It is safely awaiting me on my own desk in my own quiet room. I cannot thank you for it too cordially, and cannot too earnestly assure you that I shall always prize it highly. The terms in which you send me that mark of your remembrance are more gratifying to me than I can possibly express to you; for they assure me that there is nothing but goodwill left between me and a People for whom I have a real regard, and to whom I would not wilfully have given an offence or done an injustice for any worldly consideration.

Believe me | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To SHIRLEY BROOKS, 2 MARCH 1867

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

Leeds | Saturday Second March 1867

My Dear Brooks

Just now I am here, there, everywhere, and nowhere, all at once. Your note has been imitating me at a respectful distance, and has at last emerged from the smoke of this place. Many thanks for it. I had seen the article,[†1] and had laughed heartily at it, and knew pretty well what Roman[†2] hand had turned it.[†3]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Shirley Brooks Esquire

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 2 MARCH 1867*

MS Huntington Library.

Leeds | Saturday Second March 1867

My Dearest Georgy

I was very glad indeed to receive your account of the first beneficial effect of Gad's on Charley Collins; and I most earnestly hope it will last. Of course when you write next, you will report further. Meantime my best love to him and to Katie.

In these parts we have fine bright cold weather, with white frost lying all day long in the shady places. Marigold and Trial have been going as usual. Our plans are so far changed as that we are going back to York to day, and do not leave it for Newcastle until tomorrow at 6 in the evening. It is easier to get on from York than from here, Dolby discovers. But as we come to Newcastle, after all, on the same day as we at first intended it will make no material difference in the addresses of our letters.

I think I mentioned to you that Mr. Harrington[†4] is now Master of the Post Office at York. I am sorry to say that he gave me — with tears — an account of E.Y.'s[†5] behaviour to him[†6] which presented the said E. Y. in a most repulsive, thankless, and odious light. Harrington is established in a very comfortable and pretty little house. I went home with him to see his wife. She is passée, with the remains upon her of a kind of beauty. But she too wears a wig; and it was rather comical to see the two wigs presiding at lunch opposite one another.

Dolby's baby[†1] is constantly reported better and better. In consequence of missing a letter from his wife, he took fright about the child yesterday afternoon, and telegraphed furiously. However, it was all right. He has all of a sudden developed a faculty for mimicry and imitates Harrington relating his woes about Edmund, in a most ludicrous and exact manner. [I notice that when he does this, he never stammers, by any chance whatever.][†2]

I am wonderfully well, and not tired. — Triumphantly got a loose back tooth out, last night — came over here (five and thirty minutes by train) to supper after the Reading — and got up at breakfast time as fresh as possible. Thank God.

Will you post the enclosed mysterious missive to Frank, as I do not remember his address?

The Buckles[†3] have been duly provided for.[†4]

Ever My Dearest Georgy | Your most affectionate

CD.

To W. C. MACREADY, 3 MARCH 1867*

MS Morgan Library.

York, Sunday Third March 1867

My Dearest Macready

This is your birthday,[†5] and I send you my most affectionate and long-cemented love, and my best wishes. The same to Mrs. Macready, and Katie, and the brilliant boy.[†6] Many Happy Returns of the Day to us all!

Dolby is now writing to Cheltenham to engage the room (if he can) for Friday evening the 5th. and Saturday morning the 6th. of April. Of course for the evening Reading I shall put up the Trial, after Marigold, expressly for you.[†7]

Ever My Dearest Macready | Your most affectionate

CD.

To THE REV. C. H. TOWNSHEND, [?3 MARCH 1867]

Mention in To Miss Hogarth, 4 Mar. Date: written the day before.

To MRS ELLIOT, 4 MARCH 1867

MS Huntington Library.

Newcastle on Tyne | Monday Fourth March 1867

My Dear F.

You know what a life this present life of mine is, and therefore I will not explain why I have not written sooner. The Bath people, I may mention at once, quite disappointed me.![†1] They proved to be a remarkably delicate and discriminating audience; very earnest too, and expressing themselves accordingly.

All things being "in a concatenation accordingly,"[†2] Dolby is going to bring me to Clifton on Tuesday the 2nd. April. I dont myself care for it as a particularly good place or time, but "it lies in our way", he says. Therefore if you don't hear from me to the contrary, I shall hope that you will come round to me that evening. If you and the Dean will come and have a half hour's supper with us afterwards, I shall be delighted. Of course I am away again the first thing next morning. — For Cardiff.[†3]

Charley Collins is trying to recover from his illness, at Gad's Hill; where Georgina is keeping house for him and Katie. It has done him good at first; but I am not confident that any thing will do him much good for long together. Mary is in Hampshire.[†4] I am here, there, everywhere, and nowhere. Next week I go to Ireland. If you ever write, address me "Private", at the Office. All goes well with me, Thank God, and I turn this very day the half of my Fifty Readings. They are made as easy to me as such a Course (under such circumstances of absence) possibly can be.

I hope you are a little brighter in spirit than when I heard from you at Bath?

Ever affectionately

CD.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 4 MARCH 1867*

MS Huntington Library.

Station Hotel, Newcastle | Monday Fourth March 1867

My Dearest Georgy

I have both your packets of letters, and your accompanying note. Two of the letters I send you back for your perusal; one from Katie Macready which has an ill look, I fear; one, sufficiently incoherent, from old Andrew.[†5]

The bright cold weather has turned to damp here to day, and the coal smoke of this place is oppressive in the air. I am still perfectly well. Dolby is laid up with a cold in the body, head, face, and throat: which I devoutly hope I may not catch! He couldn't go through the action of eating, this morning, and has declared upon beeftea — to be administered by the landlady at noon.

It seems to me that nothing is more likely than that all Charley Collins's miseries do really originate in that diffused gout. It simulates all sorts of disorders, and unquestionably is his inheritance. I am afraid, therefore, that Gad's may not do him permanent good. Best love to him and Katie.

I am very sorry to lose[†1] Hodder.[†2] Concerning the dessert service I am entirely of your mind. But the commission has gone too far to be handsomely receded from now. If I had had the slightest idea of its cost, I should as soon have thought of buying Strood Turnpike.

No news yet of the Winter family.[†3] I live in a tremble. The ferocious Buckle evidently set his tremendous countenance dead against the Readings; for even Mrs. Buckle cannot in the least explain why they don't come.[†4]

Ever My Dearest Georgy | Your most affectionate

CD.

I achieved a letter to Chauncy at York yesterday.

To ROBERT COWTAN,[†5] 5 MARCH 1867

Extract in N, III, 513 (from catalogue source).

Newcastle-on-Tyne | 5th March, 1867

I am engaged on a course of 50 readings and your letter followed me here last night. You may imagine how very little time I have under these circumstances for correspondence.

To W. H. RUSSELL, 5 MARCH 1867

MS Beinecke Library, Yale University

Newcastle on Tyne | Tuesday Fifth March 1867

My Dear Russell

Your letter reached me in these coaly regions, last night.

I am working my way through a course of 50 Readings, and am constantly here, there, everywhere, and nowhere. When I make a descent on London it is only for a night's Reading at St. James's Hall, and in the morning I am away again. Add to these small occupations, a pursuing shower of proof sheets from All The Year Round and — given these data — find my time for the Correspondence of a Secretary of State.

Pray tell Mr. Stephen Massett[†6] that I have never had his letter. It may have pursued me and lost me, or it may have been confidentially opened at the office and laid aside, but I have never had it. Even if it had reached me, however, I should have been quite helpless under these circumstances; for I have barely leisure to write home, and no leisure whatever to make any appointment. I hope Mr. Massett will receive this, as a sufficient explanation that I cannot have slighted him or shewn him any discourtesy.

It is highly satisfactory to me as a Briton to find that the constituted authorities are refreshing themselves with draughts of legal advice from the fountain-head.[†1] For Heaven's sake keep the Lion and Unicorn[†2] straight. With you behind the Woolsack,[†3] and Brown behind the closet-door,[†4] [†a]nought can make us rue &c if England to herself do prove but &c.[†a]

— You made me laugh so last night[†5] that I nearly choked myself with an oyster. My unforgiveness and vengeance to your charming daughter.[†6]

Ever Cordially Yours My Dear Russell
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 6 MARCH 1867†

MS Huntington Library. Address (Sotheby's catalogue, Feb 1989): Miss Hogarth | Gad's Hill Place | Higham | by | Rochester. PM Newcastle-on-Tyne, 6 Mar 67.

Newcastle on Tyne | Wednesday Sixth March 1867

My Dearest Georgy.

[†b] As we do not go over to Leeds until between 1 and 2 to day, I write this, and will post this, from here.[†b]

The Readings have made an immense effect in this place, and it is remarkable that although the people are individually rough, collectively they are an unusually tender and sympathetic audience; while their comic perception is quite up to the high London standard.[†7] The atmosphere is so very heavy that yesterday we escaped to Tynemouth for a two hours sea-walk. There was a high North wind blowing, and a magnificent sea running. Large vessels were being towed in and out over the stormy bar, with prodigious waves breaking on it; and, spanning the restless uproar of the waters, was a quiet rainbow of transcendant beauty. The scene was quite wonderful. We were in the full enjoyment of it when a heavy sea caught us, knocked us over, and in a moment drenched us and filled even our pockets. We had nothing for it but to shake ourselves together (like Doctor Marigold) and dry ourselves as well as we could, by hard-walking in the wind and sunshine. But we were wet through for all that, when we came back here to dinner after half an hour's railway ride.

I am wonderfully well, and quite fresh and strong. Have had to doctor Dolby for a bad cold; have not caught it (yet); and have set him on his legs again. †bThe little baby is at length reported free from bronchitis, and is allowed to go back to her nursery. She was taken ill in the Dining Room and has remained there all this time.

Thank Heaven there have been no signs, either of Mrs. Winter, or "dear Mr. W."†1 I have been beset by some very importunate (and I believe very good) photographers here, but Dolby has kept perpetual guard, and has rescued me. He has a rock ahead in his speech just now, which he can not get over. This is, Cambridge. We go there, soon after Ireland, and it has begun to get in his way Fifty times a day. I sit placidly munching at table, and he tries it — Ca-a-a-a-and then Car-ar-ar-ar, and then Caw-aw-aw-ar-o — and then shoots it out with a suddenness that seems to frighten and astonish him. It's a mercy we are not going to Oxford, for at one time that Seat of learning was horribly obstructive to him, and what he would have done between the two I can't imagine. He is often under a frightful temptation to tell stories about "Jack Patey"†2 — one of the most unfortunate heroes he could possibly have. For when he has with great difficulty achieved Ja-a-a-ack — Patey takes all sorts of sounds but the right one. And it's not of the least use my blandly handing him "Patey", for he is under an enchanted necessity to begin with Ja-a-a-ack, all over again. He is really a capital fellow, and Master of what he has to do. He is none the worse for laying about him in a slashing manner on the least sign of any thing amiss. I notice that a man who is short of his duty-mark in any way, gives him a very wide berth always. I notice another sharp practice in him. Headland, and even poor Arthur, used to leave the money-takers to "make up their money". He pounces into their boxes and carries it away, drawer and all, bodily, about five minutes after I begin. So they have no time or power to make a balance with the check-takers, and are swooped upon when, if they have taken a shilling, it must be found deficient. It is curious that under this pouncing system there is often too much in the drawer by a few shillings.†b

Scott is striking the tents and loading the baggages, so I must deliver up my writing desk. †bYour home news is very entertaining, surprising, and disconcerting.†b We meet, please God, on Tuesday. Until then and ever afterwards

†bMy Dearest Georgy | Your most affectionate

CD.

Did I tell you that poor dear Macready is ill of a carbuncle in the head, and that I have heard both from Katie and Mrs. Macready?†b

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 6 MARCH 1867*

MS Huntington Library

Leeds | Wednesday Evening Sixth March | 1867.

My Dearest Georgy.

I have only time to send you Sydney's letter. It is most extraordinary, but it seems as though he never were to receive the news of his Time!

Wills has somehow omitted Wakefield from the printed list in A.Y.R.[†1] I read there tomorrow night.[†2] Am here tonight en route. That is the explanation.

All your letters have come to hand. Best love to Charley and Katie. Delighted to hear of the beneficial change in both.

Ever affecy.

CD.

To [MESSRS TICKNOR & FIELDS], [?EARLY MARCH 1867]

Extract in Pall Mall Gazette, 7 May 67. Date: presumably a week or two before 20 Mar, when he told Chapman of Ticknor & Fields's generosity.

I think you know how high and far beyond the money's worth I esteem this act of manhood, delicacy, and honour. I have never derived greater pleasure from the receipt of money in all my life.[†3]

To THE TOWN CLERK OF BLACKBURN,[†4] [EARLY MARCH 1867]

Note dictated by CD for Dolby to send, given in Dolby, CD as I Knew him, p. 80. Date: "a month or two" before his reading at Blackburn, 26 Apr, according to Dolby.

In acknowledging the receipt of your letter[†5] I have to inform you that the subject matter of Mr Dicken's Readings is to be found in a long row of books published by Messrs Chapman and Hall, in Piccadilly, London.

To MRS THOMAS FITZGERALD,[†6] 7 MARCH 1867

Text from N, III, 514.

Leeds | Thursday, Seventh March, 1867

My Dear Mrs Fitzgerald
Your kind and welcome letter reached me here last night. I cannot tell you how highly I esteem it, or how cordially I reciprocate your friendly regard.

But I must not allow myself to break my rule of always living with my secretary at an hotel on these occasions. My inflexible self-denial in this respect has had much to do with the establishment of a system among the three attendants who travel with us, which otherwise must have become less exact and punctual. Knowing that I am never away, they are always at their posts. In the continual hurry, fatigue, and change of this episodical life, its wear and tear is reduced to the smallest possible amount by its machinery never varying in the least. And I am so fortunate in the zeal and loyalty of my travelling companion, Mr Dolby, that I should regard myself as a sort of deserter from my colours if I left him to do this anxious work alone. For all these reasons I never promise myself while thus engaged to make a visit; and even in the case of my old friend, Mr Macready, at Cheltenham, a little while ago, I acted on the Spartan principles which at this present writing are making me very uncomfortable, and with which I have no natural sympathy whatever.

In regard to your son Percy (whom, I hope, by-the-bye, to prevail upon to go with me to Belfast) let me honestly assure you that my editorial existence has had no pleasanter incident in it than its having made me acquainted with his very great abilities, and having made us private friends. It is impossible that he can have a more interested or appreciative reader than he has in me, and no man ever sets foot in my house whom I better like to see there. My daughter and her aunt shall have your messages.

Believe me, with best regards to all your house, | Very faithfully yours

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To MISS MARY DICKENS, [7 MARCH 1867]

Mention in next. Date: written same day.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 7 MARCH 1867†

MS Huntington Library.

Leeds | Thursday Morning Seventh March | 1867

My Dearest Georgy

This is a kind of postscript to my letter of yesterday.

Will you bring with you to town on Tuesday:

A good pair of walking boots

A pair of dark kid walking gloves,

A new long black neck-scarf (in a box, there are several)

†a I have had a really charming letter from Mrs FitzGerald, asking me to stay there. She must be a perfectly unaffected and genuine lady. There are kind messages to you and Mary in it. I have sent it on to Mary by this post, and have asked her to write some words of acknowledgment. She will probably in her turn send it on to you.†a

It is snowing hard here, but the snow does not lie long on the ground. Still it is not a very brilliant prospect for Wakefield tonight.

Best love to Katie and Charley
Ever My Dearest Georgy | Your most affectionate
CD.

To G. LINNAEUS BANKS,[†1] 9 MARCH 1867

Extract in Sophie Dupré catalogue, June 1985; MS 1 p.; dated Office of AYR, 9 Mar 67; addressed G. Linnaeus Banks.

Asking Banks if the words "Mr. Heraud was the pioneer of cheap literature at a time when it was an experiment and not a success", [are][†2] quite exact and well-considered? And would not that clause in the last paragraph ... ending "recognition of his services" be better out, as travelling beyond the case, which is seldom desirable?[†3] Sending his regards to Mrs Banks[†4] and thanking her for a book[†5] with its to me highly gratifying inscription.

To MRS S. C. HALL,[†6] 12 MARCH 1867*

MS Benoliel Collection.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Twelfth March 1867

My Dear Mrs Hall.

I have been reading in the North of England (and indeed in all the points of the compass), and receive your letter only this very day.

The child in whom you are so kindly interested shall have my vote most readily.[†7] But I am forced to reply that I cannot do more for him, however good my inclination. In plain truth I have not the leisure or the spare attention for the enormous correspondence that would be heaped upon my head, if I undertook to answer for the case or to receive votes in its behalf. I occupied such a position once, and I placed it thenceforth among the many way-side places that cannot be stopped at in a working life.

Do not measure my recognition of your claim on my remembrance by the brevity of my reply. And believe that I am, with kind regard to Hall,[†8]

Faithfully Your friend
CHARLES DICKENS

To WILKIE COLLINS, 13 MARCH 1867

MS Morgan Library.

Office, Thirteenth March 1867

My Dear Wilkie

By all means let Reade see my letter.[†1]

This from a disconsolate Voyager with the Fenians before him.[†2] I should as soon have thought of going to Ireland at this time, out of my own head, as of going to read at — what was its name in those geological periods when you sprained your foot?[†3] — Aspatria?[†4] But Chappell's head thinks differently.

Glad to hear of our friend Régnier.[†5] As Carlyle would put it:— "A deft and shifty little man, brisk and sudden, of a most ingenious carpentering faculty, and not without constructive qualities of a higher than the Beaver sort. Withal an actor, though of a somewhat hard tone. Think pleasantly of him O ye children of men!"

Ever UnPatrick-iotically

CD.

To MAJOR GENERAL ARTHUR CUNYNGHAME,[†6] 15 MARCH 1867

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, Oct 1978; MS 1 p.; addressed General Arthur Cunynghame; dated 15 Mar 67.

Dublin | Friday Fifteenth March | 1867

My Dear Sir

I am heartily glad to hear of you again. Thanking him for his invitation which he would have been delighted to accept but that I "Read" tonight[†7] and explaining that when he is so engaged, which is but occasionally I thank my stars, all social pleasure is denied me, and I lead a mere working life.

To JOHN FORSTER, [15 MARCH 1867]

Extract in F, VIII, vii, 706-7*n*. Date: 15 Mar 67, according to Forster; written from Dublin.

So profoundly discouraging were the accounts from here[†1] in London last Tuesday that I held several councils with Chappell about coming at all; had actually drawn up a bill announcing (indefinitely) the postponement of the readings; and had meant to give him a reading to cover the charges incurred — but yielded at last to his representations the other way. We ran through a snowstorm nearly the whole way, and in Wales got snowed up, came to a stoppage, and had to dig the engine out.... We got to Dublin at last, found it snowing and raining, and heard that it had been snowing and raining since the first day of the year.... As to outward signs of trouble or preparation, they are very few. At Kingston our boat was waited for by four armed policemen, and some stragglers in various dresses who were clearly detectives. But there was no show of soldiery. My people carry a long heavy box containing gas-fittings. This was immediately laid hold of; but one of the stragglers instantly interposed on seeing my name, and came to me in the carriage and apologised.... The worst looking young fellow I ever saw, turned up at Holyhead before we went to bed there, and sat glooming and glowering by the coffee-room fire while we warmed ourselves. He said he had been snowed up with us (which we didn't believe), and was horribly disconcerted by some box of his having gone to Dublin without him. We said to one another "Fenian": and certainly he disappeared in the morning, and let his box go where it would.[†2]

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 15 MARCH 1867

MS Berg Collection. Address: Miss Hogarth | Gad's Hill Place | Higham | by | Rochester.

Shelburne Hotel[†3] Dublin | Friday Fifteenth March 1867

My Dearest Georgy.

We made our journey through an incessant snow storm on Wednesday night — at last got snowed up among the Welsh Mountains in a tremendous storm of wind — came to a stop — and had to dig the engine out! We went to bed at Holyhead, at 6 in the morning of Thursday, and got aboard the Packet[†4] at 2 yesterday afternoon. It blew hard, but as the wind was right astern, we "only" rolled and did not pitch much. As I walked about on the Bridge all the 4 hours, and had cold salt beef and biscuit there, and brandy and water, you will infer that my channel training has not worn out.

Our business here is very bad,[†5] though at Belfast it is enormous. There is no doubt that great alarm prevails here. This hotel is constantly filling and emptying, as families leave the country, and set in a current to the Steamers. There is apprehension of some disturbance between tomorrow night and Monday night (both inclusive),[†1] and I learn this morning that all the drinking shops are to be closed from tonight until Tuesday. Of course you will not be in the least uneasy about me. If any commotion occurs, I shall instantly stop the Dublin Readings, and of course I shall not put myself in harm's way. It is rumoured here that the Liverpool people are very uneasy about some apprehended disturbance there at the same time. Very likely you will know more about this than I do, and very likely it may be nothing.[†2] There is no doubt whatever that alarm prevails, and the Manager of this Hotel, an intelligent German,[†3] is very gloomy on the subject. On the other hand, there is feasting going on, and I have been asked to dinner parties by divers civil and military authorities.

Don't you be uneasy, I say once again. You may be absolutely certain that there is no cause for it. We are splendidly housed here, and in great comfort.

Ever affecy.

CD.

Love to Charley and Katey.

To MISS MARY DICKENS, 16 MARCH 1867

Extract in MDGH, II, 283-4.

Shelbourne Hotel, Dublin, Saturday, March 16th, 1867.

I daresay you know already that I held many councils in London about coming to Ireland at all, and was much against it. Everything looked as bad here as need be, but we did very well last night after all.

There is considerable alarm here beyond all question, and great depression in all kinds of trade and commerce. To-morrow being St. Patrick's Day, there are apprehensions of some disturbance, and croakers predict that it will come off between to-night and Monday night. Of course there are preparations on all sides, and large musters of soldiers and police, though they are kept carefully out of sight. One would not suppose, walking about the streets, that any disturbance was impending; and yet there is no doubt that the materials of one lie smouldering up and down the city and all over the country. [I have a letter from Mrs. Bernal Osborne this morning, describing the fortified way in which she is living in her own house in the County Tipperary.][†4]

You may be quite sure that your venerable parent will take good care of himself. If any riot were to break out, I should immediately stop the readings here. Should all remain quiet, I begin to think they will be satisfactorily remunerative after all. At Belfast, we shall have an enormous house. I read "Copperfield" and "Bob" here on Monday; "Marigold" and "Trial" at Belfast, on Wednesday; and "Carol" and "Trial" here, on Friday. This is all my news, except that I am in perfect force.

To PERCY FITZGERALD, [16 MARCH 1867]

Mention in To Lord Chief Justice of Ireland, 16 Mar. Date: written same day.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 16 MARCH 1867*

MS Huntington Library.

Shelburne Hotel, Dublin | Saturday Sixteenth March 1867

My Dearest Georgy.

I had your letter last night. After all, we did exceedingly well. We had £120, of which more than half was taken at the doors, and the reception was highly enthusiastic. Should things remain quiet, it is likely enough that we shall be very successful indeed.

I write this, mainly to report that there are no new rumours today. Some of the special correspondents of the newspapers came in last night from the outlying wilds, and reported no signs of any assemblages or stragglers. From Mrs. Bernal Osborne, on the other hand, I have a letter this morning, describing herself as living in a district in a state of "acute rebellion", and as being fortified in her house. She lives in the county Tipperary.

I am going to dine at FitzGerald's to day and tomorrow. Have not seen the menage yet. Gordon[†1] called here yesterday, but I was out. Percy's[†2] people are people of great consideration here, and universally known.[†3]

This is merely to keep you at ease on riotous points.

Love to Charley and Katie

Ever My Dearest Georgy | Your most affectionate

CD.

To THE LORD CHIEF JUSTICE OF IRELAND,[†4] 16 MARCH 1867*

MS Mr L. Wilfred Webb.

Shelbourne Hotel

Saturday Sixteenth March 1867.

My dear Lord Chief Justice

I am truly obliged to you for your kind note, and heartily wish it were in my power to profit by your friendly invitation. But on Wednesday I read in Belfast. Indeed I have but two days in Dublin on which I can dine out (today and tomorrow), and for both I have engaged myself to Percy FitzGerald. To whom by the way I have just written, trying to excuse myself for to day, in consequence of having caught cold in my back in a damp well of a dressing-room last night.

You give me a new interest in Monday evening.[†1]

Believe me always | Faithfully yours,

CHARLES DICKENS

The Lord Chief Justice.

To MRS BERNAL OSBORNE,[†2] 16 MARCH 1867*

MS Mrs John Silcock.

Shelburne Hotel,

Dublin | Saturday Sixteenth March 1867

Dear Mrs. Osborne,

Many thanks for your kind letter, though unfortunately I cannot profit by it. For I leave here on Friday night to get to London with all speed, and have in the mean time to go to Belfast and back, and read here twice and there once. In this distracted flight, I have no daughter with me, or she would have thanked you for herself.

When, when, when, will you be at peace in Ireland and sit under your vines and fig-trees[†3] without hanging revolvers and Enfield rifles on the branches? I feel as if I were in a more than usually incomprehensible dream when I am shown a hosiery establishment in Sackville Street here, from which some scores of young men decamped in the last wretched "risings" to starve in wildernesses or pine in jails. So the notion of your being guarded in your house, and of our getting involved with America (as we shall at last) on this mad head, has a grim absurdity in it of such nightmare breed that I half believe I shall wake presently and wonder how I ever came to invent in my sleep the word "Fenian".

May you and yours come prosperously through it! If you are not a match for a hundred rebels, I am mistaken in your spirit.

Believe me always | Faithfully yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS FERGUSSON,[†4] 17 MARCH 1867

Extract in N, III, 517.

Dublin | 17th March, 1867

Your letter has been forwarded to me here. There is but one honest answer that I can give to it, and that answer is that I cannot make you a writer if you cannot make yourself one. I have many correspondents very near home whom I should be glad to turn into successful authors and authoresses if I could, but transformation is beyond my power. Pray consider that my mere selfish editorial interest must be to discover suitable literary merit if I can.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 17 MARCH 1867†

MS Huntington Library.

Shelbourne Hotel, Dublin
Sunday Seventeenth March 1867

[†a]My Dearest Georgy

Enclosed is Alfred's letter. Will you send it to Plorn?[†a]

Everything remains, in appearance, perfectly quiet here. The streets are gay all day — now that the weather is improved — and singularly quiet and deserted at night. But the whole place is secretly girt in with a military force. Tomorrow night is supposed to be a critical time; but, in view of the enormous preparations, I should say that the chances are at least one hundred to one against any disturbance.

I cannot make sure whether I wrote to you yesterday, and told you that we had done very well at the first reading, after all — even in money. The reception was prodigious, and the Readings are the town talk. But I rather think I did actually write this to you. My doubt on the subject arises from my having deliberated about writing on a Saturday.

The most curious — and for facilities of mere destruction, such as firing houses in different quarters, the most dangerous — piece of intelligence imparted to me on authority, is, that the Dublin domestic men servants as a class are all Fenians.

Ever affecy.

CD.

To F. D. FINLAY, 18 MARCH 1867

MS Comtesse de Suzannet.

Shelbourne Hotel Dublin | Monday Eighteenth March 1867.

My Dear Finlay.

I cannot tell you how grieved I am to receive your letter here to day; not only because of the blank you will make for my selfishness in Belfast, but because of your suffering so much pain and inconvenience from a distressing complaint.[†1] It almost puts me out of heart, and quite puts me off the expedition.

I had seen, with great interest, that Mrs. Finlay would be engaged tomorrow with other company.[†2] You must make a pledge to me for yourself and her, that you will both come to Gad's in the summer. It is a very different place now from the Gad's you knew, and the summer weather there is just suited to you.

You know by this time, I may assume, the importance of always using an open-work cane chair? I can testify that there is nothing like it. Even in this episodical hotel-life, I invariably have my cane chair brought from a bedroom, and give the gorgeous stuffed abominations to the winds.

A horrible fellow-creature (female as I judge) is practising the scales on a bad piano in the next room where the sound is worse than it would be here. It irritates me to that degree, that I feel I shall magnetically irritate you, if I and the scales go on together.

Do let me know when you are satisfied that you are really better. And Believe me ever

Faithfully Your friend

CHARLES DICKENS

Dolby sends kind regard and best thanks.
The Readings making a great noise in Dublin.

To FREDERIC CHAPMAN, 20 MARCH 1867

Text from City Book Auction catalogue, No. 306 (Apr 1945); MS 1 p.; dated Belfast, 20 Mar 67; addressed F. Chapman.

Dear Sir,

I find I cannot get back to the office in time for any business on Saturday. But if it will suit you to come there on Tuesday[†1] at One, I will consider the appointment made. Ticknor and Field's Diamond Edition[†2] I must regard as a quite exceptional American case. Not only because Fields is a personal friend of mine, but because he sent me the other day, quite of his own will a handsome testimonial in acknowledgment of its success.[†3]

Faithfully Yours always,
CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS ELLIOT, 20 MARCH 1867

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

Belfast | Twentieth March 1867

My Dear F.

I seize a moment before the Post goes out at noon, to let you know that Dolby has this morning written to secure the Clifton Rooms for Wednesday the 10th. of April.[†4]

Tremendous success in Ireland here, notwithstanding the Fenian alarms. As to which I hereby predict to you that that matter will soon grow very serious.

Ever affectionately
CD.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 20 MARCH 1867

MS Huntington Library.

Belfast | Wednesday Twentieth March | 1867

My Dearest Georgy

The post goes out at 12, and I have only time to report myself. The snow not lying in the country between this and Dublin, we got here yesterday to our time, after a cold but pleasant journey. FitzGerald came on with us. We had a wonderful crowd at Dublin on Monday, and the greatest appreciation possible. We should have £200 good, in a large Hall here tonight.[†1] But I am perfectly convinced that by far the worst part of the Fenian business is to come yet.

The Champagne is all correct. Will you bring to town with you a bottle of Orange Brandy as well as another bottle of old brandy.

All about the FitzGeralds and everything else, when we meet.

Ever My Dearest Georgy | Your most affectionate
CD.

I have not in the least penetrated the Wills veil,[†2] but I have seen very little of him. He is gone to Kilkenny.[†3]

To MISS MARY DICKENS, 21 MARCH 1867

Extract in MDGH, II, 285.

Belfast, Thursday, March 21st, 1867.

In spite of public affairs and dismal weather, we are doing wonders in Ireland.

That the conspiracy is a far larger and more important one than would seem from what it has done yet, there is no doubt. I have had a good deal of talk with a certain colonel, whose duty it has been to investigate it, day and night, since last September. That it will give a world of trouble, and cost a world of money, I take to be (after what I have thus learned) beyond all question. One regiment has been found to contain five hundred Fenian soldiers every man of whom was sworn in the barrack-yard. How information is swiftly and secretly conveyed all over the country, the Government with all its means and money cannot discover; but every hour it is found that instructions, warnings, and other messages are circulated from end to end of Ireland. It is a very serious business indeed.

I have just time to send this off, and to report myself quite well except for a slight cold.

To THE LORD LIEUTENANT[†1] AND THE MARCHIONESS OF ABERCORN,[†2] 22 MARCH 1867*

MS Brian Lake.

Dublin, Friday Twenty Second March | 1867[†3]

Mr. Charles Dickens begs leave to express through the Aide de Camp in Waiting, his high sense of the courteous consideration of Their Excellencies The Lord Lieutenant and The Marchioness of Abercorn, and his great regret that he cannot have the honor of dining with Their Excellencies; but he is unfortunately obliged to depart from Kingstown to night and to return to London tomorrow morning.

To DR ALFRED ASPLAND,[†4] 22 MARCH 1867*

MS Mr Leonard Bloom.

Dublin, Friday Twenty Second March | 1867

Sir.

Your letter has been forwarded to me here this morning.

I am honored by the request you prefer to me on behalf of the Committee of the Manchester and Salford Discharged Prisoners' Aid Society,[†5] but regret that I cannot possibly comply with it. Every public engagement that I can by any means make for the present season is already made. To add to their number is wholly beyond my power.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Alfred Aspland Esquire

To JOHN FORSTER, [22 MARCH 1867]

Extract in F, VIII, vii, 707. Date: 22 Mar, according to Forster; envelope mentioned in Scheuer catalogue, No. 5 (1929): PM Dublin, 22 Mar 67.

You will be surprised to be told that we have done WONDERS! Enthusiastic crowds have filled the halls to the roof each night, and hundreds have been turned away. At Belfast the night before last we had £246 5*s.* In Dublin to-night everything is sold out, and people are besieging Dolby to put chairs anywhere, in doorways, on my platform, in any sort of hole or corner. In short the Readings are a perfect rage at a time when everything else is beaten down.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 22 MARCH 1867

MS Comtesse de Suzannet.

Dublin, Friday Twenty Second March 1867

My Dearest Georgy. I take it for granted that this hasty note will find you at the office.

We did wonders at Belfast, and took £246..5..0! For this place tonight, everything is sold again and again. The Readings have never made a more brilliant success.

We got back here to dinner last evening, after an extremely cold journey. It then began to snow furiously, and snowed all night. But the wind at length changed this morning to S.W. and very little of the snow remains in the streets.

Finlay's wife is a very prepossessing little Scotch girl. Something remarkably pleasant both in her face and speech. A very natural manner. I was greatly pleased with her. He is very ill in Edinburgh under a Scotch Surgeon. Has had two trying operations performed — is going to suffer under another — and is greatly reduced and cast down. I am afraid he is not naturally strong enough to bear so much.[†1]

I shall be at the office in good time on Tuesday forenoon. Orderlies were riding all over the streets yesterday bearing invitations for a grand dinner at the Castle in my honor tomorrow. Of course on finding the card awaiting me I begged "through the Aide de Camp in waiting, to express my high sense of the courteous consideration of the Lord Lieutenant and the Marchioness of Abercorn, and my great regret that I could not have the honor of dining with Their Excellencies, as I must return to London by Saturday Morning's Mail."

[Fitz][†2]Gerald.

Ever My Dearest Georgy | Your most affectionate

CD.

To MISS BLAKE,[†3] 26 MARCH 1867*

MS Dickens House.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Twenty Sixth March 1867

My Dear Miss Blake

In the hurry and confusion of leaving Dublin, I left your letter unanswered at the same time. I cannot now send you a mere common autograph-signature, as my cold reply to so warm-hearted and earnest a communication. I thank you for it with all my heart, because I feel its worth, and because I hope I esteem as I should the privilege of being so addressed. There is no higher reward on earth than to receive such a tribute.

Believe me | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To W. C. MACREADY, 26 MARCH 1867*

MS Morgan Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Twenty Sixth March 1867

My Dearest Macready

Although your letter gives me the welcome assurance that you are greatly better, it dashes the plans I have been devising with Dolby for your having a sofa of state, in that Cheltenham Assembly Room, and thence benignly smiling on the Trial from Pickwick. The innocent public of that lively town will suffer from your absence, as I mean to go on reading the Trial there, at intervals, until you come to hear it. Let them therefore expect no variety from me!

May you be half as well as I hope to find you when I come to report myself.

Ever Your most affectionate

CD.

To THE PRESIDENT OF ST PATRICK'S COLLEGE, MAYNOOTH,[†1] 26 MARCH 1867

MS St Patrick's College, Maynooth.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Twenty Sixth March 1867

Mr Charles Dickens presents his compliments to the President of St. Patrick's College, and begs to express his regret that in the hurry of leaving Dublin, he had not an opportunity of returning the President's visit. Mr Dickens highly appreciated that honor, and takes the liberty of assuring the President that it was very interesting and much esteemed.

To JOHN FORSTER, [28 MARCH 1867]

Mention in next. Date: written previous night.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 29 MARCH 1867†

MS Huntington Library.

Norwich | Friday Twenty Ninth March 1867

My Dearest Georgy.

The reception at Cambridge last night was something to be proud of in such a place. The Colleges mustered in full force from the biggest guns to the smallest, and went far beyond even Manchester in the roars of welcome and the rounds of cheers. All through the Reading, the whole of the Assembly — old men as well as young, and women as well as men — took everything with a heartiness of enjoyment not to be described. The place was crammed, and the success the most brilliant I have ever seen.[†1]

What we are doing in this sleepy old place, I don't know; but I have no doubt it is mild enough.[†2]

[†a]You will probably get a note from Forster about the 2nd. of April[†3] — which I had forgotten! I wrote from Cambridge last night to tell him I am free for that day. If he writes to you to propose a dinner, be sure of my being at the office about noon that day and prepared to take you with me on whatever expedition he may suggest.

Ever My Dearest Georgy | Your most affectionate

CD.[†a]

To J. R. OSGOOD,[†4] 29 MARCH 1867*

MS Buffalo and Erie County Public Library.

Private

Norwich,[†5] Friday Twenty Ninth March 1867

Dear Sir

I shall be happy to write for the Child's Magazine published by your house, four little papers expressly designed for its pages, in consideration of the sum of £1,000.[†6] The length of the whole shall certainly not be less than that of the story called "Hunted Down"[†7] which I wrote, in consideration of the same sum, for a New York paper some few years ago; and shall be more if I find that the series would suffer by condensation within those limits. Your house will believe that nothing would compensate me for slighting my Art.

As to the shortest period within which I can undertake to let you have the whole MS, I cannot at this time with confidence speak. But as to the longest — God willing — I can. The end of October.

I mentioned to you when I had the pleasure of seeing you in London on Wednesday, that I have already promised to write a paper on the same pecuniary terms for a New York periodical,[†1] and that I have named the First of August as the extreme term within which I will redeem that pledge. I hold myself bound to perform my part of that engagement before applying myself to the work that forms the main subject of this communication. It is not at all improbable that I shall complete that paper before July is far advanced, or even earlier. Whensoever it may be finished, I will pass to the execution of this idea for children. In case the payment agreed upon to be made for that other paper should not be forthcoming in the stipulated manner, when the story is produced in a sealed packet at the offices of a certain banker in London (I have no reason whatever to doubt it, but I add the suggestion as one that may possibly be agreeable to you), that story also shall be at your House's service, if you should desire to purchase the copyright of it in America for £1,000.

As you know, I am now engaged on a course of Readings which will occupy me until the middle of May. Having with me only such papers as I am obliged to carry, I cannot send you enclosed, (that there may be no possibility of misunderstanding on the point) a printed copy of the story "Hunted Down", to answer for itself and its dimensions. But I write by this post to my office in London giving directions for a copy to be sent to you.

I have been thus explicit, in order that you may know my mind before we meet on Tuesday, and because I well know that I need have no diplomatic reserve in any case in which my esteemed friend Fields is represented.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

J. S.[†2] Osgood Esquire

To WILLIAM JOHNSON, [29 MARCH 1867]

Text from Goodspeeds Catalogue, No. 55 (Nov 1907); MS 1 p.; dated Norwich, 1867; addressed Johnson. Date: written same day as last.

Dr. Johnson,

Be so good as [to] put together neatly, the whole of my story "Hunted Down" from AYR and enclose it at once to J. [R].[†3] Osgood Esquire, Tavistock Hotel.

Faithfully yours

To R. N. BACON,[†4] 30 MARCH 1867*

Text from transcript by owner, Mrs M. A. Ranken.

Royal Hotel, Norwich | Saturday Thirtieth March 1867

My Dear Sir

Your note was put into my hand at the moment when I had opened my desk for the purpose of writing to you to express my great regret that I did not see you last night. Dolby will have told you how the vexatious mistake arose among our people. I hope you will excuse it, and will attribute the persistency of that obdurate young janitor to his observance of general orders. In the case of such an exception as yourself he is invariably forewarned. Having no such instruction last night, he thought he was doing a highly meritorious action when he was unconsciously causing both you and myself great annoyance. It was only when I was going into the Hall again, after vainly waiting for you, that I discovered what had happened.

Believe me, my dear Sir | Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

R. N. Bacon Esq.

To THE BAR MESS OF THE OXFORD CIRCUIT,[†1] [?LATE MARCH 1867]

Mention in To Mrs Ellicott, 2 Apr 67. Date: probably shortly before that letter.

Regretting that he cannot accept their proffered hospitality during his readings.

To EDMUND YATES, [?END MARCH 1867]

MS (copy by Yates) Robert H. Taylor Collection, Princeton University. Date: Mar 67, according to N, III, 519.

My dear Ed. Yates.

I am exceedingly sorry that I shd.[†2] happen to be away, reading, & therefore unable to help you personally in your renewd. presentation of yourself to the Committee of the S.P.C.K.[†3] But I fear I may not be in London for more than 24 hours together until May is nearly out.

You cannot overstate my recommendn. of you for the Editorship described in the advert.; nor can you easily exaggerate the thorough knowledge of yr. qualifications on which such recommendn. is founded. A man even of your quickness & ready knowledge, wd. be useless in such an office unless he added to his natural and acquired parts, habits of business, punctuality, steadiness & zeal. I so thoroughly rely on you in all these respects & I have had so much experience of you in connexion with them, that perhaps the Committee may deem my testimony in your behalf of some unusual worth.

In any way you think best, make it known to them, and in every way rely on my help if you can show me further how to help you.

With hearty good wishes | Ever Yours

CD.

April

To J. CLOWES,[†1] 1 APRIL 1867*

MS Dickens House.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT

Monday First April, 1867

Dear Sir

Allow me to thank you for your very obliging letter (which I have but now received on coming home from a prolonged absence), and for your proffered hospitality. Unfortunately however, I cannot have the pleasure of coming to Leominster.

I beg to present my compliments to Mrs. Clowes,[†2] and am Dear Sir

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

J. Clowes Esquire

To C. J. RIBTON-TURNER, 1 APRIL 1867*

MS Private.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.

Monday First April, 1867.

Sir

I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your obliging letter.

Allow me to assure you that I shall be very much interested in the result of your researches. I cannot however have the pleasure of associating myself with them, otherwise than as a reader and student of your Dictionary,[†3] inasmuch as my time has already as many demands upon it in advance as I can reasonably recognize.

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

C. J. Ribton Turner Esquire

To WALTER THORNBURY, 1 APRIL 1867

Text from MDGH, II, 286-7.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND
Monday, April 1st, 1867.

My dear Thornbury,

I am very doubtful indeed about "Vaux,"[†4] and have kept it out of the number in consequence.[†5] The mere details of such a rascal's proceedings, whether recorded by himself[†1] or set down by the Reverend Ordinary,[†2] are not wholesome for a large audience, and are scarcely justifiable (I think) as claiming to be a piece of literature. I can understand Barrington[†3] to be a good subject,[†4] as involving the representation of a period, a style of manners, an order of dress, certain habits of street life, assembly-room life, and coffee-room life, etc.;[†5] but there is a very broad distinction between this and mere Newgate Calendar.[†6] The latter would assuredly damage your book,[†7] and be protested against to me. I have a conviction of it, founded on constant observation and experience here.

Your kind invitation is extremely welcome and acceptable to me, but I am sorry to add that I must not go a-visiting. For this reason: So incessantly have I been "reading," that I have not once been at home at Gad's Hill since last January, and am little likely to get there before the middle of May. Judge how the master's eye must be kept on the place when it does at length get a look at it after so long an absence! I hope you will descry in this a reason for coming to me again, instead of my coming to you.

The extinct prize-fighters, as a body, I take to be a good subject,[†8] for much the same reason as George Barrington. Their patrons were a class of men now extinct too, and the whole ring of those days (not to mention Jackson's rooms in Bond Street)[†9] is a piece of social history. Now Vaux is not, nor is he even a phenomenon among thieves.

Faithfully yours always
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To THE SECRETARY, THE PENNY READINGS' COMMITTEE, CHELTENHAM, [?EARLY APRIL 1867]

Summary in the Cheltenham Examiner, 3 Apr 67. Date: probably early in the week in which he gave his readings.[†10]

Thanking the Committee for their compliment in cancelling their own weekly meeting on 5 Apr, since that was the day of his own first reading.[†11]

To GEORGE DOLBY, 2 APRIL 1867*

MS Mr Stefano Anter.

Office,[†1] Tuesday Second April 1867

My Dear Dolby

Many thanks for the tickets, which are far better than chairs. As "one good turn deserves another," I send you enclosed 2 Stalls on the front row, which my daughter finds she does not want.

Also, I send you the Portrait.[†2]

— Cold still bad, but better (I hope) for the Vapour Bath. My set purpose is to come up smiling when Time is called tomorrow.[†3]

Ever Faithfully Yours

CD.

To MRS ELLICOTT,[†4] 2 APRIL 1867

Text from facsimile(aa) in Maggs catalogue No. 449 (1923), and D, XI (1915), 326.

[a]GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.

Tuesday Second April, 1867

Dear Mrs. Ellicott

I am exceedingly obliged to you and the Bishop for the kind invitation with which you have honored me, and which reached me only this morning. For although I date from my Household Gods, I have not set eyes upon them since last Christmas Time, and am little likely to see them until my Fifty Readings are finished. In the meanwhile I am here, there, everywhere, and (principally) nowhere.

Any social pleasure, or anything in the nature of a visit, is wholly incompatible with this episodical life. I am obliged to observe the rule of always living with my Secretary at an[a] Hotel, and never doing anything agreeable between the Readings but rest in strict privacy.

Were I not (very much against my will) a perfect Spartan in this respect, I should never be able to bear the wear and tear. It is but a week since I came back from Ireland in the worst of hard weather, after a very trying week there; since then I have read in London and Cambridge, and Norwich; to-morrow I shall get to Gloucester just in time for an early dinner;[†5] next morning betimes I am away to Swansea, to read there at night,[†6] next morning away to Cheltenham to read there at night, and again next day; and on Monday I read again in London, and start immediately afterwards for Hereford.[†1]

I trouble you with this catalogue of fetters, in the hope of conveying to you and the Bishop an idea of my helpless position while I highly appreciate your proffered hospitality. I have made a similar explanation to the Bar Mess of the Oxford Circuit, and continually make it to numbers of friends (I say nothing of a most abominable cold, because that is the universal experience).

Begging you to make my compliments to the Bishop, and returning you and him many thanks for your remembrance of me.

I am always, | Very faithfully yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Ellicott.

To J. T. FIELDS, 2 APRIL 1867*

MS Dickens House.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Second April, 1867

My Dear Fields

As you ask me what I think of the Illustrations you have published in your pretty and compact Edition of "Our Mutual Friend",[†2] it is a real pleasure to me to tell you that I find them very good.[†3] [†a]They are remarkable for a most agreeable absence of exaggeration, a pleasant sense of beauty, and a general modesty and propriety which I greatly like.[†a]

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

J. T. Fields Esquire

To MRS MACREADY, 4 APRIL 1867*

MS Morgan Library.

Gloucester, Thursday Fourth April, 1867

My Dear Mrs. Macready

As we cannot get to Cheltenham tomorrow until close upon our early dinner-hour, I send you this note to beg you to let Mr. Buckman[†4] (at the Assembly Rooms) know how many stalls he shall send up to your house.[†5] He has received an intimation from Mr. Dolby that you will do so.

On Saturday morning before I read in the day time,[†1] I shall of course come up to see my dear old friend. You will tell me perhaps what is the best time.

I am now off to Swansea, and on Saturday afternoon go up to London to read there (with a most severe cold) on Monday,[†2] and then to come back to Worcester[†3] and Hereford.[†4]

My best love to Macready and to Katie | Ever Your affectionate Friend

CHARLES DICKENS

To CHARLES KENT, 8 APRIL 1867

Mention in Dickens Exhibition, New Dudley Galleries catalogue, 1909; MS 1 p.; dated Office of AYR, 8 Apr 67; addressed Charles Kent.

To MESSRS TICKNOR[†5] & FIELDS, 8 APRIL 1867

MS Widener Collection, Harvard.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.

Monday Eighth April, 1867

Dear Sirs.

I am in the receipt of your letter of the second of this month reciting the terms on which I have arranged with your Mr. Osgood to contribute to your juvenile magazine.[†6] They are stated in that letter with perfect accuracy, and I hereby accept them as binding.

Dear Sirs | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Ticknor and Fields

To THE HON. BENJAMIN WOOD,[†7] 9 APRIL 1867

Text from N, III, 522.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.

Tuesday, Ninth April, 1867

Dear Sir

I have the pleasure of acknowledging the receipt of your letter dated the sixteenth of last month. I pledge myself, in pursuance of my memorandum of agreement already given to Mrs. Atwood, to write the story referred to in that letter and in yours, for the sum of one thousand pounds sterling; the manuscript to be ready for you the first of August at latest and to become yours on the consideration mentioned in my communication to Mrs. Atwood. I hope it will be ready for presentation through Brown, Shipley and Company the first of July.[†1]

Faithfully Yours

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To CHARLES DE LA BARRE BODENHAM,[†2] 10 APRIL 1867

MS Private. Address: C. Bodenham | Esquire | Rotherwas | Hereford.

Worcester | Wednesday Tenth April 1867

Dear Sir

I beg to thank you cordially for your proffered hospitality, and to express my regret that I cannot have the pleasure of accepting it. But when I travel on such hurried and fatiguing business as that which will bring me to Hereford tomorrow, I am obliged to observe the rule of always living at an Hotel with my secretary and never making a visit under any circumstances whatever.

You revive a very pleasant remembrance in my mind when you recall to it your late father[†3] and mother.[†4]

Allow me to present my compliments to Mrs Bodenham.[†5]

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

C. Bodenham Esquire

To WILLIAM JOHNSON,[†6] 12 APRIL 1867†

MS National Széchényi Library, Budapest.

Clifton,[†7] Friday Twelfth April 1867

Dr. Johnson

I find I have omitted a little piece of business that presses. Will you, on receipt of this, [†a]get from the Paymaster General's Office a few printed forms of proof of life, and send them up to Mr. Poole[†a†1] with a note stating that you do so by my direction.

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To VICE ADMIRAL SIR SIDNEY DACRES,[†2] 16 APRIL 1867

Summary in unidentified catalogue; MS 1 p.; dated 16 Apr 67; addressed Vice Admiral Sir Sidney Dacres.

Discussing the condition and prognosis of his son who has been sent home on sick leave suffering from the effects of African Coast fever.

To MESSRS TICKNOR & FIELDS, 16 APRIL 1867

Text from N, III, 523.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday, Sixteenth April, 1867

My Dear Sirs

I have read the newspaper cutting[†3] you have sent me, in which it is stated that I have an interest in — have derived, do derive, or am to derive pecuniary advantage from — certain republications of my collected works in the United States not issued by you. Once for all, receive my personal authority to contradict any such monstrous misrepresentations. If they originate in any distorted shadow of truth, they have been twisted into being from two irrelevant facts: Firstly, That Messrs. Harper of New York, through their agents, Messrs. Sampson, Low & Co.,[†4] of London, purchased advanced sheets of my three latest novels A Tale of Two Cities, Great Expectations, and Our Mutual Friend — as each appeared serially, for simultaneous republication in America. Secondly, that Messrs. Hurd & Houghton[†5] not long since bought of my publishers a hundred impressions of the illustrations to The Pickwick Papers, and have never had any other transaction whatever with them or with me.

In America, the occupation of my life for thirty years is, unless it bears your imprint, utterly worthless and profitless to me.[†1]

Faithfully Yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To F. D. FINLAY, 17 APRIL 1867

MS Comtesse de Suzannet.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Seventeenth April 1867

My Dear Finlay

I am rejoiced to hear of the improvement in your health and hope; and send you this brief word of hearty congratulation. Living habitually as your doctor recommends, I can bear witness to the efficacy of the prescription. As to the cane chair, it is indispensable; and I warrant you will never (when you can help yourself) sit in a chair of another kind, after experiencing its coolness and freshness.

Belfast will always be an agreeable remembrance to me; and if I may send my love to your charming wife, — I do.

Faithfully Yours Ever
CHARLES DICKENS

Frank Finlay Esquire

To THE HON. ROBERT LYTTON, 17 APRIL 1867

MS Lytton Papers.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Seventeenth April 1867

My Dear Robert Lytton

It would have been really painful to me, if I had seen you and yours at a Reading of mine, in right of any other credentials than my own. Your appreciation has given me higher and purer gratification than your modesty can readily believe.[†2] When I first entered on this interpretation of myself (then quite strange in the public ear), I was sustained by the hope that I could drop into some hearts, some new expression of the meaning of my books, that would touch them in a new way. To this hour that purpose is so strong in me, and so real are my fictions to myself, that, after hundreds of nights, I come with a feeling of perfect freshness to that little red table, and laugh and cry with my hearers, as if I had never stood there before. You will know from this what a delight it is to be delicately understood, and why your earnest words cannot fail to move me.

[†a]I beg to send my love (if I may) to Mrs. Lytton.[†1] And my sister in law charges me with more kind regard than this paper will hold, both to you and her. Do believe me to be, as I am,[†a]

[†b]Your genuine admirer | And affectionate friend[†b]
CHARLES DICKENS

To GEORGE DOLBY, 18 APRIL 1867*

MS Dickens House. Address: To be forwarded | George Dolby Esquire.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Eighteenth April, 1867

My Dear Dolby

Can you give me 2 of your tickets on the 3rd. row for the next St. James's Reading?

And I want to put close under me — extra my daughter's stalls — two profoundly deaf personages.

Remember that the bills for the last Reading should stand

The Story of Little Dombey.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To HENRY W. PHILLIPS,[†2] 18 APRIL 1867

Text from MDGH, III, 231.

Gad's Hill, | Thursday, 18th April, 1867

My Dear Mr Phillips,

Although I think the scheme[†3] has many good points, I have this doubt: Would boys so maintained at any one of our great public schools stand at a decided disadvantage towards boys not so maintained? Foundation Scholars, in many cases, win their way into public schools and so enforce respect and even assert superiority. In many other cases their patron is a remote and misty person, or Institution, sanctioned by Time and custom. But the proposed position would be a very different one for a student to hold, and boys are too often inconsiderate, proud, and cruel. I should like to know whether this point has received consideration from the projectors of the design?

Faithfully always yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To CLARKSON STANFIELD, 18 APRIL 1867

MS Public Museum and Art Gallery, Sunderland.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Eighteenth April, 1867

My Dear Stanny

The time of year reminds me how the months have gone, since I last heard from you through Mrs. Stanfield.

I hope you have not thought me unmindful of you in the meanwhile. I have been almost constantly travelling and reading. England, Ireland, and Scotland, have laid hold of me by turns, and I have had no rest. As soon as I had finished this kind of work last year, I had to fall to work upon All The Year Round and the Christmas Number. I was no sooner quit of that task, and the Christmas Season was but run out to its last day, when I was tempted into another course of Fifty Readings that are not yet over. I am here now for two days, and have not seen the place since Twelfth Night. When a Reading in London has been due, I have been brought up for it from some great distance, and have next morning been carried back again. But the Fifty will be "paid out" (as we say at Sea) by the middle of May, and then I hope to see you.

Reading at Cheltenham the other day, I saw Macready, who sent his love to you. He has had a carbuncle in the head, but has suffered little pain; his chief distress having been restlessness. On the whole I thought him the better for that illness. His face was much more massive and as it used to be, than when I saw him previous to its coming on. His wife takes admirable care of him, and is on the happiest terms with his daughter Katie. His boy by the second marriage is a jolly little fellow — and leads a far easier life than the children you and I remember, who used to come in at dessert and have each a biscuit and a glass of water.[†1] In which last refreshment I was always convinced that they drank with the gloomiest malignity, "Destruction to the Gormandizing Grown-Up-Company!"

I hope to look up your latest triumphs[†1] on the day of the Academy Dinner.[†2] Of course, as yet I have had no opportunity of even hearing of what anyone has done. I have been (in a general way) snowed up for four months. The locomotive with which I was going to Ireland was dug out of the snow at midnight, in Wales. Both passages across, were made in a furious snow-storm. The snow lay ankle deep in Dublin, and froze hard at Belfast. In Scotland it slanted before a perpetual East wind. In Yorkshire, it derived novelty from Thunder and Lightning. Whirlwinds everywhere, I don't mention.

God bless you and yours. If I look like some weather-beaten Pilot when we meet, don't be surprised. Any mahogany-faced stranger who holds out his hand to you, will probably turn out on inspection to be the old original Dick.

Ever my dear Stanny | Your faithful and affectionate
CHARLES DICKENS

I wish you could have been with me (of course in a snow-storm) one day on the Pier at Tynemouth. There was a very heavy sea running, and a perfect fleet of Screw-Merchantmen were plunging in and out on the turn of the tide at high water. Suddenly there came a golden horizon; and a most glorious rainbow burst out, arching one large ship, as if she were sailing direct for Heaven. I was so enchanted by the scene that I became oblivious of a few thousand tons of water coming on in an enormous roller, and was knocked down and beaten over by its spray when it broke, and so completely wetted through and through that the very pockets in my pocket-book were full of Sea.

To E. M. WARD,[†3] 19 APRIL 1867*

MS Private.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday, Nineteen April, 1867

My Dear Ward

I have been curious to see Mr. Schulze,[†4] and have had a very interesting description given to me of what he does. But I have been fain to wait until the completion of my course of Fifty Readings for until then, I am seldom at home for more than a few hours at a time. By the middle of next month I hope to be quite free, and then I shall fetch up this arrear of gratification.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

E. M. Ward Esquire

To THE STATION MASTER, PADDINGTON STATION,[†1] 20 APRIL 1867*

MS Mr Bernard Parkin.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND, | Saturday 20th April 1867

Hansom cab:
Taken from Great Western Terminus for Wellington Street. By the Up Train due at 12..35[†2]

CHARLES DICKENS

A small black bag or Tourist's Knapsack — containing one book and a bundle of MS.[†3]

To HENRY W. PHILLIPS, 22 APRIL 1867*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Twenty Second April, 1867

My Dear Mr. Phillips

I have not the least objection to your making my note[†4] known to the Committee. You are at liberty also, to add my name to the list.[†5] I venture to suggest the expediency of your indicating the class of school you have in contemplation; or the objection that has struck me, may strike others.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Henry W Phillips Esquire

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 24 APRIL 1867*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Twenty Fourth April 1867

My Dearest Georgy

Wills wants to get rid of his dog, because he has no convenience for keeping her. The dog is Linda's daughter, and very handsome. I was recommending Wills to give her to the Zoological, when it came into my mind that Sydney or Plorn might like her. Will you tell them of the Dog's being to be got, and tell them they must decide quickly.

With best love to Mamie | Ever affecy.

CD.

No Mrs. Elliot to day. I wonder is she "hurt" at my not accepting her papers?[†1]

To THE REV. W. H. THOMPSON,[†2] 24 APRIL 1867*

MS Dickens House.

GAD'S HILL PLACE | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.[†3]
Wednesday Twenty Fourth April 1867

Sir,

Allow me to offer you my sincere thanks for your obliging and considerate letter, dated the day before yesterday.

I beg to enclose my declaration of the date of my son's birth.[†4] A formal certificate of his baptism[†5] shall be forwarded tomorrow. It has been applied for today: but has not been obtained in consequence of not being demanded within the two hours formally set apart (it seems) for that purpose.

I have the honor to be | Sir | Your faithful servant
CHARLES DICKENS

Dr. Thompson

To COLONEL HARDY,[†6] 25 APRIL 1867*

MS Birthplace Museum, Portsmouth.

Preston[†7] | Thursday Twenty Fifth April | 1867

Mr. Charles Dickens begs to express his regret that he cannot have the honor of accepting the invitation with which he is favored by Colonel Hardy and the Officers of the 9th. Depôt Battalion, as he is obliged to leave Preston tomorrow morning.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 26 APRIL 1867*

MS Huntington Library.

Blackburn[†1] | Friday Twenty Sixth April | 1867

My Dearest Georgy

All well. Only time for one line. When you come up on Monday,[†2] will you bring 6 pints of our best champagne for me?[†3]

Love to all. Riding here to day by the old road in an open carriage, we lost a wheel. No harm done whatever.

Ever most affectionately
CD.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 29 APRIL 1867*

MS (pro forma letter) State Library of Victoria, Melbourne.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND, | April 29 1867[†4]

Mr. Charles Dickens begs to thank the writer of the paper entitled [†a][ ][†a]
for having done him the favor to offer it as a contribution to these pages. He much regrets, however that it is not suited to the requirements of All the Year Round

The Manuscript will be returned under cover, if applied for as above

To W. HEPWORTH DIXON, 30 APRIL 1867*

MS Rosenbach Museum and Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Thirtieth April 1867

My Dear Dixon

I am driven so hard and close to day, that I must defer the Coutts[†5] job until I come back from the country on Friday.

In the last haste at the last moment

Ever Yours
CD.

May

To SAMUEL CARTWRIGHT, 1 MAY 1867*

Text from transcript, British Dental Association.

Stoke upon Trent.[†1] | Wednesday First May 1867.

My Dear Cartwright.

I have just now sighted Land, after a Fifty Night's cruise in all manner of waters. Having a loose tooth or so that I would like to tighten (if possible), the first use I make of my coming freedom is to ask you if you will give me a short appointment in the enclosed envelope, for any day in next week, except Wednesday, or any day in the following week except Monday the 13th.

Believe me always, | Faithfully yours,
CHARLES DICKENS.

Samuel Cartwright Esquire

To WILKIE COLLINS, 1 MAY 1867

MS Morgan Library.

Stoke Upon Trent | Wednesday First May 1867

My Dear Wilkie

Of course I know nothing of your arrangements when I ask you the following question.

Would you like to do the next Xmas No.[†2] with me? We two alone, each taking half? Of course I assume that the money question is satisfactorily disposed of between you and Wills.[†3] Equally of course, I suppose our two names to be appended to the performance.

I put this to you, I need hardly say, before having in any way approached the subject in my own mind as to contrivance, character, story, or anything else.

Tomorrow night at Warrington[†4] will finish my present course — with the exception of one night at Croydon,[†5] and one more night at St James's Hall; which I count as nothing. I shall be at Gad's from Saturday to Monday inclusive. After that, either Gad's or the Office will soon find me.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 3 MAY 1867*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Evening Third May 1867

My Dearest Georgy

You can tell Mrs Horne[†1] that the Reading of Copperfield was never published, and that there is no copy of it but mine.[†2]

Basket to Gravesend tomorrow, to meet me by the Afternoon Express.

Love to all | Ever affecy.

CD.

To WILKIE COLLINS, 4 MAY 1867*

MS Morgan Library.

Office, Saturday Fourth May 1867

My Dear Wilkie

The thought that we shall have a bout of work together again fills me with pleasure and interest.

On reading your letter (and particularly Postscript) with attention, I see no difficulty in the case. I at once say YES[†3] to your proposed Story,[†4] without the sketch you mention. We would begin to print, for your convenience, as soon as you like, but I think the best time for beginning to publish would be September when the present serial story[†5] will come to a close.[†6] This would leave you the best place, and would enable us to announce you thoroughly well. The Xmas No. we should have to go to press with very early in November. Our best way would be to sketch it out under the trees, say in August, and work it out of hand.[†7] For that purpose you could lay your story aside, take it up again, and finish the MS of it with the year, at leisure.

I shall be here on Wednesday at One o'Clock, and shall be glad to take that — or any — occasion — of joining hands [†a]upon it.[†a] Wills is ready to "go into the figures" (as he calls it), and there is no chance of any difficulty in that direction.[†8] He will be at your disposal at the same time, if you like. I hope your doing the Xmas No. with me, would prove anything but unserviceable in the direction of Paris.

Affectionately Ever
CHARLES DICKENS

Of course it will be for you to name your own convenient times of drawing money here. All times are alike to us.

To THOMAS DIXON,[†1] 4 MAY 1867*

MS Maggs & Co.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Fourth May 1867

Sir

I received your volume[†2] safely, and should have thanked you for it sooner but that I have been constantly absent. In reference to the Portrait[†3] you mention in your letter of the day before yesterday, I can only say that I do not know of any one who desires to purchase such a picture.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Thomas Dixon.

To THE REV. JOHN TAYLOR, 4 MAY 1867

MS Mrs Dorothy Cohen.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Saturday Evening Fourth May 1867

My Dear Sir

I have the pleasure of enclosing a cheque payable to your order, for £58..17..6.

I thoroughly concur with you touching the expediency of giving Edward's education during the ensuing term, a practical direction immediately bearing on the way of life before him.[†4] I quite approve of his discontinuing Latin, and devoting the time so gained to History, Natural Philosophy, and a general improvement of his acquaintance with the properties of the things that he will have to subdue to his use in a rough wild life. But you are so perfectly in possession of the good sense of the case, that you really leave me no suggestion to offer.

His want of application and continuity of purpose would be quite extraordinary to me if I had not observed the same defect in one of his brothers,[†5] and tried to trace it to its source.[†1] That a certain amount of unsatisfactory and impracticable torpor is in his natural character, and is consequently his misfortune, I am sure. But he will have more pressing need to make a fight against it in Australia than if he were near home; and as he is fond of animals, and of being on horseback and of moving rapidly through the air, I hope he may take better to the Bush than to Books. His natural abilities may flash up, under such conditions too.

I am bound to assure you that he expresses himself most warmly in reference to yourself and Mrs Taylor, and that it is not to be doubted that you have won his respect, confidence, and attachment.

I am my Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Rev. J. Taylor

To THOMAS HYDE HILLS, 6 MAY 1867*

MS University of Texas, Austin.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Sixth May 1867

My Dear Mr. Hills.

A thousand thanks![†2]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Hyde Hills Esquire

To PATRICK SCOTT,[†3] [6 MAY 1867]

Envelope only in Sotheby's catalogue, July 1951; addressed Patrick Scott; dated 6 May 67.

To MISS BERTHA STONE,[†4] 6 MAY 1867*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: Miss Bertha Stone | Russell House | Tavistock Square | W.C.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Monday Sixth May 1867

My Dear Bertha

I am happy that I can honestly tell you I think there is a good deal of merit in it. But I am afraid it will not do as it stands. The idea you have, is (as it were) rather thrown away, and you certainly do not make enough of the closing Scene. The people too are very slightly indicated, and don't resolve themselves into individuals sufficiently distinct. Condensation in the first two thirds of the story is greatly needed, while on the other hand you could make more of the last Third.

I should like to think it over quietly, after I have finished my Readings. We will make it answer the purpose of All The Year Round, somehow, and I should like to put you in the way of doing it, mainly, for yourself.[†1] We must have a talk about it. I could indicate in a word or two, what I couldn't detail in a treatise. If you will pick up my meaning, I am much mistaken if you don't find your story pick itself up surprisingly.

With love to all | Ever affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Bertha Stone.

To MISS MARY DICKENS, [8 MAY 1867]

Mention in next. Date: written same day.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 8 MAY 1867*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Eighth May 1867

My Dearest Georgy

I write a line to Mary to say that I cannot get down to Gad's between this and Monday, being fairly overwhelmed by arrears of work.

Keeping the large portmanteau here for our London-fortnight exigencies, I will send down Scott with all the other baggage tomorrow. Let the Cart meet him at the Station, he leaving Charing X at 2..10. In one of his Emptied Portmanteaus let him bring back:

The 2 best pairs of summer trousers that you can find among the summer things on the Wardrobe top-shelf.

/

2 or 3 sets of summer flannels.

/

The put-away blue surtout

/

New pair of elastic stockings

/

2 or 3 white waistcoats.

/

My Dearest Georgy | Ever affectionately

CD.

To MRS HENRY AUSTIN, 9 MAY 1867*

MS Morgan Library.

THE ATHENAEUM | Sunday, Ninth May, 1867

My Dear Letitia

Georgy told me that you wanted the cheque for £14..12..6, and here it is.[†2]

Thank God, I am getting on splendidly, and resting amazingly.

Ever affecy Yours

[†1]

To ANTHONY TROLLOPE,[†2] 9 MAY 1867*

MS The Robert H. Taylor Collection, Princeton University.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.

Thursday Ninth May 1867

My Dear Trollope.

The instant I got your letter at my office, I of course went over to the Adelphi Terrace and signed the Memorial.[†3] I had heard with much satisfaction that poor Mrs. Bell[†4] had found a friend in you, for I knew she could have no stauncher or truer friend,

Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

Anthony Trollope Esquire

To W. HEPWORTH DIXON, 10 MAY 1867*

MS Rosenbach Museum and Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Tenth May 1867

My Dear Dixon

It occurred to me when I went to Coutts's that nothing could make the Jerrold account plainer to you than the Pass-Book.[†5] I enclose it. You will see that there is now a sum of £79..3..7 to Miss Jerrold's credit.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 10 MAY 1867

MS Dickens House. Address: Miss Hogarth | Gad's Hill Place | Higham | by | Rochester.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Tenth May 1867

My Dearest Georgy

I send you the cheque.[†6] Also an order for a Hat that Marsh wants. Tell him to give to you, to bring up to me, Couchman's[†7] estimate for the stable gate.

This is a very hasty note, for I am so hurried that it is with great difficulty that I can find time to get up Dombey.[†1] Between the New Edition,[†2] correspondence, AYR, and all other cares, I have as much to do as I can manage. Last night I was so tired that I could hardly undress for bed.

— And expenses are so enormous,[†3] that I begin to feel myself drawn towards America, as Darnay in the Tale of Two Cities was drawn towards the Loadstone Rock, Paris.

Ever my Dearest Georgy | Most affectionately
CD.

To W. W. JONES, 10 MAY 1867*

Text from facsimile in Mair Wilkes Books catalogue, checked from MS Christie's, Dec 1986.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Tenth May, 1867

Dear Sir

I should be very glad indeed to support Mr. Smith[†4] at the Society's[†5] Dinner, if I could. But I fear it is not reasonably possible. I have to preside at a Public Dinner on the following day;[†6] I have been very hard-worked in hot rooms of late; and I am obliged to consider what I can do, rather than what I would.

Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Walter Jones

To JOHN FORSTER, [14 MAY 1867]

Extracts in F, VIII, vii, 707 and 657*n. Date:* both extracts 14 May 67, according to Forster.

Last Monday evening I finished the 50 Readings with great success.[†7] You have no idea how I have worked at them. Finding it necessary; as their reputation widened, that they should be better than at first, I have learnt them all, so as to have no mechanical drawback in looking after the words. I have tested all the serious passion in them by everything I know; made the humorous points much more humorous; corrected my utterance of certain words; cultivated a self-possession not to be disturbed; and made myself master of the situation. Finishing with Dombey (which I had not read for a long time) I learnt that, like the rest; and did it to myself, often twice a day, with exactly the same pains as at night, over and over and over again.

Repeating a story told him by "a lady friend",[†1] according to Forster. I must close with an odd story of a Newfoundland dog. An immense black good-humoured Newfoundland dog. He came from Oxford and had lived all his life at a brewery. Instructions were given with him that if he were let out every morning alone, he would immediately find out the river; regularly take a swim; and gravely come home again. This he did with the greatest punctuality, but after a little while was observed to smell of beer. She was so sure that he smelt of beer that she resolved to watch him. Accordingly, he was seen to come back from his swim, round the usual corner, and to go up a flight of steps into a beer-shop. Being instantly followed, the beer-shop-keeper is seen to take down a pot (pewter pot), and is heard to say: "Well, old chap! Come for your beer as usual, have you?" Upon which he draws a pint and puts it down, and the dog drinks it. Being required to explain how this came to pass, the man says "Yes, ma'am, I know he's your dog, ma'am, but I didn't when he first come. He looked in ma'am — as a Brickmaker might — and then he come in — as a Brickmaker might — and he wagged his tail at the pots, and he giv'a sniff round, and conveyed to me as he was used to beer. So I draw'd him a drop, and he drunk it up. Next morning he come agen by the clock and I drawed him a pint, and ever since he has took his pint reglar!"

To MESSRS BANTON & MACKRELL,[†2] 16 MAY 1867*

MS Private.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Sixteenth May, 1867

Dear Sirs

My absence has prevented my replying sooner to your letter of the 11th. I now beg to enclose you another draft for £10.[†3] The second bill is perfectly correct. My son[†4] has been invalided for a term, in consequence of his having suffered from African Coast Fever, and it was drawn to meet the charges of his passage home.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Banton and MacKrell.

To GEORGE STANFIELD,[†1] 19 MAY 1867

MS University of Kentucky.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Sunday Nineteenth May 1867

My Dear George

When I came up to the house this afternoon and saw what had happened,[†2] I had not the courage to ring — though I had thought I was fully prepared by what I heard when I called yesterday. No one of your father's friends can ever have loved him more dearly than I always did, or can have better known the worth of his noble character.

It is idle to suppose that I can do anything for you; and yet, I cannot help saying that I am staying here for some days, and that if I could, it would be a much greater relief to me than it would be a service to you.

Your poor mother has been constantly in my thoughts since I saw the quiet bravery with which she preserved her composure. The beauty of her ministration sank into my heart when I saw him for the last time on earth. May God be with her, and with you all, in your great loss!

Affectionately Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To MESSRS COUTTS & CO., 20 MAY 1867

MS (only signature in CD's hand) Walter T. Spencer.

Messrs Coutts & Co

Instruct M. Achille Adam[†3] to pay to Monsr. F. Bourgois on his application Two Thousand Eight hundred & ninety eight francs.[†4]

CHARLES DICKENS[†5]

To JOHN FORSTER, [20 MAY 1867]

Extracts in F, VIII, vii, 708. Date: first extract 20 May 67, according to Forster; second extract probably part of same letter.

It is curious that you should touch the American subject, because I must confess that my mind is in a most disturbed state about it. That the people there have set themselves on having the readings, there is no question. Every mail brings me proposals, and the number of Americans at St. James's Hall has been surprising. A certain Mr. Grau,[†6] who took Ristori[†7] out,[†8] and is highly responsible, wrote to me by the last mail (for the second time) saying that if I would give him a word of encouragement he would come over immediately and arrange on the boldest terms for any number I chose, and would deposit a large sum of money at Coutts's. Mr. Fields writes to me on behalf of a committee of private gentlemen at Boston who wished for the credit of getting me out, who desired to hear the readings and did not want profit, and would put down as a guarantee £10,000 — also to be banked here. Every American speculator who comes to London repairs straight to Dolby, with similar proposals. And, thus excited, Chappells, the moment this last series was over, proposed to treat for America!

The Presidential election would be in the autumn of next year. They are a people whom a fancy does not hold long. They are bent upon my reading there, and they believe (on no foundation whatever) that I am going to read there. If I ever go, the time would be when the Christmas number goes to press. Early in this next November.

To F. C. BEARD, 21 MAY 1867

MS Dickens House.

Great Western Hotel[†1] | Tuesday Twenty First May, 1867

My Dear Frank Beard

We will dine here today instead of at Verey's. Same time. Half past 6.

I have given Wilkie notice of the change.

Faithfully Ever

CD.

To GEORGE DOLBY, 21 MAY 1867*

MS Beinecke Library, Yale University.

Great Western Hotel | Tuesday Twenty First May 1867

My Dear Dolby

I will be here this afternoon from 4 to 6, hoping to see you.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

George Dolby Esquire

To GEORGE STANFIELD, 21 MAY 1867

MS University of Kentucky.

Great Western Hotel | Tuesday Twenty First May, 1867

My Dear George.

Please God, I shall be with you on Monday.[†2]

I had thought of writing a few words in memory of your dear father; and they shall be published with the least possible delay in All The Year Round.[†1] We are under the necessity of going to press about a fortnight in advance; but I have warned the printer to stop the No. now in his hands if possible.

With kindest regard | Affecy. Yours always
CD.

The illness of my Housekeeper at the Office, caused me to come here yesterday

To SAMUEL CARTWRIGHT, 22 MAY 1867*

Text from transcript, British Dental Association.

Great Western Hotel,
Wednesday Night, Twenty Second May 1867.

My Dear Cartwright.

I cannot but think when I come to consider these nice constructions, that we must have been hurriedly below the mark of their cost this afternoon. Therefore, I have made the cheque for Fifteen Pounds,[†2] and now enclose it with Fifteen thousand thanks.

Faithfully yours,
CHARLES DICKENS.

Samuel Cartwright, Esquire

To THE MASTER AND WARDENS OF THE CLOTH WORKERS' COMPANY,[†3] 23 MAY 1867*

MS Private.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Twenty Third May, 1867

Mr. Charles Dickens regrets that he cannot have the honor of dining with the Master and Wardens of the Cloth Workers' Company on Wednesday the Fifth of June,[†4] in consequence of his having engaged himself to preside at a Public Dinner on that day.[†5]

To C. WELSH MASON,[†6] 23 MAY 1867*

MS Private.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Twenty Third May, 1867

Dear Sir

My absence has prevented my receiving your note in due course.

I have sent for your MS and will take care to return it to Torrington Square[†1] tomorrow. If it be of any great length, I fear the arrangements already entered into by "All the Year Round" will preclude the possibility of its acceptance for those pages. But in any case it shall have my prompt attention.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

C. Welsh Mason Esquire

To SIR JAMES EMERSON TENNENT, 23 MAY 1867*

MS Berg Collection. Address: Sir James Emerson Tennent Bart. | 66 Warwick Square | S.W.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Twenty Third May, 1867

My Dear Tennent.

I have taken a long time to consider your kindest of letters, heartily desiring to respond to it in the affirmative, and to be able to accept (for me and mine) the great pleasure of your hospitality and society in Ireland.[†2]

But the more I look into the dim autumn of this year, the more strongly I feel that I must make no such engagement. I have work to do for America which will last me through the summer,[†3] and it is possible that I may enter into some extensive "Reading" engagements as the winter begins. I cannot at present decide as to the latter point, and in the meantime the impending possibility obscures my whole prospect. But what with that, and the writing for America, and the clearing off of a vast arrear of business at All The Year Round, and the production of the Christmas No. (which must go to press early in November), I feel that I am a Bondsman who cannot and who must not strike the rather-frequently-mentioned blow for freedom.[†4]

We hope that you and Lady Tennent and Miss Tennent[†5] will give us a day or two here before you go away, as some small compensation for our loss. If you could and would suggest your own time, we would make it ours.

It is curious that two of your suggested subjects for Old Stories Retold, were in type when you wrote. Mr. Thornbury (who does these articles) had proposed the Red Barn Murder,[†6] but I had decided against it; firstly, because I don't want too many murders (he is rather given to horrors); and secondly because the case is very well known already. It is remarkable how little the Dream comes to, on close inspection. The mother dreams (after Corder has, with a murderer's usual stupidity made every possible blunder to arouse her suspicions) that her daughter is murdered, and lies buried in such a "bay" of the Red Barn. It turns out that her last look at her daughter was as she turned round behind that barn — dressed in boy's clothes by Corder's direction, and otherwise most suspiciously spirited away. It also turns out that there are but two "bays" in the barn, so that it was an even bet, or a fair toss up, whether that part of the dream should come wrong or right.[†1]

With kindest regards from me and mine to you and yours, Believe me ever My Dear Tennent
Your affectionate Friend
CHARLES DICKENS

I saw poor dear Stanfield on his couch, a little before his Death.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?20-25 MAY 1867]

Extract in F, VIII, vii, 708. Date: during the week after Stanfield's death on 18 May, according to Forster.

Poor dear Stanfield! I cannot think even of him, and of our great loss, for this spectre of doubt and indecision that sits at the board with me and stands at the bedside. I am in a tempest-tossed condition, and can hardly believe that I stand at bay at last on the American question. The difficulty of determining amid the variety of statements made to me is enormous, and you have no idea how heavily the anxiety of it sits upon my soul. But the prize looks so large!

To FREDERIC CHAPMAN, 29 MAY 1867*

MS Hove Public Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Twenty Ninth May 1867

My Dear Sir

Will you kindly employ, either one of your own people or some very trustworthy person in whom you can confide, to bring those paintings of Mr. Stanfield's[†2] down here straight? Of course the two great points are, to keep them smooth, and to keep them dry. Whether they should come by Rail, or come by the high road in a well-covered cart, I cannot decide. If you are not clear about it, perhaps you will let one of your people go to Vokins's[†3] in Great Portland Street — explain how precious the canvasses are, as the only works of that kind by Mr. Stanfield, in existence — and get them to bring them down as they think best. I want them without delay, as Mr. Fechter is coming down, with his ingenious Master Carpenter,[†1] to plan out, if possible, some way or other of fitting them into these walls.[†2]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Fredk. Chapman Esquire

To WILLIAM JOHNSON, 29 MAY 1867*

MS Dickens House.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Wednesday Twenty Ninth May 1867

Dr. Johnson.

I want you to make me up and send me down at once, a pretty large parcel.

[†a]Please to open the Wardrobe in my office bedroom, and take out all the summer trousers[†a] there (they are all on one shelf), [†a]and all the white waistcoats[†a] [†b]which are on a different shelf, I think;[†b] [†a]and from the Wing of the Wardrobe take out a light brown summer coat.[†a] If there is any waistcoat like it (I am not sure about that) take that out too. [†a]Make a parcel of the whole;[†a] leaving everything else just where it is. If there is any parcel from my tailor's, Skinner's, add that too. [†a]Send the whole down to Higham Station[†a] by passenger train.

I think Scott must have left on the chimney piece of my bedroom at the Great Western Hotel, four Keys tied together with a piece of string. Make a written memorandum of this description, and send a Messenger up to the Hotel to enquire whether such Keys have been found, and, if so, to bring them away.

CD.

To ANTHONY TROLLOPE, [?MAY 1867]

MS (fragment) Robert H. Taylor Collection, Princeton University Library. Date: possibly May 67, since MS accompanies another letter addressed to Anthony Trollope of 9 May 67.

Your brother[†3] and the Chapmans[†4] dine here next Saturday at half past six. If you should chance to be disengaged and would give my daughter and myself the pleasure of your company at dinner, we should be very glad indeed to see you.[†5]

To JOHN FORSTER, [?END MAY 1867]

Extract in F, VIII, vii, 708. Date: Forster (above) implies written after letter of 20 May; probably towards end of month.

Have no fear that anything will induce me to make the experiment, if I do not see the most forcible reasons for believing that what I could get by it, added to what I have got, would leave me with a sufficient fortune. I should be wretched beyond expression there. My small powers of description cannot describe the state of mind in which I should drag on from day to day.

June

To HENRY CHORLEY, 2 JUNE 1867

Extract in MDGH, III, 231.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Sunday, June 2nd, 1867

My Dear Chorley,

Thank God I have come triumphantly through the heavy work of the fifty-one readings, and am wonderfully fresh. I grieve to hear of your sad occupation.[†1] You know where to find rest, and quiet, and sympathy, when you can change the dreary scene.

I saw poor dear Stanfield (on a hint from his eldest son) in a day's interval between two expeditions. It was clear that the shadow of the end had fallen on him.[†2]

It happened well that I had seen, on a wild day at Tynemouth, a remarkable sea-effect, of which I wrote a description to him, and he had kept it under his pillow.[†3] This place is looking very pretty. The freshness and repose of it, after all those thousands of gas-lighted faces, sink into the soul.

To J. T. FIELDS, 3 JUNE 1867

MS Massachusetts Historical Society.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM, BY ROCHESTER
Monday Third June 1867

My Dear Fields.

I cannot receive your pleasantest of notes, without assuring you of the interest and gratification that I feel on my side in our alliance. And now I am going to add a piece of intelligence that I hope may not be disagreeable.

I am trying hard so to free myself, as to be able to come over to read this next winter! Whether I may succeed in this endeavour, or no, I cannot yet say, but I am trying HARD.†4 So in the meantime don't contradict the rumour, but leave it quite alone. In the course of a few mails I hope to be able to give you positive and definite information on the subject.

My daughter (whom I shall not bring if I come) will answer for herself to Mrs. Fields bye and bye. I beg to send her my kindest regard. Understand that I am really endeavouring tooth and nail to make my way personally to the American Public, and that no light obstacles will turn me aside now that my hand is in.

My Dear Fields | Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Jas T Fields Esquire

Remember me cordially to Mr. Osgood

To DR JAMES SHERIDAN MUSPRATT, 5 JUNE 1867*

MS Hornby Arts Library, Liverpool.

ATHENAEUM CLUB | PALL MALL S. W.
Wednesday Fifth June 1867

My Dear Muspratt.

I am truly sorry to receive your poor account of your health, and earnestly hope that your discovery will set it up. Unfortunately I have no autograph of Stansfield's left. I destroy all letters as I receive them, as the only safe way of keeping them out of print.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Dr. Sheridan Muspratt

To W. H. WILLS, 6 JUNE 1867†

MS Huntington Library.

†1

Thursday Sixth June 1867

My Dear Wills

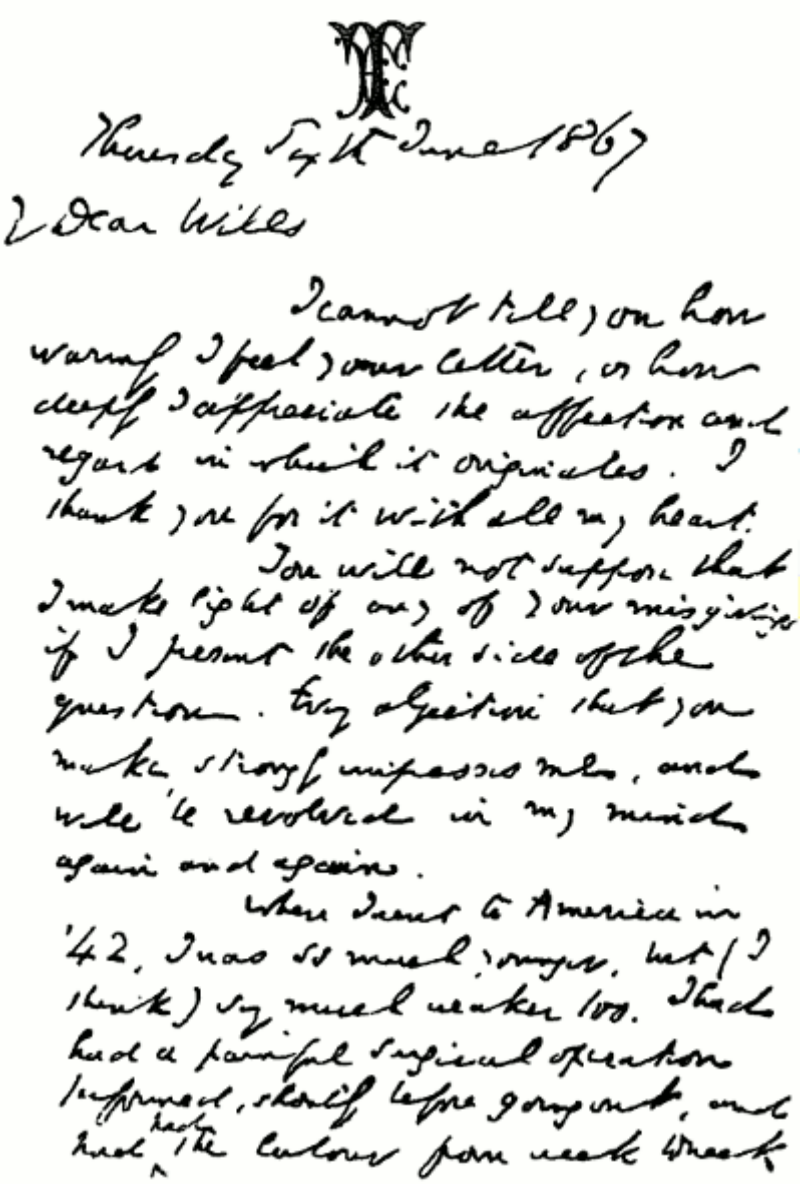
I cannot tell you how warmly I feel your letter, or how deeply I appreciate the affection and regard in which it originates. I thank you for it with all my heart.

You will not suppose that I make light of any of your misgivings if I present the other side of the question. Every objection that you make, strongly impresses me, and will be revolved in my mind again and again.

When I went to America in '42, I was so much younger, but (I think) very much weaker too. I had had a painful surgical operation performed, shortly before going out, and had had the labour from week to week of Master Humphrey's Clock. My life in the States was a life of continual speech-making (quite as laborious as Reading), and I was less patient and more irritable then, than I am now. My idea of a course of Readings in America, is, that it would involve far less travelling than you suppose — that the large first class towns would absorb the whole course — and that the receipts would be very much larger than your Estimate. Unless the demand for the Readings is †aENORMOUSLY EXAGGERATED ON ALL HANDS,†a there is considerable reason for this view of the case. And I can hardly think that all the Speculators who beset me, and all the private correspondents who urge me, are in a conspiracy or under a common delusion.

I also believe that an immense impulse would be given to the C. D. Edition†2 by my going out.

If you were to work out the question of Reading profits here, with Dolby, you would find that it would take years to get £10,000. To get that sum in a heap so



Thursday 5th June 1867

Dear Wills

I cannot tell you how warmly I feel your letter, or how deeply I appreciate the affection and regard in which it originates. I thank you for it with all my heart.

You will not suppose that I make light of any of your misgivings if I present the other side of the question. Any objection that you make strongly impresses me, and will be revolved in my mind again and again.

When I came to America in '42, I was so much younger, but (I think) by much weaker too. I had had a painful surgical operation performed, shortly before I sang out, and had lost the colour from each cheek soon is an immense consideration to me — [†b]my wife's income to pay — a very expensive position to hold — and my boys with a curse of limpness on them. You don't know what it is to look round the table and see reflected from every seat at it (where they sit) some horribly well remembered expression of inadaptability to anything.[†b]

I shall never rest much while my faculties last, and (if I know myself) have a certain something in me that would still be active in rusting and corroding me, if I flattered myself that it was in repose. On the other hand, I think that my habit of easy self-abstraction and withdrawal into fancies, has always refreshed and strengthened me in short intervals wonderfully. I always seem to myself to have rested far more than I have worked; and I do really believe that I have some exceptional faculty of accumulating young feelings in short pauses, which obliterates a quantity of wear and tear.

My worldly circumstances (such a family considered) are very good. I don't want money. All my possessions are free, and in the best order. Still, at 55 or 56, the likelihood of making a very great addition to one's capital in half a year, is an immense consideration. I repeat the phrase because there should be something large, to set against the objections.

†bThe Patient,†1 I acknowledge to be the gigantic difficulty. But you know I don't like to give in before a difficulty, if it can be beaten.†b

I dine with Forster to day to talk it over. I have no doubt he will urge most of your objections, and particularly the last — though American friends and correspondents he has, have undoubtedly staggered him more than I ever knew him to be staggered, on the money question. Be assured that no one can present any argument to me, which will weigh more heavily with me than your kind words; and that, whatever comes of my present state of abeyance, I shall never forget your letter or cease to be grateful for it.

Ever My Dear Wills | Faithfully

CD.

To MESSRS SEAGER, EVANS & CO.,†2 8 JUNE 1867

Text from facsimile owned by Seager & Co.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Eighth June 1867

Messrs. Seager Evans & Co.
Gentlemen

I am reminded by your receipt for the empty cask returned, that I intended to order another Cask of the best Old Tom Gin (a cask of the same size), but omitted to do so. Have the goodness to forward such cask to Higham Station, and post invoice here.†3

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Seager Evans and Co.

To GEORGE DOLBY, 9 JUNE 1867*

MS Brian Lake. Address: George Dolby Esquire | 230 Regent Street | London. | W.

GAD'S HILL PLACE | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Ninth June 1867

My Dear Dolby

That's an astounding calculation†1 surely!

I will be at the office at 1/2 past 3 on Tuesday. I go to Richmond to dine with Chapman, at 4.50.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 9 JUNE 1867*

MS Private.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Ninth June 1867

My Dear Ouvry

Quarterly cheque enclosed.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To J. T. FIELDS, 13 JUNE 1867

MS Huntington Library.

Private

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Thirteenth June 1867

My Dear Fields

I have this morning resolved to send out to Boston in the first week in August, Mr. Dolby, the Secretary and Manager of my Readings. He is profoundly versed in the business of those delightful intellectual feasts (!), and will come straight to Ticknor and Fields, and will hold solemn council with them, and will then go to New York, Philadelphia, Hartford, Washington &c &c and see the rooms for himself, and make his estimates. He will then Telegraph to me: "I see my way to such and such results. — Shall I go on?" If I reply, "Yes", I shall stand committed to begin reading in America with the month of December. If I reply "No", it will be because I do not clearly see the game to be worth so large a Candle. In either case, he will come back to me.

He is the brother of Madame Sainton Dolby, the celebrated singer. I have absolute trust in him and a great regard for him. He goes with me everywhere when I read, and manages for me to perfection.

We mean to keep all this †aSTRICTLY SECRET,†a as I beg of you to do, until I finally decide for or against. I am beleaguered by every kind of Speculator in such things on your side of the water; and it is very likely that they would take the rooms over our heads — to charge me heavily for them — or would set on foot unheard of devices for buying up the tickets, &c &c, if the probabilities oozed out. This is exactly how the case stands now, and I confide it to you, within a couple of hours after having so far resolved. Dolby quite understands that he is to confide in you, similarly, without a particle of reserve.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

James T Fields Esquire

To THE REV. ALEXANDER DYCE,[†1] 14 JUNE 1867*

MS Victoria & Albert Museum.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Fourteenth June 1867

My Dear Dyce.

With many thanks for your note, rely upon me.

Faithfully Yours Ever
CHARLES DICKENS

The Rev. Alexander Dyce

To THE RIGHT HON. BENJAMIN DISRAELI,[†2] 16 JUNE 1867*

MS Benoliel Collection.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Sixteenth June 1867

Dear Mr. Disraeli.

I received this morning, quite unexpectedly, the enclosed letter from Mrs. Stanfield, widow of my late dear friend the great painter.[†3]

I take the liberty of enclosing it to you, because it is at once the shortest explanation and the best apology I can offer for troubling you at all — and also because I honestly believe that you will be glad to do this thing, if you can, for the son of such an Artist.[†4]

Tomorrow afternoon I will do myself the honor of leaving my card at your door. I should have left it with these lines, but that this old Falstaff ground is thirty miles from London, and I cannot bear to postpone the execution of my trust until tomorrow.

You will require no further excuse from me, I feel confident, than Mrs. Stanfield's letter.

I am Dear Mr. Disraeli
Your faithful Servant

CHARLES DICKENS

The Right Hon. Benjamin Disraeli

To J. JENNINGS,[†1] 16 JUNE 1867*

MS Mrs Robert K. Miller. Address: J. Jennings Esqre. | Bridge of Allan | N.B.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sixteenth June 1867

Dear Sir

I beg you to accept my thanks for your very obliging letter, and its accompanying photograph. I had a great affection and respect for the late master of Rockingham Castle.[†2]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

J. Jennings Esqre.

To MRS COWDEN CLARKE, 17 JUNE 1867

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds. Address: Mrs. Cowden Clarke | Villla[[sic]] Novello | Via san Giacomo | Genoa | Italy.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Monday Seventeenth June 1867.

My Dear Mrs. Cowden Clarke

I have great pleasure in retaining the Yule Log[†3] for the regular No. to be published at Xmas time:— not for the Xmas No. so called, because that will be on a new plan this year, which will not embrace such a contribution.[†4]

With kind regard and remembrance to your husband, Believe me always

Your faithful old Manager[†5]
CHARLES DICKENS

[†a]Your two green leaves are always verdant on my table at Gad's Hill.[†a]

To W. HEPWORTH DIXON, 17 JUNE 1867*

MS Rosenbach Museum and Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Seventeenth June 1867

My Dear Dixon

I am heartily obliged to you for your kind remembrance, but stand previously engaged to Forster. Your note has just reached me, and I answer it instantly.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

W. Hepworth Dixon Esquire

To MISS GABRIEL,[†1] 17 JUNE 1867*

Text from Bennett Book Studies, composite catalogue, Nos 17 & 25; MS 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill, 17 June 67; addressed Miss Gabriel | 5 Chester St., | Belgrave Square.

My dear Miss Gabriel

I thank you heartily for giving me the benefit of your doubt. It will delight me to put my head in the Lion's mouth.[†2]

Your faithful friend,
CHARLES DICKENS

To BARON BERNHARD TAUCHNITZ,[†3] 17 JUNE 1867

Extract in Curt Otto, Der Verlag Bernhard Tauchnitz, 1837-1912, Leipzig, 1912, p. 57.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | June 17th, 1867.

My Dear Baron,

I beg to acknowledge the safe receipt of your draft for £ ...[†4] It is always a pleasure to me to have any transactions with you, for I implicitly rely on your honourable and upright spirit.

Faithfully Your friend
CHARLES DICKENS

To ARTHUR CHAPPELL, 18 JUNE 1867†

MS Dickens House.

[†a]Private

Tuesday Eighteenth June 1867

My Dear Mr. Chappell[†a]

Dolby has shewn me here this afternoon, the general state of the account of Receipt and Expenditure on my last series of Readings. I shall be happy to give you three free readings, either in London or elsewhere in England as you prefer; and they shall be the three next Readings that I have in England.

This brings me to the subject of America. Since I saw you and told you that I would only read there on my own account, I have been strongly urged to go, and have cleared off one obstacle that stood in my way. But I am so bent on thoroughly understanding the prospect (if possible) that I have this very day arranged with Dolby that he shall go out by the first steamer in August carefully to investigate the case for me — that he shall then telegraph the general result of his enquiries — and shall receive a decisive telegram back from me, that I will go, or that I will not. (He will be absent on this mission, I suppose, some seven or eight weeks.) [a]I tell you this, strictly in confidence with you and your house, because, so long as I am undecided, I wish to keep the matter as secret as possible. But I tell it you without any reservation or delay, because I wish to have no secret from you in reference to my Reading projects.

Believe me | Always Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS[a]

S. Arthur Chappell Esquire

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 19 JUNE 1867

Extract in City Book Auction catalogue No. 222; MS 1 p.; dated Office of AYR, 19 June 67.

I have really no private friend in New York to whom I should feel myself justified in sending a letter of introduction.

Faithfully yours,

CHARLES DICKENS

To W. HEPWORTH DIXON, 21 JUNE 1867

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, Oct 1978; MS 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill, 21 June 67; addressed W. Hepworth Dixon.

Enclosing a cheque for Miss Jerrold and expressing the hope that the Saints[†1] came out well at his dinner. I hope (but that's not much) that they came out better than I think I should, under similar circumstances.

To GEORGE GODWIN,[†2] 21 JUNE 1867

Extract in N, III, 533; MS 1/2p.; dated Gad's Hill Place, 21 June 67; addressed George Godwin.

My Dear Godwin

I suppose you know the purport of the enclosed letter[†3] already?

To MESSRS WILLIAM SKINNER & CO., 22 JUNE 1867

Mention in American Art Association and Anderson catalogue No. 3956; MS (3rd person) 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill Place, 22 June 67; addressed Skinner & Co.

Requesting them to make alterations to a coat.

To JOHN TILLOTSON,[†1] 22 JUNE 1867*

MS Private. Address: John Tillotson Esquire | 12 Dorset Place North | Clapham Road | N.
PM 24 Jun 67.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Twenty Second June 1867

Dear Sir

I beg you to accept my thanks for your obliging and interesting letter.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Tillotson Esquire

To GEORGE DOLBY, 23 JUNE 1867*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Twenty Third June 1867

My Dear Dolby

Can you put me in the way of getting a Piano on professional terms for my friend Forster? I shall be at the office from 5 to 7 tomorrow, and on Thursday.

An excellent note from Chappell.

All the American Publishing-Houses (but one)[†2] raving mad when last heard of.[†3]

So no more at present from

Yours always
CD.

To JOHN POOLE, 26 JUNE 1867*

MS Mr Ashley W. Olmsted.

Wednesday Twenty Sixth June 1867[†4]

My Dear Poole

I will be with you tomorrow (Thursday) between 2 and 3.

Faithfully Ever
CHARLES DICKENS

John Poole Esquire

To THE RIGHT HON. BENJAMIN DISRAELI, 28 JUNE 1867*

MS Bodleian Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Twenty Eighth June 1867

Dear Mr. Disraeli

I have received an official letter to-day from Mr. Fremantle, which I have duly acknowledged.

But I must beg to thank you, privately and personally, for your prompt and generous response to my appeal in behalf of Stanfield's son. I use no form of words when I assure you that I shall never forget it.

Believe me | Always your faithful and obliged
CHARLES DICKENS

The Chancellor of the Exchquer.

To C. W. FREMANTLE,[†1] 28 JUNE 1867*

MS Benoliel Collection.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Twenty Eighth June 1867

Sir

I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of yesterday's date, and to inform you that I have duly forwarded it and its enclosure to Mr. Stanfield at Hampstead.[†2]

To the Chancellor of the Exchequer I beg to tender my earnest thanks for his ready kindness.

I am, | Sir | Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

C. W. Fremantle Esquire

To W. H. WILLS, 28 JUNE 1867

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Twenty Eighth June 1867

My Dear Wills.

No doubt Eliza Fenning[†3] will come down to Gad's. I will return her by post to you. I did not mean to negative her. Merely raised my eyebrows at a subject so well known.

[†a]I am glad you see a certain unlikeness to any thing, in the American story;[†1] and I hope that when you see it complete, you will think still better of it. Upon myself, it has made the strangest impression of reality and originality!![†2] And I feel as if I had read something (by somebody else) which I should never get out of my mind!!! The main idea of the narrator's position towards the other people, was the idea I had for my next novel in A. Y. R. But it is very curious that I did not in the least see how to begin his state of mind, until I walked into Hoghton Towers[†3] one bright April day with Dolby.[†a†4]

Faithfully Ever

CD.

To W. H. WILLS, 30 JUNE 1867

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.

Sunday Thirtieth June 1867

My Dear Wills.

I have heard read the first 3 Nos. of Wilkie's story[†5] this morning, and have gone minutely through the plot of the rest to the last line. Of course it is a series of "Narratives",[6[[sic]][†5] and of course such and so many modes of action are open to such and such people; but it is a very curious story — wild, and yet domestic — with excellent character in it, great mystery, and nothing belonging to disguised women[†6] or the like. It is prepared with extraordinary care, and has every chance of being a hit. It is in many respects much better than any thing he has done.[†7]

We have talked over the time of beginning to publish, and it is evidently desirable not to begin, if we can possibly help it, until the Xmas No. is out — say, the middle of December. The question then is, how shall we fill up the blank between Mabel[†8] and Wilkie? What do you think of proposing to FitzGerald to do a story three months long? I dare say he has some unfinished or projected something by him.[†9]

— I have an impression that it was not Silvester[†1] who tried Eliza Fenning, but Knowles. One can hardly suppose even Thornbury to make such a mistake, but I wish you would look into the Annual Register. I have added a final paragraph about the unfairness of the Judge, whoever he was.[†2] I distinctly recollect to have read of his "putting down" of Eliza Fenning's father when the old man made some miserable suggestion in his daughter's behalf (this is not noticed by Thornbury),[†3] and he also stopped some suggestion that a knife thrust into a loaf adulterated with alum,[†4] would present the appearance that these knives presented.[†5] But I may have got both these points from looking up some pamphlets in Upcott's collection.[†6] Which I once did.

— If you would not object to take my packet[†7] to Brown and Shipley's on Tuesday, I should be very much obliged to you if you would do so. I shall be at the office at 5 tomorrow (Monday) or will meet you there, if you leave a note to me to that effect, at 11 on Tuesday. I have told Birtles to send you a complete Revise, thinking Mrs. Wills may like to see it.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

July

To MRS ELLIOT, 1 JULY 1867

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds. Address: (MS envelope Old Curiosity Shop, London): Mrs Elliott | Farley Hill Court[†8] | Reading. PM 1 July 1867 Rochester.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT

Monday First July, 1867

My Dear F.

I am sorry to report — but have no alternative — that I do not see my way to Farley Hill, or to any other visit whatever, this autumn. I have a quantity of work to do for America, and can but just make out to do it, and to preserve the routine of my life, until I fall to work for Xmas. That done, I may — Heaven knows — I may — be tempted to go to America myself! Mind, this is not to be talked of. It is on the cards. Judge how much I have to do and think of just now.

With kindest regard to the Dean

Ever affectionately

CD.

Wilkie is here. Sends "his love, and he will take an early opportunity of writing."

To C. A. WHEELER, 1 JULY 1867

Extract in N, III, 535; MS 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill Place, 1 July 67; addressed C. A. Wheeler.

Regretting delay in sending subscription[†1] to your amusing and curious book[†2] "Sportascrapiana".

To WILKIE COLLINS, 2 JULY 1867

MS Morgan Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT

Tuesday Second July, 1867

This is to Certify that I the undersigned was (for the time being) a drivelling Ass when I declared the Christmas Number to be composed of Thirty Two Pages. And I do hereby declare that the said Christmas Number is composed of Forty Eight pages, — and long and heavy pages too, as I have heretofore proved and demonstrated with the sweat of my brow.

(Signed)
CHARLES DICKENS

Witness to the signature of the said Charles Dickens:

BUMBLE

(Puppy)

To JOHN FORSTER, [2 JULY 1867]

Extract in F, VIII, vii, 709. Date: 2 July 67, according to Forster.

Dolby sails for America on Saturday the 3rd of August. It is impossible to come to any reasonable conclusion, without sending eyes and ears on the actual ground. He will take out my MS, for the Children's Magazine.[†3] I hope it is droll, and very child-like; though the joke is a grown-up one besides. You must try to like the pirate story, for I am very fond of it.[†4]

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 2 JULY 1867*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Second July 1867

My Dearest Georgy

I purpose coming down tomorrow (Wednesday) by the 2..10 train to Gravesend, and walking over. If I should be detained here, then I will take the Afternoon Express to Gravesend, and shall want the basket to meet me. I do not, however, foresee any business that will keep me here after 2.

Ever affectionately,
CD.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 2 JULY 1867*

MS Salisbury House Library, Iowa.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Second July 1867

My Dearest Georgy

Since I wrote to you this morning, I have remembered that the Cricket Match is tomorrow. Therefore if I should come by the Express (which I don't think I shall be driven to), don't send the basket over. I will in that case take a Fly.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To HENRY CHORLEY, 3 JULY 1867

MS Private.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Third July, 1867

My Dear Chorley

I am truly sorry to receive your letter (it reaches me to day), and yet cannot but feel relieved that your main anxiety and distress are terminated.[†1] At this time, as at all others, believe that you have no truer friend or one more interested in all that interests you, than I am.

Affectionately Yours Ever

CHARLES DICKENS

To SIR JAMES EMERSON TENNENT, 3 JULY 1867

Mention in N, III, 535; MS 1 1/2 pp.; dated 3 July 67; addressed Sir J. Emerson Tennent.

Asking for his assistance in obtaining a clerkship in the Board of Trade for a son of Clarkson Stanfield.[†2]

To MRS MONTGOMERY ATWOOD, 4 JULY 1867

Extract in N, III, 536; dated Gad's Hill Place, 4 July 67.

Mentions that Wilkie Collins will be pleased to meet Mrs. Atwood on her return to London. He is in correspondence with Messrs. Harper but has settled nothing with them. I am exceedingly glad to have been the means of facilitating your affairs with M. Victor Hugo.

To MRS ELLIOT, 4 JULY [1867]

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds. Date: misdated 1866 by CD: T. A. Trollope did not marry Frances Ternan until 29 Oct 66.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Fourth July, 1866.

My Dear F.

I am really troubled by the receipt of your tidings of the Dean. Don't even think rashly of the matter. It will assume a softer aspect in a little while. Don't think of it so as to give it, in your own eyes, any one fixed color.[†1] You see you must allow something for her being his daughter, just as you claim something for your own daughters.[†2]

The "magic circle"[†3] consists of but one member.[†4] I don't in the least care for Mrs. T. T.[†5] except that her share in the story[†6] is (as far as I am concerned) a remembrance impossible to swallow. Therefore, and for the magic[†7] sake, I scrupulously try to do her justice, and not to see her — out of my path — with a jaundiced vision.

I feel your affectionate letter truly and deeply, but it would be inexpressibly painful to N[†7] to think that you knew the history. She has no suspicion that your assertion of your friend[†8] against the opposite powers,[†9] ever brought you to the knowledge of it. She would not believe that you could see her with my eyes, or know her with my mind. Such a presentation is impossible. It would distress her for the rest of her life. I thank you none the less, but it is quite out of the question. If she could bear that, she could not have the pride and self reliance which (mingled with the gentlest nature) has borne her, alone, through so much.

If I decide to go to America, it will not be within my means to form a[†10] determination until the middle or latter end of September. I am going to send Mr. Dolby out, early next month, and he will come back to me with his report before I arrive at a conclusion. Whensoever you can come here, I shall be heartily pleased to fix a time with you. Of course you will be very strictly on your guard, if you see Tom Trollope — or his wife — or both — to make no reference to me which either can piece into any thing. She is infinitely sharper than the Serpent's Tooth.[†11] Mind that.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To C. F. NOSOTTI,[†1] [4 JULY 1867]

Mention in next. Date: written the same day.

To MONSIEUR GODIN, 4 JULY 1867

Extract in N, III, 536.

GAD'S HILL PLACE | 4th July, 1867

My Dear Godin,[†2]

I have replied by this post to the enclosed letter from Mr. Nosotti, that I do not doubt he will find you quite ready to receive the frames[†3] at the Theatre.

To MRS HENDERSON,[†4] 4 JULY 1867

Text from MDGH, II, 293.

Gad's Hill, | Thursday, July 4th, 1867.

My Dear Mrs. Henderson,

I was more shocked than surprised by the receipt of your mother's[†5] announcement of our poor dear Marguerite's death.[†6] When I heard of the consultation, and recalled what had preceded it and what I have seen here, my hopes were very slight.

Your letter did not reach me until last night, and thus I could not avoid remaining here to-day, to keep an American appointment of unusual importance. You and your mother both know, I think, that I had a great affection for Marguerite, that we had many dear remembrances together, and that her self-reliance and composed perseverance had awakened my highest admiration in later times. No one could have stood by her grave to-day with a better knowledge of all that was great and good in her than I have, or with a more loving remembrance of her through all her phases since she first came to London a pretty timid girl.

I do not trouble your mother by writing to her separately. It is a sad, sad task to write at all. God help us!

Faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To MISS SARAH C. PUCK,[†1] 4 JULY 1867*

MS Private.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Fourth July, 1867

Dear Madam

I beg to answer you in reply to your letter, that I safely received the Daguerrotype of your brother's bust of Little Nell,[†2] and that I had a strong impression on my mind that I shortly afterwards acknowledged its receipt, and expressed my admiration of the quiet and thoughtful beauty pervading that work of art. I think I can scarcely have confounded the intention to write such a letter, with the actual execution of it. But it is possible that I may have done so, and still more possible that some mischance (my correspondence being very extensive), may have come between the letter and the Post office. In either case, do me the favor to make these lines known to your brother, as conveying my apology for a seeming remissness, and my thanks. His gift hangs in this house; and occupied the place it holds, immediately on its arrival.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Sarah C. Puck

To MRS CLARKSON STANFIELD, 5 JULY 1867*

MS National Maritime Museum.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Fifth July, 1867

My Dear Mrs. Stanfield

You will see by the accompanying note from Emerson Tennent (it is rather hard to read), that his view of the case is exactly mine; though of course I expressed no opinion in writing to him. As he was one of the Secretaries to the Board of Trade, for years,[†3] and has a son in the office,[†4] I can not but think he is right about the examination, and that Herbert[†5] will find it more difficult than you suppose.[†6] It is not reasonable (though to be sure many public affairs are *un*reasonable), that History should be wanted in the National Debt Office, and should be dispensed with in so important a department as The Board of Trade. What I want you to tell me by return of post, is This: Is Herbert sure that he is under no mistake herein, and that he is reasonably up to the Board of Trade examination though not up to the National Debt one? In that case, I will write both to the Duke of Richmond[†7] and to Tennent, by Sunday night's post from here. But if Herbert should want time, we had best take time, and not throw away the chance of[†8]

To WALTER THORNBURY, [?6 JULY 1867]

Extract in MDGH, III, 239 where wrongly given as part of To Thornbury, 5 Oct 67. Date: An Apology to Bedford had appeared in AYR on 6 July (see below); CD probably acquitted Thornbury "of all blame" at the same time.

Certainly I acquit you of all blame in the Bedford case.[†1] But one cannot do otherwise than sympathise with a son who is reasonably tender of his father's memory. And no amount of private correspondence, we must remember, reaches the readers of a printed and published statement.[†2]

I told you some time ago that I believed the arsenic in Eliza Fenning's[†3] case to have been administered by the apprentice. I never was more convinced of anything in my life than of the girl's innocence, and I want words in which to express my indignation at the muddleheaded story of that parsonic blunderer[†4] whose audacity and conceit distorted some words that fell from her in the last days of her baiting.

Ever faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To THE DUKE OF RICHMOND, [7 JULY 1867]

Mention in To Mrs Stanfield, 10 July 67. Date: CD had no doubt written on Sun 7 July, as he told Mrs Stanfield he would, if necessary, on 5 July.

To SIR JAMES EMERSON TENNENT, 7 JULY 1867*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Sir James Emerson Tennent Bart: | 66 Warwick Square | London | S. W.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Seventh July 1867

My Dear Tennent.

Your cordial letter does me good.

Exactly what you say of the case, I had previously said to Mrs. Stanfield. Referring the question back to her, she explains that what she wants is a nomination to one of the SUPPLEMENTARY clerkships in the Board of Trade, and she sends me the printed particulars of that Examination: which (as so stated) is decidedly easier than the Examination for the National Debt office, as being haunted by no terrific Spectre called "History". These Supplementary clerks, I notice too, can at any time go up to be more severely punished by the Civil Service Pugilists in the Examination Ring:- another reason, I take it, for her picking out such a post.

Therefore "I will tomorrow, and betimes I will"[†1] write to the President of The Board of Trade. If you will kindly add your powerful aid, I hope we may save the dear fellow's son.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 8 JULY 1867*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Monday Eighth July 1867

My Dearest Georgy.

Here is a very serious matter for you to demand from Marsh, the truth about. Tell him that I will have no trifling with letters, and that he had best tell you what became of the letters that were given to him yesterday to post, and attempt no concealment.

When we came in from our walk yesterday, I asked him if the letters were posted? He replied (not quite easily, as I now recall) that he was going to post them in the evening. I told him to be careful, and to be sure to be in time.

Consternation was caused here this morning by the Proofs not having arrived from me, either by the first post, or the second! At noon they arrive at Wills's house, posted (I have the envelope) IN LONDON TO DAY!!! Another letter, addressed to the same district as Wills's (N.W.), had not arrived at all, at noon, and the Devil's own confusion and amazement have arisen in consequence. These are the only two I know about.

Ever affecy.
CD.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 9 JULY 1867*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Ninth July 1867

My Dearest Georgy

Will you bring me here tomorrow, a clean flannel waistcoat, belt, pair of linen drawers, and pair of stockings. If you will bring them in my little bag with "Charles Dickens, Gad's Hill Place" on it — on the floor to the right of the large window in my room — the bag will be useful for bringing back papers on Saturday.

Ever Your most affectionate
CD.

To MRS CLARKSON STANFIELD, 10 JULY 1867*

MS Dartmouth College, New Hampshire.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Tenth July 1867

My Dear Mrs. Stanfield

Here is the Duke of Richmond's prompt reply to my letter. We can do nothing now — the present Government[†1] remaining in — but wait. In the mean time, coaching may be vigorously pursued.

Ever Faithfully
CD.

To WALTER THORNBURY, 10 JULY 1867

Text from N, III, 536.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Tenth July 1867

My Dear Thornbury

We must not have too many murders. They damage your book.[†2] I will not taboo the Red Barn[†3] as your heart is in it, but I taboo Mrs. Brownrigg.[†4] Spring Heeled Jack,[†5] Good. Illustration of another type of Prison Discipline,[†6] Good. I don't see much in Jack the Painter.[†7]

Faithfully Yours always
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To J. T. FIELDS, 12 JULY 1867†

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND, | Friday Twelfth July 1867

My Dear Fields

[†a]Our letters will be crossing one another rarely! I have received your cordial answer to my first notion of coming out; but there has not yet been time for me to hear again[†a] — except from Mr. Osgood.

As I told you in my last, Mr. Dolby (who sails on Saturday the 3rd. of August), will bring you out the Childrens' paper. Of course he will bring the original MS, but, to ensure correct printing on your side, I am having it set up in type, to the end that I may send you, with the MS, a clear proof to set up again from. I do not know how they may humour the delicate little joke, on your side, but I am convinced that it would be a great success here. It is full of subjects for illustration.[†1]

In case you should desire to advertize, I send you on the other side the little Bill of Fare. You know best what will serve your Magazine. Let me merely hint that it might be expedient to illustrate it very slightly, or not at all, there; and to republish in a little book with as much illustration as you please, if you can find (I can't!) a fanciful man.

[a]With kindest regard to "both your houses"[†2] — public and private, Ever

Faithfully Yours[a]
CHARLES DICKENS

James T Fields Esquire

[†b]Holiday Romance.

Communicated by Charles Dickens

In Four Parts

Part I. Introductory Romance. From the pen of William Tinkling Esquire*
Part II. Romance. From the pen of Miss Alice Rainbird.†
Part III. Romance. From the pen of Lieutenant Colonel Robin Redforth# Part IV. Romance. From the pen of Miss Nettie Ashford¶

---

* Aged Eight † Aged Seven
Aged nine
¶ Aged Six[b]

To L. W. MOREY,[†3] 12 JULY 1867

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Twelfth July 1867

Dear Sir

In reply to your letter, I beg to say that whosoever represents me as being "a bitter enemy to Teetotalers" merely does a very foolish thing. And as a very foolish thing is much more easily done than answered (supposing it were worth answering) I pursue that absurdity no further.

Knowing something of the condition of my countrymen in their various grades and stations, I know that the abuse of fermented drinks works a great deal of misery and ruin among them. But on the other hand I know that the use of fermented drinks is an innocent, social, and wholesome custom. And as I never, if I know it, will commit the injustice of punishing unoffending people because there are guilty people, I cannot in reason assist your society.

To the best of my observation, I suppose any kind of excess to lead to disastrous consequences. But because many forms of religion lead to what is practically Diabolical irreligion, I would not therefore abolish all forms of religion. Neither because the attraction of the two sexes, one towards another, occasions crime and degradation very often, am I prepared to enlist in a Crusade for the separation of the two sexes henceforth.

Dear Sir | Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

L. W. Morey Esquire

To SAMUEL CARTWRIGHT, 15 JULY 1867*

Text from transcript, British Dental Association.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Fifteenth July, 1867.

My Dear Cartwright.

We are very sorry to hear that you still have cause for being uneasy and anxious about your daughter.[†1] When I received your note, I was on the point of writing to you to assure you that it really is sometimes fine here, and that it would give us the greatest pleasure if you would try us again from a Saturday to Monday although I now fear that you may for the time be always pre-engaged when your short weekly holiday comes round. Still let me say that I am never absent on those days, and that a line at any time to say you are coming will be sure to find a room ready for you, and me delighted to expect you. This country is really beautiful when the corn and hops are growing....[†2]

Believe me alwys | My Dear Cartwright | Very faithfully yours
CHARLES DICKENS.

Samuel Cartwright Esq.

To THE REV. JOHN TAYLOR, 15 JULY 1867*

MS Mrs H. B. Sinclair.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Fifteenth July, 1867

My Dear Sir

Again I have to thank you for a kind and most considerate letter. Your conclusion in the matter shall be mine, but I wish to put before you — as perhaps you will put before Edward — two considerations.

Edward is altogether wrong in supposing that he could ever pursue Carpenter's work or smith's work, half so easily or agreeably as with you. If he could pursue them here, he should not, because I know from experience that he will do nothing earnestly at home. Again as to Chemistry:- if he leave you at the end of this term, I must send him somewhere to attend a chemistry class. He will only pass into fresh hands in some new place, and will never do half so well, or be half so much at home, with a stranger to whom he is wholly unaccustomed, as under your direction.

I am assured on the best authority that the practical knowledge of farming he requires is, for Australian purposes, of a very limited nature. I do not doubt that it would be a mere waste of time to give as much as a year to it. He is too young to go out yet. He is most completely self-deceived if he supposes that I do not know him better than to trust to his improving himself in any thing of his own accord, or to his reading at home. His choice really lies between you and some one he knows nothing about. And before he makes it (which he is quite free to do) I should wish him to understand thoroughly what he gives up and throws away.

I have not the least objection to your making him acquainted with the contents of this note, if you should think fit. I want him to understand the case.

I am My Dear Sir | Yours faithfully and obliged
CHARLES DICKENS

The Rev John Taylor

To JOHN B. MARSH,[†1] 17 JULY 1867

Mention in N, III, 537; dated 17 July 67.

To MESSRS TICKNOR & FIELDS, 17 JULY 1867

Extract in N, III, 537; addressed Ticknor, Fields & Co.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Wednesday, Seventeenth July, 1867

I have received your letter of the 1st of this month, and I send you the present packet in consequence. It contains (as you will find) the Reprinted Pieces already published here, and 101 heavy pages (I hope only in the sense of being close!) of printed matter. Whether these 101 pages precede or succeed the Reprinted Pieces in point of order, is of no moment. But I wish them, if consistent with your arrangements, to follow one another as I have numbered them. I assume that in point of quantity they are as much as you want.[†2]

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 18 JULY 1867*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Eighteenth July 1867

My Dearest Georgy

I am not sure whether I can get home tomorrow, or not. On the whole I rather think yes. The best way will be to provide as though I were coming, and to be equally prepared for my not coming.

Chorley offers himself for Saturday. Of course I have replied in the affirmative. Have a room prepared for him. I have told him to write and name the train which the Basket shall meet. Therefore if I don't come tomorrow, open any note from him. If I make it Saturday, I will contrive to come to Gravesend by Noon Train.

I am doing a world of work, and clearing off all sorts of things.

Love to Harry. | Ever most affecy.

CD.

To JOSEPH PAYNE,[†1] 20 JULY 1867*

MS Mr Michael Silverman.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Twentieth July, 1867

Sir

I am happy to give you full permission to extract the two passages described in your note, for the purpose of publication in your projected book.[†2]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

J. Payne Esquire

To THE HON. ELEANOR EDEN,[†3] 21 JULY 1867*

MS Dickens House.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Twenty First July, 1867

My Dear Miss Eden

I shall be happy to retain Mrs. Hoskyns's[†4] paper[†5] for insertion in All The Year Round, provided that lady does not object to curtailment at my hand, and to the omission of the Tobacco song; which, with variations, is too extensively known to be republished.[†1] I will do nothing with the article until I receive your reply.

I am very sorry to learn that your aunt is so unwell and I beg to send her the assurance of my Kindest regard. That boy of mine in India[†2] whom she helped so much is perfectly happy there.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To PERCY FITZGERALD, 21 JULY 1867

MS University of California, Los Angeles.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Twenty First July, 1867

My Dear FitzGerald

I am heartily glad to get your letter, and shall be thoroughly well pleased to study you again in the pages of A.Y.R.[†3] Meantime — [†a]and until you come here for a few days — please consider that the dreadful epithet and description are not withdrawn, but cleave to you.[†a†4]

I have settled nothing yet about America, but am going to send Dolby out on the 3rd. of next month, to survey the land and come back with a report on some heads whereon I require accurate information. Proposals (both from American and English speculators) of a very tempting nature have been repeatedly made to me; but I cannot endure the thought of binding myself to give so many Readings there, whether I like it or no; and, if I go at all, am bent on going with Dolby single-handed.

I have been doing two things for America; one, the little story to which you refer;[†5] the other, four little papers for a Child's Magazine.[†6] I like them both, and think the latter rather a queer combination of a child's mind with a grown up joke. I have had them printed, to ensure correct printing in the United States. You shall have the Proof to read, with the greatest pleasure. On second thoughts, why shouldn't I send you the children's proof by this same post? I will, as I have it here, send it under another cover. When you return it, you shall have the short story.

Believe me always | Heartily Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Percy FitzGerald Esquire

†aI hope you haven't forgotten that the Honorable Charles Townsend vowed that he would enjoy her. She was beautiful.†7

†bP. S. The Dreadful Doctor†1 has appeared!

Latest Intelligence†2

— And has sent in his pamphlet on Puffing.ab†3

To MONSIEUR GODIN, 21 JULY 1867*

Text from copy left by Walter Dexter at Dickens House. Address: Monsieur Godin, Lyceum Theatre, London.

GADS HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Twenty First July 1867

My Dear Godin,

I am heartily obliged to you for your letter and for all the trouble you have so kindly taken with my pictures.†4 A thousand thanks. When you come back from Paris, I will ask you to accept a complete set of my books, as a small reminder of my friendly regard.

Will you ask Mr. Grey†5 what I owe him for his re-touching? Or can you tell me what I should send him myself?

I cannot conclude this short note, without congratulating you on the extraordinary completeness with which you have acquired the English language. I honestly assure you that there is not in your letter the faintest indication of its having been written by any one but an Englishman. It is truly remarkable.

The only commission I charge you with for Paris, is the commission to come back again.

Faithfully yours always,
CHARLES DICKENS.

To AUSTEN HENRY LAYARD, 21 JULY 1867

MS British Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Twenty First July, 1867

My Dear Layard

It most unfortunately happens that I have engaged myself to dine with my neighbour Hulkes, next Thursday. I would excuse myself, but that it is to receive the new General commanding in Chief at Chatham.[†6]

But as your coming will morally and physically do me good too, don't think me romantically disinterested or hospitable in asking you whether we cannot pick out another day?

Try.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN B. MARSH, 21 JULY 1867*

MS Mr. P. H. Lynch.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM by ROCHESTER, KENT.
Twenty First July, 1867

Dear Sir

The fault has been undoubtedly mine; but I did not contemplate (as I should have done), your calling on the next Friday after I wrote.[†1]

I will come to town on Tuesday next for the purpose of seeing you, if you can make it convenient to call in Wellington Street at 2 o'Clock that day.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John B Marsh Esquire

To HENRY SCOTT, 23 JULY 1867*

MS Mr Peter Harries.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Twenty Third July 1867

I think I can give you a week or so's occupation at Gad's Hill, Scott, if you will call here on Friday, the 9th. of August.

CD.

To MRS CLARKSON STANFIELD, 23 JULY 1867*

MS Beinecke Library, Yale University.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,

Tuesday Twenty Third July 1867

My Dear Mrs. Stanfield

Having received a hint from Emerson Tennent that if I were to call at the Board of Trade upon his son (who is Secretary to the Vice President)[†2] it might facilitate Herbert's nomination, I went there to day. He immediately presented me to Mr. Peel[†3] the Duke's[†4] Secretary, who gave me the strongest assurance that Herbert was not to be supposed as placed upon the Duke's ordinary list, but that I might rest satisfied that his name was noted as a special one, and that he would have one of the earliest vacancies. "He could not say the very first, as the Duke had made one particular promise"; but he very plainly implied that there was the strongest probability of our having the second. Nothing could be more complete than the conviction conveyed to me that the thing could not stand better.

But he asked me, Did I know that there was a recent rule in the office that those extra or supernumerary clerks were not afterwards eligible to go up as candidates for the superior clerkships? I said on the contrary; it was the young gentleman's belief that he would afterwards be eligible. He replied that was a common mistake. Should he then change the list, and place him on the superior list? Though the objection to that, was, that on the superior list vacancies were rare, while on the extra list they occurred frequently. I replied after a few moments' consideration, that it would be best to leave the case exactly where it stood — that I supposed there was no rule, even in the Board of Trade, without an exception? (To which he assented.) And that probably Mr. Stanfield's son was not very unlikely to be made the subject of such an exception if he should ever seek it. (To which he also assented.) Do not trouble yourself to answer this. I merely want you to know that Herbert does not stand in the crowd of applicants, but decidedly holds a station apart.

Ever affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

You understand that he remains as applying for one of those supernumerary clerkships which you described, and the examination for which is easy.

To J. T. FIELDS, 25 JULY 1867

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Twenty Fifth July, 1867

My Dear Fields.

Your note of the 12th. is like a Cordial of the best sort. I have taken it accordingly.

Dolby sails in the Java on Saturday the 3rd. of next month, and will come direct to you. You will find him a frank and capital fellow, [†a]with the drawback of an occasional stutter.[†a] He is perfectly acquainted with his business and with his Chief, and may be trusted without a grain of reserve.

I hope the Americans will see the joke of "Holiday Romance". The writing seems to me so like Childrens', that dull folks (on any side of any water) might perhaps rate it accordingly! I should like to be beside you when you read it, and particularly when you read the Pirate's story.[†1] It made me laugh to that extent that my people here thought I was out of my wits, until I gave it to them to read — when they did likewise.[†1]

Ever Cordially Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To AUSTEN HENRY LAYARD, 25 JULY 1867

MS British Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Twenty | Fifth July 1867

My Dear Layard

I have just got your letter here. I shall expect you at Gad's tomorrow (will you let me know, if you can, what train?) and will engage for your being in London on Saturday at any time most suitable to you.

Ever Faithfully
CD.

To WILLIAM THOMAS,[†2] 25 JULY 1867*

MS Mr Richard Constable.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Twenty Fifth July, 1867

Sir

Agreeably to the request of Messrs. Ticknor Fields and Co. of Boston, I beg to send you enclosed, a proof of the four little stories I have written for their Childrens' Magazine.[†3] I think it best to leave the artist who is to illustrate them, to choose the points he may prefer for that purpose.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MESSRS TICKNOR & FIELDS, 25 JULY 1867

Extract in N, III, 539.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Thursday Twenty Fifth July 1867

In reply to your letter of the 12th just received, I beg to say that it will be best for you to remit the Thousand Pounds to me in London or here.[†4]

By this night's post, I transmit a duplicate proof of Holiday Romance to Mr. William L. Thomas, agreeable to your directions. I have had it set up for legibility's sake. Mr. Dolby will bring you both proof and MS. I enclose a note for Mr. Fields.

To SAMUEL CARTWRIGHT, 26 JULY 1867*

Text from transcript, British Dental Association.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Twenty Sixth July 1867.

My Dear Cartwright.

The first part of your note is sad indeed.[†1]

We shall be delighted by your beginning your holiday here, and will do all we can to make it a quiet and cheerful beginning. The end of August will suit us perfectly and your room is duly set aside. You have but to claim it.

It is very kind of you to offer your great skill in aid of my "Speaking department", and I thankfully accept the offer. I will call at mid-day on Monday, but if it should be a busy day with you, and you will merely instruct your man to tell me so, I shall be in town on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday too, and can repeat my visit without the smallest inconvenience.

It has been blowing and raining hard here for ever so long, and the corn is lying all manner of ways.

Ever faithfully yours,
CHARLES DICKENS.

Samuel Cartwright Esquire

To MISS BERTHA STONE, 27 JULY 1867*

MS Benoliel Collection.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Saturday Twenty Seventh July 1867

My Dear Bertha

I have devoted a morning's leisure to going very carefully over your story — to piecing it together — to filling up the cracks, and smoothing the joints and hinges — and to giving it an air of novelty at the end; also a little suggestion of playfulness and happiness. I call it (for these last reasons):

GUESS![†2]

In its present shape, I am not afraid to venture it in All The Year Round.[†3] You shall have it in proof, as soon as it is all printed. You must prepare yourself for finding it greatly cut. But I hope it may serve as a not useless pattern for you to work by, another time.

My Love to Marcus, who I hope is getting well. Tell him the Gad's doesn't know itself without him.

Ever affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To THOMAS ADOLPHUS TROLLOPE, 29 JULY 1867

Extract in T. A. Trollope, What I Remember, 1887, II, 126. Date: misdated 9 July by Trollope in What I Remember; clearly Mon 29 July as given by N (III, 539), since Dolby sailed for America on Sat 3 Aug.

My "readings" secretary, whom I am despatching to America at the end of this week, will dine with me at Verey's in Regent Street at six exact to be wished God-speed. There will only be besides, Wills, Wilkie Collins, and Mr. Arthur Chappell. Will you come?[†1] No dress. Evening left quite free.

To MRS ROSS CHURCH, 31 JULY 1867*

MS Mr. R. M. R. Church.[†2]

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Thirty First July, 1867

My Dear Mrs. Ross Church

I have but just now received your kind and interesting letter, having been absent for some days. I write merely to acknowledge the receipt of your book,[†3] and to thank you for it, and to assure you that I will read it attentively in the course of next week. Having done so, I will write again.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

August

To MESSRS COUTTS & CO., 1 AUGUST 1867

MS (only signature in CD's hand) Walter T. Spencer.

Gad's Hill Rochester | 1 August 1867

Messrs. Coutts & Co

Sell my £1000 India Bonds.

CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 1 AUGUST 1867*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday First August 1867

My Dearest Georgy.

Enclosed is the key of my great writing table in my room. In the (I think) third drawer from the top on the left hand, you will find some loose business letters lying. One, an American letter, open, signed "B.Wood".[†4] That is what I want sent me by the Messenger who brings this. If it should not be in that drawer, it is in the first, second, or third drawer on the right hand.

One cannot find out at what time Dolby sails on Saturday. I doubt if I shall get down to Gad's before Sunday; but I mean to get down on Saturday, if I can.

My foot is bad again, and I can't walk.

Ever affecy.
CD.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 2 AUGUST 1867†

MS Huntington Library.

Adelphi Hotel, Liverpool,
Friday Night Second August 1867.

My Dearest Georgy

[†a] I got your note at the office this morning. No doubt the late-posted letters will find me tomorrow in due time.[†a]

I cannot get a boot on — wear a slipper on my left foot —, and consequently am here under difficulties. My foot is occasionally painful, but not very. I don't think it worth while consulting anybody about, as yet. I make out so many reasons against supposing it to be gouty, that I really do not think it is.

Dolby begs me to send all manner of apologetic messages for his going to America. He is very cheerful and hopeful, but evidently feels the separation from his wife and child very much. [†a]It is very pleasant to see a quietly game man, and he is that, without doubt. [†a]His sister was at Euston Square this morning, looking very well. Sainton[†1] too — [†a]dyed very black,[†a] but naturally light and jovial.

With the view of keeping myself and my foot quiet, I think I will not come to Gad's until Monday. If I don't appear before, send Basket to Gravesend to meet me leaving town by the 12.10 on Monday. This is important, as I couldn't walk a quarter of a mile tonight for £500.

Love to all at Gads | Ever My Dearest Georgy | Your most affectionate

CHARLES DICKENS

To WALTER THORNBURY, 5 AUGUST 1867

Text from Notes & Queries, 5th Series, VII, 326 (28 Apr 77).

GAD'S HILL PLACE, HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT

Monday, Fifth August 1867

My Dear Thornbury

I think the Bottle Conjuror[†2] and Berners[†3] Street Hoax[†4] too well known, Ditto

Daniel Lambert,[†1] Miss Biffin[†2] and Borolowski.[†3] The Wonderful Magazine and the books of celebrated characters[†4] have used them up, with the misers.[†5]

Wild Boys, yes.[†6]

Ice Winters,[†7] yes: if compounded of several experiences.

Balloons,[†8] I am doubtful about. The Nassau Voyage was described in an (appropriately) inflated little book done by Monck Mason,[†9] and much quoted at the time.

A Hurricane and an Earthquake might go together?[†10]

A memorable inundation, a good subject.[†11]

And I very much like the idea of those Abyssinian notes.[†12] Pray pursue it.

Although I date as above, I really write from the office, where I am stopped by a bad foot on my way homeward from Liverpool. Henry Thompson[†13] insists on my sitting in absolute repose until he releases me. May that be soon!

Very faithfully yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [6 AUGUST 1867]

Extract in F, VIII, vii, 709. Date: 6 Aug 67, according to Forster.

I am laid up with another attack in my foot, and was on the sofa all last night in tortures. I cannot bear to have the fomentations taken off for a moment. I was so ill with it on Sunday, and it looked so fierce, that I came up to Henry Thompson. He has gone into the case heartily, and says that there is no doubt the complaint originates in the action of the shoe, in walking, on an enlargement in the nature of a bunion. Erysipelas has supervened upon the injury; and the object is to avoid a gathering, and to stay the erysipelas where it is. Meantime I am on my back and chafing.... I didn't improve my foot by going down to Liverpool to see Dolby off, but I have little doubt of its yielding to treatment, and repose.

To MADAME SAINTON-DOLBY, 7 AUGUST 1867

MS Dickens House.

26 Wellington Street, Strand, W.C.[†1]
Wednesday Seventh August, 1867

My Dear Madame Sainton.

Don't think me a Traitor for not writing to you to report how I left your brother on board the Java. I have been laid up here ever since I came back, with erysipelas in the foot. And my attitude has been so constrained that I could write but few letters.

He was in the best spirits possible under the circumstances, and looked ruddy and well. He was as airily and neatly lodged as a passenger aboardship can be, and had a very cheerful and modest gentleman for his travelling companion. Probably you have heard from Queenstown that eating and drinking (and being violently shaken by the screw) are the standard amusement of the Java. I tremble to think of his circumference when he lands in the United States!

With kind regards to M. Sainton, Believe me always

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To THE REV. G. D. CARROW,[†2] 8 AUGUST 1867

Text from "An informal call on CD by a Philadelphia clergyman" University, Winter 1965-6, No. 27, pp. 14-17 (Princeton Quarterly).

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday, Eighth August 1867

Dear Sir,

I have received your note with much pleasure.[†3] Although I date from my house in the country I am at my office, 26 Wellington Street, for the greater convenience of being attended by a surgeon for a hurt foot. If it will suit your convenience to call upon me tomorrow afternoon at 5 o'clock, I shall be happy to give you that opportunity of shaking hands which you do me the honour to desire.[†1]

Faithfully yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

To AUSTEN HENRY LAYARD, 8 AUGUST 1867

MS British Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Thursday Eighth August, 1867

My Dear Layard.

Although I am heartily sorry not to see you here, I am heartily glad that a Swiss Holiday lies before you and within a few days of you. I suppose it is something peculiar in my constitution, but I can not imagine how any man of worth can endure the personal contemplation of the House of Commons! I breathe more freely when I think of you, at all events, as out of that infernal atmosphere for a while.

Faithfully Yours Ever
CHARLES DICKENS

To GEORGE DOLBY, 9 AUGUST 1867*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Friday Ninth August 1867

My Dear Dolby

Ever since I came back to London from leaving you aboard the Java,[†2] I have been laid up in Wellington Street with erysipelas in the foot. I went almost straight from you to Henry Thompson, who immediately laid me on my back. Today I immensely enjoy the delight of being out again in the Brougham. The cause of all the annoyance is the action of the boot on an undefended part of a bone, in constant walking.

I had a charming note from your wife yesterday. She and Baby[†3] (as of course you will hear from herself) were quite in force. I would wager a trifle that you are at Halifax this blessed day![†4]

Your note from Queenstown duly came to hand. I wonder how much you measure round the waist by this time! There is nothing new here whatever, except that you may tell Fields when you see him that I showed Forster, the other day, a proof of "Holiday Romance" (the Childrens' papers written for Fields), and that he wrote me after reading them:— "They are the quaintest, wisest, most charming, most comical, in all ways most delightful, things I have ever read. I cannot tell you how they please me. And you may be certain that with all people in America worth pleasing, they will be an enormous success."!

Madame[†1] sends you her regard, and hopes to meet you when you come home. She is very anxious for your report, and is ready to commit herself to the Atlantic, under your care. To which I always add:—"If I go, my dear; if I go."

Scott has been in dutiful attendance in Wellington Street, though horribly disappointed by being brought up from Gad's; where he had settled himself among the women-servants, the fowls, boys, horses, cricket paraphernalia, and dogs, with intense enjoyment. Please God he will go down with me on Monday, and will revel in a Cricket Match on Tuesday, and a Launch in Chatham Yard on Saturday, when my daughter Mary christens a ship.[†2]

I don't worry you about our American affairs, because all I have to say or write respecting them, I have said and written. Try some madeira and give me your views of it.

My Dear Dolby | Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Of course I have taken care, today, of tomorrow's payment to your Bankers.

To PATRICK SCOTT, 9 AUGUST 1867*

MS Mr Arthur Rogers.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND, | Friday Ninth August 1867

Dear Sir

I am exceedingly glad to get your letter to day, because I wrote to you (as you will see by the enclosed), three months ago.[†3] But when I had done so, I found that I had preserved no reference to your name and address,[†4] and that I consequently could not dispatch the note! I beg you to accept my cordial apologies for this absurd omission.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

P. Scott Esquire

To JOHN FORSTER, [?EARLY AUGUST 1867]

Extract in F, VIII, vii, 709. Date: a few days after letter of 6 Aug 67, according to Forster.

I could not walk a quarter of a mile to-night for £500. I make out so many reasons against supposing it to be gouty that I really do not think it is.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 10 AUGUST 1867*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Saturday Tenth August 1867

My Dearest Georgy

I am getting on capitally, though the foot seems a little more irritated this morning than yesterday.

Last evening I missed you so much, that I was obliged to go to the Olympic. Charles Mathews seeing me took pains and played most admirably.[†1] But he was taken unwell in "Cool as a Cucumber", and we had to wait until he got better.

I am now going to Sir Henry Thompson. No news. Love to the boys.

Ever Most affecy.

CD.

To WILLIAM SMITH,[†2] 14 AUGUST 1867*

MS "The Cricketers", Richmond.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Fourteenth August 1867

My Dear Sir

I shall be very happy to dine with you at Richmond[†3] on Tuesday the 20th. in accordance with your kind invitation.

Faithfully yours
CHARLES DICKENS

William Smith Esquire

To LADY ELIZABETH CUST,[†4] 15 AUGUST 1867*

MS The Earl of Darnley. Address: The | Lady Elizabeth Cust | 13 Eccleston Square | London | S.W.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Thursday Fifteenth August, 1867.

My Dear Lady Elizabeth

You shall have my vote for next November with great pleasure. I have entered in my pocket-book the name of the case in which you are generously interested.[†5]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To J. C. PARKINSON, 15 AUGUST 1867*

MS Mrs M. E. Parkinson.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Fifteenth August, 1867.

My Dear Mr. Parkinson

You shall have any portrait of me with the greatest pleasure, and I shall be proud to have a place in your new house[†1] — to which I heartily wish all happiness.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

J. C. Parkinson Esquire

To MRS HENRY AUSTIN, 18 AUGUST 1867*

MS Morgan Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Eighteenth August, 1867

My Dear Letitia

Many thanks for your note. The foot affair originates, Sir Harry Thompson says, from pressure on a bone received in much walking, and engendering a tendency to inflammation. There is no cure but in repose (a medicine particularly irksome to me), and in time. Meanwhile I get no boot on, but halt about in a leathern bucket made for the purpose.

Mary and Georgina join with me in love to you and to Rosa.[†2] Ask Rosa particularly from me "whether she is aware that Johnny?" — &c &c according to the formula of news I used to give her at Broadstairs at breakfast time.

Ever affectionately
CD.

To PATRICK SCOTT, 19 AUGUST 1867*

MS Mr Arthur Rogers.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Nineteenth August, 1867

Dear Sir

Allow me to thank you for your book,[†3] which has reached me safely, and which I hope to have the pleasure of soon reading under the trees here.

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

P. Scott Esquire

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 19 AUGUST 1867

Mention in American Art Association & Anderson Catalogue No. 3823; dated 19 Aug 67.

Regrets he cannot accept sketch for All the Year Round.

To MISS MARY DICKENS, [20 AUGUST 1867]

MS (envelope only) Dickens House. Address: Miss Dickens | Gad's Hill Place | Higham | by | Rochester. PM London 20 Aug 67.

To CHARLES READE, 22 AUGUST 1867

Mention in N, III, 541; MS 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill Place, 22 Aug 67; addressed Charles Reade.

Making an appointment for Reade to visit him.

To WILKIE COLLINS, 23 AUGUST 1867†

MS Morgan Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Twenty Third August 1867

My Dear Wilkie,

I have done the overture,[†1] but I don't write to make that feeble report.

I have a general idea which I hope will supply the kind of interest we want. Let us arrange to culminate in a wintry flight and pursuit across the Alps. [†a]Let us be obliged to go over — say the Simplon Pass[†a] — under lonely circumstances, and against warnings. Let us get into all the horrors and dangers of such an adventure under the most terrific circumstances, either escaping from, or trying to overtake (the latter, the better, I think) some one, on escaping from, or overtaking, whom, the love, prosperity and Nemesis of the story depend. There we can get Ghostly interest, picturesque interest, breathless interest of time and circumstance, and force the design up to any powerful climax we please.[†2] If you will keep this in your mind as I will in mine — urging the story towards it as we go along — we shall get a very Avalanche of power out of it, and thunder it down on the readers' heads.

Ever affecy.

CD.

To WILKIE COLLINS, 28 AUGUST 1867*

MS Parrish Collection, Princeton University.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Twenty Eighth August, 1867

My Dear Wilkie

I am now ready for you to come into the story, and will read you what I have done if you can come to the office on Friday at half past 12. I hope it promises well, and goes quite smoothly.

Ever affecy. Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Reade is coming down on Monday for a couple of days. Can you come with him? Charley and Katie are here.

To EDMUND YATES, 28 AUGUST 1867

MS Mr Michael Killick. Address: Edmund Yates Esquire | General Post Office | St. Martins le Grand | London.

GAD'S HILL PLACE | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Twenty Eighth August 1867

My Dear E. Y.

I cannot conceive how that absurd story[†1] originates, unless in my having had an injured foot from pressure on the bone in much walking, and having had (under Henry Thompson's advice) to lay it up for a week. I am in the utmost possible force, thank God.

Rely on my not going off Westward, without our having an evening together. I am still patiently undecided and unpledged, and await Dolby's return with full report. He will not be back, as I take it, many days before Michaelmas. If I go, it will not be before November.

Ever affecy
CD.

To ARTHUR CHAPPELL, 30 AUGUST 1867*

MS Mrs Susan Sidi Leon.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Thirtieth August 1867

My Dear Mr. Chappell

I find your note here this morning. I am now going to write to Dolby for tomorrow's Mail. His best address is:

Care of Messrs. Ticknor Fields & Co.

Boston
Mass.
U.S. of America

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

S Arthur Chappell Esquire

To GEORGE DOLBY, 29-30 AUGUST 1867*

MS Rosenbach Museum and Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Twenty Ninth August 1867

My Dear Dolby

I resolved not to write in reply to your letter from Halifax, but to wait until you reported yourself from Boston. This morning I had the great pleasure of receiving here your Boston letter of the Sixteenth. I heartily congratulate you on your prosperous arrival. Your account of your reception by Fields and Co. is delightful; and in not letting them pay your charges, you did exactly what I could have wished.

Of course I suspend my judgment on the great American question, until I am in possession of more reports from you, and until you are beyond the enthusiastic circle of Boston.

In reference to the "Hon B. Wood", I did not telegraph, because the money has not been forthcoming. Mrs. Atwood, (you remember her on the Railway?) wrote from abroad to Wills a few days ago, asking if the money were paid, and unintelligibly setting forth some unintelligible mistakes. I begged Wills to reply that you had the MS and would apprize Mr. Wood that you were ready to receive the money. As to the rest of this matter, — if Mr. Wood does not cash up, and Fields likes to have the story on the same terms, by all means let him have it. Having made the best of the idea in one form, I should be very unlikely to take to it in another.

I have been under Henry Thompson for my foot (I forget whether I told you this before), and he says that the pressure of the boot in constant walking has inflamed a bone. I am now just able to get a boot on again, and walk for an hour. Otherwise I have been, and am, better than well. I am hard at it on the Xmas No. — in case of going to America — and as well on as I could expect. Scott has been in temporary action here for two or three weeks, and is here now, and sends his duty. He is always the same cheerful attentive fellow. His wife has been down here and has professed herself to Mary, "never so happy in her life".

I quite agree with you as to the principle of selection always to be observed in such a case as the Boston Halls. "Your public close to you, and you able to do with them exactly as you like", is your motto evermore in observing and choosing for your magnificent Chief.

We have a Cricket Match here to day, and I am going to score. My daughters are both here, and Charles Collins, and Cartwright. I must go up to the office tomorrow to hold Xmas consultation with Wilkie, and will finish this note there. Not that I am likely to have anything to add to it, but merely to give it the latest date. Everybody sends you kindest regard.

Office, Friday.

I found here this morning from Arthur Chappell, a letter asking me where he could address you by this Mail?[†1] I immediately sent him up the address of this present letter. The same messenger (I may mention) took the needful cheque due tomorrow,[†1] to Old Cavendish Street.[†2]

I have just seen Fechter who purposes opening the Lyceum in the middle of this month,[†3] on what I fear will be a forlorn short season before Xmas when he (happily for him) relinquishes the lease. His Company will be miserably weak. He asked after you and sent his cordial remembrance. Of course Wills does the like. He (Wills) is away on a short holiday. I very much fear that this very morning has disclosed to me some more dishonesty here![†4] — Which will probably bring him back on short notice, in a flutter.

I have no other news that you don't know. Some of the Stanfield Scenery of my old plays, framed in immense glasses got for the purpose from Paris, adorns the Gad's Hill Hall, now emptied of everything else. Edwin Landseer has just been down here, and esteems the chief subject as almost the finest specimen of the Master's hand, and cheaply saleable at £2,000. There are now six immense dogs in the yard, and tramps who open the gates look into a grove of expanded jaws and retire.

I need not tell you with how much interest and care I shall read your letters, or how my interest will accumulate as the time draws near (as it soon will) for your return. My last present words are three words of wisdom. Judge — For — Yourself.

Ever My Dear Dolby | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

I write a line to Fields by this mail.

To J. T. FIELDS, [30 AUGUST 1867]

Mention in last. Date: written same day.

September

To THE EDITOR OF THE TIMES, 2 SEPTEMBER 1867

Text from The Times, 4 Sep 67.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT | Sept. 2.

Sir,

A newspaper paragraph[†5] (originating, I have no doubt, in some innocent mistake), to the effect that I am much out of health, has become widely circulated, both in England and abroad, and has brought many inquiries upon me. Will you allow me to state in your columns that the statement is wholly destitute of foundation, and that I never was better in my life?

Faithfully yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

To W. H. WILLS, 2 SEPTEMBER 1867

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Second September 1867

My Dear Wills.

Like you, I was shocked when this new discovery burst upon me on Friday — though, unlike you, I never could believe in Johnson[†1] solely (I think) because, often as I have tried him, I never found him standing by my desk when I was writing a letter, without trying to read it.

I fear there is no doubt that, since John's[†2] discharge,[†3] he Johnson[†1] has stolen money at the Readings. A case of an abstracted shilling seems to have been clearly brought home to him by Chappell's people, and they know very well what that means. I supposed a very clear keeping off from Anne's[†4] husband[†5] (whom I recommended for employment to Chappell) to have been referable only to John; but now I see how hopeless and unjust it would be to expect belief from him with two such cases within his knowledge.

But don't let the thing spoil your holiday. If we try to do our duty by people we employ; by exacting their proper service from them on the one hand, and treating them with all possible consistency, gentleness, and consideration, on the other; we know that we do right. Their doing wrong cannot change our doing right, and that should be enough for us.

So I have given my feathers a shake, and am all right again. Give your feathers a shake, and take a cheery flutter into the air of Hertfordshire.

Great reports from Dolby, and also from Fields. But I keep myself quite calm, and hold my decision in abeyance, until I shall have book, chapter, and verse, before me. Dolby hoped he could leave Uncle Sam on the 11th. of this month.

Sydney has passed as a Lieutenant and appeared at home yesterday, all of a sudden, with the consequent golden garniture on his sleeve. Which I, God forgive me, stared at, without the least idea that it meant promotion.[†6]

Ever Faithfully
CD.

To W. HEPWORTH DIXON, 3 SEPTEMBER 1867

Extract in Goodspeed's catalogue No. 369; MS 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill, 3 Sep 67; addressed W. Hepworth Dixon.

I am overwhelmed with letters referring to a preposterous paragraph now cruising about the world of[†7] newspapers to the effect that I am out of health. In what unaccountable delusion or mistake it can have originated, I am at a loss to imagine. But absurd as it is, it really becomes important to contradict it, for the stemming of the flood of correspondence. I shall be truly obliged to you if you will certify me in this week's Athenaeum, as combining my usual sedentary powers with the active training of a prize-fighter.[†1]

To J. T. FIELDS, 3 SEPTEMBER 1867†

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Third September 1867

My Dear Fields

Your cheering letter of the 21st. of August arrived here this morning. A thousand thanks for it. I begin to think (nautically) that I "head West'ard". You shall hear from me fully and finally, as soon as Dolby shall have reported personally.

The other day I received a letter from Mr. Fiske[†2] of New York (who came over in the winning yacht,[†3] and described the voyage in the Times)[†4] saying he would much like to see me. I made an appointment in London and observed that when he did see me, he was obviously astonished. While I was sensible that the magnificence of my appearance would fully account for his being overcome, I nevertheless angled for the cause of his surprise. He then told me that there was a paragraph going round the papers, to the effect I was "in a critical state of health". I asked him if he were sure it wasn't "cricketing" state of health? To which he replied, Quite. I then asked him down here to dinner, and he was again staggered by finding me in sporting training; also, much amused.

Yesterday's and today's post bring me this unaccountable paragraph from hosts of uneasy friends, with the enormous and wonderful addition that "eminent surgeons" are sending me to America, for "cessation from literary labour"!!! So I have written a quiet line to The Times, certifying to my own state of health, and have also begged Dixon to do the like in the Athenaeum. I mention the matter to you, in order that you may contradict, from me, if the nonsense should reach America unaccompanied by the truth. But I suppose that the New York Herald will probably have got the latter from Mr. Fisk aforesaid.[†1] [†a]I notice that about once in every seven years, I become the victim of a paragraph-disease. It breaks out in England, travels to India by the Overland Route, gets to America per Cunard Line, strikes the base of the Rocky Mountains, and, rebounding back to Europe, mostly perishes on the steppes of Russia from inanition and extreme cold.[†a]

Charles Reade and Wilkie Collins are here; and the joke of the time is to feel my pulse when I appear at table, and also to inveigle innocent messengers to come over to the summer house where I write (the place is quite changed since you were here, and a tunnel under the high road connects this shrubbery with the front garden), to ask with their compliments how I find myself now.

If I come to America this next November, even you can hardly imagine with what interest I shall try Copperfield on an American audience, or, if they give me their heart, how freely and fully I shall give them mine. We will ask Dolby then, whether he ever heard it before.

I cannot thank you enough for your invaluable help to Dolby. He writes that at every turn and moment, the sense and knowledge and tact of Mr. Osgood are inestimable to him.

Ever My Dear Fields | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To F. D. FINLAY, 3 SEPTEMBER 1867

MS Comtesse de Suzannet.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Third September 1867.

This is to certify that the undersigned innocent victim of a periodical paragraph-disease, which usually breaks out once in every seven years (proceeding from England by the overland route to India and pr. Cunard line to America where it strikes the base of the Rocky Mountains and rebounding to Europe, perishes on the steppes of Russia), is not "in a critical state of health", and has not consulted "eminent surgeons",[†2] and never was better in his life, and is not recommended to proceed to the United States for "cessation from literary labour", and has not had so much as a head ache for twenty years.

CHARLES DICKENS

Hoping that the Northern Whig is the same.

To CHARLES KENT, 3 SEPTEMBER 1867*

MS Beinecke Library, Yale University. Address: Charles Kent Esquire | Campden Grove | Kensington | London | W.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Third September 1867

My Dear Kent

I cannot imagine how that paragraph ever got into circulation, but it is just now overwhelming me with letters and causing me real annoyance. I never was better in my life — doubt if any body ever was or can be better — and have not had anything the matter with me but that squeezed foot, which was an affair of a few days. I have now written to the Times about it, and shall be truly obliged to you if you will contradict on authority.[†1] Of course it will go the round of America and lead to all sorts of confusion, otherwise.

I was much concerned to see your pencil-writing this morning, taking it at once as a sign of your being ill. I earnestly hope you will soon be inky again. It is very distressing to think of your undergoing so much.

I send you under another cover, a Proof of the little things I told you I had written for a children's magazine at Boston. They are not yet published in the States. I wanted oddly to combine a child's mind with a grown up joke. Return me the proof at leisure.

Reading yours again, I am encouraged to believe that you are highly hopeful as to Sun affairs, and coming up smiling as to your health. Tell me more of such good news when you restore my children[†2] to my arms.

Ever My Dear Kent | Your affectionate Friend
CHARLES DICKENS

To THE EDITOR OF THE SUNDAY GAZETTE, 3 SEPTEMBER 1867

Text from the Sunday Gazette, 8 Sep 67.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT, | Sept. 3, 1867.

Sir,

In a number of letters that this morning's post brings me, your journal is quoted as authority for my being in "a critical state of health," and also for certain recommendations supposed to have been applied to my dismal case by "eminent surgeons." You will not think me out of humour, or ungrateful for your interest in me, if I beg you to contradict these statements as absurdly unfounded. I am perfectly well, and I have not been ill.

Faithfully yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

P.S. — It has been suggested by a sagacious farmer and member of my village club here,[†3] that "critical" state of health may originally have been a misprint for "cricketing", in consequence of our having lately won a match.

To W. H. WILLS, 3 SEPTEMBER 1867

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Third September | 1867

My Dear Wills

I am glad that the misconduct of Johnson[†1] has given us the opportunity of advancing people whose conduct has been good. May we have got to the bottom and the end of it at last!

So overwhelmed am I by letters concerning this absurd newspaper paragraph about my being out of health — which has now swelled out into my being recommended by "eminent surgeons" to go to America for "cessation from literary labour",(!) that I have deemed it necessary to write a line to the Times. I have also written to the Sunday Gazette, the oftenest-quoted authority. And I think I will have a few words ready for Thursday, to go in before Mabel.[†2]

The best answer to your U.S. enquiry, is the enclosed from Fields this very morning. Preserve it for return, please.

Ever Faithfully
CD.

To LORD LYTTON, 4 SEPTEMBER 1867

MS Lytton Papers.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Fourth September 1867

My Dear Lytton

I have promised Fechter (who has a great delicacy as to troubling you himself) that I will bring to your remembrance the slight alterations he proposed to you, for stage purposes, in the Lady of Lyons, and that I will ask you whether your having sanctioned them may be stated in the bill?[†3] I enclose a Memorandum received from him this morning, exactly describing what the changes are.[†4] If agreeable to you, I will readily attend an advanced Rehearsal, and see that they are properly made; also, if you should have any suggestion of your own that you would like to entrust to me, be sure that I will see to its being rigidly carried out.[†5]

He is taking great pains with the play, and getting it up thoroughly well. I hope you will be pleased with the result — and I think you will.

Send me a line here in answer

Ever Affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To THE RIGHT REV. THE LORD BISHOP OF GRAFTON AND ARMIDALE, NEW SOUTH WALES,[†1] 4 SEPTEMBER 1867*

MS Private.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Fourth September 1867

My Dear Bishop.

It unfortunately happens that I must be in town tomorrow on business. But either Saturday or Monday will suit me perfectly, if you can make either day suit you. Will you let me have a line in reply by about noon tomorrow at 26 Wellington Street, Strand W.C.

We are extremely sorry to receive your account of Mrs Sawyer,[†2] and beg to unite in kind regard.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To HUMPHREY WOOD,[†3] 5 SEPTEMBER 1867

MS British Library. Address: Humphrey Wood Esquire | 79 High Street | Chatham.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Fifth September 1867

Sir.

In reply to your letter I beg to express my regret that my compliance with the request it communicates to me,[†4] is removed from within the bounds of reasonable possibility by the nature of my engagements, present and prospective.

Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

Humphrey Wood Esquire

To WILKIE COLLINS, 9 SEPTEMBER 1867

MS Morgan Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Monday Ninth September 1867

My Dear Wilkie

This note requires no answer, and is merely thrown out to be taken up into your meditations.

Qry.[†5] Whether we require any money fraud from Obenreizer after all? Whether his best fraud may not be, after discovering Vendale to be the real man (a disappointment to him, as he hoped to do him an injury, not a service) to resolve to set himself up as the real man; and to put Vendale out of the way for Ever? Qry. whether this, and his resolve to destroy some proof along with Vendale, is not the best fraud for the story?

I am so bringing him out, as that he may go with either this design or the other.

Also I have made Vendale formerly in the Counting House with Wilding; so that they have previous acquaintance with, and confidence in, one another, when we bring them together. This makes the opening of the chapter "The New Partner Acts",[†1] far more natural, and makes the way quite easy for Wilding's will.[†2]

Ever affecy.

CD.

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 9 SEPTEMBER 1867

Extract in Federal Hill Antiquities Maryland catalogue, Nov 1997; checked from MS Sotheby, June 1979; MS 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill, 9 Sep 67; addressed F. Ouvry.

I enclose a cheque due tomorrow to Mrs. C.D.

To WILKIE COLLINS, 10 SEPTEMBER 1867

MS Morgan Library. Address (envelope only, Maggs catalogue, No. 1189 [1995]): Wilkie Collins Esquire | C/o Mr. Anderson | Southborough | nr. Tunbridge Wells[†3] PM 10 Sep 67

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.

Tuesday Tenth September 1867

My Dear Wilkie,

Odd that we should be moved to write cross[†4] letters!

Let us meet at the office at 1/2 past 12 on Friday. I don't think I shall have done Wilding's death[†5] by that time (I have been steadily at work but slowly, laying ground); but the Obenreizer-introduction-Chapter[†6] will be ready to run over. All the points you dwell upon, are already in it.

It will be an immense point, if we can arrange to start you for a long run, beginning immediately after Wilding's death,[†7] and if I can at the same time be told off to come in, while you are at work, with the alpine ascent[†8] and adventures. Then, in two or three days of writing together, we could finish. I am very anxious to finish, my mind being so distracted by America, and the interval so short.

Reverting to my proposed appointment for Friday, let me add that if you are free, I could dine with you at the Athenæum on Thursday at 1/2 past 5, if you would undertake to order dinner.[†1] This would give us more time. But perhaps you are engaged?

If Thursday be our appointment, write by return. If Friday, — don't write.

Ever affecy.

CD.

Kind regard to your mother.
Have you done — or are you doing — the beginning of the chapter "Exit Wilding". I shall very soon want it.

To THE RIGHT REV. THE LORD BISHOP OF GRAFTON AND ARMIDALE, NEW SOUTH WALES, 11 SEPTEMBER 1867†

MS Birthplace Museum, Portsmouth.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Eleventh September 1867

My Dear Bishop

[†a]I am unfortunately lame (from an injury done to some of the delicate bones of the foot in walking), and can get on no left boot or shoe.[†a] In this condition I am obliged to leave Plorn to come over without me. God bless you and yours in your new lives,[†2] and may you be prosperous and happy!

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS ELLIOT, 12 SEPTEMBER 1867

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

GAD'S HILL PLACE | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Thursday Twelfth September 1867

My dear F.

I am doubtful about the Ghost-Stories, because they are perfectly inconsistent with your warranty[†3] (their incoherent numbering as to pages, has nearly driven me mad.) Observe. In the Bishop's story, the Bishop's wife did not see the hand at the Kitchen-curtain. She only repeats what the servants told her, and it is always possible that the servants, or some of them, may have made the whole of the uproar which she only heard. Neither did she see the form pass inside the Curtain. In your very first narrative, you get to second hand evidence, such as would not be admitted in a Court of Law. The Black Cat story, again, is secondhand. You claim to have got it at first hand, but you didn't so get it. A man comes to the Bishop and tells him such and such things, of which the Bishop's wife tells you. That is not the warranty you announce in the beginning. See about the Trenchard story again. It is an old one, perfectly well known as a story. You cannot tell it on the first hand testimony of an eye witness. You only tell about your daughter being disturbed in the night — which might happen anywhere. Again, "Mr. B told me of a house". Mr. Any-letter-in-the-Alphabet can tell you of a house. Does Mr. B mean to say that he saw the mad housemaid sitting on the floor, or that he was one of the party of watchers who afterwards sat up when the bell rang??? And you do not consider the monstrous improbability — the unmeaning and next to incredible absurdity — of the man who undertook the adventure requesting that the bell might not be attended to, if he did ring! — By far the most densely dull and unlikely amount of pig-headedness that I ever heard of in my life! And even admitting that such a Fool ever existed, do you think any reader of average intelligence would swallow the Camel[†1] carrying the whole party of watchers, one and all similar noodles? — Greater indeed,! because the bell rang twice.

If I were to put in those stories with your claim attached, I should be deservedly pounced upon. If I were to put them in without your claim, I should be merely republishing a stereotyped set of tales. The lady with the hair cut off, and the Scotch Fisherman, are both striking; and those I will gladly publish if you like.[†2]

My state of mind on the general subject is yours exactly. I do not set myself up to pretend to know what the Almighty's laws are, as to disembodied spirits. I do not profess to be free from disagreeable impressions and apprehensions, even. But these are no reasons for calling that, evidence, which is no evidence at all, or for taking for granted what cannot be taken for granted. (Even if Mr. B were not so preposterously loose, the very common place circumstance would step in, that housemaids go mad, and men in all conditions of life die of a fit, every week in the year.)

I am truly grieved to hear that you are not well, but you do not — cannot be expected to — realize the difficulties of my life at this time. Expecting Dolby back — the American question still undecided until then — but the probability before me of leaving all that I hold dear, on the 2nd. of November — I have to fix my disturbed mind on the Xmas story I am doing with Wilkie, and to hammer it out bit by bit as if there were nothing else in the world; while the regulation of my personal affairs, the six months' prospective management of a great periodical published every week, the course to be taken in America, the apportionment of 100 nights of hard work — tug at my sleeve and pull at my pen, every minute in the day. In the face of all this, everything but the story must be dismissed, until the story is done. And when it is done, all this, which might take a year, will have to be disposed of in a hurried week or two. Add a correspondence which knows no cessation, and a public position fraught with appointments of all sorts and people of all kinds, and count my hours for a visit to a friend of mine (and a dear one) down in Berkshire![†1]

Ever affectionately

CD.

To PERCY FITZGERALD, 12 SEPTEMBER 1867

Text from P. Fitzgerald, Memories of CD, p. 50.

Gad's Hill Place | Thursday, Twelfth September, 1867.

My Dear Fitzgerald,

Many thanks for the play enclosed.[†2] It goes very glibly and merrily and smoothly, but I make so bold as to say that you can write a much better one.[†3] The most characteristic part in it is much too like Compton in the Unequal Match.[†4] And the best scene in it (where the husband urges his wife to go away), is so excessively dangerous, and is so very near passing a delicate line, that I think the chances would be very many to one against an audience's acceptance of it. Because, however drolly the situation is presented, the fact is not to be got over that that lady seriously supposes her husband to be in league with another man, to hand her over to that other man: both those men being present with her.

Put your sister, mentally, in the situation.

[†a]Our friend of The Mimmery,[†5] South Mimms, is married.[†a]

My dear Fitzgerald, | Faithfully Yours always

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To LORD LYTTON, [12 SEPTEMBER 1867]*

Telegram Lytton Papers.[†6] Date: 12 Sep 67 (see To Lytton, 13 Sep).

Lord Lytton poste restante

Eaux Bonnes, Pyrénées | France

You have evidently not received a letter from me for I have read your letter to Fechter[[sic]] Will you give me your authority to make the slight changes they are not changes of words[†7] reply to me at the theatre and trust it to my hands.

CHARLES DICKENS

a Lycéum Théatre | London

To LORD LYTTON, 13 SEPTEMBER 1867

MS Lytton Papers.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Thirteenth September 1867

My Dear Lytton

I sent you a telegram last night which crossed your letter received this morning.

What has become of my missing letter to you,[†1] I cannot imagine. It was posted at Gad's Hill, and was addressed to you at Knebworth, Stevenage. It contained a list in French, by Fechter, of the proposed changes (which he supposed you to have distinctly sanctioned when he was down at Knebworth), and I asked you if you would place them in my hands, and leave me to see a Rehearsal of them and be sure on your behalf that they were rigidly adhered to? I did not tell Fechter that I believed you had not understood yourself to have sanctioned them when he was at Knebworth, though I strongly entertained that belief, remembering what you said to me on the subject when I was there last. But I impressed upon him the necessity of their coming before you again, and hence my letter in question.

There are no changes whatever in the words of the play (save one or two slight transpositions and cuts, really not worth mentioning), except that the contract is signed at "nine" in the evening, instead of "one" in the day.[†2] This is, to get an effect of various lights — firelight, candlelight, moonlight, and what not — which I think decidedly improves the "business" of the scene, and renders Claude's being there without Pauline's recognition,[†3] very much more probable, and very much more impressive. The letter in the earlier part of the play[†4] is not a letter as Fechter arranges it; but the words of the letter are spoken as a part of the Dialogue. These are the only alterations I call to mind as affecting the text in any way.

I have not yet decided whether to go to America or not, but shall do so on my Secretary's return (I sent him out to feel the way), towards the close of this month. I will let you know my decision as soon as I shall have formed it, and I need not add that any commission you may invest me with if I go, shall be at least as much cared for as if it were my own.

[†a] Don't give way to laziness, and do proceed with that play.[†5] There never was a time when a good new play was more wanted, or had a better opening for itself. Fechter is a thorough artist, and what he may sometimes want in personal force is compensated by the admirable whole he can make of a play, and his perfect understanding of its presentation as a picture to the eye and mind.[†a]

Ever affectionately

CD.

The Lady of Lyons is to be produced on Monday next.

To THOMAS MITTON, 13 SEPTEMBER 1867*

MS Mr David Borowitz.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Thirteenth September 1867

My Dear Mitton

I have had so much and such complicated business to attend to all day, that I have not had a moment to myself.

At present I do not stand committed to go to America at all. I have sent out my Readings Secretary to examine closely, and come back and report to me. Towards the end of this month, I shall decide upon his reports and figures, and, if I go, I shall probably go on the 2nd. of November. He is on his way home now.

My daily experience of such things makes me pretty sure that Mr. Davies's[†1] reason for wanting to see me, will be no reason at all — some outrageous nonsense or other. And you may suppose that, with the few trifles I have to put in order with this distracting possibility of a journey of some 20,000 miles before me at a month's notice, I make as few appointments as I possibly can. But your best way will be to say in effect, "I know he has not yet decided to go to America, and I know that he is much occupied at his house in the country. But I will give you a letter of introduction to leave at his office in town, and no doubt he will answer it."

I write very hastily before going back.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To PERCY FITZGERALD, MID-SEPTEMBER 1867

Mention in Fitzgerald, Memories of CD, p. 51. Date: no doubt soon after 12 Sep.

Giving Webster's opinion of his play "with other details".

To MRS HENRY AUSTIN, 16 SEPTEMBER 1867*

MS Morgan Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Sixteenth September 1867

My Dear Letitia

I have not, even at this present time, the least idea whether I am going to America or not. Everybody else seems to know all about it, but nevertheless I do not, and the secret is well kept from me.

I sent Dolby out to look about him, and to make me an elaborate report on all the heads on which I required information. Until a week after his return, I shall not be in a condition to make up my mind; and he will not return (at the soonest) until another week is over.

Love to Harriett | Ever affectionately

CD.

To HENRY CHORLEY, 16 SEPTEMBER 1867*

Text from copy left by Walter Dexter at Dickens House from MS in the possession of C. D. Porch.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Monday Sixteenth September 1867

My dear Chorley,

I waited until I knew of your return, to thank you with all my heart for the beautiful books I am so proud of.[†1] You know for how many considerations of faithful friendship they are precious to me, outshining even their elegance and good taste.

We shall be delighted to take you in (not craftily) — I doubt my ability to get back to Gad's before Friday; express train for Gravesend from Charing X at 4.5. Aunt Georgina, Mary and Kate will be there on Thursday, and will give you a hearty welcome if you will tell them to expect you.

Ever affectionately,

C.D.

To CHARLES FECHTER, 16 SEPTEMBER 1867

Text from MDGH, II, 297-8.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Monday, Sept. 16th, 1867.

My Dear Fechter,

Going over the prompt-book[†2] carefully, I see one change in your part to which (on Lytton's behalf) I positively object, as I am quite certain he would not consent to it. It is highly injudicious besides, as striking out the best known line in the play.

Turn to your part in Act III., the speech beginning
Pauline, by pride[†3]
Angels have fallen ere thy time: by pride —

You have made a passage farther on stand:
Then did I seek to rise
Out of my mean estate.[†4] Thy bright image, etc.

I must stipulate for your restoring it thus:

Then did I seek to rise
Out of the prison of my mean estate;
And, with such jewels as the exploring mind
Brings from the caves of knowledge, buy my ransom
From those twin jailers of the daring heart —
Low birth and iron fortune. Thy bright image, etc. etc.

The last figure has been again and again quoted;[†1] is identified with the play; is fine in itself; and above all, I KNOW that Lytton would not let it go. In writing to him to-day, fully explaining the changes in detail, and saying that I disapprove of nothing else, I have told him that I notice this change and that I immediately let you know that it must not be made.

(There will not be a man in the house from any newspaper who would not detect mutilations in that speech, moreover.)

Ever

[CD]

To CAPTAIN JOHN HINDLE, 16 SEPTEMBER 1867

Text from N, III, 551.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Monday Sixteenth September 1867

My Dear John Hindle,

I am very much obliged to you for your note, and should have great interest in passing such a day as you propose to me. But I am so occupied and time-hampered this autumn, that I fear I must wait until you come back from India again![†2] I cannot appropriate a day to my own desires until after the 6th of October. That margin would be too wide for you, I take it?

Faithfully Yours always

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To MRS LONDON,[†3] 16 SEPTEMBER 1867

Extract in unidentified catalogue; MS 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill Place, 16 Sep 67; addressed Mrs London.

I am sorry that your novel had no better success with Chapman & Hall. But I am not surprised.... To the best of my belief there is no such institution in existence as you seek for that poor child. The foundling Hospital would have taken it from its mother, while a baby, but would not do so now. I do not think there is any kind of charity that could relieve the mother of it at its present age.

To LORD LYTTON, 16 SEPTEMBER 1867

MS Lytton Papers.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Monday Sixteenth September 1867

My Dear Lytton. I have your letter this morning, and I sit down to answer it, with the Prompt Book before me. The play is produced tonight. Of course the word absurdly made "yours" in the Telegram, was really "words".[†1]

Here follow the changes. All other changes are of scenic arrangement and stage management.

The Play opens thus.

Scene. Exterior of a small village Inn. Sign, The Golden Lion.[†2] Beauseant (behind the scenes) Yes, you may bait the horses; we shall rest here an hour. Enter Beauseant and Glavis. Glavis. Really my dear Beauseant! Consider! Consider that I have promised to spend a day or two with you at your Chateau; that I am quite at your mercy for my entertainment; and yet you are as silent and gloomy as a mute at a funeral, or an Englishman at a party of pleasure — (Then as the book goes: until, in the book, a servant brings in Beauseant's letter.[†3] Instead of which, Beauseant himself enters, and says "Citizen Melnotte"; To which Melnotte replies aside "(From her, perhaps.) — Who are you?" To which Beauseant rejoins: "Young man I know thy secret"[†4] &c, and speaks the letter word for word.

The Second Act ends with your original ending.

Damas finishes his speech with Zounds! [†a]I envy you.

Claude. Do you?[†a]

The first scene of the fifth act has only two speaking officers instead of three.[†5]

The following scene between Damas and Melnotte is slightly cut.[†6]

The contract scene[†7] is not otherwise touched, than that after Damas' speech about the Arab proverb,[†8] Beauseant gets off with "I wish you joy!"[†9] (in a burst of spite), and Glavis gets off with him.[†10] They then go straight to Melnotte's tag: "Ah the same love that tempts us into Sin[†1] —" &c.

I notice that in one of Melnotte's best speeches Fechter has erased three lines, including a passage I am very fond of:

From those twin jailers of the daring heart,
Low birth and iron fortune.

I have immediately told him that he must restore that passage, and that I insist (for you) on its being spoken.[†2]

Tomorrow I will write you another line, and tell you how the play is put upon the stage, and how the effects struck the audience.

Ever affecy.

CD.

P.S. Fechter has throughout devoutly believed that you sanctioned at Knebworth the omission of your first scene. If I, on seeing it out of the Prompt Book to day, had felt it safe, or indeed practicable, to get Pauline down to the Theatre and her wonder about the flowers restored, I should have done so — even at the risk of you yourself having actually considered the omission an improvement.

The Mother is not touched. Therefore she is of course not re-introduced after you dismiss her.

To LADY MOLESWORTH, 16 SEPTEMBER 1867*

MS Private.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Sixteenth September 1867

My Dear Lady Molesworth

My Governesses[†3] shall be yours, and Virginia's.[†4]

I am still undecided about America, and shall be for another fortnight. Then, I shall not have made up my mind without a very careful consideration of my Secretary's personal reports and the whole case. He is on his way home now.

Edwin Landseer was down here yesterday, and we had our usual number of Colonels to dinner.[†5] Chorley is coming on Thursday or Friday. Stephen[†6] has been very ill (he writes) and is sent away for change of air. Fechter opens to night with the Lady of Lyons, done in a new way scenically, and pictorially otherwise. The other man in town[†7] will probably be there with me; — I am going up to take care of certain little changes in the play, on Lytton's behalf. He is at the Pyrenées.

The dogs desire their duty, and Mrs Bouncer her defiance of Lady Flora. Poor Houston[†1] Stewart[†2] is in the dreadfullest distress, his handsome wife[†3] (to whom he is strongly attached) developing hopeless cancer, and suffering great pain. My daughter Katie and her husband are here. Contests at Croquet come off with the Military branch of the public service continually. All the house send kindest regards.

You can hardly imagine what letters have descended upon me. All along of that absurd Newspaper paragraph.[†4] I notice that about once in every five years I become the victim of a violent eruption of paragraphs; invariably representing me as being in a hopeless condition, at the precise time when the enormous gooseberry comes to perfection. The gooseberry and I always occupy the same relative positions. Likewise the seven old people whose united ages amount to any total you like, invariably meet at a tea party when the Doctors meet in consultation about me.

Ever Affecy. Yours

To LORD LYTTON, 17 SEPTEMBER 1867

MS Lytton Papers.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND
Tuesday Seventeenth September 1867

My Dear Lytton

I am happy to tell you that the Play was admirably done last night, and made a marked impression.[†5] Pauline[†6] is weak, but so carefully trained and fitted into the Picture as to be never disagreeable, and sometimes (as in the last scene) very pathetic.[†7] Fechter has played nothing nearly so well as Claude, since he played in Paris in the Dame aux Camelias,[†8] or in London in Ruy Blas.[†9] He played the fourth act as finely as Macready, and the first much better.[†10] The dress and bearing in the fifth act are quite new, and quite excellent.

Of the scenic arrangements, the most noticeable are, — the picturesque struggle of the cottage between the taste of an artist, and the domestic means of poverty (expressed to the eye with infinite tact)[†11] — the view of Lyons (act V. Scene 1) with a foreground of quay-wall, which the officers are leaning on, waiting for the General — and the last scene: a suite of rooms giving on a conservatory at the back,[†12] through which the Moon is shining. You are to understand that all these scenic appliances are subdued to the Piece, instead of the Piece being sacrificed to them; and that every group and situation has been considered, not only with a reference to each by itself but to the whole story.[†1]

Beauseant's speaking the original contents of the letter was a decided point, and the immense House was quite breathless when the Tempter and the Tempted[†2] stood confronted as he made the proposal.

There was obviously a great interest in seeing a Frenchman play the part.[†3] The scene between Claude and Gaspar (the small part very well done) was very closely watched for the same reason, and was loudly applauded.[†4] I cannot say too much of the brightness, intelligence, picturesqueness, and care, of Fechter's impersonation throughout.[†5] There was a remarkable delicacy in his gradually drooping down on his way home with his bride, until he fell upon the table a crushed heap of shame and remorse while his mother told Pauline the story.[†6] His gradual recovery of himself as he formed better resolutions was equally well expressed; and his being at last upright again and rushing enthusiastically to join the army,[†7] brought the house down.

I wish you could have been there. He never spoke English half so well as he spoke your English; and the audience heard it with the finest sympathy and respect. I felt that I should have been very proud indeed to have been the writer of the Play.

Ever affecy.

CD.

To JOHN B. MARSH, 17 SEPTEMBER 1867

Extract in Stan V. Henkels catalogue No. 1372; MS 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill, 17 Sep 67; addressed John B. Marsh.

I beg to assure you that it will give me real pleasure to testify to the affecting impression made for me at Birmingham by that Article in the Birmingham Post,[†8] which your letter informs me you wrote, and to the ability and feeling that pervaded its description.

To WILKIE COLLINS, 18 SEPTEMBER 1867

MS Morgan Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Eighteenth September 1867

My Dear Wilkie.

Frederic[†9] Chapman came here yesterday. After some preparatory references to his own contracts and engagements (which were true), he asked me if he might enter on the question of your copyrights, in partnership with Smith and Son?[†1] As nothing could be better for your books than that they should fall into Smith's hands, I graciously replied Yes. It then appeared that he had seen Smith, who was "disposed to go into the matter" — and who evidently had expressed an opinion that it might be brought to bear. Thereupon I dictated to F.C — for him to write down — the general purport of your memorandum: wherewith he is to hold conference with Smith, before coming back to me. He expressed an opinion that Smith and Elder's demand was very high.

As he asked me whether he might except the new story[†2] here, for himself to offer for; and as I don't think you would make as good terms for it in the batch as separately; I again graciously said Yes.[†3]

I am jogging on (at the pace of a wheelbarrow propelled by a Greenwich Pensioner) at the doomed Wilding.[†4]

Ever affecy.

CD.

To GEORGE DOLBY, [20 SEPTEMBER 1867]

Telegram; given in Dolby, CD as I Knew him, p. 131. Date: sent in reply to Dolby's telegram of 19 Sep, announcing his arrival in Queenstown.[†5]

Welcome back, old boy! Do not trouble about me, but go home to Ross first and see your wife and family, and come to me to 'Gad's' at your convenience.[†6]

To AUGUSTUS DE MORGAN,[†7] 20 SEPTEMBER 1867*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Twentieth September, 1867

My Dear Sir

I am exceedingly obliged to you for your kind suggestion, and have lost no time in forwarding it to the writer of "Old Stories Re-told".[†8] I thought I knew the case very well, but I did not know of those curious and important pieces of after-evidence concerning the dimensions of the house.[†1] I have no doubt that the writer of the Series will gladly act upon your hint, and I will avail myself of your esteemed offer to look over his proof.

With many thanks Believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Professor De Morgan

To GEORGE DOLBY, [21 SEPTEMBER 1867]

Telegram; given in Dolby, CD as I Knew him, p. 131. Date: sent in reply to Dolby's telegram of 21 Sep, saying that Mrs Dolby was then on her way to London to meet him.[†2]

Come on to 'Gad's' this afternoon with your wife, and take a quiet day or two's rest when we can discuss matters leisurely.

To EDWARD LEVY,[†3] 22 SEPTEMBER 1867*

MS Mitchell Library, Glasgow.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Twenty Second September 1867

My Dear Levy

When I had the pleasure of seeing you in my box at the Lyceum, I did not know of an article that had appeared in the Telegraph on my own Edition.[†4] It has so touched and gratified me, that I beg you with all my heart to thank the writer, and the managers of the paper from me.[†5]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Edward Levy Esquire

To WILKIE COLLINS, 23 SEPTEMBER 1867

MS Morgan Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Monday Twenty Third September | 1867

My Dear Wilkie

Like you, I am working with snail-like slowness. My American possibility divides my mind so incongruously with this occupation.

But I think I have a good idea. I send it you with a view to your at-odd-times-thinking-out of the last Act.[†1] When Vendale is at the last pass of the murderous business on the Simplon, he conscientiously says some broken words to Obenreizer to the effect: "If it be possible that you are the man — as I have lately thought — do so and so. Villain and murderer as you are, my trust to my dead friend remains unchanged."[†2] This is so brokenly said, that Obenreizer supposes it refers to some obscurity in Vendale's birth — not his own — and so goes on to build up Nemesis.[†3]

I have already got Vendale haunted by the possibility that Obenreizer is the man.[†4]

I will write again by, or before, Friday. I see a great chance for Act III out of this leaving of Act II. — Don't you?[†5]

Ever affecy
CD.

The Demon Illegibility has possession of me[†6]

To JOHN FORSTER, [24 SEPTEMBER 1867]

Mention in next. Date: no doubt written the same day.

To W. H. WILLS, 24 SEPTEMBER 1867

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Twenty Fourth September | 1867.

My Dear Wills.

I send you, enclosed, a plain statement of the American question, deduced from a mass of notes and figures.[†7] Give me your opinion on it: To go, or not to go?[†8]

I have sent it to Forster in exactly the same way,[†9] with exactly the same request, and no hint of my own tending either way.

On Saturday I will call at the office sometime in the day, for a letter from you.[†10]

I would rather make up on Monday morning, as on that day I must be in town to send off the decisive Telegram to Boston.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To MRS MONTGOMERY ATWOOD, 25 SEPTEMBER 1867

Mention in Sotheran catalogue No. 823 (1931); MS 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill Place, 25 Sep 67; addressed Mrs Atwood.

Mentioning Dolby and Mr [Wood][†1] who met in New York.

To CHARLES KENT, 26 SEPTEMBER 1867*

MS Huntington Library.

ATHENAEUM

Thursday Night, Twenty Sixth September | 1867

My Dear Kent,

I received the Children's proof[†2] quite safely, and was charmed with your letter about it. I knew beforehand that I should be, because you and I love children and flatter ourselves that we know something about them.

I should have written sooner but that I have been daily expecting to make up my mind about America, and was sure that you would like to know it. It is now arranged[†3] that I shall finally telegraph out, "Yes" — or "No" — on Monday. Solar system[†4] shall be apprized immediately afterwards.

Ever My Dear Kent | Your affectionate

CD.

To MISS MARY DICKENS, [?27 SEPTEMBER 1867]

Telegram. Mention in next.

To MISS MARY DICKENS, [28 SEPTEMBER 1867]

Extract in F, VIII, vii, 710. Date: 28 Sep 67, according to Forster.

As I telegraphed after I saw you, I am off to Ross[†5] to consult with Mr. Forster and Dolby together.[†6] You shall hear, either on Monday, or by Monday's post from London, how I decide finally.

To JOHN FORSTER, [28 SEPTEMBER 1867]

Telegram, summary in Dolby, CD as I Knew him, p. 138. Date: same day as last.

Saying that he would come to Ross by the afternoon train and stay with Forster at his hotel.[†1]

To W. H. WILLS, 28 SEPTEMBER 1867

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Saturday Twenty Eighth September 1867

My Dear Wills.

There are two respects (worth mentioning perhaps), in which you are wrong. 1. If I were to go to America, the Reading Months would be December, January, February, March, April — five in all.[†2] 2. Extra payments on reserved seats, does not mean run-up prices and jobbery,[†3] but simply this:— There will be two prices: a dollar and a half, and (for reserved seat) two dollars. The calculation is always made at one price only, and that the lowest. It is made on the assumption that all places let, are places of the lowest price. — You understand?

I am off to Ross, to see Forster and Dolby together. Forster notices the absence of margin that you notice, in the calculation. I will return to the office, Monday forenoon. Final telegraph to America, Yes or No, that day![†4]

Ever Faithfully
CD.

To MESSRS TICKNOR & FIELDS, [30 SEPTEMBER 1867]

Telegram. Mention in To Delane, 30 Sep. Date: sent "to day".

To MISS MARY DICKENS, [30 SEPTEMBER 1867]

Telegram. Mention in To Mary Dickens, 30 Sep. Date: no doubt sent the same day.

To JAMES BIRTLES, 30 SEPTEMBER 1867*

MS Private.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Monday Thirtieth September 1867

Mr. James Birtles

Please send me over by Bearer (for a few minutes reference), the copy of my last chapter for the Xmas No. — that chapter now setting up.[†1]

CD

To JOHN DELANE, 30 SEPTEMBER 1867*

MS Dickens House.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Monday Thirtieth September 1867

My Dear Delane

After our conversation on Saturday,[†2] it may perhaps not be uninteresting to you to know that I have decided to go, and have Telegraphed to America to that effect to day.

Faithfully Yours ever
CHARLES DICKENS

John Delane Esquire

To MISS MARY DICKENS, 30 SEPTEMBER 1867

Extract in MDGH, II, 299. Address (envelope, MS Beinecke Library, Yale University): Miss Dickens | Gad's Hill Place | Higham | by | Rochester. PM 30 Sep 67.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Monday, Sept. 30th, 1867.

My Dearest Mamie,

You will have had my telegram that I go to America. After a long discussion with Forster, and consideration of what is to be said on both sides, I have decided to go through with it. I doubt the profit being as great as the calculation makes it, but the prospect is sufficiently alluring to turn the scale on the American side.

Unless I telegraph to the contrary, I will come to Gravesend (send basket there) by 12 train on Wednesday. Love to all.

We have telegraphed "Yes" to Boston.

I begin to feel myself drawn towards America, as Darnay, in the "Tale of Two Cities," was attracted to the Loadstone Rock, Paris.[†3]

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 30 SEPTEMBER 1867

MS Morgan Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Monday Thirtieth September 1867

My Dearest Georgy.

The Telegram is dispatched to Boston: "Yes. Go ahead."

After a very anxious consultation with Forster, and careful heed of what is to be said for and against, I have made up my mind to see it out. I do not expect as much money as the Calculation estimates; but I cannot set the hope of a large sum of money, aside.

I am so nervous with travelling and anxiety to decide sensibly, that I can hardly write. But I send you these few words as my dearest and best friend.

Ever Your affectionate

CD.

To CHARLES KENT, 30 SEPTEMBER 1867*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Monday Thirtieth September 1867

My Dear Kent.

I go! — Per Cunard Ship Scotia from Liverpool, Saturday 2nd. November.[†1]

Affecy. Yours Ever

CD.

October

To MRS HENRY AUSTIN, 2 OCTOBER 1867*

MS Morgan Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Second October 1867

My Dear Letitia.

I go. Probably from Liverpool on the 2nd. of November.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To MISS MARY DICKENS, 2 OCTOBER 1867*

MS Mr. Peter Harries.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Second October 1867

My Dearest Mamie

I will come to Higham tomorrow by the 2..12, for I cannot get away by the Noonday Train.

With best love | Ever affecy

To W. C. MACREADY, 2 OCTOBER 1867*

MS Morgan Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.[†1]
Wednesday Second October 1867

My Dearest Macready

I should have written to you sooner, to tell you how delighted I was to receive your cheerful letter, but that I was slower to make up my mind about America than the Papers were to make it up for me. And I wished to tell you my decision.

It is only just now formed, and I go. — Probably from Liverpool on the 2nd. of November, per Scotia. Having sent Dolby out to survey the land, and having carefully gone through his papers, I take no terms from anybody, but make the venture for myself.

Your proposal to come and dine here (meaning at the office) charms me. Will you take Monday the 28th. Tuesday the 29th. or Thursday the 30th. of this month? Say which I shall book. It seems no time worth speaking of, since I shut the door of your Managerial room at Drury Lane, when going away on a similar expedition! — [†2]

I cannot tell you how both your letters have pulled me up. It is so inexpressibly interesting and stimulating to me, to find my dear old Parr in a tone so bright and blooming.

All here send you their dearest loves, in which you may be sure Mrs. Macready is not forgotten. Nor Katie. My special remembrances wait on Johnny, and on the Noble Boy.

Forster and Mrs. Forster are at Ross, where I went to see them from last Saturday to Monday. I am in the agonies of writing the Christmas Number with a divided mind, and feel as though I should never get out of it.

Ever My Dearest Macready
Your most affectionate Friend,
CHARLES DICKENS

W. C. Macready Esquire

To C. ROACH SMITH,[†3] 2 OCTOBER 1867

Mention in Sotheby's catalogue, 1903, in Kitton's "Dickens Ana", IV, 13; MS 1 p.; dated 2 Oct 67; addressed C. Roach Smith (with envelope).

To F. C. BEARD, [3 OCTOBER 1867]

Envelope in Sotheby sale, May 1986; addressed F. Carr Beard Esquire | 44 Welbeck Street | Cavendish Square | W. PM 3 Oct 67.

To J. T. FIELDS, 3 OCTOBER 1867†

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Third October 1867

My Dear Fields

I hope the Telegraph Clerks did not mutilate out of recognition or reasonable guess, the words I added to Dolby's last Telegram to Boston. "Tribune London Correspondent totally false."[†1] Not only is there not a word of truth in the pretended conversation, but it is so absurdly unlike me that I cannot suppose it to be even invented by anyone who ever heard me exchange a word with mortal creature. [†a]For twenty years I am perfectly certain that I have never made any other allusion to the republication of my books in America than the goodhumoured remark "that if there had been international copyright between England and the States, I should have been a man of very large fortune, instead of a man of moderate savings, always supporting a very expensive public position." Nor have I ever been such a fool as to charge the absence of international copyright upon individuals. Nor have I ever been so ungenerous, as to disguise or suppress the fact that I have received handsome sums from the Harpers for advance sheets. When I was in the States, I said what I had to say on the question, and there an end. I am absolutely certain that I have never since expressed myself, even with soreness, on the subject. Reverting to the preposterous fabrication of the London Correspondent the Statement that I ever talked about "these fellows" who republished my books, or pretended to know (what I don't know at this instant) who made how much out of them, or ever talked of their sending me "conscience-money", is as grossly and completely false as the statement that I ever said anything to the effect that I could not be expected to have an interest in the American people. And nothing can by any possibility be falser than that.[†a] Again and again in these pages, I have expressed my interest in them. You will see it in the Child's History of England.[†2] You will see it in the last Preface to American Notes.[†3] Every American who has ever spoken with me in London, Paris, or where not, knows whether I have frankly said: "You could have no better introduction to me than your Country." And for years and years when I have been asked about Reading in America, my invariable reply has been, "I have so many friends there, and constantly receive so many earnest letters from personally unknown readers there, that, but for domestic reasons, I would go tomorrow." I think I must, in the confidential intercourse between you and me, have written you to this effect more than once?

The Statement of the London Correspondent from beginning to end, is false. It is false in the letter, and false in the Spirit. He may have been misinformed, and the Statement may not have originated with him. With whomsoever it originated, it never originated with me, and consequently is false. — More than enough about it.

As I hope to see you so soon, my dear Fields, and as I am busily at work on the Xmas No. I will not make this a longer letter than I can help. I thank you most heartily for your proffered hospitality, and need not tell you that if I went to any friend's house in America, I would go to yours. But the Readings are very hard work, and I think I cannot do better than observe the rule on that side of the Atlantic which I observe on this — of never under such circumstances going to a friend's house, but always staying at an hotel. I am able to observe it here by being consistent and never breaking it. If I am equally consistent there, I can (I hope) offend no one.

Dolby [†b]is charged with a certain delicate mission from me, which he will explain to you by word of mouth.[†1] He[†b] sends his love to you and all his friends (as I do) and is girding up his loins vigorously.

Ever My Dear Fields | Heartily and affecy Yours
CHARLES DICKENS[†2]

To MRS J. T. FIELDS,[†3] 3 OCTOBER 1867

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Third October 1867

My Dear Mrs. Fields

I cannot tell you how much I thank you for your kind little letter, which is like a pleasant voice coming across the atlantic, with that domestic welcome in it which has no substitute on earth. If you knew how strongly I am inclined to allow myself the pleasure of staying at your house, you would look upon me as a kind of Ancient Roman (which I trust in Heaven, I am not) for having the courage to say No. But if I gave myself that gratification in the beginning, I could scarcely hope to get on in the hard "Reading" life, without offending some kindly disposed and hospitable American friend afterwards; whereas if I observe my English principle on such occasions, of having no abiding place but an Hotel — and stick to it from the first — I may perhaps count on being consistently uncomfortable.

The nightly exertion necessitates meals at odd hours, silence and rest at impossible times of the day, a general Spartan behaviour so utterly inconsistent with my nature, that if you were to give me a happy inch I should take an ell, and frightfully disappoint you in public. I dont want to do that — if I can help it — and so I will be good in spite of myself.

Ever Your affectionate Friend
CHARLES DICKENS

To WILKIE COLLINS, 5 OCTOBER 1867

MS Morgan Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Fifth October 1867.

My Dear Wilkie,

I have brought on Marguerite to the rescue, and I have so left it as that Vendale — to spare her — says it was an accident in the storm and nothing more.[†1] By the way, Obenreizer has received a cut from Vendale, made with his own dagger. This, in case you want him with a scar.[†2] If you don't, no matter.

I have no doubt my Proof of the Mountain adventure will be full of mistakes, as my MS is not very legible. But you will see what it means.

The Denouement,[†3] I see pretty much as you see it — without further glimpses as yet. The Obenreizer question I will consider (qry. Suicide?)[†4] I have made Marguerite wholly devoted to her lover.

Whenever you may give me notice of your being ready, we will appoint to meet here to wind up.

I don't go until the ninth of November, the Scotia being full. I have an officer's Cabin on deck in the Steamer.

Affecy Ever
CD.

To WALTER THORNBURY, 5 OCTOBER 1867

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Fifth October, 1867.

My Dear Thornbury

Behold the best of my judgment on your questions.[†5]

Susan Hopley[†1] and Jonathan Bradford?[†2] No. Too well known.

London Strikes and Spitalfields Cutters?[†3] Yes.

Fighting FitzGerald?[†4] Never mind him.

Duel of Lord Mohun and Duke of Hamilton?[†5] Ye-e-es.

Irish abductions? I think not.

Brunswick Theatre?[†6] More Yes than No.

Theatrical Farewells?[†7] Yes.

Bow Street Runner (as compared with modern Detective).[†8] Yes.

Vauxhall and Ranelagh in the last Century?[†9] Most decidedly. Don't forget Miss Burney.[†10]

Smugglers? No. Overdone.

Lacenaire?[†11] No. Ditto.

Madame Laffarge?[†12] No. Ditto.

Fashionable life last Century?[†13] Most decidedly yes.

Debates on the Slave Trade?[†13] Yes generally. But beware of the Pirates; as we did them in the beginning of Household Words.[†14]

Ever Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

To UNKNOWN TUTOR,[†1] EARLY OCTOBER 1867

Mention in To Henry Dickens, 7 Oct 67. Date: no doubt shortly before that letter.

To HENRY DICKENS, 7 OCTOBER 1867†

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Seventh October 1867

My Dear Harry

You can learn Fencing by all means. If you will show this line to Mr. Brackenbury with my kind regard, no doubt it will be permission enough.

I have sent the cheque to the mathematical tutor. You can have him again at Xmas.

Mr. Canning[†2] pays, beyond question, to have his book published. No bookseller would think of bringing it out at his own cost.[†3] That is quite as improbable as that the Public will read it when it is brought out.

[†a]I sail for America, from Liverpool, on Saturday the 9th. of November. My Cunard Ship is the Cuba, and I have one of the officers' cabins on deck. I hope to return by the First Cunard ship in May. It will be a very fatiguing business, but I could not reconcile it to myself to neglect so promising a prospect of being handsomely remunerated for hard work.[†a]

I am very glad that you are so comfortable at Wimbledon.

Ever Your affectionate Father | (I can't write the word!)[†4]
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, 7 OCTOBER 1867

Text from John Bigelow, Retrospections of an Active Life, 1817-79, New York, 1909-13, IV, 118.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT,
Monday, seventh October, 1867.

My dear Forster:

I have been very much interested and gratified by that pleasant passage from Mr. Bigelow's[†5] letter concerning me. As you say you are going to write to him, pray tell him as much, and assure him that I shall hope to become his friend on the other side of the Atlantic.

Truly dear Forster, | Your affectionate
CHARLES DICKENS[†1]

To THOMAS HYDE HILLS, 7 OCTOBER 1867

MS Iowa University Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Seventh October 1867

My Dear Mr. Hills

I decide to go to America. My Cunard Ship, The Cuba, sails from Liverpool on Lord Mayor's Day.

Will you with your usual kindness, select a small medicine chest for me? I take four men with me, and want the bottles of a proportionate size. The only medicines I care to have, are those I usually carry for Neuralgic touches: namely, Laudanum — Ether — Sal Volatile — and those pills of Dr. Brinton's with which Dolby plays at ball down his throat[†2] when he has nothing else to do. Perhaps some quinine might be a good addition.[†3]

With kindest regard from all here
Believe me | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Hills Esquire

To ARCHIBALD MICHIE, 7 OCTOBER 1867*

MS New York Public Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Seventh October, 1867

My Dear Sir

I thank you heartily for your kind and considerate report of my son Alfred. He himself writes in the highest spirits — declares himself to be perfectly happy — and seems to have found the exact niche in life that he is best qualified to fill. In reference however to the great digestion question, you will please understand that I challenge the Bush generally to beat me in that [record],[†1] and that I hereby back myself against Creation, barring only Ostriches.

Horne's is a wretched story, and will not mend itself as it goes on. He will find, I fear, that he has lost what place he had here, and that he will come back to mortification of spirit. He tells me in his letter that you are kindly espousing some "claim" of his upon the Government. What for, I wonder![†2]

The general face of this country here is very little changed since Shakespeare's time. I look down upon the veritable Gad's Hill from the window at which I am writing. And it was but the other night that driving homeward through Rochester and looking up at the stars, I saw Charles's Wain above the chimney-tops of the old-Inn-revived there, just as the Carrier saw it when the fleas treated him so ill.[†3]

On the 9th. of November I sail for America on a five months visit.

My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Archibald Michie Esquire

To G. W. RUSDEN, 7 OCTOBER 1867

MS Trinity College, University of Melbourne.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Seventh October, 1867

My Dear Sir.

I am truly obliged to you for your kind letter of the 26th. July concerning my son Alfred. It is with great relief of mind that I believe him to have struck out the path in life for which he is best fitted. He describes himself as being "as happy as a King", and his interest in his occupations seems to be inseparable from a wholesome sense of responsibility.

I duly received the poem from Mr. Patrick Scott, and duly pointed out to him how and why I was quite disabled from publishing it in All The Year Round. But I will not dwell on this, as I do not doubt you will have known it this long time.

Many thanks for the very curious case you sent me.[†4] The situation is a remarkably good one — something too complicated (I think) for a picture, but very striking as suggesting a piece of description.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

G. W. Rusden Esquire

To MRS MONTGOMERY ATWOOD, 8 OCTOBER 1867†

MS Cornell University Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Eighth October 1867

My Dear Mrs. Atwood

Nothing can be more purely honourable and straight forward than your letter to me from Paris, in reply to mine enclosing you Mr. Dolby's to Mr. Wood. I beg to assure you that I do not attach the slightest blame to you in the matter, and that I have the highest opinion of your rectitude.

†aI do not in the least desire that any pressure should be put upon Mr. Wood, with reference to his completion of his contract. I am quite content to withdraw the story and regain undisputed possession of it.†a†1

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To SAMUEL CARTWRIGHT, 8 OCTOBER, 1867*

Text from transcript, British Dental Association.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Eight October, 1867.

My Dear Cartwright.

We have all been truly grieved by the receipt of your sad news.†2 As September got on and you failed to report when you were coming back to us, we had no doubt of the cause of our disappointment, and yet though we were fully prepared for your letter, it was none the less affecting when it came. We deeply sympathize with Mrs. Cartwright and with you in your affliction.

I leave Liverpool for America on the ninth of November. You touch me nearly for thinking of me at such a time. In the course of next week I will come and ask you for your kind assistance. I want it only in the former respect that I cannot put the light plate in easily — if at all — with my own hands.

Ever faithfully yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [?8 OCTOBER 1867]

Extract in F, VIII, vii, 710. Date: seven days after CD's letter to Mamie Dickens (dated 30 Sep in MDGH, and with MS envelope, PM 30 Sep), according to Forster.

The Scotia being full, I do not sail until lord mayor's day; for which glorious anniversary I have engaged an officer's cabin on deck in the Cuba. I am not in very brilliant spirits at the prospect before me, and am deeply sensible of your motive and reasons for the line you have taken; but I am not in the least shaken in the conviction that I could never quite have given up the idea.

To ARTHUR CHAPPELL, 9 OCTOBER 1867*

MS Cornell University Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Ninth October 1867

My Dear Mr. Chappell.

Whenever you like to make me a proposal for Farewell Nights in England[†1] (taking first class places only), I will give it immediate consideration, whether in America or no. You will have my best American address. I shall be delighted to shake hands with you when I depart, and will not fail to tell you by what train I start for Liverpool. Mr. Wills will be with us, and Mr. Wilkie Collins (both of whom you know), and probably Mr. Forster. We will see what sort of farewell dinner the Adelphi[†2] can give us.

Believe me always | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

S. Arthur Chappell Esquire

To WILKIE COLLINS, 9 OCTOBER 1867

MS Morgan Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Ninth October 1867

My Dear Wilkie.

Will you notice, in the chapter "Vendale writes a letter",[†3] that we are in some danger of making him rather foolish or contemptible in the eyes of readers, by being so blind to the fact that Obenreizer is the man?[†4] A very slight alteration or two will remove the objection. I suggest that it should not then be quite so plain, even to the reader, that Obenreizer is the man;[†5] and that when Vendale might be on the verge of supposing him to be the man, Obenreizer should disarm him by some skilful reference to Marguerite.[†6] Make it, in fact, a part of Vendale's fidelity to Marguerite that he should not connect the theft and forgery with Obenreizer.

I am racking my brains for a good death to that respectable gentleman.[†1]

Ever affecy.

CD.

To CHARLES ELIOT NORTON,[†2] 9 OCTOBER 1867*

MS Houghton Library, Harvard.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Ninth October 1867

My Dear Mr. Norton

I cannot tell you how gratified I am by your kind and earnest letter, — and I hope to see you so soon, that I will not try. I am to sail from Liverpool for Boston on the 9th. of November. My secretary Mr. Dolby who precedes me three days hence,[†3] will post this in Boston. I am already there in the spirit, and shall be overjoyed to see my old friends: the more so, remembering those who are gone.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Eliot Norton Esquire

To F. C. BEARD, [?10 OCTOBER 1867]

Mention in To Beard, 14 Oct. Date: a few days before that letter, probably from Gad's Hill.

To THOMAS CARLIN,[†4] 10 OCTOBER 1867*

MS Mr Wyndham Payne.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Tenth October, 1867

Mr. Charles Dickens begs Mr. Carlin to send him down at once, by Railway to Higham Station, two boxes of his usual cigars.

To F. C. BEARD, 14 OCTOBER 1867

MS Dickens House. Address: F. Carr Beard Esqre. | 44 Welbeck Street | Cavendish Square | London | W.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Fourteenth October, 1867

My Dear Frank Beard

I have your letter from Lewes; for which, many thanks.

I got the medicine,[†1] and have stuck to it. But a letter from me to you has evidently failed on its road.

I will wait for you at the office, after one o'clock on Wednesday, until I see you.

Ever Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

To FREDERICK LEHMANN, 14 OCTOBER 1867

MS University of North Carolina.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Fourteenth October, 1867

My Dear Lehmann

I should have thanked you for your kind note, sooner, but that I have been unable to see my way through the work I must dispose of[†2] before I go, to the pleasant engagement you propose to me. After all and even now, I cannot see it so clearly as to feel justified in lengthening my list of appointments. So much yet remains to be done that I must, in spite of myself, leave myself free to do it.

Many thanks for your offer of service on the other side of the Atlantic. But, having publishers in Boston, and an old friend a partner in an old house of business at New York,[†3] I think I need not trouble your partners.

I had heard of Mrs. Lehmann's recovery[†4] with great interest and satisfaction, and I send her my cordial congratulations.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Frederick[†5] Lehmann Esquire

To LORD LYTTON, 14 OCTOBER 1867

MS Lytton Papers.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Fourteenth October, 1867

My Dear Lytton

I am truly delighted to find that you are so well pleased with Fechter in the Lady of Lyons.[†6] It was a labour of love with him, and I hold him in very high regard.

I shall have the greatest interest in reading the new play,[†1] if you will let me have it either here or in town. When I heard its subject, I was (and I still am) greatly in fear of the Greek dresses, and the immense difficulty of investing them with vital interest. But I immediately leaped (as I think Fechter did?) at the idea of making the story Russian.[†2] So turned, it would be certain of public interest, and could be very picturesquely rendered on the stage.

I leave London on the 8th. of November, early, and sail from Liverpool on the 9th.

Ever affectionately Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To MR MACIVER,[†3] 14 OCTOBER 1867

Extracts from Anderson Galleries catalogue No. 316; MS 1 p.; dated 14 Oct 67; and ([aa]) mention in To Dolby, 16 Oct; probably same letter.

Mr. Dolby writes me that he arranged with you that my servant, Scott, should share the Second Officer's Cabin in the Cuba with me on the passage out to Boston. [a]Cancelling this arrangement and asking MacIver to put down Scott for a second-cabin berth, like Kelly's.[a][†4]

To MADAME PAULINE VIARDOT, 14 OCTOBER 1867

Summary in Hôtel Drouot catalogue, Precieux livres anciens ..., [1934]; dated 14 Oct 67.

Thanking her for sending him her photograph, which he had already hung up in a conspicuous place; adding that he found no genius in the whole world more sympathetic than hers.

To [?MISS HARRIET HANCOCK],[†5] 15 OCTOBER 1867*

MS Beinecke Library, Yale University. Written on p. x of The Pilgrim's Progress, 1859 edn.

Tuesday Fifteenth October 1867

Perhaps this old copy will serve your purpose as well as a better one. I have marked the passage.[†6]

CD.

To SAMUEL TIMINGS,[†1] [?MID-OCTOBER 1867]

Mention in Anderson Auction Co., catalogue 1106, Nov 1914; MS 1 p.; addressed Samuel Timings Esq. of Birmingham, with envelope; undated. Date: probably written not long before To Timings, 23 Oct 67.

Regarding an orphan school.

To JOHN BENNETT,[†2] 16 OCTOBER 1867

MS British Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Sixteenth October 1867

Dear Mr. Bennett

Is my clock done? The substitute has taken to going wrong, and we are in the forlornest condition here.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To W. HEPWORTH DIXON, 16 OCTOBER 1867

Extract in Stan V. Henkels catalogue No. 1316 (Dec 1922); MS 1 p.; dated London, 16 Oct 67; addressed Hepworth Dixon.

I sail from Liverpool in the Cunard Ship "Cuba" for Boston, on Saturday, the 9th. of Nov. I have announced in America, that I cannot prolong my stay there beyond the end of April.

To GEORGE DOLBY, 16 OCTOBER 1867*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Sixteenth October 1867

My Dear Dolby

As I have an opportunity of writing to day, I think it best to write at once, and not to wait until Saturday's mail is nearer its departure. I safely received your letters from Liverpool, and from Queenstown. Thinking that I should best like the second officers' cabin to myself (not knowing how clean our dear Scott may be, or how dirty), I have written to Mac Iver accordingly, and have asked him to put down Scott for a second cabin berth, like Kelly's.

It may be a relief to you when you get this, to know that I am quite prepared for your great Atlantic-cable-message being adverse. When you get this, the message will have been delivered and will have become a thing of the past, but in case it should be adverse the knowledge of my preparation that way may be agreeable to you. I think it so likely that Fields may see shadows of danger which we in our hopeful encouragement of one another may have made light of, that I think the message far more likely to be No than Yes. I shall try to make up my mind to it, and to be myself when we meet.

I have just heard talk of an intended Farewell Dinner to me with Lord Lytton in the chair. More of this — if I hear more — when I write again next week. Xmas No. done (I have made a new end to it) and likely to be a great success.

Love to Fields and all friends. I hope you may have had a reasonably fair passage, and that you received little Forster's[†1] letter at Queenstown. Big Forster has been very ill indeed with bronchitis, but is better.

Kindest remembrances from all at Gad's, and from Wilkie Collins and Wills who are prowling about this room with their hands in their pockets. Fechter looked in just now (Pough Bang he dies!)[†2] and sent his best regards.

So no more at present my dear Dolby from your disjointed chief. I feel, in this pause, as if I were not in England, not in Europe; not in America, Africa, or Asia.

Ever Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS ELLIOT, 16 OCTOBER 1867*

MS Cornell University Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND, | Wednesday Sixteenth October 1867

My Dear F. I will not fail to write and propose an appointment, as soon as I see my way. Perhaps I may be able to run down to you.

Ever Affectionately
CD.

To THOMAS HYDE HILLS, 16 OCTOBER 1867

Extract in Autograph Prices Current, v, 1919-20; MS 1 p.; dated 16 Oct 67; addressed T. H. Hills.

Dolby sailed for Boston last Saturday, and I follow on the 9th. of November.

To JAMES BIRTLES, 18 OCTOBER 1867*

MS Benoliel Collection.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday 18th. October 1867

Dear Mr. Birtles

Please let me have another complete pull of the Xmas No. here tomorrow morning

Faithfully Yours
CD.

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 18 OCTOBER 1867

Extract and Summary in Sotheby's catalogue, June 1979; MS 1 p.; dated 18 Oct 67; addressed F. Ouvry.

Memorandum as to my Policy of Assurance in The Eagle Life Office. Stating that he called at the Eagle Office in Pall Mall on Thursday afternoon 17 October to enquire if any further premium need be paid, or permission obtained, for his intended voyage to America and back, and that a gentleman at the office assured him that the foregoing Rule 7 exonerated him from both requirements.[†1]

To CHARLES KENT, 19 OCTOBER 1867†

MS Beinecke Library, Yale University. Address: Private | Charles Kent Esquire | Sun Office.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND, | Saturday Nineteenth Octr. 1867

My Dear Kent. In the midst of the great trouble you are taking in the cause of your undersigned affectionate friend,[†2] I hope the reading of the enclosed may be a sort of small Godsend. Of course it is very strictly private. The printers are not yet trusted with the name, but the name will be No Thoroughfare. I have done the greater part of it. May you find it interesting![†3]

Give me the proof back, when you have done with it. — You couldn't run down to Gad's tomorrow, and come back on Monday Morning??? I shall be there — and Edmund Yates — and an American[†4] who wrote the account of the Yacht Race in the Times.

Ever affectionately

CD

To CHARLES KENT, 20 OCTOBER 1867†

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Sunday Twentieth October, 1867

My Dear Kent

Sorry — but not surprised — that you have been unable to get down here to day.

[†a]My Solicitor, a man of some mark and well known, is anxious to be on the Committee:—[†1]

Frederic Ouvry Esquire
66 Lincolns Inn Fields.[†a]

Ever affectionately Yours

CD.

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 20 OCTOBER 1867*

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT

Sunday Twentieth October 1867

My Dear Ouvry.

I leave London on the 8th. of November, and sail from Liverpool (by Cunard Steam Ship "Cuba") on the 9th. This will leave me good time for seeing you after you return to Harness. I only want a general and ample Power of Attorney to Forster to act for me in all things; and to arrange with you for your having the necessary orders to receive Mrs. Dickens's money.[†2]

It will be a real pleasure to me to know that you are at the Dinner. By this post I write to Mr. Kent the Secretary telling him that I am sure he may put you down on the Committee.

Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

Frederic Ouvry Esquire

P.S. Will you kindly see to the enclosed?[†3]

To MISS ADAH MENKEN, 21 OCTOBER 1867†

MS Beinecke Library, Yale University. Address: Miss Menken | Cataldi's Hotel | 42 Dover Street | Piccadilly | W.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.

Monday Twenty First October 1867

[†b]Dear Miss Menken

I shall have great pleasure in accepting your Dedication,[†4] and I thank you for your portrait[†5] as a highly remarkable specimen of Photography.[†b]

Visits and business so completely absorb my time at present that I am merely passing through my own house, and answer your note flying.

In haste | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To RICHARD KELLY, 22 OCTOBER 1867*

MS Huntington Library. Address (envelope, MS Walter T. Spencer): Mr. Richard Kelly | Exchange Hall | Blackburn. PM 22 Oct 67.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Twenty Second October 1867

Dear Kelly

I enclose you a cheque for £20 to pay George Allison's[†1] passage. If you call here on Monday the 4th. of November, it will be quite soon enough. Mr. Dolby will probably arrive out[†2] tomorrow; and I hope to get a Telegram from him on Thursday or Friday, reporting himself in a flourishing state.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To CHARLES KENT, 22 OCTOBER 1867*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Twenty Second Octr. 1867

My Dear Kent

I have an appointment with Cartwright this morning, but will not go to him until you have been here. Here I am.

Ever affecy.
CD.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 23 OCTOBER 1867*

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT[†3]
Wednesday Twenty Third October 1867

My Dearest Georgy

Will you send up here in the course of tomorrow, some hamper or basket containing half a dozen bottles of Madeira, and half a dozen bottles of the old brandy.

Love to all. | Ever affectionately
CD.

Also any bill of fare or sheet of paper having my crest stamped on it.

To THOMAS HOOD,[†1] 23 OCTOBER 1867*

MS Alexander W. Armour.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Twenty Third October 1867

My Dear Mr. Hood

Will you explain to me what extract you wish to make under your head, "A part of Dombey about Little Paul"; and also what part of the text of the Christmas Carol you describe as "The Tiny Tim Chapter."[†2]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Tom Hood Esquire

To CHARLES KENT, 23 OCTOBER 1867*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Twenty Third October 1867

My Dear Kent

Here I am.

Ever affecy
CD.

To MRS POWER,[†3] 23 OCTOBER 1867

Text from MDGH, II, 300.

Gad's Hill, | Wednesday, Oct. 23rd, 1867.

My Dear Mrs. Power,

I have a sad pleasure in the knowledge that our dear Marguerite so remembered her old friend, and I shall preserve the token of her remembrance with loving care.[†4] The sight of it has brought back many old days.

With kind remembrance to Mrs. Henderson,

Believe me always, very faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To SAMUEL TIMINGS, 23 OCTOBER 1867*

MS Mitchell Library, Glasgow. Address: Samuel Timings Esquire | 117 Great Charles Street | Birmingham.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Twenty Third October, 1867.

Dear Sir

I am exceedingly obliged to you for your kind and flattering intention.[†1] Permit me to leave its execution wholly to yourself.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Samuel Timings Esquire

To CHARLES KENT, [24 OCTOBER 1867]*

MS Huntington Library. Date: clearly 24 Oct, the Thursday before the Farewell Dinner.

Thursday afternoon

My Dear Kent.

Cartwright has asked me to make interest with you for his seat at the Dinner.[†2] I am sure he will be gratified if you will tell him that you have placed him on the list of Stewards.[†3]

Samuel Cartwright Esquire
32 Old Burlington Street
W.
Ever affectionately
CD.

To R. H. MASON, 25 OCTOBER 1867

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Twenty Fifth October 1867

My Dear Sir

Have you in stock the Exterior of Gad's Hill, The Drawing-room Interior, and Dining Room Interior? Also the profiles carte de visite of myself? If so, will you send me one of each by Bearer.[†4]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To CHARLES KENT, 25 OCTOBER 1867*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Twenty Fifth October 1867

My Dear Kent.

Mason replies that we cannot have the Gad's Hill views until Tuesday. Shall I send down for my daughter's book?[†1]

Ever Affecy.
CD.

To LORD LYTTON, 25-26 OCTOBER 1867

MS Lytton Papers.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Twenty Fifth October 1867

My Dear Lytton

I have read the Play[†2] with great attention, interest, and admiration. And I need not say to you that the Art of it — the fine construction — the exquisite nicety of the touches with which it is wrought out — have been a study to me, in the pursuit of which I have had extraordinary relish.[†3]

Taking the Play as it stands, I have nothing whatever to add to your notes and memoranda of the points to be touched again, except that I have a little uneasiness in that burst of anger and inflexibility consequent on having been deceived, coming out of Hegio.[†4] I see the kind of actor who must play Hegio, and I see that the Audience will not believe in his doing any thing so serious. [†a][I suppose it would be impossible to get this effect out of the mother — or through the mother's influence — instead of out of the godfather of Hegiopolis?][†a†5]

Now, as to the classical ground and manners of the Play, I suppose the objection to the Greek dress to be already — as Defoe would write it — gotten over by your suggestion.[†6] I suppose the dresses not to be conventionally associated with stilts and boredom, but to be new to the public eye, and very picturesque. Grant all that; — the names remain.[†1] Now, not only used such names to be inseparable in the public mind from stately weariness, but of late days they have become inseparable, in the same public mind, from silly puns upon the names, and from Burlesque. You do not know (I hope at least, for my friend's[†2] sake), what the Strand Theatre is. A greek name and a break-down nigger dance,[†3] have become inseparable there. I do not mean to say that your genius may not be too powerful for such associations; but I do most positively mean to say that you would lose half the play in overcoming them. At the best you would have to contend against them through the first three acts. The old tendency to become frozen on classical ground would be in the best part of the audience; the new tendency to titter on such ground would be in the worst part. And instead of starting fair with the audience, it is my conviction that you would start with them against you, and would have to win them over.

Furthermore, with reference to your note to me on this head, you take up a position with reference to poor dear Talfourd's[†4] Ion,[†5] which I altogether dispute. It never was a popular Play, I say. It derived a certain amount of out-of-doors popularity from the circumstances under which, and the man by whom, it was written. But I say that it never was a popular play on the Stage, and never made out a case of attraction there.

As to changing the ground to Russia, let me ask you did you ever see the Nouvelles Russes of Nicolas Gogol, translated into French by Louis Viardot?[†6] There is a story among them called Tarass Boulba, in which, as it seems to me all the conditions you want for such transplantation are to be found.[†7] So changed, you would have the popular sympathy with the Slave, or Serf, or Prisoner of War, from the first. But I do not think it is to be got — save at great hazard, and with lamentable waste of force — on the ground the Play now occupies. I shall keep this note until tomorrow, to correct my conviction, if I can see the least reason for correcting it; but I feel very confident indeed that I cannot be shaken in it.[†8]

Saturday

I have thought it over again, and have gone over the Play again with an imaginary stage and actors before me, and I am still of the same mind. Shall I keep the MS until you come to town?

Believe me ever | Affectionately Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

I receive official information that the Dinner is to be a great demonstration.

To CHARLES KENT, 26 OCTOBER 1867*

MS Huntington Library. Address (envelope, MS Beinecke Library, Yale University; marked 26 Oct 67 by unknown owner): Private | Charles Kent Esquire | Sun Office.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Saturday Twenty Sixth October 1867

My Dear Kent

I would certainly not use Lyell's name on the strength of this letter.[†1]

Affectionately Ever

CD.

To MESSRS BANTON & MACKRELL, [27 OCTOBER 1867]

MS (envelope only) Fales Collection, New York University Library. Address: Messrs. Banton and Mackrell | 33 Abchurch Lane | London | E.C. PM Rochester, 27 Oct 67.

To GEORGE HOLSWORTH, 27 OCTOBER 1867*

MS Rosenbach Museum and Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Twenty Seventh October, 1867

Dear Mr. Holsworth

Please see to the return of the MS referred to in the enclosed.[†2] And please buy me Sir Samuel Baker's[†3] last book on Africa.[†4].

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To CHARLES KENT, 27 OCTOBER 1867*

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Sunday Twenty Seventh October 1867

My Dear Kent

It occurs to me that in sending out your notes to Stewards, you may not have known that the Dean of Bristol is at present at this address:— 4 Silwood Place, Brighton.

Chauncy Hare Townshend is in Switzerland. If his health should prevent his appearing, Miss Hogarth will pay his Steward's fee.

I shall be at the office before 12 on Tuesday.

Ever Your affectionate
CD.[†5]

To JOYCE PERCEVAL,[†1] 27 OCTOBER 1867

Extract in Kitton, "Dickens Ana", II, Dickens House; MS 1 1/2 pp.; dated Gad's Hill, 27 Oct 67; addressed Joyce Perceval.

The short interval between this time and my going to Liverpool, is already devoted to so many engagements in so many places, that I am absolutely powerless to make any new appointment; but I am not the less sensible of the interest you express in my proceedings.

To EDMUND YATES, 27 OCTOBER 1867*

MS Merridy Anne Dennis.

GAD'S HILL PLACE | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Twenty Seventh October 1867

My Dear Edmund

I duly received your first note, and should have written a reply to it, but that my days and evenings are completely stamped out until I leave for Liverpool.

Perhaps you will be able to tell me at the Dinner, whether you are good for that Journey by Express of Friday morning 8th. November.[†2]

Ever affecy

CD.

To H. G. ADAMS, 28 OCTOBER 1867*

MS Fales Library, New York University.

GAD'S HILL PLACE | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Twenty Eighth October 1867

Dear Mr. Adams

I return the certificates, duly signed.[†3] So much business has been — and is, and will be — pressing upon me before my departure, that I have not been able to make an appointment with you. I regret it, and I leave here tomorrow morning.[†4]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

H. G. Adams Esquire

To SAMUEL CARTWRIGHT, 28 OCTOBER 1867*

Text from transcript, British Dental Association.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Twenty eighth October 1867.

My Dear Cartwright.

Here is this horrible bad shilling coming back again tomorrow!

I wore IT all day yesterday with great success. To-day, cannot get it in. It appears to the penitent undersigned that the left wire may be a little too long. He himself casts himself on your merciful consideration, and forlornly represents that he can't come to you when 4,000 miles off.

Abjectly yours,

CD

To CHARLES KENT, 29 OCTOBER 1867*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Twenty Ninth Octr. 1867

My Dear Kent

Give me one word as you go round to the Committee.

Ever affecy.
CD.

To CHARLES EDMONDS, 30 OCTOBER 1867

Extract in Francis Edwards catalogue No. 477 (1926); MS 1 p.; dated Office of AYR, 30 Oct 67; addressed Charles Edmonds.

I am environed by such a host of appointments all to come off before I go to Liverpool for America, that I dare not make another.

To SAMUEL LOVER, 30 OCTOBER 1867

Text from N, III, 564 checked from MS Sotheby's, Oct 1953.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.[†1]
Wednesday Thirtieth October 1867

Thanks my Dear Lover, and good bye for the present.

Faithfully Yours always
CD.

To SIR JAMES EMERSON TENNENT, 30 OCTOBER 1867*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Sir James Emerson Tennent | 66 Warwick Square | Pimlico | S.W.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Thirtieth October 1867

My Dear Tennent

Hearty thanks for your kind and welcome note.

I shall be delighted to have your account of that very remarkable case.[†1] But I cannot make it one of the series of old Stories Retold, because the idea of that series belongs to the writer of the whole of the papers — Mr. Thornbury.[†2]

Looking forward to shaking hands with you on Saturday, I am ever

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Sir James Emerson Tennent.

To MRS HENRY AUSTIN, 31 OCTOBER 1867*

MS Morgan Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Thirty First October 1867

My Dear Letitia

Will you come and dine with us here at 1/2 past 6 on Thursday the 7th. Next morning I start for Liverpool.

Ever affecy.
CD.

To W. W. JONES, 31 OCTOBER 1967*

MS Mr P. Bayliss.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Thirty First October 1867

Sir

In reply to your letter I beg to say that I do not think it reasonable to make any engagements binding me after my return from America, before I go there. I expect to be back here by the middle of May, and at present can say no more.†3

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Walter W Jones

To CHARLES KENT, 31 OCTOBER 1867

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Thirty First October 1867

My Dear Kent.

†a — My sailor-son!†1
— I forgot him!!
— Coming up from Portsmouth for the Dinner!!!

— Der-er-oo not cur-ur-urse me, I implore.[†a]

Penitently

CD.

November

To J. T. FIELDS, 1 NOVEMBER 1867

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday First November 1867

My Dear Fields

I received your more than acceptable letter yesterday morning, and consequently am able to send you this line of acknowledgment by the next Mail. Please God we will have that walk among the Autumn leaves, before the Readings set in.

You may have heard from Dolby that a gorgeous repast is to be given to me tomorrow, and that it is expected to be a notable demonstration. I shall try, in what I say, to state my American case exactly. I have a strong hope and belief that within the compass of a couple of minutes or so, I can put it, with perfect truthfulness, in the light that my American friends would be best pleased to see me place it in. Either so, or my instinct is at fault.[†2]

My daughters and their Aunt unite with me in kindest loves to Mrs. Fields and you. As I write, a shrill prolongation of the message comes in from the next room:— "Tell them to take care of you-u-u!"

Tell Longfellow[†3] with my love that I am charged by Forster (who has been very ill of diffused gout and bronchitis) with a copy of his Sir John Eliot.[†1]

I will bring you out the early proof of the Xmas No. We publish it here on the 12th. of December. I am planning it out into a play for Wilkie Collins to manipulate after I sail, and have arranged for Fechter to go to the Adelphi Theatre and play a Swiss in it.[†2] It will be brought out, the day after Christmas Day.[†3]

Here, at Boston Wharf, and everywhere else,

Yours Heartily and affectionately

CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [1 NOVEMBER 1867]

Mention in next. Date: no doubt written same day.

To CHARLES KENT, 1 NOVEMBER 1867*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday First November 1867

My Dear Kent

Perhaps you know that Forster's note urges me to propose the Ladies. Don't let it mislead you. I have replied to him that no consideration whatever would now induce me to displace Yates,[†4] and that I positively will have nothing whatever to do with the toast.

Ever Affecy.

CD.

To CHARLES KENT, 1 NOVEMBER 1867*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday First November 1867

My Dear Kent

No. Decidedly no. There would be no assignable reason for my speaking again to close the proceedings, and I really must decline.[†5]

Ever Affecy.

CD.

To CHARLES KENT, [?1 NOVEMBER 1867]

Mention in To Toole, 2 Nov 67. Date: CD had probably received Toole's request[†1] the day before and written to Kent at once.

To C. A. BUCHHEIM,[†2] 2 NOVEMBER 1867

Text from N, III, 565.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND, | Saturday Second November 1867

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Buchheim, and begs to give him free permission to make the extract[†3] he desires to introduce into his book on German prose composition.[†4]

To MR AND MRS COWDEN CLARKE, 2 NOVEMBER 1867

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds. Address: Mrs. Cowden Clarke | Villa Novello | Via san Giacomo | Genova.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.[†5]
Saturday Second November, 1867.

Heartfelt thanks my dear Quickly[†6] and Cowden Clarke, for your joint good wishes. They are more than welcome to me, and so God bless you.

Faithfully Yours Always
CHARLES DICKENS

To J. L. TOOLE,[†7] 2 NOVEMBER 1867

Text in MDGH, I, 300-1 checked from MS Sotheby, May 1966.

GAD'S HILL PLACE | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Second November, 1867

My Dear Mr. Toole

I heartily thank you for your elegant token of remembrance[†8] and for your earnest letter. Both have afforded me real pleasure, and the first-named shall go with me on my journey.

Let me take this opportunity of saying that on receipt of your letter concerning to-day's Dinner, I immediately forwarded your request to the Honorary Secretary. I hope you will understand that I could not, in delicacy, otherwise take part in the matter.

Again thanking you most cordially, Believe me always

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

J. L. Toole Esquire

To W. H. WILLS, 3 NOVEMBER 1867

Text from MDGH, II, 301.

26 Wellington Street, Sunday, Nov. 3rd. 1867.

My Dear Wills

If you were to write me many such warm-hearted letters as you send this morning, my heart would fail me! There is nothing that so breaks down my determination, or shows me what an iron force I put upon myself, and how weak it is, as a touch of true affection from a tried friend.[†1]

All that you so earnestly say about the goodwill and devotion of all engaged, I perceived and deeply felt last night. It moved me even more than the demonstration itself, though I do suppose it was the most brilliant ever seen. When I got up to speak, but for taking a desperate hold of myself, I should have lost my sight and voice and sat down again.

God bless you, my dear fellow. I am, ever and ever,

Your affectionate

[CD.]

To THOMAS BAYLIS,[†2] 4 NOVEMBER 1867*

MS Beinecke Library, Yale University.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Monday Fourth November 1867

My Dear Mr. Baylis

Thanks for your kind note. In reference to your enquiry, I have no reason to suppose that the Charles Dickens in question[†3] is an Ancestor of mine. But I take so little interest in my pedigree, that he may be.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Baylis Esquire

To MRS CHARLES DICKENS, 5 NOVEMBER 1867

MS British Library. Address: Mrs. Charles Dickens | 70 Gloucester Crescent | Regents Park | N.W.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Fifth November 1867

My Dear Catherine

I am glad to receive your letter, and to accept and reciprocate your good wishes. Severely hard work lies before me; but that is not a new thing in my life, and I am content to go my way and do it.

Affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To CHARLES KENT, [5 NOVEMBER 1867]

Mention in Dickens Exhibition, New Dudley Galleries catalogue, 1909, MS 1 p.; dated Office of AYR; addressed Charles Kent. Date: note undated, accompanying envelope PM 5 Nov 67.

To THE HON. MRS RICHARD WATSON, 5 NOVEMBER 1867

Text from MDGH, II, 301-2.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,

Tuesday, Nov. 5th, 1867

My Dear Mrs. Watson,

A thousand thanks for your kind letter, and many congratulations on your having successfully attained a dignity which I never allow to be mentioned in my presence.[†1] Charley's children are instructed from their tenderest months only to know me as "Wenerables," which they sincerely believe to be my name, and a kind of title that I have received from a grateful country.

Alas! I cannot have the pleasure of seeing you before I presently go to Liverpool. Every moment of my time is preoccupied.[†2] But I send you my sincere love, and am always truthful to the dear old days, and the memory of one of the dearest friends I ever loved.[†3]

Affectionately Yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To MISS MARY BOYLE, 6 NOVEMBER 1867

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Sixth November 1867

My Dear Mary

Thanks. Good bye. God bless you.

Ever Your Loving
JOE

To CHARLES KENT, 6 NOVEMBER 1867*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND, | Wednesday Sixth November 1867

My Dear Kent. I have gone carefully over my own Speech, and have corrected it where it was wrong. I think it would be courteous to submit Cockburn's[†1] for his correction, with an intimation that if he be indisposed to take that trouble, the non-return of the proof will be considered an intimation to that effect.

Title page. Hum. Anything like this now sent?[†2]

I will look in presently as I go round to see old Poole.

Ever Affecy.
CD.

To LORD LYTTON, 6 NOVEMBER 1867

MS Lytton Papers.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Sixth November 1867

My Dear Lytton

Be sure that I will do my best in the matter of the play,[†3] as soon as I get to New York. I begin in Boston on the 2nd. of December, and in New York some ten days afterwards. Of course I shall duly report on Mr. Booth[†4] to you at Knebworth.

Good bye and God bless you. With a thousand thanks for your cordial friendship, Ever believe me
Affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

MEMORANDUM to W. H. WILLS, [EARLY NOVEMBER 1867]†

MS Huntington Library. Date: shortly before his leaving for America on 9 Nov.

A.Y.R.

Remember that no reference, however slight is to be made to America in any article whatever, unless by myself.

Remember that the same remark applies to the subject of the Fenians.

Remember that a Poem by Mrs. Cowden Clarke is accepted for the ordinary current No. at Christmas time.[†1]

Remember that a narrative from official documents of the Webster Murder case, is to come in from Sir James Emerson Tennent.[†2]

JOHN POOLE.

His address is 8, Fitzroy Place, Kentish Town. He will be very thankful if you will sometimes give him a call as you go by on Holly Lodge affairs.[†3] He has six envelopes addressed to you at the office, in my writing, with "John Poole" in the corner. This is in case of his wanting any looking after. He is to have £25 sent to him on the 24th of December, and £25 on the 25th of March. In case of his death I have £25 of his money in my hands for funeral expenses.[†4]

LETTERS.

Any that may come to Gad's Hill will be forwarded to you to open and dispose of. Similarly, open all letters addressed to me that may come here.

PLORN

After the Christmas Holidays is to go to a Sheep-Farmer for a few months. He, or his tutor, or Mary, or Georgina, will ask you to settle that matter. I suppose that through Sidney and his Agricultural Hall connexion[†5] we can know reasonably well whether any suggested person and terms would be likely to act well; or could find out the right person and terms, if none were suggested.[†6]

[†a]NELLY
If she needs any help will come to you,[†1] or if she changes her address, you will immediately let me know if she changes. Until then it will be Villa Trollope, à Ricorboli, Firenze, Italy

Villa Trollope | à Ricorboli | Firenze | Italy[†2]

On the day after my arrival out I will send you a short Telegram at the office. Please copy its exact words, (as they will have a special meaning for her), and post them [†b]to her as above[†b] by the very next post after receiving my telegram. And also let Gad's Hill know — and let Forster know — what the telegram is.[†a] MRS. SCOTT AND MRS. KELLY AND MRS. ALLISON[†3]

Mrs. Scott is to be paid One Pound every Saturday, down in the office; beginning this next Saturday, the day of my leaving Liverpool. Mrs. Mary Kelly, 21 Leigh Street, Charles Street, Manchester, is to have a P.O. order for £1 every Saturday. Mrs. Allison, at Mrs. Spreights, Kirkgate, Wakefield, Ditto.

FORSTER:
has an ample Power of Attorney from me, in case you should want any legal authority to act in my name. [†c]For he knows Nelly as you do, and will do anything for her, if you want anything done[†c]

MY PRIVATE ACCOUNT AT COUTTS'S: is subject, in my absence, to the joint cheques of Mary and Georgina.

To EDWARD DICKENS, [7 NOVEMBER 1867]

Mention in next. Date: written same day.

To THE REV. JOHN TAYLOR, 7 NOVEMBER 1867*

MS Dr Monica Lee-Eldred.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Seventh November 1867

My Dear Sir

You will have noticed that my letter crossed your last, and consequently that we are quite agreed upon Edward's leaving you at Christmas. I have written him a few words by this same post, which I have told him to show to you. Being in the hurry of departure for America, I am constrained to write very briefly.

My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

The Rev. John Taylor

To SHIRLEY BROOKS, 10 NOVEMBER 1867*

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

Aboard the Cuba Queenstown Harbour[†1]
Sunday Tenth November | 1867

My Dear Brooks

As we have run in here for our last Mail, I have the opportunity of thanking you for your cordial note and hearty words in the Illustrated News.[†2] I can further report myself all right, Thank God, and established by myself in the Second Officer's Cabin on deck: where I have abundance of fresh air, and which is of such vast proportions that it is almost large enough to sneeze in.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Shirley Brooks Esquire

To MISS MARY DICKENS, 10 NOVEMBER 1867

Text from MDGH, II, 302-3.

Aboard the "Cuba," Queenstown Harbour,
Sunday, Nov. 10th, 1867.

My Dearest Mamie,

We arrived here at seven this morning, and shall probably remain awaiting our mail, until four or five this afternoon. The weather in the passage here was delightful, and we had scarcely any motion beyond that of the screw.

We are nearly but not quite full of passengers. At table I sit next the captain, on his right, on the outside of the table and close to the door. My little cabin is big enough for everything but getting up in and going to bed in. As it has a good window which I can leave open all night, and a door which I can set open too, it suits my chief requirements of it — plenty of air — admirably. On a writing-slab in it, which pulls out when wanted, I now write in a majestic manner.

Many of the passengers are American, and I am already on the best terms with nearly all the ship.

We began our voyage yesterday a very little while after you left us, which was a great relief. The wind is S. E. this morning, and if it would keep so we should go along nobly.

My dearest love to your aunt, and also to Katie and all the rest. I am in very good health, thank God, and as well as possible.†3

[Ever affecy
CD]

To THE EARL RUSSELL, 10 NOVEMBER 1867*

MS Cleveland Public Libraries.

Aboard The Cuba | Queenstown Harbour
Sunday Tenth November 1867

My Dear Lord Russell

Your kind note reached me yesterday morning as I was on the point of leaving Liverpool. We are waiting here for our Mail, and I take this opportunity of heartily thanking you for your remembrance, and assuring you that I am proud of it.

With true regard to Lady Russell, Believe me My Dear Lord Russell
Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The | Earl Russell.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 13-17 NOVEMBER, 1867

Extracts in MDGH, II, 303-6.

Aboard the "Cuba", five days out,
Wednesday, Nov. 13th, 1867.

My Dearest Georgy,

As I wrote to Mamie last, I now write to you, or mean to do it, if the motion of the ship will let me.

We are very nearly halfway to-day. The weather was favourable for us until yesterday morning, when we got a head-wind which still stands by us. We have rolled and pitched, of course; but on the whole have been wonderfully well off. I have had headache and have felt faint once or twice, but have not been sick at all. My spacious cabin is very noisy at night, as the most important working of the ship goes on outside my window and over my head; but it is very airy, and if the weather be bad and I can't open the window, I can open the door all night. If the weather be fine (as it is now), I can open both door and window, and write between them. Last night, I got a foot-bath under the dignified circumstances of sitting on a camp-stool in my cabin, and having the bath (and my feet) in the passage outside. The officers' quarters are close to me, and, as I know them all, I get reports of the weather and the way we are making when the watch is changed, and I am (as I usually am) lying awake. The motion of the screw is at its slightest vibration in my particular part of the ship. The silent captain, reported gruff, is a very good fellow and an honest fellow.[†1] Kelly has been ill all the time, and not of the slightest use, and is ill now. Scott always cheerful, and useful, and ready; a better servant for the kind of work there never can have been. Young Lowndes[†2] has been fearfully sick until mid-day yesterday. His cabin is pitch dark, and full of blackbeetles. He shares mine until nine o'clock at night, when Scott carries him off to bed. He also dines with me in my magnificent chamber. This passage in winter time cannot be said to be an enjoyable excursion, but I certainly am making it under the best circumstances. (I find Dolby to have been enormously popular on board, and to have known everybody and gone everywhere.)

So much for my news, except that I have been constantly reading, and find that "Pierra"[†1] that Mrs. Hogge[†2] sent me by Katie to be a very remarkable book, not only for its grim and horrible story, but for its suggestion of wheels within wheels, and sad human mysteries. Baker's second book not nearly so good as his first, but his first anticipated it.[†3]

We hope to get to Halifax either on Sunday or Monday, and to Boston either on Tuesday or Wednesday. The glass is rising high to-day, and everybody on board is hopeful of an easterly wind.

Saturday, 16th.

Last Thursday afternoon a heavy gale of wind sprang up and blew hard until dark, when it seemed to lull. But it then came on again with great violence, and blew tremendously all night. The noise, and the rolling and plunging of the ship, were awful. Nobody on board could get any sleep, and numbers of passengers were rolled out of their berths. Having a side-board to mine to keep me in, like a baby, I lay still. But it was a dismal night indeed, and it was curious to see the change it had made in the faces of all the passengers yesterday. It cannot be denied that these winter crossings are very trying and startling; while the personal discomfort of not being able to wash, and the miseries of getting up and going to bed, with what small means there are all sliding, and sloping, and slopping about, are really in their way distressing.

This forenoon we made Cape Race,[†4] and are now running along at full speed with the land beside us. Kelly still useless, and positively declining to show on deck. Scott, with an eight-day-old moustache, more super like than ever. My foot (I hope from walking on the boarded deck) in a very shy condition to-day, and rather painful. I shaved this morning for the first time since Liverpool; dodging at the glass, very much like Fechter's imitation of [Macready].[†5] The white cat that came off with us in the tender a general favourite. She belongs to the daughter of a Southerner, returning with his wife and family from a two-years' tour in Europe.

Sunday, 17th.

At four o'clock this morning we got into bad weather again, and the state of things at breakfast-time was unutterably miserable. Nearly all the passengers in their berths — no possibility of standing on deck — sickness and groans — impracticable to pass a cup of tea from one pair of hands to another. It has slightly moderated since (between two and three in the afternoon I write), and the sun is shining, but the rolling of the ship surpasses all imagination or description.

We expect to be at Halifax about an hour after midnight, and this letter shall be posted there, to make certain of catching the return mail on Wednesday. Boston is only thirty hours from Halifax.

Best love to Mamie, and to Katie and Charley. I know you will report me and my love to Forster and Mrs. Forster. I write with great difficulty, wedged up in a corner, and having my heels on the paper as often as the pen. Kelly worse than ever, and Scott better than ever.

My desk and I have just arisen from the floor.

To JOHN FORSTER, [18 NOVEMBER 1867]

Extract in F, XI, i, 797. Date: written from Halifax, according to Forster, where the Cuba called on 18 Nov.

I told the Chappells that when I got back to England, I would have a series of farewell readings in town and country; and then read No More. They at once offer in writing to pay all expenses whatever, to pay the ten per cent for management, and to pay me, for a series of 75, six thousand pounds.[†1]

To J. W. BARROW,[†2] [21 NOVEMBER 1867]

MS (envelope only) Mr Archibald Barrow. Address: John W. Barrow Esquire | of E. S. Jaffray and Co. | 35 Broadway | New York City. PM Boston Mass | 21 Nov 67.

To EDWIN BOOTH, 21 NOVEMBER 1867*

Text from transcript by Edgar Johnson from MS Library of the Players Club, New York.

Parker House, Boston | Thursday Twenty First November 1867

Dear Sir

I have the honour to enclose to you a letter from my friend Lord Lytton, of which I took charge immediately before leaving England.[†3] I trust it will reach you safely.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Edwin Booth Esquire

To L. GAYLORD CLARK,[†4] [21 NOVEMBER 1867]

MS (envelope only) Mr Archibald Barrow. Address: Favored by J. Wylie Barrow Esquire | L. Gaylord Clark Esquire | Knickerbocker Office, New York. Date: enclosed in envelope addressed to J. W. Barrow, PM 21 Nov 67.

To MISS MARY DICKENS, 21 NOVEMBER 1867

Extract in MDGH, II, 306-7.

Parker House,[†1] Boston, | Thursday, Nov. 21st, 1867.

I arrived here on Tuesday night, after a very slow passage from Halifax against head-winds. All the tickets for the first four readings here (all yet announced) were sold immediately on their being issued.[†2]

You know that I begin on the 2nd of December with "Carol" and "Trial"? Shall be heartily glad to begin to count the readings off.

This is an immense hotel, with all manner of white marble public passages and public rooms. I live in a corner high up,[†3] and have a hot and cold bath in my bed-room (communicating with the sitting-room), and comforts not in existence when I was here before. The cost of living is enormous, but happily we can afford it. I dine to-day[†4] with Longfellow, Emerson,[†5] Holmes,[†6] and Agassiz.[†7] Longfellow was here yesterday.[†8] Perfectly white in hair and beard, but a remarkably handsome and notable-looking man. The city has increased enormously in five-and-twenty years. It has grown more mercantile — is like Leeds mixed with Preston, and flavoured with New Brighton; but for smoke and fog you substitute an exquisitely bright light air. I found my rooms beautifully decorated (by Mrs. Fields) with choice flowers,[†1] and set off by a number of good books. I am not much persecuted by people in general, as Dolby has happily made up his mind that the less I am exhibited for nothing the better. So our men sit outside the room door and wrestle with mankind.

We had speech-making and singing in the saloon of the Cuba after the last dinner of the voyage. I think I have acquired a higher reputation from drawing out the captain, and getting him to take the second in "All's Well,"[†2] and likewise in "There's not in the wide world"[†3] (your parent taking first), than from anything previously known of me on these shores. I hope the effect of these achievements may not dim the lustre of the readings. We also sang (with a Chicago lady, and a strong-minded woman from I don't know where) "Auld Lang Syne," with a tender melancholy, expressive of having all four been united from our cradles. The more dismal we were, the more delighted the company were. Once (when we paddled i' the burn)[†4] the captain took a little cruise round the compass on his own account, touching at the "Canadian Boat Song,"[†5] and taking in supplies at "Jubilate,"[†6] "Seas between us braid ha' roared,"[†7] and roared like the seas themselves. Finally, I proposed the ladies in a speech that convulsed the stewards, and we closed with a brilliant success. But when you dine with Mr. Forster, ask him to read to you how we got on at church in a heavy sea.[†8] Hillard[†9] has just been in and sent his love "to those dear girls." He has grown much older. He is now District Attorney of the State of Massachusetts, which is a very good office. Best love to your aunt and Katie, and Charley and all his house, and all friends.

To J. T. FIELDS, 21 NOVEMBER 1867*

MS Bowdoin College, Maine.

Parker House, Thursday 21st Novr. | 1867

My Dear Fields.

At 12 o'Clock I am going to have a look at the Hall, and afterwards to take a walk with Dolby and discuss arrangements in the pleasant air rather than in this room. Then, I shall get some letters ready for England. No doubt I shall see you in the course of the day.[†10]

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [21 NOVEMBER 1867]

Extract from F, X, i, 765; summary([aa]) from To Mary Dickens, 21 Nov 67. Date: clearly same date as that letter.

An immense train of people waited in the freezing street for twelve hours, and passed into the office in their turns, as at a French theatre. The receipts already taken for these nights exceed our calculation by more than £250.

[a]Telling Forster how they had got on at church in a heavy sea.[a]

To W. H. WILLS, 21 NOVEMBER 1867†

MS Huntington Library.

Parker House, Boston | Thursday Twenty First November | 1867

My Dear Wills.

A winter passage out here is, under the best circumstances (not to put too fine a point upon it) odious. But I had, in the Cuba, a fine run — was not sick for a moment — was highly popular on board — made no end of speeches after the last dinner of the voyage — sang no end of duets with the Captain (never known to come out before) and came over the side into the arms of Dolby (in a steam tug) illuminated with a blaze of triumph.[†1]

The Pilot brought the news on board that the people had stood with the greatest good temper in the freezing street, 12 hours, to buy tickets for the first four Readings here (the only Readings announced), and that every ticket for every night was sold. I found it to be literally true. The gross receipts of those 4 nights are £250 beyond our calculation. New York tickets are not on sale until next week, but there are signs of the same excitement there. The Hall here is charming[†2] — I never saw a better. If I can only hit them hard with the Carol and Trial, I think our expectations may be far overpassed. Longfellow, Emerson, Holmes, Agassiz, and all Cambridge — Professors and Students — are booked in a phalanx for the body of the Hall on the 1st. night, Monday December the Second. Nothing can exceed the interest and heartiness of these men.

Boston, as a City, is enormously changed since I was here, and is far more mercantile. I do not yet notice any special difference in manners and customs between my old time and this time — except that there is more of New York in this fine City than there was of yore. The Hotel I stayed at in my first visit[†1] has now become contemptible. This is an establishment like one of our Termini Hotels, with the addition of an immense quantity of white marble floors. I live on the third story — our three rooms together — and have hot and cold water laid on in a bath in my bedroom, and other comforts not known in my former experience. The Cuisine is very good. The cost of living is enormous. Ten Pounds sterling a day for Dolby and me is by no means a large estimate. (It was our original calculation.) Happily, Dolby has seen reason to make up his mind that the less I am shown — for nothing — the better for the Readings! So I am fended off and kept — so far — unexpectedly quiet. In addition to which I must say that I have experienced — so far — not the slightest intrusiveness, and everywhere the greatest respect and consideration. There is the utmost curiosity about the Readings, and I should not wonder if they proved to be a great surprise, seeing that the general notion stops at a mere "Reading", book in hand.

Even you, I think, will find it difficult to believe that at this moment Frederick Chapman[†2] has not sent out the pamphlet with the Dinner speeches!!!![†3] Of course when it does come, it will be waste paper. The American journals all over the country have taken the account from the English Journals,[†4] and I am assured that my speech has given the highest satisfaction to the American people.[†5]

This is all my news at present — except that I am so well and so free of the ship, that I am worried by not having arranged to begin reading next Monday — for I yearn to begin to check the Readings off, and feel myself tending towards Home.

[†a]Will you specially observe, my dear fellow what I am going to add. After this present Mail, I shall address Nelly's letters to your care, for I do not quite know where she will be. But she will write to you, and instruct you where to forward them. In any interval between your receipt of one or more, and my Dear Girl's so writing to you, keep them by you.[†a]

My love to Mrs. Wills, and my love to the personal and official Wilkie.[†6] Fields does not begin to publish the Holiday Romance until January. I will advise you in good time, when you can begin with it in A.Y.R.[†7] Take all my confidence and trust now and ever, and Believe me

Affectionately Yours always

CD.

To MISS BERTHA PHILLIPS,[†1] [?NOVEMBER 1867]

Mention in the Chicago Tribune, 19 Mar 68. Date: Bertha Phillips no doubt wrote offering hospitality soon after CD arrived in America; CD would have replied at once.

Saying that he did not know what arrangements his agent had made and that his coming to Chicago was uncertain.[†2]

To ARTHUR CHAPPELL, 22 NOVEMBER 1867

MS Huntington Library.[†3]

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.[†4]
Friday Night Twenty Second November | 1867.

My Dear Mr. Chappell

I came over here very prosperously, thank God, and am so ready for work that I constantly bemoan our not beginning next Monday instead of Monday December 2nd.

As soon as the Hotel began to stand still (it had got into a confirmed habit of rocking when I reached it), I referred to your Memorandum and considered it.

Always understanding — as you and I understood together — that Dolby has his 10 per cent from you, I readily accept your terms of £80 a night for the Farewell Readings at home, provided they extend to 100 in number. Or, if you prefer it, I will make an engagement that we may agree upon, for the London Readings, and will take the Country Readings on myself.

It is scarcely necessary to add as to the £80 a night just now mentioned, that in that case I assume all charges to be paid by you as in our last Series.

Nothing can possibly be more splendid than our prospects here. They are quite bewildering. I should ask Dolby to describe them but that he is convulsively trying to hold his head up above seas of work. I thought I saw him clutching a newspaper with your address on it, just now. But he has gone down since, and no traces of him are visible.

I beg to send my kind regard to your brother,[†5] and to assure you both of my perfect confidence and regard.

Believe me always | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

I wonder whether your Lunch came off in that Saloon-Carriage!

To RICHARD H. DANA,[†1] 22 NOVEMBER 1867*

MS Massachusetts Historical Society.

Parker House, Boston
Friday Twenty Second November 1867

My Dear Mr. Dana

If you knew how often I read Two Years before the Mast,[†2] or speak of it as one of the most remarkable Sea-books ever written, you would not think it by any means a matter of course that I should have forgotten its author.

I thank you cordially for your kind note, and shall count upon seeing you again on the occasion of one of my return visits here.

Believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard H Dana Esquire

To JOHN FORSTER, [?22 NOVEMBER 1867]

Extracts in F, X, i, 766-7 and 766*n*. Date: He had arrived in Boston on the night of 19 Nov and his letter of 21 Nov (To Mamie Dickens) was, according to Forster, the first one he wrote; both these extracts were probably written the next day; he had met Agassiz at dinner on the 21st.

Cambridge is exactly as I left it, Boston more mercantile, and much larger. The hotel I formerly stayed at, and thought a very big one, is now regarded as a very small affair. I do not yet notice — but a day, you know, is not a long time for observation! — any marked change in character or habits. In this immense hotel I live very high up, and have a hot and cold bath in my bed room, with other comforts not in existence in my former day. The cost of living is enormous.

I cannot tell you how pleased I was by Agassiz, a most charming fellow, or how I have regretted his seclusion for a while by reason of his mother's death.

To DR S. G. HOWE,[†3] 22 NOVEMBER 1867*

MS Robert H. Taylor Collection, Princeton University. Address: Dr. Howe | 8 Bond Street | New York City.

Parker House, Boston
Friday Twenty Second November | 1867

My Dear Doctor Howe.

I am heartily glad to have your letter, and shall have a greater interest than ever in seeing that poor creature in whom you awakened a soul.[†4]

I fear I must regard my reading to your pupils, though it were but for ten minutes, as a thing not reasonably possible. It would bring down upon me such an avalanche of correspondence as would crush me out of recognition. And the nightly gaslight, and exertion of these episodical times in my life, render any additional wear and tear the camel's last load of feathers.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Dr. Howe

To CAPTAIN W. HOUSTON STEWART, 22 NOVEMBER 1867

Text from N, III, 570-1.

Parker House, Boston, U.S.
Friday Twenty Second November 1867

My Dear Houston Stewart

I have fortunately discovered the Vermont Water,[†1] in this place, and have this very day sent over a case of it to New York addressed to you. It will be in time, I trust, to be received there for the Cunard Steamer which sails tomorrow. If any rules about taking cargo on board should prevent this, I have sent instructions with it that it is to follow Express by the next fast opportunity. May it prove of service!

Let me know that you receive it safely, and whether I shall send more. The most certain way of addressing me is "care of Messrs Ticknor Fields and Co, Boston, Mass., U.S. of America." I send my love to Mrs. Stewart, and I trust in God she may derive some advantage from this remedy.

I do not begin to read until the Second of December. In the meanwhile no words can describe what the public expectation is, or how overwhelming the rush for tickets.

Always my Dear Friend | Faithfully and affecy. yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To MRS O. F. R. WAITE,[†2] 22 NOVEMBER 1867*

MS Miss Anne W. Lovell. Address: Mrs. O. F. R. Waite | Claremont | N.H.

Parker House, Boston | Friday Twenty Second Novr. 1867

My Dear Madam

I cannot receive so genuine and touching a letter as yours, without answering it in my own hand and from my heart. My engagements will not admit of my accepting your welcome invitation, but it has truly interested me, and I sincerely thank you for it. With kind regard to your husband and all those who are dearest to you, I am My Dear Madam

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. O. F. R. Waite

To W. H. WILLS, 22 NOVEMBER 1867

Telegram, MS Huntington Library.

THE ELECTRIC AND INTERNATIONAL TELEGRAPH COMPANY.

The following Message has been received at G. D. Station.

22.11.1867

FROM

Dickens

TO

Wills Twenty six Wellington St. Strand — Ldn — Safe & well expect good letter full of Hope.[†1]

To J. T. FIELDS, 23 NOVEMBER 1867*

MS Rosenbach Museum and Library. Address: With a Parcel | James T. Fields Esquire.

Parker House, Boston
Saturday Twenty Third November | 1867

My Dear Fields.

A charming note indeed! Books returned, with sign manual attached to each.[†2] I shall expect you at Noon.

Ever Yours
CD.

To THE OFFICERS OF THE SAINT ANDREW'S SOCIETY,[†3] 23 NOVEMBER 1867*

MS Fales Library, New York University.

Parker House, Boston | Saturday Twenty Third November | 1867.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his Compliments to the Officers of the Saint Andrew's Society of the State of New York, and begs to express his regret that he cannot accept the invitation for the 30th. Instant with which they have honoured him, as he is already engaged here for that day.[†4]

To THE PRESIDENT OF THE SOMERSET CLUB,[†5] 23 NOVEMBER 1867*

MS Massachusetts Historical Society.

Parker House, Boston | Saturday Twenty Third November | 1867

Sir

I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your obliging intimation that my name has been placed on the list of visitors admitted to the privileges of the Somerset Club; and I beg to express my grateful sense of the compliment.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The President | of | The Somerset Club[†1]

To J. T. FIELDS, 24 NOVEMBER 1867*

MS Berg Collection. Address: James T. Fields Esquire.

Parker House | Sunday Twenty Fourth November 1867

My Dear Fields. I have Morgan[†2] here from New York, and I have to help Dolby by dictating his New York advertisements &c. Therefore I think I had best be dull and dismal until 2 (a quarter before) when we will meet here for the Boys' ship.[†3]

Thanks for the Telegram. I have been very much interested in its subject.[†4]

Ever Faithfully
CD.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 25-26 NOVEMBER 1867

Extract in MDGH, II, 307-10.

Parker House, Boston, Monday, Nov. 25th, 1867.

I cannot remember to whom I wrote last, but it will not much matter if I make a mistake; this being generally to report myself so well, that I am constantly chafing at not having begun to-night instead of this night week.[†5]

[†a]The tickets being all sold for next week, and no other announcement being yet made, there is nothing new in that way to tell of.[†a] Dolby is over at New York, where we are at our wits' end how to keep tickets out of the hands of speculators. Morgan is staying with me; came yesterday to breakfast, and goes home tomorrow. Fields and Mrs. Fields also dined yesterday. She is a very nice woman, with a rare relish for humour and a most contagious laugh. The Bostonians having been duly informed that I wish to be quiet, really leave me as much so as I should be in Manchester or Liverpool. This I cannot expect to last elsewhere; but it is a most welcome relief here, as I have all the readings to get up. The people are perfectly kind and perfectly agreeable. If I stop to look in at a shop-window, a score of passers-by stop; and after I begin to read, I cannot expect in the natural course of things to get off so easily. But I every day take from seven to ten miles in peace.

[a]Communications about readings incessantly come in from all parts of the country. We take no offer whatever, lying by with our plans until after the first series in New York, and designing, if we make a furore there, to travel as little as possible. I fear I shall have to take Canada at the end of the whole tour. They make such strong representations from Montreal and Toronto, and from Nova Scotia — represented by St. John's and Halifax — of the slight it would be to them, if I wound up with the States, that I am shaken.[a]

It is sad to see Longfellow's house[†1] (the house in which his wife[†2] was burnt) with his young daughters in it, and the shadow of that terrible story.[†3] The young undergraduates of Cambridge (he is a professor there) have made a representation to him that they are five hundred strong, and cannot get one ticket. I don't know what is to be done for them; I suppose I must read there somehow.[†4] We are all in the clouds until I shall have broken ground in New York, as to where readings will be possible and where impossible.

Agassiz is one of the most natural and jovial of men. I go out a-visiting as little as I can, but still have to dine, and what is worse, sup pretty often. Socially, I am (as I was here before) wonderfully reminded of Edinburgh when I had many friends in it.

Your account and Mamie's of the return journey to London[†5] gave me great pleasure. I was delighted with your report of Wilkie, and not surprised by Chappell's coming out gallantly.

My anxiety to get to work is greater than I can express, because time seems to be making no movement towards home until I shall be reading hard. Then I shall begin to count and count and count the upward steps to May.

If ever you should be in a position to advise a traveller going on a sea voyage, remember that there is some mysterious service done to the bilious system when it is shaken, by baked apples. Noticing that they were produced on board the Cuba, every day at lunch and dinner, I thought I would make the experiment of always eating them freely. I am confident that they did wonders, not only at the time, but in stopping the imaginary pitching and rolling after the voyage is over, from which many good amateur sailors suffer. I have hardly had the sensation at all, except in washing of a morning. At that time I still hold on with one knee to the washing-stand, and could swear that it rolls from left to right. The Cuba does not return until Wednesday, the 4th December. You may suppose that every officer on board is coming on Monday, and that Dolby has provided extra stools for them. [a]His work is very hard indeed. Cards are brought to him every minute in the day; his correspondence is immense; and he is jerked off to New York, and

I don't know where else, on the shortest notice and the most unreasonable times. Moreover, he has to be at "the bar" every night, and to "liquor up with all creation" in the small hours. He does it all with the greatest good humour, and flies at everybody who way-lays the Chief, furiously. We have divided our men into watches, so that one always sits outside the drawing-room door. Dolby knows the whole Cunard line, and as we could not get good English gin, went out in a steamer yesterday and got two cases (twenty-four bottles) out of Cunard officers. Osgood and he were despatched[†1] together last evening for New York, whence they telegraph every other hour about some new point in this precious sale of tickets. So distracted a telegram arrived at three that I have telegraphed back, "Explain yourselves," and am now waiting for the explanation. I think you know that Osgood is a partner in Ticknor and Fields'.

Tuesday morning. — Dolby has come back from New York, where the prospects seem immense. We sell tickets there next Friday and Saturday, and a tremendous rush is expected.[a]

To W. H. WILLS, 26 NOVEMBER 1867

MS Huntington Library.

Parker House, Boston | Tuesday Twenty Sixth November | 1867

My Dear Wills

This morning I got yours of the 14th., just in time to send you an answer by the Cunard Steamer. Our prospects here are [†b]MOST BRILLIANT[†b] — all people, public and private, seem in the best frame of mind for the Readings and the Reader — and I am so well, thank God, after the voyage, that I am continually chafing at not having begun last Monday instead of next. Will you write Townshend a line giving him my best love, and telling him that I will write to him on the day after my first Reading here. My love to Wilkie. Your account of your getting on together[†2] is delightful to me, though I never doubted it. Ever My Dear fellow,

Your faithful

CD.

To GEORGE W. CHILDS, 27 NOVEMBER 1867

Text from N, III, 573; ending ([ω]) given in unidentified catalogue in New York Public Library. Address (envelope, facsimile in AWC Inc. Autograph Catalogue, Mar 1998): George W. Childs Esquire | Office of The Public Ledger | Philadelphia. PM Mass 27 Nov [67].[†3]

Parker House, Boston

Wednesday, Twenty Seventh November 1867.

My Dear Sir.

I cannot let Mr. Dolby write to you, without myself thanking you for the hospitable offers you make to me, and for the kind interest you take in my career here. I am most sincerely and cordially obliged to you, and I beg you to accept my heartfelt acknowledgment.

Believe me, my Dear Sir | Yours faithfully,
CHARLES DICKENS[a]

[a]George W. Childs, Esquire

To G. S. HILLARD, 27 NOVEMBER 1867*

MS Massachusetts Historical Society.

Parker House, Boston
Wednesday Night | Twenty Seventh Novr. 1867

My Dear Hillard

I am sorry to say that I must shut myself up tomorrow. I have been charmed to see Mrs. Hillard[†1] and you to day. Pray give her my kind regard, and Believe me as I always am

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Why cannot I remember your Christian Name! Because I know it perfectly, I suppose

To WILKIE COLLINS, 28 NOVEMBER 1867

MS Morgan Library.

Parker House, Boston, U.S.
Thursday Twenty Eighth November 1867

My Dear Wilkie.

I have received a letter from one Mr. Barrett, an American Actor[†2] (dated 308 Regent Street London W) proposing for the dramatic version of No Thoroughfare. He says in that letter that he "learns from Mr. Wilkie Collins that I have taken the play to America, intending to arrange for its production there", and offers to come out here with the New Year and play it. As I have not got the Play, I am at a loss to know whether this is an intentional or an unintentional mistake.

Now, Dolby is going over to New York this morning, and has it in charge from me to see the most speculative of dramatic men there, and ascertain what terms he will make for the Play. I think it far better to deal with a man here, than with a man in Regent Street London.[†3] The excitement in New York about the Readings being represented as quite unprecedented, I have little doubt of being able to make a good thing of the Drama, and, if necessary, I will get it up. But what I shall want as soon as I can possibly have them, are:

1. A detailed Scene Plot from Fechter
2. His notion of the Dresses
3. A copy of the Play itself, Act by Act, as you do it.[†1]
4. together with any stage Directions that Fechter has in his mind.[†2]

Thus armed, I should not be at all surprised if I could get a very handsome addition to our gains. I think it will be worth while for you, on receipt of this, to telegraph to me at the Westminster Hotel, Irving Place, New York City, when you will be able to send me the last of the Play. Because I shall then be in a condition to make a contract. Tell Fechter with my love and regard that I will write him a note immediately after my first Reading here next Monday. [Between ourselves I have already some £2,000 in hand before opening my lips.]

I am yearning already for the Spring and Home, but hope to work out the intervening time with a tolerably stout heart. I am wonderfully well in health, and got over the Voyage with the greatest success.

This note is left open, for Dolby to add a Postscript to.[†3] He will know before closing it, whether or no it is certainly worth while for you to telegraph (in 20 words, containing not more than 100 letters).[†4] It will be best for you always to address me about the Play, and always to address whatever you send in connexion with it, Westminster Hotel, Irving Place, New York City.

Ever My Dear Wilkie | Your affectionate
CHARLES DICKENS

I will not at present reply to Mr. Barrett at all.

To HENRY DEXTER,[†5] 28 NOVEMBER 1867

MS Lesley College, Massachusetts.

Parker House, Boston | Thursday Twenty Eighth November 1867

My Dear Sir

I am exceedingly sorry that a mistake should have been made in your case, and that when you did me the favour to call here you should have been confounded with the many unknown friends whom it is not (remembering the work I have before me) reasonably possible that I can have the pleasure of receiving.

On Saturday at one o'Clock I shall be here, or on Sunday at the same hour. But I entreat you not to take the trouble of coming into town specially. I hope to return to Boston more than once or twice between this time and the end of April, and to have several opportunities of assuring you that I have not forgotten old times.

Believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Henry Dexter Esquire

To MRS CHARLES COLLINS, [?28 NOVEMBER 1867]

Mention in Mrs Fields's Diary (DeWolfe Howe, Memories of a Hostess, p. 143). Date: no doubt written on Thanksgiving Day, or day after.

Giving her a full account of his visit, with Fields, to the Aldriches[†1] house, which had very much amused him.

To MRS J. T. FIELDS, [?28 NOVEMBER 1867]

Mention in Mrs Fields's Diary, p. 9, 28 Nov 67 (George Curry, CD and Annie Fields, p. 9). Date: no doubt written on Thanksgiving Day.

Saying that he could not come to a Thanksgiving Day gathering at the home of Mrs Fields's sister, Mrs James H. Beal,[†2] since he was overtaken by a sudden access of melancholy which prevented him from leaving the fireside and solitude of his own room.[†3]

To CHARLES SUMNER,[†4] 28 NOVEMBER 1867*

MS Houghton Library, Harvard. Address (envelope only, American Art Association catalogue, 1927): Hon. Charles Sumner | Senate Chamber Washington. PM 29 Nov [67].

Parker House, Boston
Thursday Twenty Eighth November | 1867

My Dear Sumner.

I have received your welcome letter with great interest and pleasure. Please God I shall take your hand again before I leave in the Spring.

These last five and twenty years would seem to me but so many months, were I not sometimes reminded of their sweeping changes by revisiting Edinburgh. You and I knew a famous generation of men there, much older than ourselves, and they have all vanished.[†1]

With true regard and good wishes | Believe me | always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To WILLIAM H. LADD,[†2] 29 NOVEMBER 1867

Extract in Goodspeed's catalogue No. 26 (Oct 1904); addressed William H. Ladd; dated Parker House, Boston, 29 Nov 67.

Declining an invitation. My "Reading" life is one of complete devotion to that pursuit which takes precedence of all enjoyments.

December

To CHARLES DICKENS JNR, 30 NOVEMBER AND 3 DECEMBER 1867

Text from MDGH, II, 310-12.

Parker House, Boston, U.S., | Saturday, Nov. 30th, 1867.

My Dear Charley,

You will have heard before now how fortunate I was on my voyage, and how I was not sick for a moment. These screws are tremendous ships for carrying on, and for rolling, and their vibration is rather distressing. But my little cabin, being for'ard of the machinery, was in the best part of the vessel, and I had as much air in it, night and day, as I chose. The saloon being kept absolutely without air, I mostly dined in my own den, in spite of my being allotted the post of honour on the right hand of the captain.

The tickets for the first four readings here (the only readings announced) were all sold immediately, and many are now re-selling at a large premium. The tickets for the first four readings in New York (the only readings announced there also)[†3] were on sale yesterday, and were all sold in a few hours. The receipts are very large indeed; but engagements of any kind and every kind I steadily refuse, being resolved to take what is to be taken myself. Dolby is nearly worked off his legs, is now at New York, and goes backwards and forwards between this place and that (about the distance from London to Liverpool, though they take nine hours to do it) incessantly. Nothing can exceed his energy and good humour, and he is extremely popular everywhere.[†1] My great desire is to avoid much travelling, and to try to get the people to come to me, instead of my going to them. If I can effect this to any moderate extent, I shall be saved a great deal of knocking about. My original purpose was not to go to Canada at all; but Canada is so up in arms on the subject that I think I shall be obliged to take it at last. In that case I should work round to Halifax, Nova Scotia, and then take the packet for home.

As they don't seem (Americans who have heard me on their travels excepted) to have the least idea here of what the readings are like, and as they are accustomed to mere readings out of a book, I am inclined to think the excitement will increase when I shall have begun. Everybody is very kind and considerate, and I have a number of old friends here, at the Bar and connected with the University. I am now negotiating to bring out the dramatic version of "No Thoroughfare" at New York. It is quite upon the cards that it may turn up trumps.

I was interrupted in that place by a call from my old secretary in the States, Mr. Putnam.[†2] It was quite affecting to see his delight in meeting his old master again. And when I told him that Anne[†3] was married, and that I had (unacknowledged) grandchildren, he laughed and cried together. I suppose you don't remember Longfellow, though he remembers you in a black velvet frock very well. He is now white-haired and white-bearded, but remarkably handsome. He still lives in his old house, where his beautiful wife was burnt to death. I dined with him the other day, and could not get the terrific scene out of my imagination. She was in a blaze in an instant, rushed into his arms with a wild cry, and never spoke afterwards.

My love to Bessie,[†4] and to Mekitty,[†5] and all the babbies.[†6] I will lay this by until Tuesday morning, and then add a final line to it.

Ever, my dear Charley, your affectionate Father

[CHARLES DICKENS]

Tuesday, Dec. 3rd, 1867.

To MISS MARY DICKENS, 1 and 3 DECEMBER 1867

Extract in MDGH, II, 313-15.

Parker House, Boston, Sunday, Dec. 1st, 1867.

I received yours of the 18th November, yesterday. As I left Halifax in the Cuba that very day, you probably saw us telegraphed in The Times on the 19th.

Dolby came back from another run to New York, this morning. The receipts are very large indeed, far exceeding our careful estimate made at Gad's. I think you had best in future (unless I give you intimation to the contrary) address your letters to me, at the Westminster Hotel, Irving Place, New York City. It is a more central position than this, and we are likely to be much more there than here. I am going to set up a brougham in New York, and keep my rooms at that hotel. The account of Matilda is a very melancholy one, and really distresses me.[†1] What she must sink into, it is sad to consider. However, there was nothing for it but to send her away, that is quite clear.

They are said to be a very quiet audience here, appreciative but not demonstrative. I shall try to change their character a little.

I have been going on very well. A horrible custom obtains in these parts of asking you to dinner somewhere at halfpast two, and to supper somewhere else about eight. I have run this gauntlet more than once, and its effect is, that there is no day for any useful purpose, and that the length of the evening is multiplied by a hundred. Yesterday I dined with a club[†2] at half-past two, and came back here at half-past eight, with a general impression that it was at least two o'clock in the morning. Two days before I dined with Longfellow at half-past two, and came back at eight, supposing it to be midnight. To-day we have a state dinner-party in our rooms at six, Mr. and Mrs. Fields, and Mr. and Mrs. Bigelow.[†3] (He is a friend of Forster's,[†4] and was American Minister in Paris). There are no negro waiters here, all the servants are Irish — willing, but not able. The dinners and wines are very good. I keep our own rooms well ventilated by opening the windows, but no window is ever opened in the halls or passages, and they are so overheated by a great furnace, that they make me faint and sick. The air is like that of a pre-Adamite[†5] ironing-day in full blast. Your respected parent is immensely popular in Boston society, and its cordiality and unaffected heartiness are charming. I wish I could carry it with me.

The leading New York papers have sent men over for to-morrow night with instructions to telegraph columns of descriptions.[†6] Great excitement and expectation everywhere. Fields says he has looked forward to it so long that he knows he will die at five minutes to eight.

At the New York barriers, where the tickets are on sale and the people ranged as at the Paris theatres, speculators went up and down offering "twenty dollars for anybody's place." The money was in no case accepted. One man sold two tickets for the second, third, and fourth night for "one ticket for the first, fifty dollars" (about seven pounds ten shillings), "and a brandy cocktail,"[†1] which is an iced bitter drink. The weather has been rather muggy and languid until yesterday, when there was the coldest wind blowing that I ever felt. In the night it froze very hard, and to-day the sky is beautiful.

Tuesday, Dec. 3rd.

Most magnificent reception last night,[†2] and most signal and complete success.[†3] Nothing could be more triumphant. The people will hear of nothing else and talk of nothing else. Nothing that was ever done here, they all agree, evoked any approach to such enthusiasm. I was quite as cool and quick as if I were reading at Greenwich, and went at it accordingly. Tell your aunt, with my best love, that I have this morning received hers of the 21st, and that I will write to her next. That will be from New York. My love to Mr. and Mrs. Hulkes and the boy,[†4] and to Mr. and Mrs. Malleson.[†5]

To WILKIE COLLINS, 2 and 3 DECEMBER 1867

MS Morgan Library.

Parker House, Boston | Monday Second December 1867

My Dear Wilkie.

I find that if the play[†1] be left unpublished in England, the right of playing it in America can be secured by assigning the MS to an American Citizen. That, I can do at once, by using my publishers here for the purpose. I can make an arrangement with Wallack,[†2] in New York, to have it produced at his Theatre[†3] (where there is the best Company) on a sharing agreement after a certain nightly allowance for expences. And I have arranged to see Wallack next week.

I have made enquiry about Mr. Lawrence Barrett (whose letter to me, I enclose), and I find that he has a good reputation as a Star-Actor, and that he is a responsible man pecuniarily. Now, I am advised that the best course will be to make an engagement with him to take the play and act in it and get it up, wheresoever he likes in the United States, except in New York City. (The exception, because Wallack and he are not d'accord, and the other good New York Theatres all have their hands full.) As I read his letter his proposal means, that we give the play — that he gives his services — and that the receipts of each night's performance be divided between Authors and Actor equally. Will you write to him at once, see him, and bind us both to such an engagement, if he be willing to bind himself to it. We might possibly get a good round sum by such a course. I have advised with one of the most knowing Managers in New York[†4] (who came over here this morning to see me) — the Black Crook[†5] Manager — and he says: "If you have Wallack for New York, and Barrett for the States generally, you could not do better." Mr. Barrett may have left England before this reaches you. If so, I have taken measures to catch [him][†6] on this side, when he comes over.

As I read for the first time to night, I will finish this tomorrow for Wednesday's steamer, which will be my own Cuba returning.

Tuesday Third December

A most tremendous success last night. The whole City is perfectly mad about it today, and it is quite impossible that prospects could be more brilliant.

Ever My Dear Wilkie | Your always affectionate

CD.

To J. T. FIELDS, 2 DECEMBER 1867

MS Rosenbach Museum and Library.

Parker House | Monday Second December 1867

My Dear Fields

I begin to believe that you really will come after all!!![†1]

None the worse for last night's laughter.[†2] Hope to make you laugh — and cry too — tonight.[†3] To say nothing of tomorrow.[†4]

Beautiful flowers more than welcome.

Ever affectionately Yours

CD.

To MISS REXFORD,[†5] 2 DECEMBER 1867*

MS Mr Ashley W. Olmsted.

Parker House, Boston | Monday Second December 1867

Dear Miss Rexford

I beg to thank you cordially for your beautiful reminder of the glories of an American Autumn; which I hope to carry home with me as one of my many agreeable associations with this city and its neighbourhood.[†6]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Rexford

To CHARLES FECHTER, 3 DECEMBER 1867

Text from MDGH, III, 244.

Parker House, Boston, 3rd December, 1867

My Dear Fechter,

I have been very uneasy about you, seeing in the paper that you were taken ill on the stage.[†7] But a letter from Georgy this morning reassures me by giving me a splendid account of your triumphant last night at the Lyceum.[†8]

I hope to bring out our Play with Wallack in New York, and to have it played in many other parts of the States.[†9] I have sent to Wilkie for models, etc. If

I waited for time to do more than write you my love, I should miss the mail tomorrow. Take my love, then, my dear fellow, and believe me ever

Your affectionate
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To J. T. FIELDS, 3 DECEMBER 1867

Mention in Parke-Bernet catalogue No. SN 1352; MS 1 p.; dated Boston, 3 Dec 67; addressed J. T. Fields.

Refers to a sitting for Brady the photographer.[†1]

To JOHN FORSTER, [3 DECEMBER 1867]

Extract in F, X, i, 767. Date: the morning after his first reading in Boston, according to Forster.

It is really impossible to exaggerate the magnificence of the reception or the effect of the reading.[†2] The whole city will talk of nothing else and hear of nothing else to-day. Every ticket for those announced here, and in New York, is sold. All are sold at the highest price, for which in our calculation we made no allowance; and it is impossible to keep out speculators who immediately sell at a premium. At the decreased rate of money even, we had above £450 English in the house last night; and the New York hall holds 500 people more. Everything looks brilliant beyond the most sanguine hopes, and I was quite as cool last night as though I were reading at Chatham.

To MISS ELLEN TERNAN, [3 DECEMBER 1867]

Mention in next. Date: no doubt written same day.

To W. H. WILLS, 3 DECEMBER 1867†

MS Huntington Library.

Parker House, Boston | Tuesday Third December 1867

My Dear Wills.

I cannot convey to you an adequate idea of last night's tremendous success. The City is absolutely mad about it. The reception was magnificent, and the "go" of the Reading without any approach to a precedent in these parts. Nothing that we could have imagined or hoped for, could have surpassed the reality. There was (at the reduced rate of money even) £450 in the house. And the New York House (which is also sold out for every announced night) holds fully 500 people more!

Write to me in future at the Westminster Hotel, Irving Place, New York City. It is a more central address than this, and we shall probably be much oftener there. My present intention is to keep rooms there, and I have also started a Brougham beforehand.

†a The enclosed letter to your care as usual. †a

We shall not be able to begin the children or George Silverman before March,†1 as Fields does not begin either until January. This will come to you by my ship, the Cuba, returning home. I am very well indeed, and in great voice and force. You may be absolutely certain that the success here †b COULD NOT †b be greater.

Ever My Dear Fellow | Your affectionate

CD.

To MARY BOYLE, 4 DECEMBER 1867

Text from MDGH, II, 315-16.

Boston, December 4th, 1867.

My dear Meery,

You can have no idea of the glow of pleasure and amazement with which I saw your remembrance of me lying on my dressing-table here last Monday night.†2 Whosoever undertook that commission accomplished it to a miracle. But you must go away four thousand miles, and have such a token conveyed to you, before you can quite appreciate the feeling of receiving it. Ten thousand loving thanks.

Immense success here, and unbounded enthusiasm. My largest expectations far surpassed.

Ever your affectionate

Jo.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 4 DECEMBER 1867†

MS Huntington Library.

Boston | Wednesday Fourth December 1867

My Dearest Georgy. I find that by going off to the Cuba myself this morning, I can send you the enclosed for Mary Boyle (I don't know how to address her) whose usual flower for my button hole was produced in the most extraordinary manner here last Monday night! All well and prosperous. Copperfield and Bob last night with great success. My present profit is over £1,000 per week!

Ever Most affectionately

CD.

[†a]It will be best to address me until further notice at the Westminster Hotel, Irving Place, New York City.[†a]

To CHARLES ELIOT NORTON, 4 DECEMBER 1867*

MS Houghton Library, Harvard. Address: C. E. Norton Esquire | Cambridge | Mass.

Parker House, Boston | Wednesday Fourth December, 1867

My Dear Norton

I am heartily glad to have your cordial note, and esteem it far too highly to let it remain unacknowledged.

If you ever come to another Reading here, pray let me see you for a moment afterwards. And always believe me, as I truly am,

Faithfully Your friend

CHARLES DICKENS

C. E. Norton Esquire

To MRS CHARLES ELIOT NORTON,[†1] 4 DECEMBER 1867*

MS Houghton Library, Harvard.

Parker House, Boston

Wednesday Fourth December, 1867

My Dear Mrs. Norton

You think that gratitude must be very familiar to me. Let me assure you that true generous earnestness can never be familiar enough, and that I deeply feel your note as a most precious example of that quality.

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Norton

To W.H. WILLS, 4 DECEMBER 1867

Telegram, MS Huntington Library.

THE ELECTRIC AND INTERNATIONAL TELEGRAPH COMPANY.

The following Message has been received at Strand Station. | Decr. 4 1867

FROM

Dickens

TO

Wills all the year Round Office London
Tremendous success greatest enthusiasm all well.

To HORATIO WOODMAN,[†1] 4 DECEMBER 1867*

Text from transcript by Dr Brooks Wright from MS Mrs Grafton Lee Wilson (both descendants of Woodman).

Parker House, Boston | Wednesday. Fourth December | 1867

Dear Sir

I can not sufficiently thank you for the splendid Madeira and for your kind manner of presenting it. But I thank you with all my heart.

Among the many things that I am obliged to put aside for my work's sake, I fear the Lobster Salad must be included. Silence, a darkened room, and an unsociality very foreign to my nature, are the sequel of my readings every night.

Believe me | Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Horatio Woodman Esquire

To J.T. FIELDS, 6 DECEMBER 1867*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: James T. Fields Esquire.

Parker House | Friday Sixth December 1867

My Dear Fields

I must keep close this morning, for I have Dombey[†2] to go through, and home correspondence.

Baker[†3] accompanies this.

In haste | Affecy. Yours ever

CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [6 DECEMBER 1867]

Extract in F, X, i, 767-8. Date: the day before he left Boston for New York (Sat 7 Dec), according to Forster.

Saying that he was making a clear profit of thirteen hundred pounds in English money a week, even allowing seven dollars to the pound; but that the weather was taking a turn of even unusual severity, and that he found the climate, in the suddenness of its changes, and the wide leaps they take, excessively trying. The work is of course rather trying too; but the sound position that everything must be subservient to it enables me to keep aloof from invitations.... To-morrow, we move to New York. We cannot beat the speculators in our tickets. We sell no more than six to any one person for the course of four readings; but these speculators, who sell at greatly increased prices and make large profits, will employ any number of men to buy. One of the chief of them — now living in this house, in order that he may move as we move! — can put on 50 people in any place we go to; and thus he gets 300 tickets into his own hands.[†1]

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, [?6 DECEMBER 1867]†

MS Huntington Library. Date: CD read on 5 Dec ("last night"); see similar comment in To Wills, 6 Dec.

Parker House, Boston. U.S. | 4th. Jany. 1868.[†2]

My Dearest Georgy. I write to you by this opportunity though I really have nothing to tell you. The work is hard, the climate is hard, the life is hard; [†a]but — so far — the gain is enormous.[†a] We made a tremendous hit last night with Nickleby and Boots, which the Bostonians certainly on the whole appreciate more than Copperfield! [†a]And think of this:— we had £500 English in the House, after making more than the necessary deduction for the present price of gold. You may imagine the continual glistening and beaming of Dolby's face, and how perpetually he brings out that "Case in a Nutshell"[†3] drawn up at Gad's, and refers to it to prove that all our expences were overstated in it, and all our receipts under-estimated.[†a] He is always going about with an immense bundle that looks like a sofa cushion, but is in reality paper money — and always works like a Trojan. His business at night is a mere nothing, for these people are so accustomed to take care of themselves, that one of these immense audiences will fall into their places with an ease amazing to a frequenter of St. James's Hall. And the certainty with which they are all in, before I go on, is a very acceptable mark of respect. I must add too that although there is a conventional familiarity in the use of one's name in the newspapers as "Dickens", "Charlie", and what not, I do not in the least see that familiarity in the writers themselves. An inscrutable tone obtains in journalism here which a stranger cannot understand. †aWithout any approach to cringing, I find in such newspaper writers as I have seen — as a class — something very well represented by Fisk.†a†4 If I say, in common courtesy, to one of them whom Dolby introduces: "I am much obliged to you for your interest in me" — or so forth he seems quite shocked, and has a bearing of perfect modesty and propriety. I am rather inclined to think that they suppose their printed tone to be the Public's love of "smartness," but it is immensely difficult to make out. All I can as yet make out, is, that my perfect freedom from bondage to anybody, and at any moment to go on or leave off, or otherwise do as I like, is the only safe position to occupy.

Again; there are two apparently irreconcileable contrasts here. Down below in this Hotel every night, are the Bar Loungers, dram drinkers, drunkards, swaggerers, Loafers, that one might find in a Boucicault Play. Within half an hour is Cambridge, where a delightful domestic life — simple, self-respectful, cordial and affectionate — is seen in an admirable aspect. All New England is primitive and puritanical. All about and around it is a puddle of mixed human mud with no such quality in it. Perhaps I may in time sift out some tolerably intelligible whole, but I certainly have not done so yet. It is a good sign, may be, that it all seems immensely more difficult to understand than it was when I was here before.

Felton left two daughters — †aboth well off, as both his wives had money.†a†1 I have only seen the eldest.†2 A very sensible, frank, pleasant girl of eight and twenty perhaps. Rather like him in the face. A striking looking daughter of Hawthorn's (who is also dead) came into my room last night.†3

†bLongfellow has the oddest eldest daughter.†4 If you saw her eyes looking through a chink, you would say she was lovely. You see her whole squeezed face and don't know what to make of it — or whether to decide that she is pretty or plain. You remember Tom Appleton,†5 by the way? He turned up at the Reading last night. Mrs. Longfellow's brother, you recollect.†b

The day has slipped on to 3 o'Clock, and I must get up Dombey for tonight. Hence this sudden break off. Best love to Mamie, and to Katie and Charley Collins.

Ever My Dearest Georgy | Your most affectionate

CD.

To MISS ELLEN TERNAN, [6 DECEMBER 1867]

Mention in next. Date: no doubt written same day.

To W. H. WILLS, 6 DECEMBER 1867†

MS Huntington Library.

Parker House, Boston. U.S. | Friday Sixth December 1867

My Dear Wills.

†cEnclosed is another letter for my dear girl to your kindest care.†c

I am going on (between ourselves) at a clear profit of £1,300 per week! And it is quite upon the cards that an occasional morning in New York will raise even these figures. Nickleby and Boots made a tremendous hit here last night, and certainly topped my favourite Copperfield — which may perhaps be a thought too delicate for them, though it went finely too.[†1] We had £500 in the House — £500 English, at the handsome rate of 7 Dollars to the pound!

I have received 3 Nos. of A.Y.R.[†2] all good, and Murray[†3] very good.[†4] Be extremely chary of using those Mugby Junction stories.[†5]

Tomorrow at 11 we start for New York, being due there at 8 in the evening. On Monday I open there with Carol and Trial. Tickets at a premium, and we cannot by any means keep out the speculators or prevent their making large profits.

With kind love to Mrs. Wills, ever My Dear Boy

Your faithful and affectionate

CD.[†6]

[Over

Address me until further notice:
Westminster Hotel | Irving Place | New York City.

To MISS ELLEN TERNAN, [10 DECEMBER 1867]

Mention in next. Date: no doubt written same day.

To W. H. WILLS, 10 AND 11 DECEMBER 1867*

MS Huntington Library.

Westminster [Hotel],[†7] Irving Place, New York City
Tuesday Evening Tenth December 1867

My Dear Wills
[†a]Enclosed is another letter for my dear girl, to your usual care and exactness. By this same post you will receive some New York papers from Dolby. Will you take care to send her the Tribune?[†a†8]

It is absolutely impossible that we could have made a more brilliant success than we made here last night. The reception was splendid, the audience bright and perceptive. I believe that I never read so well since I began, and the general delight was most enthusiastic.[†1] And now I may tell you that before I came away, I received at the office by two or three Mails from here, various letters about Danger, Anti Dickens feeling, Anti English feeling, New York rowdyism, and I don't know what else. As I was in for coming, I resolved to say no word about it to anyone. Nor did I, until I came off from the Trial last night, when I told Dolby.

This Hotel is quieter than Mivart's[†2] in Brook Street! It is quite as comfortable, and the French cuisine is immeasurably better. I go in and out by a side door and a little staircase that leads straight to my bedroom. The platform absorbs my individuality, and I am very little troubled. We have on the first floor, a pretty drawing room, my bedroom, bath-room, W.C. & Scott's bedroom. Dolby has his bedroom and another room in which to see his clients, on the floor above. There are Hotels (on the American principle) very near, with 500 bedrooms and I don't know how many boarders. This Hotel (on the Europian[†3] principle) is almost faultless, and is as singularly unlike your idea of an American Hotel as unlike can be. New York has grown out of my knowledge, and is enormous. Everything in it looks as if the order of nature were reversed, and everything grew newer every day, instead of older. The Room[†4] — very much larger than its capacity of holding people — is about as trying as St. James's Hall. I am in capital health and voice — [†b]but my spirits flutter woefully towards a certain place at which you dined one day not long before I left, with the present writer and a third (most drearily missed) person.[†b]

It has been intensely cold. But to day it has thawed, after a fall of snow. Nothing more to report at present, except my love to Mrs. Wills, and my affectionate and faithful regard to you.

CD.

Wednesday Morning

Copperfield and Bob even a greater success last night[†5] than Carol and Trial on the night before. "Mr. Digguns", said the German Janitor (the invariable name for the Hall Keeper) "you are gread, mein herr. There is no ent to you!" — That was his parting salutation as he locked me out into a hard frost. — "Bedder and bedder" — he re-opened the door to add. — "Wot negst!"

To MISS MARY DICKENS, 11 DECEMBER 1867

Extract in MDGH, II, 316-17.

Westminster Hotel, Irving Place, New York City,
Wednesday, Dec. 11th, 1867.

Amazing success here. A very fine audience; far better than that at Boston. Great reception. Great, "Carol" and "Trial," on the first night; still greater, "Copperfield" and "Bob," on the second. Dolby sends you a few papers by this post.[†1] You will see from their tone what a success it is.

I cannot pay this letter, because I give it at the latest moment to the mail-officer, who is going on board the Cunard packet in charge of the mails, and who is staying in this house. We are now selling (at the hall) the tickets for the four readings of next week. At nine o'clock this morning there were two thousand people in waiting, and they had begun to assemble in the bitter cold as early as two o'clock.[†2] All night long Dolby and our man have been stamping tickets. (Immediately over my head, by-the-bye, and keeping me awake.) This hotel is quite as quiet as Mivart's, in Brook Street. It is not very much larger. There are American hotels close by, with five hundred bedrooms, and I don't know how many boarders; but this is conducted on what is called "the European principle," and is an admirable mixture of a first-class French and English house. I keep a very smart carriage and pair; and if you were to behold me driving out, furred up to the moustache, with furs on the coach-boy and on the driver, and with an immense white, red, and yellow striped rug for a covering, you would suppose me to be of Hungarian or Polish nationality.

Will you report the success here to Mr. Forster with my love, and tell him he shall hear from me by next mail?

Dolby sends his kindest regards. He is just come in from our ticket sales, and has put such an immense untidy heap of paper money on the table that it looks like a family wash. He hardly ever dines, and is always tearing about at unreasonable hours. He works very hard.

My best love to your aunt (to whom I will write next), and to Katie, and to both the Charleys, and all the Christmas circle, not forgetting Chorley, to whom give my special remembrance. You may get this by Christmas Day. We shall have to keep it travelling from Boston here; for I read at Boston on the 23rd and 24th, and here again on the 26th.

To J. T. FIELDS, 11 DECEMBER 1867*

MS New York Public Library. Address: James T. Fields Esqre.

Wednesday Eleventh Decr. 1867.[†1]

My Dear Fields

My visitors are gone, and I am at leisure until 1 when Wallack comes about the Play.[†2]

Ever affecy.

CD.

To D. [C.] KINGSLAND,[†3] 11 DECEMBER 1867

Mention in S. T. Freeman & Co., catalogue (Sep 1933); MS 1 p.; dated 11 Dec 67; addressed D. Kingsland.

Acknowledging an invitation.

To R. G. WHITE,[†4] 12 DECEMBER 1867*

MS Morgan Library.

Westminster Hotel, New York | Thursday Twelfth December, 1867

Dear Sir

I have never seen or heard of the published letter[†5] to which you refer in your obliging note, and I beg you to receive my assurance that I have never for a moment doubted you in the matter.[†6]

My avocations occupy too much of my time to admit of my pursuing the copyright question under existing circumstances; and indeed though my leisure were greater, I would rather put the subject aside, in friendship towards the American people. I said what I had to say about it when I was in the States years ago, and there I left it in all good humour.

What you say of the Tale of Two Cities is extremely gratifying to me. It may be interesting to you to know, as you mention Mr. Carlyle in the same sentence with it, that he wrote me the highest commendation of the book when he first read it, and professed that he had been unable to lay it down. He is a dear friend of mine, and his History[†7] inspired me with the general fancy of that story.[†8]

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Grant White Esquire

To A. H. H. DAWSON,[†1] 14 DECEMBER 1867*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia

Westminster Hotel, New York | Saturday Fourteenth December 1867

Dear Sir

I beg to thank you for your letter, recalling a very agreeable and interesting excursion, of which I distinctly remember the smallest particulars.[†2]

It is my most earnest desire to render the tickets for my Readings as widely and easily accessible as possible. I hope the difficulties in the way may be soon overcome. But the plan you suggest has invariably failed when any approach to it has been tried in England. It was tried with no better success when I read in Paris a few years ago, and was abolished within a few hours.[†3]

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Andrew H. H. Dawson Esquire

To MRS MORGAN,[†4] 14 DECEMBER 1867*

MS Mrs Richard Armstrong.

Westminster Hotel
Saturday Fourteenth December, 1867

My Dear Mrs. Morgan

I have to thank you for by far the most beautiful present of flowers I ever saw. I cannot tell you with what pleasure I have kept it on my table, or how delightfully it has refreshed my eyes. It has been the envy and admiration of all beholders, and is still in a thriving condition

Believe me always | Very faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs E E Morgan

To JOHN FORSTER, [15 DECEMBER 1867]

Extracts in F, X, i, 768-70. Date: first extract 15 Dec 67, according to Forster; second extract after he had been in New York a week, no doubt from same letter; third extract probably of same date, referring to the snow of which he wrote to Georgina Hogarth the next day.

Dolby has got into trouble about the manner of issuing the tickets for next week's series.[†5] He cannot get four thousand people into a room holding only two thousand, he cannot induce people to pay at the ordinary price for themselves instead of giving thrice as much to speculators, and he is attacked in all directions.... I don't much like my hall, for it has two large balconies far removed from the platform; but no one ever waylays me as I go into it or come out of it, and it is kept as rigidly quiet as the Français[†1] at a rehearsal. We have not yet had in it less than £430 per night, allowing for the depreciated currency! I send £3000 to England by this packet. From all parts of the States, applications and offers continually come in. We go to Boston next Saturday for two more readings, and come back here on Christmas Day for four more. I am not yet bound to go elsewhere, except three times (each time for two nights) to Philadelphia; thinking it wisest to keep free for the largest places. I have had an action brought against me by a man who considered himself injured (and really may have been) in the matter of his tickets. Personal service being necessary, I was politely waited on by a marshal for that purpose; whom I received with the greatest courtesy, apparently very much to his amazement. The action was handsomely withdrawn next day, and the plaintiff paid his own costs.... Dolby hopes you are satisfied with the figures so far; the profit each night exceeding the estimated profit by £130 odd. He is anxious I should also tell you that he is the most unpopular and best-abused man in America.[†2]

Saying that he had been a week in New York before he was able to identify the great city which a lapse of twenty-five years had so prodigiously increased. The only portion that has even now come back to me is the part of Broadway in which the Carlton Hotel[†3] (long since destroyed) used to stand. There is a very fine new park[†4] in the outskirts, and the number of grand houses and splendid equipages is quite surprising. There are hotels close here with 500 bedrooms and I don't know how many boarders; but this hotel is quite as quiet as, and not much larger than, Mivart's in Brook Street. My rooms are all en suite, and I come and go by a private door and private staircase communicating with my bedroom. The waiters are French, and one might be living in Paris. One of the two proprietors[†5] is also proprietor of Niblo's Theatre,[†6] and the greatest care is taken of me, Niblo's great attraction, the Black Crook,[†1] has now been played every night for 16 months (!), and is the most preposterous peg to hang ballets on that was ever seen.[†2] The people who act in it have not the slightest idea of what it is about, and never had; but; after taxing my intellectual powers to the utmost, I fancy that I have discovered Black Crook to be a malignant hunchback leagued with the Powers of Darkness to separate two lovers; and that the Powers of Lightness coming (in no skirts whatever) to the rescue, he is defeated.[†3] I am quite serious in saying that I do not suppose there are two pages of All the Year Round in the whole piece (which acts all night); the whole of the rest of it being ballets of all sorts, perfectly unaccountable processions,[†4] and the Donkey out of last year's Covent Garden pantomime! At the other theatres, comic operas, melodramas, and domestic dramas prevail all over the city, and my stories play no inconsiderable part in them.[†5] I go nowhere, having laid down the rule that to combine visiting with my work would be absolutely impossible.... The Fenian explosion at Clerkenwell[†6] was telegraphed here in a few hours. I do not think there is any sympathy whatever with the Fenians on the part of the American people, though political adventurers may make capital out of a show of it. But no doubt large sections of the Irish population of this State are themselves Fenian; and the local politics of the place are in a most depraved condition, if half of what is said to me be true. I prefer not to talk of these things, but at odd intervals I look round for myself. Great social improvements in respect of manners and forbearance have come to pass since I was here before, but in public life I see as yet but little change.

Saying that he had got through half of his first New York readings when a winter storm came on. When the fi*rst snow fell, the railways were closed for some days. Describing New York crowded with sleighs, and the snow piled up in enormous walls the whole length of the streets.* I turned out in a rather gorgeous sleigh yesterday with any quantity of buffalo robes, and made an imposing appearance.

To EDWIN BOOTH, [16 DECEMBER 1867]

Mention in To Lytton, 16 Dec. Date: written same day.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 16 DECEMBER 1867

Extract in MDGH, II, 317-18.

Westminster Hotel, Irving Place, New York City,
Monday, Dec. 16th, 1867.

We have been snowed up here, and the communication with Boston is still very much retarded. Thus we have received no letters by the Cunard steamer that came in last Wednesday, and are in a grim state of mind on that subject.

Last night I was getting into bed just at twelve o'clock, when Dolby came to my door to inform me that the house was on fire (I had previously smelt fire for two hours). I got Scott up directly, told him to pack the books and clothes for the readings first, dressed, and pocketed my jewels and papers, while Dolby stuffed himself out with money. Meanwhile the police and firemen were in the house, endeavouring to find where the fire was. For some time it baffled their endeavours, but at last, bursting out through some stairs, they cut the stairs away, and traced it to its source in a certain fire-grate. By this time the hose was laid all through the house from a great tank on the roof, and everybody turned out to help. It was the oddest sight, and people had put the strangest things on! After a little chopping and cutting with axes and handing about of water, the fire was confined to a dining-room in which it had originated, and then everybody talked to everybody else, the ladies being particularly loquacious and cheerful. And so we got to bed again at about two.[†1]

The excitement of the readings continues unabated, the tickets for readings are sold as soon as they are ready, and the public pay treble prices to the speculators who buy them up. They are a wonderfully fine audience, even better than Edinburgh, and almost, if not quite, as good as Paris.[†2]

Dolby continues to be the most unpopular man in America (mainly because he can't get four thousand people into a room that holds two thousand), and is reviled in print daily. Yesterday morning a newspaper[†3] proclaims of him: "Surely it is time that the pudding-headed Dolby[†4] retired into the native gloom from which he has emerged." He takes it very coolly, and does his best. Mrs. Morgan sent me, the other night, I suppose the finest and costliest basket of flowers ever seen, made of white camellias, yellow roses, pink roses, and I don't know what else. It is a yard and a half round at its smallest part.

I must bring this to a close, as I have to go to the hall to try an enlarged background.

To LORD LYTTON, 16 DECEMBER 1867

MS Lytton Papers.

Westminster Hotel, New York City
Monday Sixteenth December 1867.

My Dear Lytton

Mr. Booth is starring in distant places, communication has been interrupted by heavy snow, and I have received the enclosed from him only this morning. I have replied that your instructions leave me at perfect liberty to send him the Play.[†1] Which I have accordingly done.

My success here is beyond all precedent or description, and I hope to make a very handsome sum of money. The people are very kind and very considerate. I consider the audience in this city — herein having my expectations completely reversed — far quicker and brighter than in Boston. I doubt if I ever saw a better audience, save in Paris.[†2]

Ever affectionately Yours

CD.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 16 DECEMBER 1867

Extract (pro forma letter), in Sotheby's catalogue, Mar 1972; MS 1 p. (3rd person); dated Office of AYR, 16 Dec 67.[†3]

Thanking his correspondent for a paper entitled "A Day in the Desert", but telling him that his story is not suited to the requirements of All the Year Round, and arranging for its return.

To MRS HERTZ,[†4] 17 DECEMBER 1867

MS Boston Public Library.

Westminster Hotel, New York
Tuesday Seventeenth Decr. 1867

Dear Mrs. Hertz

I cannot sufficiently thank you for the beautiful and tasteful flowers you have kindly sent me this morning, but believe me I am proud of your remembrance.

If it will suit your convenience to make me your parting visit at 12 tomorrow, I will take care to be disengaged then.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS ELLEN TERNAN, [17 DECEMBER 1867]

Mention in next. Date: no doubt written same day.

To W. H. WILLS, 17 DECEMBER 1867†

MS Huntington Library.

Westminster Hotel, Irving Place, New York City.
Tuesday Seventeenth December 1867

My Dear Wills

[†a]Enclosed, another letter "as before".[†a]

No news, except that this house was on fire last Sunday night (a matter scarcely worth mentioning in New York), and that we turned out and packed up. But the fire was happily got under. The meeting of all the inmates, in the most extraordinary dresses, and with their most precious possessions under their arms or imperfectly crammed into their pockets, was very ridiculous. Everybody talked to everybody else, and it was on the whole convivial.

Everything unchanged. Everybody sleighing. Everybody coming to the Readings.[†1] There were at least ten thousand sleighs in the Park last Sunday. Your illustrious chief — in a red sleigh covered with furs, and drawn by a pair of fine horses covered with bells, and tearing up 14 miles of snow an hour — made an imposing appearance.

Tell Wilkie with my love that I have received his work (admirably done) to the first scene of the 4th. Act inclusive.[†2] and that I hope to bring the thing to terms with Wallack. But he seems a little shy (or I fancy it) touching the 10 per cent. I hope to report finally by the next Mail.

Ever My Dear fellow | Your affectionate

CD.

To J. T. FIELDS, 19 DECEMBER 1867*

MS Berg Collection.

Westminster Hotel, New York
Thursday Nineteenth December 1867

My Dear Fields

I never was so astounded, I think, as when I got your note this morning! Not that a mistake,[†3] however gross and ridiculous, is a very surprising occurrence in this world, but because there would seem (from Mr. Woodman's note enclosed) to be human beings who can believe in the possibility of such a mistake being no mistake but an intention and design! Of course I write by this post to Dr. Palfrey[†1] himself, and, equally of course, I tell him that I shall express my regret to him personally on Sunday.

With my love to Mrs. Fields | Always Yours affectionately

CD.

P. S. I don't know Dr. Palfrey's exact address.[†2] Pray send the note I have written him, straight on for me.

To DR J. G. PALFREY, 19 DECEMBER 1867

Mention in last. Date: written same day.

To JOHN FORSTER, [22 DECEMBER 1867]

Extracts in F, X, i, 771-72. Date: first three extracts 22 Dec 67, according to Forster; last extract probably part of same long letter, written from Boston.

The railways are truly alarming. Much worse (because more worn I suppose) than when I was here before. We were beaten about yesterday, as if we had been aboard the Cuba. Two rivers have to be crossed, and each time the whole train is banged aboard a big steamer. The steamer rises and falls with the river, which the railroad don't do; and the train is either banged up hill or banged down hill. In coming off the steamer at one of these crossings yesterday, we were banged up such a height that the rope broke, and one carriage rushed back with a run downhill into the boat again. I whisked out in a moment, and two or three others after me; but nobody else seemed to care about it. The treatment of the luggage is perfectly outrageous. Nearly every case I have is already broken. When we started from Boston yesterday, I beheld, to my unspeakable amazement, Scott, my dresser, leaning a flushed countenance against the wall of the car, and weeping bitterly. It was over my smashed writing-desk. Yet the arrangements for luggage are excellent, if the porters would not be beyond description reckless.

The halls are excellent. Imagine one holding two thousand people, seated with exact equality for every one of them, and every one seated separately. I have nowhere, at home or abroad, seen so fine a police as the police of New York; and their bearing in the streets is above all praise. On the other hand, the laws for regulation of public vehicles, clearing of streets, and removal of obstructions, are wildly outraged by the people for whose benefit they are intended. Yet there is undoubtedly improvement in every direction, and I am taking time to make up my mind on things in general. Let me add that I have been tempted out at three in the morning to visit one of the large police station-houses, and was so fascinated by the study of a horrible photograph-book of thieves' portraits that I couldn't shut it up.

A good specimen of the sort of newspaper you and I know something of, came out in Boston here this morning. The editor had applied for our advertisements, saying that "it was at Mr. D.'s disposal for paragraphs." The advertisements were not sent; Dolby did not enrich its columns paragraphically; and among its news to-day is the item that "this chap calling himself Dolby got drunk down town last night, and was taken to the police station for fighting an Irishman"![†1] I am sorry to say that I don't find anybody to be much shocked by this liveliness.

Saying that Dolby's original plan was that CD should read in New York every week. But I say No. By the 10th of January I shall have read to 35,000 people in that city alone. Put the readings out of the reach of all the people behind them, for the time. It is that one of the popular peculiarities which I most particularly notice, that they must not have a thing too easily. Nothing in the country lasts long; and a thing is prized the more, the less easy it is made. Reflecting therefore that I shall want to close, in April, with farewell readings here and in New York, I am convinced that the crush and pressure upon these necessary to their adequate success is only to be got by absence; and that the best thing I can do is not to give either city as much reading as it wants now, but to be independent of both while both are most enthusiastic. I have therefore resolved presently to announce in New York so many readings (I mean a certain number) as the last that can be given there, before I travel to promised places; and that we select the best places, with the largest halls, on our list. This will include, East here — the two or three best New England towns; South — Baltimore and Washington; West — Cincinnati, Pittsburgh, Chicago, and St. Louis; and towards Niagara — Cleveland and Buffalo.[†2] Philadelphia we are already pledged to, for six nights; and the scheme will pretty easily bring us here again twice before the farewells. I feel convinced that this is the sound policy. I read here to-morrow and Tuesday; all tickets being sold to the end of the series, even for subjects not announced. I have not read a single time at a lower clear profit per night (all deductions made) than £315. But rely upon it I shall take great care not to read oftener than four times a week — after this next week, when I stand committed to five. The inevitable tendency of the staff, when these great houses excite them, is, in the words of an old friend of ours, to "hurge the hartist hon"; and a night or two ago I had to cut away five readings from their list.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 22 DECEMBER 1867

Extract in MDGH, II, 319-21.

Boston, Sunday, Dec. 22nd, 1867.

Coming here from New York last night (after a detestable journey), I was delighted to find your letter of the 6th. I read it at my ten o'clock dinner with the greatest interest and pleasure, and then we talked of home till we went to bed.

[†a]Our tour is now being made out, and I hope to be able to send it in my next letter home, which will be to Mamie, from whom I have not heard (as you thought I had) by the mail that brought out yours. After very careful consideration I have reversed Dolby's original plan, and have decided on taking Baltimore, Washington, Cincinnati, Chicago (!), St. Louis,[†1] and a few other places nearer here, instead of staying in New York. My reason is that we are doing immensely, both at New York and here, and that I am sure it is in the peculiar character of the people to prize a thing the more the less easily attainable it is made. Therefore, I want, by absence, to get the greatest rush and pressure upon the five farewell readings in New York in April. All our announced readings are already crammed.[†a]

When we got here last Saturday night, we found that Mrs. Fields had not only garnished the rooms with flowers, but also with holly (with real red berries) and festoons of moss dependent from the looking-glasses and picture frames. She is one of the dearest little women in the world. The homely Christmas look of the place quite affected us. Yesterday we dined at her house,[†2] and there was a plum-pudding, brought on blazing, and not to be surpassed in any house in England. There is a certain Captain Dolliver,[†3] belonging to the Boston Custom House, who came off in the little steamer that brought me ashore from the Cuba.[†4] He took it into his head that he would have a piece of English mistletoe brought out in this week's Cunard, which should be laid upon my breakfast-table. And there it was this morning. In such affectionate touches as this, these New England people are especially amiable.

As a general rule, you may lay it down that whatever you see about me in the papers is not true. But although my voyage out was of that highly hilarious description that you first made known to me, you may generally lend a more believing ear to the Philadelphia correspondent of The Times.[†5] I don't know him, but I know the source from which he derives his information, and it is a very respectable one.

Did I tell you in a former letter from here, to tell Anne, with her old master's love, that I had seen Putnam, my old secretary? Grey, and with several front teeth out, but I would have known him anywhere. He is coming to "Copperfield" to-night, accompanied by his wife[†6] and daughter, and is in the seventh heaven at having his tickets given him.

Our hotel in New York was on fire again the other night. But fires in this country are quite matters of course. There was a large one there at four this morning, and I don't think a single night has passed since

I have been under the protection of the Eagle,[†1] but I have heard the fire bells dolefully clanging all over the city.

[a]Dolby sends his kindest regard. His hair has become quite white, the effect, I suppose, of the climate. He is so universally hauled over the coals (for no reason on earth), that I fully expect to hear him, one of these nights, assailed with a howl when he precedes me to the platform steps. You may conceive what the low newspapers are here, when one of them yesterday morning had, as an item of news, the intelligence: "Dickens's Readings. The chap calling himself Dolby got drunk last night, and was locked up in a police-station for fighting an Irishman." I don't find that anybody is shocked by this liveliness.[a]

My love to all, and to Mrs. Hulkes and the boy. By-the-bye, when we left New York for this place, Dolby called my amazed attention to the circumstance that Scott was leaning his head against the side of the carriage and weeping bitterly. I asked him what was the matter, and he replied: "The owdacious treatment of the luggage, which was more outrageous than a man could bear." I told him not to make a fool of himself; but they do knock it about cruelly. I think every trunk we have is already broken.

I must leave off, as I am going out for a walk in a bright sunlight and a complete break-up of the frost and snow. I am much better than I have been during the last week, but have a cold.[†2]

To GEORGE W. CHILDS, 23 DECEMBER 1867*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Parker House, Boston
Monday Twenty Third December, 1867

My Dear Mr. Childs

Again, many thanks. It is extremely kind of you to bear me in mind so thoughtfully.

Believe me always | Faithfully Your friend
CHARLES DICKENS

George W Childs Esquire

To OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES, 23 DECEMBER 1867*

MS Library of Congress. Address: Dr. Holmes | 164 Charles Street | City.

Parker House, Boston
Tuesday Twenty Third December 1867

My Dear Dr. Holmes.

Your kind note is exceedingly acceptable and agreeable to me, but I very much fear that I shall not have one solitary day at my own disposal in Boston. The only day I had here on which I could venture to engage myself socially, was Wednesday the 26th. of February, and that I have anticipated with the entry "Lowell".[†1] I have been sitting in a brown study (but I don't know why brown) staring disconsolately at my pocketbook for the New Year, for half an hour, — and this note is the only result of my cogitations!

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To WILKIE COLLINS, 24 DECEMBER 1867

MS Morgan Library.

Boston | Christmas Eve 1867.

My Dear Wilkie

I am obliged to write very hastily, to catch the Mail over at New York.

The Play[†2] is done with great pains and skill.[†3] But I fear it is too long. Its fate will have been decided before you get this letter, but I greatly doubt its success.

Your points follow in their order.

1. Whatever is most dramatic in such a complicated thing as the Clock Lock, I think the best for the stage — without reference to the nicety of the real mechanism.[†4]

2. I would keep Vendale and Marguerite on the stage. And I would end with Obenreizer's exit.[†5]

3. Madame D'Or's speaking, unquestionably better out. She herself unquestionably better out. I have not the least doubt of it.[†6]

But my dear boy, what do you mean by the whole being left "at my sole discretion"? Is not the play coming out, the day after tomorrow???[†7]

There are no end of No Thoroughfares being offered to Managers here.[†1] The play being still in abeyance with Wallack, I have a strong suspicion that he wants to tide over to the 27th. and get a Telegram from London about the first night of the real version. If it should not be a great success, he would then either do a false one, or do none. Accordingly, I have brought him to book for decision on the 26th. Don't you see?

They are doing Crickets,[†2] Oliver Twists, and all sorts of versions of me. Under these circumstances, they fence when they have to pay.

I will try to catch the next mail.

Ever affectionately,
CD.

To CAPTAIN DOLLIVER, 24 DECEMBER 1867

MS Lesley College, Massachusetts.

Boston, Christmas Eve 1867

Dear Captain Dolliver

Accept my cordial thanks for your kind reminder of Home and Christmas-time.[†3] It was highly acceptable to me when I saw it lying on my breakfast-table.

With all good wishes in (and out of) season, Believe me

Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS ELLEN TERNAN, [24 DECEMBER 1867]

Mention in next. Date: no doubt written same day.

To W. H. WILLS, 24 DECEMBER 1867†

MS Huntington Library.

Boston, | Christmas Eve 1867

My Dear Wills. Many many merry Christmases and Happy New Years to you and yours, and to all of us! We spend our Christmas Day this year on the Railway between this place and New York.

The same success as always.

Ticknor and Fields publish the first part of Holiday Romance, on the 1st. of January. They publish it in 4 parts. Each part on the 1st. of the month. Make your calculation so that you will not jostle them (remembering that we are weekly and they monthly), and accordingly announce and publish. Follow up — perhaps after a short interval — with George Silverman's Explanation. They publish that, in 3 monthly parts, beginning on the 1st. of January.

[†a]Enclosed, another letter as before, to your protection and dispatch. I would give £3,000 down (and think it cheap) if you could forward me, for four and twenty hours only, instead of the letter.[†a]

Dolby's best regard. He is incessantly abused, for no reason on earth but that he is not an American agent.[†1] Think of a low newspaper (which had been refused our advertisements) in Boston, the Hub of the Universe as they call it (Hub being the nave of a wheel) having this article of news last Sunday morning:— "The chap calling himself Dolby got drunk last night down town, and was locked up in the Police Station for fighting an Irishman"!

I have a dismal cold, but beat it down at 8 P.M.

In making up A.Y.R. try to bring the matter closer down to the foot of the last page of the No. And for the love of Heaven no more of those Xmas Railway stories.[†2] Parkinson[†3] very good.

Ever My Dear Wills | Affectionately Yours

CD.

Over[†4]

Mrs. Wills not forgotten.
Remark of a Western Agent (we mean to go out West), to Dolby this morning; Western Agent having been present at Copperfield and Bob last night.

"Wa'al Mas'r Dolby, I tell yew this Sir. He has a 'tarnal tall name, but he don't want it. The man as can [†b]do THAT[†b] — never was so skeared, I tell you, in all my life, and thought I should ha' bust! — might just go out West, never been heerd of — and Damn me if he couldn't draw 'em across the plains if he chiz, till they hit their foreheads 'gain the Rocky Mountens."

Additional Memorandum. My New York landlord makes me a drink melodiously called "a Rocky Mountain Sneezer".[†5]

To JOHN FORSTER, [?25 DECEMBER 1867]

Extracts in F, X, i, 772 and 774. Date: first extract "a few days later" than letter of 22 Dec, according to Forster; second extract, the "last words written" before he left Boston for New York on Christmas Day, according to Forster, no doubt part of same letter.

The Tribune is an excellent paper. Horace Greeley[†6] is editor in chief, and a considerable shareholder too. All the people connected with it whom I have seen are of the best class. It is also a very fine property — but here the New York Herald[†1] beats it hollow, hollow, hollow! Another able and well-edited paper is the New York Times,[†2] A most respectable journal too is Bryant's[†3] Evening Post, excellently written. There is generally a much more responsible and respectable tone than prevailed formerly, however small may be the literary merit among papers pointed out to me as of large circulation. In much of the writing there is certainly improvement, but it might be more widely spread.

The low action of the heart, or whatever it is, has inconvenienced me greatly this last week. On Monday night, after the reading, I was laid upon a bed, in a very faint and shady state; and on the Tuesday I did not get up till the afternoon.

To MISS MARY DICKENS, 26 AND 27 DECEMBER 1867

Extract in MDGH, II, 321-3.

Westminster Hotel, Irving Place, New York City,
Thursday, Dec. 26th, 1867.

I got your aunt's last letter at Boston yesterday, Christmas Day morning, when I was starting at eleven o'clock to come back to this place. I wanted it very much, for I had a frightful cold (English colds are nothing to those of this country), and was exceedingly depressed and miserable. Not that I had any reason but illness for being so, since the Bostonians had been quite astounding in their demonstrations. I never saw anything like them on Christmas Eve. But it is a bad country to be unwell and travelling in; you are one of say a hundred people in a heated car, with a great stove in it, and all the little windows closed, and the hurrying and banging about are indescribable. The atmosphere is detestable, and the motion often all but intolerable. However, we got our dinner here at eight o'clock, and plucked up a little, and I made some hot gin punch to drink a merry Christmas to all at home in. But it must be confessed that we were both very dull. I have been in bed all day until two o'clock, and here I am now (at three o'clock) a little better. But I am not fit to read, and I must read to-night. †aAfter watching the general character pretty closely, I became quite sure that Dolby was wrong on the length of the stay and the number of readings we had proposed in this place. I am quite certain that it is one of the national peculiarities that what they want must be difficult of attainment. I therefore a few days ago made a coup d'état, and altered the whole scheme. We shall go to Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, also some New England towns between Boston and this place, away to the falls of Niagara, and off far west to Chicago and St. Louis, before coming back for ten farewell readings here, preceded by farewells at Boston, leaving Canada altogether. This will not prolong the list beyond eighty-four readings, the exact original number, and [I] will, please God, work it all out in April. In my next, I daresay, I shall be able to send the exact list, so that you may know every day where we are.†a There has been a great storm here for a few days, and the streets, though wet, are becoming passable again. Dolby and Osgood are out in it to-day on a variety of business, and left in grave and solemn state.†1 Scott and the gasman are stricken with dumb concern, not having received one single letter from home since they left. What their wives can have done with the letters they take it for granted they have written, is their stormy speculation at the door of my hall dressing-room every night.

If I do not send a letter to Katie by this mail, it will be because I shall probably be obliged to go across the water to Brooklyn to-morrow to see a church, in which it is proposed that I shall read!!!†2 Horrible visions of being put in the pulpit already beset me. And whether the audience will be in pews is another consideration which greatly disturbs my mind.†3 No paper ever comes out without a leader on Dolby, who of course reads them all, and never can understand why I don't, in which he is called all the bad names in (and not in) the language.

We always call him P. H. Dolby†4 now, in consequence of one of these graceful specimens of literature describing him as the "pudding-headed."

I fear that when we travel he will have to be always before me, so that I may not see him six times in as many weeks. However, I shall have done a fourth of the whole this very next week!

Best love to your aunt, and the boys, and Katie, and Charley, and all true friends.

Friday.

I managed to read last night, but it was as much as I could do. To-day I am so very unwell, that I have sent for a doctor;[†1] he has just been, and is in doubt whether I shall not have to stop reading for a while.[†2]

To J. T. FIELDS, 29 DECEMBER 1867

MS Dartmouth College, New Hampshire.

Westminster Hotel, New York
Sunday Twenty Ninth December, 1867

My Dear Fields

When I come to Boston for the 2 Readings of the 6th. and 7th. I shall be alone, as Dolby must be selling elsewhere. If you and Mrs. Fields should have no other visitor, I shall be very glad indeed on this occasion to come to you.[†3] It is very likely that you may have some one with you. Of course you will tell me so if you have, and I will then re-embellish the Parker House.

Since I left Boston last, I have been so unwell that I have been obliged to call in a Dr. — Dr. Fordyce Barker,[†4] a very agreeable fellow. He was strongly inclined to stop the Readings altogether for some few days, but I pointed out to him how we stood committed, and how I must go on if it could be done. My great terror was yesterday's Matinée, but it went off splendidly.[†5] [†a][A very heavy cold indeed, an irritated condition of the uvula, and a restlessly low state of the nervous system, were your friend's maladies. If I had not avoided visiting, I think I should have been disabled for a week or so.][†a]

I hear from London that the general question in society, is, what will be blown up next by the Fenians.[†6]

With love to Mrs. Fields, Believe me Ever affectionately Yours And hers

CHARLES DICKENS

To LESTER WALLACK, 29 DECEMBER 1867*

MS Houghton Library, Harvard.

Westminster Hotel New York
Twenty Ninth December 1867

Dear Mr. Wallack

The packet posted at Boston which failed to reach you until yesterday, contained the 5th. Act of the Play and a note from me, asking you to let me know by the 26th. whether you meant to produce it or not, on the terms I had mentioned to you. I sent you the note in question because we did not seem to me to have advanced towards any conclusion, and because I wished you to understand that I had not the slightest thought of pressing the play upon you.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Lester Wallack Esquire

It was to the note in the packet that Mr. Dolby's[†1] referred.

To MISS MARY DICKENS, 30 DECEMBER 1867

Extract in MDGH, II, 324-5.

Westminster Hotel, Irving Place, New York, | Monday, Dec. 30th, 1867.

I am getting all right again. I have not been well, been very low, and have been obliged to have a doctor; a very agreeable fellow indeed, who soon turned out to be an old friend of Olliffe's.[†2] He has set me on my legs and taken his leave "professionally," though he means to give me a call now and then.

In the library at Gad's is a bound book, "Remarkable Criminal Trials," translated by Lady Duff Gordon, from the original by Feuerbach.[†3] I want that book, and a copy of Praed's poems,[†4] to be sent out to Boston, care of Ticknor and Fields. If you will give the "Criminal Trials" to Wills, and explain my wish, and ask him to buy a copy of Praed's poems and add it to the parcel, he will know how to send the packet out. I think the "Criminal Trials" book is in the corner book-case, by the window, opposite the door.

No news here. All going on in the regular way. I read in that church I told you of, about the middle of January. It is wonderfully seated for two thousand people, and is as easy to speak in as if they were two hundred. The people are seated in pews, and we let the pews. I stood on a small platform from which the pulpit will be removed for the occasion!! I emerge from the vestry!!! Philadelphia, Baltimore, and another two nights in Boston will follow this coming month of January. On Friday next I shall have read a fourth of my whole list, besides having had twelve days' holiday when I first came out. So please God I shall soon get to the half, and so begin to work hopefully round.

I suppose you were at the Adelphi on Thursday night last.[†1] They are pirating the bill as well as the play here, everywhere. I have registered the play as the property of an American citizen,[†2] but the law is by no means clear that I established a right in it by so doing; and of course the pirates knew very well that I could not, under existing circumstances, try the question with them in an American court of law. Nothing is being played here scarcely that is not founded on my books — "Cricket," "Oliver Twist," "Our Mutual Friend," and I don't know what else, every night.[†3] I can't get down Broadway for my own portrait; and yet I live almost as quietly in this hotel, as if I were at the office, and go in and out by a side door just as I might there.

I go back to Boston on Saturday to read there on Monday and Tuesday. Then I am back here, and keep within six or seven hours' journey of hereabouts till February. My further movements shall be duly reported as the details are arranged.

I shall be curious to know who were at Gad's Hill on Christmas Day, and how you (as they say in this country) "got along." It is exceedingly cold here again, after two or three quite spring days.

To LESTER WALLACK, 30 DECEMBER 1867*

MS Houghton Library, Harvard.

Monday Thirtieth December 1867

My Dear Mr. Wallack

By all means you shall have the play back. It shall be left under cover at the Theatre by 2 o'Clock to day.

In haste. | Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS ELLEN TERNAN, [30 DECEMBER 1867]

Mention in next. Date: no doubt written same day.

To W. H. WILLS, 30 DECEMBER 1867†

MS Huntington Library.

Westminster Hotel, Irving Place, New York
Monday Thirtieth December, 1867

My Dear Wills.

†a Another letter for my Darling, enclosed. †a

Yours dated on the publishing day,†1 gives glorious tidings of the Xmas No. But somehow I am not sanguine about the play. I don't see it, as I read it. It may be my mood, or my anxiety, or I know not what else; but I don't see it rush on to its end in a spirited manner.

I have not been well, and have been obliged to call in a Doctor; but am very greatly better — all right, in fact. A tonic seems to do me a deal of good.

All right about Plorn. By the Lord, he ought to be a first rate settler after all his cramming:—

— Blazing away here, after more tremendous blazing in Boston (where they went absolutely mad with Copperfield) and previous to blazing in Philadelphia, Brooklyn, and Baltimore. Those places, this, and Boston for another 2 nights, will occupy this coming month of January. At Brooklyn I read in Mister Ward Beecher's[†2] Church[†3] (wonderfully seated for 2,000) with the audience in veritable pews! I went to look at it the other day, and found myself in a comically incongruous position. It is the only building suitable to the purpose in the town.

Many happy New Years to you, old fellow. And to Mrs. Wills with my love.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To CHARLES ELIOT NORTON, 31 DECEMBER 1867*

MS Houghton Library, Harvard. Address: Professor Charles Eliot Norton | Cambridge | Mass.

Westminster Hotel, New York | New Years Eve 1867

My Dear Norton

I have been so unwell these last few days, that I have not even been able to thank you for your most welcome Christmas gift.[†4] I cannot tell you how I shall prize it, or with what affectionate remembrances of you it will be associated, when my glance rests upon it in its place on my shelves at Gad's Hill.

Many happy Years to you and all who are dearest to you!

Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS CHARLES ELIOT NORTON, 31 DECEMBER 1867

MS Houghton Library, Harvard.

Westminster Hotel, New York | New Year's Eve, 1867

My Dear Mrs. Norton

Your kind note and pretty mark of remembrance[†1] brightened a very dull Christmas Day on the Railroad, and did me quite as much good as the Doctor when I was afterwards unwell. Thank you heartily.

It would be delightful to me to come to you again, but I see no present hope of it. I dine with Fields next Sunday, read on Monday and Tuesday, and rush back here on Wednesday. This episodical life of mine, while it lasts, is always mere bondage.

With the best wishes of the time for many years of happiness for you and yours, Believe me always

Faithfully Your friend

CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Norton

To UNKNOWN LADY OF CHARLESTOWN,[†2] [LATE 1867]

Mention in E. F. Payne, Dickens Days in Boston, p. 204. Date: during his Boston readings.

Sympathetically acknowledging her note that, being paralyzed, she could not walk, and arranging that the doors of Tremont Temple be opened for her earlier than the advertised time; and presenting her with complimentary tickets.

To W. S. TROOD,[†3] [1866-7]

MS (Georgina Hogarth's hand) Private. Date: card slipped into small account-book covering the years 1866-7.[†4]

Mr Charles Dickens begs Mr Trood to send 2 Dozen Pints of Bottled Stout to Mrs Marsh[†5] and enter them in Mr Dickens' Book. Gad's Hill Place, Higham by Rochester.

Addendum

To GEORGE DOLBY AND J. R. OSGOOD, [?25 NOVEMBER 1867]

Telegram metioned[[sic]] in To Miss Hogarth, 25 November.

Volume XII

1867 – 1870

1868

January

To GEORGE W. CHILDS,[†1] 2 JANUARY 1868

MS Historical Society of Philadelphia (Dreer Collection). Address: George W Childs Esquire | Public Ledger Office | Philadelphia. PM New York Jan 3.

Westminster Hotel, New York | Second January 1868

My Dear Sir

I hasten to let you know that the second article of intelligence you kindly send me this morning is altogether baseless. My daughter had no more to do with Aunt Margaret's Trouble, or Mabel's Progress, than you had.[†2]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS KATE FIELD,[†3] 3 JANUARY 1868

MS Boston Public Library.

Westminster Hotel, New York
Friday Third January 1868

My Dear Miss Kate Field

I entreat you to accept my most cordial thanks for your charming New Year's present. If you could know what pleasure it yielded me, you would be almost repaid even for your delicate and sympathetic kindness.

But I must avow that nothing in the pretty basket of flowers was quite so interesting to me as a certain bright fresh face I have seen at my Readings, which I am told you may see too when you look in the glass.

With all good wishes | Believe me
Always faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Kate Field

To JOHN FORSTER,[†1] [3 JANUARY 1868]

Extract in F, x, ii, 776-7. Date: 3 Jan 68, according to Forster.

We try to withhold the best seats from the speculators, but the unaccountable thing is that the great mass of the public buy of them (prefer it), and the rest of the public are injured if we have not got those very seats to sell them. We have now a travelling staff of six men, in spite of which Dolby[†2] who is leaving me today to sell tickets in Philadelphia to-morrow morning, will no doubt get into a tempest of difficulties. Of course also, in such a matter, as many obstacles as possible are thrown in an Englishman's way; and he may himself be a little injudicious into the bargain. Last night, for instance, he met one of the "ushers" (who show people to their seats) coming in with one of our men. It is against orders that any one employed in front should go out during the reading, and he took this man to task in the British manner. Instantly, the free and independent usher put on his hat and walked off. Seeing which, all the other free and independent ushers (some 20 in number) put on their hats and walked off; leaving us absolutely devoid and destitute of a staff for to-night. One has since been improvised: but it was a small matter to raise a stir and ill-will about, especially as one of our men was equally in fault; and really there is little to be done at night. American people are so accustomed to take care of themselves, that one of these immense audiences will fall into their places with an ease amazing to a frequenter of St. James's Hall; and the certainty with which they are all in, before I go on, is a very acceptable mark of respect. Our great labour is outside; and we have been obliged to bring our staff up to six, besides a boy or two, by employment of a regular additional clerk, a Bostonian. The speculators buying the front-seats (we have found instances of this being done by merchants in good position), the public won't have the back seats; return their tickets; write and print volumes on the subject; and deter others from coming. You are not to suppose that this prevails to any great extent, as our lowest house here has been £300; but it does hit us. There is no doubt about it. Fortunately I saw the danger when the trouble began, and changed the list at the right time. . . . You may get an idea of the staff's work, by what is in hand now. They are preparing, numbering, and stamping, 6000 tickets for Philadelphia, and 8000 tickets for Brooklyn. The moment those are done, another 8000 tickets will be wanted for Baltimore, and probably another 6000 for Washington; and all this in addition to the correspondence, advertisements, accounts, travelling, and the nightly business of the Readings four times a week. . . . I cannot get rid of this intolerable cold! My landlord invented for me a drink of brandy, rum, and snow, called it a "Rocky Mountain Sneezer," and said it was to put down all less effectual sneezing; but it has not yet had the effect. Did I tell you that the favourite drink before you get up is an Eye-Opener? There has been another fall of snow, succeeded by a heavy thaw.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 3 JANUARY 1868

Text from MDGH, II, 327-30.

Westminster Hotel, Irving Place, New York
Friday, Jan 3rd, 1868.

My Dearest Georgy,

†a I received yours of the 19th from Gad's and the office this morning. I read here to-night, and go back to Boston to-morrow, to read there Monday, and Tuesday.†a

To-night, I read out the first quarter of my list. Our houses have been very fine here, but have never quite recovered the Dolby uproar. It seems impossible to devise any scheme for getting the tickets into the people's hands, without the intervention of speculators. The people will not help themselves; and, of course, the speculators and all other such prowlers throw as great obstacles in Dolby's way (an Englishman's) as they possibly can. He may be a little injudicious into the bargain. Last night, for instance, he met one of the "ushers" (who show people to their seats) coming in with Kelly.†1 It is against orders that anyone employed in front should go out during the readings, and he took this man to task in the British manner. Instantly the free and independent usher put on his hat and walked off. Seeing which, all the other free and independent ushers (some twenty in number) put on their hats and walked off, leaving us absolutely devoid and destitute of a staff for to-night. One has since been improvised; but it was a small matter to raise a stir and ill will about, especially as one of our men was equally in fault.

We have a regular clerk, a Bostonian whose name is Wild.†2 He, Osgood,†3 Dolby, Kelly, Scott,†4 George the gas-man,†5 and perhaps a boy or two, constitute my body-guard. It seems a large number of people, but the business cannot, be done with fewer. The speculators buying the front seats to sell at a premium (and we have found instances of this being done by merchants in good position!), and the public perpetually pitching into Dolby for selling them back seats, the result is that they won't have the back-seats, send back their tickets, write and print volumes on the subject, and deter others from coming.

†a You may get an idea of the staff's work, by what is in hand now. They are preparing, numbering, and stamping six thousand tickets for Philadelphia, and eight thousand tickets for Brooklyn. The moment those are done, another eight thousand tickets will be wanted for Baltimore, and probably another six thousand for Washington. This in addition to the correspondence, advertisements, accounts, travellings, and the mighty business of the reading four times a week.

The Cunard steamers being now removed from Halifax, I have decided not to go there, or to St. John's, New Brunswick. And as there would be a perfect uproar if I picked out such a place in Canada as Quebec or Montreal, and excluded those two places (which would guarantee three hundred pounds a night), and further, as I don't want places, having more than enough for my list of eighty-four, I have finally resolved not to go to Canada either. This will enable me to embark for home in April instead of May.†a

Tell Plorn,[†1] with my love, that I think he will find himself much interested at that college,[†2] and that it is very likely he may make some acquaintances there that will thereafter be pleasant and useful to him. Sir Sydney Dacres[†3] is the best of friends. I have a letter from Mrs. Hulkes[†4] by this post, wherein the boy[†5] encloses a violet, now lying on the table before me. Let her know that it arrived safely, and retaining its colour. I took it for granted that Mary would have asked Chorley[†6] for Christmas Day, and am very glad she ultimately did so.[†7] I am sorry that Harry[†8] lost his prize,[†9] but believe it was not his fault.
Let him know that, with my love. I would have written to him by this mail in answer to his, but for other occupation. Did I tell you that my landlord made me a drink (brandy, rum, and snow the principal ingredients) called a "Rocky Mountain sneezer"?[†10] Or that the favourite drink before you get up is an "eye-opener"? Or that Roberts (second[†11] landlord), no sooner saw me on the night of the first fire,[†12] than, with his property blazing, he insisted on taking me down into a roomful of hot smoke to drink brandy and water with him? We have not been on fire again, by-the-bye, more than once.

There has been another fall of snow, succeeded by a heavy thaw. I have laid down my sledge, and taken up my carriage again, in consequence. I am nearly all right, but cannot get rid of an intolerable cold in the head. No more news.

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To JOHN FORSTER, [5 JANUARY 1868]

Extracts in F, x, ii, 777-8. Date: 5 Jan 68, according to Forster.

I am to read here on Monday and Tuesday, return to New York on Wednesday, and finish there (except the farewells in April) on Thursday and Friday. The New York reading of Doctor Marigold made really a tremendous hit.[†13] The people doubted at first, having evidently not the least idea what could be done with it, and broke out at last into a perfect chorus of delight. At the end they made a great shout, and gave a rush towards the platform as if they were going to carry me off. It puts a strong additional arrow into my quiver. Another extraordinary success has been Nickleby and Boots at the Holly Tree (appreciated here in Boston, by the by, even more than Copperfield); and think of our last New York night bringing £500 English into the house, after making more than the necessary deduction for the present price of gold! The manager is always going about with an immense bundle that looks like a sofa-cushion, but is in reality paper-money, and it had risen to the proportions of a sofa on the morning he left for Philadelphia. Well, the work is hard, the climate is hard, the life is hard: but so far the gain is enormous. My cold steadily refuses to stir an inch. It distresses me greatly at times, though it is always good enough to leave me for the needful two hours. I have tried allopathy,[†1] homœopathy, cold things, warm things, sweet things, bitter things, stimulants, narcotics, all with the same result. Nothing will touch it.

At Brooklyn I am going to read in Mr. Ward Beecher's[†2] chapel: the only building there available for the purpose. You must understand that Brooklyn is a kind of sleeping-place for New York, and is supposed to be a great place in the money way. We let the seats pew by pew! the pulpit is taken down for my screen and gas! and I appear out of the vestry in canonical form! These ecclesiastical entertainments come off on the evenings of the 16th, 17th, 20th, and 21st of the present month.

To MISS FELTON,[†3] 7 JANUARY 1868*

MS Houghton Library, Harvard.

Boston Tuesday Seventh January 1868

My Dear Miss Felton

Most unfortunately, your note and its accompanying flowers did not arrive at the Parker House here, until I had left it for New York. Consequently I did not get either until last Sunday. I cannot tell you with what present delight and affectionate remembrance I see the spirit of your dear father in your earnest words,[†4] as I saw it in your face when we met—like old friends—at Cambridge.

Accept my cordial thanks, and best wishes for many Happy years to you and yours.

Faithfully Your friend

CHARLES DICKENS

To THE REV. CHAUNCY HARE TOWNSHEND,[†1] EARLY JANUARY 1868

Mention in To Mary Dickens, 31 Jan 68. Date: written "weeks ago".

To LESTER WALLACK,[†2] 9 JANUARY [1868]

Extract in Carnegie Book Shop catalogue No. 108; MS 1 p.; dated Westminster Hotel, 9 Jan [68], misdated 1869, but address and subject make 1868 certain; addressed Lester Wallack.

I have been almost [continuously][†3] at Boston. In reply to your note received, let me beg you to be so good as to send me the play[†4] back, and so make an end of the matter.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 10 JANUARY 1868*

MS Huntington Library.

Westminster Hotel, New York
Friday Tenth January 1868

My Dearest Georgy

I cannot remember whether I wrote last to you or Dear Mamie. Never mind. This is merely to give one business instruction, and to add that I will write a letter by next Wednesday's Mail.

Draw a cheque for £1,000 in favor of W. H. Wills[†5] Esqre. and let him have it at once.[†6] He has my instructions how to invest the money.[†7]

I am quite well, thank God, and everything is most prosperous. We could not[†8] be doing better. Dolby's love. He is just going off to Chicago to look about him. It is only Twelve Hundred miles from here!

With best love to Mamie, boys, and all.

Ever Your most affectionate | My Dearest Georgy

CD.

To EDWIN F. COLE,[†9] 11 JANUARY 1868

Mention in American Art Association catalogue, May 1928; MS 1 p.; dated Westminster Hotel, New York, 11 Jan 68; addressed Edwin F. Cole.

Accepting an invitation.

— XII - 7 —

To J. G. WILSON,[†1] 11 JANUARY 1868

Text from J. G. Wilson, The Life and Letters of Fitz-Greene Halleck, New York, 1869, p. 439.

Westminster Hotel, New York | Saturday 11th, January, 1868.

My Dear Sir.

I thank you cordially for your considerate kindness in sending me the enclosed note.[†2] I have read it with the greatest interest, and have always retained a delightful recollection of its amiable and accomplished writer.[†3]

I too had hoped to meet him! My dear Irving[†4] being dead, there was scarcely anyone in America whom I so looked forward to seeing again as our old friend often thought of.[†5]

Dear sir, | Yours faithfully and obliged,

CHARLES DICKENS.

To WILKIE COLLINS,[†6] 12 JANUARY 1868

MS Morgan Library.

Westminster Hotel, New York, | Sunday Twelfth January 1868.

My Dear Wilkie

First, of the Play.[†7] I am truly delighted to learn that it made so great a success, and I hope I may yet see it on the Adelphi boards. You have had a world of trouble and work with it, but I hope will be repaid in some degree by the pleasure of a triumph. Even for the alteration at the end of the 4th Act (of which you tell me, in your letter received yesterday) I was fully prepared, for I COULD NOT see the original effect, in the Reading, of the play, and COULD NOT make it go. I agree with Webster[†8] in thinking it best that Obenreizer should die on the stage,[†9] but no doubt that point is disposed of. In reading the play before the representation, I felt that it was too long, and that there was a good deal of unnecessary explanation. Those points are, no doubt, disposed of too by this time.

We shall do nothing with it on this side. First of all, Mr. Wallack (as far as he is concerned) is a duffer and a player of fast and loose. Secondly, pirates are producing their own wretched versions in all directions: thus (as Wills would say) anticipating and glutting "the market". I registered our play as the property of Ticknor and Fields, American citizens.[†1] But, besides that the law on the point is extremely doubtful, the Manager of the Museum Theatre, Boston, instantly announced his version.[†2] [You may suppose what it is, and how it is done, when I tell you that it was playing within 10 days of the arrival out, of the Xmas No.][†3] Hereupon, Ticknor and Fields gave him notice that he mustn't play it.[†4] Unto which he replied that he meant to play it and would play it. Of course he knew very well that if an injunction were applied for against him, there would be an immediate howl against my persecution of an Innocent, and he did play it. Then the noble host of pirates rushed in, and it is being done, in some mangled form or other, everywhere.

On getting your letter yesterday I immediately went (I had not gone sooner, for a reason) to Harpers, and was fortunate enough to find Mr. Joseph Harper, the best of the Firm.[†5] To him I stated the case from your letter. He received it in the very best manner, and delicately objected that Six weeks in advance was practically too short a time for their Illustrators, but that if you would not object so to instruct those Illustrators as to let them know the thread of the story in advance of the six weeks, and give them a sketch of salient points beforehand, it would be all right and well. Of course they would bind themselves to rigid and absolute secrecy. I replied that I had no doubt you would meet their wishes in this regard, and that I would at once write to you on the point. Very likely they will write to you too, by this mail. You may make your mind quite easy that with this concession on your part, your agreement with them is all right.[†6] Mr. Joseph Harper praised highly what he had read of the story (i.e.—all they have), and decidedly gave me the impression that he was liberally disposed and on the square. Indeed, I have not the least doubt of it.

It touches me to read what you write of your poor mother.[†7] But of course at her age, each winter counts heavily. Do give her my love, and tell her that I asked you about her.

I am going on here at the same great rate, but am always counting the days that lie between me and home. I got through the first fourth of my Readings on Friday January third. I leave for two Readings at Philadelphia this evening. Dolby (who is obliged to go on in advance of me) is going to take a little journey of fifteen hundred miles, one of these odd evenings, "to look over the ground and cut back again." He will go away on this trip to Chicago by railroad, exactly as if he were going a shilling fare by cab.

Being at Boston last Sunday,[†1] I took it in my head to go over the Medical School, and survey the holes and corners in which that extraordinary murder was done by Webster.[†2] There was the furnace—stinking horribly, as if the dismembered pieces were still inside it—and there were all the grim spouts and sinks and chemical appliances and what not. At dinner afterwards, Longfellow[†3] told me a terrific story. He dined with Webster within a year of the murder, one of a party of 10 or 12. As they sat at their wine Webster suddenly ordered the lights to be turned out, and a bowl of some burning mineral to be placed on the table, that the guests might see how ghostly it made them look. As each man stared at all the rest in the weird light, all were horrified to see Webster with a rope round his neck, holding it up, over the bowl, with his head jerked on one side, and his tongue lolled out, representing a man being hanged!

Poking into his life and character, I find (what I would have staked my head upon) that he was always a cruel man.

So no more at present from

My Dear Wilkie | Yours ever affecy
CHARLES DICKENS

Of course I will yet see Mr. Barrett,[†4] if he turns up in the same mind.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 12 JANUARY 1868

Extracts in MDGH, II, 334-6 and F, x, ii, 778 [a].

Westminster Hotel, New York | Sunday, Jan. 12th, 1868.

As I am off to Philadelphia this evening, [a] for the first of those visits of two nights each, tickets for all being sold,[a] I may as well post my letter here. I have scarcely a word of news. My cold steadily refuses to leave me; but otherwise I am as right as one can hope to be under this heavy work. My New York readings are over (except four farewell nights in April), and I look forward to the relief of being out of my hardest hall. Last Friday night, though it was only "Nickleby" and "Boots," I was again dead beat at the end, and was once more laid upon a sofa. But the faintness went off after a little while. We have now cold, bright, frosty weather, without snow—the best weather for me.

Having been in great trepidation about the play, I am correspondingly elated by the belief that it really is a success. No doubt the unnecessary explanations will have been taken out, and the flatness of the last act fetched up. At some points I could have done wonders to it, in the way of screwing it up sharply and picturesquely, if I could have rehearsed it. Your account of the first night interested me immensely, but I was afraid to open the letter until Dolby rushed in with the opened Times.

On Wednesday I come back here for my four church readings at Brooklyn. Each evening an enormous ferry-boat will convey me and my state carriage (not to mention half-a-dozen waggons, and any number of people, and a few score of horses) across the river, and will bring me back again. The sale of tickets there was an amazing scene. The noble army of speculators are now furnished (this is literally true, and I am quite serious), each man with a straw mattress, a little bag of bread and meat, two blankets, and a bottle of whisky. With this outfit they lie down in line on the pavement the whole night before the tickets are sold, generally taking up their position at about ten. It being severely cold at Brooklyn, they made an immense bonfire in the street—a narrow street of wooden houses!— which the police turned out to extinguish. A general fight then took place, out of which the people farthest off in the line rushed bleeding when they saw a chance of displacing others near the door, and put their mattresses in those places, and then held on by the iron rails. At eight in the morning Dolby appeared with the tickets in a portmanteau. He was immediately saluted with a roar of "Halloa, Dolby! So Charley has let you have the carriage, has he, Dolby! How is he, Dolby! Don't drop the tickets, Dolby! Look alive, Dolby!" etc. etc. etc., in the midst of which he proceeded to business, and concluded (as usual) by giving universal dissatisfaction.

†b He is now going off upon a little journey "to look over the ground and cut back again." This little journey (to Chicago) is fifteen hundred miles on end, by railway, and back again!†b

We have an excellent gasman, who is well up to that department. We have enlarged the large staff by another clerk, yet even now the preparation of such an immense number of new tickets constantly, and the keeping and checking of the accounts, keep them hard at it. And they get so oddly divided! Kelly is at Philadelphia, another man at Baltimore, two others are stamping tickets at the top of this house, another is cruising over New England, and Osgood will come on duty to-morrow (when Dolby starts off) to pick me up after the reading, and take me to the hotel, and mount guard over me, and bring me back here. You see that even such wretched domesticity as Dolby and self by a fireside is broken up under these conditions.

Dolby has been twice poisoned, and Osgood once. Morgan's†1 sharpness has discovered the cause. When the snow is deep upon the ground, and the partridges cannot get their usual food, they eat something (I don't know what, if anybody does) which does not poison them, but which poisons the people who eat them. The symptoms, which last some twelve hours, are violent sickness, cold perspiration, and the formation of some detestable mucus in the stomach. You may infer that partridges have been banished from our bill of fare. The appearance of our sufferers was lamentable in the extreme.

Did I tell you that the severity of the weather, and the heat of the intolerable furnaces, dry the hair and break the nails of strangers? There is not a complete nail in the whole British suite, and my hair cracks again when I brush it. (I am losing my hair with great rapidity, and what I don't lose is getting very grey.)

†b The Cuba will bring this. She has a jolly new captain—Moody, of the Java— and her people rushed into the reading, the other night, captain-headed, as if I were their peculiar property. Please God I shall come home in her, in my old cabin; leaving here on the 22nd of April, and finishing my eighty-fourth reading on the previous night! It is likely enough that I shall read and go straight on board.†b

I think this is all my poor stock of intelligence. By-the-bye, on the last Sunday in the old year, I lost my old year's pocket-book,†1 "which" as Mr. Pepys would add, "do trouble me mightily." †b Give me Katie's new address; I haven't got it.†b

To HENRY CHORLEY, [? 13 JANUARY 1868]

Mention in To Mary Dickens, 13 Jan 68. Date: probably written same day.

To MISS MARY DICKENS, 13 JANUARY 1868

Extract in MDGH, II, 337-8.†2

Philadelphia, Monday, Jan. 13th, 1868.

I write you this note, a day later than your aunt's, not because I have anything to add to the little I have told her, but because you may like to have it.

We arrived here last night towards twelve o'clock, more than an hour after our time. This is one of the immense American hotels (it is called the Continental); but I find myself just as quiet here as elsewhere. Everything is very good indeed, the waiter is German, and the greater part of the house servants seem to be coloured people. The town is very clean, and the day as blue and bright as a fine Italian day. But it freezes very hard. †a All the tickets being sold here for six nights (three visits of two nights each), the suite complain of want of excitement already, having been here ten hours! †a Mr. and Mrs. Barney Williams,†3 with a couple of servants, and a pretty little child-daughter, were in the train each night, and I talked with them a good deal. They are reported to have made an enormous fortune by acting among the Californian gold-diggers.†1 My cold is no better, for the cars are so intolerably hot, that I was often obliged to go and stand upon the brake outside, and then the frosty air was biting indeed. The great man of this place is one Mr. Childs, a newspaper proprietor, †a and he is so exactly like Mr. Esse†2 in all conceivable respects except being an inch or so taller, that I was quite confounded when I saw him†a waiting for me at the station (always called depôt here) with his carriage. During the last two or three days, Dolby and I have been making up accounts, which are excellently kept by Mr. Osgood, and I find them amazing, quite, in their results.

I was very much interested in the home accounts of Christmas Day. I think I have already mentioned that we were in very low spirits on that day. I began to be unwell with my cold that morning, and a long day's travel did not mend the matter. We scarcely spoke (except when we ate our lunch), and sat dolefully staring out of window. I had a few affectionate words from Chorley, dated from my room, on Christmas morning, and will write him, probably by this mail, a brief acknowledgement. I find it necessary (so oppressed am I with this American can catarrh, as they call it) to dine at three o'clock instead of four, that I may have more time to get voice, so that the days are cut short, and letter-writing is not easy.

My best love to Katie, and to Charley,†3 and to our Charley, and to all friends. If I could only get to the point of being able to hold my head up and dispense with my pocket-handkerchief for five minutes, I should be all right.

To LORD LYTTON,†4 [? 13 JANUARY 1868]

Text from N, III, 591 (where wrongly dated Dec 67). Date: no doubt on receiving Edwin Booth's[†5] letter to him declining Lytton's play, with delicacy, dated 12 Jan, and enclosing it;[†6] and shortly after describing the same dinner at Webster's house as he had described to Collins on 12 Jan.

Being in Cambridge, I thought I would go over the Medical school, and see the exact localities where Professor Webster did that amazing murder, and worked so hard to rid himself of the body of the murdered man. (I find there is of course no rational doubt that the Professor was always a secretly cruel man.) They were horribly grim, private, cold, and quiet; the identical furnace smelling fearfully

(some anatomical broth in it I suppose) as if the body were still there; jars of pieces of sour mortality standing about, like the forty robbers in Ali Baba after being scalded to death; and bodies near us ready to be carried in to next morning's lecture. At the house where I afterwards dined I heard an amazing and fearful story; told by one who had been at a dinner-party of ten or a dozen, at Webster's, less than a year before the murder.[†1] They began rather uncomfortably, in consequence of one of the guests (the victim of an instinctive antipathy) starting up with the sweat pouring down his face, and crying out, "O Heaven! There's a cat somewhere in the room!" The cat was found and ejected, but they didn't get on very well. Left with their wine, they were getting on a little better; when Webster suddenly told the servants to turn the gas off and bring in that bowl of burning minerals which he had prepared, in order that the company might see how ghastly they looked by its weird light. All this was done, and every man was looking, horror-stricken, at his neighbour; when Webster was seen bending over the bowl with a rope round his neck, holding up the end of the rope, with his head on one side and his tongue lolled out, to represent a hanged man!

To JOHN FORSTER, [14 JANUARY 1868]

Extracts in F, III, viii, 286-287 and x, ii, 779-81. Date: both extracts 14 Jan 68, according to Forster.

I see great changes for the better, socially. Politically, no. England governed by the Marylebone vestry[†2] and the penny papers, and England as she would be after years of such governing; is what I make of that. Socially, the change in manners is remarkable. There is much greater politeness and forbearance in all ways ... On the other hand there are still provincial oddities wonderfully quizzical; and the newspapers are constantly expressing the popular amazement at "Mr. Dickens's extraordinary composure." They seem to take it ill that I don't stagger on to the platform overpowered by the spectacle before me, and the national greatness. They are all so accustomed to do public things with a flourish of trumpets, that the notion of my coming in to read without somebody first flying up and delivering an "Oration" about me, and flying down again and leading me in, is so very unaccountable to them, that sometimes they have no idea until I open my lips that it can possibly be Charles Dickens.

The Irish element is acquiring such enormous influence in New York city, that when I think of it, and see the large Roman Catholic cathedral rising there,[†3] it seems unfair to stigmatise as "American" other monstrous things that one also sees. But the general corruption in respect of the local funds appears to be stupendous, and there is an alarming thing as to some of the courts of law which I am afraid is native-born.

A case came under my notice the other day in which it was perfectly plain, from what was said to me by a person interested in resisting an injunction, that his first proceeding had been to "look up the Judge." ... Last night here in Philadelphia (my first night), a very impressible and responsive audience were so astounded by my simply walking in and opening my book that I wondered what was the matter. They evidently thought that there ought to have been a flourish, and Dolby sent in to prepare for me. With them it is the simplicity of the operation that raises wonder. With the newspapers "Mr. Dickens's extraordinary composure" is not reasoned out as being necessary to the art of the thing, but is sensitively watched with a lurking doubt whether it may not imply disparagement of the audience. Both these things strike me as drolly expressive.

I think it reasonable to expect that as I go westward, I shall find the old manners going on before me, and may tread upon their skirts mayhap. But so far, I have had no more intrusion or boredom than I have when I lead the same life in England. I write this in an immense hotel, but I am as much at peace in my own rooms, and am left as wholly undisturbed, as if I were at the Station Hotel in York. I have now read in New York city to 40,000 people, and am quite as well known in the streets there as I am in London. People will turn back, turn again and face me, and have a look at me, or will say to one another "Look here! Dickens coming!" But no one ever stops me or addresses me. Sitting reading in the carriage outside the New York post-office while one of the staff was stamping the letters inside, I became conscious that a few people who had been looking at the turn-out had discovered me within. On my peeping out good-humouredly, one of them (I should say a merchant's book-keeper) stepped up to the door, took off his hat, and said in a frank way: "Mr. Dickens, I should very much like to have the honour of shaking hands with you"—and, that done, presented two others. Nothing could be more quiet or less intrusive. In the railway cars, if I see anybody who clearly wants to speak to me, I usually anticipate the wish by speaking myself. If I am standing on the brake outside (to avoid the intolerable stove), people getting down will say with a smile: "As I am taking my departure, Mr. Dickens, and can't trouble you for more than a moment, I should like to take you by the hand sir." And so we shake hands and go our ways.... Of course many of my impressions come through the readings. Thus I find the people lighter and more humorous than formerly; and there must be a great deal of innocent imagination among every class, or they never could pet with such extraordinary pleasure as they do, the Boots' story of the elopement of the two little children. They seem to see the children; and the women set up a shrill undercurrent of half-pity and half-pleasure that is quite affecting. To-night's reading is my 26th; but as all the Philadelphia tickets for four more are sold, as well as four at Brooklyn, you must assume that I am at—say—my 35th reading. I have remitted to Coutts's in English gold £10,000 odd; and I roughly calculate that on this number Dolby will have another thousand pounds profit to pay me. These figures are of course between ourselves, at present; but are they not magnificent? The expenses, always recollect, are enormous. On the other hand we never have occasion to print a bill of any sort (bill-printing and posting are great charges at home); and have just now sold off £90 worth of bill-paper, provided beforehand, as a wholly useless incumbrance.

The work is very severe. There is now no chance of my being rid of this American catarrh until I embark for England. It is very distressing. It likewise happens, not seldom, that I am so dead beat when I come off that they lay me down on a sofa after I have been washed and dressed, and I lie there, extremely faint, for a quarter of an hour. In that time I rally and come right.

To CHARLES DICKENS JNR,[†1] 15 JANUARY 1868

Text from MDGH, II, 338-40.

Westminster Hotel, Irving Place, New York.
Wednesday, Jan. 15th, 1868.

My Dear Charley,

Finding your letter here this afternoon on my return from Philadelphia (where I have been reading two nights), I take advantage of a spare half-hour in which to answer it at once, though it will not leave here until Saturday. I had previously heard of the play,[†2] and had The Times.[†3] [†a] It was a great relief and delight to me, for I had no confidence in its success;[†4] being reduced to the confines of despair by its length. If I could have rehearsed it, I should have taken the best part of an hour out of it.[†a] Fechter must be very fine, and I should greatly like to see him play the part.

I have not been very well generally, and am oppressed (and I begin to think that I probably shall be until I leave) by a true American cold, which I hope, for the comfort of human nature, may be peculiar to only one of the four quarters of the world. The work, too, is very severe. But I am going on at the same tremendous rate everywhere. [†a] The staff, too, has had to be enlarged. Dolby was at Baltimore yesterday, is at Washington to-day, and will come back in the night, and start away again on Friday. We find it absolutely necessary for him to go on ahead. We have not printed or posted a single bill here, and have just sold ninety pounds' worth of paper we had got ready for bills. In such a rush a short newspaper advertisement is all we want.[†a] "Doctor Marigold" made a great hit here, and is looked forward to at Boston with especial interest. I go to Boston for another fortnight, on end, the 24th of February. The railway journeys distress me greatly. I get out into the open air (upon the brake[†5]), and it snows and blows, and the train bumps, and the steam flies at me, until I am driven in again.

[†a] I have finished here (except four farewell nights in April), and begin four nights at Brooklyn, on the opposite side of the river, to-night; and thus oscillate between Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Washington, and then cut into New England, and so work my way back to Boston for a fortnight, after which come Chicago, Cincinnati, Detroit and Cleveland, and Buffalo, and then Philadelphia, Boston, and New York farewells.[†a] I will not pass my original bound of eighty-four readings in all. My mind was made up as to that long ago. It will be quite enough. Chicago is some fifteen hundred miles from here. What with travelling, and getting ready for reading, and reading, the days are pretty fully occupied. Not the less so because I rest very indifferently at night.

The people are exceedingly kind and considerate, and desire to be most hospitable besides. But I cannot accept hospitality, and never go out, except at Boston, or I should not be fit for the labour. †a If Dolby holds out well to the last it will be a triumph, for he has to see everybody, drink with everybody, sell all the tickets, take all the blame, and go beforehand to all the places on the list. I shall not see him after to-night for ten days or a fortnight, and he will be perpetually on the road during the interval.†a When he leaves me, Osgood, a partner in Ticknor and Fields' publishing firm, mounts guard over me, and has to go into the hall from the platform door every night, and see how the public are seating themselves. It is very odd to see how hard he finds it to look a couple of thousand people in the face, on which head, by-the-bye, I notice the papers to take "Mr. Dickens's extraordinary composure" (their great phrase) rather ill, and on the whole to imply that it would be taken as a suitable compliment if I would stagger on to the platform and instantly drop, over-powered by the spectacle before me.

Dinner is announced (by Scott, with a stiff neck and a sore throat), and I must break off with love to Bessie†1 and the incipient Wenerableses.†2 You will be glad to hear of your distinguished parent that Philadelphia has discovered that "he is not like the descriptions we have read of him at the little red desk. He is not at all foppish in appearance. He wears a heavy moustache and a Vandyke beard, and looks like a well-to-do Philadelphian gentleman."†3

Ever, my dear Charley, your affectionate Father

[CD.]

P.S.—Your paper is remarkably good.†4 There is not the least doubt that you can write constantly for A. Y. R. I am very pleased with it.

To J. T. FIELDS,†1 15 JANUARY 1868†

MS Huntington Library.

Westminster Hotel, New York
Wednesday Fifteenth January 1868

My Dear Fields

On coming back from Philadelphia just now (3 o'Clock) I was welcomed by your cordial letter. It was a delightful welcome and did me a world of good.

The cold remains just as it was (beastly), and where it was (in my head). We have left off referring to the hateful subject, except in emphatic sniffs on my part, convulsive wheezes, and resounding sneezes.

The Philadelphia audience, ready and bright. I think they understood the Carol better than Copperfield, but they were bright and responsive as to both.†2 They also highly appreciated your friend Mr. Jack Hopkins.†3 A most excellent hotel there, and everything satisfactory. While on the subject of satisfaction, I know you will be pleased to hear that a long run is confidently expected for the No Thoroughfare drama.†4 Although the piece is well cast and well played, my letters tell me that Fechter†5 is so remarkably fine as to play down the whole company. The Times in its account of it said that `Mr. Fechter' (in the Swiss mountain scene, and in the Swiss Hotel) was "practically alone upon the stage".[†6] It is splendidly got up, and the Mountain Pass (I planned it with Grieve[†7] the Scene painter) was loudly cheered by the whole house. Of course I knew that Fechter would tear himself to pieces rather than fall short, but I was not prepared for his contriving to get the pity and sympathy of the audience out of his passionate love for Marguerite.

My dear fellow you cannot miss me more than I miss you and yours. And Heaven knows how gladly I would substitute Boston for Chicago, Detroit, and Co![†8] But the tour is fast shaping itself out into its last details, and we must remember that there is a clear fortnight in Boston, not counting the 4 Farewells. I look forward to that fortnight as a radiant landing-place in the series.

Rash youth! No presumptuous hand should try to make the punch, except in presence of the hoary sage who pens these lines. With him on the spot, to perceive and avert impending failure—with timely words of wisdom to arrest the erring hand and curb the straying judgment—and, with such gentle expressions of encouragement as his stern experience may justify, to cheer the aspirant with faint hopes of future excellence—with these conditions observed, the daring mind may scale the heights of sugar and contemplate the depths of lemon. Otherwise not.

Dolby is at Washington, and will return in the night. Osgood is on guard. He made a most brilliant appearance before the Philadelphia public, and looked hard at them. The mastery of his eye diverted their attention from his boots:— charming in themselves, but (unfortunately) two left ones.

I send my hearty and enduring love to Mrs. Fields.[†1] Her kindness to the British Wanderer is deeply inscribed in his heart.

[†a] Our fair friend Two Shoes[†2] is here with her husband. Dolby describes their apartment as a gloomy cave of wet plaster, unilluminated by a ray of gas. As his lost-bet dinner came off at Delmonico's (a much over-rated place by the bye) last Saturday, he invited Two Shoes and the happy proprietor of that piece of "portable property".[†3] They were engaged elsewhere to dinner. Proprietor of T. S. following Dolby out into the corridor, T.S. deserted a lady-caller, and came forth likewise to urge the "getting off" their engagement and dining with us. Proprietor suddenly turning grim, enunciated these words: "My dear, when I married you I reserved to myself the faculty of doing as I chose. Go back to your friend immediately." [Exit Two Shoes with lofty frown.][†a]

When I think of Longfellow's story about Webster, I feel like the lady in Nickleby who "has had a sensation of alternate cold and biling water running down her back ever since."[†4]

Ever My Dear Fields
Your affectionate Friend
CD.

To EDWIN BOOTH, 18 JANUARY 1868*

MS Library of the Players Club, New York.

Westminster Hotel, New York | Saturday Eighteenth January | 1868

Dear Sir

I beg to acknowledge the safe receipt of Lord Lytton's MS and of your letter.[†5] The last is so perfectly candid and straight-forward that I hold it to be quite unnecessary that you should write to Lord Lytton himself. I will take care to forward your communication to him by the next Mail.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Edwin Booth Esquire

To HENRY CHORLEY, 18 JANUARY 1868

Mention in To Miss Dickens, 18 Jan. Date: written same day.

To CHARLES DICKENS JNR, 18 JANUARY 1868

Mention in next. Date: written same day.

To MISS MARY DICKENS, 18 JANUARY 1868

Extract in MDGH, 11, 341.[†1]

Westminster Hotel, New York, Friday, Jan. 18th, 1868.

This will be but a very short report, as I must get out for a little exercise before dinner.

My "true American catarrh" (the people seem to have a national pride in it) sticks to me, but I am otherwise well. I began my church readings last night, and it was very odd to see the pews crammed full of people, all in a broad roar at the "Carol" and "Trial".

Best love to all. I have written Charley a few lines by this mail, and also Chorley.

To THE HON. ELLIS LEWIS,[†2] 18 JANUARY 1868

Text in N, 111, 606, checked from facsimile on Russian-eagles website, 30 Apr 2001.

Westminster Hotel, New York | Saturday Eighteenth January 1868

My Dear Sir

I have received your kind letter with sincere interest and pleasure, and I beg to thank you for it cordially. The occasion you bring back to my remembrance is as fresh and vivid as though it were of yesterday.[†3] Accept from me the accumulated good wishes of five and twenty years, and believe me, My Dear Sir

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [20 JANUARY 1868]

Extract in F, X, ii, 781. Date: 20 Jan 68, according to Forster.

Horace Greeley[†4] dined with me last Saturday, and didn't like my going to Washington, now full of the greatest rowdies and worst kind of people in the States. Last night at eleven came B.[†5] expressing like doubts; and though they may be absurd I thought them worth attention, B. coming so close on Greeley.

To GEORGE DOLBY, 21 JANUARY 1868

Mention in R. Shelton Mackenzie, Life of CD, Philadelphia, [1870], p. 276.[†1]

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 21 JANUARY 1868

Extract in MDGH, 11, 341-2.

Westminster Hotel, New York, Tuesday, Jan. 21st, 1868.

I finished my church[†2] to-night. It is Mrs. Stowe's[†3] brother's, and a most wonderful place to speak in. We had it enormously full last night ("Marigold" and "Trial"), but it scarcely required an effort. Mr. Ward Beecher (Mrs. Stowe's brother's name) being present in his pew. I sent to invite him to come round before he left; and I found him to be an unostentatious, straightforward, and agreeable fellow.

My cold sticks to me, and I can scarcely exaggerate what I sometimes undergo from sleeplessness. The day before yesterday I could get no rest until morning, and could not get up before twelve. This morning the same. I rarely take any breakfast but an egg and a cup of tea, not even toast or bread-and-butter. My dinner at three, and a little quail or some such light thing when I come home at night, is my daily fare. At the Hall I have established the custom of taking an egg beaten up in sherry before going in, and another between the parts. I think that pulls me up; at all events, I have since had no return of faintness.

As the men work very hard, and always with their hearts cheerfully in the business, I cram them into and outside of the carriage, to bring them back from Brooklyn with me. The other night, Scott (with a portmanteau across his knees and a wideawake hat low down upon his nose) told me that he had presented himself for admission in the circus[†4] (as good as Franconi's,[†5] by-the-bye), and had been refused. "The only theayter," he said in a melancholy way, "as I was ever in my life turned from the door of." Says Kelly: "There must have been some mistake, Scott, because George and me went, and we said, `Mr. Dickens's staff,' and they passed us to the best seats in the house. Go again, Scott." "No, I thank you, Kelly," says Scott, more melancholy than before, "I'm not a-going to put myself in the position of being refused again. It's the only theayter as I was ever turned from the door of, and it shan't be done twice. But it's a beastly country!" "Scott," interposed Majesty, "don't you express your opinions about the country." "No, sir," says Scott, "I never do, please, sir, but when you are turned from the door of the only theayter you was ever turned from, sir, and when the beasts in railway cars spits tobacco over your boots, you (privately) find yourself in a beastly country."

I expect shortly to get myself snowed up on some railway or other, for it is snowing hard now, and I begin to move to-morrow. There is so much floating ice in the river that we are obliged to leave a pretty wide margin of time for getting over the ferry to read. The dinner is coming in, and I must leave off.

To JOHN RUSSELL YOUNG,[†1] 21 JANUARY 1868*

MS Library of Congress. Address: John Russell Young Esqre. | 19 Irving Place.

Westminster Hotel, New York | Twenty First January 1868

My Dear Mr. Young

I was so fatigued this morning that I was not astir before noon, and it was then too late to write to you. I leave here so early tomorrow that I cannot make a convenient ap[point]ment;[†2] otherwise, I most readily would. [A][†2] note from you, addressed here, will [be][†2] forwarded to me wheresoever I may be. Or I will propose an interview i[n p]erspective,[†2] as soon as I know my precise day for returning here.[†3]

Believe me | Always Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

John Russell Young Esqre.

To MISS MARY DICKENS, 23 JANUARY 1868

Extract in MDGH, 11, 343-5.

Philadelphia,[†4] Thursday, Jan. 23rd, 1868.

When I wrote to your aunt by the last mail, I accidentally omitted to touch upon the question of helping Anne.[†5] So I will begin in this present writing with reference to her sad position. I think it will be best for you to be guided by an exact knowledge of her wants. Try to ascertain from herself what means she has, whether her sick husband gets what he ought to have, whether she is pinched in the articles of necessary clothing, bedding, or the like of that; add to this intelligence your own observation of the state of things about her, and supply what she most wants, and help her where you find the greatest need. The question, in the case of so old and faithful a servant, is not one of so much or so little money on my side, but how most efficiently to ease her mind and help her. To do this at once kindly and sensibly is the only consideration by which you have to be guided. Take carte blanche from me for all the rest.[†1]

My Washington week is the first week in February, beginning on Monday, 3rd. The tickets are sold, and the President[†2] is coming, and the chief members of the Cabinet, and the leaders of parties, and so forth, are coming; and, as the Holly Tree Boots says: "That's where it is, don't you see!"

In my Washington doubts I recalled Dolby for conference, and he joined me yesterday afternoon, and we have been in great discussion ever since on the possibility of giving up the Far West, and avoiding such immense distances and fatigues as would be involved in travelling to Chicago[†3] and Cincinnati. We have sketched another tour for the last half of March, which would be infinitely easier for me, though on the other hand less profitable, the places and the halls being smaller. The worst of it is, that everybody one advises with has a monomania respecting Chicago. "Good heaven, sir," the great Philadelphian authority[†4] said to me this morning, "if you don't read in Chicago, the people will go into fits." In reference to fatigue, I answered: "Well, I would rather they went into fits than I did." But he didn't seem to see it at all. —[†5] alone constantly writes me: "Don't go to the West; you can get what you want so much more easily." How we shall finally decide, I don't yet know. My Brooklyn church has been an immense success, and I found its minister was a bachelor, a clever, unparsonic, and straightforward man, and a man with a good knowledge of art into the bargain.

We are not a bit too soon here, for the whole country is beginning to be stirred and shaken by the presidential election,[†6] and trade is exceedingly depressed, and will be more so.[†1] Fanny Kemble[†2] lives near this place, but had gone away a day before my first visit here. She is going to read in February or March. Du Chaillu[†3] has been lecturing out West about the gorilla, and has been to see me; I saw the Cunard steamer Persia out in the stream, yesterday, beautifully smart, her flags flying, all her steam up, and she only waiting for her mails to slip away. She gave me a horrible touch of home-sickness.

When the 1st of March arrives, and I can say "next month," I shall begin to grow brighter. A fortnight's reading in Boston, too (last week of February and first week of March), will help me on gaily, I hope (the work so far off tells). It is impossible for two people to be more affectionately attached to a third, I really believe, than Fields and his wife are to me; and they are a landmark in the prospect.

Dolby sends kindest regards, and wishes it to be known that he has not been bullied lately. We do not go West at all, but take the easier plan.

To JOHN FORSTER, [23 JANUARY 1868]

Extract in F, X, ii, 781-2. Date: 23 Jan 68, from Philadelphia, according to Forster.

The worst of it is, that everybody one advises with has a monomania respecting Chicago. "Good heavens sir" the great Philadelphian authority said to me this morning, "if you don't read in Chicago the people will go into fits!" Well, I answered, I would rather they went into fits than I did. But he didn't seem to see it at all.

To MRS LIPPINCOTT,[†4] 28 JANUARY 1868*

MS Beinecke Library, Yale University.

Baltimore | Tuesday Twenty Eighth January | 1868

My Dear Mrs. Lippincott.

I should have replied to your kind note sooner, but for constant occupation.

Pray receive my assurance that I have derived nothing but pleasure and gratification from your writing (whether about myself[†5] or any thing else), and that I thank you heartily in all sincerity.

I shall be delighted to comply with your daughter's request.[†1]

Believe me | Affectionately Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

To FRANKLIN PHILP,[†2] 28 JANUARY 1868

Text from Shelton Mackenzie, Life of CD, 1870, p. 279.

Baltimore[†3] | Tuesday, Twenty Eighth January, 1868

Dear Mr. Philp

Pray accept my cordial thanks for the two charming bottles (not to mention their contents) for which I am indebted to your kind remembrance. They arrived here safely, several hours before your letter; but we were not long in divining from whom they came, and whose health we must immediately drink—and did.

I was on the point of writing to express to you my regret that I must forego the pleasure of dining with you while at Washington. That national compliment, my "true American catarrh," is infallibly brought back by every railway car I enter. It is so oppressive, and would, but for occasional rest and silence, be so incompatible with my Readings, that my only safe course is to hold to the principle I established when I left Boston, and gloomily deny myself all social recreations. I am bound to disclaim the least merit in this virtuous-looking self-denial. I retire to the cloister as discontentedly and growlingly as possible.

Believe me, faithfully yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Franklin Philp, Esquire.

To SAMUEL CARTWRIGHT,[†4] 29 JANUARY 1868†

Text from transcript, British Dental Association.

Baltimore, Wednesday, 29th Jany 1868.

My Dear Cartwright.

As I promised to report myself upon you from this side of the Atlantic and as I have some leisure this morning, I am going to lighten my conscience by keeping my word.

I am going on at a great pace, and with immense success. Next week at Washington I shall, please God, have got through half my readings. The remaining half are all arranged, and they will carry me into the third week of April. It is very hard work, but it is brilliantly paid. The changes that I find in the country generally (this place is the least changed of any I have yet seen) exceed my utmost expectations. I had been in New York a couple of days before I began to recognise it at all; and the handsomest part of Boston was a bleak swamp when I saw it five and twenty years ago. Considerable advances, too, have been made socially. †a Strange to say the railways and railing arrangements (both exceedingly defective—) seem to have stood still while all other things have been moving.†a

One of the most comical spectacles I have ever seen in my life was "church", with a heavy sea on, in the saloon of the Cunard Steamer coming out. The officiating minister, an extremely modest young man, was brought in between two stewards exactly as if he were coming up to the scratch in a prize fight. The ship was rolling and pitching so, that the two big stewards had to stop and watch their opportunity of making a dart at the reading desk with their reverend charge, during which pause he held on, now by one steward and now by the other, with the feeblest expression of countenance and no legs whatever. At length they made a dart at the wrong moment, and one steward was immediately beheld alone in the extreme perspective! while the other and the reverend gentleman held on to the mast in the middle of the saloon—which the latter embraced with both arms as if it were his wife. All this time the congregation were breaking up into sects and sliding away—my sect (as in nature) pounding the other sect. And when at last the reverend gentleman had been tumbled into his place, the desk (a loose one, put upon the dining table) deviated from the church bodily, and went over to the Purser. The scene was so extraordinarily ridiculous, and was made so much more so by the exemplary gravity of all concerned in it, that I was obliged to leave before the service began.

†b What was my horror at New York one night to find the light plate you so kindly made me, useless, and nevermore [to] be fixed by any skill of mine!!! I took it straight to one Mr. Lefler,†1 (I mean that for L-E-F-L-E-R) a dentist who was recommended to me. He said he "couldn't fix it,—but it didn't seem to me that he particularly tried. As he thought "That he could fix me another on the atmospheric principle", I consented to his making one—which he did, and it acts fairly. Finding that I could read without any as I always used to do, I have since read so. But what were my emotions the other day to find my faithful heavy plate, that charming instrument which had become a part of myself and served me through all sorts of dinners—suddenly give in, in the same manner, and positively refuse to be coaxed or compelled into any adjustment whatever!!! I have put the two by carefully, and shall fly to you (like young Norval's Shepherds)†2 "for safety and for succour" in the earliest hours of my return to England.†b

This is one of the places where Butler[†3] carried it with so high a hand in the war,[†4] and where the ladies used to spit when they passed a Northern soldier. It still wears, I fancy, a look of sullen remembrance. (The ladies are remarkably handsome, with an eastern look upon them—dress with a strong sense of colour and make a brilliant audience). The ghost of slavery haunts the houses; and the old untidy, incapable, lounging, shambling Black serves you as a free man. Free, of course he ought to be; but the stupendous absurdity of making him a voter glares out of every roll of his eye, stretch of his mouth, and bump of his head. I have a strong impression that the race must fade out of the States very fast. It never can hold its own against a striving restless shifty people. In the Penitentiary[†1] here the other day, in a room full of idle blacks (too dull to be taught any of the work in hand) was one young brooding fellow, very like a black rhinoceros. He sat glowering at life as if it were just endurable at dinner time, until 4 of his fellows began to sing, most unmelodiously, a part song. He then set up a dismal howl, [†b] twisted his hands in his wool[†b] and pounded his face on a form. I took him to have been rendered quite desperate of their having learnt anything.

I send my kind regards to Mrs. Cartwright and sincerely hope that she and you have no new family distresses and anxieties.[†2] [†a] My standing address is the Westminster Hotel, Irving Place, New York City. And[†a] I am always my Dear Cartwright, Cordially yours

CD.

To MRS FANNY KEMBLE, [?29 JANUARY 1868]

Mention in To Georgina Hogarth, 29 Jan. Date: shortly before that letter.

To MRS CHILDS,[†3] 30 JANUARY 1868

Text from transcript in Pennsylvania Historical Society Library and unidentified catalogue in New York Public Library.

Philadelphia | Thursday Thirtieth January 1868

My Dear Mrs. Childs.

I hope to have the pleasure of calling on you without fail when I return here next month. But I fear that my having the pleasure of passing an evening with you is one of the things that cannot be, until you insist (like a dutiful wife) on Mr. Child's bringing you to England, and I in my turn insist on your both coming to see me at my little country house. Then I hope you may like my daughters and their Aunt, and I am quite certain they will like you.

It is one of the specialities of Dr. Marigold, that at a crisis in his adventures I generally (whatever my resolutions to the contrary) smash my flowers. But I will be very tender with them tonight. And I will furthermore try to be provided with a second little bouquet for the trial, so that your pretty[†1] request may be properly responded to.

Your good husband's care of the people who serve him will always be among the pleasantest of my travelling remembrances. May I make so bold as to add that so will he, and so will you?

Believe me always | Very faithfully yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [30 JANUARY 1868]

Extracts in F, x, ii, 786-7 and X, ii, 782-3. Date: first extract soon after To Miss Hogarth, 29 Jan, second extract 30 Jan 68, according to Forster; no doubt both same letter.

Dolby and Osgood, who do the most ridiculous things to keep me in spirits (I am often very heavy, and rarely sleep much), are determined to have a walking match at Boston on the last day of February to celebrate the arrival of the day when I can say "next month!" for home.

Thanking Heaven that he had struck off Canada and the West, for he found the wear and tear enormous. Dolby decided that the croakers were wrong about Washington, and went on: the rather as his raised prices, which he put finally at three dollars each, gave satisfaction. Fields is so confident about Boston, that my remaining list includes, in all, 14 more readings there. I don't know how many more we might not have had here (where I have had attentions otherwise that have been very grateful to me), if we had chosen. Tickets are now being resold at ten dollars each. At Baltimore I had a charming little theatre,[†2] and a very apprehensive impulsive audience. It is remarkable to see how the Ghost of Slavery haunts the town; and how the shambling, untidy, evasive, and postponing Irrepressible proceeds about his free work, going round and round it, instead of at it. The melancholy absurdity of giving these people votes, at any rate at present, would glare at one out of every roll of their eyes, chuckle in their mouths, and bump in their heads, if one did not see (as one cannot help seeing in the country) that their enfranchisement is a mere party trick to get votes. Being at the Penitentiary the other day (this, while we mention votes), and looking over the books, I noticed that almost every man had been "pardoned" a day or two before his time was up. Why? Because if he had served his time out, he would have been ipso facto disfranchised. So, this form of pardon is gone through to save his vote; and as every officer of the prison holds his place only in right of his party, of course his hopeful clients vote for the party that has let them out! When I read in Mr. Beecher's church at Brooklyn, we found the trustees had suppressed the fact that a certain upper gallery holding 150 was "the Coloured Gallery." On the first night not a soul could be induced to enter it; and it was not until it became known next day that I was certainly not going to read there more than four times, that we managed to fill it. One night at New York, on our second or third row, there were two well-dressed women with a tinge of colour—I should say, not even quadroons. But the holder of one ticket who found his seat to be next them, demanded of Dolby "What he meant by fixing him next to those two Gord darmed cusses of niggers?" and insisted on being supplied with another good place. Dolby firmly replied that he was perfectly certain Mr. Dickens would not recognise such an objection on any account, but he could have his money back if he chose. Which, after some squabbling, he had. In a comic scene in the New York Circus one night, when I was looking on, four white people sat down upon a form in a barber's shop to be shaved. A coloured man came as the fifth customer, and the four immediately ran away. This was much laughed at and applauded. In the Baltimore Penitentiary, the white prisoners dine on one side of the room, the coloured prisoners on the other; and no one has the slightest idea of mixing them. But it is indubitably the fact that exhalations not the most agreeable arise from a number of coloured people got together, and I was obliged to beat a quick retreat from their dormitory. I strongly believe that they will die out of this country fast. It seems, looking at them, so manifestly absurd to suppose it possible that they can ever hold their own against a restless, shifty, striving, stronger race.

To MRS GILLESPIE,[†1] 30 JANUARY 1868

Text from Mrs E. D. Gillespie, A Book of Remembrance, 1901, P. 124.

Philadelphia,
Thursday, Thirtieth Jan'y, 1868.

Dear Madam

Accept my cordial thanks for your kind note, and with them the assurance that I shall have great pleasure in wearing your flowers this evening.[†2]

Faithfully yours always,
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Gillespie

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 29 and 30 JANUARY 1868†

MS Huntington Library

Baltimore | Wednesday Twenty Ninth Jany. 1868.

My Dearest Georgy. As I have an hour to spare, before starting back to Philadelphia, I begin my letter this morning. It has been snowing hard for four and twenty hours—though this place is as far South as Valentia[†1] in Spain—[†a] and Dolby, being on his way to New York, has a good chance of being snowed up somewhere.[†a]

[†b] This is one of the places where Butler carried it with a high hand during the war, and where the ladies used to spit when they passed a Northern soldier. They are very handsome women, with an Eastern touch in them, and dress brilliantly. I have rarely seen so many fine faces in an audience.[†b] They are a bright responsive people likewise, and very pleasant to read to.[†2] I read here in a charming little Opera House[†3] built by a society of Germans—quite a delightful place for the purpose. I stand on the stage, with the Drop Curtain down, and my screen before it. The whole scene is very pretty and complete, and the audience have a "ring" in them that sounds in the ear. [†a] I go from here to Philadelphia to read tomorrow night and Friday[†4]—come through here again on Saturday on my way to Washington—come back here on Saturday week for two finishing nights[†5]—then go to Philadelphia for two Farewells—and so turn my back on the Southern part of the country.[†a] Distances and travelling have obliged us to reduce the List of Readings by two—leaving 82 in all.[†6] Of course we afterwards discovered that we had finally settled the list on a Friday![†7] I shall be half way through it at Washington—of course on a Friday also, and my Birthday!

Dolby and Osgood, who do the most ridiculous things to keep me in spirits (I am often very heavy, and rarely sleep much) have decided to have a walking match at Boston on Saturday February 29th.[†8] Beginning this design in joke, they have become tremendously in earnest, and Dolby has actually sent home (much to his opponent's terror) for a pair of seamless socks to walk in. Our men are hugely excited on the subject, and continually make new bets on "the Men". Fields and I are to walk out 6 miles, and "the men" are to turn and walk round us. Neither of them has the least idea what 12 miles at a pace is. Being requested by both to give them "a breather" yesterday, I gave them a stiff one of 5 miles over a bad road in the snow: half the distance uphill. I took them at a pace of four miles and a half an hour, and you never beheld such objects as they were when we got back; both smoking like factories, and both obliged to change everything before they could come to dinner. They have the absurdest ideas of what are tests of walking power, and continually get up in the maddest manner and see how high they can kick the wall! The wainscoat here, in one place, is scored all over with their pencil-marks. To see them doing this—Dolby, a big man, and Osgood a very little one—is ridiculous beyond description.

[†a] Philadelphia, Same night

We came on here through a snowstorm all the way, but up to time. Fanny Kemble (who begins to read shortly) is coming to Marigold and Trial tomorrow night. I have written her a note telling her that if it will at all assist her movements to know mine, my list is at her service. Probably I shall see her tomorrow. Tell Mamie (to whom I will write next) with my love, that I found her letter of the 10th. of this month, awaiting me here. The Siberia that brought it is a new Cunarder, and made an unusually slow passage out. Probably because it would be dangerous to work new machinery too fast on the Atlantic.[†a]

Thursday Thirtieth

My cold still sticks to me. The heat of the Railway cars, and their unventilated condition, invariably bring it back when I think it going. This morning my head is as stuffed and heavy as ever. A superb sledge and four horses have been offered me for a ride, but I am afraid to take it, lest I should make the "true American catarrh" worse, and should get hoarse. So I am going to give Osgood another "breather" on foot instead.

The communication with New York is not interrupted, so we consider the Zealous Dolby all right. You may imagine what his work is, when you learn that he goes 3 times to every place we visit. Firstly, to look at the Hall, arrange the numbering, and make five hundred acquaintances whom he immediately calls by their Christian names; secondly, to sell the tickets—a very nice business requiring great tact and temper; thirdly, with me. He will probably turn up at Washington next Sunday, but only for a little while; for as soon as I am on the platform on Monday night, he will start away again—probably to be seen no more until we pass through New York in the middle of February.

[†b] I am delighted to receive such good intelligence of the new servants. Marsh[†1] may sell the Doctor[†2] for the best price he can get. Let him be very careful indeed of Noggs[†2] when he resumes work, and spare him as much as possible. Best love to all.

Ever My Dearest Georgy | Your most affectionate

CD.[†b]

To WILKIE COLLINS, 31 JANUARY 1868

MS Morgan Library.

Philadelphia, | Thirty First January | 1868

My Dear Wilkie

Your letter dated on the eleventh reached me here this morning. Mine will be brief, as it must go on to New York presently, and there is much snow on the Line.

— XII - 31 —

I am indeed delighted by your account of the Play, and do begin to believe that I shall see it! Every word of your account of your last visit "Behind",[†1] I have read—and shall read—again and again.

Of Mr. Barrett,[†2] I have seen nothing, heard nothing.[†3] Wherever I go, they play my books, with my name in big letters. Oliver Twist was at Baltimore when I left it last Wednesday.[†4] Pickwick is here,[†5] and Bob[†6] and the Carrier[†7] are here. Pickwick was at New York too,[†8] when I last passed that way; so was Our Mutual Friend;[†9] so was No Thoroughfare. Under which equitable circumstances, I doubt Mr. Barrett's putting in an appearance.

We are getting now among smaller halls, but the audiences are immense. Marigold here last night (for the first time) bowled Philadelphia clean over.[†10] I go on to Washington tomorrow morning, and shall be halfway through my Readings on Friday, my birthday.

God bless you. | Ever affectionately

CD.

To MISS MARY DICKENS, 31 JANUARY 1868

Text from MDGH, II, 350-1.[†11]

Philadelphia, Friday, Jan. 31st, 1868.

[†a] Since writing to your aunt I have received yours of the 7th, and am truly glad to have the last news of you confirmed by yourself.[†a]

From a letter Wilkie has written to me, it seems there can be no doubt that the "No Thoroughfare" drama is a real, genuine, and great success. It is drawing immensely, and seems to "go" with great effect and applause.

"Doctor Marigold" here last night (for the first time) was an immense success, and all Philadelphia is going to rush at once for tickets for the two Philadelphian farewells the week after next. The tickets are to be sold tomorrow, and great excitement is anticipated in the streets. Dolby not being here, a clerk will sell, and will probably wish himself dead before he has done with it.

It appears to me that Chorley writes to you on the legacy question because he wishes you to understand that there is no danger of his changing his mind, and at the bottom I descry an honest desire to pledge himself as strongly as possible. You may receive it in that better spirit, or I am much mistaken. †a Tell your aunt, with my best love, that I wrote to Chauncy weeks ago, in answer to a letter from him.†a I am now going out in a sleigh (and four) with unconceivable dignity and grandeur; †a mentioning which reminds me that I am informed by trusty scouts that — †1 intends to waylay me at Washington, and may even descend upon me in the train to-morrow.†a

Best love to Katie, the two Charleys, and all

[CD]

To DANIEL RICKETSON,†2 31 JANUARY 1868*

Text from "verbatim" copy of original stolen from the owner's album, Old Dartmouth Historical Society, New Bedford. Address: Daniel Ricketson Esq. | Brooklawn | near | New Bedford | Mass.

Philadelphia | Friday, Thirty first January 1868

My Dear Sir

I am truly gratified by your kind letter,†3 and I beg to assure you that I receive your offers of hospitality thoroughly in the spirit in which you send it. But when I am occupied with a series of readings, I always stay at an Hotel with the gentlemen who transact the business part of that occupation and never make a visit. This is by no means a voluntary abstinence on my part, but is placed upon me (very much against my will) by the trying nature of the life, the punctuality it requires in all its details, and the necessity of regular intervals of rest and silence. Believe me Dear Sir, I am not the less sensible of your frank courtesy and am always

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Daniel Ricketson Esq.

February

To WILLIAM PRESCOTT SMITH,†1 1 FEBRUARY 1868*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: William Prescott Smith Esqre. | Baltimore.

Washington | Saturday Evening First February 1868.

My Dear Sir

I beg you to accept my best thanks for your Kind remembrance of me at Baltimore. Your present[†2] has proved an excellent travelling companion, whose society has been highly appreciated.

Believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

William Prescott Smith Esquire

To NEW YORK PRESS COMMITTEE, 1 FEBRUARY 1868

Text from W. Glyde Wilkins, CD in America, 1911, p. 259.

Philadelphia, February 1, 1868.

Dear Sirs.

I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 22nd of last month,[†3] and to explain to you that I should have done this sooner but that I could not until now be sure of my engagements.

It will give me very great pleasure to accept your invitation, provided that Saturday, the 18th of April (the only day at my disposal before my departure), should suit your convenience.

In reference to your kind suggestion of your readiness to depart from your usual rule of privacy, if I should desire it, I assure you that I have no such wish, and that I leave the matter wholly in your hands.

Very cordially reciprocating your good wishes, I am always, dear Sirs, faithfully your friend,
CHARLES DICKENS.

To J. T. FIELDS, 3 FEBRUARY 1868*

MS Huntington Library.

Washington, Monday Third February | 1868.

My Dear Fields

I have the honor to enclose for your attested execution "The" articles.[†4] Having duly completed them, please to retain them (in a place of profound safety) until my arrival in Boston.

I think (but am not sure) that I stand engaged to dine with Lowell[†1] on Wednesday the 26th. I have made no other engagement. I say that I am "not sure", because he left it to me to suggest my day, and I wrote to him doing so, but have not heard since.

Yesterday I dined with Sumner[†2] and Mr. Secretary [Stanton]:[†3] the latter a man with a most extraordinary knowledge of my books, and a power of taking the text up at any point, which I supposed to belong to nobody but one person— and that person not myself.

My daughters and their aunt said in the last letter I had from them: "What a charming creature Mrs. Fields must be, and how pretty and touching in her to have given that Christmas decoration to your Boston rooms! What a sympathetic and delightful creature! May we send our love to her?" I may, I know—and do.

My Dear fellow | Ever affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

James T. Fields Esquire

To CHARLES SUMNER, 3 FEBRUARY 1868*

MS Houghton Library, Harvard.

Washington, Monday Third February | 1868.

My Dear Sumner

I return the newspapers with many thanks.

Affectionately Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS MARY DICKENS, 4 FEBRUARY 1868

Text from MDGH, II, 351-3.

Washington, Tuesday, Feb. 4th, 1868.

I began here last night with great success.[†4] The hall being small, the prices were raised to three dollars each ticket. The audience was a superior one, composed of the foremost public men and their families. At the end of the "Carol" they gave a great break out, and applauded, I really believe, for five minutes. You would suppose them to be Manchester shillings instead of Washington half-sovereigns. Immense enthusiasm.

A devoted adherent in this place (an Englishman) had represented to Dolby that if I were taken to an hotel here it would be impossible to secure me a minute's rest, and he undertook to get one Wheleker,[†1] a German, who keeps a little Verey's,[†2] to furnish his private dining-rooms for the illustrious traveller's reception. Accordingly here we are, on the first and second floor of a small house, with no one else in it but our people, a French waiter, and a very good French cuisine. Perfectly private, in the city of all the world (I should say) where the hotels are intolerable, and privacy the least possible, and quite comfortable. "Wheleker's Restaurant" is our rather undignified address for the present week.

I dined (against my rules) with Charles Sumner on Sunday, he having been an old friend of mine. Mr. Secretary [Stanton] (War Minister) was there. He is a man of a very remarkable memory, and famous for his acquaintance with the minutest details of my books. Give him any passage anywhere, and he will instantly cap it and go on with the context. He was commander-in-chief of all the Northern forces concentrated here, and never went to sleep at night without first reading something from my books, which were always with him. I put him through a pretty severe examination, but he was better up than I was.

The gas was very defective indeed last night, and I began with a small speech, to the effect that I must trust to the brightness of their faces for the illumination of mine; this was taken greatly. In the "Carol," a most ridiculous incident occurred all of a sudden. I saw a dog look out from among the seats into the centre aisle, and look very intently at me. The general attention being fixed on me, I don't think anybody saw the dog; but I felt so sure of his turning up again and barking, that I kept my eye wandering about in search of him. He was a very comic dog, and it was well for me that I was reading a very comic part of the book. But when he bounced out into the centre aisle again, in an entirely new place (still looking intently at me) and tried the effect of a bark upon my proceedings, I was seized with such a paroxysm of laughter, that it communicated itself to the audience, and we roared at one another loud and long.[†3]

The President has sent to me twice, and I am going to see him to-morrow. He has a whole row for his family every night. Dolby rejoined his chief yesterday morning, and will probably remain in the august presence until Sunday night. He and Osgood, "training for the match," are ludicrous beyond belief. I saw them just now coming up a street, each trying to pass the other, and immediately fled. Since I have been writing this, they have burst in at the door and sat down on the floor to blow. Dolby is now writing at a neighbouring table, with his bald head smoking as if he were on fire. Kelly (his great adherent) asked me, when he was last away, whether it was quite fair that I should take Mr. Osgood out for "breathers" when Mr. Dolby had no such advantage. I begin to expect that half Boston will turn out on the 29th to see the match. In which case it will be unspeakably droll.

To COMMODORE HARWOOD,[†1] 4 FEBRUARY 1868*

MS Library of Congress.

Washington | Tuesday Fourth February 1868

Dear Sir

In reply to your obliging letter, I beg to assure you that it would be very interesting to me, if I could read to the officers and students of the Naval Academy at Annapolis,[†2] but unfortunately it is not possible. Every evening on which I can read during the remainder of my short stay in the United States, is already anticipated. I regret this the more because I have a son who is a naval officer, and I have from my childhood loved the service.

I have the honour to be | Dear Sir
Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Commodore Harwood U.S.N.
&c &c &c

To CHARLES LANMAN,[†3] 5 FEBRUARY 1868

MS Beinecke Library, Yale University.

Washington | Wednesday Fifth February 1868

My Dear Sir

Allow me to thank you most cordially for your kind letter and for its accompanying books.[†4] I have a particular love for books of travel, and shall wander into the "Wilds of America" with great interest.[†5]

Your reference to my dear friend Washington Irving renews the vivid impressions reawakened in my mind at Baltimore but the other day. I saw his fine face for the last time in that City. He came there from New York to pass a day or two with me before I went Westward, and they were made among the most memorable of my life by his delightful fancy and genial humour. Some unknown admirer of his books and mine sent to the Hotel a most enormous Mint Julep wreathed with flowers.[†1] We sat one on either side of it with quiet solemnity (it filled a respectable-sized round table), but the solemnity was of very short duration. It was quite an enchanted Julep, and carried us among innumerable people and places that we both knew. The Julep held out far into the night, and my memory never saw him afterwards otherwise than as bending over it with his straw with an attempted air of gravity, [†a](after some anecdote involving some wonderfully droll and delicate observation of character),[†a] and then as his eye caught mine melting into that captivating laugh of his, which was the brightest and best I have ever heard.

Dear Sir, with many thanks | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Lanman Esquire

To CHARLES SUMNER, 5 FEBRUARY 1868*

MS Houghton Library, Harvard.

Washington, Wednesday Fifth February | 1868

My Dear Sumner.

When your kind note was put into my hand, I had just dated this, to tell you— which you will readily know—how sorry I am to be unable to come to you for our tuck[†2] this evening. But my amiable cold took it into its head last night to get into my throat and chest; and I lay coughing all night long—as this present tremulous writing may testify. The remedies I have tried, and the terror of being disabled from reading, oblige me to keep close within doors.

But will you come and dine with me at 6 today? Mr. Dolby and Mr. Osgood dine with me daily, but I have no guest from without.

Ever affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To CHARLES SUMNER, 5 FEBRUARY 1868*

MS Houghton Library, Harvard.

Washington Wednesday Fifth February | 1868

My Dear Sumner.

As mustard and hot water and the likes have already done me good, I think (with tomorrow night before me) I had best keep within. I never do nurse myself, and perhaps the novelty may be effective? But we will dine alone, if you will come round here.

Ever affectionately
CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [4 and 7 FEBRUARY 1868]

Extracts in F, X, ii, 783-5. Date: first extract 4 Feb, according to Forster; second extract on his birthday, 7 Feb, according to Forster, and part of same letter.

You may like to have a line to let you know that it is all right here, and that the croakers were simply ridiculous.[†1] I began last night. A charming audience,[†2] no dissatisfaction whatever at the raised prices,[†3] nothing missed or lost, cheers at the end of the Carol,[†4] and rounds upon rounds of applause all through.[†5] All the foremost men and their families had taken tickets for the series of four. A small place to read in. £300 in it.

I am going to-morrow to see the President, who has sent to me twice. I dined with Charles Sumner last Sunday, against my rule; and as I had stipulated for no party, Mr. Secretary Stanton was the only other guest, besides his own secretary. Stanton is a man with a very remarkable memory, and extraordinarily familiar with my books.... He and Sumner having been the first two public men at the dying President's[†6] bedside, and having remained with him until he breathed his last, we fell into a very interesting conversation after dinner, when, each of them giving his own narrative separately, the usual discrepancies about details of time were observable. Then Mr. Stanton told me a curious little story which will form the remainder of this short letter.

On the afternoon of the day on which the President was shot, there was a cabinet council at which he presided. Mr. Stanton, being at the time commander-in-chief of the Northern troops that were concentrated about here, arrived rather late. Indeed they were waiting for him, and on his entering the room, the President broke off in something he was saying, and remarked: "Let us proceed to business, gentlemen." Mr. Stanton then noticed, with great surprise, that the President sat with an air of dignity in his chair instead of lolling about it in the most ungainly attitudes, as his invariable custom was; and that instead of telling irrelevant or questionable stories, he was grave and calm, and quite a different man. Mr. Stanton, on leaving the council with the Attorney-General,[†7] said to him, "That is the most satisfactory cabinet meeting I have attended for many a long day! What an extraordinary change in Mr. Lincoln!" The Attorney-General replied, "We all saw it, before you came in. While we were waiting for you, he said, with his chin down on his breast, `Gentlemen, something very extraordinary is going to happen, and that very soon.' To which the Attorney-General had observed, `Something good, sir, I hope?' when the President answered very gravely: `I don't know; I don't know. But it will happen, and shortly too!' As they were all impressed by his manner, the Attorney-General took him up again: `Have you received any information, sir, not yet disclosed to us?' `No,' answered the President: `but I have had a dream. And I have now had the same dream three times. Once, on the night preceding the Battle of Bull Run.[†1] Once, on the night preceding' such another (naming a battle also not favourable to the North). His chin sank on his breast again, and he sat reflecting. `Might one ask the nature of this dream, sir?' said the Attorney-General. `Well,' replied the President, without lifting his head or changing his attitude, `I am on a great broad rolling river—and I am in a boat—and I drift—and I drift!—but this is not business'—suddenly raising his face and looking round the table as Mr. Stanton entered, `let us proceed to business, gentlemen.'" Mr. Stanton and the Attorney-General said, as they walked on together, it would be curious to notice whether anything ensued on this; and they agreed to notice. He was shot that night.

This scrambling scribblement is resumed this morning, because I have just seen the President: who had sent to me very courteously asking me to make my own appointment.[†2] He is a man with a remarkable face, indicating courage, watchfulness, and certainly strength of purpose. It is a face of the Webster type, but without the "bounce" of Webster's face. I would have picked him out anywhere as a character of mark. Figure, rather stoutish for an American; a trifle under the middle size; hands clasped in front of him; manner, suppressed, guarded, anxious. Each of us looked at the other very hard.... It was in his own cabinet that I saw him. As I came away, Thornton[†3] drove up in a sleigh—turned out for a state occasion—to deliver his credentials. There was to be a cabinet council at 12. The room was very like a London club's ante-drawing-room. On the walls, two engravings only: one, of his own portrait; one, of Lincoln's.... In the outer room was sitting a certain sunburnt General Blair,[†4] with many evidences of the war upon him. He got up to shake hands with me, and then I found that he had been out on the Prairie with me five-and-twenty years ago.[†5] ... The papers having referred to my birthday's falling to-day, my room is filled with most exquisite flowers. They came pouring in from all sorts of people at breakfast time. The audiences here are really very fine. So ready to laugh or cry, and doing both so freely, that you would suppose them to be Manchester shillings rather than Washington half-sovereigns. Alas! alas! my cold worse than ever.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 7 FEBRUARY 1868

MS New York University Library.

Washington, My Birthday 1868 | (and my cold worse than ever!)

My Dearest Georgy.

This will be but a short letter, as I have been to see the President this morning and have little time before the post goes. He had sent a gentleman to me, most courteously begging me to make my own appointment, and I did so. A man of very remarkable appearance indeed, of tremendous firmness of purpose. Not to be turned, or trifled with.

As I mention my cold's being so bad, I will add that I have never had anything the matter with me since I came here, but the cold. It is more in my throat, and slightly on my chest. It occasions me great discomfort, and you would suppose, seeing me in the morning, that I could not possibly read at night. But I have always come up to the scratch—have not yet missed one night—and have gradually got used to that. I had got much the better of it; but the dressing room at the Hall here is singularly cold and draughty and so I have slid back again.

You will know, no doubt, of Mrs. Dolby's[†1] having a boy.[†2] The telegram reached New York on the day on which it was sent from Ross. When Dolby brought it into my bedroom yesterday morning I noticed (but kept it to myself) that there was no "all well" in it: that there was not even the word "Well." In the course of a few hours he spoke of this himself, and became excessively uneasy. Early in the afternoon, he telegraphed to Ross to know how she was. The first thing this morning, came back the answer: "Mother and boy both quite well." He is now beaming.

The papers here having written about this being my birthday the most exquisite flowers came pouring in at breakfast time from all sorts of people. The room is covered with them, made up into beautiful bouquets, and arranged in all manner of green baskets. Probably I shall find plenty more at the Hall tonight. This is considered the dullest and most apathetic place in America. My audiences have been superb.

All outstanding bills may now be paid. Make a complete clearance of them, except Hunt and Roskell's.[†3] I spoke of paying for the dinner service, but did not achieve that excellent intention.[†4]

I mentioned the Dog on the first night here? Next night, I thought I heard (in Copperfield) a suddenly suppressed bark. It happened in this wise:—Osgood, standing just within the doors felt his leg touched and looking down beheld the dog, staring intently at me, and evidently just about to bark. In a transport of presence of mind and fury, he instantly caught him up in both hands, and threw him, over his own head, out into the entry, where the check takers received him like a game at ball. Last night he came in again, with another dog; but our people were so sharply on the look out for him that he didn't get in. He had evidently promised to pass the other dog, free.

Best love to Mamie, Katie, (Charleys), and all.

Ever My Dearest Georgy | your most affectionate

CHARLES DICKENS

To FRANKLIN PHILP, 7 FEBRUARY 1868*

MS Mrs Charles O. Fiertz.

Washington, Friday Seventh February | 1868

My Dear Mr. Philp

I owe you a thousand thanks—and I pay them in the readiest money[†1]— for your sympathetic remembrance of my birthday, and for the elegant token of your remembrance received this morning.[†2] Believe me, I shall always esteem it highly. It fits into a nook in my travelling bag, as though it were made expressly for the place; and it shall hold the place, against all comers. When you next come over to England, I hope you will come to Gad's Hill to see how the pretty bottle wears, and to note whether it is kept bright or no.[†3] Whensoever you come, you will find that I have not forgotten so much as one of the many spontaneous acts of good will and good help for which I stand indebted to you and your partner,[†4] and for which I heartily thank you both. And so I shall do all I can (until I see you among the Kentish hops, and for an indefinite time afterwards) to continue the exemplary custom of having birthdays, and consequently to remain

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Franklin Philp Esquire.

To CHARLES SUMNER, 7 FEBRUARY 1868*

MS Houghton Library, Harvard.

Washington, Seventh February 1868

My Dear Sumner

My cold and voice are in that state of croaking imbecility that I am afraid to venture out again. I really am alarmed by the prospect of the evening, for I get no better as the day advances, and seem to have no human refuge save in mustard poultices. To bring one to the Capitol would be superfluous and dangerous. As Rogers[†1] used to write when he couldn't accept an invitation: — "Pity me!"

Ever affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

To B. B. FRENCH,[†2] 8 FEBRUARY 1868*

Extract in Kenneth W. Rendell catalogue, No. 279 (1999); MS I p.; dated 8 Feb 68; addressed B. B. French.

Thanking him for his courteous call in Washington and saying that he had hoped to call upon you there. But during my stay I was so constantly inconvenienced by a severe cold, and had to prepare myself for the evening with so many presentations, that I went nowhere. As it would distress me to suppose that you viewed me indifferent to, or unmindful of, your kindness, I trouble you with these few words of appreciation.

To ADOLPHUS S. SOLOMONS,[†3] 8 FEBRUARY 1868

MS Mr Crighton Sellars.

Washington, Eighth February 1868

My Dear Mr. Solomons

I was truly touched and affected yesterday evening by the receipt of your earnest letter and your handsome birthday present.[†4] I shall always attach a special value to both, and shall make a point of wearing the latter on the 7th.

of February, as often as the day may come round to me. Accept my hearty thanks and believe me

Faithfully Your friend
CHARLES DICKENS

A. S. Solomons Esquire

To CHARLES SUMNER, 8 FEBRUARY 1868*

MS Houghton Library, Harvard.

Washington, Eighth February 1868.

My Dear Sumner

With this I return the last newspapers you kindly sent me. Goodbye and God bless you! Au revoir in England.[†1]

Affectionately Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To W. H. WILLS, [EARLY FEBRUARY 1868]

Mention in Dolby, CD as I knew him, p. 292; written from Washington after news of birth of Dolby's son arrived on 7 Feb.

Instructing Wills to mark the birth of Dolby's son[†2] by purchasing the handsomest pony he could find, and sending him with his trappings complete, as a present, to Mrs. Dolby at Ross, with "the Chief's love": also to make arrangements to have Dolby's nephew[†3] photographed holding the pony and the photograph sent to America.

To MRS J. T. FIELDS, 9 FEBRUARY 1868†

MS Huntington Library.

Baltimore, Sunday Ninth February 1868.

My Dear Mrs. Fields[†4]

I thank you heartily for your pleasant note (I can scarcely tell you how pleasant it was to receive the same) and for the beautiful flowers that you [†a] and Massachusetts J[†a†5] sent me on my birthday. For which—and much more—my loving thanks to both.

In consequence of the Washington papers having referred to the august seventh of this month, my room was on that day a blooming garden. Nor were flowers alone represented there. The silversmith, the goldsmith, the landscape painter, all sent in their contributions. After the Reading was done at night the whole Audience rose; and it was spontaneous, hearty, and affecting.

I was very much surprised by the President's face and manner. It is, in its way, one of the most remarkable faces I have ever seen. Not imaginative, but very powerful in its firmness (or perhaps obstinacy) strength of will, and steadiness of purpose. There is a reticence in it too, curiously at variance with that first unfortunate Speech of his.[†1] A man not to be turned or trifled with. A man (I should say) who must be killed to be got out of the way, [†a] if he were wanted to be out of the way.[†a] His manner, perfectly composed. We looked at one another pretty hard. There was an air of chronic anxiety upon him. But not a crease or a ruffle in his dress, and his papers were as composed as himself. (Mr. Thornton was going in to deliver his credentials, immediately afterwards.)

[†a] The dog reappeared on the second night, and was marvellously caught and thrown out (by Osgood) to the check takers in the entry: who received him like a game at ball. On the third night he appeared again, with another dog, whom he had evidently promised to pass in—free—On the imposition being unmasked, the other dog apologised, cut him dead, and withdrew. His intentions were of the best, but he afterwards "rose to explain", outside, with inconvenient eloquence.[†a]

This day fortnight will find me, please God, in my "native Boston". I wish I were there to day!

Ever My Dear Mrs. Fields | Your affectionate Friend

CHARLES DICKENS

Chairman, Missionary Society

To MRS JOHNSTONE,[†2] 9 FEBRUARY 1868

Text from D, VII (Oct 1911), 272.

Baltimore, Sunday, Ninth February, 1868.

My dear Madam,

I enclose my signature for your friend most readily.

My time here is, and would be if I had not a most abominable cold which obliges me to lie down half the day, wholly absorbed. I remain here all tomorrow and next day, and I read on both evenings. I cannot, therefore, have the pleasure of making you a visit, but I am glad of[†3] the opportunity of sending you all good wishes and begging you to remember me most kindly to Madame Celeste[†4] when you write to her.[†5]

My dear Madam, Faithfully yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Johnstone.

To CHARLES LANMAN, 9 FEBRUARY 1868[†1]

Extract in Ernest Dawson North Catalogue No. 2 (Apr 1903); MS I p.; addressed Charles Lanman; dated 9 Feb 68.

My Dear Sir

I received your charming sketch[†2] at Washington, with great pleasure and admiration. Let me thank you for it heartily; as a beautiful suggestion of Nature associated with this Country, it shall have a quiet place on the walls of my house as long as I live.

Faithfully Yours Always
CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS PEASE,[†3] 9 FEBRUARY 1868

Text from MDGH, III, 248-9.

Baltimore, 9th February, 1868.

Dear Madam,

Mr. Dolby has not come between us, and I have received your letter. My answer to it is, unfortunately, brief. I am not coming to Cleveland or near it. Every evening on which I can possibly read during the remainder of my stay in the States is arranged for, and the fates divide me from "the big woman with two smaller ones in tow." So I send her my love (to be shared in by the two smaller ones, if she approve—but not otherwise), and seriously assure her that her pleasant letter has been most welcome.

Dear madam, faithfully your friend
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To JOHN RUSSELL YOUNG, 9 FEBRUARY 1868*

MS Library of Congress. Address: John Russell Young Esqre. | Office of "The New York Tribune" | New York City.

Baltimore Ninth February 1868

My Dear Mr. Young.

I thank you cordially for both your letters.

In reference to the first, I regret that I can give you no decided answer. It is my intention to take my final farewell of "Reading", in the principal towns of the United Kingdom, in a closing series. This will probably occupy the late Autumn and winter of this year, and the spring of next. While so engaged I cannot write. What I may do next in the way of fiction, or when I may do it, are questions, therefore, on which I cannot bind myself in any way. Even in the matter of advance sheets, I should consider it but right and fair to make the first offer to Messrs. Harper, who have purchased advance sheets on my own terms in previous instances.

I do not in the least believe that an international copyright between the United States and England will be recognized yet awhile.[†1] If I should be wrong in this infidelity, it would be far more agreeable to me to be wrong than right.

It would give me, for many reasons, real pleasure to become associated with the Tribune in any of its forms of publication. But I have told you without the least reserve how the case against it stands at present.

My Dear Mr. Young | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Russell Young Esquire

I purpose being in New York next Sunday night, and will then pick up the book on Mr. Lincoln (most interesting it will be to me), and write to the Biographer.[†2]

To LORD LYTTON, 10 FEBRUARY 1868

MS Lytton Papers.

Baltimore U.S. Monday 10th. Feb. | 1868

My Dear Lytton

Your letter of the 16th. of last month, caught me a day or two ago. The MS is not here. I have left it, locked up with some other private papers, at New York. I shall be there again on Sunday, and will then send it on by the next ensuing Cunard to the address of this note.

As you gave me no instructions to lay any stipulations on Mr. Booth, I did not feel myself at liberty to originate any. But before I communicated with him at all, I made enquiries concerning him (of an excellent authority) in Boston. I was assured that there was not the least doubt of his being a gentleman, and to be trusted. And I think the letter I sent you shows a delicate spirit.[†3]

I am going on in the same splendid way as at first.

My Dear Lytton | Ever affectionately Yours

CD.

To HENRY DICKENS, 11 FEBRUARY 1868

MS H. Le Roy Edgar.

Baltimore, US | Tuesday Eleventh February 1868

My Dear Harry

I should have written to you before now, but for constant and arduous occupation.

In reference to the cricket club's not being what it might be, I agree with you in the main. There are some things to be considered, however, which you have hardly taken into account. The first thing to be avoided, is, the slightest appearance of Patronage (one of the curses of England). The second thing to be avoided, is, the deprival of the men of their just right to manage their own affairs. I would rather have no club at all, than have either of these great mistakes made. The way out of them is this:—Call the men together, and explain to them that the club might be larger, richer, and better. Say that you think that more of the neighbouring gentlemen could be got to be playing members. That you submit to them that it would be better to have a Captain who could correspond with them, and talk to them, and in some sort manage them; and that, being perfectly acquainted with the Game, and having long played it at a great public school, you propose yourself as Captain, for the foregoing reasons. That you propose to them to make the subscription of Gentlemen Members at least double that of the working men—for no other reason than that the gentlemen can afford it better; but that both classes of members shall have exactly the same right of voting equally, in all that concerns the club. Say that you have consulted me upon the matter, and that I am of these opinions, and am ready to become chairman of the club, and to preside at their meetings, and to overlook its business affairs, and to give it Five Pounds a year, payable at the commencement of each season.[†1] Then, having brought them to this point, draw up the club's rules and regulations, amending them where they want amendment.

Discreetly done, I see no difficulty in this. But it can only be honorably and hopefully done by having the men together. And I would not have them at the Falstaff, but in the Hall or dining room; — the Servants' Hall, an excellent place. Whatever you do, let the men ratify: and let them feel their little importance, and at once perceive how much better the business begins to be done.

I am very glad to hear of the success of your Reading, and still more glad that you went at it in downright earnest. I should never have made my success in life if I had been shy of taking pains, or if I had not bestowed upon the least thing I have ever undertaken, exactly the same attention and care that I have bestowed upon the greatest. Do everything at your best. It was but this last year that I set to and learned every word of my Readings. And from ten years ago to last night, I have never read to an audience but I have watched for an opportunity of striking out something better somewhere. Look at some of my Manuscripts as are in the Library at Gad's, and think of the patient hours devoted year after year to single lines.

†a Mr. Brackenbury's praise of you as Head Censor†2 has been, I am certain, thoroughly well earned, and I am truly proud of it. I agree with you, as to your not going back after the time you mention. It will be much better to strengthen yourself for Cambridge in your weakest places, while you have that opportunity.†a

The weather is very severe here, and the work is very hard. Dolby, having been violently pitched into by the Mayor of Newhaven (a town at which I am to read next week) has gone bodily this morning with defiant written instructions from me to inform the said Mayor that if he fail to make out his case, he (Dolby) is to return all the money taken, and to tell him that I will not set foot in his jurisdiction. Whereupon the Newhaven people will probably fall upon the Mayor in his turn, and lead him a pleasant life.

Ever my Dear Harry | Your affectionate Father.

CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS MARY DICKENS, 11 FEBRUARY 1868

Extract in MDGH, 11, 354-6.

Baltimore, U.S., Tuesday, Feb. 11th, 1868.

The weather has been desperately severe, and my cold quite as bad as ever. I couldn't help laughing at myself on my birthday at Washington. It was observed as much as though I were a little boy. Flowers and garlands (of the most exquisite kind) bloomed all over the room; letters radiant with good wishes poured in; a shirt pin, a handsome silver travelling bottle, a set of gold shirt studs, and a set of gold sleeve links were on the dinner- table. After "Boots," at night,†1 the whole audience rose and remained (Secretaries of State, President's family, Judges of Supreme Court, and so forth) standing and cheering until I went back to the table and made them a little speech.†2 On the same august day of the year I was received by the President, a man with a very remarkable and determined face. Each of us looked at each other very hard, and each of us managed the interview (I think) to the satisfaction of the other. In the outer room was sitting a certain sunburnt General Blair, with many evidences of the war upon him. He got up to shake hands with me, and then I found he had been out in the prairie with me five-and-twenty years ago. That afternoon my "catarrh" was in such a state that Charles Sumner, coming in at five o'clock and finding me covered with mustard poultice, and apparently voiceless, turned to Dolby and said: "Surely, Mr. Dolby, it is impossible that he can read to-night." Says Dolby: "Sir, I have told the dear Chief so four times to-day, and I have been very anxious. But you have no idea how he will change when he gets to the little table." After five minutes of the little table, I was not (for the time) even hoarse. The frequent experience of this return of force when it is wanted saves me a vast amount of anxiety.

I wish you would get from Homan†3 and report to me, as near as he can make, an approximate estimate is the right term in the trade, I believe, of the following work:

1. To re-cover, with red leather, all the dining-room chairs.

2. To ditto, with green leather, all the library chairs and the couch.

3. To provide and lay down new Brussels carpets in the front spare and the two top spares. Quality of carpet, quality of yours and mine.

I have some doubts about the state of the hall floor-cloth, and also the floor-cloth in the dining-room. Will you and your aunt carefully examine both (calling in Homan too, if necessary), and report to me?

It would seem that "No Thoroughfare" has really developed as a drama into an amazing success. I begin to think that I shall see it. Dolby is away this morning, to conquer or die in a terrific struggle with the Mayor of Newhaven (where I am to read next week), who has assailed him on a charge of false play in selling tickets. Osgood, my other keeper, stands at the table to take me out, and have a "breather" for the walking-match, so I must leave off.

Think of my dreaming of Mrs. Bouncer[†1] each night!!!

To [GEORGE DOLBY],[†2] [10-11 FEBRUARY 1868]*

MS (fragment) Professor Laurence Senelick. Date: see To H.F. Dickens, 11 Feb written same day as that letter or day before. Address (envelope mention in C. F. Libbie catalogue, May 1902): PM Baltimore, 11 Feb 68.

I will read any other night with a new distribution of tickets of which the town approves. I will not read [ ][†3] with the old distribution, because that cannot be defended.[†4]

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 13 FEBRUARY 1868

Extract in MDGH, 11, 358-60.

Philadelphia, Thursday, Feb. 13th, 1868.

[†a] We have got into an immense difficulty with the people of Newhaven. I have a strong suspicion that one of our men (who sold there) has been speculating all this while, and that he must have put front seats in his pockets, and sold back ones. He denies what the mayor charges, but the mayor holds on grimly. Dolby set off from Baltimore as soon as we found out what was amiss, to examine and report; but some new feature of difficulty must have come out, for this morning he telegraphs from New York (where he had to sleep last night on his way to Newhaven), that he is coming back for further consultation with the Chief. It will certainly hurt us, and will of course be distorted by the papers into all manner of shapes. My suspicion may not be correct, but I have an instinctive belief that it is. We shall probably have the old New York row (and loss) over again, unless I can catch this mayor tripping in an assertion.

In this very place, we are half-distracted by the speculators. They have been holding out for such high prices, that the public have held out too; and now (frightened at what they have done) the speculators are trying to sell their worst seats at half the cost price, so that we are in the ridiculous situation of having sold the room out, and yet not knowing what empty seats there may be. We could sell at our box-office to any extent; but we can't buy back of the speculators, because we informed the public that all the tickets were gone. And if we bought under our own price and sold at our own price, we should at once be in treaty with the speculators, and should be making money by it! Dolby, the much bullied, will come back here presently, half bereft of his senses; and I should be half bereft of mine, if the situation were not comically disagreeable.[†a]

Nothing will induce the people to believe in the farewells. At Baltimore on Tuesday night (a very brilliant night indeed), they asked as they came out: "When will Mr. Dickens read here again?" "Never." "Nonsense! Not come back, after such houses as these? Come. Say when he'll read again." Just the same here. We could as soon persuade them that I am the President, as that I am going to read here, for the last time, to-morrow night.

There is a child of the Barney Williams's[†1] in this house—a little girl—to whom I presented a black doll when I was here last. I have seen her eye at the keyhole since I began writing this, and I think she and the doll are outside still. "When you sent it up to me by the coloured boy," she said after receiving it (coloured boy is the term for black waiter), "I gave such a cream that ma came running in and creamed too,' cos she fort I'd hurt myself. But I creamed a cream of joy." She had a friend to play with her that day, and brought the friend with her, to my infinite confusion. A friend all stockings, and much too tall, who sat on the sofa very far back, with her stockings sticking stiffly out in front of her, and glared at me and never spake word. Dolby found us confronted in a sort of fascination, like serpent and bird.

To FRANKLIN HOMAN, [?13 FEBRUARY 1868]

Mention in W.R. Hughes, A Week's Tramp in Dickens-Land, p. 85. Date: written "from America", according to Hughes; probably shortly after To Mary Dickens, 11 Feb; asking him to add to his previous request.

Describing in detail how he wished two Gad's Hill bedrooms to be furnished—one maple, the other white with a red stripe. The curtains separating them from the dressing-rooms were to be of Indian pattern chintz.[†2]

To JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL, 13 FEBRUARY 1868*

MS Houghton Library, Harvard.

Philadelphia, Thirteenth February | 1868.

My Dear Lowell

I shall be heartily pleased to sup with you on Wednesday the 26th. and am delighted to receive Fields's intelligence that you and your charming daughter[†1] will dine at the Match Dinner.[†2]

Believe me | Very faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To GEORGE W. CHILDS, 14 FEBRUARY 1868*

Text from unidentified catalogue in New York Public Library.

Philadelphia | Midnight, Fourteenth February 1868.

My Dear Mr. Childs

We have a telegram from Dolby which induces us to think that we had best start for New York on the 9:30 Train tomorrow, in order that we may catch him flying.

For the present Good Bye, | Faithfully Yours Ever

CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS J. T. FIELDS, 14 FEBRUARY 1868*

MS Rosenbach Museum and Library.

Philadelphia, Fourteenth February | 1868

My Dear Mrs. Fields.

The Bantam[†3] and I leave it to you to choose between the Saturday and the Sunday. Either day will be equally agreeable to us. The Man[†4] is not in the least likely to be with us at that time. Our people have got us into some profoundly unintelligible mess at Newhaven;[†5] it has occasioned him a great amount of additional travelling; and he will probably be at Buffalo or thereabouts when we come to Boston.

Will you kindly ask Massachusetts J[†6] to bear me in mind for a few good autographs of American writers? I am very desirous to take away with me a line and signature of Longfellow, Do. Lowell, Do. Whittier,[†7] Do. Holmes, and so forth. He will probably have opportunities of getting them done for me from day to day, easier to the victims than social occasions when I could invoke the Autographic Spectre.

The Readings seem to go better and better every night. But nothing will induce the people to believe that I am really taking Farewells.

With my best love to you and Fields, Believe me Ever

Affectionately Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To SEBASTIAN SCHLESINGER,[†1] 14 FEBRUARY 1868

MS Berg Collection.

Philadelphia, Fourteenth February | 1868.

My Dear Mr. Schlesinger.

I am afraid it is absolutely impossible that I can have the pleasure of dining with you at Boston, for want of a single free day. But I propose a treaty. Come and dine with me at the Parker House on Saturday the 29th. instead. You will meet some pleasant company, and the occasion is a facetious 12 mile walking match between Messrs. Osgood and Dolby.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To FRANCIS B. CARPENTER,[†2] 15 FEBRUARY 1868

Text from unidentified newspaper cutting in N. Paine scrapbook, American Antiquarian Society, Worcester.

Westminster Hotel | New York, Sunday 15th Feb. 1868

My Dear Sir,

I beg to thank you cordially for your "Inner Life of Abraham Lincoln".[†3] It has interested me exceedingly. I sat down quietly to read some pages of it an hour after I arrived here, and the book did not leave my hand till I had read it through to the last word.

Believe me, my dear sir, faithfully yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [?15-16 FEB 68]

Extract in F, X, ii, 787. Date: written at New York, according to Forster, to which he returned on 15 Feb.

Saying that he was having more troubles with the speculators. They involved even charges of fraud in ticket-sales at Newhaven and Providence;[†1] indignation meetings had been held by the Mayors and unavailing attempts made by Dolby to turn their wrath aside. I expect him back here presently half bereft of his senses,[†2] and I should be wholly bereft of mine if the situation were not comical as well as disagreeable. We can sell at our own box-office to any extent; but we cannot buy back of the speculators, because we have informed the public that all the tickets are gone; and even if we made the sacrifice of buying at their price and selling at ours, we should be accused of treating with them and of making money by it.

To LEWIS GAYLORD CLARK,[†3] 17 FEBRUARY 1868*

MS Beinecke Library, Yale University. Address: Lewis Gaylord Clarke Esqre.

Westminster Hotel, New York | Monday Seventeenth February 1868

My Dear Clarke

Since I came to New York first to read I have repeatedly been in trouble about you. You left a card here with no address upon it. I then enquired where the Knickerbocker office was and found that you had discontinued our old friend. I then asked (as I judge) all the wrong people for such a purpose, where you lived, and received the wildest answers. By chance this very day as I am passing through New York on my way East from Philadelphia, comes in Mr. Wetmore,[†4] to whom I propound the same question. He kindly undertakes—not to answer the question certainly, but to place this in your hands.

When I come back here, I hope and trust I shall see you. I am due in these latitudes on or about the 12th. of April. and re-embark from here on the 22nd. Meanwhile all letters addressed to me at this house are called for every day and forwarded on.

Believe me always | Faithfully yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Lewis Gaylord Clarke Esquire

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 17 FEBRUARY 1868

Text from MDGH, 11, 360-1.

New York, Monday, Feb. 17th, 1868.

I got your letter of the 3rd of February here this morning. As I am off at seven to-morrow morning, I answer it at once, though indeed I have nothing to say.

"True American"[†1] still sticking to me. But I am always ready for my work, and therefore don't much mind. Dolby and the Mayor of Newhaven alternately embrace and exchange mortal defiances. In writing out some advertisements towards midnight last night, he made a very good mistake. "The reading will be comprised within two minutes, and the audience are earnestly entreated to be seated ten hours before its commencement."

The weather has been finer lately, but the streets are in a horrible condition, through half-melted snow, and it is now snowing again. The walking-match (next Saturday week) is already in the Boston papers! I suppose half Boston will turn out on the occasion. As a sure way of not being conspicuous, "the men" are going to walk in flannel! They are in a mingled state of comicality and gravity about it that is highly ridiculous. Yesterday being a bright cool day, I took Dolby for a "buster" of eight miles. As everybody here knows me, the spectacle of our splitting up the fashionable avenue (the only way out of town) excited the greatest amazement. No doubt that will be in the papers to-morrow. I give a gorgeous banquet to eighteen (ladies and gentlemen) after the match. Mr. and Mrs. Fields, Do. Ticknor, Longfellow and his daughter,[†2] Lowell, Holmes[†3] and his wife,[†4] etc. etc. Sporting speeches to be made, and the stakes (four hats) to be handed over to the winner.

My ship will not be the Cuba after all. She is to go into dock, and the Russia (a larger ship, and the latest built for the Cunard line) is to take her place.

Very glad to hear of Plorn's success.[†5] Best love to Mamie.

To P. M. WETMORE, 17 FEBRUARY 1868*

Text transcribed from MS Lewis A. Hird Collection by Professor Edgar Johnson.

Westminster Hotel, New York
Seventeenth February 1868

My Dear Mr. Wetmore

I really cannot tell you how much pleasure it has given me to see you today, or how I look forward to seeing you again.

Enclosed is the note to Clarke, of which you kindly offered to take charge.

Believe me always | Very faithfully yours
CHARLES DICKENS

P. M. Wetmore Esquire

To W. H. WILLS, [?21 FEBRUARY 1868]

Mention in next. Date: probably written same day.

To W. H. WILLS, 21 FEBRUARY 1868

MS Huntington Library.

Providence,[†1] Friday Twenty First Feb. | 1868.

My Dear Wills.

In case you should not have discovered Lytton's Grosvenor Square No.[†2] I send you this second note by tomorrow's mail, to let you know that it is 12.

I have your letter about Holiday Romance, this morning. You will know before you get this, that it is all right. [†a] You will have seen too (I hope) [†b] my dear Patient,[†b†3] and will have achieved in so doing what I would joyfully give a Thousand Guineas to achieve myself at this present moment![†a]

Kelly[†4] has proved untrustworthy, and the instant[†5] he comes back from a mission he is now upon at Buffalo, I shall peremptorily and finally discharge him. That will probably be tomorrow. Dolby will write to you as soon as the man is displaced, telling you when the weekly payment made by the office on his account, is to cease and determine. Here is another Paragon found out! The fellow (speculating himself) is at the bottom of all the trouble we have had, and has not only made me appear in this town the most grasping and sordid scoundrel going, but has cost me in this one place £300.[†6]

It is curious that I conceived a great dislike towards this man, aboard the Cuba coming out. He was ill all the voyage, and I only saw him two or three times, staggering about the lower deck; but I underwent a change of feeling towards him, as if I had taken it in at the pores of the skin. Dolby had great confidence in him, and I have never suspected him until within the last few days; but an inscrutable item of complaint about the sale here, being brought in yesterday afternoon by Osgood, it suddenly fired a whole train in my mind and blew up the scheme. It became as intelligible to all three of us, after a few minutes, as to the concoctor himself.

Ever My Dear Boy | Affectionately Yours

CD.

To DR S. G. HOWE,[†1] 23 FEBRUARY 1868

MS Perkins Institute for the Blind.[†2]

Boston, Sunday Twenty Third February | 1868.

My Dear Dr. Howe.

Before I answer your letter[†3] will you have a calculation made, and kindly reply to the following question:—

What would be the cost of printing in raised letters for the use of the blind, an edition of—say 250, or 500 copies—of The Old Curiosity Shop?[†4]

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To CHARLES FECHTER, [24 FEBRUARY 1868]

Telegram. Mention in next. Sent to the Adelphi.

To CHARLES FECHTER, 24 FEBRUARY 1868

Text from MDGH, 11, 361-3.

Washington, February 24th, 1868.

My Dear Fechter,

Your letter reached me here yesterday. I have sent you a telegram (addressed to the theatre) this morning, and I write this by the earliest return mail.

My dear fellow, consider yourself my representative. Whatever you do, or desire to do, about the play,[†1] I fully authorise beforehand. Tell Webster, with my regard, that I think his proposal[†2] honest and fair; that I think it, in a word, like himself; and that I have perfect confidence in his good faith and liberality.

As to making money of the play in the United States here, Boucicault[†3] has filled Wilkie's head with golden dreams that have nothing in them. He makes no account of the fact that, wherever I go, the theatres (with my name in big letters) instantly begin playing versions of my books, and that the moment the Christmas number came over here they pirated it and played "No Thoroughfare." Now, I have enquired into the law, and am extremely doubtful whether I could have prevented this. Why should they pay for the piece as you act it, when they have no actors, and when all they want is my name, and they can get that for nothing?

Wilkie has uniformly written of you enthusiastically. In a letter I had from him, dated the 10th of January, he described your conception and execution of the part in the most glowing terms. "Here Fechter is magnificent." "Here his superb playing brings the house down." "I should call even his exit in the last act one of the subtlest and finest things he does in the piece." "You can hardly imagine what he gets out of the part, or what he makes of his passionate love for Marguerite." These expressions, and many others like them, crowded his letter.

I never did so want to see a character played on the stage as I want to see you play Obenreizer. As the play was going when I last heard of it, I have some hopes that I MAY see it yet. Please God, your Adelphi dressing-room will be irradiated with the noble presence of "Never Wrong" (if you are acting), about the evening of Monday, the 4th of May!

I am doing enormous business. It is a wearying life, away from all I love, but I hope that the time will soon begin to spin away. Among the many changes that I find here is the comfortable change that the people are in general extremely considerate, and very observant of my privacy. Even in this place, I am really almost as much my own master as if I were in an English country town. Generally, they are very good audiences indeed. They do not (I think) perceive touches of art to be art; but they are responsive to the broad results of such touches. "Doctor Marigold" is a great favourite, and they laugh so unrestrainedly at "The Trial" from "Pickwick" (which you never heard), that it has grown about half as long again as it used to be.

If I could send you a "brandy cocktail" by post I would. It is a highly meritorious dram, which I hope to present to you at Gad's. My New York landlord made me a "Rocky Mountain sneezer," which appeared to me to be compounded of all the spirits ever heard of in the world, with bitters, lemon, sugar, and snow. You can only make a true "sneezer" when the snow is lying on the ground.

There, my dear boy, my paper is out, and I am going to read "Copperfield." Count always on my fidelity and true attachment, and look out, as I have already said, for a distinguished visitor about Monday, the 4th of May.

Ever, my dear Fechter, | Your cordial and affectionate Friend

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To CHARLES ELIOT NORTON,[†1] 24 FEBRUARY 1868*

MS Houghton Library, Harvard.

Boston, Monday Twenty Fourth February | 1868

My Dear Norton

I am very sorry that I cannot have the pleasure—a real and true pleasure to me—of complying with any request of yours; but I cannot give Mr. Akers[†2] the opportunity he seeks. To have an easel set up here on any terms, or under the most considerate of circumstances, and to know that I was in the act of sitting, would simply worry me to that extent that I should be perfectly unfit for the evening's business. It is at all times an operation of which I have an unspeakable abhorrence. To submit to it while engaged in a course of Readings, would be equivalent to driving the words out of my head, the characters out of my mind, the voice out of my body, and I don't know what else of a dismal nature. Bear with your friend's weakness, and let him have his easel without an I in it!

I hope to see you this evening. Meanwhile I send you this plaintive cry and forlorn utterance.

Ever Affectionately Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS MARY DICKENS, 25 FEBRUARY 1868

Extract in MDGH, 11, 363-4.

Boston, Tuesday, Feb. 25th, 1868.

It is so very difficult to know, by any exercise of common sense, what turn or height the political excitement[†3] may take next, and it may so easily, and so soon, swallow up all other things, that I think I shall suppress my next week's readings here (by good fortune not yet announced) and watch the course of events. Dolby's sudden desponding under these circumstances is so acute, that it is actually swelling his head as I glance at him in the glass while writing.

The catarrh is no better and no worse. The weather is intensely cold. The walking-match (of which I will send particulars) is to come off on Sunday. Mrs. Fields is more delightful than ever, and Fields more hospitable. My room is always radiant with brilliant flowers of their sending. I don't know whether I told you that the walking-match is to celebrate the extinction of February, and the coming of the day when I can say "next month."

To JOHN FORSTER, [25 FEBRUARY 1868]

Extract in F, x, ii, 788. Date: 25 Feb 68, according to Forster.

It is as well that the money has flowed in hitherto so fast, for I have a misgiving that the great excitement about the President's impeachment will damage our receipts . . . . The vote was taken at 5 last night. At 7 the three large theatres here, all in a rush of good business, were stricken with paralysis. At 8 our long line of outsiders waiting for unoccupied places, was nowhere. To-day you hear all the people in the streets talking of only one thing. I shall suppress my next week's promised readings (by good fortune, not yet announced), and watch the course of events. Nothing in this country, as I before said, lasts long; and I think it likely that the public may be heartily tired of the President's name by the 9th of March, when I read at a considerable distance from here.[†1] So behold me with a whole week's holiday in view!

To MISS ELLEN TERNAN, [25 FEBRUARY 1868]

Mention in next. Date: no doubt written same day.

To W. H. WILLS, 25 FEBRUARY 1868†

MS Huntington Library.

Boston, Tuesday Twenty Fifth February 1868.

My Dear Wills.

[†a]"From the same to the same."[†2] Enclosed.[†a]

It is especially lucky that I made so much money at first, for this Impeachment[†3] of the President which you will have known of long before you get this (the vote was taken at five yesterday afternoon), will, for the time, probably override and over-throw everything in this country. It instantly emptied our great gallery here last night, and paralyzed the Theatres in the midst of a rush of good business.

[†b] The Numbers have been so excellent since I left, that I "hesitate dislike"[†4] with great reluctance. But I would not have had that reference made to the Queen's preposterous book[†5] (I have read it) for any money. I blush to join the Shameful lick-spittle Chorus. It is amazing to me, knowing my opinions on such matters, that you could have passed it.[†b]

I think of striking out next week's Readings here[†1] (not yet announced), and giving the political uproar and excitement that much time to take a distinct direction and be intelligible to a foreigner. This business of the War Secretary[†2] is the result of a deliberate plan on the part of the President, to bring the question between him and Congress to an issue. I was confidentially forewarned of it at Washington, 18 days ago.

Love to Mrs Wills. Ever My Dear boy | Your affectionate

CD

To J. T. FIELDS, 27 FEBRUARY 1868

MS Berg Collection.

Boston, Thursday Evg. Twenty Seventh Feby.|1868.

My Dear Fields

Dolby will tell you that †a I have been terrifying him nearly out of his wits by setting in for a paroxysm of sneezing, since dinner. It would be madness in me, with such a cold, and on such a night, and with tomorrow's reading†3 before me, to go out†a†4 after to night's Reading.†5 I have charged Dolby with a little note to Longfellow, explaining. If you want to get home, don't wait to come round to me. But I need not add that I shall be heartily glad to see you if you have time.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To MRS J. T. FIELDS, [27 FEBRUARY 1868]

Extract in Annie Fields's diary (George Curry, CD and Annie Fields, p. 14). Date: the day of the Fields's supper for Longfellow: see last.

Excusing himself from going to supper because he was really ill after his long, difficult reading of Boots and the Carol.

To HENRY WADSWORTH LONGFELLOW, 27 FEBRUARY 1868

MS Houghton Library, Harvard.

Boston, Thursday Twenty Seventh February | 1868

My Dear Longfellow

I wish you from my deepest heart many many happy returns of this day—a precious one to the civilized world—and all earthly happiness and prosperity. God bless you my dear friend! I hope to welcome you at Gad's Hill this next summer, and to give you the heartiest reception there that the undersigned village blacksmith can strike out of his domestic anvil.

Dolby will report that I have been terrifying him by sneezing melodiously for the last halfhour. The moment there is a fall from the sky, this national catarrh gives me an extra grip.†1 I dare not come to Fields's tonight, having to read tomorrow; but you shall in my flowing cups (or sneezes) be especially remembered†2 after to night's Reading. Even your imagination cannot conceive how admiringly, tenderly, and truly.†3

Ever Your affectionate

CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 27 and 28 FEBRUARY 1868†

MS Huntington Library.

Boston, | Thursday Twenty Seventh February 1868

My Dearest Georgy. This morning at breakfast I received yours of the 11th. from Palace Gate House.[†4] I have very little news to give you in return for your budget. The walking match is to come off on Saturday,[†5] and Fields and I went over the ground yesterday to measure the miles. We went at a tremendous pace. The condition of the ground is something indescribable, from half-melted snow, running water, and sheets and blocks of ice. The two performers have not the faintest notion of the weight of the task they have undertaken. I give a dinner afterwards—a dinner of 18—and have just now been settling the bill of fare and selecting the wines.

In the first excitement of the Presidential impeachment, our houses instantly went down. After carefully considering the subject, I decided to take advantage of the fact that next week's 4[†6] readings here have not yet been announced, and to abolish them altogether. Nothing in this country lasts long, and I think the public may be heartily tired of the President's name by the 9th. of March when I read at a considerable distance from here. So behold me with a whole week's holiday in view! The Boston audiences have come to regard the Readings and the Reader as their peculiar property; and you could be at once amused and pleased if you could see the curious way in which they seem to plume themselves on both. They have taken to applauding too, whenever they laugh or cry, and the result is very inspiriting. I shall remain here until Saturday the 7th. but shall not read here, after to morrow night, until the 1st. of April when I begin my Boston Farewells—six in number.

[†a] I am quite clear in my own mind that Kelly has been at the bottom of all the mishaps attending our sales of tickets, and I know to a positive certainty that he has taken bribes. Last Sunday, therefore, I peremptorily dismissed him. But seeing that Dolby was uneasy about it, I have consented to keep him on, within very reduced limits. I take no notice of him whatever, and he is much depressed. At Providence (where he sold) he swore, for his own purposes of course, that he had express instructions not to sell fewer than 6 tickets to any one person!! the consequence was, that there was an immense amount of indignation in the town when we got there, and I had to make a speech. The people behaved with extraordinary forbearance, and fell into the sweetest of tempers on the shortest notice. I never saw such ready good nature under such intolerable treatment. I referred to "a subordinate person in my employment," expressly that they might not suppose it was Dolby—who stood in the wing looking on. But of course the paragraph perpetually springs up in the papers all over the country that "Dickens has smashed Dolby", and the like. One of the drollest things in its way that I have ever encountered, is the intense indignation of the West, because I don't go there. Chicago leads the assault[†1] with affecting pictures of my "brother's[†2] wife[†3] and her helpless children"[†4] &c. &c. But the finest thing of all is that they have no mercy whatever upon Dolby—as if he could have dragged me there by the collar, if he chose—and pound him through all their columns every day. This reminds me that one paper in announcing the birth of his child and our telegraphing and all the rest of it, had a very good heading:—"Dickens's Dolby's Dolby". You may suppose that I never see these papers, but only[†a]

†b[

Friday Twenty Eighth

It has been snowing all night, and the City is in a miserable condition. We had a fine house last night for Carol and Trial, and such an enthusiastic one that they persisted in a call after the Carol, and, while I was out, covered the little table with flowers. The true American has taken a fresh start, as if it were quite a novelty, and is on the whole rather worse than ever to day. The Cunard Packet, the Australasian (a poor ship) is some days overdue, and Dolby is anxiously looking out for her. There is a lull in the excitement about the President; but the articles of Impeachment are to be produced this afternoon, and then it may set in again. Osgood came into camp last night from selling in remote places, and reports that at Rochester and Buffalo (both places near the frontier) Canada people bought tickets, who had struggled across the frozen river and clambered over all sorts of obstructions to get †c them. Some of those halls turn out to be smaller than represented, but I have no doubt, to use an American expression, that we shall "get along."†c

†d[ ] fou[nd] [ ] by this time. What a mad business [alto]gether from first to last, and what a mad woman!†1 Poor old Mrs. Collins,†2 and poor Wilkie.†3 A serial story on hand,†4 and rheumatism in the eyes!†d†5

Tomorrow fortnight we purpose being at the Falls of Niagara, and then we shall turn back and really begin to wind up. I have got to know the Carol so well, that I can't remember it, and occasionally go dodging about in the wildest manner, to pick up lost pieces. They took it so tremendously last night that I was stopped every five minutes. One poor young girl in mourning burst into a passion of grief about Tiny Tim, and was taken out. This is all my news.

Best love to Mamie, Katie and Charley, and all.

Ever My Dearest Georgy | Your most affectionate

CD.

Each of the Pedestrians is endeavouring to persuade the other to take something unwholesome before starting.

To MISS ELLEN TERNAN, [28 FEBRUARY 1868]

Mention in next. Date: no doubt written same day.

To W.H. WILLS, 28 FEBRUARY 1868†

MS Huntington Library.

Boston, Friday Twenty Eighth February 1868

My Dear Wills.

†a Toujours from the same to the same.†a†1

I also enclose a curious article (written for the Atlantic Monthly†2) on the Poison of the Rattlesnake. You may publish in A. Y. R. any day after the 20th. of March.†3

As Dolby was uneasy about Kelly's dismissal, I have consented to keep him on, within narrower limits, until we come back.

I have decided to give myself a holiday next week. My next week's readings here were not announced when the Impeachment broke out again, and caused great excitement. As I am coming back here on the 1st. of April for 6 Farewells, I thought it best (under the exceptional circumstances of the time) to abolish next week's nights. We had a fine house last night for Carol and Trial, and a tremendous call between the two. I responded to it, and when I came in again they had covered my table with lovely flowers.

Very sorry to hear of Wilkie's having been so ill.†4 Pray give him my love, and tell him that I earnestly hope he is much better.

Our tickets at Rochester and Buffalo were sold this week. People came out of Canada, struggling on foot across the frozen river and climbing over great iceblocks, to buy some!

With love to Mrs. Wills | Ever affectionately

CD.

March

To MISS MARY DICKENS, 2 MARCH 1868

Extract in MDGH, 11, 366-7.

Boston, Monday, March 2nd, 1868.

A very heavy gale of wind and a snowstorm oblige me to write suddenly for the Cunard steamer a day earlier than usual. The railroad between this and New York will probably be stopped somewhere. After all the hard weather we have had, this is the worst day we have seen.

The walking-match†1 came off on Saturday, over tremendously difficult ground, against a biting wind, and through deep snow-wreaths. It was so cold, too, that our hair, beards, eyelashes, eyebrows, were frozen hard, and hung with icicles. The course was thirteen miles. They were close together at the turning-point, when Osgood went ahead at a splitting pace and with extraordinary endurance, and won by half a mile. Dolby did very well indeed, and begs that he may not be despised. In the evening I gave a very splendid dinner.†2 Eighteen covers, most magnificent flowers, such table decoration as was never seen in these parts. The whole thing was a great success, and everybody was delighted.

I am holiday-making until Friday, when we start on the round of travel that is to bring us back here for the 1st of April. My holiday-making is simply thorough resting, except on Wednesday, when I dine with Longfellow. There is still great political excitement, but I hope it may not hurt us very much. My fear is that it may damage the farewell. Dolby is not of my mind as to this, and I hope he may be right. We are not quite determined whether Mrs. Fields did not desert our colours, by coming on the ground in a carriage, and having bread soaked in brandy put into the winning man's mouth as he steamed along. She pleaded that she would have done as much for Dolby, if he had been ahead, so we are inclined to forgive her. As she had done so much for me in the way of flowers, I thought I would show her a sight in that line at the dinner. You never saw anything like it. Two immense crowns; the base, of the choicest exotics; and the loops, oval masses of violets. In the centre of the table an immense basket, overflowing with enormous bell-mouthed lilies; all round the table a bright green border of wreathed creeper, with clustering roses at intervals; a rose for every button-hole, and a bouquet for every lady. They made an exhibition of the table before dinner to numbers of people.

P. H.[†3] has just come in with a newspaper, containing a reference (in good taste!) to the walking-match. He posts it to you by this post.

It is telegraphed that the storm prevails over an immense extent of country, and is just the same at Chicago as here. I hope it may prove a wind-up. We are getting sick of the sound of sleigh-bells even.

Your account of Anne has greatly interested me.

To MRS J. T. FIELDS, 3 MARCH 1868

MS (copy)[†1] Huntington Library.

Boston Tuesday Third March 1868

My dear Mrs. Fields.

Many thanks for your charming note and for the Life and Letters of Wilder Dwight.[†2] I shall "save up" that book to read on the passage home. After turning over the leaves, I have shut it up and put it away; for I am a great reader at sea, and wish to reserve the interest that I find awaiting me in the personal following of the sad war. Good God, when one stands among the hearths that war has broken, what an awful consideration it is that such a tremendous evil must be sometimes!

ever affectionately yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To CHARLES ELIOT NORTON, 3 MARCH 1868*

MS Houghton Library, Harvard. Address: C. E. Norton Esqre | Cambridge | Mass.

Boston, Tuesday Third March 1868

My Dear Norton

A thousand thanks for your kind note. Be sure that I would "rather" not rest this week, and that it is any thing but my best pleasure to do it. But as I shall be incessantly occupied from Monday next until I embark, and as I am coming out to Cambridge to dine with Longfellow tomorrow,[†3] and as I start for Syracuse and where not on Friday,[†4] a grim conviction comes upon me that I must lie by on Thursday. I yield to it in the most ungracious manner possible; but even Dolby (who has been looking forward to dining with you and is very sensible of your remembrance of him) admits that it involves the one small chance of casting out this demoniacal catarrh.

With kindest regard
Believe me always | Affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To W. H. WILLS, [? EARLY MARCH 1868]

Mention in To Wills, 16 Mar.

To CHARLES FECHTER, 8 MARCH 1868

Text from MDGH, III, 368-70.

Syracuse, U. S. of America, | Sunday Night, March 8th, 1868.

My Dear Fechter

I am here in a most wonderful out-of-the-world place, which looks as if it had begun to be built yesterday, and were going to be imperfectly knocked together with a nail or two the day after to-morrow. I am in the worst inn that ever was seen, and outside is a thaw that places the whole country under water. I have looked out of window for the people, and I can't find any people. I have tried all the wines in the house, and there are only two wines, for which you pay six shillings a bottle, or fifteen, according as you feel disposed to change the name of the thing you ask for. (The article never changes.) The bill of fare is "in French," and the principal article (the carte is printed) is "Paettie de shay." I asked the Irish waiter what this dish was, and he said: "It was the name the steward giv' to oyster patties—the Frinch name." These are the drinks you are to wash it down with: "Mooseux," "Abasinthe," "Curacco," "Marschine," "Annise," and "Margeaux"!

I am growing very home-sick, and very anxious for the 22nd of April; on which day, please God, I embark for home. I am beginning to be tired, and have been depressed all the time (except when reading), and have lost my appetite. I cannot tell you—but you know, and therefore why should I?—how overjoyed I shall be to see you again, my dear boy, and how sorely I miss a dear friend, and how sorely I miss all art, in these parts. No disparagement to the country, which has a great future in reserve, or to its people, who are very kind to me.

I mean to take my leave of readings in the autumn and winter, in a final series in England with Chappell.[†1] This will come into the way of literary work for a time, for, after I have rested—don't laugh—it is a grim reality—I shall have to turn my mind to—ha! ha! ha!—to—ha! ha! ha! (more sepulchrally than before)—the—the CHRISTMAS NUMBER!!![†2] I feel as if I had murdered a Christmas number years ago (perhaps I did!) and its ghost perpetually haunted me. Nevertheless in some blessed rest at Gad's, we will talk over stage matters, and all matters, in an even way, and see what we can make of them, please God. Be sure that I shall not be in London one evening, after disembarking, without coming round to the theatre to embrace you, my dear fellow.

I have had an American cold (the worst in the world) since Christmas Day. I read four times a week, with the most tremendous energy I can bring to bear upon it. I travel about pretty heavily. I am very resolute about calling on people, or receiving people, or dining out, and so save myself a great deal. I read in all sorts of places—churches, theatres, concert rooms, lecture halls. Every night I read I am described (mostly by people who have not the faintest notion of observing) from the sole of my boot to where the topmost hair of my head ought to be, but is not. Sometimes I am described as being "evidently nervous;" sometimes it is rather taken ill that "Mr. Dickens is so extraordinarily composed." My eyes are blue, red, grey, white, green, brown, black, hazel, violet, and rainbow-coloured. I am like "a well-to-do American gentleman," and the Emperor of the French, with an occasional touch of the Emperor of China, and a deterioration from the attributes of our famous townsman, Rufus W. B. D. Dodge Grumsher Pickville. I say all sorts of things that I never said, go to all sorts of places that I never saw or heard of, and have done all manner of things (in some previous state of existence I suppose) that have quite escaped my memory. You ask your friend to describe what he is about. This is what he is about, every day and hour of his American life.

I hope to be back with you before you write to me!

Ever, my dear Fechter, | Your most affectionate and hearty Friend

[CHARLES DICKENS]

P. S.—Don't let Madame Fechter,[†1] or Marie, or Paul[†2] forget me!

To J. T. FIELDS, 8 MARCH 1868†

MS Dartmouth College, New Hampshire.

Syracuse[†3] Sunday Eighth March 1868

My Dear Fields

[†a] Will you kindly take such charge of the enclosed[†4] as that it may reach its destination?[†a]

We came here yesterday, most comfortably, in a "drawing room car": of which (Rule Britannia!) we bought exclusive possession. Syracuse is rather a depressing feather in the Eagle's wing, when considered on a Sunday and in a thaw. Its' Hotel[†5] is likewise a dreary Institution. But I have an impression that we must be in the wrong one, and buoy myself up with a devout belief in the other, over the way. The awakening to consciousness this morning on a lop sided bedstead facing nowhere, in a room holding nothing but sour dust, was more terrible than the being afraid to go to bed last night. To keep ourselves up, we played whist (double dummy) until neither of us could bear to speak to the other any more. We had previously supped on a tough old nightmare, named Buffalo.

What do you think of a "fowl de poulet"? or a Paettie de Shay"? or "Celary"? or "Murange with Cream"? Because all these delicacies are in the printed bill of fare! If Mrs Fields†1 would like the Recipe How to make a "Paettie de Shay", telegraph instantly and the Recipe shall be purchased. We asked the Irish waiter what this dish was, and he said it was "the frinch name the steward giv' to Oyster pattie". It is usually washed down, I believe, with "Mooseux", or "Table Maderia", or "Abasinthe" or "Curraco", all of which drinks are on the wine list. I mean to drink my love to Mrs Fields†1 after dinner in Moosseux. Your ruggeder nature shall be pledged in abasinthe.

Ever affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

†a Dolby's regard, and he is out of spirits.†a

To MRS CHARLES COLLINS, [8 MARCH 1868]

Mention in To Miss Hogarth, 8-9 Mar. Date: no doubt written same day.

To HENRY WADSWORTH LONGFELLOW, 8 MARCH 1868

MS Houghton Library, Harvard.

Syracuse, Sunday Eighth March 1868

My Dear Longfellow.

I shall be truly delighted to dine with you and my other dear Boston friends, on Thursday the 9th. of next month at the Union Clubhouse at Six o'Clock. Nothing could be more pleasant to me than such an invitation so conveyed.†2

Ever affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Henry W. Longfellow Esquire

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 8-9 MARCH 1868†

MS Huntington Library.

Syracuse, Sunday Eighth March 1868

My Dearest Georgy. As we shall probably be busy all day tomorrow, I write this today, though it will not leave New York until Wednesday. This is a very grim place in a heavy thaw, and a most depressing. The Hotel also is surprisingly bad—quite a triumph in that way. †a It has a wonderful printed bill of Fare. What do you think of a "Chicken de pullet"? Or "Turpin Soup"? Or "Rolard mutton"? Or would you prefer a

"Paettie de Shay"? When I came to this wonderful dish last night, I asked the Irish Waiter what it was? He said "It was the name the steward giv' to Oyster Patty." I asked him if Shay was french for Oysters? He said "It might be, for anythin' he knowed." I asked him if the Steward had ever been in France? To which he replied with a broad grin, "Divvle he Sir!" You wash down these choice dishes with copious draughts of "Mooseux", "Abasinthe", "Curraco", "Marschine", "Annise", "Margeaux", "Barkley and Perkin's quarts", and "Jone's Porter", all of which are on the Wine List. When we had exhausted this subject today, as the sun was shining we went out for a walk. The whole country being under water with melting snow,[†a] we stood it out for an hour and came in again, having to change completely. [†a] Then we looked out of window for the people of the town. No people.[†a] Then we came in again, and sat down by the stove (no fireplace) and there we are now.

We were so afraid to go to bed last night (the rooms were so close and sour) that we played whist, Double Dummy, till we couldn't bear each other any longer. We had an old Buffalo for supper, and an old Pig for breakfast, and we are going to have I don't know what for dinner at 6. In the public rooms down stairs, a number of men (speechless) are sitting in rocking-chairs with their feet against the window-frames, staring out at window and spitting dolefully at intervals. Scott is in tears, and George the gasman is suborning people to go and clean the Hall which is a marvel of dirt. And yet we have taken considerably over £300 for tomorrow night.

We were at Albany the night before last, and yesterday morning: a very pretty town where I am to read on the 18th. and 19th. This day week, we hope to wash out this establishment with the Falls of Niagara. And there is my news:-except that your last letters to me in America must be posted by the Cunard Steamer which will sail from Liverpool on Saturday the 4th. of April. These I shall be safe to get, before embarking.

[†a] You cannot imagine the frenzy of Chicago at being left out of the Readings— as I am heartily glad they are! They have not only discovered that my "brother's wife and her indigent children" are living neglected there,[†1] but have (I mean the Chicago papers) circulated a notice that a certain actor who imitates me is "going to give a Reading for their benefit."![†2] Whether, as Jo says, this is so or son't, is being discussed through the whole Press. Of course my lips are sealed. Osgood and Dolby have been really lashed into madness, and but for my strict charge would have blown the whole thing to pieces, regardless of every other consideration. I have imposed silence on them, and they really writhe under it.

Highly characteristic of Mrs. Forster[†3] about the Dusters! The Tennents[†4] just as I should have supposed. Mrs. White's[†5] holding on to Bonchurch is quite as much a disease as the sad inheritance into which Jemmy[†1] is fast coming. Otherwise it would be inconceivable and monstrous.

As I shall not post this till tomorrow, I will leave it open in the meantime, in case I should have any thing more to add. It has been necessary to "wake up Scott", as Dolby says, pretty considerably. Of late, in the business of starting and getting the luggage into the train, he has been utterly helpless, and has simply stood still and wept. On his doing this at Albany yesterday morning, Dolby "woke him up" in a very vigorous manner, swearing at him all over the Station and demanding to know whether he wanted a boy kept for him. He shewed a disposition to be impertinent at the time, I noticed: so when he came into my room this morning, I took him in hand, and gave him a quiet dig or two that made him wince again. After breakfast he apologized to Dolby and said he was very sorry. Dolby merely replied (I overheard the conversation) "Ve-e-ery well. Don't you do it again, that's a-a-all. Because you told me yesterday, perhaps you had better go home. And if you tell me that again, I am d-a-a-amned if you won't go home,—and at your own expence too, Instead of Mr. Di-i-i-*ick*ens's" The truth is, that anyone will treat them to drink, if they choose to take it; and that when we leave the house, they have the "run of the Bar", at exactly the wrong time, and "Our dear Henry" (as Osgood calls him) has not a head strong enough for two pressures at once.[†a]

I send a note to Katie (addressed to Mamie) by this Mail. I wrote to Harry some weeks ago, stating to him on what principles he must act in re-modelling the Cricket Club, if he would secure success. Best love to Mamie and to all.

[†a] Ever My Dearest Georgy | Your most affectionate

CD.[†a]

Monday Morning, Ninth

Nothing new. Weather cloudy, and town more dismal than yesterday. It froze again last night, and thaws again this morning. Dolby has signs of some skin-disease in the foot, and I have what the Eastern people would call "Kiender 'ruption" on my right leg. Somebody sent me an Australian newspaper this morning—some Citizen of Syracuse I mean—because of a paragraph in it, describing the taking of two freebooters, at which taking Alfred[†2] was present— though I do not make out that he had any thing in the world to do with it, except having his name pressed into the service of the newspaper.

To J. R. OSGOOD, 11 MARCH 1868

Text from the Critic, 29 June 1895; dated Buffalo, 11 Mar 58.

My Dear Osgood.

I find your letter here this afternoon containing Miss Field's heads of inquiry.[†3] No English publisher would purchase advance sheets of a second edition,[†4]

however revised and enlarged. The points on which I think Miss Field a little wrong are points requiring study and experience to rate at their proper value. I will hint at them very generally.

As I have to make the characters stand out prominently and separately, and as they are not before the audience, and as I am, what I have to do in the level reading is to suppress myself as much as possible.

If I were to express myself with the force and individuality I should throw into a speech, does she not see that I must subtract so much from the characters? Concerning omitted portions of the text, can she imagine it possible that they are half so dear to any one as to me? And does she not see that such omissions are concessions to the inexorable claims of Time; the limit being two hours? The point of Steerforth's difference of manner in addressing Mr. Peggoty and in addressing Ham is the point of all others that is seized by the two best audiences I know—Paris and Edinburgh. Is she quite sure, sitting in the first, second, or third row, that she does not take such a thing from her own little point of observation, and that she makes artistic allowances enough for what it is to be when it reaches the end of the caravan in a great desert like the Steinway Hall?

In haste, faithfully yours,
CHARLES DICKENS.

J. R. Osgood, Esq.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 12 MARCH 1868

Extract in MDGH, 11, 371-2.

Buffalo, Thursday, March 12th, 1868.

I hope this may be in time for next Saturday's mail; but this is a long way from New York, and rivers are swollen with melted snow, and travelling is unusually slow.

Just now (two o'clock in the afternoon) I received your sad news of the death of poor dear Chauncy.[†1] It naturally goes to my heart. It is not a light thing to lose such a friend, and I truly loved him. In the first unreasonable train of feeling, I dwelt more than I should have thought possible on my being unable to attend his funeral.[†2] I know how little this really matters; but I know he would have wished me to be there with real honest tears for his memory, and I feel it very much. I never, never, never was better loved by man than I was by him, I am sure. Poor dear fellow, good affectionate gentle creature.

I have not as yet received any letter from Henri,[†3] nor do I think he can have written to New York by your mail. I believe that I am—I know that I was—one of the executors. In that case Mr. Jackson, his agent, will either write to me very shortly on Henri's information of my address, or enquiry will be made at Gad's or at the office about it.

It is difficult for me to write more just now. The news is a real shock at such a distance, and I must read to-night, and I must compose my mind. Let Mekitty[†1] know that I received her violets with great pleasure, and that I sent her my best love and my best thanks.

On the 25th of February I read "Copperfield" and "Bob" at Boston. Either on that very day, or very close upon it, I was describing his (Townshend's) house to Fields, and telling him about the great Danby[†2] picture that he should see when he came to London.

To LEVERETT SALSTONSTALL,[†3] 14 MARCH [1868]

Mention in American Book Prices Current, 1967, p. 1108; MS 2 pp.; dated Fuller Hotel, 14 Mar [68] (misdated c. 1867 in catalogue); addressed Leverett Salstonstall.

Declining an invitation.

To MISS MARY DICKENS, 16 MARCH 1868

Extract in MDGH, 11, 372-73.

Rochester, Sunday, March 16th, 1868.

I found yours of the 28th February, when I came back here last night. We have had two brilliant sunny days at Niagara, and have seen that wonderful place under the finest circumstances.

Enclosed I return you Homan's estimate; let all that work be done, including the curtains.

As to the hall, I have my doubts whether one of the parqueted floors made by Aaron Smith's, of Bond Street,[†4] ought not to be better than tiles, for the reason that perhaps the nature of the house's construction might render the "bed" necessary for wooden flooring more easy to be made than the "bed" necessary for tiles. I don't think you can do better than call in the trusty Lillie[†5] to advise. Decide with your aunt on which appears to be better, under the circumstances. Have estimate made for cash, select patterns and colours, and let the work be done out of hand. (Here's a prompt order; now I draw breath.) Let it be thoroughly well done—no half measures.

There is a great thaw all over the country here, and I think it has done the catarrh good. I am to read at the famous Newhaven[†6] on Tuesday, the 24th. I hope without a row, but cannot say. The readings are running out fast now, and we are growing very restless.

This is a short letter, but we are pressed for time. It is two o'clock, and we dine at three, before reading. Tomorrow we rise at six, and have eleven hours' railway or so. We have now come back from our farthest point, and are steadily working towards home.

To JOHN FORSTER, [13 and 16 MARCH 1868]

Extracts in F, X, ii, 789-791. Date: first extract, from Buffalo, 13 Mar 68, according to Forster; second extract, from Rochester, part of same letter, 18 Mar, according to Forster; but he was only in Rochester (for his second reading) 15-17 Mar, and 16 Mar (as given in N) almost certainly right.

We go to the Falls of Niagara to-morrow for our own pleasure; and I take all the men, as a treat. We found Rochester last Tuesday[†1] in a very curious state. Perhaps you know that the Great Falls of the Genessee River (really very fine, even so near Niagara) are at that place. In the height of a sudden thaw, an immense bank of ice above the rapids refused to yield; so that the town was threatened (for the second time in four years) with submersion. Boats were ready in the streets, all the people were up all night, and none but the children slept. In the dead of night a thundering noise was heard, the ice gave way, the swollen river came raging and roaring down the Falls, and the town was safe.[†2] Very picturesque! but "not very good for business," as the manager says. Especially as the hall stands in the centre of danger, and had ten feet of water in it on the last occasion of flood. But I think we had above £200 English. On the previous night at Syracuse—a most out of the way and unintelligible-looking place with apparently no people in it—we had £375 odd. Here we had, last night, and shall have to-night, whatever we can cram into the hall.[†3]

This Buffalo has become a large and important town, with numbers of German and Irish in it. But it is very curious to notice, as we touch the frontier, that the American female beauty dies out; and a woman's face clumsily compounded of German, Irish, Western America, and Canadian, not yet fused together, and not yet moulded, obtains instead. Our show of Beauty at night is, generally, remarkable; but we had not a dozen pretty women in the whole throng last night, and the faces were all blunt. I have just been walking about, and observing the same thing. in the streets. . . . The winter has been so severe, that the hotel on the English side at Niagara (which has the best view of the Falls, and is for that reason very preferable) is not yet open.[†1] So we go, perforce, to the American:[†2] which telegraphs back to our telegram: "all Mr. Dickens's requirements perfectly understood." I have not yet been in more than two very bad inns. I have been in some, where a good deal of what is popularly called "slopping round" has prevailed; but have been able to get on very well. "Slopping round," so used, means untidyness and disorder. It is a comically expressive phrase, and has many meanings. Fields was asking the price of a quarter-cask of sherry the other day. "`Wa'al Mussr Fields,' the merchant replies, `that varies according to quality, as is but nay'tral. If yer wa'ant a sherry just to slop round with it, I can fix you some at a very low figger.'"

After two most brilliant days at the Falls of Niagara, we got back here last night. To-morrow morning we turn out at 6 for a long railway journey back to Albany. But it is nearly all "back" now, thank God! I don't know how long, though, before turning, we might have gone on at Buffalo. . . . We went everywhere at the Falls, and saw them in every aspect. There is a suspension bridge across, now, some two miles or more from the Horse Shoe; and another, half a mile nearer, is to be opened in July. They are very fine but very ticklish, hanging aloft there, in the continual vibration of the thundering water: nor is one greatly reassured by the printed notice that troops must not cross them at step, that bands of music must not play in crossing, and the like. I shall never forget the last aspect in which we saw Niagara yesterday. We had been everywhere, when I thought of struggling (in an open carriage) up some very difficult ground for a good distance, and getting where we could stand above the river, and see it, as it rushes forward to its tremendous leap, coming for miles and miles. All away to the horizon on our right was a wonderful confusion of bright green and white water. As we stood watching it with our faces to the top of the Falls, our backs were towards the sun. The majestic valley below the Falls, so seen through the vast cloud of spray, was made of rainbow. The high banks, the riven rocks, the forests, the bridge, the buildings, the air, the sky, were all made of rainbow. Nothing in Turner's finest water-colour drawings, done in his greatest day, is so ethereal, so imaginative, so gorgeous in colour, as what I then beheld. I seemed to be lifted from the earth and to be looking into Heaven. What I once said to you, as I witnessed the scene five and twenty years ago,[†3] all came back at this most affecting and sublime sight. The "muddy vesture of our clay"[†4] falls from us as we look. . . . I chartered a separate carriage for our men, so that they might see all in their own way, and at their own time.

There is a great deal of water out between Rochester and New York, and travelling is very uncertain, as I fear we may find to-morrow. There is again some little alarm here on account of the river rising too fast. But our to-night's house is far ahead of the first. Most charming halls in these places; excellent for sight and sound. Almost invariably built as theatres, with stage, scenery, and good dressing-rooms. Audience seated to perfection (every seat always separate), excellent doorways and passages, and brilliant light. My screen and gas are set up in front of the drop-curtain, and the most delicate touches will tell anywhere. No creature but my own men ever near me.

To MISS ELLEN TERNAN, [16 MARCH 1868]

Mention in next. Date: no doubt written same day.

To W. H. WILLS, 16 MARCH 1868†

MS Huntington Library.

Rochester, Monday Sixteenth March 1868.

My Dear Wills

The poney[†1] an immense—a prodigious—a rapturous—success! The photograph didn't come, either in your letter or in Mrs. Dolby's; but I was present, alone with Dolby, when he opened her letter last night, and the surprise and delight were marvellous to behold![†2]

Enclosed:

1. Another letter [†a] from the same to the same[†a†3]
2. 2 Documents to compare with Coutts's receipts, as usual.
3. Receipt for a small box from Niagara that is to come to the office addressed to me. Please pay all charges on it, and put it (unopened) in my office bedroom to await my coming.[†4]

You will know from another letter of mine before you get this, that I have always purposed doing something for our new Series,[†5] though I don't yet know what. I have positively resolved to write no American sketches whatever.

Very extraordinary about poor Townshend! He told me, and he told Henri, that he had left the latter £50 a year. I wonder did he alter his will in that wise, after the discovery of the missing prints.[†6]

I don't agree with you about the Farewell Readings, but think £8,000 quite as much as they will reasonably bear. It is indisputable that Chappell's profit on the last Series was very small. There is no doubt of it, because Dolby kept the accounts.

We have had two bright brilliant days at Niagara, and the scene was splendid beyond all description.

With love to Mrs. Wills | Ever My Dear Boy | Your affectionate

CD.

To J. T. FIELDS, 19 MARCH 1868*

MS Houghton Library, Harvard.

Albany, Thursday Nineteenth March | 1868.

My Dear Fields

From a note sent to Mrs. Fields along with this, you will learn that we have been emulating Noah in one small way, with a hired Ark instead of one of our own building. You will also learn that a plaintive appeal is sent up to you from the Springfield wilderness. Pray incline your ear responsively!

Ever affectionately and heartily

CD.

To MRS J. T. FIELDS, 19 MARCH 1868

Text from facsimile in J. T. Fields, Yesterdays with Authors, between pp. 184-5.

Albany Nineteenth March 1868.

My Dear Mrs. Fields

I should have answered your kind and welcome note before now, but that we have been in difficulties. After creeping through water for miles upon miles, our train gave it up as a bad job between Rochester and this place, and stranded us— early on Tuesday afternoon—at Utica.[†1] There we remained all night, and at 6 o'clock yesterday morning were ordered up to get ready for starting again. Then, we were countermanded. Then, we were once more told to get ready. Then, we were told to stay where we were. At last we got off at 8 o'clock, and after paddling through the flood until half past 3 got landed here:—to the great relief of our minds as well as bodies, for the tickets were all sold out for last night. We had all sorts of adventures by the way: among which two of the most notable were:—

1. Picking up two trains out of the water, in which the passengers had been composedly sitting all night—until relief should arrive.

2. Unpacking and releasing into the open country a great train of cattle and sheep that had been in the water I don't know how long, and that had begun in their imprisonment to eat each other. I never could have realized the strong and dismal expressions of which the faces of sheep are capable, had I not seen the haggard countenances of this unfortunate flock as they were tumbled out of their dens and picked themselves up, and made off:—leaping wildly (many with broken legs, over a great mound of thawing snow, and over the worried body of a deceased companion. Their misery was so very human that I was sorry to recognize several intimate acquaintances conducting themselves in this forlornly gymnastic manner.

As there is no question that our friendship began in some previous state of existence many years ago, I am now going to make bold to mention a discovery we have made concerning Springfield.[†1] We find that by remaining there next Saturday and Sunday, instead of coming on to Boston, we shall save several hours' travel, and much wear and tear of our baggage and camp followers. Ticknor[†2] reports the Springfield hotel excellent. Now, will you and Fields come and pass Sunday with us there? It will be delightful, if you can. If you can not will you defer our Boston dinner until the following Sunday? Send me a hopeful word to Springfield (Massasoit House) in reply, please.

Lowell's delightful note enclosed with thanks. Do make a trial for Springfield. We saw Professor White[†3] at Syracuse, and went out for a ride with him. Queer quarters at Utica, and nothing particular to eat; but the people so very anxious to please, that it was better than the best cuisine. I made a jug of punch (in the bedroom pitcher) and we drank our love to you and Fields. Dolby had more than his share, under pretence of devoted enthusiasm.

My Dear Mrs. Fields | Ever affectionately Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 19 MARCH 1868*

MS Dartmouth College, New Hampshire.

Albany, Thursday Nineteenth March 1868

My Dearest Georgy. I received the note which occupies the rest of this sheet of paper, here, last night.[†4] As I know it will interest you and Mamie, I send it bodily. If I be not mistaken, the lady is the daughter of a very rich and well known Merchant.[†5]

I have got, on board the Russia, the Chief Steward's Cabin on deck. They put me in that Cabin going home, because it will be on the sunny side of the ship. It is at least as capacious (!) as that in which I came out.

The whole country is under water. We have travelled 300 miles in and through the water perpetually. We left Rochester last Tuesday morning the seventeenth, and ought to have been here that night. We knocked up, early in the afternoon, a hundred miles from here—the train finding it impossible to proceed—and had to stay all night at a place called Utica. The telegraph posts were beaten down by the water and the floating ice, and even that communication was damaged. Yesterday morning at 6 we were knocked up, with orders to get ready. By 8 we started, and very slowly came through water—water—water—among drowned villages and broken bridges, and all kinds of ruin. We were hopeless of getting here (where all the tickets were sold for last night) but did get here, after all, in time to read triumphantly! We picked the people out of two trains that had stuck fast in the water all night. And we released a great number of Cattle and sheep from a Cattle Train that had been in the water I don't know how long. They had begun to eat each other, and it was a sickening sight.

I think I told Mamie that your last letters to me in America (addressed as usual to the Westminster Hotel) ought to be posted by the Mail of the 4th. of April. I write under great pressure, and therefore very briefly. The Catarrh is at last much better, but my foot is rather troublesome. It has been constantly wet, from walking in melted snow: which I suppose to be the occasion of its swelling in the old way. Dolby sends kindest regard. He is going to be detached tonight (to survey the dreaded Newhaven where I am to read next week), and Osgood comes from New York, as the Chief's body guard.

With best love to Mamie and to all, | Ever My Dearest Georgy

Your most affectionate CD.

To W.C. MACREADY,[†1] 21 MARCH 1868

MS Dickens House.

Springfield,[†2] Mass. | Saturday Twenty First March 1868

My Dearest Macready

What with perpetual reading and travelling, what with "a true American catarrh" (on which I am complimented almost boastfully), and what with one of the severest Winters ever known, your coals of fire[†1] received by the last Mail did not burn my head so much as they might have done under less excusatory circumstances. But they scorched it too!

You would find the general aspect of America and Americans, decidedly much improved.[†2] You would find immeasurably greater consideration and respect for your privacy, than of old. You would find a steady change for the better, everywhere, except (oddly enough) in the Railways generally: which seem to have stood still, while everything else has moved. But there is an exception Westward. There, the Express trains have now a very delightful carriage called a "Drawing Room Car"—literally, a series of little private drawing rooms, with sofas and a table in each, opening out of a little corridor. In each too, is a large plate glass window, with which you can do as you like. As you pay extra for this luxury, it may be regarded as the first move towards two classes of passengers. When the Railroad straight away to San Francisco (in 6 days) shall be opened through, it will not only have these drawing rooms, but sleeping rooms too, a bell in every little apartment communicating with a steward's pantry, a Restaurant, a staff of servants, marble washing-stands, and a barber's shop! I looked into one of these cars a day or two ago, and it was very ingeniously arranged and quite complete.

I left Niagara last Sunday and travelled on to Albany through 300 miles of flood—villages deserted, bridges broken, fences drifting away, nothing but tearing water, floating ice, and absolute wreck and ruin. The train gave in altogether at Utica, and we passengers were let loose there for the night. As I was due at Albany, a very active superintendent of works did all he could to "get Mr. Dickens along", and in the morning we resumed our journey—through the water—with a hundred men in seven league boots pushing the ice from before us with long poles.[†3] How we got to Albany, I can't say, but we got there somehow, just in time for a triumphant Carol and Trial.[†4] All the tickets had been sold, and we found the Albanians in a state of great excitement. You may imagine what the Flood was when I tell you that we took the passengers out of two trains that had had their fires put out by the water, four and twenty hours before; and that we released a number of sheep and horned cattle from trucks that had been in the water—I don't know how long, but so long that the sheep had begun to eat each other. It was a horrible spectacle, and the haggard human misery of their faces was quite a new study. There was a fine breath of Spring in the air concurrently with this great thaw; but lo and behold! last night it began to snow again with a strong wind; and today a snow drift covers this place with all the desolation of winter once more. I never was so tired of the sight of snow. As to sleighing, I have been sleighing to that extent, that I am sick of the sound of a sleigh bell.

I have seen all our Boston friends, except Curtis.[†1] Hillard[†2] is a sad instance of the frenzy of war. Because he was for compromise with the South, and not for bloodshed he is literally cut at Boston and goes nowhere. Longfellow even, has cut him, and for no other reason. Ticknor[†3] is dead. The rest are very little changed, except that Longfellow has a perfectly white flowing beard, and long white hair. But he does not otherwise look old, and is infinitely handsomer than he was. I have been constantly with them all, when in Boston, and they have always talked much about you. It is the established joke that Boston is my "native place" and we hold all sorts of hearty foregatherings. They all come to every Reading, and are always in a most delightful state of enthusiasm. They give me a parting dinner at the Club, on the Thursday before Good Friday. To pass from Boston personal, to New York Theatrical, I will mention here that one of the Proprietors of my New York Hotel is one of the Proprietors of Niblo's, and the most active.[†4] Consequently, I have seen "The Black Crook", and "The White Faun",[†5] in majesty from an arm chair in the first entrance P.S.[†6] more than once. Of these astonishing dramas, I beg to report (seriously) that I have found no human creature "behind", who has the slightest idea what they are about (upon my honor, my Dearest Macready!) and that, having some amiable small talk with a neat little Spanish woman who is the premiere danseuse, I asked her, in joke, to let me measure her skirt with my dress glove. Holding the glove by the tip of the forefinger, I found the skirt to be just three gloves long—and yet its length was much in excess of the skirts of 200 other ladies whom the carpenters were at that moment getting into their places for a transformation scene—on revolving columns—on wires and travellers—on iron cradles—up in the flies— down in the cellars—on every impossible description of float that Wilmot[†7] gone distracted could imagine.

I have taken my passage for Liverpool from New York, in the Cunarder, Russia, on the 22nd. of April. I had the second officer's cabin on deck, coming out, and I have the chief steward's cabin on deck, going home, because it will be on the sunny side of the ship. I have experienced nothing here but good humour and cordiality. A very large staff—part in advance, and part always with me—is indispensable to the pressing and peculiar nature of the "business", but I shouldn't wonder if I come out of it, clear profit in gold, to the tune of £20,000. In the autumn and winter, I have arranged with Chappells, to take my Farewell of Reading, in the United Kingdom, for ever and ever.

I am delighted to hear of Benvenuta's marriage,[†1] and I think her husband a very lucky man. Johnnie[†2] has my profoundest sympathy under his examinational woes.[†3] The noble boy[†4] will give me Gavazzi[†5] revised and enlarged (I expect) when I next come to Cheltenham. I will give you and Mrs. Macready[†6] all my American experiences when you come together to London, or, better still, to Gads. Meanwhile I send my hearty love to all, not forgetting dear Katie.[†7]

Niagara is not at all spoiled by a very dizzy-looking Suspension Bridge. Is to have another, still nearer to the Horseshoe, opened in July. My last sight of that scene (last Sunday) was thus:—We went up to the rapids above the Horseshoe—say 2 miles from it—and stood with our backs to the bright sun, looking at, and through, the great cloud of spray. Everything in the magnificent valley—buildings, forest, high banks, air, water—everything was made of rainbow. Turner's most imaginative drawing in his finest day, has nothing in it so ethereal, so gorgeous in fancy, so celestial. We said to one another (Dolby and I) "Let it for ever more remain so", and shut our eyes, and came away.

God bless you and all dear to you, my dear old friend!

I am ever your affectionate and loving

CD.

To FREDERIC OUVRY,[†8] 21 MARCH 1868

Extracts in F, X, ii, 791-2 and n and the Critic, 15 Mar 84, 1 (N.S.), 127 [a]; dated Springfield, 21 Mar, according to Forster.

You can hardly imagine what my life is with its present condition—how hard the work is, and how little time I seem to have at my disposal. It is necessary to the daily recovery of my voice that I should dine at 3 when not travelling; I begin to prepare for the evening at 6; and I get back to my hotel, pretty well knocked up, at half-past 10. Add to all this, perpetual railway travelling in one of the severest winters ever known; and you will descry a reason or two for my being an indifferent correspondent. Last Sunday evening I left the Falls of Niagara for this and two intervening places. As there was a great thaw, and the melted snow was swelling all the rivers, the whole country for three hundred miles was flooded. On the Tuesday afternoon (I had read on the Monday) the train gave in, as under circumstances utterly hopeless, and stopped at a place called Utica; the greater part of which was under water, while the high and dry part could produce nothing particular to eat. Here, some of the wretched passengers passed the night in the train, while others stormed the hotel. I was fortunate enough to get a bedroom, and garnished it with an enormous jug of gin-punch; over which I and the manager played a double-dummy rubber. At six in the morning we were knocked up: "to come aboard and try it." At half-past six we were knocked up again with the tidings "that it was of no use coming aboard or trying it." At eight all the bells in the town were set a-going, to summon us to "come aboard" instantly. And so we started, through the water, at four or five miles an hour; seeing nothing but drowned farms, barns adrift like Noah's arks, deserted villages, broken bridges, and all manner of ruin. I was to read at Albany that night, and all the tickets were sold. A very active superintendent of works assured me that if I could be "got along," he was the man to get me along: and that if I couldn't be got along, I might conclude that it couldn't possibly be fixed. He then turned on a hundred men in seven-league boots, who went ahead of the train, each armed with a long pole and pushing the blocks of ice away. Following this cavalcade, we got to land at last, and arrived in time for me to read the Carol and Trial triumphantly. My people (I had five of the staff with me) turned to at their work with a will, and did a day's labour in a couple of hours. If we had not come in as we did, I should have lost £350, and Albany would have gone distracted. You may conceive what the flood was, when I hint at the two most notable incidents of our journey:—1. We took the passengers out of two trains, who had been in the water, immovable all night and all the previous day. 2. We released a large quantity of sheep and cattle from trucks that had been in the water I don't know how long, but so long that the creatures in them had begun to eat each other, and presented a most horrible spectacle.

[a] You may suppose, therefore, that the expenses are very great; nevertheless, unless the Impeachment excitement should at all interfere with the Boston and New York Farewells, I hope to turn £20,000 of clear profit, after having all charges, including Dolby's ten per cent on the receipts, and the conversion of greenbacks into gold at a considerable premium. Not so bad I think???[a]

On my return, I have arranged with Chappell to take my leave of reading for good and all, in a hundred autumnal and winter Farewell's for ever. I return by the Cunard steamship "Russia". I had the second officer's cabin on deck when I came out; and am to have the chief steward's going home. Cunard was so considerate as to remember that it will be on the sunny side of the vessel.

To FREDERIC CHAPMAN,[†1] 24 MARCH 1868*

MS Robert H. Taylor Collection, Princeton University.

Newhaven, Tuesday Evening, Twenty Fourth March | 1868

Dear Sir

I have just received—and have just time to answer! by the next Mail—your letter of the 7th.

Messrs. Appleton & Co.[†2] are the most shameless pirates in the States.[†3] They issue spurious Editions of my books—including no end of things of which I am not the Author—like liars and robbers by profession, as they are. I would have nothing to do with them (but hang them) on any consideration whatever.

Faithfully Yours

Fredk. Chapman Esquire.

To OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES, 26 MARCH [? 1868]

Mention in Maggs catalogue No. 436, 1923. Date: Catalogue, followed by N, 26 Mar 62; but 1868 much more likely, when CD was in America: he was probably inviting Holmes to one of his six farewell readings in Boston, 1-8 Apr.

Inviting him to one of his readings.

To GEORGE DOLBY, [29 MARCH 1868]

Summary in CD as I Knew him, p. 294. Date: written same day as next.

Asking Dolby to call on CD's doctor, Fordyce Barker,[†4] and to get from him a prescription for a sleeping draught.

To MISS MARY DICKENS, 29 and 31 MARCH 1868

Extracts in MDGH, 11, 377-9.

Portland, Sunday, March 29th, 1868.

I should have written to you by the last mail, but I really was too unwell to do it. The writing day was last Friday, when I ought to have left Boston for New Bedford (fifty-five miles) before eleven in the morning. But I was so exhausted that I could not be got up, and had to take my chance of an evening's train producing me in time to read, which it just did. With the return of snow, nine days ago, the "true American" (which had lulled) came back as bad as ever. I have coughed from two or three in the morning until five or six, and have been absolutely sleepless. I have had no appetite besides, and no taste. Last night here I took some laudanum, and it is the only thing that has done me good. But the life in this climate is so very hard. When I did manage to get from Boston to New Bedford, I read with my utmost force and vigour.[†1] Next morning, well or ill, I must turn out at seven to get back to Boston on my way here.

I dine at Boston at three, and at five must come on here (a hundred and thirty miles or so), for to-morrow night; there being no Sunday train. To-morrow night I read here in a very large place, and Tuesday morning at six I must start again to get back to Boston once more. But after to-morrow night, I have only the Boston and New York farewells, thank God! I am most grateful to think that when we came to devise the details of the tour, I foresaw that it could never be done, as Dolby and Osgood proposed, by one unassisted man, as if he were a machine. If I had not cut out the work, and cut out Canada, I could never have gone there, I am quite sure. Even as it is, I have just now written to Dolby (who is in New York), to see my doctor there, and ask him to send me some composing medicine that I can take at night, inasmuch as without sleep I cannot get through. However sympathetic and devoted the people are about me, they can not be got to comprehend that one's being able to do the two hours with spirit when the time comes round, may be co-existent with the consciousness of great depression and fatigue.[†2] I don't mind saying all this, now that the labour is so nearly over. You shall have a brighter account of me, please God, when I close this at Boston.

Without any artificial aid, I got a splendid night's rest last night, and consequently am very much freshened up to-day. Yesterday I had a fine walk by the sea, and to-day I have had another on the heights overlooking it.

Boston, Tuesday, 31st.

I have safely arrived here, just in time to add a line to that effect, and get this off by to-morrow's English mail from New York. Catarrh rather better. Everything triumphant last night, except no sleep again. I suppose Dolby to be now on his way back to join me here. I am much mistaken if the political crisis do not damage the farewells by almost one half.

I hope that I am certainly better altogether.

My room well decorated with flowers, of course, and Mr. and Mrs. Fields coming to dinner. They are the most devoted of friends, and never in the way and never out of it.

To JOHN FORSTER, [30-31 MARCH 1868]

Extracts in F, X, ii, 793-4. Date: first extract, from Portland, 30 Mar 68, according to Forster; second extract, from Boston, part of same letter, 31 Mar, according to Forster.

I write in a town three parts of which were burnt down in a tremendous fire three years ago. The people lived in tents while their city was rebuilding. The charred trunks of the trees with which the streets of the old city were planted, yet stand here and there in the new thoroughfares like black spectres. The rebuilding is still in progress everywhere. Yet such is the astonishing energy of the people that the large hall in which I am to read to-night (its predecessor was burnt) would compare very favourably with the Free Trade Hall at Manchester! . . . . I am nearly used up. Climate, distance, catarrh, travelling, and hard work, have begun (I may say so, now they are nearly all over) to tell heavily upon me. Sleeplessness besets me; and if I had engaged to go on into May, I think I must have broken down. It was well that I cut off the Far West and Canada when I did. There would else have been a sad complication. It is impossible to make the people about one understand, however zealous and devoted (it is impossible even to make Dolby understand until the pinch comes), that the power of coming up to the mark every night, with spirits and spirit, may coexist with the nearest approach to sinking under it. When I got back to Boston on Thursday, after a very hard three weeks, I saw that Fields was very grave about my going on to New Bedford (55 miles) next day, and then coming on here (180 miles) next day. But the stress is over, and so I can afford to look back upon it, and think about it, and write about it.

The latest intelligence, my dear old fellow, is, that I have arrived here safely, and that I am certainly better. I consider my work virtually over, now. My impression is, that the political crisis will damage the farewells by about one half. I cannot yet speak by the card; but my predictions here, as to our proceedings, have thus far been invariably right. We took last night[†1] at Portland, £360 English; where a costly Italian troupe,[†2] using the same hall to-night, had not booked £14! It is the same all over the country, and the worst is not seen yet. Everything is becoming absorbed in the Presidential impeachment, helped by the next Presidential election. Connecticut is particularly excited. The night after I read at Hartford this last week,[†1] there were two political meetings in the town; meetings of two parties;[†2] and the hotel was full of speakers coming in from outlying places. So at Newhaven: the moment I had finished, carpenters came in to prepare for next night's politics. So at Buffalo. So everywhere very soon.

To EDWARD JACKSON,[†3] 31 MARCH 1868†

MS Morgan Library.

Boston, U.S. | Tuesday Thirty First March 1868.

Dear Sir

I beg you to accept my thanks for your kind letter dated on the 9th. of this month.

The tidings of my dear friend's death was indeed a shock to me, so far away, so heavily occupied, and so unable even to see him laid in his last earthly resting place.[†4] I had thought him greatly changed and weakened when he came to London, but fully believed that I should see him again.

[†a] I purpose returning home by the Cunard Mail steamer which will leave New York on the 22nd. of April. Once at home again, I shall lose no time in discharging my trust[†5] with my utmost zeal and fidelity. Meanwhile I take it for granted that all Mr. Townshend's private papers are sealed up and reserved for me.[†a]

Always My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Edward Jackson Esquire

April

To CHARLES ELIOT NORTON, 1 APRIL 1868*

MS Houghton Library, Harvard. Address: C. E. Norton Esqre. | Cambridge | Mass.

Boston, Wednesday First April, 1868.

My Dear Norton.

I shall be very happy (catarrh permitting) to dine with you and your family at halfpast 5 on Sunday, and Mr. Dolby with many thanks for your kind remembrance will be proud to accompany me.

With true regard | Ever affectionately Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

C. E. Norton Esquire

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 1-3 APRIL 1868†

MS Huntington Library.

Boston Wednesday First April, 1868.

My Dearest Georgy. I received your letter of from the 14th. to the 17th. of March, here, last night. My New York Doctor has prescribed for me promptly, and I hope I am better. I am certainly no worse. We shall do (to the best of my belief) very well with the Farewells here and at New York, but not greatly. Everything is at a stand still, pending the Impeachment and the next Presidential Election. I forget whether I told you that the New York Press are going to give me a public dinner on Saturday the 18th.

†a I begin my letter thus early, that I may not forget to instruct Mamie and you to send a present of £25 to Mrs. Alfred's boy,†1 with a little letter saying that you have it in charge from me to make him that gift, and to tell him that I hope he will strive to do credit to his name, and will always remember that it is a trust he holds. At the same time I may mention, with my best love to you both, that I want the last cheque you draw, to be: "Pay to ourselves Two Hundred Pounds": being a little present of One Hundred Pounds each, from the undersigned Inimitable.

Both you and Mamie are quite wrong about Miss Coutts.†2 She holds Chauncy's property, simply in trust for the poor, and to found a school.†3 His rings, pictures, and so forth,†4 go to the South Kensington Boilers.†5 Ouvry (as acting for me) and Jackson (as business agent to the estate) have both sent me a brief abstract of the will.†1

Mrs. Dolby has been fearfully poisoned through the agency of a dirty copper saucepan. She was for some eight and forty hours in the greatest pain and the strangest delirium. Happily, she seems to be now all right again. Have you heard of my present, of the comic Shetland pony, with panniers complete for the two children? It was got up secretly through Wills, and has been the most successful surprise ever achieved.†a I hear (but not from himself) that Wills has had a bad fall in hunting, and is, or has been, laid up. I am supposed, I take it, not to know of this until I hear it from himself.

Thursday

My notion of the Farewells is pretty certain now to turn out right. We had £300 English here last night. To day is a Fast Day, and to night we shall probably take much less. Then it is likely that we shall pull up again and so strike a good reasonable average.—But it is not at all probable that we shall do anything enormous. Every pulpit in Massachusetts will resound to violent politics today and tonight. You remember the Hutchinson family?[†2] I have had a grateful letter (very ill spelt) from John Hutchinson. He speaks of "my sister Abby" as living in New York.—He is said by the bye to be rather mad. The immediate object of his note is to invite me to the marriage of his daughter, 21 years old.

You will see by the evidence of this piece of paper that I am using up my stationery.[†3] Scott has just been making anxious calculations as to our powers of holding out in the articles of Euchrisma, Tooth Powder, &c. The calculations encourage him to believe that "we shall just hold out, and no more". I think I am still better to day than I was yesterday; but I am far from strong and have no appetite. To see me at my little table at night, you would think me the freshest of the fresh. And this is the crowning marvel of Fields's life.

[†a] I am delighted to report that certain men about the Hall at New York have sworn together that they will give Kelly a beating. He is in the greatest terror, and we don't think it advisable to let him go there until I am on the spot myself. If he do not get well thrashed on the night of the last Reading, I shall be both surprised and disappointed. All the outlying staff are coming in now, and are beginning to be paid off. Our passages are paid also, and signs of our approaching embarcation are all around us. The faithful Fieldses go on to New York with us, of course. We leave here on Good Friday.[†a]

I don't forget that this is Forster's birthday—[†b] or that it is another anniversary![†b†4]

Friday Afternoon 3rd.

Catarrh worse than ever! And we don't know (at 4) whether I can read tonight or must stop. Otherwise all well.

Best love to Mamie. Ever affecy.

CD.

To J. T. FIELDS, [? 4 APRIL 1868]*

MS University of Kentucky. Date: on Sat. 4 Apr, CD took a drive instead of his usual walk (see Curry, CD and Annie Fields, p. 18).

Saturday

My Dear Fields

I hope I am on the road to getting round. But my Dear Boy I told you last night that I must give up going out both to day and tomorrow, and must "go in" for rest and training. I have physicked myself till I hate myself—to begin with. I shall be out for a ride with Dolby at 2, and will take you up, if you will share it.

Love to Mrs. Fields | Ever affecy

CD

To CHARLES ELIOT NORTON, 4 APRIL 1868*

MS Houghton Library, Harvard. Address: Charles E. Norton Esqre. | Cambridge | Mass.

Boston, Saturday Fourth April 1868

My Dear Norton

I was so very near not reading last night,[†1] that I must absolutely go into quiet training to day and tomorrow, with the view of avoiding such a risk again. I do it with the most ungracious grace in the world, but it must be done. I hope I may send my love to each Mrs. Norton separately[†2] as well as to you, and may look forward to seeing you all in England.

Believe me | Affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles E. Norton Esquire

To MISS PALFREY,[†1] 4 APRIL 1868

Extract in N, 111, 642.

Boston | 4th April 1868

Convey yourself back to London by the agency of that powerful Locomotive, your imagination, and walk through the centre avenue of Covent Garden Market from West to East:- that is to say, with your back towards the church, and your face towards Drury Lane Theatre. Keep straight on along the side of the Theatre, and about halfway down, on the left side of the way, behind the houses, is a closely hemmed-in grave yard—happily long disused and closed by the Law. I do not remember that the grave-yard is accessible from the street now, but when I was a boy it was to be got at by a low covered passage under a house, and was guarded by a rusty iron gate. In that churchyard I long afterwards buried the "Nemo" of Bleak House.[†2]

This important piece of information is in redemption of a pledge I gave you in Halifax Harbour walking the deck of the Cuba one bright cold morning in last November.

To H. M. TICKNOR, 6 APRIL 1868

Extract in Goodspeed's catalogue No. 237 and Ritter Hopson Gallery Inc (SN 21); MS 1 p.; dated Boston, 6 Apr 68; addressed Howard Ticknor.

My Dear Ticknor,

Two considerations in reference to Thursday:—1. I am so nervous and shaken, that I should be in danger of tumbling to pieces, if I tried to sit behind your fast trotting horse. 2. I must have a carriage on that day, to go about and leave some cards. Question therefore respectfully submitted: whether visit to Mrs. Ticknor in gorgeous equipage turned out under Parkerian contract[†3] be admissible as a compromise, and at what hour.

To MRS TICKNOR,[†4] 6 APRIL 1868*

MS Boston Public Library. Address: Mrs. Ticknor.

Boston, Monday Sixth April 1868

My Dear Mrs. Ticknor

I cannot tell you how much I thank you for the charming flowers you sent me by the hands of your good husband on Saturday night. I hope to have the pleasure of calling on you next Thursday, and to arrange the time with him. Believe me always

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS MARY DICKENS, 7 APRIL 1868

Extract in MDGH, 11, 380-2.

Boston, Tuesday, April 7th, 1868

I not only read last Friday, when I was doubtful of being able to do so, but read as I never did before, and astonished the audience quite as much as myself. You never saw or heard such a scene of excitement.[†1]

Longfellow and all the Cambridge men urged me to give in. I have been very near doing so, but feel stronger to-day. I cannot tell whether the catarrh may have done me any lasting injury in the lungs or other breathing organs, until I shall have rested and got home. I hope and believe not. Consider the weather. There have been two snowstorms since I wrote last, and to-day the town is blotted out in a ceaseless whirl of snow and wind.

I cannot eat (to anything like the ordinary extent), and have established this system: At seven in the morning, in bed, a tumbler of new cream and two tablespoonsful of rum. At twelve, a sherry cobbler and a biscuit. At three (dinner time), a pint of champagne. At five minutes to eight, an egg beaten up with a glass of sherry. Between the parts, the strongest beef tea that can be made, drunk hot. At a quarter-past ten, soup, and anything to drink that I can fancy. I don't eat more than half a pound of solid food in the whole four-and-twenty hours, if so much.

If I hold out, as I hope to do, I shall be greatly pressed in leaving here and getting over to New York before next Saturday's mail from there. Do not, therefore, if all be well, expect to hear from me by Saturday's mail, but look for my last letter from America by the mail of the following Wednesday, the 15th. Be sure that you shall hear, however, by Saturday's mail, if I should knock up as to reading. I am tremendously "beat," but I feel really and unaffectedly so much stronger to-day, both in my body and hopes, that I am much encouraged. I have a fancy that I turned my worst time last night.

Dolby is as tender as a woman and as watchful as a doctor. He never leaves me during the reading now, but sits at the side of the platform and keeps his eye upon me all the time. Ditto George, the gasman, steadiest and most reliable man I ever employed. I am the more hopeful of my not having to relinquish a reading, because last night was "Copperfield" and "Bob"—by a quarter of an hour the longest, and, in consideration of the storm, by very much the most trying. Yet

I was far fresher afterwards than I have been these three weeks.

I have "Dombey" to do to-night, and must go through it carefully; so here ends my report. The personal affection of the people in this place is charming to the last.

To UNKNOWN LADY OF CHARLESTOWN,[†1] [?DECEMBER 1867-8 APRIL 1868]

Mention in H. T. Taverner and [J. C Hotten], CD: the Story of his Life, 1870, p. 305. Date: during his readings in Boston.

Answering her note asking if the doors of the "Temple" could be opened for her earlier than usual, since she was paralyzed.[†2]

To CHARLES ELIOT NORTON, 9 APRIL 1868*

MS Houghton Library, Harvard. Address: Charles E. Norton Esqre. | Cambridge | Mass.

Boston Ninth April, 1868

My Dear Norton

When I saw you last night, I had not received your more than kind letter and enclosure.[†3] They reached me this morning, and I cannot sufficiently thank you for both.

The home-offer that you make to me, and the picture of rest and peace that it holds before my view are inexpressibly tempting. Nor is it possible for mortal man to appreciate a friend's remonstrance more deeply than I appreciate yours, or to know its great worth better than I do. Let me explain my case to you. If I felt the least doubt of my having rallied my powers in the course of the last three days, I would at once give in and take shelter with you. My spirits and my spirit so deserted me last week (except when actually reading) that I lost the confidence in myself with which experience had inspired me, and was on the verge of stopping. Since then, I seem quite naturally and placidly to have regained my old condition, and with it the quiet consciousness that I can bear the little that remains of this long strain. If I were to relinquish now, with the full belief that I need not do so, I should do myself far more harm than twice the remaining number of Readings would be likely to do me (if they impended), by tormenting myself with the reflection—that I had unnecessarily broken the long chain of strictly respected engagements with the public which lies behind me, and that I had made it an incomplete thing for evermore.

If my girls could vote upon the question—as it stands now: not as it stood last week—or if Forster could assist in council, I am persuaded that my conclusion would carry the day. They know what my natural energy will do for me, and they would say: "Now that he knows he has got it back, and now that the passage home is so close before him, let him leave his work completed."

And consider the circumstances! I do as I like until Monday night. Then I read for two consecutive nights. Then I stop for a night. Then I read for two more consecutive nights. Then I stop for two nights. Then I finish.

With love at home, Believe me My Dear Norton | Ever Faithfully
Gratefully | And affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

I wish I may by this time have brought you over to my mind!

To LOUIS PRANG,[†1] 9 APRIL 1868*

Text from copy made by owner of MS, Mr Robert L. Henderson.

Boston. Thursday Ninth April 1868

Dear Sir

I beg to thank you for your very obliging letter, and its accompanying present of a Chromo Lithographic picture.[†2] I have much pleasure in accepting that mark of your good will, and will carry it to England with me intact.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Louis Prang Esqre.

To JAMES EDWARD ROOT,[†3] 9 APRIL 1868

MS Victor Gulotta, Newton, Mass. Address: James E. Root Esquire | Present.[†4]

Boston, | Thursday Night Ninth April 1868.

Dear Sir

Allow me to thank you for your sympathetic letter,[†5] and to assure you of the real pleasure and interest I have derived from your charming little girl[†6]—the prettiest of all the flowers that have graced my room, and with an innocent perfectly balanced self-possession about her, such as the Queen of the Fairies might envy.

Believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

May I send my love and thanks to her mother[†7]

To SEBASTIAN SCHLESINGER, 9 APRIL 1868*

MS The Beinecke Library, Yale University. Address: Private | Sebastian Schlesinger Esqre. | Messrs. Naylor Vickers and Co. | Boston.

Boston, Thursday Night Ninth April 1868

My Dear Mr. Schlesinger.

A thousand thanks for your genial letter, and for the box of fans. I shall not presume to open the latter, but will lay it at my daughter's feet intact. As one of those who assisted at the great International Walking Match Banquet, you will receive in due course an official record of that tremendous transaction, which may one day be a curiosity.[†1]

Believe me always
Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Sebastian Schlesinger Esquire.

To MISS ELLEN TERNAN, [14 APRIL 1868]

Mention in next. Date: no doubt written same day.

To W. H. WILLS, 14 APRIL 1868*

MS Huntington Library.

New York, | Tuesday Fourteenth April 1868

My Dear Wills. I hope you have got—or are getting—well?[†2] [†a] Enclosed, another letter to your care.[†3] By next Saturday's Mail, I will send the last![†a]—As there is a Mail that day, I may as well forward a line by it. On that same day, a Dinner is to be given me here, "by the Press of America".[†4] I wish it were over!

On Sunday, after my short rest, the Catarrh got much better. Then came on, a snow storm that lasted 12 hours (I was caught in it, out walking), and back I went again. However, I read very freshly last night, and am, still, better on the whole.

May you be much better too! I wish I knew that you were!

Ever affectionately

CD.

To MISS ELLEN TERNAN, [17 APRIL 1868]

Mention in next. Date: no doubt written same day.

To W. H. WILLS, 17 APRIL 1868†

MS Huntington Library.

New York, Friday Seventeenth April | 1868

My Dear Wills

†a One last letter enclosed.†a

We have notice to be on board on Wednesday at halfpast one, and shall probably sail at halfpast two. The Farewells are going finely here.†1 I am very weary, but no worse. Your last letter gives me the hope that I may find you quite restored. I have discharged Kelly†2 and he goes home tomorrow.

Ever affectionately

CD

To GEORGE W. CHILDS, 18 APRIL 1868*

Text from unidentified catalogue in New York Public Library. Address (envelope only mentioned in Remember When Auction catalogue, No. 45): George W. Childs, PM New York, 18 Apr (n.y.)

New York, Saturday, 18th. April, 1868.

My Dear Mr. Childs,

I have received your letter with much pleasure and shall be heartily glad to have the opportunity of shaking hands with you before I leave America. I think it will be the shortest and best plan to address the books†1 for which I am indebted to Your Kind Remembrance straight to the Cunard Steamer.

With best regards to Mrs. Childs, | Believe me

Always faithfully yours,

CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS MARY FRANKLIN WILSON,†2 18 APRIL 1868*

MS Mr Robert Cutler.

New York | Saturday Eighteenth April | 1868

I send this to my young friend unknown, who is having Pickwick read to her for the second time, to express my hope that she will soon read for herself all the books I have written, and that she will like them and like me too.

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Mary Franklin Wilson

To MRS BIGELOW, 20 APRIL 1868*

MS Chicago Historical Society.

New York, Monday Twentieth April | 1868.

Dear Mrs. Bigelow

I send you herewith, Praed's[†3] Poems, for which I wrote to England in accordance with my promise.[†4] Unfortunately I have not had time to get them bound, but the verses will be none the worse for that.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To H. D. PALMER, 21 APRIL 1868*

MS University of Kentucky.

Westminster Hotel, New York
Tuesday Night, Twenty First April 1868

My Dear Mr. Palmer.

I thank you most cordially for your elegant present, which I shall have a particular pleasure in preserving as a remembrance of you—as I hope I shall prove to you when you next come to England. In the meanwhile and always my best wishes are with you for your prosperity and happiness.

If it be lawful under the Eagle's wings for anybody to send his love to Mrs. Palmer, I send her mine.

Faithfully Yours ever
CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS TICKNOR, 21 APRIL 1868

MS Boston Public Library.

New York, Tuesday Night Twenty First April | 1868.

My Dear Mrs. Ticknor

The gage d'amitié, duly taken up, hangs at my watch chain.[†1] Accept my best thanks for the pretty little token, and for your charming note;[†2] and believe that I should have been, even though I had not been thus bound to be,

Faithfully Yours ever
CHARLES DICKENS

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 19 NOVEMBER 1867-22 APRIL 1868

Extract in H. T. Taverner and [J.C. Hotten], CD: The Story of his Life, p. 304. Date: during his American visit.

To comply with your modest request would not be reasonably possible.[†3]

To J. T. FIELDS, [26] and 30 APRIL 1868†

MS Huntington Library. Date: 27 Apr 68 was Monday. Letter must have been written on 26th.

Aboard the "Russia," bound for Liverpool
Sunday Twenty Seventh April, 1868.

My Dear Fields.

In order that you may have the earliest intelligence of me, I begin this note to day in my small cabin, purposing (if it should prove practicable) to post it at Queenstown for the Return Steamer.[†1]

We are already past the Banks of Newfoundland, although our course was 70 miles to the South, with the view of avoiding Ice seen by Judkins[†2] in the Scotia on his passage out to New York. The Russia is a magnificent ship, and has dashed along bravely. We had made more than 1300 and odd miles at Noon to day. The wind, after being a little capricious, rather threatens at the present time to turn against us, but our Run is already 80 miles ahead of the Russia's last Run in this direction—a very fast one. [†a] I call the Saloon, "The Jackasses' Arms", for I never did see a hundred such intensely stupid people ever got together, as our fellow passengers are. But Dolby, Morgan, and I, make the best of it.[†a] To all whom it may concern, report the Russia in the highest terms. She rolls more easily than the other Cunard Screws, is kept in perfect order, and is most carefully looked after in all departments. We have had nothing approaching to heavy weather; still, one can speak to the trim of the ship. Her captain—a gentleman. Bright, polite, good natured, and vigilant.

As to me, I am greatly better, I hope. I have got on my right boot today for the first time; the "true American" seems to be turning faithless at last; and I made a Gad's Hill breakfast this morning, as a further advance on having otherwise eaten and drunk all day ever since Wednesday.

You will see Anthony Trollope,[†3] I dare say. What was my amazement to see him, with these eyes, come aboard in the Mail Tender just before we started! He had come out in the Scotia, just in time to dash off again in said Tender to shake hands with me; knowing me to be aboard here. It was most heartily done. He is on a special mission of convention with the U.S. post office.[†4]

We have been picturing your movements— [†a] with my dear, dear Mrs. Fields[†a]—and have duly checked off your journey home, and have talked about you continually. But I have thought about you both, even much, much more. You will never know how I love you both; or what you have been to me in America, and will always be to me everywhere; or how fervently I thank you.[†5]

All the working of the ship seems to be done on my forehead. It is scrubbed and holystoned[†1] (my head—not the deck) at 3 every morning. It is scraped and swabbed all day. Eight pairs of heavy boots are now clattering on it, getting the ship under sail again. Legions of ropes' ends are flopped upon it as I write, and I must leave off with Dolby's love.

Thursday Thirtieth

Soon after I left off as above, we had a gale of wind, which blew all night. For a few hours on the evening side of midnight, there was no getting from this Cabin of mine to the Saloon, or vice versa: so heavily did the sea break over the decks. The ship however made nothing of it, and we were all right again by Monday afternoon. Except for a few hours yesterday (when we had a very light head wind) the weather has been constantly favorable, and we are now bowling away at a great rate, with a fresh breeze filling all our sails. We expect to be at Queenstown between midnight and 3 in the morning.

I hope my dear Fields you may find this legible, but I rather doubt it; for there is motion enough on the ship to render writing—to a landsman, however accustomed to pen and ink—rather a difficult achievement. Besides which, I slide away gracefully from the paper, whenever I want to be particularly expressive.

Morgan,[†2] sitting opposite to me at breakfast, always has the following items:—A large dish of porridge, into which he casts slices of butter and a quantity of sugar. Two cups of tea. A steak. Irish stew. Chutnee and marmalade.

[†a] I have confided to Dolby "that if I had been Miss Hoyt, I wouldn't have done it."[†a] Another deputation of two has solicited a Reading [†a] at the Jackasses' Arms[†a] to night. Illustrious Novelist has unconditionally and absolutely declined.

More love—and more to that—from Your ever affectionate Friend[†3]

CD.

To H. D. PALMER, 30 APRIL 1868*

MS Dickens House.

On Board the "Russia" off Queenstown
Thursday Night Thirtieth April | 1868.

My Dear Mr. Palmer.

I send you this brief note, in order that you may hear by the earliest opportunity of my prosperous arrival.[†1]

When we parted, I thanked you for all your great care of me in your excellent hotel, and for having made it quite a home to me. But I did not say half enough to satisfy myself. I shall always remember my old rooms in the Westminster, gratefully and pleasantly, and shall always feel a personal interest in the House and its prosperity. Be sure that it shall have my thoroughly well earned recommendation on this side of the atlantic.

Believe me always | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [?LATE APRIL 1868]

Extract in F, XI, i, 798. Date: probably written aboard the Russia, which sailed 22 Apr and reached Liverpool 1 May.

We had great difficulty in getting our American accounts squared to the point of ascertaining what Dolby's commission amounted to in English money. After all, we were obliged to call in the aid of a money-changer, to determine what he should pay as his share of the average loss of conversion into gold. With this deduction made, I think his commission (I have not the figures at hand) was £2,888; Ticknor and Fields had a commission of £1,000, besides 5 per cent. on all Boston receipts. The expenses in America to the day of our sailing were 38,948 dollars;—roughly 39,000 dollars, or £13,000. The preliminary expenses were £614. The average price of gold was nearly 40 per cent, and yet my profit was within a hundred or so of £20,000.[†2] Supposing me to have got through the present engagement in good health, I shall have made by the Readings, in two years, £33,000: that is to say: £13,000 received from the Chappells, and £20,000 from America. What I had made by them before, I could only ascertain by a long examination of Coutts's books. I should say, certainly not less than £10,000: for I remember that I made half that money in the first town and country campaign with poor Arthur Smith. These figures are of course between ourselves; but don't you think them rather remarkable? The Chappell bargain began with £50 a night and everything paid; then became £60; and now rises to £80.

May

To BENJAMIN WEBSTER, 4 MAY 1868

MS Mr George D. Gopen.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Monday Fourth May 1868

My Dear Ben

The humble individual who has now the honor to address you, would like a Box to night;—having heard commendation of the piece you are playing.[†1] He will present himself in front to see the play, and (if quite consistent with the rules of the establishment) would be glad to receive a pass key in the course of the evening.

Ever Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, [?EARLY MAY 1868]

Extract in D, XIII (March 1917), 60. Date: no doubt after seeing No Thoroughfare on 4 May.

I never thought I would have cried or shed a tear at my own work as I have been made to do by Mrs. Billington's[†2] performance.[†3]

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 6 MAY 1868*

MS Sir Leslie Farrer.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Sixth May 1868

My Dear Ouvry

I spoke very seriously to Fechter last night; and he said that he would come to you and would tell you that, in seeking your professional advice, he had meant to be guided by it, and that if you told him he had no defence to the action,[†4] he would make no further resistance.

Now, I have that regard for him and trust in him, that I will lend him the money to pay the claim. I will not take interest on it, but I want you kindly to put me in the best position for being repaid at Christmas out of the Arnold money, and I want the transaction to be on record and in evidence between us, so that if either of us were to die there could be no dispute about it.[†1] To this end, I also want the money to pass through your hands. As Fechter knows he can have it from me if nothing be left him but to pay Barnett off, you can tell him what you think it right to require as the representative of my interests (for my reasonable security), and so the thing can be done. I do not suppose it can be done to your legal satisfaction, but I shall be quite contented by its being so done as that the spirit and faith of the matter are beyond doubt or misconstruction.

Faithfully Yours ever
CHARLES DICKENS

To W. J. FARRER,[†2] 7 MAY 1868

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, June 1979; MS 2 pp.; dated Office of AYR, 7 May 68; addressed W. J. Farrer.

Acknowledging the receipt of his letter enclosing the keys of the trunk and desk containing the papers of the late Mr. Townshend, and asking him to instruct Messrs Banting[†3] to send the trunk and desk here marked "Private" Asking him also to assure Miss Coutts that he will lose no time in sorting through the papers in order to discover any document that may bear upon Mr. Townshend's testamentary intentions, or upon the rings; querying whether or not there are, as he believes, further papers at Lausanne and returning an unopened letter which he found among the papers and which he believes to be in Mrs. Brown's[†4] hand.

To FREDERIC CHAPMAN, 8 MAY 1868*

MS Massachusetts Historical Society.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Eighth May 1868

My Dear Sir

Many thanks for your congratulations.[†5]

I have considered the question of Illustrations for the Uncommercial Traveller;[†1] and I think (taking into consideration the amount of matter in the book) that Four Illustrations will be enough.[†2]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Fredk Chapman Esqre

To MESSRS COUTTS & CO.,[†3] 9 MAY 1868

Extract in Christie's catalogue, April 1981; MS 1 p.; dated Office of AYR, 9 May 68; addressed Messrs Coutts & Co.

Please deliver the Pass-Book of my private account to the Bearer for me, as I wish to refer back to it.

To MRS DALLAS,[†4] 11 MAY 1868

Extract in unidentified catalogue sent by N. C. Peyrouton; MS 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill Place, 11 May 68; addressed Mrs Dallas.

It appears to me that there is scarcely any hope of your finding in America a sufficient recompense for the journey and its attendant anxieties. I made many enquiries and got no solid encouragement to believe otherwise. Mr. Dolby arrived at the same conclusion.[†5]

To SIR JOSEPH OLLIFFE,[†6] 11 MAY 1868†

MS Benoliel Collection.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Monday Eleventh May 1868

My Dear Olliffe

[†a] If the undersigned Individual (newly arrived in this country from the United States of America) can have, through your kind interposition, one or two cases of that excellent Hock, his Blessing will attend you. He was lately under the hands of a medical friend of yours, Dr. Fordyce Barker of New York: a capital fellow,[†a] and always speaking of you as much beholden to you.[†1] Love to Lady Olliffe[†2] and to all at home who remember him

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To B. W. PROCTER,[†3] 11 MAY 1868*

Text from transcript of MS by Dykes Campbell in Guildhall Museum, Rochester.[†4]

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Eleventh May 1868

My dear Procter

I am delighted to have your kind note, and to be so held in my dear old friends' remembrance—I can report myself perfectly well and not altogether destitute in respect of Transatlantic dollars. Will you tell Mrs. Procter[†5] with my love that I am in daily expectation of being bidden to a certain Ladies Banquet, and to bask in the ample shadow of Lady Molesworth's[†6] skirts—Meantime I am wallowing in half a years arrears of Papers, but hope soon to see Land and you

Ever your affectionate
CHARLES DICKENS

To THE HON. MRS RICHARD WATSON,[†7] 11 MAY 1868

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Eleventh May, 1868

My Dear Mrs. Watson

I am delighted to have your letter. It comes to me like a faithful voice from dear old Rockingham, and awakens many memories.

The work in America has been so very hard, and the winter there has been so excessively severe, that I really have been very unwell for some months. But I had not been at sea three days on the passage home when I became myself again.

If you will arrange with Mary Boyle[†8] any time for coming here, we shall be charmed to see you, and I will adapt my engagements accordingly. I make this suggestion because she generally comes here early in the summer season. But if you will propose yourself anyhow, giving me a margin of a few days in case of my being pre-engaged for this day or that, we will (as my American friends say) "fix it".

What with travelling, reading night after night, and speech-making day after day,[†1] I feel the peace of the country beyond all expression. On board ship coming home, "a deputation" (two in number, of whom only one could get into my cabin, while the other looked in at the window) came to ask me to read to the passengers that evening in the Saloon. I respectfully replied that sooner than do it, I would assault the Captain, and be put in irons.

Ever affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To LADY MOLESWORTH, 12 MAY 1868

Extract in Sotheby catalogue, Dec 1999; MS 2 pp.; dated Gad's Hill Place, 12 May 68; addressed Lady Molesworth.

Thanking her for her welcoming him home, lamenting the amount of business awaiting him on his return complicated by the illness and absence of my partner in All The Year Round[†2] and commenting on the Tour. . . .I am perfectly well (though I was far from well in America) . . . my trip was immensely successful in all respects. I am going to make my final Farewell of "Reading" in London and the provinces, this next Winter.

He adds that he is shocked and grieved by her intelligence about Chorley, about which he had only previously heard faint whispers[†3] . . . On the whole I was disappointed likewise, for I entertained hopes that his better angel[†4] would prevail. Was not that opposition to Costa[†5] at the Athenaeum incredible in these days?[†6]

To EDMUND YATES,[†7] 12 MAY 1868

MS Robert H. Taylor Collection, Princeton University.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Twelfth May 1868.

My Dear E. Y.

I have not doubted you for a moment. Not in the least. I heard that you were out of town; or I should have anticipated your writing to me, by writing to you.

With great pleasure as to Black Sheep.[†1] But you may suppose what arrears of business of all kinds I have, and how they are complicated by Wills's illness and absence. Hence I cannot yet be quite sure of my day. Let us arrange it when you come back.

I earnestly hope that you will now get right and clear.[†2] You are quite young enough, and have a sufficiently free stage before you, to play the play out yet to everybody's satisfaction.

Ever affecy.

CD.

My Making-up day in Wellington Street is Thursday, until further notice.

To MRS CHARLES COLLINS, [?13 MAY 1868]

Mention in To Georgina Hogarth, 14 May. Date: written previous day.

To CHARLES NOSOTTI,[†3] 13 MAY 1868*

MS Henry Sotheran Limited.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Thirteenth May 1868

Sir

I shall be glad to take the five glasses,[†4] in accordance with your estimate.[†5] If you will let me know at Gad's Hill (when they are completed) on what day and by what train your workman will come down with them, the cart shall meet him at the station. They will be very easily fixed, the wall being of wood; but I wish them to be adjusted by your workman, in order that they may reflect and refract truly.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Charles Nosotti

To THOMAS BEARD,[†1] 14 MAY 1868

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | Lancaster Place.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Fourteenth May 1868

My Dear Beard

I was very sorry indeed to miss you the other day. Can't you come down to Gad's on Saturday, until Sunday or Monday? No one there, and I will meet you by any train.

Ever Faithfully

CD

To J. T. FIELDS, 14 MAY 1868

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Fourteenth May, 1868.

My Dear Fields

†a I hope you will receive by Saturday's Cunard, a case containing:

1.—A trifling supply of the†2 pen-knibs that suited your hand

2.—A Do. of unfailing medicine for cockroaches

3.—Mrs. Gamp, for Ticknor.†3

The case is addressed to you at Bleecker†4 Street New York. If it should be delayed for the knibs (or nibs) promised tomorrow, and should be too late for the Cunard packet, it will in that case come by the next following Inman Steamer.†5

Everything here looks beautiful, and I find it (you will be surprised to hear) really a pretty place!!! I have seen No Thoroughfare twice. Excellent things in it; but it drags—to my thinking. It is, however, a great success in the country, and is now getting up with great force in Paris. Fechter is ill, and was ordered off to Brighton yesterday. Wills is ill too, and banished into Sussex for perfect rest. Otherwise, thank God, I find everything well and thriving. You and my dear Mrs. Fields are constantly in my mind.†a

With love from Mary and Georgina,
Ever My Dear Fields
Your truly affectionate
CD.

†a Procter greatly better.†a

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 14 MAY 1868*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Fourteenth May 1868

My Dearest Georgy

I wrote to Katie yesterday, and had the enclosed note from her this morning.

Tomorrow I will come to Gad's by some train from New Cross.[†1] I have no Bradshaw here, and have been too busy all day to send for one. But I will come to Higham, either by the train that leaves London about mid-day, or by afternoon train; certainly one of the two, and probably the former. Of course I shall remain at Gad's until Monday Morning. I have told Ellen[†2] of your coming, and also about the clothes—which she had already sent to you.

Fechter is swollen in his worst manner,[†3] and has gone to Brighton.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To MRS CATTERMOLE,[†4] 16 MAY 1868*

MS Fales Library, New York University.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Sixteenth May, 1868.

My Dear Mrs. Cattermole

On my return from America just now, I incidentally heard that George[†5] had been ill.[†6] My sister in law had heard it from Forster—but vaguely. Until I received your letter of Wednesday's date, I had no idea that he had been very ill; and should have been greatly shocked by knowing it, were it not for the hopeful and bright assurance you give me that he is greatly better.[†7]

My old affection for him has never cooled. The last time he dined with me, I asked him to come again that day ten years, for I was perfectly certain (this was my small joke) that I should not set eyes upon him sooner. The time being fully up, I hope you will remind him, with my love, that he is due. His hand is upon these walls here,[†8] as I should like him to see for himself, and you to see for *your*self. And in this hope I shall pursue his complete recovery.

I heartily sympathize with you in your terrible anxiety and in your vast relief; and, with many thanks for your letter, am Ever

My Dear Mrs Cattermole | Affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To ALFRED DICKENS, 16 MAY 1868*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Sixteenth May, 1868.

My Dear Alfred. On coming home from America where I have been Reading (I have been absent six months), I found your letter of the 17th. February waiting for me. It was but newly arrived however. I have lost no time in communicating with Plorn, and as his mind is quite made up to try Bush life in earnest, I have arranged that he shall so come out to you as to arrive in Melbourne about Christmas—as you recommend. He is now at the Agricultural College at Cirencester, but he will leave there in July. I think it best that he should bestir himself about his ship, passage, outfit, and so forth, and should have as little help as possible. When he comes home, therefore, I shall set him to work in these respects, and he shall write to you and give you all particulars. You must not charge yourself with the cost of going to Melbourne to meet him, but must leave that to me. For which purpose, you will find—on and after your receipt of Plorn's letter—fifty pounds placed by me to your credit at the Bank with which you have already had dealings.

You will find him able to turn his hand to a good many things. He can ride, do a little carpentering, make a horse shoe, and job handily in various ways. He has some little knowledge of useful chemistry also. He is well grown and strong, and has many requisites for the life, if he take to it steadily. By this expression, I don't mean that he is in the least likely to go wild or do wrong; I simply mean that he may not take to the life when he comes face to face with it. Of that, we can form no accurate judgment until he tries it. You will observe him, and will soon see how he tends. He will have ready money in his pocket when he lands; and, in case of accident or sudden emergency of any kind, he shall bring out an authority to the Bank to honor your joint drafts to the extent of One Hundred Pounds. Of course you will not draw more of this reserve than is quite necessary. But the Fifty Pounds first mentioned on the other side will be absolutely your own.

Charley Collins, I am sorry to say, is very ill. Besides having spasmodic asthma badly, he has some mysterious illness (originating in the brain, I fancy) which weakens him with continual sickness. He is in bed at present, but is to be got down here as soon as he can be moved. Harry, having imprudently taken a jump at Wimbledon (the very thing he was cautioned by the Doctors on no account to do) has damaged his weak knee again, and is lying motionless in his bed. I am afraid it will be a slow and long affair, and that it will be as much as he can do to go up to[†1] Cambridge in October. Mr. Fechter has broken down at the Adelphi, after playing in No Thoroughfare 120 odd nights, and is going to Paris, really very ill. Wilkie has had gout in his eyes, and has suffered greatly all the Winter. Mr. Wills has had a bad fall, out hunting, and is ordered absolute rest for months to come. This completes the cataolgue of calamities; all the rest of us being in flourishing condition.

Nothing can exceed Mr. Rusden's kindness. Plorn shall bear a letter to him, from me.

Go on as you have begun—get on as you have got on—and please God you will do honor to your name in the New World.[†1][[†a]

Dearest Love from all | Ever Your affectionate Father[†a]]

CHARLES DICKENS

To CAPTAIN SHERARD OSBORN,[†2] 17 MAY 1868

Mention in N, 111, 648; MS 2 pp.; dated Gad's Hill Place, 17 May 68; addressed Captain Sherard Osborn.

Concerning a dinner to Cyrus Field;[†3] CD will propose a toast if able to be present.[†4]

To CHARLES READE,[†5] 17 MAY 1868*

MS W. N. Roughead. Address: Charles Reade Esquire | [†a] 2 Albert Terrace | Knightsbridge.[†a]

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Seventeenth May 1868

My Dear Reade

Before I left New York, I had a long interview with your lawyer.[†6] I think him remarkably well up, both in your particular case and the general subject.[†7] He has considered both, well, and has the points at his fingers' ends. He begged me to tell you that he could have tried the case this month, but sought postponement for two reasons. Firstly, because he did not feel well enough (he has some affection of the heart), to do justice to it. Secondly, "because he didn't like the judge". He expected to bring it on for trial in June, and was exceedingly confident of "getting a verdict".[†1] It might be merely a verdict for a nominal sum of money, and the defendants were notoriously men of straw; but a verdict he believed he could pledge himself to get. I undertook to make this known to you. He decidedly knows more about his case than a lawyer in the interests of his client usually does, and has taken great pains with it.

Believe me always | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To PERCY FITZGERALD,[†2] 18 MAY 1868

Text from Fitzgerald, Memories of CD, p. 57.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Monday, Eighteenth May, 1868.

My dear Fitzgerald,

Wills is ordered away for positive rest and change, and is forbidden even to write a letter. The Paris paper[†3] is welcome, and Theodore of Corsica shall receive unbounded hospitality in these Halls.[†4] I am ready for him as soon as he likes.

Regarding the Readings, thus the case stands: I mean to take my farewell of that occupation in the ensuing winter and spring. Dublin and Belfast will assuredly be in the programme, and I shall not fail to claim your promise to join the pilgrimage. Dolby begs me to tell you that he is full of joyful anticipation. He has been utterly hardened by his American bullying, and has none but private feelings left.

Many thanks for your kind welcome home.

Always cordially yours,
CHARLES DICKENS.

Percy Fitzgerald, Esquire.

To MRS S. C. HALL,[†5] 18 MAY 1868*

MS Pennsylvania Historical Society. Address: Mrs. S. C. Hall | Bannow House | 8 Essex Villas | Argyll Road | Kensington | W.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Monday Eighteenth May 1868

My Dear Mrs. Hall

I find your kind note on coming here this morning, and I thank you and Hall[†6] for your cordial welcome home.

There are (I find on reference to our contribution-list) several stories in type awaiting their places. But I shall be delighted to give yours immediate attention, if you will let me have it here.[†1] Please mark it on the outside "Private", and then it will be sure to come straight to my desk.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To DR S. G. HOWE, 18 MAY 1868†

MS Perkins Institute for the Blind.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Eighteenth May, 1868

Dear Dr. Howe

If you will apply personally to Mr. J.S. Amory of Boston,[†2] that gentleman (as agent to my Bankers Messrs. Coutts and Co. Strand London) will pay you Seventeen Hundred Dollars. This sum, in accordance with your estimate,[†3] I place at your disposal for the production of 250 copies of The Old Curiosity Shop, printed in raised letters for the use of the Blind.[†4]

[†a] I am unwilling to fetter you with any conditions; but I wish any Blind asylums or Asylum for the City of New York to share gratuitously in this little gift.[†a] Kindly use your own discretion concerning it, and you will please me.[†5]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Dr. Howe.

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 18 MAY 1868

Summary in Sotheby's catalogue, June 1979; MS 1 p.; dated Office of AYR, 18 May 68; addressed F. Ouvry.

Sending a cheque for £400 for the balance of the loan to Fechter.[†6]

To MESSRS SEAGER, EVANS & CO., 18 MAY 1868*

MS Messrs Seager, Evans & Co. Address: Messrs. Seager Evans and Co. | Mill Bank | Westminster.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Monday Eighteenth May 1868

Mr. Charles Dickens sends his compliments to Messrs. Seager Evans and Co. and begs them to test the accompanying bottle of gin drawn from their cask this morning.[†1] It appears to Mr. Dickens to have neither the right strength nor flavor, and he thinks it must have been tampered with at the Railway. When the cask was tapped at Gad's Hill on Saturday, it was observed to be particularly full.

To SAMUEL SIDNEY[†2], 18 MAY 1868*

MS Dickens House. Address: Samuel Sidney Esquire | Lea View Lodge | Mount Pleas[ant] | Upper Clap[ham][†3] | N. E.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Monday Eighteenth May 1868

My Dear Mr. Sidney

You have every claim to my answering your letters with my own hand immediately.

Wills bore his journey into Sussex very well indeed, and, at its successful termination, was no worse. I do not think it likely that we shall have better news of him for several weeks. But to be no worse in such a case is virtually to be better, and I can honestly assure you that I left him (on his going away) far better than I expected.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Samuel Sidney Esquire

To THE REV. JOHN CONSTABLE,[†4] 19 MAY 1868

Mention in N, 111, 649.

To THE REV. J. M. BRACKENBURY,[†1] 21 MAY 1868*

MS G. A. Linsley.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Twenty First May, 1868

My Dear Sir

I am deeply gratified by your praises of Harry;[†2] and I heartily hope that in his future career he will do us both justice.

Nothing will occur, I trust, to prevent my having the pleasure of giving away the prizes on the day of the Sports.[†3] I am sorry to say that my Surgeon forms a far less hopeful view of Harry's accident[†4] than yours does.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

The Rev. John M Brackenbury

To JAMES PAYN,[†5] 21 MAY 1868

Mention in Autograph Prices Current, v (1919-21); MS 1 p.; addressed James Payn; dated 21 May 68.

Thanking him for the cordiality and frankness of his letter.

To DR RICHARD I. QUINNELL,[†6] 21 MAY 1868

MS State Library of Victoria, Melbourne.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Twenty First May 1868

Dear Sir

I am exceedingly obliged to you for the photograph you have kindly left for me in Wellington Street,[†7] and have great pleasure in sending you the photographs enclosed, in compliance with your request. I must beg to express my regret that six months arrear of business, and the complete overthrow of my usual orderly arrangements by the indisposition of my chief assistant, rendered it impossible for me to see you when you were in London.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Dr. Richard I. Quinnell

To CHARLES FECHTER, 22 MAY 1868

Text from MDGH, 111, 254.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday, 22nd May, 1868.

My Dear Fechter,

I have an idea about the bedroom act,[†1] which I should certainly have suggested if I had been at our "repetitions" here.[†2] I want it done to the sound of the Waterfall. I want the sound of the Waterfall louder and softer as the wind rises and falls, to be spoken through—like the music. I want the Waterfall listened to when spoken of, and not looked out at. The mystery and gloom of the scene would be greatly helped by this, and it would be new and picturesquely fanciful.

I am very anxious to hear from you how the piece seems to go, and how the artists, who are to act it, seem to understand their parts. Pray tell me, too, when you write, how you found Madame Fechter, and give all our loves to all.

Ever heartily yours
[CD]

To J. T. FIELDS, 22 MAY 1868

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Twenty Second May 1868

My Dear Fields.

I have found it so extremely difficult to write about America (though never so briefly) without appearing to blow trumpets on the one hand, or to be inconsistent with my avowed determination not to write about it[†3] on the other, that I have taken the simple course enclosed. The No. will be published on the 6th. of June. It appears to me to be the most modest and manly course, and to derive some graceful significance from its title?[†4]

Thank my dear Mrs. Fields from me for her delightful letter received on the sixteenth. I will write to her very soon, and tell her about the Dogs. I would write by this post, but that Wills's absence (in Sussex, and getting no better there as yet) so overwhelms me with business that I can scarcely get through it.

Miss me? Ah my dear fellow, but how do I miss you! We talk about you and "Annie" at Gad's Hill, every day of our lives. And I never see the place looking very pretty indeed, or hear the divers tribes of birds sing, all day long, and the nightingales all night, without restlessly wishing that you were both there.

With best love and truest and most enduring regard, Ever My Dear Fields
Your most affectionate
CD.

To CHARLES KENT,[†1] 22 MAY 1868

Extract in American Art Association catalogue, Feb 1924; MS 1 p.; dated 26 Wellington Street, 22 May 68; addressed Charles Kent.

I cannot tell you how truly I feel your kind remembrance of your friend, under signed . . . Thank you. Since I came back I have been so overwhelmed by six months arrears of business, intensely complicated by the illness and absence of Wills, that I have been constantly afflicted with a Revolving Nightmare. I hope however to send round "the Duke's Motto"[†2] this next week.

To HENRY MORLEY,[†3] 22 MAY 1868*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Twenty Second May 1868

My Dear Morley

Mr. Meason[†4] may reprint as he desires.[†5]

Faithfully Ever
CD.

To J. C. PARKINSON,[†6] 22 MAY 1868

Extract in Fitzgerald Collection, Vol. 292, Guildhall Museum, Rochester.

My boy is laid up at Wimbledon (he is headboy there now and going to Cambridge) with a lamed knee. Having lamed it two years ago, he was medically admonished not to jump—of course therefore did jump—and probably will never jump again.

To S. U. FLODELL,[†1] 23 MAY 1868*

MS Berg Collection.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Twenty Third May, 1868

Dear Sir

I very readily comply with your request preferred through Mr. Dolby, and beg to send you on the other side a short extract, in my writing, from the Old Curiosity Shop.

With many thanks for your attention when I was last in America, and with the assurance of my good will towards you wheresoever I am,

Believe me | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. S. U. Flodell

"Dear, gentle, patient, noble Nell was dead. Her little bird—a poor slight thing the pressure of a finger would have crushed—was stirring nimbly in its cage; but the strong heart of its child-mistress was mute and motionless for ever."

CHARLES DICKENS

Saturday Twenty Third May, 1868.

To THE REV. ALEXANDER J. D. D'ORSEY,[†2] [25 MAY 1868]

MS (envelope) Professor Harry Stone. Address: The Rev. Alexander D. Dorsey | 13 Prince's Square | Kensington Gardens | W. PM 25 May 68.

To MRS J. T. FIELDS, 25 MAY 1868

Text from MDGH, 111, 255-8 and ([aa]) J. T. Fields, Yesterdays with Authors, 1875, p. 190.

Gad's Hill, Higham by Rochester, Kent,
25th May, 1868.

My Dear Mrs. Fields,

As you ask me about the dogs, I begin with them. When I came down first, I came to Gravesend, five miles off. The two Newfoundland dogs,[†3] coming to meet me with the usual carriage and the usual driver, and beholding me coming in my usual dress out at the usual door, it struck me that their recollection of my having been absent for any unusual time was at once cancelled. They behaved (they are both young dogs) exactly in their usual manner; coming behind the basket phaeton as we trotted along, and lifting their heads to have their ears pulled—a special attention which they receive from no one else. But when

I drove into the stable-yard, Linda[†1] (the St. Bernard) was greatly excited; weeping profusely, and throwing herself on her back that she might caress my foot with her great fore-paws. Mamie's little dog, too, Mrs. Bouncer, barked in the greatest agitation on being called down and asked by Mamie, "Who is this?" and tore round and round me, like the dog in the Faust outlines.[†2] You must know that all the farmers turned out on the road in their market-chaises to say, "Welcome home, sir!" and that all the houses along the road were dressed with flags; and that our servants, to cut out the rest, had dressed this house so that every brick of it was hidden. They had asked Mamie's permission to "ring the alarm-bell" (!) when master drove up, but Mamie, having some slight idea that that compliment might awaken master's sense of the ludicrous, had recommended bell abstinence. But on Sunday the village choir (which includes the bell-ringers) made amends. After some unusually brief pious reflections in the crowns of their hats at the end of the sermon, the ringers bolted out, and rang like mad until I got home. There had been a conspiracy among the villagers to take the horse out, if I had come to our own station, and draw me here. Mamie and Georgy had got wind of it and warned me.[†3]

Divers birds sing here all day, and the nightingales all night. The place is lovely, and in perfect order. I have put five mirrors in the Swiss châlet (where I write) and they reflect and refract in all kinds of ways the leaves that are quivering at the windows, and the great fields of waving corn, and the saildotted river. My room is up among the branches of the trees; and the birds and the butterflies fly in and out, and the green branches shoot in, at the open windows, and the lights and shadows of the clouds come and go with the rest of the company. The scent of the flowers, and indeed of everything that is growing for miles and miles, is most delicious.

Dolby (who sends a world of messages) found his wife much better than he expected, and the children (wonderful to relate!) perfect. The little girl[†4] winds up her prayers every night with a special commendation to Heaven of me and the pony—as if I must mount him to get there! I dine with Dolby (I was going to write "him," but found it would look as if I were going to dine with the pony) at Greenwich this very day, and if your ears do not burn from six to nine this evening, then the Atlantic is a non-conductor. We are already settling—think of this!—the details of my farewell course of readings. I am brown beyond belief, and cause the greatest disappointment in all quarters by looking so well. It is really wonderful what those fine days at sea did for me! My doctor[†5] was quite broken down in spirits when he saw me, for the first time since my return, last Saturday. "Good Lord!" he said, recoiling, "seven years younger!"

It is time I should explain the otherwise inexplicable enclosure. Will you tell Fields, with my love (I suppose he hasn't used all the pens yet?), that I think there is in Tremont Street a set of my books, sent out by Chapman, not arrived when I departed. Such set of the immortal works of our illustrious, etc., is designed for the gentleman to whom the enclosure is addressed. If T., F. and Co., will kindly forward the set (carriage paid) with the enclosure to [Hamilton]'s[†1] address, I will invoke new blessings on their heads, and will get Dolby's little daughter to mention them nightly.

"No Thoroughfare" is very shortly coming out in Paris, where it is now in active rehearsal. It is still playing here, but without Fechter, who has been very ill. The doctor's dismissal of him to Paris, however, and his getting better there, enables him to get up the play there. He and Wilkie missed so many pieces of stage-effect here, that, unless I am quite satisfied with his report, I shall go over and try my stage-managerial hand at the Vaudeville Theatre.[†2] I particularly want the drugging and attempted robbing in the bedroom scene at the Swiss inn to be done to the sound of a waterfall rising and falling with the wind. Although in the very opening of that scene they speak of the waterfall and listen to it, nobody thought of its mysterious music. I could make it, with a good stage-carpenter, in an hour.

[†a] Is it not a curious thing that they want to make me a governor of the Foundling Hospital, because, since the Christmas number, they have had such an amazing access of visitors and money?[†a†3]

My dear love to Fields once again. Same to you and him from Mamie and Georgie. I cannot tell you both how I miss you, or how overjoyed I should be to see you here.

Ever, my dear Mrs. Fields, | Your most affectionate friend

CD

To JAMES HAMILTON,[†4] 25 MAY 1868

MS Marion Public Library, Ohio. Address: With a Packet of Books | Mr. James Hamilton | Care of Mr. Childs | Ledger Office | Philadelphia.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Twenty Fifth May, 1868.

To
Mr. James Hamilton
This set of my books
With thanks and regard[†5]
CHARLES DICKENS

To W. W. JONES,[†1] 25 MAY 1868*

Text from copy in Minute Book of Newsvendors Benevolent and Provident Institution.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Monday 25th. May 1868

Dear Sir.

I shall be happy to receive the Deputation here on Thursday next at Halfpast two.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. W. W. Jones.

To WALTER THORNBURY,[†2] 25 MAY 1868

Extract in Anderson Galleries catalogue No. 2266 (Apr 1928); MS 1 p.; addressed Walter Thornbury; dated Office of AYR, Monday, 25 May 68.

As I am the other man who is not going to the Derby,[†3] I have arranged to look after Wills on Wednesday.

To D. O'C. TOWNLEY,[†4] 25 MAY 1868

Text from W. G. Wilkins, CD in America, 1911, p. 314.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday, May 25, 1868.

My Dear Sir,

I am truly obliged to you for your note enclosing `Alderman Rooney's' account of a dinner never to be forgotten by me.[†5] You are very hard upon the `Alderman,' I think, in your depreciation of his work! For playfulness and earnestness combined, and for a special ease in versification, the `Alderman' seems to me to be rather remarkable.[†6] I cannot claim to be a disinterested judge of his production, certainly, for it has touched me in a tender place; but if you can, by any means, convey my appreciation and thanks to him, pray do.

My dear sir,
Very faithfully yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

D. O'C Townley, Esq.

To MRS WILLS,[†1] 25 MAY 1868

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Monday Twenty Fifth May 1868

My Dear Mrs. Wills

As I am the man who is not going to the Derby, I will come down on Wednesday by the 11..55 train you tell me of, returning to town by any good train in the early evening. My love to Wills, whom I hope to find coming round the corner (figuratively) at a steady pace.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 27 MAY 1868*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Twenty Seventh May 1868

My Dear Ouvry.

Shall I answer the enclosed to the effect that I altogether object to the republication of the Portrait,[†2] or will you?

Have we made any move in the direction of Young Essell of Rochester?[†3]

Ever Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To SHIRLEY BROOKS,[†4] 30 MAY 1868

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

THE ATHENÆUM
Saturday Thirtieth May, 1868

My Dear Brooks

Many thanks for your hearty remembrance, and for the Introduction to the G. M. re-born:— [†5] which is as quaint and pleasant a paper, and as much to the purpose, as I have read for many a day. I shall be delighted to have the Gordian

Knot;[†1] and its very much nearer associations with you than with the old Burlington Brigand[†2] shall take the taste of the latter out of my mouth.

When will you really come to Gad's Hill? On what Sunday? I can put you up at night, and remit you to town at any hour you like best on Monday. Will you come on Sunday week the 7th. of June? Or on Sunday fortnight the 14th. of June? Say when, in a line to me at Wellington Street.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Shirley Brooks Esquire

To H. D. DAVIES,[†3] 30 MAY 1868

Mention in American Art Association & Anderson catalogue No. 3895; MS I p.; addressed H. D. Davies; dated Gad's Hill Place, 30 May 68.

Giving him advice.

To ALEXANDER IRELAND,[†4] 30 MAY 1868

MS Morgan Library.

THE ATHENÆUM | Saturday Thirtieth May, 1868

Dear Mr. Ireland

Many thanks for the book[†5] you have kindly sent me. My interest in its subject is scarcely less than your own, and the book has afforded me great pleasure. I hope it will prove a very useful tribute to Hazlitt[†6] and Hunt[†7] (in extending the general knowledge of their writings), as well as a deservedly hearty and loving one.

You gratify me much by your appreciation of my desire to promote the kindest feelings between England and America. But the writer of the generous article in your paper[†8] is quite mistaken in supposing that I intend to write a book on the United States. The fact is exactly the reverse, or I could not have spoken without some appearance of having a purpose to serve.

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Alexander Ireland Esquire

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 31 MAY 1868

Extract in unidentified American catalogue, from W. Dexter's cuttings at Dickens House.

Mentions Harry Dickens's affected leg. Now I am off to Paris for a day or two,[†1] but not longer. Did you not suppose that Harry's leg was being ornamented by the paint-brush?

To JOHN FORSTER, [MAY 1868]

Extract in F, XI, iii, 823*n. Date*: during his last visit to Paris, according to Forster.

Enclosing a cleverly written Paris journal containing essays on English manners.[†2] In one of them the writer remarked that he had heard of the venality of English politicians, but could not have supposed it to be so shameless as it is, for when he went to the House of Commons he heard them call out "Places! Places! Give us Places!"[†3] when the Minister entered!

June

To ALFRED HARMANT,[†4] 2 JUNE 1868*

MS Dickens House.

HOTEL DUE HELDER
AD. REIGNARD | 9 & 10 RUE DU HELDER | PARIS
Mardi Juin 2, 1868

Cher Monsieur

J'ai l'honneur de vous prier, de vouloir bien présenter mes vrais remerciements aux artistes qui m'ont prêté leurs concours dans la répresentation de "L'Abîme", ce soir; et de les assurer de ma haute, et reconnaissante appréciation de leur puissante interpretation de mon drâme.

Permettez moi aussi de vous remercier de la libéralité avec laquelle vous avez mis les ressources de vôtre excellent Théatre au service d'un écrivain Anglais.

J'espère avant peu, Monsieur, vous exprimer ma gratitude, et remercier vos artistes, en personne; mais, forcé de retourner à Londres, sans délais, je n'ai pû quitter Paris sans leur addresser, ainsi que vous, Monsieur, l'expression de ma reconnaissance, et l'assurance de mon parfait dévoument.

Vraiment à vous
CHARLES DICKENS

A Monsieur Alfred Harmant.

To M. LE DIRECTEUR DE L'HOTEL DU HELDER,[†1] 3 JUNE 1868*

MS British Library

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Mercredi Juin 3, 1868

M. Charles Dickens prie Monsieur le Directeur de l'hotel du Helder, d'avoir la bonté d'envoyer aucune lettre reçue à L'hotel addressé à Monsieur Dickens depuis son depart, à l'addresse ci-dessus

To JAMES BIRTLES,[†2] 4 JUNE 1868*

MS Morgan Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Fourth June 1868

Dr. Mr. Birtles.

I send you the list of contents,[†3] and such proofs as I have to send. Forward proof of Sparrows[†4] to Mr. Mackay,[†5] and beg to have it back by return. I have requested Mr. FitzGerald to send you his proof by return.[†6]

Please set up for me, the enclosed Cricket Club Rules.[†7]

CD.

To WILKIE COLLINS, 4 JUNE 1868

MS Morgan Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Fourth June 1868

My Dear Wilkie

I have been to Paris. The piece is a genuine and real success.[†8] They all agree that if it could have been done at the Porte St. Martin,[†1] it would have gone 200 nights. I did not see it on the first night, being far too nervous and oppressed by a horrible sense of the helplessness of the situation. Fechter too was lead-colored, and shaking from head to foot. So we took a ride in an open coach, and repaired at intervals to the Café Vaudeville:[†2] where Didier (the announced translator)[†3] came, from act to act, with his report. Joey Ladle knew nothing of his part, and made less than nothing of it. All the rest did well. Bertrand[†4] was loudly called at the end of the Second Act, and did his very utmost. There is no doubt whatever that it was a success from first to last. It was too late to make the change when I got to Paris, and Fechter had great faith in the retention of the scene besides; but I am quite certain that the piece would go better without Wilding's death scene. The Audience are told (in the person of Vendale)[†5] that Wilding is dead—and that is quite enough. I saw our French Wilding after his decease, and could very clearly perceive that he had got mighty little out of it.

I thought it as well that they should know about Paris at the Adelphi, so I went behind for half an hour last night.

You are getting on, I hope? | Ever affecy

CD.

To PERCY FITZGERALD, 4 JUNE 1868

MS Bentley Collection, Kennesaw State College, Georgia.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Fourth June 1868

My Dear FitzGerald

I had done thus much to Bird's Eye Paris[†6] this morning when I heard from Birtles that you have a proof of it by you. Will you make your corrections on my enclosed proof, and send it back to Birtles by return of post?[†7]

Please keep, on abrupt transitions into the present tense, your critical eye.[†8]

Tom Butler,[†1] in type, is just now brought in. I will write to you of him tomorrow or Saturday.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

Wills going on well.

To MISS LE CLERCQ,[†2] 4 JUNE 1868*

Text from transcript, Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Fourth June 1868.

My Dear Miss Le Clercq,

Many thanks for your kind note. I hope the great success[†3] will do our friend's[†4] health a world of good. I am quite as heartily glad on his account, as on the Play's.

Faithfully yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

To J. C. PARKINSON, 4 JUNE 1868†

MS Free Library of Philadelphia

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Fourth June 1868

My Dear Mr. Parkinson

There is a bill[†5] before Parliament (but I forget whose it is) for enabling a married woman to possess her own earnings.[†6] I should much like to champion the sex—reasonably—and to dwell upon the hardship inflicted by the present law[†7] on a woman who finds herself bound to a drunken, profligate, and spend-thrift husband—who is willing to support him—does so—but has her little savings bullied out of her, continually. The case is this:-The bill will not pass, we know very well; but would it not be wise and just to take[†8] any such opportunity of setting right some little item in the wrong that springs up under our laws of marriage and divorce? Grant what we are told by bishops, priests, and deacons[†9] about sanctity of marriage, indissolubility of marriage tie &c &c. Grant that such things must be, for the general good. Cannot we—and ought not we— in such a case as this, to help the weak and injured party? Reverse the case, and take a working man with a drunken woman saddled on him as long as he lives, [†a] who strips his house continually to buy drink.[†a] If he must not be able to divorce himself—for the general good—surely "the general good" should, in return,[†1] punish the woman.

Would you like to take this subject?[†2]

Faithfully Yours Always
CHARLES DICKENS

To E. YARDLEY,[†3] 4 JUNE 1868

Mention in Anderson Galleries catalogue, April 1916; MS 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill Place, 4 June 68; addressed E. Yardley.

Acknowledging the receipt of a package of books.

To W. J. FARRER, 6 JUNE 1868*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Saturday Evening Sixth June 1868

My Dear Sir

I have now gone through all the papers of the late Mr. Townshend that have been placed in my hands. So very few memoranda concerning those religious opinions to which he refers in his will, exist among them, that I suppose there must be many more papers at Lausanne.

I have discovered nothing that in the least explains his meaning as to the rings[†4] intended to illustrate his geological collection, or that throw any light on his testamentary wishes. —Perhaps, however, I should except under the latter head a note in his own handwriting—part of a paper entitled "my observations"— evidently a kind of sketch for a business letter to his agent, Mr. Jackson, on the receipt of one of his periodical reports—in which Mr. Townshend describes his "one great object", as being "to leave a bequest to the improvement of mankind". The context, though very slight in itself, clearly shows that he referred here to his real estates,[†5] and not to his papers.

Traces of two former wills, destroyed, have attracted my notice in the course of my investigation.

I am My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS[†6]

W. Farrer Esquire

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 6 JUNE 1868*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Saturday Sixth June 1868

My Dearest Georgy.

I will leave Charing X tomorrow at 10..40—arriving at Gad's (at Higham Station, I mean) at 12..7.

Ever affectionately
CD.

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 9 JUNE 1868*

MS Private.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Ninth June 1868

My Dear Ouvry.

I enclose the quarterly cheque.[†1]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Frederick Ouvry Esquire

To PERCY FITZGERALD, 10 JUNE 1868*

MS Guildhall Museum, Rochester.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Tenth June 1868

My Dear FitzGerald

Tom Butler[†2] is in print, and I like him very much. But I do not quite understand how long you propose to make him. He is obviously incomplete as he stands. How tall[†3] is he to grow? Into how many parts is he to expand?[†4] Enlighten me, there's a dear fellow, and I will presently respond.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

I have been very much pleased with the Garrick,[†5] and have read it "straight through".

To W.C. MACREADY, 10 JUNE 1868[††]

MS Morgan Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Tenth June 1868

My Dearest Macready

Since my return from America, I have been so overwhelmed with business that I have not had time even to write to you. You may imagine what six months of arrear are to dispose of; added to this, Wills has received a concussion of the brain (from an accident in the hunting field), and is sent away by the doctors, and strictly prohibited from even writing a note. Consequently, all the business and money details of All The Year Round devolve upon me. And I have to get them up, for I have never had experience of them. Then I am suddenly entreated to go to Paris, to look after the French version of No Thoroughfare on the stage. And I go, and come back,—leaving it a very great success.

I hope Mrs. Macready and you have not abandoned the idea of coming here? The expression of this hope is the principal—if not the only—object of this present note. May the amiable Secretary vouchsafe a satisfactory reply!

[†a] Katie's husband is still ill, and I begin to doubt his ever recovering. She and Mary and Georgina send their very best love.[†a] The undersigned is in his usual brilliant condition, and indeed has greatly disappointed them at home here by coming back "so brown and looking so well." They expected a wreck, and were at first much mortified. But they are getting over it now. To my particular friends, the noble boy and Johnny, I beg to be warmly remembered.

Ever My Dearest Macready
Your most affectionate
CHARLES DICKENS

† to your Katie and Mrs. Macready

To CAPTAIN HOUSTON STEWART,†1 10 JUNE 1868

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds. Address: Private | Captain Houston Stewart R. N. | The Dock Yard | Chatham. PM 10 Jun 68.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Wednesday Tenth June 1868

My Dear Houston Stewart

I read your last note with the deepest interest, and was touched to the heart by the remembrance it conveyed to me. You cannot imagine how much you were in my mind while I was in America, though I hope you can imagine with what sympathy and true regard I always thought of you, and how they never wrote to me from here without mentioning your name. I have not the courage to approach (in writing) nearer to your grief;†2 but you have no friend who can ever have felt a higher admiration of what you have lost than I did, or who can more tenderly appreciate your sorrow.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To SIR JAMES EMERSON TENNENT, 10 JUNE 1868*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Sir James Emerson Tennent Bart | 66 Warwick Square | London | S.W.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Tenth June 1868

My Dear Tennent

I have been so very busy since I came back, that I have not had time to write to you to thank you for your cordial welcome home. Not to mention six months arrears of business, my business manager sub Editor and partner, Wills, is laid up with concussion of the brain, and I have the whole of "All The Year Round" work to do. I have had to go to Paris too, to look after the No Thoroughfare play (a very great success), and have been in a perfect whirlpool of occupation.

At last, I herein send you my love and thanks. It would be a great pleasure to us if you and Lady Tennent and Miss Tennent†1 would repeat your visit of last year before you go to Ireland. We would do our best to make your time ours. The want of rain is distressing the poor people very much, and is making the lawn brown, and the flowers hang their heads; but otherwise the country is beautiful.

My Dear Tennent | Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Sir James Emerson Tennent.

To HENRY MORLEY, 11 JUNE 1868

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday, Eleventh June 1868

My Dear Morley.

†a I find it impossible to get an opening in the middle of the No.†2 this time. Never mind that, in going over the making up. As an exceptional departure from the rule,†3 it may dispense with an appearance of monotony. Your account of the Vigilance Book†4 is a most admirable presentation and condensation of a wandering text.†a

Faithfully Yours always
CD

To MRS CATTERMOLE, 13 JUNE 1868

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, July 1983; MS 1 p.; dated Office of AYR, 13 June 68; addressed Mrs Cattermole.

CD has conversed with Forster who is ready to be one of several to assist George,†1 yet he had reasons for believing that he and I alone could do no enduring service to George or you. Some special experience in his remembrance so CD did not press.†2 . . . while I am painfully conscious that the enclosed small sum†3 can be but of temporary use to you, I still hope that it may derive some adventitious value in your eyes from being freely and confidentially placed at your disposal by an old friend

Faithfully Yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To HENRY DICKENS, 13 JUNE 1868

Extract in Autograph Prices Current, VI, 55; dated AYR Office, 13 June; addressed "to his son".†4

The question is, how can you best be got to Gads? I suppose you will want some one to help you in and out of the carriage on the two Railways, and in and out of the cabs. Write me at Gad's. Be explicit,

To GEORGE DOLBY, 15 JUNE 1868*

MS Beinecke Library, Yale University.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Fifteenth June 1868

My Dear Dolby

Your's of yesterday received this morning. I had stupidly forgotten your Handel[†5] engagements,[†6] and had meant to talk about the commencement of the Readings[†7] here. On Thursday I will expect you at the office.

Faithfully Yours ever
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN RUSSELL YOUNG, 15 JUNE 1868

MS Library of Congress. Address: Private | J. Russell Young Esqre. | Office of The New York Tribune | New York City | U.S. of America.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Fifteenth June 1868

My Dear Mr. Young.

Many thanks for your kind letter of the fourteenth of last month, and for the copies of The New York Tribune.[†1] I am happy to report that three or four days at sea vanquished both the catarrh and the neuralgia, and that I came home in great force. I am now looking out expectantly for Longfellow.[†2]

With kindest regards to Mr. Greeley when you see him, Believe me
Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

J. Russell Young Esquire

To GEORGE ROUTLEDGE,[†3] 16 JUNE 1868*

MS George Last.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Sixteenth June 1868

Dear Sir,

Mr. Longfellow is an old friend of mine, and stayed at my home when he was last in England six and twenty years ago.[†4]

I shall be at the office of All the Year Round in Wellington St. on Thursday next from half past eleven until half past two, and shall be happy to see you if it should suit your convenience to call.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

George Routledge Esquire.

To CHARLES KENT, 17 JUNE 1868†

MS Walter T. Spencer.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Seventeenth June 1868

My Dear Kent.

†a Every schoolboy knows that if you make any more of these preposterous resolutions, you will do harsh violence to my affectionate regard for you. Every schoolboy also knows that no man can be more welcome here than you always are, and that you cannot test the hearty hospitality of Gad's too often.†a Be a schoolboy therefore, and behave accordingly.

Concerning Harry, I like to guide the boys to a discreet choice, rather than to press it on them. That will be my course as to the Middle Temple,†1 of which I think as you do.†2 Concerning Charles Collins, nothing will induce him—not even the pressing representations of his own Doctor—to see another Doctor.

With cordial thanks for every word in your letter,

Affectionately Yours always
CD.

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 17 JUNE 1868*

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Seventeenth June 1868

My Dear Ouvry

Fechter is evidently under the impression that I accepted some charge which he never proposed to me, and which I (consequently) never undertook! He asked me to see you on the Naturalization Question; and that I should have done but for his subsequent reminder that he was born in England.†3 He also said to me, in Paris, that he supposed he could (if necessary) leave a part of the purchase-money of the house on Mortgage? But he said no more, and I supposed you to know what I knew in the matter.

I shall be at the office after eleven tomorrow: but I cannot advance the money, as Fechter knows already.

Faithfully Yours ever
CHARLES DICKENS

To MESSRS HACHETTE & CIE,†4 18 JUNE 1868*

MS Hachette & Cie.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Eighteenth June 1868

Dear Sirs

I had supposed that you were good enough to make the necessary registration of my works in Paris.[†5] In future I will duly empower you to do so, if you will kindly undertake the task.

On behalf of Mr. Wilkie Collins and myself, I am happy to concede to you the right of publishing a french translation of the tale No Thoroughfare; we reserving to ourselves the right of publishing a French translation of the Drama founded on No Thoroughfare and entitled L'Abime.

I beg to acknowledge the receipt of £16; as your payment for the aforesaid concession.

Dear Sirs | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Hachette & Cie.

To H.G. ADAMS,[†1] 21 JUNE 1868

MS Morgan Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Twenty First June 1868

My Dear Mr. Adams

I am sorry to be obliged to assure you that my Reading again for the Institution[†2] is quite impracticable. My Farewells come in the way; and when they shall be cleared out of it, I read in public no more.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

H. G. Adams Esquire.

To R. BERNAL OSBORNE,[†3] 21 JUNE 1868*

MS W. A. Foyle.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Twenty First June 1868

My Dear Bernal Osborne

I should be heartily pleased to shake hands with you, and to join the "sociable spirits",[†4] on Saturday the 27th. but that I am pre-engaged for that day. Layard[†5] is coming here for a couple of days rest.

Believe me always | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

R. Bernal Osborne Esqre.

To MADAME SAINTON-DOLBY,[†6] 21 JUNE 1868*

MS Dickens House.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Twenty First June 1868

My Dear Madame Sainton

Accept my most cordial thanks for your kind note. I shall be delighted, I assure you, to present myself at your door on Thursday at half past five. You will perhaps have heard from your brother how perfectly we got on together in America; but it would be impossible for him—and very, very difficult for me— to tell you what a place he holds in my affection and confidence.

With kind regard to M. Sainton[†1]
Believe me always | Very Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To DR S. G. HOWE, 23 JUNE 1868

MS Perkins Institution for the Blind.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Twenty Third June 1868

My Dear Dr. Howe.

I write this brief reply to your most welcome letter of the 7th. in order that you may be quite sure of my entire concurrence in your scheme for the distribution of the books.[†2] You have read my wishes correctly: and I could not be better satisfied than I am.[†3]

Believe me always | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To J. B. BUCKSTONE,[†4] 24 JUNE 1868†

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,

HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Twenty Fourth June 1868

My Dear Buckstone

I am heartily sorry to know that you are troubled and unwell. But I hope that a little rest will make you as bright as usual.

†a October will probably find me reading, before it is a week old. But I shall not lose a chance of reminding you of your promise,†a you may depend upon it.

With all good wishes | Faithfully Yours Ever
CHARLES DICKENS

J. B. Buckstone Esquire

To SAMUEL CARTWRIGHT, 24 JUNE 1868*

Text from transcript, British Dental Association.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Twenty Fourth June | 1868.

My Dear Cartwright.

If I fail to appear tomorrow, do not for a moment think me unmindful of your kindness. A world of present vexation and worry has tumbled on my shoulders to-day, with one of my boys in it.†1

Ever faithfully,
CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS CATTERMOLE, 24 JUNE 1868

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, July 1983.; MS 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill Place, 24 June 68; addressed Mrs Cattermole.

Written very hastily in midst of great worry and vexation. CD will pay cheque†2 into Coutts's tomorrow—whatever will make you most comfortable about it, will best please me. Be sure of that.

You must not unconsciously put phrases into my mind which were not there. Nor is there anything to find out about that old interposition. George did not help us. That was all. We would have been useful if we could, but without his help we were useless and gave it up for good.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To THOMAS FAIRBAIRN,†3 24 JUNE 1868

MS Royal Library, Copenhagen.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Twenty Fourth June 1868

My Dear Fairbairn

I am very strongly impelled to comply with any request of yours.[†4] But these posthumous honours of Committee, Subscription, and Westminster Abbey, are so profoundly unsatisfactory in my eyes that—plainly—I would rather have nothing to do with them in any case.

My daughter and her Aunt unite with me in kindest regard to Mrs. Fairbairn. And I hope you will believe in the possession of mine, until I am quietly buried without any Memorial but such as I may have set up in my lifetime.

Very faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Fairbairn Esquire

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 25 JUNE 1868*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Twenty Fifth June 1868

My Dearest Georgy

Frank Beard is coming down tomorrow (Friday) by the 2..12 Train from Charing Cross. He looks quite exhausted by work, but he insists on coming.

Ever affecy.
CD.

The "company's"[†1] affairs are far more hopeless than at first appeared;[†2] and even as to Charley personally—he owes a Thousand Pounds!

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 25 JUNE 1868*

MS Columbia University Library, New York. Address: Frederic Ouvry Esquire | 66 Lincolns Inn Fields.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Twenty Fifth June 1868

My Dear Ouvry.

Unfortunately I have a particular engagement at half past 5 to day, but I pledge myself beforehand to any appointment you may make for tomorrow afternoon.[†3] I shall be here today until 4.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To HENRY MORLEY, 26 JUNE 1868*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Friday Twenty Sixth June 1868

My Dear Morley

If you should find too much in the No.[†1] Mackay's poems may come out.[†2] Or "Barrack Room Company" may come out—which would be better.[†3] I wish not to displace "Queer Street",[†4] if it can possibly be avoided. You will see that I have given "Doubts and Fears" the post of honour.[†5]

Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS WILLS, 26 JUNE 1868

MS Huntington Library.

A.Y.R. | Friday Twenty Sixth June 1868

My Dear Mrs. Wills.

I should have answered your letter yesterday, but for[†a] two reasons. The first,[†a] an unusual amount of drudgery in setting Proofs right for the No.[†6]—[†a] The second, an unspeakable amount of worry and vexation arising out of my son Charley's connexion with this precious Paper Mill Company; against which and his precious Associates in which, I wrote him a letter[†7] of warning when it first loomed in the Evans[†8] atmosphere. It is coming to irretrievable bankruptcy, smash, and ruin.[†a]

Your tidings of Wills, I think good. That he must have time, we knew from the first. He has not had a long time yet; and I cannot help thinking that even to be no worse, is to be better. The bracing place[†9] I am strongly in favour of. I am very hopeful that it will make a great change in him.

I had seen that letter about the Ladies' College,[†10] and will be prepared to pursue the subject should the opportunity be presented.[†11] Do you know that some rather ugly disclosures are afloat about Peter?[†1] I know of others, hushed up a few years ago. It is my belief that some men will come to the Guild Meeting,[†2] expressly to prevent his having that advance of money. I think I know of two, who are influencing more. And as I cannot conscientiously propose it, or support it, I don't think he'll get it.

Will you tell Wills at some time or other, that his old Mare has not done a week's work since she came to Gad's, and is totally unfit for any sort of usefulness. Shall I have her shot?

Everything at the office is quiet and straight. With my love to Wills, believe me ever

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To W. S. AYRTON,[†3] [?LATE JUNE 1868]

Envelope only, MS Dickens House. Address: Scroope Ayrton Esquire | Prospect Place. Date: his obvious concern with Charley's paper-making Co's bankruptcy (see below) points to late June 68.

To RICHARD BENTLEY,[†4] 28 JUNE 1868*

MS Worshipful Company of Stationers and Newspaper Makers.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Twenty Eighth June 1868

My Dear Sir

I have been away, and received your kind letter only last night.

I feel truly obliged to the Master and Wardens of the Stationers' Company for their gratifying remembrance of me,[†5] and I beg you cordially to thank them in my name. But it unfortunately happens that I cannot be in London on Wednesday, and have already been obliged to excuse myself from attending the dinner to be given on that day to Mr. Cyrus Field.[†6] Otherwise I should have been greatly interested in assisting at a civic reception of Longfellow, who is an old and dear friend of mine.

Faithfully yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esquire

To CHARLES DICKENS, JNR, [?28 JUNE 1868]

Mention in To Ouvry, 28 June. Date: probably written same day.

To THOMSON HANKEY,[†1] 28 JUNE 1868†

Extracts from Goodspeed's Book Shop, 1973; MS 1 p.; addressed Thomson Hankey; dated 28 June 68.

My Dear Sir

I have been about for the last few days, and am only now in receipt of your note. No such article . . . is within my remembrance. If such a paper ever did appear either in Household Words or its successor All the Year Round, I will take care that it is immediately traced out and sent to you. But . . . I think my memory is not likely to be at fault on such a point. Our office index shall be duly referred to however . . .

Very truly yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To CHARLES KENT, 28 JUNE 1868

Mention in Dickens Exhibition, New Dudley Gallery catalogue, 1909; dated Gad's Hill Place, 28 June 68; addressed Charles Kent.

To HENRY WADSWORTH LONGFELLOW, 28 JUNE 1868

MS Houghton Library, Harvard.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Twenty Eighth June 1868

My Dear Longfellow

I will come to town on Tuesday morning, duly provided with "the right time of day" for you.[†2] I will call upon you at the Langham[†3] by eleven in the forenoon.

Will it suit you to come down with your three daughters[†4] and Appleton[†5] (to whom I will write, after seeing you) from Saturday to Monday? If not, take any days after Saturday, except Thursdays. We will be alone, so that we may ramble about.

I hear of all manner of speechmaking designs against you, as to which I reply that I know you dislike speechmaking. The Stationers' Company will make desperate efforts to entrap you (if you be not already caught) for this next Wednesday.

You shall be as completely at home here, as though you were at Cambridge; and we shall be most heartily glad to see you and yours on the old Falstaff ground.

Ever Yours affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

My eldest daughter will come with me on Tuesday morning.[†1]

To FREDERICK OUVRY, 28 JUNE 1868*

MS Shawn Thomas.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Twenty Eighth June 1868 | Sunday

My Dear Ouvry

Thanks for your letter. I have told my son by this post that you recommend my doing nothing at present, except giving him some supply for current expenses. I have sent him at the same time £50, which will enable him to break up his establishment and pay his way as he goes on.

Faithfully yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Frederic Ouvry Esquire

To G. M. TOWLE,[†2] 28 JUNE 1868*

MS Beinecke Library, Yale University. Address: George M Towle Esquire. | 17 Bartholomew Villas | Kentish Town Road | N. W.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER KENT.
Twenty Eighth June 1868

Dear Sir

If it will suit your convenience to call upon me at the office of "All The Year Round" on Tuesday next at One o'Clock, I shall be very happy to see you there. The address is 26 Wellington Street, Strand.

Let me assure you that your letter required no apology, and that I have received it with interest and pleasure.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

George Makepeace Towle Esquire

To THOMAS APPLETON, [30 JUNE 1868]

Mention in next. Date: no doubt written same day.

To HENRY WADSWORTH LONGFELLOW, 30 JUNE 1868

MS Houghton Library, Harvard.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Thirtieth June 1868

My Dear Longfellow.

You can leave Victoria Station, Pimlico, for "Strood Station, Rochester Bridge" at 8..30 on Saturday evening,[†1] and get down in an hour.

Or, you can leave Charing Cross Station, North Kent Railway at 9..15 on Saturday evening for "Higham Station" and get down in rather more than an hour and a half.

The first route is the better. By either route, you can take return tickets which will bring you back on Monday. Let me know which line you choose, in order that I may duly meet you at the Station you come to.

Enclosed, a note for Appleton.

Affectionately Yours ever

CD.

To W. H. WILLS, 30 JUNE 1868

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Thirtieth June 1868

My Dear Wills

Of course the Mare shall roll in the lap of luxury (which is very much dried up by the bye, for want of water), until you send for her.

I don't think Mr. Robertson[†2] would do. There is no literature in that kind of Drama,[†3] and I feel convinced that the short notice and the necessity of compression would be too much for him, with no experience of that kind of writing —our kind, I mean.[†4] Of the Miss Mulholland[†5] idea,[†6] I think much better. I will write to her on Thursday.

FitzGerald's boy's Biography[†1] is "servilely founded" (he writes) on me. But it goes on well enough, and I was to have the whole of it this week. If I get it, and it continues up to the mark, we shall be none the worse for having two strings to our bow.[†2]

I don't like Mrs. Linton[†3] for a story.[†4]

The fly-swallowing[†5] Holsworth asking me with open eyes t'other day what was to be done about Mr. Yates's story[†6] and the volume,[†7] I thought it best to maintain the fiction that we were going straight on from Wilkie to Edmund.[†8] If we do not keep the fiction up as long as possible, we shall not get the copy that ought to be written. Grave and gloomy resolve therefore sits upon my lofty brow.

I will write to you again about the Guild, on Thursday or Friday. I shall be very glad when you change your air again, and try a new and a bracing place. Never mind the singing. If you feel that your head is better, rely upon it you are right, howsoever vaguely you may feel it.

For the soul of me, I cannot (hammer and think as I will) raise the ghost of an idea for the Xmas No.[†9]

Disconsolately
CD.

July

To MRS CATTERMOLE, 2 JULY 1868†

Extract and facsimile ([aa]) in Sotheby's catalogue, July 1983; MS 3pp.; dated Office of AYR, 2 July 68; addressed Mrs. Cattermole.

Referring to George Cruikshank[†10] testimonial, a wretched failure, CD was certain it was not a prompt and ready means of relief. Giving her advice on the best course of action in raising money for George Cattermole, explaining the difficulties of such an enterprise. Your friends unconsciously deceive you—exaggerating CD's influence
. . . I do not believe that a public appeal would succeed.

For any private effort I will raise my present contribution up to £50[†11] . . . and will confer with artist-friends. But he has greatly fallen away from so many friends, that I don't know who remain. (Understand me as not recalling this in blame, but as the mere bare fact). Of those who do remain, CD has a despairing impression.

A committee of private friends might address Mr Gladstone;[†1] but (I take it) only for a subscription from himself, because he has no public money in his gift. There can be no objection to your writing to Mr D'Israeli,[†2] stating the facts shortly, and asking whether [a] no grant can be had, for such a man, from the Queen's Bounty or any other fund. I have no doubt of your receiving attention, and I honestly and sincerely believe that your own application would tell for much more than mine. But I am most strongly of opinion that the only real hope lies with private friends and possessors of George's works.

In the height of my occupations today, I have written this letter amidst many interruptions;[†3] but I hope it is kind (it is meant to be so) and I know it is true.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS[a]

To MRS MILNER GIBSON,[†4] 2 JULY 1868*

MS Trinity College, Cambridge.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,

Thursday Second July 1868

My Dear Mrs. Milner Gibson

I have not had the letter of invitation to which your note received here to day, so kindly refers me. It has miscarried somehow, for I came from Gad's Hill only last night. Unfortunately I am engaged to dine with Cartwright tomorrow, or I should have been delighted to profit by your remembrance of me, and to meet another dear old friend in Longfellow.

With kind regard to Milner Gibson[†5]
Believe me always | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To COLONEL FISHER,[†6] 3 JULY 1868*

MS Private.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Third July 1868

My Dear Colonel Fisher

I am very truly obliged to you for your kind note forwarded here to day from Gad's Hill, and will lose no time in presenting my boy[†1] to Lieut. Stephens[†2] at Gravesend.

Accept my cordial thanks, and Believe me always
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To PERCY FITZGERALD, 3 JULY 1868*

MS Guildhall Museum, Rochester.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Third July 1868

My Dear FitzGerald

"O where and O where"[†3] is the rest of Tom Butler???[†4]

I have been so stunned by your amazing intelligence about Ruskin,[†5] that I have only yet recovered perception enough to dimly comprehend that he will not "enjoy her."[†6]

Faithfully Yours Ever
CHARLES DICKENS

To W.H. WILLS, 3 JULY 1868*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Third July 1868

My Dear Wills.

The threatened opposition did not come up to the scratch yesterday.[†7] The august assemblage included the President,[†8] Morley, and William Jerrold.[†9] We all three agreed that it was not a strong, and that it was a dangerous, case; and we were considering whether we should confine ourselves to paying the Doctor's bill, when Absolon[†10] appeared, and was so very urgent in favor of the whole relief sought and nothing short of it, that we decided to advance the money. I added to the resolution a request to Mrs. Cunningham[†1] to send in her receipts as vouchers. I think we have done wrong, and feel correspondingly comfortable.

To day I write to Miss Mulholland. As the remainder of FitzGerald's copy has not come in, I also write to him.

So no more at present from Yours Ever affecy.

CD.

To MISS ROSA MULHOLLAND, [3 JULY 1868]

Mention in last. Date: written later the same day.

To JAMES BIRTLES, 4 JULY 1868*

MS Dickens House. Address: Mr. James Birtles.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Saturday Fourth July 1868

Dear Mr. Birtles

Here is a poem, the proof of which is to go to Dr. Mackay.[†2] [†a][I have called his attention to a piece of bad grammar in it, which he will no doubt correct.][†a]

You will receive from him a prose article on "Ice" for the next No.[†3]

I wish to make up the next No. if I can, on Wednesday in this next week instead of Thursday.

Faithfully Yours

CD.

To W. HEPWORTH DIXON,[†4] 4 JULY 1868*

MS Rosenbach Museum and Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Saturday Fourth July 1868

My Dear Dixon

I enclose you Seventy Pounds for Miss Jerrold.[†5] This leaves a balance of only Seven Pounds, ten, at Coutts's; but another Dividend will be due in September.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To FRANCIS DICKENS,[†1] 6 JULY 1868

MS Longfellow House. Address: To introduce Mr. Charles Longfellow | Francis Jeffrey Dickens Esqre. | Bengal Police Service | Kishnaghur | Tirhoot | Bengal.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Sixth July 1868

My Dear Frank

This is to present to you, Mr. Charles Longfellow,[†2] the eldest son of my highly esteemed friend Mr. Longfellow the great American writer. You cannot please me better than by doing everything in your power to remind this gentleman of my great affection for his father.

Love from all | Ever Your affectionate
CHARLES DICKENS

To J. T. FIELDS, 7 JULY 1868†

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Seventh July 1868

My Dear Fields

I have delayed writing to you (and Mrs. Fields, to whom my love) until I should have seen Longfellow. When he was in London the first time, he came and went without reporting himself,[†3] and left me in a state of unspeakable discomfiture. Indeed, I should not have believed in his having been here at all, if Mrs. Procter had not told me of his calling to see Procter. However, on his return he wrote to me from the Langham Hotel, and I went up to town to see him, and to make an appointment for his coming here. He, the girls, and Tom Appleton, came down last Saturday night, and stayed until Monday forenoon.[†4] I showed them all of the neighbouring country that could be shown in so short a time, and they finished off with a tour of inspection of the kitchens, pantry, wine cellar, pickles, sauces, servants' sitting room, general household stores, and even the Cellar Book, of this illustrious establishment. Forster and Kent (the latter wrote certain verses to Longfellow which have been published in the Times,[†5] and which I sent to Delane),[†1] came down for Sunday, and I hope we all had a really "good time"—[†a] though I am bound to confess confidentially that a discontented championship of "Annie"[†2] was perpetually going on, on the part of my womankind, much to the disparagement (by contrast) of the Misses Longfellow!!![†a] I turned out a couple of postilions in the old red jacket of the old red royal Dover Road, for our ride; and it was like a holiday ride in England 50 years ago. Of course we went to look at the old houses in Rochester, and the old cathedral, and the old Castle, and the house for the Six Poor Travellers who, "not being rogues or proctors, shall have lodging, entertainment, and fourpence each".[†3]

Nothing can surpass the respect paid to Longfellow here, from [†b] old Cross Patch (the Queen's popular and honorable appellation in Windsor)[†b] downward.[†4] He is everywhere received and courted, and finds (as I told him he would, when we talked of it in Boston) the working men at least as well acquainted with his books, as the classes socially above them. My Lords Stanhope[†5] and Houghton[†6] (Milnes, you know) two men certain to make a mistake if it be (as it usually is) possible, put the Athenæum's back up to that extent by coolly asking him to dinner there, and coolly appropriating a Club room for the purpose, without any notice of their hospitable intentions to the representatives of literature in the Club, that they were obliged to relinquish the project altogether. Otherwise the whole body, of which he has been made an Honorary Member, would have balloted for seats at any entertainment in his honor, I am certain.

My boy Charley, who went into a paper making company with the very identical men against whom I wrote him a most earnest warning when he married, has come to grief in connexion with that precious Firm, and staggers back, with a family of five children in the present and fifty in the future, on the parental shoulder. I am at my wits' end to know what to do. Charley Collins is— I say emphatically— dying.[†7] Only last night I thought it was all over. He is reduced to that state of weakness, and is so racked and worn by a horrible strange vomiting, that if he were to faint—as he must at last—I do not think he could be revived. My man came into my room yesterday morning to say "Mr. Collins, Sir, he is that bad, and he looks that awful, and Mrs. Collins called me to him just now, that brought down by his dreadful sickness. As it has turned me over Sir." And last night we all felt (except Katie before whom we say nothing) that he might be dead in half an hour.[†1][†a]

Last Thursday I attended, as Sponsor, the christening of Dolby's son and heir[†2]—a most jolly baby who held on tight by the Rector's left whisker while the Service was performed. What time too, his little sister,[†3] connecting me with the pony,[†4] trotted up and down the centre aisle, noisily driving herself as that celebrated animal, so that it went very hard with the sponsorial dignity.—[†a] I don't think his wife is in a good state by any means.[†a]

Wills is not yet recovered from that concussion of the brain, and I have all his work to do. This may account for my not being able to devise a Xmas No. but I seem to have left my invention in America. In case you should find it, please send it over. I am going up to town to day to dine with Longfellow [†a] at Routledge's, the publishers, and[†a] now, my dear Fs you know all about me and mine.

You are enjoying your holiday? And are still thinking sometimes of our Boston days, as I do? †a And have taken the field against more Cockroaches?†a And are maturing schemes for coming here next summer? A satisfactory reply to the last question is particularly entreated.

I am delighted to find you both so well pleased with the Blind Book scheme.†5 I said nothing of it to you when we were together—though I had made up my mind—because I wanted to come upon you with that little burst, from a distance. It seemed something like meeting again, when I remitted the money and thought of your talking of it.

The dryness of the weather is amazing. All the ponds and surface wells about here are waterless, and the poor people suffer greatly. The people of this village have only one spring to resort to, and it is a couple of miles from many cottages. I do not let the great dogs swim in the Canal, because the people have to drink of it. But when they get into the Medway, it is hard to †c get them out again. The other day, Bumble (the son Newfoundland dog) got into difficulties among some floating timber, and became frightened. Don†6 (the father) was standing by me, shaking off the wet and looking on carelessly, when all of a sudden he perceived something amiss, and went in with a bound and brought Bumble out by the ear. The scientific way in which he towed him along was charming.

Ever Your Loving
CD.†c†7

To JOHN DELANE, 8 JULY 1868*

MS The Times Newspapers Ltd.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Eighth July, 1868

My Dear Delane

I have duly forwarded the card of invitation to the writer of the Longfellow lines†1—not Kingsley.†2

Many thanks for your prompt and ready kindness in that matter, as in all others on which I have ever troubled you.

Faithfully Yours ever
CHARLES DICKENS

John Delane Esquire

To GEORGE W. BIRDSEYE,†3 [12 JULY 1868]

Envelope only, MS Berg Collection. Address: American Mail†4 | George. W. Birdseye Esquire | 202 Broadway (room 7) | New York City | U.S. of America. PM Rochester 12 Jy 68.

To SAMUEL CARTWRIGHT, 12 JULY 1868*

Text from transcript, British Dental Association.

GAD'S HILL PLACE
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Twelfth July 1868.

Dear Cartwright

On Saturday the 25th. we shall be delighted to see you in Frith's good company.[†5] I write to him a line by this post, to bind the bargain.

Faithfully yours ever,
CHARLES DICKENS

Samuel Cartwright, Esquire.

To W. HEPWORTH DIXON, 12 JULY 1868*

MS Rosenbach Museum and Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Twelfth July, 1868

My Dear Dixon.

Unfortunately, although I come to town on Thursday next, I am engaged for that evening or I should have had great pleasure in accepting your friendly invitation.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

W. Hepworth Dixon Esqre.

To W. P. FRITH,[†1] 12 JULY 1868

MS West Suffolk Record Office. Date: misdated by CD; he was writing, as to Cartwright, on Sun 12 July.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Twelfth July, 1868

My Dear Frith

Cartwright has duly let me know that you purpose to redeem your promise to come and see us here, on Saturday the 25th. This is merely to let you know (though unnecessarily I hope) that you shall be heartily welcomed.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

W. P. Frith Esquire

To JAMES BIRTLES,[†2] 14 JULY 1868

Summary in Sotheby's catalogue, July 1887; dated Gad's Hill Place, 14 July 68.

Requesting "A Hard Road to Travel"[†3] to be sent to Mr. Sala.

To G. A. SALA,[†4] 14 JULY 1868

Extract in American Art Association and Anderson Galleries catalogue, Mar 1917; MS 1 p.; dated 14 July 68, Gad's Hill Place; addressed G. A. Sala.

Dear Mr Sala

Wills is getting much better, but is not yet fit for duty.

I have received your letter . . . the printer will presently send you a proof of your paper . . . I have much pleasure in accepting "Baggage under difficulties",[†1] for early insertion in A. Y. R.[†2]

To ROBERT GEMMELL,[†3] 16 JULY 1868

Mention in N, III, 658.

Engaging to subscribe to a book about to be published by his correspondent.[†4]

To HENRY MORLEY, 17 JULY 1868

Extract in Charles Retz catalogue, No. 17; MS I p.; dated Office of AYR, 17 July 68; addressed Henry Morley.

there is too much merit in "The Abbot's Pool" . . . I reserve to myself the right of condensing some of the conversations . . . it shall somehow be published in the course of the present volume.[†5]

To W. H. WILLS, 17 JULY 1868*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,

Friday Seventeenth July 1868

My Dear Wills

I am charmed to have your capital report and hopeful note. Please God you will come back in the noblest condition.

It is a part of the bump in Wilkie's forehead that he will not allow his brother to be very ill. †a[He almost incessantly vomits, and quite incessantly hiccups—keeps his room—is utterly prostrate with weakness—and totally unfit for any function of this life.]†a The obstinacy of said Wilkie is something perfectly inconceivable. His bodily condition is robust health, when compared with his mental.

I knew Marsh†1 to be idiotically mistaken, and have appointed the Farrier for early tomorrow morning, with the strictest injunctions that the end†2 shall be momentary, and that Marsh shall see that it is so.

With love to Mrs. Wills | Ever affecy.

CD.

To J. E. MILLAIS,†3 19 JULY 1868

Text from MDGH, III, 263.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday, 19th July, 1868.

My Dear Millais,

I received the enclosed letter yesterday, and I have, perhaps unjustly—some vague suspicions of it. As I know how faithful and zealous you have been in all relating to poor Leech,†4 I make no apology for asking you whether you can throw any light upon its contents.†5

You will be glad to hear that Charles Collins is decidedly better to-day, and is out of doors.

Believe me always, faithfully yours

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To H. M. CUSTOMS & EXCISE, [?JULY 1868]

Extract in John Anderson Jnr catalogue No. 343. Date: probably well after To Howe, 23 June, to allow time for shipment of the books; probably late July.

Refers to two copies of Old Curiosity Shop which Mr. Charles Dickens has received from America, printed in raised letters for the use of the blind, and which he forwards as a present. . . . Before†6 his last visit to the States he left a sum of money with his friend, Dr. Howe, of Boston, for the production of the edition.

To MRS HENRY AUSTIN, [21 JULY 68]

Telegram. Mention in next.

To MRS HENRY AUSTIN,[†1] 21 JULY 1868

MS Morgan Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Twenty First July, 1868

My Dear Letitia

You will have had a Telegram from me today. I received your sad news[†2] by this morning's post. They never, without express explanation, mind "Immediate" on a letter addressed to the office, because half the people who write there on business that does not press or on no business at all, so mark their letters.

On Thursday I have people to see and matters to attend to, (both at the office and at Coutts's) which (—in Wills's absence—) I cannot forego, or depute to another. But, between ourselves, I must add something else:—I have the greatest objection to attend a funeral in which my affections are not strongly and immediately concerned. I have no notion of a funeral as a matter of form or ceremony. And just as I should expressly prohibit the summoning to my own burial, of anybody who was not very near or dear to me, so I revolt from myself appearing at that solemn rite, unless the deceased were very near or dear to me. I cannot endure being dressed up by an undertaker as part of his trade-show. I was not in this poor good fellow's house in his lifetime, and I feel that I have no business there when he lies dead in it. My mind is penetrated with sympathy and compassion for the young widow, but that feeling is a real thing, and my attendance as a mourner would not be—to myself. It would be to you, I know, but it would not be to myself. I know full well that you cannot delegate to me your memories of and associations with the deceased: and the more true and tender they are, the more invincible is my objection to become a form in the midst of the most awful realities.

With love and condolence from Georgina, Mary, and Katie, Believe me ever
Your affectionate Brother
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS GERALDINE JEWSBURY,[†3] 21 JULY 1868*

MS Graham Heath. Address: Miss Jewsbury | 43 Markham Square | Chelsea | London | S. W. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Twenty First July, 1868

My Dear Miss Jewsbury

I shall be very glad to lend Miss Carpenter a helping hand in her good work, and will with pleasure accept your paper.[†4]

My daughters and their Aunt send you their kind regard. And I beg you to believe me

Always | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To CHARLES ELIOT NORTON, 21 JULY 1868*

MS Houghton Library, Harvard. Address: Charles E. Norton Esquire | 278 Oxford Terrace | Oxford Street | Manchester. PM, Rochester 21 July 68.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.

Tuesday Twenty First July, 1868

My Dear Norton

I have been expecting to hear from you on this side of the water, and am delighted by the receipt of your letter this morning. My daughter and her Aunt are somewhat disappointed by its contents, as it tells them that when you first come here Mrs. Norton[†1] will not be with you (as I had told them she would); but you will hear more about this, you may be sure, from their own lips.

What do you say to coming here on Saturday fortnight, and staying at all events till Monday? Calculating your dates, this looks to me reasonably hopeful. I would arrange to be in town to meet you. We are barely 30 miles by railroad.

Before I had been on board ship four days, all my small symptoms of fatigue vanished, and I became offensively robust again. In which condition I long to embrace you.

You and yours are so well known here, from my accounts, that we all unite in love to all of you.

My Dear Norton

Affectionately and Heartily Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Charles E Norton Esquire

To MRS CATTERMOLE, 22 JULY 1868

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Twenty Second July, 1868

My Dear Mrs. Cattermole

Of course I will sign your memorial to the Academy. If you take either of the Landseers, certainly take Edwin[†1] (1 St. John's Wood Road, N.W.). But if you would be content with Frith, I had already spoken to him, and believe that I can answer for him.

I shall be at All The Year Round office 26 Wellington Street, London, tomorrow from 11 to 3. Frith will be here on Saturday, and I shall be here too. I spoke to him a fortnight ago, and I found him most earnest in the cause. He said he felt absolutely sure that the whole profession in its best and highest representation would do anything for George. I sounded him, having the opportunity of meeting him at dinner at Cartwright's.

Ever Yours affecy.
CD.

To HENRY MORLEY, 23 JULY 1868†

MS Myers & Co.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Twenty Third July 1868

My Dear Morley

Since I saw you to day, I have put together the best No.[†2] 1 could get—on the whole—and I hope you will find that it will fall into place easily. I have been almost demented by the intolerably confused changes of mood, tense, and person, into which the writers fall; and have held the Guard Room[†3] over for that infernal reason.

[†a] Dixon, in endeavouring to be droll about Michelet's[†4] drolleries,[†5] has made such an utterly incomprehensible joke of the Mountain,[†6] that I can't use it.[†a]

Ever Faithfully
CD.

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 23 JULY 1868*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Twenty Third July 1868

My Dear Ouvry

You are always corrupting me:—for which, many thanks. I like it.

Enclosed I send you round a most wonderful composition,[†1] which perhaps Mr. Farrer would like to see. No layman on earth could have written it!

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To MISS CATTERMOLE,[†2] 26 JULY 1868

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Twenty Sixth July, 1868

My Dear Miss Cattermole

Although I was not unprepared for the receipt of your letter, it shocked me almost as much as though I had not expected it.[†3] Your Mama knows all that I would say to comfort her, and she needs no words of mine to remind her what a good wife she has been, and where she will find relief for her wounded heart.

I owe your Mama Twenty Five Pounds.[†4] In the hope that the sum may be of more service in these sad moments than at another time, I send a cheque enclosed.

Believe me | Affectionately Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To W. H. WILLS, 26 JULY 1868

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Twenty Sixth July, 1868

My Dear Wills

I have yours of the 22nd this morning, and am delighted to get it. It has made two journies between this place and the office, before coming to hand.

The Militia paper[†1] IS[†2] by Sydney Blanchard.[†3] In justice to him I must mention that it has been in type for several weeks, but that I could not get it in sooner. I have taken great pains with the Nos.[†4] and have selected carefully. There are two papers by Sala now in type.[†5] Not much in them.

I have been, and still am—which is worse—in a positive state of despair about the Xmas No. I cannot get an idea for it which is in the least satisfactory to me, and yet I have been steadily trying all this month. I have invented so many of these Christmas Nos. and they are so profoundly unsatisfactory after all with the introduced Stories and their want of cohesion or originality, that I fear I am sick of the thing. I have had serious thoughts of abandoning the Xmas No.! There remain but August and September to give to it (as I begin to read in October), and I CAN NOT[†2] see it.[†6]

I quite agree with you about the Moonstone.[†7] The construction is wearisome beyond endurance, and there is a vein of obstinate conceit in it that makes enemies of readers.[†8]

My love to Mrs. Wills. All sorts of Messages to you.

Ever Affectionately

CD.

Poor George Cattermole is dead. Very, very, poor. Family quite unprovided for; debt and distress.

To HENRY MORLEY, [27 JULY 1868]

MS (envelope only) Sotheby's catalogue, Dec 1964. Address: To be forwarded | Henry Morley Esquire | "All The Year Round" Office | 26 Wellington Street | London | W.C. PM 27 July 68.

To FREDERIC CHAPMAN, [?28 JULY 1868]

Extract in G. A. Baker catalogue No. 49; MS 1 p.; place and date cut away; addressed Mr. Chapman. Date: see next; the phrase "just Cause of Complaint" makes it seem probable that CD is writing about the same problem.

The enclosed letter (which I have answered) represents a just cause of complaint. The copies lying on my table at this time are very defective in the same respect. Pray represent the case strongly to the binder.

Faithfully Yours | CHARLES DICKENS

To THE REV. ALLEN PAGE MOOR,[†1] 28 JULY 1868

Extract in N, III, 660 with address, date and first phrase in Sotheby's catalogue, 16 May 1972; MS 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill Place, 28 July 68; addressed The Rev. A. P. Moor, The Precincts, Canterbury.

In reply to your obliging letter, I beg to assure you that I have very strongly represented its just Cause of Complaint,[†2] to my publishers. Allow me to thank you for so courteously addressing me on the subject.

To MESSRS CHARLES & GEORGE ELLIS,[†3] 29 JULY 1868*

MS Dickens House.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Twenty Ninth July, 1868

Dear Sirs

Will you please send me a quarter Cask of Sherry as usual.†4

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Ellis

To T. J. SERLE,†5 29 JULY 1868†

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Address: T. J. Serle Esquire | Novello Cottage | Worthing.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Twenty Ninth July, 1868

My Dear Serle

I do not believe there is the slightest chance of an international Copyright law being passed in America for a long time to come. Some Massachusetts men do believe in such a thing, but they fail (as I think) to take into account the powerful Western opposition.

Such an alteration as you suggest in the English Law, would give no copyright in America, you see. The American publisher could buy no absolute right of priority. Any American newspaper could (and many would, in a popular case) pirate from him, as soon as they could get the matter set up. He could buy no more than he buys now when he arranges for advance sheets from England, so that there may be simultaneous publication in the two countries. And success in England is of so much importance towards the achievement of success in America, that I greatly doubt whether previous publication in America would often be worth more to an American publisher or manager, than simultaneous publication. Concerning the Literary man in Parliament who would undertake to bring in a bill for such an amendment of our copyright law, with weight enough to keep his heart unbroken while he should be getting it through its various lingering miseries, all I can say is—I decidedly don't know him.

†a On that horrible Staplehurst day,†1 I had not the slightest idea that I knew any one in the Train, out of my own compartment. Mrs Cowden Clarke†2 wrote me afterwards, telling me in the main what you tell me;†3 and I was astonished. It is remarkable that my watch (a special Chronometer) has never gone quite correctly, since.

And to this day there sometimes comes over me—on a Railway, in a Hansom cab—in any sort of conveyance—for a few seconds, a vague sense of dread that I have no power to check. It comes and passes, but I cannot prevent its coming.†a

Believe me | Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To W. H. WILLS, 31 JULY 1868

MS Huntington Library.

P[†4] Friday Thirty First July, 1868

My Dear Wills

I had such a hard day at the office yesterday, that I had not time to write to you before I left. So I write today.

I am very unwilling to abandon the Xmas No. though even in the case of my little Xmas Books (which were immensely profitable) I let the idea go, when I thought it was wearing out. Ever since I came home, I have hammered at it, more or less, and have been uneasy about it. I have begun something which is very droll, but it manifestly shapes itself towards a book, and could not in the least admit of even that shadowy approach to a congruous whole on the part of other contributors which they have ever achieved at the best. I have begun something else (aboard the American Mail Steamer),[†1] but I don't like it, because the stories must come limping in after the old fashion—though of course what I have done, will be good for A. Y. R.[†2] In short, I have cast about with the greatest pains and patience, and I have been wholly unable to find what I want.

And yet I cannot quite make up my mind to give in, without another fight for it. I offered £100 reward at Gad's to any body who could suggest a notion to satisfy me. Charles Collins suggested one yesterday morning, in which there is something though not much. I will turn it over and over, and try a few more starts on my own account. Finally, I swear I will not give it up until August is out! Vow registered.

I am clear that a No. "by various writers" would not do. If we have not the usual sort of No. we must call the current No. for that date, the Xmas No.[†3] and make it as good as possible. The way to that can be paved in the Introduction to the new Series,[†4] and we will even make a merit of it.

[†a] Charles Collins is, for the time, better.[†a] I am buying the freehold of the meadow at Gads, and of an adjoining arable field, so that I shall now have about eight and twenty freehold acres in a ring fence. No more news.

I made up a very good No.[†5] yesterday. You will see in it, a very short article that I have called "Now!" which is a highly remarkable piece of description.[†6] It is done by a new man[†7] from whom I have accepted another article, but he will never do anything so good, again. FitzGerald's "Autobiography of a Small Boy"[†1] not very original, but still good.

Ever affecy.

August

To F. D. FINLAY[†2] 2 AUGUST 1868

MS Comtesse de Suzannet.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Second August, 1868

My Dear Finlay.

Your warm hearted letter is a delightful welcome to the undersigned wanderer, and so is Mrs. Finlay's "strongest entreaty": — a very strong one indeed to me. "They", the indefinite, are, I believe, quite right in saying that my next trip will include Belfast.[†3] If I ever did such a thing, under Reading circumstances, as stay at a friend's house, believe me I would come to yours. I am thoroughly in earnest in giving you that assurance. But my rule of never leaving the Staff for any such pleasure, has been attended with such wholesome results, in the way of exact attention to business that I must stick to it to the last. Moreover, besides my right hand, Dolby, Percy FitzGerald is sworn to come to Belfast as a Volunteer.

But I will joyfully make this compact with Mrs. Finlay[†4] and you:—I think I am to read in Belfast two nights, with an off night between them. (Exact dates not yet appointed.) If you will have me to dinner on such off-night, I shall be charmed to come.[†5]

I beg to send Mrs. Finlay something as near my love as is lawful. My daughter and her Aunt unite in kindest regard to her and you. And I am always

My Dear Finlay | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Frank Finlay Esquire

To GEORGE W. CHILDS, 3 AUGUST 1868[††]

Text in unidentified catalogue in MS division, New York Public Library.

Gad's Hill | Monday, Third August 1868.

My Dear Mr. Childs

Many thanks for the account of your Newsboys' Dinner,[†6] a thoughtfully[†7] pleasant and interesting thing to read of. I hope you and Mrs. Childs never will seriously believe that I forgot you.

The photographs reached me safely and are the admiration of all who see them here. I owe you many thanks for them. [†a] Your beautiful flowers bloomed through the whole passage home and ornamented the Saloon Tables every day. I sank my American Catarrh in the Atlantic on the fourth day out and disappointed all my friends by landing in the brownest and most radiant health.[†a]

Faithfully yours always,
CHARLES DICKENS

To H. P. SMITH,[†1] 5 AUGUST 1868*

MS Miss Mable Hodge.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Fifth, August 1868

My Dear Smith

I have been resting since I came home just three months ago, and have scarcely gone out at all. For though I returned in great force, I had been, in America, extremely unwell from the hard work and the harder climate. The winter was unusually severe, and I was usually knee deep in snow. I have before me a final series of Farewell Readings in England, Ireland, and Scotland (a hundred in number); and what with them in perspective, and with All The Year Round in the present, and in the past too (with six months lee-way to fetch up), and my Sub Editor ill in the country, I have my hands pretty full—for a resting man.

Nevertheless I should have knocked good resolutions on the head and "made an effort" to come to you, but that I am engaged to dine out tomorrow at a semi-business dinner, and must, immediately after it, get back here to join some American friends straightway coming on a visit.[†2] I send my kindest regard to Mrs. Smith[†3] with thanks for her remembrance, and am always

Affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

H. P. Smith Esquire

To CHARLES ELIOT NORTON, [EARLY AUGUST 1868]

Mention in next (telegram). Date: probably written one or two days before telegram.

To CHARLES ELIOT NORTON, 7 AUGUST 1868

Telegram and MS envelope Houghton Library, Harvard. Address: C. E. Norton Esq. | care of J. Ruskin | Denmark H.

ROCHESTER | Aug 7 1868

Certainly come by the two twelve train from Charing Cross tomorrow Saturday[†1] have already written to Weybridge.[†2]

To [JAMES BIRTLES], 9 AUGUST 1868

Mention in Carnegie Book Shop catalogue, No. 157; MS I p.; dated London, 9 Aug 68.

Giving instructions to his printer.

To MRS CATTERMOLE, 9 AUGUST 1868

Summary in Sotheby's catalogue July 1983; MS I p.; dated Gad's Hill, 9 August 1868.

Offering suggestions regarding the design of notepaper for an appeal; he sends a sketch, which he advises her to use in preference to her own, agrees to his name being printed at the head, and suggests that she obtain the permission of Frith and one other to use their names also.

I do not think it would be advisable, after the interval that has elapsed, to put the separate paragraph[†3] in the obituary of the Times.[†4]

Ever Faithfully Yours

CD

To CHARLES DICKENS JNR, 9 AUGUST 1868

Text from N, III, 662-3.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday 9th August 1868

My Dear Charley

I do not see any objection to your employing your friend.[†1] But write a short note to Ouvry, and tell him that as he does not practise in bankruptcy, you do so with my consent.

I confess that I cannot see why you should not follow Ouvry's advice, and wait to be made a bankrupt instead of making yourself one. Also it appears to me that his suggested separation of your private creditors from the creditors of the company, as set forth in the last part of his letter (enclosed) against which I have placed a double pencil line, would lift you out of, and above the most miserable part of the failure. But I don't wish to press my opinion upon you.

It's clear to me that any coming in on my part now, would be very harmful indeed, and would lead the holders of your acceptances for liabilities incurred by the Company, into the preposterous belief that I could and would make some kind of a bargain with them. This I told you in the beginning, and this ground was at once taken by Ouvry without the least knowledge that I had taken it before him.

Besides which—the great vague future before you, must be my chief consideration. Even if you could find suitable occupation abroad, you could not take it without some advance of money. Even your present resource in Mr. Benham,[†2] you describe as insufficient for all your expenses, and that again foreshadows some advance of money.

I do not know whether Mr. Lloyd[†3] is included in your arrangement with Mr. Benham. But I am absolutely certain that so long as you have anything whatever to do with Mr. Lloyd things will go wrong with you. You cannot be very near to such pitch, without getting soiled.

Ever your affectionate Father

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To W. H. WILLS, 9 AUGUST 1868†

MS Dickens House.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Ninth August, 1868

My Dear Wills

Like you, I am a little disappointed that you are not better. [†a]Don't begin too soon, or do too much. And as Sancho[†1] says, —"Patience, and shuffle the cards".[†a†2]

Blayney[†3] is a maniac, but a good-natured fellow.

[†a] I am exactly in statu quo, as to the Xmas No. I can see nothing with my mind's eye which would do otherwise than reproduce the old string of old stories in the old inappropriate bungling way,[†a] which every other publication imitates to death. [†b] I sit in the chalet, like Mariana in the Moated Grange[†b]—and to as much purpose.

Love to Mrs. Wills, and no more at present from Yours ever affecy.

CD.

To DR J. SHERIDAN MUSPRATT,[†4] 13 [? AUGUST] 1868

Mention in Parke-Bernet catalogue No. 725; MS I p.; dated Gad's Hill Place, 13 Apr 68; addressed J. Sheridan Muspratt. Date: misdated by catalogue; CD was in New York on 13 Apr; possibly Aug.

To BAYARD TAYLOR,[†5] 13 AUGUST 1868

MS Benoliel Collection.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Thirteenth August, 1868

My Dear Sir

Dr. Fordyce Barker of New York is coming down to see me on Tuesday next, the 18th. It will give me great pleasure if you will come too, at your own hour: our dinner hour being 7. As some of my family are staying with me, my house is unfortunately full, and I cannot offer you a bedchamber. But I can either remit you to London by eleven at night, or house you quite snugly at the village hostelry a few yards from the gate—The Sir John Falstaff.

There are two ways of reaching this place; either by North Kent Railway from Charing Cross, for Higham Station, the next beyond Gravesend—a mile from here; or by London Chatham and Dover Railway to Strood (Rochester Bridge) Station, two miles and a half distant.

I thank you cordially for your letter, and am always My Dear Sir

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Bayard Taylor Esquire.

To G. M. TOWLE, 13 AUGUST 1868*

MS Beinecke Library, Yale University. Address: George M Towle Esqre. | 17 Bartholomew Villas | Kentish Town Road | N.W.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Thirteenth August 1868

My Dear Sir

In reply to your obliging letter, I beg to say that I exclude the Paris subjects as we had many such in Household Words.

All the others (with the exception of Lucerne, as I have a strong distaste for the Court Newsman kind of interest),[†1] I think good.[†2]

I hope a short reply in my own hand may seem—as I wish it to seem—more personally in earnest, than a longer through a deputy.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Geo: M. Towle Esquire

To BENJAMIN WEBSTER, 13 AUGUST 1868*

MS Private.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Thirteenth August, 1868

My Dear Webster

Thanks for cheque[†3] safely received. Good luck go with you to—and stay by you at—Liverpool.[†4] I hope to come and look you up, with my enchanted keys, pretty often this next season.

Faithfully Yours ever
CHARLES DICKENS

To G. A. SALA, 19 AUGUST 1868*

MS Princeton University Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Nineteenth August 1868

My Dear Mr. Sala.

I enclose you a cheque for Fifteen Pounds.[†5]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To THE MANAGER, LONDON ARMOURY COMPANY,[†1] 20 AUGUST 1868*

MS Private

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday, Twentieth August, 1868

Sir

Be so good as supply my son Mr Edward Dickens, who is going out to Australia, with a rifle etc in accordance with his choice. Will forward a cheque for the amount on knowing what it is.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Manager, London Armoury Company

To MRS FORSTER, 21 AUGUST 1868*

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

Office | Friday Twenty First August 1868

My Dear Mrs. Forster.

I send you below, the recipe for the Salad-Dressing. Believe me Ever (with love to Forster) affectionately Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

4 Mustardspoonsfull of Mustard
4 Salt Do. of Salt
3 teaspoonsfull of essence of anchovy
4 Do. Do. MushroomKetchup
3 Dessertspoonsfull of best Italian Oil
12 Do. of Vinegar
3 raw eggs.

To THE HON. ROBERT LYTTON,[†2] 22 AUGUST 1868*

MS Lytton Papers.

All the Year Round Office, London
Saturday Twenty Second August | 1868

My Dear Robert Lytton

I was with Forster the day before yesterday, who shewed me your Poems. I was charmed to bring them away with me for these pages,[†3] and have this day paid Five and Twenty pounds to your account at Claude Scott and Cos. Bank.[†1]

Pray give my kindest regard to Mrs. Lytton.[†2] Also to Fascination Fledgeby[†3] who (I have no doubt) has by this time half a dozen new names, feebly expressive of his great merits.[†4]

Ever affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Hon. Robert Lytton

To GEORGE HOLSWORTH,[†5] 23 AUGUST 1868*

MS Theodore Hewitson.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Twenty Third August 1868

Dear Mr. Holsworth

Please write and send by post, the letter of which I send you a draft on the other side. Keep the draft by you for future letters.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Private

Madam

I have it in charge from Mr. Charles Dickens to express his regret that your letter is one of hundreds which it is constantly quite impossible for him to pursue.

I am | &c

Mrs. Wheeler[†6]
13 Stockwell Private Road Clapham S

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 23 AUGUST 1868

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Twenty Third August 1868

My Dear Ouvry

My boy Charley asked me if I had any objection, as your House did not practice in Bankruptcy, to the employment of some friend of his, well versed in such matters and in his affairs, and having a personal regard for him. I said No, but he must write to you. And so it stands.

I am fitting out another son for Australia, and another for Cambridge. And on the whole I am inclined to depart from the text of my dear friend Mrs. Gamp, and say: "which blest is the man as has NOT[†1] his kiver full of sich!"[†2]

The closing gastronomic paragraph of your letter has affected me deeply. We do a little thing or two here—as Cock a Leekie, Currie, Scotch Collops, Mutton à la Don Pedro, and such trifles as relishes with Claret — which I am bent on getting you to come and try, before I go a Reading (103 times) on the 6th. of October. Look over your Diary at your leisure, name your time from Saturday to Monday, and I won't ask Young Essell to meet you.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Frederic Ouvry Esquire

To ALFRED DICKENS [24 AUGUST 1868]

Mention in To Rusden, 24 Aug 68. Date: written same day.

To JOHN H. JOHNSTON,[†3] 24 AUGUST 1868

Text from facsimile in D, v (Mar 1909), 70.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Twenty-Fourth August 1868

Dear Sir

I have the pleasure of assuring you in reply to your obliging letter, that your present of a set of samples of the paper currency in the States, occupies a post of honor on these walls. I did not know to whom I was obliged for that interesting and curious relic. In the hurry and confusion of an enormous correspondence, the gift had become dissociated from the giver, and consequently I could not thank you for your remembrance as I now do, most heartily and cordially

Believe me Dear Sir | Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr John H Johnston

To G. W. RUSDEN,[†4] 24 AUGUST 1868

MS Trinity College, University of Melbourne.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Twenty Fourth August, 1868

My Dear Sir

I should have written to you much sooner, but that I have been home from the United States barely three months, and have since been a little uncertain as to the precise time and way of sending my youngest son out to join his brother Alfred.[†1]

It is now settled that he shall come out in the ship "Sussex",[†2] [†a]1000 tons, belonging to Messrs. Money Wigram and Co.[†3] She sails from Gravesend, but he will join her at Plymouth on the 27th. of September, and will proceed straight to Melbourne.[†a] Of this, I apprize Alfred by this Mail.

I am quite concerned that you should think it necessary to make any modestly-apologetic reference to your Australian Poem.[†4] When Mr. Scott[†5] sent it to me, I wrote him a note in reply,[†6] pointing out the dimensions of a whole Number of "All The Year Round", and those of the Poem. I also told him that even if that insurmountable objection could be overcome (an impossibility in itself) I did not think the subject interesting to a large English audience; their interest being with the Settler in Australia, and not in the least with the aboriginal inhabitant. But I believe I also told him (what I am sure I felt), that I had read the poem myself with real interest, and had found in it an unusual power of easy and tasteful versification.

I cannot sufficiently thank you for your kindness to Alfred. I am certain that a becoming sense of it, and desire to deserve it, has done him great good. Your report of him is an unspeakable comfort to me, and I most heartily assure you of my gratitude and friendship.

In the midst of your Colonial seethings and heavings, I suppose you have some leisure to consult, equally the hopeful prophets and the dismal prophets who are all wiser than any of the rest of us as to things at home here. My own strong impression is that whatsoever change the new Reform Bill may effect, will be very gradual indeed and quite wholesome.[†7] Numbers of the middle class who seldom or never voted before, will vote now; and the greater part of the new voters will in the main be wiser as to their electoral responsibilities, and more seriously desirous to discharge them for the common good than the bumptious singers of Rule Britannia, Our dear old Church of England, and all the rest of it.[†8]

If I can ever do anything for any accredited friend of yours coming to the old country, command me. I shall be truly glad of any opportunity of testifying that I do not use a mere form of words in signing myself,

Cordially Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

G. W. Rusden Esquire

To [H. G.] ADAMS, 25 AUGUST 1868*

MS Rhode Island Historical Society.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Twenty Fifth August.

Dear Mr. Adams

I am truly glad to find that you are settled in so quiet and congenial a haven.[†1] Accept my cordial congratulations.

Mr. Longfellow is travelling from place to place on the Continent, and I do not think it likely that I shall see him again before he returns home.[†2]

To GEORGE DOLBY, 25 AUGUST 1868*

MS British Library. Address: George Dolby Esquire | Ashfield | Ross | Herefordshire.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Twenty Fifth August 1868

My Dear Dolby

Will you reply to the enclosed Readings letter?

And when you have an opportunity, will you bring me up that frame-full of samples of American Paper Currency?[†3]

My kind love to Mrs. Dolby, and also to Tatty Dombey, and (last not least) to the Noble Boy.

I am haunted by the dreadful accident to the Irish Mail.[†4]

Ever affectionately Yours

To DR CHARLES MACKAY, 25 AUGUST 1868*

Text from transcript made by Arthur Rogers.

ALL THE YEAR ROUND OFFICE,
Monday Twenty-fifth Aug. 1868

My Dear Mackay.

The sparrows shall be heartily welcomed whensoever they wing their way in this direction.[†1] Consign them to me personally, and no time shall be lost.

Cordial thanks for your congratulations.[†2]

Faithfully yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To W. W. F. DE CERJAT,[†3] 26 AUGUST 1868†

MS Benoliel Collection.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Twenty Sixth August, 1868

My Dear Cerjat.

[†a] I am happy to set you right on one point of your esteemed letter, received a few days ago. My Charles Collins is not dead. Some Charles Collins clearly is dead, (I infer from your letter) but it is not my daughter's husband, for he is alive and here, and I saw him eat a very substantial breakfast this morning. He is not in good health, however, and has been more than usually ailing this summer.[†a]

The severity of the winter in America (which was quite exceptional even in that rigorous climate), combined with the hard work I had to do, tried me a good deal. Neuralgia and colds beset me, either by turns or both together, and I had often much ado to get through at night. But the Sea voyage home again did wonders in restoring me, and I have been very well indeed, though a little fatigued, ever since. I am now preparing for a Final Reading Campaign in England, Scotland, and Ireland. It will begin on the 6th. of October, and will probably last, with short occasional intermissions, until June. [†a] A very substantial five figured return attended the American Expedition. And this, although (being afraid of American investments) I bought all my Gold at 142, and paid a large staff munificently.

Our poor Townshend's affairs are likely, even when the Canton de Vaud[†4] point shall be settled, to be very unsatisfactorily administered.[†5] His will is remarkably complicated, and, in his desire to evade the Statute of Mortmain,[†1] he gives one of his executors[†2] a legal (though by no means moral) hold upon his loaves and fishes.[†3] This hold I think will be retained, with the tenacity of grim death, though most clearly in opposition to the intentions of the Testator.[†4] Even those are unsatisfactory, for he leaves the bulk of his property to found a school for the poor, with no speciality in it, and nothing but the probability of its soon lapsing into abuse, to distinguish it from many schools already existing, and easily accessible.[†5] I am his Literary Executor to whom he leaves all his papers, and £2,000, and a charge to publish his religious opinions. I suppose them to be recorded in some papers at Mon Loisir, for I have, in his London papers, found nothing but very loose and straggling notes of them. I dined with him the night before I started for Liverpool to embark. I had observed a great change in him for the worse, but had no impression whatever that I should never see him again. It is an extraordinary circumstance that he has left Henri,[†6] only a ring and £400—Henri's wife (born in his service) nothing—and her mother who had been in his service five and thirty years, nothing either![†7]

I know these details will interest you, so I enter into them.[†a]

The great subject in England for the moment is the horrible accident to the Irish Mail Train.[†8] It is now supposed that the Petroleum (known to be a powerful Anaesthetic) rendered the unfortunate people who were burnt, almost instantly insensible to any sensation. My escape in the great Staplehurst accident of 3 years ago, is not to be obliterated from my nervous system. To this hour I have sudden vague rushes of terror, even when riding in a Hansom Cab, which are perfectly unreasonable, but quite insurmountable. I used to make nothing of driving a pair of horses habitually through the most crowded parts of London. I cannot now drive, with comfort to myself, on the country roads here; and I doubt if I could ride at all in the saddle. My Reading-Secretary and companion knows so well when one of these odd momentary seizures comes upon me in a Railway Carriage, that he instantly produces a dram of brandy, which rallies the blood to the heart and generally prevails. I forget whether I ever told you that my watch (a Chronometer) has never gone exactly, since the accident?—So the Irish catastrophe naturally revives the dreadful things I saw that day.

The only other news here you know as well as I; to wit, that the country is going to be ruined, and that the Church is going to be ruined, and that both have become so used to being ruined, that they will get on perfectly well.

[†a] Last night, in looking through the Annual Register for 1787, what name should I light upon but the name of an Ancestor of yours at Lausanne! It is quoted in a discussion about the identity of race in Dogs and Wolves, and he is referred to as an authority on the general question.[†1]

Heaven send you a peaceful deliverance from your Parsons! What with the Athanasian[†2] (I can't write the word, it seems) creed, and an Impromptu Sermonizer here without the power of constructing one single grammatical sentence in an hour; I have become self exiled from the Temples, and find myself in a more Christian state of mind alone with my own reflections.

Kindest remembrances from all my house to all yours. Pray convey to Mrs. Cerjat,[†3] the sincere regard of her old undersigned friend, and Believe me my Dear Cerjat, as I always am,

Affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS[†a]

To G. A. SALA, 26 AUGUST 1868*

MS Mrs M.E. Parkinson.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Twenty Sixth August, 1868

My Dear Mr. Sala.

I had seen the articles to which you refer—or some of them—and I need scarcely say that I strongly disapprove of their tone and terms, and think that kind of writing discreditable to the Press.[†4]

But I must add that I have a strong opinion that the Times set a good example in the reticence it observed concerning that first private execution.[†5] I regard that evidence of a disposition to assist the altered Law, and to veil the horrible details,[†6] as being right and wholesome. That there is a curiosity to know them, I do not question; but I think it is a morbid curiosity that should not be gratified.

The infliction of Capital Punishment must, of necessity, be ghastly and terrible and sickening. But granted that it is so inflicted as to cause no unnecessary torture, I disconnect the horror of the spectacle (when it is not exhibited to the most brutal ruffians on the face of the earth) altogether from the question whether Capital Punishment should or should not be.

I desire, as much as any man can, that it should not be. But I am reduced to the admission that I do not know what is to be done with the doers of such deeds of violence short of sending them out of this world. Surely the "blind Jackass-like passion" that at 18 takes up a rolling pin and beats a woman to death, at 28 is very likely to take up its chain (after one of the annual whippings you would give it) and beat its warder to death. It is a wild beast at both times, and I can quite reconcile it to myself to be immeasurably more regardful of the second life the wild beast may take, than of the wild beast's life when it has taken the first.

Can any student of human nature really believe that the crime of that young railway porter executed at Maidstone, was not a crime of a most intolerable kind; and that Murderer, if he had been left the chance of murdering again, would not have been always in the breast of that pitiless compound of stupid conceit and deliberate cruelty?

Blind Jackass-like passion in that case had time to reflect before it slew the poor deceased of whom we hear nothing after he is comfortably shot and got rid of. But even blind Jackass-like passion is, of itself, as it seems to me, one of the main things that Society cannot have in its midst.

As to degrees in Murder, law and practice both acknowledge them. Else why have we constant convictions and sentences for Manslaughter? Anomalies there must be, in any sort of punishment that is often inflicted. This would be abundantly clear if we were to go into any large convict prison and examine the cases under sentence of penal servitude for life. We cannot set the one against the other, but must take each by itself. And I take the question to be, not in the least whether Palmer[†1] and Courvoisier[†2] deserved more than hanging, but whether the Railway Porter deserved less.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

September

To J. W. CHITTY,[†3] 1 SEPTEMBER 1868*

MS Mrs Ronald Sinclair. Address: Joseph Chitty Esquire | [†a]34 Queensborough Terrace | Bayswater | W.[†a] PM London W. 8 Oct 68.[†4]

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday First September 1868

My Dear Chitty

One of my sons, just 20, is going up to Trinity Hall, next October. He has been highly educated—is possessed of considerable mathematical qualifications —and goes to College to work, and to achieve distinction. He perfectly understands that if he fail to set to in earnest, I shall take him away.

As I have no personal experience in this wise, I have been casting about in my mind for an adviser, and have naturally thought of you, who came out of College life so brilliantly.[†1] Will you tell me what the allowance of such a youth should be, at Cambridge—to be enough, and not by any means too much—and whether there is any express precaution I can take or enjoin upon him? I shall place the fullest reliance upon your opinion and shall guide myself by it—but I hope I need not add that I am not so absurdly unreasonable as to associate you with any failure that may come of such a career.

As I do not know your present address, I have asked Forster to attach it to this note.[†2]

With kind regard | Believe me always
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Joseph Chitty Esquire

To CHARLES ELIOT NORTON, 1 SEPTEMBER 1868*

MS Houghton Library, Harvard. Address: Charles E. Norton Esquire | The Rectory | Keston | Bromley.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday First September 1868

My Dear Norton

Most sorely against my will, I fear that I must deny myself the really great pleasure you offer me.[†3] But my readings begin next month; my sub Editor continues ill, and all the work of the Journal devolves upon me; my younger son sails for Australia this month; and my elder goes to Cambridge a week afterwards. Under these circumstances, there is so much to be silently done here in the way of preparation for all these things, that I must be here at all the times I can spare from London. I am not able to go down to Forster; and as to getting to the sea—which would be the best of all training for next winter's work—I have not a hope of it.

The best wine merchants for your purpose are Justerini and Brooks,[†4] 2 Pall Mall S.W. That is the correct postal address, but it is really the Opera Colonnade on the South side.

I send my love to Mrs. Norton:—to both Mrs. Nortons, if I may. Tell me when you leave your present house. I am unwilling to give it up finally, without another struggle.

Ever affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles E Norton Esquire

To MRS SIMMONS,[†1] 1 SEPTEMBER 1868

Extract in N, III, 666; dated Gad's Hill Place, 1 Sep 68; addressed Mrs Simmons.

Regretting that he is unable to accept General[†2] and Mrs. Simmons's invitation to meet Sir Francis Head.[†3] Unfortunately I am obliged to dine in London on Thursday. It is a business engagement in association with my journal and I am specially bound to keep it.

To ALFRED R. THOMAS,[†4] 5 SEPTEMBER 1868

Extract in Maggs catalogue, 1939; MS 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill Place, 5 Sep 68; addressed Alfred R. Thomas.

I beg to thank you for the fine photograph you have forwarded me, of Little Nell in the Curiosity Shop. I cannot say that it quite realizes what I have in my mind, but it is highly meritorious.

To GEORGE DOLBY, 6 SEPTEMBER 1868*

MS British Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.

Sunday Sixth September 1868

My Dear Dolby

Will you answer the enclosed carefully, to the effect that I have made an arrangement with the Messrs. Chappell (whom you represent) for certain final farewell Readings in Ireland, which renders compliance impossible.

Strike "The Boy"[†5] out of Liverpool. I have looked at him again, and have taken a dislike to him.—I have too much Boy about me, altogether.[†6]

Ever affectionately
THE CHIEF

To HENRY TAYLOR,[†1] 8 SEPTEMBER 1868

MS National Library of Scotland.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday, Eighth September 1868[†2]

My Dear Sir

I must beg to be excused from complying with the request you do me the honor to prefer;[†3] simply because I have a great objection to patronising anything, and hold the opinion that there is a great deal too much patronage in England. The better the design, the less (as I think) should it seek such adventitious aid, and the more composedly should it rest on its own merits.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Henry Taylor Esquire

To MR HOLLAND,[†4] [? 10 SEPTEMBER 1868]

Mention in next. Date: probably written same day.

To GEORGE DOLBY, 10 SEPTEMBER 1868†

MS Berg Collection.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Tenth September 1868

My Dear Dolby.

I write [†a] with an addled head, at the close of a day's work[†a] here.

I have answered Mr. Holland's kind notification of dinner at the Westminster[†5] next Wednesday.

On the following day, Thursday, Forster will be delighted to meet you. †a I have ordered dinner at the Ship, Greenwich,†a for that day at ½ past 5 sharp, †a and Wills swears he will join us.†a

Ever Affectionately

THE | CHIEF

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 10 SEPTEMBER 1868*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Tenth September 1868

My Dearest Georgy

The letters all right. Will you kindly add to Forster's Bourgois†6 order of 6 Doz:

Quarts champagne, 6 Doz: Pints too.

—By the 2. .10 Train to Higham on Saturday.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT,†1 [? EARLY SEPTEMBER 1868]

Mention in To Trollope, 13 Sep 68. Date: before that letter; perhaps early Sep.

Thanking his correspondent for the proposal that he should stand as the third member for Birmingham;†2 that no consideration on earth would induce me to become a candidate for the representation of any place, in the House of Commons.

To GEORGE W. BIRDSEYE, 11 SEPTEMBER 1868

Extract in Dodd, Mead Company catalogue No. 78. MS 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill Place, 11 September 1868.

The songs†3 to which you refer in your obliging letter of the 3rd. of last month have not come to hand. But I beg to thank you for them as though they had and to assure you that I highly esteem the flattering manner in which you refer to their subject. You are heartily welcome to the use you have made of these suggestions, and I accept your dedication†4 with pleasure.

To GEORGE DOLBY, 12 SEPTEMBER 1868*

MS British Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Saturday Twelfth September 1868

My Dear Dolby

I duly received and answered a kind note from Mr. Holland[†5] appointing Wednesday. As I should like to see you that day (with a view to our arrangements at night), I will arrange to be at the office here by Noon. Perhaps you will be able to show at one o'Clock, and then we can get some lunch together.

Until Wednesday then, and always,

Affectionately Yours
THE | CHIEF

To THOMAS ADOLPHUS TROLLOPE,[†1] 13 SEPTEMBER 1868†

MS Berg Collection. Address: T. A. Trollope Esqre. | Villa Trollope | Florence | Italy.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Thirteenth September 1868

My Dear Trollope

I found your note and Mrs. Trollope's[†2] paper,[†3] at the office yesterday. The latter I immediately sent off to the printer, and the former I now reply to. Ecce signum!

Wills gets on very slowly. He does well enough as long as he does nothing— except for a violent bumping and banging in his ears. As soon as he tries any occupation, he becomes uneasy and confused, and the distress of noise besets him in an aggravated degree. He has an impression that he will be much better as the weather grows colder. I hope so, though I should have thought that any congestive tendency in the brain would increase with cold.

Next month I begin my Farewell Readings; at which I suppose I shall grind for six months or eight. The "American Catarrh" comes and goes oddly; but I hope it will go, and not come, until I shall have finished.

Please tell Mrs. Trollope that as I hope to put this paper of hers into the No.[†4] I shall "make up" next Thursday, there will not be time to send her a proof, but that I will look carefully to it myself.

[†a] The madness and general political beastiality of the Elections will come off in the appropriate Guy Fawkes days.[†5] It was proposed to me, under very flattering circumstances indeed, to come in as the Third Member for Birmingham.[†6] I replied in what is now my stereotyped phrase, "that no consideration on earth would induce me to become a candidate for the representation of any place, in the House of Commons."

Indeed it is a dismal sight, is that arena, altogether. Its irrationality and dishonesty, quite shocking. How disheartening it is, that in affairs spiritual or temporal, mankind will not begin at the beginning, but will begin with assumptions! Could one believe, without actual experience of the fact, that it could be assumed by hundreds of thousands of pestilent boobies (pandered to by politicians) that the Established Church in Ireland has stood between the Kingdom and Popery, when, as a crying grievance, it has been Popery's trump card![†7]

I have now growled out my growl, and feel better.[†a]

Ever my Dear Trollope | With kind regard | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To DR CHARLES MACKAY, 15 SEPTEMBER 1868*

MS Shakespeare Birthplace Trust.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.

Tuesday Fifteenth September 1868

My Dear Mackay.

I have no doubt I shall be pleased with "Walks and Talks with the people".[†1] The MS will be found awaiting me at the Office tomorrow, I take it.

Mephistopheles is already in. I cannot remember whether I placed it in tomorrow's No. or in the No. next afterwards; but I know it is in the one or the other.[†2]

Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

Dr. Charles Mackay

To MESSRS BANTON & MACKRELL,[†3] 19 SEPTEMBER 1868*

MS Fales Library, New York University. Address: Messrs. Banton & Mackrell | 33 Abchurch Lane | E.C.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.

Saturday Nineteenth September 1868

Dear Sirs

I must recall your attention to the last letter I wrote to you,[†4] in reference to your agency for my son Mr. Sydney Smith Dickens R. N.

I recognize no bills drawn upon me, or upon you, now that my son is of age; by whomsoever endorsed. At the end of this year, I shall have to pay to his account £20. If you like to have that sum in advance to meet the bill of which you apprize me, I will pay it to you now. Otherwise the bill must be returned.[†5]

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Banton & Mackrell

To GEORGE M. TOWLE, 19 SEPTEMBER 1868*

MS Dr. Samuel Abrahams Collection, Knox College.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Saturday Nineteenth September 1868

Dear Sir

I am happy to retain your paper[†1] for early insertion, and should have had the pleasure of acknowledging its receipt sooner, but for a little holiday-making.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

George M Towle Esqre.

To [? FRANK RICHARDSON], [?20 SEPTEMBER 1868]

Mention in next. Date: probably written same day.

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 20 SEPTEMBER 1868*

MS Messrs Farrer & Co.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Twentieth September 1868

My Dear Ouvry

My objection to the enclosed from Ward and Lock[†2] is, that it tacitly claims to be what it is not, and so far endeavours to impose upon the public.[†3]

What they propose to make their No. of (and here we come on stronger ground) is, a reprint from [†a] VARIOUS PORTIONS[†a] of Household Words,[†1] and no reprint from the stereotype plates they bought. Consequently my case is, that if they persist, they will infringe the copyright of several people—granted, extra the stereotype plates by me—and will immediately be thrown into Chancery, for reasons which I shall explain to the public in "All The Year Round."

The other enclosure is from Charley's bankruptcy Solicitor. I replied that I would make its contents known to you on your return from your holiday. I have had two letters from Creditors of the Firm. One from a man who lent it £2,500, and represents it as "a private debt of my son's"—who never saw him until 6 months after he made the investment; the other from an angry firm at Nottingham (creditors for £400) saying that they mean to apply to the Lord Mayor for summonses, warrants, or what not, against the whole concern as having got credit without meaning to pay. I have not answered either.

I shall be at the office all Thursday, and here until then.

Ever Faithfully,

CD.

To CHARLES DICKENS JNR, 21 SEPTEMBER 1868*

MS Brian Lake.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Twenty First September 1868

My Dear Charley

Your letter is delivered here, only at 4 this afternoon. But I write by this same post to Ouvry, begging him to make a point, if possible, of seeing Mr. Richardson tomorrow: when (I have said) Mr. Richardson will call in Lincolns Inn Fields.

Affecy. always

CD.

To FREDERIC OUVRY, [21 SEPTEMBER 1868]

Mention in last. Date: written same day.

To GEORGE HOLSWORTH, 22 SEPTEMBER 1868

Extract in Anderson Galleries catalogue Dec 1933; MS 1 p.; dated 22 Sep 68; addressed G. Holsworth.

I wish you would return the enclosed letter by post to Miss E. S. Carey[†2] . . . with this note from yourself. Madam. In Mr. Dickens's absence on his autumnal vacation I have opened your letter—confidentially, in observance of his general instructions. I beg to return it enclosed, and to add, both that I have no authority to comply with your request, and the compliance would be opposed to a principle which it has been found necessary to establish in this office.

To THOMAS HURLEY,[†1] 23 SEPTEMBER 1868*

MS Guildhall Museum, Rochester.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Twenty Third September 1868.

Mr. Hurley

Please make my new servant George Belcher, a pair of top boots.

CHARLES DICKENS

To G. W. RUSDEN, 23 SEPTEMBER 1868

MS Trinity College, University of Melbourne.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Twenty Third September | 1868.

My Dear Sir

This will be presented to you by my son Edward, to whose care I have consigned the best-printed edition of my books.[†2] Let me beg you to give them a place on your shelves, as an assurance of my friendly and grateful regard.

My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

G. W. Rusden Esquire

To MESSRS COUTTS & CO., 25 SEPTEMBER 1868

MS British Library.

London | 25 Sept. 1868

Messrs. Coutts & Co

Place One Thousand Pounds to my account as an advance on the 10th. Octr. on my securities in your hands.[†3]

£1000

CHARLES DICKENS[†4]

To MESSRS. COUTTS & CO., 25 SEPTEMBER 1868

MS British Library.

25 Sept. 1868

Messrs. Coutts & Co

Transfer fifty pounds from my account to that of George Dolby Esquire £50—

CHARLES DICKENS[†5]

To GEORGE DOLBY, 25 SEPTEMBER 1868*

MS Berg Collection

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Twenty Fifth September 1868

My Dear Dolby

Thinking it might ease your mind I came to town to-day a day earlier than I had intended, and looked into my account at Coutts's. I have placed Fifty Pounds to your credit there, and will add what more you may find to be indispensable, when you advise me what that is.†1 Meantime I can't get my hat on; in consequence of the extent to which my hair stands on end at the costs and charges of these boys. Why was I ever a father! Why was my father ever a father!

Nevertheless I send my love to the children and to Mrs. Dolby.

Ever affecy. Yours

CD.

To EDWARD DICKENS, [?26 SEPTEMBER 1868]

Text from MDGH, 11, 402-4.†2 Date: written before seeing Edward off in London on 26 Sep.

My Dearest Plorn,

I write this note to-day because your going away is much upon my mind, and because I want you to have a few parting words from me to think of now and then at quiet times. I need not tell you that I love you dearly, and am very, very sorry in my heart to part with you. But this life is half made up of partings, and these pains must be borne. It is my comfort and my sincere conviction that you are going to try the life for which you are best fitted. I think its freedom and wildness more suited to you than any experiment in a study or office would ever†3 have been; and without that training, you could have followed no other suitable occupation.

What you have always†4 wanted until now has been a set, steady, constant purpose. I therefore exhort you to persevere in a thorough determination to do whatever you have to do as well as you can do it. I was not so old as you are now when I first had to win my food, and do it†5 out of this determination, and I have never slackened in it since.

Never take a mean advantage of anyone in any transaction, and never be hard upon people who are in your power. Try to do to others, as you would have them do to you, and do not be discouraged if they fail sometimes. It is much better for you that they should fail in obeying the greatest rule laid down by our Saviour, than that you should.

I put a New Testament among your books, for the very same reasons, and with the very same hopes that made me write an easy account of it for you, when you were a little child; because it is the best book that ever was or will be known in the world, and because it teaches you the best lessons by which any human creature who tries to be truthful and faithful to duty can possibly be guided. As your brothers have gone away, one by one, I have written to each such words as I am now writing to you, and have entreated them all to guide themselves by this book, putting aside the interpretations and inventions of man.

You will remember that you have never at home been wearied[†1] about religious observances or mere formalities. I have always been anxious not to weary my children with such things before they are old enough to form opinions respecting them. You will therefore understand the better that I now most solemnly impress upon you the truth and beauty of the Christian religion, as it came from Christ Himself, and the impossibility of your going far wrong if you humbly but heartily respect it.

Only one thing more on this head. The more we are in earnest as to feeling it, the less we are disposed to hold forth about it. Never abandon the wholesome practice of saying your own private prayers, night and morning. I have never abandoned it myself, and I know the comfort of it.

I hope you will always be able to say in after life, that you had a kind father. You cannot show your affection for him so well, or make him so happy, as by doing your duty.

Your affectionate Father
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To MISS MARY DICKENS, 26 SEPTEMBER 1868

Extract in MDGH, 11, 389.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Saturday, Sept. 26th, 1868.

My Dearest Mamie,

I will add a line to this at the Athenaeum, after seeing Plorn off, to tell you how he went away.
Athenaeum, Quarter to Six.

I can honestly report that he went away, poor dear fellow, as well as could possibly be expected. He was pale, and had been crying, and (Harry said) had broken down in the railway carriage after leaving Higham station; but only for a short time.

Just before the train started he cried a good deal, but not painfully. (Tell dear Georgy that I bought him his cigars.) These are hard, hard things, but they might have to be done without means or influence, and then they would be far harder. God bless him!

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 26 SEPTEMBER 1868*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Saturday Twenty Sixth September 1868

My Dear Ouvry

I suppose it is impossible under the circumstances (Fredk. Chapman having made a foolish bargain), to claim more of Ward and Lock than they offer in this letter.[†1]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To W. H. WILLS, 27 SEPTEMBER 1868

MS Huntington Library.

Gad's | Sunday Twenty Seventh September | 1868

My Dear Wills

I want to have a talk with you on Thursday, relative to putting my son Charley into Morley's present place.[†2] I must turn his education to the best account I can, until we can hit upon some other start in life, and he can certainly take the bag and report on its contents, and carry on the correspondence. He seems to have an idea himself that he can strike out some notions at the Museum Library, and I have not dissuaded him from trying.

Who is the New Librarian?[†3] I have lost sight of the place since Panizzi's[†4] time, and want to write for a ticket for Charley.[†5]

I had a sad parting with poor Plorn yesterday afternoon, and have not been myself since.

Ever affecy.
CD.

To CHARLES FECHTER, [END SEPTEMBER 1868]

Extract in MDGH, 11, 390. Date: probably after seeing Edward and Henry Dickens off to Plymouth on 26 Sep.

Poor Plorn is gone to Australia. It was a hard parting at the last. He seemed to me to become once more my youngest and favourite little child as the day drew near, and I did not think I could have been so shaken. You were his idol to the hour of his departure, and he asked me to tell you how much he wanted to bid you good-bye.

Kindest love from all.

Ever heartily

To GEORGE DOLBY, 29 SEPTEMBER 1868

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Twenty Ninth September 1868

My Dear Dolby

I write merely to report myself—or mainly, for I have only two things to mention.

It was a sad parting at last with poor Plorn. When you come (if you ever do) to send your youngest child thousands of miles away for an indefinite time, and have a rush into your soul of all the many fascinations of the last little child you can ever dearly love, you will have a hard experience of this wrenching life.

If you can keep Thursday in next week for a little dinner at Verrey's,—do. It is to be a Broadstairs interlude.[†1]

And will you ask Arthur Chappell[†2] to write me a note, as usual, containing the terms for these Final Readings? I will then, also as usual, answer it by ratification of said terms.

I think I can make a good thing of The Chimes.[†3] (I am now practising every day.) When you come to me on Monday, you shall look through the Murder as I have arranged it.[†4] It is very horrible, but very dramatic. If I decide on doing it at all, we will strike boldly for London.

Scott is here, Poaching Dress[†5] is here, American trunks are airing in the Sun. Things in general look like work again. FitzGerald came on Sunday, and went this morning. He said, on going away, "No really—I—you know—ah—to be serious about it—well now—this is the only house I am undecided in!"

A gale of wind since Friday.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To WALTER THORNBURY, [30 SEPTEMBER 1868]

Envelope only, MS Hugh Maguire. Date: PM Rochester. Address: Walter Thornbury Esquire | Fonthill Cottage | Dorking.

October

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, [? 1 OCTOBER 1868]

Mention in next. Date: probably written same day.

To ARTHUR CHAPPELL, 1 OCTOBER 1868*

MS Fales Library, New York University.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday First October 1868

My Dear Mr. Chappell.

I have replied to the enclosed that I quite agree with the writer; but that it is not in my department, and I have referred the communication to you.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

S. Arthur Chappell Esquire

To THE SECRETARY OF THE NEW YORK RHETORICAL SOCIETY,†1 1 OCTOBER [1868]

Mention in Carnegie Bookshop catalogue, No. 129; MS 1 p.; Date: 1 Oct 58, according to catalogue; but clearly 1868, after his return from America.

Acknowledging with thanks the numerous compliments paid him by his American admirers.

To MRS HENRY AUSTIN, 2 OCTOBER, 1868*

MS Morgan Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT,
Friday Second October, 1868

My Dear Letitia

I should have thanked you sooner for your kind remembrance and note, but that I have been waiting until I could report the poor dear boy's departure. Adverse winds have kept his ship out of Plymouth since last Saturday, when he went down. But she sailed either last night or this morning, for this morning I had a letter from Plorn, dated mid-day, in which he said she was coming round; and to day Harry has telegraphed to the office that he will arrive there at midnight.

It was a very hard parting on Saturday. But he did his portion of it thoroughly well.

Ever affectionately
CD.

To CHARLES KENT, 2 OCTOBER 1868*

MS Beinecke Library, Yale University. Address: Private | Charles Kent Esquire | "Sun" Office | Strand.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Second October 1868

My Dear Kent.

Before I go out of town, I must thank you from my heart for those earnest and affecting words.[†1] If you knew how they have touched me, you would think the higher of them.

Ever affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To HENRY MORLEY, 2 OCTOBER 1868*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Second October 1868

My Dear Morley

I think "From Sunset to Daybreak" is too meritorious to be sent back. I have therefore passed it on to Birtles, and will cut it down here and there next Thursday.[†2]

If you will kindly hold your present office another four weeks, I hope you will not think it unfriendly or unreasonable in me if I then try my eldest son in it. He has been unfortunate in his commercial affairs, and—while awaiting better times—presses me to give him the opportunity of turning a liberal education to account, here. As he has always been a good fellow, and has of course a strong and near claim upon me, I wish to do that much for him, if he can do the rest for himself.

It does not seem to me very likely that Wills can ever wholly resume his old work. Meanwhile, whatever business arrangements I make in this place can be, at the best, but temporary and conditional. There is the whole case, now before you. I value your co-operation so highly and respect you so much, that I would not for any consideration be misunderstood by you. I earnestly hope that you will not write the less for A. Y. R.[†3] or give it a wider berth in any way, because of my making this experiment.

Believe me always | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Henry Morley Esquire

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 2 OCTOBER 1868*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Second October 1868

My Dear Ouvry

I enclose you the Fire Insurance Policies,[†1] and my new list of the Pictures. The 3 large Stanfields were not in the Collection when [Flatau][†2] the Dealer offered £3,000 down for it, and I have no doubt it is worth much more.

Faithfully Always
CHARLES DICKENS

To CHARLES ELIOT NORTON, 3 OCTOBER 1868*

MS Houghton Library, Harvard.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Night, Third October 1868

My Dear Norton

I cannot make an appointment with Mr. Howell [s][†3] at present, because I go away immediately after reading in London on Tuesday, and I come back that day fortnight, merely to read and be whisked off again. But I shall be in town during the greater part of November (while the elections are in progress), and will take that opportunity.

It was a hard parting at last with my youngest boy, and we have all been much distressed. He has been detained on shore at Plymouth (where he joined the ship) nearly a week by contrary winds. Yesterday afternoon, however, he got away, and went off hopefully and bravely. Harry goes up to Cambridge on the Tenth.

I should like Mrs. Norton and you to hear "The Chimes" Reading; but the Chimes will not ring until after Christmas,[†4] and then I suppose you will be in France. Do let me know where you go and for how long, that I may keep pace with your movements sometimes, and report myself in a few lines.

I send my love to both Mrs. Nortons, and there is a shout of regard set up here when I say to whom I am writing.

Ever affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To F. D. FINLAY, 4 OCTOBER 1868

MS Comtesse de Suzannet.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Fourth October, 1868

My Dear Finlay

I am much obliged to you, in all friendship and sincerity, for your letter. I have a great respect for your father in law[†1] and his paper. And I am much attached to the Edinburgh people. You may suppose therefore, that if my mind were not finally made up on the Parliamentary Question, I should waver now.[†2]

But my conviction that I am more useful and more happy as I am, than I could ever be in Parliament, is not to be shaken. I reconsidered it some weeks ago, when I had a stirring proposal from the Birmingham people, and I then set it up on a rock for ever and a day.

Do tell Dr. Russel[†3] that I truly feel this mark of his confidence, and that I hope to acknowledge it in person, in Edinburgh, before Christmas. There is no man in Scotland from whom I should consider this suggestion a greater honour.

Ever Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To SAMUEL PEARCE,[†4] 4 OCTOBER 1868*

MS Canon Richard Hussey. Address: Mr. Pearce | Royal Hotel | Plymouth.

GAD'S HILL PLACE | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Fourth October 1868.

Mr. Charles Dickens sends his Compliments to Mr. Pearse, and begs to forward a cheque for balance of account. Mr. Dickens thanks Mr. Pearse sincerely, for the care taken of his sons[†5] at the Royal Hotel.

To THE REV. JAMES DOMBRAIN,[†6] 6 OCTOBER 1868†

MS Fales Library, New York University.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Sixth October, 1868

Dear Sir

I fear you will long ago have thought me regardless of your communication.

[†a] The prices of admission to my Readings are fixed by Messrs. Chappell and Co. with whom all the business-arrangements rest. I merely stipulate that there shall always be good one shilling places in every room. Your suggestion is not considered practicable, as being fraught with confusion and discontent; but it is not very likely that I shall read in Norwich again.[†a†1]

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

The Rev. James D'Ombrain[†2]

To MARK LEMON,[†3] 6 OCTOBER 1868

MS Romer Topham. Address (Envelope only, MS Private): Private | Mark Lemon Esquire | Gallery of Illustration | 14 Regent Street. PM 6 Oct 68.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Sixth October 1868

My Dear Lemon

I read at Liverpool on Monday the Twelfth, and will therefore destroy my ticket for your Falstaff,[†4] in order that you may re-issue it. I cordially wish you success, and had already asked my son Charley to tell you that if Dolby and I can do anything for you in the country, or give you any little result of practical experience by way of information, we shall at all times be glad to do so.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS[†5]

To CHARLES FECHTER, 7 OCTOBER 1868

Text from MDGH, 11, 390.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday, Oct. 7th, 1868.

My Dear Fechter,

I got your letter sent to Gad's Hill this morning. Until I received it, I supposed the piece[†1] to have been put into English from your French by young Ben.[†2] If I understand that the English is yours, then I say that it is extraordinarily good, written by one in another country.

I do not read again in London until the 20th; and then "Copperfield." But by that time you will be at work yourself.

Let us dine at six to-day, in order that we may not have to hurry for the comic dog.[†3]

Ever faithfully
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To MRS HENRY AUSTIN, 8 OCTOBER 1868*

MS Morgan Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Eighth October 1868

My Dear Letitia

I send you herewith, a Dozen of fine old Brandy, which I hope will do you good. Georgy's account of you is as cheerful and reassuring as I could hope, on the whole. I am off tomorrow to face my heavy spell of work. Georgy will tell me how you get on.

Ever affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Austin

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 9 OCTOBER 1868*

MS Benoliel Collection.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Ninth October 1868

My Dear Ouvry

I am away to Manchester and Liverpool, reading. I have the money ready for the purchase of the land,[†4] and, in case you should want it, shall be at the Adelphi Hotel Liverpool all this next week.

You will be glad, I know, to learn that we began at St. James's Hall last Tuesday with a crowd and enthusiasm beyond all former experience. We turned a thousand people away, at a reasonable calculation.[†1]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Frederick Ouvry Esqre.

To F. C. BEARD, 11 OCTOBER 1868

MS Dickens House.

Adelphi Hotel, Liverpool
Sunday Eleventh October, 1868

My Dear Frank Beard

Something in the last prescription goes against my stomach. I have tried it twice, and each time have felt sick and loose after it. If I were living another kind of life than a Reading one, this might not be; but I am so easily nauseated after these nightly exertions, that I sometimes in the morning cannot even bear the taste in my mouth of some Tincture of Myrrh that I use in cleaning my teeth.

I have no doubt that your principle is right in the main, for I have been in wonderful voice since I began to try it. But I have here stated the latest practical objection.

I shall be at this address Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday morning.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To HENRY BICKNELL,[†2] 11 OCTOBER 1868

Extract in Noel Conway's catalogue of Autographs in Kitton's "Dickens Ana", 11, 28.

Adelphi Hotel, Liverpool | Sunday Eleventh October 1868

Dear Bicknell.

. . . I find your letter and kind donation[†3] for Mrs. Cattermole awaiting me here. It is very good of you to take so much interest in her wants and sorrows. . . . I should be heartily glad to accept your invitation but that I am on this Farewell Tour.

To MRS CATTERMOLE, 11 OCTOBER 1868[*]

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Eleventh October 1868

My Dear Mrs. Cattermole

I am on my Farewell Tour, and shall be very little in London until the end of May, and then only to read there. But all letters are forwarded to me.

I think it will be well to enclose the appeal with the Memorial,[†1] in writing, for Signatures to the latter.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 11 OCTOBER 1868†

MS Huntington Library.

Queen's Hotel, Manchester
Sunday Eleventh October | 1868.

My Dearest Georgy

We had a fine audience last night in the Free Trade Hall,[†2] though not what we consider a large money-house. The Let in Liverpool is extremely good,[†3] and we are going over there at half past one. We got down here pleasantly enough, and in good time: so all has gone well, you see.

Titiens,[†4] Santley,[†5] and an opera company of that class are at the Theatre here.[†6]

They have been doing very poorly in Manchester. [†a] Santley came into the Hall to see me yesterday, and, in talking of Fechter, assumed that I knew all about his "doings" at Gassier's[†1] house. As I knew nothing whatever about them, the allusions were obscure.[†a]

There is the whole of my scanty news. I was in wonderful voice last night, but croak a little this morning, after so much speaking in so very large a place. Otherwise I am all right. I find myself constantly thinking of Plorn.

Dolby sends kindest regard.

Ever my Dearest Georgy Your most affectionate

CD.

To H. P. SMITH, 11 OCTOBER 1868

Text from N, 111, 670-1.

Adelphi Hotel, Liverpool.
Sunday Eleventh October 1868

My Dear Smith,

I am cordially obliged to Mrs. Smith and you for your proffered hospitality; but in Reading times I never under any circumstances whatever go to a friend's house. I always live at an Hotel with Mr. Dolby (my manager) and the workmen who travel with me are never out of call. We have consequently brought the business part of the affair to chronometer exactness.

And consider what a nuisance I should be to my friends, if I had not taken this virtuous resolution. For example, I am coming to Brighton from Manchester for a night—next morning leave for London—and next morning again come back to Brighton—and next morning again go off to Manchester; all these departures at untimely hours and with big boxes and all sorts of similar impediments.

I shall look you up for a few minutes on Monday afternoon before my early dinner.

Ever faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To MISS MARY DICKENS, 12 OCTOBER 1868

Extract in MDGH, 11, 391-2.

Adelphi Hotel, Liverpool | Monday Twelfth October 1868

My Dearest Mamie,

Our lets here are excellent, and we shall have a great house to-night. We had a very fine and enthusiastic audience in the Free Trade Hall, at Manchester, on Saturday; but our first nights there never count up in money, as the rest do. Yesterday, "Charlotte," Sainton, and Piatti[†2] stayed with us here; and they went on to Hull this morning.[†1] It was pleasant to be alone again, though they were all very agreeable.

The exertion of going on for two hours in that immense place at Manchester being very great, I was hoarse all day yesterday, though I was not much distressed on Saturday night. I am becoming melodious again (at three in the afternoon) rapidly, and count on being quite restored by a basin of turtle at dinner.

I am glad to hear about Armatage,[†2] and hope that a service begun in a personal attachment to Plorn may go on well. I shall never be over-confident in such matters, I think, any more.

The day is delicious here. We have had a blow on the Mersey this morning, and exulted over the American steamers. With kind regard to Sir William and Lady Humphery.[†3]

To MRS FORSTER, [13 OCTOBER 1868]

Mention in next. Date: probably written same day.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 13 OCTOBER 1868†

MS Huntington Library. Address (envelope, MS Beinecke Library, Yale University): Miss Hogarth | 26 Wellington Street | Strand | London | W.C. PM 14 Oct 68.[†4]

Adelphi Hotel, Liverpool
Tuesday Thirteenth October 1868

My Dearest Georgy

As I sent a line to Mary yesterday, I enclose you Alfred's letter. Please send it on to her when you next write to Penton.[†5]

I have just now written to Mrs. Forster, asking her to explain to Miss Forster[†6] how she could have an easy chair or a sofa behind my side screen on Tuesday, without occasioning the smallest inconvenience to anybody. Also, how she would have a door close at hand, leading at once to cool passages and a quiet room, &c &c &c. It is a sad story.

We had a fine house here last night, and a large turnaway. Marigold and Trial went immensely. I doubt if Marigold were ever more enthusiastically received.[†7]

Copperfield and Bob to night, and a large Let.[†1] This notwithstanding election Meetings and all sorts of things.

[†a] Dolby pronounces that £16 worth of gas to be impossible. We asked our gas man yesterday [†b](without giving him any figures at all)[†b] what he would consider as a very large charge under these conditions? He said £8. He supposes that there is some roguery at Rochester, or that the meter is in some preposterous condition. He will go down to look at it when we get two days in town.[†a]

My favorite room brought my voice round, last night, and I am in considerable force.

[†a] Ever My Dearest Georgy | Your most affectionate

CD.[†a]

Dolby sends kindest regard, and the message "Everton[†2] Toffee shall not be forgotten."

To J. W. CHITTY, 15 OCTOBER 1868*

MS Mrs Ronald Sinclair. Address: Joseph W. Chitty Esquire | 34 Queensborough Terrace | Kensington Gardens | London | W.

Adelphi Hotel, Liverpool
Thursday Fifteenth October 1868

My Dear Chitty

I really cannot thank you enough for your patient and considerate letter. I shall guide myself, as to my son at Cambridge, strictly in accordance with its advice: thereby bearing the best possible testimony to the high esteem in which I hold its good sense and good feeling.

With many thanks | Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

Joseph W Chitty Esquire

To HENRY DICKENS, 15 OCTOBER 1868

MS Trinity Hall, Cambridge.

Adelphi Hotel, Liverpool
Thursday Fifteenth October 1868

My Dear Harry.

I have your letter here this morning. I enclose you another cheque for £25, and I write to London by this post, ordering 3 Doz: Sherry, 2 Doz: Port, and 3 Doz: light claret to be sent down to you.† [†a] And 6 bottles of brandy.[†a] I also enclose a cheque in favor of the Rev. F. L. Hopkins[†3] for £5 . . 10 . . 0.

Now, observe attentively. We must have no shadow of debt. Square up everything whatsoever that it has been necessary to buy. Let not a farthing be outstanding on any account, when we begin together with your allowance.[†1] Be particular in the minutest detail.

I wish to have no secret from you in the relations we are to establish together, and I therefore send you Joe Chitty's[†2] letter bodily. Reading it, you will know exactly what I know, and will understand that I treat you with perfect confidence. It appears to me that an allowance of £250 a year will be handsome for all your wants, if I send you your wine. I mean this to include your tailor's bills as well as every other expence; and I strongly recommend you to buy nothing in Cambridge, and to take credit for nothing but the clothes with which your tailor provides you. As soon as you have got your furniture accounts in, let us wipe all these preliminary expences clean out, and I will then send you your first quarter. We will count in it, October, November, and December; and your second quarter will begin with the New Year. If you dislike, at first, taking charge of so large a sum as £62 . . 10 . . 0 you can have your money from me half quarterly.

You know how hard I work for what I get, and I think you know that I never had money help from any human creature after I was a child. You know that you are one of many heavy charges on me, and that I trust to your so exercising your abilities and improving the advantages of your past expensive education, as soon to diminish this charge. I say no more on that head.

Whatever you do, above all other things keep out of debt, and confide in me. If you ever find yourself on the verge of any perplexity or difficulty, come to me. You will never find me hard with you while you are manly and truthful.

As your brothers have gone away one by one, I have written to each of them what I am now going to write to you. You know that you have never been hampered with religious forms of restraint, and that with mere unmeaning forms I have no sympathy. But I most strongly and affectionately impress upon you the priceless value of the New Testament, and the study of that book as the one unfailing guide in Life. Deeply respecting it, and bowing down before the character of Our Saviour, as separated from the vain constructions and inventions of men, you cannot go very wrong and will always preserve at heart a true spirit of veneration and humility. Similarly, I impress upon you the habit of saying a Christian prayer every night and morning. These things have stood by me all through my life, and you remember that I tried to render the New Testament intelligible to you and loveable by you when you were a mere baby.[†3]

And so God bless you.

Ever Your affectionate Father

CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [?10-15 OCTOBER 1868]

Extract in F, XI, i, 799. Date: "while engaged in Manchester and Liverpool at the outset of Oct", according to Forster: he read at Manchester on 10 Oct and was in Liverpool 11-15 Oct.

I have made a short reading of the murder in Oliver Twist. I cannot make up my mind, however, whether to do it or not. I have no doubt that I could perfectly petrify an audience by carrying out the notion I have of the way of rendering it. But whether the impression would not be so horrible as to keep them away another time, is what I cannot satisfy myself upon. What do you think? It is in three short parts: 1, Where Fagin sets Noah Claypole on to watch Nancy. 2, The scene on London Bridge. 3, Where Fagin rouses Claypole from his sleep to tell his perverted story to Sikes: and the Murder, and the Murderer's sense of being haunted. I have adapted and cut about the text with great care, and it is very powerful. I have to-day referred the book and the question to the Chappells as so largely interested.

To UNIDENTIFIED WINE MERCHANT,[†1] [15 OCTOBER 1868]

Mention in To Henry Dickens, 15 Oct. Date: written same day.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 15 OCTOBER 1868

Text from The Westminster Chess Club Papers, ed. T. Brownsmith, 1 July 70, 111, 41.

Adelphi Hotel,
Liverpool, Thursday, 15th October 1868.

My Dear——[†2]

To the best of my remembrance I used the orthography in question in Pickwick. With the daring of youth, I rushed into the Sanctuary of Whist, and assumed that the word was derived from the "rough" nature of the process, and its exasperating effects on the feelings of the patient. Now that I have arrived at a more chastened period of life, and have become more cognizant of its many mysteries, I penitently perceive that I may have been quite wrong. I have no means of reference here, but if I were wrong herein, I rather think it was in good company. I am much mistaken if the word were not so spelt by Garrick, in Prologues and Epilogues,[†3] and by the elder Colman[†4] in plays. I think I could find a number of such instances, with ease, in the good dramatic literature of the last century.

Very Faithfully, yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 16 OCTOBER 1868*

MS Huntington Library.

New Brighton | Friday Sixteenth October 1868

My Dearest Georgy.

Dolby and I will be at the office on Sunday night towards 10. I have told him he shall have Mary's room, as we shall be away for Brighton on Monday morning. Ask Ellen to let us have some nice little thing for supper, and to prepare the bedrooms. We have come over here for fresh air, and have been on board the China to day (she sails for New York tomorrow), to exult over not going to America. Lunch with the Captain ensued, and fraternisation generally. It was very heavy weather this morning, but has since cleared, though squally still.

Enormous houses at Liverpool. I am sorry that Mary will not meet Lynch[†1] at St. James's Hall on Tuesday night. But I shall be glad to see him there, and well pleased to see the beaming General.[†2]

In haste | Ever most affectionately

CD.

To SAMUEL CARTWRIGHT, 19 OCTOBER 1868

MS Dickens House.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Monday Nineteenth October 1868

My Dear Cartwright

On arriving here last night I found a note from your son,[†3] whom I cordially thank for his obliging readiness.

Unfortunately I must leave for Brighton at five minutes before 12 today,[†4] as there is a peculiarity in the room, and my men cannot set the platform without me. Perhaps you will kindly tell me tomorrow night when you can see me on Wednesday morning. (On Wednesday evening I start for Brighton again, and thence go back to Manchester).

Ever Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS CATTERMOLE, 19 OCTOBER 1868

Extract in S. J. Davey's catalogue, Kitton's "Dickens Ana", 11, 29; dated Office of AYR, 19 Oct 68; addressed Mrs Cattermole.

I dwell upon the signatures of Painters, because I know they will be the first names looked for in such a case. But any literary names can be added to the same memorial[†1] (you want no other document), and I will append mine. . . . Members of Parliament are of secondary importance. Do not, for Heaven's sake, do such a foolish thing as think of giving your application a party air. Stark, Staring Ruin to your hopes would come of it, inevitably.

To SIR ALEXANDER [DUFF GORDON],[†2] 19 OCTOBER 1868

Extract in Francis Edwards catalogue No. 477, March 1926; MS 2 pp.; dated 19 Oct 68; addressed Sir Alexander.

I am very glad you are coming on Thursday,[†3] because I like Copperfield the best of all the Readings . . . when I am living this episodical life I invariably live at a hotel with my manager, and never go anywhere. I have to dine at unearthly times, and to do all sorts of things that I don't like: among others to be as silent as possible. I should be a nuisance, under such circumstances, in any friend's house or should in a few hours unfit myself for work,

To CHARLES HAMILTON AIDÉ,[†4] 21 OCTOBER 1868†

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: Hamilton Aidé Esquire | Forest Bank | Lyndhurst.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Twenty First Octr 1868

My Dear Sir

[†a] I am very happy indeed to accept your thoroughly well-told story.[†a],[†5] Mr. Wills was rendered incapable of business, by a severe accident, while I was in America; and I cannot doubt that the delay to which you refer, arose from that cause. Howbeit I am very sorry that it should have arisen from any cause, and I hope I need not assure you of my regard and respect.

As the new series of "All the Year Round" will commence in some six weeks' time, and as I have been particularly impressed by the Mystery of the Moated Schloss, [†a] I will (with your leave) reserve it for our new pages.[†a],[†1] It will be more attractively set forth there, than in our present type and form.

Your letter leaves me in some doubt whether I should address this to Brussells, or to Lyndhurst. I take the latter course as the safer. And I will forward to the same address, a proof for your correction when the printer shall have it ready.

My Dear Sir | Very Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Hamilton Aidé Esquire

To HENRY MORLEY, 21 OCTOBER 1868*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Twenty First 1868

My Dear Morley

An unfortunate brother of mine is dead down in Yorkshire,[†2] and I have been obliged to send off my son Charley to look after the funeral.

I myself am obliged to go to Cartwright the Dentist this morning, and I don't know how long he may keep me.

Do not wait therefore. When I come back, I will make up as well as I can, and will write you a note respecting the proofs for the No. Ever Yours faithfully

CD.

To MRS HENRY AUSTIN, 23 OCTOBER 1868*

MS Morgan Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Twenty Third October 1868

My Dear Letitia

Passing through town on my way from Brighton to Manchester, I find your note, along with the enclosed from poor Frederick's doctor.†3 Last night at Brighton, I had a letter from Charley, in which he said that the death had been attended with little or no suffering—that he had unquestionably been tended with the utmost care and affection—and that the funeral was to take place to day.

Ever affectionately†1

P.S. I find by my Bankers book that I paid you on the 10th. September 14. .12. .6 on the 1st. August 28. .16. .9
on the 30th. May 14. .12. .6

To DR JAMES HOWISON,†2 23 OCTOBER 1868

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: Dr Howison | North Terrace | Darlington.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Twenty Third October 1868

My Dear Sir

Passing through London to day on my way from Brighton to Manchester, I find your touching letter. I hasten to assure you that I am truly grateful to you for your care of my late brother, and that I am thoroughly certain he could not have been in kinder or abler hands. In reference to the estrangement between him and me, I am glad to remember that it never involved, on my side, the slightest feeling of anger. He lost opportunities that I had put in his way,†3 poor dear fellow, but there were unhappy circumstances in his life†4 which demanded great allowance. I do not recollect, thank God, that a hard word ever passed between us.

You will, no doubt, have seen and been consulted by my eldest son. I instructed him to see you as soon as he possibly could, after his arrival in Darlington. I may assume that he guided himself by your advice in preparing for the funeral, and that he has told you how strictly I charged him to thank those who had been kind to Frederick. As I have already written, I am truly grateful to you, in remembrance of him, and I heartily thank you. How tenderly I write these words you can scarcely imagine, unless you know that he was my favorite when he was a child, and that I was his tutor when he was a boy.

Believe me, my Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

Dr. Howison

To JOHN FORSTER, [24 OCTOBER 1868]

Extract in F, XI, i, 800. Date: 24 Oct 68, according to Forster.

Telling Forster that his brother Frederick had died at Darlington, on 20 Oct. He had been tended with the greatest care and affection by some local friends. It was a wasted life, but God forbid that one should be hard upon it, or upon anything in this world that is not deliberately and coldly wrong.

To CHARLES ELLIS, [LATE OCTOBER 1868]

Mention in To Miss Hogarth, 29 Oct 68. Date: no doubt a few days earlier.

To JOHN FORSTER, [25 OCTOBER 1868]

Extract in F, XI, i, 799-800. Date: 25 Oct 68, from Liverpool, according to Forster.

I give you earliest notice that the Chappells suggest to me the 18th of November for trial of the Oliver Twist murder,[†1] when everything in use, for the previous day's reading can be made available. I hope this may suit you? We have been doing well here; and how it was arranged, nobody knows, but we had £410 at St. James's Hall last Tuesday,[†2] having advanced from our previous £360. The expenses are such, however, on the princely scale of the Chappells, that we never begin at a smaller, often at a larger, cost than £180 . . . I have not been well, and have been heavily tired. However, I have little to complain of—nothing, nothing; though, like Mariana, I am aweary.[†3] But, think of this. If all go well and (like Mr. Dennis)[†4] I "work off" this series triumphantly, I shall have made of these readings £28,000 in a year and a half.[†5]

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 25 OCTOBER 1868*

MS Huntington Library.

Adelphi Hotel, Liverpool[†1]

Sunday Twenty Fifth October | 1868

My Dearest Georgy

I cannot quite make out from your note, whether I ought to address this to the office or to Gad's. I take the former address, almost at random.

I am heartily glad to know that you are better, and hope the Influenza will pass off now that it has changed its manner of attack.†a

†a

Frank Beard's prescription distressed me exceedingly, yesterday, but I think I am already the better for it. I was on the sofa all day, and asleep half the day: but I got through the Reading at night in the best condition.

There is wanted for George,†2 a loose white Mackintosh over-all, with cape. The same thing should be provided for Armitage. Will you see if they can be got at Newcombes?†3

It blew very hard at Manchester and here, last night. The gale blew itself out in 4 or 5 hours, but was remarkably heavy for a time, and made a great noise in the Free Trade Hall. We had £223 odd.

Dolby is delighted about the pigeons, and sends kindest regard. His wife seems to be in but a bothering condition, as well as I can make out.

Ever my Dearest Georgy | Your most affectionate

CD.

To WALTER THORNBURY, 25 OCTOBER 1868*

MS The Beinecke Library, Yale University.

Adelphi Hotel, Liverpool
Twenty Fifth October 1868

My Dear Thornbury

As we laid down a period within which the Old Stories Retold should not come,†4 so I suppose we should lay down a distance beyond which the Crow should not go, off†5 the road.†6 But this must be influenced by circumstances. I do not see the possibility of laying down a strict straight line. But in the main I should say that the straighter the Crow flies, the better.

I have no doubt, I saw the specially gentle and beautiful face.†1 Hope I may see it again, this coming week!

Ever Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

To W. H. WILLS, 25 OCTOBER 1868*

MS Huntington Library.

Adelphi Hotel, Liverpool | Sunday Twenty Fifth October | 1868

My Dear Wills

I had received the wonderful intelligence contained in your dispatch.[†2] Let me communicate another point of interest which may not have reached you.— Frank Beard will give away the Ber-ri-i-ide!

Ever affecy.

CD.

To MRS CATTERMOLE, 28 OCTOBER 1868*

MS Robert H. Taylor Collection, Princeton University. Address: Mrs. Cattermole | 4 Cedars Road | Clapham Common | London.

Liverpool

Wednesday Twenty Eighth October | 1868

My Dear Mrs. Cattermole

You may be sure that I shall prize the drawing you so kindly give me, and that it could not fall into the possession of any one who could appreciate it more highly. I return Evans's letter, agreeably to your desire. It grieves me to find you writing in such low spirits, though I cannot wonder at your being sometimes borne down by the load you have to bear.

Faithfully Yours always

CD.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 29 OCTOBER 1868

MS Dickens House. Address (MS envelope Beinecke Library, Yale University): Miss Hogarth | Gad's Hill Place | Higham by | Rochester. PM Liverpool 29 Oct 68.

Adelphi Hotel, Liverpool

Thursday Twenty Ninth October 1868

My Dearest Georgy

I think the necessary stove[†3] had best be ordered at once from Strood.

Wilkie's affairs defy all prediction. For anything one knows, the whole matrimonial pretence may be a lie of that woman's intended to make him marry her, and (contrary to her expectations) breaking down at last.[†1]

In the matter of poor Stephen,[†2] of course the mother of the murderer would have a strong feeling against the man who did her the great injury of getting murdered.[†3] Any such story is good for nothing and is to be discountenanced severely.

I am truly glad to hear that you are really getting better. I cannot get right internally, and have begun to be as sleepless as sick.

Writing to Ellis for one cask of wine, and remembering Christmas, I altered my intention and ordered two. Perhaps their arrival may have already astonished you.

Very squally here, with driving showers of large hail.

Every my Dearest Georgy | Your most affectionate

CD.

To HENRY MORLEY, 29 OCTOBER 1868

Extract in Swann Galleries catalogue, No. 293; MS 1 p.; dated Liverpool, 29 Oct 68; addressed Henry Morley.

I have made up and set a very good No. of 51 cols. In case The Abbot's Pool[†4] should come out longer than I have allowed for,[†5] you can take out `Midnight's Discourse'.[†6]

To MR and MRS J. T. FIELDS, 30 OCTOBER 1868†

MS Huntington Library.

Friday Thirtieth October, 1868

My Dear Fields and Mrs. Fields.

I ought to have written to you long ago. But I have begun my 103 Farewell Readings, and have been so busy and so fatigued that my hands have been quite full. Here are Dolby and I again leading the kind of life that you know so well. We stop next week (except in London) for the month of November, on account of the elections, and then go on again, with a short holiday at Christmas. We have been doing wonders, and the crowds that pour in upon us in London are beyond all precedent or means of providing for. I have serious thoughts of doing the murder from Oliver Twist; but it is so horrible, that I am going to try it on a dozen people in my London Hall one night next month, privately, and see what effect it makes.

My reason for abandoning the Christmas No. was, that I became weary of having my own writing swamped by that of other people. This reminds me of the Ghost Story. I don't think so well of it, my dear Fields, as you do. It seems to me to be too obviously founded on Bill Jones (in Monk Lewis's Tales of Terror),[†1] and there is also a remembrance in it of another Sea-Ghost-Story entitled, I think, Stand from under, and written by I don't know whom.[†2] Stand from under, is the cry from aloft when anything is going to be sent down on deck, and the Ghost is aloft on a yard.

[†a] The latest Gad's Hill news is that my youngest boy is on his way to Australia, — with an immense dog calculated to be an unspeakable comfort to the sheep, I should think! It was a sad parting, for he had been the baby all his life, and was the pet at home. He went away bravely, but we all broke down at last, I am afraid. He was most completely fitted out, and had a gorgeous stern-cabin to himself, with a small armoury of rifles, revolvers, bush saddles and holsters, woodman's knives, carpenters' tools, blacksmith's tools, powder, shot, and bullets. He could make bread, brew beer, cook, hammer out a horse-shoe, and shoe a horse. His next brother has just gone up to Trinity Hall, Cambridge: where I hope he may distinguish himself. Georgina is in possession. Mary is on her annual hunting visit in Hampshire. Katey is at home at South Kensington. Charles Collins may be a shade better, but will never keep better or be well. Wilkie always has the gout, and is always chronically injured by the public. — I know as little how or why, as he does. Fechter is awaiting Palmer or Jarrett,[†3] to settle for America.[†4] My son Charley has made a bankruptcy of his paper making business (through no fault of his own, except having to do with partners whom he should never have gone near), and, for the present at all events, is installed at "All The Year Round" office.[†a]

You know all about public affairs, Irish Churches,[†5] and party squabbles. A vast amount of electioneering is going on about here; but it has not hurt us; though Gladstone has been making speeches, North, East, South, and West, of us. I hear, with gloom and terror, that Childs[†1] of Philadelphia is on his way here in the Russia — a good man but portentously heavy, and with a little hoarse wife — most distinguished Musical amateur in our country. Gad's Hill must be thrown open.

[†a] I read at Manchester tomorrow night, at Brighton on Monday, and in London on Tuesday. You are our stock subject — Dolbys and mine — now that we are on tramp again. He started off yesterday to see his wife and children at Ross, and rejoins me this evening. Scott and George are on duty, and look exactly as if they had never left the Parker House at Boston.

When do you mean to come to Gad's? I expect to finish these Readings and turn that page of my life, towards the last week in May. Commend me heartily to all Boston friends, and Believe me ever[†a]

Your most affectionate
CHARLES DICKENS

To DR J. SHERIDAN MUSPRATT, OCTOBER 1868

Extract in John Anderson Jnr catalogue No. 530; MS 1 p.; dated Adelphi Hotel, Liverpool, Oct 68; addressed Dr Sheridan Muspratt.

My Dear Muspratt.

It is indeed a sad experience to find how comrades fall,[†2] as the Life Fight progresses. There is nothing for it but to close up the ranks, march on, and fight it out. Refers to Miss Cushman.[†3]

November

To HENRY DICKENS, 1 NOVEMBER 1868*

MS Admiral Sir Gerald Dickens.

Liverpool, Sunday First November | 1868

My Dear Harry

I enclose a cheque for your furniture bill. Have it properly receipted, and send it back to me.

How much of the £50 you have had, remains after paying all other charges of beginning: — as crockery, glass, and so forth? Let me know as soon as you can, and then I will remit the balance of your quarter.[†4] Address me at the office.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To MRS KNIGHT,[†1] 3 NOVEMBER 1868

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, July 1983; MS 2 pp.; dated Office of AYR, 3 Nov 68; addressed Mrs Knight.

Describing the hectic life he is leading giving readings from his works throughout the British Isles . . . . With the exception of a few days at Christmas, this has to go on through 103 Readings at the rate of 4 a week! . . . Give my love to dear Charles,[†2] and tell him his old manager is grinding at the mill.

To GEORGE W. CHILDS, 4 NOVEMBER 1868*

MS Morgan Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Fourth November 1868

My Dear Mr. Childs

Welcome to England!

Dolby will have told you that I am reading again — on a very fatiguing scale — but that after the end of next week, I shall be free for a fortnight, as to country Readings. On Monday next I shall be in town, and shall come straight to pay my respects to Mrs. Childs and you. In the meantime will you, if you can, so arrange your engagements as to give me a day or two here in the latter half of this month? My housekeeper-daughter is away hunting in Hampshire, but my sister in law is always in charge, and my married daughter would be charmed to come from London to receive Mrs. Childs. You cannot be quieter any where than here; and you certainly cannot have from any one a heartier welcome than from me.[†3]

With kind regard to Mrs. Childs
Believe me | Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

George W Childs Esquire

To MRS JAMES PITT,[†4] 4 NOVEMBER 1868

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, Oct 1976; MS (3rd person) 1 p.; dated Office of AYR, 4 Nov 68; addressed Mrs. James Pitt.

Informing Mrs Pitt that he has no knowledge of the agent about whom she has asked for information but adding he has made some enquiries, and he privately recommends Mrs. Pitt to be very careful.

To MARK LEMON, 5 NOVEMBER 1868*

MS Folger Shakespeare Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Fifth November 1868

My Dear Lemon

I am but just home for a very short holiday from Country Readings, and I have so much to do that my time is very uncertain. But I hope to come and see your Falstaff,[†1] one evening in this next week.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS CHARLES ELIOT NORTON, 5 NOVEMBER 1868*

MS Houghton Library, Harvard. Address: Mrs. Norton | Keston Rectory | Bromley | Kent.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Fifth November 1868

My Dear Mrs. Norton

By great good fortune, your letter finds me at home for a day—almost an unaccountable and incredible circumstance to myself in these Farewell Reading times!

I am in deed concerned to read your account of dear Norton's illness, and to think of your own personal anxieties in a strange country so far from home. Give him my affectionate love (keeping a large share of it for yourself), and tell him how truly my heart is with him and with you, and how grateful I shall be for further and better tidings of him. When you get established in London I shall somehow contrive to fly in upon you in one of my fortnightly flights to that place from Ireland, Scotland, Wales, and all the weary list of places to which I am bound. This brings me at once to business, and I hope I may prove useful to you.

When I take a furnished house in town, I always take it in what Londoners call "Tyburnia"—the Hyde Park district lying at the upper end of Oxford Street. It is beyond question the healthiest part of London, and offers the great advantage for your children that it is close to the best parks and to Kensington Gardens. I have always employed one House Agent[†2] there, and have always had cause to be satisfied with him. Enclosed is a letter to him. You may be sure that he will exert himself if you present it, and that he will be honest and zealous. He has houses in that district constantly on his books, and, if you pitch upon one to suit you, will tell you what offer is likely to be accepted.

My daughter Mary is hunting in Hampshire. My youngest boy is on his way to Australia, and we all had a hard parting of it. Dolby and I are very hard at work, and are likely to have little rest until May is over. The success of these Farewells is something overwhelming.

You and Norton may be interested in knowing that I have some idea of doing the Murder from Oliver Twist. But it is so very strong (in the horrible way), that I can not make up my mind how the public would take it. So on the evening of Saturday week, the 14th. I am going to try it privately, before some two dozen hearers,[†1] in St. James's Hall. How I wish you two could come! If Norton be but well enough, DO[†2] come. Write to me any day next week at "All The Year Round" office, 26 Wellington Street W. C.

You may be sure that Norton could not be in better hands than Simon's.[†3] Further, I have not the least doubt that the Tyburnian climate will compare most advantageously with that of Boston. Further again: tell Norton one thing from me. If, besides wearing the usual flannel garments, he will wear a broad flannel belt round the waist, he will find quite an extraordinary protection and comfort from it. I used, from a child, to be occasionally subject to violent inflammation in the side, attended with acute pain. On the Occasion[†4] of my last attack, now fifteen years ago, my doctor recommended me to wear this belt. Although I walk in all weathers, and have the wear and tear and atmospherical changes inseparable from these Readings, I have never had that illness since. Shall I send you one of my belts as a pattern?

My sister in law, who is in solitary possession here, sends her kindest regard. She hopes it may be some consolation to you to know that she is in a hideously swollen and suffering state from influenza; and that half the people she knows, are similarly afflicted. Again my love to Norton and to you, and my heartiest sympathy and friendship. Don't write me a long letter, as an obligation on you. A bulletin will be quite enough. I will lengthen it out, in imagination.

Ever My Dear Mrs. Norton | Most affectionately Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To B. W. PROCTER, 5 NOVEMBER 1868

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, July 1995; MS 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill Place, 5 Nov 68; addressed B. W. Procter

I am happy to be free from reading on the 21st. of this month, and will be with you please God.

I wish I could write as plainly as you do. . . .

Ever your affectionate
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN WILSON,[†1] 5 NOVEMBER 1868

Extract in Sophie Dupré catalogue, No. 19 (1990); MS I p.; dated Gad's Hill Place, 5 Nov 68; addressed Mr Wilson.

A highly esteemed American friend of mine, Mr Charles F. Norton—a distinguished and responsible gentleman—wishes to find a furnished house for himself and family . . . I have told him of my satisfactory experience of you on all occasions and I beg you to treat him as you would myself. You could not have a better client. . . you could not oblige me more than by helping him . . . with as little trouble to himself (he being in delicate health just now) as possible.

To G. M. TOWLE, 6 NOVEMBER 1868*

MS Beinecke Library, Yale University.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Sixth November 1868

My Dear Sir

We have already had (in Household Words) so much about Vineyards and Vintages,[†2] that I cannot have the pleasure of accepting the enclosed paper.

The Peasant's Wedding has been delayed by the necessity of clearing off a great number of articles in type, before commencing the new Series. It shall not be delayed a moment longer than is absolutely unavoidable.[†3]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

George Makepeace Towle Esquire

To THOMAS BEARD, 10 NOVEMBER 1868

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Tenth November 1868

My Dear Beard

I am going to do an odd thing on Saturday. I cannot make up my mind whether to read the murder from Oliver Twist, or no. So I am going to have a handfull of private friends in St James's Hall, to try how it affects them, and so decide. Can you come? At half past 8? It will not occupy more than an hour. I will send you a card of admission.

Ever affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

To MARY DICKENS, [10 NOVEMBER 1868]

Mention in To Childs, 11 Nov. Date: written day before.

To THE REV. WILLIAM HARNESS,†1 10 NOVEMBER 1868*

MS Robert W. Stilwell. Address: The Rev. William Harness | 3 Hyde Park Terrace | Kensington Gore | W.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Tenth November 1868

My Dear Harness

I have missed you sorely, at the Readings. We have had the most enormous houses, but your seat has always been ready for you. And the faithful Dolby has always reported: "No Mr. Harness".

I cannot quite make up my mind whether to read the Murder from Oliver Twist, or no. I cannot decide whether the Art of the thing should exalt the horror, or deepen it. Therefore I am going to try it in St. James's Hall, before a mere handfull of friends, next Saturday. Half past eight is the time, and it will not take an hour. If you can†2 come—do. You will receive a card of admission, a few hours after you receive this note.

With Kindest regard to your sister†3 | Believe me Ever
Your truly affectionate Friend
CHARLES DICKENS

The Rev. William Harness.

To J. M. MOIR,†4 10 NOVEMBER 1868*

MS Dickens House. Address: Macrae Moir Esquire | Scottish Corporation Hall | — Crane Court | Fleet Street | E.C.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.

Tuesday Tenth November 1868

Dear Sir

I am obliged by the invitation you have had the kindness to honour me with, on behalf of the stewards of the next anniversary of your corporation.[†5] I cannot however have the pleasure of accepting it, as I am otherwise engaged on St. Andrew's day.[†1]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Macrae Moir Esquire

To MR POPE,[†2] [? EARLY NOVEMBER 1868]

Extract in the Scotsman, 13 Nov 68. Date: no doubt written a few days earlier.

I beg to say I shall be happy to devote the gross amount of my next reading in London to the fund. What should I have been without printers? I am grateful, and wish to show it.

To GEORGE W. CHILDS, 11 NOVEMBER 1868*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: George W. Childs Esquire | Langham Hotel.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Eleventh November 1868

My Dear Mr. Childs

Immediately after seeing Mrs. Childs yesterday, I wrote to my daughter and told her you were not coming on Sunday. For this reason, and as I cannot consequently be sure of her, will you kindly let it stand as we arranged at the Langham:—that is, that Mrs. Childs and my daughter shall arrange days and hours, when they meet on Saturday evening?

—And by the bye. Will you tell Mrs. Childs with my kindest regard that I asked my sister in law, at breakfast this morning, the following grave question: "How do you mean to dress yourself on Saturday Evening?" To which she replied: "Just in the evening dress I wear at any Theatre."

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS WILLS, 14 NOVEMBER 1868

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Saturday Fourteenth November 1868

My Dear Mrs. Wills

I am very sorry indeed that I shall not see you and Wills tonight:—though I think you will escape a rather horrible business![†3]

Tell Wills with my love that everything is right here, and going like a clock—a great deal more like a clock than this thing he bought me for my room here, which is an utterly unreliable, unreasonable, and incomprehensible Beast.

Ever Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [?15 NOVEMBER 1868]

Extract in F, XI, i, 800. Date: probably the day after the private reading of Sikes and Nancy on 14 Nov.

We might have agreed to differ about it very well, because we only wanted to find out the truth if we could, and because it was quite understood that I wanted to leave behind me the recollection of something very passionate and dramatic, done with simple means, if the art would justify the theme.

To J. J. BRITTON,[†1] 16 NOVEMBER 1868*

MS Mitchell Library, Glasgow.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Monday Sixteenth November 1868

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Britton, and begs to thank Mr. Britton cordially, for his very obliging note and its accompanying volume of poems.[†2] Mr. Dickens's absence for some days has prevented his receiving those esteemed communications until to day.

To THE REV. B. W. BUCKE,[†3] 16 NOVEMBER 1868*

MS Rosenbach Museum and Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Sixteenth November 1868

Dear Sir

I have been absent for some days, or your letter should have had an earlier answer.

You know, I presume, that I have had no knowledge of the unfortunate gentleman on whose behalf you address me, for more than thirty years. Indeed I do not even know, at this moment, which of the sons of Mr. Moule,[†4] formerly of Clapton, the gentleman is.

In that space of time the train I have to drag through life has become so long and heavy, that I cannot go thus far afield to render help. I have no course but to tell you with regret that it is not in reason possible.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Rev. B. W. Bucke

To W. P. FRITH, 16 NOVEMBER 1868

MS Victoria & Albert Museum.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Monday Sixteenth November 1868

My Dear Frith.

Thus the case stands:—if anybody sends money to †a Mrs. Cattermole,†a I know no more of it; neither does anybody else. But if anybody sends money for the family's benefit to "The †b Cattermole Fund†b account" at †b Coutts's,†b I can answer for the money's being forthcoming, simply because I have made the account payable to my draft only. Of course I have done this, as a temporary measure, and I have from the first taken it for granted that you and the third gentleman whose name I forget (but it was attached to the Prospectus with our names) will accept the administration of the money with me, or with any others whom we may join with us. There is the account open at †a Coutts's,†a and †a Mrs. Cattermole†a has no power over it. Consequently the object of the subscribers cannot be abused.

Come (early in January) and see a certain friend of yours do the murder from Oliver Twist. It is horribly like, I am afraid! I have a vague sense of being "wanted," as I walk about the streets.

Faithfully Yours ever
CHARLES DICKENS

To CHARLES KENT, 16 NOVEMBER 1868

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Monday Sixteenth November, 1868

My Dear Kent.

I was on the very eve of writing to you.

We thought of keeping the trial Private, but Oxenford†1 has suggested to Chappell that he would like to take the opportunity of tomorrow night's Reading, of saying something about Oliver in Wednesday's paper.†2 Chappell has told

Levy[†1] of this, and also Mr. Dunphie[†2] of The Post—who was there. Consequently, on Wednesday evening your charming article can come out to the best advantage.[†3]

You have no idea of the difficulty of getting in the end of Sikes.[†4] As to the man with the inevitable composition!—My Dear fellow believe me, no audience on earth could be held for ten minutes after the girl's death. Give them time, and they would be revengeful for having had such a strain put upon them.—Trust me to be right. I stand there, and I know.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To MISS CHAPPELL,[†5] 17 NOVEMBER 1868*

MS Mrs M. G. Valentine.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Seventeenth November, 1868.

Dear Miss Chappell

Enclosed I have the pleasure of sending you, your box for Monte Cristo[†6] tomorrow night.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To THE REV. WILLIAM HARNESS, 17 NOVEMBER 1868*

MS William Blatner. Address: The Rev. William Harness | 3 Hyde Park Terrace | Kensington Gore | W.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Seventeenth November 1868

My Dear Harness.

Your screaming tendencies[†7] horrify me!!! My only comfort is, that I don't think many people have your freshness, or vividness of perception.

Anyhow—on the 5th. of January[†1] there will be bound to the stake—

Your ever affectionate Friend

CD.

To MRS PROCTER, 18 NOVEMBER 1868*

MS Miss Alice J. Wilson. Address: Mrs Procter | 32 Weymouth Street | Portland Place | W.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Eighteenth Novr. 1868

My Dear Mrs. Procter

Will you kindly tell me at what time we dine on Saturday.

Affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To JAMES DAWSON,†2 19 NOVEMBER 1868

Text from N, 111, 679.

GAD'S HILL PLACE | Thursday Nineteenth November, 1868

Sir,

I hope you will not suppose that I have slighted your little book.†3 I have read it with much interest and have found some very pretty thoughts in it. It is a remarkable production to have been achieved under the circumstances so modestly stated in your preface, and it has awakened genuine admiration in me.†4

Constant occupation and perpetual absence from home have combined to prevent my thanking you sooner, but I hope you will excuse my remissness when you understand that it has not proceeded from indifference.

Faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To W. C. MACREADY, 19 NOVEMBER 1868*

MS Morgan Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Nineteenth November 1868

My Dearest Macready

I should have written to you much sooner, but that I have been waiting on from week to week while the Chappells were doubtful whether or no to take Cheltenham in the tour. The small size of the room was their objection, but I believe they have now resolved to take it in, at high prices. So I write at once, and will write again when I know more.

We are having the most astonishing houses, in London! It seems as though we could fill Saint Pauls.

On the fifth of January I am coming out with the Murder from Oliver Twist, which I have put together and got up with great pains and elaboration. It so horrified myself at last, that I got afraid of it, and tried it privately last Saturday upon about a hundred people at St. James's Hall. The verdict of ninety of them was: "It must be done." So it is going to be done. "Well," says Mrs. Keeley,[†1] drawing a very long and very tight breath after it was over: "the public have been wanting a sensation for a few years—and now they've got it!"[†2] How I wished for you on the Jury!

We are all well, except Charles Collins, who never will be well on this earth. Katie, Mary, and Georgina, are all here, and all send best love to Mrs. Macready and to you. My work is very hard at present; but I don't mind that, having health and spirits—and not being across the Atlantic. I am away to Scotland before Christmas, and to Ireland afterwards, and shall not get done before the end of May.

Ever my Dearest Macready | Your most affectionate

CD.

To W. H. WILLS, 20 NOVEMBER 1868*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Twentieth November 1868

My Dear Wills

The making up[†3] has been very cross to day, and I don't like it. Nothing would fit. Everything wandered and staggered.

At first I was against your idea of the two types. But becoming quite alarmed by the manner in which every plan got crowded out, I resolved in favor of that idea and arranged with Birtles. Edmund, I, and FitzGerald's gambling story, are now in the new type; every thing else in the old.[†1] I have put Steele[†2] second; a very interesting paper to us, but I doubt the public interest in matters of that kind usually.

It is the best No. I could make.

Stick to Bark,[†3] Port, and Turtle. You won't be up to Sikes and Nancy on lower food, I can tell you!

Ever affectionately

CD.

To MISS NAYLOR,[†4] 21 NOVEMBER 1868

Text from N, 111, 679. Address (envelope MS Robson Lowe Ltd): Miss Naylor | 5 Grove Terrace | Grove Road | St. John's Wood | N.W. PM London Nov 21 68.[†5]

GAD'S HILL PLACE | Twenty-First November, 1868

Mr. Charles Dickens sends his compliments to Miss Naylor, and regrets that he could not possibly think of interfering with anyone whomsoever on the subject of her letter, with which he has no reasonable concern.

To MISS MARY BOYLE, [?NOVEMBER 1868]

Mention in Mary Boyle, her Book, ed. Sir Courtenay Boyle, 1902, pp. 241-2. Date: shortly after Cavendish Boyle's death on 21 Nov.

A letter of condolence on the death of her youngest brother, Cavendish.[†6]

To CHARLES ELIOT NORTON, 23 NOVEMBER 1868*

MS Houghton Library, Harvard. Address: Charles E Norton Esquire | Keston Rectory | Bromley.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Twenty Third November | 1868

My Dear Norton.

I am delighted to learn that you are better and better, and also that you have taken a house in town. Please God I shall see you there before I go to Scotland towards the end of next week, and likewise as often as I return to London.

You can not think what a pleasure it is to me to know that you have been reading my books while you have been confined to your room! I almost feel as if I had been your doctor and companion, I declare.

We all send our love to all your house. We have often talked of Mrs. Norton as in a strange land,[†1] with a load of anxiety upon her, when we have exchanged letters.

Ever My Dear Norton | Your truly affectionate Friend
CHARLES DICKENS

To W. H. WILLS, 23 NOVEMBER 1868*

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Twenty Third November 1868

My Dear Wills.

My meaning is, that the right hand page should always have the title of the running article upon it.[†2] That is what our readers seem to want. If we come to fancy headings referring to the single page (as in my C.D. edition)[†3] the top of the page will not help the reader to the name of the article as set forth in the contents (what I conceive is wanted), and would involve us in making-up difficulties, too. Therefore I have put the name of the article, instead of the minuter guidance.

I rejoice to hear that you are better. I am at work on another Uncommercial to bring up with me.[†4]

Charley takes this to the office.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To AUSTEN HENRY LAYARD, 25 NOVEMBER 1868

MS British Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Twenty Fifth November | 1868

My Dear Layard

Now that I am home again, will you come to us this Christmas? Do, if you can.

Best regard from all | Ever faithfully

CD

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 26 NOVEMBER 1868*

MS Salisbury House Library, Iowa. Address: Miss Hogarth | Gad's Hill Place | Higham | by | Rochester.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Twenty Sixth November 1868

My Dearest Georgy

Basket to Gravesend on Saturday, to meet the afternoon Express from Charing X.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To AUSTEN HENRY LAYARD, 29 NOVEMBER 1868

MS British Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.

Sunday Twenty Ninth November | 1868

My Dear Layard

We are delighted, one and all, that you come to us at Christmas, and we hope you will stay with us as many days as you can.

Faithfully Yours Ever

CD

To [?JOHN W.] MOULE,[†1] [?LATE NOVEMBER 1868][†2]*

MS McGill University Library. Date: see To Bucke, 16 Nov; handwriting supports.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his Compliments to Mr. Moule, and regrets that his compliance with the request made known to him through that gentleman's letter, is not reasonably possible. He receives so many similar communications that he can very rarely acknowledge any such (as he does in this case) under his own hand.

To SAMUEL CARTWRIGHT, 30 NOVEMBER 1868*

Text from transcript, British Dental Association.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, | KENT.
Monday Thirtieth November 1868.

My Dear Cartwright

I have not reported sooner, because at first I could not put the new plate into position; and knowing that to be the fault of my hand, and not of yours, I waited to overcome the difficulty. I can now handle it easily, and it is so very nearly perfect that there is nothing to trouble you about.

Will you kindly let me know (at 26 Wellington Street) for what amount I may send you a cheque. You remember our compact. Material and workmanship are to count.[†1]

Ever faithfully yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

To ARTHUR HELPS,[†2] 30 NOVEMBER 1868*

MS Benoliel Collection. Address (MS envelope Christies' catalogue, Mar 1985): Arthur Helps Esquire | Privy Council Office | London. PM 30 Nov 68.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Thirtieth November | 1868.

My Dear Helps

I have been away, and am but now in receipt of your new book[†3] and kind letter. I promise myself as much pleasure in reading the first, as I have already had in reading the last. And that is saying very much indeed, for I heartily assure you that your remembrance of my writings is an encouragement and satisfaction to me of the very highest kind, and that very few things touch me so nearly as the knowledge that my fancies have become a part of lives like yours.

I often wish that we could see a little more of one another, but life seems to grow fuller and fuller of occupation every day. I am away this week to Scotland, reading, and shall be hard at it until May. However, please God I shall make a proposal to you, when the hops and cherries of this part of the country are, as Mr. Pepys says, "pretty to see", to set your feet though it be only from a Saturday to Monday upon Falstaff ground.

Believe me always | Very Cordially Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

My daughter and her Aunt hope you have not forgotten Lytton's driving of that poney, or how the Hermit[†1] took you aback.

December

To WILLIAM JAMES FARRER, 1 DECEMBER 1868

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday First December 1868

My Dear Sir

I should hardly think it worth while to send you the enclosed letter, but that perhaps Miss Coutts should be made acquainted with its existence, as it lays claim to two articles of property alleged to have been in the possession of the late Mr. Townshend.

I take it to be perfectly clear, from Mr. Townshend's papers, that he had not had for many years the least idea of giving this Mr. Norcott[†2] any thing but his annuity.[†3]

Will you let me know whether there are any papers still remaining impounded at Lausanne?[†4]

Those that I have, in which Mr. Townshend's religious opinions are recorded, are of so desultory and incomplete a kind that it becomes an extraordinarily difficult task to pick out the materials for an intelligible Volume from the whole mass. If there be no more of such papers still in reserve, the volume must be got together, however disheartening the process; and I have the materials indexed and abstracted with that view. I presume that the cost of its printing and publication will be paid by the Estate? No book-seller would entertain the notion of buying it, or taking the risk of it, I am certain.[†5]

And I doubt whether a score of copies will ever get into public circulation, extra the copies demanded by the privileged Public Libraries.[†6]

My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

William Farrer Esquire

To JAMES BIRTLES, 2 DECEMBER 1868*

MS Private.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND
Wednesday Second December 1868

Dr. Mr. Birtles

Is my Uncommercial revise[†1] ready?

I shall be glad to speak with you for a moment, if you can come round.[†2]

CD.

To SAMUEL CARTWRIGHT, 2 DECEMBER 1868*

Text from transcript, British Dental Association.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Second December 1868.

My Dear Cartwright

Conscience money enclosed,[†3] with a thousand thanks. I read with the new plate last night, quite easily and comfortably.

I have taken the pledge to abstain from hydrocyanic acid,[†4] and have some thoughts of being exhibited at the Crystal Palace as an example of what may be done without it.

Ever faithfully,
CHARLES DICKENS

To CHARLES KENT, 2 DECEMBER 1868

Mention in Dickens Exhibition, New Dudley Galleries catalogue, 1909; MS 1 p.; dated office of AYR, 2 Dec 68; addressed Charles Kent.

To JOHN POOLE,[†5] 2 DECEMBER 1868

MS Chas. J. Sawyer.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Second December 1868

My Dear Poole

I will come up to you on Friday, bringing with me the largest typed Pickwick extant.

Faithfully Ever

CD.

To SAMUEL CARTWRIGHT, 3 DECEMBER 1868*

Text from transcript, British Dental Association.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Third December 1868.

My Dear Cartwright.

If you will send the paper in question[†1] at once to me here, I will write you upon it in the course of to-morrow.[†2]

Ever faithfully,

CD

To JAMES BIRTLES, 4 DECEMBER 1868*

MS Maggs Bros Ltd. Address: Mr. James Birtles

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Fourth December 1868

Dr. Mr. Birtles

I am away to Scotland early tomorrow morning, and shall be glad if you can come round to me for a moment at about 5 this afternoon.

I want "As the Crow Flies",[†3] in proof.

CD.

To WALTER THORNBURY, 4 DECEMBER 1868*

MS Beinecke Library, Yale University.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Night Fourth Decr. 1868

My Dear Thornbury

I was obliged to make up without As[†4] "The Crow Flies" yesterday, for Birtles hadn't got it. At this moment when I write (8 in the evening) no proof of it has come to me.

But I have placed The Death's Head Moth[†5]—which is highly picturesque, and which I like very much—in No. 4 New Series.[†6] Therefore the Crow does not press for the moment. Of course you understand that Holsworth has you on his book here for the weekly charge, and that all is right in that direction. I go to Scotland tomorrow morning, and the Crow will be sent after me. No. 4 is a story No. with an eye to Christmas.[†7] I have an unformed idea of making the New Year No. a story No. too.[†1] The realization of that idea will depend on the value of the Material I have to do with. The Siren's Song has not yet reached these ears; but will, no doubt, in due time.

I entreat you not to be unhappy about the Crow. If you don't like it, [†a][———],[†a] away with it! Nothing is easier than to substitute something else, and hit out a new notion. But we must take the Crow at least North, East, West, and South, before dropping him.[†2] Therefore, once again, the matter does not press at the instant. "If the worst should come to the worst" (as the phrase goes, though I don't know what it means literally), make no more of an accidental Miss than I do—and that is, NOTHING.[†3] (Refer this principle for charming judgment,[†4] and I know I shall come out triumphant.)

I read in London on the 22nd. Until close upon that time, "Kennedy's Hotel Edinburgh" will find me. For any thing I know, the Crow as yet unknown to me and now in hand, may be a perfect Crow. Don't be disheartened any how. You are not so short of arrows, that you need make much of losing one!

Ever Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

To JAMES BIRTLES, 6 DECEMBER 1868

Extract in City Book Auction catalogue No. 324; MS Ip; addressed James Birtles.

Kennedy's Hotel, Edinburgh | Sunday, Sixth December, 1868

I am particularly desirous of having the accompanying alterations made in "The Small Star."[†5] I hope it is not too late. If they should necessitate the omission of a few lines in the paper that follows it in the same No.,[†6] they can be easily taken out.

Faithfully yours,
CD

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 6 DECEMBER 1868†

MS Huntington Library. Address (Envelope only, MS Salisbury House Library, Iowa): Miss Hogarth | AYR Office | 26 Wellington Street | London | W. PM Edinburgh 6 Dec 68.

Kennedy's Hotel, Edinburgh
Sunday Sixth December, 1868

My Dearest Georgy

We got down here to our time, to the moment, and—considering the length of the journey—very easily. I made a calculation on the road that the Railway travelling over such a distance involves something more than 30,000 shocks to the nerves. Dolby didn't like it at all.

The signals for a gale were up at Berwick and along the road between there and here. It came on just as we arrived, and blew tremendously hard all night. The wind is still very high, though the sky is bright and the sun shining. We couldn't sleep for the noise.

We are very comfortably quartered. I fancy that the "business" will be on the whole better here than in Glasgow, where trade is said to be very bad. But I think I shall be pretty correct in both places as to the run being on the final readings.†1

We are going up Arthur's Seat presently, which will be a pull for our fat friend.
†a An Edinburgh man whom I met on the platform at York yesterday, told me that Andrew†2 had remained here to attend the funeral of "Auld Leddy" Somebody; and that he was "no that poseteeve that the yoong mon was awa' yet."†a

Scott in a new Mephistopheles hat, baffles imagination and description.

Ever My Dearest Georgy | Your most affectionate

CD.

MRS LEHMANN,†3 6 DECEMBER 1868†

MS University of Texas, Austin.

Kennedy's Hotel, Edinburgh
Sunday Sixth December 1868

My Dear Mrs. Lehmann

†a Many thanks for your kindness in sending me the enclosed letter to read.†a

I hope you will see Nancy with the light of a great audience upon her, sometime between this and May:—always supposing that she should not prove too weird and woeful for the general public.

You know the aspect of this City on a Sunday, and how gay and bright it is. The merry music of the blithe bells, the waving flags, the prettily decorated houses with their draperies of various colors, and the radiant countenances at the windows and in the streets, how charming they are! The usual preparations are making for the Band in the open air, in the afternoon; and the usual pretty children (selected for the purpose) are at this moment hanging garlands round the Scott monument,†4 preparatory to the innocent Sunday dance round that edifice, with which the diversions invariably close.†5 It is pleasant to think that these customs were the customs of the early Christians—those early birds who didn't catch the worm—and nothing else—and choke their young with it.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To DR JOHN MURRAY,[†1] 6 DECEMBER 1868*

MS Rosenbach Museum and Library. Address: Dr John Murray | 40 Bryanston Street | Portman Square | London | W.

Kennedy's Hotel, Edinburgh | Sunday Sixth December, 1868

My Dear Sir

Your letter has been forwarded to me here this morning.[†2]

I left out the Child[†3] of the Hospital,[†4] thinking it possible that such a precedent might alarm some preposterous Board of Guardians, as establishing a settlement. But "Justice to Poodles" is a cry I cannot resist! I send by this post a recognition of his great merits, to the Printer; also, a mention of the Nurses' room;[†5] and some half dozen other additional words, in pursuance of your reminder. I hope it may not be too late to make the change; but our pages go into the Foundry with all possible expedition, to be cast into stereotype plates; and these pages may already have got there. If so, you will understand that I could not help it.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Dr. John Murray

To WILKIE COLLINS, 8 DECEMBER 1868

Text from MDGH, 11, 396-7.

Kennedy's Hotel, Edinburgh
Tuesday Eighth December 1868

My Dear Wilkie,

I am hard at it here as usual, though with an audience so finely perceptive that the labour is much diminished. I have got together in a very short space the conclusion of "Oliver Twist" that you suggested, and am trying it daily with the object of rising from that blank state of horror into a fierce and passionate rush for the end. As yet I cannot make a certain effect of it; but when I shall have gone over it as many score of times[†1] as over the rest of that reading, perhaps I may strike one out.

I shall be very glad to hear when you have done your play,[†2] and I am glad to hear that you like the steamer. I agree with you about the reading perfectly. In No. 3 you will see an exact account of some places I visited at Ratcliffe. There are two little instances in it of something comic rising up in the midst of the direst misery, that struck me very humorously at the time.

As I have determined not to do the "Oliver Murder" until after the 5th of January, when I shall ascertain its effect on a great audience, it is curious to notice how the shadow of its coming affects the Scotch mind. There was such a disposition to hold back for it here (until I return to finish in February) that we had next to no "let" when we arrived. It all came with a rush yesterday. They gave me a most magnificent welcome back from America last night.

I am perpetually counting the weeks before me to be "read" through,[†3] and am perpetually longing for the end of them; and yet I sometimes wonder whether I shall miss something when they are over.

It is a very, very bad day here, very dark and very wet. Dolby is over at Glasgow, and I am sitting at a side window looking up the length of Prince's Street, watching the mist change over the Castle and murdering Nancy by turns.

Ever affectionately
[CHARLES DICKENS]

P.S.—I have read the whole of Fitzgerald's "Zero,"[†4] and the idea is exceedingly well wrought out.

To THOMAS ADOLPHUS TROLLOPE, 8 DECEMBER 1868

MS Berg Collection. Address: T. A. Trollope Esq. | Villino Trollope | Florence | Italy.

Kennedy's Hotel, Edinburgh
Tuesday Eighth December 1868

My Dear Trollope.

I am reading here, and had your letter forwarded to me this morning. The MS accompanying it was stopped at All The Year Round office (in compliance with general instructions referring to any MS from you), and was sent straight to the printer's.[†1]

—O dear no! Nobody supposes for a moment that the English Church will follow the Irish establishment. In the whole great universe of shammery and flummery there is no such idea floating. Everybody knows that the Church of England as an endowed establishment is doomed—and would be, even if its hand were not perpetually hacking at its own throat—but, as was observed of an old lady in gloves, in one of my Christmas Books, "Let us be polite, or die!"[†2]

Anthony's[†3] ambition[†4] is inscrutable to me. Still it is the ambition of many men; and the honester the man who entertains it, the better for the rest of us, I suppose.

Ever My Dear Trollope | Most Cordially Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To W.H. WILLS, 8 DECEMBER 1868

Extract in N, III, 682.

Kennedy's Hotel, Edinburgh | [Eighth] December 1868

A great practical question in connection with Miss Chilton's[†5] story[†6] is its length. Ask Birtles to cast it off and let me know what it will make in the smaller type.[†7] I send you by this same post a Scotsman with an account of our opening here last night.[†8]

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 9 DECEMBER 1868*

MS Huntington Library.

Carrick's Royal Hotel, Glasgow
Wednesday Ninth Decr. 1868

My Dear Ouvry

Quarterly cheque enclosed. Made payable to your order. My address until next Tuesday is Kennedy's Hotel Edinburgh. Then here again for 3 days.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To ALEXANDER RUSSEL,[†1] [9 DECEMBER 1868]†

MS George Bayntun, Bath. Date: undated but clearly 9 Dec, the only night he stayed in Glasgow before the dinner on 12 Dec.

Carrick's Royal Hotel, Glasgow

My dear Sir

Departing from my enforced rule of never having any social enjoyment while I am "reading", I have asked Peter Fraser[†2] and Ballantine[†3] to dine with me in Edinburgh on Saturday next at 6. And perhaps John Blackwood[†4] will come also. If I should be so fortunate as to find you disengaged, it would afford me the greatest pleasure if you would join us.[†5] [†a] No ceremony whatever, and no evening dress.[†a]

I shall be in Edinburgh again tomorrow evening; but I write from here, in order that I may have the better chance of laying friendly hands upon you.

Believe me | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Dr. Russell[†6]

To AUSTEN HENRY LAYARD, 10 DECEMBER 1868

MS British Library

Kennedy's Hotel, Edinburgh
Thursday Tenth December 1868

My Dear Layard

I am reading on this side of the Tweed and had the pleasure of receiving your welcome letter at Glasgow this morning. From the day of D'Israeli's resignation[†7] I have been closely following Gladstone's arrangements,[†8] through the newspapers, in anxious pursuit of your name; for indeed you have no friend more earnestly interested in you than I am. It gives me inexpressible satisfaction to have the news of your acceptance of your office[†9] confirmed under your own hand. I most heartily congratulate you, and have not a doubt that you have done well.

Pray come to us in time for dinner on Christmas Eve the 24th. I am not likely to get to Gad's myself before that day.

Faithfully Yours ever
CHARLES DICKENS

To J. R. OSGOOD, 10 DECEMBER 1868

MS Houghton Library, Harvard. Address: By Cunard Mail | Personal | James Ripley Osgood Esquire | Messrs. Fields Osgood & Co. | Tremont Street | Boston | U.S of America.

Edinburgh, Thursday Tenth December | 1868

My Dear Osgood

I am not easily astonished—few men are, I suppose, who have seen much of the world—but I WAS (in the largest capitals) astonished when I received your angry letter! You will hear, by this same mail, from Dolby that he has written to you twice; that he, in his turn, has been amazed by your vouchsafing him no reply; that we have talked the matter over, often; but that we have not been out of temper about it, remembering affectionately our old travelling friend.[†1]

For myself. I at once confess that I have not written to you, and that I have so far been remiss. But executing your commission in the matter of the wine, immediately, and sending you—as I did—explanatory messages and remembrances by Dolby, I laid down a piece of infernal pavement,[†2] and have promenaded on it ever since. From the time of my return home until this hour, Wills has been unable to do a stroke of work; the whole business of the Journal has fallen upon me; arrears of all kinds have pressed heavily upon me, after half a year's absence; and I have cropped my correspondence as close as an English convict's hair. But I don't think that I have ever been unmindful of you, or ungrateful to you. The remembrance of your ever ready interest and zeal, and of your cheery companionship in scorching railway cars and eccentric hotels, is never to be so lightly dealt with on my side.

We are reading all over the United Kingdom, to make an end of it, and are living the life that you know so well. Dolby is any large number of feet in circumference that you like to picture to yourself, but for some minutes after I gave him your letter to read, collapsed and became THIN.[†3] Scott, entering the room while he was in this frightful condition, became (through fear) much more jagged in the nose than you remember him, and will carry that deteriorated feature to the grave—or will have it carried there for him—which is on the whole more likely.

Come to England to have a fight for the Championship[†4] with Frederick Chapman, and I will back you to any extent, and train you at Gad's Hill. Meantime think of the unlucky Dolby and me, as the babes in the wood, and of the International Post Office as the cruel uncle.

Childs, and Mrs. Childs, and Mrs. Peterson,[†5] and the Doctor[†6] (without a wish ungratified, but without his library) have all been at the Langham Hotel, and are now in foreign parts.[†1] Childs, after a long interval of speechlessness, expressed his conviction at Gad's Hill that you were one of the model men of our[†2] country.

Believe me My Dear Osgood | Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To JAMES BIRTLES, [11 DECEMBER 1868]

Envelope only, MS British Museum. Address: Mr. James Birtles | Beaufort House | Beaufort Buildings | Strand | London | W.C. PM Edinburgh 11 Dec 68.

To DR CHARLES MACKAY, 11 DECEMBER 1868*

MS Berg Collection.

Kennedy's Hotel, Edinburgh
Friday Eleventh December 1868

My Dear Mackay

You may be sure that you should not have to ask me to do that thing, twice, if it were reasonably possible to do it. But we have already three running headings:

Wrecked in Port
As The Crow Flies
Fatal Zero

(not to mention New Uncommercial Samples).[†3]

To add another,[†4] really would be to injure the journal gravely.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To MESSRS CAPE & HARRIS, [12] DECEMBER 1868†

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Date: misdated by CD; Saturday was 12 Dec.

Kennedy's Hotel, Edinburgh
Saturday Eleventh December, 1868

Messrs. Cape and Harris Gentlemen

†a Please to receive this letter as my undertaking to pay your charges in the matter of my son's bankruptcy.†a†5 I shall be at this address until next Saturday inclusive, and during Christmas at my own house as above.†6 On being informed by you of the amount in which I am indebted to you, I will forward you a cheque on my bankers.†1

Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

To THE HON. MRS CLIFFORD,†2 12 DECEMBER 1868*

MS Private.

Kennedy's Hotel, Edinburgh
Saturday Twelfth December, 1868

My Dear Madam

I have had your MS†3 forwarded to me, and have very great pleasure in retaining it for insertion in All The Year Round. It has interested and charmed me in the perusal; and I venture to remark that I think you may—if you will— take Mrs. Gaskell's†4 place in literature.†5

As The Brown paper parcel must be divided into smaller parcels, and as I have already two serial stories in progress together in All The Year Round, a little time must elapse before I can make room for this tale.†6 But you may rely on my clearing the way as quickly as possible, and on my desire to give the brown paper parcel the best opportunities at my disposal.

I notice several points where a little curtailment will, so far from injuring any points of character, set them off and make them more effective. That you may judge of this the better, I will send you a proof for your corrections, with my suggested omissions marked in ink. It did not occur to me until it was too late, to take this course with the Abbot's Pool. But if you had so followed the text, I think you would have observed that your story gained in force.

I am reading here, and shall remain here until next Saturday inclusive. Let me close this note by saying that I shall henceforth be strongly prepossessed in favor of any contributions you may entrust to me.

Believe me Dear Madam | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Hon. Mrs. Clifford

To F. D. FINLAY, 12 DECEMBER 1868

MS Comtesse de Suzannet.

Kennedy's Hotel, Edinburgh
Saturday Twelfth December, 1868

My Dear Finlay

The only day on which I shall be at leisure to dine with you in the course of my swift Irish trip, will be Saturday January 16th. I let you know this, as soon as Dolby lets me know it.

I shall be here until this day week, inclusive. Tell Mrs. Finlay (with as much love as I may venture to send her) that Dr. Russell[†1] dines with me to day along with Peter Fraser, Ballantine, and John Blackwood; the extreme rigor of the Spartan law being relaxed for this special occasion.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To PERCY FITZGERALD, 12 DECEMBER 1868

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Kennedy's Hotel, Edinburgh
Saturday Twelfth December 1868

My Dear Fitzgerald

I do not quite understand from your kind note (forwarded here this morning) whether Sir Bernard Burke[†2] proposes to write those papers, or whether he suggests them to you.[†3] In either case I shall be delighted to have them for All the Year Round. It is necessary that they should appear under separate headings, each with its own title, as we have already three running titles.

Fatal Zero is going on famously, and I think will make a hit. I had a letter from Wilkie Collins yesterday, much interested in perceiving your idea and in following your working of it out.

We purpose being in Dublin on Thursday 7th. January, and going on to Belfast that afternoon.[†4] I hope we shall find you in readiness to go along with us. We are working away, here and at Glasgow, but must be in London on the 22nd. for a Christmas Reading of the Carol there.

"We" means Dolby and I. He sends you his kindest regard.

Ever My Dear Fitzgerald | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [12 DECEMBER 1868]

Extract in F, XI, i, 800*n*. Date: from Edinburgh, 12 Dec, according to Forster.

I think I shall be pretty correct in both places as to the run being on the Final readings. †a We had an immense house here last night, and a very large turnaway. But Glasgow being shady†1 and the charges very great, it will be the most we can do, I fancy, on these first Scotch readings, to bring the Chappells safely home (as to them) without loss.†a†2

To GEORGINA HOGARTH, 12 DECEMBER 1868†

MS Huntington Library.

Kennedy's Hotel, Edinburgh
Saturday Twelfth December 1868

My Dearest Georgy

I send another Scotsman†3 by this post, because it is really a good newspaper: well written, and well managed. We had an immense house here last night, and a very large turn-away.†a But Glasgow being shady, and the charges very great, it will be the most we can do, I fancy, on these first Scotch Readings, to bring the Chappells safely home (as to them) without loss.†a

We have four guests to dinner today! Peter Fraser, Ballantine, John Blackwood, and Doctor†4 Russell. Immense preparations are making in the establishment, "on accounts", Mr. Kennedy†5 says, "of a' four yon chiels being chiels wha' ken a guid dinner."—I enquired after poor Doctor Birt,†6 not having the least idea that he was dead.

My voice holds out splendidly, so far, and I have had no return of the American.†7 But I sleep very indifferently indeed.

†b This is my utmost news. I had your enclosures from Gad's this morning, and your letter. Tell Harry that as he mentioned the end of December as the time when he would want his balance, I have not remitted it. If he should want it before the 22nd. let him write me a line and tell me for what amount I am to draw the cheque; and he shall have it by return. He asked me in his last from Cambridge if I knew Elwin?†8 You can answer that question.

I hear of nothing but fortifications of the House of Dolby against scarlet fever, and of the wisdom and foresight of Marian†9—with which she herself seems much impressed, I should say. It struck me last night that the sum returned as taken, was not as large as it should be, and we sat up late correcting the accounts. They show me plainly enough that when I was here with that worthy Jackass Headland,†1 I was robbed to any extent. We make out only £6 stopped upon the way last night; but Dolby, figures in hand, is now making as heavy a descent on all concerned, as though the Six were Sixty, wherein he is indubitably right.†b It blew appallingly here the night before last, but the wind has since shifted northward, and it is now bright and cold. The Star of Hope that picked up those shipwrecked people in the boat, came into Leith yesterday, and was received with tremendous cheers.†2 Her captain†3 must be a good man and a noble fellow.

†b My love to Mary, if she be at home. I am glad to hear of the Sick list getting better, though they do drink the port wine.

Ever My Dearest Georgy | Your most affectionate

CD.†b

To ARTHUR RYLAND,†4 12 DECEMBER 1868*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Kennedy's Hotel, Edinburgh
Saturday Twelfth December 1868

My Dear Mr. Ryland

I had almost made up my mind that, having got well through my Readings for good and all, I would hold no such office as that referred to in your kind letter.†5 But I am not proof against my old association with your Institution, and my old strong regard for the Birmingham people. Therefore I freely place myself at your—and the Committee's—disposal.

Believe me always | Very faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Arthur Ryland Esquire

To JOHN FORSTER, [?14 DECEMBER 1868]

Extract in F, XI, i, 800-1. Date: from Edinburgh, according to Forster, probably same date as To Miss Hogarth, 14 Dec.†6

The keeper of the Edinburgh hall, a fine old soldier presented me on Friday night with the most superb red camellia for my buttonhole that ever was seen. Nobody can imagine how he came by it, as the florists had had a considerable demand for that colour, from ladies in the stalls, and could get no such thing.

To GEORGINA HOGARTH, 14 DECEMBER 1868†

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Kennedy's Hotel, Edinburgh
Monday Fourteenth Decr. 1868

My Dearest Georgy

†a I am very sorry to hear such bad tidings of that unfortunate mouth of yours. It is, in the main, some remainder (I think) of that severe influenza, or catarrh, or what not, that has so long troubled you. I would by all means go to Cartwright as soon as the swelling subsides. Also I would see Frank Beard and try quinine, or a new tonic that they give now to people who cannot take quinine.†a

The dinner party of Saturday last†1 was an immense success. Russel†2 swore on the occasion that he would go over to Belfast, expressly to dine with me at the Finlays. Ballantine informed me that he was going to send you some Scotch remembrance (I don't know what) at Christmas!

The Edinburgh houses are very fine; †a but Glasgow limps dismally behind, and will certainly destroy the profit of the first Scotch trip, as far as the Chappells are concerned.†a The Glasgow room is a big wandering place, with five prices in it: which makes it the more aggravating, as the people get into knots which they can't break—as if they are afraid of one another.

†b Forgery of my name is becoming popular. You sent me this morning a letter from Russell Sturgis,†3 answering a supposed letter of mine (presented by "Miss Jefferies")†4 and assuring me of his readiness to give, not only the Ten Pounds I asked for, but any contribution I wanted, towards sending that lady and her family back to Boston!!†5

I wish you would take an opportunity of forewarning Lady Tennent that the first night's reading she will attend is an experiment quite out of the way, and that she may find it rather horrible.†b†6

†a As to the Cook's tickets, Dolby can only ask Chappell to send them to Gads. He has exactly as many St. James's Hall tickets here, as he has autographs of the Emperor of China; and it is clear that the Chappells do not encourage him to ask for any.†a

†b The Keeper†7 of the Edinburgh Hall, a fine old soldier, presented me on Friday night with the finest red camelia for my buttonhole, that ever was seen. Nobody can imagine how he came by it, as the Florists had had a considerable demand for that colour—from ladies in the stalls—and could get no such thing.

The day is dark, wet, and windy. The weather is likely to be vile indeed at Glasgow, where it always rains, and where the sun is never seen through the smoke. We go over there, tomorrow at 10.†b

†a Best love to Mamie | Ever My Dearest Georgy | affectionately

CD.†a

To JAMES PAYN,†1 [6-14 DECEMBER 1868]

Extract in James Payn, Some Literary Recollections, 1884, p. 178. Date: from Edinburgh during CD's visit in 1868 (6-14 Dec, with a short break in Glasgow).

Lancaster†2 is the most able fellow I have met in these parts.

To MESSRS SKINNER & CO., [6-14 DECEMBER 1868]

Envelope only, MS Fales Collection, New York Public Library. Address: Messrs Skinner & Co. | Tailors | 50 Jermyn Street | London | W. PM Edinburgh De [rest illegible]. Date: He was in Edinburgh (with a short break in Glasgow) 6-14 Dec 68.

To RUSSELL STURGIS, 14 DECEMBER 1868

Text from MDGH, 111, 267.

Kennedy's Hotel, Edinburgh
Monday Fourteenth December, 1868

My Dear Mr Russell Sturgis,

I am "reading" here, and shall be through this week. Consequently I am only this morning in receipt of your kind note of the 10th, forwarded from my own house.

Believe me I am as much obliged to you for your generous and ready response to my supposed letter as I should have been if I had really written it. But I know nothing whatever of it or of "Miss Jeffries," except that I have a faint impression of having recently noticed that name among my begging-letter correspondents, and of having associated it in my mind with a regular professional hand. Your caution has, I hope, disappointed this swindler. But my testimony is at your service if you should need it, and I would take any opportunity of bringing one of those vagabonds to punishment; for they are, one and all, the most heartless and worthless vagabonds on the face of the earth.

Believe me, faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To MISS MARY DICKENS, 15 DECEMBER 1868

Extract in MDGH, 11, 399.

Carrick's Royal Hotel, Glasgow
Tuesday Fifteenth December 1868

It occurs to me that my table at St. James's Hall might be appropriately ornamented with a little holly next Tuesday. If the two front legs were entwined with it, for instance, and a border of it ran round the top of the fringe in front, with a little sprig by way of bouquet at each corner, it would present a seasonable appearance.

If you will think of this, and will have the materials ready in a little basket, I will call for you at the office at half-past twelve on Tuesday, and take you up to the hall, where the table will be ready for you.

No news, except that we had a great crush and a wonderful audience in Edinburgh last night.[†1]

To JOHN HOLLINGSHEAD,[†2] 15 DECEMBER 1868

Text from John Hollingshead, Gaiety Chronicles, 1898.

Carrick's Royal Hotel, Glasgow
Tuesday Fifteenth December 1868

My dear Hollingshead,

I send you many thanks for your kind remembrance of me. But as I do not leave Scotland until Sunday morning, and have to make a visit on my way home,[†3] I cannot be in town in sufficient time to accept the box you place at my disposal.[†4] I hasten therefore to return it.

With all good wishes,
Believe me, faithfully yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Hollingshead, Esq.

To THOMAS BEARD, [16 DECEMBER 1868]

Envelope only, MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard. Date: 16 Dec 1868 added in another hand. Signed by CD.

To MR and MRS J. T. FIELDS, 16 DECEMBER 1868†

MS Huntington Library.

Glasgow,
Wednesday Sixteenth December 1868

My Dear Fields and Mrs. Fields

[†a] Having just received, in Scotland here, your last two letters (Fields's at Edinburgh, and Mrs. Fields's here this morning) I devote a little leisure to the very acceptable duty of achieving a reply to both.[†a†1] And first, as you are curious about the Oliver Murder, I will tell you about that trial of the same at which you ought to have assisted. There were about a hundred people present in all. I have changed my stage. Besides that back-screen which you know so well, there are two large screens of the same color, set off, one on either side, like the "wings" at a Theatre. And besides those again, we have a quantity of curtains of the same color, with which to close in any width of room from wall to wall.[†2] Consequently the figure is now completely isolated, and the slightest action becomes much more important. This was used for the first time on the occasion. But behind the stage—the orchestra being very large and built for the accommodation of a numerous chorus—there was ready, on the level of the platform a very long table, beautifully lighted, with a large staff of men ready to open oysters, and set champagne corks flying. Directly I had done the screens being whisked off by my people, there was disclosed one of the prettiest banquets you can imagine; and when all the people came up, and the gay dresses of the ladies were lighted by those powerful lights of mine, the scene was exquisitely pretty; the hall being newly decorated, and very elegantly; and the whole looking like a great bed of flowers and diamonds.

Now, you must know that all this company were, before the wine went round, unmistakeably pale, and had horror-stricken faces. Next morning, Harness (Fields knows—Reverend William[†3]—did an Edition of Shakespeare—old friend of the Kembles and Mrs. Siddons)[†4] writing to me about it, and saying it was "a most amazing and terrific thing", added, "but I am bound to tell you that I had an almost irresistible impulse upon me to scream, and that, if any one had cried out, I am certain I should have followed." He had no idea that on the night, Priestley[†5] the great ladies' Doctor, had taken me aside and said, "My dear Dickens you may rely upon it that if only one woman cries out when you murder the girl, there will be a contagion of hysteria all over this place." It is impossible to soften it without spoiling it, and you may suppose that I am rather anxious to discover how it goes on the 5th. of January!!! We are afraid to announce it elsewhere without knowing—except that I have thought it pretty safe to put it up once in Dublin. I asked Mrs. Keeley the famous actress, who was at the experiment: "What do you say? Do it, or not?"—"Why, of course do it", she replied. "Having got at such an effect as that, it must be done. But"—rolling her large black eyes very slowly, and speaking very distinctly; "the public have been looking out for a sensation these last fifty years or so—and by Heaven they have got it!" With which words, and a long breath and a long stare, she became speechless.—Again you may suppose that I am a little anxious! [†a] I had previously tried it, merely sitting over the fire in a chair, upon two ladies separately, one of whom was Georgina.[†1] They had both said—"O good Gracious if you are going to do that, it ought to be seen; but it's awful." So once again you may suppose I am a little anxious!

I have no domestic news. Charles Collins continues in the same state, and his pretty young wife's life is indeed a weary one. They come from London upon Christmas Eve, and Harry from Cambridge, and Charley and his wife and a child or two from wheresoever they are, and Layard from the new Government, and Chorley from travelling, and Marcus Stone[†2] from painting, and that is our Christmas party. I stop in London on Tuesday the 22nd, on my way from Scotland to Gad's; for a Christmas Reading of the Carol. I have told Mary to go to St. James's Hall, and ornament my table with Holly. She writes back that "she will do her best, but she knows I won't like it, after all I have said about Mrs. Fields's flowers."[†a]

Not a day passes, but Dolby and I talk about you both, and recall where we were at the corresponding time of last year. My old likening of Boston to Edinburgh has been constantly revived within these last 10 days. There is a certain remarkable similarity of tone between the two places. The audiences are curiously alike, except that the Edinburgh audience has a quicker sense of humour and is a little more genial. No disparagement to Boston in this, because I consider an Edinburgh audience perfect.

I trust my dear Eugenius that you have recognized yourself in a certain Uncommercial, and also some small reference to a name rather dear to you?[†3] As an instance of how strangely something comic springs up in the midst of the direst misery, look to a succeeding Uncommercial, called "A small star in the East"[†4]—published to day, by the bye. I have described, with exactness, the poor places into which I went, and how the people behaved, and what they said. I was wretched, looking on; and yet the Boiler Maker and the poor man with the legs,[†1] filled me with a sense of drollery not to be kept down by any pressure.

The atmosphere of this place, compounded of mists from the Highlands and smoke from the town factories, is crushing my eyebrows as I write, and it rains as it never does rain anywhere else, and always does rain here. It is a dreadful place, though much improved and possessing a deal of public spirit. Improvement is beginning to knock the old town of Edinburgh about, here and there, but the Canongate and the most picturesque of the horrible Courts and Wynds are not to be easily spoiled—or made fit for the poor wretches who people them, to live in. Edinburgh is so changed as to its notabilities, that I had the only three men left of the Wilson[†2] and Jeffrey[†3] time, to dine with me there, last Saturday. [†a] What they did in the way of whiskey Toddy after dinner, I am afraid to recount in cold blood.—Would you think from 9 to 12 tumblers apiece, much?

I read here to night and tomorrow, go back to Edinburgh on Friday morning, read there on Saturday morning, and start Southward by the mail that same night. After the great experiment of the 5th.—that is to say on the morning of the 6th.—we are off for Belfast and Dublin. On every alternate Tuesday I am due in London, from wheresoever I may be, to read in St. James's Hall.[†a]

I think you will find "Fatal Zero"[†4] (by Percy Fitzgerald) a very curious analysis of a mind, as the story advances. A new beginner in A. Y. R (Hon. Mrs. Clifford—Kinglake's[†5] sister)[†6] who wrote a story in the series just finished, called The Abbot's Pool has just sent me another story. I have a strong impression that, with care, she will step into Mrs. Gaskell's vacant place. Wills is no better, and I have work enough even in that direction.

God bless the woman with the black mittens,[†7] for making me laugh so this morning! I take her to be a kind of public-spirited Mrs. Sparsit,[†8] and as such take her to my bosom. God bless you both, my dear friends, in this Christmas and New Year time, and in all times, seasons, and places—and send you to Gad's Hill with the next flowers!

Ever Your most affectionate

CD

To JOHN FORSTER, [?16 DECEMBER 1868]

Extract in F, XI, iii, 825. Date: Fatal Zero had begun in AYR on 5 Dec 68; CD described it in very similar words to Mr and Mrs Fields on 16 Dec; probably written same day.

I think you will find Fatal Zero a very curious bit of mental development, deepening as the story goes on into a picture not more startling than true.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 16 DECEMBER 1868†

MS Huntington Library.

Carrick's Royal Hotel, Glasgow.
Wednesday Sixteenth December 1868.

My Dearest Georgy

This is to report all well, except that I have wretched nights. The weather is diabolical here, and times are very bad—though we had a hundred and thirty pounds last night, to our surprise. I cut Copperfield with a bold dexterity that amazed myself and utterly confounded George at the wing; knocking off that, and Bob,[†1] by 10 minutes to 10.

[†a] You sent me a letter from Mrs. Fields this morning with the following good picture in it.

"There has been a Convocation here lately, for the Suffrage of Women.[†2] Mrs. Julia Ward Howe[†3] was chosen President, and bewildering speeches followed one another during two whole days, and a part of two nights. One woman, "Chaplain of a Michigan regiment", tall, in a hat, with a black veil fastened over her features, and in black mittens, made a vigorous address."

I have ordered for Gad's, a Scotch bun[†4] weighing 14 pounds, 6 sheets of shortbread, and some Sweeties. The dinner was a tremendous success, but they did go in at the Whiskey, Good Heaven! Russel[†5] was the worse for it, but nobody else. (On second thoughts, I believe I had already reported of the dinner.)[†a]

I don't know anything about the Liverpool banquet, except from the Times.[†6] As I don't finish there in February (as they seem to have supposed), but in April, it may perhaps stand over, or blow over altogether. Such a thing would be a serious addition to the work, and yet refusal on my part would be too ungracious.

The density and darkness of this atmosphere are fearful. I shall be heartily glad to start for Edinburgh again, on Friday morning.

Mrs. Dolby cheerful (!) when last heard of | Best love
Ever most affectionately
CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?18 DECEMBER 1868]

Extract in F, XI, i, 800-1. Date: from Edinburgh, according to Forster, probably same date as To Miss Hogarth, 18 Dec.

The affectionate regard of the people exceeds all bounds and is shown in every way. The audiences do everything but embrace me, and take as much pains with the readings as I do.[†1]

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 18 DECEMBER 1868†

MS Huntington Library.

Kennedy's Hotel, Edinburgh
Friday Eighteenth December, 1868

My Dearest Georgy

†a I enclose the cheque for the wages.†2

Do understand about Dolby and tickets, that the Chappells have requested him never to write an order for St. James's Hall on any account.†3 We say nothing about it, because he is sensitive on the point; but it is perfectly clear that while their people have to calculate every place in the house, the discharge of their business would become impossible if places were anticipated.†a

I am heartily glad to get back here this afternoon. The day is bright and cheerful, and the relief from Glasgow inexpressible. †b The affectionate regard of the people exceeds all bounds, and is shown in every way.†b The Manager of the Railway being at the Reading the other night wrote to me next morning saying that a large Saloon should be prepared for my journey up, if I would let him know when I purposed making the journey. On my accepting the offer he wrote again, saying that he had inspected "our Northern saloons", and not finding them so convenient for sleeping in as the best English, had sent up to King's Cross for the best of the latter: which I would please consider my own carriage, as long as I wanted it. †b The audiences do everything but embrace me, and take as much pains with the Readings as I do.†b

I find your Christmas Present (just arrived) to be a Haggis, and short-bread!

†a We have come out of Glasgow very well after all. The expences at this distance are £160 a night!

Best love | Ever affectionately

CD.†a

To RUSSELL STURGIS, 18 DECEMBER 1868

Text from MDGH, III, 272.

Kennedy's Hotel, Edinburgh,
Friday, 18th December, 1868.

My Dear Mr Russell Sturgis,

I return you the forged letter, and devoutly wish that I had to flog the writer in virtue of a legal sentence. I most cordially reciprocate your kind expressions in reference to our future intercourse, and shall hope to remind you of them five or six months hence, when my present labours shall have gone the way of all other earthly things. It was particularly interesting to me when I was last at Boston to recognise poor dear Felton's unaffected and genial ways in his eldest daughter, and to notice how, in tender remembrance of him, she is, as it were, Cambridge's daughter.

Believe me always, faithfully yours.

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 21 DECEMBER 1868*

MS Messrs Pattinson & Brewer.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Twenty First December 1868

Dear Sirs

In reply to your obliging letter of yesterday, I beg to let you know that the last hurdles supplied to me at Gad's Hill are already fixed

Faithfully yrs
CHARLES DICKENS.

To JOHN FORSTER, 22 DECEMBER 1868

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Twenty Second December 1868

My Dear Forster

I arrive here only this morning, and find your sad letter. But I had seen the Times on my way here, and was consequently prepared for its contents.[†1] I cannot help adding that my first emotion, after the shock of the surprise was over, was one of thankfulness that your poor sister was spared a prolonged term of hopeless suffering. In talking with Georgina the night before I left for Scotland, we had recalled Mrs. Warner,[†2] and had said If it could only be soon, what a mercy it would be for her!

That Mrs. Forster should be quite worn out, I can readily believe. But she is such a good kind gentle creature, and has done so much out of her loving heart, that she has within herself a sustaining remembrance above all price or approach from without.

I hope to God you will not let this blow so fall upon you as to give your illness a chance it ought not to have, when it seems to be turning in a better direction. It is hard to close up the ranks and march on, but it must be done.

I have the necessary notice for Thursday, and of course shall be with you.

Ever Most affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

To THE MAYOR OF LIVERPOOL,[†1] 22 DECEMBER 1868

MS Liverpool Reference Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Tuesday Twenty Second December | 1868

Dear Sir

On arriving at home from Scotland, I have the honor and pleasure of receiving your letter, of the eleventh of this month, enclosing a copy of the Resolution passed at a Meeting held under your presidency in the Council Chamber of Liverpool on the same day.[†2]

I beg to assure you that I am deeply sensible of the worth of the compliment so handsomely proposed to be rendered to me, and that I readily and gratefully accept it.

My final readings in Liverpool are appointed for the evenings of Monday the 5th of April, Tuesday the 6th., Thursday the 8th., and Friday the 9th. I take the liberty of remarking that Wednesday the 7th. of April or Saturday the 10th. (but especially the latter) are days on which I am free to accept the hospitality of the Town Council.[†3]

With many thanks, I am Dear Sir
Your faithful and obliged
CHARLES DICKENS

His Honor | The Mayor of Liverpool

To MRS LIPPINCOTT, 24 DECEMBER 1868

Extract in obituary article in undated New York Tribune from Massachusetts Historical Society. Date: Christmas Eve, 1868. Address (envelope only, MS Free Library of Philadelphia): By Cunard Mail | Mrs Lippincott | 570 New Jersey Avenue | Washington | D.C. | U.S. of America. PM London 24 Dec 68.

I rather doubt "The Poor Indian" as a subject of interest to the public. The wretched creature must pass away. When he comes to the point of stopping steam and scalping engineers, he must be remitted to that "equal sky"[†4] where there are no such relaxations.

To THOMAS ADOLPHUS TROLLOPE, 24 DECEMBER 1868

Extract in Ximenes Rare Books Inc., Occasional List No. 57 (1981); MS 1 p. Address (envelope, MS Berg Collection): T. A. Trollope Esqre. | Villino Trollope | Florence. PM London W. C. 24 Nov 1868.

Saying that his [TAT's] corrections for an article in his magazine have arrived too late, as the number is now in the foundry for stereotyping. Reassuring him however that he himself caught some errors in proof, and adding that he has given the article a new name, The Last Ash of a Holy Fire.[†1] Concluding with remarks about giving money to the wife of the lost boilermaker.[†2]

To LADY MOLESWORTH, 25 DECEMBER 1868

MS Comtesse de Suzannet.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Christmas Day, 1868

My Dear Lady Molesworth

We all join in wishing you all the good wishes of the season. I am sorry to add that our poor Chorley is not here. He writes from Paris, where he lies in bed. He does not think he is in any danger, but his expression is that he is "completely prostrated". He was to have come here yesterday, and then we had a note written from Paris by his servant, at his dictation, and signed by himself. To day I have another note, which is wholly written by himself. He seems cheerful, but must be really disabled for the time, or he would indubitably be here, as he always is at Christmas.

I am just home from Scotland, and go next to Ireland. My "Farewell Readings" will keep me hard at work and always on the wing until the end of May. Every alternate Tuesday I am to read in London, but am merely brought up to town for that purpose, and instantly carried off again. As I have to keep "All The Year Round" going, wherever I am, you may suppose that my hands are pretty full.—My house is full too, for this week and next, or I should have been delighted to dine with you on the 29th. Very likely I shall not be here again for four months.

The other night I went into the new theatre in Long Acre,[†3] and saw the prettiest piece of acting I have seen for a long time. It is Burlesque acting (I am sorry to add) but quite original, and singularly graceful and pleasant. Miss Hodson[†4] as Mrs. Haller, in a burlesque on the Stranger.[†5] She is most charmingly dressed as a Quakeress, dances with a modest piquancy that has a peculiar refinement in it, and, in captivating the Count, allows a coquettishness to sparkle out of her quaint quiet dress that is quite captivating.

Ever affectionately Yours
(And ever faithfully your co-old-stager)
CD

To J. C. PARKINSON, 25 DECEMBER 1868

MS Chas. J. Sawyer.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Christmas Day, 1868.

My Dear Parkinson

When your letter was delivered at "All the Year Round" Office yesterday, I was attending a Funeral.[†1] It comes to hand here consequently to day.

I am diffident of addressing Mr. Gladstone on the subject of your desire to be appointed to the vacant Commissionership of Inland Revenue, because, although my respect for him and confidence in him are second to those of no man in England (a bold word at this time, but a truthful one), my personal acquaintance with him is very slight. But you may make, through any of your friends, any use you please of this letter, towards the end of bringing its contents under Mr. Gladstone's notice.

In expressing my conviction that you deserve the place, and are in every way qualified for it, I found my testimony upon as accurate a knowledge of your character and abilities as any one can possibly have acquired. In my editorship— both of Household Words and All the Year Round,[†2] you know very well that I have invariably offered you those subjects of political and social interest to write upon, in which integrity, exactness, a remarkable power of generalizing evidence, and balancing facts, and a special clearness in stating the case, were indispensable on the part of the writer. My confidence in your powers has never been misplaced, and through all our literary intercourse you have never been hasty or wrong. Whatever trust you have undertaken has been so completely discharged, that it has become my habit to read your proofs rather for my own edification, than (as in other cases) for the detection of some slip here or there, or the more pithy presentation of the subject.

That your literary work has never interfered with the discharge of your official duties,[†3] I may assume to be at least as well known to your colleagues as it is to me. It is idle to say that if the post were in my gift you should have it, because you have had, for some years, most of the posts of high trust that have been at my disposal. An excellent public servant in your literary sphere of action, I should be heartily glad if you could have this new opportunity of distinguishing yourself in the same character. And this is at least unselfish in me, for I suppose I should then lose you?

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS[†1]

J. C. Parkinson Esquire

To JOSEPH SLY,[†2] 25 DECEMBER 1868

MS Public Library & Museum, Lancaster. Address: Mr. Sly | King's Arms Hotel | Lancaster.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Christmas Day, 1868

Dear Mr. Sly.

Your bounteously filled box[†3] has arrived here safely to day, with its contents in the best condition. Accept my cordial thanks and all good wishes of the season, both for yourself and those around you, and for the rare old house in Lancaster.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To GEORGE DOLBY, 26 DECEMBER 1868

Ms Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Saturday Twenty Sixth December 1868

My Dear Dolby

All good seasonable wishes to you and yours from all of us; and specially my love to Mrs. Dolby, the children, your sister, and Sainton.

I don't know whether you may deem it worth while to answer the enclosed letter from Preston;[†4] but anyhow, I send it.

Miss Hogarth so clearly wants a change, that I think I will take her to Ireland along with the Caravan, as she is a good sailor.

Ever Faithfully
CD

Commencing a course of "Oliver"[†5] to day, I so terrified Layard—in the front spare room with an official red morocco box of papers—that he came plunging out on the staircase to ascertain what had happened.

To THE VERY REV. THE DEAN OF BRISTOL,[†1] 26 DECEMBER 1868

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, Dec 1995; MS 2 pp.; dated Gad's Hill Place, 26 Dec 68; addressed The Dean of Bristol.

Acknowledges receipt of the book about the Dean's father[†2] ... full of bright pictures of society and nature and containing some excellent specimens of letter writing.[†3] Had invitation from Lady Russell but the insatiable "Readings" yawn for the whole of January and February as well as for March, April and May ... I have a wild fancy that I shall sometimes try to be idle afterwards, but it is one of the many things I have never been able to do yet. Refers to Layard and his ferocious designs in connexion with Public Works,[†4] alluding to the chances the Government now has.[†5]

To MISS MARGARET ELLIOT,[†6] 26 DECEMBER 1868

Extract and envelope in Sotheby's catalogue, Dec 1995; MS 1 p.; dated 6 Southwick Place (on Gad's Hill paper), 26 Dec 68. Address: Miss Elliot | 6 Grosvenor Crescent | Belgrave Square.[†7]

He is unable to accept their invitation because he is not well and has a birthday engagement for Saturday.

To THE COUNTESS RUSSELL,[†8] 26 DECEMBER 1868

Extract in Desmond MacCarthy and Agatha Russell, Lady John Russell, 1910, p. 218

GAD'S HILL PLACE | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER | KENT
Saturday, December 26, 1868

My Dear Lady Russell,

. . . . I cannot tell you how highly I esteem your kind Christmas remembrances, or how earnestly I send all seasonable wishes to you and Lord Russell[†1] and all who are dearest to you. I am unselfishly glad that Lord Russell is out of the turmoil and worry of a new Administration, but I miss him from it sorely. I was saying only yesterday to Layard (who is staying here), that I could not get over the absence of that great Liberal name from a Liberal Government,[†2] and that I lost heart without it.

Ever faithfully yours,
CHARLES DICKENS.

To W. C. MACREADY, 27 DECEMBER 1868*

MS Morgan Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Twenty Seventh December 1868

My Dearest Macready

I most heartily and fervently reciprocate the good wishes made so welcome here on receipt of your letter this morning, and so do all the house. To dear Mrs. Macready, and to you, and to my especial friend the Noble Boy, we send our most earnest love, one and all.

I was at poor Miss Forster's funeral on Christmas Eve. All things considered, I thought Forster better. But those Commissioners[†3] are a duller set of fellows than he was ever used to consort with, before he joined them, and I cannot but feel that he has got into an old way which is not wholesome. He has lost interest in the larger circle of tastes and occupations that used to girdle his life, and yet has a morbid sort of dissatisfaction in having subsided into an almost private personage. I notice this change in him, as influencing his health quite as much as his bodily illness, I think.

I told the Chappells that I wished to come to Cheltenham if it could be managed, and we are coming on Friday the 22nd. of January. But, the room being very small, they have made the prices very high; and herein are (to my thinking) mistaken. However, that is their affair.

Dolby irreverently doubts whether the Oliver Twist Murder is not "too strong for The dowagers and buffers of Cheltenham". (There's language!) So we are keeping back our Cheltenham bills, until we shall have seen precisely how it affects the audience when publicly read for the first time, in St. James's Hall on Tuesday the 5th. day of the New Year. I am just now home from Edinburgh, where we have been doing enormously.

The said Dolby having a house at Ross, and being now down there with his family for Christmas, I only know generally that we are coming to Cheltenham from Clifton and Newport, and are going on to Ross, Clifton again, and Torquay. But I will ask him to patch me up time to dine with you on the Saturday, and will write to you again after we have conferred.

A stormy day here, blowing stiffly W. S. W (as we say at sea), and raining hard in heavy squalls. Great changes and improvements in this place since you saw it.

Ever My Dearest Macready
Your warmly attached | And affectionate old friend
CD.

To W. H. WILLS, 27 DECEMBER 1868*

MS Beinecke Library, Yale University.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Twenty Seventh December | 1868

My Dear Wills

I most heartily reciprocate all your seasonable good wishes, and send you a muscular grasp of the hand.

Besides polishing the Murder minutely every day this next week, I must try to hammer out an Uncommercial[†1]—though I have not the faintest notion of a subject. If Friday will suit you for the audit, let us make it that day at 12 o'Clock. The division can be made in the meantime, and our respective cheques paid in.

Ever affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS WILLS, 27 DECEMBER 1868*

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Sunday Twenty Seventh December 1868

My Dear Mrs. Wills

I am very glad to have your note this morning (as an evidence that you are much better), and to send you our best seasonable wishes.

But you must not credit my moral account with the haggis. It was sent you by Jemmy Ballantine.[†2] I merely took charge of it from Edinburgh.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To F. W. DEVEY,[†1] 28 DECEMBER 1868

Text (pro forma letter) from facsimile in Christie's catalogue, Nov 1990. Address (in another hand): F. W. Devey Esqr | Carey House | West Hammersmith | W. PM 29 Dec 68.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND, | Dec 28 1868

Mr. Charles Dickens begs to thank the writer of the paper entitled[†2] on having done him the favor to offer it as a contribution to these pages. He much regrets, however that it is not suited to the requirements of All the Year Round.

The Manuscript will be retained under cover, if applied for as above.

To DR JOHN PERCY,[†3] 28 DECEMBER 1868

MS John Wilson.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Twenty Eighth December 1868

My Dear Dr. Percy

I have written to Sir John Hay,[†4] enclosing him his paper, and explaining that I have read it with great interest, but that I fear it is too technical and special for presentation to a large circle of readers.

Many thanks to you. | Believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To PERCY FITZGERALD, [?LATE 1868]

Extract in Percy Fitzgerald, "The Miller and his Men | A Reminiscence" (D, IV [Dec 1908], 314).[†5] Date: probably not before 1868, when Hollingshead began his managerial career; but see To Hollingshead, 15 Dec and fn, and below.

What do you think? Hollingshead is putting on our good old friend, "The Miller and his Men"![†6] We positively must see it. Fix your own night, ... Come![†7]

To MESSRS JOHNSON & SONS,[†1] 29 DECEMBER 1868

MS Associated Lead Manufacturers Ltd. Address: Messrs. Johnson and Sons | 4 Waterloo Place | Limehouse | London | E.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Twenty Ninth December, 1868

Gentlemen

I have not the slightest doubt of the strict accuracy of every word of your communication received here this morning.[†2] Knowing, from the instance of the Sheffield sword grinders and their magnetic mask, and from other analagous cases, how difficult it is to induce ignorant people to take precautions provided for them when doing dangerous work, the contents of your letter are no surprise to me.

You will have the goodness to observe that "The Lead Mills" were a mere abstraction to me when I wrote the paper which has attracted your attention, and that I did not even know where they were, or the name of your firm. But I was so anxious to be just, that although I was attended in my visit to Stepney by a physician, and although we saw other clear indications of Lead-Poisoning besides the one instance named (and that, only in the words of the Irishwoman:[†3] not in mine, or with remark of mine), I forbore to state them.

It will afford me pleasure to see your Works for myself; and I will give you a few hours notice of my coming, on my return from Ireland, about three weeks hence.

Mr. Cumming's[†4] letter is not so moderate as yours or so reasonable. He does not sufficiently discriminate between the Irishwoman and her visitor,[†5] and surely cannot in reason suppose that the latter, in graphically presenting her exact words, endorses them! If they were presented otherwise than as a piece of character, can he possibly suppose that a writer at all accustomed to read or observe would record that a young woman's brains were coming out at her ear?[†6]

Both he and you may rely on my being perfectly free from any prepossession or prejudice against you, and being more than willing to set you right.[†7]

I am Gentlemen | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Johnson and Sons.

To GEORGE HOLSWORTH, 30 DECEMBER 1868*

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Thirtieth December, 1868

Dear Holsworth

Send No. 1 of the FIRST[†1] Series of A. Y. R. to
The Right Hon.
A.H. Layard M P
130 Piccadilly
Place upon the Free List, from No. 1 of the New Series, henceforward:
Edward Lowndes[†2] Esqre.
Government House
British Columbia
I purpose being at the office next Friday.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN LANGFORD,[†3] 30 DECEMBER 1868

Extract in Ben Bloomfield Catalogue; MS 2 pp.; dated Gad's Hill Place, 30 Dec 68; addressed J. A. Langford; with envelope, marked "Private".

I congratulate you with all my heart.[†4] . . . You probably know that `ALL THE YEAR ROUND' is not a Review, and that the books of which its general plan enables it to take cognizance are but few. If yours can reasonably be brought within the number, it shall be.[†5]

To GEORGE MAKEPEACE TOWLE, [30 DECEMBER 1868]

Envelope only, MS Private. Address: George Makepeace Towle Esqre | United States Consulate | Bradford | Yorkshire. PM 30 Dec 68.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 30 DECEMBER 1868

Mention in Sotheby's catalogue, Dec 1888; MS 2 pp. with envelope; dated 30 Dec 68.

To MESSRS COCKBURN & CO.,[†1] 31 DECEMBER 1868*

MS Messrs Cockburn & Co.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT

Thirty First December 1868

Mr. Charles Dickens begs to enclose Messrs. Cockburn and Co. a crossed cheque payable to order, for £35.8.0. the cost of his cask of whisky. It arrived here safely, yesterday.

To GEORGE DOLBY, 31 DECEMBER 1868*

MS Free Library, Philadelphia. Address: George Dolby Esquire | Messrs. Chappell and Co | 50 New Bond Street | London | W.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Thirty First December 1868

My Dear Dolby

Many happy years to you and yours!

I cannot conceive how I happened to leave the Turkey and the Mistletoe out of my last note.[†2] Both arrived in blooming order, and were received with acclamations.

On Saturday I will remain at the office until I see you there. We propose to change the Venue to Verrey's on Monday; and to take a snug Private Box for a pantomime.

I go up to town tomorrow morning—straight to the office.

Ever Faithfully
CD.

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 31 DECEMBER 1868*

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Thirty First December, 1868

My Dear Ouvry

Clarke of Gravesend,[†3] Nurseryman who supplies my garden, gives somebody a bill of sale—God knows when, how, or why—under virtue of which Relph[†4] of Gravesend claims to receive my account due—as Clarke claims—to him. Each giving me notice not to pay the other (see accompanying letters), I refer both to you, and enclose cheque for £45 . . 0 . . 0[†1]—rather more than the whole sum due.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [?END 1868]

Extract in F, VIII, iii, 658. Date: Bumble appears to have been small, though no longer "an absolute infant" in July 68 (To Fields, 7 July); perhaps end of 1868.

He had given one of his Newfoundland puppies the name of Bumble, from having observed a peculiarly pompous and overbearing manner he had of appearing to mount guard over the yard when he was an absolute infant.

1869

January

To F.D. FINLAY, 1 JANUARY [1869]

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: misdated by CD.

THE ATHENÆUM | New Year's Day, 1868

My Dear Finlay

First, my heartfelt wishes for many prosperous and happy years to you and those who are nearest and dearest to you.

Next, as to the Mayor's[†2] kind intentions. I feel really grateful to him and gratified by the whole idea, but acceptance of the distinction on my part would be impracticable. My time in Ireland is all anticipated, and I could not possibly prolong my stay, because I must[†3] be back in London to read on Tuesday fortnight, and then must immediately set forth for the West of England. It is not likely, besides, that I shall get through these Farewells before the end of May. And the work is so hard, and my voice is so precious, that I fear to add an ounce to the fatigues or I might be over-weighted. The avoidance of gas and crowds when I am not in the act of being cooked before those lights of mine, is an essential part of the training to which (as I think you know) I strictly adhere, and although I have accepted the Liverpool invitation,[†4] I have done so as an exception: the Liverpool people having always treated me in our public relations with a kind of personal affection.

I am sincerely anxious that the Mayor of Belfast should know how the case stands with me. If you will kindly set me straight and right, I shall be truly obliged to you.

My sister in law has been very unwell (though she is now much better) and is recommended a brisk change. As she is a good sailor, I mean to bring her to Ireland with me: at which she is highly delighted.[†5]

Faithfully Yours ever
CHARLES DICKENS

To J. A. HERAUD,[†1] JANUARY 1869*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday First January 1869

My Dear Mr. Heraud

I have 4 papers of yours in hand, which I have several times placed, but have had driven out by press of matter, and irreconcileability[†2] of lengths.[†3] Let me begin the New Year by wishing that it may be a happy and prosperous one for you, and by sending you the enclosed cheque.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

J. A. Heraud Esquire

To CHARLES ELIOT NORTON, 1 JANUARY 1869*

MS Houghton Library, Harvard. Address: Charles Eliot Norton Esquire | 18 Queen's Gate Terrace | Kensington | W. PM Charing C. [?] Jan 69.

New Year's Day 1869[†4]

My Dear Norton

When I brought you up from Gad's Hill to day, the Hand Book of London,[†5] I had not received your cordial letter, and kind remembrance in two Volumes.[†6] Accept my most hearty thanks for both, and with them the best wishes of my heart for many happy and prosperous years to you, and all nearest and dearest to you. God bless you and them!

Ever Your affectionate and attached
CHARLES DICKENS

To ANDREW HALLIDAY,[†7] 2 JANUARY 1869

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Saturday Second January 1869

My Dear Halliday

I have gone over your notes for a dramatized Copperfield,[†8] and although I notice the usual difficulties in the way of the endeavour to put so long a story into so short a space, I have no other fault to find:-except that I do not think you can "change" after the Storm, without an anti climax.[†1] I would assuredly end upon the Beach, and get in what you want of Miss Dartle and Emily, before that scene.[†2] It is very important to Mr. Peggotty's character—this is another point— that he should be merciful with, and sorry for, Martha;[†3] and that he should never bully her.[†4]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Andrew Halliday Esquire

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 2 JANUARY 1869*

MS Huntington Library. Date: CD's error for Saturday 2 January 1869.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Saturday Second January 1868

My Dear Ouvry

Here is the cheque for £45.

After I saw you yesterday evening, I saw Fechter behind the scenes. He asked me if I had received the loan from you?[†5] I replied, no. He said It had been received from Arnold[†6] and was all right.[†7] I think you ought to know this.

Ever Faithfully
CD.

To MRS CATTERMOLE, 4 JANUARY 1869

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, July 1983; MS 1 p.; dated 4 Jan 69; addressed Mrs Cattermole.

I have been thinking over your Memorial,[†8] and I have come to the conclusion that it will be a bold stroke, and likely, as an unusual one, to attract prompt attention. Have it written out plainly on foolscap paper with a Margin; lose no time; and when it is done send it to me[†9] CD will be in Ireland, but mark it "Private—To be immediately forwarded". I will get it presented, and I think I can get that done by one of the Ministry.

To W. W. F. DE CERJAT, 4 JANUARY 1869†

MS Berg Collection.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER
Monday Fourth January 1869

My Dear Cerjat,

I will answer your question first. Have I done with my Farewell Readings? Lord bless you, No; and I shall think myself well out of it, if I get done by the end of May. I have undertaken 103,[†1] and have as yet vanquished only 28.[†1] Tomorrow night, I read in London, for the first time, the Murder from Oliver Twist which I have re-arranged for the purpose.[†2] Next day I start for Dublin and Belfast; I am just back from Scotland for a few Christmas holidays; I go back there next month; and in the meantime and afterwards go everywhere else.

Take my guarantee for it,—you may be quite comfortable on the subject of Papal aspirations and encroachments. The English people are in unconquerable opposition to that church. They have the animosity in their blood—derived from the history of the past, though perhaps unconsciously. But they do sincerely want to win Ireland over, if they can. They know that since the Union she has been hardly used. They know that Scotland has her religion, and a very uncomfortable one. They know that Scotland though intensely anti-Papal, perceives it to be unjust that Ireland has not her religion too, and has very emphatically declared her opinion in the late Elections.[†3] They know that a richly endowed church, forced upon a people who don't belong to it, is a grievance with those people. They know that many things—but especially an artfully and schemingly managed Institution like the Romish Church—thrive upon a grievance, and [†a] that Rome[†a] has thriven exceedingly upon this, and made the most of it. Lastly, the best among them know that there is a gathering cloud in the West, considerably bigger than a man's hand,[†4] under which a powerful Irish-American body, rich and active, is always drawing Ireland in that direction.[†5] And that these are not times in which other Powers would back our holding Ireland by force unless we could make our claim good in proving fair and equal government.

Poor Townshend charged me in his will "to publish without alteration, his religious opinions: which he sincerely believes would tend to the happiness of mankind."[†6] To publish them without alteration, is absolutely impossible; for they are distributed in the strangest fragments through the strangest note books, pocket books, slips of paper, and what not, and produce a most incoherent and tautological result.[†1] I infer that he must have held some always-postponed idea of fitting them together. For which reasons I would certainly publish nothing about them, if I had any discretion in the matter. Having none, I suppose a book must be made of them.[†2] The claim of the Canton de Vaud . . . worse. [†b] He . . . on his estate, is, I believe, not yet settled.[†b] His pictures and rings have gone to the South Kensington Museum, and are now exhibiting there.[†3]

Charley Collins is no better, and no worse. [†b] He can eat well, and that is about the only sign of a natural or healthy condition that can be detected in him.[†b] His wife looks very young and very pretty. Her sister and Miss Hogarth (my joint housekeepers) have been on duty this Christmas, and have had enough to do. My boys are now all dispersed in South America, India, and Australia: except Charley, whom I have taken on at "All The Year Round" office, [†b] on his making a sad mess of paper making:[†b] and Harry, who is an Under Graduate at Trinity Hall,[†4] and I hope will make his mark there. All well.

The Thames embankment is (faults of ugliness in detail, apart) the finest public work yet done. From Westminster Bridge to near Waterloo, it is now lighted up at night, and has a fine effect. They have begun to plant it with trees; and the footway (not the road) is already open to the Temple. Besides its beauty, and its usefulness in relieving the crowded streets, it will greatly quicken and deepen what is learnedly called "the scour" of the river. But the Corporation of London, and some other nuisances, have brought the weirs above Twickenham into a very bad and unsound condition; and they already begin to give, and vanish, as the stream runs faster and stronger.

Your undersigned friend has had a few occasional reminders of his "true American Catarrh". †b My Doctor is of opinion that the disorder in question originates in vegetable poison; and has attacked it with strong and sudden doses of quinine in hot brandy and water. They have been remarkably effectual.†b Although I have exerted my voice very much, it has not yet been once touched. In America I was obliged to patch it up constantly.

I like to read your Patriarchal account of yourself among your swiss vines and figtrees. You wouldn't recognize Gads Hill now; I have so changed it, and bought land about it. And yet I often think that if Mary were to marry (which she won't), I should sell it, and go genteelly vagabondizing over the face of the earth. Then indeed I might see Lausanne again.—But I don't seem in the way of it at present; for the older I get, the more I do, and the harder I work.

†b Take my best wishes, my dear Cerjat for the many happy years to you and all who are nearest and dearest to you, and always think of me as

Your affectionate Friend
CHARLES DICKENS†b

To W. J. FARRER, 5 JANUARY 1869

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, June 1979; MS I p.; dated Office of AYR, 5 Jan 69; addressed William James Farrer.

Assuring him that the cost of publishing Townshend's papers will be very moderate. They will be included in a single volume and CD will furnish him with an approximate estimate of the charges—at the most—for the paper, print, publishing &c., as soon as it is completed.

To THE LORD CHIEF JUSTICE OF IRELAND,†1 5 JANUARY 1869*

MS L. Wilfred Webb. Address: The Chief Justice | 2 Mountjoy Square | Dublin.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Fifth January 1869.

My dear Chief Justice

Forster sent me your kind letter last night.†2 He is at Torquay, and it had followed him thither.

It is a most miserable fact that I have not one single free day in Dublin! I read there on three consecutive nights, and on the following day start back for Belfast where I shall already have read once. At Belfast I have engaged to dine out once, after reading; and I shall have then to come to London with the greatest precipitation, being announced to read there on Tuesday the 18th.

These arrangements are imposed on me by very considerate people and have really been rendered unavoidable by the complicated nature of the Farewell affairs in all the points of the compass. It would have given me very great pleasure to have profited by your hospitable remembrance, but see what a forlorn and helpless state I am in!

As to Percy FitzGerald, I believe he is going backwards and forwards between Dublin and Belfast with me, convinced that I am not to be found elsewhere.

My dear Chief Justice | Very Cordially Yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

To CHARLES HAMILTON AIDÉ, 6 JANUARY 1869*

MS Dickens House

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Sixth Jany. 1869

My Dear Sir

I am obliged (for want of space) to publish your story[†3] in 2 portions. Will you have the kindness to look over the proof which the printer will send you, and return it.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Hamilton Aidé Esquire

To MISS MARY BOYLE, 6 JANUARY 1869

MS Morgan Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Sixth January 1869

My Dear Mary

I was more affected than you could easily believe, by the sight of your gift lying on my dressing-table on the morning of the New Year. To be remembered in a friend's heart when it is sore, is a touching thing; and that, and the remembrance of the dead,[†1] quite overpowered me: the one being inseparable from the other.

You may be sure that I shall attach a special interest and value to the beautiful present, and shall wear it as a kind of charm.[†2] God bless you, and may we carry our friendship through many coming years!

My preparations for a certain Murder that I had to do last night, have rendered me unfit for letter-writing these last few days, or you would have heard from me sooner. The crime being comfortably off my mind and the blood spilled, I am (like many of my fellow-criminals) in a highly edifying state to day.

Ever believe me | Your affectionate Friend

CHARLES DICKENS

To THE PRINCIPAL LIBRARIAN, BRITISH MUSEUM,[†3] 6 JANUARY 1869*

MS Myers & Co.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Sixth January 1869

Dear Sir

I take the liberty of presenting to you, one of my sons, Mr. Henry Fielding Dickens of Trinity Hall Cambridge. He wishes to obtain a ticket of admission to the Reading Room of The British Museum, and I beg to introduce him and vouch for him.[†4]

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

John Winter Jones Esquire.

To AUSTEN HENRY LAYARD, 6 JANUARY 1869

MS British Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Sixth January 1869

My Dear Layard,

Can you—without violation of any official conventionality—kindly present the enclosed memorial to Mr. Gladstone? It is possible that your position may be incompatible with your doing so. In that case you will, of course, not hesitate to tell me as much. I go to Ireland tonight, but any note addressed here will be forwarded to me.

Ever Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS CATTERMOLE, 6 JANUARY 1869*

MS Huntington Library.

26 Wellington Street, Strand
Wednesday Sixth January 1869

My Dear Mrs. Cattermole

You will see by the note on the other side (from Mr. Layard, First Commissioner of Works) that I have lost no time with the Memorial,[†1] and that it is well presented to Mr. Gladstone already.[†2]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To F. D. FINLAY, 6 JANUARY 1869

MS Comtesse de Suzannet.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Sixth January 1869

My Dear Finlay.

Here is the Devil to pay!

I am very much afraid, from your letter, that we have fallen on the wrong Saturday for dining with you. Neither Dolby nor I can remember. But the fact stands thus. To dine with you on Saturday the 16th. would be impossible, because [†a] I MUST BE[†a] in London on the morning of Monday the 18th. But I could dine with you, either on Saturday the 9th. or Thursday the 14th.[†3] I dispatch this in great haste, and will add no more. You will tell me what we are to do, when I see you.

Believe me | Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 6 JANUARY 1869*

MS Messrs Farrer & Co.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Sixth January 1869

My Dear Ouvry

I am off for Ireland tonight, but I shall be very glad to hear that you have that Fechter money.[†1] Any note from you, addressed here,

"Private. To be forwarded"

—will be sent on to me straightaway.

I murdered the girl from Oliver Twist last night in a highly successful and bloodthirsty manner.

Ever Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To W. J. FARRER, 10 JANUARY 1869*

Text from facsimile in Christophe Stickel Autographs catalogue No. 21.

Shelbourne Hotel, Dublin | Tenth January

My Dear Sir

I have had a careful estimate made of the cost of publishing Mr. Townshend's volume. It would certainly not exceed £100, and very likely would be £20 within that mark.[†2]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. Farrer Esquire

To HENRY BARRY,[†3] [? 11 JANUARY 1869]

Mention in To Olliffe, 11 Jan 69. Date: presumably written same day.

To FREDERIC CHAPMAN, 11 JANUARY 1869*

MS University of Kentucky.

Shelbourne Hotel Dublin | Monday Eleventh January 1869

My Dear Sir

Many thanks for the estimate.[†4] I hope to have the volume ready for you to get in hand very soon.

Will you kindly get a copy of Copperfield (Library Edition) handsomely bound for me in Mazarine blue morocco, with gilt edges. Let it be sent to me at the office when done. I want to send it here as a present.[†1]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To SIR JOSEPH OLLIFFE, 11 JANUARY 1869

Extract in City Book Auction catalogue No. 228; MS, 2 pp.; dated Dublin 11 Jan 69; addressed Sir Joseph Olliffe.

Mr. Barry has delivered your letter, and I have written to him and called upon him this morning. This being the beginning of Hilary Term, and he being occupied with a case during the only part of the day in which I have any little leisure, it is not likely that we shall meet during my present short stay here. But we have established the understanding that our engagements are irreconcilable
. . . I send my love to Lady Olliffe. Ask her, in the event of your going to London, to see me imbue my hands in innocent blood[†2] to let George[†3] know beforehand. Of course, I should be greatly vexed if you had indifferent places, and the Hall is always crowded.

My dear Olliffe, | Faithfully yours ever,
CHARLES DICKENS

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 12 JANUARY 1869*

MS Huntington Library.

Shelbourne Hotel, Dublin | 12th. January 1869

My Dear Ouvry

I enclose Fechter's cheque,[†4] endorsed. Will you kindly have it paid in to my account, at Coutts's.

I shall be in London on Tuesday next, and will call upon you with a cheque for my purchase money.[†5]

Enormous Houses here,[†6] and unbounded enthusiasm on the part of Patrick.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To THE EDITOR OF THE DAILY NEWS, 14 JANUARY 1869

Text from the Daily News, 16 Jan 69.

Belfast, Jan 14

Sir,

I am required to discharge a painful act of duty, imposed upon me by your insertion in your paper of Saturday, the 9th,[†1] of a paragraph from the New York Times[†2] respecting the death, at Chicago, of "Mrs. Augustus N. Dickens, widow of the brother of Charles Dickens, the celebrated English novelist."[†3] The widow of my late brother in that paragraph referred to was never at Chicago; she is a lady now living, and resident in London;[†4] she is a frequent guest at my house; and I am one of the trustees under her marriage settlement. My temporary absence in Ireland has delayed for some days my troubling you with the request that you will have the goodness to publish this correction.

I am, &c.
CHARLES DICKENS[†5]

To PERCY FITZGERALD, 15 JANUARY 1869

[a]MS (incomplete) Dr Gordon N. Ray;[aa] from Percy Fitzgerald, Memories of CD, p. 62.

Belfast,[†6] Friday Fifteenth January | 1869

My Dear Fitzgerald

It was very considerate and thoughtful in you to write to me, and I have been much gratified by your note. It is extraordinarily difficult to understand (from the point of action) an audience that does not express itself, and I certainly mistook mine on Wednesday night.[†7] When the Murder was done in London, the people were frozen while it went on, but came to life when it was over and rose to boiling-point. I have now told Dolby that henceforth it must be set apart from all our other effects, and judged by no other "Reading" standard.

We all unite in kindest regard and remembrance to your [a] mother[†1] and sisters, and I am ever,

Your affectionate friend,

CHARLES DICKENS[a]

To THE REV. THOMAS HELMORE,[†2] 15 JANUARY 1869

Extract in Maggs Bros catalogue, Autumn 1924; MS 1 p.; dated Belfast, 15 Jan 69; addressed The Rev. Thomas Helmore.

I cannot recall any written expressions of our late friend—either in his letters to me, or among his papers that would furnish such evidence as you describe. Of the fact of his regarding England as his home,[†3] I have of course, no shadow of doubt: but I remember no reference on his part to what was so notorious and trite to both of us.[†4]

To THE VERY REV. THE DEAN OF BRISTOL, 17 JANUARY 1869

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, Dec 1995; MS 1 p.; dated Office of AYR, 17 Jan 69; addressed The Very Rev. The Dean of Bristol.

Has just come home from Ireland, where he was oscillating between Dublin and Belfast.[†5] Gives his many reading engagements,[†6] hopes to get a sight of you but my Clifton engagements are all of a most scrambling character.

To STEPHEN FISKE,[†1] 17 JANUARY 1869*

MS National Library of Wales.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Sunday Seventeenth January 1869

My Dear Fisk

Coming here from Ireland this morning, I find your book.[†2] Accept my cordial thanks for the Dedication,[†3] and believe that it is truly gratifying to me.

Referring back to your unanswered letter (I was in Scotland when it reached me), let me note the circumstance that Edmund's[†4] next successor[†5] has been for some time at work. But this need be no bar to our discussing the proposal you have in your mind.[†6] I shall not be in London—except to read—until the 8th. of February, but in the week which begins with that day I can make an appointment with you. Or, any letter you address here, "Private. To be forwarded" will reach me promptly, wheresoever I may be.

Once again, my sincere and hearty thanks. Your book is going with me into the West of England.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Stephen Fisk Esquire

To ANDREW ARMSTRONG,[†7] 18 JANUARY 1869*

MS Birmingham Public Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Eighteenth January 1869

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Andrew Armstrong and begs with thanks to acknowledge the receipt of Mr. Armstrong's book.[†8] It reached Mr. Dickens on Saturday evening when he passed through Dublin on his way home from Belfast.

To W. P. FRITH, [19] JANUARY 1869†

MS Victoria & Albert Museum. Date: CD's error: Tuesday was 19 Jan in 69.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Twentieth January 1869

My Dear Frith.

I do not commit the murder again in London, until Tuesday, the 3rd.[†1] of March. Before we had tried its effects upon the public, the bills were issued for the present course; and we thought it would be a breach of faith to alter them, though urgently required.

[†a] You have indeed done wonders for Mrs. Cattermole. I hope she will not forget how deeply she is indebted to you.

The case of the Memorial for a pension stands thus. The original Memorial whose contents you know, and signed as you know, was presented to D'Israeli shortly before his resignation.[†2] Considering the time that would be lost if Mrs. Cattermole went about in weak health and in a generally weak way, to get those signatures again, I drew up, in her name, another memorial to Gladstone,[†3] reciting the former one, setting forth who signed it, and entreating him to accept those signatures as appended to the new document. The contents of this Memorial I explained to Layard (who passed Christmas with me), and gave it to him to present to Gladstone: which he did, with a strong recommendation for himself. I do not think we could have done better.†a

I have not read The Chimes for ten years.†4 I am afraid it is a little dismal, but have shortened and brightened it as much as possible.†5 I hope you will see the Murder done.

Ever Faithfully My Dear Frith
CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS CATTERMOLE, 20 JANUARY 1869*

MS Dickens House.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Twentieth January 1869

My Dear Mrs. Cattermole

I have barely time to write you a line before starting for the West of England. I shall not be in town again until Tuesday February 2nd. but I could see you here that day at 2 o'Clock. Or, any letter you may address to me here, "To be forwarded", will be sent straight on to me in the meantime.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 20 JANUARY 1869†

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Twentieth January 1869

My Dear Ouvry.

I send you round this line before starting for the West of England.

†a Will you let me know (a fortnight beforehand), when you will like to come to St. James's Hall.†a You will see the Readings set forth in every day's Times, and can choose your own. †a I commit my Murder again on Tuesday the 2nd. of March.†a

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 21 JANUARY 1869*

MS Huntington Library.

Clifton Down Hotel, Bristol
Thursday Twenty First Jany. 1869

My Dear Ouvry

You will probably know before you receive this, that I have left a cheque in your favor for £2,500,[†1] with our plump and rosy friend in the inner room at Coutts's.[†2]

I have booked you for the Murder of Tuesday 2nd. March in the front row, beside my daughter and sister in law, and Lady Molesworth.

The enclosed concerning Clarke's bill (the Gravesend Nurseryman) forwarded here this morning.[†3] A prodigious crowd to the Murder last night.

Ever Faithfully Yours

CD.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 21 JANUARY 1869*

MS Huntington Library.

Newport[†4] | Thursday Evening
Twenty First January 1869

My Dearest Georgy

This is to wish you many happy returns of tomorrow,[†5] and to send you my deepest love and attachment.

The excellent Dolby has become quite "spooney" on my informing him of the immediate occasion of my writing to you.

A tremendous house at Clifton last night, and decidedly by far the best Murder yet done.[†1] A capital Let here for tonight, in a queer out of the way place.

I forget how Mary's tickets stand for the next London Reading. I want one for Mr. Robinson—the "House" at Coutts's. Has she got a spare one? If not, I can get it from Dolby.

Reply. And tell me how Marcus is. Best love.

Ever affectionately CD.

Great haste. Doors to be opened very early.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 21 JANUARY 1869

Mention in John Heise catalogue No. 7; MS 1 p.; dated Office of AYR, 21 Jan 69.

Referring to money matters.

To W. C. MACREADY, 22 JANUARY 1869

Text from N, III, 701.

Plough Hotel [Cheltenham]
Friday Twenty Second January 1869

My Dearest Macready,

We just arrived here (¼ to 2) and I find a large packet of proofs that I must have ready to return to the office before my early dinner at 3. Will Mrs. Macready (my love to her) kindly let me know at what time Dolby shall await you at the little back entrance[†2] this evening.

We begin at 8.

Ever your most affectionate
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To J. H. CHAMBERLAIN,[†3] 23 JANUARY 1869

MS Birmingham and Midland Institute.

Cheltenham. Twenty Third January 1869

Dear Sir

I am but now in receipt of your letter, informing me that I have had the honour of being unanimously elected President of the Birmingham and Midland Institute for the present year.

I accept the distinction thus conferred upon me, with great satisfaction, and am proud of it.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Henry Chamberlain Esquire.

To MRS DALLAS, 23 JANUARY 1869*

MS Ashley W. Olmstead.

Cheltenham, Saturday 23rd. Jany. | 1869

My Dear Mrs. Dallas

Many thanks for your note, forwarded to me here this morning. My attention had been previously called to that execrable letter,[†1] by Russel of the Scotsman.

I shall be heartily glad to see you "assisting" at the Murder, in St. James's Hall. I came here expressly to do it for Macready, last night. He looks well in the face, but "Age with his stealing steps"[†2] has overtaken him too soon.

Always Your affectionate Friend
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [?23 JANUARY 1869]

Extract in F, XI, i, 801. Date: probably the day after his reading of Sikes and Nancy at Cheltenham, which Macready had heard.

Macready is of opinion that the Murder is two Macbeths. He declares that he heard every word of the reading, but I doubt it. Alas! he is sadly infirm.[†3]

To H. P. SMITH, 23 JANUARY 1869

MS Huntington Library.

Cheltenham, Saturday Twenty Third Jany. | 1869

My Dear Smith

Let your social conscience be lightened. I knew at the time when you kindly invited me to meet the lady,[†4] that in all probability the design would break down; and I heard very shortly afterwards that it had done so. Of course she fully believed that she was going to America, when you believed so too.

Macready was at my Reading here last night, and I am going to have an early dinner with him to day. He is extraordinarily old. But I think (and Mrs. Macready is of the same mind) that his total isolation from old friends and associations has much to do with his condition.

Happy New Years to you and yours

My Dear Smith | Faithfully as always
CHARLES DICKENS

To DORA WOOD,[†1] 23 JANUARY 1869*

MS Michael Silverman. Address: Miss Dora Wood | Ashleigh | Whalley Range | Manchester.

Plough Hotel, Cheltenham
Saturday Twenty Third January | 1869

My dear Dora

I should have sent you this little letter several days ago, but that I have been constantly travelling and otherwise occupied. Your christian name is so interesting to me,[†2] and your birthday is so important in my life (for I was born on the same day of the year, though not in the same year exactly), that I esteem you as a sort of Fairy-friend and offer you my love and this Kiss—O—When you grow old enough to read my books, and to write me a note saying that you are ready to begin them, mind you do write, then I will make you a little present of them. I hope you will like them as well as your Mama does, then I shall be pleased indeed.

That blue print up at top there, is the name of the place where I live.[†3] I am only staying at that written address higher up still, until this evening.

Believe me | Your affectionate Friend
CHARLES DICKENS
(There's a queer flourish!)

Miss Dora Wood.

To MISS MARY BOYLE, 24 JANUARY 1869*

MS Morgan Library.

Ross Herefordshire
Sunday Twenty Fourth January | 1869

My Dearest Mary

I received your note here this morning, and have just time to send you in return the (I hope unnecessary) assurance of my love and fidelity.

The arrangement of the details of the third course of Readings in St. James's Hall, rests with the Chappells, subject to my approval. The second course ends with the Murder, on Tuesday March 2nd. The Third course will begin on Tuesday March 16th. and I should think will both begin and end with the Murder, and will take the Chimes about midway. As soon as this said Third Course is settled, Georgy will give you full particulars of it.

Pray give Mrs. Cavendish[†1] my love, when you can. I have thought of her, very much and very often.

The waistcoat is my constant companion, and is the sympathetic witness of a deal of work. Macready came to the Murder at Cheltenham on Friday night, and delivered his criticism in the brief words:—"Two Macbeths".

Ever My Dearest Mary | Your affectionate Friend
CD.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 24 JANUARY 1869*

MS Huntington Library

Ross[†2] | Sunday Twenty Fourth Jany. 1869

My Dearest Georgy

I have a letter from Frank Beard this morning, saying that you are all right again. I hope the fact stands as he states it.

I have also an incoherent[†3] letter from Mary Boyle. I will write her a line, and tell her generally how the Readings stand. It rests with the Chappells to suggest the third course, but I suppose they will at least begin it, and finish it, with the Murder. I should think the Chimes will come in again at about the middle.[†4]

Macready is of opinion that the Murder is "Two Macbeths". He declared that he heard every word of the Reading, but I doubt it. He gave us quite a magnificent dinner yesterday, but was most distressingly infirm and unintelligible at table, and, under some delusion quite incomprehensible, ordered the small boy[†5] (a capital boy) up to his room. The tact with which Mrs. Macready got him down again, was perfect. An old waiter whom I have seen there before, was in attendance; and the way in which Macready and he were at cross purposes about the decanters and wine glasses was dismally droll.

This is the coldest house I ever set foot in, in my life. Prettily furnished, like the best sort of Railway hotel, but wanting in cheap contrivances that would make it seem larger and be much more commodious. I could do wonders with it, and not spend more than £20. Miss Tatty,[†6] changed in appearance from being like her father to being the picture of her mother. Spoilt. Both children wholesome and fresh looking. "Aunt Jordon" and Marion's sister, sitting up last night after supper, blinking, and pitching off their chairs, but wanting courage to go to bed. Marion[†7] down to breakfast this morning. Awful foreshadowings of some female relative coming to dinner, considered detestable by Dolby. Doctor also darkly hinted at, as coming to dinner likewise. A fine frosty day, and a ten miles walk to Monmouth impending. Rooms, all jostling one another. The Herefordshire maidens, and Scott in an apron, for ever laden with coals and dropping them in the hall on coming into collision with man, woman, child, beasts, birds, and inanimate objects.

Certainly if you do not get quite rid of that disagreeable discomfort,[†1] we will have another opinion. Best love to Mamie.

Ever My Dearest Georgy | Your most affectionate

CD.

To MISS MARY DICKENS, 27 JANUARY 1869

Text from MDGH, II, 412.

Torquay. Wednesday Jan. 27th 1869

My Dearest Mamie,

We have been doing immensely.

This place is most beautiful, though colder now than one would expect. This hotel, an immense place, built among picturesque broken rocks out in the blue sea,[†2] is quite delicious. There are bright green trees in the garden, and new peas a foot high. Our rooms are en suite, all commanding the sea, and each with two very large plateglass windows. Everything good and well served.

A pantomime[†3] was being done last night, in the place where I am to read tonight.[†4] It is something between a theatre, a circus, a riding-school, a Methodist chapel, and a cow-house. I was so disgusted with its acoustic properties on going in to look at it, that the whole unfortunate staff have been all day, and now are, sticking up baize and carpets in it to prevent echoes.

I have rarely seen a more uncomfortable edifice than I thought it last night.

At Clifton, on Monday night,[†5] we had a contagion of fainting. And yet the place was not hot. I should think we had from a dozen to twenty ladies borne out, stiff and rigid, at various times. It became quite ridiculous.

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To JOHN FORSTER, [? 29 JANUARY 1869]

Extract in F, XI, i, 801. Date: Forster's date of 27 Jan 69 impossible, since CD did not arrive in Bath until the 29th; probably written that day, before his reading.

Landor's[†6] ghost goes along the silent streets here before me. . . . The place looks to me like a cemetery which the Dead have succeeded in rising and taking. Having built streets of their old gravestones, they wander about scantly trying to "look alive". A dead failure.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 29 JANUARY 1869

MS Huntington Library.

Bath | Friday Twenty Ninth January 1869

My Dearest Georgy

You must not trust blank places in my list, because many have been, and will be, gradually filled up. After the Tuesday's Reading in London, I have two[†1] for that same week in the country—Nottingham and Leicester. In the following week I have none; but my arrangements are all at sea as yet, for I must somehow and somewhere do an Uncommercial in that week,[†2] and I also want to get poor Chauncy's "opinions" to the Printer.

This mouldy old roosting-place comes out mouldily as to Let, of course.[†3] I hate the sight of the byegone Assembly Rooms, and the Bath chairs trundling the Dowagers about the streets. As to tomorrow morning in the daylight!—

I have no cold to speak of, [†a] but am bilious and uncomfortable.[†a] Dolby sends kindest regard.

[†a] Best love to Mamie. | Ever affectionately Yours

CD.[†a]

To VISCOUNT TORRINGTON,[†4] 29 JANUARY 1869*

MS Mrs John Silcock

Bath, Friday Twenty Ninth January 1869

Dear Torrington

Your letter reached me here last night. The place is in its usual brilliant state; looking as if the dead in a cemetery had succeeded in rising and taking possession of it—had built a city with their tombstones—and were faintly trying to live in it.

Will you kindly charge yourself with my best thanks to the Duchess, and the assurance that I am highly sensible of the honour she does me in offering me the hospitality of Bestwood.[†5] Will you also represent on my behalf that while this exceptional "Reading" phase of my life is in progress, I am obliged to deny myself every social enjoyment, and to deliver myself up wholly to its requirements. I never go anywhere but to the best Hotel I can find, and have to live in it by line and rule. Even under these conditions I shall be in Nottingham but one night, and must away early next morning.

Always Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

February

To FREDERICK LEHMANN,[†1] 2 FEBRUARY 1869*

MS Dickens House.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,

Tuesday Second February 1869

My Dear Lehmann

I should have been very glad to say "Yes" if I reasonably could; but my work is too hard. That Friday is one of a very few days that I have to myself in this month, and I must manfully train and lie by. I have a great deal of Murdering before me yet, and social pleasure must yield to it! With love to Mrs. Lehmann, Believe me ever

Faithfully Yours

To W. H. WILLS, 2 FEBRUARY 1869

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Second February 1869

My Dear Wills

In case your cold should keep you at home both to day and tomorrow (and mind you don't come out, unless in a fit state to do so) I send you this line in reference to Charley.

Don't you think, as he has so much on his hands, that it will be fair to rate him on the ship's books at Six Guineas per week?[†2]

Affectionately Ever
CD

To MRS LEHMANN, 3 FEBRUARY 1869 †

MS University of Texas, Austin.

Office, Wednesday Third February 1869

My Dear Mrs. Lehmann.

Before getting your kind note, I had written to Lehmann explaining why I cannot allow myself any social pleasure while my Farewell task is yet unfinished. The work is so very hard that every little scrap of rest and silence I can pick up, is precious. And even those morsels are so flavoured with "All The Year Round", that they are not quite the genuine article.

Joachim[†3] came round to see me at the Hall last night, and I told him how sorry I was to forego the pleasure of meeting him (he is a Noble Fellow!) at your pleasant table.

I am glad you are coming to the Murder on the second of March. (The House will be prodigious). Such little changes as I have made, shall be carefully presented to your critical notice, and I hope will be crowned with your approval. But you are always such a fine audience that I have no fear on that head.

[†a] I saw Chorley yesterday, in his own room. A sad and solitary sight! The widowed Brake,[†1] with a certain gincoherence of manner, presented a blooming countenance and buxom form in the passage:—so buxom indeed, that she was obliged to retire before me, like a modest stopper, before I could get into the dining-decanter where poor Chorley reposed like the dregs of last season's last wine.[†a†2]

Faithfully Yours always
CD.

My love to Rudie.[†3]

To W. C. MACREADY, 3 FEBRUARY 1869

Text from N, III, 703.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Third February 1869

My Dearest Macready,

The enclosed will appear in these pages on Wednesday week.[†4] It shall be sent round to all the papers, and I will privately call Delane's attention to it. I have thought it best to make it a piece of personal testimony which can be quoted a hundred years hence.

My love to dear Mrs. Macready and the Noble Boy.

Ever your most affectionate
[CHARLES DICKENS]

An enormous house in London last night.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 4 FEBRUARY 1869*

MS Huntington Library.

Nottingham,[†1] Thursday Fourth February 1869

My Dearest Georgy

The Murder will be done on the 16th.[†2] and five places can certainly be taken for it in the best position, if taken at once. For the 2nd. it is quite impossible to get anything.

I shall be able, please God, to get down to Gad's by the 2 . . 10 (or whatever it is) train on Saturday. Scott and the luggage will be with me, and for the latter we shall want the Cart. If this should interfere with the Forsters, then have a carriage on hire for them—but only in the case of their coming to Strood,[†3] as the basket and brougham can come together to Higham if need be.

Ever Your affectionate
CD.

To GEORGE HOLSWORTH, 5 FEBRUARY 1869

Extract in Dobell catalogue No. 281 (1919); dated Gad's Hill Place (headed paper), 5 Feb 69, from Leicester,[†4] according to mention in N (111, 703); addressed Mr Holsworth.

Asking him to send a messenger to Corbyn's, Chemists, Bond St, for some of the colocynth pills.[†5]

To ROBERT BROADWATER,[†6] 7 FEBRUARY 1869*

MS Washington State University.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Seventh February 1869

Dear Sir

I regret to assure you that my compliance with your request is absolutely impossible. I cannot find leisure to make such an engagement.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Robert Broadwater Esquire

To MISS MARY BOYLE, 10 FEBRUARY 1869*

MS Morgan Library.

Office, Wednesday Tenth February 1869

My Dearest Mary

I fear that subject will not do, and for this reason:-It was proposed, when the book[†1] came out, by an English gentleman resident in France who does the greater part, if not all, of our French subjects.[†2] I can not remember (though I have taken time to try) for what reason I was adverse to it, though I know I had some reason then. Whether it could have been that the book was not reliable, or that some French disproof of some statement had got into circulation, or what not, I can by no means call to mind; but I think I recollect that the gentleman himself agreed with me in thinking it better left alone. Now, he would be mortally offended—and really ill used—if I were to confide the same idea to another hand, after twenty years of his co-operation; and therefore, though most unwillingly on my part, I feel an obligation on me to give it up.

In haste | Ever affectionately
CD.

To W. H. WILLS, 12 FEBRUARY 1869*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Twelfth February 1869

My Dear Wills

Charley tells me you want a Guild[†3] cheque. Here it is—though I am afraid I have left you scant room for your signature. I have left the line "To Blank or Bearer" for you to fill in.

All right here. An Uncommercial has been snatched out of the Readings fire, by your active and intelligent Undersigned, and duly forms the first of the No. made up to day.[†4]

I start for Edinburgh and Glasgow on Wednesday Morning. Don't forget your engagement with me to dinner on Wednesday the 3rd of March.

Ever affecy.

CD.

To MOWBRAY MORRIS,[†1] [MID-FEBRUARY 1869]

Mention in To Kent, 19 Feb 69. Date: presumably written a few days before that letter.

TO WILKIE COLLINS, [15] FEBRUARY 1869

MS Morgan Library. Date: misdated by CD: Monday falls on 15 but not on 25 Feb; he left for Scotland on 20 Feb. Address (envelope, MS Durham Western Heritage Museum, Omaha): Wilkie Collins Esquire | 90 Gloucester Place | Portman Square | W. PM London 1[5] Feb 6[9].[†2]

A. Y. R. Office | Monday | Twenty Fifth February | 1869

My Dear Wilkie

I have read the play[†3] with great attention, and with a stage eye; and I think it will be A GREAT SUCCESS.[†4] It is highly interesting, admirably constructed and carried through, and very picturesque. Characters well marked and contrasted, sharp dialogue, and all good.

I am now going to make a suggestion or two.

The introduction and carrying on of that cane is so new and strong, that I don't think the culminating situation [†a] of that act[†a] up to it.[†5] Have you and Fechter ever thought of making the blow fall on Miss Leclercq [†a] by accident[†a]: of her being struck on the bosom, and declaring that she will bear the mark as a mark of glory and not of shame, because she loves him?[†6]

That is what I should do with it.

Before that situation, turn back to page 35.[†7] Would it not be better if Maurice's "You shall feel my cane on your back", were followed by Wolf's rejoinder (unheard by him on going off) "You shall feel it on yours."[†8]

Page 49. I would be very careful not to have too much measuring, and in particular not too much speaking about it.[†9] I would express as much as possible of that in the actors doubtful manner and indecision—with the fiddles and mutes on, in the Orchestra.

Pages 55 and 56. I cannot understand Fechter's gaiety here. I took it for certain, not having read to the end, that he had then got the letter for the Provost Marshal, in his pocket, and had read it. I cannot conceive his jesting at that time, under any other conditions. And I think that it destroys the effect of the letter when it does come.[†1]

This is all I have to say, except of praise and high hope.—And it's little enough, I think!

Ever affecy.

CD.

To GEORGE DOLBY, 15 FEBRUARY 1869

Extract from catalogue source in N, III, 705-6.

You know how earnestly I hope to get sword in hand again and that soon, and fight it out.[†2] I am as restless as if I were behind bars in the Zoological Gardens, and if I could afford it would wear a part of my mane away as the Lion has done by rubbing it against the windows of my cage.

To MR and MRS J. T. FIELDS,[†3] 15 FEBRUARY 1869†

MS Huntington Library.

A. Y. R. Office, London
Monday Fifteenth February 1869

My Dear Fields and Mrs. Fields.

Hurrah, Hurrah, Hurrah! It is a remarkable instance of magnetic sympathy that before I received your joyfully welcomed announcement of your probable visit to England, I was waiting for the enclosed card[†4] to be printed, that I might send you a clear statement of my "Readings". I felt almost convinced that you would arrive before the Farewells were over. What do you say to that?

The Final course of Four Readings in a week, mentioned in the enclosed Card, is arranged to come off, on Monday June 7th.

Tuesday June 8th.
Thursday June 10th.
and
Friday June 11th. Last night of all

We hoped to have finished in May, but cannot clear the country off in sufficient time. I shall probably be about the Lancashire towns in that month. There are to be 3 morning murders in London not yet announced, but they will be extra to the London nights I send you, and will in no wise interfere with them. We are doing most amazingly. In the country the people usually collapse with the murder, and don't fully revive in time for the final piece; in London, where they are much quicker, they are equal to both. It is very hard work; but I have never for a moment lost voice or been unwell:—except that my foot occasionally gives me a twinge. We shall have in London on the 2nd. of March for the 2nd. Murder night, probably the greatest assemblage of notabilities of all sorts, ever packed together. Dolby[†1] continues steady in his allegiance to the Stars and Stripes—sends his kindest regard—and is immensely excited by the prospect of seeing you. Gad's Hill is all ablaze on the subject. We are having such wonderfully warm weather that I fear we shall have a backward spring there. You'll excuse East [†a] winds—won't you—if they shake the flowers roughly[†a] when you first set foot on the lawn? I have only seen it once since Xmas, and that was from last Saturday to Monday when I went there for my birthday, and had the Forsters[†1] and Wilkie[†1] to keep it. I had had Mrs. Fields's[†1] letter four days before, and drank to you both, most heartily and lovingly.

I was with Macready[†1] a week or two ago. He is quite surprisingly infirm and aged. Could not possibly get on, without his second wife to take care of him: which she does to perfection. I went to Cheltenham expressly to do the Murder for him, and we put him in the front row, where he sat grimly staring at me. After it was over, he thus delivered himself, on my laughing it off and giving him some wine:—"No Dickens—er—"er—I will not"[†2]—with sudden emphasis—"er— have it—er—put aside. In my—er—best times—er—you remember them my dear boy—er—gone, gone!—no, I'll be damned"[†3]—with great emphasis again— "it comes to this—er—Two Macbeths!"[†3]—With extraordinary energy. After which he stood (with his glass in his hand and his old square jaw of its old fierce form) looking defiantly at Dolby[†1] as if Dolby[†1] had contradicted him; and then trailed off into a weak pale likeness of himself, as if his whole appearance had been some clever optical illusion.

I am away to Scotland on Wednesday next the 17th. to finish there. Ireland is already disposed of, and Manchester and Liverpool will follow within six weeks. "Like lights in a Theatre, they are being snuffed out fast"—as Carlyle says of the guillotined in his Revolution.[†4] I suppose I shall be glad when they are all snuffed out? Anyhow I think so, now.

The Nortons[†1] have a very pretty house at Kensington. He has quite recovered, and is positively getting fat. I dined with them last Friday at Forster's:[†1] having (marvellous to relate!) a spare day in London. The warm weather has greatly spared Forster's[†1] bronchitis; but I fear that he is quite unable to bear cold, or even changes of temperature, and that he will suffer exceedingly if East winds obtain. One would say they must at last, for it has been blowing a tempest from the S and S.W for weeks and weeks.

The safe arrival of my boy's ship in Australia has been telegraphed home, but I have not yet heard from him. His post will be due a week or so hence in London. My next boy is doing very well, I hope, at Trinity Hall, Cambridge. Of my seafaring boy's luck in getting a death-vacancy as Ist. Lieutenant, aboard a new ship of war on the South American Station,[†5] I heard from a friend, a captain in the Navy, when I was at Bath the other day: though we have not yet heard it from himself. Bath (setting aside remembrances of Roderick Random and Humphrey Clinker)†1 looked, I fancied, just as if a cemetery-full of old people had somehow made a successful rise against Death—carried the place by assault—and built a city with their grave-stones:—In which they were trying to look alive, but with very indifferent success.

†b Unlucky Katie's unlucky husband†b is no better, and no worse. Mary†2 and Georgina†2 send all manner of loves, and have already represented to me that the red jacketed postboys must be turned out for a summer expedition to Canterbury, and that there must be lunches among the corn fields, walks in Cobham Park, and a thousand other expeditions. Pray give our pretty Mabel†3 to understand that a great deal will be expected of her, and that she will have to look her very best, to look as I have drawn her. If your Irish people (Annie's)†2 turn up at Gads at the same time—as they probably will—they shall be entertained in the Yard, with muzzled dogs. I foresee that they will come over, haymaking and hopping, and will recognize their beautiful vagabonds at a glance.

I wish Reverdy Johnson†4 would dine in private and hold his tongue. He overdoes the thing.†5 †b Childs of Philadelphia†b is trying to get the Pope†6 to subscribe †b to the Ledger,†b†7 and to run over to take the chair at his next Newsboy's†2 Dinner, on which occasion Victor Emmanuel†8 is to propose Childs's†3 health, and may all differences among friends be referred †c to him. With much love always, and in high rapture at the thought of seeing you both here, Ever Your most affectionate

CD.†c

To SIR JAMES EMERSON TENNENT, 15 FEBRUARY 1869*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Sir James Emerson Tennent Bart:

A. Y. R. Office | Monday Fifteenth February 1869

My Dear Tennent.

I am very sorry that I cannot have the pleasure of accepting this paper†9 for insertion. But the subject is one, which (if we touch it at all, and that is doubtful as notices of books are rare with us), I stand beforehand bound to confide to another contributor.

Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [16 FEBRUARY 1869]

Extract in F, XI, i, 801. Date: 16 Feb 69, according to Forster.

Henry Thompson†1 will not let me read to-night, and will not let me go to Scotland to-morrow. Tremendous house here, and also in Edinburgh. Here is the certificate he drew up for himself and Beard to sign. "We the undersigned hereby certify that Mr. C. D. is suffering from inflammation of the foot.†2 (caused by over-exertion), and that we have forbidden his appearance on the platform this evening, as he must keep his room for a day or two." I have sent up to the Great Western Hotel for apartments, and, if I can get them, shall move there this evening. Heaven knows what engagements this may involve in April! It throws us all back, and will cost me some five hundred pounds.

To JAMES BIRTLES, [FEBRUARY 1869]

Extract in John Anderson Jr catalogue No. 983; MS I p.; with proof of "On an Amateur Beat". Date: "On an Amateur Beat" appeared in AYR, 27 Feb 69, N.S. I, 300; CD would have sent the proof c. 17 Feb.

Here are two corrections in my "Uncommercial" not made in the proof I sent from the office yesterday.

Faithfully yours

C.D.

To GEORGE DOLBY, 18 FEBRUARY 1869*

MS Dr and Mrs Gordon F. Madding.

Great Western Hotel | Thursday Eighteenth Feby 1869

My Dear Dolby.

I have received your Telegram, but have not otherwise heard from you. Foot decidedly better—much better. Good night last night. Airing in open carriage today. I have hopes of Saturday.[†3] Have seen both Arthur and Tom.[†4] Arthur will be in close attendance tomorrow, for the medical decision.

Kindest regard

Ever affecy.

CD.

To GEORGE DOLBY, 19 FEBRUARY 1869†

MS Maggs Bros Ltd.

Great Western Hotel | Friday Nineteenth February 1869

My Dear Dolby

First and foremost, there are three mistakes in the Scotch announcements.

1. I expressly overlooked your noting down Mr. C D. "purposes to have the honour of reading—" &c.[†1]

2. The terms of Thompson's certificate are altered.[†2] A liberty I should certainly not have taken with it myself, even if he had not been professionally particular about them.

3. I said to you in the strongest manner: "No Poor Traveller. Absurd to have to get it up for only one night. Particularly onerous to have to get anything up, under such circumstances."[†3] I could not have been more amazed if I had seen myself announced to read Jack The Giant Killer.

[†a] My growl being now growled out, I pass to the foot.

It is immensely better and free from pain. I am much the worse for pain and physic, but now await Beard's opinion whether I can start for Scotland in the morning. The weakness of the case, is, that I may start and get there, and still be unable to read! Because I cannot stand upon the foot now, and, if I cannot stand upon it then, cannot go upon the platform. That is clear. Both yesterday and this morning I was so very faint while dressing, that I was within an ace of Gone— and that might happen at night. There are the two days Saturday and Sunday, to be sure. But I must make a great rush in them, to be myself by Monday night. And then the journey and the effort may spoil me for our second London murder—by far (as it seems to me) the most important night of all. It is an immensely difficult question; and with every desire to be right, I don't know how to be right.

Later in the afternoon

We decide in favor of the Journey, so expect me by the usual train tomorrow at Edinburgh in the evening. Arthur Chappell kindly volunteers to take care of me, so expect him too. Kindest regard

Ever affectionately

CD.[†a]

To CHARLES KENT, 19 FEBRUARY 1869†

MS Walter T. Spencer.

Great Western Hotel | Friday Nineteenth February 1869

My Dear Kent

I am training and trying hard here, to get off to Scotland tomorrow. Constrained position makes it difficult to write.

[†a] I tell you, between ourselves, why I cannot write to Delane. His mother[†1] lying dead in his house, I could not write to him the other day about putting in the Times a paragraph I did for A. Y. R. about his, and my, old friend Macready[†a†2]— who had set his heart on my getting that done for him. But I wrote to Mowbray Morris instead. The Paragraph not being put in, and no notice whatever being taken of my private note, you see that I cannot write again without making some reference to this misadventure, which I would rather not do.

My foot is better, though it is not well. I had known for some days that the inflammation was coming on; but it is impossible to guard against it when that amount of standing in a hot place has to be encountered for months together.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To CHIEF SUPERINTENDENT WALKER,[†3] 19 FEBRUARY 1869*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia

GAD'S HILL PLACE, HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT[†4]
Friday Nineteenth February 1869

Dear Mr. Walker

Mr. Fechter the French Actor, a great friend of mine, has been robbed by his servants (as indeed he has been by almost everybody else in this country), and wants a Detective officer to go to his house at St. John's Wood, and help him out of his difficulties. If you will kindly assist him, I shall be very truly obliged to you.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Inspector Walker

To SIR JAMES EMERSON TENNENT, [? 19-20 FEBRUARY 1869]

Mention in To Mrs Forster, 8 Mar 69. Date: answering Tennent's invitation to dinner, which reached him "immediately before I left town", probably 19 Feb. CD no doubt replied at once.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?21 FEBRUARY 1869]

Extracts in F, xi, i, 802 and n. Date: both extracts from same letter of 21 Feb, from Edinburgh, according to Forster.

I came down lazily on a sofa,[†5] hardly changing my position the whole way. The railway authorities had done all sorts of things, and I was more comfortable than on the sofa at the hotel. The foot gave me no uneasiness, and has been quiet and steady all night.

The only news that will interest you is that the good-natured Reverdy Johnson, being at an Art Dinner in Glasgow[†1] the other night, and falling asleep over the post-prandial speeches (only too naturally) woke suddenly on hearing the name of `Johnson' in a list of Scotch painters[†2] which one of the orators was enumerating; at once plunged up, under the impression that somebody was drinking his health; and immediately, and with overflowing amiability, began returning thanks. The spectacle was then presented to the astonished company of the American Eagle being restrained by the coat tails from swooping at the moon, while the smaller birds endeavoured to explain how the case stood, and the cock robin in possession of the chairman's eye twittered away as hard as he could split.[†3] I am told that it was wonderfully droll.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, [21 FEBRUARY 1869]

MS (envelope only) Beinecke Library, Yale University. Address: Miss Hogarth | "All The Year Round" Office | 26 Wellington Street | Strand | London | W. C. PM Edinburgh 21 Feb 69.

Tell the Bootmaker to send that other boot here when done.[†4]

To MISS MARY DICKENS, [?23 FEBRUARY 1869]

Extract in F, XI, i, 802. Date: according to Forster, two days after his letter of 21 Feb, CD consulted Mr. Syme and wrote to his daughter.

Mr. Syme[†5] warned him against over-fatigue in the readings, gave him some slight remedies and reported him in "joost pairfactly splendid condition." With care, he thought the pain might be got rid of. "Wa'at mad' Thompson think it was goot?" he said often, and seemed to take that opinion extremely ill.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 25 FEBRUARY 1869*

MS Benoliel Collection

Glasgow,[†6] Thursday Twenty Fifth February 1869*

My Dearest Georgy

I received your letter at Edinburgh this morning. I did not write to you yesterday, as there had been no Reading on the previous night.

The foot bears the fatigue wonderfully well, and really occasions me no inconvenience beyond the necessity of wearing the big work of art. Syme saw me again this morning, and utterly scouted the gout notion altogether. I think the Edinburgh audience understood the Murder better, last night, than any audience that has heard it yet. "Business" is enormous, and Dolby jubilant.

It is a most deplorable afternoon here; deplorable, even for Glasgow. A great wind blowing, and Sleet driving before it in a storm of heavy blobs. We had to drive our train dead in the teeth of the wind, and got in here late, and are pressed for time.

[†a] I will write tomorrow to Justerini and Brooks, ordering wine and spirits for the Office.

In judging of Plorn's letter, we must remember the entirely new circumstances surrounding him, and the flutter of spirits consequent on writing at all.

I will write a line to Mamie tomorrow. Ever My Dearest Georgy

Your most affectionate

CHARLES DICKENS[†a]

Strange that in the North we have had absolutely no snow. There was a very thin scattering on the Pentlands[†1] for an hour or two, but no more.

To CHIEF SUPERINTENDENT WALKER, 25 FEBRUARY 1869*

Ms Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: Mr Chief Supt. Walker | Great Scotland Yard | London | S.W.

Edinburgh, Thursday Twenty Fifth February | 1869.

My Dear Mr. Walker

I am exceedingly obliged to you for your highly satisfactory letter,[†2] forwarded to me here this morning. It is the more welcome to me because it affords me an opportunity of congratulating you on your new appointment. I do so, most heartily. And I quite as heartily congratulate myself and the public on the possession of such an officer as you; being thoroughly certain that there is no better in the world.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Chief Supt. Walker

To W. H. WILLS, 25 FEBRUARY 1869

MS Huntington Library.

Edinburgh, Thursday Twenty Fifth February 1869

My Dear Wills

Yours received this morning.

I have been getting on exceedingly well with my foot, so far. Although I feel it a little fatigued by the standing at night, it has caused me no other inconvenience. "Business" here is tremendous![†1]

I shall hope to see you at the office on Tuesday. If not, I will write to you from thence, giving you the "fixture" for next day.

Ever affecy.
CD.

To MISS MARY DICKENS, [26 FEBRUARY 1869]

Extracts in F, XI, i, 802 and n. Date: mention in To Miss Hogarth, no doubt written same day.

The foot goes famously, I feel the fatigue in it (four Murders in one week)[†2] but not overmuch. It merely aches at night; and so does the other, sympathetically, I suppose.

The night before last, unable to get in, B.[†3] had a seat behind the screen, and was nearly frightened off it, by the Murder. Every vestige of colour left his face when I came off, and he sat staring over a glass of champagne in the wildest way.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 26 FEBRUARY 1869†

MS Huntington Library.

Edinburgh, | Friday Twenty Sixth February 1869

My Dearest Georgy

Writing tomorrow morning would be all but impracticable for me; — would be quite so for Dolby, who has to go to the Agents' and "settle up" in the midst of his breakfast. So I write today, in reply to your note received at Glasgow this morning.

The foot conducts itself splendidly. [†a] Both feet were tired last night, and ached in bed. But nothing worse.[†a] We had a most enormous cram at Glasgow; [†a] and turned £300 in a Hall supposed to hold £270.[†a] Syme saw me again yesterday (before I left here for Glasgow), and repeated "Gout!" with the greatest indignation and contempt, several times. The aching is going off as the day goes on, if it be worth mentioning again. The ride from Glasgow was charming this morning; the sun shining brilliantly, and the country looking beautiful.

[†a] You will see from my letter to Mary by this post that a letter of introduction from Sydney was delivered to me here to-day![†a]

I told you what the Nortons were. Mary's impression of Mabel Lowell is (as I wrote her) curiously wrong. She is a charming little thing, and very retiring in manner and expression.

We shall have a scene here tonight, no doubt. The night before last, Ballantyne, unable to get in, had a seat behind the screen—and was nearly frightened off it by the Murder. Every vestige of colour had left his face when I came off, and he sat staring over a glass of champagne in the wildest way. I have utterly left off my champagne, and, I think, with good results. Nothing during the Reading but a very little weak iced brandy and water.

I hope you will find me greatly improved on Tuesday.

Ever Your most affectionate

CD.

[†a] I have ordered for the office:

Sherry | Moselle | Brandy | Gin

Can you bring up to town with you, 2 more bottles of the very old brandy, for my travelling purposes?[†a]

To MESSRS JUSTERINI & BROOKS, [?26 FEBRUARY 1869]

Mention in To Miss Hogarth, 25 Feb 69. Date: presumably written the next day, as promised.

To ALEXANDER RUSSEL, 26 FEBRUARY 1869

Text from N, III, 707.

Edinburgh | Friday Twenty-sixth February 1869

My Dear Mr Russel,

I am as glad to have your friendly letter, as I am sorry to have missed you. But I shall hope when these Readings have subsided into the Past, to see you on some bright summer or autumn day at Gad's Hill. There is a cellar, deep in the chalk of that Falstaffian region, the contents of which have been stored up with some care. And as to its whisky—reference is kindly permitted to Peter Fraser and Ballantyne.

I shall be unaffectedly and heartily glad to see you, if you will give me a fair chance.

Many thanks for your remembrance of this my last night here. But the Oliver Twist murder driving all the breath out of my body, and this being the fourth[†1] time of my doing it in the present week,[†2] I have decided to remain mute on my own behalf; the rather as the precedent of taking leave would commit me at Manchester, Liverpool, and where not. Dolby will call at your office and duly explain this before dinner.

Believe me | Very faithfully yours

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To EDMUND HENDERSON,[†3] [28] FEBRUARY 1869

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, July 1972; MS I p.; dated Office of AYR, 29 Feb 69 [either CD's or cataloguer's mistake; probably 28 Feb]; addressed Colonel Edmund Henderson.

Informing him humorously and apologetically about the strange desire of an old schoolfellow, Mr. Mitton,[†4] for a post in the reorganisation of Scotland Yard.[†5] There may be clerkly or secretarial employment for one who knows London and its ways well, who has a solid acquaintance with common law—and who is a Solicitor of thirty years standing, with his credentials as an acute practical man to be thoroughly trusted . . . even if you wanted such a person for the service, the odds are fifty thousand to one that your experience would have found him long ago.

March

To CHARLES BLACK,[†6] 2 MARCH 1869

MS Beinecke Library, Yale University.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Second March 1869

My Dear Black

I am in town for today only,[†7] and find your letter. My "Farewell Readings" bring me from Scotland now, and carry me off again tomorrow. I regret to have been unable to support your friend.[†8]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Black Esquire

To MESSRS FIELDS, OSGOOD & CO., [2 MARCH 1869]

Mention in next. Date: written same day.

To MESSRS FIELDS, OSGOOD & CO., 2 MARCH 1869*

MS Buffalo and Erie County Public Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Second March 1869

Dear Sirs

Since writing to you by this mail in reference to Mr. Eytinge,[†1] I have received your letter concerning Mr. Booth. As I feel really obliged to that gentleman for his great zeal and energy, and as I am sure from experience that his charges will be correct, will you kindly inform him—without waiting for my receipt of his promised communication—that you are ready to pay them on my account, if he will let you know their amount?[†2]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Fields Osgood and Co.

To JOHN FORSTER, [2 MARCH 1869]

Extract in F (1872-4), III, xvii, 412. Date: 2 Mar 69, according to Forster.

Telling Forster that, before leaving Scotland, he had consulted James Syme, indignant with Thompson's diagnosis of gout and declaring the disorder to be an affection of the delicate nerves and muscles originating in cold. I told him that it had shewn itself in America in the other foot as well. "Noo

I'll joost swear," said he, "that ayond the fatigue o' the readings ye'd been tramping i' the snaw, within twa or three days." I certainly had. "Wa'al," said he triumphantly, "and hoo did it first begin? I' th' snaw. Goot! Bah!—Thompson knew no other name for it, and just ca'd it Goot.—Boh!" For which he took two guineas.

To SIR JAMES EMERSON TENNENT, 2 MARCH 1869*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Sir James Emerson Tennent Bart|66 Warwick Square|S.W.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Second March 1869

My Dear Tennent.

I thoroughly feel, and respond to, all that you say in your friendly letter.

But until I get these Readings over—there are 50 more to do—the occupation of my time is arduous and all but incessant. The only days I shall have at my disposal between this and the middle of June, are:

Wednesday 24th.	March
Thursday 25th.	"
Friday 26th	"
Saturday 27th	"

On either of these, I shall be truly and affectionately delighted to come to you, if either will suit your engagements.

And believe me My Dear Tennent | Faithfully Your friend
CHARLES DICKENS

To THE PRINCIPAL LIBRARIAN, BRITISH MUSEUM, [3 MARCH 1869]

Mention in Register of Letters received, MS British Library. Date: dated 3 Mar 69.

Recommending Charles Dickens Jnr for admission to the Reading Room.[†1]

To H. C. MERIVALE,[†2] 3 MARCH 1869

MS Rosenbach Museum and Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,|Wednesday Third March 1869

Dear Sir

I shall be happy to retain "The Last of the Low Comedians" for insertion, if you do not object to its being much condensed, and narrowed into a remembrance of Keeley.[†3] As I leave town tonight, have the goodness to address your reply to my son, Mr. Charles Dickens Junr. here.

You are incorrect, I think, in supposing the public to have been unacquainted with Keeley's pathetic side.[†4] In one of his most famous parts—Peter Spyk, in The Loan of a Lover[†5]—it was invariably recognized and highly acknowledged.

I take it for granted that you have seen him act Dogberry? I never did. But one of his most remarkable achievements, on the other hand, was Verges. Under

Mr. Macready's management of Drury Lane, he played that part with such unusual subtlety and skill, that he threw Dogberry into the shade. For he was so lost in admiration of that portentous Jackass, and became so much more and more absorbed in the contemplation of him as he became more and more ridiculous, that he in a manner appropriated Dogberry to himself. I remember his pride in being patted on the head by Dogberry, as something quite marvellous, by reason of the imbecile belief in him it expressed.[†1]

I think you do not mention the Sergeant's wife.[†2] His chronic terror, as servant in a murderous house, was wonderfully fine. In an unsuccessful piece at the Lyceum, founded on a story of Washington Irving's, he had seen a ghost before the curtain went up. It was marked in his face and manner, in the most extra-ordinary way.[†3] Such remembrances are essential to any review of his acting.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

H.C. Merivale Esquire

To MISS MARY DICKENS, 5 MARCH 1869

Extract in MDGH, II, 415-16.

Birmingham, Friday March 5th., 1869

This is to send you my best love, and to wish you many and many happy returns of to-morrow, which I miraculously remember to be your birthday.[†4]

I saw this morning a very pretty fan here. I was going to buy it as a remembrance of the occasion, when I was checked by a dim misgiving that you had a fan not long ago from Chorley. Tell me what you would like better, and consider me your debtor in that article, whatever it may be.

I have had my usual left boot on this morning, and have had an hour's walk. It was in a gale of wind and a simoom of dust, but I greatly enjoyed it. Immense enthusiasm at Wolverhampton last night over "Marigold."[†5] Scott made a most amazing ass of himself yesterday. He reported that he had left behind somewhere three books—"Boots," "Murder," and "Gamp." We immediately telegraphed to the office. Answer, no books there. As my impression was that he must have left them at St. James's Hall, we then arranged to send him up to London at seven this morning. Meanwhile (though not reproached), he wept copiously and audibly. I had asked him over and over again, was he sure he had not put them in my large black trunk? Too sure, too sure. Hadn't opened that trunk after Tuesday night's reading. He opened it to get some clothes out when I went to bed, and there the books were! He produced them with an air of injured surprise, as if we had put them there.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 5 MARCH 1869*

MS Huntington Library.

Birmingham,|Friday Fifth March 1869

My Dearest Georgy

I am sorry to have your report of poor little Noggs.[†1] The best course will be to have him humanely and promptly killed. Toby,[†2] I should say, is certainly too large for the space. George[†3] had better look about him, and ascertain what he could buy for the purpose, and inform me through you of particulars.

Foot no worse, but sensitive. I am trying a boot this morning for a little while, but doubt if I shall be able to keep it on long.

Mamie shall be duly written to.

Ever affecy.

CD.

To HENRY DICKENS, 6 MARCH 1869*

MS Major P.C. Dickens.

Manchester, Saturday Evening, Sixth March 1869

My Dear Harry

I receive your letter here this afternoon.

I have so much to do with Reading and Travelling, that I seldom look into the Chappells' dates. It is quite clear that as to Cambridge they are altogether wrong. Taking action on your sensible suggestion, I let them know by this post (through Dolby) that the Cambridge Night must be changed.[†4]

Would Thursday 29th. April do? Reply by return—or Telegraph instead: which will be better—to me, Queen's Hotel, Manchester.

Dolby sends kindest remembrance

In haste|Ever Your affectionate Father

CHARLES DICKENS

To GEORGE DOLBY, [6 MARCH 1869]

Mention in last. Date: written same day.

Telling the Chappells, through Dolby, that the night for reading at Cambridge must be changed.

To [?EDWARD] INDERWICK,[†5] [6 MARCH 1869]

Mention in To Fitzgerald, 7 Mar. Date: written day before.

To MRS CATTERMOLE, 7 MARCH 1869

Text from facsimile in Remember When Auctions catalogue, 1999. Address: Mrs. Cattermole | 32 Osborne Terrace | Clapham Road | London.

Queen's Hotel Manchester
Sunday Seventh March 1869

My Dear Mrs. Cattermole

Thanks for the catalogue.[†1] I am very sorry not to be in town to see the sketches or attend the sales, but I am not likely to be there for more than a single day at a time until next June.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To PERCY FITZGERALD, 7 MARCH 1869

MS Folger Shakespeare Library.

Manchester, Sunday Seventh Mar[ch 186]9[†2]

My Dear FitzGerald

I had a business letter of reference from your landlord, Mr. Inderwick, at Birmingham yesterday, and immediately replied to the same.

Don't hate me—more than you can help—when I say that I have been reading the Sixpenny Shakespeare, and that I don't see it.[†3] I don't think the joke is worth the great ingenuity expended on it, and I don't think the public would take it. "Wills and Will Making",[†4] most excellent. I have placed it—in two parts— already. It is capital!

Once again, Don't hate me more than you can help, and Your Petitioner will ever pray (I don't know what Petitioners pray for)

Ever Yours
CD.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 7 MARCH 1869†

MS Huntington Library.

Queen's Hotel, Manchester[†5]
Sunday Seventh March 1869

My Dearest Georgy

[†a] Your yesterday's letter duly received here this morning. I wonder how you have got over the Birth Day Festivities![†6]

Nothing can be done about the Olliffe Tickets,[†1] without the tickets themselves. If you can return them to Arthur Chappell, pray do. They are charged, in Chappell's account, to Dolby. This reminder will enable them to understand the matter.

Both feet are still sympathetically sensitive. But I wear my regular boots, and have no other inconvenience. I can walk for an hour at a time, pretty comfortably.[†a]

We have had our sitting room chimney afire this morning, and have had to turn out elsewhere to breakfast; but the chamber has since been cleaned up, and we are reinstated. Manchester is (for Manchester) bright and fresh.

Tell Russell[†2] that a crop of Hay is to be got off the meadow this year, before the club[†3] use it. They did not make such use of it last year, as reconciles me to losing another hay-crop. So they must wait until the hay is in, before they commence active operations.

Poor Olliffe! I am truly sorry to read those sad words about his suffering, and fear that the end is not far off.[†4]

We are very comfortably housed here, and certainly that immense Hall[†5] is a wonderful place for its size. Without much greater expenditure of voice than usual, I a little enlarged the action last night; and Dolby (who went to all the distant points of view) reported that he could detect no difference between it and any other place. As always happens now—and did not at first—they were immensely taken by Noah Claypole's laugh. But the go, throughout, was enormous. Sims Reeves[†6] was doing Henry Bertram[†7] at the Theatre, and of course took some of our shillings. It was a night of excitement for Cottonopolis.

I received from Mrs. Keeley this morning, a very good photograph of poor old Bob.[†8] Yesterday I had a letter from Harry, reminding me that our intended Cambridge day is the day next after that of the Boat-Race![†9] Clearly it must be changed.

[†b] Will you send Mrs. Forster, for Forster, Charles Knight's address.[†10] He wants it, and—of course—I have not the faintest idea what it is except that it is somewhere, Hampstead.

Ever My Dearest Georgy | Your most affectionate

CD.[†b]

To MRS KEELEY, 7 MARCH 1869*

MS Ipswich Borough Council.

Queen's Hotel, Manchester
Sunday Seventh March 1869

My Dear Mrs. Keeley

I cannot tell you how much I feel your sending me the portrait of your dear good husband. It reached me here this morning, and the sight of it most truly affected me.

I was in Scotland when he died, and I[†1] did actually take pen in hand to write to you then. But a fear of causing you more pain than comfort at such a time, withheld me.

You know of old, I hope, that no one among his many friends can have had a higher respect for him, or a profounder admiration of his qualities as a great artist, than I have always had.[†2] Many and many a year ago, I remember how I was impelled to write to him after seeing you both in the Loan of a Lover,[†3] expressing the extraordinary pleasure I had had in that most charming acting. And but the other day—though before he was lost to us—when I was dining with Macready at Cheltenham, we both at the same instant cited his Verges as one of the most surprising instances within our experience of the manner in which a great actor can absorb an apparently much greater part than his, into his own, without the slightest obtrusion of himself.[†4]

Being in town a few days ago—in the course of this last week—I arranged to have a little paper in remembrance of him prepared for "All The Year Round",[†5] which I will send you when it is published, and which I hope will not displease you. I noted down for it, myself, two or three of his subtle touches, the record of which may be interesting and suggestive years hence.

Accept my most cordial thanks for the portrait, and the sincere assurance that I am Ever
Faithfully Your friend
CHARLES DICKENS

To G. A. SALA, 7 MARCH 1869

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Queen's Hotel, Manchester
Sunday Seventh March 1869

My Dear Sala.

I feel the difficulty of introducing the name of the writer, to be insuperable. Because it would be a departure from the invariable custom of the Journal, for the express purpose of plunging into a controversy not of its originating or previous pursuing.

But surely you can express that you write the paper, without attaching your name in so many capital letters to it? If you feel with me that this can certainly be done, I will gladly accept it, and—in observance of my bounden duty to stand by my order—will give prominence to any temperate protest against this Mr. Maguire's[†6] attack[†7] in a place where answer cannot be made.[†1] Only make sure in your mind of one thing:—Is the attack worth answering; or, by the very act of answering, do you give an obscure M.P. notoriety:—the gift of all others that he brays and prays for?[†2]

Let me know what you "conclude"—as our American friends say. A letter will find me at The Royal Station Hotel, Hull, almost any time this next week. Yours came to hand here this morning.

always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS[†3]

To MRS FORSTER, 8 MARCH 1869

Text from MDGH, III, 273.

Queen's Hotel, Manchester | Monday, 8th March, 1869

My Dear Mrs. Forster

A thousand thanks for your note, which has reached me here this afternoon. At breakfast this morning Dolby showed me the local paper with a paragraph in it recording poor dear Tennent's death.[†4] You may imagine how shocked I was. Immediately before I left town this last time, I had an unusually affectionate letter from him, enclosing one from Forster, and proposing the friendly dinner since appointed for the 25th. I replied to him in the same spirit, and felt touched at the time by the gentle earnestness of his tone. It is remarkable that I talked of him a great deal yesterday to Dolby (who knew nothing of him), and that I reverted to him again at night before going to bed—with no reason that I know of. Dolby was strangely impressed by this, when he showed me the newspaper.

God be with us all!

Ever your affectionate
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To CLARKE ASPINALL,[†5] 9 MARCH 1869

MS British Transport Hotels.

Royal Station Hotel, Hull[†6] | Tuesday Ninth March 1869

My Dear Sir

I am very unwilling to trouble you, but I have been applied to by four friends to help them to purchase tickets, and obtain suitable places at the Dinner with which I am to be honoured next month in Liverpool.

The first is my eldest son.

The second is the Secretary of my Readings, Mr. George Dolby.

The third is Mr. Chorley, a distinguished musical critic and writer.

And the fourth is Mr. Charles Eliot[†1] Norton of Cambridge, Massachusetts, famous in America for his Italian scholarship.

If you can assist me to assist these gentlemen, I shall be greatly obliged to you. I must not omit to add that I should like Mr. Henry Hine[†2] of Liverpool to be able to obtain a ticket, as I have had a most favorable experience of his zeal and honorable dealing on all occasions. But I do not include him in the category of special places.

This address will find me until Saturday morning inclusive. After that time any letter addressed to me at my own house will be forwarded without delay.

My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Clarke[†3] Aspinall Esquire

To CHARLES ELIOT NORTON, 10 MARCH 1869*

MS Houghton Library, Harvard. Address: Charles E. Norton Esquire | 18 Queen's Gate Terrace | Kensington | London | W.

Hull, Wednesday Tenth March 1869

My Dear Norton

I am sorry to say that I must not dine out in Passion Week:—my only spare time until the end of these Farewells. My foot has recovered wonderfully; but I must, emphatically and severely, rest when I can.

Assuming you to be still in the same mind about the Liverpool dinner (10th. of April) I yesterday wrote to the Honorary Secretary giving him your name as that of a particular friend desiring a ticket and a special place. I have not the least idea what the arrangements are (except that I hear they are quarreling about seats), and will report his answer. No doubt it will be satisfactory.

Pray explain for me to Ruskin that I am not—and why I am not—a free agent just now, with this weight of work upon my back, and strict medical injunction atop of it.

I have great hope of Grant.—Charles Sumner, on the other hand, appears to me to be developing a genius for going wrong.[†4]

Forster and I have just lost a dear friend in Sir Emerson Tennent who died so suddenly last Saturday. He was at my last London reading, and I left London this last time with a letter from him in my hand.

My best love to Mrs. Norton and to all the house.

Ever My Dear Norton | Your affectionate
CHARLES DICKENS

To ANDREW W. TUER,[†1] 10 MARCH 1869

Text from Anderson Galleries, 10 Dec 1936. MS 1 p.; dated Hull, 10 Mar 69; addressed Andrew W. Tuer.

I am exceedingly sorry that any member of my audience at St. James's Hall on the 2nd should have been inconvenienced. Personally, however, I have no more to do with the arrangements in the front of the Hall than you have; except that I always lay great stress on the strictest faith being kept with the Public in all respects.

To AUSTEN HENRY LAYARD, [?12 MARCH 1869]

Mention in To Layard, 13 Mar 69. Date: probably written day before.

Introducing Thomas Hyde Hills[†2] to him.

To AUSTEN HENRY LAYARD, 13 MARCH 1869

MS British Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Saturday Thirteenth March 1869

My Dear Layard

Coming to town for a couple of days, from York, I find your beautiful present.[†3] With my heartiest congratulations on your marriage,[†4] accept my most cordial thanks for a possession that I shall always prize foremost among my worldly goods; firstly, for your sake; secondly, for its own.

Not one of these glasses shall be set on table until Mrs. Layard is there, to touch with her lips the first champagne that any of them shall ever hold! This vow has been registered in solemn triumvirate at Gad's Hill.

The first week in June will about see me through my present work, I hope. I came to town hurriedly to attend poor dear Emerson Tennent's funeral.[†5] You will know how my mind went back, in the York[†1] up-train at midnight, to Mount Vesuvius and our Neapolitan supper.[†2]

I have given Mr. Hills, of Oxford Street (Bell and Co. Pharmaceutical Chemists, and in fact incarnate Oxford Street), the letter of introduction to you that you kindly permitted. He has immense local influence, and could carry his neighbours in favour of any good design.

My Dear Layard | Ever Cordially Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To DR CHARLES MACKAY, 13 MARCH 1869

Text from N, III, 712.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Saturday Thirteenth March 1869

My Dear Mackay,

I have informed Mr. Pike[†3] of the general contents of your letter, and have reserved your name.— Here is his book.[†4]

Faithfully yours always
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To MISS TENNENT, 13 MARCH 1869*

MS Morgan Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Saturday Night, Thirteenth March 1869

My Dear Miss Tennent

I am anxious that you should know that I have only just now received your letter: so constantly and rapidly have I been changing from place to place during the past week. It was most kind of you to think of me at such a time, and I deeply feel it.

I was at Manchester when I received the printed tidings of what had happened,[†5] followed within a few hours by a note from Mrs. Forster. It was difficult in the first shock of so terrible a surprise, to understand or believe it, and it was only when my thoughts had rested long upon your dear mother's grief and yours, that I began to realize the loss of my dear good gentle friend. I loved him better than I can tell. It was only on the very day when I last left town, that I got such a tender note from him as brought the tears into my eyes. Somehow it so remarkably impressed me and so filled my mind with him, that several times on the day of his death, and all last Sunday, I spoke of him to my travelling companion, the Secretary of my Readings—who had no personal knowledge of him. I reverted to him again as that gentleman and I were parting to go to bed on the Sunday night; and when he brought me the local newspaper on Monday Morning, and said "I am afraid I must prepare you for painful news here," he told me that he had been stricken dumb by the sight of the name when he rose, which had been the last words on my lips before he lay down.

I hope I know how good your mother is, and how consolation will come to her out of her own fine nature, and the mercy of God, and your ministrations. Among your many friends there cannot be one more faithfully bound to you both, in loving and honouring remembrance of the dead than I shall always be while I live. In true sympathy and affection.

Ever Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To W. J. FARRER, 14 MARCH 1869*

MS Private.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Saturday Fourteenth March 1869

My Dear Sir

I beg to return you the Legacy Receipt duly signed.[†1]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

William James Farrer Esquire

To MADAME CELESTE, 15 MARCH 1869

MS Laurence Senelick.

26 Wellington Street London
Monday Fifteenth March 1869

My Dear Madame Celeste

I would very willingly write to your daughter[†2] if I had any suggestion to offer, but I really have none. The ladies and gentlemen concerned are the best judges of what is in the compass of their powers and means, and are far more likely to be successful with something of their own originating than with anybody else's notion.[†3]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Madame Celeste Elliott

To MISS FLORENCE OLLIFFE,[†1] 16 MARCH 1869

Text from MDGH, 111, 275.

26, Wellington Street, Tuesday, 16th March, 1869

My Dear Florence,

I have received your kind note this morning, and I hasten to thank you for it, and to assure your dear mother of our most cordial sympathy with her in her great affliction, and in loving remembrance of the good man and excellent friend we have lost. The tidings of his being very ill indeed had, of course, been reported to me. For some days past I had taken up the newspaper with sad misgivings; and this morning, before I got your letter, they were realised.

I loved him truly. His wonderful gentleness and kindness, years ago, when we had sickness in our household in Paris,[†2] has never been out of my grateful remembrance. And, socially, his image is inseparable from some of the most genial and delightful friendly hours of my life. I am almost ashamed to set such recollections by the side of your mother's great bereavement and grief, but they spring out of the fulness of my heart.

May God be with her and with you all!

Ever yours affectionately
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To DR CHARLES MACKAY, 17 MARCH 1869

Text from N, 111, 713.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Seventeenth March 1869

My Dear Mackay

As Mr. Pike has grown reasonable, perhaps we may give a word of record of "the fact of the dispute"?[†3]

Faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 20 MARCH 1869†

MS Huntington Library. Address (envelope, MS Chicago Public Library): Miss Hogarth | Gad's Hill Place | Higham | Rochester | Kent. PM 20 Mar 69.

Queen's Hotel, Manchester
Saturday Twentieth March 1869

My Dearest Georgy

Getting yours, and its enclosure Mary's note, at 2 this afternoon, I write a line at once in order that you may have it on Monday Morning.

†a The account of the Olliffe family quite horrifies me. I am haunted by it, and cannot get it out of my thoughts. But it is in the chin and cheekbone of the race by the mother's side, and they will be anatomical tell-tales for centuries.†a†1

The Theatre Royal Liverpool will be a charming place to read in. Ladies are to dine at the dinner, and we hear it is to be a very grand affair. Dolby is doubtful whether it may not "hurt the business" by drawing a great deal of money in another direction—which I think possible enough. Trade is very bad here,†2 and the gloom of the Preston Strike seems to brood over the place.†3 The Titiens Company†4 have been doing wretchedly. I should have a greater sympathy with them if they were not practising in the next room now.

My love to Letitia and Harriette,†5 wherein Dolby (highly gratified by being held in remembrance) joins, with the same to you.

I am ever my Dearest Georgy | Your most affectionate

CD.

To W. P. FRITH, 21 MARCH 1869†

MS Victoria & Albert Museum.

Manchester, Sunday Twenty First March 1869

My Dear Frith

†a I have your letter here. What you write of the murder gives me very high gratification. Because I know that you know what passion and expression are, and I esteem your praise accordingly.†a

My dear fellow, the Mrs. Cattermole case is one of the most difficult and dispiriting I ever had to do with. That vague evasiveness which was poor Cattermole's besetting sin, so wore out his friends for years and years, that it is impossible to kindle enthusiasm in the cause. The shadow of mistrust is always upon it. I hardly know why, but I cannot help suspecting that when Mrs. Frith†6 saw Mrs. Cattermole fireless, there was an uncommonly good fire in the next room. This is between ourselves, of course, but I notice so much protestation and profession, and so much discrepancy in little things, that I rather wince. Just before Cattermole's death, I was particularly struck by the outward and visible aspect†1 of the two young men,†2 as compared with the utter forlornness and desolation of Mrs. Cattermole's family-picture.

I think a public appeal would be merely a waste of the money that making it would cost; for I believe that it would not be responded to. As to investing the money we have, there is so little to invest, that it's result would be infinitessimally helpful. Don't you think that the best way will be for you and I to call together that Clapham gentleman who is associated with us in the appeal— Bicknell—and two or three more of the chief subscribers—and take the general opinion what is best to be done? If you agree, and will send me the names and addresses, my people at the Office of All the Year Round shall send out a circular calling a meeting there—say for Tuesday April 13th. which will be a good long notice, and on which evening I read in town? Answer at your leisure, 26 Wellington Street Strand.

I send your kind message on to my eldest daughter today, and I know she will be—as she ought to be—proud of it. With kindest regard at home, I am always My Dear Frith

Cordially Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 21 MARCH 1869

MS Huntington Library.

Manchester | Sunday Twenty First March 1869

My Dearest Georgy

†a I send the cheque for the horse-keep, forgotten yesterday.†a Will you tell Mary—I don't know where she is—that I have had a letter from Frith, in which he says that he will be happy to show her his pictures "any day in the first week of April".†3 I have replied that she will be proud to receive his invitation. His object in writing was to relieve his mind about the Murder:-of which he cannot say enough.

Tremendous enthusiasm here last night—calling in the most thunderous manner after Marigold—and again after the Trial,—shaking the great Hall, and cheering furiously.

Love to all | †a Ever my Dearest Georgy
Your most affectionate
CD.†a

To DR J. SHERIDAN MUSPRATT, 2[1] MARCH 1869

Text from N, 111, 714. Date: N probably misread "First" for "Fifth"; CD was in Manchester on 21, but not on 25 March.

Manchester | Twenty Fifth March 1869

My Dear Muspratt

I don't know what has become of the photograph you mention in your note of the 17th. Pending the accomplishment of these last Readings, I am so continually travelling, and have such a very large business correspondence (arising out of my journal) to receive and despatch, that it is possible that the letter may have been detained at—or sent on to—All The Year Round Office, among some heap of papers. I shall be there on Wednesday, and will have a strict search made. No such letter has reached my travelling desk.

Many thanks for your kind invitation. But I am quite unable to accept it, for the simple reason that while these Readings last, every interval of rest and silence that I can possibly get, I am obliged to appropriate to myself. I have not made a visit of any kind since they began, and have sacrificed (it being impossible to do them by halves) every kind of social plans to their imperious demands. I saw Macready a few weeks ago. He is tolerably well, though very infirm. He cannot write, because he has a stiffness in his hands which renders the endeavour painful and distressing.

When I cannot come to you, it reasonably follows that I am not able to go to Mr. Adams Acton.[†1] As to sitting!—Never more, if I know it, to mortal man! I beg to send my compliments to Mrs. Muspratt,[†2]

And am always, faithfully Yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 22 MARCH 1869

Extract in S. J. Davey catalogue, undated (given in F. G. Kitton, "Dickens Ana II", Dickens House); MS 1 p.; dated Office of AYR, 22 Mar 69.

It is impossible that any human creature can have less knowledge of the French Government and Court than I have. As one who utterly despises both, I have no personal interest in, or influence with either.

To THE LADIES and GENTLEMEN OF THE THEATRE, through MR CLARKE,[†3] 24 MARCH 1869

MS Dunedin Public Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Twenty Fourth March 1869

Ladies and Gentlemen

I beg to assure you that I am much gratified by the desire you do me the honor to express in your letter handed to me by Mr. John Clarke.

Before that letter reached me, I had heard of your wish, and had mentioned to Messrs. Chappell that it would be highly agreeable to me to anticipate it, if possible. They readily responded, and we agreed upon having three Morning Readings[†1] in London. As they are not yet publicly announced,[†2] I add a note of the days and subjects:

Saturday May 1st. Boots at the Holly Tree Inn, and Sikes and Nancy from Oliver Twist.

Saturday May 8th. The Christmas Carol.

Saturday May 22nd. Sikes and Nancy from Oliver Twist, and The Trial from Pickwick.

With the warmest interest in your Art, and in its claims upon the general gratitude and respect.

Believe me always | Faithfully Your Friend

CHARLES DICKENS

To | The Ladies and Gentlemen, | My correspondents | Through Mr. Clarke

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 25 MARCH 1869*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Twenty Fifth March 1869

My Dearest Georgy

I am indeed deeply sorry to hear of poor Katie Macready.[†3] But I told you that instantaneous look of Mrs. Macready's seemed to me to convey everything. That she will be the kindest and best nurse Katie could have—if she should come back alive[†4]—I have not [in spite of the Forsters] one grain of doubt.

After making up the No.[†5] here to day, I have set myself to the ruthless destruction of every kind of paper stowed away in the hiding places of Wills's room. In so much useless beastliness I could hardly have believed, except for the filth with which I am begrimed from head to foot. The experience is like one of the old Miser Stories. However, I have laid about me right and left, and I mean to lay about me systematically right and left, and I will have the place in good order, and with no holes and corners in it, or I will flutter the Doves out of their lives.[†6]

I have been so hard at it here, that I have heard no news whatever. I went to look at a house yesterday—a corner house too—and on the verge of my own pet situation![†7] I only looked at it outside, as there is no announcement of its being to be sold, and I had no card. But it was forwarded to me as a bargain by the Agents, and I have informed them that I am ready to pursue the subject.[†1]

Love to Harry, Laetitia, and Harriette.

[†a][

]

My Dearest Georgy | Ever Your most affectionate

CD.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 26 MARCH 1869*

MS Huntington Library. Date: Good Friday was 26 Mar in 1869.

Good Friday, 1869

My Dearest Georgy

When you come up, please bring with you Mrs. Clarke's Concordance to Shakespeare.[†2]

Love to all. | Ever Most affecy.

CD.

To MISS E. L. SMITH,[†3] 28 MARCH 1869

Envelope only (signed) mentioned in Sotheby's catalogue, July 1976; postmarked London 2 Mar 69; addressed Miss E. L. Smith | 54 India Street | Edinburgh.

To CHARLES HAMILTON AIDÉ, 29 MARCH 1869*

MS New York Public Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Monday Twenty Ninth March 1869

My Dear Sir

I have read your story[†4] carefully; and I will now venture to suggest to you what it wants, for the purposes of such constantly-broken serial publication as it could have in these pages.

I don't think that the title expresses itself, or suggests any thing. Another title—for any form of publication—I strongly recommend.[†5]

It appears to me that the story misses perhaps its strongest point in John Miles.[†6] If he were presented in the beginning with much stronger individuality, and with something quaint in him that should be almost droll while exceedingly loveable,[†7] his influence in carrying the book would be immense. I would make him the distinctest character in the story:-[†1] or quite as distinct as the heroine.[†2] (A little point of art-management would lie in his making the existence of that Aunt at Salisbury, and even her being subject to sudden illnesses, easily known to the reader at about that period of the story when his certificate is on the carpet.)[†3]

I would have no detective interference whatever. For two reasons. Firstly, because the whole army of novel writers have it; and secondly because Lowndes's[†4] doing the whole thing himself would not only render him the more important, but would be his first practical exhibition of indomitable perserverance. To set him up with the reader, no help would answer like self help alone.[†5]

I think that county-man who made the heroine the offer,[†6] should reappear towards the close. His affecting to congratulate himself on what he had escaped, and John Miles's roundly telling him (faithful to his ill-starred love) what he had lost, and therein depicting his own loss, would be very pretty, surely.[†7]

The whole of the story after the heroine goes to Salisbury, wants screwing up tighter, and to be brought closer, and made more picturesque and vivid in the acting out. And I would suggest to you that it morally wants, at last, a most generous, delicate, and fervent appreciation on the part of Lowndes of the worth of John Miles.[†8] Such appreciation to be known to John Miles.

Thus altered, and touched here and there at the end of weekly parts—to heighten expectation and lead to the next part—I should be very glad indeed to accept the Novel for these pages.

I have perfect confidence in your understanding that I do not expect you to see your work from my point of view, and that I am far from supposing myself to be infallible. My hints take the course that my pen would take if the story were mine, and also the course that I believe to be the most likely to enlist the sympathy of a large circle of miscellaneous readers. If you (as is very likely) prefer to keep your work in its present shape, there is no harm done, and I shall have had the pleasure of reading a book of great merit in advance of the public.

Believe me always My Dear Sir
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Hamilton Aidé Esquire

To GEORGE GODWIN,[†1] 29 MARCH 1869†

MS Berg Collection.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Monday Twenty Ninth March 1869

My Dear Mr. Godwin

I am heartily glad to receive your note, and to be held in your kind remembrance. But I fear that I must deny myself the pleasure of being with you on the 26th. of April (as [†a] I am forced to deny myself every social pleasure while my "Farewell Readings" last); for on the 27th. I read in London, and on the 28th. resume my tearing about the country,[†a] suspended for only two busy evenings.

Believe me always | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

George Godwin Esquire

To HENRY BICKNELL, 30 MARCH 1869

Text from N, 111, 715.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday, Thirtieth March, 1869

My Dear Bicknell,

Will you meet Frith and Mr. Vokins[†2] here on Tuesday April 13th at 2, to consider what shall be done with the Cattermole Fund.[†3]

With kindest regards. | Faithfully yours always
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To W. P. FRITH, 30 MARCH 1869

Extract in John Wilson catalogue No. 18 (1974); MS ½ p.; signed initials; dated Office of AYR, 30 Mar 69.

2 o'Clock on Tuesday the 13th. April, here. I forget Bicknell's address.[†4] Will you kindly put it on the enclosed.

To CHARLES KENT, 30 MARCH 1869*

MS Ralph Crawford.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Thirtieth March 1869

My Dear Kent

I shall be here at a quarter before Three this afternoon.

Ever affecy.
CD.

To W.H. WILLS, 30 MARCH 1869

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Thirtieth March 1869

My Dear Wills.

You will be glad to hear that Wilkie's play[†1] went brilliantly last night. It was extremely well played throughout, and I have rarely seen Fechter to greater advantage. It was more like a fiftieth night than a first. Everything was exactly as I left it after four or five hours at it on Saturday. Not a word or a person out of place. I told Fechter that he ought to thank every one concerned, down to the Supers, for their remarkable care and attention. Which he did when the Curtain fell. There is no doubt that it ought to run, for it has real merit and is most completely and delicately presented.

By this time I hope you will have had a touch or two of warm weather. Bitter East winds, hail, snow, and other ingenious congelations of rain, are the rule here. All well and brilliant personally. I have had a great burning of papers in your room—have destroyed everything not wanted—and have laid in a stock of Dictionaries and reference-books.

"Our Mr. C Greatorex"[†2] is in communication with me about a house that promises:—but I have not yet been inside it. He seems to be a very fair and honest fellow.

I went to see old Poole yesterday, who was full of interest about you. He was so dirty, smelt so ill, and scratched himself so horribly, that he turned my stomach. I came back in a Hansom, quite sick, and was revived (by Georgina) with brandy. N.B. I have scratched myself ever since, and am doing so now.

This is all my news, except that I send my love to Mrs. Wills. If that Church Organ in your head will but leave off playing Voluntaries,[†3] you have nothing else—that I know of—to trouble yourself about; so stick to the Mountains and the Spanish border.

Ever affectionately

CD

I am off for Sheffield,[†4] Birmingham,[†5] and Liverpool,[†6] tomorrow morning. Dombey tonight.[†7]

To MRS HENRY AUSTIN, 31 MARCH 1869*

MS Morgan Library

Sheffield,
Wednesday Thirty First March 1869

My Dear Letitia

I think I have drawn the enclosed cheque for the right amount?[†1]—I have a strong belief and hope that Harriette will derive great benefit from the treatment. Tell her so, with my love.

Ever affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS[†2]

April

To DR ALFRED STEPHENS,[†3] 2 APRIL 1869*

MS Private. Address: Dr. Stephens | 4 Upper Parliament Street | Liverpool

Birmingham,
Friday Second April 1869

Dear Sir

Before receiving your letter here this morning I had already answered another invitation to inspect your noble Institution[†4] by expressing my regret that I could not undertake to do so on the occasion of my forthcoming visit to Liverpool.

I have absolute need of every interval of rest and silence that I can possibly obtain. I have now been constantly travelling, and speaking in great buildings, since last October; nor can I hope for any cessation of these fatigues until June. Added to them, I have always on my hands the active supervision of a weekly literary journal. While so engaged I find it impossible to make appointments or visits and am obliged to deny myself for the time all such sources of interest.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS[†5]

Dr. Stephens

To R.S. BARTLETT,[†1] 3 APRIL 1869†

MS Beinecke Library, Yale University.

Adelphi Hotel, Liverpool | Saturday Night, Third April 1869

Dear Sir

I am exceedingly obliged to you for your kind offer of a Raven, and beg you to accept my cordial thanks. But [†a] my gardener waged such war with my last Raven (on account of his flower-destroying propensities), and that accomplished bird splintered so much carpentry work and achieved so much general desolation about the stable yard that, sorely against my will, I was obliged to part company with his Kind.[†a]

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

R. S. Bartlett Esquire

To W. C. MACREADY, 3 APRIL 1869†

MS Morgan Library

Adelphi Hotel, Liverpool
Saturday Third April, 1869

My Dearest Macready

†a I have received your letter here to day, and deeply feel with you and for you the affliction of poor dear Katie's loss.†2 I was not unprepared for the sad news; but it comes in such a rush of old remembrances and withered joys, that it strikes to the heart.

God bless you! Love and youth are still beside you, and in that thought I take comfort for my dear old friend.†a

With love to Mrs. Macready and my noble boy, I am ever My Dearest Macready

Your most affectionate and faithful

CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS MARY DICKENS, [4 APRIL 1869]

Mention in next. Date: written same day.

To GEORGINA HOGARTH, 4 APRIL 1869

MS Berg Collection.

Adelphi Hotel, Liverpool | Sunday Fourth April, 1869

My Dearest Georgy

By this post I send to Mary, the truly affecting account of poor dear Katie's death.†3 It is as sorrowful as any thing so peaceful and trustful can be. You were a little hasty about Mrs. Macready's first letter. It was disagreeable, but I have always observed that she writes as one conscious of a letter-writing reputation (which I have no doubt she has established at home), and that she founds her sentences on the Elegant Extracts and Speaker.†1 This last letter being written wholly under emotion has no such drawback.

God forgive me, but I cannot get over that mania for proprietorship which is rampant in Palace Gate House.†2 I have had a letter from Forster about poor Katie: "You may imagine the shock and blow it is to me—" and all that—me, me, me—as if there were no poor old broken friend in the case. Well! So challenged and defied to remember, as it were, I cannot forget when she gave offence to the dignity enthroned in Montague Square,†3 and how, one day at dinner when I threw in a word or two for her, the reply was:—"A very offensive and improper young person, and I wish to hear no more about her." I hate myself for harping on such strings, and yet I feel that I should hate myself much more as a monstrous humbug, if I didn't!

Both my feet are very tender and often feel as though they were in hot water. I have a cold too. But I am wonderfully well and strong, thank God, and had no end of voice for the two nights running in that great Birmingham Hall. We had enormous houses.

So far as I understand the dinner arrangements here, they are much too long. As to the acoustics of that Hall and the position of the tables (both as bad as bad can be) my only consolation is, that if any body can be heard, I probably can be. The honorary secretary tells me that 600 people are to dine. The Mayor,[†4] being no speaker and out of health besides, hands over the toast of the evening to Lord Dufferin.[†5] The town is full of the Festival. The Theatre Royal, touched up for the occasion, will look remarkably bright and well for the Readings,[†6] and our Lets are large. It is remarkable that our largest Let as yet is for Thursday night . . . not Friday. From this I infer that the Dinner damages Friday, but Dolby does not think so. There appears to be great curiosity to hear the Murder.—(On Friday night last, I read to two thousand people, and odd hundreds).

— XII - 325 —

I hear that Anthony Trollope,[†1] Dixon,[†2] Lord Houghton,[†3] Lemon,[†4] Esquiros[†5] (of the Revue des deux mondes) and Sala (!) are to be called upon to speak; the last for the Newspaper Press. As he is certain to be drunk, I am in great hesitation, whether or no to forewarn the innocent Committee.[†6] All the Liverpool notabilities are to muster, and Manchester is to be represented by its Mayor with due formality.

Such is my small news, now exhausted. We arrived here at 3 yesterday afternoon; it is now mid-day; Chorley has not yet appeared, but he had called at the local agents while I was at Birmingham.

[†a][

]

It is a curious little instance of the way in which things fit together, that there is a ship of war in the Mersey whose flags and so forth are to be brought up to St.

— XII - 326 —

Georges Hall for the dinner. She is the Donegal, of which Painter[†1] told me he had just been Captain, when he told me all about Sydney at Bath.

Ever My Dearest Georgy | Your most affectionate

CD.

To CHARLES ELIOT NORTON, 4 APRIL 1869*

MS Houghton Library, Harvard

Adelphi Hotel, Liverpool | Sunday Fourth April 1869

My Dear Norton.

I shall expect you on Saturday, and will order you a bed here for that night. On Sunday afternoon, please God, we will go back to London together. Enclosed is your dinner ticket.[†2]

My love to all your house.

Ever affectionately Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To J. O. MARPLES,[†3] 5 APRIL 1869

Text from D, XXVIII (Spring 1931), 81.

Adelphi Hotel, Liverpool | Monday Fifth April

Sir

In reply to your letter of enquiry, I beg to inform you that I have never used any other armorial bearings than my father's crest: a lion couchant, bearing in his dexter paw a Maltese cross.[†4] I have never adopted any motto, being quite indifferent to such ceremonies.

Faithfully yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To WILLIAM ALDRIDGE,[†5] 6 APRIL 1869

Mention in Anderson catalogue, No. 2298; MS (3rd person) 1 p.; addressed Mr Aldridge; dated 6 Apr 69.

To G. P. GRAINGER,[†1] 6 APRIL 1869*

MS Miss Grainger, Address: G. P. Grainger Esquire | Alexandra Theatre.

Adelphi Hotel, Liverpool | Tuesday Sixth April, 1869

Sir

I beg to assure you—and I entreat you to assure the ladies and gentlemen whom you represent—that I am exceedingly sorry to be unable to comply with the request you prefer to me.[†2] But I cannot now sanction any alteration of, or departure from, the public announcements that have been made of my Final Readings in this City.

The terms of your communication are truly interesting to me, and I am

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

G. P. Grainger Esquire

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 8 APRIL 1869*

MS Huntington Library.

Adelphi Hotel, Liverpool
Thursday Eighth April 1869

My Dearest Georgy

I did all the article about poor Keeley, except the opening references to Lamb[†3]—which were done by Young Merivale, [†a] and poorly done too.[†a]

[†b] I have been this morning to look at St. George's Hall and suggest what can be done to improve its acoustics. As usually happens in such cases, their most important arrangements are already made and unchangeable. I should not have placed the tables in the committee's way at all, and could certainly have placed the Dais to much greater advantage. So all the good I could do, was to show where banners could be hung with some hope of stopping echoes.[†b] I forget whether I have told you that Dufferin is to make THE[†4] speech.[†5] He will find it a mighty tough job, I can tell him!

None of the guests have arrived yet.

I received a Deputation with an address yesterday.—But I suddenly remember that I told you so.

Going down to the Theatre in the dark this morning (it is an exceedingly dark stage by daylight), I tripped over an extra "stay" of strong galvanized wire, used for my batten, which is much higher than usual. I brought myself up without being pitched into the pit, but cut the shin of my left leg rather smartly, and have had to bathe it and bind it up surgically. A little unfortunate, for it is a bad place to heal.

Ever Most affecy.

CD.

To MR and MRS J.T. FIELDS, 9 APRIL 1869†

MS Huntington Library. Address (Envelope, MS Boston Public Library): Cunard Steamer 10th. April 1869 | James T Fields Esqre. | Charles Street | Boston | Mass: | U.S. of America. PM Liverpool 9 Apr 69.

Adelphi Hotel, Liverpool | Friday Ninth April, 1869

My Dear Fields.

The faithful Russia[†1] will bring this out to you, as a sort of warrant to take you into loving custody, and bring you back on her return trip.

I have been "Reading" here all this week, and finish here for good to night. Tomorrow the Mayor, Corporation, and Citizens, give me a Farewell Dinner in St. George's Hall. Six hundred and fifty are to dine, and a mighty show of Beauty is to be mustered besides.[†2] [†a] Norton[†a] had a great desire to see the sight, and so I suggested him as a friend to be invited. He is over at Manchester now on a visit, and will come here at mid day tomorrow, and go back to London with us on Sunday afternoon. On Tuesday I read in London, and on Wednesday start off again. To night is No. 68 out of 100. I am very tired of it, but I could have no such good fillip as you among the audience, and that will carry me on gaily to the end. So please look sharp in the matter of landing on the bosom of the used up, worn out, and rotten old Parient.

I rather think that when the 12th. of June shall have shaken off these shackles,[†3] there will be borage on the lawn at Gads. Your hearts' desires in that matter, and in the minor particulars of Cobham Park, Rochester Castle, and Canterbury, shall be fulfilled, please God! The red jackets shall turn out again upon the turnpike road, and pic nics among the cherry orchards and hop gardens shall be heard of in Kent. Then too shall the Uncommercial resuscitate (being at present nightly murdered by Mr. W Sikes), and uplift his voice again.

The chief officer of the Russia (a capital fellow) was at the Reading last night, and Dolby specially charged him upon the care of you and yours. We shall be on the borders of Wales—and probably about Hereford—when you arrive. Dolby has insane projects of getting over here to meet you:—so amiably hopeful and obviously impracticable, that I encourage him to the utmost. The regular little Captain of the Russia—Cook—is just now changed into the Cuba, whence arises dispute of seniority &c. I wish he had been with you, for I liked him very much when I was his passenger. I like to think of you being in my ship!

[†a] The terrible Childs is reported (by special warning from Mary) to be in Liverpool to day, previous to his embarcation in the same Russia tomorrow. Mrs. Peterson and Mrs. Childs[†a] have been taking it by turns to be "on the point of death", and have been complimenting one another on the fineness of the point attained. My people got a very good impression of [†a] Mrs. Childs,[†a] and thought her a very sincere and earnest little woman.

The Russia hauls out into the stream to day, and I fear her people may be too busy to come to us tonight. But if any of them do, they shall have the warmest of welcomes for your sake. [By the bye, a very good party of seamen from the Queen's Ship, "Donegal" lying in the Mersey, have been told off to decorate Saint George's Hall with the ship's bunting. They were all hanging on aloft upside down holding to the gigantically high roof by nothing, this morning, in the most wonderfully cheerful manner.]

My son Charley has come for the Dinner, and Chappell (my Proprietor, as— isn't it Wemmick?[†1]— says) is coming today, and Lord Dufferin (Mrs. Norton's[†2] nephew)[†3] is to come and make the speech:[†a] the Mayor being a Muff, oratorically speaking.[†a] I don't envy the feelings of my noble friend when he sees the hall. Seriously, it is less adapted to speaking than Westminster Abbey, and is as large.

[†a] My love to Mrs. Fields (of course), and tell her that if she dont take my people to her heart instantly, I shall sell off all I have and retire to an inaccessible Mountain. My daughter Mary says, "Mrs. Fields will expect too much of us, Pa, and I know[†4] she'll be disappointed." With that stern and Aged Wisdom which you know to be peculiar to me, I quench my austere regard in a smile of clemency, and merely remark that I am the parent of an Idiot race.[†a]

I hope you will see Fechter in a really clever piece by Wilkie.[†5] Also you will see the Academy Exhibition—which will be a very good one[†6]—and also we will, please God, see everything and more, and everything else after that. I begin to doubt and fear on the subject of Mrs. Fields's[†7] having a horror of me after seeing the Murder. I don't think a hand moved while I was doing it last night, or an eye looked away. And there was a fixed expression of horror of me, all over the Theatre which could not have been surpassed if I had been going to be hanged to that red velvet table. It is quite a new sensation to be execrated with that unanimity—and I hope it will remain so!

†a[My dear Mrs Fields,†a is it Lawful—would that woman in the black gaiters, green veil, and spectacles, hold it so—to send my love to the pretty †a Mabel?†a—]†8

Pack up my Dear Fields and be quick.

Ever Your most affectionate

CD.

To MESSRS FIELDS, OSGOOD & CO., 9 APRIL 1869*

MS Morgan Library.

Liverpool, Friday Ninth April 1869

My Dear Sirs

I am much obliged to you for your settlement with Mr. Booth on my account,†1 and I beg to acknowledge the safe arrival (enclosed in your last letter) of his receipt in full.

With thanks

Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Fields Osgood and Co.

To HENRY SPICER,†2 9 APRIL 1869*

MS A. G. Newton.

Adelphi Hotel, Liverpool | Friday Ninth April 1869

My Dear Spicer

I am happy to report that before I received your note here this morning, Melusina had been settled for life. I have divided the narrative into two consecutive weekly portions, and the first will appear in next week's No.†3

I am heartily glad to know that Italy's school bell†4 is ringing so merrily.†5

Faithfully Yours ever

CHARLES DICKENS

Henry Spicer Esquire

To MRS CATTERMOLE, 10 APRIL 1869*

MS Doheney Memorial Library.

Adelphi Hotel Liverpool
Saturday Tenth April, 1869

My Dear Mrs. Cattermole

I have a moment in which to let you know in reply to your enquiry, that I have had no official or authorized reply in reference to the Memorial. But I have been told in private (I cannot say how correctly) that Mr. Gladstone declines to recognize the claim.

You did ask me about the Charter House.[†6] I have no influence there. Indeed my influence (if I had any) would be by no means of a hopeful character, as I have several times attacked some abuses in the Institution.[†1]

Faithfully Yours always
CD.

To DR J. SHERIDAN MUSPRATT, 10 APRIL 1869*

MS Lewis P. Kinsey, Jr.

Adelphi Hotel Liverpool | Saturday Tenth April 1869

My Dear Muspratt

I was truly sorry not to have seen you yesterday when I heard of your having kindly been here. It arose from my having been beset with occupation all day, and the time having come for my early dinner and rest (upon which I can never infringe) before the evening's work.

About tomorrow I cannot be clear. Charles Eliot Norton, the distinguished Italian scholar from Boston, is coming here to accompany me to the dinner and to travel back with me. I am at his disposition, and until he arrives I have no notion what the arrangements most to his liking may be.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Dr. Sheridan Muspratt

To GEORGE HOLSWORTH, [3-10] APRIL 1869

Extract in Ernest Dawson catalogue No. 7; MS 1 p., dated Adelphi Hotel, Liverpool, Apr 69; addressed G. Holsworth. Date: between 3 and 10 Apr when he was staying at the Adelphi Hotel.

Enclosed you will find Dr. Mackay's cheque[†2] with my signature attached. Faithfully yours

To F. C. BEARD, 13 APRIL 1869

MS Dickens House. Address: F. Carr Beard Esquire | 44 Welbeck Street | Cavendish Square | W.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Thirteenth April 1869

My Dear Frank Beard

I have an occasional return of that effusion of blood from piles. Will you kindly send me the receipt that did me so much good before?

The foot is growling again, but I can reasonably expect nothing less from the work and the sudden heat.

I am off to Yorkshire tomorrow afternoon, but shall be here until ½ past 2.

Ever Faithfully
CD.

To FREDERIC CHAPMAN, 13 APRIL 1869*

MS Knox College, Illinois.

A. Y. R. | Tuesday Thirteenth April | 1869

My Dear F. C.

Since I saw you today, Mr. Yates has been with me, and I have noted on the other side[†1] exactly the purport of his business. Do you consent? If so, kindly let me know here before I leave again tomorrow afternoon.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Fredk. Chapman Esquire

To [JAMES BIRTLES], 14 APRIL 1869*

MS Private.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Fourteenth April 1869

A little paper on Odd ways of getting a living in Paris, we sent over yesterday, and is neither among the Proofs nor in the List.[†2]

CD

To MRS CATTERMOLE, 14 APRIL 1869*

MS Edward S. Moore III.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Fourteenth April 1869

Dear Mrs. Cattermole

We decided yesterday that we could do no better with the Fund that has been collected in aid of yourself and family, than hand it over to you with our strong recommendation that you will devote it to supporting yourself and family within the estimate you gave to Mr. Vokins, as long as it will last. We consider that estimate somewhat excessive, I may add.

Our hope is, that you will thus be enabled to keep your two unmarried daughters in a suitable home, until they marry; and that when you are so relieved of the charge of supporting them, your then greatly reduced expences may be borne among your children generally. According to our experience, this is by no means an unusual or extravagant expectation.

I deemed it right when I first communicated with you on the subject of this fund, to caution you against much hopefulness in the matter, and to add that I foresaw peculiar difficulties and coldnesses in the way. They have been encountered, and we are bound to represent the fact to you that we now altogether relinquish our task, and abandon the solicitation or receipt of any further contribution.

I do not doubt, however, that the Guild of Literature and Art will make their vote in your behalf, annual:[†1] though I have no legal authority (because I can have none, under the Guild's Charter) to give you that assurance.

I have this day closed the Fund account at Coutts's, and enclosed I send you a cheque[†2] which will enable you to draw the balance in full. At your leisure please send me a receipt.

Believe me always | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN DELANE, 14 APRIL 1869*

MS The Times Newspapers Ltd.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Fourteenth April 1869

My Dear Delane

I have been so unusually touched by a Leader of which I am the subject in The Times this morning,[†3] that I am sure you will not misunderstand my thanking you for it most heartily. I am away again directly, working out these "Readings" which will keep me in bondage until the middle of June; but I must relieve my mind by sending you these cordial words before I go.

Faithfully Yours alys

CHARLES DICKENS

John Delane Esquire

To HENRY BICKNELL, 15 APRIL 1869*

MS British Library, Address: Henry Bicknell Esquire | Clapham Common. PM London & Paddington 16 Apr 69

Leeds, Fifteenth April 1869

My Dear Bicknell

I send you above, a copy of my letter to Mrs. Cattermole[†4]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To W. P. FRITH, 15 APRIL 1869*

MS Victoria & Albert Museum.

Leeds,[†1] Fifteenth April 1869

My Dear Frith

I send you a copy of my letter to Mrs. Cattermole. I had not time to do so, before leaving London yesterday.

As I do not remember her address, I also send you the letter itself. Kindly direct and send it to the post, and do likewise with the enclosed to Bicknell.

They are selling my Tickets here at a Guinea apiece (original cost, five shillings). I wonder who gets the money! I know who don't, and that is

Your Ever Illustrious friend
CHARLES DICKENS[†2]

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 15 APRIL 1869*

MS Huntington Library.

Queen's Hotel, Leeds
Thursday Fifteenth April, 1869

My Dearest Georgy

[†a] I have been constantly thinking about that cellar-key, and I will tell you how we will keep it. Order from Chubbs'[†3] man one of the ordinary little iron cash-boxes to keep it in. To that cash box have 2 keys, both electrotyped gold. Of those keys you shall always wear one, and I will always wear the other, and the box itself shall be kept, not in your room but in mine, in some drawer that we will settle upon. Then, I think, we must[†4] be safe.[†a]

We have a large Let at Bradford tonight,[†5] and our five shilling tickets for tomorrow night here are advertised in the newspapers at a guinea each.[†6] We came down through a heavy thunder-storm. The foot was bad all the way, and was exceedingly inflamed and swollen when we arrived, and still is. But I had a splendid night. I regret to say that the foot is certainly no better this morning. It naturally makes us very anxious. By the way I never saw any man like Scott. He has everything with him that the foot can require if it should go worse. I was so afraid of it last night that I thought it prudent to send him out for poppy-heads.

He had a plentiful supply with him (it appeared) and the necessary flannels and everything else "for action in a moment, as the saying is". Sitch was that child's expression!

Best love to Mamie, to whom I will write next. I send you the addresses in case you should not have them.[†b][ ][†b]

Ever My Dearest Georgy | Your most affectionate

CD.

To WILLIAM VOKINS, 15 APRIL 1869*

MS Fales Library, New York University.

Leeds | Fifteenth April 1869

Dear Mr. Vokins

I send you herewith a copy of my letter to Mrs. Cattermole.

Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS[†1]

To MARK LEMON, 16 APRIL 1869

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds. Address (envelope, MS Benoliel Collection): Private. Please forward. | Mark Lemon Esquire | "Punch" Office | Fleet Street | London | E.C. PM 16 Apr 69.

Queen's Hotel, Leeds | Friday Sixteenth April, 1869

My Dear Lemon

I send you a hasty line to let you know that I have had your messages to day, and that I am heartily glad to know that you were but very slightly shaken by your "Railway accident".[†2] The phrase has had a dreadful significance to me, ever since the Staplehurst occasion.[†3] Be sure that you do right in being as quiet as you can. My watch (a chronometer) had palpitations six months afterwards, and I often wonder whether it would have escaped them if I had stopped it for rest.

Ever Faithfully

CHARLES DICKENS

Mark Lemon Esquire

To DR WILLIAM SPARK,[†4] 17 APRIL 1869*

MS Dickens House. Address: Dr. William Spark.

Leeds, Saturday Morning | Seventeenth April, 1869

Dear Sir

I cannot leave this place this morning, without cordially thanking you for your interesting and obliging offer conveyed to me by Mr. Dolby. Few persons could have derived a higher pleasure from hearing your noble instrument touched by yourself than I; but the fatigue and hurry attendant on my present visit here have compelled me to forego that gratification.

With many thanks, I am Dear Sir

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Dr. William Spark

To THE REV. C. W. WOODHOUSE,[†1] 18 APRIL [1869]

MS D. Farringdon. Date: misdated by CD; clearly 1869.

Chester | Eighteenth April 1868

Dear Sir

I am truly obliged to you for your proffered hospitality, and beg you to accept my cordial thanks. But when I am engaged as I shall be at Blackburn,[†2] I never under any circumstances make a visit—always live at an hotel with my Secretary in the strictest privacy—and devote myself wholly to what I have to do.

Believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Rev. C. W. Woodhouse.

To F. C. BEARD, 19 APRIL 1869

MS Dickens House.

Blackburn | Monday Nineteenth April 1869

My Dear Frank Beard

Is it possible that anything in my medicine can have made me extremely giddy, extremely uncertain of my footing (especially on the left side) and extremely indisposed to raise my hands to my head? These symptoms made me very uncomfortable on Saturday night, and all yesterday. I have taken the medicine twice a day only, and have taken barely a bottle in all.

If you can, send me one word in answer by return, to the Imperial Hotel, Blackpool, do.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To JAMES FREEMAN,[†1] 19 APRIL 1869*

MS The Coulthurst Trust.

Blackburn | Monday Nineteenth April, 1869

Dear Sir

Your obliging letter has reached me here to day.

I hasten to inform you that at about the time to which you refer, a communication was addressed to me from Birmingham on the subject of your favour.[†2] I replied that if any thing would induce me to forego a determination I formed in such wise long ago, the being offered the representation of Birmingham in conjunction with Mr. Bright[†3] would do so. But that my mind was thoroughly made up never to enter the House of Commons, and that I had satisfied myself to rest content with my present sphere of usefulness and occupation. I made no mention of this, or of similar proposals, at Liverpool, as it did not appear to me that anything but the statement of my own resolution was necessitated by Lord Houghton's reference.[†4]

I am Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

James Freeman Esquire

To CHARLES ELIOT NORTON, 20 APRIL 1869*

MS Houghton Library, Harvard. Address: Charles E. Norton Esquire | 18 Queen's Gate Terrace | Kensington | London | W

Blackburn | Tuesday Twentieth April, 1869

My Dear Norton

I send you your ticket for the Newsmen's Dinner.[†5] Will you wait at home towards halfpast 5 that afternoon, until I send a Brougham to pick you up? Let me know at 26 Wellington Street Strand W. C.

I am half dead with travelling every day, and reading afterwards. As much of me as is alive, sends its love.

Ever affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To LADY GEORGIANA PEEL,[†1] 20 APRIL 1869

Extracts in American Art Association & Anderson catalogue No. 4424 and [aa]) N, III, 720; MS 2 pp.; dated Blackburn, 20 Apr 69; addressed Lady Georgiana.

I shall remain in Chester[†2] only a few hours: going there rapidly from London, and returning as rapidly to read again.[†3] I have not seen my own house since Christmas—shall not see it until midsummer—could not go to Pembroke Lodge[†4] at Easter—and have been almost incessantly "Reading" since last October, [a] in all points of the Compass.[a]

To THE HON. MRS RICHARD WATSON, 20 APRIL 1869

MS Huntington Library.

Blackburn | Twentieth April 1869

My Dear Mrs. Watson

I don't wonder at the Papers being confused regarding my whereabout, when I am confused myself! I am in a different place every day, and shall have no rest until after the 12th. of June, when I finish for good and all in London. Your note reaches me here to day; I shall be gone from here before noon tomorrow; I shall be gone from there (I forget where "there" is), before noon next day; when I come to London, it will be for but a few hours; and immediately after reading in town, I shall be away again as fast as an Express can carry me. Nothing would uphold me through such work but the prospect of soon working it out.

Ever Affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To F. C. BEARD, [21 APRIL 1869]

Telegram; mention in next.

To F.C. BEARD, 21 APRIL 1869

MS Dickens House. Address: F. Carr Beard Esquire | 44 Welbeck Street | Cavendish Square | London | W.

Blackpool | Wednesday afternoon
Twenty First April 1869

My Dear Frank Beard

I received your kind note on coming here this afternoon. As you evidently thought the symptoms worthy of immediate attention, I at once telegraphed to you my tomorrow's and Friday's addresses. The said symptoms have greatly moderated since Sunday: but there they are, and they are all on the left side. Six weeks will carry me through the Readings, if you can fortify me a little bit, and then please God I may do as I like.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 21 APRIL 1869

MS Huntington Library.

Imperial Hotel, Blackpool
Wednesday Twenty First April 1869

My Dearest Georgy.

I send you this hasty line to let you know that I have come to this Sea-Beach Hotel (charming) for a day's rest. I am much better than I was on Sunday, but shall want careful looking-to, to get through the Readings. My weakness and deadness are all on the left side, and if I don't look at anything I try to touch with my left hand, I don't know where it is. I am in (secret) consultation with Frank Beard †a who says that it is quite impossible that these symptoms can†1 have come from my simple medicine, and that†a he recognizes in the exact description I have given him, indisputable evidences of over work, which he would wish to treat immediately. So I have said "Go in and win".

I have had a delicious walk by the sea to day, and I sleep soundly, and have picked up amazingly in appetite. My foot is greatly better too, and I wear my own boot.

Best love to Mamie. | Ever most affecy.

CD.

To S. ALFRED STEINTHAL,†2 21 APRIL 1869*

MS Professor K. J. Fielding.

Bolton | Wednesday Twenty First April 1869

Dear Sir

In reply to your letter received yesterday, I beg to enclose you a cheque for Five Guineas in aid of the fund for the family of the late Mr. Ernest Jones.†3 I did not agree with his course of action in the hardest time of his life,†1 but I believe him to have been a thoroughly honest and conscientious man.

I cannot have the pleasure of becoming one of a London Committee: for the two reasons that I wish to pass the coming summer and autumn free from any public business; and that I very rarely (if ever) associate myself in name alone with any undertaking.

Allow me to add that I highly esteem your benevolent and generous interest in this matter.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

S. Alfred Steinthal Esquire

To JOHN FORSTER, [22 APRIL 1869]

Extract in F, XI, i, 803-804. Date: 22 Apr 69, according to Forster.

Don't say anything about it, but the tremendously severe nature of this work is a little shaking me.[†2] At Chester last Sunday I found myself extremely giddy, and extremely uncertain of my sense of touch, both in the left leg and the left hand and arms. I had been taking some slight medicine of Beard's; and immediately wrote to him describing exactly what I felt, and asking him whether those feelings could be referable to the medicine? He promptly replied: "There can be no mistaking them from your exact account. The medicine cannot possibly have caused them. I recognise indisputable symptoms of overwork, and I wish to take you in hand without any loss of time." They have greatly modified since, but he is coming down here this afternoon.[†3] To-morrow night at Warrington[†1] I shall have but 25 more nights to work through. If he can coach me up for them, I do not doubt that I shall get all right again—as I did when I became free in America. The foot has given me very little trouble. Yet it is remarkable that it is the left foot too; and that I told Henry Thompson (before I saw his old master Syme) that I had an inward conviction that whatever it was, it was not gout. I also told Beard, a year after the Staplehurst accident, that I was certain that my heart had been fluttered, and wanted a little helping. This the stethoscope confirmed; and considering the immense exertions I am undergoing, and the constant jarring of express trains, the case seems to me quite intelligible. Don't say anything in the Gad's direction about my being a little out of sorts. I have broached the matter of course; but very lightly. Indeed there is no reason for broaching it otherwise.

To G. W. RUSDEN, 22 APRIL 1869

MS Trinity College, University of Melbourne.

Preston | Thursday Twenty Second April, 1869

My Dear Sir

I am finishing my "Farewell Readings"—to night's is the 74th. out of 100[†2]— and have barely time to send you a line to thank you most heartily for yours of the 30th. January, and for your great kindness to Alfred and Edward. The latter wrote by the same Mail, on behalf of both, expressing the warmest gratitude to you and reporting himself as in the stoutest heart and hope. I never can thank you sufficiently.

You will see that the New Ministry[†3] has made a decided hit with its Budget,[†4] and that, in the matter of the Irish Church, it has the Country at its back.[†5] You will also see that the "Reform League"[†1] has dissolved itself:—indisputably because it became aware that the people didn't want it.[†2] I think the general feeling in England is a desire to get the Irish Church out of the way of many social reforms, and to have it done with, as already done for. I do not in the least believe, myself, that agrarian Ireland is to be pacified by any such means, or can have it by any legislation got out of its mistaken head that the land is of right the peasantry's and that every man who owns land has stolen it and is therefore to be shot. But that is not the question.

We receive periodical alarms through the newspapers of a contemplated invasion of England by Horne.[†3] He is better where he is, and would be sorely disappointed, I fear, if he came back. The clock strikes post time as I write, and I fear to write more, lest, at this distance from London, I should imperil the next Mail.

Believe me always | Most Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

G. W. Rusden Esquire

To MISS MARY DICKENS, 22 APRIL 1869

Extract in MDGH, 11, 421.

Preston, Thursday Evening, April 22nd., 1869

Don't be in the least alarmed. Beard has come down, and instantly echoes my impression (perfectly unknown to him), that the readings must be stopped. I have had symptoms that must not be disregarded. I go to Liverpool to-night with him (to get away from here), and proceed to the office to-morrow.

To MRS HENRY AUSTIN, 23 APRIL 1869*

MS Morgan Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Night Twenty Third April 1869

My Dear Letitia

I cannot induce Sir Thomas Watson to hear of more Readings anywhere.

Ever Affecy.
CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [23 APRIL 1869]

Summary in F, XI, i, 804. Date: 23 Apr 69, according to Forster, but included in same envelope as letter dated 22 Apr.

Telling Forster that he was well enough, but tired; in perfectly good spirits, not at all uneasy, and writing this himself so that Forster should have it under his own hand.

To MESSRS CHAPPELL & CO., [?24 APRIL 1869]

Mention in Dolby, CD as I Knew him, p. 413. Date: shortly after the medical certificate, signed by Watson and Beard on 23 Apr, prohibiting further readings.

Expressing his grief at the turn matters had taken.[†1]

To CHARLES ELIOT NORTON, 24 APRIL 1869*

MS Houghton Library, Harvard. Address: Charles E. Norton Esquire | 18 Queen's Gate Terrace | Kensington | W.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Saturday Twenty Fourth April 1869

My Dear Norton. I write under my own hand that you may be quite sure. I suddenly became aware of being (for the moment as I thought) greatly shaken by Express Trains and the immensely severe work. I described to my Doctors exactly how I felt this, and they instantly stopped the Readings and prescribed months of rest. "It must be done, or you will be severely ill. No half measures will do." Upon that, I gave in. Their Certificate[†2] will be published on Monday. I think I am as well as any man could be under such circumstances. I eat and drink well, and sleep well, and am in good spirits. The novel prospect of comparative idleness rather astonishes me, and I am deeply disappointed that I cannot have my remaining Readings in London. Still, I can put the disappointment —and the money loss too—aside.

With kind love | Ever affectionately

CD.

To JOHN POOLE, 24 APRIL 1869*

MS Houghton Library, Harvard.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Saturday Twenty Fourth April 1869

My Dear Poole

Don't be uneasy about me. I suddenly found myself so shaken by Express Trains and very severe work, that the Doctors—for fear I should be ill—instantly stopped the Readings.

Ever Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 25 APRIL 1869*

MS Private.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Sunday Twenty Fifth April 1869

My Dear Ouvry

†a You will be glad to know under my own hand that my sudden lying by from hard work (at a great loss of money by the bye) is a precautionary measure on the part of the doctors, and not a remedial one.†a

I want a new draft of a will (as short as possible) thus:

I give such legacies. (They are in my present will.)

I appoint Forster and Georgina Hogarth executor and executrix.

I give Georgina Hogarth so much absolutely.

I leave so much money in trust for my unmarried daughter Mary.

At her decease the principal to be divided among my surviving children share and share alike.

I leave so much money in trust for my wife, with exactly the same conditions.

The trustees in each case, my eldest son Charles, and my son Henry Fielding, now of Trinity Hall Cambridge, as the next most accessible of my boys.

I intend the sum in each of these three cases to be £10,000, but would rather write it in—and indeed write the whole will—myself.

Any house or land property of which I may die possessed†1 to be sold as soon as may be, and converted into money towards these purposes.

My copyrights to be sold or not as my executor and executrix may deem best. Anyway, my children to benefit by them, share and share alike.

And the whole residue of my estate to be divided among my children share and share alike, excepting my unmarried daughter Mary—as being already otherwise provided for—to whom I leave £1,000.

As in the existing will, the Executor and Executrix to be as free and unshackled as possible.

I am going to Gad's Hill for a day or two, but shall be here on Thursday.

Ever My Dear Ouvry | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Frederic Ouvry Esquire

To JOHN FORSTER, 26 APRIL 1869*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Monday Twenty Sixth April 1869[†2]

My Dear Forster

I do not feel up to coming out to dinner, as I must be slow and quiet yet awhile. (Above all things I cannot bear to be hurried or flurried).

Will you and Mrs. Forster come and dine with Georgy and me here on Thursday at 6? A line in answer to Gads. I am all right, I think, except for a rather dazed sensation of being greatly fatigued.[†1] Ever affecy.

CD.

To J. H. NIGHTINGALE,[†2] 28 APRIL 1869*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Twenty Eighth April, 1869

My Dear Mr. Nightingale

I am happy to be able to inform you by return of post, that I am—thank God—in a quite brilliant condition already. I should be almost ashamed of myself, if I didn't know the unconditional knocking off for a time, from all "Reading" wear and tear, to be a precautionary rather than a curative measure.

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Joseph Nightingale Esquire.

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 28 APRIL 1869*

MS Private.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Wednesday Twenty Eighth April 1869

My Dear Ouvry

Many thanks. The Draft however is not quite what I mean, as I will explain tomorrow. [†a]I wish the two boys to be only trustees as to their mother and eldest sister[†a]. It appears to me that as the draft stands they usurp the functions of the exors and executrix; also I desire Miss Hogarth's money not to be left in trust but to be left to herself absolutely, †b[See my note of instructions, which I will further explain tomorrow],†b I shall be at the office by 1, and will expect you as you go to Coutts's unless I hear from you to the contrary.

Ever Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

Frederic Ouvry Esquire

To CHARLES KENT, 30 APRIL 1869

Extract in Christie's catalogue, Feb 1988 (Estelle Doheny Collection); MS 1 p.; dated Office of AYR, 30 Apr 69; addressed "My dear Kent".

I shall be here from 1 to 2.

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 30 APRIL 1869*

MS Armidale Folk Museum.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Thirtieth April 1869

My Dear Ouvry

Being at Coutts's this morning, I asked to see the Title Deeds of the Rochester School purchase,†1 supposing you to have deposited them there. Where are they? I want to look at them—when accessible—for this ridiculous reason: that I don't know for certain which arable field in the prospect is mine! I know that I let one to a farmer, and that he pays his rent, but I couldn't say which it is, without reference to a plan!! So I may as well learn.

I want to book you for a June holiday with Fields (publisher of Boston: a most charming fellow) and my people. Fields has a passion to be taken to see Canterbury, in an open carriage with the old scarlet jackets. He is now actually on his way from Boston to have this rare English enjoyment. The old road is charming in summer weather, between my house and Canterbury, and I will fix the time in June to suit you. Let this be a contract between us, Please God.

Ever Yours cordially
CHARLES DICKENS

May

To C. J. BAKER,†2 1 MAY 1869*

MS Morgan Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND, | Saturday First May 1869

Dear Sir

I am exceedingly obliged to you for the Tickets of admission to the Festival at St. Paul's[†3] which you have had the kindness to enclose me. I do not doubt that they will greatly delight some intelligent American friends whom I expect by the next Cunard.[†4]

I have retired from hot rooms for this Season, or I should have been happy to have attended the Dinner.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

C. J. Baker Esquire

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 1 MAY 1869†

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address (envelope MS W. A. Foyle): Miss Hogarth | Gad's Hill Place | Higham | by | Rochester. PM London 1 May 69.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Saturday First May 1869

My Dearest Georgy

I am a little disappointed not to hear more decidedly good news of Mamie; but I hope that Monday morning's post will put all to rights.

[†a] I enclose you a Key. The Key of the top left hand drawer in my large writing table. I think if you will open that drawer full out, you will see lying at the back of it, a banker's pass-book labelled "Charles Dickens Esqre."—fastened with an elastic band and clasp—and having a line on the label in my writing to the effect: "Important Memorandum within". I want that book when you come up, and also a blue surtout with black silk facings hanging in the side of the Wardrobe.[†a] I don't think it is worth while having any thing else up. If I should want any thing more, I can send down.

Best love to Mamie | Ever Your most affectionate
CD.

To THOMAS CHAPPELL,[†1] 3 MAY 1869

Text from MDGH, 111, 279-281.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Monday, 3rd May, 1869

My Dear Mr. Chappell,

I am really touched by your letter. I can most truthfully assure you that your part in the inconvenience of this mishap has given me much more concern than my own; and that if I did not hope to have our London Farewells yet, I should be in a very gloomy condition on your account.

Pray do not suppose that you are to blame for my having done a little too much—a wild fancy indeed! The simple fact is, that the rapid railway travelling was stretched a hair's breadth too far, and that I ought to have foreseen it. For, on the night before the last night of our reading in America, when Dolby was cheering me with a review of the success, and the immediate prospect of the voyage home, I told him, to his astonishment: "I am too far gone, and too worn out to realise anything but my own exhaustion. Believe me, if I had to read but twice more, instead of once, I couldn't do it." We were then just beyond our recent number. And it was the travelling that I had felt throughout.

The sharp precautionary remedy of stopping instantly, was almost as instantly successful the other day. I told Dr. Watson that he had never seen me knocked out of time, and that he had no idea of the rapidity with which I should come up again.

Just as three days' repose on the Atlantic steamer made me, in my altered appearance, the amazement of the captain, so this last week has set me up, thank God, in the most wonderful manner. The sense of exhaustion seems a dream already. Of course I shall train myself carefully, nevertheless, all through the summer and autumn.

I beg to send my kind regards to Mrs. Chappell, and I shall hope to see her and you at Teddington[†1] in the long bright days. It would disappoint me indeed if a lasting friendship did not come of our business relations.

In the spring I trust I shall be able to report to you that I am ready to take my Farewells in London. Of this I am pretty certain: that I never will take them at all, unless with you on your own conditions.

With an affectionate regard for you and your brother,[†2] believe me always,

Very faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To PERCY FITZGERALD, 3 MAY 1869

MS Dr Gordon N. Ray.[†3]

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Monday Third May 1869

My Dear FitzGerald

I answer your letter to Charley, myself.

It is perfectly understood between us, that you write the long serial story[†4] next after Mrs. Trollope's.[†5] That is a positive engagement.

When I told Charley to write to you respecting a shorter story meanwhile,[†6] I meant that to be quite apart from, and over and above, the aforesaid long one. May I look at the chapters you speak of, on decoration?[†7]

I am in a brilliant condition, thank God. Rest and a little care immediately unshook the railway shaking.

Faithfully Yours ever
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [3 MAY 1869]

Extract in F, XII, i, 846*n. Date:* 3 May 69, according to Forster.

I do believe that such people as the Chappells are very rarely to be found in human affairs. To say nothing of their noble and munificent manner of sweeping away into space all the charges incurred uselessly, and all the immense inconvenience and profitless work thrown upon their establishment, comes a note this morning from the senior partner to the effect that they feel that my overwork has been "indirectly caused by them, and by my great and kind exertion to make their venture successful to the extreme." There is something so delicate and fine in this, that I feel it deeply.

To W. H. WILLS, 3 MAY 1869

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND, | Monday Third May 1869

My Dear Wills

This is to send my love to Mrs. Wills and you, and to assure you that I am really all right. I had begun suddenly to be so shaken by constant Express travelling, that I might very easily have been ill. Said the Doctors: "Take warning. Stop instantly." I made the plunge, and became, Please God, well.

Ever affecy.
CD.

To MESSRS BANTON & MACKRELL, 4 MAY 1869*

MS Dr Steven J. Pachuta.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND, | Tuesday Fourth May 1869

Dear Sirs

I have received a letter from my son Mr. Sydney Smith Dickens R. N. under date "Vancouver Island, Friday March 19th." in which he informs me that he has fallen into debt and "drawn very heavily" on you. He gives me no idea of the extent to which he has drawn on you. Will you be so obliging as to let me know.[†1]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Banton and Mackrell.

To MR and MRS J. T. FIELDS, 5 MAY 1869

MS Huntington Library.

Loving welcome to England. Hurrah!

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Fifth May 1869

My Dear Fields and Mrs. Fields

I fear you will have been uneasy about me, and will have heard distorted accounts of the stoppage of my Readings. It is a measure of precaution, and not of cure. I was too tired, and too jarred by the Railway fast express travelling night and day. No halfmeasure could be taken; and rest being medically considered essential, we stopped. I became, thank God, myself again, almost as soon as I could rest! I am good for all country pleasures with you, and am looking forward to Gad's, Rochester Castle, Cobham Park, red jackets, and Canterbury. When you come to London, we shall probably be staying at an Hotel.[†1] You will learn, here, where to find us. I yearn to be with you both again![†2]

Love to Mabel | Ever Your affectionate
CD.

I hope this will be put into your hands on board, in Queenstown Harbour.

To THOMAS ADOLPHUS TROLLOPE, 6 MAY 1869*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: T. A. Trollope Esq | Villino Trollope | Florence | Italy.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Sixth May 1869

My Dear Trollope

I am happy to reply to your kind and welcome letter that I hope I am all right. With too short a rest after the heavy American experience, I undoubtedly over-did the work of the Readings and the jar of continual Express Trains; the latter, incessant and extending over great distances; the former, greatly enhanced by the Murder from Oliver Twist, continually done with great passion and fury. All of a sudden (as it seemed) I became exhausted,—giddy, faint, and oddly uncertain of touch and tread. I asked my Doctor[†3] (we were students together as boys)[†4] "What is this?" He immediately came to Preston to meet me, and said "It is a serious warning. I know it well. Leave off instantly, and come away with me." I didn't even read that night, but came away straight. Watson immediately endorsed the advice as thoroughly sound, and would not even let me finish the London Readings. The very day I rested, I began to recover myself. I am very rarely giddy even for a few moments—eat well, drink well, sleep soundly, and have almost recovered my usual face, they tell me. Probably I should have had a bad bout of it, but for being so promptly dealt with.

A thousand thanks for your kind tempting, but I must not travel. Through the summer and autumn I have promised to be as idle as I can, and to oscillate only between London and Gad's Hill. I am to be always in the air, but am to be as shy as possible of railway travelling.

I don't know whether Fanny[†1] has heard of poor Macready's having lost his eldest surviving daughter. She died on her passage home from Madeira (where she had been with a nurse, for her health) while Macready was waiting for her at Southampton. She was buried at sea in the early morning, and a majestic rainbow irradiated the place where the body dipped into the water. It had not happened when I saw Macready last at Cheltenham; but I knew from Mrs. Macready's look when he was not observing, that it would happen. He is dismally old, and infirm, and indistinct beyond belief. In talking with him, I could sometimes hardly believe that I had before me the grey ashes of the old fierce fire. His wife is really in all things the staff of his life. Yet he brightened up in talking of old times, and was very grimly interested in the Murder. When it was over, his jaw became square again, and he tried to say with energy: "Dickens —er—By Heavens I swear its—er—its—er—Two Macbeths!"

I saw your brother Anthony at the Athenænum not long ago, who was in the act of reading a letter from you. He is a perfect cordial to me, whenever and wherever I see him, as the heartiest and best of fellows.

With kind regard | Ever My Dear Trollope
Most affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To JAMES BIRTLES, 9 MAY 1869*

MS Huntington Library.

Sunday Ninth May 1869

Dr. Mr. Birtles

Here are two corrections in my "Uncommercial",[†2] not made in the proof I sent you from the office yesterday.

Faithfully Yours

CD.

To PERCY FITZGERALD, 9 MAY 1869†

MS Dr Gordon N. Ray.

THE ATHENÆUM, | Sunday Ninth May, 1869

My Dear FitzGerald

I think the plan of the story[†3] very promising, and suggestive of a remarkably good, new, and strong, interest.

[†a] What do you think of the pursuing relation[†1] so dying at last of the same disorder as the Baronet's[†2] daughter,[†a] and under such circumstances, as to make out the case of the Clergyman's[†3] daughter, and clear up the story? As, for example, [†a]suppose the husband himself does almost the same thing in going for help, when this man[†4] is dying? I think I see a fine story there.[†5]

As to the name—No. Certainly not. "What could she do?" No again. What will he do with it? [†b] Can you forgive her.[†b] Put yourself in his (or her) place. Remember these titles. All clap-trap (as I think) and none good.[†a†6]

I had your Wills and Will Making letter[†7] copied by Holsworth, and sent in his hand.

Ever Affecy Yours

CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [9 MAY 1869]

Extracts in F, II, vii, 145*n. Date:* first extract 9 May 69 according to Forster (F, 1872, 1, 177);[†8] second extract, CD's comment when he read Forster's passage about little Nell according to Forster, probably part of same letter.

I see you have told, with what our friend[†9] would have called *won*derful accuracy, the little St. James's Square story, which a certain faithless wretch was to have related.[†10]

It was at a celebration of his birthday[†11] in the first of his Bath lodgings, 35, St. James's Square, that the fancy which took the form of Little Nell in The Curiosity Shop first dawned on the genius of its creator. No character in prose fiction was a greater favourite with Landor. He thought that, upon her, Juliet might for a moment have turned her eyes from Romeo, and that Desdemona might have taken her hairbreadth escapes to heart, so interesting and pathetic did she seem to him; and when, some years later, the circumstances I have named were recalled to him, he broke into one of those whimsical bursts of comical extravagance, out of which arose the fancy of Boythorn. With tremendous emphasis he confirmed the fact and added that he had never in his life regretted anything so much as having failed to carry out an intention he had formed respecting it; for he meant to have purchased that house, 35, St. James's Square, and then and there to have burned it to the ground, to the end that no meaner association should ever desecrate the birthplace of Nell. Then he would pause a little, become conscious of our sense of his absurdity, and break into a thundering peal of laughter.

To FREDERIC OUVRY, [10 MAY 1869]

Mention in next. Date: probably written day before.

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 11 MAY 1869*

MS Huntington Library.

Tuesday Eleventh May 1869

My Dear Ouvry

When that money was raised[†1] to which Mr. Halliwell's[†2] note[†3] refers, we had a hope that Sheridan Knowles[†4] or some such appropriate person might be made custodian of Shakespeare's house.[†5] It was found quite a hopeless effort to bring any such thing to bear, and we divided the fund, by common vote, between him[†6] and Leigh Hunt. I forget its amount but it lasted some time, discreetly handled, and did a world of good. It has been extinct these many years.

Faithfully Yours ever
CHARLES DICKENS

Frederic Ouvry Esquire

Over

I think a note of mine on another subject crossed yours to me.

To MRS CATTERMOLE, 13 MAY 1869

Extract in S. J. Davey catalogue (undated), in Kitton's "Dickens Ana", II; MS 1 p.; dated office of AYR, 13 May 69; addressed Mrs Cattermole.

I thank you for your kind words, and am happy to report myself thoroughly rested and in good health. It really had not occurred to me that there were any queries of yours remaining to be answered on my part. When my sister-in-law spoke to me on the subject I told her that she must be mistaken. I had already written you the answer that I had no interest with Charter House Governors.[†1]

To SOL EYTINGE, [14] MAY 1869

MS Dickens House. Date: Misdated by CD; Friday was 14 May.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND, | Friday Fifteenth May 1869

My Dear Sir

First, let me welcome you to England.

Next let me inform you that Mr. and Mrs. Fields and Miss Lowell are coming to stay with me at my little country house on Wednesday the 2nd. of June. Pray do me the favor to come with them, and make some sketches for yourself of Mr. Pickwick's early scenery at your leisure.[†2]

On Tuesday night next I am going to take Mr. Fields out, with some of the Police, to have a glimpse of the darker side of London life.[†3] I think the expedition would be interesting to you. Will you come? And will you dine with me first—I am staying at the St. James's Hotel 77 Piccadilly—at ½ past 6 punctually? No dress coat, as it would be a phenomonon in the regions we shall visit after dinner.

Believe me | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

S. Eytinge Esquire

To WILLIAM JERDAN,[†4] [14] MAY 1869*

MS University of California, Los Angeles. Date: misdated by CD; Friday was 14 May.

THE ATHENÆUM | Friday Fifteenth May, 1869

My Dear Jerdan

Thank God I can report myself in reply to your kind note—a welcome echo of old times!—quite well and flourishing. I grieve to find you describing yourself as "sorely crippled", but I hope and trust that the departure of these horrible winds and the coming in of balmy weather will let in a shower of genial influences upon you.[†5]

In the meantime I can declare this:—that I never saw a handwriting so unchanged as yours.

My dear fellow the out of the way village[†6] made a triumphant appearance immediately.

Ever Faithfully Your old friend

CHARLES DICKENS[†7]

W. Jerdan Esquire

To J. T. FIELDS, 18 MAY 1869*

MS Dickens House. Address: James T. Fields Esquire.[†1]

MD[†2]

St. James's Hotel | Eighteenth May 1869

My Dear Fields

I think the Molière[†3] a pretty and pleasant little picture, but I have no doubt it is copied from something, and I notice that the hand at the breast is "scamped" and woolly. I don't think it is worth £18. I should call £10 a quite sufficient price for it.

The No. you want, sent with this.

Ever affecly

CD

Kindest regard

To EDMUND HENDERSON, 18 MAY 1869

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue July 1972; MS 1 p.; dated Office of AYR, Tuesday [18] May 69; addressed Colonel Edmund Henderson.

Referring to arrangements for showing my American friends the British police system, mentioning his own close study of the American system in New York the previous winter, and promising to be at Leman Street[†4] Station tonight.

To G. W. RUSDEN, 18 MAY 1869

MS Trinity College, Melbourne University.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Eighteenth May 1869

My Dear Mr. Rusden

As I dare say some exaggerated accounts of my having been very ill have reached you, I begin with the true version of the case. I dare say I should have been very ill, if I had not suddenly stopped my "Farewell Readings", when there were yet five and twenty remaining to be given. I was quite exhausted, and was warned by the doctors to stop (for the time) instantly. Acting on the advice and going home into Kent for rest, I immediately began to recover, and within a fortnight was in the brilliant condition in which I can now—thank God!—report myself.

I cannot thank you enough for your care of Plorn, and I am heartily sorry that he should have disappointed you.[†5] I was quite prepared for his not settling down without a lurch or two; for though I think he has more, au fond, than his brothers, he has always been a queer wayward fellow with an unformed character, and yet with the makings of a character restlessly within him. I still hope that he may take to colonial life.[†1] I know that it is an experiment which may not succeed, and I know perfectly well that if it should not succeed, the cause of failure will be in himself alone. All I want is, to give him a reasonable trial. He will not fail to report himself unfit for his surroundings, if he should find that he is so. In his letter to me about his leaving that station to which he got through your kindness, he expresses his gratitude to you quite as strongly as if he had made a wonderful success, and seems to have acquired no distaste for anything but the one individual of whom he wrote that betrayed and very preposterous letter.[†2] I treasure up your adverse opinion carefully and do not at all combat it, you understand. But knowing the boy, I want to try him fully.

You know all our public news, such as it is, at least as well as I do. Many people here (of whom I am one) do not like the look of American matters, and I do not think Mr. Motley[†3] is the man to mend them. He is of an arbitrary, dogmatic turn. What I most fear is that the perpetual bluster of a party in the States will at last set the patient British back up. And if our people begin to bluster too, and there should come into existence an exasperating war-party on both sides, there will be great danger of a daily widening breach.[†4]

I hear dark unformed rumours of Horne's coming back? He had better not. He will be sorely and bitterly disappointed, I am certain.

The first shriek of the first Engine that traverses the San Francisco Railroad from end to end, will be a death-warning to the disciples of Jo Smith.[†5] The moment the Mormon bubble gets touched by neighbours, it will break.[†6] Similarly the red man's course is very nearly run. A scalped stoker is the outward and visible sign[†7] of his utter extermination. Not quakers enough to reach from here to Jerusalem will save him by the term of a single year.

I don't know how it may be with you, but it is the fashion here to be absolutely certain that the Emperor of the French is fastened by Providence and The Fates on a throne of adamant expressly constructed for him since the foundations of the Universe were laid. He knows better, and so do the Police of Paris, and both powers must be grimly entertained by the resolute British belief: knowing what they have known, and doing what they have done, through the last ten years. What Victor Hugo calls "the drop curtain behind which is constructing the great last Act of the French Revolution" has been a little shaken at the bottom lately, however. One seems to see the feet of a rather large chorus getting ready.

I enclose a letter for Plorn to your care, not knowing how to address him. Forgive me for so doing (I write to Alfred direct), and Believe me my Dear Mr. Rusden

Yours faithfully and much obliged

CHARLES DICKENS

G. W. Rusden Esquire
&c &c &c

To J. T. FIELDS, 19 MAY 1869

Text from N, 111, 726-7.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday, Nineteenth May, 1869

My Dear Fields,

Suppose we give the weather a longer chance, and say Monday instead of Friday. I think we must be safer with that precaution. If Monday will suit you, I propose that we meet here that day,—your ladies and you and I,—and cast ourselves on the stonyhearted streets. If it be bright for St. Paul's, good; if not, we can take some other lion that roars in dull weather. We will dine here at six, and meet here at half past two. So IF you should want to go elsewhere after dinner, it can be done, notwithstanding. Let me know in a line what you say.[†1]

O the delight of a cold bath this morning, after those lodging-houses! And a mild sniffler of punch, on getting into the hotel last night, I found what my friend Mr. Wegg calls, "Mellering, sir, very mellering."[†2]

With kindest regards, ever affectionately
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To C. E. FRANCATELLI,[†1] [19] MAY 1869*

MS Ashley W. Olmsted. Date: misdated by CD; Wednesday was 19 May.

GAD'S HILL PLACE | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Eighteenth May, 1869

Mr. Charles Dickens sends his compliments to Mr. Francatelli, and begs to let him know that Mr. Dickens's servant[†2] has made a very strong complaint to him respecting the conduct of the Hotel Porters this morning. He says that they passed the duty of helping him with his luggage, from one to another, in a manner which plainly showed they did not mean to help him at all, and that at last he had to bring down Miss Dickens's large trunk from the second floor, single-handed. This same servant has been with Mr. Dickens at innumerable hotels, and never made a complaint to him on any former occasion.

The St. James's Hotel is so admirably conducted under Mr. Francatelli's management, and the service is usually so quick and obliging, that Mr. Dickens feels it incumbent on him to bring this misconduct under Mr. Francatelli's notice.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 20 MAY 1869*

MS Huntington Library.

Thursday Afternoon | Twentieth May 1869

My Dearest Georgy

In case Monday next will do for you—to be taken up at 4, as last time—it will suit perfectly. I believe the Fields party dine with me at the office that day. I think I should go back to Gad's with you for a couple of days, on the Tuesday. Let N[†3] know whether Monday is an engagement.

Ever most affecy

CD.

To MRS DALLAS, 24 MAY 1869*

MS New York Public Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Monday Twenty Fourth May 1869

My Dear Mrs. Dallas.

Pray do not worry yourself on the subject of your last note, and pray do not suppose that it has in the least worried me. Your good feeling and good sense in altering your view of the case are above all praise.[†4] Such a proof of them—though I did not need it—can not possibly be otherwise than a highly agreeable experience to one who is truly your friend.

Affectionately Yours ever

CHARLES DICKENS

To FREDERIC CHAPMAN, 25 MAY 1869

Extract in Alwin J. Scheuer catalogue No. 6 (1931); MS I p.; dated Office of AYR, 25 May 69; addressed Frederic Chapman.

Dear F. C.

... will you dine with me at the Star and Garter, Richmond, on Saturday at 6 sharp, to meet Mr. Fields of Boston.

To J. T. FIELDS, 25 MAY 1869

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Twenty Fifth May 1869

My Dear Fields.

First, you leave Charing Cross Station, by North Kent Railway, on Wednesday June 2nd. at 2..10 for Higham station, the next station beyond Gravesend.

—Now, bring your lofty mind back to the previous Saturday: next Saturday. There is only one way of combining Windsor and Richmond. That way will leave us but 2 hours and a half at Windsor. This would not be long enough to enable us to see the inside of the Castle, but would admit of our seeing the outside, the Long Walk, &c. I will assume that such a survey will suffice.[†1] That taken for granted, meet me at Waterloo Terminus (Loop line for Windsor) at 10..35 on Saturday morning.

The rendezvous for Monday evening will be here at ½ past 8.[†2] As I don't know Mr. Eytinge's number in Guildford Street, will you kindly undertake to let him know that we are going out with the great Detective?[†3] And will you also give him the time and place for Gad's?[†4]

I shall be here on Friday for a few hours; meantime at Gad's aforesaid.

With love to the ladies
Ever faithfully
CD.

To THE MANAGER, THE STAR & GARTER,[†1] 25 MAY 1869*

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Twenty Fifth May, 1869

Mr. Charles Dickens sends his compliments to the Manager of the Star and Garter, and begs to bespeak a good little dinner for five persons[†2] on Saturday next at 6 exactly.[†3] The room to be ready to receive the ladies of the party by 3 o'Clock.

To BENJAMIN WEBSTER, 25 MAY 1869*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: Benjamin Webster Esquire | Theatre Royal New Adelphi.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Twenty Fifth May 1869

My Dear Webster

One of the Ladies of my little American party knocked up last night just as we were coming to the Theatre[†4] (and no wonder: they do tear about so all day) which put us all out and destroyed our evening.[†5]

They are away to the Isle of Wight now, to see Tennyson;[†6] if they return alive, I shall hope to take them to the Theatre yet.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To THE EARL RUSSELL, 26 MAY 1869

Text from MDGH, 11, 422.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Wednesday, May 26th, 1869

My Dear Lord Russell,

I have delayed answering your kind letter, in order that you might get home before I wrote. I am happy to report myself quite well again, and I shall be charmed to come to Pembroke Lodge on any day that may be most convenient to Lady Russell and yourself after the middle of June.

You gratify me beyond expression by your reference to the Liverpool dinner. I made the allusion to you with all my heart at least, and it was most magnificently received.†1

I beg to send my kind regard to Lady Russell, with many thanks for her remembrance, and am ever,
My dear Lord Russell, faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To MESSRS BANTON & MACKRELL, [27 MAY 1869]

Mention in Banton & Mackrell to CD, 28 May 69 (MS Messrs. Farrer & Co.). Date: written the previous day.

Enclosing a cheque for £50 to meet two bills drawn by Sydney Dickens,†2 dated 8 and 9 Apr 69.†3

To THE MAYOR OF SOUTHAMPTON,†4 [27 MAY 1869]

Envelope only in Sotheby's catalogue, July 1967; addressed His Honor The Mayor | Southampton. PM Rochester, 27 May 69.

To W. H. WILLS, 27 MAY 1869*

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Thursday Twenty Seventh May, 1869

My Dear Wills

I call the "conceit", Two to One.†5 It goes very well indeed, I think.

Ever affectionately
CD.

To MESSRS THURSTON & CO.,[†1] 28 MAY 1869*

MS Enthoven Collection, Theatre Museum. Address: Messrs. Thurston and Co. | Billiard Table Makers | Catherine Street.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND, | Friday Twenty Eighth May 1869.

Mr. Charles Dickens sends his compliments to Messrs. Thurston and Co. and begs they will be so good as send one of their workmen down to Gad's Hill, with a new supply of Kamptulicon[†2] for the Billiard Room.[†3]

To AUGUSTUS DE MORGAN,[†4] 31 MAY 1869

MS Brown University Library.

Thirty First May, 1869[†5]

My Dear Mr. De Morgan

If you will look at the Second Volume of Forsters Life of Landor,[†6] just published, you will see that the character is openly stated (obviously with my knowledge) to have been taken from him.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To THE EARL RUSSELL, 31 MAY 1869*

MS Private.

THE ATHENÆUM,
Tuesday Thirty First May, 1869

My Dear Lord Russell.

I shall have the greatest of pleasure in presenting myself at Pembroke Lodge on Saturday June the Nineteenth.

Faithfully Yours Ever
CHARLES DICKENS

June

To GEORGE DOLBY, 1 JUNE 1869

MS Houghton Library, Harvard.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND, | Tuesday First June 1869

My Dear Dolby.

I am obliged to leave before your time today, and consequently write this note. Scott brings it.

Not a word have I heard from Fechter (except through Ouvry), and not a word from you about your going with him!!![†1] What are you up to???

Here have I been shewing the Lions to Fields until I am uncertain respecting the relative positions of my head and my heels. We were out with the Police last night for the second time.

Fields, and Annie, and Mabel Lowell, and Eytinge, are coming to Gads tomorrow for—I believe—a week. On Monday we are going to make the Canterbury Pilgrimage.[†2] The house is full, but if you can—and will—join the party, I can lodge you comfortably at the Falstaff. Perhaps after your sister's concert has taken place,[†3] you may have leisure for a little country frost and shiver. Write me a line at Gads, and say you are coming down, and when.

I have done the article for Fechter in America, and it goes out for the Atlantic Monthly by tomorrow's Mail.[†4]

Ever affecy.

CD.

To MRS ROSS CHURCH,[†5] 4 JUNE 1869

Extract in N, 111, 729 from catalogue.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT. | 4 June 1869

Regarding her health and his own. Mine returned before I had rested a week, and I now feel ashamed of myself as a sort of impostor in having rested at all![†6]

To JOSEPH ELLIS,[†7] 4 JUNE 1869*

MS Bodleian Library. Address: Joseph Ellis Esquire | Monks, Balcombe | near | Brighton.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT

Friday Fourth June 1869

My Dear Mr. Ellis

I have received your note and book of poems[†8] this morning, and lose no time in acknowledging their safe receipt and in sending you my cordial thanks. I am going to read the book forthwith.

My health is quite restored, thank God. It was only affected by over-fatigue and a hard American winter.

Believe me | Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

Joseph Ellis Esquire

To PERCY FITZGERALD, 4 JUNE 1869

Text from facsimile in Fitzgerald, Memories of CD, 1913, p. 52. Address (envelope only, MS Dickens House): Percy Fitzgerald Esquire | 32 Merrion Street | Dublin. PM Rochester 4 June 69.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Fourth June 1869

My Dear Fitzgerald

I am glad to know that the story[†1] is so far advanced and that you think well of it; for I have no doubt that you are right. I don't like either of your names,[†2] for the reason that they don't seem to me solidly earnest enough for such a story. But give me a little time to think of another, and I flatter myself that I may suggest a good one.[†3]

Ever Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS DORA GREENWELL,[†4] 4 JUNE 1869

Extract in Phillips' catalogue, Feb 1984; MS 1 p.; and envelope; dated Gad's Hill Place, 4 June 69; addressed Miss Dora Greenwell, North Bailey, Durham.

Thanking her for her sympathetic and interesting letter.

To MESSRS BANTON & MACKRELL, [6 JUNE 1869]

Mention in Banton & Mackrell to CD, 7 June 69 (Messrs Coutts & Co.). Date: no doubt written previous day.

Enclosing a cheque for £30, to meet a further bill drawn by Sydney Dickens.[†5]

To DR CHARLES MACKAY, 6 JUNE 1869

MS Myers & Co. Address: Dr. Mackay | Fern Dell | near | Dorking.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT,
Sunday Sixth June 1869.

My Dear Mackay

No work to do[†1] (the best name, I think, as having a double meaning) is very welcome indeed, and goes to the printer by this post.[†2]

Ever faithfully

CD.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, MAY-EARLY JUNE 1869

Extract in "A Day with Charles Dickens", The Best of All Good Company, ed. Blanchard Jerrold, 1871, p. 48. Date: "a very few weeks after the Readings at Preston had been stopped" (22 Apr 69), according to Jerrold; probably, therefore, written in May or June.

After all that has been said, I feel almost like an impostor; I am so unconscionably well.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 11 JUNE 1869*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Eleventh June 1869

My Dearest Georgy

I find that I cannot very well get down to Gad's before Sunday. I purpose taking the train down that leaves for Higham from Charing X at 10..40: arriving at 12..7.

Love to all | Ever affectionately

CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?13 JUNE 1869]

Extract in F, XII, i, 845.†3 Date: Meadows died on 12 June 69; his death was reported in The Times the following day.

I see in the paper to-day that Meadows†4 is dead. I had a talk with him at Coutts's a week or two ago, when he said he was seventy-five,†5 and very weak. Except for having a tearful eye, he looked just the same as ever. My mind still constantly misgives me concerning Macready. Curiously, I don't think he has been ever, for ten minutes together, out of my thoughts since I talked with Meadows last. Well, the year that brings trouble brings comfort too; I have a great success in the boy-line to announce to you. Harry has won the second scholarship at Trinity Hall,†1 which gives him £50 a year as long as he stays there; and I begin to hope that he will get a fellowship.

To FREDERICK LOCKER,†2 13 JUNE 1869

MS Armstrong Browning Library. Address: F. Locker Esquire | 91 Victoria Street | London | S.W.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.

Sunday Thirteenth June 1869

My Dear Mr. Locker

I have been for the last ten days perpetually journeying and sightseeing with some friends from America, and have been out of the way of all letters. Thus I have missed yours until now. If this should reach you while Tennyson is by you, pray give him my love and tell him I am heartily sorry to have missed your kindly offered opportunity of meeting him.[†3] And pray accept my thanks on your own account.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

F. Locker Esquire

To J. H. NIGHTINGALE, 14 JUNE 1869*

MS Private.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Fourteenth June 1869

My Dear Mr. Nightingale

I have received Mrs. Boult's MS here this morning, with a note from Mr. Boult.[†4] The story shall have the earliest attention I can bestow upon it. Several similar claims are awaiting me at the office of All The Year Round in London, but I will clear the way for this one with all possible speed.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

J. H. Nightingale Esquire

To FREDERIC CHAPMAN, 15 JUNE 1869*

MS Morgan Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Fifteenth June 1869

My Dear F. C.

Please send a complete set of my C. D. Edition to J. Mac Gregor[†1] Esqre. Inns of Court Lending Library[†2] 4 Fig Tree Court Temple.

—And another set to General Freeman Murray,[†3] Government House, Chatham Barracks.[†4] Carriage paid.

Faithfully Yours always

CD.

To MRS J. T. FIELDS, 15 JUNE 1869*

MS (copy) Huntington Library.[†5]

Gad's Hill Place
Tuesday Fifteenth June, 1869.

My dear Mrs. Fields—

A brief note, to say that we are always talking of you—and that I am delighted to find you dating from my pet rooms[†6]—and that I am ashamed to have forgotten the letter to Kennedy[†7] in a rush of office business—and that Harry's having won a good scholarship at Cambridge[†8] is a timely gleam in my boyoutlook, of which I make a great deal—and that the hay is spoiling in the cold and wet—and that we have come to the amazing conclusion that we miss you all, very much!!!

Ever affectionately yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To L. J. HOLLENIUS,[†1] 15 JUNE 1869*

MS Charles Lake. Address: American Mail Steamer | L. J. Hollenius Esquire | Box 6724 | Post Office | New York City | U.S. of America.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Fifteenth June 1869.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Hollenius, and begs to thank him for his very obliging note and his bright little Comedy.[†2] The latter evinces a remarkably accurate knowledge of the English language, and Mr. Dickens is much interested and pleased by having unconsciously assisted Mr. Hollenius in the study he has so ably mastered.[†3]

To JOHN MACGREGOR, 15 JUNE 1869

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Fifteenth June 1869

Dear Sir

I should have answered your letter sooner, but that I have been constantly engaged since the beginning of this month with some American friends.

[†a] By this post I write to my publishers, begging them to send a set of my books to the Inns of Court Lending Library. I hope I need not add that I most readily respond to your request.

And I shall feel truly obliged to you if you will give me the first opportunity the Athenaeum affords of becoming personally known to you. I am so very well acquainted with the Rob Roy Canoe,[†4] and have taken passage in her with so much pleasure, that I have a special interest in her Captain.[†a]

Believe me Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

J. MacGregor Esquire

To JAMES PORTER,[†5] 15 JUNE 1869*

MS Huntington Library. Address: James Porter Esq. | 30 Chaddock Street | Preston.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Fifteenth June 1869.

Dear Sir

In reply to your letter dated a month ago (I am not a Free Mason as you suppose me to be), I am happy to assure you that I am perfectly well, and that I thank you for your interest in my health. My arrangements for the winter are not so clear before me as that I can answer your enquiry in reference to a Farewell Reading at Preston.[†1] I should have answered you to this effect much sooner, but that I have been making holiday.

Your faithfull Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

James Porter Esq.

To CHARLES KENT, 16 JUNE 1869

Mention in Dickens Exhibition, New Dudley Gallery catalogue, MS 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill, 16 June 69; addressed Charles Kent.

To SIR CHARLES LOCOCK,[†2] 16 JUNE 1869*

MS Free Library Philadelphia. Address: Sir Charles Locock | &c &c &c | 26 Hertford Street | May Fair | London | W.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Sixteenth June 1869

My Dear Sir Charles

I was delighted to see you on the occasion to which your kind note refers, and shall hope for a renewal of that pleasure in the same place next winter. I am happy to report myself quite well again and in full force.

Believe me ever | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Sir Charles Locock.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 17 JUNE 1869*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Seventeenth June 1869

My Dearest Georgy

I do not expect to be here tomorrow, but I shall be here on Saturday at mid day. I have no doubt that your appointment will stand for Saturday at ½ past 4.

Ever Most affecy.
CD.

To [?MRS WREFORD MAJOR], 19 JUNE 1869*

MS Nancy Cravens Chamberlain.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Saturday Nineteenth June 1869

My Dear [Mary][†1]

I have really no private friend in New York to whom I should feel myself justified in sending a letter of introduction. For this reason:-I have no private friend there (to the best of my knowledge) who would send a letter of introduction to me.

I am happy to report myself quite well again. Wishing you a pleasant voyage and a safe return, I am always

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

[Mrs. Wreford Major][†2]

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 19 JUNE 1869

Mention in second Dickens Exhibition at New Dudley Gallery, catalogue, 1908; MS 1 ½ pp.; dated office of AYR, 19 June 69.

Respecting Forster's Life of Landor.

To [CHARLES FECHTER], 20 JUNE 1869

Extract (in French), in Maison Charavay catalogue No. 713 (Oct 1963); MS 1 p.; dated Higham, 20 June 69; addressed à Falleter, clearly a misreading of "Fechter". Translated back to English by W.J. Carlton.

I was not there when your note arrived. Georgina sent it to me at the . . . (where I was not) and it came back here only to-day.

I see no objection at all to your sending that telegram to Booth.[†3]

C.D.

To MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL, 22 JUNE 1869*

MS Johns Hopkins University.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Twenty Second June 1869

Messrs. Chapman and Hall

Please to give the Bearer a copy of "Aunt Margaret's Trouble"[†4] for me.

CHARLES DICKENS

To [MESSRS SKINNER & CO.],[†1] 22 JUNE 1869*

MS Fales Library, New York University.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND, | Twenty Second June 1869

Mr. Charles Dickens sends the coat for alteration, and wishes to have a waistcoat of the same colour and material—a single breasted collarless waistcoat as usual.

To SIR THOMAS WATSON, [23 JUNE 1869]

Extract in F, XI, i, 805*n. Date:* 23 June 69, according to Forster.

I thank you heartily for your great kindness and interest. It would really pain me if I thought you could seriously doubt my implicit reliance on your professional skill and advice. I feel as certain now as I felt when you came to see me on my breaking down through over fatigue that the injunction you laid upon me to stop in my course of Readings was necessary and wise. And to its firmness I refer (humanly speaking) my speedy recovery from that moment. I would on no account have resumed, even on the turn of this year, without your sanction. Your friendly aid will never be forgotten by me; and again I thank you for it with all my heart.

To J. T. FIELDS, [?LATE JUNE 1869]

Mention in To Norton, 26 June 69. Date: probably a day or two before that letter.

Sending him an enclosure from Norton.

To W. H. WILLS, 24 JUNE 1869

Text from MDGH, 11, 422-3.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND, | Thursday, June 24th, 1869

My Dear Wills,

At a great meeting[†2] compounded of your late "Chief," Charley,[†3] Morley, Grieve,[†4] and Telbin,[†5] your letter was read to-day, and a very sincere record of regret and thanks was placed on the books of the great institution.[†6]

Many thanks for the suggestion about the condition of churches. I am so aweary of church questions of all sorts that I am not quite clear as to tackling this. But I am turning it in my mind. I am afraid of two things: firstly, that the thing would not be picturesquely done; secondly, that a general cucumber-coolness would pervade the mind of our circulation.

Nothing new here but a speaking-pipe, a post-box, and a mouldy smell from some forgotten crypt—an extra mouldy smell, mouldier than of yore. Lillie[†1] sniffs, projects one eye into nineteen hundred and ninety-nine, and does no more.

I have been to Chadwick's,[†2] to look at a new kind of cottage he has built (very ingenious and cheap).[†3]

We were all much disappointed last Saturday afternoon by a neighbouring fire being only at a carpenter's, and not at Drury Lane Theatre.[†4] Ellen's[†5] child having an eye nearly poked out by a young friend, and being asked whether the young friend was not very sorry afterwards, replied:
"No. She wasn't. I was."

London execrable.

Ever affectionately yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

P.S.—Love to Mrs. Wills.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 25 JUNE 1869*

MS Huntington Library.

London, Friday Twenty Fifth June 1869

My Dearest Georgy

I will come back on Sunday morning by the same Sunday Train as before. A letter from Forster will probably await me at Gad's. I have given him any day next week except Monday and Friday, and have told him about your coming.

Glad to hear that Pope's[†6] foot is better.

Ever Most affecy.

CD.

To CHARLES ELIOT NORTON, 26 JUNE 1869*

MS Houghton Library, Harvard.

London, Saturday Twenty Sixth June 1869

My Dear Norton

Immediately on receiving your letter, I sent its enclosure to Fields in Edinburgh. He might have left there by the compass of a day or so, before it reached; but he was on his way to St. Andrew's, in that case, and it would be sent after him.

Long ago, I had a house at Lausanne for some months,[†7] and scoured the whole neighbourhood perpetually. I know every foot of the ground about Vevay,[†1] and have scaled all the hills thereabout,[†2] and enjoyed all the weathers. It would be very pleasant to me to have such a holiday as your kindness offers, but I must remain at Gad's within easy reach of Babylon. For I could not at this time leave "All The Year Round" without the magnificent Editorial presence once or twice a week.

I have duly made my June visit at Lord Russell's, and I found Lady Russell full of her agreeable impressions of certain visitors from the other side of the Atlantic.[†3] He is in wonderful force, and made (as I dare say you know) an admirable speech on the Irish Church bill.[†4]

Georgina, or Mary, or both, shall be left to tell Gad's Hill news (comprising Harry's winning of the second Scholarship at Trinity Hall, and being greatly predicted of) and expressing the Gad's Hill enduring remembrance and affection. I send my love to Mrs. Norton and to all, and am Ever My Dear Norton

Your affectionate friend

CHARLES DICKENS

To SIR CHARLES LOCOCK, 29 JUNE 1869*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: Sir Charles Locock M. D. | Hertford Street | May Fair | London | W.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Twenty Ninth June 1869

My Dear Sir Charles

I have been away for some days, or I should have written sooner to thank you for your kind note, and to assure you of the pleasure and interest with which I saw you so near me,[†5] on the occasion to which it refers, and looking so wonderfully young and fresh!

I hope I may see you there once more, when I resume my Readings—to finish them—on the turn of the year.

Believe me always | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Sir Charles Locock.

To P. S. FRASER, 30 JUNE 1869

Extracts from American Art Association catalogue, Nov 1923 and John Waller catalogue No. 105; MS 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill Place, 30 June 69; addressed P. S. Fraser.

Can you come down to Gad's Hill (we have no company just now).... giving directions and offering to meet him at the station.

To FREDERICK LOCKER, ?JUNE 1869

Extract in News of the World, 15 July 1894. Date: "written about a year before his death", according to News of the World, above.

Replying to the question whether he had a copy of The Village Coquettes,[†1] No; and if I knew it was in my house, and if I could not get rid of it in any other way, I would burn the wing of the house where it was.

July

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 1 JULY 1869*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,

Thursday First July 1869

My Dearest Georgy

6 Gloucester Terrace Hyde Park.[†2] I have not heard from Fraser: so his room had best be prepared. Dolby and Fechter will probably be down on Tuesday, so the room can be used in any case.

Ever Most affecy.

CD.

To JOHN PERRY,[†3] 4 JULY 1869

MS W. A. Foyle. Address: John G. Perry Esquire | 12 Westbourne Street | Hyde Park | London | W.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Fourth July, 1869

My Dear Mr. Perry

Many thanks for your precise corrections of dates in that wonderful story.[†4] I have been perpetually turning and turning it over, since you told it to me. There is great material in it; and I want to see its capabilities "all round", before devising a swoop upon it.

Believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John G Perry Esquire

To CHARLES KENT, 8 JULY 1869*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: Private | Charles Kent Esquire | "Sun" office.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Eighth July 1869

My Dear Kent.

Of all the hopeless MSS I ever saw, I think I never met with a more hopeless one than your friend's immense packet! What can I say of it in writing that you can send to him?

Ever affecy.

CD.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 9 JULY 1869*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,

Friday Ninth July 1869

My Dearest Georgy

I will come down at noon on Sunday, by my usual Sunday Train. Letters here this morning all right.

Ever most affectionately

CD.

To W. R. S. RALSTON,[†1] 12 JULY 1869*

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Twelfth July, 1869

My Dear Sir

Many thanks for your kind note.

I will write to Mr. Turguenief[†2] at Baden,[†3] and thank him for his book.[†4]

Believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. Ralston Esquire

P.S. I have not yet received the volume, and await its arrival.[†5]

To SHIRLEY BROOKS, [13] JULY 1869

Text in MDGH, 11, 423 checked from MS Sotheby's, June 1955. Date: misdated by CD, Tuesday was 13 July 69.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Twelfth July, 1869

My Dear Brooks

I have appended my sign-manual to the Memorial,[†1] which I think is very discreetly drawn up. I have a strong feeling of sympathy with poor Mrs. Cunningham,[†2] for I remember the steps by which she was drawn down in life, and the pretty home she managed charmingly.[†3] She has always done her duty well, and has had hard trials.

But I gravely doubt the success of the Memorial, I am sorry to add.[†4]

It was hotter here yesterday on this Kentish chalk, than I have felt it anywhere for many a day. Now, it is overcast, and raining hard—much to the satisfaction of great farmers like myself.

I am glad to infer from your companionship with the Cocked Hats,[†5] that there is no such thing as Gout within several miles of you. May it keep its distance!

Ever My Dear Brooks | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Shirley Brooks Esquire

To GEORGE RAGGETT,[†6] 14 JULY 1869*

MS Mrs T. J. P. York.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Wednesday Fourteenth July, 1869

Sir

There can be no doubt of the truthfulness of the sad picture you present with much feeling in the letter you have addressed to me; or, that the combined action on a great scale of many people might immensely brighten it. But I grieve to add that the subject[†7] is one of many to which I cannot devote attention, and that I must concentrate myself on duties already undertaken.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

George Raggett Esq.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 14 JULY 1869

Mention in Merwyn-Clayton Sales Co. catalogue, May 1905; MS 1 p.; dated 14 July 69.

To JOHN FORSTER, [MID-JULY 1869]

Extract in F, XI, ii, 807. Date: middle of July 69, according to Forster.

What should you think of the idea of a story beginning in this way?—Two people, boy and girl, or very young, going apart from one another, pledged to be married after many years—at the end of the book. The interest to arise out of the tracing of their separate ways, and the impossibility of telling what will be done with that impending fate.[†1]

To AUSTEN HENRY LAYARD, [15] JULY 1869

MS F. R. Dean. Date: CD's error: Thursday was 15 July 1869.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Eighteenth July 1869

My Dear Layard

I hope you may like this article.[†2] It will be published next Wednesday week.

Looking forward to the pleasure of your visit,

Ever cordially Yours,

CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS J. T. FIELDS, [?17 JULY 1869]

Mention in Mrs Fields to her sister, Mrs James H. Beal, 17 July, given in George Curry, CD and Annie Fields, p. 45. Date: CD probably wrote the day the Fields's were returning to London from their provincial tour, 17 July.

Hoping to meet them in time to persuade them to go to Gad's Hill.[†3]

To THOMAS CHAPPELL, 19 JULY 1869*

MS Fales Library, New York University.

GAD'S HILL PLACE
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Nineteenth July, 1869

My Dear Mr. Chappell

Your note has been brought down to me by a messenger to day. Saturday will suit me perfectly well and we will therefore book that day.

Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Chappell Esquire

To J. T. FIELDS, [20 JULY 1869]

MS (envelope) Mrs Renée Métivier Black. Address: James T Fields Esquire | Edwards's Hotel | George Street | Hanover Square | London. PM Rochester 20 July 69.

To W. C. MACREADY, 20 JULY 1869†

MS Morgan Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Twentieth July, 1869

My Dearest Macready

I am happy to report myself perfectly well, and flourishing. We are just now announcing the resumption and conclusion of the broken Series of Farewell Readings, in a London Course of Twelve, beginning early in the New Year.

Scarcely a day has gone by, this summer, in which we have not talked of you and yours. Georgina, Mary, and I, continually speak of you. In the spirit we certainly are even more together than we used to be in the body in the old times.

I don't know whether you have heard that Harry has taken the second scholarship (£50 a year) at Trinity Hall, Cambridge. The Big Wigs expect him to do a great deal, there.

Wills having given up, in consequence of broken health (he has been my sub Editor for 20 years), I have taken Charley into "All The Year Round".[†1] He is a very good man of business, and evinces considerable aptitude in sub-editing work. [†a] You know that he made a terrible Mess of his paper-making?—And it happened most fortunately that this post fell in, just as he was stranded.[†a]

This place is immensely improved since you were here, and really is now very pretty indeed. We are sorry to have no present prospect of your coming to see it; but I like to know of your being at the Sea, and having to do—from the Beach,[†2] as Mrs. Keeley used to say in The Prisoner of War[†3]—with the winds and the waves, and all their freshening influences.

I dined at Greenwich a few days ago, with Delane. He asked me about you with much interest. He looks as if he had never seen a Printing office, and had never been out of bed after midnight.

[†a] For myself and my doings, I am taking it as easily this summer as I can:— which is not VERY[†4] easily, with a weekly publication always clutching at one's sleeve, and most complicated Literary-Executorial functions bequeathed by Townshend. You will be concerned to hear that the following discovery was made (in a Sermon) last Sunday week by the Curate here;[†1] that is to say:—That the "spoliation" of the Irish Church[†2] is a wickedness committed in consequence of one of the Ministers having Popish connexions; and that if "that act of Apostacy and blasphemy" be carried out, Our Saviour will very shortly appear upon earth "to assert and avenge himself" by the establishment of his Kingdom!!— Pretty well this, within 30 miles of London, halfway through 1869!!!

Our loves to the noble boy (I take his freshness next, to remove the taste of the Curate), and to dear Mrs. Macready. I "enjoy" my Reverend Christian Brother so little, that I find I get on best without him.[†a†3]

Great excitement caused here by your capital news of Butty.[†4] I suppose Willy has at least a dozen children by this time.

Ever My Dearest Macready | Your attached and affectionate

CHARLES DICKENS

†a Forster is away on one of his official tours.†5 He has not been well; but I thought him better three weeks ago, than he has been for some time.†a

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 20 JULY 1869*

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Tuesday Twentieth July, 1869

My Dear Ouvry

Will you kindly charge one of your clerks to give me the date of Townshend's death,†6 and a copy of that clause in his will which appoints me his Literary Executor, and directs the publication of his "Religious Opinions, without alteration".†7

Faithfully Yours ever
CHARLES DICKENS

To THOMAS ADOLPHUS TROLLOPE, 21 JULY 1869*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Twenty First July, 1869

My Dear Trollope.

The American publishers seem of a sudden to have become rather shy of investing in early proofs. No advances have been made to me in respect of Veronica,†1 as yet. Possibly they wait to make her acquaintance before "proposing". I am on the watch, and have cautioned my son Charley—who has succeeded Wills, retired—to lure on any reasonable offerer. In all previous cases, the offer has originated on the American side.

After a very cold beginning of summer, we have had a few very hot days here. We tremendously large farmers want some rain—and apparently are not going to have it, for the skies look dry. That other matters are in a rather alarming state in these parts, I am sorry to let you know on the authority of the local curate. He has received a celestial Commission to announce (in a sermon) that the "spoliation" of the Irish Church is the result of one of the Ministers having popish family connexions, and that if that "act of apostacy and blasphemy" be completed, Our Saviour will presently come on earth "to assert and avenge himself".†2 This is the latest news of the latter half of the nineteenth century as it unfolds its wisdom within 30 miles of London!

A thousand thanks for the charming Italian Vista you open between October and November; but there is no chance of my being able to quit England this year.

Ever Your affectionate
CHARLES DICKENS

To W. H. ALVAREZ,[†3] 22 JULY 1869*

MS Private.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Twenty Second July 1869

Sir

I have not the least knowledge of that former communication of yours to which you refer in your letter of the 18th. I can only suppose that some unaccountable mistake arose in the course of the transaction of the business of this office (its correspondence is impossible to be conducted by one person.)

Allow me to thank you for your book,[†4] and to express my regret that the enclosed verses are not adapted to the requirements of these pages.

I find no trace here of the receipt of "A Stumble over Steeples".[†1]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Alvarez

To R. H. GOOCH,[†2] 22 JULY 1869

Text from N, 111, 732.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday, Twenty Second July, 1869

Dear Sir

I shall be very happy to accept the dedication with which you propose to honour me.[†3]

Faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To MISS EMILY JOLLY,[†4] 22 JULY 1869

Text from MDGH, 111, 283-4.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday, 22nd July 1869

Dear Miss Jolly,

Mr. Wills has retired from here (for rest and to recover his health), and my son, who occupies his place, brought me this morning a story[†5] in MS., with a request that I would read it. I read it with extraordinary interest, and was greatly surprised by its uncommon merit.[†6] On asking whence it came, I found that it came from you!

You need not to be told, after this, that I accept it with more than readiness. If you will allow me I will go over it with great care, and very slightly touch it here and there. I think it will require to be divided into three portions. You shall have the proofs and I will publish it immediately. I think so VERY highly of it that I will have special attention called to it in a separate advertisement.[†7] I congratulate you most sincerely and heartily on having done a very special thing. It will always stand apart in my mind from any other story I ever read. I write with its impression newly and strongly upon me, and feel absolutely sure that I am not mistaken.

Believe me, faithfully yours always
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To CHARLES KENT, 22 JULY 1869

Mention in Dickens Exhibition, New Dudley Gallery catalogue, 1908; MS 1 p.; dated Office of AYR, 22 July 69; addressed Charles Kent.

Telling Kent that he is going to Gad's Hill on Sunday morning.

To MR and MRS J.T. FIELDS, 24 JULY 1869*

MS Dartmouth College, New Hampshire.

CHARLES DICKENS
Wishes he had given this First Edition of Pickwick[†1]
To his friends
James and Annie Fields.
In witness that he did not,
He, at Edwards's Hotel, George Street,
Hanover Square, London,[†2]
Hereunto sets his hand:
On Saturday 24th. July 1869

CD.

To THOMAS CHAPPELL, [25] JULY 1869*

MS Princeton University Library. Date: CD's error: Sunday was 25 July 1869.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,

Sunday Twenty Sixth July 1869

My Dear Chappell

I brought away last night, Mr. Frisby's[†3] coat—including the contents of his pockets. I left behind, an exquisite garment in the nature of a sleeved cloak, in colour a cinnamon drab. If an exchange can be effected through your good offices, with many apologies on my part for my ridiculous readiness to take any coat offered to me, I shall be much obliged.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Chappell Esquire

To FREDERIC CHAPMAN, 28 JULY 1869

MS Johns Hopkins University.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Twenty Eighth July 1869

My Dear F. C.

Please send to The Countess Russell 37 Chesham Place Belgrave Square, a copy of the best Edition of the Uncommercial Traveller.[†1]

Faithfully Ever
CD.

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 29 JULY 1869*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Twenty Ninth July 1869

My Dear Ouvry

As Chapman is about (with my consent) to take a partner,[†2] it is necessary that we should have a Deed recording that all my books to this time are, half my copyright, half his; and that no change in form or price of publication can be made without my consent. This is the whole object and purpose.[†3]

Will you kindly have such a deed prepared,—for our execution any Thursday? If you want a schedule of the books, or any other business information, Frederick Chapman 193 Piccadilly will at once supply it.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To J. B. WOOLMER,[†4] 29 JULY 1869

Mention in N, 111, 732; dated Office of AYR; addressed J. B. Woolmer.

Arranging to meet him.

To IVAN SERGEEVICH TURGENEV, [?JULY 1869]

Mention in To Ralston, 12 July. Date: no doubt CD wrote on receipt of the translation of his book.[†1]

August

To GEORGE DOLBY, 1 AUGUST 1869*

MS Maggs Bros Ltd. Address: George Dolby Esquire | Messrs. Chappell & Co. | 50 New Bond Street | London | W.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday First August 1869.

My Dear Dolby.

I shall not be in town tomorrow. I fear it is of little use asking you if you will come here by dinner time (as you probably are busy), but here I shall be, in association with "Neat Wines" and "Good Beds".

Palmer and Jarrett are inevitably not in a dangerous fever of enthusiasm, I should say, on the subject of Fechter's engagement.[†2]

Scott is drifting out on the Dead Sea of Poverty, with only one sham-brooch for a raft. When that capsizes, I think he will go down.

Ever Faithfully
CD.

To MISS MARY DICKENS, 3 AUGUST 1869

Text from MDGH, 111, 426.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday, Aug. 3rd., 1869

My Dearest Mamie,

I send you the second chapter of the remarkable story.[†3] The printer is late with it, and I have not had time to read it, and as I altered it considerably here and there, I have no doubt there are some verbal mistakes in it. However, they will probably express themselves.

But I offer a prize of six pairs of gloves—between you, and your aunt, and Ellen Stone,[†4] as competitors—to whomsoever will tell me what idea in this second part is mine. I don't mean an idea in language, in the turning of a sentence, in any little description of an action, or a gesture, or what not in a small way, but an idea, distinctly affecting the whole story as I found it. You are all to assume that I found it in the main as you read it, with one exception. If I had written it, I should have made the woman love the man at last. And I should have shadowed that possibility out, by the child's bringing them a little more together on that holiday Sunday.[†1]

But I didn't write it. So, finding that it wanted something, I put that something in. What was it?[†2]

Love to Ellen Stone.

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To J. T. FIELDS, 3 AUGUST 1869*

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Third August, 1869

My Dear Fields.

Sorry to find my "Transatlantic Cousin"[†3] in a growling state. Hope to induce him to purr on his return.

Enclosed is the story I spoke of.[†4] Chapter I will be published here on Wednesday August 11, Chapter 2 on Wednesday August 18.

My dear love to Mrs. Fields. Airy duty to Snowdrop.[†5] The General[†6] appeared with the Drag[†7] last Sunday, and we all went through appalling dangers. "All" includes Layard and his young wife (not from Nineveh), and Helps[†8] (not plain: H.E.L.P.S.), who was so terrified that he got inside. We took some curly variations on the turf in the Park of Cobham, in which my left check brushed the dew off the grass.—I was behind the box-lady.

We have a very wet day to day, which the Garden greatly wanted. There is a chair (without a bottom) at a shop near the office, which I think would suit you. It cannot stand of itself, but will almost seat somebody, if you put it in a corner, and prop one leg up with two wedges and cut another leg off. The proprietor asks £20, but says he admires Literature and would take £18. He is of Republican principles, and I think would take £17 . . 19 . . 6 from a cousin. Shall I secure this prize?*[†9] Please Telegraph without delay.†[†9]

At a shop in Bond Street, there is a portrait of the Gone Coon,[†10] By the Coming man. Price £1200. I have nailed this gem for you. Make cheque payable to Coutts's 59 Strand, London, W.C. Add £2 for the man who gave me the information. (He was once in Waagen's[†1] service, but left in consequence of a misunderstanding respecting a tea spoon).

I am on the look out for more treasures.

Ever my dear Fields | Your most affectionate

CD.

*It is very ugly and wormy.

†It is related—but without proof—that on one occasion Washington declined to sit down in it.

To J. H. NIGHTINGALE, 3 AUGUST 1869*

MS Beinecke Library, Yale University.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Third August 1869

My Dear Mr. Nightingale.

I have not been able to find the book[†2] on my own shelves here, but my daughter has come forward with her copy. I send it by book-post, when I dispatch this note. Pray keep it until you come down to see me.

A pleasant trip to you, and success in everything!

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

J. H. Nightingale Esquire

To EDMUND OLLIER,[†3] 3 AUGUST 1869

MS Berg Collection. Address: Edmund Ollier Esquire | Stretton House | Kemp Town | Brighton.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday, Third August, 1869

My Dear Mr. Ollier,

I am very sensible of the feeling of the Committee towards me; and I receive their invitation (conveyed through you) as a most acceptable mark of their consideration.[†4]

But I have a very strong objection to speech-making beside graves. I do not expect or wish my feeling in this wise to guide other men; still, it is so serious with me, and the idea of ever being the subject of such a ceremony myself is so repugnant to my soul, that I must decline to officiate.[†1]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Edmund Ollier Esquire.

To W. H. WILLS, 3 AUGUST 1869

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Third August 1869

My Dear Wills.

Your account of your journey reminds me of one of the latest American Stories:—How a Traveller by Stage Coach said to the Driver: "Did you ever see a snail Sir?"—"Yes Sir"—"Where did you meet him Sir?"—"I didn't meet him Sir."—"Waal Sir, I think you did, if youll excuse me; for I'm damned if you ever overtook him."

As to Mrs. Dallas,[†2] Lord! If she only knew how ugly I am!—I do believe her to be—well—let me be calm—and yet—under that Skimpolian mask of childishness as to money and worldly affairs, what abysses of shallow cunning are discernible![†3]

All goes well here. I have been "at it" considerably. Look at a very remarkable story in 2 chapters, "An Experience", which begins next week.

Love to Mrs. Wills. I shall be here on Thursday.

Ever My Dear Wills | Your affectionate
CD.

To MRS ELLIOT,[†4] 4 AUGUST 1869

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

26 Wellington Street, Strand, London
Wednesday Fourth August 1869

My Dear F.

A few days ago, I received a note from the Dean,[†5] copying that paragraph in your last note to him, respecting me, which you yourself copied in writing to me last; and asking me to make an appointment to see him. I appointed 5 o'Clock yesterday at the Athenaeum, and our interview lasted for an hour and a quarter.

The Dean said that as he could not write to you (it being useless because you declared you would not open his letter), he had set down the heads and general purport of a letter that he would write, if you two were in correspondence. I read it carefully, and took it away with me to re-read. It is not necessary for me to recapitulate its contents, because the more clearly and shortly I state the main point at issue, the better you will understand it and the less you will be worried by it, most likely.

The great difficulty about the settlement[†1] is this—and this I did not derive, and could not possibly have derived, from your account of it.

It is mortgaged, you see. Money was borrowed on it, and you were a party to that borrowing transaction. The Dean's case is: "I cannot possibly admit that settlement to be a bad one (an illegal one) or that transaction was a fraud. If it were a fraud, and I admit it to have been so, nothing can place me in a worse position. Therefore I hold to its legality, and decide to enforce it. If that enforcement leads to a declaration on F's part of the secret between us,[†2] I must resign my Deanery, and fight it out: always holding to the settlement." At the same time, I elicited from him that although he claimed the money as his right, he did not want to appropriate it to himself, but, the interest on the borrowed money paid, would apply the rest (about £300 a year, I think?) towards the payment of the thousand pounds for which you are jointly responsible.

He repeatedly declared that you had done a great deal for him, and that he was bound to be grateful on that head, and was grateful. But that as to wasting your fortune, he positively denied it; on the contrary had so managed it as to leave you far less in debt than he found you. He said that he had kept the most exact accounts, and that they were producible in support of his statement. That he had repeatedly asked you to go over those accounts, but that nothing would induce you to look at them. And that you could not be expected to understand what they really established, without looking at them.

Over and over and over again, I brought the issue back to this: "The point is the settlement. You are determined to enforce it; she is determined to dispute it. If neither of you will yield anything, what can a mediator do?"—I never got beyond that. I think I could carry almost any other point you might stand out for. At the end of all, I got no atom further. I closed by saying I would write and tell you what had passed; and I very strongly and emphatically declared that you had been—to use the mildest expression—so injudiciously dealt with, that your state of mind was dangerously impulsive in respect of disclosure. I added that after hearing from you, I would communicate with the Dean again, but that I had little or no hope of being serviceable.

It appears to me (but Mr. Stephens[†3] must know for certain how this point stands: which I do not) that the Dean has a strong position in not having seen the CASE[†4] submitted to Counsel respecting the Doctor-Marriage,[†5] and only having seen the OPINION.[†4]

I do not think that Frederick Elliot[†6] can be relied upon to support you. I recommend you on no account to divulge anything to him or to anyone else, without consideration as on a question of Life or Death. Do nothing (except write to me) until you have your daughter Frances[†1] beside you again.

I clearly see that you have been frightfully careless of your letters and papers. Take the hint for the future.

Affectionately Yours always

CD.

To MRS HOSKYNS,[†2] 5 AUGUST 1869*

MS Dickens House.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Fifth August 1869

My Dear Madam

I regret that I cannot have the pleasure of accepting the article returned separately by this day's post, "The Pariahs of Europe": though I am none the less obliged to you for offering it. The subject was, I think, sufficently treated for the purposes of this Journal by Mrs. Gaskell.[†3] I cannot suggest any other and more likely quarter.

There has been unavoidable delay in the publication of "May Day amongst the Mules". It has been several times placed in a No. and as often displaced by collisions of subject, length, pressing topics, and limited space. As I am writing to you, I beg to enclose a cheque for that paper, and I hope it will soon appear in print.[†4]

Mr. and Mrs. Wills have either just come home, or are just coming, to their own house in London: 22 Regents[†a] — [†a] Terrace N. W.

Dear Madam | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Hoskyns

To JOHN FORSTER, [6 AUGUST 1869]

Extracts in F, XI, ii, 807-8*n* and 807-8. Date: both extracts part of same letter, 6 Aug 69, according to Forster.

I have a very remarkable story[†5] indeed for you to read. It is in only two chapters. A thing never to melt into other stories in the mind, but always to keep itself apart.

I laid aside the fancy I told you of, and have a very curious and new idea for my new story[†6] of the murder of a nephew by his uncle, the originality of which was to consist in the review of the murderer's career by himself at the close, when its temptations were to be dwelt upon, as if, not he the culprit, but some other man, were the tempted. The last chapters were to be written in the condemned cell, to which his wickedness, all elaborately elicited from him as if told of another, had brought him.[†1] Not a communicable idea (or the interest of the book would be gone), but a very strong one, though difficult to work.

To ARTHUR HELPS, 6 AUGUST 1869†

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Sixth August, 1869

My Dear Helps

I have been in town since Tuesday, and have but now received your letter. The book shall be sent to you tomorrow.

I was not punished for performing that act of beneficence.[†2] The squall caused me no inconvenience, and favored me with some excellent suggestions for a piece of description.[†3] So, if I may quote from my own account of a drama at a cheap Theatre, it shall be to the effect that [†a]"Virtue was quite as triumphant in this transaction as she usually is in real life: — indeed, I thought rather more so."[†4]

Your Worship flourishes in the general remembrance here, and one of your songs is being sung at this moment.[†a]

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Arthur Helps Esquire

To GEORGE DOLBY, 7 AUGUST 1869*

MS Folger Shakespeare Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Seventh August, 1869

My Dear Dolby

I cannot say that I agree with Fechter in his view of Booth's letter. It seems to me an innocent and straight forward letter enough. As to the incidental and natural use of the word "they", which he thinks so very suspicious, surely it is easily conceivable that "they" (having communicated by post) may be agreed up to the point of depositing a thousand pounds, and may not be agreed up to the point of depositing two thousand four[†1] hundred pounds. As to consecutive nights and New York solely, I think Fechter's standing out on these points, injurious to himself. Surely it is the interest of Palmer and Jarrett to run him, and to run him in New York only, if they can.[†2] If they can not, then surely it is his interest to try two other chances.

Unless a Telegram arrives from America, as Booth promises, I would not answer the letter at all. By perpetually insisting on this, and that, and the other, Fechter will get the dangerous reputation there, of being a man unusually difficult to deal with—and they won't deal with him. But I think he does not take into consideration a very important circumstance:—You and I know perfectly well that Palmer will keep himself thoroughly informed of the business he does with Knowles;[†3] and if it should, from any cause, be below the mark, the Niblo[†4] proposal will go down too. There is no doubt about that.

With love to Mrs. Dolby and the babies | Ever affecy.

CHARLES DICKENS

To THE VERY REV. GILBERT ELLIOT, [8 AUGUST 1869]

Mention in next. Date: sent by same post.

To MRS ELLIOT, 8 AUGUST 1869

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.

Sunday Eighth August 1869

My Dear F.

Pray make your letters to me as brief as you can, and confine yourself as closely to the immediate point before us as you can. You will not misunderstand my emphasizing this request, when I tell you that since I entered on these miserable complications between you and the Dean, I have had some distressing indications that I am not yet as well as I hoped I was; and that I am painfully reminded of the caution given me by the Doctors to add nothing, this summer and autumn, to the pressure of my own affairs.

By way of narrowing the confused heap of contradictions to one single issue for the present, I have, by this post, informed the Dean that you propose that he shall confide all to his brother Frederick and request him to see me on the whole subject. I have begged him to let me have his answer, yes or no, that I may send it to you.

I think he will refuse.

Now that I know as nearly as I am likely ever to know, the history of this settlement, it appears to me that in repudiating it so late in the day, you will encounter the opposition of Mr. Jenings,[†1] Mr. Stephens, and even of your own daughters at last. As between you and me, I put it to you very seriously to consider whether you can, if pressed on to the utmost, take that extreme step.

For the present moment, however, we are limited to the question whether the Dean will consent to confide in his brother, and empower him to treat with me. Quite sufficient for the day, is this part of the evil.[†2]

I should tell you in concluding that I told the Dean you were much incensed by its having been put about—by Miss Elliott[†3] as you conceived—that you had taken yourself off and left him. He seemed agitated by this, and said that of course people talked at Clifton, and wondered at Clifton, but that obviously his part was to make everything seem natural and smooth; and he asked was it likely or conceivable that his daughter would do (apart from his conviction that she never had done), at the lowest, so foolish a thing? On Friday last he brought me a letter from her, altogether disavowing it in the most positive terms, and stating that on the only occasion on which she had been asked about you, she had said in effect that you found the change improved your health, and that you had a horror of the channel; and thought of waiting abroad until the Dean could rejoin you.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To MRS ELLIOT, 12 AUGUST 1869

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Twelfth August 1869

My Dear F.

Before I received your letter of the 8th. I had proposed to the Dean that he should confide in his brother and empower him to meet me. The paper marked "A" that will be handed to you by the Marchesa[†4] is his letter in reply.

The papers marked "B" and tied together, are labelled by the Dean himself in pencil. His labelling expresses what they are.

The paper marked "C" contains the Dean's notes on our general communications both verbally and in writing. These were made and brought to me by himself, before your letter of the 8th. Preserve these papers carefully.

I have written to Frederick and proposed that we shall meet any day next week, after Monday. It is still to be observed that he may, as from himself solely, decline any such meeting. I am not clear that I can do any good by seeing Mr. Jenings, but I will consider that question.

All else that I have to say just now, you will hear orally told.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To SIR FREDERICK ELLIOT,[†1] 12 AUGUST 1869*

MS Dickens House.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Twelfth August, 1869

My Dear Elliot

I presume you have heard from your brother the Dean that his family affairs are in a very troubled condition. I am not very sanguine that you and I can do much good by trying to unravel them; but on the chance of our averting a great deal of Evil, I have proposed to him that we shall meet and try to mediate.[†2]

I can be in London any day and hour next week, after Monday. If you will suggest any appointment, at the Athenæum or elsewhere, you may rely on my keeping it.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Frederick Elliot Esquire[†3]

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 13 AUGUST 1869*

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Friday Thirteenth August, 1869

My Dear Ouvry

F. Chapman is here to day, and I have told him that you cannot draw up the deed,[†4] without having an express arrangement made for the payment of that money.[†5] He replies that he will not fail to call upon you, and arrange for said payment.

My idea has been, from the beginning, an entirely new Deed to supersede the existing conglomeration.

I reserve all foreign rights except those conceded to Fields's house.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To ARTHUR RYLAND, 13 AUGUST 1869

Text from MDGH, 11, 426-7.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT,
Friday, Aug 13th, 1869

My Dear Mr Ryland,

Many thanks for your letter.

I have very strong opinions on the subject of speechification, and hold that there is, everywhere, a vast amount too much of it. A sense of absurdity would be so strong upon me, if I got up at Birmingham to make a flourish on the advantages of education in the abstract for †a all sorts and conditions of men,†a that I should inevitably check myself and present a surprising incarnation of the soul of wit.†1 But if I could interest myself in the practical usefulness of the particular institution; in the ways of life of the students; in their examples of perseverance and determination to get on; in their numbers, their favourite studies, the number of hours they must daily give to the work that must be done for a livelihood, before they can devote themselves to the acquisition of new knowledge, and so forth, then I could interest others. This is the kind of information I want.†2 Mere holding forth "I utterly detest, abominate, and abjure."†3

I fear I shall not be in London next week. But if you will kindly send me here, at your leisure, the roughest notes of such points as I have indicated, I shall be heartily obliged to you, and will take care of their falling into shape and order in my mind. Meantime I "make a note of"†4 Monday, 27th September, and of writing to you touching your kind offer of hospitality, three weeks before that date.

I beg to send my kind regard to Mrs. and Miss Ryland, and am always,

Very faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To MRS ELLIOT, 14 AUGUST 1869

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Fourteenth August 1869

My Dear F.

Before I can make an appointment with Frederick Elliot,†5 you must send me back all the papers I sent you by the Marchesa.

I believe you to be altogether wrong in your expectations of the result of this conference. As I told the Marchesa:—the monstrous absurdity of your utterly repudiating your marriage on the one hand, and requiring that the Dean shall live with you at such and such times to keep up appearances, on the other, is fatal. And I hold it to be absolutely impossible that Frederick Elliott can pursue a mediation begun on such terms.

Do you not see that Stephens has been with you solely to save himself? And that his visit has no more to do with the strength or weakness of your case, than it has with my digestion?

Ever affecy. Yours

CD.

To SIR FREDERICK ELLIOT, 15 AUGUST 1869*

MS Dickens House.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Fifteenth August, 1869

My Dear Elliot[†1]

I have your letter of the 14th. Any communication from you will find me with little delay. I may not be here at the moment, but in that case shall be merely cruising about the country within a short circuit, and shall be in town every week.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS[†2]

Frederick Elliot Esquire

I have a misgiving that I don't address you correctly, and that you are now "Sir F.E". Is that so?[†3]

To HENRY MORLEY, 15 AUG 1869

Mention in Alwin J. Scheuer catalogue No. 6 (1931); MS 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill, 15 Aug 69; addressed Henry Morley.

To THE HON. ROBERT LYTTON, 16 AUGUST 1869*

MS Lytton Papers.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Sixteenth August, 1869

My Dear Robert Lytton

Forster (who is staying here now) has given me your MS poems for All The Year Round.

I am particularly impressed by two of them:—"A Confession and Apology"[†1]—and "Auriel".[†2] I am not so sure of the suitability of the three shorter poems, but I hope to place them likewise.[†3] Account shall be kept with you in the books of the journal for each composition as it is published, and in the mean time I enclose you a cheque for Twenty Guineas.

I beg to send my kind regard to Mrs. Lytton, and also to Mr. Boffin[†4]—and Co.[†5]

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Hon. Robert Lytton

I shall be very glad to have the Austrian papers.[†6] Remember the large audience, and the necessity of being dramatic or picturesque.

To MRS ELLIOT, 17 AUGUST 1869

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

Gad's Hill Place | Tuesday Seventeenth August, 1869

My Dear F.

I have your letter to-day with Stephens's enclosed. The latter is very strong indeed, and I will make the best use of it.

Frederick and I have appointed to meet on Saturday. Meanwhile I want all the papers I sent you by the Marchesa. Do not fail to send them, as everything depends on perfect openness between Frederick and me. He has unquestionably begun like an upright gentleman: which I do not doubt he is.

The Dean has written him a letter which he sends straight to me. I need not trouble you with its contents yet.

I send my kind regard to the Marchesa (more sensible and clear than three fourths of the men I know), and will do my best. Keep perfectly quiet.

In haste Ever affecy. Yours
CD.

To MISS MARY DICKENS, 19 AUGUST 1869*

MS Myers & Co.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Nineteenth August 1869,

My Dearest Mamie

Charles Reade comes on Saturday.

Kindest love to all | Ever most affecy.

CD.

To PERCY FITZGERALD, 19 AUGUST 1869

MS Private; transcribed before destruction in Prestwick air-crash, 1954.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Nineteenth August 1869

My Dear FitzGerald

My difficulty about your story[†1] has been, a report from Birtles that "the copy of some part of another story had got mixed with it, and it was impossible to make sense." You were then just married[†2] and gone. I waited until you should have leisure. Now that I hear from you, I tell you why I have waited, and ask:— "Is the story made straight, and is it at the Printer's?" Reply, reply, reply, as Bishop's Duet[†3] says. Reply also to this:—How long is it?[†4]

"An Experience" is, according to my thinking, one of the most remarkable pieces I ever saw.

The Authoress of "Veronique"[†5] (Marryat's daughter)[†6] really had hit upon that title before Mrs. Trollope chose "Veronica."[†7] The fraudulent butler,[†8] you see, wouldn't change it: because he gets it advertized at our expence. Such are the wiles of fraudulent butlers in general!

I hope that Mrs. FitzGerald has wrought miracles in the way of diabolically direct and persistent decision on the part of an eminent literary personage. It will be the crowning triumph and glory of the great Institution of Matrimony!

You ask me about Wills and Will-Making.[†9] I think the Soane case altogether too grimly dismal[†10]—and too recent—for revival. With the Berkeley Family[†11] I will have nothing editorial to do, "in possession, reversion, remainder, or expectancy".[†12] Another case better not raked up, until years shall have softened it.

My Dear FitzGerald | Ever Faithfully Yours

CD.

To MRS LIPPINCOTT, 19 AUGUST 1869*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Nineteenth August 1869

My Dear Mrs Lippincott.

I have not written to you respecting "the Five Sisters", because I have been (and still am) very doubtful whether I can make use of it;[†1] and I hoped to receive some other paper of you which I could tell you I had at once published. I am happy to be able to make this report of the very pretty story of President Lincoln.[†2] The No. in which it has appeared, is posted to you by this Mail, and my publisher has remitted to Fields's House at Boston a cheque for five guineas in your favour.

I am happy to report myself quite well, and always Faithfully Your friend

CHARLES DICKENS

To FREDERIC CHAPMAN, 20 AUGUST 1869*

MS Dickens House.

A. Y. R. Office | Friday Twentieth August 1869

My Dear F. C.

Consider the following question at your convenience. There is no hurry. Take plenty of time.

If I were to decide on doing my new story in 12 shilling monthly Nos.[†3] what would you give for half the copyright, in ready money? You would purchase, understand, the right of receiving half of the profits of the serial publication from No. 1 inclusive, and afterwards as long as the copyright should exist.[†4]

I have some difficulty in making up my mind to publish the story apart from this Periodical. The terms of your proposal will influence my decision, of course.

Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

Fredk. Chapman Esquire

To HENRY DICKENS, 20 AUGUST 1869*

MS Eric Dickens Hawksley

Office, Friday Twentieth August 1869

My Dear Harry

You must bear in mind that the new furnishing[†1] was not necessary—really was not in the slightest degree necessary, considering the manner in which you had furnished those top rooms so very recently—and that if your fancies go before your means, you never will, or can, be out of debt. I must not admit the accuracy of your expression "the double furnishing that I have had to do"—as though it had been forced upon you—because there is simply no reason in it.

I enclose a cheque for £35.

Ever affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS ELLIOT, 21 AUGUST 1869

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

GAD'S HILL PLACE | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Twenty First August 1869

My Dear F.

I have seen Frederick Elliot to day, and we have had a long talk together. I entered upon that talk with the conviction (which I kept to myself) that against the decided opinions of Stephens, Jenings,[†2] and your own daughters, you cannot possibly make a stand for the invalidity of the settlements, by force and daring.

Suppose these things:

1. That you could be left in the undisputed possession of your own means, and management of your own affairs.

2. That the settlements could be left, not called in question either one way or other: neither repudiated nor formally claimed.

3. That the Dean should receive from £300 to £400 a year to pay the interest &c. on the debt, and should receive it himself from the trustees, agreeably to some direction or order from you. The terms to be settled in writing between us. The rest of the £600 a year not to be demanded.

4. That the question of the will should remain (like that of the settlements) where it stands.

5. That an appearance of union should be preserved between you; you paying housekeeping for the Dean when he comes to you; the Dean paying housekeeping for you, should you go to him.

6. The Dean requiring no other money from you whatever.

Would this content you?

And supposing such a treaty of peace to be entered into, and faithfully observed, do you not think that then—these irritations being soothed by time, and over—the Dean would have some fair claim to some provision in your will?

I beg you to consider all this very attentively with the Marchesa, and above all things to remember that †a*you are not choosing and originating your position now*,†a but are trying to make †a*the best of a position in which you have put yourself*.†a

Understand that I have no warrant whatever—and that Frederick has none— for the Dean's coming to such an arrangement; but if he would, would you? These are the grounds that have been mooted ("without prejudice", as the lawyers say, to either side) between Frederick and me.

He leaves town on Thursday night, and sees me on Thursday morning. I hope there is time for me to receive your answer by that time.

In great haste to save the post

Ever affecy.

CD.

I particularly impress upon you the necessity of remembering the indisputable fact which I have underlined doubly.

To FREDERIC CHAPMAN, 22 AUGUST 1869*

MS Roger Hecht.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Twenty Second August, 1869

My Dear F. C.

I have cautioned Charley against Mr. Austin.†1 I think it highly probable that Mr. Austin uses his name to you upon the smallest authority possible.

I hope Mr. Worthington's†2 statement may prove correct, but I shall not be surprised to find that a very large part of his sale is of piratical editions.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 22 AUGUST 1869

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Twenty Second August 1869

My Dear Ouvry

I will expect a call from you at the office on Thursday, at your own most convenient hour. I admit the soft impeachment concerning Mrs. Gamp:—I likes my payments to be made reg'lar, and I likewige likes my publisher to draw it mild.

Ever Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Frederic Ouvry Esquire

To W. H. ALVAREZ,[†1] 23 AUGUST 1869

MS (form letter) Private.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND | [†a] Aug. 23 1869[†a]

Mr. Charles Dickens begs to thank the writer of the paper entitled [†a] A Book of Nature, & "A Stumble over Steeples"[†a] for having done him the favor to offer it as a contribution to these pages. He much regrets, however that it is not suited to the requirements of All the Year Round.

[†b] The Manuscripts are returned By Book Post.[†b]

To JOHN DELANE, 24 AUGUST 1869*

MS Peter C. Davalle.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Twenty Fourth August 1869

My Dear Delane.

Let me ask you a question "without prejudice". Have you (I suppose you have by this time) selected your correspondent to describe the conference[†2] at Rome?[†3] If you have not, I think I could suggest an upright man and a good writer,[†4] who has remarkable opportunities behind the scenes.

Faithfully Yours ever
CHARLES DICKENS

To HENRY JOHNSTON,[†5] 26 AUGUST 1869*

MS A. H. Reed.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Twenty Sixth August | 1869

Sir

I beg to express my regret that my engagements render it quite impossible for me to comply with the request you do me the honor to prefer on behalf of the Glasgow Athenæum.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Henry Johnston Esquire

To DAVID DRAKEFORD,[†1] 30 AUGUST 1869*

MS Mrs Lingard.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Thirtieth August, 1869

Sir

I beg to thank you for your very interesting invitation,[†2] and to express my regret that my engagements do not admit of my accepting it.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

D. Drakeford Esquire

To SIR FREDERICK ELLIOT, 30 AUGUST 1869*

MS Dickens House.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND, | Monday Thirtieth August 1869

My Dear Elliot

The enclosed letter[†3] reached Gad's Hill on Saturday, but unfortunately your list of addresses[†4] was here.

It speaks for itself, you will find. The divisions mentioned as numbered in my last to her, are merely the heads we took out and noted down together, you and I.[†5] Recapitulation on my part would only complicate them.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Sir Frederick Elliot.

To PERCY FITZGERALD, 30 AUGUST 1869

Extract in Scheuer catalogue No. 3 (1927); MS I p.; dated Gad's Hill Place, 30 Aug 69; addressed Percy Fitzgerald.

Make yourself quite easy. There is not the slightest need for hurry[†6] . . . I have a story in two parts still to place in Nos. not yet made up.[†7]

To MRS BARROW,[†8] 31 AUGUST 1869*

Text from facsimile in unidentified catalogue sent by J. Sakmyster, New York.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.

Tuesday Thirty First August 1869

My Dear Madam

You have my full permission. As the ancient gentleman usually says on the stage: "Bless ye my children! Be happy!"—A thing, as Mr. Carlyle[†1] observes, very easily said.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Barrow

To CHARLES KENT, 31 AUGUST 1869

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Thirty First August 1869

My Dear Kent. I have instantly dispatched your charming Leader[†2] to Gad's, where I know it will be received with high delight and appreciation.[†3] A thousand thanks.

Do come and dine with me next Thursday, at the Pall Mall[†4] or somewhere else. I shall be here as usual.

No word from Delane. I think he must be out of town, though reported "not gone yet".

Ever affectionately
CD.

September

To WILLIAM DAY,[†5] 2 SEPTEMBER 1869*

MS Dickens House.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Second September 1869

Dear Mr. Day.

Will you be so good as tell me, before I decisively answer your question, about how many more pages longer the two Discourses[†6] would make the book?[†7]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To CHARLES KENT, 2 SEPTEMBER 1869*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: Private | Charles Kent Esquire | "The Sun" office | Strand.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Second September 1869

My Dear Kent

Shall I expect you here at about 5?

Ever affecy.
CD

To THE HON. ROBERT LYTTON, 2 SEPTEMBER 1869

MS Lytton Papers.

26 Wellington Street, London
Thursday Second September 1869

My Dear Robert Lytton

I am very sorry that your corrections in the two longer poems[†1] arrive too late. They are both placed in Numbers already "worked",[†2] after having been carefully compared with your MS.

John Ackland[†3] is most willingly accepted, and shall come into the next monthly part. I shall make bold to condense him here and there (according to my best idea of story telling),[†4] and particularly where he makes the speech:— and with the usual fault of being too long. Here and there, I think you let the story out too much—prematurely—and this I hope to prevent artfully. I think your title open to the same objection, and therefore propose to substitute

[†a] The Disappearance of John Ackland.[†a]

This will leave the reader in doubt whether he really was murdered, until the end.[†5]

I am sorry you do not pursue the other prose series.[†6] You can do a great deal more than you think for, with whatever you touch; and you know where to find a firmly attached and admiring friend always ready to take the field with you, and always proud to see your plume among the feathers in the Staff.

Your account of my dear Boffin[†7] is highly cheering:— I had been troubled with a misgiving that he was good. May his shadow never be more correct!

[†b] We are delighted to be remembered by your charming wife, and I am entrusted with more messages from Gad's Hill to her than you would care to give, or with-hold. So I suppress them myself, and absolve you from the difficulty.[†b]

I am wonderfully well, thank God, and going to finish my London Readings after Christmas. I wish I could have you at the Murder from Oliver Twist.[†1]

With kindest love to Mrs. Lytton and Boffin and Co.[†2] I am always My Dear Robert Lytton
Affectionately Your friend
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS HELEN TASKER,[†3] 2 SEPTEMBER 1869

Text from N, III, 740.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Thursday, Second September 1869

My Dear Madam,

I thank you warmly for your earnest letter and beg you not to estimate the extent or nature of my appreciation of it by the brevity of myself.

The address you want is The East London Children's Hospital, Ratcliffe Cross, near Stepney Station.[†4]

My dear Madam | Faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To CAPTAIN C. C. BROOKE,[†5] 4 SEPTEMBER 1869

Text from facsimile in Alexander Autographs, Inc, Oct 2000.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Fourth September 1869

Dear Sir

Let me assure you that I am exceedingly obliged to you for your kind note. I cannot have the pleasure of visiting Farnborough[†6] (for I do not intend reading anywhere out of London), and cannot therefore accept your proffered hospitality: but I beg you to accept my cordial thanks for your invitation.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Captain Charles Clements Brooke

To MRS ROSS CHURCH, 5 SEPTEMBER 1869*

MS Beinecke Library, Yale University.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Fifth September 1869

My Dear Mrs. Church

I have just come home here to find your book[†1] awaiting me. I will not delay writing to you until I shall have read it, but will at once thank you cordially for your earnest words of dedication,[†2] and assure you of the gratification with which I receive them.

Your discovery of your backsliding in the matter of your hero's pedigree, will probably be shared by very few people. As it is the easiest thing in the world to pass such a slip in correcting the proofs, when the writer's mind is too full of the whole subject to pause on details, so a reader interested in the story is very likely indeed to take your pedigree for granted, and not to dissect it.

With best wishes for Veronique's success and for yours in all things.

Believe me always | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Do not allow yourself to be drawn into discussions with the writers of notices.

To WILLIAM DAY, 5 SEPTEMBER 1869

MS Reed Collection, Dunedin Public Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Fifth September 1869

Dear Mr. Day

I have considered the question, and I think there is no need to add the two discourses to Mr. Townshend's book.[†3] Let us have a title-leaf before each section of the book, if you please:—an interleaved title.[†4]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To ARTHUR RYLAND, 6 SEPTEMBER 1869

MS Benoliel Collection.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.

Monday Sixth September 1869

My Dear Mr. Ryland.

I am sorry to find—I had a foreshadowing of it some weeks ago—that I shall not be able to profit by your kind offer of hospitality when I come to Birmingham for our Institution. I must come down in time for a quiet dinner at the Hotel with my "Readings" Secretary Mr. Dolby—and must away next morning. Besides having a great deal in hand just now (the trifle of a new book among other things), I shall have visitors from abroad here at that time,[†1] and am severely claimed by my daughter: who indeed is disloyal to Birmingham in the matter of my going away at all. Pray represent me to Mrs. Ryland as the innocent victim of circumstances, and as sacrificing pleasure to the work I have to do, and to the training under which alone I can do it without feeling it.

You will see from the enclosed[†2] that I am in full force, and going to finish my Readings, please God, after Christmas. I am in the hope of receiving your promised Notes in due course and continue in the irreverent condition in which I last reported myself on the subject of Speech Making.[†3] Now that men not only make the Nights of the Session hideous, by what the Americans call "Orating" in Parliament, but trouble the peace of the Vacation by saying over again what they said there (with the addition of what they didn't say there and never will have the courage to say there), I feel indeed that Silence, like gold across the Atlantic, is a rarity at a premium.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Arthur Ryland Esquire

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 7 SEPTEMBER 1869*

MS Huntington Library.

THE ATHENÆUM,
Tuesday Afternoon | Seventh September 1869

My Dearest Georgy

Will you have a parcel made up (carefully, because of the books) of the Volumes set forth over leaf;[†4] and will you address it to John Poole Esqre. 8 Fitzroy Place Kentish Town, London, and send it up by Railway at once, Carriage Paid.

Ever affectionately
CD.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 8 SEPTEMBER 1869*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Eighth September 1869

My Dearest Georgy

I think I had best have my letters sent here, up to Saturday morning inclusive. I shall be down that day by the 2..10 from Charing Cross.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To GEORGE DOLBY, 11 SEPTEMBER 1869†

MS Nathan L. Bengis.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Saturday Eleventh September 1869

My Dear Dolby.

I shall be here next Thursday, and shall hope either to see or hear from you. The Birmingham day is Monday the 27th. I have told Ryland that I cannot possibly come to his house (as I had promised to do), and that I shall merely come down with you, to dine and sleep at the hotel. †a I have a notion, if it will suit you, of supplementing the speechmaking with a small N excursion†1 next Day to Stratford, or Kenilworth, or both, or somewhere else, in a jovial way. N.B. No substantial ground for the phantom of the Wye.†a†2

My Railway Assurance Premium may as well be kept up, I suppose, for another year.

I this day pay to your account at Coutt's, £200.

With love to Mrs. Dolby and the babbies, | Ever affectionately

CHARLES DICKENS

To GEORGE HOLSWORTH, 13 SEPTEMBER 1869*

MS Rosenbach Museum and Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Thirteenth September 1869

Dear Holsworth

Please to get the undermentioned books for me,†3 and to put them on my table against my coming to town on Wednesday

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Ollendorff's Italian Grammar†4 | And Key.†5 | Blaaw's "Baron's War".†6

To CHARLES ELIOT NORTON, 14 SEPTEMBER 1869*

MS Houghton Library, Harvard.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Fourteenth September 1869

My Dear Norton

You make me happy by what you write about the little speech.[†1] I send you enclosed a letter, chiefly concerning that same theme, which I received from Robert Lytton this morning.[†2] I thought I descried a good opportunity of saying something graceful and affectionate—and true—towards our friends in the States; and I seized it with all my heart.

That ridiculous Bear story I had seen in the French papers already![†3] The head and front of its beginning hath this extent[†4]—no more:—Some vansful of half drunken men halting at the Falstaff began to ill treat two itinerant French Exhibitors of Bears, who were before the door there. Seeing one of the two occupied with his bears (one of whom he had unmuzzled to scare those loafers), and the other down in the dust and set upon by several assailants, I dashed out, with a neat and appropriate exordium on the subject of British fair-play, and so shamed the offenders that they all fell to fighting together, while I got the unmuzzled bear muzzled again (principally, I fear, because he looked at me with an ugly confusion in his mind concerning my share in the affray), and drew the two poor fellows out of trouble. Even this business was such a short one that nobody in this house knew any thing about it until I recounted the adventure at dinner.

You recognize the twin brother of Smollett's[†5] old gentleman who was credibly reported to have vomited three black crows?[†6]

I hope you are all enjoying yourselves and are thoroughly well. My special love repaid (with interest due) to Mrs. Norton, and my kindest remembrances to all.

Ever My Dear Norton | Your affectionate friend
CHARLES DICKENS

To ARTHUR RYLAND, 14 SEPTEMBER 1869*

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: Arthur Ryland Esquire | The Linthurst Hill | Bromsgrove | Birmingham.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Fourteenth September 1869

My Dear Ryland (Pray let us drop the "Mr.", after all these years.)

I have not received the papers by book post; but I have received your notes,[†7] and I find them almost enough for me, if not quite. I can get at a good deal that I don't know, from what I do, and your touches are exactly the touches for a great audience who are not to be wearied on any account by minute details. The great point is to be suggestive, and leave them the pleasure and interest of some working out on their own part.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To PERCY FITZGERALD, 16 SEPTEMBER 1869

Text from Percy Fitzgerald, Memories of CD, 1913, p. 65.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday, Sixteenth September, 1869.

My Dear Fitzgerald,

I enclose a cheque for £50. Will you kindly advise Holsworth[†1] of its safe receipt?

"The little victims play"[†2]

—with ready money—always under those circumstances, I am told![†3]

Ever your Venerable Sage,
CHARLES DICKENS

To JAMES HAMILTON, [16 SEPTEMBER 1869]

MS (envelope) Marion Public Library, Ohio. Address: American Mail | James Hamilton Esquire | care of | George W Childs Esquire | Ledger Office | Philadelphia | Pa | United States. PM 16 Sep 69.

To MRS BANKS,[†4] 21 SEPTEMBER 1869*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Twenty First September 1869

Dear Mrs. Banks

I cannot forbear writing you a line to tell you that I am truly concerned to receive your account of your suffering; and that I would on no consideration have sent you the little poem[†5] for alteration, if I had known of your condition.

With sympathy and good wishes

Believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To CHARLES KENT, 21 SEPTEMBER 1869*

MS Private.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Twenty First September 1869

My Dear Kent.

I will be at the A. Y. R. office at ¼ before 12 tomorrow (Wednesday.)

Ever affectionately

CD.

To J. R. ROBINSON,[†1] 21 SEPTEMBER 1869

MS (fragment) Beinecke Library, Yale University; transcribed before partial destruction in Prestwick air-crash, 1954.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Twenty First September 1869

Dear Sir

Your letter has duly reached me here this morning.

I have already assured two correspondents from Birmingham, representing Birmingham newspapers, that I shall have no Manuscript address[†2] in my possession, and that such notes as I make on such occasions would be illegible to every one but myself.[†3]

But if any gentleman from the Daily News should be sent down to report me, I will readily place myself at his disposal immediately after the Meeting, and will go over his notes with him if he should require it, or give him any other facility in my power.[†4]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

J. R. Robinson Esquire

To DR W. S. SAUNDERS,[†5] 22 SEPTEMBER 1869*

MS Fales Library, New York University.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Twenty Second September 1869

Dear Sir

I congratulate you very heartily on the success of your persevering and honorable endeavours, so far.[†1] If I can ever assist you in advancing them through the columns of "All The Year Round", I use no mere form of words when I assure you that I will readily do so.[†2]

But I regret that I cannot have the pleasure of accepting your kind invitation.

Believe me | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Dr. William Sedgwick Saunders

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 23 SEPTEMBER 1869*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Twenty Third September 1869

My Dearest Georgy. I am still undecided whether or no to come down to Gad's by the 2 . . 10 on Saturday. I rather think I ought to have some thicker clothes, and, if I can, I should like to get down and examine my stock. I have had a tough day of it, and (Charley being absent) must confer with the Printer again on Saturday morning. Until then I cannot be sure of my arrangements; so the best plan will be for you to expect me unless I telegraph on Saturday forenoon.

Love to all. Great and absorbing Estimate[†3] not yet sent in.

Ever Most affectionately

CD.

Send letters by tomorrow nights post, of course.

To J. C. PARKINSON, 23 SEPTEMBER 1869*

MS Mrs M. E. Parkinson

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Twenty Third September 1869

My Dear Parkinson.

I will with the greatest pleasure take whatever you may see your way to writing, out in the East.[†4] As you would not like to bind yourself, so I would not like to bind you, to any strictly conceived plan made beforehand. I shall have perfect confidence in you. Whatever you may see your way to, I will see mine to. We know enough of one another to be sure that we will both make the best of these conditions; but if you desire to suggest any others, tell me what they are.

For want of available space, I have been compelled slightly to abbreviate the Velocipede article.[†1] I have done this chiefly with reference to the Doctor.[†2] All that you wrote about him is substantially there, but not literally.

I heartily wish you a pleasant and safe journey. If any thing should be in your mind bearing on the conclusion of the first paragraph of this note, do not hesitate to make it plainly known to me.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

J. C. Parkinson Esquire

To THE REV. DR T. F. REDHEAD,[†3] 23 SEPTEMBER 1869*

MS Dickens House. Address: The Rev: Dr. Redhead | Rock Ferry | Cheshire.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Thursday Twenty Third September 1869

My Dear Sir

I am really obliged to you for your genial letter, and for its enclosure[†4] now returned. If any spiritual pastor and master could amaze me, this shining pillar of the Church would;[†5] but I am past the state of mind in that connexion.

My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Rev: Dr. Redhead

To FREDERIC CHAPMAN, 24 SEPTEMBER 1869

MS Johns Hopkins University.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Twenty Fourth Septr 1869

My Dear F. C.

Charles Collins wishes to try his hand at illustrating my new book.[†6] I want him to try the cover first.[†7] Please send down to him at Gad's Hill, any of our old green covers that you may have by you.

Faithfully Yours
CD.

To J. S. LE FANU,[†1] 24 SEPTEMBER 1869

Extract in N, III, 742.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND, | 24th September 1869

I had best let you know that I have safely received your MS.[†2] and have sent it to the printer.

I tried to read it in your writing, but could not succeed without devoting more time to the task than I could spare.

To MRS ELLIOT, 25 SEPTEMBER 1869

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Saturday Twenty Fifth September 1869

My Dear F.

I have just received yours dated Florence, the 20th. I cannot quite make out from it whether you duly received the last letter I sent you addressed to Homburg;[†3] but I suppose it can hardly have missed you, as I wrote it before you announced your intention of leaving that place.

You will of course understand that you are now in the hands of Dr. Stephens, and that I altogether withdraw from any further mediation either with the Dean or with his brother. It seems to me a little inconsistent with the facts that Dr. Stephens should formally write to the Dean and declare he would interpose no further, and that he should interpose in the next breath—but that is his affair, not mine. I have no feeling towards him but grateful satisfaction in being freed of the business, and (for kindred reasons) I am perfectly satisfied with you.

I shall remain undemonstrative, unless the Dean should write to me. In that case I must answer him, and will merely reply that I have finished my mediation and have nothing further to say.

Affectionately Yours always

CD.

To MR and MRS J. T. FIELDS, [?29 SEPTEMBER 1869]

Mention in Annie Fields's Diary, (George Curry, CD and Annie Fields, p. 46). Date: probably written to await them at their London hotel, on their return from their continental tour, 29 Sep 69.

Confirming his invitation for them to come to Gad's Hill on 9 Oct.

To CHARLES KENT, 29 SEPTEMBER 1869*

MS Dickens House. Address: Private | Charles Kent Esquire | "The Sun" Office | Strand | London | W. C.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Wednesday Twenty Ninth September 1869

My Dear Kent

I have just time before the post goes out, to let you know that the enclosed circular[†1] was awaiting me here with a private note. I have of course replied that I am pledged to non intervention.

Affecy. Ever

CD.

To J. H. NIGHTINGALE, 29 SEPTEMBER 1869*

MS Edward Caulfield. Address: J. H. Nightingale Esquire | 16 Castle Street | Liverpool.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Twenty Ninth September | 1869

My Dear Mr. Nightingale.

I am sorry that I cannot be of any service to you and your partner, in the matter of The Gazette.[†2] But I stand pledged (in behalf of another candidate) to non intervention. Let me add for your comfort that I know of no interest or power whatever in this connexion to which I could lay claim in the most sanguine of moments.

Believe me | Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

J. H. Nightingale Esquire.

To WILLIAM DAY, 30 SEPTEMBER 1869*

MS Benoliel Collection.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Thirtieth September 1869

Dear Mr. Day

I think that the sheets I now send you, comprehend all remaining to me to correct.[†1] Please be sure of this, before going to press according to Mr. Fredk. Chapman's instructions.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To CHARLES FECHTER, 30 SEPTEMBER 1869*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Thirtieth September 1869

My Dear Fechter

I am very glad indeed that things had taken a turn for the better, when you wrote from Leeds. As the proverb says that "one good turn deserves another," I hope this good turn will be followed by many more.

There must be something wrong about your receipt of your letters—possibly because you are so often changing about. Dolby not only told me (he was with me at Birmingham on Monday) that he had written to you—I think he said— several times; but declared, beyond all possibility of my mistaking him, that he had definitely decided on not going to America, and had explained to you his position, and his reasons for that decision, in a letter. I am quite certain of this. He started away from me for Dover direct, to join his sister in her Concert-Tour.

We are all well here, and all send you best love. We often talk of you. A very satisfactory letter was received from Plorn the other day, who again emphatically underlined: "Mind you give my best love to Mr. Fechter."

I am getting to work on a new book, and that is the only piece of news I have to report of myself:—except the enclosed announcement,[†2] which I think you know of. O! I forgot.—Do look at the enclosed paragraph from a French newspaper.[†3] It was cut out and sent to me by Lady Molesworth. Is it not amazing?

Ever affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

To MR SMITH,[†4] 30 SEPTEMBER [1869]*

MS John S. Barnet. Date: Thursday was only 30 Sep when CD was at Gad's Hill in 1869.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Thirtieth Septem[ber 1869]

Mr. Charles Dickens is not [desirous] of any new dog, and therefo[re declines]
Mr. Smith's offer with thanks.[†5]

October

To THE HON. ROBERT LYTTON, 1 OCTOBER 1869

MS Lytton Papers.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday First October 1869

My Dear Robert Lytton

I am assured by a correspondent that John Ackland[†1] has been done before! Said correspondent has evidently read the story—and is almost confident—in Chambers's Journal.[†2] This is very unfortunate, but of course can not be helped. There is always a possibility of such a malignant conjunction of stars, when the story is a true one that has been narrated here and there.

You will of course understand that I do not tell you this by way of complaint. Indeed I should not have mentioned it at all, but as an explanation to you of my reason for winding the story up (which I have done to day) as expeditiously as possible.[†3] You might otherwise have thought me, on reading it as published, a little hard on Mr. Doiley.[†4] I have not had time to direct search to be made into Chambers; but as to the main fact of the story having been printed somewhere, I have not the faintest doubt. And I believe my correspondent to be also right as to the where. You could not help it any more than I could, and therefore will not be troubled by it any more than I am.

[†a] I beg to send my love (if I may) to Mrs. Lytton and the Boffins, and am ever

Affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Oxford men did not behave handsomely to the Harvard men—as to receiving them as strangers—and the latter were sore about it when I saw them—But I am delighted to find that they took a hint I quietly dropped them in the little speech,[†5] and have magnanimously held their peace on the point, over yonder.[†a]

To WILLIAM DAY, 4 OCTOBER 1869*

MS Berg Collection. Address: Mr. Day | Messrs. Clowes and Son | Duke Street | Stamford Street | London S.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Fourth October, 1869

Dear Mr. Day

You may take it for granted that I have no corrections to make in the unreturned "revises",[†1] and that you may consider them as sent back for press. The only exception is the sheet in which the section on The Lord's Prayer begins.[†2] I should like to look at that, again.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To J. T. FIELDS, 6 OCTOBER 1869

Text from photocopy in Houghton Library, Harvard.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Sixth October, 1869.

My Dear Fields

Delighted to enjoy the prospect of seeing you and yours on Saturday. Wish you had been at Birmingham. Wish you were not going home. Wish you had nothing to do with the Byron matter.[†3] Wish

Mrs. Stowe was in the pillory.[†4] Wish Fechter had gone over when he ought.[†5] Wish he may not go under when he oughtn't.

With love | Ever affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To H. S. PEARSON,[†6] 6 OCTOBER 1869

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Sixth October, 1869

Sir

You are perfectly right in your construction of my meaning at Birmingham.[†7] If a capital P be put to the word People in its second use in the sentence, and not in its first, I should suppose the passage next to impossible to be mistaken;[†1] even if it were read without any reference to the whole spirit of my speech and the whole tenor of my writings.[†2]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

—Pearson Esquire[†3]

To J. S. LE FANU, [?EARLY OCTOBER 1869]

Mention in To Le Fanu, 24 Nov. Date: after CD had read the text of Le Fanu's "Green Tea", printed from MS: see 24 Sep.

To CHARLES KENT, 7 OCTOBER 1869

Text from MDGH, 11, 429.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday, Oct. 7th, 1869.

My Dear Kent,

I felt that you would be deeply disappointed.[†4] I thought it better not to make the first sign while you were depressed, but my mind has been constantly with you. And not mine alone. You cannot think with what affection and sympathy you have been made the subject of our family dinner talk at Gad's Hill these last three days. Nothing could exceed the interest of my daughters and my sister-in-law, or the earnestness of their feeling about it. I have been really touched by its warm and genuine expression.

Cheer up, my dear fellow; cheer up, for God's sake. That is, for the sake of all that is good in you and around you.

Ever your affectionate Friend

To DR T. M. SUNTER,[†1] 9 OCTOBER 1869*

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Evening Ninth October 1869

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Dr. Sunter, and in reference to Dr. Sunter's enquiry regrets that he has no clue whatever to the lecture in question.[†2] He heard it delivered, and remembered at the time that a portion of it had appeared, in another form, in Punch. He has no other knowledge of it.

To MRS ELLIOT, 10 OCTOBER 1869

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

GAD'S HILL PLACE | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Sunday Tenth October, 1869

My Dear F.

Do not for a moment suppose that I am in the slightest degree vexed with you, or that there is any atom of estrangement between us. I assure you with the utmost sincerity that it is not the case. You know I would not tell you so, if the fact were otherwise.

But I could not on any consideration meet Frederick Elliot with the pretence that you were acting under my advice, when your course was taken, to my certain knowledge, on other advice. Least of all could I do this, after Dr. Stephens had (so to speak) committed himself, in writing to the Dean, to non interference between you. Therefore my renunciation is absolute and final; but (once more understand) without the slightest reproach to you, expressed or implied.

Nay more: I sincerely think you are better in Dr. Stephens's hands than you were in mine. He is acquainted with the whole case, and must know how the facts and figures have come into existence, far better than I possibly can.

The Dean called upon me at my office on Friday. I told him that I had declined all further interference, because you had another adviser. He said immediately that he knew it to be Doctor Stephens. I said I knew nothing about that; how did he know, or why did he suspect? He was not clear in reply, but afterwards sent me an extract (underlined) from that letter of Dr. Stephens' to which I have already referred. Before he went away, he said he wished you to know that whatever proceeding he took, would be taken "in a friendly spirit." I replied that I could not undertake to make that communication to you, or any other. I now write to him that he will please observe that I do not bind myself to his assumption respecting Dr. Stephens, and that I express no opinion on any point at issue.

Ever affectionately Yours

CD.

To THE VERY REV. GILBERT ELLIOT, [?10 OCTOBER 1869]

Mention in last. No doubt written same day.

To J. T. FIELDS, 10 OCTOBER 1869*

MS (copy) Huntington Library.

Gad's Hill Place | Sunday Tenth October, 1869

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his respectful compliments to The Hon. James T. Fields (of Boston, Mass. U.S.) and will be happy to receive a visit from the Hon. J. T. F. in the small library as above, at The Hon. J. T. F.'s leisure.†1

To F. D. FINLAY, 14 OCTOBER 1869

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Address: Private | Frank D. Finlay Esquire | Northern Whig Office | Belfast.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Fourteenth October 1869

My Dear Finlay

I retain the paper†2 with pleasure, and am heartily glad it was no worse:— I don't mean the paper, but the adventure.†3

I saw the account of that poor boy's drowning,†4 and set it so strongly in my mind against the merry family-picture your wife had sketched to Georgina, that it abided by me sadly. My love to her, and to all.

Faithfully Yours ever
CHARLES DICKENS

Frank D Finlay Esquire

To JAMES BIRTLES, 15 OCTOBER 1869*

MS British Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND, | Friday Fifteenth October 1869

Mem:

Mr. Oxenford wants a proof of this†5 as soon as convenient.—I believe he is going away.

CD.

To CHARLES KENT, 15 OCTOBER 1869*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Fifteenth October 1869

My Dear Kent

The sudden doubt[†1] does[†2] appear in my eyes the wildest hallucination! I am perfectly certain that your impulse was thoroughly manly and noble, and to be acted upon with thorough confidence. I read the article with unqualified pleasure, sympathy, and respect. It could not have been better.[†3]

I take blame to myself now, for not having at once written and told you so. But I came to town (how could you know that, by the bye!) and hoped to see you.

Ever affectionately

CD

To MRS DALLAS, 17 OCTOBER 1869

Extract in unidentified catalogue at Dickens House; MS 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill Place, 17 Oct 69; addressed Mrs Dallas.

You do not know how difficult it is for me to maintain a correspondence after the day's work is done. I have lost two Australian mails in succession in sheer inability to write to my pet boy.[†4]

To PERCY FITZGERALD, 17 OCTOBER 1869

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

GAD'S HILL PLACE | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Sunday Seventeenth October, 1869

My Dear Fitzgerald

I have been unfortunate in missing you at the office. It is at once amusing and amazing to me to find you speculating whether your new state of life[†5] has anything to do with it!!! I am at work upon a new book, and have had occasional glimpses of a holiday, but have been there regularly to work—for all that—though not to sleep or stay.

I shall be there again on Thursday. In the meantime you shall have what is printed of the Bridge of Sighs,[†1] to abbreviate according to your knowledge of the story.

In haste | Ever affecy Yours

CD.

To CHARLES KENT, 17 OCTOBER 1869

Mention in Dickens Exhibition, New Dudley Gallery catalogue, 1908; MS 1 p.; with envelope and enclosure; dated Gad's Hill, 17 Oct 69; addressed Charles Kent.

Referring to the Editorship of The London Gazette,[†2] and the patronage thereof.

To DR CHARLES MACKAY, 18 OCTOBER 1869*

MS Berg Collection. Address: Dr. Charles Mackay | Fern Dell | near | Dorking.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Eighteenth October 1869

My Dear Mackay

You are perfectly free to collect your papers from All The Year Round. My usual custom is to stipulate for a reasonable interval—say six months in fairness to the Journal—between publication in A. Y. R. and republication elsewhere.[†3] Serial stories have special agreements.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Dr. Charles Mackay

To W. C. MACREADY, 18 OCTOBER 1869†

MS Morgan Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Eighteenth October 1869

My Dearest Macready

I duly received your letter nearly a fortnight ago, with the greatest interest and pleasure. Above all things I am delighted with the prospect of seeing you here next summer; a prospect which has been received with nine times nine and one more by the whole house. You will hardly know the place again, it is so changed. You are not expected to admire—but there IS[†4] a Conservatory building at this moment—be still my soul![†5]

This leaves me in the preliminary agonies of a new book; which I hope to begin publishing (in 12 Numbers: not 20) next March. The coming Readings, being all in London, and being, after the first fortnight, only once a week, will divert my attention very little, I hope.

†a May you be as disgusted with Mrs. Stowe as I am!†1 There is a strong article upon her posthumous scandal, in the current Quarterly.†2 Her "facts" are as the stock in trade of the old china shop was to the dancing bull.

Forster, besides having had a very long Circuit, has had a very troublesome return of his bronchitis. Mrs. Forster was very much troubled about him a few weeks ago, but he has since taken a turn greatly for the better. I dined with them alone last Friday, and thought him looking far stronger than I had expected. His cough too was quite mild. But he lives in one perpetual terror of taking cold. I told him I had heard from you, and we fell into a long talk about the dear old days.†a

Harry has just gone up to Cambridge again, and I hope will get a Fellowship in good time. †a But I have learnt to be†3 moderate in such expectations.†a Wills is much gratified by your remembrance, and sends his warm regard. He wishes me to represent that he is very little to be pitied. That he suffers no pain—scarcely inconvenience, even—so long as he is idle.†4 That he likes illness exceedingly.

†a And that on the whole he thinks he has retired in a gentlemanlike manner.†a He has bought a country place by Welwyn in Hertfordshire†5—near Lytton's—and takes possession presently.

My boy Sydney is now a Second Lieutenant: the youngest in the service, I believe. He has the highest testimonials as an officer;†6 †a but I fear he has an inveterate habit of drawing bills, that will ruin him.†7

Think of Horne having come back from Australia!†8 You know, perhaps, that he never gave his wife†9 one shilling,†10 and that she has supported herself all these years by photographic printing, working from morning to night for a small pittance.†11 Yet (and although he owes me a good sum of money besides)†12 he wrote me a letter from off the Lizard, on the whole giving me his blessing, and announcing himself to be "now blest with a small independence, the result of his energy and perseverance"!†1 I could not answer it, and I will not.†2 You see that he justifies your old opinion of him.†a †3

You may be quite sure there will be no international racing in American waters. Oxford knows better, or I am mistaken. The Harvard Crew were a very good set of fellows, and very modest—on this side of the Atlantic.

Ryland of Birmingham doesn't look a day older, and was full of interest in you, and asked me to remind you of him. By the bye: At Elkington's†4 I saw a pair of immense plated tea urns from a Railway station (Stafford) sent there to be repaired. They were honey-combed within in all directions, and had been supplying the passengers, under the active agency of hot water, with decomposed lead, copper, and a few other deadly poisons for Heaven knows how many years.

I must leave off in a hurry to catch the post, after a hard day's work.

Ever My Dearest Macready | Your most affectionate and attached

CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS MACREADY, 18 OCTOBER 1869*

MS Fales Library, New York University.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Eighteenth October 1869

My Dear Mrs. Macready

I have a mere moment before the departure of the post, to thank you heartily for your Postcript.

Give my love to my noble friend,[†5] and tell him that I have put his portrait in my book of pets:—which is a very small book. I hope to get a jollier portrait of him one of these days—say as Gavazzi[†6] in a highly Anti-Papal State.

Best love from Mary, Georgina, Katie, and your always affectionate friend
CHARLES DICKENS

To G. MAYER[†7] [? 11-18 OCTOBER 1869]

Mention in The Times, 20 Oct 69. Date: no doubt during previous week (see below).

Sending apologies for not attending the unveiling on 19 Oct.

To MESSRS ELKAN NATHAN & ELKAN, 19 OCTOBER 1869*

MS Fales Library, New York University. Address: Messrs. Elkan Nathan & Elkan | 69 Aldersgate Street | London | E. C.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Nineteenth October | 1869

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his Compliments to Messrs. Elkan Nathan and Elkan, and begs to thank them for their obliging note and box of cigars.

To JOHN MURRAY,[†1] 19 OCTOBER 1869†

MS Sir John Murray.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Nineteenth October, 1869

My Dear Murray

I think I am indebted to you for the current number of the Quarterly,[†2] which I received here on Sunday morning.

Anyhow, accept my thanks for the gratification I have had in reading the Byron paper.[†2] [†a] It is admirably done (though certainly with more command of temper than I could have brought to bear upon it, if I had had to do it), and should for ever dispose of Mrs. Stowe's bestiality, concerning which infamous piece of trading in the dead, I want a new language in which to express the strength of my abhorrence.

I was sent for, to have a very solemn interview alone with "Ada"[†3] when she was dying (She had wished for it in consequence of her having thought much, during her illness, of the death of the child in Dombey.)[†4] She little thought, in speaking to me of her father, that the Ghoules were even then growing their nails for his grave; but I think of it now.

Lord help us all! To be, even for a month, at the mercy of the Beecher Stowes and the Preacher Foes![†a]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

John Murray Esquire

To MRS ELLIOT, 20 OCTOBER 1869

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Twentieth October 1869

My Dear F.

Yours of the 14th. received this morning. Finding the Dean inclined to put his own construction on things, I wrote him an emphatic letter the other day,[†1] saying that I must protest against his assuming any thing but that you had another adviser. He would please observe that he must not assume, either that I objected to the adviser, or to the advice, or to any thing else. This I put strongly, shortly, and explicitly.

Privately, I tell you that he is, beyond all question, at least as much at a loss as you can be. And further:—I do really believe that he is far more afraid of Dr. Stephens than of anybody else: immeasurably more so. You know that I never rated my own influence in the matter, as really worth Twopence. Dr. Stephens knows his way through the antecedents, and is, as to me, a Giant beside a Dwarf, or King Richard the First's mare in comparison with a walking cane.

Be sure that I am now and always | Affectionately Yours
CD.

To MESSRS NEWCOMB & CO., 20 OCTOBER 1869

Extract in Sophie Dupré catalogue, 1986; MS 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill Place, 20 Oct 69; addressed Messrs Newcomb & Co.

Instructing them to make the bearer, George Butler,[†2] a new livery suit, and also a stable suit.

To R. H. HORNE, [21 OCTOBER 1869]

Mention in Horne to CD, 22 Oct 69 (MS Mr Thomas V. Lange). Date: Horne's copy of his letter to CD endorsed at top of page "Reply to his note of Oct 21 | 8."

Terminating their correspondence in response to Horne's first letter, written from the Lady Jocelyn on his arrival in England;[†3] and refusing to accept Horne's claim to have achieved an independence, for reasons which Horne had evidently forgotten, but CD had not.[†4]

To THE HON. ROBERT LYTTON, 21 OCTOBER 1869†

MS Lytton Papers.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Twenty First October 1869

My Dear Robert Lytton

I am quite concerned that you should take John Ackland so much to heart.[†1] It is not worth a second thought. And I particularly entreat you to retain the enclosed cheque as balancing our account, to this time, for all of yours yet published in these pages. It would have been more, of course, but for the urgent reason for getting rid of our dear John speedily.

I have made no further discovery in detail. As my correspondent in cautioning me of the anticipation, told me what the end of the story was, concerning the watch,[†2] I have no doubt whatever that the story was previously told and printed. But I think it better to set no one here on to enquire about it or look it up. If it should never turn up, tant mieux.

[†a] In the case of a good story—as this is—liable for years to be told at table—as this was—there is nothing wonderful in such a mischance. Let us shuffle the cards, as Sancho says, and begin again.[†3] The more I get of your writing, the better I shall be pleased.[†a]

Affectionately Yours Ever
CHARLES DICKENS

To CHARLES KENT, 26 OCTOBER 1869*

MS Berg Collection. Address: Private | Charles Kent Esquire | "The Sun" Office | Strand.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Twenty Sixth October 1869

My Dear Kent.

If you have done with the Child's New Testament,[†4] will you kindly return it here.

Ever affectionately

CD

There are 49 applicants for that office.[†5]

To WALTER THORNBURY, 26 OCTOBER 1869*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND
Tuesday Twenty Sixth October 1869

My Dear Thornbury.

I shall be very happy indeed to bestow my best attention on your friend from Cuba.[†1]

My impression is, that Fitzball[†2] is dead. When last heard of, he did an Egyptian piece at Drury Lane[†3]:—a terrific failure. As I have not the least idea why I think he is dead, it is an even chance that he may be alive; so my information concerning him is highly worth having! (He is said to have married the Ghost from Richardson's[†4] show.)

Poole is still conversible. He is deeply interested at present in the death of Mrs. Mathews.[†5]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To G. W. RUSDEN, 24 and 28 OCTOBER 1869

MS Trinity College, University of Melbourne.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Twenty Fourth October, 1869

My Dear Mr. Rusden

I was amused, and not surprised, by your reference to Young Dilke's[†6] book,[†1] in your letter of the 17th of June. The ease with which statements of inexperienced young men who "travel", and who cannot possibly have the means of forming correct judgments, are received, is always a perfectly astounding and inexplicable thing to me.

This very day a great meeting is announced to come off in London, as a demonstration in favor of a Fenian "amnesty".[†2] No doubt its numbers and importance are ridiculously over-estimated, but I believe the Gathering will turn out to be big enough to be a very serious obstruction in the London Streets.[†3] I have a grave doubt whether such demonstrations ought to be allowed. They are bad, as a precedent, and they unquestionably interfere with the general liberty and freedom of the subject. Moreover, the time must come when this kind of threat and defiance will have to be forcibly stopped; and then the unreasonable toleration of it will lead to a sacrifice of life among the comparatively innocent lookers on that might have been avoided but for a false confidence on their part, engendered in the damnable system of "laissez-aller." You see how right we were, you and I, in our last correspondence on this head, and how desperately unsatisfactory the condition of Ireland is:—especially when considered with a reference to America. The Government has, through Mr. Gladstone, just now spoken out boldly, in reference to this desired Amnesty. (So much the better for them, or they would unquestionably have gone by the board.) Still there is an uneasy feeling abroad, that Mr. Gladstone himself would grant this Amnesty if he dared,[†4] and that there is great weakness at the root of their Irish policy. And this feeling is very strong among the noisiest Irish howlers. Meanwhile our newspapers go on arguing Irish matters, as if the Irish were a reasonable people. In which immense assumption I have not the smallest faith.

Again I have to thank you most heartily for your kindness to my two boys.[†1] It is impossible to predict how Plorn will settle down, or come out of the effort to do so. But he has unquestionably an affectionate nature and a certain romantic touch in him. Both of these qualities are, I hope, more impressible for good than for evil, and I trust in God for the rest.

The Lady Jocelyn was so long coming over, that I began to think the Developer of the Australian Wine-trade,[†2] food for fishes. However, he turned up at last. As I could by no means under-write his public claims in that wise, or any other wise, I delicately hinted, on his reporting himself to me, that we had best keep wide asunder, beyond the danger of discussing them.[†3]

The news of Lord Derby's[†4] death[†5] will reach you, I suppose, at about the same time as this letter. A rash, impetuous, passionate man; but a great loss for his party, as a man of mind and mark. I was staying, last June, with Lord Russell—six or seven years older, but (except for being rather deaf) in wonderful preservation, and brighter and more completely armed at all points[†6] than I have seen him these twenty years.

I wonder whether you have taken much interest, over yonder, in the Byron scandal![†7] It seems to me that to knock Mrs. Beecher Stowe on the head, and confiscate everything about it in a great international bonfire to be simultaneously lighted over the whole civilized earth, would be the only pleasant way of putting an end to the business.

As this need not be posted until Friday, I shall leave it open for a final word or two, and am until then—and then—and always afterwards—My Dear Mr. Rusden Your faithful and much obliged

CHARLES DICKENS

Thursday Twenty Eight. We have no news in England, except two slight changes in the Government, consequent on Layard's becoming our Minister at Madrid. He is not long married to a charming lady[†8] and will be far better in Spain than in the House of Commons. The Ministry are now holding councils on the Irish Land Tenure question, which is the next difficulty they have to deal with, as you know.[†9] Last Sunday's meeting was a preposterous failure; still it brought together in the streets all the ruffian part of the population of London, and that is a serious evil which any one of a thousand accidents might render mischievous. There is no existing law, however, to stop these assemblages, so that they keep moving while in the streets. The Government was undoubtedly wrong when it supposed it had the right to close Hyde Park; that is now universally conceded.

I write to Alfred and Plorn, both by this Mail. They never can say enough of your kindness when they write to me.

To ALFRED DICKENS, [28 OCTOBER 1869]

Mention To Rusden, 28 Oct. Date: written same day.

To EDWARD DICKENS, [28 OCTOBER 1869]

Mention in To Rusden, 28 Oct. Date: written same day.

To FREDERIC CHAPMAN, 29 OCTOBER 1869

MS Johns Hopkins University.

Athenæum | Friday Twenty Ninth October | 1869

My Dear F. C.

If we do my new book together[†1] and Mr. Collins illustrates it,[†2] he must be paid what Marcus Stone was paid.[†3] I find that he knows how much that was, and as I hope he will do better—instead of worse—it would be unreasonable to offer him less. His cover is well worth £10. There can be no doubt about that. To offer him less would be absurd.

When you have made up your mind as to your proposal, you had better make it to me. Because I want to conclude an American negociation for simultaneous publication,[†4] and I am pestered with offers of various sorts.

I shall be at the office at One tomorrow, at 2 on Wednesday, and at any time on Thursday.

Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

Fredk. Chapman Esquire

To EDMUND OLLIER, 30 OCTOBER 1869*

MS Chicago Public Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Saturday Thirtieth October 1869

My Dear Mr. Ollier

I beg to enclose you a cheque for £5 towards the deficiency.[†1]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Edmund Ollier Esquire

November

To MESSRS ELKAN NATHAN & ELKAN, 1 NOVEMBER 1869*

MS Fales Library, New York University. Address: Messrs. Elkan Nathan and Elkan | 69 Aldersgate Street | London.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday First November 1869

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his Compliments to Messrs. Elkan Nathan and Elkan, and begs to acknowledge with thanks the safe receipt of the box of cigars. His absence from this house has prevented his writing sooner.

To ROBERT BANKS,[†2] [?4 NOVEMBER 1869]

Mention in To Miss Hogarth, 5 Nov. Date: probably written day before.

To HENRY SPICER, 4 NOVEMBER 1869*

MS Boston Athenæum.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Fourth November 1869

My Dear Spicer

I am very sorry to have been engaged when you called this afternoon, and am still more sorry that you are engaged next Sunday. Could you not come to Gad's Hill on the following Saturday or Sunday? I should be really and heartily glad to receive you there, in some rare interval of your being on the wing.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Henry Spicer Esquire

To THOMAS ADOLPHUS TROLLOPE, 4 NOVEMBER 1869

MS Berg Collection. Address (MS Free Library of Philadelphia): T. Adolphus Trollope Esqre. | Villa Trollope | Ricorboli | Firenze | Italy.[†1] PM 4 Nov 69.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Fourth November 1869.

My Dear Trollope.

The money had been paid in to your bankers (as I settled with Fanny when she was here) before I received your letter accompanying your pretty story.

I am in the hopeless difficulty concerning the latter, that I have already two[†2] serial stories accepted and partly printed (for publication in the end of the Nos.: not the beginning),[†3] and consequently have no room for still another serial. Two progressing stories at a time are as much as the small space at command will bear; and I stand pledged to Veronica's[†4] successor,[†5] as well as to the writers— one after the other— of these two shorter tales.

Moreover: with the utmost care, it is sometimes impossible to prevent a topic from over-running a single article; and in that case I am driven to all sorts of expedients for renewing it without seeming to distract the reader with still another Continuation. This cramps me still more in the arrangement of the (only) four and twenty weekly pages.

I go into these details to explain to you that I am, for some time, at a deadlock as to stories to be continued. What shall I do? Shall I send your MS to you—or to any one—or shall I keep it by me?[†6] It shall safely abide your reply at your convenience.

Walk across the Alps? Lord bless you, I am "going" to take up my alpenstock and cross all the Passes, and I am "going" to Italy; I am also "going" up the Nile to the Second Cataract, and I am "going" to Jerusalem, and to India, and likewise to Australia. My only dimness of perception in this wise, is, that I don't know when. If I did but know when, I should be so wonderfully clear about it all! At present I can't see even so much as the Simplon, in consequence of certain Farewell Readings, and a certain new book (just begun) interposing their dwarfish shadow. But whenever (if ever) I change "going" into "coming", I shall come to see you.

With kind regard | Ever My Dear Trollope
Your affectionate Friend
CHARLES DICKENS

Here's a state of things about Dr. Temple of Rugby![†7] Here's a state of things about priesthood generally! Of course you are going (and probably on your knees) to the Council at Rome.[†1]

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 4 NOVEMBER 1869

Extract in Goodspeed's catalogue No. 147 (Jan-Mar 1922); MS 1 p.; dated in Puttick & Simpson catalogue, Dec 1877, 4 Nov 69.

Many thanks for your note. I cannot be in Town Tuesday (having an engagement at home), but I really am so disgusted with Mrs. Stowe's diseased appetite for notoriety[†2] that I would rather not minister to it even to the extent of privately looking through papers that might never have left their resting place but for her late outbreak of that very gross disorder.

To JOHN CHAMBERLAIN, 5 NOVEMBER 1869

Text from N, III, 749. Envelope (MS Dickens House): John Henry Chamberlain Esquire | Birmingham and Midland Institute | Birmingham.

GAD'S HILL PLACE | Friday Fifth November 1869

My Dear Sir,

In reply to your letter I beg to say that the Council are at perfect liberty to print and circulate my address at Birmingham,[†3] and that I will readily correct the proofs if they be sent to me for that purpose.

Faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 5 NOVEMBER 1869*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Fifth November 1869

My Dearest Georgy.

Aldridge's letter is very comic. Tell him that you forwarded it to me. And ask him, whatever he does to the Billiard Room ceiling, to do something DURABLE.[†4]

I have not heard from Kent.—I suppose he must be away. If you know his hand, open any letter from him if any should come to Gad's.

Mr. Chappuis[†5] will come down himself, probably by the 2..10 from Charing Cross tomorrow (Saturday) afternoon, to see about the Reflectors. Of course, the thing being done at all, we want it done as completely as possible. He is first to decide whether it can be done, observe.

Tell George[†1] that I have been strongly recommended by a hunting authority very learned in horses, to one Mr. Banks a dealer in London, and a Commission agent. That I have written to this Mr. Banks describing what I want to buy, and that I have told him I will send George up on Monday morning to see him.

Until Sunday and Ever, Most affectionately

CD.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 5 NOVEMBER 1869*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
5th. November 1869

No. 2

My Dearest Georgy.

Have a room ready for Spicer on Sunday. I believe he is coming down.

Ever affecy.

CD.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 5 NOVEMBER 1869*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Fifth November 1869

No. 3!!!

My Dearest Georgy

Another Express! Kent comes also.

Ever CD.

To DR CHARLES MACKAY, [5 NOVEMBER 1869]

MS (envelope only) Beinecke Library, Yale University. Address: Dr. Charles Mackay | Fern Dale Cottage | Boxhill | Surrey. PM 5 Nov 69.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 5 NOVEMBER 1869

Mention in American Art Association Catalogue No. 3823; MS 1 p.; dated 5 Nov 69.

Declining to prolong his series of readings.

To AUSTEN HENRY LAYARD, 8 NOVEMBER 1869

MS British Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Monday Eighth November 1869

My Dear Layard,

On Friday or Saturday next, I can come to you at any time after 12 that will best suit your convenience. I had no idea of letting you go away without my God Speed; but I knew how busy you must be; and kept in the background biding my time.

I am sure you know that there is no man living more attached to you than I am. After considering the subject with the jealousy of a friend, I have a strong conviction that your change[†1] is a good one; ill as you can be spared from the thin ranks of men who are in earnest here.

With Kindest regard to Mrs. Layard.
Ever Faithfully Yours.
CHARLES DICKENS

To CHARLES LEVER,[†2] 8 NOVEMBER 1869

Text from N, III, 749-50.

GAD'S HILL PLACE | Monday Eighth November 1869

My Dear Lever

This letter will be presented to you by Mr. Charles Kent, a very particular friend of mine, an accomplished gentleman, an excellent writer, and for many years proprietor and Editor of the Sun Newspaper. He is merely "flying through;" but has read you so much, and has written about you so often, that he is naturally Desirous to see you. Wish I could bring him to you myself! I was dragged out of London by the hair of my head so ruthlessly when we ought to have met, this last spring, that I would spite any other friend but Kent by making a solemn declaration of your being absent on leave.

Believe me, my Dear Lever, | Ever Faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To CHARLES FECHTER, [EARLY NOVEMBER 1869]

Mention in To Georgina Hogarth, 12 Nov. Date: probably a day or two before that letter.

To CHARLES FECHTER, [? EARLY NOVEMBER 1869]

Telegram (mention in To Georgina Hogarth, 12 Nov). Date: no doubt same day as last.

To PERCY FITZGERALD, 11 NOVEMBER 1869

Text from N, III, 750.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday, Eleventh November, 1869

My Dear Fitzgerald

I am afraid the monkey is anticipated. It has been exceedingly well done by F. Buckland[†1] in Land and Water,[†2] and would be a day after the Fair.[†3] I was going to place him today, but in the meantime caught sight of Buckland's paper, which has been extensively copied in weekly and country journals.

Ever faithfully
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To ARTHUR HELPS, 11 NOVEMBER 1869

Extract in Documents and Autographs catalogue, Feb 1968; MS 1 p.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Eleventh November, 1869

My Dear Helps,

Thanking him for sending a ticket,[†4] but also returning it because I cannot possibly go.

CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 12 NOVEMBER 1869*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Twelfth November 1869

My Dearest Georgy. I had the Layard letter all right this morning, and I go there this afternoon. Tomorrow I give Palmer[†5] a little dinner (with only Dolby) in Regent Street.[†6] He will engage Fechter at £90 a night, if Fechter be not stark staring mad.[†7] I have telegraphed to him and written to him, and will settle the engagement at dinner tomorrow, in the improbable event of his turning out sane.

I intend to drop both tea and coffee in the morning. Please get in some of that Homœopathic[†1] Cocoa, and let me have a jug or pot of it containing 2 large cups—always boiled with milk, and no water—on the table at breakfast always.

Ever most affecy

CD.

To J. T. FIELDS, [?MID-NOVEMBER 1869]

Mention in To Harper & Brothers, 22 Mar 70. Date: answering Fields's letter written "immediately on his return home to Boston" from England (late Oct 69).

Acknowledging his Agreement to send early sheets of Edwin Drood to Fields, Osgood & Co., which he had made considerably earlier, but forgotten.

To MISS HARNESS, 17 NOVEMBER 1869

MS Mrs Duncan-Jones. Address: Miss Harness | Hyde Park Terrace | Kensington Gore | London | W.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Seventeenth November, 1869

My Dear Miss Harness

I hope I may not intrude upon your sacred grief, by sending you my poor word of loving remembrance of one of the very best of men.[†2] I can think of none so hopeless of replacement. Dear good gentle noble heart!

God be with you—as He will—in your affliction. So prays

Your affectionate and mourning friend
CHARLES DICKENS

To MESSRS NEWCOMB & CO., 17 NOVEMBER 1869

Extract in N, 111, 751.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Wednesday Seventeenth November 1869

Be so good as to make the page, Armatage, a new livery suit as before, and also morning clothes as before.

Messrs. Newcomb & Co.[†3]

To PERCY FITZGERALD, 18 NOVEMBER 1869

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Eighteenth November 1869

My Dear FitzGerald.

For my sake—if not for Heaven's—do, I entreat you, look over your Manuscript[†1] before sending it to the printer. Its condition involves us all in hopeless confusion, and really occasions a great unnecessary cost. I was going to place the enclosed article[†2] just now, but found it really impossible to deal with, having regard to the other business to be done.

Ever Faithfully CD.

To HENRY PALMER, 18 NOVEMBER 1869*

MS Private.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Eighteenth November 1869

My Dear Mr. Palmer

The enclosed letter was just going to be posted to you when a note (which I now answer) arrived from you at 5 minutes to 3. I am here until a quarter past 3, and will be here again at ½ past 4.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To MOWBRAY MORRIS, [20 NOVEMBER 1869]

Mention in next. Date: written day before.

Recommending T. A. Trollope for a position on The Times.[†3]

To THOMAS ADOLPHUS TROLLOPE, 21 NOVEMBER 1869†

Text from transcript by Edgar Johnson of MS in possession of unknown owner.

Gad' Hill Place
Sunday, Twenty First November, 1869

My Dear Trollope

I send you this hasty note to let you know that on receiving your letter yesterday, I wrote to Mowbray Morris in the strongest terms, setting forth my small testimony. I know him very well, but know Delane much better: before whom I have no doubt my letter will go.

The account of that precious Parsonic meeting[†1] which attracted your attention, attracted mine too. There is the usual tendency in that order to be more mad than usual, which precedes destruction.

[†a] O we have such a specimen here! A man who discourses extemporaneously, positively without the power of constructing one grammatical sentence, but who is (ungrammatically) deep in Heaven's confidence on the abstrusest points, and discloses some of his private information with an idiotic complacency insupportable to behold.[†2]

We are going to have a bad Winter here in England too probably. What with Ireland, and what with the last new Government device of getting in the taxes before they are due, and what with vagrancy, and what with fever, the prospect is gloomy.[†a]

With kind regards Ever My Dear Trollope
Affectionately yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

To DR EMIL LEHMANN,[†3] 22 NOVEMBER 1869*

MS Mrs Miriam Green.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Twenty Second November, 1869

Dear Sir

It is quite understood between your brother Frederic and myself that the right of translating my new book into German shall be reserved to you,[†4] and that the business details shall be arranged by your brother on his return to England.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Dr. Emil Lehmann

To MRS ELLIOT, 23 NOVEMBER 1869†

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Tuesday Twenty Third November 1869

My Dear F.

I am unable to give you any pledge or promise respecting the Dolomite paper, for the simple reason that I can not read it.[†5] Pretty well accustomed to messes in the way of manuscript, I never saw such a mess. I very much doubt whether my printers can print from it, or will do so without protest. I will try them, however. If it be possible to make the paper pass muster, it shall go in. If it be impossible, I can't help it.[†a] I have been at work on a new work of my own, all day, and am half blinded and maddened by your unintelligibility.[†a†1]

Ever affectionately
CD.

To GEORGE CLOWES,[†2] 24 NOVEMBER 1869*

MS Beinecke Library, Yale University.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
wednesday twenty fourth november | 1869.

My Dear Sir

Many thanks for your kind note. I wish you could set up the whole of the book[†3] before we begin! But if I get nearly half of it ready by that time, I shall be more than satisifed.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

George Clowes Esquire

To J. S. LE FANU, 24 NOVEMBER 1869

MS University of Texas.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Twenty Fourth November 1869

My Dear Sir

In reply to your obliging letter, I beg to assure you that I shall be truly glad to count upon you as a very frequent contributor.[†4]

Your sketch is very new, striking, and touching. It should make a remarkable story.[†5]

Let me explain to you that I am now about to begin to publish in "All The Year Round" (at the end of each No.) a serial story by FitzGerald of about one good Volume in length.[†1] A longer serial story being always in course of publication at the same time,[†2] and each No. containing only 24 pages, it is desirable that the rest of the matter should be always at such times, if possible, complete in itself. For the reason that the public have a natural tendency, having more than two serial stories to bear in mind at once, to jumble them all together, and do justice to none of them.

I think the enclosed letter will interest you, as showing how very admirably the story of "Green Tea"[†3] was told. It is from the lady I mentioned to you in a note: who has, for thirty or forty years been the subject of far more horrible spectral illusions than have ever, within my knowledge, been placed on record.[†4] She is an English lady married to a foreigner of good position, and long resident in an old Italian City:[†5]—its name you will see on the letter—Genoa. I became an intimate friend of her husband's when I was living in Genoa five and twenty years ago, and, seeing that she suffered most frightfully from tic[†6] (I knew of her having no other disorder,[†7] at that time), I confided to her husband that I had found myself to possess some rather exceptional power of Animal Magnetism (of which I had tested the efficacy in nervous disorders), and that I would gladly try her. She never developed any of the ordinarily-related phænomona,[†8] but after a month began to sleep at night—which she had not done for years—and to change, amazingly to her own mother, in appearance. She then disclosed to me that she was, and had long been, pursued by myriads of bloody phantoms of the most frightful aspect; and that, after becoming paler, they had all veiled their faces. From that time, wheresoever I travelled in Italy, she and her husband travelled with me, and every day I magnetized her; sometimes under olive trees, sometimes in Vineyards, sometimes in the travelling carriage, sometimes at wayside Inns during the mid-day halt. Her husband called me up to her, one night at Rome, when she was rolled into an apparently impossible ball, by tic in the brain, and I only knew where her head was by following her long hair to its source. Such a fit had always held her before, at least 30 hours, and it was so alarming to see that I had hardly any belief in myself with reference to it. But in half an hour she was peacefully and naturally asleep, and next morning was quite well.

When I left Italy that time, the spectres had departed. They returned by degrees as time went on, and have ever since been as bad as ever. She has tried other Magnetism, however, and has derived partial relief. When I went back to Genoa for a few days, a dozen years ago, I asked her should I magnetize her again? She replied that she felt the relief would be immediate; but that the agony of leaving it off so soon, would be so great, that she would rather suffer on.

She is, as you will see, a very brave woman, and has thoroughly considered her disorder. But her sufferings are unspeakable; and if you could write me a few lines giving her any such knowledge as she wants,[†1] you would do an action of equally unspeakable kindness.

My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

J. S. Le Fanu Esquire

To T. A. TROLLOPE, 24 NOVEMBER 1869

Extract in T. F. Madigan catalogue (c. May 1935); MS 1 p.; addressed T. A. Trollope; dated Gad's Hill Place, 24 Nov 69.

I received the note on the other side[†2] from Mowbray Morris this morning and immediately post it on to you.

To JOHN LANGFORD,[†3] 25 NOVEMBER 1869

MS Walter T. Spencer.

Private

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Twenty Fifth November 1869

My Dear Sir

It appears to me that the non-payment of the teachers, in the case you so well set forth, is a point of vital weakness in the case. They have as good a right to be paid for their labour as the working man has to be paid for his; and they are not, in their degree, usually better paid than he is. I must say that if technical Education be of such importance to these recipients as they feel it to be, they are not truly independent (to my thinking) when they take it for nothing from men who can very indifferently afford to give it. And even if they were all men of fortune who could well afford it, the principle would be no less objectionable.[†4]

For this reason I cannot call attention to the effort with unqualified praise.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

J. A. Langford Esquire L L D

To THE HON. ROBERT LYTTON, 25 NOVEMBER 1869*

MS Lytton Papers.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Twenty Fifth November 1869

My Dear Robert Lytton

In great haste.—Hungarian subject[†1] safely received. Pray go on with it, and finish.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To HENRY D. PALMER, 25 NOVEMBER 1869*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Twenty Fifth November 1869

My Dear Mr. Palmer

It seems to me that the safest course will be for us to arrange to meet here, on Wednesday next at 3 o'Clock to settle the agreement.[†2]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Henry D Palmer Esquire

To GEORGE CLOWES, 27 NOVEMBER 1869*

MS Beinecke Library, Yale University.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Saturday Twenty Seventh Novr. 1869

My Dear Sir

I send you, enclosed, the Conclusion of the MS of No. 2.[†3]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

George Clowes Esquire

To GEORGE DOLBY, 27 NOVEMBER 1869*

MS Robert A. Baxter.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Saturday Twenty Seventh November 1869.

My Dear Dolby.

In answer to your enquiry to N[†4]—I do not think I shall be here until Wednesday in the ordinary course. But I can be in town on Tuesday at from 5 to 6, and will dine at the Posts[†1] with you, if you like.

Send me a line to Gad's in reply.

Ever affecy Yours
CD.

To FREDERIC CHAPMAN, 28 NOVEMBER 1869

MS Johns Hopkins University.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Twenty Eighth November 1869

My Dear F. C.

Charles Collins finds that the sitting down to draw, brings back all the worst symptoms of the old illness that occasioned him to leave his old pursuit of painting; and here we are suddenly, without an Illustrator! We will use his cover,[†2] of course; but he gives in altogether as to further subjects.[†3]

I knew this only last night, and I lose no time in writing to you. There is no time to be lost, and we must immediately consider what is to be done.

I will come up to town on Tuesday morning, and will hope to see you at A. Y. R. Office between 12 and 2.

Faithfully Yours always

CD.

To W. R. S. RALSTON, 29 NOVEMBER 1869*

MS Huntington Library. Address: W. Ralston Esquire | British Museum | London | W.C.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Twenty Ninth November | 1869

My Dear Sir

I regret that I cannot comply with the request of the tallest and handsomest lady in St. Petersburg. But I hold no communication with translators of my books in any country which does not recognize my right in them.

Believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. Ralston Esquire

To W. J. FARRER, 30 NOVEMBER 1869

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, June 1979; MS 1 p.; dated office of AYR, 30 Nov 69 (not 1870 as in catalogue); addressed W. J. Farrer.

Wondering whether, as he assumes, the enclosed account[†1] will be paid out of Townshend's estate.[†2] But if the Executors have the slightest doubt in the matter, I will pay it myself.

To MESSRS HARPER & BROTHERS, 30 NOVEMBER 1869

MS Beinecke Library, Yale University.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,|HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Thirtieth November, 1869[†3]

Dear Sirs

As I had fully intended communicating with you in reference to the early sheets of my new story (in token of my being perfectly satisfied with our past business relations in that wise), I think it courteous to let you know that I had made a great mistake in my remembrance. Messrs. Fields Osgood and Co. have reminded me that by an item of agreement between us dating so far back as April 1867, I agreed to sell the advance sheets of my next story to them. The fact had altogether passed out of my recollection.

Dear Sirs | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Harper & Brothers

December

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 2 DECEMBER 1869†

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Second December 1869

My Dearest Georgy. The Palmer dinner will come off on Sunday Week, the day after Fechter's last Princess's night.†4 I have asked Mary to be at home.

I believe Edmund†5 is coming sometime on Monday. If so, of course I must stay at Gad's for him. But I don't as yet know what his movements are in detail:—probably because he doesn't know, himself.

There is no doubt about the Milner Gibson†6 house.†7

Fechter played magnificently last night, and Carlotta†8 really was surprising.

House, poor; but great enthusiasm. They were a company of Doves, at the drawing up of the agreement, and could not coo too mildly.

I purpose being home on Sunday by the usual train. Sometime on Saturday I will look in here for letters.

Ever Most affectionately

CD.

†a Each of my Nos.†1 6 printed pages too short! Clowes came here yesterday, to break the tidings.†a

To HENRY D. PALMER, [2 DECEMBER 1869]

Envelope only, MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: Henry D Palmer Esquire | Langham Hotel | Regent Street | W. PM London 2 Dec 69.

To CHARLES MATHEWS,†2 3 DECEMBER 1869*

MS Charles F. Heindl.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Third December, 1869

My Dear Mr. Mathews.

I hope you will render me due credit for unselfishness, when I tell you that I am glad you are going to Australia.†3 For I can very ill afford to lose, even for a time, so fine an artist; and if I were not interested in your enriching yourself, I should ferociously oppose your leaving home.

On the 4th. of January I promise myself the pleasure of attending your benefit.[†4] I must beg you to excuse me from saying anything on the occasion, as I shall go to see and hear you; and I could not possibly reconcile my doing anything else, with my own personal instinct of what is becoming in the matter.

With all good wishes
Believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Mathews Esquire

To S. L. FILDES,[†1] [?EARLY DECEMBER 1869]

Extract from W.H. Chambers to Howard Duffield (28 Nov 1927: MS Dickens House). Date: shortly after 4 Dec 69, when Fildes's illustration, Houseless and Hungry, appeared in the 1st issue of the Graphic.

I see from your illustration in The Graphic this week that you are an adept at drawing scamps, send me some specimens of pretty ladies.[†2]

To FREDERIC CHAPMAN, 5 DECEMBER 1869*

MS Johns Hopkins University.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Fifth December, 1869

My Dear F.C.

It is a great deal of money.[†3] I will consider, and write to you again by tomorrow's post from here.[†4]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Fredk. Chapman Esquire

To MRS LEHMANN, 6 DECEMBER 1869*

MS Dickens House.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Sixth December, 1869

My Dear Mrs. Lehmann

Remembering that Lehmann spoke to me about his brother[†5] at Hamburg,[†6] I had already communicated with him and ratified my promise,[†7] before hearing from you.

It is impossible to read your account of poor Chorley without laughing, and yet it is a very serious matter.[†8] I greatly fear that his labouring under so preposterous a delusion as you describe, is the commencement of a drivelling insanity. It passes the tipsy confines, I am sore afraid, and ranges into far worse ground.

Believe me always | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To F.F. COURTNEY,[†1] 7 DECEMBER 1869

Mention in Anderson Galleries Catalogue, No. 4242; MS 1 p.; addressed F. F. Courtney; dated Gad's Hill Place, 7 Dec 69.

Thanking him for a book.[†2]

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 9 DECEMBER 1869*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Ninth December 1869

My Dear Ouvry

It seems to me that there is a wrong word in the last clause of the agreement for the New Book. It stands; "If the publication of the said work shall not be commenced before the month of March 1870." It is not intended to be commenced before. The 1st. No. will be published on the 30th. of March.[†3]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To HENRY [SCOTT],[†4] 12 DECEMBER 1869*

MS Charles Letts & Co.

Memorandum

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Saturday Twelfth December 1869

I want a new solid blotter on my table, Henry;—not a white one.

Post my letters to Gad's Hill, on Monday and Tuesday nights. I shall probably be here again on Wednesday.

CHARLES DICKENS

Get me 2 Letts's Diaries No. 9 for 1870.[†5]

To MISS ELISH LA MONTE,[†1] 12 DECEMBER 1869*

MS University of Kentucky.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Saturday Twelfth December 1869

Sir

I much regret that I cannot have the satisfaction of publishing any of the sketches you have sent me, in these pages. They are not suited to the requirements of the journal.

As I do not understand from your letter that you desire to have your MSS returned to so great a distance, I do not post them; but I hold them at your disposal.

With thanks for the terms in which you address me, and of course respecting your confidence strictly, I am

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

E. N. Lamont[†2] Esquire

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 13 DECEMBER 1869*

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Monday Thirteenth December 1869

My Dear Ouvry

I return you the agreement for the new work, with my signature attached.[†3]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Frederic Ouvry Esquire

To W. J. FARRER, 15 DECEMBER 1869

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, June 1979; MS 1 p.; dated Office of AYR; 15 Dec 69; addressed W. J. Farrer.

In reply to your question of copyright arising out of the publication of Townshend's Religious Opinions: expressing his firm opinion that if he pays for the expenses of publication, the copyright is his, and that if the estate pays, it is theirs. It is unquestionably mine at present, the papers being left absolutely to me. But it would be preposterous to pretend that it is worth any thing.[†4] And assuring him that he would rather pay the money, as he has already paid a hundred pounds out of my own private purse for clerical assistance . . . to get such papers into order than haggle with any unwilling bargainer

To S. L. FILDES, 16 DECEMBER 1869

MS Beinecke Library, Yale University.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Sixteenth December 1869[†1]

Dear Sir

I beg to thank you for the highly meritorious and interesting specimens of your Art that you have had the kindness to send me. I return them herewith, after having examined them with the greatest pleasure.

I am naturally curious to see your drawing from David Copperfield, in order that I may compare it with my own idea. In the meanwhile I can honestly assure you that I entertain the greatest admiration for your remarkable powers.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

S.L. Fildes Esquire

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 16 DECEMBER 1869*

Ms Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Sixteenth December 1869

My Dear Ouvry

Fechter, and his American Manager, and Webster his last manager, are coming to Gads on Sunday for a parting dinner.[†2] If you have no better engagement, will you come too?

Ever Faithfully
CD.

To JOSEPH SLY, 16 DECEMBER 1869

MS Public Library and Museum, Lancaster.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Thursday Sixteenth December 1869

Dear Mr. Sly

I have safely received your handsome present of game, in fine condition.—All good Christmas wishes to you, and yours, and the rare old house!

With many thanks | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To ARTHUR RYLAND, 18 DECEMBER 1869*

MS Mrs Quinney.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Eighteenth December 1869

My Dear Ryland

I must, I am sorry to say, perforce, excuse myself from attending the meeting in behalf of the Hospital for Sick Children.[†1] The work before me between this and March has obliged me to decline innumerable proposals of that kind; and in each case I have specially mentioned my one promise to Birmingham.[†2]

For the same reason I must get straight to the Hotel at night, avoiding fatigue and night air, and must get back to London with all speed. I am really very hard pressed.

With kind regard to your ladies
Believe me | Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Arthur Ryland Esquire

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 20 DECEMBER 1869*

MS Huntington Library. Address (MS envelope only, Mrs J. Felix-Davies): Miss Hogarth | Gad's Hill Place | Higham by Rochester. PM London 20 Dec 69.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Monday Twentieth December 1869

My Dearest Georgy

The Direction for the box will be:

Carriage Paid

The Secretary
School for the Indigent Blind[†3] near The Obelisk
St. George's Fields

London.

Mary shall receive from me on Thursday morning (if not before) the notes concerning the Gardener. I purpose coming down on Thursday by the 2. .10 from Charing X.

We are all to meet on the Platform at 3, to see Fechter off.

Ever affecy.

CD.

Letters to be sent here till Thursday.

To JOHN FORSTER, [22 DECEMBER 1869]

Extract in F, XI, ii, 809-10. Date: [22 Dec 69, according to Forster.

When I had written and, as I thought, disposed of the first two Numbers of my story, Clowes informed me to my horror that they were, together, twelve printed pages too short!!![†1] Consequently I had to transpose a chapter from number two to number one,[†2] and remodel number two altogether! This was the more unlucky, that it came upon me at the time when I was obliged to leave the book, in order to get up the readings,[†3] quite gone out of my mind since I left them off. However, I turned to it and got it done, and both numbers are now in type. Charles Collins has designed an excellent cover.

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 23 DECEMBER 1869*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Twenty Third December 1869

My Dear Ouvry

The furniture will be really nothing but blinds and a few iron chairs and tables. I think if we say £50 for furniture and £100 for plants, we shall be near the mark; but as the pavement and walls will be of expensive tiles, I think we had best say £600 for the building.[†4]

Faithfully Yours always

CD.

To GEORGE BRUNT, 24 DECEMBER 1869

Mention in D, VII [January 1911], 13; in third person.

Engaging Brunt as his head gardener[†5] at Gad's Hill.

To GEORGE DOLBY, [?24 DECEMBER 1869]

Text from Dolby, CD as I Knew him, p. 358. Date: the day before Christmas Day, according to Dolby, when the turkey had not arrived from Ross as expected.

WHERE IS THAT TURKEY?
IT HAS NOT ARRIVED†1
!!!!!!!!!!

To W. H. WILLS, 24 DECEMBER 1869

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Twenty Fourth December 1869

My Dear Wills

I have been so put about by conflicting engagements—Readings, Writings, Editings, Birmingham correspondence, and other botherations—that I have not even written to you. And now I must put off my pleasant visit of inspection, until I get a little clear, for everything comes at once. Many Merry Christmases and Happy New Years to Mrs. Wills and you!

Ever Yours affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 26 DECEMBER 1869*

Text from transcript in Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday, Twenty Sixth†2 December, 1869

My Dear Madam,

I beg to send you a very large slice of Christmas pudding from America.

With all good seasonable wishes and kind regards
Faithfully yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To GEORGE HOLSWORTH, 27 DECEMBER 1869*

MS Morgan Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Monday Twenty Seventh December 1869

Dear Holsworth

I have never heard from anybody but you, one word respecting Mrs. Scott's receiving money from the office. As I have no doubt of Scott's honesty, I can only suppose that Mr. Fechter intended to ask me for my consent to the arrangement, but forgot it.[†1] Therefore it will be best to pay Mrs. Scott, but at the same time to inform her that in writing to Scott she must tell him to remind Mr. Fechter that he has never asked me to do what we are doing in paying her.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To CHARLES KENT, 27 DECEMBER 1869*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: Private | Charles Kent Esqre. | "The Sun" Office | Strand | London | W.C.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Twenty Seventh December | 1869.

Welcome home,[†2] my dear Kent! I am touched by your so swift remembrance of me on your return, and send you my affectionate and hearty wishes of the season for you and yours. The postman is waiting at the gate to tramp through the snow to Rochester, and is (unlawfully) drinking a glass of gin while I write this; consequently "this" is brief. All here unite in my message. And the green leaves[†3] are in progress.

Ever Affectionately
CD.

Didn't I tell you that Mackay's express object was, to publish those letters?[†4]

To W. C. MACREADY, 27 DECEMBER 1869*

MS Morgan Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Twenty Seventh December | 1869

My Dearest Macready

The remembrance that we had all drunk to you and yours on Christmas Day, made it the more pleasant to receive your letter yesterday morning. We send you and Mrs. Macready and the N. B.[†1] all conceivable good Christmas and New Year greetings. They come out of a deal of snow, but are warm enough to thaw every flake of it.

Harry is at home, and is very proud of your sympathy with him in his carrying off of the Scholarship. He has just passed his Little Go with all the honors, and I hope will get a Fellowship at last. But I have learned to moderate my transports as to hopeful children.

As to me, I am getting up my Readings for the final twelve, and am working at my new book besides.

Charley is here, and Mary, and Georgina, and Katie, and Charley's wife, and a grandchild of the subscriber's (relationship never permitted to be hinted at) and they all send you best love. Charles Collins is here too, and does likewise; but I forgot him in his right sequence. I have taken Milner Gibson's house, 5 Hyde Park Place London W until the end of May, and we take possession early in the New Year. The Conservatory here is getting itself ready for a visit from you in the summer, meanwhile.

Our General Theatrical Fund[†2] has a hard enough life of it, though the poor subscribers pay up wonderfully, and it wastes no money, and does real good. But its annuitants have come on heavily, and the Dramatic College[†3] (which will burst one of these days)[†4] has divided the public interest, and made the public at a loss to know which is which. I always keep my eye on the Covent Garden and Drury Lane Funds, with the hope of clutching them for the whole profession at last.

It needs no Christmas time, my dearest Macready, to bring the thought of you and of our long and close friendship round to my heart, for it is always there. God bless and preserve you! So prays

Your most affectionate and faithful

CD.

To MRS MACREADY, 27 DECEMBER 1869*

MS Morgan Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Twenty Seventh December | 1869

My Dear Mrs. Macready

I send Macready by this post all the affectionate messages that proceed from all here to you, and him, and my most particular friend the Noble Boy. But I must add this little note to you, as a personal assurance (however needless I may hope it to be) of my special regard for you, and constant sense of the comfort and happiness you shed upon the path of the dear man I love.

Believe me always | Your affectionate and faithful

CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS ELLIOT, 28 DECEMBER 1869

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Twenty Eighth December, 1869

My Dear F.

Many happy Christmasses and New Years!

I have called "Our Thebiad", "The Old Cardinal's Retreat"[†1] (nobody would have understood your title), and have carefully gone over it, and placed it in a No. now at press. Two copies of that No. shall be posted to you, in case one should miss. I think the whole of your description very good: some parts of it, excellent.[†2] Altogether, it is very curious and life-like—life-like in a weird and ghostly sense.[†3] I have been quite haunted by the statues on the high pedestals among the trees.

On Mary's account (as she will probably go somewhere else, the moment we take possession!) I have hired Milner Gibson's house, opposite the Marble Arch, until the 1st. of June. The address is 5 Hyde Park Place, London, W. We shall be there, in the first week of the New Year.

All well. I am as busy as the Bee who, if the poetical accounts of him be true, would seem to get on better than most busy people.[†4] This is my permanent excuse for short letters.

Ever affectionately Yours

CD.

To DR CHARLES MACKAY, 28 DECEMBER 1869

Extracts in City Book Auction Catalogue No. 244 and American Art Association Catalogue, May 1925; MS 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill Place, 28 Dec 69; addressed Charles Mackay.

Thanks. I will come by all means. So do we radicals get maligned.[†5]

To WILLIAM THOMAS,[†1] 28 DECEMBER 1869

Text from N, 111, 755.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER
Tuesday, Twenty-Eighth December 1869

My Dear Thomas

I regret that I cannot sit for a new photographic portrait.[†2] In my intense weariness and horror of that unremunerative investment of time and temper, I have warded off any similar proposals by pleading that I will not sit at all, and I could not justly be inconsistent now.

I am happy to find that my opinion of the Graphic[†3] has reached your ears without distortion on the way.

Faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To MRS HENRY AUSTIN, 30 DECEMBER 1869*

MS Morgan Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Thirtieth December 1869

My Dear Letitia

Here are some forms.[†4] Your note has been accidentally destroyed, and I forgot the total of the two amounts for which I am to send you the cheque.[†5] Will you let me have another Memorandum of it at Gad's?

Ever affectionately
CD.

To J. H. CHAMBERLAIN, 31 DECEMBER 1869†

MS Benoliel Collection.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thirty First December 1869

My Dear Sir

I hope the consciences of my kind friends the Council[†6] will be set at rest by my assurance that I should very much like to dine with them on Friday,[†7] and that their invitation is most acceptable to me. I unwillingly decline it, as an act of real virtue for which I hope they will hold me in due reverence. [†a] The work I have before me during the next three months is the Virtuous cause to which I am so true, and I sacrifice every tempting engagement to it: knowing that there is no happy medium between many festivities and none—at least, in my case.[†a]

Let me wish you and all who are dear to you, many happy years. And let me extend the cordial wish to the whole Council, with kind regard

My Dear Sir
Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

John Henry Chamberlain Esquire

To R. H. GOOCH, 31 DECEMBER 1869

Text from N, 111, 755-6.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Friday, Thirty-First December, 1869

Dear Sir,

I have safely received your little book[†1] to-day and beg to thank you for it, as well as for your very modest and earnest letter. Accept my good wishes for many happy years to you and all those dear to you, and Believe me,

Faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To ALEXANDER RUSSEL, 31 DECEMBER 1869

Text from N, 111, 756.

Gad's Hill Place
Friday Thirty-First December 1869

My Dear Dr.[†2] Russel,

I have never received the letter to which your correspondent refers; but I fear that even if it had reached me, I could have done nothing to advance the good cause.[†3] For I have been constantly occupied, and have at this time an unusual pressure of claims on my time and attention.

Nevertheless I have read your Collected Letters from the East[†4] with great interest and pleasure. I thank you for them heartily, and wish you would go there again—or somewhere else—and tell me similarly all about it!

Many happy years to you and all who are dear to you.

Believe me | Faithfully yours always
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To J. C. FRANCIS,[†1] [1859-69]

Mention in Notes & Queries, 11th series, v (3 Feb 1912), 83, as written from the AYR Office. Date: between 1859 and end of 1869, when he handed over AYR to Charles Dickens Jnr.

Advising him to learn shorthand.[†2]

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 1869

Extract in W. Waithman Caddell, "Charles Dickens", Manchester Notes & Queries, 22 Mar 1890, VIII, 204.

Many thanks for your great consideration and kindness in sending me that hideous paper. The people conducting it had asked my permission to reprint that passage, and I had given it. The portrait expresses the distorting ferocity with which I shall become inspired if they take advantage of my natural sweetness.[†3]

To W. H. WILLS, 1869

Extract in Maggs Bros catalogue, 1900; MS 1p.; dated 1869; addressed Wills.

I have seen Fredk. Chapman, and he flatly refuses to give more than £150 for the three years' use of Mrs Trollope's Veronica.[†4]

1870

January

To MRS HENRY AUSTIN, 2 JANUARY 1870*

MS Morgan Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT,
Sunday Second January 1870

My Dear Letitia

I enclose the two cheques. We all unite in best wishes for many Happy Years to you, and also to Harriett.

Ever affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

To PERCY FITZGERALD, 3 JANUARY 1870

Extract in Scheuer catalogue No. 3 (1927); MS 1p.; dated Gad's Hill Place, 3 Jan 70; addressed Percy Fitzgerald.

I have to thank you for some delicious birds, and at the same time to wish you and Mrs. Fitzgerald many many happy years.

To T. J. OUSELEY,[†1] 5 JANUARY 1870†

Text from copy by Mr Walter Dexter.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Fifth January 1870

My Dear Sir,

I have received your letter here this morning. Having mislaid your address, I could not write to you safely or certainly until I received it.

[†a] Your book[†2] reached me in due course at Gads Hill. I beg to assure you that the Dedication afforded me inexpressible pleasure, and that its earnestness truly touched and affected me.[†a†3]

Very Dear Sir, | Faithfully Yours,
[CHARLES DICKENS]

I write hastily before leaving town for Birmingham.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 5 JANUARY 1870

Mention in Merwyn-Clayton Sales Co. catalogue, May 1905; MS 1 p.; dated 5 Jan 70.

To JOHN FORSTER, [9 JANUARY 1870]

Extract in F, XII, i, 846. Date: 9 Jan 70, according to Forster.

I am a little shaken by my journey to Birmingham to give away the Institution's[†4] prizes on Twelfth Night,[†5] but I am in good heart;[†6] and, notwithstanding Lowe's[†7] worrying scheme for collecting a year's taxes in a lump,[†8] which they tell me is damaging books, pictures, music, and theatres beyond precedent, our "let" at St. James's Hall is enormous.

To GEORGE DOLBY, 10 JANUARY 1870

Mention in Merwyn-Clayton Sales Co. catalogue, Nov 1905; MS 1 p.; dated 10 Jan 70; addressed George Dolby.

To THE REV. G. R. GLEIG,[†1] [?EARLY JANUARY 1870]*

MS Graham Storey. Date: CD had no doubt returned from Birmingham on 7 Jan; probably written one or two days later.

5 Hyde Park Place W

My Dear Gleig

I have been to Birmingham and elsewhere, and find your book[†2] on coming to town to day. Pray accept my cordial thanks for it, and be sure of an attentive and appreciative reader in your present correspondent.

My means of calling attention to its merits are, I am bound in honesty to avow, very slight. As a writer of fiction, I do not review it in All The Year Round; and, for the same reason, I am very delicate of intervention with reviewers. But I will not lose any opportunity that may come in my way.

I am in Milner Gibson's house until Gad's Hill is green again.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

The Rev. G. R. Gleig

To WILLIAM V. WALLACE,[†3] 11 JANUARY 1870*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: William V. Wallace Esqre. | 10 Grove Place | Brompton | S. W.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Eleventh January 1870

Dear Sir

My absence has prevented my returning an earlier reply to your letter.

I have read it with sympathy and interest, but I have no hope whatever of influencing "those in power", in such a case.[†4] I must beg you to take my experience in such wise for granted, and to believe that it is quite convincing and conclusive.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

William V Wallace Esquire

To FREDERIC CHAPMAN, [?12] JANUARY 1870*

MS Luke V. Fildes. Date: incorrectly dated by CD; Wed was 12 Jan in 70.

5 Hyde Park Place | Wednesday Eighteenth Jany. 1870.

My Dear F. C.

Make the call with Mr. Fildes, on Monday—not Saturday—as I find I must be absent on the last named day.

Faithfully Yours

CD.

To MRS DALLAS, [?12] JANUARY 1870

Text from MDGH, II, 434-5. Date: misdated by MDGH, Wednesday fell on 12 or 19 Jan in 1870; probably 12th, the day after his reading.†1

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday, Jan 16th, 1870.

My Dear Mrs. Dallas

It is perfectly delightful to me to get your fervent and sympathetic note this morning. A thousand thanks for it. I will take care that two places on the front row, by my daughter, are reserved for your occasion next time. I cannot see you in too good a seat, or too often.

Believe me, ever very faithfully yours.
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To JOHN FORSTER, [?12-13 JANUARY 1870]

Extract in F, VII, iii, 656. Date: perhaps a day or two before To Fields, 14 Jan.

Describing the new conservatory at Gad's Hill, glass and iron, brilliant but expensive,†2 with foundations as of an ancient Roman work of horrible solidity.

To MR and MRS J. T. FIELDS, 14 JANUARY 1870†

MS Huntington Library.

5 HYDE PARK PLACE, LONDON W
Friday Fourteenth January | 1870

My Dear Fields†3

†a I cannot overcome my instinctive feeling that it would be a very unseemly thing for me to engage in any single combats with the Pirates. I have already announced my own connexion with your house; and it is for you, and not for me, to make all appeals or protests or other announcements connected with that association. I am quite clear as to my silent part.†a

We live here (opposite the Marble Arch) in a charming house until the 1st of June, and then return to Gad's. The Conservatory is completed, and is a brilliant success:—but an expensive one!

†a I read this afternoon at 3†1—a beastly proceeding which I particularly hate— and again this day week at 3. These morning readings particularly disturb me at my book-work: nevertheless, I hope Please God to lose no way on their account. An evening reading once a week is nothing. By the bye, I recommenced last Tuesday evening with the greatest brilliancy.†a

I should be quite ashamed of not having written to you and my dear Mrs. Fields before now, if I didn't know that you will both understand how occupied I am, and how naturally, when I put my papers away for the day, I get up and fly. I have a large room here, with three fine windows, overlooking the Park— unsurpassable for airiness and cheerfulness.

You saw the announcement of the death of poor dear Harness.[†2] The circumstances are curious. He wrote to his old friend the Dean of Battle,[†3] saying he would come to visit him on that day (the day of his death). The Dean wrote back: "Come next day, instead, as we are obliged to go out to dinner, and you will be alone." Harness told his sister a little impatiently that he must go on the first-named day—that he had made up his mind to go, and MUST.[†4] He had been getting himself ready for dinner, and came to a part of the staircase whence two doors opened; one, upon another level passage; one, upon a flight of stone steps. He opened the wrong door, fell down the steps, injured himself very severely, and died in a few hours.

You will know—I don't—what Fechter's success is in America, at the time of this present writing.[†5] In his farewell performances at the Princess's, he acted very finely.[†6] I thought the three first acts of his Hamlet very much better than I had ever thought them before—and I always thought very highly of them. We gave him a foaming stirrup cup at Gad's Hill.

Forster (who has been ill with his bronchitis again), thinks No. 2[†7] of the new book, a clincher:—I mean that word (as his own expression) for "Clincher". There is a curious interest steadily working up to No. 5,[†8] which requires a great deal of art and self-denial. I think also, apart from character and picturesqueness, that the young people are placed in a very novel situation.—So I hope.—At Nos. 5 and 6[†9] the story will turn upon an interest suspended until the end.

I can't believe it, and dont, and wont, but they say Harry's 21st. birthday is next Sunday. I have entered him at the Temple just now;[†1] and if he don't get a fellowship at Trinity Hall when his time comes, I shall be disappointed, if in the present disappointable state of existence.

I hope you may have met with the little touch of Radicalism I gave them at Birmingham[†2] in the words of Buckle?[†3] With pride I observe that it makes the regular political traders, of all sorts, perfectly mad. Sich was my intentions, as a grateful acknowledgment of having been misrepresented.[†4]

I think [†a] Mrs Thaxter's[†a†5] prose very admirable—but I don't believe it! No,[†a]

Mrs. Fields,[†a] I do not. My conviction is that those Islanders get frightfully bored by the Islands,[†6] and wish they had never set eyes upon them!

Charley Collins has done a charming cover for the monthly part of the new book; [†a] but having achieved that success, instantly collapsed for the [†b] whole term of his natural life.[†b], [†a] At the very earnest representations of Millais (and after having seen a great number of his drawings) I am going to engage with a new man:[†7] retaining of course, C. C's cover aforesaid. Katie has made some more capital portraits and is always improving.

My dear Mrs. Fields, if "He" (made proud by chairs, and bloated by pictures) does not give you my dear love, let us conspire against him when you find him out, and exclude him from all future confidences. Until then

Ever affectionately Yours and His

CD.

To MRS BANKS, 15 JANUARY 1870†

MS Beinecke Library, Yale University.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Fifteenth January 1870

My Dear Madam

†a I have been much interested by your letter, and am happy to retain the little poem enclosed in it for insertion.†a†1

Your account of your suffering is very sad, but your spirit under it is exemplary and beautiful.

Believe me | Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs Banks.

To THE RT HON. W. E. GLADSTONE, 15 JANUARY 1870*

MS Heritage Book Shop, Los Angeles.

5 Hyde Park Place W. | Fifteenth January 1870.

Dear Mr. Gladstone

I am truly sensible of your remembrance, and of the kind manner in which it is conveyed to me. It will afford me great pleasure to dine with you on Wednesday the 26th.

Believe me | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Right Hon. | W. E. Gladstone

To FREDERIC CHAPMAN, 16 JANUARY 1870*

MS University of Reading.

5 Hyde Park Place W. | Sunday Sixteenth January 1870.

My Dear F. C.

Knowing that you have had domestic trouble of late, I have forborne for a while to trouble you on the subject of the Illustrations of the new book.

There are many points of merit in the Copperfield design,[†2] but it is wanting in a sense of beauty. In the new book I have two beautiful and young women, strikingly contrasted in appearance, who will both be very prominent in the story. However, I suppose our new Artist will be up to that requirement.

I shall be at home all tomorrow morning, and all Wednesday morning; and have given instructions that I am always accessible to you when I really am at home. We had best settle this business finally, as soon as we can.

Faithfully Yours alwys
CD.

To FREDERICK LOCKER, 17 JANUARY 1870

MS Armstrong Browning Library. Address: Frederick Locker Esquire | 91 Victoria Street | S. W.

5 Hyde Park Place W
Monday Seventeenth January 1870.

My Dear Mr. Locker

[†a] It unfortunately happens that I am hopelessly engaged both for the 28th. and 29th. I have the greatest respect for, and interest in, the Dean of Westminster;[†1] and should be unusually grateful to any available opportunity of knowing him better. He is to my thinking foremost among the generous and wise spirits of this time.[†a†2]

I shall leave it to my daughter (who is away in Hampshire on a short visit) to thank Mrs. Locker[†3] for her proffered kindness and to tell her that we shall hope to see you both here.

Always | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Frederick Locker Esquire

To ROBERT CHAMBERS,[†4] [?JANUARY 1870]

Mention in To Wills, 23 Jan 70. Date: no doubt soon after the death of Chambers's second wife[†5] on 18 Jan.

To FREDERICK LOCKER, 20 JANUARY 1870*

MS J. H. Locker-Lampson.

5 Hyde Park Place W

Thursday Twentieth January 1870

Dear Mr. Locker

I have no engagement at all for the week after next, excepting the Tuesday in that week. It will give me great pleasure to hold myself bound to you, for any day you may name.[†1] My daughter sends her compliments to Mrs. Locker, and will be happy to accompany me.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

F. Locker Esquire.

To JOHN RUSSELL, 20 JANUARY 1870*

MS Mrs Valentine.

5 Hyde Park Place, London, W
Thursday Twentieth January | 1870

The enclosed letter was sent on to me this evening, Russell, from the Post-master at Rochester in mistake, and I opened it in mistake among other letters. I immediately re-post it on to you.

As soon as you are completely rid of the workmen, have the Horse-Shed in the Meadow thoroughly cleaned out, and all the rubbish in it burnt. It was in a very bad state when I came away.

CHARLES DICKENS

To FRANCIS FULLER,[†2] 21 JANUARY 1870

Extract in N, III, 761.

5 Hyde Park Place, W. | 21st January, 1870

It is unnecessary for me to express my cordial concurrence in the principle of raising the character of the people and raising the character of their amusements; always supposing that no endeavour towards that end either patronizes them, or otherwise treats them as children.

To W. H. WILLS, 23 JANUARY 1870†

MS Huntington Library.

5 Hyde Park Place, London W
Sunday Twenty Third Jany. 1870

My Dear Wills.

In the note I had from you about Nancy and Sikes, you seem to refer to some other note you had written me. Therefore I think it well merely to mention that I have received no other note.

I do not wonder at your not being up to the undertaking (even if you had had no cough) under the wearing circumstances. It was a very curious scene.[†3] The actors and actresses (most of the latter looking very pretty) mustered in extra-ordinary force, and were a fine audience. I set myself to carrying out of themselves and their observation, those who were bent on watching how the effects were got:—and I believe I succeeded. Coming back to it again however, I feel it was madness ever to do it continuously. My ordinary pulse is 72, and it runs up under this effort to 112. Besides which, it takes me ten or twelve minutes to get my wind back at all: I being in the meantime like the man who lost the fight:—in fact, his express image. Frank Beard was in attendance to make divers experiments to report to Watson; and although, as you know, he stopped it instantly when he found me at Preston, he was very much astonished by the effects of the "Reading" on the Reader.[†1]

So I hope you may be able to come and hear it before it is silent for ever. It is done again on the evenings of the 1st. Feby, 15th. Feby, and 8th. March. I hope, now I have got over the mornings, that I may be able to work at my book. But up to this time the great preparation required in getting the subjects up again, and the twice a week besides, have almost exclusively occupied me.

I have something the matter with my right thumb, and Can't (as you see) write plainly. I sent a word to poor Robert Chambers, and I send my love to Mrs. Wills.

[†a] The patient[†2] was in attendance and missed you.[†a] I was charged with all manner of good and kind remembrance.

Ever My Dear Wills | Affectionately Yours

CD.

To FREDERIC CHAPMAN, 24 JANUARY 1870*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Twenty Fourth January | 1870

My Dear F. C.

I write with some difficulty, having a gathering in my right thumb.

I have seen Mr. Fildes, and like him very much, and think he promises admirably. I have arranged with him that his original drawings shall remain his own (his reason for wishing it has a direct bearing on the efficiency of his work), and also that you will at once send him a proof of the Cover. Please do so, without delay.

Faithfully Always

CD.

To THE RT HON. W. E. GLADSTONE, 26 JANUARY 1870*

MS British Library.

5 Hyde Park Place W
Wednesday Twenty Sixth Jany 1870

Dear Mr. Gladstone

It happens most unfortunately for me, but I cannot have the honor and pleasure of dining with you to day. An injury to the right thumb (which I increased by using it unbandaged last night) obliges me for the next four and twenty hours to keep it constantly poulticed in an unseemly bundle, not in the least adapted for presentation anywhere but at the fireside. My doctor only allows me to remove it, to write this note: which I do with some difficulty. I hope I may not be wrong in sending it to your official address, but I take my cue from the address of your kind note to me. You will readily understand that I send it to any address, most unwillingly

Believe me | Very faithfully yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Right Hon: W. E. Gladstone.

To WILKIE COLLINS, 27 JANUARY 1870

MS Morgan Library. Address: Wilkie Collins Esquire | 90 Gloucester Place | Portman Square.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Twenty Seventh January 1870

My Dear Wilkie

Within, you will find the original draft[†1] of the formal letter you want from me, with my version of the same under my hand.[†2] My departure, even from the original excruciating phraseology, is very slight. May the Spirit of English Style be merciful to me!

I have been truly concerned to hear of your bad attack;[†3] but I have two hopes of it; first, that it will not last long; second, that it will leave you in a really recovered state of good health. I don't come to see you, because I don't want to bother you. Perhaps you may be glad to see me bye and bye. Who knows!

Affectionately always
CHARLES DICKENS

To WILKIE COLLINS, 27 JANUARY 1870

MS Morgan Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Twenty Seventh January 1870

My Dear Wilkie

At your request I can have no hesitation in stating for your satisfaction that the Copyright in any of your novels tales and articles which have appeared in the periodicals entitled "Household Words" and "All The Year Round" was never purchased by the proprietors of those Periodicals: they having merely purchased from you the right of first publishing the same therein, and of course of always retaining them as an integral part of their stereotype plates. You have the right, hereby freely acknowledged, of disposing of and publishing the same novels tales and articles, in any way you think proper, without interference from the proprietors of the said periodicals, their successors or assigns.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Wilkie Collins Esquire

To DR CHARLES MACKAY, 27 JANUARY 1870

Mention in N, III, 762.

Regarding contributions for All the Year Round.

February

To GEORGE BRUNT, 1 FEBRUARY 1870

Text from N, III, 763.

5 Hyde Park Place | Tuesday, First February, 1870

I send you enclosed, Brunt, an order to Mr. Clarke[†1] at Gravesend (whose business is set up again, I find) to furnish you with your list of seeds, etc. I also return your list as you will want it for your order.

To GEORGE S. NOTTAGE,[†2] 1 FEBRUARY 1870

MS Arnold Palmer.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday First February 1870.

Dear Sir

I am exceedingly obliged to you for your caution. I had not previously heard of the book, which is (of course) wholly unauthorized.[†3] But I have begged my publishers to institute some immediate enquiries, and I will take care that the imposition does not succeed.[†1]

With many thanks | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

George S Nottage Esquire

To THOMAS LONGMAN,[†2] 2 FEBRUARY 1870*

MS University of Reading.

5 Hyde Park Place W
Wednesday Evening Second February | 1870

My Dear Longman

On referring to my Readings list, I find that my people were wrong just now. The two remaining nights on which The Pickwick Trial is to be read, are Tuesday March 1st. and Tuesday March 15th.[†3]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Longman Esquire

To MISS LORETTA HUFFAM,[†4] 5 FEBRUARY 1870*

MS Myers & Co. Address: Miss Loretta Huffam | 270 Mornington Place | Camberwell Road | S.

5 Hyde Park Place W | Saturday Fifth February 1870

Dear Miss Huffam

I was more amazed than displeased, I beg to assure you, by finding that your friends had used my name without my knowledge. I received a letter from Messrs. Hunt and Roskell[†5] of Bond Street, informing me that they had had the pleasure of voting for "my case". I innocently replied, that could not be, for I had no case. They then gave me your name. Not having the faintest idea that you were a candidate, I supposed them to have fallen into some conglomeration touching your elder sister; and said so. Upon which they explained in detail. I was very careful to tell them immediately that there could be no question of the merits of your case, and that I knew it to be a meritorious one.[†6]

I mentioned this in a general way to my sister, but would on no account have done so with the least intention of making you uneasy.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Loretta Huffam

To CHARLES KENT, 5 FEBRUARY 1870*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: Charles Kent Esquire | 1 Campden Grove | Kensington | W.

5 Hyde Park Place | Saturday Fifth February 1870

My Dear Kent

I have been obliged for the time being to change my day at the office to Wednesday. While the Readings last, the difficulty of fighting through all my other work is almost inexpressible.

I will go to Chapman and Hall's on Tuesday (I am just now back from two days' absence), and will take—or make—an opportunity to say what you desire. And of course I will say it as effectively as I can.

This will be, of course apart from the expression of any opinion on the scheme.[†1] Mr. Saunders's[†2] confidence in it, is, to me, absolutely inconceivable. The example of the Pall Mall Gazette[†3] tends, to my thinking, exactly the other way.[†4] You will remember that I doubted it very much (except as an immense relief for you) when you were last here; I have thought of it again and again since; and I looked upon it as an all but hopeless enterprize.

Ever affectionately
CD.[†5]

To J.C. KINGATE,[†1] 5 FEBRUARY 1870

MS Dickens House.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Fifth February 1870

Sir

In reply to your letter I beg to say that I have no doubt my Christmas fare[†2] was destroyed by an unavoidable accident, and that I bore the loss with unbroken good humour towards the Great Western Railway Company.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS[†3]

Mr. J. C. Kingate

To HENRY PALMER, 5 FEBRUARY 1870*

MS Willard C. Grace.

THE ATHENÆUM | 5 Hyde Park Place W
Saturday Fifth February 1870

My Dear Mr. Palmer

I have just come back (as you may possibly have heard from Dolby) after 2 days in the country.

If you return home[†4] next Thursday, I have only one disengaged evening in the meantime. Can you dine with me tomorrow (quite alone) at half past 6 sharp? I shall be truly glad to see you, if you can.

Faithfully Yours alwys
CHARLES DICKENS

Henry D Palmer Esquire

To CHARLES KENT, 9 FEBRUARY 1870*

MS Parker House, Boston

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Ninth February 1870.

My Dear Kent.

Say at ½ past 2

Ever affecy.
CD

To HENRY LESLIE,[†1] 9 FEBRUARY 1870*

MS British Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Ninth February 1870

Dear Sir

In reply to your letter of yesterday's date I beg to assure you that my entertaining your proposal[†2]—on any terms—is quite out of the question

Believe me Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Henry Leslie Esquire

To G.M. TOWLE, 9 FEBRUARY 1870*

MS Beinecke Library, Yale University. Address: George Makepeace Towle Esquire | 25 Keppel Street | Russell Square | W.C.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Ninth February 1870

My Dear Sir

I am exceedingly obliged to you for your kind note; and accept your book[†3]— as I am sure I shall read it—with great and real pleasure.

My son has already informed you that it will give me the utmost gratification to preserve our present relations in reference to these pages,[†4] after your return home. You carry with you to New England my best wishes for yourself, and my affectionate remembrance of the country.

Believe me | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

George Makepeace Towle Esquire

To [THOMAS HYDE] HILLS, 10 FEBRUARY 1870*

MS Dickens House.

5 Hyde Park Place, W | Thursday Tenth February 1870

My Dear Hills

I shall be very glad to dine with you on Monday week. My daughter and sister will not be available.

At what hour?

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To [FRANCIS] DANBY,[†1] [12 FEBRUARY 1870]

Envelope only, MS University of Chicago. Date: PM London, 12 Feb 70. Address: [Francis] Danby Esquire | [56 Lawford Road] | [N.W].[†2]

To LORD LYTTON, 12 FEBRUARY 1870*

MS Lytton Papers.

5 Hyde Park Place W. | Saturday Twelfth Feby. 1870

My Dear Lytton

The move initiated by Murray and Longman in the enclosed (or rather accompanying) papers, is very important, and refers to one of the most preposterous robberies ever systematically committed.[†3] I have so completely lost faith in the governing of my blessed country, "the dread and envy of them all", that I do not believe it cares to remedy any injustice, so long as it can possibly leave it alone. Nevertheless I feel it right to go to this Meeting, just as I should feel it right to go a Station House if I were knocked down and robbed in the street. I wish you may think it well to come too. I understand it to be private, and merely to involve a delicate suggestion to the Supreme Powers that writers are not, ipso facto, felons, and that Rule Britannia may be sung to any extent, without necessarily demanding the confiscation of their property.

Ever Yours
CHARLES DICKENS[†4]

To GEORGE NOTTAGE, [12 FEBRUARY 1870]

Envelope only in Henry Bristow catalogue No. 282 (1983). Address: George S. Nottage | Sidmouth Lodge | Tulse Hill. PM 12 Feb 70.

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 12 FEBRUARY 1870*

MS Huntington Library.

5 Hyde Park Place, W.
Saturday Twelfth February | 1870

My Dear Ouvry.

Mr. Hotten's[†1] letter to Charley asked him to ask me to let him use in a book on me "as a speaker", and as I don't know what else,[†2] a certain prologue I once wrote for Macready,[†3] and one or two other copyright trifles.[†4]

It was not from that letter (which I told Charley to leave wholly unanswered),[†5] that I heard about the book. It was from the Stereoscopic Company,[†6] who had been canvased for Advertisements to be inserted in "a Collection of Mr. Dickens's Speeches", which was sure of a very large sale. Their Manager asked whether the book was to be published with my sanction? The reply being evasive, he declined to advertize[†7] and immediately wrote to me. This transaction took place, may be a day or two after the date of the letter to Charley, but before I knew of its existence.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Frederic Ouvry Esquire

To CHARLES ELLIS, 14 FEBRUARY 1870*

MS Dickens House. Address: Charles Ellis Esquire | 71 Belgrave Mansions | Grosvenor Gardens | S.W.

5 Hyde Park Place W.

Monday Fourteenth February | 1870

Dear Mr. Ellis

I considered the subject of the Star and Garter, with a reference to All The Year Round, at the time of the fire.[†1] But I placed it in the category of topics which the newspapers anticipate, and the general interest in which has passed before they can be dealt with in a literary Journal that must always be at press two weeks in advance.[†2]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Ellis Esquire

To ARTHUR HELPS, 14 FEBRUARY 1870*

MS Royal Archives, Windsor Castle.

5 Hyde Park Place W.
Monday Fourteenth February | 1870.

My Dear Helps,

I shall be truly obliged to you if you will present my duty to the Queen, and my thanks for the gracious remembrance expressed in the Queen's enclosure to you for me. I shall always set a high value on those portraits and preserve them proudly.[†3]

The Queen's reference to the Frozen Deep emboldens me to ask you to explain what I think and hope (but cannot be sure) was explained at the time, when the Queen did me the honor to send for me on that Memorable evening. I was already dressed for the farce in a ridiculous wig and dressing gown, and felt, not being a professional actor, that there would be something incongruous in my so presenting myself for the first time before the Queen and the late Prince Consort.[†4]

My Dear Helps | Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Arthur Helps Esquire.

To LORD LYTTON, 14 FEBRUARY 1870

MS Lytton Papers.

5 Hyde Park Place | Monday Fourteenth Feby. 1870

My Dear Lytton

I ought to have mentioned in my hurried note to you, that my knowledge of the consultation in question only preceded yours by certain hours; and that Longman asked me if I would make the design known to you, as he thought it might be a liberty to address you otherwise. This I did, therefore.

The class of writers to whom you refer at the close of your note, have no copyrights and do not come within my case at all.[†1] I quite agree with you as to their propensities and deserts.

Indeed I suppose in the main that there is very little difference between our opinions. I do not think the present Government worse than another, and I think it better than another by the presence of Mr. Gladstone; but it appears to me that our system fails.

Ever Yours
CD.

To B. H. TICKNOR,[†2] 14 FEBRUARY 1870

MS Berg Collection. Address: B. H. Ticknor Esquire | Messrs. Trubner and Co.[†3] | 60 Paternoster Row | E.C.

5 Hyde Park Place. W. | Monday Fourteenth February | 1870

My Dear Sir

I have waited for your return from Paris before answering your letter. I shall be at the office of All The Year Round, 26 Wellington Street Strand, on Wednesday from 12 to 2, and shall be happy to see you there if it will suit your convenience.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

B.H. Ticknor Esquire

To HENRY DICKENS, 17 FEBRUARY 1870

Text from facsimile in H. F. Dickens, Memories of my Father, 1928, p. 24.

5 Hyde Park Place W
Thursday Seventeenth February 1870

My Dear Harry

I am extremely glad to hear that you have made a good start at the Union.[†4] Take any amount of pains about it, open your mouth well and roundly, speak to the last person visible, and give yourself time.

Loves from all | Ever affectionately
CD

To W.F.A. WILSON,[†1] 17 FEBRUARY 1870

Text from N, III, 764.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Seventeenth February 1870

Dear Sir.

I more than readily send you the poor little document you require from me. If I can in any way amend it, pray command me.

With best wishes for your success | Faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

[Enclosure]

I am happy to bear my testimony to the high merits of Mr. W.F.A. Wilson as a public servant of great experience, and also as an admirable instructor in imparting his experience and knowledge to students. One of my sons, now in India,[†2] had the great advantage of Mr. Wilson's tuition. I followed it closely, and was unusually impressed by the intelligent clearness of his method, his power of adapting himself to the comprehension he had to deal with, and the certainty with which he made his pupil confiding and industrious.

To GEORGE CLOWES, 18 FEBRUARY 1870

MS William Clowes & Sons Ltd.

5 Hyde Park Place W
Friday Night | Eighteenth February 1870

My Dear Mr. Clowes

Pardon the feelings of a parent,—but you got safely, the packet containing the last two thirds of No. 3,[†3] which I left at Duke Street last Sunday under cover to you? I am in no hurry for the proof. The safety of my precious child is my sole care

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To S.L. FILDES, 19 FEBRUARY 1870*

MS Beinecke Library, Yale University. Address: S. L. Fildes Esquire | 52 Hunter Street | Brunswick Square.

5 Hyde Park Place W.
Saturday Nineteenth February 1870

Dear Mr. Fildes

I shall be at home on Monday from 10 to 3.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS LEHMANN, [?24 FEBRUARY 1870]

Envelope only (MS Pickering & Chatto). Address: Mrs Lehmann | 46 Marine Parade | Brighton. PM 24 Feb 70.

To THE REV. DR JOHN COX,[†1] 26 FEBRUARY 1870

Extract: N, 111, 764; dated 5 Hyde Park Place, 26 Feb 70: addressed The Rev. John E. Cox.

Here is your seat for next Tuesday, on my daughter's sofa. You will not hear the regular Yarmouth dialect,[†2] as I could not make it sufficiently intelligible in so large a place; but I hope you will not be disappointed in many other respects.

To G. H. LEWES,[†3] 26 FEBRUARY 1870

Extract in N, 111, 764.

This is merely to express my hope that Mrs. Lewes[†4] and you will not consider me a humbug just yet. Between my readings, my book, my weekly journal . . . I am really hard put to it occasionally.

To W. H. WILLS, 26 FEBRUARY 1870

MS Huntington Library.

THE ATHENÆUM | Saturday Twenty Sixth February 1870

My Dear Wills

You know that you are expected at a certain small dinner of four, next Thursday the 3rd. March[†5] at Blanchard's in Regent Street[†6] at 6 sharp? Don't you? A word in answer to 5 Hyde Park Place W.

Ever affecy.

CD

To SIR CHARLES W. DILKE, 27 FEBRUARY 1870*

MS British Library.

5 Hyde Park Place W.
Sunday Twenty Seventh February 1870

My Dear Sir Charles

I write you an informal note in answer to your kind invitation, to explain—as I am unfortunate a second time—that I give a dinner on the 12th. of March to the gentlemen who have long been associated with the business-conduct of my Readings.[†1] Otherwise I should have been truly pleased and interested in dining with you, and renewing in your person the relations of friendship I held both with your excellent father and grandfather,[†2] and can never remember without emotion.

Believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Sir Charles Wentworth Dilke.

March

To G. H. LEWES, [1 MARCH 1870]

Extract in N, III, 767. Date: CD almost certainly wrote "Tuesday" before "First March" (five days before going to lunch with the Leweses—misread in catalogue as "Twenty" and followed by N.

GAD'S HILL PLACE | 21st March, 1870

On Sunday I hope to attend service[†3] at the Priory.[†4] I like the healthy look of the walking expedition and the longer rest abroad.[†5] May you thoroughly enjoy both. With kind regard to Mrs. Lewes.

To THE REV. DR CHARLES TISDALL,[†6] 1 MARCH 1870*

MS (copy made by Tisdall) Thomas Wright Collection, Dickens House.

GAD'S HILL PLACE | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday, First March 1870

My Dear Doctor Tisdall,

I have read your excellent prologue[†7] with natural pleasure and satisfaction and I thank you heartily.

Faithfully yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

The Rev. Dr. Tisdall

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 1 MARCH 1870

Mention in City Book Auction catalogue No. 602; MS 1 p.; dated 5 Hyde Park Place, 1 Mar 70.

To W. C. MACREADY, 2 MARCH 1870†

MS Morgan Library.

ATHENÆUM | Wednesday Second March 1870

My Dearest Macready

This is to wish you and yours all happiness and prosperity on the well-remembered anniversary[†1] tomorrow. You may be sure that loves and happy returns will not be forgotten at our table.

I have been getting on very well with my book, and we are having immense audiences at St. James's Hall. Mary has been celebrating the first glimpses of Spring, by having the Measles! She got over the disorder very easily, but a weakness remains behind. Katie is blooming, [†a] and her husband is as ailing as ever.[†a] Georgina is in perfect order, and all send you their very best loves.

It gives me true pleasure to have your sympathy with me in the second little speech at Birmingham.[†2] I was determined that my Radicalism should not be called in question. The electric wires are not very exact in their reporting, but at all events the sense was there. Ryland, as usual, made all sorts of enquiries about you.

With love to dear Mrs. Macready and the noble boy my particular friend, and a hearty embrace to you,

I am Ever My Dearest Macready | Your most affectionate
CHARLES DICKENS

[†a] I noticed Mrs. Stanfield[†3] in front last night; looking well, but curiously old.[†a]

To FREDERIC CHAPMAN, 3 MARCH 1870

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

5 Hyde Park Place W | Thursday Third March 1870

My Dear F. C.

All right. I see no objection to their[†4] having casts of those stereotype plates.[†5] Are they paying us what they owe us?

Faithfully Yours always
CD.

To ARTHUR HELPS, 3 MARCH 1870

MS Benoliel Collection

5 Hyde Park Place W | Thursday Third March 1870

My Dear Helps

We will have of "Gad's Hill Place" attached to the title of the Baronetcy,[†1] please—on account of the divine William and Falstaff. With this stipulation, my blessing and forgiveness are enclosed. A more formal note accompanies this.

Ever Yours

CD.

I have been reading your book[†2] with great pleasure. It is full of matter to set one thinking, most charmingly suggested. I am reading it still.

To ARTHUR HELPS, 3 MARCH 1870

MS Benoliel Collection

5 Hyde Park Place W | Thursday Third March 1870

My Dear Helps

I am sure I need not tell you that I am much honored by the Queen's gracious message,[†3] and that I very highly esteem it. Will you kindly present my duty and thanks to the Queen and the assurance that I shall be proud and happy to wait upon Her Majesty whenever it may suit her pleasure.[†4]

Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

Arthur Helps Esquire

To MRS LESLIE,[†1] 7 MARCH 1870

Extract in Nial Devitt Books catalogue No. 43 (1998); MS 1 p.; dated 5 Hyde Park Place, 7 Mar 70; addressed Mrs Leslie. Address (envelope in Sotheby's catalogue, Dec 1955): Mrs Leslie | 22 Charles Street | Berkeley Square | W. PM 7 Mar 70.

Suggesting a day for a meeting. . . I really do not see . . . why I should wait for my daughter Mary's return, to answer your kind note. Shall it be (this looks as if I were asking you to "name the day" in a more tender reference) on Saturday week?

To H. SIMPSON,[†2] 7 MARCH 1870

Extract in Precieux Autographes catalogue, Dec 1981; MS (retranslated into English) 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill Place, 7 Mar 70; addressed H. Simpson at Liverpool.

He thanks Simpson for his letter and for a very clear account of a very difficult case.[†3] I am happy to be so skilfully brought to the fore.

To PERCY FITZGERALD, 9 MARCH 1870

Text from MDGH, 11, 436-7.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday, March 9th, 1870

My Dear Fitzgerald,[†4]

You make me very uneasy on the subject of your new long story here,[†5] by sowing your name broadcast in so many fields at once, and undertaking such an impossible amount of fiction at one time. Just as you are coming on with us, you have another story in progress in "The Gentleman's Magazine,"[†6] and another announced in "Once a Week."[†7] And so far as I know the art we both profess, it cannot be reasonably pursued in this way. I think the short story you are now finishing in these pages[†8] obviously marked by traces of great haste and small consideration; and a long story similarly blemished would really do the publication irreparable harm.

These considerations are so much upon my mind that I cannot forbear representing them to you, in the hope that they may induce you to take a little more into account the necessity of care and preparation, and some self-denial in the quantity done. I am quite sure that I write fully as much in your interest as in that of "All the Year Round."

Believe me, always faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To PERCY FITZGERALD, 11 MARCH 1870

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

5 Hyde Park Place W. | Friday Eleventh March 1870

My Dear Fitzgerald.[†1]

Of course the engagement between us is to continue, and I am sure you know me too well to suppose that I have ever had a thought to the contrary. Your explanation is (as it naturally would be, being yours) manly and honest; and I am both satisfied and hopeful.

Ever Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To CHARLES ELIOT NORTON, 8 and 11 MARCH 1870*

MS Houghton Library, Harvard. Address: Charles Eliot Norton Esqre | Villa d'Ecli | fuori di porta S. Gallo | Florence | Italy.

5 Hyde Park Place, London W.
Tuesday Eighth March 1870

My Dear Norton

I have been so closely occupied since I received your last letter, that I have had no time for my own friends and pleasures, and therefore have not written to you. I need not tell you how delighted we were to have your news of dear Mrs. Norton, and how often we think and speak of you all.

The weather here since the beginning of January (some half dozen days, at most, excepted) has been hideous. Foggy, gloomy, and bitterly cold. The East wind has been almost as bad in London as in (may I write it?) Boston. Mary has solemnized it by taking the measles from some unlucky boy in a country house. She had the disorder very lightly, but it has weakened her since it passed away.

The Readings have been splendidly successful. The last but one is tonight and the last of all this night week. They have not prevented my writing hard at my book, and I am well ahead. Furthermore, I am well in all respects. You will see changes at Gad's Hill when you next come there for some summer days; a horrible tendency to turn in workmen when I turn out myself, having seized upon me this time to an unprecedented extent.

Like you, I have been shocked beyond expression by Fields's house having published that vileness of Mrs. Stowe's.[†1] I have really felt impatient, uneasy, and compromised, by being in business relations with the establishment. And yet I can hardly believe, without reliable proof, that they sanctioned that newspaper statement[†2] you tell me of, of their being morally convinced of the truth of the statement. If they did, I should call it an unparalleled case of sham virtue and conceited lunacy.

Hayward[†3] told me the other day at the Athenaeum that Lord Broughton's (Hobhouse's)[†4] executors have decided to publish the Byron documents in their possession (understood to be quite exculpatory):[†5] holding, on examination and consideration that his injunction that a certain time should elapse before the publication of his papers, refers only to those which relate to affairs that came to his knowledge as a Cabinet Minister.

I lunched with the Leweses last Sunday, who were full of recollections of you and yours. Also the other day I dined with Motley,[†6] who lives in a wonderful house of Lord Yarborough's;[†7] something between the Louvre, a Genoese Palace, and the Arabian Nights.[†8] The United States are certainly most nobly represented while he is Minister in London; for (apart from good humour, good sense, and good taste, which were all conspicuous), the splendour of the entertainment was quite amazing. Some of our solemn Bigwigs seemed crushed by being so outdone.

I set in, when I started, for quite a long letter; but here comes in Dolby to take me down to the Hall—which I visit at one o'Clock on every Reading Day—and I must close. Mary and Georgina join with me in kindest love to Mrs. Norton, to your excellent mother, and to all the house. Dolby begs me to add his best regard.

Ever My Dear Norton | Your faithful and affectionate

CHARLES DICKENS

Friday Eleventh March. After all this is only posted now, as I had mislaid your address. I had (this is the last news) half an hour's interview with the Queen last Wednesday.[†9] She had signified in a note that she wished to "make my acquaintance", and we had a very interesting conversation. Again love.

To FREDERIC CHAPMAN, 12 MARCH 1870*

MS Johns Hopkins University.

5 Hyde Park Place W. | Saturday Twelfth March 1870

My Dear F.C.

I want a Library Edition copy of Copperfield[†1] prettily bound in Morocco with gilt edges (say blue or green for the prevailing color) to give a lady.[†2]

And I want a best copy of [†a]all my books[†a] bound by Hayday[†3] for a special purpose[†4] in red morocco and gold with gilt edges. I want it with as little delay as is consistent with the best workmanship. Please have it put in hand at once.

Faithfully Always

CD.

To S. L. FILDES, 13 MARCH 1870*

MS Beinecke Library, Yale University. Address: [S][†5]. L. Fildes Esquire | 52 Hunter Street | Brunswick Square | W. C.

5 Hyde Park Place W. | Thirteenth March 1870

My Dear Mr. Fildes

You will find me at home here any time tomorrow (Monday) between 10 and ½ past 3.

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

[S][†5]. L. Fildes Esquire

To FREDERIC CHAPMAN, 14 MARCH 1870

MS Dickens House.

5 Hyde Park Place S. W.

Monday Fourteenth March 1870

My Dear F.C.

Mr. Fildes has been with me this morning, and without complaining of Mr. Dalziel[†1] or expressing himself otherwise than as being obliged to him for his care in No. 1, represents that there is a brother student of his, a wood engraver, perfectly acquainted with his style and well understanding his meaning, who would render him better.[†2] I have replied to him that there can be no doubt that he has a claim beyond dispute to our employing whomsoever he knows will present him in his best aspect. Therefore we must make the change; the rather because the fellow-student in question has engraved Mr. Fildes most successful drawings hitherto.[†3]

Faithfully
CD.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 14 MARCH 1870*

MS Huntington Library.

H. P. P. | Monday Fourteenth March 1870

My Dearest Georgy

Enclosed is the envelope for Mrs. Yates's[†4] tickets.[†5] If they come, please send them round.

My throat is queer, and I am obliged to gargle and poultice!

Cheques enclosed

Ever affecy.
CD.

To GEORGE HOLME,[†1] 14 MARCH 1870*

MS Victoria & Albert Museum. Address: George Holme Esquire | 1 Cavendish House | Prince's Park | Liverpool.

5 Hyde Park Place, London W.
Monday Fourteenth March 1870

My Dear Sir

In acknowledging the receipt of both your letters (which has been a little delayed by my being at this address in London until the end of May), let me first assure you that I of course receive them in confidence.

Let me next congratulate you on your accession to fortune, and on your conscientious knowledge that you deserve it.

I have been much affected by what you tell me of the influence of my books upon your life and character. I shall not endeavour to express how deeply I feel such communication at any time, or what an inestimable reward it is to an earnest worker.

This brings me to your generous proposal; which separates you from all my other readers and correspondents.

I do not want money. If I did, I would take it, so offered.[†2] Emphatically, I do not. But I should deem it a most precious heirloom, if you would give me something for my dining table or sideboards, which would bear upon it the record that it was presented by one who had been cheered and stimulated by my writings, and who held them among his first remembrances when he became prosperous.[†3] No gift could be more acceptable to me; and I should live in it at my usefullest and best, not only among my children, but among their childrens' children, generations hence. I should regard it as my most valuable acquisition in life, and should be correspondingly proud of it.

It is difficult to turn from a subject so very near and dear to my soul, into general questions. But I must add that I perfectly agree with you in most of your opinions referring to the social welfare. I have always held Mr. Gladstone's Post Office Saving Bank scheme[†4] to be inestimably important and serviceable to the masses; and that thrift and self respect will ever go hand in hand among them, cannot be reasonably questioned. As to the manner in which, and the extent to which, shams and impostures are to be attacked, let me venture to impress on you that a writer of fiction has always to consider how he can tempt his readers into wholesome considerations into which they would not submit to be dragged, and that some of the deepest wounds he gives often come of what seem to be his lightest touches. Besides; in his Art as in all other things, the greater includes the less. If it be his happy privilege to awaken in many breasts a noble tone, and a scorn of all meanness and false pretence, both must comprehend, in time, a whole catalogue of individual meannesses and false pretences that he has never named in detail.

Believe me My Dear Sir | With many thanks
Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

George Holme Esquire.

To EDMUND YATES, [?15 MARCH 1870]

Mention in Yates, Recollections, p. 317. Date: Yates's message was to greet him at his farewell reading on 15 Mar. CD probably replied immediately after it.

Replying to his affectionate message.

To BARON BERNHARD TAUCHNITZ,[†1] 17 MARCH 1870

Extract in Curt Otto, Der Verlag Bernhard Tauchnitz, 1837-1912, Leipzig, 1912, p. 58.

Gad's Hill Place, March 17th, 1870.

The first number of my new story (to be completed in 12 numbers) will be published on the last day of this month. Your terms shall be mine, and I will most readily accept them if you will kindly state them.[†2]

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 17 MARCH 1870

Extract in Thomas Madigan, Autograph Letters, Manuscripts, Historical Documents, 1927; MS 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill Place, 17 Mar 70.

In reply to your obliging letter, I beg to inform you that I have already conceded the sole copyright of my new book for translation in Germany to Dr. Lehmann of Hamburg.[†3]

To FREDERIC CHAPMAN, 18 MARCH 1870*

MS University of Reading.

5 Hyde Park Place W | Friday Eighteenth March 1870

My Dear F.C.

I don't understand whether you send the enclosed[†4] to me as a proof of the general looking out for the new book, or to know what I think of the writer's[†5] request. If the latter, I should say that there will be no harm in granting it, as he seems to have been similarly trusted in another case, and not to have abused the trust.

Accounts?

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To W. HEPWORTH DIXON, 18 MARCH 1870*

MS Rosenbach Museum and Library.

5 Hyde Park Place W. | Friday Eighteenth March 1870

My Dear Dixon

Perhaps you will explain to Mr. Haydon[†1] that my injunction was, not to write a life of Mr. Townshend, but to publish his "Religious Opinions". That, I did, some months ago. He left me all his papers, including a very large correspondence. As they comprehended a vast number of delicate matters, and as I have no faith in the general discretion or reticence concerning such papers, I resolved that they should compromise nobody at any time, and destroyed them.[†2]

Faithfully Yours always

CD.

Heartiest thanks.

To PAUL FECHTER,[†3] [?20 MARCH 1870]

Text from Paul Féval, "Charles Dickens" (obituary), Le Gaulois, Supplement Litteraire, 13 June 70. Date: received on 21 Mar 70, according to Paul Féval's obituary of CD; presumably written the day before.

Mon petit ami Paul, je t'envoie mes adieux au public.[†4] C'est fini, je tâcherai d'écrire encore, mais je ne parlerai plus.

Ton vieil ami,
CHARLES.[†5]

To FREDERICK CHAPMAN, 21 MARCH 1870*

MS Morgan Library.

5 Hyde Park Place, W. | Monday Twenty First March | 1870

My Dear F. C.

What does this extraordinary letter[†1] mean? Pray let me see you sometime in the morning, as I must answer it by return.

Ever Yours
CD.

To S. LUKE FILDES, [21] MARCH 1870

MS Luke V. Fildes. Date: CD's error; Mon was 21 Mar in 1870. Address: S. L. Fildes Esquire | Hunter Street | Brunswick Square.

5 Hyde Park Place W. | Monday Twentieth March 1870

Dear Mr. Fildes

[†a][ ][†a]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MESSRS HARPER & BROTHERS, 22 MARCH 1870*

MS Benoliel Collection

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Twenty Second March, 1870

Dear Sirs

Your letter of the 5th. of this month[†2] is astounding to me, and I think will be equally so to you when you read what follows.

Last Autumn, when Mr. Fields was in England and was staying at my house, I told him (having altogether forgotten my contract with Fields Osgood and Co.) that I had always been highly satisfied with my transactions with you, and that I considered myself bound therefore to offer the early sheets of my new book to you; that I had a reason for declining to communicate with your London agent;[†3] but that I intended writing out to your house on the subject. Mr. Fields expressed his regret that I could not let him have the sheets, and said no more. But immediately on his return home to Boston and arrival there, he wrote me a letter, enclosing a copy of the agreement for these early sheets, which I had made[†1] (along with other agreements) with his House, long before I had the book in contemplation: saying that he had thought there was such a document existing, but had supposed he must be wrong. I at once wrote back acknowledging the agreement,[†2] and also wrote to you informing you of the mistake I had made.

I leave you to judge whether it is possible that Mr. Fields or his house can have been surprised by the correspondence between your house and me on this subject, when, at their request, you forwarded it to them:—as you inform me you did, in the letter to which I now reply.

You may be quite sure that if I should find myself `free' to make a new arrangement concerning advance sheets of The Mystery of Edwin Drood, at any time during the issuing of the book in numbers, I will at once send them to you, and place myself in your hands.[†3]

Dear Sirs | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Harper and Brothers

To WALTER THORNBURY, 22 MARCH 1870*

MS Beinecke Library, Yale University.

5 Hyde Park Place W.
Tuesday Twenty Second March 1870

My Dear Thornbury

I shall be proud and happy to accept the Dedication.[†4]

I am sorry you are aggrieved about the old soldier, but I hope the feeling may not last long. I particularly asked my son to represent to you that it unfortunately came out too like several other papers of the same kind, at various times published in the erring but repentant pages.[†1]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Walter Thornbury Esquire

To THOMAS HYDE HILLS, 23 MARCH 1870

Extract in American Prices Current, v, 1919, 21; dated 5 Hyde Park Place, 23 Mar 70; addressed Thomas Hyde Hills.

I am sorry you did not come into my room on the night of the last Reading.

To MISS LULU KENNEDY,[†2] 23 MARCH 1870*

MS Houghton Library, Harvard. Address: Miss Lulu Kennedy | Warren Street | Boston Highlands | Mass. | U.S. of America.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Twenty Third March 1870

My Dear Madam

If you knew how much I felt the arrival of your charming present[†3] and your affecting letter, you would have a far higher sense of the worth of both to my heart than your own modest nature could ever arrive at. It is impossible for me to thank you enough, but I thank you deeply, and shall always hold you in remembrance. I gratefully and affectionately reciprocate all your good wishes; and mine include not only yourself, but all who are—or may become—nearer and dear to you.

Believe me ever | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Lulu Kennedy

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 23 MARCH 1870

Text from N, 111, 766.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Twenty Third March 1870.

Dear Sir,

I should be heartily ashamed of myself for not having sooner acknowledged the receipt of your kind note and the enclosed amazing verses, if I had not the excuse of constant occupation to offer you.[†4] Even so armed, I feel a little sheepish.

H. Jones is a wonderful creature, and I feel truly obliged to you for your introduction to him; for I have had more than one good laugh over his wonderful account of himself, I assure you.

Believe me Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

What a pity you can't shut him up in one of the imperfectly filled cases in the Birmingham Shakespeare collection![†1]

To MISS ELISE WASTNEY,[†2] 23 MARCH 1870*

MS Beinecke Library, Yale University.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Twenty Third March 1870

Dear Madam

I beg you to accept my cordial thanks, for your kind remembrance in sending me a German account[†3] of myself and my writings, most flattering to my feelings. The occasion on which I had the pleasure of travelling with you on the North Kent Railway is perfectly fresh in my remembrance.

Believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Elise Wastney

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 24 MARCH 1870*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Twenty Fourth March 1870

My Dear Ouvry

At the end of April, Wills formally retires from "All The Year Round", and my son Charles takes his place.

On Wills's retirement, he will fall back on the Eighth share to which Mrs. Wills would be entitled in the event of his death; and another eighth share goes to my aforesaid son Charles from that date, said end of April.

Will you kindly consider (having, I think, the Agreement for the establishment of this Journal)[†4] what endorsement it will require, or what other deed may be necessary, to record these new arrangements?[†5]

And at the same time I should like a form of codicil to my will, leaving all my interest in the Journal, stereotypes, stock, &c to my son Charles twice aforesaid.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To BARON BERNHARD TAUCHNITZ, 24 MARCH 1870

Extract in Curt Otto, Der Verlag Bernhard Tauchnitz, 1837-1912, p. 58.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND, | March 24th, 1870.

The terms you kindly propose are quite satisfactory, and I accept them with pleasure.[†1] . . . You shall receive the first No. as soon after this as possible, and the succeeding Nos. regularly. . . . Believe me always faithfully your friend

CHARLES DICKENS

To THOMAS ADOLPHUS TROLLOPE, 24 MARCH 1870*

MS Stanford University Libraries. Address (envelope, MS Robson Lowe Ltd): Thomas Adolphus Trollope | Villa Trollope | Ricorbole | Firenze | Italy. PM London 24 Mar 70 and Firenze 27 Mar 70.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Twenty Fourth March 1870

My Dear Trollope.

I have this day paid into your bankers £31. .6. .0; being the odd £25 due on Veronica[†2] after repaying Chapman, and £6. .6. .0 due for the Swiss Song Festival.[†3]

I make no claim on the right of translation into German; but in this case, and in all others, leave the privilege with the writer, as being a writer myself.

In haste | Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To FREDERIC CHAPMAN, 26 MARCH 1870

MS Johns Hopkins University.

5 Hyde Park Place W.
Saturday Twenty Sixth March | 1870

My Dear F.C.

How is it that I cannot possibly get from you, a copy of David Copperfield, Library Edition, that I have now asked for three times?[†4]

Many thanks for the offer of the set of bound books, of which I return the specimen Volume. But the Queen knows that I ordered her set to be red and gold. Pray ask the binder when he sends them home here, to pack Vol 1, separately, so that I may write an inscription in it without disturbing all the rest.

And I want at once a set of the C.D. Edition, with the first Volume separate also.

No. 1 Edwin Drood may go at once to the Baron Tauchnitz Leipsig. And also to

Dr. Lehmann[†5] | Klostersteig | Pöseldorf | Hamburg.[†6]

To MRS ROSS CHURCH, 26 MARCH 1870*

MS W. A. Foyle.

5 Hyde Park Place, London W.
Saturday Twenty Sixth March 1870

My Dear Mrs. Church

I am here until the end of May, and shall be happy to see you when you come to town.

The friendly transaction of my business with Chapman and Hall would be impossible unless it was distinctly understood between us that they are free to act for themselves in reference to any introduction of mine, without offending me. I fear therefore that my good word in that quarter is far less powerful than you suppose. But you shall have it. And I think it will not be of the less worth if you leave me to speak it, and if you assume—as you may—that you are already known to Mr. Chapman, through my having personally mentioned you and your book[†1] to him, and entreated him to give his attention to both.

Believe me always | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Florence Marryat Church.

To JOHN FORSTER, [26 MARCH 1870]

Extract in F, XI, iii, 832. Date: 26 Mar 70, according to Forster. Address (envelope, MS Miss Storey): John Forster Esquire | Palace Gate House | Kensington | W. PM 26 Mar 70.

As my soverign desires that I should attend the next levee,[†2] don't faint with amazement if you see my name in that unwonted connection. I have scrupulously kept myself free for the second of April[†3] in case you should be accessible.

To ARTHUR HELPS, 26 MARCH 1870

MS Benoliel Collection.

5 Hyde Park Place W. | Saturday Twenty Sixth March 1870

My Dear Helps

The binder reports to me to day that he wants "another fortnight" for the completion of the set of my books which I have entrusted to him to bind for the Queen. Of course he must have it, or he will for ever believe that I spoilt his work by driving him.

En attendant, I send you for Her Majesty the first No. of my new story which will not be published until next Thursday the 31st. Will you kindly forward it to the Queen with my loyal duty and devotion? If Her Majesty should ever be sufficiently interested in the tale to desire to know a little more of it in advance of her subjects, you know how proud I shall be to anticipate the publication.

You will receive soon after this, a copy of your Godson's[†1] most portable edition of his writings, for yourself. I hope you may like it, and, reversing and abbreviating the Catechism, "do one thing in his name"[†2]:—read it.

[†a] In the accompanying box is a bundle of those choice little cigars duly dried in the summer heat of Gad's Hill. If you continue to like them and will impress on Mr. Carlin[†3] that you confide in his supplying you as he supplies me, I think you will rarely get any worse.[†a]

Faithfully Yours ever
CHARLES DICKENS

Arthur Helps Esquire

To CHARLES KENT, 26 MARCH 1870

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

5 Hyde Park Place W.
Saturday Twenty Sixth March 1870

My Dear Kent

I received both copies of The Sun, with the tenderest pleasure and gratification.[†4]

Everything that I can let you have in aid of the proposed record[†5] (which, of course, would be far more agreeable to me if done by you than by any other hand), shall be at your service. Dolby has all the figures relating to America, and you shall have for reference the books from which I read. They are afterwards going into Forster's Collection.[†6]

Can you come and dine tomorrow at half past 6. Only my people.

Ever Affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

To FREDERIC CHAPMAN, 27 MARCH 1870*

Ms Berg Collection.

5 Hyde Park Place W. | Sunday Twenty Seventh March 1870

My Dear F. C.

Mrs. Florence Marryat Church, one of Captain Marryat's daughters, has written to me for a note of introduction to you on behalf of herself and a novel she has in manuscript. I told her in reply, it was clearly impossible that you could manage your business, unless it was quite understood between us that you on all occasions regarded it from your own point of view, without giving me offence; and that she must not suppose my introduction to have any other influence than bespeaking attention for whomsoever I presented. I then added that I need give her no letter, as I would tell you of her, and she might consider herself introduced already. Will you bear this in mind when the lady besieges 193 Piccadilly.

Faithfully Yours always

CD.

To HENRY BICKNELL, 28 MARCH 1870*

MS University of California, Los Angeles. Address (envelope, MS Houghton Library, Harvard): Henry Bicknell Esquire | Cavendish House | Clapham Common | SW. PM 28 Mar 70.

5 Hyde Park Place W.
Monday Twenty Eighth March 1870

My Dear Bicknell

Let me cordially assure you that it gives me great pleasure to receive your kind letter, and that I shall be delighted to see Mrs. Bicknell again.

If next Wednesday fortnight, the 13th April, will suit your convenience I will book that day at the hour you mention — 7 o'Clock.

Believe me always | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Henry Bicknell Esquire

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 28 MARCH 1870*

MS Huntington Library.

5 Hyde Park Place W.
Monday Twenty Eighth March | 1870

My Dear Ouvry

I return the Agreement[†1] with my signature attached.

You are right in supposing that the new All The Year Round Agreement will not be wanted for execution until the end of April.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Frederic Ouvry Esquire

To HENRY DICKENS, 29 MARCH 1870

MS Henry C. Dickens.

5 Hyde Park Place W.
Tuesday Twenty Ninth March 1870

My Dear Harry

Enclosed is a cheque for £25. .0. .0. Your next Tuesday's subject[†1] is a good one. I would not lose the point that narrow minded fanatics who decry the Theatre and defame its artists, are absolutely the advocates of depraved and barbarous amusements. For wherever a good drama and a well regulated theatre decline, some distorted form of theatrical entertainment will infallibly arise in their place. In one of the last chapters of Hard Times, Mr. Sleary says something to the effect:- "People will be entertained thomehow, Thquire. Make the betht of uth, and not the wortht."[†2]

Ever affectionately
CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [29 MARCH 1870]

Extract in F, XII, i, 848. Date: 29 Mar 70, according to Forster.

My uneasiness and hemorrhage, after having quite left me, as I supposed, has come back with an aggravated irritability that it has not yet displayed. You have no idea what a state I am in to-day from a sudden violent rush of it; and yet it has not the slightest effect on my general health that I know of.

To FREDERIC CHAPMAN, [?LATE MARCH 1870]

Mention in To Emil Lehmann, 1 May 70. Date: no doubt shortly after 26 Mar, when he requested Chapman to send Lehmann a copy of Edwin Drood, No. 1.

Requesting Chapman to send Lehmann three copies of every No. of Edwin Drood.

To [J. S. LE FANU],[†3] 31 MARCH 1870*

MS Bodmer Library, Geneva.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Thirty First March 1870

My Dear Sir

I have waited until to day to reply to your letter (extremely acceptable to me), because I vaguely discerned a possible change in my serial-story arrangements for these pages. An opening has presented itself which might leave me at liberty some eight or nine months from this time.[†1] Will you kindly, at your leisure, let me know generally what the scheme of your story is, and will you excuse my hinting at the necessity of its being specially constructed for serial publication? Though that involves an additional difficulty, it certainly need not (so far as I know) be in the least injurious to the work as a whole.

It will give me the greatest pleasure to hear further from you on this subject.
Believe me My Dear Sir | always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Would your story be of the usual 3 Volume length?[†2]

To ANGUS FAIRBURNE,[†3] MARCH 1870

Mention in J. W. Jarvis catalogue, 1884; MS 1 p.; addressed Angus Fairburne; dated Mar 70.

April

To SAMPSON LOW, [?1 APRIL 1870]

Mention in next. Date: probably written same day.

To SHIRLEY BROOKS, 1 APRIL 1870*

MS New York Public Library.

5 Hyde Park Place W. | Friday First April, 1870

My Dear Shirley Brooks

I have written to Mr. Low, expressing my regret that I cannot comply with his request, backed as it is by my friend S. B.[†4] But I have told him what is perfectly true:—that I leave town for the peaceful following of my own pursuits, at the end of next month; that I have excused myself from filling all manner of claims, on the ground that the public engagements I could make for the season, were very few and were all made; and that I cannot bear hot rooms when I am at work. I have smoothed this as you would have me smooth it.

With your longing for fresh air, I can thoroughly sympathize. May you get it soon, and may you enjoy it and profit by it but half as much as I wish!

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS[†5]

To ARTHUR HELPS, 1 APRIL 1870

MS Huntington Library.

5 Hyde Park Place W | Friday First April 1870

My Dear Helps

I remember mysterious announcements in the newspapers, about people to be presented having to send their cards to the Lord Chamberlain's Office, "two clear days" before something. Is there any such obligation on your Godson? And at what time shall I call for you in Downing Street on Wednesday? A word on these two points will be esteemed as an act of charity by

Yours Ever
CD.

To GEORGE HOLME, 1 APRIL 1870*

MS Victoria & Albert Museum. Address: George Holme Esquire | Cavendish House | Prince's Park | Liverpool.

THE ATHENÆUM | Friday First April, 1870

My Dear Sir

Messrs. Hunt and Roskell sent to my house yesterday, the two most beautiful objects which you ordered of them as a present to me.[†1] I cannot sufficiently express to you how highly and proudly I shall always prize them, or with what affectionate and reverent care they will be preserved in my family,[†2] in remembrance of my books and one of their readers, long after I can write no more.

You may be sure that Messrs. Hunt and Roskell have no hint of your name from me. Knowing you to be sensitive on the point, I even abstained from calling on you when you were at the Grosvenor, to the end that I might truly say that I had never seen the generous donor of the gifts. I hope however that this precaution may henceforth be dispensed with, and that we may become personal friends. It would afford me uncommon interest and gratification.

Thanking you with my whole heart, I shall always remain

My Dear Sir | Your faithful Friend
CHARLES DICKENS

George Holme Esquire

To THE LORD CHAMBERLAIN'S OFFICE, 2 APRIL 1870*

MS Dickens House.

5 Hyde Park Place W. | Saturday Second April, 1870

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to the Authorities at the Lord Chamberlain's office, and trusts he is not mistaken in deeming it necessary to forward the enclosed note, and instruct his messenger to wait for two cards.

To SIR RODERICK MURCHISON,[†1] 3 APRIL 1870*

MS Dickens House.

5 Hyde Park Place W | Sunday Third April 1870

My Dear Sir Roderick

I was horrified to find on coming home last night, that I was pre-engaged for the 15th. In my eagerness to accept your welcome invitation, I quite forgot it. But coming face to face with my inexorable Diary, there I discovered the record of the fact.

Forgive me and pity me! And above all Believe me

Your faithful friend and admirer

CHARLES DICKENS

Sir Roderick Murchison

To PERCY FITZGERALD, 4 APRIL 1870

Text from N, III, 770.

5 Hyde Park Place | Monday Fourth April, 1870

My Dear Fitzgerald,

It strikes me that a quaintly expressive title for such a book would be:

The Doctor's Mixture.[†2]

What do you think of it?[†3]

Ever faithfully

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To F.C. BEARD, 5 APRIL 1870

MS Dickens House.

5 Hyde Park Place | Tuesday Fifth April 1870

My Dear Beard

I am getting better, "nicely," as the Nurse's phrase is. Tomorrow I am going to the Levee,[†4] and shall be absent (in a Fancy Dress) at our usual time. Let us say Friday, if convenient to you; we can confirm or correct our appointment, on Thursday night.

Ever Faithfully

CD

To GEORGE HODDER,[†1] 5 APRIL 1870*

MS Walter T. Spencer.

GAD'S HILL PLACE | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT

Tuesday Fifth April 1870[†2]

My Dear Sir

I have just received your book,[†3] and hasten to send you my best thanks for it. I am so certain that you cannot have used my name in any way in the least distasteful to me, that I assure you you were heartily welcome to introduce it, before I have had time to cut your leaves.[†4]

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

George Hodder Esquire

To W.W. JONES, [6 APRIL 1870]

Envelope in Christie's catalogue, Dec 1986. Address: Mr. Walter Jones | The Savings Bank | Hercules Buildings | Lambeth | SE. Date: PM 6 Apr 70.

To MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL, [? EARLY APRIL 1870]

Mention in To Lehmann, 1 May 70. Date: presumably early Apr, after publication of Edwin Drood, No. 1, 31 Mar.

To W. W. JONES, 7 APRIL 1870

Extract in John Heise List No. 2460; MS 1 p.; dated Office of AYR, 7 Apr 70; addressed Mr. Walter Jones.

Your receipt of my last subscription[†5] has come safely to hand, and I shall be happy to correct my remarks[†6] for you if you will send me a report of them as you propose.

To S. R. TOWNSHEND MAYER,[†1] 7 APRIL 1870*

MS Iowa University Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Seventh April 1870

Dear Sir

I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, returning my additional subscription of Five Pounds in aid of the Leigh Hunt Memorial.[†2] I fully appreciate the trouble you have kindly taken in the matter, and the difficulties with which you have had to contend; and, as a friend to the cause, I beg to thank you.

Believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

S. R. Townshend Mayer Esquire

To K. R. H. MACKENZIE,[†3] 8 APRIL 1870

MS Houghton Library, Harvard. Address: Kenneth R. H. Mackenzie Esqre. | 8 Tavistock Place | Tavistock Square | W.C.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Eighth April 1870

Dear Sir

I received, and perused with much interest, the book you were so kind as to send me many weeks ago.[†4] I fully believed that I had thanked you for it, and I entreat you to excuse my seeming remissness.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Kenneth R. H. Mackenzie Esquire

To THE HON. MRS RICHARD WATSON, 8 APRIL 1870

MS Huntington Library.

THE ATHENÆUM | Friday Eighth April 1870

My Dear Mrs. Watson

With the greatest pleasure I engage myself (and Mary) to you for the Second of May. You cannot too completely make me one of your family party. The dear old Rockingham days are always fresh in my heart.

Believe me | Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To HERBERT BYNG,[†1] 10 APRIL 1870

Mention in Parke-Bernet catalogue No. SN 1054; MS 1 p.; addressed Herbert Byng; dated Wednesday 10 Apr 70.

To SAMUEL CARTWRIGHT, 11 APRIL 1870*

Text from transcript, British Dental Association.

5 Hyde Park Place, W. | Monday Eleventh April 1870.

My Dear Cartwright

I have been working hard out of town since Friday, or I would have written sooner.

It will give me the greatest pleasure to dine with you on Friday, the 29th.

Ever faithfully yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS ELLIOT, 12 APRIL 1870*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

5 Hyde Park Place W. | Tuesday Twelfth April 1870

My Dear F.

I am very sorry to say that Bird's Eye Views of Central Italy will not do for A. Y. R. The thing has been done again and again. And you fall into the mistake, common to ten thousand contributors, of supposing that because we made a success with the Crow,[†2] the thing is to be imitated. On the contrary, it is to be, for that very reason, expressly avoided, and something else tried for. This has been an article of my Editorial faith these twenty years.

I have had a hard day's work, and am obliged to avoid writing after dinner or by candlelight:—under both of which conditions I write now. You hate me, for the moment, of course. Try to get over it.

I never for a moment disputed your good faith in the Ghost Stories,[†3] be certain.

Ever affectionately
CD.

To GEORGE BRUNT, 13 APRIL 1870

Text from N, III, 771.

5 Hyde Park Place, W. | Wednesday, Thirteenth April, 1870

I think your idea, Brunt, of partitioning the Vinery and so getting our hot-house a very good one. I have begged Messrs. Cottam and Co.[†4] to send down to make an estimate for the cost of the work, which I have told them you will describe exactly. Remember that I want to avoid any unnecessary expense, and that what we want, is, merely to have efficient means of preparing plants for the conservatory.[†1]

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 14 APRIL 1870*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Fourteenth April 1870

My Dear Ouvry

I return the draft[†2] with some slight alterations.

The sole objects of the deed are: To confirm Wills in his eighth share, and no management. To invest my son C.D. junr. with the business management, and another eighth share while he retains such management. To give me my six eighths, and the supreme authority over the whole concern, literary and otherwise.

Ever Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

To W.P. FRITH, 16 APRIL 1870

MS Beinecke Library, Yale University.

5 Hyde Park Place W. | Saturday Sixteenth April 1870

My Dear Frith

I shall be happy to go on Wednesday Evening, if convenient.[†3]

You please me with what you say of my new Illustrator, of whom I have great hopes.

Faithfully Yours Ever
CHARLES DICKENS

W. P. Frith Esquire

To GEORGE HOLSWORTH, 16 APRIL 1870*

Text from John Heise Catalogue No. 44 (1911); MS 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill Place,[†4] 16 Apr 70; addressed Holsworth.

Dear Holsworth

Please to send the inclosed order for a cheque book round to Coutt's Bank[†5] on Monday morning, and then to send the cheque book up to me here.

Faithfully yours,
C.D.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 16 APRIL 1870

Mention in Sotheran catalogue No. 670 (Mar 1907); MS 1 p.; dated 5 Hyde Park Place, 16 Apr 70.

To J. T. FIELDS, 18 APRIL 1870

MS Wellesley College.

5 Hyde Park Place, London W
Monday Eighteenth April 1870

My Dear Fields

I have been hard at work all day until post time, and have only leisure to acknowledge the receipt, the day before yesterday, of your note containing such good news of Fechter; and to assure you of my undiminished regard and affection.

We have been doing wonders with No. 1 of Edwin Drood. It has very, very, far outstripped every one of its predecessors.[†1]

Georgina has just now heard from Mrs. Fields: to whom my faithful love.

Ever Your affectionate Friend
CHARLES DICKENS

To J. B. BUCKSTONE, 20 APRIL 1870*

MS Cleveland Public Libraries.

5 Hyde Park Place, London W | Wednesday Twentieth April 1870

My Dear Buckstone

This is my address until the first of June.

I trust you may fully rely upon me for the 16th.[†2] Whatever you want me to do, I will do, as like a faithful trustee as possible.[†3]

Faithfully Yours Always
CHARLES DICKENS

To DR CHARLES MACKAY, 21 APRIL 1870

MS Dickens House.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Twenty First April 1870

My Dear Mackay

I have placed "God's Acre".[†4]

The prose paper, The False Friend,[†5] has lingered, because it seems to me that the idea is to be found in an introduced story of mine (called The Baron of Grogzwig) in Pickwick.[†1]

Be pleasant with the Scottish people, in handling Johnson,[†2] because I love them.

Ever Faithfully

CD

To MESSRS NEWCOMB, 21 APRIL 1870*

MS F. & H. Newcomb.

5 Hyde Park Place, London W[†3]
Thursday Twenty First April 1870

Messrs. Newcomb

Please to make my Coachman a new suit of livery as before, and to send it up to this address as soon as you conveniently can.

CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS CONSTANCE CROSS,[†4] 22 APRIL 1870*

MS Dickens House. Address: Miss Constance Cross | Ashstead | Epsom.

Friday Twenty Second April, 1870
5 Hyde Park Place London W.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Miss Cross, and begs to let her know that he will be at home, in town, on Thursday next at 5 o'Clock. He trusts he addresses Miss Cross correctly, but the lady gives him no means of avoiding a mistake in this respect.[†5]

To J.H. NIGHTINGALE, 22 APRIL 1870

MS Dickens House.

5 Hyde Park Place, London, W
Friday Twenty Second April 1870

My Dear Mr. Nightingale

Beware of London Correspondents, for they lead into ditches! See what comes of my having taken the house of an old friend for a few weeks, and of my daughter's having had A party![†6]

[†a] Some few weeks ago I ventured to hint that a great novelist had not been invited to Court for nothing. It now transpires that the popular writer in question has taken the Hyde-Park mansion of an ex-Cabinet Minister[†1] for a town residence, and that his "at homes" are attended by the leading members of the aristocracy.[†a]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS BENZON,[†2] 23 APRIL 1870*

MS Mrs Miriam Green.

5 Hyde Park Place W
Saturday Twenty Third April 1870

My Dear Mrs. Benzon

It is very kind of you to offer me so wide a margin, but I am truly sorry to add that it comes too late. On the last day of May I leave this for Gad's Hill; and every engagement that I can possibly make in the meantime, is made. Even as my list stands, it is difficult of reconcilement with my work; and my principle has always been to stick to that, like a Spartan, and compliment myself (with an ill will) for my self denial.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To CHARLES KENT, 25 APRIL 1870†

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: Private | Charles Kent Esquire | "The Sun" Office | Strand | W.C.

Monday Morning Twenty Fifth April, 1870

My Dear Kent

[†a] Starting off for a long country walk, after very hard work, I put this in my pocket to post at some airy receiving-house on the road. I address it to your office; not being quite sure that I correctly remember your private address.[†a†3]

I received your book[†4] with the greatest pleasure, and heartily thank you for it. It is a volume of a highly prepossessing appearance and a most friendly look. I felt as if I should have taken to it at sight; even (a very large even) though I had known nothing of its contents, or of its author!

For the last week I have been most perseveringly and ding-dong-doggedly at work, making headway but slowly. The spring always has a restless influence over me; and I weary, at any season, of this London dining out, beyond expression; and I yearn for the country again. This is my excuse for not having written to you sooner. Besides which, I had a baseless conviction that I should see you at the office last Thursday. Not having done so, I fear you must be worse, or no better? If you can let me have a report of yourself, pray do. [†a] I hope all is ready for the second of May,[†1] and that London will burst on the first into an eruption of posters. You could not have begun at a better time, I trust.

Believe me ever | Affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS[†a]

Charles Kent Esquire

To ARTHUR HELPS, 26 APRIL 1870*

MS Mrs Noelle Campbell-Sharp.

5 Hyde Park Place W | Tuesday Twenty Sixth April 1870

My Dear Helps

I have but just now come back from Gad's Hill, or I should have written to you. We expect you at dinner presently, and wouldn't miss you on any consideration.

Ever Faithfully
CD.

To J. B. COOKE,[†2] 27 APRIL 1870

Text from printed leaflet, Sotheby catalogue June 1955.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday, Twenty-seventh April, 1870.

Sir,

I beg to acknowledge the receipt of the lines of which you have done me the honour to make me the subject,[†3] and to assure you that I thank you, and that I have read them with high gratification.

Faithfully yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Joseph B. Cooke

To S. L. FILDES, 27 APRIL 1870*

MS Beinecke Library, Yale University. Address: S. L. Fildes Esquire | 52 Hunter Street | Brunswick Square | W.C.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Twenty Seventh April 1870

Dear Mr. Fildes

I shall be happy to see you at my office in Wellington Street tomorrow, at any time that may best suit you between 11 and 3.

[a[

]a]

Suggestions for No. 5[1]
The proposal at the Sun Dial
For one subject; and
The recognition between Mr. Crisparkle and a strange gentleman[2]
For the other.

To D. F. MAC CARTHY,[3] 27 APRIL 1870*

MS Longfellow House. Address: Denis Florence Mac Carthy Esqre. | &c &c &c | 74 Upper Gardiner Street | Dublin.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Twenty Seventh April 1870

Dear Sir

I have accidentally omitted to thank you for your highly interesting translation from Calderon,[4] and your no less interesting remembrance of my friend Long-fellow.[5] Let me repair the omission, though tardily, and offer you my best acknowledgments.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Denis Florence Mac Carthy Esquire

To C. H. WIGRAM,[6] 27 APRIL 1870

MS Huntington Library.

5 Hyde Park Place W | Wednesday Twenty Seventh April 1870

Dear Sir

Having been out of town for the last two or three days, I had not the pleasure of receiving your letter (enclosing one from my esteemed friend Madame Sainton), until last night.

I am most reluctantly obliged to assure you that I cannot comply with the request you do me the honor to prefer. But I receive so many to the same purpose, and an accumulation of such engagements is so incompatible with the quiet pursuit of my own avocations, that, with the exception of the Theatrical Fund (to which I stand pledged) I can attend no more public dinners this year. I have excused myself in many meritorious cases on this ground, and go back into the country next month expressly to avoid hot rooms and speechmaking.

I sincerely regret my inability to render service in a good cause, but I need not tell you that the efficient discharge of duties already undertaken must over-ride all other considerations

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

C. Hampden Wigram Esquire

To C. J. BAKER,[†1] 28 APRIL 1870

Mention in Myers & Co. catalogue, Oct 1952; MS (3rd person) 1 p.; dated 28 Apr 70; addressed Mr Baker.

Regretting that he cannot come to the Festival of the Sons of the Clergy.

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 28 APRIL 1870*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Twenty Eighth April 1870

My Dear Ouvry

All three parties to the Deed[†2] will be here next Thursday the 5th. May at a quarter past one. Will you come round and attest its execution[†3] and take a morsel of lunch, on your way to Coutts's?

Faithfully Yours ever
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [29 APRIL 1870]

Extracts in F, XII, i, 848 and n. Date: both extracts part of same letter of 29 Apr 70, according to Forster.

Like you at Ely, so I at Higham, had the shock of first reading at a railway station of the death of our old dear friend and companion.[†4] What the shock would be, you know too well. It has been only after great difficulty, and after hardening and steeling myself to the subject by at once thinking of it and avoiding it in a strange way, that I have been able to get any command over it or over myself. If I feel at the time that I can be sure of the necessary composure, I shall make a little reference to it at the Academy to-morrow.[†1] I suppose you won't be there.

It is very strange—you remember I suppose?—that the last time we spoke of him together, you said that we should one day hear that the wayward life into which he had fallen[†2] was over, and there an end of our knowledge of it.

May

To FREDERIC CHAPMAN, [1 MAY 1870]

Mention in To Dr Emil Lehmann, 1 May 70. Date: no doubt written same day.

Repeating his request to Chapman to send Lehmann three copies of every No. of Drood.

To LORD HOUGHTON, 1 MAY 1870*

MS Houghton Papers, Trinity College, Cambridge.

5 Hyde Park Place W | Sunday First May, 1870

My Dear Lord Houghton

My daughter and I are delighted to book ourselves for Tuesday the 24th. Believe me

Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

To DR EMIL LEHMANN, 1 MAY 1870*

MS Mrs Miriam Green.

5 Hyde Park Place, London W | First May 1870

Dear Sir

Long before receiving your letter of the 21st. of April, I had given my publishers written directions to send you 3 copies of every No. of Edwin Drood. As they seem not to have done so, I now repeat those directions to them.

There are no proof sheets ready in advance.

I return the two papers you enclosed me, signed.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Dr. Emil Lehmann

To MRS DALLAS, 2 MAY 1870

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Second May 1870

My Dear Mrs. Dallas

In addition to my usual engagements, I have been (and still am), in attendance on a sick friend at some distance.[†1] Thus I have missed your notes.[†2] I will be at home tomorrow (Tuesday) morning at ½ past 10.

Faithfully Yours
CD[†3]

To W. F. POLLOCK,[†4] 2 MAY 1870

MS Dickens House.

5 Hyde Park Place W | Monday Second May 1870

My Dear Pollock

I have only accepted two invitations to breakfast, in my life; one, from Rogers[†5] five and twenty years ago;[†6] one from the Premier, for this very week.[†7] I can not go out in the morning, and afterwards do anything that day. You know that men can only do their work according to their various organizations and habits; and I hope you will excuse my weakness.

Believe me | Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. F. Pollock Esquire

To MRS POLLOCK,[†1] 2 MAY 1870

Text from MDGH, 11, 440

5 Hyde Park Place, W | Monday May 2nd, 1870

My Dear Mrs. Pollock,

Pray tell the illustrious Philip van Artevelde,[†2] that I will deal with the nefarious case in question[†3] if I can. I am a little doubtful of the practicability of doing so, and frisking outside the bounds of the law of libel. I have that high opinion of the law of England generally, which one is likely to derive from the impression that it puts all the honest men under the diabolical hoofs of all the scoundrels. It makes me cautious of doing right; an admirable instance of its wisdom!

I was very sorry to have gone astray from you that Sunday; but as the earlier disciples entertained angels unawares,[†4] so the later often miss them haphazard.

Your description of La Font's[†5] acting is the complete truth in one short sentence: Nature's triumph over art;[†6] reversing the copy-book axiom! But the Lord deliver us from Plessy's[†7] mechanical ingenuousness!!

And your petitioner will ever pray.

And ever be,

Faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To CHARLES DICKENS JNR, [3 MAY 1870]

Envelope only, MS Private. Address: Charles Dickens Esquire | "All The Year Round office" | 26 Wellington Street | W. C. PM 3 May 70.

To GEORGE DOLBY, 3 MAY 1870

MS Huntington Library. On mourning paper.

5 Hyde Park Place | Tuesday Third May 1870[†8]

My Dear Dolby.

I think there is at last a plain practicable service that you can render Mrs. Dallas. Look at Mr. Hingston's proposal[†9] which she will show you. If you will reduce it to a plain agreement with him in writing and with the business details adjusted between yourself and him, you will do all that is to be done.

Faithfully Ever

CD.

To ARTHUR HELPS, 3 MAY 1870

MS Benoliel Collection

5 Hyde Park Place W. | Tuesday Third May 1870.

My Dear Helps.

I am going to get a breath of fresh air until Thursday morning, and in the meantime gasp for friendly information on the following points.

I have a card of invitation to the Queen's Ball.[†1] No answer necessary, I suppose?

What dress? Court, or private?

Do you go? If so will you dine here that day—quite alone—at any time you like best?

That's all.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To MISS CONSTANCE CROSS, 4 MAY 1870

MS British Library. Address: Miss Constance Cross | Ashstead | near Epsom.

5 Hyde Park Place | Wednesday Fourth May, 1870

Dear Miss Cross

I write to you most unwillingly, for I know that the contents of my letter cannot be acceptable to you.

Besides that your river tale is a weak repetition of the form of your printed story,[†2] I find absolutely nothing in it but the manner of the story without an End. The German manner will not carry the feeble matter. If you will consider the River-story apart from that manner, I think you will find it extremely commonplace with nothing in the way of character or incident to support it. Your Ice King, and the Ermine Robe, and the like, reappear; and there is a vast deal too much proclamation of poetry, without the appearance of the reality after the trumpets have been blown. All the stock in trade of the miserable little books of verses that continually accumulate on my table, reappears in no new form:— I call them miserable, because they make me so, in the evidences they present of a mistaken vocation and its attendant inevitable bitterness of disappointment. The true romance or poetry of human life or external nature is not to be found so as to awaken a response in any reasonable breast, by crying "Lo here! Lo there! See where it comes! Look where it goes. This is it! That is it! The other is it!"—but in unaffectedly presenting it, with the art of seeming to leave it to present itself. The River, on the contrary, is an extremely conscious river, with a great deal to say about what it has to tell, and with very little to tell after all is said.

If I consulted my own ease and my own wish to be agreeable to you, by disguising what I sincerely believe to be the self evident truth, I should be equally false to you and to Lord Lytton's presentation of you. You will get nowhere by the road you are now pursuing. What qualifications you may have for attaining some amount of literary success by any other track, I cannot pretend to know, having only the pleasure of knowing that you are modest and earnest in your aspirations. But you are now in a worn out way that never was a very firm one, and has been trodden into a mere Slough of Despond.†1

Will you claim your manuscript of me by any conveyance that you prefer.

Believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Constance Cross

To E.P. HINGSTON,†2 [?EARLY MAY 1870]

Mention in H.T. Taverner and [J.C. Hotten], CD: The Story of his Life, p. 320. Date: shortly after To Dolby, 3 May 70.

Returning an Agreement Hingston had drafted for Mrs Dallas's forthcoming visit to America†3 with his annotations and suggestions.†4

To SIR JOHN BOWRING,†5 5 MAY 1870

Text from MDGH 111, 295.

Gad's Hill, | Thursday, 5th May, 1870.

My Dear Sir John,

I send you many cordial thanks for your note, and the very curious drawing accompanying it. I ought to tell you, perhaps, that the opium smoking I have described, I saw (exactly as I have described†6 it, penny ink-bottle†7 and all) down in Shadwell†1 this last autumn.†2 A couple of the Inspectors of Lodging-Houses knew the woman and took me to her as I was making a round with them to see for myself the working of Lord Shaftesbury's†3 Bill.†4

Believe me, always faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To FREDERIC CHAPMAN, 5 MAY 1870*

MS Chas. Sawyer Ltd.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Fifth May 1870

My Dear F. C.

Schloss†5 is an Ass, and is always making the most preposterous mistakes. I have closely enquired into the circumstances, and I find it indisputable that the No. he saw here was bought at a bookseller's, a whole day after you had published it!

Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

To LADY MOLESWORTH, 5 MAY 1870

Text in N, 111, 775, checked from MS Sothebys, July 1987.

5 Hyde Park Place, W
Thursday Fifth May 1870

My Dear Lady Molesworth

I have got into such a horrible state of complicated and constant engagements for this month, that the best thing I can do, in answer to your kind note, is to ask you to name your own day—and any day—in June. I strike as to all other engagements at the end of this month of May.

Of course I have booked the 29th. in capital letters.

Many thanks for our airy French friend; perhaps she IS just a trifle gay.

Ever affecy. Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

P.S. I wish you had been at the Academy Dinner. My having been out of town since, is the cause of this tardy reply to yours.

To MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL, 7 MAY 1870

MS Berg Collection.

5 Hyde Park Place W. | Saturday Night Seventh May 1870

My Dear Sirs

I return you the sheets of The Child's History for press.[†1]

I beg you to be so good as send this note on to Messrs. Virtue and Cos.[†2] reader, in order that I may expressly thank him for his great care and attention. I have observed all his notes, and have found them all perfectly correct: with the exception that he has not borne in mind that the double-spelling of Agincourt and Azincourt is explained in the text.[†3] It is there stated (when the battle is described) that the latter was the French name, but that our English historians changed it into the former. I accordingly use the former, ever afterwards.

I am sincerely sensible of the Reader's pains, and am truly obliged to him.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Chapman and Hall

To ARTHUR HELPS, 7 MAY 1870*

MS Benoliel Collection.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Seventh May 1870

My Dear Helps

Again many thanks.

I sent you the Queen's letter,[†4] in compliance with your generally expressed wish, dating some time back.

Look over leaf for a suggested title or two.

Ever Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

[†a]Brevities
Derived from Reading and Reflection
(or without the second line altogether)
A Tesselated Pavement

— XII - 523 —

Of Many Little Pieces.
Short Cuts
To Several Destinations

I think the first title—one word—the best. In fact, hardly to be improved upon.[†a†1]

To [ARTHUR HELPS], 8 MAY 1870*

MS Johns Hopkins University.

Second Letter of this date[†2]

H.P.P.[†3] | Sunday Eighth May 1870.

Finger-Posts
To Short Cuts.[†4]

To THE HON. MRS PERCY FITZGERALD, 9 MAY 1870

MS Beinecke Library, Yale University.

ATHENÆUM | Monday Ninth May, 1870

My Dear Mrs. FitzGerald

I have delayed answering your kind note, on the chance of discerning some loophole in my engagements for to night. But I am sorry to say I have got into that complicated state of engagements that my life is positively made wretched. This almost always happens in the last month of any term of stay that we make in town, but this year it is worse than ever. I can do nothing that I want to do, and can go nowhere to please myself. Pray accept a dismal absentee's best wishes for a great success to night, and give FitzGerald my kindest regard.

To crown my distresses, I write with a steelpen (which I can never use) closely hemmed in on each side by a talkative parson of disagreeable opinions.

Believe me always | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 9 MAY 1870*

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Monday Ninth May 1870

My Dear Ouvry.

Please book Monday the 23rd. at 7 sharp, as an engagement to

Yours ever
CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS E. M. WARD,[†1] II MAY 1870

MS W. A. Foyle. Address: Mrs. Edward Ward | Kent Villa | Lansdowne Road | Notting Hill | W.

5 Hyde Park Place W.
Wednesday Eleventh May 1870

My Dear Mrs. Ward

I grieve to say that I am literally laid by the heels and incapable of dining with you tomorrow. A neuralgic affection of the foot, which usually seizes me about twice a year, and which will yield to nothing but days of fomentation and horizontal rest, set in last night and has caused me very great pain ever since, and will too clearly be no better until it has had its usual time in which to wear itself out. I send my kindest regard to Ward, and beg to be pitied,

Believe me | Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS HENRY AUSTIN, [12 MAY 1870]

Mention in next. Date: written same day.

Sending her a cheque.[†2]

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 12 MAY 1870

Text from N, 111, 776.

London | 12 May 1870[†3]

My Dearest Georgy,

I think I am on the whole better to-day. Last night I got a good night's rest under the influence of Laudanum but it hangs about me very heavily today. I have had the poultices constantly changed, hot and hot, day and night since I left. Will you send the enclosed cheque to Letitia—no on second thought, I will post it to her straight.

Those little risings that we noticed on the foot were blisters caused by very hot applications. They have much enlarged since. I shall appear at H. P. P. after office work tomorrow, all is understood here as to your change of day. Ever my Dearest Georgy, your most affectionate

C.D.[†4]

To GEORGE BRUNT, 13 MAY 1870

Text from N, 111, 776.

5 Hyde Park Place, W.
Friday, Thirteenth May, 1870

I enclose a cheque, Brunt, for Seven Pounds.

I will speak to Miss Mary at dinner time to-day about the Hanging Baskets for the conservatory.

You may get some hardy Ferns from Illmans[†1] for the rock work. Be careful not to get more than are absolutely necessary, as the garden expenses are becoming excessively heavy.

Miss Hogarth tells me that you want 18 more Mrs. Pollock Geraniums[†2] and 12 Lavender Plants. You may get them from Illmans too.

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 13 MAY 1870*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Thirteenth May 1870

My Dear Ouvry

Can you give me a call here, as you go down to Coutts's to day?[†3] I would come to you but for a Neuralgic foot.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To MESSRS FIELDS, OSGOOD & CO., 14 MAY 1870

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.

Saturday Fourteenth May 1870

My Dear Sirs

I lose not a moment in replying to yours of the 29th. of last month.[†4] I need not assure you of my cordial desire to meet your wishes if it were reasonably possible, and need not remind you that I had no idea of your intended plan of republishing Edwin Drood in America, when we engaged for the proof sheets.

The first I heard of that design in detail, was from Mr. Ticknor[†5] in London. To whom I immediately pointed out that, if pursued, it would entail upon me the loss of copyright in England of any parts of the book, first published in America. I said to him, "Imagine a Copyright in Pickwick, with no Copyright in the Trial!" And I might have followed the absurdity into a Nickleby copyright excluding the Yorkshire School or the Country actors; or a Dombey copyright, excluding the child's death; or a Copperfield copyright without the young married couple or the storm. I told him that it was my business to know how the law stood in such a case, and that I was certain of the English Copyright being lost as to any portion of Edwin Drood the publication of which should first take place in America, and that therefore I must positively prohibit such anticipation. I also told him that I knew there were people enough here, always on the watch, who would instantly avail themselves of my making so fatal a mistake.

Nevertheless, on the recipt of your letter to which I now reply,[†1] I at once placed it in the hands of my solicitor Mr. Ouvry. I stated the case to him as I now state it to you, and previously stated it to Mr. Ticknor; and I added the assurance (really not necessary in his case, for he knew it before) that I wanted to do the utmost for you that I could, without the least reference to any extra gain, consistently with the safety of my property. I enclose you his reply. You will see that it is quite final and conclusive.

My Dear Sirs

Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Fields Osgood and Co.

To J. B. BUCKSTONE, 15 MAY 1870

MS University of Texas.

Sunday Fifteenth May 1870 | 5 Hyde Park Place W.

My Dear Buckstone

I send a duplicate of this note to your private address at Sydenham,[†2] in case it should miss you at the Haymarket.[†3]

For a few years past, I have been liable, at wholly uncertain and incalculable times, to a severe attack of Neuralgia in the foot, about once in the course of a year. It began in an injury to the finer muscles or nerves, occasioned by over-walking in deep snow. When it comes on, I cannot stand, and can bear no covering whatever on the sensitive place. One of these seizures is upon me now. Until it leaves me, I could no more walk into St. James's Hall than I could fly in.[†4]

I hope you will present my duty to the Prince, and assure His Royal Highness that nothing short of my being (most unfortunately) disabled for the moment, would have prevented my attending as a Trustee of the Fund, at the dinner,[†5] and warmly expressing my poor sense of the great and inestimable service His Royal Highness renders to a most deserving Institution by so very kindly commending it to the public.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

J. B. Buckstone Esquire

To S. A. HART[†1] [MAY 1870]

Mention in Reminiscences of Solomon Alexander Hart, RA, ed. Alexander Brodie, priv. printed, 1882, p. 106. Date: presumably within a few weeks of Maclise's death on 25 Apr.

Declining to start a memorial for Maclise.[†2]

To JOHN FORSTER, [16 MAY 1870]

Extract in F, XII, i, 849. Date: 16 May, according to Forster.

I am sorry to report that, in the old preposterous endeavour to dine at preposterous hours and preposterous places, I have been pulled up by a sharp attack in my foot. And serve me right. I hope to get the better of it soon, but I fear I must not think of dining with you on Friday. I have cancelled everything in the dining way for this week,[†3] and that is a very small precaution after the horrible pain I have had and the remedies I have taken.

To THE DINNER COMMITTEE, ROYAL GENERAL THEATRICAL FUND, [?16 MAY 1870]

Telegram mentioned in H. T. Taverner and [J. C. Hotten], CD: The Story of his Life, p. 321. Date: sent at "the last moment", probably on day of Dinner (see last).

Saying he was too unwell to attend the Dinner.

To W. R. S. RALSTON, 16 MAY 1870†

Text from transcript in Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Sixteenth May, 1870

My dear Sir,

I am truly obliged to you for your kind note of the tenth.

But unfortunately I could not profit by it. For a few years past, I have been seized at erratic times (but generally about once in a year) with a violent neuralgic attack in the foot, that †a originated in over-walking in deep snow.†a At such times †a the foot,†a until gradually scalded back into form and usefulness, †a is a mere bag of pain which refuses to be carried about. This appendage and I have been struggling together for some days, and are still on ferocious terms.†a

Faithfully yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

W. Ralston Esquire.

To EDMUND YATES, 16 MAY 1870

MS Robert H. Taylor Collection, Princeton University.

5 Hyde Park Place W. | Monday Sixteenth May 1870.

My Dear E. Y.

Let us have our little out, next month, after I have struck this tent. My foot has collared me again, and has given me great pain; I have not the use of it now.

Ever
CD.

To MRS ROSS CHURCH, 17 MAY 1870

Extract in unidentified catalogue in Kitton's "Dickens Ana", 111, 18; dated 17 May 70; addressed Mrs Church.

I have been much inconvenienced and pained this last week by a neuralgic attack in the foot, to which I am sometimes liable, and which originally came of over-walking in deep snow

To CHARLES KENT, 17 MAY 1870

Text from MDGH, 11, 441.

5 Hyde Park Place, W | Tuesday, May 17th, 1870

My Dear Kent,

Many, many thanks! It is only my neuralgic foot. It has given me such a sharp twist this time that I have not been able, in its extreme sensitiveness, to put any covering upon it except scalding fomentations. Having viciously bubbled and blistered it in all directions, I hope it now begins to see the folly of its ways.

Affectionately ever
[CHARLES DICKENS]

P.S. I hope the Sun shines.

To W. JUSTIN O'DRISCOLL,†1 18 MAY 1870

Text from W. Justin O'Driscoll, A Memoir of Daniel Maclise, R.A., 1871, Preface, p. vi.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Wednesday, May 18, 1870.

My Dear Sir,

I beg to assure you, in reply to your letter, that I have not one solitary scrap of the late Mr. Maclise's handwriting in my possession. A few years ago I destroyed an immense correspondence,†2 expressly because I considered it had been held with me, and not with the public, and because I could not answer for its privacy being respected when I should be dead. I have since allowed no letters from friends to accumulate in my possession, and hence this disappointing answer to your request.†3 The remarks I made at the Royal Academy dinner†4 were reported with perfect accuracy in the "Times."

My dear Sir, yours faithfully,
CHARLES DICKENS.

To W. J. O'Driscoll.

To ALFRED DICKENS, 20 MAY 1870†

MS R. L. Moline.

ATHENÆUM | Friday Night Twentieth May, 1870

My Dear Alfred

I have just time to tell you under my own hand that I invited Mr. Bear[†5] to a dinner of such guests as he would naturally like to see, and that we took to him very much, and got on with him capitally.

I am doubtful whether Plorn is taking to Australia. Can you find out his real mind? I notice that he always writes as if his present life were the be-all and the end-all of his emigration, and as if I had no idea of you two becoming proprietors, and aspiring to the first positions in the Colony, without casting off the old connexion.

From Mr. Bear I had the best accounts of you. I told him that they did not surprise me, for I had unbounded faith in you. For which take my love and Blessing.

[†a] I fear that Sydney is much too far gone for recovery, and I begin to wish that he were honestly dead.[†a]

They will have told you all the cheerfuler news here, and that I am hard at work. This is not a letter, so much as an assurance that I never think of you without hope and comfort.

Ever My Dear Alfred | Your affectionate Father

CHARLES DICKENS[†1]

To G. W. RUSDEN, 20 MAY 1870

MS Trinity College, University of Melbourne.

ATHENÆUM
Friday Evening Twentieth May 1870

My Dear Mr. Rusden

I received your most interesting and clear sighted letter about Plorn, just before the departure of the last Mail from here for you. I did not answer it, then, because another incoming Mail was nearly due, and I expected (knowing Plorn so well) that some communication from him, such as he made to you, would come by it. I was not mistaken. The same arguing of the squatter question—vegetables and all—appeared. This gave me an opportunity of touching on these points by this Mail, without in the least compromising you. I cannot too completely express my concurrence with your excellent idea that his correspondence with you should be regarded as confidential. Just as I could not possibly suggest a word more neatly to the point, or more thoughtfully addressed to such a young man, than your reply to his letter. I hope you will excuse my saying that it is a perfect model of tact, good sense, and good feeling.

I had been struck by his persistently ignoring the possibility of his holding any other position in Australasia than his present position; and had inferred from it a homeward tendency.[†2] He has always been the most difficult of boys to deal with, away from home. There is not the least harm in him, and he is far more reflective and more clever au fond than any of his brothers. But he seems to have been born without a groove. It cannot be helped. If he cannot, or will not find one, I must try again, and die trying. What is most curious to me, is, that he is very sensible, and yet does not seem to understand that he has qualified himself for no public examination in the old country, and could not possibly hold his own against any competition for anything to which I could get him nominated.

But I must not trouble you about my boys, as if they were yours. It is enough that I can never thank you for your goodness to them in a generous consideration of me.[†1]

Alfred[†2] gave Mr. Bear of Melbourne a letter of introduction to me, and he dined with us in London the other day. We were much pleased with him. Horne is walking about here, but (as I think I have already told you), I found it necessary to write to him that I could not subscribe the Articles of Faith on which he assumed that we could renew our friendly communication, and therefore there is a gulf between us.

I believe the truth as to France, to be, that a Citizen-Frenchman never forgives, and that Napoleon will never live down the Coup d'Etat.[†3] This makes it enormously difficult for any well advised English Newspaper to support him, and pretend not to know on what a Volcano his throne is set.[†4] Informed as to his designs on the one hand, and the perpetual uneasiness of his Police on the other (to say nothing of a doubtful army), The Times has a difficult game to play. My own impression is that if it were played too boldly for him, the old deplorable national antagonism would revive on his going down. That the wind will pass over his Imperiality on the sands of France, I have not the slightest doubt. In no country on the earth—but least of all there—can you seize people in their houses on political warrants, and kill in the streets on no warrants at all, without raising a gigantic Nemesis; not very reasonable in detail perhaps, but none the less trouble for that. The commonest dog or man driven mad, is a much more alarming creature than the same individuality in a sober and common place condition.

Your friend Sir Charles Dilke is setting the world right, generally all round (including the flattened ends, the two poles), and, as a Minister said to me the other day, "has the one little fault of omniscience"[†5] You will probably have read before now that I am going to be everything the Queen can make me.[†6] If my authority be worth anything, believe on it that I am going to be nothing but what I am, and that that includes my being as long as I live

Your faithful and heartily obliged
CHARLES DICKENS

To GEORGE BRUNT, 21 MAY 1870*

MS Private.

5 Hyde Park Place, London
Saturday Twenty First May | 1870

I have been away from here for three days, Brunt, and during my absence the enclosed letter has arrived from Gad's Hill. You had better give it to Mr. Barton's[†1] workmen, as I do not know anything about it.

CD.

To ARTHUR HELPS, 21 MAY 1870*

MS University of Kentucky.

5 Hyde Park Place, W | Saturday Twenty First May 1870

My Dear Helps

I have no objection to that publication.[†2]

The Cornet carried his own Nemesis with him, and may such vengeance ever attend such crimes![†3]

Indignantly

CD.

To MISS HARRIET HANCOCK,[†4] 22 MAY 1870*

MS Beinecke Library, Yale University.

5 Hyde Park Place | W
Sunday Twenty Second May 1870

My Dear Harriet

This is merely to let you know the book[†5] was sent to you last night, and should arrive about the same time as this note.

I am writing in great haste and have only the faintest recollection of the facts— Refresh your memory from the "Wollum" itself.

It will be impossible, I fear, for me to get to you before I leave town—but I will try!

Ever sincerely

CD

To JOHN DELANE, 23 MAY 1870*

MS Rothschild Archive, London.

5 Hyde Park Place W.
Monday Twenty Third May 1870.

My Dear Delane.

I need not tell you how proud I am to have you for my presenting friend anywhere, or how conclusive a word of commendation from you is with me.

I have been unlucky with the Baron and Baroness,[†1] in consequence of having got into a tangled labyrinth of engagements, accumulating unreasonably before my return to Gad's Hill this day week. But I am specially unlucky in reference to to-day, and I really shall take it very kind in you if you will explain me to them.

About once or twice in a year, I am seized with a Neuralgic attack in the foot (the result of over walking, a few years ago, in deep snow), which causes me great pain and renders the foot so acutely sensitive that I can bear nothing upon it. I have been in this condition for nearly a fortnight; I am trying every means of qualifying myself to keep faith this week in an engagement to the Houghtons,[†2] and another to Lady Molesworth; I cannot at this moment walk at all, or stand upon the foot two minutes; and I know too well from experience that nothing but complete rest and keeping it on the grass will restore it.

I sincerely wish to respond to the kindness of the Baron and Baroness, and I hope to do so (living within an hour or so of town) as soon as I am literally on my feet again. Do, like a dear fellow, warrant for me that I am unaffected and in earnest.

Faithfully Yours Ever
CHARLES DICKENS

John Delane Esquire

To J. MORTIMER,[†3] 23 MAY 1870

Mention in Thomas Thorp catalogue No. 380 (1927); MS I p.; dated Gad's Hill Place, 23 May 70; addressed J. Mortimer.

To MESSRS FIELDS, OSGOOD & CO., 25 MAY 1870

Extract in Merwin Clayton catalogue, May 1902; MS I p.; dated 25 May 70; addressed Messrs Fields, Osgood & Co.

Your bill at sight for £250, first payment on account of Edwin Drood safely received with thanks.

To HARRY LEMON,[†1] 25 MAY 1870

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: Harry Lemon Esquire | Crawley | Sussex.

GAD'S HILL PLACE | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER | KENT
Wednesday Twenty Fifth May, 1870

My Dear Sir

I was much shocked to hear of your father's death[†2] within a few hours of its occurrence, and have had your poor mother[†3] much in my thoughts ever since. I hope she will find in you and in her daughters,[†4] enduring comfort under her great bereavement.

Circumstances divided me from your father for some years,[†5] but there was never any serious estrangement between us, and I am glad to remember now that we embraced affectionately when we met at Mr. Stanfield's[†6] grave.[†7]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Harry Lemon Esquire

To THE HON. MRS PERCY FITZGERALD, 26 MAY 1870†

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Twenty Sixth May 1870

My Dear Mrs. FitzGerald

[†a] I have been obliged to fly for a time from the dinings and other engagements of this London Season, and to take refuge here to get myself into my usual gymnastic condition.[†a] I am looking forward, when Mary shall rejoin us here (we leave her in town with her sister for the present), to the pleasure of welcoming you and FitzGerald to this pretty country.

[†a] I have been subject for a few years past to a Neuralgic attack in the foot, originating in over walking in deep snow and revived by a hard winter in America.[†a] For the last three weeks it has made me dead-lame, and it now obliges me to beg absolution from all the social engagements I had made. [†a] Deprivation of my usual walks is a very serious matter to me, as I cannot work unless I have my constant exercise.

Your kind note therefore finds me helpless and moody, but intensely virtuous. I shall hope to be vicious again soon, and to report myself to you as a great example of dissipation and free living.[†a]

Until when, and always | Believe me | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To J. S. LE FANU, 26 MAY 1870*

MS University of Michigan.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Twenty Sixth May, 1870

My Dear Mr. Le Fanu

I have been very tardy in answering your letter, but a Neuralgic attack in the foot to which I am occasionally liable (it originated in over-walking in deep snow, and was revived by a hard winter in America), has caused me great pain, and has lamed me, and distracted my attention.

I quite agree with you that no story should be planned out too elaborately in detail beforehand, or the characters become mere puppets and will not act for themselves when the occasion arises. But your story[†1] is so very slightly sketched in some of its most important stages, that I cannot yet see it as you see it, or feel its capacity as you feel it. I do not doubt, however, the strength of its leading ideas.

All I can clearly see, by way of suggestion, in the present imperfect state of my knowledge is, that the daughter's love-story should have begun before her intimacy with her unknown brother, and should be the express cause of her not being open with her mother as to her feeling towards him.[†2] This would prevent the very disagreeable suspicion on the reader's part (the reader being instructed on the subject), that she was in any danger of falling into tender relations towards her brother. I also think that if a love story on the part of the young man himself could be the mainspring of the mother's Nemesis,[†3] it would be strong and interesting.

It occurs to me, moreover, that you might weave into the innermost thread of the narrative with great point and advantage, such a character as this:—an Irish youth who is incapable of his own happiness or anybody elses, and attributes that incapacity—not to his own faults, but to his country's real or supposed wrongs. It seems to me that thus a most useful and striking mark might be set upon the time.[†4]

It will never be a trouble to me to be taken into council upon any refinement or enlargement of the idea that may present itself to your mind: indeed I shall highly esteem such a confidence on your part, and will do my best to be suggestive and helpful in reference to it.

Believe me alys | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

J. S. Le Fanu Esquire

To DR HARRINGTON TUKE,[†1] 26 MAY 1870

MS Dickens House.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Twenty Sixth May, 1870

My Dear Dr. Tuke

I am very sorry that I cannot have the pleasure of accepting your kind invitation. But I am occasionally subject to a Neuralgic (or whatever else it may be) attack in the foot, which originated a few years ago, in over-walking in deep snow, and was revived by a very hard winter in America; and it has so plagued me, under the dinings and other engagements of this London Season, that I have been lame these three weeks, and have resolved on an absolute rest in Kent here, and an avoidance of hot rooms, and an unbroken quiet training, for some months.

Believe me always | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Dr. Harrington Tuke.

To CHARLES FECHTER, 27 MAY 1870*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Twenty Seventh May, 1870

My Dear Fechter

I do not think it possible that you could have made a finer or better arrangement in every respect than you have made with Arthur Cheney.[†2] It is MOST SPLENDID AND BRILLIANT.[†3] Stick to it, and your fortune is most handsomely made. I am truly sorry that I shall not see you this year, but I am so happy for the cause that I can afford to wait until next.

It is too late to suggest a name for your Theatre. I feel that you will have settled it before you get this letter. I don't like The Odeon, simply because I should have preferred something addressed to the American national associations:

such as The Union Theatre, The Washington Theatre, The Republic Theatre, The National Theatre, The United States Theatre, or to that purpose.[†1]

I hope you will not lose sight of your excellent idea of having Paul over to Harvard. It is a fine manly place and its professors are first rate men. With the union of France and England that is already in his character, and with such teaching, he would have a very rare combination of advantages.[†2]

Regnier[†3] was here the other day, "avec son fils"; but my foot has bothered me again for three whole weeks, and I did not see him. His daughter is just married. He is playing now at The Princess's,[†4] and they have been doing La Joie fait peur,[†5] with Madame Laurent[†6] in Madame Allan's[†7] part. Lafont[†8] has given much satisfaction there, though people have found out (a grand discovery!) that he is old.[†9] Arnold[†10] told me that Felix[†11] has no subscription at all, and that they have been doing very poorly. Charles Reade has taken the Adelphi for a "Summer Season", to produce his own dramatic version of his last book,[†12] and also a translation from Molière[†13] for the due presentation of Mrs. Seymour.[†14] Not a very hopeful prospect, I should say! Neville[†15] does his leading business.[†16] You will have seen that poor Lemon died the other day.[†17] I believe his heart had been nearly broken by the rascality of his eldest son.[†18] He is buried today, close to where he lived in Surrey.[†1] I could not go to the Funeral, but Charley has gone, and I have instructed him to try to find out in what circumstances the family are left. If they should be poor, I shall go to Mr. Gladstone, and try [him][†2] to get her a small pension.[†3]

Russell left for a general shakiness in money matters, and a general vague beeriness. I was glad to get rid of him as he was not a good gardener, and would have been quite unequal to the Conservatory. I have now a regular professed gardener[†4] in all branches of the Art, and have turned the whole garden topsyturvy, at a great expense. We have a forcing house for forcing every sort of flower; melon frames, cucumber frames, and mushroom beds to produce in every week in the year. One hundred loads of gravel have been put upon the paths to raise them. A model stable with zinc fittings, and water laid on for every horse, and drainage so ingeniously complicated that I expect it will never act, and the Devil knows what else to swell the items of the bill,[†5] astonishes mankind in the place of the old simplicities. All the dogs have got so fat during our stay in London, that they are a tight fit in the stable yard and nothing can get by them. A new staircase rears its modest form (gilded and brightly painted) in the old place, all the upper landing is inlaid in a banquet of precious-woods and the nice parlour maid is going to be married in a fortnight at Higham Church. Behold the family news! Georgina, Mary, and Katie, all send you their best love, and Charley Collins emits an affectionate croak of the weakest description. To which I may add that Wilkie and Frank Beard so incessantly compliment each other, [th] at[†6] they are obliged to sit up half the night together, to get time to do it in.

As you don't tell me where to address you, and as I think it likeliest that you may be near Boston when this letter comes plunging across the Atlantic, I address "to the care of Fields's house."[†7] Tell me in your next how I had best address usually. I leave London to day: to my great satisfaction; for I have been dining out, since January,[†8] beyond the utmost limits of my endurance.

Once more let me congratulate you with all my heart, on your magnificent prospects. They are quite astonishing, and exceed—don't they?—our most sanguine expectations. I hear that Palmer has sold the Hotel,[†9] and has been in a tottering way, but has paid everybody. Is it true? I am delighted to hear that the blonde troupe are in a bad way. They will have to do some more horsewhipping, —as a Poster.

Pray give my love to Miss L,[†1] and congratulate her cordially on her steady and genuine success. I hear nothing of her, but what confirms it, and is most highly in her praise. I hope the Jackass, Scott,[†2] is grazing quietly, and has not been the death of too many Victims of Love. Ever my Dear Fechter, Your affectionate & faithful

[CD.][†3]

To JOHN FORSTER, [LATE MAY 1870]

Extract in F, 1, iv, 65. Date: written in the year he died, according to Forster; before his last letter to him, 29 May.

Remembering that it was most of all Black's[†4] help which had started him on his career as a writer. Dear old Black! my first hearty out-and-out appreciator.

To JOHN FORSTER, [1837-70]

Extract in F, XI, iii, 838. Date: any time between his meeting Forster in 1837 and his last letter to him, 29 May 70.

I give my heart to very few people; but I would sooner love the most implacable man in the world than a careless one, who, if my place were empty tomorrow, would rub on and never miss me.[†5]

To WILLIAM DAY, 28 MAY 1870*

MS University of Texas, Austin.

Saturday Twenty Eighth May 1870

Dear Mr. Day

See page 75 Edwin Drood No. 111, last paragraph.[†6]

It stands:

In the days when Cloisterham took offence at the existence of a Railroad afar off, as menacing that sensitive constitution, the property of us Britons, The odd fortune of which sacred institution it is &c

It should stand:

In the days when Cloisterham took offence at the existence of a Railroad afar off, as menacing that sensitive Constitution,[†1] the property of us Britons, the odd fortune of which sacred institution it is &c

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To WILLIAM DAY, 28 MAY 1870*

MS University of Texas, Austin.

MEMORANDUM[†2]

Twenty Eighth May 1870

I have left Hyde Park Place; therefore, please send proofs in future, either to Gad's Hill, or Wellington Street. I am at the latter place every Thursday

CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, 29 MAY 1870

Summary and extract in F, XII, i, 850. Date: 29 May 70, according to Forster.

Briefly resuming a matter discussed that day with Ouvry.[†3] You and I can speak of it at Gads by and by. Foot no worse. But no better.[†4]

To FRANCIS BRET HARTE,[†5] [?LATE MAY 1870]

Mention in T. Edgar Pemberton, The Life of Bret Harte, 1903, p. 165. Date: "on its way across the Atlantic" at CD's death, according to Pemberton; presumably written, therefore, in late May.

Telling Harte how highly he thought of his work; asking him to contribute to AYR; and bidding him, when he came to England, which he was certain soon to do,[†6] to visit him at Gad's Hill—a spot with which you are no doubt already familiar in connection with one William Shakespeare and a certain Sir John Falstaff.

To MRS BANCROFT,[†1] 31 MAY 1870

MS Private. Address: Mrs Bancroft | Prince of Wales's Theatre | London | W. C.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Thirty First May 1870

My Dear Mrs. Bancroft

I am most heartily obliged to you for your kind note which I received here only last night, having come here from town circuitously, to get a little change of air on the road. My sense of your interest cannot be better proved than by my trying the remedy you recommend; and that I will do immediately.

As I shall be in town on Thursday, my troubling you to order the magic band[†2] would be quite unjustifiable. I will use your name in applying for it, and will report the result after a fair trial.

Whether Mr. Pulvermacher[†3] succeeds or fails as to the Neuralgia, I shall always consider myself under an obligation to him[†4] for having indirectly procured me the great pleasure of receiving a communication from you. For I hope I may lay claim to being one of the most earnest and delighted of your many artistic admirers.

Believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Bancroft.

To THOMAS WRIGHT,[†5] 31 MAY 1870

MS Rosenbach Museum and Library. Address: Thomas Wright Esquire | Berkeley Lodge | 5 Alpha Road | Regents Park | London | N.W.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Thirty First May, 1870.

Dear Sir

I owe you an apology for having left a letter of yours unanswered these three weeks. It is sometimes quite impossible for me to keep pace with my correspondents, and I hope you will excuse it.

Applications to take part in Testimonials of various kinds are so constantly made to me, that I am obliged to reserve my name for very special cases, or it would be obtrusive and valueless. I have no doubt of Mr. Banks's[†6] merits, but

I must beg to be an anonymous subscriber of the Enclosed Three Guineas to the fund in which you so handsomely and kindly interest yourself.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Wright Esquire

June

To DR CHARLES MACKAY, 2 JUNE 1870*

MS Alexander Turnbull Library, New Zealand.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Second June 1870

My Dear Mackay

I have been concerned to detect blunders in that article,[†1] and shall be happy to have your paper.[†2]

Faithfully yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 2 JUNE 1870*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Second June 1870

My Dear Ouvry

Were you not for Household Words in the case of the "Household Narrative of Current Events",[†3] to which the enclosed letter from Ashurst[†4] relates? And if so, may I refer him to you?[†5]

Ever Yours

CD.

To THOMAS CARLIN, 3 JUNE 1870*

MS Dickens House.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Third June 1870

Mr. Charles Dickens begs Mr. Carlin to have the goodness to send him down, Four boxes of his usual cigars.

To MESSRS PULVERMACHER & CO., 3 JUNE 1870

MS K. P. Jeans.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Friday Third June 1870

Mr. Charles Dickens sends his compliments to Messrs. Pulvermacher and Co. and begs to say that he wishes to try a voltaic band across his right foot, as a remedy against what he supposes to be Neuralgia there (originating in over-walking in deep snow), to which he is occasionally liable.

Mr. Dickens writes on the recommendation of Mrs. Bancroft, who assures him that she has derived great relief from a similar complaint from the use of one of these bands. If Messrs. Pulvermacher and Co. will be so good as send him one, he will remit a cheque for its cost by return of post, and will give it the fairest trial.

To HENRY CHORLEY, 5 JUNE 1870

MS Beinecke Library, Yale University.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Fifth June 1870

My Dear Chorley

Believe me, I shall be charmed to have the picture,[†1] if you succeed in your negociation for it. Apart from its own interest (and you know beforehand how the subject attracts me), it will be priceless to me as a token of your regard.[†2]

I will find a place for it somehow and somewhere; and am already pervading the house with a two foot rule, measuring in all directions.

The improvements solicit inspection. Among them a toy-stable which has the air of being made for horses on wheels, with fur manes and tails. Bring a rocking horse with you, and it shall have the best stall of state.

Ever Faithfully and affectionately

CD

To MESSRS FIELDS, OSGOOD & CO., 5 JUNE 1870

MS Robert H. Taylor Collection, Princeton University Library.

Enclosure in the foregoing.[†1]

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Fifth June 1870

My Dear Sirs.

My particular friend Mr. Edmund Yates has asked me if I will give him a letter of introduction to you, advancing (if I can) his desire of disposing of early proofs for publication in America of a new Serial Novel he is writing, called Nobody's Fortune.[†2]

Mr. Yates is the most punctual and reliable of men in the execution of his work. I have had the plan of his story before me, and have advised him upon it, and have no doubt of its being of great promise, and turning upon a capital set of incidents. It has not been offered in America as yet, I am assured.

Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Fields Osgood & Co.

To EDMUND YATES, 5 JUNE 1870

MS Robert H. Taylor Collection, Princeton University.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Fifth June 1870

My Dear Edmund

I enclose you a letter to Fields's House. You address them as Publishers, Boston, Mass: US of America.

There is this difficulty in the way. They republish from early proofs, in a weekly Magazine of their own, called "Every Saturday". In the case of Edwin Drood, their republication in those pages (tried with a Serial, I think, for the first time), to their own best advantage, would have anticipated, as to certain portions, the publication in England; and consequently as to those portions would have destroyed the English Copyright. This I was obliged to point out to them, and forbid.[†3] As they had not anticipated the objection, they may find the speculation, generally, not worth their money. But I merely mention this to you for your private preparation, and take no notice of it to them.

Ever Yours

CD.[†4]

To GEORGE HOLSWORTH, 5 JUNE 1870

Extract in Dickens Exhibition, Memorial Hall, Farringdon St, 1903 catalogue (lent by Sotheran).

Instructing Holsworth to purchase a mahogany slope[†1] to write upon, such as I have upon my table in my business room at the office.

To FREDERIC CHAPMAN, 6 JUNE 1870*

MS Morgan Library. Address: (envelope, MS Berg Collection): Fredk. Chapman Esquire | 193 Piccadilly | London | W. PM 6 Jun 70.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.

Monday Sixth June 1870

My Dear F. C.

Some of my papers from Hyde Park Place are not here yet, and among them is the Townshend account. If I remember right, the enclosed cheque for £50 is very near the mark.[†2]

Faithfully Always

CD.

To HENRY CHORLEY, 7 JUNE 1870*

MS Liverpool Public Libraries.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.

Tuesday Seventh June 1870

My Dear Chorley

Don Juan is gone to the Printer, who will send proof to you.[†3]

London Chatham and Dovor will suit perfectly for the picture.[†4] I receive many packages by that route.

I have hardly a thought of getting beyond here this year. And we have had in A. Y. R. a very striking account of one of these plays by Mrs. Tom Trollope.[†5] For that purpose she has completely knocked the wind out of the subject.

You interest me very much by the glimpse of hope you give me of your play.[†1] Mrs. Rousby[†2] is not what Taylor[†3] would make her out; but there is a great deal in her, and she will do much better yet.

Ever Affectionately
CD.[†4]

To MISS MARY DICKENS AND MRS COLLINS, [7 JUNE 1870]

Mention in Kate Perugini, "`Edwin Drood', and the Last Days of CD", Pall Mall Magazine, XXXVII (June 1906), 654. Date: received in London "on Wed" (8 June), according to Kate Perugini.

To S. L. FILDES, 7 JUNE 1870*

MS Beinecke Library, Yale University. Address: S. L. Fildes Esquire | 52 Hunter Street | Brunswick Square | London | W.C.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Seventh June 1870

My Dear Mr. Fildes

I shall be here (probably alone with my sister in law) from Saturday to Tuesday or Wednesday. Can you come down on Saturday or Sunday? A bedroom will be ready for you, and I will send for you to Higham Station at any time you appoint.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

HENRY DICKENS, 8 JUNE 1870

Mention in F. G. Kitton, Dickensiana 1886, p. 494.

To CHARLES KENT, 8 JUNE 1870

MS British Library. Address: Private | Charles Kent Esquire | The "Sun" Office | Strand | London | W.C.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Eighth June 1870

My Dear Kent

Tomorrow is a very bad day for me to make a call, as in addition to my usual office business, I have a mass of accounts to settle with Wills. But I hope I may be ready for you at 3 o'clock. If I can't be—why, then I shan't be.

You must really get rid of those Opal enjoyments.[†1] They are too overpowering:

"These violent delights have violent ends."[†2] I think it was a father of your Church who made the wise remark to a young gentleman who got up early (or stayed out late) at Verona?

Ever affectionately
CD.[†3]

To JOHN MAKEHAM,[†4] 8 JUNE 1870

MS Beinecke Library, Yale University.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Eighth June 1870

Dear Sir

It would be quite inconceivable to me—but for your letter—that any reasonable reader could possibly attach a scriptural reference to a passage in a book of mine, reproducing a much abused social figure of speech, impressed into all sorts of service, on all sorts of inappropriate occasions, without the faintest connexion of it with its original source.[†5] I am truly shocked to find that any reader can make the mistake.

I have always striven in my writings to express veneration for the life and lessons of Our Saviour; because I feel it; and because I re-wrote that history for my children[†1]—every one of whom knew it from having it repeated to them, long before they could read, and almost as soon as they could speak.

But I have never made proclamation of this from the house tops.

Faithfully Yours
John M Makeham Esqre. CHARLES DICKENS

To MESSRS PULVERMACHER & CO., 8 JUNE 1870

MS K.P. Jeans.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Eighth June 1870

Mr. Charles Dickens begs to enclose Messrs. Pulvermacher and Co. a P. O. order for the band safely received. It has been obtained by mistake for a shilling or two more than the right amount. They can, if they please, return the balance in postage stamps.

To HIS CHILDREN, [?1850-70]

Extract in F, XI, iii, 838. Address: according to Forster, CD repeatedly told, and wrote to, his children not to let indifference in others justify it in themselves. Date: any time in their mature years.

All kind things must be done on their own account, and for their own sake, and without the least reference to any gratitude.

To MRS EDWARD CHRISTIAN,†2 [?JUNE 1870]

Extract in Eleanor E. Christian, "Recollections of Charles Dickens", Temple Bar, April 1888, LXXXII, 506. Date: shortly before CD's death, according to Mrs Christian.

Declining to write a few lines in support of an application to the Premier†3 for a pension in behalf of the widow of an author,†4 and saying that she had been absurdly misinformed as to his having any influence in that quarter.

To JOHN HOLLINGSHEAD, [?1860-8 JUNE 1870]

Extract in Dodd Mead catalogue, No. 66 (Jan 1903). MS 2 pp.; addressed Hollingshead; undated.

It has been during the last two years or so such a perpetual and never ceasing proposal to me, to sit for photograph-portraits, that I think I owe my being alive to write these lines, to my having it in my power to return the one unvarying reply that I have ceased to do such a thing.

To JOSEPH MAYER,†1 [?1850-8 JUNE 1870]

Mention in Kitton, CD by Pen and Pencil, p. 95. Date: Fontana became a friend of Mayer's during the 1850s.

Declining to sit for a portrait bust by Signor Fontana.†2

APPENDIX A

Addenda and Corrigenda to Volumes I - XI

(For information received too late for inclusion here, see also Addenda, p. ooo)

The aim here is to supplement the earlier volumes by including all further letters and information that have come to light, up to the time of this final volume's going to press. The present Appendix does not repeat information given in the previous such gathering of new material, Appendix A of Volume VII, though it may amplify or emend it. Specifically it contains:

(1) All letters which came to light too late to include in the appropriate volumes. Some are wholly new; others provide a fuller text, sometimes a correct dating, replacing a former catalogue extract, summary, or mention. However, small corrections (e.g. commas, initial capital letters etc.), which do not affect the substance of the letter will not be noted. Envelopes, whether or not related to existing letters, are also included.

(2) Additional notes to existing letters. These may entail substitution for original notes.

(3) Corrigenda given at the end of, or within, earlier reprints of Vols I, II, V, VI and VII (updated where necessary).

(4) Corrections of original errors and omissions in the indexes of each volume. These emendations do not extend to changes resulting from new textual information now supplied, which will be indexed, along with the letters 1868-70, at the end of this Volume.

References to the earlier volumes are by page and line, every printed line below the running head being counted. Where appropriate, note and column number are included.

Volume I, 1820-1839

I,xiv.4.

before studied open double inverted commas

I,xviii.

n. 1 replace with Excepting the "Travelling Letters" in the Daily News, 1846 (based on letters of 1844-45), which he himself afterwards included in Pictures from Italy.

I,xix.3.

for Tracy read Tracey

I,xx.

n. 3 line 5 for 149 read 123

I,xxii.10, 11.

for Townsend's read Townshend's

I,xxvi.19.

delete (choke from 1843)

20. insert poney before recal,

21. delete and poney

I,xxviii.4.

for word of read word or

I,xxix.5.

for III read IV

I,xxxiii.3 up.

delete the before The Letters

I,xxxvii.9.

for special read especial

I,xxxix.3.

for Marguis read Marquis

I,xlii.13.

for Mar-May read Feb-May

24. for ?1831 read ?1830

1832

July

I,7.2.

(To MR LONGHURST, [30 JULY 1832]) replace Photograph, Dickens House with MS Free Library of Philadelphia

I,10.

n. 4 2nd col. line 13 for 1831 read 1830

1833

May

I,25.16.

(To MISS MARIA BEADNELL, [16 MAY 1833]) after anger" add[1a] insert[1a] Hamlet, I, ii, 23.

I,29.22.

(To MISS MARIA BEADNELL, [19 MAY 1833]) after necessarilly add[1a] insert[1a] Thus in MS.

I,36.

n. 5 (35 cont.) line 12 for 11 May read 12 May

I,48.

n. 5 line 1 for Staples read Staple line 3 for 1906 read 1897

1835

I,57.17.

(To HENRY AUSTIN, [EARLY 1835]) for [our][4] read [our][3]

29. for last[3] read last[4]

I,58.3.

(To THOMAS BEARD, [2 MAY 1835]) address should read Thos Beard Esqre | Exeter | Favored by John Neilson Esqre

I,66.

n. 3 lines 6-8 for abuses of the present System of competition in architecture read Abuses of the Present System of Competition in Architecture

I,81.

n. 1 2nd col. line 13 for Vardon read Varden

I,102.

n. 2 line 1 for Autograph Prices Current, VI, 49, read Berg Collection Dickens Anthology, p. 17

1836

February

I,131.13.

(To MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL, 16 FEBRUARY 1836) put headline date within square brackets

14. replace Text from D, XXXIII (1936-7), 6 with MS Johns Hopkins University

15. after 16th Feby 1836 add[1a]

insert[1a] Date added in another hand

I,132.

n. 2 2nd col. line 13 for 1834 read 1843

March

I,137.26.

(To MISS CATHERINE HOGARTH, [?4 MARCH 1836]) after recover add[3a] and delete [from] insert[3a] See OED 15.

April

I,147.8 up.

(To MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL, 27 APRIL 1836) replace Text from D, XXXIII (1936-7), 7, with MS Dickens House

6 up. for Dear Sirs, read Dr Sirs—

I,150.

n. 1 line 6 for four songs read five songs

n. 4 line 1 for Vardon read Varden

I,167.

n. 4 line 2 delete; DNB

n. 6 line 2 for 1845 read 1843

I,176.

n. 3 1st col. line 2 for old Lowten read Jack Bamber and delete final sentence in 2nd col.

I,186.

n. 3 add; but possibly the Rev. Edmund Saul Dixon: see 1, 337 (below).

November

I,188.13 up.

(To MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL, 1 NOVEMBER 1836) replace Text from D, XXXIII (1936-7), 8 with MS Johns Hopkins University

I,194.2 up.

(To JOHN MACRONE, [EARLY NOVEMBER 1836]) for Vardon read Varden

I,201.

n. 1 line 13 for 1871 read 1874

I,202.

n. 2 line 6 for Back Through read back through

I,203.

n. 1 2nd col. for Vardon read Varden

n. 2 line 2 for Vardon read Varden

I,209.

n. 1 insert i.e. Varden

December

I,212. 3.

(To P. W. BANKES, [?12 DECEMBER 1836]) for sportsman, read sportsmen,

I,213.

n. 4 lines 1-2 for Vardon read Varden

1837

February

I,233.25. To J. P. HARLEY,[†1] [4 FEBRUARY 1837]*

MS (copy) Huntington Library. Date: clearly the letter referred to in To Harley, 6 Feb 37 (Vol. I, p. 234). Address: Address Charles Dickens Esq | Mrs. Nash | Chalk near Gravesend

(Copy)

Chalk[†2] | Saturday night

My dear Sir

I was obliged to bring the latter part of the farce[†3] down here to day to alter not having had time last night when I got home. If you see any verbal mistakes in the copy (which I shall not be able to go over) will you have the kindness to correct them? I am obliged to send my rough MS to the copyist per Mail from Dovor.

The song[†4] you shall receive by Monday or Tuesdays post—when you have had it will you write me word to the address which I give below and tell me how you get on, and when the last rehearsal will be. I will attend it. Perhaps we had better say the last but one, in case you have any thing to say to me. You will see that I have given you the jokes which depend on the personal appearance of Gardner[†5] & Madame Sala[†6] as Mr. & Mrs. Linbury. In great haste, ever yours

(signed) CHARLES DICKENS

Keep the Authorship a SECRET. There is a special and important reason for wishing it in this case. Tell the Brahams[†7] so, or I might as well confide it to the Town Crier.

I,240.

n. 2 (239 cont.) 1st col. line 2 for 1835 read 1834 2nd col. last line for xi-xiii. read xi-xvii.

March

I,244.17.

(To MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL, [31 MARCH 1837]) replace Text from N, 1, 104 with MS Johns Hopkins University

21. for Dear Sirs, read Dr Sirs.

245.6. for unbusiness-like read un-business-like

I,254.8.

(To J. P. HARLEY, [?SPRING 1837]) replace Composite text . . . 1944 with MS Mr Alfred Berol

16. for St. read Saint

8 up. read Believe me Ever faithfully Yours

7 up. add subscription J. P. Harley Esqre.

April-May

I,256.12. To JAMES EMERSON TENNENT,[†1] [?EARLY APRIL-6 MAY 1837]*

MS King's School, Canterbury. Date: after move to Doughty St in early Apr, and before death of Mary Hogarth on 7 May (not on mourning paper which he used from 8 May 37); handwriting supports.

48 Doughty Street | Saturday Morning

My Dear Sir.

I have most unaccountably forgotten not only the hour, but actually the place at which you invited me to dine to-day, possessing in such matters a most treacherous memory. I called on you yesterday to be enlightened but was not so fortunate as to find you at home. If this finds you, will you give me the needful information on these important particulars. If not will you consider it (supposing you get it after dinner) as a most undeniable reason for my not having availed myself of your kindness?

I have the honor to be my Dear Sir
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS[†2]

Emerson Tennent Esqr. MP

I,258.18.

(To GEORGE COX [8 MAY 1837]) for Faithfully read Faithfully

I,264.

n. 2 col. 2 line 9 for Cornwall read Cornwell

I,266.

n. 1 line 2 for Cornwall read Cornwell

June

I,268.1. To JAMES EMERSON TENNENT, 3 JUNE 1837*

MS Morgan Library. Address: James Emerson Tennent Esqre. M.P. | &c &c | 25 Duke Street | Westminster. On mourning paper.

48 Doughty St. Mecklenburgh Square
Saturday June 3rd. 1837

My Dear Sir.

I fear that by this time you will have set me down as the rudest of your chance acquaintances. If so, let me make my apology in one word. On the night on which I was to have dined with you at Richmond, a very dear young relative was taken ill in my house, and after a few hours' suffering died.[†1] It has been a heavier blow to me than I could describe were I disposed; and, for a few weeks it has completely overwhelmed me.

I take the earliest opportunity of saying that I most cordially reciprocate the wishes you are kind enough to express for the furtherance of our acquaintance which I am sincerely desirous to improve. I am staying with Mrs. Dickens at a cottage of twelve feet square in Hampstead[†2] just now; but I have given you our address in town at the commencement of this epistle, and unless some nefarious person purloins this valuable autograph, shall hope to see you again before long.

Meantime my Dear Sir, believe me
Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

James Emerson Tennent Esqre.
&c &c.

I,276.8.

(To JOHN FORSTER, [?23 JUNE 1837]) headline for [?23 JUNE 1837] read [?22 JUNE 1837]

I,280.

n. 3 for MS: read MS. and delete rest of note

July

I,288.11.

(To MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL, 27 JULY 1837) replace Text from D, XXIII (1936-7), 9 with MS Johns Hopkins University

I,289.1. To MISS ELY,†1 [?LATE JULY 1837]

Extract in Phillips catalogue, June 2000; MS 2 pp.; dated Doughty Street, Saturday Morning; addressed Miss Ely. On mourning paper. Date: handwriting and mourning paper support Summer 37, and see below.

Returning a copy of Paracelsus†2 with apologies for the delay. It looks very bad I know, but I had not forgotten it for an instant.

I return it now, and am happy to have the opportunity of again wishing you a pleasant voyage and a happy six weeks' stay in Paris; above all, let me entreat you not to be so happy as to forget to return in good and reasonable time.

I,289.2. To T. N. TALFOURD,†1 [LATE JULY 1837]*

MS Dickens House. Date: before Talfourd left for Scotland during Aug; handwriting, mourning paper†2 and formal address support Summer 37.

Doughty Street. | Saturday Morning

My Dear Sir.

Will you, if you remain in town so long, give me the very great pleasure of your company to dinner, on Wednesday next at half past five? Ainsworth and Forster dine with me on that day—and I hope Macready: no one else. I trust no better occupation of your time will prevent you from joining us.

Believe me ever, My dear Sir
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

T. N. Talfourd Esqe.

I,293.

n. 4 line 3 for St read Ste

I,297.

n. 5 line 3 for Abulists read Fabulists

I,317.

n. 4 line 7 for continued read returned line 8 for until 1848. read in 1843-8.

I,331.

n. 2 (330 cont.), 1st col add CD received his first payment on the same day: "Received November 18th. 1837 of Messrs Chapman and Hall, the sum of six hundred and forty three pounds, being the balance of the consideration money for the Licence to print and publish, and for the purchase of two thirds of the copyright of the Pickwick Papers | £643. .0. .0 | CHARLES DICKENS" (MS Beinecke Library).

November

I,337.1. To DR F. P. B. PICKTHORN,†1 [?23 or 30 NOVEMBER 1837]

Replaces N text (Vol. 1, p. 607)

MS Columbia University Libraries. On mourning paper. Date: Handwriting and mourning paper point to late 1837; the payment of Dr Pickthorn's bill (see below) makes Thursday, 23 or 30 November likely dates.

Doughty Street. | Thursday Morning

My Dear Sir.

I could not reply to your note last evening, as I was engaged when it arrived.

I shall be very happy to settle your account†2 in the course of next month. If it would serve you particularly, I should not object to your drawing upon me at such a date as will bring it—say to the 30th. of December. If you can do without my acceptance I would much rather that you did so, but if you are greatly pressed, I will give it to you.

I am Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

F. Pickthorn Esqre.

December

I,337.2. To THE REV. E. S. DIXON,†1 2 DECEMBER 1837*

MS Private. On mourning paper.

48 Doughty Street. | Saturday December 2nd. 1837

My Dear Sir.

If you will have the kindness to leave the Foreigners[†2] under my protection for a very short time longer, I shall have much pleasure in introducing them to the Public. I am ashamed to say it, but the matter had really escaped my recollection.

I have just looked at the date of your letter. If blushes could be forwarded by the General Post this sheet of paper would be rose-coloured when it reached you.

Believe me, My Dear Sir
Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Revd. E. S. Dixon.

I,340.4 up.

(To JOHN FORSTER, 11 DECEMBER 1837) after birthday add[5a] insert[5a] In fact his christening, a slip of CD's.

341. n. 2 2nd col. line 4 for Edward read Edmund

I,348.

n. 1 line 3 for on Winifred read by Winifred

I,349.22. To DR F. P. B. PICKTHORN, [?LATE 1837]

Replaces N text, vol. I, p.528

MS Columbia University Libraries. On mourning paper. Date: Handwriting and mourning paper point to late 1837.

48 Doughty Street | Wednesday Evening

My Dear Sir

I very sincerely regret that I cannot do what you require just now, having had a most serious drawback this month which has rendered it necessary for me to draw a hundred pounds[†1] at a time when it was of the very utmost importance that it should lie elsewhere.[†2] If £10 on the last day of this month will be of service to you, and you will let me hear from you to that effect, you may depend upon it.[†3]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

F. Pickthorn Esqre.

1838

January

I,353.13. To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, [?MID-JANUARY 1838] should come after To JOHN FORSTER, 16 JANUARY 1838 (p. 355)

I,355.

n. 2 line 6 for 5 read 3

I,375.

n. 4 col. 2 lines 6 and 7 for Durham Advertiser read Durham Advertiser

February

I,378.14.

(To [MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL], 22 FEBRUARY 1838) delete square brackets round MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL

15. replace Text from N, 1, 160 with MS Johns Hopkins University delete from Address: It. . .to fn

20. delete square brackets from "Boz's"†2

27. delete square brackets from CHARLES DICKENS; add subscription, Messrs. Chapman & Hall.

n. 2 line 1 after "Don's" add incorrectly. and delete rest of note

I,379.1.

(To [MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL], 22 FEBRUARY 1838) delete square brackets from MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL, and put headline date within square brackets

2. replace Text from N, 1, 161 with MS Johns Hopkins University

3. replace 22nd Feby 1838 with 22 Feb 1838[1a]

17. insert subscription Messrs. Chapman & Hall and delete square brackets from CHARLES DICKENS insert[1a] Date added in another hand.

I,379.18. To T. N. TALFOURD, [?LATE FEBRUARY 1838]†

Replaces extract[aa] (Vol. II, p. 94)

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Date: CD lived in Doughty St from Apr 37 to Dec 39, but the earliest date cannot be before 1838, since not on mourning paper; perhaps connected with the letters to Chapman & Hall, 22 Feb; in the end nothing came of the project; handwriting supports.

Doughty Street | Friday afternoon

[a] My Dear Talfourd.

Inclosed with this, are two letters—one which I received from Chapman and Hall last night, and one which I propose to send as an answer thereto this evening. I consulted with Forster this morning about the latter, and he quite acquiesces in its propriety, but I cannot prevail upon myself to send it without first asking your advice.

I went to your chambers an hour or two ago but you were not there. May I tax your friendship by asking you to return the inclosed to me when you have read them, with one line telling me whether you think I have done right or not? I shall be guided entirely by your opinion.

Always Faithfully Yours[a]
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Serjeant Talfourd | &c &c

March

I,388.2.

(To FREDERICK YATES, [?MID-MARCH 1838]) replace MS Private. with MS University of Kentucky

April

I,396.10. To J. P. HARLEY, [16 APRIL 1838]†

Replaces extract[aa] (Vol. VII, p. 790)

MS Tollett and Harman, New York. Date: clearly the dinner given by Mitton on 19 Apr 38 (Diary entry, Vol. I, p. 633); Monday was 16 Apr.

Doughty Street | Monday Morning

My Dear Harley.

[a] A very old friend of mine, a solicitor who has just entered into a very advantageous partnership,[a] is going to give a little feed to his co-partners,[†1] and a very few friends on Thursday next at the Albion in Aldersgate Street. [a] Except the partners you know the seven who compose the party, for the others are Forster, my father, and myself.

As I am anxious to give as much pleasure as I can on this occasion; and as my friend has (as most men have) a high admiration of your abilities, in no wise diminished by his having met you here at the christening,[†2] I cheerfully take upon myself (at his request) the asking you to join us. Say "no" and I never forgive you. Say "yes" and join me here at ten minutes past six next Thursday, and I shall always remain

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS[a]

June

I,402.7 up.

(To G. H. LEWES, [?9 JUNE 1838]*) for 1838]* read 1838]

I,408.7.

(To CHARLES HICKS, [?29 JUNE 1838]) heading amend date to [23 JUNE 1838]

8. amend date note to PM JU 23, 1838 according to Anderson Auction Co., Mar 1909; this letter belongs on p. 407. 8.

I,410

n. 3 line 6 after Franklin add (Possibly George Franklin, brought up in Exeter, whose sister Eliza [b. 1813] stayed with CD and Catherine, whom she had known as a girl, for several weeks in Oct 40. For her two lively and enthusiastic letters to Franklin, describing her visit see David Parker, Roger and Anno Wilson, "Letters of a Guest at Devonshire Terrace", D, 95 [Spring 1999], 51. CD himself she thought "the most noble minded dear man. His constant charity is giving away things to distressed authors" [ibid.]).

I,416.

n. 5 1st col. line 2 for James read Thomas 2nd Col 4th line up for the wife read the second wife

I,423.

n. 1 line 2 title of book should read Zeitschrift für Bucherfreunde Beziehungen zu England

I,429.

n. 1 2nd col. line 11 for To the Inimitable read to the inimitable

I,431.

n. 1 line 12 for Maclise read Laurence

December

I,468.9. To EDWARD WOOD,[†1] 12 DECEMBER 1838*

MS Peter Harries.

48 Doughty Street London | December 12th. 1838.

Dr. Sir.

If I could send a blush by the general post this sheet of paper would be rose-coloured by the time it reaches you. The birds arrived in due course and were most excellent. I should have acknowledged their receipt long ago, but constant occupation and many distractions have led to this long postponement from day to day.

Let me entreat you to believe that this most shameful delay has in no degree weakened the sincerity with which I thank you—both for your present and the kind expressions[†2] that accompanied it, which enhanced its value a thousandfold.

I am | Very truly Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Edward Wood Esquire | &c &c

I,469.17.

(To HENRY JACKSON, 13 DECEMBER 1838) for Text from N, 1, 182 read MS Worcester Polytechnic

19. replace greeting with Sir.

20. insert commas after know and tell you

21. for favourably read favorably

29. for whatever read whatsoever

30. for and read for

33. for inadmissible read inadmissable (Thus in MS)

470.2. for assured read insured

4. read I am, Sir,

5. read Your most obdt. Servant

6. delete square brackets round signature

I,470.14.

(To JOHN HULLAH, [17] DECEMBER 1838) after p. 23 add MS checked at Sotheby's Oct 1970

16. delete December 1838

20. open new paragraph with Believe me that. .

21. after among add the

24. new para at I say God. . .

26. left margin insert John Hullah Esqre

I,471.

n. 1 line 9 after Grant, insert of Nuttall Hall, Ramsbottom, [aa] for 111; read 111.

I,474.11.

(To EDWARD CHATFIELD, [23 DECEMBER 1838]) heading for 23 read 21

I,474.13.

(To S. LAMAN BLANCHARD, [23 DECEMBER 1838]) heading for 23 read 21

16. headnote line 3 for 23 read 21

17. for Sunday read Friday

I,483.

n. 2 line 10 read Pecksniff

I,483.20.

(To [E. M.] FITZGERALD, 29 DECEMBER 1838) delete square brackets round initials

22. after 227 add checked from MS Christie's.

23. for December 29th, read Dec. 29th.

29. delete quotation marks from Oliver Twist,

31. for enemy's camp, read Enemy's camp

484.9. delete quotation marks from Nickleby

14. for tending it, and read tendering it. And after believe me add Dear Sir

16. insert subscription, Edward Fitzgerald Esquire &c &c

I,484.25. To JOHN DE GEX,[†1] [?END DECEMBER 1838]*

MS Ann Thwaite. Date: handwriting supports Dec 38, when CD was still editing Bentley's Miscellany.

Doughty Street | Friday Night

My Dear De Gex

You so seldom shew here, that I am happy to hear from you, even though your letter be accompanied by a contribution. I hope this looks like friendship.

I have just glanced at your friend's paper, which between you and me does not prepossess me; for I see therein frequent mention of a certain "Squire" who, appearing to be a prosy gentleman addicted to moral speeches, will I fear turn out to be some relation of a villain in a maroon-coloured velvet jacket, who once fell in love with a Village Coquette, and went about insulting old farmers and making a beast of himself in every possible way.

I have had a detestation of the class ever since I fell in with this choice specimen, but I will be rigorously just, notwithstanding, and read the paper down to the very last line. It is very prettily written, and looks nice and long.[†2]

I consider myself grossly cut by yourself and Co. so subscribe myself

Fiercely Yours

[CHARLES DICKENS][†3]

John De Gex Esquire

1839

January

I,489.15.

(To DR F. H. F. QUIN, [3 JANUARY 1839]) for Text from N, 1, 195. read MS Mr and Mrs John Madden.

24. for half-way read half way

30. add subscription, Doctor Quin | &c &c delete square brackets round CHARLES DICKENS

I,499.

n.1 line 9 for 100 read 30

I,502.16. To THE REV. R. H. BARHAM,[†1] [?30 JANUARY 1839]

Extract in Charles W. Traylen catalogue 1989; dated 48 Doughty Street, London, Wednesday morning; addressed Rev. R.H. Barham. Date: Ainsworth and CD called on Barham on 30 Jan (Wednesday in 39).

Ainsworth[†2] and I purpose calling on you at a quarter before one to have some further conversation on the matter we spoke of yesterday.[†3] Say in a word by Bearer whether we shall put you out by doing so.

I,504.15.

(To J.A. OVERS, 31 JANUARY [1839]) replace headnote with MS Beinecke Library, Yale University

new line below insert Doughty Street. | Thursday Jany. 31st above 17. add Sir

below 23. add I am | Your very obedt Servant | subscription Mr. J. A. Overs. and signature CHARLES DICKENS

February

I,505.4 up.

(To W. HARRISON AINSWORTH, [?3 FEBRUARY 1839]) for Tuesday read Sunday

March

I,515.23.

(To WILLIAM BRADBURY, 3 MARCH [1839]) replace Messrs Bradbury . . . Co with Free Library of Philadelphia

I,520.22

(To JOHN FORSTER, [5 MARCH 1839]) after Cheatham add[6a]

insert[6a] i.e. Cheetham.

I,528.8.

(To DR F. P. B. PICKTHORN, [?MARCH 1839]) delete letter delete nn 1 & 2 here: See 349 (above)

I,530.26.

(To W. HARRISON AINSWORTH, 26 MARCH 1839) after God, add[1a]

insert[1a] Pope, Essay on Man, IV, 248.

531. n. 3 line 7 for 1,360 read 11, 360.

April

I,545.11.

(To ANDREW BISSETT, 25 APRIL 1839) after text from insert Manchester Notes & Queries, W. Waithman Caddell, VIII (22 Mar 1980), 204

15. replace summary with It is a most extraordinary one, and I have read it

May

I,548.1. To ANDRÉ FILLONNEAU,†1 8 MAY [1839]*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Date: CD was at Petersham 30 Apr-31 Aug 39; Wednesday was 8 May.

Elm Cottage Petersham | Wednesday Evening May 8th.

My Dear Sir.

Thank you for the first part of the French Periodical.†2 I had written a note to you when it arrived, and having to add this new matter, substitute the present Epistle in its place.

I was anxious to tell you that on reflection I foresee so many and such very great difficulties in the way of your having the proof sheets of Barnaby†3 as it passes through the Press—difficulties, I mean, that would be raised by Mr. Bentley—that I cannot make it matter of negociation with that Individual myself. I am not, nor do I wish to be, on such terms with him as would render it pleasant or at all consistent with my feelings to ask anything of him as a favor, and I feel almost persuaded that such a concession would be made one, and a very great one too. He has the privilege (or at least he, and all booksellers claim it, when it is not specially exempted by their agreement with an author) of sending early proofs to America if he thinks proper—it is strongly his interest to keep the contents of the book a secret until the time of its appearance—he has no interest at all in its being translated into French—it will be open to anybody to translate it, after its publication here—and I do not think he would allow his printer to furnish early proofs to anybody, unless he was very handsomely and largely paid for so doing.

It is possible that I may be wrong, and, if you feel so disposed, you can easily ascertain the point by making the application to Mr. Bentley. All I beg is, that it may not be made with any reference to me, or with any idea of its being made with my sanction or concurrence. The reasons I have stated, and many others arising out of my past connection with him, render it necessary for me to say most emphatically (after thinking upon the subject) that I feel I cannot sanction the proposal myself, or be a party to it in any way.

I am My Dear Sir | Very truly Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

A. Fillonneau Esquire

June

I,556.14. To MESSRS. CHAPMAN & HALL, [?17 JUNE 1839]*

MS Alan Newton. Date: CD was at Petersham 30 Apr-31 Aug 39; the two illustrations (below) appeared in Pt XVI of Nicholas Nickleby, published 29 June for 1 July 39; probably Monday 17 June.†1 Handwriting supports.

Petersham | Monday

Dear Sirs

The lettering will be

1†2

Mysterious appearance of the gentleman in the small clothes.†3

2†2

The last brawl between Sir Mulberry and his Pupil.†3

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS†4

Messrs. Chapman and Hall.

I,558.

n. 1 add CD's daughter Kate wrote "For Maclise my father had a very great admiration and affection. He first made the painter's acquaintance in 1839, when Messrs. Chapman and Hall asked him to sit for his portrait to that artist, as they were desirous of bringing it out in `Nicholas Nickleby.' They were generous enough to make a present of the picture to my father, who, out of gratitude for the gift, no less than of love for the artist, always had it hung in the dining-room of any house in which he was living." The Magazine of Art, "Charles Dickens, As a Lover of Art and Artists.—1. By His Younger Daughter", Jan 1903, pp. 127-29; but see p. 577 and n which gives a different story of its acquisition by CD.

I,559.

n. 1 line 2 for Burdett read Burdett-

I,561.

n. 2 lines 4 and 5 for well have been read was

July

I,572.21. To MISS CATHERINE HUTTON,[†1] 29 JULY 1839*

Replaces catalogue extract[aa]

MS Joseph R. Sakmyster.

Doughty Street London | July 29th. 1839.

Madam.

I comply with your request with much pleasure. [a] I hope you may live to increase your collection of autographs for at least eighty four years more, and that you may present in your own person a choice specimen of the light and gentle hand in which Time writes when he is in his very best humour.[a]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Catherine Hutton.

August

I,575.13.

(To LADY HOLLAND, [EARLY AUGUST 1839]) after stay add[1a] delete [for] insert[1a] See OED 17.

I,577.

n. 1 2nd col. line 12 after generosity add But see Vol. 111, p. 418 and n.

September

I,584.7.

(To THOMAS HILL, 21 SEPTEMBER 1839) for Sunday read Saturday

October

I,590.9. To J. P. HARLEY, [4 OCTOBER 1839]*

MS Case Western Reserve University. Date: Friday was 4 Oct in 1839; Harley is being reminded of the Nicholas Nickleby celebration dinner on Saturday.

Friday Night

My Dear Harley.

The place tomorrow is the Albion in Aldersgate Street. The time is 6 for half past precisely.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

J. P. Harley Esquire

I,594.9. To EDWARD DOWLAND,[†1] 25 OCTOBER 1839†

Replaces catalogue extract[aa]

Text from facsimile in Christophe Stickel Autographs catalogue No. 13.

London | October 15th. 1839.

Sir. [a] I have much pleasure in complying with your request,[†2] and beg to thank you for the obliging terms in which it is conveyed.[a]

I am Sir, | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Edward Dowland Esquire

November

I,607.26-608.6.

(To DR F. P. B. PICKTHORN, [?NOVEMBER 1839]) delete letter: See 337 (above)

December

I,612.17.

(To JOHN FORSTER, [?DECEMBER 1839]) for spare read spares

I,614.14.

(To WILLIAM HALL, [1838-9]) for Text from . . . cutting. Read MS Private

19. for Tuesday read Monday

I,631. APPENDIX A. DICKENS'S DIARY

n. 2 col. 2 line 1 for Experiences read (Some Experiences)

I,647. APPENDIX C. AGREEMENTS WITH PUBLISHERS

"Gabriel Vardon" (later Barnaby Rudge)

line 1 for Vardon read Varden

line 2 for Vardon read Varden

I,690. APPENDIX E. RELATED LETTERS

15. (Mary Hogarth to Mary Scott Hogarth, 15 May [1836]) for interest to read interest you

Index of Correspondents

705 Colburn add 701

Cruikshank add 701

Index of Names and Places

709 col. 1 A Beckett line 3 for 244 n, read 224 n,

710 col. 1 Before Ballantyne, James add new entry Ballantine, Serjeant William 631 n

714 col. 1 Broadstairs: line 2 delete 584,

715 col. 1 Cabinet Cyclopædia, The for 239 n, read 240 n,

col. 2 CHAPMAN & HALL line 19 S by B add 182 n

line 22 SG delete 182 n

716 col. 1 Cockburn, Alexander delete Life of Lord Jeffrey xxx; add new entry Cockburn, Henry Thomas, Lord: Life of Lord Jeffrey, xxx

717 col. 2 after Dewar & Culliford add new entry Dexter, J. F.: Dickens Memento 65 n Dexter, Walter line 2 delete Dickens Memento 65n;

718 col. 1 DICKENS, Charles John Huffam Barnaby Rudge: line 1 for Vardon read Varden

Master Humphrey's Clock line 4 for 678-9 read 681

721 col. 1 DICKENS, Charles John Huffam Sketches by Boz, combined Series: for Tuggses read Tuggs's

Sketches of Young Couples line 2 for 258n read 358n

Tuggses at Ramsgate line 1 for Tuggses read Tuggs's

col.2 DICKENS, Mrs Charles Courtship and marriage: line 3 delete 96

722 col. 2 Dickens, John: Other references line 8 add 5n.

730 col. 1 Landon, Letitia Elizabeth line 4 for 301 n, read 300 n,

Landor line 2 for 239 n, read 24on, line 3 for 554, 579 & n read 554n, 579n

LAURENCE, Samuel line 3 add 431n

733 col. 1 London line 2 for Art read Arts line 7 for Staples read Staple

col. 2 MACLISE, Daniel line 6 delete 431n line 9 delete 475n,

734 col. 1 MACREADY, William Charles Paris in: for Othello 542n read Hamlet 542n

735 col. 1 Manders for Manders, comedian read Manders, Thomas, comedian

Maxwell line 2 for 354 & n read 354n*

736 col. 1 Moore, Thomas line 3 for 461n; read 46on;

737 col. 1 NOYES, F., for 336 & n read 335 & n

OVERS line 3 for 547, read 548,

738 col. 1 Powell, Thomas, after Thomas add xix, for 14n read 15n

Price, T. E. add, 645

739 col. 1 Royal Academy of Art for Art read Arts

740 col. 1 Shakespeare, William line 4 after Hamlet add 25 & n (quot.), after 480 & n quot.), add 542n (Ophelia); line 12 delete 542n (Ophelia)

741 col. 1 Stratford-on-Avon should read Stratford upon Avon

742 col. 1 Thompson, James Pepper for James read Thomas

col. 2 Tracy, Lieut. for Tracy read Tracey

TROLLOPE, Frances (Mrs Thomas Anthony Trollope), line 5 for Martin read Michael

743 col. 2 Wilson, Mrs for Cornwall read Cornwell

744 col. 1 Wordsworth, William delete 639

Volume II, 1840-1841

II,xviii.

29 May 41 for MP read candidate

II,20.

n. 1 lines 9-10 delete Monckton Milnes

1840

March

II,42.17.

(To JOHN FORSTER, [?9 MARCH 1840]) for [?9 MARCH 1840]
read [?MID MARCH 1840]

19. after Forster add, but the title "Personal Adventures of Master Humphrey", not in the MS, must have been added to the proofs some days later.

II,44.1. To G. J. BENNETT,†1 14 MARCH 1840*

Replaces summary (Vol. VII, p. 815)

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

1 Devonshire Terrace, York Gate | 14th. March 1840

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Bennett, and begs to say that he is at full liberty to continue his name in the List of Vice Presidents for the Drury Lane Theatrical Fund.

April

II,51.9.

(To AUGUSTUS DE MORGAN and MRS DE MORGAN, 12 APRIL 1840) replace headnote with MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

10. after York Gate, insert Regents Park,

II,52.

n. 2 2nd col. 8th line from bottom read Hendrik

II,57.12.

(To THOMAS HILL, 14 APRIL 1840) for Private read Beinecke Library, Yale University

May

II,64.13.

(To EDWARD MOXON, 5 MAY 1840) for the Executors of Miss E. H. Gray read Dickens House

II,64.

n. 1st col. line 1 insert[6]

II,66.1. To THOMAS HILL,[†1] 12 MAY [1840]*

MS Heritage Book Shop, Los Angeles. Date: Landseer received an identical invitation on 11 May 40.

Devonshire Terrace. | Tuesday May 12

My Dear Sir

Can you dine with us on Friday next at 6? This is a short notice, but Allan[†2] the painter is immediately returning to Edinburgh, and has only that day—and I have made up a dozen for him.

Come if you can and always set me down as Alwys faithfully

CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Hill Esquire

II,69.26. To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, [?16 MAY 1840]

Mention in To Macready, [6 May 1840].

Putting off the dinner invitation.

II.69.

n. 1 2nd col. delete—unless Martha Ball

II,70.20.

(To T. N. TALFOURD, [22 MAY 1840]) replace Text . . . 8 Dec 1964 with MS Robert H. Taylor Collection, Princeton University

II,73.9.

(To W. C. MACREADY, 24 MAY [1840]) delete * (published in Diaries)

June

II,77.7.

(To THOMAS BEARD, 1 JUNE 1840) for Susannet read Suzannet

II,85.5.

(To THOMAS MITTON, 18 JUNE 1840) for Text from N, 1, 263 read MS E. Joseph and Chas J. Sawyer.

17. insert Thomas Mitton Esquire and delete square brackets round signature

II,86.

n. 4 2nd col. item 6 3rd line from bottom replace from may well with was the basis of Buzfuz.

87. n. 2 2nd col delete final sentence His daughter . . . 1859.

July

II,94.11.

(To T.N. TALFOURD, [?2 JULY 1840]) Delete entry; replaced by MS: see 1, 379. 18 (above).

II,95.2 up.

(To EDWARD MARJORIBANKS, 6 JULY 1840) for Forgiving read Forgive

II,109.19-20.

(To MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL, [31 JULY 1840]) replace and
. . . illustration. with indicating where the artist's subject[4] began.

II,111.

n. 4 replace with Chapman & Hall announced in Master Humphrey No. 27 (3 Oct) that "cloth cases for binding Subscribers' Copies may be had after 15th instant". It was included in the Athenæum's weekly "List of New Books" on 17 Oct.

II,112.

n. 1 1st col. line 1 for Chauncey read Chauncy

August

II,113.19.

(To ALFRED DICKENS, 12 AUGUST 1840) replace with MS Maurice F. Neville.

114.14. read Alfred Dickens Esquire CHARLES DICKENS

September

II,125.13.

(To JOHN FORSTER, [?9 SEPTEMBER 1840]) for ?9 read ?8

II,126.1.

(To JOHN FORSTER, [SEPTEMBER 1840]) read date as [?10 SEPTEMBER 1840]

October

II,134.4.

(To WILLIAM SMITH WILLIAMS, 12 OCTOBER 1840) for N, 1, 275 read facsimile Swann Galleries Inc., June 1999

10. after Mr. add[1a]

12. insert William Smith Williams Esquire

delete square brackets round signature

insert.[1a] CD started to write something else and changed it into "Mr."

II,139.

n. 2 line 2 for Darby read Darley

II,140.

n. 1 insert CD's description is mistaken.

II,143.

n. 1 replace last sentence with The earliest advertisement found is 1842.

December

II,163.1. To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 8 DECEMBER [1840]*

Facsimile in History-Makers catalogue, 1997. Date: Tues 8 Dec occurs only in 1840 and 1846; CD was in Paris in 1846, handwriting and signature support 1840.

Devonshire Terrace. | Tuesday Eighth December.

My Dear Sir

Will you come and dine with me next Sunday at 5? I ask you in a very unceremonious, plain, family way, thinking you will like it all the better.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

1841

January

II,184.24. To CAPTAIN BASIL HALL,[†1] 15 JANUARY 1841†

[a]Replaces catalogue extracts ([aa])

MS Martin R. Nason.

Devonshire Terrace. | January Fifteenth 1841.

My Dear Sir.

[a] I have been breaking my heart with such constancy over the Curiosity Shop, that I have not been able to write one note since I received your welcome letter.[a†2] Even now, I am limited to only very brief ones, and therefore defer sending such things I have to say in answer to yours, to a more favorable opportunity.

To poor Mrs Hewett,[†3] I shall be most happy to give my mite. Therefore put me down, if you please, for Three Guineas which I will pay as you direct. I shall give another two guineas to the cluster of widows belonging to the crew—but with that list, I think, you have nothing to do.

If you will kindly send me half a dozen copies of your worthy letter, maybe I can do some good with them.

I can't tell you what pleasure I had in reading your account of the Clocks nights at home. But I assure you most sincerely that you have amply repaid me for any pleasure I have afforded you; and that to be so remembered and so esteemed among such a circle as you describe, is a great happiness. To have a niche of ones own among Friends' household Gods is fame indeed.

Pray commend me to them all, heartily (with thanks to Mrs Hall in particular) and tell your second daughter that she and I think alike. After Nell, the small savant for my money!

Always my Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Captain Basil Hall.

P.S. [a] The clock does not stop, and was never intended to. It goes on—but with a new story.[a†4]

It has just occurred to me that I was born in the place you are living in, on the seventh of February one thousand eight hundred and twelve.

II,188.

n. 4 (187 cont.) col. 1 last line for Private read Beinecke Library, Yale.

February

II,207.8 up.

(To EDWARD MARJORIBANKS, 9 FEBRUARY 1841) for possibilty read possibility

II,238.

n. 27th line up delete from possibly for. . . CD's library and substitute probably for Dickens, as this edn is in the 1844 inventory: see Vol. IV, p. 718.

April

II,247.8 up.

(To HENRY COLBURN, 1 APRIL 1841) replace headnote with MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

n. 3 delete

248.15 up. for our read your

II,248.6 up.

(To JOHN FORSTER, 1 APRIL 1841) replace headnote with MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

3 up. read April The First 1841.

249. n. 3 1st col. delete final sentence.

II,253.

n. 1 1st col. delete final sentence and see Vol. VII (Addenda) p. 844, To Mrs Burnett, 4 July 1852 n. 3.

II,259.5 up.

(To MISS CATHERINE HUTTON, 13 APRIL 1841) replace headnote with MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

260.5. for I have read I have

6. for on cutting read in cutting

9. for DeFoe read De Foe

13. insert Miss Catherine Hutton. at left margin and delete square brackets round signature

II,261.1. To WILLIAM EMPSON,†1 15 APRIL [1841]*

MS Graham Storey. Date: Lord Jeffrey†2 accepted an invitation for 26 Apr 41; handwriting confirms.

Devonshire Terrace. | Thursday April The Fifteenth.

My Dear Sir.

I have asked Lord Jeffrey in redemption of a pledge of his, to dine with me on Monday week the Twenty Sixth—and if that day should be inconvenient to him, or you (whom I hope I may include in the engagement)[†3] to name any other day in that week. May I[†4] ask you to take counsel together, and act accordingly?

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. Empson Esquire

II,262.1. To THE REV. SYDNEY SMITH,[†1] 16 APRIL 1841*

MS Alan Henne.

1 Devonshire Terrace | April The Sixteenth 1841

My Dear Sir.

Have you no better engagement for Monday week the Twenty Sixth, than to dine with me at 7 o'Clock—only to meet Lord Jeffrey, and one or two others whom you know?

If you have not, I assure you it will give me real pleasure if you will join us.

Believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Reverend | Sydney Smith

II,270.1. To WILLIAM SHOBERL,[†1] 23 APRIL 1841*

MS Allan Sutcliffe

Devonshire Terrace | Friday April The Twenty Third 1841.

Dear Sir.

The sooner, the better. If you can conveniently call upon me between twelve and two tomorrow, I shall be very glad to see you.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. Shoberl Esquire.

Over.

Can you ascertain in the mean time, from the Printer,[†2] whether my paper[†3] is over the quantity—two sheets, I think were left open for it—or under? If there be a blank page, I have a little Sonnet of Serjeant Talfourd's which will serve to fill it.[†4]

II,272.

n. 2 replace with Mrs Wilby: see To Ewart, 28 Apr. Talfourd wrote an introduction for CD to Ewart saying he "is desirous of speaking to you on some Petition which some lady in distress has committed—or desires to commit to your charge."

II,273.19. To WILLIAM EWART,†1 28 APRIL 1841

Extract in Phillips catalogue, Mar 1993; MS (3rd person) 3 pp.; addressed William Ewart MP; dated Devonshire Terrace, 28 Apr 41.

Pleading on behalf of Mrs. Wilby,†2 a widow who has been very sorely and mercilessly used and who is the author of a little book called "A cry from the opprest"; explaining in some detail the circumstances of the case†3 and requesting a meeting with Ewart, enclosing a letter of introduction.

II,274.

n. 4 line 2 for Campbell read Cowper

II,278.

n. 2 replace with Mrs Wilby: see To Talfourd, 27 Apr and To Ewart, 28 Apr (above)

II,283.

n. 2 line 2 for Chauncey read Chauncy

May

II,288.2.

(To GEORGE LOVEJOY, 31 May 1841) replace with MS Jonathan Whitman Cross

3. replace with 1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate, Regent's Park,

4. replace with Monday Evening, Thirty First May 1841.

11. for honour read honor

14. new paragraph at I am not the less. . . Ending and signature cut off since publication in MDGH

June

II,300.7. To J. C. PRINCE,†1 9 JUNE 1841*

MS Jonathan Whitman Cross.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park.
Ninth June 1841.

From Mr. Charles Dickens in payment of his subscription to Mr. Prince's Poems.[†2] With every friendly wish that can encourage and cheer him in his onward path.

II,300.23.

(To GEORGE LOVEJOY, 10 JUNE 1841) read MS Jonathan Whitman Cross

24. read Devonshire Terrace | Tenth June 1841.

301.1. read . . . mention—though small, I am aware, in the abstract—is . . .

5. for honourable read honorable

7. for points read point

9. new paragraph at I am obliged. . .

11. delete square brackets round signature

II,306.

n. 2. read Henry Jackson, solicitor, of Malton, Yorks; friend of Charles Smithson: see Vol. I, p. 468 and n.

II,316.

n. 3 line 2 for created read became

317. n. 9 replace 1st sentence with 25 George Square.

July

II,343.20 To J. C. PRINCE, 27 JULY 1841

Replaces extract([aa]) (Vol. VII, p. 830)

Extract in Gerard A. J. Stodolski catalogue No. 4 (1995); MS 2½ pp.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 27 July 41; addressed Mr Prince. MS (envelope only) Mr David J. Holmes. Address: Mr. Prince | 74 Bridge Street | Manchester. PM 28 JY 1841.

I should have replied to your letter of the Sixteenth of last month before now, but that I have been in Scotland ever since its receipt, and have only just returned to town. I have read your poems with very great interest, pleasure and delight. I have been greatly struck by the history of your life and by the struggles and vicissitudes you have undergone. Your writings have a peculiar charm for me as I presume they would have for most persons, after reading your adventures; but there are many beautiful pieces in your book which would have attracted my attention, I think, under any circumstances.[a] You will excuse me, however, if I beg you to consider this a private communication. I have a great objection to seeing my opinions quoted as though I had delivered them oracularly; and I cannot surmount it. You cannot desire, or have, a better testimony than Mr. Howitt's.[†1] He is a writer with whom most people of any thought, feeling, or taste, have sympathized most warmly; and [a] in whose books, I for one, have found great enforcement and gratification of heart[a]—much more than I can express in these few hasty words.

[a] Believe me that I am always, Your sincere well wisher[a]

CHARLES DICKENS

August

II,362.16. To DR JOHN ELLIOTSON,[†1] 20 AUGUST 1841†

Replaces catalogue extract[aa]

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Devonshire Terrace. | Friday Morning
August The Twentieth 1841

My dear Elliotson.

Lest the interesting circumstance of receiving a note from me with this address should startle you too much, I promise that I came to town yesterday, and am going away again on Sunday morning.

I want your leave (though I know I needn't ask it) to send a Patient[†2] to you tomorrow—a poor cabinet maker who has literary aspirations, is quite self taught, [a] really writes, in the intervals of his daily labour, very well.[a] The poor fellow is labouring under a chronic affection of the pleura, for which he is advised to see a skilful physician. He has written to me,—knowing I am much interested in him,—for a recommendation. I may send him over to you?

Always Your faithful friend
CHARLES DICKENS

Doctor Elliotson

II,365.

n. 7 last line read Hall, ?7 Apr 40, fn.

September

II,378.2.

(To GEORGE CATTERMOLE, 12 SEPTEMBER 1841) replace with MS Free Library of Philadelphia

II,381.

n. 7 (cont.) line 2 for 25 read 26

II,382.2.

(To JOHN SCOTT, 13 SEPTEMBER 1841) Note: original sold at Sotheby's, 14 Mar 1979

II,404.

n. 4 line 4 delete Argus and read Britannia policy (see To Mitton, 29 Oct).

II,405.

n. 2 line 2 read "Postscript"

October

II,410.3 up.

(To JOHN FORSTER, [?OCTOBER 1841) headnote line 3 after CD's life insert since 1837

November

II,423.7.

(To GEORGE SHURY, 17 NOVEMBER 1841) *delete

II,429.

n. 1 line 2 read Sforza (1 Nov)

II,433.

n. 1 line 3 for Edmund read Edmond

II,434.17. To MRS NOVELLO,[†1] 30 NOVEMBER 1841*

MS Private. Address: Mrs Novello | 4 Craven Hill | Bayswater.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park.
Thirtieth November 1841.

My Dear Madame.

Let me thank you most heartily for your pleasant letter which has afforded me the greatest satisfaction and delight. My great ambition is to live in the hearts and homes of home-loving people, and to be connected with the truth of truthful English life. A communication like yours gives me greater pleasure—especially when I am on the eve of going abroad—than the most boisterous notes Fame could possibly blow out of her Trumpet.[†2]

I am happy to think that I have moved and interested your daughter,[†3] and beguiled her of moments that might have been heavy. It is pleasant to repay a debt of gratitude, and I am among the crowd of bankrupts who owe her a very large one.

The slippers I have sent to be made up: and when I halt for the night in my half year's travels through America, I shall wear them; connecting those from whom they came with the most cheerful moments of my pilgrimage, and my recollections of my own hearth and images of those who sit about it.

When I return, I shall hope to become personally known to you both. In the mean time accept my sincere thanks, and the heartfelt assurance of my esteem and regard.

Dear Madame | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

December

II,453.1. To [W.A.] CHATTO,[†1] 27 DECEMBER 1841*

Text from facsimile in James Cummins catalogue No. 32 (1991); MS 1 p.; envelope accompanies; addressed Mr Chatto; dated 27 Dec 41.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Seventh December 1841

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Chatto, and begs, with his best thanks, to return the books Mr. Chatto was so kind as to lend him, nearly two years ago.

II,456.2.

(To FREDERICK SALMON, 30 DECEMBER 1841) read Facsimile in Paul Temperly, Books and I, Cleveland, The Rowfant Club, 1938, 11, 456.

II,457.15.

(To JOSEPH [HAYDN], [?1841]) delete entry, the true date is 14 Jan 50: see Vol. VI, p. 10

n. 3 delete

II,497.6.

(To COUNT D'ORSAY, 13 DECEMBER 1841) read MS Jonathan Whitman Cross

Index of Correspondents

502 Mitton, Thomas for 210 read 211

Index of Names and Places

505 col. 1 ADAMS, Henry Gardiner delete; also 452

506 col. 1 Argus Life Assurance for 404 and nn read 404 and n for Anthenæum read Athenæum

Athenæum Club line 2 for CD attends read CD did not attend

col. 2 Ball, Martha delete 69n

510 col. 1 CAMPBELL, Thomas lines 2-3 delete `Loss of the Royal George' 274*n*;

col. 2 Carlyle, Thomas 2nd col. line 3 for Chartism read Chartism

511 col. 1 Chalmers for Thomas read Alexander

512 col. 1 Chaucer for Milnes read Horne

Cockburn for Alexander . . . Justice read Lord Henry, Scottish Judge

513 col. 1 Cowper, William line 2 add `Loss of the Royal George' 274n

Craigcrook for West Lothian read Midlothian

514 col. 1 Darby, George: delete entry

Darley, George add from above ed. The Works of Beaumont and Fletcher 139n

Dickens, Charles Culliford Boz lines 2-3 delete health 253n;

515 col. 2 Dickens, Charles John Huffam Barnaby Rudge: 2nd col. for Willett read Willet, after 253n insert; Willet, John

519 col. 2 Dickens, Kate Macready for Kate read Catherine

520 col. 1 Dickens, for Kate read Catherine

DIEZMANN, after 43n; add 7n,

526 col. 1 HOGARTH George after Christmas add Eve

528 col. 2 Kent, Charles add 444n

W. C. Kent delete entry

534 col. 2 Malone for Edmund read Edmond

535 col. 1 Melrose for Roxburgshire read Roxburghshire

col. 2 MILNES, Richard Monckton delete 2on

538 col. 1 Paris delete 117n

539 col. 1 Phillips, Bertha delete entry

541 col. 1 Rutherford, Arthur read Rutherfurd, Andrew

545 col. 1 TOWNSHEND for Chauncey read Chauncy

col. 2 Trollope, Frances line 3 for Martin read Michael

547 col. 2 Wright, William for Fitzgerald read FitzGerald

Volume III, 1842-1843

1842

January

III,3.12.

(To EDWARD EVERETT, 1 JANUARY 1842) for Historica read Historical

III, 15.

n. I for DAB read DNB

III, 54.

n. 4 add CD may have included the following autograph note in his letter to Mrs Sigourney "A Family Party | Oliver Twist | Mrs. Nickleby | Mr. Pickwick | Samivel Weller | Master Humphrey | Barnaby Rudge | Little Nell | and | CHARLES DICKENS | All at Hertford. Tenth February 1842." (MS Princeton)

February

III,97.2.

(To THE REV. JOHN McVICKAR, 28 FEBRUARY 1842) replace headnote with MS (in Putnam's hand) Columbia University Library. Address: The Reverend Profr. McVicar[1a] | 8 Columbia College | to be delivered insert [1a]George Putnam misspelt McVickar's name and in final line abbreviated it to "Mr. McV."

March

III,137.7. To JOHN HENDERSON,[†1] 16 MARCH [1842]*

Text from copy owned by Gerard Bultman. Date: clearly written during CD's first visit to America in 1842, with Mrs Dickens.

[Fuller's][†2] Hotel. March 16th.

My Dear Sir

I assure you that I fully participate in your regret that Mrs. Dickens & I cannot arrange to visit that part of the Country[†3] in which you reside, and from which you have conveyed to me such cheering and pleasant tidings. Pray assure the ladies of your family that I am proud and happy to live in their remembrance and to know that I have inspired them with some interest, and pleasure. Convey to them, if you please my cordial regards & thanks and believe me

My dear Sir
Faithfully Yours | (and theirs)
CHARLES DICKENS

John Henderson Esqre.

III,165.1. To CHARLES A. WAKEFIELD,[†1] 22 MARCH 1842*

Text from facsimile in Remember When Auctions, Inc. catalogue No. 40 (1997).

Barnum's Hotel | Twenty Second March | 1842.

Dear Sir.

I accept with great pleasure your print of the Presidents of the United States; and beg to thank you cordially, for your obliging letter.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles A. Wakefield Esquire

III,166.12.

(To WILLIAM [GUY], 23 MARCH 1842) replace headnote with MS Free Library of Philadelphia

III,173.1. To SAMUEL GORMLY,[†1] 31 MARCH 1842*

MS Chapin Library, Williams College, Massachusetts.

Exchange Hotel Pittsburgh | Thirty First March 1842.

Dear Sir

Let me thank you, in the name of Mrs. Dickens and myself, for your kindness in sending us the accompanying volumes of Indian Biography.[†2] I have been quite charmed with them; and I am much indebted to you for the interest I have derived from this most interesting source.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

—Gormly Esquire

April

III,218.9.

(To DAVID C. COLDEN, 29 APRIL 1842) replace headnote with MS Rowfant Club, Cleveland, Ohio

III,219.8.

(To MRS DAVID C. COLDEN, 29 APRIL 1842) replace headnote with MS Free Library of Philadelphia

III,237.

n. 1 line 20 after Charles insert James

III,246.

n. 4 line 3 after Charles insert James

July

III,269.1. To GIDEON MANTELL,[†1] 13 JULY 1842

Mention in Gideon Mantell, Journal of Gideon Mantell, 1818-52, ed. E.C. Curwen, 1940, p. 160.

III,275.

n. 4 replace ref with III, ii, 255

III,295.

n. 3 replace with Probably Charles Morgan:see Vol. VII, p. 844, To Mrs Burnett, 4 July 52, *n*3.

October

III,358.10. To [F.P. WATSON],†1 26 OCTOBER 1842*

MS Peter Harries.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents | Park
Twenty Sixth October 1842

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to his unknown friend, the author of the clever little book on whist;†2 and begs to thank him cordially, both for the presentation copy of his Volume, and for his pleasant letter.

III,371.

n. 1 line 7 replace (photostat . . . Library) with (MS Dartmouth College Library, New Hampshire)

November

III,372.7 To HERMAN SMITH,†1 12 NOVEMBER 1842*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park.
Twelfth November 1842

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Herman Smith, and begs to acknowledge the receipt of his obliging note. Mr. Dickens has no idea, whatever, of publishing any further remarks on America,†2 but he is not the less obliged to Mr. Smith for his polite communication.

III,372.

n. 4 after application add (MS Dickens House).

December

III,394.15.

(To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, 16 DECEMBER 1842) replace headnote with MS Worcester Polytechnic Institute, Mass.

22. left margin add George Cruikshank Esquire delete square brackets round signature

III,401.16.

(To COUNT D'ORSAY, [26 DECEMBER 1842]) replace Comte de Gramont with Jonathan Whitman Cross

III,402.11. To THOMAS CHAPMAN,†1 27 DECEMBER 1842

Replaces catalogue extract[aa]

MS Boston University

Devonshire Terrace | Tuesday Morning
Twenty Seventh December 1842

My Dear Sir

I send you at last, a few sentences, wherewith to close (if you like them) your account of the Sanatorium.†2 But I have only hinted at the point you mentioned, touching disorders of the mind. I strongly feel, upon reflection, that it would be most unwise to put it forward prominently. [a]There is a natural repugnance on the part of most people to be in the society or neighbourhood of madmen.[a] And I think in this case the site of the house renders them still more objectionable company. I have no doubt in my own mind that it is as indispensable to our well-doing, to keep the subject quiet, as to keep them quiet, supposing we have any.

I have written little enough, but really the subject is exhausted, and I don't know what else to say. You availed yourself of the trees, and the facing gardens, and Mrs. Gibbons; and there is nothing left. I had some thoughts of sketching Mr. Scriven.†3 Then the chairman presented himself. Then the man servant in the full bloom of his livery.—

[a] Touching Mrs. Gibbons,†4 it occurs to me that it will be a great point to impress upon her, that the place should be as cheerful as possible. She appears rather to have gone into the matter as if the patients were, by the ordinary and established laws of nature, her natural enemies—as if she were a warranted mouser, and they all mice.[a] Now, if I had heard of her waltzing, even, with some convalescent gentleman of middle age, I should have liked her better.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Chapman Esquire

1843

January

III,434.5. To THOMAS MITTON,[†1] 31 JANUARY 1843*

MS Heritage Book Shop, Los Angeles.

Devonshire Terrace | Thirty First Jan 1843

My Dear Mitton

I couldn't write to you last night, for I had no messenger. I shall be greatly obliged to you if you can spare time to look at the horses this morning. I am obliged to wait at home (having made some appointment)[†2] but will call on you at a quarter past 4.

Faithfully Always
CD.

Thomas Mitton Esquire

May

III,489.19. To THOMAS CARLYLE,[†1] 14 MAY 1843*

MS Varnhagen Collection, Jagiellonian University, Krakov.

Devonshire Terrace
Fourteenth May 1843

My Dear Carlyle.

You have received Longman's[†2] circular,[†3] touching next Wednesday? Pray attend, if by any means you can. I think something may be done in respect to Piracy. If so, let us, in Honesty's name, do it.

Faithfully Your friend
CHARLES DICKENS

I thank you heartily for Past and Present.[†4] If there had been more of you in the Past, there would have been less of your opposite in the present time.

III,497.7.

(To JOSEPH SOUL, 26 MAY 1843) replace headnote with MS Dickens House

18. insert at left margin Joseph Soul Esquire and delete square brackets round signature

June

III,500.18. To ROBERT HUGHMAN,[†1] 2 JUNE 1843†

[a]Replaces extract([aa]) (Vol. VII, p. 849)

Text from facsimile in Christophe Stickel Autographs catalogue No. 21.

1 Devonshire Terrace
York Gate Regents Park
Second June 1843.

My Dear Sir

[a] I am much gratified by, and am much indebted to you for, the Dedication of your Poem;[†2] which I am going to read, luxuriously, this very afternoon.[a]

Believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Robert Hughman Esquire

October

III,580.3.

(To EDWARD WATKIN AND PETER BERLYN, 10 OCTOBER, 1843) replace headnote with MS Free Library of Philadelphia

November

III,601.13. To SAMUEL HUGHES,[†1] 21 NOVEMBER 1843*

MS Maggs Bros Ltd.

London. I Devonshire Terrace
York Gate Regents Park.
Twenty First November 1843

Sir.

Excuse my not having answered your note, sooner. Constant attention to other matters has prevented me.

I do not know my brother's[†2] address, or I should be glad to send it to you. He is somewhere in Yorkshire,[†3] but I do not know where; nor should I be able to address a letter to him without first hearing from himself.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Samuel Hughes

III,609.

n. 6 (608 cont.) last line after Huxley, p. 167). add Carlyle sent the address label for the Carol which CD had sent him ("Thomas Carlyle Esquire | 5 Cheyne Row | Chelsea"), to the Polish collector Varnhargen as an autograph, explaining "Charles Dickens `Boz': Author of `Pickwick' &c &c &c—translated in Turkish, they say: Ach Gott!". Handwriting supports the date, 1843.

III,617.21. To MISS MARIA FORSTER,[†1] [?1843]

Mention in To Maria Forster, 14 Oct 62, fn. Date: presumably sending her a copy of the Carol (1843).

Index of Names and Places

674 col. 1 after Mathew, Rev. Theobald insert Mathews, Charles: Love, Law and Physic at Covent Garden 237 & n

Mathews, Charles James line 3 after Covent Garden delete 237n

Volume IV, 1844-1846

1844

January

IV,29.3. To WILLIAM BROCKEDON,[†1] 24 JANUARY 1844*

MS National Portrait Gallery.

I Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Twenty Fourth January | 1844.

My Dear Sir

Let me thank you, cordially, for your kind and welcome note in reference to my Christmas Carol. If anything would make it more agreeable to me than the feeling it expresses, it would be the discovery that we [†a]"swear by"[†a] the same sweet book.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

William Brockedon Esquire

IV,31.7 up.

(To W. B. HODGSON, 26 JANUARY 1844) replace headnote with MS Dickens House

IV,38.

n. 3 line 2 delete DNB

February

IV,40.11. To CLARKSON STANFIELD & FAMILY,[†1] 7 FEBRUARY 1844

Extract in Robert E. Batchelder catalogue, No. 101 (1995) MS 1½ pp.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 7 Feb 44; addressed Clarkson Stanfield & family.

How are you getting on? Say that you are well enough to come and dine here today at half past five—do say that much—for on this day two and thirty years ago, the planet Dick appeared on the horizon. To the great admiration, wonder and delight of all who live, and the unspeakable happiness of mankind in general. Best regards at home from all here

IV,40.12. To MRS CARPENTER,[†1] 8 FEBRUARY 1844

Extract from facsimile of p. 1 in Kenneth W. Rendell Gallery Inc. catalogue No. 254; MS 2 pp.; addressed Mrs Carpenter.

London. I Devonshire Terrace
York Gate Regents Park | Eighth February 1844

Dear Madam

I thank you earnestly for your kind letter, and am glad indeed to know that my little book[†2] has found such favor where I would have it favored most.

Although no stranger to the reputation of the late Dr. Carpenter,[†3] I have not read his biography by his son. I am much indebted to you for sending me a book in which I know I shall be strongly interested and[†4]

IV,44.13. To T. J. SERLE, 12 FEBRUARY 1844

[a]Replaces extract[aa] (Vol. IV, p. 726)

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Devonshire Terrace
Monday Twelfth February | 1844

My Dear Serle.

[a] Not having received the promised exposition of the views of our illustrious friends,[†1] I cannot answer the enclosed note. Which, to a man possessed of what the Americans (especially the Pennsylvanians)[†2] call "a moral sense," is distressing.[a]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

T. J. Serle Esquire

IV,45.15. To THOMAS LONGMAN, 14 FEBRUARY 1844*

MS Michael Silverman.

Devonshire Terrace | Fourteenth February 1844.

My Dear Longman

If Wednesday next, will suit you, we shall be happy to dine with you on that day in compliance with your pleasant Invitation. In saying "We", I answer for the Trio.[†1]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Longman Esquire

IV,50.8. To MRS HUGHES,[†1] 23 FEBRUARY 1844*

MS Klaus Schappert.

(written with one foot in the stirrup)

Devonshire Terrace
Twenty Third February 1844.

Dear Mrs Hughes.

A hundred thousand thanks for your kindness. I am running away to Liverpool and Birmingham, to preside at certain Institutions; but shall hope to call upon you, on my return, in about a week's time.

I have been incessantly occupied; and plead Not Guilty to anything that may look like anything else.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

IV,51.

n. 1 line 2 for Feb read Jan

March

IV,66.15. To J. P. HARLEY, 7 MARCH 1844*

Text from facsimile in Alexander Autographs Inc., June 1997.

Devonshire Terrace | March Seventh 1844.

My Dear Harley

Will you dine here (I shall hardly know you by sight) next Sunday at 6 exactly? We have no party.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

J. P. Harley Esquire

IV,79.

n. 2 add Catherine Dickens, writing almost certainly to Horne, probably in early May 44 (MS Mrs Margaret E. Coleman), said she "gladly" accepted a proof of its engraving (by J. C. Armytage, for Horne's New Spirit of the Age, March 1844). Also engraved by W. J. Linton for Howitt's People's Journal, 1846, and reproduced in F. G. Kitton, CD by Pen and Pencil, facing p. 51: see Vols III, p. 524 and n, and IV, p. 79 and n.

April

IV,101.8.

(To CHARLES KNIGHT, 13 APRIL 1844) after 152 insert Checked from MS Sotheby's, July 1983

12. read Devonshire Terrace Saturday Thirteenth April 1844

14. read Biography . . . Autumn?

15. read And . . . I do . . .

22. read Always Believe me | Faithfully Yours

23. read Charles Knight Esquire and delete square brackets round signature

IV,111.18.

(To THOMAS CHAPMAN, 25 APRIL 1844) headnote after envelope read MS Dickens House

n. 2 line 3 for 263*ns* read 263*n*

IV,121.

n. 6 add A form of entry for registering the copyright of the Carol at Stationers' Company exists, signed by CD and witnessed by Mitton (MS Beinecke Library)

IV,128.

n. 4 line 6 for II read I

May

IV,129.27. To JOHN OVERS,[†1] 20 MAY 1844*

MS Heritage Book Shop, Los Angeles.

Devonshire Terrace
Monday Twentieth May 1844

My Dear Mr. Overs

Your papers arrived yesterday afternoon, with the accompanying letter from Mr. Newby.[†2] I would recommend you to write to him straightaway, communicating as shortly as possible the substance of your honest friend's objection to the price and adding, if you like, that I am entirely of his opinion. Don't argue the point, or make any reference to anything else, but plainly say that ten and sixpence is too much for your friends, who never contemplated more than five shillings; and that I believe five shillings[†3] to be quite as high a price as can with any show of reason be charged for such a book. If he holds to his price, you will break with him, I fear. It occurred to me when I looked at your agreement (which binds him to no time whatever) that he had it in his head to reserve that possibility for himself.

Let me know when you have any news.
Faithfully Yours always
CD

Mr. Overs.

June

IV,139.2.

(To CHARLES KNIGHT, 4 JUNE 1844) after 104 read Checked from MS Sotheby's, July 1983

7. for honourable read honorable

9. insert ever after I can

13. read Believe me always, | Faithfully Yours

14. read Charles Knight Esquire and delete square brackets round signature

October

IV,200.1 up.

(To JOHN FORSTER, [?MID-OCTOBER 1844]) read the life . . .

December

IV,234.1.

(To MRS CHARLES DICKENS, 2 DECEMBER 1844) belongs on p. 233 after To Leech, 1 Dec

IV,241.10.

(To JOHN FORSTER, [22 DECEMBER 1844]) headnote after 365 replace comma with semi-colon

1845

February

IV,267.27-8.

(To THOMAS MITTON, 17 and 22 FEBRUARY 1845) replace unidentified . . . Rochester with Sotheby's catalogue, June 1898.

n. 2 line 2 for show read shows

March

IV,287.13.

(To MRS ELISABETH JESSER REID, 25 MARCH 1845) replace headnote with MS Royal Holloway University of London

April

IV,293.21.

(To CHARLES BLACK, 12 APRIL 1845) after Taylor insert Collection, Princeton University

IV,310.

n. 2 line 2 read W. F. Pollock, . . .

June

IV,323. 8.

(To EMILE DE LA RUE, 29 JUNE 1845) after Brussels add 2a

insert [2a] The hotel register lists, in CD's hand: Douglas Jerrold | Daniel Maclise | John Forster | Charles Dickens | Mrs Dickens and Miss Hogarth (MS Beinecke Library).

July

IV,325.5 up.

(To COUNT D'ORSAY, 5 JULY 1845) replace MS Comte de Gramont with MS Jonathan Whitman Cross

326. n. 3 insert 1 Chronicles 28:18.

IV,342.2.

(To CLARKSON STANFIELD, 28 JULY 1845) replace headnote with MS Salisbury House Library, Iowa

3. for Chatham Excursion is to read Chatham Excursionists

August

IV,346.32. To T. J. THOMPSON,[†1] [?3 AUGUST 1845]*

MS Jonathan Whitman Cross. Date: on 1 Aug CD invited Thompson to dine on Sunday (see Vol. IV, p. 345); handwriting supports.

Devonshire T. | Sunday Morning

My Dear Thompson

Undoubtedly and unquestionably I expect you today—and that too at the Gothic Hour[†2] of Halfpast 5, punctual to the moment.

Faithfully Yours always
CD.

T. J. Thompson Esquire

IV,359.8.

(To JOHN THOMPSON, 19 AUGUST 1845) replace headnote with MS Private.

9. insert line Broadstairs, Tuesday August Nineteenth 1845.

13. insert line CHARLES DICKENS

IV,359

n. 2 col. 2 add and p. 378, n. 1.

September

IV,369.25. To GEORGE CATTERMOLE, 3 SEPTEMBER 1845†

Replaces extracts ([aa]) (Vol. VII, p. 862)

MS Martin R. Nason.

Devonshire Terrace | Third September 1845
Wednesday[†1]

My Dear George.

I never was more annoyed [than][†2] when I received your hearty letter two days ago. We dared not wait, on the uncertainty of your taking the part:[†3] and were obliged to fill it up with another (and a worser)[†4] man.[†5] For though it is not a long one in itself; it is mixed up with the principal "business" scenes of the play; and the effect of that gap on the others had begun to be of a very hideous kind—which it has not ceased to be, yet.

[a] I would have given almost anything to have had you in the Scheme.[†6] But Courage! We will have another play, please Heaven; and you shall choose your own part.[a] I will back you up with my best, in anything you like.

Now I do hope, my dear Cattermole, that that deplorable Ice which has been between us (God knows how) for sometime, is fairly broken at last; and that our intimacy will be again of the old kind—of the kind that we have all of us wished it to be, always.[†7] Cannot you come and dine with us on Sunday at half past five—only ourselves, and no party at all? If you can, do, and tell Mrs. Cattermole that it will delight Kate to see her, if she will come with you.

[a] I write to you in an overflowing spirit. I have been bottled up so long, that I bless this Play for serving as a corkscrew. I have often thought, with sincere pain, that Life is not long enough for any separation between such friends as we have been and should be.[a] And it has been almost an aggravation of the thought, that there has been no quarrel—no indifference even—no reason on Earth to keep us asunder.

Always affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

George Cattermole Esquire.

IV,372.8. To GEORGE CATTERMOLE, 8 SEPTEMBER [1845]*

Replaces summary (Vol. VII, p. 863)

MS Martin R. Nason. Date: clearly 1845: see To Cattermole, 3 Sep.

Devonshire Terrace
Monday Eighth September

My Dear George

Don't think of seeing a rehearsal, pray. Wait until the night; and see it at its best. Let it be quite fresh to you, too. It will want all that advantage—and more.

I can't, I am very sad to say, fix a day for our meeting at this moment; as I am not sure whether I may not start off to Broadstairs to see my Babbies who are bathing there. But I will come out to Clapham Rise as soon as I know my own projects. If I don't go to Broadstairs, I will come soon after this note. If I do go to Broadstairs—as soon as I return.

Ever Yours
CD

IV,384.7. To GEORGE CATTERMOLE, 19 SEPTEMBER 1845*

Replaces catalogue summary (Vol. VII, p. 863)

MS Martin R. Nason.

Devonshire Terrace
Nineteenth September 1845.

My Dear Cattermole

After the Performance tomorrow night, there will be a little supper (limited, almost entirely, to the actors and their wives) in an empty house belonging to one of the company. No 9 Powis Place Great Ormond Street.[†1] I am requested to bid you and Mrs Cattermole to this high Festival.

For further particulars, enquire of my father, who is a Steward before the curtain, and whom you will see in the front all night, in the highest state of activity.

Would to Heaven we had you for Downright!

Ever Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

George Cattermole Esquire

IV,393.12.

(To MR ELLIS, 30 SEPTEMBER 1845) replace headnote with MS Free Library of Philadelphia

n. 1 delete (to whom CD . . . 30 Jan 57)

October

IV,397.1. To P. H. HATCH,[†1] 4 OCTOBER 1845*

MS Miss G. M. Dawson

1 Devonshire Terrace
York Gate Regents Park | Fourth October 1845.

Sir.

I need not assure you, I feel convinced, of the great interest I take in all such Establishments as the Crosby Hall Institution;[†2] or of the great store I set by such Invitations as that with which you have honored me.

I regret to say, however, that I cannot at this time have the pleasure of occupying your chair. My engagements are so very numerous that I have been obliged to decline many similar proposals from many places. And I cannot make an exception in this instance, without giving offence in other quarters.

May I beg you to convey to the committee, the assurance of my cordial sympathy and respect. Perhaps they will afford me some other opportunity of expressing these sentiments in my own person.

I am Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

P. Henry Hatch Esquire

IV,402.6. To WILLIAM CARPENTER[†1] and C. R. CARTER,[†2] [8 OCTOBER 1845]

Envelope only, MS D. R. Bentham. Address: W. Carpenter Esquire | Charles R. Carter Esquire | London Mechanics' Institution. Date: PM 8 Oct 1845.

IV,403.4. To J. S. STREETER,[†1] 11 OCTOBER 1845*

MS Patrick Flower.

1 Devonshire Terrace | Eleventh October 1845.

Dear Sir

I am sorry I had not the pleasure of seeing you, when you did me the favor to call here yesterday.

You quite mistake me if you suppose me to have expressed any desire that Mr. Thompson and Mr. Weller[†2] should meet.[†3] It seemed to me, after hearing both parties in reference to the unquestionably hurried proceeding which has divided them, that I was in a manner bound to enquire if an opportunity for explanation could be arranged. But I must beg to say, most distinctly, that no consideration should induce me to merit the responsibility of expressing my personal wish on the subject, or of setting before either of the gentlemen any ultimate object whatever.

I am Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

J. S. Streeter Esquire

IV,403.18. To J. S. STREETER, 12 OCTOBER 1845*

MS Patrick Flower.

Devonshire Terrace. | Sunday October Twelfth | 1845.

Dear Sir

I have put Mr. Thompson in possession of our short correspondence and have undertaken at his request to let you know that he will be happy to meet Mr. Weller at any time and place he may appoint.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

J. S. Streeter Esquire

IV,407.9.

(To T. J. THOMPSON, 17 OCTOBER 1845) delete 1882

IV,411.

n. 4 line 11 for William Scott Russell read John Scott Russell

IV,421.17.

(To THE COUNTESS OF BLESSINGTON, 31 OCTOBER 1845) replace headnote with MS Brigham Young University insert line Devonshire Terrace | Thirty First October 1845.

21. new para at I have written . . .

22. new para at Enclosed is a note . . .

November

IV,424.19. To WILLIAM SHOBERL, 3 NOVEMBER 1845*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Novr. 3rd. 1845.

Dear Sir

The Performance on the 15th. (which is at the St. James's Theatre, not Miss Kelly's)[†1] is for the benefit of an Institution called the Sanatorium; and although the tickets are privately issued, they are purchased at a Guinea each. I should have been very happy to have sent you an admission, I assure you, if I had had the power.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. Shoberl Esquire

IV,437.1. To GEORGE CATTERMOLE, 18 NOVEMBER [1845]*

Replaces catalogue mention (Vol. VII, p. 865)

MS Martin R. Nason. Date: 1845, since related to letters to Cattermole of Sep 45.

Devonshire Terrace
November Eighteenth

My Dear George

I have been busy all the week, and quite forgot to write to you until this moment. What can I say! Mrs. D had solemnly promised and vowed in my name that I would dine at Macready's today—and I have no choice. Shall our dinner stand over until this day week at 6? Or shall I take counsel with Forster and Mac to enlarge the party and change the place (as the former told me you had been talking of). Let me know, and forgive this tardy notice, like a Christian artist.

Faithfully Yours
CD

IV,440.23. To ALBERT SMITH,[†1] 27 NOVEMBER 1845

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, 15 & 16 July 1998; MS 3 pp.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 27 November 1845; addressed Albert Smith.

Discussing the dramatization of The Cricket, is willing to exchange ideas with him on the subject when Smith has read the little book through. Notes that Willmott[†2] will have the concluding portion that night which he will send on to him. Many interpolations will be necessary, I think, for stage purposes;[†3] as I have, for my purposes, touched the story through, with as delicate and quiet a hand as I could bring to bear upon it. . . . Mr. Wigan[†4] should certainly play the Deaf old Gentleman, as he would make the last part of the character very gallant and good. . . . Willmott. . . queries, in his note to me, Meadows[†5] for Tackleton, I say certainly.

December

IV,445.11. To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 2 DECEMBER 1845*

MS Klaus Schappert.

90 Fleet Street
Second December 1845.
| Tuesday Evening

Dear Sir

I beg to return you the letters of Mr. Wilkinson,[†1] which are very plain, sensible, and straight-forward.

The usual terms for such communications, are Three Guineas for every letter inserted in the Paper. The conductors of The Daily News will be glad to begin on such conditions with Mr. Wilkinson; and to increase his remuneration if they should find him doing good service to the Paper.

I would rather, if you please, that Mr. Page[†2] did not make the proposal of which we spoke this morning, to the Times. It would place both newspapers in a disagreeable posture of antagonism, and would lead, I am persuaded, to no other result.

I am Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

IV,446.2.

(To J. H. STOCQUELER, [?1-4 DECEMBER 1845]) Replace MS[2] . . . Ltd with MS[2] Free Library of Philadelphia

n. 2 line 1 delete salutation

IV,452.7. To J. T. DANSON,[†1] 18 DECEMBER 1845†

[a]Replaces catalogue extract[aa] (Vol. VII, p. 866)

MS (only ending and signature in CD's hand), Martin R. Nason.

OFFICE OF THE DAILY NEWS,
90, Fleet Street, and Whitefriars. | 18 December, 1845

Dear Sir

[a] I have no doubt whatever of the great importance of the suggestions contained in your letter of Tuesday night, or of the expediency of carrying the greater part of them into as rigorous effect as may be compatible with the innumerable demands upon the space of the paper.[a†2]

I am unwilling to bind you down to any particular day next week; when, I have no reason to doubt, that I shall be here every day from twelve o'Clock till two. Pray choose your own time, and believe that it will afford me the greatest pleasure to be favoured with your co-operation, and to carry out your very excellent and useful ideas.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

J. T. Danson Esquire

IV,452.19. To GEORGE CATTERMOLE, 22 DECEMBER 1845†

[a]Replaces catalogue summary and extract[aa] (Vols IV, p. 416 [misdated] and VII, p. 867)

MS Martin R. Nason.

Devonshire Terrace
Monday Twenty Second December | 1845.

My Dear George. We are going to play at Miss Kelly's Theatre for Miss Kelly's benefit on Saturday the 3rd. of January—short notice, but we are tied for time. We are going to act a play called The Elder Brother,[†1] and the enclosed Farce[†2]— don't mind the marks in the book; I have been learning my part from it: and have no other.

Gregory, in the Farce, is a very short part, but funny. Will you like to play it, in a red wig and wooden shoes? If not, Jerrold[†3] will. We rehearse tomorrow at 6, & shall take the Farce after the Play. The dresses will come from the Haymarket and will cost nothing.

[a] Let me know what you decide, like a Kittenmolian Trojan. And with love from all here to all there,

Believe me Ever | Heartily Yours
CD[a]

IV,472.1. To W. D. EWARD,[†1] [?DECEMBER 1845-FEBRUARY 1846]

Extract in Lion Heart Autographs Inc., May 2000; MS 2 pp.; dated Daily News Office, n.d.; addressed W.D. Eward. Date: between Dec 45 and Feb 46, when CD was actively involved in running the Daily News.

It is very painful to me to say that I am quite powerless to assist you. No such situation as you require is vacant in the establishment connected with the new morning paper: every kind of office attached to it is already filled and applications similar to yours are so numerous that I have scarcely time to answer or even count them. I have left your manuscript under cover for you at my house. After what I have said I am sure you will not expect that I should give you any opinion on it, having so little leisure for my own affairs.

I am Sir | Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

IV,485.27. To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, [?DECEMBER 1845 — FEBRUARY 1846]*

MS Private. Date: clearly in the Daily News period, after its planning in Oct 45 and before CD's resignation from it in Feb 46.

Devonshire Terrace | Tuesday.

My Dear [ ][†1]

The Irish correspondent[†2] was appointed, and all that system arranged, at least Three Months ago. Otherwise (apart from my regard for you) I should have been delighted to ensure immediate attention to any recommendation of Lady Morgan's.[†3]

Believe me always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

[ ][†1]

1846

February

IV,493.1. To J. T. DANSON, 9 FEBRUARY 1846†

[a]Replaces catalogue extract[aa] (Vol. VII, p. 868)

MS Martin R. Nason.

Whitefriars
Monday night Ninth February 1846

My Dear Sir

I am sorry to say that your Leader in today's paper[†1] (which I had not seen when I had the pleasure of seeing you this afternoon) has no warrant whatever in anything that had been previously written on the subject in the Daily News, and does go infinitely beyond any other writer associated with it. [a] From the first moment, all the writers of Leading articles here, have admitted that there is a great good in Sir Robert Peel's plan[†2] and that there is a great principle asserted in it; but [†b] have contended[†b] that it is harnessed and yoked to petty drawbacks which impair its efficiency. To say that we "cannot approve of its general scope or of its details", and that it is "miserably unsuited to the occasion, and paltry in the extreme", is to out-Herod Herod, most violently, and to stand quite alone by yourself and apart from the paper.[a] The writers of Leaders who met here today were unanimous in this opinion; and I share it, thoroughly.[†3]

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

J. T. Danson Esquire

IV,503.1. To MR GLOVER,[†1] 20 FEBRUARY 1846*

MS Private.

London. 1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Twentieth February 1846.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Glover, and begs to say that he has not the least objection to freely giving the permission Mr. Glover seeks to obtain, provided that the extracts be kept within reasonable limits.

IV,518.

n. 1 Col. 2 last line for xxxi read xxi

March

IV,520. 7. up. To MR HUDSON,[†1] 16 MARCH 1846

Text from digitized facsimile in Honesty Gallery website, 24 Apr 2001.

Devonshire Terrace | Sixteenth March 1846

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Hudson, and will be glad to receive Six Dozen of Punch,[†2] as soon as convenient to Mr. H. Mr. Dickens will send Mr. Hudson a cheque for the unpaid account, if that form of remittance will suit Mr. Hudson.

IV,520.

n. 3 add and see Vol. VII (Addenda), p. 869 for an additional note

IV,526.17. To SAMUEL PALMER,[†1] 28 MARCH 1846

[a]Extract and facsimile[aa] in Christie's catalogue, May 1995; MS 2 pp.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 28 Mar 46; addressed Samuel Palmer.

Mr. Evans informed me that besides the question of calculation in reference to the size, price, and form of the book:[†2] (always necessary when Illustrations are contemplated) there was a question in his mind whether your mode of drawing on the wood did not leave too much to the Engraver, and would not materially increase the expense. . . . [a] Engraver, and (if I remember right) he mentioned to me that it would be Monday or Tuesday before he would be in a condition to see you again. I have, however, written to him by this Post, and informed him of your note.

I am Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS[a]

Samuel Palmer Esquire

April

IV,531.5. To JAMES SHERMAN,[†1] 11 APRIL 1846

Replaces catalogue extract[aa]

MS Private.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Eleventh April 1846.

[a] Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Sherman, and begs to express his regret that he is prevented by other engagements from accepting the Invitation of the Officers and Stewards of the New Asylum for[†2] Infant Orphans,[a†3] to support Lord Morpeth[†4] on the 27th. of May.

IV,539.28. To CHARLES NIXON,[†1] 22 APRIL 1846

Extract in Unidentified catalogue; MS 1 p.; dated 22 Apr 46; addressed Charles Nixon.

Declining an invitation from the Parochial Committee. I think it very probable I may be induced to take my family to Switzerland this summer, and may remain there (for the more quiet execution of a literary project) some twelve months.

IV,539.29. To SAMUEL PALMER, 22 APRIL 1846*

Replaces catalogue summary (Vol. VII, p. 870)

MS Documenting History Ltd., Guernsey.

Devonshire Terrace
Wednesday Twenty Second April | 1846.

Dear Sir.

If you can spare me the little book containing the published letters[†1] I shall be much obliged to you, as I wish to refer to it.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Samuel Palmer Esquire.

May

IV,544.22. To J. T. DANSON, 4 MAY 1846*

Replaces catalogue summary (Vol. VII, p. 870)

MS Martin R. Nason.

Devonshire Terrace | Fourth May 1846.

My Dear Sir

In reply to your letter appealing to my recollection of the circumstances under which you undertook "the two supplements" you prepared for the Daily News. I beg to say that I can only charge my memory with the understanding in reference to the first. It distinctly was, that as you had originally contemplated it in the form of a pamphlet, Messrs. Bradbury and Evans, acting for the Proprietors of the Daily News, were to make you some recompense in money, over and above your salary, for it. And I recollect taking care to have that understood between myself and Messrs. Bradbury and Evans in the presence of Mr. Paxton.[†1]

I am Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

J. Towne Danson Esquire

IV,545.31. To J. T. DANSON, 7 MAY 1846*

Replaces catalogue summary (Vol. VII, p. 870)

MS Martin R. Nason. Address: J. T. Danson Esquire | 8 Shaftesbury Crescent | Eccleston Square.[aa] Written above caret.

Devonshire Terrace | Seventh May 1846

My Dear Sir

I can have no possible hesitation in confirming your recollection [a] of what passed between yourself and me[a] touching the second supplement you prepared for the Daily News. Nothing, as you observe in your letter, was said on the subject of remuneration. But I sanctioned the preparation of the supplement, and encouraged the idea, beyond all kind of question.[†1]

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

J. T. Danson Esquire

IV,546.10. To JAMES BINGLEY,[†1] 9 MAY 1846*

MS Margaret E. Coleman

Devonshire Terrace | Ninth May 1846

Sir.

I regret that it will not be in my power to have the honor of receiving the Deputation[†2] on Monday, as I have a very special and particular engagement for that day.

I would appoint another immediately, but that I fear I might, by so doing, give the Deputation unnecessary and useless trouble. I am on the eve of going abroad for some months and have so many engagements to fulfil before leaving town, that I could not possibly add to the number. If the object of the Deputation should be to request me to preside at, or to attend, any Meeting of the Marylebone Literary and Scientific Institution,[†3] therefore, I think it right to say, I could not have that gratification.

If their purpose in waiting on me be of any other kind, I shall be happy to make an appointment with you.

I have the honor to be | Sir
Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

James Bingley Esquire

IV,546.18. To WILLIAM CULLENFORD,[†1] 13 MAY 1846*

Replaces catalogue summary.

MS Beinecke Library, Yale University.

Devonshire Terrace | Thirteenth May 1846.

My Dear Sir

I beg you to assure the Directors of the General Theatrical Fund,[†2] that I am much gratified by the Resolution conveyed to me in your letter of yesterday; and that I receive it as a very welcome mark of their regard.

Such services as I can render to the Institution will always be most freely at the Directors' command. I have the greatest interest in it, and shall ever esteem it a gratification to be able to render it the least assistance.[†3]

I am | Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

William Cullenford Esquire.

IV,549.

n. 3 line 2 for 207*n read* 217*n*

August

IV,601.17.

(To JOHN FORSTER, [9 and 10 AUGUST 1846]) after dungeon; add[2a]

insert. [2a] François de Bonivard (or Bonivard), (1493-1570); Prior of the Abbey of St Victor; opposed the Duke of Savoy who imprisoned him; subject of Byron's Prisoner of Chillon, 1816.

APPENDIX C

IV,704.2.

for MAY 1854 read MAY 1844

Index of Correspondents

731. Mitton, Thomas after 20 add (2)

Index of Names and Places

734 col. 1 All the Year Round: add CD's `The Haunted House' 195n;

745 col. 1 DICKENS, Mrs Charles Other references: add birth of Francis 21n, 22hn, 23, 36n

747 col. 1 Elton, Esther after 374 delete n

752 col. 1 Household Words: line 4 delete `The Haunted House' 195n

763 col. 1 Pollock, for F. read W. F.

col. 2 RADLEY, for Samuel read James

765 col. 1 Russell, William Scott for William read John

Volume V, 1847-1849

V,x.

bottom line for 1847 read 1847;

V,xii

5th line from bottom for 1980 read 1981

n. 8 for ed, Niva read ed. Nina

V,xx

line 14 for 15 Jan read 16 Jan

V,14.

n. 2 line 5 read Charles James Mathews

n. 5 line 10 for quartorze read quatorze

1847

February

V,21.19.

(To WILLIAM CULLENFORD, 5 FEBRUARY 1847) for Private read Beinecke Library, Yale University

V,21.

n. 1 line 2 delete Papworth and substitute Stokes

V,24.

n. 1 2nd col. line 1 align quotation marks

V,35.

n. 2 line 2 for two sides read one side

March

V,45.2.

(To THE REV. F. W. H. LAYTON, 25 MARCH 1847) headnote read MS Graham Storey.

V,47.6.

(To WILLIAM JERDAN, 30 MARCH 1847)

V,56.

n. 1 line 11 for adimred read admired

V,57.

n. 4 line 5 for Commissoners read Commissioners

May

V,75.13. To NICHOLAS TRÜBNER,[†1] 26 MAY 1847*

MS Varnhagen Collection, Jagiellonian University, Krakov.

148 King's Road, Brighton | Twenty Sixth May 1847.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Trübner, and begs to say, in reply to Mr. Trübner's letter, that the question to which it refers, will certainly not arise until shortly before the publication of the next Christmas Book,[†2] when Mr. Dickens will authorize his publishers, Messrs. Bradbury and Evans, to communicate with Mr. Trübner whom he begs to thank for his obliging note.[†3]

V,75.14. To ERASMUS WILSON,[†1] 26 MAY 1847

Extract in Charles W. Traylen catalogue (1989); dated Kings Road, Brighton, 26 May 1847; addressed Erasmus Wilson.

Thanking him for sending a book[†2] which I have read with the greatest interest and pleasure; not less for the very kind and welcome note accompanying it.

V,85.

n. 4 line 3 for IV read IV,

June

V,96.2.

(To DR JAMES KAY-SHUTTLEWORTH, 21 JUNE 1847) for Mrs Jessie Stewart read Free Library of Phildelphia

V,102.

n. 4 replace with CD was staying at 38 Albion Street when he wrote ch. 12 of The Old Curiosity Shop published in Master Humphrey's Clock No. XIII (27 June 40), at the end of which Nell and her grandfather flee from the shop.

V,106.

n. 6 line 5 delete and 263n

V,109.9. To MESSRS BRADBURY & EVANS, 30 JUNE 1847*

Replaces catalogue mention

MS W. A. Foyle.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Thirtieth June 1847.

My Dear B and E.

Will you tell the publisher of the D.N. to tell the newsman who sends my paper (I don't know who he is) to post it so that I may receive it here, on the day of publication.

Further, will you instruct Mr. Smith in your counting-house to pay my subscription for a copy of "Poems by Harriet and Rose Acton"†1 (which has been delivered to me) to whomsoever Miss Rose Acton may authorize to receive the same.

I think that's all I have to trouble you about at present.

Ever Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Bradbury and Evans.

V,109.

n. 3 line 4 for 18 16. read 1816.

V,110.

n. 4 line 3 for planned. read planned,

July

V,121.13.

(To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, 9 [JULY] 1847) after CD add 1*a*

Insert. 1*a* In his own prompt copy of Duncombe's edn of Turning the Tables CD has written out the parts to be filled, in his own hand: "Knibbs . . . Mr George Cruikshank | Jeremiah Bumps . . . Charles Dickens | Edgar de Courcy . . . Dudley Costello | Thornton . . . T. J. Thompson | Jack Humphries . . . Lewes | Miss Knibbs | Mrs Humphries | Patty Larkins" (MS Cornell University Library); the names of the actresses to play the ladies parts are not given.

V,134.

n. 2 line 2 for 30 read 31

August

V,137.1. To [?THE REV. FRANCIS HODGSON],[†1] 2 AUGUST 1847*

MS Jonathan Whitman Cross.

Broadstairs, Kent.
Second August 1847.

Dear Sir

I am obliged to you for your letter, for I receive it as a mark of your confidence and good opinion. Excuse this tardy reply. It is occasioned by my absence from town in the first instance, and from this place afterwards.

You do me justice in taking it for granted that I am an admirer of Fielding.[†2] I knew his books, in a child's innocent way, so long ago, that I can almost say I remember nothing before them. And my more mature acquaintance with his extraordinary wit and genius, has been as intimate and close as that first knowledge. But you will readily believe that in all cases of public subscription (so very numerous are they, in their appeals to me) I am obliged to discriminate somewhat nicely, or I should be very soon ruined. I do not question the propriety of putting Fielding's Bust in Eton College[†3]—it appears a most fit and proper proceeding—but I am sorry to add I more than question the reasonableness of my subscribing money to place it there. If it were proposed to set it up in some edifice belonging to the public, and always accessible by them, I should contribute my mite, instantly. But I fear in such a case as this, I must leave the purchase to those who are, or have been, connected with the Institution.

Let me assure you again, that I am sincerely glad to have received your letter,—and that I have perfect confidence in your not misunderstanding my[†4]

V,137.2. To MISS KELLY, 2 AUGUST 1847†

Replaces N catalogue extract[aa]

MS Roy Waters. Address: Miss Kelly | 73 Dean Street | Soho | London.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Second August 1847.

My Dear Miss Kelly.

[a] As I am making up the accounts of the late benefit[†1] (which you will be glad to hear has been brilliantly successful) will you do me the favor to send me a memorandum by post of the amount in which we are indebted to you,[a†2] that I may immediately discharge it.

Always Dear Miss Kelly | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Kelly.

V,141.

n. 2 2nd col. lines 4 and 5 delete Catherine Dickens and read Mrs Lemon was pregnant

V,142.15. To T. N. TALFOURD, [4 AUGUST 1847]

Envelope only in Christie's catalogue, May 1995; addressed: Mr. Serjeant Talfourd M. P., Oxford Circuit, Monmouth PM 4 Aug 47 Ramsgate & Gloucester

V,153.5. To JOHN HENRY MACFARLANE,[†1] 26 AUGUST 1847*

MS Kevin MacDonnell. Address: John Henry Macfarlane Esquire | Broad Street | Bath.[†2]

London. 1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Twenty Sixth August 1847[†3]

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Macfarlane, and will be happy to become a subscriber to his book of church chants.[†4]

Mr. Macfarlane will have the kindness, perhaps, to cause the work to be delivered (when published) to Messrs. Bradbury and Evans, Bouverie Street London, who will pay the subscription.

V,153.15

(To [?CHARLES] HERBERT, 28 AUGUST 1847) add after 28 Aug 47. Checked from MS Sotheby's.

add above line 17: Broadstairs Kent, Twenty Eight August 1847.

V,157.

n. 4 line 2 delete DNB

n. 5 line 2 for 1845 read 1843

September

V,168.15. To THE PROPRIETOR OF THE BULL INN, ROCHESTER,[†1] 27 SEPTEMBER 1847*

MS Michael Silverman.

Maidstone | Monday Evening Twenty seventh September 1847.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to the Proprietor of the Bull Inn at Rochester, and begs to say that he wishes to have a sitting-room and three bedrooms prepared for him tomorrow (Tuesday). Also a comfortable dinner, probably for five persons but certainly for four, at 5 o'Clock exactly.†2 Mrs. Dickens will arrive at about mid-day.

November

V,192.23.

(To JAMES CROSSLEY, 9 NOVEMBER 1847) for than read that

V,206.

n. 5 lines 1 and 2 for Robert Richard read Richard Robert line 3 for 5 Oct 47, fn read 5 Oct 48, fn

V,223.

n. 2 line 11 for Pubilc read Public

1848

January

V,234.3 up.

(To WILLIAM BROWN, [14 JANUARY 1848]) for be read by

V,237.6.

(To J. MACGREGOR, [?24] JANUARY 1848) add a before I write

13. add [a] after morning after n. 2 add [aa] Given in N, 11, 70 from catalogue source.

V,240.

n. 3 for 27 read 26

V,241.

n. 7 line 3 for on read in

V,253.

n. 1 line 9 for MS Roger W. Barrett read MS Free Library of Philadelphia

V,255.

n. 2 lines 2-5 delete in the Throne Room and It remains there, unseen.

V,280.

n. 4 replace with The name deleted is Edward (i.e. Bulwer Lytton)

April

V,282.7 up.

(To G. H. LEWES, 16 APRIL 1848) for Emery's-Andrew read Emery's —Andrew

V,283.1. To CAPTAIN JOHNS,[†1] 17 APRIL 1848*

Extract in Sophie Dupré catalogue, No. 26 (1992); MS 1 p.; ending and signature removed; dated 1 Devonshire Terrace, 17 Apr 48; addressed "My Dear Johns".

Hastening to say (for self and Co) that I believe any early day in any week will suit us quite as well as Easter Monday . . . we shall hold ourselves in preparation for further orders.

V,288.

n. 5 after Given in add op. cit.

V,291.14. To THE RIGHT HON. THE LORD BROUGHAM,[†1] 27 APRIL 1848*

MS Messrs Maggs Bros.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Twenty Seventh April 1848.

Dear Lord Brougham.

Lord Robertson[†2] and one or two other friends whom you know, are going to dine here on Friday the fifth of May, at 7 o'Clock. In case you should have no other engagement than the House of Lords, and that should not hold you late, it would afford Mrs. Dickens and myself the greatest pleasure if you would dine with us.

Believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

May

V,294.7. To C. A. COLE,[†1] [?1 MAY 1848]*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Date: probably before letter dated 7 May enclosing pass to keep out strangers from the Amateurs' rehearsals; Mon was 1 May.

Athenaeum | Monday

My Dear Sir

I am glad to hear it:—I forgot to mention, in reply to your enquiry of the other day (and I can't bear to leave anything unanswered). No strangers certainly.

Faithfully Yours alwys
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Cole Esquire

V,294.

n. 5 (293 cont.) 2nd col. line 7 for han d read hand

V,302.15. To C. A. COLE, 9 MAY 1848

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Devonshire Terrace.
Ninth May 1848. | Tuesday.

My Dear Sir

I send you Every Man[†1] and have turned down the leaf of Formal's scene. It is a short one, as you see, but always tells well, and was played the last time we acted by Cruikshank.

we rehearse this play at the Haymarket, at one to day you know.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Augustus Cole Esquire.

V,302.16.

(To THOMAS BEARD, 10 MAY 1848) for Square read Place

V,303.

n. 5 line 9 for fo read of

V,309.7 up.

(To CHARLES EVANS, 19 MAY 1848) for EVANS,[7] read EVANS,[6]

V,317.

n. 3 line 6 after 3 Mar 49 add and n

V,319.22.

(To FRANCIS ROBINSON, 24 MAY 1848) before The add a

320.3. after Montague.[2] add[a]

after n. 2 insert [aa] Given in N.

V,320.20. To CHARLES KEMBLE,[†1] 25 MAY 1848*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Devonshire Terrace
York Gate Regents Park
Twenty Fifth May 1848.

My Dear Mr. Kemble.

Many very distinguished men in art, letters and station, have empowered Macready's friends to attach their names to a document of which I enclose a copy.[†2] I feel, as I know Macready would, that it would be signally incomplete without your name. Will you give me authority to use it?[†3]

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Kemble Esquire

June

V,327.15. To DR JOHN ELLIOTSON, 9 JUNE 1848

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue (Pencarrow), Dec 1999; MS 2 pp.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 9 June 48; addressed Dr John Elliotson.

Referring to the ill-health of his servant the "Brave Courier"[†1] of my little Italian book[†2]—the most honest and loving of servants who has been unwell for some time and was seized with a violent pain in the chest, and a deadness in the left arm; adding that the man expresses himself badly in English, but understands it perfectly well when spoken to plainly.

V,329.1. To DR JOHN ELLIOTSON, 10 JUNE 1848*

MS Michael Silverman.

Devonshire Terrace | Tenth June 1848.
Saturday Evg

My Dear Elliotson

I am deeply sorry to receive the intelligence you send me of the Brave Courier, who is one of the gentlest and most genial natures in the world.

These fadings away, are dreadful things, and so are all the pains and penalties of our mortal state. But I am sure if any man has reason to find comfort in them, you have, who can administer so much, and always with such kindness and consideration.

I thank you from my heart and am ever yours affectionately.

CHARLES DICKENS

Dr. Elliotson

V,339.1. To G. H. LEWES,[†1] 14 JUNE 1848*

MS Joseph Rubinfine.

Devonshire Terrace
Fourteenth June 1848.

My Dear Lewes.

Pray don't suppose that I, for a moment, misunderstood you. I know you gave up Andrew[†2] in pure sincerity and good nature. No fragment of doubt or annoyance was near my mind.

Topham[†3] is caged[†4]—at least Stone[†5] says so, with a damned, portentous, wooden-looking, pursed-up, air of mystery that the Devil couldn't understand.

Cordially always
CHARLES DICKENS

G. H. Lewes Esquire

V,340.2.

(To ANDREW S. DALGLISH, 16 JUNE 1848) for Robert K. Black read Beinecke Library, Yale University

V,352.

n. 6 line 9 for to him to read to him in To

V,354.

n. 3 line 2 read Charles James Mathews

July

V,372.18.

(To R.H. HORNE, 13 JULY 1848) headnote read MS Martin R. Nason

19. for Fallow read Fallon

26. for list and . . . children's read list. And . . . childrens'

27. for & Merton read and Merton

373.4. for must . . . out for read merely . . . out, for

10. for Esq. read Esquire

V,374.27. To H. M. CUSTOMS & EXCISE, 20 JULY 1848*

MS Jann Paton.

Glasgow | Twentieth July 1848.

This is to certify that I give my full permission for the introduction into England of one copy of a republication of "Dombey and Son", issued by M. Tauchnitz of Leipzig, and belonging to Mr. W.A. Platenius.[†1]

CHARLES DICKENS

V,389.

n. 1 2nd col. lines 6 and 7 delete She acted in CD's amateur theatricals 1850-1.

August

V,394.14.

(To MISS FANNY KELLY, 18 AUGUST 1848) before I should add a

27. after pieces on it add [a] after n. 1 insert [aa] Extract in W.T. Spencer, Forty Years in my Bookshop, 1923, p. 141 (misdated 15 Aug.).

September

V,414.1.

(To JOHN FORSTER, [LATE SEPTEMBER 1848]) for vois read vous

V,415.

n. 4 line 1 for Robert Richard read Richard Robert

V,431.

n. 3 replace with Charles Morgan, the family doctor.

November

V,437.2.

(To EFFINGHAM WILSON, 7 NOVEMBER 1848) replace headnote with MS Robin Whitworth. On mourning paper.

4. read Seventh November 1848.

12. at left margin insert William Wilson Esquire and delete square brackets round signature

V,443

n. 1 line 2 after Barnaby add and The Old Curiosity Shop.

V,444.11. To LEIGH HUNT, 22 NOVEMBER 1848*

MS Private. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace
Twenty Second November | 1848.

My Dear Hunt.

Of my interest in such a character in a play of yours,[†1] there is no sort of doubt; and I take your connexion of me with it in your mind as a great compliment.

But the playing at all, depends, (with me) so much on the where, with whom, and for what, that I must ask you to tell me all about these particulars before I can give my answer to your note.

I am going to Brighton today, to finish my little Christmas Book. Any note addressed to me at the Bedford Hotel there, will find me.

My Dear Hunt | Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

I am sorry I was out yesterday, when your son Vincent brought your letter.

December

V,451.11.

(To WILLIAM BRADBURY, 1 DECEMBER 1848) for Comtesse de Suzannet read Free Library of Philadelphia.

17. for straightaway, read straightway,

V,455.11.

(To CHARLES MANBY, 12 DECEMBER 1848) delete The

V,456.10 up.

(To MARK LEMON, [?13 DECEMBER 1848]) after paper. add Misdated 1 Mar 50 in N.

V,463.1. To FELIX JOYCE,[†1] [29 DECEMBER 1848]

Envelope only in Farahar & Dupré catalogue, 1993. Address: Mr Joyce, Messrs Bradbury & Evans, 11 Bouverie Street, Fleet Street. PM 29 Dec 1848.

V,471.

n. 1 replace with Probably Capt. John Hewitt. See Vol. iii, pp. 7 and n, and 452 and n.

V,473.

n. 1 replace 1st sentence with Celebrated on Saturday, 6 Jan (Twelfth Night); Forster mistakenly says Sunday was the 6th.

1849

February

V,484.10.

(To CHARLES DE LA PRYME, 2 FEBRUARY 1849) delete THE REV.

V,490.2.

(To CHARLES ELLIS, 3 FEBRUARY 1849) add On mourning paper. after House.

V,499.1.

(To JAMES DONALDSON, 20 FEBRUARY 1849) add * after 1849

March

V,503.24.

(To FRANK STANFELL, 2 MARCH 1849) delete * after 1849

V,517.5.

(To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 29 MARCH 1849) add a before As

28. add [a] after assistance before n. 1 insert [aa] Given in N.

V,519.1.

(To P. O'BRIEN, [LATE JANUARY-MARCH 1849]) for P. O. BRIEN read P. O'BRIEN

n. 1 lines 1-2 delete Unidentified . . . P. O'Brien ( line 4 delete closing bracket

April

V,523.16. To EFFINGHAM WILSON,[†1] 10 APRIL 1849*

MS Robin Whitworth.

Devonshire Terrace | Tenth April 1849.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. William Wilson, and begs, with many thanks, to acknowledge the receipt of his second pamphlet.[†2]

V.524.11 To MRS MORSON,[†1] 12 APRIL 1849*

Text from Robin A. Fenner catalogue, July 2001; checked from photocopy of MS.

Devonshire Terrace
Thursday Twelfth April | 1849.

Dear Madam

The lady[†2] to whom the field belongs, is quite right, I enclose you another cheque for four pounds.

Faithfully yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Morson

V.527.9 up.

(To DUDLEY COSTELLO, 25 APRIL 1849) replace Facsimile . . . 125, with MS Dickens House.

V,532.

n. 1 col. 2 add for Mrs Carlyle's comments see Vol. v, p. 539, n. 3 and below.

V,539.

n. 3 1st col. line 2 for Sat 31 Mar read Sat 12 May.

line 7 for 5 Apr read 17 May; add misdated by L. Huxley (ed. Jane Welsh Carlyle: Letters to her Family, 1839-1863, 1924, p. 326), who took "Holy Thursday" to be Maundy Thursday instead of Ascension Day

2nd col. lines 13 | 14 delete Mrs Gaskell . . . 4 May, fn)

May

V,540.2.

(To MRS JOLL, 15 MAY 1849) for G.F. Sims read Beinecke Library, Yale University

V,540.32. To MRS MORSON, 16 MAY 1849*

Replaces catalogue summary

MS Private.

Devonshire Terrace | Sixteenth May 1849.

Dear Mrs. Morson.

I am truly glad to hear that your letter to Isabella Gordon[†1] has produced so good an effect. I hope it will be a lasting one, and that an attachment to you may get the better of a restlessness which I have no doubt will sometimes come upon her.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

V,569.9.

(To C.R. LESLIE, 10 JULY 1849) replace Extract in . . . 1930) with MS Lady Butterfield after line 11 insert My dear Leslie after line 14 insert Faithfully Yours always CHARLES DICKENS insert subscription C.R. Leslie Esquire.

V,595.

n. 2 line 3 for Middlesex read Surrey

V,603.

n. 2 line 1 for Julie read Julia

August

V,606.8.

(To JOHN FORSTER, [AUGUST 1849]) add square brackets round 4-5 Aug

V,611.

n. 2 col. 2 add However A.P. Milyukov reports that Vvedensky gave him an account of his meeting with Dickens and opined that "the two hours which he spent with him" were unforgettable and were to be reckoned as the best time of his life (Appx by M.P. Alkseev of Yu. V. Fridlender & I.M. Katarsky, Charlz Dikkens. Bibliografiya russkikh perevodov i kriticheskoi literatury na russkom yazyke, 1838-1960 (Moscow, 1962, p. 245).

V,622.

n. 3 for Stove, read Stone,

V,625.

n. 3 add and after Sep,

V,632.

n. 1 line 6 for Philadephis read Philadelphia

V,636.

n. 5 replace with A nickname for Augustus Egg.

November

V,644.9. To JOHN BRITTON,[†1] 13 NOVEMBER 1849*

MS British Library.

Devonshire Terrace
Tuesday Night | Thirteenth November 1849.

My Dear Mr. Britton

I am neither "afraid", nor "ashamed" nor "too bashful", to join the party to which you kindly invite me on Tuesday the 20th. But I am something quite as much to the purpose, and that is—engaged. For which reason I write an ill conditioned, vexed, and malicious reply. In witness whereof I hereunto set my hand and seal, on the day and date first above written.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Britton Esquire.

V,657.13. To FREDERICK DOULTON,[†1] 23 NOVEMBER 1849

Summary in Christie's catalogue, Nov 1992; MS 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 23 Nov 49; addressed Frederick Doulton.

Regretting that he is unable to attend the occasion to which his correspondent has called his attention.

V,658.5. To R.J. WATTS,[†1] 23 NOVEMBER 1849

Replaces small catalogue extract

Extracts in Heritage Book Shop catalogue, 1995 and[aa] Sotheby's catalogue, Dec 1997; MS 2 pp.; dated 23 Nov 49; addressed R.J. Watts.

I beg to remind you, in reply to your letter, that of course I imagine and have no doubt that private executions would be tolerated in England, or I never should have written the letters to which you refer[†2]—or would have done so with the least honesty.

Allow me to add that you misapprehend (through some fault of mine, I dare say) my whole argument when you think [a] it would go to the "closing of every place of public resort in London, because it affords an opportunity for the assembling of bad characters." I know of no place of resort in London where bad characters can find any sight half so bad in its influence upon them as a public execution—half so indecent and bad itself—or at all like it in any respect.[a] n. 4. replace with An omnibus tout at the Ship Inn, Charing Cross: see Vol. vi, p. 576 and n.

V,669.

December

V,670.1. To MR STRANGE,[†1] 12 DECEMBER 1849*

MS Heritage Book Shop, Los Angeles.

Devonshire Terrace | Twelfth December 1849.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Strange, and regrets that his engagements render it quite out of his power to avail himself of the invitation with which he is honored, to the annual meeting of the Westminster chapel Ragged School.†2

V,671.

n. 3. After DAB add; according to American news cuttings Powell had been ill for six weeks of Bright's disease and died at the home of his daughter in Newark, N.J. (Carlton Papers, Dickens House).

V,674.2.

(To MARK LEMON, 18 DECEMBER 1849) after 114. add Checked from MS Sotheby's.

3. replace with Dev: Terr: Tuesday 18th Decr. 1849 [probably in Forster's hand]

4. read My dear Lemon

5. for Box read Box, for play read Play

9. new paragraph I believe . . .

V,682.1. To MRS MORSON, 27 DECEMBER 1849*

Text from Robin A. Fenner catalogue, July 2001; checked from photocopy of MS.

Devonshire Terrace
Thursday Twenty Seventh December | 1849.

Dear Mrs. Morson

I have received the money quite safely. I am sorry you took the trouble to send it.

Mrs. Macartney will have told you, I suppose, that next Monday is the committee Day. Will you let the gentlemen†1 know?

In the course of today, I hope to be able to send you word that Maria Cridge†2 is to go to Bartholomew's Hospital. Mr. Chesterton is endeavouring to obtain her admission there.

I shall be out before the Committee time on Monday, as I have still a little to do to my book.†3

Faithfully yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Morson.

V,682.

n. 3 line 4 delete de

683. n. 4 line 2 delete de

684. n. 3 line 1 delete de

Index of Correspondents

715 Cruikshank, George add 253n,

716 Dalglish add 333

717 Nugent for 421 read 521

718 Stone add 253n,

Index of Names and Places

720 col. 2 BALLARD, James for 565 read 568

725 col. 2 CRUIKSHANK, George: and amateur theatricals add 253n,

726 col. 2 DE LA PRYME delete Rev.

731 col. 1 EGG, Augustus line 6 delete hn after 634

734 col. 2 GREY, Henry George add * after 421nn

736 col. 1 HORNE, Richard Henry line 6. for 586 read 566

737 col. 2 JOYCE, for Mr read Felix

743 col. 1 Mathews, Charles delete 14n, 354n

insert new entry Mathews, Charles James 14n, 354n

745 col. 1 delete the Papworth entry

col. 2 Pollock, Sir read J.F.; delete first ref

insert new entry Pollock, (Sir) W.F.: Personal Remembrances 548n

746 col. 1 QUIN, for Robert Richard read Richard Robert and add * after 415n

col. 2 ROBERTSON, Patrick for 624n read 625n

749 col. 2 after Stirling, Fanny add new entry Stokes, Veronica: "CD: A Customer of Coutts & Co." 21n

STONE, Frank: amateur theatricals add 253n

751 col. 1 Townshend for Chauncey read Chauncy

752 col. 2 White, Mrs James (Rose Hill) add 296

Volume VI, 1850-1852

VI,vii.

line 12 for November read October lines 16-17 for had been . . . Sep 49); read had been in his mind at least since 1844 (see Vol. IV, p. xiii and p. 327, with plan for weekly called The Cricket);

VI,xiii.27.

after Dickens's reply add[[text ref]]1*a*

Insert [1a] On 23 Dec 50

1850

January

VI,16.9. To DAVID ROBERTS,[†1] 27 JANUARY 1850*

Text from facsimile in Unidentified catalogue.

Devonshire Terrace
Twenty Seventh January 1850.

My Dear Roberts.

You could have offered me nothing more acceptable, but I am truly sorry to say that it is my ill fortune to be engaged on that day.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

David Roberts Esquire

VI,18.

n. 3 2nd col. line 10 for I read L

February

VI,31.10. To CHARLES MANBY,[†1] 7 FEBRUARY 1850*

MS Brian Lake.

Devonshire Terrace | Seventh February 1850.

My Dear Manby.

Allow me to present to you my brother Alfred, who is a Civil Engineer, and desirous of joining your Institute.[†2] I can very warmly commend him to your kindness—not quite impartially (I suppose you will think) but with a sincerely high opinion of his character and attainments.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Manby Esquire

VI,34.13.

(To MRS GASKELL, 9 FEBRUARY 1850) replace headnote with MS Free Library of Philadelphia

VI,36.

n. 5 (35 cont.) line 13 for To Macready, 31 Jan 52 read To Wills, 7 July 51

VI,47.

n. 4 2nd col. lines 24-5 for It . . . place read Its condition contributed to the quite different burial place

VI,50.

n. 8 last line read . . . from Ch. 28 in the Feb. No. . . .

VI,53.8.

Replaces catalogue extract[aa]

March To CHARLES KNIGHT, 4 MARCH 1850†

MS Martin R. Nason.

Devonshire Terrace | Fourth March 1850.

My Dear Knight

I have gone over the enclosed again, carefully, and, I have not the least doubt of its being most capital for Household Words.[†1]

The only question that occurs to me is, whether it would be possible to make the second article, the first—and the first, the second. My only reason for this, is, that it might be better to begin with a subject unconnected with [a] our own immediate interest as engaged in a publication.[a] But I only suggest this possibility to you.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Knight Esquire

VI,54.

n. 1 line 2 for 1862 read 1882

VI,59.6. To CHARLES KNIGHT, 9 MARCH 1850†

Replaces catalogue extract[aa]

MS Martin R. Nason.

HOUSEHOLD WORDS OFFICE,
Saturday Ninth March 1850

My Dear Knight

I called on you this morning in Fleet Street, but you had not arrived.

My object was to say that I think Miss Martineau's[†1] proposal[†2] a most useful and timely one; and that I am more than pleased to accept it. I shall look forward to the receipt of the first of the series.

[a] I read the Lucifer Match,[†3] as I was coming up from Brighton, and am greatly delighted with it.[a] The idea is a very happy one, and the treatment just what I would have it.

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Knight Esquire

VI,60.2.

(To AUGUSTUS DICKENS, 10 MARCH 1850) for Comtesse de Suzannet read Free Library of Philadelphia

VI,75.

n. 6 line 3 read Maclise's

VI,79.

n. 1 line 2 read No. 4 (20 Apr)

n. 2 1st col. line 11 for Summer in Italy read The Dream of the Lilybell, 1845 line 13 for 1849 read 1847 or 1848

VI,80.2.

April

(To PERCIVAL LEIGH, 5 APRIL 1850) replace headnote with MS Case Western Reserve University

8. for C.D. read CD.

VI,81.171 To MRS MORSON, 8 APRIL 1850*

Text from Robin A. Fenner catalogue, July 2001; checked from photocopy of MS.

Devonshire Terrace | Eighth April 1850.[†1]

Dear Mrs. Morson.

I send you both the salaries in one cheque.[†2] Please to acknowledge its safe receipt.

Faithfully yours

CD

VI,85.5.

(To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 17 APRIL 1850) read—to put on her own clothes,

VI,89.

n. 2 line 2 after journalist add ; contributor to HW.

VI,90.16.

(To MRS HOWITT, 26 APRIL 1850) replace headnote with MS Ashley W. Olmsted. Address: Mrs Howitt | 28 Upper Avenue Road | Regents Park

VI,91.1. To MRS CARMICHAEL-SMYTH,[†1] 29 APRIL 1850*

MS Brian Lake.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS,

Monday Twenty Ninth April 1850.

My Dear Mrs Smyth.

I shall be here tomorrow at 2, and happy to see your brother in law[†2] if that hour will suit him.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Carmichael Smyth.

VI,91.2. To JOSEPH CARTWRIGHT,[†1] 30 APRIL 1850†

Replaces catalogue extract[aa]

MS Michael Silverman.

Devonshire Terrace | Thirtieth April, 1850.

Sir.

I beg to acknowledge the receipt of the tickets.

I did not understand that you wished for permission to make any public mention of my name. If I had done so, I should have objected, for [a] I have a great objection to being supposed to "patronize" anything or anybody; and I think the term exceedingly unpleasant, in connexion with an effort so laudable and self-reliant as that in question.[a] It seems to me, opposed to the whole spirit of the undertaking.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Joseph Cartwright

May

VI,92.15. To JOSEPH CARTWRIGHT, 3 MAY 1850

Replaces smaller catalogue extract

Extract in Empire Autograph Auctions Ltd catalogue, Mar 1997; MS 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 3 May 50; addressed Joseph Cartwright.

He hopes that you will not make yourself uneasy on the subject of my letter, or think of altering any arrangement you may have concluded. The thing that I object to, is done. I am quite sure you have done it with the most upright intentions; and nothing can be farther from my thoughts than any disposition to trouble you or censure you.

VI,120.

n. 5 line 1 after du Crime add a section of the Rue du Temple

VI,121.13. To THE REV. EDWARD TAGART,[†1] [?1843—MID-1850]

Extract in D, xxi (April 1925), p. 26. Date: probably after 1843, when they met and before the Tagarts moved to Hampstead in 1850[†2]

He hopes that you will have a stick in your hand, and a hat on your head at eleven o'clock tomorrow morning, I will call for you and have you take a walk with me.

VI,131.3.

up. Replaces mention

July To MRS MORSON, 14 JULY 1850*

Text from Robin A. Fenner catalogue, July 2001; checked from photocopy of MS.

Devonshire Terrace | Sunday Fourteenth July | 1850.

Dear Mrs. Morson.

Tell the girls who go tomorrow that Caroline Canlon's[†1] name is Hunt. That her address is "Mrs. Hunt, Three Cups, near Cape Town." Tell them too, as my last message, that I hope they will do well, marry honest men and be happy.[†2]

Faithfully yours

CD

VI,132.

n. 2 line 5 for 6 Aug read 10 Aug

VI,134.15.

(To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 24 JULY 1850) for Chauncey read Chauncy

August

VI,141.21.

(To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 1 AUGUST 1850) read . . . I can do so in the morning . . .

VI,143.1. To J. LLOYD,[†1] [4 AUGUST 1850]

Envelope only, MS Paul S. Smith. Address: J. Lloyd Esquire | 28 St. Paul's Terrace | Islington. Date: 4 Augst. 1850 in another hand; PM illegible.

VI,145.7. To CHARLES BLACK,[†1] 12 AUGUST 1850*

MS Jonathan Whitman Cross.

Devonshire Terrace | Twelfth August, 1850 | Monday

My Dear Black

I am extremely sorry to say that I must forego the pleasure of dining with you.

I have a bilious indisposition which I have been obliged to physic, and am going to take a violent walk for, before going early to bed. At this time of the month, it is so all-important to me to be in perfect training, that I am obliged at an hour's notice to take it by the throat and strangle it (I mean the complaint) without the least consideration for my own desires and pleasures.

I hope you have some legendary knowledge of my general punctuality, and know I wouldn't break an appointment except on necessity.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Black Esquire

VI,163.10.

Replaces catalogue extract[aa]

September

To CHARLES KNIGHT, 4 SEPTEMBER 1850†

MS Martin R. Nason.

Broadstairs, | Wednesday night
Fourth September, 1850

My Dear Knight

As I am going up by the early express tomorrow, I write to say that I will have some talk with you over a cigar, either on Saturday or Sunday evening, at your pleasure (perhaps you will tell Georgina on which night I may expect you) about Mr. Devlin.[†1] [a] I cannot say that I derive a comfortable impression of him from his note, or that I think him easy to be hopefully assisted. But I am almost ashamed of building up any opinion on such slight premises. He writes about his books, rather as if he saw his future[a] biography in his mind's eye, with this letter [a] in it. Is it so,— or am I a Beast whom Begging Letter Writers have made, out of a Beautiful Prince?

Let us say Saturday, unless you object.

Ever My Dear Knight | Cordially Yours[a]
CHARLES DICKENS

VI,163.

n. 4 penultimate line for can made" read can be made"

VI,166.

n. 3 replace with Nall was clearly a clerk at the HW office.

n. 7 amend date to read 1801-65

VI,172.

n. I add Egerton Harcourt (see pp. 198-9 and nn) wrote a 5 pp. letter to CD on 7 Oct, complaining of misstatements made in the article on York and asking for withdrawal, since "it is a pity that the bright weapons of your rich armoury should be sullied in the cause of so rash a knight errant [*i.e. the "Mr Wallace" of the article, see p. 165*n] for Household Words should above all be Words of Truth". Wills wrote to CD, who was at Broadstairs, enclosing "statements for your answer to Harcourt"; this document has autograph corrections in CD's hand in which he says he "has received a series of statements from the writers of the article which I beg to place before you" (i.e. implying disclaimer of his own authorship) (MSS British Library).

October

VI, 183.16.

(To W. W. F. DE CERJAT, 1 OCTOBER 1850) headnote for Chauncey read Chauncy

VI,198.

n. 3 insert Harcourt wrote a 4 pp. letter to CD on 22 Oct saying he is glad to find the article is not by him.

199. n. 2 add Harcourt wrote to Wills on 8 Nov, saying he did not see a proof of the "Chip" which has further errors; he asks that his letter be forwarded to CD as the matter as it stands is unsatisfactory and unfair, "therefore not worthy of his high reputation and character" (MSS British Library).

VI,201.1. To H.C. LLOYD,[†1] 30 OCTOBER 1850*

Text from facsimile in RWA Inc., New Hampshire, Auction Catalogue, Mar 1998.

Devonshire Terrace | Thirtieth October 1850.

My Dear Sir

On my return home from the country, I find the Minutes you have done me the favor to send me, for which I hasten to thank you.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

H. C. Lloyd Esquire

November

VI,213.7. To THE VERY REV. THE DEAN OF BRISTOL,[†1] 14 NOVEMBER 1850

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, Dec 1995; MS 2 pp.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 14 Nov 50; addressed The Very Rev. The Dean of Bristol.

Expresses great pleasure in receipt of your kind note. Offers enthusiastic praise for his speech . . . exactly what is wanted, and exactly what a really Christian minister, with a true sympathy for mankind and desire for their advancement and happiness, ought to say. The Dean is missed sorely here.

VI,220.1.

Replaces catalogue summary.

To CHARLES KNIGHT, 28 NOVEMBER 1850*

MS Martin R. Nason.

Devonshire Terrace | Thursday Night
Twenty Eighth November 1850.

My Dear Knight.

I look out of a sea of letters—oh the people who write to me, and the wonderful communications they indulge in!—to say that I am perfectly delighted with the Pudding.[†1] It is charmingly made, and nothing but a first-rate and most delicately flavoured dish.

Do you know what you have forgotten? The Salt! Will you put in that spoonful? And shall I send you the proof anywhere, or will you come and dine with us in Wellington St at ½ past 5, when we make up the No. next Thursday? It could easily be done then.

Such shrieks of love to White, and Mrs. White, and "Lotty", and "Clara", and "Jemmy" arise, that I must positively leave off, and wallow in those troubled waters again.

Ever affectionately yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Knight Esquire

VI,225.

n. 7 line 1 for Courtenay read Cavendish

December

VI,233.29.

(To THE HON. MRS RICHARD WATSON, 14 DECEMBER 1850) read . . . making duties of pleasures. . .

VI,236.6. To CHARLES KNIGHT, 15 DECEMBER 1850†

Replaces catalogue extract[aa]

MS Martin R. Nason.

Devonshire Terrace
Sunday Fifteenth December | 1850.

My Dear Knight

I have marked a few places in the enclosed,[†1] where I doubt, or dissent from, the illustration—not the principle. Elsewhere, I perfectly agree with you, and [a] greatly admire the point and condensation with which the case is stated.[a]

Ever cordially Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Knight Esquire

VI,254.

n. 2 2nd col. line 2 for 30 Dec 50, read 27 Dec 50

VI,265.

n. 6 2nd col. line 2 for Exchequor read Exchequer

VI,269.18.

Replaces catalogue extracts ([aa])

1851

January

To CHARLES KNIGHT, 28 JANUARY 1851†

MS Martin R. Nason.

Devonshire Terrace | Tuesday night
Twenty Eighth January 1851.

My Dear Knight.

I am truly obliged to you for your more than kind note of this morning. I have taken the Board of Health[†1] to the House;[†2] and the Board report the situation unobjectionable, and the house ditto. Consequently, I have (cautiously) opened my fire on the agents; reserving needful mention of the piece of ground. I have identified that same, and my knowledge of its existence this morning threw the attendant Virgin[†3] into paroxysms of wonder.

[a] The cottages[†4] had not escaped me.[a] Miss Coutts and I have frequently talked about them. I think they really matter little; the Willa in which I am chiefly interested, looking from them. As to any predatory habits in which their owners may indulge, I rather think they would gratify them further from home. It is not an unimportant item in my preference for such a spot, that [a] Holly Lodge would be (for my children's recreation and so forth) as good as my own.[a] And its proprietress would go my way, I have no doubt, in all reasonable local matters.

About the Paper duties.[†5]—I have [a] some mysterious men [†b](*un*connected therewith)[†b] coming[a] to me at The Household Words tomorrow at 11, [a] in whom I fancy I descry two or three good papers.[a] Wills has ferreted them out at my request, and I must be there. [a] But I write tonight to Mr. Huggett[†6] the Secretary, saying that you will represent me; and whatever you do, I will gladly do.[a]

Thursday is not a convenient day for my going out in the morning, but if you should see fit to bind me to attend the Deputation, and will let me know as much (I shall be in Wellington Street all tomorrow morning) I will do it. I place myself entirely in your hands, and beg you to say

[a] to Chambers[†7] that you have full power to answer[a] for me at your own discretion.

Ever my Dear Knight | affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

VI,278.

n. 3. line 1 for 1776-1855 read 1776-1853

February

VI,288.17. To F. W. TOPHAM,[†1] 10 FEBRUARY 1851*

MS Royal Watercolour Society, Bankside Gallery.

Devonshire Terrace | Tenth February 1851.

My Dear Topham

You have heard from Lemon, I know, that we have a project in agitation, important to all associated with Literature and Art—so important, that I sincerely believe its success would change the entire position of Writers and Artists in this country.

I am happy to say that it is in my power to offer you a most excellent part in the new comedy Sir E B Lytton has written for the support of this plan. And I can heartily assure you that you will be received among us again, with open arms.[†2]

The comedy, being finished, will be read to the Company (by Mr. Macready) at Forster's rooms, 58 Lincolns Inn Fields, on Wednesday the 19th. at 3 o'Clock. May I consider you one of the Corps Dramatique, and particularly request your attendance?

In the meantime, you will receive Sir E. B. L.'s draft of the proposed plan, and judge for yourself of its importance.

My Dear Topham | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

F. W. Topham Esquire

VI,292.6. To MRS FINLAY,[†1] 18 FEBRUARY 1851*

MS University Archives of Stamford, Connecticut.

Devonshire Terrace, London | Eighteenth February 1851

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mrs. Finlay and regrets to say, in reply to her interesting and agreeable letter, that he cannot render her good object the service she requires. It is so often asked of him that compliance is absolutely impossible, with the least reasonable reference to any pursuit of his life.

VI,297.11. To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 20 FEBRUARY 1851*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Twentieth February 1851.

Dear Sir

I regret that it is quite out of my power to have the pleasure of doing what you require. Every ticket[†1] that can possibly be issued is sold, and every inch of space appropriated.[†2]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

March

VI,302.18. To PHILIP HOWARD,[†1] 3 MARCH 1851*

MS Michael Silverman.

1 Devonshire Terrace | Third March 1851.

Dear Sir

Allow me to thank you for your obliging letter, and to express my regret that you were not present at the dinner,[†2] and that I was not at home when you did me the favor to call.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Philip H Howard Esquire

VI,302.19.

(To SIR JAMES [MURRAY], 3 MARCH 1851) heading should read SIR JAMES [CLARK]

n.3 replace with Sir James Clark FRS 1788-1870; DNB); was consulted about Fanny Burnett in 1848: see Vol. v, p. 354 and n.

n.4 replace with John Forbes Clark (1821-1910); attaché to the embassy in Paris. Proposed by his father, who was a member; elected 3 Mar.

VI,304. 1. To THE VERY REV. THE DEAN OF BRISTOL, 4 MARCH 1851

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, Dec 1995; MS 2 pp.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 4 Mar 51; addressed The Very Rev. The Dean of Bristol.

Thanks him for his letter. We have fallen into such depths of sackcloth and ashes, at Trinity[†1]—have been sighing and groaning[†2] to such a deplorable extent—exhibiting such wonderful spectacles of inconsequential reasoning—and anatomising all the physical features of Death with such an odious little scalpel—that I began to think I was making a fool of myself. . . So we . . . are now perched high in Marylebone church,[†3] where there is at least nothing in the Sermon to send one home antagonistic and unchristianlike—for we never hear it.

VI,310.

n. 2 line 11 for Andrew Geddes, ARA. 1822, read Capt. Alexander Geddes, retired Army officer,

VI,321.

n. 1 for Lieut-Col read Col.

VI,323.5. To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 20 MARCH 1851†

Replaces catalogue extract[aa]

MS Private.

Knotsford Lodge, Great Malvern
Twentieth March 1851. | Thursday

[†b][ ][†b]

I am doomed not to go there with you, this season! I am here with Mrs. Dickens—who has been very unwell, but is much better—and cannot, I regret to say, possibly get to town for an early dinner on Saturday. [a] I shall have to work that day,[a] until long after any available train I can possibly get has left Worcester—the nearest point.

I should have written to you to day, in any case. As you may not know that I am celebrated among all my friends for perfect punctuality and reliability, I take leave to mention it. For really I feel like some other individual, when I find myself putting off what I am bound to, both by engagement and anticipation. But I should as soon have [thought][†1] of being in Egypt just now, as here.

Faithfully Yours Ever
CHARLES DICKENS[†2]

VI,324.15.

(To LIEUT. COLONEL THE HON. C.B. PHIPPS, [21] MARCH 1851) delete LIEUT.

VI,325.31.

(To LIEUT. COLONEL THE HON. C.B. PHIPPS, [21] MARCH 1851) delete LIEUT.

VI,334.27.

(To LIEUT. COLONEL THE HON. C.B. PHIPPS, 26 MARCH 1851) delete LIEUT.

VI,337.6. To CHARLES KNIGHT, 28 MARCH 1851†

Replaces catalogue extract[aa]

MS Martin R. Nason.

Great Malvern | Friday night
Twenty Eighth March 1851

My Dear Knight

[a] Jerrold tells me you will do Hodge, the Country Servant, in Bulwer's Comedy. Is that so, my noble trump?[a] If yea, present yourself at the Rehearsals, Miss Kelly's Theatre, Tuesday evening and Wednesday evening at 7 to the moment and receive your part, with the paternal embraces of

Yours affecy always
CD.

Charles Knight Esquire

VI,343.12.

(To JOHN FORSTER, 31 MARCH 1851) read . . . to know what is to be done. . .

VI,360.13.

Replaces catalogue mention and summary

April

To THOMAS BARLOW,[†1] 24 APRIL 1851*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace, | Twenty Fourth April 1851.

Dear Sir.

Constant occupation has prevented my replying to your note until now.

I will lose no time in referring it, and its accompanying packet of engravings, to Mr. Maclise. But, while I acknowledge the great liberality of your spirited offer—which I shall not fail to make known to the gentlemen concerned—it is right that I should tell you that I believe the right of engraving will be sold to a publisher, and that some steps have already been taken to arrange the terms. This would not, as I conceive, leave the question in our hands.

While I am sorry that you should have had the trouble of calling here in vain, I am glad to receive so frank and unaffected an avowal as you confide to me. My servant's duty, I assure you, is not an easy one. Unless he were firm (even at the cost of an occasional mistake as in your case, for which I heartily apologize to you) I should have no rest or privacy, and could not live, unless in hiding, a week.

Dear Sir | Yours Faithfully and obliged

CHARLES DICKENS

T. O. Barlow Esquire

May

VI,379.12.

(To MRS ADOLPHUS GILLET, 9 MAY 1851) replace headnote with MS Michael Silverman. On mourning paper.

VI,382.1. To MRS MORSON, 9 MAY 1851*

Text from Robin A. Fenner catalogue, July 2001; checked from photocopy of MS. On mourning paper. Address: Mrs. Morson | Urania Cottage | Near The White Horse | Shepherd's Bush.

Devonshire Terrace | Friday Ninth May 1851.

Dear Mrs. Morson

I have ordered 1000 Mark Papers†1 from the Printer. As soon as they are ready, I will forward them without an hour's delay.

Faithfully yours
CHARLES DICKENS

VI,401.4. To WILLIAM WILSON,†1 [24 MAY 1851]

Envelope in Heritage Book Shop catalogue, 1995. Address: Mr. William Wilson PM 24 May 51. On mourning paper.

VI,409.

n. 2 1st col. line 2 for 6th read 1st

June

VI,417.12.

(To MISS GERALDINE JEWSBURY, 25 JUNE 1851) for Words read Words[1]

23. for Words[1] read Words

VI,418.1.

(To THE REV, W. G. QUEKETT, 27 JUNE 1851) for REV, read REV.

August

VI,453.2 up.

(To WILLIAM CULLENFORD, 2 AUGUST 1851) for honor of read honor to

VI,461.

n. 2 2nd col. line 7 delete had line 8 for 49 read 59 [after the Separation]

VI,473.4. To GEORGE BARCLAY,†1 30 AUGUST 1851

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, Dec 1997; MS 1 p. (a scrap of paper); dated Broadstairs, Kent, 30 Aug 51; addressed George Barclay.

Asking to see a revise of this.†2 He will be at his own house (1 Devonshire Terrace High Street Marylebone) from Wednesday next, until the following Saturday.

September

VI,475.12. To CHARLES KNIGHT, 1 SEPTEMBER 1851†

Replaces catalogue extracts ([aa])

MS Martin R. Nason. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent | First September 1851.

My Dear Knight.

I had put the book away so very carefully that I couldn't find it. We are very truly obliged for the kind offer of your house, and thank

Mrs. Knight and you most cordially. [a] But our part in Devonshire Terrace is amply sufficient[a] for our September wants.

Those pills really are a wonderful medicine, which [a]"no family should be without."[a] If you behave well, I'll bring you down a box from London, and a copy of the prescription.

Affecy always | CD.

VI,477.

n. 6 line 2 for 24 Sep 51 read 13 Sep 51

VI,479.19. To F. W. TOPHAM, 7 SEPTEMBER 1851*

MS Royal Watercolour Society, Bankside Gallery. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs | Sunday Seventh September 1851.

My Dear Topham.

Coming back last night I found your beautiful present.[†1]

I sincerely and truly want words to express my admiration of it. It is one of the most elegant, thoughtful, and delicate compositions I ever saw in my life. To have had any share in inspiring so pure and charming a work, is a new distinction that I most earnestly appreciate.

Accept my warmest thanks, and with them the assurance that you have given me one of the foremost graces of my new house—where I hope you will very often see it, in a cherished place.

Always Faithfully Yours
My Dear Topham
CHARLES DICKENS

F. W. Topham Esquire.

VI,479.32.

(To HENRY AUSTIN, 8 SEPTEMBER 1851) for chose read choose

VI,484.17.

(To WILLIAM J. CLEMENT, 18 SEPTEMBER 1851) for Philarmonic read Philharmonic

VI,491.12.

(To F. M. EVANS, 24 SEPTEMBER 1851) for 1639 read 1659

October

VI,505.5. To LIEUT. J. H. BROWN,[†1] 4 OCTOBER 1851

Extract in History-Makers catalogue No. 24 (1998); MS 2 pp.; dated Broadstairs, 5 Oct 51 (misdated 1857 in catalogue); addressed [?]. Brown.

I have directed Mrs Morson to call on you at your office Tuesday morning, to inquire where she shall pay for the three passages[†2] you have so thoughtfully secured. I am exceedingly glad of so good an opportunity.

VI,510.

n. 5 2nd col. line 10 for 586 read 581

VI,517.9. To T. N. TALFOURD, [10 OCTOBER 1851]

Envelope only in Phillips catalogue, June 2000. Address: The Honorable Mr. Justice Talfourd | Westbrook | Margate. PM 10 Oct Margate. Mourning border.

VI,526.12 up.

(To HENRY AUSTIN, 25 OCTOBER 1851) delete full stop after encountering

VI,527.1. To THE VERY REV. THE DEAN OF BRISTOL, 25 OCTOBER 1851

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, Dec 1995; MS 2 pp.; dated Tavistock House, 25 Oct 51; addressed The Very Rev. The Dean of Bristol; on mourning paper.

As well as other engagements the slow agonies of removal into a new house[†1] excuse his not replying to the Dean's note. He cannot accept invitation because of acting engagements including one on the 10th at Bath.[†2]

November

VI,535.11. To J. H. CHUTE,[†1] 7 NOVEMBER 1851*

MS Private.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS,
Friday Seventh November 1851

Dear Sir

As I sent Mr. Coe[†2] the Prompter down to you Express last night, to arrange about Friday—and as I hope all that is set right—I shall confine this to giving you a little more trouble respecting the Hotels.

We purpose going over to Bristol[†3] some time in the afternoon of Tuesday, and dining at our Bristol Hotel at 6 that day. We shall of course stay there, until we leave. Will you let them know this?

Also (as Mr. Forster dines with us on Sunday)[†4] will you let them know at the York House at Bath, that we shall want dinner for four persons? Further, that Mr. Forster will want a bed there that night, which can be assigned to any other name on the list, on Tuesday?

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

VI,545.11. To MRS MORSON, 22 NOVEMBER 1851*

Text from Robin A. Fenner catalogue, July 2001; checked from photocpy of MS.

Tavistock House, Tavistock Square

Twenty Second November 1851.

Dear Mrs. Morson

Summon the committee for Tuesday night if you please.

Faithfully yours

CD

VI,549.

n. 5 add "A Free (and Easy) School" (HW, 15 Nov 51, IV, 169) was by CD and Morley (Uncollected Writings, ed. Harry Stone, 1, 351).

December

VI,554.23.

(To CHARLES ELLIS, 16 DECEMBER 1851) for wold read would

VI,556.8. To MRS MORSON, 18 DECEMBER 1851*

Text from Robin A. Fenner catalogue, July 2001; checked from photocopy of MS.

Tavistock House

Thursday Eighteenth December 1851.

Dear Mrs. Morson.

I think the best way will be to hold the committee on Tuesday Week, and then we will be so close on the end of the year, that the yearly bills can be all brought into the account, and the New Year's accounts fairly and freshly begun.

Faithfully yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

VI,568.

n. 6 2nd col. line 3 delete probably lines 4-5 delete but possibly George Cooke, 1807-63

1852

January

VI,574.36. To MRS CRESS,[†1] 14 JANUARY 1852*

MS (in another hand) Free Library of Philadelphia.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS,

14 January 1852

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mrs Cress and begs to thank her for pointing his attention to the condition of the peasantry near Dartford.

Mrs. Cress.

VI,577.8. To CHARLES KNIGHT, 17 JANUARY 1852†

Replaces catalogue extract[aa]

MS Martin R. Nason.

Tavistock House | Seventeenth January 1852

My Dear Knight.

Many thanks for that very singular pamphlet, which I have read with great relish. I have no doubt in my own mind of its being a fraud.

[a]"O Sing Sweet bird"[†1]—a few Household notes![a] Are you never going to chirp in the groves of Wellington Street any more?

All cordial wishes, seasonable and unseasonable, From

Yours ever affectionately

CD.

VI,579.13.

Replaces catalogue mention

To W. WILKIE COLLINS, 20 JANUARY 1852

Extracts and facsimile[aa] in Phillips catalogue, Mar 1997; MS 4 pp.; dated Tavistock House, 20 Jan 52; addressed Wilkie Collins.

First I have to thank you for the present of a very pretty book,[†1] which I have read with a very great amount of pleasure and interest. I hope you will excuse the tardy nature of this acknowledgement. I was not slow as a reader, however slow I now confess myself (with shame) to have been as a letter-writer.

Next as to the Infants at nurse. Rendering all justice to the benevolent earnestness of the directors I do not think the case made out. It would be very hard to supervise such a scheme and CD does not think it is relevant to the infant population as no allowance is made where parents are really anxious to do their duty but the infants die as a result of the unhealthy stews in which they are born. Without the consent of the parents these domiciliary visits could not be made. Nothing would induce loving parents to delegate to the projectors of the proposed

Society the care of their children. No quotation of opinion about Paris, where most of the younger women of the large Grisette†2 class have illegitimate children as a matter of course, can be accepted as an authority for London . . . I believe that the usefulness and [a] consequent success of the scheme, would be absolutely infinitessimal.†3 I don't think the wants, in this regard, of parents who wish to treat their children well, and yet are obliged to send them out to nurse, and cannot look after them or have them looked after, would yield sufficient, if supplied, to pay a Beadle of ordinary ambition.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS[a]

VI,579.

n. 3 2nd col. line 3 for 23 read 3

VI,580.

n. 2 2nd col. add See also "Railway Strikes", HW, 11 Jan 51, 361 for CD's view then.

VI,593.

n. 1 replace with As supporter (but he did not sign) of Thomas Henry Wyatt: see To Stone, 22 Feb 52.

February

VI,605.6.

(To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 19 FEBRUARY 1852) after Architect); add 2a insert [2a] Sir Philip Charles Hardwick (1792-1870; DNB), architect to the Duke of Wellington.

n. 6 read Philip Charles Hardwick

VI,606.

n. 1 line 13, for 1987 read 1989

VI,607.16,17.

(To FRANK STONE, 22 FEBRUARY 1852) for[2] read[3] and for[3] read[4]

2nd col. of nn. for[2] read[3] and for[†3] read[4]

n. 4 after elected add to the Athenæum

608. n. 4 (607 cont.) delete lines 3-5

VI,610.16.

(To JOHN HILLS, 28 FEBRUARY 1852) replace headnote with Text from facsimile in Thierry Bodin catalogue, No. 37, Mars 1989.

611.2. after wish add†1

*insert*1 CD first wrote and then crossed out "desire to"

3. for give read bestow

4. replace colon after decline it with a comma

5. for of read to

7. insert John Hills Esquire at left margin and delete square brackets round signature

March

VI,621.24. To MR RAWLINSON,†1 9 MARCH 1852

Mention in A. & Y. Cumming Antiquarian Book Shop catalogue [1999]; dated Tavistock House, 9 Mar 52; addressed Rawlinson.

Apologising for being unable to make an engagement.

VI,626.

n. 3 2nd col. replace with Philip Charles Hardwick (1822-92), who took over his father's practice in 1847.

VI,629.16. To MESSRS HUNT & ROSKELL, 22 MARCH 1852*

MS Liam Dunne.

Tavistock House | Twenty Second March 1852

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Messrs. Hunt and Roskell, and begs to say, in reference to the enclosed bill received from them on Saturday, that he had no intention of purchasing the cane charged in it, but merely wanted to †a hire it†a for the purposes of one scene in the acting of Sir Edward Bulwer's comedy by the Amateur Company.†1 In this service it has been in his hand on some eight or ten occasions, perhaps for as many minutes altogether, and has at all other times been kept wrapped up as he now sends it for Messrs. Hunt and Roskell's inspection. If they consider its value at all impaired, or really desire to regard it as having been purchased by Mr. Dickens, he is quite willing to pay for it, but has not the least need of it or use for it, and never had.

April

VI,640.22.

(To G. L. CHESTERTON, 12 APRIL 1852) replace headnote with MS Baumann Rare Books

31. for Browne. read Brown.

32. insert G. L. Chesterton Esquire. at left margin

VI,659.

n. 3 add See also p. 796 and nn for Forster's article on the ballad.

VI,665.

n. 1 lines 1-3 replace Patrick . . . Scottish law; with Peter S. Fraser, bookseller, publisher

(of Fraser & Co) and agent for the UK Life Insurance Co., of Edinburgh: see Vol. VIII, p. 563*n*

VI,678.13.

Replaces catalogue extract[aa]

May

To ANTONIO GALLENGA,[†1] 20 MAY 1852†

Facsimile in Early American History Auction Inc., Aug 1998.

Tavistock House | Twentieth May 1852

Dear Sir

[a] Allow me to assure you, in reply to your letter, that I have no influence whatever in the affairs of the London Library. I have never taken any part in its administration, and am not now, even in name, a member of the Committee.[a]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

A. Gallenga Esquire

VI,680.30. To ROBERT BELL,[†1] 22 MAY 1852*

Text from facsimile in "Glenlivet", A Book with Six Scottish Stories, owned by Dr C. van Steijnen.

Tavistock House | Saturday Evening
Twenty Second May 1852

My Dear Bell.

A thousand thanks for the two bottles of genuine Irish and the laugh I have had over your note!

A man in Edinburgh,†2 supposed to be unparalleled in his whisky education has just sent me what they would call in the City of London "a small parcel" of what he recommends as rare old Glenlivet. Try the accompanying specimen and drink some as heartily as I will drink to you.

Ever cordially Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Robert Bell Esquire.

VI,688.

n. 3. Delete married . . . Miss Mulock as his second wife (it was his nephew of the same name)

June

VI,694.1.

(To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 11 JUNE 1852*) after Trip add[[text ref]]1*a* insert [1a] See pp. 687-8

VI,696.20. To THE VERY REV. THE DEAN OF BRISTOL, 18 JUNE 1852

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, Dec 1995; MS 2 pp.; dated Tavistock House, 18 June 52. Address: The Reverend | The Dean of Bristol | at Sir C Adams's | Royal Hospital | Greenwich.

Thanks him for Tigerous adventure which will make a chip.†1 Welcomes the suggestion of Greenwich Hospital, which . . . will afford a very good paper indeed; speaks of his fortnight's removal from human ken before emerging from a course of Bleak House and country walks. Will ask Sir Charles Adam†2 for assistance.

VI,701.

n. 4 line 9 after 1852. add Appointed Secretary to the Board of Trade from Nov 52. Congratulating him, Forster wrote: "I believe you to be a good free trader already, and am certain that this office will make you a still better Free Trader" (28 Sep; MS Morgan).

July

VI,710.11.

(To THE REV. THE HON. S. G. OSBORNE, 13 JULY 1852) replace headnote with MS Free Library of Philadelphia

VI,714

n. 3 line 5 for E. W. read E. S.

VI,716.11. To JOHN THORNTON,[†1] 17 JULY [1852]*

Text from copy in Committee Minutes Book of Newcastle upon Tyne Literary, Scientific and Mechanical Institution.

Tavistock House | July 17—1851[†2]

Sir.

I regret that it is quite impossible for me to entertain the idea of attending any Soiree[†3] during my proposed short visit to Newcastle. Every moment of my time is pre-occupied—and I shall have quite as much to do as my health and strength can reasonably bear.

Your faithful servant
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Thornton

VI,718.17. To CHARLES KNIGHT, 21 JULY 1852†

Replaces catalogue extract[aa]

MS Martin R. Nason.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS,
Wednesday Twenty First July 1852

My Dear Knight.

I am greatly vexed to see that by some inexplicable mistake of Wills's, the general head of Shadows[†1]—your head!—is put over an article which I myself named Day and Night, in the last No. [a] I cannot imagine how anything so preposterous came about, but pray believe that some demoniacal and asinine combination of accidents alone is to blame.

I am at 10 Camden Crescent Dover, where I shd be delighted to see you.

Ever affecy
CD[a]

VI,722.13.

Replaces catalogue summary.

To CHARLES KNIGHT, 23 JULY 1852*

MS Martin R. Nason.

10 Camden Crescent, Dover
Twenty Third July, 1852

My Dear Knight.

We shall be delighted to see you at your own time. You will not interfere with my work, as I will shut myself up during the regulation hours and blaze away.

I have had a correspondence with Potter[†1] relative to the opening of the Free Library, and have agreed to go. I daresay our men generally will go; the occasion being so very special and important. I hope we may be acting in Manchester for the second time [†a] during this next trip,[†a] that night. It will make an immense difference in our receipts if it can be brought to bear. I want to get a night in Liverpool too, but am not sure that it is feasible.

You will let me know from one of your sea-bird perches on the coast, when you may be expected among these crags?

I forgot to mention, In re Richard Cromwell[†2] &c that the paper originally formed part of another paper called Our Doubles.[†3] I separated that portion from the rest, as it was rather misplaced.

Affecy Yours ever
CD.

Charles Knight Esquire.

VI,736.

n. 1 add On 1 Sep Forster wrote to John Chapman from Tavistock House, saying that "I am very slowly recovering from the effects of a most severe & painful illness, and have been unable to attend to anything but the matters demanding my attention from week to week"; he had been "staying at the Dickens's for some weeks" but is going to Brighton on Saturday for a month. (MS Beinecke Library, Yale)

September

VI,757.13. To WILLIAM LOCKE,[†1] 7 SEPTEMBER 1852*

MS Falcon Books.

Dover, Seventh September 1852

Dear Sir

You were quite right in your assurance to your kind-hearted friend that I should be happy to give you my autograph for him.

And here it is, in proof of the fact.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. William Locke

VI,762.25.

(To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 14 SEPTEMBER 1852) after do add
[, you] 4a

insert [4a] Omitted by CD.

October

VI,782.26.

(To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, [22] OCTOBER 1852) after Epitaphs add 3a

insert [3a] HW, 16 Oct 52, VI, 105.

VI,791.18. To MRS MORSON, 31 OCTOBER 1852*

Text from Robin A. Fenner catalogue, July 2001; checked from photocpy of MS.

Tavistock House
Thirty First October 1852

Dear Mrs. Morson,

Will you send under-clothing to Eliza Wilkin[†1] now living with her father at 18 Market Row Oxford Market—with money for her to get a warm bath—or two would be better, and instructions to her to do so, that she may be perfectly clean and wholesome; and make an appointment to call for her, say on Wednesday or Thursday next. She has a gown that will do for her to come in. I suppose you have not one ready? Bonnet and so forth, you had better send her, I think. She is rather a short girl.

I shall probably see you, almost as soon as you receive this, for I propose coming out on Monday on one or two points. CD

November

VI,809.6.

To THE REV. JAMES WHITE, 22 NOVEMBER 1852 add to headnote Address (envelope, MS Private): The Reverend James White | Bonchurch | Isle of Wight PM Ventnor 23 Nov 52

December

VI,819.7. To MRS MORSON, 11 DECEMBER 1852*

Text from Robin A. Fenner catalogue, July 2001; checked from photocopy of MS.

Tavistock House
Saturday Eleventh December | 1852.

Dear Mrs. Morson

I enclose a note from Miss Coutts,[†1] preparing you to receive a new case.

Faithfully yours
CHARLES DICKENS

VI,822.3.

(To MRS BROWN, 16 DECEMBER 1852) after office), add[[text ref]]1*a* insert [1a] John Thompson: see pp. 70 and 72.

VI,832.27. To S. ALFRED STEINTHAL,[†1] 22 DECEMBER 1852*

MS Private.

Tavistock House, London
Thursday Twenty Second December | 1852

My Dear Sir

I beg to assure you that I have received your letter, and the invitation of the Bridgewater Literary and Scientific Institution, with much gratification and interest.

But I regret to add that my avocations render it absolutely impossible that I can have the pleasure of accepting the agreeable proposal you make to me.

I am my Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS.

S. Alfred Steinthal Esquire.

VI,833.

n. 3 after Collins replace text with (1818-84), MRCS, in practice at 33 Park St, Camden Town; said to be "very popular with the poor" and "an advanced sanitarian" (Memoir by his son Sir William Collins, privately printed 1923).

VI,854.

(APPENDIX D)

3. for accustomed pursuits read accustomed professional pursuits

1850

April

VI,860.

(To EDMUND FRY, 25 APRIL 1850)

n. 1 line 2 for Middlesex read Surrey

Index of Correspondents

865 after Claiborne add Clark, Sir James 302

866 Gaskell, Elizabeth Cleghorn add 8,

867 James, George Payne Rainsford delete, 606

868 Lemon, Mark for 646, read 647

Morley, Henry delete 79

Murray, Sir James, delete entry

Phipps, delete Lieut.

869 Talfourd, Sir Thomas Noon delete 25,

Townshend, for Chauncey read Chauncy

Index of Names and Places

871 col. 1 for Absolon read Absolon

col. 2 ALLINGHAM, William line 4 for Streets read Street

Almar, George for 129n read 128n

872 col. 1 Athenæum line 3 for 129n read 128n

874 col. 1 Boyle, Captain Cavendish Spencer line 2 add 225 & n, 226, 231, 242

Boyle, Captain Courtenay delete entry

875 col. 2 CAREY, Henry for 417n read 471n

876 col. 1 after CHALLINOR add Challis, Thomas 692n

CHAPMAN, Thomas read 553n, 612n and delete 686

Chute, James Henry for 464n read 465n

877 col. 2 COMPTON, Henry add 625n*

CONNOLLY, Thomas William John add, 592n

Cooke, George delete entry

879 col. 2 Derby, Edward after Smith add Stanley

880 col. 1 Dickens, Charles John Huffam Bleak House: col. 1 line 2 for 626, read 627,

882 col. 1 Dickens, Charles John Huffam col. 1 after line 5 add "A Poor Man's Tale of a Patent"

(with Cole) 180n

885 col. 2 FOWLER, John add (of Sheffield) 307n* and delete 617n

add Fowler, John (civil engineer) 617n

886 col. 1 after Gatliff add Geddes, Capt. Alexander 310n

GIBSON, Thomas Milner add 35n,

887 col. 2 HARDWICK, John for 120 read 120 & n* and for 604 read 605

delete 613 and `Nova Scotia' scheme entries

Hardwick, Philip add Charles 605 & n, 613; and `Nova Scotia' scheme 651, 661

Hardwick, Sir Philip Charles add 605 & n* delete 626n

888 col. 1 Highgate after 269, add 285

HOGARTH, George line 3 for 166 read 167

890 col. 1 HUNT, Leigh last line for 342 read 742

col. 2 after James, Charles Caldecott add James, George Payne Rainsford 22n*, 606n

891 col. 1 Jerrold, Walter, for 129n read 128n

KAY-SHUTTLEWORTH, Sir James for 123n read 124n

892 col. 1 Lansdowne, Henry Petty-Fitzmaurice for 620, read 620 & n*,

894 col. 1 London Churches line 7 delete 775n and add 612, 754,

Clubs Athenæum line 2 for 606 read 607 & n

col. 2 Longman, Thomas for 690 read 690 & n*

896 col. 1 MACREADY, William Charles,

Reminiscences read (ed. Sir W. F. Pollock)

897 col. 2 MORLEY, Henry line 2 for Lemon read Hogarth line 3 up add "Letter from a highly respectable old Lady" 79n;

898 col. 1 MORLEY, Henry line I add "My wonderful Adventures in Skitzland" 79n; line 16 add "The Work of the World" 467;

col. 2 Murray, John Fisher delete entry

900 col. 1 Peto, Morton, contractor delete entry

Peto, Sir Samuel Morton add 57n

PHIPPS, Lieut. Colonel delete Lieut

Pollock, Sir Jonathan Frederick delete 105n and 771n

POLLOCK, (Sir) William Frederick insert 105n

add ed. Macready's Reminiscences, 771n

904 col. 1 STONE, Frank line 19 for 606 read 607

Stone, Lilian add Bertha

STONE, Dr Thomas line I add, 646n

905 col. 2 Thomas, William Moy for 38 read 738

THOMPSON, John, line 2 after 72 & n add 822

906 col. 1 TOWNSHEND, for Chauncey read Chauncy

col. 2 Wakley, Thomas add, 692n

907 col. 2 Wellington, Arthur Wellesley line 4 for 470n read 670n

after WESTMINSTER REVIEW add WESTWOOD, John 589 & n

White, Charlotte add 629

908 col. 2 Wills, Mrs Willian Henry for 159 read 158

Volume VII, 1853-1855

VII,xiv.

n. 16 line 2 for Comedy read Charity

1853

January

VII,1.12. To MRS MORSON, 3 JANUARY 1853*

Text from digitized facsimile in Robin Fenner catalogue website, July 2001.

Tavistock House,
Third January 1853

Dear Mrs. Morson.

Elizabeth Mackin, 44 Clerkenwell Close, Clerkenwell Green (the daughter of one of Mr. Chesterton's[†1] wardens) is a case I have just accepted for the Home. Will you forward to her, clothes as usual, and write a line with them appointing a day and hour for calling to fetch her.

Faithfully yours
CHARLES DICKENS

VII,6.14. To MRS MORSON, 12 JANUARY 1853*

Text from Robin A. Fenner catalogue, July 2001; checked from photocopy of MS.

Tavistock House
Twelfth January 1853.

Dear Mrs. Morson

I enclose you £5, petty cash. Will you let me know you have received it safely.

Faithfully yours

VII,13.26. To MRS MORSON, 20 JANUARY 1853*

MS Private.

Tavistock House | Twentieth January 1853.

Dear Mrs. Morson

Yes,to both of your enquiries.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

VII,14.9.

(To J. B. CARDALE, 22 JANUARY 1853) read MS Col J. I. G. Capadose

18. read . . . was him",—

21. insert John B. Cardale Esquire. and delete square brackets round signature

VII,22.

n. 5 col. 2 line 1 read Fodéré last line read Fodéré

VII,30.

n. 6 line I read Mémoire

n. 7 line 3 read Mémoire

31. n. 13 (cont.) line 1 read Médecine

n. 4 line 2 read Fodéré

April

VII,64.17. To MAJOR LAKE,[†1] 15 APRIL 1853*

MS Alan Newton.

Tavistock House | Friday April Fifteenth 1853.

My Dear Sir

I am most unfortunate in being unable to fix a day between the two days you so kindly mention. But I expect a friend from Edinburgh[†2] to be staying here all next week,[†3] and do not feel myself at liberty to make any new engagements until his departure. I have waited a day on the chance of hearing from him that he was detained in Scotland; but not doing so, conclude that he is coming tonight or tomorrow.

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Major Lake.

VII,68.20. To CHARLES KNIGHT, 22 APRIL 1853 †

Replaces catalogue extract([aa])

MS Martin R. Nason

Tavistock House | Twenty Second April 1853.

My Dear Knight.

Only two sentences on your note.

I never heard anything of a party, or the least hint of one. On the contrary, when Coote[†1] made his flying visit to me, he did most expressly say, that the Duke only intended to invite in the evening the "ladies of his own family."

You know Stone's damned mysterious manner, and what it is worth. He turned and conferred with Grieve![†2]—To my most absolute and certain knowledge, Grieve knew nothing about it—nor had he any lady belonging to him asked. Neither had Telbin,[†3] nor Louis Haghe,[†4] nor Pitt[†5]—the three persons present, with whom he might be supposed to have held conference. So little did I know of the arrangements myself [†b] beyond what I have accurately told you,[†b] that I should at least as soon have expected to have found the [a] statue at Charing Cross, or the Lion from the top of Northumberland House, in the drawing room, as Jerrold.[a]

Ever affectionately Yours
CD

May

VII,78.12. To EDWARD CHAPMAN, 5 MAY 1853†

Replaces catalogue extract([aa])

MS Martin R. Nason.

Tavistock House | Fifth May 1853.

Dear Sir

[a] The balance certainly appears rather small for the large sale; but I observe the cost you mention, and see nothing to object to in the accounts.[a]

Have the goodness at your convenience to pay the balance in my favor, to my account at Coutts's;[†1] [a] settling the Oliver Twist account with Bradbury and Evans as usual.[a]

In reference to the [a] disagreeable serial books,[†2] [and][†3] the accounts of Household Words, are invariably so rendered, examined, and paid. And the result is that there is never any confusion or complaint.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS[a]

Edward Chapman Esquire.

VII,87.7. To WILLIAM ALLINGHAM,[†1] [18 MAY 1853]

Envelope only in Ira & Larry Goldberg catalogue, June 2000. Address: W. Allingham Esquire Junr. | Ballyshannon | Ireland. PM 18 May 53.

June

VII,95.1. To MRS BUCKLAND,[†1] 11 JUNE 1853*

MS Private.

Pavilion, Folkestone | Eleventh June 1853

Dear Madam

I have been ill for nearly a fortnight, or I would have answered your interesting and welcome note before now.

I have commended the subject to which you call my attention, to a gentleman associated with Household Words; and have begged him to make it the ground work of a paper if he can.[†2] Mr. Malone[†3] had previously been so good as to send me his prospectus,[†4] and I assure you it will be a real gratification to me if I can at all advance his excellent design.

Dear Madam | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Buckland.

August

VII,134.1. To INSPECTOR C.F. FIELD,[†1] 27 AUGUST 1853†

Replaces catalogue extract[aa]

MS Philip Rogers.

Chateau des Moulineaux, Boulogne
Saturday Twenty Seventh August 1853.

Dear Mr. Field

I am staying here for the summer, and Mr. Wills has just brought me your letter. [a] As I have no kind of connexion with any miscellaneous paper or periodical except Household Words,[a] I cannot serve you in any other direction. But I think I may call attention to your [a] new sphere of action,[a] in those pages, so as to make it known to a great many people.

To do this according to an idea I have in my mind, I should want to see you on the next occasion of my coming to Town—which will be, perhaps, in about a fortnight. Mr. Wills will return in a week or so, and will write and ask you to call upon him to make an appointment.

Heartily wishing you success, I am always

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Field.

VII,144.

n. 1 line 1 for Mullet read Moule

VII,150.

n. 12 replace with A play by Wills, performed in 1837: see Vol. 1, p. 265 n.

October

VII,161.1. To JOHN DELANE,[†1] 8 OCTOBER 1853*

MS Rothschild Archive, London.

Boulogne, Eighth October 1853.

My Dear Delane.

Mr. Hogarth[†2] did not tell me on what authority he had received that unquestionably mistaken information, but I know he believed it to be of the best. Pray excuse my having troubled you unnecessarily, though I never meant you to be at the trouble of writing to me on the subject.

I thoroughly concur in all you say about the threatened war,—which is something too deplorable and retrogressive to think of, calmly, at this time of day. I read a Leader on the subject in the Times of Thursday[†3] which seemed to me most admirable, as discreetly suggesting to the brazen lungs that clamour for a revival of the wrongs and horrors which the civilized world should be for ever weary of, some of the enormous responsibilities and social dangers inescapable therefrom.

I hope, still, that it may not break out after all. If it do, of course Austrian Italy will be in a blaze within a month. In that case I am not at all clear (for I start on Monday)[†4] but that I may have a grievance to communicate in the established "Now Sir" form, having reference to my under-ground detention in some strong fortress.

It is an extraordinary thing to me that a young lady can't go to the baths of Lucca without taking Exeter Hall in her reticule.[†5] Also, however exciting a little popular martyrdom may be to herself, that she has no temporal consideration for the unfortunate people who accept her books. I am very much afraid that Giant Despair is the only character an Italian peasant is likely to realize from the perusal of the Pilgrim's Progress just now. Don't you think that is something for a missionary to consider, before going to work?

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Delane Esquire.

VII,183.

n. 7 read Eleanor (Edith d. Nov 51).

VII,208.

n. 1 line 3 read (see 14 Nov, p. 194),

December

VII,227.23. To CHARLES KNIGHT, 15 DECEMBER 1853†

Replaces catalogue extract[aa]

MS Martin R. Nason.

Tavistock House
Thursday Fifteenth December | 1853.

My Dear Knight.

I have received your books and your friendly note with the greatest possible pleasure—have read the latter with a hearty interest—and shall read the former (I need not say) with like sympathy. As to your being an old friend though, in your dashed sense, I deny it altogether and attaint you as a Humbug! For you are, in all good things, [a] by at least fifty years the youngest man I know.[a]

Ever affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Knight Esquire.

1854

January

VII, 237.12.

Replaces mention

To MRS MORSON,[†1] 4 JANUARY 1854

Text from Robin A. Fenner catalogue, July 2001; checked from photocopy of MS.

Tavistock House | Fourth January 1854.

Dear Mrs. Morson.

I am far from sure that I discharge the duty I owe to Miss Coutts, when I let you prevail upon me to listen to your entreaty to give that unhappy girl one more trial. For, every circumstance in her story that makes you pity her, makes her ingratitude towards the benefactress who has tried so hard to rescue her from ruin, the greater. You say that she has no friend in the world, no place to go to in this bitter weather, no chance before her but a jail, a hospital, disgrace, misery, despair, Death. I know all this as well as you do, and we both know it far better than she does. How horrible then, to know, at the same moment, that she can be so extraordinarily wicked as under that roof which alone protects her from the great black world of Crime and Shame, to slight the refuge it affords her and audaciously pretend that she desires to leave it! You say that if she left it, she would almost yield up her life to come back, the moment she passed the gate. I know she would. You know as well as I, that there never has been one case of a girl quitting the Home or sent away from the Home, in which this has not been proved to us. I pity this unfortunate creature, so young and so forlorn, with all my heart. But how can I reconcile it to myself to allow her to occupy in Miss Coutts's home, the place which a grateful girl sincerely trying to reform herself— one of the hundreds I could take out of the streets at this moment—would be glad and happy to fill?

However, at this forgiving Christmas time, and at your request, I will be weaker in my responsibility to my honored friend Miss Coutts, than I believe I have a right to be. Try Rhena Dollard[†2] once more. Let her stay. But only on this condition. If you ever hear from her, one word expressive of discontent and an intetion to leave the Home; that instant put the dress upon her and shut the gate upon her for ever.

And let it be distinctly known among the rest that the object of the Home is, to save young women who wish to save themselves. That it is not the place for those who are indifferent to their own misery and degradation, and that I WILL NOT, nor will any of the gentlemen who assist Miss Coutts in its' management, allow its' benevolent purpose to be so grossly trifled with for a moment. On behalf of Miss Coutts and on behalf of those gentlemen, I give you this express charge above all others.—If any young woman ever signifies that she wants to go, or conveys to you in any way a threat that she means to leave, make that circumstance immediately known to me, and she shall be taken at her word and instantly discharged. Miss Coutts and the gentlemen were convinced of the necessity of this rule when we last discussed the subject together; and I then obtained their consent to it being severely and firmly carried out. I am certain that without it, it is unjust to carry on the Home. It is natural and womanly in you to pity this deluded Rhena Dolland or any other girl in the same tremendous danger; but the real object who properly demands your pity is the other girl still—the one who would try hard to do well whom such a girl keeps out.

Dear Mrs. Morson | Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

VII,242.13. To WILLIAM JONES,[†1] 13 JANUARY 1854*

MS Private.

Tavistock House | Friday Thirteenth January 1854

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. William Jones, and begs to acknowledge the receipt of his obliging note. The number of such proposals continually made to him in every variety of form, renders it impossible for Mr. Dickens to sanction or authorise the songs to which Mr. Jones refers:[†2] but he has neither the legal right (as he believes) nor the desire to interpose any objection in the way of their publication.

VII, 243.15. To MRS MORSON, 13 JANUARY 1854

Text from Robin A. Fenner catalogue, July 2001; chcecked from photocopyh of MS.

Tavistock House

Friday Thirteenth January | 1854

Dear Mrs. Morson

I take it for granted that you have received money from Miss Coutts since you wrote to me. Have you not? Because I saw Miss Coutts on this day week, and asked her if I should pay what was due? To which she replied, No. She would send it to you herself.

Faithfully yours

CHARLES DICKENS

VII,247.1.

(To LIEUT. COLONEL THE HON. C. B. PHIPPS, 14 JANUARY 1854) delete LIEUT.

VII,253.14. To CHARLES KNIGHT, 18 JANUARY 1854†

Replaces catalogue extract[aa]

MS Martin R. Nason.

Tavistock House
Wednesday Eighteenth January | 1854.

My Dear Knight.

I have read your letter with a great deal of interest, and shall be delighted at once to double the sum you have collected. I suppose there is [a] no better way of helping[a] the old man? It being that kind of poverty, I cannot think of any, nor am I quite sure that it would be right to devise any — unless there is any possibility of enabling the women to earn more money by any [a] slight extension of their little means.[a†1] Have you thought of this? Or will you turn it over for a few days?

Ever affectionately
CD

Charles Knight Esquire

February

VII,274.12. To CHARLES KNIGHT, 14 FEBRUARY 1854*

Replaces catalogue summary

MS Martin R. Nason

Tavistock House | Fourteenth February 1854

My Dear Knight.

Miss Coutts will give the Defoe family,[†1] ten pounds a year. Regard me as their banker to that amount, and let me know when you will prefer to have it.

Affectionately always
CD

VII,276.13. To CHARLES KNIGHT, 16 FEBRUARY 1854*

Replaces catalogue summary

MS Martin R. Nason.

Tavistock House | Sixteenth February 1854

My Dear Knight.

I will come to hold the proposed Council, with the greatest pleasure. But I cannot manage to dine out (in addition to pledges already registered above—or below) before Saturday the 25th. Either that day or the following Monday, Tuesday, or Wednesday, I am free.

Ever affectionately Yours

CD

VII,282.5. To MRS LIPPINCOTT,[†1] [LATE FEBRUARY 1854]

Mention in Mrs Lippincott to J. T. Fields, 3 Mar 54, MS Huntington Library. Date: no doubt a week or two before that letter.[†2]

VII,294.

n. 1 line 4 delete from "To . . . p. 68). and substitute see p. 312. n. 1.

April

VII,303.1 To WILLIAM BRADBURY, 5 APRIL 1854†

Replaces catalogue extract[aa]

Text from facsimile in Swann Galleries catalogue, Jan 1999.

Tavistock House

Wednesday Evening | Fifth April 1854

My Dear Bradbury.

[a] A capital sign indeed; and I am very much obliged to you for so promptly sending it up to me.[a]

Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

W. Bradbury Esquire.

VII,304.5 To CHAMBERS HALL,[†1] 5 APRIL 1854*

Text from facsimile in Alexander Autographs Inc, Oct 2000.

Tavistock House | Fifth April, 1854

My Dear Sir

I assure you that I am happy to enclose the autograph for the amiable lady. In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and seal this present spring morning, on the day and date first above written.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Chambers Hall Esquire.

VII,309.8. To MR STONE,[†1] 10 APRIL 1854*

MS Private.

Tavistock House | Tenth April, 1854

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Stone, and regrets that he cannot accede to Mr. Stone's request; simply because he is asked, so many hundred times in the course of a year, to do the same thing, that compliance is absolutely impossible.

May

VII,328.13. To THE VERY REV. THE DEAN OF BRISTOL, 6 MAY 1854

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, Dec 1995; MS 2 pp.; dated Tavistock House, 6 May 54; addressed The Very Rev. The Dean of Bristol.

Praises the Dean's excellent discourse . . . Stress of (Evangelical and very cloudy) weather, has driven me into the Foundling,[†1] whence I see no prospect of getting out until you are Bishop of London.

July

VII,372.27.

(To JULES BENEDICT, 20 JULY 1854) delete all after MS Private (envelope must be 1848)

VII,379.1.

(To LIEUT. COLONEL THE HON. C. B. PHIPPS, 26 JULY 1854) delete LIEUT.

VII,399.

n. 6 replace present note with "charges" suggests persons escorted by Cooper, but unidentified.

September

VII,427.12.

(To T.J. SERLE, 29 SEPTEMBER 1854) insert at left margin T.J. Serle Esquire

October

VII,441.28. To THOMAS BARLOW, 20 OCTOBER 1854*

Text from facsimile in Alexander Autographs Inc. Catalogue (June 1997).

Tavistock House | Twentieth October 1854.

My Dear Sir

On my return to town, I find your present awaiting me, for which I beg you to accept my cordial and hearty thanks. It is most welcome to me, both as a mark of your remembrance of which I am proud and as enriching me with two beautiful examples of the art in which you have won such high distinction.[†1]

Believe me | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas O. Barlow Esquire.

November

VII,469.8. To MRS JOHNS,[†1] 18 NOVEMBER 1854*

MS Brian Lake.

Tavistock House,
London Eighteenth November, 1854

My Dear Mrs. Johns.

I have considered the whole question of the agreement,[†2] carefully, and I am sorry to add that I can give you no more helpful advice than to sign it.

Messrs. Longman have made up their minds in this matter, I clearly perceive. If I were to see them, I am sure in my own heart (forming my judgement on some knowledge of them) that I should not succeed in doing anything for your benefit. And if my visit had any effect at all, I have a strong misgiving that it might be to induce them to turn round angrily and say "Very well. Then we don't want the book at all, and will have nothing to do with it."

In that case, Mr. Nicolas[†3] would lose his hundred pounds. A book of this description is extremely costly to print;[†4] the times are very bad for such an outlay (for then the interest of former wars, is lost in the fever of the present war), very few houses would be disposed to undertake the enterprise; and I doubt if any house whatever would be disposed to pay anything down for it.

On the other hand, Messrs. Longman stand in the position of paying Two Hundred Pounds for it, and you achieve the object of getting it published. This is important for you, for three reasons. Firstly, because it was your dear husband's very earnest desire to have it published. Secondly, for Mr. Nicolas's sake. And, Thirdly, because if it should attract attention and become recognized as a work of reference, it may establish a claim for your son[†5] to advancement in his profession.

Taking the first and third objects into consideration, I would recommend you to get a stipulation inserted in the agreement, through your solicitor, to the effect that the name of Captain Johns of the Royal Marines, shall be always mentioned on the title page.

I will not enquire whether Messrs. Longman attach as much importance to my good opinion as you believe they do. But, whether or no, you may rely upon it that they suppose me to have been already made acquainted with the whole business.

Personally my opinion is, that they might — with no very great stretch of generosity — have reserved you some right in the book hereafter. But I am not a Bookseller, and Booksellers and Bookwriters look at such questions, in the eternal order of things, from the opposite poles of the earth.

Mrs. Dickens sends her love. We are greatly pleased to hear such cheering accounts of your children. May God preserve your son, and restore him to you happily!

My Dear Mrs. Johns | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

VII,472.10. To JOHN DARLINGTON,[†1] 23 NOVEMBER 1854*

MS Private.

Tavistock House | London
Thursday Twenty Third November | 1854.

Dear Sir

Allow me to assure you that I feel cordially obliged to you for your kind invitation. But my stay in Bradford will be no longer than is absolutely necessary for my purpose, and I have arranged to remain at the Hotel. I am not the less sensible of your hospitable intentions.

Dear Sir
Yours faithfully and obliged
CHARLES DICKENS

John Darlington Esquire.

VII,472.20. To MRS EXALL,[†1] 23 NOVEMBER 1854

Mention in Heritage Book Shop catalogue (1995); dated 23 Nov 54; addressed Mrs Exall.

Declining an invitation.

VII,540.

n. 2 line 1 after Girardin add, née Delphine Gay

VII,557.

n. 1 delete last sentence

1855

April

VII,591.19.

(To W. H. WILLS, 13 APRIL 1855) at I know add[1]

21. at bothered change to[2]

insert[1] 1 Clearly CD himself for n. 1 read n. 2 delete The story described . . . published in HW replace with This was the MS of Chs I-II of an untitled novel by Wills himself, obviously given up as the result of CD's criticism. Perhaps a third or a quarter remains, besides an earlier draft and 44 pp. of rejected passages (details and extracts given in Quaritch's Victorian Fiction catalogue, ?Apr 1997); continue though Wills's . . .

VII,596.

n. 10 for Lieut. Col. read Col.

May

VII,610.1. To W. S. LINCOLN,†1 5 MAY 1855*

MS Keele University Library.

Tavistock House | Fifth May, 1855

Sir

The dream is very curious and pretty, and I am much obliged to you for it.†2

The Editor of the paper (enclosed)[†3] in which your foreign ramble appears, is rather cool in his affiliations, if I may judge from his use of my name.

I do not like to invite contributions to Household Words, in case they should not meet its requirements. But whatever contributions are offered at the office, are read; each I am always glad to accept, and sorry to reject.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. W.S. Lincoln

VII,614.15. To FRANK SMEDLEY,[†1] 8 MAY 1855†

Replaces misdated extract[aa] (Vol. VII, p. 610)

MS Kent Bicknell.

Tavistock House
Eighth May 1855, Tuesday.

My Dear Sir

I have read the enclosed with much interest, and greatly admire the point and brevity with which it is written. It is unaffected and spirited, and altogether worthy of its subject.

But [a] I cannot reconcile it to my heart, to publish these details so soon after Miss Brontés[†2] death. For anything I know, they might be saddening and painful to her husband;[†3] and I am not at all clear that I have any right to them. I have a particular objection to that kind of interest in a great mind, which prompts a visitor to take "a good look" at the mortal habiliments in which it is arrayed, and afterwards to catalogue them like an auctioneer. I have no sympathy whatever, with the staring curiosity that it gratifies.

And beyond the husband, and even the father,[†4] of this lady, I cannot help going to herself.[†5] It seems to me that she would have shrunk from this account of her trials; and that such as she wanted given, she has given herself; and that for the present there is enough said about them.

The subject does not present itself to you in this light. I quite understand; nor do I seek to convert you to my opinions. I state them plainly, merely as my sole reason for not retaining the paper.[a†6]

I perfectly remember our meeting at Mr. Stanfield's,[†7] and have read your note with much pleasure. It is a high gratification to me, I assure you, to be received (in my books) into such companionship as you describe.

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

F. E. Smedley Esquire.

VII,622.5. To SIR JAMES EMERSON TENNENT, 15 MAY 1855*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Private | Sir James Emerson Tennent | &c &c &c. | Board of Trade.

Tavistock House | Fifteenth May 1855.

My Dear Tennent

I owe you many thanks for your book,[†1] which is full of curious and interesting matter. I am not clear that my friend Household Words will quite agree with you[†2] on some points; but I hope he can do you justice nevertheless, and shew a high regard for you.

I wish we were all going up Mount Vesuvius again,[†3] with no war and no disgraces and bedevilments at home to drive us out of our wits!

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Sir James Emerson Tennent.

VII,622.20. To [EDWARD] CARDALE,[†1] 17 MAY 1855

Extract in David Schulson Autographs catalogue; MS 1 p.; dated Tavistock House, 17 May 55; addressed Mr Cardale.

I learn from your father[†2] you will be so kind as to receive the enclosed from me. I therefore send you a very inelegant parcel.[†3]

VII,624.24.

(To CLARKSON STANFIELD, 20 MAY 1855) headnote read MS Beinecke Library, Yale University

VII,631.28. To SIR JAMES EMERSON TENNENT, 24 MAY 1855*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Private | Sir James Emerson Tennent | Board of Trade.

Tavistock House
Thursday Twenty Fourth May 1855

My Dear Tennent.

I will not write to the Times this once.[†1]

And I will try you again, tomorrow (Friday) at half past 2.

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Sir James Emerson Tennent.

VII,631.

n. 3 col. 2 line 2 for Ethel read Ellen

June

VII,638.1. To W.M. THACKERAY, 2 JUNE 1855

Text from Helen Hartman Gemmill, E.L.†1: The Bread Box Papers, Doylestown, 1983, p. 101.

Tavistock House, | Saturday, Second June 1855

My Dear Thackeray.

A friend of mine wants the address of the man who makes the bells leap into people's hands, & does all those ticklish things with the extensive skirts of the ladies' dresses.†2 Will you get it for me? That little Darling†3 who sat opposite to me at dinner must know where he lives.

Very faithfully yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

VII,649.13. To SIR JAMES EMERSON TENNENT, 14 JUNE 1855*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Private | Sir James Emerson Tennent | &c &c &c | Board of Trade.

Tavistock House | Fourteenth June 1855

My Dear Tennent

Your kind note made the case so clear, that I felt I had no right to trouble you by calling at the Board of Trade this morning. I will give Bulwer†1 the amended paper (which I will write out for the purpose), towards the close of next week, when both he and I will have a little more leisure.

Faithfully Yours ever
CHARLES DICKENS

Sir James Emerson Tennent.

VII,657.1. To SIR JAMES EMERSON TENNENT, 23 JUNE 1855*

MS King's School, Canterbury.

Tavistock House | Twenty Third June 1855

My Dear Tennent.

A thousand thanks for your capital suggestion[†1]—which is so tersely and pointedly conveyed that I have already so got it in my mind in your way that I doubt if I shall be able to put it in any other, when the time comes. I will certainly use it. It is a capital illustration, and just the thing for a popular assembly.

Mrs. Dickens shewed me a letter of yours a day or two ago, which quite delighted me.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Sir James Emerson Tennent

VII,666.1. To HENRY DIXON,[†1] 3 JULY 1855*

MS Mrs Diana O'Connor. Address: Mr. Dixon, | 83, Stanhope Street | Hampstead | London.

Tavistock House | Third July 1855.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Dixon, and begs to say in answer to Mr. Dixon's obliging letter, that although he considers Local Administrative Reform Associations highly desirable, he believes his avocations will prevent him from joining any such Body, and will best enable him to help the movement in the aggregate.

VII,669.

n. 3 line 3 for Frank Robson read Frederick Robson

September

VII,699.8.

(To MR GARDINER, 7 SEPTEMBER 1855) for Peter Harries read Jonathan W. Cross

n. 4 replace with Secretary and "principal Magnetizer" at the London Mesmeric Infirmary (founded by John Elliotson in 1849), on its move in 1855 from 9 Bedford St, Bedford Sq. to 36 Weymouth St (see Alan Gauld, A History of Hypnotism, Cambridge, 1992, p. 213).

October

VII,719.21. To E. HUTCHINGS,[†1] 12 OCTOBER 1855*

MS Private.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS,
Friday October Twelfth 1855

Dear Sir

I would comply with your request if I could, but it is quite impossible. I am too busily engaged with my own pursuits, and cannot find leisure for the purpose.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

E. Hutchings Esquire

November

VII,733.15.

(To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 2 NOVEMBER 1855) for Tennent read Tennant

VII,734.24.

(To MRS BROWN, 3 NOVEMBER 1855) for Tennent read Tennant

VII,745.18. To MESSRS BRADBURY & EVANS, [? MID-NOVEMBER 1855]*†1

MS Joseph R. Sakmyster. Date: probably after CD's return to Paris on 9 Nov 55; handwriting supports.

Dear B and E.

I return you the bill, endorsed as I suppose you to wish to have it. I will write to Mr. Weber†2 by this post, letting him know that you will forward him a Proof of No. 1†3 in great privacy and confidence by tomorrow's post (if you have not already done so). Taüchnitz's 2 copies†4 had best go at the same time.

You will, of course, keep me well informed as to the Go of No. 1.†5

The weather has been abominably dark here, and we have had the additional satisfaction of pulling our apartment to pieces again, in consequence of the ceilings beginning to tumble down. However, both the apartment and the weather have this day come all right again.

I see a good many French people here, and am not surprised to find a general impression (not to be concealed by any politeness) that England has become a mere second-rate power and is perfectly unable to do anything for herself — [the] result of toadyism and misgovernment, which will bear fruit.

I am sorry to hear of poor Hicks's†6 misfortune. When you write to him, pray tell him that I sent my regard and sympathy.

Faithfully Yours ever

CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Bradbury and Evans.

VII,745.19. To [?THEODOR] WEBER, [?MID-NOVEMBER 1855]

Mention in last. Date: written same day.

December

VII,761.10.

Replaces catalogue mention

To MRS BROWN,[†1] 9 DECEMBER 1855*

Text from facsimile in RWA Inc., New Hampshire, Auction Catalogue, Mar 1998.

Paris, 49 Avenue des champs Elyseés
Sunday Ninth December 1855

My Dear Mrs. Brown

Many thanks for your letter, which relieved me very much. I had been afraid that Miss Coutts was unwell, but knowing repose to be essential to her, had abstained from worrying her or you by writing. I hope to be in Stratton Street next Sunday, this day week, at about 2. Meanwhile and ever, Believe me

Your faithful friend
CHARLES DICKENS

VII,767.

n. 4 for Jane read Grace

VII,772.10. To THE HON. ROBERT LYTTON, 25 DECEMBER 1855

Replaces smaller extract [†aa] To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT

Extract in Swann Galleries Inc Autographs catalogue (May 1997); MS 1 p.; dated Paris, Christmas Day, 1855; addressed Edward Robert Bulwer Lytton.

Inviting him to attend a reading from Little Dorrit.[†1] For the last ten days I have been incessantly travelling, and reading Christmas Carols to thousands of people. I feel this morning like an enormous Top in full spin.

APPENDIXES:

A. ADDENDA TO VOLUMES I-VI

1837

January

782.

To (BENSON E. HILL, [?JANUARY 1837]) n. 4 delete The letter is endorsed . . . papers.

December

788.1.

(To RICHARD BENTLEY, [?DECEMBER 1837]) reference should read 1, 348. 1.

1839

September

806.

(To MESSRS BRADBURY & EVANS, [?23 SEPTEMBER 1839]) delete entry; cataloguer misunderstood CD's joke about Hicks: see Vol. I, p. 397. 18.

October

807.

(To EDWARD WORTHINGTON, 4 OCTOBER 1839) n. 1 add See Vol. 1, p. 591 & nn

1840

March

814.

(To MRS HALL, 13 MARCH 1840) amend headnote to read MS Free Library of Philadelphia

October

820.

(To THOMAS MITTON, 8 OCTOBER 1840) amend headnote to read MS Huntington Library

1841

December

837.

(To MESSRS COUTTS & CO, 20 DECEMBER 1841) amend headnote to read MS Stefano Anter

1845

October

865.

(To MR STACEY, [LATE OCTOBER 1845]) after IV, 419.11. add Replaces entry (Vol. V, p. 219)

1852

March

905.

(To CHARLES DE LA PRYME, 3 MARCH 1852) amend headnote to read MS Free Library of Philadelphia

906.

(To MRS WATSON, 29 MARCH 1852) amend heading to read To THE HON. MRS RICHARD WATSON,

Index of Correspondents

931 Phipps, for Lieut. Col. read Col.

INDEX OF PLACES AND NAMES

934 col. 2 Arcedeckne, Andrew for 449 read 499

936 col. 2 BOYLE, Mary add 765-6

938 col. 2 CARDALE, John Bate after 622 add & nn

943 col. 1 DICKENS, Catherine Macready lines 7-8 delete requests picture 800

946 col. 2 DICKENS, Mrs Charles col. 2 line 2 after (1839) insert requests picture 800;

948 col. 1 Evans, Frederick Mullet line 4 for 143 read 144

Evans, Frederick Mullet Jr. for Mullet read Moule

for 143 read 144

949 col. 1 Ford, Richard for 582n read 584n

953 col. 2 Holdsworth, (Holsworth) George after 429 add & n

959 col. 1 Long, James for 836 read 838

965 col. 1 PHIPPS, for Lieut. Col. read Col.

965 Pitt, William the younger replace with Pitt, Charles Dibdin

966 col. 1 Reed, before Andrew insert The Rev.

col. 2 Robson, for Frank read Frederick

967 col. 1 Ruskin, John for 54n read 55n;

for 518n read 517n

968 col. 2 SINNETT, John Taylor for 346 read 347

969 col. 2 Stone, Ellen add 631n

Stone, Ethel delete entry

970 col. 1 Stonehouse, J. H. line 5 for 73 read 74

970 col. 2 Taylor, Tom after 278 add & n;

after 400 add & n

TENNANT, Rev William add 733

Tennent, Eleanor delete (or Edith) add entry Tennent, Edith 183n

TENNENT, Sir James Emerson, delete 733-4

973 col. 1 Watson, Mary Georgiana replace 765-7 with 767 & n

Volume VIII, 1856-1858

VIII,xxiii

31 Jan line 2 read 1 June 1857

VIII,4.

n. 5 read "The Poor Clare", which did not appear until 13-27 Dec.

VIII,5.

n. 5 delete: clearly the godson

VIII,6.

n. 1 line 1 read Katherine line 2 read daughter of Henry Wilkinson: see to Miss Hogarth, 14 Mar 70 fn.

7. n. 2 add On 12 June 69 The Times advertised "Helen Hogarth's Evening Concert" in the Hanover Square Rooms.

1856

January

VIII,14.1. To EDMUND WARDLEY,[†1] 7 JANUARY 1856

Extract in Phillips catalogue, Nov 1995; MS 1 p.; dated Paris, 7 Jan 56; addressed Edmund Wardley.

Regretting that, as he has no occasion to visit London, he is unable to see the girl in whom you are interested.[†2] But suggesting instead that he arrange an appointment, it will enable her to be spoken with by the lady[†3] who will forward this note to you, she will report her opinion of the case to me.

VIII,14.2.

(To MISS MARY BOYLE, 8 JANUARY 1856) add to headnote Address (envelope, MS Private): L'Angleterre | Miss Mary Boyle. Care of Captain Cavendish Boyle | Weedon. PM. 8 Jan 56.

15.7. after Barriers add[[text ref]]1*a* insert [1a] City gates.

VIII,29.1 up.

(To WILKIE COLLINS, 19 JANUARY 1856) after hair add[[text ref]]9

insert[9] See John Morley, Death, Heaven and the Victorians, 1971, passim. He treats jewellers' work on hair as "the jewelry of sentiment par excellence", in which actual parts of a dead relation or friend were made from hair. "The 1840s | 1850s produced the finest hair work" (p. 67). Several of Morley's plates are devoted to artistry in hair.

VIII,32.

n. 4 lines 1-2 for 8 Mar read 16 Feb; for 172 read 97

VIII,34.2.

(To JOHN FORSTER, 20 JANUARY 1856) after some Lady somebody add[[text ref]]2*a* insert [2a] According to Alan Watts "Dickens and Pauline Viardot", D, 91 (Winter 1995), 173, a rather eccentric lady, Theodosia, Dowager Lady Monson.

VIII,38.6.

(To W. H. WILLS, 28 JANUARY 1856) move[1] back to shy

n. 1. insert Cautious, timid.

VIII,48.

n. 1 line 8 after Lodgings add 1.

February

VIII,50.32.

(To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 9 FEBRUARY 1856) after consideration add[6]

insert[6] Details of the lease are given in a series of 12 letters between Wills and Hindle (MSS W. A. Foyle). It was agreed that CD's lease would begin on Lady Day (19 Mar 57). It was also agreed that if CD would look at the fixtures, they could settle on a price without calling in valuers. In his last letter Wills told Hindle of CD's plans for a visit the following week, together with Wills.

VIII,53.

n. 7 line 6 for brother read father

VIII,57.

n. 4 add Author not discovered, probably anonymous.

VIII,75.

n. 7 line 2 for 1841 read 1846

April

VIII,81.6. To EMILE DE GIRARDIN,[†1] [?EARLY APRIL 1856]*

MS Michael Silverman. Date: written before CD's letter To Girardin of 7 Apr, during his residence in Paris between Nov 55 and Apr 56.

Pardon mon cher M. Girardin, la faute est la mienne, et je rougis de l'avouer! Malheureusement nous sommes engagé également pour JEUDI.[†2] Vous me donnerez neanmoins le grand plaisir de vous voir, Vendredi?[†3] En attendant, mes erreurs (comme vos si charmants diners) ne comptent pas.

Votre fidele

CD

VIII,83.1. To EMILE DE GIRARDIN, 7 APRIL 1856*

MS Michael Silverman.

Champs Elysées, 7 avril, 1856

Lundi[†1] donc Mon cher M. Girardin, avec le plus grand plaisir. CD.

VIII,84.

n. 4 read Richard, son . . .

VIII,90.

n. 2 line 2 for 1864 read 1863

VIII,91.

n. 6 line 2 after patron add and epicure.

VIII,94.

n. 8 line 1 for 1829 read 1729

VIII,95. 35.

(To WILKIE COLLINS, 22 APRIL 1856) after Gustavus add[6]

insert[6] Probably J. R. Planché's extravaganza Gustavus III; or, The Masked Ball, an adaptation of Scribe's opera, with music by Auber, Covent Garden, 1833. Reference to final scene virtually impossible to find, since not even published in Planché's Extravaganzas (5 vols).

VIII,101.

n. 2 col. 2 lines 2-3 change to read (who, heated by brandy, strangled her with his hands),

May

VIII,119.24. To LADY TENNENT, 14 MAY 1856*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Lady Emerson Tennent | 66 Warwick Square | Belgravia.

Tavistock House | Fourteenth May 1856.

My Dear Lady Tennent

I am extremely sorry at this late moment to be denied the pleasure of dining with you today, the more so as any renewal of our travelling days is always delightful to me. But I got a letter by the post this morning, telling me that Mrs. Dickens and her sister are coming over this evening — sooner than I expected them — and I am not even clear of their having as much money as they ought to have, and am quite clear that I have the key of a case containing some little things I have bought in France, which they suppose to be among their keys, and which case must be opened at Folkestone. After passing half an hour in a wilderness of confusion, I have decided to set off and meet them — and this is the upshot of the present long story.

I beg my kindest regard to Sir James and to Miss Tennent and your son,[†1] and am Dear Lady Tennent

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

VIII,127.17. To DR F. H. F. QUIN,[†1] [?31 MAY 1856]*

Replaces catalogue summary (Vol. VIII, p. 129)

Text from facsimile in Remember When Auctions Inc. catalogue, March 1997. Address: Dr. Quin. Date: Saturday before 5 June 56, the date of the first anniversary dinner of the Royal Hospital for Incurables: see Vol. VIII, p. 129.

Saturday

My Dear Quin. At the right hand corner on entering the room, where the chairman's table joins the corner table at right angles, Professor Ferguson[†2] will find his name, next to Daniel[†3] opposite to Harvey.[†4]

VIII,131.

n. 5 add Letters from Alfred and Frederick Dickens to Octavian Blewitt, Secretary of the Royal Literary Fund (MSS copies, Dickens House), show that Dickens left the application for a grant to his uncle, J. H. Barrow (see Vol. 1, p. 33*n*), to his brothers, no doubt because he was then putting plans forward for reform of the Fund: see To Blewitt, 24 Apr 58 and nn. Barrow was suffering from an infection of the stomach and kidneys, and died on 29 Mar 58. The Fund made him a grant of £50 and his widow, Kitty, £25. Frederick also reported Barrow's death to Blewitt (MS ibid.).

VIII,136.

n. 4 replace with For the Adelphi theatre, soon to be rebuilt.

June

VIII,137.3. To MRS CARPENTER,†1 [?1854-JUNE 1856]

Envelope only in Henry Bristow catalogue No. 282 (1983). Address: Mrs Carpenter | Great George Street | Bristol. PM illegible. Date: while she was still living in Great George St (she died on 19 June 56).

July

VIII,156.10.

(To W. C. MACREADY, 8 JULY 1856) after my poor boy add[1a] insert [1a] Henry Frederick Bulwer, Macready's third son.

VIII,160.

n. 3 col. 2 line 2 delete by

VIII,174.

n. 7 line 10 read Boar

August

VIII,180.8.

(To JOHN FORSTER, [?30 AUGUST 1856]) delete to

September

VIII,190.8.

(To GEORGE AUGUSTUS SALA, 19 SEPTEMBER 1856) after of that kind. add[[text ref]]2*a* insert [2a] Sala was notoriously irresponsible over money and was declared bankrupt in 1867: see P. D. Edwards, Dickens's `Young Men', p. 120.

October

VIII,198.20.

(To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 3 OCTOBER 1856) headnote for Roger W. Barrett read Free Library of Philadelphia

November

VIII,219.19.

(To MRS AUSTIN, 5 NOVEMBER 1856) after else. add[[text ref]]2*a* n.1 for 1802-66 read 1793-1867

insert [2a] The Frozen Deep. Catherine Dickens invited her on 4 Dec (MS Vernhagen Collection, Krakov).

VIII,227.12 To [?B. H.] BECKER,[†1] 29 NOVEMBER 1856

Replaces extract (Vol. VIII, p. 220)

Mention in Sotheby's catalogue, 24 Feb 2000; dated 29 Nov 56; addressed Mr. Becker.

Mr. Charles Dickens . . . begs to say that he has referred Mr. Becker's note to the Author of Sister Rose,[†2] in doing which his power of interference in the matter to which it refers, ends.

December

VIII,230.10.

(To THOMAS MITTON, 3 DECEMBER 1856) for Dirctors read Directors

VIII,231.15.

(To JAMES DUNN, 4 DECEMBER 1856) for Goodspeeds Book Shop read MS Beinecke Library, Yale University.

VIII,235.10. To MR BARROW, [10 DECEMBER 1856]

Mention in next. Date: no doubt same day.

VIII,235.11. To JOSEPH CROOK,†1 10 DECEMBER 1856*

MS Private.

Tavistock House, London | Tenth December, 1856.

My Dear Sir

The pressure of my avocations constrains me to reply to Mr. Barrow†2 that I cannot possibly comply with the request of my Bolton friends.

To you, I may add that I receive similar requests in such incredible numbers, that I can seldom even answer them under my own hand.

With many thanks for your kind offers, I am My Dear Sir

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Joseph Crook Esquire.

VIII,238.

n. 3 add On 29 Nov 56 Lord Gardner wrote to Julia Fortescue: "The time has come when I am enabled to perform an old promise. | . . . [but] give out that it took place in France in 1847 or 48" (George Martell, Julia Fortescue and her Circle, 1959, p. 176). The actual date and place have never been discovered.

VIII,240.29.

(To WILLIAM CULLENFORD, 17 DECEMBER 1856) for Private read Beinecke Library, Yale University

VIII,246.

n. 3 col. 2 lines 8-9 for the following summer read in the summer of 1858

1857

January

VIII,253.22. To J. V. STAPLES,†1 5 JANUARY 1857

Replaces N text (Vol. VII, p. 1)

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Tavistock House, Tavistock Square.
Fifth January 1857.

Dear Sir

I beg to explain to you in reply to your sensible letter, that I have purposely disencumbered the Child's History, of dates (though I think it mentions more dates than you suppose) in order to increase its romantic and attractive air. It is my hope, by presenting the truth in an agreeable and winning[†2] form, to lead young people to take an interest in the dates belonging to it,[†3] and to pursue it further.

I could not therefore embody more figures in the text of the little History without a departure from my original intention. If any striking way should occur to me of adding a reference to the periods of the principal events, to the last Volume, I will consider it.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

James Verry Staples Esquire.

VIII,255.22.

(To THE DEAN OF ST PAUL'S, 9 JANUARY 1857) for night read nigh

VIII,262.6. To SIR JAMES EMERSON TENNENT, 15 JANUARY 1857*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House
Thursday Fifteenth January 1857.

My Dear Tennent

We were dancing the insanest of reels and country dances here (in consequence of having had nothing else to do)[†1] until 6 o'Clock this morning. Hence, when your kind note arrived, I had no one at hand to refer to, and confirm or dispel a horrible idea I had that Mrs. Dickens had engaged us, only yesterday, to the Frederick Pollocks[†2] for your day. I grieve to assure you that this is the dismal fact. We would far rather come to you, but we stand pledged to them, though I entered my protest against it (for no particular reason that I knew of), when I was so disposed of.

It is very unfortunate, and we all regret it very much.

Believe me ever | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Sir James Emerson Tennent.

VIII,264.19.

(To WILLIAM TELBIN, 19 JANUARY 1857) after one of them add[[text ref]]1*a* insert [1a] No doubt a special signed note to insert in one of the books.

VIII,290.

n. 2 read Richard Warner

March

VIII,295.12. To SIR RODERICK MURCHISON,[†1] 4 MARCH 1857*

MS Frances Stimpson.

Tavistock House | Fourth March 1857

My Dear Sir Roderic[†2]

Your letter has interested me very much indeed, and is another proof to me (if I wanted one) of your manly championship on all occasions, of the claims of humanity and the dignity of science.

I have no belief in the justice or generosity of an English Ministry. I have no belief in their caring about any thing but themselves and their miserable party strife. I have no belief in their having the least interest in Franklin,[†3] or in any thing Polar except the polling at corrupt elections. As to Sir Charles Wood's[†4] being up in Lady Franklin's[†5] Map,—I would as soon take his opinion on a Map of the Kingdom of Heaven.

All this is so much a matter of course that I don't write to set it forth, but to assure you of my readiness to call attention to the subject again, and to serve it to the utmost extent of my power. Don't think I neglect it or postpone it, because you may not see it revived in the next few numbers of Household Words.[†6] Fearing you might do so, I write to explain to you that the mechanical and commercial necessities of the publication require every No. to be prepared three weeks before-hand.

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Sir Roderic Murchison

VIII,303.7-11.

(To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, [15-17 MARCH 1857]) delete entry; see To Lytton, 28 Jan, pp. 269-70

April

VIII,310.14. To H.M. CUSTOMS & EXCISE, 8 APRIL 1857*

Text from facsimile in University Archives, Conn., catalogue No. 142.

Tavistock House London | Eighth April 1857.

I beg to state that I give my free consent, on the solicitation of Mr. King of St. Michael's Hill, Bristol,[†1] to the admission into this country of one copy of a Leipzig reprint of David Copperfield, and one copy of a Leipzig reprint of Pickwick (I being the author of both books) brought over by a German passenger from Manila[†2] in the Hamburg ship Maitahan.

CHARLES DICKENS

VIII,314.36.

(To J. E. BRADFIELD, 16 APRIL 1857) read MS Berg Collection.

VIII,317.6. To L. MACKENZIE,[†1] 18 APRIL 1857†

Replaces catalogue extract[aa]

MS Martin R. Nason.

Tavistock House | Eighteenth April, 1857

Sir.

[a] Allow me to thank you for your note.[a] It gives me the first intelligence of a coincidence which I shall examine with interest when the completion of the labor I am at present engaged on shall leave me more leisure than I have just now. I do not know Mrs. Opie's[†2] story[†3] in the least; nor have I her books in my library to settle its place in her works. [a] I have observed Miss Wade in real life (as I dare say Mrs. Opie observed her gentleman), and know the character to be true in every respect. It quite fascinated me in its singular anatomy and I devoted great pains to it in [†b] the little narrative.[†b] I observe it to be out of the familiar experience of most people and that they regard it with an incredulous kind of astonishment,—though in reality it is often before them.[a]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

L. Mackenzie Esquire

May

VIII,332.15.

(To THE HON. MISS EMILY EDEN, 25 MAY 1857) heading delete MISS

VIII,339.

n. 1 line 4 delete though this is not named

June

VIII,354.21. To MESSRS W. H. SMITH & SON,[†1] 16 JUNE 1857*

MS W. H. Smith Ltd.

Garrick Club | Tuesday Sixteenth June, 1857

Gentlemen

I beg to call your attention to the accompanying proof,[†2] setting forth an object which the Committee desire should in all cases be left to speak for itself without further explanation or comment.

You will assist it in a very powerful and important manner, if you will have the goodness to favor us with your written permission to post our bills at any Railway Stations we may deem expedient, during the next month or five weeks.

Requesting this favor at your hands, we have the honor to be

Your faithful Servants
CHARLES DICKENS
ARTHUR W. W. SMITH[†3]

Messrs. W. H. Smith and Son.

VIII,355.21. To W. HEPWORTH DIXON, 19 JUNE 1857

Extract in L'Autographe S. A., Geneva, 1998; MS 1 p.; dated Office of HW, 19 June 57; addressed W. Hepworth Dixon.

Writing about suggestions[†1] in reference to Mr. Lloyd[†2] and since it is necessary to have a good name to serve as counterbalance he has taken the liberty of adding yours too.

July

VIII,363.15. To JOSEPH LANGFORD,[†1] 2 JULY 1857†

Replaces catalogue summary

MS Brian Lake.

IN REMEMBRANCE OF THE LATE MR. DOUGLAS JERROLD COMMITTEE OFFICE,
GALLERY OF ILLUSTRATION,
REGENT STREET. | Second July 1857.

My Dear Sir

I have the pleasure of enclosing two cards for the Queen's night,[†2] for yourself and your sister. There will not be above five and twenty people present in addition to the Queen's party.

With many thanks for your kind and valuable aid.[†3]

Believe me always
Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Joseph Langford Esquire

VIII,379.

n. 3 line 3 for Frank read Edmund Smedley

n. 4 line 10 for then read née

VIII,389.1. To JOHN HOLLINGSHEAD, 27 JULY 1857†

Replaces catalogue extract[aa]

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Gad's Hill Place, Higham, by Rochester
Twenty Seventh July, 1857

Dear Mr. Hollingshead

I beg to assure you that I have been sensibly touched by your earnest and affectionate words, and that I thank you out of my heart. [a] I will not say that I think the thing too low, and too degrading to Literature, to be honored with such notice.[†1] This was certainly my first impression when I began to read your Proof;[†2] but as I proceeded, I felt that I could not spare such tenderness of appreciation as yours, or wish for any reason to lose the utterance of it.[a]

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Hollingshead Esquire.

September

VIII,392.

n. 1 line 2 for search read Search

VIII,443.5.

(To JOHN FORSTER, [11 SEPTEMBER 1857]) after no streets to speak of add comma

VIII,446.18.

(To JOHN FORSTER, [15 SEPTEMBER 1857]) replace far from with not

VIII,448.19. To MRS TERNAN,[†1] 16 SEPTEMBER 1857*

MS Martin R. Nason.

Angel Hotel. | Wednesday Morning
Sixteenth September 1857

My Dear Mrs. Ternan.

We will be with you at a quarter past one to day.[†2] We will come away from the course at whatever time suits you best; and pray do me the favor to have no ceremony with me, but [be][†3] quite sure that your convenience is mine.

With kind regard | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

VIII,448.

n. 1 col. 2 line 3-4 delete (F, 1872-4 . . . Appx 511).

VIII,459.

n. 7 lines 8-9 for to be read finally

460. n. 8 (459 cont.) col. 2 line 3 for 193 read 393

October

VIII,468.23.

(To HENRY MORLEY, 18 OCTOBER 1857) read MS Free Library of Philadelphia

469.8. for suppositious read supposititious

VIII,475.1. To CAPTAIN HENRY HARVEY,[†1] 29 OCTOBER 1857

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, Dec 1995; MS 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill Place, 29 Oct 57; addressed Captain Harvey.

Declining on behalf of Mrs. Dickens, and the Misses Dickens, the invitation of Captain Harvey and the officers of HMS Waterloo.[†2] But Mrs. Dickens is absent in ill-health, and Mr. Dickens has an engagement in London the following night.

November

VIII,481.15. To JOSEPH LANGFORD, 23 NOVEMBER 1857*

MS Brian Lake.

Tavistock House, W. C.
Monday November Twenty Third, 1857

My Dear Langford

Better late than never. I send you my remainder of Manzanilla. As I have had it several years, and it was a wine of very good repute when I bought it, I hope you will find it worth the having waited for.†1

Believe me
Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Joseph Langford Esquire

VIII,484.1. To SIR JAMES EMERSON TENNENT, [?NOVEMBER 1857]

MS (envelope) Morgan Library. Address: Private | Sir James Emerson Tennent | Board of Trade | Whitehall. Date: envelope marked "November 1857" in another hand; not sent through post.

VIII,489.

n. 1 line 3 for VII, read VIII

VIII,492.6.

(To JOHN HOLLINGSHEAD, 12 DECEMBER 1857) read MS Free Library of Philadelphia

25. for Podgers read Dodgers

493.2. for solicitous read literary

4. read immortal Podgers, and the mortal Dodgers

7. read John Hollingshead Esquire

December

VIII,496.9. To DR J. SHERIDAN MUSPRATT, 20 DECEMBER 1857

Summary in Skinner Books catalogue, Spring 2000; MS 1 p.; dated 20 Dec 57; addressed Dr Sheridan Muspratt.

Concerning communiqués with Manchester and Birmingham[†1] and rejecting a group of dates sent to him.[†2]

VIII,501.1.

for UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT read H.M. CUSTOMS AND EXCISE

1858

January

VIII,505.17.

(To WILKIE COLLINS, 17 JANUARY 1858) after Friday add[5a]

insert. [5A] CD recorded in the Hospital's Visitors Book: "Much delighted with the great improvement in the Hospital, under many difficulties—with the excellent demeanour of the attendants—and with the benign and wise spirit of the whole administration. CHARLES DICKENS January Fifteenth 1858" (given in Richard Hunter and Ida MacAlpine, Three Hundred Years of Psychiatry | 1535-1860, 1963, p. 999).

February

VIII,512.19.

(To W. M. THACKERAY, 2 FEBRUARY 1858) for expensive read expansive 19-20. for constitutes read constitutes

VIII,514.

n. 5 read Française add: see p. 37*n* for CD's criticism of their performances

n. 6 line 3 read Française

VIII,515.21.

(To CAVENDISH SPENCER BOYLE, 5 FEBRUARY 1858) after To insert CAPTAIN

22. headnote read MS Free Library of Philadelphia

516. n. 7 line 3 read took part in the second relief . . .

VIII,519.1. To ERNEST DE BUNSEN,[†1] 11 FEBRUARY 1858*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Tavistock House | Eleventh February 1858

My Dear Sir

I beg to thank the fair authoress of the book[†2] with which I am favored through your hands, for that most welcome and interesting mark of remembrance.

I am not the author of the Drama called The Frozen Deep. It was produced under my direction, and I acted in it. But it was written by Mr. Wilkie Collins. It has never been printed, or published. The Prompt Book is in my possession, and is the only Manuscript copy of it that has ever been made. I of course consider that I have no right to part with it, save on Mr. Collins's authority. Hans Christian Andersen[†3] (with a view to the production of the play in Denmark)[†4] wrote to me for it but a little while ago, and I referred him to Mr. Collins, as I now refer Fraülein Gisela Von Arnim.[†5]

My Dear Sir | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Ernest De Bunsen Esquire

VIII,523.1. To CHARLES KNIGHT, 22 FEBRUARY 1858*

Replaces catalogue summary

MS Martin R. Nason.

Tavistock House
Monday Twenty Second February | 1858.

My Dear Knight.

Miss Coutts has been much engaged with a sick sister,[†1] and my reply to your note has been in consequence unavoidably delayed.

She begs me to remit you £10 for the De Foe Survivors; and wishes me to say to you that they ought to be very much obliged to you for your kind and thoughtful interest in them. We shall not forget (and never do forget) the 15th. of March.[†2] It will be a mighty awkward thing for you if you ever want to get rid of us on that interesting day, for I doubt if it be practicable without chaining the Street Door.

Kind regard from all here to all there.

Ever affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Knight Esquire.

My crossed Cheque on Coutts's for £10 (Ten Pounds), enclosed.

VIII,524.

n. 1 insert CD had known Delane for at least three years.

March

VIII,533.30. To SIR JAMES EMERSON TENNENT, 16 MARCH 1858*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Private | Sir James Emerson Tennent | Board of Trade | Whitehall | S.W.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W. C.
Tuesday Sixteenth March 1858.

My Dear Tennent.

The address is, the Rev: Mr. Gibson, and the Rev: Mr. Bewsher, Rue de l'Oratoire, Haute Ville, Boulogne Sur Mer.[†1]

I suppose Edinburgh is too far off, for your company on such a trip, on a Carol Reading? I go there next Thursday week—read to a very large audience on the Friday—and return on the Saturday? But on Thursday the 15th. of April, I read the same book in London here, at St. Martin's Hall.

Ever Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Sir James Emerson Tennent.

VII,543.

n. 1 line 12 for Perseus read Proteus

n. 3 line 1 for 361 read 365-70

VIII,547.

n. 1 line 5 read intelligence

May

VIII,568.20.

(To FREDERIC OUVRY, 26 MAY 1858) for smashing read amazing

VIII,583.1.

Replaces catalogue extract[aa]

June

To CHARLES KNIGHT, 11 JUNE 1858†

MS Martin R. Nason.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Friday Eleventh June 1858

My Dear Charles Knight.

Your letter[†1] has touched me nearly, and I thank you for it with all my heart. We all send our kindest regard to Mrs. Knight and all your house.

You will be glad—I am sure—to hear, that on the anniversary of poor dear Jerrold's death,[†2] I had an excellent letter from his eldest son. [a] I immediately replied to it, and gave him my hand across his father's grave.[a]

Ever affectionately
CD.

VIII,585.

n. 3 for Blandford read Blanford

VIII,603.

n. 1 line 7 for 18 read 27

VIII,605.

n. 2 2nd col. line 5 for Rolfe read Rofe

July

VIII,615.14. To J. WHITMORE ISAAC,[†1] [30 JULY 1858]

Envelope only, MS Brian Lake. Address: J. Whitmore Isaac Esquire | Boughton | Worcester. PM 30 July 1858

VIII,646.

n. 1 add CD sent to Finlay a note written on the back of a Gad's Hill address card "Crest | A Lion Couchant | Holding in his dexter paw, | A Maltese Cross". Finlay added "This was sent as the crest to be painted on an Irish car." (MS Comtesse de Suzannet). See Vol. VIII, pp. 645-6 and n.

VIII,646.

n. 8 line 2 for three read four line 3 for 17 read 18, line 4 read 19, 20 and 21 Aug.

September

VIII,648.11.

(To FREDERIC OUVRY, 5 SEPTEMBER 1858) for to me read by me

October

VIII,689.7 up.

(To R.H. HORNE, 27 OCTOBER 1858) for Panwell read Parnell

November

VIII,694.34.

(To W.H. WILLS, 3 NOVEMBER 1858) after paper add[6]

insert[6] The paper is the actual material, the vouchers being the receipts for this, which CD and the other proprietors will require for the next HW audit: see below and p. 701, To Wills, 10 Nov.

VIII,702.12.

(To W. H. WILLS, 10 NOVEMBER 1858) after Sydney add 2a

insert [2a] Sidney; misspelt by CD.

VIII,713.

n. 5 read An heiress, according to Yates, Recollections & Experiences, p. 155, but not further identified.

VIII,717.30. To JAMES STEED,[†1] 10 DECEMBER 1858*

MS Maggs Bros Ltd. Address: Mr. James Steed | Police Station | Leman Street | Whitechapel.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,

TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Friday Tenth December, 1858.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Steed, and begs to say that he will come to the Leman Street Station House (in pursuance of the enclosed letter of introduction) tomorrow evening, Saturday, between 8 and 10.[†2]

VIII,736.7. APPENDIX D. Programme of Events in Remembrance of Douglas Jerrold, June—July 1857

after The Frozen Deep add[1]

insert n. 1 CD's MS Pass-List for the performance of The Frozen Deep before the Queen, at the Gallery of Illustration, on 4 July, has been published by the owner of the MS, Alan Newton, in D (Summer 1998), "When Found", p. 151. It is accompanied by a comment on the MS by Margaret Brown. For other arrangements for this performance see Vol. VIII, pp. 356-64 and nn.

Index of Names and Places

776 col. 1 Cole, Henry for 611 read 622

782 col. 2 DICKINSON, `Mrs' Frances line 4 add & n

786 col. 2 Gordon, Lieut. Andrew delete entry

Gordon, Andrew Rutherford add 107n;

delete 657-8, 660-1, 665

GORDON, John Thomson add 657-8, 660-1, 665

787 col. 2 Herbert, Sydney read Sidney

791 col. 1 Lehmann, Mrs Augustus Frederick for 214n read 224n

793 col. 1 Macready, Henry Frederick Bulwer add 156

794 col. 2 MORLEY, Henry insert 6n;

796 col. 2 Paris: Theatres line 5 after Français add or Comedie Française

after 95, add 514n

797 col. 2 after POWELL, Nathaniel insert Power, Mrs (mother) 152

Power, Miss (pretty sister) 152

803 col. 1 Ternan, Maria Susanna for 433 read 434

804 col. 2 Warner, Richard add 84 & n

805 col. 2 after Willes, add Williams & Clapham, Messrs 5n

Williams, Barney line 1 read 142n*, line 2 read 490 & n *delete

Williams, Mrs Barney line 1 read 115n, *delete line 2 read 142 & n*

806 col. 2 Yates, Mrs Edmund line 1-2 read Katherine

Yates, Frank delete Frank and Francis; read Edmund Smedley (Edmund's son)

Volume IX, 1859-1861

IX,v.

insert new first entry

ILLUSTRATION
after Appendix G add
H The Public Readings
(a) Second Provincial reading tour, October 1859
(b) Third provincial reading tour, October 1861-[January 1862]

IX,vi.

ILLUSTRATION

Ellen Ternan photographed by Charles Clarkington (reproduced by Courtesy of the John Culme Collection) Frontispiece

IX,xv.

n. 3 add 556-7

1859

January

IX,2.1. To J.T. SINNETT,[†1] 3 JANUARY 1859

Extract and facsimile[aa] in Kenneth W. Rendell Inc., catalogue No. 262 (1997); MS 2 pp.; dated Gad's Hill Place, 3 Jan 59; addressed John Taylor Sinnett.

Your letter has been forwarded to me here. It is exceedingly painful to me to receive such a complaint, but I have one plain answer to it, and no other. If the articles you have been so kind as to offer to Household Words—or any of them—had been suitable to that publication, it would have been equally my pleasure and my interest to accept them.

Unfortunately I have not found them adapted to the requirements of the Journal. When you refer to "channels of literature," generally, from which [a] you are undergoing "a long, cruel, and unnatural seclusion," I cannot discuss the question because I know nothing about it. But if you imagine that the articles you have offered to Household Words have been considered with a reference to any extraneous circumstance or consideration whatever, or that any article ever proposed to that publication ever is so considered, I beg to give you the assurance that you wholly deceive yourself.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS[a]

John Taylor Sinnett Esquire

IX,7.23. To JOHN THOMPSON, 8 JANUARY 1859†

Replaces catalogue extract in N[aa]

Text from facsimile in unknown catalogue, Mar 1998.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Eighth January 1859

[a] The Guard will give you the young gentleman's box, John. It is in the train.[a]

The enclosed letter for Mr. Arthur,[†1] take to the Egyptian Hall as soon after you get it as you can. Mr Arthur will be anxious to receive it.

[a] I want you to buy one more of those corner-things, like that which is fastened up over my bedstead[a] here, or at Tavistock House. As it is for a corner in the study here, it may be a little smaller than the two others, if you find a smaller one. But I am not very particular about that.

Yours
CD.

IX,9.5. To BENJAMIN WEBSTER, 11 JANUARY 1859

Text from The Era, 16 Jan 59.

Gad's Hill Place, Higham by Rochester, Kent,
Tuesday, 11th January, 1859.

Dear Webster,

I have read the draft of the Provisional Committee's report, and I think the Provisional Committee perfectly right. I, for one, became a subscriber to the Institution proposed to be founded on Mr. Dodd's[†1] land, distinctly on the faith of Mr. Dodd's giving that land to the Institution unconditionally, and shackling the gift with no limitations or restrictions of his own. I heard Mr. Dodd overwhelmed with praises for entertaining this generous intention. When it, after all, comes out that this is not his intention, the Provisional Committee, having any care for the honour and credit of their profession, cannot do better than rely on the public generosity and have nothing more to do with him.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS[†2]

Benjamin Webster, Esq.

IX,14.12.

(To THE REV. ASHTON BURROW, 22 JANUARY 1859) read MS Walter T. Spencer

August

IX,105.7. To T.C. EVANS,[†1] 10 AUGUST 1859*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday August Tenth 1859

My Dear Sir

I have received the enclosed letter from my Solicitor Mr. Ouvry, which I think it best to send you. Guided by his opinion (in which I concur: having had my own doubts, tending the same way), I must relinquish the idea of signing the conditions of agreement you had the kindness to propose.[†2]

My time has been so fully occupied since you sent me your proof sheets,[†3] that I have not had leisure to read them. But you may rely upon my doing so and returning them, by Monday at latest.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas C. Evans Esquire

October

IX,133.7. To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 15 OCTOBER 1859*

MS Private.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Fifteenth October 1859

My Dear Sir

Many thanks for your attention to my friend's Farce.[†1] There is nothing like frankness in such a case, and I am truly obliged to you for yours.

Faithfully Yours alwys
CHARLES DICKENS

November

X,164.21 To THE EDITOR, THE TELEGRAPH, [?18 NOVEMBER 1859]

MS Dan Calinesçu. Date: Frank Stone died on 18 Nov 59; no doubt CD sent the announcement as soon as he heard of it.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,

DEATH

On Friday the 18th. at his residence, Russell House, Tavistock Square, Mr. Frank Stone A.R.A. in his 60th year. Telegraph

CHARLES DICKENS

1860

January

IX,192.22.

(To WILLIAM CULLENFORD, (5 JANUARY 1860) after Envelope only read MS Beinecke Library, Yale University

IX,201.22.

(To S.H. LANE, 25 JANUARY 1860) after New York University add Address: Private | Samuel Lane Esquire | Britannia Theatre | Hoxton | N.

February

IX,217.9. To PROFESSOR ANSTED,[†1] 28 FEBRUARY 1860*

Replaces mention in N

MS Brian Lake.

[OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,][†2]

Tuesday Twenty Eighth February 1860.

Dear Sir

I am happy to assure you that I have read your paper[†3] with great pleasure and that I have placed it in the No. made up to day. Allow me to explain to you that the American arrangements of this Journal oblige it to be always a fortnight in advance.

Allow me also, to enclose a cheque for Five Pounds, and to express the gratification I have in this correspondence.

A proof shall be enclosed to you at The Athenaeum tomorrow afternoon. Will you kindly return it with your corrections (if any) with as little delay as possible.

Dear Sir | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Professor Ansted.

May

IX,253.21. To FREDERIC OUVRY, 16 MAY 1860

Replaces catalogue extracts ([aa])

MS Martin R. Nason.

Private

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Wednesday Sixteenth May, 1860.

My Dear Ouvry.

I thank you warmly for your letter. I cannot better express my sense of it, and of the confidence I repose in you, than by saying that I will abide by your opinion.

But I must add that the [a] spirit of this transaction[†1] leaves an impression on my mind, as to Wills, which is new and disagreeable.[a] I do not expect you to regard it from my point of view, because you can hardly have the means of doing so. For example, you suppose that additional share of a sixteenth, in Household Words, to have been absolutely his, and not to have been a generous addition to his income, made, [a]while he was sub editor of it and should continue so, in a perfectly voluntary and unnecessary manner, by me. Here again, Forster (to whom I have not communicated one word concerning this matter) knows the truth.[a] That sixteenth was the half of an eighth share I had given to him, and which he gave back to me when its retention uncoupled with the means of being useful to the publication, became a cause of uneasiness to him.

[a] It is absolutely impossible but that Wills must know he has no moral right to that share in the property, and that in relinquishing it, he is relinquishing nothing at all.[a]

Faithfully Yours ever
CHARLES DICKENS

Frederic Ouvry Esquire

IX,353.

n. 2 col. 1 line 12 to col. 2 line 7 replace inviting . . . 6 June 78). with "Sir | A desire has been manifested in several influential quarters, to render some public service and encouragement to Mr. Hullah at the present very trying period of his useful career. | With the view of ascertaining how this can be best assisted I have undertaken (after conferring with Mr.

Coleridge and Mr. Charles Dickens) to ask you if you will kindly attend a very small assemblage of some of Hullah's friends, at the British Hotel Cockspur Street on Saturday next, the 10th, at a quarter before 4, for 4 exactly. I beg to add that I address this circular note to not more than a dozen gentlemen in all." (Facsimile in Early American History Auctions, Inc., 1998).

1861

February

IX,384.33. To LADY MOLESWORTH, 2 FEBRUARY 1861

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue (Pencarrow), Dec 1999; MS 1 p.; dated 3 Hanover Terrace, Regents Park, 2 Feb 61; addressed Lady Molesworth.

(the address[†1] is a fiction), where he shall be on, from, and after, Monday and which, he says, is almost within the sacred limits of civilisation.

IX,422

n. 1. add, or Edward T. Smith of Cold Pikehall, Lanchester, Co. Durham: see below.

n. 2. replace with Perhaps author of The Tale of Home. A Poem, 1847 with Reliquiae Poems, 1859 about his mother. The setting of the poems is North Yorkshire and Co. Durham countryside and hunting.

July

IX,440.15. To MRS FORSTER, 18 JULY 1861*

MS Brian Lake.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Eighteenth July 1861.

My Dear Mrs. Forster

I assure you I never thought of it afterwards. I am very glad to have your letter, but the need of it had not been in my thoughts for one moment.

In haste | Ever affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

October

IX,479.7.

(To FRANCESCO BERGER, [16 OCTOBER 1861]) replace Free Library of Philadelphia with Walter J. Spencer.

November

IX,503.7.

(To THE EDITOR, EASTERN PROVINCE HERALD, SOUTH AFRICA, 12 NOVEMBER 1861) replace headnote with MS Tom Simpson. Address: George Impey Esqre. Jnr. | Eastern Province Herald Office | Port Elizabeth. On mourning paper.

13. new paragraph from Let me explain . . .

24. new paragraph from In reference to your . . .

29. insert at left margin George Impey Esqre. Junr.

IX,536.

n. 2 replace with His second wife, née Ann Neale, married 1860.

IX,537.

n. 2 insert William Roxby Beverley (1814-89; DNB), marine and scene-painter: see Vol. IX, p. 20 and n.

IX,555.

n. 4 add See Vol. 11, p. 401*n.*

IX,573.

APPENDIX H.

H. THE PUBLIC READINGS

(a) CHARLES DICKENS'S SECOND PROVINCIAL TOUR,

8-27 OCTOBER 1859

Ipswich, Corn Exchange	Monday, 10 October
Norwich, St Andrew's Hall	Tuesday & Wednesday, 11 & 12 October
Bury St Edmunds, Athenaeum Hall	Thursday, 13 October
Cambridge, Corn Exchange	Monday & Tuesday, 17 & 18 October
Peterborough, Corn Exchange	Wednesday, 19 October
Bradford, St George's Hall	Thursday, 20 October
Nottingham, Mechanics' Hall	Friday, 21 October
Oxford, Town Hall	Monday & Tuesday, 24 & 25 October
Birmingham, Town Hall	Wednesday, 26 October
Cheltenham, Old Wells Theatre	Thursday, 27 October (matinée & evening)

(b) CHARLES DICKENS'S THIRD PROVINCIAL TOUR,

OCTOBER-DECEMBER 1861†1

Norwich, St Andrew's Hall	Monday & Tuesday, 28 & 29 November
Bury St Edmunds, Athenaeum Hall	Wednesday, 30 October
Ipswich, Corn Exchange	Thursday, 31 October
Colchester, Theatre Royal	Friday, 1 November
Canterbury, Theatre Royal	Monday 4 November
Dover, Appolonian Hall	Tuesday, 5 November
Hastings, Music Hall	Wednesday, 6 November
Brighton, Town Hall Pavilion	Thursday & Friday, 7 & 8 Saturday, 9 November
Newcastle-on-Tyne, Music Hall	Thursday, Friday & Saturday 21, 22 & 23 November
Berwick-on-Tweed, King's Arms Assembly Hall†2	Monday, 25 November

Glasgow, City Hall	Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday & Friday, 3, 4, 5 & 6 December
Edinburgh, Queen Street Hall†3	Saturday, 7 December
Carlisle, Athenæum Hall	Monday & Tuesday, 9 & 10 December
Lancaster, Music Hall	Thursday, 2 December
Preston, Corn Exchange	Friday, 13 December
Manchester, Free Trade Hall	Saturday, 14 December†4
Birmingham, Music Hall	Monday & Tuesday, 30 & 31 December

Index of Correspondents

575 col. 1 after Ball add Barber, Charles 153, 528

Index of Names and Places

582 col. 2 Barber, Charles, gardener for Barber read BARBER add 528

BARBER, Charles Burton, painter delete 528

583 col. 1 Beverley, William for 536 read 537

BEWSHER, Rev. James for 54n read 53n

588 col. 2 Dickens, Charles John Huffam Addresses from which letters written: line 18 after Liskeard, Cornwall, 335; add Liverpool, 540-1;

597 col. 1 Hunt, William for Holmes read Holman

601 col. 1 Millais, (Sir) John after 87n insert The Black Brunswicker

delete 458n

607 col. 2 Townshend, Rev. read Chauncy

Volume X, 1862-1864

X,v.

after CONTENTS insert

ILLUSTRATION vi

vi.

add ILLUSTRATION

Dickens and the Three Ladies of Gad's Hill in the Basket Phaeton (Dickens House Museum Collection) Frontispiece

viii.29.

for descrying read decrying xiii.29.

for Comer read Corner

xvii.

after 1863 insert 11 Jan returns to France below 6 Mar-12 June add 20-25? Mar in France.

1862

January

X,2.22.

(To W.H. WILLS, 2 JANUARY 1862) after here add[8] insert[8] Where CD read Nickleby and Bob Sawyer on Mon, 30 Dec and Copperfield on Tues, 31 Dec

X,3.

n. 5 line 2 for strength read power

X,8.24.

(To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 8 JANUARY 1862) after Respirators add[[text ref]]11*a*

n. 5 for Collin's read Collins's

n. 9 line 3 for Mathan's read Nathan's insert [11a] i.e. devices covering the mouth and nose of the wearer, serving to warm inhaled air (OED).

X,20.24.

(To WILKIE COLLINS, 24 JANUARY 1862) for two read tow

X,24.9.

(To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 24 JANUARY 1862) after float add[[text ref]]2*a* insert [2a] A row of footlights (OED, 1862)

10. after Pyne replace[2] with[3]

X,25.10.

(To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 28 JANUARY 1862) after Edinburgh add[[text ref]] [a]

14. before You delete [a]

February

X,39.13.

(To CHARLES KNIGHT, 27 FEBRUARY 1862) after Deerfoot add fn[2a] insert [2a] An American Indian.

X,41.9.

(To BENJAMIN WEBSTER, 28 FEBRUARY 1862) read Free Library of Philadelphia

42. n. 9 (41 cont.) add E.S. Turner, The Shocking History of Advertising!, 1952, p. 66, says that "[Thomas Holloway's name] failed to find its way into the pages of Dickens, who refused an offer of £1,000 for a `puff'."

X,49.

n. 4 line 2 for Foster read Forster

X,55.

n. 1 line 4 for Edward's read the Prince's

n. 5 col.2 line 1 for 1782 read 1798

March

X,62.4.

(To HENRY MORLEY, 31 MARCH 1862) for repentence read repentance

April

X,63.2 up.

(To THOMAS BEARD, 2 APRIL 1862) for Mauscripts read Manuscripts

May

X,87.4. To GEORGE SCHARF,[†1] 27 MAY 1862*

Text from facsimile in Kenneth W. Rendell Gallery catalogue, Nov 1999.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday, Twenty Seventh May, 1872.

My Dear Sir

I send you many thanks for the tickets[†2] you have had the kindness to enclose to me.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

George Scharf Esquire

June

X,91.15. To MRS MENZIES,[†1] 5 JUNE 1862*

Text from facsimile in Empire Autograph Auctions Ltd catalogue, June 2001.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Fifth June 1862.

My Dear Mrs. Menzies

I am very sorry to say that I cannot have the pleasure of accepting the enclosed story for insertion here. I have considered it and re-considered it, but I cannot find sufficient case made out for the state of mind of Rose's father towards the other doctor. That such a man should do such a thing as the main incident involves, is too great an assumption within the limits of this story. It might be made to appear less monstrous in a longer work where he was psychologically tracked and the case elaborately wrought out, but it has too violent a look here. Moreover it is all painful, and the position of the only two people on the scene is unsatisfactory and distressing; and nothing would justify this in a reader's mind but a set of incidents that would be accepted as probable.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Menzies.

X,97.6.

(To JOHN FORSTER, [28 JUNE 1862]) after If—add[[text ref]]2*a* insert [2a] According to Dolby, had not CD's health given way in Apr 69, "it was his earnest desire to make a voyage to Australia." "His regret" Dolby records, "at the enforced abandonment of this trip was very great" (CD as I Knew him, pp. 416-18).

September

X,131.21.

(To W. C. MACREADY, 30 SEPTEMBER 1862) after Boy!" add[[text ref]]2*a* insert [2a] Cf. "Am I not a man and a brother?", taken from a medallion made by Josiah Wedgwood in 1787, of a chained and kneeling Negro designed from the Anti-Slavery Society's seal; frequently used by the Abolitionists as an ornament and sent to prominent Americans, including Benjamin Franklin: see Julia Wedgwood, The Personal Life of Josiah Wedgwood The Potter, 1915, p. 252.

October

X,132.5.

(To J. T. FIELDS, 2 OCTOBER 1862) after sun-picture add[[text ref]]1*a* insert [1a] i.e. a photograph

X,133.17.

(To A. H. LAYARD, 3 OCTOBER 1862) read MS Graham Storey

X,137.

n. 5 replace with CD presumably refers to the lost letter "turning up".

X,143.24.

(To MISS MARIA FORSTER, 14 OCTOBER 1862) for Collection read Collections

X,150.36.

(To W. H. WILLS, 24 OCTOBER 1862) read Miss Parr's[3]

37. read say.[4]

November

X,161.15.

(To THOMAS BEARD, 15 NOVEMBER 1862) for faction read fiction

X,166.

n. 4 replace with Probably "At Home in Teheran", VIII, 319. Murray contributed several articles about the Middle East to HW and AYR. CD was not uncritical of his style.

December

X,175 5 up.

(To E.S. DALLAS, 12 DECEMBER 1862) for possible read possibly

X,179 8.

(To MRS HENRY AUSTIN, 20 DECEMBER 1862)

after as good as delete if

X,180.7.

(To GABRIEL or JULES GUILLEMOT, 21 DECEMBER 1862) for vour read vous

1863

January

X,194.8 up.

(To MISS MARY DICKENS, 16 JANUARY 1863)

after Madame B.! add[[text ref]]2*a* insert [2a] Mary's dog, Mrs Bouncer

X,195.15.

(To M. PITRE-CHEVALIER, 17 JANUARY 1863) for arrive read arrivé

X,197.

n. 5 col. 2 line 1 read intonation,

X,212.

n. 3 amend dates to (1766-1836; DNB)

n. 4 replace with Mechanical contrivances for regulating the supply of oil to the wick of a lamp.

X,237.

n. 2 line 1 read shellfishmonger [one word]

n. 9 line 11 read and "highminded . . .

April

X,241.19 To MRS ELSWORTHY,[†1] 30 APRIL 1863*

MS Michael Silverman.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,

Thursday Thirtieth April 1863

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mrs. Elsworthy, and regrets that he cannot render her the service she asks at his hands.[†2] It is one so often sought of him, that unless he strictly observed a rule in this respect, he would have little leisure for any other occupation in this life.

X,252.

n. 2 line 6 read post-Jewish-exile

n. 4 line 5 after Temple add (later Archbishop of Canterbury) lines 13-14 delete (later Archbishop of Canterbury)

June

X,259.5 up.

(To EDWIN CHADWICK, 14 JUNE 1863) after Half Time System add[[text ref]]2*a* insert [2a] See "The Uncommercial Traveller", AYR, IX, 20 June 63, 397.

X,261.

n. 7 delete: Mrs Sutherland . . . office

X,277.

n. 3 line 7 for Wilkie Collins read CD

X,283.

n. 1 for Liillie read Lillie

September

X,288.20. To JOHN BENNETT,[†1] 14 SEPTEMBER 1863

Text from MDGH, 1882, p. 222.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT,
Monday Night, Fourteenth September, 1863.

My Dear Sir,

Since my hall clock[†2] was sent to your establishment to be cleaned it has gone (as indeed it always had) perfectly well, but has struck the hours with great reluctance, and after enduring internal agonies of a most distressing nature, it has now ceased striking altogether. Though a happy release for the clock, this is not convenient to the household. If you can send down any confidential person with whom the clock can confer, I think it may have something on its works that it would be glad to make a clean breast of.

Faithfully yours,
[CHARLES DICKENS]

X,289.22. To W. C. MACREADY, 16 SEPTEMBER 1863†

Replaces catalogue extract[aa]

MS Martin R. Nason.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Sixteenth September 1863
(at Night)

My Dearest Macready

[a] My answer to your last has been delayed by my not finding Forster,[†1] and by the death of my mother,[†2] who has been in a fearful state, mental and bodily, for two or three years and whose funeral—tomorrow—I have come to town to attend, tonight.[a]

It may scarcely be worth mentioning, but when I received the enclosed note from Forster after showing him yours, I thought it simply right to repeat to him in a note the trust I undertook, exactly as I stated it to you; and to add that no such words as "if it would please Macready to tell him", had any place in my remembrance. He writes back:

"I will not for a moment question that you are right and I am wrong. I therefore empower you to say—as the only two points of my letter on which you raise a question—that I did not put it in the form of `if it would please Macready', but that I wished you to tell him, and further that (but I hope my letter does not imply it—though the tone of his acknowledgement to you compels me to fall back upon it) I never wished you to accompany my expression of my sense of being wrong, with my other remark".

With kind love to all at home, Ever my Dearest Macready

Your affectionate
CD

I return to Gad's Hill tomorrow.

October

X,308.25.

(To THOMAS BEARD, 29 OCTOBER 1863) delete the

X,317

n. 2 line 3 read nursery-maid

December

X,325.22.

(To THE COUNTESS COWLEY, 13 DECEMBER 1863) for hut read but

X,333.

n. 1 1st col. line 15-16 delete he and

X,335.15.

Replaces catalogue and typescript extracts[†1]

1864

January

To W. H. RUSSELL,[†2] 3 JANUARY 1864

MS Martin R. Nason. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Sunday Third January 1864

My Dear Russell

Your letter has given me very great pleasure, and I most heartily and cordially reciprocate your good wishes for the New Year, and for our meeting oftener in it than in the old one. Howsoever far apart we have been since we laughed and rode and talked with poor Jerrold, I have always followed you closely, and have always found new occasion to express my sense of what England owes you for your manly outspeaking and your brilliant description.

Concerning the order so shabbily represented t'other day, he and I have often good-humouredly differed, though at heart we both knew and meant exactly the same thing—and that, what you mean in your reference.

As we get on in life, this constant closing-up of the ranks and marching on, grows startling. But the dream must be dreamed out, 'till we wake somewhere.

Always cordially Yours

W. H. Russell Esquire

X,341

n. 3 replace with See Vol X, p. 412 and n. (i.e. To Dixon & Halliwell, 23 July 1864.)

X,342 6 up.

(To THOMAS BEARD, 16 JANUARY 1864) after Court Newsman add[[text ref]]2*a* insert [2a] Appointed to furnish news of the doings of the Court.

X,346.7.

(To WILKIE COLLINS, 25 JANUARY 1864) read MS Free Library of Philadelphia

18. after 20,000 add[[text ref]]2*a*

29. read . . . which I could have hardly supposed . . .

insert [2a] Written very large.

349.13. after Shirley Brooks[9] add a

15. delete square brackets and[[text ref]]12 round take for motion read notion

19. for Patient read Parient

after room for insert my

21. after CD add [a]

after n. 8 insert [aa] Written above address.

delete n. 12

X,350.6 up.

(To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 28 JANUARY 1864) for talk read task

February

X,352.4 up.

(To MAJOR R. W. CARTER [?EARLY FEBRUARY 1864]) insert parenthesis before MS

March

X,367.20.

(To MISS ANNE MANNING, 2 MARCH 1864) for though read thought

X,376.22.

(To JOHN FORSTER, 29 MARCH 1864) for and ingrained read an ingrained

April

X,380.28. To MRS NICHOLS,[†1] 10 APRIL 1864*

Text from facsimile in Alexander Autographs, Inc., Apr 2000.

57 Glo'ster Place, Hyde Park Gardens W.
Sunday Tenth April, 1864

My Dear Mrs. Nichols.

I have been away, and am engaged again tomorrow, and have to preside at a Public Dinner on Tuesday. But I will try to get to you on Wednesday at four.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

May

X,389.21. To MESSRS HUNT & ROSKELL, 4 MAY 1864

Mention in Sotheby's catalogue, 15 & 16 July 1998; MS 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill Place, 4 May 64; addressed Hunt & Roskell.

Sending his compliments.

X,391.

n. 8 read shirked, ignored (OED)

X,392.

n. 3 amend to John's wife and her sister.

X,414.

n. 3 2nd col. line 7 delete quotation marks

415. n. 3 (414 cont.) line 1 read Admiration."

September

X,426.24. To FREDERIC OUVRY, 9 SEPTEMBER 1864

Replaces catalogue extract[aa]

MS Maggs Bros. Ltd.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Ninth September 1864

My Dear Ouvry

I enclose the [a] cheque for Mrs. Dickens, which I think is due tomorrow.[a]

Faithfully Yours ever
CHARLES DICKENS

Frederic Ouvry Esquire

October

X,435.20.

(To W. H. WILLS, 8 OCTOBER 1864) after longer than delete quotation mark.

X,442.13.

(To FREDERICK S. MILLS, 21 OCTOBER 1864) for Summary . . . 16 Jan 1994; read Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, July 1996;

15-16. after seaside, read declining the position you offer me. I have no spare time or attention to bestow on such a design.

November

X,454.4 up.

(To MRS DAVIS, 16 NOVEMBER 1864) for no do read do no

December

X,460.20. To LADY MOLESWORTH, 8 DECEMBER 1864*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,

Thursday Eighth December 1864

My Dear Lady Moleworth

I just missed your first kind note. Unfortunately I am engaged on both days. We have not "done" our local neighbours in the dining way, for nearly a year; and being now engaged in clearing them off and dining with them besides, we have hardly a spare day before Christmas. (I am rather afraid that we regard these duties as a sort of Christmas bills, and lump them altogether at this time of the year.)

Unless I am much mistaken, I caught a glimpse of you at Ruy Blas[†1] last Tuesday night. A wonderfully fine performance—the very best presentation of the French romantic drama.

Welcome back to your native shores. | Ever Yours

CD.

X,464.

n. 1 for Everest read Everett

Index of Correspondents

484 Ward, Edward Matthew add, 298

Ward, Mrs Edward Matthew delete 242

INDEX OF PLACES AND NAMES

489 col. 2 Brisebarre, after E. L. A. read (pseudonym); for Nas read Nus

492 col. 2 DICKENS, Mrs Alfred Lamert line 4 after 185, add 291,

495 col. 2 Edwards, Amelia Ann for Blandford read Blanford

497 col. 2 Gad's Hill Place line 5 delete 291,

498 col. 2 Hedderley | Headerley, delete entry

499 col. 2 Hughes, Mrs Stephen Roose insert 30,

504 col. 1 Morris, Joseph add 291 & n

510 col. 1 Townshend, Rev. for Chauncey read Chauncy

col. 2 Watson, Mary Georgiana delete 55 & n

Volume XI, 1865-1867

XI,xiii.3.

for Dicken's read Dickens's

XI,xiv.2.

for (in Jan) read (in January 1864)

n. 2 for Lfe read Life

XI,xv.

para 1 line 2. for Dicken's read Dickens's para 9 line 5 read collection

1865

January

XI,8.6.

(To EDMUND YATES, 18 JANUARY 1865) for en read an

February

XI,16.22. To GEORGE RUSSELL,[†1] 14 FEBRUARY 1865

MS J. W. Weaver. Address: George Russell Esquire | 18 St. James's Place. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Fourteenth February 1865

My Dear George Russell

Wills[†2] has received the enclosed letter from the Doubly Doubtful Dallas.[†3] There is no doubt that the person referred to in it, is Robert Bell,[†4]—and of course we may assume that the "worker in couples" with him is The great O'Dowd.[†5] I suppose neither of the two to be man enough openly to evince hostility at the committee; but in such case will you try to force out WHAT IT IS that the objector objects to. There was some old business-transaction in which Wills and Bell were concerned[+],[†6] which, misrepresented, might be the Devil knows what; but which, correctly stated and proved, is perfect clearness.

I have a strong impression (and so has Wilkie) that this is a go-between sort of tampering, really meaning nothing but that Bell is letting I dare not, wait on what I need. Still it is necessary to be armed and watchful at the Committee Meeting. And I freely rely on the observation and discretion of my honorable and learned friend.[†7] I am here, but am of course producible at any day or hour, if you want to see me in town.

Ever Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

[+] Whiting,[†8] Member of the Club, was the Principal, and knows all about it.

XI,17.6.

(To MRS PROCTER, 15 FEBRUARY 1865) after Mrs. Procter delete[2]

7. after Procter. add[2]

XI,21.

n. 6 line 1 for 1795 read 1793

XI,36.

n. 4 line 2 for 20 read c. 16

June

XI,59.11 up.

(To THE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, [?JUNE 1865]) headnote after Lord Shaftesbury replace with had written asking for CD's views on greater railway safety (see p. 116).

XI,63.

n. 2 line 1 for Maryatt read Marryat; for 1837 read 1838 line 2 for youngest child read daughter line 3 after 31 July insert 67

n. 4 2nd col. line 2 AYR ref should read 13 Jan-25 Aug 66 (XV, 1-XVI, 161)

XI,74.

n. 7 insert Walter Arnold of the Lyceum;

XI,79.

n. 1 line 4 read A Library of British and Foreign Philosophy, . . .

August

XI,84.12.

(To E.S. DALLAS, 17 AUGUST 1865) for veery read very

XI,93.

n. 5 substitute Mis-spelled by CD: Joseph Jefferson III (1829-1905; DAB), actor; born in Philadelphia; played frequently in America and at the Adelphi in London, under Webster. His best-known parts were Rip Van Winkle, Sep 65 (see n. 6), and Bob in The Rivals, 1866. His tours, both in America and London, became famous.

September

XI,94.27. To LADY MOLESWORTH, 20 SEPTEMBER 1865

Facsimile[aa] and extracts in Sotheby's catalogue (Pencarrow), Dec 1999; MS 3 pp.; dated Office of AYR, 20 Sep 65; addressed Lady Molesworth.

Notifying her that the enclosure to her letter has been forwarded to the editor and proprietor of that truly national Journal, the Gad's Hill Gazette, commenting on the intensity of the heat in London compared with that in Paris, and giving news of our dear Chorley, who took some opium. . . . He suddenly fell into intensely low spirits, and looked at himself in the glass with great mournfulness. One of our visitors . . . said: "But do you think he can ever look in the glass and be in good spirits?"

[a] I made an effort in Paris to see the Africaine[†1] at the Grand opera, but was too hot to get across the doorstep. I made another effort to see the piece at the Vaudeville[†2] about which there was the disturbance between Girardin[†3] and Dumas fils.[†4] Same result. I made another effort to see the show-piece at the Porte St. Martin.[†5] No better success. Out of the Champs Elysées, I swooned into Franconi's;[†6] but the very horses were lazy, and the only creature taking any trouble about anything was the vicious mule who pitched off all riders. He seemed to have an intention in him.

Fechter has been doing wonders in Glasgow, and getting a great deal of money.

My daughter Mary has been fishing for Trout in Scotland—it is unnecessary to add has caught none. I have a new dog (Irish, but not Fenian) who has the horrible quality of hating small dogs, and who "took" Bouncer[†7] like a pill on the very first morning of his being established in the stable Yard. Somebody chucked him under the chin, and he brought her up again—A little surprised, but not hurt. The St. Bernard has been dreadfully ill of canker in the ear; and her human way of expressing her being in pain, and entreating sympathy, has been very moving indeed.

I am not surprised by what you tell me of our friend B.O.[†8] But is not Mrs. B.O. of the ice icy? I used to know her before she was married, and used to like her; but seeing her in her own house last season, thought her a most unsatisfactory petrifaction.

My report of myself is—All right. I had a touch of Neuralgia all through August (I almost always have when I am hard at work), but I got rid of it within a few hours of crossing from Folkestone. That Railway accident occurred on the 9th of June. I have not been able to bear an Express Train since, until this last week, when I was able to conquer the disagreeable sensations that beset me. The oddest of these, was, an impression against my own senses and knowledge, and against all reason, that the carriage was turning over—not on the side on which it really did pitch in the accident, but on the other side.

I send this to the address of your note. It will reach you somewhere in course of time, I dare say. Let me not forget to add that I wear all my orders over the left, and am descended from Adam de Clay[†9]—direct line—had the first Murderer[†10] in my family, and the first ruffian of every degree.

Ever affectionately Yours

CD.

P.S. I address you in town; seeing that you are due at the Mansion of the fair and stately W.[†11a]

November

XI,116.

(To W. W. F. DE CERJAT, 30 NOVEMBER 1865)

n. 5. 2nd col. line 4 after (caps) read, reprinting headlines from local newspapers:

117.19. after progress add[4]

insert[4] Including the fitting out of the Bellerophon: see p. 150.

XI,170.

n. 2 line 3 for 313 read 318;

line 3-4 delete after Tillotson

XI,170.

n. 4 lines 10-11 delete brackets round Gounod called him

XI,173.

n. 2 col. 2 last line read MS Free Library of Philadelphia

XI,180.

n. 2 date should read 2 June 66,

XI,188.

n. 2 substitute The Cork Leg, a comic song, popularised in America by William Burton. The cork leg has a will of its own and takes its owner unwillingly all over town at a rapid rate.

XI,189.

n. 1 substitute The Chinese dwarf Chung Mow frequently exhibited with Chang the giant 1865-6.

XI,198.

n. 1 line 2 replace comma with full stop

1866

June

XI,218.28.

(To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 29 JUNE 1866) for by read be

XI,247.

n. 5 line 1 for 51 read 53

line 2 for 15 Feb read 18 July

XI,254.

n. 4 2nd col. line 8 read fiévreuse

XI,260.

n. 4 line 14 for Athenaeum read Athenæum

XI,267.

n. 4 line 2 for For read by for Blandford read Blanford

November

XI,274.21.

(To GEORGE RUSSELL, 20 NOVEMBER 1866) after Rochester Banker add[[text ref]]3*a* insert [3a] Probably either Octavius Jones Andrews, manager of the London & County Bank, or Alfred Hollister, manager of the Provincal Bank; both banks in High St, Rochester.

December

XI,283.26.

(To THOMAS BEARD, 15 DECEMBER 1866) after long burnt add[[text ref]]4*a* insert [4a] Both Houses of Parliament were virtually destroyed by a fire which broke out on the evening of 16 Oct 34. The Annual Register for Oct 34, pp. 155-63, gives full details of what was destroyed, including the two libraries and the old painted chamber. The cause was generally accepted as a fault in the flues used for heating the Lords, helped by a large fire made by burning the old wooden Exchequer tallies in the Exchequer Yard.

XI,287.29. To SIR CHARLES RUSSELL,[†1] 22 DECEMBER 1866*

MS Tom Brown.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday, Twenty Second December 1866

My Dear Sir Charles.

It was very kind of you to give me such early information of George's appointment,[†2] and I thank you heartily. As the dear fellow is ill, I think it better on the whole not to write to him just now: the rather, as I know you will give him my cordial congratulations on his good fortune. It is a perfect Christmas Box to me, and thoroughly delights me.

My youngest daughter has been getting steadily, though slowly, better, all this last week. I fear she will not be strong enough to bear removal here before Tuesday; but I hope we shall get her down before the old year is out.

My house and I unite in kindest regard and all seasonable wishes towards your house and you. My love to the learned Judge.

Ever Faithfully Yours | and his
CHARLES DICKENS

Sir Charles Russell.

XI,310.

n. 1 2nd col. line 2 for Unlike read Like

XI,326.

n. 6 substitute Probably Stephen C. Massett (1820-98), London-born actor, singer and journalist who gave one-man shows in America, including the first public entertainment on the Pacific Coast. As "Jeemes Pipes of Piesville" wrote popular columns for The Spirit of the Times.

1867

March

XI,328.1 up.

(To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 6 MARCH 1867) after Time add[3] insert[3] Home news; but allusion not traced.

XI,335.2 up.

(To THE LORD CHIEF JUSTICE OF IRELAND, 16 MARCH 1867) after Fitzgerald add[5]

insert[5] Fitzgerald gave a dinner to CD in his own home on 16 Mar, to which, Dolby records, "were invited all the luminaries of the city, and amongst them many of the official dignitaries and several of the highest military authorities." (Dolby, CD as I Knew him, pp. 74-5). After the dinner, at CD's request, he was taken on a tour of Dublin, under police care, that lasted until about 2 a.m. (Dolby, ibid.).

XI,341.27. To J. K. FURLONG,†1 [23 MARCH ?1867]

Envelope only, MS Berg Collection. Address: Mr. J. Kennedy Furlong | [?]63†2 Broadway | New York City | U.S. of America. PM 23 Mar n.y. Date: Penny stamp shows it was posted in England; possibly the March before he went to America.

June

XI,375.8.

(To DR JAMES SHERIDAN, 5 JUNE 1867) for Stansfield read Stanfield and add[[text ref]]1*a* insert [1a] Clarkson Stanfield (1793-1867; DNB), marine and landscape painter: see Vol. 11, p. 67*n* and later vols.

July

XI,388.1 up.

(To MRS MONTGOMERY ATWOOD, 4 JULY 1867) after Hugo add[3]

insert[3] Mrs Atwood, as agent for Benjamin Wood, publisher, of New York (see Vol. XI, p. 350*n*), was no doubt aiming to negotiate with Hugo over the publication of some of his works.

XI,405.1. To PERCY FITZGERALD, 28 JULY 1867

Extract in MDGH, 11, 294.

July 28th, 1867.

I am glad you like the children,[†1] and particularly glad you like the pirate.[†2] I remember very well when I had a general idea of occupying that place in history at the same age. But I loved more desperately than Boldheart.

XI,405.

n. 3 line 2 for first read fifth

XI,407.

n. 4 (406 cont.) line 3 after accouchers add (midwives, either male or female)

October

XI,442.16.

(To W. C. MACREADY, 2 OCTOBER 1867) after Thursday the 30th add[[text ref]]1*a* insert [1a] CD's mistake, he probably meant Thursday, 31st.

XI,456.29. To LADY MOLESWORTH, 16 OCTOBER 1867*

MS Maggs Bros Ltd.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Sixteenth October, 1867

My Dear Lady Molesworth

I can arrange to call on you on the 7th. of November at any time that will best suit you; but I cannot dine, as I must leave the day for my own people. I depart from London next morning.

I have steadily refused to enter into any engagement whatever with any speculator, for America. I go entirely on my own account, and bound to nothing.

Many thanks for your kind note.

Ever affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

XI,467.23.

(To W. W. JONES, 31 OCTOBER 1967) for 1967 read 1867

November

XI,478.26.

(To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, [16] NOVEMBER 1867) after more super like add[[text ref]]4*a*

n. 1 add Possibly Pierre, or The Ambiguities, by Herman Melville, 1852, which does fit the description.

insert [4a] i.e. like a supernumary actor

XI,496.

n. 5 replace with i. e. American central heating creates an atmosphere hot and humid as in the days before Adam

XI,500.

n. 1 replace with Mathew B. Brady (c. 1823-1896, DAB), pioneer photographer, and leader in adapting new techniques, including daguerreotypes. Well-known for his studios in New York City and Washington, D.C. Published his Gallery of Illustrious Americans, 1850; renowned for his photographs of battle-fields during the Civil War, (2,000 bought by the US Govt in 1875).

XI,512.

n. 1 replace with A comic opera in 4 Acts, by Charles M. Barras, with music by Giuseppe Operti; it ran for nearly three years in America and was rewritten by Harry and Joseph Paulton for the revival at the Alhambra Palace, London in 1872, where it ran for over 300 nights.

n. 5 line 2 for Banward's read Banvard's

December

XI,517.34.

(To JOHN FORSTER, [22 DECEMBER 1867]) after "hurge the hartist hon"; add[3] insert[3] Possibly a reference to Thomas Mitton's cockney pronunciation.

Addenda [to the addenda pp736-737]

Regrettably the following letters only appeared when Appendix A, the main Addenda and Corrigenda for the edition (pp. 553-708), was already in revised proof. They belong on pp. 611, 658, 702, and 703 respectively.

V,302.16. To BERNARD BARTON,[†1] 10 MAY 1848

Text from facsimile in Swann Galleries catalogue, 2001.

London, 1 Devonshire Terrace
York Gate Regents Park
Tenth May 1848.

Esteemed Friend.

I beg to assure you that I am happy to comply with your request, and that I will reserve my vote for William Murrell.[†2] I am very glad to correspond with you, no less for your own sake than in so good a cause; and I am not sensible of any "difference between the popular novelist and the quaker poet," except that the latter is the more modest of the two.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Bernard Barton

VII,328.24. To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 11 MAY 1854

Text from facsimile in Steven S. Rabb Autographs catalogue 38, Sep 2001.

Tavistock House, London
Thursday Eleventh May, 1854

I beg to state that I was once associated with Mr. Charles Cole[†1] and other gentlemen who placed me at their head,[†2] in the discharge of duties requiring strict attention, ready cooperation and exact punctuality; and that he was always to be relied upon in all these particulars.

CHARLES DICKENS

XI,14.14. To ALFRED DICKENS,[†1] 6 FEBRUARY 1865

Extract in Phillips catalogue, Nov. 2001; MS 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill Place, 6 Feb 65; addressed Alfred Dickens. On mourning paper.

Discussing his allowance and touching on plans for his future.. . . Of course you will watch the China opening. Nobody interposing between you and the next one, there seems to me every reason to assume that all is quite right.

Ever Your affectionate Father

CD.

XI,61.29. To HENRY GLASSFORD BELL,†1 21 FEBRUARY 1866

Extract in Phillips catalogue, Nov. 2001; MS 1 p; dated Gad's Hill Place, 21 Feb 66; addressed Henry Glassford Bell.

Thanking him for his charming volume†2 . . . I have read it with great pleasure and admiration, and with renewed remembrance of a certain elegant sandal-wood box†3 that stands among my books. He excuses himself for not having written earlier... I have been too unwell to do much.

He sends his daughters' kind regards. It is not very unlikely that I may have the pleasure of seeing you in Glasgow†4 before long.

THE END OF
THE COLLECTED LETTERS OF CHARLES DICKENS