a species of mahogany cave with a key hanging on his watch chain, and shewed (as nearly as I could compute) about two hundred and fifty thousand inestimable and unattainable Cigars, tied up in bundles of about 1000 each.

ALL†3

send their kindest loves to Mrs. White†4 and all the house. In which I heartily join.

Ever Faithfully

CHARLES DICKENS

To W. H. WILLS, 24 APRIL 1856*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Paris, Thursday Twenty Fourth April, 1856

My Dear Wills.

I return you my Proof,[†5] corrected.

I am very much disheartened by the last published No. of H. W.[†1] which is — not to mince the matter — frightfully bad. No idea in it, no purpose, no appropriateness to or about anything, a mere hash-up of most indifferent magazine papers at chance-medley.[†2]

Tomorrow morning I will go to work again and try to do another paper,[†3] so that you may receive it on Monday Morning. It would be better not to begin a No. with your story,[†4] under the circumstances, if it can possibly be avoided.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To JOHN ROBERTSON,[†5] 26 APRIL 1856*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Paris, Saturday Evening Twenty Sixth April, 1856

Dear Sir.

I cannot estimate the length at which your proposed subject will have to be treated in Household Words, until your manner of treating it is before me. But I shall be glad to try it, and I think it promises well.[†6] There is no objection to an article occupying four pages.[†7]

Pray avoid anything like a fragmentary appearance. I think I rather observed it in one of the two papers you left with me. I need not tell you that it is never necessary to write "down" to the popular capacity; but that the great merit of plain, easy, flowing narrative, while it is acceptable to all readers, is particularly felt by a large and mixed audience.

I leave Paris immediately, and will myself give Mr Wills such instructions as shall ensure your sustaining no disappointment in reference to the request with which you close your note.[†8]

Dear Sir

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

John Robertson Esquire.

To W. H. WILLS, 27 APRIL 1856

MS Rosenbach Foundation.

Champs Elysées, Paris
Sunday Morning Twenty Seventh April, 1856

My Dear Wills.

H. W.[†1]

I return the proof of No. 320,[†2] and enclose a paper of my own with which to begin it.[†3]

This will enable you to dispense in this No. either with Billeted at Boulogne,[†4] or a Tale of a Pocket Archipelago.[†5] They are both weak, and the latter (as a story) is really almost too blear-eyed to fall into the ranks.

Mr. Duthie's Sundays too, are washy in the last degree. There is really nothing whatever in them. And it is the diabolical property of colorless, shapeless, things of this nature, that they shut up good subjects and get no kind of point or effect out of them. I would as soon dine off an old glove, as read such pale literary boiled veal.[†6]

Get Epidemics[†7] as near the opening (the usual poetical place)[†8] as you can, because it has a purpose in it.

In your list of the No. is a cabalistic word that looks like "Surnames". I have not received such an article.[†9] must certainly be first discussed by Forster, you, and me. Then it will be necessary (if we can see any course of action), to call a meeting.

THE GUILD[†1]

MY ARRANGEMENTS[†1]

are these. — The tent is striking here, and I can't work in the midst of the unsettled domesticity. The Hogarth family don't leave Tavistock House till next Saturday. And I cannot in the meantime bear the contemplation of their imbecility any more. (I think my constitution is already undermined by the sight of Hogarth at breakfast.) I am therefore going to leave here by the Mail, next Tuesday Morning at 8 for Dover, where I shall stay at the Ship (working I hope in the mornings), until I come to town early on Saturday. The Ship Hotel, Dover, is consequently my address. I purpose arriving there to dinner on Tuesday, and no doubt shall either see or hear from you, then, or very soon afterwards.

Ever Faithfully

CD

P.S. Your letter just received. You make too much of my complaint[†10] — that is, you take it too personally. I described the No. to you, just as I should describe it to myself. Nothing more. It makes my visage very rueful, and my pen took the same expression. I have a way (perhaps you never observed it) of expressing myself in a strong manner. I beg to Sub to brighten up.

To MARK LEMON, 27 APRIL 1856

MS Benoliel Collection.

Paris, Sunday Twenty Seventh April, 1856

My Dear Mark. I dispatch this very short note, to let you know my movements.

As the Tents are striking here, and I can't work in the distracted apartments, I shall leave here, as I purpose, by the Day Mail on Tuesday morning, and dine at Dover.

As the Hogarths don't leave Tavistock House 'till Saturday, and as I cannot bear the contemplation of that family at breakfast any more, I think of remaining at Dover (working, I hope, in the mornings) until Saturday, when I shall come up early for the Academy Dinner.

Thus it is then, Sir (I stand with one leg bent, as delivering a Shakespearian message with this preface). From †a and at†a and after dinner time on Tuesday, the brightest and most intelligent of countenances will beam at The Royal Ship Hotel, Dover.

On Sunday morning it will be found at Tavistock House, to let for the day. After which it will remain in that commodious Family Mansion throughout the month.

Kindest love from all
Ever affectionately
CD.

To AUGUSTUS TRACEY,†1 27 APRIL 1856*

MS Texas University Library.

Paris, Champs Elysées 49
Sunday Twenty Seventh April, 1856

My Dear Jack.

I hope I enclose what you mean. Pray tell my friend Henry†2 with my regard that I am proud to be sponsor for him on his entrance into life, and feel gratified by his asking me to say my honest word for him.

This is but a fag-end of a rope to heave overboard to an old Salt floating about on the Hencoop of idleness; but if I were to pay out more, I should lose the post. So I won't yaw about like the dog-vane in a calm, but clap a stopper on and belay.†3

Mrs. Dickens and Georgina unite with me in cordial messages to Mrs. Tracey,[†1] and in best remembrances to Henry. So no more at present from yours ever Edward Cuttle.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?26-7 APRIL 1856]

Extracts in F, VII, v, 620 and 621. Date: according to Forster, before he left Paris (29 Apr); Forster implies shortly before, and that both extracts are from same letter.

The murder over the way (the third or fourth event of that nature in the Champs Elysées since we have been here) seems to disclose the strangest state of things. The Duchess who is murdered lived alone in a great house which was always shut up, and passed her time entirely in the dark. In a little lodge outside lived a coachman (the murderer), and there had been a long succession of coachmen who had been unable to stay there, and upon whom, whenever they asked for their wages, she plunged out with an immense knife, by way of an immediate settlement. The coachman never had anything to do, for the coach hadn't been driven out for years; neither would she ever allow the horses to be taken out for exercise. Between the lodge and the house, is a miserable bit of garden, all overgrown with long rank grass, weeds, and nettles; and in this, the horses used to be taken out to swim — in a dead green vegetable sea, up to their haunches. On the day of the murder there was a great crowd, of course; and in the midst of it up comes the Duke her husband (from whom she was separated), and rings at the gate. The police open the grate. "C'est vrai donc," says the Duke, "que Madame la Duchesse n'est plus?" — "C'est trop vrai, Monseigneur." — "Tant mieux," says the Duke, and walks off deliberately, to the great satisfaction of the assemblage.[†2]

An occurrence in England, three years earlier, and wildly improbable. B.[†3] was with me the other day, and, among other things that he told me, described an extraordinary adventure in his life, at a place not a thousand miles from my "property" at Gadshill, three years ago. He lived at the tavern and was sketching one day when an open carriage came by with a gentleman and lady in it. He was sitting in the same place working at the same sketch, next day, when it came by again. So, another day, when the gentleman got out and introduced himself. Fond of art; lived at the great house yonder, which perhaps he knew; was an Oxford man and a Devonshire squire, but not resident on his estate, for domestic reasons; would be glad to see him to dinner to-morrow. He went, and found, among other things a very fine library. "At your disposition," said the Squire, to whom he had now described himself and his pursuits. "Use it for your writing and drawing. Nobody else uses it." He stayed in the house six months. The lady was a mistress, aged five-and-twenty, and very beautiful, drinking her life away. The Squire was drunken, and utterly depraved and wicked; but an excellent scholar, an admirable linguist, and a great theologian. Two other mad visitors stayed the six months. One, a man well known in Paris here, who goes about the world with a crimson silk stocking in his breast pocket, containing a tooth-brush and an immense quantity of ready money. The other, a college chum of the Squire's, now ruined; with an insatiate thirst for drink; who constantly got up in the middle of the night, crept down to the dining-room, and emptied all the decanters.... B. stayed on in the place, under a sort of devilish fascination to discover what might come of it.... Tea or coffee never seen in the house, and very seldom Water. Beer, champagne, and brandy, were the three drinkables. Breakfast: leg of mutton, champagne, beer, and brandy. Lunch: shoulder of mutton, champagne, beer, and brandy. Dinner: every conceivable dish (Squire's income, £7,000 a-year), champagne, beer, and brandy. The Squire had married a woman of the town from whom he was now separated, but by whom he had a daughter. The mother, to spite the father, had bred the daughter in every conceivable vice. Daughter, then 13, came from school once a month. Intensely coarse in talk, and always drunk. As they drove about the country in two open carriages, the drunken mistress would be perpetually tumbling out of one, and the drunken daughter perpetually tumbling out of the other. At last the drunken mistress drank her stomach away, and began to die on the sofa. Got worse and worse, and was always raving about Somebody's where she had once been a lodger, and perpetually shrieking that she would cut somebody else's heart out. At last she died on the sofa, and, after the funeral, the party broke up. A few months ago, B. met the man with the crimson silk stocking at Brighton, who told him that the Squire was dead "of a broken heart"; that the chum was dead of delirium tremens; and that the daughter was heiress to the fortune. He told me all this, which I fully believe to be true, without any embellishment — just in the off-hand way in which I have told it to you.

To MISS ELLEN CARROLL,[†1] 28 APRIL 1856*

MS British Library. Address: À Mddle. Ellen Carroll | 40 Rue Laffitte | En Ville.

Champs Elysées | Twenty Eighth April, 1856

Madam.

Your letter reaches me when I am on the eve of quitting Paris, and am surrounded by many additions to my usual occupations. If I reply to you briefly, I beg you therefore to attribute my so doing to the heavy demands on my attention, and to no want of interest on my part in the confidence you entrust to me.

I regret to assure you that I am quite unable to advise you how to obtain employment in the way of translation. So far as I know, all the translations that are made from English into French, are made by French people. The kind of translations usually made from French into English, are made by English booksellers who (I assume) employ their own commissioned agents for this purpose. I am not in business-communication with any publisher of this kind, and, even if I were acquainted with your powers of translating freely and faithfully and could honestly commend them, I should be quite at a loss to whom to present to you.

I wish it were in my power to be as efficient towards you in this real working world, as you give me the gratification of informing me that I have been in that shadowy sphere in which much of my life is passed. But it would be cruel in me to disguise the truth, for the selfish pleasure of inspiring you with a false hope.

Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Carroll.

To MRS HANSEN,[†1] 28 APRIL 1856*

MS Mr Alfred Palludan. Address: Affranchie | Mrs. Emmy Hansen | care of | Messrs A & N Hansen & Co. | Copenhagen.

Paris Champs Elysées 49 | Monday Twenty Eighth April 1856.

My Dear Mrs. Hansen.

I am afraid you will have begun, long ago, to think me unmindful of you, and uninterested in your good husband and your pretty child. But this is not the case. When I received your letter, I read it with great pleasure, and I have often thought of it since. Uncertainty, however, as to my summer arrangements has induced me to postpone writing to you from time to time, until I should see the way before me more clearly.

You know by this time, I hope, that I am busily engaged with a new book. I have been passing the winter in Paris, which I leave tomorrow morning. I shall remain in London during May, but not longer, as I design to pass the summer in a little country house at Boulogne Sur Mer. If you should pay a visit to England this year therefore (that is to say before October) I shall not be at my own house, but shall be living at

La Villa des Moulineaux

Boulogne Sur Mer

— and if you should come that way, it would gratify me very much to see you again and to become acquainted with your husband.

Pray give him my regard, and kiss your precious little daughter for me. And believe me as I truly am,

Your friend
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Hansen.

To THE SECRETARY,[†2] EDINBURGH PHILOSOPHICAL INSTITUTION,[†3] [OCTOBER 1855-28 APRIL 1856]

Mention in To Gordon, 2 May 56. Date: written from Paris, i.e. between Oct 55 and 29 Apr 56; more likely towards end of his visit.

To FRAU ALBERTI, 30 APRIL 1856

MS Mr Erich Lehmann.

Dover, England. | Wednesday Thirtieth April, 1856.

My Dear Correspondent.

While I was in Paris (which I only left yesterday), I received your book[†1] and your charming letter, quite safely. I am grieved to say that I do not read German; but my eldest boy, who has been partly educated in Germany and knows the language well, has gone through your book at my side, and has enabled me to understand much of its pure idea, and fine, womanly, true sentiment. I am proud to be associated with it, and thank you more than ever.

It will take me a year from this time, to finish Little Dorrit. After that, I think I really shall begin (Please God) to make myself master of the German language. I lose so much pleasure by not knowing it, and I can learn a language with so little difficulty, that I often reproach myself for not having acquired it long ago. I am not so young as I am in the picture you have seen, for that was painted some fifteen years ago, and I am now 44.[†2] It looks a good deal, on paper, I find; but I believe I am very young-looking still, and I know that I am a very active vigorous fellow, who never knew in his own experience what the word "fatigue" meant.

This is in answer to your first question. In reply to your second question whether I dictate, I answer with a smile that I can as soon imagine a painter dictating his pictures. No. I write every word of my books with my own hand, and do not write them very quickly either. I write with great care and pains (being passionately fond of my art, and thinking it worth any trouble), and persevere, and work hard. I am a great walker besides, and plunge into cold water every day in the dead of winter. When I was last in Switzerland, I found that I could climb as fast as the Swiss Guides. Few strangers think I look like one who passes so many hours alone in his own Study. You would be disappointed perhaps, to see me with a brown-red color in my face?

I very seldom write or talk about myself, but you express your interest so naturally and unaffectedly, that I feel I ought to describe myself in the same spirit.

It makes me sorry to find you describing your health as very delicate. You must remember that in all your literary aspiration, and whether thinking or writing, it is indispensably necessary to relieve that wear and tear of the mind by some other exertion that may be wholesomely set against it. Habitually, I have always had, besides great bodily exercise, some mental pursuit of a light kind with which to vary my labors as an Author. And I have found the result so salutary, that I strongly commend it to the fair friend in whom I am deeply interested.

I am now upon my way home, merely staying here a couple of days to have some walks on the high cliffs by the sea. During the summer, I shall be generally at a little French Country House among pleasant gardens near Boulogne Sur Mer. But that is only a few hours journey from London, and I shall receive my letters and papers from thence, two or three times a week. My best address therefore, is at my own house

Tavistock House

London

— and there I shall always be delighted to hear from you. Perhaps I may see you there one day? If not, I must come to Potsdam after I have learnt German from your book.

Farewell. God bless you! Always believe me, with great regard,

Your affectionate
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Sophie Verena

To WILKIE COLLINS, 30 APRIL 1856

MS Morgan Library.

Ship Hotel, Dover | Thirtieth April, 1856.

My Dear Collins.

Wills brought me your letter this morning, and I am very much interested in knowing what o'Clock it is by the watch with the brass tail to it. You know I am not in the habit of making professions, but I have so strong an interest in you and so true a regard for you, that nothing can come amiss in the way of information as to your well-doing.

How I wish you were well now! For here I am in two of the most charming rooms (a third, a bedroom you could have occupied, close by), overlooking the sea in the gayest way. And here I shall be, for a change, till Saturday. And here we might have been, drinking confusion to Baronetcies, and resolving never to pluck a leaf from the Toady Tree[†1] till this very small world shall have rolled us off! Never mind. All to come — in the fulness of the Arctic Seasons.

I take, as the people say in the Comedies of 80 years ago, "hugely" to the idea you have suggested to Wills. But you mustn't do anything, until you feel it a pleasure; from which sensation (and the disappearance of the East Wind until next winter) I shall date your coming round the corner with a great velocity.

On Saturday morning, I shall be in town about 11, and will come on to Howland Street[†2] about 1. Many thanks for your bulletin academical which I have dispatched straightway to Ary Scheffer.

They were all blooming in Paris yesterday morning. I took the Plorn out in a cabriolet the day before, and his observations on Life in general were wonderful.

Ever Yours
CD.

To VISCOUNT RAYNHAM,[†1] 30 APRIL 1856*

MS Texas University Library.

Dover, Wednesday Thirtieth April | 1856

Dear Lord Raynham

Although I am not so sanguine of the results of my advocacy as you are, I shall be happy to fulfil my promise and to preside at the First Dinner in behalf of the Hospital in which you are so humanly interested.[†2]

Any day in May will suit me; the later in the month, the better.

After Saturday next, I shall be at my own house in town. If the Committee will have the goodness to let me know the appointed day as soon as they shall have fixed it, I shall feel obliged to them.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The | Viscount Raynham

May

To J. T. GORDON,[†3] 2 MAY 1856*

MS Berg Collection.

Dover, Second May 1856.

My Dear Gordon.

I am only now in the receipt of your letter, which has come to hand here, where I am pausing for a rest and a walk on my way home from Paris. It gives me great concern to hear of your having been so seriously ill. Wills, in some wonderful manner, has never communicated the intelligence; and I supposed you to be as robust as ever. Of course I should have written to Mrs. Gordon to enquire about you, if I had had the faintest suspicion of your having been ill.

Take care of yourself, and I dare say you will be the better in the long run for the attack.

I wrote from Paris to the Philosophical Institution, explaining that my work really makes such an expedition out of the question this year, but that I hope to be able to do what they want next year. I will come to you then, with the greatest pleasure.

They are all well at Paris, and would send all manner of messages if they knew me to be writing. They leave on Monday week, and we purpose remaining in Town through May. We then go to Boulogne for the summer.

Little Dorrit, has beaten all her predecessors, in circulation.[†4]

My love to Mrs. Gordon[†1] and Master Charley and all. Poor Andrew![†2] The Bulletin shall be forwarded to Paris.

Ever My Dear Gordon

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

J. T. Gordon Esquire

To MESSRS BRADBURY & EVANS, 3 MAY 1856*

MS University of Texas.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS,
Saturday Third May 1856

My Dear B and E.

Will you send me round, Little Dorrit No. 6,[†3] and a pull of No. 7.[†4]

Faithfully Yours Ever
CHARLES DICKENS

To MESSRS COUTTS & CO., 3 MAY 1856*

MS Sr Francesco Pertile.

London, Third May, 1856.

Messrs. Coutts and Co.

Please to deliver to the Bearer, a New Cheque-Book for me, ————[†5]

CHARLES DICKENS

To MARK LEMON, 4 MAY 1856

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Sunday Fourth May 1856

My Dear Mark

I am up to my eyes in dust! — I will be at home from and after 4.

Stanny couldn't come last night, having an appointment with Mrs. Stanfield.

Ever affecy.

CD.

To MRS CHARLES DICKENS, 5 MAY 1856

Text from MDGH, I, 433-5.

Tavistock House, | Monday, Fifth May, 1856.

My Dear Catherine,

I did nothing at Dover (except for "Household Words"),[†1] and have not begun "Little Dorrit," No. 8,[†2] yet. But I took twenty-mile walks in the fresh air, and perhaps in the long run did better than if I had been at work. The report concerning Scheffer's portrait I had from Ward.[†3] It is in the best place in the largest room,[†4] but I find the general impression of the artists exactly mine. They almost all say that it wants something; that nobody could mistake whom it was meant for, but that it has something disappointing in it, etc. etc.[†5] Stanfield likes it better than any of the other painters, I think. His own picture is magnificent.[†6] And Frith,[†7] in a "Little Child's Birthday Party,"[†8] is quite delightful. There are many interesting pictures. When you see Scheffer, tell him from me that Eastlake,[†9] in his speech at the dinner, referred to the portrait as "a contribution from a distinguished man of genius in France, worthy of himself and of his subject."

[†a]I did the maddest thing last night, and am deeply penitent this morning. We stayed at Webster's till any hour, and they wanted me, at last, to make punch, which couldn't be done when the jug was brought, because (to Webster's burning indignation) there was only one lemon in the house. Hereupon I then and there besought the establishment in general to come and drink punch on Thursday night, after the play; on which occasion it will become necessary to furnish fully the table with some cold viands from Fortnum and Mason's. Mark has looked in since I began this note, to suggest that the great festival may come off at "Household Words" instead. I am inclined to think it a good idea, and that I shall transfer the locality to that business establishment. But I am at present distracted with doubts and torn by remorse.[†a]

The school-room and dining-room I have brought into habitable condition and comfortable appearance. Charley and I breakfast at half-past eight, and meet again at dinner when he does not dine in the City, or has no engagement. He looks very well.

The audiences at Gye's are described to me as absolute marvels of coldness.[†1] No signs of emotion can be hammered out of them. Panizzi[†2] sat next me at the Academy dinner, and took it very ill that I disparaged ____.[†3] The amateurs[†4] here are getting up another pantomime, but quarrel so violently among themselves that I doubt its ever getting on the stage. Webster expounded his scheme for rebuilding the Adelphi to Stanfield and myself last night, and I felt bound to tell him that I thought it wrong from beginning to end. This is all the theatrical news I know.

[†a]I write by this post to Georgy. Love to Mamey, Katey, Harry, and the noble Plorn. I should be glad to see him here.[†a]

Ever affectionately

CD

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 5 MAY 1856

MS Dickens House.

Tavistock House | Monday May Fifth 1856

My Dear Georgy.

You will not be much surprised to hear that I have done nothing yet (except for H. W.), and have only just settled down into a corner of the Schoolroom. The extent to which John and I wallowed in dust for four hours yesterday morning, getting books and papers put away, and making things neat and comfortable about us, you may faintly imagine. At 4 in the afternoon came Stanfield, to whom I no sooner described the notion of the new play than he immediately upset all my new arrangements by making a Proscenium of the chairs and planning the Scenery with walking-sticks. One of the least things he did, was getting on the top of the Long table and hanging over the bar in the middle window where that top sash opens, as if he had got a hinge in the middle of his body. He is immensely excited on the subject. Mark had a Farce ready for the managerial perusal — but it won't do.

†bCatherine will tell you of a tremendous party that is coming off (with me for the unhappy host) next Thursday at half past ten in the evening.†5

When I got out of the dust at last yesterday, I went up to Miss Coutts's. She was out, but Mrs. Brown was at home in company with Dr. Skey.†6 Mrs. Brown talking great nonsense about the French people and their morality, I felt it necessary to defend them; and I said that most reflective persons contemplating the two nations would observe, I thought, one strong leading difference between them; to wit, that in England people dismiss the mention of social evils and vices which do nevertheless exist among them; and that in France people do not dismiss the mention of the same things but habitually recognize their existence. After crying several times "Don't say that! Don't say that! It gives me such pain to hear you say anything that I can't agree in!" (to which I, as many times, replied "Oh! But I must say it, you know, when according to our national vanity and prejudice, you disparage an unquestionably great nation") she pulled out her pocket handkerchief and burst into showers upon showers of tears. Old Skey looked horribly frightened, and, having, as I conceive, caught about a third of the discussion, seemed to be in doubt what I had done. I remained, of course, quite composed and went on (and came off) as if nothing had happened.

I had a good dialogue with Mrs. Birmingham†1 at the Ship. Old Baron Brunow†2 was expected over for two days, and both she and Birmingham almost drove me wild by perpetually coming up with all manner of reports about the Baron, and about the wind deterring him, and Lord Cowley†3 deterring him, and I don't know who deterring him. When I went into breakfast on Friday morning, I found Mrs. Birmingham in the room with my letters, waiting to say "You will be glad to hear Sir, that the Baron left Calais at 7 this morning, and will be here at 9. You will be able to see the Boat Sir from your window." To which I replied with the greatest politeness and in the gentlest accents, "Mrs. Birmingham it becomes at last necessary for me to confess that I don't care a damn about the Baron, and that if he were sunk coming over, it would not make the least difference to me." — She said "*In*deed, Sir?" and went smiling away, rubbing her hands.[†b]

I went to the Dover Theatre on Friday night, which was a miserable spectacle. The pit is boarded over, and it is a drinking and smoking place. It was "for the Benefit of Mrs. A. Green",[†4] and the town had been very extensively placarded with "Don't forget Friday." I made out Four and ninepence (I am serious) in the house, when I went in. We may have warmed up, in the course of the evening, to twelve shillings. A Jew played the Grand Piano, Mrs. A. Green[†4] sang no end of songs (with not a bad voice, poor creature), Mr. Green[†4] sang comic songs fearfully, and danced clog hornpipes capitally, and a miserable woman, shivering in a shawl and bonnet, sat in the side boxes all the evening, nursing Master A. Green,[†4] aged 7 months. It was a most forlorn business, and I should have contributed a sovereign to the Treasury if I had known how.[†5]

I walked to Deal and back that day; and on the previous day walked over the Downs towards Canterbury, in a gale of wind. It was better than still weather, after all, being wonderfully fresh and free.

If the Plorn were sitting at this schoolroom window in the corner, he would see more cats in an hour than he ever saw in his life. I never saw so many, I think, as I have seen since yesterday morning.

There is a painful picture of a great deal of merit (Egg has bought it) in the Exhibition, painted by the man who did those little Interiors of Forster's.[†1] It is called the death of Chatterton.[†2] The dead figure is a good deal like Arthur Stone; and I was touched on Saturday to see that tender old file standing before it, crying under his spectacles at the idea of seeing his son dead. It was a very tender manifestation of his gentle old boiling, bothering heart.[†3]

This sums up my news, which is no news at all. Kiss the Plorn for me, and expound to him that I am always looking forward to meeting him again, among the birds and flowers in the garden on the side of the hill at Boulogne.

Ever affecy. CD.

[†a]P.S. Your Boulogne boat will be in the afternoon (somewhere about 4) and you will not get to London before 11.[†a]

To BENJAMIN WEBSTER, 5 MAY 1856

MS Mr and Mrs Donald F. Hyde.

Tavistock House | Monday Fifth May 1856

My Dear Webster.

From Dispatches I have received this morning, I conclude the proposed Wednesday's Gathering to be abandoned and off.

Thursday's appointment of course remains. Will you remind Madame Celeste[†4] that I said Half past 10, last night; but that I had no need to say any time, in as much as the Punch shall be in high condition as soon after the end of the first piece[†1] as shall suit her convenience.

A horrible misgiving comes over me in the Easterly repentance of this morning, that I am engaged to Forster for next Sunday.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To T. L. ALDRIDGE,[†2] 6 MAY 1856*

MS Private.

Tavistock House, London | Sixth May 1856.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his Compliments to Mr. Aldridge, and begs, in reply to Mr. Aldridge's note, to state that he has great pleasure in subscribing for five copies of the Original Poems.[†3] Mr. Wills, Household Words office, will receive them, and pay the subscription.

To R. FRIEND,[†4] 6 MAY 1856

Summary from Sotheby's catalogue, July 1982; MS 1 p.; dated Tavistock House, London, 6 May 56; addressed R. Friend.

Replying to his letter received that morning, he begs to assure him that his engagements make it impossible to accept the very welcome invitation of the Working Men's Institute.

To [?G. G.] LOWNE,[†5] 6 MAY 1856*

MS Private.

Tavistock House | Sixth May, 1856.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Lowne, and begs to express his regret that he cannot have the gratification of complying with Mr. Lowne's request. He wishes to avoid sitting for any Portrait whatever. If he sat to the gentleman in question, that departure from his resolution would necessitate the fulfilment of conditional promises to others who have a prior claim upon him, and he must therefore unwillingly excuse himself.

To BENJAMIN WEBSTER, 7 MAY 1856

MS Houghton Library, Harvard.

Tavistock House | Wednesday May Seventh 1856.

My Dear Webster

An idea in the nature of an inspiration has occurred to me this morning, in connexion with the Punch project.

I was contemplating my dismantled Study, with the Carpet in the corner like an immense roly-poly pudding, and all the chairs upside down as if they had turned over like birds and died with their legs in the air, when it flashed upon me Why should I bring the ladies and you so far to a dreary house, when there is the Household Words office on your way home? I instantly changed the Venue, sent down certain bottles to Wellington Street, and shall expect you there instead. Pray tell Madame Celeste so, with my kind regard.

If there should be a small box disengaged tomorrow night, will you leave it for Stanfield and me?[†1]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To CLARKSON STANFIELD, 8 MAY 1856*

MS Yale University Library.

Tavistock House | Thursday Evening Eight May | 1856.

My Dear Stanny.

A knock-down blow! — I am desperately sorry, but there is no help for it, and I feel you do quite right.

Ever affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS CHARLES DICKENS, 9 MAY 1856

MS British Library. Address: France | A Madame Charles Dickens | 49 Avenue des champs Elysées | Paris.

Household Words Office | Friday Ninth May 1856

My dearest Catherine

There has been such a Gale blowing for two days (it blew down one of the large lilac trees in the front court), that I received your letter only this morning. No French Mail could get in yesterday.

I had no doubt that Hachette's payment would be made.

From what Georgy tells me, it appears to me that you will all require a new passport. I write by this post, to tell her what to do and how to get it.

The boat on Wednesday the 14th. (I have engaged to dine with the Emerson Tennents[†1] that day at some unheard of hour — about 9, I think) leaves Boulogne at 5, 40. You leave Folkestone again, at 8,50, and arrive in London at 11,20. Some supper shall be ready at Tavistock House.

We have made a very different place of that establishment, by clearing out the dust on the first floor, where it lay an inch thick. We have swept and washed the Study and Drawing Room, opened the windows, aired the carpets, and purified every room from the roof to the hall. I have barely got to work yet, on Little Dorrit.

Maclise has given me the most wonderful account of Mrs. Colburn[†2] on the occasion of the Richmond Dinner. "By God Sir the depreciation that has taken place in that woman is fearful! She has no blood Sir in her body — no color — no voice — is all scrunched and squeezed together — and seems to me in deep affliction — while Forster Sir is rampant and raging, and presenting a contrast beneath which you sink into the dust. She may come round again — may get fat — may get cheerful — may get a voice to articulate with, but by the blessed Star of Morning Sir she is now a sight to behold!"

Love to Mary, Katey, Harry, and the Noble Plorn.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 9 MAY 1856

MS Dickens House.

Household Words Office | Friday Ninth May 1856.

My Dear Georgy. It appears to me that the whole party will necessarily require a new passport. In case this note should not arrive, through bad weather, in time to enable you to get one in Paris[†1] on Saturday, you can go to that old ass of a Consul at Boulogne[†2] and get it there; but it would be best done in Paris. I don't think the Embassy is the right place, but the Consul's office. The Consul is a Mr. Freeborn or Freeman,[†3] I think, and you can instantly find out where his office is, by asking at Galignani's.[†4]

The party came off here, last night, with great success. Cold collation of pigeon pie, collared red partridge,[†5] ham, roast fowls, and lobster salads. One hot dish, consisting of a most immense heap of asparagus. Considerable quantities of punch were disposed of, and Charley and I got home at 1/2 past 2. I went to the Adelphi first, and saw a poor piece enough. On the previous night, went to Drury Lane to see "Mrs. Florence[†6] in the Yankee Housekeeper".[†7] A very quaint good thing. What was my amazement on coming here that day (Wednesday) to meet Stanfield, Forster and Maclise — to find Macready here! He had just come up by Railway, bringing Katey with him to stay at Fox's.[†8] We improvised an admirable dinner here to his great delight, and he went back next day.

I am "going" to work furiously. Am only just beginning after all!

Ever affectionately

CD.

To LIEUT-COLONEL W. P. WAUGH,[†9] 9 MAY 1856

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Friday Ninth May, 1856

Dear Colonel Waugh.

It is with great reluctance and regret that I express my inability to comply at present with the request so very agreeably and cordially preferred to me by Mrs. Waugh and yourself. It would give me real pleasure to return my cheerful assent to it, if I could do so at any moderate inconvenience and at the cost of any reasonable uneasiness. But I am so busy with my book just now, that to enter upon the getting-up of a Play with the attention and completeness that alone make that pursuit interesting to me, would be to undertake a painful labor. I honestly assure you that I have not the time for it, and that my thoughts are too much occupied.

I cannot easily tell you with what truthfulness I reciprocate your wish for our being better acquainted, or what a lively remembrance I always bear of your generous hospitality and your charming house and family. But the necessity I am often under of preserving a perfect command over my time, and of adapting all my habits to my Art, involves many little sacrifices of social enjoyment — of which I entreat you to accept these excuses as a notable specimen.

And in deed I have even a dramatic reason (in addition to the beckoning hand of Little Dorrit) for betaking myself resolutely to country quiet and country hours until the late Autumn. We have projects for another Play at home at Christmas time, and I must earn the leisure for that enjoyment in the future by diligent present work.

If we do not meet in the meanwhile, I shall hope to be so fortunate as to count you and Mrs. Waugh among the audience to our new piece. In any case I shall not lose you for the want of searching you out and giving you abundant notice.

It gives me great concern to learn that you are so unwell. But I know nobody whom the East wind has not blown into bed. Weather-wise people say it is to last until Midsummer; I have a kind of wicked joy in knowing that it is as bad in Paris, and that noses are as blue in the Champs Elysées as in Hyde Park. My family write me that it is black there too, and that the Sun gives in continually.

With kind compliments and regard to Mrs. Waugh, and best wishes for a better wind and your recovery,

Believe me | Dear Colonel Waugh | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

I am vexed not to have been at my dismantled house when Mrs. Wrottesley[†1] and your daughter called — but I am glad to have missed them too, when I think of the tremendous danger I should have fallen into, if I had seen them, of being utterly powerless to say No.[†2]

To BENJAMIN WEBSTER, 9 MAY 1856*

MS British Library. Address: Private | Benjamin Webster Esquire | Theatre Royal Adelphi.

Tavistock House. | Friday Ninth May, 1856.

My Dear Webster.

I am afraid that I must stick to Lincolns Inn Fields. It was an old agreement when I was last in town. I should have been very glad to come to you on such an occasion, and if I should escape will come after dinner.

Head ache! — There is no such thing in my punch.

Ever Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS JAMESON,[†1] 10 MAY 1856

Extract in A. Edward Newton Collection, Parke-Bernet Catalogue, Apr 1941; addressed Mrs. Jameson; dated Tavistock House, 10 May 56.

you are perfectly right in supposing the article[†2] to have been written by a lady. She is an officer's wife who knows camps well.[†3]

To GEORGE MEREDITH,[†4] 10 MAY 1856

MS Dickens House.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS,
Saturday Tenth May 1856

Dear Sir

Allow me to thank you very cordially, for the book you have had the kindness to leave for me here inscribed with my name.[†5] I take it home tonight to read, and shall not be unworthy to enter on its perusal, as one of the most constant and delighted readers of those "Arabian Entertainments" of older date that they have ever had, perhaps. A new Arabian Tale is charming to me in the promise it holds out, and I hope I may say that I know already you are not the man to disappoint me.

Dear Sir | Yours faithfully and obliged

CHARLES DICKENS

George Meredith Esquire

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 12 MAY 1856*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street | Piccadilly.

Tavistock House | Twelfth May 1856.

My Dear Miss Coutts

I have enquired about cleaners of pictures, and am assured that the most honest and skilful of the craft is one Mr. Bentley of No. 128 Sloane Street.[†1] When the fire took place down at Mr. Thomas Baring's country house,[†2] in which several famous pictures were greatly damaged, he was employed to repair them; and acquired great celebrity by the dexterity he shewed. This is so distinct a recommendation, and the reference to Mr. Baring is so easy, that I do not confuse his name in this note with any others of the trade.

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 13 MAY 1856

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Thirteenth May, 1856.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I have indeed read this letter with great emotion.[†3] If you had done nothing else in maintaining the Home — instead of having done so much that we know of, to which is to be added all the chance and bye-way Good that has sprung out of it in the lives of these women: which I believe to be enormous — what a great reward this case alone would be!

Unfortunately I was out last evening. I went to the Egyptian Hall,[†4] and had left home for the Athenaeum before your note arrived. I will come to you on Thursday at half past four. I hope you got well out of the Animalculae — your account of which enjoyment in prospect, made me laugh heartily.

I am not without hope that in the winter nights when we are alone here, you and Mrs. Brown may be induced to take some interest in what I dare say you never saw — the growth of a play from the beginning. Mr. Collins and I have hammered out a curious idea for a new one, which he is to write, and which we purpose, please God, to bring out on Charley's birthday.[†5] Mr. Stanfield has already been hanging out of the centre back-window of the schoolroom at the risk of his life, inventing wonderful effects and measuring the same. If you and O[†6] were to come into the secret from the commencement, and see all the ways and means, and the gradual improvement of it, and the trials of patience to which my young people are submitted, and the general ingenuity and good humour, I think it would pass a few dark evenings pleasantly.

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To THOMAS JACKSON,[†1] [?13-14 MAY 1856]

Mention in To Stanfield, 14 May 56. Date: no doubt written the same or previous day.

To CLARKSON STANFIELD, 14 MAY 1856*

MS Yale University Library.

Tavistock House | Fourteenth May, 1856.

My Dear Stanny.

I forget what Mr. Jackson's house is called.[†2] Will you be so kind as to send him in the enclosed letter? It refers to the Canada Railway,[†3] and an endeavour I am making to do something to help a sister and brother[†4] to go out to Canada with some sort of light upon their way.

All this day have I been singing (without knowing a word of it), that song about the Devil's stitch in the sewn-up hammock.[†5] I had no idea by the bye, that you were such a horrible deceiver as a story Forster told me last night proves you to be! "I assure you my dear boy", said he with that vigorous whisper which seems to go in at your ear and come out at the sole of your boot, "I assure you my dear boy, that not only was Stanny taken aback by the secret I imparted to him the other day,[†6] but that he did sincerely and thoroughly believe that I was going to tell him I was about to turn Catholic! Now, there is no mistake whatever, about that Dickens. He was literally in expectation of that disclosure."

Oho! thinks I, looking at a rubicund countenance across the table, what a rosy impostor you are my boy![†7]

Ever affectionately
CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 16 MAY 1856*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts.

The Home | Friday Evening, Sixteenth May | 1856.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

Connor[†8] will be here to see you at 12.

On looking into the cases, and consulting with Mrs. Marchmont,[†9] I think that

Beaver
Daley
Chalk and Jones

may now be sent abroad. I doubt if we should make much more of them by keeping them longer — we might make less. Jones has been here only about nine months, but is a strong hard working healthy girl — a little rough, and not very bright intellectually — whom it seems a sort of waste to keep here. She is commended as very truthful.

It occurs to me to night, that it would be a very good thing if I were to address a letter to the Inspectors on duty at the Chief Station Houses,[†1] stating the objects of this place, and the good that might come of their recommending fit persons. I think they might hit some wretched cases at the very crisis of their fate. Will you think of this, before I see you on Sunday?

Ever Faithfully Yours

CD.

To VISCOUNT RAYNHAM, 16 MAY 1856

Extract in Maggs Bros catalogue No. 436 (1923); MS 2 pp.; dated Tavistock House, 16 May 56; addressed Lord Raynham.

Mentioning his plan of retiring to Boulogne for Country-ease and country work through the long summer holidays.

To DANIEL MACLISE, 17 MAY 1856*

MS Private.

Tavistock House | Seventeenth May 1856.

My Dear Mac.

Olliffe[†2] and his wife are coming to dine here on Wednesday the 21st. at halfpast six. I know it would give them both pleasure, and do him good, to see you. Will you come? We shall have nobody else, for indeed we have only the dining room and schoolroom furnished.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To THOMAS ROSS AND JOHN KENNY,[†1] [19 MAY 1856]

Text from The Times, 20 May 1856.[†2]

Tavistock-house, Monday, May 19, 1856.

Gentlemen,

I have received a letter signed by you, which I assume to be written mainly on behalf of what are called working men and their families, inviting me to attend a meeting in our parish vestry-hall, this evening, on the subject of the stoppage of the Sunday bands in the parks.[†3] I thoroughly agree with you that those bands have afforded 'an innocent and healthful enjoyment on the Sunday afternoons, to which the people have a right;'[†4] but I think it essential that the working people should of themselves, and by themselves, assert that right. They have been informed, on the high authority of their First Minister[†5] (lately rather in want of House of Commons' votes, I am told) that they are almost indifferent to it. The correction of that mistake — if official omniscience can be mistaken — lies with themselves. In case it should be considered by the meeting (which I prefer for this reason not to attend) expedient to unite with other metropolitan parishes in forming a fund for the payment of such expenses as may be incurred in peaceably and numerously representing to the governing powers that the harmless recreation they have taken away is very much wanted, I beg to put down my name as a subscriber of 10*l.*, and I am your faithful servant,

CHARLES DICKENS

To C. ROACH SMITH,[†6] 19 MAY 1856

Mention in Catalogue of the Library of J. A. Clark, Sotheby, Wilkinson & Hodge, Apr 1895; dated 19 May 56; addressed C. Roach Smith; with envelope.

Accepting a book.[†7]

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 20 MAY 1856

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Night Twentieth May | 1856.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I have been very much interested in the pamphlet.[†1] There is nothing in it that I see, demanding correction, except the paragraph which you pointed out to me and which I marked in Stratton Street.

Mrs. Thompson[†2] has written me a letter, and I have seen her since its receipt. The lodging-letting does not succeed sufficiently well to be pursued. In June the notice she has given to quit her house, will expire. She will then, by the sale of her furniture and so forth, have from a hundred to a hundred and fifty pounds. With this sum, she desires nothing more than to emigrate to Canada along with her child,[†3] if she can see any reasonably hopeful prospect of getting employment as a house-keeper, superintendent, attendant on children, companion, manager, any honest thing. She writes very well, is a good plain accountant, and generally neat and handy. Does any means of helping her, occur to you? I am trying among Canada Railway people, but I fear uselessly, as their schemes are in a bad way.[†4] I should be very glad to hear from you on this, at your leisure.

You will have fine weather for the new house,[†5] I hope, and will enjoy it. With kind regard to Mrs. Brown,

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

To JOSHUA FIELD,[†6] 21 MAY 1856

Text from N, II, 774.

Tavistock House | Twenty-First May 1856

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Field, and begs to say that he has, at this time, reasons for declining to sign the enclosed requisition.[†7] He does so, without at all disputing (it is hardly necessary for him to remark), the general principle.[†1]

To JOHN KENNY,[†2] 21 MAY 1856

MS Dickens House.

Tavistock House | Twenty First May, 1856.

Sir.

I have received your letter of yesterday's date, with great interest and pleasure. It is particularly agreeable to me to learn that a Metropolitan Committee has been formed, and that a deputation requires permission to wait upon Lord Palmerston; because I am perfectly sure that the people of this City are only disparaged and placed at a disadvantage, when their moderate desires, their patience, good sense and good humour, fail to find adequate expression in high places.

I am inclined to think with you that Lord Palmerston is really favorable in this matter;[†3] nevertheless he has a famous predecessor in the pages of Shakespeare, who did not get on particularly well by letting "I dare not" wait upon "I would."[†4]

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. John Kenny

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 22 MAY 1856*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Prospect Hill | Reading.

Tavistock House | Thursday Twenty Second May 1856.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

You remember Mrs. Matthews,[†5] whom I told sometime since, as you and I agreed, that my friend could do nothing more for her? This morning's post brings me the enclosed letter. I do not send it with any idea of advocating her case, but merely because I hardly feel it right to answer it without having placed it before you.

With love to Mrs. Brown

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

To MARK LEMON, 22 MAY 1856

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Thursday Twenty Second May 1856.

My Dear Mark

Stanny does go with us tomorrow.

Ever Affecy.

CD.

To E. M. WARD, [23] MAY 1856

MS Mr A. R. Davis. Date: misdated by CD; Friday was 23 May.

Tavistock House | Friday Twenty Second May | 1856.

My Dear Ward

A new illustration of "Never Despair"![†1] I can come on Monday, and shall be delighted to do so.

Very faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

E. M. Ward Esquire

To UNIDENTIFIED STAFF SURGEON, [?23] MAY 1856

Mention in To Miss Coutts, 27 May 56. Date: written a few days before.

To MARK LEMON, 26 MAY 1856

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

Tavistock House | Twenty Sixth May, 1856.

My Dear Mark.

Any time between 2 and 5 tomorrow (if you will appoint one in the course of the day), will suit me better. I shall not only have more leisure after my morning's work than before, but shall have a clearer power of attention.

The concluding paragraph of your note makes me all but lunatic with wonder.

Ever affecy.

CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 27 MAY 1856

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Prospect Hill | Reading.

Tavistock House | Twenty Seventh May 1856.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I have made enquiries about the Staff Surgeon[†2] who wanted the Fifty Pounds (as we agreed), and there is no doubt of his being a reality, and of his holding a responsible appointment, and of his representation being perfectly true.

I wrote to him to say that I was not rich and had a fearful number of claims upon me, and could not lend him such a sum. But that a friend of mine, generous and able in more cases than I should trust myself to mention, might — I by no means, said would — do so, if satisfied of his merits. That if, on this slight encouragement, he could send me any kind of corroboration, himself, I would shew it to that friend, but could give him no other assurance than that his confidence should be respected.

I enclose his reply, and its accompanying letters. Will you send them back to me with your decision?

Your letter from Oxford I received this morning. A beautiful place indeed! The journey down from Oxford to Reading, on the Thames, is more charming than one can describe in words. I rowed down last June, through miles upon miles of water lilies, lying on the water close together, like a fairy pavement.

I have held a Committee of One at the Bush, where all was going on thoroughly well. Mr. Illingworth's[†1] case I will immediately see to.

With love to Mrs. Brown

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

To THE DEAN OF ST. PAUL'S,[†2] 27 MAY 1856

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Twenty Seventh May 1856.

My Dear Dean.

An odd idea has come into my head that a very striking idea of blazing London on Thursday night,[†3] might be got from the top of St. Paul's, and might suggest a remarkable description. Could I be admitted (say with three companions for company) to the great outer gallery? I can understand the necessity of having no light, and perhaps of being kept there all night. I would willingly abide by any such conditions if so singular an experiment could be conceded to me. Also I should understand, of course, the design to be strictly private among the people concerned.

Can — and will — your authority help me in this matter? If so, I shall be very heartily obliged to you.

Very faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

The Very Reverend | The Dean of St. Paul's.

To THE DEAN OF ST PAUL'S, 29 MAY 1856

MS Mr D. C. L. Holland.

Tavistock House | Thursday Twenty Ninth May | 1856.

My Dear Dean.

I am very much obliged to you for your kind letter, and (remaining constant in my terrible purpose), will be with you tonight at 8. As I had only mentioned the matter to Mr. Lemon before hearing from you, I will bring only him.

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To F. M. EVANS, [?8-29 MAY 1856]

Mention in To Lemon, ?8-29 May 56. Date: written the same day.

To MARK LEMON, [?8-29 MAY 1856]

Text from The Unpublished Letters of Dickens to Mark Lemon, ed. Walter Dexter, 1927, p. 160. Date: May, according to N, II, 772, therefore any Thursday after 3 May.

Tavistock House | Thursday evening.

My Dear Mark,

If you like to transfer Evans to this mansion (and I leave a note at yours summoning him round here), I shall be delighted to see him.

Yours ever affectionately,
CHARLES DICKENS

To RICHARD MONCKTON MILNES,[†1] 31 MAY 1856*

MS Trinity College, Cambridge.

Tavistock House | Thirty First May 1856

My Dear Mr Milnes

Allow me to have the pleasure of presenting to you, Mr Palfrey of Boston — the gentleman whose main object in visiting England, I have already explained to you.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

R. M. Milnes Esquire

To J. G. PALFREY,[†1] 31 MAY 1856*

MS Houghton Library, Harvard. Address: — Palfrey Esquire | 19 Regent Street | St. James's.

Tavistock House | Saturday Thirty First May | 1856.

My Dear Sir

I owe you many apologies for this delay in pursuing the subject of our conversation at Mr. Grattan's[†2] dinner. But my short present stay in London has been so constantly occupied by hard work at my desk every day — by the business consequent upon some months of absence — and by the necessity of going on several excursions into Kent — that I have hardly had an hour to call my own, since I saw you.

I enclose a note of introduction to Mr. Milnes, and have also made him acquainted with your object.[†3] In October I shall return home to my usual settled abode, and, if you should not by that time have returned to yours, I hope you will give me the pleasure of that more favorable opportunity of improving your acquaintance.

My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

— Palfrey Esquire.

June

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 1 JUNE 1856

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Prospect Hill | Reading.

Tavistock House | Sunday First June 1856 | (Mid Winter)[†4]

My Dear Miss Coutts. I have been so incessantly worked since the receipt of your last note, by Little Dorrit, Household Words, and business, that I have let two posts go by without answering it.

You will see by the enclosed that Mrs. Mathews[†5] (who assuredly has a deadly perseverance), has written again.

What the Staff Surgeon wants, is a Loan of Fifty Pounds.

The letters of the Young La Touches[†6] (which have naturally interested me very much), and the letter of Rhena Pollard[†7] (ditto) I have returned under cover to you at Stratton Street. The two letters concerning the death of Harriet Tanner, I have returned for Mrs. Marchmont. There is a poor Mother, who enquired after her at the Home not long ago; and I think that for her satisfaction Mrs. Marchmont had best copy the passages that refer to the girl.[†1]

The Schools Report,[†2] I have also returned to Stratton Street.

You cannot imagine what a Wonderful sight Illuminated and Fireworked London was, from the top of St. Pauls.[†3] I must try my hand at a description of it in Household Words.[†4] In the next No. but one, by the bye, I wish you would read an opening paper of mine, with the rather alarming title of "The demeanour of Murderers".[†5] It is a quiet protest against the newspaper descriptions of Mr. Palmer[†6] in Court:[†7] shewing why they are harmful to the public at large, and why they are, even in themselves, altogether blind and wrong. I think it rather a curious and serviceable essay!

I am writing in a great coat and a fur cap.

With my (cold and damp) love to Mrs. Brown

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

To THE DUKE OF DEVONSHIRE,[†8] 1 JUNE 1856

MS Devonshire Collections, Chatsworth.

Tavistock House | Sunday First June 1856

My Dear Duke of Devonshire

Allow me to thank you with all my heart, for your kind remembrance of me on Thursday night. My house were already engaged to go to Miss Coutts's, and I to — the top of St. Paul's, whence the sight was most wonderful! But seeing that your cards gave me leave to present some person not named, I conferred them on my excellent friend Doctor Elliotson[†9] whom I found, with some Fireworkless little boys, in a desolate condition, and raised to the Seventh Heaven of happiness. You are so fond of making people happy, that I am sure you approve.

Always Your faithful and much obliged
CHARLES DICKENS[†10]

The | Duke of Devonshire

To WILLIAM T. DYER,[†1] 3 JUNE 1856

MS Private.

The Home, Shepherd's Bush | Third June 1856

Dear Sir

In answer to your note I beg to say that I have seen Dr. Waggett[†2] on the case of the girl "Mason," and that the Matron of the Elizabeth Fry Refuge[†3] will immediately receive a communication from this place empowering her to send the young woman here to be admitted.

Dear Sir | Faithfully yours
CHARLES DICKENS

William T. Dyer Esquire

To HENRY BICKNELL,[†4] 4 JUNE 1856

Mention in Parke-Bernet catalogue, Dec 1947; MS 1 p.; dated [London], 4 June 56; addressed Henry D. Bicknell.

Referring to an appointment.

To DR F. H. F. QUIN,[†5] [?4-5 JUNE 1856][†6]

Summary in John Wilson catalogue, June 1980; MS 1 p.; dated Saturday; addressed Dr F. H. F. Quin. Date: Just before 5 June 56: see below.

Explaining that Professor Fergusson[†7] would find his place at table in the right hand corner near to Daniel[†8] and Harvey.[†9]

To DANIEL MACLISE, [?EARLY JUNE 1856]

Extract in Maggs Bros catalogue, No. 258 (1910); MS 1 p.; addressed Daniel Maclise; dated Athenaeum. Date: perhaps referring to the same visit to Cremorne Gardens arranged with Lemon on 5 June.

My Dear Mac

I shall not order dinner till the manager returns on the chance of your being available for an al fresco entertainment at Cremorne.

To MARK LEMON, 5 JUNE 1856

Extract in N, II, 777; dated Tavistock House, 5 June 56.

I am delighted to find you in such force and coming up with so wet a sail,[†1] Hooray! Certainly as to Webster ... at six sharp, the notes of the cheerful Dick will be heard in the leafy groves of Cremorne.[†2]

To FRANK STONE, [?3 MAY-6 JUNE 1856]*

MS Benoliel Collection. Date: before 2nd half of 1856 and when CD at Tavistock House; handwriting supports.

Tavistock House | Wednesday

My Dear Stone. As you know your Gardener, I think you had best propose the arrangement to him.[†3] I find I am free for the front piece of ground[†4] too.

Ever affecy.

CD.

To WILKIE COLLINS, 6 JUNE 1856

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Sixth June 1856

My Dear Collins

I have never seen anything about myself in Print, which has much correctness in it — any biographical account of myself, I mean. I do not supply such particulars when I am asked for them by editors and compilers, simply because I am asked for them every day. If you want to prime Forgues[†5] you may tell him without fear of being wrong, That I was born at Portsmouth on the 7th. of February 1812. That my father was in the Navy Pay office. That I was taken by him to Chatham when I was very young, and lived and was educated there till I was — 12 or 13,[†1] I suppose. That I was then put to a school near London,[†2] where (as at the other place) I distinguished myself like a Brick. That I was put in the office of a Solicitor,[†3] a friend of my father's,[†4] and didn't much like it, and after a couple of years (as well as I can remember) applied myself with a celestial or diabolical energy to the study of such things as would qualify me to be a first-rate Parliamentary Reporter[†5] — at that time a calling pursued by many clever men who were young at the Bar. That I made my debut in the Gallery (at about 18, I suppose), engaged on a Voluminous publication no longer in existence, called The Mirror of Parliament.[†6] That when the Morning Chronicle was purchased by Sir John Easthope[†7] and acquired a large circulation I was engaged there, and that I remained there until I had begun to publish Pickwick; when I found myself in a condition to relinquish that part of my labors.[†8] That I left the reputation behind me of being the best and most rapid Reporter ever known,[†9] and that I could do anything in that way under any sort of circumstances — and often did. (I dare say I am at this present writing, the best Short Hand Writer in the World.)

That I began, without any interest or introduction of any kind, to write fugitive pieces for the old Monthly Magazine,[†10] when I was in the Gallery for the Mirror of Parliament. That my faculty for descriptive writing was seized upon, the moment I joined the Morning Chronicle, and that I was liberally paid there, and handsomely acknowledged, and wrote the greater part of the short descriptive "Sketches by Boz" in that paper.[†11] That I had been a writer when I was a mere Baby, and always an Actor from the same age.

That I married the daughter of a Writer to the Signet in Edinburgh[†12] who was the great friend and assistant of Scott, and who first made Lockhart[†13] known to him.

And That here I am.[†14]

Finally, if you want any dates of publication of books, tell Wills and he'll get them for you.

This is the first time I ever set down even these particulars, and, glancing them over, I feel like a Wild Beast in a Caravan, describing himself in the keeper's absence.[†1]

[†a]With my kindest regard to Mrs. Glutch.[†2]

Ever Faithfully

CD.

I made a Speech last night at the London Tavern,[†3] at the end of which all the Company sat holding their napkins to their eyes with one hand, and putting the other into their pockets. A hundred people or so, contributed Nine Hundred Pounds, then and there.[†a]

To PETER CUNNINGHAM, 6 JUNE 1856

MS Dickens House.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS,
Friday Sixth June 1856

My Dear Cunningham

A most admirable Narrative[†4] indeed! — With your leave I will take the other book[†5] to Boulogne, and give it you back there.

Ever Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

To RICHARD MONCKTON MILNES, 6 JUNE 1856*

MS Trinity College, Cambridge.

Tavistock House | Sixth June 1856

My Dear Mr Milnes

Mr Palfrey's address is 19 Regent Street,[†6] but I dare say he will have called upon you by this time.

I was in the country on the day when you kindly asked me to meet Macaulay,[†1] or I would have come with pleasure. Tomorrow morning we leave town for the Summer, to the end that I may write in a garden of peace, and swarm up and down all the hills near Boulogne.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

R. M. Milnes Esquire

To ALFRED HACHETTE,[†2] 9 JUNE 1856

MS Librairie Hachette.

Villa des Moulineaux | Boulogne sur mer
Monday June Ninth, 1856

Dear Sir

I regret that in the great pressure of business occasioned by my leaving town, I was so much occupied that I was not at home on either of the two occasions when you called at my house.

On looking over your list, I find the following names of living authors now in England.

Ainsworth | Bulwer | Carlyle | D'Israeli | Lady Georgiana Fullerton[†3] | Mrs. Gore | Jerrold | Miss Kavanagh[†4] | Lewes | Macaulay | Thackeray | Warren[x†5] | Mrs. Marsh | Miss Jewsbury[†6] | Wilkie Collins
All these ladies and gentlemen, with the exception of the one name against which I have put a cross, I know.[†7] Do you wish to have a letter of introduction to each? I do not quite understand from the letter I have received from your father, what service you wish me to render you. Neither do I understand what you wish to know from me in reference to authors who have long been dead. As Fielding, Smollett, Sterne, &c.

If you will explain what you require to know, I shall be happy to render you any assistance in my power. In the meantime I return your list,[†8] with the addresses of several of the writers mentioned in it, written against their names.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Monsieur Alfred Hachette

To LORD LYTTELTON,[†1] [9 JUNE 1856]

Mention in Ogden Goelet Catalogue Jan 1935, dated 9 June 56; addressed Lord Lyttelton.

Requesting Lord Lyttelton to present a petition to the House of Lords about obtaining educational advantages for actors at Dulwich College.[†2]

To BENJAMIN WEBSTER, 9 JUNE 1856

Mention in Sotheby catalogue Jan 1883; MS 1 1/4 pp.; dated 9 June 185[6]. Address (MS British Library): Angleterre. | Benjamin Webster Esquire | Theatre Royal Adelphi | London. PM 9 Juin 56.

Sending him notes of introduction to Lords Tenterden,[†3] Granville etc.[†4]

To HENRY AUSTIN, 11 JUNE 1856*

MS Morgan Library.

Villa des Moulineaux, Boulogne S/M
Wednesday Eleventh June 1856

My Dear Henry.

I very rarely mention any public case to Miss Coutts. Those are almost always instances of private distress in which I act for her.

Nor do I think it very likely that she would feel this claim strongly. Therefore if I were you, I would not individually address her on the subject. Let the Secretaries[†5] do so, in the usual way. If she should then refer it to me, of course my good word shall not be wanting.

Will you put me down for £10, and I will either send it in the first parcel I send to town or bring it the first time I come.

Ever affectionately
CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?11 JUNE 1856]

Extracts in F, VII, iv, 600. Date: He left London for Boulogne 7 June 56; Forster implies both extracts from same letter (see below).

He did not expect for another month to see land from the running sea of Little Dorrit.[†1]

After dawdling about his garden for a few days[†2] with surprising industry in a French farmer garb of blue blouse, leathern belt, and military cap which he had mounted as the only one for complete comfort, ... Now to work again — to work! The story lies before me, I hope, strong and clear.[†3] Not to be easily told; but nothing of that sort is[†4] to be easily done that I know of.

To MARK LEMON, 15 JUNE 1856

Text from MDGH, I, 439-40.

Villa des Moulineaux, Boulogne | Sunday, June 15th, 1856.

My dear old Boy

This place is beautiful — a burst of roses. Your friend Beaucourt (who will not put on his hat), has thinned the trees and greatly improved the garden. Upon my life, I believe there are at least twenty distinct smoking-spots expressly made in it.

And as soon as you can see your day in next month for coming over with Stanny and Webster, will you let them both know? I should not be very much surprised if I were to come over and fetch you, when I know what your day is. Indeed, I don't see how you could get across properly without me.

There is a fête here to-night in honour of the Imperial baptism,[†5] and there will be another to-morrow.[†6] The Plorn has put on two bits of ribbon (one pink and one blue), which he calls "companys," to celebrate the occasion. The fact that the receipts of the fêtes are to be given to the sufferers by the late floods[†7] reminds me that you will find at the passport office a tin-box, condescendingly and considerately labelled in English:

FOR THE OVERFLOWINGS, which the chief officer clearly believes to mean, for the sufferers from the inundations.

I observe more Mingles in the laundresses' shops, and one inscription, which looks like the name of a duet or chorus in a playbill, "Here they mingle."

Will you congratulate Mrs. Lemon, with our loves, on her gallant victory over the recreant cabman?

Walter has turned up, rather brilliant on the whole; and that (with shoals of remembrances and messages which I don't deliver) is all my present intelligence.

Ever affectionately

[CD]

To BENJAMIN WEBSTER, [15] JUNE 1856

MS University of Michigan. Date: Sunday was 15th.

Villa des Moulineaux, Boulogne
Sunday June Fourteenth 1856.

My Dear Webster.

When you have got your Dulwich petition[†1] from the administrators of the Literary Fund, I shall be glad to hear from you, as I shall then immediately order in five hundred cart-loads of flints,[†2] for the purpose of extracting New Milk from them.

You have taken some kind part in a certain Incledon[†3] subscription. Will you pay a Guinea to it for me, and I will repay you when you come over here.

And I shall expect you to bring some of those plans and drawings with you, in order that we may sit (with Stanfield) in solemn council over the New Theatre,[†4] and drink Success to it in some 1846 Champagne which is waiting in a cool corner for the purpose.

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Benjamin Webster Esquire

To JOHN FORSTER, [?16 JUNE 1856]

Extract in F, VII, iv, 600-1. Date: some days after he started work on ?11 June.

At work it became his habit to sit late, and then, putting off his usual walk until night, to lie down among the roses reading until after tea (middle-aged Love in a blouse and belt), when he went down to the pier. The said pier at evening is a phase of the place we never see, and which I hardly knew. But I never did behold such specimens of the youth of my country, male and female, as pervade that place. They are really, in their vulgarity and insolence, quite disheartening. One is so fearfully ashamed of them, and they contrast so very unfavourably with the natives.

To LADY JOHN RUSSELL,[†1] 19 JUNE 1856*

MS Robert H. Taylor Collection, Princeton University Library.

Villa des Moulineaux, Boulogne
Thursday Nineteenth June 1856

Dear Lady John.

The date of the place where I am hard at work among the corn and Bean fields, affords the reason for my being so unfortunate as not to be able to dine at Pembroke Lodge[†2] in compliance with your kind invitation. It is always so truly interesting to me, and always gives me so much genuine pleasure, to pass a few hours there, that I should have come over for the purpose but for having sworn fidelity to my desk (and Little Dorrit) at that time of the month.

Pray present my kind remembrance to Lord John[†3] and Believe me always with much regard

Very faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

The | Lady John Russell.

To THOMAS BEARD, 21 JUNE 1856

MS Dickens House.

Villa des Moulineaux, Boulogne S/M.
Saturday June Twenty First 1856

My Dear Beard.

As I hope it may be pleasant to you in the midst of Baldwin[†4] and Botheration (alliterative words for the same thing), to know how your holiday-quarters look, I scramble out of Little Dorrit's affairs to make a short report on the subject.

Beaucourt has grubbed up about half the trees that were here when we were here before, and has consequently improved the place remarkably. It is a great deal more free and fresh. Having had some months in which to prepare for us (for I wrote to him last February) he has also planted the garden with flowers in that ingenious manner that there is to be an uninterrupted succession of novelty during the whole of our Stay. Plants in pots, also abound in the greatest profusion. It is really very beautiful; and he is so charmed himself with what he has done, that he is perpetually flying out of that house at the top of the Hill, to look at it. Occasionally in the morning I find him lying down in the sandy paths, in order to get his nose and eyes on a level with the roses. I am inclined to doubt whether anybody else since Adam, has been so fond and proud of a garden.

Our Cook, growing infirm, has left us for a smaller family, and so arranged her departure as that we might have a Frenchwoman during our stay here. We have accordingly got a cook from the Prefect, of whom I think you will approve. She is at present (while we are alone), going gravely through her performances. She has an immense number: having been a fortnight at it, and showing no signs of exhaustion. I take my seat on the Bench every day at half past five, and try a new case. If I find any prevalent offence in the Calendar, I should say it was butter; but on the whole the state of the kitchen is highly gratifying. I have directed a cross and the word "Beard" to be put against several decisions in the filed records of the Court.

Bourgois, the wine merchant,[†1] is in the best condition. I could get no such wines as his in Paris, for double the money at least. The dinner Bordeaux is remarkably good this time; and some light cool white wines, as Chablis and Sauterne, I have already in the most charming order. But the Cellar here is worth anything, and I would desire to have no better at Tavistock House. It is the only weak point of that Establishment.

(Talking of which, reminds me that there is an amazing cellar at Gad's Hill, and that my people were saying here the other night, Lord! Mr. Beard would be able again next year, after all these years, to come down again on a Saturday!)

Those unfortunate Cattermoles[†2] are still with the more unfortunate Beaucourt, and I don't see how he is ever to get rid of them until they have died out. I was talking to him about them in the Avenue here the other evening, and he admitted, on being hard pressed, that Monsieur Cattermole "promises always, but that's all". They have an English nurse whom they can't discharge because they can't pay her her wages, and who, in consequence will stay, and won't work. One of the little boys is the Cook — "that poor Walter — cooks always," said Beaucourt. "They have broken nearly all the glass and china, and have nothing, or next to nothing, for use. That poor Vincent of the weak head[†3] — that child afflicted — I have him to work in the garden with me, good infant (for it keeps his brain sounder), and he dines with us every day — lives with us — Madame Beaucourt has so much love and pity for that boy! I am desolated for them all." — "And for yourself, Beaucourt", said I, "you good fellow. Don't you say anything about yourself?" — "Ah Monsieur Dickens, pardon me, its not worth the trouble — its nothing — don't let us speak of it!" — and he pulled off his cap after we had shaken hands, and went backing up the Avenue, with such a generous, simple, amiable face, that I half expected to see him back himself straight into the Evening-Star (which was at the end of it), without going through the ceremony of dying first.

I do hope, and we do all hope, that you will take a good month this year. You want that period of relief and rest, I am sure, and I don't believe that your taking less, does you the least good with that rheumatic Bedlamite. On the contrary, I think he would care a great deal more about you if he had missed you more.

When I next come to town I will send you round a note, and propose a little dinner at the Household Words office — in order that John may not grow rusty. In the meantime and ever, with kindest loves from all here to all your house

Ever My Dear Beard | Heartily Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

I have forgotten to mention the "Curaçoa and bis-kits", but they are all right.

To JOHN FORSTER, [22 JUNE 1856]

Extracts in F, XI, iii, 823 and VII, iv, 603. Date: first extract 22 June, according to Forster; description in second extract almost certainly same letter (cf. To Beard, 21 June).

I have had a story to hack and hew into some form for Household Words[†1] this morning, which has taken me four hours of close attention. And I am perfectly addled by its horrible want of continuity after all,[†2] and the dreadful spectacle I have made of the proofs — which look like an inky fishing-net.[†3]

Replying to some questions about an English family,[†4] put to him by CD one day, he had only enlarged on their sacrifices and self-denials. "Ah, that family, unfortunate!", he had answered. "And you, Monsieur Beaucourt", I said to him, "you are unfortunate too, God knows!" Upon which he said in the pleasantest way in the world, "Ah, Monsieur Dickens, thank you, don't speak of it!" — And backed himself down the avenue with his cap in his hand, as if he were going to back himself straight into the evening star, without the ceremony of dying first. I never did see such a gentle, kind heart.[†5]

To W. H. WILLS, 22 JUNE 1856

Extracts in Retz & Storm catalogue No. 8(ᵃᵃ), and Anderson catalogue, Dec 1933; MS 2 pp.; dated Boulogne, 22 June 56; addressed W. H. Wills. ᵃI have had a tidy job with the Eric Walderthorn story, as you will see by the condition of the Proofs. The revise will want your particular attention, in consequence of my having cut them about so much.ᵃ The Mrs. Haydn[†6] letter[†7] may go straight to Miss Coutts. You can recommend her (she assisted Haydn in his lifetime), that all I know of her is unquestionably good. Sir John Forbes[†1] perhaps you'll write to — say that I am visiting in the country, but that when I come to town you will shew me etc.[†2] I would rather (between ourselves) not certify in this case[†3] or any other, to the humbugs of the Circumlocution office,[†4]

To BENJAMIN WEBSTER,[†5] 29 JUNE 1856

MS British Library. Address: L'Angleterre. | Benjamin Webster Esquire | Theatre Royal Adelphi | London.

Boulogne | Sunday Twenty Ninth June 1856

My Dear Webster.

You know (I hope) that I would do a great deal for you, and that I have always a genuine and lively interest in the Profession. But I must decline to be examined before the Committee,[†6] simply because I have no becoming and genuine locus standi as a witness there. It would merely be an obtrusion of myself and my name — which I detest, abominate, and abjure. Buckstone, as the Treasurer who always makes the statements concerning the General Theatrical Fund, is clearly the man to give evidence concerning it, if any be wanted. As to the other Funds,[†7] I swear I know no more about them than the Committee itself. I am reluctant to say No, but I am obliged to say so, positively, both with a reference to myself and a reference to the case.

I don't know whether Mark's ill-looks[†8] arise from any pimple in his memory, but I have begged him these ten or twelve days, to arrange with Stanfield and you about coming here, and he has not done it.

I am not going to stand this, and therefore shall get hold of Stanfield forthwith (I write to him by this Post), and shall come and see The Flying Dutchman on Tuesday or Wednesday night. On which interesting occasion, you may expect to be refreshed with the sight of

Yours Ever

CD.

To CLARKSON STANFIELD, [29 JUNE 1856]

Mention in last.

July

To THOMAS BEARD, 1 JULY 1856

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | Morning Herald Office | Shoe Lane.

H. W. Office | First July, 1856

My Dear Beard.

Will you come here tomorrow at 6 (no party) to eat Turtle and a steak.

Ever Heartily

CD.

To BENJAMIN WEBSTER, 1 JULY 1856*

MS Private.

H. W. Office | Tuesday First July 1856

My Dear Webster.

Here! — He will come and see the Dutchman[†1] — and will come and see the Americans.[†2] So I must come again. You know whom I mean by "he", of course. I refer to the old Salt.[†3]

Will you leave us a Private Box (if you have one) at the top of the stairs?

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To HABLOT K. BROWNE,[†4] 2 JULY 1856

Extract in D. C. Thomson, Life and Labours of Hablot K. Browne, 1884, p. 142, dated 2 July 56.

Saying that he was returning to Boulogne the next day and asking him to make "The Pensioner Entertainment"[†5] illustration "as characteristic as ever you please, my little dear, but quiet."

To MRS CHARLES DICKENS, 2 JULY 1856

MS British Library. Address: France | À Madame Charles Dickens | Villa des Moulineaux | Boulogne sur Mer.

H. W. Office | Tuesday[†1] Second July, 1856

My Dearest Catherine.

I am coming home tomorrow (Thursday). The train leaves London at half past seven in the morning, and the boat will be due in Boulogne at about half past twelve. Stanny and Webster are to come on the 10th. and Peter[†2] and his wife[†3] on the 14th.

Love to Georgy. And to Mamey, Katey, Lotty,[†4] Walter, Frank, Alfred, Harry, and the noble Plorn. Sydney — I forgot him — Sydney also. Tho' last, not least.

A modest Turtle repast comes off here this afternoon. Six is the hour, for Charley's convenience. Mark is ill at Brighton.

Ever affecy.

CD.

To MARK LEMON, 2 JULY 1856†

MS Berg Collection.

H. W. Office | Wednesday Second July, 1856

My Dear Mark

I am concerned to hear that you are ill — that you sit down before fires and shiver — and that you have stated times for doing so, like the demons in the Melo Dramas — and that you mean to take a week to get well in.

Make haste about it like a dear fellow, and keep up your spirits, because I have made a bargain with Stanny and Webster that they shall come to Boulogne tomorrow week, Thursday the 10th. and stay a week. And you know how much pleasure we shall all miss, if you are not among us — at least for some part of the time.

Wills has just told me that there is a letter from you, lying waiting for me at home at Boulogne. I go back tomorrow morning, and shall find it, no doubt.

Give my love to Mrs. Lemon, and tell her that the case of Eau d'Or[†5] has at last been laid down on the stone floor at the basement of Tavistock House. When I next come to town the precious liqueur will have had ample time to recover, and I shall then send round these two bottles — which are to be a transitory remembrance of the great occasion when, calm in the strength and fortitude of Truth, she made her tyrant quail.

Mrs. Barney Williams[†6] is very good — in some points extremely good — but I am afraid the pre-occupation of the Theatrical mind by the false Florence, is not favourable to the money return to Webster.[†7]

If you find any unusually light appearance in the air at Brighton, it is a distant refraction (I have no doubt) of the gorgeous and shining surface of Tavistock House, now transcendantly painted. The Theatre partition[†1] is put up, and is a work of such terrific solidity that I suppose it will be dug up, ages hence, from the ruins of London, by that Australian of Macaulay's who is to be impressed by its ashes.[†2] I have wandered through the spectral Halls of the Tavistock Mansion, two nights, with feelings of the profoundest depression. I have breakfasted there, like a criminal in Pentonville (only not so well). It is more like Westminster Abbey by midnight than the lowest-spirited man — say you at present for example — can well imagine.

There has been a wonderful robbery at Folkestone, by the new Manager of the Pavilion,[†3] who succeeded Giovannini. He had in keeping £16,000 of a foreigner's, and bolted with it, as he supposed, but in reality with only £1400 of it. The Frenchman had previously bolted with the whole, which was the property of his mother. With him to England the Frenchman brought a "lady", who was, all the time and at the same time, endeavouring to steal all the money from him and bolt with it herself. The details are amazing, and all the money (a few pounds excepted), has been got back.[†4]

They will be full of sympathy and talk about you when I get home, and I shall tell them that I send their loves beforehand. They are all enclosed. The moment you feel Hearty, just write me that word by post. I shall be so delighted to receive it.

Ever my Dear boy | Your affectionate friend
CHARLES DICKENS.

To FREDERICK GYE, 4 JULY 1856†

MS Fales Collection, New York University Library.

Villa des Moulineaux, near Boulogne
Friday Fourth July, 1856.

My Dear Sir

As I was leaving town very early yesterday morning, your kind note came to my hands. Pray accept the thanks I had not time to send you in London, and with them the assurance that it will give me real pleasure, when I return to town for the winter, to improve the opportunity of knowing you which has now been presented to me. I have long been much interested in your enterprises, and shall be happy to add a personal regard to my public appreciation.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Frederick Gye Esquire

To [MISS HARRIET HANCOCK],[†1] [?4] JULY 1856

MS (written on title-page of copy of Scott's Rob Roy) Fales Collection, New York University Library. Date: probably shortly after CD's return.

Boulogne, July 1856

H. H. | From | C. D.

This was my fictional companion on the railroad and steamboat coming over;[†2] it shall be yours going back—

To HANS CHRISTIAN ANDERSEN,[†3] 5 JULY 1856

MS Royal Library, Copenhagen.

Villa des Moulineaux, near Boulogne
Saturday Fifth July 1856

My Dear and worthy Hans.

I am extremely sorry that I cannot shew your friend Mr. Bille[†4] the attention and interest that it would indeed be a great pleasure to me to testify to any friend of yours. But, I have left London for the summer, in order that I may work the more freely and pleasantly in the midst of a pretty garden here. You know, my dear fellow-labourer, what the distractions of a London life are, and what a relief it is to escape from them. You will not be surprised at my remaining away from it as long as I can, and not intending to return to London until late in October.

I cannot write to explain this to Mr. Bille, myself, because I have not received with your letter (which he left at my house in town), any card of his, and consequently I do not know his address. But when you next see him or communicate with him, pray do me the favor to tell him how glad I should have been to have tried to make his visit to London more domestic and agreeable, if I had been there. You have too much modesty to be able to tell him how delightedly and cordially I should have taken a hand that had been lately in your grasp — so I will tell him that, myself, when he comes again.[†5]

And you my friend — when are you coming again? Nine years (as you say) have flown away since you were among us. In those nine years you have not faded out of the hearts of the English people, but have become even better known and more beloved by them than when you saw them for the first time. When Aladdin shall have come out of those caves of Science, to run a triumphant course on Earth and made us all wiser and better[†6] — as I know he will — you ought to come for another visit. You ought to come to me for example, and stay in my house. We would all do our best to make you happy.

I am hard at work at Little Dorrit, and She will hold me prisoner for another nine or ten months. She is a wonderful favorite in England. The mention of my country's name reminds me to say that you now write English most admirably, and that this letter of yours now lying on my desk is a perfect Englishman's.

Mrs. Dickens wishes me to tell you that she would have been mortally offended if you had suspected her of forgetting you, and that you only do her justice in supposing that you live in her remembrance. Such of my children as you saw at Broadstairs by the sea, and especially my two daughters who are now young women, are very indignant at your dreaming of the possibility of their forgetting Hans Christian Andersen. They say that if you knew them half as well as they have for years and years known Tommelise,[†1] and the ugly Duck,[†2] you would know better. However, they send you their love and forgiveness.

My dear Andersen, I have had the heartiest pleasure in hearing from you again, and I assure you that I love and esteem you more than I could tell you on as much paper as would pave the whole road from here to Copenhagen.

Ever your affectionate friend
CHARLES DICKENS

Hans Christian Andersen.

To MRS BROWN, 5 JULY 1856

MS Morgan Library. Address: L'Angleterre. | Mrs. Brown | Prospect Hill | Reading.

Villa des Moulineaux, Boulogne
Saturday Fifth July, 1856

My Dear Mrs. Brown

I owe you many thanks for your kind and interesting letter. I need not tell you that nothing in your account of that occasion[†3] surprised me, great and high as the pleasure was, that I derived from it.

I meant to have written to you at once, but I was so busy with Little Dorrit that I could not detach myself from her for any pen and ink purpose. Then I had to go immediately to London, and purposed writing from there; but I found myself continually engaged, and had no peace until I came back here again, yesterday.

Walter and the three smaller boys have all come home with a Prize apiece. In honor of these achievements we have made rejoicings with five franc pieces, running matches, and cricket ditto. Besides the pretty gardens here, I have a field for them, in which they tear themselves to pieces all day long — immensely to their satisfaction, and the tailor's. Their bedrooms being in a little cottage in the garden, I have established (by way of a lesson in Common things)[†4] a regular code of laws for the administration of that Institution. The washing arrangements and so forth are conducted on the strict principles of a man of War. Nothing is allowed to be out of its place. Each in his turn is appointed Keeper for the week, and I go out in solemn procession (Georgina and the Baby — as we call him — forming the rest of it), three times a day, on a tour of inspection. Meantime Charley seems to get on very well indeed in the City, and is coming here for a fortnight at the end of August.

Poor Mrs. Watson went to Southsea a few months ago, to see her second boy[†1] through the Naval School before entering the service. There, he fell ill of Scarlet Fever. Having all her children with her, she was obliged to send the rest away into another house, and only to see them, day after day and week after week, from her own sick-room balcony. Nevertheless the little girl took the fever somehow, and then poor Mrs. Watson — all alone there, except for a servant — took it herself. The happy conclusion of the story is, that they are all now well again, and that we heard from her this morning. She has gone through a great deal of late years, but has a wonderful force of character.

Mrs. Dickens and Georgina and all the children send their loves. How beautiful the country now! We have Millions of roses here. And as I came from town yesterday the luxuriant hayfields were so beautiful that I felt as proud of them as if they were all mine.

Ever Dear Mrs. Brown | Affectionately Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To [MISS BURDETT COUTTS], 5 JULY 1856

MS University of Texas.

Villa des Moulineaux, Boulogne
Saturday Fifth July, 1856

My Dear [Miss Coutts][†2]

It seems as if months — not to say years — had passed since I wrote to you or heard from you. We have both been very busy, to account for it. I hope you generally liked what was done in the Papers about the Prizes?[†3] There seems to have been a tardy and uneven distribution of the Summary, to the papers: of which I heard several complaints when I was in town.

This disaster of Itch[†4] at the Home is a little unfortunate; but I have a strong hope that it will not spread in the least. The place being so extremely clean and well kept, there is every ground for feeling confident that it will not occasion much inconvenience.

Louisa Cooper[†1] (who, you remember, went to the Cape with Mrs. Boyle),[†2] has been two or three times with Mrs. Marchmont, and the other day left a letter with her, addressed to me, describing her approaching want of a situation. She was only engaged by the lady who brought her home, for the Voyage and until she should be settled. She seems to have had a desperately hard place, with everything to do (mantua making[†3] included) for 7 children, and to have rather overworked herself. She will leave on the 14th. and has no relations or friends except "the young man" to whom she is engaged, and who cannot marry (she says) until he finds a Gardener's place as a married man. Mrs. Marchmont is endeavouring to help her to a situation, but as yet without effect. Would you wish me to do anything in answer to the letter?

Going over to London the other day, I found the Pavilion at Folkestone in a state of amazing excitement about a robbery that had been committed there.[†4] It would take three quarters of an hour to tell the story, but the following are the heads.

Chapter I

Frenchman arrives at Pavilion, with the small sum of £16,000 in a Courier's bag. Delivers same to Breach[†5] the landlord, requesting him to "take care of it for him" — which he absurdly consents to do.

Chapter II

Breach the Landlord being summoned to Ireland, brings New manager of Hotel (a Belgian) to Frenchman, and says to Frenchman "Behold Mr. Hastie, my manager. If you want your money in my absence, he knows where it is, and has the key, and will duly deliver it up."

Chapter III

After two days, Frenchman does want that trifle of money. Asks for Mr. Hastie. Mr. Hastie gone to London. Just sent telegraph dispatch that he won't be back till tomorrow night. Frenchman alarmed, asks where is the key that locks up his money? Mr. Hastie has it. Frenchman more alarmed, insists on Housekeeper's breaking open the room. Room broken open, bag found cut open, Mr. Hastie having absconded with the contents, as he supposes — but in reality with only £1,400; there being several divisions in the bag, and several rolls of notes.

CHAPTER IV.[†6]

All the Railroads and steamboats being telegraphed for apprehension of Hastie, going abroad — Hastie comes down to Folkestone by night Mail, disguised in an Italian coat, and feigning to be asleep with a pocket handkerchief over his face. Though everybody knows him on the line, gets to Folkestone unrecognized. Sharp Folkestone commissioner looks into carriage, says nothing, mounts the engine, goes to Dover, watches him as he gets out of carriage, makes sure he is the man, and takes him.

CHAPTER V.[†6]

French Govt. telegraphs to English Govt. that the Frenchman stole the whole £16,000 from his mother and sister; and wishes to know whether the English Govt. can issue a warrant and take him. English Govt. find it would be illegal without regular and formal proceedings, and can't do it. Consult with Police Commissioner, Scotland Yard. Scotland Yard says, send down Detective Saunders[†1] who can speak French. Perhaps he may devise some scheme for getting back some of the money.

CHAPTER VI.[†2]

Detective Saunders finds Frenchman at Folkestone. Says, This is a bad job, I'm going to take you into custody (which he could no more do than take you or me), have you got the money about you? If so, you had better avoid the inconvenience and indignity of being searched, as I must take it in charge in taking you. Frenchman immediately puts a hand in a pocket, and delivers it up. Detective Saunders says, That'll do. You're not as clever as I thought you. All I wanted was the money. Now you may go where you like.

CHAPTER VII.[†2]

Frenchman discovered to have been all this time accompanied by a confidential friend[†3] from Paris, who was only biding his time to rob him of all the money. Friend disappointed by the French Minister impounding it, including even the £1,400 (except a pound or two), which was taken by the Police out of Mr. Hastie's pocket at Dover. So, it seems as if it were enchanted money and nobody could keep it from the rightful owners.

THE END.[†4]

On domestic matters I have merely to report that the Baby, with a nut-brown face and legs, will give any Suffolk baby[†5] fifteen hundred out of two thousand and beat him easily. Our bird (the most wonderful ever known) having been perpetually waylaid by two ferocious and extra-cunning French Cats, one of the Cats has been shot, and one Man lies in wait behind bushes for the other, with his soul so set upon his murderous purpose that I expect him at least to blow his fingers off, at any hour of the day. He does nothing whatever but wait for the Cat. And all the boys (all home from School) encourage him from high places behind trees, and are monomaniacal on the subject; bringing in reports that they have "met the Cat down in the town", and that they "saw the Cat on the Pier", and believing the most unlikely and impossible things. Their rationality on other subjects is not affected, but they are all mad about this Cat. I feel my reason tottering when she is mentioned — and they never talk of anything else.

Ever Dear [Miss Coutts](5[[sic]][†6] | Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

To THE DUKE OF DEVONSHIRE, 5 JULY 1856

MS Devonshire Collections, Chatsworth.

Villa des Moulineaux, near Boulogne
Saturday Night Fifth July, 1856

My Dear Duke of Devonshire

From this place where I am writing my way through the Summer in the midst of rosy gardens and sea airs, I cannot forbear writing to tell you with what uncommon pleasure I received your interesting letter, and how sensible I always am of your kindness and generosity. You were always in the mind of my household during your illness;[†1] and to have so beautiful and fresh and manly an assurance of your recovery from it, under your own hand, is a privilege and delight that I will say no more of!

I am so glad you like Flora. It came into my head one day that we have all had our Floras (mine is living, and extremely fat),[†2] and that it was a half serious half ridiculous truth which had never been told. It is a wonderful gratification to find that everybody knows her. Indeed some people seem to think I have done them a personal injury, and that their individual Floras (God knows where they are or who) are each and all Little Dorrit's.

We were all grievously disappointed that you were ill when we played Mr Collins's "Lighthouse" at my house. If you had been well, I should have waited upon you with my humble petition that you would come and see it. And if you had come, I think you would have cried — which would have charmed me. I hope to produce another new play at home next Christmas, and if I can only persuade you to see it from a special arm-chair, and can only make you wretched, my satisfaction will be intense.

May I tell you, to beguile a moment, of a little "Tag" — or end of a piece — I saw in Paris this last winter, which struck me as the prettiest I had ever met with? The piece was not a new one, but a revival at the Vaudeville — les Memoires du Diable.[†3] Admirably constructed, very interesting, and extremely well played. The plot is, that a certain M. Robin has come into possession of the papers of a deceased Lawyer, and finds some relating to the wrongful with-holding of an estate from a certain Baroness, and to certain other frauds (involving even the denial of her marriage to the deceased Baron, and the tarnishing of her good name), which are so very wicked, that he binds them up in a book, and labels them "Memoires du Diable". Armed with this knowledge he goes down to a desolate old château in the country, part of the wrested-away estate, from which the Baroness and her daughter are going to be ejected. He informs the mother that he can right her and restore her the property; but must have, as his reward, her daughter's hand in marriage. She replies "I cannot promise my daughter to a man of whom I know nothing. The gain would be an unspeakable happiness, but I resolutely decline the bargain". The daughter, however, has overheard all, and she comes forward and says "Do what you have promised my mother you can do, and I am yours". Then the piece goes on to its development, in an admirable way, through the unmasking of all the hypocrites. Now M. Robin, partly through his knowledge of the secret ways of the old château (derived from the lawyer's papers), and partly through his going to a Masquerade as the Devil, the better to explode what he knows, on the hypocrites, is supposed by the servants at the château really to be the Devil. At the opening of the last act he suddenly appears there before the young lady, and she screams, but, recovering and laughing, says "You are not really the ——?" — "Oh dear no", he replies — "have no connexion with him. But these people down here are so frightened and absurd! See this little box on the table. I open it. Here's a little bell. They have a notion that whenever this bell rings, I shall appear. Very ignorant, is it not?" — "Very indeed", says she. "Well!" says M. Robin "If you should ever want me very much to appear, try the Bell — if only for a jest. Will you promise?" Yes, she promises, and the play goes on. At last he has righted the Baroness completely, and has only to hand her the last document, which proves her marriage and restores her good name. Then he says "Madame, in the progress of these endeavours I have learnt the happiness of doing good for its own sake. I made a mercenary bargain with you. I release you from it. I have done what I undertook to do. I wish you and your amiable daughter all happiness. Adieu. I take my leave!" Bows himself out. People on the stage astonished. Audience astonished. (I incensed.) The daughter is going to cry, when she looks at the box on the table, remembers the bell, runs to it and rings it, and he rushes back and takes her to his heart. Upon which we all cry with pleasure, and then laugh heartily.

This looks dreadfully long, and perhaps you know it already. If so, I will endeavour to make amends, with Flora in future numbers.

Mrs. Dickens and her sister beg to present their remembrances to your Grace and their congratulations on your recovery. I saw Paxton now and then when you were ill, and always received from him most encouraging accounts. I don't know how heavy he is going to be (I mean in the scale), but I begin to think Daniel Lambert[†1] must have been in his family.

Ever Your Grace's faithful and obliged

CHARLES DICKENS

The | Duke of Devonshire

To WASHINGTON IRVING,[†2] 5 JULY 1856

Text from MDGH, III, 178-9.

Tavistock House, London, July 5th, 1856.[†3]

My dear Irving,

If you knew how often I write to you individually and personally in my books, you would be no more surprised in seeing this note than you were in seeing me do my duty by that flowery julep (in what I dreamily apprehend to have been a former state of existence) at Baltimore.[†1]

Will you let me present to you a cousin of mine, Mr. Barrow,[†2] who is associated with a merchant's house in New York?[†3] Of course he wants to see you, and know you. How can I wonder at that? How can anybody?

I had a long talk with Leslie[†4] at the last Academy dinner (having previously been with him in Paris), and he told me that you were flourishing. I suppose you know that he wears a moustache — so do I for the matter of that, and a beard too — and that he looks like a portrait of Don Quixote.

Holland House[†5] has four-and-twenty youthful pages in it now — twelve for my lord, and twelve for my lady; and no clergyman coils his leg up under his chair all dinner-time, and begins to uncurve it when the hostess goes.[†6] No wheeled chair runs smoothly in with that beaming face in it; and ——'s[†7] little cotton pocket-handkerchief helped to make (I believe) this very sheet of paper. A half-sad, half-ludicrous story of Rogers[†8] is all I will sully it with. You know, I daresay, that for a year or so before his death he wandered, and lost himself like one of the Children in the Wood, grown up there and grown down again. He had Mrs. Procter[†9] and Mrs. Carlyle[†10] to breakfast with him one morning — only those two. Both excessively talkative, very quick and clever, and bent on entertaining him. When Mrs. Carlyle had flashed and shone before him for about three-quarters of an hour on one subject, he turned his poor old eyes on

Mrs. Procter, and pointing to the brilliant discourser with his poor old finger, said (indignantly), "Who is she?" Upon this, Mrs. Procter, cutting in, delivered (it is her own story) a neat oration on the life and writings of Carlyle, and enlightened him in her happiest and airiest manner; all of which he heard, staring in the dreariest silence, and then said (indignantly, as before), "And who are you?"

Ever, my dear Irving, | Most affectionately and truly yours

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To WALTER SAVAGE LANDOR,[†1] 5 JULY 1856

Text from MDGH, I, 441-3.

Villa des Moulineaux, Boulogne,
Saturday Evening, July 5th, 1856.

My dear Landor,

I write to you so often in my books, and my writing of letters is usually so confined to the numbers that I must write, and in which I have no kind of satisfaction, that I am afraid to think how long it is since we exchanged a direct letter.[†2] But talking to your namesake[†3] this very day at dinner, it suddenly entered my head that I would come into my room here as soon as dinner should be over, and write, "My dear Landor, how are you?" for the pleasure of having the answer under your own hand. That you do write, and that pretty often, I know beforehand. Else why do I read The Examiner?[†4]

We were in Paris from October to May (I perpetually flying between that city and London), and there we found out, by a blessed accident, that your godson was horribly deaf. I immediately consulted the principal physician of the Deaf and Dumb Institution[†5] there (one of the best aurists in Europe), and he kept the boy for three months, and took unheard-of pains with him. He is now quite recovered, has done extremely well at school, has brought home a prize in triumph, and will be eligible to "go up" for his India examination soon after next Easter. Having a direct appointment, he will probably be sent out soon after he has passed,[†6] and so will fall into that strange life "up the country," before he well knows he is alive, which indeed seems to be rather an advanced stage of knowledge.

And there in Paris, at the same time, I found Marguerite Power and Little Nelly, living with their mother and a pretty sister, in a very small, neat apartment, and working (as Marguerite told me) hard for a living. All that I saw of them filled me with respect, and revived the tenderest remembrances of Gore House.[†7] They are coming to pass two or three weeks here for a country rest, next month. We had many long talks concerning Gore House, and all its bright associations; and I can honestly report that they hold no one in more gentle and affectionate remembrance than you. Marguerite is still handsome, though she had the smallpox two or three years ago, and bears the traces of it here and there, by daylight. Poor little Nelly (the quicker and more observant of the two) shows some little tokens of a broken-off marriage in a face too careworn for her years, but is a very winning and sensible creature.

We are expecting Mary Boyle too, shortly.

I have just been propounding to Forster if it is not a wonderful testimony to the homely force of truth, that one of the most popular books on earth has nothing in it to make anyone laugh or cry? Yet I think, with some confidence, that you never did either over any passage in "Robinson Crusoe." In particular, I took Friday's death as one of the least tender and (in the true sense) least sentimental things ever written. It is a book I read very much; and the wonder of its prodigious effect on me and everyone, and the admiration thereof, grows on me the more I observe this curious fact.†1

Kate and Georgina send you their kindest loves, and smile approvingly on me from the next room, as I bend over my desk. My dear Landor, you see many I daresay, and hear from many I have no doubt, who love you heartily; but we silent people in the distance never forget you. Do not forget us, and let us exchange affection at least.

Ever your Admirer and Friend
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To JOHN FORSTER, [?5 AND 6 JULY 1856]

Extracts in F, VII, V, 611*n*, 610 and iv, 601-2. Date: first extract 5 July, same day as To Landor (see last); second extract doubtless same letter (cf. To Duke of Devonshire, 5 July); third extract 6 July, according to Forster.

You remember my saying to you some time ago how curious I thought it that Robinson Crusoe†2 should be the only instance of an universally popular book that could make no one laugh and could make no one cry. I have been reading it again just now, in the course of my numerous refreshings at those English wells, and I will venture to say that there is not in literature a more surprising instance of an utter want of tenderness and sentiment, than the death of Friday.†3 It is as heartless as Gil Blas,†2 in a very different and far more serious way. But the second part altogether will not bear enquiry. In the second part of Don Quixote†2 are some of the finest things. But the second part of Robinson Crusoe is perfectly contemptible, in the glaring defect that it exhibits the man who was 30 years on that desert island with no visible effect made on his character by that experience. De Foe's women too — Robinson Crusoe's wife for instance — are terrible dull commonplace fellows without breeches; and I have no doubt he was a precious dry and disagreeable article himself — I mean De Foe: not Robinson. Poor dear Goldsmith (I remember as I write) derived the same impression.†4

As I have no news, I may as well tell you about the tag that I thought so pretty to the Memoires du Diable; in which piece by the way, there is a most admirable part, most admirably played, in which a man says merely "Yes" or "No" all through the piece, until the last scene. A certain M. Robin has got hold of the papers of a deceased lawyer, concerning a certain estate which has been swindled away from its rightful owner, a Baron's widow, into other hands. They disclose so much roguery that he binds them up into a volume lettered "Memoires du Diable." The knowledge he derives from these papers not only enables him to unmask the hypocrites all through the piece (in an excellent manner), but induces him to propose to the Baroness that if he restores to her her estate and good name — for even her marriage to the deceased Baron is denied — she shall give him her daughter in marriage. The daughter herself, on hearing the offer, accepts it; and a part of the plot is, her going to a masked ball, to which he goes as the Devil, to see how she likes him (when she finds, of course, that she likes him very much). The country people about the Chateau in dispute, suppose him to be really the Devil, because of his strange knowledge, and his strange comings and goings; and he, being with this girl in one of its old rooms, in the beginning of the 3rd act, shews her a little coffer on the table with a bell in it. "They suppose," he tells her, "that whenever this bell is rung, I appear and obey the summons. Very ignorant, isn't it? But, if you ever want me particularly — very particularly — ring the little bell and try." The plot proceeds to its development. The wrong-doers are exposed; the missing document, proving the marriage, is found; everything is finished; they are all on the stage; and M. Robin hands the paper to the Baroness. "You are reinstated in your rights, Madame; you are happy; I will not hold you to a compact made when you didn't know me; I release your fair daughter; the pleasure of doing what I have done, is my sufficient reward; I kiss your hand and take my leave!" He backs himself courteously out; the piece seems concluded, everybody wonders, the girl (little Mdlle. Luther) stands amazed; when she suddenly remembers the little bell. In the prettiest way possible, she runs to the coffer on the table, takes out the little bell, rings it, and he comes rushing back and folds her to his heart. I never saw a prettier thing in my life. It made me laugh in that most delightful of ways, with the tears in my eyes; so that I can never forget it, and must go and see it again.

The only thing new in this garden is that war is raging against two particularly tigerish and fearful cats (from the mill, I suppose), which are always glaring in dark corners, after our wonderful little Dick.[†1] Keeping the house open at all points, it is impossible to shut them out, and they hide themselves in the most terrific manner: hanging themselves up behind draperies, like bats, and tumbling out in the dead of night with frightful caterwaulings. Hereupon, French borrows Beaucourt's gun, loads the same to the muzzle, discharges it twice in vain and throws himself over with the recoil, exactly like a clown. But at last (while I was in town) he aims at the more amiable cat of the two, and shoots that animal dead. Insufferably elated by this victory, he is now engaged from morning to night in hiding behind bushes to get aim at the other. He does nothing else whatever. All the boys encourage him and watch for the enemy — on whose appearance they give an alarm which immediately serves as a warning to the creature, who runs away. They are at this moment (ready dressed for church) all lying on their stomachs in various parts of the garden. Horrible whistles give notice to the gun what point it is to approach. I am afraid to go out, lest I should be shot. Mr. Plornish says his prayers at night in a whisper, lest the cat should overhear him and take offence. The tradesmen cry out as they come up the avenue, 'Me voici! C'est moi — boulanger — ne tirez pas, Monsieur Franche!' It is like living in a state of siege; and the wonderful manner in which the cat preserves the character of being the only person not much put out by the intensity of this monomania, is most ridiculous.

To BENJAMIN WEBSTER, 6 JULY 1856

Mention in Sotheby's catalogue, July 1883; MS 1 p.; dated 6 July 56; addressed Benjamin Webster.

To MARK LEMON, 8 JULY 1856*

MS Miss Phyllis Matthews. Address: Mark Lemon Esquire | Field Office.[†1]

Villa des Moulineaux | Tuesday Eighth July 1856

My Dear Mark.

I hope that with your practical experience in Stage-Writing, you will not find much difficulty in making such additions to the accompanying notes as will sketch out a very funny piece. I should like to make it very compact too, so that everybody has to do with the plot. When we have thoroughly got the plot, we will divide the writing, and afterwards dovetail and finish up together.

It is quite a treat to think of a new farce.[†2] We had so many happy hours with the old one.[†3]

Pray let one of your disguises be something in the Cadger line in which you can sing Cupid's Garden.[†4]

And we ought to think of something answering to the Combat or Hornpipe, to do together.[†5]

Let me hear from you when you have thought a little about it.

"You are quite right my dear Lemon"[†6] not to come, under the circumstances. I can't tell you how delighted I am to receive so good a report of you.

Loves from all my house to all yours. I write hastily, having been all the morning over the enclosed, and wanting a walk.

Ever Affectionately

CD.

To W. C. MACREADY, 8 JULY 1856

MS Morgan Library.

Villa des Moulineaux, Boulogne

Tuesday Eighth July, 1856

My Dearest Macready

I perfectly agree with you in your appreciation of Katie's poem,[†1] and shall be truly delighted to publish it in Household Words. It shall go into the very next No. we make up. We are a little in advance (to enable Wills to get a holiday); but, as I remember, the next No. made up, will be published in three weeks.

We are pained indeed to read your reference to my poor boy. God help him and his father! I trust he is not conscious of much suffering himself. If that be so, it is, in the midst of the distress, a great comfort.

Little Dorrit keeps me pretty busy, as you may suppose. The beginning of No. X[†2] — the first line — now lies upon my desk. It would not be easy to increase upon the pains I take with her, anyhow.

We are expecting Stanfield on Thursday, and Peter Cunningham and his wife on Monday. I would we were expecting you! This is as pretty and odd a little French country house as could be found anywhere; and the gardens are most beautiful.

In Household Words next week, pray read The Diary of Anne Rodway.[†3] (In two not long parts). It is by Collins, and I think possesses great merit, and real pathos.[†4]

Being in town the other day, I saw Gye by accident, and told him, when he praised Ristori to me, that she was a very bad actress.[†5] "Well!" said he. "You may say anything; but if anybody else had told me that, I should have stared". Nevertheless I derived an impression from his manner that she had not been a profitable speculation in respect of Money. That very same day, Stanfield and I dined alone together at the Garrick, and drank your health. We had had a ride by the river before dinner (of course he would go and look at boats), and had been talking of you. It was this day week by the bye.

I know of nothing of public interest that is new in France, except that I am changing my moustache into a beard.

We all send our most tender love to dearest Miss Macready and all the house. "The Hammy boy"[†6] is particularly anxious to have his love sent to Misr Creedy.

Ever, My Dearest Macready

Most affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To W. C. MACREADY, 9 [JULY][†1] 1856*

MS Morgan Library. Date: Wednesday was the 9th in July; Macready's endorsement confirms.

Villa des Moulineaux, Boulogne
Wednesday Ninth June 1856

My Dearest Macready

This is merely a question relative to the Wine. I have got you a case of the 1846 Champagne (3 Doz). As I have bought a good deal during the last 3 years of the same man, I have it at my former price — that is to say, on this side, 4/7d. pr. bottle, though I believe it to be well worth nearly double the money now. How shall I get it to you? Shall I consign it to Wills, get him to have it cleared and then forwarded to you? Or is there anybody you would desire to employ for the purpose? If Wills — he will pay the duty and Custom House charges &c and you and I can balance the whole matter together, at any time. If anybody else — it will be equally easy.

Ever Most affectionately

CD.

To NATHANIEL POWELL,[†2] 9 JULY 1856

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Villa des Moulineaux, Boulogne
Wednesday Ninth July, 1856

My Dear Sir

I remember that I have inadvertently omitted to reply to a question of yours relative to the cost of painting the names of our houses on the gate. It was something extremely small (I forget exactly what, and have not the bill here); and I will add it to the cost of painting the rails this year, when I receive and divide among us, Cubitt's account for that job.

It has several times been in my mind to mention to you that if you would like to share the garden in front with me as a resort for your children, I shall be happy to have it in the joint occupation of our two families, and have not the least desire to reserve it to myself. I pay your predecessor Mr. Cardale, £20 a year for it.

My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Nathaniel Powell Esquire.

To FRANK STONE, 9 JULY 1856†

MS Benoliel Collection.

Villa des Moulineaux, Boulogne
Wednesday Ninth July 1856

My Dear Stone

Don't you think you might take a run over here, and stay with us a few days? The place is very much improved.

Have you the pattern of the Fishwoman's cap?[†1] If you have a pattern, have you more than one pattern? And to doctor up your dresses, what color is principally required, do you think? With this information I may pick up such materials as we want, very cheaply here, in the course of the next two months.

I have got a capital part for you in the Farce — not a difficult one to learn, as you never say anything but "Yes" and "No". You are called, in the Dramatis Personae, an able bodied British Seaman, and you are never seen by mortal eye to do anything (except inopportunely producing a Mop), but stand about the Deck of the boat in Everybody's way, with your hair immensely touzled, one brace on, your hands in your pockets, and the bottoms of your trousers tucked up. Yet you are inextricably connected with the plot, and are the man whom everybody is enquiring after. I think it is a very whimsical idea and extremely droll. It made me laugh heartily when I jotted it all down yesterday.

Loves from all my house to all yours.

Ever Affecy.

CD.

To W. H. WILLS, 10 JULY 1856*

MS Rosenbach Foundation.

Boulogne, Thursday Tenth July 1856.

My Dear Wills.

All right as to H.W news, except that the part of Milverstone[†2] you have put in, I never meant to go in at all.[†3] I think the expression I used in my letter to you about that series was, that I approved of those parts which treated of "the town and its characters"[†4] — something to that effect. You may have misunderstood me, or I may not have expressed myself clearly; but that is what I mean. Her opinions are worth nothing at all. I read this very paper, and unhesitatingly rejected it in my mind. It must not go in. Descriptions of the place and the people are what is wanted.

The No.[†5] arrived by the post this morning, and I hope to go over it tonight and return it tomorrow.

ERIC WALDERTHORN[†1] is by Mrs. Bateman,[†2] 7 Albion Terrace Folkestone. I think £15 will be enough for it — considering the trouble it cost me.[†3] certainly pay Eighteen Guineas for. I doubt whether it would not be right (it is only another guinea) to make it £20. It is very specially good.

ANNE RODWAY[†1]

The Opal Ring[†4] is by Miss Power, 5 Rue de Courçelles, Paris.

W. H. W.[†1]

You were talking about running over here. Why don't you? And when are you going to take your holiday?

Ever Faithfully

CD.

P.S. I re-open this, after having put it in an envelope and written it some hours, to say that you had best give Collins £20 — in a handsome note, stating that I had told you that I saw such great pains in his story and so much merit, that I wished to remove it from ordinary calculations. I have a floating idea in my mind that after Little Dorrit is finished (this is inviolably at present between you and me), he and I might do something in Household Words together.[†5] He and I have talked so much within the last 3 or 4 years about Fiction-Writing, and I see him so ready to catch at what I have tried to prove right, and to avoid what I thought wrong, and altogether to go at it in the spirit I have fired him with, that the notion takes some shape with me. It may come to nothing — I may find it impracticable on closer scrutiny — but at present I have hope of it. The advance in any case is not a large one, and if I were asked, in reference to the claims of this little Diary, to say who else could have done that about the Dead Girl,[†6] I confess I should find it very difficult (putting your conductor out of the question), to name the man.

I write this in the confidence of your knowing that I am not a Literary Bounderby, and not misunderstanding me. And I shall be very much interested in knowing how the fancy strikes you, of my chalking out a story with him, and saying "Leave me this character or situation, and let me give you such advice about that, and now let us see what is the strongest thing for H. W. that can be made of it."
P.P.S.[†7] By Heaven! — no it isn't — I thought it was Friday! —

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 11 JULY 1856

MS Morgan Library.

Boulogne, Villa des Moulineaux
Friday Eleventh July, 1856

My Dear Miss Coutts.

First, as to the Common Things.[†1] I rather think that if I were you, I would not send to any more newspapers just now. The subject has been so well taken up by the best of them,[†2] and the Times did it so much service by returning to it the other day in a Leader,[†3] that I would not press it. I think by doing so you might bring out some ignorant caviller, and would not be likely to improve on its present position. I would beg Wills to send to the Quarterly[†4] and Edinburgh,[†4] if I were you; and there, for the present, I would leave it.

I thoroughly agree in that interesting part of your note which refers to the immense use, direct and indirect, of needlework.[†5] Also as to the great difficulty of getting many men to understand them. And I think Shuttleworth[†6] and the like would have gone on to the crack of doom, melting down all the thimbles in Great Britain and Ireland, and making medals of them to be given for a knowledge of Watersheds and Pre Adamite vegetation (both immensely comfortable to a laboring man with a large family and small income), if it hadn't been for you.[†7]

It seems to me that Punch, which everybody sees, may be useful by just hitting the good nail neatly on the head, and there leaving it. I will say so much to Mr. Lemon, who may be safely trusted.[†8]

I spell Harbor without the letter u, because the modern spelling of such words as "Harbor, arbor, parlor," &c. (modern within the last quarter of a century) discards that vowel, as belonging in that connexion to another sound — such as hour and sour.[†1] But, if it will be the slightest satisfaction to you, I will take that vowel up again, and fight for it as long as I live. U and I shall be inseparable, and nothing shall ever part us.

Pray give my kind love to Mrs. Brown, in which Mrs. Dickens and Georgina and all here join. The parcel shall be sent for directly.

I have reserved the subject of Walter to the last, because your kindness touches me so tenderly that I hardly know my dear Miss Coutts how to acknowledge it. I shall have no difficulty, I hope and fully believe, in remitting that sum to India with him; but if, at any time or in any design of my life, I should want such help as your generosity and friendship could give me, I would ask it of no one else in the World and would unfalteringly turn to you.

Having copied all that part of the letter which refers to Walter, I return the original, enclosed.

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully and affecy. Yours

CD.

To WILKIE COLLINS, 13 JULY 1856†

MS Morgan Library.

Villa des Moulineaux, Boulogne
Sunday July Thirteenth 1856

My Dear Collins.

I answer your letter at once, because we expect Peter and his wife tomorrow; and between them and Little Dorrit, I am not likely to have much time.

We are all sorry that you are not coming until the middle of next month; but we hope that you will then be able to remain so that we may all come back together, about the 10th. of October. I think (recreation allowed &c for), that the Play will take that time to write. The Ladies of the Dram Pers. are frightfully anxious to get it under way, and to see you locked up in the Pavilion.[†2] Apropos of which noble edifice, I have omitted to mention that it is made a more secluded retreat than it used to be, and is greatly improved, by the position of the door being changed. It is as snug and pleasant as possible; and the Genius of Order has made a few little improvements about the house (at the rate of about tenpence apiece) which the Genius of Disorder will, it is hoped, appreciate.

I think I must come over for a small Spree, and to fetch you. Suppose I were to come on the 9th. or 10th. of August to stay three or four days in town, would that do for you? Let me know at the end of this month.

I cannot tell you what a high opinion I have of Anne Rodway. I took "Extracts" out of the title, because it conveys to the many-headed, an idea of incompleteness — of something unfinished, and is likely to stall some readers off. I read the first part at the office with strong admiration, and read the second on the Railway coming back here (being in town just after you had started on your cruise.) My behaviour before my fellow passengers was weak in the extreme, for I cried as much as you could possibly desire. Apart from the genuine power and beauty of the little narrative, and the admirable preservation of the girl's identity and point of view, it is done with an amount of honest pains and devotion to the work, which few men have better reason to appreciate than I, and which no man can have a more profound respect for. I think it excellent — feel a personal pride and pleasure in it which is a delightful sensation — and know no one else who could have done it.[†1]

Of myself I have only to report that I have been hard at it with Little Dorrit, and am now doing No. X.[†2] This last week, I sketched out the notion, characters, and progress, of the Farce, and sent it off to Mark who has been ill of an ague. It ought to be very funny.

The Cat business is too ludicrous to be treated of in so small a sheet of paper, so I must describe it, viva voce, when I come to town. French has become so insufferably conceited since he shot Tigerish Cat No. 1 (intent on the noble Dick, with green eyes three inches in advance of her head), that I am afraid I shall have to part with him. All the boys likewise (in new clothes and ready for Church) are at this instant prone on their stomachs behind bushes, whooshing, and crying, (after Tigerish Cat No. 2) "French! Here she comes! There she goes!" &c. I dare not put my head near my window, for fear of being shot (it is as like a coup d'Etat as possible), and tradesmen coming up the Avenue, cry plaintively "Ne tirez pas, Monsieur Frenche; c'est moi — boulanger — ne tirez pas, mon ami!"

Likewise I shall have to recount to you, the secret history of a Robbery at the Pavilion at Folkestone. Which you will have to write.

Tell Piggot[†3] when you see him, that we shall all be much pleased if he will come at his own convenience while you are here, and stay a few days with us.

Forgues ought not to have done that. I shall not buy the translation,[†4] lest that passage should put me out of humour with him[†5] — though I should much like to see it.

I shall have more than one notion for future work to suggest to you while we are beguiling the dreariness of an Arctic Winter in these parts. May they prosper!

Being on the salt sea, you probably did not see a speech of Samivel Carter Hall's[†6] at Mr. Peabody's annual American Dinner.[†7] The snivelling insolence of it, the concentrated essence of Snobbery in it, the dirty Pecksniffianity[†8] that pervaded it, and the Philoprogullododgeitiveness wherein it was steeped, have so affected me, that I have flown to Cockle[†9] for succour. As my eye wandered over the type, I felt my bile begin to shake and swell, like Green's[†10] balloon with the gas turned on into it. The Colonel[†11] himself is not so bilious as I have been since.

Kind regard from all to the Dramatic Poet of the Establishment, and to the D.P's mother and brother.

Ever Yours

CD.

If the Flying Dutchman[†1] should be done again, pray do go and see it. Webster expressed his opinion to me that it was "a neat piece". I implore you to go and see a neat piece.

To JOHN FORSTER, [13 JULY 1856]

Extract in F, VII, iv, 602. Date: 13 July 56, according to Forster.

About four pounds of powder and half a ton of shot have been fired off at the cat (and the public in general) during the week. The finest thing is that immediately after I have heard the noble sportsman blazing away at her in the garden in front, I look out of my room door into the drawing-room, and am pretty sure to see her coming in after the birds, in the calmest manner, by the back window. Intelligence has been brought to me from a source on which I can rely, that French has newly conceived the atrocious project of tempting her into the coach-house by meat and kindness, and there, from an elevated portmanteau, blowing her head off. This I mean sternly to interdict, and to do so to-day as a work of piety.

To W. H. WILLS, 14 JULY 1856*

MS Robert H. Taylor Collection, Princeton University.

Villa des Moulineaux, Boulogne
Monday Fourteenth July, 1856

My Dear Wills.

Peter arrived this morning, and brought the "odds and ends".

I have no No. here — have returned all Nos. in Proof, promptly, by post. I suppose you to have received the last from me since you wrote the note which Peter brought. I have not been able to write anything for H. W. — have thought of two or three things, but matured nothing.

Sala[†2] we must not begin to print, at any rate until we shall have received another batch of Copy.

Will you be so kind as to go round to Coutts's, and see our little friend Mr. Esse[†3] on the following point.

In my banking-book (received by Cunningham this morning) I find this entry on my Dr. side:

"4th. July — To J. Serle's bill — £24."

I know nothing about any J. Serle, and was at first made uneasy by this, until I supposed it must mean J. Poole. I want to know if that be what is really meant? And then on the other hand, I observe that I am not credited with that amount — though I suppose you have paid it in? Will you set this straight?[†1]

Ever Faithfully

CD.

P.S. You send me, by Cunningham, a letter from a Madame Persano[†2] whom I know at Genoa, proposing to translate from week to week for H.W — D'Azeglio's[†3] Records of Italian life.[†4] Therein, she says "In a day or two, I will send you the first number, and you will let me know how much you think it worth". Have you received such first No. and is it worth any thing? The letter without that necessary light upon it, is useless. Pray answer at once, as there has already been delay, and I ought to write to her.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 15 JULY 1856†

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Prospect Hill | Reading.

Boulogne, Tuesday Fifteenth July, 1856

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I am extremely unwilling to return the enclosed; firstly, because it is a son's remembrance of his father; and secondly because it is a tribute to the worth of one for whom I had a sincere admiration and a high regard.[†5] But it would distinctly be out of place in Household Words — would not look natural there — and would not have its right effect there. Accustomed to consider all kinds of compositions with this reference, I am quite sure that your misgiving is correct, and that your impression is exactly the impression that its appearance in Household Words would make upon its best readers. Will you be so kind as to let Mr. Julian Young[†6] know that if it had contained any facts about his excellent father's life or career, to which I could have given a character like the prevailing tone of Household Words, I would have taken any pains to do so; and further, that on the first natural opportunity I have of writing about the dramatic art, I will assuredly make such an allusion to his father's example, as shall present this point in the clearest light?[†7] (You suppose yourself to have sent me Mr. Julian Young's letter to you — but you have not.)

Yes, I see that Mr. Dunn[†1] is at last disposed of. But I could not help saying when I read the case, that it is remarkable how brisk people are to perceive his madness, the moment he begins to trouble the blood royal. As to his being mad, I believe he is as mad as any other obstinate and persistent scoundrel — and no more.[†2]

Pray read a story in two parts, in Household Words — next No. and the following one — called Anne Rodway's Diary. It is by Mr. Collins, and I think possesses very remarkable merit — especially the close of it. I forget whether I have already mentioned it in a former note. If I have, forgive the repetition.

Charley is in some apprehension that he will have no holiday, Mr. Bates[†3] being reported in the House to have enunciated the dismal sentiment that the Juniors are to have none. I write him, however, that I cannot believe that, in these times, and that we persist in expecting him. I am afraid he really requires a little reviving from the dust and heat of London.

The man on duty in the Man of War, broke down this morning at Inspection-time, and was found guilty of having omitted to open one of the windows. In consideration, however, of previous good character, and of this being the first offence on board he was not superseded.

☛[†4] Mr. Forster is going to marry a widow — five or six and thirty, agreeable, and rather pretty — with as many thousand pounds as she is years of age.[†5] Thereupon, he will relinquish the editing of the Examiner;[†6] which is to be regretted, as he is one of the most responsible and careful of literary men associated with newspapers — though he does hustle an unoffending Company, sometimes.

And this is all the secret history I know of this morning.

With love to Mrs. Brown

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully and affecy. Yours

CD.

To MISS MARY BOYLE, 20 JULY 1856*

MS Morgan Library.

Villa des Moulineaux, Boulogne
Sunday Twentieth July, 1856

Beloved Mary.

This from your own and only Joe. Come by the Tidal train from London Bridge station, which will relieve you of any necessity of looking after, or so much as thinking of, that box, until you arrive here. By which conveyance, my precious gal, you can take a through ticket at one nine six. Mr. and Mrs. Peter Cunningham are staying here, and he is this day a going to Manchester wherefrom he proposes fur to return a wensday — purr-tidal. Consequence of which if you should change to wensdy your own self my duck, he will take charge on you and if not innocence and wirtue will. O do not be cast down about the passage for at this time of the year it is in general a mere O. O breezes waft[†1] (or at least don't waft, but keep yourselves out of the way altogether) my Mary to my arms!

Ever to distraction
Joseph
(In name and natur')

To THOMAS CARLYLE, 20 JULY 1856

MS National Library of Scotland.

Boulogne, | Sunday Twentieth July, 1856

My Dear Carlyle.

This is to present you to my printers and old friends, Messrs. Bradbury and Evans. They desire to have the honor of seeing their imprint attached to the proposed collected Edition of your works.[†2] Now, they have not only printed my books from the first page thereof to this hour, but have been closely associated with me in matters of trust and confidence. And I believe that when I assure you they are not only the best and most powerful printers in London, but have in all our transactions won my affectionate esteem and regard, you will believe that you cannot do better than entrust your Edition to them. I am perfectly sure you will never repent it, or have a moment's dissatisfaction with them. I cannot say too much for them, and no man could say anything for them out of a closer knowledge of them than mine is.

Ever My Dear Carlyle | Cordially Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To W. H. WILLS, 20 JULY 1856†

MS Houghton Library, Harvard.

Boulogne, Sunday Twentieth July, 1856

My Dear Wills.

I hope and trust the eyes are getting better. I have not written since I heard of their being affected, because I deemed it best to leave them and you alone.

No. 333 proof,[†3] I have not received; but there is no hurry, and you probably know that it is not sent.

The Post I have enquired into, and think I have discovered the cause of those two delays, and provided against a repetition of such an important mischance. Of course you will let me know of any other failure.

You will be amazed to receive (as I have no doubt you have received or will receive) letters from Custom House Agents, informing you of a case of Wine lying for you at that agreeable public establishment, and proposing to clear it. I have bought it for Macready,[†1] and it contains 3 dozen of Champagne. Will you authorize the most respectable of these correspondents (in address &c) to clear the same and pay all charges, and forward it to W. C. Macready Esqre. Sherborne House, Sherborne, Dorsetshire. Then if you let Macready know what you have paid for him, he will forthwith remit cheque.

Pray let me know how you are, and whether I am to see you, and whether you can see anything.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To WILKIE COLLINS, 29 JULY 1856

MS Morgan Library.

Boulogne, | Tuesday Twenty Ninth July 1856

My Dear Collins.

I write you at once, in answer to yours received this morning, because there is a slight change in my London plans — necessitated by Townshend's intention of coming to the Pavilion here on the 5th. or 6th. and hoping to have me pretty much at his disposal for a week or so.

Therefore, if Wills should purpose returning to London, on Friday or on Saturday, I shall come up with him, and return here on the fourth or fifth of August. Will you hold yourself disengaged for next Sunday until you hear from me? I think I am very likely to be on the loose that day.

(Having done this morning, I am only waiting here for Wills — whom I don't like to despoil of his trip by going across now.)

On the fifteenth we shall of course delightedly expect you, and you will find your room in Apple Pie Order. I am charmed to hear you have discovered so good a notion for the play. Immense excitement is always in action here on the subject, and I don't think Mary and Katey will feel quite safe until you are shut up in the Pavilion on pen and ink.

I like that view of the picture controversy (what a World it is!) very much, and shall be glad, and much assisted, if you will tell me, by return, when you can have the Copy ready, and about how long it will be. My reason is this: — To facilitate poor Wills's getting a holiday (his stomach has been manufacturing all sorts of unheard-of gases lately, and has been constantly blowing him up, to the great terror of his neighbours who look upon him as a kind of Powder Magazine) we are getting more than usual in advance; and if you can satisfy me on these points while I have Wills beside me, I can keep a No. open, and lead it off with that paper.[†2]

The chateau continues to be the best known, and the Cook is really special.

All send their kindest regard, and their welcome for the 15th. or beforehand.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To THE REV. EDWARD GIRDLESTONE,[†1] 30 JULY 1856*

MS John F. Fleming, Inc.

Villa des Moulineaux | Boulogne Sur Mer

Thirtieth July, 1856

Dear Sir

Your letter has just now been forwarded to me. I am passing the Summer here, for the more uninterrupted pursuit of my avocations.

The correspondence to which you refer, related to a reading of my Christmas Carol, and not to the delivery of a Lecture — a task I never undertake. I regret to assure you that I am at present too much occupied and shall be for many months to come, to have it reasonably within my power to make any promise to visit my Bristol friends.[†2]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Reverend E Girdlestone

August

To W. H. WILLS, 7 AUGUST 1856

MS Huntington Library.

Boulogne Thursday Seventh August 1856

My Dear Wills

I do not feel disposed to record those two Chancery cases;[†3] firstly, because I would rather have no part in engendering in the mind of any human creature, a hopeful confidence in that den of iniquity:

And Secondly, because it seems to me that the real philosophy of the facts is altogether missed in the narrative. The wrong which chanced to be set right in these two cases, was done, as all such wrong is, mainly because these wicked Courts of Equity, with all their means of evasion and postponement, give scoundrels confidence in cheating. If justice were cheap, sure, and speedy, few such things would be. It is because it has become (through the vile dealing of these Courts and the vermin they have called into existence) a positive precept of experience that a man had better endure a great wrong than go, or suffer himself to be taken, into Chancery with the dream of setting it right, — it is because of this, that such nefarious speculations are made.

Therefore I see nothing at all to the credit of Chancery in these cases, but everything to its discredit. And as to "owing" it to Chancery to bear testimony to its having rendered justice in two such plain matters, I have no debt of the kind upon my conscience.

In haste | Ever Faithfully
CD.

To MRS BROWN, 8 AUGUST 1856*

MS Morgan Library.

Boulogne, Friday Eighth August 1856

My Dear Mrs. Brown.

I have considered your question very carefully, and with that anxious desire to make no mistake, which my interest in the subject naturally awakens.[†1]

First, I cannot too strongly agree with you in objecting to leave any discretion to the Committee.[†2] Incalculable abuse, perverted intention, and mischief, come of that, nine times out of ten.

Secondly, it would be very objectionable to bind yourself to any division or disposition of the money among the more deserving students. Cases might easily arise in which your help or encouragement might be of little value to any of them. On the other hand, cases might arise in which you would most ardently desire, perhaps to give the whole year's money to one of them. Suppose, for instance, a deserving young man just to fall short (in a year when no one was up to the mark) through having fallen ill for a time in the course of his hard and anxious study; or through having had to tend a sick sister; or to having devoted himself to a dying widowed mother. Such an occurrence is not out of the reach of probability — not to stop short at possibility — and might be very affecting and meritorious.

What I recommend you to do, is, to stipulate without any reserve, that in case there should be no candidate possessing the necessary amount of qualifications, the money shall revert to you.[†3] Retain, yourself, the power of rewarding any competitor or competitors as you think best, and I am sure you will never repent it.

I conceive this supposititious failure of all the competitors, to be very unlikely ever to occur. But, it is quite right to provide for it; and, if it should occur, I say let the money come back to you or your representative. In considering the matter before I thought of this, I felt that I was always wandering about among some uneasy chances; but, in this direction, the road seems to me to be clear, safe, and light.

This little place looks very beautiful, but the leaves are beginning to be tinged with yellow, and the berries are turning red, and we have already begun to talk sometimes of our return home early in October. They all send best love to you and to Miss Coutts. Mary is acquiring an immense reputation as an arranger of flowers, and we have some new device on the table at dinner every day. The Cats at the Mill, are still the great topic of the house, and Mr. Plornish mentions them after dark, in a low voice. One of the porters at the Pavilion at Folkestone, trained and sent him over a little goldfinch who draws all the water he drinks, in a thimble. He hangs in my room all the morning, that he may be safe from these ravaging cats. I observe that when he draws the thimble up, he has to put a foot upon the tiny cord, to keep it in its place while he drinks — and that he knows that when he takes his foot away, the thimble will tumble down into the glass with a chink that will frighten him. So sometimes he stands thinking about letting it go, without being able to make up his mind to take his foot off the cord — and the moment he at last does so, he flys away to the remotest end of his perch, that he may hear the chink from a respectful distance. He won't drink when I look at him; but I have beaten him by looking in the glass. Then he exults over me (supposing me to have my eye on the cathedral), and drinks bumpers.[†1] — Which brings me over-leaf to sign myself — which I have no need to do —

Ever Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To W. C. MACREADY, 8 AUGUST 1856†

MS Morgan Library.

Boulogne | Friday August Eighth 1856

My Dearest Macready

I like the second little Poem[†2] very much indeed, and think (as you do) that it is a great advance upon the first.[†3] Please to note that I make it a rule to pay for everything that is inserted in Household Words — holding it to be a part of my trust, to make my fellow-proprietors understand that they have no right to any unrequited labor. Therefore, when Wills (who has been ill and is gone for a holiday) does his invariable spiriting, gently, — don't make Katey's case different from Adelaide Procter's.[†4]

I am afraid there is no possibility of my reading Dorset-shire-wards. I have made many conditional promises thus: "I am very much occupied; but, if I read at all, I will read for your Institution in such an order on my list." Edinburgh which is No. 1,

I have been obliged to put so far off as next Christmas twelvemonth. Bristol stands next. The working men at Preston come next. And so, if I were to go out of the record and read for your people, I should bring such a house about my ears as would shake Little Dorrit out of my head.

Being in town last Saturday, I went to see Robson[†1] in a burlesque of Medea.[†2] It is an odd but perfectly true testimony to the extraordinary power of his performance (which is of a very remarkable kind indeed), that it points the badness of Ristori's[†3] acting, in a most singular manner, by bringing out what she might do and does not. The scene with Jason is perfectly terrific; and the manner in which the comic rage and jealousy does not pitch itself over the float at the stalls is in striking contrast to the manner in which the tragic rage and jealousy does. He has a frantic song and dagger-dance, about two minutes long altogether, which has more passion in it than Ristori could express in fifty years.[†4]

We all unite in kindest love to Miss Macready, and all your dear ones: not forgetting my Godson, to whom I send his godfather's particular love twice over. The Hammy boy is so brown that you would scarcely know him.

Ever My Dear Macready

Affectionately Yours

CD.

To MRS BROWN, 10 AUGUST 1856*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Angleterre: | Mrs. Brown | Miss Burdett Coutts | Prospect Hill | Reading.

Boulogne, Sunday Tenth August 1856

My Dear Mrs. Brown.

I think your letter received here this morning, has crossed my reply to your former letter.

My opinion as to the Sixth clause[†5] is quite unaltered, and I repeat my former advice. It seems to be highly objectionable that the sum intended to have been awarded in any year, shall, in case of failure or forfeiture, go in augmentation of the next Exhibition. It might positively lead to the future reward of a Student, for present negligence; or it might lead (I don't say would), under some exceptional circumstances, to a compact among the Students to fail this year, and try for the Exhibition of increased value next year. Besides, I think it essential to the dignity and usefulness of your remembrance of your good husband, that it should be a substantial, unchanging, solid thing — liable to no fluctuations or vacillations arising out of the heedlessness of young men; but fixed and settled as your own mind and heart are on all associated with him.

I can quite understand why the Hospital Authorities may, in perfect honor and good faith, desire to lose none of this money through the negligence of their pupils. But that is not the question. The question is how you can best satisfy your own desire to help young men treading in your husband's footsteps, and also how you can best satisfy the sentiment that belongs to that desire. With these views, I again say — When this money is not won, let it come back to you or your representative. Can you not easily imagine that, in the chances and difficulties of life, it might then even come to be a help of vast importance to some young man who in a former year had carried off the Exhibition triumphantly, and perhaps made it famous for ever?

Again — don't disparage the Exhibition — don't make it a game — so much in the pool this time — so much more or less, next time. It will do nobody good.

With affectionate regard to Miss Coutts | Believe me Ever | Faithfully Yours

CD.[†1]

To W. H. WILLS, 10 AUGUST 1856*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Boulogne, Sunday August Tenth 1856

My Dear Wills

I am heartily glad you have let your house, and cordially congratulate you thereupon. It is even worth a slight inroad upon your holiday.

Ansell's[†2] bill that you write about, I gave John a cheque to pay, full a week ago. I am vexed that the poor man has had to ask for it. Will you ascertain from John that it is not still unpaid; and tell him whenever he has money to pay, to pay it immediately?

Enclosed is a paper by Townshend[†3] — not brilliant, but good enough. As I have rejected innumerable articles of his, I want it to go into the next No. you make up. It will do very well for the last article in the No.[†4]

As I am writing, I give you on the other side, an order, dated next Wednesday, for my book at Coutts's.[†1] If John gets it on Wednesday afternoon and takes it on Thursday to Collins (who is coming on Friday), he will bring it, and any thing else you may have to send.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

I have the Pirate-parcel,[†2] safe.
In last Wednesday's Times there is a very remarkable letter from the Colliers in the Pit where the last great accident was,[†3] stating their case, and making out with every appearance of truth that they "struck", to save their poor lives.[†4] Watch the case. If they be not very decidedly disproved in their assertions, then it is a case to go into, and on which to communicate with their attorney and represent their grievance (when the enquiry shall be concluded), in a history of the whole matter.[†5] The same paper contains a fearful accident at Sheffield from unfenced machinery.[†6]

To JOHN FORSTER, [?8-10 AUGUST 1856]

Extracts in F, VII, iv, 601. Date: after CD's return on 5 Aug which was also the day the Fair[†7] began; probably the following weekend.

The last of the camp was now at hand. It had only a battalion of men in it, and a few days would see them out. At first there was horrible weather, storms of wind, rushes of rain, heavy squalls, cold airs, sea fogs, banging shutters, flapping doors, and beaten down rose-trees by the hundred; but then came a delightful week among the corn fields and bean fields and afterwards the end. It looks very singular and very miserable. The soil being sand, and the grass having been trodden away these two years, the wind from the sea carries the sand into the chinks and ledges of all the doors and windows, and chokes them; — just as if they belonged to Arab huts in the desert. A number of the non-commissioned officers made turf-couches outside their huts, and there were turf orchestras for the bands to play in; all of which are fast getting sanded over in a most Egyptian manner. The Fair is on, under the walls of the haute ville over the way. At one popular show, the Malakhoff[†1] is taken every half-hour between 4 and 11. Bouncing explosions announce every triumph of the French arms (the English have nothing to do with it); and in the intervals a man outside blows a railway whistle — straight into the dining-room. Do you know that the French soldiers call the English medal "The Salvage Medal"[†2] — meaning that they got it for saving the English army? I don't suppose there are a thousand people in all France who believe that we did anything but get rescued by the French. And I am confident that the no-result of our precious Chelsea enquiry[†3] has wonderfully strengthened this conviction. Nobody at home has yet any adequate idea, I am deplorably sure, of what the Barnacles and the Circumlocution Office have done for us.[†4] But whenever we get into war again, the people will begin to find out.

To W. H. WILLS, 12 AUGUST 1856*

MS Yale University Library.

Boulogne Tuesday Twelfth August 1856

My Dear Wills.

H. W.[†5]

I have gone over the No.[†6] and return it herewith.

Collins's paper I have entitled (I repeat the title here as it is not very plain upon the Proof):

To Think, or to be thought for?[†7]

Mr. Speckles on Himself,[†1] is so weak, that it would be hardly possible to put King Leopold's Curiosity Shop (which is mere Ditch Water Make Weight) in a worse place. Can't you substitute some better paper for this curiosity Shop?[†2] And Miss Macready's poem, the Angel of Love or whatever it's called, is immeasurably better than the poem in the proof.[†3]

(Apropos of Miss Macready, Macready particularly wishes her not[†4] to be paid for her first two poems)

Six Years in a Cell[†5] is extremely good. I shall be much interested in seeing the writer[†6] when I come home.

Perfectly Contented,[†7] I don't adequately understand. The joke is too fine for me.[†8] But let it be.

I think Townshend in King Leopold's place would be better and would be about the requisite length, if you have nothing of superior merit.

MISS BESSIE FORSTER[†9]

has thrown the Chateau into ecstacies.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To WILKIE COLLINS, 13 AUGUST 1856

MS Morgan Library.

Villa des Moulineaux | Wednesday Thirteenth August 1856

My Dear Collins

When I saw (on returning here) the unconscionable hour on Friday, I expected to hear from you. But you don't know that on that day there are two boats, the last of which leaves Folkestone for this place at 8 in the Evening. Now this would be better than next morning, because you could leave town on Friday afternoon at 1/2 past 4, and even then have an hour at Folkestone, and be here by the usual time of going to bed. However, unless I hear from you to the contrary, I shall assume that you come on Saturday morning.†1

The last atrocity set me up with brilliancy. I shall have to relate to you with minute particulars (the merit of the narrative, its surprising character excepted, lies in them),

THE STORY OF MRS. BELL†2

— as achieved by an individual whom I will call The Gentle Shepherd, at the appointed hour.

Ever Yours

CD.

I am forgetting the Picture-Paper, which I went over, yesterday, and liked very much. I altered the title, and it stands thus.

TO THINK, OR BE THOUGHT FOR?†3

I also changed "Criticism" once or twice, to "Cant of Criticism". If you should have time, I wish you would ask Wills to let you see my marked proof.

One†4 or two trifles will probably be sent to you on Thursday to bring over.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 13 AUGUST 1856†

MS Morgan Library.

Villa des Moulineaux | Wednesday Thirteenth August, 1856

My Dear Miss Coutts

I believe there will always be a qualified competitor,†5 unless the terms of the Exhibition should by an unfortunate mistake, give the qualified competitor a reason for stopping short of full success. By dividing it between two, in the event of no marked superiority on the part of one, you might readily (though unintentionally) appeal to a generous mind, to abstain from rising above the level of the next best man, and content himself with half the prize.

Mrs. Brown ought certainly to know with distinctness the nature of the Examination. That clearly laid down, I should not be afraid of the Committee rewarding an incompetent person. The credit of their School of Medicine would be more impaired by their so doing, than by their admitting "We have no student, this year, qualified for the Exhibition, who has been a Candidate for it." They would always have that saving clause.

The deed should by all means be revocable. It is the only efficient protection, I am convinced, against abuse.

Many thanks for the clue to the outfit,[†6] which will be of the greatest assistance to me. Charley shall go to the place and make a copy of the whole list.

When I was last at Folkestone, the picture was strongly before me which your note suggests. I have never been there since, without thinking of it, and of you two.[†1]

Pray tell Mrs. Brown with my love, that the flowers are beautiful, and that Mary is improving in her powers of floral arrangement every day. In two parts of the garden, we have sweet peas nearly seven feet high, and their blossoms rustle in the sun, like Peacocks' tails. We have a honey-suckle that would be the finest in the world — if that were not at Gad's Hill. The house is invisible at a few yards' distance, hidden in roses and geraniums. The little bird is gradually getting less afraid of his thimble, and draws a world of water this hot weather. He hangs in the drawing-room now, with the two other birds; and a tremendous sensation was created yesterday just before dinner by his being found hanging by the leg, upside down, in the cord from which one of their cages depends — twirling round and round as if he were roasting for a course of poultry. It took about half an hour to untwist him. He was prodigiously ruffled, and staggered about as if he had been to the public house; but soon recovered.

I crossed from Folkestone a week ago, and found Townshend on board, fastened up in his carriage, in a feeble wide-awake hat. It was rather windy, and the sea broke pretty heavily over the deck. With sick women lying among his wheels in various attitudes of despair, he looked like an Ancient Briton of a weak constitution — say Boadicea's father — in his war-chariot on the field of battle. I could not but mount the Royal Car, and I found it to be perforated in every direction with cupboards, containing every description of physic, old brandy, East India Sherry, sandwiches, oranges, cordial waters, newspapers, pocket handkerchiefs, shawls, flannels, telescopes, compasses, repeaters (for ascertaining the hour in the dark), and finger-rings of great value. He was on his way to Lausanne, and he asked me the extraordinary question "how Mrs. Williams,[†2] the American Actress, kept her wig on?" I then perceived that mankind was to be in a conspiracy to believe that he wears his own hair.

Some gravel got into my bath the other morning, and cut my left elbow, deep, in so complicated a manner that I was obliged to send into the town for a surgeon to come and strap it up. This reminds me of the political Surgeons, and of the fearful mess they have made of the Peace.[†3] But I have never doubted Lord Palmerston[†4] to be (considering the age in which he lives) the emptiest impostor and the most dangerous delusion, ever known. Within three months of the peace, here are its main conditions broken and the whole World laughing at us![†5] I am as certain that these men will get us conquered at last, as I am that I shall die. We have been feared and hated a long time. To become a jest after that, is a very, very, serious thing. Nobody knows what the English people will be when they wake up at last and find it out. (N. B. This is the gravel that gets into my mind).

Loves from all.

Dear Miss Coutts | Ever Faithfully and AffYrs

CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [15 AUGUST 1856]

Extract in F, IX, i, 715-16. Date: 15 Aug 56, according to Forster.[†1]

Writing of the limitations placed upon the artist in England. Similarly I have always a fine feeling of the honest state into which we have got, when some smooth gentleman says to me or to some one else when I am by, how odd it is that the hero of an English book is always uninteresting — too good — too natural, &c. I am continually hearing this of Scott from English people here, who pass their lives with Balzac[†2] and Sand. But O my smooth friend, what a shining impostor you must think yourself and what an ass you must think me, when you suppose that by putting a brazen face upon it you can blot out of my knowledge the fact that this same unnatural young gentleman (if to be decent is to be necessarily unnatural), whom you meet in those other books and in mine, must be presented to you in that unnatural aspect by reason of your morality, and is not to have, I will not say any of the indecencies you like, but not even any of the experiences, trials, perplexities, and confusions inseparable from the making or unmaking of all men!

To MRS CHARLES DICKENS, 25 AUGUST 1856

MS British Library.

Boulogne, Monday Twenty Fifth August | 1856.

My Dearest Catherine

I write hastily, after having been caught in a very heavy squall — and having got wet through and through — and having changed, and being now in expectation of the Dinner-bell.

Mr. Gibson[†3] was here this morning, with the result of his enquiries among the Doctors in the town. It appears on their showing, that the Epidemic[†4] has undoubtedly been very bad, and that it was considered at its worst about the end of June, when twenty children died of it in a day. That there are at present no cases, and that there have been none for two or three weeks. That there has never been a single case in the Haute Ville. That Dr. Scott,[†5] finally, proves his belief that the danger is over, by intending to have his son, who is now in London, brought back to Boulogne for the opening of Mr. Gibson's school.

Under these circumstances Mr. Gibson and Mr. Bewsher consider that there is no reason for postponing the opening of the school on the regular day, and that they incur no unusual risk or responsibility in opening it. I have said that as the boys are in London, I shall prefer to keep them there some fortnight or so after the opening of the School, and that if I should then receive Mr. Gibson's assurance that all continues well and that the disease has made no new head, I shall send them to him.

I have not the least doubt of Mr. Gibson's perfect honor and good faith. The interval I propose will enable us to see (I hope) that there are no dangers behind or facts behind, which are unknown to him.

We are afraid you had a rather rough passage, though a fast one. I hope the Noble Plorn did not suffer from the commotions or fatigues of his journey. Give him all our loves, and tell him that we missed the Hammy boy terribly, at breakfast this morning, when there was no one to bring up the rolls.

All unite too in love to you, and Frank, Alfred, Syddy (Giant I mean) and Harry. And all send kind remembrances to Nurse.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To SIR JOSEPH OLLIFFE, [25 AUGUST 1856]

Envelope only, MS Benoliel Collection. Address: Sir Joseph Olliffe | Trouville | Calvados. Date: PM 25 Août; year illegible but no doubt 1856: see To Mrs CD, 25 Aug.[†1]

To JOHN FORSTER, [?30 AUGUST 1856]

Extracts in F, VII, iv, 603. Date: first extract almost certainly immediately after A'Beckett's death; second extract probably same letter.

Gilbert A'Beckett,[†2] finding his small son dangerously ill, sank under an illness from which he had been suffering[†3] and died[†4] two days after the boy. He had for three days shown symptoms of rallying and we had some hope of his recovery; but he sank and died, and never even knew that the child had gone before him. A sad, sad story.[†5]

Poor M. Beaucourt was inconsolable when the family left. The desolation of the place is wretched. When Mamey and Katey went,[†1] Beaucourt came in and wept. He really is almost broken-hearted about it. He had planted all manner of flowers for next month, and has thrown down the spade and left off weeding the garden, so that it looks something like a dreary bird-cage with all manner of grasses and chickweeds sticking through the bars and lying in the sand. "Such a loss too," he says, "for Monsieur Dickens!" Then he looks in at the kitchen window (which seems to be his only relief), and sighs himself up to the hill home.

September

To MRS CHARLES DICKENS, 2 SEPTEMBER 1856

MS British Library. Address: Angleterre. | Mrs. Charles Dickens | Tavistock House | Tavistock Square | London.

Boulogne, Tuesday Second September 1856

My Dearest Catherine.

We are in all the confusion and bewilderment of moving. I leave tomorrow — Georgy and the Servants, next day. We were all coming away together tomorrow; but there is so much to do, that the new arrangement has sprung up today.

Georgina had already got in the small hatter's bill.[†2] I enclose a £5 cheque, in case you want it.

We are all shocked by the idea of another of those poor children being ill; but I hope the removal may bring him round.[†3]

With love to all | Ever affecy.

CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?7 SEPTEMBER 1856]

Extract from F, VIII, iii, 650. Date: "July" 56, according to Forster; but see below.

Returning to England through Kent with Wilkie Collins,[†4] advantages of Gadshill[†5] occurred to him. A railroad opened from Rochester to Maidstone, which connects Gadshill at once with the whole sea coast,[†6] is certainly an addition to the place, and an enhancement of its value. Bye and bye we shall have the London, Chatham and Dover, too; and that will bring it within an hour of Canterbury and an hour and a half to Dover.[†1] I am glad to hear of your having been in the neighbourhood. There is no healthier (marshes avoided), and none in my eyes more beautiful. One of these days I shall show you some places up the Medway with which you will be charmed.

To CLARKSON STANFIELD, [?7 SEPTEMBER 1856]

Mention in To Roberts, 13 Sep 56. Date: immediately on CD's return to London.

To THOMAS BEARD, 8 SEPTEMBER 1856

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Place | Edgeware Road.

Tavistock House | Monday Eighth September 1856

My Dear Beard.

We have all come away from Boulogne! — Not deliberately to jockey you out of your share in the Moulineaux, but because I received a warning so pressing from my friend Dr. Olliffe in Paris, of the necessity of removing the children out of the reach of a dangerous Epidemic there, that I had nothing for it but to send them off by the next boat, and follow myself, a fortnight afterwards. Poor A'Beckett's death had saddened the air of the place besides, and my people were all gloomy.

So here we are! —

Can you make a day for a walk in the Gad's Hill neighbourhood, and a dinner of consolation at Gravesend? I am your man for that, or any other similar expedition.

Ever Cordially

CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 8 SEPTEMBER 1856

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Prospect Hill | Reading.

Tavistock House | Monday Eight September 1856.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

We have all come home from Boulogne. A letter of the strongest possible warning, from my friend Dr. Olliffe at Paris, induced me to send the children home a fortnight ago. The rest of us have followed by driblets, and I have brought up the rear. You will have seen in the papers I dare say, that poor Mr. A Beckett died there, unconscious that one of his children lay dead in the next room.[†2]

He was a very conscientious man and an admirable magistrate, and is a real loss.

I hope to get out to Shepherd's Bush on Wednesday, and forthwith to re-establish the regular meetings. After a plunge of four and twenty hours duration among the wrecks of my dismantled study, I have happily fished up all the fragments of that noble ship and pieced them together. The neat result is afloat again, and looks none the worse!

I am sorry to say that Katey has come home the worse for her absence, and is very far from well. She has a bad cough, and lost her usual pretty looks with extraordinary suddenness. I was very anxious for her to be seen by Dr. Watson,[†1] but we found him out of town and not expected back for a month or six weeks. So I sent her in the meantime to Dr. Hastings,[†2] who says she will come right. The noble Baby, after having been the admiration of our gallant neighbours, and the most popular person in Boulogne, has returned to defy competition at home.

We all send kindest regard to Mrs. Brown and I am Ever My Dear Miss Coutts

Affecy. and faithfully Yours

CD.

To [T. J.] MOLYNEUX,[†3] 8 SEPTEMBER 1856†

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Eighth September 1856

Sir.

I am sorry that in the hurry of being newly returned to town after a long absence, and having a great deal to do, I could not wait for you this morning.

It is unnecessary for me to assure you that I feel a real interest in the project to which your letter invites my attention.[†4] I regret to add, however, that I cannot comply with your request. My time is at present so fully occupied that I am obliged to forego all such engagements; and if I were to make an exception in this case, I should immediately be reminded of conditional promises, and overwhelmed by a flood of correspondence, for which I have no leisure.

With this sufficient reason for avoiding public meetings while my own avocations occupy my time and attention, it is scarcely necessary perhaps to hint at any other. But in my desire to be quite frank with you and the friends you represent, I will add that even if I had been more at leisure, I doubt very much whether I should not, on consideration, have requested you to excuse my compliance with your proposal. I am not at all clear in the first place that I have a right to assume such a position in reference to an entertainment over the arrangements of which I have no power, and in the direction of which I assume no responsibility. In the second place I most earnestly desire to see a working man in that position — one of your own body — personally identified with the merit of the scheme and with the working of it out. The recognition of such a President would have a meaning in it, and a becoming expression of self-reliance, which I think would be as agreeable to many thousands as it would to me. I confess to having an uneasy feeling in all such cases, that the term "self-supporting" includes, of right, much more than the mere money question; and I wish your Society would be self supporting in the much higher sense of putting its own men and its own members in its high places. If I were then invited as its guest, to take my place among the general auditory, listen to the music, and bear my testimony to the humanizing and improving influences of such good efforts, through such channels as I have open to me, I should respond with great pleasure.

I am Sir, Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr Molyneux.

To [MRS BATEMAN],[†1] 9 SEPTEMBER 1856*

MS University of Virginia.

Office of Household Words,
Tuesday Ninth September 1856

My Dear Madam.

Your story has been awaiting my return to town.

I regret that I cannot have the pleasure of accepting it. Although it has many points of merit, it is too long in doing what it does, and has too little incident and movement in it, for the purposes of this journal.

Hoping to be a more agreeable correspondent on a future occasion, and begging you to give my kind regard to Mr. Bateman,[†2]

I am Dear Madam | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To THE REV. MATTHEW GIBSON, 9 SEPTEMBER 1856*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Ninth September 1856.

My Dear Sir

I thought it right to let you know what Mr. Jerrold[†1] had told us; deeming it possible that some person might, in ignorance or interest, have misrepresented the case of the poor little boy to you. Nothing can be more distinct and emphatic than Dr. Cookesley's[†2] note — but it is undeniable on the other hand that the family do consider the child to have died of malignant sore throat, and did positively record in the obituary of the newspapers at home here, that he died of that disorder.

The medical testimony to which you refer in the note I had the pleasure of receiving from you yesterday, appeared in yesterday's Times.[†3] I fear that the good effect it might otherwise have produced, will be much impaired by its being signed by only one of the resident English medical practitioners.[†4]

The three boys are all well, and I shall not keep them at home much longer unless you have (as I do not expect you will have) any new reason for recommending caution. We are all sorry to have had our pleasant summer-quarters so suddenly broken up.

With kind regard from my whole house, Believe me My Dear Sir

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Reverend M. Gibson

To WILKIE COLLINS, 12 SEPTEMBER 1856

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Twelfth September 1856.

My Dear Collins

†a*An admirable idea.*†a†5 It seems to me to supply and include everything the play wanted. But it is so very strong, that I doubt whether the man†6 can (without an anti climax) be shewn to be rescued and alive, until the last Act. The struggle, the following him away, the great suspicion, and the suspended interest, in the second. The relief and joy of the discovery in the third.

Here again, Mark's part†7 seems to me to be suggested. An honest bluff man previously admiring and liking me†8 — conceiving the terrible suspicion — watching its growth in his own mind — and gradually falling from me in the very generosity and manhood of his nature†1 — would be engaging in itself, would be what he would do remarkably well; would give me capital things to do with him (and you know we go very well together); and would greatly strengthen the suspended interest aforesaid.†2

I throw this out, with all deference of course to your internal view and preconception of the matter. Turn it how you will, the strength of the situation is †a*prodigious*†a — and if we don't bring the house down with it, I'm a — Tory. (an illegible word which I mean for TORY.)†3

Hoping to see you to night,

Ever Cordially

CD.

P.S.

I may as well mention that I have made out the trip accounts. The total disbursements were, £16..0..6. Being £5..6..10 each.†4

To W. D. [?BOWATER],†5 13 SEPTEMBER 1856

MS Mr Marshall R. Anspach. Text from owner's transcript.

Tavistock House | Saturday Thirteenth September | 1856

Sir

In reply to your letter, I beg to express my regret that I cannot comply with the request preferred in it. But my avocations occupy so much of my time and press so constantly on my attention, that I am at present obliged to forego all attendance at public meetings.

I am Sir | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

W. D. Boneter Esquire

To DAVID ROBERTS,†6 13 SEPTEMBER 1856*

MS Mr Anthony R. Turner. Address: David Roberts Esquire. R.A.

Tavistock House | Saturday Thirteenth September | 1856

My Dear Roberts

I answer your letter myself, in order that the arrangements may be quite plain.

We purpose sending the boys back by the General Steam Navigation Co's boat which leaves London Bridge Wharf on Friday Morning at about 3 o'Clock — that is to say, they will go aboard about 9 or 10 on Thursday night. You should take your grandson's[†7] berth at the office in Regent Circus.

I am heartily obliged to you for the hint you gave Mrs. Dickens about Stanny. It perfectly amazed me (for I could have no earthly reason to imagine such a thing), but of course I instantly wrote to him and set it all right.[†1]

Ever Cordially Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

David Roberts Esquire.

To WILKIE COLLINS, 13 SEPTEMBER 1856

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House
Saturday Night | Thirteenth September 1856

My Dear Collins

Another idea I have been waiting to impart. — I dare say you have anticipated it. Now, Mrs. Wills's second sight is clear as to the illustration of it, and greatly helps that suspended interest. Thus. "You ask me what I see of those Lost Voyagers! I see the lamb in the grasp of the Lion — your bonnie bird alone with the hawk — What do I see? I see you and all around you crying Blood! The stain of his Blood is upon you, (C.D.)!" — [†2]

— Which would be right to a certain extent, and absolutely wrong as to the Marrow of it.[†3]

Ever Yours
CD.

To [?T. R. EELES],[†4] 15 SEPTEMBER 1856

Mention in Pickering & Chatto, The Book Lovers Leaflet, No. 13 (9 Feb 1888); dated Tavistock House, 15 Sep 56.

Referring to the re-binding of Catlin's Indians.[†5]

To GEORGE AUGUSTUS SALA, 15 SEPTEMBER 1856

MS Rosenbach Foundation.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS,
Monday Fifteenth September 1856

My Dear Mr. Sala.

In the No. we have made up to day,[†1] I have begun your Journey.[†2] This No. will be published on Wednesday the 1st. of October.

As I have found it necessary to take a good deal out of the two first papers, I am anxious that you should perfectly understand from myself, my only reason for having done so. It seemed to me to be essential to get the first two papers so compressed together, as that you might be fairly on your way to Russia itself in the first periodical portion of your book.[†3] Otherwise, you would have staved some readers off, and might have missed the most important stage (the first) at which to attract attention. All the passages taken out, shall be carefully preserved for you;[†4] and I have taken pains so to select them for omission as to do no damage to the descriptions that remain.

I like the opening very much, and hope the result of this undertaking will realize the best hopes with which it was begun. I have been concerned to hear from Wills, on more than [one][†5] occasion, of your not being well. But I trust you have now health and spirits to carry you pleasantly through the work.

We shall follow the first portion up with the others, in weekly succession.

Believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

G. A. Sala Esquire

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 16 SEPTEMBER 1856*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Prospect Hill | Reading.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Sixteenth September | 1865

My Dear Miss Coutts.

To my shame and mortification Mr. Wills reminded me incidentally yesterday, that I had appointed Saturday Afternoon at 4 for a Meeting of our Guild Committee (which we are obliged by the Act of Parliament[†6] to hold formally), and that the Summonses had duly gone out.

If you please, take particular notice that this otherwise disgraceful obliviousness is not to be recorded against my model punctuality. The pocket ledger which defies all competition in its exactness, had not been entered up, in the distractions of moving and settling, and editing and writing. Hence the deplorable result.

May I faintly and afar off, hint at Saturday Week? May I also falteringly send my penitent regard to Mrs. Brown? They trample on me here as much as they dare — which is not much.

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

To JOHN GIBBON,[†1] 16 SEPTEMBER 1856

MS Private (seen before destruction in Prestwick air-crash, Dec 1954).

Tavistock House, London | Sixteenth September 1856.

Sir.

Allow me to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, and to assure you (which I hope is unnecessary), that I shall respect your confidence. You already know through the pages of the work to which you refer, that I am not indifferent to the truths you state, and that I earnestly desire to impress the necessity of a better and juster system on the general mind.

Your faithful Servant

CHARLES DICKENS

John Gibbon Esquire.

To W. H. WILLS, 16 SEPTEMBER 1856

MS Huntington Library.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Sixteenth September 1856.

My Dear Wills

I have been thinking a good deal about Collins, and it strikes me that the best thing we can just now do for H. W. is to add him on to Morley, and offer him Five Guineas a week. He is very suggestive, and exceedingly quick to take my notions. Being industrious and reliable besides, I don't think we should be at an additional expence of £20 in the year by the transaction.

I observe that to a man in his position who is fighting to get on, the getting his name before the public is important. Some little compensation for its not being constantly announced, is needed, and that I fancy might be afforded by a certain engagement. If you are of my mind, I wish you would go up to him this morning, and tell him this is what we have to propose to him today, and what I wish him, if he can, to consider beforehand. You could explain the nature of such an engagement to him, in half a dozen words, far more easily than we could all open it together. And he would then come prepared.

Of course he should have permission to collect his writings, and would be handsomely and generously considered in all respects. I think it would do him, in the long run, a world of good; and I am certain that by meeting together — dining three instead of two — and sometimes calling in Morley to boot — we should knock out much new fire.

What it is desirable to put before him, is the regular association with the work, and the means he already has of considering whether it would be pleasant and useful to him to work with me, and whether any mere trading engagement would be likely to render him as good service.†1

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To MRS BROWN, 18 SEPTEMBER 1856

Mention in N, II, 801.

To W. H. WILLS, 18 SEPTEMBER 1856

MS Huntington Library.

Tavistock House | Thursday Eighteenth September | 1856

My Dear Wills.

Don't conclude anything *un*favourable with Collins, without previous reference of the subject, and the matter of your consultation, to me. And again put before him clearly, when he comes to you, that I do not interpose myself in this stage of the business, solely because I think it right that he should consider and decide without any personal influence on my part.

I think him wrong in his objection, and have not the slightest doubt that such a confusion of authorship†2 (which I don't believe to obtain in half a dozen minds out of half a dozen hundred) would be a far greater service than dis-service to him. This I clearly see. But, as far as a long story is concerned, I see not the least objection to our advertising, at once, before it begins, that it is by him. I do see an objection to departing from our custom of not putting names to the papers in H. W. itself; but to our advertising the authorship of a long story, as a Rider to all our advertisements, I see none whatever.†3

Now, as to a long story itself, I doubt its value to us. And I feel perfectly convinced that it is not one quarter so useful to us as detached papers, or short stories in four parts. But I am quite content to try the experiment.†4 The story should not, however, go beyond six months, and the engagement should be for twelve.

Faithfully Ever

CD

To GEORGE AUGUSTUS SALA, 19 SEPTEMBER 1856

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Tavistock House, London
Friday, Nineteenth September 1856

Dear Mr Sala.

Nothing can be better than your list of subjects.[†1] It promises admirably, and I have no doubt of your performance.

I beg that you will not suppose that you "have long ceased to be interested commercially" in this design. I have no knowledge of that kind. The passage in your note has grated upon me and pained me but would have done so in a much deeper degree if I could have admitted its truth. It is a mistake.

May you be as much mistaken in your despondent view of your health! Encouraged by your being wrong in one case, I hope you may be wrong in the other, and that I may add you, twenty years hence, to the prosperous list I have of men who were going to die between twenty five and thirty five, and are strong and happy, fifteen years afterwards, this day.

I believe (with reason arising out of my own observation) that there is no human malady in which doctors make such extraordinary mistakes as in that attributed to you. I have hardly ever known a recovered patient of a year or two's standing, who had not been at one time declared to have a disease of the heart. Near home here, I can at once lay my hand on two people, man and woman, most notable instances of this truth.

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To DR R. B. CARTER,[†2] 20 SEPTEMBER 1856

Mention in American Book Prices Current, 1973, p. 1034; MS 1 p.; addressed Dr R. B. Carter; dated 20 Sep 56.

Accepting an article on health and education.[†3]

To W. H. WILLS, 21 SEPTEMBER 1856*

MS Huntington Library.

Tavistock House | Sunday Twenty First September | 1856.

My Dear Wills

I send you a paper by Mowbray Morris's[†1] man, which will suit us very well, and will perfectly answer for the first paper in the next No. you make up.

I hope he may turn out a very useful acquisition to us. He will call upon you soon, no doubt. His name and address are

Mr. R. B. Carter
12 Crawley Terrace
Fulham Road

Ever Faithfully
CD.

To JAMES E. RONEY,[†2] 23 SEPTEMBER 1856*

MS Dickens House.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Twenty Third September | 1856.

My Dear Roney.

I am delighted to get your letter, and shall be more than delighted to see you. I am unfortunately obliged to dine out tomorrow, but am quite free, both for Thursday and Friday. Tell me on which day you will dine with me at 6 o'Clock, and I will have nobody else at the family table.

Lord! To think of a Colonial Chief Justice![†3] And it was but the day before yesterday that we gave our first dinner at the Mansion of Mrs. Rogers in Buckingham Street, Adelphi. I bought the soup myself (it was hard, and looked like a bit of a mantel-piece), and you provided some inheritance of family tea-spoons for the decoration of the festival.

Ever Cordially Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

James E Roney Esquire.

To MRS BROWN, 24 SEPTEMBER 1856*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Mrs. Brown | Miss Burdett Coutts | Prospect Hill | Reading.[†4]

Tavistock House
Wednesday September Twenty Fourth | 1856.

My Dear Mrs. Brown

I called on Mr. Ouvry very soon after you left me on Monday, but he had gone from his office for the afternoon. Yesterday he came here to me, and we went through the draft with great care, three times. I think he is now in complete possession of your wishes on the subject and fully understands the suggested alterations. He quite agreed with me that it is but reasonable that you yourself should retain, during your lifetime, the power of appointing any new trustees who may be rendered necessary by the death or resignation of any one of those first appointed. As soon as the amended draft shall be prepared, he will forward it to you for your approval.

You will have to reduce the number of your trustees to four, as the Bank of England does not receive more in such a case.[†1]

With affectionate regard to Miss Coutts

Believe me ever | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 26 SEPTEMBER 1856

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Friday Twenty Sixth September | 1856

My Dear Miss Coutts

I grieve to say that I must deny myself a holiday tomorrow. Destiny seems to be against my coming to Prospect Hill. After having been greatly put-out by the unexpected necessity of chopping and changing at Boulogne, I have come home to such an immense arrear of demands on my attention, that I am falling behind-hand with that reserve of Little Dorrit which has kept me easy during its progress, and to lose which would be a serious thing. All the week I have been hard at it[†2] with a view to tomorrow; but I have not been in a quick vein (which is not to be commanded), and have made but tardy way. If I stick to it resolutely now, next week will bring me up. If I let a day go now, there is no saying when I may work round again and come right. You will see what a hard necessity it is that makes me decide so much against my wishes.

With kind regard to Mrs. Brown

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Affecy. and faithfully Yours

CD.

To GEORGE DOLBY,[†1] 28 SEPTEMBER 1856

Extract in Samuel T. Freeman & Co catalogue, May 1932; MS 1 p.; dated Tavistock House, 28 Sep 56; misread as "Donly" in catalogue.

I don't care much for the weather and am off to the Foundling,[†2] and (unless it should rain Tiger cats and Newfoundland dogs), to Hampstead afterwards.

To CLARKSON STANFIELD, 28 SEPTEMBER 1856

MS Private.

Tavistock House | Sunday Twenty Eight September | 1856.

My Dear Stanny.

I write this to leave at your house at Hampstead, in the course of my walk to day.

You promised to write to me as soon as you should arrive in Wales. I have been uneasily waiting from day to day in the hope of hearing from you and receiving your assurance that you are getting strong and jolly; and day after [day][†3] has passed over, and I have heard nothing! Pray when you get this (God knows when it may reach you) write me a line — only one line — and say how you are, where you are, and when I shall see you. I really have gradually come to that pass, through daily hope deferred, that I have a strong inclination on me to throttle the Postman.

Ever Affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Clarkson Stanfield Esquire

To W. H. WILLS, 28 SEPTEMBER 1856

MS Huntington Library.

Tavistock House
Sunday Morning Twenty Eight September | 1856

My Dear Wills

I suddenly remember this morning, that in Mr. Carter's article, Health and Education, I left a line which must come out. It is, in effect, that the want of Healthy Training leaves girls in a fit state to be the subjects of Mesmerism.[†4] I would not on any consideration hurt Elliotson's feelings (as I should deeply) by leaving that depreciatory kind of reference in any page of H. W. He has suffered quite enough without a stab from a friend.[†5] So pray, whatever the inconvenience may be in what Bradbury calls "The Friars",[†1] take that passage out. By some extraordinary accident, after observing it I forgot to do it.

Ever Faithfully
CD

To W. H. WILLS, 29 SEPTEMBER 1856*

MS Huntington Library.

Tavistock House
Monday Night | Twenty Ninth September 1856

My Dear Wills.

Yes as to Miss Parr's story.[†2] A word or two, in the face making and tooth grinding way, wants alteration;[†3] but I can easily do that on the Proof.

Monmouth would be well enough, but for its breaking down so direfully at the end. Still I think there is sufficient merit in it to justify its acceptance.[†4]

I enclose you the next portion of Sala — that is to say, two portions together, to be made one.

The Two Lions won't do — but I would encourage the author[†5] to send something else. He seems to me to have a something stalwart in him.

We had better meet at the office to talk of things in general in going over the next No.[†6] We can afterwards dine at the Albion.[†7] Will Wednesday at 4 suit you? Send me word in reply.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

Do you think it worth while to see 12 in 10 Queen's Bench?[†8] Letter now returned.

To CONTRIBUTORS TO HOUSEHOLD WORDS, 30 SEPTEMBER 1856*

MS Huntington Library.

Mem: For Christmas Number.[†1]

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS,
30th.[†2] September 1856

[†a]I beg to convey to you the scheme of our Christmas number for the present year: to which Mr. Dickens would be glad if you would Contribute: — [†a] An English Trading-Ship (with passengers aboard), bound for Australia, is supposed to have got foul of an Iceberg, and become a wreck. The Crew and passengers not being very many in Number, and the Captain being a cool man with his Wits about him, one of the boats was hoisted out and some stores were got over the side into her, before the Ship went down. Then all Hands, with a few exceptions, were got into the Boat — an open one — and they got clear of the wreck, and put their trust in God.

The Captain set the course and steered, and the rest rowed by spells, when the sea was smooth enough for the use of the oars. They had a sail besides. At sea in the open boat for many days and nights, with the prospect before them of being swamped by any great wave, or perishing with hunger, the people in the boat began after a while to be horribly dispirited. The Captain remembering that the narration of stories had been attended with great success on former occasions of similar disasters, in preventing the shipwrecked persons' minds from dwelling on the horrors of their condition, proposed that such as could tell anything to the rest, should tell it. So the stories are introduced.

The adventures narrated, need not of necessity have happened in all cases to the people[†3] in the boat, themselves. Neither does it matter whether they are told in the first or in the third person. The whole narrative of the Wreck will be given by the Captain to the Reader in introducing the stories. Also, the final deliverance of the people. There are persons of both Sexes on the boat. The writer of any story may suppose any sort of person — or none if that be all — as the Captain will identify him if need be. But, among the Wrecked there might naturally be The Mate, The Cook, the Carpenter, the Armourer (or Worker in Iron), the Boy, the Bride Passenger, the Bridegroom passenger, the sister passenger, the brother passenger, the Mother or father passenger or son or daughter passenger, the child passenger, the Runaway passenger, the old Seaman, the toughest of the Crew, &c &c[†4]

[†a]It will be necessary that we receive your contribution not later than the 10th. of November.

Believe me | Ev faithfully[†a]

October

To THOMAS BEARD, 1 OCTOBER 1856

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Place | Edgeware Road.

Tavistock House | First October 1856.

My Dear Beard

How's the foot? How are you getting on? What does the doctor say? What do you say? Can you walk? Can you eat and drink? Is there a probability of your being able to toe the scratch[†1] on a bright cool October day (a fine month October!), and punish the Consolation-Dinner?

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To CHARLES EDMONDS,[†2] 1 OCTOBER 1856*

MS Mr J. Stevens Cox. Address: Charles Edmonds | Messrs. Wills and Co. | 136 Strand.

Tavistock House | First October 1856

My Dear Sir

Accept my best thanks for your obliging letter. But I know Eustace[†3] well, and formed Byron's opinion of him (as a solemn Humbug)[†4] when I was first in Italy.[†5] I wanted him,[†6] when I sent to you for him, that I might lay my hand upon an instance or two of his worthlessness.[†7]

You don't mention in your List, what seems to me to be the honestest and best of all the books, as written by a man who was not afraid to form his own opinions or unable to give good reasons for them — Simond.[†8]

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Edmonds Esquire.

To MRS BROWN, 3 OCTOBER 1856

MS Morgan Library. Address: Mrs. Brown.

Tavistock House | Third October 1856

My Dear Mrs. Brown

I will write tonight, after having seen Mr. Ouvry. He is coming here presently. Will you tell Miss Coutts that I will answer her kind note at the same time.

I think you have decided right about the Trustees. You can always make me one when you have a vacancy, if I am still forthcoming myself. The enclosed note seems to me to say everything that is necessary. I would use the word "found", in the place where you are uncertain.

Ever Faithfully Yours

CD.[†1]

To MRS BROWN, 3 OCTOBER 1856*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Mrs. Brown.

Tavistock House | Friday Third October 1856.

My Dear Mrs. Brown

I have gone over the deed again, with Mr. Ouvry, and will tell you the result of our deliberation in no deed-like manner — that is to say, in the fewest and plainest words.

As to that "order" and "direct" point (which after all only refers to the payment of the money) Mr. Ouvry considers that the addition of "with the consent of the Trustees", would place the Trustees in difficulty, would place the Medical Council in difficulty, and might easily place the foundation in Chancery. I am on the whole of his opinion, and would waive that objection.

As to the stipulation you wish inserted in reference to the examination on the case-books, and to examination by written question as well as orally — the necessary words are inserted.

As to the moral conduct, it is expressed in the deed that the Foundation has in view both moral conduct and general fitness for the exercise of the Medical Profession. As to who is to judge of the moral conduct (this is in answer to a question put to me in a note this morning by Miss Coutts), we are both of opinion that that must be left to the Medical Committee. They have on the whole the best means of judging: and we think that any sort of body for the revision or reversal of their judgment, would complicate the Foundation beyond all foresight.

As to the lapsing, there will be no lapse to speak of — can be none — and therefore it is not necessary to embarrass the Deed with provisions for the addition of unbestowed Interest to the Principal. If the Exhibition became vacant, say in the first year, through death or misconduct, the three years term would not be waited out, but the new Examination for a new award would come on at once.[†1] As we have altered the Clause (Clause 6) it stands thus, in effect:

That at the usual time of Examination which shall next follow after a vacancy from any cause shall have occurred in the Exhibition, a new examination and a new award shall take place.

As to those words which last night were in the same clause, about "manner, time, and place" of examination, and which Miss Coutts pointed out to be inconsistent with Clause 3, we have taken them out altogether. The examination must then necessarily be according to Clause 3.

As to your power of revocation, you retain it on 3 years notice.

Lastly, as to the date of the Deed, I have informed Mr. Ouvry, on what day you would like it to be dated, and why.

I hope to be able to send you the new Draft itself with this (leaving my envelope open for that purpose); but, whether or no, these are its provisions. And I think you may now decide to have it submitted to the St. George's Luminaries.[†2]

I return your draft letter.

Ever My Dear Mrs. Brown | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS[†3]

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 3 OCTOBER 1856

MS Mr. Roger W. Barrett.

Tavistock House | Third October 1856.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

This is briefly in answer to your kind and considerate note of this morning — briefly, for your sake, not mine.

Your remark upon the Deed, I have replied to, for the sake of clearness and having all the case together, in a note to Mrs. Brown which accompanies this.

I have no doubt that it will be best for Walter to go out at once.[†4] I believe it will be far better for his health, and certainly for his spirits, and no less for his duties. The staying with his brothers and sisters with that unsettled purpose on him and cloud of departure hanging over him, would do him no good and would be (I much suspect from what I see of him), a kind of cruelty. Mr. Brackenbury reports that he will be ready for his examination next March, when he will just have turned his Sixteenth year. With a little holiday here, I should like him to be considered ready to go out. His Presidency (if I can choose it?), is of course the Presidency you recommended.[†5]

Perhaps you will kindly tell Mr. Lock[†6] this, as he knows you, and does me the great service for your sake.

Immense excitement was occasioned here last night by the arrival of Mr. Collins in a breathless state, with the first two acts of his play in three. Dispatches were sent off to Brighton,[†1] to announce the fact. Charley exhibited an insane desire to copy it. There was talk of a Telegraph Message to Mr. Stanfield in Wales. It is called The Frozen Deep, and is extremely clever and interesting — very serious and very curious.

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

To MISS MARY DICKENS, 4 OCTOBER 1856†

MS Miss Gladys Storey.

Tavistock House | Saturday Fourth October 1856

My Dear Mamey.

[†a]Before starting off to Birmingham on a little trip with Mr. Lemon, I send you a cheque for the amount of the Riding Bill, thinking it will be less inconvenient to you than a Post Office order. Mr. Evans will kindly get it changed for you, if necessary.[†a]

The preparations for the Play are already beginning, and it is christened (this is a great dramatic secret, which I suppose you know already), The Frozen Deep.

Tell Katey with my best love, that if she fail to come back six times as red, hungry, and strong, as she was when she went away,[†2] I shall give her part to somebody else.[†3]

We shall all be very glad to see you both back again; when I say "we", I include the birds (who send their respectful duty), and the Plorn.

Kind regard to all at Brighton.

Ever My Dear Mamey | Your Affectionate father

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Dickens.

To J. E. MAYALL,[†4] 4 OCTOBER 1856*

MS Alderman Library, University of Virginia.

Tavistock House | Saturday Fourth October 1856

Dear Sir

I am much obliged to you for your kind letter. I fear it will not be in my power to sit, — I have so much to do and such a disinclination to multiply my "counterfeit presentments",[†5] — but I am not the less sensible of your valuable offer.[†6] I shall hope, about Christmas time, to shew you some dramatic groups[†1] here, which you may perhaps feel an interest in presenting. In which case, I am sure that all concerned (including myself) will be delighted to give you the opportunity.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

J. E. Mayall Esquire

To EDWARD WALFORD,[†2] 4 OCTOBER 1856*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Tavistock House | Saturday Fourth October 1856.

Sir.

I regret that my absence from town should have been the occasion of your letter lying for a long time unanswered.

I have two reasons against furnishing information to form the basis of a Biographical Memoir of myself.[†3] The first is, that I do not desire to identify myself with such memoirs during my life time; the second is, that I may probably leave my own record of my life for the satisfaction of my children.

But perhaps I shall sufficiently comply with your request by informing you that there was published in a weekly Parisian Journal called L'Ami de la Maison, sometime about last Midsummer, an account of myself (as an introduction to a translation of The Lighthouse by Mr. Wilkie Collins), which I believe is generally quite accurate. I have not got it, nor have I ever read it; but Mr. Collins himself described it to me.

I am Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Edward Walford Esquire

To JOHN THOMPSON, 5 OCTOBER 1856*

MS Fales Collection, New York University Library.

Hen and Chickens Hotel, Birmingham.
Sunday, October 5th., 1856.

I find, John, on measuring here with Mr. Lemon, that the proposed rake of the stage in the schoolroom is too much. Let Rudkin[†1] alter the measurements, so as to make it still 7 inches (seven inches) above the floor of the room, at the float;[†2] but only one foot four inches above the floor of the room at the back of the bow. It will then slope sufficiently, and not too much.

Tell Mrs. Dickens I shall be home tomorrow (Monday) night.

Yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS BROWN, 7 OCTOBER 1856*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Seventh October 1856.

My Dear Mrs. Brown

Since I wrote to you last, I have been obliged to go to Birmingham, whence I returned last night at Midnight. I then found awaiting me, the enclosed draft and letter from Mr. Ouvry. The draft is exactly as I described it to you, but will you look it over before it is sent to the Medical School people, to make sure that you approve.

With kindest and truest regard to Miss Coutts,

Ever Dear Mrs. Brown | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To THE HON. MRS RICHARD WATSON, 7 OCTOBER 1856

MS Yale University Library.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Seventh October 1856

My Dear Mrs. Watson.

I did write it for you;[†3] and I hoped, in writing it, that you would think so. All those remembrances were fresh in my mind — as they often are — and gave me an extraordinary interest in recalling the past. I should have been grievously disappointed if you had not been pleased, for I took aim at you with a most determined intention.

Let me congratulate you most heartily on your handsome Eddy[†4] having passed his examination[†5] with such credit. I am sure there is a spirit shining out of his eyes which will do well in that manly and generous pursuit. You will naturally feel his departure very much, and so will he, but I have always observed within my experience that the men who have left home young, have [†a]many long years afterwards[†a] had the tenderest love for it and of all associated with it. That's a pleasant thing to think of, as one of the wise and benevolent adjustments in these lives of ours.

I have been so hard at work (and shall be for the next 8 or 9 months) that sometimes I fancy I have a digestion — or a head — or nerves — or some odd incumbrance of that kind, to which I am altogether unaccustomed, and am obliged to rush at some other object for relief. At present the house is in a state of tremendous excitement on account of Mr. Collins having nearly finished the New Play we are to act at Christmas, which is very interesting and extremely clever. I hope this time you will come and see it. We purpose producing it on Charley's birthday, Twelfth Night, but we shall probably play four nights altogether — the Lighthouse on the last occasion[†1] — so that if you would come for the two last nights you would see both the pieces. I am going to try to do better than ever, and already the schoolroom is in the hands of carpenters; men from underground habitations in Theatres, who look as if they lived entirely upon smoke and gas, beset me at unheard of hours — Mr. Stanfield is perpetually measuring the boards with a chalked piece of string and an umbrella, and all the elder children are wildly punctual and businesslike, to attract managerial commendation. If you don't come, I shall do something antagonistic — try to unwrite No. XI I think. I should particularly like you to see a new and serious piece so done. Because I don't think you know, without seeing, how good it is!!!

None of the children suffered, thank God, from the Boulogne risk. The three little boys have gone back to school there, and are all well. Katey came away ill, but it turned out that she had the whooping-cough for the second time. She has been to Brighton, and comes home to day. I hear great accounts of her, and hope to find her quite well when she arrives presently. I am afraid Mary Boyle has been praising her Boulogne life too highly. Not that I deny, however, our having passed some very pleasant days together, and our having had great pleasure in her visit.[†2]

You will object to me dreadfully, I know, with a beard (though not a great one), but if you come and see the Play, you will find it necessary there, and will perhaps be more tolerant of the fearful object afterwards. I need not tell you how delighted we should be to see George[†3] if you would come together. Pray tell him so with my kind regard. I like the notion of Wentworth[†4] and his philosophy, of all things. I remember a philosophical gravity upon him — a state of suspended opinion as to myself, it struck me — when we last met, in which I thought there was a great deal of oddity and character.

Charley is doing very well at Barings, and attracting praise and reward to himself. Within this fortnight there turned up — from the West Indies where he is now a Chief Justice — an old friend of mine,[†1] of my own age, who lived with me in Lodgings in the Adelphi, when I was just Charley's present age. He had a great affection for me at that time, and always supposed I was to do some sort of wonders. It was a very pleasant meeting indeed — and he seemed to think it so odd that I shouldn't be Charley!

This is every atom of No-News that will come out of my head, and I firmly believe it is all I have in it — except that a Cobbler at Boulogne who had the nicest of little dogs, that always sat in his sunny window watching him at work, asked me if I would bring the dog home, as he couldn't afford to pay the Tax for him. The Cobbler and the dog being both my particular friends, I complied. The cobbler parted with the dog, heart-broken. When the dog got home here, my man like an Idiot as he is, tied him up, and then untied him. The moment the gate was open, the dog (on the very day after his arrival) ran out. Next day, Georgy and I saw him lying, all covered with mud, dead outside the neighbouring church. How am I ever to tell the cobbler? He is too poor to come to England, so I feel that I must lie to him for life, and say that the dog is fat and happy. (Mr. Plornish, much affected by this Tragedy, said: "I spose Pa I shall meet him †a(the Cobbler's dog) in Heaven."

Georgy and Catherine send their best love and I send mine. Pray write to me again some day, and I can't be too busy to be happy in the sight of your familiar hand — associated in my mind with so much that I love and honor. Ever My Dear Mrs. Watson

Most Faithfully Yours CD†a

To WILKIE COLLINS, 9 OCTOBER 1856

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Thursday Ninth October 1856.

My Dear Collins

I should like to shew you some cuts I have made in the second act (subject to Authorial sanction of course). They are mostly verbal, and all bring the Play closer together.†2

Also I should like to know whether it is likely that you will want to alter anything in these first two acts. If not, here are Charley, Mark, and I, all ready to write, and we may get a fair copy out of hand. From said fair copy, all my people will write out their own parts.

I dine at home to day, but not tomorrow. On Saturday and Sunday likewise, I dine at home. We must perpetually "put ourselves in communication with the view of dealing with it" — as Wills says — the moment you have done. How do you get on? And will you come at 6 to day — or when?

I am more sure than ever of the effect.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To MR AND MRS COWDEN CLARKE,†1 10 OCTOBER 1856

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

Tavistock House | Tenth October 1856

My Dear Mr. and Mrs. Clarke.

An hour before I received your letter, I had been writing your names. We were beginning a list of friends to be asked here on Twelfth Night to see a new play by the Author of the Lighthouse and a better play than that. I honestly assure you that your letter dashed my spirits, and made a blank in the prospect.

May you be very happy at Nice,[†2] and find in the climate and the beautiful country near it, more than compensation for what you leave here. Don't forget among the leaves of the vine and olive, that your two green leaves[†3] are always on my table here, and that no weather will shake them off.

I should have brought this myself on the chance of seeing you, if I were not such a coward in the matter of Good Bye, that I never say it, and would resort to almost any subterfuge to avoid it.[†4] Mrs. Dickens and Georgina send their kindest regard. Your hearty sympathy will not be lost to me, I hope, at Nice, and I shall never hear of you without true interest and pleasure.

Always Faithfully Your friend
CHARLES DICKENS

To G. F. HUDSON,[†5] 10 OCTOBER 1856

Extract in Dobell catalogue No. 281 (1919); MS 2 pp.; addressed G. F. Hudson; dated Tavistock House, 10 Oct 56.

Friday, Tenth October, 1856

The post brought me, from Windermere, a few days ago, a letter from the Bridegroom.[†6] You will be amazed to hear that he was excessively happy![†7] In answering it,

I took care to render justice to your pedestrian performances, and to describe your vigorous style as being without a blemish.

To ALFRED DICKENS,[†1] 11 OCTOBER 1856

MS Berg Collection.

Tavistock House, London
Saturday Eleventh October 1856.

My Dear Alfred.

I don't know whether you would care to be in a new play by Collins (which I am going to get up for Twelfth Night) for the mere sake of being in the social amusement of the thing, or whether you are so certain of your movements as to be safely available if you do care.

But it has come into my head in casting about for somebody of your build and look, for a certain Sea-Captain who has some six lines to speak, and a little that is picturesque and requires care, to do in action, that you might like to be in the interest of the getting-up. Therefore I mention it to you first of all. Do exactly as you feel inclined, for I shall have no difficulty in finding this Captain's representative anyhow.[†2]

I will tell you all about it whenever you like. The preparations are tremendous, and the arrangements will be of stupefying grandeur.

With love to Helen[†3] and all the children,[†4] in which all here join,

Ever affectionately

CD.

To MARK LEMON, 11 OCTOBER 1856

Mention in Dickens Exhibition, New Dudley Gallery catalogue, 1909; MS 1 p., with envelope; addressed Mark Lemon; dated 11 Oct 56.

Relating to platform and covering.[†5]

To THOMAS BEARD, 14 OCTOBER 1856

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Place | Edgeware Road.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Fourteenth October | 1856.

My Dear Beard

I will write to poor old Guy,[†6] telling him (Heaven save the mark, it is true!) that I have no influence with the Barnacles.[†1] Between ourselves, I think it hardly a case with a literary claim.

Let me know when you are able to walk.

Kindest regard from all. | Ever Faithfully

CD

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 14 OCTOBER 1856

Text in Walter M. Hill catalogue, Dec 1901; MS 2 pp.; dated Tavistock House, Tuesday, 14 Oct 56.

Sir

In reply to your letter I beg to inform you that my son resided with Professor Müller[†2] in order that his general life might be well looked after, and that that gentleman might superintend the classical part of his studies. German, of course, was the language of the house. For such other branches of knowledge as he devoted himself to in Germany he had masters who read with him at Professor Müller's. I was in all respects well satisfied. The Professor looked sharply after him, wrote to me from time to time, and did his duty conscientiously. My boy considered him "a Dragon in respect of his ardour for work", &c &c

I am Sir, your faithful servant,

CHARLES DICKENS

To HENRY AUSTIN, 15 OCTOBER 1856*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Wednesday October Fifteenth | 1856.

My Dear Henry.

If you will like to be in the "Lark", I want to offer you a responsible post (of the most awful importance, or everybody will be fainting away) in the Christmas Theatre. Said Post is to see it thoroughly ventilated, according to the state of the weather &c as the performances go on, each night. Without a judicious and practised head, it can never be done in the winter time. And I should greatly like to shew you the available means for the purpose, now that the Carpenters are at work.

Of course the mysteries of the Coulisses[†3] are open to so distinguished an officer — and his wife. We read the New Play (a very fine one, I think) to the Company, next Monday evening at a quarter before 8. Will you come, and bring Letitia? I can warrant your finding it very interesting.

(The sounds in the house are like Chatham Dockyard — or the building of Noah's Ark.)

Ever affectionately

CD.

To WILKIE COLLINS, 15 OCTOBER 1856

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Fifteenth October 1856

My Dear Collins

Will you read Turning the Tables[†1] (in my old Promptbook)[†2] enclosed, and let me know whether you care to play Edgar de Courcy.[†3] There is very good business in it with Humphreys[†4] (Mark). My great difficulty is Patty Larkins.[†5]

Send me back the book, when you answer.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

I wish Berger[†6] were — a little farther. Hogarth says, that some of the best people out of the Queen's Private Band[†7] would have been charmed to play for nothing, and would have esteemed it a privilege to take all manner of pains; but that of course they can't be put under said B.

P.P.S. Here is Animal Magnetism[†8] to read too. Will you get another copy for yourself at some theatrical shop? We play it in two Acts.[†9]

To ALFRED DICKENS, [15 OCTOBER 1856]

Envelope only, MS Mr B. G. Meakin. Date: PM 15 Oct 56. Address: Alfred Dickens Esquire | 2 St John's Villas | Hampstead Road.

To FRANK STONE, 15 OCTOBER 1856

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Wednesday Fifteenth October | 1856.

My Dear Stone.

The Play is so difficult and will give us all so much to do (not mentioning the Manager), that Mark and I, on solemn Council holden, resolve to abandon the idea of a New Farce.[†10] Therefore, for two nights, do your old friend Knibbs[†11] instead!

Ever affecy.

CD.

To W. H. WILLS, 15 OCTOBER 1856

MS Huntington Library.

Tavistock House | Wednesday October Fifteenth | 1856.

My Dear Wills

Will you and Mrs. Wills come to the reading of the Play, next Monday Evening at a quarter before 8. Stanfield has not returned yet; but there is so much to do with it that I think it best not to wait for him, so far as the Dram: Pers: is concerned.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To THE REV. WHITWELL ELWIN,[†1] 17 OCTOBER 1856

Extract in Anderson Galleries catalogue, Apr 1916; MS 2 pp.; dated Tavistock House, 17 Oct 56; addressed the Rev. W. Elwin.

You shall have due reminder of Twelfth Night. Already the clink of hammers gives awful note of preparation,[†2] and in the evening hours my elder children go through fearful drill under their rugged parent. It not only unites us in a pleasant amusement, but it is a wonderful discipline in punctuality, perseverance and ingenuity. One of these days I may read at Norwich, when there are no Little Dorrits, and no plays holding on round my neck.

To JOHN FORSTER, [18 OCTOBER 1856]

Extract in F, VIII, i, 628. Date: 18 Oct 56, according to Forster.

In the difficulty of obtaining more space for audience as well as actors he applied to Mr Cooke[†3] of Astley's. One of the finest things I have ever seen in my life of that kind was the arrival of my friend Mr. Cooke one morning this week, in an open phaeton drawn by two white ponies with black spots all over them (evidently stencilled), who came in at the gate with a little jolt and a rattle, exactly as they come into the Ring when they draw anything, and went round and round the centre bed of the front court, apparently looking for the clown. A multitude of boys who felt them to be no common ponies rushed up in a breathless state — twined themselves like ivy about the railings — and were only deterred from storming the enclosure by the glare of the Inimitable's eye. Some of these boys had evidently followed from Astley's. I grieve to add that my friend, being taken to the point of difficulty, had no sort of suggestion in him; no gleam of an idea; and might just as well have been the popular minister from the Tabernacle in Tottenham Court Road.[†4] All he could say was — answering me, posed in the garden, precisely as if I were the clown asking him a riddle at night — that two of their stable tents would be home in November, and that they were "20 foot square," and I was heartily welcome to 'em. Also, he said, "You might have half a dozen of my trapezes, or my middle-distance tables,[†1] but they're 6 foot and all too low sir." Since then, I have arranged to do it in my own way, and with my own carpenter. You will be surprised by the look of the place. It is no more like the schoolroom than it is like the sign of the Salutation Inn at Ambleside in Westmoreland.[†2] The sounds in the house remind me, as to the present time, of Chatham dockyard — as to a remote epoch, of the building of Noah's ark. Joiners are never out of the house, and the carpenter appears to be unsettled (or settled) for life.

To MARK LEMON, 18 OCTOBER 1856*

MS Robert H. Taylor Collection, Princeton University Library.

Tavistock House | Saturday Eighteenth October | 1856.

My Dear Mark

Sorry you can't come tomorrow.

As to asking Telbin[†3] to the Reading on Monday, I have a lingering doubt whether Stanny (you know him to be a little touchy where his strong affection is concerned), might not wince at another Painter's knowing the Play before he did!! — Don't you feel this?

What I would say to Telbin therefore, is, "would he and Grieve[†4] paint me a little set of a room in a country house with a backing of Landscape outside the window, for the new piece with which we are taking great pains, and in which Stanny is going to do wonders?[†5] If yes and they would like to hear the piece read, I will make an appointment when Stanny returns, for that purpose."

We will settle about Cooke[†6] on Monday Evening.

Ever affecy.
CD.

To ARTHUR RYLAND,[†1] 18 OCTOBER 1856*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House, London
Saturday Eighteenth October | 1856.

My Dear Sir

This Christmas I can read nowhere — partly, because of the weight of my own avocations while I have Little Dorrit in progress; partly, because we are going to produce a new play here on Twelfth Night, which has already become the occupation of spare time in the evenings, and which would be quite irreconcileable with my absence from home at that time of year. In reference to which Play, Mrs. Dickens begs me to say that if there should be any probability as the time approaches, of your and Mrs. Ryland's being in town on any one of the four nights when we propose to play it, it would afford us cordial pleasure to see you both. In any case she will not fail, she says, to write upon the subject bye and bye.

I hope we may manage a Reading at Birmingham after Little Dorrit's fortunes shall be closed. I will not lose sight of that agreeable expectation, and will beg Mr. Wills to communicate with you when I find myself with some leisure again. Your account of your Institution is particularly interesting to me.[†2]

You will be glad to hear that Charley gets on very well indeed, in Baring's House. He has already raised himself, and has been much commended for his business qualities and attention

He, Mrs. Dickens, her sister, and all my house, unite in kindest regard to yourself and your house.
Believe me always | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Arthur Ryland Esquire.

To MARK LEMON, 19 OCTOBER 1856

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Sunday Nineteenth October | 1856

My Dear Mark

I doubt if there be anything in this book, to make a good little Poem of,[†3] unless it depended for its merit, mainly on its manner. It is a common tale of chivalry, with all the usual things in it. Some of the incidents asserted in the Preface to be discernible in Don Quixote, were really taken, I don't doubt, from this Romance; but others were not — The only novelty I see in it, is the people falling foul of any questioner who asks them what in Heaven's name they are howling about, when they fall into those periodical fits of grief. But this is so very poorly accounted for, that I don't think it comes to anything.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To MRS HORNE, 20 OCTOBER 1856

MS Berg Collection.

Tavistock House | Twentieth October 1856.

My Dear Mrs. Horne.

I answer your note by return of Post, in order that you may know that the Stereoscopic Nottage[†1] has not written to me yet.[†2] Of course I will not lose a moment in replying to him when he does address me.

We shall all be greatly pleased to see you again. You have been very, very often in our thoughts and on our lips, during this long interval.

And "She" is near you, is she? O I remember her well! And I am still of my old opinion! Passionately devoted to her sex as I am (they are the weakness of my existence), I still consider her a failure. She had some extraordinary Christian Name which I forget. Lashed into verse by my feelings, I am inclined to write —

My heart disowns
Ophelia Jones;

— only I think it was a more sounding name.

Are these the Tones, —
Volumnia Jones?

No, again it seems doubtful.

God bless her bones
Petronia Jones!

I think not.

Carve I on stones,
Olympia Jones?

— can that be the name? Fond memory[†3] favors it more than any other.[†4] My love to her.

Ever My Dear Mrs. Horne | Very faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To THE HON. MRS WATSON, 20 OCTOBER 1856*

MS New York Public Library.

Tavistock House | Monday Twentieth October 1856.

My Dear Mrs. Watson

I greatly regret that I am quite unable to make any promise to read for the Northampton people. This Christmas coming, I have excused myself from reading anywhere: having as much to do, as I can reasonably perform. Next Christmas following, if all go well, the task from selecting from conditional promises, will be very difficult, and will leave me still with a long list of claims. Bristol, Birmingham, and Edinburgh disposed of, I have then the most urgent appeals (now growing old) from various places in Lancashire, in Yorkshire, in Ireland, in Scotland, away in the Eastern Counties, and Heaven knows where not.[†1] Things have come to such a pass in this connexion, that I am positively afraid to think of putting down a new name or faintly hinting at a remote period when I may be disengaged.

I write thus shortly, in order that I may write at once, and help you to a complete clearance of your conscience.

Ever My Dear Mrs. Watson | Most Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To W. H. WILLS, 21 OCTOBER 1856*

MS Huntington Library.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Twenty First October | 1856.

My Dear Wills.

Here is this unfortunate French! — come to me this morning, after having been considerably battledored about Whitefriars for a week or two, to say (which he might have known at first) that B and E have nothing for him to do that he is fit for. Will you see Peter[†2] in his Newcastle Street Retreat,[†3] and ask him whether there is anything in connexion with the Manchester scheme,[†4] in which he can get employment? I don't like to trouble Cunningham with a direct letter, as he has recently taken pains in behalf of Johnson.[†5] French has a very fair business capacity and a good address, can write and keep plain accounts correctly, and has a fair smattering of French — enough to get on easily, with any one. The immense difficulty in his way, is, his being ruptured and unable to do work in the way of lifting and carrying, and going up and down stairs. Otherwise he would be in no need.

Miss Coutts's letters have arrived this morning. I will bring them with me before dinner-time tomorrow.

Ever Faithfully
CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 22 OCTOBER 1856

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Star Hotel | Oxford.

Tavistock House | Wednesday Twenty Second October | 1856.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

The letters are all in train of enquiry; and your desire to avoid the association of your name with them, will, of course, be strictly observed.

I will make an appointment with Mr. Bentley,[†1] immediately; and he shall make a Report in writing of what is necessary to be done to Rogers's[†2] pictures. Mr. Stanfield has not returned yet; but, it is pretty clear that we don't want him.

Will you read the enclosed from Cooper, and let me know by return whether I shall say Yes. On considering the matter and balancing the reasons for and against, I do not doubt that it is advisable for all parties, that she should be received;[†3] but I would like to be fortified by your approval.

With kind regards to Mrs. Brown

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

To L. J. NATHAN,[†4] 24 OCTOBER 1856*

MS Ohio Historical and Philosophical Society.

Tavistock House | Friday Twenty Fourth October | 1856

Mr. Charles Dickens begs to let Mr. Nathan know that Mr. Lemon and himself will call upon him tomorrow (Saturday) evening between 7 and 8, to have a word with him about the dresses for the new play.

To FRANK STONE, 24 OCTOBER 1856*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Twenty Fourth October 1856 | Friday

My Dear Stone

Thanks for your note. I can easily manage it; there being abundance of people. I write shortly, having been writing my head off[†5] — or rather, round and round like a Harlequin's — all day.

Ever affecy.

CD.

To WILKIE COLLINS, 26 OCTOBER 1856

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House
Sunday Night | Twenty Sixth October 1856.

My Dear Collins. Will you tell Pigott of the Rehearsal Arrangements, when that Ancient Mariner[†1] turns up?

Will you dine at our H. W. Audit dinner, on Tuesday the 4th. of November at 1/2 past 5?[†2]

Will you come and see the ladies, in the rough,[†3] next Thursday at 1/2 past 7?—

Though mayhap you may come here before, for you will be glad to know that Stanfield arrived from Holyhead,[†4] at Midnight last night, and sent a Dispatch down here the first thing this morning, proposing to fall-to, tomorrow. I have appointed him to be here at from 3 to 1/2 past, tomorrow (Monday) afternoon to hear the Play — to dine at 1/2 past 5 — and to go into the Theatre after dinner and settle his whole plans for the Carpenters. If you can come at the first of these times, or the second, or the third, it will be well. I have had an interview with the Nathans, and primed them. I begin with the mazy Berger, tomorrow night. I have found a very good farce (with character parts for all) in lieu of Turning the tables.[†5] On the whole, have not been idle.

Ever Faithfully
CD.

Took 20 miles to day, and got up all Richard's[†6] words — to the great terrors of Finchley, Neasdon, Willesden,[†7] and the adjacent country.

To AUGUSTUS TRACEY, 27 OCTOBER 1856*

MS University of Texas.

Tavistock House
Monday Twenty Seventh October | 1856.

My Dear Tracey

I am so exceedingly sorry to have missed you again.

Is there any chance of your being in town on Tuesday the 4th. November, and able to dine at the Household Words Office at 1/2 past 5 sharp? It is our half yearly Audit Day, when we close the examination of the accounts with something to eat.

My kind regard to Henry.[†1]

To EDWARD CHAPMAN, 28 OCTOBER 1856

Extract in Autograph Prices Current, V, 1919-21; MS 2 pp.; addressed Edward Chapman; dated Tavistock House, 28 Oct 56.

The Oliver Twist as usual.[†2] Bradbury and Evans have nothing to do with the cheap edition of the Christmas Books[†3] that I know of.... When I considered the idea of publishing the 8vo books in two volumes each, on a former occasion,[†4] I did not think it a desirable one.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 30 OCTOBER 1856†

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Veale's Royal Hotel | Teignmouth | Devon.

Tavistock House | Thursday Thirtieth October 1856.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I have seen Mr. Bentley (a very respectable grey-haired, high-dried little man, compounded of a Master of the Ceremonies in former years, a Collector of Assessed Taxes, a highly trustworthy Book-keeper, and a Parish Clerk of five and thirty years standing), and I have this day received from him the enclosed letter.[†5]

He cannot say what his doings will cost, but he observes that of course they will be charged as such things are charged to Mr. Baring, the National Gallery, and everybody else. His having the pictures at home, is indispensable. He does not expect the work to be difficult. He can restore all the frames, and re-gild them. There is no doubt at all of his reliability.

I did not mention to him your wish that your bidder should be employed in their removal, because I perceived him to be a man so much trusted and so thoroughly accustomed to do his own work completely, that I thought it desirable to be avoided. I mistrust collision in such case; none the less because Mr. Bentley himself bid for most of these very pictures, having commissions to that effect from Thomas Baring and others.

Everything that needs to be done, can be done and is to be done, before the Manchester Exhibition gets into form. And I now only await your authority to let him take the pictures away. Will you write by return? If you still wish your man to be suggested, of course I can do it, and (I hope) with all due discretion. But I myself would leave that alone.

The very curious Old Bailey case to which one of those letters referred, was truly stated.[†1] It being ante-dated some time (meaning as to its receipt by me from you), the Sessions coming on, and time pressing, Mr. Wills asked me what I thought he had best do at once? I told him, engage a respectable Counsel to defend the man, and go to legal expences within ten pounds for that purpose. There is no trace of you in the matter.[†2]

I found the Home going on very well the other day, and both Mrs. Marchmont and Mrs. Macartney[†3] tremendously cast down by your having had occasion for blame. They really seem so sorry and depressed, and it is so necessary that they should have self-reliance and a sustaining pride in what they do, that I comforted them with what majestic consolation I felt it Ministerial to impart. I think if you would deem it right, gradually to soften down the frequency of Mrs. Engelbach's[†4] visits, it would set them up and reassure them more than anything else. They have a notion that they have waned in your confidence.

I have been, and am, so busy that my head simmers — occasionally approaches boiling point. Therefore I will only add my love to Mrs. Brown.

One thing I have forgotten. Charley is in great glory, and much surveyed and admired in "the House", by reason of his being on a week's visit to Mr. Bates at Sheen:[†5] going down with him every night, and coming up every morning.

I enclose Thomas Baring's letter agreeably to your wish.

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

To JAMES GRESHAM,[†6] 31 OCTOBER 1856†

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Tavistock House, London | Thirty First October 1856.

Dear Sir

My opinions on the subject of Public Executions were expressed in two letters addressed to the Editor of the Times Newspaper,[†7] immediately after the execution of the Mannings, husband and wife.[†8] I am far too busy to repeat them here; but it is the less necessary, by reason of their having undergone no kind of modification.

Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

James Gresham Esquire

To AUGUSTUS TRACEY, 31 OCTOBER 1856*

MS University of Texas.

H. M. S. Tavistock | Port of London
Thirty First October 1856.

My Dear Commodore

I was out on Sunday, on a twenty mile cruise, getting a dramatic code of Signals up for that ould Salt, Stanfield.

Whenever you come aboard, you shall have the best bottle of wine in the locker, and the best Irish stew in the Caboose.[†1]

So no more at present from Yours Ever, in whatsoever waters,

Harry Bluff.[†2]

November

To WILKIE COLLINS, 1 NOVEMBER 1856

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House
Saturday Evening First November | 1856.

My Dear Collins

Forster came here yesterday afternoon to ask me if he might read the Play, and I lent it to him. This afternoon I get the enclosed from him

(which please to read at this point.)

You know that I don't agree with him as to the Nurse[†3] — [†a]and indeed I have no doubt his demur is founded on his seeing that it requires more Stage Go than our dear Janet[†4] possesses.[†a] But I think his suggestion that the going away of the women might be suggested at the Close of the First Act as a preparation for the last, an excellent one.[†5] Will you think of it? By an alteration that we could make in a quarter of an hour it might be done, and moreover — this suggestion upon a suggestion arises in my mind — it might be made the Nurse's position in the Play that her blood-red Second Sight is the first occasion of their going away at all.[†6] [Forster does not clearly understand the circumstances of their going; but never mind that.]

His notion that Clara tells too much,[†7] has been strong in my mind since I first got that Act in Rehearsal. But, doubtful whether it might not unconsciously arise in me from a paternal interest in my own part, I had, as yet, said nothing about it; the rather as I had not yet seen the Second Act on the stage.

Stanfield wants to cancel the chair altogether, and to substitute a piece of rock on the ground, composing with the Cavern. That, I take it, is clearly an improvement.

He has a happy idea of painting the ship which is to take them back, ready for sailing, on the sea.[†1]

Nothing would induce Telbin, yesterday, to explain what he was going to do, before Stanfield; and nothing would induce Stanfield to explain what he was going to do, before Telbin. But they had every inch and curve and line in that bow, accurately measured by the Carpenters, and each requested to have a drawing of the whole made to scale. Then each said that he would make his model in cardboard, and see what I "thought of it". I have no doubt the thing will be as well done as it can be.

Will you dine with us at 5 on Monday before Rehearsal. We can then talk over Forster's points? If you are disengaged on Wednesday, shall we breathe some fresh air in dilution of Tuesday's "alcohol",[†2] and walk through the fallen leaves in Cobham Park? I can then explain how I think you can get your division of the Christmas No. very originally and naturally. It came into my head to day.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

P.S. I re-open this, to say that I find from Wills that next Tuesday being the Audit Day at all, is his mistake. It is Tuesday Week. Therefore, if Tuesday is a fine day, shall we go out then?

To PROFESSOR GEORGE WILSON,[†3] 4 NOVEMBER 1856*

MS Yale University Library.

Tavistock House, London | Fourth November, 1856.

My Dear Sir

I am truly honored by your kind remembrance in having sent me the Five Gateways of Knowledge,[†4] and I beg to assure you that I have read that charming little book with the highest interest and gratification. Wise, elegant, eloquent, and perfectly unaffected, it has delighted me. I should find it very difficult indeed to tell you, to my own satisfaction, how unusually it has pleased me.

Accept my cordial thanks.

Very faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Professor George Wilson

To MRS AUSTIN,[†1] 5 NOVEMBER 1856

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Tavistock House | Fifth November 1856.

My Dear Mrs Austin

I have not seen anything of your Protegée, and I humbly hope she will not come to me. If she should, I shall entreat her to excuse me from hearing her; firstly, because, from simply hearing her in a room, I could form no opinion worth giving or having, of her powers as an actress; secondly, because I shrink with horror from the idea of sending any one to a Manager, and throwing any fresh ingredient into the sooty soup of theatrical difficulties and jealousies.

I thoroughly agree in all you say of the Drama. It has been my constant effort for years past to shew in many ways that an amusement so wholesome and humanizing is more needed by an over-worked, over-driven, over-repressed, over-lectured, over-bothered People, than all the Blue Book writing and Didactic speechifying whereof my soul is sick, and wherewith my liver (in the Persian idiom) is turned upside down.[†2]

I wish you would come, in the holidays of this next Christmas, and see a New Play here. I think it will be very pretty, and I know it will have some specialities which can be seen nowhere else. We will write to Lady Gordon,[†3] and give her more than a month's notice of the great event.

My Dear Mrs Austin

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To HABLOT K. BROWNE, 8 NOVEMBER 1856

MS Widener Collection, Harvard.

Tavistock House | Saturday Eighth November, 1856.

My Dear Browne.

All right. Please keep Clennam, always, as agreeable and well-looking as possible.[†4] He is very good in the Flintwinch scene here.[†5] Mrs. Clennam's expression, capital.[†6]

Letterings below.[†7]

Ever Faithfully CD.[†8]

To MRS CHARLES DICKENS, 8 NOVEMBER 1856

MS British Library.

Tavistock House | Saturday Eighth November 1856.

My Dearest Catherine

I must make very short work of this letter, for I have been writing hard all day (being now engaged on the Xmas No. of Household Words) and only leave off as the darkness begins.

The Rehearsal came off last night, and the progress was satisfactory. Especially, considering that Lemon had the Rheumatism in his jaw, and that Berger had such a cold as to be wrapped up like a Stage Coachman, and screened in with the Print-Screen.[†1]

The only two bits of news, are, that the Half year's balance of Household Words is very indifferent indeed,[†2] and that I don't think the Cook will do. She seems too sulky a woman to tolerate in a house where the other servants deserve anything but mortification of spirit.

Shrieks of amazement and delight today, proclaimed the return of Cobbler, looking wonderfully fat and well. Immediately afterwards, he ran away again — and then it was discovered that it was not Cobbler at all, but a dog very like him, belonging to the Adelphi Theatre, who had come up with a Carpenter.

My best love to dear Macready, and Miss Macready, and Katie, and the dear little girls, and Henry my godson, and Johnny. Tell Macready that if he doesn't come to the Play, I shall join the Tory ranks in Politics immediately afterwards, and become one of whatsoever religious denomination most requires me, in the words of Miggs "to hate and despise my feller creeters, as every practicable Christian should."[†3] Tell him I have not yet settled the exact church I shall favor, there being so many of this kind.

All well, and all send loves. I went over Forster's house a day or two ago, which is very pretty indeed, and very excellently done.[†4]

Ever affectionately

CD.

To [?B. H.] BECKER,[†5] 9 NOVEMBER 1856

Extract in Anderson Galleries catalogue No. 2029 (1926); MS (3rd person) 1 p.; dated Tavistock House, 9 Nov 56.

Mr. Charles Dickens ... begs to say that he has referred Mr. Becker's note to the Author of Sister Rose;[†6] in doing which his power of interference in the matter to which it refers, ends.

To WILLIAM TELBIN, 10 NOVEMBER 1856

MS Berg Collection.

Tavistock House
Monday Evening Tenth November | 1856.

My Dear Sir

I am very much indebted to you for your kind letter, and look forward with the greatest interest and pleasure to seeing your scene.

It happens that I was within five minutes of writing to you when your letter came. With the view of securing the large audience we shall have, distributed over the four nights of performance, before out of town Christmas engagements are settled, we are going to give them so much notice that it is necessary to get the bills and invitations &c in hand.

So the questions, are:
First, am I to call the Scenery of the First Act by you and Grieve? Or by you, only? I presume the latter.[†1]

Secondly, will you let me know (when you have thought of it), the names and addresses of any friends you would wish to have asked to see the play? It will then give Mrs. Dickens the greatest pleasure to send them regular invitations.

Thirdly, what colored drugget would you prefer on the ground in the chamber. Red (which always tells), or green, or brown? The furniture being showy, I think the drugget should have no pattern on it.

The men have begun putting up the outer room, and Stanfield is in ecstacies at its proportions. He swelled just now, with his great intentions.

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

William Telbin Esquire

To MRS BROWN, 11 NOVEMBER 1856

MS Morgan Library. Address: Mrs Brown | Royal Hotel | Teignmouth | Devon.

Tavistock House | Eleventh November, 1856. | Tuesday

My Dear Mrs. Brown.

A hurried reply to yours. After considering the point with my utmost care and attention, I do not see anything to object to in it. The case they put,[†2] is on the whole a reasonable one, which you yourself would wish to guard against.[†3] I have therefore this morning sent your letter on to Mr. Ouvry. His letters to you, I return.

I am hard at the Christmas No. of Household Words — a shipwreck story.

With affectionate regard to Miss Coutts

Ever Faithfully and truly
CD.

To W. H. WILLS, 13 NOVEMBER 1856

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS,
Thursday Evg. 13th. Novr. 1856

My Dear Wills.

Yes, to the Christmas Carol.[†1] — No, to the Song of the Stars.

I am glad you like the Wreck — though you have not seen all of it, I think. I find the Narrative too strong (speaking as a reader of it; not as its writer) to be broken by the stories. I have therefore devised with Collins for getting the stories in between his Narrative and mine, and breaking neither.[†2]

I never wrote anything more easily, or I think with greater interest and stronger belief.

The almanack[†3] I returned to the Printer tonight. I chose the longer quotation, because the quotation without the Sun seems to want its source of Life.[†4]

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To WILKIE COLLINS, 14 NOVEMBER 1856

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Friday Fourteenth Novr. | 1856.

My Dear Collins

I could not send you the books[†5] before I went out this morning for a 12 miler, the collection being curiously spare in pick-up cases,[†6] and it being a work of time to find them.

Will you exchange proofs of the Captain[†7] with me. The proofs you have, have markings of mine upon them which will be useful to me in correcting. You can bring me those when you come tonight.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To DANIEL MACLISE, 14 NOVEMBER 1856*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Friday Fourteenth November | 1856.

My Dear Mac

Stanny, seeing my big brown Punch Jug t'other night (a genuine old article), said, with his face shining before the Lord, that it was just the thing you wanted to paint.[†1] Is my young man right, and shall I send it to you? If you were to see my young man perpetually painting here for the Christmas Play, in the midst of 70 paint pots and a cauldron of boiling size, you would never forget the spectacle.

Faithfully Ever

CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 15 NOVEMBER 1856

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Apsley House Hotel | Torquay | Devon.

Tavistock House | Saturday Fifteenth November | 1856.

My Dear Miss Coutts

I return Derry.[†2] I have no doubt it's a capital article, but it's a mortal dull color. Color these people always want, and color (as allied to fancy), I would always give them.[†3] In these cast-iron and mechanical days, I think even such a garnish to the dish of their monotonous and hard lives, of unspeakable importance. One color, and that of the earth earthy, is too much with them early and late. Derry might just as well break out into a stripe, or put forth a bud, or even burst into a full blown flower. Who is Derry that he is to make quakers of us all, whether we will or no!

You will immediately hear from Mr. Wills, with all the information you want, drawn fresh from the fountain head.

At Shepherd's Bush on Wednesday, all were in excellent order. Mr. Dyer and I represented the august Committee. It was very pleasant to see Louisa Cooper, nicely dressed and looking very well to do, sitting with Mrs. Macartney in the Long Room. She brought me for a present,[†4] the most hideous Ostrich's Egg ever laid — wrought all over with frightful devices, the most tasteful of which represents Queen Victoria (with her crown on) standing on the top of a Church, receiving professions of affection from a British Seaman.

How long are you going to stay in Devonshire? And don't you mean to come to town at Christmas Time? I always want to know, and you never will tell me.

With kind regard to Mrs. Brown,

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

I re-open this to say that I have just received the enclosed from Mr. Macready, who is very anxious indeed that you should have it. Would you like Mr. Wills to see the boy,[†1] and give him a suit of clothes?

To W. H. WILLS, 19 NOVEMBER 1856

MS Huntington Library.

Tavistock House | Nineteenth November 1856.

My Dear Wills

On the lists being added up, I find that we can still (as I hope), book some more names. I have therefore put down Mr. Payn. And if you have any names to suggest, now is the time.[†2]

Of course if you have any at any time, wherein you may be interested or not, you will let me know what they are. But this is the time at which such lines have the best chance of falling into pleasant places.[†3]

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To GEORGE BRACE,[†4] 20 NOVEMBER 1856*

MS Dickens House.

Tavistock House | Thursday Twentieth November | 1856.

Sir
In reply to your letter of yesterday's date, I beg to assure you that I would immediately appoint a time for receiving a Deputation from your Society,[†5] or its President, but that I am convinced I should occasion them useless trouble by doing so. No doubt the visit would refer to some public function the Society does me the honor to wish me to discharge. I am bound therefore to let you know at once, that my own avocations at present demand so much of my time and attention, as to oblige me to forego all public engagements without any exception, until after next Midsummer.

I am Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

George Brace Esquire

To FRANK STONE, 20 NOVEMBER 1856*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Twentieth November, 1856.

My Dear Stone

I hear you were in, this morning. I have been restraining my impatience to ask you to come and see the Theatre, until it should be finished. Now you have seen it, I should like to explain to you all that it is going to be. I want to make it something that shall never be seen again.

Will you come in after 8 this evening?

Ever Affecy.
CD.

To FRANK STONE, 21 NOVEMBER 1856*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Friday Twenty First November 1856.

My Dear Stone

If you are disengaged, come to the Rehearsal tonight. If not disengaged tonight, say Monday.

Ever Affecy.
CD.

To [CHARLES] LEE,[†1] 22 NOVEMBER 1856

Extract in N, II, 812.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS,
22nd November 1856

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Lee and begs to thank him for the ticket for the dinner at the North Surrey Industrial Schools.[†2]

Should Mr. Dickens have an opportunity of going over the establishment, he will have the pleasure of accepting Mr. Lee's kind offer to accompany him.

To [?WILLIAM BRADBURY],[†1] 24 NOVEMBER 1856*

MS Houghton Library, Harvard.

Tavistock House | Monday Twenty Fourth November | 1856.

My Dear Sir

I received a note from you yesterday, about the Little Dorrit Proofs.[†2]

I have not got them. Mr. Forster tells me he has returned them to Whitefriars; but I have not yet had the Revise. If you will send me the Revise, your messenger may wait to bring it back to you again. I have only two very slight alterations to make in it.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To W. H. WILLS, 24 NOVEMBER 1856*

MS Huntington Library.

Tavistock House
Monday Night | Twenty Fourth November | 1856.

My Dear Wills.

I forgot, in the tremendous hurry and storm of to night, to ask you if you can be here for a little while on Wednesday from a quarter before Four.

The Fire Insurance Office are going to send an Inspector that day "between 4 and 5",[†3] and it is so much better that he should be attended over the "Works" by some one who is not the Principal. I will tell you beforehand, the points I wish him to understand.

Ever Faithfully
CD.

To FRANK STONE, 26 NOVEMBER 1856*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House
Wednesday Twenty Sixth November 1856.

My Dear Stone

I have put you down on the List — two places on each of the Four Nights, which I hope will answer your purpose well. There will always be a good lounging-place by the door, besides, with a good view.

We are getting on. But the amount of Carpenter's Work, through having to make the Scenes in small pieces, is quite extraordinary.

Ever affecy.

CD.

To THE SECRETARY OF THE EAGLE INSURANCE OFFICE, [27 NOVEMBER 1856]

Mention in To Mitton, 3 Dec 56. Date: no doubt the same day that he received the Secretary's letter, 27 Nov (see To Wills, 24 Nov and To Mitton, 3 Dec).

To MESSRS WILLIAMS & NORGATE,[†1] [27 NOVEMBER 1856]

MS (envelope) Mr John Brancher. Address: Messrs. Williams and Norgate | 14 Henrietta Street | Covent Garden. PM 27 Nov 56.

To MESSRS BRADBURY & EVANS, 29 NOVEMBER 1856

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Tavistock House

Saturday Twenty Ninth November | 1856

My Dear B and E.

You have made a most fatal mistake, which puts me in greater concern than I can possibly describe. You have omitted a correction of mine in the Revise of No XIII, of the last importance. It is a reference certain to be mischievously perverted, and used against me. I wrote it in the text, more as a joke which Forster shewed me in the Proofs than for any other purpose. I knew he would see that it was unsafe, and he came here directly to ask me to take it out. The moment I saw him, I said "I know what it is; I have already taken it out in my mind". How is it possible for me ever to explain that the grossest carelessness at the Printers', and their placing me in the damned absurd position of making corrections which are pitched into the fire, occasions its going forth? The passage is at page 404, 4 lines from the bottom, where I most carefully took out from the revise a reference to "baptismal water on the brain".[†2] If it were not too late, I would suppress the whole issue.[†3] I never was so vexed in my life.

Faithfully Ever

CD.

December

To THE DUKE OF DEVONSHIRE, 1 DECEMBER 1856

MS Devonshire Collections, Chatsworth.

Tavistock House | First December, 1856

My Dear Duke of Devonshire

The moment the first bill is printed for the first night of the New Play I told you of,[†1] I send it to you, in the hope that you will grace it with your presence. There is not one of the old actors whom you will fail to inspire as no one else can. And I hope you will see a little result of a friendly union of the Arts, that you may think worth seeing, and that you can see nowhere else.

We purpose repeating it on Thursday the 8th. Monday the 12th. and Wednesday the 14th. of January. I do not encumber this note with so many bills, and merely mention those nights in case any one of them should be more convenient to you than the first.

But I shall hope for the first, unless you dash me. (N.B. I put Flora into the current No.[†2] on purpose that this might catch you, softened towards me and at a disadvantage.)

If there is hope of your coming, I will have the Play clearly copied, and will send it to you to read beforehand. With the most grateful remembrances and the sincerest good wishes for your health and happiness,[†3]

I am Ever | My Dear Duke of Devonshire | Your faithful and obliged

CHARLES DICKENS

The | Duke of Devonshire

To WILLIAM TELBIN, 2 DECEMBER 1856

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Night | Second December, 1856

My Dear Mr Telbin

I send you our bills for all the nights; and I am sure I need not tell you what pleasure it will give us all to see you, both before and behind the curtain, throughout the prodigiously long season.

Before you receive this, you will probably have received all the remaining pieces of your scene;[†4] for at this moment they are all completed and lying on the stage. I had a pair of wings made for the back, outside the windows, and canvassed on both sides, so that they might be used both by you and Stanfield.[†5] Now, Stanfield, finding that they made a disagreeable shadow and did not screen in well after all, has set them flat against the wall and made them out with unframed canvass so as to cover the whole distance within sight. As he has only painted them sky and sea, I hope you will find when you come to look at the stage again that they will screen in — at all events with a little masking — sufficiently for your set.

Very faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

W. Telbin Esquire

To THE LORD CAMPBELL,[†1] 3 DECEMBER 1856*

MS Brigadier Lord Stratheden and Campbell.

Tavistock House | Third December, 1856.

My Dear Lord

I cannot sufficiently thank you for your letter, which has gratified me beyond expression. Mrs. Dickens addresses a note to Lady Stratheden[†2] in leaving this: and we shall look for Lady Stratheden, your daughter,[†3] and yourself, on the 14th. with the greatest interest and pleasure.

My Dear Lord | Yours faithfully and obliged
CHARLES DICKENS

The | Lord Campbell.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 3 DECEMBER 1856*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Wednesday Third December 1856.

My Dear Miss Coutts

I received your note this morning, and will go over the little MS[†4] tomorrow, and return it by post tomorrow night.

In the meantime I must send you the enclosed to read, because I feel sure you will be pleased with it. Will you kindly return it, for the family archives?[†5]

With kind love to Mrs. Brown

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours
CD.

Over

Have you disposed of your votes for the Medical officer of "The St. George's and St. James's Dispensary, King Street, Regent Street"?[†6] If not, will you give them to me.

To THOMAS MITTON,[†1] 3 DECEMBER 1856

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Wednesday Third December | 1856.

My Dear Mitton

The Inspector from the Fire Office[†2] — Surveyer, by the bye, they called him — duly came. Wills described him as not very pleasant in his manners. I derived the impression that he was so exceedingly dry, that if he ever takes fire, he must burn out, and can never otherwise be extinguished.

Next day, I received a letter from the Secretary, to say that the said Surveyer had reported great additional risk from Fire, and that the Dirctors, "at their meeting next Tuesday", would settle the Extra amount of Premium to be paid.

Thereupon, I thought the matter was becoming complicated, and wrote a common-sense note to the Secretary, (which I begged might be read to the Directors), saying that I was quite prepared to pay any extra Premium, but setting forth the plain state of the case. (I did not say that the Lord Chief Justice, the Chief Baron, and half the Bench were coming:[†3] though I felt a temptation to make a joke about burning them all).

Finally, this morning comes up the Secretary to me (yesterday having been the great Tuesday), and says that he is requested by the Directors to present their compliments, and to say that they could not think of charging for any additional risk at all: feeling convinced that I would place the gas (which they considered to be the only danger) under the charge of one competent man. I then explained to him how carefully and systematically that was all arranged, and we parted with drums beating and colors flying on both sides.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 4 DECEMBER 1856

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Meadfoot House | Hesketh Crescent | Torquay | Devon.

Tavistock House | Thursday Fourth December | 1856.

My Dear Miss Coutts

I have gone over the additional MS, and hope I have made it quite plain. I enclose my draft.[†4] You will observe at the bottom of page 2, that I have used this expression:

— "distinctly shewing how much a workman receiving so much pr. week at so many years of age, could, by properly investing a steady saving from it, accumulate in five years." — This I suppose to be the effect of the calculation referred to?[†1]

Enclosed, you will also find the Christmas No. I am the Captain of the Golden Mary; Mr. Collins is the Mate. We are out very early,[†2] as I want it to get all over England Ireland and Scotland, a good fortnight before Christmas Day.

With love to Mrs. Brown | Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

It is freezing, thawing, and snivelling. It is also densely foggy. Nobody can stand in the streets, and nobody can quite fall. Mr. Stanfield, after undergoing unspeakable perils in the passage from Hampstead, is being held on a board fixed between two tall ladders (on account of Rheumatism, held) by two Carpenters. It is exactly like a Coat of Arms.

To JAMES DUNN,[†3] 4 DECEMBER 1856

MS Goodspeed's Book Shop.

Tavistock House, London | Fourth December, 1856.

Sir.

I do not like to leave your letter without an answer under my own hand, though I have no satisfactory reply to give at present. The book[†4] has been an expensive one to print, and has but very modestly repaid me for the time devoted to its composition. Being stereotyped too, it would involve some sacrifice to alter its form;[†5] and it could not be cheaply issued in its present form. These considerations make me doubt the practicability, in any reason, of reducing its price until a time shall have elapsed.[†6] But I am exceedingly desirous that it should be as useful as possible, and should be suggestive to the large class whom you so well represent. I will therefore consult my publishers on the subject, and keep your representation steadily in my mind.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. James Dunn.

To HERBERT FRY, 4 DECEMBER 1856*

MS National Portrait Gallery.

Tavistock House | Fourth December, 1856.

Dear Sir

I regret that I cannot comply with the request you do me the favor to prefer.[†1] My wish is, to avoid sittings at all, for any sort of portrait; but if it should fall out that I cannot have my wish, I am already under conditional promises enough in the Photographic way, to haunt mankind with my countenance.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Herbert Fry Esquire

To HABLOT K. BROWNE, 6 DECEMBER 1856

MS Widener Collection, Harvard.

Tavistock House | Saturday Sixth December 1856.

My Dear Browne

Don't have Lord Decimus's hand put out, because that looks condescending; and I want him to be upright, stiff, unmixable with mere mortality.[†2]

Mrs. Plornish is too old, and Cavalletto a leetle bit too furious and wanting in stealthiness.[†3]

Faithfully Always
CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 6 DECEMBER 1856*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Saturday Sixth December | 1856.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I return the Scraps.[†1] Wherever, in my proposed emendations I have made a cabalistic mark, the Printer will understand it. The last slip I have re-written — all but the last sentence — which I can not[†2]

(Beast that I am!) make out. I therefore send both the original of that slip, and the transcript: that you may supply my shortcoming.

The letter I would print, omitting your name, and also the autograph. He merely means by that odd expression, that the poor man was anxious you should have his grateful testimony under his own hand.[†3]

I write very hastily at the end of the day, to save the post.

With love to Mrs. Brown | Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

To MESSRS JUSTERINI & BROOKS,[†4]
8 DECEMBER 1856

MS (in Wills's hand) Professor Harry Stone.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS,
8 December 1856

Mr. Charles Dickens would feel obliged to Messrs. Justerini and Brooks, if they would send immediately to his house, Tavistock House, Tavistock Square One dozen of the best Gin.

The bearer will pay for it.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 9 DECEMBER 1856

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Ninth December, 1856.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I send you the last Addition enclosed.[†5] I omitted to say the other day that I thoroughly agree with you on that point of sending girls to school. There is a vast deal of Kayshuttleworthian nonsense[†1] written, sung, and said, on that subject; and I turn into a Man-Trap on it very often, and seize unsuspicious holders-forth by the leg, when they supposed themselves to be promenading among flower beds.[†2]

Beauty and the Beast are therefore united, amidst the cheers of thousands, as they were in the Story.

I should not like to give you an opinion on the arrangement of the little book, without having it complete before me. But when I have the sheets, I hope I shall put it into the most orderly and convenient form it can be made to take.

Charley will be very proud indeed of a letter from you. I shall not tell him you are going to write, in order that he may have the additional pleasure of a surprise.

You delight me by what you say of the Golden Mary. It strikes me as the prettiest Christmas No. we have had; and I think the way in which John Steadiman[†3] (to whom I shall give your message) has got over the great difficulty of falling into my idea, naturally, is very meritorious indeed. Of course he could not begin until I had finished; and when he read the Wreck he was so desperately afraid of the job, that I began to mistrust him. However, we went down to Gad's Hill and walked through Cobham Woods, to talk it over; and he then went at it cheerfully, and came out as you see. I wish you would read a Petition to the Novel Writers (by him) in last week's Household Words.[†4] It strikes me as uncommonly droll, and shrewdly true.

And now I come round to his Play — must do it — can't help it. I really cannot bear that it should pass over, without your seeing it.[†5] Mr. Stanfield's part in the thing will never be seen again, for I am sorry to say he is getting infirm and ill. Nor do I think (if I may say so) that anything like the thing itself will ever be seen again. I have put up a wooden house at the back of the schoolroom (my own Architect! —) to help the effect, and the Stage is 30 feet long. You would be quite charmed, I think, with the girls; and there is a tenderness pervading the whole design which I believe would thoroughly interest and please you. There are no reminders in the place, for it is utterly changed and different. You would have no idea where you were. Finally, I am quite sure (you may suppose I have watched it a little), that its whole influence is softening and good, and that if Mrs. Brown could be induced to come,[†6] she would afterwards be glad of having done so. Now, I don't suggest her coming when the place would be full of people she knows; but on the night before Twelfth Night, Monday the 5th. we do it exactly as it will be done on Twelfth Night, in the minutest respect; and only our tradespeople and the Servants' relations come. Couldn't you two sit beside Mrs. Dickens that night? Do think of it. It made me quite unhappy last night, looking at Mary,[†1] to reflect that you would not see something that seems so fresh and wholesome to me.

With kind love

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

To THE REV. CHARLES JOSEPH GOODHART,[†2] 10 DECEMBER 1856*

MS Baron Dan de Calinescu.

Tavistock House, London | Tenth December, 1856.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Goodheart,[†3] and begs to say that his engagements prevent his acceptance of the invitation with which he is favored by the Directors of the Annual Soirée.[†4]

To CLARKSON STANFIELD, 11 DECEMBER 1856

MS British Library.

Tavistock House

Thursday Night | Eleventh December 1856.

My Dear Stanny

I send an Express up to say that just now (9 o'Clock) Powell gave the alarm, just as he was going away, that the tremendous rain was making its way in on the Snowcloth.[†5] We immediately got it down on the roller, and found it (I grieve to relate) already heavily wetted in two places right down the sky in long streaks. I am taking the best precautions possible for the night, and have lighted all the Gas to dry it. I let you know at once, as I am of course most anxious that you should see it as soon tomorrow as you can.

We had not a drop of wet (as you know) through the heavy thaw; but the torrent to night was in, in one place, right across the stage back, within half an hour.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To FREDERICK DICKENS,[†1] 12 DECEMBER 1856

MS Huntington Library.

Tavistock House | Friday December Twelfth | 1856.

My Dear Frederick

I am very sorry to receive your letter; not only on account of the position it makes known to me, but because it forces me to write a very plain answer.

I have already done more for you than most dispassionate persons would consider right or reasonable in itself.[†2] But, considered with any fair reference to the great expences I have sustained for other relations, it becomes little else than monstrous. The possibility of your having any further assistance from me, is absolutely and finally past.

Affectionately Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To J. E. RONEY, 12 DECEMBER 1856*

MS Mr R. P. Roney-Dougal. Address: James E. Roney Esquire | Parthenon Club[†3] | Regent Street.

Tavistock House | Twelfth December, 1856.

My Dear Roney

I was very glad to see your Card yesterday, for rumours have reached me of your having been ill. Pray let me know whether you dine with us on Christmas Day. Also that you are good for Twelfth Night.

Further. Tell me how I am to describe you in the Athenæum book, and whereof? In my uncertainty on these heads, and in my daily expectation of seeing you, I have not been able to put your name down.[†4]

Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

James E. Roney Esquire.

To WILKIE COLLINS, 13 DECEMBER 1856*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House
Saturday Night | Thirteenth December 1856.

My Dear Collins

Here is Tauchnitz's answer,[†1] which perhaps you will give me back when you have done with it. Observe that in his English, "anything" means "something".

O[†2] the ventilation question!!!!![†3]

Ever Faithfully
R Wardour

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 13 DECEMBER 1856

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Meadfoot House | Hesketh Crescent | Torquay | Devon.

Tavistock House
Saturday Night | Thirteenth December, 1856.

My Dear Miss Coutts

As we have now both relieved our minds on the subject of the Play, I cheerfully leave the rest to the result that opens out. I could not quite give you up without a struggle; but, having made it, I can be as quiet as a lamb. If you tell me on the morning of the Fifth that you are coming, either alone or with Mrs. Brown, I shall have the happiness of expecting you. If you do not, I shall know that you could not see your way to it — and with a perfect faith in your seeing clearly out of kind eyes, shall want no sort of explanation.

Beauty is mistaken in supposing Beast[†4] to have retained any scrap of matter, either printed or in Manuscript. Beast appeals to habits of order and method as yet unchallenged by Beauty — lays his paw upon his heart — and declares upon his honor, to the best of his knowledge information and belief, "Not Guilty".

B was at S. B.[†5] the other day, and held Committee in due form. All most satisfactory. He begs to send his love to Mrs. B (rown).

Dear Miss Coutts | Ever Yours faithfully & affecly.
CHARLES DICKENS

To W. C. MACREADY, 13 DECEMBER 1856†

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House
Saturday Evening | Thirteenth December 1856.

My Dearest Macready.

We shall be charmed to squeeze Willie's friend in — and it shall be done, by some undiscovered power of compression, on the Second Night — Thursday the 14th. Will you make our compliments to his Honor the Deputy Fiscal,[†1] present him with the enclosed bill, and tell him we shall be cordially glad to see him? I hope to entrust him with a special shake of the hand, to be forwarded to our dear boy (if a hoary Sage like myself may venture on that expression), by the next Mail.

I would have proposed the first night, but that is too full.

You may faintly imagine, my venerable friend, the occupation of these also-grey hairs, between Golden Marys, Little Dorrits, Household Wordses, four stage-carpenters entirely boarding on the premises, a carpenter's shop erected in the back-garden, size always boiling over on all the lower fires, Stanfield perpetually elevated on planks and splashing himself from head to foot, Telbin requiring impossibilities of swart gasmen, and a legion of prowling nondescripts ever slinking in and out. Calm amidst the wrack, your aged friend glides away on the Dorrit stream, forgetting the uproar for a stretch of hours — refreshes himself with a ten or twelve miles walk — pitches himself head-foremost into foaming rehearsals — placidly emerges for Editorial purposes — smokes over buckets of distemper with Mr. Stanfield aforesaid — again calmly floats upon the Dorrit waters.

[†a]One piece of News I have, that I think you will be pleased to hear. Lord Gardner[†2] has married Miss Fortescue,[†3] and they are living quietly and very happily.[†a]

With my best love to Miss Macready, and to all the rest,

Ever My Dear Macready | Most affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MARK LEMON, 14 DECEMBER 1856

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Sunday, Fourteenth December | 1856.

My Dear Mark

Stanfield wants an appointment made now, for an evening "within a week or ten days of the Play", when you, he, and I, "and nobody else but the Snow-boys", may meet and give a few hours to the Snow and Ice. It seems to me that Saturday the 27th. would be a very good time. Will that suit you?

Hadn't you better send a Box here for your accumulating dress? A heavy coat of obtrusive appearance, a heavy pair of trousers, and a red shirt, which I find disporting themselves on my study-chairs, will otherwise — I feel persuaded — somehow get upon Little Dorrit, to the astonishment of the Public.

Ever affecy.

CD.

To MESSRS COUTTS & CO., 15 DECEMBER 1856*

MS Fales Collection, New York University Library.

London, Fifteenth December, 1856.

Messrs. Coutts and Co.

Please deliver my banking-book to the Bearer for me.

CHARLES DICKENS

To CHARLES DE LA PRYME,[†1] 15 DECEMBER 1856†

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Tavistock House | Monday Fifteenth December | 1856.

Dear Sir

In reply to your obliging letter, I beg to assure you that I have not the slightest reason to suppose that Andersen is coming to England at all, otherwise than that I have seen it stated in some newspapers that he is coming on a visit to me.[†2] I have not heard from him these six months, and, when he last wrote, he certainly had no more idea of visiting London than of going to the Antipodes.

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

C. De La Pryme Esquire

To MISS MARGUERITE POWER, 15 DECEMBER 1856

MS Berg Collection.

Tavistock House | Fifteenth December 1856.

My dear Marguerite

I am not quite[†3] clear about the story — not because it is otherwise than exceedingly pretty, but because I am in rather a difficult position as to stories just now. Besides beginning a long one by Collins with the new year (which will last five or six months), I have, as I always have at this time, a considerable residue of stories written for the Christmas No. — not suitable to it — and yet available for the general purposes of Household Words. This limits my choice, for the moment, to stories that have some decided speciality (or a great deal of story) in them.

But I will look over the accumulation before you come, and I hope you will never see your little friend again but in print.[†1]

You will find us expecting you on the night of the 24th. and heartily glad to welcome you. The most terrific preparations are in hand for the Play on Twelfth Night. There has been a carpenter's shop in the garden, for six weeks — a painter's shop in the schoolroom — a gas fitter's shop all over the basement — a dressmaker's shop at the top of the house — a tailor's shop in my dressing room. Stanfield has been incessantly on scaffoldings for two months, and your friend has been writing Little Dorrit &c &c in corners, like the Sultan's groom who was turned upside down by the Genie.[†2]

Kindest loves from all, and from me

Ever Affectionately

CD.

To WILKIE COLLINS, 16 DECEMBER 1856

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House

Tuesday Evening | Sixteenth December, 1856.

My Dear Collins

I send round to ascertain that you are all right. Not that I have any misgiving on the subject, for when I shook hands with you last night, you were as cool and comfortable as an unlucky Dog could be.

All progressing satisfactorily. Telbin painting on the stage. Carpenters knocking down the Drawing Room.

We are obliged to do Animal Magnetism[†3] on Thursday evening at 8.[†4] If you are strong enough to come, I know you will. If you are not — I know you won't.

Ever Cordially

CD.

To WILLIAM CULLENFORD,[†5] 17 DECEMBER 1856*

MS Private.

Tavistock House | Wednesday Seventeenth December | 1856.

My Dear Mr. Cullenford

I am too closely occupied, to make an appointment to go into the City until after Christmas Day. But any appointment for eleven o'Clock in the forenoon that you may make for me with Messrs. Hill[†1] after that day, I will attend to, on your letting me know of it.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MESSRS. BRADBURY & EVANS, 18 DECEMBER 1856*

MS Berg Collection.

Tavistock House | Thursday Eighteenth December | 1856.

My Dear B and E.

In asking you again kindly to undertake the commission of sending Wills a big turkey and ham, I am reminded that I don't think you charged the last in our cash account. Will you remember to clear the said ham and turkey score, in the account of this Christmas?

Ever Faithfully Yours
CD.

To W. J. EASTWICK,[†2] 21 DECEMBER 1856

MS Boston Public Library. Address: William J. Eastwick Esquire | &c &c &c | East India House.

Tavistock House | Twenty First December, 1856.

Dear Sir.

I cannot sufficiently express to you the gratification I have derived from your kindest of letters.[†3] Apart from the valuable and welcome nature of its generous offer, the spirit in which that offer is made to me and the terms in which you assure me of the causes of your feeling of interest in my behalf, will always remain deeply impressed on my mind. It has been my good fortune to receive many of the greatest spontaneous rewards that can attend an author's life; but I doubt if I have ever had occasion to feel more sensible of my high privileges than I feel when with all my heart I thank you.

I do not know at what age a youth can become the subject of nomination to a cadetship. I have a boy named Alfred,[†4] now educating in France — a boy of a remarkable character as a combination of self-reliance, steadiness, and adventurous spirit — whom I have always purposed to send abroad, and whom I believe to be particularly qualified for this opportunity. I have another, Francis Jeffrey,[†5] now thirteen (this Alfred is eleven) for whom I should like a cadetship next best, but whose abilities I think more of a character to force some way of their own, peacefully, at home. I am aware that no boy can go up for examination until he is Sixteen; but if one can be nominated so long beforehand, I should be delighted to accept your offer for one of these, and decidedly for Alfred rather than the other, supposing both to be equally available. I only mention Frank, on the chance of its being possible to nominate a boy of thirteen, and not possible to nominate a boy of eleven.

I shall be happy to call upon you at any time that may best suit your convenience. I cannot feel quite easy until I have thanked you in person. You may be as sure that I cannot forget your esteem and the proof of it (whatever the result), as that any son of mine who may owe his calling in life to you, will be honestly trained to support it with credit, and to feel a double duty in distinguishing himself.

I am My Dear Sir | Yours faithfully and truly obliged

CHARLES DICKENS

William J Eastwick Esquire

To THE MARQUIS OF LANSDOWNE,[†1] 21 DECEMBER 1856*

MS Private.

Tavistock House | Twenty First December, 1856.

My Dear Lord.

Will you allow me to ask you if you will have any objection to forwarding the enclosed Memorial[†2] to the Prime Minister. The names appended to it, are purposely few in number; but I hope they are such as may be considered expressive on such a subject; and I know that the name to which they refer will have its own weight with you.

It is only desired that the Minister should receive the Memorial from fit hands. No acknowledgement, promise, or explanation of any sort, is solicited. His difficulties in the bestowal of literary pensions are perfectly understood; and all that is sought, is, that he should receive an earnest recommendation — but one not made in formâ pauperis — and attach such weight to such a case as his opportunities and sense of its claims on the public respect may seem to him to justify.

I am My Dear Lord | Yours always faithfully and obliged

CHARLES DICKENS

The | Marquis of Lansdowne

To JOHN FORSTER, [?20-21 DECEMBER 1856]

Extract in F, VIII, i, 628. Date: near Christmas (see below); probably weekend, 20-1 Dec.

As Christmas approached, the house was in a state of siege. All day long, a labourer heats size over the fire in a great crucible. We eat it, drink it, breathe it, and smell it. Seventy paint-pots (which came in a van) adorn the stage; and three Dansons (from the Surrey Zoological Gardens)[†3] all painting at once!! Meanwhile, Telbin, in a secluded bower in Brewer-street, Golden-square,[†1] plies his part of the little undertaking.

To THOMAS BEARD, 23 DECEMBER 1856

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | Morning Herald Office | Shoe Lane | Fleet Street.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Twenty Third December 1856

My Dear Beard

I am vexed to have seen your card twice, and not to have seen you. New servant[†2] — unlearned in the privileged faces.

If it should be a fine dry day next Sunday, what do you say to a walk at Gad's Hill?

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To SIR EDWIN LANDSEER, 23 DECEMBER 1856*

MS British Library.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Twenty Third December | 1856.

My Dear Landseer

Mrs. Dickens on coming home from Eastlake's last night, told me you had assured her that Lord Lyndhurst[†3] would be pleased to come to the Play. I write to you immediately, as few things could give me greater pleasure than to have the soundest head I ever saw and the finest speaker I ever heard, among the audience.

I will call and leave a card for Lord Lyndhurst to day. But as it is now some years since I met him at Lord Brougham's,[†4] and as you know of his desire at first hand, perhaps I had best leave the arrangement of the night with him to you.

We act four nights, and I enclose you the bills. I think the best night for Lord Lyndhurst would be either the first or the last. (The last is of an awfully judicial character, ranging from the Lord Chief Justice to the youngest of the Puisnes).[†5] All I want to know, is, which night he selects; and that you must let me know as soon as you possibly can, in order that I may arrange accordingly; for the run upon the seats passes belief.

On any of the four nights I will make the best seat his, and shall be heartily gratified by the presence of so great an intellect and so wonderful a man. Pray say as much, like Osric in Hamlet, "after what flourish your nature will".[†1]

Hour, halfpast seven.

Always My Dear Landseer | Cordially Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Sir Edwin Landseer.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 24 DECEMBER 1856*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts.

Tavistock House | Christmas Eve, 1856.

My Dear Miss Coutts

Many, many, many happy Christmases and New Years to both of you.

The letter weights shall have henceforth, the place of honor — and love — on my table. They take their places as Households Gods to night, and shall have but one dethronement. Beautiful in themselves — "tidy" — orderly — congenial in all such respects, they have deeper and invisible value to me, never my dear friends to be stated in words.

I will come round tomorrow about 2. You say "Stratton Street", and to Stratton Street my Compass shall direct me.

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully and affecly. Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Kindest love and regard from all here.

To THE REV. R. H. DAVIES,†2 24 DECEMBER 1856

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: The Reverend R. H. Davies.

Tavistock House | Christmas Eve, 1856.

My Dear Sir

I beg to thank you for your very acceptable letter — not the less gratifying to me, because I am myself the writer †aof "The Wreck" in the Christmas Number†a to which you refer.†3

There cannot be many men, I believe, who have a more humble veneration for the New Testament or a more profound conviction of its all-sufficiency than I have. If I am ever (as you tell me I am) mistaken on this subject, it is because I discountenance all obtrusive professions of, and tradings in, Religion, as one of the main causes of real Christianity's having been retarded in this world; and because my observation of life induces me to hold in unspeakable dread and horror, those unseemly squabbles about the Letter, which drive the Spirit out of hundreds of thousands.

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS EMILY JOLLY,[†1] 24 DECEMBER 1856

Extract in John Heise catalogue No. 2468 (1935); MS 1 p.; dated Tavistock House, Christmas Eve, 1856; addressed Miss Emily Jolly according to N, II, 818 ([aa])

[a]Constant occupation since the receipt of your book,[†2] has prevented my acknowledging it sooner.... I have read it with much pleasure, and find in it all the power that strongly impressed me when I first perused the story to which you refer.[a†3] If I still venture to whisper counsel very similar to that which I formerly offered to you, it is because I observe it to be less needed than before, and wish to support you — as far as my poor word may — in the great advance you have made.

To WILLIAM KENT,[†4] 24 DECEMBER 1856

MS Dickens House.

Tavistock House | Christmas Eve, 1856.

My Dear Sir

I cannot leave your letter unanswered, because I am really anxious that you should understand why I cannot comply with your request.

Scarcely a week passes, without my receiving requests from various quarters, to sit for likenesses, to be taken by all the processes ever invented. Apart from my having an invincible objection to the multiplication of my countenance in the Shop-Windows, I have not — between my avocations and my needful recreation — the time to comply with these proposals. At this moment there are three cases out of a vast number, in which I have said "If I sit at all it shall be to you first — to you second — and to you third". But I assure you I consider myself almost as unlikely to go through these three conditional achievements, as I am to go to China. Judge when I am likely to get to Mr. Watkins![†5]

I highly esteem and thank you for your sympathy with my writings. I doubt if I have a more genial reader in the world.

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

William Charles Kent Esquire.

To W. H. WILLS, 24 DECEMBER 1856

MS Huntington Library.

Tavistock House | Twenty Fourth December, 1856.

My Dear Wills.

Will you represent to Mr. Sala the necessity and vital importance — quite as much to himself as to Household Words — of his being punctual and faithful in the performance of the work he has undertaken.[†1]

Pray take care that he distinctly understands beyond all possibility of misconception, that he can have money from you while he is at work, as he wants it;[†2] and that when we come, on the completion of Due North, to close our accounts I shall arrange all things with him for his advantage, in exactly the same spirit as if he had not given me occasion to decide that Household Words must not do him the injury of accepting any further service at his hands.[†3]

Faithfully Always
CHARLES DICKENS

W. H. Wills Esquire.

To W. H. WILLS, 25 DECEMBER 1856*

MS Huntington Library.

Tavistock House | Christmas Day, 1856.

My Dear Wills.

All good wishes of the Season and of all good Seasons, to you and yours!

I am delighted to have the Pocket Book from you, and hope to enter much business in it of interest to us both.

Ever Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

W. H. Wills Esquire

To THE REV. WILLIAM J. FOX,[†1] 30 DECEMBER 1856

Mention in Parke-Bernet catalogue No. 1190 (Oct 1950); MS 2 pp.; dated Tavistock House, 30 Dec 56; addressed William J. Fox.

Discussing literary matters, mentions Household Words and Horne's[†2] Orion.[†3]

To DAVID HASTINGS,[†4] 30 DECEMBER 1856

MS Dickens House.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Thirtieth December 1856

Dear Sir

I ought to let you know that I don't wish to coquet about next Tuesday's play, and that if you should think it of any public interest or merit I beg you to use your own free discretion as to noticing it; not being restrained by the supposition that any privacy on that head is implied in the invitation. I have written both to Oxenford and Hogarth (who will also be here on the first night) exactly to this effect, by this same post. The Play will be seen by so many people of various conditions, that I feel it would be an affectation in me to make a mystery of it — while it would be hardly fair moreover, to the other public men who have taken pains with it.[†5]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

— Hastings Esquire

To GEORGE HOGARTH, 30 DECEMBER 1856

MS John Rylands Library.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Thirtieth December, 1856.

My Dear Hogarth

I write today both to Oxenford and Hastings, to this effect:

That if they think the Play of any public interest or merit, I beg them to use their own free discretion as to noticing it; not being restrained by the supposition that any privacy on that head is implied in the invitation. That it will be seen, first and last, by representatives of all sorts and conditions of people, and that I feel it would be an affectation in me to make a mystery of it, while it would be hardly fair moreover to the other public men who have taken pains with it.

As I want you to be on exactly the same footing with them, I send you this summary of my note by the same post.[†1]

Ever affecy.
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN OXENFORD,[†2] [30 DECEMBER 1856]

Mention in To Hogarth, 30 Dec 56. Date: written same day.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, [31 DECEMBER 1856]*

MS Morgan Library. Date: clearly the Wed before the dress rehearsal of The Frozen Deep on Mon 5 Jan 57, to which both Miss Coutts and Lady Falmouth came; formation of "CD" supports.

Tavistock House | Wednesday Night

My Dear Miss Coutts.

Monday stands fixed. Shall Mrs. Dickens write to Lady Falmouth — or call — or how? I ask, simply because I don't want to make a fuss about it, as if it were a great thing. Will you direct me?

I fear, I cannot make sure of myself for Wednesday, until Friday morning. I am already half engaged.

A word as to Lady Falmouth.[†3]

Ever Faithfully and affecy.

CD.

1857

January

To LORD LYNDHURST, 1 JANUARY 1857*

MS W. A. Foyle.

Tavistock House | First January 1857.

My Dear Lord

I exceedingly regret that I am particularly engaged on Saturday, or I should have been most happy to have accepted your invitation.

Believe me | Very faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

The | Lord Lyndhurst.

To DANIEL MACLISE, [1 JANUARY 1857]

Mention in To Wills, 3 Jan 57.

To CLARKSON STANFIELD, 1 JANUARY 1857*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Thursday, New Year's Day 1857.

My Dear Stanny

In the excitement of the G Picture[†1] yesterday, I forgot that there are all those Icicles to be made.[†2] Could you manage to come tomorrow afternoon — direct that operation before dinner — take your mutton with us — and then take the Rehearsal?

Do if you can.

Ever Affecy.

CD.

To MRS BROWN, 2 JANUARY 1857

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Friday Second January 1857

My Dear Mrs. Brown.

Shall we say, One o'Clock tomorrow? I will be ready for you at that hour. The preparations, however, are very difficult to understand in the day; because they have been made by the Painters, for their purposes, extraordinarily ingenious, and require the Carpenters to handle them and put them together.

I should very much like you only to see a Sunset[†3] — far better than anything that has ever been done at the Diorama[†4] or any such place. There is a Rehearsal to night (no one here but the company), and this Sunset, which begins the play, will be visible at a quarter before 8: lasting ten minutes. If you came, you need speak to nobody but Georgina and me — and nobody need so much as see you to recognize you. But I don't press you, and don't look for any answer.

Tomorrow at One, if I don't see you in the meanwhile. That's all.

Ever Your faithful

CD.

Miss Coutts and Lady Falmouth, Catherine will expect on Monday at 1/2 past 7. I am delighted to hear of their coming.

To W. J. EASTWICK, 2 JANUARY 1857

Mention in N, II, 823.

To JOHN LEECH, 2 JANUARY 1857*

MS Johns Hopkins University.

Tavistock | Second January 1857.

My Dear Leech.

Turning over the leaves of your Second Series[†1] this morning with infinite pleasure, I am reminded that I have not thanked you for it. Let me do so, cordially. It is full of good things of a most admirable kind. It is not the least of its merits, or of its certain hold on long life, that it comprehends a large variety of classes.[†2] Feeling thoroughly sure that nothing, however admirable, will strike root in these days and the days to come, which limits itself to the mere perishing gentilities, it is an unspeakable satisfaction to my mind when I see a man of your genius and rare power doing in this regard what every one of the famous lasting English men has done, without a single exception, through the whole circle of the Arts.

Very faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

I hope you will see something very pretty and uncommon, in the Play here.

To B. W. PROCTER,[†3] 2 JANUARY 1857

Text from MDGH, II, 5.

Tavistock House, January 2nd, 1857

My Dear Procter,

I have to thank you for a delightful book,[†4] which has given me unusual pleasure. My delight in it has been a little dashed by certain farewell verses,[†5] but I have made up my mind (and you have no idea of the obstinacy of my character) not to believe them.

Perhaps it is not taking a liberty — perhaps it is — to congratulate you on Kenyon's[†6] remembrance.[†7] Either way I can't help doing it with all my heart, for I know no man in the world (myself excepted) to whom I would rather the money went.

Affectionately yours ever

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 3 JANUARY 1857*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Saturday Third January | 1857

My Dear Miss Coutts

Here is the statement. I have made it very plain, and very brief. And it certainly looks very damaging.[†1]

Ever Faithfully and affecy. Yours | (With love to Mrs. Brown)

CD.

To W. H. WILLS, 3 JANUARY 1857

MS Huntington Library.

Tavistock House | Saturday Third January | 1857

My Dear Wills

I am sorry that I cannot do what Mr. Payn[†2] asks. But the substitution of an uninvited visitor for an invited one, is really put out of the question by the large reserved list of friends whom we have been unable to ask for want of room. No longer ago than Thursday, I could not do exactly the same thing for my old and intimate friend Maclise. His place falling in (through his being unable to move his leg, which is injured), I could not accept his proposed substitute, but gave it to the first on our old neglected list. And I must beg to exercise the same privilege in respect of Mrs. Payn's.[†2]

Ever Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [?3-4 JANUARY 1857]

Extract in F, VIII, i, 628. Date: shortly before the first performance on 6 Jan.

On the pressure for admittance. My audience is now 93, and at least 10 will neither hear nor see.[†3]

To FRANCESCO BERGER, 4 JANUARY 1857*

MS Cornell University Library.

Sunday Fourth January | 1857

My Dear Berger

Nothing can possibly be better. I thoroughly agree with you, and am delighted to hear of the Big Bell.[†1]

In haste | Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 4 JANUARY 1857*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Sunday Fourth January 1857.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I did not return you this letter yesterday morning, as I meant to have done.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CD.

To RICHARD MONCKTON MILNES, 4 JANUARY 1857*

MS Trinity College, Cambridge.

Tavistock House, London. W. C. | Fourth January 1857

My Dear Mr. Milnes

I have received your kind cheque for Ten Pounds, in favor of Miss Power, safely.

The Emperor[†2] has been written to. He did give a Convent-Dowry[†3] to Ellen.[†4] As I remember its amount, it was five thousand francs.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

R. M. Milnes Esquire.

To W. H. WILLS, 4 JANUARY 1857

MS Huntington Library.

Tavistock House | Sunday Fourth January 1857

My Dear Wills

I have of course no other reply to your note than that I cheerfully acquiesce. I wish however, in thorough good humour, that you did not argue the principle with me, because it does not reasonably admit of any discussion out of myself. The less I know of the people concerned, the more unreasonable such a substitution is in my mind, and the greater the liberty is of so misusing an act of attention. (This remark applies solely, I need not add, to Mr. Payn.)[†1] It is worth remembering that among nearly four hundred people no such thing has been thought of — except by Maclise, who expressly said in his note that he still did not consider it a kind of thing to be done.

I should like to see you sometime tomorrow morning about the Seats; which will require a little management when you have got the Theatre nearly full, and will need to be perfectly understood beforehand. I am going to Newgate-Market with Mrs. Dickens after breakfast to shew her where to buy fowls; but I shall be back directly. Shall we appoint 12 o'Clock?

I shall then have one or two things to give you for H. W. also, and a question to ask you about Frederick.

Will you impress upon Mrs. Wills from me, this last never-to-be-departed-from rule. Imagine it written in Golden Characters.
WHEN THEY APPLAUD, INVARIABLY STOP, UNTIL THE APPLAUSE IS OVER.

Ever Faithfully
CD.

Yes to the Poems[†2] — too golden-haired, and marble, and all that; but meritorious I think.

To RICHARD BENTLEY, 7 JANUARY 1857*

MS Berg Collection.

Tavistock House | Seventh January 1857.

My Dear Sir

I am very much obliged to you for the curious book[†3] you have had the kindness to send me. Accept my cordial thanks and all seasonable good wishes.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esquire.

To W. H. WILLS, 7 JANUARY 1857

MS Huntington Library.

Tavistock House | Wednesday Seventh January | 1857

My Dear Wills

All right. Halfpast one tomorrow!

I am in perfect order. Calm — perfectly happy with the success[†1] — about to make more Gin Punch. Draught of that article enormous.

Macready[†2] has just been here, perfectly raging because Forster took him away, and positively shouldered him out of the Green Room Supper,[†3] on which he had set his heart.

You write Diabolically plain this morning. I can't do that.

Ever Faithfully
CD.

To FREDERICK DICKENS, 8 JANUARY 1857

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Thursday January Eighth 1857

My Dear Frederick

Either Alfred[†4] has made a mistake in his communication with you (of which I know nothing but from yourself), or you have mistaken him. I asked Wills for no advice whatever, but asked him what was the present state of the kind responsibility he incurred for you, against my strong representation that I felt certain it was useless and you would abandon him. He told me how it stood, and I found you to have deserted him and Henry,[†1] with a greater coolness than I had been prepared for.

Now, as this is a plain matter of fact which no representation can alter, and as my interference begins and ends with my asking for that information and leaving Wills (as he fully understands) free to do exactly what he thinks necessary, without any sort of check or influence from me, I must decline entering on the subject any further, and therefore make no appointment.

Affectionately always

C.D.

Frederick Dickens Esquire

To THE DEAN OF ST. PAUL'S, 9 JANUARY 1857

MS (fragment) Yale University Library; transcribed before partial destruction in Prestwick air-crash, 1954.

Tavistock House | Friday Ninth January 1857

My Dear Dean

I have delayed this reply to your letter, awaiting the chance of some seat reverting to us by an accident, that we might offer to Miss [M'Lennan].[†2] I am sorry to let you know however, after all, that I fear it will be impossible to find room for that lady. Although every seat in our little Theatre has its occupant's name upon it beforehand, we are well night distracted by the fearful accumulation of names that some undiscovered principle of compound Interest brings to bear upon the places. We acted last night to exactly the number who are coming on Monday; and the difficulty of seating them (intensified by Crinoline)[†3] was so great, that I am afraid to add one more. You will understand the difficulty better, when you see the place; but I am sure I need not ask you to give me credit in the meantime for its being insurmountable.

Very faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

The | Dean of St. Paul's.

To SIR JAMES EMERSON TENNENT, 9 JANUARY 1857

MS Berg Collection. Address: Private | Sir James Emerson Tennent | &c &c &c | Board of Trade | Whitehall.

Tavistock House | Friday Evening | Ninth January 1857.

My Dear Tennent

I must thank you for your earnest and affectionate letter. It has given me the greatest pleasure, mixing the Play in my mind, confusedly and delightfully, with Pisa — the Valetta — Naples — Herculanaeum[†1] — God knows what not.

As to the Play itself; when it is made as good as my care can make it, I derive a strange feeling out of it, like writing a book in company. A satisfaction of a most singular kind, which has no exact parallel in my life. A something that I suppose to belong to the life of a Labourer in Art, alone, and which has to me a conviction of its being actual Truth without its pain, that I never could adequately state if I were to try never so hard.

You touch so kindly and feelingly on the pleasure such little pains give, that I feel quite sorry you have never seen this Drama in progress during the last ten weeks here. Every Monday and Friday evening during that time we have been at work upon it. I assure you it has been a remarkable lesson to my young people in patience, perseverance, punctuality, and order: and, best of all, in that kind of humility which is got from the earned knowledge that whatever the right hand finds to do, must be done with the heart in it, and in a desperate earnest.

When I changed my dress last night (though I did it very quickly), I was vexed to find you gone. I wanted to have secured you for our Green Room Supper, which was very pleasant. If by any accident you should be free next Wednesday night (our last), pray come to that Green Room Supper. It would give us cordial pleasure to have you there.

Ever My Dear Tennent | Very Heartily Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To WILKIE COLLINS, 10 JANUARY 1857

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Saturday Tenth January 1857

My Dear Collins.

On second thoughts, I am afraid of wasting the spirits of the Company by calling the Dance[†2] at 6 on Monday. Therefore I abandon that intention. I hope we may get it right by speaking to one another in the Dressing Room.

On Play Days (only two more! How they fly!) Mark and I dine at 3, off steak and stout, at the Cock in Fleet Street.[†3] If you should be disposed to join us, then and there you'll find us.

Ever Cordially
CD.

To LADY EASTLAKE,[†1] 10 JANUARY 1857*

MS Öffentliche Bibliothek der Universität Basel.

Tavistock House | Saturday Tenth January | 1857

My Dear Lady Eastlake.

I must acknowledge the receipt of your kind note, because I have derived the greatest pleasure from it. No recognition of the Art of the representation, could be more valuable than yours and your good husband's; and you sum up in a single sentence all our aims and hopes as to the influences of that noble amusement which has unhappily been made so mean.

You make me wish now, that you could have seen something of the progress of the Play during the last two months, and of the lesson it has been to all concerned, in patience, perseverance, punctuality, order, and care in little things. I very much doubt whether the younger people concerned in it would in all their lives have been made by any other means as respectful students of Art, or would have gained from any other source so much of that humility which knows that nothing satisfactory can be done by halves or without trying hard to do it.

I hope our green curtain will not close for the last time next Wednesday night. Visions of another Play in another year, already rise before my mind's eye. If I write it myself, I shall desire no higher appreciation and sympathy to address it to, than your's and Sir Charles's — to whom I send my kind regard.

Always My Dear Lady Eastlake | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To C. H. HAZLEWOOD,[†2] 10 JANUARY 1857*

MS Berg Collection.

Tavistock House, London | Tenth January 1857.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his Compliments to Mr. Haslewood and begs to say that he cannot positively answer Mr. Haslewood's question, but that he fully believes Mr. Wilkie Collins's Frozen Deep will not be represented in the country.

To DAVID HASTINGS, 10 JANUARY 1857

Mention in N, II, 826.

To J. T. LOVEDAY,[†1] 10 JANUARY 1857

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, Oct 1980; MS 2 pp.; addressed James Thomas Loveday; dated Tavistock House, 10 Jan 57.

Regretting that his avocations have obliged him to forego all public engagements, but assuring him that his letter needs no shadow of apology. ... My only refuge against the numerous solicitations I receive, is in an unvarying rule that admits of no exception. Without it, I could not do what I have to do, with the necessary freedom of mind, or with the indispensable aids of rest and recreation.

To CLARKSON STANFIELD, 11 JANUARY 1857*

MS British Library.

Tavistock House | Sunday Eleventh January | 1857.

My Dear Stanny

I forgot; — I am obliged to go to Gad's Hill to day. Therefore I send Catherine up to see after you, and to bring me back the fullest particulars about you she can get together. I trust and hope my dear fellow you are by this time growing so much better, as to see a good chance of being able to come on Wednesday. You shall not go behind, but shall have a snug invalid seat, out of all draughts and difficulties.

Telbin was faithful at his post on Thursday night, and looked after you with the greatest care. Everything went to perfection.

Of course you are not to trouble yourself to write any answer to this, except what Catherine will bring me by word of mouth.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To BENJAMIN WEBSTER, 12 JANUARY 1857*

MS New York University Library.

Tavistock House | Monday Twelfth January | 1857.

My Dear Webster

You were obliged to go away the other night, before I could see you. Wednesday is our last night. Will you come and join the Green Room Supper after the play, and be jovial for an hour or so?

Ever Faithfully

CHARLES DICKENS

Benjamin Webster Esquire.

To FRANCESCO BERGER, 13 JANUARY 1857

Facsimile in Francesco Berger, Reminiscences, Impressions and Anecdotes, 1913, p. 30.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Thirteenth January | 1857.

My Dear Berger.

Will you do me the favor to accept the little memorial[†1] I send with this, in remembrance of our pleasant play and the obligations it owes to you. I can never forget the pains you have taken with it, or the spirit and genius with which you have rendered it high service.[†2] I hope these slight ornaments may lie lightly on your breast during some part of a brilliant career, and I heartily assure you that your fortunes will always be full of interest to me.

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Francesco Berger Esquire

To MR. ELLIS,[†3] 13 JANUARY 1857*

MS Mitchell Library, Sydney.

Tavistock House | Thirteenth January | 1857.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Ellis, and begs to acknowledge the receipt of Mr. Ellis's obliging proposal. He cannot entertain it, however, as he has no intention of sitting to any one. If he had, several friends of his, who are artists, would have a prior claim upon him and would naturally have his preference.

To MRS BROWN, 14 JANUARY 1857

MS Morgan Library. Address: Mrs. Brown | Meadfoot House | Hesketh Crescent | Torquay | Devon.

Tavistock House | Wednesday Fourteenth January | 1857.

My Dear Mrs. Brown.

The letter printed in the little paragraph[†4] I return, is perfectly delightful. The ship is true to her name, and I trust in God will go about the world prosperously, doing good, as long as she floats.[†5] It is one of those exquisitely touching and affecting things that make one smile and cry together.

I do not myself doubt the good result of the enquiry at the Hospital; nor do I, I must add, doubt the gentlemen engaged in it. If there be a conscientious and humane body of men in existence, I am convinced they are to be found among the honorable and upright medical men who have attained eminence in London. Whatsoever I have seen of them has won my utmost respect; and I am all but sure that those of them who are associated with St. George's Hospital can have no desire but to do their duty. Consequently I have a strong trust in their putting this matter right for the future — just as I have in your scholarship helping to raise up worthy successors to them.[†1]

I am delighted to hear that Mr. Marjoribanks[†2] was so much pleased by the Play. Its effect on the three other audiences we have had, has been the same; and I certainly have never seen people so strongly affected by theatrical means. To night is our closing night. By an absurd coincidence three fourths of the Judges I know, preferred this night to another. Please to imagine the Lord Chief Justice,[†3] the Lord Chief Baron,[†4] Mr. Baron Bramwell,[†5] and Mr. Justice Willes,[†6] all sitting on the front row to night, to try the case. Cockburn[†7] the new Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, rather spoils the effect of the absurdity by having been here on Monday. He wouldn't go after the Play, but would come and make speeches at the Green Room Supper. I never saw anything better of its kind than the genuine and hearty way in which, without the least affectation, he shewed his pleasure.

Ever Dear Mrs. Brown | Faithfully Yours

CD.[†8]

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 14 JANUARY 1857†

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Meadfoot House | Hesketh Crescent | Torquay | Devon.

Tavistock House | Wednesday January Fourteenth | 1857.

My Dear Miss Coutts

I was at the Home yesterday, and found the favorable change in the poor girl still continuing. Her constitution is evidently poor and weak, and I doubt her ever entirely recovering. But there seems to be every hope, now, that she will get the better of this attack. She is almost as weak as she can be, but is happy in not suffering, and is very grateful. The impression made by her illness on the rest appears to have been very good, and they have all shewn great sympathy.

You do not send me the note you received from the Hospital.[†9] Neither do I send you my second Memorandum of the circumstances, supposing you not to want it, after having spoken with Mr. Barlow.[†1] I will keep it by me of course. It is not exactly the same as the first, for I dare say I do not remember the exact form and sequence of the words in which I wrote it; but it is, of course, substantially the same.

You may remember my conveying to you in Whitehall Gardens,[†2] my impression of the truth, exactly to the effect of what Mr. Barlow tells you — namely, that there was nothing wrong in the place, and probably nothing wrong in its arrangements, if the officials entrusted with them were properly looked after.

I have received this morning (by the Post which brought me your letter) the enclosed from Clara Novello.[†3] Do you happen to have any sort of presentation available, now or presently, that you think would suit such a case?

We are in a mighty bustle for our closing performance tonight. The impression that the Play has made, has been delightfully strong.[†4] I certainly have never seen Audiences so affected. Your suggestion to Mrs. Dickens I immediately carried out. Your friend now chops down pieces of wood with the letters carved upon them.[†5]

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

To THE COUNTESS GIGLIUCCI, 14 JANUARY 1857*

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

Tavistock House | Wednesday Fourteenth January | 1857.

My Dear Genius

I am afraid Miss Coutts has no presentation that will do for the poor boy.[†6] I have, however, written to her to day (she is at Torquay) asking her if she can do any thing for the case. You shall know her reply, as soon as I receive it. My impression is, that she has no means of help at hand.

What you say of the humility to be learnt from the over-ready acceptance of mediocrity and incapacity, is as true as — your singing. There are few things more discouraging, in the whole round of the Arts.

With my kind regard to Count Gigliucci. Believe me always

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Our Audiences have been excellent, with a wonderful power of crying. We finish tonight.

To THE HON. MRS RICHARD WATSON, 16 JANUARY 1857

MS Huntington Library.

Tavistock House | Sixteenth January 1857.

My Dear Mrs. Watson

Though in the depressed agonies of smashing the Theatre, I must in half a dozen words thank you for your kind note of this morning.

I never can tell you how much I regret your absence. I believe that nothing so complete will ever be done again; and I had made up my mind (and had often said so here), to surprise you — you especially.

My only comfort is, that the dear children may be considered well again. But I shall never separate from the Frozen Deep, the drawback of your not having seen it.

Kind love from all, | Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To LOUIS HACHETTE, 17 JANUARY 1857

MS Librairie Hachette.

Tavistock House, London
Saturday Seventeenth January | 1857

My Dear Sir

I have been so much occupied with other matters since the receipt of your letter, that I have not had time to answer it until to day.[†1] I do so in few words, wishing to avoid the delay of another Post.

Enclosed is the Address to be prefixed to the Translated series, and which you will of course cause to be translated into French.[†2] I hope you will agree with me that it says, briefly, all that is necessary.

Your account of the excellent revision the translations have undergone, gives me great pleasure. I do not doubt that they will be admirably done, after so much care, and under the excellent superintendence of M. Lorain.[†3]

Accept my dear Sir the assurance of my high regard, and Believe me

Always | Yours faithfully

CHARLES DICKENS

Monsieur L. Hachette.

To WILKIE COLLINS, 19 JANUARY 1857

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Monday Nineteenth January | 1857.

My Dear Collins

Will you come and dine here, next Sunday at 5?

There is no one coming but a poor little Scotchman domiciled in America[†1] — a musical composer and singer — who brought me a letter yesterday from New York, and quite moved me by his simple tale of loneliness. He is Davy Roberts,[†2] softened by trouble — with all the starch out of his collar, and all the money out of his Bank.

O reaction, reaction! —

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To THE REV. GEORGE WILKINSON,[†3] 19 JANUARY 1857

MS Texas University Library. Address (The A. Edward Newton Collection, Parke-Bernet Catalogue, 18 Apr 1941): The Reverend George Wilkinson | Rectory | Whicham | Whitehaven.

Tavistock House, London | Nineteenth January 1857.

Dear Sir

I highly esteem your confidence, and wish it were in my power to return any hopeful or useful reply to your enquiry. I cannot, however, offer you any advice on the subject. I hear (as you do) on high and learned authority, that there need no longer be delays in Chancery.[†4] Highly gratifying and convincing perhaps; but if that pestilent Court cannot, or do not, make its own agents do their duty, it is, in my poor opinion, body and soul a Humbug. Against such a dragon I know no remedy but a Saint George.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Reverend George Wilkinson

To WILLIAM TELBIN, 19 JANUARY 1857

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Tavistock House
Monday Evening | Nineteenth January 1857

My Dear Telbin.

It is an odd coincidence that I had actually dipped my pen in the ink to write this note to you, when your note was brought to me. It came quite Providentially, to enable me to give this a new turn. And the turn shall be on the stereoscope glass.

Our servants have been discharged on suspicion of breaking that valuable article, and the Policeman on duty that night has been suspended for the same dread reason. As you appear on your own confession to be the culprit, the sentence of the Court on you is, that you receive from the Court's bookbinder (the Court supposes in about a fortnight) a complete set of the Court's books;[†1] and that you read the same as often as your constitution can possibly bear that punishment without fatal consequences.

Plainly, I have asked my binder to put up a set, in a cheerful serviceable dress that I always use myself; in order that I might have the pleasure of asking you to accept them with my kindest regard. Perhaps you will put the accompanying leaf into one of them.

And believe me that if I lose sight of you soon, the fault shall be yours and not mine. Mrs Dickens, her sister, my daughters, son, everybody, send you their cordial remembrance.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

William Telbin Esquire

To THE REV. CHAUNCY HARE TOWNSHEND, [?19 JANUARY 1857]

Mention in To de Cerjat, 19 Jan 57. Date: probably written the same day.

To W. W. F. DE CERJAT,[†2] [19] JANUARY 1857

MS Berg Collection. Date: CD's mistake; Monday was 19 Jan 57. Address: A Monsieur W. W. F. de Cerjat | Elysée | Lausanne | Switzerland.

Tavistock House, London
Monday Night | Seventeenth January 1857.

My Dear Cerjat.

So wonderfully do good (epistolary) intentions, become confounded with bad execution, that I assure you I laboured under a perfect and most comfortable conviction that I had answered your Christmas Eve letter of 1855. More than that — in spite of your assertion to the contrary, I still strenuously believe that I did so! I have more than half a mind (Little Dorrit and my other occupations notwithstanding), to charge you with having forgotten my reply!! I have even a wild idea that Townshend reproached me, when the last old year was New, with writing to you instead of to him!!! Wait till I come back to Elysée,[†1] and we will argue it out — as well as we can argue any thing without poor dear Haldimand.[†2] In any case, however, don't discontinue your annual letter, because it has become an expected and a delightful part of the season to me.

With one of the prettiest houses in London,[†3] and every conceivable (and inconceivable) luxury in it, Townshend is voluntarily undergoing his own sentence of transportation at Nervi — a beastly little place near Genoa where you would as soon find a herd of wild elephants in any Villa, as Comfort. He has a notion that he must be out of England in the winter; but I believe him to be altogether wrong (as I have just told him in a letter), unless he could take his Society with him.

Talking of Society, two things arise in my mind.

Firstly, when you offered your respected Pastor[†4] that testimonial, why didn't you make it conditional on his lowering his shirt-collar behind? I don't think a man with that article of dress scraping the hair off the crown of his head ought to have a testimonial.

Secondly, workmen are now battering and smashing down my Theatre here, where we have just been acting a new play of great merit, done in what I may call (modestly speaking of the getting-up, and not of the acting), an unprecedented way. I believe that any thing so complete, has never been seen. We had an act at the North Pole, where the slightest and greatest thing the eye beheld, were equally taken from the books of the Polar Voyagers.[†5] Out of 30 people, there were certainly not 2 who might not have gone straight to the North Pole itself, completely furnished for the winter. It has been the talk of all London for these three weeks. And now it is a mere chaos of scaffolding, ladders, beams, canvass, paint pots, sawdust, artificial snow, gas pipes, and ghastliness. I have taken such pains with it for these ten weeks in all my leisure hours, that I feel, now, shipwrecked — as if I had never been without a Play on my hands, before.

A third topic comes up, as this ceases.

Down at Gad's Hill near Rochester in Kent — Shakespeare's Gad's Hill, where Falstaff engaged in the robbery[†6] — is a quaint little country house of Queen Anne's time.[†7] I happened to be walking past it, a year and a half or so ago, with my Sub Editor of Household Words,[†8] when I said to him "You see that house? It has always a curious interest for me, because, when I was a small boy down in these parts, I thought it the most beautiful house (I suppose because of its famous old Cedar Trees) ever seen. And my poor father used to bring me to look at it, and used to say that if I ever grew up to be a clever man, perhaps I might own that house, or such another house. In remembrance of which, I have always in passing, looked to see if it was to be sold or let; and it has never been to me like any other house, and it has never changed at all." We came back to town, and my friend went out to dinner. Next morning he came to me in great excitement, and said, "It is written that you were to have that house at Gad's Hill. The lady[†1] I had allotted to me to take down to dinner yesterday began to speak of that neighbourhood. 'You know it?' I said 'I have been there to day'. 'O yes', said she, 'I know it very well; I was a child there, in the house they call Gad's Hill Place. My father was the Rector, and lived there many years.[†2] He is just dead, has left it to me, and I want to sell it'. So," says the Sub Editor, "you must buy it. Now or never!" — I did, and hope to pass next Summer there; though I may perhaps let it afterwards, furnished, from time to time.

All about myself, I find, and the little sheet nearly full! But I know, my dear Cerjat, the subject will have its interest for you. So I give it its swing. Mrs. Watson was to have been at the Play, but most unfortunately had three children sick of Gastric Fever, and couldn't leave them. James[†3] was here. She was here herself some three weeks before, looking extremely well in the face but rather thin. — I have not heard of your friend Mr. Percival Skelton; but I much misdoubt an Amateur Artist's success in this vast place.[†4] — I hope you detected a remembrance of our happy visit to the Great St. Bernard, in a certain No. of Little Dorrit?[†5] Tell Mrs. Cerjat[†6] with my love, that the opinions I there expressed to her on the subject of Cows, have become matured in my mind by experience and venerable age; and that I denounce the race as Humbugs — who have been getting into Poetry and all sorts of places, without the smallest reason. The best thing they do, is Shoeing-Horns, and those you can make of brass — to say nothing of Gutta Percha. — Haldimand's housekeeper is an awful woman to consider. Pray give him our kindest regard and remembrance, if you ever find him in a mood to take it. "Our" means, Mrs Dickens's, Georgina's, and mine. We often, often, talk of our old days at Lausanne, and send loving regard to Mrs. Cerjat and all your house. We saw Miss Forbes's[†7] death in the Paper. She wasn't half [†a]old enough, I thought. Adieu my dear fellow. Ever Cordially Yours CD.[†a]

To JOHN FORSTER, [20 JANUARY 1857]

Extract in F, VIII, i, 628. Date: 20 Jan 57, according to Forster.

He described the workmen smashing the last atoms of the theatre.

To THE REV. EDWARD TAGART, 20 JANUARY 1857

MS Berg Collection.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Night | Twentieth January 1857

My Dear Mr. Tagart.

All that is personal to me and mine in your affectionate note, is so delightfully earnest, that I cannot refrain from thanking you for it and telling you that I know it has given me exactly the pleasure you designed it to convey. It gratified me exceedingly to hear from Mrs. Dickens that you were evidently pleased and moved by the Play. I had hoped to shake hands with you when I came upstairs, and that was the best substitute you could have left behind. Of course it (I come to the Play again) was a great trouble, but a labor of love. I very much doubt, apart from its being a lesson in patience, order, punctuality, and perseverance; and being a bond of union among all concerned; whether (so prepared and done) it is not about the best training in Art and respect for Art, that my young people could receive. When we do another ("when will that be, says the bell of Step-ney!")[†1] I should like you to see the preliminary process, and judge for yourself.

Now to Mrs. Williams.[†2] Let me say to you, in the perfect confidence I may impose upon you, that I am not at all likely, with my own concurrence, to see her. I do not believe that narrative. I unhesitatingly say to you that I do not believe it. Even allowing for some large suppression, I still do not believe it. I recommend you to be extremely cautious. I know of three incredible women, either of whom might be this person; one of whom I strongly suspect to be this person. Mind! I never saw any of these particular statements before, and have no direct reason (but their own want of basis and coherence) for discrediting them. It is true that I never heard the faintest reference from Macready to any such lady; but that might be, and her story might still be strictly true. But, in the case of the particular female monstrosity to whom I have specially referred, there were characteristics exactly answering to those which have interested you; and there was a narrative, in its general features sufficiently like this (to one, as I am, in the habit of constructing fictions and curiously watching them), to awaken great suspicion. You have here my whole reasons for recommending you to be very careful. They are twofold. First, as I might mistrust a strong personal likeness to a bad person, I mistrust the strong general resemblance I perceive here to a bad case, in which Forgery was one of the commonest elements. Secondly, if I had met with this lithographed narrative anywhere, I should have said, "On the face of it, highly suspicious and extremely improbable."

This is for your own guidance and self-restraining if you think right, — and it may be all wrong. I would write it to few other people. If with this caution any new circumstances of doubt should come before you — let me know what it is, and it may piece into my previous knowledge.

Ever Faithfully Yours

CD.

P.S. My eye falls on the Lithograph as I fold this note.

Do you know the "London Bank Threadneedle Street",[†1] where "the Memorial with the Government Endorsement" is to be seen? I don't.

Do you know of any state of the English law which, proving Bigamy against Mr. Seymour, would have failed to nullify the second marriage? — I don't.

Do you see any sort of allusion to the friends to whom she "fled" in March 1849 — or to the place where she lived as Mr. Seymour's wife — or to the place from which she married — or to the situation of her property which he nefariously got hold of — or to the means by which she gained, either her "terrible suspicion" or her "dreadful certainty" within seven days of her marriage — or any tangible reference to "the many eminent persons" in England and France, who know her history? Have you ever been face to face with one such, who can vouch for it?

To MRS MORGAN,[†2] 21 JANUARY 1857

MS Charles W. Traylen.

Tavistock House | Twenty First January 1857.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mrs Charles Morgan, and begs to express his regret that her letter is one of an incredible number, in reference to which he can only assure the writers that he is unable to serve the objects in which they are benevolently interested, and that he will respect their confidence.

To W. J. ADAMS,[†3] 28 JANUARY 1857*

Facsimile in B. Altman & Co. catalogue.

Tavistock House | Wednesday Twenty Eighth January | 1857

Dear Sir

Allow me to thank you for your very obliging note which I have received with much pleasure, and for the very useful London Guide and Hand Book accompanying it.[†4] Such a volume was much wanted and will, I have no doubt, be extensively purchased.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

William James Adams Esquire

To THOMAS BEARD, 28 JANUARY 1857

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Place | Edgeware Road | W.

Tavistock House | Wednesday Twenty Eighth January 1857

My Dear Beard

Will you "make a note,"[†1] to the effect that you dine with me on my Birthday, Saturday Week the 7th. of February? I will let you know whether we dine at Gravesend[†2] or at home here: which will mainly depend on the weather. In the first-named contingency, how is the foot?

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON,[†3] 28 JANUARY 1857

MS Lytton Papers.

Tavistock House | Wednesday Twenty Eighth January | 1857.

My Dear Bulwer

Hachettes gave me £350 for my consent to a complete translation of my books to this time.[†4] And they are to have the same right in respect of forthcoming books (if they choose to claim it), at the rate of £40 each. They are a very large house, and have a place of business, over the water in old Paris,[†5] quite as extensive, I should say, as Longmans.[†6]

I thought Wills had told you as to the Guild[†7] (for I begged him to), that we can do absolutely nothing until our Charter is 7 years old. It is the stringent and express prohibition of the Act of Parliament[†8] — for which things you Members, thank God, are responsible and not I. When I observed this clause (which was just as we were going to grant a pension, if we could agree on a good subject), I caused our counsel's opinion to be taken on it. And there is not a doubt about it. I immediately recommended that there should be no expences — that the interest on the Capital should be all invested as it accrued — that the chambers should be given up and the Clerk discharged — and that the Guild should have the use of the household Words office rent free, and the services of Wills on the same terms. All of which was done.

A letter is now copying, to be sent round to all the Members, explaining, with the New Year, the whole state of the thing. You will receive this. It appears to me that it looks wholesome enough. But if a strong Idiot comes and binds your hands, or mine, or both, for 7 years, what is to be done against him?

As to greater matters than this, however — as to all matters on the face of this teeming earth — it appears to me that the House of Commons and Parliament altogether, is just the dreariest failure and nuisance that ever bothered this much bothered world.

Ever Yours

CD.

I duly forwarded your letter to the Secretary of the Dramatic Authors.[†1]

To W. C. MACREADY, 28 JANUARY 1857

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Twenty Eighth January 1857

My Dearest Macready

Your friend and servant is as calm as Pecksniff, saving for his knitted brows now turning into cordage over Little Dorrit.[†2] The Theatre has disappeared, the house is restored to its usual condition of order, the family are tranquil and domestic, dove-eyed Peace[†3] is enthroned in this Study, fire-eyed Radicalism[†4] in its master's breast.

Mrs. Meredith's[†5] paper[†6] I retain for insertion. There is nothing in it very new, but it is very agreeable.

I am glad to hear that our Poetess is at work again; and shall be very much pleased to have some more contributions from her.

Love from all, to your dear sister, and to Katie, and to all the house.

We dined yesterday at Frederick Pollock's.[†7] I begged an amazing Photograph of you, and brought it away. It strikes me as one of the most ludicrous things I ever saw in my life. I think of taking a Public-House, and having it copied large, for the Sign. You may remember it? Very square and big — the Saracen's Head with its hair cut — and in modern gear? Staring very much? — As your particular friend I would not part with it on any consideration. I could never get such a wooden head again.

Ever Affectionately

CD

To MARK LEMON, 29 JANUARY 1857*

MS Fales Collection, New York University Library.

Tavistock House | Thursday Twenty Ninth January | 1857

My Dear Mark

I enclose a cheque (crossed) for Nathan.[†1] Will you let him put a receipt stamp to his bill, and then send it to me.

There is a little bill for skins,[†2] which you kindly ordered. Will you let me know its amount?

Ever affectionately

CD.

To THE MEMBERS OF THE GUILD OF LITERATURE AND ART, [LATE JANUARY 1857]

Mention in To Lytton, 28 Jan 57; the original letter surely written by CD. Date: shortly after that letter.

February

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, [?1-2 FEBRUARY 1857]

Mention in To Tagart, 4 Feb. Date: before Tagart's call on 3 Feb.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 3 FEBRUARY 1857

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Meadfoot House | Hesketh Crescent | Torquay | Devon.

Tavistock House | Tuesday February Third, 1857

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I have no doubt that your excellent interposition will cause the Hospital to manage these sad matters (clearly, I take it, mismanaged before), in a better way.†3 But I am sorry in the letter to you which I now return, to observe, either carelessness or dishonesty. I recollect my written summary distinctly. And I do most positively declare — not only that it did not represent Mrs. Bragg†4 to have seen the body in the Hospital — which she plainly stated to me she did not — but, in so many clear words, described it to have been seen by the two men, who, after having dressed it as they best could, took it to her. In such a case as this, of all others, there is no defence for carelessness, and it is excessively suspicious. If I were conducting the case, I would most decidedly put them in the wrong on their own Resolution and make them acknowledge it. I don't say you should do so — your position being so different — but I would allow no body of men on earth to deal so grossly with me as to make their own misrepresentation and then coolly contradict it as mine. I have never seen a worse thing of this kind in my life. The connexion of the word "exaggerated" with the only hint in its support — that is, that Mrs. Bragg never saw the body — which you never represented that she did — is Old Bailey from the crown of its head to the sole of its foot — or, untidy and slipshod muddling.

I will go to the Bishop of Exeter†1 on Monday Morning; until when, my mornings will be occupied. Publicly, I think he has done about as much harm to real Christian brotherhood and good will, by his uniform conduct since he has been a Bishop,†2 as any mere mortal man could well do in his life time. Privately, I can of course have no other feeling towards him than that you commend him,†3 and that is enough. I will explain everything to him with my utmost pains.†4

(I find the foregoing two sides and a half, have a savage aspect! I now subside into ethereal mildness.)

The drainage at Shepherd's Bush has got all at once into such a dreadful condition, fraught with so much danger of sickness to the Inmates, that I was obliged on Saturday, after referring the matter to the Builder, to give him directions for going to work to remove the evil, instantly. I was really afraid to wait, to refer the matter to you (the parlor had then become uninhabitable, and the whole house was fast becoming so); and I knew besides, that it must unfortunately be done. I am going out there to day, to see how they are getting on.

I read your letter at breakfast (with great gravity and a general rustic sensation which I associated with the field and a vague idea of a syllabub in the garden), to the effect that "Mr. Tennent[†5] will probably speak about a COW."[†6] Coming shortly afterwards to an unknown girl in the country (otherwise unintroduced) I found it was Case.[†7]

I don't know who wrote the African articles in the Times;[†1] but I will enquire, and tell you. Without at all disparaging Dr. Livingstone[†2] or in the least doubting his facts, I think however that his deductions must be received with great caution. The history of all African effort, hitherto, is a history of wasted European life, squandered European money, and blighted European hope — in which the generous English have borne a great share. That it would be a great thing to cultivate that cotton and be independant of America, no one can doubt; but I think that happy end, with all its attendant good results, must be sought in India. There are two tremendous obstacles in Africa; one, the climate; the other, the people.

It rejoices me to hear such good news of Nova Scotia.[†3]

With kind regard to Mrs. Brown, Ever Dear Miss Coutts. Most Faithfully Yours CD.

P.S. The wildest legends are circulating about town, to the effect that the Queen proposes to ask to have the Frozen Deep at Windsor.[†4] I have heard nothing of it otherwise, but slink about, holding my breath. — Please don't say any thing about fine weather, when you write. It is too much to bear.

To THE COUNTESS GIGLIUCCI, 3 FEBRUARY 1857

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds. Envelope (MS Dickens House) Countess Gigliucci | Great Western Hotel | Paddington. PM Feb 1857

Tavistock House | Tuesday Third February | 1857

My Dear Countess Gigliucci

I ought to have told you that Miss Coutts immediately replied (as indeed I knew beforehand), that she had no vacant presentation of any kind which she could give to "Poor Richard."[†5]

May he succeed in his new effort! But there is so much of electioneering, canvassing, and rushing about red hot, in all these things, that I have no faith in their solidity.

With kind regard to Count Gigliucci. Believe me always

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To THE REV. EDWARD TAGART, 4 FEBRUARY 1857

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Fourth February 1857

My Dear Mr. Tagart

I was very sorry to miss you yesterday. — Had my Seven league boots on, and was striding over the frosty country.

I had already received and answered a note from this gentleman. I told him that the pressure of my own avocations would not admit of my complying, and, more than that, that I am not going, and have not within these five years had the faintest intention of going, to that dreary old Bath for any purpose under the Sun.[†1]

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Rev. Edward Tagart.

To THOMAS BEARD, 5 FEBRUARY 1857

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Place | Edgeware Road | W.

Tavistock House | Thursday Fifth February 1857

My Dear Beard

The weather being so severe, we will dine here on Saturday. Hour, 6. Best wine on the premises (and that "not bad," as Mitton says) to be broached on the occasion.

Ever Faithfully
CD

To MESSRS BRADBURY & EVANS, 5 FEBRUARY 1857

MS Dickens House.

Tavistock House | Thursday February Fifth 1857

Dear B and E.

I find an odd mistake in the last No. which none of us observed, and which nobody seems to have discovered yet.[†2] — I shouldn't have done so, I think, but that I have been working today on that part of the story. It is explained on the other side, which we must have printed as a slip for the next No.[†3] Will you have the corrections made immediately in the type, if standing? If not, in the stereotype plates?[†4]

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To WILKIE COLLINS, 5 FEBRUARY 1857

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Thursday Fifth February 1857.

My Dear Collins.

The weather being so severe, we will dine here on Saturday. Hour, 6.

I was at the Garrick on Monday. Comes De Bathe[†1] and says to me, "So you are going to Windsor!" — "Am I? — I know nothing about it." — "Pardon me! I mean, with the Frozen Deep" — "Well! I tell you I know nothing about it." — "Pardon me again," said he, "I can only say that I have been at the Court, and that I heard it from the Court's own people. Further; the Queen has a strong idea of following it up with some of the Crimean Amateur Performances,[†2] by the Divisional Officers who played there" — "I can only assure you," I repeated, "that I know nothing about it."

An idea has come into my head that they may be waiting to close the Professional Windsor Season, and get rid of Kean[†3] — that then the Queen may mean to lie by for her confinement[†4] — and that then the Amateur Plays may be designed for a season at Easter.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To FREDERICK DICKENS, 5 FEBRUARY 1857

MS Free Library and Museum, Welshpool.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS,
Thursday Fifth February 1857.

My Dear Frederick

I am sorry to be obliged to reply to you as before.

I cannot lend you the £30. Firstly because I cannot trust you, and because your bad faith with Wills and Austin makes the word "lend" an absurdity.[†5] Secondly because if this were otherwise it would do you no real good and would not in the least save you against creditors who have already power of taking you in execution.

Affectionately

CD.[†6]

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 6 FEBRUARY 1857

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Meadfoot House | Hesketh Crescent | Torquay | Devon.

Tavistock House | Friday Sixth February 1857.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

No. I won't look upon it in extremis,[†1] — but I have an indignant objection to any thing like unfair dealing, which puts my blood up to boiling point. A blow would not incense me more than a shuffle.

I knew of Mrs. Bragg's having offered the money, but wholly separated it from the Hospital treatment of the Dead, because it had nothing to do with it. If you had connected the two things, they would instantly have told you that they had no connexion.

The drainage is distinctly our business (I am sorry to say), the main drain being provided. What is being done will cost, according to estimate, from Thirty to Forty Pounds. But I am pretty sure that when you see what it is, you will think the money well spent. We must have had illness without it. It is surprising that some obstinate disorder had not already broken out.

The gas is now at the gate. Would you like it taken into the house? The expense will be the usual fittings and nothing more. If we had it at all, I would recommend a jet in the fanlight, kitchen, wash-house, bathroom, over the chimney piece in each bedroom. Then, no light would ever be carried about the house. Just as we do here.

Between ourselves, I too should feel a little jealous of our own speciality if it should turn out that the Queen resolves to make that request. I know now, that she strongly entertains the idea. However, I should of course stipulate for as complete mastery and inaccessibility on the stage, as if we were at home — and should put a cheerful and dutiful face on the matter. Mr. Collins would like it very much, thinking it would express to the Theatres that they are not doing their duty, and that their noble Art is sliding away from them. He is of course a great consideration, and, knowing his feeling, I am ready with my reply if I should have occasion to give one.

With love to Mrs. Brown

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

To MISS MARY BOYLE, 7 FEBRUARY 1857

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Seventh February 1857

My Dear Mary

Half a dozen words on this my Birthday, to thank you for your kind and welcome remembrance, and to assure you that your Joseph is proud of it.

For about ten minutes after his death — on each occasion of that event occurring — Richard Wardour was in a floored condition. And one night, to the great terror of Devonshire, the Arctic Regions, and Newfoundland, (all of which localities were afraid to speak to him as his Ghost sat by the kitchen fire in its rags), he very nearly did what he never did — went and fainted off, dead — again. But he always plucked up, on the turn of ten minutes,[†1] and became facetious.

Likewise he chipped great pieces out of all his limbs (solely, as I imagine, from moral earnestness and concussion of passions, for I never knew him to hit himself in any way), and terrified Aldersley[†2] to that degree by lungeing at him to carry him into the Cave, and the said Aldersley always shook like a mould of jelly, and muttered "By G — this is an awful thing!"

Ever affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

I shall never cease to regret Mrs. Watson's not having been there.

To W. H. WILLS, 7 FEBRUARY 1857*

MS Huntington Library.

Tavistock House | Seventh February 1857

My Dear Wills.

A touch of simple manly gratitude, fresh from the honest and overcharged heart, is so delightful in this world, that I am sure you will like to see the enclosed.[†3]

Pray keep it, and when you see Austin shew it to him. (I need not say that there was nothing in my letter but the plain declaration of the reason for being obliged to repeat my refusal.)

Ever Faithfully
CD.

To MARK LEMON, 8 FEBRUARY 1857

Extract in Dickens Exhibition, New Dudley Gallery catalogue, 1909; MS 1 p.; addressed Mark Lemon; dated Tavistock House, 8 Feb 57.

Stanny will order the dinner.... Will you secure a box for the Adelphi.[†4]

To THE REV. JAMES WHITE, 8 FEBRUARY 1857

Text from MDGH, II, 11-12.

Tavistock House, Sunday, Feb. 8th, 1857.

My dear White,

I send these lines by Mary and Katey, to report my love to all.

Your note about the Golden Mary gave me great pleasure; though I don't believe in one part of it; for I honestly believe that your story,[†1] as really belonging to the rest of the narrative, had been generally separated from the other stories, and greatly liked. I had not that particular shipwreck that you mention in my mind (indeed I doubt if I know it), and John Steadiman merely came into my head as a staunch sort of name that suited the character.[†2] The number has done "Household Words" great service, and has decidedly told upon its circulation.

You should have come to the play. I much doubt if anything so complete will ever be seen again. An incredible amount of pains and ingenuity was expended on it, and the result was most remarkable even to me.

When are you going to send something more to H. W.?[†3] Are you lazy?? Low-spirited??? Pining for Paris????

Ever affectionately
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To MRS WILLS, 8 FEBRUARY 1857

MS Huntington Library.

Tavistock House | Eighth February 1857

My Dear Mrs. Wills

Pray accept my cordial thanks for your elegant little present.[†4] It has a treble value to me. Firstly as a mark of your remembrance. Secondly, as replacing a loss that I have much regretted. Thirdly, as a gift from Nurse Esther, and an association with the pleasant times in which I made that worthy woman's acquaintance, and conveyed to her previously benighted mind the complete assurance that I am not a Dragon, but a villified Lamb. (Note. An L too many in the last word but one.)

Believe me always | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To W. H. WILLS, 9 FEBRUARY 1857

MS Huntington Library.

Tavistock House | Monday Night | Ninth February 1857

My Dear Wills.

Will you be so kind as to make an explanation to the India House for me? I get so mobbed if I go to a place of that sort myself, that I ask the favor. I did not know of the necessity when you were here to day.

Walter Landor Dickens, being now of an age[†1] to go up to be examined for a Direct Appointment as a Cadet to which he is nominated, (the Director nominating him, being, as I remember, Mr. Lock),[†2] the business merely is to ask for his necessary papers. I suppose the Secretary's office to be the right one; but the name Walter sends me this evening as the name of the gentleman to be asked for, is Mr. Hollyer.[†3]

It is a mere matter of form. Walter is going up in about a fortnight. He is now with Messrs. Brackenbury and Wynne at Wimbledon[†4] (if that be anything to the purpose). The papers are wanted, I believe, directly — or at all events should be applied for directly.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?9 FEBRUARY 1857]

Extract in F, VIII, i, 626. Date: shortly after 5 Feb while working on proof of Ch. 20 (No. XVI), published 28 Feb 57.

I don't see the practicability of making the History of a Self-Tormentor, with which I took great pains, a written narrative. But I do see the possibility of making it a chapter by itself,[†5] which might enable me to dispense with the necessity of the turned commas. Do you think that would be better? I have no doubt that a great part of Fielding's reason for the introduced story, and Smollett's also, was, that it is sometimes really impossible to present, in a full book, the idea it contains (which yet it may be on all accounts desirable to present), without supposing the reader to be possessed of almost as much romantic allowance as would put him on a level with the writer.[†1] In Miss Wade I had an idea, which I thought a new one, of making the introduced story so fit into surroundings impossible of separation from the main story, as to make the blood of the book circulate through both. But I can only suppose, from what you say, that I have not exactly succeeded in this.[†2]

To HABLOT K. BROWNE, 10 FEBRUARY 1857*

MS Berg Collection.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Tenth February 1857

My Dear Browne.

In the dinner scene,[†3] it is highly important that Mr. Dorrit should not be too comic. He is too comic now. He is described in the text as "shedding tears", and what he imperatively wants, is an expression doing less violence in the reader's mind to what is going to happen to him, and much more in accordance with that serious end which is so close before him.[†4]

Pray do not neglect this change.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

Over

LETTERING FOR THE SUBJECTS.

An unexpected After-Dinner Speech.

The Night.[†5]

To J. WESTLAND MARSTON,[†6] 11 FEBRUARY 1857*

MS Huntington Library.

Tavistock House | Wednesday Eleventh February | 1857.

My Dear Marston

A thousand thanks for your note. I am unfortunately obliged to dine out on Saturday, or I should have accepted the enclosed[†7] with great interest and pleasure. The underlining in the bill had not escaped me, and was not dissociated in my mind from the old remembrances of the Patrician's Daughter.[†1] I still hope, of course, to see the Play; but I am very sorry to miss the first night.

Believe me | Very faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Westland Marston Esquire

To JOHN FORSTER [?13 FEBRUARY 1857]

Extracts in F, VIII, i, 630*n*; VIII, i, 629 and 629*n*. Date: first extract 13 Feb, day of visit to Zoo (see To Miss Coutts, 14 Feb); next extracts both same letter in Feb according to Forster, and probably same date, just after Gad's Hill visit on 12 Feb with Wills.[†2]

I have been (by mere accident) seeing the serpents fed to-day, with the live birds, rabbits, and guinea pigs — a sight so very horrible that I cannot get rid of the impression, and am, at this present, imagining serpents coming up the legs of the table, with their infernal flat heads, and their tongues like the Devil's tail (evidently taken from that model, in the magic lanterns and other such popular representations), elongated for dinner. I saw one small serpent, whose father was asleep, go up to a guinea pig (white and yellow, and with a gentle eye — every hair upon him erect with horror); corkscrew himself on the tip of his tail; open a mouth which couldn't have swallowed the guinea pig's nose; dilate a throat which wouldn't have made him a stocking; and show him what his father meant to do with him when he came out of that ill-looking Hookah into which he had resolved himself. The guinea pig backed against the side of the cage — said "I know it, I know it!" — and his eye glared and his coat turned wiry, as he made the remark. Five small sparrows crouching together in a little trench at the back of the cage, peeped over the brim of it, all the time; and when they saw the guinea pig give it up, and the young serpent go away looking at him over about two yards and a quarter of shoulder, struggled which should get into the innermost angle and be seized last. Everyone of them then hid his eyes in another's breast, and then they all shook together like dry leaves — as I daresay they may be doing now, for old Hookah was as dull as laudanum.... Please to imagine two small serpents, one beginning on the tail of a white mouse, and one on the head, and each pulling his own way, and the mouse very much alive all the time, with the middle of him madly writhing.

Announcing that he had taken possession of God's Hill Place and subscribing himself as the Kentish Freeholder on his native heath, his name Protection.[†3]

You remember little Wieland[†4] who did grotesque demons so well. Did you ever hear how he died? He lay very still in bed with the life fading out of him — suddenly sprung out of it, threw what is professionally called a flip-flap,[†5] and fell dead on the floor.

To WILKIE COLLINS, 14 FEBRUARY 1857

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Fourteenth February 1857

My Dear Collins

Will you come and dine at the office on Thursday at 1/2 past 5. We will then discuss the Brighton or other trip-possibilities. I am tugging at my Oar too — should like a change — find the Galley a little heavy[†1] — must stick to it — am generally in a Collinsian state.[†2]

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 14 FEBRUARY 1857

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Fourteenth February 1857

My Dear Miss Coutts

I have the necessary form of certificates to fill in before Walter goes up for his examination; and it seems to me that you are the proper person to fill up The First on the 3rd. page of this form. Will you do so, if you see no objection? I was going to fill it up myself, and had almost written on it, when — reading it again — it appeared to me that I ought to ask you.[†3] You will see that the first blank in the certificate is for the Presidency.[†4]

Yesterday at the Zoological Gardens I saw (accidentally, for I had no idea of such a thing until I got into the room), the Serpents being fed with live birds, Guinea Pigs, rabbits, &c. A most horrible spectacle, and I have ever since been turning the legs of all the tables and chairs into Serpents and seeing them feed upon all possible and impossible small creatures.

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Yours faithfully & affecy.

CD.

To ANTHONY PANIZZI, 14 FEBRUARY 1857

Extract in A Collection of Autograph Letters and Historical Documents formed by Alfred Morrison (2nd Series, 1882-93), 1896, III, 120; MS 2 pp.; addressed Panizzi; dated Tavistock House, 14 Feb 57.

Dear Sir,

Pray excuse the trouble I am going to give you in asking you to read this short note.

A young man who has a claim on my recommendation has some special assurance that I don't know how many scores of assistants will be wanted this spring some time at the Museum. He was a servant of mine for some years, but left me in consequence of a surgical disorder, which rendered it dangerous for him to be always skirmishing from the top of the house to the bottom. He is under thirty, sharp, well accustomed to public ways and public men, knows something of French, has seen a good deal of the world with his late master, and I can strongly recommend him.[†1]

To HENRY AUSTIN, 15 FEBRUARY 1857*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Sunday Fifteenth February | 1857.

My Dear Henry

I take the opportunity of a few spare minutes, to write you a short yarn concerning Gad's Hill Place. Wills and I were down there, this last Thursday.

Mr. Hindle the old Rector says that the builder in the neighbourhood of whom he hears the best account (though he has never had occasion to employ him, himself) is Naylor of Strood.[†2] As you spoke of enquiring about the repute of some neighbouring Professor, perhaps you will bear this artist in mind. The advantage of employing a Strood man (all other things being equal) is, that it is the nearest place.

It occurs to me that if we could decide upon our man, it would be a good plan, as tending to fill his mind with a solemn sense of his responsibilities, if you were to write to him, asking him if he would be disposed to attend us at the house on the 26th. of March, with a view to the immediate preparation of an estimate of the probable cost of the necessary repairs, and (that being agreed upon), the immediate execution of the work. The Drainage I suppose must have an estimate to itself, as we can not tell what is wanted, until it is all laid open. But the preparations for painting and papering, and the raising of the Roof 6 feet (the roof itself seems to be in want of great repair) could all be going on at the same time as the Drainage. And the great point is, to arrange for everything being done at once, out of hand, and got rid of.

Or, if you should think it better, we might, after you had chosen the builder, make an appointment with Mr. Hindle for going through the house with him and checking off the things to be done, so that (if you approved of his estimate) his man might get to work on the 26th. of March. Perhaps this would be the preferable course. I think if you would make the builder, whoever he shall be, come and see you first, before he goes into the house at all, and distinctly understand that if he is chosen to do the work it is to be done without pause or postponement (any taste of Circumlocution being inadmissible), we shall fall-to, at a great advantage. The whole business ought to be disposed of in 6 weeks — don't you think so? And it will be an immense thing for the garden and its summer appearance and enjoyment, to get the workmen out before the Spring is far advanced.

I have begun the furnishing, and have already bought a good many things at a very fair advantage, by picking them up wherever I see them — sending John to buy them as if for himself — and permitting him to bring them away ignobly, in Vans, Cabs, barrows, trucks, and costermonger's trays. If you should meet such a thing as a Mahogany dining table or two marble washing-stands, in a donkey cart anywhere, or in a cats'-meat cart or any conveyance of that kind, you may be sure the property is mine. Or any shabby man with a porter's knot and a gigantic Crown of legs of chairs upon it, will be on his way here.

Ever Affectionately

CD.

To W. W. F. DE CERJAT, 16 FEBRUARY 1857

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: Affranchie | William. F. De Cerjat Esqre. | Elysée | Lausanne | Switzerland.

Tavistock House, London | Sixteenth February 1857

My Dear Cerjat.

A hasty line after my day's work. You are quite right. Always knowing the man in my own mind by his real name of Rigaud, I made the mistake. I observed it very soon, but not soon enough to correct it in the first large issue for the month, though it was immediately set right in the stereotype plates. Also, a notice has been printed for issue with the next No. explaining the error.[†1]

Ah! I wish you had seen the Play! Though I say it as shouldn't, I am pretty sure nothing so complete was ever seen before, or will ever be seen again.

I hear very frequently from Townshend. He is pretty well, but evidently lonely out there[†2] — and no wonder.

Kindest loves from all mine to all yours.

Ever Heartily Yours | My Dear Cerjat,

CHARLES DICKENS

To THOMAS PHINN,[†3] 17 FEBRUARY 1857

MS Gresham's School, Holt.

Tavistock House | Seventeenth February 1857

My Dear Sir

Allow me to thank you for your letter, and to assure you that you did not need any recalling to my remembrance.

As I had not heard of the application, I made some enquiry about it on receiving your favor. It comes from the second son[†1] of the late Magistrate, and I have not the slightest hesitation in thoroughly recommending him. A'Beckett was remarkably careful and conscientious in the training of his boys. They have been exceedingly well educated, and well brought up in all respects.[†2] I do not doubt that this young man is much above the average, and would do great credit to the service.

My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Phinn Esquire.

To W. M. THACKERAY, 17 FEBRUARY 1857

Mention in Henry Hellssen catalogue, Copenhagen, Jan 1958; MS 1 p.; addressed W. M. Thackeray; dated Tavistock House, 17 Feb 57. Address: W. M. Thackeray Esquire | Onslow Square | Brompton | S. W. PM Feb 57.

Recommending a former valet.[†3]

To FRANK STONE, 18 FEBRUARY 1857*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House
Wednesday Night | Eighteenth February 1857.

My Dear Stone

I send you on the other side, the counterpart of a Memorandum of the estate disbursements[†4] for this last year, which I am now sending to Mr. Powell.[†5]

We never see anything of you. Can you and Mrs. Stone[†6] and the namesake of my deceased heroine,[†7] come and dine with us on Sunday — alone — at 5? We will have no one here, and will dine off roots and water. Say yes — unless one of your Corner banquets should happen to be coming off on that day, and the Burton air[†8] should be intended to be laden with the steams of Epicurean cookery.

Ever affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

— VIII - 286 —

	£	s	D
One third of gardener's contract half yearly charge for front court, extra the purchase of five new lime trees at 7/- each	1.	19.	4
One third of gardener's contract half yearly charge for front enclosure	1.	5.	0
One third of painter's bill for "preparing and painting quadrangle railings, piers, and gates, and re-writing names"	3.	0.	10
	£6.	5.	2

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 20 FEBRUARY 1857

Mention in Christie's catalogue, July 1974.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 21 FEBRUARY 1857*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Meadfoot House | Hesketh Crescent | Torquay | Devon.

Tavistock House
Twenty First February 1857 | Saturday

My Dear Miss Coutts

A hasty line before the Post goes out. Will you be so kind as to return me Walter's paper,[†1] for it is wanted and they press me for it.

Ever Faithfully & affYours
CD.

To THOMAS BEARD, 24 FEBRUARY 1857

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | 41 Portman Square | Edgeware Road | W.

Tavistock House
Tuesday Night | Twenty Fourth February 1857.

My Dear Beard

I had heard of the first calamity,[†2] but not of the second.[†3] Your letter is a painful surprise to me in so far as it concerns your own treatment — if I can say, without making an Ass of myself, that any thing would surprise me in that association.

If Saturday evening will suit you equally well, let me propose that we dine at the Garrick at 6. We will be alone of course. A glass of good wine may take the taste of that Scum out of our mouths — and it must be pretty strong in yours by this time. If this should not suit you, of course I am at your disposal in the morning of the same day; but the evening is better, as being more like one of our old Saturdays. Write me just a word in reply.

I went down yesterday to look at your country quarters.[†1] I said when I came home at night, that they would set you up; and now I feel that they are fresh enough — Ah! even to get you in training for another Baldwin — if there should be another in reserve for the sons of men and Holy Church.

Don't be cast down. Cheer up, and you will soon be the better for this. I F I W E R E Y O U , I W O U L D A B O V E A L L T H I N G S L E A V E A C A R D F O R D E L A N E[† 2] W I T H O U T A D A Y ' S D E L A Y .[†3] You need do no more, — but do that.

Ever Heartily CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 24 FEBRUARY 1857†

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Meadfoot House | Hesketh Crescent | Torquay | Devon.

Tavistock House
Twenty Fourth February 1857 | Tuesday Night.

My Dear Miss Coutts

When do you want to publish the Summary?[†4] I ask, because it requires revision for the Press (that is, according to the Printer's habits) entirely through the Preface. You put your corrections in the text, and we always put them in the Margin; besides which, your additions require every one to be introduced in another way, so that the Printer may understand them at a glance. I should like to have a morning at this; but cannot get one just at this moment, as I am obliged to work at Little Dorrit. Can you let me keep it — say, until the 6th. or 7th. of March? I could then return it, so that it would be mere A B C to a printer.

In page 8 as to the Missing Calculation, there is no difficulty. I think, I have taken out all reference to such a Calculation, but have left in, all that refers to the principle.[†5] The passage has legs of its own, and is really not much weakened.

I see no objection to the present arrangement of the 3 parts.[†6]

— VIII - 288 —

I would put Mr. Newman's letter[†1] exactly in his own words and way.

As to the Record,[†2] I cannot too strongly express my sympathy with your opinion. It is a shameful practice that you justly object to, and one which ought to be steadily and inexorably discountenanced. I would by no means send them the book.

I am so addle-headed tonight after a long day's work, that I am not quite sure I see this paper. So I will only add, pray don't let any body alter J. Newman. He is an honest fellow, who expresses himself in a genuine way that is very wholesome and good.

Let me know in a line, how long you can give me. I will turn back to the Summary as soon as my thoughts are clear of the complications they are running upon.

With love to Mrs. Brown | Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Yours faithfully and affy.

CD.

I was obliged to go to Gad's Hill yesterday, and so did not get your book and letter until to day. — Wonderful climate! — People sitting out of doors! —

To WILLIAM HEPWORTH DIXON,[†3] 24 FEBRUARY 1857*

MS Rosenbach Museum.

Tavistock House
Tuesday Evening Twenty Fourth February | 1857

My Dear Mr. Dixon

I am unfortunately engaged for Monday night, or I would have come with pleasure, and denied all manner of humbugs[†4] from A[†5] to Z[†5]: including P†5, the greatest perhaps of all.

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Hepworth Dixon Esquire

To HENRY MORLEY, 24 FEBRUARY 1857*

MS Dickens House.

Tavistock House
Tuesday Night | Twenty Fourth February 1857

My Dear Morley.

I accept the last (to this time) of the goodly company, with great pleasure, and with the certainty of a good book to read. The "dead men" are not buried here, believe me.[†1]

I reply to your letter without a moment's loss of time, because it would be very painful to me to leave you for one unnecessary hour under the supposition that I could possibly do anything so ungenerous as throw the slightest impediment in the way of your very reasonable wish. I assure you that I have not the faintest "disinclination" to your making such a volume as you describe, from your esteemed contributions to Household Words.[†2] Let me go beyond this negative assent, and declare to you that it gives me cordial pleasure to think that they may be profitable and pleasant to you (and many others) in a new form.

I have been writing all day, and my pen blots and erases of its own accord, evidently under the impression that this is going to the Printer's. So I send it to the Post, out of hand.

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Henry Morley Esquire.

To FRANK STONE, 26 FEBRUARY 1857*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House
Thursday Twenty Sixth February | 1857

My Dear Stone

I have omitted to reply to your question about the Gardener's bills. What you have still to pay, is one item of my memorandum repeated — that is, the £1 odd, half year's share of keeping the front court, here, under the windows in order.[†3]

Seriously as to Gad's Hill, — don't make any prospective arrangements for finding a light place to paint in during the winter months, until you shall have become familiar with it. It is highly probable that it would suit me as well as you, that you should have it at your busy time for what you can afford to pay — what it is worth to you in short — and if there is a pretty little place in England, accessible at all times by railway or steamboat, I believe that house to be it.

Ever Affecy.
CD.

To W. C. MACREADY, 28 FEBRUARY 1857*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House.
Saturday Twenty Eighth February | 1857.

My Dearest Macready

Miss Coutts being still at Torquay, there has been an unavoidable delay in approaching the subject of the poor boy[†1] — no avoidable delay, you will readily understand. I took the first occasion of presenting it to her, but with scarcely the least hope of success. For I know that when she resists her own strong impulse to do a kindness, she does so on some principle the necessity of which she has proved to her own satisfaction. And I also perceived the difficulty, that young Warner does not represent an individual in her consideration, but Legion. She writes thus — after having written me several letters, on other matters, always avoiding this.

"I really was foolish, and could not write about Warner. I feel so sorry for him, and so vexed not to do it, in a case which interests you and Mr. Macready. But I feel that every boy I have ever put anywhere, will come upon me, if I break through my rule only to provide for the education. Of course it is very uncomfortable personally to me, that a boy who passes more as a protegé of mine than he really is, should be in such a state; but I foresee what would happen if I did otherwise. What is the boy's age? If there are no funds available — and it seems to me something should have been put aside or allowed for such a purpose — would it not be better to withdraw him and try to place him somewhere? This I would assist in."

By "somewhere", no doubt she means in some sort of situation. Now, does it appear to you that anything can be done in that direction? To continue him at school under the circumstances, seems a hopeless kind of thing.

I am transcendently busy, drawing up the arteries of Little Dorrit.[†2] Very hard work, but deeply interesting to me. This short letter is all along of her. We are all well, and all send most affectionate loves to all at Sherborne House. Mamey and Katey have been at Bonchurch[†3] these three weeks, but come home to day.

Ever My Dearest Macready | Most affectionately Yours

CD.

March

To THOMAS BEARD, 1 MARCH 1857

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Square | Edgeware Road | W.

Tavistock House | First March 1857

My Dear Beard

I have been preached against here, for forgetting an engagement — as I always do, unless I consult a neat pocket Ledger, which I invariably carry and — as invariably — never look at. I am bound over to eat a dinner on Wednesday.

Therefore let us postpone our theatrical trip for a little while. I will keep my eye on the bills, and look out for the American actress's[†1] most characteristic piece.

I shall be very much interested in knowing what passes between you and the vinous old dotard,[†2] next Thursday. Perhaps you will write me the result, on Friday or Saturday, addressed to the Bedford at Brighton.

Ever Cordially

CD

Thomas Beard Esquire.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 1 MARCH 1857*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Sunday First March 1857.

My Dear Miss Coutts

I do not see any thing to object to, in the accompanying report.[†3] You have done great good; an obviously bad thing is set right; and although it would have been much better ingenuously done in the beginning than disingenuously, done it is, and many poor people will be the happier and better for it.

I will not fail to return the pamphlet on Common Things, and the corrections, in the course of the week.

Ever Faithfully & affYours

CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN MURRAY,[†4] 1 MARCH 1857*

MS Miss Barbara Murray.

Tavistock House | First March 1857.

My Dear Murray

I shall have great pleasure in dining with Mrs. Murray[†5] and yourself, on Thursday the Twelfth.

Believe me | Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

John Murray Esquire.

To SIR JOSEPH PAXTON, 1 MARCH 1857

MS Berg Collection.

Tavistock House | Sunday First March 1857.

My Dear Paxton

A thousand thanks for your kind and prompt note. My idea of the weekly wages was merely a sporting guess, and I am thoroughly sure that whatever you tell me is right in that respect, is right.

I have a tenant in the place at this moment (an old clergyman who has lived in it 30 years), but I take possession myself on Lady Day. I don't care, however, how soon I engage the gardener, as I dare say that the summer aspect of the spot will be materially improved by his looking to it soon.

Whenever you are so kind as to send the accredited man here, I will see him; or, if I should happen by any chance to be away, Mrs. Dickens or Miss Hogarth will have full powers from the source of all domestic authority, to conclude treaties. About 10 in the morning is the best time. I shall not think it necessary to make any enquiries about his character, as your recommendation is conclusive on that head and all others.[†1]

You must let me remind you of this correspondence when the Midsummer weather comes, and ask you to accompany me one Saturday to the extensive freehold, where Cigars and Lemons grow on all the trees.

☛ The House of Commons[†2] seems to me to be getting worse every day.[†3] I solemnly declare to you that direfully against my will, I have come to the conclusion that representative Government is a miserable failure among us. See what you are all about, down at Westminster at this moment with the wretchedest party squabble, and consider that poor Working Mens' Meeting about Emigration, within a few yards of you all, the other night![†4] When your gardener grows me a gooseberry bush with its roots in the air, and Epping sausages for its fruit springing from a fountain of vitriol, I shall believe in the likelihood of a country's long going on, under the auspices of such a Club as the Devil has got together (present Company always excepted) under the big bell which will ring on some strange occasions before it's an old one.

Always Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Sir Joseph Paxton

To C.W. DILKE, 2 MARCH 1857*

MS Professor Helena M. Gamer.

Tavistock House | Monday Evening | Second March 1857

My Dear Mr. Dilke.

Will it be convenient to you if I call upon you at 4 on Wednesday, to confer about the Bloomsbury Humbug?[†1] I am going to Brighton on Friday morning, but of course arrange to be back for Wednesday week.[†2] I only suggest my hour, in order that you may be spared the trouble of answering this note. In case it should be in the least unsuitable, then (and then only) write to name another, and I will make it answer my purpose. I have really nothing to do on that day.

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

C. W. Dilke Esquire

To JOSEPH ELLIS,[†3] 2 MARCH 1857*

MS Bedford Hotel, Brighton. Address: Mr. Joseph Ellis | The Bedford Hotel | Brighton.

Tavistock House, London. | Monday Second March 1857

Dear Mr. Ellis.

As I have not been in Brighton for sometime and want a walk on the Downs, I purpose coming to you next Friday, with a literary friend (Mr. Wilkie Collins) for about three days. Will you be so good as let me know whether you have room enough to give us a sitting-room and two bedrooms? If you reply yes, perhaps you will let your people know that we shall come down early in the afternoon, and that we will dine at Six.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Joseph Ellis

To THE CHAIRMAN OF THE METROPOLITAN FREE HOSPITAL,[†1] 3 MARCH 1857

Extract in Maggs Bros catalogue, No. 258 (1910); MS 2 pp.; dated Tavistock House, 3 Mar 57; addressed Chairman of the Metropolitan Free Hospital.

Expressing his respect for the Christian zeal by which their labour is animated and regretting his inability to help in it. In the midst of many pressing demands on my continuous attention, I am so beset by entreaties to preside on public occasions, ... that I am almost every day obliged to decline.... I consider only my inability to help it, consistent with the punctual and useful discharge of other duties.

To WILKIE COLLINS, 4 MARCH 1857

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Wednesday Fourth March 1857

My Dear Collins

I cannot tell you what pleasure I had in the receipt of your letter yesterday Evening, or how much good it did me in the depression consequent upon an exciting and exhausting day's work. I immediately arose (like the desponding Princes in the Arabian Nights, when the old woman — Procuress evidently, and probably of French extraction — comes to whisper about the Princesses they love),[†2] and washed my face, and went out; and my face has been shining ever since.

Ellis responds to my letter that rooms shall be ready. There is a train at 12 which appears to me to be the train for the distinguished Visitors. If you will call for me in a Cab at about 20 minutes past 11, my hand will be on the latch of the door.

I have got a book to take down with me, of which I have not yet read a line, but which I have been saving up, to get a pull at, in the nature of a draught. — The Dead Secret — By a Fellow Student.[†3]

Plornish has broken ground with a Joke which I consider equal to Sydney Smith.

Ever Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

To WILLIAM HOWITT,[†1] 4 MARCH 1857

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

Tavistock House | Fourth March 1857

My Dear Sir

Many thanks for your kind note. I know all the walks,[†2] well. There is not an inch of all that ground which is not familiar with the print of my foot.

I hope to be in town, to call and see Miss Howitt's[†3] pictures.[†4] But I am very hard at work finishing a long story; and at such times wildnesses come over me, and I go off unexpectedly into strange places and write in inaccessible fastnesses.

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

William Howitt Esquire.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 5 MARCH 1857†

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS,
Thursday Fifth March 1857

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I have gone over your corrections, and return them and the Summary.[†5] My fingers have itched to put your various insertions on the Margin, in the proper places of their introduction, where the Printer might have them under his eye without perpetual reference backward and forward. I have, however, of course observed your wish, and have only made such erasures in those parts of the text, as are calculated to prevent a Wilderness of repetitions and confusion. Some of the more obvious printers' mistakes I have also marked, where they have impaired the spirit and plainness of a passage.

Now, you will presently go on to say to Mrs. Brown, "What a queer man he is! What odd ideas he has sometimes!" Nevertheless, I can't help saying that I don't agree with you in your approval of the little essays about Dress.[†6] I think them not natural — overdone — full of a conventional sort of surface morality — disagreeably like one another — and, in short, just as affected as they claim to be unaffected. Catherine Stanley[†7] (page 36) who finds out that the reason for not liking a little bit of finery — which almost every young person on earth does, remember — human nature is "a common thing", and it is of no use to dream of putting it aside — Catherine, I say, who finds out that the reason for not liking it and putting it on, is, that she will be "More really admired", without it, ought to be her successor — Miss Sly. I should call Catherine the only honest person of those Seven.

With these exceptions — respecting which I nail my flag to the Mast with a tenpenny nail at each corner — I have been greatly interested in, and pleased with, the whole book. And I heartily congratulate you upon it.

Wills has just had Mr. Bentley's (the Picture-cleaner's) address from me, and is now gone after him. I have been writing in a shaded room (the Sun shining full on the windows) and did not at first see that the opening part of this paper might have been sent to the same Mr. Bentley to be freed of its discoloration. You will excuse it, I know.

I am going to Brighton tomorrow for a breezy walk on the Downs, and shall be at the Bedford until Monday afternoon. After that, at home again.

With kind regard to Mrs. Brown, and hurling defiance at

Elwig
Morgan
Sproston
Wheeler
Stanley

Sly
and[†1]
Higinbotham[†2]
Ever dear Miss Coutts Yours most faithfully & affy.
CD.

To HENRY AUSTIN, 6 MARCH 1857*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Friday Sixth March 1857

My Dear Henry

Your letter with its dark reference to a "proposition", brings my Gad's Hill fever to a height. I am a mere infant, babbling incessantly "Proposition — proposition".[†3]

My work has tired me so, that I arranged a few days ago to go to Brighton this morning until Monday. The dark note reaches me, just on the point of starting.

Can you dine with me at the Garrick on Monday at 6? — Or I could come out to you at Ealing on Tuesday Morning. I want to avoid an hour's unnecessary delay. Will you on receipt of this, write me a line addressed to me at the Bedford Hotel, Brighton, and tell me what our appointment shall be? And do — I implore on my bended knees — hurriedly glance at the nature of the Proposition. Wild to know what it is, I beseech to be informed in a general way.

The Greater part of the furniture is got. The last double-tooth I had out, was the order for the bedsteads, beds, and bedding.

Ha ha ha! — Proposition — Ha ha — (Don't mind this. It is the harmless wandering of my mind).
With love to Laetitia | Ever affectionately
CD.

To H. K. BROWNE, 6 MARCH 1857

MS Comtesse de Suzannet.

Tavistock House | Friday Sixth March 1857

My Dear Browne

Very good subjects, both.[†1] The Lettering below.

Faithfully Yours always
CD.

(I can't distinctly make out the detail — but I take Sparkler to be getting the tortoiseshell knife from the box. — am I right?)[†2]

Flora's tour of inspection[†3]

Mr. Merdle a borrower.[†4]

To JOSEPH ELLIS, 6 MARCH 1857*

MS Mrs K. M. Jonas. Address: Mr. Joseph Ellis.

Bedford Hotel | Friday Evening | Sixth March 1857

Dear Mr. Ellis

I have been kept out later than I intended, and have only just now (9 o'Clock) returned. I shall hope to have the pleasure of seeing you at any time tomorrow that may best suit your convenience.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To HENRY AUSTIN, 8 MARCH 1857*

MS Morgan Library.

Brighton | Sunday Eighth March 1857

My Dear Henry

Noble idea — brilliant conception — enticing in the extreme — the only question will be, How Much?[†5]

On Tuesday morning at Tavistock House at your own hour, I will expect you.

Ever affecy.
CD.

To F. M. EVANS, 8 MARCH 1857

Extract in Phillips catalogue, Nov 1990; MS 2 pp.; dated Brighton, 8 Mar 57; addressed F. M. Evans.

Acknowledging receipt of Evans's accounts[†1] and arranging a meeting to discuss a query concerning them.

I observe the amount to be from three to four hundred pounds less than the balance on the last half year.[†2] I have of course no means at hand of comparing the items; but you have the matter more readily at your fingers' ends than I have, at all times; and I wish you would tell me how this in the main comes about? Is it that the sale in the gross, is less by about 1500?[†3]

To THE HON. MRS RICHARD WATSON, 8 MARCH 1857*

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: The Hon. Mrs. Watson | 92 King's Road.

Bedford[†4] | Sunday Eighth March 1857

My Dear Mrs. Watson

I have had such a burst on the Downs — have been so rained upon, hailed upon, snowed upon, and blown — that I have been obliged to tumble into a warm bath, and have not got a hat to come out in, until my own is dried. I brought it back, if you can believe it, a solid cake of ice, half an inch thick.

If I do not go away too early in the Morning, I will call at your door, on the chance of saying Good bye. If I lose that chance, I will send you down The Frozen Deep on Tuesday. If you have done with The Dead Secret,[†5] will you let the Bearer have it, as it is Mr. Collins's copy. If you have not, don't on any account send it. (N.B. Mr.

Collins's head being triangular with a knob in the middle, and small besides, his hat is of no use to anybody but himself).

Ever Most Faithfully Yours | My Dear Mrs. Watson

CD.

To THE HON. MRS RICHARD WATSON, 10 MARCH 1857

MS Huntington Library.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Tenth March 1857

My Dear Mrs. Watson

I left the Bedford, early yesterday morning, leaving the Invalid behind to follow with the baggage. (My face is like a cullender from the hail and ice on Sunday).

Here is the Frozen Deep, accompanied by love and regard from all. I lose no time in sending off the packet.

My Dear Mrs. Watson | Ever Most Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To RICHARD MONCKTON MILNES, 11 MARCH 1857*

MS Trinity College, Cambridge. Address: Richard Monckton Milnes Esquire M.P. | Upper Brook Street | Grosvenor Square.

Tavistock House | Wednesday Night | Eleventh March 1857.

My Dear Milnes

As you made a reference to the Guild to day,[†1] I wish — merely as between yourself and myself — to make an important little point known to you. Pray understand, — not because I can have the slightest quarrel, either with the matter or the manner of what you said (which were, both, worthy of you, and of all respect), but because it is a plain fact, essential to any such reference.

I do not assert that the principles of the Guild are successful. I could have no warrant for making any such statement to you. But they are placed altogether in abeyance, by the Act of Parliament under which the Guild is incorporated.[†2] That Act is the least stringent we could obtain, but it disqualifies the Institution from appropriating any of its money to any of its purposes, until it shall have been in existence seven years from the date of the Bill. Consequently, the Society is forced (very much against its will), to remain inactive until the prescribed term is out. In the meanwhile it incurs no expences of management, and re-invests the interest upon its capital as the interest becomes due. You see how clear the case is, that it cannot be regarded as under the test of experience until the period of probation shall have expired.

Very faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

R. M. Milnes Esquire

To [E. F. PIGOTT], 12 MARCH 1857

Extract in Parke Bernet catalogue, Dec 1947; MS 1 p.; dated Tavistock House, 12 Mar 57; addressed Mr Bigott according to the catalogue.

My Dear [Pigott]

Will you come and dine with us Monday next at 6 sharp? We have no party. Thackeray's daughters[†1] are coming to see the girls that day, but otherwise we are en famille.

To FRANCESCO BERGER, 13 MARCH 1857

MS Ohio Historical and Philosophical Society.

Tavistock House | Thirteenth March 1857 | Friday

My Dear Berger

I am sorry to assure you that my Vote for the Royal Hospital[†2] has long been promised in behalf of another distressing case, or you should have had it with the greatest readiness and pleasure.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Francesco Berger Esquire

To CHARLES DE LA PRYME, 14 MARCH 1857

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds. Address: Private | C. De La Pryme Esquire | &c &c &c | Reform Club | Pall Mall.

Tavistock House | Fourteenth March 1857

My Dear Sir

I feel exceedingly obliged to you for your kind note; but the Lovers[†3] cannot be brought together without some prospect of a mutual attachment. Reciprocity of liking, on my side, is wholly out of the question.

I beg to assure you that I thoroughly satisfied myself long ago, that I can be far more useful and far more independent, in my own calling than in the House of Commons; and that I believe no consideration would induce me to become a Member of that amazing Assembly.[†4]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

C. De la Pryme Esquire

To MRS LING,[†1] 14 MARCH 1857*

MS Mr J. Wilson.

Tavistock House | Fourteenth March 1857

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his Compliments to Mrs. Ling, and regrets that the case to which the enclosed paper refers, is one of scores upon scores that he is quite unable to assist.

To THOMAS BEARD, 15 MARCH 1857

MS Dickens House. Address: Private | Thomas Beard Esquire | Morning Herald Office | Shoe Lane | Fleet Street | E. C.

Tavistock House | Sunday March Fifteenth 1857

My Dear Beard

I had begun to think that the vinous dotard and feeble Bacchus of Bankruptcy,[†2] might be playing fast and loose. Consequently your letter was a great relief to me, and I am now confirmed in my hopes, that whatever becomes of the Paper, your position is permanently improved.[†3]

As to those two incurable corns in Shoe-Lane, Baldwin and Knox[†4] — it is quite clear that eradication is the only possible resource.

Your hard work will only leave you Saturdays for a chance of a Play. Next Saturday I am engaged; but if you will bind yourself over for Saturday week the 28th and will appoint — a day or two before — your own hour for our meeting at the Household Words office, we will go and dine somewhere, and I will be ready with the place of entertainment.

Ever Heartily Yours

CD.

Your summer quarters are progressing favorably. I shall not let you see them, now, until the workmen are out, and they have got their clean shirt on.

To W. C. MACREADY, 15 MARCH 1857*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Sunday Fifteenth March 1857

My Dearest Macready.

I have only one vote for the Royal Hospital. It has long been promised in behalf of a very sad case (they are all sad cases), and is already anticipated for next year too, by another afflicted applicant.

Our poor dear boy![†5] — We speak of him every day, and look for any scrap of news of him from Sherborne, with the deepest interest. What an extraordinary assertion of native strength in him breaks through all his illnesses! But we think most, now, of his father and his aunt. We never can get either of you out of our minds.

Please God you will come and look at Gad's Hill this Summer and will like it none the less for the sign of the Sir John Falstaff over the way. I am getting it up, very plainly, but comfortably; and I hope it is the best thing I could do for the boys — particularly Charley, who will now be able to have country air and change all through the fine weather; the railway enabling him to go up for business, and come down for dinner.

The annual fight at the Literary Fund came off last Wednesday.[†1] I am resolved to reform it or ruin it — one or the other.

God bless you. Our most affectionate love and sympathy to yourself and your dear sister and all the dear ones in the house.

Ever affectionately and faithfully

CD.

To THE HON. SECRETARY, WALLINGFORD MECHANICS' INSTITUTE, [?15-16 MARCH 1857]

Mention in To Gregson, 17 Mar 57. Date: clearly written a day or two earlier.

To [?THE SECRETARY],[†2] ROYAL LITERARY FUND, 16 MARCH 1857

Mention in Anderson Galleries, Feb 1922; MS 1 p.; dated Office of Household Words, 16 Mar 57.

Sending draft of a resolution to appoint a committee to help Mrs Haydn.[†3]

To THE REV. JOHN GREGSON,[†4] 17 MARCH 1857

Text from N, II, 840.

Tavistock House, London | Seventeenth March 1857

Dear Sir,

I feel much obliged to you for your proffered hospitality, and entreat you to accept my thanks. But I beg to assure you (as I have already assured the honorary Secretary of your Institution) that my avocations render my compliance with the request that I will read at Wallingford,[†1] wholly out of the question. I receive such an incredible number of similar applications, that it is no light task to answer them, however briefly.

Dear Sir | Yours faithfully and obliged

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT,[†2] [14-17 MARCH 1857]

Extract in F, XI, iii, 827. Date: "apparently about the same date" as next, according to Forster; not later than 27 Mar; the election began 26 Mar.

I declare that as to all matters on the face of this teeming earth,[†3] it appears to me that the House of Commons and parliament altogether is become just the dreariest failure and nuisance that ever bothered this much-bothered world.[†4]

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 17 MARCH 1857

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, July 1890; MS 1 p.; dated 17 Mar 57.

I have however thoroughly satisfied myself, having often had occasion to consider the question, that I can be far more usefully and independently employed in my chosen sphere of action than I could hope to be in the House of Commons; and I believe that no consideration would induce me to become a member of that extraordinary assembly.

To HENRY AUSTIN, [19 MARCH 1857]

Mention in next. Date: posted the same day.

To HENRY AUSTIN, 19 MARCH 1857*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House
Thursday Night | Nineteenth March 1857

My Dear Henry.

A letter I posted to you from the Household Words office this afternoon has crossed a letter from you which I find here on coming home.

I am delighted to find that the Builder got in.[†5] Certainly, as to going down as early as will suit you next week. As to tomorrow (Friday) I will remain at home here until 4, expecting either to see or hear from you. Any summons from you in the course of the day to come to your office (if that should suit you better), will immediately produce me.

Ever affectionately
CD.

To C. W. DILKE, 19 MARCH 1857*

MS Churchill College, Cambridge.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS,
Thursday Nineteenth March 1857

My Dear Mr. Dilke

Forster has another notion about the Literary Fund. Will you name a day next week — that day being neither Thursday nor Saturday — when we shall hold solemn council here at 1/2 past 4.

For myself I beg to report that I have my War Paint on — that I have buried the Pipe of Peace — and am whooping for Committee Scalps.[†1]

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

C. W. Dilke Esquire

To MARK LEMON, 19 MARCH 1857

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

Tavistock House | Thursday Nineteenth March | 1857

My Dear Mark

Stanny is delighted with the prospect of tomorrow, and will meet us at the H. W. Office at a quarter before five.

Ever affecy.
CD.

To SAMUEL PHELPS,[†2] 24 MARCH 1857

MS Rosenbach Foundation. Address: Samuel Phelps Esquire | 8 Canonbury Square | N.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Twenty Fourth March | 1857

My Dear Mr. Phelps.

Can you come and join our family dinner (we shall be perfectly alone) on Sunday at 5? If this proposal should not be convenient to you, I should be happy to see you on Saturday at halfpast 2. I should prefer the former appointment, as it would enable us to discuss our subject[†3] at the fireside after dinner; but I suggest two opportunities of meeting, in order that the end may be the more readily brought about.

Write me a word in answer, and I shall expect you according to your reply,

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Samuel Phelps Esquire

To F. FREDERICK BRANDT,[†1] 27 MARCH 1857

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, Mar 1984; MS 1 p.; dated Tavistock House, 27 Mar 57. Address: F. Frederick Brandt Esquire | Inner Temple.

Sympathising with his love for the fountain[†2] and his righteous indignation against the insensitive and bibulous old benchers.[†3] May the Water-Gods confound them! But declining to write to The Times on the subject when scores of men who are well able to do so, live within sound of the Fountain and make no sign.

To ROBERT BELL,[†4] 30 MARCH 1857

Extract from Christie's catalogue, Mar 1985; MS 1 p.; addressed Robert Bell; dated Tavistock House, 30 Mar 57.

He has a pleasant remembrance of his last visit[†5] to Bell and regrets his inability to accept an invitation owing to an engagement to dine at Gravesend on 7 April. It is, however, an engagement — and a grim business one to boot[†6] — and you know the reliability of your old Manager.[†7] (I will be as disagreeable at Gravesend as I possibly can).

To MARK LEMON, 30 MARCH 1857

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Monday Thirtieth March 1857

My Dear Mark

Stanny wants to know if you will come and dine at the Jack Straw at Hampstead next Friday, seeing his Pictures[†1] first. Answer me as soon as you can, and, if Yes, meet here at 3.

Ever affecy.

CD.

To GEORGE HODDER,[†2] [?MARCH 1857]

Text from George Hodder, Memories of my Time, 1870, p. 10. Date: soon after receiving Hodder's verses on the death of his wife, Agnes, who died in Mar 57.

I sympathize with you in the feelings which have prompted the verses, and I beg to offer you my condolences on the great loss which they very tenderly and touchingly deplore. But I think they express a private sorrow, and have not that public scope of address which is necessary to the purposes of "Household Words."[†3]

April

To CHARLES MILNER,[†4] 1 APRIL 1857*

MS Mr Maurice I. Packington.

Tavistock House | First April, 1857 | Wednesday Evening

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his Compliments to Mr. Milner, and begs to say that he has engaged Charles Barber,[†5] and hopes to be well suited with him. He will feel much obliged to Mr. Milner, if he will have the goodness to let Barber have the enclosed note as soon as convenient. He would not trouble Mr. Milner, but for not knowing Barber's address.

To FRANK STONE, [?1 APRIL 1857]*

MS Benoliel Collection. Date: shortly before To Stone, 6 Apr 57; handwriting supports. 1 Apr was Wednesday in 1857.

Wednesday Morning

My Dear Stone

What are you doing to day? I am off to Gad's Hill. Are you disposed for a country walk?

Ever Affecy.

CD.

To HANS CHRISTIAN ANDERSEN, 3 APRIL 1857

MS Royal Library, Copenhagen.

Tavistock House, London | Third April, 1857.

My Dear Hans Andersen.

I received your welcome letter, the day before yesterday, and immediately proceed to answer it. I hope my answer will at once decide you to make your summer visit to us.[†1]

We shall not be at home here in London itself, after the first week in June, but we shall be at a little country house I have, only twenty seven miles away. It is on a line of Railroad, and within an hour and a half of London, in a very beautiful part of Kent. You shall have a pleasant room there, with a charming view, and shall live as quietly and wholesomely as in Copenhagen itself. If you should want, at any time while you are with us, to pass the night in London, this house, from the roof to the cellar, will be at your disposal. A servant who is our friend also, who lived with us many years and is now married, will be taking care of it; and she will take care of you too, with all her heart.[†2]

So pray make up your mind to come to England. We shall be at this place I mention, within an hour and a half's ride, all through the summer, and if you will let me know when we may expect you, we shall look forward to that time with most cordial pleasure.

I am very much interested by what you tell me of your new Novel,[†3] and you may be very sure that it will have no more attentive and earnest reader than it will find in me. I am impatient for its publication. Little Dorrit at present engages me closely. I hope to finish her story by about the end of this month, and that you will find me in the summer quite a free man, playing at cricket and all manner of English open-air games.

The two little girls you saw at Broadstairs when you left England, are young women now, and my eldest boy is more than 20 years old. But we have children of all sizes, and they all love you. You will find yourself in a house full of admiring and affectionate friends, varying from three feet high to five feet nine. Mind! you must not think any more of going to Switzerland. You must come to us.

With kind regard from all my family, Believe me

My Dear Andersen | Affectionately | And Cordially Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Hans Christian Andersen.

To P. W. CURRIE,[†1] 3 APRIL 1857*

MS New York University Library.

Tavistock House, London | Third April, 1857.

Dear Sir

I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your obliging letter, and to thank you for the trouble its subject has occasioned you.

If you will have the kindness to reply to the gentleman whose letter I return, that you find such photographs as he required are not to be obtained, you will tell him the exact truth. I am so sensible of being a notorious personage, and am always to unwilling to make any unnecessary flourish of myself before the general eye, that I constantly decline to have myself multiplied in the Print Shops. Hence it really is the fact that what the sculptor wants is not in existence.

I am naturally very much flattered by his proposal and the assurance I derive from it that I have interested readers even in Russia: but I may confess to you that I should be greatly embarrassed by his carrying it into execution. For I am sure he would be disappointed by the reception his work would meet with here, simply because I am sure that no likeness sufficiently striking and characteristic to bear comparison with life, could be made out of such materials.

Renewing my thanks to yourself I have the honor to be Dear Sir

Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

Philip W Currie Esquire

I do not quite understand whether or no N. Borytshevski[†2] is aware that you have referred his letter directly to me. If he be, may I beg you to assure him of my most grateful and cordial appreciation of the honor he would confer upon me.

To LOUIS HACHETTE, 3 APRIL 1857

MS Librairie Hachette.

Tavistock House, London | Third April, 1857

Dear Sir.

I have received your two obliging letters, with much interest and satisfaction. The copies of Nickleby[†3] which you had the kindness to forward to me, I have also received safely, and have carefully read. Touching them, and the high opinion I have formed of the translation, I enclose a letter to M. Lorain which perhaps you will have the kindness to place in his hands.

Bleak House[†4] has not yet reached me.

I am charmed to learn that the series is progressing with so much vigour, and I sincerely hope that the result of the undertaking may be in all respect satisfactory to you.[†1]

Accept my dear Sir the assurance of my consideration and regard.

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

A Monsieur L. Hachette

To PAUL LORAIN, 3 APRIL 1857

Mention in last. Date: written the same day.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?5 APRIL 1857]

Extract in F, VIII, i, 627. Date: shortly after 3 Apr 57 (see below).

I was ludicrously foiled here[†2] the other night in a resolution I have kept for twenty years not to know of any attack upon myself, by stumbling, before I could pick myself up, on a short extract in the Globe from Blackwood's Magazine, informing me that Little Dorrit is "Twaddle."[†3] I was sufficiently put out by it to be angry with myself for being such a fool, and then pleased with myself for having so long been constant to a good resolution.

To FRANK STONE, 6 APRIL 1857*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Monday Morning Sixth April | 1857

My Dear Stone

Many thanks for your note. I will come in, early tomorrow morning before the Visitors begin.[†4] Yesterday I was engaged, and to day I have no end of botherations. I am of course anxious to see what you have done, before it goes away.[†1] I have seen nobody's pictures but Stanfield's; being closely occupied with my book — and Gad's Hill.

Ever Affecy.
CD

To FRANK STONE, 7 APRIL 1857*

MS Benoliel Collection.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS,
Seventh April 1857

My Dear Stone

I have unfortunately been kept here until the last moment, and have to fly for my Train.[†2] Never mind! I will study the Picture on the Academy wall.

In great haste | Every affecy.

CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 9 APRIL 1857

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Meadfoot House | Hesketh Crescent | Torquay | Devon.

Wates's Hotel, Gravesend
Thursday Night | Ninth April, 1857

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I am working here for a few days (that I may have an eye on the little repairs at Gad's Hill), and must thank you for your letter. Not that I thought you "queer" for not writing sooner. You must be very much queerer than that, to be queer in my mind!

My uneasiness on the Dress point, arose, first of all, from the nature of the girls' remarks. I do not feel them to be true, and I have a very great misgiving that they were written against nature, under the impression that they would have a moral aspect. I attach no blame to the young women — have not a doubt that they deceived themselves far more than they will ever deceive any body else — and believe them to have written in a love of commendation; in a rather more disagreeable phase of it than a love of dress would shew.[†3]

I have also, long felt the question to be an excessively difficult one. Apart from what you so gently and delightfully write in your letter (you must not mind my praising it, because it really does charm me), of that little womanly vanity and desire to please, which a wisdom in comparison with which the best of our lights are mere ignorance and folly, has implanted in women, as one of their distinguishing marks, for the happiness of mankind; I have to add an observation which I believe to be a true one. I constantly notice a love of color and brightness, to be a portion of a generous and fine nature. I feel sure that it is often an innocent part of a capacity for enjoyment, and appreciation, and general adornment of everything, which makes a buoyant, hopeful, genial character. I say most gravely that I do not[†1] know what I may take away from the good influences of a poor man's home, if I strike this natural common thing out of the girl's heart who is going to be his wife.

It is like the use of strong drinks or the use of strong any thing. The evil is in the abuse, and not in the use. The distinction between the two, and the perception of the medium in which taste and propriety are to be found, is the result — one of the results — of a generally good, sound, plain education. The natural tendency of the sex through all its grades, is to a little finery — and I would not run counter to that (I make bold to say), agreeable, wholesome, and useful characteristic. The frivolous women of a better degree who disgust you and all sensible people, have really had no education whatever that deserves the name.

You will I know be glad to hear that Walter appeared here yesterday, radiant and gleaming. He passed his examination[†2] on Tuesday in a most creditable manner, and was one of a small number of boys out of a large number, who emerged from the Ordeal triumphant. I have now taken order for his learning to swim, to ride, to fence, to become acquainted with the use of gun and pistol, and to "go in" for a trifle of Hindustanee, in the course of the three months he will probably remain at home. I started him up again last night to his brothers and sisters (Mary, Katey, and Charley, are keeping house), laden with his credentials to the different professors of these Arts. He was perfectly happy, and they had received him with torrents of applause, and he was very anxious that I should "tell Miss Coutts that he hadn't been spun" — which means, rejected.[†3]

Mr. Wates, who is one of my particular friends (and whom you liked, I remember) is in great force, and his house is as orderly and comfortable as ever. If you don't like Gad's Hill, I shall set it on fire — particularly as it is insured. I have devised an immense number of small inventions, which it will require a Summer's day for you and Mrs. Brown to appreciate. There is[†4] a little study (I am sorry to say that the merit of hewing it out of a china-closet is Mr. Austin's) which — but you must see it. According to Charley's plans, Walter is to destroy his constitution at Cricket in the field, before starting for India: which will be a great comfort to him. Mrs. Dickens and Georgina and the two little boys are with me, [†a]and send best love to you and Mrs. Brown. I add mine, and am Ever dear Miss Coutts Yours most faithfully & affecy.

CD.

P.S. Very much interested in the Geologist.[†a†5]

To MISS EMILY JOLLY, 10 APRIL 1857

Text from MDGH, III, 181-3.

Gravesend, Kent, 10th April, 1857.

Dear Madam,

As I am away from London for a few days, your letter has been forwarded to me.

I can honestly encourage and assure you that I believe the depression and want of confidence under which you describe yourself as labouring to have no sufficient foundation.

First as to "Mr. Arle."[†1] I have constantly heard it spoken of with great approval, and I think it a book of considerable merit. If I were to tell you that I see no evidence of inexperience in it, that would not be true. I think a little more stir and action to be desired also; but I am surprised by your being despondent about it, for I assure you that I had supposed it (always remembering that it is your first novel) to have met with a very good reception.

I can bring to my memory — here, with no means of reference at hand — only two papers of yours that have been unsuccessful at "Household Words." I think the first was called "The Brook." It appeared to me to break down upon a confusion that pervaded it, between a Coroner's Inquest and a Trial. I have a general recollection of the mingling of the two, as to facts and forms that should have been kept apart, in some inextricable manner that was beyond my powers of disentanglement. The second was about a wife's writing a Novel and keeping the secret from her husband until it was done. I did not think the incident of sufficient force to justify the length of the narrative. But there is nothing fatal in either of these mischances.

Mr. Wills told me when I spoke to him of the latter paper that you had it in contemplation to offer a longer story to "Household Words." If you should do so, I assure you I shall be happy to read it myself, and that I shall have a sincere desire to accept it, if possible.[†2]

I can give you no better counsel than to look into the life about you, and to strive for what is noblest and true. As to further encouragement, I do not, I can most strongly add, believe that you have any reason to be downhearted.

Very faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To G. F. HUDSON, 11 APRIL 1857

Text from Daily News, 9 Oct 1905. Address: name of addressee given in shorter extract in Anderson Galleries catalogue, Mar 1917.[†3]

Gravesend | 11th April, 1857

My dear Sir,

Your kind note has been forwarded to me here, and I received it with much pleasure. But I cannot (unfortunately) accept your agreeable invitation,[†1] for I am busy here with a race of my own — bringing a pretty large field of characters up to the winning-post,[†2] and spurring away with might and main. —

Believe me, very faithfully yours,

CHARLES DICKENS

To WILLIAM J. CLEMENT,[†3] [?8-14 APRIL 1857]

Mention in To Clement, 10 July 57. Date: if, as CD "strongly" believed, written from Gravesend, then probably between 8 and 15 Apr.[†4]

To THE EARL OF CARLISLE,[†5] 15 APRIL 1857

MS Lord Howard of Henderskelfe.

Gravesend, Kent | Wednesday | Fifteenth April, 1857

My Dear Lord Carlisle.

I am writing by the river-side for a few days, and, at the end of last week, Mrs. Webb[†6] appeared here with your note of introduction. I was not in the way; but, as Mrs. Webb[†6] had come express from London with it, Mrs. Dickens opened it, and gave her (in the limited sense which was of no use to her), an audience. She did not quite seem to know what she wanted of me. But she said she had understood at Stafford House,[†7] that I had a Theatre in which she could read; with a good deal of modesty and diffidence she at last got so far. Now, my little Theatre turns my house out of window — costs fifty pounds to put up — and is only two months taken down. Therefore is quite out of the question. This, Mrs. Dickens explained, and also my profound inability to do anything for Mrs. Webb's[†6] readings, which they could not do for themselves. She appeared fully to understand the explanation, and indeed to have anticipated for herself how powerless I must be in such a case.

She described herself as being consumptive, and as being subject to an effusion of blood from the lungs — about the last condition, one would think poor woman, for the exercise of public elocution as an art.

Between ourselves, I think the whole idea a mistake, and have thought so from its first announcement. It has a fatal appearance of trading upon Uncle Tom, and am I not a Man and a Brother — which you may be by all means and still not have the smallest claim to my attention as a public reader. The town is over-read from all the white squares on the draught-boards; it has been considerably harried from all the black squares — now with the aid of Old Banjoes, and now with the aid of Exeter Hall — and I have a very strong impression that it is by no means to be laid hold of from this point of address. I myself for example am the meekest of men, and in abhorrence of Slavery yield to no human creature — and yet I dont admit the sequence that I want Uncle Tom (or Aunt Tomasina)[†1] to expound King Lear to me. And I believe my case to be the case of thousands.

I trouble you with this much about it, because I am naturally desirous you should understand that if I could possibly have been of any service or have suggested any thing to this poor lady, I would not have lost the opportunity. But I cannot help her, and I assure you that I cannot honestly encourage her to hope. I fear her enterprise has no hope in it.

In your absence I have always followed you through the papers, and felt a personal interest and pleasure in the public affection in which you are held over there.[†2] At the same time I must confess that I should prefer to have you here, where good public men seem to me to be dismally wanted. I have no sympathy with Demagogues, but am a grievous Radical, and think the political signs of the times to be just about as bad as the spirit of the people will admit of their being. In all other respects I am as healthy, sound, and happy, as your kindness can wish. So you will set down my political despondency as my only disease.

On the tip top of Gad's Hill between this and Rochester — on the very spot where Falstaff ran away — I have a pretty little old-fashioned house which I shall live in hope of shewing to you one day. Also I have a little story respecting the manner in which it became mine, which I hope (on the same occasion in the clouds) to tell you.

Until then and always | I am dear Lord Carlisle

Yours very faithfully and obliged

CHARLES DICKENS

The | Earl of Carlisle

To J. E. BRADFIELD,[†3] 16 APRIL 1857*

MS Private.

Tavistock House | Sixteenth April, 1857

Sir.

I beg to assure you that I think your movement in the matter of Toll Reform, an excellent one; but I cannot accept the honor you propose to me of becoming a Member of the Committee, simply because I am very closely occupied, and I make it a rule never to connect myself in name alone, with anything.

Your faithful Servant

CHARLES DICKENS

J. E. Bradfield Esquire.

To MARK LEMON, 16 APRIL 1857

Extract in John Waller catalogue No. 90; MS 1 p.; dated 16 Apr 57.

I understand you covered yourself with GLORY on the way home the other night.

To DR HENRY MADGE,[†1] 16 APRIL 1857

Extract in N, II, 898; MS 1 1/2 pp; dated 1857; addressed Dr. Madge. Mention in American Book Prices Current, III, 80; MS 1 1/2 pp; dated 16 Apr 57; addressed Dr Madge, St Pancras Literary Institute.

Before accepting the compliment which you have the kindness to propose to me, I would desire to be better acquainted with some details of the Institution, and the facilities it affords for a fusion of several classes on a good, common, mutual ground. This appears to me to be one of the highest uses of such establishments, and one of their most ordinary failures.

To MRS HUGH MILLER,[†2] 16 APRIL 1857

Text from N, II, 845.

Tavistock House, London | Thursday 16th April, 1857

Dear Madam,

Allow me to assure you that I have received the last work[†3] of your late much-lamented husband[†4] with feelings of mournful respect for his memory and of heartfelt sympathy with you. It touches me very sensibly to know, from the inscription appended to the Volume, that he wished it to be given to me.[†1] Believe me, it will fill no neglected place on my book-shelves, but will always be precious to me, in remembrance of a delightful writer, an accomplished fellow of science, and an upright and good man.

I hope I may, dear Madam, without obtrusion on your great bereavement, venture to offer you my thanks and condolences, and to add that, before I was brought into this personal association with your late husband's final labour, I was one of the many thousands whose thoughts had been much with you.

Yours faithfully and obliged

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To WILLIAM WILSON,[†2] 16 APRIL 1857*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Tavistock House | Sixteenth April, 1857.

Dear Sir

Returning to town last night after a short absence of ten days, I found your note and book[†3] awaiting me. I hasten to assure you that I received them with very great pleasure and that I am sincerely sensible of your kind feeling towards me. My knowledge of the book has not, in these few hours, extended beyond the two first pages,[†4] but those have touched my heart.

Very faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

William Wilson Esquire

To BENJAMIN WEBSTER, [?16 APRIL] 1857

Mention in Sotheby's catalogue, April 1885; MS 1 p.; dated 1857; addressed Benjamin Webster. Date: after publication of Proceedings (see below) on 11 Apr, and probably on CD's return to London 16 Apr.

Enclosing the Proceedings of the Theatrical Fund Festival.[†5]

To JOHN FORSTER, [?MID-APRIL 1857]

Extract in F, IV, i, 292. Date: probably after return to London on 15 Apr.

Calling Forster's attention very earnestly to two tales then in course of publication in Blackwood's Magazine.[†1] Do read them. They are the best things I have seen since I began my course.

To L. MACKENZIE,[†2] 18 APRIL 1857

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, July 1983; dated Tavistock House, 18 Apr 57. Address: L. Mackenzie Esquire | 81 Ebury Street | S. W.

Sir.

Allow me to thank you for your note. Replying to Mackenzie who has pointed out a resemblance between Miss Wade and a character in one of Mrs. Opie's[†3] books,[†4] he informs him that he does not know the story to which his correspondent refers, nor does he have her books in his library, but that he will look into the matter more fully when he has completed the novel. I have observed Miss Wade in real life (as I dare say Mrs. Opie observed her gentleman), and know the character to be true in every respect. It quite fascinated me in its singular anatomy and I devoted great pains to it in the little narration.

I observe it to be out of the familiar experience of most people and that they regard it with an incredulous kind of astonishment, — though in reality it is often before them.

To STEWARDS AND COMMITTEE OF ST. ANN'S SOCIETY,[†1] 18 APRIL 1857*

MS Dickens House.

Tavistock House | Saturday Eighteenth April, 1857.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to the Stewards and Committee of St. Ann's Society, and begs to say that his engagements do not admit of his accepting the invitation with which they have favored him.[†2]

To DR W. C. HOOD,[†3] 19 APRIL 1857*

MS Dickens House.

Tavistock House | 19 April, 1857 | Saturday Night.

Dear Sir

I beg to assure you that you require no better introduction to me than your own, and that I shall be happy to receive you here on Tuesday Afternoon at 5 o'Clock.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Dr. Hood.

To CHARLES COOTE,[†4] 22 APRIL 1857*

MS Mr Peter Goodricke. Address: Charles Coote Esquire | Devonshire House | Piccadilly.

Tavistock House | Wednesday Twenty Second April | 1857

My Dear Sir

I am sorry that I am not free to support your friend. But I have already pledged myself to vote for two gentlemen recommended by the Founder of the Institution.[†5]

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Coote Esquire

To THOMAS BEARD, 23 APRIL 1857

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Place | Edgeware Road | W.

Tavistock House | Thursday Twenty Third April | 1857

My Dear Beard

I have engaged Delane to dine here on Saturday the Ninth of May at half past 6, sharp. Will you hold yourself engaged accordingly.

Ever Faithfully
CD.

To HENRY BOWIE, 25 APRIL 1857*

MS Edinburgh Central Library.

Tavistock House, London
Twenty Fifth April, 1857 | Saturday Night

Dear Sir

I beg to reply to your letter that I cannot possibly pledge myself thus long beforehand, to the precise day on which I may be able to redeem my promise to your Society. Nor do I think it reasonably probable that I shall be able to do so, until September at the earliest.[†1]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Henry Bowie Esquire.

To THE REV. ARCHER GURNEY,[†2] 25 APRIL 1857*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Tavistock House
Saturday Evening | Twenty Fifth April, 1857.

My Dear Sir

I am no stranger to the worth of your opinions,[†3] and the force they derive from your knowledge, feeling, and habits of reflection.

Your letter has afforded me the greatest pleasure. Believe me, whatever gratification I have been so fortunate as to give you, you have most generously and handsomely repaid. I cannot sufficiently express to you the estimation in which I hold a tribute so spontaneously and affectionately rendered.

It cannot be more agreeable to you to find me writing without satire, than it is to me to find myself in the height of geniality. But, a writer with a great audience, who deeply feels certain salient public vices of his time, must not let them altogether go by him. He has his duty to do, and he must do it — yoking it to his pleasanter fancy as well as he can.

My Dear Sir | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Reverend Archer Gurney.

May

To SIR JOSEPH PAXTON, 3 MAY 1857

MS British Library.

Rochester | Sunday Third May, 1857

My Dear Paxton

Don't be dismayed when I tell you in the outset of this note, that I cannot come to Coventry on Wednesday — but read on.

You know I am an exact man, and that nothing short of necessity would induce me to break such an engagement as I have made with you. But it is absolute necessity that urges me to write. I am finishing my book — a task to which it is essential to devote much time and care — I have other and pressing matters requiring my prompt attention; and I really can not make a gap in the march to those two words "The End", which now absorbs me. It is not the actual time that this little journey would cost me, but it is the sense of having to go anywhere and do anything but what I am upon, next week of all the weeks in the fifty two, that would disable me. Therefore I am forced — really forced by the peculiar nature of my work which cannot be left and resumed at pleasure — to stick to my writing and ask your friendship to believe that I am, in my own despite, unavailable for Wednesday.

But, you once asked me to read my Carol for your Coventry people. Now, I will empower you to announce at the Dinner, if you think it worth while, that, as a little mark of my interest in and regard for you, I will do so, please God, on any day that you may appoint within a fortnight before Christmas Day or a fortnight after it. It shall be done for the pleasure — or benefit — or both — of any public Society in Coventry, you choose to name. You shall be at full liberty to pledge me at the Dinner, and to bind me then and there. The only promise I ask from you in return, is, that we go down together on the occasion, go to no man's dwelling-house, but cosily and jollily sup at the Inn, after the reading.

I should be exceedingly — in all truth and sincerity, seriously — pained, if you were to take my defalcation to heart, and let it throw the faintest cloud on your Wednesday's triumph. I do hope, however, that I have struck out a way of putting this right, and that you will feel that you take me down in your pocket with one of my best suits on.

So all Health and Prosperity to you, at Coventry and everywhere else — on Wednesday and on all the days in the year! — And don't suspect me of any thing but the truth: which is, that I am in the full flight and mid career of the close of my book, and must finish it at a heat, and until it is finished am fit for nothing else.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Sir Joseph Paxton.

To THE REV. ALEXANDER HOWELL,[†1] 6 MAY 1857*

MS Professor K. J. Fielding.

Tavistock House, London | Sixth May, 1857.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his Compliments to Mr. Howell, and begs to reply to Mr. Howell's note, that his avocations do not admit of his undertaking to read at Darlington.

To JOHN FORSTER, [7 MAY 1857]

Extract in F, VIII, i, 626-7. Date: CD visited the Borough on 6 May 57.[†2]

Went to the Borough yesterday morning before going to Gadshill, to see if I could find any ruins of the Marshalsea. Found a great part of the original building — now "Marshalsea Place." Found the rooms that have been in my mind's eye in the story.[†3] Found, nursing a very big boy, a very small boy, who, seeing me standing on the Marshalsea pavement, looking about, told me how it all used to be. God knows how he learned it (for he was a world too young to know anything about it), but he was right enough.[†4] ... There is a room there — still standing, to my amazement — that I think of taking! It is the room through which the ever-memorable signers of Captain Porter's petition filed off in my boyhood.[†5] The spikes are gone, and the wall is lowered, and anybody can go out now who likes to go, and is not bedridden; and I said to the boy "Who lives there?" and he said, "Jack Pithick." "Who is Jack Pithick?" I asked him. And he said, "Joe Pithick's uncle."[†6]

To EDWARD CHAPMAN, 8 MAY 1857*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Tavistock House | Friday Evening | Eighth May, 1857

Dear Sir

I am very glad to find the state of the accounts so much improved,[†1] and thoroughly concur in your hope that we may find the improvement lasting.[†2]

Please to pay in the balance as usual, now that I have gone over them.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Edward Chapman Esquire.

To THE EARL STANHOPE,[†3] 11 MAY 1857*

MS Stanhope Papers.

Tavistock House | Eleventh May, 1857

My Dear Lord Stanhope.

It would have given me great pleasure if I could have had the honor of accepting your kind invitation — and Mrs. Dickens also, would have been proud to respond to Lady Stanhope's[†4] remembrance of her — but that I am unfortunately engaged for Wednesday the 20th. A promise of long standing, to go out of town that morning, ties me fast.[†5]

My Dear Lord | Faithfully Yours

The | Earl Stanhope

To WILKIE COLLINS, 11 MAY 1857

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Monday Evening | Eleventh May, 1857

My Dear Collins

I am very sorry that we shall not have you tomorrow. Think you would get on better if you were to come, after all.

Yes Sir. Thank God, I have finished! On Saturday last, I wrote the two little words of three letters each.[†6]

Any mad proposal you please, will find a wildly insane reponse in.

Yours Ever

CD.

We shall have to arrange about Tuesday at Gad's Hill. You remember the engagement?[†1]

To HANS CHRISTIAN ANDERSEN, 12 MAY 1857*

MS Royal Library, Copenhagen.

Tavistock House, London | Twelfth May, 1857.

My Dear Hans Christian Andersen.

I have just now finished Little Dorrit, and devote my first leisure to writing to you, in answer to your welcome and much-valued letter.

My house in the country is not upon the straight main railway-line between Dover and London. There is a station upon that line, where you could turn off, and come to me by a Branch Railroad; but it would be rather a complicated business for a stranger. Therefore, if you should be alone, I would recommend you to come to London, and then, at another part of the Station at which you would arrive — the London Bridge Terminus — to take the North Kent Railway, to a place called Higham (H I G H A M) which is a mile from my house.

But, when you know exactly when you will come, and how you will come, I will meet you somewhere — either at the station in London, or at some other part of the journey — if you will tell me what your arrangements are.

You write English so extraordinarily well, that I am quite surprised by what you tell me of your speaking it. I feel sure, however, that you will become a perfect Englishman among my family, in a very few days. We all speak French, and some Italian. My eldest boy speaks German too. So I am not in the least afraid of our failing to be talkative.

I may as well mention while I think of it, that I wear a moderate beard. As I wore none when you were last in England, your knowing of the change may enable you to recognize me the sooner, when you see me.

Do not write until you know all about your journey. And then be sure that you will find me somewhere, waiting to receive and welcome you.

With kindest regard from all my house, | Ever Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To THOMAS BEARD, 12 MAY 1857

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire, Morning Herald Office.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS,
Tuesday Twelfth May 1857

My Dear Beard

I am sorry to find (your card being sent down to me here, with my letters), that you called at home this morning. Could you call at Tavistock House again tomorrow morning at 10?

Are you engaged this afternoon? If not, we dine here (B and E, Lemon, and Forster). It is our half yearly Audit Day. Half past five. Can you come? If you can — do.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, 13 MAY 1857

MS Churchill College, Cambridge.

Tavistock House | Thirteenth May, 1857.

My Dear Forster.

I have gone over Dilke's memoranda, and I think it quite right and necessary that those points should be stated. Nor do I see the least difficulty in the way of their introduction into the Pamphlet.[†1]

But I do not deem it possible to get the Pamphlet written and published before the dinner.[†2] I have so many matters pressing on my attention, that I cannot turn to it immediately on my release from my book, just finished. It shall be done and distributed early in next month.

As to anything being lost by its not being in the hands of the people who dine (as you seem to think), I have not the least misgiving on that score. They would say, if it were issued, just what they will say without it. Lord Granville is committed to taking the chair[†3] and will make the best speech he can in it. The pious Blewitt[†4] will cram him with as many distortions of the truth as his stomach may be crooked enough to receive. Bell,[†5] with Bardolphian eloquence, will cool his nose in the modest merits of the Institution. Thackeray[†4] will make a neat and appropriate speech on both sides, round the two corners, and over the way.[†6] And all this would be done to exactly the same purpose and in just the same strain, if twenty thousand copies of the Pamphlet had been circulated.

Ever affecly.

CD

To JOSEPH HOGARTH,[†1] 13 MAY 1857

Text in Outlook, 18 Oct 1913, checked from MS Sotheby's, Oct 1963.

Tavistock House | Wednesday Thirteenth May 1857

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Hogarth, and begs to say that if the Prints are taken to Gad's Hill Place on Saturday morning, he will be there himself to direct the hanging of them. He would prefer red cord.

To THE EARL STANHOPE, 13 MAY 1857*

MS Stanhope Papers.

Tavistock House | Thirteenth May, 1857

My Dear Lord Stanhope

I feel exceedingly obliged to you for your second kind note. We are very unfortunate in not being able to come. But our engagement is just this; — I have a little old-fashioned house in the country, near Rochester, which I have just now been altering and polishing, to live in in the summer-time. The Nineteenth being Mrs. Dickens's birthday,[†2] I gave a promise that she should make her first appearance there on that occasion, and asked some of her friends to come down for two or three days. Hence we are engaged on the nineteenth, exactly as on the twentieth.

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

The | Earl Stanhope.

To GEORGE MOORE, 14 MAY 1857*

MS Dickens House.

Tavistock House | Fourteenth May, 1857.

My Dear Sir

I have the pleasure of enclosing you my Royal Hospital[†3] proxy, in redemption of my promise.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

George Moore Esquire

To BENJAMIN WEBSTER, 14 MAY 1857

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Tavistock House | Fourteenth May, 1857.

My Dear Webster

I have been away, and am only this afternoon in the receipt of your letter.

The Champagne has been steadily rising and becoming more difficult to get. It is now (very good indeed) 54/- per dozen. The Merchant is Mr. Charles Ellis, Richmond, Surrey.[†1]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Benjamin Webster Esquire

To MR DÜHRSSEN,[†2] 16 MAY 1857*

MS Dickens House.

Gad's Hill, Higham by Rochester | Sixteenth May, 1857.

I am happy to acknowledge the interest felt in my books by Mr. Dührssen, my young friend unknown; and I send him my signature with much pleasure. In reference to his enquiry concerning my portrait, I have to inform him that the only portrait for which I have sat to any painter within the last fifteen years or so, is now being engraved in Paris (from a picture by Ary Scheffer) and will probably be published before long. Another, by Maclise, was published about 16 years ago, as I remember, by Chapman and Hall, Piccadilly, London.[†3]

CHARLES DICKENS

To THOMAS BEARD, 17 MAY 1857

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | Morning Herald Office | Shoe Lane | London | E. C.

Waites's Hotel Gravesend | Sunday Seventeenth May, 1857

My Dear Beard

The train which will bring down the compact body of attackers of cold meat for the first time, "on the premises", will leave London Bridge Station on Tuesday afternoon at 3..40. If you came by that, you would take Return Ticket for Gravesend. But you were saying you would have the whole day in the country. Being still in that mind (and able to walk a mile to my Numble abode), take ticket for Higham, one station beyond this. Then, by return of post, let me know, in a note addressed here, by what train you intend to come to Higham, and the Inimitable Kentish Freeholder will be on the spot to receive you.

Ever Heartily
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Beard Esquire

To WILKIE COLLINS, 17 MAY 1857

Text from N, II, 847.

Waite's Hotel, Gravesend | Sunday Seventeenth May 1857

My Dear Collins,

The train which will bring down the main body of the small and noble army who inaugurate Gad's Hill Place with cold meat next Tuesday, leaves London Bridge Station at 3.40 — twenty minutes before 4. Take return for Gravesend. Put yourself under the guidance of the gallant Wills, and he will lead you to Victory. — Have you done????[†1]

Ever Faithfully
[CD]

To VISCOUNT RAYNHAM,[†2] [?20 MAY 1857]

Summary from Minutes of Board of Management, Royal Hospital for Incurables, 23 May 57. Date: just before the Anniversary Dinner on 21 May.

Telling Lord Raynham that he had visited the house[†3] and referring to the want of ventilation and other inconveniences which rendered the place in his view very undesirable for its present purpose.[†4]

To CLARKSON STANFIELD, 20 MAY 1857

MS Comtesse de Suzannet.

Tavistock House
Wednesday Evening | Twentieth May, 1857

My Dear Stanny

Binders of books are rather slow. I know that some weeks may elapse before the copy of Little Dorrit that I have asked my binder to put into a cheerful dress for you, will be ready. And as I hope you may like to know it is coming, and also to know the end of the book before the rest of its readers can, I send you the Proof Sheets of the closing Nos. Of course I don't want them back.

I say nothing of the pleasure it has been to me to put your name on the opening page, or to leave behind us both (as I hope its being there, may), a little record importing that we loved one another.[†1]

Ever My Dear Friend | Affectionately

CHARLES DICKENS

Clarkson Stanfield Esquire

To SIR ALEXANDER DUFF GORDON,[†2] 21 MAY 1857*

MS Berg Collection.

Tavistock House | Twenty First May, 1857

My Dear Gordon

Coming to town to day, to preside (for my sins) at a Public Dinner, I find your kind note.

I am amazed to hear that Scheffer is in England, and should greatly like to see him, for I hold him in the highest regard and respect. Unfortunately, however, I am in the burst of engagements consequent on being newly released from a long book, and fear I cannot come to Esher.[†3] On Sunday I have promised to go down to Cockburn's,[†4] and on Monday I am away into Kent, where I have a little old fashioned house (on the top of Gad's Hill), which I have been putting to rights these two months, and where a number of things have been awaiting my freedom, to be looked to. When you see Scheffer again, will you remember me to him heartily.

You play the very Devil with me on my weakest point, when you mention the dear delightful little German girl.[†5] Her feelings on the night of the Play, were nothing to mine. I have loved her, ever since, distractedly.

Ever Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Sir Alexander Duff Gordon

To LADY JOHN RUSSELL, [21] MAY 1857

Text from Lady John Russell, ed. Desmond MacCarthy and Agatha Russell, 1910, p. 171. Date: 21 May, the day after his return to London.

May 22, 1857

Dear Lady John,

Coming to town yesterday morning out of Kent, I found your kind and welcome note referring to the previous day. I need not tell you I hope, that although I have not had the pleasure of seeing you for a long time, I have of late been accompanying Lord John at a distance with great interest and satisfaction. Several times after the City election was over I debated with myself whether I should come to see you, but I abstained because I knew you would be overwhelmed with congratulations[†1] and I thought it was the more considerate to withhold mine.

I am going out of town on Monday, June 1st, to a little old-fashioned house I have at Gad's Hill, by Rochester, on the identical spot where Falstaff ran away, and as you are so kind as to ask me to propose a day for coming to Richmond, I should very much like to do so either on Saturday the 30th of this month or on Sunday the 31st.

I heard of you at Lausanne from some of my old friends there, and sometimes tracked you in the newspapers afterwards. I beg to send my regard to Lord John and to all your house.

Do you believe me to remain always your very faithfully,

CHARLES DICKENS

To WILLIAM HOWARD RUSSELL,[†2] 21 MAY 1857*

MS Dickens House.

Tavistock House | Thursday Twenty First May, 1857

My Dear Sir

I have been out of town, and am only now in the receipt of your note. I will not fail to be at the Gallery of Illustration at 3 tomorrow.[†3]

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. H. Russell Esquire

To WILKIE COLLINS, 22 MAY 1857

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House
Friday Evening, Twenty Second May, 1857

My Dear Collins

Hooray!!![†4]

From our lofty heights, let us look down on the toiling masses with mild complacency — with gentle pity — with dove eyed benignity.

— VIII - 330 —

Tomorrow, I am bound to Forster — on Sunday, to solemn Chief Justices in remote fastnesses beyond Norwood[†1] — on Monday, to Geographical Societies dining to cheer on Lady Franklin's Expedition[†2] — on Tuesday, to Procters. On Wednesday Sir — on Wednesday, if the mind can devise any thing sufficiently in the style of Sybarite Rome in the days of its culminating voluptuousness, I am your man.

Shall we appoint to meet at the Household Words office, at 1/2 past 5? I have an appointment with Russell (W. H.) at 3 that afternoon, which may, but which I don't think will, detain me a few minutes after my time. In that unlikely case, will you wait for me at the Office?

If you can think of any tremendous way of passing the night, in the meantime — do. I don't care what it is. I give (for that night only) restraint to the Winds!____

I am very much excited by what you tell me of Mr. F's Aunt.[†3] I already look upon her as mine. Will you bring her with you.

☛[†4] Wills tells me that he thinks the principles of story-writing, are scarcely understood in this age and Empire.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 22 MAY 1857†

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | The Star Hotel | Oxford.

Tavistock House | Twenty Second May, 1857

My Dear Miss Coutts.

Mr. Bentley[†5] has handed to me the enclosed account. I hope you will find it extremely reasonable, considering what he has had to do, and the skill with which he has done it.

Ages seem to have rolled by, since I saw you. I never hear of you, except when I reverentially approach Mr. Wills with humble enquiries as to where you may be and how you may be. What a monstrous state of existence you appear to have fallen into! If you don't return home soon, I shall insert a mysterious and pathetic Advertisement to A.B.C. in the Times.

After the first of June, I shall be inconsolable until I have fairly laid hold of you and Mrs. Brown and taken you in captivity down to Gad's Hill. I want you so much to see it. It is full of the ingenious devices of the inimitable writer, and I really think is as comfortable a little place as you will find out of Torquay[†1] — which place I consider to be an Impostor, a mockery, a delusion, and a snare.

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To [?MR ELLIS], 22 MAY 1857

Extract from P. F. Haag catalogue, 1957; MS 1 p.; dated Tavistock House, W. C., 22 May 57.

About sitting for his portrait. Have no doubt that I expressed myself imperfectly in my former note,[†2] since it conveyed a wrong impression to you. I meant that I [†a]quite firmly say[†a] no and I beg to excuse myself from sitting.

To THE REV. JAMES WHITE, 22 MAY 1857

Text from MDGH, II, 15.

Tavistock House, Friday, May 22nd, 1857.

My dear White,

My emancipation having been effected on Saturday, the ninth of this month, I take some shame to myself for not having sooner answered your note. But the host of things to be done as soon as I was free, and the tremendous number of ingenuities to be wrought out at Gad's Hill, have kept me in a whirl of their own ever since.

We purpose going to Gad's Hill for the summer on the 1st of June; as, apart from the master's eye being a necessary ornament to the spot, I clearly see that the workmen yet lingering in the yard must be squeezed out by bodily pressure, or they will never go. How will this suit you and yours? If you will come down, we can take you all in, on your way north; that is to say, we shall have that ample verge and room enough,[†3] until about the eighth; when Hans Christian Andersen (who has been "coming" for about three years) will come for a fortnight's stay in England. I shall like you to see the little old-fashioned place. It strikes me as being comfortable.

So let me know your little game. And with love to Mrs. White, Lotty, and Clara,[†4]

Believe me, ever affectionately yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, [24] MAY 1857*

MS Morgan Library. Date: CD's mistake; Sunday was 24 May. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | The Star Hotel | Oxford.

Tavistock House | Sunday Twenty Fifth May | 1857

My Dear Miss Coutts

I will look out the street you mention,[†5] in the Map of London (for I am quite a stranger to it), and will endeavour to present myself there, next Thursday, punctually at 7. You don't mention the number. — I shall begin my enquiries at Number one.

With love to Mrs. Brown

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Yours most faithfully & affecy.

CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN THOMPSON, [24] MAY 1857*

MS Fales Collection, New York University Library.

Tavistock House | Sunday Twenty Fifth May 1857

I think, John, on reconsidering the matter, that it will be as well for the Foreman to cut some holes in the top of Mr. Charles's bedroom door, like those that are already cut in the women servants' bedroom.

I shall be down on Thursday, if not before; very likely, before.

CHARLES DICKENS

To THE HON. MISS EMILY EDEN,[†1] 25 MAY 1857*

MS Bodleian Library.

Tavistock House. | Twenty Fifth May, 1857.

My Dear Miss Eden.

I have been sensibly touched by your note, and have read it with no common interest. I need scarcely add that I have particular pleasure in taking charge of your handsome subscription, and forwarding it to the Secretary.

No one can know better than you, the quiet fortitude and resignation of which invalids are capable. But if you could have seen these poor sufferers as I saw them the other day — walking in among them perfectly unknown — you would have been scarcely less impressed, I think, by their cheerful submission than I was myself. I merely told the company at the dinner,[†2] exactly what I had seen. And they were affected by it in consequence, just as they would have been by the reality.

As to the time when I had the pleasure of talking with you at Broadstairs,[†3] you know how certain particular scenes will sometimes fix themselves in the mind. Inseparable from my remembrance of that coast, and I verily believe from my abstract idea of a Lighthouse, is an Autumn afternoon in a little garden full of red geraniums, on the road to the North Foreland — you on your couch — Lord Clarendon[†4] on one side of it — myself on the other — a bright sky over the cornfields, and the ships sailing away in the distance. All this has, ever since that hour, been still and unchangeable in my memory; — got itself daguerrotyped there in some indelible way, and has gone up Swiss mountains with me and gone floating about Venice and gone drumming and dancing about France, as distinct as ever, everywhere.

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Hon. Miss Eden.

To J. E. PFEIFFER,[†1] 25 MAY 1857*

MS Yale University Library.

Tavistock House. W. C. | Monday Twenty Fifth May, 1857

Dear Sir

I cannot imagine by what accident your most obliging note and its accompanying book,[†2] came to be laid aside on my library shelves, unopened and unknown to me, until yesterday. I can only suppose that some unlucky hand must have incautiously put the little packet there, to make room on an adjoining table for some momentary purpose, and must have forgotten it. How long an interval of apparent neglect it might have reproached me for, but for its having been laid on the top of a book I wanted yesterday, I blush to think.[†3]

Pray allow me to offer you the assurance of my sincere regret that I should have seemed indifferent to a mark of remembrance so very courteously conveyed to me. In thanking you and its authoress,[†4] I can with a clear conscience promise the best acknowledgement and atonement in any reader's power. — I have just packed up the book to take into the country with me, and I purpose reading it under the trees on the next sunny day.

Dear Sir | Yours faithfully and obliged
CHARLES DICKENS

J. E. Pfeiffer Esquire

To [ARTHUR SMITH],[†5] 26 MAY 1857

MS Yale University Library.

Tavistock House. W. C. | Twenty Sixth May, 1857.

My Dear Sir

I am not going to the Derby this year (being tired of it), but I fancy from your note that you are! Therefore I shall not come to the Gallery,[†6] unless I hear at the Household Words office between 1 and 2, that you will be there at 3.

I have a promise already given for Sunday; but I will try to get out of it, if it can be handsomely done. I sincerely reciprocate your wish that we may know one another intimately (I hope we are already friends), and I assure you it shall not be my fault if we fail. I must get you, before I leave town on Monday, to fix a Sunday for coming down with Albert, to see me in a little house I have, on the identical spot where Falstaff ran away when they set upon the travellers — most appropriate ground for being jovial on.

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS HORNE, 29 MAY 1857*

MS Dickens House.

Tavistock House | Twenty Ninth May, 1857

My Dear Mrs. Horne.

I will not fail to keep my eye upon the subject of your brother's[†1] interest, or to read the account of it.

When I was at Bennet's[†2] the other day, I did deliberate about coming to see you. But I thought you would be busy and I should be in the way, and — so I didn't.

We are just going out of town for the summer, to a house I have set up near Rochester — only an hour and a half from town — a good little old-fashioned breezy, shady, sunny, leafy place. Catherine is going to write to you in a week or two, when we get settled, to ask you to come and pass a Sunday with us. And when you have once seen the place and know how easily it is got at, I have a strong personal hope (which I hereby confess to you) that you will come very often, through the fine weather, and restore yourself after the fatigues of the week.[†3]

My Dear Mrs. Horne | Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To LADY JOHN RUSSELL, 29 MAY 1857

MS Myers & Co.

Tavistock House. | Friday Twenty Ninth May, 1857.

Dear Lady John.

I am extremely sorry to let you know that I must make up my mind to be disappointed, and not to come to you tomorrow. I have been for some days a perfect Victim to influenza — or Hay Fever — or whatever it is — and have been a terror to my fellow creatures by incessantly sneezing, coughing, and weeping. Yesterday I distinguished myself in these feats to that wonderful extent, in a railway carriage, that I became an object of hatred to seven other people, who were really resentful of me. To day, after a week of it, I am so much worse and in such a ridiculous state, that I feel that the only thing to be done, is, to go away to Gad's Hill and get rid of the enemy.

(I would enclose a tear if it were worth any thing, — but I am shedding so many while I write, that my feelings have nothing to do with them.)

I have asked my binder to put Little Dorrit into a new frock for your kind reception. When he has done so, I will call with her in Chesham Place[†1] one day when I am in town, in the hope that I may have a chance of seeing you. If I should not succeed, then I will leave her, and, on another morning when I am in town, will try again, either there or at Richmond, as I hear of the family movements. I beg to be remembered to Lord John (if he should ever want a Kentish Freeholder's vote, I know of one at his service to the death), and am always with thanks.

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The | Lady John Russell

To CHARLES EDMONDS, 29 MAY [?1857][†2]

Extract in Anderson Galleries catalogue No. 1236 (June 1916); MS 1 p.; addressed Charles Edmonds; dated Tavistock House, 29 May 47. Date: 1857 since from Tavistock House.

I have mislaid the monthly circular[†3] last received; but I observed in it a number of curious little books, following one another in regular succession over some couple of pages, concerning Newgate, its former prisoners and turnkeys, and such subjects.[†4] Will you have the kindness to send them all to me? I need not ask you for the list. You will know what I mean.... Faithfully yours, CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS EMILY JOLLY, 30 MAY 1857

Text from MDGH, III, 183-6.

Tavistock House, Saturday Morning, 30th May, 1857.

Dear Madam,

I read your story, with all possible attention, last night. I cannot tell you with what reluctance I write to you respecting it, for my opinion of it is not favourable, although I perceive your heart in it, and great strength.

Pray understand that I claim no infallibility. I merely express my own honest opinion, formed against my earnest desire. I do not lay it down as law for others, though, of course, I believe that many others would come to the same conclusion. It appears to me that the story is one that cannot possibly be told within the compass to which you have limited yourself. The three principal people are, every one of them, in the wrong with the reader, and you cannot put any of them right, without making the story extend over a longer space of time, and without anatomising the souls of the actors more slowly and carefully. Nothing would justify the departure of Alice, but her having some strong reason to believe that in taking that step, she saved her lover. In your intentions as to that lover's transfer of his affections to Eleanor, I descry a striking truth; but I think it confusedly wrought out, and all but certain to fail in expressing itself. Eleanor, I regard as forced and overstrained. The natural result is, that she carries a train of anti-climax after her. I particularly notice this at the point when she thinks she is going to be drowned.

The whole idea of the story is sufficiently difficult to require the most exact truth and the greatest knowledge and skill in the colouring throughout. In this respect I have no doubt of its being extremely defective. The people do not talk as such people would; and the little subtle touches of description which, by making the country house and the general scene real, would give an air of reality to the people (much to be desired) are altogether wanting. The more you set yourself to the illustration of your heroine's passionate nature, the more indispensable this attendant atmosphere of truth becomes. It would, in a manner, oblige the reader to believe in her. Whereas, for ever exploding like a great firework without any background, she glares and wheels and hisses, and goes out, and has lighted nothing.

Lastly, I fear she is too convulsive from beginning to end. Pray reconsider, from this point of view, her brow, and her eyes, and her drawing herself up to her full height, and her being a perfumed presence, and her floating into rooms, also her asking people how they dare, and the like, on small provocation. When she hears her music being played, I think she is particularly objectionable.

I have a strong belief that if you keep this story by you three or four years, you will form an opinion of it not greatly differing from mine. There is so much good in it, so much reflection, so much passion and earnestness, that, if my judgment be right, I feel sure you will come over to it. On the other hand, I do not think that its publication, as it stands, would do you service, or be agreeable to you hereafter.

I have no means of knowing whether you are patient in the pursuit of this art; but I am inclined to think that you are not, and that you do not discipline yourself enough. When one is impelled to write this or that, one has still to consider: "How much of this will tell for what I mean? How much of it is my own wild emotion and superfluous energy — how much remains that is truly belonging to this ideal character and these ideal circumstances?" It is in the laborious struggle to make this distinction, and in the determination to try for it, that the road to the correction of faults lies. [Perhaps I may remark, in support of the sincerity with which I write this, that I am an impatient and impulsive person myself, but that it has been for many years the constant effort of my life to practise at my desk what I preach to you.]

I should not have written so much, or so plainly, but for your last letter to me. It seems to demand that I should be strictly true with you, and I am so in this letter, without any reservation either way.

Very faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To WILLIAM HOWARD RUSSELL, 30 MAY 1857

MS Dickens House.

Tavistock House | Saturday Thirtieth May, 1857

My Dear Sir

As we do not move the Caravan until Monday, I received your note at dinner just now (7 o'Clock).

Mrs. Dickens would be glad to kill the Dragon — as glad, let us say, as Miss Saint George[†1] — and would triumph in the act, but that she has unfortunately some sisterly, motherly, paternal, or other family engagement for tomorrow. She is very anxious that I should explain her aright to Mrs. Russell[†2] through you — and you see how distinctly I do it!

It is tomorrow, Sunday, at 12.30, that you expect me at the Gallery,[†3] is it not? Unless you reply in the negative, I intend to be there. I should have no doubt on the point, but for your having written from the Gallery this afternoon, and not precisely saying in two syllables, Sunday, in your former note.

Very faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

W. H. Russell Esquire

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, [?29-30 MAY 1857]*

MS (fragment) Dunedin Public Library. Date: probably the Friday or Saturday before going to Gad's Hill.

I[†4] go out of town on Monday, but only to the neighbourhood of Rochester, where I purpose remaining during the whole summer and autumn. As there is now a Railroad into those parts, it is as good — though not as bad — as being in London.

Kind regard from Mrs. Dickens and Georgina.

Faithfully Always
CHARLES DICKENS

To RICHARD BENTLEY, 31 MAY 1857*

MS Berg Collection.

Tavistock House, W. C. | Thirty First May, 1857

My Dear Sir

I received Hans Christian Andersen's letter, and answered it; giving him all needful instructions for finding me at Gad's Hill. I hope you will come down one day and meet him there while he is with me.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esquire

To [?C. W. SEPTIMUS PIESSE], 31 MAY 1857

Extract in Maggs Bros catalogue No. 427 (Autumn 1922); MS 1 p.; dated Tavistock House, 31 May 57.

I am happy to receive your book[†1] with the additions, and wish it and you every possible success.... I think it is scarcely worth while to send another copy to the Household Words office. I will inform the gentleman who wrote the article[†2] of your remembrance of him.

June

To WILKIE COLLINS, 1 JUNE 1857

MS Morgan Library.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS,
First June (Monday) 1857

My Dear Collins

In consequence of bedevilments at Gad's Hill, arising from the family luggage wandering over the face of the earth, I shall have to pass tomorrow behind a hedge, attired in leaves from my own fig tree. Will you therefore consider our appointment to stand for next day — Wednesday.

When last heard of, the family itself (including the birds,[†3] and the Goldfinch on his perch)[†4] had been swept away from the stupefied John, by a crowd of Whitsun holiday-makers, and had gone (without tickets) somewhere down into Sussex. A desperate calmness has fallen upon me. I don't care.

Faithfully Ever
CD.

To T. H. HERBERT,[†5] 1 JUNE 1857*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House, London | First June, 1857.

Sir

In reply to your letter of enquiry, I have to inform you that I never at any time had in my employment, in any capacity, any one bearing the name of Winthrop Park.[†6]

I am Sir | Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

T. H. Herbert Esquire

To HENRY MORLEY, 1 JUNE 1857

MS Benoliel Collection.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS,
Monday First June 1857

My Dear Morley

I send you a Biography of George Stephenson, which perhaps may make an interesting article for us.[†1]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Henry Morley Esquire.

To FRANK STONE, 1 JUNE 1857

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS,
Monday First June 1857

My Dear Stone.

I know that what I am going to say will not be agreeable; but I rely on the authoress's[†2] good sense; and say it, knowing it to be the truth.

These notes are destroyed by too much smartness. It gives the appearance of perpetual effort — stabs to the heart, the nature that is in them — and wearies by the manner, and not by the matter. It is the commonest fault in the world (as I have constant occasion to observe here), but it is a very great one. Just as you couldn't bear to have an épergne or a candlestick on your table, supported by a light figure always on tiptoe and evidently in an impossible attitude for the sustainment of its weight; so all readers would be more or less oppressed and worried by this presentation of everything in one smart point of view, when they know it must have other and weightier and more solid properties. Airiness and good spirits are always delightful, and are inseparable from notes of a cheerful trip; but they should sympathize with many things as well as see them in a lively way. It is but a word or a touch that expresses this humanity, but without that little embellishment of good nature, there is no such thing as humour. In this little MS. everything is too much patronized and condescended to, whereas, the slightest touch of feeling for the rustic who is of the earth earthy, or of sisterhood with the homely servant who had made her face shine in her desire to please, would make a difference that the writer can scarcely imagine without trying it. The only relief in the twenty one slips is the little bit about the Chimes. It is a relief, simply because it is an indication of some kind of sentiment. You don't want any sentiment laboriously made out in such a thing — you don't want any maudlin show of it — but you do want a pervading suggestion that it is there. It makes all the difference between being playful and being cruel. Again, I must say, above all things — especially to young people writing — For the love of God, don't condescend! Don't assume the attitude of saying "See how clever I am, and what fun everybody else is!" Take any shape but that.[†1]

I observe an excellent quality of observation throughout, and think the boy at the shop, and all about him, particularly good. I have no doubt whatever that the rest of the Journal will be much better, if the writer chooses to make it so. If she considers for a moment within herself, she will know that she derived pleasure from everything she saw, because she saw it with immeasurable lights and shades upon it, and bound to humanity by innumerable fine links. She cannot possibly communicate anything of that pleasure to another, by shewing it from one little limited point only — and that point, observe, the one from which it is impossible to detach the exponent as the patroness of a whole universe of inferior souls. This is what everybody would mean in objecting to these notes (supposing them published), that they are too smart and too flippant.

As I understand this matter to be altogether between us three, and as I think your confidence and hers imposes a duty of friendship on me, I discharge it to the best of my ability. Perhaps I make more of it than you may have meant or expected; — if so, it is because I am interested, and wish to express it. If there had been anything in my objection not perfectly easy of removal, I might after all have hesitated to state it; but that is not the case. A very little indeed would make all this gaiety as sound and wholesome and good-natured in the reader's mind as it is in the writer's.

Affectionately always
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 3 JUNE 1857†

MS Morgan Library.

Gad's Hill Place, Higham | Third June, 1857.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

Would Thursday, Friday, or Saturday, in next week suit you for a day here? If neither will do, will you and Mrs. Brown appoint your own day, in the week following. You come from London Bridge Station (North Kent Railway) to Higham — the station next beyond Gravesend. A manly figure will of course be awaiting you on the Platform. The train that I think will be most convenient to you, starts at 12. Take return tickets, unless you will stay a day or two with us. I have some faint hopes that you might do even that!

Hans Christian Andersen may perhaps be with us, but you won't mind him — especially as he speaks no language but his own Danish, and is suspected of not even knowing that.

With love to Mrs. Brown, and looking for your answer,

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Yours most faithfully & affecy.
CHARLES DICKENS

To GEORGE BOUGHEY,[†1] 4 JUNE 1857

MS Mr W. A. Foyle. Address: George Boughey Esquire | 33 Mecklenburgh Square | London | W. C.

Gad's Hill Place, Higham, Kent. | Fourth June, 1857

Dear Sir

Your obliging note has been forwarded to me in my summer retreat, where I have read it with much pleasure. Allow me to thank you for it sincerely.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

George Boughey Esquire

To [MISS ELLEN STONE], 4 JUNE 1857

Text from MDGH, II, 18.

Gad's Hill Place, Higham, | Thursday, June 4th, 1857.

My dear ——,[†2]

Coming home here last night, from a day's business in London, I found your most excellent note awaiting me, in which I have had a pleasure to be derived from none but good and natural things. I can now honestly assure you that I believe you will write well, and that I have a lively hope that I may be the means of showing you yourself in print one day. Your powers of graceful and light-hearted observation need nothing but the little touches on which we are both agreed. And I am perfectly sure that they will be as pleasant to you as to anyone, for nobody can see so well as you do, without feeling kindly too.

To confess the truth to you, I was half sorry, yesterday, that I had been so unreserved; but not half as sorry, yesterday, as I am glad to-day. You must not mind my adding that there is a noble candour and modesty in your note, which I shall never be able to separate from you henceforth.

Affectionately yours always
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To GEORGE BEADNELL,[†3] 5 JUNE 1857

MS Dickens House.

Gad's Hill | Friday Fifth June 1857.

My Dear Mr. Beadnell

I am exceedingly obliged to you for your great kindness in behalf of my boy, and beg you to accept my heartfelt thanks. He is tempted by your kind invitation, and has wild ideas of making his way to your part of the country;[†1] but, between ourselves, as he is here with us in his spare time — and as he sails next month — and as his outfit is being got ready — and as he is taking lessons in Hindustanee — and as he is "looking at" the Chatham fortifications (without appearing to me to make head or tail of them) out of swimming lessons, fencing lessons, riding lessons, and a general course of cricket — my impression is, that he will find himself at the Himalayas on his way to Carshalton.

I return Mr. Oswald Smith's[†2] letter, and beg you to let him know whenever you have the opportunity, that Barkis is very grateful.[†3]

Barkis, however, must take the liberty (this with my love to Mrs. Lloyd)[†4] of defying Surrey, and writing up "Kent" in his vehicle,[†5] as the object of his enthusiastic affections. Surrey is very well in its way, but all the eyes since Falstaff's — he ran away on the very spot where this house stands — never saw in Surrey, such a green landscape as I see from this hill-top, this morning.

With kindest regard | Believe me always
My Dear Mr. Beadnell | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

George Beadnell Esquire

To HENRY AUSTIN, 6 JUNE 1857

MS Morgan Library.

Gad's Hill | Saturday Sixth June, 1857

My Dear Henry

Here is a very serious business on the great estate respecting the water Supply. Last night, they had pumped the well DRY[†6] — merely in raising the family supply for the day; and this morning (very little water having been got into the Cisterns), it is DRY[†6] again! It is pretty clear to me that we must look the thing in the face, and at once bore, deepen, dig, or do some beastly thing or other, to secure this necessary in abundance. Meanwhile I am in a most plaintive and forlorn condition without your presence and counsel. I raise my voice in the Wilderness and implore the same!!!

Wild legends are in circulation among the Servants, how that Captain Goldsmith[†7] on the knoll above — the skipper in that Crow's Nest of a house — has millions of gallons of water always flowing for him. Can he have damaged my Well? Can we imitate him, and have our millions of gallons? Goldsmith or I must fall, as I conceive.

If you get this, send me a telegraph message informing me when I may expect comfort. I am held by four of the family while I write this, in case I should do myself a mischief — it certainly won't be taking to drinking water.

Ever affectionately | (now despairingly)

CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 7 JUNE 1857*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | 1 Stratton Street | Piccadilly | London | W.

Gad's Hill | Sunday Seventh June 1857.

My Dear Miss Coutts

On Thursday we shall be delighted to see you. We will give you and Mrs. Brown a country room together,[†1] and your Maid shall be lodged close to you.

Wednesday is our Committee Day at Shepherd's Bush. I will be there.

The fogs that welcome you to London, have no existence in these parts. An ethereal mist or so is sometimes seen in the distance — nothing grosser.

With love to Mrs. Brown

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Yours faithfully and affecy.

CD.

To MRS GORE,[†2] 7 JUNE 1857*

MS Baron Dan de Calinescu.

Gad's Hill, by Rochester. | Seventh June 1857

My Dear Mrs. Gore

Many thanks. I will get the book,[†3] and read it on your advice. But see how Imitations may deceive even the elect! The "New Boy"[†4] is none of mine.

Mrs. Dickens and her sister beg to thank you beforehand for your book,[†5] and assure you that they are good and confiding readers.

Very faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Gore

To DR F. H. RAMSBOTHAM,[†1] 7 JUNE 1857

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, Mar 1981; MS 2 pp.; dated Gad's Hill, 7 June 57. Address: Dr. Ramsbotham | 7 Portman Square | London W.

My Dear Sir

I am very heartily obliged for Dr Ramsbotham's giving an introduction for his son [Walter] but as his passage is already taken on the Peninsular & Oriental, he needs no help there.

According to my annual custom I have left for the country for four or five months ... an old-fashioned house on top of a hill built on the very spot where Falstaff ran away and here I live like a sort of honest Robin Hood among the green trees.

PS He has the pamphlet about the College[†2] already.

To W. S. HOOLE,[†3] [?7 JUNE 1857]

MS Dickens House. Date: probably within the week of the final No. of Little Dorrit, published 30 May 57 (Chs 30-4).

Gad's Hill, Higham, by Rochester

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Hoole, and begs to acknowledge the receipt of his obliging note. As the window in St. George's Church appropriately carried out the pervading spirit of the tale at its conclusion,[†4] Mr. Dickens made reference to it. He knew it was not as old as the date of the story,[†5] but did not consider that slight anachronism of any importance.

To JOHN FORSTER, [10 JUNE 1857]

Extract in F, VIII, i, 629-30. Date: Jerrold died on 8 June; letter written two days later.

On the death of Douglas Jerrold. I chance to know a good deal about the poor fellow's illness, for I was with him on the last day he was out. It was ten days ago, when we dined at a dinner given by Russell at Greenwich. He was complaining much when we met, said he had been sick three days, and attributed it to the inhaling of white paint from his study window. I did not think much of it at the moment, as we were very social; but while we walked through Leicester-square he suddenly fell into a white, hot, sick perspiration, and had to lean against the railings. Then, at my urgent request, he was to let me put him in a cab[†6] and send him home; but he rallied a little after that, and, on our meeting Russell, determined to come with us. We three went down by steamboat that we might see the great ship,[†1] and then got an open fly and rode about Blackheath: poor Jerrold mightily enjoying the air, and constantly saying that it set him up. He was rather quiet at dinner — sat next Delane — but was very humorous and good, and in spirits, though he took hardly anything. We parted with references to coming down here and I never saw him again. Next morning he was taken very ill when he tried to get up. On the Wednesday and Thursday he was very bad, but rallied on the Friday, and was quite confident of getting well. On the Sunday he was very ill again, and on the Monday forenoon died; "at peace with all the world" he said, and asking to be remembered to friends. He had become indistinct and insensible, until for but a few minutes at the end. I knew nothing about it, except that he had been ill and was better, until, going up by railway yesterday morning, I heard a man in the carriage, unfolding his newspaper, say to another "Douglas Jerrold is dead." I immediately went up there, and then to Whitefriars.... I propose that there shall be a night at a theatre when the actors (with old Cooke)[†2] shall play the Rent Day and Black-ey'd Susan; another night elsewhere, with a lecture from Thackeray;[†3] a day reading by me; a night reading by me; a lecture by Russell;[†4] and a subscription performance of the Frozen Deep, as at Tavistock House. I don't mean to do it beggingly; but merely to announce the whole series, the day after the funeral, "In memory of the late Mr. Douglas Jerrold," or some such phrase. I have got hold of Arthur Smith as the best man of business I know, and go to work with him to-morrow morning — inquiries being made in the meantime as to the likeliest places to be had for these various purposes. My confident hope is that we shall get close upon two thousand pounds.

To WILLIAM HOWARD RUSSELL, 10 JUNE 1857

MS Berg Collection.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS,
Wednesday Tenth June 1857

My Dear Russell.

Although I can quite understand that a generous nature is quick to give itself the pain you describe, I am perfectly sure that you have nothing whatever to reproach yourself with in association with the poor dear fellow. I do not doubt that he would have died in the same hour, though he had not dined with us; and that he was happy that day, and recalled the air of our ride, on his bed but a day or two before he passed away, I know from Lemon, to whom he spoke of it with great cheerfulness and pleasure. He was taken very ill on the next day — the Monday. He tried to get up as usual, rolled over on his bed, and fell into great pain. On the Wednesday and Thursday, they were very much alarmed; but on the Friday he rallied again, and was free from pain, though exceedingly weak. It was then that Lemon saw him for the last time. He had begun to be confident of getting better, and he told Lemon about our riding over Blackheath, and about the air having been so fresh and pleasant to him. On the Saturday he turned worse; on the Sunday, he was in terrible pain, and suffered severely; on the Monday morning, the pain left him, but he was greatly exhausted, and knew himself to be dying. He said that if he had spoken at all hardly of any one or to any one, he had not meant it, and that he died at perfect peace. His son William[†1] was holding him in his arms. He went on to mention friends to whom he desired to be remembered, when he became indistinct, and in a few moments died.

I had heard at Gad's Hill, in a note from Evans, that he had been seriously ill; but I supposed him to be recovering, and thought it quite past. I was coming up by the Railway yesterday morning, with my wife, and her sister (of whom he had always been fond) when a gentleman in the carriage looking over his newspaper told another "Douglas Jerrold was dead". You may imagine how shocked we were. I went up there as soon as we reached town, and then went to Whitefriars[†2] to urge the immediate necessity of exertion in behalf of the Widow and daughter. I found that Brooks[†3] had already acted with a kindness and judiciousness that I can never forget in him, and I suggested a plan for certain benefit nights which I hope to be able to mature this afternoon; — I am only now waiting while Brooks confers with his son. Arthur Smith, invaluable where promptitude and sagacity are wanting, wrote to me this morning, like a good sound fellow, saying his aid is ready. I hope and believe that if nothing arises to prevent our turning to, in earnest, we may easily — and not beggingly — raise £1500 at least. I would have the Actors (and old T. P. Cooke) play The Rent Day and Black eyed Susan, one night. On another night, I would have Thackeray lecture. On another night, I would read, or do any thing. On another night I hope you could lecture to a good, large, liberal comprehensive public audience. All this series I would announce as a tribute of his friends to his memory — or in some such way — so that it should not be a pitiful appeal. You shall hear more, as soon as I know more.

Poor dear fellow. I went up to him before I left Greenwich that Sunday night, and asked him how he was. He said, much better — much the better for coming — had only taken a little weak brandy and water to drink, and had enjoyed it and some curried fish. I said he was all right now, and he said "Oh yes my dear boy, all right now — that paint you know — nothing more", and we shook hands heartily, and parted. I cannot believe it now, or that we three were laughing together in that sunshine and summer wind with schemes and plans before us.

Last Autumn at Boulogne, day after day while poor A Beckett lay ill, he used to come up to me with his report, and would walk about the garden talking about these sudden strikings down of men we loved, in the midst of us. When he sent to Lemon a little notice of A Beckett after his death, for Punch,[†1] he wrote in the envelope "My dear Mark, who among us will be the next, and who will write a word or two of him" — [†2]

Again my dear Russell let me impress upon you my perfect conviction that his dining at Greenwich did not by a hair's breadth hasten his death. I am quite convinced it had no sort of bearing on it. As I told you when we walked from the Garrick after him, I had found him at the Gallery of Illustration, very ill — and had been greatly struck by his account of his illness, and by his becoming very weak and white in Leicester Square. I have no doubt that the mortal malady had its hand upon him at that time, and had had it on him during the whole attack. If he could have been got into the country, at rest and away from some family troubles, a month before, I think he might have recovered — if it is not mere idleness to speculate on such a possibility when the Almighty had numbered his days. But that his time was come, when we were with him, I feel assured. When I went home that Sunday night, I could not leave off saying that I was afraid Jerrold was in a bad way, or recalling his condition in Leicester Square. On the Monday night of his death — the night of the day on which he died at noon — I dreamed that he came and shewed me a writing (but not in his hand) which he was pressingly anxious that I should read for my own information, but I could not make out a word of it. I awoke in great perplexity with its strange character quite fresh in my sight.

Ever Faithfully Yours

CD.

To LIEUT. COLONEL THE HON. C. B. PHIPPS,[†3] [?10 JUNE 1857]

Mention in To Miss Coutts, 20 June 57. Date: before talking to Miss Coutts on 11 June: see 20 June.

To WILLIAM GALE, 11 JUNE 1857

Extract in Francis Edwards catalogue No. 971 (1973); MS 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill Place, 11 June 57.

Thanking him for his note and picture.[†4] ... I esteem myself very fortunate in the possession of your highly characteristic and humorous picture.

To LEIGH HUNT,[†1] 11 JUNE 1857

Extract in N, II, 856.

My Dear Hunt.

This summer retreat (on the spot where Falstaff ran away) will be my home until the winter probably; but I shall be often in town and will come to you one day.... Nothing but the death of poor Jerrold prevents my naming the day now; — I hope to do his family some good, and shall be for a few days overwhelmed with that business.

To FRANCESCO BERGER, 12 JUNE 1857

Mention in Autograph Prices Current, I, 51 (1914-16); MS 1 p.; dated 15 June 57; addressed Francesco Berger.

Respecting other performances.

To WILKIE COLLINS, 12 JUNE 1857*

MS Morgan Library.

Garrick | Twelfth June 1857 | Friday

My Dear Collins

You will readily understand the accompanying Proof.[†2] I should like to see you as soon as convenient, about the Frozen Deep. (I am trying for the Queen).[†3] Could you run down on Sunday? Perhaps?

Ever Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

Wilkie Collins Esquire

To T. P. COOKE, 12 JUNE 1857

MS (telegram) Benoliel Collection.

THE ELECTRIC AND INTERNATIONAL TELEGRAPH COMPANY

The following message forwarded from Strand Station. And received at Portsea[†4] Station June 12 1857

FROM Charles Dickens Garrick Club
TO T. P. COOKE St. Vincent Villa Ryde[†1]
On twenty ninth July will you play William at the Adelphi for its late Author,[†2] Every body joins, Reply.

To THE COUNTESS GIGLIUCCI, 12 JUNE 1857*

MS Haverford College.

Garrick Club | Friday Twelfth June 1857

My Dear Countess Gigliucci.

Will you allow me to call your attention to the accompanying Proof. It is the committee's wish that it should be left to speak for itself.

If, on the occasion against which I have set a mark, you could possibly render this endeavour the immense service of singing once,[†3] you would — I am sure — gratify your own generous impulses quite as much as my wishes.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The | Countess Gigliucci

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 12 JUNE 1857

MS Lytton Papers.

Garrick Club | Friday Twelfth June 1857

My Dear Bulwer.

You will understand the enclosed Proof. I believe I need not ask you for leave to use your name. Nothing but our names is sought.

Ever Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton.

To SIR JOSEPH PAXTON, 12 JUNE 1857*

Text from typescript, Huntington Library.

Garrick Club | Friday Twelfth June 1857.

My Dear Paxton,

You will readily understand the accompanying Proof.

I know I need not ask you for leave to use your name. Nothing but your name is sought here in our poor friend's behalf.

Ever Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

Sir Joseph Paxton.

To SAMUEL PHELPS, 12 JUNE 1857

MS Rosenbach Foundation. Address: Please forward.[†1] | Samuel Phelps Esquire | Canonbury Square | Islington.

Garrick Club | Friday Twelfth June 1857

My Dear Phelps.

Let me call your attention to the accompanying proof. It is the wish of the Committee that it should be left to speak for itself.

I am not wrong, I believe, in having taken upon myself to say that I am certain your co-operation may be counted on, on the occasion against which I have set a mark?*[†2]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Samuel Phelps Esquire

To SIMS REEVES,[†3] 12 JUNE 1857*

MS Private.

Garrick Club | Twelfth June 1857

Dear Sir

Will you allow me to call your attention to the accompanying Proof. It is the Committee's wish that it should be left to speak for itself.

If, on the occasion against which I have set a mark, your engagements would admit of your singing one song,[†4] your generous aid would be most highly esteemed by all concerned in this endeavour, and by none more highly than

Yours faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

Sims Reeves Esquire

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 12 JUNE 1857

Mention in Autograph Prices Current, III, 80; MS 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill, 12 June 57.

Referring to Gad's Hill and Douglas Jerrold.

To EDMUND YATES, [?14 JUNE 1857]

Mention in Yates, Recollections and Experiences, I, 293. Date: received on the morning of Douglas Jerrold's funeral (15 June).

Asking him to dine at the Garrick to talk on a matter of business.[†1]

To WILLIAM CRESWICK,[†2] 15 JUNE 1857

MS Dickens House.

Garrick Club | Monday Fifteenth June 1857.

My Dear Sir

Allow me to call your attention to the accompanying Proof. It is the wish of the Committee that it should in all cases be left to speak for itself.

But I may add that if it should suit your convenience and inclinations, and those of Mr. Shepherd[†3] — to whom I do not write separately, as I have not the pleasure of personally knowing him — to propose a night in aid of the objects, at the Surrey Theatre,[†4] your generous aid would be highly esteemed. I do not hold myself at liberty to say more, or to urge the point upon you.

I will only add that in such a case, I am sure Mr. and Mrs. Keeley[†5] would readily strengthen your company for the occasion.

My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. Creswick Esquire

I am in town this evening and would drive round to you at the Theatre after half past 9.

To [MISS CHARLOTTE DOLBY],[†6] 15 JUNE 1857

Extract in Parke-Bernet catalogue, Nov 1946; MS 1 1/2 pp.; dated Garrick Club, 15 June 57.

if, in such an exceptional case and cause, we could have your invaluable aid at the concert, a most important service would be rendered by one of the finest of living artists, to the nearest and dearest relatives of an admirable dramatic writer.

To T. P. COOKE, 15 JUNE 1857*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House, London
Monday Evening | Fifteenth June 1857

My Dear Sir

Coming to town this morning to attend poor Jerrold's funeral,[†1] I found your note. It is like yourself, and I don't know that I could easily say any thing higher in its praise.

I beg my compliments to Mrs. and Miss Cooke, and am always

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

T. P. Cooke Esquire

To THE COUNTESS GIGLIUCCI, 15 JUNE 1857

MS Dickens House. Address: The Countess Gigliucci | Great Western Royal Hotel | Paddington.

Garrick Club | Monday Evening | Fifteenth June, 1857

My Dear Countess Gigliucci.

Your earnest and generous letter has occasioned me almost as much pleasure in hearing from you, as I have in hearing you.

You will not be inconvenienced, I hope, by our having been obliged to make a change in the arrangements for the concert. It is settled to take place at St. Martin's Hall on Saturday the 27th. of June.[†2]

With kind regard to Count Gigliucci, Believe me ever

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To T. F. ROBSON, 15 JUNE 1857

Mention in Smith catalogue No. 72 (1912-13); MS 2 pp.; dated Garrick Club, Monday Evening, June 15, 1857; addressed F. Robson.

On behalf of the committee CD requests the [actor's] invaluable aid at a concert.

To EDITORS OF THE PRINCIPAL JOURNALS, [15 JUNE 1857]

Mention in Yates, Recollections and Experiences, I, 294.

Enclosing a Memorandum for the Committee.[†1]

To JULES BENEDICT,[†2] [16 JUNE 1857]

Mention in next. Date: written the same day.

To JULES BENEDICT, 16 JUNE 1857

Extract in Sotheby catalogue, Mar 1974; MS 1 p.; dated Garrick Club, 16 June 57.

Concerning an invitation to Benedict to perform in a concert, Dickens explains that when he wrote "conduct", in his letter that morning, he meant there will not be an orchestra, and therefore I mean, to direct and accompany — in which latter office Mori[†3] will assist; he adds that an announcement about the concert must be made immediately; he will send a messenger to Benedict the same evening.

To FRANCESCO BERGER, 16 JUNE 1857

Text from Francesco Berger, Reminiscences, Impressions and Anecdotes, p. 31.

Dear Berger,

A thousand thanks for your kind and cordial letter. I am delighted to accept the compliment you offer me,[†4] as I am always truly proud to be associated with you. I have ventured to put you down as one of the Conductors at the Concert. It is finally arranged to take place at St. Martin's Hall on Saturday, June 27. It will be very good indeed, and I hope you will like to be associated with it. We are all out of town. Can you dine with me here[†5] on Thursday next at half-past-five? or if you can come down to Gad's Hill with Charley on Saturday we shall all be pleased to see you. As to dining with me, send me one line here.

Faithfully yours ever
CHARLES DICKENS

To WILKIE COLLINS, 16 JUNE 1857

MS Morgan Library.

H. W. Office | Sixteenth June 1857

My Dear Collins

What an unlucky fellow you are! What a foot you have for putting into anything!

I write this to Harley Place,[†1] having been unable to write yesterday. I must be in town on Thursday, and will come up to you. I will try to come at about 12.

Mrs. Wills's lameness, makes a new Esther the first thing wanted. You once said you knew a lady[†2] who could and would have done it. Is that lady producible?

Ever Faithfully
CD.

To MISS HELEN HOGARTH, 16 JUNE 1857

MS Mrs J. Felix-Davies.

Tuesday Evening Sixteenth June | 1857

My Dear Helen.

It is all excellent.[†3] Pryor's name I will use,[†4] and will write to him.[†5] Whitworth[†6] it will be best to let alone. If you have anything to report tomorrow, will you write to Arthur Smith? I shall be in town on Thursday.

Ever affecy.
CD

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 17 JUNE 1857*

Facsimile in F. G. Kitton, Dickens Ana, Dickens House.

Gad's Hill | Wednesday Evening | Seventeenth June 1857.

My Dear Miss Coutts

I think I may as well send you the enclosed exactly as I have received it; merely observing that the Institution[†7] to which it refers is an admirable project, and that Mr. Ryland, the writer of the note, is one of the most upright and respected men in Birmingham.

Ever Faithfully and affecYours
CHARLES DICKENS

To WILKIE COLLINS, 19 JUNE 1857*

MS Morgan Library.

Gallery of Illustration | Friday June Nineteenth 1857

Dear Sir

We beg to inform you that we have taken the liberty of adding your name to this Committee, in the full assurance that you would readily extend that sanction and support to the object in view.

We are Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS
ARTHUR W. W. SMITH

Wilkie Collins Esquire

To WILLIAM HEPWORTH DIXON, 19 JUNE 1857*

MS Rosenbach Museum.

Gallery of Illustration | Friday June Nineteenth, 1857

Dear Sir

We beg to inform you that we have taken the liberty of adding your name to this Committee, in the full assurance that you would readily extend that sanction and support to the object in view.[†1]

We are Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS
ARTHUR W. W. SMITH

Hepworth Dixon Esquire

To DANIEL MACLISE, 19 JUNE 1857†

MS Berg Collection.

Gallery of Illustration | Friday June Nineteenth, 1857

Dear Sir

We beg to inform you that we have taken the liberty of adding your name to this Committee, in the full assurance that you would readily extend that sanction and support to the object in view.

We are Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS
ARTHUR W. W. SMITH

Daniel Maclise Esquire R. A.

To SAMUEL PHELPS, 19 JUNE 1857

MS Rosenbach Museum.

Gallery of Illustration | Friday June Nineteenth 1857

Dear Sir

We beg to inform you that we have taken the liberty of adding your name to this Committee, in the full assurance that you would readily extend that sanction and support to the object in view.

We are Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS
ARTHUR W. W. SMITH

Samuel Phelps Esquire

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 19 JUNE 1857

Mention in Puttick & Simpson catalogue, Dec 1877; MS 1 p.; dated Gallery of Illustration, 19 June 57.

To MRS PHELPS,[†1] 20 JUNE 1857*

MS Rosenbach Museum. Address: Mrs Phelps | 8 Canonbury Square | Islington | N.

GARRICK CLUB
Saturday Twentieth June 1857

My Dear Mrs. Phelps

Many thanks for your note. I heard from Mr. Phelps the other day. There is no hurry as to my two later notes. So that he finds them when he comes home, it will be time enough.

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 20 JUNE 1857

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | 1 Stratton Street | Piccadilly | London | W.

Gad's Hill | Saturday Night | Twentieth June 1857

My Dear Miss Coutts.

As you and I had a little talk here[†2] about the Frozen Deep, in which your kindness and sense were as conspicuous as they always are — and as deeply felt by me as they always are — I am anxious to let you know what has since passed about it with the Queen.

I had written (at the time we spoke together) to Colonel Phipps in the usual way, stating what I was trying, with others, to do "In remembrance of the late Mr. Douglas Jerrold", and adding that I had no poor case to make, or pitiful thing to say — that I had resolved never to travel out of those words. I added that if the Queen would come to see the Frozen Deep, it would be a great honor, &c. To this Phipps replied (as I knew he would), that the Queen could never do anything in that way for the memory of an Individual, as it would involve perpetual engagements or constant grievous offence; but that she very much wanted to see the Play, and could it be done otherwise? Could he and I talk about it? I then went to see him, and he proposed, on the Queen's behalf, its being done at Buckingham Palace. I begged him to represent to the Queen that I felt difficulties on that score — that I should not feel easy as to the social position of my daughters at the Court under such circumstances — and that I would, with all duty and so forth, suggest that the Queen would relieve us of that difficulty by coming, on a private night of her own, to the Gallery of Illustration, and inviting her own guests to see the Play privately. But I added that she had always been most kind and considerate to me on other occasions, and that if she could not act upon my suggestion, we would, however much I might desire to avoid it, go to the Palace. He received it in the best manner, and she received it in the best manner; and the result is, that she has a night of her own at the Gallery, a week in advance of the public, on Saturday the 4th. of July.

I hope you think this right, as to all parties?

In reference to the point you suggested to me, I spoke confidentially to Collins, who immediately felt with me that your having suggested it or thought of it, at once closed and settled the case. I have turned over in my mind a way of changing the action of that scene; and I think (as you did) that it can be made more affecting and natural, with the change,[†1] than without it.

This is all. With kind love to Mrs. Brown, Believe me ever Faithfully and affecy. Yours

CD.

To MEMBERS OF THE CAST OF THE FROZEN DEEP, 20 JUNE 1857

MS Benoliel Collection.

IN REMEMBRANCE OF THE LATE MR. DOUGLAS JERROLD.

COMMITTEE'S OFFICE, GALLERY OF ILLUSTRATION,
REGENT STREET.
Saturday Twentieth June 1857.

Rehearsals of The Frozen Deep on the stage, here.

Friday 26th. June, at 3 in the afternoon
Monday 29th. June, at 3 in the afternoon
Thursday 2nd. July, at 1/4 past 10 at night.
Friday 3rd. July, at 1/4 past 10 at night.

On Saturday July 4th, the piece will be privately acted here, to the Queen. And on Saturday July 11th. it will be acted here, agreeably to the printed Programme.

To JOHN FORSTER, [21 JUNE 1857]

Extract in F, XI, iii, 830. Date: 21 June 57 according to Forster.

Saying that the Queen, through Col. Phipps, had requested that he would select a room in the palace, do what he would with it, and let her see The Frozen Deep there. I said to Col. Phipps thereupon that the idea was not quite new to me; that I did not feel easy as to the social position of my daughters, etc., at a Court under those circumstances; and that I would beg her Majesty to excuse me, if any other way of her seeing the play could be devised. To this Phipps said he had not thought of the objection, but had not the slightest doubt I was right. I then proposed that the Queen should come to the Gallery of Illustration a week before the subscription night, and should have the room entirely at her own disposal, and should invite her own company. This, with the good sense that seems to accompany her good nature on all occasions, she resolved within a few hours to do.

To JOHN DEANE,[†1] 23 JUNE 1857*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Gallery of Illustration | Regent Street
Twenty Third June 1857

My Dear Sir

Your letter has interested me very much, and is another proof (if I needed any) of your promptitude, quick sense, and consideration.

I had not thought of doing the Frozen Deep at Manchester; but I would, if a sum of any importance could be gained by it. The difficulty is this: — it cannot be done in any very large place. Firstly, because the scenery is not of sufficient width to display its great delicacy and completeness in a great building.

Secondly, because I doubt if my ladies would be as good as they really are — that is, could express themselves for as much — in a wilderness of space. If we could get such high prices as would make a Concert Room or the like, pay, I would not mind the trouble. But it is to be remembered that a Railway Truck would be wanted to carry the rollers and set pieces, and that very expert Carpenters would be necessary, of whom at least two must be London-men to whom the piece is known in the working. Again — the gas fitting for a sunset of Telbin's, and a sea beach by Stanfield, is of a very nice kind; and although it involves no material which is not likely to be in any good Gas Fitter's shop, the gas would have to be brought in from the Main in a considerable quantity, and would require two intelligent men to work it, besides the personal direction of one of those two painters. Again, the stage must be a raised one. Again a little hanging platform is wanted from the roof, to hold two boys to "snow". Again, the stage must be from 30 to 40 feet deep. These are not terrific requirements, but they are indispensable, and are perhaps more than you have thought of. And so much trouble was taken when I got the piece up, to render it curiously complete, that it is impossible to chop any little mechanical nicety out of it without spoiling it all — the whole thing so coheres and goes together.

Lastly, there are 30 people in it; and the moving of such a party for such a distance is expensive.

If any scheme should occur to you for making Manchester cry, through these means — say two nights, I would attentively consider it. But I do not myself know a suitable place, nor do I see any hopeful means of making two or three hundred pounds by it, after deducting all charges.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

John Deane Esquire.

To DANIEL MACLISE, 24 JUNE 1857

MS Huntington Library.

IN REMEMBRANCE OF THE LATE MR. DOUGLAS JERROLD.
COMMITTEE'S OFFICE, GALLERY OF ILLUSTRATION,
REGENT STREET.
Wednesday Twenty Fourth June 1857.

My Dear Maclise.

Perhaps you know that the Queen has commanded a private performance of our last Tavistock House play, here, on Saturday Week the 4th. of July? As your name is on the Committee and as she knows you very well, will you be one of three or four (not more) to receive her, quietly? If you say yes, I will let you know, as soon as I know myself from Phipps, at what hour she will come. I cannot receive her myself, as I must be half dressed in North Polar costume, and busy.

Write me a word in answer, to this address.

Ever affecy.

CHARLES DICKENS

To SIR JOSEPH PAXTON, 24 JUNE 1857

MS British Library.

IN REMEMBRANCE OF THE LATE MR. DOUGLAS JERROLD.
COMMITTEE'S OFFICE, GALLERY OF ILLUSTRATION,
REGENT STREET.
Wednesday Twenty Fourth June 1857.

My Dear Paxton

The Queen has commanded a private performance of the Frozen Deep, here, on Saturday Week, the fourth of July. As your name is on the Committee and as the Queen knows you well, I have no doubt it would be a very good thing altogether if you could be here to receive her. Will your engagements admit of it? If (as I hope) yes, and you answer me to that effect, I will let you know, as soon as I know myself, at what hour she will arrive.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Sir Joseph Paxton.

To RICHARD BENTLEY, 25 JUNE 1857*

MS Berg Collection. Address: Richard Bentley Esquire | New Burlington Street | London | W.

Gad's Hill, Higham, by Rochester
Twenty Fifth June 1857

My Dear Sir

When I get a day to myself from the business in which poor Jerrold's death has immersed me, I will not fail to read the book of which you give me so interesting an account. In the meantime I will have it read by some one else, on whom, if it be really deserving, it will not be lost.[†1]

Will you come down and dine with us on Sunday the 5th.? We shall be quite alone. We have to act to the Queen on the previous night, but shall return here by a train which leaves London Bridge at ten minutes to eleven in the forenoon. If the day will suit you, we might all come down together. And if the country be half as beautiful then as it is now, I think you will be pleased with this neighbourhood.

There are various trains in the evening, for getting back to town.

Believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esquire.

To HENRY WASHBOURNE,[†2] 25 JUNE 1857*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: Henry Washbourne Esquire | 25 Ivy Lane | Paternoster Row | London | E. C.

Gad's Hill, Higham, by Rochester
Twenty Fifth June 1857

Dear Sir

I am greatly obliged to you for the book[†3] you have done me the favor to send me, and for the very pleasant letter accompanying it. It commends the book to me, I assure you, in a most agreeable manner, and I hope to be as good a reader in your case as you have been in mine.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Henry Washbourne Esquire

To WILKIE COLLINS, 26 JUNE 1857

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Friday Night | Twenty Sixth June, 1857

My Dear Collins

I am so sensible of that First Act's requiring — for the old hands — so much care in a less feverish atmosphere than the Theatre, that I must propose Rehearsals of the Ladies here (our house is stripped, and has plenty of room), on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday.[†1] The hour must rest principally with Mrs. Dickenson,[†2] but I should like it best in the evening — say at 8. However, my time is the Play's. There is a great deal at stake, and it must be well done. Will you see Mrs. Dickenson between this and Monday's Rehearsal, and consult her convenience on the point?

I shall be at the Gallery during the greater part of tomorrow, and shall dine at the Garrick at 6 before going to the Concert.

Ever Faithfully
CD.

To DANIEL MACLISE, 26 JUNE 1857*

MS Benoliel Collection.

IN REMEMBRANCE OF THE LATE MR. DOUGLAS JERROLD.
COMMITTEE'S OFFICE, GALLERY OF ILLUSTRATION,
REGENT STREET.
Friday Twenty Sixth June 1857.

My Dear Maclise. I am very happy to have your note. The greatest desire I had in asking you to receive H. M. was that you should see the play. We were all much disappointed that you lost it before, because we believed you would appreciate it. You will find plenty of room for yourself and the best situation.

Ever Faithfully
CD.

To C. [M.] SMITH,[†1] 27 JUNE 1857

Extract in Carnegie Book Shop catalogue, No. 228; MS 1 p.; dated Tavistock House, London, 27 June 57; addressed C. D. Smith.

I ... shall not fail to send the order you have had the goodness to give me, to the bookseller forthwith.

To JOHN THOMPSON, 28 JUNE 1857

Mention in American Book Prices Current, No. 79, 1973; MS 1 p.; addressed John; dated 28 June 57.

Enclosing a list of things to be fetched from Mr. Stanfield's.

To J. E. MAYALL, 30 JUNE 1857*

MS Mrs Gladys Wheen Ross. Address: J. E. Mayall Esquire | 224 Regent Street | W.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Thirtieth June 1857

My Dear Sir

I thank you heartily for your admirable photograph of poor Jerrold, and I shall carefully preserve it.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

J. E. Mayall Esquire

To SIR JOSEPH PAXTON, 30 JUNE 1857*

MS British Library.

IN REMEMBRANCE OF THE LATE MR. DOUGLAS JERROLD.
COMMITTEE'S OFFICE, GALLERY OF ILLUSTRATION,
REGENT STREET.
Tuesday Thirtieth June 1857.

My Dear Paxton

It will be necessary to assemble here by half past 8 on Saturday, as the Queen has appointed to be here precisely at 9.

Can you lend us any plants in pots, for the occasion, and give us any cut flowers? All such contributions, Chiswickian, Sydenhamian, or Devonshirian,[†1] will be joyfully received.

Faithfully Yours Ever
CHARLES DICKENS

Sir Joseph Paxton M. P.

July

To JOSEPH LANGFORD,[†2] 2 JULY 1857

Mention in Royal Commission on Historical Manuscripts (1974); dated 2 July 57; addressed Joseph Langford.

Enclosing invitation cards for "Queen's Night" and reading of Christmas Carol.

To SAMUEL PHELPS, 2 JULY 1857

MS Rosenbach Museum.

IN REMEMBRANCE OF THE LATE MR. DOUGLAS JERROLD.
COMMITTEE'S OFFICE, GALLERY OF ILLUSTRATION,
REGENT STREET.
Second July 1857.

My Dear Phelps.

We shall not have above 20 people on the Queen's night, but I have managed to lay violent hands on these two cards for yourself and Mrs. Phelps. Observe the directions as to time.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To W. M. THACKERAY, 2 JULY 1857

MS University of Texas.

IN REMEMBRANCE OF THE LATE MR. DOUGLAS JERROLD.
COMMITTEE'S OFFICE, GALLERY OF ILLUSTRATION,
REGENT STREET.
Thursday Second July 1857.

My Dear Thackeray.

I send you two tickets for the Queen's night here. Perhaps you may not care to use them, but I have written them off on the list as yours. There will not be above five and twenty present, over and above the Queen's party.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

W. M. Thackeray Esquire.

To DR CHARLES MACKAY,[†1] 3 JULY 1857*

MS Berg Collection.

Tavistock House | Friday Night | Third July 1857.

My Dear Mackay.

I need not tell you that the labor of making the arrangements to get the money to which Mr. Ashurst's[†2] letter refers, is something enormous. It is a kind of work impossible to be discharged by more than two or three men; and upon them it falls, while the arrangements are working themselves out, with a weight which really crushes out all other occupation.

Hence, and because the getting of the money necessarily precedes the discussion of the question How it shall be disposed of, I have not yet called the Committee together. That shall be done, however, as a matter of form, next week: — though I do not think that they can come to any decision even then, pending the raising of the fund. I reserve my own opinion on Mr. Ashurst's view of the case until we come together. I apprehend that there is very little probability of our differing among ourselves, when we can have but one interest and one desire.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Mackay Esquire

To WILLIAM IRVINE,[†1] 4 JULY 1857*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

IN REMEMBRANCE OF THE LATE MR. DOUGLAS JERROLD.
COMMITTEE'S OFFICE, GALLERY OF ILLUSTRATION,

REGENT STREET.
Saturday Fourth July 1857.

Sir

I beg to say in reply to your letter, that I shall be happy to take charge of the subscription to which it refers; but that I can only do so, on behalf of this Committee, by recording it as payment for a ticket or tickets for one or more of the occasions set forth on the other side.[†2] In remitting it, you will do me the favor, perhaps, to let me know what tickets shall be sent to you.

As the body whom I represent in this communication never address any solicitation or explanation to any quarter, beyond such as may be supposed to be conveyed in the printed line at the head of this sheet of paper, I can only very slightly follow your reference to the money-affairs of the late Mr. Jerrold's family. It is not true that Mr. Jerrold left no provision whatever; but the other printed paragraph to which you refer (by whom originated I don't know) is as preposterously exaggerated as anything I have ever seen in my life.[†3]

I am Sir | Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. William Irvine.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 4 JULY 1857

Extract in Bangs & Co. catalogue Nos 739 & 741 (c. 1893); MS (3rd person) 2 pp.; dated 4 July 57.

Mr. Dickens receives letters from unknown[†4] correspondents by hundreds rather than scores, and he can only respect their confidence and lament his inability to serve them.

To JOHN FORSTER, [5 AND 6 JULY 1857]

Extracts in F, XI, iii, 830-1 and VIII, iii, 653. Date: 5 and 6 July according to Forster.

My gracious sovereign was so pleased that she sent round begging me to go and see her and accept her thanks.[†1] I replied that I was in my Farce dress, and must beg to be excused. Whereupon she sent again, saying that the dress[†2] "could not be so ridiculous as that," and repeating the request. I sent my duty in reply, but again hoped her Majesty would have the kindness to excuse my presenting myself in a costume and appearance that were not my own. I was mighty glad to think, when I woke this morning, that I had carried the point.

Difficulties over water supplies for Gad's Hill. We are still boring for water here, at the rate of two pounds per day for wages.[†3] The men seem to like it very much, and to be perfectly comfortable.

To EDWARD EDWARDS,[†1] 6 JULY 1857*

MS Miss L. E. Godden.

Gad's Hill Place, Higham, by Rochester
Sixth July 1857

Sir

I beg to acknowledge with many thanks, the receipt of your kind letter and its accompanying curious and interesting book.[†2] I accept the work with much pleasure, and am truly gratified by your manner of offering it to me.

Faithfully yours
CHARLES DICKENS

E. Edwards Esquire

To RICHARD BENTLEY, 8 JULY 1857*

MS Berg Collection.

Tavistock House | Eighth July, 1857

My Dear Mr. Bentley

The terms of your note make me fear that you over-rate my power of being serviceable to you.[†3] Many people do so, in many ways, almost daily. I am always afraid of it.

I shall be here on Saturday morning at half past ten. You may command my attention at that hour, if it should suit your convenience.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esquire

To DANIEL MACLISE, 8 JULY 1857

MS Dickens House.

Tavistock House | Eighth July, 1857

My Dear Maclise

We may cry quits. I cannot possibly have given you more pleasure through Richard Wardour,[†4] than you have given me through your appreciation of it. In that perpetual struggle after an expression of the Truth, which is at once the pleasure and the pain of the lives of workers in the Arts, the interest of such a character to me is that it enables me, as it were, to write a book in company instead of in my own solitary room, and to feel its effect coming freshly back upon me from the reader. With such a reader as you to send it back, it is a most fascinating exercise. I could blow off my superfluous fierceness, in nothing so curious to me.

I shall take you at your word! When we have done, I shall send you the book[†1] to annotate.[†2]

You should have seen the Company's appreciation of your appreciation, when I told them of it. You really would have felt pleased with their thorough knowledge of its worth.

The Queen was undoubtedly wonderfully taken.[†3] I had a letter on Sunday, of the most unofficial and uncourtly character. She sent for me after the Play, but I beg[†4] to be excused from presenting myself in any dress but my own.

When will you come down to Gad's Hill?[†5]

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL, 8 JULY 1857

MS Mr St John G. A. Sechiari. Date: Printed heading gives 185 — on date-line; only in 1857 was 8 July a Wednesday; handwriting supports.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS,
Wednesday Evening Eighth July 185[7]

Messrs. Chapman and Hall

Please deliver to the Bearer, one copy of the American Notes, Cheap Edition,[†6] for me.

CHARLES DICKENS

To TOM TAYLOR,[†7] 8 JULY 1857

MS Huntington Library.

Household Words Office
Wednesday Night | Eighth July 1857

My Dear Taylor

By all means as to Wigan's[†8] committee,[†9] and delighted to join it. I should take shame to myself for having forgotten to reply, if I had not been perpetually busy in one way or other with poor Jerrold's matter.

It seems to me that the best thing you can do as to the Prologue[†1] is to choose your own speaker.[†2] Let me know who it is to be, and I will nail that name on Webster's forehead. Webster or other, man, woman, or child, surely you are the proper man to say "I have such an idea, and I desire it to be done in such a way."

Faithfully Yours Ever
CHARLES DICKENS

Tom Taylor Esquire.

To BENJAMIN WEBSTER, [8 JULY 1857]

Envelope only,[†3] MS British Library. Address: Benjamin Webster Esquire | Theatre Royal | Liverpool. PM 8 July 1857.

To THOMAS BEARD, 9 JULY 1857

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Place | Edgeware Road | W.

Tavistock House | Thursday Evening | Ninth July, 1857.

My Dear Beard

I omitted to ask you yesterday, whether you would like to see the Play from the Proscenium Wing, on Saturday night.[†4] If you would, managerial potentiality can achieve it. In that case, be in the entrance hall (where we went in yesterday) at 1/4 before 8, and Walter shall be waiting to bring you round to the stage.

Ever Heartily
CD.

To ARTHUR RYLAND, 9 JULY 1857*

MS Mrs Quinney.

[†a]In Memory of the late Mr. Douglas Jerrold.

Gallery of Illustration, Regent Street[†a]
Thursday Ninth July 1857

My Dear Mr. Ryland

I want to consult you about the hopefulness of doing the Frozen Deep, two nights running, in Birmingham.

I am afraid of the Town Hall.[†1] It would be too large for the ladies, and too large for the scenery. Dee's large room[†2] (if there should be none larger and better) would be the place, I think, for the purpose.

We should have to take off 28 feet deep for the stage — and we should have by the way to contract with a Carpenter to put up the stage. Now, what could we get into that room, each night, in money? What do you think we might charge for such a performance, and how many would the place hold? And could we get the necessary audience at the price necessary to remunerate us, two consecutive nights.

The thing is making such a noise here,[†3] that I believe we could fill St. Paul's if we played there. But the difficulty is, that we must not play in too large a space.

Taking it out of London at all, I would rather take it to Birmingham than anywhere. The question is, can it be done? Can you suggest any better place than Dee's Room? Will you counsel me generally?[†4]

In great haste | Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Arthur Ryland Esquire.

To WILLIAM J. CLEMENT, 10 JULY 1857

MS Huntington Library.

Tavistock House | Friday July Tenth 1857.

My Dear Clement

Your note received this morning amazes me. Within two or three days after the receipt of the poor boy's[†1] Manuscript,[†2] I returned it to you in a letter replying to yours on the subject. I cannot quite accurately recall whether I was here or at Gravesend; but I strongly incline to the belief that I was at the latter place.[†3] In that case I posted the letter with my own hand; but in any case I most positively KNOW[†4] that I dispatched my reply to you, and sent the MS with it.

The exact words of my answer I have necessarily forgotten; having an immense correspondence and a constantly occupied mind. I remember that I had felt in a difficulty what to write, without encouraging hopes that might prove to be fallacious. I believe I told you in effect that there were many little points of merit in the juvenile production, but that I saw no signs in it of the author being able to make an advance on a very general kind of ability, or being able to do more than many young men do — not very successfully. I hinted at the difference between what is clever and meritorious among private friends, and what is addressed to the Public — who have nothing whatever to do with the circumstances under which any work is produced, and can only be expected to accept it for its own sake. I have an impression that I finished by saying that if the young man should ever wish to offer anything to Household Words, I would read it myself if you would send it to me.

Pray understand that I have not the slightest doubt of this letter's having been posted; and that I have a conviction very little short of certainty, that I posted it myself.

I must indeed have changed very much, and cast my nature as a snake does his skin, if I could have neglected you for whom I have a truly affectionate regard, and whom I first knew through our poor dear Talfourd.[†5]

Mrs. Dickens unites with me in cordial remembrances to Mrs. Clement, and all your house.

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

William J. Clement Esquire

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 10 JULY 1857†

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | 1 Stratton Street | Piccadilly | W.

Tavistock House | Friday Tenth July, 1857

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I have been obliged to postpone Walter's photograph visit,[†1] because, between the outfitter,[†2] and the Hindustanee, and the India House, and the Passage preparations, I thought I descried that he was getting dazed, and had best have a few quiet hours with his brothers, just home from Boulogne after a year's absence.[†3] I have sent him down to them again to day; but tomorrow he will go to King's College.[†4] I a little doubt there being time left for him to learn the Art to any real purpose — but I have not said this to him; I only say it to you, in order that you may understand that he has not been remiss in his appreciation of your great kindness.

At Shepherd's Bush on Wednesday, all was in excellent order. No complaints or shortcomings of any kind. Alice Matthews however, very poorly again. I went carefully through my proposed alteration; and left instructions with the builder[†5] to send me an estimate. When I get it, I will propose an appointment, if you will make one with me, to explain to you exactly what I mean.

I know my plan is a good one, — because it is mine! Seriously, I am certain it has the merit of being simple, easy, cheap, rather ingenious, and easily made with the people in the house. It brings in all the existing materials — would make the long room remarkably airy and healthy — would give us a better bedroom (much better) than we now have over it — and a room for a sick girl besides.

At Gad's Hill, we have left off digging for water, and are now boring. I watch the process with the resignation of despair.

We are suffering a good deal from Andersen.[†6] The other day we lost him when we came up to London Bridge Terminus,[†1] and he took a Cab by himself. The Cabman driving him through the new unfinished street at Clerkenwell,[†2] he thought he was driving him into remote fastnesses, to rob and murder him. He consequently arrived here, with all his money, his watch, his pocket book, and documents, in his boots — and it was a tremendous business to unpack him and get them off. I have arrived at the conviction that he cannot speak Danish; and the best of it, is, that his Translatress[†3] declares he can't — is ready to make oath of it before any magistrate.

With love to Mrs. Brown

Dear Miss Coutts | Ever Affecy. & faithfully Yours

CD.

To F. W. HAMSTEDE,[†4] 10 JULY 1857*

MS Mr Nicolas Bentley.

Gallery of Illustration | Friday Tenth July, 1857

My Dear Sir

I did not quite understand the exact purport of your note, until I looked at it again a minute ago, after hearing from Webster.

It is my impression that it would scarcely do to introduce the duet to which you refer, in Black Eyed Susan. The situation is not favorable to it, and it does not belong to the piece — which is well known to the Public. But if you approve of my asking Mr. Allen[†5] to sing Black Eyed Susan, I will immediately write to him.[†6]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

F. W. Hamstede Esquire

To W. C. MACREADY, 10 JULY 1857*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Friday Tenth July 1857

My Dearest Macready

Will you let me know what you did respecting money for Ned when he went out to India? As what you gave him in hand, after paying his passage, and what credit you lodged for him at Calcutta. I am particularly anxious not to do too much in this regard; but at the same time not to do too little, and to do right.

I still hope you may come to Gad's Hill before the summer is out. It is a place to repose in, and admire the beautiful Kentish country from. It goes sorely against the grain with me to come among London streets, heat, gas, and crowds; but I have gone into this Jerrold matter, and won't come out without a round sum.[†1] (I wish you could have heard the Carol reading in St. Martin's Hall! I never saw such an audience in my life.)[†2]

Catherine and Georgina, Mary, Katey, Charley, and Walter — the rest are at Gad's Hill — send their loves to all Sherborne House. You may be sure I send mine.

Ever and Ever affectionately

CD.

P.S. You will be charmed to hear that Ristori is making a dismal failure here this season, as to drawing.[†3]

To FRANK STONE, 10 JULY 1857*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Tenth July, 1857

My Dear Stone

The half year's account for the Front Court Gardening is
For the Front Enclosure

Making a Total

Which, divided by three, leaves us £2.0.0 each, to pay.[†4]

Affecy. Ever

CD.

To A. DICKERS SENR,[†1] 11 JULY 1857*

MS Berg Collection. Address: Mr. A. Dickers Senr. | Golder Farm | Tetsworth | Oxon.

[†a]In remembrance of the late Mr. Jerrold.

Gallery of Illustration | Regent Street London[†a]

Eleventh July, 1857.

Sir.

I beg to acknowledge the safe receipt of your cheque for two guineas in aid of this Memorial Fund. Allow me to enclose you four stall tickets; two, admitting to Mr. Thackeray's lecture announced in the accompanying printed paper;[†2] two, to my own Reading.

I think it right to inform you that Mr. Jerrold has not left his family in want; but that he was in the course of making a good provision for them, and would have succeeded in doing so, if his life had been spared a little longer.

Your plain and sincere letter has interested me very much, I assure you, and has given me great pleasure.

I am Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. A Dickers Senr.

To THOMAS EDELSTON,[†3] 11 JULY 1857

MS Mr Lawrence Smith. Address: Thomas Edelston Esquire | 13 Lancaster Road, | Preston.

[†a]In remembrance of the late Mr. Douglas Jerrold
Gallery of Illustration, Regent Street.[†a]
Saturday July eleventh, 1857

Dear Sir

We beg to acknowledge, with many thanks the safe receipt of your remittance of £14.4.5, the balance of profit on the[†4] performance[†5] at the Theatre Royal Preston.[†6]

Without in the least recognizing the veracity of any statement you may have seen in print respecting the pecuniary affairs of the late Mr. Jerrold's family (we make no representation whatever on the subject, and so no other form of address to the public, than the line at the top of this sheet of paper), we beg to add that we most cordially approve of your having paid the night's expenses of the Theatre. We particularly desire on all occasions that no one should be permitted to make any sacrifice in this cause which cannot be reasonably made and well afforded. And this is our anxious wish, not only because the thing is right in itself, but because we are well acquainted with the late Mr. Jerrold's feeling on such subjects.

Repeating our acknowledgements to yourself, and to all Preston friends, we have the honor to be,
Dear Sir | Your faithful Servants
CHARLES DICKENS
ARTHUR W. W. SMITH

Thomas Edelston Esquire[†1]

To CHARLES RIEU,[†2] [?12 JULY 1857]

Envelope only, MS Dr Andrew Sanders. Address: Charles Rieu Esquire | Department of MSS. | British Museum | London, W. C., PM 12 July 57.

To FRANCESCO BERGER, [13 JULY 1857]

Mention in Autograph Prices Current, I (1914-16), 51; MS 2 pp.; dated 13 July 57; addressed Francesco Berger. Address (envelope, Sotheby's catalogue, June 1955): Francesco Berger Esquire | 36 Thurloe Square | Brompton | S. W. PM 13 July 1857.

Referring to the Douglas Jerrold memorial concert.

To W. C. MACREADY, 13 JULY 1857

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Monday July Thirteenth, 1857.

My Dearest Macready

Many thanks for your Indian information. I shall act upon it in the most exact manner, †a except that as Walter is not so manly in appearance or manner as Ned was when he went out,†3 I shall strike off £20 from the letter of credit.†a He sails next Monday.†4 Charley and I go down with him to Southampton, next Sunday.

We are all delighted with the prospect of seeing you at Gadshill. These are my Jerrold-engagements. On Friday the 24th. I have to repeat my reading at St. Martin's Hall.†5 On Saturday the 25th. to repeat The Frozen Deep at the Gallery of Illustration for the last time. On Thursday the 30th. or Friday the 31st. I shall probably read at Manchester. Deane, the General Manager of the Exhibition is going down tonight, and will arrange all the preliminaries for me. If you and I went down to Manchester together and were there on a Sunday, he would give us the whole Exhibition to ourselves. It is probable I think (as he estimates the receipts of a night at about £700) that we may, in about a fortnight or so after the Reading, play The Frozen Deep in Manchester. But of this contingent engagement I at present know no more than you do.

Now, will you upon this exposition of affairs, choose your own time for coming to us, and, when you have made your choice, write to me at Gad's Hill? I am going down this afternoon for rest (which means violent cricket with the boys), after last Saturday night — which was a teazer, but triumphant. The St. Martin's Hall audience†1 was, I must confess, a very extraordinary thing. The two thousand and odd people were like one, and their enthusiasm was something awful.

— Yet I have seen that, before, too. Your young remembrance cannot recall the man, but he flourished in my day — a great actor Sir — a noble actor — thorough artist! I have seen him do wonders in that way. He retired from the stage early in life (having a monomaniacal delusion that he was old), and is said to be still living in your County.

All join in kindest love to your dear sister and all the rest.

Ever my Dearest Macready | Most affectionately Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To FRANK STONE, 13 JULY 1857*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Gallery of Illustration | Monday Thirteenth July, 1857.

My Dear Stone.

I have booked you here for 3 Stalls for the 25th. in a capital place. If you will call or send, on or after Thursday, they will be ready for you in an envelope — 3 guineas to pay.

Ever Affecy.

CD.

To RICHARD BENTLEY, 16 JULY 1857*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Gad's Hill Place, Higham, by Rochester
Thursday Sixteenth July 1857

My Dear Mr. Bentley.

I have not yet had an opportunity of seeing Mr. Evans; — I mention the circumstance, merely that you may rest assured I have not forgotten our conversation.

Mr. Shirley Brooks, I have seen. And I hope I may now be able to arrange that matter.[†1] As I must be in town and in your neighbourhood, on Saturday, I will endeavour to call in New Burlington Street from 12 to 1.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esquire.

To CHARLES DE LA PRYME, 17 JULY 1857†

MS Doheny Memorial Library.

Tavistock House | Seventeenth July 1857

My Dear Sir

Although the poor boy's[†2] writing is admirable, considering the circumstances in which he has been placed, I am strongly inclined to think that the less he is encouraged to do in that way for the future, the happier he will be. I would most decidedly gratify his own inclination — which appears to me to be a proof of his good sense — and send him to Australia.[†3]

I cannot remember whether I sent you my subscription to the book.[†4] In case I did not, will you have the kindness to let me know as much in one line.

My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Reverend Charles De la Pryme.[†5]

To CHARLES KENT,[†6] 18 JULY 1857*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

IN REMEMBRANCE OF THE LATE MR. DOUGLAS JERROLD.
COMMITTEE'S OFFICE, GALLERY OF ILLUSTRATION,
REGENT STREET.
Saturday Eighteenth July 1857.

Dear Sir

On coming here from the country this morning, I found your note — just brought down to me from Tavistock House. I have to act here tonight, and tomorrow morning early to take my second boy to Southampton where he embarks for India.

Under these circumstances, I think it will be best for you to see Mr. Wills (who is altogether in my confidence), at the Household Words, say at 12 on Monday. My ability to be of use to you there, necessarily depends on your ability to propose any kind of papers likely to be available for the Journal.[†1] But I shall be heartily glad to serve you, if I possibly can. Trust me for that.

In great haste | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. Charles Kent Esquire

To BENJAMIN WEBSTER, 18 JULY 1857

MS Dickens House. Address: Benjamin Webster Esquire | Theatre Royal Adelphi.

IN REMEMBRANCE OF THE LATE MR. DOUGLAS JERROLD.
COMMITTEE'S OFFICE, GALLERY OF ILLUSTRATION,
REGENT STREET.
Saturday 18th. July 1857.

My Dear Webster

Allen will sing Black Eye'd Susan on your night.[†2]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Benjamin Webster Esquire.

To EDMUND YATES, 19 JULY 1857

MS Robert H. Taylor Collection, Princeton University.

Tavistock House | Sunday Nineteenth July, 1857

My Dear Yates.

Although I date this as above, I really write it from Southampton (dont notice this fact in your reply, for I shall be in town on Wednesday). I have come here on an errand which will grow familiar to you before you know that Time has flapped his wings over your head. Like me, you will find those babies grow to be young men, before you are quite sure they are born.[†3] Like me, you will have great teeth drawn with a wrench, and will only then know that you ever cut them. I am here to send Walter away over what they call in Green Bush Melodramas[†4]

"the Big Drink"[†1] and I dont at all know this day how he comes to be mine, or I, his.

I don't write to say this — or to say how, seeing Charley and he going aboard the Ship before me just now, I suddenly came into possession of a photograph of my own back at 16 and 20, and also into a suspicion that I had doubled the last age. I merely write to mention that Telbin and his wife are going down to Gad's Hill with us, about mid-day next Sunday, and that if you and Mrs. Yates will come too, we shall be delighted to have you.[†2] We can give you a bed, and you can be in town (if you have such a savage necessity) by 20 minutes before 10 on Monday morning.

I was very much pleased (as I had reason to be) with your account of the Play in the Daily News.[†3] I thank you heartily.

[†a]Monday morning.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

It is now half-past 5 by Greenwich time — whatever that is — I never did know and never shall. Wills, I believe, knows all about it.[†a]

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 20 JULY 1857

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | 1 Stratton Street | Piccadilly | W.

Radley's Hotel, | Opposite the Terminus & Dock House,
Southampton.
Monday Twentieth July 1857.

My Dear Miss Coutts

I hasten to report that I have just now (one o'Clock) come back in the Steam Tender, from putting the poor boy on board. He was cut up for a minute or so when I bade him good bye, and also yesterday morning when he took leave of them in town, and also on Saturday when he left his little brothers at Gad's Hill; but on all three occasions he recovered directly, and conducted himself like a Man.[†1] He leaned over the side looking after Charley and me, quite composed and comfortable. He had already found an old schoolfellow on board, and the Captain came away with me to assure me that he should have every possible protection, assistance, and encouragement. He was anxious that I should send his love to you and Mrs. Brown, and a thousand thanks to you for your kind letters. I add mine for all your kindness, out of a heart almost full.

I have appointed to meet Mr. Bird[†2] about my plan, at Shepherds Bush on Wednesday at 12. As I come back from there, I will take the chance of finding you in Stratton Street.

Ever Faithfully and affecy.

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts

To HENRY AUSTIN, 21 JULY 1857*

MS Morgan Library.

Gad's Hill Place | Tuesday July Twenty First, 1857

My Dear Henry

I really begin to think we are a little unfortunate here. The whole of that Drain from the wash-house is stopped up through a considerable part of the pipe; and the garden (just beginning to recover from the workmen and look pretty), is dug up again by people whom I have been obliged to have in from Strood;[†3] the whole place having been stopped. The chief of those local operatives shews how it is impossible that the present Drain could do — how it chokes at the "elbow"[†4] — which it certainly does — how a big pipe meets a little pipe "what can't carry on it off" — with various other binding chains of argument. The result is that in perfect despair, infidelity, and misery, I have told him to do what he thinks best. And what he thinks best, is to make two little cesspools, one at the "elber" and one at the "washers" — which works "will receive any sileage as may appear to flow, and leave the water free for to pass, which likeways if anythin should be wrong then, why you only takes up a stone or wotever you thinks most proper, instead of making this here frightful mess." Conscious of nothing but a frightful mess I have feebly acceded. I had some idea of running away from the place altogether, but have acceded instead.

(They are now forcing long sticks through the choked pipes, which I foresee will come out into the eye of a man who is at present lying on his stomach looking in at the other end of the pipe — who will be blinded — and who will have a claim to be supported for life.)

No change in the Well. "Ned" says, "still flint, but whether a lane of flint or only a Wane[†1] is as yet unbeknownst."

Ever affecy.

CD.

To JOHN DEANE, 21 JULY 1857

MS Mr W. A. Foyle.

Gad's Hill, Higham, by Rochester
Tuesday Twenty First July, 1857

My Dear Deane.

I don't like to answer the enclosed letter,[†2] without first shewing it to you, and asking you what answer you would recommend me to give.

Many thanks for your two letters in behalf of my boy. I left the poor fellow on board the Indus yesterday, in good spirits — as little cast down as, at 16, one could reasonably hope to be with the world of India before one.

I go to town tomorrow, and purpose remaining there until Sunday

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Deane Esquire

To WILLIAM JERDAN,[†3] 21 JULY 1857

MS Dickens House.

Gad's Hill, Higham, by Rochester
Tuesday Twenty First July, 1857

My Dear Jerdan

In addition to the whirl and fatigue of the Jerrold Remembrance matter, I have been at Southampton these two days, embarking my second boy for India. The poor fellow steamed away yesterday, and I have a day's rest on the grass here, to think whether the best definition of man may not be, after all, that he is (for his sins) a parting and farewell-taking animal.

I have not the means of reference at hand, but I think I may say I am sure that the brief contribution has been published — that both the brief contributions have been published.[†4]

Andersen went to Paris, to go thence to Dresden and thence home, last Wednesday morning. I took him over to Maidstone, and booked him for Folkestone.[†5] He had been here, five weeks. He had spoken of you with much regard, and, I understood or fancied, had seen you.[†1] But whenever he got to London, he got into wild entanglements of Cabs and Sherry, and never seemed to get out of them again until he came back here, and cut out paper into all sorts of patterns, and gathered the strangest little nosegays in the woods.[†2] His unintelligible vocabulary was marvellous. In French[†3] or Italian, he was Peter the Wild Boy[†4] — in English, the Deaf and Dumb Asylum.[†5] My eldest boy swears that the ear of man cannot recognize his German;[†6] and his translatress[†7] declares to Bentley that he can't speak Danish!

One day he came home to Tavistock House, apparently suffering from corns that had ripened in two hours. It turned out that a Cab Driver had brought him from the City, by way of the new unfinished thoroughfare through Clerkenwell. Satisfied that the Cabman was bent on robbery and murder, he had put his watch and money into his boots — together with a Bradshaw, a pocket book, a pair of scissors, a penknife, a book or two, a few letters of introduction, and some other miscellaneous property.

These are all the particulars I am in a condition to report. He received a good many letters — lost (I should say) a good many more — and was for the most part utterly conglomerated — with a general impression that everything was going to clear itself up, "tomorrow".

Ever Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

To ROBERT PEMBERTON,[†1] 21 JULY 1857*

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds. Address: Robert Pemberton Esquire | 33 Euston Square | London | N. W.

Gad's Hill, Higham, by Rochester | Twenty First July, 1857

Sir

I beg to thank you for your obliging letter, and your book.[†2] I have read the latter with a strong conviction of your earnest sincerity in a great object, and of your true desire to do good. You will excuse my adding that I am not so clear as to your proposed means in their extreme assertion, or as to the machinery through which in "The Infant Drama" you set them forth. I mention this as the truth, without the least intention of arrogantly putting my opinion up, and yours down. But I cannot honestly say that I think "The Philosopher" a happy exponent of his theory: or, that I think the compliments paid by the other characters to that personage, likely to advance it.[†3]

Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

Robert Pemberton Esquire.

To TOM TAYLOR, 22 JULY 1857

Extract in Phillips catalogue, Nov 1993; MS 1 p.; addressed Tom Taylor; 22 July 57.

Wednesday Evening Twenty Second July 1857

About the Prologue.[†4] When will you send it to me at the Gallery of Illustration, and who is to speak it?[†5] You know what our friends of the theatres are.

To HENRY AUSTIN, 23 JULY 1857*

MS Morgan Library.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS,
Thursday Twenty Third July 1857

My Dear Henry

Your letter and I have been crossing each other in the wildest way. I have only now got it — 5 this afternoon. The mischief is done; the little cesspools (very small) are made; if harm should prove to be done, it must be undone again.

What could I do? Forlornly overflown with black mud and choked with the same — cook in tears — all that trouble and expence of Nye's[†1] men, useless — garden chaotically dragged up by the roots — everybody tearing their own hair and mine too — what could[†2] I do!

Ha ha ha! Yah — Ho ho!

Maniacally
CHARLES DICKENS

To GEORGE BELL,[†3] 23 JULY 1857*

MS Messrs G. Bell & Sons.

Tavistock House | Twenty Third July, 1857.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his Compliments to Mr. Bell, and begs to thank him for his obliging note. Mr. Dickens's absence from town has delayed his receipt of it until this morning.

He will be here at 2 tomorrow. But he may add that international copyright is a question of deferred justice, as to which he has no present faith or hope whatsoever.[†4]

To RICHARD BENTLEY, 23 JULY 1857*

MS Berg Collection. Address: Private. | Richard Bentley Esquire | New Burlington Street | W.

Tavistock House | Thursday Twenty Third July | 1857

My Dear Mr. Bentley

Coming here yesterday Afternoon, I found your note awaiting me. I write this at once, without having seen Mr. Brooks, because I wish to have one question plainly comprehended between us — I mean, between you and me.

When the publication of the novel in a serial form, was first referred to between you and me at Gad's Hill, I understood such serial form to apply to its publication in monthly portions in your Miscellany. Your note dated the 20th. and received by me yesterday evening, mentions "a Monthly Serial". The words may have the same meaning, but I wish to ask you whether they have or no?[†5] Because, what I have as yet said to Mr. Brooks, has been altogether based on the idea that he should supply the story in portions, for monthly publication in "Bentley's Miscellany."[†1]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esquire

To SIR CULLING EARDLEY,[†2] 23 JULY 1857*

MS Mr Edward V. E. Fremantle.

Tavistock House, London. | Twenty Third July, 1857.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Sir Culling Eardley, and begs to express his regret that his absence from town has prevented his receiving Sir Culling Eardley's obliging and highly interesting invitation[†3] until this morning — when it is his misfortune to have business engagements and appointments for the whole of the day.

To JOEL PINNEY,[†4] 23 JULY 1857*

MS Mr Harry E. Gould, Jr.

Private

Tavistock House, London
Thursday Twenty Third July, 1857

Dear Sir

As I reside in Kent during the summer, I have only this morning received your obliging letter and its accompanying book.[†5]

The latter I have not yet had time (I need scarcely add) to read. But I have made a general acquaintance with its contents, and I purpose to know them better.

As you refer to my own habits, you may be interested to learn that for the last fifteen or twenty years they have been of the most exact and punctual nature. I portion out my time methodically, take a great deal of exercise and fresh air regularly, am probably as much in all the winds that blow as any country gentleman, bathe in large quantities of cold water all the year round, and can keep a Swiss guide on his mettle during a day's journey. A large part of my life is necessarily passed at my desk, but never to the interruption of these compensatory habits.[†6]

Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

J. Pinney Esquire

To GEORGE BELL, 24 JULY 1857*

ME Messrs G. Bell & Sons.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS,
Friday Twenty Fourth July 1857

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his Compliments to Mr. Bell, and begs to say that he is unfortunately prevented from keeping his appointment to day; but that he will write in a day or two, and make another.

To W. R. SAMS,[†1] 24 JULY 1857*

MS Huntington Library.

Gallery of Illustration, Regent Street
Friday Twenty Fourth July, 1857.

Dear Sir

Excuse my observing that I must beg you to bring no one on the stage here, either during or after a performance. It is an infringement of a rule I have always made,[†2] and the strict observance of which I feel it necessary to uphold.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. R. Sams Esquire

To BENJAMIN WEBSTER, 24 JULY 1857*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Gallery of Illustration | Twenty Fourth July 1857 | Friday

My Dear Webster

Here is the Prologue.[†3] Tom Taylor wishes you to speak it. I hope you will like it.[†4]

Faithfully Ever
CHARLES DICKENS

Benjamin Webster Esquire

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 25 JULY 1857*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Saturday Twenty Fifth July 1857

My Dear Miss Coutts

I send you this note to say that I received a letter early this morning from Arthur

Smith, in which no allusion was made to you in any way, but in which I immediately perceived your ever kind and thoughtful influence. The truth is, we had been suddenly thrown on a decision yesterday,[†1] but that I doubted it very much when I was before that vast assembly last night,[†2] and resolved that I would to day discuss our engaging actresses. We are committed to nothing, and have resolved not to act there[†3] at all, but to play once more (this day fortnight) at the Gallery of Illustration, which is in effect but a great Drawing Room.

We must get £2,000 free of expences, before we leave off. I hope I shall be left free for Gad's Hill by the middle of August. It is rather hard work, after a long book.[†4]

With love to Mrs. Brown
Ever Faithfully and affecy.
CD.

To HENRY ATTWELL,[†5] 27 JULY 1857*

MS Dickens House. Address: Professor Attwell | Romford | Essex.

Gad's Hill Place, Higham, by Rochester
Twenty Seventh July, 1857

Dear Sir

I am exceedingly obliged to you for the interesting and artistic poems[†6] you have had the kindness to send me, and for your charming letter. Constant occupation has involved me in a week's arrear of correspondence which I am only mastering this Evening, or I should have written to you sooner.

Between an occasional day's rest at my little place of retirement here, and various public engagements which just now beset me, I find it very difficult to make an appointment in London. But I purpose being there on Thursday next; and if it should not be inconvenient to you to call at the Household Words Office (16 Wellington Street North, Strand) at 5 in the Afternoon, I shall be heartily glad to see you and to thank you in person.

Dear Sir | Yours faithfully and obliged
CHARLES DICKENS

Professor Attwell.[†7]

To JOHN HOLLINGSHEAD,[†1] 27 JULY 1857

Extract in Dodd, Mead & Co. catalogue (Nov. 1901); MS 1 p.; addressed John Hollingshead; dated Gad's Hill Place, 27 July 57.

I will not say that I think the thing too low and too degrading to literature to be honored with such notice.[†2] This was certainly my first impression when I began to read your Proof, but as I proceeded I felt that I need not spoil such tenderness of appreciation as yours, or wish for any reason to lose the utterance of it.[†3]

To CHARLES RIEU, 27 JULY 1857*

MS Dr Andrew Sanders. Address: Charles Rieu Esquire | Department of MSS. | British Museum | London | W. C.

Gad's Hill Place, Higham by Rochester
Monday Evening Twenty Seventh July | 1857

Dear Sir

I have the pleasure of enclosing you a cheque for the amount in which I am indebted to you.[†1] Allow me to add my best thanks to it.

It was pretty clear to me when Walter began with you that the unsettled state of mind which necessarily preceded his departure, was unfavorable to his making any great advance. But I hoped that your tuition would be of great service to him, in giving him the means of improving himself in India. I have no doubt that it has had that effect, and I was not so ungenerous or unreasonable as to expect more.

Believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Rieu Esquire

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 27 JULY 1857*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | 1 Stratton Street | Piccadilly | W.

Gad's Hill Place
Monday Night Twenty Seventh July | 1857

My Dear Miss Coutts

Enclosed is the builder's estimate. What do you say to it? It is for carrying the long room up to the ceiling of the first floor — cancelling that first floor bedroom — and making one large bedroom and one very good one, over the Laundry and wash-house.[†2]

I purpose being in town on Wednesday evening. If you would like me to come to you at any time on Thursday before 5 and will write me a line to Tavistock House making an appointment, I shall be delighted to come to you. I go away on Friday Morning, to read at Manchester.

Dear Miss Coutts | Ever Faithfully and affecy.
CHARLES DICKENS

To RICHARD BENTLEY, 28 JULY 1857*

MS Berg Collection.

Gad's Hill Place | Tuesday Twenty Eighth July, 1857

My Dear Mr. Bentley

I certainly had been aware that you had disposed of the Miscellany to Ainsworth;[†3] but I had as entirely forgotten it, until you reminded me of the fact, as if I had never heard of such a thing in my life.

I shall be in town on Thursday and will then see Mr. Brooks. I have little doubt of being able to write you my proposed way of arranging the details,[†1] in the course of that afternoon.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esquire

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 29 JULY 1857

MS Dickens House.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS,
Wednesday Twenty Ninth July 1857

My Dear Georgy.

In the bottom of my bookcase, nearest the window, are three collections of old cuttings, pamphlets, and pictures — one referring to Newgate — one to Bartholomew Fair[†2] — one to Ludgate Hill. I want the whole of the Newgate collection (that is to say, all that refers to Newgate in any way) made a parcel of, and sent up by Railway to Wilkie Collins, 2 Harley Place, New Road.[†3] Will you do this, and send Mitchell without delay to book the parcel at Higham Station? I write to you (very hurriedly), because you have seen the different packets in my hands, and can no doubt make out the Newgate one, pretty readily. Just look at the other two, to assure yourself that no Newgate scraps have fallen by mistake into either.

Love to Catherine and to all | Ever affectionately

CD.

To HENRY REEVE,[†4] 29 JULY 1857

Mention in Catalogue of the Bodley Book Shop, No. 119; MS 1 p.; dated Tavistock House, 29 July 57.

Calling his correspondent's attention to the opening paper in Household Words.[†5]

To SHIRLEY BROOKS, 30 JULY 1857

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

Household Words Office | Thirtieth July 1857

My Dear Brooks.

Unfortunately I shall merely pass through town on Sunday morning, on my way back from Manchester. But I shall leave the station for Gad's Hill on Sunday at 1, and shall be delighted to take you down with me if you can go. If not, I hope to be there until Thursday inclusive, and shall be glad to see you at any time. But I would impress upon you that I think we had best close with Bentley as soon as we can.

I send you the note to which I, having drunk of the waters of Oblivion[†1] as to Ainsworth's purchase of the Miscellany, returned the cautious reply I told you of.[†2] It now only needs to settle the money-terms;[†3] and as to those, I await the confidential knowledge of your wishes.

Believe me always | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Shirley Brooks Esquire

To T. P. COOKE, 30 JULY 1857

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: T. P. Cooke Esquire | Woburn Square | W. C.

IN REMEMBRANCE OF THE LATE MR. DOUGLAS JERROLD.

COMMITTEE'S OFFICE, GALLERY OF ILLUSTRATION,

REGENT STREET.
Thursday Thirtieth July 1857.

My Dear Mr. Cooke.

I cannot rest satisfied this morning, without writing to congratulate you on your admirable performance of last night.[†4] It was so fresh and vigorous, so manly and gallant, that I felt as if it splashed against my Theatre-heated face, along with the spray of the breezy sea.[†5] What I felt, everybody felt. I should feel it quite an impertinence to take myself out of the crowd therefore, if I could by any means help doing so. But I can't — so I hope you will feel that you bring me on yourself, and have only yourself to blame.

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

T. P. Cooke Esquire.

To THOMAS FAIRBAIRN,[†1] 30 JULY 1857*

Text from transcript by owner of MS, Mr Ulysses Walsh.

IN REMEMBRANCE OF THE LATE MR. DOUGLAS JERROLD.
COMMITTEE'S OFFICE, GALLERY OF ILLUSTRATION,
REGENT STREET.
Thursday, Thirtieth July 1857.

Dear Sir

I am exceedingly obliged to you for your kind invitation, and cordially assure you that it would give me great pleasure to accept it, if I possibly could. But I am obliged to be at Manchester on Saturday afternoon.[†2] These exertions have fatigued me so much, that a rest at my little old house in the country, is indispensable; and I have arranged to return accordingly.

Mrs. Dickens will, I am sure, be very sensible of Mrs. Fairbairn's[†3] remembrance and invitation. As I have left her in Kent, I shall send her down your Postscript by this afternoon's post.

Always Dear Sir | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Fairbairn Esquire

To FREDERICK HUDSON,[†4] 30 JULY 1857*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

IN REMEMBRANCE OF THE LATE MR. DOUGLAS JERROLD.
COMMITTEE'S OFFICE, GALLERY OF ILLUSTRATION,

REGENT STREET.
Thursday Thirtieth July 1857.

Dear Sir

Constant occupation and exertion have disabled me from keeping pace with the correspondence pouring in upon me, for many days past.

In reply to your obliging letter I beg to say that I have at present made no arrangements for the performance of The Frozen Deep, in Manchester, and that I do not know that any representation of that Play will take place there. But I am bound to add, with many thanks, that if such a thing should come to pass, I should seek the local assistance I might require, from the friends I have in the Art Treasures Exhibition: to whose sympathy and aid I am already in other respects much beholden.†5

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Dr. Hudson

To SIR JOSEPH PAXTON, 30 JULY 1857

Mention in unidentified catalogue in Chadwick Collection of Dickensiana; MS 1 p.; dated 30 July 57; addressed Paxton.

Telling him of the Duke of Devonshire's promise to subscribe £100 to the fund in memory of the late Douglas Jerrold.

To W. S. EMDEN,†1 31 JULY 1857

Extract in N, II, 865-6; MS 2 pp.; dated Tavistock House, 31 July 57; addressed W. S. Emden.

I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your note, and the Proof of your proposed bill.†2 As I made no mention of myself in association with the Prologue, when I produced the Play here,†3 I wish to avoid any mention being made of me now. I shall therefore be obliged by your merely announcing that "The original Prologue will be spoken by Mr. Frederick Vining."†4

August

To MRS FRANCES DICKINSON, [?1 AUGUST 1857]

Mention in next. Date: written between his promise on 31 July to act The Frozen Deep and his telling Collins of it on 2 Aug.

To WILKIE COLLINS, 2 AUGUST 1857

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Sunday Morning | Second August, 1857

My Dear Collins

I write this, on my way back to Gad's Hill from Manchester.

As our sum is not made up,[†5] and as I had urgent Deputation and so forth from Manchester Magnates at the Reading on Friday night, I have arranged to act the Frozen Deep in the Free Trade Hall on Friday and Saturday nights, the 21st. and 22nd.[†6] It is an immense place, and we shall be obliged to have actresses — though I have written to our prononcée[†1] friend, Mrs. Dickinson, to say that I don't fear her, if she likes to play with them.[†2] (I am already trying to get the best who have been on the stage.)[†3]

Whether Charley can play his part or not, I will tell him to let you know directly.[†4]

I had a letter from the Olympic the other day, begging me to go to a Rehearsal.[†5] I have appointed next Friday, if agreeable and convenient.

In haste | Ever Faithfully

CD.

To JOHN DEANE, 2 AUGUST 1857*

MS Private.

Tavistock House | Sunday Morning, Second August | 1857

My Dear Deane.

This scrap on my way to Gad's Hill, to say that I have written to Telbin to come straight to you by Thursday morning's express — and have written to Berger to let you know his Band requirements at once.

I cannot, on consideration, be quite sure whether yesterday's first violin[†6] was my Frozen Deep first violin, or whether I was confounding him with Seymour,[†7] long of Manchester. It is no matter.

Ever Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS[†8]

John C Deane Esquire

To FRANCESCO BERGER, 2 AUGUST 1857

Text from Royal Leamington Spa Courier, 24 Mar 1922.

Tavistock House, | Sunday, Second August, 1857.

My Dear Berger,

I write to you very hurriedly on my way back to Gad's Hill from Manchester.

It is arranged that we shall act in the Free Trade Hall[†9] at Manchester on Friday and Saturday evenings, 21st. and 22nd. It is an immense hall and my girls will have to be replaced by actresses.[†10]

Will you write as soon as you can to J. C. Deane, Esquire, Art Treasures

Exhibition,[†1] Manchester (addressing him as Dear Sir and observing that you write by arrangement with me) telling him what performers you require for the Band? He will then at once engage them from the Exhibition Orchestra (a very good one — I heard them play beautifully yesterday)[†2] and all will be ready for you.[†3] Exercise your own discretion in augmenting the Band by two or three, if you think it necessary. I would ask Mr. Deane to call them for rehearsal — say at 10 or 11 (as you think best) on the morning of Friday 21st. Do not lose time in this, as there will be an Italian Opera in the town at the same time.[†4]

I shall be at [†a]Gad's Place,[†a] Higham, by Rochester, Kent, until next Friday.

Faithfully yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Francesco Berger, Esquire.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 2 AUGUST 1857*

MS Morgan Library.

Gad's Hill Place, Higham, by Rochester

Second August 1857.

My Dear Miss Coutts

I am a little uneasy about you. I wrote to you some days ago,[†5] sending you the builders estimate for the proposed alterations at Shepherd's Bush, and asking you to tell me at what time last Thursday, I could see you. Finding no letter from you in town, I thought you might by mistake have written here. Yesterday I come home here from Manchester, and still find no letter. Hereupon I become inconsolable.

I must be in town next Saturday (for the last Frozen Deep),[†6] and could come to you at any time between 11 and 2.

With kind regard to Mrs. Brown, Ever Dear Miss Coutts

Yours faithfully and affecy.

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To WILLIAM TELBIN, [2 AUGUST 1857]

Mention in To Deane, 2 Aug 57. Date: written the same day.

To W. H. WILLS, 2 AUGUST 1857

MS Huntington Library.

Tavistock House | Sunday Second August 1857

My Dear Wills

I[†1]

write hurriedly, on my way back to Gad's Hill.

YOU[†1]

I suppose are somewhere in Cheshire or Staffordshire — as you didn't turn up yesterday.[†2]

FROZEN DEEP.[†1]

Get the Circular[†3] out, directly. Nights of acting, Friday 21st. and Saturday 22nd. Company to go down on the afternoon of Thursday 20th. Rehearsal of 3rd. act to be called in town beforehand, on account of Actresses instead of Amateur ladies. Also in the Free Trade Hall on the Friday Morning at 11.

H. W.[†1]

Can you come down to Gad's Hill with the next proofs?[†4] If yes, when? I purpose not coming up (unless obliged), before Friday.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To MRS COMPTON,[†5] 2 AUGUST 1857

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Gad's Hill Place, Higham, by Rochester
Sunday Night Second August 1857.

My Dear Mrs. Compton

We are going to play the Frozen Deep (pursuant to requisition from Town Magnates &c) at Manchester, at the New Free Trade Hall, on the nights of Friday and Saturday, the 21st. and 22nd. August.

The place is out of the question for my girls.[†6] Their action could not be seen, and their voices could not be heard. You and I have played, there and elsewhere, so sociably and happily,[†7] that I am emboldened to ask you whether you would play my sister in law, Georgina's part[†8] (Compton[†9] and Babies[†10] permitting).

We shall go down in the old pleasant way, and shall have the Art Treasures Exhibition to ourselves on the Sunday — when even "He" (as Rogers always called every pretty woman's husband),[†1] might come and join us.

What do you say? What does He say? And what does Baby say? When I use the term "Baby", I use it in two tenses — Present, and Future.

Answer me at this address, like the Juliet I saw at Drury Lane — when was it? — yesterday.[†2] And whatever your answer is, if you will say that you and Compton will meet us at the North Kent Station London Bridge, next Sunday at a quarter before One, and will come down here for a breath of sweet air, and stay all night, you will then give your old friends great pleasure. Not least among them,

Yours faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

To RICHARD BENTLEY, 3 AUGUST 1857

MS Berg Collection. Address: Richard Bentley Esquire | New Burlington Street | London | W.

Gad's Hill Place | Monday August Third, 1857

My Dear Mr. Bentley

I could not see Mr. Brooks on the day in last week when I expected to do so, by reason of his engagements clashing with mine. But I have seen him to day, and beg to send you, now, the result of our conference.

If the new story be written in 12 monthly Nos. of two sheets[†3] each (beginning at the date we have already agreed upon), it will contain a much larger quantity of matter than an ordinary novel in 3 Volumes.[†4]

And I assume that the Nos. should contain two sheets each, as that is the public experience of that form of publication.

It does not appear to me — and I hope it will not appear to you — that it is at all unreasonable to ask another Hundred Pounds for this additional labor. I may go further, and add that I sincerely regard it as a very modest proposal.

I would therefore suggest that we have a new agreement between you and Mr. Brooks for such a serial, for which you agree to give him in all Four Hundred Pounds. One hundred pounds he has already received, and will, in the agreement, duly acknowledge the receipt of; the remaining £300 you covenant to pay him in ready-money payments of £25 each, on the publication of each of the twelve Nos.

In return for these payments, you will have the copyright of the work for 3 years from the date of its completion; with the restriction that its form in twelve Nos. or one Volume is not to be altered, without Mr. Brooks's consent.

I shall be ready to conclude this agreement on Mr. Brooks's part, and to obtain his signature to it, as soon as you please. On Friday I shall be in town, and at the Household Words office at 4 O'Clock. If you see no objection to the terms I propose, Mr.

Brooks would very gladly meet you there at that time (supposing it to suit your convenience), and close the arrangement.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esquire.

To W. C. MACREADY, 3 AUGUST 1857

MS Morgan Library.

Gad's Hill Place, Higham, by Rochester
Monday Third August 1857

My Dearest Macready

I write to you in reference to your last note, as soon as I can positively know our final movements in the Jerrold matter.

We are going to wind up by acting at Manchester (on solemn requisition) on the evenings of Friday and Saturday, the 21st. and 22nd. (Actresses substituted for the girls, of course.) We shall have to leave here on the morning of the 20th. You thought of coming on the 16th. Can't you make it a day or two earlier, so as to be with us a whole week? Decide and pronounce. Again — cannot you bring Katey with you? Decide and pronounce thereupon, also.

I read at Manchester last Friday. As many thousand people were there, as you like to name.[†1] The collection of Pictures in the Exhibition is wonderful.[†2] And the power with which the modern English School asserts itself, is a very gratifying and delightful thing to behold.[†3] The care for the common people, in the provision made for their comfort and refreshment, is also admirable, and worthy of all commendation. But they want more amusement, and particularly (as it strikes me) something in motion, though it were only a twisting fountain. The thing is too still, after their lives of machinery, and Art fires over their heads in consequence.[†4]

I hope you have seen my tussle with the Edinburgh. I saw the chance last Friday week, as I was going down to read the Carol in St. Martin's Hall. Instantly turned to, then and there, and wrote half the article.[†5] Flew out of bed early next morning, and finished it by Noon. Went down to Gallery of Illustration (we acted there that night), did the day's business, corrected the proof in Polar costume in dressingroom, broke up two numbers of Household Words to get it out directly,[†1] played in Frozen Deep and Uncle John, presided at Supper of company, made no end of speeches, went home and gave in completely for four hours, then got sound asleep, and next day was as fresh as — you used to be in the far off days of your lusty Youth.

All here send kindest love to your dear good sister and all the house. Ever and ever affectionately. CD.

To SIR JOSEPH PAXTON, 3 AUGUST 1857*

MS British Library.

Gad's Hill Place | Monday Third August, 1857

My Dear Paxton

I have safely received the Duke's munificent donation, and beg most earnestly to tender the thanks of the Committee for that princely gift.[†2]

As to your own kind promise of assistance to Tom,[†3] I should say, Wait a little. Between ourselves, I have no faith in the Farm project;[†4] because I believe it to be based on the assumption that the Fund we are raising will be placed at the disposal of the whole family — like a sort of pecuniary skittles, to be bowled down by whomsoever may have a fancy to Go in. This idea I, for one, shall very strenuously oppose, when we meet to consider the Trust that shall be established.

It is obvious that the Money must be got, before it can be disposed of. Therefore it is beating the wind to discuss the question at present. I hope we shall finish our exertions, at Manchester on the 22nd. by then turning the round corner of £2,000 — the point at which I have always designed to stop.[†5] As soon as possible thereafter, I will call the Committee together, at reasonable notice. In the meantime, if I were you, I would do nothing, and would in no wise commit myself to any thing.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Sir Joseph Paxton M. P.

P.S. I re-open this letter to say (at the urgent solicitation of the Gardener) that if you can send me any "cuttings", of any kind, out of your great wealth in such things, "here's an empty house and empty grounds" — I quote the gardener — "and nothing from Sir Joseph could possibly come amiss". — That's his opinion.

To ARTHUR RYLAND, 3 AUGUST 1857*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Gad's Hill Place, Higham, by Rochester
Monday Third August, 1857

My Dear Mr. Ryland

Many thanks for your careful and explicit letter, with all the information I could possibly have required.[†1]

In your absence, your partner Mr. Martineau[†2] did me the favor to write me a sensible and practical letter, which discouraged me in respect to Birmingham, and which your letter confirms. I did not receive yours until I came home here yesterday from Manchester, but it fully confirmed me in a previous relinquishment of the Birmingham idea.

I read at Manchester last Friday night. Between the parts, some of the foremost people in the place, came to me with a representation that they particularly wished to have the Frozen Deep done in their City, and that they were absolutely certain of the success of two consecutive nights in the Free Trade Hall. They even offered to guarantee a certain profit, but I did not think it right to accept that generous proposal. However, I felt it incumbent on me to take the Play there, if careful calculations should prove the likelihood of a good result.[†3] We went into them immediately after the reading — worked them out — and got the advertisement into next day's paper, before going to bed.[†4] These two representations will finish the Jerrold business.

The number of people to be moved, the number of skilled workmen to be employed, and the quantity of material to be carried about, make up such a cost, that it would not be worth while to play once only, in any place I know of. But playing twice, the second night becomes sheer profit.

The Free Trade Hall is too large and difficult, and altogether too public for my girls however. So we shall take down Actresses in their stead.

All here send kindest regard to Mrs. Ryland and yourself, in which I very heartily join.
Always Most Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Arthur Ryland Esquire.

To W. H. WILLS, 3 AUGUST 1857*

MS Berg Collection.

Gad's Hill Place | Monday Night Third August | 1857

My Dear Wills

I omitted in my last, to remind you that the ladies' parts in the 1st. and 3rd. acts Frozen Deep, should be immediately copied, and that we should be armed likewise with 3 new copies of Uncle John.[†1]

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To WILLERT BEALE,[†2] 4 AUGUST 1857*

MS Mr Cyril Staal.

Gad's Hill Place, Higham, by Rochester
Tuesday Fourth August, 1857

My Dear Sir

I propose being in town on Friday,[†3] and will come to the Gallery of Illustration at 1/4 before 5 on that day in the hope of seeing you. If this appointment should be inconvenient, I will propose another for Saturday forenoon.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Willert Beale Esquire

To RICHARD BENTLEY, 6 AUGUST 1857*

MS Berg Collection.

Gad's Hill Place | Thursday August Sixth 1857

My Dear Mr. Bentley.

By all means, as to asking Mr. Evans's[†1] opinion. We must wait, I suppose, until he returns; for he has been very unwell, and his holiday will be useless to him unless it is free from business.

His indisposition has been the occasion of my not having seen him since you were here. I have several matters to see him upon — one of them, a rather pressing one — but have forborne, in the hope that he would get well of his liver-disorder.

I cannot leave town on Saturday, for we act that night. If you wish to see me, I shall be at the Gallery of Illustration Regent Street, at one that day.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esquire.

To SHIRLEY BROOKS, 6 AUGUST 1857

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

Gad's Hill Place | Thursday Sixth August, 1857

My Dear Brooks.

In reply to the enclosed from Bentley, I have said that I by all means consent to taking Evans into council, but that I suppose we must wait until his return to town.

If I understand Bentley's position, he cannot make the contract we have proposed to him, without the consent of the gentlemen before whom his affairs are "under inspection."[†2] Of these, Evans is one.

I have further told him that if he wants to see me, he will find me at the Gallery of Illustration on Saturday at One.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Shirley Brooks Esquire.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 7 AUGUST 1857

MS Wellcome Historical Medical Library, London.

Tavistock House | Friday Morning Seventh August | 1857

My Dearest Georgy

I have had an excellent night (a little opiate in the medicine), and have had no return whatever of the distress of yesterday morning. Come to me at the Garrick, in a Cab, at 1/2 past 8.

Ever Affectionately
CD.

To SHIRLEY BROOKS, 7 AUGUST 1857

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS,
Friday Seventh August 1857

My Dear Brooks.

Will you give me the enclosed from Bentley, back again tomorrow night? Will you in the meantime think of the point he puts, and of what you would suggest upon it? I will then give you my own suggestion, and out of the two we will compound a shot.[†1]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Shirley Brooks Esquire

To MR STEVENS,[†2] 8 AUGUST 1857*

Text from transcript by owner of MS, Mrs Joyce Shorter.

IN REMEMBRANCE OF THE LATE MR. DOUGLAS JERROLD.
COMMITTEE'S OFFICE, GALLERY OF ILLUSTRATION,
REGENT STREET.
Saturday August Eighth 1857.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Stevens and begs with thanks to acknowledge the receipt of Mr. Stevens' obliging communication. It reached Mr. Dickens only yesterday in consequence of his having been out of town.

To FRANK STONE, 9 AUGUST 1857†

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Sunday Afternoon | Ninth August 1857

My Dear Stone

Now, here, without any Preface, is a good, confounding, stunning question for you.

— Would you like to play Uncle John, on the 2 nights at Manchester?

It is not a long part, you could have a full Rehearsal on the Friday, and I could sit in the Wing at night and pull you through all the business. Perhaps you might not object to being in the thing, in your own native place; and the relief to me would be enormous.

This is what has come into my head, lying in bed to day (I have been in bed all day), and this is just my plain reason for writing to you.

It's a capital part, and you are a capital old man. You know the Play as we play it,[†1] and the Manchester people don't. Say the word, and I'll send you my own book by return of post.

The agitation and exertion of Richard Wardour are so great to me, that I cannot rally my spirits in the short space of time I get. The strain is so great, to make a show of doing it, that I want to be helped out of Uncle John, if I can.[†2] Think of yourself far more than me; but if you half think you are up to the joke,[†3] and half doubt your being so — then give me the benefit of the doubt, and play the part.

Answer me at Gad's Hill. The full address is as follows:

Gad's Hill Place
Higham

by Rochester
Kent.
Kind regard to all with you.
Ever affectionately
CD.

If you play, I shall immediately announce it to all concerned. If you don't, I shall go on[†4] as if nothing had happened, and shall say nothing to any one

To WALTER LACY,[†5] 10 AUGUST 1857

MS Mr John Williams.

Tavistock House | Monday Tenth August 1857

My Dear Mr. Lacy.

I have read your letter with the sincerest gratification; and I beg most cordially to assure you that in its generous and earnest words, you have amply repaid me any pleasure I have ever been so fortunate as to give you.

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Walter Lacy Esquire.

To FRANCESCO BERGER, 11 AUGUST 1857*

MS Victoria and Albert Museum.

Gallery of Illustration | Tuesday Eleventh August 1857.

My Dear Berger.

I have another suggestion to make. Would it not be much better to hang the Bell[†1] behind, — out of sight? You would only have to shew me on Friday morning, exactly when and how it should be struck, and I would take upon myself to do it.

Faithfully Ever
CHARLES DICKENS

To WILLIAM DONNE,[†2] 11 AUGUST 1857*

MS Dickens House.

Gallery of Illustration, | Regent Street.
Eleventh August, 1857

My Dear Sir

We are going to close our exertions in behalf of the Jerrold Fund, by acting The Frozen Deep at Manchester. With this view, it is necessary that it should be approved by the Licenser.[†3] Will you excuse my begging your kind and early attention to it?

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

William Donne Esquire

To DANIEL MACLISE, 11 AUGUST 1857*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Gallery of Illustration | Tuesday Eleventh August | 1857

My Dear Mac. I should have been delighted to come, if I had known it yesterday. But I am pledged to go down to Gad's Hill, almost directly.

In haste | Faithfully Ever
CD.

To JOHN DEANE, 12 AUGUST 1857*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Gad's Hill Place, Higham, by Rochester.
Wednesday Twelfth August, 1857

My Dear Deane.

I have been making out the List of the Manchester Expedition this morning, with the view of being able, to give you, in the rough, a notion of the Hotel accommodation we shall want at the Royal.[†1] It will be

A Sitting room
A Dining room

And about 23 Bedrooms.

Detailed particulars will come, in due course from Arthur[†2] and Wills, but this is very near the mark. Arthur will write to you soon (probably when you get this, you will have already heard from him), respecting the accommodation for the professional ladies — which is altogether separate, and not included here.

You know, no doubt, that the Solicitors, after all, sent me a form of application for a License, to fill up. It extends only to the two nights, Friday and Saturday. But it has occurred to me that if the Play should be (as I hope it will, and as I mean to do my best to make it) a great go — a very marked impression and success — it would make a wonderful addition to the Profits and a very small addition to the success, if we could play on the Monday at Theatre prices.[†3] What do you think of the idea? If we entertain it, we must keep it impenetrably close, of course. But we might bring bills down to post on Saturday Evening to that effect. Now, if we could do this, I suppose we must hazard the License for that night? — I mean, hazard the playing without one? Or, we could be armed with a Travelling License too, from the Chamberlain? I want particularly, to know your opinion on these points.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

John Deane Esquire.

P.S. We have made a very advantageous arrangement with the Great Western.

To W. C. MACREADY, 12 AUGUST 1857*

MS Morgan Library.

Gad's Hill Place, Higham, by Rochester
Wednesday Twelfth August | 1857

My Dearest Macready

The time you suggest will be perfectly convenient to us in all respects; and we have booked you and Katie, with joy, accordingly.

Next week we go to Manchester, and I hope the Jerrold task will end.

Faithfully and affecy. Ever
CD.

To T. GERMAN REED,[†1] 12 AUGUST 1857*

MS Dickens House.

Gad's Hill Place, Higham, by Rochester
Wednesday Twelfth August 1857

My Dear Mr. Reed.

Mr. Macready has altered his time for coming to us, from the Sixteenth of this month, to the fifth (or thereabouts) of next month, September. We still hope that Mrs. Reed[†2] and you may be able to come and pass a day with us, while he is here. If you are within reach, I shall write and bring our conversation to your remembrance, when I have safely laid hold of him.

With kind regard to Mrs. Reed, | Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

T. German Reed Esquire.

To WILLIAM TELBIN, 12 AUGUST 1857

Text from N, II, 869.

Gad's Hill Place, Higham by Rochester, Kent
Wednesday Twelfth August 1857

My Dear Telbin,

I don't know where to address Mr. Cuthbert.[†3] Will you kindly tell him from me that I count on the pleasure of his joining our party to Manchester; and that I have put him down among the rest of us, both in our Railway and Hotel accommodation. We shall make a family party of it, just as though we were staying in a country house.

Full particulars as to starting-time and so forth, to be had of Arthur Smith.

Always cordially yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To FRANCESCO BERGER, 13 AUGUST 1857

Mention in Autograph Prices Current, I, 51 (1914-16); MS 2 pp.; addressed Francesco Berger; dated 13 Aug 57.

Referring to performances at Manchester.

To THOMAS FAIRBAIRN, 13 AUGUST 1857*

MS Bodleian Library, Oxford.

Gad's Hill Place, Higham, by Rochester
Thursday Thirteenth August, 1857

My Dear Mr. Fairbairn

A thousand thanks for your kind letter. But I am sorry to reply that the business of the thing crushes the pleasure, and that the unfortunate Manager must stay in London until Thursday afternoon, and then come down with the main body, and keep with them.

When I hoped to be able to come to your house,[†1] I had quite forgotten the professional ladies. They have to be rehearsed, however, and drilled into situations that are quite new to them. Hence, both on the Tuesday and on the Wednesday I have made engagements to go through the two pieces with them at the Gallery of Illustration. On the Thursday I must keep the Company together; and on the Friday morning at Manchester the aforesaid ladies will look to me to put them through all they have to do, with everybody concerned, scenery, band, and what not, for the first and only time. I have not a chance of a spare halfhour.

I hope to bring Mrs. Dickens but she is at present extremely unwell. My daughters and sister in law plead hard to come too, in order that they may see their substitutes. I suppose I must yield.

We had a wonderful account from our representative,[†2] of the onslaught made upon him on the opening day. It is very cheering, and I should like him to be yet torn to pieces. We left off in London last Saturday with a greater house than ever, and I believe we might have played the piece for twelve months to come.

Believe me ever | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Fairbairn Esquire

To JOHN THOMPSON, 13 AUGUST 1857

MS Berg Collection. Address (envelope, MS Walter T. Spencer): Mr. John Thompson | Household Words Office | 10 Wellington Street North | Strand | London | W. C. PM 13 Aug 57.

Gad's Hill Place | Thursday Thirteenth August | 1857.

John.

Mr. Berger wishes you to take the Bell that is struck in the Frozen Deep, to Manchester, among the properties. (It was left in the Orchestra). My little handbell[†3] must be strongly mended, or a new one bought. The clapper always comes out of it, when I want it most.

See that the Snow[†1] you take to Manchester, is better made than the last. It was very badly cut, and much too large.

CD.

To W. H. WILLS, 13 AUGUST 1857

MS Huntington Library.

Gad's Hill Place | Thursday Thirteenth August 1857

My Dear Wills

I send this up to town to be posted by our Doctor[†2] — come down to Mrs. Dickens — still very poorly.[†3]

I have altered the names thus:

A Journey in Search of Nothing
The Self-made Potter.
Burning, and Burying.

The Leaf
Sepoy Symbols of Mutiny.
Eleanor Clare's Journal[†4]
On Her Majesty's Service[†5]

— But I have a misgiving that we have used the last title before.[†6] If we have not, retain it. If we have, call the article either

PUBLIC BUSINESS.[†7]

or

HOW THE WRITER WAS DISPATCH-BOXED.[†7]

Perhaps the latter is the better title of the Two. On Her Majesty's Service is the best title of the three, if we have not anticipated it.

I will try to knock out a subject or two.[†8] In the event of my Sleepy Head engendering any thing, the great suggestion shall come to you by Post.[†9]

Ever Faithfully
CD.

To HENRY AUSTIN, 15 AUGUST 1857

MS Morgan Library.

Gad's Hill Place, | Saturday Fifteenth August, 1857

My Dear Henry

At last, I am happy to inform you, we have got at a famous spring!! It rushed in this morning 10 foot deep — And our friends talk of its supplying "a ton a minute for yourself and your family, Sir, for hevermore".

They ask leave to bore ten feet lower, to prevent the possibility of what they call "a choking with sullage". Likewise, they are going to insert "a rose-headed pipe"; at the mention of which implement, I am (secretly) wellnigh distracted: having no idea what it means. But I have said "Yes", besides instantly standing a Bottle of Gin. Are you come back, and can you get down on Monday Morning, to advise, and endeavour to decide on the mechanical forces we shall use for raising the Water?[†1] I would return with you, as I shall have to be in town until Thursday,[†2] and then to go to Manchester until the following Tuesday.

I send this by hand to John, to bring to you.

Ever affectionately
CD.

To JOHN DEANE, 15 AUGUST 1857*

MS Houghton Library, Harvard.

Gad's Hill Place | Saturday Fifteenth August, 1857

My Dear Deane

I merely write to say that I received your letter this morning with great pleasure.

Also, as to the Orchestra, that I think the two Rehearsals had best come off, as Berger proposes. I have lately had occasion to find fault in that Department, and he is very anxious to put it right.

Faithfully Yours Ever
CHARLES DICKENS

John C Deane Esquire

To H. G. ADAMS,[†3] 17 AUGUST 1857

MS Huntington Library. Address (MS Yale University Library): H. G. Adams Esquire | Rochester. PM 17 Aug 57.

Gad's Hill Place | Monday August Seventeenth 1857

Dear Sir

Your letter finds me leaving this, for London and Manchester, to bring to a close the exertions that have been for some weeks in progress, in remembrance of the late Mr. Jerrold. I cannot therefore have the pleasure of making an appointment at present to receive the Deputation from the Chatham and Rochester Mechanics Institution. On my return however, which I hope will be within a fortnight, I will write to you again, proposing a time for that purpose.

But I think it well to assure you beforehand, that if the gentlemen who purpose coming to me have it in contemplation to ask me to make any public appearance, of any kind, in aid of their Institution, I shall be obliged to decline. I have lately devoted to the cause referred to in the beginning of this note, as much time and personal exertion as I can possibly give away; and nothing new must stand between me and my own pursuits and recreations.

I am Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

H. G. Adams Esquire

To FRANK STONE, 17 AUGUST 1857

MS Yale University Library.

Gad's Hill Place | Monday Seventeenth August, 1857

My Dear Stone

I received your kind note this morning, and write this reply here to take to London with me and post in town — being bound for that village, and three days drill of the professional ladies[†1] who are to succeed our Tavistock girls.

My book, I enclose. There is a slight alteration[†2] (which does not affect you) at the end of the First Act, in order that the piece may be played through, without having the Drop Curtain down. You will not find the situations or business difficult, with me on the spot to put you right.

Now, as to the Dress. You will want a pair of pumps, and a pair of white silk socks. Those you can get at Manchester. Two extravagantly and anciently-frilled shirts that I have had got up for the part, I will bring you down. Large white waistcoat, I will bring you down. Large white hat, I will bring you down. Dressing gown, I will bring you down. White gloves and ditto choker, you can get at Manchester. There then remain, only a pair of common nankeen tights to button below the calf, and blue wedding coat. The nankeen tights you had best get made at once; my Uncle John coat, I will send you down in a parcel by tomorrow's train, to have altered in Manchester to your shape and figure. You will then be quite independent of Christian chance, and Jewish Nathan: which latter Potentate is now at Canterbury with the Cricket Amateurs,[†1] and might fail.[†2]

A Thursday's Rehearsal is (unfortunately) now impracticable; the passes for the Railway being all made out, and the Company's sailing orders issued. But, as I have already suggested, with a careful Rehearsal on Friday morning, and with me at the Wing at night to put you right, you will find yourself sliding through it easily. There is nothing in the least complicated in the business. As to the Dance, you have only to knock yourself up[†3] for a twelvemonth, and it will go nobly.

After all too, if you should, through any unlucky break-down, come to be afraid of it, I am no worse off than I was before, if I have to do it at last. Keep your Pecker[†4] up with that.

I am heartily obliged to you my dear old boy for your affectionate and considerate note. And I wouldn't have you do it — really and sincerely, immense as the relief will be to me — unless you are quite comfortable in it, and able to enjoy it.

Kind love from mine to yours.

In haste | Ever affecy.

CD.

To WILKIE COLLINS, 17 AUGUST 1857

MS Morgan Library.

GARRICK CLUB

Monday Evening Seventeenth August | 1857

My Dear Collins

Fred Evans's[†5] grandmother[†6] being evidently on the point of Death, no Evans[†7] is available (as I learn on coming to town tonight), for Manchester. This leaves to be supplied, Easel,[†8] and Bateson.[†9] I immediately think of your brother Charles,[†10] and Luard.[†11] If it had been a purely managerial and not personal case, I should have proposed to Luard to do one of the parts, and to your brother to do the other. But I think it right that Charles Collins should first select for himself.[†12] Now, will you, before you come to the Rehearsal tomorrow, arrange with him whether he will play one — which one — or both; and if he leaves one, will you call on Luard as you come down, and offer that one to him?

I write at Express pace, but you will understand all I mean.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To FRANK STONE, [17 AUGUST 1857]

Telegram, mentioned in To Stone, 18 Aug. Date: night before that letter.

To FRANK STONE, 18 AUGUST 1857†

MS Benoliel Collection.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS,
Tuesday Eighteenth August 1857

My Dear Stone. I sent you a telegraph message last night, in total contradiction of the letter you received from me this morning.

The reason was simply this: — Arthur Smith, and our other business men, both in Manchester and here, urged upon me in the strongest manner that they were afraid of the change — that it was well known in Manchester that I had done the part in London — that there was a danger of its being considered disrespectful in me to give it up — also, that there was a danger that it might be thought that I did so at the last minute, after an immense Let, whereas I might have done it at first &c. &c. &c. Having no desire but for the success of our object, and a becoming recognition on my part of the kind Manchester public's cordiality, I gave way and thought it best to go on.[†1]

I do so against the grain, and against every inclination,[†2] and against the strongest feeling of gratitude to you. My people at home will be miserable, too, when they hear I am going to do it.[†3] If I could have heard from you sooner and got the bill out sooner, I should have been firmer in considering my own necessity of relief. As it is — I knock under. And I hope you will feel the reasons, and approve?

†a I have been rehearsing the ladies for hours, and have just time to get this into the post.†a

Ever affectionately

CD.

To RICHARD BENTLEY, 19 AUGUST 1857*

MS Berg Collection.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS,
Wednesday Nineteenth August 1857

My Dear Mr. Bentley

Passing through town on my way to Manchester (whence I purpose returning within a week), I write this line or two to let you know that I have not troubled you on Mr. Shirley Brooks's matter, pending Mr. Evans's return to business; but that I shall be quite ready to close it when you please. I think, in reference to the Cheap Edition, that he should have some little interest in it. Probably we should find it easy enough to agree on that point.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esquire.

To TIMOTHY YEATS BROWN,†1 19 AUGUST 1857*

MS Mrs R. E. Yeats-Brown.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS,
Wednesday Nineteenth August 1857

My Dear Browne.†2

All the world knows Mr. Albert Smith. Innumerable people who know nothing of Mont Blanc itself, perhaps know more about it of him than they have ever known of their own fathers and mothers.

He is an intimate friend of mine, for whom I have a great regard, and in whose prosperity in all ways, I am much interested. In passing through Genoa, it is not unlikely that he may desire to have a good letter of introduction. I give him this, and earnestly commend him to you, nothing doubting that you, and Mrs. Browne,†3 and yours, will be good to him — first for my sake, and then for his own.

With kind regard and remembrance

Ever My Dear Browne†2 | Yours Very faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

T. Yeats Browne†2 Esquire.

To EMILE DE LA RUE,[†1] 19 AUGUST 1857*

MS Berg Collection.

Tavistock House, London | Nineteenth August, 1857

My Dear De la Rue.

If you knew what a constant correspondent I am (in the spirit); how often I think of you, and Madame De la Rue,[†2] and our old times; how true my memory is, under all changes of time and distance, and how firmly what has once got into my heart, rests rooted there; you would never be angry with me — if you ever are — for writing so rarely.

I do not write, even now, to say this (though I say it), but to ask your kind offices in behalf of my friend Mr. Albert Smith. You will be familiar with his reputation, and will know him well beforehand, and will be pre-interested in so distinguished a man. But I have told him that I give him this letter of introduction, in order that he may go straight to the wisest and kindest of people in Genoa, for any information or help he may want there. I have assured him that if he wants to know anything about the Genoese tongue — which one would think nobody did — our dear Madame De la Rue has an unfathomable knowledge of it and speaks it to frightful perfection. That if he wants to know anything about Genoa, you are Genoa compressed. And that if he wants to see the most beautiful apartment in the world, he has only to make an ascent a trifle shorter than his ascent of Mont Blanc, and look at the beloved old rooms at the top of the Brignole Rosso.[†3]

With affectionate love to Madame

Ever Your faithful friend

CHARLES DICKENS

Emile De la Rue.

To W. J. EASTWICK, 19 AUGUST 1857*

MS Mr Cyril D. B. Hawksley. Address: William J. Eastwick Esquire | 12 Leinster Terrace.

Tavistock House | Nineteenth August, 1857

My Dear Sir

Coming to town on my way to Manchester, I find your interesting letter, and its accompanying volume. I will read the book attentively, and bearing in my mind what you say of it. Perhaps I may see my way to the preparation of an account of it for Household Words, which may help to make it better known.[†4]

Allow me to thank you for your kind remembrance of my second boy. I have just heard from him (from Gibraltar[†1] on his way out), and he seems to have become habituated to his new life, with wonderful ease.

Always My Dear Sir | Yours faithfully and obliged

CHARLES DICKENS

William J. Eastwick Esquire.

To DR W. C. HOOD, 19 AUGUST 1857

Text from N, II, 872.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS,
19th August 1857

The reference to yourself in Mr. Morley's article is his own honest tribute to your merit.[†2] ... It will give me real pleasure to improve the interesting beginning of our personal knowledge of one another when the approach of winter shall bring me back to London.[†3]

To WILLIAM JERDAN, 19 AUGUST 1857*

MS Benoliel Collection.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS,
Wednesday Nineteenth August 1857

My Dear Jerdan.

I am sorry that I cannot use the Paper on the Highlands. There is curious matter in it; but it comes too barely and dryly, for this purpose.

Old Hawtrey[†4] I am very glad to retain. Wills has "estimated" the old man's size (in Household Words feet), and I enclose said Wills's official cheque.[†5] If he should have made a mistake in the way of under-measurement, I will take care that it is set right.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. Jerdan Esquire.

To T. J. MOLYNEUX, [19 AUGUST 1857]

MS (envelope only) Walter T. Spencer. Address: Mr. J. Molyneux | People's Concerts Committee | St. Martin's Hall | Long Acre | W. C. PM 19 Aug 57.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 20 AUGUST 1857†

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | 1 Stratton Street | Piccadilly.

Tavistock House
Thursday Morning | Twentieth August, 1857

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I have been asked by a very old friend indeed, of my school days,[†1] to lay the enclosed letter before you. He is well acquainted with the writer, and has a high esteem and respect for him. I do not under the circumstances feel it is quite kind to be as firm on the subject of such entreaties as I usually am, and I have therefore consented. But, strictly on the understanding that with the delivery of the letter my function ends, and that I encourage no hope or further prospect of any kind.

I am away to Manchester this morning, to finish the Jerrold matter (N.B. Professional ladies.)[†2]

With kind regard to Mrs. Brown,

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Yours faithfully and affecy.

CHARLES DICKENS

To W. S. EMDEN, 20 AUGUST 1857

Text from N, II, 873.

Tavistock House | Twentieth August 1857

Dear Sir,

I am exceedingly obliged to you for your polite attention and kind note of last evening. Pray accept in return my heartiest good wishes.

I was astonished by the great improvement in The Lighthouse[†3] since the first night; it appeared to me to be admirably done in all respects and its effect upon the audience was not to be mistaken. A veteran dramatic writer of high reputation[†4] (who wishes in his retirement to be known in no new effort) has given me the enclosed farce[†5] with an earnest request that I will do what I can for him in the way of disposing of it outright. His expectations of it are very reasonable. I have had it fairly copied,[†1] have read it myself and have until now shown it to no one. I think I should have known the hand if I had come upon it by chance, but that is not to the purpose. Will you ask Mr. Robson in my name to look at it, and will you tell me if there is any likelihood of its suiting your company? Pray expressly understand that I expect you to give it no weight or favour because I forward it, beyond a decision at your first convenience.

Faithfully Yours

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To RICHARD BENTLEY, 26 AUGUST 1857*

MS Berg Collection.

Tavistock House | Wednesday Twenty Sixth August, 1857.

My Dear Mr. Bentley.

My reply to your letter (I found it here this morning, having come from Manchester late last night), is the result of daily experience, and enforced consideration a thousand times reiterated.

The best thing Miss Pardoe[†2] can do for herself, or that any friend of hers can do for her, with the view of attracting Miss Coutts's attention to her case,[†3] is to address Miss Coutts, describing the case plainly and correctly. If Miss Coutts should feel it to be one in which she can render assistance, she will very probably refer it to me. Then, I shall deem it my duty, and make it my business, to supply the strong confirmation I have derived from you.

But, I know the task of refusal to be an unwelcome one that is forced upon Miss Coutts an absolutely incredible number of times, every week. And I have long been compelled to establish it as a rule, that I have no right to add to the pain and irksomeness of that so-often unavoidable necessity, the weight of a personal explanation to myself.

In haste | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esquire

To W. C. MACREADY, 26 AUGUST 1857*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Wednesday Twenty Sixth August, 1857

My Dearest Macready

I came home from Manchester late last night, and, on going out this morning, was shocked by the announcement in the Times.[†1] Though we have long entertained the sad probability of the poor dear boy's blessed relief, the tidings came so suddenly at last, that — for the moment — they seemed like the heralding of an unexpected calamity.

So, I greatly fear, this new bereavement may at first come upon you. But, apart from the confidence I have (God knows, with reason!) in your fortitude under all afflictions, I hope and believe that you will soon be reconciled to this one, and that the thought of the dear over-burdened child, released from his long endurance and gone to his mother in the great land, the shadow of which is for ever on this earth while its radiant light is shed another way, will have great comfort in it and but little pain. Every year that under a less merciful wisdom had dawned upon his heavy head, must have brought greater trial upon it and upon all of you; and I have a great faith, even on an hour's reflection, in no man's power of knowing it more religiously and thankfully, than in my dear, beloved friend's.

Forgive me for these few words. I had a mind, but a few minutes ago, not to write until tomorrow. But as I could not, if I had been near you and your true sister, have refrained from coming and pressing your hands, so I cannot go away to Gad's Hill without writing this note.

Catherine and Georgina and the two girls are here; and what they say, and what loving words they send, you know.

Ever my Dearest Macready | Most affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To HENRY AUSTIN, 26 AUGUST 1857*

MS Morgan Library.

Gad's Hill | Wednesday Evening | Twenty Sixth August, 1857

My Dear Henry. I got back from Manchester to Tavistock House, late last night. There, I found the enclosed for you.[†2] I went down to your office about noon to day, but you were gone. I came back here at 6, and found your note to Catherine unopened — she too, as you now know, having been in Manchester. I write in great haste, to save the Messenger going over to Rochester to fetch Charley, who will post this.

Ever affecy.
CD.

To HENRY AUSTIN, 28 AUGUST 1857*

MS Morgan Library.

Gad's Hill | Friday Twenty Eighth August, 1857

My Dear Henry

This is the enclosure that I thought I had sent you. It is from the Chief Conspirator.[†1]

I hope the Pump will not be long a-making. The aggravation of knowing that the water is at the bottom of the well — and of paying for that accursed water-cart that comes jogging backwards and forwards — and of looking at the dry bath, morning after morning — is gradually changing the undersigned honey-pot, into a Mad Bull.

Ever Affecy.
CD.

To W. H. WILLS, [?27-8 AUGUST 1857]

Mention in next. Date: probably written the same day.

To MRS BROWN, 28 AUGUST 1857

MS Morgan Library. Address: Mrs. Brown | Holly Lodge | Highgate.

Gad's Hill | Friday, Twenty Eighth August, 1857

My Dear Mrs. Brown.

The address of that letter to Miss Coutts, which you enclosed me, is about as bad as bad can be. There are not many worse places. However, there may be something in the case for all that; and I have written to Mr. Wills upon it (the street is very near the Household Words office),[†2] and have told him what I think about it, and have begged him to try to see the writer, straightway.

In Mr. Ford's[†3] matter, I have caused "A Lady"[†4] to be put down for a subscription of Five Pounds.

I have just come back from Manchester, where I have been tearing myself to pieces, to the wonderful satisfaction of thousands of people,[†5] with Neuralgia — or something like it — in my face half the time. That work is now over, and more than two thousand Guineas are in store for the widow and daughter.

Last Saturday week, the well-workmen here burst at last upon a beautiful spring of bright clear water which is reported to be exhaustless. I am now having a pump made to pump it up. When the first glassful is drunk at the surface, it will have cost £200. But of course there was no going on without it, and I comfort myself (as well as I can) with the reflection that the spring might have lain much deeper, or might not have been at all.

The restlessness which is the penalty of an imaginative life and constitution — we all hold whatever we possess, on the strict tenure that it must and shall be used — so besets me just now, that I feel as if the scaling of all the Mountains in Switzerland, or the doing of any wild thing until I dropped, would be but a slight relief.[†1] The vague unhappiness which tracks a life of constant aim and ever impels to some new aim in which it may be lost, is so curious to consider, that I observe it in myself sometimes, with as much curiosity as if I were another man. Wonderful to think how wise the ordering of it is, and how it works to the doing of what is to be done!

Walter has written from Gibraltar and Malta. Quite well, and wonderfully settled to his new life. He does not seem, as yet, to have a backward glance or regret. Will you kindly ask Miss Coutts from me whether the enclosed refers to that helmet? I am quite at a loss to understand it, and only get the idea into my head as I write, that it may possibly be so.

All here unite in kind love and regard.

Ever Dear Mrs. Brown | Affectionately Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To THE REV. S. HADDEN PARKES,[†2] 28 AUGUST 1857*

MS Mr John Schroder.

Gad's Hill Place, Higham, by Rochester
Friday, Twenty Eighth August, 1857.

Sir.

My absence at Manchester has occasioned a delay (which I beg you on that account to excuse), in my receiving and replying to your letter.

I was perfectly satisfied with Charles French when he was in my employment, and always found him a very good and zealous servant. I can recommend him with confidence. Indeed I have already recommended him to Mr. Panizzi, in association with his desire to obtain employment at the Museum.

I am Sir | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Rev. Shadden[†3] Parkes.

To WILKIE COLLINS, 29 AUGUST 1857

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Saturday Twenty Ninth August | 1857

My Dear Collins.

Partly in the grim despair and restlessness of this subsidence from excitement, and partly for the sake of Household Words,[†1] I want to cast about whether you and I can go anywhere — take any tour — see any thing — whereon we could write something together. Have you any idea, tending to any place in the world? Will you rattle your head and see if there is any pebble in it which we could wander away and play at Marbles[†2] with? We want something for Household Words, and I want to escape from myself. For, when I do start up and stare myself seedily in the face, as happens to be my case at present, my blankness is inconceivable — indescribable — my misery, amazing.[†3]

I shall be in town on Monday. Shall we talk then? Shall we talk at Gad's hill? What shall we do? As I close this, I am on my way back by train.

Ever Faithfully
CD.

September

To THE EDITOR OF THE TIMES, [?31 AUGUST-1 SEPTEMBER 1857]

Text from The Times, 2 Sep 57. Date: final draft as agreed at meeting of Fund Committee (see below).

IN REMEMBRANCE OF THE LATE MR. DOUGLAS JERROLD.

Sir,

The work we have carried on being now brought to a close, we beg leave, through your columns, briefly to make its result known to the public.

We have first to observe that the committee whom we represent decided in the outset to state no case and to make no appeal or representation beyond the line which forms the heading of the present letter. They considered that in taking this course they had a due regard both to the independence of literature and to the personal character of their deceased friend; and therefore they have never for a moment deviated from it, nor do they now depart from it.

They have considered their personal responsibility a sufficient refutation of any untrue and preposterous statements that have obtained circulation as to property asserted to have been left by Mr. Jerrold,[†4] and they now merely add that, unless they had thoroughly known, and beyond all doubt assured themselves that their exertions were needed by the dearest objects of Mr. Jerrold's love, those exertions would never have been heard of.

The audited accounts show that the various performances, readings, and lectures have realized, after the payment of all expenses, a clear profit of 2,000*l.* This sum is to be expended in the purchase (through trustees) of a Government annuity for Mrs. Jerrold and her unmarried daughter, with the remainder to the survivor.[†1]

We are happy to add, in conclusion, that, although we have been most generously assisted on many hands, and especially by members of the musical profession, we have never consciously accepted a sacrifice that could not be afforded, and have furnished good employment and just remuneration to many deserving persons.

We are, Sir, your faithful servants,

CHARLES DICKENS, Chairman.
ARTHUR W. W. SMITH, Hon. Secretary.[†2]

To RICHARD BENTLEY, 1 SEPTEMBER 1857*

MS Berg Collection.

Gad's Hill Place | Tuesday Evening | First September 1857

My Dear Mr. Bentley

I had so much to do before leaving town this afternoon, that I omitted to answer your letter. If it will suit you to come to the Household Words office on Friday at 2

(as I shall assume it will, unless I hear from you to the contrary), Mr. Shirley Brooks will meet you there; and we will endeavour to conclude the business[†1] there and then, fairly to all.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esquire.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?1 SEPTEMBER 1857]

Extract in F, VIII, i, 630. Date: soon after meeting Collins (see To Collins, 29 Aug).

I have arranged with Collins that he and I will start next Monday on a ten or twelve days' expedition to out-of-the-way places, to do (in inns and coast-corners) a little tour in search of an article and in avoidance of railroads.[†2] I must get a good name for it, and I propose it in five articles, one for the beginning of every number in the October part.[†3]

To HANS CHRISTIAN ANDERSEN, 2 SEPTEMBER 1857

MS Royal Library, Copenhagen.

Gad's Hill Place, Higham, by Rochester
Wednesday Second September 1857

My Dear Andersen.

I have been away from here — at Manchester — which is the cause of this slow and late reply to your two welcome letters.[†4]

You are in your own home again by this time; happy to see its familiar face, I do not doubt; and happy in being received with open arms by all good Danish men, women, and children.

Everything here, goes on as usual. Baby (too large for his name, this long while!) calls "Aunty" all over the house, and the dogs come dancing about us and go running down the green lanes before us, as they used to do when you were here. But the days are shorter, and the evenings darker, and when we go up to the Monument to see the Sunset, we are obliged to go directly after dinner, and it gets dark while we are up there, and as we pass the grim dog who rattles his chain, we can hardly see his dim old eyes as we feed him with biscuit. The workmen who have been digging in that well in the Stable Yard so long, have found a great spring of clear bright water, and they got rather drunk when they found it (not with the water, but with some Gin I gave them), and then they packed up their tools and went away, and now the big dog and the Raven have all that place to themselves. The corn-fields that were golden when you were here, are ploughed up brown; the hops are being picked; the leaves on the trees are just beginning to turn; and the rain is falling as I write — very sadly — very steadily.

We have just closed our labors in remembrance of poor Jerrold, and have raised for his widow and daughter, Two Thousand Pounds. On Monday I am going away (with Collins) for a fortnight or so, into odd corners of England, to write some descriptions for Household Words. When I come back, I shall find them dining here by lamplight. And when I come back, I will write to you again.[†1]

I never meet any of the friends whom you saw here, but they always say "How's Andersen — Where's Andersen" — and I draw imaginary pictures of where you are, and declare that you desired to be heartily remembered to them. They are always pleased to be told this. I told old Jerdan so, the other day, when he wrote to me asking when he was to come and see you! —

All the house send you their kind regard. Baby says you shall not be put out of window when you come back. I have read To Be or Not To Be, and think it a very fine book — full of a good purpose admirably wrought out — a book in every way worthy of its great author.[†2]

Ever My Dear Andersen | Affectionately Your friend

CHARLES DICKENS

Hans Christian Andersen

To HENRY AUSTIN, 2 SEPTEMBER 1857†

MS Morgan Library.

Gad's Hill Place | Wednesday Second September 1857

My Dear Henry.

[†a]Thanks for your note of yesterday. Nye understands, I suppose, that the new Water Closet is to be made?[†a]

The Second Conspirator has been here this morning, to ask whether you wish the Windlass to be left in the Yard, and whether you will want him and his Mate any more, and if so when? Of course he says (rolling something in the form of a pellet, in at one broken tooth all the while, and rolling it out at another), that they could wish fur to have the Windlass if it wasn't any ways a hill conwenience fur to fetch her away. I have told him that if he will come back on Friday, he shall have your reply. Will you therefore send it me by return of Post? He says he'll "look up" (as if he was an Astronomer) a' Friday arterdinner.

On Monday I am going away with Collins for ten days or a fortnight, on a "Tour in Search of an Article" for Household Words. We have not the least idea where we are going, but he says "let's look at the Norfolk Coast", and I say, "let's look at the back of the Atlantic". I don't quite know what I mean by that; but I have a general impression that I mean something knowing.[†1]

I am horribly used up after the Jerrold business. Low spirits, low pulse, low voice, intense reaction. If I were not, like Mr. Micawber, "falling back for a spring"[†2] on Monday, I think I should slink into a corner and cry.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To COLIN RAE BROWN,[†3] 2 SEPTEMBER 1857

MS Burns Memorial Museum and Library, Kilmarnock.

Tavistock House, London
Wednesday Second September 1857

Dear Sir

I am favored with your letter, dated on the 31st. of August.

There must necessarily be a limit to such great personal exertion and fatigue, as I and my associate friends have lately undergone in the cause which enlists your generous sympathy. The bound I appointed in the beginning, was the realization of two thousand pounds profit. That point having happily been reached, we have audited the accounts, formally closed the business, and — as to this effort — parted company.

Dear Sir | Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

C. R. Brown Esquire

To JOHN FORSTER, [?2 SEPTEMBER 1857]

Extract in F, VIII, i, 631. Date: "next day" after To Forster, 1 Sep, according to Forster.

Our decision is for a foray upon the fells of Cumberland; I having discovered in the books[†1] some promising moors and bleak places thereabouts.

To MRS OWEN,[†2] 2 SEPTEMBER 1857

MS Benoliel Collection.

Gad's Hill Place, Higham, by Rochester
Wednesday Second September 1857

My Dear Mrs. Owen

Your pleasantest of letters finds me here, stopping to breathe after the fatigues of the last two months: which have been on the whole as great as I have ever undergone, and which have left me, for the moment, just a little dashed. However, we have happily gained the limit I prescribed to myself in setting out — we have raised Two Thousand Pounds — and our success has been enormous.

On Monday I am going away for a run to certain out of the way places in opposite corners of the Map of England, with an eye to Household Words. It is probable that I shall not be back here, until September is far advanced. I shall then have to give myself up for a week or two to some friends who are coming, and then the dreary leaves will begin to fall and my wintry plans will gather about me.

So I am afraid I shall not see the old house[†3] this summer. But you describe it so wonderfully well, that I seem to have seen it already, and to be perfectly acquainted with it. That — and your, and Owen's remembrance of me — are my consolation.

With kindest regard to him and to your son,[†4] in which all here join, Believe me
Always Most Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Owen.

To THE MASTER OF THE ANGEL HOTEL, DONCASTER,[†1] 3 SEPTEMBER 1857*

MS Dickens House. Address: To | The Master of | The Angel Hotel | Doncaster | Yorkshire.

Tavistock House, London | Thursday Third September | 1857.

Mr. Charles Dickens sends his compliments to the Master of the Angel Hotel at Doncaster, and begs to say that he purposes coming to Doncaster with a friend (Mr. Wilkie Collins) on Sunday the Thirteenth, and that he wishes to engage at the Angel on that day, a sitting room and two bedrooms.

Mr. Dickens is not certain that he may remain all through the race week; but if he can have these apartments, he is quite willing to engage them for the whole time, whether he leaves before the end of the week or no.

As Mr. Dickens leaves London for some other places on Monday Morning next, he begs to receive a line in reply to this, by return of post.[†2]

To PETER CUNNINGHAM, 3 SEPTEMBER 1857*

MS Yale University Library.

Gad's Hill Place | Thursday Third September 1857

My Dear Cunningham

I have thought over that riddle, and I fancy I have got it.

It is quite clear that no bargain can be fairly sold, without a Selling
That is the first thing:
The Second is, a Band
The Third is, Box
And this gives you for the answer
A Sell in a Bandbox.[†3]

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?3 SEPTEMBER 1857]

Extract in F, VIII, ii, 640. Date: To Forster, 5 Sep, answers Forster's reply to this; therefore about two days before it.

Your letter of yesterday[†4] was so kind and hearty, and sounded so gently the many chords we have touched together, that I cannot leave it unanswered, though I have not much (to any purpose) to say. My reference to "confidences" was merely to the relief of saying a word of what has long been pent up in my mind. Poor Catherine and I are not made for each other, and there is no help for it. It is not only that she makes me uneasy and unhappy, but that I make her so too — and much more so. She is exactly what you know, in the way of being amiable and complying; but we are strangely ill-assorted for the bond there is between us. God knows she would have been a thousand times happier if she had married another kind of man, and that her avoidance of this destiny would have been at least equally good for us both. I am often cut to the heart by thinking what a pity it is, for her own sake, that I ever fell in her way; and if I were sick or disabled to-morrow, I know how sorry she would be, and how deeply grieved myself, to think how we had lost each other. But exactly the same incompatibility would arise, the moment I was well again; and nothing on earth could make her understand me, or suit us to each other. Her temperament will not go with mine. It mattered not so much when we had only ourselves to consider, but reasons have been growing since which make it all but hopeless that we should even try to struggle on. What is now befalling me I have seen steadily coming, ever since the days you remember when Mary was born;[†1] and I know too well that you cannot, and no one can, help me. Why I have even written I hardly know; but it is a miserable sort of comfort that you should be clearly aware how matters stand. The mere mention of the fact, without any complaint or blame of any sort, is a relief to my present state of spirits — and I can get this only from you, because I can speak of it to no one else.

To MRS BROWN, 4 SEPTEMBER 1857

MS Morgan Library. Address: Favored by W. H. Wills Esquire. | Mrs. Brown.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS,
Friday Fourth September 1857

My Dear Mrs. Brown.

The Postman put your letter, so full of warm heart and interest, in my hands this morning, as I was driving from Gad's Hill to the Railway Station, to come up to town. A thousand thanks for it.

Yes. When I wrote to you, I certainly was exactly in the state you describe. It belongs to such a life as mine, and is its penalty. Thank God while I have health and activity, it does not last long: so after a miserable day or two, I have come out of the dark corner into the Sun again.

Mr. Wills reporting a stimulus to be necessary to Household Words (and the Pump being fitted at this moment in the stable yard, where the newly-driven-out workmen have re-appeared like Mice), I am off, on a wild tour with Wilkie Collins, to write a gossiping description of all that we see and all that we don't see, under the title of The Tour of the Two Idle Apprentices. We start on Sunday night or Monday Morning, and have not the least idea where we are going to. I have a vague notion of the Cumberland Fells, and the Irish look-out on the Atlantic with the winter driving up — but it's of the most shadowy kind — and we may be at the top of Snowdon instead, in no time.

So according to your account of your movements, I shall not see either of you for another while. I shall not think the less of both.

O the good dog! And what a good thing of the Almighty to shew us our best qualities, moving our own affections and winning our own regard, in these little shapes about us that love and honor us so much!

With most affectionate remembrance to Miss Coutts,

Ever Dear Mrs. Brown | Your faithful friend

CHARLES DICKENS[†1]

To MRS CORNELIUS, 4 SEPTEMBER 1857

Text from N, II, 876.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS,
Friday, Fourth September 1857

My Dear Anne,

Enclosed is a letter from Miss Hogarth about something she wants. Will you send it back by the Bearer, and also my strong lace-up half boots, which I think are on the boot-shelf in the front pantry.

Faithfully Yours

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To DR J. SHERIDAN MUSPRATT,[†2] 4 SEPTEMBER 1857*

MS Judd School, Kent.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS,
Friday Fourth September 1857

My Dear Dr. Muspratt.

There is no copy to be had, of the Frozen Deep. It is not printed, and nothing of it is in existence but the Draft Book.[†3]

I am sorry that at this time I know no one in Calcutta. My second boy was there the other day — or is there now — but whither he will be sent, in these distracted Indian times,[†4] it is impossible to calculate.

I write in the most hasty way, as I am leaving town directly.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

With kind regard to Mrs. Muspratt, and all the house.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 5 SEPTEMBER 1857

MS Morgan Library.

Gad's Hill Place | Saturday Fifth September 1857

My Dear Miss Coutts

I think I would head the paper

An independent and useful career for young women of the Middle Classes.[†1]

— such a heading as that, something to that effect, arrests the attention directly. So much Boredom, and Red Tape, and what I may call Kayshuttleworry,[†2] are associated with the word "Education", that I fear it might repel readers.

The paper itself is very good indeed. Very plain, very easily remembered, very direct to the purpose.

Apprehensive, like Mrs. Brown, of the moist valleys, I have decided on a foray into the bleak fells of Cumberland. So the idle apprentices go to Carlisle on Monday.

Sometimes of late, when I have been very much excited by the crying of two thousand people over the grave of Richard Wardour, new ideas for a story have come into my head as I lay on the ground,[†3] with surprising force and brilliancy. Last night, being quiet here, I noted them down in a little book I keep.[†4] When I went into the dining room and mentioned what I had been doing, they all called out "Friday!" I was born on a Friday, and it is a most astonishing coincidence that I have never in my life, whatever projects I may have determined on, otherwise — never begun a book, or begun any thing of interest to me, or done any thing of importance to me, but it was on a Friday. I am certain to be brought round to Friday. It must have been on a Friday that I first dined with you at Mr. Marjoribanks's!

Mentioning Richard Wardour, — perhaps Mr. Wills has not told you how much impressed I was at Manchester by the womanly tenderness of a very gentle and good little girl who acted Mary's part.[†5] She came to see the Play beforehand at the Gallery of Illustration, and when we rehearsed it, she said "I am afraid, Mr. Dickens, I shall never be able to bear it; it affected me so much when I saw it, that I hope you will excuse my trembling this morning, for I am afraid of myself." At night when she came out of the cave and Wardour recognized her, I never saw any thing like the distress and agitation of her face — a very good little pale face, with large black eyes; — it had a natural emotion in it (though it was turned away from the audience) which was quite a study of expression. But when she had to kneel over Wardour dying, and be taken leave of, the tears streamed out of her eyes into his mouth, down his beard, all over his rags — down his arms as he held her by the hair.[†1] At the same time she sobbed as if she were breaking her heart, and was quite convulsed with grief. It was of no use for the compassionate Wardour to whisper "My dear child, it will be over in two minutes — there is nothing the matter — don't be so distressed!" She could only sob out, "O! It's so sad, O it's so sad!' and set Mr. Lemon (the softest hearted of men) crying too. By the time the Curtain fell, we were all crying together, and then her mother[†2] and sister[†3] used to come and put her in a chair and comfort her, before taking her away to be dressed for the Farce. I told her on the last night that I was sure she had one of the most genuine and feeling hearts in the world; and I don't think I ever saw any thing more prettily simple and unaffected. Yet I remember her on the stage, a little child, and I dare say she was born in a country theatre.[†4]

Very pleasant to know, I submit to you and Mrs. Brown? And if you ever see, at Kean's[†1] or elsewhere, Miss Maria Ternan,[†2] that is the young lady.

Dear Miss Coutts | Ever most Faithfully & affecy. Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To ROBERT DUDLEY,[†3] 5 SEPTEMBER 1857

Extract in Myers & Co. catalogue, 1952; dated 5 Sep 57.

Thanking him for a photograph of the spirited and accurate sketch.[†4]

To JOHN FORSTER, [5 SEPTEMBER 1857]

Extracts in F, VIII, ii, 640-1; iii, 653 and ii, 641. Date: all three 5 Sep, according to Forster.

To the most part of what you say[†5] — Amen! You are not so tolerant as perhaps you might be of the wayward and unsettled feeling which is part (I suppose) of the tenure on which one holds an imaginative life, and which I have, as you ought to know well, often only kept down by riding over it like a dragoon — but let that go by. I make no maudlin complaint. I agree with you as to the very possible incidents, even not less bearable than mine, that might and must often occur to the married condition when it is entered into very young. I am always deeply sensible of the wonderful exercise I have of life and its highest sensations, and have said to myself for years, and have honestly and truly felt, This is the drawback to such a career, and is not to be complained of. I say it and feel it now as strongly as ever I did; and, as I told you in my last, I do not with that view put all this forward. But the years have not made it easier to bear for either of us; and, for her sake as well as mine, the wish will force itself upon me that something might be done. I know too well it is impossible. There is the fact, and that is all one can say. Nor are you to suppose that I disguise from myself what might be urged on the other side. I claim no immunity from blame. There is plenty of fault on my side, I dare say, in the way of a thousand uncertainties, caprices, and difficulties of disposition; but only one thing will alter all that, and that is, the end which alters everything.

Hop-picking is going on, and people sleep in the garden, and breathe in at the keyhole of the house door. I have been amazed, before this year, by the number of miserable lean wretches, hardly able to crawl, who go hop-picking. I find it is a superstition that the dust of the newly picked hop, falling freshly into the throat, is a cure for consumption. So the poor creatures drag themselves along the roads, and sleep under wet hedges, and get cured soon and finally.

What do you think of my paying for this place, by reviving that old idea of some Readings from my books. I am very strongly tempted. Think of it.[†1]

To W. J. SORRELL,[†2] 5 SEPTEMBER 1857*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Gad's Hill Place | Saturday Fifth September 1857

My Dear Mr. Sorrell

Many thanks for your note and the photograph. I write by this same post to the Artist,[†3] thanking him for his gift.

I am happy to report my face quite well for the time being, and myself in a less despairing condition than at the close of our labors.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

W. J. Sorrell Esquire

To J. B. BUCKSTONE, [6 SEPTEMBER 1857]

Mention in To Wills, 6 Sep.

Sending him the MS of Douglas Jerrold's play, "The Spendthrift".[†4]

To F. M. EVANS, 6 SEPTEMBER 1857*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Gad's Hill Place | Sunday Sixth September 1857

My Dear Evans

I am very glad to get the accounts, and I think they come out very well indeed.[†1]

The payment of £1000 on the 16th., and of the remaining £1,317.11.1 on the 16th. of next month, will suit me quite well.[†2]

You do not mention whether you have yet done any thing with Collins as to the Dead Secret,[†3] and the £200 bill. I want to set the latter against Walter's outfit: to say nothing of the improvements of this place, and the Well — into which last-mentioned gulf, a good deal of ready money has fallen.

It is clear that we ought to republish the Child's History.[†4] In estimating and considering about that, during the next ten days or a fortnight while I am away, I wish you would also give your thoughts for a little while, to the following kindred subject.

Forster has a strong impression that my copyrights are not turned to anything like the account that the time demands; and he sets particular store by the fact that there is no good edition of them for the better class of readers who would buy them for well-furnished bookshelves. I did not at first take his view of the matter when he propounded it to me, but I have gradually come to the conclusion that he is right; and not only that there is money to be made, but that good is to be done, to the place and station (so to speak) of my writings. The question is, in what form, and at what price, and how as to periods and regular intervals, such an Edition could be best devised. It might comprise a selection from the original Illustrations (a few of the best of them), or it might have none. It should be handsome to look at, and easy to read.[†5]

If you could make a good project on paper, I have no doubt Chapman would be very glad to jump at any reasonable proposal I might make to him. The result might be very beneficial to all of us, and the course of such an issue of my books, would keep me well before the public, without wasting me — which is a consideration, with an eye to the future.[†6]

Now, supposing you able to knock out a scheme which we could settle in a careful interview when I come back, I would not let the grass grow under the plan, but would work Chapman directly, so that we might begin before Christmas.

But this will not interfere with our republication of the Child's History, which, as a Child's book, is still to be considered by itself.

I shall be glad to hear what you think of this notion, and will beg Wills to let you know (when I know, myself), where you can write to me at the end of the week.

Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

F. M. Evans Esquire

To W. H. WILLS, 6 SEPTEMBER 1857

MS Huntington Library.

Gad's Hill Place | Sunday Sixth September 1857

My Dear Wills

MRS. WILLS[†1]

I hope is better. I have filled them with sympathy here, by my vivid descriptions of your descriptions. They all send loves and messages. Don't forget to let me know how she goes on, when you write.

H. W.

I find in my official drawer, the card of the Writer of some foreign paper I left for you on your table.[†2] In case his address should not be attached to the paper, I send the card to you.

JERROLD REMEMBRANCE[†1]

In the left hand drawer of my table at the office, is a Roll of the usual Theatrical MS — the Spendthrift,[†3] by poor Jerrold. Will you have it put up in a parcel for Buckstone with the enclosed note, and left at the Haymarket Theatre?

THE IDLE APPRENTICES[†1]

Go straight to Carlisle, by 9 AM North Western Train on Monday Morning. After casting about a good deal, the Cumberland Fells look promising to them. I will write you one line from Carlisle on Tuesday, giving you any new address we may fix on. Until you have a new address from me, write (if you have occasion to write), to me at the Post Office there — that is to say, at Carlisle.

I[†1]

think I am becoming rather inventive again.[†4]

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 7 SEPTEMBER 1857*

MS Miss Mary Elspeth Milford. Address: Miss Hogarth | Gad's Hill Place | Higham | by | Rochester | Kent.

Carlisle. | Monday Night, Seventh September | 1857.

My Dearest Georgy.

On receipt of this, let me know, addressing me "Post Office Maryport,[†1] Cumberland", how dear Mamey is, and how you all are; and give me any little scraps of any home news that your genius, and charming room, may inspire. Where we shall be after Friday, I have no idea. But, up to Friday, Maryport will remain our best address. On Sunday night, we purpose arriving at Doncaster, Yorkshire. After that time, the Post Office at that place will be our safe address always.

Collins is anxious that I should report his brown suit,[†2] a noble success.+ We are off tomorrow, to the Fells. As yet we have seen nothing whatever, and consider Carlisle a humbug. Kiss everybody and everything for me. I send all sorts of remembrances to both. My love to the Noble Plorn.

There is just time to save the Post coming through from Scotland. We had a delightful journey, and arrived here to the moment.[†3]

I have a bedroom here, not quite so large, and not half so airy, as Turk's Kennel.[†4] My portmanteau squeezed up against the bed, represents the Raven in it.

Ever Affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Hogarth.

+But I don't think so.

To W. H. WILLS, 7 SEPTEMBER 1857

MS Huntington Library.

Carlisle. Monday Night, | Seventh September 1857

My Dear Wills.

Conglomeration prevailing in the Maps — and our minds — to an alarming extent, I have the faintest idea of our trip. But I think I am perfectly right in this direction: — You Writing[†5] to me from London not later than Wednesday night, address me at the Post office, Maryport, Cumberland. After that, address me at the Post office, Doncaster. I think we shall leave the Maryport (that is to say, the Coast) regions, about Friday or so. We shall not arrive at Doncaster until Sunday night. It is quite uncertain what we may be about, in the interval. Once at Doncaster, the address is always Doncaster until you hear to the contrary.

Of course you will expect Copy (as we agreed) on Saturday Morning.[†6]

You will be charmed to hear that 2 bed rooms and a sitting room are not to be got at Doncaster for the race week, at less than the moderate charge of

TWELVE GUINEAS![†1]

But we have a grotesque idea of describing the town under those circumstances,[†2] which I hope may be worth (if anything can be worth), the money.

Will you let Evans know the directions I give you, as he will probably wish to write to me while we are out.

Collins's kind regard

Ever Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN STADFIELD, J. JACKSON MITCHELL, JAMES McKEEVER, THOMAS McMECHAN, ROBERT STAMPER,[†3] 8 SEPTEMBER 1857*

MS British Library.

Wigton,[†4] Tuesday Night | Eighth September 1857.

Gentlemen.

On behalf of my friend Mr. Collins, and myself, allow me to thank you for your very obliging attention. As Mr. Collins however, is worried by an accident, of no importance in itself but which requires repose; and as we leave here, early in the forenoon of tomorrow; perhaps you will excuse our expressing our acknowledgments through this note.

We thank you very sincerely. And I have the honor to remain,

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Stadfield
J Jackson Mitchell
James Mc Keever
Thomas Mc Mechan
Robert Stamper
} Esquires

To JOHN FORSTER, [9 SEPTEMBER 1857]

Extracts in F, VIII, i, 631 and 632. Date: first extract from Wigton dated 9 Sep 57, according to Forster; second extract, same letter, from Allonby (see next).

Looking over the Beauties of England and Wales before he left London, his ambition was fired by mention of Carrick Fell,[†5] a gloomy old mountain 1500 feet high, which he secretly resolved to go up. We came straight to it yesterday. Nobody goes up. Guides have forgotten it. Master of a little inn,[†1] excellent north-countryman, volunteered. Went up, in a tremendous rain.[†2] C.D. beat Mr. Porter[†3] (name of landlord) in half a mile. Mr. P. done up in no time. Three nevertheless went on. Mr. P. again leading; C.D. and C. following. Rain terrific, black mists, darkness of night. Mr. P. agitated.

C.D. confident. C. (a long way down in perspective) submissive. All wet through. No poles. Not so much as a walking-stick in the party. Reach the summit, at about one in the day.[†4] Dead darkness as of night. Mr. P. (excellent fellow to the last) uneasy. C.D. produces compass from pocket. Mr. P. reassured. Farm-house where dog-cart was left, N.N.W. Mr. P. complimentary. Descent commenced. C.D. with compass triumphant, until compass, with the heat and wet of C.D.'s pocket, breaks. Mr. P. (who never had a compass), inconsolable, confesses he has not been on Carrick Fell for twenty years, and he don't know the way down. Darker and darker. Nobody discernible, two yards off, by the other two. Mr. P. makes suggestions, but no way. It becomes clear to C.D. and to C. that Mr. P. is going round and round the mountain, and never coming down. Mr. P. sits on angular granite,[†5] and says he is "just fairly doon." C.D. revives Mr. P. with laughter, the only restorative in the company. Mr. P. again complimentary. Descent tried once more. Mr. P. worse and worse. Council of war. Proposals from C.D. to go "slap down." Seconded by C. Mr. P. objects, on account of precipice called The Black Arches,[†6] and terror of the country-side. More wandering. Mr. P. terror-stricken, but game. Watercourse, thundering and roaring, reached. C.D. suggests that it must run to the river, and had best be followed, subject to all gymnastic hazards. Mr. P. opposes, but gives in. Water course followed accordingly. Leaps, splashes, and tumbles, for two hours. C. lost. C.D. whoops. Cries for assistance from behind. C.D. returns. C. with horribly sprained ankle, lying in rivulet! Great had been the trouble in binding up Collins's ankle and getting him painfully on, shoving, shouldering, carrying him alternately, till terra firma was reached. We got down at last in the wildest place, preposterously out of the course; and, propping up C. against stones, sent Mr. P. to the other side of Cumberland for dog-cart, so got back to his inn, and changed. Shoe or stocking on the bad foot, out of the question. Foot tumbled up in a flannel waistcoat. C.D. carrying C. melo-dramatically (Wardour to the life!)[†7] everywhere; into and out of carriages; up and down stairs; to bed; every step.[†8] And so to Wigton,[†9] got doctor, and here we are! A pretty business, we flatter ourselves! The next night they were at the Ship Hotel, Allonby.[†10]

Describing Allonby as a small untidy outlandish place: rough stone houses in half mourning, a few coarse yellow-stone lodging houses with black roofs (bills in all the windows), five bathing-machines, five girls in straw hats, five men in straw hats[†1] (wishing they had not come); very much what Broadstairs would have been if it had been born Irish, and had not inherited a cliff.

But this is a capital little homely inn, looking out upon the sea; with the coast of Scotland, mountainous and romantic, over against the windows;[†2] and though I can just stand upright in my bedroom, we are really well lodged. It is a clean nice place in a rough wild country, and we have a very obliging and comfortable landlady.[†3]

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 9 SEPTEMBER 1857

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Address (envelope, MS Professor Harry Stone): Miss Hogarth | Charles Dickens Esquire | Gad's Hill Place | Higham | by Rochester | Kent. PM 11 Sep 57 Allonby.

Allonby,[†4] Cumberland
Wednesday Night, Ninth September | 1857

My Dear Georgy.

I walked over to Maryport to day, to see what letters there were, and to ask the Postmaster to send any more he might have, over here. I found none from you; but hardly supposed I should, so soon.

Think of Collins's usual luck with me!!! We went up a Cumberland mountain yesterday — a huge black hill, 1,500 feet high. We took for a Guide, a capital Innkeeper hard by. It rained in torrents — as it only does rain in a hill country — the whole time. At the top, there were black mists and the darkness of night. It then came out that the Innkeeper had not been up for 20 years — and he lost his head and himself altogether, and we couldn't get down again! What wonders the Inimitable performed with his compass until it broke with the heat and wet of his pocket, no matter. It did break, and then we wandered about, until it was clear to the Inimitable that the night must be passed there, and the enterprising travellers probably die of cold. We took our own way about coming down — struck — and declared that the Guide might wander where he would, but we would follow a water-course we lighted upon, and which must come at last to the River. This necessitated amazing gymnastics. In the course of which performances, Collins fell into the said watercourse with his ankle sprained, and the great ligament of the foot and leg swollen I don't know how big.

How I enacted Wardour over again in carrying him down, and what a business it was to get him down, I may say in Gibbs's[†5] words, "Vi lascio a giudicare!"[†6] But he was got down somehow — and we got off the mountain somehow — and now I carry him to bed, and into and out of carriages, exactly like Wardour in private life. I don't believe he will stand for a month to come!

He has had a Doctor, and can wear neither shoe nor stocking, and has his foot wrapped up in a flannel waistcoat (dirty), and has a breakfast-saucer of liniment and a horrible dabbing of lotion incessantly in progress. We laugh at it all — but I doubt very much whether he can go on to Doncaster. It will be a miserable blow to our H.W. schemes, and I say nothing about it as yet; but he is really so crippled, that I doubt the getting him there. We have resolved to fall to work tomorrow morning and begin our writing; and there, for the present, that point rests.

This is a little place with 50 houses, 5 bathing-machines, [†a]5 girls in straw hats, 5 men in straw hats, and no other company. The little houses are all in half mourning — yellow stone or white stone, and black[†a] — and it reminds me of what Broadstairs might have been, if it had not inherited a cliff, and had been born an Irishman. But this is a capital little homely Inn, looking out upon the sea; and we are really very comfortably lodged. I can just stand upright in my bedroom. Otherwise, it is a good deal like one of Ballard's[†1] top rooms. We have a very obliging and comfortable landlady; and it is a clean nice place in a rough wild country. We came here, hap-hazard, but could not have done better.

We lay last night at a place called Wigton, also in half mourning[†2] — with the wonderful peculiarity that it had no population, no business, no streets to speak of, but 5 linen-drapers within range of our small window, 1 Linen Draper's next door, and 5 more linen drapers round the corner.[†3] I ordered a night-light in my bedroom. A queer little old woman brought me one of the common Child's night lights, and, seeming to think that I looked at it with interest, said: "It's joost a vara keeyourious thing Sir, and joost new coom oop. It'll burn awt hoors a 'end, and no gootther, nor no waste, nor ony sike a thing, if you can creedit what I say, seein' the airticle."

Of course I shall go to Doncaster, whether or no (please God), and my postage directions to you remain unchanged. Love to Mamey, Katey, Charley, Harry, and the darling Plorn.[†4]

Ever affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Hogarth.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?11 SEPTEMBER 1857]

Extract from F, VIII, ii, 632. Date: after To Miss Hogarth, 9 Sep 57; probably 11 Sep.

Describing Wigton as a place of little houses all in half-mourning, yellow stone or white stone and black, with the wonderful peculiarity that though it had no population, no business, and no streets to speak of it had five linendrapers within range of their single window, one linendraper next door, and five more linendrapers round the corner.

The day after Carrick there was a mess about our letters, through our not going to a place called Maryport.[†1] So, while the landlord was planning how to get them (they were only twelve miles off), I walked off, to his great astonishment, and brought them over.

To JOSEPH SLY,[†2] 11 SEPTEMBER 1857

MS Public Library & Museum, Lancaster.

County Hotel, Carlisle | Friday Evening | Eleventh September 1857

Mr. Charles Dickens sends his compliments to the Master of The King's Arms at Lancaster,[†3] and begs to say that he wishes to bespeak for tomorrow (Saturday) afternoon and night, a private sitting-room and two bedrooms; also a comfortable dinner for two persons at half past 5. Mr. Dickens will be accompanied by his friend Mr. Wilkie Collins; and as Mr. Collins has unfortunately sprained his leg, it will be a great convenience to him to have his bedroom as near the sitting-room as possible. For the same reason, Mr. Dickens will be glad to find a fly awaiting them at the station. They purpose leaving here, by the mid-day Train at 12..38.[†4]

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 12 SEPTEMBER 1857

Text from MDGH, II, 31. Address (envelope only MS Yale University Library): Miss Hogarth | Gad's Hill Place | Higham | by Rochester | Kent.[†5] PM Lancaster Sep 13 1857.

Lancaster, Saturday Night, Sept. 12th, 1857.

My dear Georgy,

I received your letter at Allonby yesterday, and was delighted to get it. We came back to Carlisle last night (to a capital inn, kept by Breach's brother),[†6] and came on here to-day. We are on our way to Doncaster; but Sabbath observance throws all the trains out; and although it is not a hundred miles from here, we shall have, as well as I can make out the complicated lists of trains, to sleep at Leeds — which I particularly detest as an odious place[†1] — to-morrow night.

— VIII - 444 —

Accustomed as you are to the homage which men delight to render to the Inimitable, you would be scarcely prepared for the proportions it assumes in this northern country. Station-masters assist him to alight from carriages, deputations await him in hotel entries, innkeepers bow down before him and put him into regal rooms, the town goes down to the platform to see him off, and Collins's ankle goes into the newspapers!!![†2]

It is a great deal better than it was, and he can get into new hotels and up the stairs with two thick sticks, like an admiral in a farce. His spirits have improved in a corresponding degree, and he contemplates cheerfully the keeping house at Doncaster. I thought (as I told you) he would never have gone there, but he seems quite up to the mark now. Of course he can never walk out, or see anything of any place. We have done our first paper for H. W., and sent it up to the printer's.

The landlady of the little inn at Allonby lived at Greta Bridge, in Yorkshire, when I went down there before "Nickleby,"[†3] and was smuggled into the room to see me, when I was secretly found out. She is an immensely fat woman now. "But I could tuck my arm round her waist then, Mr. Dickens," the landlord said when she told me the story as I was going to bed the night before last. "And can't you do it now," I said, "you insensible dog? Look at me! Here's a picture!" Accordingly, I got round as much of her as I could; and this gallant action was the most successful I have ever performed, on the whole.[†4] I think it was the dullest little place I ever entered; and what with the monotony of an idle sea, and what with the monotony of another sea in the room (occasioned by Collins's perpetually holding his ankle over a pail of salt water, and laving it with a milk jug), I struck yesterday, and came away.

We are in a very remarkable old house here, with genuine old rooms and an uncommonly quaint staircase.[†5] I have a state bedroom, with two enormous red four-posters in it, each as big as Charley's room at Gad's Hill. Bellew[†6] is to preach here to-morrow.[†1] "And we know he is a friend of yours, sir,"[†2] said the landlord, when he presided over the serving of the dinner (two little salmon trout; a sirloin steak; a brace of partridges; seven dishes of sweets; five dishes of dessert, led off by a bowl of peaches; and in the centre an enormous bride-cake) — "We always have it here, sir," said the landlord, "custom of the house." (Collins turned pale, and estimated the dinner at half a guinea each.)

— VIII - 445 —

This is the stupidest of letters, but all description is gone, or going, into "The Lazy Tour of Two Idle Apprentices."[†3]

Kiss the darling Plorn, who is often in my thoughts. Best love to Charley, Mamey, and Katie. I will write to you again from Doncaster, where I shall be rejoiced to find another letter from you.

Ever affectionately, my dearest Georgy

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To [F. M. EVANS],[†4] 15 SEPTEMBER 1857

Text from transcript, Huntington Library.

Angel Hotel, Doncaster

Tuesday Fifteenth September | 1857.

My Dear [Evans]

I like your notion of the Edition,[†5] and, as soon after next Monday (when I return), as you please, let us have a quiet day at Gad's Hill and go into the "facts and figures". In the meantime I have begged Forster to see Chapman, and so to pave the way as that you and Chapman shall have the road open for making all arrangements. I have told Forster that Bradbury and Evans's name must be on all the series as well as Chapman's,[†6] and that I must have B and E in all the accounts and all the business, and must have (and will have) no Chapman delays and shortcomings from first to last, but must wholly extinguish the same.

The Child's History looks clearly and plainly readable, and I think the proposed price sufficiently cheap.[†7]

I am much interested in knowing what your H.W. notion is.[†8] That too must be propounded at Gad's Hill.

Ever Faithfully yours

CHARLES DICKENS

[F. M. Evans] Esquire.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?15 SEPTEMBER 1857]

Extracts in F, VIII, i, 634*n* and 633. Date: written from Doncaster, no doubt same day as last.

At the theatre there had been a performance of Money.[†1] I have rarely seen anything finer than Lord Glossmore,[†2] a chorus-singer in bluchers,[†3] drab trowsers, and a brown sack; and Dudley Smooth,[†4] in somebody else's wig, hindside before. Stout[†5] also, in anything he could lay hold of. The waiter at the club had an immense moustache, white trowsers, and a striped jacket; and he brought everybody who came in, a vinegar-cruet.[†6] The man who read the will began thus: "I so-and-so, being of unsound mind but firm in body . . ."[†7] In spite of all this, however, the real character, humour, wit, and good writing of the comedy, made themselves apparent; and the applause was loud and repeated, and really seemed genuine. Its capital things were not lost altogether.[†8] It was succeeded by a Jockey Dance by five ladies, who put their whips in their mouths and worked imaginary winners up to the float — an immense success.[†9]

Collins had by now so far recovered as to be able, doubled-up, to walk with a thick stick; in which condition, being exactly like the gouty admiral in a comedy, I have given him that name. The impressions received from the race-week were far from favourable. It was noise and turmoil all day long, and a gathering of vagabonds from all parts of the racing earth. Every bad face that had ever caught wickedness from an innocent horse had its representative in the streets;[†10] and as he, like Gulliver looking down upon his fellow-men after coming from the horse-country, looked down into Doncaster High-street from his inn-window, everywhere I see the late Mr. Palmer[†11] with his betting-book in his hands. Mr. Palmer sits next me at the theatre; Mr. Palmer goes before me down the street; Mr. Palmer follows me into the chemist's shop where I go to buy rose water after breakfast, and says to the chemist "Give us soom sal volatile or soom damned thing o' that soort, in wather — my head's bad!"[†1] And I look at the back of his bad head[†2] repeated in long, long lines on the race course, and in the betting stand and outside the betting rooms in the town, and I vow to God that I can see nothing in it but cruelty, covetousness, calculation, insensibility, and low wickedness.[†3]

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 15 SEPTEMBER 1857

Text from MDGH, II, 33.

Angel Hotel, Doncaster, Tuesday, Sept. 15th, 1857.

My dear Georgy,

I found your letter here on my arrival yesterday. I had hoped that the well[†4] would have been almost finished by this time, and the additions to the house almost finished too — but patience, patience!

We have very good, clean, and quiet apartments here, on the second floor, looking down into the main street, which is full of horse jockeys, bettors, drunkards, and other blackguards, from morning to night — and all night. The races begin to-day and last till Friday, which is the Cup Day. I am not going to the course this morning, but have engaged a carriage (open, and pair) for to-morrow[†5] and Friday.[†6]

"The Frozen Deep's" author gets on as well as could be expected. He can hobble up and down stairs when absolutely necessary, and limps to his bedroom on the same floor. He talks of going to the theatre to-night in a cab,[†7] which will be the first occasion of his going out, except to travel, since the accident. He sends his kind regard and thanks for enquiries and condolence. I am perpetually tidying the rooms after him, and carrying all sorts of untidy things which belong to him into his bedroom, which is a picture of disorder. You will please to imagine mine, airy and clean, little dressing-room attached, eight water-jugs (I never saw such a supply), capital sponge-bath, perfect arrangement, and exquisite neatness. We breakfast at half-past eight, and fall to work for H. W. afterwards. Then I go out, and — hem! look for subjects.

The mayor called this morning to do the honours of the town, whom it pleased the Inimitable to receive with great courtesy and affability. He propounded invitation to public déjeûner, which it did not please the Inimitable to receive, and which he graciously rejected.

That's all the news. Everything I can describe by hook or by crook, I describe for H. W.[†1] So there is nothing of that sort left for letters.

Best love to dear Mamey and Katey, and to Charley, and to Harry. Any number of kisses to the noble Plorn.

Ever affectionately
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To W. H. WILLS, 17 SEPTEMBER 1857

MS Huntington Library.

Angel Hotel, Doncaster
Thursday Seventeenth September, | 1857

My Dear Wills.

The day post has brought me your note, and I write you by return a few words in reply.

The other halves of the notes[†2] I believe are all safe. One in Arthur Smith's hands; one in mine. I cannot remember the correspondent's name, or any thing about him, except that he dated from Exchange Buildings, Liverpool.[†3]

All of my part — three pages and a half — of the second portion of the Lazy Tour is already here, and in corrected type. Collins is sticking a little with his story, but I hope will come through it tomorrow. He is much obliged by your enquiries and sympathy, and sends his kind regard. He can't walk out, but can limp about the room, and has had two Doncaster rides in a carriage. Is to be treated to another tomorrow, if he has done.

Happy to hear so good an account of Mrs. Wills.

[†a]Young Jerrold, just contemptible. Poor Jerrold in his grave must not be confounded with him; and in this thought I tore the paper up after I had read the letter, and would not allow myself to be passionate about it.[†1] I wish I was as good a boy in all things as I hope I have been, and mean to be, in this.

But Lord bless you, the strongest parts of your present correspondent's heart are made up of weaknesses. And he just come to be here at all (if you knew it) along of his Richard Wardour![†2] Guess that riddle, Mr. Wills! — [†a]

Ever Faithfully

CD

To HENRY AUSTIN, 19 SEPTEMBER 1857

MS Morgan Library.

Doncaster | Saturday September Nineteenth | 1857

My Dear Henry.

Your letter has been forwarded to me here from Gad's Hill, and I enclose you a cheque (payable to "Order") in Nye's favor, for Three Hundred Pounds.[†3] Will you address acknowledgment of its safe receipt, to me at Gad's Hill. I expect to return there, on Tuesday or Wednesday.

Pumps deferred make the Heart sick,[†4] — but the complaint is not of your engendering, I know very well.

Ever affectionately

[CD.][†5]

Over

I reopen this, to say that I am very much disposed, so soon as we go to town at the end of October, to make that Conservatory[†6] suggested by Barber,[†7] which would relieve the house of the little Drawing Room. I think it would make such a great difference in its value, if I wanted to sell it, to have a conservatory with two openings from the Drawing Room: one on each side of the Fire. Let us carefully devise it while the men are about, and have a careful estimate made of its exact cost.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?19 SEPTEMBER 1857]

Extracts and summaries in F, VIII, i, 633-4. Date: from Doncaster, where they had arrived on 14 Sep, the day before the St Leger; probably written on 19 Sep, the day after the Cup day (18 Sep).

On the St Leger Day a wonderful, paralysing, coincidence befell him. He bought a race-card; facetiously wrote down three names for the winners of the three chief races (never in his life having heard or thought of any of the horses, except that the winner of the Derby, who proved to be nowhere, had been mentioned to him); and, if you can believe it without your hair standing on end, those three races were won, one after another, by those three horses!!![†1] He also thought it noticeable that, though the losses were enormous, nobody had won, for there was nothing but grinding of teeth and blaspheming of ill-luck. On the night of the Cup Day a groaning phantom lay in the doorway of his bedroom and howled all night. The landlord came up in the morning to apologise, and said it was a gentleman who had lost £1500 or £2000; and he had drunk a deal afterwards; and then they put him to bed, and then he — took the 'orrors, and got up, and yelled till morning.

Saying if a boy with any good in him, but with a dawning propensity to sporting and betting, were but brought to the Doncaster races soon enough, it would cure him.

To W. H. WILLS, 20 SEPTEMBER 1857

MS Huntington Library.

Angel, Doncaster | Sunday Twentieth September 1857

My Dear Wills.

[†a]I am going [†b]to take the little — riddle[†b†2] — into the country this morning;[†3] and I answer your letter briefly, before starting.[†a]

I see no other objection to the Manchester article[†4] than that [it][†5] is commonplace.

The Bristol Prayer Monger[†6] I have never had sent me, and therefore can do nothing to. But the name suggests care and caution.

You will see that the second part of the Lazy Tour is very long.[†7] The third will be much shorter — not more than half this quantity, if so much.[†8]

My next address will be, Gad's Hill. I think I shall leave here on Tuesday, but I cannot positively say. Collins and I part company tomorrow. (He can walk now — walked a mile yesterday, with a stick.) I did intend to return home tomorrow, but have no idea now of doing that.[†1] Whatever I do, I shall of course come up to the scratch with the third part. Indeed I have half done it. [†b]So let the riddle and the riddler go their own wild way, and no harm come of it![†b]

I am very sorry to hear of Mrs. Wills, to whom my kind regard again. But you know how constantly it happens that the first effect of the sea[†2] is to exaggerate and stimulate an illness.

Ever Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

Collins sends kind regard.

To J. L. BOLTON,[†3] 23 SEPTEMBER 1857

Text from transcript of MS in Doncaster Municipal Museum.

Gad's Hill Place, Higham by Rochester, Kent
Twenty Third September 1857

Sir,

I regret I did not receive your obliging letter until yesterday, when I found it on my return home from Doncaster. If it had come to hand sooner I should have had the pleasure of thanking you in person, instead of through the medium of this note.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

J. L. Bolton Esq.

To SHIRLEY BROOKS, 24 SEPTEMBER 1857*

MS New York Public Library.

Gad's Hill Place, Higham.
Thursday Twenty Fourth September 1857

My Dear Brooks.

No letters have been forwarded to me in my absence, and I have only just got yours.

The absurdity of the thing made me break out into a fit of laughter. I cannot but think that it is the Printer's folly, and that you have already found it to be so. I will not say that I doubt [B...y's][†1] being able to play the knave, but I really don't think he would play the Fool to such extraordinary perfection.[†2]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Shirley Brooks Esquire

To JOHN FORSTER, [24 SEPTEMBER 1857]

Extracts in F, I, i, 2n and VIII, iii, 653. Date: all 24 Sep 57, according to Forster.

Being here[†3] again, or as much here as anywhere in particular.

I shall cut this letter short, for they are playing Masaniello[†4] in the drawing-room, and I feel very much as I used to do when I was a small child a few miles off, and Somebody[†5] (who I wonder, and which way did She go, when she died) hummed the evening hymn[†6] to me, and I cried on the pillow — either with the remorseful consciousness of having kicked Somebody else, or because still Somebody else had hurt my feelings in the course of the day.

Here are six men perpetually going up and down the well (I know that somebody will be killed), in the course of fitting a pump; which is quite a railway terminus — it is so iron, and so big.[†7] The process is much like putting Oxford-Street endwise, and laying gas along it, than anything else. By the time it is finished, the cost of this water will be something absolutely frightful. But of course it proportionately increases the value of the property, and that's my only comfort.... The horse has gone lame from a sprain, the big dog has run a tenpenny nail into one of his hind feet, the bolts have all flown out of the basket-carriage, and the gardener says all the fruit trees want replacing with new ones.

To CAPTAIN E. E. MORGAN,[†1] 24 SEPTEMBER 1857

MS Mrs Richard Armstrong.

Gad's Hill, Higham, by Rochester
Twenty Fourth September 1857

My Dear Morgan.

Another box of Cigars, just now received at this little old-fashioned country-house of mine, perched on the very hill-top where Falstaff ran away! You don't know, my dear fellow, how often you are with me. Two or three times every week, as I light my Cigar after dinner, and sit down in my study or go out walking (according to the season), to muse, I say "I wonder whether Morgan will ever bring one of those big ships back, and beam upon me with the light of his bright face, and hear me tell him the story of the Wet Lovers and the dry one!" (You must know that I have appropriated that story, and acquired immense reputation by it.)[†2]

God bless you and yours! I heartily tell you that every short letter from you, comes to me like a wholesome breeze from the other side of the Atlantic, giving me assurance that fine natures and sound hearts will never die out of any land, so long as the Rainbow shines.

I will inaugurate the first chapter of the next book (whenever it comes into life; it is in the land of shadows now, unknown to me, and waiting to be born) by fumigating it in MS with a Cigar reserved from this very box.

Faithfully Your friend
CHARLES DICKENS

To DAVID [?PERKINS],[†3] 24 SEPTEMBER 1857

Extract in Ernest Dressel North catalogue, 1926; dated Gad's Hill Place, 24 Sep 57.

Sir. Your letter has just now been forwarded to me here at my house in the country. I comply with your request with much pleasure, and send this brief autograph accordingly.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

David L. [P]erkins, Esquire

To PAUL WEINLING,[†4] 24 SEPTEMBER 1857

Mention in J. A. Stargardt, Marburg catalogue 1958; addressed Paul Weinling; dated 24 Sep 57.

To WILLIAM BANTING,[†1] 26 SEPTEMBER 1857*

MS Fales Collection, New York University Library.

Gad's Hill Place, Higham, by Rochester
Saturday Twenty Sixth September | 1857.

Dear Mr. Banting.

Your letter has given me very great pleasure. I saw Mrs. Thompson[†2] before she went, and told her that I trusted her with great confidence. I will write to her at once, and encourage her in her excellent course.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To CAROLINE THOMPSON, [?26 SEPTEMBER 1857]

Mention in last. Date: He probably wrote the same day.

To W. H. WILLS, 26 SEPTEMBER 1857

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS,
Saturday Twenty Sixth September 1857

My Dear Wills. I write you a line, with such slight official intelligence as I have.

Part 3 of The Lazy Tour, I have corrected, and introduced Collins's copy[†3] (received this morning) in to. I have instructed B and E to send him down Proof to Scarborough tonight, and have instructed him to send back proof to B and E tomorrow night. There are some descriptions of mine in it (particularly one, of a Railway Station), that I think very good indeed.[†4]

Part 4, I am at work on.

Oxenford has sent a paper "Touching the Lord Hamlet",[†5] giving a very good account of the old Saxo Grammaticus history.[†6] I have sent it to the Printer, with instructions to send proof to him.

I have, at Gad's Hill, a pretty little paper of a good deal of merit,[†7] by one Mr. Hollingshead, who addressed me as having tried his hand in the Train.[†8] This, too, I will send to the Printer's. (I ought to have brought it from Gad's Hill this morning, but forgot it.) I am inclined to hope that the writer may be very serviceable to us.

Collins I have made the new proposal to, as we agreed.

Evans has been with me this morning, to ask me, Would I have a Posting-Bill of the Lazy Tour? I replied, most decidedly Yes.[†1] I think it will give us a good push into the public mind, at a very dull time — will probably do us good at Christmas.

I spent while I was away, £75. I shall make a very handsome deduction indeed, if I take off £15 for any personal peculiarities in the order of march. That I will do, however; and therefore H. W. has to pay £10 to my account at Coutts's.

Which reminds me: — Will you make a memorandum that whenever you settle accounts with Miss Coutts, I have to receive £5 for her subscription to the Reverend Mr. Ford,[†2] which I have paid.

Trusting that Mrs. Wills continues to improve,

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?27-28 SEPTEMBER 1857]

Extract in F, VIII, iii, 653. Date: "came in three days" after 24 Sep, according to Forster.

I have discovered that the seven miles between Maidstone and Rochester is one of the most beautiful walks in England. Five men have been looking attentively at the pump for a week, and (I should hope) may begin to fit it in the course of October.

To JOHN THOMPSON, 28 SEPTEMBER 1857*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address (Envelope, MS Walter T. Spencer): Household Words Office | 16 Wellington Street North | Strand | London | W. C. PM Rochester 28 Sep 57.

Gad's Hill Place | Twenty Eighth September 1857.

I have always forgotten to ask you, John, whether the Scenery and fittings are all right, and have been all properly put away at Tavistock House. I hope so.

Will you go up there, and look in the Wardrobe in my dressing-room, and see what black ankle-boots are there, with stout soles for walking. And if they require heeling, or any other repairing, please get them done at once.

CHARLES DICKENS

To W. H. WILLS, 28 SEPTEMBER 1857*

MS Huntington Library.

Gad's Hill | Monday Twenty Eighth September 1857

My Dear Wills.

A considerable alteration must be made in this No.[†3]

The Murder of the Agah Abdullah[†1] must be shortened and made plainer. I don't understand it as I read it. It does not cohere. I can make nothing of it.

The Two Janes[†2] are as bad as need be; but may remain.[†3]

Adolphe Adam — positively NO.[†4]

If you want papers of merit, there is Oxenford's at the Printers;[†5] and I send you, enclosed, the other that I wrote to you of.[†6] But the Number must be altered, and will not do.

Ever Faithfully CD.

Over
Will you send Miss Coutts the enclosed letter — she will remember the writer[†7] well — and ask her from me what answer I am to return?

To SIR ALEXANDER DUFF GORDON, SEPTEMBER 1857

Mention in S. J. Davey's catalogue No. 42; MS 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill, 9 Sep 57, according to catalogue; but clearly in error, as CD was in Cumberland then.

Mentions Household Words.[†8]

To MRS MASON,[†9] [LATE] SEPTEMBER 1857

Mention in Meridian Bookshop catalogue, No. 48; MS 4 pp.; addressed Mrs Mason; dated 18 Sep 57, but must be after return from Doncaster.[†10]

October

To MESSRS BRADBURY & EVANS, [1 OCTOBER 1857]

Mention in To Wills, 2 Oct.

To MESSRS BRADBURY & EVANS, [2 OCTOBER 1857]

Mention in To Wills, 2 Oct.

To JOHN THOMPSON, [2 OCTOBER 1857]

Mention in next. Date: clearly written the same day.

To W. H. WILLS, 2 OCTOBER 1857

MS Huntington Library.

Gad's Hill Place | Friday Second October 1857

My Dear Wills

I have yours of yesterday, this morning.

Know, that I yesterday sent to B and E, the greater part of the Lazy Tour Part IV; and that by this post I send the rest — having stuck to it, and finished it this morning. A very odd story, with a wild, picturesque fancy in it.[†1]

I write to John, to tell him not to come, if he has only to come for copy.

Monday, so far as I know at this moment, will suit me very well. In case I should have occasion to go to town that day (possible, but not probable), I will write to you again in the meantime.

I don't remember whether I have told you that I have made the arrangement [†a]with Collins[†a] — that he is extremely sensible of the extra Fifty,[†2] and was rather unwilling to take it — and that I have no doubt of his being devoted to H.W. and doing great service.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To HENRY BOWIE, 3 OCTOBER 1857*

MS Deighton Bell & Co.

Gad's Hill Place, Higham, by Rochester
Third October 1857

Dear Sir

I cannot, I regret to inform you, supply the date for which you have left a blank in your Prospectus; nor can I even positively say that I shall be able to read in Edinburgh, at any time during the coming winter. My exertions in that way during the past summer, "In Remembrance of the late Mr. Jerrold" have been so great, and have so much interfered with my fulfilment of other conditional promises to read elsewhere, that I am placed in quite a new condition as to such engagements. To say that I could not foresee it, would be simply to say that I could not foresee the date of a friend's death.

Dear Sir | Your faithful Servant

CHARLES DICKENS

Henry Bowie Esquire

To ARTHUR RYLAND, 3 OCTOBER 1857

MS Benoliel Collection.

Gad's Hill Place, Higham, by Rochester
Saturday Evening, Third October 1857

My Dear Sir.

I have had the honor and pleasure of receiving your letter of the Twenty Eighth of last month, informing me of the distinction that has been conferred upon me by the Council of the Birmingham and Midland Institute.

Allow me to assure you with much sincerity that I am highly gratified by having been elected one of the first Honorary Members of that establishment.[†1] Nothing could have enhanced my interest in so important an undertaking;[†2] but the compliment is all the more welcome to me on that account.

I accept it with a due sense of its worth, with many acknowledgments, and with all good wishes.

I am Ever My Dear Sir | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Arthur Ryland Esquire

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 4 OCTOBER 1857

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Queen's Hotel | Alderley | near | Manchester.

Gad's Hill Place. | Sunday Fourth October 1857

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I sent Mrs. Matthews, £20, on receipt of your letter.

Mr. Collins (who never goes out with me on any expedition, without receiving some damage or other), sprained his leg on our second day out; and I had to carry him, à la Richard Wardour, in and out of all the Inns, Railway Carriages &c, during the rest of the Expedition. You will see Our "Lazy Tour" now going on in Household Words. It contains some descriptions (hem!) remarkable for their fanciful fidelity, and two grim stories — the first, of next Wednesday, by the cripple;[†3] the second, of next Wednesday fortnight, that is to say in the Fourth Part, by your present correspondent — a Ghost Story — a bit of Diablerie.[†4]

When I am clear of this Tour, I shall have to go to the Christmas Number of Household Words;[†5] and I fear (as I want to do a great deal to it) that I shall not be in a condition to come, either "here", or there, while you are "here", or "there". But I have put the travelling-scheme in my desk, and shall try.

We have not yet heard from Walter at Calcutta — could not do so, until the next Mail — but we have had three letters from him: the last, from Suez. He seems to be perfectly happy, in great enjoyment of the novelties surrounding him, and with no more thoughts of home — as yet, at all events — than if he had never had one.

When you next come to see this place, you won't know it. I have made all manner of changes. The glass of water has not been drunk yet, and the process of fitting the Pump (which is proceeding as slowly, and in every respect as *un*satisfactorily as possible) is like putting Oxford Street on end, and laying gas up it.

I observed an extraordinary deterioration in Layard,[†1] the last time I saw him. I ventured to hint to him[†2] that I thought it came of his not leaving the noble game of Politics to the Knaves and Fools and Pococurante,[†3] until they had ruined us.[†4]

When I see people writing letters in the Times day after day, about this class and that class not joining the Army and having no interest in arms — and when I think how we all know that we have suffered a system to go on, which has blighted generous ambition, and put reward out of the common man's reach — and how our gentry have disarmed our Peasantry — I become Demoniacal.[†5]

And I wish I were Commander in Chief in India.[†6] The first thing I would do to strike that Oriental race with amazement (not in the least regarding them as if they lived in the Strand, London, or at Camden Town), should be to proclaim to them, in their language, that I considered my holding that appointment by the leave of God, to mean that I should do my utmost to exterminate the Race upon whom the stain of the late cruelties rested;[†7] and that I begged them to do me the favor to observe that I was there for that purpose and no other, and was now proceeding, with all convenient dispatch and merciful swiftness of execution, to blot it out of mankind and raze it off the face of the Earth.[†8]

My love to Mrs. Brown, with these sentiments.

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully & affecy. Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To F. W. HAMSTEDE, 4 OCTOBER 1857*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Gad's Hill Place, Higham, by Rochester
Sunday Fourth October 1857

My Dear Sir

I received your letter, in Yorkshire. I received Mr. Blanchard Jerrold's published letter[†1] at about the same time. I need hardly tell you that it made me sick at heart of the subject, and that I could take charge of no more money, so generously given, and so thanklessly pocketed.

I therefore determined to leave the matter at rest, until I should one day see you at the Garrick.

Equally I had determined to let the whole matter rest until the Resurrection-Day, and never to notice Mr. Blanchard Jerrold's letter. But I find, in other Members of the Committee, an indignant and decided determination that this must not be.

Let me ask you, therefore, if I have your permission to make that public reference to Mr. Ashurst's letter to you, of which I send you a draft enclosed.[†2]

My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

F. W. Hamstede Esquire

To JOHN HOLLINGSHEAD, 4 OCTOBER 1857

Extract in American Book Prices Current, 1934; MS 1 p.; addressed John Hollingshead; dated Gad's Hill Place, 4 Oct 57.

I don't think there is enough in this paper to separate it from some other similar narratives (more or less) that have appeared in Household Words.[†3]

To MRS CARMICHAEL-SMYTH,[†1] [5] OCTOBER 1857*

MS University of California, Los Angeles. Date: misdated by CD; Monday was 5 Oct 57.

Gad's Hill | Monday Fourth October 1857.

My Dear Mrs. Smyth.

I very much regret to inform you that I cannot make your friend's story available for Household Words. I observe many good things in it, and much in the descriptions it contains that is felt in a picturesque and striking way; but it is too diffuse; too deficient in character, and too slow in its movement with a reference to its length, to have the requisite address in it to a large Audience.

It would be useless for me to trouble the Authoress with a request to send me the remainder. Howsoever the story ends, I could not overcome the difficulties in its Household-Words-way.

Will you thank the lady from me for her offer? And will you tell her from me, as you most conscientiously may, that I think the idea of the title, and the manner in which an interest in it is derived from the Pedigree, very novel and ingenious?

I beg to send my kind regard to Major Smyth,[†2] and am Ever

Very faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Carmichael Smyth.

To E. W. LANE,[†3] 5 OCTOBER 1857*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Gad's Hill Place, Higham, by Rochester

Fifth October 1857

Dear Sir

Coming to my little country-house, after an absence of a few weeks in other parts of England, I find your obliging note. Pray accept my assurance that I accept your little book[†4] (still lying at my house in town), with many thanks; and that I should not have been so (apparently) remiss in acknowledging its receipt, but for the reason which I have troubled you by explaining.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Edward W Lane Esquire

To RICHARD BENTLEY, 5 OCTOBER 1857*

MS Berg Collection.

Gad's Hill Place | Monday Night | Fifth October 1857

My Dear Mr. Bentley

I was in Yorkshire when you addressed your letter of the Seventeenth of last month, to me. I have not been long at home, but have had time to consider and reconsider it.

I cannot overcome my objection to that kind of use of my name with the public; — simply because I cannot overcome the conviction that it would be an abuse of it. For this reason, and no other, I must beg you to excuse me from entertaining your proposal.[†1]

But I shall be heartily glad to shew, in the frankest manner on all becoming occasions, that the old wound between us has quite healed up and left no mark.[†2] And I hope I may be able to do that, in many little social ways, which will be quite as significant — at least — as if I took money from you.

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esquire

To JOHN FORSTER, [?19 SEPTEMBER-6 OCTOBER 1857]

Extract in F, IX, i, 726. Date: between 19 Sep and 6 Oct (see below).[†3]

Saying that he and Collins had written together the second part of the "Lazy Tour"; in which I think you would find it very difficult to say where I leave off and he comes in;[†4] of the descriptions in the first part he had said Some of my own tickle me very much;[†5] but that may be in great part because I know the originals, and delight in their fantastic fidelity.

To JOHN THOMPSON, 6 OCTOBER 1857

Text from Sawyer's catalogue No. 103 (1931); addressed John Thompson; dated Gad's Hill, 6 Oct 57.

John. These letters are important. Leave them at the different Newspaper Offices[†6] to which they are addressed, as soon as they are delivered into your hands. Do not delay. — CHARLES DICKENS

To THE EDITOR OF THE TIMES, 6 OCTOBER 1857

Text from The Times, 7 Oct 57.

October 6, 1857

Sir,

You were so kind as to give publicity to a letter we addressed to you on the termination of our labours "In remembrance of the late Mr. Jerrold," making known their result.[†1]

Mr. Jerrold's eldest son thereupon gave to a letter of his own what publicity he could obtain for it, making his own representation of his late father's affairs.[†2]

We knew our forbearing and delicate reference to them (forced upon us by exaggerations with which we had been repeatedly met, and which the son had never contradicted) to be perfectly accurate, and we knew his account of them to be highly incorrect. We are extremely sorry to be obliged to produce the proof of this; but it is necessary to the clearance of our own good faith, and that of the gentlemen associated with us.

We have before us, under date the 2d of this present month, a letter from the solicitor to the late Mr. Jerrold's estate[†3] (a gentleman well known in his profession, Mr. Ashurst, of the Old Jewry), in which, after mentioning that there is a life assurance of 1,000*l.*, which is Mrs. Jerrold's absolutely, and which the estate cannot claim, he informs the correspondent to whom his communication is addressed "that he cannot understand Mr. Blanchard Jerrold's reason for writing this unfortunate letter;" that he thinks "he and his family ought to be set right on the matter;" and that, if a certain claim be urged of which he has received the particulars, "the facts and figures show that the estate will be absolutely insolvent."

We quote this letter with its writer's permission, and we have now done with this subject for ever.[†4]

Your faithful servants,
CHARLES DICKENS
ARTHUR W. W. SMITH

To JAMES DAVIS,[†1] 7 OCTOBER 1857

MS University of Kentucky.

Gad's Hill Place. | Seventh October 1857

Dear Sir

In acknowledging the receipt of your interesting letter, and in thanking you for it, I have to express my regret that I cannot comply with your request. But, I receive similar requests by hundreds; and I have already promised that whenever I read in this neighbourhood, I will do so for the local[†2] Mechanics' Institution.

Dear Sir | Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

James Davis Esquire

To JOHN HOLLINGSHEAD, 7 OCTOBER 1857

Extract in Dodd Mead Company catalogue No. 69; MS 2 pp.; dated Gad's Hill Place, 7 Oct 57.

I am proceeding on a new plan with the Christmas Number this year,[†3] and it may be considered as already done.

To JOHN THOMPSON, 7 OCTOBER 1857*

MS Walter T. Spencer.

Tavistock House | Wednesday, Seventh October 1857.

I shall be in town tomorrow (Thursday) afternoon, and shall be glad to have the Dressing-Room comfortable, as I shall want to change at the office. I shall also be glad to have a little bit of fish and a mutton chop for dinner at the office at half past 4.

CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [?EARLY OCTOBER 1857]

Extract from F, VIII, ii, 638. Date: "early autumn", according to Forster; and after Forster had read the account of CD's "rush up Carrick Fell", published 3 Oct.

Too late to say, put the curb on, and don't rush at hills — the wrong man to say it to. I have now no relief but in action. I am become incapable of rest. I am quite confident I should rust, break, and die, if I spared myself. Much better to die, doing. What I am in that way, nature made me first, and my way of life has of late, alas! confirmed. I must accept the drawback — since it is one — with the powers I have; and I must hold upon the tenure prescribed to me.†4

To MRS CORNELIUS, 11 OCTOBER 1857

Text from N, II, 890.

Gad's Hill Place | Sunday Eleventh October 1857

My Dear Anne

I want some little changes made in the arrangement of my dressing-room and the Bathroom. And as I would rather not have them talked about by comparative strangers, I shall be much obliged to you, my old friend, if you will see them completed before you leave Tavistock House.

I wish to make the Bathroom my washing-room also. It will be therefore necessary to carry into the Bathroom, to remain there, the two washing-stands from my Dressing-Room. Then, to get rid altogether, of the chest of drawers in the Dressing-Room I want the recess of the doorway between the Dressing-Room and Mrs. Dickens's room, fitted with plain white deal shelves, and closed in with a plain light deal door, painted white. Rudkin can do this — or Lillie,†1 being in the house, can do it if he likes.†2 The sooner it is done, the better.

My wardrobe will then stand where the chest of Drawers stands now, and a small iron bedstead will go behind the door, with its side against the wall, as you enter the Dressing-Room; its head towards the stairs, and its foot towards the window. I have ordered the bedstead and bedding, and they will be sent to Tavistock House to you. The chest of drawers shall come down here, when the van comes down to bring our luggage home at the end of the month.

They all send their love.

Ever Faithfully Yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To J. B. BUCKSTONE, 13 OCTOBER 1857*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS,
Tuesday Thirteenth October 1857.

My Dear Buckstone.

No. I do not believe that you have "made out of the matter a mere managerial bargain", and I do not believe that you have done any thing in it but oblige me very readily.[†3] For which accept my cordial thanks.

I need hardly tell you that my interest in the young lady does not cease with the effecting of this arrangement, and that I shall always regard your taking care of her and remembering her, as an act of personal friendship to me.[†1] On the termination of her present engagement, I hope you will tell me, before you tell her, what you see for her, "looming in the future."[†2]

I enclose a cheque (which I have not crossed) for Fifty Pounds.[†3]

As you are so far as Shooter's Hill[†4] on the way to Gad's Hill; I wish you would come from your hill to my hill, and have Sunday dinner. I would meet you at Dartford, and bring you on in a basket-carriage; and I would keep you (with your leave) all night, and send you anywhere in the morning. Could it be done, — on Sunday Week for instance?

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

J. B. Buckstone Esquire.

To SHIRLEY BROOKS, 14 OCTOBER 1857

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

Gad's Hill Place | Fourteenth October 1857

My Dear Shirley Brooks.

As I would on no account notice William Jerrold's[†5] letter,[†6] myself, so I would on no account have you notice it either. The thing is at an end. I have turned that little entry in the book of my life, and can quite composedly pass to a new page.

In the far different and far more cheering matter of your dedication[†7] and the affectionate part of your note referring to it, let me assure you that the new line[†8] gives me hearty pleasure, and that you shall never find the sincere friendship fail on my side. Of the old part, which pleased me so much when it was new and which has not faded at all, I will only say again that if I have an object in life, it is to leave my calling (as I do believe I shall), much better than I found it; and that in the unpretending sincerity and constant remembrance of this desire, I am worthy that grasp of your workman's hand.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS[†9]

Shirley Brooks Esquire.

To CHARLES COLLINS, 16 OCTOBER 1857*

MS Mr H. E. Quick.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS,
Friday Sixteenth October 1857

My Dear Charles Collins

I have left a letter of Wilkie's behind me at Gad's Hill, and cannot remember his present address.[†1] If you know it (as I dare say you do) will you send on the enclosed[†2] to him without loss of time?

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Collins Esquire.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 16 OCTOBER 1857*

MS Fales Collection, New York University Library.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS,
Sixteenth October 1857

Dearest Georgy

I shall not be able to get home tonight as I had expected, and shall therefore come by the Train on Sunday by which I came last Sunday. Knowing that Charley is not with you and that you have some letters, I send John down for them.

Ever and ever Affectionately[†3]

To CLARKSON STANFIELD, 16 OCTOBER 1857

MS Berg Collection.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS,
Friday Sixteenth October 1857

My Dear Stanny

I am extremely sorry to hear that you have been ill and confined to the house. I have been far away, and very busy, and much distressed by some anxieties, or I should have heard of you sooner.

Tomorrow forenoon I hope to be able to come out to Hampstead and shake you by the hand. In the meantime here is an old little friend in a new frock, who has been long due,[†1] and who begs to be tenderly taken in.[†2]

Ever affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

Clarkson Stanfield Esquire.

To LORD BROUGHAM, 18 OCTOBER 1857*

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

Gad's Hill Place, Higham | by Rochester, Kent
Eighteenth October 1857

My Dear Lord Brougham

I venture to send you the enclosed note from Miss Power, because I believe I know the urgency of her case better than any one else, and because I am sure I have seen her hard struggle to become quietly independent, with great sympathy and admiration. She is no fine lady in these changed times; but a thoroughly hard-working, self reliant, striving woman.[†3] Whatever she could get to do, she would do conscientiously and well. I am as certain of it, as I could possibly be if I spoke for myself. If one or two of the most powerful of those who remember that dead and gone house[†4] and the attractions of poor D'Orsay,[†5] would try to do this little thing for her, they would do a real and a most gracious kindness, and she would always deserve it.[†6]

My Dear Lord Brougham | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The | Lord Brougham.

To HENRY MORLEY, 18 OCTOBER 1857

MS Comtesse de Suzannet.

Gad's Hill Place. | Higham, by Rochester, Kent
Sunday Eighteenth October | 1857

My Dear Morley.

I particularly want a little piece of information, with a view to the construction of something for Household Words.[†7] I have not the means of reference here, and I dare say you can supply them out of your own reading. It will oblige me very much, if you will consider and reply to the following question.

Whether, at any time within a hundred years or so, we were in such amicable relations with South America as would have rendered it reasonably possible for us to have made, either a public treaty, or a private bargain, with a South American Government, empowering a little English Colony, established on the spot for the purpose, to work a Silver-Mine (on purchase of the right). And whether, in that suppositious case, it is reasonably possible that our English Government at home would have sent out a small force, of a few Marines or so, for that little Colony's protection; or (which is the same thing), would have drafted them off from the nearest English Military Station.[†1]

Or, can you suggest, from your remembrance, any more probable set of circumstances, in which a few English people — gentlemen, ladies, and children — and a few English soldiers, would find themselves alone in a strange wild place and liable to hostile attack?

I wish to avoid India[†2] itself; but I want to shadow out in what I do, the bravery of our ladies in India.

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Henry Morley Esquire

To F. M. EVANS, 20 OCTOBER 1857

Text from N, II, 892.

Ship Hotel, Dover[†3] | Tuesday Twentieth October 1857

My Dear Evans,

We decide upon No. 1., at six shillings.[†4] I know you will be glad to hear this, and I therefore send you the intelligence.

Mr. Forster will see you as soon as he comes to town — probably on Saturday. He will then see Chapman and arrange other matters with him. This done, I will appoint with you for our meeting at Household Words to settle the draft of the Prospectus.[†1]

Faithfully Yours always
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To WILKIE COLLINS, 22 OCTOBER 1857

MS Morgan Library.

[OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS][†2]
Thursday Twenty Second October 1857

My Dear Wilkie

The accompanying letter from Morley (as usually happens in these cases) conglomerates and complicates the business, I think.

You will see nothing appropriate about Silver Mines in the book,[†3] except at the following references. All in Vol I.

Page 169 to 172[†4]

" 224 to 226[†5]

" 285 to 290.[†6]

Look it over, and let us then come to some conclusion, right or wrong, and follow it out.

Shall we meet here tomorrow between 3 and 5, or shall I come to you between those hours? Let me know, according to your health.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To WILLIAM CRESWICK, 22 OCTOBER 1857

MS Dickens House.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS,
Thursday Twenty Second October 1857

Dear Sir

I want to see your Drama now in course of representation,[†1] of which I think I know something in another form.[†2] I shall be in town tomorrow (Friday) evening, and shall be very glad to occupy a Private Box if you can conveniently place one at my disposal.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

William Creswick Esquire

To EMILE DE LA RUE, 23 OCTOBER 1857*

MS Berg Collection.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS,
Friday Twenty Third October 1857

My Dear De la Rue.

I cannot tell you how delighted I have been to receive your budget of news, or with what interest I have read, and re-read, your letter. I hope you really will produce yourself at Tavistock House before the year is out, and that my dear old patient will appear there before the next year is out. Both of you shall have the heartiest welcome that the Inimitable's house and its inmates can give. Believe that, and take it from my heart to both of yours! —

Between ourselves (I beckon Madame De la Rue nearer with my fore-finger, and whisper this with a serio-comic smile), I don't get on better in these later times with a certain poor lady you know of, than I did in the earlier Peschiere[†3] days. Much worse. Much worse![†4] Neither do the children, elder or younger.[†1] Neither can she get on with herself, or be any thing but unhappy.[†2] (She has been excruciatingly jealous of, and has obtained positive proofs of my being on the most confidential terms with, at least Fifteen Thousand Women of various conditions in life, every condition in life, since we left Genoa. Please to respect me for this vast experience.)[†3] What we should do, or what the Girls would be, without Georgy, I cannot imagine. She is the active spirit of the house, and the children dote upon her. Enough of this. We put the Skeleton away in the cupboard, and very few people, comparatively, know of its existence.

— Not Albert Smith, for one, I dare say! I thought you would be pleased with him, and rather chuckled when I sent him to you.[†4] He is a very good, kind fellow, under certain oddities of manner, and has a most hearty recollection of his intercourse with you. Only yesterday (he being now at home again), he wrote me a letter, asking me when we should go to some place about Town and dine, and then stroll to the Theatre "and talk about the De la Rues and Genoa"? I appointed tomorrow night, so we shall overhaul you at a great rate.

My visual ray[†5] has been lately dwelling on the wilds of Cumberland and Yorkshire, where whole towns have turned out (as in duty bound) to greet the Inimitable and offer him homage. One night at Doncaster I was at the Theatre,[†6] where I had been behaving excessively ill in the way of gaping and rubbing my head wearily, from 7 to 11, without the slightest idea that anybody knew me; and I was slouching out at the fall of the Curtain, with my hands in my pockets and a general expression upon me of total want of dignity, when the Pit suddenly got up without the slightest warning, and cried out "Three cheers for Charles Dickens Esquire!" Thereupon all the house took it up, the actors came back and joined in the demonstration, and I was obliged instantaneously to convert myself into a most affable, interesting, and beaming personage. [†a][I was a little troubled in my mind by not having that other waistcoat on, but made a very splendid appearance, all things considered.][†a]

Why did they know nothing of the Hindoo character? Why? Do you ask why? Because it was the system to know nothing of anything; and to believe that England, while doing nothing, was doing everything. There are Thousands of Asses now — and Asses in power: which is the worst of it — who will hold this faith — if one could dignify such idiotcy by the name — until they have done for all of us. It is not three years since there were Indian Princes here; and in the rush after them, that baser side of the genteel character which would go Tuft-Hunting after the Devil was exhibited in a most astounding degree. Again and again, I have said to Ladies, spirited enough and handsome enough and clever enough to have known better (not of the 15,000, please to observe!), "what on earth do you see in those men to go mad about? You know faces, when they are not brown; you know common expressions when they are not under turbans; Look at the dogs — low, treacherous, murderous, tigerous villains who despise you while you pay court to them, and who would rend you to pieces at half an hour's notice." I suppose a greater mistake was never committed in the world, than this wretched Lord Canning's[†1] maudlin proclamation about mercy.[†2] It would have been bad enough, if the Hindoos lived in the Strand here, and had the ideas of London vagabonds; but, addressed to the Oriental character, it is hideously absurd and dangerous. I wish I were Commander in Chief over there! I would address that Oriental character which must be powerfully spoken to, in something like the following placard, which should be vigorously translated into all native dialects, "I, The Inimitable, holding this office of mine, and firmly believing that I hold it by the permission of Heaven and not by the appointment of Satan, have the honor to inform you Hindoo gentry that it is my intention, with all possible avoidance of unnecessary cruelty and with all merciful swiftness of execution, to exterminate the Race from the face of the earth,[†3] which disfigured the earth with the late abominable atrocities."

Poor Charley Gibbs, poor dear Gibbs.[†4] Give him my Love, and tell him everything that is cheery and friendly from me. And poor Browne[†5] — the man cast in the same mould as myself — the man formed (as he said) to be my twin brother! Broken his rib! Why the wrong rib? Why not break Mrs. Browne! I have hope of his recovery, poor fellow, if he can only be got to take it into his head that somebody wants him to die. His constitutional obstinacy will then most certainly prevent his doing it.[†6]

Perhaps I may see you in Genoa, before I won't say you — but at all events before

Madame De la Rue — shall come to London. There are times when I think — really think — of coming, en garçon, and staying Weeks in the dear old City. It may be a castle in the air — a house in Spain — it may turn out to be an idea with a solid foundation.

I met Thompson[†1] one day, about two months ago. He told me they were living in the country, about 30 or 40 miles from London.[†2] We have been at a house I have in Kent, all the summer, and I have heard no more of them — except that I believe he has been much troubled by his two sisters at Jersey,[†3] who get into all manner of Debt, and look to him to be got out.[†4]

Wilkie Collins has just come in, and begs me to send his kindest regard to you and Madame. All at home would send their loves, if they knew me to be writing.

Adieu! | Ever and Ever Affectionately

CHARLES DICKENS

To WILLIAM CRESWICK, 24 OCTOBER 1857

MS Dickens House.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS,
Saturday Twenty Fourth October 1857

My Dear Sir

Many thanks. I thought the Piece (which I know very well) extremely good of its kind, and your own part, if you will excuse my saying so, admirably played.[†5]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

William Creswick Esquire.

To PETER CUNNINGHAM, 26 OCTOBER 1857[†6]

Extracts in Anderson Galleries catalogue No. 4240 (1936), and Sotheby's catalogue, Dec 1877; MS 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill Place, 26 Oct 57; addressed Peter Cunningham.

Can you write me (either at the Household Words Office, or Tavistock House) whether there is a housekeeper to every Public office, or for example to all in Somerset House.[†7] ... I ask with a view to a lady, and not with any private object.[†8]

November

To WILKIE COLLINS, 1 NOVEMBER 1857*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Sunday First November 1857

My Dear Wilkie

I hope I am now ready to start you. I think the best way will be, to send you a Proof of the little I have done, tomorrow night. If you will come and dine at the Office on Tuesday at 1/2 past 5, and will have read it in the meantime, I will explain what more you ought to know beforehand.

Just a word in answer, here.

Ever Faithfully
CD. Hope you are all right at last?

To SAMUEL SMILES,[†1] 2 NOVEMBER 1857*

MS Mr R. Slifer.

Tavistock House | Second November, 1857

Dear Sir

The enclosed passes having expired, allow me with many thanks to return them to you.

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

S. Smiles Esquire.

To JOSEPH LANGFORD, 3 NOVEMBER 1857

Mention in Royal Commission on Historical Manuscripts report (1974); dated 3 Nov 57; addressed Joseph Langford.

Sending remainder of Manzanilla — a wine of good repute.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 3 NOVEMBER 1857

Mention in Sotheby's catalogue, Dec 1888; MS 1 p.; dated 3 Nov 57.

To HERBERT WATKINS, 4 NOVEMBER 1857

Extract in American Art Association and Anderson catalogue, May 1934; MS 1 p.; addressed Herbert Watkins; dated Gad's Hill Place,†1 4 Nov 57.

I send you a thousand thanks for the remarkable, interesting, and admirable collection of Photographs you have sent to me.†2 I shall always prize them highly†3 and shall never tire of them. They are not the less agreeable to me for including two capital heads of yourself.

The Library Edition in its Holiday Dress shall not fail to appear, as soon as it is out of the tailor's (or binder's) hands.†4

To [WILLIAM] OSTELL,†5 5 NOVEMBER 1857*

MS Mrs Manzie.

Tavistock House | Fifth November, 1857

Sir.

I am happy, in remembrance of the Morning Chronicle time to which you refer, to have it in my power to send you the accompanying Proxy.†6

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Ostell

To H. G. ADAMS, 7 NOVEMBER 1857†

MS Mr Alfred C. Berol.

Tavistock House, London. W.C.

Saturday Night, Seventh November | 1857

My Dear Sir

Although the Deputation you did me the honor to present to me at Gad's Hill, did not appear to have a very lively faith in their President,[†7] their President thought it right to hold out no hopes that might be fallacious, and to reserve to himself his secret justification of a better faith.

Accordingly I have since tried, with some steadiness, so to disentangle myself from other promises, by a new arrangement of them, as to be able to read my Carol for my Rochester and Chatham Institution. And I am now able to tell you that I will do so for you, please God, on any evening in the week before this next Christmas Day, or in the week after it, that may suit you best.[†8]

As soon as you can determine, please to do so. Mr. W. H. Wills at the Household Words office, will (whenever you may communicate with him as the time approaches), let you know what my wishes always are as to announcements and room-arrangements.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

H. G. Adams Esquire.

To ROBERT CROZIER,[†1] 8 NOVEMBER 1857

MS Messrs Hudson Rogue Co. Address: Robert Crozier Esquire | 45 Sidney Street | Manchester.

Tavistock House, W.C.
Sunday Night | Eighth November, 1857.

Sir.

My absence from town has delayed this reply to your letter. Pray excuse the circumstances.

I am sorry that I must beg to decline the honor you propose to me. But in the constant and almost incredible accumulation of such claims, which is a part of my life, I have long observed the rule of never associating myself, in name alone, with any effort, however good.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Robert Crozier Esquire

To JOHN DILLON,[†2] 8 NOVEMBER 1857*

MS University of Texas. Address (envelope, MS Yale University Library): John Dillon Esquire | 104 Fore Street | City | E.C. PM London WC 9 Nov 57.

Tavistock House | Sunday Night | Eighth November, 1857

My Dear Sir

Let me thank you for your note, and assure you, both that I am very much obliged by your kind remembrance, and that I greatly regretted your absence from the dinner.†3

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Dillon Esquire.

To WILLIAM ALLINGHAM,†1 9 NOVEMBER 1857

MS University of Kentucky.

Tavistock House | Monday Ninth November, 1857

My Dear Sir

I am happy to retain the Poem,†2 which is mournfully true, and has moved me very much. You shall have a Proof without fail.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. Allingham Esquire

To MRS BROWN, 9 NOVEMBER 1857*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Mrs. Brown | Miss Burdett Coutts | 1 Stratton Street | Piccadilly | W.

Tavistock House | Monday Ninth November, 1857

My Dear Mrs. Brown.

A very curious letter, and (in its way) both a very sad, and a very pleasant one.†3 Good Heaven, to think of that Doctor! — †4

This is only to welcome you home, and to say how glad I shall be to see you again. I cannot trust myself to refer to your remembrance of the little — the nothing — I could ever do for you in your grief.†5 You make so much of it, and I such a nothing, that you quite overpower me.

Ever Your affectionate friend
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 9 NOVEMBER 1857*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts.

Tavistock House | Monday Ninth November, 1857

My Dear Miss Coutts.

This is merely a word to welcome you home again.[†6] I should have written to you at Rugby, but that your allusion — of a triumphant sort — to Coventry, was too much for me. For have I not promised to read the Carol at Coventry next Christmas, and am I not gloomily repentant of my sweet nature![†7]

I always knew[†1] Torquay to be a Humbug, and am delighted to find that the Truth is great and will prevail.[†2]

Ever Faithfully and affecy. Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To BENJAMIN WEBSTER, 9 NOVEMBER 1857*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Date: Lord Mayor's Day was 9 Nov in 1857.

Tavistock House | Lord Mayor's Day, 1857

My Dear Webster

The accompanying Farce-don't be alarmed-it is very short and very stagey-is by an old hand who has entrusted it to me, whose expectations are moderate, and who wants "to sell it".[†3] Is it worth any thing to you?

Ever Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

Benjamin Webster Esquire.

To MISS HORNER,[†4] 16 NOVEMBER 1857

Extracts in Sotheby's catalogue, July 1982 and Dobell catalogue No. 52 (1939); MS 2 pp.; dated Tavistock House, Monday Evening, 16 Nov 57; addressed Miss Horner.

Having been away, had a little delayed his answer. The circumstances of the article being a translated pamphlet,[†5] already known in its general purport to the English public, is conclusive against its acceptance for Household Words ... if it were an account, a dissertation and description it would have been different, but as it is he must decline it very much against my will.

To EDMUND YATES, 16 NOVEMBER 1857

MS Robert H. Taylor Collection, Princeton University.

Tavistock House
Monday Night | Sixteenth November, 1857.

My Dear Yates.

I retain the story[†6] with pleasure; and I need not tell you that you are not mistaken in the last line of your note.[†7]

Excuse me — on that ground — if I say a word or two, as to what I think (I mention it with a view to the future),[†1] might be better in the paper. The opening is excellent. But it passes too completely into the Irishman's narrative — does not light it up with the life about it, or the circumstances under which it is delivered — and does not carry through it, as I think it should with a certain undefinable subtlety, the thread with which you begin your weaving.[†2] I will tell Wills to send me the Proof, and will try to shew you what I mean when I shall have gone over it carefully.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Edmund Yates Esquire.

To THOMAS BEARD, 19 NOVEMBER 1857

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Place | Edgeware Road | W.

Tavistock House | Thursday Nineteenth November | 1857

My Dear Beard

I want very much to see you — and to know what you are about — and to be told where you have been hiding all the summer.

Can you come and dine with us next Sunday at half past Five?

Ever Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Beard Esquire

To B. W. PROCTER, 19 NOVEMBER 1857

MS Yale University Library.

Tavistock House | Thursday Nineteenth November | 1857

My Dear Procter

You may be very sure that nothing but a special, made, engagement[†3] — not to be broken — prevents my accepting your most interesting and welcome invitation. But, unfortunately I have such an engagement, and I cannot come. I could not easily tell you how much I feel your association of me with the day,[†4] or with what affectionate thoughts I shall remember it, though absent.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

B. W. Procter Esquire

To A. C. KRUSEMAN,[†1] 23 NOVEMBER 1857

Facsimile in J. W. Enschedé, Bijdrage tot de Geschiedenis van de Nederlandse Boekhandel, 1899, p. 263.

Tavistock House, London.
Monday Twenty Third November, 1857

Dear Sir

I beg to acknowledge, with many thanks, the safe receipt of the translations of my books[†2] into the Dutch language, which you have had the kindness to send me. Allow me to thank you heartily, both for that acceptable present, and for the account you give me of the esteem in which I am held in Holland. It causes me great pride and gratification.

Accept the assurance of my high regard Dear Sir, and believe me always

Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

To J. A. LANGFORD,[†3] 23 NOVEMBER 1857

Extract in City Book Auction catalogue No. 309 (May 1945); MS 1 p.; dated Tavistock House, Monday, 23 Nov 57; addressed John Alfred Langford.

Regretting that he is unable to read manuscripts submitted to him for criticism and advice ... and I assure you I have already made as many conditional promises to read, as I can hope to redeem within a long time.

Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

To BENJAMIN WEBSTER, 24 NOVEMBER 1857†

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS,
Tuesday Twenty Fourth November 1857

My Dear Webster

My razors, my razors! Don't forget my pair of razors!![†4]

I have something to say to you. There is a Christmas No. coming out here — the whole No. one story, of which I have done the greater part: Wilkie Collins having written one chapter — which I clearly foresee will be dramatized everywhere.[†1] [†a]I think it will make a prodigious noise, and I am sure it will be laid hold of by all sorts and conditions of Theatres. Now, I don't want it done upon the Stage at all: because I never do want to see any composition there, which is not intended for it.[†a] Nevertheless, I can't help its being done; and, done at all, I should like it done well. It would be a three act piece, requiring three very curious scenes. It lights up all the fire that is in the public mind at this time, and you might make your Theatre blaze with it. If you would like to try to do it thoroughly well, supposing it to answer this description, you shall have it in Proof some week or ten days before the Public, so as to get a good start in the adapting of it and preparing for it.[†2] I make this offer as a friend, and not with any idea of accepting any money.

Your arrangements may be such, and you may be so much behind with your Pantomime[†3] (for even YOU,[†4] I believe, are occasionally procrastinative in the slightest degree), as to be in no position to contemplate the possibility of getting out such a thing. This is the reason why I write to you at all. In that case, I would not send it to you to read. But if it be on the cards that you could, if you saw reason, undertake such a dash, I know I can trust you to read it, and you should have it at the end of this week. An hour and a half of next Sunday, would carry you through it.

Don't leave this note lying about. I may possibly be able to get down to you tonight. If I can — I will.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 25 NOVEMBER 1857

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS,
Wednesday Twenty Fifth Novr. 1857

My Dear Miss Coutts.

Would you and Mrs. Brown like to come and dine with us at Tavistock House, either on Monday, Tuesday, or Wednesday at 6, to hear the Christmas No. of Household Words. It is all one story this time, of which I have written the greater part (Mr. Collins has written one chapter), and which I have planned with great care in the hope of commemorating, without any vulgar catchpenny connexion or application, some of the best qualities of the English character that have been shewn in India.[†1] I hope it is very good, and I think it will make a noise. Naturally therefore, I want you to know what it is, before any body else does.

If you say "Yes", say too what day you choose. And say further, whether there is any one you would like me to ask.

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Yours faithfully and affecy.
CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS JERROLD, 30 NOVEMBER 1857*

MS Mr J. R. Chamberlain.

Tavistock House | Thirtieth November, 1857

Dear Mrs. Jerrold

Before we can complete the purchase of the Annuity,[†2] it is necessary that the Certificates referred to in the accompanying printed Form, should be got, and that the Form should be duly filled up. May I recommend you to employ some Solicitor for the purpose? His charge, if he will have the goodness to send it to me when the business is completed, I will defray out of the Fund.

I beg my kind regard to Miss Jerrold,[†3] and am always

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Jerrold.

To LADY OLLIFFE, 30 NOVEMBER 1857

MS Comtesse de Suzannet.

Tavistock House | Monday Thirtieth November | 1857

My Dear Lady Olliffe

I have just time to send you this, a week in advance of the Public,[†4] and to express my hope that you and Olliffe (to whom my love), will be pleased with it. Chapter 2 is by Wilkie Collins; all the rest by me.

Ever Your faithful
CHARLES DICKENS

To FRANK STONE, 30 NOVEMBER 1857*

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: Frank Stone Esquire | Russell House.

H W Office | Thirtieth November 1857

My Dear Stone

Here you are — a week ahead of the Public. Second chapter by Collins; all the rest by me.

With kind regard | Ever affecy. CD.[†5]

December

To W. C. MACREADY, 1 DECEMBER 1857

MS Walter T. Spencer.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Night, First December 1857

My Dearest Macready.

I send you (very hurriedly) an early proof of The Christmas Story. The Second Chapter is by Wilkie Collins; all the rest is by me. I hope you may like it.

Kindest love to all.

Ever Most affectionately CD.

To MISS MARGUERITE POWER, [?1-2 DECEMBER 1857]

Mention in To Thackeray, 4 Dec 57. Date: probably written two or three days before that letter.

To SIR JOSEPH PAXTON, 2 DECEMBER 1857

Extracts in unidentified catalogue in Chadwick Collection of Dickensiana and Sotheby's catalogue, Jan 1883; MS 1 1/2 pp.; dated 2 Dec 57; addressed Sir Joseph Paxton.

Making an appointment about a reading in Coventry,[†1] adding that he never accepts invitations on such occasions, when it is necessary to be composed and unbothered — let us stick to the best Hotel. He also invites Paxton to visit him at Rochester.

To ARTHUR RYLAND, 2 DECEMBER 1857*

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: Arthur Ryland Esquire | Birmingham.

Tavistock House, London. W.C.
Wednesday Second December 1857

My Dear Mr. Ryland.

I am afraid I cannot possibly read at Birmingham this Christmas. The plain truth is, I have nothing to read. My work in the summer for the Jerrold Fund — and very hard work indeed, it was — completely deprived me of the opportunity I had expected to have, of getting some new Reading together. I have now made four promises to read the Carol; I have not a chance of getting to the work of condensing any of my larger books; and when I look at your letter again, I drift away bodily, out to sea.

You know I don't want the will. But what am I to do without the power!

Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

Arthur Ryland Esquire

To MRS LOCKWOOD,[†1] 3 DECEMBER 1857*

MS (in Wills's hand) Dickens House.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS,
3 December 1857

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mrs. Lockwood, and begs to thank her for her obliging communication of Saturday last, and for the newspaper which accompanied it.[†2]
Mrs. Charles Day Lockwood

To JOSEPH SLY, 3 DECEMBER 1857

MS Public Library and Museum, Lancaster. Address: Mr. Sly | King's Arms Hotel | Lancaster.

Tavistock House, London. W.C. | Third December, 1857

Sir.

I am sorry that I have, until now, accidentally omitted to answer your letter.

I assure you that I received it with much pleasure. It was very agreeable to me to know that you were gratified by my having associated a little fancy with your excellent house;[†3] and I was particularly interested by your account of your honorable career in life.

I wish you every prosperity, and am | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Sly.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 4 DECEMBER 1857*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street | Piccadilly | W.

Tavistock House | Fourth December, 1857

My Dear Miss Coutts

On Monday,[†4] with pleasure.

Ever Faithfully & affecy.
CD.

To W. M. THACKERAY, 4 DECEMBER 1857

MS Widener Collection, Harvard.

Tavistock House | Friday December Fourth, 1857.

My Dear Thackeray

Your second note stopped me from coming to you, to talk over the subject of your first — which reached me within an hour before the receipt of a similar proposal from Forster.[†1]

In the interval which has followed through your absence from town,[†2] I have communicated with Marguerite Power, and have asked her, plainly, whether such a subscription would be acceptable and accepted? She replies, most gratefully and without hesitation, "Yes". It seems to me that the best thing we can do, is, to take out 20 names of old visitors at Gore House[†3] and make a subscription of £10 each. This will give us a purse of £200 to present to her.

I will come to you at Brompton, or meet you any where, any day you can name, between 10 and 5. Let us do it as soon as we can, and get it done.

Ever Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

W. M. Thackeray Esquire

To SIR JOSEPH PAXTON, 5 DECEMBER 1857*

MS Mr Lloyd E. Roscoe.

Tavistock House | Fifth December, 1857

My Dear Paxton.

I am very sorry that I was not at home last evening, and have been too unwell with influenza this morning to get up at my usual hour; thus doubly delaying my reply to your note.

Shall we say next Thursday morning? To meet at the booking Office of the North Kent Railway, London Bridge at 5 minutes past 10. The train starts at a quarter past 10.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Sir Joseph Paxton.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 6 DECEMBER 1857*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street.

Tavistock House | Sunday Sixth December 1857

My Dear Miss Coutts

I must ask you to excuse my absence for one hour tomorrow evening — from half past 8 to half past 9. I will go and return so deftly, that no one shall miss me.

My movements are wildly deranged at all hours just now, by my having a very delicate matter to adjust for a very dear friend[†4] — with an immense responsibility resting upon me, which I don't see my way out of.

— In addition to which, I now write under the oppression of a most ferocious Influenza.

Ever Faithfully and affy. Yours

CD.

To F. M. EVANS, 6 DECEMBER 1857

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Tavistock House | Sunday Night Sixth December 1857

My Dear Evans.

Your printing from the Cheap Edition,[†1] had best go on without waiting for me. If I see anything wrong in the sheets you send me, I will let you know of it promptly.

I wish you would get the accompanying Dedication[†2] set up as prettily as you possibly can, and then send it at once to Forster, with a note saying that I had begged you to ask him whether it was right. — I want to surprise him. All the old dedications will be cancelled in this Edition, you understand.

Faithfully Ever

CD.

To THE HON. MRS RICHARD WATSON, 7 DECEMBER 1857*

MS Huntington Library.

Tavistock House, London. W.C. | Seventh December, 1857

My Dear Mrs. Watson. I cannot tell you how interested and pleased I have been by the receipt of your letter, or how delightful it is to me to picture you among those beautiful objects, enjoying the life, change, and movement, you must have so drearily wanted at Rockingham. I had been speaking about you to Georgina, over and over again. She had just been telling me that Mary Boyle had spoken of you as being abroad — I had been saying what a good thing that was — and we had set in for a long train of remembrance,[†3] in my room one night, while your letter was making its way to me.

You want an egotistical reply from me, and you shall have it. I have been very busy with the Xmas Number of Household Words, in which I have endeavoured to commemorate the foremost of the great English qualities shewn in India, without laying the scene there, or making any vulgar association with real events or calamities. I believe it is rather a remarkable production, and will make a great noise. I should send it with this, but for the uncertainty of its ever getting to you. It is published to day. It is all one story. The Second Chapter by Wilkie Collins; all the rest of it by me.

It leaves me — as my Art always finds me and always leaves me — the most restless of created Beings. I am the modern embodiment of the old Enchanters, whose Familiars tore them to pieces. I weary of rest, and have no satisfaction but in fatigue. Realities and idealities are always comparing themselves together before me, and I don't like the Realities except when they are unattainable — then, I like them of all things. I wish I had been born in the days of Ogres and Dragon-guarded Castles. I wish an Ogre with seven heads (and no particular evidence of brains in the whole lot of them) had taken the Princess whom I adore — you have no idea how intensely I love her! — to his stronghold on the top of a high series of Mountains, and there tied her up by the hair. Nothing would suit me half so well this day, as climbing after her, sword in hand, and either winning her or being killed. — There's a state of mind for you, in 1857.

All last summer I had a transitory satisfaction in rending the very heart out of my body by doing that Richard Wardour part. It was a good thing to have a couple of thousand people all rigid and frozen together, in the palm of one's hand — as at Manchester — and to see the hardened Carpenters at the sides crying and trembling at it night after night. Which reminds me of a pretty little story about it. We engaged for Manchester, a young lady from Kean's Theatre — Miss Maria Ternan — born on the stage, and inured to it from the days when she was the little child in Pizarro. She had been brought to the Gallery of Illustration in town, to see the Play; and when she came on to me in the Morning at Manchester, I said, "Why my dear, how cold your hand is, and what a tremble you are in! This won't do at night." — "Oh Mr. Dickens", she said, "I am so afraid I can't bear it, that I hope you'll be very gentle with me this morning. I cried so much when I saw it, that I have a dread of it, and I don't know what to do." She had to take my head up as I was dying, and to put it in her lap, and give me her face to hold between my two hands. All of which I shewed her elaborately (as Mary had done it before), that morning. When we came to that point at night, her tears fell down my face, down my beard (excuse my mentioning that hateful appendage), down my ragged dress — poured all over me like Rain, so that it was as much as I could do to speak for them. I whispered to her, "My dear child, it will be over in two minutes. Pray compose yourself." — "It's no comfort to me that it will be soon over", she answered. "Oh it is so sad, it is so dreadfully sad. Oh don't die! Give me time, give me a little time! Don't take leave of me in this terrible way — pray, pray, pray!!" Whereupon Lemon, the softest-hearted of men, began to cry too, and then they all went at it together. I think I never saw such a pretty little genuine emotion in my life. And if you had seen the poor little thing, when the Curtain fell, put in a chair behind it — with her mother and sister taking care of her — and your humble servant drying her eyes and administering Sherry (in Rags so horrible that they would scarcely hold together), and the people in front all blowing their noses, and our own people behind standing about in corners and getting themselves right again, you would have remembered it for a long, long time.[†1]

Our Indian boy was at Dum-Dum (which means a school of musketry, some 6 miles from Calcutta)[†2] when last heard of, but expected to be sent up the country in a few days. Where or why, I don't know; for he belongs to the Bengal Army, which is virtually extinct. He likes the country and the life, of all things, and is quite happy. My usual fortune of falling in with strange people, attended me, by the bye, when I took him down to Southampton. A very strange fellow got into our Railway Carriage, and took such an immense fancy to me, that I couldn't shake him off. He went out in the same ship — died of delirium tremens, within three days of their leaving Southampton — and had no luggage whatever, with him, but 3 shirts and 240 Sovereigns.

I am going to read, twice this month. On the 15th. at Coventry, and on the 22nd. at Rochester. On the 19th. of January I am going to read at Bristol, and, in April, at Edinburgh. After that, if I bind myself to any more promises, I'll — but I won't forswear myself; I shall bind myself, I know, in weakly amiable moments.

I hope the badly-stuffed Horse continues to conduct himself as if he were better stuffed? I have taken to Dogs lately,[†1] and, when I am at Gad's Hill, go out attended by tall Prowlers that are the terror of the neighbourhood.[†2] Six or eight weeks ago, I performed my celebrated feat of getting out of bed at 2 in the morning, and walking down there from Tavistock House — over 30 miles — through the dead night.[†3] I had been very much put-out;[†4] and I thought, "After all, it would be better to be up and doing something, than lying here." So I got up, and did that.

Poor Stafford![†5] I had seen him pretty often, and had made an engagement with him to go down to Chatham, and talk with some of the poor wounded men from the Crimea, to whom he had been very kind. I believe that he was really beloved among them and had been exceedingly good to them. Inquests may come to contrary conclusions five hundred times over, but I make bold to give my verdict — "Murdered by the Doctor."

There is a Legend current here, that to pay the Postage of this letter would be to insure its non-delivery, so I have told my servant not to pay it. Is it egotistical enough? If not, what DO[†6] you want? Kindest loves and remembrances from all. And from no one in the world can they come to you more fervently, my dear Mrs Watson, than from your Ever affectionate friend

CHARLES DICKENS

I am afraid Spencer Lyttelton[†7] is not mending his ways.

To BENJAMIN WEBSTER, 8 DECEMBER 1857*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Night | Eighth December, 1857

My Dear Webster.

An excellent idea of yours! — If you will submit it to Mr. and Mrs. Barney Williams[†1] as it stands, and tell them the truth — that it is the production of an excellent old dramatic Writer[†2] for whom I do what I can, in the dregs and decline of his life, and who wants to sell it for whatever can be got for it — you may add from me, that I will (sub rosâ) re-arrange it for them as they may think best, if they will purchase it; and will make it as ship-shape for them (knowing their acting very well), as I possibly can.

But what I must stipulate for, is a quick reply. Young Toole[†3] is good at personation, and I think Mr. Dillon[†4] might purchase the Farce, if I paid him the small compliment of addressing him myself on the subject. That, of course, should be before he opens.

Ever Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN DEANE, 9 DECEMBER 1857*

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS,
Wednesday Ninth December 1857

My Dear Deane.

I had already given Paxton to know that you are going with us[†5] — at which he is delighted. Tuesday is the day. I don't know the hour yet, but will inform you of it — in Gordon Square,[†6] I suppose? — on Monday afternoon or evening.

In great haste | Ever Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

To THOMSON HANKEY,[†1] 11 DECEMBER 1857*

MS University of Kentucky Library.

Tavistock House. W.C. | Eleventh December, 1857

Dear Sir

Will you excuse my taking the liberty of asking you whether you can render me any help towards nominating a young man of great respectability and undoubted business qualifications, for employment in the Bank of England?

The person in whom I am thus interested, is a brother of my wife's,[†2] now in a Business-House at Sheffield which has lately failed, and is reducing its establishment.[†3] He is twenty five, was thoroughly well educated in Germany, brings from the Sheffield House the highest character and recommendation, and has a thoroughly good acquaintance with business. I know him, of my own knowledge, to be very diligent, steady, and striving; and I should be heartily glad if I could assist him to attain this desire.

Pray forgive my intrusion on your time.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

T. Hankey Esquire M.P.

To SIR JOSEPH PAXTON, 11 DECEMBER 1857*

MS British Library.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS,
Friday Eleventh December 1857

My Dear Paxton

I was obliged to go to Birmingham[†4] on Wednesday, and was there when you called on me yesterday Morning.

While I am most heartily obliged to your kind and hospitable friend[†5] for his invitation — and I beg you earnestly to thank him in my name — I am still in my old mind as to going to the Hotel; the rather as we are sure to have Deane and Wills with us; which circumstance disposes me still more (if anything can dispose me still more), to stick to my invariable rule. But I think you ought to dine with your friend. And therefore I would propose that you do so, and come to us afterwards.

The conclusion at which I thus arrive, is subject to only one condition of change. If it would really and truly be of the least service to you in Coventry, that I should go to this gentleman's house, and dine with his company, then — I will do it. Otherwise not. Decide accordingly.

Do we go to Gad's Hill, at 5 minutes past 10 tomorrow morning?

In the matter of Mark Lemon, he has so completely and unreservedly sold his soul to the —— Ingram,[†1] that I should say he is not to be got by any other speculator, even on hire for an afternoon.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Sir Joseph Paxton

To JOHN HOLLINGSHEAD, 12 DECEMBER 1857

Text from N, II, 896.

Tavistock House,
Saturday Night, Twelfth December, 1857[†2]

My Dear Sir

Although there is a very droll (and an original) idea in the farce,[†3] I doubt if it would do on the stage.[†4] I don't think it ends as well as it opens, and I don't see enough for an actor to "make" in it. By far the best part is Mr. Maresnest's,[†5] but you could not hold the stage with the piece unless Cranky were done by a good actor; and, as the piece stands, a good Farce-actor would not play the said Cranky, because the character is really not strong enough to win the presence and eye of an audience all that time. I am not giving you this opinion as a writer, but as an actor.

What the farce wants, for the stage, is the throwing of a great deal more into Cranky's hands through some addition to the plot which would place him in a more ludicrous position, by involving him in some new complication of his own respecting it. As, for instance, if he had some tremendous grudge against some common-place man of whom he only knew that his name began with a P — or if he had had a rival of the name of Podgers, before he married Mrs. Cranky — or if a defaulting Podgers had disappeared with Mrs. Cranky's marriage portion — or if the Bank of Dodgers and Dodgers had failed and damaged him — and the thing, whatever it might be, were set right at last by the appearance (to make restitution) of that Podgers, who really was born there, but should explain that it had not been his intention to be born there, but that his mother had been frightened by a Poet in the neighbourhood of Bedlam, and had fled to that apartment (or relations) for refuge in a hackney carriage — then I think you might get Mr. Buckstone to the rescue. The solicitous gentlemen and ladies should then rush off to the neighbourhood of Bedlam in search of the immortal Podgers, and the mortal Podgers should throw the end of the piece into Mr. Cranky's mouth.[†1] With some ingenuity and invention in such a direction, I believe the Farce might succeed greatly. Otherwise, no.

Faithfully Yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To JOHN BENNETT,[†2] 17 DECEMBER 1857*

Text from transcript, Huntington Library.

Tavistock House | Thursday Seventeenth December | 1857.

Dear Sir,

I have the pleasure to enclose you a cheque (payable to Order) for £21.

The clock goes reasonably well, but always loses something.

Faithfully yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr John Bennett.

To MISS MARY GIBSON,[†3] 17 DECEMBER 1857

Text from N, II, 896.

Tavistock House, Tavistock Square, W.C.
Seventeenth December 1857, Thursday

My Dear Madam,

I am bound to assure you that you are altogether mistaken in supposing that any "touch" of my pen, or any introduction from me, would do anything for your writings which they cannot do for themselves. It would be considered as a mere form, by any Editorial or publishing recipient of it, and would be quite unserviceable.

It is the plainest honesty to tell you this, because I know it to be the truth. If you should desire to offer anything to Household Words, I will promptly read it myself. There is always room there for good and suitable contributions, and it is always a pleasure to me to find them.[†1]

As to seeing you, I will do so with the greatest readiness. If you can call here tomorrow (Friday) morning at 11, you will find me at home. If that should be inconvenient, you will find me at home on Monday morning at the same hour.

Faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To JAMES HULKES,[†2] 17 DECEMBER 1857*

MS Private.

Tavistock House, London. W.C.
Thursday Seventeenth December | 1857

My Dear Sir

I should have answered your kind note yesterday but that I have been (for my sins) reading at Coventry, and am but now at home again.

I cannot have the pleasure of accepting either of your kind offers, as I shall be accompanied by the gentleman who acts as my Secretary and by another friend, if not by two others. But I am truly obliged to you for your welcome and neighbourly remembrance.

Mrs. Dickens is better, and unites with her sister and myself in compliments to Mrs. Hulkes.

My Dear Sir | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

James Hulkes Esquire

To MRS MASON, [17 DECEMBER 1857]

Mention in Meridian Bookshop catalogue No. 48; MS 1 p.; addressed Mrs Mason; dated 17 Dec 57.

Concerning a girl on her way to the Home in Shepherd's Bush.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 17 DECEMBER 1857

Mention in Autograph Prices Current, IV, 1918-19; MS 1 p.; dated Tavistock House, 17 Dec 57.

To SAMUEL CARTWRIGHT JNR,[†1] [?17 DECEMBER 1857]

Summary from Dinner Committee Minutes, Great Ormond St Children's Hospital, given in Jules Klosky, Mutual Friends, 1989, p. 188. Date: sent by Cartwright to the Committee on 18 Dec; no doubt written shortly before that.

Desiring to be excused from writing any note for issue in lithographed form.[†2]

To MESSRS BRADBURY & EVANS, 18 DECEMBER 1857

Extract in N, II, 897.

Tavistock House | Friday Eighteen December 1857

Dear Sirs,

The Solicitor wants, for the purpose of the agreement defining our copyrights, transcripts of the existing entries of Registrations of those copyrights of books by me in which you are interested.[†3] Will you cause them to be got, and send them straight to Frederic Ouvry Esquire, Messˢ. Farrer, Ouvry and Farrer, 66 Lincolns Inn Fields.[†4]

To JOHN HOLLINGSHEAD, 19 DECEMBER 1857*

MS Mr John J. Curran.

Tavistock House. W.C.
Saturday Nineteenth December 1857

Dear Mr. Hollingshead.

I wish you would put the Farce[†5] by, for a little while, and not try Buckstone now. I know his hands are full,[†6] and — though they were not — I am almost sure he would not accept it as it stands.

I very much doubt his approving of that Stomach-ache, and I doubt still more the Audience's approval of it.[†1] It seems to me to be by no means an improvement.

He would say to me, I believe, if I wrote him a note for you to send with the MS, "What do you say to the Piece? Honestly tell me that I ought to play it, against my apprehension that I can't make much of it — and I will". Now, I could not honestly tell him so, and therefore I would rather not address him about it as it stands.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

John Hollingshead Esquire

To SIR JOSEPH PAXTON, 23 DECEMBER 1857

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Tavistock House
Wednesday Twenty Third December | 1857

My Dear Paxton.

I have just come back (2 P.M.) from reading at Rochester, and I wish you had been there. It was a tremendous success, and quite a wonderful demonstration.[†2]

With me at this door, by the best of coincidences, arrives your Hamper. A thousand thanks for it — not less for the seasonable spirit of hearty friendship in which I know you send it to me, than for its own jolly sake.

I am quite affected by the generosity of my friends at Coventry. But they shall not spoil me, if I can help it; and I will try to "go" as truly and staunchly as the Repeater itself.[†3]

All here unite with me in all good wishes, seasonable and unseasonable, to you and all your house. And I am always, with great regard,

My Dear Paxton | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS[†4]

Sir Joseph Paxton.

P.S. You say "4 Hares and 4 Pheasants". But there are 8 of each, in the miraculous hamper!

To W. H. WILLS, 24 DECEMBER 1857*

MS Berg Collection.

Tavistock House
Thursday Morning Twenty Fourth December | 1857

My Dear Wills

Perhaps you may know what the enclosed rigmarole[†1] means — I don't.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To FRIENDS OF LADY BLESSINGTON, 24 DECEMBER 1857

MS (in unknown hand, except for "24th." in date, salutation, ending and signature) Widener Collection, Harvard.

Confidential

24th. December, 1857

Dear Sir

We have ascertained from Miss Power that a present of £200, would be of very great service to her at this time, and would be gratefully accepted by her, if it were the result of a private subscription among old and confidential visitors at Gore House. We have made a private list of twenty old friends of Lady Blessington and Count D'Orsay, who may make up the required sum among themselves by a contribution of Ten Pounds each.[†2]

Such private list contains your name. If you should desire to contribute your Ten Pounds, any one of us will be happy to receive your donation, and the names of the subscribers shall be forwarded to you in the close of the subscription.

Faithfully Yours

W. M. THACKERAY	36 Onslow Sqre. Brompton.
CHARLES DICKENS	Tavistock House
JOHN FORSTER	46 Montagu Square

To JOHN P. PARKER,[†3] 24 DECEMBER 1857

MS Private. Address: Mr. John P Parker | 4 Mercer Street | Long Acre | W.C.

Tavistock House. W.C. | Twenty Fourth December, 1857

Dear Sir

I have received your letter with very great pleasure and interest. Your story,[†4] too,

I think highly meritorious and commendable; and I am heartily proud and glad to receive your assurance that I hold a favored place in your good home.

We can agree to differ on the Total Abstinence question. I have my convictions on that subject, and they are not yours. But you cannot detest drunkenness more than I do, or hold in greater horror the evils that follow in its train. If the two words, Use and Abuse, have very different significations in my mind, so have the two words, Right and Wrong. And I know as well as all the Bands of Hope and anti-alcoholic leagues between this and the Moon, that drunken habits are tremendously wrong, and that nothing can make them out to be right.

I wish you and yours, a Merry Christmas and a happy New Year; and I rest faithfully your friend and well-wisher in all things.

CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. John P Parker.

To MRS BALL WILSON,[†1] 24 DECEMBER 1857*

MS Yale University Library.

Tavistock House | Thursday Twenty Fourth December | 1857

My Dear Rebecca.

I send you the autographs, with all good wishes, seasonable and unseasonable.

Affectionately Yours

CD.

To [THE SECRETARY], CHATHAM & ROCHESTER MECHANICS INSTITUTE,[†2] 28 DECEMBER 1857

MS Dickens House.

Tavistock House W.C. | Twenty Eighth December, 1857

Dear Sir

I am sorry you should have given another thought to so slight a matter as the carriage-hire of Tuesday night. Your note and its enclosure reached me safely this morning.[†3]

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To B. W. PROCTER, [28 DECEMBER 1857]

Envelope only, MS Private. Address: B. W. Procter Esquire | 32 Weymouth Street | Portland Place | W. PM London 28 Dec 57.

To AUGUSTUS TRACEY, 28 DECEMBER 1857*

MS University of Texas.

Tavistock House | Twenty Eighth December, 1857

My Dear Tracey.

On Friday I can dine with you at the Wellington[†1] with great pleasure, if it will suit you to dine as early as half past 5, as I shall have to leave you at a little after 8.

Ever Faithfully | (and now hastily)
CHARLES DICKENS

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 28 DECEMBER 1857

Mention in C. F. Libbie catalogue, Dec 1895; MS 1 p.; dated Tavistock House, 28 Dec 57.

Referring to literary matters; mentioning Oliver Twist.[†2]

To FRANK STONE, 30 DECEMBER 1857

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Wednesday Thirtieth[†3] December 1857

My Dear Stone

I find on enquiry, that the General Theatrical Fund has relieved non-members, in one or two instances; but that it is exceedingly unwilling to do so, and would certainly not do so again, saving on some very strong and exceptional case.[†4] As its Trustee,[†5] I could not represent to it that I think it ought to sail into those open waters, for I very much doubt the justice of such cruising, with a reference to the interests of the patient people who support it out of their small earnings.

Affecy. Ever
CD.

To THE REV. DR HENRY ALLON,[†1] [?1856-57]

Mention in D, July 1916, XII, 193. Date: The New Congregational Hymn Book (see below) was being prepared in 1856-7, according to D.

Referring Allon to Harriet Parr, authoress of the hymn, "Hear my prayer, O! Heavenly Father", in "The Wreck of the Golden Mary",[†2] for her consent[†3] to publish it in The New Congregational Hymn Book.

To JAMES DICKENS[†4] SENR, 1857

Extract in Charles De F. Burns catalogue (c. 1897), MS 1 p.; addressed James Dickens Senr; dated 1857.

I call you a thorough good Englishman.

To J. H. FRISWELL,[†5] [1857]

Mention in John Anderson Jr catalogue No. 74 (1901); MS (3rd person) 1 p.; dated 1857.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, [1857]

MS Fales Collection, New York University Library. Date: handwriting suggests end of 1857.

Accept my cordial thanks for the elegant umbrella.[†6] It will be my frequent companion, and I shall take such care of it — for your sake[†7] — that I expect in due course of time to shew it you grown grey under my arm.

Believe me always | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT,[†1] [1857]

Extract in Goodspeed's Book Shop catalogue No. 540; dated 1857.

I give my free consent ... to the admission into this country of one copy of a Leipzig reprint of David Copperfield, and one copy of a Leipzig reprint of Pickwick Papers[†2] (I being the author of both books).[†3]

1858

January

To H. G. ADAMS, 4 JANUARY 1858

Text from the South Eastern Gazette, 12 Jan 58.

Tavistock House, | 4th January, 1858

[My][†4] Dear Sir,

I am very happy to receive the handsome acknowledgement of the committee of the Chatham and Rochester Mechanics Institute, and to assure them that they cannot have had more pleasure in accepting the little service I have been able to render them than I have had in giving it.[†5] I can never be indifferent to the prosperity of the institution, or otherwise disposed than to help it my any means in my power.

Faithfully yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

[H.][†6] G. Adams, Esq.

To THOMAS DUFFUS HARDY,[†7] 4 JANUARY 1858*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Tavistock House. W.C. | Fourth January 1858

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his Compliments to Mr. Hardy, and begs to say that he will have great pleasure in appending his name to any acknowledgement of the great service Mr. Panizzi has rendered to students who desire to profit by the Library of the British Museum.(2[[sic]]†8

To W. C. MACREADY, 6 JANUARY 1858*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House, London W.C. | Sixth January 1858

My Dearest Macready.

First, let me reciprocate, you know with how much earnestness and heartiness of affection, all your seasonable good wishes.

Secondly, let me assure you that I perfectly understood your difficulty, and that I do not the less sympathize with it because I have previous experience of the fact that†1 magnates †aof that Board†a†2 are Red Tape made manifest in the flesh. But my dear fellow, for me to go to Lord Granville†3 and represent a case of Circumlocution, would be the strangest thing! Apart from its being opposed to the rule I enforced upon myself when I made that burst,†4 to wit that I would have nothing to do with the system or the men, it would put the whole Office into a condition of white-heat, in the noble ardor of its Barnacles, great and small, to prove that what I represent, is a thing by no manner of means and in no conceivable condition of circumstances, to be done.†5 Rely upon it, I should be the very worst delegate you could have — that I should flutter all the doves in the cot†6 — that they would erect themselves into very Ravens against me — and that I should "plainly by Lord Granville's looks perceive"†7 that it was all U.P. with your hopes.

Though I think as ill of such bodies and of most things that they do, as it is reasonably possible for man to think, I am not (on the other hand) at all clear but that a temperate representation from yourself might carry the point. I think it tolerably probable that it might. And I recommend you to address Lord Granville straight, upon it.

I quite agree with you in your opinion of the Poem,†8 but its subject places me in the difficulty that I do not see the opportunity for publishing it in Household Words, sooner than next Christmas. We are but now out of a forest of references to Christmas,†9 taking our course through the open country again. Now, shall I keep it so long? I am sensible that it looks like burying it, — and yet, I descry no other way.†10

To MISS CATHERINE MACREADY, 8 JANUARY 1858

Extract in Hodson's catalogue, May 1934; dated 8 Jan 58.

Referring to a poem of hers, and concluding With a whole Leviathan-freight of loves and remembrances.

To JOHN DEANE, 10 JANUARY 1858

Extract in N, III, 3 (from catalogue source); dated Tavistock House, 10 Jan 58.

Singularly characteristic and expressive, I think on the part of our Manchester proprietors![†1]

There you are, evidently. Printed at Manchester in fast colors, until the expiration of your term. And you may depend upon it that your iron slipper will not fall off, until the clock shall have struck the last stroke of the appointed hour.[†2]

What do you think of getting up a little Exhibition of the dry commercial spirit of all nations? And which nation, and which place in which nation, does your experienced commissionership hold likely to carry off the first medal?

To FRANK STONE, 10 JANUARY 1858*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Sunday Tenth January 1858

My Dear Stone

Why shouldn't such stuff be brought forward, do you ask?[†3] Because with all our brag, we are the most humbugged country that the Sun shines (or doesn't shine) on. I know on the best and most direct authority, that the Court influence was most unsparingly used against the Dead Havelock[†4] — that its influence is enormous, because Prince Albert is the real Commander in chief,[†1] and the Duke of Cambridge his mask[†2] — and that Havelock was within a hair's breadth of not being appointed to his command in India by reason of the unblushing obstinacy with which the Court championed Airey[†3] — the man of all others who failed in the Crimea, and is in the highest degree responsible for the most frightful of its calamities![†4]

Macaulay comes home quite soon enough.[†5]

Ever Affecy.

CD.

To FRANK STONE, 13 JANUARY 1858*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Wednesday Thirteenth January | 1857

My Dear Stone

He is such an Ass,[†6] that I really can't go. Say you sent me in the Card, and heard I was in the East Indies.

Ever Affectionately

CD.

To W. M. THACKERAY, 14 JANUARY 1858*

MS Yale University Library.

Tavistock House | Fourteenth January 1858

My Dear Thackeray

Will you send me as soon as you can, whatsoever you have for Marguerite Power,[†1] "in possession, reversion, remainder, or expectancy"[†2] —

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To WILKIE COLLINS, 17 JANUARY 1858

Text from MDGH, II, 40.

Tavistock House, Sunday, Jan. 17th, 1858.

My dear Wilkie,

I am very sorry to receive so bad an account of the foot.[†3] But I hope it is all in the past tense now.

I met with an incident the other day, which I think is a good deal in your way, for introduction either into a long or short story. Dr. Sutherland[†4] and Dr. Monro[†5] went over St. Luke's with me (only last Friday), to show me some distinctly and remarkably developed types of insanity. Among other patients, we passed a deaf and dumb man, now afflicted with incurable madness too, of whom they said that it was only when his madness began to develop itself in strongly-marked mad actions, that it began to be suspected. "Though it had been there, no doubt, some time." This led me to consider, suspiciously, what employment he had been in, and so to ask the question. "Aye," says Dr. Sutherland, "that is the most remarkable thing of all, Mr. Dickens. He was employed in the transmission of electric-telegraph messages; and it is impossible to conceive what delirious despatches that man may have been sending about all over the world!"

Rejoiced to hear such good report of the play.[†6]

Ever Faithfully

[CD.]

To GEORGE ELIOT,[†1] 18 JANUARY 1858

MS British Library.

Tavistock House, London. W. C.
Monday Eighteenth January 1858

My Dear Sir

I have been so strongly affected by the two first tales in the book you have had the kindness to send me through Messrs. Blackwood,[†2] that I hope you will excuse my writing to you to express my admiration of their extraordinary merit. The exquisite truth and delicacy, both of the humour and the pathos of those stories, I have never seen the like of; and they have impressed me in a manner that I should find it very difficult to describe to you, if I had the impertinence to try.

In addressing these few words of thankfulness, to the creator of the sad fortunes of Mr. Amos Barton, and the sad love-story of Mr. Gilfil, I am (I presume) bound to adopt the name that it pleases that excellent writer to assume. I can suggest no better one; but I should have been strongly disposed, if I had been left to my own devices, to address the said writer as a woman. I have observed what seem to me to be such womanly touches, in those moving fictions, that the assurance on the title-page is insufficient to satisfy me, even now. If they originated with no woman, I believe that no man ever before had the art of making himself, mentally, so like a woman, since the world began.

You will not suppose that I have any vulgar wish to fathom your secret. I mention the point as one of great interest to me — not of mere curiosity. If it should ever suit your convenience and inclination, to shew me the face of the man or woman who has written so charmingly, it will be a very memorable occasion to me. If otherwise, I shall always hold that impalpable personage in loving attachment and respect, and shall yield myself up to all future utterances from the same source, with a perfect confidence in their making me wiser and better.

Your obliged and faithful Servant, | and admirer
CHARLES DICKENS[†3]

George Eliot Esquire

To JOSEPH LANGFORD, 18 JANUARY 1858

MS Mrs Dorothy Hicks.

Tavistock House. W.C. | Eighteenth January 1858

My Dear Langford

Will you — by such roundabout ways and methods as may present themselves — convey this note of thanks to the author of Scenes of Clerical life: whose two first stories I can never say enough of, I think them so truly admirable. But, if those two Volumes, or a part of them, were not written by a Woman, — then should I begin to believe that I am a woman myself.

Faithfully Yours always

Joseph Langford Esquire.

To M. LITTIGNOL,[†1] 21 JANUARY 1858*

MS Mr John W. Bridge.

Tavistock House | Twenty First January 1858

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to M. Littignol, and begs to express his regret that his avocations do not leave him at leisure to accept the responsibility which that gentleman asks him to undertake. He begs to assure M. Littignol, that he is sensible of the confidence reposed in him.

To LADY DUFF GORDON, 23 JANUARY 1858*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: Lady Duff Gordon | Esher.

Tavistock House | Twenty Third January 1858.

My Dear Lady Gordon

Your letter charms me[†2] — and emboldens me to make a confession of weakness. Freely confiding it to you and my two other sympathizing correspondents,[†3] I hereby assure the blessed triumvirate that I affected myself so strongly by Gill Davis's misplaced love, as to be for days and days, really unable to approach the Proofs. As often as I tried to correct them, I turned them over, looked at the last page, and was so completely overcome, that I couldn't bear to dwell upon it.[†4] It was only when the Steam Engine roared for the sheets, that I could find it in my heart to look at them with a pen in my hand dipped in any thing but tears!

The Second chapter[†1] was done, on the perusal of my first and third,[†2] by Wilkie Collins. We planned it out, and it seems to me a very notable and happy piece of execution.

I should have been very happy to have immediately acted on your suggestion concerning M. De Wailly,[†3] but that I have "conceded" (which is polite for sold), to a Publishing House in Paris, the right of translating any thing and everything I may write, if the said house choose to claim the right within twelve months of the original publishing in English.[†4]

What am I doing? Tearing myself — My usual occupation, at most times. Wild and misty ideas of a story are floating about somewhere (I don't know where), and I am looking after them. One of the most restless of men at all times, I am at such a crisis worse than ever. Nothing would satisfy me at this present writing, but the having to go up a tremendous mountain, magic spell in one hand and sword in the other, to find the girl of my heart (whom I never did find), surrounded by fifty Dragons — kill them all — and bear her off, triumphant.[†5] I might finish the story in the usual way, by settling down and living happy ever afterwards — Perhaps; I am not sure even of that.

Forget her? — I mean Mathilde, but my previous antecedent would do — have I ever forgotten her? Sits she not always on my left hand, at the supper-table of The Frozen Deep?[†6]

The two old pictures look very bright, and seem so quiet and composed when I sit in my chair and watch them for half an hour.

Dear Lady Gordon | Ever Yours | (and Their — viz: | Janet's[†7] and Mathilde's)
Faithful
CD.

To WILLIAM KELLY,[†1] 23 JANUARY 1858*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Tavistock House, London. W.C.
Twenty Third January 1858.

Sir.

The service you ask of me, is one I cannot possibly render you. So many similar letters are constantly addressed to me, that unless I invariably made a rule of reading no MSS for the purpose of giving abstract opinions on their merits, I could discharge no other avocation in life. I must limit myself to the expression of my regret that your verses are not suitable to Household Words — the only miscellaneous publication over which I have controul.

Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

William Kelly Esquire

To JOHN STEDMAN[†2] AND OTHERS, 25 JANUARY 1858

MS Mr J. C. Taylor. Address: John Stedman Esquire | Northfleet | Kent.

Tavistock House, London. W.C.
Twenty Fifth January 1858

Gentlemen.

I beg to express my regret that I cannot possibly comply with your request. You will the better understand my inability to do so, when I assure you that I receive similar requests incessantly, in numbers so incredible, that even to acknowledge their receipt however briefly, is often a serious encroachment on my occupied time and attention.

I am Gentlemen | Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

John Stedman Esquire And Others

To LADY DUFF GORDON, [26 JANUARY 1858]

Mention in next. Date: written the same day.

To MARK LEMON, 26 JANUARY 1858

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House
Tuesday Morning. Twenty Sixth Jany. | 1858

My Dear Mark

I have been prevented from meeting you this morning, by an unusually violent rush of letters, imposing all sorts of other peoples' botherations on me.

Among them, came the enclosed from Lady Gordon. As you know her to be a literary woman of real ability, I send you her note and the pamphlet to which it refers. In telling her I have done so, I have added that my impression of the case is the same as my friend Mr Punch's,[†1] but that I will read the Pamphlet (which she sends me in duplicate), with judicial care and attention.

Ever affectionately
CD.

To FRANK STONE, 26 JANUARY 1858*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Twenty Sixth January 1858

My Dear Stone.

Your one third share of Ansell's charge for Front Court and Front Enclosure, from Midsummer last to the time of the engagement of the new man (in all, £8.11.6), is £2.17.2. I have settled with Ansell, and this latter sum is what you have to pay me.[†2]

Ever affecy.
CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?27 JANUARY 1858]

Extracts in F, IX, ii, 729 and VIII, iii, 651. Date: First extract 27 Jan, according to Forster; second extract from same letter: see ibid., p. 729.

Growing inclinations of a fitful and undefined sort are upon me sometimes to fall to work on a new book.[†3] Then I think I had better not worry my worried mind yet awhile. Then I think it would be of no use if I did, for I couldn't settle to one occupation. — And that's all!

You will hardly know Gadshill again, I am improving it so much[†4] — yet I have no interest in the place.[†5]

To W. S. LANDOR, 28 JANUARY [1858]

Mention in Pickering & Chatto, The Book Lovers Leaflet, No. 13 (Feb 1888); MS 4 pp.; addressed W. S. Landor; dated 28 Jan [58] (see below).[†1]

To JOHN FORSTER, [?30 JANUARY 1858]

Extract in F, IX ii, 729. Date: Three days after letter of 27 Jan, according to Forster.

If I can discipline my thoughts into the channel of a story, I have made up my mind to get to work on one: always supposing that I find myself, on the trial, able to do well. Nothing whatever will do me the least "good" in the way of shaking the one strong passion of change[†2] impending over us that every day makes stronger; but if I could work on with some approach to steadiness, through the summer, the anxious toil of a new book would have its neck well broken before beginning to publish, next October or November.[†3] Sometimes, I think I may continue to work; sometimes I think not. What do you say to the title, ONE OF THESE DAYS?[†4]

To J. WESTLAND MARSTON,[†5] 31 JANUARY 1858*

MS Library of Congress.

Tavistock House | Sunday Thirty First January | 1858.

My Dear Marston

I am unfortunately engaged to dine out tomorrow, as a preliminary to supporting a philosopher[†6] in a ballot where the "bishops, priests, and deacons"[†7] are expected to be arrayed against him.[†8]

But I will come to see the piece[†9] on its second night, and I need not tell you that I shall come with interest and pleasure. For this use, I retain the card for which I am indebted to your welcome remembrance and Mr. Dillon's politeness.

I will give you the ten minutes — and as many more as you like — most readily. Will you say next Friday at any time between 10 and 1? If that day should not suit you, say next Saturday between the same hours.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Westland Marston Esquire.

February

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 2 FEBRUARY 1858

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | 1 Stratton Street | Piccadilly. W.

Tavistock House | Second February 1858

My Dear Miss Coutts

I am inexpressibly vexed to find that Mrs. Dickens, in my absence[†1] and without my knowledge, wrote to you yesterday about her brother.[†2] I had not told her of the contents of your last kind note to me, concerning him. That is her only excuse;[†3] and I hope you will forgive her more freely and more readily than I do.

Ever Faithfully and affecy. Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To [?T. R. EELES],[†4] 2 FEBRUARY 1858

Mention in Pickering & Chatto, The Book Lovers Leaflet, No. 13 (Feb 1888); dated Tavistock House, 2 Feb 58.

Relating to the binding of an original MS.[†5]

To W. M. THACKERAY, 2 FEBRUARY 1858

MS Comtesse de Suzannet.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Second February 1858

My Dear Thackeray

The wisdom of Parliament, in that expensive Act of its greatness which constistutes the Guild, prohibits that corporation from doing any thing until it shall have existed in a perfectly useless condition for Seven Years. This clause (introduced by some Private-Bill magnate of official might) seemed so ridiculous, that nobody could believe it to have this meaning; but as I felt clear about it when we were on the very verge of granting an excellent literary annuity, I referred the point to Counsel, and my construction was confirmed without a doubt.[†1]

It is therefore needless to enquire whether an association in the nature of a Provident Society could address itself to such a case as you confide to me. The prohibition has still two or three years of life in it.

But, assuming the gentleman's[†2] title to be considered an "Author", as established, there is no question that it comes within the scope of the Literary Fund. They would habitually "lend" money if they did what I consider to be their duty. As it is, they only give money, but they give it in such instances.

(I have forwarded the envelope to the Society of Arts,[†3] with a request that they will present it to Prince Albert: approaching H. R. H. in the Siamese manner.)[†4]

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To EDMUND YATES, 2 FEBRUARY 1858

MS Robert H. Taylor Collection, Princeton University.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Second February 1858

My Dear Yates

Your quotation is — as I supposed — all wrong. The text is NOT[†5] "which his owls was organs."[†6] When Mr. Harris went into "a empty dog-kennel", to spare his sensitive nature the anguish of overhearing Mrs Harris's exclamations on the occasion of the birth of her first child (the Princess Royal of the Harris family), "he never took his hands away from his ears, or came out once, till he was shewed the baby." On encountering that spectacle he was (being of a weakly constitution), "took with fits." For this distressing complaint he was medically treated; the doctor "collared him and laid him on his back upon the airy stones" — please to observe what follows — "and she was told, to ease her mind, his owls was organs."

That is to say: Mrs. Harris, lying exhausted on her bed, in the first sweet relief of freedom from pain, merely covered with the counterpane and not yet "put comfortable", hears a noise, apparently proceeding from the backyard, and says, in a flushed and hysterical manner, "what owls are those! Who is a owling! Not my ugebond!" Upon which, the Doctor, looking round on one of the bottom posts of the bed, and taking Mrs. Harris's pulse in a re-assuring manner, says, with admirable presence of mind, "Howls my dear Madame? No, no, no. What are we thinking of. Howls, my dear Mrs. Harris? Ha ha ha! Organs Ma am, organs. Organs in the streets Mrs. Harris. No howls" —

Ever Faithfully CD.

To J. WESTLAND MARSTON, 3 FEBRUARY 1858

Text from MDGH, II, 43.

Tavistock House, Wednesday, Feb. 3rd, 1858.

My dear Marston,

I most heartily and honestly congratulate you on your charming little piece. It moved me more than I could easily tell you, if I were to try. Except "La Joie fait Peur," I have seen nothing nearly so good, and there is a subtlety in the comfortable presentation of the child who is to become a devoted woman for Reuben's sake,[†1] which goes a long way beyond Madame de Girardin. I am at a loss to let you know how much I admired it last night, or how heartily I cried over it. A touching idea, most delicately conceived and wrought out by a true artist and poet, in a spirit of noble, manly generosity, that no one should be able to study without great emotion.[†2]

It is extremely well acted by all concerned; but Mr. Dillon's performance is really admirable, and deserving of the highest commendation.[†3] It is good in these days to see an actor taking such pains, and expressing such natural and vigorous sentiment. There is only one thing I should have liked him to change. I am much mistaken if any man — least of all any such man — would crush a letter written by the hand of the woman he loved.[†4] Hold it to his heart unconsciously and look about for it the while, he might; or he might do any other thing with it that expressed a habit of tenderness and affection in association with the idea of her; but he would never crush it under any circumstances. He would as soon crush her heart.

You will see how closely I went with him, by my minding so slight an incident in so fine a performance. There is no one who could approach him in it; and I am bound to add that he surprised me as much as he pleased me.

I think it might be worth while to try the people at the Français[†5] with the piece. They are very good in one-act plays; such plays take well there, and this seems to me well suited to them. If you would like Samson[†6] or Regnier to read the play (in English), I know them well, and would be very glad indeed to tell them that I sent it with your sanction because I had been so much struck by it.

Faithfully yours always
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 3 FEBRUARY 1858

Mention in American Art Association and Anderson catalogue, Jan 1939; dated Tavistock House, 3 Feb 58.

Thanking his correspondent for a song he has sent him.

To JOHN FORSTER, 3 FEBRUARY 1858

Text from MDGH, II, 42-3.

Tavistock House, | Wednesday Night, Feb. 3rd, 1858.

My dear Forster,

I beg to report two phenomena:

1. An excellent little play in one act, by Marston, at the Lyceum; title, "A Hard Struggle;" as good as "La Joie fait Peur,"[†1] though not at all like it.

2. Capital acting in the same play, by Mr. Dillon. Real good acting, in imitation of nobody, and honestly made out by himself!!

I went (at Marston's request) last night, and cried till I sobbed again. I have not seen a word about it from Oxenford.[†2] But it is as wholesome and manly a thing altogether as I have seen for many a day. (I would have given a hundred pounds to have played Mr. Dillon's part).[†3]

Love to Mrs. Forster.

Ever affectionately

[CD.]

To CAVENDISH SPENCER BOYLE, 5 FEBRUARY 1858*

MS Roger W. Barrett.

Tavistock House | Friday Fifth February 1858.

My Dear Boyle.

Many thanks. I am happy to find that Flora is going to dash into commerce, to distract her own mind and everybody else's at the same time. I heard from Pan, a few weeks since.[†4] I also had a charming letter, on New Year's Day, from your sister Mary. Which I have not yet answered — which would be like a Beast, if it were not more like a man who can seldom write any letters that he likes to write, by reason of his writing fifty a day that he doesn't like to write. Love from all out of prison to all in prison.[†1] (I find that sentence to have an apostolic appearance).[†2] I thought of you when I saw Lord Spencer's[†3] death[†4] in the papers, but I hope the son will follow [you][†5] in the father's footsteps.[†6] My second boy is attached to the 42nd. Highlanders, and in the thick of the Indian tussle.[†7] And so no more at present from

Yours Ever

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To WILKIE COLLINS, 5 FEBRUARY 1858

MS Morgan Library.

My Dear Wilkie

Will you come and dine with me at Wates's at Gravesend, next Sunday — my Birthday? Only Forster, besides. We will go from London Bridge Station by the Train which leaves at 3.

I have to report two phenomena[†8] at the Lyceum.

1. A very pretty original piece in one Act by Marston. As good as La joie fait peur, and not at all like it.

2. Excellent acting in it by Mr. Dillon. Imitated from no one — honestly and vigorously made out for himself.

!

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To J. W. KNIGHT,[†9] 5 FEBRUARY 1858*

Text from transcript, Huntington Library.

Tavistock House, | Fifth February 1858.

Sir,

I would most willingly receive the Deputation from the Master Boot and Shoe Makers' Benevolent Institution,[†10] if I could possibly accede to the request they contemplate doing me the honor to proffer to me. But as I can make no new public engagements of that nature for the present season, and as I consequently know that their coming to me would be a waste of their time, I deem it right to inform you at once that I cannot have the satisfaction of presiding at the proposed dinner.

I am Sir, | Your faithful Servant,

CHARLES DICKENS

Mr John W. Knight.

To WILKIE COLLINS, 6 FEBRUARY 1858

MS Yale University Library.

Tavistock House | Saturday Sixth February 1858

My Dear Wilkie

Thinking it may one day be interesting to you — say, when you are weak in both feet, and when I and Doncaster are quiet and the great race is over[†1] — to possess this little memorial of our joint Christmas Work, I have had it put together for you, and now send it on its coming home from the binder.

Faithfully Ever

CHARLES DICKENS

Wilkie Collins Esquire.

To SIR CHARLES LOCOCK,[†2] 10 FEBRUARY 1858*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: Sir Charles Locock | Hertford Street | May Fair | W.

Tavistock House | Tenth February 1858

My Dear Sir Charles

The undersigned Charmer was extremely sorry to lose you last night.[†3] He handed your generous donation to the Secretary, by whom it was duly announced. You will be glad to hear that the Dinner was very successful, and that the subscriptions amounted to the — as far as I know — unprecedented sum of £3,000.[†4]

Faithfully Yours ever
CHARLES DICKENS

Sir Charles Locock.

To BENJAMIN WEBSTER, 10 FEBRUARY 1858

MS Dickens House.

Tavistock House, W.C. | Wednesday Tenth February 1858.[†1]

My Dear Webster

I am sorry to reply to your note, that I already stand pledged to an engagement for Ash-wednesday,[†2] which leaves me no property in myself for that day.

(I wonder, by the bye, how many Orreries[†3] you have in the vaults at the Adelphi — about 20, I suppose.)

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 11 FEBRUARY 1858*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | 1 Stratton Street | Piccadilly.

Tavistock House | Thursday Eleventh February | 1858.

My Dear Miss Coutts

I was out of town yesterday and did not receive your note until I came home at night. This morning I have been down to the Athenaeum and have had the pleasure of attaching my name to Mr. Grasett's balloting paper.[†4] He may depend upon my going down on Monday night too, and voting for him.[†5]

I think this poor girl's letter,[†6] a very pathetic and genuine one. It says what we must all think (I mean all we who have any part under you in administering it) of the Home; and says it with great feeling and simplicity.

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Yours faithfully and affecy.
CHARLES DICKENS

I wish you had been at the first dinner of the Hospital for Sick Children, last Tuesday. I really thought that the Chairman warmed with the subject and turned it well! — [†7]

To J. WESTLAND MARSTON, 11 FEBRUARY 1858*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Tavistock House | Thursday Eleventh February | 1858.

My Dear Marston

I have sent off the Proof[†1] to Regnier; and have told him what I think of the play and of its acting capacities, just as I have already told my opinion to you.

Faithfully Always
CHARLES DICKENS

To FRANÇOIS RÉGNIER, 11 FEBRUARY 1858†

MS Comédie Français.

Tavistock House, London. W.C.
Thursday Eleventh February 1858

My Dear Regnier.

I want you to read the enclosed little play. You will see that it is in one Act — about the length of La joie fait peur. It is now acting at the Lyceum Theatre here, with very great success. The author is Mr. Westland Marston; a dramatic writer of some reputation, who wrote a very well known tragedy called "The Patrician's Daughter", in which Macready and Miss Faucit[†2] acted (under Macready's management at Drury Lane), some years ago.[†3]

This little piece is so very powerful on the stage, its interest is so simple and natural, and the part of Reuben is such a very fine one, that I cannot help thinking you might make un grand coup with it, if, with your skilful hand, you arranged it for the Français. I have communicated this idea of mine to the author, et la dessus je vous ecris. I am anxious to know your opinion, and shall expect with much interest to receive a little letter from you at your convenience.

Mrs. Dickens, Miss Hogarth, and all the house, send a thousand kind loves and regard to Madame Regnier and the dear little boys.[†4] You will bring them all to London when you come, with all the force of the Français — will you not?

Ever My Dear Regnier | Faithfully Your friend
CHARLES DICKENS

To MARK LEMON, 12 FEBRUARY 1858

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

Tavistock House W.C. | Twelfth February 1858

My Dear Mark

Many hearty thanks for your remembrance of my Birthday.

Affectionately Ever
CHARLES DICKENS

Mark Lemon Esquire

To J. WESTLAND MARSTON, 16 FEBRUARY 1858*

MS Library of Congress. Address: Westland Marston Esquire | 1 Camden Park Villas | N.W.

Tavistock House W.C. | Sixteenth February 1858

My Dear Marston

I have received the enclosed from Regnier, this morning. Consider it at your leisure, and tell me what reply I shall send him.[†1]

Ever Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

Westland Marston Esquire

To H. A. BATHURST,[†2] 17 FEBRUARY 1858*

MS Hospital for Sick Children.

Tavistock House
Wednesday Evening | Seventeenth February 1858

Dear Sir

I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your obliging letter, and to assure the Committee, through you, of the gratification I derive from their generous recognition of my most willingly rendered services.[†3] It will give me great pleasure to become one of the Honorary Governors of the Hospital.

In the matter of my public reading for its benefit, I will presently consult the friend who was Honorary Secretary to the Jerrold Remembrance Fund[†4] (for which I read in London last year), and who has a better practical experience of the management of such things than perhaps any one in London. When I shall have taken counsel with him as to time, place, and prices, I will communicate with you again.[†5]

You will of course understand in the meanwhile, that I only desire to redeem my pledge in the most advantageous and most profitable manner.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

H. A. Bathurst Esquire

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 17 FEBRUARY 1858*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | 1 Stratton Street | Piccadilly | W.

Tavistock House
Wednesday Evening Seventeenth Feby. | 1858.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I attended the Committee to day, and thoroughly agreed with Mr. Dyer in the precautionary measure he proposed as to the admission of cases. It is quite understood among us that it shall be always adopted henceforth.

As you had expressed a wish that we would not call in the newer girls to day, we saw but four or five of the Inmates. The two who are going into service, expressed their gratitude with much propriety and modesty, and steered quite clear of Desdemona's fault of protesting too much.[†1]

I send you a letter addressed to Mr. Charles Knight, and another from him to me. They relate to the De Foe family,[†2] and explain themselves.

With love to Mrs. Brown

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Yours faithfully and affecy.
CHARLES DICKENS

To LADY HARDING,[†3] 19 FEBRUARY 1858

MS Mr A. G. Schaw Miller. Address: Lady Harding | 30 St. James's Place | S.W.

Tavistock House. W.C. | Nineteenth February 1858

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Lady Harding, and begs to acknowledge the receipt of Lady Harding's interesting note and printed enclosure.[†4]

To FRANÇOIS RÉGNIER, 20 FEBRUARY 1858†

MS Comédie Français.

Tavistock House, London.
Saturday Twentieth February | 1858.

My Dear Regnier.

First, let me tell you how extremely sorry we all are to hear of Madame Regnier's illness, and with how much true sympathy and concern we have spoken of it. We hope, from the latter part of your account, that she is gradually recovering and will soon be very much better. Pray assure her that we all send her our love and most cordial good wishes, and that none of her friends can be more interested in her, or solicitous for her, than we are.

Next, let me thank you with all my heart, for your most patient and kind letter. I made its contents known to Mr. Marston, and I enclose you his reply.[†1] You will see that he cheerfully leaves the matter in your hands, and abides by your opinion and discretion.

You need not return his letter, my friend.

There is great excitement here this morning, in consequence of the failure of the Ministry last night, to carry the Bill they brought in, to please your Emperor and his troops.[†2] I, for one, am extremely glad of their defeat.[†3]

"Le vieux Poole"[†4] I have no doubt will go staggering down the Rue de la Paix today, with his stick in his hand and his hat on one side, predicating the Downfall of everything, in consequence of this event. His hand-writing shakes more and more every quarter, and I think he mixes a great deal of Cognac with his ink. He always gives me some astonishing piece of news (which is never true), or some sagacious public prophecy (which is never verified). And he always tells me he is dying (which he never is).[†5]

Adieu my dear Regnier. Accept a thousand thanks from me, and believe me, now and always,
Your affectionate and faithful friend
CHARLES DICKENS

To H. A. BATHURST, 21 FEBRUARY 1858

Facsimile in Fac-Simile Reporting Notes, I, 11, Jan 88.

Tavistock House | Monday Twenty First February 1858

My Dear Sir

I send you the speech, with a few slight corrections. It is extremely well done, and with great fidelity.[†6] If you should have an opportunity of making my approval of it, known to the gentleman who took it down, I would beg you to do so.

Tomorrow or next day, I do not doubt to be able to write to you in detail, on the subject of the reading.

My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

H. A. Bathurst Esquire.

To CHARLES KNIGHT, 22 FEBRUARY 1858

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, July 1983; MS 1 p.; dated Tavistock House, 22 Feb 58; addressed Charles Knight.

Writing on behalf of Miss Coutts, who is engaged with a sick sister,[†1] he remits £10 from her for the De Foe survivors and thanks Knight for his interest. He will not forget the 15th March.[†2]

To W. H. WILLS, 22 FEBRUARY 1858

MS Huntington Library.

Tavistock House
Monday Night Twenty Second February 1858

My Dear Wills.

Letter No. 1, enclosed, is the Stereoscope people's[†3] favor that I spoke to you of this morning. Will you kindly write them an obliging reply, to the effect we mentioned?

Letter No. 2, is the usual thing. I know no more about it.

Collins wishes to read his new play[†4] to me, next Thursday. I mean to propose to him that you be of the party, and I have no doubt the idea will give him much pleasure. If all things else should be "in a concatenation accordingly",[†5] what do you say to our dining at Gad's Hill (under John's[†6] convoy), reading there after dinner, sleeping there, and coming up next morning? I have broached this notion to our respected contributor.

I will be in Wellington Street on Wednesday in good time, and we can arrange details then.

Ever Faithfully
CD.

To H. A. BATHURST, [?22-25 FEBRUARY 1858]

Summary in Minute Book, Committee of Management, Great Ormond St Hospital for Sick Children. Date: between 22 Feb (see To Bathurst, 21 Feb) and 26 Feb, when letter read out to Committee.

Proposing to fulfil his promise to read for the benefit of the Hospital on Thurs 15 Apr, at St Martin's Hall, and recommending that the arrangements be superintended by Mr. [Arthur][†7] Smith.

To JOHN DELANE, 25 FEBRUARY 1858

MS The Times Newspapers Ltd.

Tavistock House, W.C.
Thursday Twenty Fifth February 1858

My Dear Delane[†1]

Miss Coutts (no doubt with a kind object) has asked me to try to find out for her, who wrote the one more unfortunate letter in the Times of yesterday.[†2] Of course she proceeds on the assumption that it is really written, or prompted, by such a person as it purports to originate with.[†3]

Do you feel yourself at liberty to enlighten me on the point, with the view of doing good to some one?

Ever Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

John Delane Esquire

To [MISS BURDETT COUTTS], 26 FEBRUARY 1858*

MS Father Daniel M. Venglarik.

Tavistock House | Friday Twenty Sixth February 1858.

My Dear [Miss Coutts][†4]

I wrote (privately) to the active Editor of the Times, asking him if he could give me the name of that writer, to communicate to you. I send you his reply.[†5]

Ever Faithfully and affecy.
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 27 FEBRUARY 1858*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS,
Saturday Twenty Seventh Feby. 1858

My Dear Miss Coutts

I will come to you at about half past 3 to day. In case that time should not suit you and you should have had occasion to go out, will you leave a note for me, appointing your own hour on Monday.

Ever Faithfully and affecy.

CD.

To JOHN DELANE, 28 FEBRUARY 1858*

MS The Times Newspapers Ltd.

Tavistock House | Sunday, Twenty Eighth February | 1858.

My Dear Delane.

It seems that when Miss Coutts spoke to me about that "One more unfortunate" letter, it had just attracted her notice and she had not read it through. It further appears that she is immensely staggered and disconcerted by the latter part of it (so very difficult of presentation to, and comprehension by, a woman), and is even troubled by its being seen by the people in her household.[†1] Therefore I think the writer had best remain unknown to her.

Many thanks for your kind note. I was at Gad's Hill on Thursday and the greater part of Friday, and saw Miss Coutts again only yesterday afternoon.

Ever Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

I think the attitude of that miserable man Orsini, on his trial, as sad a picture, almost, as this world has to shew at the present time.[†2] "Sir", said a noble gentleman to me when I was last in Italy: "in this country of mine, the greatest social misery is to have a son."

March

To STEPHEN MASSETT,[†1] 1 MARCH 1858*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Tavistock House. W.C. | Monday First March 1858.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his Compliments to Mr. Massett, and begs to acknowledge the receipt of Mr. Massett's obliging note. His absence from town for a day or two, has delayed his reply.

He begs to add, that Mr. Massett is at perfect liberty to read, at any of the proposed entertainments, the passage from Bleak House descriptive of Jo's death.[†2] He merely begs the favor (to save himself from an interminable correspondence with English readers and lecturers), that Mr. Massett will make no special mention of him in the Programmes.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 2 MARCH 1858

Text from N, III, 9-10.

Tavistock House, Londres | Mardi, 2 mars, 1858

Cher Monsieur,

J'ai reçu votre si intéressante et si généreuse lettre avec les plus vives émotions de la sympathie et de l'admiration vers M. de Lamartine, cet homme illustre qui a ennobli à la fois la littérature imaginative et l'histoire politique et sociale du siècle qu'il adorne.

J'ai soigneusement considéré la question sur laquelle vous m'avez fait l'honneur de me consulter; et je suis bien fâché de vous répondre que j'ai grand peur que votre projet ne réussirait pas.[†3] Quand j'étais à Paris il y a deux ans, je causai avec M. de Lamartine au sujet de la dernière grande édition de ses Œuvres en quatorze tomes.[†4] Il me dit, et je n'ai pu cacher mon étonnement, qu'il n'avait que trois souscripteurs, ou abonnements à cette entreprise, en Angleterre! Je moi-même en avait l'honneur d'être un; et je me souviens que cette édition était annoncée en avance, pas seulement à tous nos hommes de lettres, mais à presque tout le monde enseigné, chez nous.

Croyez moi, cher Monsieur, je serais vraiment enchanté d'avoir la grande distinction et la grande félicité de rendre aucun service, quelque petit qu'il soit, à M. de Lamartine qui j'aime et qui j'honore. Mais il faut considérer, d'abord et surtout, M. de Lamartine lui-même; et je vous avoue que je ne voulais pas l'exposer aux chances de notre manquer notre coup. . . .[†1]

Agréez cher monsieur l'assurance de ma consideration la plus distinguée et de mes sentiments les plus sincères de l'amitié et de l'estime.

Votre fidèle
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 4 MARCH 1858†

MS Morgan Library.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS,
Thursday Fourth March 1858

My Dear Miss Coutts

Most unfortunately, — I am engaged to dinner to day, to hear Wilkie Collins read a new play[†2] (in the construction of which I have held no end of Councils with him), which he designs for Mr. Robson. I fear I shall not be able to get away in time for the Face.[†3] Cannot the Face be reproduced? Whose face is it? What is the hope or danger of the face? I am distracted by doubts and speculations, and must come and ask tomorrow.

Ever Faithfully and affecy.

CD.

To THE REV. WILLIAM HARNESS,[†4] 4 MARCH 1858*

MS New York University Library.

Tavistock House W.C. | Thursday Fourth March 1858

My Dear Harness.

It is always such a great pleasure to me to have a talk with you, that you may be sure nothing vanquishable in the way of difficulty would prevent my accepting your kind invitation. Most unfortunately however, the fifteenth is Charles Knight's birthday, and on that anniversary we always dine with him.[†5] It is a strange thing that he could not have been born on any other day, when there was a choice of three hundred and sixty five; but as he was not consulted, and as his mother has long been dead, I have not even the consolation of blaming any one for this act of perverseness.

Believe me always | Very faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

The Rev. William Harness.

To RICHARD BENTLEY, 8 MARCH 1858

MS Berg Collection.

Tavistock House | Monday Eighth March 1858.

My Dear Mr. Bentley

Pray do not ask me to see that lady. Believe me, it would only distress and disappoint her. In the present state of the stage, I have no earthly power of helping her, and I wish to spare myself and her the pain of a more detailed assurance to that effect. I do not return this answer to your note, on any vague and indistinct grounds. My experience of such cases has been a large one, and I believe that nothing would now induce me to mediate with a Manager on behalf of any new lady-aspirant whomsoever. Apart from this, if I had any really serviceable influence in such wise, there are claims upon it which would go before all others and exclude all others.

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esquire.

To MARK LEMON, 8 MARCH 1858

MS Comtesse de Suzannet.

Tavistock House | Monday Night | Eighth March 1858

My Dear Mark

I trust you are better? You were sadly missed, yesterday and the night before.

Enclosed No. of popular periodical has been shewn to me. If the article I have marked be not yet paid for, please pay me for it — I wrote it, and it is taken from Master Humphrey's Clock.[†1]

Ever affectionately

CD.

To B. W. PROCTER, 8 MARCH 1858

Text from N, III, 10.

Tavistock House | Monday Eighth March 1858

My dear Procter,

I am afraid my facetious account of my restless energies may have given you a wrong impression of my "case." I habitually keep myself in the condition of a fighting man in training — And as to sponging, scrubbing, brushing and all manner of such arts, I am the latest addition to the wonders of the world.

Ever affectionately

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To THOMAS TROUGHTON,[†1] 8 MARCH 1858

Text from Minute Book of Gravesend and Milton Library and Reading Room.

Tavistock House London | Monday Eighth March 1858

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to the Mayor of Gravesend and regrets his inability to comply with the request which the Mayor has done him the honor to forward.[†2] His inability will be the better understood perhaps when he assures the Mayor of Gravesend that he declines such applications by hundreds and that it is sometimes quite impossible for him even to acknowledge their receipt however briefly.

To SHIRLEY BROOKS, 11 MARCH 1858

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

Tavistock House | Thursday Eleventh March 1858

My Dear Brooks.

Many thanks for your note. Forster had seen the article.[†3] It was Moran[†4] who did that disgraceful deed; and I shall take an opportunity of mentioning that interesting circumstance to O'Dowd.[†5]

We had a great scene with the Committee yesterday.[†6] They did a frightfully injudicious thing on a sudden, in rejecting a motion made by a very moderate outsider[†7] for a Sub Committee of Enquiry into the expences.[†8] I could have desired or expected nothing half so good. The outsider stood aghast with amazement (for they had been professing all manner of desires to co-operate with those distinguished &c. whose general objections &c.),[†1] and came over to me afterwards and said that now he thought they had done for themselves and made out the Reform case.[†2]

Ah! You should see the virtuous grey hairs of Bentley,[†3] in the foreground of a group of two score parson-schoolmasters, he voting on their conservative side, and going direct to Heaven in their company. It's like the apotheosis of an evangelical (and drunken) butler.

Ever Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN HOLLINGSHEAD, [11 MARCH 1858]

Mention in Hollingshead, My Lifetime, 1895, I, 114. Date: after first night of The Birthplace of Podgers, 10 Mar 58.

Congratulations on the success[†4] of Hollingshead and Toole.

To DESMOND FITZGERALD,[†5] 15 MARCH 1858

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, Dec 1980; MS 2 pp.; addressed Desmond FitzGerald; dated Tavistock House, 15 Mar 58.

Saying that he should be happy to accept FitzGerald's verses, entitled 'Poetry and Philosophy'[†6] if he would make the last stanza but one plainer to my comprehension. I cannot make out that crown of bay which Science gives as incense to its God.[†7]

The Lone Heart's Recollections are not suited to the magazine.

The Ghost Story is an extremely old one. It is usually told of a gentleman who went down into one of the Vaults in Westminster Abbey on a similar expedition. It is very well told in your little paper, but its antiquity is a fatal objection.

To JOHN FORSTER, [15 MARCH 1858]

Extract in F, IX, ii, 729. Date: "six weeks" after 27 Jan, according to Forster.

What do you think of this name for my story — Buried Alive? Does it seem too grim? Or, The Thread of Gold?[†1] Or, The Doctor of Beauvais?

To W. C. MACREADY, 15 MARCH 1858†

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House. W.C. | Fifteenth March 1858.

My Dearest Macready

I have safely received your cheque this morning, and will hand it over forthwith to the Honorary Secretary of the Hospital. I hope you have read the little speech, in the Hospital's publication of it.[†2] They had it taken by their own Short Hand Writer, and it is done verbatim.

You may be sure that it is a good and kind Charity. It is amazing to me that it is not at this day ten times as large and rich as it is.[†3] But I hope and trust that I have happily been able to give it a good thrust onward into a great course.

We all send our most affectionate love to all the house. I am devising all sorts of things in my mind, and am in a state of energetic restlessness incomprehensible by the calm philosophers of Dorsetshire. What a Dream it is, this work and strife, and how little we do in the Dream after all! Only last night, in my sleep, I was bent upon getting over a perspective of barriers, with my hands and feet bound. Pretty much what we are all about, waking, I think?

But, Lord! (as I said before) you smile — pityingly: not bitterly — at this hubbub, and moralize upon it, in the calm evenings when there is no School at Sherborne.[†4]

And you[†5] are not asked (and what is more, are not obliged to go) to hear MARSTON[†6] read a very bad play,[†7] at the Beethoven Rooms in Harley Street on a

Saturday Night:[†1] to the intent that you may give your honest opinion on the probabilities of his coining money by reading in public. You[†2] don't sit in an arm-chair of judgment, in the full glare of the operator's eye; and you,[†2] in the hour of that Forcible-Feeble[†3] triumph, don't feel yourself (with a start of shame and horror) falling asleep, and don't alternate that condition with a state of such appalling sense of the ludicrousness of the situation, that grins carve themselves into your face — tattoo themselves all over your countenance — when you ought to be in floods of tears.

Yet this was my[†2] condition, only the night before last. And I declare to you that, bringing Wilkie Collins home to refresh himself with a Cigar, I fell into my chair with such a sudden relief from the oppression of bottling off a cask of absurdity through three long hours, that I laughed myself into hysterics.

Ever affectionately and truly

CHARLES DICKENS

To WILLIAM TELBIN, 15 MARCH 1858

MS Mrs J. A. Martin.

Tavistock House. W.C. | Monday Fifteenth March 1858

My Dear Telbin

I should have been extremely glad and ready to have sat to any one in whom you have an interest, but that I am under positive refusals and conditional promises, which altogether exclude my visage from Photography! It is a melancholy fact, but I don't see the remotest chance of my interesting countenance being ever photographed, of my own knowledge and consent, again.[†4] If I were to begin, I could never leave off.

Faithfully Yours Ever
CHARLES DICKENS

William Telbin Esquire

To F. M. EVANS, 16 MARCH 1858

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Tuesday March Sixteenth 1858

My Dear Evans.

I want you to consider this letter as being strictly private and confidential between you and me. I am anxious to have your soundest opinion on the point it refers to you, and I shall give it great weight — though I do not, of course, pledge myself to be bound by it.

The Reading idea that I had, some time ago, sticks to me. Let me read where I will, an effect is produced which seems to belong to nothing else; and the number of people who want to come, cannot by any means be got in. I have in my mind this project: —

After reading in London on the 15th. of next month for the Benefit of the childrens' Hospital, to announce by advertisement (what is quite true), that I cannot answer the applications that are made to me, so numerous are they, and that compliance with ever so few of them is in any reason impossible.[†1] That therefore I have resolved upon a course of Readings[†2] both in town and country,[†3] and that those in London will take place at St. Martins Hall on certain evenings — four or six Thursdays — through May, and just into June.

Then, in August, September, and October, in the Eastern Counties, the West of England, Lancashire, Yorkshire, and Scotland, I should read from 35 to 40 times. At each place where there was a great success, I should myself announce that I should come back, on the turn of Christmas, to read a new Christmas Story written for the purpose (and which I should first read in London). Unless I am gigantically mistaken, — by March or April a very large sum of money would be cleared — and Ireland would be still untouched; not to speak of America, where I believe I could make (if I could resolve to go there) ten thousand pounds.

Now, the question I want your opinion on, is this: — Assuming these hopes to be well-grounded, would such an use of the personal (I may almost say affectionate) relations which subsist between me and the public, and make my standing with them very peculiar, at all affect my position with them as a writer? Would it be likely to have any influence on my next book? If it had any influence at all, would it be likely to be of a weakening or a strengthening kind?†4

(It is not to the purpose of this point, to remark that I should confide the whole of the Business arrangements to Arthur Smith. I merely mention it, that you may have the whole case).

Ever Faithfully

CHARLES DICKENS

To T. W. BEALE, [19 MARCH 1858]

Mention in To Forster, 20 Mar 58. Date: the day before that letter.

Agreeing to see Beale the next day.

To T. R. EELES, 20 MARCH 1858

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.

Saturday Twentieth March 1858

Dear Mr. Eeles.

Will you be so good as to bind me for my readings:

The Chimes

and

The Haunted Man†1

Each separately, and both like the Cricket†2 — which I send with this, as a specimen. You will want two copies of each book, for which I send you an order on the other side.

Faithfully Yours

CD

To JOHN FORSTER, [19-20 MARCH 1858]

Extracts in F, VIII, ii, 645-6 and VIII, ii, 642*n*. Date: first extract "nearly a month" before 15 Apr; second extract 20 Mar, according to Forster.

Your view of the reading matter I still think is unconsciously taken from your own particular point.[†3] You don't seem to me to get out of yourself in considering it. A word more upon it. You are not to think I have made up my mind. If I had, why should I not say so? I find very great difficulty in doing so because of what you urge, because I know the question to be a balance of doubts, and because I most honestly feel in my innermost heart, in this matter (as in all others for years and years), the honour of the calling by which I have always stood most conscientiously. But do you quite consider that the public exhibition of oneself takes place equally, whosoever may get the money? And have you any idea that at this moment — this very time — half the public at least supposes me to be paid? My dear F, out of the twenty or five-and-twenty letters a week that I get about Readings, twenty will ask at what price, or on what terms, it can be done. The only exceptions, in truth, are when the correspondent is a clergyman, or a banker, or the member for the place in question. Why, at this very time half Scotland believes that I am paid for going to Edinburgh! — Here is Greenock writes to me, and asks could it be done for a hundred pounds? There is Aberdeen writes, and states the capacity of its hall, and says, though far less profitable than the very large hall in Edinburgh, is it not enough to come on for? W.[†4] answers such letters continually. (— At this place, enter Beale. He called here yesterday morning, and then wrote to ask if I would see him to-day. I replied "Yes," so here he came in. With long preface called to know whether it was possible to arrange anything in the way of Readings for this autumn — say, six months. Large capital at command. Could produce partners, in such an enterprise, also with large capital. Represented such. Returns would be enormous. Would I name a sum? a minimum sum that I required to have, in any case? Would I look at it as a Fortune, and in no other point of view? I shook my head, and said, my tongue was tied on the subject for the present; I might be more communicative at another time. Exit Beale in confusion and disappointment.) — You will be happy to hear that at one on Friday, the Lord Provost, Dean of Guild, Magistrates, and Council of the ancient city of Edinburgh will wait (in procession) on their brother freeman, at the Music Hall, to give him hospitable welcome. Their brother freeman[†1] has been cursing their stars and his own, ever since the receipt of solemn notification to this effect.

He had referred the question to two distinguished ladies of his acquaintance. You may as well know that I went on and propounded the matter to A,[†2] without any preparation. Result. — "I am surprised, and I should have been surprised if I had seen it in the newspaper without previous confidence from you. But nothing more. N — no. Certainly not. Nothing more. I don't see that there is anything derogatory in it, even now when you ask me that question. I think upon the whole that most people would be glad you should have the money, rather than other people. It might be misunderstood here and there, at first; but I think the thing would very soon express itself, and that your own power of making it express itself would be very great." As she wished me to ask B,[†3] who was in another room, I did so. She was for a moment tremendously disconcerted, "under the impression that it was to lead to the stage"!! Then, without knowing anything of A's opinion, closely followed it. That absurd association had never entered my head or yours; but it might enter some other heads for all that. Take these two opinions for whatever they are worth. A (being very much interested and very anxious to help to a right conclusion) proposed to ask a few people of various degrees who know what the Readings are, what they think — not compromising me, but suggesting the project afar-off, as an idea in somebody else's mind. I thanked her, and said, "Yes," of course.

To WILKIE COLLINS, 21 MARCH 1858

MS Morgan Library.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Sunday Twenty First March 1858

My Dear Wilkie

I too had intended to come to the enclosed subject,[†4] — and I too forgot it.

You (or somebody else) will find the cheque crossed to Coutts's!

All day yesterday I was pursuing the Reading idea. Forster seems to me to be extraordinarily irrational about it. (I have a misgiving sometimes, that his money must have got into his head.)[†1] I propounded it to Miss Coutts, who might have been expected to be dismayed, but was not, in the least.[†2] I am no further on my road to a decision, than that I resolve I will decide within 7 days from this date. Could you possibly believe that Forster asked me what I thought of consulting (on the Literary-position question)

F.L.A.D.G.A T E[†3]

!

The Doncaster unhappiness remains so strong upon me that I can't write, and (waking) can't rest, one minute. I have never known a moment's peace or content, since the last night of the Frozen Deep. I do suppose that there never was a Man so seized and rended by one Spirit. In this condition, though nothing can alter or soften it, I have a turning notion[†4] that the mere physical effort and change of the Readings would be good, as another means of bearing it.

— I suppose it is the penalty I pay for having written all these red-backed books[†5] upon my shelves — ?

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To W. J. CULLENFORD, 23 MARCH 1858*

MS Fales Collection, New York University Library.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Tuesday Twenty Third March 1858

Dear Mr. Cullenford

As I am going to Edinburgh on Thursday morning, to read there next night, I shall not be here in case you wish to say any thing to me about your Dinner.[†6] I therefore write, to beg you to reserve a place for me, and another (next to me) for Mr. Chauncy Hare Townshend. I shall return on Saturday night.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To W. C. MACREADY, 24 MARCH 1858*

MS Morgan Library.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Wednesday Twenty Fourth March 1858.

My Dearest Macready

As the Children's Hospital Secretary sends me the enclosed, I suppose I had best send it on to you in business-like course. I am slowly recovering from Marston — have weak fits of grinning, occasionally, but am on the whole better.

Kindest love from all. | Ever affectionately
CD.

To MISS ELLEN STONE, [24] MARCH 1858

MS Benoliel Collection. Date: misdated by CD; Wednesday was 24 Mar 58.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Wednesday Evening Twenty Sixth March 1858

My Dear Miss Stone

I shall have great pleasure in dining at Russell House next Tuesday.

Your kind note comes to me opportunely, for I am away to Edinburgh tomorrow morning, to read there on Friday night.

With kindest regard | Believe me | Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To M. BAMPS,[†1] 25 MARCH 1858

Mention in N, III, 14; MS (in French) 1 p.; dated Tavistock House, 25 Mar 58; addressed Monsieur Bamps (of Brussels).

Disclaiming all knowledge of a M. Louis Dickens.[†2]

To JOHN FORSTER, [?27 MARCH 1858]

Extract in F, VIII, ii, 646. Date: "on his return" from Edinburgh, according to Forster.

I had no opportunity of asking any one's advice in Edinburgh. The crowd was too enormous, and the excitement in it much too great. But my determination is all but taken. I must do something, or I shall wear my heart away. I can see no better thing to do that is half so hopeful in itself, or half so well suited to my restless state.†3

To MRS FORSTER, 28 MARCH 1858*

MS Birthplace Museum, Portsmouth. Address: Mrs. Forster.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Sunday Twenty Eighth March 1858.

My Dear Mrs. Forster

I went to Marshall's†1 on the North Bridge (the best place for the purpose), with your drawing.†2 He perfectly understood what was wanted, and shewed me, in fact, the lower portion of it, and the chain. But the heads, he said, it is not usual to keep in stock, and he did not think one could be found in Edinburgh in a completed state. Now, as Wills was to remain behind me for a week's pleasure, I thought it best to ask him (Marshall) under these circumstances, by what day the thing could be got ready? Whereunto he replied, By Tuesday. So I ordered it to be made, and Wills will bring it to London. Mr. Marshall's estimate of the cost is "jast aboot three punds".

The Reading was a tremendous success.†3 Some two thousand people were crammed into the place; and nobody I know in Edinburgh, could get admission on any terms.†4 They gave me a gorgeous cup†5 (tell Forster), and I made them a neat and appropriate.†6

All of which (please also to tell Forster), I saw very faithfully and well described in The Scotsman yesterday morning.†7 But of course I haven't got the Scotsman, or I would forward him to Montagu Square.

My dear Mrs. Forster | Ever affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [30 MARCH 1858]

Extracts in F, VIII, ii, 646-7 and n, and XI, iii, 831. Date: first extract "end of March", second extract 30 Mar, according to Forster; no doubt same letter.

It becomes necessary, with a view to the arrangements that would have to be begun next month if I decided on the Readings, to consider and settle the question of the Plunge.†1 Quite dismiss from your mind any reference whatever to present circumstances at home. Nothing can put them right, until we are all dead and buried and risen. It is not, with me, a matter of will, or trial, or sufferance, or good humour, or making the best of it, or making the worst of it, any longer. It is all despairingly over. Have no lingering hope of, or for, me in this association. A dismal failure has to be borne, and there an end. Will you then try to think of this reading project (as I do) apart from all personal likings and dislikings, and solely with a view to its effect on that peculiar relation (personally affectionate, and like no other man's) which subsists between me and the public? I want your most careful consideration. If you would like, when you have gone over it in your mind, to discuss the matter with me and Arthur Smith (who would manage the whole of the Business, which I should never touch); we will make an appointment. But I ought to add that Arthur Smith plainly says, "Of the immense return in money, I have no doubt. Of the Dash into the new position, however, I am not so good a judge."[†2] I enclose you a rough note of my project, as it stands in my mind.[†3]

Here is the rough note. I propose to announce in a short and plain advertisement (what is quite true) that I cannot so much as answer the numerous applications that are made to me to read, and that compliance with ever so few of them is, in any reason, impossible. That I have therefore resolved upon a course of readings of the Christmas Carol both in town and country, and that those in London will take place at St. Martin's Hall on certain evenings. Those evenings will be either four or six Thursdays, in May and the beginning of June.[†4] ... I propose an Autumn Tour, for the country, extending through August, September, and October. It would comprise the Eastern Counties, the West, Lancashire, Yorkshire, and Scotland. I should read from 35 to 40 times in this tour, at the least. At each place where there was a great success, I would myself announce that I should come back, on the turn of Christmas, to read a new Christmas story written for that purpose. This story I should first read a certain number of times in London. I have the strongest belief that by April in next year, a very large sum of money indeed would be gained by these means. Ireland would be still untouched, and I conceive America alone (if I could resolve to go there) to be worth Ten Thousand Pounds. In all these proceedings, the Business would be wholly detached from me, and I should never appear in it. I would have an office belonging to the Readings and to nothing else, opened in London; I would have the advertisements emanating from it, and also signed by some one belonging to it; and they should always mention me as a third person — just as the Child's Hospital, for instance, in addressing the public, mentions me.

I was put into a state of much perplexity on Sunday. I don't know who had spoken to my informant, but it seems that the Queen is bent upon hearing the Carol read, and has expressed her desire to bring it about without offence; hesitating about the manner of it, in consequence of my having begged to be excused from going to her when she sent for me after the Frozen Deep. I parried the thing as well as I could; but being asked to be prepared with a considerate and obliging answer, as it was known the request would be preferred, I said, "Well! I supposed Col. Phipps would speak to me about it, and if it were he who did so, I should assure him of my desire to meet any wish of her Majesty's, and should express my hope that she would indulge me by making one of some audience or other — for I thought an audience necessary to the effect." Thus it stands; but it bothers me.

April

To ARTHUR SMITH, [?1 APRIL 1858]

Mention in To Wills, 3 Apr. Date: CD had probably received Wills's letter by 1 Apr; he had written to Smith "immediately".

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, [2 APRIL 1858]

Mention implied by testimonial dated 2 Apr 58.

Sending a testimonial[†1] for Benjamin Cooper.

To W. H. WILLS, 3 APRIL 1858

MS Huntington Library.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Saturday Third April, 1858

My Dear Wills

I have been so hustled by a crowd of cares since I came home,[†1] that I have not written to you — the rather because, until I received yours from Edinburgh, I had nothing to say.

Yours arrived very opportunely. On the previous night, I had been going through Arthur Smith's suggested list of readings, and had demurred to his idea of returning to several large places. His reason for this, was exactly yours. I felt bound to send him your unconscious confirmation of his opinion, immediately. And he was extremely glad to receive it.

It is an unspeakable satisfaction to me, to have left such an impression in Edinburgh. I felt that night, that it was a very great success; but your account of it, even exceeds my hopes.

Arthur Smith told me on my return, that he had written to you in Edinburgh. I suppose you received his letter? I believe he had nothing important to say, in consequence of the Glasgow man,[†2] the brother of the Edinburgh Music Seller,[†3] having communicated with him direct.

The Queen wants to hear the Carol. I have represented my dutiful hope that she will form one of an Audience, as I consider an Audience necessary.

I have not a scrap of news. The usual papers come tumbling into the Office in the usual way, and John cleans the windows all day in a kind of melancholy stagnation of mind. Holdsworth[†4] smiles on me with a limp and sickly benevolence.

All the chance men who have been got in to help the Gardener at Gad's Hill ply the Pump, have run away, one after another (I am serious) and been heard of no more in that country. The last man became so desperate as to work hours, and fly without his money. The machinery must be altered, and I must establish a revolving poney.[†5]

All the rest of my world turns as it did,[†6] and that's not saying much for it.

With kind regard to Mrs. Wills and all about you,

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To THOMAS BEARD, 5 APRIL 1858

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Place | Edgeware Road | W.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Monday Fifth April 1858

My Dear Beard

The Hospital sending me four tickets, I send you one;[†1] thinking you may like to use it, either in person or by proxy.

It has become so impossible to comply with these reading Petitions, and the readings attract such very large audiences, that I have all but decided (between ourselves) to read on for my own profit. In that case, I shall read The Cricket, The Chimes, and The Haunted Man, at this same place, in May; and you will have, you may be sure, timely notice of being free of the Temple.[†2]

It was a wonderful go, in Edinburgh. Certainly the most intelligent audience (2000 strong) I have ever had to do with; and showing a capacity of being affected by the pathetic parts, such as I never saw before.

Ever Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Beard Esquire

To JOHN FORSTER, [9 APRIL 1858]

Extract in F, VIII, ii, 647. Date: 9 Apr 58, according to Forster.

They have let five hundred stalls for the Hospital night;[†3] and as people come every day for more, and it is out of the question to make more, they cannot be restrained at St. Martin's Hall from taking down names for other Readings.[†4]

To W. HOLMAN HUNT,[†1] 13 APRIL 1858

MS Mrs Elizabeth Burt.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Tuesday Night, Thirteenth April, 1858

My Dear Sir.

I am pained and shocked by the receipt of your letter,[†2] referring to a story called "Calmuck" lately published in Household Words,[†3] and which has been a very long time in type there, unused.

When you use the words, "the extremely objectionable nature" of that article, I am quite sure that you use them in reference to your own knowledge of some allusions in it, and not to mine. If I could have had any reason for deeming it objectionable, I need not say (I hope) that you would never have found it in print under my auspices.[†4]

I have too great an interest in, and too high a respect for, your calling and yourself, to be otherwise than anxious to understand your cause of complaint, and to remove it, if I can, in the frankest and fullest manner. If it should suit your convenience to call upon me here on Friday at half past twelve, I have not the least fear of our going wrong, because I have a perfect faith in our both equally desiring to do right.[†1]

My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To A. U. THISELTON,[†2] 13 APRIL 1858*

Text from copy, Minute Book, Artists' Benevolent Fund.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Tuesday Night. Thirteenth April 1858

Sir,

Although I have been compelled, by want of leisure, to decline a host of proposals, to preside at public dinners, of late, I cannot for a moment resist the claims of my brother Artists. I beg you to assure your Committee that they are most heartily welcome to my poor services, and that I place myself at their disposal with all possible cheerfulness and good will.[†3]

Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 14 APRIL 1858*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | 1 Stratton Street | Piccadily | W.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Wednesday Fourteenth April, 1858

My Dear Miss Coutts.

It was Committee Day to day at Shepherd's Bush. Mr. Dyer, Mr. Tennant,[†4] and I, attended.

We had a disagreeable circumstance to investigate, which was made known to me yesterday. Yesterday morning at between 4 and 5 (to make the matter very short), the Police Constable employed to watch the place was found in the parlor with Sarah Hyam, by Mary Lugg, whose suspicions had been excited by the early rising of Hyam. As soon as the thing was told to me yesterday, I sent to the Acting Inspector of the District, desiring him to attend at Urania Cottage to day, when we should have a very serious charge to investigate, against one of his men. He came, with the man implicated, and another officer. I examined into the case with great minuteness and care (Mr. Dyer and Mr. Tennant[†1] assisting), in the presence of the three men. Not a doubt was left on our minds as to its nature, and I formally required the Inspector, in writing, to report it to Sir Richard Mayne.[†2] The girl (who in other respects had conducted herself well in the Home), we discharged. She behaved quietly and respectfully — told no lies, and made no defence. A few household precautions which seemed desirable to us, we directed to be taken.

I don't think the management was to blame, or could help it. Mrs. Marchmont has been in great distress, and if you will rest satisfied, in so difficult a matter, with what we have done, I believe it to be impossible to do more.

I saw the girl in Vincent Square,[†3] in due course (you remember giving me the letter about her?), and directed the Matron to bring her for approval to day. We thought it a good case, and agreed to take it.

I have omitted to say that the neighbouring clergyman interested in Hyam's case, came, with his son. He was extremely sensible and kind, and seemed really impressed with the pains we bestowed upon it.

With love to Mrs. Brown | Ever Dear Miss Coutts

Yours faithfully and affecy.

CHARLES DICKENS

To THE ACTING INSPECTOR, HAMMERSMITH & WANDSWORTH POLICE OFFICE,[†4] [14 APRIL 1858]

Mention in To Miss Coutts, 14 Apr 58. Date: written same day.

To MRS HOGGE,[†5] 14 APRIL 1858†

MS Walter T. Spencer.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.

Wednesday Fourteenth April, 1858

My Dear Mrs Hogge.

My enforced disposals of myself have been so numerous and so uncertain since I had the happiness of seeing you,[†6] that I have been afraid to write to you. I DID[†7] "mean it", and have often thought of it; and it is you who commit the direst cruelty in doubting (as I clearly see you do) the faithful and devoted wretch who pens these lines.

Mrs Dickens very rarely dines out, and I had best not include her in my answer to your heart-breaking note. I myself am as free as I ever can be (being your slave)[†1] for Monday or Wednesday in next week, or for any day in the following week, except Thursday the 29th.

[†a]I grieve to hear that you have been ill, but I hope that the Spring — when it comes — will find you blooming with the rest of the flowers.[†a]

Very Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs Hogge.

To CHARLES ELLIS, 16 APRIL 1858

MS Chas Ellis & Co.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Friday Sixteenth April, 1858

Dear Mr. Ellis

I send you a cheque (crossed) for my account.[†2] Before I go out of town for the summer, I will look over my wine and see what I want. Having done so, I will write you a note and ask you to call on me.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To THOMAS BEARD, 17 APRIL 1858

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Place | Edgeware Road. W.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Saturday Morning Seventeenth April | 1858

My Dear Beard

I have begged Arthur Smith (who directs all the business) to send you 2 stalls for each of my readings,[†3] and I hope I shall never miss my old friend's face. If you will follow into my little room when I go out for the free five minutes, you will always find Sherry and Ice there.

Ever Faithfully
CD.

To WILKIE COLLINS, 17 APRIL 1858*

MS Morgan Library.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Saturday Morning Seventeenth April | 1858

My Dear Wilkie

I have begged Arthur Smith to send you 2 Stalls for each of my readings, and I hope you'll come to them. — You will find some Sherry and Iced-Water in my little room when I go there.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To CHARLES DANCE,[†1] 19 APRIL 1858*

MS Private.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Monday Evening | Nineteenth April, 1858

My Dear Dance

I am sorry to say in reply to your note just received, that I am to be relied upon for nothing on Friday. I put down my name for the Dinner,[†2] as a mark of respect to Mr. Kean — and I intend being at the dinner — but an older engagement will oblige me to leave directly after it. I shall be obliged to go, at a quarter before Nine.

Otherwise, wouldn't I have brought you up with a neat and appropriate! — [†3]

Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Dance Esquire.

To MRS FRANCES DICKINSON, 19 APRIL 1858

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Monday Nineteenth April, 1858

My Dear Mrs Dickinson

If I burn your letter, may I be D—— I mean B—u-r-n-t myself! It is much too earnest and cordial for any such fate. I shall put it by, until I get another as good; and then I must get you to write me a better.

I am charmed by your having been so pleased.[†1] If you don't come again, I shall have the Drapery dyed black.

O yes (as to your party) O[†2] yes! It is all very well to break your Manager's[†3] heart by not asking him, and then when you know he is going somewhere else, to shew him (as if he were Scrooge), the shadows of the things that might have been![†4] But he feels it, and encloses a tear

This is

His Tear.

Believe me always | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To W. HOLMAN HUNT, 20 APRIL 1858

MS Mrs Elizabeth Burt.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Tuesday Twentieth April, 1858

My Dear Sir

I feel it to be useless to express my astonishment that you and your friends can possibly conceive the Bishop of Jerusalem[†5] to be, by any remote contingency, between the centre of the earth and the centre of the Sun, in any danger of associating you as a responsible and individual gentleman, with the hero of this story.[†6] I believe with much confidence, however, that he would never have come to be the Bishop of Jerusalem, if he were in the least hazard of so committing himself.

My judgment is unchanged. It is altogether against the insertion of a contradiction. I have not a doubt that it would suggest to the public what they have not the faintest idea of, and that its effect would be exactly the reverse of your desire.

But as it is quite out of the question that the text of the article can be altered in future copies (for it is printed and stereotyped and done with), I must ask you to decide whether there shall be a contradiction or no. If yes, I will take care to make it emphatic and plain.

My Dear Sir | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. Holman Hunt Esquire

To W. H. WILLS, 21 APRIL 1858*

MS Berg Collection.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Wednesday Twenty First April 1858

My Dear Wills.

Will you write a line round to Arthur Smith, telling him about Brooks,[†1] and how to address him, and who he is.

I will come to the office to do the No.[†2] tomorrow at 2.

Faithfully Ever
CD.

To [OCTAVIAN BLEWITT],[†3] 24 APRIL 1858

MS Churchill College, Cambridge

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS,
Saturday Twenty Fourth April 1858

My Dear Sir

I want any annual Report of the Literary Fund, which has their stock-extract from the Quarterly, appended to it.[†4] Can you lend me one? And in case this

Messenger should miss you, can you send me such Report to Tavistock House, any time tomorrow?[†1]

To T. C. GRATTAN, 24 APRIL 1858

MS Huntington Library.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Saturday Twenty Fourth April, 1858

My Dear Grattan

An answer to the last pamphlet[†2] to which your note refers, is already advertized in the Athenaeum and Times, as about to appear within a few days.[†3]

The facts (unobscured by clouds of words), are perfectly clear. I desire nothing so much as that the Members of the Society — and above all, Literary men — should understand them. Nor will I ever leave off — being alive — until they do.

In the Days of our Play, The Frozen Deep, you were looked for here. But you were "there", instead. In the Ages that have elapsed since then, I have often wondered in what blessed foreign haven you were basking.[†4]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

T. C. Grattan Esquire.

To [?F. M. EVANS],[†5] 26 APRIL 1858

MS Fales Collection, New York University Library.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Monday Twenty Sixth April, 1858

My Dear [?Evans]

Collins has communicated to me (only tonight) a secret project of my good friend

Townshend's, concerning a pamphlet of championship of me,[†1] which I have no doubt originates in the best and most affectionate intentions, but which I certainly would not have published for a Thousand Pounds. In returning your answer concerning said projected pamphlet, to Collins, pray say that you would on no account publish, or print, anything concerning me, without my previous knowledge and concurrence.

Ever Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 28 APRIL 1858*

MS Morgan Library.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Wednesday Twenty Eighth April, 1858

My Dear Miss Coutts

I think it worth doing.[†2] If you wish me to do it — of course I will, with the greatest pleasure.[†3]

As I have heard no more from you about Friday, I conclude that I am not engaged to you.

I know you will be glad to hear that whereas they usually make some 250 stalls at St. Martin's Hall, Arthur Smith has made 560, and they are all gone. They will be in great demand to day and tomorrow, but all stall applicants will have to go over to another night.

Ever Faithfully
CD.

To W.M. THACKERAY, 28 APRIL 1858*

MS Carl H. Pforzheimer Library.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Wednesday Twenty Eighth April, 1858

My Dear Thackeray

Charles Dance made a Beast of himself in the matter of that Toasting. I wrote to tell him — two days before, when he sent me the list of toasts — that I could only dine, and that he must not look to me to say any thing whatever, as I should be gone.

Sunday the 9th. of May, with pleasure.[†4] I am uncertain whether the other man who "didn't answer" on Monday, came, and was a failure; or didn't answer and didn't come?[†1]

I met a stately lady[†2] yesterday, in whom I recognized the lineaments of that distinguished Novelist Who.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 28 APRIL 1858*

MS Morgan Library.

At Townshend's[†3]
Wednesday Evening | Twenty Eighth April, 1858

My Dear Miss Coutts

I am dining here, before going down to see Mr. Arthur Smith. Rely upon it — but of course you do — that I will manage to get the Bishop of Cape Town[†4] in, somehow. I hope to be able to contrive a Chair near you, — but I cannot speak with confidence, because I trust all these things to my trusty man of business, and I suppose him to have been beset all day. I will write to you again, after seeing him, between 8 and 9 tonight.

Ever Faithfully and affy

CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 28 APRIL 1858*

MS Morgan Library.

MR.
CHARLES DICKENS'S
READING[†5]

Wednesday Evening Twenty Eighth April | 1858.

My Dear Miss Coutts

Mr. Arthur Smith has achieved the thing, and sends the enclosed "Chair" by you, for the Bishop of Cape Town.

Ever Faithfully and affecy.

CD.

To EDMUND YATES, 28 APRIL 1858

MS Robert H. Taylor Collection, Princeton University.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Wednesday Twenty Eighth April, 1858

My Dear Yates

I send you an Orthopaedic shield, to defend your manly bosom from the pens of the enemy.[†1]

For a good many years, I have suffered a great deal from Charities, but never anything like what I suffer now. The amount of correspondence they inflict upon me, is really incredible. But this is nothing. Benevolent men get behind the piers of the gates, lying in wait for my going out; and when I peep shrinkingly from my study-windows, I see their pot-bellied shadows projected on the gravel. Benevolent bullies drive up in Hansom Cabs (with engraved portraits of their benevolent Institutions hanging over the aprons, like banners on their outward walls),[†2] and stay so long at the door, that their horses deposit beehives of excellent manure all over the front court. Benevolent Area-Sneaks[†3] get lost in the kitchens, and are found to impede the circulation of the knife-cleaning Machine. My man has been heard to say (at the Burton Arms)[†4] "that if it was a wicious place, well and good — that an't door-work; but that wen all the Christian wirtues is always a shoulderin and a helberin on you in the All, a tryin to git past you and cut upstairs into Master's room, wy no wages as you couldn't name, wouldn't make it up to you."

Persecuted Ever

CD.

Edmund Yates Esquire

To WILKIE COLLINS, 29 APRIL 1858

MS Morgan Library.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Thursday Twenty Ninth April, 1858

My Dear Wilkie

I send you a proof of what will begin, tomorrow, to be abundantly circulated, besides being printed at length in the Athenaeum of next Saturday.[†1] It is a facetious facer — which I have given to those solemn impostors, con amore.[†2]

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To W. HOLMAN HUNT, 30 APRIL 1858

MS Mrs Elizabeth Burt.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Friday Thirtieth April, 1858

My Dear Sir

With the sincerest desire to do what is right, and what is best calculated to remove any disagreeable association that anybody may have made between you and that preposterous story of Calmuck, I have considered and reconsidered the question of inserting an explanation in Household Words, to the effect that you have no more to do with it than I have.[†3] But I am quite sure and certain that such a proceeding (however carefully your name might be detached from it), would defeat its own object, and would instantly set all sorts and conditions of people speculating on "who the artist may be who is not to be connected with it". And thus the very association, however ridiculous and baseless, which we wish to avoid, would be got into numbers of heads which are innocent of it, as my own was, when you first wrote to me.[†4]

As I have already told you — I never liked the story, and it has been lying at the office, unused, a long time. I am sorry now, that I did not strike out of it the pretence that it is true.[†5] But that is so common a pretence in fiction, that it really did not attract my attention or make any impression on me. I assure you that I had no idea there was such a statement in the paper, until I looked for it expressly.

It seems such a superfluous proceeding to tell you, "I know it is not true", that I really hesitate to write what I should suppose all reasonable human creatures must be already convinced of. But I do it, nevertheless. Rest satisfied, I beg, that I accepted the story, with much doubt, as a very weak fiction — that it is a very weak fiction, and nothing else — that if I could have contemplated the possibility that anybody (not to say you, but anybody) could be absurdly and wrongfully associated with it in the least particular, nothing would have induced me to print it — and that I am heartily sorry I ever did print it, seeing that it is an arrow, with anything but a sharp point, shot vaguely over a house-top, and glancing off, in a manner wholly unaccountable to and unforeseen by me, against a brother-artist.[†1]

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

W. Holman Hunt Esquire

To EDMUND YATES, 30 APRIL 1858

MS Robert H. Taylor Collection, Princeton University.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Friday Thirtieth April, 1858

My Dear Yates

I have derived great gratification of heart from what I have read of yours to day,[†2] and I cordially thank you; — not alone because you have written it, but because I am sure you have earnestly felt it.

Ever Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

May

To THOMAS BEARD, 1 MAY 1858

MS Dickens House.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Saturday First May 1858

My Dear Beard

I was heartily sorry to learn (before I received your kind note last night), that that abominable foot of yours, wouldn't come to the Hall last Thursday.[†3] If it should keep away next Thursday, I should begin to think, from its beastly persistence in Unreason, that it must be Somebody else's foot, which you have laid [hold][†4] of by mistake.

They crammed 70 more people into the place, the other night, than were ever got into it before — though we were quite clear, on the Children's Hospital Night, that one more could by no means by crammed in. I think some people are a little afraid of the Chimes.[†1] To tell you the truth, I am — as yet — a little so myself, for I CAN[†2] NOT[†3] yet (and I have been at it all the morning) command sufficient composure at some of the more affecting parts, to project them with the necessary force, the requisite distance.[†4]

I must harden my heart, like Lady Macbeth.[†5]

Wills will write to you about coming down to Gad's Hill next Tuesday Week (Household Words Audit Day), and staying all night.[†6]

Ever Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Beard Esquire.

To JOHN B. MORGAN,[†7] 1 MAY 1858

Extract in Henry Bristow of Ringwood catalogue No. 291 (1987); MS (3rd person) 1 p.; addressed John B. Morgan; dated Tavistock House, Saturday, 1st May 1858.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Morgan, and begs to say that it has become quite impossible for him to read in aid of any Institution whatever.

To [?R. P.] TEBB,[†8] 1 MAY 1858*

MS Mr Alan G. Thomas.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Saturday First May, 1858

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his Compliments to Mr. Tebb, and regrets that he cannot have the honor of accepting the office of a Vice President of the Crosby Hall Cricket club.[†9] But his public engagements and positions are at present so numerous, that he has been obliged to resolve to make no additions to them, even though they should be merely nominal.

To W. S. TROOD,[†1] 5 MAY 1858

Text from N, III, 20.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Fifth May 1858

Mr. Charles Dickens begs Mr. Strood[†2] to be so good as to give directions that no rubbish or refuse from the Falstaff be thrown into the shrubbery of Gad's Hill Place. Mr. Dickens also hopes that Mr. Strood will advise his customers not to trespass on that ground in going from the Falstaff to the village.

He wishes very earnestly to live on good terms with his neighbours; and he hopes that they know it, and will not feel disinclined to respect his property. He is sure that Mr. Strood can have no desire not to do what is obliging and right, and he therefore addresses this note to Mr. Strood in good will and good humour.[†3]

To THE REV. C. T. [WEATHERLEY],[†4] 5 MAY 1858

Mention in Retz & Storm catalogue, c. May 1940; MS (3rd Person) 1 p.; dated London, 5 May 58.

Saying that he is unable to comply with his correspondent's wishes.

To THOMAS BEARD, 7 MAY 1858

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Place | Maida Hill | W.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Friday Evening Seventh May, 1858

My Dear Beard

Shall I come and see you? If you would like to behold the countenance of the Inimitable — say so by Post, and I'll come on Sunday.

Gad's Hill shall not yet be given up. It shall not be given up, by —— said my Uncle Toby.[†5]

Some of the people about me, were also doubtful of The Chimes. I was rather so myself, but, having written it, thoroughly resolved to read it, whether or no.[†6] As soon as I began to lay hold of it, I told Arthur Smith that I believed it would be a tremendous success — and I think there is no doubt that it topped the others by a great height last night. I have heard in all directions to day that the effect was amazingly strong.[†1]

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 9 MAY 1858

MS (copy in the hand of C. C. Osborne)[†2] British Library.

Sunday Ninth May, 1858

My Dear Miss Coutts,

You have been too near and dear a friend to me for many years, and I am bound to you by too many ties of grateful and affectionate regard, to admit of my any longer keeping silence to you on a sad domestic topic. I believe you are not quite unprepared for what I am going to say, and will, in the main, have anticipated it.

I believe my marriage has been for years and years as miserable a one as ever was made. I believe that no two people were ever created, with such an impossibility of interest, sympathy, confidence, sentiment, tender union of any kind between them, as there is between my wife and me. It is an immense misfortune to her — it is an immense misfortune to me — but Nature has put an insurmountable barrier between us, which never in this world can be thrown down.

You know me too well to suppose that I have the faintest thought of influencing you on either side. I merely mention a fact which may induce you to pity us both, when I tell you that she is the only person I have ever known with whom I could not get on somehow or other, and in communicating with whom I could not find some way to some kind of interest. You know that I have the many impulsive faults which often belong to my impulsive way of life and exercise of fancy; but I am very patient and considerate at heart, and would have beaten out a path to a better journey's end than we have come to, if I could.

We have been virtually separated for a long time.[†3] We must put a wider space between us now,[†4] than can be found in one house.

If the children loved her, or ever had loved her, this severance would have been a far easier thing than it is. But she has never attached one of them to herself, never played with them in their infancy, never attracted their confidence as they have grown older, never presented herself before them in the aspect of a mother.[†1] I have seen them fall off from her in a natural — not *un*natural — progress of estrangement, and at this moment I believe that Mary and Katey (whose dispositions are of the gentlest and most affectionate conceivable) harden into stone figures of girls when they can be got to go near her, and have their hearts shut up in her presence as if they closed by some horrid spring.

No one can understand this, but Georgina who has seen it grow from year to year,[†2] and who is the best, the most unselfish, and the most devoted of human Creatures. Her sister Mary,[†1] who died suddenly and who lived with us before her, understood it as well though in the first months of our marriage.[†2] It is her misery to live in some fatal atmosphere which slays every one to whom she should be dearest. It is my misery that no one can ever understand the truth in its full force, or know what a blighted and wasted life my married life has been.

Forster is trying what he can, to arrange matters with her mother. But I know that the mother herself could not live with her. I am perfectly sure that her younger sister and her brother could not live with her.[†3] An old servant of ours[†4] is the only hope I see, as she took care of her, like a poor child, for sixteen years. But she is married now, and I doubt her being afraid that the companionship would wear her to death. Macready used to get on better with her than anyone else,[†5] and sometimes I have a fancy that she may think of him and his sister. To suggest them to her would be to inspire her with an instant determination never to go near them.

In the mean time I have come for a time to the office, to leave her Mother free to do what she can at home, towards the getting of her away to some happier mode of existence if possible. They all know that I will do anything for her comfort, and spend anything upon her.

It is a relief to me to have written this to you. Don't think the worse of me; don't think the worse of her. I am firmly persuaded that it is not within the compass of her character and faculties, to be other than she is. If she had married another sort of man, she might however have done better. I think she has always felt herself at the disadvantage of groping blindly about me and never touching me, and so has fallen into the most miserable weaknesses and jealousies. Her mind has, at times, been certainly confused besides.[†6]

All this is for Mrs. Brown no less than for you. Put a kind construction on it, and hold me in the old place in your regard.

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Yours faithfully and affectionately

(signed) CHARLES DICKENS

To WILLIAM BOXALL,[†1] 10 MAY 1858*

MS Private.

Tavistock House, Monday Tenth May, 1858

My Dear Boxall.

I think that Monday or Tuesday in next week would best suit me, if convenient to you.[†2]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 10 MAY 1858

MS Dickens House.

Monday Tenth May, 1858[†3]

My Dearest Georgy.

Mitchell[†4] shall not go down tomorrow. Do you arrange with John to take with you, such plate as you and he may agree to be necessary.

He has brought me the wrong flesh-brush. Will you exchange it for mine — which is much harder.

Have you sent that letter to Forster? If not, send it by John to me.[†5]

Best love to the dear girls and to Plornish. | Ever affectionately
CD.

To FRANK STONE, 10 MAY 1858*

MS Benoliel Collection.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS,
Monday Night Tenth May 1858

My Dear Stone

I am very sorry to say that in the many, many, perplexities of thought that I have been involved in during the last few days, I utterly forgot my engagement to you. I know you will forgive me. I should have forgotten it at no other time than the present.

Ever affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

To FREDERIC OUVRY, [?10 MAY 1858]

Mention in Ouvry to CD, 12 May 58 (MS Messrs Farrer & Co.). Date: 10 May, from reference in that letter.

Proposing that Ouvry should seek an amendment of the Act of Parliament incorporating the Guild of Literature and Art to enable the Guild to accept a gift of land from Patrick Allan-Fraser[†1] of Arbroath, Forfarshire.[†2]

To ROBERT CHAMBERS,[†3] 11 MAY 1858

Mention in catalogue of Autograph Collection of Ferdinand Julius Dreer, Philadelphia, 1890.

To LADY EASTLAKE, 11 MAY 1858*

MS Private (destroyed in Prestwick air-crash, Dec 1954).

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Tuesday Eleventh May 1858

My Dear Lady Eastlake.

I send you a Report of a little speech of mine[†4] — in trust for Sir Charles, who asked me for it.

It would give me great pleasure if you could come and hear my "Chimes" on Thursday the 27th. I have an idea it might interest you. I have therefore begged Mr. Arthur Smith, my business-Director, to send you 2 stalls for that night, which I hope you will use.

With kind regard, | Believe me always | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Lady Eastlake.

To P. S. FRASER,[†1] 12 MAY 1858

MS National Library of Scotland.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Wednesday Twelfth May, 1858

My Dear Sir

A thousand thanks for the Glorious Whiskey. It arrived in safety. It is housed in a rare cellar, deep in the Kentish Chalk. I have called it Mary Morrison.[†2]

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

P. S. Fraser Esquire

To FRANK STONE, 12 MAY 1858*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Household Words | Twelfth May 1858 | Wednesday

My Dear Stone

Not having been at home[†3] for some days, I did not know that you had written to me there, at the time when I received your very kind note here, this afternoon. I shall be here to night from 8 to 1/2 past 9. Or tomorrow morning from 10 to 11.

Ever affectionately
CD.

To EDWARD CHAPMAN, 15 MAY 1858

Extract in Samuel T. Freeman & Co. catalogue, Nov 1924; dated Tavistock House, 15 May 58; addressed Edward Chapman.

Pray do not suppose that in speaking of Mr. Arthur Smith on the subject of your kind sale of tickets for my readings, I expressed the least irritation, or the least doubt of your readiness to assist me. Not giving Mitchell[†4] credit for the extraordinary power of lying that he seems to possess I asked Mr. Smith to see you, in the course of his transaction of the business of management to ask you if you really did find it inconvenient.

To B. HOMER DIXON,[†1] 15 MAY 1858*

MS Dickens House.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Saturday Evening Fifteenth May 1858

Dear Sir

Pray allow me to thank you for your obliging note, and its accompanying book.[†2] I am honored by your kind remembrance, and have always a true gratification in being kindly thought of by a traveller from your side of the Atlantic.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

B Homer Dixon Esquire

To CARL WERNER,[†3] 15 MAY 1858

MS Private.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Saturday Evening Fifteenth May, 1858

Dear Sir

I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your obliging communication, and to thank you for your courtesy. I hope to have the honor of visiting your atelier and thanking you in person, when I am next in town for a few days together.

Dear Sir | Allow me to remain | with much consideration
Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

Carl Werner Esquire.

To MRS YATES, 15 MAY 1858

MS Robert H. Taylor Collection, Princeton University.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Saturday Evening Fifteenth May 1858

My Dear Mrs Yates

Pray believe that I was sorry with all my heart to miss you last Thursday,[†4] and to learn the occasion of your absence.[†5] Also, that whenever you can come, your presence will give me a new interest in that evening. No one alive can have more delightful associations with the lightest sound of your voice than I have; and to give you a minute's interest and pleasure, in acknowledgement of the uncountable hours of happiness you gave me when you were a Mysterious Angel to me, would honestly gratify my heart.[†1]

Very faithfully | (and gratefully) | Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs Yates.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 19 MAY 1858

MS Dickens House.

Household Words Office | Nineteenth May 1858

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I think I know what you want me for.[†2] How I value your friendship, and how I love and honor you, you know in part, though you never can fully know. But nothing on earth — no, not even you — no consideration, human or Divine, can move me from the resolution I have taken.

And one other thing I must ask you to forgive me. If you have seen Mrs. Dickens in company with her wicked mother, I can not enter — no, not even with you — upon any question that was discussed in that woman's presence.[†3]

I will come round, almost as soon as your messenger; but I foresee that there is nothing left to us to say.

My Dear Miss Coutts | Ever affectionately | And Faithfully Yours

CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 19 MAY 1858*

MS Morgan Library.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS,
Wednesday Nineteenth May 1858

My Dear Miss Coutts.

It is very, very, kind of you to send the letters, and I return you a thousand thanks. I hope you will think it right to hint to Charley when you see him, that perhaps he might have let the Race[†4] pass him at such a time.

Ever Faithfully and affecy.
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To CAPTAIN E. E. MORGAN, [?20-22 MAY 1858]

Extract in "A Yankee Tar and his Friends", Scribner's Monthly, XIV, No. 6, Oct 77, p. 772. Date: 1858, according to article; a few days after the dinner on 18 May (see below).

I really cannot tell you how highly and heartily I esteem your friendship. What if I were to come to America and try to tell you myself? More unlikely things have happened since the world began. I have been making an extraordinary sensation in divers places by reading my Christmas books[†1] to immense audiences, and sometimes I have thought, dreaming with my eyes open, "Lord! I should not wonder if they would be very glad to hear me in America, after all!" I saw Leslie not long ago looking very well, but, on the whole, exceedingly like Don Quixote, with a grizzled beard. All your other artist friends are flourishing. I dined with a dozen of them last Tuesday,[†2] and they all smelt horribly of oil and varnish. . . .

We have as much public humbug here as usual, and I should very much like (in imitation of your Washington legislature) to dodge it with a stoneware spittoon, and dash its brains out.

To C. C. FELTON,[†3] 22 MAY 1858

MS Dickens House.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Saturday Twenty Second May, 1858

My Dear Felton.

You may be very sure — and are, I know — that no slight occasion would have prevented my seeing you, during your present short stay in London.[†4]

I have been much beset and distressed for some weeks past, by domestic matters. Although they are not finally arranged, they were last night (through Forster's kindness) as good as settled;[†5] the end being, that Mrs. Dickens and I have agreed to live apart henceforth.

When you come back to London, you will find Georgina, and my girls, and me, (I hope) quite happy and at home. Not one among us will ever forgive you, if you don't come to us then.

We shall be at my little place in Kent (on the top of Falstaff's Gad's Hill — only an hour and a half from London), and you cannot have a better few days' preparation for the Voyage home, than in that still and beautiful country.

Mind! I count upon your giving notice of your coming, either to Georgina or to me.

I have been shocked and surprised by Forster's telling me that you were one of the sufferers by that unfortunate poisonous accident which attracted much attention here.[†1] I heartily hope that you are taking the best conceivable remedy, in change and travel, and that you will go back to your class, a young man — and the old one too, for you will never beat him.[†2]

Don't be disturbed by the news I give you. It is all for the best. We have tried all other things, and they have all broken down under us.[†3]

Ever affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

Professor Felton.

To FRANK STONE, 22 MAY 1858*

MS Benoliel Collection.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Saturday Twenty Second May 1858

My Dear Stone

I am back here again — just come. Can you use the enclosed box for the Covent Garden Opera tonight.[†4]

Ever Affectionately

CD.

To WILKIE COLLINS, 25 MAY 1858

MS Morgan Library.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Tuesday Night, Twenty Fifth May 1858

My Dear Wilkie

A thousand thanks for your kind letter: I always feel your friendship very much, and prize it in proportion to the true affection I have for you.

Your letter comes to me only tonight. Can you come round to me in the morning (Wednesday) before 12. I can then tell you all in lieu of writing. It is rather a long story — over, I hope, now.

Ever affectionately

CD.[†5]

To ARTHUR SMITH, 25 MAY 1858

Text from Mr. & Mrs. CD, ed. Walter Dexter, 1935, p. 276.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Tuesday, May 25th, 1858.

My Dear Arthur,

You have not only my full permission to show this, but I beg you to show, to any one who wishes to do me right, or to any one who may have been misled into doing me wrong.[†1]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Arthur Smith, Esqre.

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 26 MAY 1858*

MS Messrs Farrer & Co. Address: Private: | Frederic Ouvry Esquire | 66 Lincolns Inn Fields.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Wednesday Evening | Twenty Sixth May 1858

My Dear Ouvry

I saw Forster this afternoon, and he told me what you had arranged. In which I fully concur.[†2]

It is right — as we agreed — that I should tell you that I received today, at first hand, from a very honorable and intelligent gentleman,[†3] information of Mrs. Hogarth's having repeated these smashing slanders to him in a concert Room, since our negotiations have been pending.[†4] I do not tell you this in any anger, but simply that you may know the stern necessity of being relentless with her.

Pray do me the kindness, expressly to detach Mrs. Dickens from these wrongdoings, now. I do not in the least suspect her of them, and I should wish her to know it. She has a great tenderness for me, and I sincerely believe would be glad to shew it. I would not therefore add to her pain by a hair's breadth. It would be a pleasure to her (I think) to know that I had begun to trust her so far; and I believe that it would do her lasting good if you could convey that assurance to her.[†1]

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Frederic Ouvry Esquire.

To MRS HOGGE, 28 MAY 1858

MS Walter T. Spencer. Address: Mrs Hogge | 16 Hyde Park Gate South | Kensington Gore | W.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Friday Twenty Eighth May, 1858

My Dear Mrs Hogge.

After the profoundest cogitation, I come reluctantly to the conclusion that I do not know that Orphan.[†2] If you were the lady in want of him, I should certainly offer myself.[†3] But as you are not, I will not hear of the situation.

It is wonderful to think how many charming little people there must be, to whom this proposal would be like a revelation from heaven. Why don't I know one, and come to Kensington, boy in hand, as if I had walked (I wish to God I had) out of a Fairy Tale! But no. I do not know that Orphan. He is crying somewhere, by himself, at this moment — I can't dry his eyes. He is being neglected by some Ogress of a nurse — I can't rescue him.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS[†4]

To W. C. MACREADY, 28 MAY 1858*

MS Morgan Library.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Friday Twenty Eighth May, 1858

My Dearest Macready

I am deeply sensible of your affection, and have been strongly moved by your letter.

It is perfectly clear to me that the change had become indispensable and unavoidable, and that we must all be the happier and better for it. I have not the faintest lingering doubt upon the subject.

If I were to write more, I could not help straying into some reference to what is past and gone.[†1] And I steadily desire to dismiss it.

With love to your dear sister and all the house,
Ever my Dearest Macready | Your attached and affectionate
CHARLES DICKENS

W. C. Macready Esquire.

To MADAME CELESTE, 29 MAY 1858

MS Cornell University Library.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Saturday Twenty Ninth May, 1858.

My Dear Madame Celeste

With the greatest pleasure. If you will have the kindness to send the book[†2] here, I will write in it immediately.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To W. P. FRITH, 29 MAY 1858

Text from N, III, 24.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Saturday Twenty-Ninth May 1858

My dear Frith,

Plain Charles Dickens by all means.[†3] I shrink with horror from the notion of Esquire. A thousand thanks for your note.

Ever faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To RICHARD NELSON LEE,[†1] 29 MAY 1858

MS Berg Collection.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Saturday Twenty Ninth May, 1858.

Dear Sir

An unusual addition to the general demands upon my time and attention, has prevented my looking over the Manuscript of your life, until within the last two or three days.

I cannot too highly extol the modesty of its tone, or a certain unobtrusive and becoming manliness which everywhere pervades it. It strongly corroborates all that I ever heard to your advantage, and presents you in a very natural and agreeable aspect.

But I am sorry to add that I do not think its interest is by any means of a character to awaken a response in the general public. It seems to me, to lie purely within the circle of the Theatrical profession, and not even to comprehend the whole of that. I greatly doubt, for this reason, whether any publisher would undertake the risk of it; I should think any publisher mistaken who did; and I am very much mistaken myself, it if would return its expences.[†2]

Fiction has done a good deal with wandering lives of all sorts, and with the showman's life among others. Fact has done much too, in the same directions. I fail to see, in your experiences, that variety and oddity of adventure which people attracted by the nature of the subject, would expect to find there. And as to all the Minor-Theatre management, benefit, and play-bill part of the book, I am quite sure that its interest does not pass beyond a mere handful[†3] of persons. I remember many instances in which the question has been tried, and I do not know of ONE[†4] in which my position has been disproved.

The life of any persevering, industrious, and honorable man, is a lesson. But it is a lesson to be acted — not written. I do not see in your biography sufficient reason for your writing it, except as a subject of just pride and interest to your own family, and perhaps to a portion of your own profession. It is in confounding either or both with the great body of the Public, that I think the root of the mistake of publishing it, would strike.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Nelson Lee Esquire

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 29 MAY 1858*

MS Messrs Farrer & Co.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Saturday Evening Twenty Ninth May 1858

My Dear Ouvry

I cannot possibly assent to Mr. Smith's[†1] terms.[†2] His proposal to hand you that paper "in exchange for the Deed when completed", has far too much the air of a bargain, and is not the way in which to do a simple act of justice that can be, at the best, but a most imperfect reparation of the great wrong and injury these two people have done.

I must have that paper at once.[†3] I must have it in the course of Monday, or not at all. This is my conclusion, and Forster strongly agrees.[†4]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Frederic Ouvry Esquire

To MISS MARY BOYLE, 29 MAY 1858*

MS Morgan Library.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Saturday Night Twenty Ninth May 1858

My Dear Mary

I myself answer your letter to Georgy, in order that I may have an opportunity of assuring you how deeply sensible I am of the affectionate remembrance in which you always hold me.

My only surprise in the matter of your note, is, that you have heard nothing worse!!! I have been the hero of such bewildering and astonishing Lies during this last week,[†5] that this merely Infernal one seems quite a favor.

It is the penalty I pay for my conspicuous position. It is a very heavy one; but it is what I owe to the knaves and the fools, and I must take their receipt for it.

You have seen something of the great misfortune of my life, and you know the truth. Mrs. Dickens and I have agreed to live apart, and we have arranged that Charley shall take care of her, and that Mary shall keep my house; and between me and the children there is in all things absolute accord and confidence; and Mrs. Dickens (really, generously indignant at the baseless scandals she hears, whatever her weakness may once have done circuitously, towards originating them)[†1] has hastened to declare in writing that there is no other cause for our separation than our having lived unhappily together for some time, and having agreed to live asunder. Lastly, the friend who represents her,[†2] writes for her that she "thankfully and gratefully accepts" the terms of our separation.[†3]

Nothing can be done that I know of, but to circulate the Truth. And if you will do that, so far as you can, you will gratify your own earnest and generous nature in serving the friend who loves you.

Ever truly and affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

To W. M. THACKERAY, [?22-29 MAY 1858]

Mention in Thackeray to James Wilson,[†4] ?May 58 (Letters and Private Papers of W. M. Thackeray, ed. Gordon N. Ray, IV, 83-4). Date: CD's reference to "Lies during this last week" in To Miss Boyle, 29 May, must refer to Wilson's letter to Thackeray; CD would have answered Thackeray at once.

Authorizing Thackeray to contradict a rumour[†5] on his own solemn word and his wife's authority.

To MRS GORE, 31 MAY 1858*

MS Berg Collection.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Monday Thirty First May 1858

My Dear Mrs. Gore.

Do not for an instant suppose that I could take your kind letter otherwise than cordially and gratefully; or that I could possibly reconcile it to my heart, to leave it unanswered.

I have heard such thronging multitudes of wonderful and inexplicable lies about myself during the last week, that it almost bewilders me to find you in possession of the truth.

— Except that you are not to suppose that the children are to be "divided". Charley takes care of his mother at my express request, and all the rest remain with me: my eldest daughter keeping my house. Charley undertakes his part of the arrangement as an act of duty, and on the express stipulation that there is to be nothing in the nature of a parting between him and us.[†1]

Believe me, I had already so strongly felt what you say as to long absences and so forth, that I had myself most strenuously proposed it and stood out upon it. That I did so, unsuccessfully, I really believe to be in the nature of the case itself, and not the fault of Mrs. Dickens.

Our separation is the natural end of a course of years. I have felt the force of our example, and have, for a long time urged it and sacrificed to it. But it would be a poor example to be driven mad myself, or to drive Mrs. Dickens mad; and one or both of the two results must have happened, if we had gone on living together.

There is no anger or ill-will between us. I believe, not the slightest. Our elder children are at least as sensible that the thing must be, as we are. Between them and myself, there is a confidence as absolute and perfect as if we were of one age. Mrs. Dickens's sister (who has devoted her whole youth to them, and brought them up from their cradles), and an attached woman-servant, always in Mrs. Dickens's confidence, who has also lived with us for sixteen years, both know perfectly well that they have long exerted themselves to prevent our going apart, but that it has become inevitable.

I do not doubt that we shall all be much the better for it. I only want to impress upon you that it is calmly and moderately done; that whatever doubt or passion there has ever been on either side, has already died out; that I am sure we only want to forgive and forget, and live at peace; that it was an unhappy day for both, when two such strongly contrasted people came together, but that we quietly accept all that, and do not blame the day, and only seek to make the best of it.

What I tell you, is quite at your disposal to tell again, when and where you will.

Ever My Dear Mrs. Gore | Your faithful

CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN LEECH, 31 MAY 1858

MS Benoliel Collection.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.

Monday Thirty First May 1858

My Dear Leech.

In making the domestic change which we all here know (I believe, equally) to have become unavoidable, and to be for the good of all, and which is made without anger or ill will, I expect, of course, the misconstruction of the knaves and fools. I should be but a poor writer, if I did not know the penalty I owe to them, and for which I must take their receipt.

But you have been my friend, and know my nature. And when you misrepresent me, however unconsciously — as when you tell Luard it is a point in the case, that Charley sides with his mother — you strike me in a tender place, and wound me deeply.

Between the children and me, there is absolute confidence and accord throughout. Charley's living with his mother to take care of her, is my idea — not his. I beg you to read the copy of a note from him which I send you on the other side,[†1] and to do me justice.

He wrote it soon after he had seen me at the office one morning; where I had asked him if he thought he could decide to live with his mother. That is what he refers to, when he says, "What you told me this morning."

Faithfully Yours

CD

To J. PALGRAVE SIMPSON,[†2] 31 MAY 1858*

MS Dickens House.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Monday Thirty First May 1858

My Dear Simpson.

To my horror, I discover this morning by chance, that I have omitted to return you the enclosed wonderful document.[†3] This sheet of paper will arrive red; — it was blue when I began to blush upon it.[†4]

Ever Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

J. Palgrave Simpson Esquire.

To HERBERT WATKINS, 31 MAY 1858*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: Herbert Watkins Esquire | Photographer | 179[†1] Regent Street | W.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Monday Thirty First May, 1858

Dear Sir

I wish, without any regard to cost, to get the best photograph of myself that can be produced, to send to a friend in Italy.[†2] As I wish it to be tolerably easy to carry about in some elegant little case, I presume it should be a head merely.[†3]

If you will have the kindness to undertake this little commission, I shall have perfect confidence in the result.

May I ask you to be so good as to favor me with an appointment, either for Wednesday Afternoon after 2, or for any time next Saturday or the following Monday, after 10 in the morning.

Dear Sir | Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

Herbert Watkins Esquire

To EDMUND YATES, 31 MAY 1858

MS Robert H. Taylor Collection, Princeton University.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Monday Evening Thirty First May, 1858

My Dear Edmund

You will readily believe that I shall never make an ungenerous use of the paper of which I send you a copy on the other side,[†4] though I believe that nothing will ever reconcile me to the two who have signed it. But, as I know Mrs Yates's ears to have been abused, I think it simply just that she should see it. If you think so too (but not otherwise), shew it to her with my kind regard.

Ever Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

Edmund Yates Esquire.

June

To JOHN HOLLINGSHEAD, 2 JUNE 1858

Extract in James Cummins catalogue No. 32 (1991), MS 1 p.; dated Tavistock House, London, 2 June 58; addressed John Hollingshead.

I want to speak to you, if you will give me the opportunity, on two little matters of business which I hope may prove both agreeable and useful to you.[†1] Could you call on me tomorrow morning? I shall certainly be at home here from 10 to 11.

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 2 JUNE 1858*

MS Huntington Library.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Wednesday Second June 1858

My Dear Ouvry

I have arranged to see Forster in Whitehall Place,[†2] this afternoon at 4. It is perfectly clear to me that his American idea[†3] is altogether untenable. Surely on your knowledge of human nature (to say nothing of the peculiarity of the American character, though that is highly important to consider too), you cannot think it feasible that I should write to any distinguished man in America, asking him to do for me, what I have not done for myself here! It is absurd. And it is just because no public step can possibly be taken for my good, anywhere, until I have taken one here, that I feel I must move — somehow.[†4]

Faithfully Always
CD.

Frederic Ouvry Esquire

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 3 JUNE 1858*

MS Huntington Library.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Thursday Third June 1858

My Dear Ouvry

Forster writes me this morning, that our meeting at Whitehall Place is to be at 2 — not 4 — as he had forgotten an engagement.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Frederic Ouvry Esquire

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 4 JUNE 1858*

MS Morgan Library.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Friday Fourth June 1858.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

Rather a ridiculous thing has occurred, in reference to the enclosed letter of introduction.[†1] The lady — distinguished, in her way — has three times sent it to you, and three times had it returned. At last, in terror, affliction, and despair, she has brought it here.[†2]

I sincerely hope Mrs. Brown is better. I send her my love, and hope to be able to come and enquire for her tomorrow.

Ever affecy. and faithfully
CD.

To MRS CHARLES DICKENS, 4 JUNE 1858

MS British Library.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Friday Fourth June 1858

Dear Catherine.

I will not write a word as to any causes that have made it necessary for me to publish the enclosed in Household Words.[†3] Whoever there may be among the living, whom I will never forgive alive or dead, I earnestly hope that all unkindness is over between you and me.[†4]

But as you are referred to in the article, I think you ought to see it. You have only to say to Wills (who kindly brings it to you),[†1] that you do not object to the allusion.[†2]

CHARLES DICKENS

To RICHARD NELSON LEE, 4 JUNE 1858

MS University of Texas.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Friday Fourth June 1858.

Dear Sir

In case I should not be at home when you call for your Manuscript,[†3] I write these few words to be left out with it.

Pray do not suppose that I arrogate any thing like infallibility in behalf of my opinion. It is merely a sincere one. It may be wrong.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Nelson Lee Esquire

To W. C. MACREADY, 7 JUNE 1858*

MS Morgan Library.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Monday Morning Seventh June 1858

My Dearest Macready.

You will see that some printed words of mine were laid on the breakfast-table this morning in the Times,[†4] along with the affectionate words of your kindest of notes.

The question was not I myself; but others. Foremost among them — of all people in the world — Georgina! Mrs. Dickens's weakness, and her mother's and her youngest sister's wickedness, drifted to that, without seeing what they would strike against — though I warned them in the strongest manner.[†5]

Forster advised with Delane for an hour and a half on Saturday. And Delane on the whole decided in favor of the publication.[†1] This turned the balance, — as we had settled that it should, either way.[†2]

In great haste (for I am going to Gad's Hill with Mary, on household matters), and with love to all,

Ever affectionately

CD.

To F. M. EVANS, 8 JUNE 1858

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Tuesday Morning Eighth June 1858

My Dear Evans.

Since you forwarded to me the enclosed letter from Mr Joyce,[†3] I have investigated its subject[†4] thoroughly — have recurred to it at intervals, again and again — and have taken time and pains to arrive at the truth.

My information in the first instance was positive, direct and plain. It was given me, with a full knowledge that I should consider it necessary to act upon it.

But I am bound to say that it does not retain its direct and positive character, on being examined and re-examined. And setting (as I feel bound to do), Mr Joyce's direct denial against it, and giving that denial the full weight that it is incumbent on me to attach to the word of a man whose truthfulness I have no right or reason to doubt, I must not hesitate to acquit Mr Joyce of the offence I imputed to him. I therefore do so, freely, and I must beg to express my regret to him, through you, for having, most unintentionally and innocently, done him wrong.

Faithfully Yours Ever
CHARLES DICKENS

F. M. Evans Esquire.

To MR AND MRS G. B. GREGORY,[†1] 8 JUNE 1858*

MS (in Mrs CD's hand)[†2] Thomas Coram Foundation for Children.

Tavistock House | June 8th. | 58.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Dickens regret extremely that, as they will be out of town on Sunday the 13th. next, they cannot have the pleasure of accepting Mr. and Mrs. Gregory's kind invitation to Luncheon on that morning.

To W. BLANCHARD JERROLD, [8 JUNE 1858]

Mention in To Knight, 11 June. Date: CD would have answered Jerrold's letter to him of 7 June at once.

To EDMUND YATES, 8 JUNE 1858

MS Robert H. Taylor Collection, Princeton University.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Tuesday Eighth June 1858

My Dear Edmund

Of course I can have nothing to say to this,[†3] but that I deeply feel it. If you could know how much I have felt within this last month, and what a sense of Wrong has been upon me, and what a strain and struggle I have lived under, you would see that my heart is so jagged and rent and out of shape, that it does not this day leave me hand enough to shape these words.[†4]

Ever Faithfully
CD.

To [?FREDERIC OUVRY],[†5] [?9 JUNE 1858]

Mention in MS Farrer & Co. Papers. Date: probably about a week before 16 June, when John Burrell stated that he had settled the draft of CD's Will.

Asking Farrer, Ouvry to revise and condense the draft Will[†6] they had drawn up for him.

To ROBERT BROUGH,[†1] 10 JUNE 1858*

MS Mitchell Library, Sydney.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Thursday Tenth June 1858.

My Dear Sir

I assure you I have been deeply affected by your letter. Few things could have been more welcome to me, and I thank you for it heartily.

As to the policy of my publishing the poem at present, after having spoken for myself, I have a great doubt. With your leave I will think of it. But in any case I will retain it for its own sake, with great pleasure, and will gladly avail myself of it as a literary composition of unusual merit, when the immediate occasion of it shall be less apparent.[†2]

Again I thank you, out of the depths of my heart.

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Robert B Brough Esquire

To LEIGH HUNT, 11 JUNE 1858

MS Iowa University Library.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Friday Eleventh June 1858.

My Dear Hunt.

Your letter has moved me very much. I heartily thank you for it. It is worth suffering something, to be so remembered.

God bless you.

Ever affectionately Yours

CD.

To CHARLES KNIGHT, 11 JUNE 1858

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, July 1983; MS 1 p.; dated Tavistock House, 11 June 58; addressed Charles Knight.

He is touched by Knight's letter. On the anniversary of Jerrold's death he had an excellent letter from his eldest son. I immediately replied to it, and gave him my hand across his father's grave.

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 11 JUNE 1858

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, Feb 1973; MS (3rd person) 1/2 p.; dated Tavistock House, 11 June 58.

Regretting that his absence from town[†1] on 26 June will prevent him from having the honour of dining with Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton.[†2]

To J. E. McINTYRE,[†3] 11 JUNE 1858

Mention in N, III, 27.

To T. J. THOMPSON, 11 JUNE 1858

MS Mrs Sowerby.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Friday Eleventh June 1858

My Dear Thompson

I cannot leave your letter unanswered. For I know it comes out of your heart, as I know it has gone straight to mine.

Upon my soul I don't know — and I never have known — what has been amiss between us![†4] But I shall be heartily glad to be on the old cordial terms, if you and Christiana[†5] will give us the opportunity.[†6]

On the first of August I am going away on a long series of Readings. But we shall be at Gad's Hill (I have a house there, two miles and a half this side of Rochester) all through July; and if you would both come and see us for a day or two, you would find that a certain sugar-basin[†7] has never been off the table.

I don't know where to address you, so I sent this to Mitton to direct and post.

It has grieved me to hear of your domestic distress.[†1] In the hope that it is mended or has passed, and that our inexplicability has passed too, I am ever

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

T. J. Thompson Esquire.

To [?DANIEL MACLISE],[†2] [?11 JUNE 1858]

MS (fragment) Berg Collection. Date: 11 June, the day after the reading.

We had an amazing scene of weeping and cheering, at St. Martin's Hall, last night. I read the Life and Death of Little Dombey; and certainly I never saw a crowd so resolved into one creature before, or so stirred by any thing.[†3]

I tell you this, my dear fellow, because I know you will read it with interest. Mary (now my housekeeper) Katie, and Georgina, send their kindest and best love. I cordially embrace you. You may be sure that I shall always deserve your steady confidence, and always be your affectionate and attached friend.

CHARLES DICKENS

To THE SECRETARY OF THE PLAYGROUND SOCIETY,[†4] [?11 JUNE 1858]

Mention in To Reed, 12 June 58. Date: probably written the day before that letter.

Returning the shorthand transcription of his speech at the Society's dinner on 1 June.[†5]

To HENRY AUSTIN, 12 JUNE 1858*

MS Morgan Library.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Saturday Twelfth June 1858

My Dear Henry

All right. We don't go down[†6] till Friday.

It certainly was a prodigious success. It frightened Arthur Smith. The people cried so, going out, that he thought "it wouldn't do" to put it up again![†1]

Love to Lætitia. | Ever Affectionately

CD.

To G. L. CHESTERTON,[†2] 12 JUNE 1858*

MS Somerville College, Oxford.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Saturday Twelfth June 1858.

My Dear Chesterton.

An unusual combination of occupations, has prevented my writing you an earlier acknowledgement of the receipt of Miss Edwards's[†3] book.[†4]

Pray thank that lady in my name, and tell her that Hand and Glove and I are presently going down together into Kent, there to become closely acquainted under the shadow of a great Oak Tree.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

G. L. Chesterton Esquire.

To C. W. CROCKER,[†5] 12 JUNE 1858*

MS Private.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Saturday Twelfth June 1858

Sir.

Allow me to assure you that I have read the article[†6] you have had the kindness to send me, with very great pleasure; and that I have deeply felt its earnestness and sincerity of purpose.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

C. W. Crocker Esquire

To THOMAS A. REED,[†1] 12 JUNE 1858

Facsimile in Fac-Simile Reporting Notes, I, II (Jan 88).

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Saturday Twelfth June 1858.

Sir.

Many occupations have combined to prevent my looking over your notes of my observations at the dinner of the Playground Society[†2] until to day. I have now returned them to the Secretary, with an expression of my high satisfaction with their great and rare accuracy.[†3] Allow me to convey the same assurance to yourself.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas A Reed Esquire

To DAVID ROBERTS, 12 JUNE 1858*

MS Dr L. Warnock. Address: David Roberts Esquire R.A. | 7 Fitzroy Street | Fitzroy Square | W.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Saturday Twelfth June 1858

My Dear David Roberts.

I cordially thank you for your friendly and loving words. I did not need them, to assure me of your worth — for I have known that, a long long time. But they are most heartily welcome to me, and they touch me home.

Believe me, I shall never regard our friendship as a common one, and that I shall ever be while I live,

Yours affectionately and truly
CHARLES DICKENS

David Roberts Esquire

To A. U. THISELTON, 12 JUNE 1858

Text from copy in Minute Book, Artists' Benevolent Fund.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Saturday Twelfth June 1858

Sir,

I beg to acknowledge the receipt of the flattering resolution of which the Committee of the Artists' Benevolent Fund have made me the Subject, and to assure those gentlemen, that I am heartily and unaffectedly glad to have rendered them the least Service.[†1]

Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

To THE REV. EDWARD TAGART, 14 JUNE 1858

MS Dickens House.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Monday Fourteenth June 1858

My Dear Mr. Tagart.

I have had the greatest pleasure in the receipt of your kind and affectionate note. The only drawback is, that I was at home when you brought it, and should have been delighted to have seen you.

Though I have unquestionably suffered deeply from being lied about with a most wonderful recklessness, I am not so weak or so wrong-headed as to be in the least changed by it. I know the world to have just as much good in it as it had before; and no one has better reason to thank God for the friendship it contains, than I have.

So I hope to regain my composure in a steady manner, and to live to be good and true to any innocent people who have been traduced along with me. For the rest, I am already thoroughly sure that the change which has been made at home, is a beneficial one for us all.

With kindest regard from all here to yourself, Mrs. Tagart, and all your house,

Believe me ever | Affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Rev. Edward Tagart.

To THOMAS MITTON, 15 JUNE 1858

MS Huntington Library.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Tuesday Fifteenth June 1858

My Dear Mitton

I cannot answer for my being free, next Saturday. I have so much to attend to just now, and am so liable to be troubled by some untoward thing or other, that I am afraid to make so early an engagement with you.

But we can still avoid the Fruit-time.[†2] I shall be often back, from Saturday to Monday, in August and September, and we will try then.

Faithfully Ever
CD.

To EDMUND YATES, 15 JUNE 1858

MS Robert H. Taylor Collection, Princeton University.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Tuesday Fifteenth June 1858

My Dear Yates

Come! — We dine at Dilkes,[†1] but don't go out until past 6. I needn't tell you that you may in all things count upon

Yours Ever
CD[†2]

To THE MARQUIS OF LANSDOWNE, 15 JUNE 1858*

MS The Bowood Collection.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Tuesday Evening Fifteenth June 1858.

My Dear Lord.

I take the liberty of returning an informal answer to your kind card, in order that I may express my regret that I came home just as you were driving away, and so lost the great pleasure and gratification I should have felt in seeing you.

Unfortunately I am going into Kent on Friday morning (I live on the top of Falstaff's Gad's Hill when I am there), for a little country peace, of which I stand much in need. Unfortunately, I have given my daughters free permission to dispose of me in the mean time. Unfortunately, they have availed themselves of this concession for tomorrow and thus I come to the crowning misfortune that I cannot have the honor of dining with you.

Allow me to assure you of my grateful respect and esteem, and of my ever being
My Dear Lord | Most Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The | Marquess of Lansdowne.

To T. J. THOMPSON, 17 JUNE 1858

Mention in list of letters from CD to Thompson made by his son-in-law Wilfrid Meynell; MS 1 p.; dated Tavistock House, 17 June 58.

To JAMES T. FIELDS,[†1] 19 JUNE 1858

MS Houghton Library, Harvard.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Nineteenth June 1858.[†2]

My Dear Sir

I write to you from my little Kentish Country-house, on the very spot where Falstaff ran away.

I cannot tell you how very much obliged to you I feel for your kind suggestion,[†3] and for the perfectly frank and unaffected manner in which it is conveyed to me.

It touches, I will admit to you frankly, a chord that has several times sounded in my breast, since I began my Readings. I should very much like to read in America. But the idea is a mere Dream as yet. Several strong reasons would make the journey difficult to me, and — even were they overcome — I would never make it, unless I had great general reason to believe that the American people really wanted to hear me.[†4]

Through the whole of this Autumn I shall be reading in various parts of England, Ireland, and Scotland.[†5] I mention this, in reference to the closing paragraph of your esteemed favor.

Allow me once again to thank you most heartily, and to remain
Gratefully | And Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To G. M. TOWLE,[†1] 19 JUNE 1858*

MS Yale University Library. Address: George Makepeace Towle Esquire | Yale College | New Haven | Conn. | U.S. of America.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Nineteenth June 1858.

Dear Sir

I am very happy to send you the autograph which you desire to add to your collection.

Allow me to thank you for the pleasant and obliging terms in which your letter is couched.
I am Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

George Makepeace Towle Esquire

To HENRY AUSTIN, [19-20 JUNE 1858]

Mention in next. Date: written same day or day before that letter.

To HENRY AUSTIN, 20 JUNE 1858*

MS Morgan Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Twentieth June 1858

My Dear Henry

You will receive — probably with this — a former note of mine, posted to you from Rochester today. Since that letter was posted, the Pump has broken down again — the same rod. And the Rochester man says "he'd rather have nothink to do with that 'ere infernal ma-sheen."

Pray help me! Pray, pray, save me from bankruptcy and Despair!!

Affecy Ever
CD.

To HENRY BICKNELL, 24 JUNE 1858*

MS Dickens Fellowship, Boston, Mass.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Thursday Twenty Fourth June 1858.

My Dear Bicknell.

I am exceedingly unwilling to say No to the proposal with which the Directors of the Crystal Palace Company honor me;[†1] — and yet I fear I must. The truth is, that I abstain, on principle, from associating myself in name alone with any project; I know I have not leisure to bestow on any new occupation at present; and I feel it right, not only towards myself, but also towards the projectors of this scheme, to give these plain reasons for declining, though very unwillingly.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Henry Bicknell Esquire

To DR F. H. RAMSBOTHAM, 24 JUNE 1858

Summary from Sotheby's catalogue Mar 1981; MS (copy in unknown hand) 1 p.; addressed Dr Ramsbotham; dated Tavistock House, 24 June 58.

Saying he cannot accept invitation as he is in town only for a day and a half to read,[†2] and has friends staying in Kent, so must return.

To W. M. THACKERAY, [?24-27 JUNE 1858]*

MS (fragment) Yale University Library. Date: near the date of the Special meeting of the Garrick Club Committee on 26 June; handwriting supports.

of any other person, in it or out of it?[†3]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. M. Thackeray Esquire

To WILLIAM MOY THOMAS, 28 JUNE 1858

MS Walter T. Spencer.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS,
Monday Twenty Eighth June 1858

My Dear Sir

I shall be at Gad's Hill again tomorrow evening, but not in time to communicate with you before it will be necessary for you to send to Edinburgh. I will write to you after reading your article.[†4]

I am sure it will be manly and right, and I have not the least uneasiness about it; my confidence being — believe me — Thorough.[†1]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

William Moy Thomas Esquire

To G. A. SALA, [?29-30 JUNE 1858]*

MS (fragment)[†2] British Library. Date: "1858" pencilled at top of page; June likely, as a month before publication of A Journey Due North as a separate book, and probably written from Gad's Hill.[†3] glad to see it there. If no such reason should arise I am content to let my wound heal quietly.

The "Journey Due North" is henceforth at your own disposal. I hereby declare you to be the owner of the copyright of that work, collected and republished as a separate book;[†4] and I hope it may be a pleasant and profitable possession.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

George A Sala Esquire

To FRANCIS WAUGH,[†1] 30 JUNE 1858*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: Master Francis G. Waugh | 6 Mecklenburgh Street | London | W.C.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Thirtieth June 1858.

My Dear Young friend

I am quite ashamed to find that your letter was written to me so long ago as on the eighteenth of this month. For I am (as you have been truly told) very fond of children, and I should be pained by your supposing that I could neglect you.

The truth is, I have been very busy. Otherwise I should have sent you this present autograph, on the very next day after I received your letter. "Better late than Never", however, and here it is.

I don't write as plainly as you do. But printers can read anything, and they have made me lazy about the shapes of my letters, and the clearness of my loops, and the roundness of my O's (there's a round one though), and all that. But I am not lazy in anything else, so I hope to retain your good opinion on the whole.

Affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Perhaps you'll wonder why I make that flourish. I don't know. I have not the least idea.
Master Francis G Waugh

July

To CHARLES KEAN, [1 JULY 1858]

Extract in N, III, 28 (from catalogue source); MS 1 p.; dated Tavistock House, 1 July 58.

I have received your letter on my arrival in town this morning, and I shall have great pleasure in meeting you at the Athenaeum at half past one to-morrow, if that time will suit your convenience.[†2]

To HENRY BRADBURY,[†1] 3 JULY 1858*

MS Professor K. J. Fielding.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Third July, 1858

My Dear Sir

I send you enclosed, a List of "Reprinted Pieces". They are all in Household Words, and I have appended to each, the No. of the Vol. in which each is to be found. I wish them to be printed in the Library Edition, in the order in which I send them.[†2] If there be too many, I will strike some out. If there be not enough, I will add some more. It will be best to let me have the Proof Sheets of this part of the Volume, all together, so that we may know exactly what we are about as to quantity.

Faithfully Yours

CD.

Henry Bradbury Esquire

To MISS HARNESS,[†3] [?5 JULY 1858]

Mention in next. Date: probably written the same day.

To HENRY CHORLEY,[†4] 5 JULY 1858

Text from N, III, 28.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Monday Fifth July 1858

Dear Chorley,

The enclosed is from Miss Harness, asking you to dine there with me.

I have replied for myself, that I have left off dining out, until my reading Tour[†5] shall be over. I have added for you, that I think you are engaged out of town, but that you will answer for yourself. They are very agreeable and excellent people, you know.

Ever affectionately
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To THOMAS BEARD, 6 JULY 1858

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Place | Edgeware Road | W.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Evening Sixth July 1858

My Dear Beard

I am anxious that you should come (if you can and will), and have a little country idleness here, this month. I say this month, because on the 2nd. of August I go away on a long Reading Tour, which, with occasional Saturday rushes to London, will hold me engaged until November. Now, see how I stand. On Wednesday and Thursday the 14th. and 15th. I read.[†1] On Friday the 16th. I return here. Can't you come too? The Forsters may be with us for a day or two, but you know we are elastic in our accommodations, and more than elastic in our welcome to you. Can you manage to come then, and stay until I roam away into the wide world of Readings?

Write me a word in answer here, or see me in my room at St. Martin's Hall between the parts next Thursday night.[†2] There is always Sherry and Ice for you, and you never come to take it.

Ever Affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Beard Esquire

To EDMUND YATES, 6 JULY 1858

MS Robert H. Taylor Collection, Princeton University.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Sixth July, 1858

My Dear Edmund

I have been thinking about the General Meeting.[†3] My considerations and reconsiderations thereupon, induce me to recommend you not to attend it in person.

Firstly, I think it pretty certain that Thackeray will stay away.[†4] If he should do so, it would be regarded as an act of delicacy in him; and your doing the reverse, would be regarded as an act of *in*delicacy in you.

Secondly, though he should come; still, your staying away, would shew well by the side of his presence.

Thirdly, it is very difficult indeed for anyone, even though practised in public meetings and appearances, to keep quiet at such a discussion: the said "anyone" being a principal therein.

Fourthly, you could do nothing, if you were there, but deny that you ever intended to abide by the Committee's decision. That, I will say for you, if necessary.

In case you should be staggered by this advice of mine, ask one or two men of experience and good judgement, whom you can trust, what they say. I am pretty sure that on careful consideration they will agree with me.[†1]

I suppose the Meeting is not to take place so soon as next Saturday, seeing that I have not yet received any Circular.[†2]

Ever Faithfully

CHARLES DICKENS

Edmund Yates Esquire

To W. W. F. DE CERJAT, 7 JULY 1858

MS Yale University Library. Address: Affranchie | A Monsieur | William. W. F. De Cerjat | Campagne Elysée | Lausanne | La Suisse.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Seventh July, 1858.

My Dear Cerjat.

I should vainly try to tell you — so I won't try — how affected I have been by your warm-hearted letter, or how thoroughly well convinced I always am of the truth and earnestness of your friendship. I thank you, my dear fellow, with my whole soul. I fervently return that friendship, and I highly cherish it.

†a Ah! If Prudence only knew how far out she was when she plucked you by the sleeve, she would marry Generous Impulse without delay and have a charming family. What good the children of that match would do on earth!

Dear Cerjat, I know very well that a man who has won a very conspicuous position, has incurred in the winning of it, a heavy debt to the Knaves and Fools, which he must be content to pay, over and over again, all through his life. Further, I know equally well that I can never hope that any one out of my house can ever comprehend my domestic story.†1 I will not complain. I have been heavily wounded, but I have covered the wound up, and left it to heal.†2 Some of my children or some of my friends will do me right if I ever need it in the time to come. And I hope that my Books will speak for themselves and me, when I and my faults and virtues, my fortunes and misfortunes, are all forgotten.†a

You want to know all about me? I am still reading in London every Thursday, and the Audiences are very great, and the success immense. On the 2nd. day of August I am going away, on a tour of some four months, in England, Ireland, and Scotland. I shall read, during that time, not fewer than four or five times a week.†3 It will be sharp work; but probably a certain musical chinking will come of it, which will mitigate the hardship.

At this present moment I am on my little Kentish freehold (not in top boots, and not particularly prejudiced that I know of), looking on as pretty an English view out of my study window, as you would find in a long day's English ride. My little place is a grave red brick house (Time of George the First, I suppose)†4 which I have added to, and stuck bits upon, in all manner of ways: so that it is as pleasantly irregular, and as violently opposed to all architectural ideas, as the most hopeful man could possibly desire. It is on the summit of Gad's Hill. The Robbery was committed before the door, on the men with the Treasure, and Falstaff ran away from the identical spot of ground now covered by the room in which I write. A little rustic alehouse, called The Sir John Falstaff, is over the way — has been over the way, ever since, in honor of the event. Cobham Woods and Park are behind the house; the distant Thames in front; the Medway, with Rochester and its old Castle and Cathedral, on one side. The whole stupendous property is on the old Dover Road: so, when you come, come by the North Kent Railway (not the South Eastern) from Canterbury to Strood or Higham, and I'll drive over to fetch you.

The blessed woods and fields have done me a world of good, and I am quite myself again. The children are all as happy as children can be; †a and the girls are happier than they ever were.†a My eldest daughter, Mary, keeps house — with a state and gravity becoming that high position. Wherein she is assisted by her sister Katie, and by her Aunt Georgina, who is, and always has been, like another sister. Two big dogs — a bloodhound, and a St. Bernard, direct from a convent of that name†1 where I think you once were — are their principal attendants in the green lanes. These latter, instantly untie the neck-kerchiefs of all Tramps and Prowlers who approach the Presence,†2 so they wander about with any escort, and drive big horses in basket phaetons through murderous bye-ways, and never come to grief. They are very curious about your daughters, and send all kinds of loves to them and to Mrs. Cerjat. In which I heartily join.

You will have read in the papers that the Thames at London is most horrible. I have to cross Waterloo or London Bridge to get to the Railroad when I come down there, and I can certify that the offensive smells, even in that short whiff, have been of a most head-and-stomach distracting nature. Nobody knows what is to be done; at least, everybody knows a plan, and everybody else knows it won't do; in the meantime cart-loads of chloride of Lime are shot into the filthy stream, and do something — I hope.†3 You will know before you get this, that the American Telegraph Wire has parted again; at which most men are sorry, but very few surprised.†4 This is all the news, except that there is an Italian Opera at Drury Lane†5 — price eighteen pence to the Pit — where Viardot, by far the greatest artist of them all, sings, and which is full, when the dear Operas can't let a box;†6 and except that the weather has been excessively hot, but is now quite cool. On the top of this hill, it has been even cold — actually cold — at night, for more than a week past.

I am going over to Rochester to post this letter, and must write another to Townshend before I go. My dear Cerjat I have written lightly enough, because I want you to know that I am becoming cheerful and hearty. †a I have been sadly put out, and sorely unlike myself; but it is past, I hope, and a brighter †b sky is shining.†a God bless you. I love you, and I know that you love me. Ever your attached and affectionate CD†b

To THE REV. CHAUNCY HARE TOWNSHEND, [?7 JULY 1858]

Mention in last. Date: probably written the same day.

To W. H. RUSSELL, 7 JULY 1858†

MS Morgan Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Evening, Seventh July, 1858.

My Dear Russell.

I cannot let another Mail go from Marseilles,[†1] without sending you my hearty and cordial word of thanks, for your great kindness about my boy, and without saying to you (which is most superfluous) with what unspeakable pleasure I shall see you at home again.[†2] I write from the top of that hill where I did hope to have seen you long ago, and where I have a prophetic assurance and fore-knowledge that I shall see you and Mrs. Russell many a time. Divers wonderful drinks are in the capital cellar in the chalk below, which I reserve for these occasions. And then I shall tell you all that I leave out of this letter — so prepare and resign yourself. There being nothing in this letter, Heavens! how long-winded I shall have to be!

No doubt, by some wonderful means or other, you get all the news from Printing House Square,[†3] at about the same time as I get it here. How the Atlantic Telegraph Wire broke again, the day before yesterday or so, you know, of course. Also, how your friend reads his shorter books in public (Arthur Smith, Manager) with a success which his modesty forbids him to expatiate upon. Also how he has asked Mrs. Russell as a Guest to such intellectual banquet — who came, he hopes. Also, how Albert Smith starts for Hong Kong, viâ Marseilles, tomorrow night,[†4] a hot and a weary journey for the man of his figure; as an improvement upon which I have recommended Sheridan's advice as to saying he saw it, and not putting himself out of the way to go to see it.[†5] But you don't know — no, not even from Printing H. S. — that on the anniversary of poor dear Jerrold's death,[†1] I had a very good and tender letter from his eldest son, expressing his regret that he had ever been so ill-advised as to be less grateful to certain of his father's friends than he might have been.[†2] In reply to which, I stretched out my willing hand to him over his father's grave, and made an end of that incongruity at least, I hope for ever.[†3]

Everybody talks about your letters, and everybody praises them.[†4] No one says, or can say, more of them than they deserve. I have been deeply impressed by your suggestion, in your note to me, of the miseries and horrors by which you are surrounded; and I can well understand what a trial the whole frightful, revengeful, morally and physically burning, business must be to an affectionate and earnest man. Are there good chances of its being so far ended, as to enable you to come home? That is the turning-point in the War, that I (and Mrs. Russell) think most about.

The gentleman to whom you gave a letter of introduction, called on me one afternoon last month, and left word that he was going away directly.[†5] I called on him next day. He was out, as I had been, but I saw a very good serving-man who told me how he was "joost awa' into Scotland yon, airly the morrow mornin'". So I left him my card, with an intimation that I hoped to know him better on his return.

The Garrick is in convulsions. The attack is consequent on Thackeray's having complained to the Committee (with an amazing want of discretion, as I think), of an article about him by Edmund Yates, in a thing called Town Talk.[†6] The article is in bad taste, no doubt, and would have been infinitely better left alone. But I conceive that the Committee have nothing earthly, celestial, or infernal, to do with it.[†7] Committee thinks otherwise, and calls on E.Y. to apologize or retire. E.Y. can't apologize (Thackeray having written him a letter that really renders it impossible),[†8] and won't retire. Committee thereupon call General Meeting, yet pending. Thackeray thereupon, by way of shewing what an ill thing it is for writers to attack one another in print, denounces E.Y. (in Virginians) as "Young Grub Street".[†1] Frightful mess, muddle, complication, and botheration, ensue. Which Witch's broth is now in full boil.

Why, you are better with a Turban round your hat, over there, — than here, with all this nonsense going on! As to me, I have come to the blessed woods and fields to forget several things (you are not among them my dear Russell), and to calm down before I go a-reading God knows where — including Dublin, Cork, Belfast, and Limerick: I never having set foot in Ireland before.

Behold all my news, and the end of my paper! I send you a cordial and vigorous shake of my hand with my heart in it — which was the way in which Rogers's Ginevra (or some one else) gave hers to her lover[†2] — and a very pretty and loving way too. Where is your old Map this night, I wonder, and the Wand you used to point with![†3] Lord Lord! and Joe Robins[†4] playing (with indifferent success, I am afraid) far [†a]North!! And Delane looking as if he lived on morning dew and horseback!!!

God bless you, and send you back to us, ruddy and bould. Believe me Ever Heartily and affectionately Yours

CHARLES DICKENS[†a]

To EDMUND YATES, 7 JULY 1858

MS Robert H. Taylor Collection, Princeton University.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Seventh July, 1858

My Dear Edmund

Yes. I will dine at the Albion[†5] tomorrow, at 4.

Pray don't think — or pretend to think — for a moment that I can fail to be interested in your letters, be they ever so numerous.[†6]

Faithfully Yours always

CD.

To LORD ROBERT GROSVENOR,[†1] 9 JULY 1858

Mention in Charles J. Sawyer catalogue (undated); MS (3rd person) 1 p.; dated 9 July 58; addressed Lord Robert Grosvenor.

To JOHN THOMPSON, 11 JULY 1858

Extract in N, III, 32 (from catalogue source); dated Gad's Hill Place, 11 July 58.

John, Please take a cab to Mr. Watkins's Photographic Gallery Regent St.... and take away to Tavistock House my writing table and brown cloak.[†2] Also, please call at Hall's,[†3] my bootmakers, and order me another pair of shepherd's plaid, ankle, spring boots,[†4] like the two last pairs.

To CHARLES DICKENS JNR, [?10-12 JULY 1858]

Extracts in Charley Dickens to Mrs CD, 13 July 58, MS Huntington Library.[†5] Date: CD probably wrote to Charley 2-3 days before Charley found his letter.

[†a]I myself took out of our Deed of separation the usual formal clause inserted by her own solicitors; that she should have access to the children except at Tavistock House.[†6] That exception seemed to me to convey an unnecessary slight upon her, and I said that she should see them there or anywhere....[†a]

[†b]I positively forbid the children ever to utter one word [†c]to their grandmother or to Helen Hogarth.[†c] If they are ever brought into the presence of either of these two, I charge them immediately to leave your mother's house and come back to me....[†b]

[†d]I positively forbid the children ever to see or to speak to him,[†1] and for the same reason I absolutely prohibit [†e]their ever being[†e] taken to Mr. Evans's house.[†d]

To THE COMMITTEE OF THE GARRICK CLUB, 12 JULY 1858

MS The Garrick Club.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Twelfth July, 1858.

Gentlemen

As I had the misfortune to differ from you on the whole principle of last Saturday's discussion, and as I cannot take upon myself the very difficult and unsatisfactory functions which you understand to attach to your Body, but which I believe that Body has no right to assume, I beg your permission to resign my seat at your Board.

I am Gentlemen | With much regard | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

The Committee | of | The Garrick Club

To OCTAVE LACROIX,[†2] 12 JULY 1858

Facsimile in Catalogue de Mme G. Whitney Hoff, Paris, 1934.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Twelfth July, 1858

Dear Sir

I feel exceedingly obliged to you for your flattering and interesting letter. I have a great ambition to be extensively read and well understood, in France; and you give me the liveliest and most cordial pleasure when you predict that I shall become widely known among the great French people.[†3]

I owe you many apologies for not having answered your letter sooner. But I have been constantly occupied, and it was unfortunately mislaid, and has but this day been recovered.

It would gratify me very much if I could give you any details that would be useful to you, or interesting to your readers. But all that I could say of my books I have said in them. They originate in my own reflections and fancies, and in my observation of the world around me. Little Dorrit is my last published work. It was published monthly (de mois en mois) and completed in 20 parts (livraisons). Hard Times was originally published from week to week (de semaine en semaine), in my own literary Journal, Household Words. I have no dates, here, in the country, to refer to; but I think Hard Times was completed about 4 years ago.[†1] Little Dorrit was completed and published entire, in May 1857.

Accept the assurance of my great regard and esteem and Believe me always, My Dear Sir
Yours faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

Monsieur Octave Lacroix.

To JOHN HILLS,[†2] 13 JULY 1858

Mention in N, III, 32.

To DR W. C. HOOD, [?15 JULY 1858]

Envelope only, MS Brown University Library. Address: Dr. Hood | Bethelehem Hospital | S. PM 15 July 58 London.

To ALFRED NOVELLO,[†3] 15 JULY 1858

Mention in N, III, 33; MS 1 p.; dated Tavistock House, 15 July 58.

Asking for the address of Countess Gigliucci, the singer.

To RICHARD SPOFFORD,[†4] 15 JULY 1858*

MS Morgan Library.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Thursday Fifteenth July, 1858

My Dear Sir

I have a hope that it will not be displeasing to you, to receive a letter under my hand. I have an absolute certainty that it is a great pleasure and relief to me to write it.

Your Cousin[†1] Fanny[†2] has shewn me a letter of yours in which reference is made to me. I would not for the world do her or you the wrong of giving you any assurance upon a subject on which your own generous nature is perfectly clear. But what I wish to do, is to thank you most heartily for the comfort and strength I have derived from the contemplation of your character as it is expressed in that letter beyond the possibility of mistake, and to convey to you, in a manner as plain and unaffected as your own, my admiration of the noble instinct with which the upright know the upright, all the broad world over. Your Cousin well deserves to be its subject.

From the first month, I think, of my knowing your Cousin Fanny, I have confided in her, have taken great interest in her, and have highly respected her. You may be sure (as I know her mother and sisters are, and as I know my own two daughters are), that there could not live upon this earth a man more blamelessly and openly her friend than I am, or to whom her honor could be dearer than it is to me.

I desire to avoid troubling you with my personal feelings under such wild misrepresentation and amazing falsehood.[†3] I will only say on that head that while I know this kind of evil to be a dark place in the social life of many countries, and especially of America, I know well — as no one can have better reason — the chivalry and integrity of the general American character, and I trust myself to it with implicit confidence.

My dear Sir, my wish is gratified. I have stretched out my hand across the Ocean to grasp yours, and I can bear even the misfortune of most innocently causing your Cousin one painful moment, the better for it.

Believe me | With much regard | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard S Spofford Esquire

To THE COUNTESS GIGLIUCCI, 16 JULY 1858*

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Friday Sixteenth July, 1858.

My Dear Countess Gigliucci

I want to ask your kind advice, and I know you will give it me.

A young lady for whom I have a great friendship and in whom I am much interested, is going to study in Italy, the better to qualify herself as a professional singer. She has already been pretty well trained and taught here, but wishes to complete her musical Education and make it a sound one, under good Italian instruction.[†1]

She has asked me to what part of Italy I could recommend her going, and under what kind of master I could recommend her placing herself. I have not the least idea! But it suddenly comes into my head that nobody can enlighten me so well as you.

Will you write to me a word or two of enlightenment: understanding that it is not an Amateur affair, but a thorough working one.

I beg to send my kind regards to Count Gigliucci, and Am Ever
Faithfully your friend | And admirer
CHARLES DICKENS

To THOMAS HEADLAND,[†2] 16 JULY 1858

Text from Brentano's catalogue, No. 124.

St Martin's Hall | 16 July 1858

To Mr. Headland

This set of my Books, with thanks
CHARLES DICKENS

To ROBERT ORRIDGE,[†3] 17 JULY 1858

MS Mr Alex Robertson. Address: Robert Orridge Esquire | 3 Paper Buildings | Temple | London | E. C.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Seventeenth July 1858

My Dear Sir

I am sorry that my being here, except when business takes me to London for a few hours at a time, has deprived me of the pleasure of seeing you in reference to the very kind note of Mr. Macrory.[†1]

May I ask you to be so good as to assure that gentleman that I am exceedingly sensible of his father's[†2] hospitable offer,[†3] and that I thank him very heartily for his great courtesy. But I have been obliged to resolve that I will deny myself all such pleasures during my tour. It will be so very fatiguing, that I am quite sure I can intermingle no social enjoyments with its occupations. I have therefore (putting a virtuous constraint upon myself with a very bad grace), doggedly made up my mind to confine myself to Inns. Even when I shall be in Scotland among many old friends, I shall stick to this heroic resolution.

I am not the less indebted to Mr. Macrory, and I cannot too warmly acknowledge or respond to his invitation.

My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To HERBERT WATKINS, 17 JULY 1858*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: Herbert Watkins Esquire | 215 Regent Street | London | W.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Seventeenth July, 1858

My Dear Mr. Watkins

I owe you many thanks for your most obliging note. I am glad to hear so good an account of the Portraits,[†4] and I do not doubt that they will be admirable.

It would give me great pleasure to have some five and twenty impressions for private friends, if those should not be too many.

I hope the colored Portrait will be ready in the last week of this month.[†5] I go away on a tour, on the 1st. of August, and particularly wish to send that packet to its destination (I have already forsworn myself for a long time), before I leave.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Herbert Watkins Esquire

To F. M. EVANS, 22 JULY 1858

Text from N, III, 33.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.[†1]
Thursday July Twenty-Second 1858[†2]

Dear Sir,

I have had stern occasion to impress upon my children that their father's name is their best possession and that it would indeed[†3] be trifled with and wasted by him, if, either through himself or through them, he held any terms with those who have been false to it, in the only great[†4] need and under the only great wrong it has ever known. You know very well, why (with hard distress of mind and bitter disappointment), I have been forced to include you in this class. I have no more to say.[†5]

[CHARLES DICKENS]

P.S. — Your letter reached me, only yesterday.

To S. L. BROOKS, 23 JULY 1858*

MS Mr Frank North.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Friday Twenty Third July, 1858.

Dear Sir

I write this letter to be presented to you by my friend Mr. Arthur Smith, who is the business-manager of my Public Readings.

Those readings will take me nearly all over England Ireland and Scotland, during the months of August, September, October, and November. My present object is, to ascertain whether the liberality of your Company towards a public man, will concede me, during that time, any advantages on your line.

It will be necessary for me to travel — two first class, and three second or third; and my luggage may probably somewhat (but not greatly) exceed in weight what would be ordinarily allowed to such passengers.

If, on conferring with Mr. Arthur Smith, you should think it not inconsistent with the usual consideration of your Company, to afford me any facilities, I should feel very truly obliged.[†1]

I am Dear Sir | Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

S. L. Brooks Esquire

To EDWARD CHAPMAN, 23 JULY 1858*

MS Benoliel Collection.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Friday Twenty Third July, 1858

My Dear Sir

I quite agree with you as to the proposal you communicate.[†2] It is altogether out of the question, and is, in the pecuniary part of it, ridiculous.

Will you tell me, for the information of an accursed correspondent,[†3] when the Pickwick Papers were first published.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Edward Chapman Esquire

To MISS MARY BOYLE, 23 JULY 1858

Extract in American Book Prices Current, 1923; dated 23 July 58; mention in Walter M. Hill catalogue No. 77 (Nov 1918); MS 1 p.; addressed Miss Mary Boyle.

1st no. of Pickwick appeared (April 1st:) 1836 last do of do do ed (1st: Novr:) 1837.
So certified, on the authority of His Publisher's Books,

CHARLES DICKENS

To CHARLES KEAN, 23 JULY 1858*

MS Mr Edwin A. Elsbach.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Friday Twenty Third July, 1858

My Dear Mr. Kean.

Let me assure you most unaffectedly and earnestly, in acknowledgement of your kind note, that I was heartily glad to be present last Wednesday;[†4] and that my reference to yourself, faithfully expressed the admiration with which I listened to what you said, and with which I contemplated your highly becoming share in the proceedings.[†1]

Nothing could have been better commenced than this business.[†2] I shall be more interested in it than ever,[†3] if it should prove (as I trust it may) the beginning of a better acquaintance between us.

With regard and good wishes, believe me to remain

Very faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Kean Esquire.

To C. A. SAUNDERS,[†4] 23 JULY 1858*

MS Dickens House.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Friday Twenty Third July, 1858

Dear Sir

I write this letter to be presented to you by Mr. Arthur Smith, who is the business-manager of my public readings.

Those readings will take me nearly all over England Ireland and Scotland, during the months of August, September, October, and November. My present object is, to ascertain whether the liberality of your company towards a public man, will concede me, during that time, any advantages on your line.

It will be necessary for me to travel — two first class, and three second or third; and my luggage may probably somewhat (but not greatly) exceed in weight, what would be ordinarily allowed to such passengers.

If, on conferring with Mr. Arthur Smith, you should think it not inconsistent with the usual consideration of your company to afford me any facilities, I shall feel very truly obliged.

I am Dear Sir | Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

C. A. Saunders Esquire.

To J. PALGRAVE SIMPSON, 23 JULY 1858

MS Dickens House.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Friday Twenty Third July 1858

My Dear Simpson

The Committee seem to me to have gone perfectly mad. I really never met with such ridiculous assumption and preposterous imbecility, in my life before.[†1]

Like you, I should "boil with indignation", if I had not a vent. But I have. Upon my soul, when I picture them to myself in that backyard, conceiving that they shake the earth, I fall into fits of laughter which make my daughters laugh — away at Gad's Hill — until the tears run down their cheeks.

— But this is not to the purpose, concerning Edmund Yates. Before I received your note last night, I had recommended him to ascertain, from good sound legal authority, the exact state of the legality of the question. This he is now doing.[†2] If he can fix them on that, it will be far better than any protest. If he can not, then let us take counsel as to that step. Meanwhile, wait.

I cannot too warmly assure you of my hearty admiration of your generous feeling in this matter,[†3] or of my desire to render steady, unflinching, and enduring support. It is amazing to me that so many men can be the tools of such a wonderful small Inquisition. But I conceive that every day's notoriety makes the whole thing, and the whole club, more absurd; and I believe that with a fine retributive justice, there are the seeds of certain decay and destruction in this rottenness.

Very Cordially Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

J. Palgrave Simpson Esquire.

To AUGUSTUS TRACEY, 24 JULY 1858*

MS University of Texas. Address: Lieutenant Tracey R.N. | 5 Windsor Terrace | Plymouth.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Twenty Fourth July, 1858

My Dear Commodore.

I have not answered your kind note sooner, for the best of all possible reasons, my brave old Salt — because I have only just received it, along with a hold-full of correspondence from Tavistock House.

You know that if it were possible for me to come aboard o' the Windsor Terrace, I should answer your signal, joyfully, out of hand. But I must be at an Inn, and by myself, and must avoid engagements, under these circumstances. As to Arthur Smith, he will live, in a high fever, for the next four months, and will (I know beforehand) always dine standing. But I tell you what. If you will give us a glass of pale ale and grog, on the Wednesday or Thursday night, after the reading,[†1] we will come to you with delight. Being positively our first, last, and only appearance off the Inn Boards during the whole Tour.

I send something as near my love as I may, to Mrs. Tracey. Forster is staying here, and adds his particular regard.[†2]

To EDWARD WALFORD, 24 JULY 1858*

MS Chas. J. Sawyer Ltd.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Twenty Fourth July, 1858.

Sir

Your obliging note is not dated, but I fear it may possibly be some days old, as it reaches me this morning along with a great arrear of correspondence.

I always have it in my mind to leave my own auto-biography for my childrens' information. Although I have seen various lives of myself surprisingly new to me in all their details, I have never, therefore, taken their correction upon myself.[†3] If there should be any dates that you desire to know and will tell me what they are, I will supply them, if I can.[†4]

Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

E. Walford Esquire

&c &c &c

To H. G. ADAMS, 24 JULY 1858

Text from N, III, 34.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Night Twenty Fourth July 1858

Dear Sir,

Mr. Arthur Smith (to be addressed at my house in London) is the business-manager of my Readings, and conducts all the correspondence arising out of them. But as he has a perfect understanding beforehand with me that they are always my own enterprise, and that I am never to be engaged by any Institution or by any person, I let you know as much, to save you the trouble of writing to him.

I shall be here at intervals during the summer (for a day or two at a time) and shall be happy to make an appointment with you, if you should desire to see me. But there is not the slightest chance of my being able to read for your Institution.[†5]

Faithfully yours always
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To WILLIAM J. CLEMENT, 25 JULY 1858*

MS Morgan Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Twenty Fifth July, 1858.

My Dear Clement.

I have received your letter with much pleasure, and count upon shaking hands with you at Shrewsbury.[†1] But I am sorry to say that I must[†2] deny myself, all through my tour, the pleasure of visiting my friends. Its fatigues will be very great indeed, and I know I can only hope to triumph over them, by observing a rigid system in this regard.

You can scarcely think what a noble spectacle of virtue I feel myself to be, when I announce this resolution. It is so excessively disagreeable to me that I become, in my own eyes, almost sublime.

With kind regard at home
Ever Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

William Clement Esquire

To MRS CORNELIUS, 27 JULY 1858

Text from N, III, 34.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS,
Tuesday Twenty Seventh July 1858

My Dear Anne,

Will you please call me in the morning at a quarter before 8, and let me have breakfast at a quarter before 9. I am going back by an early Train.†3

Faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To T. J. THOMPSON, 27 JULY 1858

Mention in list of letters from CD to Thompson made by his son-in-law Wilfrid Meynell; MS 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill, 27 July 58.†4

To HENRY MORLEY, 27 JULY 1858*

MS Mr Douglas C. Ewing.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Tuesday Night | Twenty Seventh July 1858

My Dear Morley

Coming to town for the evening, I find the accompanying packet at Tavistock House here. I send it to you. Will you kindly write an acknowledgement, of its receipt from the office, to the effect that the Writer of the article in H.W.†1 begs to say that it has been laid before him by Mr. C.D.

In haste | Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To EDWARD WALFORD, 28 JULY 1858†

MS University of Texas. Address: E. Walford Esquire. M.A. &c &c &c | Hampstead | near London | N.W.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.†2
Wednesday Twenty Eighth July, 1858

Dear Sir

I beg to return you the accompanying Proof.†3

In adherence to the rule I always observe, I have not touched it.

†a But I would suggest to you that it is hardly well to rest any thing connected with the origin of the Pickwick Papers, on a vague "it is said";†4 when their origin has been for some years, exactly described by my own hand, and before the Public, in the Preface to the "Cheap Edition" of that work.†a†5

With thanks to you for your courtesy, I beg to remain

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

E. Walford Esquire

&c &c &c

To EDWARD CHAPMAN, 30 JULY 1858

MS Berg Collection.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Thirtieth July, 1858

My Dear Sir

This will present to you, my friend Mr. Edmund Yates, whose literary career I wish to assist and advance, if I can.

He has asked my opinion on a question he had an idea of propounding to you.†1 As I cannot form an opinion on the subject (not knowing what your engagements may be), I give him this letter that he may state it for himself. I am quite sure you will answer it frankly.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Edward Chapman Esquire

To CHARLES FAIDER,[†2] 31 JULY 1858*

MS Berg Collection. Address: À Monsieur Ch: Faider | &c | &c &c | Bruxelles.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Samedi Juillet 31, 1858

Monsieur.

J'ai l'honneur distinguée de reçevoir votre letter.

Je regrette extrememement que ma presence au Congres a Bruxelles[†3] est absolument impossible; mais permettez-moi de vous assurer, Monsieur, que je sens vivement l'importance de l'idee, et que je vous envois mon adhesion avec le plus grand interet et plaisir.

Agreez Monsieur l'assurance de ma consideration tres distinguée.

CHARLES DICKENS

Monsieur Ch: Faider.

August

To THOMAS BEARD, 1 AUGUST 1858

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Place | Edgeware Road | London | N.W.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday First August, 1858.

My Dear Beard

I bring with me to Tavistock House, "to be left till called for", a little writing-case in a cover, which I think belongs to you.

Ever affecy

CD.

To WILKIE COLLINS, 1 AUGUST 1858

MS Morgan Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday First August 1858.

My Dear Wilkie

I am off from here to-day, and enclose you (hastily) my Tour,[†1] and my address at each place. I hope you are enjoying yourself at Broadstairs — holding on by your great advance in health — and getting into the condition, physically, of Ben Caunt[†2] — morally, of William Shakespeare.

Charley's paper[†3] has a great deal in it that is very droll and good. I have sent it to the Printer.

With kind regard | Ever affecy.

CHARLES DICKENS

To PERCY FITZGERALD,[†4] 2 AUGUST 1858

Mention in N, III, 35.

To EDMUND YATES, 4 AUGUST [1858]

Extract in Edmund Yates: His Recollections and Experiences, I, 303; dated Plymouth,[†1] 4 August. Date: see next.

We had a most noble night at Exeter last night,[†2] and turned numbers away. Arthur is something between a Home Secretary and a furniture-dealer in Rathbone Place.[†3] He is either always corresponding in the genteelest manner, or dragging rout-seats[†4] about without his coat.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 5 AUGUST 1858†

MS Huntington Library. Address (Envelope, MS Mr W. Miller): Miss Hogarth, | Gad's Hill Place | Higham | by Rochester | Kent.

West Hoe, Plymouth | Thursday Fifth August 1858

My dearest Georgy

I received your letter this morning with the greatest pleasure, and read it with the utmost interest in all its domestic details. [†a]On the Beard[†5] — or Thompson[†6] question, I am quite clear, without the shadow of a doubt. Decidedly, take Thompson! There is no comparison between them. He is not wearisome — really has tact — and is far more formable and mouldable altogether.[†a†7]

We had a most wonderful night at Exeter. [†a]Only two things are[†a] to be regretted [†a]in reference to it. Firstly, that even Arthur could not squeeze more than £75 into the room. Secondly,[†a] that we cannot take the place again on our way back. It was a prodigious cram, and we turned away no end of people. But not only that. I think they were the finest Audience I have ever read to; I don't think I ever read, in some respects so well; and I never beheld anything like the personal affection which they poured out upon me at the end.[†8] It was really a very remarkable sight, and I shall always look back upon it with pleasure.[†9]

Last night here, was not so bright.[†10] There are quarrels of the strangest kind, between the Plymouth people and the Stonehouse people. The room is at Stonehouse (Tracey says, the wrong room: there being a Plymouth room in this Hotel, and he being a Plymouth-ite).[†1] We had a fair house, but not at all a great one. All the Notabilities come this morning to Little Dombey, for which we have let 130 Stalls — which local admiration of local greatness considers very large. For Mrs. Gamp and the Boots, at night, we have also a very promising Let. But the races are on,[†2] and there are two public balls tonight,[†3] and the Yacht Squadron are all at Cherbourg[†4] to boot. Arthur is of opinion that "Two Sixties" will do very well for us. I doubt the "Two Sixties"[†5] myself. Mais, nous verrons.[†6]

The room is a very handsome one, but it is on the top of a windy and muddy hill leading (literally) to nowhere; and it looks (except that it is new and mortary) as if the subsidence of the waters after the Deluge might have left it where it is. I have to go right through the Company to get to the Platform. Big doors slam and resound when anybody comes in; and all the company seem afraid of one another. Nevertheless they were a sensible audience last night, and much impressed and pleased.

Tracey is in the room (wandering about, and never finishing a sentence), and sends all manner of Sea-Loves to you and the dear girls. I send all manner of Land-Loves to you from myself out of my heart of hearts, and also to my dear Plorn and the boys.

[†a]The letter was from Mrs. Dickinson, and conveys a hospitable invitation for tomorrow night.[†7] Of course I am not going to her.[†a]

Arthur sends his kindest love. He knows only two characters. He is either always corresponding, like a Secretary of State: or he is transformed into a Rout-Furniture-Dealer of Rathbone Place, and drags forms about with the greatest violence without his coat.

I have no time to add another word.

Ever Dearest Georgy | Your most affectionate

CD.

To MISS MARY DICKENS, 7 AUGUST 1858

Text from MDGH, II, 52-3.

London, Saturday, Aug. 7th, 1858.

My dearest Mamey,

The closing night at Plymouth was a very great scene, and the morning there was exceedingly good too. You will be glad to hear that at Clifton last night,[†1] a torrent of five hundred shillings bore Arthur away, pounded him against the wall, flowed on to the seats over his body, scratched him, and damaged his best dress suit. All to his unspeakable joy.

This is a very short letter, but I am going to the Burlington Arcade, desperately resolved to have all those wonderful instruments put into operation on my head, with a view to refreshing it.[†2]

Kindest love to Georgy and to all.

Ever your affectionate

[CD]

To PERCY FITZGERALD, 9 AUGUST 1858

MS University of California, Los Angeles.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Ninth August, 1858.

My Dear Sir

I am exceedingly obliged to you for your kind note; and I cordially assure you that I have received it with much pleasure and interest, as coming from a fellow-labourer whose writings I highly esteem.

I am not the less sensible of your proffered hospitality, because I cannot accept it. But my tour is of such a very fatiguing nature that I know it to be impossible to unite any social enjoyments with its business. I have therefore forsworn all pleasure engagements whatsoever, during its progress. I accept no invitations, see no one, and am perfectly heroic against my nature and my will.

Believe me | My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Percy Fitzgerald Esquire

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 9 AUGUST 1858*

MS University of Kentucky.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Ninth August 1858

Dear Sir

I have been travelling about, followed by your letter, until it has at length reached me during a day's holiday at my own little country-house.

My engagements, I beg to assure you, render my compliance with the request you do me the honor to prefer to me, absolutely impossible[†1]

To CHARLES WATKINS, 9 AUGUST 1858*

MS Yale University Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Ninth August 1858

Dear Sir

I received your packet[†2] safely at Exeter, and am much obliged to you for your courteous attention.

Will you have the kindness to ask your brother[†3] to let me know the amount in which I am indebted to him.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Watkins Esquire.

To W. H. WILLS, 9 AUGUST 1858

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Ninth August 1858.

My Dear Wills

H. W.[†4]

I was at the office on Saturday at Noon, but did not expect to find you there.

Send me a Proof of the next No. you make up.[†5] I must put a new name to Charles Collins's story.[†6]

I hope Mrs. Gaskell will not stop, for more than a week at all events.[†7]

I am very glad to hear from Wilkie that he is at work again.[†1]

I[†2]

Have done exceedingly well, I think, so far. It is out of the season at Clifton, and half the houses are shut up. The Yacht Squadron too, was gone from Plymouth to Cherbourg, and there were races at Plymouth, and public balls.[†3] Nevertheless we took nearly £400 last week. Exeter was tremendous. You never saw such a reception, and we might have stayed there a week. The first night at Plymouth (very wet) not good. The next morning (great talk about it spreading in the town) admirable. That night (greater talk about it spreading in the town), enormous. Similarly at Clifton. There was a very great increase of Numbers on the second night, and the local magnate said "Now they know what it is, Mr. Dickens might stay a month and always have a cram." Contrary to my impression of those Western people, I have never seen a finer or more subtly apprehensive Audience than at Exeter. Nor did I ever know the minutest touches in Little Dombey, go better in London than at Plymouth. As to the Boots at Plymouth, the people gave themselves up altogether (Generals, Mayors, and Shillings, equally) to a perfect transport of enjoyment of him and the two children.[†4]

Arthur shall have the packet tomorrow morning (when we start for Worcester), that I received from you this morning.

I have no printed lists of my tour here, but will send Miss Coutts one straight.[†5]

I think that's all at present,

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 9 AUGUST 1858

MS Morgan Library.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS,
Monday Evening Ninth August 1858

My Dear Miss Coutts

Passing through town to resume my country Readings after two days peace and quiet at Gad's Hill, I write this short note to you. Wills tells me that you want my various addresses, and I am delighted to send them,[†6] and have so good an excuse for writing to you.

You will observe that a few of the addresses are at Booksellers' and the like.[†7] This is to ensure my getting letters at towns where Mr. Arthur Smith does not know — or did not know, when he made out the list — the best Hotels.

Our first week was an immense success. I miss the quiet of my own desk, but I look forward to resuming it — and it is a great sensation to have a large Audience in one's hand.

Charley was with us yesterday at Gad's Hill, and talked of passing his fortnight's holiday in Ireland with me. I encouraged him in the idea, as I thought it would do him more good than any other Holiday he is likely to take.[†1]

It would be too happy a chance to find you any where in the Tour, but I shall hope to hear from you somewhere.

With kindest love and regard to Mrs. Brown,

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most affecty and faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To WILLIAM GILES,[†2] 10 AUGUST 1858

MS New York University Library.

Worcester[†3] | Tuesday Tenth August 1858.

My Dear Sir

I am exceedingly obliged to you for your letter, and scarcely need assure you that your late good father[†4] lives in my respect and remembrance.

My present tour is of so rapid and fatiguing a nature, that all social pleasures are incompatible with it, and I forego all invitations and engagements of whatsoever kind, and see no one. But I am not the less glad to hear from your father's son, or the less indebted for the hospitality that I cannot accept.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. T. Giles Esquire

To EDMUND YATES, 11 AUGUST 1858

MS Robert H. Taylor Collection, Princeton University Library.

Swan Hotel, Worcester | Wednesday Eleventh August 1858

My Dear Edmund

We have been immensely amused by the enclosed cutting. It must be Cole![†5] Nobody else, I think, could have struck out that gentle and playful epithet, "an emasculated Caliban."

Arthur sends his kindest regard. To night's room has to be transformed (after 4 o'Clock, if you please), from a Corn Exchange into a St. Martin's Hall. He has consequently, in some strange way, covered himself with dust and ashes, as a preparation for work. In which costume he is going to dine with me at 3, to the end that he may drag the forms about without a moments loss of time.

I do not see my way to making a safe appointment for Saturday. But I am going to dine with Wills at the Reform Club, on Tuesday at 1/2 past 5. And I will expect you at the H. W. office, at, or after, 4.

What a little [serpent],[†1] that daughter of poor honest good [Hogarth]![†1]

Ever Faithfully
CD.

To WILKIE COLLINS, 11 AUGUST 1858

MS Morgan Library.

Swan Hotel, Worcester[†2]
Wednesday Evening | Eleventh August | 1858

My Dear Wilkie

I have just now toned down the capital Unknown Public article,[†3] a little, here and there. Not because I dispute its positions, but because there are some things (true enough), that it would not be generous in me, as a novelist and a periodical editor, to put too prominently forward.[†4] You will not find it essentially changed, anywhere.

Your letter gave me great pleasure, as all letters that you write me are sure to do. But the mysterious addresses, O misconstructive one, merely refer to places where Arthur Smith did not know aforehand the names of the best Hotels. As to that furtive and Don Giovanni purpose at which you hint — that may be all very well for your violent vigor, or that of the companions with whom you may have travelled continentally, or the Caliphs Haroon Alraschid with whom you have unbent metropolitanly;[†5] but Anchorites who read themselves red hot every night are chaste as Diana (I suppose she was by the bye, but I find I don't quite believe it when I write her name).

We have done exceedingly well since we have been out — with this remarkable (and pleasant) incident; that wherever I read twice, the turn-away is invariably on the second occasion. They don't quite understand beforehand what it is, I think, and expect a man to be sitting down in some corner, droning away like a mild bagpipe. In that large room at Clifton, for instance, the people were perfectly taken off their legs by the Chimes — started — looked at each other — started again — looked at me — and then burst into a storm of applause. I think the best audiences I have yet had, were at Exeter and Plymouth. At Exeter, the best I have ever seen. At Plymouth, I read three times. Twice in one day. A better morning audience for Little Dombey, could not be. And the Boots at night, was a shout all through.

I cannot deny that I shall be heartily glad when it is all over, and that I miss the thoughtfulness of my quiet room and desk. But perhaps it is best for me not to have it just now, and to wear and toss my Storm away — or as much of it as will ever calm down while the water rolls — in this restless manner.

Arthur Smith knows I am writing to you, and sends his kindest regard. He is all usefulness and service. I never could have done it without him. — Should have left the unredeemed Bills on the walls, and taken flight.

This is a stupid letter, but I write it before dressing to read; and you know what a brute I am at such times.

Ever Affectionately

CD.

P.S. I miss Richard Wardour's dress, and always want to put it on. I would rather, by a great deal, act. Apropos of which, I think I have a very fine notion of a part.[†1] It shall be yours.

To JOHN T. LAWRENCE,[†2] 11 AUGUST 1858*

MS Dickens House.

Wolverhampton | Wednesday Eleventh August 1858

My Dear Mr. Lawrence.

I have received your kind letter, with the pleasure I always feel in hearing from or seeing you.

I am greatly obliged to your hospitable friends Mr. and Mrs. Charles Potts,[†3] for their hospitable invitation, and beg you to thank them cordially in my name. But I cannot have the satisfaction of accepting it. My tour is so rapid and fatiguing that I am obliged, while it is in progress, to deny myself all social pleasures, and to forego all invitations and engagements. Apart from that heroic resolution, I could not under any circumstances dine out on a day on which I read. And I have promised my daughters and the rest of my children that I will rejoin them for three days at my little country house in Kent, next Saturday. In redemption of which pledge, I shall leave Chester at the earliest possible moment after my reading is done.

Allow me to send my kindest regard and remembrance to your daughters, and to remain as ever

Very faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

John T Lawrence Esquire

To MISS MARY DICKENS, 12 AUGUST 1858

Extract in MDGH, II, 53.

Shrewsbury, Thursday, Aug. 12th, 1858.

A wonderful audience last night at Wolverhampton.[†1] If such a thing can be, they were even quicker and more intelligent than the audience I had in Edinburgh.[†2] They were so wonderfully good and were so much on the alert this morning by nine o'clock for another reading, that we are going back there at about our Bradford time.[†3] I never saw such people. And the local agent would take no money, and charge no expenses of his own.

This place looks what Plorn would call "ortily" dull. Local agent predicts, however, "great satisfaction to Mr. Dickens, and excellent attendance." I have just been to look at the hall, where everything was wrong, and where I have left Arthur making a platform for me out of dining-tables.[†4]

If he comes back in time, I am not quite sure but that he is himself going to write to Gad's Hill. We talk of coming up from Chester in the night to-morrow, after the reading; and of showing our precious selves at an apparently impossibly early hour in the Gad's Hill breakfast-room on Saturday morning.

I have not felt the fatigue to any extent worth mentioning; though I get, every night, into the most violent heats. We are going to dine at three o'clock (it wants a quarter now) and have not been here two hours, so I have seen nothing of Clement.

Tell Georgy with my love, that I read in the same room in which we acted,[†5] but at the end opposite to that where our stage was. We are not at the inn where the amateur company put up,[†6] but at The Lion,[†7] where the fair Miss Mitchell[†8] was lodged alone. We have the strangest little rooms (sitting-room and two bed-rooms all together), the ceilings of which I can touch with my hand. The windows bulge out over the street, as if they were little stern-windows in a ship. And a door opens out of the sitting-room on to a little open gallery with plants in it, where one leans over a queer old rail, and looks all downhill and slantwise at the crookedest black and yellow old houses, all manner of shapes except straight shapes. To get into this room we come through a china closet; and the man in laying the cloth has actually knocked down, in that repository, two geraniums and Napoleon Bonaparte.

I think that's all I have to say, except that at the Wolverhampton theatre they played "Oliver Twist" last night (Mr. Toole the Artful Dodger),[†9] "in consequence of the illustrious author honouring the town with his presence." We heard that the device succeeded very well, and that they got a good many people.

John's spirits have been equable and good since we rejoined him. Berry[†1] has always got something the matter with his digestion — seems to me the male gender of Maria Jolly,[†2] and ought to take nothing but Revalenta Arabica.[†3] Bottled ale is not to be got in these parts, and Arthur is thrown upon draught.

My dearest love to Georgy and to Katey, also to Marguerite. Also to all the boys and the noble Plorn.

Ever your affectionate father

[CD]

To JOHN GRIFFITH,[†4] [12 AUGUST 1858]

Envelope only, MS Houghton Library, Harvard. Address: John Griffith Esquire | Mill Fields | Bilston, Staffordshire PM Shrewsbury, 12 Aug 1858.

To WILLIAM PARKE,[†5] 12 AUGUST [1858]

Extract in Autograph Prices Current, II; addressed W. Parke; dated Shrewsbury, Thursday Twelfth August. Date: CD was in Shrewsbury on this day in 1858.

Thanking him for his disinterested and generous assistance at Wolverhampton last night.

To JOHN FORSTER, [15 AUGUST 1858]

Extract and summary in F, VIII, iv, 661. Date: 15 Aug, according to Forster.

On Friday we came from Shrewsbury to Chester; saw all right for the evening; and then went to Liverpool.[†6] Came back from Liverpool and read at Chester.[†7] Left Chester at 11 at night, after the reading, and went to London. Got to Tavistock House at 5 A.M. on Saturday, left it at quarter past 10 that morning, and came down here.[†8]

To MRS WINTER, 16 AUGUST 1858

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Sixteenth August, 1858.

My Dear Mrs. Winter

I have read poor dear Anne's[†1] prayer, with great sorrow, and with many emotions of sadly affectionate remembrance. It was written, no doubt, under a presentiment of Death; but it must always be remembered that such a presentiment often exists when it fails to be fulfilled; and it is very commonly engendered in the state of mind belonging to the condition in which she composed the prayer.

It would give me great pleasure to see you at Liverpool,[†2] if I had the least confidence in my own freedom for a moment under the circumstances which will take me there. But I have so much business to transact at times, and have to keep myself so quiet at other times, and have so many people to give directions to, and make arrangements with (four travel with me), that I see no one while I am on this Tour, and have to be always grimly self-denying and heroic. So I shall hope to see you in London, at some time when I am in a less virtuous, and less hurried and worried, condition.

With my love to Ella, and kindest regard to Mr. Winter,

Ever Affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Winter

To MRS CORNELIUS, 17 AUGUST 1858

Text from N, III, 40.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS,
Tuesday Seventeenth August 1858

My Dear Anne,

I enclose you a letter from Miss Hogarth. I have taken an exceedingly bad cold at Gad's Hill. In case I should not be at Tavistock House tonight before you go to bed, will you leave me two mustard poultices — one for my throat, and one for my chest.

Tomorrow morning, call me at 7 please, and let me have breakfast at 8.

Always affecly. yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 18 AUGUST 1858

MS Dickens House.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Wednesday Morning Eighteenth August 1858

My Dearest Georgy

I write this hurried line before starting, to report that my cold is decidedly better, thank God (though still bad), and that I hope to be able to stagger through, tonight.[†1] After dinner yesterday, I began to recover my voice, and I think I sang half the Irish Melodies[†2] to myself as I walked about, to test it.[†3] I got home at 1/2 past 10, and mustard-poulticed and barley-watered myself, tremendously.

Love to the dear girls and to all.

Ever Affectionately
CD.

To JOHN SMITH,[†4] 19 AUGUST 1858

Extract in John Wilson catalogue No. 40 (1979); MS 2 pp.; dated Adelphi Hotel, Liverpool, 19 Aug 58;[†5] addressed John Smith Esquire | 11 Lord Street Liverpool.

Declining an invitation having many demands on my time and attention while I am away from Household Words and because I am at present obliged to nurse a very severe cold, which I took last Sunday, when I was playing among my children at my little country place in Kent.... I had a very good audience last night, and a very apprehensive one.[†6] I don't know what is to be done tonight.[†7] But I hear there is to be a great press tomorrow.[†8]

To JOHN FORSTER, [20 AUGUST 1858]

Extracts in F, VIII, iv, 662 and F, 1872-4, III, ix, 198*n. Date:* both extracts dated 20 Aug 58, according to Forster.

An audience of two thousand three hundred people (the largest he had had) greeted him at Liverpool and, besides the tickets sold, more than two hundred pounds in money was taken at the doors. They turned away hundreds, sold all the books, rolled on the ground of my room knee-deep in checks, and made a perfect pantomime of the whole thing.[†9]

We are reduced sometimes to a ludicrous state of distress by the quantity of silver we have to carry about. Arthur Smith is always accompanied by an immense black leather-bag full.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 20 AUGUST 1858

MS Dickens House. Address (MS Heritage Book Shop Inc): Miss Hogarth | Gad's Hill Place | Higham by Rochester | Kent. PM Liverpool 20 Aug 58.

Adelphi Hotel, Liverpool
Friday Night, Twentieth August | 1858

My Dearest Georgy

I received your welcome and interesting letter today, and I write you a very hurried and bad reply. But it is after the reading, and you will take the will for the deed under those trying circumstances, I know.

We have had a tremendous night. The largest house I have ever had since I first began. 2,300 people. †aOver £200 in money. Last night, and the night before, we had over £100 each night.†a Tomorrow afternoon at 3, I read again.†1

My cold has been oppressive, and is not yet gone. I have been very hard to sleep too, and last night I was all but sleepless. This morning I was very dull and seedy. But I got a good walk, and picked up again. It has been blowing all day, and I fear we shall have a sick passage over to Dublin tomorrow night.

Tell Mamie (with my dear love to her and Katie), that I will write to her from Dublin: probably on Sunday. Tell her too, that the stories she told me in her letter were not only capital stories in themselves but excellently told too.

†aYou may say the same to yourself (if you like) of your description of Sydney.†a†2

What Arthur's state has been tonight — he, John, Berry, and Boycett,†3 all taking money and going mad together — you cannot imagine. They turned away hundreds, sold all the books, rolled on the ground of my room knee deep in checks, and made a perfect Pantomime of the whole thing. He has kept quite well, I am happy to say, and sends a hundred loves.

†aSo do I — to the darling Plorn — and to all the boys — and most of all to you. Wills had best be written to, to write to Chambers for the exact longer address. I have not the least remembrance of it. Frank's note to Miss Coutts, also, had best go to him.†a

In great haste and fatigue, | Ever affecy.

CD.

To PATRICK ALLAN-FRASER, 21 AUGUST 1858†

MS Private.

Adelphi Hotel, Liverpool.
Saturday Twenty First August 1858

My Dear Sir

I have received your letter here this morning with great pleasure — though that feeling is dashed by two circumstances. I cannot come to Arbroath,[†1] and I cannot come to see you. Simply, because my Tour is now made up and completed, and every moment of my time is parcelled out and allotted.[†2] I must therefore hope to receive a visit from you in Dundee.

What a dreadfully Southern fellow Egg is! What an awful enquiry that of his, respecting Arbroath! If I had asked a question of you concerning that town (in which I most devoutly believe), it would have been, whether there was a public room in it, small enough for my modest purpose. I tremble when I think of its Provost.[†3] Richard Whittington was never thrice Provost of Arbroath. If he had been, what a story his Life would have made!

I am heartily sorry not to be able to accept either of your kind invitations; but it is a consequence of the work in which I am now engaged, that it obliges me to forego all social pleasures for the time.

My Dear Sir | Very cordially Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Patrick Allan Fraser Esquire

To W. H. WILLS, 21 AUGUST 1858

MS Huntington Library.

Adelphi Hotel, Liverpool.
Saturday Twenty First August | 1858

My Dear Wills

I send this to Sheffield at a flying venture.

The Liverpool Audience has been altogether different from our Theatrical experience of it.[†4] Quite as good as St. Martin's Hall. A great call, every night. Every point taken. The nicest and finest bits in Little Dombey, hitting like chain-shot. Last night, we had the greatest house, both in numbers and money, we have ever had: London included. There were 2,300 people and 200 guineas. The turn-away from the Shilling part, was very large. On each of the two previous nights we had 100 guineas, and (if the day should keep moderately fine) we expect a very good afternoon to day at 3.

The crossing to Ireland tonight is not likely to be very agreeable, for it has been exceedingly squally these last two days.

I observe in H.W. that "Running the Gauntlet"[†5] (an article with good stuff in it) has been very badly looked over. "That" is constantly put for "Who", which is a great vulgarity.[†1] Such an expression too, as "vowed him revenge"[†2] is extremely bad.

Wilkie's paper,[†3] very funny. Just what we want.

With kind regard to Mrs. Wills, and all kinds of remembrances from Arthur,

Ever Faithfully

CD.

P.S. As new places are constantly proposing themselves to be brought into the Tour, I have arranged with Arthur that it shall now be wound up, so that I may be able to get to work in London, on the 15th. of Novr. — with a view to the Xmas No. I will talk over my idea with Wilkie, and ascertain if he feels up to it.[†4] If he should not, when I expound it to him, — then perhaps it might be best to have a round of Stories. But nous verrons.

To EDMUND YATES, 21 AUGUST 1858

MS Robert H. Taylor Collection, Princeton University.

Adelphi Hotel, Liverpool
Saturday Twenty First August | 1858.

My Dear Edmund

I return you Ouvry's letter. It is all right. I think he should not proceed to issuing of a Writ, however, until we have thoroughly ascertained that the Action is to go on. Ascertained (I mean), that you are properly supported in it, and are not to be left to bear too much of the expence. Nothing is lost, during the Long Vacation, by this pause.[†5]

The Portrait-Circular[†6] has amused us immensely.

A wonderful house here last night. The largest in numbers, and the largest in money we have ever had, including St. Martin's Hall. There were 2,300 people, and 200 guineas. The very books were all sold out, early in the evening, and Arthur bathed in checks — took headers into tickets — floated on billows of passes — dived under weirs of shillings — staggered home, faint with gold and silver.

He sends his kindest regard.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

I re-open this, to tell you that I encountered Thackeray and Fladgate[†7] on the steps of the Reform Club. We spoke as if nothing had happened — except that Fladgate's eyebrows went up into the crown of his hat, and he twisted himself into extraordinary forms.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 23 AUGUST 1858

MS Berg Collection. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Care of W. H. Wills Esquire | 16 Wellington Street North | Strand | London | W.C.

Morrison's Hotel,[†1] Dublin
Monday Twenty Third August. 1858.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I shall address this to Mr. Wills, as I am not certain where you may be. I passed through Bangor last Saturday night at midnight, and wondered whether you were there.

My dear friend, I quite understand and appreciate your feeling that there must be no reservation between us, and that we must not have a skeleton in a closet, and make belief it is not there. But I must not enter on the wretched subject, upon false pretences. I must not do what would make my dear girls out to be a sort of phænomona, and what would make my own relations with Mrs. Dickens, incomprehensible. Since we spoke of her before, she has caused me unspeakable agony of mind; and I must plainly put before you what I know to be true, and what nothing shall induce me to affect to doubt. She does not — and she never did — care for the children; and the children do not — and they never did — care for her. The little play that is acted in your Drawing-room is not the truth, and the less the children play it, the better for themselves, because they know it is not the truth.[†2] (If I stood before you at this moment and told you what difficulty we have to get Frank, for instance, to go near his mother, or keep near his mother, you would stand amazed.) As to Mrs. Dickens's "simplicity" in speaking of me and my doings, O my dear Miss Coutts do I not know that the weak hand that never could help or serve my name in the least, has struck at it — in conjunction with the wickedest people, whom I have loaded with benefits![†3] I want to communicate with her no more. I want to forgive her and forget her.

I could not begin a course of references to her, without recording, as between you and me, what I know to be true. It would be monstrous to myself, and to the children also. From Walter away in India, to Little Plornish at Gad's Hill there is a grim knowledge among them, as familiar to them as their knowledge of Day light that what I now write, is the plain bare fact. She has always disconcerted them; they have always disconcerted her; and she is glad to be rid of them, and they are glad to be rid of her.[†4] No more of it here.

The country expedition has been doing extremely well. The expenses are large (including Mr. Smith's share, about 50 per cent), but the returns come out handsomely. At Liverpool last week, I read 4 times. The audiences amounted to about 6,300 people. My clear profit, after all deductions, was £260.9.0. What we are going to do here, I don't know. The Dublin audience are accustomed to do nothing in the way of taking places, until the last moment, or until they actually "take them" by walking in at the Doors. We are therefore quite in the Dark. I read the Carol here tonight[†1] — the Chimes tomorrow — Little Dombey on Wednesday morning — and the Poor Traveller &c on Thursday evening. We had a five hours passage from Holyhead in the night of Saturday, and it was very, very, nasty.

I am greatly surprised by this place. It is very much larger than I had supposed, and very much more populous and busy. Upon the whole it is no shabbier than London is, and the people seem to enjoy themselves more than the London people do. The old town of Edinburgh is a thousand times more squalid than the bye places I have seen in Dublin; and I have wandered about it for 6 or 8 hours in all directions. It may be presumed that it has greatly improved of late years. There are far fewer spirit shops than I have been used to see in great cities. And even Donnybrook Fair[†2] (which is on now, though sought to be abolished)[†3] is less disagreeable than Chalk Farm;[†4] and I have seen numbers of common people buying the most innocent and *un*life-like of Dolls there, for their little children.

Among my English audiences, I have had more clergymen than I ever saw in my life before. It is very curious to see how many people in black come to Little Dombey. And when it is over they almost uniformly go away as if the child were really Dead — with a hush upon them. They certainly laugh more at the Boots' story of the Little Elopement,[†5] than at anything else; and I notice that they sit with their heads on one side, and an expression of playful pity on their faces — as if they saw the tiny boy and girl.[†6] Which is tender and pleasant, I think? The Chimes is always a surprise. They fall into it with a start, and look at me in the strangest way before they begin to applaud. The Cratchit family in the Carol are always a delight. And they always visibly lie in wait for Tiny Tim. The little books sell extraordinarily[†7] well. Besides being in every bookshop window in every place, my men alone will sell from 6 to 12 dozen in a night. I think I have now told you every bit of egotism I can screw out of myself. But I know that you and Mrs. Brown (to whom I send my love) will be interested in these scraps.

I shall hope to find another letter from you, somewhere, soon, telling me how you both are, and whether you have found any place to breathe in. Then I will report further of my proceedings. Ever Dear Miss Coutts, Yours affecy. & faithfully

CD.

To MISS KATE DICKENS, [?23 AUGUST 1858]

Mention in To Georgina Hogarth, 25 Aug. Date: presumably written the day before the proposed visit.

Telling her of his plan to visit Queenstown[†1] on 24 Aug.

To MISS MARY DICKENS, 23 AUGUST 1858

Extract in MDGH, II, 56.

Morrison's Hotel, Dublin, Monday, Aug. 23rd, 1858.

We had a nasty crossing here. We left Holyhead at one in the morning, and got here at six. Arthur was incessantly sick the whole way. I was not sick at all, but was in as healthy a condition otherwise as humanity need be. We are in a beautiful hotel. Our sitting-room is exactly like the drawing-room at the Peschiere in all its dimensions.[†2] I never saw two rooms so exactly resembling one another in their proportions. Our bedrooms too are excellent, and there are baths and all sorts of comforts.

The Lord Lieutenant[†3] is away, and the place looks to me as if its professional life were away too. Nevertheless, there are numbers of people in the streets. Somehow, I hardly seem to think we are going to do enormously here; but I have scarcely any reason for supposing so (except that a good many houses are shut up); and I know nothing about it, for Arthur is now gone to the agent and to the room. The men came by boat direct from Liverpool. They had a rough passage, were all ill, and did not get here till noon yesterday. Donnybrook Fair, or what remains of it, is going on, within two or three miles of Dublin. They went out there yesterday in a jaunting-car, and John described it to us at dinner-time (with his eyebrows lifted up, and his legs well asunder), as "Johnny Brooks's Fair;" at which Arthur, who was drinking bitter ale, nearly laughed himself to death. Berry is always unfortunate, and when I asked what had happened to Berry on board the steamboat, it appeared that "an Irish gentleman which was drunk, and fancied himself the captain, wanted to knock Berry down."

I am surprised by finding this place very much larger than I had supposed it to be. Its bye-parts are bad enough, but cleaner, too, than I had supposed them to be, and certainly very much cleaner than the old town of Edinburgh. The man who drove our jaunting-car yesterday hadn't a piece in his coat as big as a penny roll, and had had his hat on (apparently without brushing it) ever since he was grown up. But he was remarkably intelligent and agreeable, with something to say about everything. For instance, when I asked him what a certain building was, he didn't say "courts of law" and nothing else, but: "Av you plase, sir, it's the foor coorts o'looyers, where Misther O'Connell[†1] stood his trial[†2] wunst, ye'll remimber, sir, afore I tell ye of it." When we got into the Phœnix Park,[†3] he looked round him as if it were his own, and said: "THAT's a park, sir, av yer plase." I complimented it, and he said: "Gintlemen tills me as they'r bin, sir, over Europe, and never see a park aqualling ov it. 'Tis eight mile roond, sir, ten mile and a half long, and in the month of May the hawthorn trees are as beautiful as brides with their white jewels on. Yonder's the vice-regal lodge, sir; in them two corners lives the two sicretirries, wishin I was them, sir. There's air here, sir, av yer plase! There's scenery here, sir! There's mountains — thim, sir! Yer coonsider it a park, sir? It is that, sir!"

You should have heard John in my bedroom this morning endeavouring to imitate a bath-man, who had resented his interference, and had said as to the shower-bath: "Yer'll not be touching that, young man. Divil a touch yer'll touch o' that insthrument, young man!" It was more ridiculously unlike the reality than I can express to you, yet he was so delighted with his powers that he went off in the absurdest little gingerbeery giggle, backing into my portmanteau all the time.

My dear love to Katie and to Georgy, also to the noble Plorn and all the boys. I shall write to Katie next, and then to Aunty. My cold, I am happy to report, is very much better. I lay in the wet all night on deck, on board the boat, but am not as yet any the worse for it. Arthur was quite insensible when we got to Dublin, and stared at our luggage without in the least offering to claim it. He left his kindest love for all before he went out. I will keep the envelope open until he comes in.

Ever, my dearest Mamie, | Your most affectionate Father

[CD]

To JOHN FORSTER, [?23 AUGUST 1858]

Extracts in F, VIII, iv, 662. Date: probably the same day as To Mamie Dickens, 23 Aug.

He had found Dublin to have altogether an unexpectedly thriving look, being almost as big, he first thought, as Paris; of which some places in it, such as the quays on the river, reminded him. Half the first day he was in Dublin [Sunday, 22 Aug] he had spent exploring, walking till tired, and then taking a car. Power,[†4] dressed for the character of Teddy the Tiler, drove me: in a suit of patches, and with his hat unbrushed for twenty years. Wonderfully pleasant, light, intelligent, and careless.

The number of common people he saw in his drive, also riding about in cars as hard as they could split, reminded him, but for the dresses, of the Toledo at Naples.[†5]

To PERCY FITZGERALD, 24 AUGUST 1858

MS Mr G. V. Roberts.

Morrison's Hotel
Tuesday Evening Twenty Fourth August | 1858

My Dear Sir

A thousand thanks for your letter.[†1] But my availing myself of your kindness is quite impossible. I read tomorrow afternoon at 3 — and you may faintly imagine (but not sufficiently), what my correspondence is with London, when I get a few hours to devote to it.

I shall hope to see you before I leave this — that is to say, sometime on Thursday Morning, when I shall do myself the pleasure of calling on you.[†2] It will give me great pleasure to assure you personally, of the interest and satisfaction I shall have, in seeing you in London when you come there.

Pray believe that I shall be delighted to know you better, and that my present determination is a "hard" one to myself, and is not in the least meritorious.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Percy Fitz Gerald Esquire

To EDWARD DOUDNEY, [25 AUGUST 1858]

Mention in next.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 25 AUGUST 1858

Extract in MDGH, II, 58-63.

Morrison's Hotel, Dublin, Wednesday, Aug. 25th, 1858.

I begin my letter to you to-day, though I don't know when I may send it off. We had a very good house last night, after all, that is to say, a great rush of shillings and good half-crowns, though the stalls were comparatively few. For "Little Dombey," this morning, we have an immense stall let — already more than two hundred — and people are now fighting in the agent's shop to take more. Through some mistake of our printer's, the evening reading for this present Wednesday was dropped, in a great part of the announcements, and the agent opened no plan for it. I have therefore resolved not to have it at all. Arthur Smith has waylaid me in all manner of ways, but I remain obdurate. I am frightfully tired, and really relieved by the prospect of an evening — overjoyed.

They were a highly excitable audience last night, but they certainly did not comprehend — internally and intellectually comprehend — "The Chimes" as a London audience do.[†1] I am quite sure of it. I very much doubt the Irish capacity of receiving the pathetic; but of their quickness as to the humorous there can be no doubt. I shall see how they go along with Little Paul, in his death, presently.

While I was at breakfast this morning, a general officer was announced with great state — having a staff at the door — and came in, booted and plumed, and covered with Crimean decorations. It was Cunninghame,[†2] whom we knew in Genoa — then a captain. He was very hearty indeed, and came to ask me to dinner. Of course I couldn't go. Olliffe has a brother at Cork,[†3] who had just now (noon) written to me, proposing dinners and excursions in that neighbourhood which would fill about a week; I being there a day and a half, and reading three times. The work will be very severe here, and I begin to feel depressed by it. (By "here," I mean Ireland generally, please to observe.)

We meant, as I said in a letter to Katie, to go to Queenstown yesterday and bask on the seashore. But there is always so much to do that we couldn't manage it after all. We expect a tremendous house to-morrow night as well as to-day; and Arthur is at the present instant up to his eyes in business (and seats), and, between his regret at losing to-night, and his desire to make the room hold twice as many as it will hold, is half distracted. I have become a wonderful Irishman — must play an Irish part some day — and his only relaxation is when I enact "John and the Boots," which I consequently do enact all day long. The papers are full of remarks upon my white tie, and describe it as being of enormous size, which is a wonderful delusion, because, as you very well know, it is a small tie. Generally, I am happy to report, the Emerald press is in favour of my appearance, and likes my eyes.[†4] But one gentleman comes out with a letter at Cork, wherein he says that although only forty-six I look like an old man. He is a rum customer, I think.

The Rutherfords[†5] are living here, and wanted me to dine with them, which, I needn't say, could not be done; all manner of people have called, but I have seen only two. John has given it up altogether as to rivalry with the Boots, and did not come into my room this morning at all. Boots appeared triumphant and alone. He was waiting for me at the hotel-door last night. "Whaa't sart of a hoose, sur?" he asked me. "Capital." "The Lard be praised fur the 'onor o' Dooblin!"

Arthur buys bad apples in the streets and brings them home and doesn't eat them, and then I am obliged to put them in the balcony because they make the room smell faint. Also he meets countrymen with honeycomb on their heads, and leads them (by the buttonhole when they have one) to this gorgeous establishment and requests the bar to buy honeycomb for his breakfast; then it stands upon the sideboard uncovered and the files fall into it. He buys owls, too, and castles, and other horrible objects, made in bog-oak (that material which is not appreciated at Gad's Hill); and he is perpetually snipping pieces out of newspapers and sending them all over the world. While I am reading he conducts the correspondence, and his great delight is to show me seventeen or eighteen letters when I come, exhausted, into the retiring-place. Berry has not got into any particular trouble for forty-eight hours, except that he is all over boils. I have prescribed the yeast, but ineffectually. It is indeed a sight to see him and John sitting in pay-boxes, and surveying Ireland out of pigeon-holes.

Same Evening before Bed-time.

Everybody was at "Little Dombey" to-day, and although I had some little difficulty to work them up in consequence of the excessive crowding of the place, and the difficulty of shaking the people into their seats, the effect was unmistakable and profound. The crying was universal, and they were extraordinarily affected. There is no doubt we could stay here a week with that one reading, and fill the place every night. Hundreds of people have been there to-night, under the impression that it would come off again. It was a most decided and complete success.[†1]

Arthur has been imploring me to stop here on the Friday after Limerick, and read "Little Dombey" again. But I have positively said "No." The work is too hard. It is not like doing it in one easy room, and always the same room. With a different place every night, and a different audience with its own peculiarity every night, it is a tremendous strain. I was sick of it to-day before I began, then got myself into wonderful train.

Here follows a dialogue (but it requires imitation), which I had yesterday morning with a little boy of the house — landlord's son, I suppose — about Plorn's age. I am sitting on the sofa writing, and find him sitting beside me.

INIMITABLE.[†2] Holloa, old chap.

YOUNG IRELAND. Hal-loo!

INIMITABLE (in his delightful way). What a nice old fellow you are. I am very fond of little boys.

YOUNG IRELAND. Air yer? Ye'r right.

INIMITABLE. What do you learn, old fellow?

YOUNG IRELAND (very intent on Inimitable, and always childish, except in his brogue). I lairn wureds of three sillibils, and wureds of two sillibils, and wureds of one sillibil.

INIMITABLE (gaily). Get out, you humbug! You learn only words of one syllable.

YOUNG IRELAND (laughs heartily). You may say that it is mostly wureds of one sillibil.

INIMITABLE. Can you write?

YOUNG IRELAND. Not yet. Things comes by deegrays.

INIMITABLE. Can you cipher?

YOUNG IRELAND (very quickly). Wha'at's that?

INIMITABLE. Can you make figures?

YOUNG IRELAND. I can make a nought, which is not asy, being roond.

INIMITABLE. I say, old boy, wasn't it you I saw on Sunday morning in the hall, in a soldier's cap? You know — in a soldier's cap?

YOUNG IRELAND (cogitating deeply). Was it a very good cap?

INIMITABLE. Yes.

YOUNG IRELAND. Did it fit unkommon?

INIMITABLE. Yes.

YOUNG IRELAND. Dat was me!

There are two stupid old louts at the room, to show people into their places, whom John calls "them two old Paddies," and of whom he says, that he "never see nothing like them (snigger) hold idiots" (snigger). They bow and walk backwards before the grandees, and our men hustle them while they are doing it.

We walked out last night, with the intention of going to the theatre; but the Piccolomini establishment[†1] (they were doing the "Lucia")[†2] looked so horribly like a very bad jail, and the Queen's[†3] looked so blackguardly, that we came back again, and went to bed. I seem to be always either in a railway carriage, or reading, or going to bed. I get so knocked up, whenever I have a minute to remember it, that then I go to bed as a matter of course.

I send my love to the noble Plorn, and to all the boys. To dear Mamie and Katie, and to yourself of course, in the first degree. I am looking forward to the last Irish reading on Thursday, with great impatience. But when we shall have turned this week, once knocked off Belfast, I shall see land, and shall (like poor Timber[†4] in the days of old) "keep up a good heart." I get so wonderfully hot every night in my dress clothes, that they positively won't dry in the short interval they get, and I have been obliged to write to Doudney's[†5] to make me another suit, that I may have a constant change.

Ever, my dearest Georgy, most affectionately

[CD]

To MRS RUTHERFURD, 25 AUGUST 1858*

MS National Library of Scotland.

Morrison's Hotel, Dublin
Wednesday Twenty Fifth August | 1858.

My Dear Mrs. Rutherford

I owe you many thanks for your kind note, and I much regret that the constant occupation of my time during my hurried visit here disables me from making any engagements or calls whatever. I am a perfect galley-slave at this time. Nor have I any of my family with me; for, though it would have been delightful to me to bring my girls, my movements are so rapid and comfortless, that I denied myself that pleasure too.

I am sorry to receive so Nelsonic an account of Major Rutherford's right hand. But I am sure he knows that he cannot have a better one than he finds in you.

With kind regard to him and all your house, I am ever

Dear Mrs. Rutherford | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Rutherford

To P. MEADOWS TAYLOR,[†1] 26 AUGUST 1858

MS Fales Collection, New York University Library.

Morrison's Hotel. | Thursday, Twenty Sixth August 1858

My Dear Sir

I thank you heartily for your token of remembrance.[†2] It will have a great interest for me as long as it lasts — and much longer. I shall not easily dissociate Dublin from the remembrance of your cordial and cheery visit.

With hearty good wishes | My Dear Sir | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

P. Meadows Taylor Esquire

To MISS MARY DICKENS, 28 AUGUST 1858

Extract in MDGH, II, 63-5.

Belfast, Saturday, Aug. 28th, 1858.

When I went down to the Rotunda at Dublin on Thursday night, I said to Arthur, who came rushing at me: "You needn't tell me. I know all about it." The moment I had come out of the door of the hotel (a mile off), I had come against the stream of people turned away. I had struggled against it to the room. There, the crowd in all the lobbies and passages was so great, that I had a difficulty in getting in. They had broken all the glass in the pay-boxes. They had offered frantic prices for stalls.[†3]

Eleven bank-notes were thrust into that pay-box (Arthur saw them) at one time, for eleven stalls. Our men were flattened against walls, and squeezed against beams. Ladies stood all night with their chins against my platform. Other ladies sat all night upon my steps. You never saw such a sight. And the reading went tremendously! It is much to be regretted that we troubled ourselves to go anywhere else in Ireland. We turned away people enough to make immense houses for a week.[†1]

We arrived here yesterday at two. The room will not hold more than from eighty to ninety pounds.[†2] The same scene was repeated with the additional feature, that the people are much rougher here than in Dublin, and that there was a very great uproar at the opening of the doors, which, the police in attendance being quite inefficient and only looking on, it was impossible to check. Arthur was in the deepest misery because shillings got into stalls, and half-crowns got into shillings, and stalls got nowhere, and there was immense confusion.[†3] It ceased, however, the moment I showed myself; and all went most brilliantly, in spite of a great piece of the cornice of the ceiling falling with a great crash within four or five inches of the head of a young lady on my platform (I was obliged to have people there), and in spite of my gas suddenly going out at the time of the game of forfeits at Scrooge's nephew's, through some Belfastian gentleman accidentally treading on the flexible pipe, and needing to be relighted.[†4]

We shall not get to Cork before mid-day on Monday; it being difficult to get from here on a Sunday. We hope to be able to start away to-morrow morning to see the Giant's Causeway[†5] (some sixteen miles off), and in that case we shall sleep at Dublin to-morrow night, leaving here by the train at half-past three in the afternoon. Dublin, you must understand, is on the way to Cork. This is a fine place, surrounded by lofty hills. The streets are very wide, and the place is very prosperous.[†6] The whole ride from Dublin here is through a very picturesque and various country; and the amazing thing is, that it is all particularly neat and orderly, and that the houses (outside at all events) are all brightly whitewashed and remarkably clean. I want to climb one of the neighbouring hills before this morning's "Dombey." I am now waiting for Arthur, who has gone to the bank to remit his last accumulation of treasure to London.

Our men are rather indignant with the Irish crowds, because in the struggle they don't sell books, and because, in the pressure, they can't force a way into the room afterwards to sell them. They are deeply interested in the success, however, and are as zealous and ardent as possible. I shall write to Katie next. Give her my best love, and kiss the darling Plorn for me, and give my love to all the boys.

Ever, my dearest Mamie, | Your most affectionate Father

[CD]

To JOHN FORSTER, [?29 AUGUST 1858]

Extracts in F, VIII, iv, 664, 1872-4, III, ix, 198*n* and VIII, iv, 661. Date: first two extracts same day as To Georgina Hogarth, 29 Aug; third extract undated but possibly from same letter.

Answering Forster's letter on a personal matter,[†1] and inviting him and Mrs Forster to Gad's Hill. Belfast he liked quite as much as Dublin in another way. A fine place with a rough people; everything looking prosperous; the railway ride from Dublin quite amazing in the order, neatness, and cleanness of all you see; every cottage looking as if it had been whitewashed the day before; and many with charming gardens, prettily kept with bright flowers.

Mr. Smith had an illness a couple of days later,[†2] and CD describes his rapid recovery on discovering the state of their balances. He is now sitting opposite to me on a bag of £40 of silver. It must be dreadfully hard.

The greatest personal affection and respect had greeted him everywhere. Nothing could have been more strongly marked or warmly expressed; and the readings had gone quite wonderfully.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 29 AUGUST 1858

MS Dickens House.

Morrison's Hotel, Dublin
Sunday Night Twenty Ninth August 1858

My Dearest Georgy

I am so delighted to find your letter here tonight (11 o'Clock), and am so afraid that in the wear and tear of this strange life I have written to Gad's Hill in the wrong order and have not written to you as I should — that I resolve to write this before going to bed. You will find it a wretchedly stupid letter, but you may imagine my dearest girl that I am tired.

[†a]For novelty's sake, I will give you some statistics. To understand which, you must be informed that Arthur charges every place with its proportion of the next prospective expenses. For instance, before my profit is declared here, it is debited with the journey to Belfast; and before my profit is declared at Belfast, it is debited in its turn with its share of our expenses home to London. After all these deductions, and after paying Arthur's share, I made here £210, and at Belfast (in two days) £130. With a good return at Cork,[†1] and nothing very great at Limerick[†2] from which we don't expect much (except pretty women, for which it is famous), I shall have made a handsome Thousand Pounds since I left Gad's Hill on our country Tour! That is, no doubt, immense; our expenses being necessarily large, and the travelling party being always five.[†a]

The success at Belfast has been equal to the success here. Enormous![†3] I think them a better audience on the whole than Dublin;[†4] and the personal affection there, was something overwhelming. I wish you and the dear girls could have seen the people look at me in the street — or heard them ask me, as I hurried to the hotel after reading last night to "do me the honor to shake hands Misther Dickens and God bless you Sir; not only for the light you have been to me this night; but for the light you've been in mee house Sir (and God love your face!) this many a year." Every night, by the bye, since I have been in Ireland, the ladies have beguiled John out of the bouquet from my coat. And yesterday morning, as I had showered the leaves from my geranium in reading Little Dombey, they mounted the platform after I was gone, and picked them all up, as keepsakes.

I have never seen men go in to cry so undisguisedly as they did at that reading yesterday afternoon. They made no attempt whatever to hide it, and certainly cried more than the women. As to the Boots at night — and Mrs. Gamp too — it was just one roar with me and them.[†5] For they made me laugh so, that sometimes I could not compose my face to go on.

You must not let the new idea of poor dear Landor, efface the former image of the fine old man.[†6] I wouldn't blot him out, in his tender gallantry, as he sat upon that bed at Forster's that night, for a million of wild mistakes at 80 years of age.[†1]

[†a]I received at Belfast this morning, a very watchful and true and excellent letter from Forster, on a personal matter.[†2] I answered it immediately. I asked him if he and Mrs. Forster could come to Gad's Hill next Sunday, and stay Monday. If they could, I begged them to write to dear Mamie.[†a]

I hope to be at Tavistock House before 5 o'Clock next Saturday morning, and to lie in bed half the day, and to come home by the 10.50 on Sunday.

Tell the girls that Arthur and I have each ordered at Belfast a trim, sparkling, slap-up Irish jaunting car!!![†3] I flatter myself we shall astonish the Kentish people. It is the oddest carriage in the world, and you are always falling off. But it is gay and bright in the highest degree. Wonderfully Neapolitan.

What with a sixteen mile ride before we left Belfast, and a sea Beach walk, and a two o'Clock dinner, and a seven hours' railway ride since, I am — as we say here — "a thrifle weary". But I really am in wonderful force, considering the work. For which I am, as I ought to be, very thankful.

Arthur was exceedingly unwell last night — could not cheer up at all. He was so very unwell that he left the Hall (!) and became invisible after my five minutes' rest. I found him at the Hotel in a jacket and slippers, and with a hot bath just ready. He was in the last stage of prostration. The local agent was with me, and proposed that he (the wretched Arthur) should go to his office and balance the accounts then and there. He went, in the jacket and slippers, and came back, in 20 minutes, perfectly well, in consequence of the admirable balance. (He is now sitting opposite to me, ON THE BAG OF SILVER [†4] (£40; it must be dreadfully hard), writing to Boulogne.[†5]

I suppose it is clear that the next letter I write, is Katie's. Either from Cork, or from Limerick, it shall report further. At Limerick I read in the Theatre: there being no other place.

[†a]Fancy FREDERICK [†6] presenting himself here, in this house, to me, last Thursday a few minutes before Dinner. I was dreadfully hard with him at first; but relented.[†a†7]

Best love to Mamie and Katie, and dear Plorn, and all the boys left when this comes to Gad's Hill; also to my dear good Anne,[†1] and — her little woman.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To MRS MADDEN,[†2] 31 AUGUST 1858*

MS Fales Collection, New York University Library.

Imperial Hotel, Cork. | Tuesday Thirty First August, 1858.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mrs. Madden, and, in reply to Mrs. Madden's obliging note, begs to express his great regret that his arrangements do not admit of his reading again in Dublin. It would have given him the greatest pleasure to do so, had such a thing been possible.

September

To MRS CORNELIUS, 2 SEPTEMBER 1858

Text from N, III, 49.

Limerick | Thursday Second September 1858

Dear Anne,

The trains and boats are so arranged that I doubt if I can get home before about eleven in the forenoon of Saturday. Will you keep breakfast laid up for two, in case Mr. Arthur should come home with me to have some.

Affectionately yours always

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To F. D. FINLAY,[†3] 2 SEPTEMBER 1858

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.

(which means, Limerick)

Thursday Second September 1858.

My Dear Mr. Finlay

We are not deterred from the achievement of our desperate purpose, by the additional cost. Therefore, if you will have the kindness to order the Cars,[†1] we will astonish the counties of Kent and Sussex.[†2]

Cork was an immense success. We found upwards of a thousand Stalls let, for the three readings.[†3] A great many people were turned away too, on the last night. I did not think them, when I read the Carol, nearly as good an audience as Dublin or Belfast, in respect of demonstrative satisfaction. But they were excellent as to Dombey and the Boots too. Perhaps, on the occasion of the first reading, the fault was in myself. For I was not in very good spirits that evening.

There is not much to be done here, but it is a charming little Theatre[†4] for seeing and hearing (I read in the Theatre), and they were a highly sensitive, quick, and agreeable audience last night.

Tomorrow morning we turn our faces towards London. I shall carry there with me (and keep there with me) the remembrance of your most friendly aid, and the hope of seeing you in my own house.[†5]

P.S. Mr. Arthur Smith sends his kindest regard, and says (mysteriously) "he will write, about the color of his crest".[†6]

To LORD WILLIAM PITT LENNOX,[†7] 2 SEPTEMBER 1858

Text from Lord William Pitt Lennox, My Recollections from 1806 to 1873, 1874, II, 212.

Royal Hotel, Limerick, | Thursday, 2nd Sept., 1858.

Dear Lord William,

I have just received the extract[†8] you kindly sent me, and I cannot refrain from writing to thank you for the interest you feel in its concluding subject,[†1] and for the graceful manner in which that interest is expressed. I am sure you will be glad to know that you have given me a very great pleasure, and that I feel heartily obliged to you.

Faithfully yours always,
CHARLES DICKENS.

To W. H. WILLS, 2 SEPTEMBER 1858

MS Huntington Library.

Royal Hotel, Limerick | Thursday Second September 1858

My Dear Wills. I purpose being at the office next Tuesday afternoon, before starting again.[†2] I hope to be at Tavistock House at noon on Saturday, and to start for Gad's Hill on Sunday forenoon.

Belfast and Cork, as great successes as Dublin. Fancy, at Cork (by no means a large place) more than 1000 stalls being engaged for the three readings. I made last week, clear profit, £340; and have made, in the month of August, a profit of One Thousand Guineas! This, after paying our expences back to London, and halfway to Huddersfield. Pretty well, I think?

This is the oddest place — of which nobody in any other part of Ireland seems to know anything.[†3] Nobody could answer a single question we asked about it. There is no large room, and I read in the Theatre — a charming Theatre. The best I ever saw, to see and hear in. Arthur says that when he opened the doors last night, there was a rush of — three Ducks! We expect a Pig to-night. We had only £40; but they seemed to think that, amazing! If the two nights bring £100, it will be as much as we expected. I am bound to say that they are an admirable audience. As hearty and demonstrative as it is possible to be. It is a very odd place in its lower-order aspects, and I am very glad we came — though we could have made heaps of money by going to Dublin instead.[†4]

[†a]Frederick appeared in my room in Dublin! I was very hard with him at first, but relented.[†a]

Arthur sends you his kindest regard. He has been nearly torn to pieces in the shilling rushes, and has been so flattened against walls that he is only now beginning to "come round" again. My kindest remembrance to Mrs. Wills.

Ever Cordially

CD.

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 5 SEPTEMBER 1858

MS (copy in Mrs Dickens's hand) British Library.

Copy.

Gad's Hill Place | Kent. | Sunday Fifth Septr. 1858

My dear Sir

On coming home here to day from Ireland, for a rest of eight and forty hours, I am exceedingly pained to find that a letter written to me as a private and personal communication,[†1] has found its way into some of the London papers, extracted from an American paper.[†2] The letter was painfully necessary at the time when it was forced from me, as a private repudiation of monstrous scandals, but that it was never meant to appear in print, I suppose to be quite manifest from its own nature and terms.

I wish you would do me the favor to lose no time in informing Mr. Smith[†3] who acted for Mrs. Dickens in our separation, that I am no consenting party to this publication; that it cannot possibly be more offensive to any one in the world than it is to me; and that it has shocked and distressed me very much.[†4]

In short if you will send Mr. Smith this note when you have read it, you will express my present object in the briefest and plainest manner.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Frederick Ouvry Esq.

To WILKIE COLLINS, 6 SEPTEMBER 1858

Text in MDGH, II, 67-9, checked from MS Sotheby's, Apr 1968.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Sixth September 1858

My Dear Wilkie.

First, let me report myself here, for something less than eight and forty hours. I come last (and direct — a pretty hard journey) from Limerick. The success in Ireland has been immense, and, entre nous, I made by the Readings in this last month of August, clear profit, over and above all expences and Arthur Smith's share, One Thousand Guineas!

The work is very hard — sometimes, almost overpowering. But I am none the worse for it, and arrived here quite fresh.

Secondly, will you let me recommend the enclosed letter from Wigan,[†1] as the groundwork of a capital article, in your way, for H. W. There is not the least objection to a plain reference to him. Or to Phelps; to whom the same thing happened, a year or two ago, near Islington, in the case of a clever and capital little daughter of his. I think it a capital opportunity for a discourse on gentility, with a glance at those other schools which advertize that the "sons of gentlemen only" are admitted — and a just recognition of the greater liberality of our public schools. There are tradesmens' sons at Eton, and Charles Kean was at Eton, and Macready (also an actor's son) was at Rugby.[†2] Some such title as Scholastic Flunkeydom — or anything infinitely contemptuous — would help out the meaning.[†3] Surely such a schoolmaster must swallow all the silver forks that the Pupils are expected to take away with them when they go. And of course he could not exist, unless he had Flunkey customers by the dozen.[†4]

Secondly — no, this is thirdly now — about the Xmas No. I have arranged so to stop my Readings, as to be available for it on the [†a]15th. of November,[†a] which will leave me time to write a good article, if I clear my way to one. Do you see your way to our making a Xmas No. of this idea that I am going very briefly to hint? Some disappointed person, man or woman, prematurely disgusted with the world for some reason or no reason, [†b](the person should be young, I think)[†b] retires to an old lonely house, or an old lonely mill, or any thing you like, with one attendant: resolved to shut out the world and hold no communion with it. The one attendant sees the absurdity of the idea — pretends to humour it — but really tries to slaughter it. Everything that happens — everybody that comes near — every breath of human interest that floats into the old place from the village, or the heath, or the four cross roads near which it stands, and from which belated travellers stray into it — shews beyond mistake that you can't shut out the world — that you are in it to be of it — that you get into a false position the moment you try to sever yourself from it — and that you must mingle with it, and make the best of it, and make the best of yourself into the bargain.[†1]

If we could plot out a way of doing this together, I would not be afraid to take my part.[†2] If we could not, could we plot out a way of doing it, and taking in stories by other hands? If we could not do either (but I think we could) should we fall back upon a Round of Stories again? That, I would rather not do, if possible. Will you think about it?

And can you come and dine at Tavistock House, on Monday the 20th. Septr. at 1/2 past 5? I purpose being at home there with the girls, that day.

Answer this, according to my printed list for the week. I am off to Huddersfield on Wednesday morning.

[†c]I have been greatly vexed by the wantonness of some of our English papers in printing what is evidently on the face of it a private document of mine, violated in America and sent home here. But it is one of the penalties and drawbacks of my position. Any man who wants to sell his paper, has but to lay hold of me for a fillip. And if such men could only make a guess at the pain they give me — well, in that case, I suppose they would only do it the more! —

You know how often I have told you that granting the circulation of the Penny Periodicals[†3] (which is greatly exaggerated), I know they cannot pay.[†4] Forster tells me that he hears on good authority that Mr. Ingram is going about like a Madman as to that London Journal[†1] — declaring that he can get nothing out of it[†2] — that it is the paper maker's profit (which I know very well) — and that he, Ingram, will never be safe from ruin, until he has got rid "of all his bloodsuckers — with —

Mark Lemon

at their head"!!![†3]

With this improving anecdote[†c] I think I will leave off: merely adding that I have got a splendid brogue (it really is exactly like the people), and that I think of coming out as the only legitimate successor of poor Power.

Ever My Dear Wilkie | Affectionately Yours

CD

I direct this to Broadstairs. — I hope you are there.[†4]

To J. T. GORDON, 6 SEPTEMBER 1858*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Sixth September 1858.

My Dear Gordon.

I most heartily congratulate you on being once more at home; and I am touched and gratified by your so soon thinking of me under your own roof, and feeling assured of my cordial sympathy with you and interest in you, there and everywhere.

My life when I am reading, is of that arduous and hurried kind that I never stir out of Hotel quarters, or have the pleasure of visiting any friend while I am so engaged. Moreover, Arthur Smith is always with me, and I mean to bring Mamie and Katie to Edinburgh to shew them something of Scotland. But of course we shall meet, please God.

To my knowledge, I have no acquaintance whatever with the gentleman about whom you enquire. Some indistinct idea floats about in my head that I have been asked the like question concerning him, by some one else. I cannot get it into any tangible shape. Perhaps I may have met him somewhere. I certainly don't know him.

I am only just now at home for eight and forty hours, direct from Ireland. My success has been something wonderful.

With kind regard and remembrance | Ever Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

John T.[†5] Gordon Esquire

To JOHN HOLLINGSHEAD, 6 SEPTEMBER 1858

Extract in Dodd Mead catalogue No. 83; MS 2 pp.; dated Gad's Hill Place, 6 Sep 58; addressed Hollingshead.

I need not tell you that I have read your article[†1] with very great gratification,[†2] and that I heartily thank you for it. I know it expresses your honest opinions, manfully and well. The pride I have in it, is therefore an unalloyed one; and the welcome it gives me on coming home to rest for eight and forty hours, is therefore a delightful one. . . .

I am very curious and anxious to know how you got on in the Barges.... I have never seen a Barge these four weeks past — and I have seen many — but I have looked for you, smoking a pipe at the rudder.[†3]

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 6 SEPTEMBER 1858

MS Morgan Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Evening | Sixth September 1858

My Dear Miss Coutts

I am at home here tonight, after great fatigue (and great success, thank God!) in Ireland, — for no longer than eight and forty hours. Charley has come down to see me,[†4] and he tells me that he thinks the present is a time, in which a word of reminder at Baring Brothers, from a good source, might lead to his removal before long into one of their business opportunities out of London,[†5] no matter where, which would present a better opening than London does, to a young man of such capacity, education, and energy, as he possesses.

If you could find an occasion of mentioning this to Mr. Bates, would you object to do so? I know, and I always tell him — I mean Charley — that his rise must in the main depend upon himself. But I hope and believe he deserves well, and of course I know that any sign of your interest in him could not fail to serve him.

I would have gone to Mr. Bates myself in the course of tomorrow, but that I have the greatest delicacy in obtruding myself, either on his kindness, or on that of any other partner in the house. What a private gentleman need not scruple to do, my consciousness of my own notoriety shrinks from. I have a dread of seeming to force it on attention, when I desire nothing more than to be as quiet and modest under it as possible. Hence it is that I trouble you!

I beg to report myself as strong and well as if I had been doing nothing. With love to Mrs. Brown, Believe me ever

Yours faithfully and affecy.
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To [?PERCY FITZGERALD],[†1] [?6 SEPTEMBER 1858]

Fragment from Walter Spencer catalogue No. 196(b). Date: shortly after CD's return to England from his reading tour of Ireland 23 Aug-3 Sep 58.

I certainly have no thought of coming to Ireland again, but I hope you will let me see you in England whenever you come here.

Believe me | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MESSRS BRADBURY & EVANS, 7 SEPTEMBER 1858*

MS Dickens House.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS,
Tuesday Seventh September 1858

Messrs. Bradbury and Evans.

Please to deliver to the Bearer for me

1 Copy Carol
1 Do. Chimes
1 Do. Dombey
1 Do. Poor Traveller &c

— all, of the Reading Edition.

CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 7 SEPTEMBER 1858

MS Dickens House. Address: Miss Hogarth | Gad's Hill Place | Higham | by Rochester | Kent.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS,
Tuesday Seventh September 1858

My Dearest Georgy.

I have forgotten to pay Gibson and Bewsher's bill, and I cannot remember how much it is — a hundred and forty odd, I think.[†2]

Enclosed is the key of my Writing Table. Sit down at it. The second drawer from the bottom, on your right, will then contain the said bill, with a summary on it, in my writing, of the gross amount for the four boys. Write and tell me what that amount is, and also who are Gibson's bankers. You will see that, stated in print, on the top of one of the sheets of paper whereon the bills are made out.

I am not at all disposed to go away again. — Don't take to the idea at present, in the least. However, the time will go by, pretty quickly, please God.

With my dear love to the darling girls and to the solitary Plorn.

Ever your most affectionate[†1]

To MRS GORE, 7 SEPTEMBER 1858*

MS Berg Collection.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Tuesday Seventh September 1858

My Dear Mrs. Gore.

Being in town this morning for a few hours, in an interval in my series of Readings — which bind me hand and foot until November — I find your note. Believe me (but I know you will), I find it with the truest sorrow and the deepest sympathy. I am touched to the heart by your affectionate remembrance of me at such a time. Depend upon my having nothing to say to the sordid speculation in question — the nature of which, I perfectly understand.

Be of good heart about your brave boy.[†2] My boy was invalided long ago, and carried in a litter God knows how far and how long. But he began to get well, the moment he arrived at a Hill-Station, and his only care now, in the letters he writes home, is to get away from that easy life and be on service again.[†3] He had sun-stroke, a passing attack of small pox, and smart Fever.[†4] But he rallied, gaily — and so will your boy, please Heaven, before you can believe in his having had time to think of it.

If I do not hear of you in the meantime, I must write again to ask how your health[†5] and spirits are, when I next come to town for a few hours — about the middle of October. Until then and always, believe in the faithful, grateful, and affectionate regard of yours with all his heart

CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Gore.

To GABRIEL LEGOUVÉ, 7 SEPTEMBER 1858*

MS M. Jean Paladilhe.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Seventh September 1858.

My Dear Legouvé.

I cannot tell you how much pleasure I have had in the receipt of your letter, or what delight it gives me to be so remembered and honored by you.

Yet I am made more impatient than I can express either, by an omission you have accidentally made. The poem[†1] is not enclosed in your letter! Pray, pray, send it to me.

I write to you from my little country house, about 30 miles from London. As I shall be absent from here, and from London too, until the middle of November, I fervently hope that you will not make your projected visit to London before that time. I shall be charmed to take you by the hand again, and to renew and increase a friendship, the memory of which is one of my happiest souvenirs of Paris.

Believe me always | With very great regard | Your faithful friend
CHARLES DICKENS

A Monsieur Legouvé

To THOMAS BODDINGTON,[†2] 10 SEPTEMBER 1858*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Station Hotel York | Friday Tenth September 1858.

Dear Sir

I have received here to day, a note from our friend Miss Mary Boyle, explaining to me the nature of the honor you courteously propose to do me on the 29th. of this month.[†3]

Allow me to express my regret that I cannot have the gratification of accepting your kind invitation. I have arranged to be in Edinburgh on that day, and my engagement is a public one.

Dear Sir | Yours faithfully and obliged
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Boddington Esquire

To MISS MARY BOYLE, 10 SEPTEMBER 1858†

MS Morgan Library.

Station Hotel, York | Friday Tenth September 1858

Dearest Meery.

First let me tell you that all the Magicians and spirits in your employ have fulfilled the instructions of their wondrous Mistress, to admiration. Flowers have fallen in my path wheresoever I have trod; and when they have rained upon me at Cork I was more amazed than you ever saw me.[†4]

Secondly, receive my hearty and loving thanks for that same. — (Excuse a little Irish in the turning of that sentence, but I can't help it).

Thirdly, I have written direct to Mr. Boddington, explaining that I am bound to be in Edinburgh on the day when he courteously proposes to do me honor.

[†a]Finally, touching that other matter on which you write so tenderly and with a delicacy of regard and interest that I deeply feel. I hope I may report that I am calming down again. I have been exquisitely distressed. It is no comfort to me to know that any man who wants to sell any thing in print, has but to anatomize my finest nerves, and he is sure to do it — It is no comfort to me to know (as of course these dissectors do), that when I spoke in my own person[†1] it was not for myself but for the innocent and good, on whom I had unwittingly brought the foulest lies — Sometimes I cannot bear it. I had one of these fits yesterday, and was utterly desolate and lost. But it is gone, thank God, and the sky has brightened before me once more.

Ever, with great regard and affection | Yours dearest Meery
CHARLES DICKENS[†a]

To GEORGE HOLSWORTH, 10 SEPTEMBER 1858

MS Dickens House.

Station Hotel York | Friday Tenth September 1858
Dear Mr. Holsworth

Will you be so good as to cut out and put together for me, the Lazy Tour of the Two Idle Apprentices, complete.[†2] Send it, by return of post, addressed to me, "Assembly Rooms,[†3]

To JOHN FORSTER, [11 SEPTEMBER 1858]

Extracts in F, VIII, iv, 665. Date: since from York, clearly 11 Sep; for Forster's misdating first extract as Oct, see below.[†4]

I was brought very near to what I sometimes dream may be my Fame, when a lady whose face I had never seen stopped me yesterday in the street, and said to me, Mr. Dickens, will you let me touch the hand that has filled my house with many friends.

At York I had a most magnificent audience,[†5] and might have filled the place for a week.... I think the audience possessed of a better knowledge of character than any I have seen. But I recollect Doctor Belcombe[†6] to have told me long ago that they first found out Charles Mathews's[†1] father,[†2] and to the last understood him (he used to say) better than any other people.... The let is enormous for next Saturday at Manchester, stalls alone four hundred! I shall soon be able to send you the list of places to the 15th of November, the end. I shall be, O most heartily glad, when that time comes! But I must say that the intelligence and warmth of the audiences are an immense sustainment, and one that always sets me up. Sometimes before I go down to read (especially when it is in the day), I am so oppressed by having to do it that I feel perfectly unequal to the task. But the people lift me out of this directly; and I find that I have quite forgotten everything but them and the book, in a quarter of an hour.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, [12] SEPTEMBER 1858

MS Dickens House. Address: Miss Hogarth | Gad's Hill Place | Higham | by Rochester | Kent. Date: misdated by CD; Sunday was 12 Sep 58.

Royal Hotel, Scarborough.[†3] | Sunday Eleventh September 1858.

My Dearest Georgy. [†a]You will be surprised when I begin my letter by telling you that I have had an excellent opportunity of setting Katey quite right in that matter of Andrew.[†4] Coming home to the hotel at York from reading in that city on Friday night, who should I find, established in our room, but — Gordon! He had seen in Household Words where I was, and had come for a holiday, he said, intending to keep company with us as far as Hull, and thence go back by Steamer. Arthur not having yet come up from the room, Gordon and I were alone; and he very soon took the opportunity of saying, with a kind of confidentially smirking satisfaction, that Andrew was uncommonly sweet indeed, upon a certain young lady at Gad's Hill. I immediately turned very grave, and said I had been quite uneasy about it, and had not known what to do. Gordon instantly changed, and asked "Why?" — "O! my good fellow", I said, "Why? Only because the difference is so obvious between a boy of eighteen, and a young woman of 19 or 20 — and I like Andrew so very much, and should be so heartily grieved if he were to make himself unhappy." It was clear that this dashed Gordon exceedingly. You know how self-possessed he can be, but he couldn't carry it off at all. His countenance fell, and he walked up and down the room musing about it, and rubbing his chin with his pocket handkerchief. Then he stopped short, and said: "You see it would be such a difficult thing to speak to Andrew about it." — "Exactly so," I said; "I feel that, or I might have done it myself." Having got it to this point, I felt that all I had to do was to leave it alone, so I said this in an offhand easy way, and said no more.[†a]

We had a very fine house indeed at York.[†5] All kinds of applications have been made for another reading there, and no doubt it would be exceedingly productive; but it cannot be done. At Harrogate yesterday, — the queerest place, with the strangest people in it, leading the oddest lives of dancing, newspaper reading, and tables d'hôte — I made a clean profit of £50.[†1] The piety of York obliging us to leave that place for this at 6 this morning, and there being no night-train from Harrogate, we had to engage a Special Engine. We got to bed at one, and were up again before five; which after yesterday's fatigues, leaves me a little worn at this present.

I have no accounts of this place as yet, nor have I received any letter here. But the Post of this morning is not yet delivered, I believe. We have a charming room, overlooking the sea. [†a]Upon the whole I could easily dispense with Gordon, but I don't care much about it.[†a] Leech is here (living within a few doors), with the partner of his bosom, and his young family. I write at ten in the morning, having been here two hours; and you will readily suppose that I have not seen him.

Of news, I have not the faintest breath. I seem to have been doing nothing all my life, but riding in railway carriages and reading. The railway of the morning brought us through Castle Howard[†2] and under the woods of Easthorpe,[†3] and then just below Malton Abbey where I went to poor Smithson's funeral.[†4] It was a most lovely morning, and tired as I was, I couldn't sleep for looking out of the window.

[†a]I don't know whether I told Mamey or Katey — but I think not — that Mr. Smith, your sister's legal representative, wrote Ouvry a very good note about that published letter: saying that he was much obliged by the assurance that I had not sanctioned its publication, but that it was quite unnecessary to him, as he had been quite certain of that, from the moment when he saw it. I had a letter from "Meery",[†5] at York, which I answered. Very affectionate! — but really sincere and earnest.[†a] Yesterday, at Harrogate, two circumstances occurred which gave Arthur great delight. Firstly, he chafed his leg sore, with his black bag of silver. Secondly, the landlord asked him as a favor, "if he could oblige him with a little silver". He obliged him, directly, with some forty pounds worth; and I suspect the landlord to have repented of having approached the subject. After the reading last night, we walked over the moor to the railway — 3 miles — leaving our men to follow with the luggage in a light cart. They passed us, just short of the railway, and John was making the night hideous and terrifying the sleeping country, by playing the horn in prodigiously horrible and unmusical blasts.

[†a]Gordon is sitting in the sunshine at the bow window, surveying the sea through an opera glass. He is too big for the room, and his collars are too big for him. Arthur, after touzling his head in the most frightful manner in the railway carriage, by sleeping with it rolled up in the window curtain, has gone to shave, and freshen himself up a little. This really is the very last and latest scrap of intelligence I have.

It is to be regretted, of course, that that little accident happened at Cobham;[†1] but nothing could be more discreet than the course taken to set it right, and nothing could be better than Lord Darnley's quick response. I think I will still write him a note. — I am not sure, but it is no matter.[†a]

My dearest love, of course, to the dear girls, and to the noble Plorn. Apropos of children, there was one gentleman at the Little Dombey yesterday morning, who exhibited — or rather concealed — the profoundest grief. After crying a good deal without hiding it, he covered his face with both his hands, and laid it down on the back of the seat before him, and really shook with emotion. He was not in mourning, but I supposed him to have lost some child in old time.[†2] There was a remarkably good fellow of 30 or so, too, who found something so very ludicrous in Toots that he could not compose himself at all, but laughed until he sat wiping his eyes with his handkerchief. And whenever he felt Toots coming again, he began to laugh and wipe his eyes afresh; and when he came he gave a kind of cry, as if it were too much for him. It was uncommonly droll, and made me laugh heartily.

[†a]I received the key all right. It had escaped my memory that I had changed the place where I keep the bills. I will leave this open for an hour or two, to acknowledge the receipt of any letter if I get one from Gads Hill this morning.[†a]

Ever dearest Georgy | Your most affectionate

CD.

To MISS MARY DICKENS, 15 SEPTEMBER 1858

MS Robert H. Taylor Collection, Princeton University.

Scarborough Arms, Leeds.
Wednesday Fifteenth September 1858.

My Dearest Mamie.

[†a]Although I received the bills from Georgy this morning, I write to you, because it is your turn. Tell her so with my dearest love.

I quite agree with her as to the amounts. The objectionable week is certainly large, but it is scarcely reasonable to hope that the servants will all be methodically saving and economical at once. It is only by looking closely and systematically, into any excess, of any kind, and letting them see that it †b*will not do,*†b that we can hope to come to a perfectly satisfactory result. I think the other bills quite fair and very promising. I have no doubt, please God, that we shall get the machine into perfect order. And I know thoroughly well, that you are all three most anxious to bring it into that condition.†a

I have added a pound to the cheque. I would recommend your seeing the poor Railwayman again, and giving him ten shillings, and telling him to let you see him again in about a week. If he be then still unable to lift weights and handle heavy things, I would then give him another Ten Shillings, and so on.

†aIn the matter of Frank, let me say at once, while I remember it, that I think Dr. Crüger†1 perfectly right in wishing him to have no more pocket-money than the rest of the boys. Will you write to Mrs. Crüger, and say that I wish the Dr. to do exactly what he feels to be right and best in this matter.†a†2

Since I wrote to Georgy from Scarborough we have had, thank God, nothing but success. †aI made £50 profit there, and made more than £50 profit at Hull last night.†a†3 The Hull people (not generally considered excitable, even on their own showing), were so enthusiastic that we were obliged to promise to go back there for Two Readings!†4 I have positively resolved not to lengthen out the time of my tour, so we are now arranging to drop some small places, and substitute Hull again and York again.†5 But you will perhaps have heard this in the main, from Arthur. I know he wrote to you after the Reading last night. This place I have always doubted, knowing that we should come here when it was recovering from the double excitement of the Festival and the Queen.†6 But there is a very large Stall Let indeed, and the prospect of to-night consequently looks bright. †a(It is not a large room. I doubt if Arthur can squeeze more than £70 into it.)†a

Arthur told you, I suppose, that he had his shirt front and waistcoat torn off, last night. He was perfectly enraptured in consequence. Our men got so knocked about, that he gave them five shillings apiece on the spot. John passed several minutes upside down against a wall, with his head amongst the peoples' boots. He came out of the difficulty in an exceedingly touzled condition, and with his face much flushed. For all this, and their being packed as you may conceive they would be packed, they settled down the instant I went in, and never wavered in the closest attention for an instant. It was a very high room, and required a great effort.

Oddly enough, I slept in this house three days ago last year,†7 with Wilkie. Arthur has the bedroom I occupied then, and I have one two doors from it, and Gordon has the one between. Not only is he still with us, but he has talked of going on to Manchester, going on to London, and coming back with us to Darlington next Tuesday!!! †aI hope however, that I observe him to be gradually getting disgusted with the smoke and ashes of these manufacturing towns.†a half up and half down, and are hideous to behold.†b Spiritless men (evidently drunk for some time in the Royal honor) are slowly removing them, and on the whole it is more like the clearing away of the Frozen Deep at Tavistock House, than any thing within your knowledge — with the exception that we are not in the least sorry, as we were then. Vague ideas are in Arthur's head that when we come back to Hull, we are to come here, and are to have the Town Hall (a beautiful building) and read to the Million. I can't say, yet. That depends.†1 I remember that when I was here before (I came from Rockingham, to make a speech),†2 I thought them a dull and slow audience.†3 I hope I may have been mistaken. I never saw better audiences than the Yorkshire audiences generally.

†bThese streets look like a Great Circus with the season just finished. All sorts of garish Triumphal arches were put up for the Queen, and they have got smoky, and have been looked out of countenance by the sun, and are blistered, and patchy, and

I am so perpetually at work, or asleep, that I have not a scrap of news. I saw the Leech family at Scarboro', both in my own house (that is to say, Hotel), and in theirs. They were not at either reading. Scarboro' is gay and pretty, and I think Gordon had an idea that we were always at some such place. †aI have a strong hope that he has had a new light or two on that subject,†4 since we got among the tall chimnies.†a†5

Kiss the darling Plorn for me, and give him my love — dear Katey too, giving her the same. I feel sorry that I cannot get down to Gad's Hill this next time, but I shall look forward to our being there with Georgy, after Scotland. Tell the servants that I remember them, and hope they will live with us many years. Ever My Dearest Mamie Your most affectionate father CD.

†bP.S. Arthur sends his love. Gordon too.†b

To ALBERT SMITH, 16 SEPTEMBER 1858

MS Morgan Library.

Halifax, Yorkshire. | Thursday Sixteenth September 1858.

My Dear Albert. As Arthur is always writing to you on every railway in England, and has, up to this day, overset his inkstand in 374 first class carriages (I keep a reckoning of that casualty, in an account book), he has left me very little to tell you. But I have two whimsical anecdotes to relate, which you won't find in the Newspapers.

1†6

When I was last in town, eight or nine years ago (I mean, days; but you know what enormous intervals seem to elapse under these circumstances), Forster told me that Frederic Chapman of Piccadilly had just told him that Ingram was going about town declaring like a madman as to his wildness and ferocity, that there was not a penny to be got out of the London Journal by anybody but the Paper-Maker, and that he (Ingram) would never be safe from ruin; until he had got rid of "the whole gang of bluid-soockers, beginning with" —— O! whom do you think? — "Mark Lemon"!!![†1]

2[†2]

My little boy Frank, was dispatched the other day, per steamer, to a new School at Hamburg. I knew the Captain, and gave the child a letter to him, knowing that he would be taken excellent care of. Mary wrote to the lady of the school, the wife of one Doctor Crüger, saying when Frank would arrive, and begging that he might be met by some trustworthy person at the Boat's wharf on the Boat's arrival. Gad's Hill was paralysed in the due course by the receipt of a letter from Frank, dated "Aboard the John Bull" — with this astonishing postscript. "The passengers have all been gone, some hours. Nobody has come for me, and nobody knows anything of the name of KRUGGENS.[†3] I am dining with the Captain and Mate. The dinner is beefsteak and onions. It is very good, and there is lots of it. The Captain having just regretted and apologized for being unable to offer me a dessert, I have been to my box, and brought out a quantity of the Gad's Hill apples and nuts. The Captain has produced a bottle of wine, and we are very jolly." Since then, he has never been heard of. My own impression is, that he will sail backwards and forwards in the John Bull, like a Young Flying Dutchman, for many years, and will vainly try, until he arrives at a green old age, to get to School. Either this will happen, or a fraudulent and ill-conducted school will kidnap him on false pretences, or he will work out the usual story-book career by entering Hamburg without any boots, selling matches in the streets, gradually realizing an enormous fortune, and finally laying it out in endowing an establishment for 80 one-eyed old men with wooden legs, who will never get anything that he bequeaths to them, but will be pillaged by fifteen trustees in the Banking and Legal lines of life who will live and die in great esteem on the plunder.

Do you understand the following Chinese sentence yet?

†a †a

It is a poetical idea, I think, and very expressive of the general virtues of the Tea Plant. Is it really in the works of their great poet[†4] †a  †a

When this reaches you, you will be running home as hopefully and happily as possible.[†5] Aden will seem like Fleet Street, Cairo like the Strand, camels like cabs — all so near home and so familiarly. God speed you. We will talk Chinese (I have a smattering of that tongue) always.

Ever Cordially
CHARLES DICKENS

To UNKNOWN MUSICIAN, 16 SEPTEMBER 1858

Text from Musical Age, 1 Jan 1891.

Halifax, Thursday, Sixteenth September, 1858.

Sir,

My time, at all times very much occupied, is so completely absorbed just now, that I have not had leisure to answer your letter until to-day.

If you should ever desire to offer anything for insertion in Household Words, it shall be honestly read. You have but to address it to me at the office of that journal. But I cannot undertake to read compositions generally designed for publication, and write opinions upon them;[†1] simply because I am so constantly asked to do it, that unless I had a rule from which I never departed, in this respect, I could do nothing else in life.

You repose a confidence in me very honestly and unaffectedly. I should not deserve it if I were otherwise than plain with you.

The course on which you seek to enter is a very difficult one, and I have a very strong doubt, (suggested to me by your letter itself) of your being qualified for it. I know more than you can easily imagine of the wretchedness of failure in it. Do not neglect your respectable and useful certainty for a desperate chance.

Faithfully yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. ——

To RICHARD BENTLEY, 17 SEPTEMBER 1858*

MS Berg Collection. Address: Richard Bentley Esquire | New Burlington Street | London | W.

Sheffield. | Friday Seventeenth September | 1858.

My Dear Mr. Bentley

Your letter of the Thirteenth has just found me here. I regret to learn from it that my mediation has not been attended with more satisfactory results.[†2]

Under the circumstances, I can now do no more than make Mr. Shirley Brooks acquainted with the contents of your communication. That I will take care to do by the present post.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esquire

To SHIRLEY BROOKS, [17 SEPTEMBER 1858]

Mention in last. Date: written the same day.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 17 SEPTEMBER 1858

MS Dickens House.

King's Head, Sheffield
Friday, Seventeenth September 1858.

My Dearest Georgy.

I write you a few lines to Tavistock House, thinking you may not be sorry to find a note from me there, on your arrival from Gad's Hill.

Halifax was too small for us. I never saw such an audience though.[†1] They were really worth reading to for nothing — though I didn't do exactly that. It is as horrible a place as I ever saw,[†2] I think. [†a]Of course the local agent (a Music Seller)[†3] used to play duetts with your father,[†4] and told me a lot about him, after the reading — in which I was deeply interested.[†a]

The run upon the Tickets here is so immense, that Arthur is obliged to get great bills out, signifying that no more can be sold.[†5] It will be by no means easy to get into the place the numbers who have already paid. It is the Hall we acted in,[†6] crammed to the roof and the passages. We must come back here towards the end of October, and are again altering the List, and striking out small places. [†a]I suppose I shall get from £60 to £70 profit tonight.[†a]

The trains are so strange and unintelligible in this part of the country that we were obliged to leave Halifax at 8 this morning, and breakfast on the road — at Huddersfield again, where we had an hour's wait. Wills was in attendance on the Platform, and took me (here at Sheffield I mean) out to "Frederick's"[†7] house, to see Mrs. Wills. She looked pretty much the same as ever, I thought, and was taking care of a very pretty little boy.[†8] The house and grounds are as nice as anything can be, in this smoke.

[†a]Gordon is still with us and shows no signal of departure. His luggage has been left behind at Halifax, and he is sitting disconsolate.[†a] A heavy thunderstorm is passing over the town, and it is raining hard too.

[†a]If you should have time to go (with the girls or one of them) to Mr. Hill's[†1] at Bell's, will you ask him if he will send me in the course of Monday to Tavistock House, a fresh supply of "Voice Jujubes," and also of the "Astringent Lozenges." I have found them both, admirable.

I hope to be at home by 5 on Sunday morning. Will you leave the spirit-stand and a rusk or two, in the Hall? The door to be left on the latch, of course.[†a]

This is a stupid letter my dearest Georgy, but I write in a hurry, and in the thunder and lightning, and with the crowd of tonight before me. My best love to dearest Mamie and Katie, and to the Darling Plorn.

Ever Most affectionately.

CD.

To HENRY BURNETT, 18 SEPTEMBER 1858

MS Copy in Dickens House.[†2]

Royal Hotel Manchester
Saturday Eighteen September | 1858

My dear Burnett

I have not a moment in which to answer your Letter before going down to the Hall — Believe me I have never had an unkind thought of you — I was very glad to hear of your marrying again — thought it most natural & right — Have always had the best feeling towards yourself and your second Wife[†3] — Have always been glad to hear of you. I should have liked to have heard of your marriage from yourself — may (perhaps) have said so — certainly have never said so with the least unkindness or ill will.... God knows it is not in me — We must all go poor Fanny's way, and we shall all want sorely the gentle construction that we cannot do better than give.... Dismiss all uneasiness as to me from your mind. I have always thought of you and do think of you affectionately.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To THE MARCHIONESS OF NORMANBY,[†1] 20 SEPTEMBER 1858

Summary from The Marquis of Normanby.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Twentieth September 1858

A letter of recommendation to the Marchioness of Normanby, for Miss Fanny Ternan to take with her to Florence,[†2] where she is going with her mother, to complete a professional musical education.[†3]

To ARTHUR RYLAND, 20 SEPTEMBER 1858*

MS Mr L.E.S. Gutteridge.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Monday Twentieth September 1858

My Dear Mr. Ryland

A thousand thanks for your kind note. I do not know that I need trouble you before I come to Birmingham, but if I should see occasion to do so, I will not scruple to tax the friendship to which I have already been often indebted.

I am at home for only a day. My success is very great indeed — quite indescribable in some cases — as at Manchester last Saturday night.[†4]

Charley begs to send you his kindest regard. He wishes me to report that he passed his short holiday from Barings, in rowing and playing cricket-matches. His sisters have just given astonishing evidence of bad taste. I asked them to choose whether they would go with me to Birmingham, or to Scotland. And they said —— Scotland!

Always Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Arthur Ryland Esquire.

I heard of you at Sheffield on Friday, from Mr. Fisher.[†5]

To MRS TROLLOPE,[†1] 20 SEPTEMBER 1858*

MS University of Texas.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Monday Twentieth September 1858.

My Dear Mrs. Trollope.

If you should be still in Florence when the bearer of this letter comes to that old City, let me beg you to shew her any aid or attention in your power: assuring you that if you bestowed it on one of my daughters, it could not be more welcome to me.

Miss Fanny Ternan (I mean that strange-looking word for T e r n a n) is a professional young lady of great accomplishments and the highest character, who purposes establishing herself in some very respectable family in Florence, probably for a year, that she may complete her musical education under some eminent master there. She travels to Florence accompanied by her Mama; but Mrs. Ternan will return to England when she has settled her daughter to their mutual satisfaction, and will leave her to pursue her studies alone.

In this young lady and in her family, I have the warmest interest. I have given her such letters as I think most likely to serve her, and I cannot resist the temptation I feel to add this to the List, because I know that she must naturally have a great desire to see you, and because I am not less sure that you will appreciate her.

My Dear Mrs. Trollope | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Trollope

To MONTAGU YEATS BROWN,[†2] [?20 SEPTEMBER 1858]

Mention in next. Date: no doubt written the same day.

To EMILE DE LA RUE, [?20 SEPTEMBER 1858]

MS (fragment) Berg Collection. Date: 20 Sep according to endorsement.[†3] serve her,[†4] on to the Poste Restante at Florence. I have given her a letter to Monty Brown too, but I am particularly anxious that she should have the advantage of your personal introduction.

Affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [?20-21 SEPTEMBER 1858]

Extract in F, VIII, iv, 665. Date: soon after his Manchester reading of 18 Sep.

When I came to Manchester on Saturday I found seven hundred stalls taken! When I went into the room at night 2500 people had paid, and more were being turned away from every door. The welcome they gave me was astounding in its affectionate recognition of the late trouble,[†1] and fairly for once unmanned me. I never saw such a sight or heard such a sound. When they had thoroughly done it, they settled down to enjoy themselves; and certainly did enjoy themselves most heartily to the last minute.[†2]

To W. H. WILLS, 24 SEPTEMBER 1858

MS Huntington Library.

Station Hotel, Newcastle
Friday afternoon, Twenty Fourth Sept. | 1858.

My Dear Wills.

I return the cheque, duly signed.

I have just now walked over here from Sunderland[†3] (1 o'Clock), and have barely had time to look at the Room.[†4] It is new since we acted here — large — and capable of holding a good deal of money. I hope it will have a good deal to hold, tonight and tomorrow. The Let is a very good one, and we expect a large Take in payment at the doors.

You will be amazed to hear that we reaped very little profit at Sunderland last night! I read in a very beautiful new Theatre,[†5] and it looked a fine house. But it was not fine enough to pay well.[†6] Half a million of money, belonging to Sunderland alone, was lost in the last Bank-Smash there;[†7] and the town has never held up its head since, they say.

I suppose the people who were there, had either not lost any money, or had found it again. I never beheld such a rapturous audience. And they — and the stage together: which I never can resist — made me do such a vast number of new things in the Carol,[†1] that Arthur and our men stood in amazement at the Wing, and roared and stamped as if it were an entirely new book, topping all the others.[†2] You must come to some good place and hear the Carol. I think you will hardly know it again.

Little Darlington — in a mouldy old assembly Room without a Lamp abutting on the Street,[†3] so that I passed it a dozen times and looked for it, when I went down to read — covered itself with Glory. All sorts of people came in from outlying places, and the town was drunk with the Carol far into the night.[†4] At Durham we had a capital audience too — led by Dean and chapter, and humbly followed up by Mayor and local Bores — but the Hall not large enough, and the City not large enough, for such a purpose as your friend's.[†5]

So, we are working our way further North. I walked from Durham to Sunderland,[†6] and made a little fanciful photograph in my mind of Pit-Country, which will come well into H. W. one day.[†7] I couldn't help looking upon my mind as I was doing it, as a sort of capitally prepared and highly sensitive plate. And I said, without the least conceit (as Watkins might have said of a plate of his) "it really is a pleasure to work with you, you receive the impression so nicely."

I mark this note "Immediate", because I forgot to mention that I particularly wish you to look well to Wilkie's article about the Wigan schoolmaster,[†8] and not to leave anything in it that may be sweepingly and unnecessarily offensive to the middle class.[†9] He has always a tendency to overdo that — and such a subject gives him a fresh temptation. Don't be afraid of the Truth, in the least; but don't be unjust.

[†a]I enclose a few hasty notes about the Queen idea.[†a†10] Arthur sends kindest regard. Give my love to Mrs. Wills. I hope my wholesome influence lasts?

Ever Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

W. H. Wills Esquire

To D. O. HILL,[†1] 25 SEPTEMBER 1858

MS The Royal Scottish Academy.

Newcastle on Tyne
Saturday Twenty Fifth September 1858.

My Dear Sir

I am cordially obliged to you for your kind note, and have little need to assure you that it would have given me the greatest pleasure to have dined with the Academy: — particularly on the occasion of their receiving my two old friends, Stanfield and Roberts.[†2] But unfortunately, while I am heartily gratified in being so remembered and honored, I cannot possibly accept the invitation. I read twice in Edinburgh on Wednesday — in the afternoon, and in the evening — and I grieve to say that I can no more go to the Academy than the Academy can come to me.

By this post, I return a formal reply to the invitation. If you will do me the favor to say for me in a less constrained manner, to the President,[†3] that I am unfeignedly and exceedingly sorry that I cannot profit by this mark of the Academy's courtesy, you will very much oblige me.

Believe me My Dear Sir | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS[†4]

D. O. Hill Esquire

To THE PRESIDENT OF THE ROYAL SCOTTISH ACADEMY, [25 SEPTEMBER 1858]

Mention in last.

To JAMES B. MANSON,[†5] 25 SEPTEMBER 1858

MS Private.

Newcastle on Tyne
Saturday Twenty Fifth September 1858.

My Dear Sir

Your note has touched me[†6] to the heart. I deeply feel, and shall always remember, its sincerity, modesty, and manliness. It makes what you have written of me, of new worth to me; and I can truly say, in thanking you, that I am proud of it.

The view you take of the literary character in the abstract, or of what it might and ought to be, expresses what I have striven for, all through my literary life.[†1] I have never allowed it to be patronized, or tolerated, or treated like a good child or like a bad child. In simply doing my plain duty by it, I am always animated by the hope of leaving it, a little better understood by the thoughtless than I found it.[†2]

You will forgive me if I cannot conclude this hasty note without a word of reference to three Sonnets I have read in your paper to-day, and of which I suppose you to be the writer.[†3] They would have attracted my attention under any circumstances, by their unusual merit. The second, particularly, has a very profound thought in it most happily turned.[†4]

My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

James B Manson Esquire.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 26 SEPTEMBER 1858

Extract in MDGH, II, 75-6.

Station Hotel, Newcastle-on-Tyne, | Sunday, Sept. 26th, 1858.

The girls (as I have no doubt they have already told you for themselves) arrived here in good time yesterday, and in very fresh condition. They persisted in going to the room[†5] last night, though I had arranged for their remaining quiet.

We have done a vast deal here. I suppose you know that we are going to Berwick, and that we mean to sleep there[†6] and go on to Edinburgh on Monday morning, arriving there before noon? If it be as fine to-morrow as it is to-day, the girls will see the coast piece of railway between Berwick and Edinburgh to great advantage. I was anxious that they should, because that kind of pleasure is really almost the only one they are likely to have in their present trip.

Stanfield and Roberts are in Edinburgh, and the Scottish Royal Academy give[†7] them a dinner on Wednesday, to which I was very pressingly invited. But, of course, my going was impossible. I read twice that day.

Remembering what you do of Sunderland, you will be surprised that our profit there was very considerable.[†8] I read in a beautiful new theatre, and (I thought to myself) quite wonderfully. Such an audience I never beheld for rapidity and enthusiasm. The room in which we acted (converted into a theatre afterwards) was burnt to the ground a year or two ago.[†1] We found the hotel, so bad in our time, really good.[†2] I walked from Durham to Sunderland, and from Sunderland to Newcastle.

Don't you think, as we shall be at home at eleven in the forenoon this day fortnight, that it will be best for you and Plornish to come to Tavistock House for that Sunday, and for us all to go down to Gad's Hill next day? My best love to the noble Plornish. If he is quite reconciled to the postponement of his trousers, I should like to behold his first appearance in them. But, if not, as he is such a good fellow, I think it would be a pity to disappoint and try him.

And now, my dearest Georgy, I think I have said all I have to say before I go out for a little air. I had a very hard day yesterday, and am tired.

Ever your most affectionate

[CD]

To JAMES PAYN, 29 SEPTEMBER 1858*

MS Boston Public Library.

Waterloo Hotel, Edinburgh.

Wednesday Twenty Ninth September 1858.[†3]

My Dear Mr. Payn.

All to-day I am, as you may suppose, pretty closely occupied. Tomorrow morning I am going to take my girls out to Hawthornden. But I will arrange to be back here by 3 o'Clock, if it should suit your convenience to have some talk with me then.

The hours and days run away while I am thus occupied, so imperceptibly, that I do nothing that I propose to myself to do. I thought we should have walked twenty miles together, by this time.

On second thoughts, it occurs to me to ask if you could spare time to go with us on our tomorrow morning's expedition?[†4] We will leave here at 11. Perhaps you will tell me, or Mr. Arthur Smith, tonight.

Always Very faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

J. Payn Esquire

October

To JOHN FORSTER, [?1 OCTOBER 1858]

Extracts in F, VIII, iv, 666. Date: written on his arrival in Dundee, on 1 Oct; first extract clearly before dinner, second perhaps after it.

At first the look of Edinburgh was not promising. We began with, for us, a poor room.[†5] ... But the effect of that reading (it was the Chimes), was immense; and on the next night, for Little Dombey, we had a full room. It is our greatest triumph everywhere. Next night (Poor Traveller, Boots and Gamp) we turned away hundreds upon hundreds of people; and last night, for the Carol, in spite of advertisements in the morning that the tickets were gone, the people had to be got in through such a crowd as rendered it a work of the utmost difficulty to keep an alley into the room. They were seated about me on the platform, put into the doorway of the waiting-room, squeezed into every conceivable place, and a multitude turned away once more. I think I am better pleased with what was done in Edinburgh than with what has been done anywhere,[†1] almost. It was so completely taken by storm, and carried in spite of itself. Mary and Katey have been infinitely pleased and interested with Edinburgh. We are just going to sit down to dinner and therefore I cut my missive short. Travelling, dinner, reading, and everything else, come crowding together into this strange life.

He thought Dundee an odd place, like Wapping with high rugged hills behind it. We had the strangest journey here — bits of sea, and bits of railroad, alternately;[†2] which carried my mind back to travelling in America. The room[†3] is an immense new one, belonging to Lord Kinnaird,[†4] and Lord Panmure,[†5] and some others of that sort. It looks like something between the Crystal Palace and Westminster hall (I can't imagine who wants it in this place), and has never been tried yet for speaking in. Quite disinterestedly of course, I hope it will succeed.[†6]

To W. H. WILLS, 2 OCTOBER 1858

MS Comtesse de Suzannet.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
That is to say: | Dundee. Saturday Second October 1858.

My Dear Wills. Pray, pray, dont have Poems unless they are good. We are immeasurably better without them. "Beyond",[†7] is really Beyond anything I ever saw, in utter badness.

You instructed Payn and White, that no story-Teller must have been a Lodger in the House. I don't understand that, at all. A Lodger may give variety to the thing, and cannot possibly (that I see) weaken the carrying out of the Idea.[†8]

To Wilkie's queries I reply:
1. I think I had best write the framework in the first person — unless I should think of any new and odd way of doing it. I will certainly avoid the plain third person in which the stories will be narrated.[†1]

2. I am not clear about following up the old Materials, and making them doomed and destructive. I think it would end the thing with unseasonable grimness. If I could build them into a good school, or infirmary, or child's hospital, or something of that sort, it might be a more pleasant end, and a working round of the thing to something brighter.[†1]
3. If I were Wilkie, unless I got an idea which would not admit of it, I would certainly make the story of some people who kept the house, the story.[†1] Indeed, I supposed that to have been understood.

———————

There was certainly in Edinburgh, a coldness, beforehand, about the Readings. I mention it, to let you know that I consider the triumph there, by far the greatest I have made. The City was taken by storm, and carried. The Chimes shook it; Little Dombey blew it up. On the two last nights, the crowd was immense, and the turn-away enormous.[†2] Everywhere, nothing was to be heard but praises — nowhere more than at Blackwood's shop,[†3] where there certainly was no predisposition to praise.[†4] It was a brilliant victory, and could have been represented in no mere money whatever.

My profit there was £200. My profit at Newcastle, £170 (the room in the latter place, very large). My profit in September is £900. No doubt in reason this sum will have passed £1,000 before I begin the next Thousand in Glasgow.

The Carol will be read one night at Birmingham, and at Nottingham. Those are the places nearest to your hand I think.[†5]

My love to Mrs. Wills in which the girls unite. They were delighted with Edinburgh, and saw it, and all about it, on beautiful days. Payn went with us to Hawthornden, and we laughed all day.[†6] Conceive his telling me that Miss Martineau once told him and a certain Lake Doctor, face to face, that the reason why the Times succeeded with their Foreign correspondence, was because ———[†7] they kept a clairvoyante to do it!!![†8] "You may observe", says she, "that the Daily News is rapidly improving in that particular. Why? Because they have lately engaged a clairvoyante too!"

With which large button of arrogant conceit from the head and front of a strait waistcoat,[†1] I beg to subscribe myself

Ever Anti Politico-Economically[†2] | [†a]Anti De Morganically,[†3], | and the like,[†a]

CD

To WILLIAM LOGAN,[†4] 8 OCTOBER 1858*

MS Joseph M. Maddalena. Address (Phillips catalogue, June 1983): William Logan Esq | 21 Maxwell Street (not through post; clearly belongs to this letter).

Royal Hotel, Glasgow[†5] | Friday Eighth October 1858.

Dear Sir

I am greatly obliged to you for your kind note received this morning, and for its accompanying Volumes.[†6] Accept my cordial thanks.

As the Christmas Carol is a favorite of yours, may I hope that you will do me the favor to come and hear it tonight, if you are not otherwise engaged.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

William Logan Esquire

To THE SUPERINTENDENT, GLASGOW STATION,[†1] 9 OCTOBER 1858

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds. Address: To The Superintendent | at the Station.

Royal Hotel | Saturday Ninth October 1858.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to the Superintendent of the Station, and begs the favor of having a first-class compartment reserved for his party of four, by the 8.17 Train South, tonight, which they can retain all the way to London.

Mr. Dickens's men will have with them, a quantity of luggage which is to be left at Bradford tomorrow.[†2] It would be a great additional convenience to Mr. Dickens if the Superintendent's kindness could possibly arrange for its not being shifted at Lancaster, but going the whole way through to Bradford, in the Van in which it will leave Glasgow.

To JOHN FORSTER, 10 OCTOBER 1858

Composite text from MDGH, II, 76-8 and F, VIII, iv, 666-7; first two paragraphs in MDGH only; third paragraph all in Forster (MDGH with omissions [aa]); final paragraph in MDGH only.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Sunday, Oct. 10th, 1858.

My dear Forster,

As to the truth of the readings, I cannot tell you what the demonstrations of personal regard and respect are. How the densest and most uncomfortably-packed crowd will be hushed in an instant when I show my face. How the youth of colleges, and the old men of business in the town, seem equally unable to get near enough to me when they cheer me away at night. How common people and gentlefolks will stop me in the streets and say: "Mr. Dickens, will you let me touch the hand that has filled my home with so many friends?"[†3] And if you saw the mothers, and fathers, and sisters, and brothers in mourning, who invariably come to "Little Dombey," and if you studied the wonderful expression of comfort and reliance with which they hang about me, as if I had been with them, all kindness and delicacy, at their own little death-bed, you would think it one of the strangest things in the world.

As to the mere effect, of course I don't go on doing the thing so often without carefully observing myself and the people too in every little thing, and without (in consequence) greatly improving in it.

The people (of Dundee) he thought, in respect of taste and intelligence, below any other of his Scotch audiences; but they woke up surprisingly, and the rest of his Caledonian tour was a succession of triumphs. At Aberdeen we were crammed to the street, twice in one day.[†4] At Perth (where I thought when I arrived, there literally could be nobody to come) the gentlefolk[†1] came posting in from thirty miles round, and the whole town came besides, and filled an immense hall.[†2] [a]They were as full of perception, fire, and enthusiasm as any people I have seen. At Glasgow, where I read three evenings and one morning, we took the prodigiously large sum of six hundred pounds! And this at the Manchester prices, which are lower than St. Martin's Hall.[a] As to the effect — I wish you could have seen them after Lilian died in the Chimes,[†3] or when Scrooge woke [a]in the Carol[a] and talked to the boy outside the window.[†4] And at the end of Dombey yesterday afternoon,[†5] in the cold light of day, they all got up, after a short pause, gentle and simple, and thundered and waved their hats with such astonishing heartiness and fondness that, for the first time in all my public career, they took me completely off my legs, and I saw the whole eighteen hundred of them reel to one side as if a shock from without had shaken the hall. [a]Notwithstanding which, I must confess to you, I am very anxious to get to the end of my Readings, and to be at home again, and able to sit down and think in my own study. There has been only one thing quite without alloy.[a] The dear girls have enjoyed themselves immensely, and their trip with me has been a great success. I hope I told you (but I forget whether I did or no)[†6] how splendidly Newcastle[†7] came out. I am reminded of Newcastle at the moment because they joined me there.

I am anxious to get to the end of my readings, and to be at home again, and able to sit down and think in my own study. But the fatigue, though sometimes very great indeed, hardly tells upon me at all. And although all our people, from Smith downwards, have given in, more or less, at times, I have never been in the least unequal to the work, though sometimes sufficiently disinclined for it. My kindest and best love to Mrs. Forster.

Ever affectionately
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To JAMES LAWSON,[†8] 11 OCTOBER 1858

Mention in Autograph Prices Current, III, 18; MS 1 p.; dated Tavistock House, 11 Oct 58; addressed James Lawson.

Assuring him of his sympathy with the People's Concerts.[†9]

To GEORGE STRUTT,[†1] 11 OCTOBER 1858*

MS New York Public Library.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Monday Eleventh October 1858.

My Dear Sir

I am heartily obliged to you for your kind note, and should have been most happy to accept your kind invitation,[†2] had it been possible. But the fatigues of my trip are so great, that I find all social pleasures to be incompatible with it, and never go to any place but an Hotel, and never visit any friend. There is not the least virtue in this self-denial; it is forced upon me; and I observe it with the worst grace in the world.

Pray accept my cordial thanks, and present my regard to Mrs. Strutt.[†3]

My Dear Sir | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

George H Strutt Esquire

To H. B. DOWNING,[†4] 12 OCTOBER 1858*

MS Harrogate College. Address: H. B. Downing Esquire | 48 Guilford Street.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Twelfth October 1858

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Downing, and begs to acknowledge the receipt of that gentleman's letter of yesterday. Mr. Dickens is obliged by Mr. Downing's confidence and by the terms in which Mr. Downing's proposal is communicated, but he cannot entertain it.†5

To MRS CORNELIUS, 13 OCTOBER 1858

Text from N, III, 62.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS,
Wednesday Thirteenth October 1858

My Dear Anne,

Please call me at 7 in the morning. Breakfast at 8.

Yours always
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To THOMAS BEARD, 14 OCTOBER 1858

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Place | Edgeware Road | N.W.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Thursday Fourteenth October 1858

My Dear Beard

I write to you in the greatest haste — just home from Glasgow — before starting again, this morning, for Bradford.†1

Edmund Yates has brought me the enclosed advertisement,†2 and has asked me whether I thought it likely to have attracted your notice? He tells me that he has reason for confidently believing that there is decidedly capital.†3

The Inimitable's success, enormous. Between ourselves, the clear profits of the readings, after payment of all the charges, which are necessarily heavy — one thousand pounds per month!

Ever affectionately
CD.

To H. B. MACPHAIL,†4 16 OCTOBER 1858

Extract in N, III, 63 (no authority); dated Royal Hotel, Manchester, 16 Oct 58.

Dear Sir,

Your amazing letter which I have received here to-day, places me in a very distressing position.[†5] For Mr. [Colin][†6] Rae Brown's[†7] lie is too monstrous and intolerable to be borne. And I fear it is impossible that I can, in any decent spirit of respect for myself or any other human being, accept your communication as confidential. A slander so infamous and so wanton and inconceivably baseless, must positively be stopped short and published. I now dispatch a special messenger to London, who is a trustworthy friend,[†8] to communicate with my solicitors instantly on the subject.[†9]

I thank you very much for making this thing known to me. If I fear that I cannot possibly receive it in confidence, it is because I can get no prospect of redress for so unspeakable a wrong, but through bringing this Mr. [Colin][†1] Rae Brown to answer in a Court of Justice for his abominable words.[†2]

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 18 OCTOBER 1857*

MS Free Library of Philadlephia

Hen and Chickens, Birmingham
Monday Night, Eighteenth October 1858.

My Dearest Georgy

Only a line to say we arrived here prosperously, and that I found the letters waiting me, and that I will write to dear Mamie next.

We had not a great[†3] house tonight — between seventy and eighty pounds — but I never saw people more honestly and completely delighted, and it was (and is) as wet a night as wet can be.[†4]

Best love to Mamie and Katie, and my dear old Plorn. — Arthur joins. Also engages himself for Katie's birthday.[†5]

Ever Affectionately
CD.

To W. H. WILLS, [18 OCTOBER 1858]

Mention in next.

To W. H. WILLS, 18 OCTOBER 1858

MS Huntington Library.

Hen and Chickens Hotel, Birmingham.
Monday Night | Eighteenth October 1858.

My Dear Wills.

I forgot three things in my hurried note of to day from London.[†6]

— VIII - 681 —

1. — After the Smallport Monte Christo (which is very whimsical and good), I think the Great Dunkerque Failure may go in.[†1] It should be in the next No. you make up. (Let me see the Proof of any other printed paper by him. A very little erasure here and there, makes a considerable difference in his case.)

2. — When you come to advertize in H.W. my readings for November, put, and keep as long as the advertisement stands, this line after Brighton 13 Novr. — in small caps — in a line by itself —

WHICH WILL TERMINATE THE SERIES OF READINGS.[†2]

3. — The Carol is not read here. It is read at Nottingham on Thursday, and at Manchester on Saturday.[†3]

A very, very, wet night.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

W. H. Wills Esquire

To H. G. ADAMS, [?19 OCTOBER 1858]

Mention in H. G. Adams to Rochester, Chatham and Strood Gazette, 20 Oct 58 (printed 26 Oct). Date: very shortly before Adams's letter of 20 Oct.

Assuring Adams that there was no foundation for the report that he would be reading at Rochester on 26 or 27 Oct. I know nothing whatever of your "best authority", except that he is, as he always is, preposterously wild and monstrously wrong.[†4]

To FREDERICK DICKENS, 19 OCTOBER 1858

MS Benoliel Collection.

Hen and Chickens, Birmingham
Tuesday Nineteenth October 1858.

Dear Frederick

I found your letter here yesterday. I shall be at Gad's Hill next Sunday Week, the 31st. but I am not to be depended on for any appointment before then.

Affectionately

C.D.

To THOMAS BEARD, 20 OCTOBER 1858

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Place | Maida Hill | London | W.

Hen and Chickens, Birmingham
Wednesday Twentieth October 1858

My Dear Beard

I don't think I ever was more impressed by an absurdity, than by the wonderful project you describe. It is amazing.[†1]

Have you made any applications to these men who are now in power,[†2] for any sort of public employment? I really think that you might stand a reasonably fair chance of getting something, on a statement of your history, and on a reference to the Inimitable as an old fellow 'Prentice, and a comrade of some quarter of a century and more.[†3] Do think of this. Forster was speaking to me with all his best earnestness, about it, the other day.

I took it into my head last night, to read the Trial from Pickwick here.[†4] It was a great go. And when Mr. Sergeant Buzfuz said "Call Samuel Weller!", they gave a great thunder of applause, as if he were really coming in.

Kindest regard to all at home.

Ever affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Beard Esquire

To GEORGE FLETCHER,[†5] 20 OCTOBER 1858

MS University of Texas.

Hen and Chickens, Birmingham.
Wednesday Twentieth October 1858.

Sir

I beg to acknowledge with thanks, the receipt of your little book[†6] and its accompanying letter. It is very pleasant to me to hear of you again, and to hope that you are doing well.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. George Fletcher.

To MISS MARY GIBSON,[†1] 20 OCTOBER 1858

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

Birmingham | Wednesday Twentieth October | 1858

My Dear Miss Gibson.

Your warm-hearted and earnest letter has truly affected me. I cordially thank you for it.

Don't change the picture in your mind;[†2] — I hope there is no cause for your doing so. The energies with which God has blessed me, are not the spasms of an hour. Their vitality and mine will end, I think, together.

Few homes can have more wholesome and loving young faces in it than mine has. Wherever I go, I find myself affectionately cherished in the homes of honest men and women, and associated, as their friend, with their domestic joys and troubles. If I owe a heavy penalty to the knaves and fools, so do all notorious people who are neither. I hope I can pay it, and go my way.

Believe me | Very faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To ABRAHAM HOLROYD,[†3] 20 OCTOBER 1858*

MS Yale University Library.

Birmingham | Wednesday Twentieth October | 1858.

Dear Sir

I beg to acknowledge with many thanks, the receipt of the two little books[†4] you had the kindness to send me at Bradford. I have been much interested by them, and shall have great pleasure in receiving the remainder of the series, if — as I hope — it should proceed to a tolerably prosperous issue.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Abraham Holroyd Esquire

To DR F. H. RAMSBOTHAM, 20 OCTOBER 1858*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Birmingham | Wednesday Twentieth October | 1858.

My Dear Dr. Ramsbotham.

Your note and its enclosure have been forwarded to me here. I am still reading in the country, and shall be until the middle of next month.

I have read your Cherbourg Stanzas with much interest and pleasure, and am truly obliged to you for the offer of them to Household Words. But the subject,[†1] as to the public, is too decidedly gone by, and they have been too much bothered about it, to admit of my having the gratification of publishing the verses.

My boy received every attention that your kind introduction could possibly procure for him. He was soon, and still is, attached to the 42nd. Highlanders.[†2] He went through the last campaign[†3] until he was invalided (from fever), and sent up to the hills. When he wrote by the last mail, he was coming down again, quite strong and well, and was about to rejoin the regiment.

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Dr. Ramsbotham

To MISS MARY DICKENS, 22 OCTOBER 1858

Text from MDGH, II, 78.

Royal Hotel, Derby, Friday, Oct. 22nd, 1858.

My dearest Mamie,

I am writing in a very poor condition; I have a bad cold all over me, pains in my back and limbs, and a very sensitive and uncomfortable throat.[†4] There was a great draught up some stone steps near me last night, and I daresay that caused it.

The weather on my first two nights at Birmingham was so intolerably bad — it blew hard, and never left off raining for one single moment — that the houses were not what they otherwise would have been. On the last night the weather cleared, and we had a grand house.

Last night at Nottingham was almost, if not quite, the most amazing we have had. It is not a very large place, and the room is by no means a very large one, but three hundred and twenty stalls were let, and all the other tickets were sold.[†5]

Here we have two hundred and twenty stalls let for to-night, and the other tickets are gone in proportion.[†6] It is a pretty room, but not large.

I have just been saying to Arthur that if there is not a large let for York, I would rather give it up, and get Monday at Gad's Hill. We have telegraphed to know. If the answer comes (as I suppose it will) before post time, I will tell you in a postscript what we decide to do.[†1] Coming to London in the night of to-morrow (Saturday), and having to see Mr. Ouvry on Sunday,[†2] and having to start for York early on Monday, I fear I should not be able to get to Gad's Hill at all. You won't expect me till you see me.

Arthur and I have considered Plornish's joke in all the immense number of aspects in which it presents itself to reflective minds. We have come to the conclusion that it is the best joke ever made. Give the dear boy my love, and the same to Georgy, and the same to Katey, and take the same yourself. Arthur (excessively low and inarticulate) mutters that he "unites."

[†a][We knocked up Boycett, Berry, and John so frightfully yesterday, by tearing the room to pieces and altogether reversing it, as late as four o'clock, that we gave them a supper last night. They shine all over to-day, as if it had been entirely composed of grease.][†a]

Ever, my dearest Mamie, | Your most affectionate Father

[CD]

To W. C. MACREADY, 22 OCTOBER 1858*

MS Morgan Library.

Royal Hotel, Derby | Friday Twenty Second October 1858

My Dearest Macready

I received your letter here, to day; found it awaiting me when I came from Nottingham.

Wills wrote to me by the same post, touching Mrs. Meredith's paper.[†3] I have begged him to shew it, and her, all possible attention, and to communicate with you about the payment for it; so that you may have the thing in writing to refer to her.

Over and over and over again, my dear dear friend, since I have been away, have I been thinking and talking of you. I have never once been home for a few stray hours, but the girls and Georgy and I have gone in our talk to Sherborne. Your dear good sister has never been held higher in any love and respect than in ours. God knows I have "always entertained a sincere and cordial affection" for her, and that when I last took leave of her in your hall, I loved and honored her with all my heart.[†4]

Dear Macready, I think you must come to London and bring the children with you. I have said this so often to Forster, that I cannot help saying it now to you. You ought to be near to us, and more of us, and among us. For your own sake, because our affectionate companionship might lighten your load; for ours, because it is so sad to us to think of you away down there.

God bless you, and all yours, and comfort you!

My Dearest Macready | Ever Your most affectionate | and attached friend

CHARLES DICKENS

To W. H. WILLS, 22 OCTOBER 1858

MS Huntington Library.

Royal Hotel, Derby | Friday Twenty Second October 1858.

My Dear Wills.

If you look at the passage in Macready's letter, which refers to Mrs. Meredith, you will see what I mean when I ask you if you will write to him, and enquire whether he will receive the money for the paper,[†1] or what is to be done with it: telling him at the same time how much the sum is.[†2]

Was she paid for her former paper or papers?[†3] That passage in her note looks to me as if she never had been paid.

Immense at Nottingham last night. Immense final night at Birmingham. Let, very good here.

I have a bad cold all over me.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To W. H. WILLS, 25 OCTOBER 1858

MS Huntington Library.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Monday Night Twenty Fifth October | 1858

My Dear Wills

Since I left you tonight, I have heard of a case of such extraordinary, and (apparently) dangerous and unwarrantable conduct in a Policeman, that I shall take it as a great kindness if you will go to Yardley[†4] in Scotland Yard when you know the facts for yourself, and ask him to enquire what it means.

I am quite sure that if the circumstances as they stand were stated in the Times, there would be a most prodigious public uproar.

Before you wait upon Yardley, saying that you know the young ladies and can answer for them and for their being in all things most irreproachable in themselves and most respectably connected in all ways, and that you want to know what the Devil the mystery means — see the young ladies and get the particulars from them.

No. 31 Berners Street Oxford Street,[†1] is the address of the young ladies, and the young ladies are Miss Maria and Miss Ellen Ternan, both of whom you know. You are to understand, between you and me, that I have sent the eldest sister to Italy, to complete a musical education[†2] — that Mrs. Ternan is gone with her, to see her comfortably established in Florence; and that our two little friends are left together, in the meanwhile, in the family lodgings.[†3] Observe that they don't live about in furnished lodgings, but have their own furniture. They have not been many weeks in their present address, and I strongly advised Mrs. Ternan to move from their last one,[†4] [†a]which I thought unwholesome.[†a]

Can you call and see them between 3 and 5 tomorrow (Tuesday)? They will expect you, unless you write to the contrary. If you can't go, will you write and make another appointment.

(N.B. Maria is a good deal looked after.[†5] And my suspicion is, that the Policeman in question has been suborned to find out all about their domesticity by some "Swell". If so, there can be no doubt that the man ought to be dismissed.)

They will tell you his No. They don't seem so clear about his letter, but that is no matter. The division on duty in Berners Street, is of course ascertainable by Scotland Yard authorities.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To FRANK COOPER,[†6] 26 OCTOBER 1858*

MS Mr Lewis P. Kinsey, Jr.

Hull,[†7] Tuesday Twenty Sixth October | 1858

Dear Sir

In answer to your most obliging letter, for which I cordially thank you, I beg to assure you that it would have been quite conclusive with me, even if this day's post had brought me no other to the same effect. The days on which I hope to read in Oxford[†8] shall be changed, and I trust they will be so re-arranged as to meet the general convenience and ensure me the pleasure of your attendance.

Dear Sir | Yours faithfully and obliged,

CHARLES DICKENS

F. Cooper Esquire

To THE ROYAL HUMANE SOCIETY,[†1] 26 OCTOBER 1858*

MS Myers & Co.

Tavistock House, London | Twenty Sixth October 1858.

Understanding Mr. George Hodder to be a candidate for the office of Secretary to the Royal Humane Society,[†2] I readily certify to my knowledge of that gentleman's qualifications. He is very persevering, active, zealous, and obliging. He has a good knowledge of business, and is highly trustworthy. He once fulfilled the duties of an Honorary Secretary, under my chairmanship;[†3] and I had constant occasion to observe his possession of these qualities, and to esteem myself fortunate in his co-operation.

CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS BROWN, 27 OCTOBER 1858*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Mrs. Brown.

Hull | Wednesday Twenty Seventh October | 1858.

My Dear Mrs. Brown.

If I could be made uncomfortable by any expression of your affectionate friendship and interest, I should be rendered as nearly so as possible, by your attaching so much importance to a very little service. But I set myself up again with the reflection that you treasure up the remembrance of the sympathy and the tender and helpful spirit that really animated me in that sad time,[†4] and that really would have done a great deal for you, if any way had been open to it.

I have been telling Miss Coutts, in a note I send with this, that I hope to be able to call and see you both, next Monday. I shall be so happy to see your faces again. I seem to have been wandering about, so long!

Ever Believe me | Your faithful and affectionate

CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 27 OCTOBER 1858

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Great Western Hotel | London | W.

Hull, Wednesday Twenty Seventh October | 1858.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I was very glad indeed to receive your kind note when I went to London for a few hours last Sunday morning. This shall be but a very short reply to it, as this is mainly to say that I hope to be able to call upon you next Monday, during another short rest.

My tour is now drawing to a close, and I am heartily glad to think that it is nearly over, and that I shall soon be at home in my own room again. It has been wonderfully successful. My clear profit — my own, after all deductions and expences — has been more than a Thousand Guineas a month. But the manner in which the people have everywhere delighted to express that they have a personal affection for me and the interest of tender friends in me, is (especially at this time) high and far above all other considerations. I consider it a remarkable instance of good fortune that it should have fallen out that I should, in this Autumn of all others, have come face to face with so many multitudes.

Mr. Arthur Smith is everything I could desire, and has made the way as smooth as possible. His extraordinary practical knowledge, and his great zeal, and his gentle way of dealing with crowds and putting people at their ease, have been of the greatest service and comfort to me.

Many thanks for so kindly writing to Mr. Bates[†1] about Charley. Charley wrote to me at the time, expressing himself about it, most sensitively and properly.

Mrs. Matthews is by far the most perplexing female I have ever encountered in that way.[†2] I thought you ought to see the letter,[†3] and yet I feel with you that hers is a most unsatisfactory and difficult case. She has certainly become hardened in begging — gradually and surely, since she first began, as I remember, a dozen years ago, or more — in a very remarkable manner. I suppose her statements are correct. Indeed, I recollect that you once made some enquiries respecting her husband.[†4] And yet, granting them all, it seems possible to do her but very little good, and this last remonstrance[†5] (for it is quite that), has a dogged perseverance in it that is far from impressing one favorably. When I got the letter, I was so bothered and bewildered by it, that I felt strongly disposed to quarrel with the Postman for not having lost it.

My Dear Miss Coutts | Ever Faithfully and affecy. Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To R. H. HORNE, 27 OCTOBER 1858

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds. Address: Australia | R. H. Horne Esquire | Care of | Charles Panwell Esquire | Town Hall | Melbourne.

Hull | Wednesday Twenty Seventh October 1858

My Dear Horne.

I am busily travelling about, and I have been since the beginning of August, and I shall be until the middle of November.

Your letter has been forwarded to me from London, but not your Tragedy. It has arrived safely, however, and lies in my desk awaiting my return. You will therefore at once perceive that what I am now going to write, must be wholly irrespective of the Tragedy's merits, which I do not doubt.[†1]

I cannot discharge the trust you propose to me; — simply because I thoroughly know its satisfactory discharge to be impossible. Here is the state of the Theatres. Buckstone has a Comedy and Farce Company which fills his Theatre[†2] with any stock piece he chooses to play. It is rarely worth his while to produce a new Farce; a tragedy (as I know from himself) is wholly out of the question with him. The English Opera House is open for what they call Comedy, and for Burlesque.[†3] Drury Lane opens at Christmas for Pantomime, and any cheap thing that can be crammed into the same bill.[†4] Charles Kean is open for his "Farewell Season",[†5] and has announced his intention of going through his series of revivals and successful plays, and of doing nothing else.[†6] There remains but Phelps. I never had more than one negociation with him respecting a Play and its Writer. That transaction began so hopefully, progressed so wretchedly, and terminated so fatally and dismally,[†7] that I then resolved that nothing should induce me ever to enter upon such relations with him again. And, if I know myself, nothing ever will.

In this condition of things, I am quite unable to help. You know I would, if I could. I cannot, and I am heartily sorry for it.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

R. H. Horne Esquire.

To T. J. THOMPSON, 27 OCTOBER 1858*

MS Morgan Library.

Hull | Twenty Seventh October, 1858.

My Dear Thompson.

I don't know whether you are aware that for some time past I have known nothing of Frederick. I had my reasons for declining to see him, and no one in the world was stranger to me than he, until, towards the end of last August, he amazed me by presenting himself in my room at Morrison's Hotel in Dublin.

Thus severed from him, I would on no consideration have discussed his affairs. And they have been so entirely unknown to me that I do not now know what you mean when you mention "that astonishing Dorking business."[†8]

Ignorant of the details of the relations between him and his wife, I can, of course, form no judgement upon them. But quite apart from their complications and merits, I cannot doubt that your proposals to him to mediate between the two, was a kind one, and a considerate one, and a most discreet one. I have not the least doubt upon that head, and, begging you to understand so, I can say no more.

My tour is drawing to a close: and although it has been amazingly successful, I am glad to think of its fatigues as being nearly over, and of my own quieter pursuits as being again before me. I have been wandering about so long, that my writing desk has become permeated with the grease of the United Kingdom, and the state of this paper is a dismal evidence of its condition.

Pray give my love to Christiana, and believe that it will always be a real pleasure to me, and to all of us at home, to see you both. On looking back to what I have written, I find that I have not actually said that I wish to Heaven that Frederick had accepted your offer. I don't wish to leave this, merely implied.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

T. J. Thompson Esquire

To MISS ALICE TAYLOR,[†1] 28 OCTOBER 1858

Extract in T. F. Madigan catalogue, Dec 1935.

At Leeds, Thursday Night Twenty Eighth October 1858.[†2]

'And so, as Tiny Tim observed, God bless us everyone!'[†3]

In which he expressed himself, less theologically but perhaps on the whole more acceptably to Heaven, than Miggs (Miss Miggs, of Mr. Varden's household) when she hoped 'she hated and despised herself and all her feller creeturs, as every practicable Christian should'.[†4] For Miss Alice Taylor.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?28 OCTOBER 1858]

Extracts in F, VIII, iv, 665-6 and F, 1872-4, III, ix, 205*n*. Date: just after his second readings at Hull.

Saying that at Hull the vast concourse had to be addressed by Arthur Smith on the gallery stairs of the Music Hall and additional readings had to be given day and night, for the people out of town and for the people in town.

The net profit to himself, thus far, had been upwards of three hundred pounds a week. That is no doubt immense, our expenses being necessarily large, and the travelling party being always five. Another source of profit was the sale of the copies of the several Readings prepared by himself. Our people alone sell eight, ten, and twelve dozen a night.

To MRS WHITFORD,[†1] 29 OCTOBER 1858

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, July 1972; MS 2 pp.; dated Sheffield, 29 Oct 58; addressed Mrs. Thomas Whitford, Belgrave,[†2] near Leicester.[†3]

Declining her invitation received at Leeds that morning, on the grounds that he never accepted invitations while on tour. The "very grand folks" and the very plain folks everywhere have been equally shut out from me.

Says that his mother will be greatly interested to know that Mrs. Whitford had written to him. Laetitia and her husband he often sees.[†4]

I beg to send my regards to your liege Lord, and to that most wonderful of all the prodigies I have ever heard of — the only child — who is not a prodigy.

To FREDERICK DICKENS, [?31 OCTOBER 1858]

Mention in To Thompson, 8 Nov 58. Date: immediately after Thompson's "second letter" (his reply to CD's of 27 Oct).

November

To JOHN FORSTER, [?1 NOVEMBER 1858]

Extract from F (1872-4), III, ix, 205*n*. Date: "A later letter" than To Forster, ?28 Oct, according to Forster; probably early Nov, a week or so after his second reading in Manchester on 23 Oct.

The men with the reading books were sold out, for about the twentieth time, at Manchester. Eleven dozen of the Poor Traveller, Boots and Mrs Gamp being sold in about ten minutes, they had no more left; and Manchester became green with the little tracts, in every bookshop, outside every omnibus, and passing along every street. The sale of them, apart from us, must be very great.†5

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 3 NOVEMBER 1858†

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Great Western Hotel | London | W.

Wolverhampton | Wednesday Third November, 1858.

My Dear Miss Coutts

I was very sorry — especially as I could have seen you, for the Fog cleared on purpose!

My Tour will end, please God, at Brighton, next Saturday week, the 13th. It will seem so strange and quiet and pleasant to me, to sit down at my desk again.

With love to Mrs. Brown
Ever faithfully and affecy. Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 3 NOVEMBER 1858

MS Dickens House.

Wolverhampton | Wednesday Third November 1858.

My Dearest Georgy.

†a This is a very short note, merely to report myself "all right", and to add that I purpose being down on Saturday morning by the Chandelier-man Train.†1 I shall have (I am sorry to add) to leave Gad's Hill on Sunday, for I must dine with Forster that day. We have to confer about Whitefriars, and he has been so injured by my never accepting any of his many invitations, that I have atoned by proposing this appointment.†a Little Leamington came out in the most amazing manner yesterday. We took £130, and turned away hundreds upon hundreds of people. They are represented as the dullest and worst of audiences. I found them very good indeed — even in the morning.†2

There awaited me at the hotel, a letter from the Reverend Mr. Young,[†3] Wentworth Watson's tutor, saying that Mrs. Watson wished her boy to shake hands with me, and that he would bring him in the evening. I expected him at the Hotel, before the reading. But he did not come. He spoke to John about it in the room at night. The crowd and confusion, however, were very great, and I saw nothing of him. In his letter he said that Mrs. Watson was at Paris on her way home, and would be at Brighton at the end of this week. I suppose I shall see her there, at the end of next week.

We find a Let of 200 stalls here, which is very large for this place. The evening being fine too, and Blue being to be seen in the sky beyond the smoke, we expect to have a very full hall.[†1] Tell Mamey and Katey that if they had been with us on the railway today between Leamington and this place, they would have seen (though it is only an hour and ten minutes by the Express), Fires and Smoke indeed. We came through a part of the Black Country that you know, and it looked at its Blackest. All the furnaces seemed in full blast, and all the CoalPits to be working.

It is Market Day here, and the Iron Masters are standing out in the street (where they always hold High Change),[†2] making such an iron hum and buzz, that they confuse me horribly. In addition there is a Bellman announcing something — not the reading, I beg to say — and there is an excavation being made in the centre of the open-place, for a statue, or a pump, or a Lamp Post, or something or other, round which all the Wolverhampton boys are yelling and struggling.

And here is Arthur, begging to have dinner at half past 3 instead of 4, because he foresees "a wiry evening"[†3] in store for him. Under which complication of distractions, to which a waitress with a tray at this moment adds herself, I sink, and leave off.

My best love to the dear girls, and to the noble Plorn, and to you, Marguerite and Ellen Stone not forgotten. All yesterday and to-day I have been doing everything to the tune of —

— "And the day is dark and dreary"[†4]

Ever Dearest Georgy | Your most affectionate and faithful

CHARLES DICKENS

I hope the Brazier is intolerably hot, and half stifles all the family. Then, and not otherwise, I shall think it in satisfactory work.

To W. H. WILLS, 3 NOVEMBER 1858

MS Huntington Library.

Wolverhampton | Wednesday Third November, 1858.

My Dear Wills.

H.W.

You remember that at one of our Audit Meetings — I think, the last[†5] — I suggested to Mr. Evans that we ought to have the vouchers for the payments made, and charged as being made, by their Firm, on account of H.W. It arose out of our speaking of paying for the paper in ready money.

Mr. Evans replied to that, that we, the other proprietors in H.W.[†1] were not responsible for the paper. He said so, with confidence; and I did not urge the point, though I had great doubts of his being legally right.

I have now ascertained that we are legally responsible. Will you therefore let Mr. Evans know that at the Audit of next week,[†2] we wish to have produced to us, the Vouchers for their payments on account of Household Words. There can be no Audit, I am assured, without such Vouchers, except in the mere name.

Pray do not fail to see to this.

Ever Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

W. H. Wills Esquire

To MESSRS BRADBURY & EVANS, [3 NOVEMBER 1858]

Mention in next.

To W. H. WILLS, 3 NOVEMBER 1858

MS Huntington Library.

Swan, Wolverhampton | Wednesday Third November 1858.

My Dear Wills.

I enclose you the note that I think best calculated to be shewn or sent by you to B and E on the voucher question.

In reference to my own copyrights, you seem to have omitted by accident, the most important question of all. It is, whether I, being the largest proprietor in the books,[†3] can change the printer and publisher of them if I choose? On this, the whole question of the extent of our power and the manner of its exercise, depends. There is no sub-agreement whatever, as to printing and publishing.

Now, will you again see Ouvry on this vital question — which absolutely governs our proceeding as to Household Words — and communicate his opinion on that point, to Forster, along with his opinion on the other points? I cannot consult with Forster[†4] to any purpose, until we know exactly how we stand on this head.

As to Wilkie's paper.[†5] — I see no necessity whatever, for altering Fauntleroy's name.[†6] But I wouldn't use it in the title. I would call it A Paradoxical Experience — or A Curiosity of Life — or something like that.

I purpose being at the office, at 1 on Friday.

Little Leamington came out amazingly yesterday. We took £130, and turned away many hundreds of people. We have 200 stalls let here for to night; which, considering the size of the town, is unusually large.

And I think that's all I have to say, at present.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?3-4 NOVEMBER 1858]

Extract in F, 1872-4, III, ix, 205*n*. Date: "another letter", according to Forster; perhaps a few days later.

Did I tell you that the agents for our tickets who are also book-sellers, say very generally that the readings decidedly increase the sale of the books they are taken from? We were first told of this by a Mr. Parke,[†1] a wealthy old gentleman in a very large way at Wolverhampton, who did all the business for love, and would not take a farthing. Since then, we have constantly come upon it; and M'Glashin and Gill[†2] at Dublin were very strong about it indeed.

To J. COUCHMAN,[†3] [4] NOVEMBER 1858

Text in W. R. Hughes, A Week's Tramp in Dickens-Land, p. 224. Date: Thursday was the 4th in 1858.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday, 5th Nov., 1858

Mr. Couchman,

Please to ease the coach-house doors, and to put up some pegs, agreeably to George Belcher's[†4] directions.

To VINCENT WANOSTROCHT,[†5] 5 NOVEMBER 1858*

MS Yale University Library.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS,
Friday Fifth November 1858

Dear Sir

I am much obliged to you for your kind letter, and beg you to accept my cordial thanks. I cannot, however, prolong my series of Readings at this time.

Being in town for a few hours only, I answer your favor very hastily.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

V. Wanoshocht[†6] Esquire

To THE REV. JAMES WHITE, 5 NOVEMBER 1858

Text from MDGH, II, 81.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Friday, Nov. 5th, 1858.

My dear White,

May I entreat you to thank Mr. Carter[†1] very earnestly and kindly in my name, for his proffered hospitality; and, further, to explain to him that since my readings began, I have known them to be incompatible with all social enjoyments, and have neither set foot in a friend's house nor sat down to a friend's table in any one of all the many places I have been to, but have rigidly kept myself to my hotels. To this resolution I must hold until the last. There is not the least virtue in it. It is a matter of stern necessity, and I submit with the worst grace possible.

Will you let me know, either at Southampton or Portsmouth, whether any of you, and how many of you, if any, are coming over, so that Arthur Smith may reserve good seats?[†2] Tell Lotty I hope she does not contemplate coming to the morning reading; I always hate it so myself.

Mary and Katey are down at Gad's Hill with Georgy and Plornish, and they have Marguerite Power and Ellen Stone staying there. I am sorry to say that even my benevolence descries no prospect of their being able to come to my native place.[†3]

On Saturday week, the 13th, my tour, please God, ends.

My best love to Mrs. White, and to Lotty, and to Clara.

Ever, my dear White, affectionately yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To THE REV. MATTHEW GIBSON, 6 NOVEMBER 1858

MS Robert H. Taylor Collection, Princeton University.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Sixth November, 1858.

My Dear Sir

Will you and Mr. Bewsher tell me whether you think the gigantic Sydney[†4] really has any sort of Call to the Sea Service? He has often talked of it at home here, and has lately written an odd characteristic letter to one of his sisters, entreating her to ask me to make the Navy his profession, as he is devoted to it "without any sham", and longs to follow it.[†5]

I cannot make out in my own mind, how much of this ardour is in-bred in the boy, and how much of it is referable to the frequent appearances here, in the last holidays, of a young Midshipman, the son of an Edinburgh friend of mine,[†1] in glorious buttons and with a real steel weapon in his belt. As you have so many more opportunities of observing Sydney than I have, I should be very glad of your opinion: though of course I am not so unreasonable as to expect you to pronounce oracularly on so difficult a question.

But he is a boy of such remarkable energy and purpose, considering his years and inches, that if I supposed him to be quite in earnest and to have made up his small mind, I would give him his way, because I really believe he would then follow it out with spirit.

My daughters and Miss Hogarth unite in kind regard to yourself and Mr. Bewsher; and I am always
My Dear Sir | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Rev. M. Gibson

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 8 NOVEMBER 1858

MS Dickens House.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Monday Eighth November, 1858.

My Dearest Georgy

Knowing that the enclosed from Mrs. Watson would refer to me, I opened it, to see if there were anything that I could answer. Discovering nothing of that kind, I send it on to you to answer for yourself.

I have added Davies & Son[†2] to the House cheque: making the total £33..11..5. Enclosed is a cheque for £33..11..6.

Enclosed also is a cheque in the Blacksmith's[†3] favor, for £5..18..7 — the amount of his bill.

I am in no humour for going away again this morning, and should be in the worst of humours but for seeing Land so close before me.

Best love to dearest Mamey and Katey, and the good and gallant Plorn,[†4]

To T. J. THOMPSON, 8 NOVEMBER 1858*

MS Morgan Library.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Monday Eighth November, 1858.

My Dear Thompson

On the receipt of your second letter,[†1] I wrote to Frederick. He has been here by appointment this morning, and I have spoken to him on the wretched subject.

I told him that the Dorking matter[†2] had been made known to me, but I did not say by whom. He asked me by whom, but I declined to tell him. I said that it seemed to me that you were the natural person whom he should have asked to negociate. He did not reply that you had offered to do so; but Alfred (to whom I spoke, similarly, on the matter last Thursday) bore testimony to that circumstance, with all becoming earnestness.

I particularly mentioned to Frederick that I desired to know nothing of the differences between him and his wife and his wife's family,[†3] and that in point of fact I would know nothing about them, and would not enter upon their discussion. I limited myself, I told him, to the one Dorking circumstance, and the accompanying circumstance that he refused to make his wife any allowance. Upon that state of things only, discarding everything about it and around it, I expressed my opinion to him in the strongest manner and advised him with the greatest emphasis. My belief is, that I made no impression upon him whatever. He left me, declaring that I had made none; and I have not the faintest reason to suppose that he attached a feather's weight to any thing I said.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

T. J. Thompson Esquire.

To W. H. WILLS, 8 NOVEMBER 1858*

MS Huntington Library.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Monday Eighth November, 1858.

My Dear Wills

I enclose you the notice[†4] to be delivered to B and E with awful gravity and portentous demeanour.[†5]

Did you think of Beard, in connexion with the Daily News Wants?[†6]

You will write to me by tomorrow night's post, of course.

I can make no impression on Frederick.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To MESSRS BRADBURY & EVANS, 9 NOVEMBER 1858*

MS Berg Collection.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Tuesday Ninth November, 1858.

Gentlemen

I request you, in compliance with the provisions of the deed of partnership in Household Words, to be so good as to convene a special meeting of the partners, to be held within seven days from this date,[†1] for the consideration of a Resolution I shall have to propose.[†2]

CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Bradbury and Evans.

To WILKIE COLLINS, 9 NOVEMBER 1858

MS Morgan Library.

Royal Hotel, Southampton
Tuesday Evening Ninth November | 1858.

My Dear Wilkie

I was under the impression that I was to finish at Brighton on the afternoon of Saturday. I find however, that I read, both in the afternoon and in the evening. I would propose to you to come and celebrate the end of the Tour, by dining with us that day at the Bedford;[†3] but, between two readings, I am afraid it would rather bore than gratify your digestive functions?

Assuming it not to be worth your while to take a Saturday "Return" to Brighton, then, will you arrange to go down to Gads Hill on Sunday in good time for dinner? I will go down, by some train or other, in good time for dinner too. How do you feel about having the big bedroom, and writing there through the week? I would go to work too, and we might do Heaven knows how much[†1] — with an escapade to town for a night, if we felt in the humour.

I pause for a reply.[†2] — Let me find it at the Bedford at Brighton, when I get there on Friday forenoon.

Wills arranged with me that you were presently to receive sacks of Christmas "matter;" — not much "mind" with it,[†3] I am afraid.[†4]

You have furnished Costello's[†5] wing with a feather, for an eagle flight into the Pension List.[†6]

Ever affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

Wilkie Collins Esquire

To W. H. WILLS, 10 NOVEMBER 1858

MS Huntington Library.

Royal Hotel, Southampton | Wednesday Tenth November 1858

My Dear Wills.

The Audit Meeting appears to have gone off, pretty much as I expected it would. I felt sure of their producing the documents — I meant to have written, Vouchers.[†7]

In the Forster Matter I do not agree with you. For this reason. It is clear to my mind that no discussion can take place between me and Bradbury and Evans. My being there would shut up any approach to it, — simply because I have steadily refused to enter on any approach to it, however distant, and have left Evans's advances disregarded. Now, with Forster they are under no such restraint. And even in the event of no discussion taking place with him at the Meeting[†8] (which is the most probable aspect of Monday), they still have him legitimately in the business, and can at any time go to him or write to him. They could not do so with me, because they have already proved it to be unavailing.

As to his management of the interview, I have not a doubt of his arranging it as I shall entreat him to do. And I can write to him from Brighton, expressly laying down the course that I want him to take. That course shall be, accommodation if it be possible. It is not possible with me, in a matter in which I have so deep a personal feeling.[†9]

It never can come about, unless they have a third person before them, without seeking such person.

For these reasons, I would get the Power of Attorney — a Power to Forster to act for me, in matters relating to H.W. I must execute it. Could you not come down to Brighton with it? We shall be there by mid-day on Friday. I would write my letter to Forster then and there, and you should see it, and see that it is to your satisfaction. I feel convinced that he would not depart from a course agreed upon.[†1] You know how emphatically he feels that the first thing above all others, is, not to injure the property.

In order to avoid unnecessary conglomeration of our accounts, let me give you a cheque[†2] for your part of the Audit Day balance. [†a]It is enclosed.[†a]

Don't go to press with Wilkie's paper about Sydney Herbert, Guizot, the heir of Redcliffe, and Dr. Dulcamara, without my seeing it.[†3]

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To THE INDEPENDENT STUDENTS,[†4] GLASGOW UNIVERSITY, [?10 or 11 NOVEMBER 1858]

Mention in To McTear, 22 Nov 58.

Objecting to being nominated for the Rectorship.[†5]

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 11 NOVEMBER 1858

Mention in N, III, 71.

To WILKIE COLLINS, 13 NOVEMBER 1858

MS Morgan Library.

Bedford Hotel | Saturday Thirteenth November | 1858.

My Dear Wilkie

I am reading, this afternoon. Dinner is ordered at 5 punctually. They will shew you up into the sitting-room when you have read this, and will also shew you your bedroom, which I have duly commanded. — Think of our finding ready-taken here, One Thousand Stalls![†1]

Ever affectionately

CD.

To THE HON. MRS RICHARD WATSON, 13 NOVEMBER 1858

MS Huntington Library.

Bedford | Saturday Evg. 13th. Novr. 1858.

My Dear Mrs. Watson

The Audience are always "dense" in the morning. There is hardly an exception to the rule. Sometimes, in London — not often.

Pray ask for Arthur Smith again, and he will do his best.[†2] For he knows how much I love you, and how many old dear remembrances surround you in my mind.

Ever Yours
CD.

To H. L. WINTER, 13 NOVEMBER 1858

MS Huntington Library. Address: — Winter Esquire.

Brighton | Saturday Thirteenth November 1858

My Dear Mr. Winter

In the hope that a friendly word of remembrance in season, may not be unacceptable to you, I write to assure you of my sympathy with you in your trouble.[†3] Pray do not let it cast you down too much. What has happened to you, has happened to many thousands of good and honorable men, and will happen again in like manner, to the end of all things. If you should feel the bitterness of losing belief in any nature you had previously trusted in, consider that the truth is always better than a falsehood, even though the truth involves the detection of such skin-deep friendship as that which can cool towards a man in temporary misfortune. It is better lost than kept, as all things worthless are.

Be strong of heart for yourself, and look forward to a better time.

You will not think, I know, that I obtrude myself upon you in asking to be borne in mind among the friends who feel truly towards you.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS WINTER, 13 NOVEMBER 1858

MS Huntington Library.

Brighton, Saturday Thirteenth November | 1858

My Dear Mrs. Winter.

I have been so constantly and rapidly changing from place to place during the past week, that I am only just now in receipt of the intelligence of your misfortune. With the utmost sincerity and earnestness of which my heart is capable, I condole with you upon it, and assure you of my true sympathy and friendship. It has distressed me greatly. Not because I am so worldly or so unjust as to couple the least reproach or blame with a reverse that I do not doubt to have been unavoidable, and that I know to be always easily possible of occurrence to the best and most fortunate of men, but because I know you feel it heavily.

I wish to Heaven it were in my power to help Mr. Winter to any new opening in life. But you can hardly imagine how powerless I am in any such case. My own work in life being of that kind that I must always do it with my own unassisted hand and head, I have such rare opportunities of placing any one, that for years and years I have been seeking in vain to help in this way a friend of the old days[†1] when the old house stood unchanged in Lombard Street.[†2] To this hour, I have not succeeded, though I have strenuously tried my hardest, both abroad and home. Commercial opportunities, above all, are so far removed from me, that I dare not encourage a hope of my power to serve Mr. Winter with my good word, ever coming within a year's journey of my will and wish to do it.

But I really think that your father,[†3] who could do much in such a case without drawing at all heavily upon his purse, might be induced to do, what — I may say to you, Maria — it is no great stretch of sentiment to call his duty. Has not Margaret[†4] great influence with him? Have not you some? And don't you think that if you were to set yourself steadily to exert whatever influence you can bring to bear upon him, you would do the best within your reach for your husband, your child, and yourself? Is it not all important that you should try your utmost with him, at this time?[†5]

Forgive my recommending this, if you have so anticipated the recommendation as to have done all that possibly can be done to move him. But what you tell me about George[†1] seems so strange, so hard, and so ill-balanced, that I cannot avoid the subject.

I write in the greatest haste, being overwhelmed by business here. On Monday I hope to be at Gad's Hill, and to remain either there or at Tavistock House for months to come. I enclose a few lines to Mr. Winter, and am ever

Your faithful friend
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS DOLBY, 16 NOVEMBER 1858†

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Sixteenth November, 1858.

My Dear Miss Dolby.

I received your letter here, this morning. Pray do not suppose for a moment, that the least explanation or apology was a necessary part of it. My reply is rendered short, by the one circumstance, solely, that it originates in a mistake. I have not, I assure you, the remotest idea of severing myself from Arthur Smith.[†2] If I were to enter upon any other series of readings, I should consider him an essential part of them. No other end has come to our relations with one another, than the end of my Tour. I have every conceivable reason to regard him as one of my most trusty friends, nor can I easily imagine myself treading the same road again without him.

Believe me always | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Dolby.

To W. H. WILLS, 20 NOVEMBER 1858

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS,
Saturday Twentieth Novr. 1858

My Dear Wills.

As I find you are not coming here to day, I post this to let you know that we have returned to Tavistock House.

Also, that Wilkie and I have arranged to pass the whole day here, on Monday Week, the 29th. to connect the various portions of the Xmas No. and get it finally together.[†3] If you arrange to have them ready at the Printers, for such cuts, and such short bits of copy as we shall send them from time to time in the course of that day, we can finally correct it before we leave here that night, and you can send your last revise for Press next day.

This will enable you, now to settle on what day the Xmas No. shall be published, and to announce the said day in our No. sent to Press next week.[†1]

Ever Faithfully
CD.

To T. J. THOMPSON, 22 NOVEMBER 1858*

MS Morgan Library.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Monday Twenty Second November 1858.

My Dear Thompson

Frederick has been again to me, and has said that after weighing and considering what I said to him, he will make any reasonable terms with his wife. Still entirely with-holding from him that I had heard from you on the subject, I said I would communicate with you, if he chose to authorize me, but that I would communicate with no one else. Then he did authorize me, and this note follows thereupon.

It was only last night that I saw him here.

The first thing to be done by your influence is (I take it) to stay the legal proceedings.[†2] The next question is, what does his wife think he ought to allow her, and what is it, with his burdened means, in his power to allow her? If you and I can strike this medium — and surely you and I who have no interest but in doing right, can strike it, if we try — this wretched business may be brought to a quiet end.[†3]

Kind love from all. | Ever Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

T. J. Thompson Esquire

I was in your old Pall Mall rooms[†4] yesterday, seeing Edwin James.[†5]

To ROBERT McTEAR,[†1] 22 NOVEMBER 1858*

MS Glasgow University Library. Address: Robert McTear[†2] Esquire | 21 Gordon Street | Glasgow.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Monday Evening, Twenty Second November 1858

Dear Sir

I am truly obliged to you for your kind letter, and am truly touched by the affectionate and earnest remembrance of my esteemed friend, Sheridan Knowles.[†3] But here my interest in the subject ends. To my great surprise and indignation I was put up as a "Candidate" (God save me!) for the Lord Rectorship of the College, without my own knowledge or consent.[†4] As soon as the independent students (very independent, as it appeared to me), thought fit to notify that circumstance to me, I replied that if I were elected, I should decline the office,[†5] and that I had a constitutional objection to being so coolly handled.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Robert McTear[†2] Esquire

To W. M. THACKERAY, 24 NOVEMBER 1858

Text from Edmund Yates, Mr. Thackeray, Mr. Yates, and the Garrick Club, p. 13.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Wednesday, 24th November, 1858.

My dear Thackeray,

Without a word of prelude, I wish this note to revert to a subject on which I said six words to you at the Athenaeum when I last saw you.[†6]

Coming home from my country work, I find Mr. Edwin James's[†7] opinion taken on this painful question of the Garrick and Mr. Edmund Yates.[†1] I find it strong on the illegality of the Garrick proceeding. Not to complicate this note or give it a formal appearance, I forbear from copying the opinion; but I have asked to see it, and I have it, and I want to make no secret from you of a word of it.

I find Mr. Edwin James retained on the one side; I hear and read of the Attorney-General[†2] being retained on the other. Let me, in this state of things, ask you a plain question.

Can any conference be held between me, as representing Mr. Yates, and an appointed friend of yours, as representing you, with the hope and purpose of some quiet accommodation of this deplorable matter, which will satisfy the feelings of all concerned?

It is right that, in putting this to you, I should tell you that Mr. Yates, when you first wrote to him, brought your letter to me. He had recently done me a manly service I can never forget, in some private distress of mine (generally within your knowledge),[†3] and he naturally thought of me as his friend in an emergency. I told him that his article was not to be defended; but I confirmed him in his opinion, that it was not reasonably possible for him to set right what was amiss, on the receipt of a letter couched in the very strong terms you had employed. When you appealed to the Garrick Committee and they called their General Meeting, I said at that meeting that you and I had been on good terms for many years, and that I was very sorry to find myself opposed to you; but that I was clear that the Committee had nothing on earth to do with it, and that in the strength of my conviction I should go against them.[†4]

If this mediation that I have suggested can take place, I shall be heartily glad to do my best in it — and God knows in no hostile spirit towards any one, least of all to you. If it cannot take place, the thing is at least no worse than it was; and you will burn this letter and I will burn your answer.

Yours faithfully,
CHARLES DICKENS[†5]

W.M. Thackeray, Esq.

To DR JOHN ELLIOTSON, 25 NOVEMBER 1858

Extract in Anderson Galleries catalogue, Apr 1916; MS 1 p.; addressed Dr Elliotson.

Tavistock House | November Twenty-Fifth 1858

The husband of that lady whom I mesmerised in [Genoa][†1] long ago, and whose case is so very remarkable, is in town for a few days.[†2] ... Can you dine with us?

To W. H. WILLS, 25 NOVEMBER 1858

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS,
Thursday Twenty Fifth Novr. 1858

My Dear Wills.

I want to prepare you for an H.W. disappointment, in case it should come off. My introduced paper for the Xmas No.[†3] involves such an odd idea — which appears to me so humourous, and so available at greater length — that I am debating whether or no I shall cancel the paper (it has gone to the Printer's to day),[†1] and make it the Pivot round which my next book shall revolve.[†2]

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To W. BLANCHARD JERROLD, 26 NOVEMBER 1858

MS Mr Douglas Jerrold. Address: Blanchard Jerrold Esquire | Fairfield Farm | near | Broadstairs | Kent.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Friday Twenty Sixth November 1858

My Dear William Jerrold

I enclose you the few lines I have written.[†3] Do what you like with them, and consider them yours, not mine. [†a]It has been a gloomy task, and has made my heart heavy.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS[†a]

To MESSRS SMITH ELDER & CO.,[†4] 26 NOVEMBER 1858

MS Messrs John Murray (Publishers) Ltd.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Friday Twenty Sixth November 1858

Gentlemen

I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of yesterday's date. I had previously written to Mr. Horne, expressing my regret that I could not undertake to negociate with any Manager respecting any Tragedy; and that I could, consequently, take no charge of this Tragedy.[†5]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Smith Elder[†6] and Co.

To JOHN FORSTER for MESSRS BRADBURY & EVANS, 27 NOVEMBER 1858

MS Messrs Farrer & Co.

Acting under the Power of Attorney which I hold from Mr. Dickens, I address this letter to you on the subject of Household Words.

The publication being discontinued Six months hence, under the letter of the Resolution passed at the Special Meeting, such discontinuance will involve Mr. Dickens in some new business arrangements for which he must provide beforehand, and which he must set about soon. It is therefore essential that I should know from you, within a given short time, whether you are disposed to treat with Mr. Dickens for the sale to him of your interest in the work.

Should you inform me within fourteen days from this date that you are disposed to sell that interest to Mr. Dickens, I shall be prepared to offer you a price for it. Should you make no communication to me to that effect within that time, please to understand that Mr. Dickens can no longer entertain the idea of the purchase, and will finally abandon it.

To EDMUND YATES, [?28 NOVEMBER 1858]

Extract in Edmund Yates, Mr. Thackeray, Mr. Yates, and the Garrick Club, p. 13. Date: on or very soon after 28 Nov 58.

As the receiver of my letter did not respect the confidence in which it addressed him, there can be none left for you to violate. I send you what I wrote to Thackeray, and what he wrote to me,[†1] and you are at perfect liberty to print the two.[†2] I am, of course, your authority for doing so.

To H. G. ADAMS, 30 NOVEMBER 1858*

MS Morgan Library.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Tuesday Thirtieth November, 1858.

My Dear Sir

Mr. Arthur Smith is in Paris for a few days, and I therefore answer your letter[†3] without waiting for him.

FIRST, AS TO THE SUBJECT. YOU CAN HAVE[†1]

The Poor Traveller
Boots at the Holly Tree Inn

and
Mrs. Gamp:[†2]

or:

Little Dombey

and

The Trial from Pickwick

Pray make your own choice.[†3] There is no difference in respect of the time occupied. Each reading is well within two hours — ten minutes to spare, probably.

I do not consider that I have any right to object to your filling any places you can fill.[†4]

Will you send me (to Gad's Hill, as the time comes on) 4 Gallery Seats, and 2 Below, Reserved.[†5] But I must beg to have it distinctly understood that I pay for these.

I think our former light[†6] will do very well. But if Mr. Arthur Smith should wish to substitute our own[†7] (on just the same plan), he will let you know.

You know, I assume, that Little Dombey ends with the child's Death? It is always a very great impression, and a very sad one. But the Trial is very merry.

In the other reading, the opening scene of the Poor Traveller belongs to Chatham. Moreover, that Reading is by far the merrier of the two. It has less story, however.

This, to assist your decision. I will do my best with either.

Or, there is the Chimes — very[†8] dramatic, but very melancholy on the whole.

Faithfully Yours

CD.

December

To ALBERT SMITH,[†1] 1 DECEMBER 1858

Text from MDGH, III, 186.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Wednesday Night, 1st December, 1858

My dear Albert,

I cannot tell you how grieved I am for poor dear Arthur (even you can hardly love him better than I do), or with what anxiety I shall wait for further news of him.[†2]

Pray let me know how he is to-morrow. Tell them at home that Olliffe is the kindest and gentlest of men — a man of rare experience and opportunity — perfect master of his profession, and to be confidently and implicitly relied upon. There is no man alive, in whose hands I would more thankfully trust myself.

I will write a cheery word to the dear fellow in the morning.

Ever faithfully,
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To ARTHUR SMITH, 2 DECEMBER 1858

Text from MDGH, III, 187.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Thursday, 2nd December, 1858.

My dear Arthur,

I cannot tell you how surprised and grieved I was last night to hear from Albert of your severe illness. It is not my present intention to give you the trouble of reading anything like a letter, but I MUST send you my loving word, and tell you how we all think of you.

And here am I going off to-morrow to that meeting at Manchester without you![†3] the wildest and most impossible of moves as it seems to me. And to think of my coming back by Coventry, on Saturday, to receive the chronometer — also without you![†4]

If you don't get perfectly well soon, my dear old fellow, I shall come over to Paris to look after you, and to tell Olliffe (give him my love, and the same for Lady Olliffe) what a Blessing he is.

With kindest regards to Mrs. Arthur[†5] and her sister,[†6]

Ever heartily and affectionately yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To COLIN RAE BROWN, 6 DECEMBER 1858

MS Mitchell Library, Glasgow.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Monday Sixth December, 1858.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Brown, and regrets that his engagements do not admit of his accepting the invitation with which he is honored, to the Glasgow Burns Festival[†1] under the distinguished presidency of Sir Archibald Alison.[†2]

To FREDERIC CHAPMAN,[†3] 6 DECEMBER 1858*

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: Fred. Chapman Esquire | 193 Piccadilly | W.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Monday Sixth December, 1858.

Dear Sir

I am exceedingly glad to hear from yourself of the advancement in your prospects. Let me cordially congratulate you upon it. I am quite sure that Mr. Chapman has exercised a sound as well as a kind discretion in his choice of a business-partner,[†4] and I beg you to accept my best wishes for your joint success.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Frederic Chapman Esquire

To SIR JOSEPH PAXTON, 6 DECEMBER 1858

MS Dr M. G. J. Beets.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Monday Sixth December 1858.

My Dear Paxton

I received your letter on Friday morning as I was starting for Manchester: where I had to preside at a Meeting, before going to Coventry. I cannot tell you how it surprised and vexed me. For some days I had been expecting to hear from you; and your letter was so different from anything I had expected, that it surprised me as much as it annoyed me — which is saying a great deal.

Of course you know the local lights and shadows of Coventry, better than I do; but I am strongly of opinion that Mr. Whitten's[†1] discretion is not remarkable, and that in this matter he made a mistake. I shewed him plainly that I thought so, and he told me of the additional correspondence he had had with you. It appeared to me, at the little dinner,[†2] quite clear that there was no suspicion of the real state of the case, and that if you had been there you would have been heartily received.[†3] The members were toasted;[†4] and Mr. Whitten, in returning thanks for you, said you were "prevented from coming, by an important engagement".[†5] He did not make the faintest reference to his having done any thing to keep you away.

I talked of you to all of them, and I considered with some anxiety whether I should refer to your absence, in speaking. After a careful study of our Blunder-headed Whitten, I came to the conclusion that I had better not. For I saw that (being uneasy), if he could only find a hole big enough to put his foot in, he would unquestionably do it, and that what I had to do, was, to fill up all the holes in his way. I therefore did my very best to hold them all together, in the brightest condition of general good humour. My hope and belief are that I succeeded, and that my inevitable association with you in their minds, is established as a pleasant (and possibly, at some time, not an unserviceable) one.

The whole thing passed brilliantly,[†6] and Wren Hoskyns[†7] in the chair was exceedingly hearty and manly about you.[†8] If there were really any sore place before, I think the Dinner had a very wholesome effect upon it. But that Mr. Whitten's tactics were timid and wrong, I feel quite convinced.

Many thanks for the Game, which arrived in admirable condition. I am glad to find you writing hopefully of your past trouble, and am glad I can write hopefully of mine. Can't you propose a day for coming to dine with me (without company), and smoking a cigar?

Faithfully Always
CHARLES DICKENS

Sir Joseph Paxton.

To JAMES PAYN, 6 DECEMBER 1858

MS University of California, Los Angeles.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Monday Sixth December, 1858.

My Dear Mr. Payn

I have received your letter with mingled regret and pleasure. I am heartily sorry to lose you as a fellow-workman,[†1] but heartily glad to have gained you as a friend.

In that relation, you must remember that you incur the penalty of not coming to London without coming to see us here. My daughters will be delighted to revert to the day when you were in danger of perpetual imprisonment at Hawthornden.[†2] They have often spoken of it since, and always with a great regard for you.

As they have carried off the Forster Brothers[†3] (I see I have written it "Forster", because I am always writing to my friend of that name),[†4] I am not yet in a condition to say I have made their acquaintance. But you may be sure that I shall not fail to read that book with true interest.

Believe me | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

J. Payn Esquire

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 6 DECEMBER 1858

Mention in Sotheby's catalogue, Dec 1963; MS 1 p.; dated 6 Dec 58.

Regretting his inability to comply with a request made by his correspondent.

To HENRY BICKNELL,[†5] 9 DECEMBER 1858

Mention in J. W. Jarvis "Dickens catalogue", 1884; MS 2 pp.; dated Tavistock House, 9 Dec 58; addressed Henry Bicknell Esquire, Crystal Palace.

To MISS MARY BOYLE, 9 DECEMBER 1858*

MS Morgan Library.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Thursday Ninth December 1858.

My Dear Mary.

I am under no apprehension that you will think me unmindful of your affectionate and true friendship, because I have so long detained the enclosed letter.[†1] I have a perfect conviction that you know my heart better.

It reached me in Edinburgh, when my sense of cruel wrong was strongest within me. I had then newly resolved to put the subject away from me, and to know no more of it. I made up my mind, therefore, that I would not read even this letter. And to this minute I never have read one word of it.

Constituted to do the work that is in me, I am a man full of passion and energy, and my own wild way that I must go, is often — at the best — wild enough. But vengeance and hatred have never had a place in my breast. Some little while ago, I felt that they were only to be kept out by this course. So I took it, and hold to it.

Receive my fervent thanks, and ever believe me

Your affectionate | And grateful friend
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Mary Boyle.

To EMILE DE LA RUE, 10 DECEMBER 1858*

MS Berg Collection.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Friday Tenth December 1858.

My Dear De la Rue

I regret to say that Albert Smith's good brother has had a relapse, and that Albert has been hurriedly summoned to Paris, to see him.[†2] We will therefore meet tomorrow, at the Household Words office at One precisely.

Ever Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 13 DECEMBER 1858

MS Morgan Library.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Monday Thirteenth December, 1858.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

Wills sent Mrs. Brown her paper from Manchester, and I sent you another paper at the same time.†3

Mrs. Matthews's case is clearly hopeless. I have had another letter from her this morning, which I have put in the fire. Her former letter, and the Bishop's,†1 I enclose.

You will be sorry to hear that Mr. Arthur Smith, going over to Paris at the close of our labors, was taken ill there with diptheria†2 and Scarlet fever, and has been in an alarming state. He is now recovering, though very weak and much reduced. The Work of our tour was a little too hard for him, I fear. I thank God that I have been, and am, wonderfully well, and that I have never felt the fatigue; though it came upon me under no commonly harassing circumstances, when I would sometimes as soon have laid myself down and given up all, as I would have gone into a bright crowd and read.

It is to be hoped you have brighter weather on the Devonshire Coast†3 than we have here. London, I really think, was never so dark for so many days together as it has been in this present month. It is like living in a large dirty slate. On Saturday I took a foreign friend from Genoa, down to the Crystal Palace. I asked him to try to imagine the Sun shining down through the glass, and making broad lights and shadows. He said he tried very hard, but he couldn't imagine the sun shining within fifty miles of London under any circumstances.†4

The Coventry people have given me a seventy five Guinea Watch, which is chronometer, Repeater, and every other terrible Machine that a watch can be. It was very feelingly and pleasantly given, and I prize it highly.

This is all the news I have — except that I send my love to Mrs. Brown — which is no news — and that I am ever — which is no news either —

My Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully and affecy. Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To FRANK STONE, 13 DECEMBER 1858

Text from MDGH, II, 82.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Monday, Dec. 13th, 1858.

My dear Stone,

Many thanks for these discourses.†5 They are very good, I think, as expressing what many men have felt and thought; otherwise not specially remarkable. They have one fatal mistake, which is a canker at the foot of their ever being widely useful. Half the misery and hypocrisy of the Christian world arises (as I take it) from a stubborn determination to refuse the New Testament as a sufficient guide in itself, and to force the Old Testament into alliance with it — whereof comes all manner of camel-swallowing and of gnat-straining.[†1] But so to resent this miserable error, or to (by any implication) depreciate the divine goodness and beauty of the New Testament, is to commit even a worse error. And to class Jesus Christ with Mahomet is simply audacity and folly. I might as well hoist myself on to a high platform, to inform my disciples that the lives of King George the Fourth and of King Alfred the Great belonged to one and the same category.

Ever affectionately
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To MESSRS BRADBURY & EVANS, 14 DECEMBER 1858*

MS (draft in CD's hand with Forster's amendments, see below) Messrs Farrer & Co.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.[†2]
Tuesday 14th. December 1858

Dear Sirs

Will you please to understand that in making the present communication to you,[†3] I do not waive or suspend a word of the Resolution passed at the last Meeting of the proprietors of Household Words.

[†a]On the part of Mr Dickens[†a] I beg finally to inform you, that [†a]Mr. Dickens[†a] [is willing to pay][†4] offers[†5] the sum of One Thousand [Eighteen Hundred][†4] Pounds for your share in the copyright of Household Words, and[†6] [will][†4] [†a]further is willing to[†a] purchase your [share][†4] interest in the Stock &c at a valuation; — the whole to be paid in ready money.[†7]

To DR CHARLES WEST,[†1] 15 DECEMBER 1858†

MS Arnold U. Zeigler.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Wednesday Fifteenth December, 1858.

My Dear Sir

I am sorry that as I read on Christmas Eve,[†2] I cannot come to see the interesting sight to which you invite me.[†3]

But as you may perhaps be free to come to see (and hear) me instead, I will beg Mr. Arthur Smith to send you two stalls.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Dr. West

To MISS ELLA MARIA WINTER, 15 DECEMBER 1858

MS Dickens House.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Fifteenth December, 1858

My Dear little friend.

I have received your pretty book-marker with the greatest pleasure, and you may be sure that it will always lie snugly in some book or other, on some table or other, here in my own study. It will always be valuable to me for your sake, and will often and often carry my mind back to the days when your Mamma was a girl, and I was a boy, and very few people knew the name of

Your affectionate
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Winter.

To CHANDOS WREN HOSKYNS,[†1] 15 DECEMBER 1858

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Wednesday Evening Fifteenth December | 1858.

My Dear Sir.

I cannot tell you with what cordial pleasure I have received your letter and reread your excellent book.[†2] Nor, what uncommon gratification I had in meeting you at Coventry and finding you exactly what I had wished you to be. This is not company-speech, I know, but it is simply hearty and true. Your share in that evening has left an impression on my mind which it will always be delightful to me to renew. And I do really hope that it may be reserved for us — in a very different spirit from the usual pulpit-use of the phrase — to "improve the occasion".

Your touching remembrance of our dear Talfourd has struck home to my heart.[†3]

Be assured that I shall never come into your neighbourhood, without presenting my own personal clay on the stiff Warwickshire soil you have made so famous. I hope and believe that you will not come to London without doing as much for me. And between our joint endeavours, it will be hard indeed if we do not now and then meet, to become more intimate.

I think I told you that I live, in the summer, on the top of the veritable Gad's Hill where Falstaff committed that little indiscretion. It was done, just outside my house. Our highwaymen in that country have degenerated into tramps, and our Carriers are Pickford and Co. But Rochester is still a queer old place with a savage old castle in it — worth your seeing — and though I have no Farm and no soil but chalk, I have a prospect, and a Mulberry Tree, and a Welcome.[†4]

In the earnest hope that we shall refer many a pleasant hour in the future, back to the good offices of our good friends at Coventry, believe me

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Chandos Wren Hoskyns Esquire

To JOHN FORSTER, [17 DECEMBER 1858]

Text in F, 1872-4, III, ix, 209.[†1] Date: 17 Dec, according to Forster.

After describing an early dinner with Chauncy Townshend, he adds I escaped at half-past seven, and went to the Strand Theatre: having taken a stall beforehand, for it is always crammed. I really wish you would go, between this and next Thursday, to see the Maid and the Magpie[†2] burlesque there.[†3] There is the strangest thing in it that ever I have seen on the stage. The boy, Pippo, by Miss Wilton.[†4] While it is astonishingly impudent (must be, or it couldn't be done at all), it is so stupendously like a boy, and unlike a woman, that it is perfectly free from offence. I never have seen such a thing. Priscilla Horton,[†5] as a boy, not to be thought of beside it. She does an imitation of the dancing of the Christy Minstrels[†6] — wonderfully clever — which, in the audacity of its thorough-going, is surprising.[†7] A thing that you can not imagine a woman's doing at all; and yet the manner, the appearance, the levity, impulse, and spirits of it, are so exactly like a boy that you cannot think of anything like her sex in association with it. It begins at 8, and is over by a quarter-past 9. I never have seen such a curious thing, and the girl's talent is unchallengeable. I call her the cleverest girl I have ever seen on the stage in my time, and the most singularly original.[†8]

To B. W. PROCTER, [19] DECEMBER 1858

Text from MDGH, II, 82. Date: misdated by CD; Sunday was 19 Dec 58.

Tavistock House, | Sunday, 18th December 1858

My dear Procter,

A thousand thanks for the little song. I am charmed with it, and shall be delighted to brighten "Household Words" with such a wise and genial light.[†1] I no more believe that your poetical faculty has gone by, than I believe that you have yourself passed to the better land. You and it will travel thither in company, rely upon it. So I still hope to hear more of the trade-songs, and to learn that the blacksmith has hammered out no end of iron into good fashion of verse, like a cunning workman, as I know him of old to be.[†2]

Very faithfully yours, my dear Procter
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To W. H. WILLS, 20 DECEMBER 1858

MS Huntington Library.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Monday Twentieth December 1858

My Dear Wills

You will see from the enclosed, that we are quite right.[†3]

Will you go round to Ouvry's, and ask them to write the notice they recommend, for me to sign. If they approve, I should wish it to be served on B and E from their office, and it certainly had best be served at once — to day.[†4] A duplicate of it should be served upon you. I am finishing my little paper for the New Year,[†5] and will wait at home until you bring or send me the legally-copied notices for my signature.

Ever Faithfully
CD.

To JAMES BALLANTINE, 22 DECEMBER 1858

Extract in American Art Association catalogue, Nov 1923; MS 1 p.; addressed James Ballantine; dated Tavistock House, Wed 22 Dec 58.

I beg to express my regret that my engagements render it impossible for me to have the pleasure of accepting the invitation with which you honoured me on behalf of the committee of the Edinburgh Burns Centenary Festival.[†1]

To T. J. SERLE,[†2] [?22 DECEMBER 1858]

Mention in Forster to Serle, 23 Dec 58 (Sotheby's catalogue, Oct 1973). Address: see below.[†3] Date: shortly before letter was received by Forster.

Concerning the Elton Fund[†4] accounts, the manner in which they had been kept, and Serle's true and noble service to the children of his old friend; also making some suggestion about the boy.[†5]

To ARTHUR [SMITH],[†6] 23 DECEMBER 1858

Extract in Parke-Bernet catalogue, n.d.; MS 1 p.; dated London, 23 Dec 58.

Sending a list of the tickets I want for Boxing Night.[†7]

To T. J. THOMPSON, 27 DECEMBER 1858*

MS Morgan Library.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Monday Twenty Seventh December 1858.

My Dear Thompson

I don't know that your suspicion of me is unnatural, but I do know that it is unjust. For I should not have dreamed of abandoning the subject,[†8] and our joint hope and purpose, without communicating with you.

The plain truth is — if you can believe it — that I have been waiting from day to day, to see Frederick, who has not once been near me![†1] This morning only, I found on the breakfast-table, side by side with your letter, the enclosed from him.[†2] Judge what it is possible to do, under such circumstances!

All here unite in kind love and all good wishes, seasonable and unseasonable.

Believe me | Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

T. J. Thompson Esquire

To ALBERT HARDY,[†3] [1858]

Mention in Pickering & Chatto catalogue (undated); MS 2 pp.; addressed Albert Hardy; dated Tavistock House, 1858.

Dealing with literary matters.[†4]

To J. CORDY JEAFFRESON,[†5] 1858

Mention in J. Cordy Jeaffreson, A Book of Recollections (2 vols), 1894, I, 272.[†6] Date: 1858, according to Jeaffreson.

A general invitation to visit him at Gad's Hill.

To MISS SARAH RICHARDSON,[†7] 1858

Envelope only, MS Private. Address: Miss Sarah Richardson | Summer Hill | Clones | Co. Monaghan | Ireland. PM [?] 5 58.[†8]

To THE SECRETARY[†1] OF THE SHEFFIELD LITERARY AND PHILOSOPHICAL SOCIETY, [1858]

Mention in William Smith Porter, Sheffield Literary and Philosophical Society. A Centenary Retrospect, Sheffield, 1822-1922, 1922, p. 60. Date: 1858, according to Porter.

Declining an invitation to lecture, CD replied that he never read papers before Societies.[†2]

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, [?LATE 1858]*

MS (fragment) Private. Date: Signature suggests late 1858.

Chorley (chronically indistinct) dines at 1/2 past 7.[†3] I will not detain your messenger by writing more now.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 1858

Text from Anderson Galleries catalogue, No. 530; dated London, 1858.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. —— and begs to thank that gentleman for his letter of the 23rd ult. and for the enclosure that it contained.

Corrigenda

5 [fn] 5 substitute Not Charley, who was still in France, but the Yates godson.

384 17 substitute MS Mr Joseph R. Sakmyster.
21 insert new line My Dear Taylor
22 after speak it? insert Don't delay.
23 add two lines Faithf
Tom Taylor Esquire

694 last line of text after money add cue [6]
after fn 5 add

[6] The paper is the actual material, the vouchers being the receipts for this, which CD and the other proprietors will req next HW audit: see below and p. 701, To Wills, 10 Nov.

Volume IX

1859 – 1861

1859

January

To RICHARD BENTLEY,[†1] 3 JANUARY 1859*

MS Berg Collection.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Third January 1859.

My Dear Mr. Bentley.

I cordially reciprocate your good wishes for many happy new years.

It amazes me to read what you tell me of the Gordian knot,[†2] as I had supposed that knot to be quite unravelled. I am, however, quite powerless to help to untie it.

I thank you for your reference to business, in the spirit in which I am sure you make it.[†3] But I think my publishing arrangements are quite settled, so far as the publishers in whom I shall trust[†4] are concerned.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esquire

To MRS GORE,[†5] 3 JANUARY 1859*

MS Berg Collection.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Third January 1859.

My Dear Mrs. Gore.

Many thanks for the basket of Game, which arrived here safely — opportunely — in excellent condition, and with great punctuality. I am really delighted to see your hand-writing. The character is so unaltered, that I find it difficult to believe you "purblind", and I feel sure you are a great deal better.[†6]

I hope I have done my part to make the rising generation "more childish", in rendering them a little more imaginative, a little more gentle, and a little less conceited and hard, than they would have been without me. I desire to do nothing better.

My girls and their Aunt send their kindest regard.

Believe me, with real truth,

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Gore.

To BENJAMIN WEBSTER,[†1] 3 JANUARY 1859

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Third January 1859

My Dear Webster

You may be sure I have not forgotten the old Shop now bran new,[†2] or lost an atom of my friendly interest in all belonging to the proprietor.

I should have come to you sooner, but that I have been closely occupied when in town, and have been much out of town to boot. After the middle of the month,[†3] I shall return to Tavistock House; and then a youth of engaging appearance will be seen applauding in the Private Boxes.

If I might express an opinion to you, I would say that I think you cannot too soon dash at the town with a thorough good Melo Drama, bringing all the resources of your stage into action.[†4] I feel sure it is what the town will want from you.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Benjamin Webster Esquire.

To W. H. WILLS[†5] 3 JANUARY 1859*

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Third January 1859

My Dear Wills

Enclosed are some papers, which, either in themselves, or by the aid of my endorsements on the back of them, speak for themselves.

I mean to remain here, a week longer than I had intended. But I will see you at the office, either on Wednesday, or Thursday, or both. I meant to speak to you about placing Tavistock House in good hands for letting,[†1] and about another private affair,[†2] as well as about H. W.

Townshend[†3] comes up to day, and leaves this for you.

Ever Faithfully
CD.

To H. G. ADAMS,[†4] 4 JANUARY 1859

Extract in American Art Association catalogue No. 164; MS 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill Place, Tuesday 4 Jan 59; addressed H. G. Adams.

I am very much obliged to you for your kind note, and Mr. Gordon[†5] begs me to return to you his particular acknowledgements.... We are going to London tomorrow and as he is far from well, I cannot just now profit by your courteous offer.

To W. P. FRITH,[†6] 4 JANUARY 1859

MS Victoria & Albert Museum.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Fourth January 1859

My Dear Frith

I want to stay here a week longer than I at first proposed to myself, in order that I may have leisure and quiet to consider something I am turning in my mind.[†7] I hope therefore, it will not put you out if I suggest that it would be a great convenience to me, to have our appointment with Watkins,[†8] for Monday week instead of Monday.[†9]

Ever Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. P. Frith Esquire

To THOMAS MITTON,[†1] 4 JANUARY 1859

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Fourth January 1859

My Dear Mitton

I enclose a crossed cheque for the amount of the Insurance.[†2] Will you acknowledge its safe receipt? Address me at Tavistock House, as I read on Thursday[†3] and must be in town for the purpose.

Faithfully Always
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Mitton Esquire

To JOHN THOMPSON,[†4] [?4 JANUARY 1859]

Extract in N, III, 87. Date: To Frith, 12 Jan, shows that the new coat was wanted the following week; and To Adams, 4 Jan, that he would be in London "tomorrow". He clearly wrote to Thompson the same day.

Gad's Hill Place, | [January 1859]

John,

On receipt of this, please go up to Tavistock House, get my red and blue morning jacket[†5] from behind my bedroom door, take it to Doudney's in the Burlington Arcade,[†6] and tell them I will call in the course of the morning and explain what I want.... I shall be at the office by one tomorrow.

To RICHARD BENTLEY, 6 JANUARY 1859*

MS Berg Collection.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON, W.C.
Sixth January 1859

My Dear Mr. Bentley

Coming to town last night I find the enclosed[†7] from you. You will have received a letter from me at Gad's Hill, which crossed them.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esquire

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON,[†1] 6 JANUARY 1859

MS Lytton Papers.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Thursday Sixth January 1859

My Dear Bulwer.

I know you will do me a kindness if you can, and I hope that what I ask you to do is very easily done.

It is merely to have placed on the list of the First Lord of the Admiralty,[†2] among the names of applicants for Midshipman-Commissions, the name of one of my boys

Sydney Smith Dickens[†3]

He is now 12, and will go up to be examined at 14. Passing, he will then be eligible to serve as a Midshipman.[†4] He is a very uncommon boy indeed, and I never saw such steady energy and determination as he has in his character.

Faithfully Yours ever
CHARLES DICKENS

Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton.

To HENRY MORLEY,[†5] 6 JANUARY 1859*

MS Yale University Library.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON, W.C.
Thursday Sixth January 1859.

My Dear Morley

Many thanks for your book.[†6] I shall read it with great interest, and — I know beforehand — with great satisfaction. I have a curious little collection of Bartholomew Fair show-bills, announcements, &c.[†7]

In the matter of the readings for the people who can't read, I have two things to say. Firstly, that if the Society grows into any thing like reasonable existence, I will readily read to one of their Audiences.[†8] But, secondly:— I do most strenuously protest against Patronage.[†1] I think it one of the curses of this country. I cannot become a "Patron" of this thing, or of any thing. I think the name (always a bad one, in association with the people) singularly ill-chosen and ill-judged in this use of it, and very likely to rot the whole venture.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Henry Morley Esquire

To T. J. THOMPSON,[†2] 6 JANUARY 1859*

MS Morgan Library.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON, W.C.
Sixth January 1859.

My Dear Thompson.

We cordially return all our good wishes for many happy years to you and yours. Also, our individual Loves.

In the main, I am much of your mind as to the reasonable point of an annual allowance,[†3] though I doubt the Life Assurance part of the business. Simply because I don't think it could be afforded, and because I do think that a young lady who marries under such circumstances takes her chance of her husband's life, and has no business afterwards to try back and seek to better her condition in that respect. But my dear fellow, it is mere beating the air for you and I to discuss the question. If Mr. Weller[†4] will make no proposal on the one hand, and Frederick[†5] will make none on the other, any proposal from us will only draw us into difficulty — will only be twisted into a proposal from the fountain head — and will necessitate our personal explanation and disclaimer in the Witness Box.[†6] They must go on. We can do nothing.

Faithfully Yours Ever
CHARLES DICKENS

T. J. Thompson Esquire

To WILLIAM KENT,[†1] 7 JANUARY 1859

Extract in Dodd Mead catalogue No. 66 (1903); MS 2 pp.; dated Tavistock House, 7 Jan 59; addressed W. C. Kent.

I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your obliging letter of yesterday's date, and to thank you for the proposal contained in it. I cannot, however, have the pleasure of entertaining that proposal, as I am rapidly completing my arrangements in another direction.[†2]

To CHARLES ELLIS,[†3] 8 JANUARY 1859

MS Chas Ellis & Co.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Eighth January 1859

Dear Mr. Ellis

I shall be at Tavistock House next Saturday the 15th. from 10 to 1. If it should be convenient to you to call upon me that morning, I shall be glad to tell you what Wine I want.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Charles Ellis

To MISS MARY [GIBSON],[†4] 8 JANUARY 1859

Mention in Anderson Galleries catalogue No. 1325 (Jan 1917); MS 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill Place, 8 Jan 59; wrongly addressed Miss Gilson.

Wishing her many happy years and expressing a wish to see her when next she came to London.

To JOHN THOMPSON, 8 JANUARY 1859

Extract in N, III, 86.

Saturday 8th January 1859

The guard will give you the young gentleman's[†5] box, John. It is in the train.... I want you to buy me one more of those corner-things like that which is fastened up over my bedstead.

To W. H. WILLS, 8 JANUARY 1859

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Eighth January 1859.

My Dear Wills.

This is the first of some papers by "the Clergyman's Wife"[†1] I told you of.[†2] Get it printed for the next No. we make up.

I have rather a strong hope that she may turn out a very useful contributor. I have read several of her papers, and have generally advised her how to make them better. She will have another ready to follow this with.[†3] She has an excellent knowledge of a poor country parish, some very pretty womanly humour, some very good womanly observation, and a decided faculty for writing.[†4]

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To W. BLANCHARD JERROLD,[†5] 11 JANUARY 1859*

MS Douglas Jerrold. Address: Private | Blanchard Jerrold Esquire | Office of Lloyd's Weekly News | Salisbury Square | Fleet Street | London | E.C.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Eleventh January 1859

My Dear William Jerrold

I received your biography of your father,[†6] on Christmas Day from my brother Alfred,[†7] and I brought it here soon afterwards and have had it here ever since.

You have discharged your task in an admirable manner, deserving of all commendation. You have presented your father in a very true and tender light. Nothing can be more filial and affectionate than the whole spirit of your book. Over and above this, you have overcome the difficulties of having to do, in such an association, with numbers of existing scenes and living people, as only a man thoroughly in earnest and perfectly modest and manly in his design could. Let me shake hands with you heartily on what you have done, and assure you that it has affected me very much.[†1]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To W. P. FRITH, 12 JANUARY 1859

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Twelfth January 1859

My Dear Frith

At eleven on Monday Morning next, the gifted Individual whom you will transmit to posterity, will be at Watkins's.[†2] Table also shall be there — and chair.[†3] Velvet coat likewise,[†4] if the Tailor should have sent it home.[†5] But the garment is more to be doubted than the man whose signature here follows.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

W. P. Frith Esquire.

To ARTHUR SMITH,[†6] 12 JANUARY 1859

Extract in N, III, 87; MS 2 pp.

Gad's Hill Place | 12th January 1859

My Dear Arthur,

I send this ... to say that if you should think it desirable to change the last night of the Series to the Carol, I am quite willing.[†1] In that case, we ought to have a good bill about tomorrow night.[†2] The demand for places would be a sufficient reason....

I wish at your leisure, you would sketch out your notion of the best Autumnal five or six weeks we could have.... It strikes me that we might arrange to get a great deal of money in a very short time, if we elaborated the idea of a short trip, and took only first rate places.[†3]

To SIR JOHN PAKINGTON, [14 JAN 1859]

Mention in next.

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 14 JANUARY 1859

MS Lytton Papers.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Friday Fourteenth January 1859.

My Dear Bulwer

I came to town yesterday afternoon, and found your letter. I have written to Sir John Pakington to-day, thanking him for his very kind and courteous reception of my request.[†4] I will not thank you any more, for I am sure you know that I deeply feel your interest and regard.

Ever Faithfully Yours

CD.

To W. H. WILLS, 14 JANUARY 1859

MS Huntington Library.

Friday Evening | Fourteenth January 1859

My Dear Wills. I will no longer doubt that you are right, and I thank you heartily for the affectionate earnestness with which you have represented me to myself, as wrong.[†5] Will you, as early as practicable tomorrow morning, communicate to the agent, that I find my daughters so averse to the long term That I must withdraw from that proposal, even if the other party should make it.[†1] But that I beg him to complete the Inventory (if it be not already done), and to take the house upon his books, as being To Let from and after next June inclusive, for any term not less than 6 months, or more than 12.

Ever Faithfully
CD.[†2]

To CHARLES ELLIS, 15 JANUARY 1859

Text in N, III, 88, checked from MS Sotheby, June 1979.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON, W.C.
Saturday Fifteenth January 1859

Dear Mr. Ellis

Looking back to the price of the last quarter Cask of Sherry I bought from Hamilton and Thorby[†3] (with whom I have had some dealings in Sherry, on the recommendation of the late Mr. Ford),[†1] I find its price was £24..0..0. I let you know this at once, as I would on no account desire that you should supply me at a lower price than I actually paid them.

I will take an early occasion of speaking to Mr. Forster, whom I constantly see.

It was with regret that I saw you by Deputy this morning; but I was too heavy with a cold to get up as usual.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To BENJAMIN WEBSTER, 15 JANUARY 1859*

MS Berg Collection. Address: Private | Benjamin Webster Esquire | New Theatre Royal Adelphi.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Saturday Fifteenth January 1859.

My Dear Webster

If you should have a Box to spare for Monday night, I shall be happy to bring my girls to see the Theatre[†2] and the Play.[†3]

Faithfully Yours Ever
CHARLES DICKENS

Benjamin Webster Esquire.

To MESSRS P. & D. COLNAGHI,[†4] 17 JANUARY 1859*

MS Mr Michael Silverman.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Monday Seventeenth January 1859.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Messrs. P and D Colnaghi, and begs to acknowledge, with many thanks, the safe receipt of the copy of the Drawing of the Interior of Westminster Abbey, which they have had the kindness to send him in pursuance of Mr. Dillon's[†5] request. It is a remarkably delicate and beautiful work of art.

To FRANK STONE,[†1] 17 JANUARY 1859*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Monday Seventeenth January | 1859

My Dear Stone

I am going to Watkins with Frith. But I will be here at 3, if that time will suit you.

Ever affecy.

CD.

To J. P. KNIGHT,[†2] 18 JANUARY 1859†

Text from typescript, Huntington Library.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON, W.C.
Tuesday Eighteenth January 1859.

My Dear Sir,

I regret that I cannot have the pleasure of accepting the MS. I return with this, for Household Words. Although it is very good as an early effort, and although I observe some passages in it which express a lively fancy (as in the little description of the raindrops falling into the puddles), it is too much about too little. And I would particularly recommend the young writer to consider that the old soldiers of Napoleon the Great have become most terrible veterans by this time. They really have made such extensive campaigns and gone through such an immense number of evolutions, in literature, with French and English, that nothing but their having something very new to achieve, can justify these ancient pensioners in coming out of the Hospital for Invalids.[†3] Now, there is no individuality about M. Noel — no quaint touch of observation or imagination to single him out from the rest who have been doing literary duty these forty years. And he is so very long in going to tell that story of his, that I doubt his having very much to tell.

I trouble you with these few words, because I am really anxious to explain to you why I cannot gratify myself by retaining the manuscript. Honestly, it would be a real satisfaction to me — a genuine pleasure — if I could reasonably do so.

I cannot, of course, undertake to pronounce oracularly that the writer could do better; but I think she could.

My dear Sir, | Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

John P. Knight Esquire.

To W. P. FRITH, 19 JANUARY 1859

MS Victoria & Albert Museum.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON, W.C.
Wednesday Nineteenth January | 1859.

My Dear Frith

The "properties"[†1] shall be ready, and nothing shall scare the undersigned whose Faith is great.[†2]

Ever Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

To THE REV. ASHTON BURROW,[†3] 22 JANUARY 1859†

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON W C
Saturday Twenty Second January 1859.

Dear Sir

I address you on the introduction and recommendation of my friend the Hon. Mrs. Watson of Rockingham Castle.[†4]

One of my boys, at present not quite twelve years of age, has chosen the Navy for his profession. As I do not doubt his being able to pass his examination as soon as he is old enough, if he be trained in the meantime with an immediate and direct view to the pursuit on which he has set his heart, will you permit me to enquire if you can receive him into your house and take him under your care at Easter next.

He is now at school at Boulogne. His name is Sydney Smith. He is a boy of a very remarkable strength of character, of great intelligence, and of a most indomitable energy. I am as little prejudiced (I believe) as a father can be, in forming my opinion of my sons; but I think you will be interested in him, and that he will not do injustice to your reputation.

Mrs. Watson is so highly sensible of the advantages her son Edward[†1] derived from your tuition, that I shall be exceedingly glad to confide my boy to you, if it should suit your inclination and convenience.

I have the honor to be Dear Sir | Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

The Rev: Edward Burrowes[†2] R. N.

To JOHN FORSTER,[†3] [?24 JANUARY 1859]

Extract in F, VIII, v, 671. Date: According to Forster, CD was searching for a title for his new periodical "at the opening of 1859"; but later Jan is more likely, since he did not propose a title to Forster until 24 Jan. N (III, 89) makes this and To Forster, 24 Jan, one letter; but they seem clearly to be separate.

My determination to settle the title arises out of my knowledge that I shall never be able to do anything for the work until it has a fixed name; also out of my observation that the same odd feeling affects everybody else.

To JOHN FORSTER, [24 JANUARY 1859]

Extract in F, VIII, v, 671. Date: 24 Jan, according to Forster.

Don't you think this is a good name and quotation? I have been quite delighted to get hold of it for our title.

HOUSEHOLD HARMONY.

"At last by notes of Household Harmony." — Shakespeare.[†4]

To JOHN FORSTER, [?25 JANUARY 1859]

Extract in F, VIII, v, 671. Date: answering Forster's immediate objection (see below) and before To Collins, 26 Jan.

He was at first reluctant even to admit the objection. I am afraid we must not be too particular about the possibility of personal references and applications:[†5] otherwise it is manifest that I never can write another book. I could not invent a story of any sort, it is quite plain, incapable of being twisted into some such nonsensical shape. It would be wholly impossible to turn one through half a dozen chapters.

To WILKIE COLLINS,[†1] 26 JANUARY 1859

MS Morgan Library.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON W.C.
Wednesday Twenty Sixth January 1859

My Dear Wilkie

Look over the jotted titles on the other side,[†2] that we may discuss them tomorrow. It is the very first thing to settle. I can make no way until I have got a name.[†3]

Ever affecy.

CD.

The Hearth
The Forge ——————————— this
The Crucible
The Anvil of the Time
Charles Dickens's Own (like an Entertainment)
Seasonable Leaves
Evergreen Leaves ——————— this Home
Home-Music
Change
Time and Tide
Twopence
English Bells
Weekly Bells ——————————— this
The Rocket!
Good Humour.

To ARTHUR SMITH, 26 JANUARY 1859†

MS Morgan Library.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON, W.C.
Wednesday Twenty Sixth January 1859.

My Dear Arthur

Will you — 1st. — read the enclosed letters; having previously welcomed with all possible cordiality, the Bearer Mr. Thomas C Evans[†1] from New York.

You, having[†2] read them, let me explain that Mr. Fields[†3] is a highly respectable and influential man — one of the heads of the most classical and most respected publishing house in America.[†4] That Mr. Richard Grant White[†5] is a man of high reputation. And that Felton[†6] is the Greek Professor in their Cambridge University; perhaps the most distinguished scholar in the States.

The address to myself, referred to in one of the letters, being on its way, it is quite clear that I must give some decided and definite answer to the American proposal.[†7] Now, will you carefully discuss it with Mr. Evans, before I enter on it at all? Then, will you dine here with him on Sunday — which I will propose to him — and arrange to meet at half past 4 for an hour's discussion.

The points are these:
1st. I have a very grave question within myself, whether I could [†a](for a private reason, rendering a long Voyage and absence particularly painful to me),[†a] go to America at all.
2ndly. If I did go, I could not possibly go before the Autumn.
3rdly. If I did go, how long must I stay.

4thly. If the stay were a short one, could you go?
5thly. What is his project? What could I make?
What occurs to you upon his proposal.

I have told him that the business arrangements of the Readings have been from the first so entirely in your hands, that I enter upon nothing connected with them, without previous reference to you.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To LORD CAMPBELL,[†1] 27 JANUARY 1859

Text from Life of John, Lord Campbell, ed. the Hon. Mrs Hardcastle, 1881, II, 363.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON
Thursday, January, 27, 1859

Dear Lord Campbell,

I must trouble you by thanking you for the very curious and interesting little work[†2] for which I am indebted to your kind remembrance, and which I received — and read — yesterday. Apart from the knowledge and ingenuity it evinces, it is so exceedingly graceful and pleasant that I have read it with uncommon satisfaction. It will always hold its place on the shelf in my mind where I keep Morgann's essay on the character of Falstaff:[†3] a delicate combination of fancy, whim, good heart, good sense, and good taste, which I am pretty confident is a favourite of yours.

If I know myself at all, I beg to warrant myself not in the least biased by your flattering mention of me.[†4] I am very proud of it, but, I believe, quite honestly.

Dear Lord Campbell, | Yours faithfully and obliged,

To JOHN FORSTER, [28 JANUARY 1859]

Extract in F, VIII, v, 672. Date: 28 Jan, according to Forster.

I am dining early, before reading,[†5] and write literally with my mouth full. But I have just hit upon a name that I think really an admirable one[†6] — especially with the quotation before it, in the place where our present H. W. quotation stands.

— IX - 19 —

"The story of our lives, from year to year." — Shakespeare.[†1]

ALL THE YEAR ROUND.[†2]

A weekly journal conducted by Charles Dickens.

To ARTHUR SMITH, 31 JANUARY 1859†

Text from transcript, Huntington Library.

At the Hall,[†3] | Monday Thirty-First January 1859.

My Dear Arthur,

I called to see you about our American man[†4] — will look in again this evening — hope you are much better.

It is pretty clear to me that he is deputed by a body of publishers, who rely on a great impulse being given to my books by my going to America.[†5] Therefore I think he should have some distinct business-document to shew or send them.[†6] If a sum of money is to be got, it may be more easily got from a body than from one individual. If it is not to be got, then the whole thing goes.

I think the best course would be — if you agree with me — for you to write and enclose some such little document as I send you herewith,[†7] to Mr Evans. I see no such good way of disposing of the question.

Your man at Tavistock House wants the pictures to be touched up at once, before he paints near them. Can you send me the dexterous card who touches on Beverley[†1] tomorrow morning, do you think?

— IX - 20 —

Ever affect:

C.D.

February

To W. W. F. DE CERJAT,[†2] 1 FEBRUARY 1859†

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: A Monsieur W. F. De Cerjat. | Elysée | Lausanne.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Tuesday First February 1859.

My Dear Cerjat. I received your always welcome annual, with even more interest than usual, this year; being (in common with my two girls and their Aunt) much excited and pleased by your account of your daughter's engagement. Apart from the high sense I have of the affectionate confidence with which you tell me what lies so tenderly on your own heart, I have followed the little history with a lively sympathy and regard for her. I hope, with you, that it is full of promise, and that you will all be happy in it. The separation, even in the present condition of travel (and no man can say how much the discovery of a day may advance it) is nothing. And so God bless her, and all of you; and may the rosy summer bring her all the fulness of joy that we all wish her!

To pass from the altar to Townsend (which is a long way), let me report him severely treated by Bully,[†3] who rules him with a paw of iron; and complaining moreover of indigestion. He dines here every Sunday, but, at all other times, is mostly shut up in his beautiful house,[†4] where I occasionally go and dine with him tete-a-tete, and where we always talk of you and drink to you. That is a rule with us, from which we never depart. He is "seeing a Volume of Poems([4[sic]][†5] through the Press". Rather an expensive amusement. He has not been out at night, once (except to this house), save last Friday, when he went to hear me read The Poor Traveller, Mrs. Gamp, and The Trial from Pickwick.[†6] He came into my room at St. Martin's Hall, and I fortified him with weak Brandy and Water. You will be glad to hear that the said Readings are a greater furore than they ever have been, and that every night on which they now take place — once a week — hundreds go away unable to get in, though the Hall holds Thirteen Hundred people. I dine with Townsend to day by the bye, along with his agent;[†1] concerning whom, I observe him to be always divided between unbounded confidence and a little latent suspicion. He always tells me that he is a gem of the first water, O yes the best of business men! — and then says that he didn't quite like his conduct respecting that Farm-Tenant and those hayricks.[†2]

There is a general impression here among the best-informed that war — in Italy, to begin with — is inevitable, and will break out before April.[†3] I know a gentleman at Genoa (Swiss by birth)[†4] deeply in with the authorities at Turin, who is already sending children home. [†a]I always believe, myself, that Louis Napoleon's last great card for the temporary union and pacification of France is War with England. The French people hate us, in proportion as they rage against him. Our alliance has been with him, and against the Nation — and verily, in the implacable hatred of the Nation we have our reward. When our magnates here truckled to that fellow, they sowed the Dragons' teeth. We shall see the reaping of the Harvest, afore long. In the meantime, he and the other blacklegs about him, send the Bourse down when they want to buy, and up when they want to sell, and get all the plunder they can, before they let France go mad.[†a]

In England we are quiet enough. There is a world of talk, as you know, about Reform Bills; but I don't believe there is any general strong feeling on the subject.[†5] According to my perceptions, it is undeniable that the public has fallen into a state of indifference about public affairs — mainly referable, as I think, to the people who administer them — and there I mean the people of all parties — which is a very bad sign of the times.[†6] The general mind seems weary of Debates and Honorable Members, and to have taken Laissez-aller for its motto.

My affairs domestic (which I know are not without their interest for you) flow peacefully. My eldest daughter is a capital housekeeper, heads the table gracefully, delegates certain appointed duties to her sister and her aunt, and they are all three devotedly attached. Charley, my eldest boy, remains in Baring's house, and undertakes to look after his mother, at my request — lives with her. My second boy in India, got his Lieutenancy at 17, and a lot of prize-money besides. Three others are at School in France, one in Germany, the youngest at home. India, the Navy, and Medicine are the three next destinations chosen by the three who will leave school next.[†7] Your present correspondent is more popular than he ever has been. I rather think that the Readings in the country, have opened up a new public who were outside before; but however that may be, his books have a wider range than they ever had, and his public welcomes are prodigious. Said correspondent is at present overwhelmed with proposals to go and read in America. Will never go, unless a small Fortune be first paid down in money, on this side of the Atlantic. Stated the figure of such payment, between ourselves, only yesterday. Expects to hear no more of it, and assuredly will go for no less.

You don't say my dear Cerjat, when you are coming to England! Somehow I feel that this marriage ought to bring you over, though I don't know why. You shall have a bed here, and a bed at Gad's Hill, and we will go and see strange sights together. When I was in Ireland, I ordered the brightest Jaunting-Car that ever was seen.[†1] It has just this minute arrived pr. steam; from Belfast. Say you are coming, and you shall be the first man turned over by it; somebody must be (for my daughter Mary drives any thing that can be harnessed, and I know of no English horse that would understand a Jaunting-Car coming down a Kentish Hill), and you shall be that somebody, if you will. They turned a basket phaeton over, last summer, in a bye road — Mary and the other two — and had to get it up again: which they did, and came home as if nothing had happened. They send their loves, to Mrs. Cerjat,[†2] and to you, and to all, and particularly to the dear Fiancée. So do I with all my heart, and am ever your attached and affectionate friend CD.

To WILLIAM HEPWORTH DIXON,[†3] 1 FEBRUARY 1859*

MS Yale University Library.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Tuesday First February 1859.

My Dear Dixon.

I am not privately possessed of the Dodd question,[†4] otherwise than as I heard about it incidentally from the Actors, while the discussion was in progress. But I have every reason to trust them. I know them to have started with almost extravagant gratitude to Mr. Dodd; and there can be no earthly, celestial, or infernal, reason for their entering into a conspiracy not to be benefited by him. Keeley,[†1] who is one of the Committee and who took part in it, is a very sagacious and upright man — as much to be relied on for plain sense and probity as any man I know. Then there were T P Cooke,[†2] and Webster, and Buckstone,[†3] and others — really responsible men desirous of serving their profession; and it seems to me rather monstrous to suppose that all these known men can have laid their heads together to be wrong and to put the unknown man in the right, and to reject a benefit.

The impression I derived from what I heard of the matter while it was in abeyance, was briefly this:— That Mr. Dodd, being perhaps a little over-puffed, began to ride a high horse and to intimate that he would require such and such restrictions in reference to religious opinions, the education of the children, attendance at church, and even as to the hours at which the Inmates of the houses should be home at night. That thereupon the Actors began to doubt him, and that thereupon he began to display a rather offensive tone. The tone is beyond dispute, for you may see that in one of his published letters he refers (in a very small and poor way) to the warnings he had had from his friends as to what would happen if he had anything to do with the theatrical profession.[†4] Such proposed restrictions as I have hinted at, do not appear in the correspondence; — I myself suppose the Committee to have managed ill, in not dexterously fastening them upon him in black and white. But I have abstained from enquiring minutely into the point, having had the possibility of a reference to myself before my eyes.[†5]

So I can merely give you for your own private self, the impression I have pieced together in the course of months. Further:[†6] That there was no kind of condition hinted at at the Meeting at the Princess's Theatre,[†7] and that Mr. Dodd and his Solicitor so recognized that the Land was then and there freely given, as that they were parties to all manner of speeches and resolutions wherein that fact was over and over again assumed, I of my own senses know.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Hepworth Dixon Esquire

To RICHARD LEE,[†1] 1 FEBRUARY 1859

Text from N, III, 93.

Tavistock House | Tuesday First February 1859

Dear Sir,

Although your letter is one of hundreds that are constantly addressed to me, and that vary very little in their general purport, I believe I have considered it as if its contents were quite new to me.

If I had any pleasant experience whatever of the influence you suppose me to have with managers in serving a dramatic writer — If I had the faintest reason to believe that I could do for a play what it cannot do for itself, or that I could reverse or brighten such a melancholy history as you give me of your play, I should not some few years since, have prescribed to myself the rule from which I have never departed of holding myself aloof from any association whatever with the presentation to Theatres of dramatic productions. But, while I am really sensible of the confidence you repose in me, I must (in consideration for you as well as for myself), beg you to excuse me from the further pursuit of your request.

Dear Sir | Faithfully yours

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To WILKIE COLLINS, 3 FEBRUARY 1859

MS Morgan Library.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS,
Thursday Third February 1859

My Dear Wilkie

I have been obliged to cut the Burns article[†2] here and there, because of my personal responsibility, and my personal knowledge of people referred to in it.[†3] The man at St. Martin's Hall, I really think beneath our notice, and I have taken him out altogether.[†4]

What remains, is excellent and unexceptionable. I quite agree with what does not remain, but think it more graceful to suggest it than say it.

You have no idea what a cold I have! How I am to read tonight,[†5] I don't know.

Affecy. Ever

CD.

To W. J. SORRELL,[†1] 4 FEBRUARY 1859

Mention in John Schroder Spring catalogue; MS 1 p.; dated Tavistock Square, 4 Feb 59; addressed Mr Sorrell.

Declining a proposed contribution to Household Words.

To WILKIE COLLINS, 6 FEBRUARY 1859*

MS Dickens House.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W. C.
Sunday Night, Sixth February 1859.

My Dear Wilkie

Tomorrow (Monday, when you will receive this), is my Birth Day. I have not had the heart to make any preparation for it[†2] — you know why.[†3] But, to-night, I have felt unwilling to throw a gloom upon the girls, and have proposed to take them, impromptu, to the Bedford at Brighton, to stay until Wednesday morning. Will you come? Do, if you can, and we'll forget everything but Brighton. I send them beforehand, and leave, myself, from Brighton Terminus at 2. Will you be there, a quarter before?

Yrs affecy

CD.

To MRS BALL WILSON,[†4] 7 FEBRUARY 1859*

MS Walter T. Spencer. Address: Mrs. Wilson | 4 Mathon Place | Richmond Road | Barnsbury Park | N.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Monday Seventh February 1859.

My Dear Rebecca

You do not tell me in your note what orders you want for Thursday.[†5] Let me know without delay, at the Bedford Hotel Brighton. You shall have them if it be possible, but I do not know what seats may be available.

affecy Yours

CD.

To FRANK STONE, 9 FEBRUARY 1859*

MS Goodspeed's Book Shop.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Wednesday Ninth February 1859.

My Dear Stone

Will you ask Ellen[†1] to look over this[†2] — I have put a query to it, where I don't understand something, that the Printer has, perhaps, mistaken — and let me have it back, by 11 tomorrow Morning.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To PETER CUNNINGHAM,[†3] 11 FEBRUARY 1859*

MS Dickens House

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Friday Eleventh February 1859.

My Dear Cunningham.

I thank you very much for the concluding Walpole volume,[†4] and I cordially congratulate you on the completion of your task. When my Library Edition of my books is complete, I shall ask you to find room for it on your shelves. I am only waiting for that.[†5]

Let me take this opportunity of saying to you in good humour, that I wish you had not inconsiderately repeated any monomaniacal nonsense about me, and had not lent yourself to such preposterous statements as that I pay Mr. Yates's[†6] costs against the Garrick Club,[†7] or have some wonderful machinations of my own to further in having openly resisted what I believe to be a wrong proceeding.[†8] I am sure you know in your heart that what I do, I do in no secresy,[†9] and that I abhor meanness. What did you ever see in your Manager[†10] that could lead you to suppose it possible there was one word of truth in all this pestilent childishness?

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Peter Cunningham Esquire.

To W. P. FRITH, 11 FEBRUARY 1859

MS Victoria & Albert Museum.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON, W.C.
Friday Eleventh February 1859.

My Dear Frith

I am sure you know that I would not postpone our sitting today, if I were not positively compelled to do so. But I am.

Shall I come on Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, Friday, or Saturday, at half past one? Send me an appointment and I will keep it.

Ever Penitently
CHARLES DICKENS

W. P. Frith Esquire.

To F. C. BEARD,[†1] 14 FEBRUARY 1859

MS Dickens House.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON, W.C.
Monday Fourteenth February 1859.

My Dear Frank Beard

It has occurred to me and my Triumvirate of housekeepers, that there being always some medical attendance to be paid for, in the ordinary course of things, among the rest of the yearly bills, it is rather a ridiculous thing that you are not the attendant. Therefore if you will come to us just as you would go to anybody else, we shall be very glad to have you.[†2]

And as the Housemaid is ill abed this morning, and I think wants speedy looking to, perhaps you will see what is to be done for her, as soon as you conveniently can.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Frank Beard Esquire.

To [?H.] BRAMALL,[†1] 14 FEBRUARY 1859*

MS Private.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Monday, Fourteenth February 1859.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Bramall, and begs to say that his engagements do no admit of his having the pleasure of accepting the invitation[†2] with which he is favored through Mr. Bramall.

To MISS SPRINGETT,[†3] 14 FEBRUARY 1859*

MS Private.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Monday Fourteenth February 1859.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Miss Springett, and begs Miss Springett to accept his cordial thanks for her obliging note. His avocations and engagements do not admit of his accepting Miss Springett's invitation,[†4] but he is not the less sensible of her remembrance and courtesy.

To EDMUND YATES, [?MID-FEBRUARY 1859]

Extract in Yates, Recollections and Experiences, 1884, p. 351. Date: "at the time of the publication of Adam Bede [1 Feb 59]", according to Yates; probably first half of Feb.

Telling Yates that the real name of the author of Adam Bede is either Bradbury or Evans; but I do not think that it is Bradbury!

To MRS ALBANY FONBLANQUE,[†5] [15] FEBRUARY 1859*

MS Johns Hopkins University. Date: misdated by CD; Tuesday was 15 Feb.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W. C.
Tuesday Fourteenth February 1859.

My Dear Mrs. Fonblanque

My girls are going to call on you with this, to explain that they are unfortunately engaged tomorrow night. I also am engaged, though not with them. If I can come to you, it will give me great pleasure to do so. Believe me, I am in no danger of ever forgetting you, and I am proud and glad to find that you are not likely to forget me.

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To HERBERT WATKINS, 15 FEBRUARY 1859

Catalogue extract in N, III, 94.

Tavistock House | 15th February, 1859

The best edition of my books (which is called the Library edition) is now in course of publication. The publisher will immediately send you all the volumes that are out,[†1] and an additional volume every month. Please consider these, as a set in their working clothes for common use. When the edition is completed, I shall hope to send you another set, in bright holiday costume.

To MESSRS COUTTS & CO.,[†2] 17 FEBRUARY 1859

MS (signature only in CD's hand) Mr Brian Lake.

17 Feby 1859

Messrs. Coutts & Co.

Sell £1500 New 3 per Cents from my name & take out a Power of Atty. for Sale of all that fund at present in my name

CHARLES DICKENS

To BENJAMIN WEBSTER, 17 FEBRUARY 1859

Mention in Ogden Goelet catalogue, Jan 1935; MS 1 p.; dated Office of HW, 17 Feb 59; addressed Benjamin Webster.

Asking for a box, for a performance in which Webster was acting, at the Adelphi,[†3] and congratulating him on the completion of the new theatre.[†4]

To EDMUND YATES, 19 FEBRUARY 1859

MS Robert H. Taylor Collection, Princton University.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Saturday Nineteenth February 1859.

My Dear Edmund

Like a besotted Blockhead, I have forgotten that I must be out tomorrow morning, until half past one. We had better have a walk then, and appoint an early evening for the finishing of the Pamphlet.[†1]

In great haste | Ever Faithfully

CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [21 FEBRUARY 1859]

Extract in F, VIII, v, 672. Date: 21 Feb, according to Forster.

I have taken the new office;[†2] have got workmen in; have ordered the paper; settled with the printer;[†3] and am getting an immense system of advertising ready.[†4] Blow to be struck on the 12th of March.[†5] ... Meantime I cannot please myself with the opening of my story, and cannot in the least settle at it or take to it.... I wish you would come and look at what I flatter myself is a rather ingenious account to which I have turned the Stanfield[†6] scenery here.[†7]

To THOMAS GOFF LUPTON,[†1] 21 FEBRUARY 1859*

Text from Committee Minute Book of the Artists' Benevolent Fund.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, W.C.
Twenty First February 1859

Dear Sir,

In looking carefully through the enclosed Report[†2] I have marked it, in one or two slight places with my pen, but I cannot possibly, after such a lapse of time, undertake to correct it. I observe it to be obviously jagged and unconnected here and there, and I know that many of the sentences cannot have been spoken as they are rendered, because I know the rendering to be unlike my habit of construction.

Faithfully yours,

Thomas Lupton Esq

To THE HON. EMILY EDEN,[†3] 25 FEBRUARY 1859

Mention in Sotheby catalogue, June 1902; MS 1 p.; dated 25 Feb 1859; addressed The Hon. Miss Eden.

Asking her to send him a MS of hers[†4] for two or three days.

To SAMUEL ALLIBONE,[†5] [?LATE FEBRUARY 1859]

Mention in To Allibone, 26 July 59. Date: Allibone's Critical Dictionary, Vol. I, was published by Trübner in London between 14 and 28 Feb 59. CD probably thanked him for it in late Feb.

Thanking Allibone for a copy of his Critical Dictionary.

March

To THE REGISTRARS OF THE ROYAL LITERARY FUND, 1 MARCH 1859*

MS Royal Literary Fund.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Tuesday, First March 1859

Gentlemen

I beg you to do me the favor to take the earliest opportunity of placing this communication before the President, Vice Presidents, Council, and Committee, of the Literary Fund.

In conjunction with the Reverend Whitwell Elwin,[†1] well known to you by reputation, I have it in charge from a person whose name I am not at present at liberty to disclose,[†2] to offer to the Literary Fund a prospective endowment of a highly valuable and important nature; comprising a magnificent Library[†3] (in some respects unique, and in all respects of great worth to Literary men), and the sum of Ten Thousand Pounds for its maintenance and enlargement in perpetuity.

This gift is made conditional on the Literary Fund's obtaining an amended charter, and rendering other services to Literature than those to which it is, in its practice, at present limited.

I do not consider that I should do justice to the generosity that has honored Mr. Elwin and myself with this trust, if I were to come to the approaching Anniversary of an occasion on which I have heretofore been in opposition to the managers of the Literary Fund, and were to take that opportunity of submitting it to their notice. I feel sure that I cannot render better homage to the munificence of the proposal, than by entering on its details in a spirit of conciliation and liberality, divested of any reasonable possibility of irritation or misconstruction.

The forthcoming Annual Meeting, therefore, I shall abstain from attending. The friends who have been associated with me on former similar occasions[†4] will, yielding to the same reasons, also stay away. But we confide it to the fairness of the managers of the Literary Fund, to make it known to the Corporation at that Meeting, that we do not withdraw our opposition;- that we hold it suspended, only until this matter shall have been fully considered.

In conclusion I have to ask, for Mr. Elwin and myself, that when the Annual Meeting shall have been held, you will do us the honor to propose a time when the President, Vice Presidents, Council, and Committee, will receive from us in person, a full explanation of the offer with which we are entrusted.[†5]

I have the honor to be | Gentlemen
Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

The Registrars of the Literary Fund

To WILLIAM WILLOTT,[†1] 1 MARCH 1859*

MS Shakespeare Birthplace Trust

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Tuesday First March 1859.

Dear Sir

In answer to your obliging favor, I beg to assure you that it will afford me great pleasure to be one of the party to entertain Mr. Webster on the 23rd.[†2] I enclose the sum you mention,[†3] and have the honor to remain

Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS[†4]

William Willott Esquire.

To NATHANIEL SPOONER,[†5] 3 MARCH 1859*

MS Boston Dickens Fellowship.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Thursday Third March 1859.

Dear Sir

I beg to assure you that I have received your letter with heartfelt pleasure; and that to be so remembered and so thanked by an earnest reader, is one of the highest priveleges and rewards of my life.

With all good wishes, Believe me

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Nathaniel Spooner Esquire

To MRS HOGGE,[†6] [5 MARCH 1859]

Extract from MDGH, II, 47, misdated.[†7] Envelope (MS Walter T. Spencer): Mrs. Hogge | 16 Hyde Park Gate South | Kensington Gore | W. PM 5 Mar 59. Date: Macdonald was elected 7 Mar 59; the envelope clearly belongs to this letter.

I will make a point of going to the Athenaeum on Monday night; and if I had five hundred votes to give, Mr. Macdonald[†8] should have them all, for your sake.

To MRS PULLEINE,[†1] [?8 MARCH 1859]

Envelope in Sotheby sale, May 1986; addressed Mrs. Pulleine | Crake Hall | Bedale | Yorkshire. PM 8 Mar 59.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 8 MARCH 1859

Mention in Puttick & Simpson catalogue, Apr 1879; MS 2 pp.; dated Tuesday, 8 Mar 59.

To MRS MILNER GIBSON,[†2] 10 MARCH 1859*

MS Trinity College, Cambridge. Address: Mrs. Milner Gibson | 49 Wilton Crescent.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Thursday Tenth March 1859.

My Dear Mrs. Milner Gibson

This will be presented to you by my friend and Sub Editor Mr. Wills, who is entirely in my confidence and is — in the business I wish him to explain to you — my other self.

The business will interest you, I know — may be made of great service to the best of the Neapolitan refugees now in Ireland[†3] — and to all Italy. When you have heard from Mr. Wills what it is, you will see how important your aid may be in it, and what urgency there is for its being at once entered on.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To ARTHUR SMITH, 10 MARCH 1859

MS Rosenbach Museum and Library.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Thursday Tenth March 1857

My Dear Arthur

Here are the signatures.[†4]

Let us leave it thus:— If Coutts's can get N. Western stock, good; we'll have it. If they can't, good again; we'll have Mid Bradford.

Will you bring away the particulars — as what interest — when payable — &c — to the end that I may duly apprize Mrs. Jerrold?[†5]

Ever
CD.

To THOMAS ADOLPHUS TROLLOPE,[†1] 10 MARCH 1859

Text from A Collection of Autograph Letters and Historical Documents formed by Alfred Morrison (2nd Series, 1882-1893), 1896, III, 120; MS 1 p.; dated 10 Mar 59; addressed T. A. Trollope.

Dear Sir,

It would give me great pleasure if you could come and dine with me — quite unceremoniously, and without any company — either on Friday, Saturday, or Sunday next, at 6 o'clock. As I shall be in town again immediately, will you do me the favor to write me a word in answer to Tavistock House?

Believe me,
Very faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To JOHN FORSTER, [11 MARCH 1859]

Extract in F, IX, ii, 729. Date: 11 Mar 59, according to Forster.

This is merely to certify that I have got exactly the name for the story that is wanted; exactly what will fit the opening to a T. A TALE OF TWO CITIES.[†2] Also, that I have struck out a rather original and bold idea. That is, at the end of each month to publish the monthly part in the green cover, with the two illustrations, at the old shilling.[†3] This will give All the Year Round always the interest and precedence of a fresh weekly portion during the month; and will give me my old standing with my old public, and the advantage (very necessary in this story) of having numbers of people who read it in no portions smaller than a monthly part.... My American ambassador pays a thousand pounds for the first year, for the privilege of republishing in America one day after we publish here.[†1] Not bad?

To EMILE DE LA RUE,[†2] 13 MARCH 1859*

MS Berg Collection.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Sunday Thirteenth March 1859

My Dear De la Rue.

I yesterday sent on Mrs. Gretton's[†3] Manuscript[†4] to Mr. Woodfall,[†5] and I heartily wish that some good may come of it. It is just possible that the timely arrival of Poërio and the Neapolitans in London,[†6] may so turn the general mind towards Italy, as to lead some one to venture the publication of this little Italian history.[†7]

You are not so wise — your visual ray[†8] is not so brilliant — respecting the veracity of Newspaper rumour, as on all other subjects. There is not a word of truth — no, not one word — in all that you tell me about myself and America.[†9]

As to the Household Words change, that is set forth in the enclosed printed bill[†1] — which will be diffused all over England at the end of this month. The simple truth is, that I am not pleased with Messrs. Bradbury and Evans, my publishers — that I have resolved to have no more of them — and that I have made up my mind to work what I do, with my own capital, and to have no publisher at all except as a paid Agent and Instrument.[†2]

We all unite in kindest love to Madame De la Rue[†3] and yourself. I am hard at work; but, hard, or soft, or in any other condition, I am ever

Your affectionate friend
CHARLES DICKENS

To ANTHONY PANIZZI,[†4] 14 MARCH 1859

MS Yale University Library.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Monday Night March Fourteenth 1859

My Dear Panizzi.

If you should feel no delicacy in mentioning, or should see no objection to mentioning, to Signor Poerio or any of the wronged Neapolitan gentlemen to whom it is your happiness and honor to be a friend on their arrival in this country,[†5] an idea that has occurred to me: I should regard it as a great kindness in you if you would be my exponent. I think you will have no difficulty in believing that I would not, on any consideration, obtrude my name or projects upon any one of those noble souls, if there were any reason of the slightest kind against it. And if you see any such reason, I pray you instantly to banish my letter from your thoughts.

It seems to me probable that some narrative of their ten years' suffering will, somehow or other, sooner or later, be by some of them laid before the English people. The just interest and indignation alive here, will (I suppose) elicit it. False narratives and garbled stories will, in any case, of a certainty get about. If the true history of the matter is to be told, I have that sympathy with them and respect for them which would — all other considerations apart — render it unspeakably gratifying to me to be the means of its diffusion. What I desire to lay before them, is simply this:

If, for my new successor to "Household Words" a narrative of their Ten years trial could be written, I would take any conceivable pains to have it rendered into English, and presented in the sincerest and best way to a very large and comprehensive audience.[†1] It should be published exactly as you might think best for them, and remunerated in any way that you might think generous and right. They want no mouthpiece and no introducer; but perhaps they might have no objection to be associated with an English writer who is possibly not unknown to them by some general reputation, and who certainly would be animated by a strong public and private respect for their honor, spirit, and unmerited misfortunes.

This is the whole matter. Assuming that such a thing is to be done, I long for the privilege of helping to do it. These gentlemen might consider it an independent means of earning money, and I should be delighted to pay the money.

In my absence from town, my friend and Sub-Editor, Mr. Wills (to whom I had expressed my feeling on the subject), has seen — I think three — of the gentlemen together. But, as I hear, returning home tonight, that they are in your good hands, and as nobody can be a better judge than you of anything that concerns them, I at once decide to write to you, and to take no other step whatever. Forgive me for the trouble I have occasioned you in the reading of this letter, and never think of it again if you think that by pursuing it you would cause them an instant's uneasiness.

Believe me | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To DR [?J. S. H.] FOGG[†2], 15 MARCH 1859

Text from Anderson Auction Co. catalogue No. 962 (May 1912).

Tavistock House, London | Tuesday, Fifteenth March, 1859.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Doctor Fogg, and begs to say, in reply to Dr. Fogg's enquiry, that the best edition of his works is one now publishing in London, under the general title of "Library Edition."

To ANTHONY PANIZZI, 15 MARCH 1859

Text from MDGH, II, 90.

Tavistock House, Tuesday, March 15th, 1859.

My Dear Panizzi,

Let me thank you heartily for your kind and prompt letter. I am really and truly sensible of your friendliness.

I have not heard from Higgins,[†1] but of course I am ready to serve on the Committee.[†2]

Always faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To WILLIAM WILLOTT, 15 MARCH 1859*

MS Shakespeare Birthplace Trust.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Tuesday Fifteenth March 1859

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his Compliments to Mr. Willott, and begs to enclose a cheque (crossed) for Five Pounds, in aid of the Testimonial to Mr. Webster.[†3]

To THE REGISTRARS OF THE ROYAL LITERARY FUND, 17 MARCH 1859*

MS Royal Literary Fund.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Thursday Seventeenth March 1859.

Gentlemen

I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, and should have done so, sooner, had I not been out of town.

On Wednesday the 23rd. at 2 O'clock, Mr. Elwin and myself will have the honor of waiting on the committee, in accordance with your obliging proposal. We shall not fail to have the heads of the proposition with which we are entrusted,[†4] stated in writing, for the purpose of being left with, and fully considered by, the authorities of the Literary Fund;[†5] indeed that is an express part of the charge with which we are entrusted.

I am | Gentlemen | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To | The Registrars of The Literary Fund.

To FREDERIC CHAPMAN,[†1] 18 MARCH 1859†

MS Walter T. Spencer.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Friday Eighteenth March 1859

Dear Sir

I cannot have the pleasure of entertaining any proposal from Mr Sampson Low[†2] at present, in reference to an American Sale of All the Year Round, as I have entered into an arrangement with an American gentleman which I have every reason to consider binding for twelve months.[†3]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Frederic Chapman Esquire

To B. W. PROCTER,[†4] 19 MARCH 1859

Text from MDGH, II, 90.

Tavistock House, Saturday, March 19th, 1859.

My Dear Procter,

I think the songs are simply ADMIRABLE! and I have no doubt of this being a popular feature in "All the Year Round."[†5] I would not omit the sexton, and I would not omit the spinners and weavers; and I would omit the hack-writers, and (I think) the alderman; but I am not so clear about the chorister. The pastoral I a little doubt finding audience for; but I am not at all sure yet that my doubt is well founded.[†6]

Had I not better send them all to the printer, and let you have proofs kept by you for publishing? I shall not have to make up the first number of "All the Year Round" until early in April. I don't like to send the manuscript back, and I never do like to do so when I get anything that I know to be thoroughly, soundly, and unquestionably good. I am hard at work upon my story, and expect a magnificent start.

With hearty thanks, | Ever yours affectionately

To THOMAS CARLYLE,[†1] 24 MARCH 1859

MS National Library of Scotland.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Thursday Twenty Fourth March 1859

My Dear Carlyle.

I cannot tell you how much I thank you for your friendly trouble, or how specially interesting and valuable any help is to me that comes from you.[†2] I do not doubt that the books received from the London Library,[†3] and suggested by you,[†4] will give me all I want. If I should come to a knot in my planning, I shall come back to you to get over it.

Always Very Cordially Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To THE HON. ELEANOR EDEN,[†5] 24 MARCH 1859*

MS Messrs John Murray Ltd.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON W.C.
Thursday Twenty Fourth March 1859

My Dear Miss Eden

My answer to your interesting note, is (unfortunately) a short one. I am not going to the Dinner.[†6]

My occupations press so heavily upon me at this time, that Public Gatherings of that kind are necessary to be thrown over.

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss L. Eden

To THE HON. A. F. KINNAIRD,[†1] 24 MARCH 1859

Mention in Sotheby's catalogue, May 1983; MS 1 p.; dated Tavistock House, 24 Mar 59; addressed The Hon. A. Kinnaird.

Apologizing for giving Kinnaird trouble by making cheque payable to CD's Order only.[†2]

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 24 MARCH 1859

Text from N, III, 97.

Tavistock House, | Thursday Twenty-Fourth March 1859

Sir,

My occupation obliges me, in answer to your note, to entreat that you will have the kindness to communicate your business to me in writing, in the first instance. I assure you that I have not leisure to make appointments of a general kind, with the incredible numbers of correspondents who do me the honor to propose them.

Faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To OCTAVIAN BLEWITT,[†3] 25 MARCH 1859*

MS Royal Literary Fund.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Friday Twenty Fifth March 1859

Dear Sir

If it should be convenient to you to be in the way at 2 o'clock today, will you have the kindness to spare me two or three minutes then? I have it in charge to see you, in reference to last Wednesday's business.[†1] The matter is a very slight one.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Octavian Blewitt Esquire

To MRS FORSTER,[†2] 28 MARCH 1859

Mention in N, III, 97.

To RICHARD MONCKTON MILNES,[†3] 28 MARCH 1859*

MS Trinity College, Cambridge.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Monday Twenty Eighth March 1859

My Dear Mr. Milnes

I am engaged to dine with Forster on Friday, or I should have had great pleasure in accepting your kind invitation.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

R. M. Milnes Esquire

To ROBERT BONNER,[†4] 29 MARCH 1859

Extract in New York Times, 25 Apr 59.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, | LONDON, W.C.
Tuesday, March 29, 1859.

Dear Sir: I thought that I could not have been tempted at this time to engage in any undertaking, however short, but the literary project which will come into active existence next month. But your proposal[†1] is so handsome that it changes my resolution, and I cannot refuse it.... I will endeavor to be at work upon the tale, while this note is on its way to you across the water.

Faithfully yours,
CHARLES DICKENS.

To EDMUND YATES, 29 MARCH 1859

MS Robert H. Taylor Collection, Princton University.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Tuesday Twenty Ninth March 1859

My Dear Edmund

1. — I think that no one, seeing the place, can well doubt that my house at Gad's Hill, is the place for the letter box.[†2] The wall is accessible by all sorts and conditions of men, on the bold high road; and the house altogether is the great land-mark of the whole neighbourhood. Captain Goldsmith's[†3] house is up a lane, considerably off the high road; but he has a garden wall abutting on the road itself.

2. — The Pic Nic Papers were originally sold to Colburn,[†4] for the benefit of the widow of Mr. Macrone[†5] of St. James's Square, publisher, deceased. Two Volumes were contributed — of course gratuitously — by writers who had had transactions with Macrone. Mr. Colburn, wanting 3 volumes in all for trade purposes, added a third, consisting of an American reprint.[†1] Of that volume I didn't know, and don't know, any thing. The other two I edited, gratuitously as aforesaid, and wrote the Lamplighter's story in. It was all done, many years ago. There was a Preface originally, delicately setting forth how the book came to be.

3. — I suppose Whitefriars[†2] to be, as Mr. Samuel Weller expresses it somewhere in Pickwick, "ravin' mad with the consciousness o'willany".[†3] Under their advertisement[†4] in the Times today, you will see — without a word of comment — the Shorthand writer's verbatim report of the Judgment.[†5]

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To [?JOHN BENNETT],[†6] 31 MARCH 1859*

MS Fales Library, New York University.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Thursday March Thirty First 1859

Dear Sir

Guided by your advice, I have chosen Watch No. 1 — a very neat and pretty one.

The clock shall certainly be put up here for a week or two, if you still desire it.

Let me add, that I set it myself all through the last summer by the correctest London time, and it was always wrong.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

April

To CHARLES EDMONDS,[†1] 2 APRIL 1859*

MS Private.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Second April 1859

My Dear Sir

I want to refer to the Dictionary of Dates[†2] for a moment. Can you lend me a copy and save me the necessity of sending up to Tavistock House for mine.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Edmonds Esquire

To MRS JOHN DICKENS,[†3] 5 APRIL 1859*

MS Mr R. F. R. Barrow.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Tuesday Fifth April, 1859

My Dear Mother,

I enclose the cheque.[†4] All well, and send loves.

Yrs. affect
CD.

To W. C. MACREADY,[†5] 5 APRIL 1859*

MS Morgan Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Fifth April 1859

My Dearest Macready.

I cannot tell you how pleasant the sight of your hand writing was to me yesterday morning, or how I look forward to seeing you again.

I have great pleasure in accepting Mrs. Meredith's[†6] poem.[†7] Her prose MS has come to hand, but I am sorry to say that I am obliged to decline it. With many merits, it is, in the main, but a repetition of what has been already done in Household Words;[†1] and I feel convinced that it would be highly injudicious to do it over again in these new pages.

Wills will write to her, and soften the matter as much as possible, and explain to her what manner of thing it is that we do want.

All at Tavistock House send dearest love to all at Sherborne House.[†2] I am a little busy, and hard at work on a new story.

Ever My Dearest Macready
Most Affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To THE REV. W. H. BROOKFIELD,[†3] 7 APRIL 1859

MS Berg Collection.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Thursday Seventh April, 1859

My Dear Mr. Brookfield

It gives me real pleasure to find from your note that you have not forgotten the promise you made to me at Procter's. I shall be delighted to have Mrs. Brookfield[†4] and yourself among my hearers on Easter Monday,[†5] and have given directions to have two good stalls set apart for you. The tickets will be forwarded to you by Post, in due course.

Pray believe that I shall always be most happy to have seats reserved for you and yours, and that it is I who plead privilege in this regard.

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Rev. W. H. Brookfield.

To ANTHONY PANIZZI, 7 APRIL 1859

Text from MDGH, II, 92.

ALL THE YEAR ROUND OFFICE,
Thursday, April 7th, 1859.

My Dear Panizzi,

If you don't know, I think you should know that a number of letters are passing through the post-office, purporting to be addressed to the charitable by "Italian Exiles in London," asking for aid to raise a fund for a tribute to "London's Lord Mayor," in grateful recognition of the recognition of the Neapolitan exiles.[†1] I know this to be the case, and have no doubt in my own mind that the whole thing is an imposture and a "do".[†2] The letters are signed "Gratitudine Italiana."

Ever faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To BERNHARD TAUCHNITZ,[†3] 7 APRIL 1859

Extract in Curt Otto, Der Verlag Bernhard Tauchnitz, 1837-1912, Leipzig, 1912, p. 54.

OFFICE OF ALL THE WORLD ROUND,
Thursday, April 7th, 1859.

I duly received your kind letter and its enclosure of a bill at 3 days after sight for ....[†4] Accept my thanks.

Any arrangement that you may wish to make in respect of this Periodical after it shall have come into existence, I will at once consent to.

My story will be published in it, in weekly portions. It will also be published by Messrs. Chapman and Hall in monthly parts of the same size and price as Copperfield, Bleak House, Little Dorrit, etc. Of these monthly parts there will be 8[†5] .... You shall have the latter sheets in advance of their publication, as heretofore.

To WILKIE COLLINS, 9 APRIL 1859

MS Morgan Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Saturday Ninth April 1859

My Dear Wilkie. The insertions in the enclosed, just supply what was wanting. But will you make one more alteration in it, or the title will not by any means fit in among the other titles? — such an alteration as will admit of the paper's being called:

[†a]SURE TO BE HEALTHY, WEALTHY, AND WISE.[†a†1]

We want the Proof as soon as possible.

You will receive tonight the Occasional Register[†2] for which I have dotted down a few paragraphs.[†3] Pray try if you can do anything for it.[†4] It is grievously wanted for the 1st. No. The said 1st. No. MUST[†5] be made up and sent to the Printer's in good time on Monday. On Tuesday afternoon I shall go over it finally. Will you come here, then? And will you let me know, at Tavistock House, whether we shall dine somewhere afterwards.

Ever Faithfully
CD.

To W. H. WILLS, 11 APRIL 1859

MS Huntington Library.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Monday Eleventh April, 1859.

My Dear Wills.

Wilkie has done a few very good paragraphs for the Register.[†6] You will have them from him today.

It occurs to me that for that purpose Edmund Yates is likely to be very useful. He reads all the newspapers and periodicals, and is smart. I have told him that you will write to him on the subject. But perhaps the best way will be if you will make an appointment with him — say for today or tomorrow — then shew him the Proof and explain the little idea, and see if he can get some paragraphs ready for No. 2.[†7] (He will be at the Post Office all to day.)

Wilkie has a notion that if he could see what matter we have at the Printer's, he might find out for himself what kind of article would be most useful for No. 2. He will join us at the Office at about 2 tomorrow. Will you have your slips there.

IF[†1] I should find to day that the St. Alban's business[†2] yields any good notion, I will come down to the Office early tomorrow morning, and write another short paper for No. 1[†3] — to strengthen it. But this is, of course, contingent on there being any thing in what I am going to see.[†4]

I send with this, for Whiting's, two more weekly parts of the Tale of Two Cities.[†5]

I have just heard, from an excellent practical man,[†6] that nothing could be better done than our posting[†7] in the great towns.[†8] At Birmingham particularly,[†9] it is described as quite wonderful.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To JOHN THOMPSON, 16 APRIL 1859

MS Birthplace Museum, Portsmouth.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Sunday Seventeenth April, 1859

We will dine, John, on Tuesday instead of Thursday. Mr. Charles and Miss Hogarth will dine with us. The hour is 6 next Tuesday, instead of 5. Don't get too much.

I suppose we cannot dine yet, at the All The Year Round office? I shall be there, all Tuesday.

CD.

To BERNHARD TAUCHNITZ, 18 APRIL 1859

Extract in Curt Otto, Der Verlag Bernhard Tauchnitz, 1837-1912, Leipzig, p. 54.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON, W.C.,
Monday, April 18th, 1859.

I am obliged to ask you a question which must seem a very odd one.

Did you send me, last week, a bill for £ ... on account of the payment for my new story, A Tale of Two Cities?[†1] If you did, I have burnt it, and must ask you for another. If you did not, it is all right.

Last Wednesday night, having company here, I opened two or three letters very hurriedly, and afterwards burnt them, among some was the paper, without intending to do so. I did not even read them.

But I have the vaguest possible impression (I may have dreamed it, for any thing I know), that one of those letters was from you, and that it enclosed some bill or draft for £ ...

Pray excuse my giving you this trouble.

You understand that A Tale of Two Cities will appear in weekly portions, and every four weekly portions will afterwards appear separately republished in a monthly part. How do you wish to have it sent to you? Weekly?[†2]

To MISS CHARLOTTE WHITE,[†3] 18 APRIL 1859

Text in MDGH, II, 92-3.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON, W.C.,
Monday, April 18th, 1859.

My dear Lotty.

This is merely a notice to you that I must positively insist on your getting well, strong, and into good spirits, with the least possible delay. Also, that I look forward to seeing you at Gad's Hill sometime in the summer, staying with the girls, and heartlessly putting down the Plorn.[†4] You know that there is no appeal from the Plorn's inimitable father. What he says must be done. Therefore I send you my love (which please take care of), and my commands (which please obey).

Ever your affectionate
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To MR HAMMOND,[†5] 19 APRIL 1859*

MS Mr William R. Seat, Jr.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON W.C.
Tuesday Nineteenth April, 1859.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Hammond, and regrets to say that his occupations oblige him at present to forego all such public engagements as that which Mr. Hammond proposes to him.[†6]

To EDMOND YATES, 19 APRIL 1859

MS Robert H. Taylor Collection, Princeton University.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Nineteenth April 1859

My Dear Edmund

I have used some of the scraps for the Register.[†1] Some will not very well fit into its general heads; but you will easily make them do that, after seeing the 1st. No. The Lord John[†2] bit is very droll, but I do not like to use it, because I have long been on terms of personal friendship with him and his house.[†3]

The Mail journey,[†4] very good. Perhaps, a little diffuse here and there — in the Railway Carriage, and on board the Steamer — but I will run my pen through such portions in the Proof. It certainly ought not to be divided before Marseilles.[†5] I will retain the copy for the printer.

Ever Faithfully.

CD.

To JOSEPH LILLY,[†6] 20 APRIL 1859

MS Mr W. A. Foyle.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Wednesday Twentieth April 1859

Sir

In reply to your letter, I beg to assure you that I have no share in the administration of the Literary Fund, and have no influence with its Committee. But I feel, in justice, bound to observe that the first question that arises out of every case brought before that Committee, is — not whether the applicant is in distress, but whether the literary claim be strong enough to justify the relief of his distress by a Fund established solely for the aid of literary persons. I am not at all clear but that I myself might consider the claim in this case very questionable; and therefore, as I am at variance with the Committee on other points, I plainly say so to you.

Allow me to add that I feel sure your advocacy is generous and kind.

Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Joseph Lilly

To THE REV. ASHTON BURROW, 23 APRIL 1859*

MS Walter T. Spencer.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Twenty Third April, 1859.

Dear Sir

Will you have the kindness to let me know at this address, when my boy should present himself at your establishment.

In case your rules should require him to bring any particular clothing with him, different from the ordinary wear of boys, may I ask you to set me right on that point.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Rev: Ashton Burrow

To CAPT. W. J. EASTWICK,[†1] 26 APRIL 1859*

MS Mr. G. S. B. Sayer.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON W.C.
Tuesday Twenty Sixth April, 1859

My Dear Sir

I do not like to trouble you on the subject of the son whom I have hopes of sending to India through your kindness,[†2] and yet I am anxious you should know that he is being well qualified for his work. He has done exceedingly well at the foreign school[†3] in which he has been educated as yet, and will be removed in the summer to Wimbledon,[†4] where his brother (now a Lieutenant)[†5] was prepared for his examination a couple of years ago. I am sure you will forgive my putting you to the pains of reading this detail. If I supposed it to require any answer, I should not send it to you.

Dear Sir | Yours faithfully and obliged
CHARLES DICKENS

Captain Eastwick.

To WILLIAM HOWITT,[†1] 27 APRIL 1859

Extract in Samuel T. Freeman & Co catalogue, 1935; MS 1 p.; dated Office of AYR, 27 Apr 59; addressed William Howitt.

Regarding a manuscript submitted to All the Year Round, and asking for some tangible illustrations of the statements.[†2]

To T. J. SERLE,[†3] [27] APRIL 1859

MS Mr Peter Brandt. Date: misdated by CD; Wednesday was 27 Apr.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Twenty Eighth April 1859

My Dear Serle

I send you the Power[†4] and Order, duly executed.[†5] I also return you Coutts's letter. This is a hasty dispatch before going out of town for a day or two.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To W. H. WILLS, 28 APRIL 1859

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Twenty Eighth April, 1859

My Dear Wills

Very glad to get your letter[†6] this morning, and to receive the latest possible report of our goings on.[†7]

The result of the Whitefriars circulars[†8] will be, in the main — as we pretty well know — to heap over them, a vast accumulation of expensive miscellaneous matter.

But, there can be no harm in your writing to as many people as come into your mind, from time to time, some such letter as this.

Dear Sir

I beg, on behalf of Mr. Charles Dickens, to inform you that if it should be compatible with your engagements, to write for this journal, it would afford him the greatest pleasure to secure your valuable co-operation.

Now, or at any other time, I shall be happy to pursue this subject and to enter into details with you, if you will allow me.

I would send this, at once, to both the Trollopes,[†1] and to George Elliot,[†2] care of Blackwood[†3] — with a private seal on the latter letter. I would also address it to Ruffini,[†4] with a note to Mrs. Carlyle,[†5] asking her if she can direct the envelope. I would also write to Mrs. Gaskell,[†6] referring back to that story she mentioned.[†7]

Ever Faithfully
CD.

To W. H. WILLS, 28 APRIL 1859

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Night, Twenty Eighth April | 1859

My Dear Wills.

I write this, for John to bring up in the morning.

It grieves me to hear that you are still so unwell. Pray tell me, by next post how you are. I am quite remorseful that you should have had to go down to the Rolls Court.[†1]

Hullah's[†2] daughter[†3] (an artist, who is here), tells me that certain female students have addressed the Royal Academy, entreating them to find a place for their education. I think it a capital move, for which I can do something popular and telling, in the Register.[†4] Adelaide Procter[†5] is active in the business,[†6] and has a copy of their letter. Will you write to her for that, and anything else she may have about it: telling her that I strongly approve, and want to help them myself.

DO[†7] get better. | And believe me ever | Yours

CD.

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, [30 APRIL 1859]

Mention in next. Date: clearly same day as next.

To THOMAS BEARD,[†1] 30 APRIL 1859

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Place | Maida Hill | London | W.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Saturday Thirtieth April, 1859

My Dear Beard

I write in the greatest haste, to catch the morning Mail from Rochester.

Instantly on the receipt of your letter, I wrote to Bulwer (who is at Malvern),[†2] urging your claim upon him in the strongest manner, and with my personal entreaty. He will get my letter tomorrow morning. I have particularly stated what the office is, and where it is, and how it becomes vacant, and all about it.[†3]

I shall be at home again — I mean, at Tavistock House — on Monday afternoon. Of course, whatever I hear, you shall hear too, with all speed.

Ever affecy.

CD.

To W. H. WILLS, 30 APRIL 1859

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Thirtieth April, 1859

My Dear Wills. I hope and trust you are better to day. I cannot tell you how distressed I am, to think of your being ill at this time, with its anxieties necessarily upon you.

Referring to the Liverpool newspaper and its Piracy, I find it expressly stated in the Piracy, that the act is not to be repeated.[†4] I think, therefore, that I should not communicate with Ouvry.[†5] What I recommend is, your writing to Mr. Whitty,[†6] telling him you have received this from me:—

"I received this morning, the Liverpool paper you sent me, and, at first, felt with you the imperative necessity of stopping that injustice. But on looking to Mr. Whitty's introduction of the Re-print, I observe that he expressly states that he does not mean to repeat the offence. Under these circumstances I think it would be ungenerous — though I most strongly object to his proceeding — to put him to any expence. And if you will tell him so from me, good-humouredly, I hope the matter may be considered as ended."

Very sorry to hear of Chapman and Hall's[†1] confusion.[†2]

I shall be at Tavistock House again, on Monday afternoon.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

May

To EDWARD CHAPMAN, 1 MAY 1859

Text from N, III, 102.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday First May 1859

My Dear Sir,

I received your letter on Friday with great satisfaction, and thank you for the good report.

Tomorrow I return to town, and hope to find everything thriving, and in good train. I am sorry to hear from Mr. Wills, however, that there has been some complication and bewilderment among your agents.

It does not in the least matter, I think, what the Whitefriars people do. They will probably do somebody who furnishes capital, and we have the[†3]

To C. A. COLE,[†4] 1 MAY 1859

Extract in American Art Association catalogue, May 1925; MS 1 p.; dated Office of AYR, 1 May 59; addressed Cole.

Will you look to the proof,[†5] and return it me by the bearer. We are obliged to be considerably ahead, and I am now making up No. 8, for which I want it.

To CHANDOS WREN HOSKYNS,[†6] 1 MAY 1859

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday First May, 1859.

My Dear Hoskyns. — As it is quite clear to me that "Mr." has no business between us, I discard him.

— IX - 59 —

I have received your letter with the greatest interest and pleasure; I look forward to the receipt of the promised sheets,[†1] eagerly; and I believe that the whole philosophy of the subject lies in those remarkable words you use, touching the locked-up social evils underlying the whole fabric of the land in this country, and only unknown and uncured, because the land is its own legislator.[†2]

Tomorrow I return to town, and on Tuesday Evening, I shall be delighted to see you. But can you not dine with me, instead, at half past 6 on Wednesday? I will have no party. I suggest the change, because a long railway ride is a serious trial to an aching body, and also — I confess — because Dinner seems a more genial and comfortable engagement.

Will you write me, by return, a word in answer, to my house in London?

You make me laugh about the Whitefriars business. Indubitably, it is a bad business altogether — a sort of literary scuffle that requires Police dispersal. I find it very generally objected to. You will be glad to hear that in the Chancery matter, I have carried everything my own way.[†3]

Looking forward to the pleasure of seeing you, Believe me always
Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

C. Wren Hoskyns Esquire.

To OCTAVIAN BLEWITT, 2 MAY 59*

MS Royal Literary Fund.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Second May, 1859

My Dear Sir

I am reminded by an accidental circumstance, that I have inadvertently omitted to acknowledge the receipt of your last communication.[†4] Pray excuse my mistake, and let me inform you that I shall have the pleasure of waiting on the committee with Mr. Elwin, at the time proposed.[†5]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Octavian Blewitt Esquire.

To W. O. BARTLETT,[†1] 3 MAY 1859*

MS Columbia University Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Third May 1859

My Dear Sir

Your obliging letter has been forwarded to me here, in the country. I will send the MS to Mr. Bonner (to whom I write a line by this same post), by the first Mail in next week. I have written the story,[†2] and it is now in London. I will post it as a letter, considering that the safest course.

Allow me to acknowledge the safe receipt of the bill on Liverpool at one day's sight. I have forwarded it to my bankers in London, and beg you to accept my thanks.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

W. O. Bartlett Esquire

To ROBERT BONNER, [3 MAY 1859]

Mention in last.

To THOMAS BEARD, 3 MAY 1859

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Place | Maida Vale | W.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Third May 1859

My Dear Beard

I enclose you Bulwer's answer, from which you will see that the place, unfortunately, is not in his gift. If you think well of writing to that Jackass Ld Malmesbury,[†3] let me suggest the letter. No harm could come of it at least, and I would make it — and could I think — terse, and unlike such applications generally. Can you come to me (at Tavistock House) tomorrow, say at half past one?

Ever and Ever

CD.

To W. H. WILLS, 3 MAY 1859

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Evening Third May 1859

My Dear Wills.

All right.

I have corrected Yates's article[†1] carefully, and it really is very good. [†a]Morley's,[†2] so so. Also corrected.[†a]

Thornbury's[†3] is only this moment come in, and (not having yet read it), I cannot yet say whether it is good or no. I thought Mrs. Blacker's article[†4] so very good — the Nurse's story[†5] so exceedingly well done — that I considered it best to send it to the Printer's at once. I shall not have it for another hour. I will then decide between it and Thornbury's; selecting for this No. the better of the two.[†6] I have prepared Whitings for the uncertainty between them.

I send a few letters — thinking I may confuse you, if I answer them myself. Perhaps we had best see the Russian papers referred to in one of them.

I shall see you again tomorrow.

Be quite comfortable. All as right as possible.

Love to Mrs. Wills.[†7] | Ever Faithfully

CD.

To THE REV. ASHTON BURROW, 4 MAY 1859*

MS Walter T. Spencer.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON, W.C.
Wednesday Fourth May, 1859.

Dear Sir

I beg to let you know that I will send Sydney down by an early train tomorrow. Unfortunately, I cannot possibly leave town to bring him myself; but his eldest sister will bear him company, I have no doubt.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Rev: Ashton Burrow.

To J. T. DELANE, [6 MAY 1859]

Mention in Mowbray Morris to CD, 9 May 59 (MS Morgan Library.).

Complaining of the refusal by The Times[†1] to print his advertisement announcing the discontinuance of Household Words.[†2]

To FREDERIC OUVRY, [7 MAY 1859]

Mention in next. Date: no doubt written same day.

To W. H. WILLS, 7 MAY 1859

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Saturday Seventh May 1859

My Dear Wills

Ouvry sent me up a note today, telling me that "Hodgson[†3] says" the title and the stock must be sold together.[†4] Also that "Hodgson says" we shall get no price, except at long bills.

From this it is clear that the business is going on.

I replied that the Title and the stock might be sold together; but that the sale

[†a]MUST BE FOR CASH[†a]

— which Ouvry himself, in his letter, strongly (and needlessly) advised.

Ever Faithfully
CD.

To BERNHARD TAUCHNITZ, 10 MAY 1859

Extract in Curt Otto, Der Verlag Bernhard Tauchnitz, 1837-1912, p. 55.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday, May 10th, 1859.

I beg to acknowledge the safe receipt of your bill for...,[†1] and I beg you to accept my thanks.

The first monthly part of the Tale of Two Cities shall be forwarded to Messrs. Williams and Norgate[†2] in good time,[†3] and I will also send them the authority for the admission into England of the books you are so kind as to offer me.

To EDWARD CHAPMAN, 11 MAY 1859

Extract in McCutcheon catalogue, Apr 1926; MS 1 p.; dated Tavistock House, 11 May 59; addressed Edward Chapman.

My Dear Sir: Many thanks for the little Farm book,[†4] which is a very good one, and which I have read with much pleasure. I am not likely to go into that line, on my acres, for I never do anything (if I know it) that I don't understand

To THE REV. MATTHEW GIBSON, 11 MAY 1859

MS Robert H. Taylor Collection, Princeton University.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON.
Wednesday Eleventh May, 1859.

My Dear Sir

I shall, unwillingly, be under the necessity of removing Alfred to Wimbledon,[†5] after the summer holidays.[†6] The gentleman who is to give him his appointment,[†1] highly approves of his going there; and, as his elder brother Walter was prepared for his India Examination in the same place, I think it best to make that arrangement.

Harry[†2] will, of course, return to Boulogne.

The gallant Sydney is established at Southsea[†3] quite comfortably, and seems as much at home as if he had been born there.

With kind regard to Mr. Bewsher, in which my daughters and their aunt unite,

Believe me | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Rev. M. Gibson.

To CHARLES TALBOT,[†4] 12 MAY 1859*

MS Mr K.B. Rankin. Address: Mr. Charles Talbot | 174 Tooley Street | Borough | S.E.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Twelfth May 1859

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Talbot, and begs to thank him for his obliging letter. Mr. Dickens has no desire, however, to pursue the subject to which it refers.[†5]

To WILKIE COLLINS, 14 MAY 1859*

MS Morgan Library.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON W.C.
Saturday Fourteenth May 1859

My Dear Wilkie

As the Household Words Sale is on Monday at One, I propose to dine that day, instead of Tuesday. I have asked the Smiths to dine with us (Arthur is to be the bidder at the Sale), and we will dine at Verey's in Regent Street[†6] at 5.

Ever
CD.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 16 MAY 1859

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Monday Sixteenth May 1859

My Dear Georgy.

I have bought Household Words and its stock, for £3,550.[†1]

The stock is worth, about £1600;[†2] leaving the price at about — at the very most — £2,000; consequently, as I only, in reality, pay a fourth,[†3] I have bought it for £500.[†4]

Tomorrow morning we advertize in all the papers, "that the last No. of Household Words will be published on the 28th. of May; after which time that publication will be merged into All the Year Round."[†5]

Joyce[†6] was the bidder for the Whitefriars Gang; and all the witnesses agree that Arthur covered himself with glory. He affected to relate anecdotes to the said Joyce and to Shirley Brooks,[†7] and to F Evans,[†8] and then bid — as it were, accidentally — to the great terror and confusion of all the room.

We had also arranged, at a previous consultation, that Fred[k]. Chapman should bid against him up to a certain point; the consequence of which[†9] feint, was, that Nobody could make out what Arthur was bidding for at all, or why he was there.

This note is to the dear girls of course — and to Plornish[†10] — who (I have no doubt) will be excited on the subject.

In great haste | Ever affecy

CD.

To THOMAS ADOLPHUS TROLLOPE, 17 MAY 1859*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Seventeenth May 1859

My Dear Sir.

I have just put your curious article to press in No. 6 of this publication. I have taken the liberty of slightly condensing it here and there, and have called it "The Confessor's Hand Book".[†1]

It will give me great pleasure to have the account you suggest, of your Rosy Revolution,[†2] and to hear from you at all times and seasons.[†3]

Mr. Wills, my sub Editor, begs me to say that he will have the pleasure of remitting to you, through Coutts's, in his usual course of business next week.

With kindest regard to Mrs. Trollope, and with much esteem,

Believe me always | Very faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Adolphus T Trollope Esquire

To EDMUND YATES, 19 MAY 1859*

MS Robert H. Taylor Collection, Princeton University.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Nineteenth May, 1859

My Dear Yates

I wish you would communicate with Mr. Sculthorpe,[†4] and tell him how exceedingly sorry I am that I cannot dine with him in that wonderful little Bower on Monday. But you know how very much occupied I am just now, and how few engagements of pleasure I make in consequence, and I assure you that I really can not be so certain of myself on Monday as to feel justified in letting this pleasant appointment stand. I am at work on my own story, and am completely its slave, and must do it in its own time and way.

I would have written to Mr. Sculthorpe myself, but that I doubt whether "Honeysuckle Cottage" — or "Bachelor Flower Bed" — or "Ingenuity Cabin, Telegraph Hill"[†1] — or the like — would find him. Do present me aright to him, and tell him that I hope to remind him of his hospitable intentions, when I shall be a little more free.[†2]

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Edmund Yates Esquire.

To FRANK STONE, 20 MAY 1859*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Private

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Friday Twentieth May, 1859

My Dear Stone.

To complete our conversation of yesterday, I send you in this line to let you know that after I saw you I sold "the stock" — not for £2,000 but for £2,500!

Ever affecy.
CD.

To LEONARD SIMPSON,[†3] 22 MAY 1859*

MS Winifred A. Myers (Autographs) Ltd.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Sunday Twenty Second May, 1859

My Dear Simpson

I take shame to myself for not having thanked you long ago, for your neat and capital discourse[†4] on our friend Brillat-Savarin.[†5] But I know I may trust to your old remembrances, to acquit me of any want of interest in any of your work and progress, and to understand that I did thank you and write to you — in the spirit.

I am presently going down to Gad's Hill for the summer; and I hope you will come to us from one Saturday to Monday in the fine July weather, and see [in][†6] what a pretty part of Kent the undersigned British Freeholder airs himself.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Leonard Simpson Esquire

To WILLIAM PEACOCK,[†1] 24 MAY 1859*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Tuesday Twenty Fourth May 1859.

Dear Sir

I beg to thank you for the enclosed, very cordially. And I can honestly assure you that I have never known my friend and favorite Mr. Tapley, to meet with a more genial or more delicate appreciation.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

William Peacock Esquire

To MISS SEWELL,[†2] 24 MAY 1859*

MS Bodleian Library.

Private

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Tuesday Twenty Fourth May, 1859

Dear Madam

On receiving an application similar to the enclosed, from the husband — not the wife — I referred to the Rev. Mr. Hallward, clergyman at Shepherd's Bush,[†3] who gave me an excellent account of the case. Knowing no more of its merits myself, I must beg to refer you to the same gentleman.

I have some misgiving that these letters are growing very numerous, and that the writers find it a more profitable avocation to write them, than they had expected.[†4]

Without knowing for certainty what the gentleman's literary claims may be, I tend to the belief that they are not very strong. In reply to your question, I very much doubt the success of an advertisement of the case in The Times

Dear Madam | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Sewell

To W. C. MACREADY, 25 MAY 1859*

MS Morgan Library.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Wednesday Twenty Fifth May 1859

My Dearest Macready.

We are all more interested and delighted in the prospect of seeing you so soon, than I could tell you, if I tried.

On Monday the 30th. at Six for a quarter past, we shall await you with open arms.

With love from all to you and your dear ones
Ever Your faithful and affectionate
CD.

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 26 MAY 1859*

MS New York University Library.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Thursday Twenty Sixth May, 1859

My Dear Ouvry.

JERROLD[†1] Fund[†2]

I send you a letter and document enclosed. We, the trustees,[†3] see no objection to the proposed arrangement,[†4] if you see none. But I would rather hold no communication, myself, with the solicitor or anybody else. Will you kindly answer for me.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Frederic Ouvry Esquire.

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 28 MAY 1859*

MS New York University Library.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Saturday Twenty Eighth May 1859

Jerrold Fund.

My Dear Ouvry

No representations whatever were made to the Subscribers. Nothing was ever announced but that the Fund was raised "In remembrance of the late Mr. Douglas Jerrold."

When it was completed, a "Committee" whose names had all along been announced as The Committee In Remembrance of Mr. Douglas Jerrold,[†5] met, and voted that the money should be handed to 3 Trustees, myself, Forster, and Arthur Smith, to invest for the benefit of Mrs. Jerrold and her daughter[†6] and the Survivor of them.

This is the whole business, and no deed of any kind was ever executed or thought of.

Faithfully Yours Ever

CD.

Frederic Ouvry Esquire

To THE REV. DR JOSEPH ANGUS,[†1] 30 MAY 1859*

MS Mr G. Last.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Monday Thirtieth May, 1859

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to the Rev. Dr. Angus, and begs to say that he feels obliged to decline offering any suggestion to the gentleman who would have enriched the Literary Fund for the Service of Literature, as to any other bestowal of his munificence.

To JOHN HOLLINGSHEAD,[†2] 31 MAY 1859

Extract in Dodd Mead catalogue No. 69; MS 1 p.; dated Office of AYR, 31 May 59; addressed Hollingshead.

At all times I should be most ready and willing to make money matters easy to your convenience — to discuss with you on subjects that may arise in your mind — to make your work as certain, as useful, and as serviceable to you as it can be made. I hope my desire to render your connexion both profitable and pleasant to you in all ways will, for the time at all events — so express itself as to serve in place of your proposed arrangement.[†3]

To THE HON. MRS RICHARD WATSON, 31 MAY 1859

MS Huntington Library.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Tuesday Thirty First May, 1859

My Dear Mrs. Watson.

I enclose the autograph. It is a short one; but I am obliged to make them short, on principle.

You surprise me by supposing that there is ever latent, a defiant and roused expression in the undersigned Lamb! Apart from this singular delusion of yours, and wholly unaccountable departure from your usual accuracy in all things, your satisfaction with the portrait[†4] is a great pleasure to me. It has received every conceivable pains at Frith's hands and ought — on his account — to be good. It is a little too much (to my thinking) as if my next door neighbour were my deadly foe, uninsured, and I had just received tidings of his house being a-fire; otherwise, very good.

I cannot tell you how delighted we should all be if you would come to Gad's Hill. You should see some charming woods and a rare old castle,[†1] and you should have such a snug room looking over a Kentish prospect, with every facility in it for pondering on the beauties of its master's beard! Do come — but you positively must not come and go on the same day.

We retreat there on Monday, and shall be there all the Summer.

My small boy[†2] is perfectly happy at Southsea, and likes the school very much. I had the finest letter two or three days ago, from another of my boys — Frank Jeffrey[†3] — at Hamburg. In this wonderful epistle, he says "Dear Papa, I write to tell you that I have given up all thoughts of being a Doctor. My conviction that I shall never get over my stammering, is the cause. All professions are barred against me. The only thing I should like to be, is a gentleman-farmer, either at the Cape, in Canada, or Australia. With my passage paid, £15, a horse, and a rifle, I could go two or three hundred miles up country, sow grain, buy cattle, and in time be very comfortable."

Considering the consequences of executing this little commission by the next steamer, I perceived that the first consequence of the £15 would be that he would be robbed of it — of the horse, that it would throw him — and of the rifle, that it would blow his head off. Which probabilities I took the liberty of mentioning, as being against the scheme.

With best love from all, Ever believe me My Dear Mrs. Watson.

Your faithful and affectionate
CHARLES DICKENS

To THE REV. WHITWELL ELWIN, 3 JUNE 1859*

MS University of Texas, Austin.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON, W.C.
Friday Third June 1859

My Dear Elwin

Dr. Smith[†4] — who I think has behaved admirably in this matter — sent me the enclosed letter for you last night, opened as you see it, with a request that I would read it. Which I have done.

It appears to me that as we have withdrawn the proposal,[†1] we can originate no further action in the matter.[†2] But IF[†3] the members of the Committee who voted for us would address a request to us in writing to make the proposal to a General Meeting, then I think we might do it with effect.[†4] What do you think? If you agree with me, perhaps you will send some such answer to Smith.

I have not yet mentioned this suggestion to Forster. Nor am I by any means sure that it is even worth while to pursue it at all. For I do not believe that a General Meeting would vote with us.[†5] But I suppose we must in any case take some steps to bring Forster off with flying colors?

He was here yesterday morning, smoking all over his head, and fuming exactly like a steamboat ready to start. He had ideas of our writing to the Times; and various rampant carriages and six were jostling each other in his mind. It was impossible to wonder at the dear fellow's being rendered very angry by a sense of his infamous treatment; but I felt that the only safe course was, to put everything by for a while. This I accordingly did, under various pretences — and I dare say he thought me a cold-blooded Villain for doing it.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN JAFFRAY,[†6] 3 JUNE 1859*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Friday Third June 1859

My Dear Sir

I am sorry that I must decline to prefer your request to Mr. Forster.[†7] But I have less right to do so than anybody else, because I happen to have lately heard from Mr. Forster himself of the great inconvenience that ensued upon the long detention of the picture by the engraver,[†1] and of his determination not to part with it from its place again.[†2] Whether he may be induced to change that determination, I can not say, but I certainly should not feel justified in asking him to do so.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

John Jaffray Esquire

To DR WILLIAM SMITH, [3 JUNE 1859]

Mention in next. Date: as next.

To DR WILLIAM SMITH, 3 JUNE 1859*

MS Mr Jim Walsh.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Friday Third June 1859.

My Dear Dr. Smith

I have written to you by post this morning.[†3]

Pray do not think of troubling yourself to call to day. As soon as we both hear from Elwin we can take further counsel together.

When Elwin comes to town again, he is coming down to see me at Gad's Hill. I hope it is not quite out of the bounds of probability that you may be able to spare a day to meet him there, and to talk over these things in Cobham Woods.

I go on Monday. My summer address is:

Gad's Hill Place
Higham
by Rochester

But I shall be constantly backwards and forwards at All The Year Round Office, and any letter from you addressed to me there, will be sure to come straight to me.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS WHITE,[†1] 5 JUNE 1859

Text from MDGH, II, 94.

Tavistock House, | Sunday, June 5th, 1859.

My Dear Mrs. White,

I do not write to you this morning because I have anything to say — I well know where your consolation is set, and to what beneficent figure your thoughts are raised — but simply because you are so much in my mind that it is a relief to send you and dear White[†2] my love. You are always in our hearts and on our lips. May the great God comfort you! You know that Mary and Katie are coming on Thursday. They will bring dear Lotty what she little needs with you by her side — love; and I hope their company will interest and please her. There is nothing that they, or any of us, would not do for her. She is a part of us all, and has belonged to us, as well as to you, these many years.[†3]

Ever your affectionate and faithful
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To SIR BENJAMIN HAWES,[†4] 6 JUNE 1859

Text from N, III, 105.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Monday, Sixth June, 1859

My Dear Sir Benjamin,

I am exceedingly obliged to you for your kind letter. You shall see a proof of the paper[†5] by all means, and I readily give you a pledge to that effect. I would not, however unconsciously, compromise the country's active preparations for defence in any way, for any consideration.

Will you be so good as to let me have the credentials towards a good reception at Woolwich for Mr. Charles Collins[†1] on my behalf.[†2] Mr. Collins is a gentleman (a son of the famous painter),[†3] and in all things to be trusted.

Will you also be so kind as to let me have, as a loan, the official paper to which you refer? I will endeavour to turn all your friendly assistance to the best account.

Believe me always | Faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To B. W. PROCTER, 6 JUNE 1859*

MS University of Kentucky.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Monday Sixth June 1859

My Dear Procter

What shall I say to the enclosed? He is a good composer of songs, and a respectable man.[†4]

Affecy. Yours Ever
CHARLES DICKENS

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 6 JUNE 1859*

MS Manchester Central Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Monday Sixth June 1859

Dear Sir

In expressing my regret that I cannot have the pleasure of accepting the enclosed verses, I beg you to understand that I by no means imply that I think them without merit. But it happens that the subject has been frequently touched in Household Words, and also that I have in type, at this moment, a prose paper sounding the same string.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN H. BALL,[†1] [9] JUNE 1859

Text from W.R. Hughes, A Week's Tramp in Dickens-Land, 1891, p. 227. Date: Misdated by CD; Thursday was 9 June.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Thursday, eighth June, 1859

Sir,

I feel exceedingly obliged to you for your kind and considerate offer of a remembrance of old Rochester Bridge; that will interest me very much. I accept the relic[†2] with many thanks, and with great pleasure.

Do me the favor to let it be delivered to a workman who will receive instructions to bring it away, and once again accept my acknowledgments.

Yours faithfully

Mr. John H. Ball.

To WILKIE COLLINS, 12 JUNE 1859

MS Morgan Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Sunday Twelfth June 1859

My Dear Wilkie.

I really am exceedingly sorry to find that you have been so unwell again. Let us talk the Malvern matter well over, here. My experience of that treatment[†3] induces me to hold that it is wonderfully efficacious where there is great constitutional vitality. Where there is not, I think it may be a little questionable.

Whenever you decide to come, your room will be ready for you, and you will give us (as you know you always do), great pleasure. Our Chauncy,[†4] I think, will come down on Wednesday. So shall I — at 20 minutes past 2.

Wills and I will dine with you (since you propoge it), tomorrow. Shall we say halfpast five sharp.

The "cold" is pretty much in the old stage. So I have made up my mind to think no more of it, and to go (in a general way) the way of all flesh.[†5]

Ever Affecy.
CD.

To MISS MARY DICKENS, [13] JUNE 1859

Text from MDGH, II, 95. Date: Monday was 13 June.

GAD'S HILL, HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT,
Monday, June 11th, 1859.

My Dearest Mamie,

On Saturday night I found, very much to my surprise and pleasure, the photograph on my table at Tavistock House. It is not a very pleasant or cheerful presentation of my daughters; but it is wonderfully like for all that, and in some details remarkably good. When I came home here yesterday I tried it in the large Townshend stereoscope,[†1] in which it shows to great advantage. It is in the little stereoscope at present on the drawing-room table. One of the balustrades of the destroyed old Rochester bridge has been (very nicely) presented to me by the contractor for the works, and has been duly stonemasoned and set up on the lawn behind the house. I have ordered a sun-dial for the top of it, and it will be a very good object indeed. The Plorn is highly excited to-day by reason of an institution which he tells me (after questioning George) is called the "Cobb, or Bodderin,"[†2] holding a festival at The Falstaff.[†3] He is possessed of some vague information that they go to Higham Church, in pursuance of some old usage, and attend service there, and afterwards march round the village. It so far looks probable that they certainly started off at eleven very spare in numbers, and came back considerably recruited, which looks to me like the difference between going to church and coming to dinner. They bore no end of bright banners and broad sashes, and had a band with a terrific drum, and are now (at half-past two) dining at The Falstaff, partly in the side room on the ground-floor, and partly in a tent improvised this morning. The drum is hung up to a tree in The Falstaff garden, and looks like a tropical sort of gourd. I have presented the band with five shillings, which munificence has been highly appreciated. Ices don't seem to be provided for the ladies in the gallery — I mean the garden; they are prowling about there, endeavouring to peep in at the beef and mutton through the holes in the tent, on the whole, in a debased and degraded manner.

Turk somehow cut his foot in Cobham Lanes yesterday, and Linda hers.[†4] They are both lame, and looking at each other. Fancy Mr. Townshend not intending to go for another three weeks, and designing to come down here for a few days — with Henri[†5] and Bully — on Wednesday! I wish you could have seen him alone with me on Saturday; he was so extraordinarily earnest and affectionate on my belongings and affairs in general, and not least of all on you and Katie, that he cried in a most pathetic manner, and was so affected that I was obliged to leave him among the flowerpots in the long passage at the end of the dining-room. It was a very good piece of truthfulness and sincerity, especially in one of his years, able to take life so easily.

Mr. and Mrs. Wills are here now (but I daresay you know it from your aunt), and return to town with me tomorrow morning. We are now going on to the castle. Mrs. Wills was very droll last night, and told me some good stories. My dear, I wish particularly to impress upon you and dear Katie (to whom I send my other best love), that I hope your stay will not be very long.[†1] I don't think it very good for either of you, though of course I know that Lotty will be, and must be, and should be the first consideration with you both. I am very anxious to know how you found her and how you are yourself.

Best love to dear Lotty and Mrs. White. The same to Mr. White and Clara.[†2] We are always talking about you all.

Ever, dearest Mamie, your affectionate Father,

[CD]

To JOHN FORSTER, [16 JUNE 1859]

Extract in F, VII, v, 672. Date: July 1859, according to Forster; but the date he received repayment from AYR (see below) makes 16 June virtually certain.

A word before I go back to Gadshill, which I know you will be glad to receive. So well has All the Year Round gone that it was yesterday able to repay me, with five per cent interest, all the money I advanced for its establishment (paper, print & all paid, down to the last number), and yet to leave a good £500 balance at the banker's![†3]

To RICHARD BENTLEY, 17 JUNE 1859*

MS Berg Collection.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Seventeenth June 1859

My Dear Sir

I assure you that I regret my not being able in any reason to comply with your request.[†4] But I have strong grounds against it, and must reluctantly decline.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esquire

To THE REV. WHITWELL ELWIN, 17 JUNE 1859*

MS Henry Sotheran Ltd.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Seventeenth June 1859

My Dear Elwin

It is mortifying to know that you cannot stay here over Sunday, but I need not say that I shall be delighted to see you tomorrow, and can stow you away with perfect ease.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Ask Forster what he thinks of PETER[†1] having turned up here on Wednesday, and dined here! —

To HENRY KOLLE,[†2] 18 JUNE 1859*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Eighteenth June 1859

My Dear Kolle

It is an extremely difficult thing, to pronounce on the qualifications of any writer — or anyone aspiring to be a writer — with only one youthful composition to guide the judgment. I have read Joan of Arc attentively, and all I can do, is, to tell you faithfully what impression it has left upon me.

A facility of versification is certainly to be observed in it, though it has many very weak and lame lines. But it seems to me to stop at turning prose into rhyme — and I don't see much good in that. When I say this, I mean that I do not find the writer to see the story poetically, or to place any scene in it, vividly, through the aid of a bright and picturesque imagination, before the reader. After laying the piece down, I do not remember any thought in it, any fancy, any image, any little touch of description, that gives me the least notion connected with the story of which I was not already possessed. I do not believe that the way to success, recompense, or happiness in composition, lies through such a portal. And unless the writer can do much better, my advice to her, is, to leave it alone.

But she may be able to do better, and considered as an amateur, lady-composition this is very good. I understand you, however, to wish to know whether this [is][†3] something beyond such a composition? I think not.

In remembrance of the old days to which you so feelingly refer in your note and which are no less dear to me, do not hesitate to write to me again on this subject, if you should see reason for doing so.[†1] And pray assure your daughter[†2] that I am not a DRAGON.[†3] but that I tell her the truth, as her father's old friend should.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Henry Kolle Esquire

To THE REV. W. H. BROOKFIELD, 20 JUNE 1859*

MS Berg Collection.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Monday Twentieth June 1859.

My Dear Mr. Brookfield

I have been always "going" to answer the kind letter you wrote me after you were so good an audience at St. Martin's Hall.[†4] Better late than never. Let me thank you for it now.

You cannot feel the fragmentary nature of a broken reading without a continuous story,[†5] more than I do. I detest it. But the Public always like it, occasionally, and therefore I give it them.

When you suggest Copperfield, you make a dash into my own thoughts. Last year, I began to sketch out a Reading, which should include the whole story of Mr. Peggotty and his niece, with some scenes of the Dora marriage by way of relief. Necessarily having a great deal too much in the first instance, I have never yet completed the design. But I hope to do so, and to see your face when I execute it.[†6]

If I had not been busily writing and editing, I should have asked you to come and hear Little Dombey[†7] before now. When I do find time to read again, I shall remind you of the desire you once had to make his acquaintance.

My "two young ladies" are at Bonchurch on the sad mission of cheering a dying young friend.[†8] When they come back, I shall propound to them the idea of their trying their influence with Mrs. Brookfield to induce her and you to come and see us here.

Believe me | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To PROFESSOR C. C. FELTON, 20 JUNE 1859*

MS Mr Philo Calhoun.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Twentieth June 1859

My Dear Felton.

I have delayed answering your interesting and affectionate letter of last March, in the hope that I might have something positive and certain to tell you, in reference to the idea of my reading in America. But I have no certainty on the subject yet. It rather appeared to me that the Agent[†1] who came over, was not prepared with the details, and (perhaps) not prepared with money. Both were important; the last, particularly so, as I could not enter on such a design in any reason, without having a large sum paid down here. However, I proposed terms to him, and gave him until the middle of July to consider them. If he should prove able to carry them out, I shall be bound to come in the Autumn.[†2] If he should not (which I most expect), I shall remain at my work in London. My dear fellow, I could never do so pleasant a thing as stay with you if I were to come to Boston. I should necessarily have some one with me whom I could not decently leave,[†3] and I should have no social relief during the whole term of my stay — for the work would be tremendous.

You will be glad, I know, to learn that All The Year Round is an amazing success.[†4] It has left the circulation of old Household Words in remote distance, and flourishes amazingly. My story too, has taken a great hold, and strikes deeper every week.[†5] The Forsters have been on a visit here since Saturday, and have just gone up to London. If Forster knew me to be writing to you, he would send you his love.

I had an agreeable surprise the other day in the receipt of a letter from Hillard,[†6] forwarded to me by Mr. Fields who is now at Liverpool, but shortly to be in London.[†7] The next piece of small news that comes into my mind, is, that Macready dined with us about three weeks ago, in excellent spirits, and looking wonderfully well. He spoke (as he always does, whenever I see him) of you. The next piece of news, is, that my girls are very pretty, and keep house here in great state. The last, that Georgina is, as always, their guide and friend and companion, and sends you her love.

Your letter gives me good hope that you are at last shaking off that poisonous influence,[†1] and that we shall yet come round to joviality and Oysters. In that former state of existence when we drank all the beer that was aboard of a packet, I little thought I should ever cross the Atlantic again. Now, I begin to have hope that I may by possibility enjoy the great sensation of reading the Christmas Carol to American listeners.

God bless you | Ever Your affectionate
CHARLES DICKENS

To HOMER G. PLANTZ,[†2] 20 JUNE 1859

MS Mr Melville P. Liverance.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Twentieth June 1859

My Dear Sir

I received a letter from you two months ago, which the quiet of my little country house here reproaches me for having never answered.

Believe me, that letter gave me true gratification of heart.[†3] I thank you for it earnestly, and shall not readily forget a word of it.

With all good wishes, | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Homer G. Plantz Esquire

To RICHARD BENTLEY, 23 JUNE 1859*

MS University of California, Los Angeles.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Twenty Third June 1859.

My Dear Sir

Believe me, it is not a question of money with me. I cannot entertain your proposal, because I wish — for other than pecuniary reasons — to have those papers collected and re-published, by myself only, and at my own time.[†4]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esquire

To JAMES T. FIELDS, 23 JUNE 1859*

MS Massachusetts Historical Society

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Twenty Third June 1859.

My Dear Sir

I shall be in town on Tuesday, and will do myself the pleasure of calling on you before 12 that morning, that I may incur the less risk of keeping you at home.[†1] I shall hope to persuade you to come and dine with us in the country here, and I shall convey a similar entreaty to Mrs. Fields[†2] from my daughters.[†3]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

James T Fields Esquire

To LEIGH HUNT,[†4] 23 JUNE 1859

MS Berg Collection.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Twenty Third June 1859

My Dear Leigh Hunt.

Believe me, I have not forgotten that matter; nor will I forget it.[†5] To alter the book itself, or to make any reference in the preface of the book itself, would be to revive a forgotten absurdity, and to establish the very association that is to be denied and discarded.

In the matter of the smitten cheek, I hold you to be thoroughly right in principle. But be sure that you do not give importance to what is worthless and insignificant, or drag any obscure person or thing into your own light. That is always the risk when a man of your mark honors Grub Street with a look.

Affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 23 JUNE 1859

MS Mr Christopher Dickens.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Twenty Third June 1859

My Dear Ouvry.

I have gone through the Draft agreement,[†1] and have made some alterations in it, which perhaps you will explain to Wills.[†2]

Clause 3, I have made a little plainer, in the expression of my delegating the general management to Wills. I have also struck out a part of it that seems to me quite unnecessary.

Clause 9, as it stands, is not at all my intention. I propose that Wills shall not sell his share or any part of it, without offering it to me; but as to my own share in the property, I must reserve to myself the absolute controul over it, and the absolute right to do whatever I please with it or with any part of it.

Clause 10, I take to be altogether unnecessary.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Frederic Ouvry Esquire

To F. C. BEARD, 25 JUNE 1859

MS Dickens House. Address: Wait Answer | F Beard Esquire | 44 Welbeck Street | Cavendish Square.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Saturday Twenty Fifth June 1859

My Dear Frank Beard

[†a]My bachelor state has engendered a small malady[†3] on which[†a] I want to see you. I am at Gad's Hill for the summer, but have come up this morning on purpose. Will you let me know at what time to day it will be convenient to you to call here, and also at what time you leave home; so that IF[†4] the former should be incompatible with my train, I may come up to you at once.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS MARY ANN JERROLD, 26 JUNE 1859*

MS University of California, Los Angeles.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Twenty Sixth June 1859

My Dear Miss Jerrold

I have been away, and hence a delay has arisen between your writing and my receiving your note.

Believe me, I am really at heart distressed by what you say of the uneasiness you have to bear. God knows I would relieve it, if I could; and that my only desire in this matter, is, to do what I am certain your dear father would have asked me to do, if he could have spoken on your behalf.[†1]

Pray tell me, for my information and that of the friends associated with me,[†2] what you yourself desire — and whether you know what the Deed was, which you signed on the 9th. of July 1857[†3] — and whether you feel or do not feel your claim on this money to be superior to any other human being's.[†4] Answer me unreservedly; you may trust me.

My daughters and their Aunt send their kindest remembrance, and I am Ever

Dear Miss Jerrold | Faithfully Your friend

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Jerrold.

To F. D. FINLAY,[†5] 28 JUNE 1859

MS Comtesse de Suzannet.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Twenty Eighth June 1859

My Dear Mr. Finlay

I hear you are in town. Can you not give me the pleasure of seeing you here? Any day will suit me; any night, I can give you a bedroom. My station is Higham, on the North Kent Railway from London Bridge. You shall be triumphantly fetched from said station, in THE[†6] car,[†7] if you will write a line beforehand.

Believe me | Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

F. Finlay Esquire.

To THOMAS CARLYLE, [30 JUNE] 1859*

MS Free Library of Philadelpia. Date: misdated by CD, as are next two letters. Thurs was 30 June.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday First July 1859

My Dear Carlyle.

My daughter Mary has written a note to Mrs. Carlyle this morning, to which I pray you seriously to incline your ear. You have no idea what a good place for working in, this is; — no Cochin Chinese[†1] — no fraudulent or incompetent builders — only Pan with his pipes (of tobacco) and the Nymphs.

Ever My Dear Carlyle | Affectionately Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To F. D. FINLAY, [30 JUNE] 1859

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: misdated by CD.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday First July, 1859

My Dear Mr. Finlay

There is a very good train (considering that it runs on the worst Railway in England) which leaves the London Bridge Station of the North Kent, at 3..40 in the afternoon. This will bring you to Higham at 10 minutes before 5. You will observe the great national vehicle at the Higham platform, opening its arms to receive you.

I have a fancy — or a remembrance — that you told me you knew Edmund Yates.[†2] I have not seen him for a long time, and he writes me that he is coming down tomorrow. Perhaps you may find him in your train.

I assure you it gives me real pleasure to think that you will not go back to Belfast, without having given me an opportunity of shaking hands with you.

Believe me always | Very faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Francis. D. Finlay Esquire.

To W. H. WILLS, [30 JUNE] 1859

MS Huntington Library. Date: misdated by CD.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday First July 1859.

My Dear Wills.

Very funny indeed, about the Amiable Mr. Joyce. What fools they[†3] are: As if a Mole[†4] couldn't see that their only chance was in a careful separation of themselves from the faintest approach or assimilation to All The Year Round! — [†1]

I am very much relieved by finding that you had Parts enough yesterday. Shall I still write that note to Chapman and Hall? — Or, issue solemnly friendly summons to council at the office next Tuesday?

Whitings have made a mistake this morning, for which I dare say I am myself mainly responsible, through having used the word "Proofs", instead of "Revises".

They have sent me my own soiled and cut-about Proofs of chapters X, XI, XII, and XIII.[†2] What I wanted, was, fair revises of those chapters.[†3] Will you send round for them, and then post them [†a]to Miss Ellen Ternan, 2 Houghton Place, Ampthill Square, N.W.[†a]

I don't think I am any better today. I am rather disposed to feel it in my general health, and am languid and short of starch. Original complaint, much where it was.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

P.S. I once asked you, or thought of asking you (I cannot recollect which), if you would let the house agent know that I would now let Tavistock House, for not less than 4 months or more than 12?[†1] Also that the Stanfield room has been done since he saw it? Also that the house is generally dismantled for the preservation of the furniture, but that he himself knows what its normal state is.

Have you ever done so? If not, will you give him a call when near?

July

To F. C. BEARD, [1] JULY 1859

MS Dickens House. Address: F. Carr Beard Esquire | 44 Welbeck Street. Date: misdated by CD; Friday was 1 July.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Second July 1859

My Dear Frank Beard

Will you call upon me here today, after you leave home? I shall expect you between 1 and 2, but, anyway, will wait until you come. What I principally want to know is, whether your medicine irritates my skin.[†2] In other respects, I hope I am certainly better.

Don't trouble yourself to write.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To PETER CUNNINGHAM, 4 JULY 1859*

MS Mr Edward Caulfield.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Fourth July 1859

My Dear Cunningham

I have been playing at Bo Peep with your letter, in some extraordinary manner.

Accept my best thanks for the case.[†3] It shall not go out of an Author's hands and family, and I shall not forget from whom — and with what kind words — I had it.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Peter Cunningham Esquire

To CHARLES BARBER,[†1] 7 JULY 1859*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

GAD'S HILL PLACE | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Seventh July, 1859
Dear Sir

I cannot possibly return a satisfactory answer to your letter, at present, nor can I by any means empower you to make any announcement of me in your regular course:[†2] — for the simple reason that I am exceedingly uncertain on the subject of my Autumnal movements, and have pledged myself to remain so for a certain definite time. All I can now say, is, that I have made a memorandum of your request, and that I have every desire and disposition to comply with it.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Charles Barber.

To ROBERT BONNER, 7 JULY 1859*

MS University of Texas, Austin.

Private

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Seventh July, 1859

My Dear Sir

I beg to enclose you the proof of my story,[†3] corrected. I think it quite unnecessary that you should take the trouble of sending me a revise, as it is printed with remarkable accuracy. I have divided it into five sections, feeling that the effect is heightened thereby.

It gives me great pleasure to receive your letter of the Twenty First of last month.[†4] I read the story to one or two friends here, at the time of its completion, and I found that it took strong possession of them.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Robert Bonner Esquire

To THE REV. JAMES WHITE, 7 JULY 1859

Text from MDGH, II, 97.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT,
Thursday, July 7th, 1859.

My Dear White,

I send my heartiest and most affectionate love to Mrs. White and you, and to Clara. You know all that I could add; you have felt it all; let it be unspoken and unwritten — it is expressed within us.[†1]

Do you not think that you could all three come here, and stay with us? You and Mrs. White should have your own large room and your own ways, and should be among us when you felt disposed, and never otherwise. I do hope you would find peace here. Can it not be done?

We have talked very much about it among ourselves, and the girls are strong upon it. Think of it — do!

Ever your affectionate
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 8 JULY 1859

Mention in United States Cumulative Book Auction Records 1950-1; MS 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill, 8 July 59.

To W. H. WILLS, 8 JULY 1859

Text from N, III, 110.

Cripple's Arms,[†2]
GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Eighth July 1859

My Dear Wills

A line — to say that I got your letter this morning, and that Wilkie and I have been much delighted by your account of Meredith's[†3] Poem.[†4] It is too hot to do much, but I am at work, and see the story[†5] in a wonderful glass.[†6]

Ever faithfully

[CD]

To JAMES T. FIELDS, 9 JULY 1859†

MS New York Public Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Ninth July, 1859

My Dear Mr. Fields[†1]

My daughter Mary wishing me to send the enclosed note to Mrs. Fields (who, we hope, is better), I add a word of my own in doing so.

— Only to say that I, too, heartily enjoyed our day, and shall long remember it.[†2] Also that I have been perpetually repeating the [†a]Gerald Massey[†a] experience (of a more tremendous sort in the way of ghastly comicality, experience there is none) on the grass, on my back.[†3] Also, that I have not forgotten Cobbett.[†4] Also, that I shall trouble you at greater length when the mysterious Oracle, Evans of New York, pronounces.

Wilkie Collins begs me to report that he declines pale horse, and all other horse, exercise — and all exercise, except eating, drinking, smoking, and sleeping — in the Dog days.

With united kind regard | Believe me always | Cordially Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [9 JULY 1859]

Extracts in F, VIII, v, 678 and F, IX, ii, 730. Date: both extracts 9 July, according to Forster.

I am now getting the Tale of Two Cities into that state that IF I should decide to go to America late in September, I could turn to, at any time, and write on with great vigour. Mr. Fields has been down here for a day, and with the strongest intensity urges that there is no drawback, no commercial excitement or crisis, no political agitation; and that so favourable an opportunity, in all respects, might not occur again for years and years. I should be one of the most unhappy of men if I were to go, and yet I cannot help being much stirred and influenced by the golden prospect held before me.[†1]

I have been getting on in health very slowly and through irksome botheration enough. But I think I am round the corner. This cause — and the heat — has tended to my doing no more than hold my ground, my old month's advance, with the Tale of Two Cities. The small portions thereof, drive me frantic; but I think the tale must have taken a strong hold. The run upon our monthly parts is surprising, and last month we sold 35,000 back numbers. A note I have had from Carlyle about it has given me especial pleasure.

To GEORGE ELIOT, 10 JULY 1859

MS Princeton University Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Tenth July, 1859

My Dear Madam.

I have received your letter[†2] here this morning, with the greatest interest and pleasure. It is unnecessary for me to add, that I have received it in confidence.

Believe me, when I wrote to you on the subject of the Scenes of Clerical Life,[†3] I did nothing but relieve my mind, very inadequately, of the strong feelings of admiration with which you had filled it. Wherever I went, I said the same things. It was a rare and genuine delight to me, to become acquainted in the spirit with so noble a writer; and it would have been hardly less difficult to me, to repress myself for good and all, than to repress my admiration of such genius.

This opportunity of writing to you, relieves me from a difficulty in which I have felt myself to be placed ever since you sent me Adam Bede,[†4] and for my extrication from which, I have always trusted to the result that has come — for I have always had the vanity to believe that I should one day hear from you as a real individual woman.

I had no means of acknowledging the receipt of that book, but through Blackwood, and knowing at that time what changes I was going to make in my publishing arrangements, I had a great delicacy in suggesting to the Scotch-Publishing-Mind, through any after-splicing of this and that together, that I had been waylaying you! Confident that you could not doubt my enthusiasm after I had read the book, I therefore resolved not to write to George Elliot,[†1] but to wait until I could write to you in person, whoever you might be.

Adam Bede has taken its place among the actual experiences and endurances of my life. Every high quality that was in the former book, is in that, with a World of Power added thereunto. The conception of Hetty's character is so extraordinarily subtle and true, that I laid the book down fifty times, to shut my eyes and think about it. I know nothing so skilful, determined, and uncompromising. The whole country life that the story is set in, is so real, and so droll and genuine, and yet so selected and polished by Art, that I cannot praise it enough to you. And that part of the book which follow's Hetty's trial (and which I have observed to be not as widely understood as the rest), affected me far more than any other, and exalted my sympathy with the writer to its utmost height. You must not suppose that I am writing this to you. I have been saying it over and over again, here and elsewhere, until I feel in a ludicrously apologetic state for repeating myself on this paper.[†2]

I cannot close this note without touching on two heads. Firstly (Blackwood not now being the medium of communication), if you should ever have the freedom and inclination to be a fellow labourer with me, it would yield me a pleasure that I have never known yet and can never know otherwise; and no channel that even you could command, should be so profitable as to yourself. Secondly, I hope you will let me come to see you when we are all in or near London again, and tell you — as a curiosity — my reasons for the faith that was in me that you were a woman, and for the absolute and never-doubting confidence with which I have waved all men away from Adam Bede, and nailed my colors to the Mast, with "Eve" upon them.[†3]

A word of remembrance and regard to Lewes[†4] — and of congratulation — that I know he will feel and understand as I do.

My Dear Madam | Your faithful
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS MARY ANN JERROLD, 14 JULY 1859*

MS Fales Library, New York University.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Fourteenth July, 1859

My Dear Miss Jerrold

After considering the matter, I think I cannot do better than send you a letter I have had from my Solicitor on the painful subject of our correspondence.[†1] Of course I must abide by his advice.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To WILKIE COLLINS, 17 JULY 1859

MS Morgan Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Seventeenth July, 1859

My Dear Wilkie.

My plans are not defined, but I think I shall stay in London Tuesday night. That is no reason, however, for your frying in the Metropolis of the world, the Emporium of Commerce, and free home of the Slave. Therefore, I shall leave word here, that the Basket is to meet you at the Higham Station, by the train which leaves London at 9 on Tuesday Evening.

Ever Affecy.

CD.

To [J. M. EMERSON & CO],[†2] 17 JULY 1859

Mention in John Schroder Spring catalogue (?1953); MS 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill Place, 17 July 59.

Regarding the sale of All the Year Round Monthly Numbers, and referring to the expenses.

To NATHANIEL POWELL,[†1] [18 JULY 1859]*

MS Dickens House. Date: letter endorsed "Enclosed | £2 — | 18 July 1859" (top of page torn off, removing address and date).

My dear Sir

The half year's account for the Front Court gardening is:

		£	s	D
		2..	5..	6
For the Front enclosure		3..	15..	0
Making a Total of	£	6..	0..	6

which, divided by three, leaves us £2..0..0 each to pay.

Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

Nathaniel Powell Esquire

To [THOMAS ADOLPHUS TROLLOPE],[†2] 19 JULY 1859

MS Doheny Memorial Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Nineteenth July 1859

My Dear Sir

I beg to enclose you a cheque (you will observe that as it is payable to your order, you will have to endorse it on the back), for the articles I have had the pleasure of publishing in these pages. Circumstances rendered it necessary to shorten the Revolution paper;[†3] but I hope you will do me the favor to understand that its condensation was an unavoidable necessity, not in the least agreeable to me.

It will give me the greatest pleasure to receive any other contributions from you. They cannot well be too numerous, and they are most acceptable. May I hope that you will bear this assurance in mind?[†4]

I cannot close this short note, without thanking you for the Decade of Italian Women.[†5] I have just now been reading it with attention, in the country, and I have been charmed with it. It strikes me as a very remarkable work, in its combination of knowledge, picturesqueness, plain speaking about that wicked old Babylonian woman of ill fame,[†6] and union of a genuine spirit of romance with real philosophical wisdom. You must excuse my venturing to say this, remembering that my head and heart are at this present writing really full of the book.

Believe me always | Very Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To JAMES T. FIELDS, 20 JULY 1859

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Morning Twentieth July, 1859

My Dear Sir

As I have not yet heard from Mr. Evans of New York, I begin to think it likely (or rather, I begin to think it more likely than I thought it before) that he has not backers good and sufficient, and that his "Mission" will go off. It is possible that I may hear from him before the month is out, and I shall not make any Reading arrangements until it has come to a close — but I do not regard it as being very probable that the said Evans will appear satisfactorily, either in the flesh or the spirit.[†1]

Now, considering that it would be August before I could move in the matter — that it would be indispensably necessary to choose some business connexion and have some business arrangements made in America — and that I am inclined to think it would not be easy to originate and complete all the necessary preparations for beginning in October, I want your kind advice on the following points.
1. — Suppose I postponed the idea for a year.
2. — Suppose I postponed it until after Christimas
3. — Suppose I sent some trusty person out to America now, to negociate with some sound responsible, trustworthy man of business in New York, accustomed to public undertakings of such a nature: my negociator being fully empowered to conclude any arrangements with him that might appear, on consultation, best:—

Have you any idea of any such person to whom you could recommend me?

Or

of any such agent here?
I only want to see my way distinctly, and to have it prepared before me, out in the States. Now, I will make no apology for troubling you, because I thoroughly rely on your interest and kindness.

I am at Gad's Hill, except on Tuesdays, and the greater part of Wednesdays.
With kind regard to Mrs. Fields | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To J. E. WALKER,[†1] 20 JULY 1859

Text from The Critic, 5 Nov 1859.

Thursday, 20th. July 1859.

Dear Sir.

In reply to your letter, I have great pleasure in assuring you that the framed address in Mr. Frith's portrait is the address presented to me by my Birmingham friends, and to which you refer.[†2] It has stood at my elbow in that one place ever since I received it; and please God it will remain at my side as long as I live and work.[†3]

Dear Sir, faithfully yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS ALBANY FONBLANQUE, 23 JULY 1859*

MS Princeton University Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Twenty Third July, 1859

My Dear Mrs. Fonblanque

Behold us here until the winter, and never by any chance going out in town! If it were otherwise, we should have been really and sincerely pleased to come to you. But I am hard at work, — and dragged the "pretty daughters" out of hot rooms, along with myself — and we get up when you go to bed, and live (figuratively) upon roots and water.[†4]

They and their aunt unite with me in kind regard. My love to Fonblanque, and Believe me always Yours faithfully | And (as to you) unluckily
CHARLES DICKENS

To W. H. WILLS, 23 JULY 1859

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Twenty Third July, 1859

My Dear Wills.

First, as to the agreement:[†1] — I have had a letter from Ouvry, in which he said that Hobhouse[†2] did not see the possibility of making you Sub Editor in any other way.[†3] I told him that as he knew what was meant, he had best explain his difficulties to you — which he seems not to have done.

If the other points about your share and salary, are really as you take them to be, they are wrong, of course. But as to the Title, I must be quite positive and immoveable, and place myself at once beyond the possibility of mistake with you. My design is, and always has been (I have purchased the experience on which I formed it, rather dear) that if I choose to abolish the thing it is abolished, and that the Title is mine. Nothing would induce me to depart from this.

In the matter of petitioning the Court,[†4] I quite understood what you had done, but was alarmed by Ouvry's having given them to understand that we had any idea of doing such a thing.

As to Evans[†5] — I have some reason to believe that what he reports in reference to Harper's is quite true.[†6] I do not think it at all discouraging or surprising, but I believe it to be true.

Ever Faithfully
CD.

To SAMUEL ALLIBONE, 26 JULY 1859

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Twenty Sixth July 1859.

Dear Sir

The impression that I duly acknowledged the receipt of the book[†1] you had the kindness to send me, is so very strong upon my mind, that I think a letter I addressed to you must have miscarried. I am pained to find from your letter dated the Twenty Seventh of last month, that — in any case — you do not know how highly I esteem the first volume of your excellent Dictionary, and with what pleasure I received that mark of your remembrance. Pray receive the assurance from me, now, that I consider your labor a very important and valuable one and that I send you many thanks.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

S. Austone[†2] Allibone Esquire

To F. C. BEARD, 29 JULY 1859

MS Dickens House. Address: Frank Beard Esquire | 44 Welbeck Street | Cavendish Square | London | W.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Twenty Ninth July, 1859.

My Dear Frank Beard

I am very little better — really very little. But I have stuck steadily to both branches of the prescription, and will do so until I see you on Tuesday. They should have a fair trial, and they may by that time be more efficacious than I have yet found them. Therefore I think it best, on the whole, not to come to town before my regular day.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Frank Beard Esquire

To E. T. TURNERELLI,[†1] 30 JULY 1859*

MS New York Public Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Saturday Thirtieth July, 1859

Dear Sir

I am exceedingly obliged to you for your Ghost Story,[†2] and beg you to accept my cordial thanks for it and for your welcome note.

It is with great diffidence that I express an opinion on the tale; and I do so, solely because you ask me. While it is very agreeably told, I am bound to admit that I do not find it very new, either in the conception or the execution, and that I think the manner too long for the matter.[†3] I consider it, when I form this judgment, as a story published and addressed to the general public; — not as an amateur fancy for the entertainment of personal friends. In the former case, it is hardly necessary to remark, much more is required of a story than in the latter.

As a point of Art, it appears to me that you pass the culminating incident in association with your Ghost — which is surely the playing on the guitar — too soon[†4] and that it is consequently very difficult to hold the reader's attention to the letters.[†5]

All this is simply the exact truth of my own impressions derived from the reading of the little book. I make no claim whatever to infallibility, but I can vouch for myself as being pretty easily interested.

Dear Sir | Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

E. T. Turnerelli Esquire

August

To THOMAS BEARD, 2 AUGUST 1859

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Place | Maida Hill | W.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Second August 1859

My Dear Beard

All right. You will be expected. But pray let us know your Train, in order that the basket may meet you.

Ever Faithfully
CD.

To PERCY FITZGERALD,[†1] 2 AUGUST 1859

MS Dickens House[aa] and N, III, 114[bb].

[a]OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Second August 1859

My Dear Mr. Fitzgerald.

I am heartily obliged for your letter. I had previously seen it,[†2] and felt very thankful to the writer.

Of the extraordinarily coarse and unreasonable attacks I have seen on myself personally — so easily elicited by an innocently-meant article,[†3] in which I saw no harm when I read it in proof, and the desperate offence of which I do not even now understand — I will only remark that they have amazed me for life.[†4] The English language is really new to me, in such an association.

Many thanks for what you offer, concerning the French Revolution. But I am at present afraid to look at those matters of interest; they might tempt me out of my story; and I have its track before me and am especially anxious to walk in it.[a]

[b]I shall hope to see you at Gad's, not thirty miles from London, and if you could spare a day or two for its fine walks, I and my two latest dogs — a St. Bernard and a Bloodhound — would be charmed with your company as one of ourselves.

Believe me, | Very faithfully yours[b]

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To JOHN HOLLINGSHEAD, 2 AUGUST 1859

Extract in Dodd Mead catalogue No. 72; MS 1 p.; dated Office of AYR, 2 Aug 59; addressed John Hollingshead.

It is highly desirable that no papers be yet collected from All The Year Round. Do not therefore republish any of these if you can help it.[†1]

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 3 AUGUST 1859

Extract and Summary in Sotheby's catalogue, Mar 1979; MS 2 pp.; dated Gad's Hill, 3 Aug 59; addressed Frederic Ouvry.

Making arrangements for a reading tour of America; sending him Mr. Evans's notes for the little conditional agreement on which the latter proposes to try to raise the money that he wants in America, together with his own. We both mean the same thing; explaining that Evans is anxious to get a draft for signatures at once, as he wishes to send it out by Friday night's mail, and asking him, therefore, if he can send for Evans's approval, within a few hours, a memorandum suited to their common purpose, and if he can tell Evans that he himself will execute it on Friday morning; promising that John Thompson from the All the Year Round office will come straight down to him on receiving any instructions and notifying him of Evans's address,[†2] adding that it is possible that Evans may be at Gad's Hill with him on Friday morning, therefore by sending him a duplicate of the draft by Thursday night's post it may save time.[†3]

To F. C. BEARD, 6 AUGUST 1859

MS Dickens House.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Sixth August. 1859

My Dear Frank Beard

I hope that both the new medicines have prevailed, and nearly thrown the enemy. On Tuesday at the usual time I shall expect you at the office, and trust to have a good report to make to you.

Faithfully Yours always

CD.

To JAMES T. FIELDS, 6 AUGUST 1859

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Sixth August, 1859

My Dear Mr. Fields.

I have considered the subject in every way, and have consulted with the few friends to whom I ever refer my doubts, and whose judgment is, in the main, excellent. I have (this is between ourselves) come to the conclusion that I will not go now.

A year hence, I may revive the matter, and your presence in America will then be a great encouragement and assistance to me. I shall see you (at least, I count upon doing so) at my house in town before you turn your face towards the locked-up house; and we will then, reversing Macbeth, "proceed further in this business".[†1]

With kind regard to Mrs. Fields in which my household join, and hoping to make her known to my daughters at Tavistock House, Believe me always (and here I for ever renounce "Mr.", as having any thing whatever to do with our communication, and as being a mere preposterous interloper),

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

James T Fields Esquire

To G. H. LEWES, 6 AUGUST 1859

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Sixth August 1859

My Dear Lewes.

The receipt of your note has given me real pleasure; but I am afraid I cannot have the greater pleasure yet, of responding to it in person, until I return to town for the winter.

I have not been quite well, since we had the great summer heat — a circumstance so very unusual with me, that I have been lost in indignant surprise. Being very busy besides, I only go to town to the office, on the days when my presence there is necessary, and immediately return here and work here. Thus, I do not think that I shall be able to get to Wandsworth, until I go into winter quarters at Tavistock House.

But I will not fail, you may be sure, to propose myself when the opportunity is nearer to my reach, and in the meantime I hope you and George Eliot will hold me in your kind remembrance.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

I have a horrible and unnatural desire upon me to see Liggins:[†1] whom, I am proud to remember, I contemptuously rejected.[†2]

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 9 AUGUST 1859

MS Lytton Papers.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Ninth August 1859

My Dear Bulwer.

I recommend you to be very careful as to Mr. Evans of New York. I have made some private enquiries respecting him in America, and have ascertained that he has no capital whatever, though there seems to be nothing against his character. I have reason to believe that if you made any agreement with him, he would take it to New York, and sell it to the highest bidder there.[†1] He is a kind of *un*accredited agent, and seeks to live upon what such transactions would yield in the way of profit. He has sold "All The Year Round" for six months, in this manner, but does not know that I know it.

Faithfully Yours ever
CD.

To G. H. LEWES, 14 AUGUST 1859*

MS Yale University Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Fourteenth August 1859.

My Dear Lewes.

I recommend you, between ourselves, to be very careful indeed, in that quarter.[†2] I act upon the advice I give.

So far as I know, he[†3] is a kind of *un*accredited agent, who, if he could make any likely bargain here, would take it to New York and sell it to any buyer who would pay enough. I am assured (after enquiry over there) that he has no capital; and I have been informed that when he was last here, he left London in debt.

He brought me excellent letters when he came over to get me to go and read there;[†4] but it was remarkable that none of the writers known to me, had ever seen him. Somebody whom they knew, and I didn't know, had asked them to present "our talented countryman".

Dollars (as you say) are good things. But a Dollar in Wandsworth[†5] is worth fifty in New York. And if I were you, I would have it in Wandsworth according to this rate of exchange, before I wrought one half hour for it. There is a great difference, you know, between the clocks at the two places. Let the stars and stripes come up to your time. Don't you come up to theirs.

With kindest regard to Mrs. Lewes[†6]

Ever Faithfully

CD.

G. H. Lewes Esquire.

To WILKIE COLLINS, 16 AUGUST 1859

MS Dartmouth College, New Hampshire.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Sixteenth August 1859

My Dear Wilkie

I should have written to you this last week from Gad's Hill, but that I was tempted out on the Medway for two summer days (rowed 20 miles at a stretch, on one of them), and so slided back in the Tale of Two Cities, and have since been doggedly at it.

Wills has shewn me your note received this morning. I have not the slightest doubt that The Woman in White is the [†a]name of names, and very title of very titles.[†a†1]

Evans of New York proposed that I should sign a conditional agreement to go to America for 80 readings within a month after the receipt here of £10,000, if the said £10,000 were paid within three months of the agreement's date.[†2] If not, contract to be void. This agreement he meant to sell in America, if he could, and get a profit on. Driven into a corner, I thought of signing it; but Ouvry was so strong against it, that I struck — refused — and knocked the whole thing on the head, so that he is going back empty handed.[†3] I shall read in the country — probably 12 times — in October,[†4] and have a Christmas Series in town.

I want very much to come to Old Broadstairs for a day, but cannot see my way there yet: having to pick up the story, and to blaze away with an eye to October. But I don't give it up; far from it. I really do hope to come for a day, before your time is up. Perhaps a tumble into the sea might — [†5] but I suppose there is no nitrate of Silver[†6] in the Ocean? —

The Medway I have discovered to be so surprisingly beautiful, that next year I hope to start a pretty boat, and give you an aquatic relaxation. Immense enthusiasm and approval have been awakened in Gad's Hill by this new idea — Oak outside — white within — touch of blue here and there — pink striped awning — Dick at the Prow, and Wilkie at the helm — &c &c &c (Mary has been found to have a natural genius for steering).

I have just been reading Tennyson's Idylls of the King.[†1] Most gallant and noble. I doubt if any thing were ever done finer than the last — Guinevere. But they are all wonderfully fine — chivalric, imaginative, passionate, admirable.

Here's a long letter with nothing in it! Send me another when you have any time, and tell me that you find yourself wrestling your way out of the first difficulties of the "noble craft" — beset, unhappily, by so many ignoble men.

Ever affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

To THOMAS C. EVANS, 16 AUGUST 1859

Text from T. C. Evans, Of Many Men, p. 40.

GAD'S HILL PLACE | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Tuesday, August 16th, 1859

Dear Sir,

I return you herewith the proofs of the opening of your story.[†2]

I think the story evinces a great deal of promise and a great deal of power. If I may venture to take the liberty of offering you two pieces of advice, they are these —

1. Never to be afraid of being pathetic when any tenderness naturally arises in you out of the situation, and never to regard it as a kind of weakness that needs to be jested away or otherwise atoned for.

2. Not too pettingly and perseveringly to urge to the utmost any humorous little extravagance. I think the dog should not open his mouth so very wide in barking as to show the whole of his internal mechanism, and the same kind of objection strikes me in reference to the spelling of some of the noises made, both by men and beasts.

These are slight remarks, and they in no way affect my honest opinion that you begin exceedingly well — with force, with interest, and with character.

Faithfully yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 16 AUGUST 1859*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Sixteenth August 1859

Sir.

I have read your Poems, and I regret to assure you that I cannot by any means suggest any way of rendering them remunerative to you. I am truly sensible of the confidence you repose in me, and I must not be unworthy of it. They are, I do not doubt, exceedingly meritorious with a private and personal reference to yourself, and to the circumstances under which they were produced. But, with such reference the Public has nothing to do. And I am bound to tell you that I think they do not address the Public from any 'vantage-ground of their own, which has power in it to separate them from millions of verses that are impatient of obscurity.

If I give you pain, you will, I hope, at least believe that it would be a far easier and more acceptable task to me, to gloss it over with some evasion. But I respond [to][†1] your trustfulness by giving you my sincere opinion; [I][†1] do not in the least suppose it to be infallible.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MESSRS COUTTS & CO., 18 AUGUST 1859

Mention in Heritage Book Shop catalogue, 1987; MS 1 p.; dated Gads Hill Place, 18 Aug 59; addressed Messrs Coutts & Co.

Asking them to arrange for the transfer of some money into an account in Hamburg.[†2]

To CHARLES KENT,[†3] 18 AUGUST 1859*

MS University of North Carolina Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Eighteenth August, 1859

My Dear Mr. Kent.

My being away, has prevented my receiving your letter in due course, and (consequently) my returning an answer to it.

I assure you with the utmost sincerity that I am sincerely gratified by your earnest words, and that I honestly count such things as among the highest rewards, pleasures, and honors, of my life.†1

It was a disappointment to me to see that card to which your welcome note refers, when my daughters and I went home from a short stay at Brighton. We have been here, since the beginning of the summer. But when we come to town for the winter I shall hope to see you at my own home, again, and to assure you personally of my regard and esteem.

My Dear Mr. Kent. | Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Your letter reached me, at last, without The Sun.†2 Do not mind that. I know I shall read it with pleasure, and I can find it at the Athenaeum.

To MRS COWDEN CLARKE,†3 21 AUGUST 1859†

MS Mr J. R. Young.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Twenty First August, 1859

My Dear Mrs. Cowden Clarke.

I cannot tell you how much pleasure I have derived from the receipt of your earnest letter.†4 Do not suppose it possible that such praise can be "less than nothing" to your old Manager.†5 It is more than all else.

Here in my little country-house on the summit of the hill where Falstaff did the robbery, your words have come to me in the most appropriate†6 and delightful manner. When the story can be read all at once, and my meaning can be better seen, I will send it to you (sending it to Dean Street,†7 if you tell me of no better way), and it will be a hearty gratification to think that you and your good husband†1 are reading it together.†2

For you must both take notice, please, that I have a reminder of you always before me. On my desk here stand two green leaves, which I every morning station in their evergreen place at my elbow.†3 The leaves on the Oak Trees outside the window are less constant than these, for they are with me through the Four Seasons.

Lord! To think of the byegone Day when you were stricken mute (was it at Glasgow?) and, being mounted on a tall ladder at a practicable window, stared at Forster, and with a noble constancy refused to utter word!†4 Like the monk among the pictures with Wilkie,†5 I begin to think that the real world, and this the sham that goes out with the lights.†6

God bless you both. Keep me in Madame Novello's[†7] mind if she be near you, and testify one day that I really did send you — because they say that they know I won't — the love of my girls and Georgina.

Ever Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL [24 or 25 AUGUST 1859]

Mention in To Forster, 25 Aug 59. Date: no doubt written same day or day before.

To WILKIE COLLINS, 25 AUGUST 1859

MS Morgan Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Night Twenty Fifth August 1859

My Dear Wilkie

This is written on a most intensely hot night, with rain and lightning, and with shoals of little Tortoises (only harder in substance) dashing in at the window, and trying, in vain to smash themselves on this paper[†1] — that was one. He is now beating his eyelids to powder (I am happy to say) on the obdurate black slab of the Inkstand.

I am not quite well — can't get quite well — have an instinctive feeling that nothing but Sea Air and Sea Water will set me right. I want to come to Broadstairs next Wednesday by the mid-day train, and stay till Monday. As I must work every morning, will you ask the Noble Ballard[†2] (he will contradict you, but never mind that), if he can reserve a comfortable bedroom and quiet writeable-in sitting room, for those days, for his ancient friend and patron. Then you two[†3] can dine with me one day — I can dine with you another[†4] and evenings similarly arranged.[†1] — another tortoise, two earwigs, and a spider. Will you write to me here, after seeing the gallant host of the Albion? Dine with me on the first day [†a](double, of course),[†a] and tell him we dine, or it will break his heart.

What do you mean by not answering my beautiful letter from the office?[†5]

Love from all. | Ever affectionately

CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, 25 AUGUST 1859

Text in MDGH, II, 97-9.[†6]

Gad's Hill, Thursday Night, Aug. 25th, 1859

My dear Forster,

Heartily glad to get your letter this morning.

I cannot easily tell you how much interested I am by what you tell me of our brave and excellent friend the Chief Baron,[†7] in connection with that ruffian.[†8] I followed the case with so much interest, and have followed the miserable knaves and asses who have perverted it since,[†9] with so much indignation, that I have often had more than half a mind to write and thank the upright judge who tried him. I declare to God[†1] that I believe such a service one of the greatest that a man of intellect and courage can render to society. Of course I saw the beast of a prisoner (with my mind's eye) delivering his cut-and-dried speech, and read in every word of it that no one but the murderer could have delivered or conceived it.[†2] Of course I have been driving the girls out of their wits here, by incessantly proclaiming that there needed no medical evidence either way, and that the case was plain without it. Lastly, of course (though a merciful man — because a merciful man I mean), I would hang any Home Secretary (Whig, Tory, Radical, or otherwise) who should step in between that black scoundrel[†3] and the gallows. I can*not* believe — and my belief in all wrong as to public matters is enormous — that such a thing will be done.[†4]

I am reminded of Tennyson, by thinking that King Arthur would have made short work of the amiable [Smethurst][†5] whom the newspapers strangely delight to make a sort of gentleman of. How fine the "Idylls" are! Lord! what a blessed thing it is to read a man who can write! I thought nothing could be grander[†6] than the first poem till I came to the third; but when I had read the last, it seemed to be[†7] absolutely unapproached and unapproachable.[†8]

To come to myself. I have written and begged the "All the Year Round" publisher to send you directly four weeks' proofs beyond the current number, that are in type.[†9] I hope you will like them. Nothing but the interest of the subject, and the pleasure of striving with the difficulty of the forms of treatment, nothing in the mere way of money, I mean, could also[†10] repay the time and trouble of the incessant condensation. But I set myself the little task of making a picturesque story, rising in every chapter with characters true to nature, but whom the story itself should express, more than they should express themselves, by dialogue. I mean, in other words, that I fancied a story of incident might be written, in place of the bestiality[†1] that is written under that pretence, pounding the characters out in its own mortar, and beating their interests out of them.[†2] If you could have read the story all at once, I hope you wouldn't have stopped halfway.

As to coming to your retreat, my dear Forster, think how helpless I am. I am not well yet. I have an instinctive feeling that nothing but the sea will restore me, and I am planning to go and work at Ballard's, at Broadstairs, from next Wednesday to Monday. I generally go to town on Monday afternoon. All Tuesday I am at the office, on Wednesday I come back here, and go to work again. I don't leave off till Monday comes round once more. I am fighting to get my story done by the first week in October. On the 10th of October I am going away to read for a fortnight at Ipswich, Norwich, Oxford, Cambridge, and a few other places. Judge what my spare time is just now!

I am very much surprised and very sorry to find from the enclosed that Elliotson[†3] has been ill. I never heard a word of it.

Georgy sends best love to you and to Mrs. Forster, so do I, so does Plorn, so does Frank. The girls are, for five days, with the Whites at Ramsgate. It is raining, intensely hot, and stormy. Eighteen creatures, like little tortoises, have dashed in at the window and fallen on the paper since I began this paragraph[†4] (that was one!). I am a wretched sort of creature in my way, but it is a way that gets on somehow. And all ways have the same finger-post at the head of them, and at every turning in them.

Ever affectionately

[CD]

To MRS WILLIAM HOWITT,[†5] 28 AUGUST 1859

Extract in N, III, 119.

Gad's Hill Place | August Twenty-Eighth 1859

I am delighted with what you wrote me about the Tale of Two Cities, and I hope that you will be confirmed in that opinion when you can better perceive my design in seeing it all together, instead of reading it in what Carlyle (writing to me of it, with great enthusiasm) calls "Teaspoons."

To THORNTON LEIGH HUNT,[†1] 31 AUGUST 1859†

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON W.C.
Wednesday Thirty First August, 1859

My Dear Mr. Hunt.

I take it as a great kindness in you to have written to me on the sadly interesting subject of your note,[†2] and I am very heartily obliged to you. On coming to town yesterday, I had gone straight to Forster, who had told me of your letter to him and had given me all the particulars it contained. I afterwards found your favor here, when I came home at night.

What you so kindly tell me, touches me at once with sorrow and pride. I had the kindest of letters from him not many weeks ago, and I was looking forward to giving him the book I am now writing, and little thought I should never see his bright face again.

Let me once more cordially assure you that I am truly sensible of your remembrance of me in the midst of your own occupations and bodily uneasiness. I hope I shall never forget, or be undeserving of, his gentle and affectionate consideration.

Believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thornton Hunt Esquire

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 31 AUGUST 1859*

MS New York University Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Thirty First August 1859

My Dear Ouvry.

These two notes are from the two leading young Jerroldians.[†3] I think there is no doubt — or scarcely any — that we shall be able to carry our point. How can they legally neutralize that Deed,[†4] and what shall I demand that they do with it?

I shall be here again, next Tuesday. At your convenience, return me the enclosed. Until Monday, I shall be at the Albion Hotel Broadstairs.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Frederic Ouvry Esquire

September

To THE MISSES MARY AND KATE DICKENS, 2 SEPTEMBER 1859

Text from MDGH, II, 99.

Albion, Broadstairs, Friday, Sept. 2nd, 1859.

My Dearest Mamie and Katie,

I have been "moved" here, and am now (Ballard having added to the hotel a house we lived in three years)[†1] in our old dining-room and sitting-room, and our old drawing-room as a bedroom. My cold is so bad, both in my throat and in my chest, that I can't bathe in the sea; Tom Collin[†2] dissuaded me — thought it "bad" — but I get a heavy shower-bath at Mrs. Crampton's[†3] every morning. The baths are still hers and her husband's, but they have retired and live in "Nuckells"[†4] — are going to give a stained-glass window, value three hundred pounds, to St. Peter's Church.[†5] Tom Collin is of opinion that the Miss Dickenses has growed two fine young women — leastwise, asking pardon, ladies. An evangelical family of most disagreeable girls prowl about here and trip people up with tracts, which they put in the paths with stones upon them to keep them from blowing away. Charles Collins and I having seen a bill yesterday — about a mesmeric young lady who did feats, one of which was set forth in the bill, in a line by itself, as

THE RIGID LEGS,[†6]

— were overpowered with curiosity, and resolved to go. It came off in the Assembly Room, now more exquisitely desolate than words can describe. Eighteen shillings was the "take." Behind a screen among the company, we heard mysterious gurglings of water before the entertainment began, and then a slippery sound which occasioned me to whisper C.C. (who laughed in the most ridiculous manner), "Soap." It proved to be the young lady washing herself. She must have been wonderfully dirty, for she took a world of trouble, and didn't come out clean after all — in a wretched dirty muslin frock, with blue ribbons. She was the alleged mesmeriser, and a boy who distributed bills the alleged mesmerised. It was a most preposterous imposition, but more ludicrous than any poor sight I ever saw. The boy is clearly out of pantomime, and when he pretended to be in the mesmeric state, made the company back by going in among them head over heels, backwards, half-a-dozen times, in a most insupportable way. The pianist had struck; and the manner in which the lecturer implored "some lady" to play a "polker," and the manner in which no lady would; and in which the few ladies who were there with their hats on, and the elastic under their chins, as if it were going to blow, is never to be forgotten. I have been writing all the morning, and am going for a walk to Ramsgate. This is a beast of a letter, but I am not well, and have been addling my head.

Ever, dear Girls, your affectionate Father

[CD]

To WILLIAM HOWITT, 6 SEPTEMBER 1859

Text in N, III, 121 checked from MS Sotheby's, Mar 1979.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Sixth September 1859

My Dear Mr. Howitt.

Coming to town last night, I found your pleasant letter, and became impressed with the thought that I would thank you for it before I went away again.

I don't adopt my contributor's[†1] theory.[†2] He is a well known man, with very curious experiences, and all the stories that he relates in his own person I have heard him tell for years. They are not in the least altered or touched, to suit his present purpose. He has related them strictly on honor. He himself inhabited a very famous Kentish "Haunted House", and it is shut up to this day — or was, the other day.

My own mind is perfectly unprejudiced and impressible on the subject. I do not in the least pretend that such things are not. But I positively object, on most matters, to be thought for, or — if I may use the odd expression — asserted down. And I have not yet met with any Ghost Story that was proved to me, or that had not the noticeable peculiarity in it — that the alteration of some slight circumstance would bring it within the range of common natural probabilities. I have always had a strong interest in the subject, and never knowingly lost an opportunity of pursuing it. But I think the testimony which I cannot cross-examine, sufficiently loose, to justify me in requiring to see and hear the modern witnesses with my own senses, and then to be reasonably sure that they were not suffering under a disordered condition of the nerves or senses, which is known to be a common disease of many phases.

Don't suppose that I am so bold and arrogant as to settle what can and what cannot be, after death. The truth is not so at all. I think the theory of my contributor strong as to the one class of cases in which the image of a person dying, or in very great peril, is strongly suggested to an intimate friend.[†3] I do not otherwise regard it as applicable.

On the other hand, when I think of the amount of misery and injustice that constantly obtains in this world which a word from the dear person in question could set right, I would not believe — could not believe — in your War Office ghost,[†1] without overwhelming evidence.

Faithfully yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To THE REV. HENRY MAYE,[†2] 6 SEPTEMBER 1859*

MS Maggs Bros Ltd.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON W.C.
Tuesday Sixth September 1859

Dear Sir

In reply to your letter, allow me to explain that I have a great desire and a decided intention to publish the Child's History of England in a much cheaper form. But such things can only be honorably done when the booksellers have had a reasonable time for the sale of the original Edition; otherwise, their dealings would be much prejudiced. In this case, the Edition was very large, and very widely disseminated among them, considering the nature of the little book, and when I last enquired, I felt satisfied that the time had not come for the gratification of my wish.[†3]

I hope you will understand that I cordially concur in the views you express to me.

Dear Sir Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

The Rev. Henry S Maye.

To THOMAS ADOLPHUS TROLLOPE, 6 SEPTEMBER 1859*

MS Berg Collection.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Sixth September 1859

My Dear Mr. Trollope.

I hope you already understand without any explanation from me, that the slight alterations I made in your last curious paper[†4] were made with a view to the English Catholics. I perfectly and thoroughly concur with you in your view of the Papacy; but in a country where that religion is not dominant, I think it is necessary to the wide perusal of the article itself, that so much moderation should be displayed.[†1]

Trusting soon to receive something else from your able pen, I beg to enclose a cheque for £10 on our general account.

Your book on Tuscany[†2] I have received this morning. I have given it out to be made the subject of a paper for these pages,[†3] in the hope that it may be of some slight service to the work.

With much regard | Believe me | Very Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

I write in great haste, and beg to be cordially remembered to your good mother.

To LIEUT-COLONEL FOSTER,[†4] 7 SEPTEMBER 1859

Extract in [H. T. Taverner and J. C. Hotten], CD. The Story of His Life, [1870], p. 260.

Wednesday night, 7th September, 1859.

I beg to assure you, in reply to your obliging letter, that you are misinformed, and that I have no intention of visiting America in the ensuing autumn.

To MRS HOWITT, 7 SEPTEMBER 1859

MS Houghton Library, Harvard.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Night Seventh September 1859

My Dear Mrs. Howitt.

I observe in the Memoir,[†5] very little to correct.

1. "Preferring his father's profession", is not quite accurate. My father was originally in the Navy Pay office; and his stations at the outports led to my being born at Portsmouth, and to my having passed my earlier youth at Chatham here. His connexion with the Press was accidental.

2. "In the form of a Weekly Romance, the Novel of Bleak House", is wrong. Bleak House was published in Twenty Monthly Nos. like the rest of my longer books.

3. The last published Christmas Book, The Haunted Man, is omitted in the list.

4. My eldest son Charles has no literary bent or taste. He certainly never published "a translation of Goethe with annotations". When he was studying with a German Doctor at Leipzig after he left Eton, he did, in conjunction with some German gentleman (his master, I think), publish some little theatrical piece, as a translation for English learners[†1] — but it was nothing worth mentioning. He is not here at present and therefore I cannot refer to him, but of course I perfectly know that both the terms and the general sense of this paragraph are a mistake.

Perhaps your writing in the Time of the Tale of Two Cities, may be a reason for qualifying the description of Barnaby Rudge? Do you care to know that I was a great writer at 8 years old or so — was an actor and a speaker from a baby — and worked many childish experiences and many young struggles, into Copperfield? Don't consider yourself bound to say so, because I say so. I merely want to infuse some personal leaven, however little, into this barren note.

Always Believe me, Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To T. H. MAGUIRE,[†2] 7 SEPTEMBER 1859*

Text from facsimile in Goodspeed's Book Shop catalogue, n.d.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Seventh September, 1859

Dear Sir

I am exceedingly sorry that my absence from London and from this place too, has prevented my sooner thanking you for your kind note, and assuring you of the interest with which I should have responded to it by coming to see your picture,[†3] if I had known of your remembrance in time. I hope, however, that I may still see it in the publisher's[†4] hands. The subject is a noble one.

Dear Sir, | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

T. H. Maguire Esquire

To R. S. MANSON,[†1] 7 SEPTEMBER 1859

Extract in Union Art Gallery catalogue, No. 12; MS 1 p.; dated (according to Sotheran catalogue, No. 822) Gad's Hill Place, 7 Sep 59.

I shall be happy to accept the dedication you are so obliging as to offer me. Your delicacy in not putting your name to the sensible and timely little work, I quite appreciate, and I fully concur in its expediency.[†2] With thanks, I remain,

Faithfully Yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

To R. S. Manson, Esquire

To THE REV. MATTHEW GIBSON, 8 SEPTEMBER 1859

MS Robert H. Taylor Collection, Princeton University.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Night, Eighth September 1859

My Dear Sir

I am a little puzzled to know what to do with Frank. I cannot quite understand him, and I take the cause to be, that he does not quite understand himself. Before he went to Germany, he was (as you may remember) all agog to be a Doctor. From Germany, he wrote me that he wished to abandon the idea. Being at home, he has the idea again. I do not think it prudent to conclude that he has any call that way, until he has thought of it more, and is a little older. I have asked him if he would like to come back to you for a time, and he says Yes.

If you would like to have him — by "you", I mean you and Mr. Bewsher, of course — I think he cannot do better than come. You understand him, and he is used to you, and we may perhaps make out among us, without hurrying him, what he is best fitted for. I should particularly wish him not to lose his German, and to acquire Italian. It would not be very difficult for me, I think, to get him into the Foreign Office when he is old enough; and whether we thought this advisable or no, he must be all the better qualified for any station, by a good knowledge of European languages. At present he is at home here, and would probably lose ground soon. I did not think it well to send him back to Germany, for several reasons.

If it would be convenient to you and not inconsistent with your discipline, to give him a little extra liberty, so that he may look about him outside school, a little more, it might do him good. He does not seem to me to have the self reliance and self-helpfulness of the other boys.

I only await your consent to return him to your kind care.

You will be glad to know that Sydney is flourishing, and that Mr. Brackenbury([1][[sic]][†3] wrote to me strongly, in praise of the manner in which Alfred had been trained. He said he thought it decidedly advisable that he should not rest content with his direct appointment, but should study for the competitive examination for Engineers — with a view either to the British or the Indian Army. I gave my consent, of course.

My daughters and their aunt unite with me in kind regard to Mr. Bewsher and yourself.[†1] I am ever My Dear Sir

Yours faithfully and obliged
CHARLES DICKENS

The Rev. M. Gibson

To G. S. HILLARD, 10 SEPTEMBER 1859*

MS Haverford College Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Morning Tenth September 1859

My Dear Hillard

I write hurriedly by the Day Post, to express my regret that Tuesday will not do, as I always have to be in town all that day, and that night. But if Wednesday will answer your purpose, it will answer mine, and you can be in town at any time you please on Thursday. We are not an hour and a half by Railway.

Write me a word on Monday to the Office.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

G.S. Hillard Esquire

To CHANDOS WREN HOSKYNS, 13 SEPTEMBER 1859

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Thirteenth September 1859

My Dear Wren Hoskyns.

Am I not a patient man? Do I become lengthy, when I do break silence? How are you? And have you done any more of the story of the Land,[†2] that I so much desire to have?

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

C. Wren Hoskyns Esquire

To HERBERT INGRAM,[†1] 13 SEPTEMBER 1859

Text from copy in Wills's hand, AYR Letter-book, MS Huntington Library.

Thursday Thirteenth September 1859

Dear Sir,

I understand that a gentleman[†2] whom I commissioned to go round to Weymouth in the Great Eastern last week,[†3] and for whose passage I paid Ten pounds has made some application to you for the return of that sum, under the impression that I was not aware that free passages had been granted to some other publications.

Allow me to observe that I consider the money to have been paid in the regular way of business — always, as I think, the best way in such cases — and that I paid it with perfect satisfaction and that I cannot allow it to be received back by this office.

Your faithful servant | Dear Sir,
CHARLES DICKENS.

Herbert Ingram Esq.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 14 SEPTEMBER 1859

Mention in American Art Association catalogue, Feb 1928; MS 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill Place, 14 Sep 59.

To WILKIE COLLINS, 16 SEPTEMBER 1859

MS Morgan Library

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Night Sixteenth September 1859

My Dear Wilkie

Just a word, to say that I have received yours, and that I look forward to the Reunion on Tuesday — when I hope to have the satisfaction of recounting to you the plot of a Play that has been laid before me for commending advice (by your friend Saunders[†4] the Weak).[†5]

I am charmed with the Butler.[†1] O[†2] why was she stopped! Ask her flinty mother[†3] from me, Why, Why, didn't she let her convert somebody! — And here the question arises — Did she secretly convert the Landlord?[†4]

Ditto to what you say respecting the Great Eastern. I went right up to London Bridge by the boat that day, on purpose that I might pass her. I thought her the ugliest and most un-ship like thing these eyes ever beheld. As to the Times account — clearly a foregone Do.[†5] You should hear Hollingshead on that matter. But the Directing Body, with Mr. Ingram at their head,[†6] are all Jobbers and Bad Ones. And you may depend upon it that if that Ship don't get into trouble on the wild Atlantic — it won't be their fault. I wouldn't go to Sea in her — shiver my ould timbers and rouse me up with a Monkey's-tail[†7] (Man of War metaphor) not to chuck a biscuit into Davy Jones's[†8] weather eye, and see double with my own old toplights.[†9]

Turk has been so good as to produce from his mouth, for the wholesome consternation of the family, 18 feet of worm. When he had brought it up, he seemed to think it might be turned to account in the housekeeping, and was proud. Pony has kicked a shaft off the Cart, and is to be sold. Why dont you buy her; she'd never kick with you.[†10]

Barber's[†11] opinion is, that them fruit trees one and all, is Touchwood and not fit for burning at any gentleman's fire. Also that the stocking of this here garden is worth less than nothing, because you wouldn't have to grub up nothing, and something takes a man to do it at three and six pence a day. Was "left Desponding" by our Reporter.

Love from all | Ever affecy.

CD.

To FRANÇOIS REGNIER,[†1] 17 SEPTEMBER 1859

MS Comédie Française.

Tavistock House
Saturday Seventeenth September | 1859

My Dear Regnier.

I am particularly anxious to present to you a young lady in whom I have a great interest, who comes to Paris with her mother, on a matter in which I hope your advice and experience as an artist may be of service to her.

Miss Fanny Ternan[†2] is a young lady of great accomplishments, who has been studying Music — lately in Italy, under the best Master[†3] — with a view, both to concert-singing and the stage. She belongs to a family of theatrical artists, and is thoroughly acquainted with her art. She has not quite decided whether she shall now come home to England, or remain in Paris[†4] for a time under such a Master as Duprez.[†5] It is in the consideration of this question, and in helping her to know what kind of man Duprez is, and what hopes there may be of his being really serviceable to such a pupil, that I trust you may be able to advise Miss Ternan. And if you can help her, I am sure you will — for my sake in the first instance, and then for her own. I cannot easily tell you how much I shall feel obliged to you.

My daughters and their aunt send their kindest regard to Madame Regnier and yourself. It is so long since I was in Paris or you were in London, that one of us must shortly make a move towards the other. Which shall it be?

Ever Faithfully Yours My Dear Regnier
CHARLES DICKENS

To CHARLES A. SHAW,[†6] 20 SEPTEMBER 1859*

MS Longfellow House, Boston.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Twentieth September 1859.

Dear Sir

In reply to your letter dated three days since, I beg to say that your question "whether any arrangement can be made with me to give a course of my readings in the United States", is one the answer to which entirely depends on the nature of the arrangement proposed for my consideration.

If you desire to submit any definite project and distinct offer to me, you have but to address it to my friend Mr. Arthur Smith who is the business-manager of my readings, and to whom I confide the arrangement of all their details. He is in full possession of my views, and will be happy to communicate with you

In his absence from London until the beginning of next month, I answer your favor myself. His readiest address in London at present, is Tavistock House Tavistock Square. Any letter written to him there, is certain to be forwarded in due course.

I have the honor to remain
Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles A Shaw Esquire

To THE REV. MATTHEW GIBSON, 23 SEPTEMBER 1859

MS Robert H. Taylor Collection, Princeton University.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Twenty Third September 1859

My Dear Sir

On Frank's return from Germany, we found him very deaf. The enclosed prescriptions were written for him by Mr. Toynbee,[†1] and greatly improved his condition. Will you be so kind as to give such directions as will ensure their being made up for him again, if he should need them?

I think it as well to mention that we observe him to have a custom of walking in his sleep sometimes.

With kind regard to Mr. Bewsher, I am always My Dear Sir,

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Rev. M. Gibson.

To THOMAS ADOLPHUS TROLLOPE, 27 SEPTEMBER 1859*

MS Goodspeed's Book Shop.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Tuesday Twenty Seventh September 1859

My Dear Mr. Trollope.

Your reference to a rejected paper of yours, makes me anxious to explain to you that I was not in London when it was returned to you, and that I never saw it. I do not in the least doubt the judgment of Mr. Wills, who is entirely in my confidence, and who is thoroughly acquainted with the requirements of the Journal. What I hope you will do me the favor to receive from me, as a point to which I attach some importance, is, that an accidental circumstance prevented my knowing that Mr. Wills had, with the best of all possible intentions relieved me from the pleasure of communicating with you, — until the deed was done. I have spoken to Mr. Wills about it this morning, and we both understand that it was a mistake.

The notice of your book,[†1] I have had the satisfaction of placing, to day, in the No. for the week after next.[†2]

Believe me always | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To FRANKLYN CLARKSON,[†3] 28 SEPTEMBER 1859

Mention in N, III, 124.

To SIR HENRY ELLIS,[†4] 28 SEPTEMBER 1859

Mention in N, III, 124.

October

To MRS EUPHEMIA MACKAY SMITH,[†5] 1 OCTOBER 1859

Mention in Goodspeed's catalogue No. 169; MS (3rd person) 1 p.; dated 1 Oct 59; addressed Mrs Euphemia Mackay Smith.

Regretting that he cannot address the Edinburgh Philosophical Institution.[†6]

To SIR HENRY ELLIS, 4 OCTOBER 1859

Mention in N, III, 124.

To CHANDOS WREN HOSKYNS, 4 OCTOBER 1859

MS Private (transcribed before destruction in Prestwick air-crash, Dec 1954).

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Tuesday Fourth October 1859

My Dear Wren Hoskyns.

Though there is, as Carlyle says, great virtue in the Silences, I don't judge of you by yours, but by your utterances. And they are so good, that I wait and hope for more.

It would give me real pleasure if I could come and see you. But I have been working very hard down at Gad's Hill, and have gone nowhere. My book finished, I am now away to read for Three Weeks. That finished, I shall have Christmas matters in connexion with "All The Year Round" to see to. That finished, (and a book sent you which I hope to send you in November),[†1] I shall have my own Christmas and that of my girls and boys, to look after. That finished — well! There may be a glimpse of Land beyond.[†2]

Don't come to London after the middle of November without letting me know. Don't forget the long evenings at home, and the short pages waiting on you. And don't forget

Yours very faithfully always
CHARLES DICKENS

Those very pretty lines are in the No. published Tomorrow.[†3] [†a]Has the writer any representatives abroad to [be paid] for them?[†a]

To WILKIE COLLINS, 6 OCTOBER 1859

MS Morgan Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Sixth October 1859

My Dear Wilkie

I do not positively say that the point you put, might not have been done in your manner; but I have a very strong conviction that it would have been overdone in that manner — too elaborately trapped, baited, and prepared — in the main, anticipated and its interest wasted. This is quite apart from the peculiarity of the Doctor's[†4] character, as affected by his imprisonment; which of itself would — to my way of thinking — render it quite out of the question to put the reader inside of him before the proper time, in respect of matters that were dim to himself through being, in a diseased way, morbidly shunned by him. I think the business of Art is to lay all that ground carefully, but with the care that conceals itself — to shew, by a backward light, what everything has been working to — but only to SUGGEST,[†1] until the fulfilment comes. These are the ways of Providence — of which ways, all Art is but a little imitation.

"Could it have been done at all, in the way I suggest, to advantage?" is your question. I don't see the way, and I never have seen the way, is my answer. I cannot imagine it that way, without imagining the reader wearied, and the expectation wire-drawn.[†2]

I am very glad you like it so much. It has greatly moved and excited me in the doing, and Heaven knows I have done my best and have believed in it.

Ever affecy.

CD.

To ALFRED DICKENS,[†3] 6 OCTOBER 1859

Mention in Anderson catalogue No. 4217, Jan 1936; MS 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill Place, 6 Oct 59; addressed Alfred Dickens.

Asking his advice about completing the tunnel from Gad's Hill Place to the shrubbery across the road.[†4]

To ARTHUR HILL,[†5] 8 OCTOBER 1859

Text from N, III, 125.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Saturday, Eighth October, 1859

My Dear Sir,

By some unaccountable oversight I have never thanked you for your kind note of last July and the Brucian.[†6] Pray excuse me, I was not well when I received your favour, but I immediately went through the book, and was greatly interested and pleased with it. How it has happened that I have never told you so I cannot imagine. The book has been on my table here ever since, and it never looked at me reproachfully until this very morning.

Do me the kindness to assure the young friend who remembers me in the volume so much to my true gratification, that I have not in the least slighted his tribute.[†1] I have felt it warmly, and the possibility of his having thought otherwise of me in these three months gives me more uneasiness than I can well express to you.

I beg to send him my kind regard. And in the hope that he, and all the young people in whom you have a near and dear interest, will long bear the best testimony that can be rendered to the merits of your wholesome system.[†2]

I am always | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 8 OCTOBER 1859

Summary in Puttick & Simpson catalogue, July 1878; MS 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill, 8 Oct 59.

Concerning elections to the Royal Dramatic College.[†3]

To W. H. WILLS, 8-9 OCTOBER 1859*

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Eighth October 1859

My Dear Wills. I enclosed you the other day, a letter from a man referring to an article he meant to send respecting the Great Eastern.[†4] Here it is, with another letter. I know nothing about him, except that he seems to think I have nothing else to do than attend to him.

I also send the dismal effusion of Charles Whiting.[†5]

This note I will keep by me until I leave here tomorrow, in case I should find any thing to add.

Office, Monday Ninth October

I have not yet seen Arthur Smith, and have no complete list of my addresses; but I will write to you — probably tonight — and give you such of them as I may then know. To night I am at Ipswich;[†1] tomorrow and Wednesday at Norwich.[†2]

I think we had best make next Saturday our office day, and make up a No. then.

In case Frederick Chapman should come home before, will you let him know that I particularly wish to see him in reference to the publication of the completed story — which must be announced in the Magazines, at the end of this month. In case he should not come home before, will you take care that he sees you on the point as soon as he returns — I will note down with you what I want. His way of doing business is so scrambling, that it may be well to write him a line?

Ever Faithfully
CD.

To W. H. WILLS, [11 OCTOBER 1859]

Mention in To Wills, 16 Oct. Date: 11 Oct, according to CD.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 12 OCTOBER 1859

MS Dickens House. Address: Miss Hogarth | Gad's Hill Place | Higham | by Rochester.

Norwich (Royal Hotel)
Wednesday Evening Twelfth October | 1859

My Dearest Georgy

Only a word. Delighted to get your letter just now. Composing myself for the Reading. Immense success last night; everything full of promise for tonight.[†3]

No change in our plans.

Best love to the dear girls and the Noble Plorn.

Ever Affectionately
CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [14 OCTOBER 1859]

Extract in F, VIII, iv, 667*n*. Date: 14 Oct 59 according to Forster.

I am a little tired; but as little, I suspect, as any man could be with the work of the last four days, and perhaps the change of work was better than subsiding into rest and rust. The Norwich people were a noble audience. There, and at Ipswich and Bury,[†1] we had the demonstrativeness of the great working-towns, and a much finer perception.

To GEORGE BEADNELL,[†2] 15 OCTOBER 1859

Text in N, III, 126 checked from MS Myers & Co., Oct 1952.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Saturday Fifteenth October, 1859

My Dear Sir

Coming home from reading in the country, I find your note. The enclosure in it not addressed to me, allow me to return.

I have conveyed to a large publishing house in Paris, the right of translating all my books;[†3] it is therefore quite out of my power to afford any facilities to Mdlle Blanché.[†4] I hope Miss Lloyd[†5] will kindly undertake to explain why I cannot help the young lady.

It is a great pleasure to me to see your handwriting. I beg to send my kind regard to Mrs. Lloyd[†6] and her daughters, and to assure you that I am heartily well, and never any the worse for being busy.

— And that I am always, with an undying remembrance of old days,

Faithfully yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To RICHARD MONCKTON MILNES, 15 OCTOBER 1859*

MS Trinity College, Cambridge.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Fifteenth October 1859.

My Dear Mr Milnes

I am only to day in the receipt of your kind note. Many thanks for it.

But my daughters will not be with me, and I myself shall be obliged to leave Bradford[†1] early next morning. Therefore I cannot accept the pleasure you offer me.[†2]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard M Milnes Esquire.

To FRANÇOIS REGNIER, 15 OCTOBER 1859†

MS Comédie Française.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Fifteenth October, 1859

My Dear Regnier

[†a]I must thank you for your kind interest in, and attention to, Miss Fanny Ternan.[†3] You may rely upon her doing credit to any service you render her. She is uncommonly clever and accomplished, and she is as good and diligent as she is spirituelle. I feel almost certain that she will become distinguished.[†a]

You will receive by Railway parcel, the Proof-Sheets of a story of mine that has been for some time in progress in my weekly Journal, and that will be published in a complete Volume about the middle of November. Nobody but Forster has yet seen the latter portions of it, or will see them until they are published. I want you to read it for two reasons. Firstly: because I hope it is the best story I have written.

Secondly, because it treats of a very memorable time in France; and I should very much like to know what you think of its being dramatized for a French Theatre. If you should think it likely to be done, I should be glad to take some steps towards having it well done.[†4] The Story is an extraordinary success here, and I think the end of it is certain to make a still greater sensation.

Don't trouble yourself to write to me, mon ami, until you shall have had time to read the Proofs. Remember, they are Proofs, and Private; the latter chapters will not be before the public for five or six weeks to come.

With kind regard to Madame Regnier, in which my daughters and their Aunt unite, Believe me ever

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Parcel shall be sent from London on Tuesday next. The Story (I dare say you have not seen any of it yet), is called "A Tale of Two Cities".

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 15 OCTOBER 1859*

MS (pro forma letter)[†1] Mrs Caroline M. Duncan-Jones.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Oct 15,[†2] 1859

Mr. Charles Dickens begs to thank the writer of the paper entitled

The Courtship & Matrimony &c

for having done him the favor to offer it as a contribution to these pages. He much regrets, however, that it is not suited to the requirements of All the Year Round.

The Manuscript will be returned under cover, if applied for as above.

To FRANK STONE, 16 OCTOBER 1859*

MS Benoliel Collection.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Sunday Sixteenth October 1859

My Dear Stone.

Arthur Smith has made some grotesque mistake in giving me "The Peacock"[†3] as the sign of the Hotel at Cambridge. There is no such house; but there are two best Hotels, of which one is The Lion,[†4] and we are certain to be at that house or the other. We go down at 10 minutes to 11 tomorrow morning, from the Bishopsgate Street Station.

Ever affecy.

CD.

To CHARLES COLLINS, 16 OCTOBER 1859

Mention in N, III, 128.

To MRS HULKES,[†1] 16 OCTOBER 1859

Composite text from W. R. Hughes, A Week's Tramp in Dickens-Land, 1891, p. 204, where misdated 1857, and Parke-Bernet catalogue, May 1945. Date: correct date given in catalogue, with some better readings.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday evening, Sixteenth October 1859

My Dear Mrs. Hulkes.

My daughter has shewn me your note, and it has inspired[†2] me with the horrible determination to become a new kind of Blue Beard, and lay an awful injunction of secrecy on you for five mortal weeks.

Here is the remainder of the Tale of Two Cities. Not half a dozen of my oldest and most trusty literary friends have seen it. It is a real pleasure to me to entrust you with the catastrophe, and to ask you to keep a grim and inflexible silence on the subject until it is published. When you have read the proofs, will you kindly return them to me?

With my regard to Mr. Hulkes,

Believe me always, | Faithfully yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Hulkes.

To CHARLES LEVER,[†3] 16 OCTOBER 1859

MS Widener Collection, Harvard.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Evening Sixteenth October, 1859

My Dear Lever.

A thousand thanks for your hearty note.

The chronic malady that is to succeed mine,[†4] being already under medical treatment, I reply — a paroxysm — in one, two, three, or four parts — any thing in the way of fiction — any thing in the way of actual observation and the reflection suggested by it — any thing about Italy[†5] — any thing grave or gay about any thing in the wide world, that has filtered through the mind of a man who sees the world with bright and keen eyes such as yours. "Say what will suit you", say you. "That is what will suit me", say I.[†6]

Are you to wish me joy? Well! — My younger daughter may be going the way of daughters a year hence; but not sooner, I think.[†7]

I am going away to read at Oxford and Cambridge, but shall be in London again in ten days. I want to send you a book, about the middle of November;[†1] when you next write, will you tell me how I had best send it.

Believe me always | Cordially Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Lever Esquire

To W. H. WILLS, 16 OCTOBER 1859

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Evening Sixteenth October 1859

My Dear Wills.

I found the enclosed letter marked A[†2] with a lot of printed documents, and six pints of eau de Cologne, and two small boxes of Eau de Cologne, at Tavistock House last night. Will you return the article, saying that it is not admissible, and that the Eau de Cologne awaits his directions.

In reference next to the enclosed marked B.[†2]

I have a letter from Poole[†3] reminding me that I have not remitted his quarter's pension,[†4] and that he is aground for the means of going on. Will you kindly — at once — hand the order to Coutts's for its remittance to him by Monday night's post.

My Readings List is on the other side.

The missing letter to you, I posted at the Ipswich chief Post Office, last Tuesday morning about 11.

Will you have the enclosed for Lever, Posted and prepaid.

Will you remind Whitings that I have not yet seen a Proof of my own No. 6.

Ever Faithfully
CD.

Date Place Address.

Monday	17th. Octr.	Cambridge	Post Office
Tuesday	18th. "	Cambridge	Post Office
Wednesday	19th. "	Peterborough	Railway Hotel
Thursday	20th. "	Bradford	George Hotel
Friday	21st. "	Nottingham	George Hotel
Saturday	22nd. "	Nottingham	George Hotel
Sunday	23rd. "	London	Office
Monday	24th. "	Oxford	Star Hotel
Tuesday	25th. "	Oxford	Star Hotel
Wednesday	26th. "	Birmingham	Hen and Chickens
Thursday	27th. "	Cheltenham	Messrs. Hale & Son

Piano Forte Warehouse.[†5]

To EDWARD CHAPMAN, 16 OCTOBER 1859*

MS Robert H. Taylor Collection, Princeton University.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Night, Sixteenth October, 1859

My Dear Mr. Chapman

I believe Mr. Wills has already arranged with you respecting the publication of my Tale of Two Cities. But as I am very anxious that there should be no mistake or delay about it, I trouble you with this note, even at the risk of repeating what he has already said.

I wish the completed book to be published, either on Saturday the 19th. or Monday the 21st. of November. Of course it should be announced in all the Magazines &c at the end of the month.[†1] Please advertize it in other respects, according to your discretion and custom.

The suggestion for the frontispiece[†2] and title,[†3] you shall have from me to send to Mr. Browne,[†4] on Monday the 24th. of this month. The Dedication[†5] and Preface[†6] I will send straight to the Printer's at about the same time.

I have not yet seen any sketches from Mr. Browne for No. 6.[†7] Will you see to this, without loss of time.[†8] I am now going away to read at a few places, but Mr. Wills always knows where to address me. The plates of[†9] these unseen sketches will want the Lettering from me.

Will you also be so kind as to arrange with Mr. Browne for the final plates for the book,[†10] so that he may not delay it? The publication of the two last Nos. in one will (of course) take place at the end of November, as usual.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Edward Chapman Esquire

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, [17 OCTOBER 1859]

Extract in Foyle catalogue, No. 59; MS 1 p. Date: He left to read in Cambridge on 17 Oct 59.

I am going to Cambridge this morning and shall not be in London for a fortnight to come.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 17 OCTOBER 1859

MS Dickens House. Address: Miss Hogarth | Gad's Hill Place | Higham | Rochester.

Eagle Hotel, Cambridge
Monday Seventeenth October 1859

My Dearest Georgy.

I write (agreeably to my promise) with all possible dispatch, to let you know the Oxford Train. We start, by the Great Western Railway at 2 o'Clock on Monday.

Arthur is at the Agent's[†1] and I don't know how we stand here as to the Let. Pretty tolerably, I suppose,[†2] but I don't very much like the look of the place. It seems what Plorn would call "ortily" dull.

With loves to the dear girls and to the Noble P.

Ever affecy.
CD.

To EDMUND YATES, 18 OCTOBER 1859

MS Robert H. Taylor Collection, Princeton University.

Cambridge
Tuesday Eighteenth October 1859.

My Dear Edmund.

The Verses[†3] safely received this morning. I will read them in no time. I acknowledge their receipt at once, but am obliged to go out with Arthur.

I think the best thing to say to the writer of the enclosed will be that under any other circumstances, you would have introduced him with pleasure, and you know that it would have been much to my satisfaction. But that as you know from myself beforehand, that when I am anywhere on such visits I see no one but devote my whole time to what I have to do and to the quiet it makes needful — and as you remember to have heard me say that my hurry and my short time in Oxford obliged me to refuse the offer of the Vice Chancellor's[†4] house — you think it best not to go through the form.

Boys enough, indeed! Stop where you are.[†5] You will — of course.

I have never had the courage to write to our friend at Hampstead.[†1] Imagine that! I have been rolling over the intention of writing to him, just as his dog with the bell tumbled over the orange.

Peter[†2] is amazing. The idea of his being in that chair![†3] — O it is inconceivable.

Arthur sends kind regard.

Ever Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

To FRANK STONE, 19 OCTOBER 1859

Text from MDGH, II, 103.

Peterborough, Wednesday Evening, Oct. 19th, 1859.

My Dear Stone,

We had a splendid rush last night[†4] — exactly as we supposed, with the pressure on the two shillings, of whom we turned a crowd away. They were a far finer audience than on the previous night; I think the finest I have ever read to. They took every word of the "Dombey" in quite an amazing manner, and after the child's death, paused a little, and then set up a shout that it did one good to hear. Mrs. Gamp then set in with a roar, which lasted until I had done. I think everybody for the time forgot everything but the matter in hand. It was as fine an instance of thorough absorption in a fiction as any of us are likely to see ever again.

——[†5] (in an exquisite red mantle), accompanied by her sister (in another exquisite red mantle) and by the deaf lady (who leaned a black head-dress, exactly like an old-fashioned tea-urn without the top, against the wall), was charming. HE[†6] couldn't get at her on account of the pressure. HE tried to peep at her from the side door, but she (ha, ha, ha!) was unconscious of his presence. I read to her, and goaded him to madness. He is just sane enough to send his kindest regards.

This is a place which — except the cathedral, with the loveliest front I ever saw — is like the back door to some other place. It is, I should hope, the deadest and most utterly inert little town in the British dominions. The magnates have taken places, and the bookseller is of opinion that "such is the determination to do honour to Mr. Dickens, that the doors must be opened half an hour before the appointed time."[†1] You will picture to yourself Arthur's quiet indignation at this, and the manner in which he remarked to me at dinner, "that he turned away twice Peterborough last night."

A very pretty room — though a Corn Exchange — and a room we should have been glad of at Cambridge, as it is large, bright, and cheerful, and wonderfully well lighted.

The difficulty of getting to Bradford from here to-morrow, at any time convenient to us, turned out to be so great, that we are all going in for Leeds (only three-quarters of an hour from Bradford) to-night after the reading, at a quarter-past eleven. We are due at Leeds a quarter before three.

So no more at present from,

Yours affectionately
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 21 OCTOBER 1859†

MS Fitzwilliam Museum, Cambridge. Address: Miss Hogarth | Gad's Hill Place | Higham | by | Rochester.

Nottingham
Friday Twenty First October 1859[†2]

My Dearest Georgy. As I received your letters here, all together, on arriving at a little before 4 this afternoon, I think it best to write you a line, and not to write to Katie until Oxford. Cambridge beyond everything. Nothing could be finer or better.[†3] Bradford very good indeed.[†4] A fine room here tonight, but tomorrow morning's idea (Arthur's) seeming all wrong, I have arranged that it shall not come off.[†5] I shall therefore be in town tomorrow afternoon, but it will make no difference in my arrangements. I think we had best have the new cloth. Love to the dear girls and the Noble Plorn. I write in great haste, as we are pressed for time here.

Ever affecy.
CD.

To MRS GASKELL, 23 OCTOBER 1859*

MS Berg Collection.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Sunday Twenty Third October, 1859

My Dear Mrs. Gaskell.

Coming to town last night from Yorkshire, I found your letter awaiting me.

I sent what relief I reasonably could — some two or three Guineas — to this case, some time ago. I first enquired of the clergyman of the place whether the statement was true, and found the illness to be in no wise exaggerated. What I observe to be disingenuous in this letter is, that five people's names are mentioned as though they were the only persons who had assisted the writer. This I know to be untrue. I have been referred to more than once by recipients of similar letters, either from the lady[†1] or her husband; and I know them to have been written to a large number of persons.

The application to the Literary Fund was made (I believe) on my suggestion. I do not know what sum the Fund granted, but I apprehend the unfortunate gentleman's literary claim (necessarily a main consideration there) to be a very slight one. I am much mistaken if he ever followed Literature as a profession; or could, if he were well tomorrow.

If the Guild to which I belong[†2] were at liberty to spend a shilling, I doubt therefore if it would be applicable to such a case; but for the next two years or so, it is positively forbidden by its own Act of Parliament to do anything but constantly invest the interest on its capital.[†3] There is no other public body whatever — within my knowledge — specially addressed to such a calamity.

I cannot write these hurried words to you without telling you that Lois the Witch[†4] has moved me to the highest admiration.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Gaskell.

To JOHN FORSTER, 24 OCTOBER 1859

MS Dickens House.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON W.C.
Monday Twenty Fourth October 1859

My Dear Forster.

Delighted to hear that you are coming to Gad's Hill. The longer you can stay, the better I — and all of us — will be pleased.

I would write straight to Thornton Hunt, but that I do not remember his address; and, even if I did, as he writes to you, I might be uncertain whether I too ought not to write through you. Will you let him know as soon as possible that I am presently going away to Oxford and can not be in town (as I read every night) before Friday, but that I will hold myself engaged to him on that day, if it will suit his convenience, at the All The Year Round office at 4 O'Clock?

Will you also let him know, from me, that I hold my course to be plain in this matter. What I said to his poor father in your presence,[†1] I will say in any way Thornton Hunt likes; — that there are many remembrances of Hunt in little traits of manner and expression, in that character and especially in all the pleasantest parts of it, but that is all.[†2]

You know how little I see of such things[†3] and will readily understand that this is the first I have ever heard of the paragraph in the Illustrated London News.[†4] As to the London Correspondent of the Bath paper,[†5] he really seems to me too absurd to be thought of. For instance, the "new book" of mine he has seen extracts from, "to be published in America", is a story of a few pages written for a New York Journal;[†6] and the conclusion to which I have come on the subject of physiognomy (I have not the least doubt, by the way, that I could read Donkey in his), and which the Idiot sets out as if I had delivered it in a speech, is the remark of a Life-Office Actuary who relates the story![†7]

However, I must not judge of the fitness or unfitness of noticing such contemptible trash. What I told Hunt, and what I promised Hunt, when you were by, to tell to anybody, I will not reserve, qualify, or in any way with-hold. I am quite sure Thornton Hunt will be manful and open with me, and he may rely on my being so with him.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To E. B. GREGORY,[†1] 24 OCTOBER 1859

Text from Daily Chronicle, 31 July 1908.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON, W.C.
Monday, twenty-fourth October, 1859.

Dear Sir,

As I have to be at Oxford to morrow I cannot possibly have the pleasure of receiving you, and the gentleman associated with you, at the time you propose.

If you will do me the favour to address a note to me at Gad's Hill on Saturday, making me acquainted with the nature of the business on which you wish to see me, I will promptly reply to it.

Referring to a request made to me from Gravesend some time ago,[†2] I think it not improbable that you may contemplate asking me to read there. Should this be so, I am bound to inform you at once that it is wholly out of the question, and that my compliance is not in any reason possible. I receive so many similar requests that even to answer them, however briefly, is often, I assure you, a serious interference with the pursuits of my life.

Faithfully yours
CHARLES DICKENS

E. Gregory, Esquire.

To THE REV. JOSEPH HINDLE,[†3] [26] OCTOBER 1859*

MS (Copy) Mrs E. Lea.[†4] Date: CD was in Birmingham on Wed, 26 Oct 59, but not on the 6th; the copyist appears to have been unable to transcribe "twenty" but left a space between "Wednesday" and "Sixth".

Birmingham | Wednesday [Twenty] Sixth October 1859

My Dear Sir

I have been moving about from place to place for the last Week or so, and have missed a note from home, and have so come to delay the Writing of this note to you — not I hope until it is too late.

Can you give us the pleasure of your Company at dinner at Gads Hill next Saturday at 7.O'clock?

It is my younger daughter's birthday.

Believe me | My dear Sir
Always Faithfully yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Rev. Joseph Hindle

To W. H. WILLS, 26 OCTOBER 1859

MS Huntington Library.

Hen and Chickens, Birmingham
Wednesday Twenty Sixth October 1859.

My Dear Wills.

The wonderful thing in your letter is, that you don't say whether Evans[†1] has paid any money![†2] I take it for granted that he has paid none, and will pay none, but you don't say so. The rest of the prospects and projects all right.

Great doings at Oxford. Princes of Wales, and what not.[†3] Last night there, was as bad a night as ever you saw, but the people really came up nobly. It has rained here, ever since last Wednesday — is raining now — is all mud and water — and I do not think it possible that we can have a good room tonight.[†4]

I shall come up from Cheltenham in the night tomorrow,[†4] and shall be at the office about 1 or 2. Of course you won't come out, or think of coming out, unless and until you are quite well.

Ever Faithfully
CD.

To JOHN HOLLINGSHEAD, 28 OCTOBER 1859†

Extract in Dodd Mead catalogue No. 72; MS 2 pp.; dated Office of AYR, 28 Oct 59; addressed John Hollingshead.

Many thanks for your book, and for the inscription in it,[†5] which gratifies me very much. It is the best got-up little volume I have seen for a long, long time.[†6] You already know what I think of its contents.

To W. H. WILLS, 28 OCTOBER 1859†

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Twenty Eighth October 1859

My Dear Wills

I have read the letter to Evans (which is as plain as a pike staff),[†1] and have duly given it out to Johnson[†2] to be posted with the account. [†a]I don't think we shall ever get any money from that noble gentleman.[†a]

We felt the bad weather at Birmingham; though the people did, really, under the circumstances, "tumble up" extremely well.[†3] At Cheltenham yesterday we had a splendid day and a great go.[†4] My share after Arthur's percentage and all the large expences, was some £70 for the day's work. We came up by the Mail at night — got to town at 5 — and even I[†5] feel a little tired (though really not much), today.

Oxford came out brilliantly. Princes of Wales and the like, attended.

I go down to Gad's Hill early tomorrow morning, as it is Katie's birthday. I am not quite sure whether I may or may not propose to defer our making-up till Wednesday. It depends on how long the Forsters stay with us. I will write you again from Gad's Hill, as soon as I know.

Your cold could scarcely be expected to be better, under such trying circumstances of weather. Write me a line tomorrow night to Gad's Hill, and tell me how you are.

I didn't tell Arthur the Printing joke, because I thought it better to keep the name quite close,

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To THOMAS CARLYLE, 30 OCTOBER 1859

MS National Library of Scotland.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Thirtieth October, 1859

My Dear Carlyle.

Forster is here, and has given me your message concerning the Tale of Two Cities — which has heartily delighted me. It will be published some three weeks hence in one dose, after having occasioned me the utmost misery by being presented in the "tea-spoon-full" form.[†1] Nevertheless I should like you to read what remains of it, before the Many-Headed does, and I therefore take heart to overwhelm you with the enclosed proofs. They are not long, and don't need to be returned. They go on to the end from the current No. and they include the current No. in case you should not have seen it.

I have said in the Preface to the complete Tale[†2] (said Preface is not here, because I have no Proof of it), [†a]"that all the references to the condition of the French people, however slight, are from trustworthy authorities;[†a] and that it has been one of my hopes to add something to the popular and picturesque means of understanding that terrible time, though no one can hope to add anything to the philosophy of Mr. Carlyle's wonderful book."

With love from my daughters and Georgy to Mrs. Carlyle and you, I am ever my Dear Carlyle
Your affectionate
CHARLES DICKENS

To W. H. WILLS, 30 OCTOBER 1859

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Thirtieth October, 1859

My Dear Wills.

I say Decidedly No to the Stephenson[†3] paper — solely on the ground, as to Sidney,[†4] that I consider it will be behind the time and after the Fair[†5] — as between you and me, on the additional ground that the thing has already been done in Once a Week[†1] (wretchedly) and quoted in the Times[†2] — further, that I really do honestly think enough has been said and sung on the subject. Pay well for the article nevertheless. Certainly, don't use it.

I am glad to hear such good accounts of the cough. I will come up on Wednesday by the Train that arrives at London Bridge at 10 minutes past 10. If I don't find you at the Office, or coming to the office, I will come on to your house. It makes not the least difference to me where we make up the No.

All here, including the Forsters and Wilkie, send kindest regard to Mrs. Wills and you.

Ever Faithfully
CD.

To WILLIAM HOWITT, 31 OCTOBER 1859

Text from N, III, 132.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Monday, Thirty-First October, 1859.

My Dear Mr. Howitt,

I have been away and unable to acknowledge the receipt of your last note. Let me do so now.

I will only add on the general subject that if you know of any haunted house whatsoever within the limits of the United Kingdom where nobody can live, eat, drink, sit, stand, lie or sleep, without spirit-molestation, I believe I can produce a gentleman who will readily try its effect in his own person.[†3]

Faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To GEORGE MOORE,[†4] 31 OCTOBER 1859

MS Yale University Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Thirty First October 1859.

My Dear Mr. Moore.

My public engagements are so numerous, and I am so much occupied, that I believe nothing less than your note would have induced me to undertake a chairmanship.[†1] But I have a great respect for you, and I know what a good and well ordered Society that is in whose behalf you exert yourself. So I am at its (and your) disposal for the next dinner, and have only to stipulate that it must not take place on the 23rd. 24th. or 26th. of December, or on the 1st. of January.[†2]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

George Moore Esquire

To W. J. PARSONS,[†3] 31 OCTOBER 1859

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Thirty First October, 1859

Sir.

I am bound to assure you, in reply to your letter, that it is quite out of my power conscientiously to offer you any advice in reference to the young lady in whom you are so kindly interested. I could as soon read her destiny in the palm of her hand, as tell you whether there is hope for her in Literature, on no stronger grounds of judgment than some five and forty lines of blank verse. But I must add as to them that although they are a very meritorious composition for a young lady of fifteen, I see, every day of my life, many such pieces — no better, and no worse — which are within the ability of many people, and which do not suggest to me that the writers have any special vocation in this difficult and rugged road.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. J. Parsons Esquire

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 31 OCTOBER 1859

Text from Memphis Morning Bulletin, 2 Dec 59.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Monday, October 31, 1859

My Dear Sir:

I am exceedingly obliged to you for your letter, and have read it with unusual pleasure and interest.[†4]

But I cannot take the course you recommend to me, simply because I really have nothing to explain away. What I have written of the more ludicrous and dangerous tendencies that I observed in America, I have written quite honestly, and in no unkinder spirit than I have written of innumerable things at home. I have, as any rational man must have, a great interest in America; and I have many dear friends who are the born and bred children of the United States. I took occasion to observe in a recent preface,[†1] that "to represent me as viewing America with ill nature, coldness, or animosity, is merely to do a very foolish thing, which is always a very easy one." I have no belief whatever in the durability of foolish things among a great and sensible people, and I confidently trust myself in the long run to their good humor and sagacity.[†2]

Faithfully yours,
CHARLES DICKENS[†3]

To ...., Memphis, Tenn.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 31 OCTOBER 1859*

MS Cheltenham Ladies' College.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.

Monday Thirty First October, 1859.

Sir.

Returning from another part of the country, I find your note and its accompanying newspaper.

Allow me to assure you that I have read the latter with pleasure and interest, and that I think the young lady achieved her self-imposed task in a highly meritorious manner.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS†4

November

To THORNTON LEIGH HUNT, 1 NOVEMBER 1859

MS Iowa University Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday First November, 1859

My Dear Mr. Hunt.

I have carefully discussed the subject with Forster, and he is convinced, he says, that no better course could be taken than that which you and I agreed to suggest to him.†1 He was in favor of it as soon as I mentioned it, and has not in the least wavered since. He leaves here tomorrow, but will not return to town until the end of next week, when he will be happy to see you.

Believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thornton Hunt Esquire

To ALFRED DICKENS, 2 NOVEMBER 1859

Text from N, III, 132.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday, Second November 1859

My Dear Alfred,

The War-Office Ghost matter†2 was not very intelligible even to myself when I saw it in the Papers. All that I know of it, is this. Howitt (who is a kind of arch rapper among the rappers) wrote me a gossiping private note respecting some papers in these pages, called A Physician's Ghosts:†3 wherein the Ghosts treated of, are accounted for, and supposed not to be real apparitions. To this accounting and supposing, Howitt (as said arch-rapper of rappers) objected, and asked me "what I thought of the Ghost of the Officer killed in the Crimea, who had obliged the War Office, to alter an erroneous date entered in their books as the date of his Death?" — I replied that what I thought of it, was, that I should require very strong evidence indeed, in proof of the story.

That's all.

Ever Affecty.

[CD]

I ought to mention that Howitt afterwards published his letter in a certain periodical curlpaper called The Spiritual Telegraph†4 — and described my answer.†5

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 2 NOVEMBER 1859*

MS (pro forma letter in Will's hand) Morgan Llibrary[[sic]].

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Nov. 2 1859

Mr. Charles Dickens begs to thank the writer of the paper entitled

"A Flower Fancy"

for having done him the favor to offer it as a contribution to these pages. He much regrets, however, that it is not suited to the requirements of All the Year Round.

The Manuscript will be returned under cover, if applied for as above.

To SAMUEL SIDNEY, 3 NOVEMBER 1859†

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Third November 1859

My Dear Sir

I am exceedingly sorry to find from your letter to Wills, that you are vexed by the omission of your paper on the late Mr. Stephenson.†1 In the hope of making it more clear to you why I feel the omission to be necessary, in spite of the paper's being the work of a writer whom I highly esteem and appreciate, I trouble you with these few words of explanation.

Although you were so kind as to write the notice most promptly, it fell out that the No. for which it was designed could not be kept open for it, as it had to be sent away to the United States.†2 The opportunity intended to be seized was thus — through nobody's failure or fault — lost. In the meantime the subject was anticipated in several other quarters, and as much was written about it, as (in my opinion) it demanded or justified. In Household Words, we had a long paper on the life of the father;†3 and I think the public would regard, with a natural impatience and sense of our being a day after The Fair, an article a fortnight hence on the life of the son; — the rather, when a great deal of the general interest of the son's character and career, is derived from the parentage on which we have already expatiated.

I hope I need not assure you that I come reluctantly to my conclusion, without the slightest approach to any disparagement of the merits of the notice itself. Nothing could be more spirited and vigorous, or more to the purpose. My sole objection is, that the purpose, in its association with these pages, is, by mischance, out of date.

Believe me always | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

S. Sidney Esquire.

To JOHN HOLLINGSHEAD, 4 NOVEMBER 1859*

MS Dickens House.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Fourth November, 1859

My Dear Mr. Hollingshead

I wrote to Howitt to say "on the general question", that if he knew of any Haunted House where nobody could get on, I believed I knew of a gentleman who would try the adventure.[†1] Here is his — not very terse or cogent — answer.

Next Tuesday between 11 and 3 I shall be at the Office, if you can do me the favor to call.
Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

John Hollingshead Esquire

To G. H. LEWES, 4 NOVEMBER 1859*

MS Dickens House.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Fourth November 1859

My Dear Lewes.

I shall be in town on Monday for the winter, and shall be happy to dine with you, either on Thursday, Friday, or Saturday in that week, or on Monday Tuesday, or Wednesday, in the following week. If no one of these days should do, will you propose another? Please address me at Tavistock House, and consider the pleasant compact made in accordance with your reply.[†2]

Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

G. H. Lewes Esquire

To HERBERT WATKINS, 4 NOVEMBER 1859

Extract in American Art Association and Anderson catalogues, May 1934; MS 1 p.; addressed Herbert Watkins;[†3] dated Gad's Hill Place, 4 Nov 57. Date: N, III, 133 gives smaller extract but correct year, 1859.

I send you a thousand thanks for the remarkable, interesting, and admirable collection of Photographs you have sent to me.[†4] I shall always prize them highly and shall never tire of them. They are not the less agreeable to me for including two capital heads of yourself.

The Library Edition in its Holiday Dress shall not fail to appear, as soon as it is out of the tailor's (or binder's) hands.

To SIR JAMES EMERSON TENNENT,[†1] 6 NOVEMBER 1859

Mention in Anderson Galleries catalogue No. 1357 (1918); MS 1 p.; dated Tavistock House, 6 Nov 59; addressed "My Dear Tennent".

Regretting that on a certain day he is bound to go to Brighton.

To WILLIAM HOWITT, 8 NOVEMBER 1859

MS Robert H. Taylor Collection, Princeton University. Address: William Howitt Esquire | West Hill | Highgate | N.W.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Eighth November 1859

My Dear Mr. Howitt

In your list of haunted houses,[†2] I observe a public-house in London. As it is (locally) easy of access, my friend proposes to begin with that.[†3] Can you tell me where it is? I will undertake to try to get the Landlord's consent to the House's being exorcised by my friend; and as I suppose the restoration of the Good will to be worth something to him, I have hopes of succeeding.

Believe me always | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

William Howitt Esquire.

To CHARLES LEVER, 8 NOVEMBER 1859

MS Institute of Russian Literature, Pushkin House, St Petersburg. Address: Charles Lever Esqre. | Spezia | Italy.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Eighth November 1859

My Dear Lever.

I really cannot tell you how cordially I thank you for your handsome and truly friendly letter. I assure you that I feel its generosity and consideration, deeply.

The article is a very curious and suggestive one. I have called it Italian Distrust,[†4] and have placed it, with great gratification, in the No. made up to day — published on the 23rd.

My dear fellow, the book that I want to send you, is the completed Tale of Two Cities,[†1] and it is not yet ready. But woe to the Frederick of Piccadilly, if he delay posting it, an hour after he has one complete copy in his house!

— I have been thinking:— Is it not a very remarkable thing that this same Distrust, coupled with its inseparable companion, an admiration of over-reaching, should be the Master Vice of the United States — under the extreme opposite system of Government? Iago would have been "a smart man" in New York, and any conspicuous American will believe any ill of any other.[†2]

Believe me Ever | Heartily Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 8 NOVEMBER 1859

Mention in Sotheby's catalogue, June 1973. MS 1 p.; dated Office of AYR, 8 Nov 59.

Thanking his correspondent for having sent the manuscript of his paper "Memorials of Edinboro" as a contribution to All the Year Round and declining it as unsuitable.

To CHARLES BARBER, 9 NOVEMBER 1859*

MS Carl H. Pforzheimer Library.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Wednesday Ninth November, 1859.

Mr. Lake has taken the house,[†3] Barber, until the Saturday before Easter. He will come in, on Saturday next. It is understood that he is to have whatever little things there may be in the kitchen Garden — that we keep the Dogs as usual — and also the pony; the latter being used to draw water for him, however. I have explained to him that you are in charge of the place, and that your work will all go on as usual in the garden, and that if he wants any little explanation about the ways of the house, you will give it him at any time.

I shall be down on Friday, and shall want George to meet me with the basket and the dogs, at the Higham Station. I shall leave London at a quarter past 10.

The vase and pedestal were already at the Railway, before I got to the Mason's. So the two faces for the tunnel,[†4] will follow in another package as soon as they are ready.

CHARLES DICKENS

To FREDERIC CHAPMAN, 10 NOVEMBER 1859*

MS British Library.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Thursday Tenth November, 1859.

My Dear Sir

Will you send a complete set of the Library Edition to Mr. Frith, with the enclosed note.[†1]

And as there is an old engagement that I should send a set to Peter Cunningham in return for his Horace Walpole,[†2] will you send another set to him with the enclosed note[†3] when and where you can find him.[†4]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Fredk. Chapman Esquire

To C.C. FELTON, 10 NOVEMBER 1859†

MS Indiana University Libraries and [aa]Houghton Library, Harvard.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Thursday Tenth November, 1859

My Dear Felton

I have been writing so hard — and reading besides — that I have done nothing in my own private and personal character these many months. Being now borne to London on the waves of a whole Atlantic of correspondence in arrear, I confess my sins to "the heartiest of Greek Professors".

To the American Readings, I have not seen my way at all. The design wants in it some American gentleman (or gentlemen) with capital, position, and influence. So far as I see, it strays instead, into the hands of speculators without money.[†5] This is a combination that I should be very shy of at home, and that certainly will never tempt me thousands of miles away. So I think I have abandoned the idea.

The answers to your questions are three in number.

1. There always is, in All The Year Round, as there always was in Household Words, an opening for a good and able contributor.

2. The general rate of payment is a Guinea a page; but it is sometimes more.

3. I should think Mr. Underwood[†1] likely to have it in his power to establish a connexion with the Journal, useful and pleasant on both sides. But of course I do not know this, without seeing something that he designs for it. For any long story, I have not an opening, because Wilkie Collins follows me in a fortnight, for at least eight months, and I am now engaging for a story by another hand to follow his.

I write very hastily, and hope I need not assure either Mr. Underwood or you, that I could not possibly be more interested in any contributor than in one so proposing himself.

The girls and Georgina send their kindest regard to you and your house — whose happiness, we all hope, is now quite restored.[†2] I have been devoting myself to the Tale of Two Cities with tremendous interest and fervor, and Carlyle says its "Wonderful!" and Forster turns white with admiring approval. Come and do likewise.

Ever My Dear Felton | Affecy and Heartily Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Love to all friends, not forgetting Hillard, who left us in great force, and the remembrance of whom is green on Gad's Hill.

To W. R. SCULTHORPE, 10 NOVEMBER 1859

Text from MDGH, II, 104.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON, W.C.,
Thursday, Nov. 10th, 1859.

Dear Sir,

Judgment must go by default. I have not a word to plead against Dodson and Fogg.[†3] I am without any defence to the action; and therefore, as law goes, ought to win it.

Seriously, the date of your hospitable note disturbs my soul. But I have been incessantly writing in Kent and reading in all sorts of places, and have done nothing in my own personal character these many months;[†4] and now I come to town and our friend[†5] is away! Let me take that defaulting miscreant into council when he comes back.

Faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To THOMAS SPALDING,[†1] 10 NOVEMBER 1859*

MS Mr J. R. Chamberlain.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON, W.C.
Thursday Tenth November, 1859

Dear Sir

I am happy to send you my Two Proxies[†2] in favor of Mr. Doogood,[†3] and am
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Spalding Esquire

To GEORGE LAKE, 11 NOVEMBER 1859*

MS Guildhall Museum, Rochester.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Friday Eleventh November, 1859

My Dear Sir

We have left the various Inventories on this table, in case you should ever desire to refer to them. The gardener's wife has instructions, in common with her husband, to give you any information you may require.

In the Inner Drawing Room, two of the Mirrors fitted into the wall, have suffered in their silvering, on account of the wall not having been quite dry when they were put up. The maker says that if he took them down to resilver, he would keep them "about a fortnight". Will you have the kindness to inform me at your convenience, by a line to Tavistock House, whether you object to their being taken down for that period? The only reason for their being done at once, is, that the less they are mildewed before they go to the maker, the less the repair will cost. And he says that it may spread over their whole surfaces.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

C.[†4] Lake Esquire

To ABRAHAM HOLROYD,[†1] 12 NOVEMBER 1859*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,

Saturday Twelfth November 1859

My Dear Sir

I beg to thank you cordially for your letter of the Eighth, and for the little book[†2] accompanying it. Believe me, I reciprocate the good wishes you send me, and I highly esteem the good fortune of being held in such remembrance.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Abraham Holroyd Esquire

To R. H. HORNE,[†3] 12 NOVEMBER 1859

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds. Address: Private | R. H. Horne Esquire | Town Hall Melbourne.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Saturday Twelfth November 1859

My Dear Horne.

I am happy to give my full and unreserved permission for the collection and republication of your articles from Household Words, in accordance with the enclosed list.[†4] But I must (for reasons into which it is needless to enter) decline to negociate with any publisher on the subject. Further, I should feel great delicacy and difficulty in asking (as you suggest) either Robert Bell[†5] or Southwood Smith[†6] to do so on your behalf. And I must beg you to authorize the friend whom you select for the office, directly from yourself and without my intervention.[†7]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

R. H. Horne Esquire

To SIR JAMES EMERSON TENNENT, 12 NOVEMBER 1859*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Private | Sir James Emerson Tennent | Board of Trade | S.W.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Saturday Twelfth November 1859

My Dear Tennent,

In thanking you most heartily for your book,[†1] let me, no less cordially congratulate you on its success. It is delightful to receive such an account[†2] of it, on such good authority.

Before I sit down to study and enjoy the elephant on my own account, I will have him out for the behoof of the many readers of this Journal.[†3] I hope that it may be the means of turning a few more eyes towards your book, and it would be a selfish pleasure to me to be associated — however slightly — with your triumph and gratification.

Believe me | Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Sir James Emerson Tennent.

To MRS ALFRED DICKENS,[†4] 13 NOVEMBER 1859

Text from N, III, 135.

Tavistock House
Sunday, Thirteenth November, 1859

My Dear Helen,

Believe me, I feel your letter to be an extremely kind and true-hearted one, and I have read it with a real respect for the feeling in which it has originated. There is nothing but goodness in it, and I hope it is impossible I could ever take that amiss.

But I cannot further the object confided to you. I have no acquaintance with Mr. Cobden,[†5] and I do not even believe that he has, or would exercise if he had, any such influence as he is supposed to possess over the affairs of that American Railway[†6] .... Quite apart however from these considerations, you will easily understand why Alfred's objection applies with ten thousand times greater force to one so notorious as myself. I have been painfully restrained from communicating with Augustus[†1] by the knowledge (gained from a stern experience), that the least communication with him would be turned to some account, and that some suddenly virtuously indignant person would proclaim that but for me he never would have been drawn into those social relations, or to that advance of money, or to that recommendation, or what not. Augustus had not been in America three months (I think), when he wrote me asking me to correspond with some man or other who had done something for him, and who would write to recommend me to advance him a sum of money. He did write, and what could I do but hold my peace? I do not complain of injustice though I have suffered under it but I can not put myself in the way of heaps of not unmerited reproach from the knaves and fools who are always panting to yelp at a public man, by in any way guaranteeing Augustus. I can not deny to myself that the more conspicuous I am, the less right I have to do it, and the more I am bound to stand aloof.

It is a dreadful state of things that he should have fallen into this position, but I declare to you that I do not see how he is to be helped in it. He always has been, in a certain insupportable arrogance and presumption of character, so wrong, that, even when he had some prospects before him, I despaired of his ever being right.

He came to consult me on some matters at the time when he took his partner in business;[†2] I observed him then to be so stupid in a singular combination of vanity and over-reaching, that I felt it would be a positive act of treachery in me to see the partner, and imply, however distantly, that I believed it possible for him to succeed with such a young man as my brother. I never did see him, though Augustus strongly pressed it upon me, and the same considerations that were irresistible with me at that time, are — as you may easily suppose — greatly intensified at this.

You will understand, I am quite sure, that I do not write a word of this reproachfully towards the unfortunate fellow, but that I write it only to you in strict confidence, that you may the better comprehend my state of mind about him. It is simply this:— I have no hope of him. If I had any suitable employment in my own gift, in America, I would give it him; but I can not recommend another man to do it, and least of all a stranger, who, doing it at all, would only do it in his confidence in me.

Ever affectionately

[CD]

To G. H. LEWES, 14 NOVEMBER 1859†

MS Berg Collection.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Monday Fourteenth November, 1859

My Dear Lewes.

Against my first impulse and inclination, I think it is best that I should go further with you into the question of Mrs. Lewes's writing for All The Year Round. And I think I can make it plain to you in a very few words, why and how I come to this conclusion.

I finish next week, and Wilkie Collins begins. His story will last about 8 months. In the No. which contains the opening of his story, I place a few words of my own — between the end of mine, and the beginning of his — to the effect that I purpose always reserving that first place, for a continuous story of about the length of The Tale of Two Cities; and that I hope this Series will take its place in English Literature. This obliges me at once to arrange for some story to follow Collins. Now, can I arrange for such a story, with Mrs. Lewes? You understand that it would not begin to appear in print, until about four months or so, after Easter.

The question is, whether it would be consistent with her perfect peace of mind and comfort (I assume her general inclination, from what we said together), to enter into terms for such a story. If yes — in order that the money part of the matter may be (as it should be, of course, and must be) a matter of business and recompense, perfectly apart from me, either as an individual or a writer — my sub Editor and business right hand, Wills, an excellent fellow, shall come to you at any time you may name, and close the matter on any terms perfectly satisfactory to Mrs. Lewes and you. Of course the copyright would remain her own, and the perfect liberty to select her own publisher for the completed story, and to publish it immediately on its completion, would remain her own likewise. An immense new public would probably be opened to her, and I am quite sure that our association would be full of interest and pleasure to me.[†1]

[†a]Of my personal feeling and wish in the matter, and of the extent to which I have it at heart as an artist, to have such an artist working with me, I have no right to say more[†a] in this connexion. I never can overcome the delicacy and difficulty that arise in me, the moment I have to make any mention of writing, in any other character than as a writer. Only tell me, therefore, whether you will see Wills, and when?

Now, thank God! I subside into the personage who smoked his cigar in the chair before the fire, last Thursday,[†1] and can send my kindest regard and truest sympathy in all things, without a fettered mind.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To WILLIAM HOWITT, 15 NOVEMBER 1859

Text from N, III, 136.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON, W.C.
Tuesday, Fifteenth November 1859

My Dear Sir,

My friend — whom you altogether[†2] mistake for somebody else whom I don't know of — has an idea of taking the haunted House at Cheshunt altogether. Can you tell me to whom application should be made about it?

Faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To WILLIAM TELBIN,[†1] 15 NOVEMBER 1859

Text from N, III, 136.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON, W.C.
Tuesday, Fifteenth November 1859

My Dear Telbin,

I hope you did not derive, from John,[†2] any impression that I was going to destroy your scene.[†3] It was to be taken to pieces and rolled up, that it might be the better preserved; when it came into my head (a general clearance is necessary for domestic purposes) that it might be useful to you, and that some of the rollers had been lent by you. Believe me I have never in the least forgotten your pains, or our friendly association; both will always be a gratifying remembrance to me.

Faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To THOMAS ADOLPHUS TROLLOPE, 15 NOVEMBER 1859*

MS Yale University Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Fifteenth November 1859

My Dear Mr. Trollope. I write this hasty word just as the Post leaves, to ask you this question, which this moment occurs to me:—

Montalembert,[†4] in his suppressed treatise,[†5] asks "What wrong has Pope Pius the Ninth done?"[†6] Don't you think you can very pointedly answer that question in these pages?[†7] If you can not, nobody in Europe can.

Very faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To FRANÇOIS REGNIER, 16 NOVEMBER 1859

MS Comédie Française.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Wednesday Sixteenth November, 1859

My Dear Regnier.

I send you ten thousand thanks for your kind and explicit letter. What I particularly wished to ascertain from you, was whether it is likely that the Censor would allow such a piece to be played in Paris.[†1] In the case of its being likely, then, I wished to have the piece as well done as possible, and would even have proposed to come to Paris to see it rehearsed. But I very much doubted whether the general subject would not be objectionable to the Government, and what you write with so much sagacity and with such care convinces me at once that its representation would be prohibited. Therefore, I altogether abandon and relinquish the idea. But I am just as heartily and cordially obliged to you for your interest and friendship, as if the Book had been turned into a play, five hundred times. I again thank you ten thousand times, and am quite sure that you are right. I only hope you will forgive my causing you so much trouble, after your hard work.

My girls and Georgina send their kindest regard to Madame Regnier and to you. My Gad's Hill house (I think I omitted to tell you, in reply to your enquiry) is on the very scene of Falstaff's robbery.

There is a little Cabaret[†2] at the roadside, still called "The Sir John Falstaff". And the country, in all its general features, is, at this time, what it was in Shakespeare's. I hope you will see the house before long. It is really a pretty place — and a good residence for an English writer, is it not?

Macready, we are all happy to hear from himself, is going to leave the dreary tomb in which he lives at Sherborne, and to remove to Cheltenham[†3] — a large and handsome place, about four or five hours' railway journey from London, where his poor girls will at least see and hear some Life. Forster is growing bigger and more burly. Riches agree with him in all respects, very well. Madame Celeste[†4] was with me yesterday, wishing to dramatize the Tale of Two Cities for the Lyceum, after bringing out her Christmas Pantomime.[†5] You know that she has long separated from Webster, and has now taken the Matthews's old Theatre?[†6] I gave her my permission, and the book.[†7] But I fear that her Company (Troupe) is a very poor one.

This is all the news I have: except (which is no news at all) that I feel as if I had not seen you for fifty years, and that I am Ever your attached and faithful friend.

CHARLES DICKENS

To FRANK STONE, [?MID-NOVEMBER 1859]

MS Benoliel Collection. Date: no doubt from Tavistock House from which CD wrote several letters on 16 Nov; handwriting supports.

See reference here. I will look in for a minute, in the course of the morning, when I go out.

CD.

To ARTHUR STONE,[†1] 18 NOVEMBER 1859*

MS Benoliel Collection.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Friday Eighteenth November, 1859

My Dear Arthur

Your father is ill, and Ellen has asked us to send a messenger to bring you to him.[†2] One of our women comes in a Cab with this.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To CHARLES COLLINS, 19 NOVEMBER 1859

MS Morgan Library.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON, W.C.

Nineteenth November, 1859

My Dear Charles Collins

In retaining the Story[†3] (though I am afraid not for the Christmas No.) I feel that I ought to say a word or two to you about it, because I doubt it. And I am so afraid of your else going wrong in your book,[†4] and disappointing yourself, that I feel the responsibility I am under of telling you the truth.

Rely upon it, the story is altogether in want of touches of relief, and life, and truth. It is greatly too much in the manner of the stories of about the time of the Essayists;[†1] it does not hang well together; it is not easy; and there is too much of the narrator in it — the narrator not being an actor. The result is, that I can not see the people, or the place, or believe in the fiction. I am absolutely certain — mind! — that this is no peculiarity of mine. If you were to shew it to Wilkie without a word of comment, he must see the same defects in it. If you were to read it yourself after trying something else, you would see them quite as plainly.

You have such an excellent humour — of your own — and such a correct and delicate observation — that it is a great pity not to give the quality more play in such a narrative. As, for instance, by making the sister who writes to the Sailor, some recognizable type of woman. A wolfish kind of thing like the Italian, requires a Red Riding Hood, or a Grandmother. I feel, after reading the story, exactly as if it had been told me by somebody who couldn't tell it; and as if I had to fill in all the things to make it life-like, myself.

Don't let the Eye Witness drop. It will certainly do you good; It is a capital name for you; if you went on with it, I think it would be the best name you could put upon the Title page of your book;[†2] it is your own idea, and one that you may stand by for years.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, 19 NOVEMBER 1859

Extract in F, VIII, vi, 685*n.*

Saturday, November 19th, 1859

You will be grieved to hear of poor Stone. On Sunday he was not well. On Monday, went to Dr. Todd,[†3] who told him he had aneurism of the heart. On Tuesday, went to Dr. Walsh,[†4] who told him he hadn't. On Wednesday I met him in a cab in the Square here, and he got out to talk to me. I walked about with him a little while at a snail's pace, cheering him up; but when I came home, I told them that I thought him much changed, and in danger. Yesterday at two o'clock he died of spasm of the heart. I am going up to Highgate to look for a grave for him.

To ELLEN STONE, 19 NOVEMBER 1859*

MS Benoliel Collection.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Saturday Nineteenth November, 1859

My Dear Ellen.

In writing to Mr. Bannister,[†1] I would mention that the Funeral is to take place on Thursday, and that, to obviate the necessity that would otherwise arise of choosing among friends, only your two brothers and the two executors would follow.

By all means explain that wish to Frith and Egg,[†2] before the Funeral. And this necessitates your telling them that they are the Executors: I perceive a kind of propriety and coherency in your doing that, at once and before the Will is opened, because your knowledge of the circumstance shews in itself that your father had confided his intentions and desires to his children.[†3]

Upon all other matters, I shall be very glad to speak to you and your brothers whenever you feel equal to the task. I am strongly of opinion that you should retain the house for yourselves. I feel sure that in the long run it will save you money, and I think it will give Marcus,[†4] particularly, a kind of fixity that will have a good effect. People will come to see his pictures where they saw his poor father's, and many Art-friends will feel more earnestly about him.

Ever Affectionately and faithfully

CD.

To ELLEN STONE, 19 NOVEMBER 1859*

MS Benoliel Collection.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Saturday Nineteenth November 1859

My Dear Ellen.

I have been to Highgate, and bought the spot of ground,[†1] and appointed the funeral to be there at eleven o'Clock on Thursday forenoon.

Ever Affectionately and faithfully

CD.

To SIR JAMES EMERSON TENNENT, 19 NOVEMBER 1859*

MS Morgan Library

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON, W.C.
Saturday Nineteenth November | 1859

My Dear Tennent

I send you a rough Proof — which I don't want back — of the Elephant Paper, to be published on the last day of this month. I have had the narrative put together by my best hand at that kind of work, and have written in the little personal matter myself.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

My next neighbour poor Frank Stone, is dead — died yesterday of spasm of the heart.

To W. H. WILLS, 19 NOVEMBER 1859

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Saturday Nineteenth November 1859

My Dear Wills.

I don't see my way through this letter of Lewes's[†2] at all.

I shall be back here at 3 to day, to meet Alfred. Don't wait for me if you have anything else to do. If you have nothing else to do — why, then, I shall find you.

On what strange, sad, errand do you think I am going now? To Highgate, to choose a Grave for — poor Stone, who died yesterday!

Ever Faithfully
CD.

To WILLIAM BOXALL,[†1] [?19-20 NOVEMBER 1859]

Mention in To Ellen Stone, 21 Nov. Date: between Stone's death and the letter to Ellen.

To G. H. LEWES, 20 NOVEMBER 1859*

MS Berg Collection.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Sunday Twentieth November, 1859

My Dear Lewes.

I am in a state of temporary insanity (Annual) with the Xmas No. and don't expect to be out of it for ten days or a fortnight to come. As soon as I recover myself, rely on my walking out to Wandsworth. In the meanwhile, will you and Mrs. Lewes take an opportunity of considering this question:— at what time (supposing all else arranged) could she begin? My original idea was, that her story might follow Collins's, and that I might follow her. Now, supposing I were to put Mrs. Gaskell next after Collins — say for a four or six months' story — would that do? Obviously, you see, the first task imposed upon me, is, to fill the post when Collins is relieved; and that, it is needless to say, I must do beforehand — now. If you could once substantially enlighten me on the question How much time Mrs. Lewes would want, to be comfortable — I should be in a condition to provide for the next story.

This is one point on which I particularly want your aid. Here is another.

I am very anxious to have a paper in All The Year Round, hung in any way upon that "Adam Bede Junior", protesting most strongly and indignantly, in the interests of Literature, against that most shameful and abominable proceeding.[†2] I wish you would write it. Will you? You have the whole question at your fingers' ends, and could do it better than any one else.[†3] If you would undertake it, it would be necessary for it to be written immediately on the appearance of the book, as we are always made up a fortnight in advance. Here is a story about it, that I have at first hand, and know to be true. A scavenging wretch in the employment of Mr. Newby,[†4] goes to a certain Librarian to subscribe the book. Librarian says he considers it a dishonest proceeding and will have nothing to do with it. "Dishonest!" says the Scavenger; "how do you know by whom it's written? How do you know it is not by Miss Evans?" Librarian replies: "All I know, is, I will have nothing to do with the book, or you either."[†1] But behold! The Librarian's subscribers, attracted by the advertisement, demand the book! And because he is under contract to them to supply them with all new books, he is obliged to order it, and has ordered it!

Pray tell me whether you will write the paper or no. Because I am red hot upon it, and bent upon the scarification of the book-seller. I shall be at the office on Tuesday afternoon at 3.

My kindest regard to Mrs. Lewes. I have been hoping to send her the Tale of Two Cities in a Volume, but have not yet had one copy from the binder.[†2]

Always My Dear Lewes | Faithfully

CD.

Poor Stone! — Died next door here, suddenly on Friday, from an affection of the heart.

To MISS ELLEN STONE, 21 NOVEMBER 1859*

MS Benoliel Collection.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Monday Twenty First November 1859

My Dear Ellen.

I saw Wills yesterday. There is no doubt of the Insurance being right, but we thought it best to pay that interest on the Loan. It is therefore done this morning.

The newspapers shall have the notice to day.[†3] I have written to Boxall, and explained matters to him in reference to Thursday.[†4]

Ever Affectionately and faithfully

CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [25 NOVEMBER 1859]

Extract in F, XI, iii, 824. Date: 25 Nov 59, according to Forster.

As yet not a story has come to me in the least belonging to the idea[†5] (the simplest in the world; which I myself described in writing, in the most elaborate manner); and everyone of them turns, by a strange fatality, on a criminal trial![†1]

To MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL, [26 NOVEMBER 1859]

Mention in H. F. Manisty[†2] to Walter Lamb,[†3] 20 June 1922, MS Royal Academy. Date: written 26 Nov, but dated by CD 28 Nov, like the two following letters.

Asking them to give work as an illustrator to Marcus Stone, should the opportunity arise.[†4]

To THOMAS LONGMAN,[†5] [26] NOVEMBER 1859

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Date: written 26 Nov, but dated by CD 28 Nov.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Monday Twenty Eighth November, 1859

My Dear Longman.

I am very anxious to present to you, with the earnest hope that you will hold him in your remembrance, young Mr. Marcus Stone, son of poor Frank Stone who died suddenly, but a little week ago.

You know, I dare say, what a start this young man made in the last Exhibition,[†1] and what a favorable notice his picture attracted.[†2] He wishes to make an additional opening for himself in the illustration of books.[†3] He is an admirable draughtsman — has a most dexterous hand — a charming sense of grace and beauty — and a capital power of observation. These qualities in him I know well, of my own knowledge. He is in all things modest, punctual, and right; and I would answer for him, if it were needful, with my head.

If you will put any thing in his way, you will do it a second time, I am certain.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Longman Esquire.

To JOHN MURRAY,[†4] [26] NOVEMBER 1859

Text from copy in Royal Academy of Arts, checked from MS Sotheby, June 1975. Date: written 26 Nov, but dated by CD 28 Nov.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Monday, Twenty Eighth November, 1859

My dear Murray.

I daresay you remember Mr. Marcus Stone's picture in the Exhibition last year, and the sensation it made as the work of a young man of remarkable power and promise. It is to the same Mr. Marcus Stone that I give this letter, and he is the son of my dear old friend Frank Stone of the Academy who died, next door here, but ten days ago.

He wishes to make an additional way for himself in life, by the illustration of books. He draws beautifully, is a faithful student, has a quick and shrewd observation added to a ready and skilled hand and graceful eye, and is as modest and reliable as it is possible for artist to be. I have known him and his progress from his childhood, and his character and capacity are matters of absolute and intimate certainty with me.

It is very likely that you might have the opportunity of trying such a hand.[†5] That you will do so if you can, is all I ask: I know very well that he will work out all the rest for himself.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

John Murray Esquire.

To J. T. DELANE,[†1] [26 NOVEMBER 1859]

Mention in To Stone, 26 Nov. Date: almost certainly written same day as last.

Asking him to give employment on The Times to Arthur Stone, should there be a vacancy.[†2]

To MARCUS STONE, 26 NOVEMBER 1859

MS Royal Academy of Arts. Address: Marcus Stone Esquire | Russell House | Tavistock Square.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Saturday Twenty Sixth November 1859

My Dear Marcus. I send you enclosed, the three introductory letters of which I spoke to Arthur this morning. Seal them, after reading and before delivering them. You will notice that I have dated them, Monday.

Tell Arthur that I have not seen Mr. Delane, but have written to him strongly.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS GORDON SMYTHIES,[†3] 28 NOVEMBER 1859

Extract in Maggs Bros catalogue, 1900; MS 3 pp.; dated Office of AYR; addressed Mrs Gordon Smythies. Date: 28 Nov 59 given in Anderson Galleries catalogue, Apr 1914, with shorter extract.

You assume a depreciation of your abilities on my part which has no existence on this earth ... I have half a dozen stories here now, by regular contributors, quite impossible to be used for the Xmas No., yet written for it. The No. is now being "made up", and there is not the least chance or hope of room or trial. But you may very truly say, on my authority — every year — a quantity of matter written for it afterwards goes into the regular Nos.

To DAVID ROBERTS,[†4] 30 NOVEMBER 1859

Mention in N, III, 138. MS 2 pp., dated Tavistock House, 30 Nov 59.

Referring to a misunderstanding.[†5]

To ARTHUR STONE, 30 NOVEMBER 1859*

MS Benoliel Collection.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Wednesday Thirtieth November 1859

My Dear Arthur

I have had this note from Mr. Delane.

"At present I know of nothing that is vacant, but it will be hard indeed if the next month or two does not produce something that will be at least worth offering him."

"You may rely upon my bearing him in mind when an occasion offers."

They are so chary at the Times of promising, that I hardly doubt the likelihood of something coming of this. Once on that paper and able to hold your own there, you can work your way on in your profession[†1] without anxiety for present means. It is highly desirable — above all things — that you should now get to the Short Hand. If you can begin with me here, at 10 tomorrow morning, do.[†2]

Ever Faithfully Yours

CD.

December

To FREDERICK SALMON,[†3] 1 DECEMBER 1859*

MS Yale University Library.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Thursday First December, 1859

My Dear Sir

While I cordially sympathize with the intentions of these worthy people, and while I thoroughly know on what good grounds of thankfulness they act, I cannot say that I like that kind of public presentation.[†4] It has been of late years made so common, and has been so grossly abused, that it has become associated with puffery rather than with desert, and very very seldom, in a good case, shews as it is meant to shew. I am bound to express this feeling to you, because I have expressed it on a great number of occasions publicly, and because, if the case were my own, I should feel it strongly.

If you will state my reason for doubt and hesitation, to the leaders among these grateful friends, and will tell them that I cannot therefore bind myself to represent them in this matter until I understand their wishes in detail, the possibility of their misunderstanding me will be prevented. Then, if they will ask me to make an appointment to confer with them, and will tell me what hour would best suit their convenience, I will lose no time in seeing them.[†1]

It is a painful surprise to me, to hear of your being in ill health. I had not heard of it, and sincerely hope your useful career receives but a passing check.[†2]

My Dear Sir | Very faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Fredk. Salmon Esquire.

To BERNHARD TAUCHNITZ, 2 DECEMBER 1859

Extract in Curt Otto, Der Verlag Bernhard Tauchnitz, 1837-1912, p. 55.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON, W.C.,
Friday, December 2nd, 1859.

I have this day safely received your draft, payable three days after sight, for £ ...[†3] Sterling, in completion of your payment for the Tale of Two Cities. I beg to thank you very cordially.

My daughters and their aunt unite in kindest regards to all your house. I have not, as yet, any new book in direct contemplation; but I shall certainly not, at any time, publish a new story without previous communication with you.

To W. BLANCHARD JERROLD, 4 DECEMBER 1859

Mention in Emily Driscoll catalogue No. 27 (1968); MS 1 p.; dated London 4 Dec 59; addressed W. B. Jerrold.

Returning, with a few words, a play.[†4]

To THORNTON LEIGH HUNT, [5] DECEMBER 1859

MS Dickens House. Date: misdated by CD; Monday was 5 Dec in 1859.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON, W.C.
Monday December Fourth, 1859

My Dear Mr. Hunt.

The next No. we make up, will probably be published at the office, on Wednesday the 21st. of this Month. I will hold it back and keep it open, expressly to get into it the necessary remarks by myself on your introduction &c.[†1] I hope to be able to send you a proof on Thursday morning; of course you shall see it and approve of it before I send it for press.[†2]

To E. A. MENCH,[†3] [5] DECEMBER 1859*

MS Mr William S. Akin, Illinois. Date: misdated by CD; Monday was 5 Dec in 1859.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON, W.C.
Monday Fourth December, 1859

My Dear Sir

I am truly grateful to you for your letter, and have been sincerely affected by its enclosed account of Mr. Curtis's[†4] lecture[†5] on myself and my books. That gentleman's eulogy, and its reception by his audience, would have been as a dagger in my heart, if I had ever entertained the least animosity towards the American people. But as I never have had any save friendly feelings towards them, I have read the newspaper account, with a glow of heartfelt pleasure. I shall never forget it.

My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

E. A. Mench Esquire

To THORNTON LEIGH HUNT, 7 DECEMBER 1859

MS Dickens House.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Seventh December 1859

My Dear Mr. Hunt. Will it suit you to call here at 12 tomorrow, and look over the little proof[†1] with me? After that I will take it down to Forster. It must be at Press tomorrow night. I hope it is clear, explicit, and beyond mistake.[†2] But whatever you desire it to be, it shall be — if it be not already.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Thornton Hunt Esquire

To MRS GASKELL, 8 DECEMBER 1859*

MS Mr Thomas Brown.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Eighth December 1859

My Dear Mrs. Gaskell.

In "making up" the Christmas No. I was obliged — or I could not have managed it at all — to take a line here, and a line there, out of every paper in it. I hope I did this so tenderly and carefully in your case, as that you will hardly know where I touched it. My chief reason for mentioning the circumstance at all, is, that I may have an excuse for telling you that the force and beauty of your story[†3] impressed me more than I could easily find words to describe.

Faithfully Yours Ever
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS MARY BOYLE,[†1] 8 DECEMBER 1859†

MS Morgan Library.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Thursday Night, Eighth December 1859

My Dear Mary.

[†a]I really cannot tell you how truly and tenderly I feel your letter, and how gratified I am by its contents.[†2] Your truth and attachment are always so precious to me that I can*not* get my heart out on my sleeve, to shew it you. It is like a child, and, at the sound of some familiar voices, "goes and hides".

You know what an affection I have for Mrs. Watson, and how happy it made me to see her again — younger, much, than when I first knew her in Switzerland.[†a]

The Mormon joke, excellent — Even to me, who (if I had been the examined boy) might have been more frightfully heretical than either of the unmarried young gentlemen.

[†b]Yes, Mary dear; I must say that I like my Carton. And I have a faint idea sometimes, that if I had acted him, I could have done something with his life and death.[†b†3]

God bless you always! | Ever Affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To ARTHUR STONE, 11 DECEMBER 1859*

MS Benoliel Collection.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Sunday Eleventh December 1859

My Dear Arthur

On reconsideration, I think you had best not write with me again until you have had a day or two's thorough good practice with the arbitrary characters and letters.[†4] I am rather afraid of your otherwise confirming some present mistakes. Let us say 10 on Wednesday.

But if you have any thing to ask me about, I shall be at home this morning until halfpast one.

Faithfully Always
CD.

To [?RUMSEY] FORSTER,[†1] [?MID-DECEMBER 1859]

Mention in To Howitt, 21 Dec 59. Date: probably written about a week before that letter.

Replying that there must be some mistake in his description of a letter he had received from Howitt.

To [?RUMSEY] FORSTER, [?MID-DECEMBER 1859]

Mention in To Howitt, 21 Dec 59. Date: presumably within a day or two of last.

Assuring him that the statement in Howitt's letter which he enclosed was perfectly accurate.

To CAPT. CAVENDISH SPENCER BOYLE,[†2] 17 DECEMBER 1859

Extract in Reginald Atkinson catalogue No. 69 (1927); MS 1 p.; dated Tavistock House, 17 Dec 59; addressed "My Dear Boyle".

Many thanks for your spirited song — which I have read with much pleasure, and with which I shall beguile the weary night when I am on duty as Sentry at the Bank of England. What a Gummidge[†3] you are, never to appear in these parts like a man!

To WILLIAM HOWITT, 17 DECEMBER 1859†

MS Berg Collection.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Saturday Seventeenth December 1859

My Dear Mr. Howitt.

I have been to Cheshunt, and have found myself no nearer to a haunted house than I was before.[†4] Not a locally well-informed person in the place knows of any haunted stories there. The house in which Mr. Chapman lived,[†1] has been greatly enlarged and commands a high rent, and is no more deserted[†2] than this house of mine is.[†3] I can hear of no one at Cheshunt who ever heard of anything worse in it during Mr. Chapman's occupation, than Rats, and a servant (one Frank by name), said to have had a skilful way of poaching for rabbits at untimely hours. I have taken, from the parish-books, the names and terms of residence of all the occupants of that house for years past. I am assured that the lawyer, the doctor, and the clergyman, can not lay hold of any body of any degree who ever heard of any haunted reputation attaching to the house. As to Sir Henry Meux's[†4] people they have been eating of the Lotus in like manner,[†5] and stare in a most bewildered condition when challenged to confess.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

William Howitt Esquire

To MRS GASKELL, 20 DECEMBER 1859

MS John Rylands Library. Address: Mrs. Gaskell | Plymouth Grove | Manchester.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON, W.C.
Tuesday Twentieth December 1859

My Dear Mrs. Gaskell.

I want to make a proposal to you, and to make it intelligible in as few words as possible. Because I know that, the fewer the words, the greater chance it has of being comprehensible.

Would it be agreeable and practicable to you to write for All The Year Round, by the end of June, a story of this length:— to occupy about five months, or 22 weeks in serial publication of about 5 pages per week; in other words, of about 400 pages of your usual manuscript?[†6]

I shall be happy to pay you for the use of such a story, Two Hundred Guineas. I would undertake to get you, certainly Fifty more (possibly a larger sum, but of that I cannot make sure) for the transmission of early proofs to America. You would reserve the liberty to collect, and publish it as a book, simultaneously with its completion in All The Year Round. The copyright would, of course, be yours.[†1]

The money should be paid at any time most pleasant to you — now, if that were of the least moment. But, I am not absolutely certain (this is the only "But" in the case) that I should be able to use the story at the exact time I have named. I should want it, or say half of it at least, in hand then, to be provided against all contingencies. But I might, in fulfilment of another agreement of a conditional nature, that I have made with another writer of the highest standing[†2] — I might, I say, interpose another story before it, in June. The effect of such interposition would be to delay its appearance (but of course not the payment for it), some four or five months. I think it right to mention this.

When you have considered the subject, will you tell me Yes, or No.

The little allegory[†3] you sent to Wills the other day on behalf of a friend,[†4] I am happy to accept.

Believe me My Dear Mrs. Gaskell

Always Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

To WILLIAM HOWITT, 21 DECEMBER 1859

MS Mrs Mary Howitt Whittakers Walker.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON, W.C.
Wednesday Twenty First December, 1859

My Dear Mr. Howitt

My reply to your letter received yesterday evening, may be comprised under four brief heads.

1. I will communicate its suggestion, to the gentleman who wishes to try the adventure of a Haunted House: though I can not engage that either his time or his patience will hold out in the pursuit of things that have such an unlucky trick of vanishing when they are come near to.[†1]

2. Be so good as to observe (not allowing a little ill temper to distort your sense of justice), that the Christmas No. which gives you so much offence,[†2] and the Cheshunt House, are two perfectly distinct things. I went to Cheshunt to make enquiries, the very day before the Christmas No. was published, and when it had been at press ten days.[†3]

3. The Mr. Forster of the Oriental club[†4] to whom you refer (and of whom I know nothing) wrote me a letter so clumsily describing a letter he had had from you, that I replied, there must be some mistake. He then sent me your letter itself, and I immediately returned it with the written assurance that its statement was "perfectly accurate".

4. But I cannot possibly "oblige you by letting it be clearly understood in unequivocal language that I did find the house which had the reputation[†5] of having been haunted, but that it was said to be so, no longer" — simply because I could not discover that it ever had had any such reputation. I found the house in which Mr. Chapman had lived four years, altered, enlarged, increased in rent, and prosperously inhabited. I hope that is sufficient for your satisfaction, but I found nothing else.

I will not refer you to the newspapers of only yesterday, for the failure of a Kentish Haunted House[†6] and the existence of a female "Ikey",[†7] because you take the suggestion that such things can possibly be, so extremely ill, that it seems to become a personal offence.[†8]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

William Howitt Esquire

To CAPT. CAVENDISH SPENCER BOYLE, 27 DECEMBER 1859

MS Yale University Library.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Tuesday Twenty Seventh December, 1859

My Dear Boyle.

All good wishes — in season and out of season — to you, and yours, and Mary: to whom, my love.

It would be as easy to find a Pelican in London, as a decent Stage-Carpenter while the Pantomimes are on. All the good men in that wise are so engaged, that when I brought out the Frozen Deep at Christmas time,[†1] I was obliged (though the Pantomimes were then above a week old, and in good working order), to make my own stage-carpenters out of my own private materials. It has occurred to me however, after a morning of blank despair, that one of Albert Smith's[†2] men — they are all ingenious, and of the best character — may be at liberty, by reason of the closing of their establishment.[†3] I have sent John off to the Egyptian Hall to enquire, and have given him directions that such carpenter, if available, must write to you tonight, and report himself according to your Memorandum of instructions. Such Memorandum I have confided to said John for carpenterial enlightenment.

Ever Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

To GEORGE LAKE, 27 DECEMBER 1859*

MS Guildhall Museum, Rochester.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Tuesday Twenty Seventh December, 1859

My Dear Sir

I beg to thank you for your note. I have also heard from Barber, who tells me that the accident[†4] has been all set right.

If it be any comfort to you to know that, during the hard frost, this house — usually a warm one — was so cold that we could hardly bear it, you may be assured of the fact. We have never found Gad's Hill Place cold in the winter time; nor do we think that you will do so, unless it be in very exceptional weather.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

G. Lake Esquire.

To R. H. PATTERSON,[†1] 27 DECEMBER 1859*

MS The Executors of Louisa Patterson.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Tuesday Twenty Seventh December 1859

My Dear Sir

Allow me to thank you very earnestly for your kind note, and for the copy of the Press[†2] you had the goodness to send me. It is scarcely necessary for me to add that I am not only personally gratified by the article to which you have called my attention,[†3] but that I regard its protest as honorable to Literature, and conceived and executed in a spirit becoming a gentleman who loves and follows it.

I am so far at a disadvantage (or an advantage) in the matter, that I have never seen one word of the paper which does me the honor to make me a part of its stock in trade.[†4] Hearing by chance that it did so when it began its course, I followed my invariable rule of doing what I have to do in this world, without rushing on irritations that can be blamelessly escaped. If, however, I may be indebted to it for a personal knowledge of you, I shall (without the faintest idea of ever improving its acquaintance) know something good of it, and quite enough.

Dear Sir | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

R. H. Patterson Esquire.

To JAMES GRIFFIN,[†1] 28 DECEMBER 1859*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Twenty Eighth December 1859

My Dear Griffin

I have looked over your Manuscript with a great desire to accept it, if possible, but I am truly sorry to say that I cannot make any use of it in these pages. Of the public people mentioned in it, I think the public already know as many anecdotes as they care to know; and I have never observed them to be much interested in the Side-Scenes of newspaper business.

It is with great reluctance that I decline it; but I feel so sure of its not suiting this Journal, that I have no alternative.

Accept my thanks for your offer, and my good wishes for your success elsewhere in the reversal of that Eastern process. They are not leaves of paper — by the way — that the Enchanter dealt with, but leaves of trees.[†2]

Years ago, I had a similar Manuscript offered for Household Words by Dwyer.[†3] Exactly the same reasons influenced me in that case as in this.

The MS is made into a parcel here, and left in the publishing office addressed in your name. But it shall be returned by Parcels' Delivery, if you approve of that course.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

James Griffin Esquire

To MRS GORDON SMYTHIES, 28 DECEMBER 1859*

MS Mr Theodore A. Langstroth.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Wednesday Twenty Eighth December, 1859

My Dear Mrs. Gordon Smythies

I am delighted to find that Monday evening seemed so short to you, and that you liked it so well.†4

Unfortunately, I am away, early tomorrow morning, for Wales:†5 whence I must get back in time for next Monday. I have given your remembrance to Sydney Smith's namesake (the small admiral with the large eyes), and he has acknowledged it in neat and appropriate terms. It was my oldest daughter whom you saw on Monday night.

Believe me always | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Gordon Smythies

To THOMAS ADOLPHUS TROLLOPE, 28 DECEMBER 1859*

MS Robert H. Taylor Collection, Princeton University.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Twenty Eighth December 1859

My Dear Mr. Trollope

The Pope in Account†1 is published to day, and I purpose going on, in the next No. I make up, with Vittoria Accoramboni†2 — a very admirable history.†3 The Lottery Story†4 I am obliged to hold back a little, because of the great difficulty of having two fictions of any length, both going on together. But I am merely watching a good time for getting in.

Allow me to enclose a cheque for £20 on account — to hope that you will send me contributions as often as you are in the vein — and to add (though I hope it is unnecessary) that I am, with much regard

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Will you give my kind remembrance to your good mother.

To THE SECRETARY, UNKNOWN INSTITUTION, 28 DECEMBER 1859*

MS Private.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Twenty Eighth December 1859

Sir

I cannot have the pleasure of attending your festival this year now coming on, as I am otherwise engaged. But I am happy to give you full authority to republish the paper to which your note refers.[†5]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To THOMAS BEARD, 31 DECEMBER 1859

MS Dickens House. Address: With Half a Dozen Bottles | Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Place.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Saturday Night | Thirty First December, 1859

My Dear Beard

I send up my best wishes to my dear old friend for a happy new Year, and many happier years. And I send with them, half a dozen of an old liqueur brandy not easy to get. Remember me in it!

Ever Faithfully and affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Beard Esquire

To THE EARL OF DERBY,[†1] [1859]

Mention in next. Date: presumably within a few days of that letter.

To W. HEPWORTH DIXON, 1859*

MS George S. MacManus Co., Pennsylvania.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Afternoon 1859

My Dear Dixon

I shall be here at eleven on Monday, and for two or three hours afterwards. Tomorrow and Saturday, I work at home; but I scarcely need add, shall be ready to see you if you call at Tavistock House.

The money, safely received.

It was very kind of you to go down to St. Peters[†2] so promptly. I am much concerned by your misgiving that the poor girl has trouble visibly before her.

I have written to Ld. Derby for a continuation of half the pension,[†3] and have received for answer that it can't be done.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Hepworth Dixon Esquire

To MISS HARRIET HANCOCK, DECEMBER 1859*

MS Huntington Library. Date: dated Dec 59 by CD on half-title page (see below).

H. H.[†1] | From | C. D. | December 1859

In case you should need any mental ballast for your journey, please accept this. You will find it extremely effective in that direction.[†2]

To R. SHELTON MACKENZIE,[†3] [?AUGUST-DECEMBER 1859]

Summary in Shelton Mackenzie, Life of CD, p. 220. Date: copy of the 1859 edn of R. A. Locke's Moon Hoax (see below), probably sent to CD Aug-Dec 59, after publisher's advt of 1 Aug.

Acknowledging a copy of Mr. Locke's celebrated "Moon Hoax",[†4] CD said that he was at work when it reached him — that he carelessly looked into it, and was attracted by the matter-of-fact character of the narrative — that he did not lay it down until he had read every line of it, and that, for the first ten minutes, he thought it really was, what it purported to be, a bona fide scientific report by Sir John Herschel[†5] ... Since Captain Lemuel Gulliver and Robinson Crusoe, there has not been any story so very like truth as this.[†6]

To FREDERIC OUVRY, [1859]

Extracts in F, X, iii, 840 and[aa]) Anderson Auction catalogue No. 703 (1908); MS 1 p.; dated London, 1859.

[a]My Dear Ouvry[a]

Your modesty is equal to your merit. [a]You play whist as well as you narrate a story and (without flattery) you do the latter in a most admirable manner.[a] I think your way of describing that rustic courtship in middle life quite matchless.... A cheque for £1000 is lying with the publisher. We would willingly make it more, but that we find our law charges so exceedingly heavy.

To DR WILLIAM SMITH, 1859

Extract in Thomas Thorp catalogue 337 (1921); dated Tavistock House, 1859; addressed Dr William Smith.

I am perfectly sure that Dr. Kinkel[†1] has done what was natural and quite unavoidable in such a case[†2].... I hope, when I come back I shall endeavour to see him, and either in English or French (I don't know German) make out a conversation with him.

1860

January

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 1 JANUARY 1860

MS Dickens House.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Sunday New Year's Day 1860.

My Dearest Georgy.

I don't feel quite so well today, but I think it is the Medicine.

Enclosed is a letter for Sydney from young Bromley.[†3] Sir Richard[†4] writes me that the visit is obliged to be put off, by reason of Lady Bromley[†5] being exceedingly ill, and the household in great anxiety and confusion.

Tell Barber that the Green House is to be repaired according to the estimate he has sent me, but that I think the painting had best not be done until he gets his plants planted out in the spring.

Wills having Miss Coutts's box, I went to Drury Lane again last night[†6] — read after coming home, and sending loving New Year to Gad's Hill — and did not get to bed until half past one!

Best love to Mamie.

Also to the boys and Miss Crawford.[†7]

Ever dearest Georgy | Your most affectionate

CD.

To LORD JOHN RUSSELL,[†1] 1 JANUARY 1860.†

MS New York University Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
New Year's Day 1860.

My Dear Lord John Russell

I wish you and yours many happy New Years for all your sakes, and for mine, and for England's.

It is very kind of you to think of me in such an interesting association.[†2] I cannot tell you how much I would have liked to come. But unfortunately I am in the Doctor's hands for a few days, and am shut up here after dark, by his orders. I must not even go through the net, to Gad's Hill.

I beg to send my kindest regards to my Lady[†3] and all the house.[†4]

To TOM TAYLOR,[†5] 1 JANUARY 1860*

MS Mr H. Goldwater.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Sunday First January 1860

My Dear Taylor

Many happy New Years to you and yours!

I have been in Wales these last few days, and received your note only last night when I came home. The suggestion is an admirable one — I thoroughly concur in it[†6] — and will not fail to write to Celeste today. She had an idea (she told me) that Mr. Johnson[†7] was her man for the Doctor.[†8] I went to see him in a fearful play called Paris and Pleasure,[†9] and found him to be a rough melodramatic actor who would do well enough for Defarge, but is not to be thought of in the same century with such an artist as Wigan.[†10]

Will you call upon me at the Office of All The Year Round (a few yards from the Theatre: at the corner of York Street) before you read the piece tomorrow? I have a stage notion for the last Scene, that I could have made a great deal of, if I had done the piece with amateurs. It is very easy and frightfully suggestive![†11] I will be at the Office by half past eleven.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Tom Taylor Esquire

To MADAME CELESTE, 1 JANUARY 1860

Mention in To Taylor, 1 Jan 60. Date: no doubt written same day.

To CHARLES LEVER, 2 JANUARY 1860

MS Widener Collection, Harvard.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Monday Second January 1860

My Dear Lever.

I am most cordially and heartily obliged to you for your generous letter.[†1] Believe me, I feel it deeply, and prize it more than I can possibly express to you.

If you will write such a story for these pages instead of for those,[†2] I most joyfully take upon myself those proffered terms, whatever they are, with this addition — that if they involve any claim whatever upon, or share in, the Copyright of the story, All The Year Round relinquishes it altogether, and leaves you at liberty to collect and re-publish it, simultaneously with the appearance of the last Chapter in these pages.

It is curious — I should have written to you on this very head, but for the little difficulty of being thus situated:— I am not absolutely certain whether a conditional agreement I have with a writer of the highest repute,[†3] to follow Wilkie Collins, — IF[†4] the MS be ready then — will so fall out as that such story will at once follow his, or, by not being ready, will leave me at liberty to interpose another. The confidence you so handsomely place in me, smooths the way for my making this proposal. Let me have the story, in such portions as best suit your convenience, with the understanding that its publication in All The Year Round, is either to follow Wilkie Collins's immediately, or with one shorter story than his (I apprehend about five or six months long), before it.[†5] Let me pay you for such story, as you write it, precisely as though it were published at once. (Your name shall be published with it, of course,[†6] and every possible means taken to give it publicity.) We cannot commence our private contract too soon for my gratification and contentment; and its public execution is dependent, for the exact time thereof, solely on the one contingency I have explained.

Both the short articles you sent, have been published,[†1] and I enclose a cheque for All The Year Round's debt in respect for them — money-debt, I mean.

My opinion is, that Frederick Chapman[†2] is a monstrous Humbug. He had that book of yours from me — in a blushing waist-coat and gold-laced linen[†3] — weeks ago. He is away now, and be damned to him, "taking his holiday", as he says. He seems to me, to be making holiday one half of his life, and making mistakes the other half, and making money (I suppose) in spite of himself, always.

I hope to hear from you very soon after you receive this, telling me that you are free to come to my open arms.[†4]

To W. C. MACREADY, 2 JANUARY 1860†

MS Morgan Library.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.

Monday Second January 1860.

My Dearest Macready.

A happy New Year to you, and many Happy Years!

I cannot tell you how delighted I was to receive your Christmas letter, or with what pleasure I have received Forster's emphatic accounts of your health and spirit. But when was I ever wrong! And when did I not tell you that you were an Impostor in pretending to grow older as the rest of us do, and that you had a secret of your own for reversing the usual process!

It happens that I read at Cheltenham a couple of months ago,[†5] and that I have rarely seen a place that so attracted my fancy.[†6] I had never seen it before. Also, I believe the character of its people to have greatly changed for the better. All sorts of long-visaged prophets had told me that they were dull, stolid, slow, and I don't know what more that is disagreeable. I found them exactly the reverse in all respects; and I saw an amount of beauty there — well — that is not to be more specifically mentioned to you young fellows.

Katie[†7] dined with us yesterday, looking wonderfully well, and singing "Excelsior" with a certain dramatic fire in her, whereof I seem to remember having seen sparks afore now. [†a]Forster was a leetle ferocious at dinner, but calmed down afterwards. Lord! I wish you could have seen him in Montagu Square a fortnight or so ago, concerning some Oysters that the Fish-monger had opened tardily!

I suppose Samuel Carter Hall[†1] will introduce Katie to no end of rapping spirits.[†2] He is making an Ass of himself in that regard, quite worthy of his character, conversation, collars, and snuffbox.[†a]

With kindest love from all at home to all with you,

Ever My Dearest Macready | Your most affectionate

CHARLES DICKENS

To MADAME CELESTE, 5 JANUARY 1860*

MS Winifred A. Myers (Autographs) Ltd.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Thursday Fifth January 1860.

My Dear Madame Celeste.

On the other side,[†3] I send you, from my book The Tale of Two Cities, my own fancy of the Carmagnole.[†4]

I shall be happy to come and see the Burlesque,[†5] next Tuesday evening, if that will suit you.

Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

To WILLIAM CULLENFORD,[†6] [5 JANUARY 1860]

Envelope only in Sotheby catalogue Dec 1964. Address: Mr. Cullenford | T. R.[†7] Haymarket | S. W. PM 5 Jan 60.

To LORD CLARENCE PAGET,[†8] 5 JANUARY 1860*

MS Dickens House.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Thursday Fifth January 1860.

My Lord.

