In the course of last summer, Lord John Russell did me the favor to communicate with the Duke of Somerset,[†9] relative to my wish to obtain a nomination[†1] as naval Cadet, for one of my sons (Sydney Smith by name.) Lord John informed me that the Duke had been so kind as to promise him the nomination; and this is the cause of my now troubling you.

My son will be thirteen years of age on the 18th. of next April. As he has been well trained for his profession, his tutor at Portsmouth[†2] informs me that he will be quite competent to pass the examination, in March, and that he believes the new regulations will admit of his going up then, instead of waiting until after his thirteenth birthday, and going up in June.[†3]

As I do not know what steps the Admiralty Regulations require me to take towards this end, I asked Lord John Russell a few days ago, if he could direct me. He could not, but recommended that I should address myself to you. I hope, therefore, that you will excuse my doing so. I need scarcely add that I should be happy to wait on you at any time, to save you needless trouble.

I have the honor to be | My Lord
Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

The Lord Clarence Paget.

To EDWARD JONES,[†4] [?EARLY 1860]

Extract in Francis Edwards catalogue No. 937. MS 1 p. Date: since CD made the speech on 22 Dec 59, unlikely to be before Jan 60.

I am happy to [be] preserved in the remembrance of my friends the travellers. Enclosing the text of a speech by him made at the Annual dinner of the Commercial Travellers' Schools.[†5]

To THE REV. CHAUNCY HARE TOWNSHEND, [LATE DECEMBER 1859-EARLY JANUARY 1860]

Mention in To Cerjat, 3 May 60. Date: Townshend had probably written soon after Christmas Eve 1859, when CD received his usual letter from Cerjat.

Expressing his indignation and contempt for the young man concerned,[†6] and saying that he purposely abstained from writing to Cerjat while his vexation still occupied his mind.

To WILKIE COLLINS, 7 JANUARY 1860

MS Morgan Library.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Saturday Night Seventh January 1860

My Dear Wilkie

I have read this book,[†1] with great care and attention. There cannot be a doubt that it is a very great advance on all your former writing, and most especially in respect of tenderness.[†2] In character, it is excellent. Mr. Fairlie[†3] as good as the lawyer,[†4] and the lawyer as good as he; Mrs.[†5] Vesey[†6] and Miss Halcombe[†7] in their different ways, equally meritorious. Sir Percival[†8] also, is most skilfully shewn; though I doubt (you see what small points I come to) whether any man ever shewed uneasiness by hand or foot, without being forced by nature to shew it in his face too.[†9] The story is very interesting, and the writing of it admirable.

I seem to have noticed, here and there, that the great pains you take express themselves a trifle too much; and you know that I always contest your disposition to give an audience credit for nothing — which necessarily involves the forcing of points on their attention — and which I have always observed them to resent when they find it out — as they always will and do. But on turning to the book again, I find it difficult to take out an instance of this.[†10] It rather belongs to your habits of thought, and manner of going about the work. Perhaps I express my meaning best when I say that the three people who write the narratives in these proofs,[†11] have a DISSECTIVE[†12] property in common, which is essentially not theirs but yours; and that my own effort would be to strike more of what is got, that way, out of them by collision with one another, and by the working of the story.[†1]

You know what an interest I have felt in your powers from the beginning of our friendship, and how very high I rate them: I know that this is an admirable book, and that it grips the difficulties of the weekly portion and throws them, in masterly style. No one else could do it, half so well. I have stopped in every chapter to notice some instance of ingenuity, or some happy turn of writing; and I am absolutely certain that you never did half so well yourself.

So go on and prosper, and let me see some more[†2] when you have enough (for your own satisfaction), to shew me! I think of coming in to back you up, if I can get an idea for my series of gossiping papers.[†3] One of these days, please God, we may do a story together; I have very odd half-formed notions — in a mist — of something that might be done that way.[†4]

Ever affecy.

CD.

To M. GRAVENSTEIN,[†5] 9 JANUARY 1860*

Text from typescript, Huntington Library.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Monday Ninth January 1860.

Mr Charles Dickens presents his compliments to M. Gravenstein, and has the honor to acknowledge the receipt of M. Gravenstein's letter. He would have been happy to make an appointment in compliance with M. Gravenstein's request, if his engagements had admitted of it; but they oblige him to occupy himself in the country at present, and he cannot, therefore, have that pleasure.

To THE REV. STEPHEN ROOSE HUGHES,[†1] 10 JANUARY 1860

MS Mrs A. K. Frazer. Address: The Reverend Stephen Roose Hughes | Llanallgo Moelfra | Anglesey.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Tenth January 1860

My Dear Mr. Hughes.

You will receive from my printer's office by this same post, a Proof of the little article I have written on the subject of my late visit.[†2] I am under the necessity of asking you to send it back to Mr. Wills, here, by return of post. For, although a fortnight will elapse before it is published, the mechanical necessities of this Journal, and its simultaneous publication in England and America, render its going to press at once, imperative.

I doubt whether I am quite right respecting the number of the Drowned buried in your Churchyard, and the greatest number that lay in the Church at one time.[†3] Will you do me the favor to correct me on those points? And if you should observe any similar inaccuracy, will you do me the additional kindness to mark it?

I trust that there is nothing in the article that you, or your household, will find displeasing. I have written it out of the honest convictions of my heart, and in the hope that it will at least soften the distress of many people from whom you have not yet heard. It says for me, all that I should otherwise have attempted to say to you in this note, and merely strives to express what any visitor to you must surely feel.[†4]

My daughters have taken a great interest in all I have told them, and particularly in Mrs. Hughes's idea of coming to London in the summer. They earnestly beg me to assure her and you, that they hope to know you both very well, and that it will be an uncommon gratification to them if you will come and see us, down at my Kentish house on the top of Shakespeare's Gad's Hill, which is little more than an hour's Railway ride from town.

I beg to present my true regard to the ladies[†1] of your house, and to your brother,[†2] and to assure you of the hearty esteem and respect with which I am

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS[†3]

This same post will also bring you the documents you[†4] lent me,[†5] returned with thanks.
The Rev. Stephen Roose Hughes

To CHARLES LEVER, 13 JANUARY 1860

MS Widener Collection, Harvard.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON, W.C.
Friday Thirteenth January 1860.

My Dear Lever.

I most joyfully and readily adopt the terms (merely observing that All The Year Round is under engagement to send early proofs to America, and therefore reserves that privilege).

Strictly between ourselves, the third writer in question is Adam Bede. I will give you good notice — that is to say, as much as I have myself — whether Adam follows W. C. (for about 5 months, as I take it), or follows you.[†6]

Pray let me repeat, as the last present item of business, that All The Year Round considers itself your banker, as to this transaction, from this time — whether you like it, or don't like it.

I said "the last item of business", and Lo here is another! Don't forget the "short things from time to time".[†7]

And now I put my hand in yours, and say, out of my heart, that I have never had to do with a more frank, more genial, more kind and considerate friend than I have found in you, and that I heartily bless the evening that did at last bring us together. All the little editorial troubles I have ever had in all these years, are far less than nothing to the true and deep gratification I have had in this correspondence with you.

After this, you will begin to believe my dear Lever — not only that I "want" you now, but that I have "wanted" such a generous spirit in a man, many a long day. And so God bless you, says

Your affectionate friend
CHARLES DICKENS

To TOM TAYLOR, 19 JANUARY 1860*

MS Fales Library, New York University.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Nineteenth January 1860

My Dear Taylor.

You may like to know that I have attended with the greatest care to the Rehearsals of the Piece,[†1] and that it is in very good train, and that the crowd (to which I have given particular attention) is on the whole good and fierce — and not quite conventional. Tomorrow, nothing is done but the Carmagnole.[†2] It will be produced on Wednesday.[†3] If it should be at all inconvenient to you to attend the full Rehearsal on Saturday, rely on me; I will not fail to be there from first to last, and to look to it closely.[†4]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Tom Taylor Esquire

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 19 JANUARY 1860

Mention in John Heise catalogue No. 6; MS 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill Place 19 Jan 60.

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 20 JANUARY 1860

MS Lytton Papers.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON, W.C.
Friday Twentieth January 1860.

My Dear Bulwer

I first thought of Edmund — Rogers's[†1] man — the best for the purpose I have ever seen — and who asked me, some time ago, to recommend him, if I had an opportunity. But I find, on enquiry, that he has obtained employment in the South Kensington Museum, and is permanently engaged there.

There is a man of the name of French[†2] — who was my servant for some few years, and whom I parted with only because he was ruptured and could not carry heavy family dinner trays about — who I think might suit you. He was in France with me, as well as in England. He was a remarkably willing, active, and ready fellow; and everybody who used to come here, liked him and noticed him. I never employed him about my books, but he is well used to a Literary man's ways — has capital notions of keeping people out who want to get in — and got a knowledge of a number of public faces here which was very useful. The thought of keeping books is not new to him; for I asked Panizzi within these twelve-months to put him down on his list for a vacancy in the Museum Library. I also recommended him to Webster as a money-taker (he is a very honest fellow), and he gave every satisfaction in that capacity. He is married, and was when he lived with me — but the fact never came in my way, however inconvenient (or consolatory) he may have found it for himself.

Some of the Plays were in course of performance when he lived with me, and he was very quick and clever in his adaptation of himself to their demands upon him. Also, in Paris, he kept his accounts in French money in a very knowing way, and could make himself understood anywhere.

If you tell me that you approve of these antecedents, I will hunt him up and send him to you for examination.[†3]

I am in town, and shall be until Easter.

Ever | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton.

To WARWICK REYNOLDS,[†4] 20 JANUARY 1860*

MS Mrs Charlotte Lee.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Twentieth January 1860.

Sir.

I cannot have the pleasure of accepting the enclosed paper. In the main, I think it has been anticipated in other accounts of like classes of little dealers.

But I am not the less obliged to you for the offer of it, and it would be very agreeable to me if I could be more fortunate another time.

I have mentioned your name, in conjunction with Mr. Thomas's,[†1] to Mr. Wills who assists me here. If you should desire at any time to do me the favor to suggest a subject for your own treatment, he will be happy to tell you freely, whether it is likely to suit these pages.[†2]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Warwick Reynolds Esquire

To FREDERICK VILLIERS,[†3] 20 JANUARY 1860*

MS Yale University Library.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON, W.C.
Friday Twentieth January 1860.

Dear Sir

I have not forgotten your request. On the other side[†4] I send you a few words (from the Tale itself) to make a better exit for you at the point where you justly felt the want of something. Tomorrow, when you have added them to your part, will you be so kind as to see that Mr. West[†5] adds them to his Prompt-book? It will save time and trouble if this be done before we come to that part of the piece, in rehearsal.[†6]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

— Villiers Esquire.

To ROBERT FLETCHER,[†7] 23 JANUARY 1860

Extracts in Madigan catalogue, Feb 1939 ([aa]), and City Book Auction catalogue No. 551; MS 2 pp.; dated Tavistock House, Monday, 23 Jan 60; addressed Robert Fletcher. Address: (envelope MS Harry Stone): Robert Fletcher Esquire, | 28 Adelaide Road | Hampstead.

Stating he was compelled to reject a girl's contribution Fletcher had submitted for AYR. [a]I very, very rarely see youthful compositions of such remarkable merit as these. As the work of a girl of twelve,[†7] they are quite surprising ... [a]Excuse my recommending you in the strongest manner (I dare say unnecessarily) gently to restrain this talent rather than otherwise. There is very little danger of its perishing, but it may be stronger than the young life with which it is as yet associated.

To WILKIE COLLINS, 25 JANUARY 1860

MS Morgan Library.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Wedy. Twenty Fifth January 1860.

My Dear Wilkie.

Remembering myself to be under an engagement to let Yates know if I made a visit to the Britannia, I have let him know that I go on Saturday. I propose as a preliminary measure, a British Steak at the Cock in Fleet Street[†1] at half past 4.

Observe. I have said nothing to Y. of the reason of the visit, or of the Sunday notion.[†2] Nor shall I mention the latter, even to Mr. Lane the proprietor. Let us dine here on Sunday at 5, and afterwards cast in our lot with the general Sabbath audience.

Ever affecy

CD.

To S. H. LANE[†3], 25 JANUARY 1860*

MS Fales Library, New York University.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Wednesday Evening Twenty Fifth January | 1860.

Dear Sir

If it should be perfectly convenient to you, will you be so kind as to leave a box for me at your new Theatre, next Saturday evening? I purpose coming before the curtain goes up, to see all your Pantomime.[†4]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

S. Lane Esquire

To EDMUND YATES, 25 JANUARY 1860

MS Robert H. Taylor Collection, Princeton University.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Wednesday Evening Twenty Fifth January 1860

My Dear Edmund

Saturday for the Britannia. I have written to Lane. Wilkie will probably be with us. And I propose a British steak at the Cock in Fleet Street at ½ past 4.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To MESSRS GRIFFIN & CO.,[†1] 26 JANUARY 1860

MS British Library. Address: Messrs. Griffin and Co; | 10 Stationer's Hall Court | E.C.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.

Thursday Twenty Sixth January 1860

Gentlemen.

In the pressure of several occupations, I have mislaid the proof you did me the favor to offer for my corrections,[†2] and to which your letter of last Monday refers.

I was born at Landport Terrace, Portsmouth, on the 7th. of February 1812:— I think I observed that either the place or the date was incorrectly stated.[†3] I also noticed in the Proof, some reference or other to a collection of my Police Office "reports," or "experiences," or some such phrase. That is simply absurd, as I never was in a Police Office in my life, except as a chance-spectator or a witness.[†4] These points put right, I do not remember any other statement that I should have deemed it necessary to remark upon.

I am Gentlemen | Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Griffin and Co.

To ALBANY FONBLANQUE, 28 JANUARY 1860*

MS Mr P. J. Radford.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON, W.C.
Saturday Twenty Eighth January 1860.

My Dear Fonblanque

You may rely on my doing all I can — unnecessary as I suppose that little to be, in the case of a son of yours.[†1]

Immediately after receiving your note, I went down to the Athenaeum to put my name on Bentham's balloting paper, which I supposed to be accessible. But I found it not yet hung up in the usual place.[†2]

Ever Cordially Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Albany Fonblanque Esquire

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 30 JANUARY 1860

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Torquay | Devon.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Monday Thirtieth January 1860.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I send you a thousand thanks for your most considerate and kind letter, and I deeply — deeply — feel it. I trust to God that Charley may thank you in his life and actions;[†3] but he never can do so with a stronger earnestness than is in his father's heart — many voiced to me — almost dumb to you.

The difficulty that I feel in reference to Mr. Bates,[†4] is the careful delicacy that must be observed in the matter, towards him. He has, no doubt, felt flattered by your confidence, and would be — naturally — easily hurt, if he thought it in the least respect withdrawn. I am sure he would have a respect for Mr. Moore, for instance; but I can understand that he might not exactly like the idea of there being another adviser. Do you not think that if you wrote to Mr. Bates thus, it would be best? — You remind him of the conversation which you have described to me, and you ask (as Charley's twenty third birthday is just over) whether he is in the way of yet seeing any opening for him out of Baring's house? If he replies

No, then, I think that Charley might himself ask to speak with him, and might take his advice upon Mr. Moore's general suggestion, without saying where it originated.

I have considered the point with great care, and in this kind of course I seem to descry the safest and gentlest way of dealing with a man of Mr. Bates's position and years. Does it strike you in the same way? I have always impressed upon Charley the same policy (which is indeed, Mr. Bates's due and nothing more), and he has always observed that it was suited to his character, and their relative situations. Acting thus, you see, Mr. Bates either way is in the position of being consulted; and that is the thing that seems right and necessary and just.

I am very hard-worked just now, for, finding that I could not prevent the dramatizing of my last story, I have devoted myself for a fortnight to the trying to infuse into the conventionalities of the Theatre, some thing not usual there in the way of Life and Truth. The result will become manifest tonight. I have some hopes that there is a French populace dancing the Carmagnole, which is not like the languid run of unrealities of that kind.[†1]

It grieves me to hear that dear Mrs. Brown is not yet quite recovered — even under the Torquay[†2] sky.[†3] Pray give her my love and dear remembrance, and tell her nothing changes me. I have always heard of her, and of you, from Wills, and the old time never grows older or younger with me.

My Dear Miss Coutts | Ever Your affectionate and faithful

CHARLES DICKENS

February

To JOHN DICKER,[†4] 2 FEBRUARY 1860*

Text from transcript by Edgar Johnson of MS Carnegie Book Shop.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.

Thursday Second February 1860

Dear Sir

I have been too busy to be able to answer your letter sooner.

I went to your Workhouse,[†5] because of the Magistrate's account of it.[†6] It agreeably surprised me, and I took exactly the view of it that is expressed in your letter. I have written a paper about it, which will appear next Wednesday Week.[†1] It will serve the Truth best, if you keep this knowledge to yourself until it is published.

Faithfully yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. John Dicker

To SAMUEL CARTWRIGHT,[†2] 3 FEBRUARY 1860*

MS Private.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Friday Night Third February 1860

My Dear Cartwright.

Can you give me an appointment for any time any day next week? I hope I shall not keep you many minutes, but I want some of your skilful overhauling.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To HENRY CHORLEY,[†3] 3 FEBRUARY 1860

Text from Henry Fothergill Chorley: Autobiography, Memoir, and Letters, ed. H. G. Hewlett (1873), II, 161-6.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON, W.C.
Friday night, Feb. 3, 1860.

My Dear Chorley,

I can most honestly assure you that I think "Roccabella"[†4] a very remarkable book indeed. Apart — quite apart — from my interest in you, I am certain that if I had taken it up under any ordinarily favourable circumstances as a book of which I knew nothing whatever, I should not — could not — have relinquished it until I had read it through. I had turned but a few pages, and come to the shadow on the bright sofa at the foot of the bed,[†1] when I knew myself to be in the hands of an artist. That rare and delightful recognition I never lost for a moment until I closed the second volume at the end. I am a "good audience" when I have reason to be, and my girls would testify to you, if there were need, that I cried over it heartily. Your story seems to me remarkably ingenious. I had not the least idea of the purport of the sealed paper[†2] until you chose to enlighten me; and then I felt it to be quite natural, quite easy, thoroughly in keeping with the character and presentation of the Liverpool man.[†3] The position of the Bell family,[†4] in the story, has a special air of nature and truth; is quite new to me, and is so dexterously and delicately done, that I find the deaf daughter[†5] no less real and distinct than the clergyman's wife.[†6] The turn of the story round that damnable Princess[†7] I pursued with a pleasure with which I could pursue nothing but a true interest; and I declare to you that if I were put upon finding anything better than the scene of Roccabella's death,[†8] I should stare round my bookshelves very much at a loss for a long time. Similarly, your characters have really surprised me. From the lawyer[†9] to the Princess, I swear to them as true; and in your fathoming of Rosamond[†10] altogether, there is a profound wise knowledge that I admire and respect with a heartiness not easily overstated in words.

I am not quite with you as to the Italians.[†1] Your knowledge of the Italian character seems to me surprisingly subtle and penetrating; but I think we owe it to those most unhappy men and their political wretchedness, to ask ourselves mercifully whether their faults are not essentially the faults of a people long oppressed and priest-ridden? — whether their tendency to slink and conspire is not a tendency that spies in every dress, from the triple crown to a lousy head, have engendered in their ancestors through generations? Again, like you, I shudder at the distresses that come of these unavailing risings; my blood runs hotter, as yours does, at the thought of the leaders safe and the instruments perishing by hundreds; yet what is to be done? Their wrongs are so great that they will rise from time to time, somehow. It would be to doubt the eternal Providence of God to doubt that they will rise successfully at last. Unavailing struggles against a dominant tyranny precede all successful turning against it. And is it not a little hard in us Englishmen, whose forefathers have risen so often and striven against so much, to look on, in our own security, through microscopes, and detect motes in the brains of men driven mad? Think, if you and I were Italians, and had grown from boyhood to our present time, menaced in every day through all these years by that infernal confessional, dungeons, and soldiers, could we be better than these men? Should we be so good? I should not, I am afraid, if I know myself; such things would make of me a moody, bloodthirsty, implacable man, who would do anything for revenge; and if I compromised the truth — put it at the worst — habitually, where should I ever have had it before me? In the old Jesuits' college at Genoa,[†2] on the Chiaia[†3] at Naples, in the churches of Rome, at the University of Padua, on the Piazzo San Marco at Venice? — where? And the Government is in all these places and in all Italian places. I have seen something of these men. I have known Mazzini[†4] and Gallenga;[†5] Manin[†6] was tutor to my daughters in Paris;[†7] I have had long talks about scores of them with poor Ary Scheffer[†8] who was their best friend; I have gone back to Italy after ten years, and found the best men I had known there exiled or in jail. I believe they have the faults you ascribe to them (nationally, not individually); but I could not find it in my heart, remembering their miseries, to exhibit those faults without referring them back to their causes. You will forgive my writing this, because I write it exactly as I write my cordial little tribute to the high merits of your book. If it were not a living reality to me, I should care nothing about this point of disagreement; but you are far too earnest a man, and far too able a man, to be left unremonstrated with by an admiring reader. You cannot write so well without influencing people. If you could tell me that your book had but twenty readers, I would reply, that so good a book will influence more people's opinions through those twenty than a worthless book would through twenty thousand; and I express this with the perfect confidence of one in whose mind the book has taken, for good and all, a separate and distinct place. Accept my thanks for the pleasure you have given me. The poor acknowledgment of testifying to that pleasure wherever I go will be my pleasure in return. And so, my dear Chorley, good-night, and God bless you.

Ever faithfully yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

To LORD BROUGHAM,[†1] 5 FEBRUARY 1860*

MS University College Library, London.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON, W.C.
Sunday Fifth February 1860.

My Dear Lord Brougham

I received your note yesterday evening, and hoped to have been able to get to you before 3 to day. An appointment having detained me beyond that hour, I write this.

You will believe, I am sure, that I am most heartily sorry that you have been misrepresented (however innocently) in pages under my control. The paper in question is not of my writing, but had been confided, by myself, to a very responsible and trustworthy hand.[†2] In going over the proof, I, of course, observed a reference to you — but thought it curious and interesting — and never in the least doubted it. It is in these words, and no more:— "Brougham bitterly ridiculed Accum[†3] the chemist, and one of the upholders of and believers in, the idea."[†4]

I will take care to set this right with my own hand, and to state the case as you kindly explain it to me — of course, without any introduction of yourself. Will you do me the favor to bear in mind that as "All The Year Round" is published in England and America on the same day, it is always two weeks in advance at press; and that next Wednesday fortnight, therefore, is my earliest opportunity of publishing what I will immediately write in this wise?[†1]

It would be a source of real uneasiness and real pain to me, if I could think you supposed me capable of the least remissness in respect to you, and gratitude for your gigantic labors in the common cause. But I feel confident that the plainness of the case and your better knowledge of me, will set me right in your generous mind.

My Dear Lord Brougham
Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Lord Brougham.

To W. HEPWORTH DIXON, 10 FEBRUARY 1860*

MS Rosenbach Museum & Library.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON, W.C.
Friday Tenth February 1860.

My Dear Dixon.

I have been a little tardy in answering your letter, because I wished to read your papers on Bacon[†2] with great attention, and desired first to look up my Montagu.[†3]

Your case on the whole I think admirably made out. Indeed, the only weak point I seem to detect in it, is, the keeping back of the consideration that the suitors in whose favor he decided when he held the Great Seal, do not in the nature of things appear as Complainants; and that the receipt of monies from the parties who lost, suggests to the suspicious, larger receipts from the parties who won.

I believe the truth of that matter to be that the man who was so immeasurably before his age in mental endowments and cultivation, was not before it in matters of money-profit — that such of us as know his greatness, are conscious of a secret wish that he had been in advance of all mankind, in those particulars too — and that out of this arises, in us, a sense of some uneasiness and incongruity, which in those more thoughtless and less grateful to him has gone to weeds[†4] in injustice.

In short, as to that, I believe his own words which you so forcibly quote.[†1] [†a]I wish at the same time, that he had set himself to break down the system of Presents.[†a]

I cannot say that I like his letters to the King and favorites.[†2] And this for exactly the same reason. I should think them sufficiently unservile in another man of that age; I do not think them so in him.

With this deduction from your conclusions, I hold them to be quite convincing. I don't believe he was a bribed Judge,[†3] I don't believe he was a false friend or an ungrateful man, I don't believe he was mistrusted as Lord Campbell supposes him to have been.[†4] That my poor judgment of him on many points has been immensely assisted — and in some entirely changed — by your industry and penetration I can cordially assure you. And for the spirit in which you have approached your work, and for the thorough earnestness with which you have wrought it out, you deserve the thanks of all lovers of Literature and most heartily have mine.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Hepworth Dixon Esquire

To JAMES T. FIELDS, 10 FEBRUARY 1860*

MS Huntington Library.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON W.C.
Friday Tenth February 1860.

My Dear Friend.

The paper you have sent me is an exceedingly good one, and I accept it for insertion with great pleasure.[†5]

We were talking of you and yours, a very little while before I received your note, and were looking forward to seeing you in the Spring. Until then, I defer a great deal that we shall have to talk about when we meet. I should like to have a walk through Rome with you, this bright morning — for it really is bright in London — and convey you over some favorite ground of mine! I used to go up the street of Tombs — past the tomb of Cecilia Metella[†1] — away, out upon the wild Campagna, and by the old Appian Road (easily tracked out among the ruins and primroses) to Albano.[†2] There, at a very dirty Inn, I used to have a very dirty lunch — generally with the family's dirty linen lying in a corner — and inveigle some very dirty Vetturino[†3] in sheepskin to take me back to Rome.

You will see that this is not a note, but merely an acknowledgment of the safe arrival of the MS.
Faithfully Yours Ever
CHARLES DICKENS[†4]

James T. Fields Esquire

To MISS LOUISA TWINING,[†5] 10 FEBRUARY 1860*

MS Yale University Library.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Friday Tenth February 1860.

Dear Madam

I shall be happy to render any assistance in my power to your benevolent object.[†6] I do not sympathize with it the less cordially, because I think the Poor Law infamously admistered — the Poor Rates most unjustly levied — and the Public much ill used in having to set the costly system right, out of their own well-drained pockets.

As I have written for next week, a little account of my visit to the Workhouse to which you refer,[†1] I need not enter into that question. But I think it would have been as well if the magistrate whose name you mention,[†2] had so timed his visit as to have given it the precedence of his remarks.

I am Dear Madam | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Louisa Twining.

To MADAME CELESTE, 13 FEBRUARY 1860

MS Yale University Library.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Monday Thirteenth February 1860.

My Dear Madame Celeste

I send you back with this, both the pieces. On the whole, I think rather well of the little piece, The Abbé de Vaudreuil.[†3] It comes rather like a piece Charles Matthews[†4] did — I forget the name of it — he was a German Student, and fell asleep by an old Castle[†5] — but the situations are good, and you could make it very pretty. Well got up, I should say it is worth doing.[†6]

But, if done, it should be altered in one respect. Everything that takes place at the Court of Louis XV, should have direct reference to the two young lovers.[†7] Further than this, I think great point would be given to the Vision if Henri in the opening scene regretted the "damned fine glorious old times", and swore tremendously in praise of them, and asked the Abbé to reproduce them, "because these times are so devilish common place and unpicturesque &c compared with those". His short experience of the dissolute Court would shew him his mistake, and he could get a Tag to the effect that these are rather better times — to be married in, at all events.[†8]

Will you leave me a Private Box for my daughters, tomorrow night,[†1] and will you also leave it me for Wednesday[†2] too, if you have it to spare. I will see you on Wednesday evening.

Faithfully Yours always
CD.

To G. H. LEWES, 13 FEBRUARY 1860

Text from N, III, 150.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,

TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON W.C.
Monday Morning Thirteenth February 1860

My Dear Lewes,

Your letter has perfectly amazed me. I had not the least idea and I assure you — not the faintest notion — that there was any postponement, far less a postponement sine die. Mrs. Lewes's note merely asked me, in acknowledging the receipt of the Tale of Two Cities,[†3] whether something was not sacrificed, through the necessities of such a plan, to terseness and closeness of construction, and proposed that we should speak of that when I next came out to see you. This was its effect, but nothing more believe me. I have no doubt I can lay my hand upon it in the course of today, and you shall both see it.

My sole reason for not having come to see you is the delicacy I have with her book.[†4] Both you and she had mentioned her anxious desire to complete it without any distracting reference to her work. Knowing of my own experience how natural and necessary such devotion to one thing is, I resolved (quite against my own wishes) not to come near you, until I could suppose her book to be done. I really put such a strict constraint upon myself in this regard, that on Wills's telling me at the office only a few days ago, that the book was advertized by Blackwood, I replied that this was no evidence of its being finished, and that I would still wait a little longer.

Tomorrow being my day at the office, I will come out to you from there, between half past one and half past three. Meanwhile I only add that I am quite as sure of your good faith as I am of my own.

With kindest regard | Ever faithfully
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To ALBERT SMITH, 14 FEBRUARY 1860*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Tuesday Fourteenth February 1860.

My Dear Albert Smith

It is really painful to me to be unable to accept your invitation. Pray let it be understood between us, that this makes no difference in our friendship.[†1]

But I can not be a guest at any house where Mrs. Hogarth's youngest daughter[†2] is received in the same capacity. There are some considerations in life that are superior to one's ease and pleasure. The lowest self respect on my own behalf, and on that of the girls, and on Georgina's, imposes this rule upon me.

With kind regard | Ever Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

Albert Smith Esquire

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 15 FEBRUARY 1860

Extract in Parke-Bernet catalogue No. 185; MS (3rd person) 1 p.; dated London 15 Feb 60.

The papers left at the office are not suited to the requirements of All the Year Round.

To ALBERT SMITH, 15 FEBRUARY 1860*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Wednesday Night Fifteenth February | 1860

My Dear Albert Smith.

I think you will find on reconsideration, that you have not written me quite a good natured little letter.[†3] You once wrote me a very manly letter indeed,[†4] the remembrance of which has never since been disturbed. It is my turn now. I set that against this, and am always

Faithfully Yours
CD.

To DR ANDREW REED,[†1] 16 FEBRUARY 1860

Extract in Parke-Bernet catalogue, Feb 1938; MS 1 p.; dated London, 16 Feb 60; addressed Dr Andrew Reed.

I regret to answer you that I cannot comply with the request you do me the honor to prefer, on behalf of the Asylum for Fatherless Children.[†2] But all the public engagements of that nature that I can undertake this season with any reasonable reference to my own pursuits, are already made.

To CHARLES LEVER, 21 FEBRUARY 1860

MS Widener Collection, Harvard.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Tuesday Twenty First February 1860.

My Dear Lever.

A short note this — a business note. I hope not an absolutely disgusting one to you nevertheless.

Adam (or Eve) Bede is terrified by the novel difficulties of serial writing; can not turn in the space; evidently will not be up to the scratch when Collins's sponge is thrown up.[†3]

Consequently, I want to begin your story in July;[†4] that is to say, I want to have in type, four weekly Nos. at the end of June, and to keep that amount ahead, while the story lasts.

Take a breath, don't heap imprecations even on my editorial head, and write and tell me whether I may count upon you and be happy.[†5]

Whistology is placed in a forthcoming number.[†6] You will not mind my having taken out the strictures on Phrenology, for two reasons; firstly, because I believe in it, in the main and broadly, as an essential part of the truth of physiognomy; secondly (and principally) because I really believe that Elliotson,[†1] who has suffered for it, would break his heart if he thought that I, an old friend, girded at him through it.

I am afraid that there is no present hope of my coming to Italy.[†2] But I am sanguine that you will have some amazing summer-dispatch to bring over, which will give me the delight of seeing you at Gad's Hill (Falstaff's original, remember), and among the Kentish Woods.

Tell me when you write, that you have fought through those brambles of annoyance that were besetting you,[†3] and have come out into the free air. And in it, and in everything, Believe me

Your affectionate and cordial friend

CD.

To HENRY BICKNELL,[†4] [22 FEBRUARY 1860]

Envelope in Christie's catalogue, May 1986. Address: Henry Bicknell Esquire | Newington Butts | S. PM 22 Feb 60.

To MISS MARION ELY,[†5] 25 FEBRUARY 1860

Extract in Christie's catalogue, April 1981; MS 1 p.; dated Tavistock House, 25 February 1860; addressed Miss Ely.

My Dear Marian.

I must send a word of thankfulness.... Pray give Willy[†6] the heartfelt congratulations of his father's old friend.[†7] I shall always feel a personal respect and gratitude towards the Chancellor[†8] for his fidelity to that Memory.

Believe me Ever | Your affectionate and faithful

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Ely.

To [?RICHARD] FRIEND,[†1] 25 FEBRUARY 1860*

MS University of California, Los Angeles.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Saturday Twenty Fifth February 1860

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his Compliments to Mr. Friend, and begs to say that he has received the accompanying papers, in a letter referring to some "enclosed letter" from himself, not enclosed. The communication to which he now replies is, therefore, not intelligible to him.

To PROFESSOR ANSTED,[†2] 28 FEBRUARY 1860

Mention in N, III, 152.

To [?JOHN] ELLIS,[†3] 28 FEBRUARY 1860*

MS Shakespeare. Birthplace Trust.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Twenty Eighth Feby 1860

My Dear Mr. Ellis.

I shall be here, all day. Will you tell Madame Celeste so (if you see her) with my kind regard and also that I will endeavour to come over the way this evening.[†4]

Faithfully Yours
CD.

March

To M. CHAMPFLEURY,[†5] 3 MARCH 1860

Summary in Sotheby's catalogue, Mar 1903; MS 1 p.; dated 3 Mar 60; addressed M. Champfleury.

As a member of the great brotherhood of writers, CD wishes him the greatest success for his "Bulletin des Romanciers".[†6]

To MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL, 5 MARCH 1860*

MS Mr Shawn Thomas.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,

TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Monday Fifth March 1860.
Messrs. Chapman & Hall

Please to deliver to Miss Hogarth or Bearer

!st. Vol Pickwick
Oliver Twist
} Library Edition[†1]

CHARLES DICKENS

To MADAME CELESTE, 9 MARCH 1860

MS Dickens House.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Friday Ninth March 1860.

My Dear Madame Celeste

Will you leave me a box for my people, tomorrow (Saturday) night?[†2]

Faithfully Yours always

CD.

To JOHN HUNTER,[†3] 9 MARCH 1860*

MS Yale University Library.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Friday Ninth March 1860.

Sir

I have a great respect for the good sense and moderation of your letter, and have referred it to the writer of the article in question.[†4] He is a highly conscientious and responsible gentleman. I do not know what precise authority he has for the kneading statement[†5] (though I know he states nothing lightly), but I perfectly remember to have read of the filthy condition of numerous bake houses, in Reports made on personal medical inspection.

Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. John Hunter.

To CHARLES LEVER, 9 MARCH 1860

MS Widener Collection, Harvard.

Tavistock House.
Friday Ninth March 1860.

My Dear Lever.

Hurrah! I think the name a very good one,[†1] and we will fall-to as soon as you please in the way of making preparation ahead. Do not be afraid to trust the audience with any thing that is good. Though a very large one, it is a fine one.

I see no difficulty in our sending you the proofs by post, regularly. We can easily have them pulled on light paper for the purpose. I would take their correction on myself, if you particularly wished it; but I think it would be better if you looked to them. However, that (and all else) shall be exactly as you desire.

We have fallen upon a second winter here, and are now spinning like tops, in a vortex of east wind and snow. Great excitement has been whirling about, too, along of the Volunteers.[†2] At the Ball the night before last,[†3] my eldest boy distinguished himself by looking (in his uniform) extremely like an able-bodied pauper. My eldest girl distinguished *her*self by fainting away in the remotest and most inconvenient corner of the building, and being carried about half a mile by the chivalry of Britain.

Ever Heartily Your friend
CHARLES DICKENS

To HENRY MORLEY, 9 MARCH 1860*

MS Benoliel Collection.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Friday Ninth March 1860

My Dear Morley.

I think you will agree with me that the enclosed seems to be the letter of a sensible and moderate tradesman. I have answered it, telling him that I have a respect for his way of stating his case, and that I have sent the letter on to the conscientious and thoroughly informed gentleman who wrote the paper. If you like to write him a word about the kneading — do — but I need not add that I send you the letter, only because I like the manner of the man.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To WYNDHAM SMITH,[†1] 9 MARCH 1860*

MS Yale University Library. Address: Wyndham Smith Esquire | 4 Queen's Terrace | Southampton.

Tavistock House. | W.C.
Ninth March 1860.

My Dear Wyndham Smith.

I will take care that the paper enclosed in your letter (forwarded to me from the Club this morning), comes under Miss Coutts's notice.[†2] Of course I cannot answer for anything further.

You can hardly imagine, I think, what pleasure I have derived from your postscript. But do let me say in the plainest sincerity, that you are much too good a man, by scores of qualities original and inherited, for that association. The gentleman to whom you leave the King Street Market[†3] will suit his calling, and his calling will suit him. You are far too like your father[†4] to have affinity with it.

So I heartily shake hands with you upon it (through the post), for his sake and for yours, and assure you that I have not received a piece of news more pleasant to me, for a long time.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Wyndham Smith Esquire.

To M. H. FEILDE,[†5] 10 MARCH 1860*

MS Private. Address: M. H. Feilde Esquire | 29 Grove Place | Lisson Grove | N. W.

Tavistock House
Saturday Tenth March 1860

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Feilde, and begs to acknowledge the receipt of Mr. Feilde's obliging favor of last Tuesday's date.

To [GEORGE] MOORE,[†1] 10 MARCH 1860

MS Dunedin Public Library.

Tavistock House
Saturday Tenth March 1860

My Dear Mr Moore.

I dare say you have long ago suspected me of forgetting the curious book[†2] we spoke of at your house, when I dwelt upon the Christianity of taking broad[†3] kind views of the spirit of our religion, and not binding any human creature hand and foot to the uncertain letter[†4] — for which, I need not remind you, there is higher authority than mine.[†5]

If you have suspected me, acquit me now. The book was lent, and is only just now restored. You will find the knowledge I quoted, set forth, between page 5 (at the bottom) and page 14.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To DR WILLIAM SMITH, 12 MARCH 1860†

MS Berg Collection.

Tavistock House
Monday Twelfth March 1860.

My Dear Dr. Smith

Mr. Elwin is out of town; but I write to you, representing his opinions no less than my own.

It is not my intention to go to the Annual Meeting[†6] on Wednesday, because I feel that my appearance there, might be easily misrepresented or mistaken as indicating some latent design — if circumstances should seem to favor it — of appealing from the Committee[†7] to the general Body, in reference to the offer of endowment confided some time since to Mr. Elwin and myself.[†8] Whereas, when we withdrew that offer, we, on our own parts and on behalf of the proposed donor, finally withdrew from the subject.[†9]

If we had had any intention of appealing from the Committee to the general Body, we should have had, it is needless to say, little difficulty in obtaining a Special general Meeting for that purpose. But, before the withdrawal of the offer, I had myself strongly impressed on the proposed donor that, in the event of the Committee's declaring by Resolution that they did not want to have a Library at all, nothing should induce me to place him in the preposterous light of appearing to press his munificence on a reluctant acceptance.

Mr. Elwin thoroughly concurred with me. Consequently, from the moment when the Committee terminated our trust, we have never entertained a thought of recurring to it.

But, of course, our faith and duty towards the gentleman whom we once had the honor to represent, can not be terminated. We know that the Committee could not possibly enter with any approach to fairness on a history of the proposal, without setting forth our many verbal offers, explanations, and concessions, arising out of objections urged to details of the proposed donor's written offer, or out of misunderstandings of his generous meaning. If any such history were attempted therefore, it would be an essential part of our trust, to watch it closely, and through every means in our power to disseminate what we might find wanting to its completeness, and — by consequence — to its accuracy. But, if the Committee should report to the general Body, that they received the proposed donor's written offer, at our hands — that they applied themselves to the consideration of the principle whether it was desirable for the Institution to accept a Library in trust for Literary men, at all — that they decided that it was not — and that thereupon the offer was immediately withdrawn — we should consider any further action on our part, quite unnecessary.

My Dear Dr. Smith

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Dr. William Smith.

To FREDERIC CHAPMAN, 13 MARCH 1860*

MS Johns Hopkins University.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Tuesday Thirteenth March, 1860.

My Dear Sir

I have had so bad a pain in my face, since I received the accounts of the Tale of Two Cities, that I have but just now been able to go over them.

Your conduct in regard of the percentage is very honorable indeed, and it gives me real pleasure to have renewed a connexion that is resumed, on your side, in such a spirit.[†1] You may be sure that you will always find me responsive to it.

The sale, and the profit on the sale, have rather disappointed me — mainly, I think, because I derived from you (which I may have done with insufficient reason), that both were larger.[†1] However, the very great sale here,[†2] of course forestalled the market to a considerable extent.[†3] Frederic Chapman Esquire

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 13 MARCH 1860

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Torquay | Devon.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON W.C.
Tuesday Thirteenth March 1860.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

Charley — as you may suppose in his joyful flush and excitement — has been with me often lately, and when he was here last (a week ago) was saying that of course he must appoint a time for coming down to Torquay "to say Good Bye".[†4] I said, "of course" too, and I told him to let me know when it would be, as soon as he knew himself, in order that I might come with him, or at least propose myself. — You will have me for a few hours?

[†a][You know that I want no bed, but have an adventurous satisfaction in exploring hotels, and am quite as likely as not to leave in the middle of the night for the Coast of Cornwall.][†a]

Wills told me about the sick children,[†5] or I should have written to say this — as indeed I said to Charley I was going to do. But when I heard that you were occupied and anxious, I thought it better to wait.

Charley was waiting at Baring's, until his successor should be ready. He thought it likely that Mr. Bates would deem it well to send him to Manchester, somewhere about the middle of this month. I suppose he would be free for a flight to Torquay in about a month from this time; but I am at sea about this, until he comes again, because he was out in the wildest Pacific himself.[†1]

My Dear friend I cannot trust myself on the ground that lies trembling at the point of my pen. Many reasons, old and new, unnerve me. I think you know how I love you — how I could do any thing in your name and honor, but thank you.

My love to Mrs. Brown. Tell her that everything stands upon my tables as it used to do, and that Gad's Hill (wonderfully changed now), is the admiration of Rochester. I want to sell this house.

Ever My Dear Miss Coutts | Your affectionate and faithful

CD.

To H.G. ADAMS, 14 MARCH 1860

MS Fales Library, New York University.

Tavistock House
Wednesday Fourteenth March 1860.

My Dear Mr. Adams.

I have taken time to consider your letter, and revolve in my mind the practicability of presently complying with your request.

So many considerations unite to render such early compliance extremely irksome and difficult, that I must abandon that idea by deciding against it. But I promise you that if you should still be in want of help, about Christmas time, I will (please God) read for you gratuitously, to drag you out of debt.[†2]

I have been in Rochester but once for a long time, or I should have called upon you. The time is fast coming on when Gad's Hill will be my headquarters, I hope, for many quiet months at a stretch.

Believe me | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

H. G. Adams Esquire

As my object is to serve the Institution, I have no objection to your making any official use of the purport of this note.

To THE REV. JAMES BEWSHER, 14 MARCH 1860

MS Robert H. Taylor Collection, Princeton University.

Tavistock House, London
Wednesday Fourteenth March 1860.

My Dear Sir

I am much obliged to you for your letter. Not desiring to unsettle Frank still more, I have not yet intimated to him that I contemplate new arrangements for him, while they are as yet uncompleted. But I hope to remove him about Easter. When he was last at home, I thought him in a desultory, unprofitable kind of state; and I have since had it in my mind to find an opportunity of setting him to work.

Next, as to Harry. I am very reluctant to withdraw him from your care, but I fear I shall be obliged to do so at Midsummer.[†1] His youngest brother,[†2] as the only child at home, has become such an article of household furniture that my eldest daughter is unwilling to send him so far as Boulogne. It is advisable that the two should be educated together; and I am inclined to think that the Rochester Grammar School, which is near my little country place, would reconcile the difficulties of the case.[†3] You will, I am sure, understand that if I remove Harry, it will be solely for this reason, and not because I have the slightest doubt of your establishment, or any but the very highest opinion of yourself and Mr. Gibson. The friendly regard and interest with which you have inspired me, and the sense I entertain of your excellent training of the boys, could not be easily over-stated.

The gallant Sydney is in immense repute at Portsmouth, and is shewn (I hear) to visitors, as one of the curiosities of the place. When he is in the country with me, he usually lives up a tree or on the top of a pole.

With kind regard to Mr. Gibson, Believe me My Dear Sir

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Rev. J. Bewsher.

To CHARLES KNIGHT,[†4] 14 MARCH 1860*

MS Yale University Library.

Tavistock House
Wednesday Fourteenth March 1860.

My Dear Charles Knight.

I am extremely sorry to tell you that I am positively obliged to go out of town tomorrow morning, and that I can not be back, at the soonest, until next day. The moment this is known to me, I write to you. It is "All The Year Round" business that takes me away,[†5] and it cannot be postponed, and must be done.[†6]

To JOHN PLUMMER,[†1] 17 MARCH 1860*

MS Mrs Ian Donnelly.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Saturday Seventeenth March 1860

Sir.

Although your letter is dated the 13th. of this month, I received it but yesterday. I mention this, to explain to you that I could not forewarn you of my inability to see you this evening, as I am expressly engaged out of town. If you will write to me touching any matter on which you may have desired to speak with me, you may rely on my attention. I beg to assure you in all sincerity, of my respect and consideration.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. John Plummer

To THOMAS GUNN[†2], 20 MARCH 1860

Text from facsimile in Kenneth W. Rendell Gallery catalogue No. 253 [?1995].

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Twentieth March 1860.

Dear Sir

I am happy to retain your paper for insertion.

Let me thank you for your communication in reference to the late Leigh Hunt, and let me assure you that I take it as you mean it.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Butler Gunn Esquire

To W. H. ALVAREZ,[†3] 21 MARCH 1860

MS Private (not in CD's hand).

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,

March 21, 1860

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Alvarez and regrets to find that the enclosed paper is not suited to the requirements of All the Year Round.

To THE EARL AND COUNTESS STANHOPE,[†1] 28 MARCH 1860*

MS Nottingham University Library.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Wednesday Twenty Eighth March 1860.

Mr. Charles Dickens very much regrets that, being already engaged for Friday the Thirtieth, he cannot have the honor of dining with Lord and Lady Stanhope.

To W. H. WILLS, 28 MARCH 1860

MS Berg Collection.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Wednesday Twenty Eighth March 1860.

My Dear Wills

There is not a hope of my doing the Uncommercial,[†2] in time for Saturday's American Mail. When I got home last night, I found a note from the lady with whom my mother lives, who is terrified by the responsibility of her charge and utterly relinquishes it. Consequently I must at once devote myself to the difficult task of finding good hands for my mother, and getting her into them without alarming her. And how this is to be done, and done at once, I am at a great loss to settle.

The Uncommercial being announced, I am very unwilling to postpone it as to England. Can we make up the No. without it, for America, and afterwards re-make it up, with it, for this country? I will come to the office in the course of this afternoon.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To H. G. ADAMS, 30 MARCH 1860

Text from N, III, 154.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON, W.C.
Friday Thirtieth March 1860

My Dear Mr. Adams,

I am sorry to have missed you, but have been much engaged away from home.

Mr. Layard[†1] is a friend of mine for whom I have a great regard. I will certainly take the chair, please God, on the occasion of his lecture.[†2]

I shall not be able to accept the High Constable's[†3] hospitality, as I shall be at Gad's Hill and am pretty sure to have friends there. But I am not the less obliged.

Faithfully Yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To SIR ALEXANDER DUFF GORDON,[†4] 30 MARCH 1860*

MS Dickens House.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Friday Thirtieth March 1860

My Dear Gordon

Since you were here, I have sought the Ninevite[†5] and not found him. I now want to entrap him to come to me at Gad's Hill, when he lectures (under my presidency) at Rochester; to which end, I wish him to come into possession of the Enclosed letter[†6] promptly. Will you kindly address and post it for me? I have no notion within half a mile of his number in Piccadilly.[†7]

Very Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Sir Alexander Duff Gordon

To AUSTEN HENRY LAYARD, 30 MARCH 1860

MS British Library.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Friday Thirtieth March, 1860.

My Dear Layard

You are going to lecture at Chatham on the 17th. of April, and I am going to honor myself by presiding over you. My little country house is within three miles of the place, and I shall be there for Easter. DO[†1] come down on Monday the 16th. and stay till the Wednesday morning. Say yes (answering to this address), and I will send you full particulars of Trains, Station where I will meet you, &c. &c. &c.

In haste | Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To W. C. MACREADY, 30 MARCH 1860

MS Morgan Library.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Friday Thirtieth March, 1860.

My Dearest Macready

I am heartily glad (and not much surprised) to get your letter. You know that my confidence in you is as great as my love for you, and I am thoroughly persuaded that you are right.[†2] It is inexpressibly delightful and interesting to me, to picture you in a new home, with new life and movement and hope and pleasure about you. This feeling springs up in me for your sake, and for the sake of your children too. Moreover, I do not believe that a heart like yours, was made to hold so large a waste-place as there has been in it. And this consideration, as one in the eternal nature of things, I put first of all.

God bless you, and God bless the object of your choice! Your letter came with the sunshine of the spring morning, and shone into my breast quite as naturally and cheerily. I have been to Gad's Hill and back, since I received it, and everything has looked the fresher for it in my sight.

Ever my Dear Friend | Your most affectionate
CHARLES DICKENS

Aha! — What do you say, now, to those noble remarks I was making at Forster's the other day, about the stout Englishmen all over the world who are always young? I feel a grin of intolerable (except to me) self-complacency, mantle all over me as I think of my wisdom.

To AUGUSTUS DE MORGAN,[†1] 31 MARCH 1860*

MS Huntington Library.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Saturday Thirty First March 1860

Dear Sir

Allow me to thank you for your note. I never make any such engagement as is proposed to me by the gentleman whose letter you have done me the favor to forward, but I will take care that this is explained to him.

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

A. De Morgan Esquire

April

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 5 APRIL 1860

Text from transcript by the Comte de Suzannet of MS Private.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Thursday Fifth April 1860

My Dear Miss Coutts,

I cannot be easy under the chance of seeming, through the silence of a week or two, to debate within myself of the possibility of what your affectionate kindness suggested yesterday.[†2] In the last two years, I have been stabbed too often and too deep, not to have a settled knowledge of the wounded place.

It is simply impossible that such a thing can be. That figure is out of my life for evermore (except to darken it), and my desire is, Never to see it again.[†3]

Ever yours affectionately and faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

To AUSTEN HENRY LAYARD, 5 APRIL 1860

MS British Library.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, | LONDON. W.C.
Thursday Fifth April, 1860.

My Dear Layard. The Train that will best suit your city engagements on Monday week, is a train that leaves London Bridge Terminus (North Kent Railway) at 20 minutes before 4 in the afternoon. Take your ticket for Higham — which is the station next beyond Gravesend — and I will await you there.

Ever Cordially Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To H. G. ADAMS, 6 APRIL 1860

MS Dr Jonathan Hill.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON, W.C.
Friday Sixth April, 1860

My Dear Mr. Adams

Many thanks for your note. Please reserve me Three Ladies' tickets.

I believe there is no doubt that Mr. Layard will stay with me at Gad's Hill. Of course he will write to the High Constable, on receipt of that gentleman's invitation.

Will you dine with me at Gad's Hill on Monday the 16th. at a quarter past six? I shall be there tomorrow, for Easter.

Faithfully yours
CHARLES DICKENS

H. G. Adams Esquire

To HENRY SPICER,[†1] 6 APRIL 1860*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Friday Sixth April, 1860.

My Dear Mr. Spicer.

I write to you very hastily, before going into Kent for Easter. (Though I shall be at the office next Tuesday.)

You will pardon my not being at home the other day when you called. I had been called out by intelligence that my mother's health required my immediate care and attention. The same anxiety has occupied me for some days. And in the suddenness of it, I forgot to forewarn you.

The cares of another periodical[†1] would lie heavy on me, and nothing but a very large gain would induce me to undertake them. I should be very unwilling, even if that were assured, to enter into so direct a competition as might seem ungenerous. I have no faith (lastly) in those calculations that you mention, for I have very small faith indeed in the calculations of the existing Magazine. I know the cost of production pretty well, and also the realities of circulation, stock-accumulation, and the like. To the best of my knowledge, your failing proprietor has much wisdom in him.

Believe me | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Henry Spicer Esquire

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 6 APRIL 1860

Mention in City Book Auction catalogue No. 650; dated Tavistock House, Friday 6 Apr 60.

To MRS BROWN, 8 APRIL 1860

MS Morgan Library. Address: Mrs. Brown | Meadfoot House | Torquay.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Easter Sunday Eighth April, 1860.

My Dear Mrs. Brown

I was so interested and delighted by the receipt of your kind letter, that I must write to thank you for it. — Yes indeed. In seeing Miss Coutts again, I saw you again, and we all understood one another as of old, and knew that we were all doing our best.

Charley told me last night (he came down yesterday) that he was "going" to write you a line to day. When last seen, he was lecturing on China, in the garden, to two of his young brothers and a dog. I put the Volunteer[†2] mettle to the proof, by turning him out at 3 o'Clock this morning, on a false alarm of somebody prowling in the garden. We patrolled the place, and he handled the poker with which he was armed, in a meritorious manner. (I complimented him at breakfast this morning, on the scrupulous politeness with which he yielded precedence to his father and made him go first.)

He is full of hope and spirit, as well he may be. And you and I know whom he has to thank for this, and how much hundreds have to thank her for, that will never he heard of in this world.

God bless her, and you! I never forget you. "Out of sight" is not "out of mind" with me, my dear friend; nor with you, I very well know.

Ever Your affectionate and faithful
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 8 APRIL 1860

MS Mr Roger W. Barrett.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Easter Sunday Eighth April, 1860.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

Don't be afraid of my hand-writing, for I hope I can write you a few reassuring words, this blessed morning. — I believe I am exactly what I always have been; quite as hopeful, cheerful, and active, as I ever was. I am not so weak or wicked as to visit any small unhappiness of my own, upon the world in which I live. I know very well, it is just as it was. As to my art, I have as great a delight in it as the most enthusiastic of my readers; and the sense of my trust and responsibility in that wise, is always upon me when I take pen in hand. If I were soured, I should still try to sweeten the lives and fancies of others; but I am not — not at all.

Neither do I ever complain, or ever touch that subject. What I have written to you respecting it, I have written merely because I wished you to understand me thoroughly.

Lastly, I do not suppose myself blameless, but in this thing as in all others know, every day more and more, how much I stand in need of the highest of all charity and mercy. All I claim for myself, is, that when I was very young, I made a miserable mistake, and that the wretched consequences which might naturally have been expected from it, have resulted from it. That is all.

Do not think you failed to express yourself to me. You expressed — emphatically — yourself, and what more could I have, or what could I more earnestly feel?

Charley is here, and has gained a colour in a dozen hours. I hope you may not have read The Tale of Two Cities, for I have entrusted your copy to his care.

Ever My Dear friend

CD.

To CHARLES DRESSER,[†1] 14 APRIL 1860

Text from N, III, 156.

Tavistock House | Saturday Fourteenth April, 1860

My Dear Sir,

I trust to your kindness to excuse my troubling you with a slight commission. I do so, only because I cannot remember (neither can Wills) the name of the maker of my glorious chronometer.[†2] I wish to forward it to him, because it is much in want of regulating and because he begged me to let him have it when it stood in that need. Will you do me the favor to place it in his hands?

With cordial regard and remembrance to my Coventry friends.

Believe me my Dear Sir | Faithfully yours

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To AUSTEN HENRY LAYARD, 14 APRIL 1860

MS British Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Saturday Fourteenth April 1860

My Dear Layard

Here is a queer question I am going to ask you. Have you any curiosity to see the Great Fight[†3] (at a cost of three Guineas)? If yes, I can manage it for you, but it will involve some change in our arrangements, as it is to come off at Daybreak on Tuesday morning. If no, think no more of it and suppose our arrangements immutable.[†4]

I want a word in answer.[†5]

Ever Faithfully
CD.

To AUSTEN HENRY LAYARD, 14 APRIL 1860

MS British Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Saturday Fourteenth April 1860

My Dear Layard

Of course our arrangement holds for Monday, and I shall await you at the Station. No alteration whatever.

Faithfully Yours ever
CD.

To JOHN HOLLINGSHEAD, 16 APRIL 1860

Mention in John Hollingshead, My Lifetime, 1895, I, 125. Date: CD's message arrived "about One o'clock in the morning" of 17 Apr, according to Hollingshead, above; dated Gad's Hill.

Saying that he could not accompany Hollingshead to the Sayers-Heenan prize-fight, as originally arranged, as Layard, who was staying with him, had "scruples" about going to it.

To MRS ALFRED DICKENS, 17 APRIL 1860

Text from N, III, 156.

Gad's Hill Place | Tuesday Seventeenth April, 1860

My Dear Helen,

Many thanks for your note, which is a great satisfaction to me.

I am strongly disposed to hope that all will go well, and that my mother will become no worse, but will go on very gently.

With love to all | always affectionately yours

[CD]

To EDMUND YATES, 17 APRIL 1860

MS Robert H. Taylor Collection, Princeton University.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Seventeenth April, 1860.

My Dear E. Y.

I did not write to you personally, about our Post Man, because I had your Kentish Town[†1] trial in my thoughts and anticipated the sad things you tell me.

It was not Matilda who posted the letters; it was the other housemaid, Mary Anne. Your directions shall be carefully observed. We return to town tomorrow, until June.

[†a]I think of your mother,[†1] as of a beautiful part of my own youth, and this dream that we are all dreaming seems to darken.[†a]

Ever Faithfully
CD.

To MRS GASKELL, 20 APRIL 1860*

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Friday Twentieth April, 1860.

My Dear Mrs. Gaskell.

The little allegory[†2] has been pushed out over and over again, by a Fate that will sometimes beset a Manuscript of that kind, in the difficult "making up" of the Weekly No. A maddening impossibility of fitting some particular paper in, occasionally occurs, and, once occurring, *re*curs until the Editorial (and I have no doubt Contributorial) hair stands on end.

It shall be forced into the very next No. put to press. That No. will be published some three weeks hence.

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS[†3]

To MISS EMMA NOVELLO,[†4] 20 APRIL 1860*

MS West Sussex County Record Office.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,

TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Friday Twentieth April, 1860.

My Dear Miss Novello.

Coming back to town from an Easter holiday, I find your kind note and its accompanying drawings, with great delight. I could not tell you how the latter interest me, but for your previous knowledge of the fact. They are so grateful and so true in themselves, no less than in the remembrance they express, that they are very precious to me.[†1]

With my heartiest thanks and best wishes, Believe me always Faithfully Your friend
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Emma Novello

To COUNT STRZELECKI,[†2] 20 APRIL 1860

MS Dickens House.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Friday Twentieth April, 1860.

My Dear Count.

I see you so seldom, and am always so glad to see you, that I almost think I would rather see you in the Pillory than not at all!

I am afraid that I cannot with any consistency, take up the case you present to me. For this reason. I have of late greatly considered the question of Testimonials to the memory of Writers. It has seemed to me, on that consideration, that until the time comes when this Nation (as a Nation) shall delight to honor them by public and enduring record, their best Monument is in their own Works.

Now, having returned this answer to various addresses for subscriptions, do you see — for I don't — how I can with reason advocate this particular cause?[†3]

Always Believe me | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Count Strzelecki

To MONSIEUR STUBER,[†4] 20 APRIL 1860*

Text from transcript made by Edgar Johnson of MS in possession of Maurice Inman, Inc.

Tavistock House, Vendredi, 20 Avril, 1860.
Monsieur

J'ai reçu avec le plus grand plaisir, le "Catalogue" que vous m'avez fait l'honneur de m'envoyer. C'est un livre vraiment remarquable.[†5]

L'address de M. le Duc de Sutherland[†1] est:

His Grace
The Duke of Sutherland
Stafford House
London

Acceptez je vous prie mes remerciments, et l'assurance de ma profonde consideration.
CHARLES DICKENS

A Monsieur Stuber

To THE REV. WILLIAM BELL,[†2] 21 APRIL 1860*

MS Dr Gordon N. Ray.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Saturday Twenty First April, 1860.

My Dear Sir

I observe in a letter of Sydney's this morning, a reference to some "Irish nobleman" residing in your neighbourhood, whom he thinks he is going to visit.

As I have not the pleasure of the acquaintance of any gentleman answering to this description, will you allow me to beg that you will give Sydney no leave of absence (unless young Mr. Gordon[†3] should at any time wish to take him out), without a letter from me.

I have not mentioned this to my small son, thinking I might seem, in his youthful eyes, to interfere with your authority.

Pray do not take the trouble to answer this.[†4]

Believe me My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Rev: William Bell.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 21 APRIL 1860

Mention in New Dudley Galleries catalogue of Dickens Exhibition, 1908; MS 2 pp.; dated Office of AYR, 21 Apr 60; marked "Private".

To MRS COWDEN CLARKE, 23 APRIL 1860

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds. Address: Mrs. Cowden Clarke | Maison Quaglia | au Port | Nice (Maritime) | Sardinia.

London, Twenty Third April, 1860.

My Dear Mrs. Cowden Clarke.

I lose no time in acknowledging the receipt of your very welcome letter. I do so briefly — not from choice, but necessity. If I promised myself the pleasure of writing you a long letter, it is highly probable that I should postpone it until Heaven knows what remote time of my life.

I hope to get Two of the Sonnets in, shortly; say within a month or so.[†1]

The Ghost in the Picture Room — Miss Procter. The Ghost in the Clock Room — a new lady, who had very rarely (if ever) tried her hand before.[†2] The Ghost in the Garden Room — Mrs. Gaskell.[†3]

Observe, my dear Concordance,[†4] because it makes the name of my Gad's Hill House, all the better:— the name is none of my giving, the house has borne that name these Eighty years — ever since it was a house.

With kind regard to Cowden Clarke.

Ever Your Faithful friend

CD[†5]

To CHARLES ELLIS, 23 APRIL 1860

MS Messrs Chas. Ellis & Co.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Monday Twenty Third April, 1860.

Dear Mr. Ellis

I have come back to town until June, and find your letter.

Enclosed is a crossed cheque for the amount of my bill.[†6]

I want (for Gad's Hill), a quarter cask of Sherry; and I will take another in June, if I find it — as I do not doubt I shall — perfectly satisfactory. I also want a cask of dark brandy for mixing, the last being quite out. Will you [let][†7] me know the price of this latter, which is also for Gad's Hill?

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To W.H. WILLS, 23 APRIL 1860

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Monday Twenty Third April 1860.

My Dear Wills

This is only a word, to say that I have received your letter here to day and that all is well in the official regions.

When I came to make up the No.[†1] I found it impossible to get in the Eye Witness,[†2] and was forced to substitute Friends on all Fours.[†3] I wish you would write the distinguished E. W.[†4] a line, explaining that it was driven out at last by impossibility of fitting, and that it is in the following No. I make a rule of never speaking to him on Editorial topics.[†5]

I have had a very admirable letter[†6] from Mrs. Linton[†7] — which shall be yours when you come back.

The newspaper extracts for the current No. I duly made out.[†8] I have also read "warious gammon" addressed to myself, in the way of contributions, and have returned the same.

It is cold and wretched here, and hails every five minutes. But I always believe Paris to be one of the coldest — and hottest — places on earth.

They are carrying the P. R.[†9] interest to such a preposterous height,[†10] that I begin to doubt the propriety of inserting Collars.[†11] All depends, of course, upon the treatment. The noble C.[†1] has not yet "entered an appearance" with his copy. We adopt that legal phraseology, at our Sporting Houses.

With kind regard to Mrs. Wills, in which all at home join,

Ever Faithfully
CD.

To THE REV. WILLIAM BELL, 24 APRIL 1860*

MS Walter T. Spencer.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,

TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Tuesday Twenty Fourth April, 1860.

My Dear Sir

I thank you for your obliging note, and hasten to assure you that I quite approve of Sydney's going to Captain Evelegh's,[†2] or Mr. White's of Bonchurch.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Rev: William Bell

To MRS LYNN LINTON, [?24 APRIL 1860]

Mention in G.S. Layard, Mrs Lynn Linton, her Life, Letters & Opinions, 1961, p. 126. Date: replying to Mrs Linton's "very admirable letter", mentioned in To Wills, 23 Apr; he would have replied at once.

Saying that she could not write too much for All the Year Round ... that her contributions should always have precedence in his magazine ... that he looked upon himself as her editor of right, and made it perfectly clear that any commerce with the opposition would be regarded as a personal injury.

To MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL, [24] APRIL 1860*

MS Private. Date: Tuesday was 24 Apr.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Tuesday Twenty Fifth April, 1860.

Dear Sirs

Will you be so good as send me by Bearer, the Last Volume of Household Words.[†3]

And will you send me up, in the course of the day:

3 Bleak House [†1]
✓ Dombey
✓ Nickleby
} all, cheap Edition[†2]

Faithfully Yours always
CD.

Messrs. Chapman and Hall.

To CHARLES DRESSER, 24 APRIL 1860

Mention in Maggs catalogue No. 525 (Autumn 1929); MS 1 p.; dated Tavistock House, 24 Apr 60.

Making an appointment.

To MISS MARION ELY, 25 APRIL 1860*

MS Mr F. J. Ely.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Wednesday Twenty Fifth April, 1860.

My Dear Marion.

I must excuse myself from accepting the proposal you convey to me. My reasons for doing so, I need not enter into; they are well considered and strong.[†3]

Pray tell Mrs. Milner Gibson with my kind regard that I am sorry to lose an opportunity of seeing her, and that I hope to have another before very long.

Ever affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Ely.

To THE REV. WILLIAM BELL, 26 APRIL 1860*

MS Walter T. Spencer.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Thursday Twenty Sixth April, 1860.

My Dear Sir

Will you be so kind as to advance Sydney whatever you think right for his subscription to the Cricket Club? I suppose that five or six shillings will clear him handsomely.

My Dear Sir | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Rev: William Bell.

To CHARLES DRESSER, 26 APRIL 1860*

MS Mr Michael Silverman.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Thursday Twenty Sixth April, 1860.

My Dear Sir

I have booked Coventry for Thursday May the Tenth.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

I shall be very glad to have your promised explanation of the state of matters.[†1]

To MRS LYNN LINTON, 26 APRIL 1860

Text from G. S. Layard, Mrs Lynn Linton, 1901, p. 127.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Thursday, 26th April 1860.

My Dear Mrs. Linton.

I think you may like to write a narrative of this book,[†2] with the general purpose of showing that if kings will not be honest and true, and will be shifty and shuffling, they must take the consequences (when they fall) like mere men. You will see that Charles the First is clearly shown to have set upon the House of Commons with a marvellously evil and deep design.[†3]

Ever affectionately,
CD.

To THOMAS BEARD, 28 APRIL 1860

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Place | Maida Hill | W.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Saturday Twenty Eighth April, 1860.

My Dear Beard

My brother Alfred who is one of the "Committee" for the enclosed Dinner to your Godson,[†4] has asked me to present the accompanying Ticket to you, and to let you know that the said "committee" entreat the favor of your company as a guest on the occasion. I don't know any more of the Great Festival, than that I myself have been invited in the same way, and feel myself bound to go. So if you come (as I hope you can and will), you will be kept in countenance by

Yours ever affecy
CHARLES DICKENS

To THE STEWARDS OF THE FESTIVAL OF THE SONS OF THE CLERGY,[†1] 28 APRIL 1860

Mention in Myers catalogue, No. 374 (1953); MS (3rd person) 1 p.; addressed Stewards of the Festival of the Sons of the Clergy; dated Gad's Hill Place, 28 Apr 60.

Declining an invitation.[†2]

May

To JOHN FORSTER, 2 MAY 1860

MS Victoria & Albert Museum.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Second May 1860.

My Dear Forster.

It did not occur to me in reading your most excellent, interesting, and remarkable book,[†3] that it could with any reason be called one-sided. If Clarendon[†4] had never written his History of the "Rebellion"[†5] then, I can understand that it might be. But just as it would be impossible to answer an advocate who had mis-stated the merits of a case for his own purpose, without — in the interests of Truth, and not of the other side merely — restating the merits and shewing them in their real form, so I cannot see the practicability of telling what you had to tell, without in some sort championing the misrepresented side. And I think that you don't do that, as an advocate, but as a Judge. The evidence has been suppressed and colored, and the Judge goes through it, and puts it straight. It is not his fault if it all goes one way and tends to one plain conclusion. Nor is it his fault that it goes the further when it is laid out straight — or seems to do so — because it was so knotted and twisted up, before.

I can understand any man's, and particularly Carlyle's, having a lingering respect that does not like to be disturbed, for those (in the best sense of the word) loyal gentlemen of the country, who went with the King and were so true to him.[†1] But I don't think Carlyle sufficiently considers that the great mass of those gentlemen didn't know the truth — that it was a part of their loyalty to believe what they were told on the King's behalf[†2] — and that it is reasonable to suppose that the King was too artful to make known to them (especially after failure) what were very acceptable designs to the desperate soldiers of Fortune about Whitehall. And it was, to me, a curious point of adventitious interest arising out of your book, to reflect on the probability of their having been as ignorant of the real scheme in Charles's head, as their descendants and followers down to this time, and to think with pity and admiration that they believed the cause to be so much better than it was. This is a notion I was anxious to have expressed in our account of the book in these pages.[†3] For I don't suppose Clarendon, or any other such man, to sit down and tell Posterity something that he has not "tried on" in his own time. — Do you?

In the whole narrative I saw nothing, anywhere, to which I demurred. I admired it all, went with it all, and was proud of my friend's having written it all. I felt it to be all square and sound and right, and to be of enormous importance in these times. Firstly, to the people who (like myself) are so sick of the shortcomings of representative Government as to have no interest in it. Secondly, to the Humbugs at Westminster who have come down — a long, long way — from those men.

As you know: when the great remonstrance came out,[†4] I was in the thick of my story, and was always busy with it. But I am very glad I didn't read it then, as I shall read it now to much better purpose. All the time I was at work on the Two Cities, I read no books but such as had the air of the time in them.

To return, for a final word, to the Five Members. I thought the marginal references over-done.[†5] Here and there, they had a comical look to me for that reason, and reminded me of Shows and Plays where everything is in the bill. Lastly, I should have written to you, as I had a strong inclination to do and ought to have done, immediately after reading the book, but for a weak reason.

Of all things in the world, I have lost heart in one — I hope, no other. I can not, times out of calculation, make up my mind to write a letter.

Ever My Dear Forster | Affectionately Yours

CD.

To W. W. F. DE CERJAT, 3 MAY 1860†

MS Berg Collection. Address: A Monsieur William. W. F. de Cerjat | Elysée | Lausanne | Suisse.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON, W.C.
Thursday Third May, 1860.

My Dear Cerjat.

The date of this letter would make me horribly ashamed of myself, if I didn't know that you know how difficult letter-writing is, to one whose trade it is to write. [†a]But I have another sense of relief in the knowledge that I purposely abstained from writing to you (as I made known to Townshend) while the vexation of that most abominable piece of rascality of which Townshend gave me the history, was in your mind. I hope it is now out of your mind for ever. I relieved myself at the time by writing some expression of my burning indignation and unutterable contempt, to Townshend aforesaid. I hope you have long since relieved yourself for good and all, of a fellow who cannot be worth a thought from you or yours. — With this, let us fling him to the Devil (a most unnecessary gift), and waste no words upon him.[†a]

You asked me on Christmas Eve, about my children. My second daughter is going to be married in the course of the summer, to the brother of Wilkie Collins the Novelist. He was bred an artist[†1] (the father was one of the most famous painters of English green lanes, and coast pieces),[†2] and was attaining considerable distinction, when he turned indifferent to it and fell back upon that worst of cushions, a small independence. He is a writer too, and does the Eye Witness in All The Year Round. He is a gentleman, and accomplished. Age 30. I do not doubt that the young lady might have done much better, but there is no question that she is very fond of him, and that they have come together by strong attraction. Therefore the undersigned venerable parent says no more, and takes the goods the Gods provide him. My eldest daughter has not yet started any conveyance on the road to Matrimony (that I know of), but it is likely enough that she will, as she is very agreeable and intelligent. They are both very pretty. My eldest boy, Charley, has been in Baring's House for three or four years, and is now going out to Hong Kong, strongly backed up by Barings, to buy Tea on his own account, as a means of forming a connexion and seeing more of the practical part of a merchant's calling, before starting in London for himself. His brother Frank (Jeffrey's Godson) I have just recalled from France and Germany to come and learn business, and qualify himself to join his brother on his return from the celestial Empire. The next boy Sydney Smith (the boy of the lot, and the one who will be heard of hereafter) is designed for the Navy, and is in training at Portsmouth, awaiting his nomination. He is about three foot high, with the biggest eyes ever seen, and is known in the Portsmouth parts as "Young Dickens, who can do everything." Another boy is at school in France; the youngest of all has a private Tutor at home. I have forgotten the second in order, who is in India. He went out as Ensign of a non existent native regiment — got attached to the 42nd. Highlanders, one of the finest regiments in the Queen's service — has remained with them ever since — and got made a Lieutenant by the chances of the Rebellion Campaign before he was 18. Miss Hogarth, always Miss Hogarth, is the Guide philosopher and friend[†1] of all the party, and a very close affection exists between her and the girls. She would make the best wife in the world, but the children are so dependent upon her that I doubt if she will ever marry. I don't know whether to be glad of it or sorry for it — [a]finding the subject perplexing — not being a judge of marriages.[a]

— I have laid down my pen and taken a long breath, after writing this family history. I have also considered whether there are any more children, and I don't think there are. If I should remember two or three others presently, I will mention them in a postscript.

We think Townshend looking a little the worse for the winter,[†2] and we perceive Bully to be decidedly old upon his legs, and of a most diabolical turn of mind. When they first arrived, the weather was very dark and cold, and kept them in-doors. It has since turned very warm and bright, but with a dusty and sharp East Wind. They are still kept in doors by this change, and I begin to wonder what change will let them out. Townshend dines with us every Sunday. You may be sure that we always talk of you and yours, and drink to you heartily.

Public matters here, are thought to be rather improving; the deep mistrust of the gentleman in Paris,[†3] being counteracted by the vigorous state of preparation into which the Nation is getting.[†4] I have not the slightest film of doubt, myself, that the gentleman in Paris will bring the two nations by the ears at last — I never have had, for a moment. You will have observed, of course, that we establish a new Defaulter in respect of some great trust, about once a quarter. The last one, the Cashier of a City Bank, is considered to have distinguished himself greatly; a quarter of a million of money being high game.[†1]

No my friend; I have not shouldered my rifle yet, but I should do so on more pressing occasion. Every other man in the row of men I know — if they were all put in a row — is a Volunteer though. There is a tendency rather to overdo the wearing of the uniform, but that is natural enough in the case of the youngest men. The turn-out is generally very creditable indeed. At the Ball they had (in a perfectly unventilated building), their new leather belts and pouches smelt so fearfully that it was, as my eldest daughter said, like shoemaking in a great prison. She consequently distinguished herself by fainting away in the most inaccessible place in the whole structure, and being brought out (horizontally) by a file of Volunteers, like some slain daughter of Albion whom they were carrying into the street, to rouse the indignant valour of the populace.

Lord my dear Cerjat, when I turn to that page of your letter where you write like an ancient Sage in whom the fire has paled into a meek-eyed state of coolness and virtue, I half laugh and half cry! You old? You a sort of hermit? — Boh! — Get out.

With this come my love and all our loves, to you and Mrs. Cerjat, and your daughters. I add my special and particular to the sweet "Singing Cousin". When shall you and I meet,[†2] and where? Must I come to see Townshend? I begin to think so.

Ever My Dear Cerjat | Your affectionate and faithful

CD.

To CHARLES COLLINS, 3 MAY 1860

Extract in American Book Prices Current, Vol. 79 (1973); MS 1 p.; dated 3 May 60; addressed Charles Collins.

I think it would be a good subject, and I shall be glad if you will do it.[†3]

To J. F. O'DONNELL,[†4] [3 MAY 1860]

Mention in next. Date: as last.

To A. W. HARNETT,[†1] 3 MAY 1860

Text from N, III, 159.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Third May 1860

Dear Sir,

I am happy to have been able to accept Mr O'Donnell's little poem on May,[†2] and to have read it with admiration.

By this post I have addressed a line to Mr O'Donnell. Allow me also to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, and to assure you of its having been interesting and welcome to me.

Dear Sir | Faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To MESSRS L. HACHETTE ET CIE, 4 MAY 1860

Extracts in N, III, 161([aa]) and Libraire de l'Echiquier catalogue, Spring 1980, also giving facsimile of signature and addressee([bb]) MS 1 p.; dated Tavistock House, 4 Mai 60; addressed Messrs L. Hachette et Cie.

[a]J'ai recu votre lettre avec beaucoup de plaisir. [b]Je suis charmé que vous avez entrepris la traduction de The Tale of Two Cities[†3] et que cette ouvrage est connue en France. Voila un de mes espoirs les plus ardents, en l'ecrivant.[a] Suivant vos instructions j'ai disposé sur vous (par le moyen de mes banquiers) à deux jours de vue pour deux mille francs....

CHARLES DICKENS[b]
à Messrs. L. Hachette & Cie.

To CHARLES DRESSER, 5 MAY 1860

MS Mr Michael Silverman.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Saturday Fifth May 1860.

My Dear Sir

I hold myself engaged to you for Thursday. Probably Wills will come with me. We purpose leaving Euston Square station at 9..30, reaching Coventry at 12..10. Unfortunately I must return at night. There is a train leaves Coventry at 8, which will do very well. I should have been happy to have remained all night, if it were possible; but I am too much engaged at this time.

My Dear Sir | Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Dresser Esquire

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 5 MAY 1860*

MS Huntington Library.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.

Saturday Night Fifth May 1860.

My Dear Ouvry

I am very glad to receive your letter, and to know that the matter is at an end.[†1]

Wills's share in the receipts from the Fund in Court,[†2] is purely nominal. Bradbury and Evans's share paid to them, the balance belongs to me. I want it transferred to the New 3 Pr. Cents in my name, and perhaps you will at once do what is necessary with Coutts's to that end. Wills is at the office any day, if you want his signature, as I suppose you will.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Frederic Ouvry Esquire

To HENRY VIZETELLY,[†3] [?1859 — EARLY MAY 1860]

Mention in Henry Vizetelly, Glances back through Seventy Years (1893), II, 58. Date: probably well after 1855, when he did mix himself in political questions (Administrative Reform); but before May 60, when Bill passed in Commons.

Declining taking the chair at a meeting in Exeter Hall of the Association for obtaining the Repeal of the Paper Duty, although strongly in the Association's favour, since he had long since determined not to mix himself up personally in any of the political questions of the day.[†4]

To CHARLES DRESSER, 8 MAY 1860

Text from N, III, 161.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Eighth May 1860

My Dear Sir,

We will stick to the 9 ½ train from London, as we shall be ready to begin,[†5] the moment we arrive. All the other arrangements you propose so kindly are excellent. I would not return at 8, you may be sure, but for being really obliged to do so.

Wills sends kind regard.

Always faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To SIR EDWIN LANDSEER,[†1] 8 MAY 1860*

MS Mr Richard Constable.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,

TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Tuesday Eighth May 1860.

My Dear Landseer.

I fear there is small chance of this letter's finding you disengaged at so short a date as next Monday. But if it should by any fortunate hap, we should be delighted if you would dine with us that day at ¼ to 7.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CD.

To SIR JAMES EMERSON TENNENT, 8 MAY 1860

Extract in Chicago Book & Art Auction, Dec 1934; MS 1 p.; dated Tavistock Square, London W.C. 8 May 60; addressed Tennant (catalogue error for Tennent).

I am indeed most cordially obliged to you for your kind offices in behalf of my son.[†2]

To THOMAS ADOLPHUS TROLLOPE, 8 MAY 1860*

MS Berg Collection. Address (envelope MS Dickens House): T. Adolphus Trollope Esquire | Messrs Chapman and Hall | 193 Piccadilly | W. PM London 8 May 60.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Tuesday Eighth May, 1860.

My Dear Trollope.

Unfortunately I am obliged to go to Coventry as you come back, so that we are like the man and woman in the old-fashioned weather glass.[†3] We have friends to dinner, on two days near at hand, one or other of which I hope will suit you.

Can you give us the pleasure of your company, on Saturday at a quarter to 7; or on Monday at a quarter to 7?

Always Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

T. Adolphus Trollope Esquire

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 12 MAY 1860

Extract and Summary in Sotheby catalogue, Mar 1979; MS 2 pp.; dated Tavistock House, 12 May 60; addressed Frederic Ouvry.

Giving his impression of the Household Words transaction with W.H. Wills by which publication was ceased and All the Year Round instituted in its place;[†1] explaining that when he terminated his partnership with Bradbury and Evans, with whom he could not have anything more to do, he took Wills into his confidence because he intended, in a new periodical, to replace him in his old position, one greatly improved by the new periodical being freed from the incubus of Bradbury and Evans's charges, and Bradbury and Evans's conduct of the business, absolutely without control; he further states that he gave to the destroyed publication an adventitious value, I ran up its price for the sake of the new one ... the destroyed one was absolutely worthless but for me ... and that the purchase of it was his act solely and was of immense advantage to the new publication, of which he gave Wills a fourth share; he therefore assures Ouvry ... I should most assuredly not have parted with that fourth share, if I had for a moment supposed myself to be committing such an absurdity as giving an exaggerated and fictitious value to the destroyed publication, and recognizing Wills's interest in such value, and an obligation in myself to pay him accordingly. The strict law of the thing between Wills and me never entered my head. I considered it throughout as a matter of plain equity and reason.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To ARTHUR SMITH, 13 MAY 1860*

MS Morgan Library.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON, W.C.
Sunday Thirteenth May 1860.

My Dear Arthur

Although I dare say I shall see you on Tuesday at the office, I send this line, to propose to you to call on Bulwer with me on Wednesday Morning. He lives in Park Lane,[†1] and I propose that we meet at the Piccadilly corner of Park Lane at half past eleven.

The reason is this:— he has been here, beseeching me to read for the benefit of a man for whom he is particularly anxious to raise a certain sum of money, and in whose behalf he has put down a Hundred Pounds. The man must be anonymous, but any use might be made of Bulwer's name. Now, I don't want to read — certainly would not do so, if we couldn't make it out likely that we shall get what he wants — but, being bound to him through our old joint endeavours for literary men, would not in that case refuse. I have strong doubts whether the thing is to be done by a one night's reading[†2] — and I could not make it more. This is the thing to discuss.

Ever Faithfully
CD.

To MR GWYN,[†3] 16 MAY 1860

Extract in J.A. Stargardt Katalog No. 642 (Nov/Dec 1988); MS 1 p.; dated 16 May 60; addressed Mr Gwyn.

I beg to assure you that I have no knowledge whatever of the movements or address of [ ].[†4] I have, however, referred your favor to another brother (Mr. Alfred Dickens of the Local Government Act Office), who may be better informed on the subject.[†5]

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 16 MAY 1860

Extract and Summary in Sotheby catalogue, Mar 1979; MS 2 pp.; dated Tavistock House, 16 May 60; addressed Frederic Ouvry.

Complaining of the conduct of W. H. Wills, sub-editor of Household Words; he thanks Ouvry for his letter, assuring him that he cannot better express his sense of it and of the confidence that he reposes in him than by abiding by his opinion, but adds that the spirit of this transaction leaves an impression on my mind, as to Wills, which is new and disagreeable, although he does not expect Ouvry to regard the matter from his point of view, as he can hardly have the means to do so; he points out, however, that the additional share of a sixteenth in Household Words, which Ouvry supposed to be Wills's by absolute right, was in fact given to him while he was Sub Editor of it and should continue so, in a perfectly voluntary and unnecessary way, by me and that the sixteenth was the half of an eighth share which he had given to Wills and which the latter had relinquished when its retention uncoupled with the means of being useful to the publication, became a cause of uneasiness to him.[†6] Here again Forster (to whom I have not communicated one word concerning this matter) knows the truth ... — in sum he complains that it is absolutely impossible but that Wills must know he has no moral right to that share in the property, and that in relinquishing it, he is relinquishing nothing at all.

To WILLIAM WALTON,[†1] 16 MAY 1860*

MS Mr Ronald Walton.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Wednesday Sixteenth May, 1860.

Dear Sir

In reply to your letter, I beg to assure you that I shall be very happy to receive any communication with which the workmen as whose representative you write, may favor me.[†2] You and they may rely on its having my careful and impartial attention.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. William Walton.

To SIR JAMES EMERSON TENNENT, 17 MAY 1860*

MS Sir John and Lady Langham.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Thursday Seventeenth May, 1860

My Dear Tennent.

I have put my name in the book.[†3] Believe me that to know it has a place in the unwritten roll of your friends, has long been a pride and delight to my heart. It is not easy to write or speak of such a strong regard as I have for you, or of the many pleasant memories with which it is associated.

Always very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Sir James Emerson Tennent.

To JAMES T. FIELDS, [?18 MAY 1860]*

MS Mrs Renée Metivier Black. Date: clearly 1860, when the Fields's were in England and CD moved to Gad's Hill for the summer on 4 June (Monday); no doubt between 6 May, when Mrs Fields expected to go to Gad's Hill (To Fields, 20 May, fn), and 20 May, when CD accepted that they would not be coming; probably nearer to 20 May.

We go to Gad's Hill, say on Monday the 4th. of June. Appoint your own time afterwards.

To CHARLES LEVER, 18 MAY 1860

MS Widener Collection, Harvard.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Friday Eighteenth May, 1860.

My Dear Lever. Will you write me one line, and say that you are all right?[†1] We shall not want to begin to publish you before the beginning of July, but we will commence getting you into type as soon as you like.

Believe me ever | Faithfully & affy. Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Lever Esquire
Answer at once.

To JAMES T. FIELDS, 20 MAY 1860

MS Houghton Library, Harvard.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.

Sunday Twentieth May, 1860.

My Dear Fields.

Tremble at the contemplation of your unjust suspicions! — Here is the little Manuscript;[†2] not forgotten, as you believed, but sent off to the binder on the very next morning.[†3]

I see that Gad's Hill is not to be got over, this time.[†1] By the sea in Devonshire you will see prettier places, but not inland; we do not easily allow Kent, the garden of England, to be beaten on English ground.

My girls unite in kindest regard to Mrs. Fields and yourself. And I am always Yours (and hers)

Affectionately

CD.

To WILLIAM WALTON, 21 MAY 1860*

MS Mr Ronald Walton.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE, | TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON, W.C.
Monday Twenty First May, 1860.

Dear Sir

Allow me to thank you for your moderate, clear, and interesting letter, as well as for the personal feeling you express towards myself. I value the good will of such a correspondent very highly, and I think I may honestly assure you that no man in England has a stronger feeling of regard for the class in whose name you write to me,[†2] than I have.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. William Walton.

To THOMAS HYDE HILLS,[†3] 22 MAY 1860

Mention in N, III, 162.

To MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL, [23 MAY 1860]

Extract in Maggs Bros catalogue No. 1001 (Winter 1979); MS 1 p.; dated Tavistock House, 23 May 60; addressed Chapman & Hall.

Asking them to be so good as to send a complete set of the Library Edition of my books, to Henry F. Chorley Esquire 13 Eaton Place S.W. and another to Joshua[†1] Bates Esquire 21 Arlington Street Piccadilly S.W.

To ALFRED DICKENS, 30 MAY 1860*

MS Kyoto University of Foreign Studies.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON, W.C.
Wednesday Thirtieth May, 1860.

My Dear Alfred.

I had no idea you were at home on Sunday, or of course I should have stayed for you. On Friday morning at 10 ¼ I am going to Gad's Hill with Georgina, to hang the pictures. In case that train should be too early for you, you will find us at the house if you come down by the next. I shall be very glad to settle the Wall[†2] and get rid of the bricklayer.

Ever affecy.
CD.

To MRS JAMES T. FIELDS, 30 MAY 1860

Extract in Anderson Auction Co. catalogue No. 706 (Nov 1908); MS 2 pp.; dated Tavistock Square, 30 May 60; addressed Mrs J.T. Fields.

I am afraid it is a hopeless matter. The continuance of some part of such a pension has been tried, and the attempt has failed.[†3] It is a thing against which the Minister of the hour almost always sets his face ... Your letter shall not lie idle in my mind, however, though I fear that this daughter's reliance must be on the members of the family.

June

To MRS HENNING,[†4] 1 JUNE 1860

Extract in Anderson Galleries catalogue, No. 1470; MS 1 p.; dated Office of AYR, 1 June 60; addressed Mrs Henning.

I regret to assure you that my ability to be useful to the incredible number of my unknown correspondents, halts very very far short of my inclination.

Promising to read your husband's compositions ... attentively and honestly.

To WILKIE COLLINS, 2 JUNE 1860*

MS Morgan Library.

TAVISTOCK HOUSE,
TAVISTOCK SQUARE, LONDON. W.C.
Saturday Second June 1860.

My Dear Wilkie

I think you said you had found a rough copy of the Frozen Deep. Nevertheless, in sending you home Antonina,[†1] I think it well to send you the Prompt-book[†2] as I had it back from the Penman who made the Royal copies.[†3]

Ever affecy.
CD.

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 5 JUNE 1860

Text from MDGH, II, 116-18.

Gad's Hill, Tuesday, June 5th, 1860.

My Dear Bulwer Lytton,

I am very much interested and gratified by your letter concerning "A Tale of Two Cities." I do not quite agree with you on two points, but that is no deduction from my pleasure.

In the first place, although the surrender of the feudal privileges (on a motion seconded by a nobleman of great rank) was the occasion of a sentimental scene,[†4] I see no reason to doubt, but on the contrary, many reasons to believe, that some of these privileges had been used to the frightful oppression of the peasant, quite as near to the time of the Revolution as the doctor's narrative,[†1] which, you will remember, dates long before the Terror. And surely when the new philosophy was the talk of the salons and the slang of the hour, it is not unreasonable or unallowable to suppose a nobleman wedded to the old cruel ideas, and representing the time going out, as his nephew represents the time coming in; as to the condition of the peasant in France generally at that day, I take it that if anything be certain on earth it is certain that it was intolerable. No ex post facto enquiries and provings by figures will hold water, surely, against the tremendous testimony of men living at the time.

There is a curious book printed at Amsterdam,[†2] written to make out no case whatever,[†3] and tiresome enough in its literal dictionary-like minuteness,[†4] scattered up and down the pages of which is full authority for my marquis.[†5] This is "Mercier's Tableau de Paris." Rousseau is the authority for the peasant's shutting up his house when he had a bit of meat.[†6] The tax-taker was[†7] the authority for the wretched creature's impoverishment.

I am not clear, and I never have been clear, respecting that canon of fiction which forbids the interposition of accident in such a case as Madame Defarge's death. Where the accident is inseparable from the passion and emotion[†8] of the character, where it is strictly consistent with the whole design, and arises out of some culminating proceeding on the part of the character which the whole story has led up to, it seems to me to become, as it were, an act of divine justice. And when I use Miss Pross (though this is quite another question) to bring about that catastrophe, I have the positive intention of making that half-comic intervention a part of the desperate woman's failure, and of opposing that mean death — instead of a desperate one in the streets, which she wouldn't have minded — to the dignity of Carton's wrong or right; this was the design, and seemed to be in the fitness of things.

Now, as to the reading.[†1] I am sorry to say that it is out of the question this season. I have had an attack of rheumatism — quite a stranger to me — which remains hovering about my left side, after having doubled me up in the back, and which would disable me from standing for two hours. I have given up all dinners and town engagements, and come to my little Falstaff House here, sensible of the necessity of country training all through the summer. Smith would have proposed any appointment to see you on the subject, but he has been dreadfully ill with tic. Whenever I read in London, I will gladly put a night aside for your purpose, and we will plot to connect your name with it, and give it some speciality. But this could not be before Christmas time, as I should not be able to read sooner, for in the hot weather it would be useless. Let me hear from you about this when you have considered it. It would greatly diminish the expenses, remember.

Ever affectionately and faithfully
[CHARLES DICKENS][†2]

To LIEUT-COLONEL E. B. HAMLEY,[†3] 8 JUNE 1860*

MS British Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Eighth June, 1860.

My Dear Colonel Hamley

I am exceedingly sorry that I cannot have the pleasure of dining with you on the 15th. But I have not been very well, and have struck my dining colors for the season, and have come into country training rather earlier than usual. If you should ever be near this Falstaff Hill, I hope you will come and see me. In any case it shall not be my fault, if I miss you in London all through next winter.

Believe me | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Lieut. Col. Hamley

To THOMAS BEARD, 12 JUNE 1860

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Place | Maida Hill | W.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Twelfth June 1860.

My Dear Beard.

The girls feel that Katie's marriage cannot possibly come off, without the presence of the ancient friend of the venerable parient. This is, therefore, to require you to be at this house on the morning of Tuesday the Seventeenth day of July in this present year of Our Lord, to grace the Nuptials then to be solemnized in the parochial church of Higham (N.B. No connexion, I hope, with a similar ceremony performed in a metropolitan edifice some four and twenty years ago.)[†1]

You shall know all about the hour of coming down, as the day approaches. It will be a very quiet affair indeed. If it will be convenient to you to begin your annual stay in these parts, that day; it will be perfectly so to us. But we mean to cure you this year, of your habit of walking off too soon.

Lord, how the time and Life steal on! It was but yesterday that Katie always had a scratched knee — and it was but the day before yesterday when there was no such creature.

Ever My Dear Beard | Heartily Yours

CD.

To CHARLES LEVER, 12 JUNE 1860

MS Widener Collection, Harvard.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Twelfth June 1860.

My Dear Lever.

I have safely received the MS on coming to town from Gad's Hill, and I send you enclosed the Printer's estimate of the quantity it will make when in type. We ought to have not less than eight (8) columns in each weekly No. When I say "ought", I mean it is our custom, and, consequently, the public's expectation. And it is certainly better for the story.

Wills, my sub-editor, will direct Proof to be sent to you straight from the printer's. What you mention of Frederick Chapman's knowledge is not of the least importance, I think.

And here I will cease from reference to matters of business between you and me, to glance at those between you and Chapman's. I am heartily sorry to learn that you are so uneasy on that subject.[†2] Now, if you think on reflection that any thing can be smoothed, arranged, and made from crooked, straight, by me, pray use me.[†1] Give me authority to negociate with them, and shew me how the case stands and how you wish it to stand, and I will do my utmost to bring about a settlement that may relieve your mind. I do not think many men could negociate with them at the same advantage as I can, because of old association, its recent renewal, and their indisputable desire to stand well with me. I am sure nobody could negociate with a heartier interest, or more earnest desire to serve you. So you have but to say the word, and to tell them that you have referred to me, and my best and steadiest aid (such as it is) is in your hand.

If you could come too, it would not be rash to engage that the whole question should be settled within a week. But wherever you are, here I am, remember.

My Dear Lever | Ever affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To F. D. FINLAY, 13 JUNE 1860

MS Comtesse de Suzannet.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Thirteenth June 1860.

My Dear Mr. Finlay

It is very kind of you to remember my Indian interest,[†2] and we are all very truly obliged to you, and beg you to accept our best thanks. We will trouble your brother[†3] with a small packet of photographs, and I shall feel much indebted to him for his kindness in taking charge of it.

If you should ever find yourself during the summer with leisure to come on here, I think you know that you will be cordially welcome.[†4]

Believe me always | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Francis D Finlay Esquire.

To A. J. HIPKINS,[†5] 14 JUNE 1860*

MS (in Wills's hand except for ending and signature) British Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
14th June 1860

Sir,

I beg to express my regret that I cannot accept the enclosed for insertion in these pages. The circumstances under which the verses are written are very interesting and sad;[†1] but contributions can only be inserted here on their merits and without reference to any adventitious considerations.

With many thanks for your letter, I beg to remain,

Faithfully yours
CHARLES DICKENS

James Hipkins Esquire

To CHRISTOPHER POPE,[†2] 15 JUNE 1860

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Fifteenth June 1860.

Dear Sir

I receive your letter immediately before leaving town until Tuesday (when I shall be here from 11 to 2), and when I have not leisure to compare your Manuscript with the published article.[†3]

If there be any errors of the press in the latter, I am exceedingly sorry for it. Every precaution is taken to render such mistakes unusual here. But I trust you will excuse my saying (since your letter obliges me), that I read your Manuscript myself, and that it was too loosely written to be printed as it stood.

Of the two short papers by you that are now here, you shall have proofs by all means. But I beg to say that I must claim an Editorial right over them still, and must ask your leave to reserve to myself a power of exercising it, if, according to the best of my conscientious judgement, I should see occasion.

Should this claim be one to which you object, the Manuscripts of the two papers shall be returned to you, and I trust the matter can be so ended without offence on either side.

When I had written thus far, I got the proofs of the two papers from Mr. Wills. You will find them enclosed.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Christopher Pope Esquire.

To JOHN THOMPSON, 16 JUNE 1860†

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Sixteenth June 1860.

Dr. John.

Among the Articles of furniture of which I gave you a List, is the washing stand in my room with marble top. As this same washing stand will not be wanted here until after Miss Katie's marriage, you need not trouble yourself about that at all at present. The other things you will have no difficulty in bringing and sending as we arranged. But there will also be at Tavistock House, a parcel from Ripon and Burton's.[†1] I want you to bring that parcel also.

Yours truly

CD.

To LORD JOHN RUSSELL, 17 JUNE 1860

Text from MDGH, II, 118.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday, June 17th, 1860.

My Dear Lord John Russell,

I cannot thank you enough for your kind note and its most welcome enclosure. My sailor-boy comes home from Portsmouth to-morrow, and will be overjoyed. His masters have been as anxious for getting his nomination[†2] as though it were some distinction for themselves.

Ever your faithful and obliged

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To SYDNEY DICKENS, [18 JUNE 1860]

Mention in next. Date: written that morning.

Telling Sydney that he hoped he would soon be given a holiday from his naval school.

To THE REV. ASHTON BURROW, 18 JUNE 1860*

MS Walter T. Spencer.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Eighteenth June, 1860.

My Dear Sir

I had posted a note to Sydney this morning before receiving your favor, for which I beg to thank you cordially. As he may have a holiday, I think he cannot come home too soon. Will you have the kindness to define the term of his stay with us?[†3] He will perfectly understand the reason, no doubt, and will be quite contented with the period you may appoint.

In the hope and belief that he will never do you discredit, and with kind regard to your colleagues, I am always My Dear Sir

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Rev: Ashton Burrow

To THE REV. JOSEPH HINDLE, 19 JUNE 1860

MS Francis Edwards Ltd. Address: The Rev. Joseph Hindle.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Morning Nineteenth June 1860.

My Dear Sir

I hope it will be convenient and agreeable to you to perform the marriage service for my second daughter, on Tuesday the 17th of July. Also that you will favor us with your company to breakfast afterwards.

Believe me always | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Reverend Joseph Hindle.

To DAVID ROBERTS, 19 JUNE 1860*

MS Private.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Nineteenth June 1860.

My Dear David Roberts

I should have been delighted to dine with you on Saturday, but unfortunately a friend from Switzerland[†1] comes here tomorrow for a week, and some one else is coming down on that very day.[†2] So that if my "merry Swiss boy"[†3] had not been strong enough to keep me away (which he would have been) I should still have been impounded by No. 2.

It is very pleasant indeed to me to be remembered by you, and to get your friendly note. Give my love to White, and tell him how it comes to pass that I cannot be with you, and believe me ever

Heartily Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

David Roberts Esquire

To DR W. C. HOOD,[†1] 21 JUNE 1860

MS Newnham College, Cambridge.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Twenty First June 1860.

My Dear Dr. Hood.

Unless your leisure really serves for your coming to see us, I really feel (as my mother is so soon coming to London) that I ought not to bring you down here on Saturday. But if you could remain that night and take a breath of country air here, I should feel less remorse. Will you write me one line by tomorrow (Friday) night's post? In the event of your coming, we would meet at the London Bridge Terminus of the North Kent Railway at 4 — or about — for the train at a quarter past. In the event of your not coming, I will come to you in London when my mother returns.

On the whole, she is rather worse than I had supposed her to be.[†2] She utterly rides over Ellen,[†3] and could certainly not be kept in her Lodging here twelve hours, without my sister in law.[†4]

I cannot tell you how deeply I feel your kind words, and how much they gratify me.

Ever Faithfully Your friend
CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS LEHMANN,[†5] 21 JUNE 1860

MS University of Texas, Austin.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Twenty First June 1860.

My Dear Mrs. Lehmann

As to Tuesday evening the 26th. your slave is a mere helpless Beast. I shall have Mr. Townshend here, and shall abstain from Wellington Street in consequence, and shall (I fear) indubitably "put on a bored aspect" long before then, and keep it on for a week. I should have been delighted to come to you, otherwise, but Destiny is too heavy for me. I beg to send my regard to Lehmann, and my love to my Nephew,[†1] and the most inflammable article to yourself that it is lawful to transmit by post.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Lehmann.

To CHARLES LEVER, 21 JUNE 1860

MS Widener Collection, Harvard.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Twenty First June, 1860.

My Dear Lever.

Having got your proofs from the Printer's, I have read them. And I hasten to say that I firmly believe you had no warrant whatsoever for depreciating what you were doing, and that it is full of life, vivacity, originality, and humour.[†2] The only suggestion I have to make (and that arises solely out of the manner of publication) is, that we ought to get at the action of the story, in the first No. and that I therefore would, by a little condensation there, and a little enlargement of the quantity given in the first week, get at the invitation to the dinner, as the end to the first weekly part.[†3] I think the rising of invention in the drunken young man,[†4] extraordinarily humourous; it made me laugh to an extent and with a heartiness that I should like you to have seen and heard. Go on and prosper! You have opened an excellent vein, as it seems to me, and have a rich working before you.[†5]

Two points of business now.

1. How, When, and Where, shall payments be made to your account?[†1]

2. With an eye to Wills's "posters of the sea and land", a shortening of the title — thus — would be better.

A Day's Ride;
A Life's Romance.
Is there any objection?[†2]

As I dare say I shall hear from you soon, touching my last letter, and as it is not improbable that even now I may cross some letter from you, I will not go into Piccadilly[†3] questions[†4] at present. Perhaps you may even be on your way over — who knows! — with some mysterious Dispatches, and we may find ourselves drinking cool cups under the Oak Tree outside this window, before we well know what we are about. Heaven send so! And meanwhile and always, my love to you.

Ever My Dear Lever | Your affectionate friend
CHARLES DICKENS

To THE REV. ASHTON BURROW, 25 JUNE 1860*

MS Walter T. Spencer.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Twenty Fifth June 1860.

My Dear Sir

I observe in the bill of Selby the Tailor[†5] which you have had the goodness to enclose to me, an item "To amount of account rendered, £8..19..3". I have no doubt received such an account, but I cannot find it anywhere, nor have I any recollection of it.[†6] Will you, at your convenience, be so kind as to ask Mr. Selby to send me the particulars.

My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

The Rev: Ashton Burrow.

To GEORGE MOORE, 29 JUNE 1860

MS W. A. Foyle.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Twenty Ninth June 1860.

My Dear Mr. Moore

I have been away, and received your kind note and its enclosure only yesterday. You may be sure that I should not have neglected your invitation, if I had known of it.

My son Charles has gone to Hong Kong to buy Tea. He has been gone a month.

Believe me always | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

George Moore Esquire

To THE REV. ASHTON BURROW, 30 JUNE 1860*

MS Dr Gordon N. Ray.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Night, Thirtieth June 1860.

My Dear Sir

Sydney's second sister is going to be married on Tuesday the 17th. of July. Will you allow me to ask whether you think he would really lose any valuable time, if I kept him until the next day? Pray understand that your reply in the affirmative would be conclusive with me, and could in no wise disappoint him. I have not hinted to him any idea of his over-staying the three weeks originally appointed, and he is perfectly contented. His sister's solicitation induces me to write you this note, in departure from my invariable rule; for myself, I think it would be better to make no change in his holidays.[†1]

Believe me always | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Rev: | Ashton Burrow.

July

To W. H. RUSSELL,[†2] 3 JULY 1860*

Text from transcript made by Edgar Johnson of MS in possession of Maurice Inman, Inc.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday, July 3, 1860

My Dear Russell,

It seems so clear that we are not to meet in a friendly way, that I feel I owe an apology to the Fates for making the present feeble effort to act contrariwise to the Sisterhood. But I met a bronze image in St. James's Square today, calling himself Hawkins,[†3] and I invited the said image (after a gay Giovanni manner) to come down to Gad's Hill and dine with me next Sunday. Image assented. If you can come I will advise you of fitting Train, and will send you back by other fitting train leaving my village at ½ past 9 at night. No company. A good smoking country. And a hearty welcome.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

Answer here, tomorrow. I shall be in town all the day.

To CHARLES LEVER, [?10 JULY 1860]

Mention in Lever to CD, 15 July. Date: Lever had received CD's note on 15 July; it probably took five days to reach him, as had his previous letter to Spezia.

To THOMAS BEARD [12] JULY 1860

MS Dickens House. Date: CD's mistake; Thursday was 12 July 60. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | Portman Place | Maida Hill | London W.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Thursday Eleventh July, 1860.

My Dear Beard.

In the booking office of the North Kent Terminus at London Bridge, On Tuesday morning at from five and twenty minutes to twenty minutes before Ten, you will find Wills who will take you in charge and bring you up to the Matrimonial Scratch[†1] in time to see the Sayers[†2] of the occasion throw up his castor.[†3]

Ever affectionately

CD.

To MRS GORE, 12 JULY 1860*

MS Berg Collection.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Twelfth July, 1860.

My Dear Mrs. Gore.

The years have so slipped away since I was in America, and people so change and move there, that I really cannot bethink myself (Prescott[†4] and Irving[†5] being dead) of a single friend to whom I could have the pleasure of presenting your son.[†1] If I were to go to the States myself, no doubt I should renew hundreds of intimacies directly; but looking at them from this side of the Atlantic, I see nothing distinctly. I thought of two excellent people but now, and presently remembered that they are in Italy or Greece.[†2] Then I recalled Jeffrey's[†3] wife's family in New York.[†4] But the head of the house[†5] is dead, and God knows what has become of the tail and the other members. Then I thought of a charming man in Virginia, but I remembered to have read in the papers that he got into a "difficulty" with a Colonel, and they shot each other with revolvers for an hour or two, and I think he died of a few unextractable bullets after receiving an address of congratulation numerously signed. Lastly, I remembered a Lady who has taken to Spirits and is a medium.[†6] That wouldn't do for your son. So as he is going tomorrow, I have really given it up in despair. But if I think of any thing more hopeful, another note shall follow this.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To W. H. WILLS, 12 JULY 1860

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Twelfth July, 1860.

My Dear Wills

My active and intelligent mind has reverted twice or thrice to the close of that Spirit-article[†7] of Mrs. Linton's, and is not quite easy about it. If you will look back to the last paragraph of the paper, you will find it said that after deduction for imposition, lies, and so forth, there remains a "large residuum" of something to be accounted for. I think this wants qualifying. At all events I would take out "large", and let her know it.[†8]

In haste

Ever Faithfully
CD.

To THE REV. JOSEPH HINDLE, 13 JULY 1860

MS Francis Edwards Ltd.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Thirteenth July 1860.

My Dear Sir

I hope it will suit your convenience if we arrange to be at the church, at 20 minutes past 11 on Tuesday forenoon. The Railway people have arranged to bring down three or four of our intimate friends,[†1] so that they shall arrive at Higham at five minutes past 11. I will have a carriage, waiting for them there, and they shall be brought straight to the church.

My Dear Sir | Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Rev. Joseph Hindle.

To MRS ALFRED DICKENS, 16 JULY 1860

Text in N, III, 167, checked from MS Christie's, Dec 1970.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Sixteenth July, 1860.

My Dear Helen.

I am exceedingly concerned to receive your note this morning, though I confidently hope that the evil is less than you naturally suppose it to be. An impaired state of health — especially after pleurisy — so often leads to inflammation in the region of the lungs, that, however alarming it sounds, I trust you will soon find it yielding. Moreover, it is an immense advantage to have Alfred already under treatment and in the Doctor's hands, when the disorder manifests itself. I doubt if he could be better treated anywhere in England than in Manchester. A better or kinder nurse I know he could not have anywhere in the world; so with many things in his favor I feel that I can most honestly cheer you up.

Tomorrow is Katie's wedding day, and it is with difficulty that I find room in the house to write these lines. I shall anxiously expect the post in the morning, and shall hope to receive a word from you. All send kindest love, and are full of sympathy for you in your anxiety of mind away from home. Believe me ever

Your affectionate
CD.

To DR W. C. HOOD, [17 JULY 1860]

Mention in David H. Pratt List 174, (1965). Address: Dr. Hood | Bethlehem Hospital | London S. PM Rochester 17 July 60.

To MRS ALFRED DICKENS, 19 JULY 1860

MS Yale University Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Nineteenth July, 1860.

My Dear Helen.

Your last letter has been a great relief. I heartily trust that the change for the better will hold its ground and will advance, however slowly. You are so patient and solid that you need no exhortation to remember that to be no worse, in such a case as poor Alfred's, is really to be better. I have the strongest hope that he will recover very steadily; and please God this illness will do him good rather than harm, in the long run.

You will like to have a word of Katie. Her marriage went off with the greatest success from first to last, and had no drawback whatever.[†1] We had tried to keep it quiet here, but the church was filled with people, and the energetic blacksmith of the village had erected a triumphal arch in the lane, and fired guns all night beforehand[†2] — to our great amazement: we not having the slightest idea what they meant. However, these were not annoyances to be grave about, so we laughed at them. We had so arranged for Katie's departure (for Dover) as that she should not have an hour of breakfast, so it was rapid, and no speechifying occurred, and they were gone in no time.[†3] Mary and all the boys were very much cut up when the parting moment came, but they soon recovered; Mary in particular commanded herself extremely well. Georgy and I acted as universal bottle holders.[†1]

I am anxiously looking for another letter from you by the day-post. You shall have another line from me to assure you that none of your notes fail. Kindest love from all.

Ever My Dear Helen | Affectionately Yours

CD.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 20 JULY 1860

Mention in John Heise catalogue No. 13; MS 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill Place, 20 July 60.

To MRS ALFRED DICKENS, 21 JULY 1860*

MS Mrs C.J. Michel.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.

Saturday Twenty First July, 1860.

My Dear Helen.

This is but a line, to say that I hope and trust your greatest stress of anxiety is over. I have received Frederick's[†2] letters, and please God Alfred will get on.

All here send kindest love.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To SIR ALEXANDER DUFF GORDON, 22 JULY 1860*

MS Benoliel Collection.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Twenty Second July, 1860.

My Dear Gordon

Many thanks for your kind note. The school is too preparatory, I find, for my purpose — in as much as one of the boys I want to find a suitable Dominie for, is well used to a large school and large boys.

I have it in charge from Mary to explain that her married sister's cards were directed to Lady Gordon,[†3] at "Weybridge" instead of "Esher";[†4] and that, in case they should not have come to hand, this is doubtless the reason.

Believe me always | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Sir Alexander Duff Gordon

To CHARLES LEVER, 25 JULY 1860

MS Widener Collection, Harvard.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Twenty Fifth July 1860.

My Dear Lever.

You will see by Wills's letter dated on the 16th. — which letter crossed yours of the 15th. — that it is, most unfortunately, too late to make that change in the time of beginning, which you desire.[†1] I am exceedingly sorry for it, as it could easily have been done with a little more notice. But it is not possible as the case stands. If it were, be sure it should have been.

In the first portion, ending with the departure of the inviters to the dinner,[†2] I have made a few short cuts. They are but a sentence here and a sentence there, where I feel the getting at the action to be delayed. Except, that where the hero is imagining his arrival at the Inn,[†3] I have taken out several sentences together which seem anticipated by the general purpose of the opening. I have also struck out the little reference to poor James, who has taken the gravity of death upon him since you wrote it.[†4] Don't be alarmed by my mentioning these changes, for you will find them very slight.

As to the quantity for each week, you are perfectly right. About 8 columns is as near the thing as possible — in a word, is just the thing.[†5]

It has been so wet here in England and so cold, that I never saw the like within my eight and forty years' experience of this breathing world.

I shall not wish you many happy returns of the 31st. of August yet, as please God I shall write to you again before the day comes.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To JAMES LOWE,[†1] 25 JULY 1860*

Text from transcript by Mr Lauriat, owner of MS.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday 25th. July 1860

Dear Sir

I shall be here today until 2 o'clock, and again at a quarter before 11 tomorrow morning.

Faithfully yours
CHARLES DICKENS

James Lowe Esquire

To WILKIE COLLINS, 29 JULY 1860

MS Morgan Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Twenty Ninth July, 1860.

My Dear Wilkie.

Let me send you my heartiest congratulations on your having come to the end of your (as yet) last labor, and having triumphantly finished your best book.[†2] I presume that the undersigned obedient disciple may read it now?

Let us dine at the Office on Tuesday at 5.[†3] I am free until half past 7.

I am something worn to day by a sad expedition to Manchester and back. Perhaps Wills has told you that poor Alfred is dead.[†4]

Ever affectionately

CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [29 JULY 1860]

Extract in F, VIII, vi, 686. Date: 29 July 60, according to Forster.

I was telegraphed for to Manchester on Friday night. Arrived there at a quarter past ten, but he had been dead three hours, poor fellow! He is to be buried at Highgate on Wednesday.[†1] I brought the poor young widow back with me yesterday.

To ANDREW MCEWEN,[†2] 31 JULY 1860*

MS University of Texas, Austin.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Thirty First July 1860.

Dear Sir

I regret that I cannot have the pleasure of accepting the enclosed verses.[†3] With many thanks for your favor dated the 26th. and for the offer of the lines, I remain

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Andrew McEwen Esquire

To H. W. NICHOLAS,[†4] 31 JULY 1860*

MS Shakespeare Birthplace Trust.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Thirty First July, 1860.

Sir.

I have so great an objection to "patronizing" anything, and think we are so over-fond of patronage in England, that I must beg to be excused from complying with the request you do me the honor to prefer. But I am a Trustee of the proposed Fund for the late Mr. Brough's[†5] Family,[†6] and you are at perfect liberty to state that fact in your announcements if you should at all desire to do so.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

H. W. Nicholas Esquire

To R. D. OWEN,[†1] 31 JULY 1860

MS Pennsylvanie Historical Society.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Thirty First July, 1860

Dear Sir

I have been much interested by your letter, and beg to assure you that your book,[†2] shall have my immediate and earnest attention. I thank you for it cordially, and am naturally prepossessed in its favor by your moderate and unaffected words.

The article to which you refer, is not of my writing.[†3] I need not add that I approve of it, however, as that may be inferred from its channel of publication. I fully agree with you in holding that the history of imposture and credulity is singularly remarkable for the perpetual recurrence of one little list of absurdities. — The Cock Lane Ghost has travelled a long way from Smithfield in these latter days, for example.[†4]

Again thanking you for your communication and your book, I am Dear Sir

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Robert Dale Owen Esquire

August

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 1 AUGUST 1860

Mention in N, III, 169.

To SIR ALEXANDER DUFF GORDON, 2 AUGUST 1860*

MS University of Kentucky.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Second August 1860.

My Dear Gordon.

I have remembered that when I wrote to you last, I inscrutably omitted to say that I accepted your kind offer of getting me the particulars of a school at Reading.[†1] If it be not too late, or putting you too far out of the way, will you kindly let me repair the mistake.

Ever Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

Sir Alexander Duff Gordon

To THE EARL OF CARLISLE,[†2] 3 AUGUST 1860*

MS Lord Howard of Henderskelfe.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday, Third August, 1860.

My Dear Lord Carlisle.

I have but just now come home here from laying my poor brother Alfred in the Cemetery at Highgate. He had been taken ill at Manchester some three weeks before his death, but had never thought himself in danger after the first attack (of pleurisy). He had sent for his wife, and she had been with him all the time. I was telegraphed for, on the day of his death, but he had been dead three hours when I got to Manchester.

You were always kind to him,[†3] and that emboldens me to write to you. He has left nothing — worse than nothing.[†4] One of his two boys is eleven years old;[†5] the other, thirteen.[†6] If any kind of nomination or presentation should ever fall in your way — which seems just possible to me, remembering the honors that surround you, and which all men are glad to see you moving among — will you think of this letter, if you can? I will not ask you to forgive me for putting you to the trouble of reading it. Your gentle heart will have done so, before you come to these words.

Believe me | Dear Lord Carlisle
Your faithful and obliged
CHARLES DICKENS

His Excellency | The Earl of Carlisle.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 3 AUGUST 1860

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street | Piccadilly | London | W.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.

Friday Third August 1860.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

Let me send my love and thanks to you and Mrs. Brown. Your remembrance was the kind remembrance of true friends, in due season. And there is nothing better in the world.

My poor brother's death is a sad calamity, to which there are five little witnesses.[†1] But he had a good, true, striving wife, and I can trust her with all my heart. This is not the first time I have had occasion to respect her undemonstrative and patiently dutiful character. It is all that she can call her own, but it is a great deal for me to have so much to be a friend to.

God bless you. And you, dear Mrs. Brown. And both believe me, ever

Your affectionate and faithful

CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [3 AUGUST 1860]

Extract in F, VIII, vi, 686*n*. Date: written from Gad's Hill after Alfred's funeral (3 Aug), according to Forster; no doubt same day.

To-morrow I have to work against time and tide[†2] and everything else, to fill up a No. keeping open for me,[†3] and the stereotype plates of which must go to America on Friday. But indeed the enquiry into poor Alfred's affairs; the necessity of putting the widow and children somewhere; the difficulty of knowing what to do for the best; and the need I feel under of being as composed and deliberate as I can be, and yet of not shirking or putting off the occasion that there is for doing a duty; would have brought me back here to be quiet, under any circumstances.

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 3 AUGUST 1860

MS Lytton Papers.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Third August, 1860.

My Dear Bulwer Lytton.

Is there any possibility of your being induced to write a tale for All The Year Round? It has the largest Audience to be got that comprehends intelligence and cultivation — but that audience is already your own, and that is no temptation.

It would gladly pay any price for the distinction of having your assistance, and it can well afford to do so — but you can get what price you please anywhere, and that is no temptation.

If you could by any means reconcile the doing of such a thing with your inclination and convenience, it would give me strong heart and unspeakable gratification. That is the only speciality I can put before you.

What I most want, is such a tale as you could republish in three Volumes, a week or two before its completion in All The Year Round. Such a book, portioned out from week to week, would occupy in its periodical publication, 6 or 8 months.

In mere pecuniary return it could be made very profitable to you, and we could get a price for the proofs from week to week, in America, that I doubt your being quite prepared for. But the mere business matter — I repeat — is not, I know well, the first question.[†1] If you were to do it at all, you would do it for me.

Now, is that possible? Any time within a year?[†2] I know how much I ask. You will tell me at your leisure. Neither of us will misunderstand the other.

Ever Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton.

To BENJAMIN WEBSTER, 3 AUGUST 1860*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Third August, 1860.

My Dear Webster.

I am really touched by your note received this morning, because I can see that it implies a kind of past doubt of our relations towards one another, and because I feel that our having quite accidentally fallen asunder of late, gives a sort of shadow of reality to what never existed — that is to say, any coldness between us.[†1]

Believe me, I expressed my wish to Mr. Lowe as to your being my co trustee in the Brough matter,[†2] just as I should have expressed a like wish at any moment since we were last together, if a like occasion had arisen. My reason being, that you are my friend, and I have great confidence in you, and that you ought to be at the head of anything good allied to your profession, simply because you are one of the most honorable and generous men belonging to it.

Now do put on that black-velvet-Sunday-morning-Considering-Cap of yours, and consider when you can come down here and rest in fresh air — say from Saturday to Monday — or from Sunday to Monday, if Saturday can't be done. Then I will write again and tell you where and how we will meet. And then we will go on meeting, please God!

Faithfully Yours Ever
CHARLES DICKENS

Benjamin Webster Esquire.

To CAPTAIN F. C. L. WRAXALL,[†3] 4 AUGUST 1860*

Text from transcript by Charles W. Traylen, owner of the MS.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Fourth August, 1860.

Dear Sir

As I have not seen or heard of the article[†4] to which your obliging letter received here this morning, refers, there is no great magnanimity in my forgiving it. As I thoroughly agree with you in your condemnation of such things, and have an inexpressibly strong feeling on the subject, I promise you that I will carefully avoid seeing it. This, I hope, is the best way in which I can practically express my appreciation of your candour.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Captain Lascelles Wraxall.

To MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL, 7 AUGUST 1860*

MS New York Public Library.

All the Year Round Office
Tuesday Seventh August, 1860.

Messrs Chapman and Hall

Please deliver to Mr. Eeles[†1] for me, one copy of Chuzzlewit, Library Edition.
CHARLES DICKENS

To J. C. PARKINSON,[†2] 7 AUGUST 1860*

MS Major S.F.B. Codrington.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Seventh August 1860.

My Dear Sir

Can you come round and see Mr. Austin[†3] and myself here for one minute. We think it important that we should see you, though what we have to say is but a sentence.[†4]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

J. C. Parkinson Esquire

To THE EARL OF CARLISLE, 8 AUGUST 1860

MS Lord Howard of Henderskelfe.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Eighth August 1860.

My Dear Lord Carlisle.

Coming back here after an absence of three days in town, I find your kind and cordial letter lying on my table. I heartily thank you for it, and highly esteem it.

I understand that the article on the Spirits to which you refer,[†1] was written by one Mr Robert Bell[†2] (he played an Irish Porter in one scene of Bulwer's comedy at Devonshire House).[†3] Between ourselves I think it must be taken with a few grains of salt — imperial measure. The experiences referred to, "came off" at Mrs. Milner Gibson's:[†4] where the Spirit of Molesworth[†5] (among an extensive and miscellaneous bodiless circle) dines sometimes! Mr. Hume, or Home,[†6] the high priest of the mysteries, I have some considerable reason, derived from two honorable men, for mistrusting. And that some of the Disciples are very easy of belief, I know.

This is Falstaff's own Gad's Hill, and I live on the top of it. All goes well with me, thank God. I should be thoroughly delighted to see you again, and to show you where the robbery was done. My eldest daughter keeps my house, and it is one I was extraordinarily fond of when a child.

My Dear Lord Carlisle
Ever Affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The | Earl of Carlisle.
I am prowling about, meditating a new book.[†7]

To J. C. PARKINSON, 9 AUGUST 1860

MS W. A. Foyle. Address (MS envelope only, Major S. F. B. Codrington): J. C. Parkinson Esquire | Accountant General's Office | Inland Revenue Office | Somerset House | London | W.C. PM 9 Aug 60.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Ninth August, 1860.

My Dear Mr. Parkinson

Enclosed is a little list of what Mrs. Alfred most wants. You kindly said that you would see to such things being valued and reserved, or bought in.

She certainly has no kind of suspicion of any definable way in which the missing money can have gone. Poor Alfred had again and again remarked upon his having many things to pay, but she cannot hit upon any thing, saving that "there may have been £25 paid to Smee[†1] for furniture". Was there any such payment, do you suppose?

I had intended to let you know at the beginning of the last Paragraph, that she makes the sum we want to account for, Ninety Pounds — not a Hundred.

She begs me to send you her kindest regard. She is as patient, uncomplaining, self denying, and quietly practical, as it is possible for human nature so circumstanced to be.

Believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

J. C. Parkinson Esquire

To J. C. PARKINSON, [12 AUGUST 1860]

Envelope only, MS Major S.F.B. Codrington. Address: J.C. Parkinson, | Accountant General's Office | Inland Revenue | Somerset House | London | W.C. PM Rochester, 12 Aug 60.

To ALFRED WIGAN,[†2] 13 AUGUST 1860

Extract in Maggs Bros catalogue No. 492 (1927); MS 2 pp.; dated Gad's Hill Place, 13 Aug 60; addressed Alfred Wigan

I have a confidence that you will not do me the injustice of supposing that I profess my profound inability to comply with your request, through any want of interest in your art, your enterprise, or yourself. My feeling under all three heads is strong.

But I am much occupied, and have a new book in my head, and am not in the least likely ever to write for the stage. Engaged as my time and thoughts are now, I could not do such a thing, though I were myself to become a manager tomorrow, which the Heavens forbid!

To MRS ANNE CORNELIUS,[†1] 15 AUGUST 1860

Text from N, III, 171.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Fifteenth August 1860

Dear Anne,

If a gentleman of the name of Davis,[†2] wishes to see the fitted and planned furniture at Tavistock House, shew him all the Looking-glasses, all the Cornices, the Drawing-room satin window-curtains, large ottoman, and two fixed ottomans at the sides of the fire, the Dining-room curtains, all the blinds, and the painted room curtains. You can also call his attention to the great Dining Table, as extending to fit the whole room.

Faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To THOMAS MITTON, 16 AUGUST 1860

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Sixteenth August 1860.

My Dear Mitton

I am selling Tavistock House, and, as my papers are not here, want to ask you two questions about it. Have I the fire Insurance Policy,[†3] or have you? Have I the last receipt for the payment of the premium, or have you? I want both. Will you answer to this address.

You will easily understand that I have had, and still have, a great deal of anxiety arising out of poor Alfred's Death. His affairs were in a bad state, and his widow and children must be looked after and cared for. They are at present in a Farm House near here.

Unless there should be any hitch (which I don't expect) the purchaser of Tavistock House will be a Jew Money Lender.[†4] An odd change in the occupation! And I strongly suspect that a good many people about town who have been there now and then during the last nine years, will present themselves under the new administration in an entirely new capacity.

Ever Faithfully
CD.

To CHARLES DRESSER, 18 AUGUST 1860*

MS Private.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Eighteenth August, 1860

My Dear Sir

If you should happen to meet the Maker of my chronometer anywhere in your neighbourhood, will you kindly present to him a pathetic picture of my destitute condition, forlorn and solitary in the last degree without my Coventry friend and companion.[†1]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Dresser Esquire

To MRS FRANCES DICKINSON,[†2] 19 AUGUST 1860

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Sunday Nineteenth August, 1860

My Dear Mrs. Dickinson.

Pray don't suppose me unmindful of your confidence, or slow, from inclination, to respond to it. I have been involved in great anxiety and worry by the unexpected death of my poor brother Alfred. He had had no opportunity of providing for his family — died worth nothing — and has left a widow and five children — you may suppose to whom. Day after day I have been scheming and contriving for them, and I am still doing so, and I have schemed myself into broken rest and low spirits. My mother, who was also left to me when my father died (I never had anything left to me but relations), is in the strangest state of mind from senile decay: and the impossibility of getting her to understand what is the matter, combined with her desire to be got up in sables like a female Hamlet, illumines the dreary scene with a ghastly absurdity that is the chief relief I can find in it.

Well! Life is a fight and must be fought out. Not new, but true, and I don't complain of it.

Your friend Robert Bell, having become Gentleman Usher in the spiritual establishment of Mrs. Milner Gibson, has been writing a portentous account of Spirit Rapping and Table Leaping, in the Cornhill Magazine.[†3] My opinion of the whole party is, that it is a combination of addle-headed persons, Toadies, and Humbugs.

Wilkie has finished his White Woman (if he had done with his flesh-coloured one,[†4] I should mention that too), and is in great force. Charley and his bride remain — at Calais! Having left here with ideas of going to Switzerland, they have naturally remained at Calais ever since. Katie writes that they think of remaining "abroad", a long time. That general definition seems to express all they know of their intentions. She really looked wonderfully pretty on the day of her marriage, and her appearance produced an immense effect on the beholders. Not the least pleasant part of it was Mary's pride in it. I had tried to keep it very quiet, but all the neighbouring country turned out in the most bewildering manner, and the people of the village strewed flowers in the churchyard, and erected triumphal arches, and fired guns,[†1] and came to look at the breakfast, and made a regular day of it. One very funny thing was, the entrance into church of the few friends whom I had caused to be brought down straight from town by Special Train. They didn't know whether they were to look melancholy, beaming, or maudlin; and their uncertainty struck me as so uncommonly droll, that I was obliged to hide my reverend parental countenance in my hand on the altar Railing. There was no misery of any kind — not even speechifying — and the whole was a great success — So far.

I may congratulate you on the distribution of your daughters, present[†2] and prospective,[†3] over the face of the earth. Of course the Australian daughter will marry Tom Tiddler, and give you golden grandchildren.[†4]

What to say to your account of yourself,[†5] I don't know. Profoundly true, I do know, and therefore tremendously difficult to remark upon. But, calmly now, is it worse than you expected? At least is it not pretty much what you expected on the day when you were sitting here, in this room where I write? It seems to me that since then you have gradually built up a little castle that never had any foundations. Am I right in that? And are you quite sure that what you are disposed to resent as indifference, is not the stealing apathy of advanced age?[†6] Under other circumstances — say in your humble servant, for example — it would be affronting or idiotic; but not in these, I think? I am inclined to think, on this ground alone, that you are better apart. As the foregathering was of your seeking and not his may it not be that he thinks so too, and has my reason for thinking so? As to yourself I might be very moral in my admonitions and didactic remarks — but you are a woman — and I am a man — and we should both know better, even if I were. There is no doubt that your position is a trying one, and that is the honest truth. But would it not be more trying still, if you were more pursued, sought out, and hovered about?

This is not a letter; this is only an explanation why I cannot write a letter.

Even while I have been writing this, I have had black figures, little and big,[†1] coming in and wistfully questioning me about what is to be done in this wise or that. (They are at present lodged in a farm house near here).

I shall be glad to know that you have received this, and that, bad as it was, it was better than nothing.

Kindest remembrances from Mary and Georgy.

Ever My Dear Mrs. Dickinson | Faithfully Yours

CD.

To THOMAS MITTON, 19 AUGUST 1860

MS Chas. J. Sawyer Ltd.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Nineteenth August, 1860

My Dear Mitton

I send this to the office, that you may have it when you leave the Policy.[†2]

On an early Monday I will propose to you to come and dine there at five that we may talk over old and new times. I would fix the day now but that I am uncertain of my movements, not being sure but that I shall have to make an "Uncommercial" journey to divers country places next week.[†3] If the Jew Money Lender buys (I say "if" because of course I shall never believe in him until he has paid the money) I purpose living here during seven months in the year and taking a small furnished house in town during the other five. As I shall never be in town during the boys' holidays, the room I shall want there will be easily found. For a temporary Town Tent, I shall always have 5 very good rooms at the office — as you shall see when we dine.

Poor Alfred had been ill, about three weeks. He was taken ill at an Inn at Manchester and never left it. It began with pleurisy — ended generally in a break up. He had been habitually out very late at night for two or three years. I had seen him at his own house in the morning, a very few weeks before, and had come home here greatly shocked and impressed by his shattered condition before he was wound up for the day. It had been very much upon my mind, and I had been devising how I could best speak to him and warn him that it wouldn't do. I was telegraphed for on the day of his death; but he had been dead three hours when I got to Manchester.

He had always done his work very well (I had occasion, here, to see that he understood it and was practical),[†4] and was exceedingly popular, poor fellow, among all the men he had to do with.

Five children; oldest, thirteen.

Ever Faithfully
CD.

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 19 AUGUST 1860*

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Sunday Nineteenth August, 1860.

My Dear Ouvry.

As to the Fixtures; I will yield the Blinds (though I had not intended to do so), but I must positively require the cornices and curtain rods to be paid for. They are the only exception I make. The picture rods may go as Fixtures. But the cornices and curtain rods must be paid for. The list of fixtures is a very, very, liberal one.

I suppose you will deem it right to apprise Mr. Davis of what I suppose he has observed for himself — that there is a right of way to Bedford House garden and Russell House Garden, through my garden. Let me explain to you how. I think you will find in the Lease that the Leased Property is bounded on the West by a "Lane". This Lane is now the West path of my garden. It was a most hideous place (originally left as a way to stables for the three houses — which were never built), and when I re-constructed the whole property, Bedford House and Russell House suggested to me to take in the aforesaid frightful lane and abolish the same. I applied to the Duke of Bedford's solicitors, and they said by all means; it was a question for ourselves.[†1] So Mr. Cardale,[†2] the owner of Bedford House and I, drew up a memorandum (which is in his possession), that the occupiers of the two houses might use that pathway, which was the lane. It has never been used, except by the Gardener.

I do not apprehend that anything more will be wanted by the purchaser concerning this abolished lane and present pathway, which is, and has been for nine years, as private as any room in the house. But if he should require any formal definition about it, the following are the people from whom I have no doubt you can easily get it. Bedford House belongs to (and is under-leased by) Mr. Cardale a retired solicitor, who has removed into Surrey,[†3] and is represented by his son of No. 2 Bedford Row.[†4] Russell House belongs to Mr. Arthur Stone, resident there. The Duke of Bedford's people[†5] you know, in Grays Inn Square. They are all on the best terms with me, and sensible of the great improvement I made in the value of the whole property.

The Policy of Insurance, is not separate, I observe, for the house; but includes the house and Furniture. You shall have it on Tuesday. It will be necessary to divide them?

I shall be at the office on Tuesday after 11 o'Clock. Will you appoint your own time for our meeting — either at your office or mine; either will suit me equally.

Excuse the long story about the Lane, which I dare say is superfluous.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Frederic Ouvry Esquire.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 20 AUGUST 1860*

MS Dickens House.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Twentieth August, 1860.

Dear Sir

I have safely received your note and its accompanying book, and I thank you for both. The system[†1] has been already remarked upon in All The Year Round, and some curious absurdities in it have been noticed.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS ANNE CORNELIUS, 21 AUGUST 1860

MS Winifred A. Myers (Autographs) Ltd.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Twenty First August 1860.

Dear Anne.

I have arranged with Mr. Davis that I will have everything moved in a fortnight, and that you remain at Tavistock House during that time.

Understand that the House now belongs to Mr. Davis, and that he and his family have a perfect right to come and go as they think proper.

All the pictures in the Painted Room are mine, and Mr. Lillie[†2] will take them down.[†3] Everything mentioned in the enclosed list, belongs to Mr. Davis, and must not be touched.

I shall probably see you tomorrow.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 21 AUGUST 1860

MS Dickens House.

Tuesday Evening
(Dining here with Wills)
Twenty First August 1860.

My Dearest Georgy

The Tavistock House Deed is signed, and the Money Paid! We have a fortnight to clear out in. I have all the Stanfields.

I THINK[†1] I shall run away tomorrow, until Saturday, but am not yet sure. It will mainly depend on seeing a house for Helen. I doubt the Drain in the little one (otherwise eligible) that you saw at the Brecknock.[†2] I will write another note Tomorrow, if I don't come home. We had best come to town I think, the moment we can be down at the office, to arrange the moving.

With dearest love to Mary | Ever affecy.

CD.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 21 AUGUST 1860

MS Dickens House.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Night Twenty First August 1860.

My Dearest Georgy

On coming here this evening to work, I find that John has seen some houses by the Orphan Working School at Haverstock Hill[†3] (you know it) — at the back there — of which, one that has been inhabited four years and from which the people ran away, seems to me, the thing. His account of it, is exceedingly promising; the situation, excellent. On his telling the landlady who would pay the rent, she brightened considerably, and also said that she and her husband knew an old friend of mine — Dr. Elliotson — very well.

Now time presses. Come with Helen by the Express from Gravesend on Thursday morning, and come straight here for John. If I have not gone on my Uncommercial Journey,[†4] you will find me here; if I have gone, use your joint senses, and whatever you do (telling John what it is) I will ratify here on Saturday. Your journey will not take you long. You can easily return by the 2.20 train. If you find, on coming here, that I am Uncommercially absent — then, write me all particulars, which I may find here on Saturday.

Ever affecy.

CD.

To BENJAMIN LILLIE, 21 AUGUST 1860*

MS Private; seen before partial destruction in Prestwick aircrash, Dec 1954;[aa] MS Yale University Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Twenty First August 1860.

Mr. Lillie

As I have arranged with the purchaser of Tavistock House that I shall remove all of Mr. Stanfield's pictures[†5] from the back ground floor room, please to take them all down. Observe that the Snow-piece[†1] is not against the wall, but on a wooden frame.

[a]Yours

CHARLES DICKENS[a]

To [THE REV. ASHTON BURROW],[†2] 22 AUGUST 1860*

MS Walter T. Spencer.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Twenty Second August 1860.

My Dear Sir

I find that through some extraordinary accident, Sydney's birth was never registered by the District Registrar. When he was born, we were newly home from abroad, and our house was let, and we took a temporary house in the Regents Park, and there he came into the world.[†3] I can only suppose the omission to have been somehow caused by this confusion.

I enclose the only entry we can find — from the books at Marylebone Church. May I beg you to let me know whether this is sufficient, or whether an affidavit from me is necessary in addition? There is, of course, no doubt whatever of his age. Both his parents can swear to it.[†4]

To J. P. DAVIS, 23 AUGUST 1860*

MS Mr and Mrs Loring S. Miller.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Twenty Third August 1860.

Dear Sir

There is a front garden within your Tavistock House enclosure (the garden where there is a pedestal and vase), which belongs to Mr. Cardale, the owner of Bedford House, adjoining you. When Mr. Cardale under-let Bedford House, I hired that garden of him at £20 a year, and still hold it. It is a good piece of ground, but the principal object I had in hiring it, was to keep out possible noises. Will you let me know at your convenience whether you wish to have it? If so, I will let Mr. Cardale know. There is no hurry in the matter.

It has been the custom of the occupants of the three houses to employ one gardener, and to divide equally the small annual cost of keeping the front enclosure in good order. Young Mr Stone, of Russell House, has lately managed this small matter, and has paid the gardener. He will be happy to explain to you the trifling details.

Perhaps Mrs. Davis[†1] will have the kindness to signify as soon as she can, whether she wishes to purchase any of the fitted furniture — as Drawing room Glasses, cornices, chandelier, carpet, curtains, ottomans — turkey carpet in the Dining room, or any such things. I mention this now, because we begin to move furniture tomorrow, and I hope to have everything clear by the end of next week.

I shall be happy to meet your wishes in any possible way.

I take the liberty of remarking that during my nine years' residence in Tavistock House, I have been particularly steady in objecting to any carelessness in respect of the locked gate into Burton Cresent, and in allowing no organ people, tramps, or strangers, in the enclosure. One of the great advantages of the place depends on this.

The housekeeper will show Mrs. Davis any articles she wishes to see. I shall be in town again on Saturday, and during the greater part of next week.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To FREDERIC CHAPMAN, 24 AUGUST 1860*

MS Dickens House.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Twenty Fourth August, 1860.

My Dear Sir

Many thanks. I have directed the Pictures to be sent to Piccadilly.†2

I sold Tavistock House (36 years term) for Two Thousand Guineas. I had asked four hundred pounds more. The bargain was made in five minutes, and the conveyances were †aexecuted and the money was†a paid within as many days.

You will probably hear from me concerning a new Serial Story†3 before long. You won't object to one, I dare say.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Fredk. Chapman Esquire.

To BENJAMIN LILLIE, 24 AUGUST 1860

MS George Bayntun.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Twenty Fourth August, 1860

If you will be so good, Mr. Lillie, as to roll and tie up Mr. Stanfield's Paintings, each on a piece of wood of its own,†1 and then bind them all together, you can send them as soon as you please to Messrs. Chapman and Hall's 193 Piccadilly. They have plenty of room in their warehouse and will be glad to take care of them.

CD.

To THOMAS MITTON, 24 AUGUST 1860

MS Hornby Arts Library, Liverpool.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Friday Twenty Fourth August 1860.

[My][†2] Dear Mitton

You pay this Gad's Hill Insurance[†3] too?[†4] When is it paid — I mean, at what time of the Year is it due? And what is the Number of that Policy?

Will you answer to the Office in Wellington Street; I shall get it sooner than at this address.

Hastily | Ever Faithfully
CD.

To MESSRS SAMPSON LOW, SON & CO, 25 AUGUST 1860*

MS Open University Centre, Bristol.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Saturday Twenty Fifth August 1860.

Dear Sirs

I beg to assure you in reply to your obliging letter which reached me this morning, that I am profoundly sensible of, and have the highest respect for, the thoroughly ingenuous and honorable spirit on your part, which prompted that communication. Accept my cordial thanks.

While I would not, on principle sanction any American Edition of my books in which I their author have no right conceded to me and from which I derive no advantage — and while I therefore would hold no terms with the American proprietors of the Edition in question, from which my concurrence in the enterprise they undertake for their own profit, could be by any perversion inferred — still I would on no account interpose between you and the execution of the innocent business-trust you describe.[†1] Pray understand that I hold you perfectly justified in discharging it.

With the assurance of my confidence and esteem, I beg to remain

Dear Sirs
Yours faithfully and obliged
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Sampson Low Son and Co.

To BENJAMIN LILLIE, [?LATE AUGUST 60]*

MS Rosenbach Museum and Library. Date: probably a week or ten days before 4 Sep, the day of his removal to Gad's Hill.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.

The first thing to be done is to bring down the bookcases (leaving the books in Tavistock House), and fit the bookcases to the whole of the Bachelor's room here, from the floor to the ceiling. This will no doubt necessitate a good deal of new work, and some waste of the present materials. All the Glazed part (or nearly all) of the present bookcases will come in; but the glass in them to be changed for plate Glass. In fitting the shelves to the room here, a new top piece — made of french polished mahogany — will no doubt be wanted all along the top, where the bookcase joins the ceiling — in order to make it sufficiently important and substantial to the eye.

The present looking-glass not to be used at all in the bookcases here, as I wish the bookcases here to have no break in them whatever, except for the fire-place. Over the fire place the cases will rest on the present mantel shelf. Wherever the form of the room here, may leave a chink of wall too small for books (if anywhere), I shall wish to fill it up with mahogany †[a]or sham book backs from Tavistock House†[a]; so that the whole room may be one bookcase.

The back of the bookcase will be formed, as in Tavistock House, of the wall of the room. It will have to be red-papered between the shelves, as now at Tavistock House. And I shall want the very little woodwork that will be left visible in the room, painted to imitate dark wood, and the ceiling papered in imitation of wood-work to correspond.

Miss Hogarth will show how I think many of the present cases can be worked in without any alteration (except that already mentioned, in the substitution of plate glass for the present glass). Thus: the 2 first cases behind the door will go into an exactly similar position here. Two similar cases on the other side of the looking Glass will go against the wall opposite the door here, and then the case between the two recesses where the sham book backs now are, will nearly or quite fill that side of the room — that is, to the height of the present glazed part. The cases to come above them will of course be different from those above them now. †[b]The corner pieces I suppose would come in also.†[b]

†[c][There will be a small job at the office which John will explain.]†[c]

To JOHN THOMPSON, [?LATE AUGUST 1860]*

MS Rosenbach Museum and Library. Date: probably same day as last.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.

The arrangements for Mrs. Alfred and her children, with whom my mother will live, render it necessary to empty Tavistock House with all possible dispatch, in order that I may see what furniture I have for them.

Therefore, the first thing to be done is to change my bedroom at the office to the next room, and to get Mr. Lillie to do what I want done to the present bedroom, which I am going to make a sitting room.

That is, to fit a stove to it that won't smoke — to new paper it — and to paint all the Woodwork Wainscoat †a[I should like to know the cost of making the bottom sash of each window one piece of plate Glass.].†a All this must be done at once. Papers can be at the office for me to choose from, next Monday and Tuesday. This job is to be charged to me — not the office. I don't want the thing expensively done in any respect. I only want it clean and wholesome and cheerful.

Mr. Lillie will tell you when you can move from Tavistock House to the office — which will be directly he has done. A list of the things to be removed, you shall have from me when I come to town.

Put the Looking Glass over the mantelpiece, in my present bedroom, over the mantelpiece in my new bedroom. I will show you when I come, what I want done with the Gas fitting in my present bedroom.†1

To BENJAMIN LILLIE, 26 AUGUST 1860*

MS Cornell University Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Twenty Sixth August, 1860.

Nothing could be better, Mr. Lillie, than the way in which you have rolled the pictures. I saw them yesterday, and was greatly pleased by the careful and sensible manner in which they were preserved.

The mouldings we will have down here (I told John to pack them), as I think we can work them in for a decoration to the little Drawing Room.

I wish you would arrange to get on a little faster with the bookcase and Library. Understand that I don't in the least complain of the workmen, but I think we might have another Hand.

CD.

To [THE REV. ASHTON BURROW],†1 27 AUGUST 1860*

MS Cornell University Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Twenty Seventh August, 1860.

My Dear Sir

By all means, if you please, as to Sydney's being measured for his uniform. Will you have the goodness to authorize the outfitters whom you mention, to make him whatever is right and necessary.

I am obliged to ask you (for I have mislaid Sydney's last account and cannot remember the exact total) to do me the favor to tell me, in one line, in what amount I was indebted to you[†2] and your esteemed colleagues when Sydney last returned to you. I will immediately send a cheque to your bankers.[†3]

To HERBERT FRY,[†4] 31 AUGUST 1860*

MS National Portrait Gallery.

Private

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Thirty First August, 1860.

Dear Sir

Allow me to thank you for your obliging letter, and for your articles[†5] on the sadly interesting subject to which that letter refers.[†6] I was deterred from pursuing it myself, because, at the time when I entered on it, I saw no hope of doing good.[†7] But I was much influenced by Mr. Widdrington's[†8] fairness and earnestness, and had the highest respect for him.

It would be a great mistake to send any of these poor men a harvesting in this bad season, I think. There are numbers of people seeking employment about there, for whom, as strangers, there is no work. And you would find (or I am much deceived) very few Coventry Weavers who could do field labor, or who would fail very seriously to damage their fineness of hands if they tried it.[†1]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Herbert Fry Esquire.

To HORACE MAYHEW,[†2] 31 AUGUST 1860

Mention in Anderson Galleries catalogue, Apr 1916; MS 2 pp.; dated Office of AYR, 31 Aug 60; addressed Horace Mayhew.

Referring to his brother Alfred's death.[†3]

To ROBERT DALE OWEN, 31 AUGUST 1860

MS Pennsylvania Historical Society. Address: Robert Dale Owen Esquire | Cox's Hotel | Jermyn Street.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Thirty First August, 1860.

Dear Sir.

My hope to get away for a holiday, prevents my having the pleasure of making an appointment within the short margin of time that you are able to give me.[†4]

I confided the American Edition of your book[†5] to a trustworthy and esteemed Contributor to "All The Year Round",[†6] and I placed that contributor's paper on it, in the last No. sent to the printer — which will be published three weeks hence.[†7] With respect to yourself personally, I hope the article will be not displeasing to you; with respect to its (and my) opinion of the evidence on which a large class of your stories rests, I can not be so sanguine.[†8]

The testimony concerning the School Teacher with the Double, is remarked upon in the paper.[†1] I am not sure that I can now disturb the page even by the addition of a foot-note of one line; but if I can make that addition for the purpose of explaining that the story is withdrawn from your English re-print, I will gladly do so.[†2]

Allow me to add that I have carefully read your book myself (I have long been interested in its main points), and that I have derived from it a genuine regard for its writer.[†3]

My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Robert Dale Owen Esquire

To ARTHUR STONE, 31 AUGUST 1860*

MS Benoliel Collection.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Thirty First August, 1860.

My Dear Arthur

As Mr. Davis (who has bought my house) has not taken the garden in front, which I rent for another year or so of Mr. Cardale, will you and Marcus kindly take charge of the key of a new padlock with which its gate is fastened? If you ever desire to use the garden yourself while it is yet mine, pray do so, freely. I should be glad to think it of the least service to you all.

I have told Mr. Davis that you will explain the gardening arrangements to him. If ever you have time and inclination to propose to come and refresh yourself here, you know that your father's old friend will ever be glad to see you.

With kindest regard | Always Faithfully Yours
CD.

Arthur Stone Esquire

September

To MRS DAVIS, 1 SEPTEMBER 1860

MS Rosenbach Museum and Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Night, First September 1860.

Dear Madam

I beg to let you know, with many thanks to you for your consideration, that the housekeeper at Tavistock House will be ready to deliver the keys to you at any time you please on Tuesday next.

Dear Madam | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs Davis

To FREDERIC CHAPMAN, 2 SEPTEMBER 1860*

MS Morgan Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Second September 1860.

My Dear Sir

I should have written before now, proposing a time for your giving us the pleasure of coming here, but that the spoliation of Tavistock House has filled us with books and out-of-the-way objects which require a little time to get into their places. And I don't like this little house (which has a completeness on which I rather plume myself) to be seen for the first time under such disadvantageous circumstances.

We are at present dependent on painters, but I think a three weeks margin a liberal one, even for that awful calling. So I look forward to writing to you again about the 20th. of the month, and suggesting a time for shewing you the walks in[†1]

Fredk. Chapman Esquire

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, [?JANUARY-3 SEPTEMBER 1860]

Extract in Dodd Mead catalogue No. 66 (1903); MS 1 p.; dated Tavistock House, 1860. Date: before the sale of Tavistock House on 4 Sep 60.

I have rarely met with anything so ludicrous as the two extracts you have sent me from the Critic. They made me laugh until the tears ran down my face. Now as I write these words the gravity of that persistent enquiry, "Why the heart of Midlothian?[†2]" sets me off again.

Of course I have no need to tell you that there has never been such a thing as a "controversy" between me and Mr. Howitt.[†3] I should as soon think of holding a controversy with the Rhinoceros in the Zoological Gardens relative to his knocking that horny nose of his against the wall.

To ARTHUR STONE, 4 SEPTEMBER 1860*

MS Benoliel Collection.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.[†4]
Tuesday Fourth September 1860.

My Dear Arthur

It unfortunately happens that I cannot contrive to have the pleasure of receiving you at Gad's Hill before next Monday;[†5] but then, or any time after then, I shall be delighted to see you there. — I write this on Gad's Hill paper, but really at the office on coming to town.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Arthur Stone Esquire

To W. H. WILLS, 4 SEPTEMBER 1860

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Fourth September 1860.

My Dear Wills.

Your description of your sea-castle[†1] makes your room here look uncommonly dusty. Likewise the Costermongers in the street outside, and the one Customer (drunk with his head on the table) in the Crown Coffee House over the way in York Street, have an earthy and, as I may say, a Land-lubberly aspect. Cape Horn to the best of my belief is a tremendous way off; and there are more bricks and cabbage leaves between this office and that dismal point of land than you can possibly imagine.

Some demon Sprite will somehow have informed you before I write this letter, that Mr. Henry Bradbury[†2] has poisoned himself.[†3] Frederick Chapman wrote me last night that he had done it "in his father's house".[†4] A gloomy professional purchaser of Nos., with a dirty face, whom Johnson presented to me in the shop today as "this young man who is always down in Whitefriars", at ½ past 11 A.M. of this day offered to make oath "wot he dun it in Cremorne[†5] in a bottle o' Soda Water. It wos last Sunday, wot he knowed Mr. Bradbury[†6] well, and he dun it there." I cannot say which account is correct — probably neither — but the wretched creature is doubtless dead. And when I came along Woburn Place just now from Haverstock Hill the house looked grim and dry, with all the blinds down, brooding in a hot, dusty, tearless, frozen kind of way, at the unsympathetic street. Nothing having appeared in the papers, I suppose strong influence to have been used in that wise, to keep the dismal story quiet. Holsworth[†7] (in a cracked voice and with a great deal more hair on his head than he can possibly govern) said that he, the deceased, "had been laying it at Miss Evans's[†8] door for her getting married." God knows whether any blurred vision of that most undesirable female with the brass-headed eyes, ever crossed his drunken mind. [†a]Whatever the cause, I should doubt the catastrophe's propping up the credit of the House; — shouldn't you?[†a] Frederick Chapman seemed to think it an extraordinarily unpolite thing that he hadn't waited over tomorrow, "when he knew his brother William was going to be married". And that's all I know of the ghastly story.

Coming here from the Station this morning, I met, coming from the Execution of the Walworth Murderer,[†1] such a tide of ruffians as never could have flowed from any point but the Gallows.[†2] Without any figure of speech, it turned one white and sick to behold them.

Tavistock House is cleared today, and possession delivered up to the House of Israel.[†3] I must say that in all things the purchaser has behaved thoroughly well, and that I cannot call to mind any occasion when I have had money-dealings with a Christian[†4] that have been so satisfactory, considerate, and trusting.

I am ornamented at present with one of my most intensely preposterous and utterly indescribable colds. If you were to make a Voyage from Cape Horn to Wellington Street, you would scarcely recognize in the bowed form, weeping eyes, rasped nose, and snivelling wretch whom you would encounter here, the once gay and sparkling &c &c.

Everything else here is as quiet as possible. Business reports you receive from Holsworth. Wilkie looked in to day, going to Gloucestershire for a week. The office is full of discarded curtains and coverings from Tavistock House, which Georgina is coming up this evening to select from and banish. Mary is in raptures with the beauties of Dunkeld,[†5] but is not very well in health. The Admiral (Sydney) goes up for his examination tomorrow. If he fails to pass with credit, I will never believe in anybody again[†6] — so in that case look out for your own reputation with me.

This is really all the news I have — except that I am lazy, and that Wilkie dines here next Tuesday in order that we may have a talk about the Christmas Number![†7]

I beg to send my kind regard to Mrs. Wills, and to enquire how she likes wearing a hat: which of course she does. I also want to know from her, in confidence whether

Crwllm festidiniog Clymyrhll y wodd?[†8]

Yesterday I burnt, in the field at Gad's Hill, the accumulated letters and papers of twenty years.[†1] They sent up a smoke like the Genie when he got out of the casket on the seashore;[†2] and as it was an exquisite day when I began, and rained very heavily when I finished, I suspect my correspondence of having overcast the face of the Heavens.

Ever Faithfully
CD.

Kind regard to Mr. and Mrs. Novelli.[†3]
I have just sent out for the Globe. No news.[†4]

To C. A. COLE, 5 SEPTEMBER 1860*

MS Mr Alfred Berol.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Fifth September 1860.

My Dear Mr. Cole.

Wills (who is away for his annual holiday) has left me the first part of "Five Hundred Years ago" to read.[†5] While I generally quite approve of it, and think that it opens the way for an excellent series of articles, I think it a little too didactic and essayical — too much about the thing, without shewing the thing itself[†1] — a quality most desirable to be avoided in any form of publication, but particularly in this form. For this reason I should wish to condense it a little, and to add to it the paper next in order. Will you send me the latter as soon as it is ready, that I may have the opportunity of looking at the two together?[†2]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Cole Esquire

To ABRAHAM HAYWARD,[†3] 7 SEPTEMBER 1860*

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Seventh September 1860.

My Dear Mr. Hayward.

Many thanks for your letter. I knew the rights of the Lord Lyndhurst[†4] story, which, in common with many others that have come to my knowledge in the same association, is remarkable for systematic effrontery and falsehood.[†5] But it would be useless to rip up these statements piece-meal. If I were to disprove five hundred to day, they would have a five hundred and first tomorrow. Nothing is easier. And nothing so useful can be done in the matter (I think) as to persevere in shewing how generally absurd and contemptible it is.

Of course I receive your communication in confidence, and should by no possibility be tempted into making any public use of it in any way.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

A. Hayward Esquire.

To CHARLES READE,[†6] 7 SEPTEMBER 1860

MS (copy in Wills's hand) AYR Letter-book, Huntington Library.

Gad's Hill Place | 7th September 1860

My dear Sir,

I address you without apology in the spirit of the Art we both profess, and for which you have done so much.

May I ask you if it would suit your convenience and inclination, to write a serial story for All the Year Round, reserving the free copyright in a collected form for yourself? It would give me the highest gratification to grace these pages with your name, and to have you for a fellow-labourer.[†1]

I do not doubt that all terms and conditions could be easily managed between you and me. I confine myself at present to the question I have just set forth, and shall be most happy to pursue the subject in all frankness and confidence, if your engagements should allow of your offering me any encouragement to do so. Whether or no, I shall be grateful to this occasion if it should prove the means of our coming into personal communication.

Believe me, | Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Reade Esqr.

To JOHN FORSTER, [EARLY SEPTEMBER 1860]

Extract in F, VIII, iii, 655. Date: no doubt soon after 4 Sep 60, when he told Wills that Tavistock House had been "cleared" that day.

When you come down here next month, we have an idea that we shall show you rather a neat house. What terrific adventures have been in action; how many overladen vans were knocked up at Gravesend, and had to be dragged out of Chalk[†2]-turnpike in the dead of the night by the whole equine power of this establishment; shall be revealed at another time.

To ARTHUR STONE, 8 SEPTEMBER 1860*

MS Benoliel Collection.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Eighth September 1860.

My Dear Arthur

As Mr. Davis's tenancy has just now begun, I think it will be best for me to pay the gardener for the current quarter. If you will leave word at home how much I have to contribute (which I forget), Georgina will call on Wednesday, and will pay the amount.

I hope you will find the Children of Israel, good neighbours. Mrs. Davis appears to be a very kind and agreeable woman. And I have never had any money transaction with any one, more promptly, fairly, and considerately conducted than the purchase of Tavistock House has been.

With kindest regard to all in the old corner,

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Arthur Stone Esquire.

To GEORGE BENTLEY,[†1] [9 SEPTEMBER 1860]

Envelope only, MS Berg Collection. Address: George Bentley Esquire | New Burlington Street | London | W. PM Rochester 9 Sep 60.

To TOM TAYLOR, 11 SEPTEMBER 1860

MS W. A. Foyle.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Eleventh September 1860.

My Dear Taylor.

I am most heartily obliged to you for your cordial and delicate note referring to poor Alfred. Its spirit has touched me in a tender place. I am sure that he always desired to do his duty, and that he was a good fellow. The terms in which you mention him are very, very gratifying.

The letter from Nottingham I keep by me, to shew to his widow.[†2]

My Dear Taylor | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Tom Taylor Esquire

To JOHN HOLLINGSHEAD, 12 SEPTEMBER 1860

Mention in Dodd Mead catalogue No. 61 (1901); MS 1 p.; dated Office of AYR, 12 Sep 60; addressed John Hollingshead.

To THE REV. ASHTON BURROW, 14 SEPTEMBER 1860*

MS Walter T. Spencer.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Fourteenth September 1860.

My Dear Sir

Many thanks for your letter. We were all delighted to receive Sydney in his uniform, as you may suppose.

If you will have the kindness to complete the list of books, I shall be much obliged. For the instruments, I will go to Dollond's[†1] on Monday in accordance with your kind suggestion.

My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

The Rev: A. Burrow.

To THE HON. MRS RICHARD WATSON, 14 SEPTEMBER 1860

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Night, Fourteenth September 1860.

My Dear Mrs. Watson.

I lose no time in answering your letter. And first, as to business.

The School in the High Town of Boulogne was excellent.[†2] The boys, all English. The two proprietors, an old Eton master,[†3] and one of the Protestant clergymen of the town.[†4] The teaching, unusually sound and good. The manner and conduct developed in the boys, quite admirable. But I have never seen a gentleman so perfectly acquainted with boy-nature as the Eton master. There was a perfect understanding between him and his charges; nothing pedantic on his part; nothing slavish on their parts.

The result was, that, either with him or away from him, the boys combined an ease and frankness with a modesty and sense of responsibility that was really above all praise. Alfred went from there, to a great school at Wimbledon where they train for India, and the Artillery and Engineers.[†5] Sydney went from there to Mr. Burrow at Southsea. In both instances the new masters wrote to me of their own accord, bearing quite unsolicited testimony to the merits of the old, and expressing their high recognition of what they had done. These things speak for themselves.

But unfortunately I mention it as a School that "was"; because the Eton master has retired, or is retiring, and I do not doubt that he was its life-breath. The school diminishes rapidly upon this, and I think is likely to lose its vitality. I have no boy there now. And I don't think it would suit Spencer Lyttelton's[†1] purpose, because I don't think it would quite suit mine in its altered state. For this reason I do not embarrass you with statements of terms. They were reasonable.

Sydney has just passed his examination as a Naval Cadet, and come home, all eyes and gold buttons.[†2] He has twelve days leave before going aboard the Training Ship.[†3] Katie and her husband are in France and seem likely to remain there for an indefinite period — as long as their money will last, I should say. Mary is on a month's visit in Scotland. Georgina, Frank, and Plorn, are at home here; and we all want Mary and her little dog[†4] back again. I have sold Tavistock House, am making this rather complete in its way, and am on the restless eve of beginning a new big book. We mean to have a Furnished house in town (in some accessible quarter) from February or so to June.[†5] May we meet there! —

Your handwriting is always so full of pleasant memories to me, that when I took it out of the Post Office at Rochester this afternoon, it quite stirred my heart. But we must not think of old times as sad times, or regard them as any thing but the fathers and mothers of the present. We must all climb sturdily up the mountain after the Talking bird, the Singing tree, and the Yellow Water, and must all bear in mind that the previous climbers who were scared into looking back, got turned into black stone.[†6]

Mary Boyle was here a little while ago, as affectionate at heart as ever, as young, and as pleasant. Of course we talked often of you. Do let me know when you are established in Half Moon Street,[†7] and I shall be truly delighted to come and see you.

For my attachments are strong attachments, and never weaken. In right of bygones, I feel as if "all Northamptonshire belonged to me", as all Northumberland did to Lord Bateman in the ballad.[†8] In memory of your warming your feet at the fire in that Waste of a Waiting Room when I read at Brighton,[†9] I have ever since taken that Watering place to my bosom as I never did before. And you and Switzerland are always one to me, and always inseparable.

Since I wrote to you last, I have seen Miss Coutts, and we renewed our old friendship and affection — or rather, perceived when we saw one another, that no renewal was needed. Charley was heard of yesterday — from Shanghai — going to Japan — intending to meet his brother Walter at Calcutta — and having an idea of beguiling the time between-whiles by asking to be taken as an amateur with the English Chinese forces.[†1] Everybody caressed him and asked him everywhere — and he seemed to go. With kind regards, My Dear Mrs. Watson

Ever affectionately Yours

CD.

To JOHN FORSTER [?MID-SEPTEMBER 1860]

Extract in F, IX, iii, 733. Date: He began writing Great Expectations in the last week of Sep; presumably he was writing the "little piece" the same month: see To Forster, 4 Oct.

For a little piece I have been writing — or am writing;[†2] for I hope to finish it today — such a very fine, new, and grotesque idea has opened upon me, that I begin to doubt whether I had not better cancel the little paper,[†3] and reserve the notion for a new book.[†4] You shall judge as soon as I get it printed. But it so opens out before me that I can see the whole of a serial revolving on it, in a most singular and comic manner.[†5]

To MRS LYNN LINTON, 16 SEPTEMBER 1860

MS Library of Congress. Address: Mrs. Linton | 27 Leinster Square | Bayswater | London | W.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Sixteenth September 1860.

My Dear Mrs. Linton

Pray do not suppose that I sent you that very Un Spiritual Magazine[†6] for any other purpose than to keep you au courant to the subject. It has not in the least disturbed my equanimity.

I hold personal enquiry on my part into these proceedings, to be out of the question, for two reasons. Firstly, because the conditions under which such enquiries take place — as I know in the recent case of two friends of mine, with whom I discussed them — are preposterously wanting in the commonest securities against deceit or mistake. Secondly, because the people lie so very hard, both concerning what did take place, and what impression it made at the time on the enquirer.[†1]

Mr. Hume, or Home (I rather think he has gone by both names) I take the liberty of regarding as an Impostor.[†2] If he appeared on his own behalf in any controversy with me, I should take the further liberty of letting him publicly know why. But be assured that if he were demonstrated a Humbug in every microscopic cell of his skin and globule of his blood, the disciples would still believe and worship.

Mrs. Gibson is an impulsive, compassionate, affectionate woman. But as to the strength of her head; — would you be very much surprised by its making a mistake? Did you never know it much mistaken in a person or two whom it devoutly believed in?

Believe me ever | Faithfully Your friend
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Linton

To W. H. WILLS. 16 SEPTEMBER 1860*

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Sixteenth September 1860.

My Dear Wills.

It strikes me that it will be well worth while to alter — for England — the last No. sent to America, and get the Uncommercial into it. We can then alter — for America — the next No. made up, and get the same Uncommercial into that. It will merely be, as to America, the ringing of a week's change on two articles.

My reason is this. It is very important, with our tendency to drop,[†1] not to be too long without an Uncommercial, and not to break a promise. Moreover, the Uncommercial I have done (sent to Printer by this post) is a fine one for extract, and turns upon London's being out of town.[†2] On every account I think it so very desirable to make this change, that even if it cost a rather round sum — which it will not — I should hold it worth while.

To facilitate this operation and avoid loss of time, I address the present note to your house; sending a duplicate of it to the office. I will be at the office tomorrow (Monday) from 12 to ½ past 1, as well as all day Tuesday.

In haste | Ever Faithfully
CD.

To THE REV. ASHTON BURROW, 17 SEPTEMBER 1860*

MS Walter T. Spencer. Address: The Rev. Ashton Burrow | North Grove House | Southsea.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Monday September Seventeenth 1860.

My Dear Sir

Excuse my troubling you with the enquiry whether I am to consider myself indebted to the gentleman who writes the enclosed note, for the amount set forth in it; or to you?[†3]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Rev: Ashton Burrow.

To SIR JAMES EMERSON TENNENT, 18 SEPTEMBER 1860*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Sir James Emerson Tennent (not through the post).

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Eighteenth September 1860.

My Dear Tennent.

Many thanks for the Crevasse paper.[†4] I accept it with pleasure. I have gone through it myself very carefully, and it shall appear tomorrow fortnight. Neither you nor the writer will find it any the worse (I hope) for the little knitting together and tightening of its threads, that I have given it. Enclosed is a cheque for the contribution. Will you have the kindness to hand it to the writer with my thanks, and the assurance that I have followed his adventure with breathless interest.

We have had some glorious days of late down in Kent; but the weather seems to me to have got into bad habits and to be irreclaimable. All day yesterday London was a dirty pond. So it is to day. So it will be, judging from present appearances, tomorrow.

I dined with Forster last week and he was in great force. Is going to Eastbourne tomorrow. Townshend is inconsolable because you don't visit him at Lausanne. I have sold Tavistock House, and we mean to have a furnished house in town during the season. When you come back, if there are any hard fresh winter days, Mary is going to ask Lady Tennent to pass one or two such phenomona[†1] at Gad's Hill. This is all my news, except kindest regard to you and yours.

Ever my Dear Tennent | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Sir James Emerson Tennent.

To ARTHUR STONE, 19 SEPTEMBER 1860*

MS Benoliel Collection.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Night, Nineteenth September 1860.

My Dear Arthur

We have not settled what is to be paid for Frank.[†2] Perhaps it is as well that we should not, until he has been with you for a week or two. Then Georgina or Mary, can very easily arrange that, by coming up to the old corner when we are next in town. Perhaps you may be able (this note seems to be altogether in the possible mood, I find), to come down with him from Saturday to Monday before long, and have a breath of Kentish air.

With kindest regard and with a perfect confidence that Frank cannot be better than with you all,

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To FREDERIC CHAPMAN, 21 SEPTEMBER 1860*

MS Rosenbach Museum and Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Twenty First September 1860.

My Dear Sir

I have to thank you for your letter, and the Half Year's accounts. The balance, if you please, can be paid into Coutts's.[†3]

Always print the smaller number of the Cheap Edition, by all means. I have no doubt of the policy of that course in all cases. If we could communicate any start to the Library Edition,[†1] it would be a very good thing. I never was in the least sanguine of it, but it hangs fire more than ever I had supposed likely.

Mr. Arthur Smith seems to have disappeared from the surface of the earth. When he returns to it, I will answer the question touching the Readings.

I am still beset with Workmen. They are only making bookshelves, but might be making Houses of Parliament. However, I think that I begin to see Land through [them],[†2] and when I see it distinctly, I will hail you.[†3] Fredk. Chapman Esquire.

To MESSRS COUTTS & CO., 21 SEPTEMBER 1860

Mention in American Book Prices Current, 1976; MS (3rd person) 1 p.; dated 21 Sep 60; addressed Messrs Coutts.

Instructing them to deliver his passbook to the bearer.

To MISS MARY DICKENS, 23 SEPTEMBER 1860

Text from MDGH, I, 124-26.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday, Twenty Third September, 1860.

My Dearest Mamie,

If you had been away from us and ill with anybody in the world but our dear Mrs. White,[†4] I should have been in a state of the greatest anxiety and uneasiness about you. But as I know it to be impossible that you could be in kinder or better hands, I was not in the least restless about you, otherwise than as it grieved me to hear of my poor dear girl's suffering such pain. I hope it is over now for many a long day, and that you will come back to us a thousand times better in health than you left us.

Don't come back too soon. Take time and get well restored. There is no hurry, the house is not near to-rights yet, and though we all want you, and though Boy wants you, we all (including Boy)[†5] deprecate a fatiguing journey being taken too soon.

As to the carpenters, they are absolutely maddening. They are always at work, yet never seem to do anything. Lillie was down on Friday, and said (his eye fixed on Maidstone, and rubbing his hand to conciliate his moody employer) that "he didn't think there would be very much left to do after Saturday, the 29th."

I didn't throw him out of the window. Your aunt tells you all the news, and leaves me no chance of distinguishing myself, I know. You have been told all about my brackets in the drawing-room, all about the glass rescued from the famous stage-wreck of Tavistock House, all about everything here and at the office. The office is really a success. As comfortable, cheerful, and private as anything of the kind can possibly be.

I took the Admiral (but this you know too, no doubt) to Dollond's, the mathematical instrument maker's, last Monday, to buy that part of his outfit. His sextant (which is about the size and shape of a cocked hat), on being applied to his eye, entirely concealed him. Not the faintest vestige of the distinguished officer behind it was perceptible to the human vision. All through the City, people turned round and stared at him with the sort of pleasure people take in a little model. We went on to Chatham this day week, in search of some big man-of-war's-man who should be under obligation to salute him — unfortunately found none. But this no doubt you know too, and all my news falls flat.

I am driven out of my room by paint, and am writing in the best spare room. The whole prospect is excessively wet; it does not rain now, but yesterday it did tremendously, and it rained very heavily in the night. We are even muddy; and that is saying a great deal in this dry country of chalk and sand. Everywhere the corn is lying out and saturated with wet. The hops (nearly everywhere) look as if they had been burnt.

In my mind's eye I behold Mrs. Bouncer, still with some traces of her late anxiety on her faithful countenance, balancing herself a little unequally on her bow fore-legs, pricking up her ears, with her head on one side, and slightly opening her intellectual nostrils. I send my loving and respectful duty to her.

To dear Mrs. White, and to White, and to Clara, say anything from me that is loving and grateful.

My dearest Mamie,

Ever and ever your most affectionate Father

[CD]

To EDMUND YATES, 23 SEPTEMBER 1860

MS Robert H. Taylor Collection, Princeton University.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Twenty Third September, 1860.

My Dear E. Y.

I did not write to you in your bereavement,†1 because I knew that the girls had written to you, and because I instinctively shrunk from making a form of what was so real. You knew what a loving and faithful remembrance I always had of your mother, as a part of my youth no more capable of restoration than my youth itself. All the womanly goodness, grace, and beauty of my Drama went out with her. To the last, I never could hear her voice without emotion.†1 — But it is not to say this, that I write now. It comes to the point of my pen in spite of me.

Holding up the Mirror is in next week's No.†2 I have taken out all the personal†3 part of it. Not because I disliked it (for indeed I thought it the best part of the paper) but because it rather grated on me, going over the proof at that time, as a remembrance that would be better reserved a little while. Also, because it made rather a mixture of yourself as an individual, with something that does not belong or attach to you as an Individual. You can have the MS; and as a part of a paper describing your own juvenile remembrances of a Theatre, there it is, needing no change or adaption.†4

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 24 SEPTEMBER 1860

MS Admiral Sir Gerald Dickens.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Monday Night Twenty Fourth September 1860.

My Dearest Georgy

At the Waterloo Station we were saluted with "Hallo! Here's Dickens!" from divers naval Cadets, and Sir Richard Bromley introduced himself to me, who had his cadet-son†5 with him — a friend of Sydney's. We went down together, and dined together, and went aboard together, and the two boys were in the closest alliance. Bromley being Accountant General of the Navy and having influence on board, got their hammocks changed so that they would swing†6 side by side; at which they were greatly pleased. The moment we stepped on board, the "Hul-lo! Here's Dickens!" was repeated on all sides; and the Admiral (evidently highly popular) shook hands with about fifty of his messmates. Taking Bromley for my model (with whom I fraternized in the most pathetic manner) I gave Sydney a Sovereign before stepping over the side.[†7] He was as little overcome as it was possible for a boy to be, and stood waving the gold-banded cap, as we came ashore in a boat.

There is no denying that he looks very small aboard a great ship, and that a boy must have a strong and decided speciality for the sea, to take to such a life. Captain Harris[†8] was not on board, but the other Chief officers were, and were highly obliging. We went over the ship. I should say that there can be little or no individuality of address to any particular boy, but that they all tumble through their education in a crowded way. The Admiral's servant (I mean our Admiral's) had an idiotic appearance, but perhaps it did him injustice [†a](a mahogany faced Marine by station).[†a] The Admiral's washing apparatus is about the size of a muffin plate, and he could easily live in his chest. The meeting with Bromley was a piece of great good fortune, and the dear old chap could not have been left more happily.

Love to Plorn | Ever My Dearest Georgy

Your most affectionate

CD.

To HORACE MAYHEW, 25 SEPTEMBER 1860

Text from facsimile in Kettering Leader, 28 Dec 1923.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday, Twenty-fifth September 1860

My Dear Horace Mayhew,

Immediately on the receipt of your letter, I bestirred myself to get the required documents.[†1] Both are enclosed herein. You will observe from the extract from the Chatham Register that poor Alfred having been born before the General Registration days,[†2] was not so elaborately ticketed and labelled as the infants of this generation.

Faithfully Yours,
CHARLES DICKENS.

To MISS MARGUERITE POWER,[†3] 25 SEPTEMBER 1860†

MS Yale University Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Twenty Fifth September 1860.

My Dear Marguerite.

I like the article[†4] exceedingly and think the translations admirable; — spirited, fresh, bold, and evidently faithful.[†5] I will get the paper into the next No. I "make up": No. 78. I will send a proof to you for your correction, either next Monday or this day week. Or would you like to come here next Monday and dine with us at 1, and go over to Madame Celeste's opening?[†1] [†a]The charmer[†2] is coming, and Georgy will be here all day.[†a] Then you could correct your paper on the premises, as they drink their beer at the beer shops.

Some of the introductory remarks on French literature, I propose to strike out, as a little too essayical for this purpose, and likely to throw out a large part of the large audience at starting, as suggesting some very different kind of article.[†3] My daring pen shall have imbued[†4] its murderous hand with ink, before you see the Proof.

Send me a line in answer, to Gad's Hill.

I took the Admiral down to Portsmouth yesterday; and it must be confessed that he did look astoundingly small, aboard a hundred and twenty Gun Ship.

With kind regard | Ever affectionately

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Power.

To WILKIE COLLINS, [26 SEPTEMBER 1860]

Mention in next. Date: as next.

To W. H. WILLS, 26 SEPTEMBER 1860

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Twenty Sixth September 1860.

My Dear Wills.

Many thanks for your news of Mary, received here this morning. (I mean that illegible proper name for Mary.)

I have both heard from Reade and seen him. There is only one obstacle, and that is a treaty he has with Ticknor and Fields.[†5] It is possible the obstacle may be overcome.[†1] We must have a talk about it. I have engaged him to dine here on Saturday in next week at 6. Will you book it? I write by this post to Wilkie, in order that notice of the Feast may reach him on his coming to town.

The Times of this morning having a mention of Ingram's Death[†2] in the leader,[†3] I suppose there is little or no doubt of the fact. [†a]All that you say of the Whitefriars Gang[†4] had been already running up and down my mind. Surely even They will find it hard to outlive this shock, coming so close upon the Suicide.[†5][†a]

The No. is made up, and the Uncommercial is in,[†6] and all is right. Will you mention to Mrs. Wills with my kind regard, that I ought to have been born at Peebles,[†7] but (owing to the constitutional perversity of my mother) was not?

Ever Faithfully

CD.

October

To JOHN FORSTER, 4 OCTOBER 1860

Composite text from MDGH, II, 128 and ([aa]) F, IX, iii, 733.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT,
Thursday, Oct. 4th, 1860.

My Dear Forster,

It would be a great pleasure to me to come to you,[†8] an immense pleasure, and to sniff the sea I love (from the shore); but I fear I must come down one morning and come back at night. I will tell you why.

[†a]Last week I got to work on the new story. I had previously very carefully considered the state and prospects of All the Year Round, and, the more I considered them, the less hope I saw of being able to get back, now, to the profit of a separate publication in the old 20 numbers. However I worked on, knowing that what I was doing would run into another groove; and I called a council of war at the office on Tuesday. It was perfectly clear that the one thing to be done was, for me to strike in.[†9] I have therefore decided to begin the story as of the length of the Tale of Two Cities[†10] on the first of December — begin publishing, that is. I must make the most I can out of the book. You shall have the first two or three weekly parts to-morrow. The name is GREAT EXPECTATIONS. I think a good name?[†a]

Now the preparations to get ahead, combined with the absolute necessity of my giving a good deal of time to the Christmas number, will tie me to the grindstone pretty tightly. It will be just as much as I can hope to do. Therefore, what I had hoped would be a few days at Eastbourne diminish to a few hours.

I took the Admiral down to Portsmouth. Every maritime person in the town knew him. He seemed to know every boy on board the Britannia, and was a tremendous favourite evidently. It was very characteristic of him that they good-naturedly helped him, he being so very small, into his hammock at night. But he couldn't rest in it on these terms, and got out again to learn the right way of getting in independently. Official report stated that "after a few spills, he succeeded perfectly, and went to sleep." He is perfectly happy on board, takes tea with the captain, leads choruses on Saturday nights, and has an immense marine for a servant.

I saw Edmund Yates at the office, and he told me that during all his mother's wanderings of mind, which were almost incessant at last, she never once went back to the old Adelphi days until she was just dying, when he heard her say, in great perplexity: "I can not get the words."

Best love to Mrs. Forster.

Ever, my dear Forster, affectionately
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To JOHN FORSTER, [6 OCTOBER 1860]

Extract in F, IX, iii, 733-34. Date: two days after last, according to Forster.

The sacrifice of Great Expectations is really and truly made for myself.[†1] The property of All the Year Round is far too valuable, in every way, to be much endangered. Our fall is not large, but we have a considerable advance in hand of the story we are now publishing,[†2] and there is no vitality in it, and no chance whatever of stopping the fall;[†3] which on the contrary would be certain to increase. Now, if I went into a twenty-number serial, I should cut off my power of doing anything serial here for two good years — and that would be a most perilous thing. On the other hand, by dashing in now, I come in when most wanted; and if Reade and Wilkie follow me[†4] our course will be shaped out handsomely and hopefully for between two and three years. A thousand pounds are to be paid for early proofs of the story to America.[†5]

To CHARLES LEVER, 6 OCTOBER 1860

MS Widener Collection, Harvard.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Saturday Sixth October 1860.

My Dear Lever.

I have a business report to make, that I fear I can hardly render agreeable to you. The best thing I can say in the beginning, is, that it is not otherwise disagreeable to me than as it imposes this note upon me. It causes me no other uneasiness or regret.

We drop, rapidly and continuously, with the Day's Ride.[†1] Whether it is too detached and discursive in its interest for the audience and the form of publication, I can not say positively; but it does not take hold.[†2] The consequence is, that the circulation becomes affected, and that the subscribers complain. I have waited week after week, for these three or four weeks, watching for any sign of encouragement. The least sign would have been enough. But all the tokens that appear, are in the other direction; and therefore I have been driven upon the necessity of considering how to act, and of writing to you.

There is but one thing to be done. I had begun a book which I intended for one of my long twenty-number Serials. I must abandon that design and forego its profit (a very serious consideration, you may believe), and shape the story for these pages. I must get into these pages, as soon as possible, and must consequently begin my story in the No. for the 1st. of December. For as long a time as you continue afterwards, we must go on together.†3

This is the whole case. If the publication were to go steadily down, too long, it would be very, very, very, difficult to raise again. I do not fear the difficulty at all, by taking this early and vigorous action. But without it there is not a doubt that the position would be serious.

Now do, pray, I entreat you, lay it well to heart that this might have happened with any writer. It was a toss-up with Wilkie Collins when he began his story, on my leaving off. But he strung it on the needful strong thread of interest, and made a great success. The difficulties and discouragements of such an undertaking are enormous, and the man who surmounts them to day may be beaten by them tomorrow.

If I could only have seen you and have said at ease what one writes so *un*easily, I should have been much happier in the execution of this task. If I could only have dwelt, face to face with you by the fire, on the peculiarity of the case and the little actual reason there is for general mortification or misgiving, I should have cared no more for having to buckle-to and work my hardest, than for taking one of my usual walks. But I set such a value on your friendship and have such a high sense of your generosity and delicacy, that I hate to write — dread to write — can't write — this letter!†1 And more than that; I carry it to my desk upon my shoulder like Christian's load,†2 and shall not have laid it down until I hear cheerfully from you. So even to have written it, is no relief.

If I were to try now, to ramble into any other theme, I know I should stagger lamely back into this. I will not try, and will not add another word.

Believe me ever My Dear Lever | Your affectionate and faithful

CHARLES DICKENS

To ROBERT LANDELLS†3 8 OCTOBER 1860

Extract in Sophie Dupré catalogue, No. 31 (1994); MS (3rd person) 1 p.; addressed Robert T. Landells; dated Gad's Hill Place, 8 Oct 60.

Sending his condolences on the death of your respected and lamented father,†4 and sending his sympathy to the family in their great bereavement.

To CAPTAIN W. S. MOORSOM,†5 8 OCTOBER 1860†

MS Capt. H. J. L. Parker. Address: Captain Moorsom | &c &c &c | Satis House | Rochester.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.

Monday Eighth October 1860.

My Dear Sir

I safely received on Saturday, the interesting and remarkable record for which I am indebted to your kindness and that of the Committee of Officers of the 52nd. Light Infantry.[†1] I beg you to assure those gentlemen that I am highly sensible of that mark of their remembrance, and that I shall always preserve it with especial pleasure and pride. [†a]It has a double value as their personal gift, and as a chronicle most strikingly illustrative of the noble spirit of my countrymen in arms.[†2]

You will excuse my adding that the second paragraph of the preface seems to me to express in the happiest and plainest manner, the highest principles on which an officer, or any responsible commander of men, can shape his course, with a certainty of being right and of doing his duty.[†3†a]

Believe me always My Dear Sir
Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Captain Moorsom C. E.[†4]

To SIR JAMES EMERSON TENNENT, 8 OCTOBER 1860

Extract in T. F. Madigan catalogue (c. 1930); MS 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill Place, 8 Oct 60; addressed Sir James E. Tennent. Address (MS envelope only, Morgan Library): Private | Sir James Emerson Tennent | Board of Trade | Whitehall | London | S. W. PM Rochester 8 Oct 60.

Many, many thanks! I had received from my boy[†5] a most glowing account of his kind reception.[†6] And he was very sensible to whom he owed it.

To JAMES T. FIELDS, 9 OCTOBER 1860

MS Houghton Library, Harvard.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Ninth October 1860.

My Dear Fields

This is not to answer your kind and interesting private letter, but to consult you on a business question comprehending Ticknor-Fields[†7] — and the dread and awful Co.

I am very anxious to get Mr. Charles Reade to write a serial story for these pages — to begin somewhere about Midsummer next, and to be continued from week to week. On seeing Mr. Reade on this head, he told me, in a way very agreeable to myself, that he would be pleased to write in my company, and that he had made no engagements in England which interposed any obstacle.[†1] But, with expressions of regard for you and of high appreciation of your liberality, he told me that he was under engagement to you to furnish you with Proof Sheets of his next work (which such work would be) for your Monthly.[†2] And he then explained that he held himself thoroughly bound to you, and that he did not see the possibility of reconciling our Weekly interests with your Monthly interests.

Now what I want to ask you, is, can any arrangement be made, which will reconcile these interests and not bring them into collision? Understand that I open the subject with you, perfectly well knowing that it is very likely you may be obliged to reply "No", and that if you reply "No", I have no present prospect of a serial from Mr. Reade's pen.

The object to be gained, is, an arrangement in virtue of which a story by Mr. Reade could be published, in these pages in England, and in your pages in America, as an original work.

Two sides of the question have to be stated. 1: What we should want. 2: What you would have.

What we should want.

We should want to commence the story half way in the month, or (the same thing in other words) two weeks before its commencement in your Monthly magazine; in order that when your Magazine came over here it might not anticipate us. This order we should require to observe throughout the story.

What you would have:

Would be, the right of priority in America, such as Harpers purchase of me at a large price in the case of a serial story of mine,[†3] and purchase of Mr. Wilkie Collins in the case of a serial story by him.[†4] You would have the complete mastery of Harpers, because, it is a special article of our agreement with them that they cannot use a long serial story which they find in the early No. we send them, unless such story be the subject of a separate agreement between them and its writer or proprietor. You would have a similar mastery over Emerson and Co.[†5] because the stereotype plates we send to them, are sent from England in the last week of each month: consequently their republication would be a month, or more, behind your Magazine.[†1]

BUT[†2] — and this may prove a great difficulty — you would have to publish in each of your month's Nos. as much as we published in all the weeks of the month.

This is the whole case.

It would be so very agreeable and interesting to me to have Mr. Reade for a fellow labourer in these pages, that I write to you, as representing your house, to know whether union in this matter is feasible. It may be more so than Mr. Reade thinks, it may be less so than I think, but there can be no harm in suggesting the consideration.[†3]

In a business letter it would be an alarming thing (I suppose) to send a message of faithful regard and remembrance to Mrs. Fields — so I won't.

My Dear Fields | Very faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

James T Fields Esquire

To JOHN FORSTER, [EARLY OCTOBER 1860]

Extract in F, IX, iii, 734. Date: "few more days" after last, according to Forster.

The book will be written in the first person throughout, and during these first three weekly numbers[†4] you will find the hero to be a boy-child, like David. Then he will be an apprentice. You will not have to complain of the want of humour as in The Tale of Two Cities. I have made the opening, I hope, in its general effect exceedingly droll.[†5] I have put a child and a good-natured foolish man,[†6] in relations that seem to me very funny. Of course I have got in the pivot on which the story will turn too — and which indeed, as you will remember, was the grotesque tragi-comic conception that first encouraged me.[†7] To be quite sure I had fallen into no unconscious repetitions,[†8] I read David Copperfield again the other day, and was affected by it to a degree you would hardly believe.

To HORACE MAYHEW, 9 OCTOBER 1860*

MS Private.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Ninth October 1860.

My Dear Horace Mayhew

I enclose you my Declaration[†1] duly attested by a Magistrate. I suppose the Proof is sufficient now, even for a Life office.

Faithfully Yours always
CD.

To WILLIAM RIDDLE,[†2] 9 OCTOBER 1860

Mention in John Anderson Jr catalogue, 1915. MS (3rd person) 1 p.; dated Office of AYR, 9 Oct 60; addressed William Riddle.

Thanking him for a proposed contribution to All the Year Round.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 9 OCTOBER 1860

MS (pro forma letter) Free Library of Philadelphia.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
†aOct 9 1860†a

Mr. Charles Dickens begs to thank the writer of the paper entitled †aThe Storm the Window & the Angel†a for having done him the favor to offer it as a contribution to these pages. He much regrets, however, that it is not suited to the requirements of All the Year Round.

The Manuscript will be returned under cover, pr Post.†3

To W. C. MACREADY, 12 OCTOBER 1860*

MS Morgan Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Twelfth October 1860.

My Dearest Macready.

It is a great relief and comfort to me to have a letter from you, and to know under your own dear hand that you are much better. Georgy and I have been constantly talking of you.

I observe in the pamphlet†1 (pray thank the writer for it in my name), one or two very novel and suggestive considerations. I will try to find an opportunity of calling attention to them.

On the 1st. of December I am going to begin to publish another Serial story in All The Year Round. This is my best reason for communicating with you more in the spirit than "the letter". When I have done my day's work, I rush into the air and take fierce exercise; the pen once laid down, is leaden — and not feathery†2 — to take up again that day.

With love to all at home, | Believe me ever
Your most affectionate and faithful

CD.

To [H. G. ADAMS], 15 OCTOBER 1860

Extract in American Art Association catalogue No. 3809; MS 1 p.; dated 15 Oct 60.

Arranging dates for a reading the nearer Christmas time the better, I suppose.†3

To CHARLES LEVER, 15 OCTOBER 1860

MS Widener Collection, Harvard.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Monday Fifteenth October 1860.

My Dear Lever.

I cannot tell you how exceedingly distressed I am by your letter received this morning,[†4] or with what reluctance I wrote the note to which it is a reply, or with what care and pains I have applied myself to the whole subject.

But I do entreat you most earnestly, to understand that my original opinion of your Serial remains quite unchanged — that I believe it to be the best you ever wrote — that I think it full of character and humour — that I have not in my mind the slightest atom of reservation respecting it — that I am proud and glad to have it — that I value it exactly as I valued it when we first corresponded about it. I implore you to understand that, and not to let any feeling interpose to obscure this truth. For such a purpose, it does not do what you and I would have it do. I suppose the cause to be, that it does not lay some one strong ground of suspended interest; I know the fact; I have the effect before me; but I cannot be sure of the cause.

I need not repeat that I never was so unwilling (that I can call to mind) to do any thing I have ever done in my life, as I was to write to you the other day. But it being clear that it had become indispensably and unavoidably necessary that I should relinquish the Monthly Serial I was preparing, and should throw the story into these pages, was it possible that I COULD[†1] come out here without your previous knowledge and without your understanding why? Was it possible for me to discharge from myself the responsibility of telling you the truth as I knew it?

I beg and pray you not to do yourself and me so great a wrong as to think of our connexion as having been a "misfortune" to me. It has been, and is, nothing but a pleasure and gratification to me. For God's sake don't go wrong in the least corner of your mind, upon this point. If I thought that you would withdraw yourself from the publication, and that after this work you would write such papers as the Italian, the Showman, and the Whist-player, for it, no more, I should be most bitterly and keenly hurt. But I will not believe it, for, as I know my own mind in the matter, I have a faith that I know yours. Some of the best books ever written would not bear the mode of publication; and one of its most remarkable and aggravating features is, that if you do not fix the people in the beginning, it is almost impossible to fix them afterwards. Surely my dear Lever, not quite to succeed in such a strange knack, or lottery, is a very different thing from having cause to be struck in one's self-respect and just courage. It was but the other day that Bulwer and Adam Bede were both speaking to me with a kind of scared wavering between temptation and repulsion — and each with a direct personal reference — on this very head.

As to winding up — you are to consider your own reputation, your own knowledge of the book as a whole, your own desire what it shall be, and your own opinion what it ought to be.[†2] In considering all these things you best consider me. Our connexion never can be a "misfortune" to me, so long as you will think of me in it as if I were your other self, and will recognize no possibility of any interest on my part arising out of it, which is capable of being placed in any kind of opposition to your own.

Now, do take heart of Grace and cheer up. And above all things cancel that unlucky word that gives me a cold shiver in this application, and that filled me when I read your letter this morning with a friendly indignation which boiled over so hard for an hour or two, that — I can make a joke of it now.

Ever My Dear Lever | Your faithful and affectionate friend

CD.[†3]

To THOMAS BUCHANAN READ,[†1] 15 OCTOBER 1860

MS Pennsylvania Historical Society. Address: Thomas Buchanan Read Esquire | 74 Newman Street | W.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Fifteenth October 1860.

Dear Sir

I beg to assure you that I have not leisure to accept the compliment you propose to render me by painting my portrait. I have a warm regard for Mr. Fields,[†2] and your manly and modest letter would have ensured my interest in its writer. But I sat to Mr. Frith of our Royal Academy here,[†3] last year, after a long postponement; and if I were to sit again (which I think very unlikely), I should still have a conditional promise to redeem.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Buchanan Read Esquire

To WILKIE COLLINS, 24 OCTOBER 1860†

MS Morgan Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Twenty Fourth October 1860.

My Dear Wilkie. I have been down to Brighton to see Forster, and found your letter here on arriving by Express this morning. I also found a letter from Georgina, describing how Mary's horse went down suddenly on a stone, and how Mary was thrown, and had her riding habit torn to pieces, and has a deep cut just above the knee — fortunately, not in the knee itself — which is doing exceedingly well, but which probably will incapacitate her from walking for days and days to come. It is well it was no worse. The accident occurred at Milton near Gravesend, and they found Mary in a public house there, wonderfully taken care of and looked after.[†4]

I propose that we start on Thursday morning the 1st. of Novr. The train for Penzance[†5] leaves the Great Western Terminus at a quarter past 9 in the morning.

It is a 12 hours journey. Shall we meet at the Terminus at 9? I shall be here all the previous day, and shall dine here.

Your account of your passage goes to my heart — through my stomach. What a pity I was not there, on board, to present that green-visaged, but sweet tempered and uncomplaining spectacle of imbecility, at which I am so expert under stormy circumstances; in the poet's phrase

As I sweep
Through the deep
When the stormy winds do blow.[†1]

What a pity I am not there, at Meurice's,[†2] to sleep the sleep of infancy through the long plays where the gentlemen stand with their backs to mantelpieces. What a pity I am not with you to make a Third at the Trois frères,[†3] and drink no end of bottles of Bordeaux without ever getting a touch of redness in my (poet's phrase again) "innocent nose"![†4] But I must go down to Gad's tonight, and get to work again. Four weekly numbers have been ground off the wheel, and at least another must be turned, afore we meet. They shall be yours in the slumberous Railway carriage.

I don't think Forster is at all in good health. [†a](And by the bye he wants to dine with you.) I was greatly amused by the characteristic circumstance of his not leaving the Bedford alone.[†5] He won't allow that noble Institution to send up a dinner of its own composition — as you and I do — but will have a Bill of Fare and make wrong selections. The consequence is, that his dinners are not half so good as the house would make them.[†a] He was tremendously hospitable and hearty. I walked 6 hours and a half on the Downs yesterday, and never stopped or sat. Early in the morning — before breakfast — I went to the nearest Baths, to get a shower bath. They kept me waiting longer than I thought reasonable, and, seeing a man in a cap in the passage, I went to him and said, "I really must request that you'll be good enough to see about this shower Bath" — and it was Hullah! — waiting for another bath.

Rumours were brought into the house on Saturday night, that there was "a Ghost" up at Larkins's Monument.[†6] Plorn was frightened to death, and I was apprehensive of the Ghost's spreading, and coming nearer, and causing "warning" and desertion among the servants. Frank was at home, and Andrew Gordon was with us. Time, 9 o'Clock. Village talk and credulity, amazing. I armed the two boys with a stout stick apiece, and shouldered my double-barrelled gun, well loaded with shot. "Now observe," says I to the domestics, "if anybody is playing tricks, and has got a head, I'll blow it off." Immense impression. New groom evidently convinced that he has entered the service of a blood thirsty demon. We ascend to the Monument. Stop at the gate. Moon is rising. Heavy shadows. "Now, look out!" (from the blood thirsty demon in a loud distinct voice). "If the ghost is here and I see him, so help me God I'll fire at him!" Suddenly, as we enter the field, a most extraordinary noise responds — terrific noise — human noise — and yet super-human noise. B. T. D. brings piece to shoulder. "Did you hear that Pa?" says Frank. "I did," says I. Noise repeated — portentous, derisive, dull, dismal, damnable. We advance towards the sound. Something white comes lumbering through the darkness. — An asthmatic sheep! — dead, as I judge, by this time. Leaving Frank to guard him, I took Andrew with me, and went all round the Monument, and down into the ditch, and examined the field well — thinking it likely that somebody might be taking advantage of the sheep, to frighten the village. Drama ends with Discovery of No One, and Triumphant return to Rum and Water.

☞†1 †aMr. Kent, intriguing with the nursemaid, poor little child wakes in Crib, and sits up, contemplating blissful proceedings. Nursemaid strangles him then and there. Mr. Kent gashes body, to mystify discoverers, and disposes of same (This is the present Authority's solution of the Road Murder.)†2 I rather think the solution loses its effect, from my having already mentioned it?†3

In consequence of her gallant conduct on the Ocean, I crave liberty evermore to hail the Butler's†4 elder sister,†5 as Albania Nelsona. I beg to send her my kind regard. I hope she will be able to report to me that you came up to the Parisian Scratch like a man, in respect of Pears in the Neapolitan manner, hard by the Bourse, and Truffles at the Provincial Brothers. If you can conveniently dine at the Café Vefour,†6 to recall White's face when we paid 20 francs for Truffles — pray do. And if you see Felix†7 anywhere, offer him my curse.†a

Ever affecy.

CD.

To MRS LEHMANN, 26 OCTOBER 1860†

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Twenty Sixth October 1860.

My Dear Mrs. Lehmann

Unfortunately I cannot come on Monday, as the looming of my Cornish Giants†1 in the distance obliges me to stick to my work. There is not the least merit in my doing so. I do it with the worst grace, and with the strongest disposition to come to you.

Will you ask Lehmann with my kind regard, if he can find out for me who is the Principal of the "People's College" at Sheffield?†2 And, if it be not a personage of the name of Bailey,†3 what has become of Bailey?

You have heard of Mary's horse having gone down with her? The undersigned reverend Parient wishes to know, what next.

With love and blessings to my Nephew[†4] from his Uncle Dickens

Believe me Ever | Most Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Lehmann

To JOHN ELLIS, 28 OCTOBER 1860*

MS W. A. Foyle.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Night Twenty Eighth October 1860.

My Dear Mr. Ellis

I feel it is not worth while for me to give Madame[†5] the trouble of reading a note on so slight a matter as this refers to. One of my boys who is in town, wishes to come to the Lyceum on Tuesday night.[†6] Will you be so good as let Madame know that I have asked you to leave a pass at the Free List office, for himself (Mr. Frank Dickens) and friend.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To THE REV. WILLIAM BELL,[†1] THE REV. ASHTON BURROW AND WILLIAM JOHNSON RN, 30 OCTOBER 1860*

MS Walter T. Spencer. Address: Messrs Bell Burrow and Johnson | North Grove House | Southsea.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Thirtieth October 1860.

My Dear Sirs

I beg to enclose you a cheque (crossed) for the amount in which I am indebted to you,[†2] and to offer you my sincere thanks for your excellent care of Sydney.

Believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Bell Burrow and Johnson

To SIR JOHN BOWRING,[†3] 31 OCTOBER 1860

Text from MDGH, III, 193-4.

Gad's Hill, Wednesday, 31st October, 1860.

My Dear Sir John,

First let me congratulate you on your marriage[†4] and wish you all happiness and prosperity.

Secondly, I must tell you that I was greatly vexed with the Chatham people for not giving me early notice of your lecture. In that case I should (of course) have presided, as President of the Institution, and I should have asked you to honour my Falstaff house here. But when they made your kind intention known to me, I had made some important business engagements at the "All the Year Round" office for that evening, which I could not possibly forego. I charged them to tell you so, and was going to write to you when I found your kind letter.

Thanks for your paper,[†5] which I have sent to the Printer's with much pleasure.

We heard of your accident here, and of your "making nothing of it."[†6] I said that you didn't make much of disasters, and that you took poison (from natives) as quite a matter of course in the way of business.

Faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 31 OCTOBER 1860

MS Dickens House.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Thirty First October 1860

My Dearest Georgy. The enclosed letters are in Arthur Smith's "Department". In the envelope Drawer on the right hand of my writing table raised-top, immediately under the fighting frogs and the little bronze Trollope,[†1] you will find a printed envelope addressed to the said Arthur Smith. Will you put these letters in it — stamp it — and post it to him.

With best love to Mamie and Plorn

Ever Most Affectionately

CD.

To HENRY WHITWORTH JONES,[†2] 31 OCTOBER 1860

MS Mrs E. Davidson.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Thirty First October 1860.

My Dear Whitworth Jones.

I had the pleasure of meeting a relation of yours at a neighbour's here last night, who told me you had been very unwell. I wish you would come and see us here, and you shall have quiet — good air — and all peaceable helps towards recovery; above all, your own way. I am going into Cornwall tomorrow, but shall be home again at the end of next week. It would give us all real pleasure to see you again; and Mary charges me with all sorts of kind messages. Ditto Georgina. Imagine them, and Believe me always
Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

H. Whitworth Jones Esquire

November

To [H.G. ADAMS], 1 NOVEMBER 1860

Text from N, III, 190.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday First November 1860

My Dear Sir,

I send you a hasty word before going into Devonshire. Appoint the evening that you name as the last evening. The reading will be:

The Poor Traveller
Boots at the Holly Tree Inn
and
Mrs. Gamp.

It will last an hour and three quarters.

Faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 1 NOVEMBER 1860

MS Dickens House.

Bideford, North Devon.
Thursday Night First November 1860.

My Dearest Georgy.

I write (with the most impracticable iron pen on earth) to report our safe arrival here, in a Beastly Hotel.[†1] We start tomorrow morning at 9, on a two days' posting between this and Liskeard[†2] in Cornwall. We are due in Liskeard (but nobody seems to know anything about the roads) on Saturday afternoon, and we purpose making an excursion in that neighbourhood on Sunday, and coming up from Liskeard on Monday by Great Western fast train — which will get us to London, please God, in good time on Monday evening. There I shall hear from you and know whether dear Mamie's leg will move to London too.

We had a pleasant journey down here, and a beautiful day. No adventures whatever. Nothing has happened to Wilkie and he sends love.

We had stinking fish for dinner, and have been able to drink nothing — though we have ordered wine, beer, and brandy and water. There is nothing in the house but Two Tarts and a pair of snuffers. The landlady[†3] is playing cribbage with the landlord in the next room (behind a thin partition), and they seem quite comfortable.

Dearest love to Mamie, and to the Noble Plorn, and to you.

Your most affectionate

CD.

To W. H. WILLS, 3 NOVEMBER 1860

MS Huntington Library.

Liskeard. | Saturday Third November, 1860.

My Dear Wills.

We have had two days posting from Bideford here, and have arrived (at a quarter past 3) about half an hour before the going out of the Post. I have not written sooner, because of our having been in inaccessible places. We have now struck the Railway, and, making a little posting expedition from here tomorrow, will be safe in town, I hope, on Monday Evening.

We have got everything we want, I think, and have arranged and parcelled out the Xmas No.[†1]

On Tuesday we will make up as usual.[†2]

So no more at present from

Yours Ever Faithfully

CD.

Wilkie sends kind regard.

To MADAME CELESTE, 6 NOVEMBER 1860*

MS Shakespeare Birthplace Trust.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Sixth November 1860.

My Dear Madame Celeste

As I shall be in town this evening, I will come over the way and see you if you will send me a Box.[†3]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS LEHMANN, 6 NOVEMBER 1860

MS University of Texas, Austin.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Sixth November 1860.

My Dear Mrs. Lehmann.

I have been in Cornwall and have missed your note. Came back, only last night.

It unfortunately happens, that I am engaged tomorrow. Don't give me up, because of my misfortunes. Have faith in me. Try me again, and your Petitioner will ever pray! —

I hear rumours that Mary is at the present moment advancing towards the Metropolis, on crutches![†1]

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To LORD CLARENCE PAGET, 7 NOVEMBER 1860

Extract in Chicago Book & Art Auction Inc. catalogue No. 41; MS (3rd person) 1 p.; dated 7 Nov 60; addressed Lord Clarence Paget.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Lord Clarence Paget, and begs to say that he has made an appointment with an American lady to whom Lord Clarence Paget's note refers, and that he will see her at his office in town, and advise her to the best of his judgment. He returns Lady Napier's[†2] letter, and assures Lord Clarence Paget of the pleasure and readiness with which he accepts this slight trust.

To NUGENT ROBINSON,[†3] 7 NOVEMBER 1860

Mention in Anderson Galleries catalogue, May 1916; MS 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill Place, 7 Nov 60; addressed Nugent Robinson.

Concerning Robinson's uncle, Eugene Nugent,[†4] whom CD remembered from about the time of his 20th birthday.

To EDMUND YATES, 13 NOVEMBER 1860*

Text from transcript by Walter Dexter.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Thirteenth November 1860

My Dear E. Y.

I must say that I cannot possibly do it. I am excessively busy, and so overwhelmed by such entreaties that I have no course but Total abstinence. This is the hastiest of answers, in a short interval between two absences.

Ever faithfully,
CD.

To CAPTAIN ROBERT HARRIS, [?13 NOVEMBER 1860]

Mention in To Miss Hogarth, 14 Nov 60. Date: written day before that letter.

Thanking him for his note about Sydney's illness.

To SYDNEY DICKENS, [?13 NOVEMBER 1860]

Mention in next. Date: written same day as last.

Asking him how he was and whether he would like CD to visit him.

To GEORGINA HOGARTH, 14 NOVEMBER 1860

MS Dickens House.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Fourteenth November 1860.

My Dearest Georgy. My first impulse yesterday morning was to go to Portsmouth; and I probably should have done so, had I been less busy. On reconsideration, I observed that Captain Harris's letter was dated five days ago, and that Sydney's, not dated at all, was probably written but a day later. I decided, after reflecting, to write to Captain Harris thanking him for his note, and telling him I had just got it; also to write to Sydney, asking him to let me know by the next post (either by his own hand, or somebody else's) how he was, and asking him if he would like me to come and see him. On the intelligence that tomorrow's post will bring, will depend whether I go at once or no. If not, I purpose coming to Gravesend tomorrow, by the 2.20 from London Bridge. If I should not come — either from this cause or from any other: though I foresee no other — I will send an explanatory Telegram in good time. I shall want the basket to be at Gravesend, as I shall have my portmanteau and so forth.

Elizabeth's[†1] illness was certainly alarming, and it is highly desirable to get rid of her. Could it not be done by recommending her, in consequence of the state of her health, to give up at once? It is difficult to judge of Mr. Steele's[†2] impression without having seen him, but I can imagine it quite possible that he may not at all suspect, or may only in the vaguest and most unconfirmed manner suspect, the truth.[†3] For of course she would be very careful what she told him, and would try to mislead him.

There is no news. John is still low, though something less low (I think) than before. I have told him to lay his book[†4] on my table, but it has not yet appeared. Céleste appears to have made a real success with her new piece.[†5] There seems to have been a genuine excitement in the house on the first night.[†6]

She was here this morning, in great hope. Also, gave me marvellous accounts of an Irishman[†1] she has engaged from Dublin, where he has made an unusual hit.[†2]

Wilkie brought the beginning of his part of the Xmas No.[†3] to dinner yesterday. I hope it will be good. But is it not a most extraordinary thing that it began: "I have undertaken to take pen in hand, to set down in writing — &c. &c — " like the W in W narratives?[†4] Of course, I at once pointed out the necessity of cancelling that, "off," as Carlyle would say "for evermore from the face of this teeming earth where the universal Dayvle stalks at large."[†5]

Forster was very restless at dinner on Wednesday, and so overpowered Elliotson that his jaw dropped, and he said he was tired out before the first course was done, and never spake more. Mrs. Forster gave me a tremendous narrative, in her feebly and unaccountably triumphant manner of "brilgil up the Lord Chief Barrel's[†6] youlgest childrel to see the Lorl Mayor's Show;"[†7] of which I comprehended exactly that much and no more. In the previous proceedings at the Bank of England, Forster had amazed and terrified that establishment — but still had impressed it.

With best love to dear Mamie and the Noble Plorn, Ever my Dearest Georgy most affectionately

CD.

To CAPTAIN ROBERT HARRIS, [?15 NOVEMBER 1860]

Mention in next.

To SYDNEY DICKENS, [?15 NOVEMBER 1860]

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, July 1992; addressed Sydney Smith Dickens; undated. Date: See To Miss Hogarth, 14 Nov; CD is replying to Sydney's answer to his first letter, which perhaps reached him on 15 Nov; he would reply at once.

Saying how pleased he is to learn that Sydney is better and stronger and making various alternative arrangements for him to come home to recover, if his doctor approves; he sends John as his representative, with a letter for Capt. Harris.

Ever my Dearest boy | Your affectionate father

CHARLES DICKENS

To BARON BERNHARD TAUCHNITZ, [?MID NOVEMBER 1860]

Extract in Curt Otto, Der Verlag Bernhard Tauchnitz, 1837-1912, p. 56. Date: between 13 Oct (appearance of last Uncommercial Traveller) and 21 Nov, when CD sent Tauchnitz the signed Agreement for publication of the 1st series; probably mid-Nov.

Gad's Hill Place, | Higham by Rochester, Kent.

The Uncommercial Traveller is finished for the present,[†1] but I may very probably write another series under the same title, but bye and bye.[†2] I bring it to a close now, because I am about to produce in All the Year Round a new serial story of my own writing, which will be continued every week for nine months.[†3] It will be rather longer than A Tale of Two Cities. Its title will be Great Expectations. ... Having a pretty house and grounds here, to which I am much attached.

To MADAME CELESTE, 18 NOVEMBER 1860

Mention in Anderson Galleries catalogue No. 1527 (Nov 1920); MS 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill Place, 18 Nov 60; addressed Madame Celeste.

Asking her to send him a box.[†4]

To W.G. GATTIE,[†5] 19 NOVEMBER 1860

Mention in John Heise catalogue No. 2452; MS (3rd person) 1 p.; dated 19 Nov 60; addressed W.G. Gattie.

Declining an article.

To MESSRS COUTTS & CO., 20 NOVEMBER 1860

MS Yale University Library.

[†a]Office [of] All The Year Round
20 Novr 1860

Messrs Coutts & Co

Purchase New 3 per Cents in my name to make up £10,000 Stock[†a]

CHARLES DICKENS

To CHARLES READE, 20 NOVEMBER 1860†

Text from Hearst sale catalogue, Feb 1941.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,

Tuesday Twentieth November 1860

My Dear Mr. Reade

You may like to see the letter that I have received from Fields, and I enclose it. It is clear that nothing can be done now towards our working nearer together,[†1] but I shall not relinquish the hope of that good result coming about, in its own good time.[†2]

Believe me always | Very faithfully yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

To FREDERICK DAYE,[†3] 21 NOVEMBER 1860*

MS Goodspeed's Book Shop.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Twenty First November 1860

Dear Sir

I cannot resist the last request you do me the honor to prefer.

Faithfully yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

To BARON BERNHARD TAUCHNITZ, 21 NOVEMBER 1860

Extract in Curt Otto, Der Verlag Bernhard Tauchnitz, 1837-1912, p. 56.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT,
Wednesday, November 21st, 1860.

I beg to acknowledge with thanks, the safe receipt of your draft for £ — Sterling,[†4] also, to send you the agreement with my signature and seal attached.

Great Expectations will occupy nine months in its weekly publication in All the Year Round. It will be four or five weekly numbers longer than A Tale of Two Cities.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 27 NOVEMBER 1860

MS Dickens House.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Twenty Seventh November 1860.

My Dearest Georgy.

I get up from dinner to write this to you and send it to Charing Cross, because I have been too busy all day to the last moment, to be able to pen a word in the epistolary way.

I found my mother yesterday, much better than I had supposed. She was not in bed, but down-stairs. Helen and Letitia were poulticing her poor head, and, the instant she saw me, she plucked up a spirit and asked me for "a pound"! ...[†1]

Frank was here this morning, for a hat, a suit of clothes, and his Volunteer entrance fee. It is curious that Wills asked me just now, whether I had ever thought at all of having him back here?

Wilkie begs me to send you his love, and expressly to let you know "that he is getting on with his work as badly as possible." Sooth to say, he is a little behind-hand, and has been getting up spasmodically all day and looking — in high-shouldered desperation — out at window.

Wills has just been called out to receive (in our drawing-room)

Antonio Brady[†2]

— announced by Johnson[†3] and we cannot imagine who it is. They seem to be wrestling overhead.

I will send another line tomorrow. In the mean time and always, I send my love to the Admiral and Plorn.

Ever Most affectionately.

CD.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 28 NOVEMBER 1860

MS Dickens House.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Twenty Eighth November 1860

My Dearest Georgy.

This is a small report tacked on to yesterdays, that you may know the Progress of things.

Wilkie has shot ahead today, and we have made a great advance. But we still have the "Wind Up"[†4] to do tomorrow, and also the final putting of it together and seeing that there is not a line too much. The last in my part, before it can go to Press. Therefore I shall not get home until Friday.

Mrs. Gaskell being much too long for the purpose,[†1] I have put Charley Collins into the Christmas No. I have made his the first story too.[†2]

I have not seen anything of Mary to this time (2 o'Clock), and therefore hardly expect it now. Celeste has been here today. The Irishman[†3] has made a sensible difference in the receipts. While waiting for proofs, we think of going over to see him tonight.[†4]

Love to the Admiral and Plorn

Ever my Dearest Georgy | Your most affectionate

CD.

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, [30] NOVEMBER 1860

MS Lytton Papers. Date: misdated by CD; Friday was 30 Nov 60.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Twenty Ninth November, 1860.

My Dear Bulwer Lytton

I need not tell you that I have received your letter with the strongest interest, and with the liveliest desire that a result I should so highly prize, may be brought about somehow or other.

This hasty note is written to let you know that I will immediately enter into every detail of calculation and enquiry, and will write you the fullest particulars on every head, by next Tuesday's post from London.

In the meantime I only add That there is no publisher whatever associated with All The Year Round — I, and Wills my sub Editor, are the Sole Proprietors; therefore implicit reliance may be placed in the Journal's proceedings. That the subject is as interesting to me as to any one alive, and would unquestionably be attractive.[†5] And that I will make every possible and impossible point, clear, and set forth with plain figures, when I write on Tuesday.

Meanwhile and Ever | Believe me | Affecy. Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To WILLIAM TAYLOR,[†1] 30 NOVEMBER 1860*

MS Berg Collection.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Thirtieth November, 1860.

Dear Sir

I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your obliging letter, and to assure you that my time and attention are far too much occupied, to admit of my having the pleasure you propose to me.

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. William Taylor

To JAMES BIRTLES,[†2] [?NOVEMBER 1860]

Extract in Anderson Auction Co. catalogue 983 (Jan 1913); MS 1 p.; addressed Mr Birtles. Date: The Uncommercial Traveller (1st series) was published as a book by Chapman & Hall in Jan 61; copies were ready by 15 Dec 60 (To Chapman, 5 Dec, fn); CD was probably correcting proofs in Nov.

Here are two corrections in my "Uncommercial"[†3] not made in the proof I sent from the office yesterday,

Faithfully yours,
CD.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 30 NOVEMBER 1860

Mention in Sotheby's catalogue, Feb 1882; MS 1 p.; dated 30 Nov 60.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, [NOVEMBER 1860]

Mention in American Art Association catalogue, Nov 1923; MS (3rd person) 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill Place, Nov 60.

December

To THOMAS MITTON, 2 DECEMBER 1860*

MS Dickens House.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Second December, 1860.

My Dear Mitton

This is a hasty line to let you know that I shall not be at the office until Tuesday week. I feel that I have rather overworked myself and want rest.

Ever Faithfully
CD.

To AUSTEN HENRY LAYARD, 4 DECEMBER 1860

MS British Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,

HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Fourth December 1860.

My Dear Layard.

I know you will readily believe that I would come if I could, and that I am heartily sorry I cannot.

A new story of my writing, nine months long, is just begun in All the Year Round. I have been taken off it for a month by other Christmas work, and for a few days have not been well. I am pledged to the active chairmanship of a certain public committee,[†1] and thus my time is so closely portioned out that I dare not interfere with my hours of retreat and occupation here. Tomorrow I MUST[†2] write. A certain allotment of my time when I have that story-demand upon me, has, all through my Author life, been an essential condition of my health and success. I have just returned here to work so many hours every day for so many days. It is really impossible for me to break my bond.

There is not a man in England who is more earnestly your friend and admirer than I am. The conviction that you know it, helps me out through this note. You are a man of so much mark to me, that I even regret your going into the House of Commons — for which assembly I have but a scant respect. But I would not mention it to the Southwark electors if I could come tomorrow;[†3] though I should venture to tell them (and even that your friends would consider impolitic), that I think them very much honored by having such a candidate for their suffrages.[†4]

My daughter and sister in law want to know what you have done with your "pledge" to come down here again? If they had votes for Southwark they would threaten to oppose you — but would never do it. I was solemnly sworn at breakfast to let you know that we should be delighted to see you. Bear witness that I kept my oath.

Ever My Dear Layard, | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

A.H. Layard Esquire

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 4 DECEMBER 1860

MS (copy on back of sheet of AYR paper in Wills's hand) Lytton Papers.

Copy

Gad's Hill Place,
Higham, by Rochester, Kent
Tuesday 4th. December 1860

My dear Bulwer Lytton,

All the intelligence I am going to give you proceeds on the following assumption: If it should be wrong, I will correct my intelligence on your explaining it to be wrong. But I hope and believe it to be quite right.

When you use the expression 350 "pages of close writing, chiefly on foolscap paper like that on which I scribble", I assume that you mean, pages of foolscap paper, written on one side; each page being half a sheet: not a quarter of a sheet:— that is not a sheet of foolscap paper torn in two.

This quantity I have had carefully estimated, at the printer's, and cast off. It would make about 150 printed pages of All the Year Round.

The publication of such 150 pages in the weekly quantity we usually consider the best for a serial work in All the Year Round would occupy about thirty weeks. In other words, seven months, or from six to seven months.

For the right of such publication in All the Year Round I would gladly pay you £1500:[†1] Fifteen hundred pounds. — I could at once conclude on your behalf a bargain with an unimpeachable publisher, who would pay you, for the right of re-publication in a collected form for two years (at prices not to interfere with the subsequent transfer to Routledge;[†2] but well within his figure) £1200: Twelve hundred pounds. — For the transmission of proofs to America week by week for simultaneous publication there; of course without damage to copyright here, I could get you (as our American transactions are on a very good footing) £300 — Three hundred pounds.

This would make, in all, £3000: Three thousand pounds.

The tale to be published as yours, with your name; and the bookseller's two years to commence — of course — from the time of publication in a complete form; which would be a week or so before it ended in All the Year Round.

As I have just begun a story of my own in All the Year Round we could not begin advantageously to publish yours before the 1st. of August — which would bring the publication of the book to the very best time of the year. But all the agreements could be immediately made, and the All the Year Round money is ready to be paid down.[†3]

Not to overload the plainness of these statements with other matter interesting to us as private friends and not associated with a question of business, I break off here, and hope to hear from you soon.

My dear [†a]Lytton Bulwer,[†a]

Ever affectionately Yours

CHARLES DICKENS[†4]

Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton.

To EDWARD CHAPMAN, 5 DECEMBER 1860*

MS Private.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Fifth December 1860.

My Dear Mr. Chapman

I write very hastily to save the post, after being at work all day.

The designs will not do — not at all. Pray [say][†1] something civil to Mr. [?Barrett],[†2] as that I hope to have the advantage of his pencil at some other time, but that we think it better not to defer the publication of this volume.[†3]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Edward Chapman Esquire

To H. G. ADAMS, 12 DECEMBER 1860*

MS Berg Collection.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Twelfth December 1860.

Dear Mr. Adams.

It was remiss in me not to acknowledge the receipt of your letter enclosing the tickets.[†4] But being exceedingly occupied, I forgot to do so. Pray excuse it.

They came to hand quite safely.

I should rather like to have my own table; but as Mr. Smith, the secretary of my readings, is holiday-making in Wales, I do not know that my servant can get at it. In all other respects (and in the table respect too, unless I send to you), let everything be as before. You cannot give me too good a light in the cross-batten overhead. Will you be so kind as to be particular in this? On the day of the Reading, at half past two, I will look in at the Hall.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

H. G. Adams Esquire

To HENRY CLARK,[†1] 12 DECEMBER 1860*

MS The Earl of Cromer.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Twelfth December, 1860

Sir.

I have been too constantly engaged since you wrote to me upwards of a week ago, to be able to conduct any but indispensable correspondence.

You will the better understand my inability to comply with the request you prefer to me in conjunction with the Reverend Mr. Granville,[†2] when I assure you that I am so constantly asked to read in aid of some object or other, that even the briefest acknowledgement of the receipt of letters to that effect is often impracticable.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Henry Clark Esquire

To W. HEPWORTH DIXON, 14 DECEMBER 1860*

MS Rosenbach Museum and Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Fourteenth December 1860.

My Dear Dixon

Many thanks for your note and its enclosure. The paper was done by an old and well known contributor of great attainments and proved faith, who conceived that in adapting and altering it from the original French, he made it new.[†3] I should not have taken it, if I had known that at the time. My impression was, that it was founded on a very short Swiss journal I once saw.

— He was wrong, but innocently. Of course he had no idea that the source had been touched before.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Hepworth Dixon Esquire

To [EDWARD CHAPMAN],[†4] 16 DECEMBER 1860*

MS Johns Hopkins University.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Sixteenth December, 1860.

My Dear Sir

I am greatly pleased with the look of the Uncommercial Traveller. His manner of "going off" too on his last new journey,[†5] is highly satisfactory.

If you will send me a dozen to the office — where I shall be to-morrow — I will send them out.

Many thanks for Thorley.[†1] He has not yet arrived, but doubtless is on the road. I intend trying him on every living thing (family and servants excepted) about the place[†2]

To MRS BROWN, 18 DECEMBER 1860*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Mrs. Brown / 1 Stratton Street / Piccadilly / W.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Eighteenth December 1860.

My Dear Mrs. Brown.

I am away to Gad's Hill this morning, as I have promised to read at Chatham tonight for the benefit of the local Institution. But I shall be in town on Thursday as well as tomorrow, and will take my chance of finding you in Stratton Street at halfpast three that afternoon. I was delighted to see Miss Coutts yesterday, and to see her looking so well.

Captain Jorgan[†3] is a portrait,[†4] and (if I may venture to say so) exactly like the man.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Brown.

To W. HEPWORTH DIXON, 19 DECEMBER 1860*

MS Rosenbach Museum and Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Nineteenth December 1860.

My Dear Dixon. I have just received the Bacon book.[†5] Accept my cordial thanks for it, and the needless assurance that I shall fall to upon it with the greatest interest and the steadiest intention.

If you have any nook on your shelves for a small volume, will you award it to a little book that I send with this?[†1]

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Hepworth Dixon Esquire

To HENRY G. WARREN,[†2] 19 DECEMBER 1860†

MS Dunedin Public Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Nineteenth December, 1860.

Sir

On the receipt of your letter, I read its accompanying account of the Newspaper Press Society.[†3] Before proposing any appointment for meeting the Deputation who do me the honor to desire to wait upon me, I wish to suggest to those gentlemen, through you, what has very strongly impressed me after considering that printed statement.

I think it would be highly injudicious to go to the public with an appeal for help, on such a state of things. Until the Society is better supported by the members of the Newspaper Press themselves, the case is a very weak one. I should feel great difficulty, if I were its advocate at a public dinner, in smoothing away the obvious objection that it has not yet sufficiently interested its own class. The facts and figures of the Report for 1860[†4] would be of a very depressing nature. There was a former Society with similar views in the main, I think, which had but a lingering existence and died quietly.[†5] Thus poorly armed, it would be fighting at a great disadvantage, to combat the objections of the Times. In a word, I can not see the way to a hopeful result.[†6]

I have — as you probably know — an old personal interest in the profession, and it has never cooled in the least. I should be very sorry to assist it in making a mistake, and I believe that the proposed Dinner would be a mistake.

If the Deputation should still wish to see me on the subject, and to urge other views opposed to these of mine, I hope I need not assure you that I will readily receive them. But I think it right that they should know my present feeling. It has the greater weight with me, because I know that I should be heartily glad to serve my old calling, and to bear testimony (as I always do) to the pleasure and pride I had in it. Yet with this inclining towards such an occasion in the abstract,

I can not resist the conviction that it had best not take place under these circumstances.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Henry G Warren Esquire

To EDWARD BROWN,[†1] 21 DECEMBER 1860

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Twenty First December, 1860.

Dear Sir

I will trouble you with as brief a letter as possible, in reference to my son Frank.

While he is very sensible of your consideration, and appears to like all his surroundings in your office, I observe that he does not in his heart take to City business as naturally as his eldest brother has done, and that his inclinations and character incline far more towards such employment as I can give him in the office of my own Journal. I therefore purpose to remove him from the City, at your convenience, and to try him under my own training.

Perhaps you will have the kindness to let him know when he had best leave you. Allow me to assure you that there is nothing to be considered on that head, but your own business convenience.

I beg to thank you for your reception of both my boys,[†2] and to offer you all the good wishes of the time of year.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Edward Brown Esquire

To BARON BERNHARD TAUCHNITZ, 22 DECEMBER 1860

Text from facsimile in The Harvest, Being the Record of One Hundred Years of Publishing, 1837-1937, 1937, Leipzig, p. 45.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Night Twenty Second December 1860.

My Dear Mr. Tauchnitz

I cannot consent to name the sum you shall pay for Great Expectations. I have too great a regard for you, and too high a sense of your honorable dealing, to wish to depart from the custom we have always observed. Whatever price you put upon it will satisfy me. You have already proposed the terms yourself, on former occasions, and I entreat you to do so now.

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Chevalier Bernhard Tauchnitz

To [?FREDERIC OUVRY],[†1] 22 DECEMBER 1860

Extract in Anderson Galleries catalogue, Dec 1933; MS 1 p.; dated Office of All the Year Round, 22 Dec 60.

Please to pay, on my account, Mr. Joseph Morris[†2] on his application at Christmas, Lady Day, Midsummer, Michaelmas the sum of £8.10s each time for rent.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, [?LATE DECEMBER] 1860

Mention in Rains Galleries catalogue No. 536 (Feb 1937); MS 1 p.; dated 1860 (no doubt during the week before Christmas).

Asking that a big turkey and ham be sent to Mr Wills.

To SAMUEL COLLINSON,[†3] 24 DECEMBER [1860]

Text from Walter T. Spencer, Forty Years in My Bookshop, p. 128; dated Gad's Hill, 24 Dec; addressed Samuel Collinson. Date: probably the first Christmas CD spent at Gad's Hill, that of 1860.

Dear Sir,

I beg to thank you cordially for the superb Pork Pie which graces the sideboard here to-day. Let me send you in return all the good wishes of the blessed season and the time of year.

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To DUDLEY COSTELLO,[†4] 27 DECEMBER 1860

Mention in Sotheby's catalogue, June 1929; dated Office of AYR, 27 Dec 60; addressed Dudley Costello.

Enclosing a presentation copy of The Uncommercial Traveller.[†5]

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 27 DECEMBER 1860

Extract in N, III, 196.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND
27th December 1860

Mentions being indisposed. It is certainly less cold here than at Gad's Hill, and the pipes are not frozen — which is a great comfort.

To CHARLES E. MUDIE,[†1] 27 DECEMBER 1860*

MS A. N. L. Munby.

Gad's Hill. | Twenty Seventh December, 1860.

Dear Sir

I beg to acknowledge the safe receipt of your liberal donation of Ten Guineas in aid of the Hullah Fund.[†2] I have had great pleasure in forwarding it to the Honorary Secretary.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles E Mudie Esquire

— IX - 354 —

To MISS MARY BOYLE, 28 DECEMBER 1860

MS Morgan Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Twenty Eighth December 1860.

My Dear Mary.

I cannot tell you how much I thank you for the beautiful Cigar-case, and how seasonable and friendly and good and warm-hearted it looked when I opened it at Gad's Hill. Besides which — it IS[†1] a cigar-case and will hold cigars: two crowning merits that I never yet knew to be possessed by any article claiming the same name. For all of these reasons — but more than all because it comes from you — I love it, and send you eighteen hundred and sixty kisses — with one in, for the New Year.

Both excellent stories and perfectly new. Your Joe swears that he never heard either — never a word or syllable of either — afore he laughed at 'em this blessed day.

I have no news, except that I am not quite well, and am being doctored. Pray read Great Expectations. I think it is very droll.[†2] It is a very great success, and seems universally liked — I suppose because it opens funnily and with an interest too.

I pass my time here (I am staying here alone) in working, taking physic, and taking a Stall at a Theatre every night. On Boxing night, I was at Covent Garden. A dull pantomime[†3] was "worked" (as we say) better than I ever saw a heavy piece worked on a first night, until suddenly and without a moment's warning, every scene on that immense stage fell over on its face and disclosed Chaos by Gaslight, behind! There never was such a business — about sixty people who were on the stage, being extinguished in the most remarkable manner.[†4] Not a soul was hurt. In the uproar, some moon-calf rescued a porter pot, six feet high (out of which the clown had been drinking when the accident happened), and stood it on the cushion of the lowest Proscenium Box P. S.[†5] beside a lady and gentleman who were dreadfully ashamed of it. The moment the House knew that nobody was injured, they directed their whole attention to this gigantic porter pot in its genteel position (the lady and gentleman trying to hide behind it), and roared with laughter. When a modest footman came from behind the Curtain to clear it, and took it up in his arms, like a Brobdingnagian Baby, we all laughed more than we had ever laughed in our lives. I don't know why.

We have had a fire here, but our people put it out before the Parish Engine arrived, like a drivelling Perambulator — with the Beadle in it — like an Imbecile Baby. Popular opinion, disappointed in the fire having been put out, Snowballed the Beadle. God bless it!

Over the way at the Lyceum, there is a very fair Christmas piece,[†1] with one or two uncommonly well done Nigger songs[†2] — one, remarkably gay and mad, done as the finale to a scene. Also a very fine transformation, though I don't know what it means.[†3]

The poor actors waylay me in Bow Street, to [†a]represent their necessities; and I often see one cut down a Court when he beholds me coming — cut round Drury Lane to face me — and come up towards me near this door, in the freshest and most accidental way; as if I were the last person he expected to see on the surface of this globe. The other day, there thus appeared before me (simultaneously with a scent of rum in the air) an aged greasy man with a pair of pumps under his arm. He said, he thought that if he could get down to somewhere (I think it was Newcastle), he could get "taken on" as Pantaloon, the existing Pantaloon, being "a stick Sir — a mere muff". I observed that I was sorry times were so bad with him. "Mr. Dickens, you know our profession Sir — no one knows it better Sir — there is no right feeling in it. I was Harlequin on your own Circuit Sir, for five and thirty years, and was displaced by a Boy Sir! — A boy!"

So no more at present, except love to Mrs. Watson and Bedgey Prig[†4] and all, from My Dear Mary

Your ever affectionate

Joe.

P.S. | DON'T[†5] I pine neither?
P. P. S. I did my best to arouse Forster's worst feelings; but he had got into a Christmas habit of mind, and wouldn't respond.[†a]

To GEORGINA HOGARTH, 28 DECEMBER 1860

MS Dickens House.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Twenty Eighth December 1860

My Dearest Georgy.

As I have to see Frank Beard again on Monday morning, and as I am getting alarmed about my work, it is clear to me that I had best stay here. Besides the loss of time in going backwards and forwards (in itself of the greatest importance as you know), I must not get wet or catch cold. Therefore here I had best remain.

Now understand, both you and Mary, that there is not the least occasion to be anxious about me. I have no kind of pain — scarcely an uneasiness — but I am not rid of the disagreeables that affected me in that hot summer,[†1] and they must be put right. I have delivered myself over to be physicked, and that is the long and short of it.

If you have the least doubt about me, I am open to inspection. If you would like to come up on Sunday and dine with me (leaving Mamie to look after the boys) do so. But be sure that if I wanted any nursing, I should say so, and should resort to you sooner than to anybody on earth.

I want, by James,[†2] the pair of thick trousers out of my drawer, which is not the corduroy pair, nor the pair with the black stripe down the side. Also any clean things that you know or suspect I may require. He brings some tongues from Mrs. Wills and a bottle of liqueur — a book for you — and a letter for Mamie.

Tell Barber that as the Green House is unfortunately not included in the policy of Insurance, I want, as soon as possible, an estimate from Couchman[†3] for repairing it.

Tell Bottle[†4] that if Toby is no better, he had best arrange to have him fired, and to keep the Rochester horse on hire. Tell him further, not to drive the said horse too fast.

I think this is all I have to say, except best love to Gad's Hill in general.

Ever affectionately.

CD.

To E. J. FRASER,[†5] 29 DECEMBER 1860

Extracts in Sotheby's catalogue, Dec 1977 and Dec 1981; MS 2 pp.; dated Office of AYR, 29 Dec 60; addressed E. J. Fraser.

I should not like to make a special personal appeal to the house of George Moore & Co... I know George Moore very well but I feel that I really have no right to press such a case upon him. As to my being interested in it, he will be sure to get that knowledge out of the advertisement.[†6]

As to our expectations from the country, I fully agree with you. They are unconsciously exaggerated out of all proportion by such of our body as know nothing whatever of such matters. But you and I (I think) must remember that we have accepted a responsibility which will surely be urged against us — if we give the least occasion — when disappointment comes.

I would not delay the country advertizing. The article[†1] will not act upon the advertizing as well as the advertizing will act upon it.... To the best of my judgment it is, in that aspect, of no moment which comes first.

To AUSTEN HENRY LAYARD, 30 DECEMBER 1860

MS British Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Sunday Thirtieth December 1860

My Dear Layard

I am exceedingly sorry to say that I must forego, for a time, the pleasure of seeing you at Gad's Hill. I am not well, and am obliged to come to town for a week or two, to be near my Doctor, and to diminish the risks of taking cold through coming backwards and forwards. I will report myself when "discharged cured."

Ever Cordially Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To FREDERICK GYE,†2 [LATE DECEMBER 1860]

Mention in To Gye, 3 Jan 61. Date: probably a few days before that letter, because of its absence of date and address.

To WILLIAM HARRISON AND LOUISA PYNE,†3 [LATE DECEMBER 1860]

Mention in To Gye, 3 Jan 61.

Asking them for their permission†4 to give a concert at Covent Garden in aid of the Hullah Fund on 4 Feb 61.

To [?G. A.] A'BECKETT,†1 1860

Mention in Traylen catalogue, Sep 1957 in Extra Illustrated The A'Becketts of Punch; MS 1 p.; dated 1860.

To [?EDWARD CHAPMAN], 1860

Extract in John Anderson Jr catalogue No. 626; MS 1 p.; dated 1860.

Please to deliver to Mr. Eeles for me, three of the collected Christmas Books, cheap edition.†2

To W. S. HOOLE,†3 1860

Summary in Spencer catalogue, 28b; dated 1860; addressed Mr. Hoole.

CD will be at the office till Tuesday week.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, [1860]

Extract in C. F. Libbie catalogue, May 1889; MS 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill Place, 1860.

I have no such portrait of me as you describe.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT,[†4] [?1859-60]

MS (fragment) Yale University Library. Date: 1859-60 on signature.

With kind regard to all, and as much homage as a mere Southerner may send to the shade of Wallace.[†5]

Believe me Ever | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 1860

Extract in Anderson Galleries catalogue No. 800; MS 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill Place 1860.

You are heartily welcome to use my name in the manner you purpose, and I shall rejoice to hear of your success.

1861

January

To GEORGINA HOGARTH, 2 JANUARY 1861

MS Dickens House.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Second January 1861

My Dearest Georgy.

This is to wish you many Happy New Years, and to introduce a Postscript (which I will add on returning from Frank Beard's), with the latest Bulletin of my health.

Wilkie and I (secluded in a cab, as if I were a Crimean Invalid; — I have a Brougham today) went to the Buckley's[†1] last night. They do the most preposterous things, in the way of Violin Solos, Deeply Sentimental Songs, and Lucrezia Borgia music,[†2] sung by a majestic female in black velvet and Jewels, with a blackened face![†3] All that part of it, is intolerably bad. But the real Nigger things are very good; and there is one man — the tambourine — who attempts to do things with chairs, in remembrance of an acrobat he has seen, which is the most genuinely ludicrous thing of its kind, I ever beheld. Nor have I ever seen so good a presentation as his, of the real Negro.

I shall be delighted to see you on Sunday, if Marguerite[†4] does not come. But I predict that she WILL[†5] come — and of course I shall turn out right.

Ever affectionately

CD.

P. S. Frank Beard thinks me decidedly better today. He says the local irritation[†6] (arising from the natural temperament of the beast) is so extreme, that it is difficult to deal with me; but that he has a strong belief I am much better. He soothes me in divers ways today — leaves off the strong medicine — and I go to him again tomorrow.

To FREDERICK GYE, 3 JANUARY 1861*

MS Private.

Gad's Hill | Thursday Third January, 1861

My Dear Sir

I am exceedingly obliged to you for your kind letter, and cordially thank you for it — no less on my personal behalf, than on that of the Hullah Fund Committee.

Let me beg to apologize to you for this ridiculous circumstance that my letter had neither date nor address — a preposterous omission of the Honorary Secretary's Secretary.

Mr. Harrison and Miss Pyne have certainly acceded to the Committee's request.

Believe me always | Very faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Fredk. Gye Esquire.

To CAPTAIN E. E. MORGAN,[†1] 3 JANUARY 1861†

MS Dr and Mrs Philip Rulon and Family. Address: Paid | Captain E. E. Morgan | New York | U.S. of America.[†2]

Gad's Hill near Rochester.
Thursday Third January 1861.

My Dear Friend.

I am heartily obliged to you for your seasonable and welcome remembrance. It came to the office (when I was there) in the pleasantest manner, brought by two seafaring men, as if they had swum across with it. Never were such fine apples, or in such admirable preservation! And the Cigars came so opportunely, that I had just four and twenty of my Morgans — that's the name I give them — left.

I have sold Tavistock House, and made this place, which is my own Freehold, our head quarters. But in the season (that is to say, from February to June) I shall have a furnished house in London, for my daughter's sake. We have always been expecting to receive some intelligence of your son.[†3] Pray let me know whether he has come to London, or is coming.

We all wish you and yours many many happy New Years. [†a]I hope you will have seen the Christmas No. of All The Year Round? Here and there, in the description of the sea-going Hero,[†4] I have given a touch or two of remembrance of Somebody you know;[†5] very heartily desiring that thousands of people may have some faint reflection of the pleasure I have for many years derived from the contemplation of a most amiable nature and most remarkable man.[†a]

I have a little book of mine, "The Uncommercial Traveller", to send you. It shall come out, as usual.

With kindest regard

Believe me My Dear Morgan | Ever affectionately Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To HENRY G. WARREN, [3 JANUARY 1861]

Mention in Newspaper Press Fund Minute Book, 12 Jan 61; dated 3 Jan 61; addressed Henry G. Warren.

Expressing his sympathy with the objects of the Newspaper Press Fund and enclosing a donation.[†1]

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 5 JANUARY 1861

MS Dickens House

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Saturday Fifth January 1861

My Dearest Georgy. Frank Beard is in spirits about me this morning, and expresses himself accordingly.

I have not the heart to open the enclosed. Will you make me out a List of that affectionate contribution towards my ruin.[†2]

With love to Mamie and to all

Ever most affecy.

CD.

P. S. Enclosed for the Tax Collector

To THE EDITOR[†3] OF THE LEICESTER ADVERTISER, 5 JANUARY 1861

Text from the Athenaeum, 15 Aug 1891.

Gad's Hill, near Rochester, Saturday,
Fifth January, 1861.

Sir,

I beg to express my regret that I have no such thing by me as the cutting from the Leicester paper, to which you refer.[†4] In the immense number of communications I receive I cannot possibly be accountable for an unsolicited enclosure of that kind, nor can I charge my memory with any minute particulars respecting it. But I have the strongest impression that I wrote to you in reply to your letter; it almost amounts to a positive certainty.

None of the "Several applications" for the return of this cutting, to which you refer, have ever reached me. It is possible that you may have addressed those letters to the office of All the Year Round, and that they may not have been understood in the course of business. They have not been laid before me, though my letters come by hundreds rather than by dozens.

I am sincerely sorry that you should be put to any inconvenience; but (as I have said) I have not this extract among my papers, nor can I in any reason hope to recover a cutting from a recent newspaper once lost sight of.

I am, Sir, | Your faithful Servant,
CHARLES DICKENS

To GEORGINA HOGARTH, 7 JANUARY 1861

MS Dickens House.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Monday Seventh January 1861.

My Dearest Georgy.

I quite approve of the Theatrical arrangements, and have taken 6 places in the centre of the Dress circle — 4 on the front row, and 2 on the second — for next Saturday.[†1] I shall, of course, expect you on Friday.

Frank Beard was again in spirits about me this morning. I have not taken the objectionable medicine since last Friday. I go to him again tomorrow. I begin to have real hopes of getting out of it before many days are over.

Tell Marguerite with my love, that I very much delighted Frank Beard by telling him what an impression her altered appearance made at Gad's Hill. He was not at all well (taken last night with a sudden chill), and the account acted like a cordial on him.

I write very hastily; having been busy the whole day, and having just time left for the Post.

Ever most affectionately | With best love to Mamie and all,

CD.

To LADY OLLIFFE,[†2] [?7 JANUARY 1861]

MS (envelope) Mr L. Mastracci. Address: Lady Olliffe | The Mansion House[†3] | E.C. PM London [?Jan 7] 61.[†4]

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 7 JANUARY 1861*

MS Private.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Monday Seventh January 1861.

My Dear Ouvry.

It occurred to us as we came back here from Council's[†1] chambers, that one point in the case[†2] is not explained to you. It may affect the clearing of the bill.

Three introduced episodical stories and a poem — to be found in the Christmas No. are not by Wilkie Collins or by me.[†3] We invented, designed, and wrote, the whole of the No. with those exceptions. Therefore we are the authors of the story called the "Message from The Sea", and wrote the whole of that main story and plot. But the Episodes (which have nothing to do with it) are not ours.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 8 JANUARY 1861*

MS Private.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Eighth January 1861.

My Dear Ouvry

You may as well know that one of our people was at the Britannia Theatre last night, and that they announced from the Stage "that they could not play their adaptation of Mr. Dickens's admirable work,[†4] because they had been that evening served with a notice of an application for an Injunction to prevent them, and they had no course but to obey. They did not know why Mr. Dickens took this course with them now and had never done so before;[†1] but they submitted, and must beg permission of the audience to substitute another piece".[†2] Which was duly done. Mr. Lane is, as I think I told you, about the most respectable man in that line.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To THE EDITOR OF THE TIMES, 8 JANUARY 1861

Text from The Times, 12 Jan 61.

Gad's-hill, Jan.8.

Sir,

I shall feel greatly obliged to you if you will allow me to make known to theatrical managers, through your columns, that I believe it is in the power of any English writer of fiction legally to prevent any work of his from being dramatized or adapted for the stage without his consent, and that I have taken measures for the assertion of this right in my own case, and intend to try it with whomsoever may violate it.

It happened but yesterday that I had, in conjunction with Mr. Wilkie Collins, very unwillingly to assert this principle in defence of a joint production of ours against the proprietor of the Britannia Theatre. In a most frank and honest manner he immediately withdrew an announced piece on the night of its intended first representation, and when his audience were assembled. As I had no earlier opportunity of giving him notice of my intention to uphold the rights of authors, and as I inconvenienced a gentleman for whom I have a respect, with great reluctance, and should be exceedingly sorry to do the like in any other case, perhaps you will find space for this letter.[†3]

Faithfully yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 9 JANUARY 1861

MS Comtesse de Suzannet.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Ninth January 1861.

My Dearest Georgy.

"We" are in the full swing of stopping managers from playing A Message from the Sea. I privately doubt the strength of our position in the Court of Chancery, if we try it; but it is worth trying.[†1]

I am aware that Mr. Lane of the Britannia sent an emissary to Gad's Hill yesterday. It unfortunately happens that the first man "we" have to assert the principle against, is a very good man whom I really respect.

Will you take charge of the enclosed cheque,[†2] and [s]end it?

I have no news, except that I really hope and believe I am gradually getting well. If I have no check, I hope to be soon discharged by the Medico. He was better yesterday (tell Marguerite with my love), but still ill. I go to him again tomorrow.

I am going to see Laura[†3] today at the Mansion House![†4]

Ever affectionately

CD.

Best Love to dear Mamie and to all.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 9 JANUARY 1861

MS Dickens House.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Ninth January 1861

My Dearest Georgy. This is a sequel to another note of mine, posted earlier today. Laura wants us to dine there on Sunday at 6 ½. Family dinner, she expressly says. No one there. No particular Dress. Shall we go? Perhaps it might be well to take the opportunity. Anyway, bring with you my dress coat (the one without the velvet collar) and black trousers.

Ever affecy.

CD.

To LADY OLLIFFE, 9 JANUARY 1861

Mention in Union Art Galleries catalogue, June 1934; MS 1 p.; dated Office of AYR, 9 Jan 61; addressed Lady Olliffe.

Declining an invitation to dinner on the ground of ill health.

To RICHARD NELSON LEE,[†1] [?7-9 JANUARY 1861]

Mention in To Reade, 9 Jan 61. Date: between 7 and 9 Jan.

Saying that he cannot concede Lee the right to produce a dramatized version of "A Message from the Sea" and that he and Collins have determined to bring a Chancery action against any Manager who dramatizes a book of his without his consent.

To CHARLES READE, 9 JANUARY 1861

MS Benoliel Collection.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Ninth January 1861.

My Dear Mr. Reade.

I must report progress to you in the matter of our rights.

On Sunday I became aware that Mr. Lane of the Britannia Theatre (a very respectable and responsible man), announced a version of "A Message from the Sea", the Xmas No. by myself and Wilkie Collins, for Monday Night. On Monday morning, I went to my Solicitor, and with him to Counsel,[†2] and caused Mr. Lane to be served with a Notice that afternoon, that he would play the piece at his peril, and that if he did, I would apply to the Court of Chancery. I sent one of my people to the Theatre at night, and they (with expressions of all due respect) gave out from the Stage what had happened, and said they had no course but to submit — withdraw the piece — and substitute another. Yesterday we filed a bill, and gave Mr. Lane notice that we should require an undertaking that he never would produce the piece, and should also require to be delivered up to us, any copies of it in his possession. Otherwise we must proceed. Yesterday evening, he sent down to Gad's Hill and Heaven knows where not, after me; but of course his business lies with my solicitor.[†3]

Mr. Nelson Lee has since made two written applications to me, to produce another version of the same story.[†4] I have replied that I cannot concede that right to him, and that in a resolution to uphold the rights of English Authors, I have determined to try the principle in the Court of Chancery,[†1] against any Manager who dramatizes a book of mine without my consent.

So far, so good. But Mr. Hobhouse, Counsel in the case, does NOT[†2] think that the duly registered and published description of a play not actually written, will serve us in the Court of Chancery. He thinks the point worth trying for an Injunction, but he is not at all hopeful of the result. If we are driven to an application, we desire to make it before Page Wood,[†3] who seems to be the most sympathetic man in copyright cases.

If you have any point you can strengthen the case with, pray let me have the benefit of your knowledge and advice.[†4] Address me here, as I shall be in town for some days. I hope it may be reassuring to you to know that I have not half-entered into the contest, but am to be relied upon to fight it out grimly to the Death.[†5]

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

I caused it to be explained in writing to Lane (by my solicitor) that I had no hostility whatever towards him, and did not intend to make any demand upon him for costs.

To G. F. HUDSON,[†1] 10 JANUARY 1861*

MS Dickens House.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Tenth January 1861.

My Dear Mr. Hudson

Enclosed is my Sign Manual. In witness whereof, here it is again.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

G. Hudson Esquire

To MRS MALLESON,[†2] 14 JANUARY 1861

Text from MDGH, III, 197.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Monday, 14th January, 1861.

My Dear Mrs. Malleson,

I am truly sorry that I cannot have the pleasure of dining with you on Thursday. Although I consider myself quite well, and although my doctor almost admits the fact when I indignantly tax him with it, I am not discharged. His treatment renders him very fearful that I should take cold in going to and fro; and he makes excuses, therefore (as I darkly suspect), for keeping me here until said treatment is done with. This morning he tells me he must see me "once more, on Wednesday." As he has said the like for a whole week, my confidence is not blooming enough at this present writing to justify me in leaving a possibility of Banquo's place at your table.[†3] Hence this note. It is screwed out of me.

With kind regards to Mr. Malleson, believe me,

Ever faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To BARON BERNHARD TAUCHNITZ, 14 JANUARY 1861

Extract in Curt Otto, Der Verlag Bernhard Tauchnitz, 1837-1912, p. 56.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Monday, January 14th, 1861.

I beg to return you the agreement for Great Expectations, with my signature and seal. It is perfectly satisfactory to me.[†4]

I have given Mr. Joseph Crowe,[†1] the English Consul-General at Leipzig, a letter of introduction to you.[†2] He wishes to have the honour of knowing you, and he is an accomplished gentleman who has won his place entirely by his own merits. Lord John Russell nominated him to his present office, without any application on his behalf, but solely because he had personally distinguished himself in another official capacity.[†3]

To BARON BERNHARD TAUCHNITZ, 14 JANUARY 1861*

MS Rawlins Collection, Isle of Man.

Gad's Hill, by Rochester
Monday Fourteenth January, 1861.

My Dear Baron.

Allow me to have the honor and pleasure of presenting to you, my friend Mr. Joseph Crowe, English Consul-General at Leipzig. Mr. Crowe is a gentleman for whom I have a high regard and respect, and who is indebted for the post he fills, to nothing but a just recognition of his services and merits. He knows that I hold you in great esteem, and I am proud to have the privilege of making you acquainted.

My Dear Baron | Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Baron Tauchnitz

To THE PRINCIPAL LIBRARIAN, BRITISH MUSEUM, [MID-JANUARY 1861]

Mention in Register of Readers Names, MS British Library. Date: no doubt shortly before Francis Dickens's admission to the Reading Room on 16 Jan.[†4]

Recommending Francis Jeffrey Dickens for admission to the Reading Room.

To W. HEPWORTH DIXON, 16 JANUARY 1861*

MS Rosenbach Museum & Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Sixteenth January 1861.

My Dear Dixon

My business Co-Trustee[†1] having returned to London, I have been able today to arrange Miss Jerrold's business.[†2]

As you were so kind as to say, you would take charge of any cheque on Miss Jerrold's behalf, I beg to enclose you one for £77..5..0 (Seventy Seven Pounds, Five Shillings); being one year's income, interest on the whole principle invested, less Income Tax. Another halfyear's Income will be due in March. I will forward it to you for Miss Jerrold in like manner.

In order that I may have vouchers deposited with the other papers, will you kindly get Miss Jerrold's receipt for this money.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To MAJOR H. B. HALL,[†3] 16 JANUARY 1861

MS Berg Collection.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Sixteenth January 1861.

My Dear Sir

I should have proposed an earlier appointment for having the pleasure of seeing you, but that I have been unwell and under the Doctor's hands and not at all sure of my time for such purposes.

Early next month I purpose coming to town with my family, for the season. On Wednesday next (this day week) at two o'Clock, I shall be here, and very happy to see you if you should be in town.

Your little book on the Oyster,[†4] I have read with much pleasure: thinking it exceedingly pleasant. The main objection (for the purposes of this Journal) to such a MS as the enclosed may be thus stated.

There is too much in it, about the subject and too little of the subject. Everybody knows what a Bagman was and is,[†5] and it is quite unnecessary to explain. There is no space here for a series of articles, unless each is complete — or nearly complete — in itself. The Bagman would not be an attractive Title. I have lately concluded the first series of a set of papers called the *Un*commercial Traveller, and the Commercial Traveller has been often used. Lastly, there was published in Household Words, a series extending over a long time (two or three years as I remember), called The Roving Englishman.[†1] And I fear you might come on the same ground.[†2] But I cannot speak with any confidence on this subject, unless I had some one finished paper of yours to peruse.[†3] Excuse my adding that I do not believe in any man's power to write for the public in a hurry and without great pains — I certainly do not believe, and never have believed, in my own.

It is a pleasure to me, and a very sincere one, to receive any letter from our friend Hawkins,[†4] no matter of what date.

Believe me My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Major H. B. Hall

To JAMES R. WARE,[†5] 16 JANUARY 1861

Extract in N, III, 206.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
16th January 1861

The Woman in White being wholly Mr. Wilkie Collins's and the right to sanction or object to its representation on the stage being wholly that gentleman's, I have forwarded your letter and its two enclosures to him without delay.

To E. J. FRASER, 17 JANUARY 1861

Summary in Sotheby's catalogue, Dec 1977 (item 300); MS 1 p.; dated Office of AYR, 17 Jan 61; addressed Edward J. Fraser.

Explaining that he may have to go to Gad's Hill the following day and be obliged to remain there until early on Tuesday morning and therefore asking him, should he himself be prevented from presiding over the committee that he state at the meeting Dickens's recommendation that they adjourn after the Covent Garden Concert,[†6] that they continue the advertisements but that they incur no new expenses, other than such as are known to be necessary by the Musical Sub-Committee, for the proposals they are advancing.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 17 JANUARY 1861

MS Dickens House. Address: Miss Hogarth | Gad's Hill Place | Higham by Rochester.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Seventeenth January 1861.

My Dearest Georgy.

When I was calculating yesterday about coming down, I was under an unaccountable impression that there was a day less in the week than there is. It seems to me that I cannot do better than come down at once, and get my Number[†1] done at Gad's. Will you meet me, therefore, at Gravesend tomorrow (Friday), and I will come by the 2.20 Train. I think the best thing I can do, will be to take possession of the best Spare Room, if you will have its fire lighted and will put my odds and ends there.

I have had my Vapour Bath and have had the very utmost of it — and, strange to add, have positively enjoyed it!!!

Best love to dear Mamie and to all.

Ever affecy.
CD.

To HENRI VIEUXTEMPS,[†2] 17 JANUARY 1861

MS (signature only in CD's hand) Madame Jean Vieuxtemps.

26 Wellington Street North
17th. January 1861.

Sir,

As a Concert is about to be given by the Vocal Association under the direction of Mr. Benedict[†3] at St James's Hall on the evening of Tuesday the 29th Inst in aid of the Committee of the Hullah Fund,[†4] at which the Artistes who will be present have, in the most generous manner offered their assistance, I am requested by the Committee to ask if you also will kindly come to their aid, by playing any piece agreeable to yourself on this occasion.[†5] The very general desire evinced by all Branches of the profession and amateurs to assist in the work the Committee has in hand, has encouraged us to make this request.

I remain, Sir, | Your faithful Servt.
CHARLES DICKENS
Chairman of the Committee

M. Vieuxtemps

To E. J. FRASER, 18 JANUARY 1861

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, 13 Dec 1977; MS 1 p.; dated Office of AYR, 18 Jan 61; addressed Edward J. Fraser Esquire | 26 Strand.

Agreeing with him concerning advertising, returning a cheque, sending a letter from Mr. Santley[†1] and promising to send other letters, ... My impression is that there is not much more to be got from the Public in the subscription way, and when the Covent Garden Concert is over, I would have a new and closing kind of advertisement.[†2]

To [?HENRY MORLEY],[†3] [18 JANUARY 1861]

Mention in next. Date: clearly written same day.

Sending him the substance of Mrs Rosher's[†4] letter, to help him with his article, "The Frozen Out Poor Law".[†5]

To MRS ROSHER, 18 JANUARY 1861*

MS (copy) Mrs E. Lea.[†6]

Gads Hill Place | Higham by Rochester Kent
Friday Night Eighteenth January 1861

My dear Mrs Rosher

Coming down here from London this afternoon, I found your letter awaiting me. It opportunely happened that I had been writing at my Office in the morning, the heads of an Article that I wished to be done by one of the "All the Year Round" Staff[†7] on the shortcomings of Vestries and Poor Law Guardians and the jolter headed imbecility of the Poor Law Board in the matter of forcing them to do their duty.[†8] The incapacity or inability of the two powers combined to act vigorously in a state of things so utterly out of the way as a hard winter — set against the immense amount levied for the relief of the poor, and the universal desire in all real human hearts to relieve them, — seems to me as sad a spectacle as this world has to show.

I have sent the substance of your letter to the gentleman to whom I had sent my notes and have begged him to stab St Pancras with rigorous justice.[†1] I know those fellows of old and would (in a perfectly Christian frame of mind) knock them all on the head with the greatest satisfaction.

Pray do not suppose that the matter is put aside when you see [a] fortnight go by without reference to it. "All the Year Round" is published in America and in England on the same day and consequently the Press is always in advance of the Reader

With kind regards to Mr. Rosher

Believe me Always | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 23 JANUARY 1861

MS Lytton Papers.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Twenty Third January 1861.

My Dear Bulwer Lytton.

I am delighted to receive your letter, and to look forward with confidence to having such a successor in August.[†2] I can honestly assure you that I never have been so pleased at heart in all my Literary life, as I am in the proud thought of standing side by side with you before this great audience.

In regard of the story, I have perfect faith in such a master-hand as yours; and I know that what such an Artist feels to be terrible and original, is unquestionably so. You whet my interest by what you write of it, to the utmost extent.

Believe me ever | Affecy. Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To [FREDERIC CHAPMAN], 25 JANUARY 1861*

Text in David J. Holmes catalogue No. 15 (June 1986), checked from MS Sotheby, July 1990.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Twenty Fifth January 1861.

My Dear Sir

I have received a private letter from Mr. Lever in which he asks me if I will dispose for him his "Day's Ride" as a completed book. He makes no conditions whatever. He merely says that his expectations are very reasonable, and that he wishes the book to be offered in the first instance to your House.[†3]

The end of it will be published here on the 20th. of March. The book might be published a week before that time. Will you let me know whether you are disposed to make an offer for it,[†1] and, if so what[†2]

To MRS COWDEN CLARKE, 25 JANUARY 1861†

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds. Address: Mrs. Cowden Clarke | Maison Quaglia | Au Port | Nice Maritime.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Twenty Fifth January 1861.

My Dear Mrs. Cowden Clarke.

I am most reluctantly obliged to decline the paper on the Cornice[†3] in rain, — not because of any want of merit in itself, or of any want of interest in me for a place of which I think I know every stone; but because we have had so many descriptions of localities, and have so many in type which I very slowly use, that I am really afraid to increase their number, at this time. I have in Proof two Italian descriptions which have remained in that condition for more than a year.

The paper shall be carefully preserved in my Drawer here, until you tell me, at your leisure and opportunity whether I shall send it to Dean Street.[†4]

When I was writing the Uncommercial Traveller to which you refer,[†5] it was pleasant to hope that my friends in Italy would like it. Poor Lord Dudley Stuart[†6] was the generous Englishman,[†7] as I dare say I have no need to tell you.

I am glad to find you so faithfully following Great Expectations,[†8] which story is an immense success. As I was at work upon it the other day, a letter from your sister Emma appeared upon my table (she wanted some autographs for enthusiastic pupils).[†9] Instantly, I seemed to see her at needlework in the dark stage box of the Haymarket[†10] in The Morning, and you swept yourself into my full view with a "Property" house-broom.

With kindest regard to Cowden Clarke, whom I have always quoted since the Lighthouse[†1] as the best "audience" known to mortality.

Believe me ever | Affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To CHARLES LEVER, 25 JANUARY 1861

MS Widener Collection, Harvard.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Twenty Fifth January 1861.

My Dear Lever.

I hasten to let you know by return of post, that I will (of course) do all I can in the matter of the completed Day's Ride. I have already sent off to Chapman and bide his appearance. I have deemed it right to say no more to him than that I have it in charge from you to dispose of the book — that you lay no conditions upon me beyond observing that your expectations are reasonable — and that you wish it to be offered to that house before any other. "Let me know" I add, "whether you are disposed to make an offer for it; and if so, what."

I fear the book may be difficult to sell. So much I think it right to confide to you; but I will do my best, you may be sure. If Chapmans should not come into the ring, I will try Sampson Low. If he should exhibit a white feather, I will try Hurst and Blackett.[†2]

You shall hear from me again, the moment I have any thing to report. I send you these scratches at once, in order that you may know that I have received yours and have begun to act upon it. I am heartily sorry to learn that your boy has given you so much trouble.[†3] It is a tremendous weight and anxiety to be in our proud and venerable condition. Let me offer you one consolation out of the fulness of my heart — and quiver. You have not seven of them; I have![†4]

Ever affectionately Yours | My Dear Lever
CHARLES DICKENS

To F. C. BEARD, 29 JANUARY 1861

MS Dickens House.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Twenty Ninth January 1861.

My Dear Frank Beard

I should like to be inspected — though I hope I can offer no new attractions. If your visits should bring you near here this afternoon (I am detained by appointments all day), will you kindly give me a call? If not, I'll call on you tomorrow.

Ever Faithfully
CD.

To THOMAS BEARD, 29 JANUARY 1861

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire / 42 Portman Place / Edgeware Road / London.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Evening Twenty Ninth January 1861

My Dear Beard

We have taken a furnished house in town until Midsummer — No. 3 Hanover Terrace, Regents Park. If you will come and dine with us there on my birthday, Thursday 7th. February at half past 6, we shall be delighted to see you. No set party.

Answer here, as we don't take possession until Monday.

☞[†1] I am going to read again — at Saint James's Hall — in March.

Ever affecy

CD

To W. NOY WILKINS,[†2] 29 JANUARY 1861

MS Morgan Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Twenty Ninth January 1861.

Dear Sir

I feel it quite hopeless to endeavour to present my position before you — in reference to such a letter as yours — in its plain and true light. When you suppose it would have cost Mr. Thackeray "but a word" to use his influence to obtain you some curatorship or the like, you fill me with a sense of the impossibility of leading you to a more charitable judgment of Mr. Dickens.

Nevertheless, I will put the truth before you.

Scarcely a day of my life passes, or has passed, for many years, without bringing me some letter similar to yours. Often they will come by dozens — scores — hundreds. My time and attention would be pretty well occupied without them, and the claims upon me (some very near home) for all the influence and means of help that I do and do not possess, are not commonly heavy. I have no power to aid you towards the attainment of your object. It is the simple exact truth, and nothing can alter it. So great is the disquietude I constantly undergo from having to write to some new correspondent, in this strain, that God knows I would resort to another for relief, if I could.

Your Studies from Nature appear to me to express an excellent observation of Nature, in a loving and healthy spirit. But what then? The Dealers and Dealers' prices of which you complain, will not be influenced by that honest opinion. Nor will it have the least effect upon the President of the Royal Academy, or the Directors of the Schools of Design. Assuming your supposition to be correct that these authorities are adverse to you, I have no more power than you have to render them favorable. And assuming them to be quite disinterested and dispassionate towards you, I have no voice or weight in any appointment that any of them make.

I will retain your packet over tomorrow, and will then cause it to be sent to your house. I write under the pressure of occupation and business, and therefore write briefly.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. Noy Wilkins Esquire

To W. HEPWORTH DIXON, 31 JANUARY 1861*

MS Rosenbach Museum & Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Thirty First Jany. 1861

My Dear Dixon.

I have a high respect for the memory of Dundonald,[†1] and a great interest in his story.

But I have no faith in statues, and no desire to help towards the remembrance of any man in that manner. The existing abominations in that wise fill my soul with grief and despair. I will be one of any committee to take any public statue down, but cannot be a committee-man to set one up.

I read the Bacon[†1] through, in a couple of sittings, and with very great pleasure. I cannot quite believe, and I am pained by a certain servility[†2] in some of his letters which you do not see there — which may not be there — but which I feel to be there. You make me very curious respecting the New Edition.[†3] Go on and prosper.[†4]

Faithfully Yours always
CD.

Hepworth Dixon Esquire

I suppose the Collier[†5] Rally[†6] rather broke down?

To MESSRS GEORGE HEAD & CO.,[†7] 31 JANUARY 1861*

MS Private.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Thirty First January 1861

Gentlemen

I beg to thank you for your letter of yesterday's date, and to add that I shall be much obliged to you if you will have the goodness to order me 4 tons of coals.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. George Head and Co.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 31 JANUARY 1861*

MS Mr Lewis P. Kinsey, Jr.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Thirty First January 1861.

My Dearest Georgy.

I have been writing all day, and am rather addle headed.

I send, enclosed, a cheque for King's[†1] coal bill, and a letter from him. The answer to the latter is, that not being at Gad's Hill, we shall not want more coals at present.

In packing, if you can find room for a bottle or two of Whiskey and Eau d'Or[†2] as liqueurs, put them in.

I have sent 4 tons of coals to Hanover Terrace. Also, reasonably good preparation in the wine and spirit way. Firewood I will instruct John about.

It is not at all probable, I think, that I shall get down between this and Monday

In haste | Ever Affectionately

CD

February

To W. W. F. DE CERJAT, 1 FEBRUARY 1861†

MS Free Library of Philadelphia

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday First February 1861.

My Dear Cerjat.

[†a]I received my New Year's letter all right, and with my annual pleasure and interest. A New Year would hardly seem to be a New Year unless you sent if off at Christmas time.

Katie and her husband had previously written home to us, to say that they had been greatly annoyed by their preservation in a glass-case at Lausanne.[†3] They were really distressed, disappointed, and worried by it, beyond expression. And feeling it quite hopeless and useless to remain under such circumstances, they shortened their visit. Of course Katie had particularly looked forward to a revival of her old associations at Elysée;[†4] and of course Charles Collins had been particularly prepared for Elysée by his venerable parent-in-law. They have not recovered their absurd situation unto this day, but constantly revert to it, in writing home. I doubt if even you have any adequate notion what the constraint upon them was. I really could hardly believe their account of it at first but thought there must be some unconscious exaggeration in it.[†a]

You have read in the papers of our heavy English frost.[†1] At Gad's Hill it was so intensely cold, that in our warm dining room on Christmas Day, we could hardly sit at the table. In my study on that morning, long after a great fire of coal and wood had been lighted, the thermometer was I don't know where below freezing. The bath froze, and all the pipes froze, and remained in a stony state for five or six weeks. The water in the bedroom jugs froze, and blew up the crockery. The snow on the top of the house froze, and was imperfectly removed with axes. My beard froze as I walked about, and I couldn't detach my cravat and coat from it until I was thawed at the fire. My boys and half the officers stationed at Chatham, skated away, without a check, to Gravesend — five miles off — and repeated the performance for three or four weeks. At last the thaw came, and then everything split — blew up — dripped — poured — perspired — and got spoilt. Since then we have had a small visitation of the plague of servants; the cook (in a riding habit) and the groom (in a dress coat and jewels) having mounted Mary's horse and mine, in our absence, and scoured the neighbouring country at a rattling pace. And when I went home last Saturday, I innocently wondered how the horses came to be out of condition, and gravely consulted the said groom on the subject — who gave it as his opinion "which they wanted reg'lar work". We are now coming to town until Midsummer. Having sold my own house — to be more free and independent [†a](to a Jew who they tell me is one of the greatest rascals in London, but who behaved much better than a Christian, in that transaction),[†a] I have taken a very pretty furnished-house, No. 3 Hanover Terrace, Regent's Park. This, of course, on my daughter's account. For I have very good and cheerful bachelor rooms here, with an old servant in charge, who is the cleverest man of his kind in the world, and can do anything — from excellent carpentry to excellent cookery — and has been with me three and twenty years.[†2]

The American business is the greatest English sensation at present.[†3] I venture to predict that the struggle by violence will be a very short one, and will be soon succeeded by some new compact between the Northern and Southern States.[†4] Meantime the Lancashire Mill Owners are getting very uneasy.[†5]

The Italian state of things is not regarded as looking very cheerful.[†1] Apart from one's natural sympathies with a people so oppressed as the Italians,[†2] and one's natural antagonism to a Pope[†3] and a Bourbon[†4] (both of which superstitions I do suppose the World to have had more than enough of) I agree with you concerning Victor Emmanuel,[†5] and greatly fear that the Southern Italians are much degraded.[†6] Still, an United Italy would be of vast importance to the peace of the world, and would be a rock in Louis Napoleon's way — as he very well knows. Therefore the idea must be championed, however much against hope.[†7] That Louis Napoleon will force himself into collision with England at last, I do not in the least doubt and never have in the least doubted.

My eldest boy, just home from China,[†8] was discovered by Townshend's Henri the moment he landed at Marseilles, and was by him borne in triumph to Townshend's rooms. The weather was snowy, slushy, beastly; and Marseilles was, as it usually is to my thinking, well nigh intolerable. My boy couldn't stay with Townshend, as he was coming on by express train; "but" he says, "I sat with him and saw him dine. He had a leg of lamb, and a tremendous cold". That is the whole description I have been able to extract from him.

This journal is doing gloriously, and Great Expectations is a great success. Lever's story has been a dead-weight, and obliged me to rush in to the rescue. But it will soon be finished now, and we shall be all the better yet for that desirable consummation.[†1] I have taken my third boy Frank (Jeffrey's[†2] godson) into this office. If I am not mistaken he has a natural literary taste[†3] and capacity, and may do very well with a chance so congenial to his mind, and being also entered at the bar.[†4]

[†a]You talk of the Road Murder,[†5] I suppose, even at Lausanne? Not all the Detective Police in existence shall ever persuade me out of the hypothesis that the circumstances have gradually shaped out to my mind. The father was in bed with the nurse: The child was discovered by them, sitting up in his little bed, staring, and evidently going to "tell Ma". The nurse leaped out of bed and instantly suffocated him in the father's presence. The father cut the child about, to distract suspicion (which was effectually done), and took the body out where it was found. Either when he was going for the Police, or when he locked the police up in his own house, or at both times, he got rid of the knife and so forth. It is likely enough that the truth may be never discovered now.[†a]

Dear me, when I have to shew you about London, and we dine en garçon at odd places, I shall scarcely know where to begin! Only yesterday, I walked out from here in the afternoon, and thought I would go down by the Houses of Parliament. When I got there, the day was so beautifully bright and warm, that I thought I would walk on by Mill Bank, to see the river. I walked straight on for three miles on a splendid broad esplanade overhanging the Thames,[†6] with immense factories, railway work, and what not, erected on it, and with the strangest beginnings and ends of wealthy streets pushing themselves into the very Thames. When I was a rower on that river it was all broken ground and ditch, with here and there a public house or two, an old mill, and a tall chimney. I had never seen it in any state of transition, though I suppose myself to know this rather large city as well as any one in it.

I beg to send my kindest and most cordial regard to Mrs. Cerjat (tell her I still think cows, humbugs) and to all your daughters. My sailor-boy took low fever when the sickness was on board, and was sent to Haslar[†7] for a fortnight. He got strong at Gad's Hill almost as soon as he came, and has just joined the ship again. I squeeze in this last article of no-news, as you refer to him. I think he knows young Sisson.[†8]

My Dear Cerjat | Ever your faithful and affectionate friend
CHARLES DICKENS

To GEORGINA HOGARTH 2 FEBRUARY 1861

MS Dickens House.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Saturday Second February 1861.

My Dearest Georgy. I enclose you banknotes for £10:0:0. I write to Mary concerning the horses.

You are quite right in your final discovery and decision touching Boswell.[†1]

Some envelope-case &c. should be brought, I think, for the Library Table in the back dining room. Perhaps you have thought of this, as you think of everything.

I will be at Hanover Terrace to receive you. A van will come to London Bridge — not a little cart — and will call here on its way up, to take in the things that are to come from here. I will go through the rooms presently, and make a list of them.

Surely I put the key of the cupboard where Katie's silver is, in the cupboard itself. I seem to have a perfect remembrance thereof, and it is not on my bunch.

Frank will bring, in a parcel, an Uncommercial for the Landlord of the Falcon.[†2] I hope you or Mary may be able to take the Basket and one of the horses, over with it tomorrow. He only needs to be told that I should have come myself but for being in London until the summer.

John is taking the Inventory this morning, and will find it (I should imagine) a pretty tough job. My intention was, that the two boys, Alfred and Harry, should be left here until the shades of Evening. I really think their arrival with the caravan — while the Housekeeper is there, and when Head is sure to be backwards and forwards — would have an alarming and not quite truthful aspect. Let them come here, and I will release Frank to take charge of them. They can come up with him, at 5 or 6 o'Clock, to Hanover Terrace.

A business letter, and no more at present.

Ever Affecy | My Dearest Georgy
CD.

To MISS MARY DICKENS, [2 FEBRUARY 1861]

Mention in last. Date: as last.

To MESSRS GEORGE ROUTLEDGE & CO., [EARLY FEBRUARY 1861]

Mention in To Lever, 13 Feb 61. Date: presumably not long before that letter.

To CHARLES LEVER, 13 FEBRUARY 1861

MS Widener Collection, Harvard.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday February Thirteenth 1861.

My Dear Lever.

I am very sorry to be obliged to let you know that I cannot sell the republication of the book.[†1] I have taken soundings in various depths, but, beyond Chapman and Hall, have directly offered it to Routledge's house only. They at once refused it; and I am quite certain from the terms of their refusal that it would be most unwise and most injurious to you to extract a similar reply, formally, from other houses. Mind. I speak by the card, and not without anxious and wide observation in the matter.

I have no reason whatever to suppose that I could have done more with Chapman and Hall touching this point, than any one else. But it happened rather absurdly that when I propounded the question to them and expressed myself as confidentially representing you, I found the book to have been already offered them by some one else on your behalf.[†2] Therefore any thing I could have said was effectually forestalled. And further; they seemed to me to have taken a considerable offence against the gentleman in question, for having told them that he could "make wastepaper" of your agreements with them.

I write hastily at the close of a long day here, but this would be the sum and substance of my letter though I had more time to amplify it. Wills tells me he has been writing to you to day,[†3] and I know you will be expecting to hear from me, and I will not lose the same post.

I hope you are in better health and better spirits, and that you will not be put out of conceit so far as to let your contributions drop out of these pages. It pained me to learn that your son occasioned you so much anxiety. But do you not feel that you must hold your hand in such a case, and that the road to better things on his part lies through the firmness with which you do so?[†4]

We are in town until Midsummer, and our address is 3 Hanover Terrace Regents Park

Ever My Dear Lever | Your affectionate and faithful
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Lever Esquire

To W. J. EASTWICK, 14 FEBRUARY 1861*

MS Fales Library, New York University. Address: W. J. Eastwick Esquire / &c &c &c / India Office / Westminster / S.W.

3 Hanover Terrace,
Regents Park
Fourteenth February, 1861.

My Dear Sir

I beg to thank you cordially for your kind letter, and to assure you that I shall always feel as truly obliged to you for your generous and graceful offer,[†1] as though it had been left within your power to carry it into execution.[†2] The altered circumstances cannot, in my remembrance, at all alter the intention.

With Mr. Brackenbury's advice (at whose establishment the son in question[†3] is), I have had my boy trained all along to pass the higher examination, and he is therefore not even turned out of his straight path.[†4] The son already in India[†5] obtained his promotion by great good fortune, within a few months, and has been from the first attached to the 42nd. Highlanders.

My Dear Sir | Your faithfully and obliged
CHARLES DICKENS

W. J. Eastwick Esquire

To BENJAMIN WEBSTER, 15 FEBRUARY 1861*

MS Mr and Mrs R.C. Wilson.

3 Hanover Terrace, Regents Park
Friday Fifteenth February 1861.

My Dear Webster

Will you come and dine here next Sunday Week — there's a good long notice for you — with no company, at 6 sharp.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To EDMUND YATES, 24 FEBRUARY 1861*

MS Robert H. Taylor Collection, Princeton University.

3 Hanover Terrace, Regents Park

Sunday Twenty Fourth February 1861.

My Dear Yates.

I can give you the unqualified assurance that there is nothing whatever in the case, but your own impression — aided, however, I do not question, by accidental circumstances. Before Christmas, my story and what I had to do for Christmas kept me in actual bondage for weeks together. After Christmas (that is from the 26th. of December to past the middle of January) I was unwell, at the office to be near my Doctor, and did not once get to Gad's Hill where all the household were. Chronically, when I have a book to write I give myself up to it. Waywardly, my small private rubs make me uncertain in my humour sometimes, and unwilling to tie myself to the slightest engagement.

This is the exact truth, and this is all.

Surely you know me better than to suppose, on consideration, that it is possible I could revert to that little mistake,[†1] after assuring you that I had dismissed it from my mind. I am exactly the same to you as I was before it happened — perfectly unchanged in every respect — not in the least alienated by any cause whatever, real or imaginary.

So innocent was I, that when I met you on Friday and saw you were a little askew, I wondered in my own mind whether Mamie and you might have been exchanging some atoms of misunderstanding!

Do believe me (for I am)
Faithfully Yours Ever
CD.

March

To THOMAS BEARD, 3 MARCH 1861

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire / Portman Road / Maida Hill / W.

3 Hanover Terrace.
Sunday Third March 1861.

My Dear Beard.

Will you let me know how many stalls you will like to have for these Readings, in order that Arthur Smith may know what his list is. I will send to Frank, separately.

Ever affectionately
CD.

To MRS NASH,[†1] 5 MARCH 1861*

MS Robert H. Taylor Collection, Princeton University.

3 Hanover Terrace, Regents Park

Tuesday Fifth March 1861.

My Dear Esther.

I am exceedingly sorry that you should suppose my silence to have been occasioned by any thing but constant occupation and one or two concurrent causes of procrastination — as for instance, my having been in town (alone at the office) unwell, from the 26th. of December until nearly the end of January — and then my having been house-hunting until we fixed ourselves here, in a really delightful house, until Midsummer. My story is a perpetual employment of my time and thoughts, as I have a great deal to condense into a short space. And the letters I must write, are so many that the letters I would like to write, often go to the wall — instead of the post. This is the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth.

You don't want me to say how sorry I am to hear of the illness of your daughters, or how I sympathize with you in that distress and anxiety away out yonder.[†2] You want me to exchange news with you, and I go on to do it.

Katie and her husband have come home; but how long they may remain at home is unknown to the writer of these presents as it probably is to themselves. Katie looks extremely well, and they seem to get on together admirably. Charley is at work upon a book describing their journey, with illustrations by himself.[†3] I ardently wish he were painting, instead;[†4] but of course I don't say so. There are no "Great Expectations" of perspective[†5] Collinses.[†6] Which I think a blessed thing, though again I don't say so. Old Mrs. Collins[†7] dined here last Sunday week, and contradicted everybody upon every subject for five hours and a half, and was invariably Pig-headed and wrong. So I was very glad when she tied her head up in a bundle and took it home, — though again I didn't say so.

Wilkie is in a potential and popular state, and is beginning to think of a new book, looming some eight or ten months ahead. He has made his rooms in Harley Street,[†8] very handsome and comfortable. We never speak of the (female) skeleton in that house,[†9] and I therefore have not the least idea of the state of his mind on that subject. I hope it does not run in any matrimonial groove. I can imagine similar cases in which that end is well and wisely put to the difficulty. But I can not imagine any good coming of such an end in this instance.

I am just as I was when I last saw you, except for being busier; almost absorbed. I am going to read at St. James's Hall, three times in this month;[†1] and I shall probably go into the country for that purpose in October, November, and December.[†2] Arthur Smith manages for me, of course. He told me of a curious special instance of the changes of Life and Death. There came to him the other day, a long letter written from China by Bowlby[†3] — the Times correspondent, afterwards killed there — to Albert.[†4] Albert was dead when it was written,[†5] and Bowlby was dead when it arrived!

The madness of the English world is at present revolving round "Essays and Reviews"[†6] — a collection of writings by some eminent men in orders, respecting the heresy whereof there is mighty bluster and balderdash.[†7] The Bishops are wonderful to consider in their holdings forth upon the subject. I suspect there are an odd few thousands of people in this country, beginning to think with a little doubtful amazement, that whenever that wonderful Institution[†8] shews itself, it is always aggressive and abusive. Here are the holy creatures pitching their right reverend mud about in all directions, but not a lawn sleeve fluttered when the poor law broke down in the frost and the people [more meritorious of the poor][†9] were starving to death.[†10] The world moves very slowly, after all, and I sometimes feel as grim as — Richard Wardour sitting on the chest in the midst of it.[†11]

My son Charley has just come home from China, and is seeking for a mercantile partnership, and, when he finds it, will probably marry the daughter of Mr. Evans the printer[†12] — the very last person on earth whom I could desire so to honor me. But it is not his fault, for they have been engaged since they were mere children. It is sure not to answer — if my authority on such a subject can be accepted.[†1]

Mary is as she was, and Georgina of course. We do very well indeed together, and live in peace. Gad's Hill has been very much improved since you were there. It looked very pretty yesterday when we were down there, even with the house abandoned and all its hair in papers, and a shrill North wind howling and raging at it fiercely.

This is all the news I have outside my story, and I know that if I lay this sheet of paper by, one single hour, and wait to think of more, I shall never send it. So I send this no-letter rather than none at all, and entreat you to put me back in my old place in your heart, as one whose regard for you cannot be capricious.[†2]

Ever affectionately Yours

CD.

Kindest regard from Mary and Georgina.

To H. WHITWORTH JONES, 5 MARCH, 1861*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: H. Whitworth Jones Esquire | 14 Arlington Street | Piccadilly | W.

3 Hanover Terrace, Regents Park
Tuesday Fifth March 1861.

My Dear Whitworth Jones.

I am very glad to hear that you are so steadily getting on: but I shall be more glad to see you and have the assurance from your own lips that you are yourself again.

Don't hate me, and don't let your fair relative hate me (if you can help it) for what I am going to say. I never do what you ask me to do in the case of Miss Procter.[†3] If I did, I should inevitably become in a few weeks the terror of all the artists in all kinds whom I know;[†4] and (though I feel that I ought to have put this sneaking consideration first), such fearful album-Retribution would be visited on me, that I should have to die presently, or fly to the Rocky Mountains.

Faithfully Yours Ever

CHARLES DICKENS

H. Whitworth Jones Esquire.

To E. M. WARD,[†1] 9 MARCH 1861

MS Yale University Library

3 Hanover Terrace, Regents Park
Saturday Night, Ninth March 1861.

My Dear Ward.

I cannot tell you how gratified I have been by your letter, and what a splendid recompense it is for any pleasure I am giving you.[†2] Such generous and earnest sympathy from such a brother-artist, gives me true delight. I am proud of it, believe me, and nerved by it to do all the better.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

E.M. Ward Esquire.

To W. H. WILLS, 11 MARCH 1861

MS Huntington Library.

3 Hanover Terrace
Monday Eleventh March 1861

My Dear Wills

I have had a begging letter from that Robert Barrow[†3] — a very bad one by the way — with an awful affectation of Christian piety in it — a pretence of having known me and offended me, which is altogether a Lie — and the usual blaring assumption (of which I shall die at last) that I am immensely rich.

If you would not object to see him, I shall be very much obliged to you if you will do so once more, at that same wretched lodging hard by Holborn. He seems to have no idea of my having already relieved him. I wish you would tell him that you have already given him £2 and that you have £3 more in hand; but that you must impress upon him in the strongest manner that he has no hope in making any further appeal to me — that it is quite impossible and monstrous — that I am quite weighed down and loaded and chained in life, by the enormous drags upon me which are already added to the charges of my own large family — and that he must not deceive himself with the notion of my assisting him further. It is very important indeed that he should be got to understand this, quite apart from the question of his own necessities.

I declare to you that what with my mother — and Alfred's family — and my Angel[†4] Wife — and a Saunders[†5] or so — I seem to stop sometimes like a steamer in a storm, and deliberate whether I shall go on whirling, or go down.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To F. C. BEARD, 12 MARCH 1861

MS Dickens House. Address: Frank Beard Esquire | 44 Welbeck Street | Cavendish Square | W.

3 Hanover Terrace | Tuesday Twelfth March 1861.

My Dear Frank Beard

Your tickets for Thursday[†1] will be sent straight to your house. If you talk about numbers, and apply such preposterous expressions to a mean Three, I'll never — get into difficulties any more.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To HENRY LESLIE,[†2] 15 MARCH 1861*

MS (signature only in CD's hand) British Library.

Wellington Street Strand
15 March 1861

Sir,

The Committee of the Hullah Fund have the great gratification of acknowledging with sincere thanks your cordial cooperation in the concerts lately given in aid of their object.

I remain | Yours faithfully

CHARLES DICKENS

Chairman

Hy Leslie Esq

To HENRI VIEUXTEMPS, 15 MARCH 1861*

MS (signature only in CD's hand) Mme Jean Vieuxtemps.

Wellington St, Strand W.C.
15th March 1861

Sir

The Committee of the Hullah Fund have the great gratification of acknowledging with sincere thanks your cordial cooperation at the Concert lately given in aid of their object.

I remain | Yours faithfy
CHARLES DICKENS
Chairman

Monsr. Vieuxtemps

To MESSRS COUTTS & CO., 16 MARCH 1861

Mention in Heritage Book Shop catalogue, 1987; MS 1 p.; dated 16 Mar 61; addressed Messrs Coutts & Co.

Asking them to pay the bearer 10 guineas.[†1]

To MISS SARA M. GOLDSMITH,[†2] 18 MARCH 1861*

MS Mrs L. Campbell-Wilson. Address: Miss Sara M. Goldsmith | 70 Parrock Street | Milton | Gravesend.

3 Hanover Terrace, Regents Park, London
Monday Eighteenth March, 1861.

Madam.

Constant occupation has prevented my returning an earlier reply to your letter.

I regret to assure you that I can in no wise advance your desire to obtain employment in illustrating books. The enclosed sketches have considerable merit as a lady's drawings, though I cannot honestly say that they express my intention in their rendering of character.[†3] But I am not associated with any illustrated work, nor am I at all likely to be.

I am Madam | Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Goldsmith

To CHARLES MANBY,[†4] 18 MARCH 1861*

MS Yale University Library.

3 Hanover Terrace, Regents Park
Monday Eighteenth March 1861.

My Dear Manby.

I have read that concise and terse résumé, with the greatest interest. Nothing on the part of the Circumlocution Office (except efficiency and plain sense) could possibly surprise me; or I should have wondered a little at these disclosures.†5

All The Year Round shall lend its aid to the good cause of honest science.†1

Believe me always | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Manby Esquire.

To [E. J. FRASER],†2 20 MARCH 1861

MS Dickens House.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Twentieth March 1861

My Dear Sir

I quite agree with you.†3

Faithfully Yours always
CD.

To RICHARD MONCKTON MILNES, 22 MARCH 1861*

MS Trinity College, Cambridge.

3 Hanover Terrace
Friday Twenty Second March 1861.

My Dear Milnes

My Readings†4 will stand thus:
Thursday April 4th — Little Dombey and Pickwick Trial
Thursday April 11th — Carol and Mrs Gamp
Thursday April 18th — Little Dombey and Pickwick Trial

If you should purpose coming with Mrs Milnes†5 on any night, let me know, whenever you decide, and it will be a pleasure to me to send you the Stalls I should best like you to have.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Monckton Milnes Esquire

To THOMAS BEARD, 25 MARCH 1861

MS Dickens House. Address: Private | Thomas Beard Esquire | Morning Herald Office | Shoe Lane.

3 Hanover Terrace | Twenty Fifth March 1861.

My Dear Beard

Since you mentioned to me in the last note I had from you, that you were doing some little things for the Observer, I have been again and again turning over in my mind the old question whether there are not some kinds of articles that you surely could do for All The Year Round.

To make what I mean, as practical and intelligible as possible in the shortest way, I send you a pamphlet I have lately received,[†1] which in the main expresses the views I have often urged respecting Prison Discipline — which sensibly shows what evil is done by injudicious Jail-Chaplains — and points out in what glaring respects their pet ways of carrying on, are wrong.[†2] Now, don't you think that you could write just such an abstract of this pamphlet, and account of this question according to its writer's views and experience, as I want? And don't you think you could do it quite as well as another man? I do.

If you can find it in your heart to make the attempt, only fancy throughout that you are doing your utmost to tell some man something in the pleasantest and most intelligent way that is natural to you — and that he is on the whole a pleasant and intelligent fellow too, though rather afraid of being bored — and I really cannot doubt your coming out well. It is painful to me to consider that these subjects are constantly arising; that they must be done by some one; and that they are always going into other hands while yours are empty.[†3]

And talking of emptiness — why don't you come into my room at St. James's Hall where there is always a lump of Ice and a little Old Brandy? Why do I see you sitting on the ends of rows whence you could glide out like the old Serpent, and sticking there like a fixture???

Ever affecy.

CD.

To C. P. MEASOR,[†1] 25 MARCH 1861*

MS Benoliel Collection.

3 Hanover Terrace, Regents Park
Twenty Fifth March 1861.

Dear Sir

I have read your pamphlet[†2] with much interest; the rather, as I have often tried hard to attract attention to the enormous absurdity of the separate solitary system, and to the great harm done to society by the proceedings of injudicious chaplains.

In the course of the ensuing month I shall hope to render some little aid towards making your views better known.[†3]

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

C. P. Measor Esquire

To THOMAS MITTON, 25 MARCH 1861

MS Huntington Library.

3 Hanover Terrace, Regents Park
Twenty Fifth March 1861.

My Dear Mitton

I enclose you the fire Insurance office notices, and a crossed cheque for the amount.[†4] My additional readings are appointed thus:—
Thursday 4th. April — Little Dombey and Pickwick Trial
Thursday 11th. April — Carol and Mrs. Gamp
Thursday 18th. April — Little Dombey and Pickwick Trial.

Faithfully Ever
CD.

To J. H. NIGHTINGALE,[†1] 25 MARCH 1861

MS Kyoto University of Foreign Studies. Address: J. H. Nightingale Esquire | Messrs. Lee and Nightingale | Liverpool.

Hanover Terrace, Regents park
Twenty Fifth March 1861.

My Dear Sir

I send you many thanks for the latest intelligence of the young man of the name of Guppy.[†2] I hope he will think better of "not existing" and "not enduring", for I feel a lively interest in his lasting a long time.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

J. H. Nightingale Esquire

To [FREDERIC CHAPMAN], 27 MARCH 1861*

MS Johns Hopkins University.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Twenty Seventh March 1861.

My Dear Sir

The Household-Words-rebinding charge seems clear enough. If you have had to incur it because you could not otherwise sell those volumes, it is clear to me that you ought to be reimbursed. Therefore I quite admit its propriety.

I suppose it will be best for you to write off the total of these bills against my credit in your books. If you will please to do so, I will cancel them all as paid and done with.

I cannot quite make out what is wanted about the cuts for the Old Curiosity Shop.[†3] The shortest plan would be for us to go over them together. If you could call on me tomorrow — at Hanover Terrace at half past one — we would dispose of the thing at once. I am quite clear that it will be best not to have any new cuts for the reprinted pieces.[†4] Never mind the old ones coming near[†5]

To CHARLES B. LOCOCK,[†1] 27 MARCH 1861*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: Charles B. Locock Esquire.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Twenty Seventh March 1861.

My Dear Sir

I am exceedingly sorry that I cannot have the pleasure of accepting the enclosed MS for insertion in these pages. It is very intelligent and pleasant — if you will excuse my making the remark — but does not possess any little speciality to render it, as a travelling experience, available for this Journal. There are already in type here, many articles of a similar kind, which I am not able to find room for, by reason of their wanting some distinctive feature. And I am really afraid of the responsibility of increasing their number.

With many thanks, pray believe me
My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles B Locock Esquire

To SIR CHARLES LOCOCK,[†2] 28 MARCH 1861*

MS New York Public Library. Address (envelope MS Free Library of Philadelphia): Sir Charles Locock MD | 26 Hertford Street | May Fair | W. PM 28 Mar 61.

3 Hanover Terrace, Regents Park
Twenty Eighth March 1861.

My Dear Sir Charles Locock.

I am honored by your request, and happy to comply with it on the other side.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To THE HON. MRS WILLIAM COWPER,[†3] 29 MARCH 1861*

MS Fales Library, New York University.

Hanover Terrace, Regents Park
Twenty Ninth March 1861.

Madam.

I beg to express my real regret that I cannot have the pleasure of attending the Meeting[†4] to which you do me the honor to invite me. But my occupations are so heavy just now that the few public engagements of that nature I am able to make for the present season, have long been made, and it is not in reason possible for me to augment the list.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Hon. Mrs. William Cowper.

To E. J. FRASER, 29 MARCH 1861*

MS Private. Address: E. J. Fraser Esquire | 26 Craven Street | Charing Cross | W.C.

3 Hanover Terrace, Regents Park
Twenty Ninth March 1861.

My Dear Sir

It is a most handsome proceeding on the part of the Sacred Harmonic Society.[†1] I am very glad to have seen the letter, and thank you.

The cheque is enclosed, duly signed.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

E. J. Fraser Esquire

To RICHARD MONCKTON MILNES, 29 MARCH 1861*

MS Trinity College, Cambridge.

3 Hanover Terrace.
Friday Twenty Ninth March 1861.

My Dear Milnes.

I will take care that the Stalls are sent to you. But unfortunately, we are engaged for the next day, the 12th. otherwise we should have had great pleasure in coming.

Charles Reade's address is Bolton Row May Fair (No. 6). But as he has let his house for the season, the safest course is to address him at the Garrick Club, Covent Garden.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

April

To JOHN LEECH,[†2] 3 APRIL 1861

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: John Leech Esquire | 32 Brunswick Square | W.C.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Third April 1861.

My Dear Leech. I write — the instant I perceive the chance — to say that I am not quite certain of my freedom on Monday. I will write again, on Saturday or Sunday at latest, when I see how my work runs.

Ever Faithfully
CD.

To THE REV. ROBERT WHISTON,[†1] 3 APRIL 1861

Text from N, III, 213.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Third April 1861

My Dear Mr. Whiston,

We are staying in town until midsummer when we purpose returning to Gad's Hill. Our address is 3, Hanover Terrace, Regent's Park.

I fear that the case of the Baron de Bode is beyond any help but the Prime Minister's.[†2] It is unquestionably far, far, beyond the range of a Journal like this. The Public are utterly exhausted on the subject. It had worn out the House of Commons, to my certain knowledge, thirty years ago.[†3] To endeavour to drag it from the Limbo of Forlorn Things, into these pages, would be, I assure you, about the most impracticable and most utterly useless and desperate step I could take in association with them. Not very long since, I endeavoured to impress this upon the gentleman chiefly interested[†4] — of course, in vain. My impression of the merits of the case (derived from a perusal of its printed summary) was favorable, but my conviction of my profound inability to do anything with it or for it was complete.

I suppose your sister knows which two creatures took the smallest quantity of luggage into the Ark, and that she perfectly understands how the Cock and the Fox had only one comb and brush between them.

Faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 4 APRIL 1861

MS Lytton Papers.

3 Hanover Terrace, Regents Park.
Fourth April, 1861.

My Dear Bulwer Lytton.

We have a house here until Midsummer, and I received your letter here this morning.

We will contrive to print — say, a third of the story,[†1] and I do not doubt that you may rely on my knowledge of the Audience to be almost certain of its effect. I think it a very wise idea to get it into type, and, if you will let me have it, I will take care that it is done without loss of time. I am not at all afraid of the idea that you describe, in the abstract. On the contrary, I think the ingenious point of view from which you take it, likely to disarm the objection that might otherwise arise. But I think I could be all but certain on that head, with a sweep of the story before me.

The sooner you can let me have some MS, the better. The printer shall be put upon it straight.

[†a]My story will finish in the first week in August. Yours ought to begin in the last week of July, or the last week but one. Wilkie Collins will be at work to follow you. The publication has made a very great success with "Great Expectations", and could not present a finer time for you.[†a]

In haste | Ever Affecy.
CD.

To JOHN LEECH, 6 APRIL 1861

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: John Leech Esquire | 32 Brunswick Square | W.C.

3 Hanover Terrace
Saturday Sixth April, 1861.

My Dear Leech

If we postpone our afternoon for a fortnight, we shall probably get better weather, and I shall enjoy it much more. While my Readings are in hand concurrently with a story, I can scarcely make sure of any holiday, and am made anxious by having any pending engagement. Thursday week will see the Readings out for this London season, and then — as we say — Yoicks![†2]

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To LADY OLLIFFE, 6 APRIL 1861

Extract in Charles Hamilton Galleries catalogue No. 92 (1975); MS 1p.; dated 3 Hanover Terrace, 6 Apr 61; addressed Lady Olliffe.

I send you a little fan today[†1] which I hope you will like, if not for its sake, for mine. I tried one with a legend in spangles, "I'm not the humbug some people call me", but it didn't look well. Begging forgiveness for the loss of papers belonging to Olliffe. ... in the awful confiscation of printed papers that always goes on here ... Olliffe had described their contents with such astonishing exactness, that he can't want them.

To LADY OLLIFFE, 7 APRIL 1861†

MS Benoliel Collection.

3 Hanover Terrace, Regents Park
Sunday Seventh April, 1861.

My Dear Lady Olliffe

It would have given me the greatest pleasure to have dined with you on the anniversary of your wedding day, but it most unfortunately happens that I am engaged that day to dine with George Moore, of Kensington Palace Gardens,[†2] who is (as John Gilpin was) a citizen

Of credit and renown.[†3]

I would have got rid of the engagement somehow, if it had been an ordinary one, but he proposed the day at a month's notice, as being the day after my last Reading this season.

Tell Olliffe with my love, how heartily vexed I am.

Why did you get married on the nineteenth? Why didn't you take the twentieth — when I am not engaged and could have come to you? Olliffe couldn't wait, I suppose; but it's hard that I should suffer for it!

Ever affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To LADY OLLIFFE, 10 APRIL 1861*

MS (fragment) Chas J. Sawyer Ltd.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Tenth[†4] April 1861.

My Dear Lady Olliffe

On the 20th I shall be delighted to come — and I have no doubt that Wills[†5]

To SIR JOSEPH OLLIFFE, [13 APRIL 1861]*

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: Sir Joseph Olliffe | Rue St. Florentin | Paris. PM London 13 Apr 61. Date: Misdated by CD, Saturday was 13th.

Saturday Twelfth April, 1861

My Dear Olliffe. To the best of my remembrance, the enclosed is very like the missing letter.[†1] Ever Cordially Yours CD.[†2]

To LADY OLLIFFE, 13 APRIL 1861

Extract in T. F. Madigan catalogue (Dec 1935); MS 1 p.; dated 3 Hanover Terrace, 13 Apr 61; addressed Lady Olliffe.

The letter has been sent to Olliffe this afternoon.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?MID-APRIL 1861]

Text from F, IX, iii, 737. Date: He finished Great Expectations on or just before 11 June (To Macready, that day); if his hope of "two months" more work was fulfilled, he was writing in mid-April.

It is a pity that the third portion[†3] cannot be read all at once, because its purpose would be much more apparent; and the pity is the greater, because the general turn and tone of the working out and winding up, will be away from all such things as they conventionally go. But what must be, must be. As to the planning out from week to week, nobody can imagine what the difficulty is, without trying.[†4] But, as in all such cases, when it is overcome the pleasure is proportionate. Two months more will see me through it, I trust. All the iron is in the fire, and I have "only" to beat it out.

To THOMAS BEARD, 18 APRIL 1861

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Place | Maida Hill. | W.

3 Hanover Terrace
Thursday Eighteenth April, 1861

My Dear Beard

I can HONESTLY[†1] tell you — which I do with the heartiest pleasure — that I think you have very skilfully and completely presented the case of the pamphlet.[†2] The condensation, and slight touch here and there, which I think will improve it, I will mark in the proof. And if you can come to the office next Wednesday at 12, I will have the Proof there with my markings upon it, as a small guide for the future. The changes that occur to me are certainly no greater than I make in five out of every six papers that go in.

Ever Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

I write hastily, before taking a pull at Little Dombey for tonight.[†3]

To CHARLES READE, 18 APRIL 1861*

MS Robert H. Taylor Collection, Princeton University.

3 Hanover Terrace | Thursday Eighteenth April, 1861.

My Dear Reade

I congratulate you heartily, on your victory over the accursed brood of pirates.[†4] The Times account was in my hand when your note arrived this morning, and I was just going to send you these words.

Faithfully Yours ever
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Reade Esquire.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 21 APRIL 1861

Extract in Francis Edwards catalogue No. 915 (Mar 1968); MS 1 p.; dated 3 Hanover Terrace, 21 Apr 61.

If you can give me a call here, tomorrow morning ... I shall be glad to speak to you on the subject concerning copyrights.

To MRS GASKELL, 22 APRIL 1861

MS Dickens House.

All The Year Round
Twenty Second April, 1861.

My Dear Mrs. Gaskell.

I will endeavour to get your letter back, by Wednesday or Thursday. It is quite likely that it has never been opened, as no human creature can imagine how impossible it is for that lady[†1] to keep pace with her correspondents, or anyhow to prevent the accumulation of hundreds of letters. Wills does a great deal of business for her, and is now away, as her representative in some affair of charity, in Devonshire.[†2] The letter may be in his hands. If he does not return on Wednesday (when I expect him) I will go to Miss Coutts.[†3]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To BENJAMIN WEBSTER, 25 APRIL 1861

Mention in Sotheby's catalogue, July 1883; MS 1 p.; dated 25 Apr 61; addressed B. Webster.

To E. M. WARD, 25 APRIL 1861*

MS Benoliel Collection. Address (Sotheby's catalogue, June 1955): E. M. Ward Esquire R.A. | Kent Villas | Lansdowne Road | Notting Hill | W. PM. 25 Apr 61.

3 Hanover Terrace
Thursday Twenty Fifth April, 1861.

My Dear Ward

I have the greatest interest in Fechter[†4] (on whom I called by the way, as I hope he knows), and should have been heartily glad to meet him again.[†5] But — one word in such a case is as good, or bad, as a thousand — I am engaged on Tuesday beyond the possibility of back-out or put-off.

With kind regard to Mrs. Ward,[†1] in which my daughter and Miss Hogarth join,
Believe me always | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

E. M. Ward Esquire.

To H. K. BROWNE, 28 APRIL 1861

Extract in Edgar Browne, Phiz and Dickens, 1913, p. 52-3.

I took a young lady unknown down to dinner, and talking to her about the Bishop of Durham's nepotism in the matter of Mr. Cheese,[†2] I found she was Mrs. Cheese.[†3]

To JOHN FORSTER, [28 APRIL 1861]

Extracts in F, VIII, vi, 687 and F, XI, iii, 840. Date: 28 Apr 61 according to Forster.

We are all well here and flourishing. On the 18th I finished the readings as I purposed. We had between seventy and eighty pounds in the stalls, which, at four shillings apiece, is something quite unprecedented in these times.... The result of the six was, that, after paying a large staff of men and all other charges, and Arthur Smith's ten per cent. on the receipts, and replacing everything destroyed in the fire at St. Martin's Hall[†4] (including all our tickets, country-baggage, cheque-boxes, books, and a quantity of gas-fittings and what not), I got upwards of £500. A very great result. We certainly might have gone on through the season, but I am heartily glad to be concentrated on my story.

I have distinguished myself in two respects lately. I took a young lady, unknown, down to dinner, and, talking to her about the Bishop of Durham's nepotism in the matter of Mr. Cheese, I found she was Mrs. Cheese. And I expatiated to the member for Marylebone, Lord Fermoy, generally conceiving him to be an Irish member, on the contemptible character of the Marylebone constituency and Marylebone representations.[†1]

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 28 APRIL 1861[†2]

MS Lytton Papers.

3 Hanover Terrace, Regents Park N.W
Sunday Twenty Eighth April, 1861

My Dear Bulwer Lytton.

[†a]I will explain to you when I see you, how the calculation of the MS was made. You will find (or I am greatly mistaken) that it was quite correctly made. I looked into it again, the other day.[†a]

The question of length may be easily adjusted.

Of the misgiving you entertain, I cannot, of course, judge until you give me leave to rush to the perusal. I swear that I never thought I had half so much self-denial as I have shewn in this case! I think I shall come out at Exeter Hall as a choice vessel,[†3] on the strength of it. In the meanwhile, I have quickened the Printer and told him to get on fast. [†b]And thinking that Proofs may have gone to you at St. James's Place last night, I will speed them — if they have — to Knebworth.[†b]

You cannot think how happy you make me by what you write of Great Expectations. There is nothing like the pride of making such an effect on such a writer as you.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

May

To JAMES LOWE, 1 MAY 1861*

MS Claremont College Libraries, California. Address: Private | James Lowe Esquire | Critic Office.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday First May 1861.

Dear Sir

The effusions of that ridiculous man have been sent here by the square yard for a long time past. Beyond all doubt his being placed on the Pension List with any reference to Literature, or to the commonest and coarsest fringe upon the skirts of Literature, is about as flagrant and insolent an abuse of trust as any Minister could in that way commit.[†1] But to the best of my belief, the House of Commons likes these things — thinks them jaunty, Palmerstonian, Devil-may-careish, and the Devil himself only knows what else. Nor have I in my soul the faintest ray of belief that any exposure or remonstrance would affect anybody concerned.[†2]

Believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

James Lowe Esquire

To F. D. FINLAY, 6 MAY 1861

MS Comtesse de Suzannet.

3 Hanover Terrace, Regents Park
Monday Sixth May, 1861.

My Dear Mr. Finlay

There are no printed abridgements of the Carol, Dombey, &c as I read them, or nearly as I read them. Nor is there any such abridgement in existence, save in my own copies; and there it is made, in part physically, and in part mentally, and no human being but I myself could hope to follow it.[†3] Pray explain this to Dr. Ferguson,[†4] that he may understand my inability to comply with the request.

We are here until the second week in June, when we go back to Gad's Hill. There is little chance of my coming back to Ireland yet awhile. Late in the autumn I may be in Scotland, but my daughter has scant prospect at present of the parental escort to the first gem of the sea. She begs me to say that we shall be very glad to see you in Kent again, if you come that way.

We have a very seasonable Spring here. Sharp and bitter winds, hail, and snow.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Francis D Finlay Esquire

To WILLIAM WILSON,[†1] 6 MAY 1861*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

3 Hanover Terrace, Regents Park
Monday Sixth May, 1861.

Dear Sir

I regret that my absence should have delayed the return of the enclosed document.

Without the least reference to the merits of the case, I think it right to refrain from attaching my signature to the Memorial,[†2] for the reason that I have already strongly recommended two other literary cases, which are now — or ought to be — under the Minister's consideration. If I presented another, I might have the appearance of signing loosely, and might do more harm than good.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

William Wilson Esquire

To M. J. HIGGINS, 7 MAY 1861*

MS Dickens House.

3 Hanover Terrace | Tuesday Night, Seventh May, 1861.

My Dear Higgins.

I am exceedingly sorry that there should have been a preposterous mistake in the matter of answering — or rather not answering — your kind note of invitation. I supposed that my daughter had done so, and she supposed that I had done so. My disinterested opinion is, that a trifle of Neuralgia I have had in the face is alone to blame.

We shall be very happy to come, as per Circumlocutional document enclosed.

Faithfully Yours always,
CHARLES DICKENS

M. J. Higgins Esquire

To EDWARD AND FREDERIC CHAPMAN, 8 MAY 1861†

MS Walter T. Spencer.

3 Hanover Terrace, Regents Park
Wednesday Eighth May, 1861

My Dear Sirs.

I return you Mr. Evans's letter. Without desiring to gainsay his general argument,[†3] I must still repeat to you that I think the price he puts upon the shares and stock, too high.[†1] You know that I think it too high, because I told you myself that I considered £3,250 (adding the odd £250, after consideration and re-consideration) the utmost that I could ask you for the fourth share you are to buy of me, in order that you may be equally interested in the whole issue of my books.[†2]

Now, I do not want to complicate or embitter the transaction by saying anything more than this:— You have a fourth share to buy of me and you have a fourth share to buy of Messrs. Bradbury and Evans. With the latter, you must make the best and fairest bargain you can. I see no reason whatever, nor do I think that any just man could see any reason whatever, why it should be harder for you to arrive at a reasonable conclusion with them than with me. If I remember aright, you told me that something had been said to you in Whitefriars, concerning the future printing of the books. If that has anything to do with the matter, you know perfectly well from me that I have no intention whatever of interfering on that head.[†3]
Messrs. Edward and Frederic Chapman

To W. HEPWORTH DIXON, 8 MAY 1861*

MS Rosenbach Museum & Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Eighth May 1861

My Dear Dixon.

I enclose you[†4] cheque for Miss Jerrold's halfyear's income,[†5] less Income Tax. Will you kindly send me her receipt at your convenience?

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Hepworth Dixon Esquire

To CHARLES ELLIS, 8 MAY 1861

Catalogue extract in N, III, 218; MS 2 pp.; dated Office of AYR, 8 May 61.

The growth and treatment of several kinds of wine formed the subject of a series of papers in Household Words[†1] which renders it very unlikely that the subject will soon be resumed here.[†2]

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 8 MAY 1861

MS Lytton Papers.

3 Hanover Terrace, Regents Park
Wednesday Eighth May, 1861.

My Dear Bulwer Lytton

I am anxious to let you know that Mr. Frederic Lehmann who is coming down to Knebworth to see you (with his sister Mrs. Benzon,[†3] and the American protegée[†4] to whom you have been so kind), is a particular friend of mine, for whom I have a very high and warm regard. Although he would sufficiently enlist your sympathy on his own behalf, I am sure that you will not be the less interested in him because I am.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton.

To BENJAMIN LILLIE, 10 MAY 1861

MS Lieut Commander Vic Zoschak.

3 Hanover Terrace
Friday Tenth May, 1861.

Mr. Lillie

Please to make the alteration in the two windows in Wellington Street, agreeably to the estimate[†5] you have sent me, and to have the work completed with all convenient speed. Be so good as to be careful that the bottom sashes are capable of being easily raised and the top sashes of being easily let down.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 12 MAY 1861

MS Lytton Papers.

3 Hanover Terrace
Sunday Twelfth May, 1861.

My Dear Bulwer Lytton

I received your revised proofs only yesterday, and I sat down to read them last night. And before I say any thing further, I may tell you that I COULD NOT[†1] lay them aside, but was obliged to go on with them in my bedroom until I got into a very ghostly state indeed. This morning I have taken them again, and have gone through them with the utmost attention.

Of the beauty and power of the writing, I say not a word; or of its originality and boldness; or of its quite extraordinary constructive skill. I confine myself solely to your misgiving,[†2] and to the question whether there is any sufficient foundation for it.

On the last head I say without the faintest hesitation, most decidedly there is NOT[†3] sufficient foundation for it. I do not share it in the least. I believe that the readers who have never given their minds (or perhaps had any to give) to those strange psychological mysteries in ourselves, of which we are all more or less conscious, will accept your wonders as curious weapons in the armoury of Fiction, and will submit themselves to the art with which said weapons are used. Even to that class of intelligence, the Marvellous addresses itself from a very strong position; and that class of intelligence is not accustomed to [†a]find the Marvellous in[†a] such very powerful hands as yours. On more imaginative readers, the tale will fall (or I am greatly mistaken) like a spell. By readers who combine some imagination, some scepticism, and some knowledge and learning, I hope it will be regarded as full of strange fancy and curious study, startling reflections of their own thoughts and speculations at odd times, and wonders which a Master has a right to evoke. In the last point lies, to my thinking, the whole case. If you were the Magician's servant instead of the Magician, these potent spirits would get the better of you; but you are the Magician, and they don't, and you make them serve your purpose.

Occasionally in the dialogue I see an expression here and there, which might — always solely with a reference to your misgiving — be better away; and I think that the vision — to use the word for want of a better — in the Museum, should be made a little less abstruse.[†4] I should not say that, if the Sale of the Journal were below the sale of the Times newspaper; but as it is probably several thousands higher, I do.[†1] I would also suggest that after the title, we put the two words A ROMANCE.[†2] It is an absurdly easy device for getting over your misgiving with the blockheads, but I think it would be an effective one.[†3] I don't, on looking at it, like the title. Here are a few that have occurred to me.

The Steel Casket.
The Lost Manuscript.[†4]
Derval Court.
Perpetual Youth.
Magic Doctor Fenwick[†5]
Life and Death.[†6]

The four last, I think the best. There is an objection to "Doctor Fenwick", because there has been Doctor Antonio;[†7] and there is a book of Dumas' which repeats the objection.[†8] I don't think Fenwick startling enough. It appears to me that a more startling title would take the (John) Bull by the horns, and would be a serviceable concession to your misgiving, as suggesting a story off the stones of the gas-lighted Brentford Road.

The title is the first thing to be settled, and cannot be settled too soon. It is already time that Wills had his bills and announcements, in the Printers hands. The preparation in that wise required for our agencies in the country, is something enormous, and imperatively requires time.

For the purposes of the weekly publication, the divisions of the Story will often have to be greatly changed; though afterwards, in the complete book, you can of course divide it into chapters free from that reference. For example: I would end the 1st. chapter, on the 3rd. slip at, "and through the ghastly streets, under the ghastly moon, went back to my solitary room." The rest of what is now your 1st. chapter might be made chapter II, and would end the first weekly part.[†9] I think I have become, by dint of necessity and practice, rather cunning in this regard; and perhaps you would not mind my looking closely to such points from week to week. It so happens that if you had written the opening of this story expressly for the occasion, its striking incidents could not possibly have followed one another better.[†10] One other merely mechanical change I suggest now. I would not have an initial letter for the town, but would state in the beginning that I gave the town a fictitious name.[†1] I suppose a blank or a dash rather fends a good many people off — because it always has that effect upon me.

Be sure that I am perfectly frank and open in all I have said in this note, and that I have not a grain of reservation in my mind. I think the story a very fine one, one that no other man could write, and that there is no strength in your misgiving, for the two reasons: Firstly, that the work is professedly a work of Fancy and Fiction, in which the reader is not required against his will, to take any thing for Fact: Secondly, that it is written by the man who can write it. The Magician's servant does not know what to do with the Ghost, and has consequently no business with him. The Magician does know what to do with him, and has all the business with him that he can transact.

I am quite at ease on the points that you have expressed yourself as not at ease upon. Quite. I cannot too often say that if they were carried on weak shoulders, they would break the bearer down. But in your mastering of them, lies the mastery over the reader.

This will reach you at Knebworth, I hope, tomorrow afternoon. Pray give your doubts to the winds of that high spot, and believe that if I were there I would swarm up the flag-staff quite as nimbly as Margrave,[†2] and nail the Fenwick colours to the top.

Ever affecy. Yours

CD.

To MRS CAMPBELL,[†3] 13 MAY 1861

Extract in Maggs Bros catalogue, Spring 1926; MS 1 p.; dated Hanover Terrace, 13 May 61; addressed Mrs Campbell.

I am very sorry that I cannot have the pleasure of coming to you on Sunday, and submitting my countenance to your liege lord's art. But I am under a dread promise to sit to a German artist[†4] on that day,[†5] and I have been for the last fortnight by turns cursing my weakness in ever having committed myself to the said promise, and devising plans for flying the country. If you should hear of me as "missing" you will know what it means.

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 15 MAY 1861

MS Lytton Papers.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Fifteenth May 1861.

My Dear Bulwer Lytton.

This being my day of the week here, I answer your letter from here, and will immediately send round for your MS and read it here. I am a pretty good hand at MS and know your writing so well, that I think I shall have little difficulty in getting on.

Your first request I had already anticipated. I had read the Proofs myself to a woman[†1] whom I could implicitly trust, and in whom I have frequently observed (in the case of my own proofs) an intuitive sense and discretion that I have set great store by. The effect was, a very strong interest and no misgiving whatever.

Wills has no genius, and is, in literary matters, sufficiently commonplace to represent a very large proportion of our readers. Moreover, he has had 12 years experience of this work, weekly and daily, with me. He too was enchained by the story, and obliged to go on. He has no fears of the story, and thinks it will certainly make a sensation. His suggestion to me was, "If Sir Edward should lengthen it, don't you think he would point the mysterious and supernatural parts more, by getting in among them, some new touches of character and ordinary life". That was all.

Wilkie Collins is a partner here for 3 years, and I can trust him implicitly. Without a word either way, I will shew him the proofs today — seat him here before me — and see him read them, while I read your MS. I will come round to you at 4 in the afternoon, unless you send me word here, in the meantime, that you will not be at home. Tomorrow I go back to my own story, and I should like to see you today.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 16 MAY 1861

MS Lytton Papers.

3 Hanover Terrace | Thursday Sixteenth May, 1861.

My Dear Bulwer Lytton.

I send you enclosed:
1st. A Proof of mine, shewing the length of an average Weekly No.
2nd. Some suggested titles, in type. Of which I have no doubt whatever, that the last one is the best.[†2] If you can conscientiously sanction the last one, do, and it will greatly facilitate our proceedings.

3rd. The Proofs up to the point where the philosophical conversations may be said to cease, marked in pencil where I would cut.[†1]
4th. The MS from the point where the Printers have stopped.

The suggestions we discussed yesterday, are:
[†a]In shortening the conversations, to bring out the immediate human interest; particularly, through Isabel.[†2]
To make the vision in the Museum less abstruse,[†3] and perhaps to shadow out in Margrave's brain, his part of wickedness in the story.[†4]
Greatly to condense the MS read by Fenwick at Derval Court.[†5]
To substitute some other terror for the Raising of the Dead from the Mausoleum.[†6a]

Ever Faithfully
CD.

To G. HEWITT,[†7] 20 MAY 1861*

MS Benoliel Collection.

3 Hanover Terrace, Regents Park
Monday Twentieth May, 1861.

Dear Sir

I beg to assure you that I have never taken the least offence against the Managers of your Institution,[†8] and that I have never had the faintest cause for any, and that I regard it with the most cordial interest and good will. My books were sent by my direction, straight from the Publishers; and this is the sole cause of my not having written in them.

On the other side,[†9] I send you a few words, which can be inserted where you think best.

Believe me | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

G. Hewitt Esquire

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 20 MAY 1861

MS Lytton Papers.

3 Hanover Terrace, Regents Park
Monday Twentieth May, 1861.

My Dear Bulwer Lytton

I did not read from Australia to the end,[†1] because I was obliged to be hard at work that day, and thought it best that the MS should come back to you, rather than that I should detain it. Of course

I can read it, whenever it suits you. As to Isabel's dying[†2] and Fenwick's growing old, I would say that, beyond question whatever the meaning of the story tends to, is the proper end.

All the alterations you mention in your last, are excellent.

As to title, Margrave a Tale of Mystery would be sufficiently striking. I prefer "Wonder" to "Mystery", because I think it suggests something higher and more apart from ordinary complications of plot, or the like: which "Mystery" might seem to mean. Will you kindly remember that the Title presses, and that it will be a great relief to Wills (and to me, for he bothers my life out, about it) to have it as soon as possible.[†3] The last two months of my story, are our very best time for announcement and preparation.[†4] Of course it is most desirable that your story should have the full benefit of them.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To T. J. THOMPSON, 20 MAY 1861*

MS Mrs Sowerby.

3 Hanover Terrace
Monday Twentieth May, 1861.

My Dear Thompson

We were exceedingly sorry not to see you and Christiana[†5] on Saturday, and were also exceedingly sorry to learn that you had such anxious reason for staying away.[†1] I hope that you will soon be able to report that the latter is happily got over, and that you will both come and see us at Gad's Hill in the summer — if we get one. Tell Christiana that she shall be put as far as possible from the dogs, and that they shall be admonished to conduct themselves softly by night.

With kind regard | Ever Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

T. J. Thompson Esquire.

To THE SECRETARY OF THE NEWSVENDORS' BENEVOLENT & PROVIDENT INSTITUTION,[†2] 21 MAY 1861

Text from Daily News, 24 May 61.

3, Hanover Terrace, Regents Park
Tuesday, May 21, 1861

Sir,

I regret to assure you that I am unable to take the chair on Thursday. For some weeks past I have been much distressed with neuralgic pains in the face, and have been obliged to forego many social engagements. I find myself, after all, so unfit for a hot lighted room, and indeed for London, that I am obliged to go away for a change to the sea-side. But I have spoken to my friend Mr. Wilkie Collins, and he has been so kind as to say that he will preside for me;[†3] and me you shall have, if you desire it, next year, if I am alive and well.[†4]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 23 MAY 1861†

MS Brigham Young University.

Lord Warden Hotel,[†5] Dover
Thursday Evening Twenty Third May 1861.

My Dearest Georgy

As I think you will be glad to know that I arrived here all right, I send this prodigiously long letter to make you acquainted with the happy fact. The beauty of the country on the way down, was quite unspeakable.

I have two very good rooms here, adjoining one another — which is a great thing to a man of retiring habits, like the undersigned. I had the choice of rooms on the first floor or the second, but chose the second, as likely to be quieter. Both rooms look out to sea, and the sea is under the windows. Otherwise, I fancy I dont like the hotel as well as the ship.[†1] All these Railway Hotels are too large.

Tell Mary with my love, that I will write her a line tomorrow. Having dined, I am now (between 7 and 8) going out to look how Dover wears. "Caesar",[†2] as I came by in the Railway carriage looked steep and green.

With love to Plorn, and also to Clara,[†3]

Ever My Dearest Georgy | Your most affectionate

CD

To WILKIE COLLINS, 24 MAY 1861

MS Morgan Library.

Lord Warden Hotel, Dover
Friday Evening Twenty Fourth May, 1861.

My Dear Wilkie.

I am delighted to receive so good an account of last night, and have no doubt that it was a thorough success.[†4] Now it is over, I may honestly say that I am glad you were (by your friendship) forced into the Innings, for there is no doubt that it is of immense importance to a public man in our way, to have his wits at his tongue's end. Sir (as Dr. Johnson would have said), if it be not irrational in man to count his feathered bipeds before they are hatched, we will conjointly astonish them next year. BOSWELL.[†5] Sir I hardly understand you. JOHNSON.[†5] Sir, you never understand anything. BOSWELL (in a sprightly manner) Perhaps Sir, I am all the better for it. JOHNSON (severely). Sir, I do not know but that you are. There is Lord Carlisle (smiling) — he never understands anything, and yet the dog is well enough. Then Sir there is Forster; he understands many things, and yet the fellow is fretful. Again Sir there is Dickens, with a facile way with him — like Davy[†6] Sir, like Davy — yet I am told that the man is lying at a hedge alehouse by the sea shore in Kent, as long as they will trust him. BOSWELL. But there are no hedges by the sea in Kent Sir. JOHNSON. And why not Sir? BOSWELL (at a loss) I don't know Sir, unless — JOHNSON (thundering). Let us have no unlesses Sir. If your father had never said "Unless," he would never have begotten you Sir. BOSWELL (yielding). Sir that is very true.

Of course I am dull and penitent here, but it is very beautiful — I can work well — and I walked, by the cliffs, to Folkestone and back today, when it was so exquisitely beautiful that, though I was alone, I could not keep silence on the subject. In the 14 miles, I doubt if I met 12 people. They say this house is full, yet I meet nobody, save now and then a languishing youth in a loose very blue coat, lounging at the door and sucking the round head of a cane, as if he were trying the fit, before he had it cut off from the stem, as a pill, and swallowed it.

I hope — begin to hope — that somewhere about the 12th. of June will see me out of the book. I am anxious for some days at Gad's Hill, and settlement of Christmas No.[†1] with you. The idea I have, will certainly do (I think), and save us a quantity of beating about.

At the end of this next week I will write again. I think we may book Wednesday Week, safely, for the office.

I can hardly see, it is getting so dark.[†2]

[†a]Webster is a thorough good fellow. You know how often I have said so. There are better and truer qualities in him, than in a host of men.[†a]

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 26 MAY 1861

MS Dickens House.

Lord Warden Hotel, Dover
Sunday Twenty Sixth May, 1861.

My Dearest Georgy.

I send you enclosed, cheque for £10:3:0. That is to say:

House	5:	0:	0
Waiters	4:	0:	0
Coal bill	1:	3:	0
	£10:	3:	0

I hope I am still better. My face aches at times, but very little. I work well, walk well, eat and drink well, and sleep well.
— A short note, because I have been at work five hours, and am now going out.

Your account of the Fechter Private Boxes,[†3] looks as if money were not strong in that part of the Theatre.

With love to Mary and Plorn
Ever my Dearest Georgy | Your most affectionate
CD.

To LADY OLLIFFE, 26 MAY 1861

MS Benoliel Collection. Address (not through post, may not belong to letter): Lady Olliffe.

Lord Warden Hotel, Dover
Sunday Twenty Sixth May, 1861.

My Dear Lady Olliffe

I have run away to this Sea Beach to get rid of my Neuralgic face, and did not receive your note concerning Saturday, until yesterday morning, when it was too late to answer it.

Touching the kind invitations received from you this morning, I feel that the only course I can take — without being a Humbug — is to decline them. After the middle of June, I shall be mostly at Gad's Hill — I know that I cannot do better than keep out of the way of hot rooms and late dinners — and what would you think of me, or call me, if I were to accept and not come!

No, no, no. Be still my soul.[†1] Be virtuous, eminent author. Do not accept, my Dickens. She is to come to Gad's Hill with her spouse. Await her there my child.[†2] (Thus the voice of Wisdom.)

My Dear Lady Olliffe | Ever affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To W. H. WILLS, 26 MAY 1861

MS Huntington Library.

Lord Warden, Dover
Sunday Twenty Sixth May, 1861.

My Dear Wills. Many thanks for your report of Wilkie, which amused and interested me very much. His quality of taking pains, united to natural quickness, will always get him on. He was delighted with the success,[†3] and wrote to me that night, before going to bed.

I hope I am really and permanently better. I work here, like a Steam Engine, and walk like Captain Barclay.[†4]

Enclosed, a letter forwarded here this morning.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

June

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 4 JUNE 1861

Mention in Naylor Catalogue No. 21 (Jan 1877); MS 1 p.; dated Office of AYR, 4 June 61.

To EDWARD J. SMITH,[†1] 5 JUNE 1861*

MS University of California Library, Berkeley.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Fifth June 1861.

Sir

I beg to thank you for the little poem[†2] you have sent me, which is highly creditable to you as a patriotic effusion, struck out of your honest and earnest feeling, and produced under difficulty. I should deceive you if I told you that it had any very remarkable literary merits in my eyes.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Edward J Smith

To MESSRS GEORGE HEAD & CO., 7 JUNE 1861*

MS Private. Address: Messrs. Head and Co. | Upper Baker Street.

3 Hanover Terrace
Seventh June 1861.

Mr. Charles Dickens sends his compliments to Messrs. Head and Co. and begs to signify his ready compliance with their request concerning the Gardener. He would be happy to facilitate any other preparations for Sir Charles Rowley's[†3] return.[†4]

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 7 JUNE 1861

MS Lytton Papers.

3 Hanover Terrace
Friday afternoon Seventh June 1861

My Dear Bulwer Lytton

I am very much afraid that it is now impossible to change that particular advertisement.[†1] (I write to you immediately on the receipt of your letter). The No. in which it is, is stereotyped and gone to America. We are always obliged to be a fortnight in advance, and it is by this time unquestionably done and gone.

But I hope on the whole announcement question, that you will not object to the story's being announced as yours by name. It is so very important to us to avoid any indirect way in any such matter, and to have a name — THE[†2] name. I never, for my part, contemplated any other form of announcement, or supposed that you did, when we made our arrangement. I am not sure, but I think you will find in one of my earlier letters, if you have preserved them, that I speak of the pleasure and advantage of your story and your name.[†3]

As you say, — it comes to the same thing, as everybody knows your books. But I hope you will turn this consideration into our scale, when I assure you that the name is really of importance and great importance.

There is not the least objection to the 1st. No. — or any No. — being as long as you may desire.[†4]

The Guild day[†5] shall be changed.

On Saturday the 15th. by 5 oC train from Kings Cross, we three[†6] will come down. Many thanks for remembering others, but they are all at school or otherwise employed. But unfortunately we cannot stay over Wednesday, as I have an old engagement (probably having murdered somebody in a former state of existence) to dine at the Mansion House that day; not at a public dinner.

I have been writing hard all day, and fear you can scarcely read this — I can scarcely write it.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To W. C. MACREADY, 11 JUNE 1861†

MS Morgan Library.

All the Year Round Office
Tuesday Eleventh June 1861.

My Dearest Macready

I have seen Mr. Francis,[†1] and have impressed upon him in the strongest manner that I do not think he will succeed, and that I must decline to join in his endeavour, because I cannot imagine any honor being done to Shakespeare, but can imagine something like dishonor being done to him by failure. He has got Drury Lane Theatre (a building near here, of some size)[†2] to hold a Meeting in;[†3] and I should think the kind of Meeting he will be able to hold, will do him little good.

I did not derive a bad impression of the gentleman himself, from our interview.

Georgina desires me to thank you affectionately for your kindness concerning Bartlett.[†4]

There is little doubt, I think, of my reading at Cheltenham, somewhere about November.[†5] I submit myself so entirely to Arthur Smith's arrangements for me, that I express my sentiments on this head with modesty. But I think there is scarcely a doubt of my seeing you then.

I have just finished my book of Great Expectations, and am the worse for wear. Neuralgic pains in the face have troubled me a good deal, and the work has been pretty close. But I hope that the book is a good book, and I have no doubt of very soon throwing off the little damage it has done me.

What with Blondin[†6] at the Crystal Palace, and Leotard[†7] at Leicester Square, we seem to be going back to barbaric excitements. I have not seen, and don't intend to see, the Hero of Niagara (as the Posters call him) but I have been beguiled into seeing Leotard, and it is at once the most fearful and most graceful thing I have ever seen done.

Clara White (grown pretty) has been staying with us, [†a]and giving us the most wonderful accounts of White. Whenever they go away from home, he minutely calculates how long it will take him to return by a particular day, to be buried. And he cheers them of an evening by calculating in how many months there will be none of them left but the little dog — usually appointing the entire extinction of the family, for an early day.

In the meanwhile[†a] I am sore afraid that The Times, by playing fast and loose with the American question, has very seriously compromised this country.[†1] The Americans Northward are perfectly furious on the subject,[†2] and Motley[†3] the historian (a very sensible man, strongly English in his sympathies)[†4] assured me the other day that he thought the harm done, very serious indeed, and the dangerous nature of the daily-widening breach scarcely calculable.[†5]

[†a]Carlyle has greatly intensified his aversion to Jews, and is greatly enraged by beholding the gradual rise of a Mansion that Rothschild[†6] is building next the Duke of Wellington's.[†7] He was with us the other day, representing your old friend King John[†8] as an enlightened Sovereign in respect of drawing the teeth of Jews, to make them shed their money; and was comforting himself with an imaginary picture of Rothschild haled to the Court of Queen Victoria, and having several double teeth drawn, and being addressed, "Sir you sow not, neither do you work, nor make any useful thing upon the surface o' God's airth; you merely accumulate; and Sir we do require to have such accumulation out of ye, and, by the strong dentist hand and the permission of the Eternal Ruler o' this Universe, we will draw every tooth out of your Mosaic head unless you here and now put down seventeen millions of ill gotten Money, which shall be held sufficient for this day and this day only, for tomorrow we will have other teeth or other millions, see you!"[†1†a]

Kindest and best love to all. Wilkie Collins has just come in and sends best regard. Ever most affectionately My Dearest Macready CD.

To WILLIAM BROUGH,[†2] 12 JUNE 1861

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, July 1995; MS 2 pp.; dated 3 Hanover Terrace, 12 June 61; addressed William Brough.

Explaining his objection to the use of his name, though he had agreed that Mr Grattan Cooke[†3] might place it on his "Committee", as no mention is made of any Committee,[†4] and no distinction drawn between it and the names of the gentleman who are going to act,[†5] ... it has indirectly justified the assumption that I am going to act and has already involved me in innumerable explanations. Other names, no doubt, are used in the same manner (as for example Mr. Wills's) ... but you know that my name is a rather conspicuous one and has been often prominently associated with amateur Stage Playing ... you have led a great many people to suppose that I am going to do ... what I have never had the faintest notion of doing. And this is not only annoying but really distressing to me because I would not for any consideration deviate from my observance of perfect exactness and fidelity in all dealings with the public.

To [FREDERIC CHAPMAN],[†6] 15 JUNE 1861*

MS Johns Hopkins University.

3 Hanover Terrace, Regents Park.
Saturday Fifteenth June 1861.

My Dear Sir

Pray keep Whiting's people well up to the mark, and fix a day for publishing Great Expectations, and let them and Eeles know that it must be out on the day appointed[†7]

To JOHN MURRAY, 17 JUNE 1861*

MS Sir John Murray.

Knebworth, Stevenage
Monday Seventeenth June 1861.

My Dear Murray

Before leaving town on Saturday, I meant to have troubled you with a note to the effect of this present missive; but having neglected it in the pressure of other occupations, I now repair the omission. On Wednesday I shall be in town again, and any letter addressed to me at the All the Year Round office will easily find me.

The matter on which I trouble you is this:— My son in law Mr. Charles Collins has written a book descriptive of a tour along some of the deserted post roads of France. He hired a native conveyance and bought a native horse, and stayed at the out of the way inns, and mixed with the out of the way people. You are perhaps acquainted with his merits as a painter, and he has made a number of designs for wood engravings in illustration of this book. It would make a good-sized volume, and is humourous and observant.

On his shewing me his MS the other day, it occurred to me that such a book might be more in your way (as branching out of the Guide Book realities)[†1] than in any other House's, and of course the writer of the said book eagerly caught at my offer to write to you about it. No doubt you will at once understand that I do not ask you for any opinion or shadow of proposal, but merely whether I shall send you the MS and some of the Sketches, to look over? If you were to think so well of them as to entertain the subject with a view to their publication, I should be heartily glad of it. If you should not think so favorably of them, I should be none the less obliged to you.[†2]

Believe me | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Murray Esquire.

To MESSRS GEORGE HEAD & CO., 21 JUNE 1861*

MS Sir John Heygate.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Friday Twenty First June 1861.

Mr. Charles Dickens sends Messrs. Head and Co. a cheque for their astonishing account,[†3] and begs to have a receipt forwarded here, in order that the most marvellous document he has ever in his life seen or heard of, may be complete.[†4]

To WILKIE COLLINS, 23 JUNE 1861

MS Morgan Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Sunday Twenty Third June 1861.

My Dear Wilkie. We will arrange our Xmas No. please God, under the shade of the Oak Trees.

I shall remain in town on the Thursday, and will return with you on the Friday. We can settle our Train when we meet on Wednesday.

As yet, I have hardly got into the enjoyment of thorough laziness. Bulwer was so very anxious that I should alter the end of Great Expectations — the extreme end, I mean, after Biddy and Joe are done with — and stated his reasons so well, that I have resumed the wheel, and taken another turn at it. Upon the whole I think it is for the better. You shall see the change when we meet.[†1]

The country is most charming, and this place very pretty. I am sorry to hear that the hot East winds have taken such a devastating blow into No. 12 Harley Street. They have been rather surprising, if any thing in weather can be said to surprise.

I don't know whether anything remarkable comes off in the air today; but the blue bottles (there are 9 in this room) are all banging their heads against the windowglass, in the most astonishing manner. I think there must be some competitive examination somewhere, and these 9 have been rejected.

Ever affy,

CD.

P.S. I reopen this, to state that the most madly despondent blue bottle has committed suicide, and fallen dead on the carpet.

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 24 JUNE 1861

MS Lytton Papers.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Twenty Fourth June 1861.

My Dear Bulwer Lytton. I send you enclosed, the whole of the concluding weekly No. of Great Expectations,[†2] in order that you may the more readily understand where I have made the change.[†3]

My difficulty was, to avoid doing too much. My tendency — when I began to unwind the thread that I thought I had wound for ever — was to labour it, and get out of proportion.

So I have done it in as few words as possible;[†1] and I hope you will like the alteration that is entirely due to you.

It would give us great pleasure if you would come down to this small parsonage and see us. I would ask Mr. Baylis[†2] and no one else. French should have an appropriate nook for the pipe sticks. Could you come on Friday the 5th. of July, or Saturday the 6th.?[†3] Or if that time would not suit you, will you tell me generally how your time lies spread out before you.

I was so heartily glad to be with you at Knebworth, that it would be delightful to me to have a quiet visit from you. Write me a line, concerning the dates herein suggested.

Ever Cordially

CD.

To MARTIN CAWOOD,[†4] 25 JUNE 1861*

MS Mr E. Herring.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Twenty Fifth June 1861.

Sir

I beg to acknowledge your obliging letter of yesterday's date. It is with reluctance that I withhold my name from the public undertaking that you represent but my time is too much occupied to admit of my taking any part in the administration of its affairs, and I hold it a sound principle never to associate myself, in name alone, with any enterprise.

I am Sir | Faithfully yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Martin Cawood Esquire.

To ARTHUR HELPS,[†1] 25 JUNE 1861*

MS Benoliel Collection.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Twenty Fifth June 1861.

My Dear Helps (pray let us drop the "Mr.")

I have read the treatise on Organization[†2] with very great pleasure, and am proud to be referred to in it.[†3] I have rarely met with any thing so remarkable for clear reasoning, forcible and yet modest exposition of the truth, and felicity of illustration. I read it, lying on my back under an oak tree, and read it twice. Would to God that some people we know of would read it every week of their lives, and take it well to heart!

We missed you very much at Knebworth.[†4] Some wonderful fishing took place on the afternoon of the day you left us. "Jack"[†5] were (as usual) spoken of with the utmost confidence, and an unfortunate Conservative[†6] was beguiled into "trolling" for a ton or so of those fish. I made a proposal to Buchanan[†7] to buy every Jack taken, at five shillings per Jack, and eat them all at dinner. We trolled in the neighbourhood of the spouting Lions, and they looked as if they spouted in scorn. Bulwer had the oddest impression that the new visitor was a crack fisherman and was eternally fishing — and such preparations were made for him in the way of Worms and other bait, as might have depopulated the Jack world. Whereas he told me (looking aghast at the various engines set ready for him) that he had not had a rod in his hand since he left Eton. You will not expect me to go through the form of assuring you that not a Jack appeared. A keeper affected to be sanguine, and pointed to particular spots where Jacks of five pounds were known to be, as he pretended; but he was a very honest man and despair stood in his eye.

The rampant little horse did not reappear, and my daughter was not without hope that he might have run away on his hind legs. More information was obtained concerning the hermit.[†8] If he were to faint one night, he would probably be devoured by the Rats who swarm in that den of his.[†1] — I should not have stood so coolly at the bars, if I had known of their being so near.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Arthur Helps Esquire

To MISS MARY BOYLE, 26 JUNE 1861

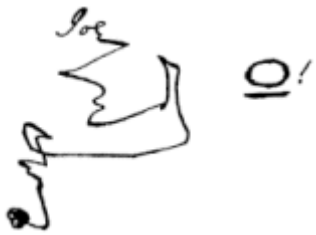
Text from N, III, 226.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Twenty-Sixth June 1861

My Dearest Meery,

Enclosed is the monster who passes (fraudulently) by the name I have appended to him. And has it come to this? — That she — she — tells me of her Dramatic Triumphs with Others![†2]

Despairingly



To W. R. DEMPSTER,[†1] 26 JUNE 1861*

MS Yale University Library. Address: W. R. Dempster Esquire | 3 Tavistock Street | Bedford Square | W. C.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Twenty Sixth June 1861.

My Dear Sir

If it should suit your convenience to come down and see us on Sunday, I should be very glad to renew the pleasure I had when you were in England formerly.[†2] The line of Railway to bring you to Higham, is the North Kent; the Terminus is at London Bridge Station; the journey is little more than an hour, and you can return at half past nine at night. A good Sunday train leaves town at 10.50 A.M. I will send a carriage to Higham Station to meet you, if you say yes.

Or, if Sunday should be inconvenient to you, either Monday or Tuesday will suit me equally well

My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

W. R. Dempster Esquire

To T. O. BARLOW,[†3] 29 JUNE 1861

Extract in Bloomsbury Book Auction catalogue, No. 232 (June, 1994); MS 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill Place, 29 June 61; addressed T. O. Barlow.

Recommending him not to dedicate an engraving to my friend Miss Coutts.

July

To JOHN FORSTER, 1 JULY 1861

Composite text from F, IX, i, 737; VIII, v, 673-4, 674*n* and MDGH, II, 142-4([aa])

[a]Gad's Hill, Monday, July 1st, 1861.

My dear Forster,

....[a] You will be surprised to hear that I have changed the end of Great Expectations from and after Pip's return to Joe's, and finding his little likeness

there.[†1] Bulwer, who has been, as I think you know, extraordinarily taken by the book, so strongly urged it upon me, after reading the proofs, and supported his views with such good reasons, that I resolved to make the change. You shall have it when you come back to town. I have put in as pretty a little piece of writing as I could, and I have no doubt the story will be more acceptable through the alteration.[†2]

[a]I have not seen Bulwer's changed story. I brought back the first month with me, and I know the nature of his changes throughout; but I have not yet had the revised proofs.[†3] He was[a] in better health and spirits than I have seen him in, in all these years, — a little weird occasionally regarding magic and spirits, but always fair and frank under opposition. He was brilliantly talkative, anecdotal, and droll; looked young and well; laughed heartily; and enjoyed with great zest some games we played. In his artist-character and talk, he was full of interest and matter, saying the subtlest and finest things — but that he never fails in. I enjoyed myself immensely, as we all did.

[a]The fire I did not see until the Monday morning, but it was blazing fiercely then, and was blazing hardly less furiously when I came down here again last Friday. I was here on the night of its breaking out.[†4] If I had been in London I should have been on the scene, pretty surely.

You will be perhaps surprised to hear that it is Morgan's conviction (his son was here yesterday), that the North will put down the South, and that speedily. In his management of his large business,[†5] he is proceeding steadily on that conviction. He says that the South has no money and no credit, and that it is impossible for it to make a successful stand.[†6] He may be all wrong, but he is certainly a very shrewd man, and he has never been, as to the United States, an enthusiast of any class.[a]

Poor Lord Campbell's seems to me as easy and good a death as one could desire.[†7] There must be a sweep of these men very soon, and one feels as if it must fall out like the breaking of an arch — one stone goes from a prominent place, and then the rest begin to drop. So one looks, not without satisfaction (in our sadness) at lives so rounded and complete, towards Brougham, and Lyndhurst, and Pollock.[†8]

[a]I will add no more to this, or I know I shall not send it; for I am in the first desperate laziness of having done my book, and think of offering myself to the village school as a live example of that vice for the edification of youth.

Ever, my dear Forster, affectionately[a]

[CD]

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 2 JULY 1861

Mention in Dawson's Book Shop Catalogue, June 1941; MS (3rd person) 1 p.; dated 2 July 61

Referring to verses that have not been received.

To JOHN SCOTT RUSSELL,[†1] 4 JULY 1861

Mention in Hodgson's catalogue, Dec 1947; dated 4 July 61; addressed J. Scott Russell.

Accompanying a presentation copy of Great Expectations.[†2]

To T. R. EELES, 6 JULY 1861

MS Princeton University Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Sixth July, 1861.

Dr. Mr. Eeles

Be so good as bind a Dedication[†3] copy of Great Expectations in Russia Leather and Gold, and to do it as soon as you can. Mr. Townshend, to whom the book is dedicated, will soon be leaving town. This note will be a sufficient authority to Chapman and Hall to supply you with a copy on my account.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To BENJAMIN LILLIE, 6 JULY 1861

MS Yale University Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Sixth July, 1861.

Mr. Lillie.

I shall be glad if you will send down here at your convenience, with a view to making me out an estimate of the cost — for ready money — of the alteration stated on the other side.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

ESTIMATE[†1]

of the cost, for Cash, of putting the best plate glass into the under-mentioned windows, and of strengthening the present window frames as may be necessary, and of putting new fastenings, lifts, &c complete —

HALL.[†1] Fanlight. One piece. 2 side windows, one piece in each sash.

LIBRARY[†1] 2 side windows of bow. One piece in each sash (Centre already done)

SMALL DRAWING ROOM.[†1] 2 side windows of bow. One piece in each sash (Centre already done)

MISS DICKENS'S ROOM.[†1] 3 windows of bow. One piece in each sash.

SECOND SPARE ROOM OPPOSITE.[†1] Ditto

FIRST LANDING.[†1] 2 side windows. One piece in each sash (Centre already done)

BEST SPARE ROOM.[†1] The whole of the end window. One piece in each sash.

MISS HOGARTH'S ROOM.[†1] 1 Window. One piece in each sash.

The glass could be brought from the station in my Van.

CD.[†2]

To MRS MILNER GIBSON, 8 JULY 1861

Text from MDGH, III, 205-6.

Gad's Hill, Monday, Eighth July, 1861.

My Dear Mrs. Gibson,

I want very affectionately and earnestly to congratulate you on your eldest daughter's approaching marriage.[†3] Up to the moment when Mary told me of it,

I had foolishly thought of her always as the pretty little girl with the frank loving face whom I saw last on the sands at Broadstairs.[†1] I rubbed my eyes and woke at the words "going to be married," and found I had been walking in my sleep some years.

I want to thank you also for thinking of me on the occasion, but I feel that I am better away from it. I should really have a misgiving that I was a sort of shadow on a young marriage, and you will understand me when I say so, and no more.

But I shall be with you in the best part of myself, in the warmth of sympathy and friendship — and I send my love to the dear girl, and devoutly hope and believe that she will be happy. The face that I remember with perfect accuracy, and could draw here, if I could draw at all, was made to be happy and to make a husband so.

I wonder whether you ever travel by railroad in these times! I wish Mary could tempt you to come by any road to this little place.[†2]

With kind regard to Milner Gibson[†3] believe me ever,

Affectionately and faithfully yours

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To THE HON. MRS RICHARD WATSON, 8 JULY 1861

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Eighth July, 1861.

My Dear Mrs. Watson.

I have owed you a letter for so long a time, that I fear you may sometimes have misconstrued my silence. But I hope that the sight of the handwriting of your old friend will undeceive you, if you have, and will put that right.

During the progress of my last story, I have been working so hard that very very little correspondence — except enforced correspondence on business — has passed this pen. And now that I am free again, I devote a few of my first leisure moments to this note.

You seemed in your last, to think that I had forgotten you in respect of the Christmas Number. Not so at all. I discussed with them here where you were, how you were to be addressed, and the like; finally left the Number here in a blank envelope, and did not add the address to it until it would have been absurd to send you such stale bread. This was my fault, but this was all. And I should be so pained at heart if you supposed me capable of failing in my truth and cordiality, or in the warm remembrance of the time we have passed together, that perhaps I make more of it than you meant to do.

My sailor boy is at home — I was going to write, for the holidays; but I suppose I must substitute "on leave." Under the new regulations he must not pass out of the Britannia before December. The younger boys are all at school and coming home this week for the holidays. Mary keeps house, of course, and Katie and her husband surprised us yesterday and are here now — Charley is holiday-making at Guernsey and Jersey. He has been for sometime seeking a partnership in business, and has not yet found one.[†1] The matter is in the hands of Mr. Bates the managing partner in Baring's house, and seems as slow a matter to adjust itself as ever I looked on at. Georgina is, as usual, the general friend confidante and factotum of the whole party.

Your present correspondent read at St. James's Hall in the beginning of the season, to perfectly astounding audiences; but finding that fatigue and excitement very difficult to manage in conjunction with a story, deemed it prudent to leave off reading in high tide and mid-career — the rather, by reason of something like Neuralgia in the face. At the end of October I begin again; and, if you are in Brighton in November, I shall hope to see you there. I deliver myself up to Mr. Arthur Smith, and I know it is one of the places for which he has put me down.

This is all about me and mine, and next I want to know why you never came to Gad's Hill, and whether you are never coming — The stress I lay on these questions, you will infer from the size of the following note of interrogation?[†2]

I am in the constant receipt of news from Lausanne. Katie and her husband went there on their marriage trip, and saw the Cerjats. Cerjat (from whom I hear regularly every Christmas Eve) seems to have been extraordinarily hurt by the conduct of a loose Imbecile who was to have been married to one of his daughters and gave her up in the paltriest and wretchedest way.[†3] He always reverts to it in every kind of conversation (Mr. Townshend tells me), and he wrote to me about it, as if he supposed it to be the subject of conversation throughout the universe. I represented that the young lady had had a happy escape from a mean hound; but it did very little in the mollifying way.

Of Mary Boyle I dare say you have seen and heard more than I have lately. Rumours occasionally reach me of her acting in every English Shire incessantly,[†4] and getting in a harvest of laurels all the year round. Cavendish I have not seen for a long time, but when I did see him last it was at Tavistock House (before I sold it to a rich Jew, who is said to defraud the Christian Youth to a terrific extent) and we dined together jovially. Mention of that locality reminds me that when you DO[†5] come here, you will see the pictures looking wonderfully better and more precious than they ever did in town. Brought together in country light and air, they really are quite a Baby collection, and very pretty.

I direct this to Rockingham, supposing you to be there in summer time. If you are as leafy in Northamptonshire as we are in Kent, you are greener than you have been for some years. I hope you may have seen a large-headed photograph with little legs, representing the undersigned, pen in hand, tapping his forehead to knock an idea out.[†1] It has just sprung up so abundantly in all the shops, that I am ashamed to go about town looking in at the picture windows — which is my delight. It seems to me extraordinarily ludicrous, and much more like than the grave portraits done in earnest. It made me laugh when I first came upon it, until I shook again, in open sun-lighted Piccadilly.[†2]

Pray be a good Christian to me, and don't be retributive in measuring out the time that shall pass before you write to me. And believe me ever,

Your affectionate and faithful
CHARLES DICKENS

To WILKIE COLLINS, 12 JULY 1861

MS Morgan Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Friday Twelfth July, 1861.

My Dear Wilkie,

If I express myself at all incoherently, attribute it to the state of my mind. On this happy day the boys come home for two months — and I am listening in mild despair for the sound of their first Holiday-War-Whoop. I cannot quite collect my feelings, or compose myself with the firmness of a man to meet the situation.

It happens very unfortunately that I cannot get to Broadstairs before Thursday. As soon as the Leeches go (they came yesterday, and will probably stay till Monday) I must look after some matters in town: where I think I shall remain all next week. When I hoped to come, I thought you were intending to remain longer. My hope shall now be transferred to the shore on which you do remain.

Lowestoft has improved very much since I was there,[†3] and no doubt has now a good hotel and good houses. But it did not impress me favorably, by reason of the Sea's coming in shallow, and going out over moist sandy plain a long long way. In this particular I seem to remember it as a more saline and removed Southend.

[†a]That unaccountable, uninteresting, and impracticable boy[†1] positively refused to go near the Doctor. Protested there was nothing the matter with him. Flouted Wills. Said, No he wouldn't go — and didn't. What more could the Parient do, but fold his hands like the Eastern Deity?[†a]

Bulwer was great here, and perfectly enjoyed himself. You will be amazed when you see what he has done with his first four numbers — all I have read — and with what curious patience, study, and skill, he has gone into the art of the weekly No. There is a remarkably skilfully done woman. One Mrs. Colonel Poyntz.[†2] The whole idea of the story turned in a masterly way towards the safe point of the compass.

I have been paying bills all the morning, and must send this dull reply to your amusing letter perforce, as I must now appear in the Leech hemisphere. No doubt I shall see or hear from you in town, and know your movements. I am so horribly lazy that I have done nothing and thought nothing since you went away.

[†a]Love to the Butler from her ancient partner in the Card Trade. And kind regard to the Butler's Mama.[†a]

Wills told us a story here yesterday that I thought very ridiculous, about a charity-boy who persisted in saying to the Inspector of Schools that Our Saviour was the only forgotten son of his father — and that he was forgotten by his father before all worlds. &c. &c. — in an Athanasian and Theological dogmatism.

Ever affectionately.

CD.

To BARON BERNHARD TAUCHNITZ, 15 JULY 1861

Text from Curt Otto, Der Verlag Bernhard Tauchnitz, 1837-1912, p. 57.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
July 15th, 1861.

The book has been a very great success indeed, here. I hope it will prove to answer your purpose also.[†3]

To GEORGINA HOGARTH, 17 JULY 1861

MS Dickens House.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Seventeenth July 1861

My Dearest Georgy

I think you had better bring me up a white Dress Shirt, or I may run aground.

I will give you a Pound when Duff Gordon[†1] marries Marguerite.[†2]

I am sick to death of the faintest reference to Chauncy's "party".

I have a horrible idea upon me at times, that Bartlett[†3] will not turn out grateful. I don't know what it is that whispers the suspicion to me — something in her cheek bone, I think — but it comes over me occasionally, like the whiff of some disagreeable Factory.

Ever affectionately
Love to all. CD.

To MR FISHER,[†4] 19 JULY 1861

MS British Film Institute.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Nineteenth July, 1861.

Mr. Charles Dickens begs to say that he would have been very glad to support the case in which Mr. Fisher is interested but that his vote is already promised in aid of another deserving and afflicted applicant.[†5]

To CHARLES KENT, 21 JULY 1861

Mention in New Dudley Gallery catalogue of Dickens Exhibition, 1908; MS 2 pp. with envelope; dated Gad's Hill, 21 July 61; addressed Charles Kent.[†6]

To JOHN MURRAY, 23 JULY 1861

MS Sir John Murray. Address: John Murray Esquire | Newstead | Wimbledon Park | near London | S.W.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Twenty Third July 1861

My Dear Murray.

I am really most heartily obliged to you for your kind and friendly answer to my letter. If you have not already seen Mr. Charles Collins, he will lose no time in coming to you I know.

My daughter will have the pleasure of calling on Mrs. Murray the next time we come to town for a day or two. And I shall trust to that time for a better chance of our meeting, as she purposes setting forth to Mrs. Murray[†1] how accessible we are here on Falstaff's genuine ground, and how we have green lanes and an old castle to shew, and how very glad we should be if you would come and see us without other ceremony than a cordial welcome.

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Murray Esquire.

To THE SECRETARIES, NEWCASTLE-UPON-TYNE LITERARY AND PHILOSOPHICAL SOCIETY,[†2] [6-24] JULY 1861

Mention in Apparatus and Lecture Committee Minutes Book, MS Newcastle upon Tyne Literary and Philosophical Society. Date: between 5 July 61, when the Secretaries were instructed to invite CD to address them, and 24 July, when CD's reply was read to the Committee.

Declining to address the Society in the following session.[†3]

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 25 JULY 1861

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Twenty Fifth July 1861.

My Dear Ouvry.

Chapman and Hall inform me that a new Registration of Pickwick is necessary under the last Copyright Act.[†4] Will you take the necessary steps to effect such registration? If I am wanted in the business, I shall be here next Wednesday by halfpast 10. Pickwick is the joint property of myself and Chapman and Hall. One moiety of the Copyright belongs to that Firm; the other, to me. Any needful particulars can be got from Mr. Fredk. Chapman. Their address, as you probably know, is Piccadilly.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Frederic Ouvry Esquire

To MISS ADELAIDE PROCTER,[†1] [25 JULY 1861]

Envelope only, MS Mr Maurice Beebe. Address: Miss Procter | 32 Weymouth Street | London | W. Date: PM Rochester JU 25 61.

To MESSRS SKINNER & CO.,[†2] 27 JULY 1861

MS Mr Christopher Johnson. Address: Messrs. Skinner and Co. | Tailors | 50 Jermyn Street | St. James's | London | W.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Night Twenty Seventh July, 1861.

Mr. Charles Dickens begs Messrs. Skinner & Co. to make him a light summer coat of the bright blue material of which they made the last waistcoat he had. He wishes the coat to be lined with flannel in the body, but not in the sleeves — to be made single-breasted — in the form of the old shooting-coat, but without flaps to the pockets. He will be at the office of All The Year Round in Wellington Street, on Wednesday from 11 to 1, and on Thursday morning from 10 to 11. He will be glad to have the coat as soon as possible.[†3]

To FREDERIC CHAPMAN, 30 JULY 1861

MS Johns Hopkins University.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Thirtieth July, 1861.

My Dear Sir

There is a great mistake in the leading of these pages. I particularly referred you to the printed Little Dombey Reading-book, and said that I wished each page to hold no more than 22 lines. Will you be good enough to give these directions to Clowes's[†4] people:—

That each page is to be leaded so wide, as that it shall hold only 22 lines.

That my marked corrections are to be carefully made.

That 3 copies of each Reading are then to be printed for me on foolscap and that the type may then be distributed.

These directions apply to all the Readings sent to be printed — equally to Nickleby (of which I have not yet the proofs) as to these two Readings now returned.

I shall be at the office tomorrow (Wednesday) and shall probably remain in town until Friday.

And always believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Fredk. Chapman Esquire.

To H. WITTROCK,[†1] 30 JULY 1861

MS Worcestor Polytechnic Institute. Address: Mr. H. Wittrock | Morpeth | Canada West.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Thirtieth July, 1861.

Sir

I am much obliged to you for your letter. It is not the less welcome to me because I use (probably) as much cold water as any one living, and have taken a daily shower Bath these Twenty years.

I am happy to report that the neuralgic pain for which you so kindly prescribe, was of brief duration, and left me after a very few weeks.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

H. Wittrock Esquire

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 31 JULY 1861

MS Dickens House.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Thirty First July 1861.

My Dearest Georgy.

I send this down, to ask you to give Frank to bring here to me — and to give him, tomorrow morning at breakfast, so that he may not forget it — my small umbrella with the Ivory handle.

Edmund — I mean Frederick — Chapman will come down with me by the 10 ¼ Train on Saturday morning. We had better have the basket to meet us, as he will no doubt bring a portmanteau. And as we will go to his room straight, to introduce him to it, will you take care that it is in a state of perfect (and airy) neatness?

Don't forget the Waiter.

Edmund Yates asks if he could come down on Friday in next week. Can he? Take counsel with Mary and advise me herein. And if he is to come, it will be best to tell Katie not to appear until Saturday. As I have not yet answered his note, send me a line with the umbrella.

The dear admiral[†1] went off in perfect equanimity. Our dear Cubitt[†2] (I am happy to find) failed in his election.[†3]

With love to all | Ever affecy
CD.

To W. C. MACREADY, 31 JULY 1861

MS Morgan Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Thirty First July, 1861.

My Dearest Macready.

Though it is always inexpressibly interesting and delightful to me to hear from you, I felt an unwonted kind of reproach in your last, because I had not sent you Great Expectations. But you will not think I forgot it. The book is an immense success; and a compound of bungling on the part of the publisher and of the printer, has caused it to be out of print for a fortnight! Imagine that, with a Second Edition all sold to the trade, a third Edition already being ordered away, and not a copy of either producible until next Saturday![†4] In this disordered state of things every stray copy has been swept into Piccadilly, and I have had not one to bless my self and family with.

So I shall bring your copy to Cheltenham when I come to read there.[†5] Whereof you shall have further advices when Arthur Smith gives me my list.

I hope my dear Parr[†6] has nothing worth mentioning the matter with him — nothing, that is to say, that the best and kindest of nurses[†7] and the best and kindest of air will fail to put right. All here send best love and regard. And I am as ever my Dearest Macready

Your affectionate and faithful
CHARLES DICKENS

August

To THORNTON LEIGH HUNT, 5 AUGUST 1861

MS Iowa University Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Fifth August 1861.

My Dear Sir

I have no sufficiently strong objection to the publication of the letter whereof you send me a copy, since you desire to use it.[†1]

Perhaps Forster explained to you that I had many letters from your late father by me, but that they were all destroyed a year or so ago in a general sacrifice of letters that I resolved to make.[†2]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thornton Hunt Esquire

To CHARLES KENT, [?9 AUGUST 1861]

Envelope only,[†3] MS Yale University Library. Address: W. Charles Kent Esquire | Sun Office | Strand. Date: 9 Aug 61 typed on envelope by donors.

To JAMES FLISHER,[†4] 12 AUGUST 1861*

MS Mr Lloyd E. Roscoe.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Twelfth August 1861.

Sir

I am obliged to you for your letter concerning two books taken from my Library and left at your house. They shall be called for.

As I saw it absurdly stated in a Chatham paper that Mr. Smith[†5] was connected with my Journal "All The Year Round",[†6] and as you may possibly suppose this to be the case, I think it expedient to mention that he was only known to me as giving elementary lessons to my youngest son, and that he did not announce the readings to which you refer, with my sanction or encouragement.

I am Sir | Your obliged
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. James Flisher

To VISCONTESSA MANSO DI VILLA,[†1] 14 AUGUST 1861

MS Private. Address: Mrs Manso di Villa | 4 Hunter Street | Brunswick Square | W.C.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Fourteenth August 1861

Madam

I assure you that I have not leisure for making appointments at random; and that if I did so, I could do nothing else in life. Your letter is one of hundreds as to which I know myself to be absolutely powerless. For how can I, with any knowledge of human affairs, suppose that "a few words of suggestion" from me could clear your way, or lessen the weight of your misfortunes?[†2] It is simply impossible. And the kindest course I can hold towards you as a correspondent deceiving herself, as well as the only course I can hold with any reasonable reference to my own pursuits, is to tell you so thus.

Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs.[†3] Manso Di Villa.

To JOHN ELLIS, 16 AUGUST 1861*

MS Shakespeare Birthplace Trust.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Sixteenth August 1861

Dear Mr. Ellis

Having been away I have not received your note in due course. On Wednesday next between 11 and 1 I shall be at my office in Wellington Street, and will see you with pleasure if you call.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To WILLIAM CHAPPELL,[†1] 22 AUGUST 1861

Text from N, III, 231.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Thursday Twenty-Second August 1861

Dear Sir,

I beg to thank you cordially for your highly interesting book[†2] and for its accompanying note which is very gratifying to me. Although I did not write that particular paper in Household Words to which you refer,[†3] I have not the less sympathy with your labours. For I have a hearty enjoyment of old English Songs, and know how much gratitude is due to so able and zealous a collector as yourself.

Believe me Dear Sir | Very Faithfully Yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To WILKIE COLLINS, 28 AUGUST 1861

MS Morgan Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Twenty Eighth August 1861.

My Dear Wilkie. I have been going to write to you ever since I received your letter from Whitby, and now I hear from Charley that you are coming home and must be addressed in the Rue Harley.[†4] Let me know whether you will dine here this day week at the usual 5. I am at present so addle headed (having hard Wednesday work in Wills's absence) that I can't write much.

I have got the Copperfield Reading ready for delivery, and am now going to blaze away at Nickleby — which I don't like half as well. Every morning I "go in" at these marks for two or three hours — and then collapse and do nothing whatever (counting as nothing, mad cricket and rounders).

In my time, that curious Railroad by the Whitby Moor, was so much the more curious, that you were balanced against a counterweight of water, and that you did it like Blondin.[†5] But in those remote days the one Inn of Whitby was up a back yard, and oyster shell grottos were the only view from the best private room.[†6] Likewise Sir I have posted to Whitby. Pity the sorrows of a poor old man!

The sun is glaring in at these windows with an amount of ferocity insupportable by one of the landed interest who lies upon his back, with an imbecile hold on grass, from lunch to dinner. Feebleness of mind and hand are the result.

Ever affectionately.

CD.

The boys have multiplied themselves by 50 daily, and have seemed to appear in hosts (especially on the hottest days) round all the corners at Gad's Hill. I call them the Prowlers, and each has a distinguishing name attached, derived from his style of prowling.

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 28 AUGUST 1861

MS Lytton Papers.

OFFICE OF ALL THE ROUND,
Wednesday Twenty Eighth August 1861

My Dear Bulwer Lytton

The enclosed is enclosed, in order to explain to you that it comes too late for the corrections to be made. Don't be misled by the date upon the No. The letterpress goes to America, seventeen days before that date. Bear this in mind, and you cannot be wrong.

All your other directions respecting proofs, will be complied with by the printer to day.

We are doing extremely well here, as to circulation. We certainly have not in the least lost ground since Great Expectations finished; and to the best of our belief, we have risen a thousand. I use this qualified phrase, simply because it requires some weeks to assure us what the circulation is — to a nicety, I mean. Under any other circumstances, we should unquestionably have dropped. That we most decidedly have not done so, is a fact as solid as the Monument. More, when I know more. In the meanwhile be sure that all is as right as you could possibly desire.

Ever affecy.

CD.

To HENRY MORLEY, 28 AUGUST 1861

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Evening Twenty Eighth August 1861

My Dear Morley.

I have seen at dinner, the Times article — or penny a liner report, I mean — about the Cinque Ports.[†1]

Really I cannot bear to play into the wretched game of "His Lordship's suavity having won all hearts", and "his entering into the spirit of his office", and the like.[†1] Quite apart from my fixed opinion that it is an ill thing for England, and a bad sign for England, when a man notoriously of no conviction and no sentiment is its chosen Deity, I believe Literature to be made for better uses. To recognise any legitimate interest for any man with his head on, in the fact of this Lord's holding the dead bones of an old office that has got to be rotten, sickens me. I have not the list of matter in type by me; but for God's sake — and all our sakes — dele My Lord Warden, and substitute something that has no horrible Court Circularity in it.[†2]

So shall you do justice to your own manly books, and you and I congratulate one another in the Elysian Fields, one of these days!

I know the article does not SAY[†3] why it is written. So much the more sneaking in me if I put it in.

Very faithfully Yours ever

CD.

To UNKNOWN SOLICITOR,[†4] [AUGUST 1861]

Mention in To Wills, 31 Aug 1861. Date: presumably written a few days earlier.

To JOHN FORSTER, [LATE AUGUST 1861]

Extracts in F, VIII, vi, 687 and n, 688. Date: See To Wills, 31 Aug; both extracts probably written the same day.

The subsidence of those distressing pains in my face the moment I had done my work, made me resolve to do nothing in that way for some time if I could help it.

The fourth edition of Great Expectations is now going to press;[†5] the third being nearly out.[†6] Bulwer's story keeps us up bravely. As well as we can make out, we have even risen fifteen hundred.

Every day for two or three hours, I practise my new readings, and (except in my office work) do nothing else. With great pains I have made a continuous narrative out of *Copper*field, that I think will reward the exertion it is likely to cost me.[†1] Unless I am much mistaken, it will be very valuable in London.[†2] I have also done Nicholas Nickleby at the Yorkshire school, and hope I have got something droll out of Squeers, John Browdie, & Co.[†3] Also, the Bastille prisoner from the Tale of Two Cities.[†4] Also, the Dwarf from one of our Christmas numbers.[†5]

To W. H. WILLS, 31 AUGUST 1861†

MS Berg Collection.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Thirty First August, 1861.

My Dear Wills

I have received your letter this morning, and — not to lose a post — write to you before going to Sheerness for the day with Miss Boyle, Charley Collins, Marcus Stone, and the rest of them.

You will doubtless hear from Holsworth[†6] the Brilliant, that the Sale keeps up well, and that Bulwer seems, so far, to succeed capitally. In the making-up, I find Morley very helpful indeed — always there early on the Wednesday, always ready with his proofs and scheme, and always prepared for any kind of alterations on my part. The two Nos. we have made up since you left, are very good indeed.[†1] In last Wednesday's make up, is a paper which I have called "Four Stories",[†2] by Gleig's[†3] fair friend.[†4] They are Ghost Stories. The first (by far the best) is a remarkably good and original one.[†5] I nearly rewrote them all. In the same making-up, we had the Cinque Ports. But I was so disgusted by the preposterous homage to the Palmerston nonsense in the Times,[†6] and with the base flunkeyship of Punch,[†7] that I told Morley to take the article out again and for ever cancel the same. The Solicitor employed by the Minister for Saxony in that suspected Murder case,[†8] has written me a very intelligent letter to say that it was an exceedingly curious case of circumstantial evidence, where there was always a destructive and more or less quashing circumstance to oppose to the suspicious circumstance; and that he believes he could write an interesting pictureresque narrative of it.[†9] I have replied that with fictitious names, and with no assumption of the prisoner's innocence, and no championing of either side, I shall be glad to have it. Sala[†10] has offered a heap of rubbish by some brother of his at Southampton,[†11] which I have declined. Spicer writes to know whether his Polly[†12] is Burked[†13] or is to appear? I have replied, is to appear, 'twixt this and Christmas.[†14] He also mentions (his letter is addressed to you) that he has not been paid for The First of April.[†1] I have paid him therefore. All else goes on regularly and well — perfectly well.

From Frederick Chapman concerning Great Expectations, I have a note this very morning. There are only 90 copies left of the Third Edition, and we are now going to Press with the Fourth.

I work every day for two or three hours on my Readings. — Have a very considerable hope that Copperfield will do a great deal in London. — Am hopeful of seeing Arthur soon; who has been ill at Worthing but is better. Charley has been here, and is going to start in business for himself on the First of October. He stayed here a week, and looked very much the better for it. Cricket came off, and the "Governor" your present correspondent got a hit high over the apple tree, for which he scored three, and which covered him with glory. C . H . O . R . L . E . Y [†2] was here before starting for Spain,[†3] and walked — with me, at my pace — two and twenty miles, without appearing in the least the worse for it. At which I stood amazed, and have ever since remained in that attitude.

The weather here is perfect, the beauty of the country marvellous, and the harvest abundant. My old enemy, that infernal bushel of wheat, will have a great deal to say for himself in the Money Market shortly, I suppose.

I stick to my prediction that the people of the North (in America) will neither raise the money nor the men required by the Govt.: and that an ignoble and contemptible compromise will be made soon.[†4]

I wish you were in some hostelry, with more comfort about you. My belief in the efficacy of comfort is very great. I am rather disappointed that you didn't go to Chamounix from Geneva, and come down to Martigny, and then go to the Great St. Bernard, and then over one of the Great Passes.[†5] But I know that "Our Bore"[†6] always found the places his friends had omitted to visit, to be the best places in the Universe.

You don't mention how many ancient cripples are in Miss Coutts's party. I can imagine Skey[†7] and Co. toddling sinuously up and down the ten thousand stairs of the Gibbon[†8] — which the natives pronounce Jibbone — and corkscrewing themselves down the stony-hearted ways to the Lake.

Frank shall have your remembrance when he comes home tonight. His holiday dates from Monday next, I believe. [†a]A man who has been staying here,

[g]ave[†1] me the most awful account you can well [co]nceive,[†1] of the swindling and meanness of Samuel[†2] [C]arter[†1] as a "Director" of the Westminster Palace Hotel Company.[†3] Really a most disgraceful [f]eature,[†1] even in that career of imposture and fraud. My informant saw the scenes he described, and knew the facts officially.[†a]

This is all my news, and little enough. Mary, Katie, Georgina, and all, unite with me in kind regard to Mrs. Wills and to you. Ever My Dear Wills

Faithfully Yours

CD.

To THOMAS BAYLIS, [?AUGUST 1861]

Extract in MDGH, III, 212-13. Date: Both Blondin and "the female Blondin" performed in London in June and Aug 61 respectively; possibly CD was writing in Aug.[†4]

I agree with you about Smith[†5] himself, and I don't think it necessary to pursue the painful subject. Such things are at an end, I think, for the time being; — fell to the ground with the poor man at Cremorne.[†6] If they should be resumed, then they must be attacked; but I hope the fashion (far too much encouraged in its Blondin-beginning[†7] by those who should know much better) is over.[†8]

It always appears to me that the common people have an excuse in their patronage of such exhibitions which people above them in condition have not. Their lives are full of physical difficulties, and they like to see such difficulties overcome. They go to see them overcome. If I am in danger of falling off a scaffold or a ladder any day, the man who claims that he can't fall from anything is a very wonderful and agreeable person to me.

Faithfully yours always
[CHARLES DICKENS]

September

To ARTHUR SMITH, 3 SEPTEMBER 1861†

MS Morgan Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Third September 1861.

My Dear Arthur

I cannot tell you how sorry I am to receive your bad account of your health, or how anxious I shall be to receive a better one as soon as you can possibly give it.

If you go away from your good friend Mr. Covey†1 at all, don't you think in the main you would be better here than anywhere? You know how well you would be nursed, what care we should take of you, and how perfectly quiet and at home you would be, until you became strong enough to take to the Medway. Moreover, I think you would be less anxious about the Tour, here, than away from such association. I would come to Worthing to fetch you, I needn't say, and would take the most careful charge of you. I will write no more about this, because I wish to avoid giving you more to read than can be helped; but I do sincerely believe it would be at once your wisest and least anxious course. As to a long journey into Wales, or any long journey, it would never do. Nice is not to be thought of. Its dust, and its sharp winds (I know it well),†2 towards October, are very bad indeed.

I send you the enclosed letters, firstly because I have no circular to answer them with, and secondly because I fear I might confuse your arrangements by interfering with the correspondence. I shall hope to have a word from you very soon. I am at work for the Tour, every day, except my town Wednesdays.

Ever Faithfully,

CD.

Kindest regard from all.

To MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL, 5 SEPTEMBER 1861

MS The Current Company, Rhode Island.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Fifth September 1861.

Messrs. Chapman and Hall

Please to deliver to the Bearer for me, a copy of Great Expectations.

CHARLES DICKENS

To BENJAMIN WEBSTER, 9 SEPTEMBER 1861

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Ninth September 1861.

My Dear Webster

I have received a letter here this afternoon by the day post, from Mrs. Ternan[†1] (whose address is 2 Houghton Place Ampthill Square),[†2] telling me that you are making some prospective changes in your company, and asking me if I would object to recommend to you one of her daughters, Miss Maria Ternan.[†3] I cannot possibly object to do so, on any other ground than unwillingness to give you trouble, for I have a high opinion of the young lady and take a strong interest in herself and her family. It is likely enough that you know what she can do — how that she is accomplished and attractive, well used to the stage, sings prettily, and is favorably known to London Audiences.[†4] If you should be undecided between two applicants of equal pretensions (counting this young lady as one), I should be heartily glad if you would turn the scale in my direction[†5] — as I am sure you would in any such case.

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Benjamin Webster Esquire

To THE REV. G. R. GLEIG, 13 SEPTEMBER 1861

Composite text from Parke Bernet catalogue, No. 1249[aa] and Sotheby's catalogue, July 1950[bb]; MS 2 pp.; dated 13 Sep 61; addressed G. R. Gleig.

Enclosing a cheque in favour of the authoress of Four Stories.

It is our custom here at this time of the year to invite all our contributors to write for the Extra Christmas No. Let me through you, invite the co-operation of our protegée.[†6] ... Any story would weave into the design; whether narrated in the first person, or the third; whether referring to time present, or time past; whether ghostly or otherwise. No reference to the Christmas season is in the least necessary, on the contrary, such reference is not desired.

To MR VAUGHAN,[†1] 13 SEPTEMBER 1861*

MS University of Texas, Austin.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Thirteenth September 1861.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his Compliments to Mr. Vaughan and begs to thank Mr. Vaughan for his interesting and gratifying communication. The note has been duly posted.

To THOMAS HEAPHY,[†2] 15 SEPTEMBER 1861

Text from Thomas Heaphy, A Wonderful Ghost Story, ed. E. Heaphy, 1882, p. 7.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday, Sept, 15th, 1861

Dear Sir,

Allow me to express to you the sincere regret I feel that your most remarkable story (which I have read with great interest) should have been innocently forestalled in the pages of my journal. At the same time, I must add that your own version of the experience is so very curious, and so much more striking than the account sent to me, that I shall be happy to publish it in All the Year Round, if you should feel disposed to entrust it to me for that purpose.[†3]

I received the story published in that journal first among the Four Ghost Stories,[†4] from a gentleman of a distinguished position,[†5] both literary and social, who, I do not doubt, is well known to you by reputation. He did not send it to me as his own, but as the work of a young writer in whom he feels an interest,[†6] and who previously contributed (also through him) another ghost story.[†7] I will immediately let him know what correspondence I have had with you, and you shall be made acquainted with the nature of his reply.

You may be quite certain, I feel sure, that there has been no betrayal of confidence on the part of any one connected with the magazine for whom you reserved your story. It must have been repeatedly told (though probably never correctly) in more circles than one. It happens that Mr Layard is staying here with me, and instantly recognised the version printed in All The Year Round as a version of a story he heard at Sir Edward Lytton's, in Hertfordshire, some time since.

As I do not feel myself authorised in retaining your MS. without your consent I beg to return it herewith. But I am anxious to repeat my readiness to purchase it for publication in All The Year Round, as the authentic story. Its interest seems to me to be heightened, rather than impaired, by its having been imperfectly told.

Again expressing my regret that I should have been, however innocently and unconsciously, the cause of a moment's annoyance to you,

I am, dear Sir, | faithfully Yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Heaphy, Esq

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 15 SEPTEMBER 1861

MS Lytton Papers.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Fifteenth September 1861.

My Dear Bulwer Lytton

I wish you would look at the last published No. of All The Year Round, and read the first story in a paper there, called "Four Stories".

— For this reason. Layard is staying here, and remembers your telling a version of the same story at Knebworth. I want to know what version that was, and whence it came?

And I want that, for this reason. On the publication of that No. of All The Year Round, up starts the Artist himself, and sends me in black and white his own account of the whole experience. Which is so very original, so very extraordinary, and so very far beyond the version I have published, that, I am burning with a desire to relate it to you. All other like stories turn pale before it.

Ever affecy. Yours
CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [17 SEPTEMBER 1861]

Extracts in F, XI, iii, 841 and F (1872-4), III, xix, 484([aa]). Date: 17 Sep 61, according to Forster.

Upon the publication of the ghost story, up has started the portrait-painter who saw the phantoms! [a]His own written story is out of all distance the most extraordinary that ever was produced; and is as far beyond my version or Bulwer's as Scott is beyond James.[†1] Everything connected with it is amazing; but conceive this — the portrait-painter had been engaged to write it elsewhere as a story for next Christmas,[a] and not unnaturally supposed, when he saw himself anticipated in All the Year Round, that there had been treachery at his printer's. "In particular," says he, "how else was it possible that the date, the 13th of September, could have been got at? For I never told the date, until I wrote it." Now, my story had NO DATE; but seeing, when I looked over the proof, the great importance of having a date, I wrote in, unconsciously, the exact date on the margin of the proof![†1]

To THOMAS HEAPHY, 17 SEPTEMBER 1861

Text from Thomas Heaphy, A Wonderful Ghost Story, ed. E. Heaphy, p. 11.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Tuesday, Sept. 17th, 1861

Dear Sir,

I think I can show you in a very few words, not only that your lingering suspicion is groundless, but that everything associated with your strange experience would seem to be extraordinary. In the version I received and published, there was no date. All that was set down as to time was "late in the autumn." When I came to revise the story in the proof for press, the need of some precise date was so clear to me, that I myself inserted on the margin of the proof the date you find in the published narrative. Why that date should have come into my head rather than any other, I am profoundly unable to say. Mr Layard remembers that it is more than a year since he heard Sir Edward Lytton tell the story, and he says he has a strong impression that he laid it on the table in writing. Moreover, Mr. Layard is convinced that he has since seen it in print, though he cannot recollect where. I have written to Sir Edward to ask him how he came by it. His answer will, no doubt, have an interest for you, and I will let you know the purport in due course. I read Mr Layard your own account, and he was quite clear in his remembrance that Sir Edward's version of it fell as far short as my contributor's does. I think it would be best to call it Mr H — 's Own Narrative, or Mr H — 's Own Evidence, and I will introduce it with a few lines referring to the version already printed, and calling attention to it as being the authentic story given at first-hand.[†2] There is no doubt that it ought to appear as soon after the wrong version as possible. I will therefore place it in the number I shall make up to-morrow, which will be published to-morrow fortnight. I will send you a proof from the office in the course of to-morrow, and I must ask you to have the kindness to return it on Thursday, as we publish simultaneously in America and London, and the sheets go across the Atlantic by the next mail.

Dear sir, | faithfully yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Heaphy Esq.

P.S. — I observed in your narrative that you mention the young lady's eating the beef and drinking the claret. Do you remember whether the joint was placed on the table or carved on the sideboard? and whether you seemed to see the figure served as the three mortals were, or seemed to find it already carved without noticing the progress?[†1]

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 17 SEPTEMBER 1861

MS Lytton Papers.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Seventeenth September 1861.

My Dear Bulwer Lytton.

I am delighted with your letter of yesterday — delighted with the addition to the length of the story — delighted with your account of it and your interest in it — and even more than delighted by what you say of our working in company.

Not one dissentient voice has reached me respecting it. Through the dullest time of the year, we hold our circulation most gallantly, and it could not have taken a better hold. I saw Forster on Friday (newly returned from thousands of provincial lunatics),[†2] and he really was more impressed than I can tell you by what he had seen of it. Just what you say you think it will turn out to be, he was saying, almost in the same words.

I long to read the rest of it, of course. The exquisite art with which you have changed it, and have overcome the difficulties of the mode of publication, has fairly staggered me. I know pretty well what the difficulties are; and there is no other man who could have done it, I swear.

Having an opportunity of sending this to town to be posted — which will save a post — I write very hurriedly. Will you look at the enclosed from the printer? I shall be at the office tomorrow and on Friday.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To [GEORGE] COVEY, [19 SEPTEMBER 1861]

Mention in To Miss Hogarth, 19 Sep 61. Date: written same day.

To THE REV. G. R. GLEIG, 19 SEPTEMBER 1861

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Nineteenth Septr. 1861.

My Dear Gleig

There is no harm whatever done. Mr. Heaphy's story is so very extraordinary that I have taken it for these pages, and have introduced it with a few words of explanation.[†1] He seems more than satisfied to let it issue forth through this channel, and all is well.

As if everything connected with the story were destined to be curious, this thing happens:— In reply to my assurance that he need not suspect his printers of treachery, Mr. Heaphy mildly writes, how else could my version have the right date of the occurrence? Now our version had no date at all; but when I came to correct the proof, I so perceived the necessity of some date to make the effect striking, that I myself wrote in that date on the margin of the proof, and, of all days in the three hundred and sixty five, pitched at random on the right day! —

Faithfully Yours always

CD.

The Rev. G. R. Gleig

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 19 SEPTEMBER 1861

MS Dickens House.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Nineteenth September 1861.

My Dearest Georgy.

I thought it, on consideration, best to order 3 belts and 3 red flannel waistcoats.

There is some mistake about the winter trousers. They are all at Gad's Hill. Nothing here but boots.

Animal Magnetism — or something else — sent Headland[†2] here on Tuesday evening (when I spoke of him), and he repeated his visit yesterday at noon. I have engaged him. But we cannot stir without poor Arthur's papers referring to the Readings. This morning I have written to Mr. Covey shewing the urgent necessity of my having them, and begging him to get them. John is now gone with the letter.

Love to Mary — and to Mrs. B.[†3]

Ever affectionately

CD.

To AUSTEN HENRY LAYARD, 19 SEPTEMBER 1861

MS British Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Nineteenth September 1861

My Dear Layard.

You were quite right in your impression that Bulwer Lytton produced that story in writing. He had received it in writing, from Ward the painter. I suppose his version to have been nearer Mr. H's own, as he says it was very superior to the published version sent to me. He is looking for his MS but has not yet found it.

As if everything associated with the story were pre-destined to be singular, imagine this:— Mr. H. replying to my assurance that he need not suspect his printer's people of treachery, mildly writes that I will still excuse (he is sure) his being greatly staggered on that point, by my having the right date, the 13th of September. Now my version had no date at all; but when I came to look over the Proof, I perceived the necessity of some date, and with my own hand put in that one!

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

A. H. Layard Esquire

To THOMAS HEAPHY, 20 SEPTEMBER 1861

Text from Thomas Heaphy, A Wonderful Ghost Story, ed. E. Heaphy, p. 16.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND
Friday, Sept. 20th, 1861

Dear Sir,

Mr Layard has not been able to remember where or when he saw some version of your story in print. Sir Edward Lytton received his version in writing from Mr Edward Ward. Sir Edward informs me that his version was very superior to that published here. I therefore suppose it is told nearer your own. He is searching for the MS., but has not yet been able to lay his hand upon it.

Faithfully yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Heaphy, Esq.

To J. COUCHMAN, 21 SEPTEMBER 1861

Text from W. R. Hughes, A Week's Tramp in Dickens-Land, p. 223.

Gad's Hill Place | Saturday, 21st Sep., 1861.

The above contract I accept on the stipulated conditions; the specified time, in common with all the other conditions, to be strictly observed.[†1]

CHARLES DICKENS

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 23 SEPTEMBER 1861

MS Lytton Papers.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Twenty Third September 1861.

My Dear Bulwer Lytton.

I am not sure how the Translation question stands, without referring to Wills.[†1] He has been away in Switzerland for his annual holiday, but I expect to find him at the office on Wednesday. Until then, I will retain the letter you enclose me. Immediately after seeing him, I will write to you again and return it.

Ever Affecy. Yours

CD.

To JAMES PAYN,[†2] 23 SEPTEMBER 1861

MS Boston Public Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Twenty Third September 1861.

My Dear Mr. Payn

We will all hope for "better luck next time" as to meeting, and we will likewise hope that it may not be long before the better luck appears.

I do not quite understand whether you mean me actually to sign the printed memorial?[†3] at any rate here is my name. I would rather not ask Bulwer, because he may possibly have some political or other objection quite apart from the merits of the case, and because he would not like to refuse me. But you may be quite certain of his prompt attention, if you address him at

Knebworth

Stevenage

This is a very hasty note, for I have been away, and write just as the post goes out. Wills is on his way from the Arctic Regions[†1] (not Jericho),[†2] and may be expected to manifest himself in Wellington Street while you are still bathing.[†3] James Payn Esquire

To FRANCIS BERRY,[†4] 25 SEPTEMBER 1861

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, July 1978; MS 2 pp; addressed Francis Berry.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Twenty Fifth September 1861

Dear Berry

Saying he has seen poor Mr. Arthur this afternoon — his impression of his state is not favorable. It is difficult to form a strong opinion on one interview, but I do not think he will recover.[†5] He is so exceedingly nervous, that what one would suppose to be asthma and bronchitis and a complication of such disorders, has no foundation that the nicest examination can discover; but he is unquestionably labouring under a quite different disease of a wasting and destructive kind. He has no doubt that he is well taken care of. Smith wishes to retain his papers and accompany Dickens on the tour. If he should be able to go, but of this I have scarcely a spark of hope after seeing him, Mr Headland shall relieve him of ... all his actual hard work. If he can't go Headland should take his place. The rest of the work will be distributed just as before ... and he will increase Berry's own salary by a guinea a week.

To THOMAS HEADLAND, 25 SEPTEMBER 1861

MS Berg Collection.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Twenty Fifth September 1861.

Dear Mr. Headland.

I have seen poor Mr. Arthur Smith, and my impression of his state is not favourable. I fear his recovery, even to the extent of being able to go with us, to be most unlikely.

Still, he is so set upon the Readings, and his thoughts so concentrate upon the expedition and he is so sanguine of being "able to write", and "able to go into the business", and the like, "tomorrow or next day", that I could on no account press him for the papers until it becomes absolutely necessary. It is not quite so, yet. Berry says that if our bills were at Norwich from a fortnight to three weeks before the time of reading, that would be in accordance with the usual arrangements. Therefore we must leave matters just as they are — and may safely do so — until after next Wednesday when I hope to see him (Mr. Arthur) again.

He cordially approved of my having arranged with you. And I told him that even if he went, I should not allow him to do the bustling and active part of his work, but had expressly handed it over to you. Of this he expressed his entire approval also, and he said "nothing better could have been done."

He was not in a state of fever, but was extremely nervous and much shaken. His recovery — for a time — depends entirely, it would seem, on his ability to take generous stimulants. Unfortunately he is a bad subject for that purpose, as he cannot bear even the smell of wine or brandy.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN BURRELL,[†1] 27 SEPTEMBER 1861

Mention in Memoranda concerning CD's Will (MS Mrs R. Shuckburgh).

Asking Burrell to revise and alter his draft Will.[†2]

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 27 SEPTEMBER 1861*

MS H. C. Dickens.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT

Friday Twenty Seventh September 1861.

My Dear Ouvry

I am not quite at ease about the Will you made for me;[†3] because I do not feel, on consideration, that it is the best thing I can do for my own satisfaction.

Will you draw another, on the following instructions. It cannot be too short, so that it be legal and efficient. I wish to write it in my own hand, and I wish it to be as plain and simple as it can possibly be made.

I leave such and such legacies.

I leave the interest of so much money, as an income for my wife; and at her death, the principal sum from which that income arises, is to be divided among all our surviving children share and share alike.

I appoint such and such persons my trustees and executors.[†4] They are to exercise their discretion, as to what they will sell and what they will not sell — for example, as to whether they will sell my copyrights or any of them — or as to when they will sell them, or any of them — or as to whether they shall hold them and the annual income derivable from them, for the benefit of the trust fund. They are to administer the trust fund as they may think best, for the maintenance of Georgina Hogarth (my wife's sister), and any of my children under age, or any daughter or daughters of mine, if any, who may be widowed and in need of help. When all my children are of age, then the interest of the trust fund to be Georgina Hogarth's income as long as she lives; on her death, the principal to be equally divided among all my surviving children, share and share alike. The trustees and executors to be guardians of the children.

I should make Miss Hogarth (for her care and bringing up of all the children) one of these executors &c, and my eldest boy another, and some one with a knowledge of literary property the third.[†1]

This is all. And as I have a lively sense of the comicality of leaving a very great will to dispose of a very little,[†2] I entreat you to make the Law as little prolix and as much to the point, as a simple human being can make it.

I shall be in town on Tuesday and all next week.

Faithfully Ever
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [?28 SEPTEMBER 1861]

Extract in F, VIII, vi, 688. Date: probably the same day as the "distressing interview" Forster reports CD as having with Arthur Smith on 28 Sep.

And yet his wakings and wanderings so perpetually turn on his arrangements for the Readings, and he is so desperately unwilling to relinquish the idea of "going on with the business" to-morrow and to-morrow and to-morrow,[†3] that I had not the heart to press him for the papers. He told me that he believed he had by him "70 or 80 letters unanswered." You may imagine how anxious it makes me, and at what a deadstop I stand.

To JOHN WATKINS,[†4] 28 SEPTEMBER 1861†

MS John Rylands Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday night, Twenty Eighth September 1861.

Dear Mr. Watkins.

In reply to your kind letter, I must explain that I have not yet brought down any of your large photographs of myself, and therefore cannot report upon their effect here. I think the "cartes" are all liked; perhaps Nos. 2, 9, and 14, are the favourites.

A general howl of horror greeted the appearance of No. 18, and a riotous attempt was made to throw it out of window. I calmed the popular fury by promising that it should never again be beheld within these walls. I think I mentioned to you when you showed it to me, that I felt persuaded it would not be liked. It has a grim and wasted aspect, and perhaps might be made useful as a portrait of the Ancient Mariner.[†1]

I feel that I owe you an apology for being (innocently) a difficult subject. When I once excused myself similarly to Ary Scheffer while sitting to him, he received the apology as strictly his due, and said with a vexed air, "At this moment mon cher Dickens, you look more like an energetic Dutch admiral than anything else." For which I apologized again.

In the hope that the pains you have bestowed upon me will not be thrown away, but that your success will prove of some use to you, Believe me,

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Watkins Esquire.

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 29 SEPTEMBER 1861

MS Lytton Papers.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Twenty Ninth September 1861.

My Dear Bulwer Lytton.

I have not a doubt that I can answer the questions correctly.

The course would be this. Fenwick would not be taken before the Coroner at all, but would be taken before a bench of Magistrates — or a magistrate — and remanded until the result of the Coroner's Inquest was known. The Magistrate could, and in a case of so grave an appearance probably would, refuse bail. Fenwick being remanded, and the further hearing of the case being adjourned, Fenwick would have to go to the jail in the meanwhile.[†2] There is no other place to which he could possibly go, not being bailed. The enquiry as to the cause of the death of the deceased, would be before the Coroner; the enquiry as to Fenwick himself, would be before the Magistrate. The Magistrate's and the Coroner's would be two perfectly distinct tribunals, and the magistrate and the Coroner would be two perfectly distinct people.

I shall be at the office on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Friday; probably Saturday too. I will look carefully to that part of the proofs. If you have any thing further to write to me, address me, all this next week, at the office.

[†a]I am burning to get at the whole story — and you inflame me in the maddest manner, by your references to what I don't know.[†a]

Ever affecy.

CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?30 SEPTEMBER 1861]

Extract in F, VIII, vi, 688. Date: probably the day before Smith's death on 1 Oct.

With a sick man who has been so zealous and faithful, I feel bound to be very tender and patient. When I told him the other day about my having engaged Headland — "to do all the personally bustling and fatiguing part of your work," I said — he nodded his heavy head with great satisfaction, and faintly got out of himself the words, "Of course I pay him, and not you."

October

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 2 OCTOBER 1861

MS Lytton Papers.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Second October 1861.

My Dear Bulwer Lytton. This is only to assure you that I will keep my eye on the Magistrate's court in Re Fenwick.[†1] I have made one alteration (subject to your approval) in No. 14.[†2] On the finding of the body, the Policeman accosts Fenwick with "What have you to say?" — which I think objectionable, as looking something too formally like examining him. I have changed it to "How did you come here?"[†3]

Ever Affecy.
CD.

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, [EARLY OCTOBER 1861]

Mention in To Wills, 3 Nov 61 Date: presumably just after last.

Telling Lytton, who had asked his advice over Fenwick's being taken before the Magistrates for examination over Sir Philip Derval's murder: Whatever you do, remember that under the English criminal law, nothing can be done without the accused. The accused must be present.

To MESSRS DALZIEL BROTHERS,[†1] 4 OCTOBER 1861*

MS University of Texas, Austin.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Fourth October 1861.

Gentlemen

I beg to acknowledge the receipt of the India Proofs you have had the kindness to send me, of the illustrations to Reprinted Pieces.[†2] Both in conception and execution, the illustrations are very satisfactory indeed.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Dalziel Brothers.

To THE REV. C. M. DAVIES,[†3] 4 OCTOBER 1861*

MS Miss L. E. Godden

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday, Fourth October 1861.

Dear Sir,

I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter and its accompanying prospectus. Your exposition of your useful design,[†4] I have read with much interest and satisfaction.

Faithfully yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Rev. C. M. Davies M. A.

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 4 OCTOBER 1861

MS University of California, Los Angeles.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Fourth October 1861.

My Dear Bulwer Lytton

I have looked to the legal queries you noted on the margin of the proof, and I find the text to be perfectly correct.[†1]

The new management of the other point, leaves no suggestion to be made. Whatever in the nature of objection could be microscopically found before, is now clean gone.

Ever affecy.

CD.

To THE HON. MRS RICHARD WATSON, 4 OCTOBER 1861*

MS Benoliel Collection.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Fourth October 1861.

My Dear Mrs. Watson

Your letter has come to me here, as I have been in town since Wednesday. Poor Mr. Arthur Smith is dead; and as I knew very little of the Reading arrangements he had made for me, I have been greatly at a loss — only knowing generally that I was bound to read fifty times, and but dimly knowing where or when.

Unfortunately Mary being away, Gad's Hill is in the dull possession of myself, Georgina, and Frank. But — worse than that — it is in the possession of an army of workmen: for I am making an improvement,[†2] and am doing it vigorously. I couldn't bear you to see, for the first time, what is really a pretty little place, at such a disadvantage. And therefore I sternly and in an adamantine manner, say to myself "No. She Shall NOT come until after Christmas."

But will you come here, and lunch tomorrow (in the smallest bachelor room, known to mankind) at half past one? Georgina will be here. Then I will tell you what (to the best of my present knowledge) my reading movements are, and then we will try in earnest whether we cannot arrange prospectively for your really coming to Gad's Hill — at last!

Ever Affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To [THOMAS PAIN],[†1] [5 OCTOBER 1861]

Mention in next. Address: no doubt answering an appeal from Pain, Hon. Secretary, Herbert Memorial Fund, for AYR to publish an article supporting the Fund. See To Morley, 5 Oct and fn. Date: no doubt written same day.

To HENRY MORLEY, 5 OCTOBER 1861*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Saturday Fifth October 1861

My Dear Morley.

I have received (and answered) the enclosed letter. Will you, if not very inconvenient, write a few kind words in favor of the project and in recognition of the merits of the deceased,[†2] for next Wednesday's making-up?[†3]

Ever Faithfully
CD.

To THE HON. MRS RICHARD WATSON, 5 OCTOBER 1861

Extract in unidentified New York catalogue, Apr 1939.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
October 5th. 1861

Enclosed is the book,[†4] and I hope you will like it. In a few days (when my engagements are clearly made out for me) I will let you know exactly what the Brighton nights are.

To H. G. ADAMS, 6 OCTOBER 1861

MS Dr Hugh Raven.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Sixth October, 1861.

My Dear Mr. Adams.

My Readings are a sad subject to me just now, for I am going away on the 28th, to read fifty times, and I have lost Mr. Arthur Smith — a friend whom I can never replace — who always went with me, and transacted, as no other man ever can, all the business connected with them, and without whom I fear they will be dreary and weary to me. But this is not to the purpose of your letter.

I desire to be useful to the Institution of the place with which my childhood is inseparable associated, and I will serve it this next Christmas, if I can. Will you come and dine with me next Saturday at 6 (we shall have no company), and come prepared to tell me when I could do you most good by reading for you?[†1]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

H. G. Adams Esquire.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?6 OCTOBER 1861]

Extract in F, VIII, vi, 688*n*. Date: CD no doubt wrote almost immediately after Arthur Smith's funeral on 5 Oct.

There was a very touching thing in the Chapel. When the body was to be taken up and carried to the grave, there stepped out, instead of the undertaker's men with their hideous paraphernalia, the men who had always been with the two brothers at the Egyptian Hall;[†2] and they, in their plain, decent, own mourning clothes, carried the poor fellow away. Also, standing among the gravestones, dressed in black, I noticed every kind of person who had ever had to do with him — from our own gas man and doorkeepers and billstickers, up to Johnson the printer and that class of man. The father[†3] and Albert[†4] and he now lie together, and the grave, I suppose, will be no more disturbed. I wrote a little inscription for the stone,[†5] and it is quite full.

To EDMUND YATES, 6 OCTOBER 1861†

MS Robert H. Taylor Collection, Princeton University.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Sixth October 1861.

My Dear Edmund

Barlow[†6] expressed his anxiety to me yesterday at the Funeral,[†7] that I would explain to you once again, how tied down he was as to the cost and arrangement.[†8] I told him I was sure it was not necessary, but I would. He said he had hoped to see you there, and he would feel relieved if I would keep my promise.

Coming back here today, I find your letter.

I was so very much distressed last night in thinking of it all, and I find it so very difficult to preserve my composure when I dwell in my mind on the many times fast approaching when I shall sorely miss the familiar face, that I am hardly steady enough yet, to refer to the Readings like a Man. But your kind reference to them makes me desirous to tell you that I took Headland (formerly of St. Martins Hall, who has always been with us in London) to conduct the business, when I knew that our poor dear fellow could never do it, even if he had recovered strength to go — and that I consulted with himself about it when I saw him for the last time on earth, and that it seemed to please him, and he said "We couldn't do better."

Write to me before you come; and remember that I go to town, Wednesday Mornings.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 9 OCTOBER 1861

MS Dickens House.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Ninth October 1861

My Dearest Georgy. When I went down to Ealing[†1] yesterday evening, Henry Austin had fallen into a doze and was supposed to have taken a decidedly favourable turn. The Doctor (who was to remain all night) was dining, and all were as cheerful as might be. I came away again; and when John came into my room this morning at 8 o'Clock, he said a messenger had just been, to say that Henry was dead.

Of course I have been out there again. His disease was inflammation of the windpipe — if I recollect right, he had always a weakness about his chest and throat — and he died very quietly: apparently supposing himself better. You can imagine Letitia under the circumstances, but she certainly came out better today than I had expected. I must honestly confess to you that I had a dread of going near her. God forgive me!

Will you send me by Frank in the morning two or three white shirts (packed so as he can't tumble them, or he certainly will), and some stockings. On Friday morning, I think you had best come here. I have ordered the Funeral for Monday, and am not yet quite clear when we shall go down — whether on Friday or Saturday.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To MRS ARTHUR SMITH, 9 OCTOBER 1861*

MS Berg Collection. Address: Mrs. Arthur Smith | 75 Jermyn Street | W.

All the Year Round Office,
Wednesday Ninth October 1861.

Dear Mrs. Arthur Smith

If you do not like the inscription I send you on the other side, I will try another. I have tried to tell the truth as simply and honestly as possible.

You will observe that if all the Christian names[†1] are to appear, some must be added.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Here also lie the remains of
[†a]MR. ARTHUR SMITH,[†a]
In the Grave of his brother and father.
He died, 1st. October 1861,
Aged 36 Years.
For his zeal, integrity, and fidelity,
He was widely beloved and honoured.
And it is believed
By those who knew him best,
That he had the clearest head
In affairs of business,
And the clearest heart
In all the affairs of life,
That were ever united to
The simple tastes,
The sweet temper and gentleness,
Of an affectionate child.[†2]

To CLARKSON STANFIELD, 9 OCTOBER 1861*

MS Mr William Clarke.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Ninth October 1861.

My Dear Stanny.

Will you come round here and dine, instead of dining at the club? This office is in Wellington Street, at the corner of York Street Covent Garden. Dinner time, a quarter past 5. Wilkie Collins will be here, and my reason for proposing the change is, that I have been unable to postpone my usual office dinner with him on this day of the week, by being unexpectedly telegraphed away yesterday to the house of my sister's husband (Austin — you remember him?) who lay dangerously ill. He was supposed to be much better when I got there, but he died last night.

Dinner will be ready here, observe, at a quarter past 5; which will leave you comfortable time to come round.

Ever affectionately
DICK.

To MISS MARY DICKENS, 10 OCTOBER 1861

Text from MDGH, II, 150.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday, Oct. 10th, 1861.

My Dearest Mamie,

I received your affectionate little letter here this morning, and was very glad to get it. Poor dear Arthur is a sad loss to me, and indeed I was very fond of him. But the readings must be fought out, like all the rest of life.

Ever your affectionate
[CD]

To [?SIDNEY] KENNEDY,[†1] 10 OCTOBER 1861

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Tenth October 1861.

Sir

I think the passage you want will be found in a detached paper originally published in "Master Humphrey's Clock", which was the general name of the weekly serial in which I wrote The Old Curiosity Shop, and Barnaby Rudge. I have not the means of reference at hand, and cannot quite remember whether I wrote the paper in question between the two stories, or at the end of the second story. It was a fancy associated with the Great Clock of Saint Paul's, arising out of my looking at it one day and thinking that, as the pendulum swung, London's heart seemed to beat.[†2]

Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

Sydney Kennedy Esquire

To SIR CHARLES LOCOCK, 10 OCTOBER 1861*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Tenth October, 1861.

My Dear Sir Charles Locock.

I did send you the book, and yet behold it is not right! Please therefore to confiscate the same. The Volume intended for you[†1] is at the binder's[†2] — binding to range with those you have already. They made a mistake at the office in sending you the copy you have, and, but for your letter, I might never have known it.

Faithfully Yours ever
CHARLES DICKENS

To R. H. PATTERSON, 10 OCTOBER 1861

Mention in S. T. Freeman & Co, catalogue No. 924; dated Office of AYR, 10 Oct 61; addressed R. H. Patterson.

To THOMAS BEARD, 11 OCTOBER 1861

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Place | Maida Hill | W.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Eleventh October 1861

My Dear Beard. I understand from Letitia to day, that you are going to poor Austin's funeral on Monday. As I shall go down in a Brougham, let me take you. I will leave here at 10, and will take you up, at 20 minutes past, at the corner of the Edgeware Road in Oxford Street. One word to say that this is agreed on.

Ever affecy
CD.

To MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL, 11 OCTOBER 1861*

MS Dickens House.

Eleventh October, 1861.
Messrs. Chapman and Hall,

The above charge,[†3] being correct, please to pay it and place it to my account.
CHARLES DICKENS

To LADY OLLIFFE, 11 OCTOBER 1861*

MS Princeton University Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Eleventh October 1861.

My Dear Lady Olliffe

I really am not fit to dine out, before I go away to read. If I got into a nervous state, I should be perfectly disqualified for the forty or fifty nights I have before me — and I have of late been worried and distressed,[†1] and know that I cannot be too quiet. Don't suspect me, pray, of making or seeking excuses. It is the plain real truth.

Affectionately Yours ever

CD.

To W. C. MACREADY, 13 OCTOBER 1861

MS Morgan Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Thirteenth October, 1861.

My Dearest Macready.

This is a short note. But the moment I know for certain what is designed for me at Cheltenham,[†2] I write to you, in order that you may know it from me and not by chance from any one else.

I am to read there, on the evening of Friday the 3rd. of January, and on the morning of Saturday the 4th. As I have nothing to do on Thursday the 2nd. but come from Leamington,[†3] I shall come to you, please God, for a quiet dinner that day.

The death of Arthur Smith has caused me great distress and anxiety. I had a great regard for him, and he made the Reading part of my life as light and pleasant as it could be made. I had hoped to bring him to see you, and had pictured to myself how amused and interested you would have been with his wonderful tact and consummate mastery of arrangement. But it's all over.

I begin at Norwich on the 28th. and am going North in the middle of November. I am going to do Copperfield, and shall be curious to test its effect on the Edinburgh people.[†4] It has been quite a job so to piece portions of the long book together, as to make something continuous out of it; but I hope I have got something varied and dramatic. I am also (not to slight your book) going to do Nickleby at Mr. Squeers's.[†1] It is clear that both must be trotted out at Cheltenham.

With kindest love and regard to all your house,

Ever My Dearest Macready | Your most affectionate

CD.

Fourth Edition of Great Expectations, almost gone!

To THE HON. MRS WATSON, 13 OCTOBER 1861*

MS New York Public Library.

†a_____

_____†a

Sunday Thirteenth October 1861.

My Dear Mrs. Watson

This is a very short note merely to let you know that I read at Brighton, on the following two evenings

Thursday	November	7th.	— Copperfield
Friday	"	8th.	— Nickleby, and Trial from Pickwick

Possibly I may read Copperfield on Saturday in the day-time, also; but I shall not do so unless I am obliged, as I have a great antipathy to daylight reading.

Ever affectionately Yours

CD

To THE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY,[†2] [?14-15 OCTOBER 1861]

Mention in To Bowring, 31 Oct 61. Date: written "immediately" after Austin's funeral.

Telling Shaftesbury of Austin's services to the Board of Health, and asking him to consider the chances of obtaining a small pension for his widow and to give CD his advice about it.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?MID-OCTOBER 1861]

Extract in F, VIII, vi, 688-9. Date: Wording suggests after Henry Austin's death too, on 9 Oct; probably written within the week following.

With what difficulty I get myself back to the readings after all this loss and trouble, or with what unwillingness I work myself up to the mark of looking them in the face, I can hardly say. As for poor Arthur Smith at this time, it is as if my right arm were gone. It is only just now that I am able to open one of the books, and screw the text out of myself in a flat dull way. Enclosed is the list of what I have to do. You will see that I have left ten days in November for the Christmas number, and also a good Christmas margin for our meeting at Gadshill. I shall be very glad to have the money that I expect to get; but it will be earned.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 15 OCTOBER 1861*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Fifteenth October 1861.

My Dearest Georgy. I write, not because I have anything to say, but for the pleasure of reporting myself to you.

Presently (that is to say, at ½ past 1) I am obliged to go out to Ealing again, to help with what advice I can. It was Mrs. Fillonneau[†1] whom I saw the other day. Yesterday, she and Mrs. Silva[†2] were together; and Amelia, when one has that opportunity of comparison, is immensely the better looking of the two. There is something in her face, now that she is grey and quiet, extraordinarily taking.

Letitia had the widow's cap on yesterday, of course. As she was in a darkened room, poor thing, I only observed of it that it had very broad things to tie it by, hanging down. Old Mr. Austin[†3] seemed in a kind of brisk dotage. Burnett[†4] was the express embodiment of Imbecility.[†5] The manner in which everybody sat against the wall, was wonderful. And there was the usual Ghoull-like indispensability of cake and wine, and old Mr. Austin had a conviction deeply rooted in him that everybody wanted coffee (which was also there), and in particular that I wanted coffee, and must have it administered, whether or no.

The service was very plainly and feelingly read — very different from poor Arthur's case. Beard and I came back together, and met in the evening and dined at Verrey's.

I have omitted to mention that I suspected (God forgive me!) the young cousin[†6] of getting up demonstration now and then. In pouring out the tea he rattled the teapot against the cups, and the like, and was more jerky than seemed natural. Also he fell into reveries that I thought too sudden and too profound.

Enclosed is the printed list of the Readings.[†1]

Ever Affectionately

CD.

To FRANCESCO BERGER,[†2] [16 OCTOBER 1861]

MS (envelope only) Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: Francesco Berger Esquire | 36 Thurlow Square | Brompton | S.W. PM 16 Oct 61.

To MRS HENRY AUSTIN, 17 OCTOBER 1861*

MS Morgan Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Seventeenth October, 1861.

My Dear Letitia

I went to De Gex's[†3] yesterday morning, and found that he has not yet come back from his holiday. I asked the clerk how long would it be before he returned? He answered, a few days. Would he probably be back within a week? I asked then. To which the clerk made answer, He thought he would "certainly be back within a week".

On the whole I think it will be best to wait until he returns. I will write a full explanation to him of what is necessary to be done, so that he may have it as soon as he comes, and may know exactly what we want him to do. After careful consideration, I think it would be unwise if I were to move with Mr.

Lawrence,[†4] without De Gex's knowledge and approval. I don't know the covenants in the Lease, and it might even turn out that it would be to Mr. Lawrence's advantage — rather than any concession on his part — to get the house back. It is a little surprising to me that that solicitor who holds the policy, has not communicated with you voluntarily. Perhaps he too is away — or perhaps he may make some communication in the course of a day or two — and that again would be all the better. Therefore I would wait for De Gex, for both reasons.

I am obliged to go back to Gad's Hill tomorrow morning, to get some work done before I go away reading: which I do, on Monday week. My address therefore, until Wednesday when I shall be here again, will be at Gad's Hill. It seems to me that it would be a very good thing for you to go away for perfect change — say to Brighton, or Dover, or any place where you would have good air and be surrounded by other objects. Think of this. And if you want some ready money for the purpose, let me know.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To THOMAS HEADLAND, 18 OCTOBER 1861*

MS Berg Collection.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Eighteenth October, 1861.

Dear Mr. Headland

If you will kindly call at the office next Wednesday, we will settle our starting hour for Norwich.[†1]

Will you let me have half a dozen more of the printed lists of the Tour.

We had best have a travelling insurance for 3 months. You and I for £1,000 each. Each of the three men for £200 each. This was poor Arthur's plan.

Faithfully Yours

CD.

To MESSRS HUNT & ROSKELL,[†2] 18 OCTOBER 1861

MS Mr Liam Dunne.

GAD'S HILLS PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Eighteenth October, 1861.

Mr. Charles Dickens begs to inform Messrs. Hunt and Roskell with his compliments, that he would rather not have any Monogram engraven on his seal, but simply the two distinct separate letters C D in old English characters.

To H. G. ADAMS, 21 OCTOBER 1861

MS Berg Collection. Address: H. G. Adams Esquire | Rochester.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Night Twenty First October, 1861.

My Dear Mr. Adams

In answer to your note, let me say that immediately after you left here on the evening when you last gave me the pleasure of your society, I put down Tuesday the 21st. January as the day on which I was bound to my Institution at Chatham.[†1] Tuesday the 14th. would be inconvenient to me, as I shall not be home from the end of a pretty long course of Readings until very close upon that day. But as you say that Thursday the 16th. would be better than the 21st. let it stand for Thursday the 16th. — when you may announce me to read (in Six Chapters) David Copperfield.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

H. G. Adams Esquire

To MRS HENRY AUSTIN, 23 OCTOBER 1861*

MS Morgan Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Twenty Third October 1861.

My Dear Letitia.

I have seen Edward De Gex to day, and have had a long talk and explanation with him. He is of opinion that it will be best for him not to appear in the matter with Mr. Lawrence, and he also thinks (as I myself had a misgiving) that it will be best for me to keep out of it, in case Mr. Lawrence should be induced to found any absurd ideas on my interposition. His suggestion is, that young Mr. Austin should see him (Mr. Lawrence), and if he will call upon De Gex at 4 Raymond Buildings Grays Inn, De Gex will advise him exactly as to what he thinks it would be best for him to say. De Gex will be glad if he will at the same time, take the box of papers with him that I looked over.

With Mr. Nelson,[†2] De Gex will at once communicate, relative to the Thousand Pound Policy.[†3] He says it is not at all likely that Mr. Nelson would think it his position to move in the matter at all, until some accredited person called on him. His resting quite silent with the policy in his possession, would be quite in the ordinary course therefore.

As I have to begin my Readings next Monday, I enclose you my List,[†4] in order that you may always know where I am to be found by letter. When you observe a gap with no engagements in it, you may conclude that I am either here or at Gad's Hill.

I shall be anxious to hear as soon as you have news of Mr. Nelson. And to know how you are, and that you are finding some rest and support under your heavy trial, will be a real relief to me.

God bless and comfort you!

Ever affectionately

CD.

To [?CHARLES EDMONDS],[†1] 23 OCTOBER 1861*

MS Yale University Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Twenty Third October 1861

Any of D'Israeli's novels, of which there is a cheap Edition.[†2]

CHARLES DICKENS

To MESSRS SHILLIBEER[†3] & CO., 24 OCTOBER 1861*

MS Boston Public Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Twenty Fourth October, 1861.

Mr. Charles Dickens with compts to Messrs. Shillibeer and Co. begs to enclose two crossed cheques on Messrs. Coutts & Co. — one for £25..18..6 in discharge of the funeral bill for the interment of the late Mr. Henry Austin; one for £9..10..0 for the cost of gravestone and inscription in memory of the late Mr. Alfred L. Dickens.[†4]

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, [?24-25 OCTOBER 1861]

Mention in To Wills, 25 Oct 61. Date: CD had no doubt replied to Lytton the day he wrote to Wills or the day before.

Telling Lytton that he thought the AYR printers could set up the whole of A Strange Story from No. 20 to the end and that he would ask Wills to arrange this with them.

To WILLIAM HAWKINS, 25 OCTOBER 1861

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: W. Hawkins Esquire | Alresford Hall | near | Colchester.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Friday Twenty Fifth October, 1861.

My Dear Sir

I am exceedingly obliged to you for your kind invitation, and beg you not to estimate my appreciation of it by my non-acceptance of it.

The truth is, that whenever I am away from home, so employed as I shall be at Colchester, I never stay with any friend whomsoever. Any such pleasure would be so incompatible with what I have to do, that I am obliged systematically to renounce it.

As I shall remain in Colchester but a few hours altogether, I shall not have an opportunity of thanking you in person. But I shall hope to have another and better occasion of doing so.

May I ask you when you write to your brother,[†1] to send him my kind regard, and to add that I was exceedingly sorry to miss him in London (by only a few hours) before he went away?

My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. Hawkins Esquire

To LADY HERBERT,[†2] 25 OCTOBER 1861*

MS The Earl of Pembroke.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Twenty Fifth October, 1861.

My Dear Lady Herbert.

I must write you one line to tell you that I have been much moved by your letter,[†3] and that my thoughts have been often with you since you sustained your great bereavement. His was a noble and generous spirit that England could very, very ill afford to lose, and God knows he did his duty manfully. It will not be forgotten in this Country how he wrought for the soldier;[†4] but in everything he was a model for a public administrator, and a good gallant man.

It is idle to write this, but I cannot keep the words back.

May you see him reflected in his children,[†5] and may his countryment see some faint traces of his unaffected energy and devotion, in his public successors! There will not be such another in his place for many and many a long year, but he has beaten the twisted iron into shape, and many many more long years must pass away before it can be beaten out of form again.

Believe me Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The | Lady Herbert.

To JOHN WATKINS, 25 OCTOBER 1861

Mention in Sotheby's catalogue, June 1882; MS 1 p.; dated 25 Oct 61; addressed John Watkins.

To W. H. WILLS, 25 OCTOBER 1861

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Friday Twenty Fifth October, 1861.

My Dear Wills. Bulwer, in a note I meant to have enclosed herein but have inadvertently destroyed, asks, "Would it be very inconvenient to set up and print off the whole of Strange Story from No. 20 to the End. In that case I could give the final revises up to No. 19. But the revise of No. 20 necessitates the survey of all the Numbers that have gone before?" I have told him that I think we can do it — that I write to you — and that you will stir up the printer, and tell him what and when he may expect. He writes from Marine Parade, Ventnor.

Ever Faithfully
CD.
Over

Miss Power is going to Alexandria,[†1] and no doubt wants all the money she has earned, or can earn.

Was she paid for "Things I can't stand"?[†2]

And was she paid for the Poem now in type? I forget its name.[†3]

Will you let her have a cheque, at once, for any thing we may owe her. She is here.

To T. J. THOMPSON, 27 OCTOBER 1861*

MS Morgan Library. Address (envelope, MS Meynell family): T. J. Thompson Esqre. | Albaro | care of | Messrs. Gibbs and Co. | Genoa. PM London 28 Oct 61 |

Gad's Hill | Sunday Twenty Seventh October, 1861.

My Dear Thompson.

I answer the last part of your letter first, to be quit of the miserable subject.[†4]

Exactly such knowledge of, and influence with, Frederick, as you have, or as Mr. Weller[†5] has, I have. My power over him was last exemplified, and his deference to me was last shewn, in his compromising my partner in Household Words for a large sum of money, and treating him with supreme contempt and defiance — setting him utterly at naught altogether. In which process he was as much restrained by any sense of gratitude to me, or consideration for me of any kind, as the wind that was then blowing.

No "painful sort of publicity"[†1] can possibly alter the fact that I have no power — or shadow of power over him, no communication with him, no knowledge whatever of his doings. I do not in the least doubt (I wish I did) that he humiliates himself and degrades himself, as you describe; nor do I affect to have viewed with philosophy, the decay and ruin of so near a relation, for whom I have done more than I can in any reason hope to do for each of my own seven boys. But an implication conveyed in your letter renders it necessary for me to observe that I know no one can disgrace me but I myself, and that the name I have made is in my keeping, and in no other man's.

I am very sorry to hear of the sad and anxious occasion of your being again in Italy. But I don't think there are many reasonably well informed Englishmen — if there be, I certainly know none — who suppose Garibaldi to be all powerful with the Government in the North.[†2] On the contrary, I suppose the truth to be very widely understood here; though there is a reticence as to putting it about, on the part of most of those who have the power of doing so, originating in a tenderness towards Italy in her difficult struggle.

Mary is visiting in Hampshire, and I leave here tonight on business in various parts of England and Scotland, which will hold me until Christmas-time. Georgina and Katie and her husband are here. They send kind love and regard to Christiana and you.

We shall meet, I hope, in London. I am not quite clear about the manner or duration of our spring sojourn there, as it will necessarily depend on the extent of Exhibition-madness[†3] that may seize hold of the letters of houses. But I am always to be found by letter, either here or at the office.

My Dear Thompson Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

T. J. Thompson Esquire

To GEORGINA HOGARTH, 29 OCTOBER 1861†

MS Berg Collection.

Royal Hotel Norwich

Tuesday Twenty Ninth October 1861.

My Dearest Georgy.

I cannot say that we began well last night. We had not a good Hall, and they were a very Lumpish audience indeed.[†1] This did not tend to cheer the strangeness I felt in being without Arthur, and I was not at all myself. We have a large Let for tonight — I think, 250 stalls, which is very large — and I hope that both they and I will go better. I could have done perfectly last night, if the Audience had been bright, but they were an intent and staring audience. They laughed though very well, and the storm made them shake themselves again. But they were not magnetic, and the great big place was out of sorts somehow.

Tomorrow I will write you another short note, however short. It is Nickleby and the Trial tonight; Copperfield again tomorrow. A wet day here, with glimpses of blue. I shall not forget Katey's health[†2] at dinner. A pleasant journey down. Headland, heavy but worthy.

Ever My Dearest Georgy | Your most affectionate

CD.

I had a letter from Chauncy, here, yesterday before dinner.

To JOHN FORSTER, [30 OCTOBER 1861]

Extracts in F, VIII, vi, 689 and 689n. Date: the day after his second reading at Norwich, 29 Oct.

Saying that the start of the readings at Norwich was not good, the opening announcement having been subject to so many vexing changes as to leave some doubt of their fulfilment.

[†a]We had a splendid hall, and I think Nickleby will top all the readings. Somehow it seems to have got in it, by accident, exactly the qualities best suited to the purpose; and it went last night, not only with roars, but with a general hilarity and pleasure that I have never seen surpassed.

I miss him dreadfully. The sense I used to have of compactness and comfort about me while I was reading is quite gone; and on my coming out for the ten minutes, when I used to find him always ready for me with something cheerful to say, it is forlorn. Besides which, H. and all the rest of them are always somewhere, and he was always everywhere.[†a]

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 30 OCTOBER 1861

MS Huntington Library. On mourning paper.

Angel Hotel,[†1] Bury St Edmunds
Wednesday Thirtieth October 1861.

My Dearest Georgy

I have just now received your welcome letter, and I hasten to report (having very little time) that we had a splendid Hall last night, and that I think Nickleby tops all the Readings! Somehow it seems to have got in it, by accident, exactly the qualities best suited to the purpose; and it went last night, not only with roars, but with a general hilarity and pleasure that I have never seen surpassed.

We are full here for tonight.

Fancy this:— Last night at about 6, who should walk in but Elwin! He was exactly in his usual state, only more demonstrative than ever, and had been driven in, by some neighbours who were coming to the Reading. I had tea up for him, and he went down at 7 with me to the dismal den where I dressed, and sat by the fire while I dressed, and was childishly happy in that great privilege. During the Reading, he sat on a corner of the platform, and roared incessantly. †aHe never said one word about having had any letter from Mary,†2 and I really think his wife†3 must have intercepted those dangerous epistles.†a He brought in a lady and gentleman to introduce while I was undressing, and went away in a perfect and absolute rapture.

All right as to Barber and the workmen. More workmen are certainly wanted, and can certainly be got.

With best love
Ever My Dearest Georgy | Your most affectionate
CD.

†aElwin's talk, on our way down to the Hall last night, was all of you.†a

To W. H. WILLS, 30 OCTOBER 1861

MS Yale University Library. On mourning paper.

Angel Hotel, Bury St. Edmunds
Wednesday Thirtieth October, 1861.

My Dear Wills.

I do not remember accurately (though I have a general impression) what was done at the office before, concerning John, when he was away with me. But I wish whatever was done before, to be done now. His Salary from the Readings is paid by Headland.

It may save some discomfort hereafter, if I beg you not to allow my old servant to be the subject of any kind of officiousness on the part of Holsworth or Johnson. I have lately observed a little thing or two in that direction not at all consistent with my notion of my supremacy. And I have not noticed it, because I could possibly take no notice of it but one final and conclusive one.

We opened ill at Norwich. (There had been great mismanagement, but perhaps poor Arthur's illness may have had to do with it.) We had not a good Hall, and the audience were heavy, and put me out of sorts. Last night was brilliant, and I think Nickleby tops all the Readings in its astounding Go.

We are full here for tonight.†1

Ever Faithfully
CD.

To E. A. BOWRING,†2 31 OCTOBER 1861

MS Berg Collection. On mourning paper.

Bury St. Edmunds
Thursday Thirty First October, 1861.

Dear Sir

I have heard this morning from Mr. Wills, of your kind visit to the office, and of Taylor's[†3] generous offer of assistance.

Immediately after the Funeral, I wrote to Lord Shaftesbury, mentioning generally, what Austin's services had been, and asking him to have the goodness to consider what the chances were of getting a small pension, and then to write me his advice. I wrote him a private letter, believing that he would be glad to serve me, if he could, and knowing that he has facilities of approach to Ld. Palmerston on such a matter. I have not yet received his reply. And the question

I should like you and Taylor to consider, is, whether it be advisable to proceed further until I do hear from Lord Shaftesbury.

I have not the least objection to memorializing the Government on the widow's behalf, in my own name. But before I can do so (if Taylor and you should be in favor of that course) I would ask you to let me know whether the memorial should be addressed to the Premier, and over about how long a time Austin's connexion with the Public Health Service has extended. I shall be at home (I enclose my address) next Sunday, but I shall leave home again on Monday Morning.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Bowring Esquire

To WILKIE COLLINS, 31 OCTOBER 1861

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

The Great White Horse, Ipswich[†1]
Thursday Thirty First October, 1861.

My Dear Wilkie

On coming here just now (half past one) I found your letter awaiting me, and it gave me infinite pleasure — you can scarcely think how much pleasure; for to hold consultation on the quiet pursuits in which we have had so much common interest for a long time now — is a delightful and wholesome thing in the midst of this kind of life — in the midst of any kind of life.

I entirely agree with you as to the necessity of writing up the compact concerning the people who come in at the gate.[†2] I have not the least doubt that it is hurried and huddled up, as I have written it, and that much more can be made of it. Much more, therefore (please God) shall be made of it, when we get to work.[†3]

The child notion enchants me.[†4] With my love for the blessed children, I could sit down and do it out of hand, if I could do any thing, with the gaslights of the night looming in the eight o'clock future. But when I get to the Sea, next week, I hope so to turn the notion over, as to be able to work upon it when I come back, briskly and quickly. I have no doubt about it — accept it — and devote myself to it! (Here I raise my hand to Heaven.)

I think Our Hidden Selves a very good title — but I also think a better can come of it. I am not sure. Now I quite discern where your notion tends, I will try if I can find a better.

The first night at Norwich was a dismal beginning — altogether unwonted and strange. We had not a good Let, and (the place of reading being a great cold stone-paved Gothic Hall) the Audience appeared to be afraid of me, and of each other. I was out of sorts. Everything seemed forlorn and strange to me. Poor dear Arthur gone, and the very wind in the arches (damn[†1] them!) seeming to howl about it. As a very little thing would have stirred me, in such a state of mind, to do my best: so a very little thing stirred me to do my worst — and, on the whole, I think I did it.

Next night was Nickleby and the Trial. I had had a good walk in the bright air, and time to reason myself up a bit. There was a brilliant Audience, and I think I must report of Nickleby, that — for a certain fantastic and hearty enjoyment — it tops all the Readings. The people were really quite ridiculous to see, when Squeers read the boys' letters. And I am inclined to suspect that the impression of protection and hope, derived from Nickleby's going away protecting Smike, is exactly the impression — this is discovered by chance — that an Audience most likes to be left with.

Last Night I read Copperfield at Bury St. Edmunds to a very fine Audience. I don't think a word — not to say an idea — was lost; and I am confirmed in my impression that it will be a very great card indeed, in London.

From Brighton I will write you again, suggesting the course of proceeding, for the Xmas No. in my ten or eleven days of reserve. Until then and ever, Believe me

CHARLES DICKENS

To WILL MORGAN, [?31 OCTOBER 1861]

Mention in M. F. Armstrong, "Our Letter", St. Nicholas: Scribner's Illustrated Magazine for Girls and Boys, IV (May 1877), 439. Date: a "few days" before his reading at Colchester on 1 Nov.

In answer to a letter from Will Morgan, asking how he and his two sisters[†2] could hear CD read, telling them to meet him at Colchester and come to his reading there.

To THE MANAGER, COLCHESTER THEATRE, [31 OCTOBER 1861]

Telegram. Mention in To Miss Hogarth, 1 Nov 61. Date: the day before that letter.

Requesting places at his reading in Colchester for Will Morgan and his two sisters.

To GEORGE THOMPSON,[†1] 31 OCTOBER 1861

MS Suffolk County Council. On mourning paper.

Bury St. Edmunds
Thursday Thirty First October 1861.

Dear Sir

I cannot leave this charming town without offering you my best thanks for the great vigilance attention and ability with which you have had the kindness to arrange the details of my Reading here. When I was last here with my regretted friend Mr. Arthur Smith, we both spoke of you as being, in your cheerful promptitude and dexterity, one with whom it was a real pleasure to transact business. That impression has been more than confirmed on this second occasion, and I thank you cordially.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr Thompson

To JOHN FORSTER, [OCTOBER 1861]

Extract in F, VIII, iii, 655. Date: Oct 61, according to Forster.

I shall have an alteration or two to show you at Gadshill that greatly improve the little property;[†2] and when I get the workmen out this time, I think I'll leave off.

November

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 1 NOVEMBER 1861†

MS Huntington Library. On mourning paper.

The Great White Horse, Ipswich
Friday First November, 1861.

My Dearest Georgy.

I cannot quite remember, in the whirl of travelling and reading, whether or no I wrote you a line from Bury St Edmunds. But I think (and hope) I did. We had a fine room there, and Copperfield made a great impression. We had an excellent room here last night, and Copperfield again made a great impression. At midday, we go on to Colchester, where I shall expect the Young Morgans. I sent a Telegram on yesterday after receiving your note, to secure places for them. The answer returned by Telegraph was, "No Box-seats left, but on the 4th row". If they prefer to sit on the stage (for I read in the Theatre:[†3] there being no other large public room), they shall. Meantime I have told John, who went forward this morning with the other men, to let the people at the Inn know that if three travellers answering that description, appear before my dinner-time, they are to dine with me.[†1]

[†a]Plorn's admission that he likes the school very much indeed, is the great social triumph of modern times.

I am looking forward to Sunday's rest at Gad's, and shall be down by the 10 o'Clock Train from town. I miss poor Arthur dreadfully. It is scarcely possible to imagine how much. It is not only that his loss to me, socially, is quite irreparable, but that the sense I used to have of compactness and comfort about me while I was reading, is quite gone. And when I come out for the ten minutes when I used to find him always ready for me with something cheerful to say, it is forlorn. I cannot but fancy too, that the Audience must miss the old specialty of a pervading gentleman.[†a] [†b]Headland does what he can, and is trusty and careful; but he would be at a loss without Berry; and the look of him is very different from the poor lost fellow in his evening dress. Besides which, Headland and all the rest of them are always somewhere, and he was always everywhere.[†b]

Nobody I know, has turned up yet, except Elwin. I have had many invitations to all sorts of houses in all sorts of places, and have — of course — accepted them every one.[†2]

Love to Mamie, if she has come home, and to Bouncer, if she has come. Also to Marguerite who I hope is by this time much better.

Ever My Dearest Georgy | Your most affectionate.

CD.

To MRS HENRY AUSTIN, 3 NOVEMBER 1861†

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Third November, 1861.

My Dear Letitia.

[†a]I enclose you a cheque for £50. It is crossed, for fear of accidents, and had therefore best go to De Gex as it stands; for it must be paid in through a Banking House. At the same time, for future reference when the accounts are made up, I send you the note of Shillibeer's interment charges.[†3] I paid it immediately, in order that they might be as small as possible.

Let me know, at the Marine Hotel Hastings on Wednesday, that you have received the cheque safely.

I think Mr. Lawrence's stipulation that the Furniture should be left in the house, on the whole very good for you. It is extremely likely that it may lead to your disposing of the planned furniture at least — and possibly of more — to good advantage.[†a]

I am heartily glad to hear that you have been out in the air; and I hope you will go again very soon, and make a point of continuing to go. There is a soothing influence in the sight of the earth and sky, which God put into them for our relief when he made the world in which we are all to suffer, and strive, and die.

I will not fail to write to you from many points of my Tour, and if you ever want to write to me you may be sure of a quick response, and may be certain that I am sympathetic and true.[†1]

To THOMAS BEARD, 3 NOVEMBER 1861

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Place | Maida Hill | London | W.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Third November, 1861.

My Dear Beard

I sent you the birds from Norwich — I am away reading, and am only here for to day — where they were presented to me by a "Constant Reader" and Hearer.

Of course I perfectly understand your responding to any request on the part of Charley, or of his mother, to attend the dear fellow's marriage.[†2] But I must add the expression of my earnest hope that it is not your intention to enter Mr. Evans's house on that occasion.[†3]

Faithfully Ever
CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS BROWN, 3 NOVEMBER 1861

MS Morgan Library. Address: France | Mrs. Brown | Hotel du Louvre | Paris. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Third November, 1861.

My Dear Mrs. Brown.

I received your letter, at Norwich — I am away, reading, and am only at home for a day — with many affectionate and cherished remembrances, on which I need not dwell to you. When I heard you were at Paris, I often thought of you, you may be sure; but uppermost among all I thought, was a feeling of great gratification and sympathy in your having gone there. It was right and true and wholesome.

In poor Arthur Smith, I have sustained an irreparable loss — not because he was a man who did for me what no one else can ever do, but because I loved him and he deserved it well. But we must all be brave, as good soldiers are, and when the fast-thinning ranks look bare, must close up solidly and march on.

You, and dear Miss Coutts, will be glad, I know, to hear that my readings have begun again most prosperously. Enjoying crowds have been about me since I recommenced. I have made one reading from Copperfield that I should very much like you both, to hear. It seems to have a strong interest, and an expression of a young spirit in it, that addresses people of sensitive perception curiously.

I wish I could hope that Charley's marriage may not be a disastrous one. There is no help for it, and the dear fellow does what is unavoidable — his foolish mother would have effectually committed him if nothing else had; chiefly I suppose because her hatred of the bride and all belonging to her, used to know no bounds, and was quite inappeasable. But I have a strong belief, founded on careful observation of him, that he cares nothing for the girl.[†1]

I left Colchester yesterday morning, when the town was hoary under a sharp snow storm. Two days before, I had been breakfasting at Bury St. Edmunds with the window wide open, and bright flowers in all the gardens.

Give my ever affectionate and never changing remembrance to Miss Coutts, and Believe me My Dear friend

Ever affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Brown.

To JAMES KEYMER,[†1] 3 NOVEMBER 1861

Extract in Emily Driscoll catalogue No. 27; MS 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill Place, 3 Nov 61; addressed James Keymer; on mourning paper.

His many engagements force him to refuse an appeal from Keymer and Blanchard Jerrold in spite of his strong sympathy with the cause you advocate.[†2]

To W. H. WILLS, 3 NOVEMBER 1861

MS Huntington Library. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Third November, 1861.

My Dear Wills

Excellent work both at Ipswich and Colchester. I start again tomorrow morning from here.

It is Copperfield at Brighton on Thursday evening. Let me know whether I am to expect you. Dinner hour, 4. We hear of a great Let at Hastings, but know nothing yet of Brighton. Probably we shall find this time, as poor Arthur and I did last, that the first Reading in a place where there are more Readings than one, is invariably the poorest Let.

I was amused by a letter in the Times yesterday (though it was unnecessary and ill natured) about Bulwer.[†3] When I looked over the proceedings in Fenwick's first examination and subsequent release (which were very wrong),[†4] I particularly wrote to him: "Whatever you do, remember that under the English criminal Law, nothing can be done without the accused. The accused must be present."[†5] He wrote back, saying that he quite understood that, and would not forget it.

There was a rush at Colchester, in which John was nearly swept into space. The rest were obliged to dive at him, and drag him out of the crowd.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To MISS MARY DICKENS, 4 NOVEMBER 1861

Text from MDGH, II, 154.

Fountain Hotel,[†1] Canterbury, Windy Night,[†2] Nov. 4th, 1861.

My Dearest Mamie,

A word of report before I go to bed. An excellent house to-night, and an audience positively perfect. The greatest part of it stalls, and an intelligent and delightful response in them, like the touch of a beautiful instrument. "Copperfield" wound up in a real burst of feeling and delight.[†3]

Ever affectionately

[CD]

To JOHN AGATE,[†4] 6 NOVEMBER 1861

Text from MDGH, II, 154-5.

Lord Warden Hotel, Dover, Wednesday, Nov. 6th, 1861.

Sir,

I am exceedingly sorry to find, from the letter you have addressed to me, that you had just cause of complaint in being excluded from my reading here last night. It will now and then unfortunately happen when the place of reading is small (as in this case), that some confusion and inconvenience arise from the local agents over-estimating, in perfect good faith and sincerity, the capacity of the room. Such a mistake, I am assured, was made last night; and thus all the available space was filled before the people in charge were at all prepared for that circumstance.

You may readily suppose that I can have no personal knowledge of the proceedings of the people in my employment at such a time. But I wish to assure you very earnestly, that they are all old servants, well acquainted with my principles and wishes, and that they are under the strongest injunction to avoid any approach to mercenary dealing; and to behave to all comers equally with as much consideration and politeness as they know I should myself display. The recent death of a much-regretted friend of mine, who managed this business for me, and on whom these men were accustomed to rely in any little difficulty, caused them (I have no doubt) to feel rather at a loss in your case. Do me the favour to understand that under any other circumstances you would, as a matter of course, have been provided with any places whatever that could be found, without the smallest reference to what you had originally paid. This is scanty satisfaction to you, but it is so strictly the truth, that yours is the first complaint of the kind I have ever received.

I hope to read in Dover again, but it is quite impossible that I can make any present arrangement for that purpose. Whenever I may return here, you may be sure I shall not fail to remember that I owe you a recompense for a disappointment. In the meanwhile I very sincerely regret it.

Faithfully yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

To W. H. WILLS, 6 NOVEMBER 1861

MS Huntington Library. On mourning paper.

Lord Warden Hotel, Dover
Wednesday Sixth November 1861.

My Dear Wills

I have received your letter here this morning, and the satisfactory account, but not the proof. What have you done with Robert Lytton's[†1] Dead Pope?[†2] There can be no doubt, you know, of its being far better than any make-weight.

The Brighton "fixture" stands thus:

Thursday Evening.	Copperfield
Friday Evening.	Nickleby and Trial
Saturday afternoon.	Copperfield.[†3]

There was a tremendous storm here yesterday, so that all that side of this house which fronted the gale had to be emptied of Guests. The sea was prodigiously high, and the uproar deafening. Between 4 and 5 in the afternoon, the wind shifted to the North, and it became fine. We had a great squeeze at night, and turned away money. Room small, but not ill-constructed. Audience, most capital — faultless![†4] There was a ditto audience at Canterbury, where they took Copperfield most delightfully.

From Hastings we have a Telegram that they have sold for tonight nearly 300 stalls! We go over there, at noon.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To MRS HENRY AUSTIN, 6 NOVEMBER 1861*

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

Marine Hotel,[†1] Hastings
Wednesday Sixth November, 1861.

My Dear Letitia.

The question about the furniture, is a difficult one to determine. I have taken a little time to think of it since I received your letter an hour ago, and my conclusion is, that it is solely a question of expence. If the charge for removing and warehousing it, say for three months, should not exceed eight or ten pounds, I think it would be advisable (for the reasons you suggest) to keep it. But if that charge should be larger, then I should be inclined to recommend selling it at once. But observe this:— if you take, for the present, an unfurnished Lodging, you could squeeze a good deal of furniture into it; you would then have to pay no rent for the Furniture itself; and you would have by you such things as you would have carefully selected for their own value and their likelihood of being useful to you. This last course seems to me on the whole the very best. It depends upon your being able to make a selection, but it will unquestionably do you good, if you can and will approach that practical action. What you don't select, I would sell at once. If you keep as much as you can, the prudent considerations that have occurred to you respecting its after-use will work themselves out in a little while. If it should even then be best to sell those reserved things, well and good; they will be none the worse in the meanwhile.

Again I think, after stopping to consider it once more, that this third course is the best. I would select such furniture as would do best, for two bedrooms, two sitting rooms (one a small one), and a servant's room. The rest I would let go to an Auctioneer's to be sold. In taking any unfurnished Lodging it would be important to be well assured of the responsibility of the people letting it to you, so that your furniture should be in no danger.

It is a great point to get rid of the house; and to get rid of it at the half quarter would be really fortunate. It is sad to think of your remaining there a day longer than is absolutely necessary, and it is next to unreasonable to hope that you can begin to recover until you get away from it.

A tremendous storm was raging yesterday at Dover, and I saw the Ostend Packet Boat come in this morning — after having vainly attempted to get in last night, and after having beaten about until noon — a picture of sea-tossed distress, with five men at the wheel to steer her. The sea is running high here, with a most furious sound, but it is nothing to the sea at Dover yesterday. It brought in quantities of Wreck of various kinds, and flung itself and everything it could lay hold of, about, in a most frantic and stupendous manner.[†2]

Ever affectionately

CD.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 7 NOVEMBER 1861

MS Dickens House. Address (envelope, MS Yale University Library): Miss Hogarth | All The Year Round Office | Wellington Street | London | W.C. PM Brighton Nov 61. On mourning paper.

Bedford Hotel, Brighton
Thursday Seventh November, 1861.

My Dearest Georgy. I received your amusing and interesting letter, safely, at Hastings this morning. We have been doing tremendously. We turned away half Hastings last night[†1] — turned away at Dover — have (for the three readings) 800 stalls in all, already let here — and there will no doubt be 1000. The Duchess of Cambridge[†2] comes tonight to Copperfield. The bad weather has not in the least touched us, and beyond all doubt a great deal of money has been left untaken at each place.

Of course there was a great pressure last night. In the midst of it, a wrapped up man in a fur cap was continually calling out "John!" — to John. Not the least notice was taken of him until it was found to be — Burnett! — who was dragged out eventually, and put into a stall. He came to me at the end, and told me that his wife[†3] had been anxious to be there, but was going to be confined. It will be their second child.[†4] His imbecility was overwhelming.

The storm was most magnificent at Dover. All the great side of the Lord Warden next the sea, had to be emptied, the break of the sea was so prodigious, and the noise was so utterly confounding. The sea came in like a great sky of immense clouds, forever breaking suddenly into furious rain. All kinds of wreck were washed in. Miss Birmingham[†5] and I, saw, among other things, a very pretty brassbound chest being thrown about like a feather. On Tuesday night, the unhappy Ostend Packet could not get in; neither could she go back; and she beat about the channel until noon yesterday. I saw her come in then, with five men at the wheel — such a picture of misery as to the crew (of passengers, there were no signs), as you can scarcely imagine.

The room at Hastings belongs to Lockey,[†6] who is really a very gentlemanly fellow with an extremely good manner. I saw Mrs. Lockey this morning — grown very coarse and red indeed. The effect both there and at Dover really seems to have outdone the best usual impression — and at Dover they wouldn't go, but sat applauding like mad. The most delicate audience I have seen in any provincial place, is Canterbury. The audience with the greatest sense of humour, certainly is Dover. The people in the stalls set the example of laughing, in the most curiously unreserved way; and they really laughed when Squeers read the boys' letters, with such cordial enjoyment, that the contagion extended to me. For one couldn't hear them without laughing too.

So, thank God, all goes well and the recompense for the trouble is in every way Great. There is rather an alarming break-down at Newcastle, in respect of all the bills having been, in some inscrutable way, Lost on the road. I have resolved to send Berry there, with full powers to do all manner of things, early next week.

I have forgotten to say that Frederick appeared at Canterbury as "Mr. Dicken's brother, to pass in Dr. Sankey."[†1] Then he went away and of course did not come to me. The mysterious Sankey was admitted, and I know no more of him.

The amended route-list is not printed yet, because I am trying to get off Manchester and Liverpool: both of which I strongly doubt, in the present state of American affairs.[†2] Therefore I can't send it for Marguerite; but I can — and do — send her my Love and Godspeed.[†3] This is addressed to the office, because I suppose you will be there tomorrow.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To W. H. WILLS, 7 NOVEMBER 1861*

MS Huntington Library. On mourning paper.

Bedford Hotel, Brighton
Thursday Seventh November 1861.

My Dear Wills. I received the proof[†4] at Hastings this morning. I send it to Birtles with my corrections, by this same post, to save time. Of the story, I think rather highly. Indeed, it would have been best to have kept it for the Xmas No. — Wilkie doesn't know (as I do) that we shall get nothing so good.

I have called it

[†a]THE WITHERED DAISY.[†5a]

And I have called Charles Collins's article (feeble) simply

[†a]DON'T![†6a]

For the three readings we have 800 stalls let here — which will probably be 1000 before we have done.[†1] I shall expect you tomorrow.

Ever Faithfully.

CD.

Immense at Hastings — We turned away half the Town.

To MRS HENRY AUSTIN, 8 NOVEMBER 1861*

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

Bedford Hotel, Brighton
Friday Eighth November, 1861.

My Dear Letitia.

The enclosed letters are very satisfactory indeed.

I should think your Rent, while you have that furniture with you to house, would be about Twenty Pounds a year — perhaps Five Pounds more. I think the best way would be, to take a place for a certain short term — say for instance, six months — under an agreement to be able to leave, if you choose, at the end of the term. Then you would not be bound to any course, until you had had time for consideration and experience.

I shall probably be at the office all next week, except Thursday. So much will have to be done there, that I am afraid to make an appointment to come out to Ealing; or I would. In selecting the furniture you keep, of course you should consult something above mere usefulness, and added to it, your sentiment and affectionate remembrances must be considered — not coerced or slighted.

On looking over your letter again, I find that I have not touched on the point of the situation you mention. By all means choose it. It is a very good one in itself, and to be among friends is an immense point. I am very glad to learn that Harry[†2] will go with you.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [8 NOVEMBER 1861]

Extract in F, VIII, vi, 689. Date: from Brighton, 8 Nov 61, according to Forster.

Reporting that from the second night of his tour onward, the success was uninterrupted. We turned away half Dover and half Hastings and half Colchester; and, if you can believe such a thing, I may tell you that in round numbers we find 1000 stalls already taken here in Brighton! I left Colchester in a heavy snow-storm. Today it is so warm here that I can hardly bear the fire, and am writing with the window open down to the ground. Last night I had a most charming audience for Copperfield, with a delicacy of perception that really made the work delightful. It is very pretty to see the girls and women generally, in the matter of Dora; and everywhere I have found that peculiar personal relation between my audience and myself on which I counted most when I entered on this enterprise. Nickleby continues to go in the wildest manner.

To THE DOWAGER COUNTESS SPENCER,[†1] 8 NOVEMBER 1861*

MS Maggs Bros. On mourning paper.

Bedford Hotel, Brighton
Friday Eighth November, 1861.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his Compliments to Lady Spencer, and begs to say that he has just heard from Mrs. Watson that possibly he can have the pleasure of assisting Lady Spencer to obtain some good position at his Readings. If Lady Spencer will have the kindness to let Mr. Dickens know what her wishes are, he will immediately instruct his Secretary to do the best he can to advance them. There is a great pressure on the room, however, and Mr. Dickens regrets that he did not hear sooner from their friend Mrs. Watson.

To THE HON. MRS RICHARD WATSON, 8 NOVEMBER 1861

MS Mr Thomas Brown. Address: The Hon. Mrs. Watson | 12 Stratton Street | London | W.
On mourning paper.

Bedford Hotel Brighton
Friday Eighth November, 1861.

My Dear Mrs. Watson

A word — to let you know that I received your letter here last night. I have this morning written to Lady Spencer, and sent to the post office for her Address. If I find her, I will do everything for her that can be done. But the pressure on the room tonight is very great. It was a great disappointment to me not to have you again, to sit before my fire in that bleak withdrawing room. I doubt if you can ever hear Copperfield to greater advantage than you would have heard it last night. The audience understood the most delicate points, and it "went" quite delightfully.

Ever affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To THE EDITOR, EASTERN PROVINCE HERALD,[†1] SOUTH AFRICA, 12 NOVEMBER 1861

Text from the Athenaeum, 14 Dec 89.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Twelfth November, 1861.

Sir,

The straightforward and manly letter I have received from you, dated the 16th of September, enables me to assure you that I am quite satisfied with the end of the difference between us.[†2] Let me explain to you, that in asserting my rights as an English writer, I put wholly aside such questions as the circulation or profit attendant on their infringement. I consider myself one of a class who are sufficiently outraged in being despoiled after death; and I have a special reason for protecting my property, on principle, while I am alive, derived from the Court of Chancery. Some years ago, when I made application there for relief from a new kind of piracy, which, if it had been successful, would have established a comprehensive system of fraud before unheard of, I heard it gravely argued that because I had submitted to be pirated before, I had lost my remedy in equity. I was so far edified by the discussion as to resolve that I assuredly never would submit to be pirated again if I knew it, and to this resolution I always adhere. In reference to your suggestion that you might have been cautioned before legal proceedings were taken, I beg to reply that you certainly should have been but for your distance from home here, and the consequent delay that must have arisen. —

With perfect good will, I remain, | Faithfully yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

To JAMES MACFARLAN,[†1] 12 NOVEMBER 1861*

MS Mitchell Library, Glasgow. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Twelfth November, 1861.

Dear Sir

In reply to your letter asking me to certify, for the information of the Glasgow Closing Movement Association,[†2] that you have written various pieces published among the poetical contributions to my "All The Year Round", I now beg to do so.[†3] I do so in the hope that I may render you some slight service thereby, in your application for the Secretaryship of that Institution. It would gratify me to know of your success in connexion with a meritorious object, which I am quite sure you have the will and the capacity to advance.[†4]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. James Macfarlan

To B. W. PROCTER, 12 NOVEMBER 1861

Text from MDGH, II, 208-9.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday, Twelfth November, 1861.

My Dear Procter,

I grieve to reply to your note, that I am obliged to read at Newcastle on the 21st. Poor Arthur Smith had pledged me to do so before I knew that my annual engagement with you was being encroached on.[†5] I am heartily sorry for this, and shall miss my usual place at your table, quite as much (to say the least) as my place can possibly miss me. You may be sure that I shall drink to my dear old friend in a bumper that day, with love and best wishes. Don't leave me out next year for having been carried away north this time.

Ever yours affectionately
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To MRS HENRY AUSTIN, 13 NOVEMBER 1861*

MS Morgan Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Thirteenth November 1861.

My Dear Letitia

I have sent the will[†1] round to De Gex without loss of time. I should hope there will be little difficulty in getting back the paid excess of duty.

Ever affectionately
CD.

To MRS HENRY AUSTIN, 15 NOVEMBER 1861*

MS Morgan Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Fifteenth November, 1861.

My Dear Letitia. You will see by the enclosed letter that you must write, for De Gex, an exact account of the finding of the will. Be careful to note in it the date of the discovery, and the Christian name and relationship of Mrs. Silva, and to state, quite plainly and unmistakably, how the occurrence took place. I have told him that you will send him these particulars by post. And I have sent him the additional sum necessary to be advanced for probate-duty.

I am very anxious to hear of your getting away from the house. It is the very worst place for you, and I can hardly hope, in any reason, that you will begin to recover while you stay in it.

Ever affectionately
CD.

To THE EARL OF CARLISLE, 15 NOVEMBER 1861

MS Lord Howard of Henderskelfe. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Fifteenth November, 1861.

My Dear Lord Carlisle.

You knew poor Austin, and what his work was, and how he did it.[†2] If you have no private objection to signing the enclosed Memorial (which will receive the right signatures before being presented),[†1], I think you will have no public objection. I shall be heartily glad if you can put your name to it, and shall esteem your doing so as a very kind service.[†2] Will you return the Memorial under cover to Mr Tom Taylor at the Local Government Act Office, Whitehall? He is generously exerting himself in furtherance of it, and so delay will be avoided.

My Dear Lord Carlisle, | Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

The Earl of Carlisle

To EDWIN CHADWICK,[†3] [15 NOVEMBER 1861]

Mention in To Taylor, 15 Nov 61. Date: clearly same day as that letter.

Asking him to sign a Memorial in support of a pension for Mrs Austin.[†4]

To TOM TAYLOR, 15 NOVEMBER 1861*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Supposed to be from
GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
— But really From the Office | Fifteenth November, 1861.

My Dear Taylor. I make no suggestion as to any part of the Memorial, simply because I think it really perfect in its manner of putting the case. Not a word too much or a word too little.[†5]

To save time, perhaps you will kindly send it over to the Irish Office when it is copied out, with the accompanying note to Lord Carlisle. When it comes back to you, here is another note to Lord Shaftesbury. Lord Llanover[†6] and The Hon W. Cowper[†7] perhaps you will kindly look up. I leave here, with Wills, in case you should want them, notes for

Chadwick
Southwood Smith[†1]
Rawlinson[†2]
and Lawes.[†3]

I don't know about Mr. Albert Way.[†4]

I would propose to make one of your messengers a little present for his trouble in the matter, and Wills will instantly attend (in my absence) to any notes from you. He knows where to find me, in the North, any day or hour. I am very anxious to get the Memorial without delay into Ld. Palmerston's hands.

Ever Faithfully Yours

CD

Tom Taylor Esquire

To [CHARLES WHITING], 15 NOVEMBER 1861*

MS Dickens House. Address: The AYR Christmas No. was printed by Whiting, Beaufort House, Strand.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Fifteenth Novr 1861

I sent back for revise this morning — with Miss Kimmeens[†5] — the last printed slip of the first Xmas article "Picking up Soot and Cinders." That one slip of revise is not sent in the envelope from Beaufort House.

CD.

To MISS MARY BOYLE, 17 NOVEMBER 1861†

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT,
Sunday Seventeenth November, 1861.

My Dear Mary

I am perfectly enraptured with the quilt. It is one of the most tasteful, lively, elegant things I have ever seen; and I need not tell you that while it is valuable to me for its own ornamental sake, it is precious to me as a rainbow-hint of your friendship and affectionate remembrance.

Please God, you shall see it next summer occupying its allotted place of state in my bran-new bedroom here. You shall behold it then, with all cheerful surroundings, the envy of mankind.

My readings have been doing absolute wonders. Your Duchess and Princess[†1] came to hear — first Nickleby and the Pickwick Trial — then Copperfield — at Brighton. I think they were pleased with me, and I am sure I was with them; for they are the very best audience one could possibly desire. I shall always hold a pleasant remembrance of them.

On Wednesday I am away again, for the longest part of my trip.[†2]

You are more yourself, I hope, than I could quite fancy you to be when I last heard from you? Georgy had told me that you were not in very good spirits, and I had been very sorry to hear it.

Believe me ever | Your affectionate and faithful

JOE.

To CHARLES DICKENS, JNR, [?18 NOVEMBER 1861]

Mention in To Mrs Wills, 26 June 68. Date: "when he married" (19 Nov 61), according to To Fields, 7 July 68, referring to same letter.

Warning him against the partners in the paper-making company he was joining.[†3]

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 20 NOVEMBER 1861*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Hogarth | Gad's Hill Place | Higham | by | Rochester. On mourning paper.

Queen's Head Hotel, Newcastle
Wednesday Night Twentieth Novr. 1861.

My Dearest Georgy.

We arrived here to the moment — ½ past 4 — and had a pleasant and not cold journey. The Let is small, that is to say at present — 60 stalls for tomorrow night, and 90 for the next — but on looking to the Plans for last time,[†1] we find that the greater part of the money was taken at the doors; and the local Agent is so confident, that I suppose it is all right.[†2] But Headland has made an awful mistake — I cannot conceive how — in putting up Little Dombey (which I read here, last time) for Saturday, instead of Copperfield!! And as Copperfield always makes itself, I suspect he has irretrievably damaged Saturday.

The disagreeable Jenny[†3] seems to have made an extraordinary success here last week.[†4]

As you may readily imagine, I have no news since this morning. We even came down with no one but ourselves in our carriage, until we got to York. Dinner is now coming, and I am not very much indisposed towards it, as I have had nothing but a small sandwich and a small mince-pie since I left Wellington Street.

I will report further, after reading here.

Love to Mamie and to Mrs. Bouncer — when they come home.

Ever My Dearest Georgy | Your most affectionate

CD.

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 20 NOVEMBER 1861

MS Lytton Papers. On mourning paper.

Queen's Head Hotel | Newcastle on Tyne
Wednesday Night Twentieth Novr. 1861.

My Dear Bulwer Lytton

I have read here this evening, very attentively, Nos. 19 and 20.[†5] I have not the least doubt of the introduced matter.[†6] Whether considered for its policy, its beauty, or its wise bearing on the story, it is decidedly a great improvement. It is at once very suggestive and very new to have these various points of view presented to the reader's mind.

That the audience is good enough for any thing that is well presented to it, I am quite sure.[†7]

Where you can avoid notes, however, and get their substance into the text, it is highly desirable in the case of so large an audience — simply because, as so large an audience necessarily reads the story in small portions, it is of the greater importance that they should retain as much of its argument as possible. Whereas the difficulty of getting numbers of people to read notes (which they invariably regard as interruptions of the text — not as strengtheners or elucidators of it), is wonderful.[†1]

Is the first reference to Abercrombie's book on the Intellectual Powers,[†2] correct?[†3] I need not say that I have not the means of verification here. Don't you think, in citing Hibbert, it would be well to give his book its name. "On the Philosophy of apparitions", seems to be to the point.[†4]

I purpose being at home again, a day or two before Xmas. If you want to write to me in the mean time, any letter from you addressed to me at the office, will be immediately forwarded. But I may mention that — all next week (viz Tuesday 26th. Novr. to Monday 2nd. Decr. inclusive)

I shall be at the
Waterloo Hotel, Edinburgh
— And all the week after next, (viz Tuesday 3rd. Decr. to Saty. 7th. inclusive) at Carrick's Royal Hotel, Glasgow.

Ever affecy.

CD.

To H. G. ADAMS, 21 NOVEMBER 1861*

MS New York Public Library. On mourning paper.

Newcastle on Tyne
Thursday Twenty First November 1861.

My Dear Mr. Adams

Your letter has been forwarded to me here, where I am on my way to Scotland.

To my regret, I am obliged at once to say that it is quite impossible for me to engage to preside at Mr. Hall's[†5] lecture.[†6] For I have the most pressing reasons against committing myself to any new engagement whatever, in February or March; and I explained to you the last time I saw you (but you have forgotten it) that all through December and January I am bound hand and foot. It would be equally unjust and inconsiderate towards Mr. Hall and towards myself, to engage to attend, with the strong likelihood of my being otherwise occupied when the night came, staring me in the face while I wrote.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

H. G. Adams Esquire

To THE EDITOR OF THE DAILY NEWS,[†1] 21 NOVEMBER 1861

Text from Daily News, 23 Nov 61.

Newcastle-on-Tyne, Nov. 21. 1861

Sir,

Being here for a day or two, I have observed in your paper of yesterday (which fell in my way this morning), an account of a meeting of Finsbury[†2] electors in which it was discussed whether I should be invited to become a candidate for that borough. It may save some trouble if you will kindly allow me to confirm a sensible gentleman who doubted at that meeting whether I was "quite the sort of man for Finsbury." I am not at all the sort of man, for I believe nothing would induce me to offer myself as a parliamentary representative of that place, or any other under the sun.

I am, &c,
CHARLES DICKENS

To THE MAYOR OF NEWCASTLE,[†3] 21 NOVEMBER 1861*

MS Professor Harry Stone. On mourning paper.

Queen's Head Hotel, Newcastle
Twenty First November, 1861.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to the Mayor of Newcastle and regrets that he cannot have the honor and pleasure of complying with the Mayor's request in behalf of Miss Downie.[†4] But as he is fully occupied, and as a similar request is preferred to him almost every day, he is reluctantly obliged to excuse himself.

To W. H. WILLS, [21 NOVEMBER 1861]

Telegram: mention in next. Date: sent same day.

To W.H. WILLS, 21 NOVEMBER 1861*

MS Huntington Library. On mourning paper.

Queen's Head Hotel, Newcastle
Thursday Twenty First November, 1861.

My Dear Wills.

On the other side I send a signature for the envelope of the Xmas No. My List I will send you (as well as I can remember it) in a day or two.

Jenny Lind has been carrying all the money out of this place.[†1] But the local man is perfectly confident of our doing well. The best Let is for tomorrow night;[†2] but tonight's[†3] is getting on briskly to day, and we find, on referring to our last Plans, that the great "take" was in ready money.

Headland has made a most incomprehensible mistake, which there is no time to correct. I read Copperfield tonight; and, as I knew it would make Saturday night if repeated then, I directed it to be put up for Saturday. He has put up Little Dombey:[†4] which I had no more intention of reading (and which I read here last time), than I had of reading an account of the Moon. It annoys me beyond expression.

I have written to the Daily News, to say I would not sit for any place under the Sun.

I telegraphed to you this morning "No to Frederic Buchanan". — Besides that it is really fit for nothing but Mrs. S C Hall,[†5] it is in a lumbering ridiculous way a kind of demi semi anticipation of the tone of the Xmas No. It would therefore be doubly damaging.

Charles Mathews's[†6] announcement[†7] is amazing in its vagabond bad taste — even for him.

When you write again, tell me when Wilkie's payment is due from me.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

Enclosed was forwarded here this morning.

To MRS HENRY AUSTIN, 22 NOVEMBER 1861

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

Queen's Head, Newcastle on Tyne
Friday Twenty Second November 1861.

My Dear Letitia. I am not quite clear — as yet — about the idea of taking Boarders, and I will tell you why. I don't think your spirits are fit for it, or that your nervous condition is equal to it; and, those being unfit and unequal, would inevitably lessen the chance of your getting young people to come to you. We must consider both what the pain would be to you, and what the pain would be to them; and I think it would not do — as yet — for either side.

But if you let a lodging, a small sitting room and bedroom or the like, you would not have the same demand upon you. Similarly, the other person would then have no ground of unwillingness to come to you. And this is what I would recommend. Therefore I counsel you (always supposing that you concur) to take such a house as would enable you to spare such accommodation, and to retain furniture accordingly. If in the fulness of time it should seem feasible to develop the lodging into boarding, well and good. But I say most decidedly, don't think of taking boarders now.

You cannot begin to recover tone and force, until you have the benefit of change of place. It is impossible. Would you like to go to Gad's Hill — quite alone with Miss Sunderland[†1] — for a week or so? If you would, you can be there, next Monday fortnight, perfectly undisturbed, and the servants shall have instructions to do everything for you, and you can have the basket-carriage and ride about the country. There are workmen in the house, but there would be quite enough of it undisturbed, for your purpose. On Monday fortnight, Mary and Georgina are coming to me at Carlisle for ten days. You need see no human creature there, but of your own choosing.

If you should take to this idea — if you should descry any prospect of relief in it — write a line to Mary and tell her. This is a hasty letter, but I am anxious not to lose a post.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To J. T. GORDON, [22 NOVEMBER 1861]

Mention in To Mrs Gordon, 23 Nov. Date: day before that letter.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 22 NOVEMBER 1861

MS Dickens House. On mourning paper.

Queen's Head, Newcastle
Friday, Twenty Second November, 1861.

My Dearest Georgy. I received your letter this morning, and grieve to report that the unlucky Headland has broken down most awfully! —

First, as perhaps you remember, this is the place where the bills were "lost" for a week or two. The consequence has been that the agent[†1] could not announce all through the Jenny Lind time[†2] (the most important for announcing), and could only stand still and stare, when people came to ask what[†3] was going to be read. Last night I read Copperfield — to the most enthusiastic and appreciative audience imaginable[†4] — but in numbers about half what they might have been.[†5] Tonight we shall have a famous house, but we might have had it last night too. Tomorrow (knowing by this time what can, of a certainty, be done with Copperfield), I had of course given out Copperfield to be read again. Conceive my amazement and dismay when I find the Printer to have announced Little Dombey!!! This, I declare, I had no more intention of reading than I had of reading an account of the Solar System. And this, after a sensation last night, of a really extraordinary nature in its intensity and delight!

Says the unlucky Headland to this first head of misery — "Johnson's mistake". (Johnson being the printer.)

Second. I read at Edinburgh for the first time — observe the day — next Wednesday. Jenny Lind's concert at Edinburgh is tonight.[†6] This morning comes a frantic letter from the Edinburgh agent[†7] — "I have no bills, no tickets, I lose all the announcement I could have made to hundreds upon hundreds of people tonight all of the most desirable class to be well informed beforehand, I can't announce what Mr. Dickens is going to read, I can answer no question, I have, upon my responsibility, put a dreary advertisement into the papers announcing that he is going to read so many times, and that particulars will 'shortly' be ready,[†8] and so I stand bound hand and foot." — "Johnson's mistake" says the unlucky Headland.

Of course I know that the man who never made a mistake in poor Arthur's time is not likely to be always making mistakes now. But I have written by this post to Wills, to go to him, and investigate. I have also detached Berry from here, and have sent him on by train at a few minutes' notice to Edinburgh, and then to Glasgow (where I have no doubt everything is wrong too). Glasgow we may save; Edinburgh I hold to be irretrievably damaged. If it can be picked up at all, it can only be at the loss of the two first nights, and by the expenditure of no end of spirits and force. And this is the harder, because it is impossible not to see that the last readings polished and prepared the audiences in general, and that I have not to work them up in any place where I have been before, but that they start with a London intelligence, and with a respect and preparation for what they are going to hear.

I hope by the time you and Mamie come to me, we shall have got into some good method. I must take the thing more into my own hands and look after it from hour to hour. If such a thing as this Edinburgh business could have happened under poor Arthur, I really believe he would have fallen into a fit, or gone distracted. No one can ever know what he was but I who have been with him and without him. Headland is so anxious and so good tempered that I cannot be very stormy with him; but it is the simple fact that he has no notion of the requirements of such work as this. Without him, and with a larger salary to Berry (though there are objections to the latter as first man), I could have done a hundred times better.

As Forster will have a strong interest in knowing all about the proceedings, perhaps you will send him this letter to read. There is no very tremendous harm — mind — done as yet. At Edinburgh I KNOW[†1] what I can do with Copperfield. I think it is not too much to say that for every one who does come to hear it on the first night, I can get back fifty on the second. And whatever can be worked up there, will tell on Glasgow. Berry I shall continue to send on ahead, and I shall take nothing on trust and more, as being done.

On Sunday morning at 6, I have to start for Berwick. From Berwick in the course of that day, I will write again — to Mamie next time.

With best love to her and Mrs. B

Ever Dearest Georgy
Your most affectionate
CD.

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 22 NOVEMBER 1861

MS Lytton Papers. Mourning paper.

Queen's Head, Newcastle on Tyne
Friday Twenty Second November, 1861.

My Dear Bulwer Lytton.

The difficulty is perfectly vanquished. I have gone over the Proof, and have not touched a single word — simply because it could not, I think, stand better. And it is much more terrible notwithstanding, than it was before.

By this post, I send the proof on to Wills.

Your desire to buy a freehold,[†2] if you buy at all, does not surprise me. Out of London I never can understand a man's caring to buy any thing else.

Ever affy.
CD.

To W. H. WILLS, 22 NOVEMBER 1861

MS Huntington Library. On mourning paper.

Queen's Head, Newcastle on Tyne
Friday Twenty Second November, 1861.

My Dear Wills

I am horribly afraid that Headland has broken down, and I want you to take the trouble to go round to St. Martin's Lane — see Johnson the Printer — and ascertain if you can, how this state of things that I am going to describe has been brought about.

Observe first of all, that the posting bills, shop-bills &c sent off by Johnson for this place, all in one parcel — and (necessarily) to this place, were for days and days "lost". At last they were found to have been sent by Johnson to the place of reading — the Hall[†1] — instead of to the local agent, where they had been lying in some vault or other, and might have lain until Doomsday. This had previously occurred at some other place — I forget which — I think Ipswich — but it is not material; at some place, indubitably.

When I come here, I find, to my astonishment that I am announced on Saturday to read Little Dombey and the Trial[†2] — which I had no notion of doing; having given directions to Headland to put up Copperfield for Saturday: well knowing that Copperfield of last night would make Saturday's.[†3] — [†a]"Johnson's mistake", he says.[†a]

I begin to read at Edinburgh on Wednesday. This morning comes a letter from the agent there, with the dismal news that he has not got the bills, tickets, and so forth — in a parcel from Johnson again — known to have been sent somewhere! — and that whereas all Edinburgh ought to be now acquainted with everything that is going to be done, nothing whatever is known. Conceive this, and I beginning on Wednesday! Moreover, he has one of our printed cards of the Edinburgh course in his possession, and on that printed card there is no morning reading of Little Dombey — which I had given out to Headland, and know would be very valuable. Again he says, "Johnson's mistake". But I cannot readily make out how Johnson can be always making mistakes now, and never made them before. This is what I want you kindly to ascertain from him.

I do not know what is to be done. It is too plain that the business is most awfully mismanaged, and I cannot see my way to putting it right. I am so perfectly helpless in the matter: having my own hard work in it to do, and having of course supposed all these things to be done already. I have detached Berry to Edinburgh — he is off directly — but I do not believe that any thing he can do, can now make that place what it ought to have been. I have instructed him to go on to Glasgow, and put everything right there. I have scarcely a doubt that everything is wrong.

Here, the local Agent of course complains that he was absolutely powerless when he ought to have been busiest — that when Jenny Lind was here, and he was sending her circulars out, and ought to have been sending mine, he had none to send, had no notion what I was going to do, could answer no enquiry. We had a most enthusiastic audience last night for Copperfield — but in numbers they were about half what they should have been and would have been.

If all these rooms at all these places in the List were not taken, I would not go on. But the mischief is, that I must go on.

Bulwer's proof enclosed.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To MISS MARY DICKENS, 23 NOVEMBER 1861

Text from MDGH, II, 161.

Queen's Head, Newcastle-on-Tyne,
Saturday, Nov. 23rd, 1861.

[My Dearest Mamie]

A most tremendous hall here last night; something almost terrible in the cram. A fearful thing might have happened. Suddenly, when they were all very still over Smike, my gas batten came down, and it looked as if the room was falling. There were three great galleries crammed to the roof, and a high steep flight of stairs, and a panic must have destroyed numbers of people. A lady in the front row of stalls screamed, and ran out wildly towards me, and for one instant there was a terrible wave in the crowd. I addressed that lady laughing (for I knew she was in sight of everybody there), and called out as if it happened every night, "There's nothing the matter, I assure you; don't be alarmed; pray sit down;" and she sat down directly, and there was a thunder of applause. It took some few minutes to mend, and I looked on with my hands in my pockets; for I think if I had turned my back for a moment there might still have been a move. My people were dreadfully alarmed, Boycett[†1] in particular, who I suppose had some notion that the whole place might have taken fire.

"But there stood the master," he did me the honour to say afterwards, in addressing the rest, "as cool as ever I see him a-lounging at a railway station."[†2]

A telegram from Berry at Edinburgh yesterday evening, to say that he had got the bills, and that they would all be up and dispersed yesterday evening under his own eyes. So no time was lost in setting things as right as they can be set. He has now gone on to Glasgow.

Ever affectionately

[CD]

P. S. Duty to Mrs. Bouncer.

To MRS GORDON,[†1] 23 NOVEMBER 1861

MS Private. Address: Mrs. Gordon | Glo'ster Place, Edinburgh. On mourning paper.

Queen's Head, Newcastle

Saturday Night Twenty Third November | 1861.

My Dear Mrs. Gordon

Your kind note has just now (6 O'Clock) been forwarded to me from Gad's Hill. I send this brief reply to say that I will come to you on Friday with the greatest pleasure.

I sent Gordon a line yesterday. My man did everything right (as I understand from a Telegram), and I don't think there will be much the matter; except, maybe, with the first night. The crowd here last night was something almost terrible to see.

Our dear old Andrew[†2] is at Gad's Hill I hear, and will probably be in Edinburgh before

Yours Ever

CHARLES DICKENS

To W. H. WILLS, 23 NOVEMBER 1861*

MS Huntington Library. On mourning paper.

Queen's Head, Newcastle on Tyne
Saturday Twenty Third November, 1861.

My Dear Wills.

The enclosed[†3] has been forwarded to me here.

Telegram from Berry at Edinburgh yesterday, that the bills arrived — at last — and were all posted and dispersed, under his own eyes and direction, yesterday evening.

A most tremendous Hall here, last night. Something almost terrible in the cram. Numbers turned away, who I hope will return tonight.

Faithfully Ever
CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?24 NOVEMBER 1861]

Extract in F, VIII, vi, 690. Date: written from Berwick-on-Tweed, where he stayed 24 and 25 Nov.

At Newcastle, against the very heavy expenses, I made more than a hundred guineas profit. A finer audience there is not in England, and I suppose them to be a specially earnest people; for, while they can laugh till they shake the roof, they have a very unusual sympathy with what is pathetic or passionate. An extraordinary thing occurred on the second night. The room was tremendously crowded and my gas-apparatus fell down. There was a terrible wave among the people for an instant, and God knows what destruction of life a rush to the stairs would have caused. Fortunately a lady in the front of the stalls ran out towards me, exactly in a place where I knew that the whole hall could see her. So I addressed her, laughing, and half-asked and half-ordered her to sit down again; and, in a moment, it was all over. But the men in attendance had such a fearful sense of what might have happened (besides the real danger of Fire) that they positively shook the boards I stood on, with their trembling, when they came up to put things right. I am proud to record that the gas-man's sentiment, as delivered afterwards, was, "The more you want of the master, the more you'll find in him." With which complimentary homage, and with the wind blowing so that I can hardly hear myself write, I conclude.

To W. H. WILLS, 24 NOVEMBER 1861

MS Huntington Library. On mourning paper.

King's Arms Hotel, Berwick on Tweed
Sunday Twenty Fourth November, 1861.

My Dear Wills. Just a line to say that I received yours here this morning and thank you for it. We have done extremely well at Newcastle, and made a very remarkable impression, beyond all doubt. Berry telegraphed from Edinburgh that he had got the bills and was issuing them in all proper directions — afterwards from Glasgow, ditto ditto. Gordon writes from Edinburgh that he "thinks no harm has been done". This must of course be taken with a qualification; but he had been to Wood's,[†1] and seemed to have earnestly looked about him. Of course he is waiting for me, as a comrade.

This is a dull place for a long Sunday, and as I have no book (no, NOT ONE;[†2] — I forgot to buy one yesterday, through going to look at the Pitmen as they came from work), I think I shall learn your account of the Octoroon.[†3] Before beginning to learn it, I send you on the other side my list for the Xmas No. as well as I can remember it.[†4]

Will you write to the enclosed man in confidence, saying that I am away in Scotland?

This seems a most extraordinary place to read in, and one would think it contained nobody to read to; but I believe the sale of tickets is quite surprising, considering the town. I don't know the details yet, and don't want to know them; for I was up at 5, and have exerted myself very much, at Newcastle. I mean, please God, to do the same in Edinburgh — where I begin with Copperfield, and hope to make a great effect — in the beginning, intellectually — in the end, pecuniarily.

Ever Faithfully

CD

To MRS HENRY AUSTIN, 25 NOVEMBER 1861*

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

King's Arms Hotel, Berwick upon Tweed
Monday Twenty Fifth November, 1861.

My Dear Laetitia.[†1]

A good servant — especially to you, to whom a good and tried servant would stand in the light of a friend — is not a thing to throw away. Therefore, whatever arrangement I made, I would make it so as that I could retain this servant at all events for the present. We will hope that you may be permanently able to keep her. On the whole therefore, I would take a house (to let part of furnished) for a year certain, with power to quit at the expiration of the year on three months notice. That is to say — if you were going, you would give notice of your intention to go, when you had lived in the house 9 months. De Gex would make a Memorandum of such an agreement for you, in three or four lines. I think the Bayswater house too dear.

Don't suppose because I am away, that the application for a Pension is standing still. I put it all in train with Tom Taylor before I left town — wrote all the letters necessary for the purpose — and the Memorial was in course of being signed when I came away.[†2] I had then had a letter from Lord Carlisle who was the first to sign it.[†3] Of course you will not build on such a sandy foundation; but I mention this, to give you the assurance that no chance is standing still or being thrown away.

The provincial newspapers are in general so very bad — I mean in their writing: not in their spirit — that I never care to send any home. I am sorry now though, that I did not know you would like some; as those of Newcastle that I saw, were certainly above the average.[†4] At Edinburgh there are good newspapers, and also (if I recollect right) at Glasgow. I will look at them from time to time and send you any I can find that are worth sending.

A furious gale of wind is blowing in here from the Sea. I read here tonight. I can't imagine to whom, for I have seen nobody but three dogs, a little girl, a sailor, and an old Lighthouse Keeper, in the place. But I came here at the solicitation of the inhabitants, so I suppose there are some somewhere. Indeed I hear of Hundreds who are coming. At Newcastle the people have been very enthusiastic indeed, and on one night in particular, the room was almost terrible to look at, so dense was the crowd.

Some Fourteen or Fifteen years ago, I had a nervous seizure in the throat (occasioned by an attack that was made upon me by a horse), which distressed me greatly at intervals for a long time; distressed me more fearfully than I could ever tell anybody, or ever shall tell now. I found that I derived greater relief from smelling to some violent and pungent scent, whenever the thing came strongly upon me, than from any thing else. Try this, and I am sure you will find benefit. I went so far as to buy the strongest High-dried Welch snuff, and persistently to take it when I felt worst. It always relieved me. Dr. Elliotson at the same time recommended me to go to Twinberrow's,[†1] chemists, Edwards Street Portman Square, and buy a bottle of his extract of Wormwood, and take certain drops of it (the dose is marked upon the bottle), in a wine glass of water, twice a day. Its effect upon the nervous system is wholesome in the highest degree, and it can be taken when no other tonic can be borne. It is intensely bitter, and that is all. Now do try that also.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 25 NOVEMBER 1861†

MS Huntington Library. On mourning paper.

Berwick on Tweed
Monday Twenty Fifth November, 1861.

My Dearest Georgy.

I write (in a gale of wind, with a high sea running), to let you know that no new miseries worth mentioning have occurred, and that we go on to Edinburgh at ½ past 8 tomorrow morning. Gordon writes very hopefully of "harm not having been done". I dine with them on Friday. He describes himself as beginning and ending every week in the country, and being, in consequence "hale and hearty."

A most ridiculous room was designed for me in this odd out of the way place. An immense Corn Exchange made of glass and iron, round, dome-topped, lofty, utterly absurd for any such purpose, and full of thundering echoes — with a little lofty crow's nest of a stone gallery breast high, deep in the wall, into which it was designed to put — me! I instantly struck of course, and said I would either read in a room attached to this house (a very snug one, capable of holding 500 people), or not at all. Terrified local agents[†2] glowered, but fell prostrate.[†3]

— Berry has this moment come back from Edinburgh and Glasgow, with hopeful accounts. He seems to have done the business extremely well, and he says that it was quite curious and cheering to see how the Glasgow people assembled round the bills the instant they were posted, and evidently with a great interest in them.

That parcel to which you refer, is to go to Wills at the office. Tell Frank to tell him that it is the MS referred to in a letter I forwarded to him from Newcastle.

The note from Macready I got from you this morning, is a note of congratulation on Charley's marriage! And mentioning him, I am reminded that the other day I had a letter from Juliet Elderton![†1] dated Glenlee Lodge Cheltenham; imploring me to go and see her and her "kind friends there" when I visit Cheltenham; and sending her "love to Georgina" with all manner of affectionate expressions, and wanting to know whether Georgina ever received a letter favored by Mrs. Watson?

We left Newcastle yesterday morning in the dark when it was intensely cold, and froze very hard. So it did here. But towards night the wind went round to the S.W. and all night it has been blowing very hard indeed. So it is now.

Tell Mamie that I have the same sitting room as we had when we came here with poor Arthur,[†2] and that my bedroom is the room out of it which she and Katie had.[†3] Surely it is the oddest town to read in! But it is taken on poor Arthur's principle that a place in the way, pays the expences of a through-journey; and the people would seem to be coming up to the scratch, gallantly. It was a dull Sunday though. O it was a dull Sunday — without a book! For I had forgotten to buy one at Newcastle, until it was too late. [†a]I took to drinking after dark. Made a jug of whiskey punch, and drowned the unlucky Headland's remembrance of his failures.[†a]

[†b]Andrew will be passing through here tonight, I suppose, on his way home. Or perhaps he may be in the Mail Train tomorrow morning, by which I shall go on. I am truly sorry to know what you tell me of him, and I shall try to drop a word or two of good advice in his ear while I am in Edinburgh. It suggests the Strangest considerations as to which of our own failings we are really responsible, and as to which of them we cannot quite reasonably hold ourselves to be so. What he evidently derives from his father, cannot in his case be derived from association and observation, but must be in the very principles of his individuality as a living creature.[†b]

I shall hope to hear very soon, that the workmen have "broken through", and that you have been in the State Apartments, and that Upholstery-measurements have come off.

There has been a horrible accident in Edinburgh. One of the seven story old houses in the High Street fell, when it was full of people.†1 Berry was at the Bill poster's house, a few doors off, waiting for him to come home, when he heard what seemed like thunder, and then the air was darkened with dust "as if an immense quantity of steam had been blown off", and then all that dismal quarter set up shrieks, which he says were most dreadful.

With love to Mamie and to Mrs. Bouncer
Ever My Dearest Georgy | Your most affectionate
CD.

To RICHARD J. LANE,†2 26 NOVEMBER 1861†

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. On mourning paper.

Waterloo Hotel, Edinburgh
Tuesday Twenty Sixth November 1861.

My Dear Lane.

I write in the greatest haste. For I find your letter and the Proof†3 here on my arrival, and wish you to experience no delay in receiving my reply.

On the other side is the signature you want for the margin of the published impressions.†4

I do not pretend to know my own face. I do pretend to know the faces of my friends and fellow creatures, but not my own. While I descry great delicacy, and art, and pains, in your treatment of the subject, the result looks — to me — fiercer than the original. I have a strong impression that this is inseparable from the highly unnatural and exaggerated light in which one is photographed; because of course I see (as anyone with eyes may) that the Photographer himself, in his own operating-room, is very unlike the same man elsewhere.

Many thanks for your kind work and kind spirit.

Ever Faithfully
CD

To MISS MARY DICKENS, 27 NOVEMBER 1861

Extract in MDGH, II, 163-4.

Waterloo Hotel, Edinburgh, Wednesday, Nov. 27th, 1861.

Mrs. Bouncer must decidedly come with you to Carlisle. She shall be received with open arms. Apropos of Carlisle, let me know when you purpose coming there. We shall be there, please God, on the Saturday in good time, as I finish at Glasgow on the Friday night.

I have very little notion of the state of affairs here, as Headland brought no more decisive information from the agents[†1] yesterday (he never can get decisive information from any agents), than "the teeckets air joost moving reecht and left." I hope this may be taken as satisfactory. Jenny Lind carried off a world of money from here.[†2] Miss Glyn, or Mrs. Dallas,[†3] is playing Lady Macbeth at the theatre,[†4] and Mr. Shirley Brooks is giving two lectures at the Philosophical Society on the House of Commons and Horace Walpole.[†5] Grisi's[†6] farewell benefits are (I think) on my last two nights here.[†7]

Gordon dined with me yesterday. He is, if anything, rather better, I think, than when we last saw him in town. He was immensely pleased to be with me. I went with him (as his office goes anywhere) right into and among the ruins of the fallen building yesterday. They were still at work trying to find two men (brothers), a young girl, and an old woman, known to be all lying there. On the walls two or three common clocks are still hanging; one of them, judging from the time at which it stopped, would seem to have gone for an hour or so after the fall. Great interest had been taken in a poor linnet in a cage, hanging in the wind and rain high up against the broken wall. A fireman got it down alive, and great exultation had been raised over it. One woman, who was dug out unhurt, staggered into the street, stared all round her, instantly ran away, and has never been heard of since. It is a most extraordinary sight, and of course makes a great sensation.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 27 NOVEMBER 1861*

MS Huntington Library. On mourning paper.

Waterloo Hotel, Edinburgh
Wednesday Twenty Seventh November 1861.

My Dearest Georgy.

[†a]First, as to the household business. I send cheque for £11.0.0[†8] also cheque for two bills appended to it,[†9] that have been forwarded among my letters from town. Also, cheque for the two quarters. By this same post I write to Ellis, to send down cask of Sherry.[†a]

Next, as to what little news I have, it is in my note to Mamie. But I will leave this open until nearly post-time, in case I should have any further intelligence of to night (Copperfield, and the first reading), to send. It is very bad weather here. Wild, gusty, rainy, and sloppy. Andrew was here yesterday, but I was out with his father. He duly discharged himself of his parcel.

Wills writes me vague tidings of more water coming in at the roof. I hope and trust it is not much?

Ever affectionately

CD.

[Over

Afternoon.

It is a miserable day — sleeting and blowing gustily — and the bad weather may touch us on the first night; but the Let is three times what it was for the first night last time[†1] as to the stalls, and I suppose twenty times what it was as to the other parts of the room. Therefore everything looks comfortable. The room has been re-decorated in perfect taste, and is more beautiful and complete and easy and comfortable, than any in existence, I really believe.[†2] Gordon has proposed himself to shew the people to their stalls! I went into the little Opera-Theatre last night,[†3] and the audience immediately applauded. That's all the latest intelligence.

To CHARLES ELLIS, [27 NOVEMBER 1861]

Mention in last. Date: as last.

To W. H. WILLS, 27 NOVEMBER 1861*

MS Huntington Library. On mourning paper.

Waterloo Hotel, Edinburgh
Wednesday Twenty Seventh November, 1861.

My Dear Wills.

There are every signs of our beginning well here tonight with Copperfield. The Let is a good one for a first reading out of five; and our former experience was, that a great deal of the money taken, is taken at the doors here. There are fifty stalls taken, and the two shilling and one shilling tickets muster unusually strong. I want to do my very best with Copperfield here — am bent and set upon it, please God. (Copperfield tonight).

Gordon has proposed himself to show the people to their stalls! He is better, I think, than when he was last in town.

The enclosed MSS have been forwarded among my letters. I will write again tomorrow. Pray let me know directly, if Whitefriars falls.[†1]

Ever Faithfully
CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?28 NOVEMBER 1861]

Extract in F, VIII, vi, 691. Date: the day after his first reading at Edinburgh, 27 Nov.

We had in the hall exactly double what we had on the first night last time.[†2] The success of Copperfield was perfectly unexampled. Four great rounds of applause with a burst of cheering at the end, and every point taken in the finest manner.[†3]

To W. H. WILLS, 28 NOVEMBER 1861

MS Huntington Library. On mourning paper.

Waterloo Hotel, Edinburgh
Thursday Twenty Eighth November, 1861.

My Dear Wills. A brief report, for I was not well in the night and am out of sorts today.

We had in the Hall last night, exactly double what we had on the first night last time. Copperfield, beyond all possibility of doubt, a wonderful success here. The impression on the Audience, without precedent in the Reading chronicles. Four rounds when I went in — laughing and crying and thundering all the time — and a great burst of cheering at last. They lost nothing — not the minutest detail — and I almost think it would have been better to have done Copperfield every night.

I do not return the proofs of the No.[†4] as I doubt my ability to get through them today. I will try fresh air instead. Bulwer's proofs enclosed, are (he says) "not for press, but for final revision — to be sent to me and then returned for press."

Ever Faithfully
CD.

To JOHN BLACKWOOD,[†1] 29 NOVEMBER 1861

Extract from transcript by Walter Dexter of unknown catalogue at Dickens House; MS 1 ½ pp.; dated Waterloo Hotel, Edinburgh, 29 Nov 61; addressed John Blackwood.

I feel myself in need of perfect quiet and rest this morning, as I have to read twice tomorrow ... you said last night ... that you could not come over to Copperfield tomorrow evening, but if I can do anything for Mrs. Blackwood[†2] or any member of your family, pray let me know. I cannot endure the idea of any one belonging to you coming into the Hall through any other channel than myself.

To MISS MARY DICKENS, 29 NOVEMBER 1861

Extract in MDGH, II, 165.

Waterloo Hotel, Edinburgh,
Friday, 29 November 1861.

I think it is my turn to write to you, and I therefore send a brief despatch, like a telegram, to let you know that in a gale of wind and a fierce rain, last night, we turned away a thousand people. There was no getting into the hall, no getting near the hall, no stirring among the people, no getting out, no possibility of getting rid of them. And yet, in spite of all that, and of their being steaming wet, they never flagged for an instant, never made a complaint, and took up the trial upon their very shoulders, to the last word, in a triumphant roar.[†3]

The talk about "Copperfield" rings through the whole place. It is done again to-morrow night. To-morrow morning I read "Dombey." To-morrow morning is Grisi's "farewell" morning concert, and last night was her "farewell" evening concert. Neither she, nor Jenny Lind, nor anything, nor anybody seems to make the least effect on the draw of the readings.

I lunch with Blackwood to-day. He was at the reading last night; a capital audience. Young Blackwood[†4] has also called here. A very good young fellow, I think.

To AUSTEN HENRY LAYARD, 29 NOVEMBER 1861

MS British Library. On mourning paper.

Waterloo Hotel, Edinburgh
Friday Twenty Ninth November 1861.

My Dear Layard.

I am very unwilling and sorry to reply to your letter (forwarded to me here), that I cannot in any reason comply with Mr. Douglas's[†1] request.[†2] It is one the like of which is so often preferred to me, that my Secretary for the Readings is obliged to have a lithographed answer for the purpose. I stand engaged at this time to as much Reading as I can hope to get through between this and next summer. And if I could afford the time, and spirits, and the forgetfulness of claims (black-bordered like this sheet of paper)[†3] near home, which must precede my giving a Reading away, I still should have even in that case to make a selection from many urgent appeals of a public nature.

That is the plain truth. I state it, because I wish you to know that you should not send me a letter in vain if I could help it.

My Dear Layard | Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

A. H. Layard Esquire

To CHARLES BARBER [?NOVEMBER 1861]

MS Mrs Blanche Anding. Address: Mr. Barber | Gad's Hill Place. Date: Sunday was 22 Dec 61; in Oct Forster reported "the new bedrooms were built" (F, VIII, iii, 655); CD was probably writing in Nov.

I have arranged to be back at Gad's Hill on Sunday the 22nd. December. As soon as the work is all completed,[†4] and you have gone over it with the specification and are satisfied that it is all properly done, I will send you the money for the whole, on your writing to me.

Address me, care of W. H. Wills Esqre. Office of All The Year Round, Wellington Street,[†5] Strand, London, W. C. And write outside the letter "Please forward directly".

Of course the mending and colouring of the different ceilings, is additional work, not included in the specification. Also, the glass and iron verandah, the partition at the top of the staircase, and perhaps one or two other trifling jobs.

December

To MRS HENRY AUSTIN, 1 DECEMBER 1861*

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

Waterloo Hotel, Edinburgh
Sunday First December, 1861.

My Dear Letitia.

I don't like the notion of the new street, and I don't like the notion of a house with anything "dampish" in it.

Of the two things, if the Lodging you were told of will answer the purpose, I recommend that. Never mind going for a time without a Lodger or without carrying that notion into effect. It will give you pause for consideration and rest.

I write very hastily, being very tired; but of course I have considered your letter well.

As to the Readings, their popularity here is quite indescribable. So is the intelligence and quickness with which they are received. I sent you a newspaper — but I found last night that it had not gone. In the general whirlwind of business, a whole bundle, directed, lay in my Dressing Room at the Hall where I read, last night.

Ever affectionately
CD.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 1 DECEMBER 1861

Mention in N, III, 263; dated Edinburgh, 1 Dec 61.

To W. H. WILLS, 1 DECEMBER 1861

MS Huntington Library. On mourning paper.

Waterloo Hotel, Edinburgh
Sunday First December 1861.

My Dear Wills.

Blazes of triumph! Immense turn-away. Cram yesterday morning (almost unprecedented in the morning), and general Go of Readings really indescribable.

They write from Glasgow this morning for "more Tickets".

In your last, when you write of Mrs. Linton,[†1] you say nothing of the book on the American Union in Morley's hands.[†2] I hope and trust his article will be ready for the next No. made up.[†1] There will not be the least objection to having 2 American papers in it.

I am rather tired. For I read twice yesterday and took unusual pains.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

[†a]B and E not gone yet? How slow they are![†a]

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 3 DECEMBER 1861

Extract in MDGH, II, 165-7.

Carrick's Royal Hotel, Glasgow, Tuesday, Dec. 3rd, 1861.

I send you by this post another Scotsman. From a paragraph in it, a letter, and an advertisement,[†2] you may be able to form some dim guess of the scene at Edinburgh last night. Such a pouring of hundreds into a place already full to the throat, such indescribable confusion, such a rending and tearing of dresses, and yet such a scene of good humour on the whole. I never saw the faintest approach to it. While I addressed the crowd in the room, Gordon addressed the crowd in the street. Fifty frantic men got up in all parts of the hall and addressed me all at once. Other frantic men made speeches to the walls. The whole Blackwood family were borne in on the top of a wave, and landed with their faces against the front of the platform. I read with the platform crammed with people. I got them to lie down upon it, and it was like some impossible tableau or gigantic picnic; one pretty girl in full dress lying on her side all night, holding on to one of the legs of my table. It was the most extraordinary sight. And yet from the moment I began to the moment of my leaving off, they never missed a point, and they ended with a burst of cheers.

The confusion was decidedly owing to the local agents. But I think it may have been a little heightened by Headland's way of sending them the tickets to sell in the first instance.

Now, as I must read again in Edinburgh on Saturday night, your travelling arrangements are affected. So observe carefully (you and Mamie) all that I am going to say. It appears to me that the best course will be for you to come to Edinburgh on Saturday; taking the fast train from the Great Northern station at nine in the morning. This would bring you to the Waterloo at Edinburgh, at about nine or so at night, and I should be home at ten. We could then have a quiet Sunday in Edinburgh, and go over to Carlisle on the Monday morning.

The expenditure of lungs and spirits was (as you may suppose) rather great last night, and to sleep well was out of the question; I am therefore rather fagged to-day. And as the hall in which I read to-night is a large one, I must make my letter a short one.

My people were torn to ribbons last night. They have not a hat among them, and scarcely a coat.

Give my love to Mamie. To her question, "Will there be war with America?" I answer, "Yes;" I fear the North to be utterly mad, and war to be unavoidable.

To JAMES E. STREET,[†1] 3 DECEMBER 1861*

MS (pro forma letter) Old Curiosity Shop, Kingsway. Address: James E. Street Esqr. | 24 Johnson St | Smedley St | Manchester.[†2]

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
December 3rd. 1861

Mr. Charles Dickens begs to thank the writer of the paper entitled "The Philosophy of a Besom" for having done him the favor to offer it as a contribution to these pages. He much regrets, however, that it is not suited to the requirements of "All the Year Round"

The Manuscript will be returned under cover, if applied for as above.

To W. H. WILLS, 3 DECEMBER 1861

MS Huntington Library. On mourning paper.

Carrick's Royal Hotel, Glasgow
Tuesday Third December, 1861.

My Dear Wills. From a paragraph, a letter, and an advertisement, in a "Scotsman" I send you with this, you may form some dim guess at the scene we had in Edinburgh last night. I think I may say that I never saw a crowd before.

As I was quietly dressing, I heard the people (when the doors were opened) come in with a most unusual crash; and I was very much struck by the place's obviously filling to the throat within five minutes. But I thought no more of it, dressed placidly, and went in at the usual time.[†3] I then found that there was a tearing mad crowd in all the passages and in the street, and that they were forcing a great turbid stream of people into the already crammed hall. The moment I appeared, 50 frantic men addressed me at once, and 50 other frantic men got upon ledges and cornices, and tried to find private audiences of their own. Meantime the crowd outside, still forced the turbid stream in, and I began to have some general idea that the platform would be driven through the wall behind it, and the wall into the street. You know that your Respected Chief has a spice of coolness in him, and is not altogether unaccustomed to public speaking. Without the exercise of the two qualities, I think we should all have been there now. But when the uproarious spirits (who, as we strongly suspect, didn't pay at all) saw that it was quite impossible to disturb me, they gave in, and there was a dead silence. Then I told them, of course in the best way I could think of, that I was heartily sorry, but that this was the fault of their own townsman †a[It was decidedly the fault of Woods people,†1 with maybe a trifle of preliminary assistance from Headland];†a that I would do anything to set it right; that I would at once adjourn to the Music Hall, if they thought it best; or that I would alter my arrangements, and come back, and read to all Edinburgh if they would. †b[Meantime Gordon, if you please, is softening the crowd outside, and dim reverberations of his stentorian roars are audible].†b At this there is great cheering, and they cry "Go on Mr. Dickens. Everybody will be quiet now." Uproarious spirit exclaims, "We won't be quiet. We won't let the reading be heard. We're ill treated." Respected Chief says, "there's plenty of time, and you may rely upon it that the reading is in no danger of being heard until we are agreed." Thereupon good humouredly shuts up book. Laugh turned against uproarious spirit, and uproarious spirit shouldered out. Respected Chief prepares, amidst calm, to begin, when Gentleman (with full dressed lady torn to ribbons, on his arm) cries out: "Mr. Dickens!" — "Sir." — "Couldn't some people, at all events ladies, be accommodated on your platform." — "Most certainly." Loud cheering. "Which way can they come to the platform, Mr. Dickens?" — "Round here to my left." In a minute the platform was crowded. Everybody who came up, laughed, and said it was nothing when I told them in a low voice how sorry I was; but the moment they were there, the sides began to roar, because they couldn't see! At least half the people were ladies, and I then proposed to them to sit down or lie down. Instantly they all dropped into recumbent groups, with Respected Chief standing up in the centre. I don't know what it looked like most — a battle field — an impossible tableau — a gigantic pic nic. There was one very pretty girl in full dress lying down on her side all night, and holding on to one leg of my table. So I read Nickleby and the Trial. From the beginning to the end they didn't lose one point, and they ended with a great burst of cheering.

Very glad to hear that Morley's American article is done. Rather fagged to day, but not very. So no more at present.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

Will you reply to enclosed letter
200 Stalls let here for tonight

To MRS HENRY AUSTIN, 4 DECEMBER 1861*

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

Carrick's Royal Hotel, Glasgow
Wednesday Fourth December, 1861

My Dear Letitia.

The Lodging is certainly too dear, and the objection is very strong as to the impossibility of making out how responsible the people may be.

I do not know the situation of this house of Helen's finding, by name; but it would seem to be a good house and cheap. Also I think the Hampstead direction is very healthy, and on the whole much liked by the class of people you would wish to Let to.

But perhaps while I write, Mr. Allom[†1] may have found you something else, in the neighbourhood you like better.

With this, you will have a Newspaper from here. I had fourteen hundred people in the Hall here last night, and the crowd has been so immense in Edinburgh that I am obliged to go all the way back there next Saturday.[†2]

Ever affectionately

CD.

P. S. The Memorial business to Ld. Palmerston is now all done, and we wait his answer.

To JOHN LEECH, 4 DECEMBER 1861

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: John Leech Esquire | 32 Brunswick Square | W.C. On mourning paper.

Carrick's Royal Hotel, Glasgow
Wednesday Fourth December, 1861.

My Dear Leech.

I am away reading, and have received your letter here to day.

Charley Collins wrote the unreported speech,[†3] and I am heartily glad you are pleased with it.[†4]

My kindest regard to Mrs. Leech.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Leech Esquire

Getting on with the pictures,[†5] I hope?

To MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL, 5 DECEMBER 1861

Extract from transcript by Winifred A. Myers from Myers catalogue No. 386. On mourning paper.

Will you be so good as to send to Eeles a complete set of the original Library Edition of my books together with a copy of Great Expectations & instruct him to half bind the whole neatly in red according to my usual pattern (but not gilt edges!) and requesting them to be sent to Charles Dickens Gordon,[†1] Edinburgh.

To W. H. WILLS, 6 DECEMBER, 1861

MS Huntington Library. On mourning paper.

Carrick's Royal, Glasgow
Friday Sixth December 1861

My Dear Wills.

I enclose three letters. On two I have endorsed the kind of reply I want sent. The third is in your way and speaks for itself.

It rained last night — and came on at 6 o'Clock too — sheets of water. Under which adverse circumstances you will be concerned to hear that we had only one thousand eight hundred and sixteen persons in the Hall, and that the night's receipts were only one hundred and eighty six pounds, nine shillings!!![†2]

Ever Faithfully
CD.

To W. H. WILLS, 8 DECEMBER 1861

MS Huntington Library. On mourning paper.

Waterloo Hotel, Edinburgh
Sunday Eighth December, 1861.

My Dear Wills.

Before I can answer or consider Bulwer's letter that you enclosed me this morning, I must have proofs of the rest of his story. Will you send them on to me when ready?

Glasgow finished nobly, and last night here was signally successful and positively splendid.[†3]

Mary and Georgina arrived punctual to the minute, and send you their kindest regard.

Will you give my small Admiral, on his personal application, one Sovereign? I have told him to come to you for that recognition of his meritorious services.

Ever Faithfully
CD.

To ROBERT CHAMBERS,[†1] [?9 DECEMBER 1861]

Mention in To Wills, 13 Dec 61. Date: probably written in or soon after leaving Edinburgh.

Saying how charmed he had been with Chambers's Traditions of Edinburgh,[†2] which he had read in Edinburgh.

To MRS HENRY AUSTIN, 10 DECEMBER 1861*

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

Breach's County Hotel, Carlisle.
Tuesday Tenth December, 1861.

My Dear Letitia.

Although the warehousing of the Furniture and the taking of a furnished Lodging, are evidently objectionable in point of expence, still I hold it less objectionable than your being hastily fixed with a house that might not suit you and might afterwards prove a terrible incumbrance. Therefore I would take a furnished lodging — say, by the month. On the turn of Xmas, more houses will be to let, you yourself will be fitter for business and more easy, and you will not have committed yourself to any but a very temporary bargain.

If you have that confusion in the head, I would suspend the taking of the Wormwood[†3] for a time. It is very difficult to take any tonic when the head is at all disordered.

The Readings have been most triumphantly successful in Scotland. I send you a paper from this place by this same post.[†4]

Ever affectionately
CD.

To DR J. SHERIDAN MUSPRATT,[†1] 10 DECEMBER 1861*

MS Liverpool Public Libraries.

Breach's County Hotel Carlisle
Tuesday Tenth December, 1861.

My Dear Dr. Muspratt.

Your letter has been forwarded to me at this place, as I come through it slowly on my way to Liverpool from Scotland.

I am much indebted to Mrs. Muspratt[†2] and you for your proffered hospitality, but must reluctantly decline it, as I have already declined similar invitations from other friends at Liverpool. When I am away reading, I am not my own master (so pressing are the demands on my time and attention), and never visit anywhere. Moreover, if I were not at an Hotel and always as it were among the business-people whom I carry with me, everything would go wrong.

My eldest daughter and her Aunt have joined me here, and beg to unite in kind regard

Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

To CLARKSON STANFIELD, 10 DECEMBER 1861*

MS University of California, Los Angeles. On mourning paper.

Carlisle, Tuesday Tenth December, 1861.

My Dear Stanny

As I told you I should write to report myself, behold the redemption of my promise.

Ever since we parted at Brighton, the same scene has been repeated over and over and over again. The success of the Readings at Edinburgh and Glasgow particularly, has been quite astounding. I am now slowly working my way to Liverpool, and thence shall get home for a few days at Christmas. Then comes a short supplementary trip, and I shall have finished. Very joyful I shall be to get home again and be at rest.

Enclosed I send you the list of my dates and places.[†3] You will see when I am going to Cheltenham, and shall stay at Macready's. Lord! If you could manage to join me there, what enormous delight it would give him, and what pleasure it would give to all of us Three to be together again! I purpose joining him on the day before my Cheltenham reading; that is to say, on Thursday the 2nd. of January. He writes in great spirits at the prospect, and I wish you would let me tell him you would come too.

Rain rain rain in these parts, and nothing but rain — except sleet.

Don't go to the Drury Lane Pantomime[†1] till I come back in January. We can go so snugly from the office, and fix our critical eye on Beverley.[†2]

With kind regard to Mrs. Stanfield,[†3] whose fresh looks at Brighton were the highest tribute to the place,

Believe me ever | Affectionately Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Clarkson Stanfield Esquire

To DR ROBERT ELLIOT,[†4] [11 DECEMBER 1861]

Summary in Cumberland Paquet, 17 Dec 1861. Date: received by Elliot on 11 Dec (Cumberland Paquet, above); probably written same day.

Expressing his great interest in such institutions,[†5] but regretting his inability on the present occasion to make any visits whatever, in consequence of his time being fully occupied in literary labours.

To W. H. WILLS, 11 DECEMBER 1861

MS Huntington Library. On mourning paper.

Carlisle, Wednesday Eleventh December, 1861.

My Dear Wills.

No to the Poem. There is no good in it; it is conceited and morbid; directly counter to the spirit of the Xmas No. The man who talks of himself as "the poet", is really not to be endured in this age — especially when he isn't one.

I don't like Fitzgerald[†6] either. Exactly for the reason which has led to our leaving Xmas alone in the Xmas No. we should avoid it — if we can — in the regular No. I put in that saving clause, because you may have nothing else by you. But I don't like it, and would rather have something else.[†7]

It is scarcely possible to make less of Mr. Spence's[†8] book,[†9] than Morley has done.[†10]

Costello very amusing.[†1] Lever extremely dangerous in places, I have taken out the most dangerous — and really unfair — bits. Look to it again in the Revise.[†2]

Carlisle has done its best, and crammed its room (a sort of cellar, and very mouldy) twice. One could not have expected it in this place, but it is indisputable that they took Copperfield last night, as well as the Edinburgh people.[†3]

We go on to Lancaster at 1 today.

Kindest regard

Ever Faithfully

CD.

The Proofs[†4] returned separately.

To MRS DANIEL,[†5] 12 DECEMBER 1861

Summary in Charles Retz catalogue, No. 17. MS (3rd person) 1 p.; dated office of AYR, 12 Dec 61; addressed Mrs Daniel.

Regretting that he cannot comply with the request to dramatize the Christmas number of All the Year Round.

To W. H. WILLS, 12 DECEMBER 1861*

MS Huntington Library. On mourning paper.

King's Arms and Royal Hotel, Lancaster
Thursday Twelfth December, 1861.

My Dear Wills

Everything looks well here[†6] — except the weather: which is persistently, savagely, gloomily, drippingly, hopelessly, wet.

Poole writes me that he wants some more forms of Proof of Life.[†1] Will you have some got for him, and sent to him addressed as under.

Ever Faithfully
CD.

à Monsieur John Poole
Hotel de Mayence
Rue St. Honoré 354
Paris

To W. H. WILLS, 13 DECEMBER 1861

MS Huntington Library. On mourning paper.

Victoria Hotel, Preston
Friday Thirteenth December | 1861.

My Dear Wills

The news of the Xmas No. is indeed Glorious, and nothing can look brighter or better than the prospects of the Illustrious Publication.

Both Carlisle and Lancaster have come out admirably, though I doubted both, as you did. But, unlike you, I always doubted this place. I do so still. We have a hundred stalls let, but it is a poor place at the best (you remember?)[†2] and the Mills are working half-time, and trade is very bad.[†3] The expences however will be a mere nothing. The accounts from Manchester for tomorrow, and from Liverpool for the Readings generally, are very cheering in deed.

The young lady who sells the papers at the Station is just the same as ever. Has orders for tonight, and is coming "with a person". — "The person?" said I. — "Never you mind", said she.

I was so charmed with Robert Chambers's Traditions of Edinburgh (which I read in Edinburgh), that I was obliged to write to him and say so.

[†a]Why don't you telegraph Bradbury and Evans's failure? What are you up to?[†a]

Kindest regard from the Ladies | Ever Faithfully

CD.

To W. H. WILLS, [15 DECEMBER 1861]

Telegram. Mention in next. Date: sent same day.

To W. H. WILLS, 15 DECEMBER 1861

MS Huntington Library. On mourning paper.

Adelphi Hotel, Liverpool
Sunday Fifteenth December, 1861.

My Dear Wills

I sent you a Telegram today, and I write before the answer has come to hand.

I have been very doubtful what to do here. We have a great Let for tomorrow night. The Mayor recommends closing tomorrow, and going on on Tuesday and Wednesday; so does the Town Clerk; so do the Agents.[†1] But I have a misgiving that they hardly understand what the public general sympathy with the Queen will be.[†2] Further, I feel personally that the Queen has always been very considerate and gracious to me, and I would on no account do anything that might seem unfeeling or disrespectful. I shall attach great weight, in this state of indecision, to your Telegram.[†3]

A capital audience at Preston. Not a capacious room, but full. Great appreciation.[†4]

The scene at Manchester last night was really magnificent. I had had the platform carried forward to our Frozen Deep point,[†5] and my table and screen built in with a Proscenium and room Scenery. When I went in (there was a very fine hall), they applauded in the most tremendous manner; and the extent to which they were taken aback and taken by storm, by Copperfield, was really a thing to see. It was a most signal and remarkable success.[†6]

The Post closes early here on a Sunday, and I shall close this also, without further reference to "a message from the" — W.H.W. — being probably on the road.

Radley[†1] is ill, and supposed to be fast declining, poor fellow.[†2] This House is crammed — The assizes on — And Troops perpetually embarking for Canada,[†3] and their officers passing through the Hotel.

Kindest regard

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To CAPT. J. S. MAYSON,[†4] 16 DECEMBER 1861*

MS University of Texas, Austin. On mourning paper.

Liverpool, Monday Sixteenth December 1861.

Sir.

In reply to the communication you have done me the honor to forward to me from the officers of the Manchester Press Company of Volunteers, and to the letter with which you have accompanied it, I beg to express my regret that it is not in any reason possible for me to comply with the request preferred in those documents. You will the better understand my inability to do so, when I assure you that I receive similar communications by scores upon scores, and that I can very rarely do so much as answer them under my own hand, however briefly.

I am proud to be enrolled an Honorary Member of the Third Manchester Rifles, and I accept the distinction with thanks.

I have the honor to be | Sir | Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

Captain Mayson
5th. (Press) Company | Third Manchester Rifles

To JOHN FORSTER, [?17-18 DECEMBER 1861]

Extract in F, VIII, vi, 692. Date: probably written after his return to London, with other letters, 17-18 Dec.

Copperfield in the Free Trade Hall last Saturday was really a grand scene.[†1]

To MRS HENRY AUSTIN, 18 DECEMBER 1861*

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

All The Year Round Office
Eighteenth December, 1861.

My Dear Letitia

I left Liverpool, confusedly and hastily: having postponed my readings there, because of the Prince's death.

Your letter has reached me here this morning. I answer it very hurriedly, being in a great accumulation of business, and having had to get my Sailor-boy off to sea at a minute's notice. He is appointed to the Orlando[†2] (the best ship in the Service), and is ordered to America.

Enclosed is a cheque for £10.[†3] You could not do better than take the lodging you mention. On the other side is the receipt for Mr. Hemsley, which will require Silva's signature. He may pay the rent out of the money, provided that he does not pay more than is due.

I shall be here tomorrow.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To T. HOLMES,[†4] 18 DECEMBER 1861

Summary in Phillips catalogue, June 1983; MS 1 p.; dated Office of All the Year Round, 18 Dec 61; addressed T. Holmes Esq.

My Dear Holmes.
Regrets just missing him. Proposes meeting next day. Hopes there is no news to disturb the peace of poor Arthur.[†5]

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 18 DECEMBER 1861

MS Lytton Papers. On mourning paper.

All the Year Round Office
Wednesdy Eighteenth December 1861.

My Dear Bulwer Lytton

I have been so distracted between Reading, travelling, putting off reading because of the Prince's death, coming home unexpectedly, and getting my Sailor-boy off to sea (in consequence of his appointment [†a]at half an hour's notice[†a] to the Orlando, the best ship going), that I have not had a moment in which to write to you. Even now, I write with the greatest press upon me, meaning to write in detail in a day or two.

But I have read, at all events, though not written. And I say, most masterly and most admirable! It is impossible to lay the sheets down without finishing them. I showed them to Georgina and Mary, and they read and read and never stirred until they had read all. There cannot be a doubt of the beauty, power, and artistic excellence of the whole.

I counsel you most strongly, NOT[†1] to append the proposed dialogue between Fenwick and Faber,[†2] and NOT[†1] to enter upon any explanation beyond the title page and the motto, unless it be in some very brief preface. Decidedly I would not help the reader, if it were only for the reason that that anticipates his being in need of help, and his feeling objections and difficulties that require solution. Let the book explain itself.[†3] It speaks for itself with a noble eloquence.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To THOMAS BAYLIS, 19 DECEMBER 1861

MS British Library. On mourning paper

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Nineteenth December, 1861.

My Dear Mr. Baylis

I have been away for a month, reading, and I write this present missive up to the chin in a raging sea of correspondence.

Once at this time of the year, we had an elaborate account in Household Words of the business necessary to the getting up of a Pantomime.[†1] If your article should not repeat that one, the subject is always good.[†2] The Parks too, and public grounds in general, are a promising theme.[†3]

My Ladies beg me to say with their compliments to Mrs. Baylis,[†4] that they are not likely to be in town until February (our house is full to the throat at this time of year), but that they will make a personal report of themselves when they do come. I shall probably change houses for three months or so, with a friend at Kensington.[†5]

When you come to Gad's Hill in the summer,[†6] you will scarcely know it again. I have improved it in many respects since you were there.[†7]

Believe me always | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Baylis Esquire

To WILLIAM HAZLITT,[†8] 19 DECEMBER 1861

Text from N, III, 269.

Gad's Hill Place
Thursday Nineteenth December 1861

Dear Mr. Hazlitt,

I have not the honor to be personally acquainted with the gentleman who appoints the Under Librarian of the House of Lords. If I were, I should not hesitate to address him on your behalf, and to bear my testimony to your literary [acquirements],[†9] to your ability and industry, and to your fitness for that office. You are at perfect liberty, however, to make any reference to me, if you think it may serve you in the least.[†10]

Faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To THE REV. STEPHEN ROOSE HUGHES, 19 DECEMBER 1861

MS Mrs A. K. Frazer. Address: The Rev. Stephen R. Hughes | Llanallgo Rectory | Pentralth | Anglesey. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Nineteenth December 1861.

My Dear Sir

I have been away for a month, and am but now in receipt of your letter and the box of excellent herrings.[†1] Accept my cordial thanks, and the assurance that there is no fear of my ever failing to bear you in mind, or to bear testimony to what I saw on a memorable occasion of the work of your hands.[†2]

With kind Christmas regard to all your house, Believe me My Dear Sir
Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Rev. Stephen R Hughes.

To CHARLES KENT, 19 DECEMBER 1861*

MS John F. Fleming, Inc. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Nineteenth December, 1861.

My Dear Kent.

I have been away for a month, reading, and am only now in the receipt of your letter. The copy of the Sun that you sent me, I did receive, and derived the highest gratification from;[†3] — such gratification as you meant to give me, and I cannot say more for it when I heartily thank you.

If I can serve your book[†4] in any way, of course I will do it and joyfully.

With all good Christmas feeling and regard, Believe me always
Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. Charles Kent Esquire

To HENRY MORLEY, 19 DECEMBER 1861

MS Lieut Commander Vic Zoschak. On mourning paper.

Office A. Y. R.
Thursday Nineteenth December | 1861.

My Dear Morley.

The enclosed letter and newspaper scraps are from a Doctor at Carlisle[†1] — an useful and estimable man, though of 40,000 Bore power. His principle is an excellent one, and his soup kitchen (to which I subscribed when in Carlisle last week) admirable. If you should see your way to a short article on the subject, will you write one?[†2]

Ever Faithfully
CD.

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 20 DECEMBER 1861

MS Lytton Papers. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Twentieth December 1861.

My Dear Bulwer Lytton

This is only a word to say that I have received your last note, and that I have written to Wills to send you Robert's pieces.

Also, that I will very attentively reconsider the explanation-point, on the ground you put, and will discuss the question very carefully with Forster.[†3] I have no doubt, and do not think I shall have any doubt, that if any thing be done it must be done as a part of the book — must involve the resumption and disposal of somebody — must, in short, have that connexion with the story which will force the reader of the story also to read what you so desire to be read. Otherwise it will not be read by one person in fifty — not by one in a hundred. Could Mrs. Poyntz as the representative of "the world" be wrought into it? I fancy I see a loophole of light in that direction.[†4]

I shall be here until the end of Christmas week.

Ever affectionately Yours
CD.

To W. H. WILLS, 20 DECEMBER 1861*

MS Huntington Library. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Night Twentieth December | 1861.

My Dear Wills.

In this packet are some letters that came on to me from the office. Also some short poems of Robert Lytton's[†1] — all good, but "Melancholia",[†2] and "Fair Urience with the yellow hair"[†3] particularly good.

Bulwer "wants the Nos. of A. Y. R. that contain the pieces by Robert".[†4] Will you send him, to Ventnor, his son's contributions?

As to Lever's Fellow Traveller's story, I think the plain reply is, that as Bulwer is on the supernatural and as we have otherwise been on that theme lately, I think this story would not have a fair chance and would appear at a great disadvantage.[†5]

Have you made any mistake in sending me the other MS by Lever also returned herewith? It begins with chapter 2, and consists of chapters 2 and 3.[†6] I don't read it, but return it unread, because I don't see the use of beginning in the middle.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To THE HON. ROBERT LYTTON, 23 DECEMBER 1861*

MS Lytton Papers([aa]) and Auckland Public Library([bb]). On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Twenty Third December, 1861.

[a]My Dear Robert Lytton.

I have received the poems, read them all, and sent them at once to the Printer. They shall appear without delay, and are heartily welcome. The Pope[†1] I have not yet been able to make room for, by reason of his great length in reference to our space.[a]

[b]The idea of the Xmas No. was suggested to me by the contemplation of your Stevenage Hermit: of whom I heard much more than he deserved, when I was last at Knebworth, and whom I went to see.[†2] My parts of the No. you have picked out accurately.[†3] A very pretty little story about "Evening Shades"[†4] is done by Mr. Charles Collins, Wilkie's brother; and an exceedingly droll story "Picking up Waifs at Sea",[†5] is done by Wilkie himself.[†6] The rest by other contributors.[†7b]

[a]My son married with my knowledge and consent, because I very well knew that he couldn't help it. The name the young lady has changed for mine, is odious to me; and when I have said that, I have said all that need be said.[†8]

Let me heartily return all your good feeling and good wishes, and send you my cordial Christmas regard. It will not lose its freshness[a] [†c][ ][†c] [b]will not be (I hope) out of season when it comes to hand — and heart.

Faithfully Yours Ever
CHARLES DICKENS[b]

Robert Lytton Esquire

To THOMAS ADOLPHUS TROLLOPE, 23 DECEMBER 1861*

MS Johns Hopkins University. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Twenty Third December, 1861.

My Dear Trollope.

This is merely to say that the Xmas No. was intended as a conveyance of all friendly greetings, in season and out of season. As to its lesson[†1] — you need it about as little as any man I know, for all your study and seclusion conduce to the general good and disseminate truths that men cannot too earnestly take to heart.

Yes. A capital story that of "the two sea-born babbies", and wonderfully droll, I think! I may say so without blushing, for it is not by me. It was done by Wilkie Collins.[†2]

Speculation is rife here, as to what the Americans will do. The assumption seems to me quite unavoidable, that they will of course do the wrong and the insane thing. Bedlamites as they are in boasting, profoundly ignorant of their own condition and of the comparative strength and merits of the States, dragged at the chariot wheels of such a Press, and — worse than all — liking it all, and arrogantly preferring it to better things, what is to be expected of them! I am sick of hearing people rely on their "common sense". As if, as a country, they possessed such an article!

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To E. A. BOWRING, [24 DECEMBER 1861]

Mention in To Mrs Austin, 24 Dec 61. Date: clearly same day as that letter.

Sending a receipt on Mrs Austin's behalf.

To EDWARD DE GEX, [24 DECEMBER 1861]

Mention in next. Date: no doubt written same day as next.

To MRS HENRY AUSTIN, 24 DECEMBER 1861*

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Twenty Fourth December, 1861.

My Dear Letitia

I enclose a new receipt for Mr. Hemsley. †[a]No I dont. — I see it should go to Mr. Bowring, and have sent it to him.†[a] I have also written to De Gex, telling him that Silva desires to renounce, and that I am ready to be re-sworn,†[1] either on Friday or Saturday morning next. I hope and trust you are getting better in health.

Ever affectionately
CD.

To MRS HENRY AUSTIN, 24 DECEMBER 1861*

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Twenty Fourth December, 1861.

My Dear Letitia

Since I wrote to you this morning, I have received the enclosed from De Gex. Will you communicate with Mrs. Silva and try to get Mr. Silva to go there (De Gex's office) at 11 on Friday.†[2]

Ever affectionately
CD.

To THOMAS BEARD, 26 DECEMBER 1861

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Place | Maida Hill | London | W. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Twenty Sixth December, 1861.

My Dear Beard

This is merely to return your Christmas greetings with hearty cordiality, — and to say that I heard of only one man in Edinburgh (when I was there a fortnight ago) who had any of that whiskey. He was understood to go in fear of his life! so horribly was he envied, and so dogged in all his comings and goings.

I am away again on Monday, but begin to see Land now. As to the new Readings, I rather think myself that Copperfield is A 1. But of this, please God, you shall judge at St. James's Hall in March. Their success has been prodigious.

Sydney got appointed to the Orlando (a ship that every one in the service seemed to be trying for), and has sailed for Halifax. He looked very very small when he went away with a chest in which he could easily have stowed himself and a wife and family of his own proportions.

On the 20th. of February I am going to change houses until the 1st. of June with a friend at Kensington. Further particulars shall be duly announced.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To [?ARTHUR HELPS],[†1] 26 DECEMBER 1861*

MS Gilbert Foyle. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Twenty Sixth December, 1861.

My Dear [Helps]

I am sure you know how delighted I have been to get your letter,[†2] and what an unspeakable pleasure it is to me to be so remembered by such a man as you. At least I can say for myself in reply, that no man could hold the great privilege of awakening the interest you describe, who could have a higher and more grateful sense of its worth than I have.

About the 20th. of February we are going to change houses for three months with a friend at Kensington Gore. Due report shall be made to Mrs. [Helps],[†3] and I pledge myself to the Thoms[†4] and you, please God, for a sunny holiday on a day in the last week of May.

As Mrs. [Helps] has been looking at David lately, I should very much like her to hear a Reading of him at St. James's Hall in March. My business-man will duly send you some tickets for it, and if they should fall on an inconvenient night, it will be very easy for him to try again.

With the best wishes of this good time, Believe me alway My Dear [Helps]

Cordially Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 26 DECEMBER 1861

MS Lytton Papers. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Twenty Sixth[†1] December, 1861.

My Dear Bulwer Lytton.

I have gone through the proofs, and I have gone over your enclosed letter[†2] several times, and I have discussed the whole question with Forster.

Finally, there seems to me no such good way of getting the explanation in, as at Mrs. Poyntz's tea table, in the manner you propose.[†3] I think the great mass of your readers would be sure to read it, and I think they would be almost as sure not to read a Preface about the book (even if there were not the objection to a Preface you point out: i.e. its anticipation of the book), or any thing in the nature of an essay or treatise about the book.[†4]

But then I would soften the scene where Nature and Death are,[†5] for this reason — because as it stands, it seems to me to be more laboriously symbolical than the other parts of the book, and consequently to be not quite in keeping with them.[†6] Whereas, having the talk at Mrs. Poyntz's tea table, which would comprehend that part as well as the other parts, I think it might fall back into the same general tone and degree of relief.

Ever affecy.
CD.

To AUGUSTUS TRACEY,[†1] 26 DECEMBER 1861*

MS University of Texas, Austin. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Twenty Sixth December 1861.

My Dear Tracey

Sir Richard Bromley let me know of the Telegram's being sent to the Orlando, and consequently I knew that she was standing out to sea, before she lost sight of Plymouth. I had previously had a line from your large brother officer,[†2] informing me with immense under-scoring of the words, that he liked his ship very much indeed.

I expect to be in Plymouth on Sunday night, though I don't as yet know anything about trains or times. By "Sunday night", I mean Sunday the 3rd. of January. On the two previous days I am going to stay with Macready at Cheltenham. I come to Plymouth in fulfilment of an arrangement made by poor dear Arthur, who always had an odd desire that I should go back there.[†3]

My present man of business is a very honest fellow, but what we shipmates call a dull sailor. He had been with me in London under Arthur, and was the best man I could lay my hand on when I lost the man who is never to be replaced.

Ever Most Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS MARY BOYLE, 28 DECEMBER 1861†

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT,
Saturday Twenty Eighth December, 1861.

My Dear Mary

I send you a line in answer to your welcome letter, to assure you that I have read it with the greatest interest and pleasure, and that I am always (though I need not say so) your attached and affectionate, and that I send you all the loving wishes of the time of year.

Also to Sairey,[†4] and Mrs. S,[†5] and all the S's, I do likewise.

On Monday (as you know) I am away again. The success of this course of Readings has been quite tremendous; but I am not sorry to see Land and a little rest before me, albeit these are great experiences of the public heart.

The little Admiral has gone towards America in the Orlando; supposed to be one of the foremost ships in the service, and the best found, best manned, and best officered, that ever sailed from England. He went away much gamer than any Giant, attended by a chest in which he could easily have stowed himself and a wife and family of his own proportions.

Ever and always Your affectionate
JOE.

I am going to let off Copperfield in London next March.

To THOMAS HEADLAND, 28 DECEMBER 1861

Extract in Phillips catalogue, June 1994; MS 1 p.; dated Office of AYR, 28 Dec 61; addressed Headland.

Asking him to add to the telegram to Birmingham the words Please send 4 stalls for each night, to Mr. Rofe,[†1] Paradise Street, with Mr. D's compliments; adding that the letter has gone to Hullah and that he will get his copy on Monday.

To CHARLES LEVER, 28 DECEMBER 1861

MS Widener Collection, Harvard. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Twenty Eighth December, 1861.

My Dear Lever.

Most assuredly I am perfectly free to act in the matter at issue between you and the Chapmans;[†2] and most assuredly I will do so with the best discretion I can exercise, if you will put me in possession of the merits of the case.[†3] Once for all, be certain that I am more than ready and willing to accept the trust you propose to confide to me.

I have been reading in various parts of England and Scotland for six or seven weeks, and go away again on Monday for a fortnight only. Any letter you may address to me at the office while I am away, "to be forwarded", will be at once sent on. As soon as I know what I have to do, I will write to the Chapmans and make an appointment for a personal interview.

Always Believe me | Cordially Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Lever Esqre.

To W. C. MACREADY, 28 DECEMBER 1861*

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Twenty Eighth December, 1861.

My Dearest Macready

Stunned by Bradshaw, I cannot as yet make out at what time I can get to Cheltenham from Leamington. If I can work out this problem at or after Birmingham (where I shall be on Monday and Tuesday), I will write you a more explicit line. Generally, my intention is, to leave Leamington as soon as possible after breakfast, and get to Cheltenham as quickly as I can.

With kindest regard
Ever affectionately
CD.

To [J. P. HULLAH], 30 DECEMBER 1861*

Text from E. Parsons catalogue (n.d.); MS 1 p.; dated Monday, 30 Dec 61; addressed "Dear Hillah" (clearly a misreading for "Hullah").

Dear [Hullah],

We think your let[ter][†1] very far from mending the Matt[er][†2]

[Faith]fully[†1] yours,
[CHARLES DICKENS][†3]

To THE REV. G. W. BRAMELD,[†4] [?1861]

Mention in Brameld to Forster, 5 Nov 1872 (MS University of California, Los Angeles). Date: after "many Editions" of Barnaby Rudge, according to Brameld; but perhaps after the Illustrated Library edn (Vol. I, Aug 61; Vol. II, Dec 61).

In answer to Brameld's letter pointing out two "curious mistakes" in Barnaby Rudge, CD admits that the interview between the blind Stagg, the Widow and Barnaby[†5] [Chs 45-6] should be in May, not June; in response to the criticism that the £155,000 (or £125,000) he names was a most inadequate estimate for the damage done by the Rioters[†6] [Ch. 73], he gives his views on such questions, being seemingly willing to reconsider the point.

To JAMES PAYN, 1861

Extract in James Payn, Some Literary Recollections, 1884, p. 196. Date: Payn moved from Edinburgh to London in 1861.

I have received your letter with mingled regret and pleasure. I am heartily sorry to have lost you as a fellow-workman,[†1] but heartily glad to have gained you as a friend ... I hope that you will both come and see us at Gadshill, and compare the Kentish hops and cherries with the Scottish peachings.

To THE REV. DAVID MACRAE,[†2] [1861]

Extract in David Macrae, Home and Abroad: Sketches and Gleanings, Glasgow, 1871 [1870], pp. 127-8. Date: 1861, according to Macrae, above, p. 127.

I have so strong an objection to mere professions of religion, and to the audacious interposition of vain and ignorant men between the sublime simplicity of the New Testament and the general human mind to which our Saviour addressed it, that I urge that objection as strongly and as positively as I can. In my experience, true practical Christianity has been very much obstructed by the conceit against which I protest.[†3] ... With a deep sense of my great responsibility always upon me when I exercise my art, one of my most constant and most earnest endeavours has been to exhibit in all my good people some faint reflections of the teachings of our great Master, and unostentatiously to lead the reader up to those teachings as the great source of all moral goodness. All my strongest illustrations are derived from the New Testament: all my social abuses are shown as departures from its spirit; all my good people are humble, charitable, faithful, and forgiving. Over and over again, I claim them in express words as disciples of the Founder of our religion; but I must admit that to a man (or woman) they all arise and wash their faces, and do not appear unto men to fast.[†4] Furthermore, I devised a new kind of book for Christmas years ago

(which has since been imitated all over England, France, and America), absolutely impossible, I think, to be separated from the exemplification of the Christian virtues and the inculcation of the Christian precepts. In every one of those books there is an express text preached on, and the text is always taken from the lips of Christ.[†1]

To THE REV. DAVID MACRAE, [1861]

Extract in David Macrae (see last), p. 128. Date: "a subsequent letter" to last, according to Macrae; also 1861, according to Forster (F, XI, III, 818*n*).

Your exposition of my feeling on the subject of our correspondence is correct, but it requires this addition: I hold our Saviour to be the model of all goodness, and I assume that, in a Christian country where the New Testament is accessible to all men, all goodness must be referred back to its influence. While I ask no man how he settles for himself questions of theology (on which it is easy for any number of men to say they are agreed, but very difficult for any two men to be really agreed), I should most certainly ask myself if I wronged any one, how that default was to be reconciled with the precepts of Christianity....

My reverence for the Divine Preacher of the Sermon on the Mount is not a feeling of today. I married very young, and had a large family of children. All of them, from the first to the last, have had a little version of the New Testament that I wrote for them,[†2] read to them long before they could read, and no young people can have had an earlier knowledge of, or interest in, that book. It is an inseparable part of their earliest remembrances.

To CHARLES READE, [1860-1]

Mention in Sotheby catalogue, Oct 1973; MS 1 p.; dated 1860-1; addressed Charles Reade.

Addenda

To [CHARLES KNIGHT],[†1] [?MARCH 1859 or 1861]*

MS (fragment) Private. Date: between 1859 and 1862 on handwritten; 1859 and 1861 are the only years with no mention of Knight's birthday (15 Mar), in CD's correspondence.

I wish you many happy returns of the day,[†2] and will drink to you in an express bumper.

Ever affecy Yours

CD.

To T. O. BARLOW, 29 JUNE 1861*

MS Mr Tom Thompson. Address: T. O. Barlow Esquire | Auburn Lodge | Victoria Road | Kensington | London | W.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Night, Twenty Ninth June | 1861

My Dear Sir

As you ask me for my feelings on the question of offering the dedication of the engraving to my friend Miss Coutts, I reply that my feeling is instinctively and strongly against it. The picture not being in her collection or in any way associated with her, I see no public reason for her being addressed on the subject. And I think private reasons are no reasons in such a case.

Thanking you cordially for your frank note, I am always

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

T. Oldham Barlow Esquire

Volume X

1862 – 1864

1862

January

To W. C. MACREADY,[†1] 1 JANUARY 1862*

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

Regent Hotel, Leamington
New Year's Day, 1862

My Dearest Macready

All the best and most affectionate and loving wishes of this day to you and all dear to you!

I have just time (before a Morning reading of Copperfield),[†2] to let you know that my Train is due at Cheltenham[†3] at 4 tomorrow afternoon.

Ever Most affectionately
CD.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 2 JANUARY 1862*

MS Yale University Library. Address: Miss Hogarth | Gad's Hill Place | Higham | by | Rochester. On mourning paper.

Leamington | Thursday Morning Second January 1862

My Dear Georgy

This is merely to say that I will write from Macready's. A double day yesterday[†4] and cross-Railway-travelling to day, press me unusually, and leave me not a moment. I have been doing extremely well, notwithstanding that Birmingham is in a very depressed state.[†5]

As to the Stairs, certainly have them done as you propose. I do not believe that one of the boys is so very foolish and untrustworthy as not to be sure to go up in the obvious and proper way. But if they cannot trust themselves to do so plain a thing, then let one of their washing jugs and basins be brought into the club room, after use in the morning, for their day's service; and let them not go up at all until they go to bed.

Barber[†6] is right about the size of the glass covering in the Stable Yard

Ever Your most affectionate

CD.

To W. H. WILLS,[†1] 2 JANUARY 1862

MS Huntington Library. On mourning paper.

At The Birmingham Station
Thursday Second January 1862

My Dear Wills.

Being stranded here for an hour, on my way from Leamington to Cheltenham, I write to you.

[†a]Firstly to reciprocate all your cordial and affectionate wishes for the New Year, and to express my earnest hope that we may go on through many years to come, as we have gone on through many years that are gone. And I think we can say that we doubt whether any two men can have gone on more happily and smoothly, or with greater trust and confidence in one another.[†a]

Secondly: As the Proofs[†2] reached me yesterday at Leamington where I had a double day, I was not able to look at them. I have eyed them on the Railway to day, but necessarily in a cursory way. Look to the Russian paper for clearness.[†3] In Robert Lytton's[†4] poem[†5]—at the end—the word "both" is used as applied to several things. The word "all", with a slight alteration in the pointing, will express what he means.[†6]

Keep articles which will have the first person singular, inveterately, as wide asunder as you can.[†7]

Birmingham is in a very depressed state, with very few of its trades at work. Nevertheless we did extremely well here. At Leamington yesterday, immense. Copperfield in the morning absolutely stunned the people: and at Nickleby and the Trial at night, they roared and roared until I think they must have shaken all the air in Warwickshire.

Faithfully Ever

CD.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 3 JANUARY 1862

MS Huntington Library. On mourning paper.

Cheltenham | Friday Third January 1862

My Dearest Georgy. Mrs. Macready,[†1] [†a]both in face and figure, is wonderfully like Mary Boyle[†2] twenty years ago.[†a] In voice she is very like poor Mrs. Macready dead and gone,[†3] not in the least like her otherwise; [†a]not half so pretty or so buxom.[†a] She is perfectly satisfactory, and exceedingly winning. Quite perfect in her manner with him and in her ease with his children; sensible, gay, pleasant, sweet tempered; not in the faintest degree stiff or pedantic; accessible instantly. I have very rarely seen a more agreeable woman. The house is (on a smaller scale) any house we have known them in. Furnished with the old furniture, pictures, engravings, mirrors, tables and chairs. Butty[†4] is too tall for strength, I am afraid, but handsome,[†5] and a very nice girl. Katie,[†6] you know all about. Macready, decidedly much older, and infirm. Very much changed. His old force has gone out of him strangely. I don't think I left off talking, a minute, from the time of my entering the house to my going to bed last night, and he was as much amused and interested as ever I saw him: still he was—and is— unquestionably aged.

[†a]I enclose a cheque for £10.[†7] I hope it may not be too late, but I have been in such a whirl of reading and travelling that I am quite confused about your dates.[†a]

And even now I am obliged to cut this letter short, by having to go and look after Headland.[†8] It would never do to be away from the rest of them. I have no idea what we are doing here: no notion whether things are right or wrong: no conception where the room is: no hold of the business at all. For which reason I cannot rest without going and looking after the worthy man with the genius for mistakes.

Ever My Dearest Georgy | Most affecy. Yours

CD.

To EDGAR BOWRING,[†9] [?4 JANUARY 1862]

Mention in next. Date: probably written same day.

To MRS HENRY AUSTIN,[†1] 4 JANUARY 1862*

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

Cheltenham, | Saturday Fourth January 1862

My Dear Letitia

I have written to Mr. Bowring, acting on his suggestion, and also thanking him for the services he renders you.

I hope you are beginning to get better? Poor Miss Sunderland[†2] is strictly in the fashion, for all my letters are full of Influenza.

My visit here has been made unusually interesting to me by my staying with Mr. Macready. He is growing old, but has a most excellent and charming wife, and is (with his two remaining girls and youngest boy)[†3] quite happy.

Success attends me everywhere, Thank God, and the great crowds I see every night all seem to regard me with affection as a personal friend.

This evening at 6 o'Clock (after reading at halfpast two), I go on to Plymouth.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To EDWARD WOOD,[†4] 4 JANUARY 1862*

MS Mr Lewis P. Kinsey, Jr. On mourning paper.

Cheltenham, Fourth January 1862

Sir

Not to delay my reply to your letter until my return home a week hence, I write from here to return your agreeable notes of your visit to Stevenage,[†5] and to thank you for having sent them to me. You will also find enclosed, the very clever sketch of the uncomfortable person in question.[†6]

Your faithful Servant

CHARLES DICKENS

Edward J Wood Esquire

To WILKIE COLLINS,[†1] [5] JANUARY 1862

MS Morgan Library. Date: Sunday was 5 Jan in 1862. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday January Fourth 1862

My Dear Wilkie.

When I proposed Thursday for the office, I forgot that a choice between Thursday and Friday was given to the Forsters[†2] for our going there. I am reminded of it this morning, by their writing to fix Thursday. Therefore will you say Friday for the office? And at half past 5 instead of 6, as we cannot with decency get off going to Yates's[†3] affair afterwards.

It is pretty clear to me that you must go in for a regular pitched battle with that rheumatic gout. Don't be satisfied with Frank Beard's[†4] patching you, now that you have leisure; but be set up afresh. I don't like that notion of the eight and forty hours. It is not a long enough time, and the treatment in the time must be too ferocious. Nature does not proceed in that way, and is not to be proceeded with in that way. With all respect for my Hon. friend M.R.C.S.[†5] I think it a demonstrable mistake. [†a]And I hope you will arrive at the same conclusion.[†a]

In the A.Y.R. matter, I did not write myself, and I begged Wills to do so, because I regarded it as a simple act of conscientiousness, and wished it so to express itself. I am very sorry that we part company (though only in a literary sense),[†6] but I hope we shall work together again, one day.

It has been blowing here to the most extraordinary extent. This morning is wonderfully bright and fine, but the weathercock points forever to the Sou'West.

Ever affecy.

CD.

To W. H. WILLS, 5 JANUARY 1862

MS Clark Memorial Library, University of California.

Royal Hotel, Plymouth
Sunday Fifth January 1862

My Dear Wills. I couldn't answer your letter about Reade[†1] until I had it. Could I now?

He seems to me, to be the best man to be got for our purpose. But I think his terms will be rather higher than yours. Seeing that we shall not be paying Wilkie's salary then, I think you might at once (if you saw it to be necessary) go up to five and twenty pounds a week. But he may not be used to such receipts as I suppose. I would decidedly pursue the idea, with the intention of getting him, as the best man to be got. No doubt he would be glad to work with me. I believe he has a respect for me.[†2]

I shall be here until after post time on Wednesday morning,[†3] and at Torquay until after post time on Friday morning. Any word from you concerning Reade, by letter or Telegram, shall be answered immediately.

(His singing, I know. Very innocent and harmless.)

Your heavy debt here shall be paid in full. I doubt the judiciousness of Frank's[†4] taking a ticket for a month, because, unless I am mistaken, he will be a week of the time in London.[†5] But I suppose three weeks single tickets might have cost him as much too. I ought to have written to him about it. Will you tell him with my love, that I have been too busy.

Macready's amazement at Copperfield really was something to see. He told me, with the tears running down his face, that "as a piece of Art it—er—laid him on his—er—back; and that as a piece of passion and pathos and playfulness, it—er—well!—there was nothing to be said about it. N-no Dickens, Nothing!

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 8 JANUARY 1862†

MS Huntington Library. On mourning paper.

Torquay[†6] | Wednesday Eighth January 1862

[†a] My Dearest Georgy. I feel that if I had not been reading, still I never could have borne the marriage, and should have excused myself somehow. As I have told Mamie, I could not write to Clara[†1] (Mamie wished me) in my consciousness of the dismal absurdity of my congratulating her upon her doing what I did once with such brilliant success.

— X - 7 —

As to Blackwood,[†2] I think I told you that I saw him three times in Edinburgh, and always extremely drunk.[†3] Your estimate of him I take to be quite correct.

Wills's account of that base fellow[†4] "about London" is really highly humourous and entertaining. It seems to be the most miserable and pitiable failure conceivable.[†5] Pursuant to agreement, I send Wills's report by this post to Forster. But if you see Wills at the office, I beg you to insist on his giving you his first-rate description.[†a]

You know, I think, that I was very averse to going to Plymouth,[†6] and would not have gone there again but for poor Arthur.[†7] [†a]We had one good night, and one bad one.[†a†8] But on the [†a]bad one[†a] (last night) I read Copperfield, and positively enthralled the people. It was a most overpowering effect, and poor Andrew[†9] came behind the screen, after the storm, and cried in the best and manliest manner. Also there were two or three lines of his shipmates and other sailors, and they were extraordinarily affected. But its culminating effect was on Macready at Cheltenham.[†10] [†a]You know that he is not too prone to praise what comes at all in his own way; but[†a] when I got home after Copperfield, I found him quite unable to speak, and able to do nothing but square his dear old jaw all on one side, and roll his eyes (half closed), like Jackson's[†11] picture of him.[†12] And when I said something light about it, he returned "No—er—Dickens! I swear to Heaven that as a piece of passion and playfulness—er—indescribably mixed up together, it does—er—No, really Dickens!—amaze me as profoundly as it moves me. But as a piece of Art—and you know—er—that I—No Dickens! By God![†13]—have seen the best Art in a great time—it is incomprehensible to me. How it is got at—er—how it is done—er—how one man can—well! It lays me on my—er—back, and it is of no use talking about it!"—[†1] With which, he put his hand upon my breast, and pulled out his pocket handkerchief, and I felt as if I were doing somebody to his Werner.[†2] Katie by the bye is a wonderful audience, and has a great fund of wild feeling in her. [†a]You are not to suppose that Butty is fragile, for she is a fine handsome girl, with a face of great power and character. But I fear she is too much of a woman for her years.[†a†3] Johnny not at all unlike Plorn.[†4]

— X - 8 —

[†a]We are now in the region of small rooms, and therefore this trip will not be as profitable as the long one.[†a] I have not yet seen the room here, but imagine it to be very small. Exeter, I know; and that is small also. I am very much used up, on the whole, for I cannot bear this moist warm climate. It would kill me very soon. And I have now got to the point of taking so much out of myself with Copperfield, that I might as well do Richard Wardour.[†5]

[†a]Headland I can only describe as damned aggravating. Yet I cannot blow him up, though I found, this day, on the cards for this place, exactly the same mistakes as I corrected at Norwich. Didn't I always say he would get his money from Hullah?[†6] I have got Hullah into such a corner at last, by steadily refusing to let him get away from the point, that he must[†7] pay—and will.[†7]

Umphrey[†8] is doing well, and is going to read the declamatory part of Athalie[†9] at a private performance at his own house. But it cannot be done without Edland[†10] (Extall[†11] says), who is to perpetrate some infernal bass.[†a]

You have now, my dearest Georgy, the fullest extent of my tidings. This is a very pretty place—a compound of Hastings, Tunbridge Wells, and little bits of the hills about Naples—but I met four Respirators as I came up from the Station, and three pale curates without them who seemed in a bad way.

—Frightful intelligence has just been brought in by Boycett[†12] concerning the small size of the room. I have terrified Block[†13] by sending him to look at it, and swearing that if it's too small, I will go away to Exeter.

Ever Your most affectionate

CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?8 JANUARY 1862]

Mention in last. Date: written same day.

Sending him Wills's report of Mark Lemon.[†1]

To W. H. WILLS, 8 JANUARY 1862

MS Huntington Library. On mourning paper.

Torquay, | Wednesday Eighth January 1862

My Dear Wills

First, as to the No.[†2] I return all the proofs in which I have made marks— pencil marks, because done on the Railway. There is only one in Murray's[†3] (poor)[†4] and all the rest are in the American story.[†5] I conclude John Ray to be out,[†6] as I see so much matter over. I hope he is out, because he is the dreariest of the dreary.

Your account of the wretched Lemon[†7] business[†8] (which I have sent to Forster) made me roar with laughter at Plymouth this morning and then inspired me with a sort of pity—though the fellow is as poor and mean a Hound as lives.

I think you remember that I did not approve of your townsmen when I was last there?[†9] We had one good night, and one bad one. The bad one was last night. But I perfectly bowled them over and over and over too:—it was Copperfield. Plymouth is a bad place for any such purpose, with a room I hate, in a perfectly inaccessible position.[†10]

Good Lets here, but a very small room.[†11] The room at Exeter also, is small.

Delighted to find that we start fair with All The Year Round again.

Reade, good. I would give him what he asks, holding him to a certain space within which the story[†12] shall be comprised.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To MR FROST,[†1] 9 JANUARY 1862

Mention in Autograph Prices Current, II, 73; MS (3rd person) 1 p.; addressed Mr Frost; dated Torquay, 9 Jan 62.

To JOHN KING,[†2] 9 JANUARY 1862*

MS Dickens House. On mourning paper.

Torquay, Ninth January 1862

Dear Sir

I beg to thank you for your obliging letter, and to express my regret that I cannot at present visit Barnstaple for the purpose of reading there. But my arrangements have long been completed for returning to London on Saturday next, and resuming my usual quiet routine of occupation.

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

John G King Esquire

To W. C. MACREADY, 9 JANUARY 1862*

MS Morgan Library. Date: "Thurs" written over "Fri" in "Friday", either by CD or Macready: 9 Jan 62 was Thursday and CD read in Torquay that morning (see below). Letter endorsed "Dickens | January 10", presumably date of arrival. On mourning paper.

Cash's Hotel,[†3] Torquay,

Thursday Ninth January 1862

My Dearest Macready.

You were asking me the other day about Fechter's[†4] Othello.[†5] This morning I have a letter from Wilkie, from which I extract a passage about it that I think will amuse you.

"Fechter by the bye. I have seen him in an utter and unspeakable failure.[†6] Badly dressed even. Wrong throughout, in conception and execution. If he gave me any idea at all, he gave me the idea of a Sepoy. The play is beautifully got up;[†1] but Mr. Ryder[†2] trying to be intelligent, and relapsing into boisterous stupidity at every available opportunity—Miss Leclerq[†3] pawing Fechter—Mr. Somebody or other acting Roderigo[†4] so that the fourth Act ended amidst the hearty laughter of the pit—Mr. Somebody else imitating Anderson (!),[†5] in Cassio[†6]—everybody concerned doing everything with the promise of extra-ordinary intelligence, and the performance of downright stupidity[†7]—so disgusted me, that I have registered a vow to see no more of that much-injured man, Shakespeare, on the stage"—

This is my excuse for sending my love to dear Mrs. Macready, and the dear girls, and the gallant Johnny (who reminds me tenderly of Plorn), and telling you my dearest old friend that I never shall forget the pleasure I had in your house last week, or the happiness that I derived from seeing you all so happy.

Copperfield laid Plymouth on its back, and there are 200 stalls taken here for him this morning.

Ever My Dearest Macready | Your most affectionate

CD.

To MRS THOMAS SYNNOTT,[†8] 9 JANUARY 1862*

MS Mr Tony Ashe. Address: Mrs Thomas Synnott. Mourning paper and envelope.

[†a]With Mr. Charles Dickens's compliments and best wishes for recovery.[†a]

[†b]"And so, as Tiny Tim observed, God bless us Every one!"

CHARLES DICKENS
at Torquay
Thursday Ninth January, 1862.[†b]

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 10 JANUARY 1862*

MS Huntington Library. On mourning paper.

Exeter
Friday Tenth January 1862

My Dearest Georgy

Immense Success with the Quality at Torquay. Half the Peerage there, yesterday morning, and the hit of Copperfield quite amazing.[†1]

A good Let here.

I saw Quin[†2] at Torquay—looking brown and well. At the evening Reading he had the most disagreeable-looking woman with him I ever saw in my life. I was afraid it was his wife;[†3] but she is ill, and it was her sister.

On Monday I purpose coming down by the 1 o'Clock Train (for there seems to be no earlier, except at 7..50!) and so getting to Higham at 2..25. You did quite right to invite Wilkie, and I hope he is coming.

In great haste | Ever My Dearest Georgy | Your most affectionate

CD

Love to Mamie and the boys. And Mrs. B.[†4]

To MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL,[†5] 13 JANUARY 1862

MS (copy)[†6] Widener Collection, Harvard.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Monday Thirteenth January 1862

My Dear Sirs

I returned to town late on Saturday night, and found a letter from Mr. Lever[†7] awaiting me.

Will you have the kindness to let me know what has been paid for the advertizing of Mr. Lever's books; that is to say, what was the outlay, as to every kind of public announcement, on his last serial and his last but one as compared —say—with the outlay on the serial you are now publishing by Mr. Trollope.[†8] Also, as to the whole collection of Mr. Lever's books, what course you have held in reference to keeping them before the public,[†1] as compared— say—with my own books[†2] or Mr. Carlyle's.[†3]

It appears to me important to the amicable and reasonable settlement of the question between you and Mr. Lever, that I should have this information exactly stated from your accounts.

&c &c

To MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL, 13 JANUARY 1862

MS (copy) Widener Collection, Harvard.

My Dear Sirs

Can you also send me the agreement between yourselves and Mr. Lever, and will you let me know whether I understand the terms of the reference to me, when I suppose them to be that Mr. Lever agrees to abide by my opinion, but that you do not?

&c &c

To CHARLES LEVER, 13 JANUARY 1862

MS Widener Collection, Harvard. Address: Charles Lever Esqre. | Casa Capponi | Florence | Italy. Mourning envelope.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Monday Thirteenth January 1862

My Dear Lever

While I was away in the country, reading, this last fortnight, I received from F. Chapman[†4] their statement of the case between you, and a pressing request for my opinion immediately "as Mr. Lever had stated that he would abide by my decision". I of course replied that I had not yet received my credentials from you, and should not think of entering on the case at all until they reached me.

Returning here at midnight on Saturday, I found your Memoranda. This morning F Chapman came here: to whom I said nothing whatever, but that he had crossed a letter from me just posted. A copy of that letter, I send you on the other side.

My impression is, that as to the advertizing you are rather mistaken. What friends say on such subjects is seldom to be relied on, especially at a distance. Somehow, there are always numbers of people who never will see, can see, or do see, what is thrust under their noses. Most decidedly it has never occurred to me to think that your books were under-advertized. My own impression, however, may be mistaken too, and you may rely upon it that it would not have a feather-weight with me against evidence.

That evidence I have thought it well to ask for, gravely, in the first instance. You may rely on my proceeding with the greatest care and caution. I understand the fact to be that Smith in the Strand[†1] is the person who offers to buy the copyrights, and that he shews a disposition to withdraw or reduce his offer if it be not promptly accepted.[†2] This is the reason for the Chapmans' hurry. But I will not hurry whether or no, and decidedly will not commit you to any thing without your knowledge. I shall let the Chapmans know, when I have formed an opinion, that I wish to communicate it privately to you.

(P.S.) I have since written them a second letter, copied at the end of the first, enclosed.

My Dear Lever | Ever Cordially Yours

CD.

To H. W. PHILLIPS,[†3] 14 JANUARY 1862

Extract in Newman F. McGirr catalogue No. 74; MS 1 ½ p.; dated Gad's Hill Place, 14 Jan 62; addressed H.W. Phillips.

The Artists General Benevolent Institution have a claim upon my sympathy and service to which I most readily respond. I will preside at their Anniversary Dinner and do my best for them both as a duty and a pleasure ... but as I shall be reading in London at about that time it is necessary for me to mention, in case the day should be changed, that I am pre-engaged for Thursdays.[†4]

To HENRY BATHURST,[†5] [JANUARY 1862]

Mention in Committee of Management Minutes, 21 Jan 62 (MS Hospital for Sick Children). Date: presumably within a week of its being read to the Committee.

Declining to give permission for a proposed public reading of "The Wreck of the Golden Mary"[†6] by A. F. Westmacott.[†7]

To GARDNER FULLER,[†1] 16 JANUARY 1862

Extract in Thomas F. Madigan catalogue (Feb 1928); MS 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill Place, 16 Jan 62; addressed Gardner A. Fuller, Boston.

I must excuse myself from naming any price for such a work as you propose, because I really think it would be far too high for your purpose. But if you should be disposed to make me an offer of your own origination, it shall receive prompt attention and reply.

To CLARKSON STANFIELD,[†2] 16 JANUARY 1862

Text from N, III, 279.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Thursday Sixteenth January 1862

My Dear Stanny,

I have not yet finished my country readings, as I have to go back to Manchester and Liverpool for a week. But I do not return there until after Wednesday and next Wednesday at 5 exactly I shall dine at the office as usual with Wilkie and Wills. Are you well enough to join us that day, and if so will you come and see a Pantomime afterwards? I am told that the Princess's[†3] is the best. If I hear from you at the office on Wednesday morning, it will be ample time. In the hope that you are better my dear old boy, and sending my kind regards to Mrs. Stanfield,[†4]

I am, Ever affectionately
[CD]

To JOHN LEECH,[†5] 18 JANUARY 1862

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: John Leech Esquire | 32 Brunswick Square | WC. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Eighteenth January 1862

My Dear Leech

I was very glad to get your letter while I was away, reading. I am but just come home, though not yet for good; as I postponed some half dozen readings at Liverpool and near there, on account of the Prince's Death[†6] (the Jack-asses that people are at present making of themselves on that subject!)[†1] and have to go back to work them out. Early in February, however, I shall hope to see you and propoge an excursion.

Sydney,[†2] as soon as he passed out of the Training Ship—which he did, with a most excellent character—got appointed to the Orlando 51, the finest ship in the service I believe, and sailed instantly to put a final stop on America.[†3] While the Orlando lay waiting for sailing orders at Plymouth, a friend of mine there, an officer aboard another ship, kindly got leave for Sydney to go and dine with him and sleep in his cabin. Next morning while this officer was dressing in another Cabin, he observed that his servant (a big Marine) was choking with laughter. When he asked him, rather sternly, what was the matter, the servant said "Beg your pardon Sir, but that young gentleman in your cabin—might he be a connexion o' yourn Sir?"—"No."—"Beg your pard'n then Sir; hope there mightn't be no offence in my saying"—choking again, here "as the young gen'lm'n is so wery small, as I see him a standing on your portmanteau Sir to get himself on a level with the washing stand afore he could wash himself."

Another naval friend of mine whom I dare say you remember—Captain Tracey[†4]—did a good thing at Plymouth when I was reading there. He put his wife's opera cloak and wrappers behind my screen. Taking them up to go, and talking and rolling all the time sailor-like, he took up with them the dress trousers I had that moment taken off, (still talking and rolling) put the trousers with the greatest care round his wife's[†5] neck, with about five hundred people looking on and roaring with laughter.

Kind regard to Mrs. Leech[†6]
Ever Faithfully
CD.

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON,[†7] 18 JANUARY 1862

MS Lytton Papers.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Saturday Eighteenth January 1862

My Dear Bulwer Lytton

You don't quite understand that former remark of mine concerning the incantation[†8]—most probably, because I did not express my meaning with clearness.

What I meant, was, that if the explanation were rendered particularly necessary by that part of the story (as I understood you to intimate) then it might be worth while to consider whether that scene, not being yet published, might not be so re-considered and re-touched as to explain itself.[†1] I could not suggest the omission of any passage, as it stands, because I recognize in it extraordinary care, purpose, art, and knowledge.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To H. B. HALL,[†2] 20 JANUARY 1862

Yale University Library. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Twentieth January 1862

Dear Sir

This is merely to assure you that I have received your letter with cordial gratification and pleasure. To be so remembered by unknown readers far away, is a high privilege, and I hold it sacred in my heart.

With all good wishes for your family and yourself, I am always Faithfully

Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. H. B. Hall

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 20 JANUARY 1862

Extract in Francis Edwards catalogue No. 477 (Mar 1926); MS 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill Place, 20 Jan 62.

We are at the North Pole here, chopping our meat with axes and unconscious of our noses.[†3]

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 20 JANUARY 1862

Mention in Anderson catalogue No. 3951; MS 2 pp.; dated Gad's Hill Place, 20 Jan 62.

Humorous and enthusiastic invitation to Gad's Hill.

To MRS HENRY AUSTIN, 21 JANUARY 1862*

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Twenty First January 1862

My Dear Letitia.

I had a letter from De Gex[†1] only yesterday, telling me that he could now send me the Probate of the will,[†2] which would enable me to receive the Salary due.[†3] The Life Insurances will not be payable by the offices until the 11th. and 13th. of March respectively. I cannot pay the bills until I am in receipt of the funds of the estate; but I will not lose a moment in paying everything; and in two or three days after the last date I have mentioned, no doubt the whole business will be done. Of course I will make an appointment with you, the instant the money comes into my hands, and then you will give me the outstanding accounts, with the names and addresses of the people to whom the debts are owing.

I am away to finish my Readings, but shall have quite done with them so far as the Country is concerned, by the end of next week.

It is a great thing to know that you are better in health. In case you should want money, I think it best to send you an advance of £5. You see, you cannot touch anything until I have paid all the debts and expences and then hand you over the balance.

Affectionately Ever

CD.

To CLARKSON STANFIELD, 22 JANUARY 1862

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Twenty Second January 1862

Dick bets Stanny that Massaniello was produced, [†a]AS AN OPERA,[†a] at Drury Lane Theatre 30 years ago.[†4] Reference is supposed to be had to the date of the year, without reference to months.

The bet is, a Dinner for 4 at Greenwich, Richmond, or elsewhere, for the party present: That is to say:

Stanfield
Dickens

Wilkie Collins
Wills.

Witnesses WILKIE COLLINS C. STANFIELI
W. H. WILLS CHARLES DI(

To MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL, 23 JANUARY 1862

MS Johns Hopkins University.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Twenty Third January 1862

My Dear Sirs.

If I can arrange with you to make Mr. Lever's new book,[†2] in 20 Nos. instead of 12[†3] (he has great hope of it, and of that extended use of his materials), I can close the other matter[†4] without further delay.

I am obliged to go out of town to-day, but shall be glad to see you here tomorrow (Friday) at half past eleven in the forenoon.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Chapman

To CUTHBERT COLLINGWOOD,[†5] 23 JANUARY 1862

Summary in Sotheby's catalogue, June 1902; MS 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill Place, 23 Jan 62; addressed Cuthbert Collingwood.

Expressing regret that engagements debar him from accepting an invitation from the Council of the Literary and Philosophical Society of Liverpool.[†6]

To MRS HENRY AUSTIN, 24 JANUARY 1862*

MS Morgan Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Twenty Fourth January 1862

My Dear Letitia.

The answer to the people who apply for their bills, is the true and simple one:— That I am the Executor, but am not yet in possession of the funds of the estate. That there seems no reasonable doubt of those funds being realized in the course of next month, and, that the moment they are realized, I shall of course discharge myself of my trust.

As I may as well know as soon as possible what the debts are, I think it best to propose an appointment with you, here, on the day after my next return to town. This will be Saturday week, the 1st. of February. Say 12 o'Clock. And will you bring all the accounts with you.

My address until Thursday morning inclusive, will be Radley's Adelphi Hotel, Liverpool.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To WILKIE COLLINS, 24 JANUARY 1862*

MS Morgan Library and [bb] Brigham Young University. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Meaning, Office
Friday Twenty Fourth January 1862

My Dear Wilkie.

I have read the story[†1] as far as you have written it, with strong interest and great admiration. As Wills petitions to read it before it comes back to you, and as I know you don't want it at once, he will very shortly return it to Harley Street.

I find in the book, every quality that made the success of the Woman in White,[†2] without the least sign of holding on to that success, or being taken in two by it. I have no doubt whatever of the public reception of what I have read. You may be quite certain of it. I could not be more so than I am.

You will excuse my saying, with a reference to what is to follow, something that may be already in your own mind. It seems to me that great care is needed not to tell the story too severely. In exact proportion as you play around it here and there, and mitigate the severity of your own sticking to it, you will enhance and intensify the power with which Magdalen[†3] holds on to her purpose. For this reason, I should have given Mr. Pendril[†4] some touches of comicality, and should have generally lighted up the house with some such capital touches of whimsicality and humour as those with which you have irradiated the private theatricals.

This is the only suggestion in the critical way that comes into my mind. By the bye—except one. Look again to the scene, where Magdalen, in Mr. Pendril's presence and that of Frank's father[†5] (who is excellent) checks off the items of the position one by one. She strikes me as doing this, in too business-like and clerkly a way.[†6]

Wills clamours for the name. And that is most difficult to find. Here are some, founded on more than one phase of the book.

†a(1) Below the Surface (Used)

(2) Under-Currents. (Used)

(3) Through Thick and Thin.

(4) Straight On!

(5) Five Years' Work.

(6) The Twig and The Tree.

(7) The Blossom and The Fruit.✓

o (8) Behind the Veil. [1]

(9) Secret Springs.

o (10) In Account with Michael Vanstone.

(11) The Turning Point✓

(12) Lower and Lower.

(13) Latent Forces

(14) Which is Which?

(15) Work in the dark✓✓

(16) One purpose.

(17) Pitfalls.

(18) Changed, or developed?

(19) The Vanstone Family

(20) Magdalen Vanstone.

(21) Playing out the Play.

o (22) Nature's ?Own (3) Daughter.✓ 2

(23) The Combe Raven Property 4

(24) Magdalen's Changes

(25) Magdalen's Purpose.

o (26) The beginning and the end. 5

?The Combe Raven Tragedy?†a

[b] I like best: Nos. 1-8-10-22-23 and 26.

Let me hear from you, between this and Thursday morning inclusive, at Radley's†1 Adelphi Hotel, Liverpool.

Kind regards | Ever affecy

CD.[b]

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 24 JANUARY 1862*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Twenty Fourth January 1862

My Dearest Georgy.

I enclose a cheque for wages and house.[†1]

Also I enclose (with cheque pinned on to it), a staggering bill of Thomas and Homan's,[†2] which just doubles my rough idea of it. Before you pay it, I wish you would look to the end of it, and see what they have allowed for the change in the cottage bedstead &c. It appears to me—upon such imperfect consideration as I can give the matter here—that they have not allowed enough for it. Pray have this out with them and have it clear, before you pay.

Your account of John Gordon[†3] is very sad indeed, and greatly interested me. It is a most melancholy state of things indeed.[†4]

Mrs. Alfred[†5] was here on Wednesday, and I must consult you when I come back touching the best means of making known to her that I wish her in future to communicate personally with you, or with you and Mary. I really can not bear the irritation she causes me, and the strife she gets up in my uneasy mind about the whole business.[†6] I was completely disgusted and worn out by her on this last occasion.

We were at Covent Garden on Wednesday night, and saw the most utterly deplorable pantomine that ever depressed an audience.[†7] The house was solitary in the last degree—and deserved to be.

I have read all that Wilkie has written of his new book. It is extremely clever and careful—I think, quite up to the mark of the Woman in White—but the creaking of the wheels is so very loud, that I have written him a little advice on that head.

With best love to Mamie
and Mrs. Bouncer | and the boys | Ever My Dearest Georgy
Your most affectionate
CD.

To CHARLES LEVER, 24 JANUARY 1862

MS Widener Collection, Harvard.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Twenty Fourth January 1862

My Dear Lever.

I got your letter yesterday, and immediately put myself in diplomatic relations with the Chapmans.

The extension of your next book[†1] into 20 Numbers, seemed to me a reasonable point that I could have urged and carried, until I found that the book is already actually advertized in 12 Numbers.[†1] It was then quite plain to me that the change would never do—with a reference solely to your interests. For, with the trade rather indisposed to speculate or venture in a new book of yours at this present time, I am quite clear that such a departure from the first announcement, on the very thresh-hold of the undertaking, would go a long way towards ruining it. To say nothing of the Public; with whom it is no less prudent than right to keep the strictest faith.

But I carried another point with the Chapmans, instead of this. And I hope it will help to set you more at ease. It is expressed in the accompanying letter;[†2] on condition of having this letter written, I consented on your behalf to the sale of the Copyrights.

I write briefly, to save the post.

Ever affecy. Yours

CD.

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 24 JANUARY 1862

MS Lytton Papers. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Twenty Fourth January 1862

My Dear Bulwer Lytton.

I have considered your questions, and here follow my replies.

1. I think you undoubtedly have the right to forbid the turning of your play[†3] into an opera.

2. I do not think the production of such an opera, in the slightest degree likely to injure the play or to render it a less valuable Property than it is now. If it could have any effect on so standard and popular a work as the Lady of Lyons, the effect would, in my judgment, be beneficial. But I believe the play to be high above any such influence.

3. Assuming you to consent to the adaptation in a desire to oblige Oxenford,[†1] I would not recommend your asking any pecuniary compensation. This, for three reasons. Firstly, because the compensation could only be small at the best. Secondly, because your taking it, would associate you (unreasonably, but not the less assuredly) with the opera. Thirdly, because if you desire to oblige Oxenford at all, that desire had best be the expressly-assigned reason of your consent, and you had best have the full grace and generosity of it.

The only objection I descry, is purely one of feeling. Pauline[†2] trotting about in front of the float, invoking the Orchestra with a limp pocket handkerchief (as Miss Pyne(2[[sic]][†3] would), is a notion that makes gooseflesh of my back. Also, a yelping tenor, going away to the Wars in a Scena half an hour long,[†4] is painful to contemplate. Damas[†5] too, as a Bass with a grizzled bald head, blatantly bellowing about

Years long ago,
When the sound of the drum
First made his blood glow
With a Rum ti Tum Tum

—rather sticks in my throat. But there really seems to me to be no other objection, if you can get over this.[†6]

Ever affectionately

CD.

To W. H. WILLS, 26 JANUARY 1862*

MS Huntington Library. On mourning paper.

Adelphi Hotel Liverpool
Sunday Night Twenty Sixth January 1862

My Dear Wills

If you will let me have the proofs[†7] on Wednesday morning, I hope there is no doubt of my being able to go over them carefully. But if they were to come on Thursday, my doing so would be hopeless, as I go to Chester that morning— read in the evening—and travel home all night.

An immense Free Trade Hall at Manchester last night.[†8]

Ever Faithfully

CD.

You saw Charles Collins's[†9] proof of Incorri[gi]ble[†10] Rogues?[†11] I did not. The Printer sent me none.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 28 JANUARY 1862*

MS Morgan Library. On Gad's Hill headed mourning paper.

Adelphi Hotel, Liverpool.
Tuesday Twenty Eighth January 1862

My Dearest Georgy

The beautiful room was crammed to excess last night, and numbers were turned away.[†1] Its beauty and completeness when it is lighted up are most brilliant to behold; and for a Reading it is simply perfect. You remember that a Liverpool audience is usually dull, but they put me on my mettle last night, for I never saw such an audience—no, not even in Edinburgh! Yesterday evening the agents (alone and of course without any reference to ready money at the doors) had taken for the three readings.[†2] Two Hundred Pounds. I am not quite free from apprehensions of the final rush tomorrow.

[†a]You can scarcely imagine what a ridiculous amount of small distress has been caused me by a peculiar and detestable shirt button you have put at the throat of my colored shirts—a cup-shaped button, with an infernal dell in it. When I tell you that it takes ten minutes of fretting and fuming and chafing, with one's nerves shaken by last night's work, to get a collar on it, you will hate the button; but when I add that it then, because of the screwing and twisting, flies off after all, you will excoriate the button. This very day, I went through this process three times. From three clean shirts, one after another, the button burst, when I had at last got the collar on to it!

Thomas's bill[†3] is no doubt quite right.

I enclose you a letter received this morning from Helen, from which it would appear that my unfortunate mother has everything the matter with her that she can reasonably have. It will give us an opportunity of putting me into communication with Helen, by deputy. We will consider how best to do it when I come home.[†a]

I slept horribly last night, and have been over to Birkenhead for a little change of air today. My head is dazed and worn by gas and heat, and I fear that Copperfield and Bob together to-night won't mend it.

Best love to Mamie—and Katie if still at Gad's. I am going to bring the boys some Toffee.[†a] Block is taking Toffee to Umphrey and Extall.[†a†4]

Ever my Dearest Georgy, | Your most affectionate

CD.

To W. H. WILLS, 28 JANUARY 1862

MS Huntington Library. On mourning paper.

Adelphi Hotel Liverpool
Tuesday Twenty Eighth January 1862

My Dear Wills.

The 12th. of February will suit me perfectly.

A tremendous cram here last night, and a great turn-away.

My suggestions to Wilkie as to altering what he has done, were very slight indeed: because he cannot alter it in any essential particular. They went mainly to the warning that it must inevitably come to pass that the more severely and persistently he tells the story, unrelieved by whimsical playing about it, the more he will detract from the steadiness and inflexibility of purpose in the girl. Contrast in that wise is most essential. She cannot possibly be brought out as he wants to bring her out, without it.

Under a Cloud was one of my names on my list,[†1] but I did not send it to Wilkie because it has a semi-slang-acceptation that is dead against it and makes it small.[†2]

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To W. H. WILLS, 29 JANUARY 1862*

MS Huntington Library. On Gad's Hill headed mourning paper.

Radley's Adelphi Hotel Liverpool
Wednesday Twenty Ninth January 1862

My Dear Wills

I have gone over the Proofs.[†3] In the 1st. Vol. of Household Words, Morley[†4] did a paper, (from my books and suggestions), or two papers, concerning Pirates.[†5] As I see in Spicer's[†6] article,[†7] several cases that I know to be in the same books, just glance back at Morley and see that there is no repetition.[†8]

The longer Charley Collins's paper[†9] is, if it be really good, the better. I was going to telegraph to you by all means to keep the No. open for it, if I had not had the information contained in your note of this morning. It would be quite thrown away and lost, if it were delayed.

I think you had best pay B and E's[†1] cheque[†2] at once to my account at Coutts's.[†a] Upon my soul I don't think its wise to hold a cheque of theirs an hour![†a]

I come up from Chester in the night tomorrow.[†3] Another tremendous cram here last night; and everything let, out and out, for tonight!

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To MISS MARY BOYLE, [?31 JANUARY 1862]*

MS Morgan Library. Date: The only date he records travelling home all night was Thurs 30 Jan 62, after reading at Chester; although he dates it "Thursday night", he was presumably writing in the early hours of Fri.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Night 1862

My Dear Meery I have just come here after travelling all last night, and write with one eye open (but its sense is shut), and the other wandering but fixed.

My Dear friend and brother Mr. Cooke,[†4] who used to have Astleys and whom I revered, has given up that establishment, and when last heard of, was under canvas up a stable yard in Ramsgate. His successor at Astleys,[†5] I revere, but have not been admitted into relations of personal trust and affection with. So behold me forlornly horse-box-less!

Ever Your affectionate

JOE.

February

To THOMAS BAYLIS,[†1] 1 FEBRUARY 1862

MS Berg Collection. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday First February 1862

My Dear Mr. Baylis

[†a]I have just come home from a long series of Readings in the country. Finding your note, I write to you at once, or you might do me the wrong of supposing me unmindful of it and you.[†a]

I do not quite understand from your note, whether the two papers you mention are at the office or not. If they be, I shall have them on Wednesday from Wills. But in reference to the first one, I am bound to say that I cannot take any part whatever in reference to the Memorial to Prince Albert. With a sufficient respect for the deceased gentleman, and all loyalty and attachment towards the Queen, I have been so very much shocked by the rampant toadyism that has been given to the four winds on that subject and by the blatant speeches that have been made respecting it, that the refuge of my soul is Silence.[†2]

I hope the Green Park may not be inseparable from the Theme?[†3]

Faithfully Yours always

CD

To THOMAS BEARD,[†4] 1 FEBRUARY 1862

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Place | Maida Hill | W.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Saturday First February 1862

My Dear Beard

This letter—Hush!—is to be regarded as an awful mystery, a fearful proposal, a cloak-and-dagger conspiracy.

As we have no house in town until the 20th. I have told Mamie and Katie that no festivity takes place on their venerable Parient's birthday, and have in a general way implied that the hoary undersigned will remain on that day (next Friday as ever is), in a state of placid contemplation. But secretly it is proposed that you, Forster, Wilkie (and perhaps Georgy) dine with me at Verey's at 6, and endeavour to enjoy ourselves.

Say that you will throw your cap into the ring at the appointed hour, in one line to Gad's Hill

I have just finished my country Readings. The brilliancy of the close—at Manchester and Liverpool—has been absolutely dazzling. On Thursday 13th. March I begin at St. James's Hall. Book yourself.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To ROBERT BELL,[†1] 1 FEBRUARY 1862*

MS Royal Literary Fund. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday First February 1862

My Dear Bell.

I am exceedingly sorry to hear of Horne's[†2] distress; and I can most strongly vouch for his abilities and merit, in support of the application you tell me you are going to make on his behalf to the Committee of the Literary Fund.[†3]

Horne's published works speak for themselves and him, and I need not eulogize his indisputable talent. But as he was regularly associated with Household Words for a long time, I can bear the strongest testimony to his perserverance, zeal, good faith, steadiness, and integrity. I never knew him to be otherwise than reliable, to his word and the moment, in all my many transactions with him.

He would probably have remained in association with my Journal to this day, if he had not, in the time of the Gold Fever, been seized with visions of Emigration. They have failed in his case, as in many others; and I have heard of his trying many ways of life in the new world without success.[†4]

I feel that a personal delicacy on my part ought not, at this pass, to restrain me from mentioning that when he went away I sent Fifty Pounds out after him, without his solicitation.[†5] It is a proof that I do not recommend him, without having had an old confidence in his being worthy of recommendation.

My Dear Bell | Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

Robert Bell Esquire.

To MRS MARSH CALDWELL,[†1] 3 FEBRUARY 1862*

MS Private. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Third February 1862

My Dear Madam

I have been absent in various parts of the country on business, and have only just now received your interesting and welcome letter.

In reference to the MS which I return herewith, I beg to assure you that it would have given me true pleasure to accept it for All The Year Round, if I could have seen any novel thought or expression in it. But it is the experience of an intelligent gentleman, of circumstances experienced by so many other intelligent gentlemen, and so often recounted in the same manner, that I cannot (in spite of my strong personal desire to do so) arrive at the conclusion that it has a claim upon the public—As to whom the ascent of one Mountain is very very like the ascent of another, unless there be some special individuality in the ascender.

What you tell me of Great Expectations I should have highly esteemed under any circumstances; but it is more gratifying to me than I can tell you in any written words, coming from one who has moved me so profoundly as the Authoress of Emilia Wyndham[†2] has, and to whom I am under so many obligations for a long course of instruction and delight.

My Dear Madam | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs Marsh Caldwell.

To THE REV. H. R. HUGHES,[†3] 6 FEBRUARY 1862

MS Mrs A.K. Frazer. Address: The Rev. H. R. Hughes | Penrhoslligwy | Anglesey. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Sixth February 1862

My Dear Sir

I have received your sad letter this morning with true concern, and beg to assure you that I am very sensible of your remembrance at such a time. I must not obtrude my condolences on the fresh grief of the family of your good brother gone to his reward.[†4] Thank God there is comfort for his wife, all around him in the Churchyard where he will lie;—in every blade of grass that grows there—and in every stone upon the memorable beach.[†1]

My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Rev. H R Hughes

To MRS HENRY AUSTIN, 7 FEBRUARY 1862*

MS Morgan Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Seventh February 1862

My Dear Letitia

Many thanks for your little note, and your remembrance of my Birthday. Eight and twenty years ago, the poor dear fellow kept it at Furnivals Inn,[†2] and stayed there all night.

If rather disappoints me to learn that you have gone back again in your health. You looked so very much better when you were here the other day, that I hoped the good change would continue. But it wants Time—all wounds want Time—wounds of the heart and mind, most of all.

Ever affectionately
CD.

To HENRY MORLEY, 7 FEBRUARY 1862

MS Benoliel Collection. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Seventh February 1862

My Dear Morley

I have, of course, given the permission sought in the enclosed note.[†3] If your article referred to in it, touched many people half so deeply as it touched me, the Hospital have good reason to make the most of it.

Will you answer the last paragraph of the letter, for yourself. Be an honorary Governor.[†4] You may do some more good to the children one day.

Faithfully Yours ever

CHARLES DICKENS

Henry Morley Esquire

To CHARLES LEVER, 8 FEBRUARY 1862

MS Widener Collection, Harvard. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Eighth February 1862

My Dear Lever.

On getting your letter this morning, my first impression was, that I would write to the Chapmans at once, merely to place on record that I knew the facts respecting those two books.[†1] On re-consideration however, I think I see reason for not writing until they shall have replied to your letter to them on the subject. When they do reply, perhaps you will send a copy of such reply to me. Then I will tackle them.

You may rest sure that I will continue to represent you, with the truest desire to serve you, and with as strong and disinterested a purpose of doing my best, as man can have.

I hope you are getting well again.

I told Wills (who is in the country to day, and therefore not at my elbow to be spoken to again), that you were expecting him to write to you. Whereupon he opened his eyes wide and said "Why, I did write!" He shall know of your second Postscript

My Dear Lever | Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS BARROW,[†2] 10 FEBRUARY 1862*

MS Robert H. Taylor Collection, Princeton University Library. Address: Miss Barrow | 11 Lower Brunswick Terrace | Barnsbury Road | London | N. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Tenth February 1862

Dear Miss Barrow.

I have been away in various parts of England and Scotland for the last three months, and have been quite unable to keep pace with my many correspondents. Otherwise, I would have written to you before now.

Your letter expresses your laudable purpose so modestly, and is written in a spirit so womanly and good, that I wish your endeavour were one in which I could reasonably hope to be of any service to you. But I am bound to tell you (unlikely as it may seem to you) that this is not the case. I carry through life, as you may have heard, a long long train. The very little I could ever do in aid of a career[†3] like yours, is done. And my recommendation at the best was next to worthless, for it lay chiefly among those who had ready access to the foremost Professors, and who sought little or nothing else.

It would be easy to give you a vague unfounded hope that I might help you here or there. But I have no right to resort to that escape, for I honestly believe that every power I possess of being serviceable to young people struggling to live, is either exhausted or anticipated. On this head I am habitually silent; but I break through the reserve I always impose upon myself, thus far, because, in my respect for your letter, I wish you to understand the enforced nature of my reply.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To HENRY BATHURST, [FEBRUARY 1862]

Mention in Committee of Management Minutes, 11 Feb 62 (MS Hospital for Sick Children). Date: between 7 Feb, when CD gave the Committee leave to reprint Morley's AYR paper (see To Morley, 7 Feb and fn) and 11 Feb, when CD's reply was recorded.

Giving the leave requested and naming Morley as the author of the article.[†1]

To MISS MARY BOYLE, 10 FEBRUARY 1862*

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Monday Tenth February 1862

My Dear Mary.

Coming home here on Saturday night, I found your kind and welcome note. This is merely to send you my hearty thanks for it, and the (needless) assurance of my loving regard.

Ever Your affectionate
CHARLES DICKENS

If Lady Lyttelton[†2] be still in the house[†3] with you, pray thank her from me with my kindest remembrance.

To THE MISSES RUTH ROBINSON MORGAN and MARY FRANCES MORGAN,[†1] 10 FEBRUARY 1862

MS Mrs M.C. Armstrong. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Tenth February 1862

My Dear Girls

—For if I were to write "young friends", it would look like a schoolmaster; and if I were to write "young ladies", it would look like a schoolmistress; and worse than that, neither form of words would look familiar and natural, or in character with our snowy ride that tooth-chattering morning.

I cannot tell you both, how gratified I was by your remembrance, or how often I think of you as I smoke the admirable cigars. But I almost think you must have had some magnetic consciousness across the Atlantic, of my whiffing my love towards you from the garden here.

My daughter says that when you have settled those little public affairs at home, she hopes you will come back to England (possibly in United States)[†2] and give a minute or two to this part of Kent. Her words are, "a day or two"; but I remember your Italian flights, and correct the message.

I have only just now finished my country Readings, and have had nobody to make breakfast for me since the remote ages of Colchester![†3]

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS[†4]

To THE REV. DR ANDREW REED,[†5] 11 FEBRUARY 1862*

MS Miss L. Gale D'Amanda. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Eleventh February 1862

My Dear Dr. Reed

I am sorry that I cannot respond to your invitation by undertaking to preside at the Anniversary Dinner of the Hospital for Incurables.[†6] But I must reluctantly decline. The demands upon my time and attention oblige me to forego many such engagements, and this among the number.

With all good wishes for the restoration of your health,
Believe me | Always Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

The Rev: Dr. Andrew Reed

To CLARKSON STANFIELD, 12 FEBRUARY 1862*

MS Yale University Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Twelfth February 1862

My Dear Stanny

We think it might be best (always supposing it is quite agreeable to you) to dine somewhere in town—and then we could go and see something afterwards, if so "dispoged". If you will let me know the place and the hour, I will bring Wilkie and Wills to the scratch. Our office-hour, as you know, is 5; but your hour will of course be ours. I shall be here all day on the eventful Wednesday the 19th. in case you should arrive in town before the dinner-hour.

Bulwer has been gazetted "Ill" in the newspapers, I know, but has never been better in his life.

Ever My Dear Stanny | Most affectionately Yours

DICK

To [FREDERIC CHAPMAN], 15 FEBRUARY 1862*

MS (first page only) Johns Hopkins University. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Fifteenth February 1862

My Dear Sir

I have no objection whatever to your publishing the Portrait,[†1] if you desire to do so. Indeed, I have no wish on the subject.

Looking back to the little Illustrations to Pictures from Italy,[†2] I agree with you that they would not do for the Library Edition.[†3] I think eight subjects by Mr. Stone would be quite enough for the whole Volume[†4]

To WILLIAM MILLER,[†1] 15 FEBRUARY 1862*

MS Huntington Library. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Fifteenth February 1862

Dear Sir

I am much indebted to you for your letter, and for its accompanying pamphlet,[†2] which I have read with interest and pleasure.

I cannot honestly say that I consider Milton in need of any Memorial, or that I am in the abstract enthusiastic in respect of that kind of remembrance of any great man, whose works remain to bear witness for him. But the preservation of a grand old building is another matter.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

William Miller Esquire

To EDWARD DOVE,[†3] 18 FEBRUARY 1862*

University of Texas, Austin. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Eighteenth February 1862

Dear Sir

I beg to thank you for your obliging communication, and to return (at your request) the clergyman's letter. On the earliest available day—tomorrow fortnight —I will give the reverend gentleman a large audience for his composition.[†4]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Edward Dove Esquire

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 18 FEBRUARY 1862*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Eighteenth February 1862

My Dearest Georgy.

I wish you would get from Stace,[†5] a padlock and hasp (a padlock with not a common key) and let Marsh[†6] fix it to the cellar Door, in addition to the padlock already there. And do you think you can be sure that no champagne has been abstracted? I will tell you when you're come to town, what reason I have had for asking this question, since I left home this morning.

With love to Mamie | Ever affecy
CD.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 19 FEBRUARY 1862*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Nineteenth February 1862

My Dearest Georgy. To keep you and Mamie from speculating yourselves out of your wits, I will tell you what reason I had for the Padlock.

At the Station yesterday morning, Captain Goldsmith[†1] told me that "at a cottage in Higham the other night", Champagne-corks were flying in the liveliest manner, and that his informant told him (Captain Goldsmith) that he believed the champagne to be mine. I replied that it was not mine, and could not be mine—and there an end. I added that it might be Malleson's,[†2] who had had reasons for distrusting his servants. Possibly (said Goldsmith), but that it was flying and circulating briskly "at the cottage", was beyond a doubt.

Now, the cottage might be Marsh's, or might be Phillips's,[†3] or might be anybody's.

But my impression when you told me what Bouzy champagne[†4] was left in stock, was one of surprise, because I thought we had more. And I particularly wish you to consider whether you are in the habit of leaving the cellar-key in any places, from which it could be taken by any one. If that be so, then I should be rather afraid that some one had taken it.

Fancy Gordon's[†5] sending here this morning—by John Gordon, who himself delivered it to me in Wills's absence—his printed card, with writing on it thus:

Please to let John have £5 for me—
The Sheriff of MidLothian
John T Gordon
W. Wills Esq

What could I do, but give him the money!

Ever Your most affectionate
CD.

To THE PAYMASTER-GENERAL,[†1] [21 OR 22 FEBRUARY 1862]*

MS Fales Library, New York University. Date: written at foot of letter from Treasury (see below), dated 21 Feb; CD no doubt replied same day or next.

Please to pay the amount[†2] to Messrs. Chapman and Hall.

CHARLES DICKENS

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 24 FEBRUARY 1862*

MS (pro-forma letter) Dickens House.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
†aFebruary 24th. 1862†a

Mr. Charles Dickens begs to thank the writer of the paper entitled †a"The eldest daughter"†a for having done him the favor to offer it as a contribution to these pages. He much regrets, however, that it is not suited to the requirements of All the Year Round.

The Manuscript will be returned under cover, if applied for as above.

To EDMUND YATES, 25 FEBRUARY 1862

MS Fales Library, New York University. On Gad's Hill headed mourning paper.

16 Hyde Park Gate South. W.
Tuesday Twenty Fifth February 1862

My Dear Yates.

I have changed houses with a friend†3 for three months, and hence the above address.

Pray explain to the Vicar of Stratford upon Avon,†4 the desolate and afflicting case of the writer of these lines. I am asked to take a whole Pantechnicon-full of Chairs. Compliance is impossible, with any reasonable regard to work and recreation. I am going to preside for the artists,†5 and then take refuge in total abstinence for the rest of the season.

Ever Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

Edmund Yates Esquire

To CHARLES KNIGHT,†1 27 FEBRUARY 1862

Extract in Charles Knight, A Sketch, By His Grand-daughter, Alice A. Clowes, 1892, p.135.

16, Hyde Park Gate South, W.,
Thursday, Twenty-seventh February, 1862.

My dear Knight,

We shall be delighted to come to you on the Fifteenth of March.†2 I had already set the day apart before receiving your letter.

When you begin to take your ease by the fireside (though I don't think you ever will, for you will always 'be up to something' with that spare frame of yours) I shall be most heartily glad to be re-read in those days by my old friend. As to walking, sheer idleness has come upon you, for when I last saw you going on before me down the Strand, I thought it was Deerfoot in European costume.

I was staying with Macready the other day—who is just your age, and evidently going to have a large new family[†3]—and I said to him what I must now beg to repeat to you. That is, that I cannot endure the boastfulness of you seventy gunships,[†4] always talking about laying yourselves up in ordinary[†5] and other such-like brag! You never hear us young fellows vaunting ourselves in that way. We accept our robustness gracefully and bear it meekly; but you are so fearfully conceited in those pretences of growing old when you know better.

To HERBERT LAWRENCE,[†6] 27 FEBRUARY 1862*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Twenty Seventh February 1862

Sir

Your letter is a very difficult one to answer. I should wish to make my reply acceptable to you, but I must not compromise what I have some reason to suppose to be the truth.

Because I suppose it to be the truth, and not because I seek to discourage you, I am bound to tell you that the circumstance of your having written "a poem of three hundred lines in an evening", or "as much in eight hours as would make fourteen printed columns of All The Year Round", is not at all favourable to your pretensions. After some slight experience of the pains and patience inseparable from authorship, I believe you to be labouring under a very complete, though not very uncommon, mistake.

Therefore I can but give you the assurance that whatever is offered for acceptance here is honestly read, and that if there be the slightest ray of hope in it, it comes before me; but not otherwise.

Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Herbert Lawrence Esquire

To JAMES McCARROLL,[†1] 28 FEBRUARY 1862

MS Huntington Library. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Twenty Eighth February 1862

Sir.

When I have told you that I am truly sensible of the confidence your letter reposes in me, I fear I shall go on to tell you what you are not at all prepared to believe, but which is nevertheless the plain truth.

My influence with publishers, such as it is, is wholly personal and does not extend beyond my own productions. I never in my life succeeded in inducing any publisher to accept a book on my recommendation. To the best of my remembrance, the last trial I made in this wise, was on behalf of Mr. Edgar Poe,[†2] then only known in the United States.[†3] It failed, and I have for many years relinquished the ungracious office, in which I always fared so ill. (At least ten years passed, in the instance I have mentioned, before Mr. Poe's tales were republished in England, by another bookseller.)[†4]

Convinced by experience that I can do nothing for a book in Manuscript that it cannot do for itself, I never mediate now with any publisher whomsoever. In this respect therefore, I am quite unable to render you any service.

In reference to the abstract merit of your writings, and the probability of their finding a London publisher for themselves, I find it very difficult to arrive at a sound conclusion. The pieces in verse[†5] that you have sent me, appear to me to be more original in thought, and more strikingly expressed, than the prose tale. And yet I should deceive you if I concealed my belief that there are many writers of fugitive pieces who write as well, and yet who do not find it feasible or remunerative to collect their productions. In the prose tale I observe some very good description; I have not the means before me of judging of its merits in point of character or story,—but I have no doubt whatever that on this side of the Atlantic the Indian would scarcely interest any more, though he were in the hands of Scott himself.[†6]

On the whole, I fear you have not yet done what would make its way here, or what would make a way for a poem of two thousand lines. But I can honestly add that your cultivation of literature evinces an earnestness of spirit, and a love and knowledge of nature, and a purity of taste, all very interesting and suggestive of advance.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

James Mc Carroll Esquire.

To BENJAMIN WEBSTER,[†1] 28 FEBRUARY 1862*

MS Private.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Twenty Eighth Feby. 1862

My Dear Webster

Many thanks for your remembrance. I will occupy the box,[†2] with much pleasure.

I thought the Jury in that action of yours the other day, sadly in want of a justification for giving a shilling damages when it carried costs.[†3]

If it be true that the "Kean Testimonial"[†4] is to have a place in the Great Exhibition,[†5] I think Morison[†6] entitled to a front row in the Nave for his Lion out of the New Road.[†7] Also, Maria Tolly's[†8] testimonial to Professor Holloway[†9] ought to have a place.

Faithfully Always
CHARLES DICKENS

March

To HENRY CHORLEY,[†1] 1 MARCH 1862

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

16 HYDE PARK GATE SOUTH,
KENSINGTON GORE. W
Saturday First March 1862

My Dear Chorley

I was at your lecture this afternoon,[†2] and I hope I may venture to tell you that I was extremely pleased and interested. Both the matter of the materials, and the manner of their arrangement, were quite admirable; and a modesty and complete absence of every kind of affectation pervaded the whole discourse, which was quite an example to the many whom it concerns.

If you could be a little louder, and would never let a sentence go, for the thousandth part of an instant, until the last word is out, you would find the audience more responsive. A spoken sentence will never run alone in all its life, and is never to be trusted to itself in its most insignificant member. See it well out—with the voice—and the part of the audience is made surprisingly easier. In that excellent description of the Spanish Mendicant and his guitar,[†3] as well as in the very happy touches about the dance and the castanets,[†4] the people were really desirous to express very hearty appreciation; but by giving them rather too much to do in watching and listening for latter words, you stopped them.—I take the liberty of making the remark, as one who has fought with beasts (oratorically) in divers arenas.

For the rest, nothing could be better. Knowledge, ingenuity, neatness condensation, good sense, and good taste, in delightful combination.

Affecy always
CD.

To FREDERIC OUVRY[†1] 1 MARCH 1862*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,

Saturday First March 1862

My Dear Ouvry

I enclose a cheque for the amount of my debt to your firm, as stated in the last account.[†2]

I want to have your opinion on the following point.—I have laid out a good deal of money on my house at Gad's Hill, and have enlarged it and made it very complete. It is quite a place of repute in that country-side, and may safely be considered as a special and valuable little freehold. But there is no doubt that its value, as a Property, would be greatly enhanced, if I could purchase the field— the meadow of 8 acres—which is part of the land I lease under the Rochester Free School.[†3] Now, a shrewd gentleman-farmer in my neighbourhood[†4] expatiating to me on the increased value that would be given to the property if I could secure this ground, suggested that although the Free School cannot sell land, it can exchange land; and that I might get this meadow by proposing to the Trustees to buy certain acres of ground else where (they might possibly suggest where) and make a swop of it.[†5] The thought never came into my own head, but I submit it to you because it is the notion of a man learned in land who gets his money out of land, and would try this, if it were his own case.

Should you think well of the matter, I would then ask you to put yourself in communication with Mr. Essell of the Precinct Rochester,[†6] the Solicitor for the Trustees, and try whether it could be brought to bear. Should you not think well of it, I would make no move.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To BENJAMIN WEBSTER, 1 MARCH 1862

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Saturday First March 1862

My Dear Webster.

It is very comfortable to know that the Shilling does not carry costs.[†1] I was afraid the British Jury had, in that respect, made Donkeys[†2] of themselves.

Faithfully Always
CHARLES DICKENS

To EDMUND YATES, [?3 MARCH 1862]

Mention in Yates to Frank Toole,[†3] 4 Mar 62, MS Cleveland Public Library. Date: probably written the day before Yates wrote to Frank Toole enclosing part of CD's letter to him, (see below).

Inter alia, praising Toole's brother, J.L. Toole,[†4] for his performance at the Adelphi the previous night.[†5]

To MRS HENRY AUSTIN, 4 MARCH 1862*

MS Morgan Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Fourth March 1862

My Dear Letitia

It is a very trying suspense, and yet we must wait.[†6] I was with Taylor on the subject, only last Saturday. The usual distribution of pensions has been delayed by the Prince's death. It is expected every day, and cannot (I think) be in any case delayed much longer. You may be sure of hearing from me, the moment I have intelligence one way or other.

Ever affectionately
CD.

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 4 MARCH 1862

Mention in Anderson Galleries catalogue, Mar 1916; MS 1 p.; dated Office of AYR, 4 Mar 62; addressed Frederic Ouvry.

Referring to an exchange of property with the Rochester Free School.

To TOM TAYLOR,[†1] 4 MARCH 1862*

MS Berg Collection.

16 HYDE PARK GATE SOUTH,
KENSINGTON GORE, W.
Tuesday Fourth March 1862

My Dear Taylor

I meant to have asked you something when I was with you the other day, but the Ghost put it out of my head.[†2]

I have changed houses for 3 months with a friend. I want to draw a can of spring water from the spring in Kensington Gardens, every morning. I can't draw said water without an order from Mr. Cowper.[†3] It is so small a matter that I really do not like to trouble his office with a letter on the subject. If you can, by a spoken word, get the order for me, will you?

Ever faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Tom Taylor Esquire

To WALTER DICKENS,[†4] [?JANUARY-EARLY MARCH 1862]

Mention in To Miss Coutts, 12 Feb 64. Date: probably earlier in the year in which he complained to Cerjat of Walter's debts (16 Mar 62).

To JOHN PAGE HOPPS,[†5] 7 MARCH 1862*

MS Mr D.R. Bentham.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Seventh March 1862

Dear Sir

In reply to your letter, I beg to inform you that Mr. Hughes's[†6] brother[†7] (also a clergyman in Wales) wrote to me to inform me of the death of that good man, but did not refer to the worldly circumstances in which his widow is left. Therefore I have made no enquiry of him on that head. My impression is, that there are no children.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Page Hopps Esquire

To MESSRS WILLIAM & AUGUSTUS WEBSTER,[†1] 7 MAR 1862*

MS A. Webster & Co. (Piccadilly) Ltd.

16 HYDE PARK GATE SOUTH, | KENSINGTON GORE. W.
Friday Seventh March 1862

Mr. Charles Dickens begs to assure Messrs. Webster that he has not the least thought or intention of ceasing to deal with them,[†2] after so many years in which they have given him perfect satisfaction. The explanation of his using this writing paper, is, that he has changed with a friend for three months, and finds the paper placed at his disposal because it bears the address.

To HENRY CHORLEY, 9 MARCH 1862*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

16 HYDE PARK GATE SOUTH,
KENSINGTON GORE. W.
Sunday Ninth March 1862

My Dear Chorley

I can honestly tell you that the improvement in your delivery yesterday,[†3] was something amazing. It left nothing to be desired. Everybody could hear; everybody had leisure to dwell upon the meaning; and your own distinctness and emphasis found an echo in the quality of the general perception. You can hardly know how much was gained by that determined manner of holding the sentences, or what additional vigour the matter (admirable throughout) derived from it in the ears of the audience.[†4]

I shall not commit you to that handsome Chatham proposal,[†5] without first satisfying myself that the people deserve it. They do not support the Institution —which would infallibly perish but for my bringing them in £70 a year by a gratuitous reading[†6]—they don't attend the lectures at all well, except on that annual occasion; and they are, as a local town-functionary informed me, "a tepid lot". So I shall cross-examine the real active men in the management pretty closely, before I hint at the pearl I could get for them.

Are you coming to me on Thursday. It is Copperfield on that day week also, and on that day week also. I mention this, in case you should have other fish to fry on Thursday first.

Ever affecy.

CD.

To THE REV. W. H. BROOKFIELD,[†1] 10 MARCH 1862*

MS Berg Collection.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Monday Tenth March 1862

My Dear Brookfield

You once said you would like to hear Copperfield. Will you come and hear him next Thursday Evening?

With kind regard to Mrs. Brookfield[†2]

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Rev. W. Brookfield.

To SIR CHARLES DILKE,[†3] 10 MARCH 1862*

MS Churchill College, Cambridge.

16 HYDE PARK GATE SOUTH,
KENSINGTON GORE, W.
Monday Tenth March 1862

My Dear Dilke,

Many thanks for your draft in trust for the Artists.[†4] Pray let your good father[†5] know that I will not lose the opportunity of discharging an arrow or so, at the Literary Fund.[†6]

I had an engagement yesterday afternoon, or I should have been very much interested in seeing the fortnight's progress. Perhaps, you will give me another Sunday chance?

The signature is ready on demand.

Faithfully Yours Ever
CHARLES DICKENS

Sir C Wentworth Dilke.

To THE REV. WILLIAM HARNESS,[†1] 10 MARCH 1862*

MS Frank Hollings Bookshop.

16 HYDE PARK GATE SOUTH,
KENSINGTON GORE. W.
Monday Tenth March 1862

My Dear Harness

I am very sorry to reply to your kind note, that we are engaged on Friday. It would have given me great pleasure to come to you that day, under any circumstances, but most of all on your birthday;[†2] however, we are disposed of. So it unfortunately falls out.

On the 20th. two seats under me shall be reserved for you. And at any and all other times I should be delighted to keep the same places at your disposal.

Believe me always | Very faithfully Yours
CD

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 10 MARCH 1862

Text from N, III, 288.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Monday, Tenth March, 1862

My Dear Ouvry,

Enclosed you will find the quarterly spoke[†3] in the wheel of

Yours ever.
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To MRS HENRY AUSTIN, 11 MARCH 1862*

MS Morgan Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Eleventh March 1862

My Dear Letitia.

Will you see if you can find any papers, of any kind, referring to official business?[†1] And, if you can find any such papers, will you let me have them— here—directly? Taylor writes me that a certain application from the City of Carlisle is missing and is particularly wanted.

Still no allotment made of the pension-money!

Ever affectionately
CD.

To THE HON. ELEANOR EDEN,[†2] 11 MARCH 1862*

MS Morgan Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Eleventh March 1862

My Dear Miss Eden.

I have gone through these letters, and am sorry to report to you that I cannot discern in them as much hopeful material as would justify my retaining them with any view to the general edification. I have no doubt that the writer is a good man, but assuredly he seems to me to have as little to tell about an interesting and peculiar state of things, as any man — good, bad, or indifferent — need have. Why, you suggest more, in the least eventful page of our friend Bill,[†3] than this gentleman can in all these words! Compare his letters with the letters of the private soldiers in the Crimea.[†4]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Lena Eden

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 11 MARCH 1862*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Eleventh March 1862

My Dear Ouvry.

It appears to me that they want a distinct offer,[†1] and that they point out that they can do nothing unless they have some distinct offer to communicate to the Trustees.

I am inclined to think (subject of course to your opinion), that it might be well to shape the offer thus: Will the Trustees exchange that field of about 8 acres, for land purchased by Mr. Dickens—in any direction that may be most eligible for them, where land is to be bought—at an outlay of so much money? That is to say—will they exchange the field for so much of such land as a certain stated sum of money will buy?

At the Auction Mart, the same farmer who suggested this idea bid for adjoining land up to £80 an acre—and it was bought high over his head. What do you think the offered sum ought to be? Ought it to be a Thousand Pounds? Or could it hopefully be less?

I think they would be glad to accommodate me if they saw their way. To all temporary intents and purposes, the field is mine for the next 16 years; but if I owned it, the value of my existing freehold as a marketable thing would be greatly enhanced.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Frederic Ouvry Esquire.

To MRS HENRY AUSTIN, 12 MARCH 1862*

MS Morgan Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Twelfth March 1862

My Dear Letitia. Our letters crossed, and my letter (perhaps it has been sent on?) asked you to let me have as soon as possible, any official papers you can find.

In reply to the enclosed,[†2] I would advise you to say that you regret it is not convenient to you to accede to the request.

Will you meet me here next Monday at 11 o'Clock, unless you hear to the contrary in the meanwhile? I hope I may then be able to adjust the accounts.

Ever affectionately
CD.

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 13 MARCH 1862*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Thirteenth March 1862

My Dear Ouvry

I shall (of course) guide myself in the field question, by your advice. When I return to Gad's Hill in June, I will take an opportunity of consulting my friend the farmer as to the money-value of the field, and then we will resume the subject.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Frederic Ouvry Esquire

To CHARLES KENT,[†1] 14 MARCH 1862

MS Rosenbach Museum and Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Fourteenth March 1862

My Dear Kent.

I am truly sensible of the affectionate tone of your welcome letter, and I reply that I accept its proposal[†2] with earnest gratification. I assure you out of my heart that I am proud of it and honored by it.

Your kind wishes for the Readings remind me to say that I believe Copperfield made a very great success last night.[†3] (It has left me half dead to day by the bye.)

Early in June I go back to Gad's Hill, and I hope you will come and rest there many a summer day, and try the green sward again.

Faithfully Yours ever
CD.

To CHARLES FECHTER, 15 MARCH 1862*

MS Private; seen before destruction in Prestwick air-crash, Dec 1954.

16, HYDE PARK GATE SOUTH,
KENSINGTON GORE. W.
Saturday Fifteenth March 1862.

My Dear Monsieur Fechter

I am quite unable to tell you with what interest and pleasure I saw you at my reading last Thursday evening, or with what uncommon gratification I have received your generous letter. To have so impressed the great artist who has again and again profoundly impressed me, is a delight to me really not expressible in written words. And I shall always associate "Copperfield" henceforth with you, and with your fervent sympathy and praise.

For, I owed you much and knew you well, before you achieved your triumphs on our English stage. In Paris, your delicate and subtle knowledge both of nature and of art, and your wonderful hold upon the picturesque and romantic, had strongly attracted me.†1 So that I felt a personal interest and a personal pride when our English public kindled into enthusiasm under your touch.

Forgive me for saying this. I do so, because you could scarcely understand how highly I prize your letter, without knowing how highly I have appreciated and admired you.

Believe me always | Very faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To W. W. F. DE CERJAT,†2 16 MARCH 1862†

MS Berg Collection. Address: A Monsieur W.F. De Cerjat | Elysée | Lausanne | Switzerland.

16, HYDE PARK GATE SOUTH,
KENSINGTON GORE. W.
Sunday Sixteenth March 1862

My Dear Cerjat.

As usual, †aI have been always writing to you (though you have never known it) from the hour in which I received your annual Xmas letter. The Year would not go out naturally now, without that letter: so completely have I come to regard it as a necessary part of that landmark in my life.†a

My daughter naturally liking to be in town at this time of year, I have changed houses with a friend for three months. †aBehold me therefore, established in an odious little London box, which I so thoroughly detest abominate and abjure,†3 that I have not settled down in it to write one word until this very day, but go out regularly after breakfast to my "All The Year Round" office, four miles off. But we are within a few paces of the Ride in the Park, and of Kensington Gardens, and both Mary and Georgina like the change, and as I am always changing (for I have snug bachelor rooms at the Office, whither I come from Gad's Hill two days in every week), I have no reason to complain.

My married daughter†1 goes on very happily, and her husband†2 is a most excellent husband and an upright good fellow—clever too, and making his way. They have no family as yet, and (if they would take my word for the fact) are better without one.†a My eldest boy—†amarried not particularly to my satisfaction†a†3—is in business as an Eastern Merchant in the City, and will do well if he can find continuous energy; otherwise not. My second boy,†4 with the 42nd, Highlanders in India, †aspends more than he gets and has cost me money and disappointed me.†a My third boy,†5 a good steady fellow †abut not at all brilliant,†a is educating †aexpensively†a for engineers or artillery. My fourth†6 (this sounds like a charade), a born little sailor, is a Midshipman in H. M. S. Orlando now at Bermuda, and will make his way any where. Remaining two, at school; elder of said remaining two, very bright and clever.†7 Georgina and Mary keeping house for me; and Francis Jeffrey (I ought to have counted him as the third boy, so we'll take him in here as No. 2 and a half) in my office, [†a]pending a vacancy in the Foreign Office.[†a] Now you have the family bill of fare.

You ask me about Fechter and his Hamlet. It was a performance of extraordinary merit; by far the most coherent, consistent, and intelligible Hamlet I ever saw. Some of the delicacies with which he rendered his conception clear, were extremely subtle; and in particular he avoided that (I can't write the word) brutality[†8] towards Ophelia which, with a greater or less amount of coarseness, I have seen in all other Hamlets. As a mere tour de force it would have been very remarkable in its disclosure of a perfectly wonderful knowledge of the force of the English language; but its merit was far beyond and above this. Foreign accent, of course; but not at all a disagreeable one. And he was so obviously safe and at ease, that you were never in pain for him as a foreigner. Add to this, a perfectly picturesque and romantic "make up", and a remorseless destruction of all conventionalities, and you have the leading virtues of the impersonation. In Othello he did not succeed.[†9] In Iago he is very good. He is an admirable Artist, and far far beyond any one on our stage. A real artist and a gentleman.

[†a]I take the facts of the American quarrel to stand thus. Slavery has in reality nothing on earth to do with it, in any kind of association with any generous or chivalrous sentiment on the part of the North. But the North having gradually got to itself the making of the laws and the settlement of the Tariffs, and having taxed the South most abominably for its own advantage, began to see, as the country grew, that unless it advocated the laying down of a geographical line beyond which slavery should not extend, the South would necessarily recover its old political power, and be able to help itself a little in the adjustment of commercial affairs.[†1] Every reasonable creature may know, if willing, that the North hates the Negro,[†2] and that until it was convenient to make a pretence that sympathy with him was the cause of the War, it hated the abolitionists and derided them up hill and down dale.[†3] For the rest, there is not a pin to choose between the two parties. They will both rant and lie and fight until they come to a compromise; and the slave may be thrown into that compromise or thrown out of it, just as it happens. As to Secession being Rebellion,[†4] it is distinctly proveable by State Papers that Washington considered it no such thing—that Massachusetts, now loudest against it, has itself asserted its right to secede, again and again—and that years ago when the two Carolinas began to train their militia expressly for Secession, commissioners were sent to treat with them and to represent the disastrous policy of such secession, who never dreamed of hinting that it would be rebellion.

Prince Albert's death was a very sad thing for his family. He was neither a phaenomonon, nor the Saviour of England; and England will do exactly without him as it did with him. He was a good example of the best sort of perfectly commonplace man, with a considerable desire to make money. The Queen's condition is very unsatisfactory. We know from a Lady just off her turn of being in waiting that she applies herself to all sorts of details appertaining to the Memorial,[†5] all the morning, and cries all the rest of the day. And an extraordinary indication of an unhealthy state of mind is this—that she persists in striking out the word "late" from all formal mention of him in documents that come before her.[†6] It is not clear to those about her but that she is in the family way—though no one seems to know for certain.[†7] There is no doubt of her setting her face strongly against the Prince of Wales[†1] (a poor dull idle fellow.) I know that at the present time the Exhibition Commissioners are beginning to despair of her allowing him to open the Building, and that their impression is, there can be no ceremony at all beyond some music on a great scale.[†2] (It is not many yards from this house, and a gale of wind last week played the very Devil with the glass just fitted into the two great Domes.)[†a†3]

Last Thursday I began reading again in London—a condensation of Copperfield; and Mr. Bob Sawyers Party from Pickwick [†b]to finish merrily.[†b] The success of Copperfield is astounding. [†a]There were eighteen hundred people in the place, and numbers were turned away.[†a] It made an impression that I must not describe—I may only remark that I was half dead when I had done, and that although I had looked forward, all through the Summer when I was carefully getting it up, to its being a London sensation, and that although Macready, hearing it at Cheltenham[†4] told me to be prepared for a great effect, it even went beyond my hopes. I read again next Thursday, and the rush for places is quite furious. Tell Townshend[†5] this with my love, if you see him before I have time to write to him, and tell him that I thought the people would never let me go away, they became so excited and shewed it so very warmly.

I am trying to plan out a new book, but have not got beyond trying.—[†a] George Watson[†6] came of age this last week, and poor old Rockingham has brightened up again; but the younger brother[†7] is (as usual) the bright and interesting one, and the father[†8] was worth fifty of his successor. [†c]I send my love to Mrs. Cerjat,[†9] and beg to enquire when it will be convenient to her to take another ride up the Great St. Bernard,[†10] and discourse about Cows. Poor Haldimand![†11] I am afraid I shall never contradict him again in this world.[†12] Ever My Dear Cerjat

Affecy & faithfully Yrs.

CD.[†a†c]

To MRS HENRY AUSTIN, 20 MARCH 1862*

MS Morgan Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Twentieth March 1862

My Dear Letitia. It is all right, and the matter is settled.[†1] Will you come here on Monday at 12 o'Clock.

Ever affecy

CD.

To JOHN DARLINGTON,[†2] 23 MARCH 1862

MS Berg Collection. Address: John Darlington Esquire | Whitley Cottage | Bradford.

London, Sunday Twenty Third March 1862

My Dear Sir

I feel truly obliged to you for your kind letter giving me the sad details of poor Angus Fletcher's[†3] death.[†4] I had seen the announcement in the Obituary of the Times,[†5] and had been hoping to receive some private intelligence on the subject.[†6]

It is a mournful end; but only so to us, for it would seem that he can have known very little, if any thing, of the closing circumstances by which he was surrounded. I think I have always had an impression that the poor dear fellow would die in some strange way.—I have known him to come and go so unaccountably, that I have never considered him quite fit to be trusted with himself when he had the least uneasiness or emotion on his mind.

Probably you and I knew him better, through a good quarter of a century, than any other of his friends ever did. He was a most affectionate and gentle creature, and I have many a time had occasion to observe how easily his erratic tendencies could be held in check by a few words of considerate reasoning from those whom he loved. No doubt this was your experience too.

With renewed thanks | I am My Dear Sir
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Darlington Esquire.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?23 MARCH 1862]

Text in F, IV, vii, 374. Date: probably the same day that he heard the details of Fletcher's death from John Darlington (see last).

Poor Fletcher is dead. Just as I am closing my letter I hear the sad story. He had been taken suddenly ill near the railway station at Leeds, and being accidentally recognised by one of the railway men was carried to the Infirmary, where the doctor obtained his sister Lady Richardson's[†1] address,[†2] and wrote to her. She arrived to find him in a dangerous state, and after lingering four days he died. Poor Kindheart! I think of all that made him so pleasant to us, and am full of grief.

To MRS HENRY AUSTIN, 24 MARCH 1862*

MS Morgan Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Twenty Fourth March 1862

My Dear Letitia

I want the names and addresses of the Butcher Grocer
and Dairyman.

Also the address of one Fricker[†3] whose small bill I have.[†4] Will you send these to me as soon as you can, since I cannot dispatch John[†5] to Ealing and Brentford until I can give him all that has to be done there.

Affecy. Ever

CD.

To MICHAEL COSTA,[†6] 24 MARCH, 1862*

MS Queen's University, Kingston, Ontario.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Monday Twenty fourth March 1862

My Dear Costa

I am delighted to hear from Chorley that you are coming to my Reading on Thursday. It will be extremely pleasant and interesting to me to have you for an auditor. Enclosed are tickets for two chairs that will be set for you very near to me.

Believe me with great sincerity
always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

M. Costa Esquire

To DR CHARLES MURCHISON,[†1] 24 MARCH 1862

Extracts in T. F. Madigan catalogue "Word Shadows of the Great" (1934-5), and Samuel T. Freeman & Co. catalogue, Nov 1935; MS 1p.; dated Office of AYR, 24 Mar 62; addressed Dr Murchison.

I beg to assure you that I am happy where any opportunity offers of helping so excellent an Institution as the Fever Hospital[†2] and of testifying my respect for the good and earnest men who work in it. The Committee are at perfect liberty to reprint the article, "A Mortal Struggle"[†3] in their Report or otherwise, as may best serve their benevolent object.

To PETER ROBINSON,[†4] 24 MARCH 1862*

MS Auckland Public Library, New Zealand.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Monday Twenty Fourth March 1862

Mr. Charles Dickens (as executor under the will of the late Henry Austin Esquire of Little Ealing) sends his compliments to Mr. Peter Robinson, and begs to have his account,[†5] in order that it may be examined and discharged.

To WILKIE COLLINS, 25 MARCH 1862

Extract in Anderson Galleries, Dec 1936; MS 1p.; dated Office of AYR, 25 Mar 62; addressed Wilkie Collins.

I do not think there is any opening for a Literary Club, or that the design (which has often failed) would succeed. Therefore I could not honestly append my name to any proposal for founding one, and why should I trouble Mr. [Fowell][†6] Walton[†7] to come to me.

To THE REV. WILLIAM HARNESS, 25 MARCH 1862*

MS Fales Library, New York University. Address: Wait. | The Rev William Harness | 3 Hyde Park Terrace.

16 HYDE PARK GATE SOUTH,
KENSINGTON GORE, W.
Tuesday Twenty Fifth March 1862

My Dear Harness

If you like to take your chance of the dove-tailing, I will take mine, and we will dine with you on the 1st. with great pleasure. I have no other reason to doubt it than that I hold—and express, when I see occasion—a very strong opinion in reference to a certain system of small newspaper canvass and persuasion.[†1] It is possible that my feeling on this head may be known, and may be considered very impolite and disagreeable, not to say republican and atheistical. I cannot answer for that.

So you shall take me if you like to take me, and leave me if you like to leave me. Thus much for your private ear, as I am sure you know full well that there need be no ceremony or reserve between us.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CD.

To JAMES AKHURST,[†2] 26 MARCH 1862*

MS Yale University Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Twenty Sixth March 1862

Mr. Charles Dickens, Executor to the Estate of the late Henry Austin Esquire begs to enclose Mr. Akhurst a cheque in discharge of his account,[†3] and requests a formal receipt by post.

To F. D. FINLAY,[†4] 27 MARCH 1862

MS Comtesse de Suzannet.

London, | Twenty Seventh March 1862

My Dear Mr. Finlay

As you sent me your paper with that very cool account of myself in it, perhaps you want to know whether or no it is true. There is not a syllable of truth in it.[†5]

I have never seen the person in question but once in my life,[†1] and then I was accompanied by Lord Orford,[†2] Mr. Arthur Helps[†3] the Clerk of the Privy Council, my eldest daughter, and my sister in law. All of whom know perfectly well that nothing of the sort passed. It is a sheer invention of the wildest kind.

Faithfully Yours ever
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN JAMES,[†4] 27 MARCH 1862

Text from N, III, 290.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Twenty Seventh March 1862

Sir,

In the discharge of my trust, I can only pay Mr. Henry Austin's own lawful debts. His father's I have nothing to do with. I cannot overstep my responsibility.

Your obedient Servant
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 30 MARCH 1862*

MS Huntington Library.

16 HYDE PARK GATE SOUTH,
KENSINGTON GORE. W.
Sunday Thirtieth March 1862

My Dear Ouvry

I hear (from a Trustee), that at the last meeting of the Trustees of the Rochester Free School, Essell reported your communication; and that thereupon Somebody got up and said "that Mr. Dickens being an honor to the neighbourhood, he begged to express his feeling that every concession ought to be made to Mr. Dickens, and wished to say that he was for giving Mr. Dickens every facility for possessing himself of the field". This was warmly assented to by all but one man, who said that he had no doubt it was all right, and he had a great respect for Mr. Dickens, but he thought they would let Mr. Dickens do any thing down in that country, and there might be too much of it", and the like. Don't you think that under these circumstances some kind of communication from you is necessary to prevent Essell's[†1] House from considering themselves slighted? As, for instance, that we wish to make an exchange on liberal terms, and that when I return in June you and I will see them &c?

Ever Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

My only object is, to keep Essell's[†1] people on our side.

To F. D. FINLAY, 31 MARCH 1862

MS Comtesse de Suzannet.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Monday Thirty First March 1862

My Dear Mr. Finlay

Make what use you like of my note.[†2] The custom of astonishingly audacious assertion that is gradually expanding in print, cannot be too decisively "put down".

We go back to Gad's Hill probably on the 1st. of June. But I shall be to and fro between it and London, no doubt, and shall hope to induce you to make us another Kentish visit.[†3] As I read three times in June—to finish with—I may also make you acquainted with Copperfield.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Francis D Finlay Esquire

To HENRY MORLEY, 31 MARCH 1862*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Monday Thirty First March 1862

My Dear Morley.

I think I can hardly be mistaken in believing that I saw you at my Reading last Thursday. It has really been on my mind ever since, for, to the best of my belief, there were no newspaper Stalls that night. My mind misgives me that you paid.

Now if you did, I beg you to give me your promise that you will never do such an outrageous thing again. It will be a true pleasure to me at all times to send you anything you want for anyone belonging to you, and I shall not rest satisfied with the sincerity of your repentence unless you put me to the proof.

Faithfully Yours ever
CHARLES DICKENS

Henry Morley Esquire

To MISS ELLEN STONE,[†1] 31 MARCH 1862*

MS Benoliel Collection.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Monday Thirty First March 1862

My Dear Ellen. I have clutched the enclosed chairs for next Thursday, out of the fiery furnace[†2] of demand. If you should happen to be engaged, will you let me have them back immediately? If you are free, keep them and come to Copperfield.

Faithfully Yours ever
CD.

April

To MRS HENRY AUSTIN, 1 APRIL 1862*

MS Morgan Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday First April 1862

My Dear Letitia

Have you had an opportunity of going into the Nye[†3] question with Mr. Bowring? I want to pay him, and to close the accounts.[†4]

Ever affecy.
CD.

To CHARLES FECHTER, 1 APRIL 1862*

MS P.C. Dickens.

16 HYDE PARK GATE SOUTH,
KENSINGTON GORE. W.
Tuesday First April, 1862

My Dear Monsieur Fechter

I really must write you a line—I can't help it—to thank you for the magnificent performance of last night.[†5] It was so grandly wrought up to the wonderful intensity of the last act, that I went out of the Theatre in a kind of dream of passion and pathos and art and power, and could not trust myself to speak about it until I had had a cooling ride of a mile or two. We never left off talking about it here until we went to bed, and at breakfast this morning we began again where we then left off, and are still on the same subject without any present prospect of wearing it out. For many and many a long day, I have not been so moved and overpowered.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To RICHARD MONCKTON MILNES,[†1] 1 APRIL 1862*

MS Trinity College, Cambridge.

Tuesday First April, 1862

My Dear Milnes

Many thanks. But I have been out to breakfast, only twice in my life—both times ages ago—once with Rogers,[†2] and once with you in Pall Mall. Moreover, I read Copperfield on Thursday night.[†3] And when I do that, I am in lavender on a shelf all day.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

R.M. Milnes Esquire

To THOMAS BEARD, 2 APRIL 1862

Extract in Scheuer catalogue, 1927; MS 1 p.; dated Office of AYR, Wed., 2 Apr 62; addressed Thomas Beard.

With the exception of the introduction—which is too much in the nature of a set theme or essay, for this purpose—I am happy to accept the paper on the fancies of lunatics.[†4] This is my day in the week for Mauscripts, or I would not have let two days go by without writing to you on the subject

To THE REV. WILLIAM HARNESS, 2 APRIL 1862*

MS Frank Hollings Bookshop.

Kensington, Wednesday Night Second April, 1862

My Dear Harness.

If you will send me round your Stall Ticket by the Bearer, I will, by some fell means or other, make my people substitute a chair near me in its place.

(What business have you with any ticket?)

Further: let us take you, and bring you back. We go rather early—20 minutes past 7—but you will not mind that.

Affecy. Ever

CD.

To EDMUND YATES, 3 APRIL 1862

MS Robert H. Taylor Collection, Princeton University.

Kensington, Thursday Evening Third April 1862

My Dear Edmund

I write just before going down to St. James's Hall and Copperfield—therefore hurriedly.

On Tuesday next at 6, with the greatest pleasure.

Tomorrow I shall be out of town all day. But I will meet you at the office on Saturday at any time you like after 11 in the forenoon.

Tell Fechter that since he and I spoke together, I have had an opportunity of getting some reliable information concerning Mr. Walter Montgomery.[†1] It is not at all against him, beyond this;—when he was last at Birmingham (just now) he was getting dissipated. This is a final reason, if any were wanted, for seeing him carefully, before making any engagement with him.

I wish Fechter would take among his young ladies, Miss Maria Ternan.[†2] Not because I have a great friendship for her and know her to be one of the best and bravest of little spirits and most virtuous of girls (for that would have nothing to do with it), but because I have acted with her, and believe her to have more aptitude in a minute than all the other people of her standing on the stage in a month. A lady besides, and pretty, and of a good figure, and always pains-taking and perfect to the letter. Also (but this has never had a chance) a wonderful Mimic. Whatever he shewed her, she would do. When I first knew her, I looked her in the eyes one morning at Manchester, and she took the whole Frozen Deep out of the look and six words.[†1]

A line to the office on Saturday morning, to say When.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To MRS HENRY AUSTIN, 4 APRIL 1862*

MS Morgan Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Fourth April 1862

My Dear Letitia

I pay Nye today,[†2] and also Garrard and James, the Solicitors,[†3] in order that I may be able presently to send you their receipts, which will enable Mr. Bowring to get the £50.[†4] But the matter will still be incomplete without receipts for the taxes. And I don't know what taxes remain due. Can you tell me?

Affectionately Ever
CD.

To SIR ALEXANDER DUFF GORDON,[†5] 4 APRIL 1862*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Fourth April 1862

My Dear Gordon

I rather think that Mrs. White[†6] (the best of women) would, in her quiet and modest way, prefer silence on the subject of her lost husband.[†7] I cannot be sure of this just now, but I can ascertain before long. If any idea had occurred to her of recording his worth in print, I think she would assuredly have imparted it to me.

My daughter heard this morning from Clara White's husband.[†8] He and she came home rapidly from Florence, on receiving the bad tidings, and are now with Mrs. White at Bonchurch. She has become calm and composed. Poor White had thought himself much better, on the very day before his death. He was seized on the day of his death with such excruciating pain that it was very difficult indeed to get him up to bed. For the last two or three hours he seemed to have no pain. He could not speak, but passed very quietly away. Poor dear fellow! I knew him many years, and had a great affection for him. What a great Cemetery one walks through, after forty!

I am delighted to hear such good accounts of Lady Gordon.[†1] And as to Marguerite,[†2] I think your daughter will have given her a new life.

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Sir Alexander Duff Gordon

To THOMAS BEARD, 5 APRIL 1862

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Place | Maida Hill | W.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Saturday Fifth April 1862

My Dear Beard.

I don't think there can be any objection to your replying that there would seem reason for the Unknown's trying again. He may be worth something (it is difficult to say: for most of the Lunatic stories that he tells, I know already), and if he be, so much the better for both sides.[†3]

I saw Mrs. Frank[†4] with you last Thursday, and looking wonderfully handsome. The general improvement in the audiences is very remarkable; they are so much more quick and so much more delicate than they used to be. Of course it is to be supposed that one knows better how to do it after hard practice and experience, but the audiences refine too in a very curious way.

Will you come and dine at the nastiest little house in London (16 Hyde Park Gate South) tomorrow week, at 6? We are not likely to have any one with us but Charley Collins and Katie.

Ever Faithfully

CD

Fechter in the last Act of Ruy Blas is very fine art indeed.

To W. H. WILLS, 5 APRIL 1862[†1]

MS Huntington Library.

16 HYDE PARK GATE SOUTH,
KENSINGTON GORE. W.
Saturday Fifth April, 1862

My Dear Wills

A little packet will come to you to day from Hunt and Roskell's:[†2] almost at the same time, I think, as this note.

The packet will contain a claret Jug.[†3] I hope it is a pretty thing in itself for your table, and I know that you and Mrs. Wills[†4] will like it none the worse because it comes from me.

It is not made of a perishable material, and is so far expressive of our friendship. I have had your name and mine set upon it, in token of our many years of mutual reliance and trustfulness. It will never be so full of Wine, as it is to day of affectionate regard.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. H. Wills Esquire

To [?WILLIAM] CHALLINOR,[†5] 7 APRIL 1862*

MS Private.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Monday Seventh April, 1862

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his Compliments to Mr. Challinor, and begs to inform Mr. Challinor (in reply to his obliging note), that he never makes terms for his Readings with any Institution or with any individual.

To JOHN FORSTER, [8 APRIL 1862]

Extracts in F, VIII, vi, 692 and n. Date: both extracts 8 Apr 62, according to Forster.

The money returns have been quite astounding. Think of £190 a night! The effect of Copperfield exceeds all the expectations which its success in the country led me to form. It seems to take people entirely by surprise. If this is not new to you, I have not a word of news. The rain that raineth every day[†6] seems to have washed news away or got it under water.

Your mention of poor Felton's[†1] death[†2] is a shock of surprise as well as grief to me, for I had not heard a word about it. Mr. Fields[†3] told me when he was here that the effect of that hotel disaster of bad drinking-water had not passed away; so I suppose, as you do, that he sank under it. Poor dear Felton! It is twenty years since I told you of the delight my first knowledge of him gave me, and it is as strongly upon me to this hour.[†4] I wish our ways had crossed a little oftener, but that would not have made it better for us now! Alas! Alas! All ways have the same finger-post at the head of them, and at every turning in them.

To MRS HENRY AUSTIN, 9 APRIL 1862*

MS Morgan Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Ninth April 1862

My Dear Letitia

With the papers you sent me from Mr. Bowring, which I return enclosed, you will find Nye's receipt, and the receipt of Mr. Lawrence's[†5] solicitors. These will enable Mr. Bowring to get the allowance of £50 for improvements—unless he should want the Tax receipts.

Ever affecy.

CD.

To PROFESSOR RICHARD OWEN,[†6] [?9 APRIL 1862]

Mention in the Rev. Richard Owen, Life of Richard Owen, 1894, II, 129. Date: according to Richard Owen (above), quoting Mrs Owen's diary entry for 10 Apr 62, the note from CD came "yesterday evening"; probably written that day.

Asking Owen and his wife if they would like to come to St James's Hall to hear one of his readings.[†7]

To HENRY COLE,[†1] 10 APRIL 1862*

MS Morgan Library.

16 HYDE PARK GATE SOUTH,
KENSINGTON GORE. W.
Thursday Tenth April, 1862

My Dear Mr. Cole.

I cannot honestly become a Member of the Committee which you do me the honor to ask me to join.[†2] The plain truth is, that I have no faith in this kind of "Memorial" in any case.[†3] I have never yet observed it to do any good whatever, either towards preserving the remembrance of the virtuous Dead, or towards establishing any sort of concord or contentment (as to the accomplishment of the object in hand), among the Living.

With this heresy in my heart, how can I represent myself as one of the Orthodox!

Believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Henry Cole Esquire

To J. B. BUCKSTONE,[†4] 12 APRIL 1862*

MS Private.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Saturday Twelfth April 1862

My Dear Buckstone

I cannot possibly attend the dinner,[†5] because I have a special engagement to dine elsewhere. If I were not absolutely predisposed of, I would come, in response to your letter.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

J.B. Buckstone Esquire

To MR REDDALL,[†1] 12 APRIL 1862*

MS (fragment) Professor Harry Stone.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Saturday Twelfth April 1862

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Reddall,[†2]

To MR TWINING,[†3] 12 APRIL 1862*

MS Private.

London Saturday Twelfth April / 1862.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Twining, and begs to say that as he will be rarely in London during the forthcoming season, and as it is a principle with him not to associate himself, merely in name alone, with any undertaking, he must decline the honor of joining the General Congress Committee.[†4]

To SIR JAMES EMERSON TENNENT,[†5] 14 APRIL 1862*

MS Widener Collection, Harvard.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Monday Fourteenth April 1862

My Dear Tennent.

There is much that is amusing and curious in this paper.[†6] I shall be very glad to accept it for publication in these pages, IF[†7] the author should think it worth while to recast it, and tell what is told, in plain narrative form. Our readers would not take to this Dialogue, I feel sure. If you ask me why, I can give no better reason than that I don't take to it myself, and that I see no reason for it, and feel it to be awkward.

Believe me Ever | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Sir James Emerson Tennent

To JOHN LEECH, 16 APRIL 1862

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: John Leech Esquire / 32 Brunswick Square / W.C.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Sixteenth April 1862

My Dear Leech.

I have been coming to you at least a dozen times, but have been constantly beset by some engagement.

Shall I come to you—where the Pictures are[†1] —say on Friday? Any time on that day will suit me. I will come at 2 on Friday, unless I hear from you to the contrary. If Friday should not suit you, I will suggest another day forthwith.

Ever Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

John Leech Esquire

To THE PRESIDENT[†2] AND COUNCIL OF THE ROYAL ACADEMY, 18 APRIL 1862*

MS Huntington Library. On mourning paper.

Friday Eighteenth April, 1862.

Mr. Charles Dickens is happy to have the honor of accepting the invitation of the President and Council of the Royal Academy, to the Anniversary Dinner on Saturday the Third of May.[†3]

To WALTER THORNBURY,[†4] 18 APRIL 1862

Text from MDGH, II, 178-9.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday, 18th April, 1862.

My Dear Thornbury,

The Bow Street runners[†5] ceased out of the land soon after the introduction of the new police.[†6] I remember them very well as standing about the door of the office in Bow Street. They had no other uniform than a blue dress-coat, brass buttons (I am not even now sure that that was necessary), and a bright red cloth waistcoat. The waistcoat was indispensable, and the slang name for them was "red-breasts," in consequence.[†1]

They kept company with thieves and the like, much more than the detective police do.[†2] I don't know what their pay was, but I have no doubt their principal complements were got under the rose.[†3] It was a very slack institution,[†4] and its head-quarters were The Brown Bear,[†5] in Bow Street, a public-house of more than doubtful reputation, opposite the police-office; and either the house which is now the theatrical costume maker's, or the next door to it.

Field,[†6] who advertises the Secret Enquiry Office, was a Bow Street runner, and can tell you all about it; Goddard,[†7] who also advertises an enquiry office, was another of the fraternity.[†8] They are the only two I know of as yet existing in a "questionable shape."[†9]

Faithfully yours always
[CD]

To F. W. DEVEY,[†10] 21 APRIL 1862*

Text from facsimile in unidentified catalogue.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Twenty First April 1862

Sir

I beg to assure you that I can give you no new advice in reference to your proposed pamphlet.[†11] You must trust a publisher. To the best of my belief, it is not very likely that such a pamphlet would—at the best—do more than pay its cost of production in print and paper.

Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

F. W. Devey Esquire

To EDWIN ROFFE,[†1] 26 APRIL 1862*

MS Berg Collection.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Saturday Twenty Sixth April 1862

Sir

Allow me to thank you for the presentation-copy you have had the kindness to send me of your very neatly printed and quaint book.[†2] The filial affection expressed in that work of love is very interesting, and does honor to your heart as well as to your father's memory.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Edwin Roffe.

To DION BOUCICAULT,[†3] 29 APRIL 1862*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Twenty Ninth April 1862

Dear Sir

I feel a little difficulty this morning as to writing direct to Mr. Toole and Miss Simms,[†4] for two reasons. Firstly, because very much of what they said in the more emotional parts, failed to travel to where I sat (possibly owing to the accidental way in which the blank spots in the House chanced to fall), and got altogether lost upon the road. Secondly, because Mr. Emery[†1] was very good,[†2] and it might seem invidious towards him and the rest. Therefore perhaps the more gracious course is for me to ask you to have the kindness to represent me as begging you to say that I was much pleased with the whole performance, and thought it exceedingly good. (The supper scene was particularly well done throughout.)[†3]

I must add that I thought the Vampire[†4] very picturesque and romantic and put upon the stage with an admirable knowledge of artistic effect.[†5]

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Dion Boucicault Esquire

To CHARLES FECHTER, 30 APRIL 1862*

MS Mr Jacob Christensen.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Thirtieth April 1862

My Dear Fechter

It came into my head when I was looking at you last Saturday night, that I may perhaps be able to get you a new Play by the Author of "The Lady of Lyons". I think you will agree with me that a new play of real power, interest, and situation, by that hand, would be a great card for your game at the Lyceum.

Now, Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton told me, some time ago, that there was a certain play of his, originally called the Sea Captain, in which Macready acted on certain occasions at the Haymarket:[†6] which he (Bulwer Lytton) had withdrawn and locked up, because he was not of opinion that he had made a complete work of it—that, after keeping it by him for some years, he had taken it out, entirely reconstructed it, reformed it, and re-written it[†7]—that he had taken great pains with it and thought it very good—but that he did not see his way to a good actor for the chief part, and had put it in his desk again.

I have asked him to let me have the Manuscript. I will read it carefully, and, if it prove as good as I expect, will send it privately to you to read. Nothing of this need be known beyond ourselves. If you should think that there is any real great chance in it, I will answer that the author would make any change in it that I might suggest to him.

Thinking and hoping that you may be interested in this idea, I send you this note.
Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To EDWARD W. COOKE,[†1] [?APRIL 1862]

Envelope only in Dobell catalogue No. 2 (Oct 1911). Address: Edward Cooke, Esquire, A.R.A.; Date: between 1851 (when Cooke became ARA) and 1864 (RA); Cooke recorded in his Diary (MS National Maritime Museum, Greenwich), 23 Apr 62 "Wrote to C. Dickens"; whether eliciting a reply from CD or in answer to a letter from him, Apr 62 seems likely.

To JOHN FORSTER, [APRIL 1862]

Extract in F, IX, v, 740-41. Date: Apr 62, according to Forster.

Alas! I have hit upon nothing for a story.[†2] Again and again I have tried. But this odious little house[†3] seems to have stifled and darkened my invention.

May

To JAMES PAYN,[†4] 1 MAY 1862

Extract in Anderson Galleries catalogue No. 2266 (Apr 1928), MS 2 pp.; addressed James Payn; dated Thursday 1 May 62.

Many thanks for our blushing friend.[†5] He must have had a bad time of it this morning (in his own person) at about Hyde Park Corner. When I came into town, I think I observed him quartered in a Hansom Cab behind a black horse rampant who was standing on his own tail sparring with four hoofs at a policeman.[†6]

To CHARLES KENT, 2 MAY 1862

Mention in N, III, 293.

To LADY OLLIFFE,[†1] 2 MAY 1862

Extract in T.F. Madigan, The Autograph Album, (April 1934); MS 1 p.; dated Office of AYR, 2 May 62; addressed Lady Olliffe.

A thousand thanks for the beautiful carpet. It is exactly what I wanted and could not by any possibility have been better adapted to its purpose. Please let me know how much I am (in money) in your debt.[†2]

To MRS HENRY AUSTIN, 3 MAY 1862*

MS Morgan Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Saturday Third May 1862

My Dear Letitia.

The enclosed papers will explain themselves. As there was something to be got from Mr. Hemsley[†3] (on account of Nye's bill, you know), I thought it would be more courteous to him to pay the taxes, and enable Mr. Bowring to mention that they were paid, and to claim the necessary allowance on their account. For this reason I send you the documents.

Ever affecy.

CD.

Still no news![†4]

To THOMAS HEADLAND, 4 MAY 1862

Extract in Maggs catalogue, No. 286 (1912); MS 1 p.; addressed Thomas Headland; dated Kensington Gore, 4 May 62.

It did not occur to me yesterday that I have an appointment on Tuesday, and must leave the office at ½ past 2.

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 4 MAY 1862

MS Lytton Papers.

16 HYDE PARK GATE SOUTH,
KENSINGTON GORE. W.
Sunday Fourth May, 1862

My Dear Bulwer Lytton

Will you trust that play you re-wrote from the Sea-Captain,[†1] to my hands for a time? I know Fechter very well, and, besides being an admirable actor, he is a very clever fellow. Next winter he will be Lessee and Manager of the Lyceum, and will doubtless make a fine Theatre of it. I should much like him to have the chance of such a Play, and I should also like to go thoroughly into it and form my own opinion as to the romantic interest he could press—and express—out of it. Forster was under the impression that he still had the play in his keeping, but he now remembers that he returned it to you. I have told Fechter (in confidence) of my intention to write you this note.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

Answer to the office

To [LADY OLLIFFE], 5 MAY 1862

Extract in T.F. Madigan catalogue, c. 1931-2; MS 1 p; dated Office of AYR, 5 May 62. Address: see To Lady Olliffe, 2 May; clearly the same addressee.

I presented the carpet, green box and all! But I will make application for the restitution of the green box and will send it you when recovered. Ever affectionately yours,

CD.

To CAMILLE SILVY,[†2] 5 MAY 1862

Extract in Les Autographes Thieory Bodin, Christmas 1981; MS (retranslated into English) 1 p.; dated Office of AYR, 5 May 62; addressed Camille Silvy.

I shall not fail to communicate your letter to the author of the article in question.[†3] Allow me to assure you that I had great pleasure in publishing the article in these pages, since it expresses an opinion of your works that I share from the bottom of my heart.

To [?CHARLES EDMONDS],[†1] 6 MAY 1862

MS Mr J. Stevens Cox.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Sixth May 1862

Dear Sir

Can you recommend me any collection of remarkable escapes—from prisons, and perils of other kinds?

Also, any generally interesting and good Miscellany for chance reading? I want such a book very much, in my rooms here; my Library being in Kent. Is the old London Magazine[†2] a good one for such a purpose; or can you send me any thing[†3] more likely to suit the object?

I want also:

Millingen's History of Duelling

Lewes's Physiology of Common Life.

Washington[†4] Irving's works complete (the bound copy)[†5] and will you send me, for inspection, a volume or two of the bound Kerr's collection of Voyages.[†6]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 7 MAY 1862

MS Lytton Papers.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Seventh May 1862

My Dear Bulwer Lytton

I shall be very much interested in reading the play[†7] when you come back, and will lose no time about it.

Fechter's second actor, as at present arranged, will be a certain Mr. Neville,[†8] now at Robson's,[†9] who is very good. But there is another man under consideration who, in a part with no genteel comedy in it, might be better.[†10] His arrangements are scarcely born yet, as his term of management does not commence until Christmas. But he is picking up every promising and trainable person, and I think may be able to satisfy you aforehand, concerning his "first lady".

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To MRS HENRY AUSTIN, 8 MAY 1862*

MS Morgan Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Eighth May 1862

My Dear Letitia. I see no objection whatever to your buying, say £500 worth of some good stock or bonds that will pay 4 percent.[†1] Therefore I will lay that money out in such a purchase in your name (acting, of course, under Coutts's advice.)

The Readings are becoming very trying; the continuous effort and exertion, in so large a place, being quite wasting on a hot night. I shall finish as early in June as I can. Friday evening the 6th. of June will certainly be the last Copperfield, and that I think by far the best Reading. If you will come that night, let me know how many Stalls I shall send you, and I will take care that they are reserved near me.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To W. GALE,[†2] 8 MAY 1862*

MS Auckland Public Library, New Zealand.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Eighth May 1862

Sir

I have the pleasure of having, at my house in Kent, a little picture of yours.[†3]

Dining at the Royal Academy last Saturday, I greatly admired another little picture of yours, representing a Captive feeding a bird.[†4] If it should happen to be unsold, I take the liberty of informing you that I should be very happy to become its possessor.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. Gale Esquire

To PROFESSOR RICHARD OWEN, 8 MAY 1862*

MS Benoliel Collection.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Eighth May 1862

My Dear Owen.

My daughter Mary is away on a visit, and I cannot answer your kind and welcome note until she comes home. I expect her tomorrow. No time shall be lost in reporting to you as soon as she appears; but next Sunday and next week I know are impracticable. This knowledge I derive from my own engagements, which are unfortunately many just now.

Miss Hogarth joins me in kindest regard to Mrs. Owen, your son,[†1] and yourself.

My Dear Owen | always Cordially Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To HENRY AUSTIN JNR,[†2] 9 MAY 1862

Text from facsimile in National Library of Scotland.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Ninth May 1862

Dear Mr. Austin

In reply to your note received this morning, I must assure you that you are very welcome to the little service I have had the pleasure of rendering you.[†3] You are so punctual, zealous, and obliging, on all occasions that I am glad to have found a way of acknowledging it.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MESSRS COUTTS & CO.,[†4] 9 MAY 1862

Mention in The Collector, Oct-Nov 1944; MS 1 p.; dated 9 May 62; addressed Messrs Coutts.

Ordering them to purchase £500 of Midland Bradford stock in the name of Letitia Austin, a widow.

— X - 81 —

To [?CHARLES EDMONDS],[†1] 10 MAY 1862*

MS Mr J. Stevens Cox.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Saturday Tenth May 1862

My Dear Sir

I have the book I return herewith, already. Narratives of Peril and suffering, I am glad to retain.[†2]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To WILKIE COLLINS, [?10 MAY 1861]

Mention in next. Date: probably written same day.

To FREDERICK POLLOCK,[†3] 10 MAY 1862

MS Private.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Saturday Tenth May 1862

My Dear Pollock

I have sent your note to Wilkie Collins, who I have no doubt will be greatly interested in it, and much gratified by the pains you have so kindly taken to clear the case.

From Cheltenham I have not heard anything; until this very morning I did not know of the event;[†4]—though when I was staying with Macready[†5] a few months ago, it cast its shadow before.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

— X - 82 —

To BARON BERNHARD TAUCHNITZ,[†1] 10 MAY 1862

Extract in Curt Otto, Der Verlag Bernhard Tauchnitz, 1837-1912, 1912, p. 57.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Saturday, May 10th. 1862.

I am happy to accept your proposition, and I hope (and believe) you will find the little book[†2] generally acceptable.

To MRS HENRY AUSTIN, 11 MAY 1862*

MS Morgan Library.

16 HYDE PARK GATE SOUTH,
KENSINGTON GORE, W.
Sunday Eleventh May 1862

My Dear Letitia

I think you may be sure that Taylor would not like to ask any question, of any one, on the subject of the pension, and that he would (however reluctantly) decline to do so. Firstly, because everything that could possibly be done to render the application special and unlike any other, we did. Secondly, because it would assuredly not serve the cause to press it. We know that the Memorial was given to the Prime Minister[†3] by Cowper,[†4] the head of the office. We know that every influential signature attached to it has the reasons for such superscription specially and strongly stated by the signer on the document itself. We know that Lord Carlisle,[†5] Lord Shaftesbury,[†6] Lord Llanover,[†7] and others, have thus urged the Minister under their hands in an altogether exceptional way, and beyond the usual restraints understood to be imposed on people who hold office of any kind. To ask any of them, in addition, to ask the Minister whether he means to do what he is besought to do, [would][†8] be to touch personal pride and sensitiveness. You may rely upon it that if the pension be attainable at all, the very best and most prudent course has been taken towards its attainment, and that nothing can strengthen it. If you do not have it this year, you may have it next year; but I fear it is impossible to relieve your suspense.

Ever affecy.
CD.

To MRS COPE,[†1] 11 MAY 1862

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, Oct 1981; MS (3rd person) 1 p.; dated Hyde Park Gate, 11 May 62; addressed Mrs Cope

He begs to return the enclosed very odd letter.... It is curious that in an epistle so strangely constructed and so short, some fifty words should be correctly spelt.

To CHARLES FECHTER, 16 MAY 1862*

Text from transcript by Edgar Johnson of MS Maurice Inman Inc.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Sixteenth May, 1862

My Dear Fechter,

On Friday in next week, I hope to have the great pleasure of seeing you here, at half past five o'clock. It is possible—but not very probable—that some private business[†2] may take me out of town in the course of the next week. I am therefore not quite certain when I may be here, but I am pretty sure to be here every day (except Wednesday) at 12 o'clock.

My idea of a Play that might be done for you,[†3] under our joint direction, is founded on home love, on forgiveness, and on your nationality as a Frenchman. I would have two periods in it; one, when France and England are in alliance and at peace. In the first period, I would lay the scene in France and make you a man devoted to animosity towards Englishmen, because your son— brother—what you will—has been slain in battle. In the second period I would make you the son of that very man, with feelings so changed by the blessed change of the time, as that you satisfy yourself you best venerate and honor your brave father's memory by marrying into the family against whom the old animosity existed. And you never tell them the old story, but keep it in your own breast.

I think I see here, a means of great popularity, and of a fine domestic play, and of a perfectly new situation—individually and nationally—for you.

Au reste,—My instincts (like yours) seldom deceive me, and I have a hearty interest in your undertaking and in you, and hope to prove myself a good and useful friend at your right hand.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To THE REV. WILLIAM HARNESS, [?MID-MAY 1862]

Text from the Rev. A. G. K. L'Estrange, The Literary Life of the Rev. William Harness, 1871, p. 168. Date: almost certainly 1862, the year in which Clara White (see below) was married; May was the only month in which the 26th was a Monday: therefore letter probably written a week or two before 26 May.

My dear Harness,

Will Miss Harness[†1] and you come and dine with us, at the Star and Garter at Richmond, on Monday the 26th at a quarter past six? Besides ourselves there will be only[†2] Townshend[†3] and a young bride, a friend of ours, who from being a quiet clergyman's daughter in the Isle of Wight has suddenly expanded (like a girl in a Fairy Tale) into fifty thousand a year and a castle.[†4]

Affectionately yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To DAVID ROBERTS,[†5] 16 MAY 1862

Mention in Sotheby catalogue, Aug 1888; MS 1 p.; dated 16 May 62; addressed David Roberts.

To MRS HENRY AUSTIN, 17 MAY 1862*

MS Morgan Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Saturday Seventeenth May 1862

My Dear Letitia. I had not seen what you quote from the Times,[†6] but I now hope that our suspense will soon be relieved.

Shall we go over the accounts together finally, this day week—here—at eleven o'Clock? There is no reason why the balance should not now be paid over to you. My duties are ended.

There can be nothing against your asking De Gex whether he is likely to be able to find you a Mortgage.[†7] But I greatly doubt any body's finding a safe one at a higher interest than 4 per cent. You must always remember when you hear of high interest, the terms and chances on which money is lent. In the case of that Life Assurance and the money borrowed on it, the high interest of 7 per cent was paid because if the lender had wanted the money back, he couldn't have got it. The only security for the principal sum was the Life Assurance— and no one can say when that will become available for the repayment.

I have lately heard from Taylor, who is as much in the dark as I am concerning the pension.

Ever affecy.

CD.

To R. BERNAL OSBORNE,[†1] 18 MAY 1862*

Text from transcript by Mark Girouard of MS Mrs Silcock.

Sunday Eighteenth May 1862

My dear Sir,

Are you fortunately disengaged for Monday the 26th? And if so, will you dine with me and my daughters at the Star and Garter at Richmond that day, at 6 punctually? We have really no party, and we dine there because I "detest abominate and abjure" this corner.[†2]

I go back to my own Falstaff house on the 1st of June, and, as it is but an hour's railway ride, I am not without hopes of enticing you to come there, one fine day.

You see that I am as good as my word at Lady Molesworth's,[†3] and that I don't mean to let you pass out of view easily. Pray be as good as your word too.

Faithfully yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Bernal Osborne, Esq.

To JOHN LEECH, 19 MAY 1862

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: John Leech Esquire | 32 Brunswick Square.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Monday Nineteenth May 1862

My Dear Leech. I think Egg's[†4] suggestion a sound one. Therefore I have taken out the words "at a reasonable cost". As the address[†5] stands, I think it just hits the purpose and could not well be better—though I say it as shouldn't.[†6]

I shall come up to see how you get on, before you are quite floored.

Ever Faithfully
CD.

To MRS HENRY AUSTIN, 20 MAY 1862*

MS Morgan Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Twentieth May 1862

My Dear Letitia.

I enclose the cheque for Ten Pounds.[†1]

Let me know when you return from the Silvas,[†2] and we will make an appointment. Or even without an appointment, I think I am safe to be here every morning next week at eleven o'Clock.

Ever affecy
CD.

To MRS CARLYLE,[†3] 20 MAY 1862*

MS New York Public Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Twentieth May 1862

My Dear Mrs. Carlyle.

Here are two tickets for my last Copperfield this season. I hope you may like it.

My love, as ever, to Carlyle. | Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To THE REV. WILLIAM HARNESS, 20 MAY 1862*

MS Private.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Twentieth May 1862

My Dear Harness

As a token of my noble forgiveness of you for introducing yourself into the Hall last Saturday in that base manner,[†4] I send you the ticket for the last Copperfield this season.—You will understand my clemency is conditional on your not offending again.

Ever affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

To TOM TAYLOR, 21 MAY 1862

Mention in Samuel J. Davey catalogue No. 31 (1889); addressed Tom Taylor; dated 21 May 62.

To JOHN LEECH, 28 MAY 1862

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: John Leech | 32 Brunswick Square.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Twenty Eighth May 1862

My Dear Leech.

I wouldn't send vaguely to the Editors of papers and periodicals, and their friends, for this reason—that it would involve you in much the same difficulties as a Private View. For example, the Sunday Times takes Dobbs, Hobbs, and Snobs, and leaves out Bobbs. And you know Bobbs, and Bobbs knows Hobbs, and Bobbs writes to you to know why Hobbs got in, when he (Bobbs) didn't? You then either answer Hobbs and wish yourself dead and buried, or you don't answer Hobbs, and he becomes such an infernal nuisance in consequence, that you wish him dead and buried.

Now, I would have no private view whatever—for any body. I would send cards to all respectable Editors (in the case of Daily Editors at all events, for 2), and I would open on a certain day at a certain hour, and there you have beginning and end.[†1]

I will get Charley Collins to do an article for these pages,[†2] and I will go over the Proof, and put in any thing that I see wanting.

Ever Faithfully
CD

To BENJAMIN WEBSTER, 28 MAY 1862

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,

Wednesday Twenty Eighth May 1862

My Dear Webster,

I am obliged to be at Gad's Hill on Monday, and to remain there until I read on Friday. I have not been there these four months, and have made a variety of appointments of business, which must be kept.— Unfortunately for my powers of responding to your kind offer. I consider it only deferred.

Don't forget your booked engagement to me. I will let you know a week beforehand, what train I recommend to Stanny and Davy Roberts.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To MRS EMMETT,[†1] [?2 MARCH-29 MAY] 1862

MS (envelope only) Mr Hugh Maguire. Address: 1 Cloudesly Square | Islington | N. PM London M[] 2[] 1862. Date: both day and month are incomplete.

To THOMAS ADOLPHUS TROLLOPE,[†2] 30 MAY 1862

Extract in Goodspeeds Bookshop catalogue No. 147 (1922); MS 1 p.; addressed T. A. Trollope; dated Kensington Gore, 30 May 62

Can we not have the pleasure of seeing you at my Falstaff house on Gad's Hill? We can give you a bed and a pretty view.

To MRS HENRY AUSTIN, 31 MAY 1862*

MS Morgan Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Saturday Thirty First May 1862

My Dear Letitia

Will you let me know (here) how you are? I hope to get to you soon after midday tomorrow (Sunday) but cannot be so sure of it as to make quite certain. Therefore write in any case. I have been hoping to come to you every day since I saw you; but I have been sorely worried and distressed of late.

If you decide to come to the Reading, you must forewarn me, in order that I may provide your means of getting in.

Is the enclosed account correct? I never heard of it until yesterday.

Ever affecy.

CD.

June

To MRS HENRY AUSTIN, 2 JUNE 1862*

MS Morgan Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Monday Second June 1862

My Dear Letitia

Our letters crossed.

I now send you the little inscription.[†3] I have left the age blank: not being exactly sure of it.[†4]

There is a good thousand pounds in my hands—a few pounds over. I shall be glad to get rid of it, as soon as the Pension List comes out. All the accounts and vouchers are ready for you.

Say that you come here on Friday at halfpast 7[†1]—or, if you will have some tea first, at 7. My time for being there, is about 20 minutes before 8. Mary and Georgy are going, but their entrance is by another door. You will see wretchedly, but hear well.

Ever affectionately
CD.

To DR EDUARD HANSLICK,[†2] 2 JUNE 1862

Text from facsimile in Alexander Autographs Inc., catalogue, June 1997.

Gad's Hill Place | Higham | by Rochester, Kent.
Monday Second June, 1862

Dear Sir

Allow me to have the pleasure of sending you enclosed, a ticket of admission to my Reading next Friday evening.[†3] I fear you may find it rather difficult to follow me as I read: the more so, because my lecture is condensed from various parts of the story of David Copperfield, and ranges in an hour and a half over the whole book.[†4] But it is always pleasant to me to know that I seldom (if ever) read in public without having some of your great intelligent countrymen among my auditors.

Believe me Dear Sir | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Dr. Eduard Hanslick

To DAVID ROBERTS, [?2 JUNE 1862]

Mention in To Stanfield, 2 June 62. Date: probably same day.

To EDWIN ROFFE, 2 JUNE 1862

Mention in American Book Prices Current, 1906; dated 2 June 62; addressed Edwin Roffe.

To BENJAMIN WEBSTER, [?2 JUNE 1862]

Mention in next. Date: no doubt written same day.

To CLARKSON STANFIELD, 2 JUNE 1862*

MS Yale University Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Monday Second June 1862

My Dear Stanny

The train I recommend for Saturday the fourteenth June, is from North Kent Railway, London Bridge

at

2..20 in the afternoon

My station is Higham (the next beyond Gravesend) for which take your ticket.

I have sent a note of this Train both to Davy and to Webster

Ever affectionately Yours

DICK.

To SAMUEL LOVER,[†1] 5 JUNE 1862

MS W. A. Foyle.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Fifth June 1862

My Dear Lover.

I am the man whose superintendence[†2] you praise. I am proud to have your praise.

It unfortunately happens that neither of the enclosed pieces can be made available here. Firstly, because we have twice printed verses having the same reference as your charming lines on the Poet's Home. Secondly, because I would rather not (if I know it) publish translations from the German. The extent to which poetry of that origin is offered here, is almost incredible.

In reply to your question concerning the rate of pay, it is never less, for Prose, than a Guinea a page: the writer retaining the right to republish. For poetry, it varies according to the nature of the lines. I believe I may venture to say that it is always liberal.

Like you, I live a country-mouse life—and in the same County too.[†1] My little place on the top of Falstaff's Gad's Hill, is almost as well known on that side of Kent as Falstaff.

My Dear Lover | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Samuel Lover Esquire

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 6 JUNE 1862

MS Lytton Papers.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Sixth June 1862

My Dear Bulwer Lytton

I have read the Play[†2] with great interest and admiration. It seems to me exceedingly strong. And supposing Vyvyan[†3] and Lady Montreville[†4] to be thoroughly done, I think such an Artist-Manager as Fechter could make the other people out of a good Company. Vyvyan is clearly the part for the greatest actor,[†5] so far as my opinion goes.

As to all the appliances and illusions of the scene,[†6]—in Fechter's hands they would be simply perfect.

Now, I have communicated to him (whom I can trust) that you are indisposed to have the play acted, but that you have yielded to my desire to make him acquainted with the Play. Let me see how it strikes him, and then report to you. If I were he (and here I express myself as an Actor) I should feel perfectly sure of my effect in Vyvyan, and should cast about for the mother, with the certainty of being able to force her, out of my own strength, into the expression of half her part.[†7] But he may see the Play—not as I do, but as you do. In the latter case, I should give up and hold you right. In the former case, I should urge you to reconsider the question of his bringing it out. I will write to you again, as soon as he knows the play, and we have talked together.

Ever Faithfully
CD.

To JAMES SHERIDAN KNOWLES,[†1] [?10] JUNE 1862

Mention in Knowles to M. J. Barry, MS Professor K. J. Fielding; dated Glasgow, 11 June 62.

Telling Knowles that he would be happy for Barry[†2] to visit him.[†3]

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 12 JUNE 1862

MS Lytton Papers.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Twelfth June 1862

My Dear Bulwer Lytton

Fechter's opinion of the Play[†4] is exactly yours. Therefore I give in. He has read it with great interest, and has been strongly impressed by its picturesqueness. To my surprise, his notions of what he could have done personally in it and with it, tended decidedly towards the younger brother.[†5] He came down to Gad's Hill on Tuesday to talk it over, and I explained to him that as he was of your mind I had nothing to say but that I did not agree with either of you! I return the MS herewith.

French's[†6] departure quite amazes me. I too thought he was yours for life. When I was at Knebworth he expressed as much, and was perfectly satisfied and extremely grateful. But there is always a latent hankering on the part of this class, I believe, to get out of service if possible.

I am afraid I do not know of a successor whom I could of my own knowledge and experience recommend. An English man-servant who can make his way abroad and make the best of it, is so very rare an article. And I have been so fortunate in servants, that French and two other men (one dead,[†1] and the other with me now after 18 years),[†2] are all I can be said to have had. If I should become suddenly illuminated with any remembrance likely to serve your need, I will be sure to impart it.

Ever Yours
CD.

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 12 JUNE 1862*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Twelfth June 1862

My Dear Ouvry

I do not quite understand whether you have actually sent that proposed letter (concerning the House of Gloom) to Fraser.[†3] If not, might it not be best to write in the first instance only this:—

That Wills and I have been to see the house, and went over it with much interest and pleasure, and may you now inquire what conditions he would propose to append to the gift?[†4]

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To JOHN POOLE,[†5] 13 JUNE 1862*

MS Morgan Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Thirteenth June 1862

My Dear Poole.

I have been so overwhelmed with business to day and have yet so many appointments to keep, that I regret to find I cannot get out to Kentish Town. To night I go home, and I shall not be in town again until I come to read next Thursday. On the Friday morning I take Miss Hogarth (who I am sorry to say is very far from well), away for a week, in the hope of doing her service through a little change.

Therefore the best thing will be for you to write to me,[†1] addressed

Gad's Hill Place
Higham
by Rochester

—and tell me what you would have said, if I could have come to you. Don't mind how you write. I know your hand well enough to read it with ease.

Faithfully Ever

CD.

To MRS BALL WILSON,[†2] 13 JUNE 1862*

MS Mr Peter Harries. Address: Mrs Wilson | 4 Malton Place | Richmond Road | Barnsbury | N.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Thirteenth June 1862

My Dear Rebecca. I really do not remember any request of yours for four autographs.—I may have read it and forgotten it, but my letters come by hundreds, and I have many things to think of.

The autographs are enclosed and the tickets for my next Reading[†3] shall be sent to you.

Affecy.

CD

To CHARLES FECHTER, 16 JUNE 1862*

MS Salisbury House Library, Iowa.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Sixteenth June 1862

My Dear Fechter

Will you kindly send me that Reading-Book of mine, to my office in Wellington Street? I did not think I should want it, but I am going to read something it contains.[†4]

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS HENRY AUSTIN, 20 JUNE 1862*

MS Morgan Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Twentieth June 1862

My Dear Letitia. I can not remember whether I received your last letter, or not!—But I have been so anxious and distressed about Georgina (who has some affection of the heart), that I have been altogether dazed. I think I must have had the note, and yet I cannot remember one word of it.

Enclosed is the cheque.[†1] The pension suspense cannot—thank God—last much longer.

Ever affecy.
CD.

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 20 JUNE 1862*

MS Huntington Library.

Lord Warden, Dover
Friday Evening Twentieth June 1862

My Dear Ouvry

On Saturday the 28th. I shall be at Gad's Hill, and on the following Sunday, Monday, Tuesday, Friday, Saturday, Sunday, and Monday. Will you look at your book of engagements and see if you can come down? And when?

The authority who suggested to me the exchange of land,[†2] has now promised to get me the refusal of some land close by me, which Horne (the Railway-Carriage man)[†3] would otherwise buy out of hand.

The price is heavy, but it is supposed to be a plot of ground which Essell would advise the trustees to take in exchange.

I am on my way to Paris, but must be at the office next Friday, because I read in London that night. Will you give me a line there?

Ever Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

We hope you will be able to make a day or two with us. We have very pretty places in the neighbourhood, and are not uncomfortable people (I believe) to stay with.

To EDWARD WILSON,[†1] 20 JUNE 1862*

MS State Library of Victoria, Melbourne.

GAD'S HILL PLACE | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Twentieth June 1862

Dear Sir

I am exceedingly obliged to you for your kind letter, and beg to thank you for your offer of service. But I know little or nothing more of the Australian rumour than you do, at this present writing.[†2]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Edward Wilson Esquire

To THE REV. WILLIAM HARNESS, 26 JUNE 1862*

MS Frank Hollings Bookshop.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Night Twenty Sixth June 1862

My Dear Harness. I have been in France,[†3] and am only just now (8 in the Evening) come home. I shall be delighted to see you at the Reading.[†4] You will want no other passport than your card to Headland. We seem to be going to have a tremendous house.

Ever affectionately Yours
CD.

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 27 JUNE 1862*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Twenty Seventh June 1862

My Dear Ouvry

We shall be charmed to see you tomorrow. The train we shall go by, leaves London Bridge at 10..15. Let us meet there at 10. When I say "us", I mean all that will remain of myself. For I read tonight, and shall be melted.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [28 JUNE 1862]

Extract in F, VIII, vi, 693. Date: 28 June 62, according to Forster.

I finished my readings on Friday night to an enormous hall[†1]—nearly £200. The success has been throughout complete. It seems almost suicidal to leave off with the town so full, but I don't like to depart from my public pledge. A man from Australia[†2] is in London ready to pay £10,000 for eight months there. If——

To THE GOVERNORS OF SIR JOSEPH WILLIAMSON'S FREE SCHOOL, ROCHESTER, 30 JUNE 1862

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Monday Thirtieth June 1862

Gentlemen.

Reverting to a proposal already made in general terms by my solicitor Mr. Ouvry of Lincoln's Inn Fields London, to Messrs. Essell[†3] and Co.[†4] I beg to submit my application to you in detail.

It is that you will have the kindness to consider the feasibility of exchanging the field at the back of my property here (marked 404 in the accompanying plan) for the plot of land marked 384 in the said plan.

I believe it will appear to you on enquiry that the land I offer in exchange for the meadow is very advantageously situated, and is of greater extent than the meadow, and would be of greater value to the Institution whose interests you represent. On the other hand the acquisition of the meadow as a freehold would render my little property more compact and complete.[†5]

I have the honor to be | Gentlemen
Your faithful and obedient Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

To
The Governors of

Sir Joseph Williamson's Free School
Rochester.

To JOHN FORSTER, [JUNE 1862]

Extract in F, I, iii, 39. Date: June 62, according to Forster.

I must entreat you, to pause for an instant, and go back to what you know of my childish days, and to ask yourself whether it is natural that something of the character formed in me then, and lost under happier circumstances, should have reappeared in the last five years. The never-to-be-forgotten misery of that old time bred a certain shrinking sensitiveness in a certain ill-clad, ill-fed child, that I have found come back in the never-to-be-forgotten misery of this later time.

July

To THOMAS BAYLIS, 2 JULY 1862

MS British Library. Address: Thomas Baylis Esquire | Thames Bank | Fulham | London S.W. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Second July, 1862

My Dear Mr. Baylis

I have been in France, and in London, and in other parts of Kent than this, and everywhere but here, for weeks and weeks. Pray excuse my not having (for this reason specially) answered your kind note sooner.

After carefully cross-examining my daughter, I do NOT[†1] believe her to be worthy of the Fernery.[†2] Last autumn we transplanted into the shrubbery, a quantity of evergreens previously clustered close to the front of the house, and trained more ivy about the wall, and the like. When I ask her where she would have the Fernery and what she would do with it, the witness falters—turns pale—becomes confused—and says "perhaps it would be better not to have it at all." I am quite confident that the constancy of the young person is not to be trusted, and that she had best attach her Fernery to one of her chateaux in Spain, or one of her English castles in the Air. None the less do I thank you for your more than kind proposal.

We have been in great anxiety respecting Miss Hogarth, the sudden decline of whose health and spirit has greatly distressed us. Although she is better than she was, and the Doctors are on the whole cheerful, she requires great care and fills us with apprehension.[†3] The necessity of providing change for her, will probably take us across the water very early in the Autumn; and this again unsettles home-schemes here, and withers many kinds of fern.

If they knew (by "they" I mean my daughter and Miss Hogarth) that I was writing to you, they would charge me with many messages of regard. But as I am shut up in my room, in a ferocious and unapproachable condition, owing to the great accumulation of letters I have to answer, I will tell them at lunch that I have anticipated their wish. As I know they have Bills for me to pay and are at present shy of producing them, I wish to preserve a gloomy and repellent reputation.

My Dear Mr. Baylis | Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To THE REV. CHARLES B. GIBSON,[†1] 2 JULY 1862*

MS Private.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Second July, 1862

Dear Sir

I beg to thank you for the book[†2] you have had the kindness to forward to me, and which (by reason of my having been in France), I have only this day received.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Rev. Charles B Gibson

To W. C. MACREADY, 2 JULY 1862*

MS Morgan Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Second July, 1862

My Dearest Macready

I have been again and again going to write to you to tell you with what pleasure and interest I heard of that noble Old Parr's[†3] dropping the two last consonants in his name![†4] But incessant occupation, and a new cause for anxiety, have led to my laying down a new large piece of pavement in the infernal regions.[†5] I am quite an extensive contractor in that wise!

The Readings have been surprisingly successful in London. I leave off with great reluctance, and, but that I cannot bear to break faith with the public, ought to have run on into the Autumn.

The new cause of anxiety at which I have hinted, is the sudden decline of the health and spirit of Georgina. She is labouring under degeneration of the heart. Elliotson[†6] is very hopeful of her, and she is certainly better than she was; but I (who know her best, I think) see much in her that fills me with uneasiness. The change that two months have made, is extraordinarily great. All that alacrity and "cheer of spirit" that used to distinguish her, are gone. She is quite unfit, even for the distraction and disturbance consequent on the presence of a few visitors in the house. And she is very low about herself, almost as soon as one has ceased to speak to her, after brightening her up. My present project is, to remove to Paris early in the Autumn, for a couple of months of complete change. You may imagine with what solicitude Mary, Katie and I watch the condition of our best and dearest friend—the most unselfish, zealous, and devoted creature that ever lived on earth, I thoroughly believe. No one can ever know what she has been to us, and how she has supplied an empty place and an ever widening gap, since the girls were mere dolls.

The prospect of seeing you here, fills all the house with joy, and Georgina most of all.

John Doe and Richard Roe[†1] shall have my best attention. I have taken cordially to the physiognomy of the book, and am going to lie on my back under an oak tree (when it doesn't rain—which it always does), and read it out, at a sitting. Pray thank Mr. Gould[†2] very gratefully, from me, for his kind remembrance, and tell him what you know of me as a ready and attentive audience.

With best loves to dear Mrs. Macready, and Katie, and Butty (the beloved of my Soul), and the Deposed Johnny, and the Usurper.[†3]

Ever My Dearest Macready | Your most affectionate
CHARLES DICKENS

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 2 JULY 1862

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Second July, 1862

My Dear Ouvry

"Young Essell"[†4] dined here yesterday, and communicated the intelligence generally described in the enclosed note from Cobb;[†5] Essell and Co. will communicate with you, and I apprehend we shall get the field without much difficulty.

Now the question arises, what shall we do about the land which the Lord has bestowed on Brooker.[†1] He (Brooker) was here yesterday afternoon and saw my daughter and said that I could not have possession of the land until Michaelmas twelvemonth, as his brother would not give it up;[†2] but that I could buy it now, if I chose, and "compensation" should be finally made me for the loss of that term's interest of the money. He wished to be informed what I thought about it. Will you write to him, according to your opinion?[†3] His address is simply Mr. Brooker, Higham, by Rochester.

I could purchase both the pieces of ground without inconvenience, as I have the money in the funds. But I don't care to have Land, because I don't understand it, and because that sort of proprietorship is not in my way, and seems to me to put a public man of my notoriety—with a good natured reputation—at a disadvantage with tenants. But if you think Brooker's land so good an investment and so desirable to hold against Horne (who has a long head and a scheme) as to outweigh this consideration, I shall at once defer to your opinion.

The matter with Brooker of course presses.

Ever Faithfully

CD

To MRS HENRY AUSTIN, 3 JULY 1862*

MS Morgan Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Third July, 1862

My Dear Letitia

I saw that Paragraph in the Times[†4] about the Pension granted to Miss Robinson.[†5] More than that; Miss Robinson wrote to me, to thank me for my assistance in getting it!—I cannot in the least remember who she is, or what she has written; but it is clear I must have signed her application.[†6] As I have forgotten all about it, I suppose it to have been originally made some time ago.

I also saw about Mrs. Cross[†1]—a personage quite unknown to me by name.

How these people come to be informed of their fortune, I don't know. But I rather fear that it has an unpromising look for us.

Georgina is better; but we have cause for great anxiety about her. She is suffering from degeneration of the heart, and has quite lost her alacrity and strength.

The Readings ended with a most tremendous crowd and great enthusiasm. I came back for the last one from a week's wandering in the strangest towns in France, and I go back again for another adventure next week—this day week, probably.

With love | Ever affectionately

CD.

To JOHN FORSTER [6 JULY 1862]

Extract in F, I, i, 11-12. Date: 6 July 62, according to Forster.

You know me better than any other man does, or ever will.

To MRS COWDEN CLARKE,[†2] 7 JULY 1862

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds. Address: Mrs. Cowden Clarke | 69 Dean Street | Soho | London | W.C.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Seventh July, 1862

My Dear Mrs. Cowden Clarke

I am very angry with you and your other Half[†3] for having the audacity to go to my readings without first writing to me. And if I had not been in France since I read last, and were not going back there immediately, I would summon you both to come to this Falstaff-Ground and receive the reward of your misdeeds.

Here are the two green leaves on my table here, as green as ever.[†4] They have not blushed for your conduct at Saint James's Hall, but they would have done it if they could.

With indignant regard, Believe me ever

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Cowden Clarke

To JOSEPH JOACHIM,[†1] 7 JULY [1862]*

MS Dartmouth College, New Hampshire. Date: 7 July was a Monday in 1862.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Seventh July.

My Dear Mr Joachim

They tell me here that you have not read "Great Expectations", and that you were looking for it in the Library the other day. I have instructed my publishers to send you a copy of the book, and I beg your acceptance of it in remembrance of its author.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To JAMES SHERIDAN KNOWLES, 7 JULY 1862

MS National Library of Scotland.

GAD'S HILL PLACE | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Seventh July, 1862

My Dear Knowles.

I have received your letter here, and answer it hastily for a reason that will explain itself.

I am away to France forthwith, for a holiday, and am not likely to be in London for many weeks to come.[†2] It is some years since I was last across the channel,[†3] and I am going on a little tour of observation that may keep me wandering for some time.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

James Sheridan Knowles Esquire

To GABRIEL LEGOUVÉ,[†1] 7 JULY 1862*

MS M. Jean Paladilhe.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Seventh July, 1862

My Dear M. Legouvé

I could not easily tell you, if I were to try, with what pleasure and interest I have received your letter, or how earnestly I admire your eloquent and affecting tribute to the noble Manin.[†2] I have read your verses with tears in my eyes, and feel personally grateful to you for so beautifully expressing the homage of a generous heart to a great and good gentleman.

The pleasant hours I passed in your society when I was last resident in Paris,[†3] have often recurred to my remembrance. I hope to renew them in the months of October and November next, when I hope to stay in Paris once more, bringing with me my eldest daughter and her Aunt.

If you come to London in the course of this month, will you kindly send your address to my office, 26 Wellington Street, Strand. It is uncertain when I may be in London, as I am now going on a little Tour in Belgium. But if I should be so fortunate as to return to England while you are in London, I shall try to persuade you to come and pass a day in this pretty country where I live; it is little more than an hour's journey by Railroad.

Meanwhile and always, Believe me
Your faithful friend | and admirer
CHARLES DICKENS

À Monsieur Legouvé

To G. K. WHAMMOND,[†4] 7 JULY 1862*

MS Yale University Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Seventh July, 1862

Sir

Your letter of the Thirtieth of last month, apprises me that I owe you an apology. I very readily pay it and beg you to accept it.

The copy of your publication which accompanied that letter, duly reached me.[†5] But neither of the two previous copies came into my hands, though it is possible that they reached my office. Its daily receipts in such wise are far too extensive to be within my personal knowledge.

The facetious paper for which I am obliged to you,[†1] I have found very amusing and very well written. Some few of the local allusions I want the clue to (as an Outer Saxon), but I have enjoyed its humourous and not ill-natured spirit, and am happy to tell you so.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

G. K. Whammond Esquire[†2]

To MRS HENRY AUSTIN, 8 JULY 1862*

MS Morgan Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Eighth July, 1862

My Dear Letitia.

It is quite clear that our uncertainty as to the Pension, can last but a very little longer. As soon as we have got an end to it, we will take counsel together what to do for the best.

Early on Thursday morning I am going to Paris; but I purpose being back again certainly within a week.

I hope Georgina is a little better.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 9 JULY 1862

Mention in N, III, 300; dated Gad's Hill Place, 9 July 62.

To R. BERNAL OSBORNE, 16 JULY 1862*

Text from transcript by Mark Girouard of MS Mrs Silcock.

Gad's Hill Place
Wednesday Night, Sixteenth July, 1862

Dear Bernal Osborne

I have been in Paris, and went away at short notice. Before going, I asked my daughter to write to you and remind you that you had said you would come down here at some odd time.

(You see that I remember our compact at Lady Molesworth's)

As I cannot quite make out from my said daughter whether she made, or even attempted to make, the case clear to you, I send you this note to state it. I came back only last night.

From this time until next Wednesday, I shall be here. From next Wednesday until the following Saturday evening, I shall be away. If you should have leisure—and inclination—to make us a visit, this is an expansive little house and a comfortable one and we can give you a country bedroom and a hearty welcome. Higham Station is little more than one hour from London Bridge, and I will meet you at it whenever you can come. Observe once more:— I am here until Wednesday—away until the Saturday afterwards—after that, here again.

Believe me always | Faithfully yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Bernal Osborne Esq.

To MRS HENRY AUSTIN, 18 JULY 1862*

MS Morgan Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Eighteenth July 1862

My Dear Letitia

Say Wednesday, here, at any time you like from a quarter before 11 until 2. I heartily feel for your sorrow on your wedding-day.[†1] Georgina had thought of it and spoken of it to me.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To FREDERIC CHAPMAN, 18 JULY 1862*

MS (first page only) Johns Hopkins University.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Eighteenth July 1862

My Dear Sir

You do not tell me, as to the Christmas Books,[†2] how many illustrations you want in all.[†3] If you will let me know, here on Wednesday morning, you shall have them all on that day.

With thanks for the offer of illustrations to the Child's History, I think it would not be advisable to use any that have already appeared elsewhere.[†4] I will defer the question of reprinting it, until I shall have gone over our Midsummer accounts.[†5]

To THE HON. MRS R. MONCKTON MILNES,[†1] 18 JULY 1862*

MS (copy) Trinity College, Cambridge. Address: Mrs Milnes | 16 Upper Brook Street | Grosvenor Square | W.

GAD'S HILL PLACE
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, | KENT.
Friday Eighteenth July 1862

My dear Mrs. Milnes

I think the photograph of your charming labour of love from the Cricket comes out exceedingly well:[†2] though it does not render full justice to the delicacy and beauty of your design. It is highly interesting to me to have it, and I thank you for it heartily.

Pray convey my kind regards to Milnes. I am exceedingly sorry to hear of his being ill.

I am glad you liked Copperfield. It is far more interesting to me than any of the other Readings, and I am half ashamed to confess—even to you—what a tenderness I have for it!

Believe me always | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOSEPH MORRIS,[†3] 18 JULY 1862*

MS Yale University Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Eighteenth July 1862

Sir

In reply to your letter of the day before yesterday, I beg to say that I am willing to hold the house No. 4 Grafton Terrace[†3] under the conditions of the existing agreement between us, at the advanced rent of which you have given me notice, from Michaelmas next.[†4]

Your obedient Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. J. Morris

To MR SMYTH,[†5] 18 JULY 1862*

MS Boston Public Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Eighteenth July, 1862

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his Compliments to Mr. Smyth, and begs to thank Mr. Smyth for his obliging note and humourous piece.

To FELIX SPIERS,[†1] 19 JULY 1862

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, Apr 1977; MS 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill Place, 19 July 62.

Courteously declining an offer.[†2] In bringing our business to an end, let me again assure you that it has inspired me with a great respect for the open and plain dealing of your House.

To W. W. F. DE CERJAT, 20 JULY 1862*

MS University of California, Los Angeles.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Twentieth July, 1862

My Dear Cerjat.

With what unspeakable amazement did I find your letter here last night!

Answer me this—and presently:— Cannot you and your daughters come to us next Sunday, or next Saturday afternoon, until Monday? You will be as quiet here as at Lausanne, and can be restored to your sightseeing and your training for idiotcy by 10 minutes past 10 on Monday morning. We are little more than an hour from London, by North Kent Railway from London Bridge. Train to Higham can be settled, and I will be at the station to drive you up here. Shake up those bewildered brains, take counsel with the fair energetic sight seers, and reply Yes. Observe why I want a written answer instead of coming to you. I am obliged to remain here—for visitors—until Wednesday morning, and then I am obliged to go away on a distant engagement until Saturday afternoon. Write therefore my addled friend, and tell me on which day you will come.

Ever affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

To WILKIE COLLINS, 20 JULY 1862*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Twentieth July, 1862

My Dear Wilkie.

I heard from Frank Beard that you had been taking Walter's pills out of the coal-scuttle; not finding any other convenient instrument in the Fort House[†1] large enough for a dose. But I rejoice to learn that you are all right now, and able to appreciate the house of houses.

Georgina continuing to alarm me, and both Beard and I doubting Elliotson to be mistaken, we have had (unknown to him) a consultation with Dr. Billing.[†2] He says it is plainly a case of aneurism of the aorta, and that the swelling presses on a bronchial tube and roughens the breathing, and presses on the spinal cord and produces a slight tendency towards paralysis. He does not apprehend danger, as she has no hard work to do and can be kept quiet. But unless I greatly mistake a face, Beard is less hopeful. And so, I confess to you, am I in my secret heart. No man on earth ever had such a friend as I have had—and have—in her.

What with this anxiety, and what with my own old load (of which you know something) I am become so restless that I cannot answer for any thing. But I hope to give you notice of a day at Broadstairs yet.[†3] We purpose going to Paris in October—not sooner. Sometimes, in a desperate state, I seize a pen, and resolve to precipitate myself upon a story. Then I get up again with a forehead as gnarled as the oak tree outside the window, and find all the lines in my face that ought to be on the blank paper.

Meanwhile the rain pours down and down, and the wind blows most furiously, and the French Mail can't get across (think of that—last Thursday—in mid July!), and your house rocks, as I have felt it often. Yesterday the labouring men here played a Cricket Match in the field, and they looked as if they were working a January passage across the Atlantic. All the flowers, and half the leaves, are blown away; and Mrs. Bouncer coming out on the lawn staggering, with her hair all blown the wrong way, looks as if she had "tumbled up" the companion to take the sun at noon. Not that there is any sun to take, but that there might be.

That infernal Church[†4] of yours will be the death of me. An enthusiastic female living at a house called Maisonette, writes me a sentimental letter every week, for a subscription. Also, her husband, "honorary architect", sends drawings of the proposed Clock. These I destroy with fury, and maintain a grim silence.

Will you send me the Second Volume[†1] to the office, as soon as I may and can have it? I am all impatience to read it. You will see on Wednesday week, a very curious little paper called Balloon Mad.[†2] It is a real experience of Morley's, and strikes me as being very pretty and pitiable.[†3] The Prison matron,[†4] very well done by Mrs. Linton,[†5] in the same No.

I have been reading Le Théâtre[†6] Impossible, by Edmond About.[†7] And I can't say much for it. They advised me here, to read "A Romance of a Dull Life."[†8] I tried. But coming into the Dull Life immediately, and finding the Romance indefinitely postponed, I left off again.

The Demon[†9] is here, and grows (you will be interested in knowing) exactly like a Pre-Raphaelite she-saint, or Virgin. With her beastly little head on one side as she twines at the table, and a pickled eel disporting itself in her bowels, she looks as religious as the National Gallery, also a certain blueness in her complexion and a general corkscrewing in her pose, materially heighten the illusion. Worms of various species are her meat, and Vinegar her drink; and after whopping Tizzy, the Groom's child, yesterday behind a door, she emerged to say that she hadn't done it, "because it were her dooty to dough unto others as she would have them dough unto her".—I am lying by for an opportunity of tipping her backwards down the Tunnel steps.[†10]

So no more at present from Yours ever affectionately

CD.

To R. BERNAL OSBORNE, 20 JULY 1862*

Text from transcript by Mark Girouard of MS Mrs Silcock.

Gad's Hill Place
Sunday Twentieth July, 1862

Dear Bernal Osborne

Unfortunately we shall have some friends here on Tuesday, and have not a chance between that day and the end of the month. Nor is there, I fear, any hope of Ireland[†1] this year. We remain here until October, and then go to Paris; and we have an anxious house, and shall have an anxious time wherever we are, in consequence of the failing health of my daughter's aunt and fellow-housekeeper, to whom we are bound by unusual ties of gratitude and affection

Still it gives me pleasure to hope—indefinitely—to renew my knowledge of Mrs. Bernal Osborne. It is like enough that you will be brought back to London against your will, and then you may perhaps come here. What with that set of mean maniacs across the Atlantic, and the politico-economical draughtmen who have been pushed into the strangest squares on that board down in Lancashire,[†2] it strikes me as probable that the only genuine Englishman alive or dead (so I am told I must consider Palmerston, whether I like it or not) may want to transfer some of his responsibility to the faithful commons.

Very faithfully yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN THOMPSON, 21 JULY 1862

MS Dickens House.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Twenty First July, 1862

Dear John.

Will you send me by Mr. Frank tomorrow (Tuesday) evening—the black travelling-bag off my dressing-room table—the wideawake travelling hat hanging up in that room—the drab travelling coat and waistcoat hanging up in the wardrobe—and the waterproof coat and straps hanging up in my room on the first floor, by my writing table.

You can open the black bag (the key is tied to it) and take out a large book— the largest book in the bag—in one Volume—and lay it on the book case. Then there will be room to put the coat and waistcoat and hat, into the bag.

Don't forget anything

Yours
CD.

To MRS HENRY AUSTIN, [?22 JULY 1862]

Mention in To Mrs Austin, 27 July 62. Date: probably written on 22 July, to change the next day's appointment.

To J.T. FIELDS, [?22 JULY 1862]

Mention in next. Date: no doubt written same day.

Introducing Frederick Lehmann[†1] to Fields.

To FREDERICK LEHMANN, 22 JULY 1862

MS University of Texas, Austin.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT

Tuesday Twenty Second July, 1862

My Dear Lehmann

I write in the greatest haste, being pressed by all manner of business and botheration.

Here is a note to Fields who is a capital fellow and of strong English sympathy. So many years have passed since I was at Boston, and so many of the people whom I knew there have gone to that Far Far West which is behind the Sun and Moon, that I cannot hurriedly recall any other likely names.

Heaven speed you in that distracted land of troublesome vagabonds![†2]

Faithfully Always

CD.

To MRS HENRY AUSTIN, 27 JULY 1862*

MS Morgan Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Twenty Seventh July, 1862

My Dear Letitia

I am much concerned to find that you went to—and waited at—the office on Wednesday. In good time and carefully, I had written to you at Grove Terrace, substituting an appointment for tomorrow morning. I shall be in town tomorrow morning, if the Train keep its time, at ½ past 10;—That is to say, at the office by that hour.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To WILKIE COLLINS, 27 JULY 1862†

MS Morgan Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Twenty Seventh July, 1862

My Dear Wilkie. I shall be at Dover at ½ past 3 (as nearly as I the punctual one can calculate) next Monday (Monday)[†1] afternoon. Supposing I were to take a Fly and come over to you until Wednesday morning, when the Forsters are coming here, might that suit your Book—literally as well as figuratively?

When I say "next Monday", I am an Ass. I mean, Monday the 4th. of August.

—Or would you do this?—Would you and yours[†2] [†a](Butler[†3] of course included)[†a] come over in a Fly from Broadstairs, and dine with me at the Warden,[†4] and then we would all go back to Broadstairs together?

Answer to the office: so that I may find your note there on Wednesday morning when I make up. I will then arrange accordingly. Of course if you are busy, you will no more hesitate to say so to me than I should, if I were writing a book, hesitate to say so to you.

[†b]Georgina, very, very poorly. Excruciating pain in the left breast is the last symptom. It seized her at dinner yesterday, and she seems to me—but I may not understand the case—to grow steadily worse.[†b]

Ever affectionatey

CD.

To R. H. HORNE, 29 JULY 1862

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds. Address: Australia | R.H. Horne Esquire | Care of the City Treasurer | Town Hall | Melbourne.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Twenty Ninth July 1862

My Dear Horne.

I am sincerely obliged to you for your considerate letter, and should unquestionably have been guided by it if I had pursued the offer made to me by Messrs. Spiers and Pond.[†5] But I have declined it altogether. Into the many reasons which have influenced me, it is not necessary here to enter. It is enough that I feel quite as much indebted to you for your suggestions as if it were still in abeyance, and that I thank you cordially.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

R. H. Horne Esquire

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 29 JULY 1862*

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Tuesday Twenty Ninth July, 1862

My Dear Ouvry

If I understand Brooker's stakes, I think he has staked off too much of that land about the forge.[†1] His marks seem to set apart, not only the forge itself and the access thereto, but a piece of garden ground about it. Said piece of garden ground seems to me to have nothing in reason to do with the forge.

I have been away from here for some days. Shall be at the office tomorrow.

Faithfully Yours always

CD.

To HENRY WRIGHT,[†2] 29 JULY 1862

MS Yale University Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Twenty Ninth July, 1862

Dr. Sir

As your name is the first on the list of signatures to the little address I have had the pleasure of receiving—on my return home after a short absence—from the greater part of the players in the Match the other day, I address my reply to you.

I beg you to assure the rest that it will always give me great pleasure to lend my meadow for any such good purpose, and that I feel a sincere desire to be a good friend to the working men in this neighbourhood. I am always interested in their welfare, and am always heartily glad to see them enjoying rational and healthful recreation.

It did not escape my notice that some expressions were used the other day which would have been better avoided. But I dismissed them from my mind as being probably unintentional, and certainly opposed to the general good feeling and good sense.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. H. Wright.

To WILKIE COLLINS, 30 JULY 1862

MS Morgan Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Thirtieth July 1862

My Dear Wilkie. Here is a beastly thing! Mary has reminded me of her having engaged me (which I had totally forgotten), to dine with the Mallesons on Tuesday. I must go. Never mind! We will make the most of Monday, and I must get home by some monstrous combination of Trains on Tuesday. I think I am safe to be with you in time for dinner at halfpast 6 on Monday. I will come over from Dover by as Express a Fly as my Dear Birmingham[†1] can supply me with.

Ever affecy.

CD.

August

To THE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, [?EARLY AUGUST 1862]

Mention in next. Date: no doubt written shortly before that letter.

Enquiring about Mrs Austin's pension.

To MRS HENRY AUSTIN, 7 AUGUST 1862*

MS Morgan Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Seventh August 1862

My Dear Letitia

I wrote to Lord Shaftesbury.

I also went to Coutts's about the Annuity. The certificates to be got and the forms to be gone through, would drive you mad. I have therefore sent the papers to my Solicitors (Messrs. Farrer Ouvry and Farrer 66 Lincolns Inn Fields), and have begged them to instruct a clerk to do all that is necessary. If they want you—they may, for one appointment—they will write to you. I have begged them not to delay.

Ever affecy.

CD.

To CHARLES A. COLE,[†1] 7 AUGUST 1862

MS Mr F.S. Johnson

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Seventh August, 1862

My Dear Cole.

Many thanks for your letter. But I have at present too many domestic anxieties and pre-occupations, to leave me liberty for such an enterprise.[†2]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles A Cole Esquire

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 7 AUGUST 1862*

MS Heritage Book Shop, Los Angeles.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Seventh August, 1862

My Dear Ouvry.

I think it will be best if you will send some sharp-eyed subordinate to deal with Old Piety.[†3] Don't you think, paying that price, that the staked-off part should by no means comprise ground upon which the Servant of the Lord could build a house? No notion of a house was started when you and I saw him. I remember well (I think) that his apostolic words were, "the few rods of ground on which the forge stands."

The enclosed form is well known to you, no doubt. I got it from Coutts's yesterday, preparatory to buying a small annuity with a Thousand Pounds (all the Estate to which I am executor) for my widowed sister Mrs Henry Austin. Her name is Letitia, daughter of John and Elizabeth Dickens, and she was christened, or baptized, or done something to in that wise, at the little old Marylebone Church in High Street Marylebone, which is Hogarth's church in the Rake's Progress. She is 47 on the 23rd. of April next. Will you instruct a clerk to get these forms filled up? If she herself be wanted, her present address is 6 Grove Terrace Notting Hill, W. I want to close the business with all convenient speed.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Frederic Ouvry Esquire

To PROFESSOR RICHARD OWEN, 7 AUGUST 1862

MS Benoliel Collection

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Seventh August, 1862

My Dear Owen.

I have been reading with unspeakable interest and pleasure, your charming little book on the extent and aims of a National Museum of Natural History.[†1] Pray tell me who is the adventurous creature who made that astounding statement referred to in the footnote page 35, regarding what "students and scientific men greatly prefer".[†2] A malignant desire is upon me to ticket that specimen of an infernal genus.

Ever Cordially Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To SIR ALEXANDER DUFF GORDON, 10 AUGUST 1862*

MS Mrs M.C. Armstrong.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Tenth August, 1862

My Dear Duff Gordon

I shall be delighted to have the letters for All The Year Round.[†3] As I know they will be excellent, it is surely unnecessary to send them to me with the matter in them that is to be omitted. If you will let me have some copied out as Lady Duff Gordon (to whom my kindest regard and congratulation) wishes them to appear, I will send them to the printer and begin at once. I would recommend their not retaining the epistolary form.

Address me here, and the MS will come at once under my own care. And many thanks beforehand.

Cordially Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Sir Alexander Duff Gordon

To VISCOUNT PALMERSTON, 13 AUGUST 1862*

MS Public Record Office.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Wednesday Thirteenth August, 1862

My Lord

I take the liberty of entreating your Lordship's attention to a Memorial[†1] presented to you on behalf of my sister Mrs. Austin, widow of the late Mr. Henry Austin of the Local Government Act office, Civil Engineer.

That Memorial was presented to your Lordship some months since, and it set forth the public services of the late Mr. Austin, and the worldly circumstances of his widow, and suggested her to your Lordship as a fit subject for a small Pension on the Civil List. It was a Memorial of a special nature in respect of the official signatures and recommendations appended to it.

The date and the circumstances of Mr. Austin's death caused the Memorial to be presented very late, with any reference to the Pensions granted in the present year; and I beg to convey to your Lordship the assurance that I am not so unreasonable as to suppose that the application has been neglected. I simply desire to renew it, and respectfully to urge it on your consideration; confident that the document itself will be my sufficient excuse whenever your leisure will admit of your having the great kindness to refer to it.

I have the honor to be | My Lord | Your very obedient Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

The Right Hon: Viscount Palmerston First Lord of the Treasury

To VISCOUNT PALMERSTON, [13] AUGUST 1862*

MS Public Record Office. Date: "Thirtieth" CD's error for 13th, as next letter.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Wednesday Thirtieth August, 1862

My Lord.

Lord Shaftesbury has been so kind as to offer (in a letter I have received from him this morning, dated at Spa)[†2] to present this note to you. On consideration I do not think that I have a right so to trouble either him or you, and that the possibility of your having some public knowledge of my name may be enough for me to trust to as my excuse in addressing you privately.

I merely desire my Lord to let you know that I have ventured to address a short letter to you today in your high official character, intreating your attention to a Memorial presented to you some months since, in behalf of Mrs. Austin, an applicant for a pension on the Civil List, who is the widow of the late Mr. Henry

Austin, Civil Engineer, who died in the exercise of his duties as an important officer under the Local Government Act.

Mrs. Austin is my sister. I mention the fact to explain my interest in her case, and for that purpose only.

And all I take the liberty to ask of you, my Lord, is, that you will have the goodness to refer to the Memorial in Mrs. Austin's behalf, as one which I believe to be recommended in an unusual and strong manner, and on public grounds. Allow me to add that it was unavoidably presented late, and that I am perfectly free from the slightest suspicion that it has been overlooked or slighted.

I have the honor to be | My Lord | Your faithful and obedient Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

The Right Hon: Viscount Palmerston.[†1]

To MRS HENRY AUSTIN, 13 AUGUST 1862*

MS Morgan Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Thirteenth August, 1862

My Dear Letitia

I this morning received the enclosed note[†2] from Lord Shaftesbury. It seems to me that there is Hope in it.

Of course I lost not a moment in writing, both officially and privately, to Lord Palmerston. Both the letters go from here by tonight's post.

Ever affecy.

CD.

To MRS HENRY AUSTIN, 23 AUGUST 1862*

MS Morgan Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Twenty Third August, 1862.

My Dear Letitia.

I found your two letters, on returning here yesterday evening.[†3] If I should not hear from you again before posting this tomorrow, I will address this to the Notting Hill direction.

Being informed by my Solicitors, after they had discovered the Register of your Birth,[†1] that if I went to the National Debt Office and made a declaration on your behalf you would not have to attend personally, I went up to London with that especial object, the day before I left here—yesterday week. There still remained a form or two for Coutts's people to observe, but I ended the real business and bought the Annuity. Its exact amount I do not know, because I have not yet received from Coutts's, the formal contract by which the Commissioners of the National Debt bind themselves to pay it. But I made the sum an even Thousand Pounds, and the calculation is so far better than we supposed, that it is made from your last Birthday and not from your next.

I have received from Lord Palmerston the assurance that your Memorial is not disposed of, but that it shall be duly considered when the next pensions are allotted;—that it is reserved for that purpose. The chance is certainly not lost. Of that, there is no doubt.

Georgina, I am happy to say, continues much better.

Ever affecy.

CD.

P. S. Sunday.

Your letter received this morning. I will be at the office on Wednesday, from 11 to 1. Enclosed is a bill, posted here yesterday.

To JOHN FORSTER, [25 AUGUST 1862]

Extract in F, IX, vii, 751*n*. Date: 25 Aug 62, according to Forster.

I am trying to coerce my thoughts into hammering out the Christmas number.[†2] And I have an idea of opening a book (not the Christmas number—a book) [†a]by bringing together two strongly contrasted places and two strongly contrasted sets of people, with which and with whom the story is to rest, through the agency of an electric message.[†3] I think a fine thing may be made of the message itself shooting over the land and under the sea,[†a] and it would be a curious way of sounding the keynote.

To HENRY PARKES,[†1] 26 AUGUST 1862

MS Mitchell Library, Sydney.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Twenty Sixth August, 1862

Sir

I beg to acknowledge the safe receipt of your very obliging letter, and its accompanying Report and Evidence.[†2] I have perused that public document with great interest, and not a little horror, and with a sincere admiration of the spirit in which the whole enquiry was conducted. It is very honorable to the gentlemen concerned and to the great country they represent.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Henry Parkes Esquire

To SAMUEL LOVER, 27 AUGUST 1862

MS W. A. Foyle.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Twenty Seventh August 1862

My Dear Lover.

Delighted to retain the little piece[†3] for insertion this day fortnight. Mr. Wills will add to this note, the business-acknowledgment of the poem.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Samuel Lover Esquire

September

To FREDERIC CHAPMAN, 1 SEPTEMBER 1862*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday September First, 1862

Dear Sir

As Mr. Holsworth[†4] has invented Monday Week for me in some wild fancy of his brain, please send the accounts to me here.

Yes, by all means, as to Mr. Stone's[†1] frontispiece for the next Edition of Great Expectations.[†2] But I think that, to make it look well, there should be a Vignette Title Page too.[†3]

I have not heard from Mr. Lever, but it is not in the least likely that he has mistaken what I wrote to him at the time as settled between us. It was set forth in the plainest manner.

Faithfully Yours always
CD.

Fredk Chapman Esquire.

Over[†4]

To JOHN HILLS,[†5] 1 SEPTEMBER 1862

Text from N, III, 302-3.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday, First September, 1862

Dear Sir,

Coming home here on Saturday night from a visit at a distance[†6] I found your letter. I have not the faintest notion what it means, otherwise than that I suppose it somehow to originate in the mistaken idea— a very common one— that it is possible for me, or for any one individual, to transact the whole business of a great periodical.

No word of you having been at the office has ever reached me. No intelligence of your having offered, or having been interested in, any manuscript, has ever made its way to me, anyhow. My colleague and sub-editor Mr. Wills, being down here to-day on business, I have asked him to enlighten me, as no manuscript is mentioned in your letter by name, and as he has to do with scores upon scores of manuscripts every week, he is quite unable to suggest to me what you may mean. You will readily suppose that I cannot possibly be offended, though I should certainly be glad to know what is the matter.

Faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To MRS HENRY AUSTIN, 7 SEPTEMBER 1862*

MS Morgan Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Seventh September 1862

My Dear Letitia.

I was going to ask you to tell me, from that Balance sheet you have (I kept no copy of it), what the Balance was, when it was made out. I shall then be able to tell you how much I added for the purchase of the Annuity.

It is not at all likely that I shall go back to Paris until I go with Mary and Georgina, at about the middle of October. I do not suppose there is the least chance of my going sooner.

You could cross from Newhaven to Dieppe (about four or five hours), and then get to Havre by Railway, I think. It is a bad passage enough, but all passages are bad. If I were going to Havre myself, I should try this course. For really to go all the way to Paris—a stranger in the land—and then to Havre, and even then to have two hours passage, seems a weary business.

Mother's rapid recovery is quite amazing.

Ever affecy,
CD.

To MRS MILNER GIBSON,[†1] 8 SEPTEMBER 1862*

MS Trinity College, Cambridge.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Eighth September 1862

My Dear Mrs. Milner Gibson.

Many thanks for your kind letter and its pleasant intelligence. The case is one of high desert and I am sure the pension is well bestowed.[†2]

You know the cold winds of Nice? And is it quite a good place for your purpose? There are sheltered nooks about it (near it, I mean) of unquestionable salubrity, but I rather doubt its winds and its dust.

Georgy and Mary send kindest love. I was at Broadstairs a few weeks ago (to see Wilkie Collins, who has the Fort House), and, saving that the people looked so many years more mercenary, and that the boatmen have become so many years more idle and drunken, it was very little changed from the old time when you lived at Strevens's.[†3]

Marion Ely[†1] has been staying here a few days, and is but a few days gone. She was looking wonderfully well and young. We talked about you, when I little thought to hear from you presently.

Believe me always | Very faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 8 SEPTEMBER 1862*

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Eighth September 1862

My Dear Ouvry

Another neighbour of mine here (a gentleman, but very knowing in the neighbourhood)[†2] says he does not doubt that I can get £4 an acre rent for that land of the pious Brooker's. He suggests, if the purchase is to be made, that it would be important to get Brooker to give his tenant notice to quit before Michaelmas—supposing the purchase should be not completed in time to qualify me to do so.

Enclosed is the cheque due the day after tomorrow to Mrs. Dickens.

Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

Frederic Ouvry Esquire

To THOMAS HEADLAND, 9 SEPTEMBER 1862

Text from transcript by C. Burton, owner in 1901.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday, Ninth September, 1862[†3]

My Dear Headland

I should like to have a little talk with you concerning the feasibility of some Paris Readings.[†4] Say nothing on the subject yet, to anyone.

Could you come down here, any day this week? I shall be away from next Monday to Thursday, both inclusive, probably. But until Monday I am here, and after Thursday in next week. In making your arrangements, remember that our dinner hour is 6, and that a Room is at your service and always ready.

Faithfully Yours

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 10 SEPTEMBER 1862*

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Wednesday Tenth September 1862

My Dear Ouvry.

Cobb wrote me that he willingly undertook the stake functions,[†1] and since then I have heard no word: I supposed Old Barebones's[†2] solicitor to have been in communication with you. Perhaps we had best keep quiet, as they make no sign? I told Cobb that the forge was to be staked off, and the means of access to it, and no more.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Frederic Ouvry Esquire

To W. H. WILLS, 14 SEPTEMBER 1862

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Fourteenth September 1862

My Dear Wills. I have received yours from the shores of Lethe, and expect you to come back in the fat and rank condition of the Weed that rots upon the Wharf[†3] there.

It will be a convenience to me to make up 2 Nos.[†4] on Thursday (subject, of course, to any substitution in the second, of a better or more appropriate paper, if any should come in), and towards this end, I shall appear with a host of proofs.

Trollope's story[†5] is exceedingly good; highly picturesque and full of interest. But he mars the end by over-anticipating it, and I have changed it there, a good deal.

I think Lever will be fair:— at any rate I will take good care that he is not foul.[†6] Have ready for me, all that is come of his Narrative.[†7]

You will be perhaps a little surprised (and not disagreeably) to learn that I have done the opening and end of the Xmas No. (!)[†8] and that I mean soon to be at work on a pretty story for it.[†9] I think what I have done is exceedingly droll, [†a]and new[†a]. Circular letter to contributors, for said No. enclosed.

After the astounding and brilliant intelligence of Somebody's Luggage being already on and off the anvil, I leave you to take breath—if you can, in your †b(necessarily)†b breathless admiration of Yours†1

Ever Illustriously

CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?MID SEPTEMBER 1862]

Extract in F, IX, i, 726. Date: He had finished the opening and concluding papers of "Somebody's Luggage" by 14 Sep (see last); he probably wrote this letter at about the same time.

I have been at work with such a will, that I have done the opening and conclusion of the Christmas number. They are done in the character of a waiter, and I think are exceedingly droll. The thread on which the stories are to hang, is spun by this waiter, and is, purposely, very slight; but has, I fancy, a ridiculously comical and unexpected end.†2 The waiter's account of himself includes (I hope) everything you know about waiters, presented humorously.

To CONTRIBUTORS TO ALL THE YEAR ROUND, 18 SEPTEMBER 1862*

MS (draft) Huntington Library.

†a18th. September 1862†a

My Dear

In inviting you to contribute to our Christmas No. I beg to send you Mr. Dickens's Memorandum of the range that may be taken this year. You will see that it is a wide one.

"The slight leading notion of the No. being devised with a view to placing as little restriction as possible on the fancies of my fellow-writers in it, there is again no limitation as to scene, or first person, or third person; nor is any reference to the season of the year essential."†3

"It is to be observed that the Tales are not supposed to be narrated to any audience, but are supposed to be in writing. How they come to be in writing, requires no accounting for, whatever.†4 Nothing to which they refer, can have happened within Seven Years. If any contribution should be of a kind that would derive any force, or playfulness, or suggestiveness of any sort, from the pretence that it is incomplete—that the beginning is not there, or the end, or the middle, or any other portion—the pretence will be quite consistent with the general idea of the No."†1

The mechanical necessities of the publication will oblige us to close our list on †aSaturday the 8th. November.

I remain, Faithfully Yours[†a]

To THOMAS ADOLPHUS TROLLOPE, 18 SEPTEMBER 1862*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Eighteenth September 1862

My Dear Trollope.

The Dutchess Veronica[†2] is most admirable—a masterly picture, painted with knowledge, and Art, and Everything to make it glowing and striking.

I have begged Wills to send you the proofs, in order that I may have your approval (or disapproval) of some excisions I have made on the New Year's Morning.[†3] It struck me strongly that some of La Maladetta Veronica's soliloquy on that horrible day, anticipated and weakened the catastrophe.[†4] Hence my endeavour to preserve for the catastrophe its full power and force.

Ever Believe me
(Very hastily at this present)
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

T.A. Trollope Esquire

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 19 SEPTEMBER 1862

Mention in Merwyn-Clayton Sales Co. catalogue, May 1905; MS 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill Place, 19 Sep 62.

To FREDERIC CHAPMAN, 20 SEPTEMBER 1862

Summary in Sotheby's catalogue, July 1979; MS 1 p.; dated Office of AYR, 20 Sep 62.

Discussing the details of an arrangement by which Chapman & Hall are to buy a half share in the future copyrights of Great Expectations, A Tale of Two Cities and The Uncommercial Traveller for which CD does not wish to put the price higher than £1,500.[†1]

To WILKIE COLLINS, 20 SEPTEMBER 1862

MS Morgan Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Saturday Twentieth September 1862

My Dear Wilkie

I have gone through the Second Volume[†2] at a Sitting, and I find it wonderfully fine.[†3] It goes on with an ever-rising power and force in it, that fill me with admiration. It is as far before and beyond The Woman in White, as that was beyond the wretched common level of fiction-writing. There are some touches in the Captain,[†4] which no one but a born (and cultivated) Writer could get near—could draw within hail of. And the originality of Mrs. Wragge,[†5] without compromise of her probability, involves a really great achievement. But they are all admirable; Mr. Noel Vanstone[†6] and the house-keeper,[†7] both in their way as meritorious as the rest; Magdalen[†8] wrought out with truth, energy, sentiment, and passion, of the very first water.

I cannot tell you with what a strange dash of pride, as well as pleasure, I read the great results of your hard work. Because, as you know, I was certain from the Basil[†9] days, that you were the Writer who would come ahead of all the Field—being the only one who combined invention and power, both humourous and pathetic, with that invincible determination to work, and that profound conviction that nothing of worth is to be done without work, of which triflers and feigners have no conception.[†10]

I send the books back, by South Eastern Railway today.

There is one slight slip, occurring more than once, which you have not corrected. Magdalen "laid down", and I think some one else "laid down". It is clear that she must either lay herself down, or lie down. To lay is a verb active, and to lie down is a verb neuter. Consequently she lay down, or laid herself down.[†1]

It would be a very great pleasure to me if I could get to you once again at Broadstairs, but I fear it is not at all likely. I forget how long you stay there? [†a]Will you tell me?[†a] We purpose going to Paris on the 20th of October. I have half a mind to read in Paris when I am there; but this is as yet an unformed object in my thoughts.

You will not be able, I suppose, to do any little thing for the Xmas No.? I have done the introduction and Conclusion, and will send them you bye and bye, when the Printer shall have (thus Wills) "dealt with them". They are done in the character of a Waiter, and I think are very droll. The leading idea admits of any kind of contribution, and does not require it to be in any way whatever accounted for. Besides having this advantage, it is a comic defiance of the difficulty of a Xmas No. with an unexpected end to it. The name (between ourselves) is Somebody's Luggage.[†2]

Georgina keeps better, though she is very weak. She has been reading the book with the deepest interest, and sends her love and all my admiration—and really was so pleased to see how strongly I felt about it, that I think you would have been pleased to see her.

I have some rather miserable anxieties which I must impart one of these days when I come to you or you come to me. I shall fight out of them, I dare say: being not easily beaten—but they have gathered and gathered.

Leech dined here yesterday, Impromptu, and he, Georgy, and I, went to the Adelphi. Where Benjamin[†3] did some of the most amazingly inconsistent and bad things I ever saw, in a piece called One Touch of Nature—spoilt by his own hand from some French drama.[†4] Among other brilliant hits, he called his young Daughter—scene, the neighbourhood of Long Acre—"Madame", and was perpetually in a mental stagger between me, and himself, and some Frenchman whom he had seen do the part.[†5]

Wills sends kind regard.

Ever My Dear Wilkie | Affectionately Yours

CD.

To EDWARD LEVY,[†1] [21 SEPTEMBER 1862]

Mention in To Kent, 23 Sep 62. Date: written on "Sunday night", 21 Sep.

To MRS HENRY AUSTIN, 22 SEPTEMBER 1862†

MS Morgan Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Night, Twenty Second September 1862

My Dear Letitia. I think there is no harm whatever in your trying the experiment. A home of some sort you must clearly have; and I think your unhappy (but most natural) state of mind, unsuited to visiting just now, not likely to be improved by it, and far better calculated to recover a better tone in quiet and with a familiar face.

As I am going on a visit myself next Wednesday for a week[†2] (on that day week I shall be at the office) I think it best to send you a cheque for £40.[†3] As the furniture-money is not at interest, there is no loss in your drawing so much, even if you do not want it.

[†a]I do not preach consolation because I am unwilling to preach at any time, and know my own weakness too well. But in this world there is no stay but the hope of a better, and no reliance but on the mercy and goodness of God. Through those two harbours of a shipwrecked heart, I fully believe that you will—in time—find a peaceful resting place even on this care worn earth. Heaven speed the time, and do you try hard to help it on! It is impossible to say but that our prolonged grief for the beloved Dead, may grieve them in their unknown abiding-place and give them trouble.[†a]

Ever affectionately

CD.

To CHARLES KENT, 23 SEPTEMBER 1862*

Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: Charles W. Kent Esquire | Campden Grove | Kensington | London | W.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,

HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Tuesday Twenty Third September 1862

My Dear Kent.

I forget whether the autograph was to have been anything but a signature. I send a signature on the other side.[†4]

— X - 131 —

Your hurried departure did not make me forgetful of Mr. Edward Levy. I wrote to him on Sunday night, and my son posted the letter in town soon after 10 on Monday morning. On consideration, I think it must be some two months since he first applied to me on the subject of his newspaper's[†1] need.

I am delighted that your short holiday has left so pleasant an impression, and hope it may soon be followed by another.

Always Faithfully Yours
CD.

To W. C. MACREADY, 30 SEPTEMBER 1862*

MS Morgan Library.

Lord Warden Hotel, Dover
Thirtieth September 1862

My Dearest Macready. Your letter has been sent on to me here, to day. I am only here until tomorrow, with Georgina, to give her a change. She is much better and sends you her best love.

You say "about the 4th. or 5th. of October." Saturday will be the 4th. and Sunday the 5th. Can you not come to Gad's Hill from Saturday to Monday?[†2] It would be so very delightful to us. Reply to the office. We shall be at the office from tomorrow until Saturday, and would wait there to take you down with us. I shall be grievously disappointed if you "come" any of your old Parr shirks in this matter. Reply like what you are—"Have with you, Brother Boy!"

Will you tell Mrs. Macready with my love that I stand repentantly possessed of one of your Bath-Towels which John packed up by mistake when I left Cheltenham? My best love to Katie, and to Benvenuta, and to the noble Johnny, and to the gallant little stranger[†3]—whom I take on trust.

I write hastily, to save the evening's post. Observe. Reply to me at the office.

Ever My Dearest Macready | Your most affectionate
CHARLES DICKENS

October

To J. T. FIELDS, 2 OCTOBER 1862

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Second October[†4] 1862

My Dear Fields. I have read that affecting paper[†5] you have had the kindness to send me, with strong interest and emotion. You may readily suppose that I have been most glad and ready to avail myself of your permission to print it. I have placed it in our No. made up to-day, which will be published on the 18th. of this month—well before you—as you desire.

Think of reading in America? Lord bless you, I think of reading in the deepest depth of the lowest crater in the Moon, on my way there!

There is no sun-picture of my Falstaff House as yet,—but it shall be done, and you shall have it. It has been much improved internally, since you saw it.

I send my cordial regard to Mrs. Fields;[†1] and my daughter and sister in law would add messages if they were here. I expect Macready at Gad's Hill on Saturday. You know that his second wife (an excellent one) presented him lately with a little boy? I was staying with him for a day or two last winter, and, seizing an umbrella when he had the audacity to tell me he was growing old, made at him with Macduff's defiance.[†2] Upon which he fell into the old fierce guard, with the desperation of Thirty years ago.

Kind remembrances to all friends who kindly remember me

Ever Heartily Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To CHARLES LEVER, 2 OCTOBER 1862

MS Widener Collection, Harvard.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Second October 1862

My Dear Lever. I have received the assignments[†3] safely, and have handed them over to F. Chapman. It grieves me much to find you writing in such bad cheer, but I hope you are by this time better in every way.

We are obliged to hold Garibaldi[†4] over,—for the reason that an Italian Story (of quite another time) by T. A. Trollope is now in course of publication, that will last five weeks.[†5] And to have two Italian stories, and three Continuations, going on at once, would not do. But as the Garibaldi interest is certain not to evaporate,[†6] the postponement of that very good paper for so many weeks does not in the least signify.—Not to postpone the Needful as well as the Publication, I enclose a cheque for Thirty Guineas.

About the 20th. I am going to Paris for some six weeks or so. I fear there is little chance of your coming that way, while I am there with my Daughter and Sister in Law?[†7]

To THE MAYOR OF SOUTHAMPTON,[†1] 2 OCTOBER 1862*

MS Private.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Second October 1862

Mr. Charles Dickens begs to express his regret that his engagements will not admit of his accepting the invitation with which he is honored by the Mayor of Southampton.

To JAMES BIRTLES,[†2] 3 OCTOBER 1862*

MS Yale University Library. Address: Mr. James Birtles | Mr. Whitings.

Office
Friday Third October 1862

Dr. Mr. Birtles. Be so good as to make these corrections (I want the revise for Mr. Collins), and to send me Three pulls here.[†3]

Faithfully Yrs.
CD.[†4]

To A. H. LAYARD,[†5] 3 OCTOBER 1862*

MS Mr Tom Brown.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Third October 1862

My Dear Layard

I do not want to trouble Lord Russell[†6] about my son Frank, but I should very much like to know what the probabilities may be as to his time of waiting before he gets nominated into the Foreign Office.[†7]

Can you form any idea of this, or can you help me to form any for myself? If you can, I know you will. He was put down on Lord John's list, upwards of a year ago.

Believe me ever | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

A. H. Layard Esquire

To WILKIE COLLINS, 4 OCTOBER 1862

MS Fales Library, New York University.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Saturday Fourth October 1862

My Dear Wilkie. I write very hastily before going up to see the horrid Poole (who is ill) and then going home to Gad's. Enclosed are the first and last papers of the Xmas No. You will understand that the titles will be something like this.

SOMEBODY'S LUGGAGE[†1]

His leaving it till called for	His Collar-Box
His Portmanteau	His Brown paper parcel
His Desk	His Dressing Case
His Boots	His Umbrella

His Wonderful End[†2]

I am doing a little French story for it, which reproduces (I think, to the Life) the ways and means of a dull fortified French town, full of French soldiers.[†3]

I will write another line in a day or two. Georgy is not quite so well, and I do not see my way. [†a]Mary is visiting—and is inscrutably unheard of—and that complicates me more.[†a]

Every Affecy.

CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [5 OCTOBER 1862]

Extract in F, VIII, vi, 693-4. Date: 5 Oct 62, according to Forster.

If it was not for the hope of a gain that would make me more independent of the worst,[†4] I could not look the travel and absence and exertion in the face. I know perfectly well beforehand how unspeakably wretched I should be. But these renewed and larger offers tempt me. I can force myself to go aboard a ship, and I can force myself to do at that reading-desk what I have done a hundred times; but whether, with all this unsettled fluctuating distress in my mind, I could force an original book out of it, is another question.[†5]

To MRS HENRY AUSTIN, 7 OCTOBER 1862†

MS Morgan Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Seventh October 1862

My Dear Letitia.

It will be safest and best to destroy the cheque,[†1] by burning it. I put this remark in the foreground of my letter, as a precaution against forgetting it.

[†a]The one influencing consideration in all you do as to your disposition of yourself (coupled, of course, with a real earnest strenuous endeavour to recover the lost tone of spirit), is, that you think and feel you can do. I do not in the least regard your change of course in going to Havre, as any evidence of instability. But I rather hope it is likely that through such restlessness you will come to a far quieter state of mind. The disturbed mind and affections, like the tossed sea, seldom calm without an intervening time of confusion and trouble.

But nothing is to be attained without striving. In a determined effort to settle the thoughts, to parcel out the day, to find occupation regularly or to make it, to be up and doing Something, are chiefly to be found the mere mechanical means which must come to the aid of the best mental efforts.

It is a wilderness of a day, here, in the way of blowing and raining, and as darkly dismal (at 4 o'Clock) as need be. My head is but just now raised from a day's writing, but I will not lose the post without sending you a word.[†a]

We go to Paris next Monday week, unless anything should occur to alter our plans. Georgina is not quite so well: the defective beat in the heart (which had disappeared) having returned. Mary is away, visiting. [†a]Katie was here yesterday with her husband, just come back from Clara White's (that was), in Scotland. In the midst of her brilliant fortune, it is too clear to me that she is already beckoned away to follow her dead sisters. Macready was here, from Saturday evening to yesterday morning—older, but looking wonderfully well, and (what is very rare in these times) with the old thick sweep of hair upon his head.[†a]

Anne[†2] is here (for the second time this summer) with her horrid child whom we call The Demon.[†3] The said Demon came here to recover of a gastric fever in fresh air, and has been triumphantly prostrate with the Measles. Anne is very apologetic for her having "taken the liberty" to have them here. My theory is that they only happened to come out to look about them, and that she always has them within.

[†a]Georgina being left alone here the other day, was done no good to, by a great consternation among the servants. On going downstairs, she found Marsh (the Stable Man) seated, with great dignity and anguish, in an arm chair, and incessantly crying out, "I am dead!" To which the women-servants said with great pathos (and with some appearance of reason) "No you ain't Marsh!" And to which he persisted in replying: "Yes I am, I am dead!" Some neighbouring vagabond was impressed to drive a cart over to Rochester and fetch the Doctor. Who said (the patient and his consolers being all very anxious that the Heart should be the seat of affliction), "Stomach."[†a]

I took Georgina to Dover for a little change last week, and then we went to the office, and so back here on Saturday afternoon.

Post time!

Ever affectionately

CD.

To J. WESTLAND MARSTON,[†1] 7 OCTOBER 1862*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Seventh October, 1862

My Dear Marston

I should hardly have supposed (unless you had told me so) that my bearing testimony to your honorable and highly meritorious efforts to purify the Literature of the stage, could be at all needful or useful towards your obtaining the Degree you seek.[†2]

But as I volunteered to write a Prologue to your first play,[†3] twenty years ago, when I had no personal knowledge of you, and was impelled to do so solely by the merit and character of your work, my testimony will be at least consistent and beyond suspicion.

It is, that from that time to the present, you have with great utility and manfully setting yourself against every discouragement inseparable from the present condition of the stage, endeavoured to restore to it an English Drama, sound and pure in tone, and poetical in form and spirit.[†4] In all that you have done, this great object has been always prominent and always upheld. And in more than one of your later works, it has been most interestingly and strikingly attained through the every-day domestic affections and struggles of life.[†5]

I conceive this to be a great literary service rendered to the community. And I think I have occasionally met with L.L.Ds who have not quite done as much or done as well.

With all good wishes, Believe me

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Westland Marston Esquire

To WILKIE COLLINS, 8 OCTOBER 1862†

MS Berg Collection.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Eighth October 1862

My Dear Wilkie. I am really quite concerned that you should have bothered your sufficiently-occupied mind about the Xmas No.—Of course it seems very strange and bare to me not to have you in it;[†1] but I never seriously contemplated the reasonable likelihood of your being able to do any thing for it.

It is a great pleasure to me that you like the notion (and execution) so well. The difficulty of carrying out your suggestion[†2] is this:— it would destroy a good deal of the effect of the end—His Wonderful End[†3]—and does not at present seem to me quite reconcileable with it as a piece of execution. But I will turn it over again.

I have done a little Story for "His Boots", very slight in itself, but into which I have tried to infuse (fancifully) every conceivable feature of an old fortified French town. It is very like, I think. When I have the Proof, I will send it you to read at any odd time. I think I shall now go at some short odd comic notion, to supply your place.[†4] I am bent upon making a good No. to go with No Name.

[†a]As I didn't open your letter 'till I left home this morning, I don't know for a fact about Mary; but she is such a Micawber in the way of correspondence[†5] that you must refer, I imagine, to some lost letter. She is at Cubitt's[†6] in Hampshire. Coming home for Paris, next week.[†a]

[†b]Georgy looks surprisingly well, but has unquestionably rather fallen back. Your hopes of Paris are mine. Nor have I any fear of the journey being too much for her, divided into two days.

The Demon, being brought to the Gad's Hill scratch to recover from gastric fever, triumphantly got hove down with Measles—her mother being highly apologetic for "the liberty". My theory is, that they (the Measles) merely came out to look about them, but are always within her.[†b] Macready was with us, from last Saturday to Monday. Very little altered indeed—and with not the end of one single sentence within 450 miles of him.

Of course I will report myself in Paris before we have been there many days (we start on Sunday week), and give you my address as soon as I have such a thing to my back. I am not going to have any establishment there, but intend the dinner to be brought in on a man's shoulder (you know the tray) from a Restaurant.

I saw Poole (for my sins) last Saturday. And he was a sight. He had got out of bed to receive me (at 3 P.M.) and tried to look as if he had been up at Dawn— with a dirty and obviously warm impression of himself on the bedclothes. It was a tent bedstead with four wholly unaccounted for and bare poles, each with an immense spike on the top, like 4 Lightning conductors. He had a fortnight's grey beard, and had made a lot of the most extraordinary memoranda of questions to ask me—which he couldn't read—through an eyeglass which he couldn't hold. He was continually beset with a notion that his landlady was listening outside the door, and was continually getting up from a kind of ironing-board at which he sat, with the intention of darting at the door, but invariably missed his aim, and brought himself up by the forehead against blind corners of the walls. He had a dressing gown over his nightshirt, and wore his trousers where Blondin wears the baskets. [†c]He said with the greatest indignation, I might suppose what sort of "society" he could get out of his landlady, when he mentioned that she could say nothing, on being consulted by him touching the Poison-Case at the Old Bailey,[†1] but "People didn't ought to poison people Sir;—it's wrong."

Ever Affecy.

CD.[†c]

To W. C. MACREADY, 8 OCTOBER 1862*

MS Morgan Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Night Eighth October 1862

My Dearest Macready. I write to you very hastily, before leaving here at the end of a long day.

The answers at Peel's Coffee House[†2] are, That they have the file of The Times from 1817 inclusive. That they have not the News, Sunday Paper,[†3] for 1816.

I trust you got home, safe, youthful gallant, and well—as you left us. Love to Mrs. Macready and to all.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To FREDERIC CHAPMAN, 12 OCTOBER 1862*

MS Mr Brian Lake.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Twelfth October 1862

My Dear Sir

The Bradbury and Evans question I feel to be a difficult one, requiring great consideration. You will remember that when the treaty was in progress for the purchase of their share,[†1] Mr. Evans asked you whether they were to lose the printing of my books? On which head I wrote to you that I had no intention whatever of changing the existing arrangements or interfering to deprive them of the printing. Unless I am mistaken, you either shewed Mr. Evans that note, or read it to him, before their purchase was concluded?

For the present at all events, I decide against having the Child's History in the Library Edition of my books, an attractive and very legible Edition in some different form, I greatly prefer.[†2]

There is no doubt about the goodness of Mr. Child's[†3] printing, or the saving that could be effected in the printing of the Cheap Edition. The question is, whether a higher consideration is not at issue—something very like a point of honor.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Fredk Chapman Esquire.

To WILKIE COLLINS, 12 OCTOBER 1862

MS Morgan Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Twelfth October 1862.

My Dear Wilkie

I came home last night, and found your letter. By Frank tomorrow morning I send for the Proofs you mention,[†4] and I will immediately read them attentively, and write to you by Tuesday night's post—or at latest by Wednesday's.

I think I should have come over to you instead of writing, but that I find Georgina has been alone here some days, and also that Frank Beard is coming down to see her on Tuesday. As I ought to keep her company, and had best see him besides, I will remain here until I go over the water a day or two in advance of her and Mary.[†5] I purpose going on Thursday morning.

Enclosed is the little story I mentioned, for the Xmas No.

There is no doubt of No Name's having attracted great attention lately, and made a strong impression. I have been in town and have heard of it on all sides.[†1]

I will write to you again from Paris, and will address that letter to Harley Street.

Ever affecy.

CD.

The Proof is my only corrected one

To WILKIE COLLINS, 14 OCTOBER 1862

MS Morgan Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Fourteenth October 1862

My Dear Wilkie.

I have read those proofs[†2] carefully. They are very strong indeed.

I am not sure that I quite understand within what limitations you want my opinion of them. The only points that strike me as at all questionable are all details. But not to pass them over, here they are.

—— I find Mrs. Lecount's proceeding with the new will, rather violently sudden: followed as it is, so immediately, by the death.[†3] Also I do not quite like her, referring to those drafts she has brought with her.[†4] It would be so very[†5] suspicious in the eyes of a suspicious man.[†6]

—— I forget whether you want that Laudanum bottle again.[†7] If not, I think Mrs. Lecount should break it before Noel Vanstone's eyes.[†8] Otherwise while he is impressed with the danger he supposes himself to have escaped, he repeats it, on a smaller scale by giving Mrs Lecount an inducement to kill him, and leaving the means at hand.

—— I believe it would be necessary for a Testator signing his will,[†1] to inform the Witnesses of the fact of its being his will—though of its contents, of course, they would be ignorant. The legal form of attestation in use, is, Signed sealed and delivered by So and So the within[†2] named Testator, as and for his last will and testament, in the presence of us &c.[†3]

—— If the story were mine, I should decidedly not put into it, the anticipation contained in the last line or two of Norah's postscript.[†4] But that is a moot point in Art.

—— Throughout the whole of the 36th weekly part,[†5] is there wanting some sense on the part of Noel Vanstone that he may not be legally married at all?[†6] This seems to me the most important question.

—— I do not quite follow the discussion between Noel and Lecount about the 8 months interval, and the puzzling of Magdalen by taking that number. Why? Mrs. Lecount says "People easily guess a year; people easily guess six months". Suppose she did guess six months, she would only have to bestir herself so much the more. And it is clear that a plotter, bent upon losing no chance, would take the shortest likely time and not the longest. Then what is gained by 8?[†7]

Among the many excellent things in the proofs, I notice as particularly admirable, the manner in which the amount of Mrs. Lecount's legacy is got at,[†8] and the bearing and discourse of the Scotch fly-driver.[†9]

I break off hastily, to get this into the box before it is cleared at the gate here. From Paris, I will write again. My address there until further notice, Hotel Meurice.

Ever affecy.

CD.

To WILKIE COLLINS, 14 OCTOBER 1862

MS Morgan Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.

Tuesday Night, Fourteenth October, 1862

My Dear Wilkie.

Frank Beard has been here this evening—of course since I posted my this-day's letter to you—and has told me how you are not at all well,[†1] and how he has given you something which he hopes and believes will bring you round.[†2] It is not to convey this insignificant piece of intelligence, or to tell you how anxious I am that you should come up with a wet sheet and a following sail[†3] (as we say at sea—when we are not sick) that I write. It is, simply, to say what follows: which I hope may save you some mental uneasiness. For I was stricken ill when I was doing Bleak House, and I shall not easily forget what I suffered under the fear of not being able to come up to time.

Dismiss that fear (if you have it) altogether from your mind. Write to me at Paris, at any moment, and say you are unequal to your work, and want me, and I will come to London straight and do your work. I am quite confident that, with your notes and a few words of explanation, I could take it up at any time and do it. Absurdly unnecessary to say that it would be a make-shift! but I could do it, at a pinch, so like you as that no one should find out the difference. Don't make much of this offer in your mind—it is nothing—except to ease it. If you should want help, I am as safe as the Bank. The trouble would be nothing to me, and the triumph of overcoming a difficulty—great. Think it a Xmas No., an Idle apprentice, a Lighthouse, a Frozen Deep.[†4] I am as ready as in any of those cases to strike in and hammer the hot iron out.

You won't want me.[†5] You will be well (and thankless!) in no time. But here I am. And I hope that the knowledge may be a comfort to you. Call me, and I come.

As Beard always has a sense of medical responsibility, and says anything about a patient in confidence, I have merely remarked here that "Wilkie is out of sorts". Charley (who is here with Katie) has no other cue from me.

Ever affecy

CD.

To MISS MARIA FORSTER,[†1] 14 OCTOBER 1862*

Text from copy left by Walter Dexter.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
October 14th. [1862]

Mr. Toots[†2] presents his compliments to the Duke of Wellington—he means Miss Maria Forster, but it's of no consequence & begs to assure her that he has at last executed her commission and laid the volume[†3] unopened upon the table of Mr. Charles Dickens. But that gentleman having insisted upon opening the same and reading it, desires Mr. Toots to say that he thanks Miss Maria Forster cordially and to add these words "that he finds it very far above and beyond ordinary books of verse—both in genuine beauty and tenderness of thought and in genuine power of expression—that some of the pieces have interested him unusually and that he feels proud of the sympathy and remembrance of the fair authoress."

Mr. Toots really believes him to be in earnest tho' how much he may be influenced you know by certain lines in which the name of "Tiny Tim" occurs,[†4] I leave you to judge.

Mr. Toots is happy to inform Miss Maria Wellington—at least the Duke of Forster—or the Duchess of Collection—it cannot signify—that he was never better in his life.

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Maria Forster.

To W. H. WILLS, 14 OCTOBER 1862*

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Tuesday Fourteenth October 1862

My Dear Wills. I send you with this, the corrected Proofs for tomorrow's No.[†5] Look to the two footnotes I have marked in Princely Travel in America.[†6]

I go to Paris on Thursday morning, and Georgina and Mary follow me on Sunday morning. If you should have anything to send before that time, send it me by them. After Sunday my address will be

Hotel Meurice
Rue de Rivoli
Paris

—until you hear from me again.

When you send me your schemes for Nos. don't forget to send me at the same time a duplicate of the printer's list. And please be sure that I have all proofs, so that I may know the exact nature of all the articles.

I am sorry to hear from Frank that you have an influenza attack. I wonder he and I are not floored by a similar blow, for we got tremendously wet on the same day as you.

Faithfully Ever

CD.

[†a]P.S. Poole's quarterly document[†1] enclosed.[†a]

To MESSRS FARRER, OUVRY & FARRER, 15 OCTOBER 1862*

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT

Wednesday Fifteenth October 1862

Dear Sirs

I am favored with your letter of yesterday, and I return the draft of the agreement between Chapman and Hall and myself.[†2]

The Child's History of England is in its right schedule. Oliver Twist should be (I think) in the first Schedule.

I wish to explain to you that for the purchase-money of the shares set forth in the Second Schedule, I hold three bills of Chapman and Halls; two bills for £1000 each, and a third bill for £1,250. They are payable on demand; but there is an understanding that they (Chapman and Hall) will take them up one by one, at their convenience, and in the meantime pay me 5 percent interest, halfyearly.[†3]

The purchase-money of the shares set forth in the Third Schedule is to be paid in ready money presently (£1,500) but it is not yet paid.

My non-assignment of these interests in the Copyrights being my security— my only security—for these rather large sums, perhaps you may not think it inconsistent with your representation of my interests, to represent to Chapman and Hall that you can only advise me to execute the assignments, as the shares are paid for. I would rather that this seemed to proceed from you, than from myself.

The execution of the agreement as to the first and third schedules would then be completed on the payment of Fifteen Hundred Pounds. The execution of the agreement as to the Second Schedule would stand over, pending the payment (or equivalent securing to me) of £3,250.

If you think my suggestion right, please to act upon it. If you think it wrong, be so good as let me know.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Farrer Ouvry and Farrer

To CHARLES KENT, 15 OCTOBER 1862

Text from N, III, 311.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Night Fifteenth October 1862

My Dear Kent,

I write you a hasty line, before going to Paris tomorrow morning.

Your last note was not forgotten by me, but I wanted time to get at the subject-matter of your supposition. I believe there is no reason whatever for the said supposition, and that the Paper[†1] is not for sale, unless on very high terms.

Faithfully yours always

[CD.]

To W.H. WILLS, 15 OCTOBER 1862

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Night Fifteenth October 1862

My Dear Wills.

I am to be at Boulogne on Sunday to meet Mary and Georgina, and I hope to post you from thence my corrections in the proofs for next Wednesday's make-up.[†2]

Wilkie has been thrown into a state of inexpressible enthusiasm by His Boots.[†3] He is rather knocked up by the bye. Don't seem to know it, for he is nervous. I have told him to have no fear of failure, for if he should break down, I would go on with his story so that nobody should be any the wiser!

Poole's receipt enclosed.

What on earth can you be going to Skibbereen[†1] for?

I am glad you put in Morley's waste-article.[†2] I thought it very good. Is he getting on with the Laboratory one?[†3] It would be well-timed soon after this poisoning-case.[†4]

Faithfully Always
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [?16 OCTOBER 1862]

Summary in F, IX, iv, 739. Date: letter written from Paris, according to Forster: he was in France 16 Oct to shortly before Christmas and probably wrote soon after writing to Wills on 15 Oct.

Telling Forster what he was himself responsible for in "Somebody's Luggage" and saying that in one of them[†5] he had made the story a camera obscura of certain French places and styles of people; having founded it on something he had noticed in a French soldier.[†6]

To W. H. WILLS, 17 OCTOBER 1862

MS Huntington Library.

Hazebroucke,[†7] France, Friday 17th. Oct. 1862

My Dear Wills. Without waiting until I get to Boulogne, I make up my parcel of corrections here en route, and will post it somewhere or other, when I have got the last proofs in.

I find "Princely Travel in America"[†8] and "An old Country Town"[†9] among my proofs. I presume you returned them to me in mistake?[†10] It is because I find them, that I write to you sooner than I intended. They are enclosed.

Both the enclosed printer's lists are wrong. Each of them contains an article —"What's the use of that"—which is already used.[†1] If the list be not kept correctly while I am away, we shall get into great difficulty.

It is absolutely impossible to put in "Our Last attempt"[†2] until Lever has corrected the proofs. I have spent a couple of hours on it, but there is scarcely one single name accurately printed.[†3] And I am not sufficiently acquainted with some of the names to know even what is meant. It must positively stand over until you have got corrections back from Lever, or we shall be ridiculous.[†4] In its place, insert "Only One Room"[†5]—cut down from my corrected proof (I corrected the paper some time ago) to the length you want.

The Poem[†6] is very good. I can see nothing at all in the Persian paper.[†7] I hope its successors may be better.

As I have leisure for adventure before meeting Mary and Georgina, I am now going to have a look at Dunquerque—in the Uncommercial interest.[†8] And by the bye I must say that I find the French fortified town in "His Boots" to be amazingly accurate. I have been largely checking it off at two old Vauban[†9] defended towns since I came over yesterday.

Ever Faithfully

CD

To MESSRS FARRER, OUVRY & FARRER, 22 OCTOBER 1862

Summary in Sotheby's catalogue, June 1979; MS 1 p.; dated Paris, 22 Oct 62; addressed Messrs Farrer, Ouvry & Farrer.

Sending an assignment made out to his publishers, Chapman and Hall, duly executed and attested by himself,[†10] and asking them to receive the £1500 on his behalf and to pay it into his private account at Coutts's.[†11]

To JOHN FORSTER, [22 OCTOBER 1862]

Extracts in F, VIII, vi, 694 and 693*n*. Date: first extract 22 Oct 62, according to Forster; next two extracts probably part of same letter; fourth perhaps also.

Remember that at home here the thing has never missed fire, but invariably does more the second time than it did the first; and also that I have got so used to it, and have worked so hard at it, as to get out of it more than I ever thought was in it for that purpose. I think all the probabilities for such a country as Australia are immense.

If I were to go it would be a penance and a misery, and I dread the thought more than I can possibly express. The domestic life of the Readings is all but intolerable to me when I am away for a few weeks at a time merely, and what would it be ——.

Fancying that it might be possible to take his eldest daughter with him. It is useless and needless for me to say what the conflict in my own mind is. How painfully unwilling I am to go, and yet how painfully sensible that perhaps I ought to go— with all the hands upon my skirts that I cannot fail to feel and see there, whenever I look round. It is a struggle of no common sort, as you will suppose, you who know the circumstances of the struggler.

If there were reasonable hope and promise, I could make up my mind to go to Australia and get money. I would not accept the Australian people's offer. I would take no money from them; would bind myself to nothing with them; but would merely make them my agents at such and such a percentage, and go and read there. I would take some man of literary pretensions as a secretary (Charles Collins? What think you?)[†1] and with his aid would do, for All the Year Round while I was away, The Uncommercial Traveller Upside Down. If the notion of these speculators be anything like accurate, I should come back rich. I should have seen a good deal of novelty to boot. I should have been very miserable too.... Of course one cannot possibly count upon the money to be realised by a six months' absence, but £12,000 is supposed to be a low estimate. Mr. S.[†2] brought me letters from members of the legislature, newspaper editors, and the like, exhorting me to come, saying how much the people talk of me, and dwelling on the kind of reception that would await me. No doubt this is so, and of course a great deal of curious experience for after use would be gained over and above the money. Being my own master too, I could "work" myself more delicately than if I bound myself for money beforehand. A few years hence, if all other circumstances were the same, I might not be so well fitted for the excessive wear and tear. This is about the whole case. But pray do not suppose that I am in my own mind favourable to going, or that I have any fancy for going.

To MRS BROWN,[†1] 24 OCTOBER 1862

MS Morgan Library. Address: Angleterre | To be forwarded. | Mrs. Brown | Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street | Piccadilly | London.

Paris. rue du Faubourg St. Honoré, 27
Friday Twenty Fourth October, 1862

My Dear Mrs. Brown.

On the very day when your letter reached me, I had been walking past the Hotel Bristol, looking up at the windows and thinking of Miss Coutts[†2] and you. I found your letter on my table when I came home straight, by the Rue Castiglione and the Rue St. Honoré.[†3]

You know all that I would say—better than that, you know all that I would do—in response to your affectionate and tender remembrances. I am so confident of the free Masonry between us, that I will write not another word on that almost sacred theme.

It is amazing to behold the changes in this place, and the vast works doing and done.[†4] But I notice (having been much in the country-parts of France this summer), that as Paris swells, the provincial towns of the second and third degree collapse. "Maison a vendre"—"Maison a vendre"—everywhere— Towns falling to pieces—grass growing over the public buildings—population Heaven knows where.

Of the daily lives and exercises of the soldiers, I have seen a great deal, in the out-of-the-way fortified towns where such things are the only business. In all respects of sensible training and an admirable adaptation of the men to the purposes and the purposes to the men, I believe this Army, as compared with ours, advances 50 years in every year we live. It is a disquieting consideration, when one remembers that but the other day—when Sydney Herbert[†5] went to the War office[†6]—there were two sizes of shoes in the whole line!

Contrariwise, I had a capital french gentleman in the Dover Carriage with me, the last time I came across, who summed up his admiration of the order of the London streets (I didn't tell him of people being knocked down every day and night by ticket of leave men), and of the efficiency of the Police, with the very good remark "Et voyez-vous Monsieur! Tout cela sans un seul chapeau bras!"

For our Christmas No. besides executing the main idea which is a playful kind of joke on our usual scheme of a Christmas No. I have done a little story which I have tried to make a complete Camera Obscura picture of a dull fortified French town. I set myself the task of trying how much I could possibly suggest—of the truth—to the fancy or the recollection, in the compass of five or six pages. Wills will not fail to send the No. to Stratton Street before it is out, and I hope you and Miss Coutts may like the little story. (It was put into my head by seeing a French soldier acting as nurse to his master's—a captain's—little baby girl, and washing her and putting her to bed, and getting her up again in the morning, with the greatest gravity and gentleness.)

My daughter and her Aunt were to have met me at Boulogne for the purpose of coming on here. They were out in the great gale—could not get near Boulogne—and were carried, after several ineffectual attempts to make Calais Harbour, into Calais at last: whence Dessin[†1] sent me a Telegram to say they were safe. I stood five hours on the end of the pier at Boulogne in the height and fury of the storm, and it was a wonderful sight. To my great consolation I only saw one thing missed in the Copperfield storm. But it was a very picturesque thing. After it became dark, the surf ran out so far (two or three miles perhaps), and so high, that when a greater wave than usual broke, what was seen of its white top was so like light, as to induce the Boatmen over and over again to cry out, "There's the steamer! I saw her fire as she rolled!" This impulse was quite unchecked by repeated failures, and each time it seemed a more dangerous case than before when we were left to the waste of water again.

I find this is getting to be quite a long letter about nothing, so I will wind it up before it gets longer by sending my most affectionate earnest and grateful regard to Miss Coutts, and the assurance to you, my dear Miss[†2] Brown, that I continually live over again, the years that lie behind us.

Ever Your attached friend
CHARLES DICKENS

As you date, generally, "Tavistock", I think it perhaps safest to address this to Stratton Street. I remain here until just before Christmas Day.

To W. H. WILLS, 24 OCTOBER 1862

MS Huntington Library.

Paris. rue du Faubourg St. Honoré, 27
Friday Twenty Fourth October, 1862

My Dear Wills. First as to Miss Parr's([1[sic]][†3] story. It is very pretty, and decidedly accepted—but whether for the Xmas No. or no, I cannot yet positively say.([2[sic]][†4]

Because the best of the papers that come in, must be taken for that, and some may come in that would fit better both to the general idea and the demand for variety in the contents.

I don't much like the scheme for the next No.[†1] it looks so excessively patchworky. But I will go carefully over it and the printer's list, in good time for Wednesday.

The Foray in the Ballad Country, I think may be distributed.

Pay Miss Power,[†2] and also for her sister's[†3] "at Home at Panama".[†4]

I find the enclosed two A.Y.R. papers among my letters brought away from England. I have nothing else.

We have a most elegant little apartment here; the lively street in front, and a splendid courtyard of great private hotels behind, between us and the Champs Elysées. I have never seen anything in Paris, so pretty, airy, and light. But house rent is fearfully and wonderfully dear.

High upon the Boulevard,[†5] the old groupe of Theatres that used to be so characteristic, is knocked to pieces, and preparations for some amazing new street are in rapid progress. I couldn't find my way yesterday to the Poste Restante, without looking at a Map!—I suppose I have been there, at least 50 times before. Wherever I turn, I see some astounding new work, doing or done. When you come over here for the Xmas No. (as I think you must!) you shall see sights.

Ever Faithfully
CD.

Love to Frank.

To HENRY MORLEY, [?29 OCTOBER 1862]

Mention in To Wills, 4 Nov 62. Date: written "last Wednesday" (29 Oct).

Telling him to hold over "The English Convict's Progress",[†6] a proposed paper for AYR.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?END OCTOBER 1862]

Extract in F, VII, v, 606*n*. Date: 13 Oct 62, according to Forster, wrongly; perhaps end Oct, after travelling in France.

I see my books in French at every railway station, great or small.

November

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 2 NOVEMBER 1862*

MS Huntington Library.

Paris. rue du Faubourg St. Honoré, 27
Second November 1862

My Dear Ouvry.

Your letter has just got here from Gad's Hill.

Not one syllable have I ever heard from Cobb, or the blessed Brooker. I suppose we cannot do better than let the B.B. alone?

Young Essell is an odd fellow. When I last saw him, he told me they had been so occupied with a certain Crown Case, that they had not had leisure to "go into the School Meadow" with you. I naturally supposed (as you did, I take it?) that they would come out with a price.

The Meadow is, in round numbers, 8 acres. What shall we do? Offer to exchange Brooker's land against it, or give them[†1] a sum? I think I would make both proposals, leaving them to select the alternative. Then what sum? I suppose it would be useless to make it less than £1,200? They wouldn't take £1000? Would they? You see, the Meadow I really want far more than Brooker's land (supposing we don't exchange) because that ground, being freehold, would manifestly increase the value of my little place. Decide between the two sums as you think best.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Frederic Ouvry Esquire

To THOMAS BEARD, 4 NOVEMBER 1862

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Place | Maida Hill | London W.

Paris. rue du Faubourg St. Honoré, 27
Fourth November, 1862

My Dear Beard

Mary, Georgina, and I, are here until just before Christmas Day.

I am going to ask you rather a startling, staggering question. Hold up, therefore!

If I were to decide to go and read in Australia, how stand your inclination and spirits for going with me? Outside term of absence, a year. Period of departure, May or June. Overland journey both ways. The journey and climate are said to be wonderful restorers. The work would be, seconding the Inimitable in the ring, delivering him at the scratch in fine condition, keeping off the crowd, polishing him up when at all punished, and checking the local accounts. The Arthur Smith class of arrangements would necessarily have to be made by the Colonial sharer, and my bottle-holder would merely in all things represent me. A servant should go, to valet both of us, and make washing and dressing easy.

Observe. I don't in the least know that I shall go. But supposing I did re-open the question with the Australian people, and supposing the negociations did proceed to the going point, and supposing you did like the notion of what such a trip would ensure you free of all expense, do you feel equal to it? There are not six men in the world, I would go with—and I don't know the other five!

I cannot too strongly put to you when I come bursting at you with this surprising question, the extreme uncertainty in which the matter stands. But I am wavering between reading in Australia, and writing a book at home; that, in strict confidence, is the whole truth. If I were to go to Australia, I would not let myself out, but would go with my own capital and on my own account. The man who came over to bid for me, has gone back. "Shall I write out to him and ask him on what terms he will become my agent?" is the question that revives in my mind. I may not write at all. I may write, and his reply may be such that it will come to nothing three months hence. But constantly disturbed and dazzled by the great chances that seem to lie waiting over there, I am restless—and this mark of confidence in my old comrade is the very first form my restlessness has shaped out for itself.

I parted with the bidder thus:— "I cannot go now, I don't know that I ever can go, and therefore terms are not in question. But if I can ever make up my mind to go, I will certainly communicate with your Melbourne House." †a[He opened the business with me by producing a letter of credit for £10,000.]†a Write me a word when you get your breath again.

Startlingly always
THE INIMITABLE.

Thomas Beard Esquire

To CHARLES FECHTER, 4 NOVEMBER 1862

Text from MDGH, II, 183-4.

Paris, rue du Faubourg St. Honoré, 27.
Tuesday, Nov. 4th, 1862

My Dear Fechter,

You know, I believe, how our letters crossed, and that I am here until Christmas. Also, you know with what pleasure and readiness I should have responded to your invitation if I had been in London.

Pray tell Paul Féval[†1] that I shall be charmed to know him, and that I shall feel the strongest interest in making his acquaintance. It almost puts me out of humour with Paris (and it takes a great deal to do that!) to think that I was not at home to prevail upon him to come with you, and be welcomed to Gad's Hill; but either there or here, I hope to become his friend before this present old year is out. Pray tell him so.

You say nothing in your note of your Lyceum preparations.[†1] I trust they are all going on well. There is a fine opening for you, I am sure, with a good beginning; but the importance of a good beginning is very great. If you ever have time and inclination to tell me in a short note what you are about, you can scarcely interest me more, as my wishes and strongest sympathies are for and with your success—mais cela va sans dire.

I went to the Châtelet[†2] (a beautiful theatre!) the other night to see "Rothomago,"[†3] but was so mortally gêné[†4] with the poor nature of the piece and of the acting, that I came out again when there was a week or two (I mean an hour or two, but the hours seemed weeks) yet to get through.

My dear Fechter, very faithfully yours always
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To CHARLES LEVER, 4 NOVEMBER 1862

MS Widener Collection, Harvard.

Paris. rue du Faubourg St. Honoré, 27
Tuesday Fourth November 1862

My Dear Lever

Behold my address here, until just before Xmas. In respect of Chapman and Hall, refer all your business to me: resting fully assured that I will accept your part in it whenever it comes, and will do my best with it.

Indeed I suppose (this in answer to yours) that few men are more restless than I am, and that few sleep in more strange beds and dine at more new cooks' shops. But sundry ties and troubles confine my present oscillations to between this place and England—and I fear the South and I are separated by months at least.

As to contributions—decidely yes! always rejoiced to have them![†5]

Paris is more amazing than ever, and the Genius of the Lamp is always building Palaces in the night.[†6]—But he charges for them in the article of rent, in a manner altogether Parisian and not in the least Arabian.[†7]

The last time I was here as a resident,[†1] I went to the Theatres with Scribe;[†2] and the last time but one,[†3] Victor Hugo[†4] had the most fantastic of apartments,[†5] and stood in the midst of it, a little fine-featured fiery-eyed gallant fellow. Now, Scribe is in Pere la Chaise,[†6] and the fantastic apartment is in the Channel Islands[†7] and Victor Hugo is an old photograph in the shops, with a quenched eye and a stubbly beard and no likeness to anyone I ever saw.

My Dear Lever | Ever affectionately Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To W. H. WILLS, 4 NOVEMBER 1862

MS Huntington Library.

Paris, rue du Faubourg St. Honoré, 27
Tuesday Fourth November 1862

My Dear Wills. I find that my means of suggesting the contents of the next No.[†8] are extremely limited, for I have proofs only of "Windbags"[†9]—"Under the black and Yellow"—"The Shamrock",[†10]—and some of the Persian Papers.[†11]

Windbags may go in; but call it

[†a]CRITICAL BULLS
IN HISTORICAL CHINA-SHOPS.[†a]

The Shamrock is just nothing at all, and really not worth inserting. "Under the Black and Yellow" will just do, but will not more than just do, because the writer always does the same thing and rides somewhere to save somebody.[†12] When it goes in, observe (besides looking it well over for the pointing) that "vetturino" in the fourth paragraph, ought to be "vetturini;" and that "Inglesea" at the bottom of the same slip, ought to be "Inglesi". But I think that for this No. Sala's[†13] Bleeding Diamond[†14] (out of the question for the Xmas No.) may be better than Under the black and yellow. I would put it last.[†15]

I should like a Natural History sort of article in the middle of the No. Unless I am mistaken, Down from the Clouds[†1] has not yet gone in? That would do very well. If you have Morley's Laboratory paper in connexion with the Poisoning question,[†2] by all means get that in, and don't delay it.[†3] (I wrote to Morley last Wednesday, telling him to hold over the English Convict's Progress, because I have never seen the paper, and it is a subject on which I have written strongly.)[†4]

Therefore you have in hand

No Name
Down from the Clouds
Critical Bulls in Historical China-Shops
Perhaps Morley's article on the Poison-Test Laboratory
Legend of the Bleeding Diamond
Persian Papers.[†5]

Taking No Name for the beginning, and The Legend of the Bleeding Diamond for the end, and following No Name with Critical Bulls—or, if the varying of foreign subjects with English, should render it more advisable, with Persian Papers (not overmuch of them)—take Morley (if you have him), or Down from the Clouds for the middle, and so make up.[†6] On no consideration put in any Poem that I have not seen.[†7] When I come upon a strange Poem in print and publication, my distress is abject.

According to my Diary, Monday the 17th. is the day for making up the Xmas No. As soon as you know for certain when you will come over, let me know. It will be a very difficult making-up, because I have written 20 pages (I suppose), and already there must be no end of Xmas Nos. got, and getting, into type, and generally the things run long. But I read every paper as soon as it comes here, and keep myself well primed about them all, to make selection easier bye and bye.

Will you ask whether my watch has come to the office from Hunt and Roskell's? And if not, will you send there for it? It went to have a new spring, and in the meantime they lent me one which goes like the Clown's in a Pantomime.

Ever Faithfully CD.

To MRS HENRY AUSTIN, 7 NOVEMBER 1862†

MS Morgan Library.

Paris, Rue Du Faubourg St. Honoré, 27
Friday Seventh November 1862

My Dear Letitia

I should have written to you from here sooner, but for having been constantly occupied. The Christmas No. obliges me to go over such an astonishing quantity of Proofs at this time of the year (besides writing myself), that when I have done my day's work, which involves a pretty large correspondence too, I am glad to get up and go out. Moreover—this is a secret—I am again deliberating whether I will or will not go away for a whole year, and read in Australia; and there are so many reasons for and against, and I am so very unwilling to go, that it causes me great uneasiness of mind in trying to do right and to decide for the best.

[†a]Your improved account of yourself is very cheering and hopeful. Through determined occupation and action, lies the way. Be sure of it.

I came over to France before Georgina and Mary, and went to Boulogne to meet them coming in by the steamer on the great Sunday—the day of the storm.[†1] I stood (holding on with both hands) on the Pier at Boulogne, five hours. The sub-marine Telegraph had Telegraphed their boat as having come out of Folkestone—though the Companion-boat from Boulogne didn't try it— and at 9 o'Clock at night, she being due at 6, there were no signs of her. My principal dread was, that she would try to get into Boulogne: which she could not possibly have done without carrying away everything on deck. The tide at 9 o'Clock being too low for any such desper[ate][†2] attempt, I thought it likely that they had run for the Downs and would knock about there all night. So I went to the Inn to dry my pea jacket and got some dinner anxiously enough, when, at about 10, came a Telegram from them at Calais to say they had run in there. To Calais I went, post, next morning, expecting to find them half dead (of course they had arrived half drowned), but I found them elaborately got up to come on to Paris by the next Train; and the most wonderful thing of all was, that they hard[ly][†2] seemed to have been frightened! Of course they had discovered at the end of the Voyage, that a young bride and her husband, the only other passengers on deck and with whom they had been talking all the time, were an officer from Chatham whom they knew very well (when dry) just married, and going to India! So they all set up housekeeping together, at Dessin's at Calais (where I am well known), and looked as if they had been passing a mild summer there.

We have a pretty apartment here, but house rent is awful to mention. Georgina keeps wonderfully better, and Mary is very well, and they send love. Mrs. Bouncer (muzzled by the Parisian Police) is also here, and is a wonderful spectacle to behold in the streets, restrained like a raging Lion.[†a]

My decision as to reading in London (in February if I read at all)[†3] will be mainly guided by my decision on the more difficult and more extensive reading question.[†4] It has been proposed to me to read here, but I don't think I shall entertain the idea;[†5]—I seem to have enough to think about, without it.

We have no news from London.

[†a]I learn from our Embassy here, that the Emperor has just made an earnest proposal to our Government to unite with France (and Russia, if Russia will), in an appeal to America to stop the brutal War. Our government's answer is not yet received; but I think I clearly perceive that the proposal will be declined, on the ground "that the time has not yet come."[†a]

Ever affectionately

CD.

To W. H. WILLS, 7 NOVEMBER 1862

MS Huntington Library.

Paris, rue du Faubourg St. Honoré, 27
Friday Seventh November, 1862

My Dear Wills. We certainly are getting the Columns up, to an amazing extent! But I cannot release any of the matter until you come, because the Xmas No. can only be made up, on a careful comparison of the relative merits and possibilities of the best things we have.

Let me know whether, when you arrive, you propose to come straight here. If so, we will try to get you a bedroom close at hand, and I think we can do it without difficulty at a clean little hotel over the way. But if your Imperial Charge[†1] should involve your going to any other Hotel at first, then let me know as much, so that we may not provide for you in vain. I will ask you to bring my watch, and perhaps a pair of trousers; but on this head, more in due course.

I saw the advertisement yesterday, at the top of Olliffe's Times.[†2]

(—And I am again revolving restlessly, Australia in my head!)

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To W. H. WILLS, 11 NOVEMBER 1862

MS Huntington Library.

Paris, | Tuesday Eleventh November, 1862

My Dear Wills. Will you tell Mrs. Linton that, in looking over her admirable account (most admirable) of Mrs. Gordon's book,[†3] I have taken out the references to Lockhart,[†4]—not because I in the least doubt their justice, but because I knew him and he liked me. And because, one bright day in Rome,[†5] I walked about with him for some hours when he was dying fast,[†1] and all the old faults had faded out of him, and the mere ghost of the handsome man I had first known when Scott's daughter was at the head of his house[†2] had little more to do with this world than she in her grave, or Scott in his, or small Hugh Littlejohn[†3] in his. Lockhart had been anxious to see me all the previous day (when I was away on the Campagna), and as we walked about I knew very well that he knew very well, why. He talked of getting better, but I never saw him again. This makes me stay Mrs. Linton's hand, gentle as it is.

Next as to your coming. In order that you may be over the way, just opposite (an immense convenience compared with having to go round to the Rue de Rivoli or elsewhere) I have taken you a room for a week from next Thursday. On Saturday morning, unless you advise me to the contrary, you will find it ready for you, and a good fire there. We will breakfast here at halfpast 9. Observe: Your number is 38 Rue du Faubourg St. Honoré; ours is 27. †aThe No. of your room itself, is 7. Your house is called The Hotel St. Honoré.†a Bring treasure with you, because I think A.Y.R. must stand a Restaurant Dinner,†4 and a Box at the Play.

—Also will you bring me, if you conveniently can, the following articles.

1. Cash for the enclosed cheque, in Gold.
2. My watch.
3. The Nos. of A.Y.R. from No. 182 inclusive
4. A pair of new trousers from Skinners my tailors,†5 if John has received such a parcel since I left.

Your idea of our title being taken hold of by "sharks and pirates" (see Larboard Fin)†6 had also come into my head, and when you wrote to me, I was going to write to you!! I wonder the reeling brain of Holsworth bears all this pressure. But its weakness (excessive) is probably its strength.

I write all that concerns tomorrow's make-up on the other side, in order that you may have it by itself for reference.

For your guidance when you come over, I enclose a list of the Xmas No. papers, received from Birtles this morning.†7 I have put a mark X against †b*all the papers that have come to me.*†b

Faithfully Ever

CD.

— X - 160 —

CONCERNING NO. 188.†1

I cannot take your Make Up as it stands, because two of the papers included in it, are perfectly unknown to me; and at least one of them—the French Soldier†2—is on a very important subject indeed. Because I have convinced myself in my French wanderings this summer, that the French soldier is being improved, in a most alarming manner, every day, and that ours is at least a century behind him.

You will understand from the foregoing, that I have no Proof of a French Soldier, or of a Clear Title to Land.†3 If the latter be a useful article (as I suppose), some such Make Up as this, would be the best

No Name	14¾
John Wilson	9

A Clear Title to Land or at Home at Tehran[†4]	}	say 5
Small Beer Chronicles[†5]		9½
ONE [†6] of Mr. Harwood's[†7] Stories[†8] reduced to the cols wanting.[†9]

I think "A Cheap Passage Home"[†10] is the best of his Stories. I have no corrections to make in "Virgilius The Enchanter",[†11] so that too is available.

To THOMAS BEARD, 15 NOVEMBER 1862

MS Dickens House. Address: Angleterre | Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Place | Maida Hill | London | W.

Paris, Rue du Faubourg St. Honoré, 27
Saturday Fifteenth November, 1862

My Dear Beard.

I feel that I have no right to argue the case with you, as you state it in the letter which breathes your own spirit and rectitude. And yet there are half a dozen words which I think I ought not to leave unsaid, because they seem essential to the plainness of the case and its completeness.

On my side of the question (I adopt your phrase because there is no better one), I think all requisites are embodied in a gentleman and an attached friend. I think no other combination of qualities would be half so efficient.

On your side of the question, I suppose the mere money advantage to represent some four or five years of present employment at home. I also take into account the probability that the kind of repute attaching to such an experience and trust, would be helpful afterwards.

Those two paragraphs sum up all that I want to explain.

I have come to no decision; and I find the difficulty of making up my mind, enormous. The Indian idea is a fine one, but it might be that Australia and Tasmania would fill up all the time—and pocket too. And I have a notion that I could perhaps see that country in its present early state of transition, from some point of view (for after-use in faction) that has not yet struck any man's fancy. I spoke to Bulwer about it, here, the other day; and his unlimited confidence in this possibility was almost absurd.—It certainly was immensely greater than mine.

Georgy and Mary send their best love, and say (shaking their heads over their work), "but he never comes to Gad's." It is of no use my urging "he won't", or "he can't"; they reply (you know what the sex is),

"its because you don't fix a time." Hereupon, I tear my hair, and exclaim "Damn it, I do fix a time" (you know my passing bursts after the manner of my poor father); they only shake their heads again, and I scowl at them gloomily, and pretend that I am not looking at them. Now come. The Saturday or Sunday after Christmas Day. Can't you come to us for a couple of days then? Katie will be with us, I dare say—and my son Charley—and his preposterous child.[†1] Think of the unmitigated nonsense of an inimitable grandfather!

My Dear Beard | Ever Faithfully

CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?11-16 NOVEMBER 1862]

Extract in F, VIII, vi, 693*n*. Date: To Beard, 15 Nov, makes it clear that "last Sunday" was the 9th; this letter, therefore, probably written the following week (11-16 Nov).

I mentioned the question to Bulwer when he dined with us here last Sunday, and he was all for going. He said that not only did he think the whole population would go to the Readings, but that the country would strike me in some quite new aspect for a book; and that wonders might be done with such book in the way of profit, over there as well as here.

To MADAME VIARDOT,[†1] 17 NOVEMBER 1862*

MS Mr William S. Kundig.

rue du Faubourg St. Honoré, 27
Monday Seventeenth November 1862

My Dear Madame Viardot.

I am delighted to have your letter, for I can most honestly assure you— though on second thoughts I believe you know it already—that your wonderful powers as a great and true artist, make you one of the most interesting people in the world to me.

My Sub Editor has come over from London with a quantity of work for me to do, and while he remains I am not sure of my time. But I lose none in walking up to your house with him, and leaving my card with this note.

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS WINTER,[†2] 17 NOVEMBER 1862

Text from N, III, 320; MS ([aa]) Huntington Library.[†3]

Paris, Rue du Faubourg St. Honoré, 27
Monday, Seventeenth November 1862

My Dear Maria,

I had read in Galignani that your poor father[†4] was dead,[†5] before I received your [a]touching account of his last moments. Of course I could not be surprised, knowing his great age, by the wearing out of his vitality; but—almost equally of course—it was a shock too. For all the old Past comes out of its grave when I think of him, and the Ghosts of a good many years stand about his memory.

He died among his children, and could have died with no better words and no better hopes. God be thanked for it, and may such mercy and comfort be in store for us!

Always Yours affectionately

CHARLES DICKENS

Pray give my kind regard to Margaret[†6] and your brother.[†7a]

To JOHN FORSTER, [20 NOVEMBER 1862]

Extract in F, VII, v, 613*n*. Date: Forster dates 30 Nov 62 incorrectly; CD saw Orphée et Eurydice on 19 Nov: see To Mme Viardot, 20 Nov and n.

Last night I saw Madame Viardot do Gluck's Orphée. It is a most extraordinary performance—pathetic in the highest degree, and full of quite sublime acting. Though it is unapproachably fine from first to last, the beginning of it, at the tomb of Eurydice, is a thing that I cannot remember at this moment of writing, without emotion. It is the finest presentation of grief that I can imagine, and when she has received hope from the gods and encouragement to go into the other world and seek Eurydice, Viardot's manner of taking the relinquished lyre from the tomb and becoming radiant again, is most noble. Also she recognises Eurydice's touch, when at length the hand is put in hers from behind, like a most transcendent genius. And when, yielding to Eurydice's entreaties, she has turned round and slain her with a look, her despair over the body is grand in the extreme. It is worth a journey to Paris to see; for there is no such Art to be otherwise looked upon. Her husband stumbled over me by mere chance, and took me to her dressing-room. Nothing could have happened better as a genuine homage to the performance, for I was disfigured with crying.

To MADAME VIARDOT, 20 NOVEMBER 1862

MS M and Mme Le Cesne.

Faubourg St. Honoré

Thursday Twentieth November 1862

My Dear Madame Viardot.

I cannot help it. I must thank you for that wonderful performance of last night.[†1] When Monsieur Viardot[†2] came upon me by accident, I was holding forth about the first act, to my daughter and sister in law, with tears rolling down my face. I came to you in hardly a better condition.[†3] I went away when all was done, in a worse. Nothing can be more magnificent, more true, more tender, more beautiful, more profound!

Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

To THE HON. ROBERT LYTTON, 21 NOVEMBER 1862*

MS Public Record Office, Copenhagen.

Paris. Rue du Faubourg St. Honoré, 27
Friday Twenty First November, 1862

My Dear Robert Lytton

Pray let me have the little Poems you mention. I shall be delighted to have them for publication.

After considering the matter, I think I cannot do better than instruct Wills (which I have done), to send you, next week, my excised and [lopped proof of][†1] to look over. If you approve of its insertion in a regular No. in that state, I shall then insert it for its own sake. If you disapprove, and think you would rather keep it by you than have it so pruned, tell me so, and the type shall be distributed, and the MS restored to you. In any case, the MS shall be preserved. Be assured that neither course will in the least put me out, and that I mean exactly what I write.

Faithfully Yours ever
CHARLES DICKENS

To W. H. WILLS, 21 NOVEMBER 1862

MS Huntington Library.

Paris, | Friday Twenty First November, 1862

My Dear Wills.

I see that Mrs. Gaskell[†2] has put a name to her story—at the end, instead of the beginning—which is characteristic. The addition of one word will make it a striking name. Call the story —and don't confound it with a cold night's work: which you must have had last night.

A DARK NIGHT'S WORK.[†3]

You got to London safe and sound, and found Mrs. Wills ditto ditto? All send kindest regard. The breakfast-corner looked quite unfurnished this morning when I went in, without you and Galignani.

Ever Faithfully
CD.

To R. H. HORNE, 22 NOVEMBER 1862*

MS Johns Hopkins University.

Paris. Saturday Twenty Second November, 1862

My Dear Horne. I am here until Christmas, and have been abroad and about, for several weeks. Your letter reached me not long ago. I have considered its main subject carefully, and believe that under the circumstances an attempt to secure your appointment to the non-existent office[†1] would be quite hopeless. That my interference would not advance the matter, I am convinced. Official luminaries have no liking for me who laid my impious hand on the sacred Circumlocution Office.[†2] Perfectly well knowing the genuine nature of the claims you set forth in your letter, I would have (nevertheless) approached the illustrious presence of Tape[†3] with my testimony to them, if there had been any Archimedes standing-point[†4] from which to work a lever. But, as I see the case, there is none. Nor can I imagine the likelihood of your friends in England being of two minds on the question.

Again I thank you for your advice as to Australian Readings, which I shall not fail to bear in mind. I cannot resolve altogether to abandon the idea, and yet it is immensely difficult to resolve to pursue it.

My Dear Horne | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To AUSTEN HENRY LAYARD, 23 NOVEMBER 1862

MS British Library.

Paris, rue du Faubourg St. Honoré, 27
Sunday Twenty Third November, 1862

My Dear Layard,

Many thanks for your kind letter. I will write to Lord Russell forthwith.

Yours was forwarded to me here by this morning's post. We are staying here (my daughter, her aunt, and I) until Christmas and were vexed to learn that you had been in Paris without our knowing it.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

A. H. Layard Esquire

To THE EARL RUSSELL, [?23 NOVEMBER 1862]

Mention in last. Date: CD no doubt wrote the same day.

To W. H. WILLS, 25 NOVEMBER 1862

MS Huntington Library.

Paris. | Tuesday Twenty Fifth November, 1862.

My Dear Wills. With the alteration I am going to mention, I prefer the enclosed make-up.[†1]

It is not a No. strong enough for Ollier's[†2] Poem (which is maudlin), if any thing can be put into its place.[†3] What I should like best, would be to get in some reasonably good prose article, after Murray;[†4] getting the excess it would occasion, out of the Cotton paper.[†5] I see no such article in the List, but perhaps you may have one in MS. Something light and pleasant in that place—and no poem—would be a great improvement.[†6]

It is not worth while my posting the proofs this time; I go on to add all I have to say respecting them.

Take out of Murray any thing "swell"[†7]—such as the word "shindy",[†8] or any similar yaw-yawdom.[†9] Take out his last paragraph, touching his gallant steed, altogether.[†10]

In cutting the Cotton Paper to such dimensions as you can find room for, take nothing out of the first slip. Because the Manchester School deserves all the schooling it can get, touching its reduction to the grossest absurdity of the supply-and-demand dogmatism, and its pig-headed reliance on men's not-going to war against their interest. [†a]As if the vices and passions of men had not been running counter to their interests since the Creation of the World![†a†11]

Miss Edwards[†12] I have done.[†13]

"Fire" had best be distributed—paid for, of course. It is a mere dilution—and a very dry one—of a very well known paper in H.W.

If Spicer is in town, couldn't he do a droll paper, representing himself, a Londoner, as having—say seven—quiet visitors from the country (Rule Britannia Britons every one of them, regarding other Empires and States as in mere outer darkness); and giving the particulars of their all being knocked down, garrotted, choked, robbed, and half murdered, in one day? Or Mr. Halliday[†1] might do such a thing.[†2]

The more I think of Never say Die, the less I like it. There is no weight in it, and it is weakly open to all kinds of joking. Something more expressive of No Surrender would be better. Something like Thorough—True to the Death— Onward—Firm as a Rock—Perseverance—Nailed to the Mast—True to the Colours—would be more like it, if I understand the intention.[†3]

I mean to cross over on Friday afternoon, so as to get all Saturday in town. I want to see about Frank's prospects and other things. Will you tell John to have ready for my dinner at 6 on Friday, a bit of fish and a nice little joint of mutton, and will you tell him that Edmund Yates will probably dine with me. I shall expect the honor of Frank's company, of course (please tell him), unless he is otherwise engaged.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To FREDERICK LOCKER,[†4] 27 NOVEMBER 1862*

MS Armstrong Browning Library. Address: Fredk. Locker Esquire | St. James's Palace | S.W.

Paris, Thursday Twenty Seventh November 1862

Dear Sir

I have been abroad for several weeks past and am here until Christmas. Your obliging note has been forwarded to me, but your book[†5] awaits me in London. I beg to thank you for both.

Believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Fredk. Locker Esquire

December

To W. H. WILLS, 3 DECEMBER 1862*

MS Huntington Library.

Paris | Wednesday Third December, 1862

My Dear Wills.

My being a day behind my time this week, happens well enough. I have gone over Charles Collins[†1] carefully, and have made a correction or two in his paper. I have queried one or two passages where the printing is absurd. Look to the printing too. I shall be very glad to enter into the subscription you propose. I gave £20 before, to the Lord Mayor's Committee, and am ready to give another £20 now, [†a]or another £10 now, and another in reserve, as you may think best.[†2] Decide freely.[†a] When I gave my former money, it was clearly shewn by most of the wise men that it was absurd and needless; and I particularly remember your friend Novelli[†3] (at a rather profuse dinner) expatia[ting][†4] to me on the folly of a subscription. Still on the whole, I seemed then, and seem now, to descry faint gleams of reason for it.

The arming of the South is out of date, and Thornbury's paper is a mere absurdity and a very old one.[†5] It can easily be returned to him without offence, on the ground that I consider the subject too serious to be humorous upon at this time, when the late conspiracies and murders are still fresh,[†6] and when the peasantry are still shielding a bloody villain from justice.[†7] I think the No. had best stand

No Name	14 ½
An Act of Mercy	13 ½
Little Matters	2 ½
Wood and Straw Music	5 ½
Coming into a Fortune.	12 [†8]

Or, if it would fit as well, you might use "A Reform much Needed"[†9] (returned with this, and corrected) instead of Wood and Straw Music. Virgilius the Enchanter[†10] would go best in that place, but I fear it is too long.[†11]

I think something must have gone wrong in the sending out of the Xmas No.? Ours have not yet arrived here.

Fechter's MS[†1] will have been in time for Chorley. My journey back was in all things prosperous.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To MRS HENRY AUSTIN, 4 DECEMBER 1862*

MS Morgan Library.

Faubourg St. Honoré
Thursday Fourth December, 1862

My Dear Letitia. I am sorry to hear of the neuralgia, but it is very likely owing to the journey and the change. As to me, I have decided nothing; though I rather think the balance is slightly turning in my mind against Australia.

That project which your were turning over when you wrote from Havre (and which I have considered since), still involves the difficulty of a speculation; that is to say, you could not proceed to carry it out, without incurring some extra charges both for rent and furniture. This involves us again, in all the old doubts.

Enclosed is a note from Mary asking Amelia[†2] and you to come and dine with us alone, on Monday. I want to know—when you yourself know—whether you are going over to England with us on the 22nd. or about that time. (We may possibly go on the 20th.) Also, what are you going to do with your Christmas? Will you come to Gad's with us, or have you any other plan?

Ever affecy.

CD.

To W. H. WILLS, 4 DECEMBER 1862

MS Huntington Library.

Paris, | Thursday Fourth December 1862

My Dear Wills. I am so apprehensive of some pervading mistake (which may involve other things) having been made at the Office about the Xmas No. that I send you another letter to day, to let you know that no presentation Xmas No. has arrived here. We have none, Lady Molesworth has none, Lady Olliffe has none. I have sent round this morning to make sure of the fact. It has made me rather ridiculous, as they besieged me for the No. on my return, and I had brought none, in order that I might not confuse the office arrangements. But this is nothing;—the grave thing is the break-down of three packets—which suggests thirty—or three hundred—or three thousand.[†1]

Ever Faithfully

CD.

Since writing the above, I have seen Lehmann. He, too, has none.

To CLARKSON STANFIELD, 5 DECEMBER 1862

MS Yale University Library. Address (envelope, Sotheby's Catalogue, Dec 1964): Angleterre | Clarkson Stanfield Esquire R. A. | The Green Hill | Hampstead | near | London | N. W. PM Paris 5 Dec 62.

Paris, rue du Faubourg St. Honoré, 27
Friday Fifth December, 1862

My Dear Stanny.

We have been here for two months, and I shall probably come back here after Christmas (we go home for Christmas week) and stay on into February. But I shall write and propose a Theatre before Christmas is out, so this is to warn you to get yourself into working Pantomime order!

I hope Wills has duly sent you our new Christmas No. As you may like to know what I myself wrote of it, understand the Dick contributions to be, His Leaving it till called for, and his wonderful end, his Boots, and his Brown paper parcel.

Since you were at Gad's Hill, I have been travelling a good deal, and looking up many odd things for use. I want to know how you are in health and spirits, and it would be the greatest of pleasures to me to have a line under your hand.

God bless you and yours with all the blessings of the time of year, and of all times!

Ever Your affectionate and faithful

DICK.

To W.H. WILLS, 5 DECEMBER 1862*

MS Huntington Library.

Paris | Friday Fifth December, 1862

My Dear Wills. Our own Xmas Nos. have arrived—at last—this morning. But unless other foreign Xmas Nos. were also reposted, they certainly have not arrived even now. I will inquire, and report in a postscript.

You sent one to Stanfield?

I am pleased by young Jullien's[†1] letter, because I know my Corporal[†2] to be true to the life,—as true as his garrison-town[†2] is.

What you tell me of your poor sister,[†3] is very sad and touching. But I should say for certain that in any case she would be far far better (as she and her illness are concerned) on the Forest Hill side of London[†4] than on yours.

Keep me up to news of the Xmas no.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

The other Nos. have NOT[†5] arrived!

To CHARLES FECHTER, 6 DECEMBER 1862

Text from MDGH, II, 185-6.

Paris,
Saturday, 6 December 1862

My Dear Fechter,

I have read "The White Rose" attentively, and think it an extremely good play. It is vigorously written with a great knowledge of the stage, and presents many striking situations. I think the close particularly fine, impressive, bold, and new.

But I greatly doubt the expediency of your doing any historical play early in your management. By the words "historical play," I mean a play founded on any incident in English history. Our public are accustomed to associate historical plays with Shakespeare. In any other hands, I believe they care very little for crowns and dukedoms. What you want is something with an interest of a more domestic and general nature—an interest as romantic as you please, but having a more general and wider response than a disputed succession to the throne can have for Englishmen at this time of day. Such interest culminated in the last Stuart, and has worn itself out. It would be uphill work to evoke an interest in Perkin Warbeck.[†6]

I do not doubt the play's being well received, but my fear is that these people would be looked upon as mere abstractions, and would have but a cold welcome in consequence, and would not lay hold of your audience. Now, when you have laid hold of your audience and have accustomed them to your theatre, you may produce "The White Rose,"[†7] with far greater justice to the author, and to the manager also. Wait. Feel your way. Perkin Warbeck is too far removed from analogy with the sympathies and lives of the people for a beginning.

My dear Fechter, ever faithfully yours

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To E. S. DALLAS,[†1] 7 DECEMBER 1862

MS University of Texas, Austin.[†2]

Paris. rue du Faubourg St. Honoré, 27
Sunday Seventh December, 1862

My Dear Sir

Your affecting letter has made a great impression on me, and fills me with anxiety for our dear good Elliotson. The warmest affection for him and admiration of him, I have had for years, and no circumstances could intensify those feelings; but you present him in a light so very touching and distressing, that I find it hard to recover my composure and see our way clearly.

And yet the main part of your letter is not new to me. From Chauncy Townshend[†3] (with whom[†4] I have, habitually, relations as confidential as those [in][†5] which you and I now stand) I received an account a year and a half ago, of Elliotson's despondency and tendency to suicide. We observed him carefully, and the darkest part of the cloud passed. But neither Townshend nor I supposed his professional or other worldly affairs to be as bad as you describe them to be.

I am not sanguine as to my power of persuasion with the sisters.[†6] But this does not in the least influence me as to my readiness to undertake the task of mediating between Elliotson and them. I think I might be able to open the mediation by addressing a kind of letter to them proposing to see them, which they could scarcely throw aside.

It is unnecessary, I am sure, to tell you that I will do anything; and that I cannot do too much for the good, kind, noble, admirable fellow. So I at once pass on to my plans—as they stood, that is to say,[†7] before I read your letter this morning. Understand that a word from you by Telegraph, would—without at all alarming me or leading me to suppose that anything worse [had][†5] happened —bring me to meet you in London, by the next Express Train.

On Monday the 22nd. I leave here with my daughter and her Aunt, and go straight home to Gad's Hill for Christmas. (Gad's Hill is within 30 miles of London, and little more than an hour's journey by North Kent Railway.) There, I remain until about the 8th. of January, when I return here alone for a month or six weeks. I have some engagements to fulfil here at that time, and have promised to read, at our Embassy, for a certain charitable British Society.

The course I am going to recommend, I incline to, in balancing the difficulties of the case, as the one that would[†4] be most gradual, and therefore least likely to give our friend[†4] any painful shock. (I very much doubt, I should cause[†4] his breaking down if I called upon him without notification.[†4] I think he has an exaggerated notion of my self-reliance,[†4] which would put him upon his).

If you were to say to him "I have written to Dickens and I have received the most earnest of answers, and he is so anxious[†4] about you that he is coming over from Paris tomorrow on[†4] purpose to see you, and see your sisters, and help me in giving you any comfort and support that friendship can render",—and if you make that communication to him with all the tenderness and fervor for which you have full warrant—don't you think it would be a great beginning? If you did this, tomorrow (Monday), and afterwards simply telegraphed to me, "Yes",— we would dine at my office in Wellington Street at ½ past 6 on Tuesday, take counsel together, and then go straight to him.

I assume next, that you may see some objection to this course—may have observed some little thing since you wrote, disposing you to hesitate about it. In that case, shall I meet you at Dover on Wednesday? The boat from Calais will be due there, at half past 3 in the afternoon, and you could get on [to B]ell's[†1] afterwards.

Of the two courses I think the former the better, because we might have some dreadful reason for thinking "If we had but acted at once!"—

Another thing.—Have you had any opportunity of observing how he stands affected towards Forster? He has been in close attendance both on Forster and his wife, and Forster has the strongest belief in him and respect for him, and I know he has both the will and the power to serve him, and he has great tenderness under a tough exterior, and is a very sound adviser in such a case. If Elliotson have taken no little offence against him—which he is apt to do, as supposing himself slighted in some trifling social way—I think Forster would prove an invaluable ally. If you should be of this mind, and should telegraph "Yes", [add][†5] "Forster" to that word, and I would warn him to come to the office. I ought to add perhaps, that I have never told Forster what Townshend told me. The attack of apoplexy, I think he knew of at the time.

I do not at all despair of our being able to persuade Elliotson to retire, or of our being able to reconcile him to the idea. Of course in this hope, as in all hope concerning him, there is the alloy that his brain has lost its health. Still, he is so exceedingly affectionate and so exceedingly susceptible of the attachment of friends, that I think we could calm him and nerve him through that part of his nature.

This letter is as short as I could make it. For we should act at once—in any case as to taking counsel about his condition.

Believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

E. S. Dallas Esquire

To DR E. S. SYMES,[†1] 11 DECEMBER 1862

Mention in Spencer catalogue No. 13; dated 11 Dec 62.

To E. S. DALLAS, 12 DECEMBER 1862

MS Yale University Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Twelfth December 1862

My Dear Mr. Dallas.

You and Mrs. Dallas[†2] will be surprised, but glad, to learn that there is no reasonable doubt of your having been misled as to the state of the Doctor's practice. When we saw Symes this morning his assertions on that head were so positive and direct, that we felt it necessary to know to an inch the true and exact state of the ground on which we were going right or wrong. Therefore, going (without Symes) from Symes to the Doctor, we asked the Doctor the question, and explained to him that it was impossible to assist him hopefully or with judgment, unless we were most accurately informed. He thereupon unlocked one of his table-drawers and produced his book of fees for (I think) three years, of which this present year is the last. Unless the entries from day to day, with varying pens and in varying states of ink were all made fraudulently or maniacally, it is impossible to doubt that he realizes by his practice in this present year, more than a Thousand Pounds. The Seventy Pounds of which you made mention in your letter to me, is right as to the sum, but wrong as to the time in which the sum was earned. It represents the professional income of a month—not a half year, but a month—whether the month of October or November is not material, but one of the two. [†a]Forster corrects this to August.[†a] If one can receive anything on written evidence, one must[†3] receive this. We had previously doubted Symes, but we felt it unreasonable—impossible—to dispute this proof. It is true that his practice would seem, on the same testimony, to be steadily on the decline; but (including his receipts as physician to an Assurance office) it yields in this, the worst of the years of which we have seen the account, more than a Thousand Pounds.

I am inclined to think, as he is right in this, there may be reality in the three or four hundred pounds in the drawer. (We did not press him on that head, having got at so much.) But we learned from Symes that he has a payment of £400 to make shortly, on account (we inferred—only inferred) of some call on share-holding or other similar speculation, in respect of which Symes has also to pay money at the same time. [†b]The sum may be provided for that occasion.[†b]

The House[†1] has four years to run. The Lease does not expire until the year 1866.

Now the difference between the real and supposed state of his practice, very materially affects the question of the retention of the house. He has been there so long and is so associated with it, that it must be held to be an element in the gaining of say a thousand or twelve hundred a year. And at present we both lean to the conclusion that the best way to serve him would be to endeavour (as privately as possible) to raise a fund which would not only pay off the mortgage on the house at Chatham,[†2] but enable him to live rent free in the house in Conduit Street, until its term[†3] expires. Another four years in his life, in his condition and at his age poor fellow, are a long term.

The quarrel with the sisters is of so complicated a kind and made up of so many little things (including a Cockatoo), that it would be mere madness and moonshine to unravel it bit by bit. But we got this morning at the fact that its bitterness would seem to have been intensified by his going down to the now-mortgaged house (which they then occupied) to eject them unless they paid a certain bill which they were bound to pay, for repairs done to it. He arriving on the scene, possibly to execute this threat, but certainly after having made it, led to their anticipating the skeedaddle policy of later days by climbing over the garden wall into their present house, and shaking the dust off their feet at him.

Observe that Baker[†4] this morning, in the most positive and emphatic manner, besought us not to mistrust Symes! He had lived in the house eleven years, he had nursed the Doctor in sickness, he had always been the same, he was the most upright and honorable of gentlemen. This, not before the Doctor, but when we were quite alone.

We have seen the Solicitors—that is, we have seen Mr. Lucas[†5] as representing the Firm. We had settled our course beforehand. As we could not possible move him from the position that he could only receive our communication as "Miss Elliotson's solicitor", we declined to make it. In proportion as we receded, his curiosity evidently advanced; but we held to our ground (we thought it absolutely necessary to avoid committing Eliotson on such terms), and we left him.

I have just seen Mrs. Dallas on her way to Hanover Square.[†1]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

E. S. Dallas Esquire

I shall be in town again—that is to say at Gad's Hill—on the 22nd. In the meantime Forster will be happy to co-operate with you in any way. His address is 46 Montagu Square.

To THE REV. WILLIAM GASKELL,[†2] 18 DECEMBER 1862

MS John Rylands Library. Address: Angleterre | The Rev. William Gaskell | Plymouth Grove | Manchester.

Paris, rue du Faubourg St. Honoré, 27
Thursday Eighteenth December 1862

My Dear Sir

Your letter and I have been crossing each other, in a curious way. This—and my being now here, and now not here—accept as my sufficient excuse for this late reply.

I am sorry to tell you that I cannot possibly comply with your request. I have arranged to be at home among my family for a fortnight at Christmas, and am then coming back here, to read—for a British charity. It is needless for me (I hope) to assure you how cordially I sympathize with your kind and excellent purpose.

I beg to send my best regard to Mrs. Gaskell, and am always

My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Rev. William Gaskell

To CLARKSON STANFIELD, 18 DECEMBER 1862*

MS Yale University Library.

Paris, rue du Faubourg St. Honoré, 27
Thursday Eighteenth December, 1862

My Dear Stanny.

I cannot tell you what concern your letter has given me, or how distressed I am by your describing yourself as suffering so much pain. Since I have been wandering about, I have always had the idea—founded, I imagine, on some vague purpose you had when you were at Gad's Hill—that you too were travelling in search of picturesque things. And now I am amazed to be told under your own hand (very plain and steady it looks though, mind you!) that you have been ill three mortal months.[†3] Poor dear fellow!

Your letter—sent on here—crossed me. I was telegraphed to England, most unexpectedly, to do what service I could in aid of a friend who sorely needed help at his right hand.[†1] The moment I had done what I could—and the business hurried me here and there, in a quite distracting manner—I came back here, where Mary and Georgina had been left behind, and were anxiously expecting me. I think Davie[†2] must have been mistaken in his impression that I was in London when he spoke of me. It is as likely as not, that he derived it from my signature on the wrapper of the Christmas Number—which signature is a lithograph, several years old.

But we are coming back to Gad's Hill for Christmas, and on the Monday after Christmas Day, please God, I will come to town and to the Green Hill[†3] to see you. About mid-day I will come, as the time most likely to be the best. Towards the middle of January I am going to read gratuitously, at our Embassy here, for a Charity. But I shall be at home during the whole interval. I arrived here again, only last night.

My dear dear fellow, I hope and pray that you have times of ease, and that the "shade better" of which you tell me in your note has become a bright light better, and that you will soon be—literally—on your legs again—with your "tarry trousers" on them, and all complete. I send you at this good time of the year, as at all times good or bad, my most affectionate and earnest love, and do most earnestly, in the great seasonable name in which we both trust and hope, assure you that I have never for a single day in all these years been otherwise than your affectionate and true friend. If we at all misunderstood one another in a passing time that is gone,[†4] it was without a touch of coldness or unkindness on my side. More than one of our friends could testify that to the question "What is the matter between you and Stanny?" I replied, "I don't know; I only know that I love him, just as I always did and always shall."

God bless you, my dear Stanny. There cannot be in this world a heart more affectionately and faithfully yours than this that beats in me.

Your attached old friend,

DICK

To W. H. WILLS, 18 DECEMBER 1862*

MS Huntington Library.

Paris | Thursday Eighteenth December, 1862

My Dear Wills.

As I have not received your No. scheme[†5] this morning, I infer that you have been detained in Devonshire,[†6] and that I had best send you what proofs I have corrected. Therefore, with this you will find Charley Collins's small beer,[†1] and Mrs. Linton's man and his beasts.[†2] Mrs. Mertons Mince Pies[†3] I do not return, because the paper really will not do. (Pay for it, none the less, and hold it over.)[†4] Our Oil Flasks[†5] I do not return, as that paper would not go with Mrs. Linton's about the beasts.[†6] Mrs. Gaskell's MS[†7] will come by parcel from here tomorrow —not divided into chapters or portions, until printed.[†8]

From Holsworth's report of the state of the Xmas No. Poll last (Wednesday) evening, it is pretty clear that you mean to win half a crown of me.[†9]

I want a Fifty Pound Note for a special purpose.[†10] Will you send me one by return of post, getting the enclosed cheque[†11] cashed.

I hope you are recovering your spirits, and that all goes well at home.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To MRS HENRY AUSTIN, 20 DECEMBER 1862*

MS Morgan Library

Paris, | Saturday Night Twentieth December 1862

My Dear Letitia. I think (I cannot at present be quite sure) that I shall NOT[†12] GO[†13] to Australia.

My present intention is, to return here about the middle of January.[†14] There is no likelihood of my going home again until, at the earliest, the middle of February. It is likely enough that I may go on from here to see some friends in Genoa[†15]—and in any case I want to look about me in many odd places. My address until, say the 10th. of January, will be at Gad's Hill. After that, I am best addressed at the Hotel du Helder, Rue du Helder, Paris.

The exact date of the reading here, I cannot be sure of, because Lord Cowley[†16] does not come back until the 27th.—and before the evening is fixed, he will desire to assure himself that nothing is projected for whatever night is appointed—no reception, or ball, or what not—by the Emperor and Empress.

But I have myself proposed Saturday the 18th. It will be made known before this month is out, what the night is.[†1] Tell Amelia with my love, that I have begged Sir Joseph Olliffe (who is at the head of the business Department, and who will very probably muddle it), to send her 3 tickets, and that I have told him that I desire them to be near me. As the prices charged are very high, and as many of the French present will probably not have the faintest notion what the Reading is about, she will not see an Audience like St. James's Hall. But I dare say it will be a pretty sight, and I shall be as good as if they will let me be. I intend to read Copperfield and nothing else.[†2] So much for that.

I have had a weary time in London with an old friend's miseries[†3] and have quite enough of my own cares, to keep me going (or not going) when such affairs fail me. But I am always ready (when not spirited away by Telegraph) to prove my interest in, and my affection for, you. Be sure of that.

Looking back to your note, I observe two points in it that I have omitted to observe upon. 1.— I certainly am not going to read here for the poor Lancashire people (I have given them £40).[†4] And it cannot in the least signify when you claim your annuity. No doubt it is always payable on, and after, a certain day.

I think that's all at present.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To MADAME VIARDOT, 20 DECEMBER 1862

MS Bibliothèque Nationale, Paris. Address: à Madame Viardot.

Paris, Saturday Twentieth December, 1862

My Dear Madame Viardot

As Lord and Lady Cowley[†5] are away from Paris, I cannot be absolutely certain about the evening of my Reading at the Embassy, but I have proposed Saturday the 17th. of January. The hour will be half past 8, and it will last an hour and a half. Sir Joseph Olliffe will send you the 4 tickets we spoke of, and I have told him that I expressly wish your party to be very near me. The tickets themselves will shew you whether or no the evening is changed. My address on my return (a day or two before the Reading) will be The Hotel du Helder, Rue du Helder. If you should want more than 4 tickets, Sir Joseph Olliffe (Rue St. Florentin No. 2), understands from me that I am far more anxious to please you than all the Lords and Ladies alive (or dead either), and will hold himself bound to comply with any wish you may make known to him.

With kind regard to Monsieur Viardot and all your house,

Believe me ever | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To GABRIEL or JULES GUILLEMOT,[†1] 21 DECEMBER 1862*

MS Saltykov-Shchedrin State Public Library, St Petersburg.

Faubourg St. Honoré
Dimanche 21 Decembre, 1862

Monsieur

J'ai eu l'honneur de recevoir votre lettre, pour laquelle je vour prie d'accepter mes remerçiemens. Mais permettez-moi de vous expliquer que je ne vais lire qu'une fois à Paris, et alors à l'Ambassade d'Angleterre, au benefice d'une institution charitable.

Veuillez reçevoir, Monsieur, l'assurance de ma consideration la plus distinguée

Votre fidèle
CHARLES DICKENS

A Monsieur Guillemot

To JOHN FORSTER, [?DECEMBER 1862]

Extract in F, XI, iii, 840. Date: 1862, according to Forster; reference to a second meeting with the French captain, at Calais, suggests his journey home from Paris in week before Christmas.

An old priest the express image of Frédéric Lemaître[†2] got up for the part, and very cross with the toothache, told me in a railway carriage the other day, that we had no antiquities in heretical England. "None at all," I said. "You have some ships, however?" "Yes; a few." "Are they strong?" "Well," said I, "your trade is spiritual, my father: ask the ghost of Nelson." A French captain who was in the carriage was immensely delighted with this small joke. I met him at Calais yesterday going somewhere with a detachment; and he said—Pardon! But he had been so limited as to suppose an Englishman incapable of that bonhommie![†3]

To THOMAS BEARD, 24 DECEMBER 1862

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Place | Maida Hill | London | W.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Twenty Fourth December 1862

My Dear Beard

Many happy Christmases and New Years!

It would be indelicate and selfish to gainsay your Australian conclusion. If I do not go (and I don't think I shall, now) it will unquestionably have brought down the scale on the home side.[†1]

I am vexed that I cannot be here at the time you mention, for I have engaged to go back to Paris, to read at our Embassy there, for the benefit of a British charitable body.[†2] It is possible that I may take the opportunity of going on to Genoa.[†3] But I will not fail to report myself when I come home again, and to entreat you to appoint your time. I think of crossing on the 11th. of January, and I may be away a month or six weeks.

On Monday last, the small number of one hundred and eighty five thousand copies of Somebody's Luggage had been sold! I wonder how many people among those purchasers have any idea of the number of hours of steamboat, railway train, dusty French walk, and looking out of window, boiled down in "His Boots"?

Kindest and best love from all here,

My Dear Beard | Ever Your affectionate friend

CHARLES DICKENS

To W. H. WILLS, 26 DECEMBER 1862*

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Twenty Sixth December, 1862

My Dear Wills.

Many merry Christmases and Happy New Years to you and yours!

The matter for the No.[†4] is so abominably shy[†5] this week, that it is not easy to make up a No. at all. I have been obliged to take a great deal out of Mrs. Linton even; for it is not only a poor article full of repetitions, but a disagreeable one— written in a bad humour, decrying a good many innocent little courtesies, and looking at life out of disagreeable and unnecessary windows.[†6] Which is not our A.Y.R. Vocation.

The Poem about the Robins, I must reluctantly Taboo. We really cannot afford to go on killing our young mutton, longer than 13 years, and singing about it.

I don't think there is any objection to the Small Beer Chronicle[†7] as I have altered it. But I think there is a very strong objection to entering on that Bentham[†8]-notion of supplying convicts with women.[†9] It again presents, in a most startling manner, one of those astounding contrasts between the pauper and the criminal (favorable to the latter) which the mind really cannot complacently endure. I feel convinced that at this time of all others, the public spirit is not in a state to receive such a proposition—and I honestly think that the public ruffled-spirit is right. When the professional criminal has been repressed and punished—years hence—the question may be mooted reasonably; but I think a main part of its reason or unreason is in the time of mooting it, and I think the circumstances of this time render it out of reason.

I return:

White Elephants
Small Beer
New Year's Day in Russia
Persian Servants
An Academy for Cooks

—as materials for a No.[†1] Use them as they fill best, and finish with Miss Stretton's[†2] story. As the last-named is not in the Xmas No. I don't think it worth while to alter it as I should have done for that speciality.

On Monday morning I shall be at the office—half crown in hand.[†3] A most signal hit the Xmas No. certainly![†4]

Ever Faithfully
CD.

To MISS MARY BOYLE, 27 DECEMBER 1862†

MS Morgan Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Twenty Seventh December 1862

My Dear Mary.

I must send you my Christmas Greeting and happy New Year wishes, in return for yours; most heartily and fervently reciprocating your interest and affection. You are among the few whom I most care for, and best love.

[†a]Your fearful account of the Evening Party Invitation, I had [mesmerically] anticipated.[†a]

Being in London two evenings in the opening week, I tried to persuade my legs (for whose judgment I have the highest respect) to go there. But I could not induce them to pass Leicester Square. The faltering presentiment under which they laboured, so impressed me, that at that point I yielded to their terrors. They immediately ran away due East, and I accompanied them to the Olympic, where I saw a very good play, "Camilla's Husband,"[†1] very well played.[†2] Real merit in Mr. Neville and Miss Saville.

We came across directly after the gale, with the channel all bestrewn with floating wreck, and with a hundred and fifty sick schoolboys from Calais on board. [†a]But the passage, though very cold, was better than one might have expected under the circumstances.[†a] I am going back on the morning after Fechter's opening night, and have promised to read Copperfield at the Embassy, for a British Charity.

Georgy continues wonderfully well, and she and Mary send you their best love. The house is pervaded by boys; and every boy has (as usual) an unaccountable and awful power of producing himself in every part of the house at every moment, apparently in fourteen pairs of clashing[†3] boots.

My Dear Mary | Ever affectionately Your

JOE.

To W. C. MACREADY, 27 DECEMBER 1862*

MS Morgan Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Twenty Seventh December, 1862

Parr.

That libel on your wife, I never will believe. Ne-ver will believe! Not even though I live to be as old as—you—will I ever believe that she was afraid to write to me!

In consideration of your extreme age and imbecility, I send you, however, my forgiveness and my blessing. All the good wishes of the good time and of all times, come with this from me and mine to you and yours.

I am going back to Paris on the 11th. of January, and have promised to read Copperfield at the Embassy, for a British charity. Meantime I am keeping house here for all the boys and girls, and, from the cloud-capped pinnacle[†4] of my own gloomy antiquity, contemplate their levity as a Sage should.

The last report of the Writer's Progress was made to me from the office on Christmas Eve. He had then sold the rather extraordinary number of one hundred and ninety one thousand, odd hundred, copies!

Ever My Dearest friend
Your affectionate and faithful
CHARLES DICKENS

W. C. Macready Esquire

To MR SHIELDS,[†1] 27 DECEMBER 1862

Extract in N, III, 329.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
27th December 1862

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Shields ... for copy of published letter of Rev. E. Prest,[†2] which appears naturally to have excited unfavourable comment in Gateshead.

To W. H. WILLS, 27 DECEMBER 1862

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Twenty-Seventh December 1862

My Dear Wills.

I should very much like to help Miss Power to publish her "Pictures from Egypt", if I could. As well as I can make out, it will form a good octavo volume about 6/-or 7/-. Will you mind asking Sampson Low[†3] if he would treat for it?[†4] He can see the MS of course, and I shall have it on Monday. I would give him a good title for it, if he bought it. Miss Power wants to set her mind at rest about the book as soon as she can. Of course Low may know that I am interested in it.

Faithfully Always
CD.

To GEORGE HOLSWORTH, 30 DECEMBER 1862*

MS Mr Brian Lake.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Thirtieth December, 1862

Dear Mr. Holsworth

As you are in the habit of paying Mrs. Alfred Dickens's landlord,[†1] I wish you would write him the following letter.

Sir

Mr. Charles Dickens begs me to call your attention to the state of the drains of the house No. 4 Grafton Terrace which he rents from you. He understands that Mrs. Alfred Dickens has already done so, without effect, and he hopes that you will not oblige him to appeal to the Sanitary officer of the district.

&c &c

(Signed by yourself, of course)

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To W. H. WILLS, 30 DECEMBER 1862*

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Thirtieth December, 1862

My Dear Wills.

I send you the proofs[†2] corrected.

I have called the French military paper, How to make Soldiers.[†3] Is it not in two parts? If so, please add that, under the title, and then Part I.[†4]

I don't object to a Mercenary Marriage[†5] if you at all want it to go in.

Take care that Nutcracker is my corrected and cut Nutcracker.[†6]

Of course I shall take no heed of the enclosed letter.[†7] I send it, in case Miss Coutts might care to know of its receipt.

Ever Faithfully
CD.

To [?T. R. EELES],[†1] [1862]

Mention as To Unknown Correspondent in John Anderson Jun. catalogue No. 551; MS 1 p.; dated Office of AYR, 1862.

About binding a copy of Arabian Nights.[†2]

To CHARLES READE, 1860-62

Summary in Sotheby's catalogue, Oct 1973; MS 3 line fragment; n.d.; addressed Charles Reade Esquire. Date: MS seen at Sotheby's; 1860-2 on handwriting.

Saying that after the following day he will be at Gad's Hill until the next Tuesday morning and then here[†3] for the Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday.

To E. T. SMITH,[†4] [?1852-62]

Envelope only; mention in Anderson Galleries catalogue No. 1347 (April 1917); addressed E. T. Smith. Date: perhaps during his lesseeship of Drury Lane 1852-62 (see below).

1863

January

To WILKIE COLLINS, 1 JANUARY 1863

MS Morgan Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
New Year's Day, 1863.

My Dear Wilkie.

Many thanks for the book,[†5] the arrival of which has created an immense sensation in this palatial abode. I am delighted (but not surprised) to hear of its wonderful sale. All that I thought and said of it when you finished the second volume,[†6] I think and repeat of it now you have finished the third.[†7]

On Thursday in next week, I shall certainly be at the office; and I shall sleep there on that night, and on the Friday, and on the Saturday. On the Sunday I vanish into space for a day or two; but I must be in Paris about Thursday the 15th. because on Saturday the 17th. I am going to read Copperfield gratuitously at the Embassy.

Will you dine at the office on Thursday in next week at 6?

Let me strongly advise you to "go in" now, for getting thoroughly set up and made well. Don't do it by halves, but go through with it and see it out. Are there no baths that would drive the rheumatic Devil out of that game leg?[†1] Who knows but that towards the end of February, I might be open to any foreign proposal whatsoever? Distance no object, climate of no importance, change the advertiser's motive.

All the good wishes of the day and year, from

Yours ever affecy.

CD.

To CHARLES KENT, 1 JANUARY 1863

Mention in Dickens Exhibition Catalogue, New Dudley Gallery, 1908; MS 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill, 1 Jan 63; addressed Charles Kent.

To MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL, 2 JANUARY 1863

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, July 1979; MS 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill, 2 Jan 63; addressed Messrs Chapman & Hall.

I hope shortly to make up my mind on the subject of a new book.[†2] I cannot quite see my way to the disposal of my time, before next month; but the matter is continually in my mind and occupying my thoughts ... and thanking them for their new year's present of some books ... very acceptable, as a remembrance in season from you, and for their own sakes.

To MESSRS LETTS & SON,[†3] 3 JANUARY 1863*

MS Yale University Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Third January 1863

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his Compliments to Messrs. Letts and Son, and begs with many thanks to acknowledge their annual present of an excellent Diary.

To THE REV. J. M. BRACKENBURY,[†1] 5 JANUARY 1863*

MS Mr G.A. Linsley.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Fifth January 1863.

My Dear Sir

I am truly obliged to you for your letter. I greatly esteem its explicitness, and I beg to thank both you and Mr. Wynne[†2] for the trouble and consideration you have bestowed on its subject.

In reference to Harry, I think the Indian Civil Service the best opening to which his attention can be directed. I have spoken to him, and he likes the idea. Therefore I have told him that I would communicate our wish to you, and that I believed you would be glad to prepare him for that examination, and that I hoped I might go so far as to say that you had some reliance—he continuing to be attentive and industrious—on his passing through it with credit to his masters and himself. I hope this will really be the case. His quickness in learning, I observed to be remarkable when he was a mere baby.

Alfred's is a very difficult case, and a very different one. For more than a year or so, I have had the strongest doubts of his passing the Woolwich examination, and now that it is harder my doubts are graver. Even if he were to get in, he might never obtain his commission; and he himself has a misgiving that his deficiency under the head of drawing alone, would stand fearfully in his way. The question with me is, then:— whether it will not be the wisest course at once to accept his case as a failure so far as Woolwich is concerned, and to put him into some line of life where steadiness and moderate abilities, well directed, may hope to work their way.

Either in a mercantile house having relations with China,[†3] or in a mercantile house trading with Ceylon,[†4] I think I might (having a little time to look about me), find an opening for him. But of course I will not withdraw him from the preparation for Woolwich without your sanction. It is to ask you if on the whole you approve of this course, that I trouble you with the present letter. And I make Alfred himself the bearer of it, in order that you may elicit any thing from him that you may think it desirable to know from himself. If Woolwich be abandoned, I think I could scarcely hope to place him in any house of business before Easter.

My Dear Sir | Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Rev. J. M. Brackenbury

To FREDERICK LEHMANN, 6 JANUARY 1863*

MS University of Texas, Austin.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Sixth January 1863.

My Dear Lehmann.

I want to consult you about my boy Alfred—the one who was destined for Woolwich. Such a painful drop has suddenly taken place in the number of cadets wanted, that the Tutors are all aghast. In the consequent immense competition for the few vacancies, only a few of the very foremost boys can hope to get in; and my boy's having no taste for drawing (by which they set great store) would infallibly keep him out. Therefore, say the Tutors, Stop! Try something else!

This is very pleasant, after the great cost of preparation; but it is useless to think of that. So, on to what I am thinking about.

I think I might, through Sir Emerson Tennent, get him out into some good house at Ceylon or thereaway, allowing a little time to turn in. But (as he takes to the idea of a mercantile life and is steady and working, though not in the least brilliant), I should like at once to put him in the road to acquire another language and some commercial knowledge. Do you know of any place in Germany—at Hamburgh or any where—college, mercantile house, what not—whither I could send him for this purpose?[†1] I have a horror of his being idle, and it would do him good in after-life to be thrown on his self-reliance now. And if you could help me to consign him to any one, to carry this object out, I would send him away with his introduction in his hand.

I am the more anxious about this, because I have promised to go back to Paris on Sunday next. I shall be at the office from 11 to 5, Thursday, Friday, and Saturday. Will you let me have a line from you there? I could come to you at any time of your appointing within the hours I have named, and I will tell Alfred to come to town on Friday morning, that he may be producible if necessary.

Excuse my giving you this trouble. I hope you know that I would do as much and more, for you.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Fredk. Lehmann Esquire

To CAPTAIN ELISHA ELY MORGAN, 6 JANUARY 1863[†2]†

MS Mrs M. C. Armstrong.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Sixth January 1863.

My Dear Friend

Ten thousand thanks for your kind letter and your welcome seasonable presents, and ten times ten thousand good wishes to you and yours from me and mine!

Your son and heir[†1] has been with us this last Christmas Eve and Christmas Day, and New Year's Eve and New Year's Day. He is a great favourite in this house, and I hope and sincerely believe is all you can wish him to be.

Read in America? Humph! Well:—if you had fifty thousand children there, I would come directly. But you haven't, you see. And my mind strongly misgives me that under the present cloud I should see many faces turned towards me less beamingly and kindly than yours. So I won't come, just at present. I told Fields of Boston, who also wrote to urge me, that I was going to have a preliminary reading in the largest exhausted Crater in the Moon.[†2]

And you think the south will come back, within the winter and spring?—May I whisper (at this distance from Fort Lafayette),[†3] that I don't? I wish to God, in the interests of the whole human race, that the War were ended. But I don't see that end to it, no, nor anything like that end, with my best spectacles.

With love from all at home with me to all at home with you, Believe me My Dear friend
Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

I am going to read "Copperfield" in Paris on Saturday the 17th. I am always sorry it was not Copperfield at Colchester, for I believe it to be by far the best of its family. (Tell them[†4] so).

To SIR JOSEPH OLLIFFE, 6 JANUARY 1863

MS Private; transcribed before partial destruction in Prestwick air-crash, Dec 1954; [aa]MS Yale University Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Sixth January 1863.

My Dear Olliffe. Do not think of the Second Reading, in any way whatever, until you have completely sold out the first.[†5] Be in a position to declare that you know nothing about it.

Of course in the sale of the tickets for Saturday the 17th. there is but one rule to be observed, and that is, First come first served. As to the important personages who may get excluded, that will be the fault of their superfluous importance:—so very inconvenient to a good many people in this working world, that we will try to bear its being (for once) inconvenient to themselves.

The ticket is all right, and everything is all right.

I purpose producing myself in Paris (Hotel du Helder) on Thursday evening the 15th. and I will come round to you about 9 o'Clock. John[†1] shall precede me on the Wednesday evening (unless you tell me in your next that you wish to have him sooner), as you will find him of great use in the arrangement of the room. It is very important that you should have at once,[†2] upon paper, an exact plan made of all your chairs, marking every chair separately. You may find that the room will hold more than 300; you may find that it will hold less—a possibility, either way (and particularly in the latter case) most essential to be, without delay, converted into a certainty.

You will receive this letter on Wednesday evening. After that—that is to say, on Thursday, Friday, and Saturday next—I shall be at the office (26 Wellington Street, Strand, W. C.) On Sunday morning early, I am going away to see a sick friend concerning whom I am anxious,[†3] and [a]from whom I shall work my way round to Paris. Therefore tell me about John, or anything else that may press before we meet in Paris, by Saturday at latest.—Or I shall not get your letter.

With kindest regard to Lady Olliffe and all at home, Believe me ever

Very faithfully Yours

CD.[a]

To FREDERICK LEHMANN, 8 JANUARY [1863]*

MS University of Texas, Austin. Date: misdated by CD; on 8 Jan 62 (a Tues) he was in Torquay.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Eighth January 1862

My Dear Lehmann. I am exceedingly obliged to you for your kind letter;-more so than I could easily express. My difficulty is this: I am afraid to keep my boys about London. You see Frank is already here[†4] and I am afraid of their spoiling one another. Hence my desire to get Alfred away from home. Advantageous as his name is to him in some respects, I have always a misgiving that, with the ease and resources of home added, and London added too, it may be disadvantageous. If I could get him abroad therefore, I should prefer it much.

He already knows French almost as well as English. His childhood and early schooling were French throughout.

On the whole perhaps I had best not trouble you by bringing him to your offices until we have spoken together; towards which end I will call on you in Nicholas Lane[†5] tomorrow between 12 and 1—alone.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To THE EARL AND COUNTESS COWLEY, 9 JANUARY 1863*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Ninth January 1863

Mr. Charles Dickens will be happy to have the honor of dining with Lord and Lady Cowley on Thursday the 15th.

To CHANDOS WREN HOSKYNS,[†1] 9 JANUARY 1863

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Ninth January 1863.

My Dear Wren Hoskyns.

I am truly obliged to you for your cordial letter, and my daughter (I have but one, unmarried, and but two in all) begs to unite with me in assurance to Mrs. Wren Hoskyns[†2] that we highly esteem her invitation, and have the best will in the world to avail ourselves of it. But it unluckily happens that I go to Paris to-morrow night—that I read at our Embassy for the benefit of an English Charity on the following Saturday—and that I have made all kinds of pledges and promises to go on to Lausanne a-visiting, afterwards, and perhaps to Genoa.[†3] We only came back from Paris for Christmas, and I had made all these plans before we left.[†4]

The Fates will have it so—and you know what unreasonable creatures they are, when they do take anything into their heads.

Believe me always | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

C. Wren Hoskyns Esquire

To HENRY MORLEY, 9 JANUARY 1863

MS Lieut Cdr Vic Zoschak.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Ninth January 1863

My Dear Morley. Can you, and will you, presently do a little article,[†5] quoting in full the enclosed letter of Whateley's?[†6] I don't want to champion homeopathy

(in which I don't believe), or mesmerism (in which I do.) But I think the gross illiberality of this principle should be exposed. Some good illustrations might be got out of a Doctor in one of Foote's plays.[†1]

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To MADAME BUGEAUD,[†2] 10 JANUARY 1863

Mention in J. W. Jarvis catalogue, 1884; MS (3rd person, in French), 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill Place, le 10 Janvier 1863; addressed Madame Bugeaud.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 10 JANUARY 1863*

MS Morgan Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Saturday Tenth January 1863

My Dear [ ][†3]

Do not wait at home for me this morning, as Forster desires to go to Elliotson's with me, and he will not be disengaged until 12 o'Clock.

Faithfully Yours always

CD.

To DR WILLIAM BARNET,[†4] 16 JANUARY 1863

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, July 1950; MS 1 p.; dated Hotel du Helder, 16 Jan 63; addressed Dr William Barnet.

I am perfectly sure that I am no party to any misunderstanding with Monsieur Philarète Charles,[†5] and I cannot even remember that I have ever had the honour of communicating with that respected gentleman,

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, [16 JANUARY 1863]

Mention in next. Date: written same day.

To MISS MARY DICKENS, 16 JANUARY 1863

Text from MDGH, II, 188-9.

Paris, Hôtel due Helder, Rue du Helder,
Friday, Jan. 16th, 1863.

My Dearest Mamie,

As I send a line to your aunt to-day and know that you will not see it, I send another to you to report my safe (and neuralgic) arrival here. My little rooms are perfectly comfortable, and I like the hotel better than any I have ever put up at in Paris. John's amazement at, and appreciation of, Paris are indescridable. He goes about with his mouth open, staring at everything and being tumbled over by everybody.

The state dinner at the Embassy, yesterday, coming off in the room where I am to read, the carpenters did not get in until this morning. But their platforms were ready—or supposed to be—and the preparations are in brisk progress. I think it will be a handsome affair to look at—a very handsome one. There seems to be great artistic curiosity in Paris, to know what kind of thing the reading is.

I know a "rela-shon"[†1] (with one weak eye), who is in the gunmaking line, very near here. There is a strong family resemblance—but no muzzle. Lady Molesworth and I have not begun to "toddle" yet, but have exchanged affectionate greetings. I am going round to see her presently, and I dine with her on Sunday. The only remaining news is, that I am beset by mysterious adorers, and smuggle myself in and out of the house in the meanest and basest manner.

With kind regard to Mr. and Mrs. Humphery,[†2]

Ever, my dearest Mamey, your affectionate Father

[CHARLES DICKENS]

P.S.—Hommage à Madame B.!

To LORD BROUGHAM,[†3] 17 JANUARY 1863*

MS University College, London.

Paris. Hotel du Helder, Rue du Helder
Saturday Seventeenth January 1863

My Dear Lord Brougham,

I venture to trouble you with a letter from this place, because I believe you would readily help me in a matter I have at heart, if you could.

Is there any possibility of your influence assisting me to get one of my seven boys into the Registrar's office in Chancery Lane?[†1] He is Jeffrey's godson, and Francis Jeffrey by name;—a well educated youth between 17 and 18, brought up in England, France, and Germany. Whatever knowledge of legal formalities may be necessary to the proper discharge of such duties, he could, with his previous training, easily acquire.

Forgive my troubling you. I make my letter as short as possible, that your trouble may be the less.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The | Lord Brougham

To M. PITRE-CHEVALIER,[†2] 17 JANUARY 1863

Summary in Ader Picard Tajan catalogue, Paris, 13 Dec 1990; MS 1 p.; dated Paris 17 Jan 63; addressed Pitre Chevalier.

Il est désolé de n'avoir pu assister à l'intéressante réunion de son correspondant mais il est arrive trop tard à Paris.

To M. PITRE-CHEVALIER, 18 JANUARY 1863*

MS Yale University Library.

Hotel du Helder
Dimanche Janvier 18, 1863.

Cher Monsieur.

Je viens de reçevoir une lettre aujourdhui, qui m'obligera partir demain à la Campagne, et après cela il me faudra voyager à Geneve, y rester deux ou trois jours chez un de mes amis.[†3] Mais quand je reviendrai à Paris (probablement vers la fin de la semaine prochaine) j'aurai l'honneur et le plaisir de vous ecrire, et de me mettre à votre disposition.

Croyez moi, Cher Monsieur | Toujours | Votre fidele
CHARLES DICKENS

À Monsieur Pitre-Chevalier

To SIR JOSEPH OLLIFFE, 18 JANUARY 1863*

MS University of California, Los Angeles. Address: Sir Joseph Olliffe | Rue St. Florentin 2.

Hotel du Helder
Sunday Night Eighteenth January 1863.

My Dear Olliffe. Many thanks for your enquiry. I really have had no neuralgic pain worth mentioning, since I rubbed with your blessed mixture. But I have not been able to sleep. Some unstringing of the nerves—coupled with an anxiety not to be mentioned here[†1]—holds sleep from me. The nights are not long and it don't much matter, except that I need to be by myself in the day. I did not dine at Lady Molesworth's this present Sunday, and am much the better for holding my silent way.

I think I may leave on Tuesday night instead of Wednesday. Propose a time and place for our having a word together. Could you dine with me, en garçon, here, at your own hour tomorrow? I have a misgiving that you are engaged.

But I have put off the oyster-eyed Chevalier (under a most horribly lying pretext that I am going—I forget exactly where—I think to the East Indies—for a week), and have no other appointment for tomorrow than that my sister[†2] is coming here at eleven in the forenoon.

With love to Lady Olliffe and Mary, Bessie and Florence,[†3] and with admiring and respectful homage to the learned baby,

Ever Cordially Yours

CD.

To W. H. WILLS, 18 JANUARY 1863

MS Huntington Library.

Hotel du Helder, Paris
Sunday Eighteenth January 1863.

My Dear Wills.

Your Thursday's letter did not arrive here until after post time on Friday night. Therefore I could not answer it until today.

I am in a mess with a Dark Night's Work,[†4] for I find it difficult to understand where we are. Follow me with the eye of your mind.

The 3rd. portion—consists of Chapters 7 and 8[†5]

The 4th. portion begins with the printed slip, numbered 27. Turn the slips over, until you come to the one numbered 32. At the end of the first paragraph, after the words "happened at a sadder time", insert "Chapter X"[†6]—which will then begin, "Before the June roses were in full bloom."[†1] Turn on again until you come to slip numbered 34, and stop that portion at the end of the first paragraph on it, after the words "except Dixon, could have gone straight to her grave."[†2]

— X - 197 —

The 5th. portion will begin, "Chapter XI. In a few days Miss Monroe obtained".[†3] The story must be, altogether, in 6 portions,[†4] and I will send you the dividings of the two last, tomorrow.

The Reading here last night was a most tremendous and brilliant success,[†5] paling all[†6]

To GABRIEL LEGOUVÉ, 19 JANUARY 1863*

MS M. Jean Paladilhe.

Monday Morning. Nineteenth January 1863.

My Dear Legouvé

I hope my English servant made it plain to you that I have been unwell with a neuralgic attack in the face, and that I was in bed this morning when you called? As I thought on Saturday evening, I find myself engaged for to night; but as I leave Paris tomorrow and have a long journey before me, I doubt if I shall fulfil even that engagement. As soon as I return I will not fail to write to you.

My Dear Legouvé | Ever Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To W. H. WILLS, [19 JANUARY 1863]

Mention in next. Date: no doubt written same day.

To W. H. WILLS, 19 JANUARY 1863

MS Huntington Library.

Paris, | Monday Nineteenth January 1863.

My Dear Wills. Looking at your letter again and finding a Make Up in it, I think it best to confine my to day's attention to the Proofs you want.[†7] You will find them enclosed and corrected. In another letter you will find Robert Lytton's Poem,[†1] to which I say decidely Yes, as being novel and picturesque.

I cannot bear the notion of the Academy for Cooks[†2] going next to Illiberal Doctors.[†3] Lytton's Poem would be far better there, or the article (not returned, for I see nothing to change in it) called Giving Up.[†4]

A Dark Night's Work, concluding portions, I also send.[†5]

Horne could not—no, even Horne could not—have chosen a more wonderful subject for his Lecture.[†6]

The Reading here so stuns and oversets the Parisians, that I shall have to do it again. Blazes of Triumph!

All proofs on hand here shall follow presently. [†a][Take out the Academy for Cooks; don't forget.][†a]

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To WILKIE COLLINS, 20 JANUARY 1863*

MS Heritage Book Shop, Los Angeles.

Paris. Hotel du Helder, Rue du Helder
Tuesday Twentieth January 1863

My Dear Wilkie

I dare say you have been expecting to hear from me before now. I know that I had been meaning to write before now, but have been unsettled and made uncertain by "circumstances over which—" &c &c &c.

The same circumstances (generally classed under this novel description, but serious enough, as you shall know one day)[†7] take me from Paris this evening, for a week. But, a week hence, I shall be back here. Meanwhile, I leave John here, and he has instructions to render up my little sittingroom to you, and to attend upon you as to all other things, if you should come while I am away. On Tuesday the 27th. or Wednesday the 28th. I shall certainly be back. My absence is entre nous, and my domesticity all retained in the excellent little Hotel— where I have dined better than I ever dined in Paris.

The French took to the Copperfield Reading, so astoundingly, that I am obliged to read twice more—on the 29th. and 30th. Whether you come over or no, of course you will write, telling me how you are and what you are doing. If you should want to communicate with John while I am away, address him M. John Thompson aux soins de M. Charles Dickens, Hotel du Helder, Rue du Helder, Paris.

I should be so heartily glad to find you in possession, when I come back!

Ever affectionately

CD.

To GEORGE HOLSWORTH, 20 JANUARY 1863*

MS Berg Collection.

Paris, Tuesday Twentieth January 1863.

Dear Mr. Holsworth

Immediately on receipt of this, please go up into my private sitting-room on the second floor at the office, and you will find on the book shelves—together, I think: in front of all the other books—the little books from which I read in public. I want The Christmas Carol, Little Dombey, and The Trial from Pickwick.[†1]

Make those three books up in a small parcel, addressed simply, Charles Dickens Esquire, and enclose that parcel in another wrapper, addressed

Immediate
His Excellency

The Earl Cowley
British Embassy
Paris

care of F. B. Alston[†2] Esquire
Foreign Office

—— and send the parcel at once to the Foreign Office in London. Perhaps I have not written Lord Cowley's name quite plainly. It is COWLEY.[†3]

Be so good as [to][†4] take care that there is no mistake in the transmission of these books.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To W. H. WILLS, 21 [JANUARY] 1863

MS Huntington Library. Date: CD omitted the month; 21 Jan 63 was Wed and AYR references confirm.

Paris. | Wednesday Twenty First, 1863.

My Dear Wills. As I shall have an opportunity of sending over what proofs I have, by hand, so that you may get them about Saturday, I put them up now. I am chased out of Paris by enthusiasm, and shall not come back for some five days.

"How we began the War", I keep back, because it won't do: it is so dismally out of date.[†1] Nor can I point Rule Britannia[†2] better than I have done. In all our years of work, I never saw such an intolerably slovenly paper, as Our Village on the Mediterranean.[†3] Look well to the revise, for I have made more correction than there is proof. The more I think of Reade's story the more I think that Very Hard Cash, or As Safe as The Bank—one of the two—would be a capital title.[†4]

I have no more important news than the astounding intelligence that John has no British prejudices!—

Ever Faithfully
CD.

How were the Surrey Hounds when last heard of?[†5]

To WILKIE COLLINS, 29 JANUARY 1863†

MS Morgan Library.

Paris, Hotel du Helder
Thursday January Twenty Ninth 1863.

My Dear Wilkie.

I came back here yesterday, and was truly concerned to read your poor account of yourself.[†6] [†a]Georgy had already written to me about poor Frank Beard—as sad a case in its way as ever I heard of! His reflections when the knocks come to the door, run in my head,[†7] as the river ran—excuse the reference—I have just been reading it up—in Little Dombey's mind.[†a†8]

According to my present knowledge, I shall be here until next Wednesday morning; I may be here a day later, but cannot positively say at this moment. Of course if you come over before I go, you will let me know immediately. If you could not get such a look-out as you want, at the Louvre,[†9] I think you would be sure to get it at the Grand Hotel[†10]—the new Monster,[†11] belonging (I think) to the same company. Its situation on the Boulevard, just at the head of the Rue de la Paix, I should prefer for an Invalid.[†12] Nothing can be more cheerful.

You will be interested in knowing that Paris is immeasurably more wicked than ever. The time of the Regency seems Restored, and Long live the Devil seems the social motto.

I read tonight and tomorrow[†1]—horribly against the grain, as the grain is at present; but I suppose it will be kinder towards night. I went down to the room to rehearse this morning (a thing I never did in my life before, but I have not read Dombey these twelve months); and I felt as if I could not muster spirits and composure enough to get through the child's death.

John has no British prejudices—a very remarkable phenomonon[†2] in a man of his station in life, unacquainted with the language, and left here for a week to subsist wholly on Pantomime!

Ever affectionately

CD.

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 29 JANUARY 1863*

MS Huntington Library.

Hotel du Helder, Paris
Thursday Twenty Ninth January 1863.

My Dear Ouvry. As I have been visiting in the country these six days—I fled from ruthless lionizing here—and as I have had no letters sent on, yours reached me, only on my return last night.

The plan is enclosed. Pray make the offer you suggest.[†3] We may safely proceed, I think, without Cobb, as I am not on the spot to consult him. There is no doubt of my finding a purchaser for the land that I don't want, or a good tenant—according as we may decide on consultation.

I shall be at this address until Wednesday in next week, inclusive. After that, I shall be travelling for from ten days to a fortnight.[†4] After that, at the office and home for good.

I can hardly describe to you how Paris rushes at my Readings.

Faithfully Yours ever

To W. H. WILLS, 29 JANUARY 1863

MS Berg Collection.

Paris, Hotel du Helder.
Thursday Twenty Ninth January 1863.

My Dear Wills.

I knew—and I think I mentioned in the letter accompanying them—that you would not get those proofs until after an interval. But as they did not press, I thought it useless to forego the safe and slow opportunity. I am very sorry that our Village on the Mediterranean went in without my corrections. It was so horribly in need of them.[†1]

You did beyond all question perfectly right in Harper's matter.[†2] For my part, I think the gain at the best, not equal to the loss. The perpetual sliding away of temporary subjects at which I could dash with effect, is a great loss.

From F. O. Ward[†3] (not one of the wise men of the East,[†4] or any other quarter of the compass), I have a letter about what could be done for us in the printing way, at what low charges, by—if I remember the name right—Harrison's house.[†5] It will keep till I come back. It is curiously appropriate to your uneasiness in that regard.

I will turn to at the proofs as soon as the Readings are over. The first at 10 francs is tonight; the second, tomorrow night. I believe everything is let out. Imagine my being so entirely out of Dombey, that I have been obliged to go down this morning and rehearse it in the room!

Many thanks for your consideration in the matter of the boys' fares. But Alfred's will be a short spell, and I hope the money is well spent.

The rise, I take to be consequent on the Xmas No.

So no more at present from

Yours Ever Faithfully

CD.

—P.S. Except that you had best do with a Dark Night's Work, the best you can—always trying to begin a chapter where I have begun one, and subdividing afterwards, if you can.[†6] Write me a line by to-morrow (Friday) night's post, if you have any thing you think it necessary to suggest or ask, respecting the said Dark Night's Work.

The title for Reade is decidedly a good one.

To THE COUNTESS COWLEY, 31 JANUARY 1863*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Hotel du Helder
Saturday Thirty First January 1863

Dear Lady Cowley

I beg to offer you many cordial thanks for your kind note—and dream. I have no doubt I should have returned the latter compliment, if I had achieved the needful preliminary of falling asleep.

Most unfortunately, I am engaged today, but I shall be very happy to dine with you and Lord Cowley tomorrow.

Believe me | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The | Countess Cowley.

February

To LORD BROUGHAM, 1 FEBRUARY 1863*

MS University College, London.

Hotel du Helder, Paris
Sunday First February, 1863.

My Dear Lord Brougham

I cannot tell you how sensible I am of your great and prompt kindness. Accept my heartfelt thanks, and the sincere assurance that I am just as much obliged to you as if the last of such appointments had been in your gift and you had given it to me.[†1]

The American spectacle is a frightful one indeed, and a notable instance so far as we are concerned (I think) of the great Do Nothing principle of government. This, and the Government's appealing to the people themselves, in any unusual straits, and saying "For God's sake govern yourselves a little and get us out of this difficulty", and then we will go on again until again we can't go on any more appears to me to be the whole art of modern statesmanship.

Twenty years have come and gone, since I took the liberty of believing that the United States and their Institutions were plainly tending down-ward and going wrong. It was just after Lord Ashburton's Treaty,[†2] and I have seldom seen "parties" so comfortably agreed as all "parties" were that this was a semi-blasphemous conceit. I dined with you on the anniversary of the abandonment of Queen Caroline's[†3] trial,[†4] soon after I came home, and you talked with me on the frightful abuses of the Press in America. Verily they have their reward.

Rumours of Kinglake's Crimean book[†1] are going up and down in Paris here. If he should happen to go up and down in Paris, himself, soon, I rather think he will have a little fighting to do.[†2]

My Dear Lord Brougham
Your obliged and faithful
CHARLES DICKENS

The | Lord Brougham

To EDWARD DICKENS, [1 FEBRUARY 1863]

Mention in To Mary Dickens, 1 Feb 63. Date: same day as that letter.

To HENRY DICKENS, [1 FEBRUARY 1863]

Mention in To Mary Dickens, 1 Feb 63. Date: same day as next.

To MISS MARY DICKENS, 1 FEBRUARY 1863

Extract in MDGH, II, 190.

Hôtel Du Helder, Paris, Sunday, Feb. 1st, 1863.

My Dearest Mamie,

I cannot give you any idea of the success of the readings here, because no one can imagine the scene of last Friday night at the Embassy. Such audiences and such enthusiasm I have never seen, but the thing culminated on Friday night in a two hours' storm of excitement and pleasure.[†3] They actually recommenced and applauded right away into their carriages and down the street.

You know your parent's horror of being lionised, and will not be surprised to hear that I am half dead of it. I cannot leave here until Thursday (though I am every hour in danger of running away) because I have to dine out, to say nothing of breakfasting—think of me breakfasting!—every intervening day.[†4] But my project is to send John home on Thursday, and then to go on a little perfectly quiet tour for about ten days, touching the sea at Boulogne. When I get there, I will write to your aunt (in case you should not be at home), saying when I shall arrive at the office. I must go to the office instead of Gad's because I have much to do with Forster about Elliotson.[†1]

I enclose a short note for each of the little boys. Give Harry ten shillings pocket-money, and Plorn six.

The Olliffe girls, very nice. Florence at the readings, prodigiously excited.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 1 FEBRUARY 1863

MS Huntington Library.

Paris | Sunday First February 1863.

My Dearest Georgy. The Register office is, as I supposed, a Spanish Chateau.[†2] Here are two very kind letters from Lord Brougham, to shew Malleson.[†3] I have numbered them, 1 and 2. Take care how you open these enclosures.

From my hurried note to Mamie, you will get some faint general idea of a new star's having arisen in Paris.—But of its brightness you can have no adequate conception.[†4]

[†a][John has locked me up and gone out, and the little bell at the door is ringing demonically while I write.][†a]

You have never heard me read yet![†5] I have been twice goaded and lifted out of myself into a state that astonished me almost as much as the audience. I have a cold, but no neuralgia, and am "as well as can be expected".

I forgot to tell Mamie that I went (with Andalusia)[†6] to hear Faust last night.[†7] It is a splendid work, in which that noble and sad story is most nobly and sadly rendered; and it perfectly delighted me. But I think it requires too much of the audience, to do for a London Opera House. The Composer must be a very remarkable man indeed. Some management of light throughout the story is also very poetical and fine.[†1] We had Carvalho's[†2] box. I could hardly bear the thing; it affected me so, and sounded in my ears so like a mournful echo of things that lie in my own heart.[†3]

But, as a certain Frenchman said,[†4] "No weakness Danton!"[†5] So I leave off.

[†b]Ever My Dearest Georgy | Your affectionate CD.[†b]

To GABRIEL LEGOUVÉ, 1 FEBRUARY 1863*

MS M. Jean Paladilhe.

Paris, First February 1863.

My Dear Legouvé.

I will most gladly take charge of your letter, and convey it to Macready. I read it on its first publication, with great pleasure, as a most able, generous, and manly exposition of an unjust absurdity.[†6]

At what hour on Tuesday?

Ever Your faithful friend
CHARLES DICKENS

To FRANÇOIS RÉGNIER, 1 FEBRUARY 1863

MS Comédie Française.

Paris, Sunday First February 1863

My Dear Regnier

I was charmed by the receipt of your cordial and sympathetic letter, and I shall always preserve it carefully, as a most noble tribute from a great and real artist.

I wished you had been at the Embassy on Friday evening. The audience was a fine one, and the "Carol" is particularly well adapted to the purpose.

It is an uncommon pleasure to me to learn that I am to meet you on Tuesday, for there are not many men whom I meet with greater pleasure than you.

Heaven, how the years roll by! We are quite old friends now, counting by years. If we add sympathies, we have been friends at least a thousand years.†[1]

Affectionately Yours ever
CHARLES DICKENS

To MADAME VIARDOT, 1 FEBRUARY 1863*

MS The Royal Library, Copenhagen. Address: à Madame Viardot | Rue de Douai 48 | En Ville.

Paris | Sunday First February 1863

My Dear Madame Viardot.

I will come to you tomorrow (Monday) at 4.

My publisher was to have sent me certain books, and with them that carte de visite. They have not arrived—I cannot understand why. But be sure that the card shall come to you. I swear it!—

Ever Your faithful | and devoted admirer
CHARLES DICKENS

To W. H. WILLS, 1 FEBRUARY 1863†

MS Huntington Library.

Hotel du Helder, Paris
Sunday First February 1863.

My Dear Wills.

As to the No.[†2]—Street Terrors I have already seen. Do. Before the trial by combat. From the Life of Horace Vernet all right, except that "I said", should be "I have said", towards the bottom of slip 2. Small Beer Chronicles, I return herewith, corrected. A Cheap Passage Home, I corrected long ago.[†3] Herewith I return all slips of A Dark Night's Work that have marks of mine upon them. The rest I retain and destroy, to save postage.

John will be back in London next Thursday night. He shall bring with him, corrected ready for use, all the proofs I have, or may have, here.

Then observe my movements,—which involve the necessity of Gad's Hill's impatience (if it be impatient) being curbed yet a little while. I too shall leave here on Thursday, and shall take about a ten days tour. Then I shall return for good, and come straight to the office. As I don't want to pin myself to any particular place during the ten days, I do not know that I can give you any reasonable idea where to address me. Therefore will you write to me here concerning the next No. so that I may get your letter before John leaves me, and answer it per John aforesaid.

Never was any thing like the last Reading here. Never. Never. Never!

Murmurs of Kinglake's book have crossed the water. If he ever comes to Paris, he will have a trifle of fighting on his hands.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

Please report how we are going.

[†a]I wish the fair Ellinor[†1] were not so horribly like Mrs. Gaskell![†a]

To FREDERICK LEHMANN, 3 FEBRUARY 1863*

MS University of Texas, Austin.

Hotel du Helder, Paris
Tuesday Third February 1863

My Dear Lehmann

I am much beholden to you for the trouble you have so kindly taken about Alfred. I still hanker after India or some such distant field, for the reasons I suggested to you when I last saw you. The reasons are very strong with me, simply because I have formed them on observation at home.

As I shall be back for good within a fortnight, I will not trouble you by writing further on this selfish subject. But I will see you promptly on my return.

If I had carried out my original intention and had Readings of my own in Paris, I don't know where they would have stopped. The Parisian audiences run away with them in the most astonishing and rapturous manner.

My Dear Lehmann
Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Frederick Lehmann Esquire

To MRS HENRY AUSTIN, 4 FEBRUARY 1863*

MS Morgan Library.

Paris | Wednesday Fourth February 1863.

My Dear Letitia. This note will be posted in town by John, who crosses tomorrow. I shall return within a fortnight, and shall go to the office.

Many thanks for your good wishes for my birthday.

I am extremely concerned to hear of the loss of the poor old dog, endeared to you by so many remembrances. But it is very likely that if you don't advertize him, some mysterious communication will drop in, to the effect that he has been seen going round some corner, and that somebody knows somebody who could get him for a pound.

The success of the readings here, has been unspeakable. The Parisian sensation on the subject is really indescribable.

Ever affectionately
CD.

To CHARLES FECHTER, 4 FEBRUARY 1863

Text from MDGH, II, 191-2.

Paris, Wednesday, Feb. 4th, 1863.

My Dear Fechter,

A thousand congratulations on your great success! Never mind what they say, or do, pour vous écraser; you have the game in your hands. The romantic drama, thoroughly well done (with a touch of Shakespeare now and then), is the speciality of your theatre. Give the public the picturesque, romantic drama, with yourself in it; and (as I told you in the beginning) you may throw down your gauntlet in defiance of all comers.

It is a most brilliant success indeed,[†1] and it thoroughly rejoices my heart!

Unfortunately I cannot now hope to see "Maquet,"[†2] because I am packing up and going out to dinner (it is late in the afternoon), and I leave to-morrow morning when all sensible people, except myself, are in bed; and I do not come back to Paris or near it. I had hoped to see him at breakfast last Monday, but he was not there. Paul Féval was there, and I found him a capital fellow. If I can do anything to help you on with "Maquet" when I come back I will most gladly do it.

My readings here have had the finest possible reception, and have achieved a most noble success. I never before read to such fine audiences, so very quick of perception, and so enthusiastically responsive.

I shall be heartily pleased to see you again, my dear Fechter, and to share your triumphs with the real earnestness of a real friend. And so go on and prosper, and believe me, as I truly am,

Most cordially yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To W. H. WILLS, 4 FEBRUARY 1863

MS Huntington Library.

Hotel du Helder, Paris
Wednesday Fourth February 1863.

My Dear Wills.

[†a]OURSELVES AND A.Y.R.[†a]

I send by John, with this, all the miscellaneous proofs I have.[†1] To wit, Skin Deep[†2] (called originally, Santorio and his theories)[†3] Small Beer Chronicles, Some Curious Lights (called originally Light-Bearing)[†4] Dress in Paris (done with great fidelity from a book I have been reading here, and which everybody here reads, because it has been suppressed)[†5] Fur Hunters, and What a bad hand; the last named article to be remorselessly distributed, and given to any of the four winds of Heaven that will accept it. I have omitted to mention Voltaire's Heart,[†6] but that I also send.

For the most part, I think these articles are better than those you mention in your letter received this morning; excepting Rule Britannia—which you call by its old name, forgetting that I have rechristened it, Very free—and very easy.[†7]

Make the last No. of the Volume and the first No. of the Volume as strong as you can.[†8]

A most noble month's balance certainly!!![†9]

IN RE FRANK[†10]

Perhaps it would be a damaging thing, suddenly to with-hold from him money that he expects. Therefore I would give him his months three pounds—with a caution that the Settling Day is near at hand, and that I shall soon be home.

It is really the general Parisian impression that such a hit was never made here. The curiosity and interest and general buzz about it are quite indescribable. They are so extraordinarily quick to understand a face and a gesture, going together, that one of the remarkable points is, that people who don't understand English, positively understand the Readings! I suppose that such an audience for a piece of Art is not to be found in the world. I wish you could have seen them—firstly, for my effect upon them—secondly, for their effect upon me. You have no idea what they made of me. I got things out of the old Carol—effects I mean—so entirely new and so very strong, that I quite amazed myself and wondered where I was going next. I really listened to Mr. Peggotty's narrative in Copperfield, with admiration. When Little Emily's letter was read, a low murmur of irrepressible emotion went about like a sort of sea. When Steerforth made a pause in shaking hands with Ham, they all lighted up as if the notion fired an electric chain. When David proposed to Dora, gorgeous beauties all radiant with diamonds, clasped their fans between their two hands, and rolled about in ecstasy. They took the storm as if they were in it. As to the Trial, their perception of the witnesses, and particularly of Mr. Winkle, was quite extraordinary. And whenever they saw the old Judge coming in, they tapped one another and laughed with that amazing relish that I could hardly help laughing as much myself. All this culminated on the last night, when they positively applauded and called out expressions of delight, out of the room into the cloak room, out of the cloak room into their carriages, and in their carriages away down the Faubourg.[†1]

Of course if I had gone on, I could have made a great deal of money. But I thought the dignified course was to stop. I could not reconcile myself to the notion of making the charitable help, the stepping stone. So, for the present while, I have done here.

Does it strike you, however, that there is nothing against taking advantage of the general notoriety of this unusual success, in London? Would you, if you were I, go on at St. James's Hall as of yore? If you should be quite satisfied[†2] on this head—not otherwise—would you write for me to Blockheadland[†3] (Sussex Hotel, Eastbourne) telling him that I shall be back for good, within a fortnight, and that I want him to be prepared with six or nine evenings for choice, about once a week, or two within eight days, and holding to the old Thursdays, if possible?[†4] [†b]Beginning about the end of the month.[†b] Of course he is to understand that he commits me to nothing until he has seen me at the office.

I leave here tomorrow morning long before Post time.

Ever My Dear Wills | Faithfully Yours

CD.

To MESSRS SAMPSON LOW, SON & MARSTON, 6 FEBRUARY 1863

Mention in American Art Association catalogue, Dec 1920; MS 1 p.; dated 6 Feb 63; addressed Sampson Low & Son.

Referring to a title chosen for a work by Miss Power.[†1]

To JOHN FORSTER, [7 FEBRUARY 1863]

Extract in F, VIII, vi, 694-5. Date: on his birthday; passed in Arras in 1863, according to Forster.

You will remember me to-day, I know. Thanks for it. An odd birthday, but I am as little out of heart as you would have me be—floored now and then, but coming up again at the call of Time. I wanted to see this town, birthplace of our amiable Sea Green;[†2] and I find a Grande Place so very remarkable and picturesque that it is astonishing how people miss it. Here too I found, in a by-country place just near, a Fair going on, with a Religious Richardson's[†3] in it—THÉÂTRE RELIGIEUX—"donnant six fois par jour, l'histoire de la Croix en tableaux vivants, depuis la naissance de notre Seigneur jusqu'à son sépulture. Aussi l'immolation d'Isaac, par son père Abraham." It was just before nightfall when I came upon it; and one of the three wise men was up to his eyes in lamp oil, hanging the moderators.[†4] A woman in blue and fleshings[†5] (whether an angel or Joseph's wife I don't know) was addressing the crowd through an enormous speaking-trumpet; and a very small boy with a property lamb (I leave you to judge who he was) was standing on his head on a barrel-organ.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 12 FEBRUARY 1863*

MS Huntington Library.

Amiens | Thursday Twelfth February 1863.

My Dearest Georgy

As I am writing to Forster with a packet of Robert Lytton's, I send him this note to post.

Not knowing whether Mary will be at Gad's or no, and not wishing this announcement of my return to be delayed, I send it to you who are sure to be at home.

I purpose being at the office between 11 and 12 on Monday night. I shall probably have to stay there some days, and therefore suppose that I may find you there;—if not you, of course I shall find a note from you.

I have worn my elastic stockings out and out and out again. It will be quite a new sensation to change them.

—All my letters to the office, please, in order that I may get through them with all speed. Best love to Mamie if at home, and to Mrs. B, if ditto.

In haste | Ever Your most affectionate

CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?12 FEBRUARY 1863]

Extract in F, XI, iii, 837. Date: Reference to recent long walks suggests same day as To Georgina Hogarth.

I walk miles away into the country, and you can scarcely imagine by what deserted ramparts and silent little cathedral closes, or how I pass over rusty drawbridges and stagnant ditches out of and into the decaying town.

To MRS HENRY AUSTIN, 17 FEBRUARY 1863*

MS Morgan Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Seventeenth Feby. 1863

My Dear Letitia. I came home at midnight last night, and brought the enclosed from Amelia.[†1] You are pretty sure to find me here any morning this week; or, if I should be out for the moment, Georgina is here and will know all about me.

Ever affecy.

CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?17-18 FEBRUARY 1863]

Extract in F, VIII, vi, 695. Date: 1863, according to Forster; he returned home by Boulogne on 16 Feb (To Mrs Henry Austin, that day); probably written within the next two days.

Saying that, as he stepped into the Folkestone boat at Boulogne, he encountered his friend Charles Manby also returning to England. Taking leave of Manby[†2] was a shabby man of whom I had some remembrance, but whom I could not get into his place in my mind. Noticing when we stood out of the harbour that he was on the brink of the pier, waving his hat in a desolate manner, I said to Manby, "Surely I know that man."—"I should think you did," said he; "Hudson!"[†3] He is living—just living—at Paris, and Manby had brought him on. He said to Manby at parting, "I shall not have a good dinner again, till you come back." I asked Manby why he stuck to him. He said, Because he [Hudson] had so many people in his power, and had held his peace, and because he [Manby] saw so many Notabilities grand with him now, who were always grovelling for "shares" in the days of his grandeur.

To A. H. LAYARD, 19 FEBRUARY 1863*

MS Lyons Papers, West Sussex Record Office.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Nineteenth February 1863

My Dear Layard.

Can you get me a letter of introduction to Lord Lyons[†1] in favor of a certain Mr. Frederic Lehmann, an intimate friend of mine for whom I have a great regard (here is his card enclosed), and who wants nothing on earth of Lord Lyons but such presentation as may serve a gentleman agreeably.

Mr. Lehmann is a German gentleman naturalized in England, and is one of the active partners in a very important steel-house.[†2] He is an accomplished gentleman in divers ways, and I should be proud to have him presented as my friend.

He is off to the States on the business of his house. He was there last October,[†3] and brought our Dispatches home from Washington on the first of November.

Very probably you know Lord Lyons. I have it very much at heart to serve this gentleman in this small matter (he dined with us at Forster's by the way, the last time we dined there together), and shall be very truly obliged to you for your help.[†4]

My Dear Layard | Faithfully Yours ever
CHARLES DICKENS

H. A.[†5] Layard Esquire

To W. C. MACREADY, 19 FEBRUARY 1863

MS Mrs Eleanor Ducker.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Nineteenth February 1863

My Dearest Macready

I have just come back from Paris,[†1] where the Readings—Copperfield— Dombey and Trial—and Carol and Trial—have made a sensation which modesty (my natural modesty) renders it impossible for me to describe. You know what a noble audience the Paris audience is! They are at their very noblest with me.

I was very much concerned by hearing hurriedly from Georgy that you were ill. But when I came home at night, she shewed me Katie's letter, and that set me up again. Ah! you have the best of companions and nurses, and can afford to be ill now and then, for the happiness of being so brought through it.—But don't do it again yet awhile, for all that.

Legouvé (whom you remember in Paris as writing for the Ristori)[†2] was anxious that I should bring you the enclosed.[†3] A manly and generous effort, I think? Regnier desired to be warmly remembered to you. He has been losing money in speculation, but looks just as of yore.

Paris generally is about as wicked and extravagant as in the days of the Regency. Madame Viardot in the Orphée,[†4] most splendid. An opera of Faust,[†5] a very sad and noble rendering of that sad and noble story. Stage management remarkable for some admirable—and really poetical—effects of light. In the more striking situations, Mephistopheles surrounded by an infernal red atmosphere of his own. Marguerite by a pale blue mournful light. The two never blending. After Marguerite has taken the jewels placed in her way in the garden, a weird evening draws on, and the bloom fades from the flowers, and the leaves of the trees droop and lose their fresh green, and mournful shadows over-hang her chamber-window which was innocently bright and gay at first. I couldn't bear it, and gave in completely.[†6]

Fechter doing wonders over the way here, with a picturesque French drama.[†7] Miss Kate Terry,[†8] in a small part in it,[†9] perfectly charming. You may remember her making a noise, years ago, doing a boy at an Inn in the Courier of Lyons?[†1] She has a tender love-scene in this piece,[†2] which is a really beautiful and artistic thing. I saw her do it at about 3 in the morning of the day when the Theatre opened,[†3] surrounded by shavings and carpenters, and (of course) with that inevitable Hammer going; and I told Fechter "that is the very best piece of womanly tenderness I have ever seen on the stage, and you'll find that no Audience can miss it." It is a comfort to add that it was instantly seized upon, and is much talked of.

Stanfield was very very ill for some months; then suddenly picked up, and is really rosy and jovial again. Going to see him when he was very despondent, I told him the story of Fechter's piece (then in rehearsal) with appropriate action: fighting a duel with the washing-stand, defying the bedstead, and saving the life of the sofa-cushion.[†4] This so kindled his old theatrical ardor, that I think he turned the corner on the spot.

With love to Mrs. Macready, and Katie, and (be still my heart!)[†5] Benvenuta, and the exiled Johnny (not too attentive at school, I hope?) and the personally-unknown young Parr, ever My Dearest Macready

Your most affectionate

CHARLES DICKENS[†6]

To DR JOHN ELLIOTSON, 20 FEBRUARY 1863

MS Mr N.J.B. Plomley.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Twentieth February 1863.

My Dear Elliotson.

I hope that I may set your mind at rest on the question we discussed yesterday morning, by giving you the assurance that Forster and I have carefully thought over all you said to us, and have endeavoured to guide ourselves by your feeling solely, and have come to the conclusion I am about to state:

It is, that so long as the very restricted and private movement we had originated, shall remain, in your words "not necessary", it had best be suspended and proceeded in no further. But if it should become necessary, it is ready for us to resume, and we are ready to resume it, at an hour's warning;— always on our own responsibility, and with as true a delicacy and sensitiveness for your great name and fame, as we could possibly have if they were our own.

Believe me ever | My Dear Elliotson | Affectionately Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To LADY MOLESWORTH, 21 FEBRUARY 1863*

MS Yale University Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Saturday Twenty First February 1863

I dine with Emerson Tennent on Sunday my dear Lady Molesworth, or I should have come to you with the greatest pleasure. I hope to see you very soon, and to receive an encouraging report of your neighbour's street door.[†1]—It is extraordinary how that handle sticks in my mind!

Affecy. Yours Ever

CD.

To FREDERICK LEHMANN, 23 FEBRUARY 1863*

MS University of Texas, Austin.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Monday Twenty Third February 1863

My Dear Lehmann. As I know you must be very busy before your departure,[†2] I think it better to write a short letter than to trouble you by calling.

Mr. Pender[†3] expressed the strongest desire, yesterday, to do what I wanted for Alfred, and recommended that he should go for a few months to a silk-brokers to get a practical knowledge of silk—then, for another few months, to his house in Manchester, to learn the trade in Manchester goods—and then (he said) the earliest opportunity should be laid hold of, of sending him out to China. He could answer for everything but the silk-broker's; but he would at once go himself to the two best, and try to find an opening for Alfred with one of them. If I would give him a week, he hoped the thing might be done within that time; very probably he might do it within a much shorter time. There was not the slightest doubt of the young man's getting on in China and making money, if he would only be steady and industrious. His own nephew had gone out under parallel circumstances a few years ago, and was already making a fortune. He would do everything he could, to put my son in circumstances to do the rest for himself.

You will think with me, I believe, that this is hopeful, and the best thing to be done. But I am just as much obliged to you, as if Alfred were going with you to America—where I must say I wish you were not going.

On Thursday at 7, we will drink to your speedy return.

Ever My Dear Lehmann
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Frederick Lehmann Esquire

To THOMSON HANKEY,[†1] [?LATE FEBRUARY 1863]

Mention in To Hankey, 26 Feb. Date: no doubt written in late Feb.

To THOMAS BEARD, 26 FEBRUARY 1863

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Place | Maida Hill | W.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Twenty Sixth February 1863.

My Dear Beard.

I have come back for good (after setting Paris on fire—I wish you could have seen and heard a Reading THERE!),[†2] and I want to know when you will come to Gad's. Saturday week the 7th.? Sunday the 8th.? Saturday fortnight the 14th.? Say when.

I am going to read at the Hanover Square Rooms: having changed the place,[†3] for the love of the more delicate points. My three nights in March are Friday the 6th. Wednesday the 11th. Friday the 13th. Stalls for all shall be duly sent by Headland per post.

Ever affecy Yours
CD.

To THOMSON HANKEY, 26 FEBRUARY 1863

MS Dickens House.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Twenty Sixth February 1863.

Dear Sir

I beg to thank you for the very kind explanation you have sent me in reply to my letter. I fully understand the difficulty, and the state of the case.[†4]

Believe me | Dear Sir
Yours faithfully and obliged
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomson Hankey Esquire.

To MISS MARGUERITE POWER, 26 FEBRUARY 1863

MS Robert H. Taylor Collection, Princeton University.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Twenty Sixth February 1863.

My Dear Marguerite

I think I have found a first-rate title for your book, with an early and a delightful association in most peoples' minds, and a strong suggestion of Oriental Pictures:

— X - 219 —

ARABIAN DAYS AND NIGHTS.

I have sent it to Low's. If they have the wit to see it, do you in your first chapter touch that string—so as to bring a fanciful explanation in aid of the title—and sound it afterwards, now and again, when you come to anything where Haroon Al Raschid, and the Grand Vizier, and Mesrour the Chief of the Guard, and any of that wonderful dramatis personae are vividly brought to mind.[†1]

Ever affectionately
CD.

March

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 1 MARCH 1863*

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Sunday First March 1863

My Dear Ouvry

We will certainly not buy at this preposterous price. However desirable the addition of the field[†2] to the freehold, I think it clear it is not worth the money.

Old Brooker's £1200 shall be in your hands in good time for the completion of the purchase. Will you draw up the necessary notice to the tenant, so that we may be free to get a higher rent as soon as we can.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Frederic Ouvry Esquire

To MRS FORSTER, [1 MARCH 1863]

Envelope listed in Carnegie catalogue No. 212; postmarked 1 Mar 63; addressed Mrs Forster, London.

To MADAME VIARDOT, 3 MARCH 1863

Free Library of Philadelphia.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Third March 1863.

My Dear Madame Viardot

I sent you the carte de visite. I am afraid it is not a very good one, but I am not a good subject for photography, and I think it the best there is.

Let me congratulate you and Monsieur Viardot (to whom I send my kind regard), on the approaching marriage of your daughter.[†1] Chorley told me of it the other day, and we were all much interested in the intelligence.

Mind!—When you come to England, I rely upon your coming to see us here.

Ever My Dear Madame Viardot | Your faithful Admirer
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS MATILDA CONEYS,[†2] 4 MARCH 1863

Mention in Bulletin d'Autographes, 116 Annee, No. 728 (Mar 1968); MS 1 p.; dated 4 Mar 53; addressed Miss Matilda Coneys.

He sends his best wishes.

To CHARLES KNIGHT, 4 MARCH 1863

Text in MDGH, II, 195 checked from MS Sotheby's, July 1983.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Fourth March 1863.

My Dear Charles Knight

At a quarter to 7 on Monday the 16th. a stately form will be discerned breathing birthday cordialities[†3] and affectionate amenities as it descends the broken and gently dipping ground by which the level country of the Clifton Road[†4] is attained. A practised eye will be able to discern two humble figures in attendance which, from their flowing crinolines, may, without exposing the prophet to the imputation of rashness, be predicted to be women. Though certes their importance, absorbed and as it were swallowed up in the illustrious bearing and determined purpose of the maturer stranger, will not enthral the gaze that wanders over the forest of San Giovanni as the night gathers in

Ever affectionately
G. P. R. JAMES[†5]

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 5 MARCH 1863*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Fifth March 1863.

My Dear Ouvry.

As you come to Rochester on Saturday the 21st. will you come to me, and stay until the Monday?

It seems to me that the enclosed letter, omitting the reference to the rack-rent, is the very thing. "Young Essell" has evidently no power in the matter. I take the motto of the Trustees[†1] to be, that Young Essell is a weak vessel—and in that respect they are right, however wrong in trying to over-reach us.

Ever Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS DALLAS, [?7 MARCH 1863]

Extract in MDGH, II, 195. Date: 7 Mar, when Princess Alexandra arrived in London on the Royal Yacht.

It is curious to see London gone mad.[†2] Down in the Strand here, the monomaniacal tricks it is playing are grievous to behold, but along Fleet Street and Cheapside it gradually becomes frenzied, dressing itself up in all sorts of odds and ends, and knocking itself about in a most amazing manner. At London Bridge it raves, principally about the Kings of Denmark[†3] and their portraits. I have been looking among them for Hamlet's uncle, and have discovered one personage with a high nose, who I think is the man.

Faithfully yours always
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 7 MARCH 1863

Mention in N, III, 345; MS 1 p.; dated Office of AYR, 7 Mar 63; addressed F. Ouvry.

To MRS FREDERICK LEHMANN,[†1] 10 MARCH 1863

MS University of Texas, Austin.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Tenth March 1863.

My Dear Mrs. Lehmann. Two stalls for tomorrow's Reading[†2] were sent to you by post before I heard from you this morning. Two will always come to you while you remain a Gummidge,[†3]—and I hope I need not say that if you want more, none could be better bestowed, in my sight.

Pray tell Lehmann when you next write to him, that I find I owe him a mint of money for the delightful Sweedish Sleigh-bells. They are the wonder, awe, and admiration, of the whole country side. And I never go out without them.

Let us make an exchange of child-stories. I heard of a little fellow the other day, whose Mama had been telling him that a French Governess was coming over to him from Paris, and had been expatiating on the blessings and advantages of knowing foreign tongues. After leaning his plump little cheek against the window-glass in a dreary little way for some minutes, he looked round and enquired—in a general way, and not as if it had any special application— whether she didn't think "that the Tower of Babel was a great mistake altogether?"

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MESSRS SAMPSON LOW, SON & MARSTON, 10 MARCH 1863

Text from N, III, 345.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
10th March, 1863

Dear Sirs,

Miss Power's objection[†4] does not in the least apply to the notion of the title I have suggested for her book;[†5] and I have avoided writing to her, because I would rather avoid telling her, if I can, that she doesn't understand it. I will try again, but I am sure I shall never find such another.

Faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 11 MARCH 1863*

MS Mr P. B. Dyson.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Eleventh March 1863.

My Dear Ouvry

Enclosed I send you the quarterly cheque.[†1]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS WREFORD MAJOR,[†2] 12 MARCH 1863

MS Benoliel Collection.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Twelfth March 1863

My Dear Mary.

I am quite concerned to hear that you and your party (including your brother Willie)[†3] paid for seats at my Reading last night. You must promise me never to do so, any more. My old affections and attachments are not so lightly cherished or so easily forgotten, as that I can bear the thought of you[†4] and yours coming to hear me like so many strangers. It will at all times delight me if you will send a little note to me, or to Georgina, or to Mary, saying when you feel inclined to come, and how many stalls you will want. You may always be certain, even on the fullest nights, of room being made for you. And I shall always be interested and pleased by knowing that you are present.

Mind! You are to be exceedingly penitent for last night's offence, and are to make me a promise that it shall never be repeated. On which condition accept my noble forgiveness.

With kind regard to Mr. Major[†5] | My Dear Mary
Affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Major

To THOMAS BEARD, 13 MARCH 1863

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Place | Maida Hill | W.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Thirteenth March 1863

My Dear Beard

In case I should not see you tonight, this is to let you know that I shall go to Gad's at 10 on Saturday morning, and that the next Train (by which Fechter will come) is at 1.20. I recommend mine, if it should not be too early for you.

We have to come up to dinner on Monday, to keep a birthday with which Destiny has connected us for the last ten years[†1]—though I really can never make out why!

Ever Faithfully

C.D.

To G. H. LEWES,[†2] 14 MARCH 1863*

MS Mrs Hilde Nieuhoff.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Saturday Fourteenth March 1863.

My Dear Lewes.

Why do you and Mrs. Lewes[†3] do such an outrageous thing as come to a Reading of mine without letting me send you tickets? Pray don't do so any more. I should like you to hear Copperfield, if you have not heard it. In that case, will you come on the 21st. April? Tell me as the time draws on.

Faithfully Yours Ever

CD.

Kind regards.

To MRS FORSTER, 17 MARCH 1863

Mention in N, III, 346.

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 17 MARCH 1863*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Seventeenth March 1863

My Dear Ouvry.

I am very much afraid that some rather anxious business I have on hand (but it is not my own, I am happy to say), will take me across the Channel on Friday morning, and probably detain me four or five days.[†1] Without being quite certain of this, I find such strong reason to suppose so on coming to town, that I think it best to write to you at once and get your assurance that you consider your visit to Gad's Hill, only deferred. (N.B. I have a Magnum of claret there, deserving of serious attention). At the same time I send you the cheque for old Brooker.[†2] When the purchase is concluded, will you take care that we lose no time in warning the present tenant?

Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

Frederic Ouvry Esquire

To BENJAMIN WEBSTER, 19 MARCH 1863*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: Benjamin Webster Esquire | Theatre Royal New Adelphi.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Nineteenth March 1863

My Dear Webster

Will you kindly leave a box at the door, for my ladies tonight?[†3] I shall not be able to come myself, I am afraid, as I dine out; but I saw you the other night in One Touch of Nature,[†4] with the greatest satisfaction.[†5] An excellent piece of genuine good acting, and a real treat to behold in these days.

Faithfully Yours ever
CHARLES DICKENS

To FREDERIC CHAPMAN, 26 MARCH 1863*

MS Mr Ken Follett.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Twenty Sixth March 1863

My Dear Sir.

I send you with this, Mr Robert Lytton's manuscript book.

It is hardly necessary for me to beg you to observe that I have read it, [†a]SOLELY WITH A REFERENCE TO THESE PAGES,[†a] and that I express no opinion on it as a book to be published all at once, in one volume or in more.

I think it was not designed for, and I am sure it is not adapted to, a serial mode of publication.[†1] The very construction of the story necessitates (for the author's sake) its being read as a whole. Regarding it, as I have said, only from this Journal's point of view, I could not suggest any transposition, or re-division, or reduction of any kind, that would enable the book to express itself in detached portions.

Faithfully Yours always,
CHARLES DICKENS

Fredk. Chapman Esquire

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 26 MARCH 1863*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Twenty Sixth March 1863

My Dearest Georgy.

I send you the enclosed to Mary from Harry.[†2] As you will see, it wants the usual "Invitation". Will you write it, in her name, or in mine?

So oppressed am I with work here, that I have not yet had leisure to speak to John—though it is pretty late in the afternoon. But I am going to do so before I leave, and will report to you in detail when we meet on Monday.

Ever most affectionately

CD.

To HENRY RAWSON,[†3] 26 MARCH 1863*

MS University of Texas, Austin.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Twenty Sixth March, 1863.

Dear Sir

In reply to your letter (which has just reached me), I can give you no more satisfactory information than that I wrote certain letters of which I have no copy, in the Daily News, soon after its establishment, on the subject of Capital Punishment.[†4] Further, I wrote a letter—I think, two letters—in the Times on the same subject, immediately after the execution of the Mannings, husband and wife.[†5] All these letters were signed with my name.

I am sorry to confess that I do now believe Capital Punishment to be necessary in extreme cases; simply because it appears impossible otherwise to rid Society of certain members of whom it must be rid, or there is no living on this earth. But I believe a public execution to be a savage horror far behind the time, affording an indecent and fearful gratification to the worst of people.[†1]

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Harry Rawson

To W. C. MACREADY, 31 MARCH 1863†

MS Morgan Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Thirty First March 1863.

My Dearest Macready

Wills spoke to me about the MS of Mrs. Meredith's[†2] novel,[†3] and we settled together that he should so write to you about it as to give you your credentials (as it were) to the effect that you had discharged your trust. Believe me, such a thing is worse than worthless to us. No serial story of that length, without a made-name, or the force within itself that would make a name, would do anything but sink us if we took it on board. In respect of offers of Novels (with nothing in them), I am what you were as to Tragedies (with ditto) at Covent Garden and Drury Lane. And what position can be more terrific than that!

[†a]I mean to go on reading into June. For the sake of the finer effects (in Copperfield principally), I have changed from St. James's Hall to the Hanover Square Room. The latter is quite a wonderful room for sound, and so easy, that the least inflection will tell anywhere in the place exactly as it leaves your lips; but I miss my dear old shilling galleries six or eight hundred strong, with a certain roaring sea of response in them that you have stood upon the beach of, many and many a time.

The Summer, I hope and trust, will quicken the pace at which you grow stronger again. I am but in dull spirits myself just now, or I should remonstrate with you on your slowness.[†a]

We really have been be-princed to the last point of human endurance; haven't we?[†4] [†a]Having two little boys sent home from school "to see the illuminations" on the marriage-night, I chartered an enormous Van, at a cost of five pounds, and we started in majesty, from the office in London, fourteen strong. We crossed Waterloo Bridge, with the happy design of beginning the Sight at London Bridge, and working our way through the City, to Regent Street. In a bye-street in the Borough, over against a dead wall and under a Railway-bridge, we were blocked for four hours! We were obliged to walk home at last, having seen nothing whatever.[†1] The wretched Van turned up in the course of the next morning. And the best of it was, that at Rochester here they illuminated the fine old Castle, and really made a very splendid and picturesque thing (as my neighbours tell me).[†a]

With love to Mrs. Macready and Katie.

Ever My Dearest Macready | Your most affectionate

CD.

To MISS MARGUERITE POWER, 31 MARCH 1863†

MS Yale University Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Thirty First March 1863.

My Dear Marguerite.

[†a]It is very difficult to suggest again, because we do not see the notion of such a book[†2] from the same point of view by any means. As to Sketches, or Pictures, or the like of that,—my publisher would object.[†3] And indeed what such a book wants in its title, it wants in itself; that is, the air of novelty derivable from the things being seen and thought about, from some fanciful station.[†a]

Of the three titles I send, I recommend the first; with the addition of the line from Love's Labour[s][†4] Lost.

—— the first opening of the gorgeous East.[†5]

I have been away, and received your letter on returning here last night.

Ever affectionately

CD.

[†a]Rays from the East[†6]
Oriental Beauties[†6]
Oriental Features[†6]

The title I recommend, would stand

Rays from the East.[†6]
At the first opening of the gorgeous East.
Shakespeare[†a†7]

April

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 8 APRIL 1863*

MS Huntington Library.

Office | Wednesday Eighth April, 1863

My Dearest Georgy.

I must stay here for tomorrow's making up;[†1] but I mean to come home tomorrow (Thursday) by the afternoon Express to Gravesend. Will you meet me there with the basket.

In haste | Ever Most affecy

CD.

Love to Charley and Katie, if they are (as I hope) at Gads. And to Harry and Plorn.

To LOUIS DÉPRET,[†2] 9 APRIL 1863*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Ninth April 1863.

My Dear Sir

I have had the honor and pleasure of receiving both your letters, and also the Number of L'Illustration in which you make such generous and gratifying mention of "Great Expectations".[†3]

Believe me, my Dear Sir, I am deeply touched and gratified by your inspiring praise, and your high appreciation. I should have written to you immediately, to assure you of my thanks, but that I have been absent for some time.

Accept my cordial sympathy and gratitude. You can scarcely understand how much true pleasure you have given me, without knowing how much I love France, and with what admiration I regard the great French people.

My Dear Sir, I am always
Your faithful and obliged
CHARLES DICKENS

à Monsieur Louis Dépret

To FREDERIC LEIGHTON,[†1] 9 APRIL 1863

Text from Mrs Russell Barrington, The Life, Letters and Work of Frederic Leighton, 1906, II, 89.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday, April 9, 1863.

My Dear Leighton,

I owe you many thanks for your kind reminder. It would have given me real pleasure to have profited by it had such profit been possible, but a hasty summons to attend upon a sick friend[†2] at a distance so threw me out on Friday and Saturday in obliging me to prepare for a rush across the Channel, that I saw no pictures[†3] and had no holiday. I was blown back here only last night, and believe that I shall deliver your message to Mrs. Collins to-day; that is to say, I am going home this afternoon and expect to find her there.

When the summer weather comes on, I shall try to persuade you to come and see us on the top of Falstaff's Hill. A hop country is not to be despised by an artist's eyes.

Faithfully yours always,
CHARLES DICKENS

To S. W. FALLOM,[†4] 10 APRIL 1863

MS Private; transcribed before destruction in Prestwick aircrash, Dec 1954.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Friday Tenth April, 1863.

Dear Sir

I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter. I have been absent on a visit, and it has but just reached me.

Without expressing an opinion on the merits of the case in question—which I am not competent to do, never having entered on a detailed examination of the two books[†5]—I cannot doubt that any author is justified in asserting his own literary rights. They are, at the best, shabbily enough secured to him.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

S. W. Fallom Esquire

To COLONEL GORDON,[†6] [10 APRIL 1863]

Envelope only, MS Private. Address: Colonel Gordon | Chatham Barracks. PM Rochester 10 Ap 63 and Chatham 11 Ap.

To MRS FANNY KEMBLE,[†1] 10 APRIL 1863*

MS Dickens House.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Tenth April, 1863.

My Dear Mrs. Kemble.

I have been absent on a visit, and am but now in the receipt of your letter.

My next vote is unfortunately engaged. But if the candidate in whom you are kindly interested, should not succeed this time and should renew his application, you may then rely on my proxy.[†2]

Believe me | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Fanny Kemble.

To W. C. MACREADY, 10 APRIL 1863*

MS Morgan Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Friday Tenth April, 1863.

My Dearest Macready

In the hope that you really will come here, I send you a note of the times at which we can be humanly sure of being here, if you will give me a line of preparation at the office. I take this precaution because of my Readings.

From Friday the 24th. April to Monday 27th.
both days inclusive
From Friday the 1st. May to Monday 4th.
both days inclusive
From Saturday the 9th. May to Thursday 14th.
both days inclusive
And after that, all days but Fridays.

Now, I am going to add a word—of course in the confidence that always exists between us—which I feel I ought not to suppress. I do not believe that Elliotson is in a sufficiently vigorous state of mind to be advantageously consulted. He may be, sometimes, but I would not rely upon him myself. I have had peculiar opportunities of judging him lately, and when he was just now in attendance on Wilkie they were confirmed.[†3] Not a word of this to the Pollocks.[†4]

With kindest regard and love at home

Ever Most affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To JAMES BALLANTINE,[†1] 13 APRIL 1863

MS Yale University Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Thirteenth April, 1863.

My Dear Sir

You may be sure that no slight circumstance would keep me away from a celebration in honor of our dear old friend Peter Fraser.[†2] He is associated in my mind—as in the minds of all his friends—with so much that is genial, humourous, pathetic, pleasant, and good, that he is a special man indeed and any festivity in remembrance of him is a special occasion.

But it happens, unfortunately for me, that I read in London on the night previous to the dinner,[†3] and that I have also an engagement for the very day of the dinner.[†4] The latter, if it stood alone, I would certainly release myself from; but immediately afterwards, I read again; and immediately after that, I have to preside at a public dinner,[†5] before reading again These rather heavy demands, added to my usual occupations and a touch of neuralgia in the face (which always visits me in the spring), seem, view them how I will, to disable me from making a hurried journey to my dear old Edinburgh and back for the first of May.

I confidently prefer my claim to you, however, to have the privilege[†6] conceded to me of being regarded as one of Peter Fraser's entertainers. To be excluded altogether from the occasion would be a real mortification to me; for I love him, and have derived no common delight from his society.

Accept my cordial thanks for your letter, and Believe me

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

James Ballantine Esquire

To CHARLES BLACK,[†1] 13 APRIL 1863*

MS British Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Thirteenth April, 1863.

My Dear Black

I will think of another title for your paper[†2]—so as to connect it more than it stands connected, with the present time and with later events than those to which it refers—and accept it with pleasure. A proof shall be sent to you for your correction.

Mary and Georgina very seldom go to Shows,—and I never go. But I hope we shall meet here, when the flowers are in bloom, and the hay is being made.

Faithfully Yours ever
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Black Esquire

To THOMAS CARLYLE, 13 APRIL 1863

MS Yale University Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Thirteenth April 1863.

My Dear Carlyle.

I should be very glad if you would come to one of my Readings one night. I think if you would come some evening when I read the Trial from Pickwick, you would find a healthy suggestion of an abuse or two, that sets people thinking in the right direction.

Georgina being all but quite well now, I look for that long-delayed visit from you and Mrs. Carlyle, this coming summer. This is really a pleasant place, and as good a little house to work in—or to do what you like in—as you will find anywhere. I am always reading you faithfully, and trying to go your way.

Affectionately Yours ever

CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Carlyle Esquire

To DR JAMES SHERIDAN MUSPRATT,[†1] 13 APRIL 1863†

MS Miss Joyce W. Emrick. Address: Dr. Sheridan Muspratt | The Hollies | West Derby | near | Liverpool.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Thirteenth April, 1863.

My Dear Dr. Muspratt.

[†a]Enclosed is the carte de visite.[†2] There is no good one that I know of; certainly no better.[†3]

I do not think we shall be in town at all this spring. As we had a place in Paris for sometime, I told my daughter she must not expect a house in London this season.[†a]

The Mrs. Knowles[†4] Memorial it is impossible for me to undertake at this time, because I have pressed other claims on the Minister's attention.[†5] But after that grant,[†6] you may be sure she will go on the Pension List soon.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To SIR FRANCIS AND LADY GOLDSMID,[†7] 14 APRIL 1863*

MS Mr Dennis Butts.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Fourteenth April, 1863.

Mr. Charles Dickens very much regrets that he cannot have the honor of dining with Sir Francis and Lady Goldsmid on Wednesday the Sixth of May, as he is pledged to preside at a public dinner in London on that day.[†8]

To F. W. HAMSTEDE,[†1] 15 APRIL 1863*

MS Private.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Fifteenth April 1863

My Dear Sir

Coming here this morning, I find your letter, for which I thank you cordially. It unfortunately happens that I have a business engagement for the day to which it refers, or I should have had much pleasure in accepting your kind invitation.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

F. W. Hamstede Esquire

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 15 APRIL 1863*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Fifteenth April 1863

My Dear Ouvry

I am sorry to hear you have been here when I was out. On Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday, in next week, I will be here at any hour you name. Any note from you will find me here on Saturday.

If you would ever like any stalls for any of my Readings, you will be heartily welcome. Verb: Sap:[†2]

Faithfully Always
CD.

To MRS HENRY AUSTIN, 22 APRIL 1863*

MS Morgan Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Twenty Second April 1863

My Dear Letitia.

I have been away for some days, and have only just now got your letter. I am not quite sure when it was written, as it bears no more precise date than "Saturday". But assuming Saturday to be last Saturday, I address this to Streatham.

For these next three weeks, I read twice in each week. This, added to my ordinary occupations and botherations, renders it all but hopeless for me to tie myself to any engagement; the more so, as I have two public dinners to attend within the same time. But as soon as I get over this present press, I want to arrange for your coming down to Gad's for a day or two, and bringing Harriett[†3] with you. Meanwhile I have told Headland to send you tickets for every Reading.

I have kept myself in the way of the Pension List as much as possible, and have steadily refused to sign any other Memorial. No pensions (I believe) have yet been announced, but I suppose them to be allotted in the official desks, because Sheridan Knowles's widow has had a grant out of the Queen's Bounty, expressly on the stated ground that she cannot be put on the Pension List this year. It being full.

Don't be troubled about that sum of money, but dismiss it from your mind as I have done.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To WILKIE COLLINS, 22 APRIL 1863†

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.[†1]

Wednesday Twenty Second April, 1863

My Dear Wilkie. It is an odd coincidence that a few weeks ago, I happened to be talking to Dr. Caplin[†2] (on the stage of the Lyceum) when he expounded his baths to me. I had never seen him before. There appeared to me to be something so very simple and reasonable in his method, that I came home here, saying I would certainly try them if I had need.

I am heartily glad you have got away at last,[†3] after that long and grievous bout. I am heartily sorry not to have seen you before you went, but you have never been out of my mind, however far out of my sight. You were not so much regretted at the Fund Dinner[†4] as you might have been, because they regarded you as "saved up" for next year, and counted me as "a little one in."[†5] It was really very good. Buckstone excellent;[†6] and Wigan[†7] modest, gentlemanly, and neat.[†8] Indeed there was quite a contagion of quickness and go about it, for an Alderman[†9] was bright and easy! This reminds me that I met Webster yesterday, in a bran new pair of moustaches a ditto ditto wig, and an enormous sleek hat. He really looked young, except that he was shaking from head to foot—which I attributed to the strong demands made upon his mature vigour by Miss Avonia Jones.[†1] (I need not remark upon its being a theatrical joke to call her Ammonia). I saw him go into Rule's[†2] and screw himself up with Oysters:[†3] which I thought discreet. He is doing but ill. Meantime that wretched Mr. Falconer[†4] is at the end of his tether at Drury Lane—which he closes this week—and goes about in a state of delirium tremens, grasping at imaginary spectres, pots of porter, or glasses of brandy and water. It is not known which. I write this on Gad's Hill paper, as you see, but at the Office. The neighbourhood is immensely excited. The St Giles's Murderer[†5] is taken,[†6] and yelling virtue (mostly drunk) is waiting in a crowd in Bow Street to rend him. This mention of the neighbourhood brings me round to the Office. Reade is rather dropping us.[†7] Consequently I strike in next week with a new series of the Uncommercial.[†8] The Drop is very small, but I want to stop it.

[†a]Ah poor Egg! I knew what you would think and feel about it.[†9] When I saw him in Paris on his way out, I was struck by his extreme nervousness, and derived from it an uneasy foreboding of his state. What a large piece of a good many years he seems to have taken with him! How often have I thought, since the news of his Death came, of his putting his part in the Saucepan (with the cover on) when we rehearsed the Lighthouse[†1]—of his falling out of the hammock when we rehearsed The Frozen Deep[†2]—of his learning Italian numbers when he ate the garlic in the carriage—of the thousands (I was going to say) of dark mornings when I apostrophized him as "'Kernel"—of his losing my invaluable knife in that beastly stage coach[†3]—of his posting up that mysterious book[†4] every night! I hardly know why, but I have always associated that volume, most, with Venice.[†5] In my memory of the dear gentle little fellow, he will be (as since those days he always has been) eternally posting up that book at the large table in the middle of our Venice sitting-room—incidentally asking the name of an Hotel three weeks back! And his pretty house[†6] is to be laid waste and sold![†7] If there be a sale on the spot, I shall try to buy something in loving remembrance of him, good dear little fellow. Think what a great Frozen Deep lay close under those boards we acted on! my brother Alfred, Luard,[†8] Arthur, Albert,[†9] Austin,[†10] Egg—even among the audience, Prince Albert and poor Stone—all gone![†11] "I heard the"—I forget what it was, I used to say[†12]—"come up from the Great Deep;" and it rings in my ears now, like a sort of mad prophecy.

However, this won't do. We must close up the ranks and march on.[†a]

Howitt[†13] has gone mad (madder, I mean) about an article I wrote on his Spirit book,[†14] and sends me a printed advertisement of it with notices appended "with Mr. Howitt's compliments to Mr. Dickens, and many thanks for the impulse given to his work by All the Year Round, and the other Infidel Journals." With the terrors of the Libel Law before my eyes, I charged Mr. Home,[†15] in another article, with one of his swindles at Florence.[†16] But he has made no sign. The stupendous absurdity of Howitt's book is inconceivable. Home's is clearly (to me) the book of a scoundrel without shame.

I hope and trust you will come to Gad's this summer. I cannot regard myself as having a home anywhere, but the place gets so pretty, that I can't help being fond of it, and I am always touching it up with something new. I read last night, and we had an immense audience, and turned away great numbers. The management of Block[†1] is so mortal bad, that I am going in all good humour, to get rid of him at the end of this series.[†2] But I rather hope he may be murdered before it is over. I saw so many doubled fists flourished in his perspiring face last night, that I trust his life may be considered in danger.

Old Bicknell's[†3] pictures[†4] are going to be sold at Christie's. Whereof Davy Roberts[†5] did so prose to me as I was dining at the Athenæum last Monday (looking out complacently, meanwhile, at the Senior United Service,[†6] with a big blue upper lip just wrenching itself into a prosperous Consolidated New 3 per cent smile while he rattled shillings in both his trousers[†7] pockets, with his hat drooping over his left eye), that I answered at random, and was quite imbecile. They cost £20,000 and a dealer has offered £55,000.[†8] That's the way to be a patron of art Sir!

Forster, on his birthday, fell into an epileptic fit of indignation against Knox the Magistrate:[†9] whom he called "a talking Potato."[†10] He went off, over a salmon, [†b]exactly as if the fish had exploded in his inside, carrying all before it. And the explosion was no more to be accounted for by the Jury than the late one at the Powder Mills.[†11] Write soon, & tell me how you are, and that you are better. And believe me now and ever Your affectionate | CD.[†b]

To THE HON. ELEANOR EDEN, 22 APRIL 1863*

MS Yale University Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.[†12]
Wednesday Twenty Second April, 1863.

My Dear Miss Eden.

In case you should otherwise fall into any difficulty, let me assure you that it would be Piracy to reprint from any copyright work without leave; and that you would probably find yourself in Chancery if you were to make such a mistake.

Take the White Ship, and the Murder of a'Beckett,[†1] and my blessing.[†2]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To LADY GOLDSMID, 22 APRIL 1863

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, July 1970; MS 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill Place, 22 Apr 63; addressed Lady Goldsmid.

Regretting he cannot dine.[†3]

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 23 APRIL 1863*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Twenty Third April 1863

My Dear Ouvry. I am much mistaken if that land would let at five guineas an acre.[†4] I don't in the least believe it, in short. But I will put myself in Cobb's way, and sound him concerning its value.

On Tuesday in next week, I read the Carol and the Trial from Pickwick. If you are disengaged that evening, I will send you a couple of stalls. The Trial is in your way.

Faithfully Yours ever
CHARLES DICKENS

Frederic Ouvry Esquire

To THE REV. WILLIAM HARNESS, 24 APRIL 1863

Mention in Autograph Prices Current, V, 1919-21; MS 1 p.; dated 24 Apr 63; addressed Rev. W. Harness.

To MRS BALL WILSON, 27 APRIL 1863*

MS Walter T. Spencer, checked from MS Sotheby's, July 1988. Address: Mrs Wilson | 4 Mathon Place | Richmond Road | Barnsbury | N.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Monday Twenty Seventh April 1863

My Dear Rebecca. Headland's report is, that he cannot do it tomorrow, but hopes to let you have the stalls for Thursday.

Affecy
CD.

To W. HEPWORTH DIXON,[†1] 30 APRIL 1863

MS Rosenbach Museum and Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Thirtieth April 1863

My Dear Dixon

I send you a cheque in Miss Jerrold's[†2] favour, for £153..18..4. The amount is thus made up:

	£S	D
Dividends for the half year ending Sepr. 1861	38..	8..	4
Do. Do. ending March 1862	38..	10..	0
Do. Do. ending Septr. 1862	38..	10..	0
Do. Do. ending March 1863	38..	10..	0
	£153..	18..	4

Will you kindly let me have at your leisure, a receipt from Miss Jerrold (to whom my kind regard) setting forth these details? The papers, which I keep together, will then at any time explain themselves.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Hepworth Dixon Esquire

May

To GEORGE RUSSELL,[†3] 1 MAY 1863*

MS Marjorie, Lady Russell.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday First May 1863

My Dear Russell.

I have read your note with the greatest interest and pleasure, and I heartily rejoice in the success of your most praiseworthy effort.[†4] When I was one of the Committee, I always on every possible occasion steadily maintained your principle, and pointed out the manifest absurdity and injustice of leading the club away—or even suffering it to lapse away—from its original distinctive character.[†5] Also, I dwelt, to some of the blindest of the obstructives, on the preposterousness of a close corporation in these days, and on the policy (taking the thing at its lowest) of letting it die quietly out of the midst of a body of gentlemen.

You may rely on any help that I can give you. It shall not be my fault if I do not count in your next majority, and stand by the Daylight Colours in all ways. Expressly towards which end, I will take some occasion in the meanwhile of returning to the Club.

I hope you will come to Gad's Hill in the course of this next summer. It has been enlarged and improved since you were there.

Very faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

George Russell Esquire

To E. M. WARD,[†1] 8 MAY 1863

Text from N, III, 349.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday May Eighth 1863

My Dear Ward,

My readings stand thus:

Friday 15th May. Dombey and Pickwick (Trial)
Friday 22nd May. Carol and Pickwick (Trial)
Friday 29th May. Copperfield and Mr. Bob Sawyer's Party

Unless I hear from you that you prefer any other night, I will take care that Stalls are sent you in due course for Copperfield. But I need hardly assure you that Stalls are always heartily at your service.

With best regards to Mrs. Ward[†2]

Always faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To MISS J. L. FRITH, 9 MAY 1863

MS Robert H. Taylor Collection, Princeton University.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Ninth May, 1863.

I am not quite sure whether my correspondent is a young lady or a young gentleman. But in the hope that I am addressed by a young lady (because I love all the young ladies now alive), I address this reply to "Miss" J L Frith,[†3] and have imprinted a respectful kiss on the left hand corner below, where a small circle is made.

CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS NICHOLS,[†1] 9 MAY 1863

Text from N, III, 349-50.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Saturday Ninth May 1863

Dear Madam,

I beg to thank you for the opportunity you have given me of reading your paper on myself,[†2] and for the sincere gratification I have derived from its perusal. I am perfectly sure that it is what you tell me it is—"a heart tribute" —and I assure you from my own heart that I deeply feel and esteem it.

In Mr. Wills's feeling that there would be a kind of impropriety in its appearing in pages under my direction, I quite concur. If I thought less highly of your praise, I might have less delicacy on this head.

Will you allow me to enclose you a card, which will admit you on any or all of the five Fridays on which I shall read this season. I send you with it my grateful interest and regard.

Dear Madam, | Very faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To W. C. MACREADY, 10 MAY 1863*

MS Morgan Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Tenth May, 1863.

My Dearest Macready

I should have been a little at a loss to answer your two questions on my own knowledge and authority. But I had an opportunity yesterday, of propounding them, with all gravity and deliberation, to a retired Physician still in Life-Office practise, who is extremely well acquainted with his brothers of the Faculty and with their pretensions and attainments. †a(He is one of the Administrators of the London University.)†a†3 He said, "I can answer both your questions with perfect confidence, as to the two men to whom the greater number of distinguished medical men would undoubtedly themselves go, if they were patients. For urethral disorders, Henry Thompson.†4 For diseases of the chest and throat, Walshe.†1 You may be quite certain that these are known by the profession to be the best men."

I give you their addresses, below.

Don't read anything purporting to be a dinner-speech of mine, I beg!†2 In Parliament times, such reports are so fearfully ill done, that they are generally mere nonsense and balderdash.

With kindest regard to Mrs. Macready and Katie and all the house from all here, and writing thus briefly because our post goes out early on a Sunday, I am Ever my Dearest Macready

Your most affectionate

CD.

Henry Thompson. M. B. 16 Wimpole Street
Dr. Walshe, 40 Queen Anne Street.

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 11 MAY 1863*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Monday Eleventh May 1863

My Dear Ouvry

I have seen Cobb this morning. He says that the price asked is unquestionably too high, and that the Meadow is certainly not worth five pounds an Acre, To Let, though he thinks it is worth four. He recommends our informing Essell that we cannot give the price asked, but that we will give 50 per cent more than the estimated value put upon the land by a valuer agreed upon—meaning, apparently, himself. Do you think it safe to do this?

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Frederic Ouvry Esquire

To THE EDITOR OF THE MIRROR,[†3] 14 MAY 1863*

MS Yale University Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Fourteenth May 1863

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to the Editor of the Mirror, and begs to say that he has had the pleasure of correcting the enclosed proof, and that he is happy to bear testimony to the general accuracy of the Report.[†1] His corrections, such as they are, are mostly made at the ends of sentences where words have been crowded out, or where the notes have been not quite accurately read.

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 14 MAY 1863*

MS Huntington Library

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Fourteenth May 1863

My Dear Ouvry

I came here only last night, and found your letter.

I quite agree with you about the Land. The best course would be perhaps, to write Essell that we cannot give the price, but still to hold him on a little, in case they should come down. For Brooker's land (that was), I already have an offer, from a very industrious good working farmer of £4 an acre to rent.

Next Friday's[†2] Reading is a gayer one than tonight's; for I read the Carol then (which is merry, whereas Dombey is sad) and the Trial again. But if you stick to tonight, send me a line round, and tell me how many Stalls I shall send you.

Ever Faithfully
CD.

To CHARLES STRETTON,[†3] 16 MAY 1863*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Saturday Sixteenth May 1863

Dear Sir

I have been absent from England for some days, or I should have had the pleasure of reading your Manuscript sooner.

While I feel much obliged to you for the offer of these sketches, and while I beg you to accept my thanks, I cannot entertain the hope that they will suit these pages. The clergyman is an excellent character, obviously from the life; but the manner in which he is introduced, is not interesting, is diffuse, and is (consequently) quite irreconcileable with the exigencies of a journal of this size, and with many established demands upon its space. Nothing but an amount of excision to which I think you could never become reconciled, would render this manuscript now enclosed, available for All The Year Round. At least half of it would vanish in the process, and the upsetting of the Punt—which has not yet happened—would have taken place—my daring thoughts are afraid to calculate how many sheets of paper ago.

Repeating my acknowledgements,
I am Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Stretton Esquire

To THE REV. W. H. BROOKFIELD, 17 MAY 1863

Text from MDGH, II, 199-200.

Gad's Hill, May 17th, 1863.

My Dear Brookfield,

It occurs to me that you may perhaps know, or know of, a kind of man that I want to discover.

One of my boys (the youngest)[†1] now is at Wimbledon School. He is a docile, amiable boy of fair abilities, but sensitive and shy. And he writes me so very earnestly that he feels the school to be confusingly large for him, and that he is sure he could do better with some gentleman who gave his own personal attention to the education of half-a-dozen or a dozen boys, as to impress me with the belief that I ought to heed his conviction.

Has any such phenomenon as a good and reliable man in this wise ever come in your way? Forgive my troubling you, and believe me,

Cordially yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To W. H. RUSSELL,[†2] 19 MAY 1863

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Nineteenth May, 1863.

My Dear Russell

I hear through Captain Williamson[†3] that you will recall your cancelling of your under-writing of Mr. Marcus Stone's name as a Candidate at the Garrick, if I can assure you "that his conduct towards his mother was justified by circumstances".[†4]

Of his mother,[†1] I say, in observance of a rule I have laid down for myself since I ceased to see her, nothing. Not one word, good or bad.

Of Mr. Marcus Stone and his brother and sisters (for there is such complete unanimity among them that it is impossible in this connexion justly to separate him from them), I say what follows:

That I was in close intimacy and confidence with their father, and had been for years and years made well acquainted by himself from time to time with the history of his family affairs. That he himself told me, it may have been a year or so before his death, that he did expressly contemplate that after his death the mother and the children should live apart. That he entered into details shewing me that it was his deliberate meaning, and why it was his deliberate meaning, that his resources should be applied as they actually have been applied. That when he knew himself to be very ill and when he had a strong misgiving that he was dying (I think, on the last occasion of his being out in the street), he walked with me for a while, expressing his solicitude about his children, and not for a moment qualifying any thing that he had before confided to me. That I know,[†2] consequently, from himself and in a most special manner, that the action taken by his children after his death can have been no newly conceived action of theirs, but was the result of a long train of circumstances which he foresaw would lead, and which he intended should lead, to that conclusion.

But so anxious have I been to avoid embittering complicated family matters, that I have never mentioned (to the best of my belief) one word of this delicate knowledge of mine, to any of the children, until last Sunday, when I communicated it to Mr. Marcus Stone on his imparting to me the circumstances of this Garrick affair. I have confined myself to saying when I saw occasion, as it was my duty to say, that the children were misunderstood on a misconception of the case, and to advising them to trust to Time and Truth.

Of course you are free to make the contents of this letter known to whomsoever you please. If you see no objection I should be glad if you will make them known to our friend Leech, as Mr. Marcus Stone's proposer.

Believe me always My Dear Russell
Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. H. Russell Esquire

To SAMUEL PHELPS,[†3] 21 MAY 1863

MS Dickens House.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Twenty First May 1863

My Dear Mr. Phelps.

A new difficulty has arisen in the way of a good understanding between yourself and Fechter, which Fechter has been here to-day to communicate to me. I am exceedingly sorry to be made aware of it, but it is so irreconcilable with the spirit Fechter showed when your difference was referred to me here, and with the spirit in which you expressed yourself towards him in reply, that I feel I cannot dismiss it, however disagreeable the topic.[†1]

Mr. Barnett[†2] has informed Fechter that you, in so many words, told him (Barnett) that you would not play the Ghost in Hamlet "to a Blasted Frenchman." Now, assuming these words to have been actually used,[†3] they are, both personally and nationally, so exceedingly discourteous and offensive, that I cannot wonder at Fechter's being so much at a loss to know how to preserve amicable relations with a member of his company who uttered them.

Will you be so good as to give me some enlightenment on this head?

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Samuel Phelps Esquire

To SAMUEL LOVER, 22 MAY 1863

MS W. A. Foyle.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Twenty Second May 1863

My Dear Lover.

I am afraid there is scarcely enough in this, for our purpose.[†4] But I hope this misgiving will not prevent your sending me another in its own time.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Samuel Lover Esquire

To SAMUEL PHELPS, 22 MAY 1863

MS Rosenbach Museum and Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Night, Twenty Second May, 1863

(Copy)
My Dear Mr. Phelps.

Fechter has come to me tonight after the closing of his Theatre, and I have reported to him exactly what passed between you and me to-day.[†5]

He refuses to recognize your engagement any longer, on the ground that it is impossible to preserve either business relations or friendly relations with you.[†1]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Samuel Phelps Esquire

To THE REV. HENRY WARD,[†2] 23 MAY 1863*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: The Rev. Henry Ward | St. Barnabas | King Square | London | E.C.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Night Twenty Third May, 1863.

Dear Sir

I hope you will not measure the cordiality of my recognition of your frank letter (which of course I receive in confidence), by the tardiness of my reply. I have been much engaged and much away.

Even now, I am unable to make an appointment, or propose a time for availing myself of your kindly proffered introduction. For I have a large arrear to clear off gradually, and cannot bear to do any thing that I am not reasonably sure of doing with exactness.

For the present therefore, I confine myself to thanking you for your interesting communication, and to assuring you that I hope I perfectly understand and appreciate its spirit. Trusting that I shall be able to resume its subject with you personally, I beg you to believe me.

Yours faithfully and obliged
CHARLES DICKENS

The Rev. Henry Ward

To THE REV. W. BROOKFIELD, 24 MAY 1863†

MS Morgan Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Twenty Fourth May, 1863.

My Dear Brookfield

†aI am most truly obliged to you for your kind and ready help.

When I am in town next week, I will call upon the Bishop of Natal;†3 more to thank him than with the hope of profiting by that gentleman of whom he writes, as the limitation to "little boys" seems to stop the way. I want to find some one with whom this particular boy could remain, if there were a mutual interest and liking. That would be a grand point gained.†a

From the moral mountain-range of Wimbledon School, my boys appear to have contemplated the neighbouring Murray valley with depreciatory sentiments. A newly-emancipated Wimbledonian gave me to understand, this morning at breakfast, that "Murray's would be a fall".†1 †aWhy did the Kings in the Fairy-Tales want children! I suppose in the weakness of the regal intellect.

Concerning Nickleby; I am so much of your mind (comparing it with Copperfield) that it was a long time before I could take a pleasure in reading it. But I got better, as I found the audience always taking to it. I have been trying, alone by myself, the Oliver Twist murder;†2 but have got something so horrible out of it that I am afraid to try it in public.†a

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 26 MAY 1863*

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT†3
Tuesday Twenty Sixth May 1863.

My Dearest Georgy. Wills is not here, but I see a letter on his desk making the appointment vaguely for "tomorrow afternoon".†4 I shall try to get down by way of Gravesend, afterwards.

Tell Mary that I have an invitation from the Corporation for the Royal Entertainment!†5

As it includes a lady, I have accepted for myself and Miss Dickens. You know how likely I am to meet My Prince on the occasion, but I suppose Mrs. Humphery[†6] will be chaperone.

Ever affecy

CD.

To MRS NICHOLS, 26 MAY 1863

Text from N, III, 353-4.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday, Twenty-Sixth May, 1863

Dear Madam,

It is often very difficult for me to keep pace with my correspondents. I hope you will attribute the tardiness of my reply to your last letter to this unavoidable circumstance, and not to any lack of interest in it.

I regret that neither of the accompanying papers is quite suitable to the requirements of All the Year Round. It would not be easy to explain within the compass of a hurried note what those requirements are; nor could I hope to suggest them to you successfully if the journal itself cannot do so.

Also you have anticipated any advice I could offer you by finding for yourself the most likely channels through which to render your literary work remunerative.

Thus nothing is left for me to say except to assure you—which I do most sincerely—that it would give me real pleasure to be able to accept any contribution from yourself or your husband; and to couple with this assurance the faithful promise that I will myself attentively read any paper you may send me, marked "Private" on the cover.

For the novels you mention I fear there is little chance. A name needs to be made by periodical writing of another kind before a publisher will—except in rare instances—enter on such a venture.

In that respect there is no opening in All the Year Round. But for general contributions there is always an opening there, and it is at least as much a pleasure to me as it is my interest to find new contributors who hit the mark.

Personally, I beg you to believe that I am truly sensible of your high opinion, and that I esteem it as a great and high privilege to have awakened so much interest in your breast. It would be a real gratification to me if I could prove this to you by helping you towards the attainment of the honourable object, in which you have my full sympathy.

Dear Madam, | Faithfully yours

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To SAMUEL PHELPS, 27 MAY 1863

MS Rosenbach Museum and Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Twenty Seventh May 1863

My Dear Mr. Phelps.

I have an engagement at 12 today, to go to Limehouse with Mr. Edwin Chadwick[†1] to inspect some schools. I therefore leave for you enclosed, agreeably to your request, the four letters from Mr. Fechter to yourself which you left in my hands.[†1]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Samuel Phelps Esquire

To W. W. F. DE CERJAT, 28 MAY 1863

Extract in MDGH, II, 200-203. Date: 28 May according to MDGH, 1880; MDGH, 1882 and later versions give Thursday, 24 May; N, going by the day of the week, mistakenly corrects it to 21 May.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT,
Thursday, May 28th, 1863.

My Dear Cerjat,

I don't wonder at your finding it difficult to reconcile your mind to a French Hamlet; but I assure you that Fechter's is a very remarkable performance perfectly consistent with itself (whether it be my particular Hamlet, or your particular Hamlet, or no), a coherent and intelligent whole, and done by a true artist. I have never seen, I think, an intelligent and clear view of the whole character so well sustained throughout; and there is a very captivating air of romance and picturesqueness added, which is quite new. Rely upon it, the public were right. The thing could not have been sustained by oddity; it would have perished upon that, very soon. As to the mere accent, there is far less drawback in that than you would suppose. For this reason, he obviously knows English so thoroughly that you feel he is safe. You are never in pain for him. This sense of ease is gained directly, and then you think very little more about it.

The Colenso[†2] and Jowett[†3] matter is a more difficult question, but here again I don't go with you. The position of the writers of "Essays and Reviews"[†4] is, that certain parts of the Old Testament have done their intended function in the education of the world as it was; but that mankind, like the individual man, is designed by the Almighty to have an infancy and a maturity, and that as it advances, the machinery of its education must advance too. For example: inasmuch as ever since there was a sun and there was vapour, there must have been a rainbow under certain conditions, so surely it would be better now to recognise that indisputable fact. Similarly, Joshua might command the sun to stand still,[†1] under the impression that it moved round the earth; but he could not possibly have inverted the relations of the earth and the sun, whatever his impressions were. Again, it is contended that the science of geology is quite as much a revelation to man, as books of an immense age and of (at the best) doubtful origin, and that your consideration of the latter must reasonably be influenced by the former. As I understand the importance of timely suggestions such as these, it is, that the Church should not gradually shock and lose the more thoughtful and logical of human minds; but should be so gently and considerately yielding as to retain them, and, through them, hundreds of thousands. This seems to me, as I understand the temper and tendency of the time, whether for good or evil, to be a very wise and necessary position. And as I understand the danger, it is not chargeable on those who take this ground, but on those who in reply call names and argue nothing. What these bishops and such-like say about revelation, in assuming it to be finished and done with, I can't in the least understand.[†2] Nothing is discovered without God's intention and assistance, and I suppose every new knowledge of His works that is conceded to man to be distinctly a revelation by which men are to guide themselves. Lastly, in the mere matter of religious doctrine and dogmas, these men (Protestants—protestors—successors of the men who protested against human judgment being set aside) talk and write as if they were all settled by the direct act of Heaven; not as if they had been, as we know they were, a matter of temporary accommodation and adjustment among disputing mortals as fallible as you or I.

Coming nearer home, I hope that Georgina is almost quite well. She has no attack of pain or flurry now, and is in all respects immensely better. Mary is neither married nor (that I know of) going to be. She and Katie and a lot of them have been playing croquet outside my window here for these last four days, to a mad and maddening extent. My sailor-boy's ship, the Orlando, is fortunately in Chatham Dockyard—so he is pretty constantly at home—while the shipwrights are repairing a leak in her. I am reading in London every Friday just now. Great crams and great enthusiasm. Townshend I suppose to have left Lausanne somewhere about this day. His house in the park is hermetically sealed, ready for him. The Prince and Princess of Wales go about (wisely) very much, and have as fair a chance of popularity as ever prince and princess had. The City ball in their honour is to be a tremendously gorgeous business,[†1] and Mary is highly excited by her father's being invited, and she with him. Meantime the unworthy parent is devising all kinds of subterfuges for sending her and getting out of it himself.[†2] A very intelligent German friend of mine,[†3] just home from America, maintains that the conscription will succeed in the North,[†4] and that the war will be indefinitely prolonged.[†5] I say "No," and that however mad and villainous the North is, the war will finish by reason of its not supplying soldiers. We shall see. The more they brag the more I don't believe in them.

To FREDERICK LEHMANN, 28 [MAY] 1863*

MS University of Texas, Austin. Date: misdated by CD: clearly before 4 June; no doubt 28 May, a Thursday.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Thursday Twenty Eighth June 1863.

My Dear Lehmann

On Thursday the 4th. of June at 7, I shall have much pleasure in dining at Westbourne Terrace. (My Ascot horse being sure to win, I have no need even to go down to see him run for the Cup.)[†6]

Although you have so lately been in America, and although I know what a raging mad topsy-turvy state of things obtains there, I can not believe that the Conscription will do otherwise than fail, and wreck the War.[†7] I feel convinced indeed, that the War will be shattered by want of Northern soldiers.*[†8]

Ever Faithfully
CD.

*Of course the more they brag, the more I don't believe them.

To DR JAMES SHERIDAN MUSPRATT, 28 MAY 1863*

MS Dickens House. Address: Dr. Sheridan Muspratt | West Derby.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Thursday Twenty Eighth May 1863.

My Dear Muspratt

Thanks for the Photograph—which is an excellent one. I have not forgotten your request concerning Wilkie Collins, but he is away in Germany, ill.[†1]

Faithfully Alys
CD.

To DRINKWATER MEADOWS,[†2] 29 MAY 1863

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Twenty Ninth May 1863

My Dear Mr. Meadows

As it is Copperfield to night—which you have heard—and as it is Nickleby next Friday—which you have not heard—I have told Mr. Headland to send you 2 stalls for the latter night.

I have but just now got your note on coming in from the country.

Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

To CAPT. CAVENDISH SPENCER BOYLE,[†3] 30 MAY 1863

Extract in Autograph Prices Current, III (1917-18), 82; MS 1 ½ pp.; date given in N, III, 354 with smaller extract; addressed Capt. C. Boyle.

GAD'S HILL PLACE | Thirtieth May 1863

I read the "Poor Traveller" on Friday, the 12th of June. If you come let me know, and I will take care you are placed near me. There was quite a tremendous demonstration with my favourite reading, Copperfield, last night.[†4] I have never seen such an enthusiastic audience; no, not even when I read in Paris,

To JOHN FORSTER, [30 MAY 1863]

Extract in F, XI, iii, 841. Date: 30 May 63, according to Forster.

Here is a curious case at first-hand. On Thursday night in last week, being at the office here, I dreamed that I saw a lady in a red shawl with her back towards me (whom I supposed to be E.).[†1] On her turning round I found that I didn't know her, and she said 'I am Miss Napier.'[†2] All the time I was dressing next morning, I thought—What a preposterous thing to have so very distinct a dream about nothing! and why Miss Napier? for I never heard of any Miss Napier. That same Friday night, I read. After the reading, came into my retiring-room, Mary Boyle and her brother,[†3] and the Lady in the red shawl whom they present as 'Miss Napier'! These are all the circumstances, exactly told.

To W. HOLMAN HUNT,[†4] 31 MAY 1863

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Thirty First May, 1863.

My Dear Mr. Hunt.

I should have immediately complied with your request[†5] but for the sufficient reason that I really have nothing to tell, which the public has any claim to know. The dear fellow was always one of the most popular of the party—always sweet-tempered, humourous, conscientious, thoroughly good, and thoroughly beloved. I always advised with him about the composition of the figures, and the like; and his artistic feeling and his patience were what you know them to have been. There is not a single grain of alloy, thank God, in my remembrance of our intimate personal association. But I look back upon his ways and words, in that half-gipsey life of our Theatricals, as sanctified by his Death and as not belonging to the public at all. In that aspect of his life as in every other, he was a thoroughly staunch, true, reliable man. All else I regard as private companionship and confidence.

Believe me ever | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. Holman Hunt Esquire

June

To EDWIN CHADWICK, [?MAY-EARLY JUNE 1863]

Mention in next. Date: Mention suggests a recent letter.

To EDWIN CHADWICK, 8 JUNE 1863*

MS University College, London.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Eighth June 1863.

My Dear Mr. Chadwick

It has come into my head since I wrote to you, that you may perchance be able to tell me where to find the very thing I want just now.

All my boys have been to great schools, from Eton downward. But my youngest boy,[†1] just turned eleven, feels lost in a great school (he is at Wimbledon), and entreats me to place him, after the Midsummer holidays, somewhere where there are not above ten or a dozen boys. He is a docile little fellow; shy from having been much at home; but good and capable.

Do you know of any really sound and kind man—a man of sense, and not of barrel organ routine—who lives within an easy journey of London, and takes such a limited number of pupils? A word addressed to me at the office will greatly oblige me.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Edwin Chadwick Esquire

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 9 JUNE 1863*

Text from facsimile in J. V. Tooley Ltd catalogue, 1982.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Ninth June 1863.

My Dear Ouvry

The quarterly cheque enclosed.

Faithfully Yours alwys
CHARLES DICKENS

Frederic Ouvry Esquire.

To MRS BALL WILSON, 10 JUNE 1863*

MS Private. Address: Mrs Wilson | 4 Malton Place | Richmond Road | Barnsbury | N.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Tenth June 1863

My Dear Rebecca.

The pressure is so great for Friday that it is quite out of my power to send you any tickets.

Affecy Yours
CD.

To FREDERIC CHAPMAN, 11 JUNE 1863*

MS Kohnan Women's University, Japan.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Eleventh June 1863

My Dear Sir

I am very much obliged to you for your suggestion in reference to Mr. Anthony Trollope,[†1] and should have been very glad to pursue it, but for the impossibility of publishing the story[†2] here "before very long". You know that we have Mr. Charles Reade at present in course of publication. He will probably go on for six or eight months—six at the very least—and to get another serial into our limited space at the same time, would be out of the question. I think therefore that the fair and plain course on my part (observing Mr. Trollope's desire to have the story published soon) is, not to propose any unacceptable conditions, but at once to decline.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Fredk Chapman Esquire

To DRINKWATER MEADOWS, 11 JUNE 1863*

Text from transcript by Edgar Johnson of MS Mr and Mrs Alfred Castle.

Thursday, Eleventh June 1863.

My Dear Mr. Meadows:

Mr. Headland tells me (I regret to assure you) that the pressure on the stalls for tomorrow is so great that he cannot find room here for the very few free seats that are usually reserved for my own family: all of which he has been obliged to withhold but two. I am terrible afraid of his getting into difficulties, and dare not press him, but if as Mr. Micawber says, "anything should turn up" tomorrow, I will send a messenger to you.

Faithfully yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Drinkwater Meadows, Esquire.

To MRS NICHOLS, 11 JUNE 1863

Extract from N, III, 355; addressed Mrs. Mary Nichols.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday, Eleventh of June, 1863

Dear Madam,

I regret to assure you that it is out of my power to comply with your clever little girl's[†3] request. Mr. Headland tells me that the pressure on the stalls for to-morrow night is so great that he has been obliged to withhold all but two of the few free admissions that are usually set aside for my own family.

It was satisfactory to me to hope as I read on that the Unholy Land[†1] could be made available here. But my satisfaction was sadly dashed by the discovery that it is incomplete. I can scarcely exaggerate the difficulty, with one long serial in progress here, and my own series of papers under resumption from time to time, of entering on any other "continuation." Could you finish your project in three papers, or in two? I cannot even pledge myself to find space for the Unholy Land in three parts; but I would try, if you could so accomplish it.[†2]

To EDWIN CHADWICK, 14 JUNE 1863*

MS Mr P. H. Lynch.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Fourteenth June 1863.

My Dear Chadwick

Many thanks for your letter. I know how sensible its advice is; and I wish I could get my small boy to understand that, without experience. He is at Wimbledon School now, and will not readily find himself so well off elsewhere.

In the summer-time I generally deliver myself over, bound hand and foot, to my eldest daughter, for the beginning of the week. Although I had my misgivings, I could not answer about tomorrow until I got down here. My courage is so subdued by what I find is going to be done with me, in the way of visitors, for interminable Mondays, that I cannot pursue the subject. I think I shall try to establish a Half Time System in that regard. When I have done so, I will report how it works.

Those papers[†3] have come to hand.

Faithfully Yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

Edwin Chadwick Esquire

To THOMAS ADOLPHUS TROLLOPE, 16 JUNE 1863*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Sixteenth June 1863.

My Dear Trollope.

I am delighted with Mrs. Trollope's[†1] excellent poem,[†2] which seems to me to be full of uncommon merit, and which I will get into A.Y.R. straightway. Pray tell her that I have read it with the greatest relish and admiration.

Only a day before I received your note, my daughters had been wondering when you would appear here to justify your high reputation in these parts as a Croquet-player. I assure you that the intelligence of your not meaning to come, this summer, has been received with a very genuine expression of disappointment. Mrs. Trollope might almost have been jealous if she had heard it.

I live in a dream of getting back to Italy; but I am always waking, and never knowing when I shall look on its beloved face again. When the dead season of London comes round, then I have house to keep here. And when I slip over to Paris, I find that I am perpetually oscillating between Paris and London.

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

T. Adolphus Trollope Esqre.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 18 JUNE 1863*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Eighteenth June 1863.

My Dearest Georgy.

All right. Give my love to the visitors, and say I shall be glad to see them on Sunday.

I will write on Saturday; I suppose we shall come by the Early Train.

My head is addled with Uncommercial Travelling—done for the time, I am happy to say.[†1] Everything to eat, of an impossible character, was produced yesterday.[†2] Such extraordinary successions of fruit, that they became almost ludicrous. About two pounds of grapes, one pine apple, and a melon and a half, per head. Forster in his "nice face" vein. Discovering everybody (through his eye-glass) to have "a nice face". Particularly struck by the "nice face" of young Schleswig-Holstein.[†3] Who sang a German song by the bye (in a raging base voice) which I supposed to be Caspar in the Freischütz, and Bertram in the Robert, in partnership in some accursed invocation of the Evil One.[†4]—I was afterwards told that it was a little gentle anecdote concerning two soldiers. In the midst of it, Ward and Mrs. Ward were announced—both with heads so enormously big, that an evident thrill of horror and amazement seized the company.

Lehmann wants to know if we can go and see Woodlands[†5] next Saturday week. I said I couldn't answer without Mary. Will you write to Mary, and ask her?

Chorley is made so happy by the success of Faust[†6] (which he has always laboured to have produced here) that it is quite impossible to understand what he means. When he told me what his feelings were, he drew a dial in the air, and punched with his forefinger all the twelve hours in it. Then he said "You understand?", and I said (with deep feeling) "I do."

I think Gad's Hill and the office must exchange Sutherlands.[†7] We have got such a handsome one here, that it is really too handsome for the place.

My Dearest Georgy | Ever affecy

CD.

To JOHN BATE CARDALE,[†1] 19 JUNE 1863*

MS Dickens House.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Friday Nineteenth June 1863.

My Dear Sir

It is proposed to recur to that subject of undeveloped impressions.[†2] In any case I will not fail to use your very curious experience.

Enclosed I beg to send you my cheque for £20 for the concluding year of my tenancy of the front Garden at our old place of residence. Accept my apology for having forgotten it. As I have not formally returned the key, I may mention that young Mr. Stone has it at your disposal.

My Dear Sir | Very Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John B Cardale Esquire

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 20 JUNE 1863*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Saturday Twentieth June 1863

My Dearest Georgy

Mrs. Dickenson[†3] does not come tomorrow. Fechter comes with me from London Bridge at 10, to Higham. The Decanters will also come with me, in a hamper.

Ever affecy
CD.

To HENRY BATHURST, [JUNE 1863]

Mention in Committee of Management Minutes, 29 June 63 (MS Hospital for Sick Children). Date: presumably within a week of its being read to the Committee.

Offering to use his influence to persuade Bulwer Lytton to preside over the Hospital's next Annual Festival.

To MRS SARTORIS,[†1] 26 JUNE 1863*

MS Maggs Bros Ltd.

Friday Twenty Sixth June, 1863[†2]

My Dear Mrs. Sartoris

I am truly sorry that I am deprived of the pleasure I had anticipated in dining with you on Wednesday. I have a ridiculous swelling in the back of my head which wants to be something trouble-some. To be beforehand with it in its amiable intentions, my Doctor "treats" me with steel and strong acids, and lays especial injunctions on me not to dine late or to go into hot rooms until he has done with me. May that be soon! But he says it certainly will not be by Wednesday. So I write at once.

Believe me always | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS[†3]

To THOMAS ADOLPHUS TROLLOPE, 26 JUNE 1863*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Twenty Sixth June 1863.

My Dear Trollope.

I write this short epistle, to beg you, on your arrival in town, to let us know when you will come here. Wonderful croquet engines of great solidity have been constructed, and hopeless insanity rages on the subject,—saving in the bosom of the undersigned calm philosopher.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

T. A. Trollope Esquire.

To WILKIE COLLINS, 28 JUNE 1863

MS Morgan Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Twenty Eighth June 1863.

My Dear Wilkie

Welcome home![†4]—I heartily desire to see you, and hope you will soon be well enough (if you are not already) to come down here for those quiet days you wrote of from Germany.

I want to hear everything about you. Whether you are as strong as you ought to be. Whether the Baths bore out the Doctor.[†1] Whether you are going again to Caplin (whom I discover to be my dearest friend and brother), whether you set up your own Perambulator in that queer place yonder—if so, whether you doubled it up too—and all sorts of things.

Here am I with a swelling on the back of my head, and an itching—not palm, but neck. I cannot think the swelling was meant for me, and conceive that it must be a mistake. Macready was to have been here to day, but is stopped at Cheltenham by (I can't write it)[†2] erysipelas. I am rather anxious about him, though his good wife writes very cheerfully.

We shall be at the office on Friday. Are you well enough to dine there at 5, and go afterwards to the German Reed's?[†3] I am told that Parry[†4] is doing the most amusing thing of its kind that ever was done. If you could come, I would write to Priscilla[†5] for stalls. Give me a word in answer by return, here.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To EDWIN CHADWICK, 29 JUNE 1863*

MS Maggs Bros Ltd.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Twenty Ninth June 1863.

My Dear Chadwick

I have been unwell, and obliged to keep as quiet as I can among the green fields. I am still in the Doctor's hands, taking steel and strong acids. Therefore I am chary of making appointments, until I am quite free of the Faculty. But I hope to make one with Mr. Burrell[†6] within a fortnight or so. He has mentioned your name in an obliging letter I have had from him touching the Self-Supporting Cooking Depots for the working people.[†7]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Edwin Chadwick Esquire

To MRS NICHOLS, 29 JUNE 1863

MS Private; transcribed before destruction in Prestwick aircrash, Dec 1954.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Monday Twenty Ninth June, 1863.

Dear Madam

I will try "A Trip in the Unholy Land" in two chapters. The first portion I hope to publish in All the Year Round before the month of July is out.[†1]

Faithfully yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Nichols.

July

To J. STIRLING COYNE,[†2] 2 JULY 1863*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: Ter-Centenary Monument Committee | J. Stirling Coyne Esquire | 28 King Street.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Second July, 1863.

My Dear Sir

I received your letter, only yesterday.

I hope it is unnecessary for me to assure you that I am truly sensible of the honor conferred upon me by the resolution of the Provisional Committee,[†3] and that I highly esteem it.

But I cannot honestly pretend that I am sanguine as to the result of this movement. I have a strong misgiving that the response may not be such as will enable its promoters to achieve a great national success. And any thing falling short of a great national success, I should consider a failure.

My misgiving is founded on the part I have, as an individual, in the general experience of Englishmen as to such public tributes.

Exactly as I prize the confidence and good opinion of my brother-artists, I hold myself bound to be plain with them in such a case. The President of the Permanent Committee should, I submit to them through you, be more hopeful than I am of the result of the Committee's labours.

I am My Dear Sir | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

J. Stirling Coyne Esquire

To JOSEPH ELLIS,[†1] 4 JULY 1863*

MS Bodleian Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Fourth July. 1863.

Dear Mr. Ellis

I think it very possible that you may know of something I want to find. And in any case I feel sure that you will not mind my troubling you.

All my boys have been at large schools, from Eton downward. But my youngest boy,[†2] now about 12, does not take to a large school. He is a good amiable boy, and sufficiently clever, but, in consequence of having passed his childhood at home among grown people, he finds himself confused and troubled in a great boy-crowd. He entreats me to place him somewhere where there are six or a dozen pupils, and where he could remain when he grew older and more advanced.

It is immensely difficult to find a good and kind Master who confines his attention to a few pupils, and receives them in his own home. Do you happen to know of any such gentleman—a clergyman or otherwise—at Brighton? You know, I have no doubt, what kind of education I seek for my boy;—that I want him to be well taught, but not worn out or over-crammed, and to be trained in the spirit of the Time.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To PERCY FITZGERALD,[†3] 4 JULY 1863

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Night Fourth July, 1863.

My Dear Mr. Fitzgerald

I have been most heartily gratified by the perusal of your article[†4] on my Dogs.[†5] It has given me an amount and a kind of pleasure, very unusual, and for which I thank you earnestly. The owner of the renowned Dog Caesar[†5] understands me so sympathetically, that I trust with perfect confidence to his feeling what I really mean in these few words.

You interest me very much by your kind promise—the redemption of which I hereby claim—to send me your life of Sterne when it comes out.[†1] If you should be in England before then, I should be delighted to see you here on the top of Falstaff's own Gad's Hill. It is a very pretty country, not thirty miles from London; and if you could spare a day or two for its fine walks, I and my two latest Dogs—a St. Bernard and a Bloodhound—would be charmed to have your company as one of ourselves.

Believe me | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Percy Fitzgerald Esquire

To MR INGRAM,[†2] 4 JULY 1863*

Text from typescript, Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Fourth July. 1863

Mr Charles Dickens begs to inform his young correspondent, Mr Ingram, that it is very difficult for him to keep pace with his unknown correspondents, and that [it][†3] is quite impossible to answer their letters.

He will readily subscribe for 3 copies of the little book;[†4] but he can only give his initials for insertion in the list of subscribers.

He never had any knowledge of any Mr Warden.[†5]

To WYNDHAM SMITH,[†6] 5 JULY 1863*

MS Private.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Fifth July, 1863.

My Dear Wyndham Smith.

I have this morning found the passage you wanted. It is in No. 67 of All The Year Round, for Saturday the 4th. of August, 1860; in the first part of a story of mine, called "Hunted Down". After I left you in the Park the other day, I recalled the exact words of the text, but could not remember where I had written them. Here is the quotation.

"I have known a vast quantity of nonsense talked about bad men not looking you in the face. Don't trust that conventional idea. Dishonesty will stare honesty out of countenance any day in the week, if there is any thing to be got by it."[†1]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To HENRY BATHURST, 6 JULY 1863

Summary in Committee of Management Minutes, 21 July 63 (MS Hospital for Sick Children); dated Gad's Hill Place, 6 July 63 in Maggs Bros catalogue No. 486 (Dec 1926); addressed H. A. Bathurst.

Recommending a direct approach to Bulwer Lytton, inviting him to take the chair at the next Annual Festival and authorizing the use of his name.

To CAPTAIN E.E. MORGAN, 6 JULY 1863†

MS Dr and Mrs Philip Rulon and Family. Address: By Post Office Steamer. | Captain Morgan | New York | U.S. of America.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Sixth July, 1863.

My Dear Friend.

The Traveller having returned (and gone into training for a competitive Fight for the Foreign office,[†2] which is to come off about the middle of the month), I write to thank you for your great kindness and friendship. [†a]I have already told your son Will what I am very well assured of concerning the cheque;[†3] but you are such a noble fellow, that I must not pursue that subject. But you will at least take my cordial and affectionate thanks.[†4]

We have a touch of most beautiful weather here, and this country is most beautiful too. I wish I could carry you off to a favorite spot of mine, between this and Maidstone, where I often smoke your cigars and think of you. We often take our lunch on a hill-side there, in the summer, and then I lie down on the grass— a splendid example of laziness—and say "Now for my Morgan!" My daughter and her Aunt pretend that they know the true scent of the true article (which I don't in the least believe), and sometimes they exclaim "That's not a Morgan!"[†5] And the worst of it is, they were once right—by accident.[†a]

All English eyes are turned in your direction, and all English hearts wish— disinterestedly, I believe—that the War were over. As to reading, when the days of Peace come? Well! I have had ambassadors, well backed with money, from Australia.[†1] But I couldn't make up my mind to go.

All my house unite in love and regard to all yours, and I am Ever

My Dear Morgan | Your affectionate friend

CHARLES DICKENS

To W. F. A. WILSON,[†2] 9 JULY 1863

Extract in Scheuer catalogue No. 3 (1927); MS 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill Place, 9 July 63; addressed W.F.A. Wilson.

I beg to thank you for your very obliging letter ... and to assure you that I highly appreciate the advantage my son[†3] has in your experience and guidance.

To MRS DAVIS,[†4] 10 JULY 1863

MS University College, London.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Tenth July, 1863.

Dear Madam.

I hope you will excuse this tardy reply to your letter.[†5] It is often impossible for me by any means to keep pace with my correspondents.

I must take leave to say that if there be any general feeling on the part of the intelligent Jewish people, that I have done them what you describe as "a great wrong",[†6] they are a far less sensible, a far less just, and a far less good tempered, people than I have always supposed them to be. Fagin in Oliver Twist is a Jew, because it unfortunately was true of the time to which that story refers, that that class of criminal almost invariably was a Jew. But surely no sensible man or woman of your persuasion can fail to observe—firstly, that all the rest of the wicked dramatis personae are Christians; and secondly, that he is called "The Jew", not because of his religion, but because of his race. If I were to write a story, in which I pursued a Frenchman or a Spaniard as "The Roman Catholic", I should do a very indecent and unjustifiable thing but I make mention of Fagin as the Jew, because he is one of the Jewish people, and because it conveys that kind of idea of him, which I should give my readers of a Chinaman by calling him a Chinese.

The enclosed is quite a nominal subscription towards the good object in which you are interested,[†1] but I hope it may serve to shew you that I have no feeling towards the Jewish people but a friendly one. I always speak well of them, whether in public, or in private, and bear my testimony (as I ought to do) to their perfect good faith in such transactions as I have ever had with them. And in my "Child's History of England", I have lost no opportunity of setting forth their cruel persecution in old times.[†2] Dear Madam

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS[†3]

Mrs. Davis.

To JOSEPH ELLIS, 10 JULY 1863*

MS Bodleian Library. Address: Private | Mr. Joseph Ellis | The Bedford Hotel | Brighton.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Tenth July, 1863.

Dear Mr. Ellis.

I assure you I am truly obliged to you for your letter. Would you have the kindness to ascertain for me what kind of domestic arrangements there are in Mr. Rickards's[†4] establishment, and what his terms are? Those of Mr. Allen,[†5] possibly you already know. If I had the opportunity of balancing the one against the other in my mind, I might be greatly helped to a conclusion.

Your enclosure is a very earnest and pathetic tribute to a good man.[†6]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To W. C. MACREADY, 10 JULY 1863*

MS Morgan Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Tenth July, 1863.

My Dearest Macready

I am truly rejoiced to have so good an account of you, on your own indisputable authority. And we are all delighted at the prospect of having you and Mrs. Macready here. We have no pre-occupation or engagement anywhere near the time you mention.

You know, I dare say, that Katie has been here on a very short visit. I cannot tell you how impressed I have been by her singing. For true passion and earnestness, and for musical eloquence and expression, it is very fine indeed. It quite vanquished me.

With love from all to all, | Ever Your affectionate

CD.

To RICHARD MONCKTON MILNES,[†1] 10 JULY 1863*

MS Trinity College, Cambridge.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Tenth July 1863.

My Dear Milnes

Your letter has crossed me, and it only reaches me here to day.

I am happy to report myself all right again, but the doctorial Edict against London dinners and London temperature remains in force. Therefore, even though I had had your letter sooner, I could not have enjoyed the pleasure it offers me.

Pray present my compliments to Mrs Milnes.

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

R.M. Milnes Esquire

To F. J. FURNIVALL,[†1] 11 JULY 1863*

MS Shakespeare Birthplace Trust. Address: F.J. Furnivall Esquire | 3 Old Square | Lincolns Inn | W.C.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Eleventh July, 1863.

Sir

I regret that I cannot sign the accompanying Memorial;[†2] but as I have already presented several other cases to the Minister, which are still in abeyance, I feel that it would be at once inconsistent and useless to do so.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

F. J. Furnivall Esquire

To W. HEPWORTH DIXON, 16 JULY 1863*

MS Rosenbach Museum and Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Sixteenth July, 1863.

My Dear Dixon

I am honored by the request,[†3] and readily respond. I doubt if the success of the endeavour will be commensurate with the greatness of the cause, but this is merely a personal opinion in which I shall be most heartily glad to be wrong.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. Hepworth Dixon Esquire

To E. HANCOCK,[†4] 16 JULY 1863

Summary in American Art Association & Anderson cataogue, No. 3823; dated 16 July 63; extract in Scheuer catalogue No. 5, 1929; dated (perhaps wrongly) 11 July 63; MS 1 p.; addressed E. Hancock, according to both catalogues.

Assuring Mr Hancock and the members of the Society[†5] represented by him that he has never entertained any opposition to their proposed use of his text. I must decline committing the absurdity of granting a "permission" which has been already dispensed with.

To MRS HENRY AUSTIN, 18 JULY 1863*

MS Morgan Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Saturday Eighteenth July 1863.

My Dear Letitia. Georgina did speak to me; and I have, over and over again since then, considered the subject.

My feeling is not to be binding upon you, and I do not mean it to be so. But I cannot think it would be safe for you to enter on the speculation of a house. As to the Wills's—Georgina suggested them as a possibility; but it is not a probability. At this time for instance, they have no idea of any young men who would answer the purpose.[†1] And I doubt your being able to get the class of young men that would be remunerative.

Of course it is natural that you should wish to increase your income; but if you enter upon a speculation, there is also the chance of *de*creasing it. Whether you are not safer as you are, with one boarder and no expence that you do not foresee and have not experienced, than you would be with a certain addition to your responsibilities, and a doubtful addition to your means of meeting them, is the point I stick at.

Perhaps in looking about for a new residence, you may see something which, at a small risk, would enable you to receive a new boarder if you could get one. Let us try how your search comes out.

Ever affectionately
CD.

To FREDERIC LEIGHTON, 18 JULY 1863

Text from facsimile in Phillips catalogue, Oct 1985.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Eighteenth July, 1863.

My Dear Leighton.

Shall I confess it? I never went out to breakfast in my life, except once to Rogers.[†2] But what I might have done under this temptation is a question forestalled by my having engaged to go down to Bulwer Lytton's in Hertfordshire on Monday, to stay a few days.

Cordially Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Fred. Leighton Esquire

To EDWIN CHADWICK, 24 JULY 1863*

MS University College, London.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Twenty Fourth July 1863

My Dear Chadwick

I have been on a visit in Hertfordshire, and have therefore not received your kind letter[†1] in due course.

It seems to me that it is best to leave the news boys to be addressed by the Cooking Depots, in common with all the other classes of London working people who need them. So far as I know, the news boys' case is no worse than the general case; and to take it out of the great category, would be in some sort to weaken the Cookery cause. When I was at the Whitechapel Establishment[†2] some ten days ago, its Managers had a notion of forming a company to buy St Martin's Hall (in Long Acre here) for another Cooking Depot.[†3] In such a situation it would address the news men, whose Exchange is hard by, at a great advantage. And I think they ought to find out the merit of the thing—as I think they will find out the merit of the thing—for themselves.

I hope you will not deem that I misuse your cheque, in cancelling it for the present. I am President of the News Vendors' Society;[†4] and when I find that there is one of these establishments in a central place, I will send for the Secretary, and speak to him as to the expediency of helping to make it known to this particular class. (You are mistaken in supposing that I am going to preside at any meeting of their Society). Then, if I see any hopeful way of advancing the object by spending your guinea, I will reclaim it, and add mine.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Edwin Chadwick Esquire

To LADY ROSE FANE,[†5] 24 JULY 1863†

MS Dickens House.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Friday Twenty Fourth July, 1863.

Dear Lady Rose.

Pray excuse this tardy reply to your note. I have been away on a visit and am in arrear with a Legion of correspondents.

I hope I need not assure you that [†a]it would have been a real pleasure to me to have voted for your Protegé,[†1] if I were free. But I unfortunately stand pledged to Fanny Kemble, who is exerting herself in behalf of another unfortunate person;[†2] —that is to say a third, counting myself as one, your candidate as another, and hers as another.[†a]

It is terrible to observe what an interminable procession of incurable people want to get into this Hospital. [†a]I sometimes feel (unreasonably) as though it did more harm than good, in disappointing so many and sheltering so few.[†a†3]

My daughter and Miss Hogarth beg to unite with me in kind regard to yourself and to Lady Westmoreland.[†4] And I beg you to believe me

always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The | Lady Rose Fane.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT,[†5] 24 JULY 1863*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Twenty Fourth July, 1863.

Dear Sir

I beg to thank you for the Photographs of distinguished Americans which you have had the kindness to present to me. They are very interesting and acceptable.

But I regret that I cannot comply with the request you do me the honour to prefer; because my sitting to Messrs. Southwell[†6] would involve me in the fulfilment of several conditional[†7] promises, for the redemption of which I really have not sufficient leisure.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS NICHOLS, 25 JULY 1863

Text from N, III, 357-8.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Saturday, Twenty-Fifth July, 1863

My Dear Madam,

As I announced the Trip in the Unholy Land "in two parts,"[†1] and as the enclosed MS. resumes it and would be inconsistent with that announcement, I cannot have the pleasure of accepting the papers.[†2]

For any long story continued from No. to No. there is no opening at present in these pages. You will the better understand the assurance I give you on this head when I explain that we have four such compositions already by us. The subject of the story you suggest, moreover, is a very, very deficient one. In connection with it many things need to be known and treated of, which would demand unusual powers. The Orders and Disorders of Charity is a title suggestive of a very useful paper on a very fruitful subject. But it would require a pretty accurate knowledge of the working of our English Charitable Institutions, and of the faults in that working. As to the Sisterhood of St. Vincent de Paul[†3] it is essential to remember that a sisterhood is easy of establishment in a Roman Catholic community, and far less easy in a Protestant community. As to the latter, the difficulties in the way of that kind of combination must be set against the blessings of civil and religious liberty, and of the Reformation.

I repeat from my heart what you write of your country. "It is all very awful to me." I wish I could discern through the whirl and uproar any tokens of that Purification by blood and fire, but I confess I see none.

Dear Madam, | Faithfully yours.
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To W. C. MACREADY, 28 JULY 1863*

MS Morgan Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Twenty Eighth July, 1863.

My Dearest Macready

I hope Weston super Mare[†4] has done all it ought to do—its very best—and that my beloved Old Parr is himself again.

I want you to know, as soon as I know myself, that on Monday the 17th. Of August I am probably going away on an "Uncommercial" trip that will occupy ten days or a fortnight.[†5] But, both before that time and after that time, I am perfectly free here. We are looking forward (you will please take notice) to a visit from Mrs. Macready and yourself, with great interest and pleasure. It is not unlikely that you may see here, that banker's wife at Genoa[†1] whom I magnetized long ago with those very curious results of which you may remember something. She is coming to England with her husband,[†2] after many years of absence. Her case is a far more remarkable case of spectral illusions than the Berlin bookseller's.[†3] She is "a ruin now", she writes; and even her handwriting I observe to be quite worn out.

With kind loves from all | Ever your affectionate
CHARLES DICKENS

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 29 JULY 1863

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,

HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Night Twenty Ninth July 1863

My Dear Ouvry

I have had some undefined idea that you were to let me know if you were coming to the Archaeologs at Rochester.[†4] (I myself am keeping out of their way, as having had enough of crowding and speech-making, in London). Will you tell me where you are—whether you are in this neighbourhood or out of it— whether you will come here on Saturday, and stay till Monday, or till Tuesday morning when I am going to town for that day? If you will come, I know I can give you the heartiest welcome in Kent, and I think I can give you the best wine in this part of it. Send me a word in reply. I will fetch you from anywhere, at any indicated time.[†5]

Faithfully Yours ever
CHARLES DICKENS

August

To J. S. LAURIE,[†6] 1 AUGUST 1863

Mention in American Art Association and Anderson catalogue No. 3941; MS 1 p.; dated 1 Aug 63; addressed J. S. Laurie.

To W. W. STORY,[†1] 1 AUGUST 1863*

MS Berg Collection.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday First August, 1863.

My Dear Mr. Story.

I have been heartily pleased by the receipt of your letter. You have done too many fine things since we met in the body, to leave me much likelihood of forgetting you; and I am very glad to know that the remembrance is not all on one side, like the Pisa Tower.

[†a]The poems you enclosed shall duly appear in All The Year Round,[†2] and Nos. shall be posted to you. I am a little doubtful of Lady Harris,[†3] but I very much like the others.[†a]

You owe me no thanks, I assure you, for publishing the little account of your book.[†4] I have read it with the greatest interest and pleasure, and have seen the old places that I know and love, with surprising freshness on them.

[†a]France will involve us, I very much fear, in general War and Uproar. The adventurer on that Throne has no chance but in the distraction of his people's minds, and in the jingle and glitter of theatrical glory.[†5] The deference to him that has been the low policy of the English Government, is, to my thinking, as blind as it is base;—I can't express its want of sight more strongly.[†a]

We are in the golden beauty of an early harvest here, and the fields are full of corn-sheaves. I shut my eyes for a moment and stand in front of your zebra-like Siena Cathedral,[†6] and it is almost as plainly before me as this English landscape. I never was in a settled City, where I saw so many wild faces and so many surlily-staring eyes as in Siena. I suppose they are there still? Such a draggled woe-begone muddy little Carnival as I saw there once at nightfall![†7]

Italy is an abiding dream with me, as it is with most people who have been there and come away. Visions of going back and living there, beset me at odd times and make me restless. You truly say of that abominable old priestly institution, that it is making itself more detestable every day, but you don't say when it will wear itself out, and wear out the endurance of mankind. Lord! To think that any human creature should seek out this time of day to set up the tottering monster in England here![†1] Yet there are politicians wanting despotism, and idiots wanting a sensation, who would do it if they could.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. W. Story Esqre.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 1 AUGUST 1863

Mention in Naylor's catalogue, No. 32 (1877); MS 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill Place, 1 Aug 63.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 3 AUGUST 1863

Mention in John Anderson Jun. catalogue (Jan 1912); dated Gad's Hill Place, 3 Aug 63.

Regarding an Orphan Working School.[†2]

To MRS NICHOLS, 5 AUGUST 1863

MS Johns Hopkins University.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Fifth August. 1863

Dear Madam

While I heartily sympathize with your feeling and purpose, I cannot accept "Nobody's child",—simply because the Essay only says what has been often said, and does not strengthen the case by putting it in any forcible light. In one main respect you are wrong as to fact. Foundling children must be taken care of by the Poor Law Unions in which they are born or found. Long ago, I tried hard to improve the treatment and bringing-up of such children, by enlisting more public sympathy in their behalf. The years that have since elapsed have been years of much improvement in this wise. As to the Foundling Hospital, the extent to which it was once abused, was held to necessitate the present restrictions.[†3] They may be right or wrong, but there was a case for them, and it is a question for argument.

That too many women are dreadfully cruel to their sister-women who have illegitimate children, is painfully true. But I presented this very point in an early Number of the present series of the Uncommercial Traveller,[†1] and then by no means for the first time.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Nichols

To MRS CHARLES DICKENS, 6 AUGUST 1863

MS British Library. Address: Mrs Charles Dickens | 69 Great Russell Street | W.C.[†2]

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Sixth August, 1863.

Dear Catherine

When I went to America (or to Italy: I cannot positively say which, but I think on the former occasion) I gave your mother the paper which established the right in perpetuity to the grave at Kensal Green. It was a sheet of small foolscap-paper, with a printed form of words on it, filled up in writing; and had a large black seal attached. Whether I executed any formal assignment of the grave to your mother, I do not remember. In any case the enclosed letter will be an authority to the manager of the Kensal Green Cemetery Company, to open the grave.[†3] The Company's office used to be in Great Russell Street Bloomsbury.

CHARLES DICKENS.

To WILKIE COLLINS, 9 AUGUST 1863

MS Morgan Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Ninth August, 1863.

My Dear Wilkie

Although your account of yourself is not so brilliant as I had hoped you might be able to render by this time, I rejoice to hear from you to any effect. I had divined that you had discovered a yacht and gone on a cruise, and did not wonder at your going as soon as you could. Your plan for the Winter is the best you could make, I think. I hope nothing will prevent your coming here, as you propose, for a little while, before you depart.

It is extremely hot here: so very hot today that I retired to my bedroom (from which I write) after lunch, and reduced myself to my shirt and drawers. In that elegant costume, I achieve the present feat of penmanship. The De la Rues, of Genoa, are coming to England; I expect them here for 3 days this next week. Lehmann (on his faith as a War-Contractor, I take it) informed me when he came back from America, that I laboured under the strangest delusion in holding that an enforced conscription would not succeed in New York! Flat Head (by which I mean Benzon[†1] his partner) gave me the same piece of information at Knebworth, on the very day when the news of the riots arrived!![†2] I still took the liberty to suppose that I knew something of the people, and still do take that high flight of daring when I opine that they are the greatest and the meanest of scoundrels. But Lord, as Mr Pepys says, to see what making a fine profit does!

The "Gazette"[†3] does not mention Whist in its sporting Columns, but Whist on a most extensive scale of Science comes off here most nights. Chorley[†4] plays, and scientifically bores himself to an astounding extent. He seems in better health by the bye than I have seen him for some time. I had a mission to him, and to you, from Mrs Dickinson. I have discharged it as to him, and now let me acquit my conscience as to you. She is extremely anxious you should know that profound confidence as to that adventure with the Doctor[†5] has become more than ever necessary, by reason of her having established the fact that the marriage (as no doubt he very well knew at the time) is no marriage and is utterly void.[†6] My own impression is, that she contemplates a real marriage with somebody else, at no distant time.[†7]

I am always thinking of writing a long book, and am never beginning to do it. I have not been anywhere for ever and ever so long, but am thinking of evaporating for a fortnight on the 18th. This place is at present pervaded by boys to a fearful extent. They boil over (if an affectionate parent may mention it), all over the house.

The Demon[†8] is lurking on the premises, and was overheard to day playing with "Tizzy" in the garden. She was by way of counterfeiting a little pastoral errand, and her words were these:—"Now gal, you set down there with yer, while I go and get the beetles to bite yer"—on which friendly errand she departed to an imaginary Diabolical market, where biting beetles were on sale for the torture of youth and innocence. I have discovered a way of eternally preventing her from speaking to or approaching me. Whenever we meet, I am seized with a stoney glare and apparent unconsciousness. She flies before it.

All send love. Ever My Dear Wilkie

Affecy Yours

CD.

To MR NEWCOMB,[†1] 17 AUGUST 1863

MS F. & H. Newcomb.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Seventeenth August, 1863

Mr. Newcomb

Be so good as to supply two great coats, agreeably to directions, for my sons Messrs. Henry and Edward.

†a I take this opportunity of establishing with you my invariable rule of writing an order when I do not myself personally give one. Please to notice that I do not authorize or hold myself responsible for any other orders.†a

CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [20 AUGUST 1863]

Extract in F, VIII, v, 675*n*. Date: 20 Aug 63, according to Forster (i.e. written from France).

I hope you have been as much amused as I am by the account of the Bishop of Carlisle†2 at (my very particular friend) Mr. George Moore's†3 schools?†4 It strikes me as the funniest piece of weakness I ever saw, his addressing those unfortunate children concerning Colenso.†5 I cannot get over the ridiculous image I have erected in my mind of the shovel hat and apron holding forth, at that safe distance, to that safe audience. There is nothing so extravagant in Rabelais, or so satirically humorous in Swift or Voltaire.

To BENJAMIN LILLIE,†1 29 AUGUST 1863

MS Vale University Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Night, Twenty Ninth August 1863.

Dr. Mr. Lillie.

I wish to consult you respecting an alteration I have an idea of making in the Drawing-Rooms here.†2 If it should turn out to be easily practicable and not too costly, I should confide it to you, as it would involve some re-decoration of those rooms, and your former work was so very pretty.†3

It would be necessary for you to come down, and perhaps to bring a builder with you. But I should first like to explain to you what I mean. If you can come to me at my office in Wellington Street, either on Tuesday, Wednesday, or Thursday morning at a quarter before eleven, I will make my design plain to your understanding.

Yours truly
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [30 AUGUST 1863]

Extracts in F, IX, v, 741 and XI, iii, 837. Date: first extract, 30 Aug 63, according to Forster; second extract "in his third year at Gadshill", according to Forster; i.e. three years after his resolve in Summer to "to make his future home at Gadshill" (F, VIII, vi, 686); perhaps the same letter.

The Christmas number[†4] has come round again—it seems only yesterday that I did the last—but I am full of notions besides for the new twenty numbers.[†5] When I can clear the Christmas stone out of the road, I think I can dash into it on the grander journey.

Coming in just now, after twelve miles in the rain, I was so wet that I have had to change and get my feet into warm water before I could do anything.

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 31 AUGUST 1863*

MS Hungtington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Monday Thirty First August, 1863.

My Dear Ouvry.

I find your letter on coming back from a fortnight's Uncommercial Travelling abroad.[†6]

I have seen the plot of ground.[†1] I went down on purpose, accompanied by the architect and by Wills. There is no doubt of its being an excellent soil, in a highly eligible situation, on the high road, near the village, hard by the Railway, and very pretty. I am not prepared to deny that it may be the Ghost of an Endowment (in honor, perhaps, of the memory of the Dead Boy),[†2] but, so far as it goes, it is good.

I shall be in town tomorrow and on Thursday, and will come round to you if you wish to see me.

Faithfully Yours Ever
CD.

September

To R. H. MASON,[†3] 1 SEPTEMBER, 1863

Text from N, III, 361; signed initials according to John Wilson catalogue No. 18 (1974).

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday First September 1863

Dear Sir,

Higham is the station. I will send a little Basket Phaeton to meet you there, at 11.20 on Saturday morning.[†4]

Faithfully yours.

[CD]

To CHARLES ELLIS,[†5] 4 SEPTEMBER 1863

Text from N, III, 361.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Fourth September 1863

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Ellis, and begs to bespeak at the Star and Garter, a pretty dinner (like Mr. Forster's annual dinner), for 6 persons, on Tuesday next, at precisely 6 o'clock.

To W. C. MACREADY, 7 SEPTEMBER 1863*

MS Morgan Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Seventh September 1863.

My Dearest Macready.

I have no doubt it is best that you should remain at home for the present. Another reason for your doing so, had occurred to me before I got your letter:— London is remarkably empty at present, and I do not think you would find the doctors in it whom you meant to see. But in the finer Autumn weather I shall hope to hear of you again, and we shall all hope to see Mrs. Macready with you here. This I am charged to deliver in the most emphatic manner and with all regard and love.

I now come to the discharge of a trust I have undertaken. I cannot do better than discharge it with the utmost exactness of my memory, and with no other remark than that I will do any thing you may wish:—

Except this preliminary remark, which perhaps I ought to make. It must be upwards of a year since Forster one day (being in my room here alone with me) referred to the estrangement between you,[†1] and got to the words "If I was wrong"—Upon that, I immediately struck in, "There is no doubt about it in my mind. You were wrong." I am conscious of having said this abruptly, and I may have stopped him (indeed I think I did, without intending it), from saying more.

Well. Last Thursday I dined with Forster after not having seen him for some time, through his being away, and my being away. After dinner, we two being alone, he suddenly asked me how you were, and when I had heard from you? On my replying, he said, in a softened manner, that we were all growing older, and that it made him uneasy to think of the terms on which you and he stood. He then added, "I should like Macready to know that I believe I was wrong, and that I am sorry for it." I said, "I at once undertake that Macready shall know what you say. I will tell him." He then repeated what he had said, as above set down, and I repeated what I had said. He spoke with emotion, and feeling, and evidently on no impulse, but in pursuance of a set purpose.

If you will fill this up, in your mind, with a picture of the dining room in Montagu Square, and he and I sitting opposite each other at the table, you will have a perfect knowledge of the circumstances. I then described my visit to Cheltenham, and said that I was expecting you and Mrs. Macready here, and told about your having gone to Weston, and why, and summed up all the little pieces of intelligence I could give of you.

Ever My Dearest Macready | Most affectionately Yours

CD.

To CONTRIBUTORS TO ALL THE YEAR ROUND, 8 SEPTEMBER 1863*

MS (draft) Huntington Library.

10 Septr 1863[†1]
23 copies——

My Dear

The time has come round again when we have to begin the work of getting our Christmas No.[†2] together. Mr. Dickens's[†3] description of the latitude it admits of—in inviting your co-operation—is a very short one this year.

The tales may be in the first person or in the third, and may relate to any season or period. They may be supposed to be told to an audience, or to the reader, or to be penned by the Writer without knowing how they will come to light. How they come to be told at all, does not require to be accounted for. If they could express some new resolution formed—some departure from an old idea or course that was not quite wholesome—it might be better for the general purpose. But even this is not indispensable.

It is of great importance that we should get the materials of the No. together, by Wednesday the 4th. of November.[†4]

Ever faithfully Yrs
8th. Septr 1863

To EDWARD CHAPMAN,[†5] 8 SEPTEMBER 1863†

MS David Niven Jnr. Address: Edward Chapman | 186 Strand.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Eighth September 1863

Dear Sir

†aI have looked over the accounts to Midsummer.†6 The reprints of the cheap Edition are certainly very heavy indeed, but I hope they will tell greatly in favor of the next half year's account.†7

The charge of £92..8..0 for the Illustrations to the unpublished Library Edition of Great Expectations had best stand as it does.†a†8 The cost being paid, will also serve the next account.

Please to pay the balance of £464..7..11 to my credit at Coutts's.†9

To MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL, 8 SEPTEMBER 1863*

MS Morgan Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Eighth September 1863

My Dear Sirs.

In reference to a new work in 20 monthly Nos. as of old, I have carefully considered past figures and future reasonable probabilities. You have the means of doing the like in the main, and no doubt will do so before replying to this letter.

I propose to you to pay me £6000 for the half copyright throughout and outright, at the times mentioned in your last letter to me on the subject. For that consideration I am ready to enter into articles of agreement with you securing to you the publication of the work when I shall be ready to begin publishing, and the half share.†1

As I must be rid of the Xmas No. here and of the Uncommercial Traveller before I can begin work to any great purpose, and as I must be well on before the first No. is published, I can not bind myself to time of commencement as yet. But I am really anxious to get into the field before next Spring is out; and our interests cannot fail to be alike as to all such points, if we become partners in the story.

Of course you will understand that I do not press you to give the sum I have here mentioned, and that you will not in the least inconvenience or offend me by preferring to leave me to make other arrangements. If you should have any misgiving on this head, let my assurance that you need have none, set it at rest.†2 Messrs. Chapman and Hall.

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 9 SEPTEMBER 1863*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Ninth September 1863.

My Dear Ouvry

The enclosed to the Chancellor of the Exchequer on account of Income Tax due tomorrow,[†3] and forwarded (extremely against his will) by

C.D.[†4]

To FREDERIC CHAPMAN, 13 SEPTEMBER 1863

Extract in J. H. Schooling, "The Signatures of CD", Strand Magazine, 1894, VII, 87.

But if there was any appearance of a want of gentleness towards you or of the least asperity, you may be certain that it was an appearance which I did not intend it to wear.[†1]

To EMILE DE LA RUE, 13 SEPTEMBER 1863*

MS Berg Collection.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Thirteenth September 1863.

My Dear De la Rue.

Don't come to see Chatham Yard until after Thursday. My mother, who has long been in a terrible state of decay, died yesterday; and I have to look after the funeral, which will take place on Thursday.[†2]

Friday would suit me very well. Remember that Saturday is a half-holiday at the Yard, and therefore not a good day for a visit to it.

With love to Madame De la Rue in which Georgy joins,

Ever Yours Cordially,
CHARLES DICKENS

To R. H. MASON, 14 SEPTEMBER 1863

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds. Address: R. H. Mason Esquire | 7 Amen Corner | E.C.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Monday Fourteenth September 1863.

Dear Sir

The photographs you have had the kindness to send me are extremely good. I am unwilling to except any, but I think it would be well to cancel Nos. 790, 807, 810 and 811. With the rest I am perfectly satisfied and I have real pleasure in giving you this assurance.[†3]

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

R. H. Mason Esquire

To W. H. WILLS, 14 SEPTEMBER 1863

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Fourteenth September 1863.

My Dear Wills.

As I am sending over to Rochester tonight, and as I got your note before dinner, and as you will perhaps be glad to have a line from me, and as the local post will probably let you have it in the course of a week or so, I send these lines:

To report that Charley Collins sends assurance of his Mechanical Horse[†1] arriving in a hand-gallop, and that I jobbed up an Uncommercial[†2] and sent Revise to Birtles to day per messenger, and that I have begun at the Xmas No., and that the title is:

——I am going to do Mrs. Lirriper, and hope to make something of her. I think the title is a good one?

Kind regard to Mrs. Wills.

Ever affecly.

CD.

My poor mother died quite suddenly at last. Her condition was frightful.

To W. C. MACREADY, 16 SEPTEMBER 1863

Extract in Charles Hamilton Galleries catalogue No. 92 (1975); MS 1 ½ pp.; dated Office of AYR, 16 Sep 63.

My answer to your last has been delayed by my note finding Forster, and by the death of my mother, who has been in a fearful state, mental and bodily for two or three years and whose funeral—tomorrow—I have come to town to attend, to-night. Discussing a note from Forster, from which he quotes extensively, about a matter involving Macready.[†3]

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 16 SEPTEMBER 1863*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Evening Sixteenth September 1863

My Dear Ouvry.

Will you be so kind as to send me a formal notice of my intention to vacate the premises[†1] referred to in the enclosed agreement, that I may sign and send to the Landlord?[†2] They have been occupied by my mother who is just dead.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Frederic Ouvry Esquire

To R. H. MASON, 19 SEPTEMBER 1863

MS Brotherton Library. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Saturday Night, Nineteenth September 1863.

Dear Sir

I like grim 812 and 813 less than 810 and 811.[†3] If it should put you to inconvenience to cancel so many as four, then I prefer the last named two to the first named two.

We are all very much pleased with Miss Hogarth's portrait.[†4]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

R. H. Mason Esquire

To MRS HENRY AUSTIN, 20 SEPTEMBER 1863*

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Twentieth September 1863.

My Dear Letitia.

I am heartily glad that you feel the change so pleasantly, and do not doubt that you will continue much the better for it, Please God.

Affectionately
CD.

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 20 SEPTEMBER 1863*

MS Huntington Library. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Twentieth September 1863.

My Dear Ouvry

I write by this post to them at the office, telling them to send you the Landlord's address.[†1] I shall be very glad if you will negociate with the Landlord for terms on which he will release me of the house at Xmas or Lady Day. He is rather a tough customer, I believe, but I never saw him.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Frederic Ouvry Esquire

To EMILE DE LA RUE, 22 SEPTEMBER 1863*

MS Berg Collection. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Night Twenty Second September 1863.

My Dear De la Rue.

Many thanks. I will be with you at halfpast 12 on Thursday, and look for the pleasure of seeing Madame De la Rue and you and Chorley here on Friday. Meantime and always

Believe me | Affecy. Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS NICHOLS, 23 SEPTEMBER 1863

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Twenty Third September 1863

Dear Madam

I am most sincerely sorry that I cannot make the accompanying tale suit the purpose. But I hope you believe that I would do so, if I could.

Some photographs are being printed which I think will be much better than any now to be got.[†2] I will send you a couple as soon as impressions reach me.

When you write to those correspondents pray tell them that I deeply feel their sympathy,[†3] and hope to do all the better for it in the work that lies before me.

Dear Madam | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Nichols

To EDMUND YATES, [23 SEPTEMBER 1863][†1]

Envelope only, MS Mr Philip McCormick. Address: Edmund Yates Esquire | Mapesbury House | Willesden | N. W. PM 23 Sep 63.

To WILKIE COLLINS, 24 SEPTEMBER 1863

MS Morgan Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Twenty Fourth September 1863

My Dear Wilkie.

I hope the abominable Gout, having shewn itself in time, will not detain you in this climate long. It is beyond all doubt in my mind that the best thing you can do is to get off.

The Girders[†2] were both got up by 8 o'Clock at night. It was ticklish work, 9 men gasping, snuffling, heaving, snorting, balancing themselves on bricks, and tumbling over each other. But it really was well done and with great cheerfulness and spirit—to which 3 gallons of beer judiciously thrown in, imparted a festive air.

Nothing has fallen down or blown up since. Yawning chasms abound, and dust obscures all objects; but we hope to weather it.

I shall be anxious to hear how the Gout gets on.

Ever affecy.
CD.

P.S. Two little men who did nothing made a show of doing it all, and drank 1 gallon of the beer.

To EMILE DE LA RUE, 24 SEPTEMBER 1863*

MS Berg Collection.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Twenty Fourth September 1863.

My Dear De la Rue.

Unfortunately I cannot come to you at the altered time this afternoon. But I do not think it is of much importance, if you will kindly undertake to speak to Mr. Sawyer[†3] about my youngest boy, aged 12, and to explain that he found Wimbledon School (where he and three of his brothers have been), too large for him, and that he has not felt happy at school as yet: having been longer at home than he ought to have been, as a companion to grown people. In saying this, I ought to observe that he has never been "spoiled", but has been the youngest and a favourite. He had an excellent character at Wimbledon and is an amiable child, but exceedingly shy.

If Mr. Sawyer should be disposed to receive my boy after the Christmas Holidays in the event (as I scarcely doubt) of he and I agreeing on the general system of his establishment, I would gladly go over to Tunbridge from Gad's Hill to see Mr. Sawyer.[†1] If there be any day in the week on which it would be less inconvenient to him than on another, to see me for ten minutes, perhaps he will kindly name it to you. I would make a point of calling upon him in the course of next month, or earlier if he should desire it.

With love to Madame De la Rue

Ever affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

I shall be on the look-out for you tomorrow.

To CHARLES ELLIS, 25 SEPTEMBER 1863*

MS Mr Jacob Christensen. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Twenty Fifth September 1863.

Dear Mr. Ellis

I enclose you a cheque for the Sherry.[†2] Pray tell me what we are to do. The cask (now tapped) seems quite rotten, and continually leaks.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS HENRY AUSTIN, 28 SEPTEMBER 1863*

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Twenty Eighth September 1863.

My Dear Letitia

I will come to you as early as I can on Wednesday Evening.

Ever affecy.

CD.

To MRS NICHOLS, 28 SEPTEMBER 1863

Text from N, III, 363.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday, Twenty-Eighth September, 1863

Dear Madam,

If you can make it convenient to call upon me at the office in London (26 Wellington Street), at 11 on Thursday morning, perhaps I may be able to answer your last letter less unsatisfactorily than in writing.

Faithfully Yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 30 SEPTEMBER 1863*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Thirtieth September 1863.

My Dear Ouvry.

I enclose you the heads of an Agreement I have arranged with Chapman and Hall.[†1] We want a Note or Memorandum drawn up which both sides can sign.[†2] And herein we trust to you.

That claret must be tapped before the book begins.

Faithfully Yours ever

CD.

To CHARLES READE, 30 SEPTEMBER 1863*

MS Robert H. Taylor Collection, Princeton University Library. Address: Charles Reade Esquire | 6 Bolton Row | W.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Thirtieth September 1863.

My Dear Reade.

I must write you one line to say how interested I am in your story,[†3] and to congratulate you upon its admirable art and its surprising force and vigour.

—And to hint my hope at the same time that you will be able to find leisure for a little dash for the Xmas No.[†1] It would be a really great and true pleasure to me if you could.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Reade Esquire

October

To H.G. ADAMS,[†2] 1 OCTOBER 1863

Text from N, III, 364.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday, First October 1863

Dear Mr. Adams,

In reply to your inquiry "whether Mr. Adolphus Francis[†3] is really acting under the authority of the committee"[†4] of which I am one of the Vice Presidents, I have only to say, certainly not.

You may take any day you like for my gratuitous Reading, between the 8th of December and Christmas.[†5]

I hope your boy will pass.[†6] If so, I have little doubt of being able to help him to a friend in the Post Office.[†7]

Faithfully yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To W. J. FARRER,[†8] 1 OCTOBER 1863*

MS Huntington Library.

Private[†9]

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday First October 1863

My Dear Sir

I had thought of the point you mention in your note of yesterday,[†10] but did not know what to do about it. In former similar agreements between Chapman and Hall and myself, it has not been recognized. Would it be well to refer it to them, and ask them if they have any suggestion to offer on that head?[†1]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

William James Farrer Esquire

To MISS CHARLOTTE [SMITH],[†2] 5 OCTOBER 1863*

MS Dickens House. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Monday Fifth October, 1863.

Dear Miss [Smith]

You did me the favor a long time ago to send me your book "The Schoolmaster of Alton".[†3] It is at all times so very difficult for me to keep pace with my correspondents, that I have gradually and insensibly neglected to thank you until this day.

As the work of a very young writer and a young lady, I think your book evinces a considerable knowledge of character and a promising talent. But I should do wrong if I forbore to add that inexperience and precipitation are manifest in it, and that I hope you will some day write a very much better story.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Charlotte [Smith]

To MESSRS FARRER, OUVRY & FARRER, 6 OCTOBER 1863*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Sixth October 1863.

Dear Sirs.

I think I cannot do better than pay Mr. Morris[†4] half a year's rent for the house in Grafton Terrace,[†4] and pay the taxes up to Lady Day if it should remain unlet (agreeably to his proposal), and give him possession at Christmas, or even before that time, if I can get my brother's widow[†4] and her children into Yorkshire sooner.

In reference to the land at Higham which I bought of Brooker, I wish to refer a point to Mr. Ouvry:—as I believe he is out of town, I mention it by this opportunity. Brooker, calling on me the other day to pay his rent, said that as he did not receive the cheque for the purchase-money until the 24th. March,[†1] "he hoped he would be allowed something out of the rent, for the loss of half a year's interest". I told him that I must refer the point to Mr. Ouvry who had managed the whole business, and that in the meantime he had best not pay me the rent but take it home again. So the case stands. My recollection of the details of the purchase is so indistinct that I do not even know, without Mr. Ouvry, whether I have come into possession yet or no. In any case, Brooker is so very much too pious for me that I am not fit to deal with him in the smallest matter.

Dear Sirs | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Farrer Ouvry and Farrer.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 7 OCTOBER 1863

MS Mr John Pym. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Seventh October, 1863.

My Dearest Georgy

You will see by to-day's Times that it was an earthquake that shook me,[†2] and that my watch showed exactly the same time as the man's who writes from Blackheath[†3] so near us—20 minutes past 3.

It is a great satisfaction to me to make it out so precisely. I wish you would enquire whether the Servants felt it. I thought it was the voice of the Cook that answered me, but that was nearly half an hour later. I am strongly inclined to think that there was a peculiar susceptibility in Iron—at all events in our part of the country—to the shock, as though there were something magnetic in it. For whereas my long, iron bedstead was so violently shaken, I certainly heard nothing rattle in the room.

I will write about my return as soon as I get on with the still-unbegun Uncommercial.[†4]

Ever affecy.
CD.

To THE EDITOR OF THE TIMES, 7 OCTOBER 1863

Text from The Times, 8 Oct 63.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
7 October 1863

Sir,

As you may think any accurate observation of the shock of earthquake which was felt in various parts of England last Tuesday morning worth publishing, I send you mine.

I was awakened by a violent swing of my bedstead from side to side, accompanied by a singular heaving motion. It was exactly as if some great beast had been crouching asleep under the bedstead and were now shaking itself and trying to rise. The time by my watch was 20 minutes past 3, and I suppose the shock to have lasted nearly a minute. The bedstead, a large iron one, standing nearly north and south, appeared to me to be the only piece of furniture in the room that was heavily shaken. Neither the doors nor the windows rattled, though they rattle enough in windy weather, this house standing alone, on high ground, in the neighbourhood of two great rivers. There was no noise. The air was very still, and much warmer than it had been in the earlier part of the night. Although the previous afternoon had been wet, the glass did not fall. I had mentioned my surprise at its standing near the letter "i" in "Fair", and having a tendency to rise. It is recorded in the second volume[†1] of the Philosophical Transactions that the glass stood high at Oxford when an earthquake was felt there in September, 1683.[†2]

Your faithful servant,
CHARLES DICKENS[†3]

To MR AND MRS E.M. WARD, [?7 OCTOBER 1863]

Extract in Mrs E.M. Ward, Memories of Ninety Years, (1924), p. 89. Date: clearly referring to the earthquake (see last); probably written the same day.

I was rudely awakened out of a sound sleep by the most violent shaking, and slowly realised that the whole house was swinging on the foundations. We were in the throes of an earthquake, and I found myself hurled into space, brought into contact with the floor, which, as if in expectation of the event, suddenly seemed to rise at my approach. Both floor and circumstances struck me as rather hard![†4]

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 10 OCTOBER 1863

Mention in Myers catalogue No. 366 (1951); MS 1 ½ pp.; dated 10 Oct 63.

Accepting an invitation.

To MRS COWDEN CLARKE, 12 OCTOBER 1863*

MS Brotherton Library. Address: Mrs. Cowden Clarke | Villa Novello | Crosa san Giacomo | Genova. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Twelfth October 1863.

My Dear Mrs. Cowden Clarke.

I ought to have answered your first letter in any case, and I beg you to accept my apology for not doing so; but this was my reason:—

So far as I know, no money is yet subscribed for the National Shakespeare Monument.[†1] So far as I know, nothing definite is in the least agreed upon, and nothing is yet done. I considered in your case, as I considered in my own, that it would be premature to enrol a subscription and that it was well to wait awhile.

Unless I should hear from you to the contrary, I will still act in your case as in my own. When I subscribe myself, I will enter your name and your husband's (to whom my kind regard), but if you should object to this course and should desire to subscribe at once notwithstanding this note, then command me and count on my prompt obedience.

It is not likely, I suppose, that any of us will be much wiser concerning the scheme and its prospects (of which between ourselves I am not sanguine) until the London season recommences, and the Committee, which I have not yet beheld incorporated in the flesh, have a meeting.

always My Dear Mrs. Cowden Clarke | Your faithful old Manager

CHARLES DICKENS

To DR T. H. TUKE,[†2] 12 OCTOBER 1863*

MS Athol Tuke. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Twelfth October, 1863.

My Dear Dr. Tuke

To tell you the plain truth, I would rather not have that interview[†3] if it can be avoided. To be really useful and do real good, I would overcome my awkward sense of the ludicrousness of the situation; but I am by no means satisfied that this result is very likely.

My ladies join in kind regard to yours and you.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Dr. Harrington Tuke.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?12 OCTOBER 1863]

Extracts in F, IX, v, 741 and VIII, iii, 655-6. Date: first extract "six weeks" after letter of 30 Aug 63, according to Forster; the only week in Oct 63 in which, on evidence of letters, CD spent the whole time at Gad's Hill, was that beginning 12 Oct; letter presumably, therefore, written that day. Second extract Oct 63 according to Forster, probably same letter.

I came here[†1] last night, to evade my usual day in the week[†2]—in fact to shirk it— and get back to Gads for five or six consecutive days. My reason is, that I am exceedingly anxious to begin my book. I am bent upon getting to work at it. I want to prepare it for the spring; but I am determined not to begin to publish with less than five numbers done. I see my opening perfectly, with the one main line on which the story is to turn;[†3] and if I don't strike while the iron (meaning myself) is hot, I shall drift off again; and have to go through all this uneasiness once more.

I shall have a small new improvement[†4] to show you at Gads, which I think you will accept as the crowning ingenuity of the Inimitable.

To MISS E. C. CLAYTON,[†5] 13 OCTOBER 1863†

MS H.E. Quick. Address: Miss E Clayton | King Street | Maidstone. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Thirteenth October, 1863.

Madam.

I receive letters exactly like yours, from unknown correspondents, by scores upon scores. You will infer how very difficult it is for a worker to answer them, though never so briefly.

[†a]Believe me, I can do nothing for your book,[†1] if your book cannot do something for itself. If I ever read such a Manuscript, I should never be able to do any thing else in life. What any publisher can have meant (unless he meant evasion) by telling you that you want "interest", I cannot imagine. I can only assure you that my own "interest", when I used to try it, never served one single aspirant.[†a]

It occurs to me that you may have addressed me, with some reference in your mind to my Journal "All The Year Round". For a novel or long serial tale, there is no opening in those pages. But for short productions such as you may read there, there is always an opening, if the contribution offered be suitable and good. And whatever is offered, is always honestly read. I can say no more.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss E Clayton

To W. C. MACREADY, 13 OCTOBER 1863*

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Thirteenth October 1863.

My Dear Macready

I have heard from Forster about general matters, and in his note he mentions with some sense of injury that you have not answered his letter.[†2] Upon this, perhaps you will think—as I do—that it will be well to write him a few lines like his own to you.

I cannot tell you how heartily I enjoyed my dear old friend's—only old in that sense, mind!—a bas le vieux Parr à tout jamais!!—society, and how cordially we have all given our hearts to Mrs. Macready. We look forward to "next time", and send our loving remembrances.

Ever My Dearest Macready | Your affectionate friend
CHARLES DICKENS

To T. J. THOMPSON,[†3] 13 OCTOBER 1863*

MS Mrs Sowerby. Address: T.J. Thompson Esquire | The Dell | Bonchurch | Isle of Wight.
On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Thirteenth October 1863.

My Dear Thompson.

The enquiry was only for a newly-married couple, and their visit was to be a very short one. I will tell Macready of your kind offer and I know he will be much obliged by it; but I think the n-m-c have already betaken themselves to some other Eden.

We all unite in kindest remembrances to Christiana.[†1] If I should hear of any one inclining to Bonchurch in the early spring, I will bear your house in mind.

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS[†2]

T. J. Thompson Esquire.

To [? H. G. ADAMS],[†3] 13 OCTOBER 1863*

MS King's College, Cambridge. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Thirteenth October, 1863.

My Dear Sir

You say in your letter—"Tuesday October 15th". Relying on your meaning "Tuesday December 15th". I reply Yes.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS GRACE BARROW,[†4] 14 OCTOBER 1863

Extract in Thomas Wright, Life of CD, 1935, pp. 307-8; dated 14 Oct 63; addressed Miss Grace Barrow.

Through the practical steady, quiet course that you have taken lies the road to self-respect and self-made independence.—In every art there would be far less misery and bitterness if many more began as wisely.

To MESSRS FARRER, OUVRY & FARRER, 14 OCTOBER 1863*

MS Huntington Library. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Fourteenth October, 1863.

My Dear Sirs

Mr. Morris can put up a bill in the house as soon as he pleases. He shall certainly have possession before Christmas, and I will endeavour so to hasten my late brother's family as to give him possession [†a]IN THE COURSE OF NEXT MONTH.[†a] I will take care that the house is shewn between any hours in the day that he likes to appoint with Mrs. Alfred Dickens, and he may be assured that I will not allow a day's avoidable delay to stand in the way of his having the house returned to him.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Farrer Ouvry and Farrer.

To R. H. MASON, 17 OCTOBER 1863

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Night Seventeenth October 1863

My Dear Sir

Miss Hogarth has told me of your note to her, and I beg to assure you, that I really can not consider myself justified in objecting to the publication of the two large portraits. It is my fate to "come out" ferocious,[†1] and I will bear it, I dare say they will be satisfactory to many people, and they will be satisfactory enough to me if they prove serviceable to you. Pray use them.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

R. H. Mason Esquire

To MRS NICHOLS, 19 OCTOBER 1863

Text from N, III, 365-6.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Monday, Nineteenth October, 1863

My Dear Madam,

I hope to get in the condensed and altered story very soon. I can only express my unfortunate objection to the enclosed by saying that there appears to me no reason for its being a story. The incidents are so worn and trite that nothing but some uncommon ingenuity in the manner of telling and putting together could possibly carry them. And the ingenuity is not there. Well, if those parts which describe the dog were related simply as dog anecdotes, the same remark would apply to them with equal force.

If a child of mine had written these verses, I should try hard to direct her fancy and attention to improving appreciation rather than rash endeavour. Of course I cannot say in this case what poetic capacity may linger in the young breast, but I see no expression of any in these lines. Words and sound I find, but not thoughts. Let me, with the miseries of a mistaken vocation often before my eyes, entreat you to consider whether you observe in these verses anything half so pretty as any ordinary child will think out for itself in a confidential talk with you, half an hour long.

My dear Madam | Faithfully yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To THE EARL RUSSELL, 22 OCTOBER 1863*

MS Charles Sessler Inc. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Twenty Second October 1863.

My Dear Lord Russell

Accept my most earnest thanks for your more than kind note. I am disappointed, of course—the more so, because I had seen him always at work, and had the strongest belief in his power to do what was needed, as well as any other well-educated youth[†1]—but if he had succeeded in the most brilliant manner, I could not have been more grateful to you than I am.

I shall always treasure the remembrance of your goodness. You will excuse my adding from my heart that I would rather, in right of old faith in you and long admiration of you, stand so indebted as I am, to you, than to any other statesman in Europe.

My Dear Lord Russell
Ever Your faithful and obliged
CHARLES DICKENS

The | Earl Russell.

To EMILE DE LA RUE, 28 OCTOBER 1863*

MS Berg Collection.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Twenty Eighth October 1863

My Dear De la Rue.

I hope you will thoroughly understand, next time, that I can always abstract myself quite completely, if I pass the forenoon by myself in my own room. No visitors (but far less, dear old friends) disturb me or my writing, if I hold to my habit of shutting myself up from breakfast to lunch. If I had had the least idea that you wavered about going, you may take your oath you should not have gone.

On the other side, I send a line[†2] to Madame. And now let me breathe in your ear that I have sometimes caught myself declaiming as the Calais Station Master declaimed, and have instantly strangled myself.

Ever Cordially, | My Dear De la Rue
CHARLES DICKENS

To MADAME DE LA RUE [28 OCTOBER 1863]

Mention in last. Date: as last.

To THE REV. JOSEPH HINDLE,[†1] 28 OCTOBER 1863*

MS Fales Library, New York University. Address: The Rev. Joseph Hindle | Higham | Rochester.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Twenty Eighth October 1863

My Dear Sir

I have too high a respect for you and for your office, to be in any danger of misunderstanding your kind letter. I warmly thank you for it.

But my wife has gone her way, and I have gone mine, and when we took our separate courses I took mine for ever.

My Dear Sir I am always
With much regard | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Rev. Joseph Hindle.

To THOMAS BEARD, 29 OCTOBER 1863

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Place | Maida Hill | W.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Twenty Ninth October 1863

My Dear Beard.

Thus it stands, concerning our friend (with the very bad name of) Bel Demonio.[†2]

The story is a Love-story mixed with the artful dodge of that Cardinal of old who was borne down with age and infirmity until they chose him Pope, and then suddenly sprang up vigorous and athletic, remarking that he had stooped while looking for the keys of Saint Peter, and could stand upright now that he had found them.[†3]

Angelo a young painter (Fechter) has fitted up an atelier in certain ruins near Albano by Rome, where the star of his life is Lena Campereali (Miss Terry) daughter of the proud and powerful Campereali Family, represented in the piece by the Count and Countess of that name (Mr. Jordan[†1] and Miss Elsworthy)[†2] and their son Fabio (Mr. Charles).[†3] In the young painter's absence, the Count and his son visit the atelier to see for themselves who and what this bold youth is, who has dared to aspire to the Campereali heights; and there they learn from Margarita (Miss Lavenne)[†4] a village-girl in attendance upon Angelo that he is "always painting one face." There being a picture then upon the Easel, Fabio examines it, finds this favorite face to be his sister's, slashes the picture with his dagger, and contemptuously throws the painter, on his return, a purse of money. The painter is rushing after him to fling the purse under his horse's feet when he is stopped by Ranuccio an old soldier (Mr. Emery)[†5] whom he has hitherto only known as his guardian and friend but who now informs him that he assumed that trust in compliance with the last request of his (Angelo's) father. That he fought, companion in arms, at that father's side; and that he was the famous Bracciaforte, the best friend the people of Italy ever had, who was killed by the detested Orsini family. He implored Ranuccio to keep his son in ignorance of his parentage until he arrived at maturity, in order that he might not become involved in hopeless enterprises against the Orsini and be prematurely slain. Now, on his way to Albano, Ranuccio has fallen in with a certain worn-out feeble old Cardinal Montalto (Mr. Brougham),[†6] brother of Bracciaforte and uncle of Angelo, who keeps the secret of his liberal relationship to himself by reason of his aspiring to the Pontifical chair. Angelo and Ranuccio going together to the Campereali Palace openly to propose for Lena, on the strength of the Bracciaforte name, are received by the father and son with lofty insolence in this same Cardinal's presence, who then discovers in his spirited nephew a likely instrument to be used against the Orsini. The Count gives Angelo to understand that Lena is to be immediately married to the Count Ottavio Orsini; Angelo gives him to understand that he has won her love and she shall never marry that enemy of his country; and dooms the whole Orsini race to destruction. A subsequent interview between Angelo and Lena (who is aided in her true love by her good mother the Countess) is cut short by Angelo's being set upon by the Campereali people, and barely getting out of a window—and the first act—with his life; triumphant however in this,—that Lena has solemnly promised him that if the dreaded Orsini marriage be forced on, she will fly to him for refuge.

On the anniversary of Bracciaforte's death and on the spot where he was killed, the people assemble to hear a Mass performed at the chapel of Monte Cavi, by a certain Monk Anselmo: the only priest in Italy who dares so to brave the house of Orsini, and who is really the Cardinal Montalto. The second act opens with this celebration, and the peasantry become engaged in a skirmish with the Campereali partizans, which gives monstrous offence to the proud Count, and which leads to more insults being heaped on Angelo by Fabio, and to a duel between them: in which Angelo stands only on the defensive, and shoots the young nobleman's hat off, instead of sending the ball, which teaches him that lesson in politeness, through the brain. In no wise softened by this forbearance, the young fellow rages more and more, and resolves (in conjuction with his father) to have Angelo's life. There has been a meeting of the Campereali Family and friends, to consider how best to cement the interests of the Campereali and Orsini houses (which will become one with the marriage of Lena with Ottavio Orsini) and what candidate they shall set up and support for the Popedom when the election takes place, a year hence. Their object is, to have in the new Pope, a mere tool; and while they are rejecting this man as too young and that man as too spirited, the artful Cardinal coming among them, presents himself, such an object of decrepitude and humility, that they cry "This is our man" So far so good. But the Cardinal, both because he sympathizes with his nephew, and to strengthen his own hands by dividing the families, marries the young lovers at the chapel of Monte Cavi, after Lena has redeemed her promise and fled to Angelo. There is a hot pursuit to prevent this marriage, but the lovers make a clever escape in the dresses of two monks. The marriage solemnized, Angelo has barely time to confide his bride to her mother and to devote himself to the rescue of his country from the Orsini oppression, when his pursuers arrive. An incautious movement of the Countess shows the direction in which he has gone, he is fired at while crossing a torrent in a rocky pass, falls from the bridge into the stream below and is dragged from it by Ranuccio. †aFabio, less fortunate, falls in this tumult.†a

A year has intervened between these events, and the opening of the Third Act. It has been made memorable by a great rising of the people under an unknown leader of rare powers, popularly called Bel Demonio, before whom the Orsini family has absolutely disappeared; nothing remaining of them but the ruins of their burnt palaces and one female scion, the last of the race, who is abbess of a Convent in which Lena is confined by her father, and who has entrapped the Cardinal Montalto within her walls, designing to keep him there †buntil the new Pope is elected: the Lady abbess supporting another candidate.†b To induce his daughter to take the veil, after her year's novitiate, Count Campereali asserts that the marriage she relies on, was a fictitious marriage, and that the monk Anselmo was actually dead at the time of its celebration.

When this cruel fraud is countenanced by a written declaration of such death, extorted from the entrapped Cardinal, the wretched girl gives way, believes herself deserted and deceived, and declares her willingness to become a Nun. The ceremony is hastened on, and is proceeding with all its gloomy pomp and state when Angelo (summoned by secret letter from the Cardinal) arrives among the populace admitted to the convent on the grand occasion, and is told by the Cardinal to look among all the Novices and Nuns, for his bride. He does so, but sees her not, never dreaming that the doomed girl about to take the veil can be his wife. "Look again, my son" says the Cardinal; "the ceremony still proceeds: go quickly into the chapel, and look in every face for Lena, not omitting one." Angelo complies, a great cry of sacrilege is raised from within, the whole body of the people in the chapel come pouring forth in wild disorder around Angelo with his rescued wife in his arms, and trampling the black veil under his feet. To Count Campereali and his Guards he avows himself Bel Demonio, and swears he will cut his way through the midst of them, with his insensible wife upon his breast. And this, in a truly gallant and spirited way, he does, then and there.

But the amazed hirelings of the Campereali and the Orsini, who were doubly afraid to strike at him in the Sanctuary, pursued him beyond its boundaries, and by the mere weight of numbers divided him from his wife, though no man could lay hands on himself. The miserable Lena who has broken Sanctuary, and who has done it with, and for the love of, the potent enemy of the Orsini, finds a pitiless abbess in the abbess who is the last of that fallen race. At the opening of the Fourth Act she has been already carried down, under the infuence of a sleeping potion, to a vault of the the Convent, and there left on a bier, with a lamp, a cruse[†1] of water, and a loaf of bread, to wake, and find herself buried alive, and slowly die. We are made acquainted with this state of things by the conversation of certain soldiers on duty in the Guardroom of the Convent, who have heard the moans of the victim proceeding from the vaults beneath their feet. Among them, Ranuccio, professing to have had enough of Bel Demonio and to have taken service with the Abbess, has artfully insinuated himself. Through the interposition of a friendly Innkeeper, these Guards hoist up Angelo in a basket, disguised as the Innkeeper's son, bringing them their supper, and their (drugged) wine; and in a very dramatic scene, the means of descending from the window to the place of Lena's confinement are communicated to Angelo by Ranuccio, under pretence of relating to the Guards, as they become more and more sleepy and less sensible, an adventure that once happened to his father. In the mean time the election for Pope is proceeding, and is going against Cardinal Montalto, who, being still kept imprisoned by the abbess in order that he may not be in Rome to make interest for himself, urges the Countess Campereali, as she would save her daughter from a dreadful death, to speed to Rome and advance his interests by the sacrifice of money, jewels, wealth in any kind, that she possessed. Finally, Angelo and Ranuccio make their way to Lena's living tomb, and discovering her senseless and laid out as one dead, suppose her to have really departed from this world. But [†b]Angelo detects[†b] a change in her colour, takes her in his arms, and she revives. His free lances[†1] without, have all this time been undermining the walls of her prison; but as they fall with a crash, and the Free Lances come clambering over their ruins to the rescue, the adherents of the Campereali and Orsini appear in superior numbers, and the Count orders Angelo to be [†b]instantly[†b] hanged at the Convent Gate, for no power on earth can save him. Montalto takes leave to suggest that the new Pope can save him; the Count retorts that he will be hanged before the new Pope can be elected. Now, Montalto has arranged that in the event of his being Pope, three guns shall be fired from the Castle of St. Angelo, instead of the usual one. At this critical moment the three guns are heard. The Count is at a loss to know what they mean. "They mean, Lord Count", replies the Cardinal, suddenly becoming erect and strong, "that I am the new Pope.

I was the monk Anselmo who married these young lovers. I give them my benediction and protection. Rome has a Master now, and not a slave!"

———————————

—O Heavens, little did I think what a job it was to unravel this tangle once again! This is what I got it to, out of a heap of general imbecility in which it hid itself.

Note that Campereali is now spelt in the bill Campireali. In the various copies and messes and ink-slobberings, it has been spelt about five hundred ways—in fact any thing with an "m", a "p", and an "l" in it has been understood to represent that noble house. The last new spelling is the best to take.

The Scene painters have failed to an appalling extent, and unless the Play is very well played, it won't go.[†2]

Ever Faithfully My Dear Beard

CD.

November

To THE REV. GEORGE BRYANT,[†1] 4 NOVEMBER 1863*

MS Dickens House. Address: Rev. Geo. Bryant | Sheerness. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.

Wednesday Fourth November 1863.

Dear Sir

I will not give the deputation the unavailing trouble of coming to me. With regret I assure you that it is not reasonably possible for me to comply with the request they would prefer.[†2] It is one the like of which is so constantly made to me that it is usually answered under another hand than mine, attached to a printed form.[†3]

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

The Rev. Geo. Bryant

To J. S. HODSON,[†4] 5 NOVEMBER 1863*

MS Private. Address: J.S. Hodson Esqre Junr. | 22 Portugal Street | Lincolns Inn. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Night Fifth November | 1863.

Dear Sir

In reply to your letter I beg to say that if your Committee will choose a day that they consider to be favorable to the interests of the Institution,[†5] it will be at once my duty and my pleasure to make it mine.

You have merely to tell me the day appointed.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

J. S. Hodson Esqre Junr.

To CHARLES LEVER, 5 NOVEMBER 1863

MS Widener Collection, Harvard. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Night Fifth November, 1863.

My Dear Lever.

I have your letter[†6] tonight, and merely write you a most hearty pressure of the hand in acknowledgement of it.

Having seen (on my own business) both the Chapmans since I last wrote to you, I am confirmed in my conviction that we have taken the right course.[†1] As soon as you have begun,[†2] I will tell them in a casual way, that I shall be glad to have your balance-sheet on your behalf, as soon as it is ready. The time of year will render this easy and natural; they will quite understand (I will take care of that) that I am in communication with you; and if they don't feel a vague uneasiness, it shall not be for want of a gloomy suggestion on my part that I could discourse strongly as to that letter,[†3] if I chose to admit its being worth a gentleman's notice.

I am very sorry, truly sorry, to hear of Mrs. Lever's grief[†4] and its effects upon her. It is easy to say that in this hard life we must close up the ranks, whosoever falls, and march on; but there is more in it, as I write it and feel it, than a common-place. Your trial has not yet been mine, and I am in my fifty second year with a sound of cheering behind me; but my heart faints sometimes under such troubles as I do know, and if it were not for a certain stand-up determination, I should lie down. "Who is hit?" Nelson said, without looking round, when they shot his Secretary.[†5] "I am hit", ten thousand of us may cry at once instead, "in a mortal place, but our rest is before us, and we will work our way to it."

Cheer up—and cheer her up—for God's sake.

Ever My Dear Lever | Your affectionate and faithful

CHARLES DICKENS

To THE REV. W. C. SAWYER, 6 NOVEMBER 1863

MS University of Texas. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT

Friday November Sixth, 1863.

Dear Sir

My old friend M. De la Rue of Genoa did me the favor to speak to you concerning my desire to place my youngest son (just 12 years old) under your kind care.

I have twice or thrice endeavoured to get to Tunbridge Wells on one of the days of the week least inconvenient to you. But I am closely occupied just now, and have always been prevented from accomplishing my intention.

As my engagements continue to be very pressing, I take the liberty of writing to you to propose that I defer my visit until Christmas-time when I can bring my boy (now at Brighton) with me, and have the pleasure of presenting him to you.

He is a shy boy of good average abilities, and an amiable disposition. But he has not yet been quite happy away from home, through having lived—as the youngest of my children—a little too long at home with grown people. He has never been a spoiled child however, for we are too fond of children here to make them disagreeable.

He was at Wimbledon school with his brother until within these six months, but he told me that he found so large a school confusing. He had always an excellent character there, and I feel sure that he is a good boy whose confidence could be easily won by the spirit in which you address your charges, and M. De la Rue's account of which has greatly interested me.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

The Rev. W. C. Sawyer

&c &c &c

To W. F. A. WILSON, 6 NOVEMBER 1863*

MS Yale University Library. Address: W.F. Wilson Esquire | 29 Delamere Crescent | Westbourne Square | London | W. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Night, Sixth November 1863.

My Dear Sir

I have the pleasure of sending you enclosed, a crossed cheque for the very moderate amount in which I am indebted to you, according to your statement.[†1] My sense of your attention and good offices to my son, is very inadequately expressed in it.

In reference to your kind suggestion, I do not know that I have the least interest at the War office, and I think I have reasonably worn out what interest I had at the Foreign office in this particular regard. Besides, I am discouraged from trying Frank again in any such path: his failure[†2] being quite unaccountable to me.

Pray accept my thanks for your valuable assistance, and the sincere assurance that I esteem it highly.

My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. F. Wilson Esquire

To MESSRS BRADBURY & EVANS, 9 NOVEMBER 1863

Mention in John Anderson Jr catalogue No. 343; MS 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill Place, 9 November 63; addressed Messrs Bradbury & Evans.

Requesting them to send Bleak House and Little Dorrit to Mrs Alfred Dickens.

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 10 NOVEMBER 1863*

MS Morgan Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Tenth November 1863

My Dear Ouvry.

I have made one alteration in the accompanying draft,[†1] which seems to me not only to simplify it, but which has the additional merit of expressing the intention—which the passage I have erased, does not.

In case you should want to see me, I shall be here all the week.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Frederic Ouvry Esquire

To MISS MARGUERITE POWER, 10 NOVEMBER 1863

Extract from catalogue in N, III, 371.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
10th November, 1863

My Dear Marguerite,

... I am very glad indeed to retain the Breton papers for very early insertion.[†2] The introduction[†3] (let me say) is by no means the least meritorious part of them.... Ah! The last Roc's[†4] egg is indeed an egg![†5] When it is fully hatched—in about three weeks—I intend to rest my fame upon the bird. Inspection is respectfully invited.

To FREDERICK LEHMANN, 14 NOVEMBER 1863

MS Morgan Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Saturday Fourteenth November 1863

My Dear Lehmann.

I am exceedingly glad to receive your letter. Thank you for the timely and welcome intelligence.

Your bright boy[†1] is recovering without any check, I hope? I send my love to him, and to his mother.

At this present writing I am in some doubt whether I have any thing inside my head, or no. The Christmas No. has so addled it this week, that I don't recognize it as mine.

Ever Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Frederic Lehmann Esquire

To T. G. BARING,[†2] 15 NOVEMBER 1863

Envelope only, MS Yale University Library. Address: Thomas George Baring Esquire M.P. | &c &c &c | India Office | Victoria Street | London | S.W. PM Rochester 15 Nov 63.

To J. STIRLING COYNE, 15 NOVEMBER 1863*

MS Private. Address: J. Stirling Coyne Esquire | Dramatic Author's Society | 28 King Street | Covent Garden | London | W.C. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Fifteenth November 1863.

My Dear Sir

I cannot give you any positive answer touching the first Monday in December, because I am going to France at the end of this next week, and may not be back in time. But if I should be in town then, I will attend the meeting,[†3] ready to make myself useful any hour.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

J. Stirling Coyne Esquire

To DR T. H. TUKE, 15 NOVEMBER 1863*

MS Athol Tuke. On mourning paper.

Private[†4]

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Fifteenth November, 1863.

My Dear Dr. Tuke.

I cannot imagine that Mr. Reade had the least knowledge of what you tell me concerning Dr. Conolly.[†5] I am strongly impressed with the belief that it must be a wonderful coincidence. Could you suppose it possible that when I wrote the beginning of Nickleby, I described a house in Golden Square[†1] (where I laid my own scene), and the people in it, and their relations towards one another; and never was in the house in my life, or knew of its existence, or knew anything in any way of any of the persons presented, until one of them made the extraordinary disclosure to me, twenty years afterwards!

Mr. Reade is enormously mistaken, and damages a good cause. But I cannot believe that he would wilfully be personal and cruel. On the contrary, I think he is a kind and tender man.

It is my intention to separate myself from these statements and opinions, and distinctly to assure the public (as an act of plain justice) that they are not mine.[†2]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Dr. Harrington Tuke.

To EDMUND YATES, 15 NOVEMBER 1863*

MS Mr I.H. Macdonald. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Fifteenth November, 1863.

My Dear Edmund

Mindful of the note you sent me, I have got the Dog Story[†3] into the Xmas No. reserving My Aunt[†4] for the regular No. You will find, I hope, that the Dog fits the design admirably. I finished the No. for press, last night.[†5]

Will you come down with Finlay next Saturday? I am going across for a short holiday,[†6] early on the Monday morning.

Ever Yours
CD.

To [H. G. ADAMS],[†1] 17 NOVEMBER 1863*

MS Mr Lewis P. Kinsey, Jnr. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Seventeenth November 1863

My Dear Sir

If you prefer it, you can have:
Nicholas Nickleby
at Mr. Squeer's School;
and
Mr. Bob Sawyer's Party
From Pickwick[†2]

Mentioning the times, you had better say:

To commence at 8 o'Clock, and conclude within two hours.

I had a strong impression that I read Mr. Bob Sawyer's Party, WITH[†3] Copperfield.[†4] If I did, you will do best to stick to the Boots (I have no other Reading of the right length). If I did not, take Bob Sawyer.

Yours truly,
CD.

To BENJAMIN LILLIE, 20 NOVEMBER 1863*

MS University of California, Los Angeles. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Twentieth November, 1863

Sir

I must inform you that the new glass you have sent me, does not reflect truthfully, but greatly distorts the room in which it is fixed.[†5] I beg your immediate attention to this, as the decoration and furnishing of the room must be completed in a fortnight.

Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To SIR CHARLES LOCOCK,[†1] 21 NOVEMBER 1863*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: Sir Charles Locock | 26 Hertford Street | May Fair | London | W. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Twenty First November, 1863.

My Dear Sir Charles.

I am delighted to hear from you, and I hope you will find leisure and inclination to "go to bed", as I should be charmed to have the paper.[†2]

Believe me always | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Sir Charles Locock.

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 21 NOVEMBER 1863

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, June 1979; MS 1 p.; dated Office of AYR, 21 Nov 63; addressed F. Ouvry.

Returning the agreement[†3] signed and attested.

To W. H. WILLS, [22] NOVEMBER 1863*

MS Huntington Library. On mourning paper. Date: Sunday was 22 in Nov 63.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Sunday Twenty Third November, 1863.

My Dear Wills.

I wish the enclosed note to [be][†4] printed, in rather larger type than usual, and across the page or after the end of Very Hard Cash.[†5] Without consulting Reade about it, I should like him to know that it is going in, and therefore will you have it appended to the proof of the end of his book, when it is sent to him for Revise:— printed, I mean, upon the slip.

The case as to Conolly and Sutherland[†1] is a very serious and painful one indeed. It would be exceedingly strong and bad if I knew neither of them; but knowing both of them, it becomes perfectly shocking.

The Ceylon paper[†2] you will receive from Frank. Will you look at the last paragraph of the enclosed letter (I have under-lined it, to catch your eye) and look up the paper mentioned?

On the evening of Monday the 30th. I purpose being at the office. Let me find a note from you with any news.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

December

To CHARLES LEVER, 1 DECEMBER 1863

MS Widener Collection Harvard. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.

Tuesday First December, 1863.

My Dear Lever. This is merely to tell you what you know;—that it is all right with Chapman and Hall as to the length of your book.[†3]

Concerning the advertisements I made no remonstrance. For I thought they were proceeding carefully, and extending their way gradually. We have had your announcement (at their request) folded into our Xmas No.[†4] And I am quite sure you could not get so good an advertisement in any other way for a dozen times the cost of that printing:— no, not for fifty times.

I hear, in passing through town homeward, after a week's absence,[†5] that the sale of your book has started admirably and hopefully. I am taking the first No. with me this afternoon, to read tonight. Cheer up!

Ever affectionately

CD.

To H. G. ADAMS, 2 DECEMBER 1863

Extract in Parke-Bernet catalogue No. 2676 (1968); dated Gad's Hill Place, 2 Dec 63. On mourning paper.

Mentioning his mother's death three months earlier and saying he will not need 6 good places; we shall want only 4.[†1] My men shall have instruction to appear at the Hall on Tuesday morning with the screen and lights.

To CECIL BEADON,[†2] 2 DECEMBER 1863†

MS Dartmouth College, New Hampshire. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Second December, 1863.

Sir.

I take the liberty of forwarding to you by post, two letters of introduction. I dispense with the formality of troubling you with more, because I am assured in London that your knowledge of my books and your sympathy with my pursuits, form my best passport to your courteous attention.

I beg to entreat your kind offices in behalf of a son of mine, Francis Jeffrey (namesake of a dear and famous friend deceased, well known to you by reputation), who has a great desire to enter the Bengal Mounted Police. He is just twenty years of age, well bred and well educated, quick and clever. My friend Lord Russell gave me a nomination for him to the Foreign Office, and he went up for competitive Examination and did extremely well, but came out second. [†a]This strengthened him in a desire he has long entertained to enter some service out of England. It fell in my way opportunely, to learn something of the merits of that Police Service which owes its efficiency and promise to you. He eagerly embraced the idea of entering it, and I solicit at your hands an appointment for him.

If there had been room in the Overland Mail of the 4th. of this month, I should have sent my son to Calcutta by it. Its being full, obliges him to wait for the Overland Mail of the 20th. of this month. His passage by that, being secured, I venture to address you thus, in anticipation of his arrival and presentation of himself.[†a]

In the hope that a young Englishman of his name may be likely to do some little credit to any chance you may kindly give him, I urge my request in his behalf. And I shall ever most heartily and faithfully esteem any service rendered to him, as one rendered personally to his father.[†3]

Pray excuse my troubling you with this letter.

I have the honor to remain | Sir | Your very faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

The Hon.[†1] Cecil Beadon

&c &c &c

To MISS CAROLINE BOYLE,[†2] 2 DECEMBER 1863

Extract in American Prices Current, II, 74. From Gad's Hill Place, 2 Dec 63; addressed C. C. Boyle.

I am president of an accursed Institution in these parts,[†3] who never can pay their rent unless I read to them once a year.

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 2 DECEMBER 1863*

MS Huntington Library. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Night Second December 1863.

My Dear Ouvry

I have informed Job[†4] (in the popular character of his comforter) that his Lease will cost him Three Guineas. He is resigned. Merely suggests two changes. Firstly, that old-style Michaelmas Day, October 11th. shall be substituted for new. Secondly, that the rent shall be paid halfyearly. I have no objection to either alteration.

Pray report when we next meet, that you are getting into claret-order. Those Magnums cry aloud for legal judgment.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Frederic Ouvry Esquire

To CHARLES READE, 2 DECEMBER 1863*

MS Robert H. Taylor Collection, Princeton University.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Night, Second December 1863.

My Dear Reade.

You once gave me hope of your coming down to see me here. Could you join my family party on the last day of the old year? If so, I should be delighted to see you, and to shew you an old castle and an old country in a New Year's Day ramble.

If you say Yes, I will send you full directions as to train (we are little more than an hour from London), and will drive you over from the station. By "you", I mean yourself and portmanteau, of course.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Reade Esquire

To DR T. H. TUKE, 2 DECEMBER 1863*

MS Athol Tuke. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Night, Second December 1863.

My Dear Harrington Tuke.

This note is between ourselves, and our dear Conolly's daughters.[†1]

I hope you will see in a little note I have appended to the conclusion of a certain fiction,[†2] exactly that separation of myself from what has pained us all, which reduces the work to the opinions of an individual and compromises the dignity of no one reflected on;—whether by design or by coincidence.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To W. H. WILLS, 3 DECEMBER 1863*

MS Huntington Library. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Night Third December 1863.

My Dear Wills.

I return the proofs[†3] by special parcel.

We wont have Thornbury this time, and indeed I doubt it altogether. It misses its point, because what man could do another man's trained work? It is absurd. How would the labourers have done the member's work, or any work but their own?[†4]

There is very good observation in the little Poem.[†5] I think the writer[†6] must have something in him.

Substitute Oxenford[†7] (returned herewith) for Thornbury. Let O see his proof.

And I wish Edmund could put something into his paper,[†1] to identify where he really did go to;[†2] for upon my soul I don't know—or I would have put it in myself.

Nine times nine for Mrs. Lirriper!

Will you have the enclosed stamped note posted presently?

Other enclosed refers to something I don't otherwise know of.

On Tuesday for the Audit. Any (good)[†3] news meantime will be thankfully received.

Ever

CD.

To J. STIRLING COYNE, 5 DECEMBER 1863*

MS Private. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Night Fifth December, 1863.

My Dear Sir

I am delighted to have your words of cordial sympathy with Mrs. Lirriper, and I am proud of them, and heartily thank you for them.

On Monday evening I expect to be in town; but I cannot positively engage myself to be there so early in the evening of a day's work as 4 o'Clock. I will try, I assure you.

Believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

J. Stirling Coyne Esquire

To PETER CUNNINGHAM,[†4] 5 DECEMBER 1863

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Night Fifth December, 1863.

My Dear Peter.

I am delighted to get the hearty letter of my old Will's-Coffee-House friend, Le Trimmer;[†5] and again the shade of poor dear Middlesex[†6] crosses me, saying,

"Here's Peter—won't come on, you know!"—then, in a ghostly manner, raps gold snuff-box, and fades into the other world.

Of course Mrs. Lirriper lived on the East side of the Street[†1] (how did you know it?) but not so far down as you suppose. On the Northern side of Howard street.

God bless us all, this coming Christmas, and give us Christmas thoughts! Of which your letter is full, and so most welcome. My love to your good wife[†2] and to you.

Ever Faithfully | (albeit once managerially) | Your noble friend

WILMOT.[†3]

To BENJAMIN WEBSTER [7 DECEMBER 1863]

Envelope only mentioned in Sotheby's catalogue, July 1976. Address: Benjamin Webster | Theatre Royal. PM 7 Dec 63. Mourning paper.

To WALTER F. CROOK,[†4] 8 DECEMBER 1863*

MS Theatre Collection, Houghton Library, Harvard. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Eighth December 1863.

Sir.

I beg to express my regret that I cannot respond to your interesting invitation. But my avocations will oblige me to forego all such engagements for some time, with one exception in London to which I already stand pledged.[†5]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Walter F Crook Esquire

To SIR JOSEPH OLLIFFE, 8 DECEMBER 1863†

MS Royal Library, Copenhagen. Address: (envelope, MS Benoliel Collection): Sir Joseph Olliffe | Rue St. Florentin 2 | Paris. PM London 8 Dec 63. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Eighth December, 1863.

My Dear Olliffe. If you will kindly take the trouble to look into Ferrere Laffitte's,[†6] at any time when you may be going by there, you will find that Coutts's have remitted from me f200 (two hundred francs) payable to you.[†1] Many thanks for the wine. I was very glad to have it, and it is extremely cheap.

I send my love to Lady Olliffe, and generally to any body in your house who will take it in. [†a]I often think of the Audience at the Paris Readings,[†2] and always with delight.[†a]

My esteemed friend Mrs. Lirriper has made a most extraordinary mark on the Public. I doubt if I have ever done any thing that has been so affectionately received by such an enormous audience. I can't turn any where without encountering some enthusiasm about her.

Tell Lady Olliffe that when she next comes to Gad's, I will shew her my notion of a pretty Drawing Room. Also, that she can't come too soon.

So, with my dutiful respects to the Learned Baby, I am Ever My Dear Olliffe

Heartily Yours | (and hers)

CHARLES DICKENS

Sir Joseph Olliffe

To GEORGE HOLSWORTH, 11 DECEMBER 1863*

MS Mr D. Farringdon.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Eleventh December, 1863.

Dear Mr. Holsworth

I send you the cheque for Mrs. Brough's[†3] money. I have drawn for £25.

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To [FREDERIC CHAPMAN],[†4] [13] DECEMBER 1863*

MS Fales Library, New York University. On mourning paper. Date: misdated by CD; Sunday was 13 Dec 63.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Twelfth December, 1863

My Dear Sir

I have received a letter from Mr. Lever, begging me to ascertain why you have refused to accept a bill he drew upon you for £60. He does not clearly understand from what he is told in Florence whether you refused, because it was drawn at one month instead of two. He has now drawn at two months, and naturally wishes to know whether that is safe and right. I need not add that the matter has occasioned him much pain and anxiety.

Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

[ ]Esquire

To THE COUNTESS COWLEY, 13 DECEMBER 1863*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Thirteenth December, 1863.

My Dear Lady Cowley.

It is so very pleasant to me to be reminded, through your kind letter, of those bright nights in Paris, that I must write you a few words by way of answer.

My responsibility under the head "Mrs. Lirriper", begins with that respected friend of mine, and ends with the boy's story in the Parlours.[†1] All that lies between those two extremes is by other hands. I perfectly agree with you concerning Mr. and Mrs. Duke Brownlow,[†2] and felt exactly the same uneasiness when I corrected the Proofs. But Mrs. Gaskell (the authoress of that story) has a way of rather abusing her strength, by making her victims unjustly unhappy sometimes.[†3]

I am truly concerned to hear of your son's[†4] indisposition, and beg to send him my cordial regard. I hope for his company (pray tell him this) through twenty months from next May. Olliffe is right in deeming that this engagement will prevent my Reading, hut I hope it will not quite estrange me from Paris. And I shall certainly never re-visit it when you are there, without offering myself to your kind remembrance.

I hope Lord Cowley may give Mrs. Lirriper a spare half-hour when he returns, and that she may find some favour in the bright eyes of your daughters.[†5]

My Dear Lady Cowley | I am always
Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The | Countess Cowley

To CHANDOS WREN HOSKYNS, 14 DECEMBER 1863

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Fourteenth December 1863

My Dear Wren Hoskyns

It would have given me real pleasure to come to you on Friday and to have become known to Mrs. and Miss Wren Hoskyns,[†1] but that an extremely Visible world[†2] detains me here. I have a house-full gradually accumulating for Christmas, and after the middle of this week shall not be (if I ever am) a free agent. But as my daughter is steadily conspiring in various ways to induce me to take a house in town for this next season, I shall hope to report myself on accessible ground before Easter.

I have read your Model Lecture, for such I take it to be, with very great satisfaction. I never read anything of the kind, at once more elegantly and wisely done. Such heaps of intolerable rubbish of conceited words purporting to be Lectures, have I seen and heard, that the very name would have become hideous in my sight, but for Sydney Smith,[†3] Owen,[†4] and Faraday.[†5] The natural sweetness of my temper is now quite restored, and I am in a seasonable state of mind even towards the Dismal Swamps that professionally stagnate at Mechanics' Institutions.

Believe me always | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

C. Wren Hoskyns Esquire

To MRS NICHOLS, 14 DECEMBER 1863*

MS Johns Hopkins University. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Fourteenth December, 1863.

My Dear Mrs. Nichols

I am very glad to learn under your own hand that you are able to rest. I wish I could believe that this appalling madness of war would sober into some approach to sanity while you are resting.

As to Art (in the pictorial sense) I ought to know something about it, as my most intimate friends and companions, at home and abroad, have been Painters. But this renders my sitting to your daughter[†6] quite a hopeless business.

When I sat to Mr. Frith,[†1] it was in redemption of a promise years upon years old. If I were to sit again (which I have not the slightest intention of ever doing), it would be to one of our great English Masters with a knowledge of my face as familiar as his knowledge of his own. With such old friends I have conditional engagements that banish new promises in to the regions of impossibility.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To PROFESSOR RICHARD OWEN, 15 DECEMBER 1863

MS British Library. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,

HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Fifteenth December 1863.

My Dear Owen.

Ten thousand thanks for your note, which has charmed me. I have read the gallant lecture[†2] with deep interest. I am not surprised that you gave it, but I am that they[†3] asked you! May it be a good sign;— for Heaven knows we need one.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Professor Owen.

To CHARLES LEVER, 16 DECEMBER 1863

MS Widener Collection, Harvard.

At The Office
Wednesday Evening, Sixteenth December 1863.

My Dear Lever.

I have just time to send you off this letter,[†4] which I find here on coming to town to dine. It is in answer to a letter I wrote to F. Chapman from Gad's Hill, immediately on receiving your last. Ever affy. Yours CD.

To HENRY CHORLEY, 18 DECEMBER 1863

MS Fitzwilliam Museum, Cambridge. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Eighteenth December, 1863.

My Dear Chorley

This is a "Social Science"[†1] note, touching prospective engagements.

IF[†2] you are obliged, as you were last year, to go away between Xmas Day and New Years Day, then we rely upon your coming back to see the old Year out.

Furthermore, I rely upon you for this:— Lady Molesworth says she will come down for a day or two, and I have told her that I shall ask you to be her Escort, and to arrange a time. Will you take counsel with her, and arrange accordingly? After our family-visitors are gone, Mary is going a-hunting in Hampshire; but if you and Lady Molesworth could make out for Saturday the 9th. of January as your day of coming together, or for any day between that and Saturday the 16th. it would be beforehand with her going, and would suit me excellently. There is a new officer at the Dock Yard vice Mr.[†3] Fanshawe, (now an admiral),[†4] and I will take that opportunity of paying him and his wife the attention of asking them to dine in these gorgeous halls. For all of which reasons, if the Social Science Congress of Two could meet and arrive at a conclusion, the conclusion would be thankfully booked by the illustrious writer of these lines.

On Xmas Eve there is a train from your own Victoria Station at 4.35. P.M. which will bring you to Strood (Rochester Bridge Station) in an hour. And there a majestic form will be descried in a basket.

Ever affecy.

CD.

To HENRY SPICER,[†5] [?20 DECEMBER 1863]

Mention in next. Date: probably written same day.

To W. H. WILLS, 20 DECEMBER 1863

MS Huntington Library. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Sunday Twentieth December, 1863.

My Dear Wills

I am clear that you took my cold. Why didn't you do the thing completely, and take it away from me? For it hangs by me still.

[†a]I have restored Spicer's incident[†1] (sending the proof and insertion straight to Birtles), and have also written to Spicer and told him what is curious to me— that he does not in the least suspect why I took it out. I did so, because it tells his story. His main incident is gone—disclosed to any sharp reader—the moment that passage is read. It occurs in the first portion.[†a†2]

Mrs. Lirriper is indeed a most brilliant old lady. God bless her!

I am glad to hear of your being "haunted", and hope to increase your stock of such Ghosts pretty liberally.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

[†b]I shall be at the office on Wednesday Morning from ¼ before 11 to 12.[†b]

To JOSEPH ELLIS, 26 DECEMBER 1863*

MS Mrs K.M. Jonas. Address (envelope MS Bodleian Library): Mr. Joseph Ellis | The Bedford Hotel | Brighton. PM 26 Dec 63. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Twenty Sixth December 1863

My Dear Mr. Ellis

Many thanks for the Paté. It arrived in the finest condition, and was received with rapture by a crowded house.

In one sense I am sorry that you mean to leave the Bedford,[†3] for the House can never be, in anybody else's time, what it is in yours. But as I take your retirement to be an indication of your determination to enjoy yourself,[†4] I am, in that sense, unselfishly glad of it.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To DAVID ROBERTS, 26 DECEMBER 1863*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Twenty Sixth December 1863.

My Dear David Roberts

I understand from Marcus Stone (who was here yesterday), that he has seen you, and that you have been very kind to him, and that he used my name in corroboration of his having been much misrepresented and hardly treated, in reference to his painful domestic affairs.[†1] As his father's old and intimate friend,—to whom, even at the very last, he confided everything relating to this young man and his brother and sisters and his home,—I wish to support and confirm what he has told you. It is indeed my bounden duty to do so. For I know from Frank Stone's lips that it was his deliberate conclusion that the mother and the children were not to live together, and that the mother was to have for her support, the Academy allowance.[†2]

This knowledge of mine I confide to you. As you may suppose, I have never parted with it, to inflame a family misery or widen a family breach. I have been a good friend to Mrs. Stone[†3] in my time and did her some service when she needed it.

God bless you at this Christmas time and always.

Faithfully Yours Ever
CHARLES DICKENS

David Roberts Esquire

To JAMES BIRTLES, 27 DECEMBER 1863*

MS University of Texas, Austin. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Twenty Seventh December 1863.

Dear Mr. Birtles

I want the enclosed printed off, for a joke, on slips.[†4] Will you please let me have it here as soon as you can. Print it on A. Y. R. paper.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To CHARLES READE, 28 DECEMBER 1863*

MS Robert H. Taylor Collection, Princeton University. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Twenty Eighth December 1863.

My Dear Reade.

I think you will find a convenient Train on Thursday thus:

Leaves Victoria Station, Pimlico at 4.35. P.M.

It will bring you in an hour to Strood Station (Rochester Bridge), and I will be there to drive you over here.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Reade Esquire

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 1863*

Text from Puttick & Simpson catalogue, Apr 1888; MS (3rd person) 1 p.; dated Office of AYR, 1863.

Mr. Charles Dickens can only assure his young correspondent, that he writes no better and no worse than many hundreds of similar versifiers. He has a very slight idea of the labours and correspondence of a busy literary life, if he supposes it to be within the bounds of any reasonable possibility that Mr. Dickens can add more than a warning to him not to mistake his vocation.

1864

January

To MESSRS GAY & EAMES,[†1] 1 JANUARY 1864*

MS Mrs Z.O. Elliott. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
First January 1864.

Gentlemen

[ ][†2]

son, Mr. Sydney Smith Dickens, H.M.S. Orlando, with the following articles 1 suit of clothes

2 Uniform caps

A few of those "very small neck-ties" (This is his description of what he wants).

2 pairs of boots

An oilskin coat.[†1]

Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Gay and Eames.

I have a present of a gun to send him, which please to forward with the clothes. It shall be sent to you from my office in London, in the course of next week.

To E. S. DALLAS, 2 JANUARY 1864*

MS John Murray (Publishers) Ltd. Address: E.S. Dallas Esquire | 6 Hanover Square | London | W. PM 2 Jan 64. Mourning paper and envelope.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Second January 1864.

My Dear Dallas.

The thought[†2] had not occurred to me, and I deeply feel the difficulty of the task. Just as it would have caused me pain to have been present at Kensal Green in any capacity singling me out from the rest of his many friends,[†3] so I instinctively shrink from taking on myself, in those pages,[†4] the utterance of the general admiration and regret.[†5]

But I am bound to think of myself last, and of his children[†6] and his friends first. And I will do it,[†7] in ready deference to the assurance you give me of your own feeling in the matter.

What I shall write will be merely the few affectionate words that an old friend and brother in arms can say beside a newly-made grave.[†8] I talked with him on the 16th. of December, and he told me that he had then been in bed three days, and had bad fits of shivering which, for the time, "quite took all power of work out of him".[†1] But he was very cheerful, and (as you describe him) much softened.[†2]

I should greatly like to know what are the last words he wrote, and generally what train of thought he had before him in his new book.[†3] If Mr. Smith[†4] could get me the MS and send it me down, it might help me to point—in some special manner, proper to the place—the page or two that I should write.[†5] Of course I should do this with so careful a hand as not to anticipate the publication of the fragment.

And when will my contribution be wanted?

My daughters and sister in law unite in kind regard to Mrs. Dallas, and in all good New Year wishes to her and to you. I cordially add mine, and am

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

E. S. Dallas Esquire

To WILLIAM FISHER,[†6] 2 JANUARY 1864

Mention in Sotheby's catalogue, June 1929; MS 1 p.; mourning paper; dated Gad's Hill, 2 Jan 64; addressed William Fisher.

Referring to an invitation from the Council of the Sheffield School of Art.[†7]

To HENRY BLACK,[†1] 2 JANUARY 1864*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Night, Second January 1864

Sir.

I would willingly make the appointment your letter proposed to me, but that I thoroughly well know it would be a waste of the Deputation's time and of my own. My experience of such Institutions[†2] enables me to suggest nothing better than their extinction, when those for whose benefit they are designed will not support them. I have never known a case in which attempts to bolster them up, have done more than postpone the evil day.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Henry Black Esquire Senr.

To MISS EMILY JOLLY,[†3] 2 JANUARY 1864*

MS Dr William Park. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Night, Second January 1864

Dear Madam.

I am so very much occupied and have so many claims upon my thoughts, that I really cannot undertake at this time to read your MS.[†4] Sensible of the confidence you would repose in me, it would haunt me if I had it in a drawer here; but I could not help its doing so, perhaps for months, before I could bestow attention on it.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Emily Jolly

To ARTHUR LOCKER,[†1] 2 JANUARY 1864*

MS Brigham Young University. Address: Arthur Locker Esquire | 2 Clifton Villas | Highgate Hill | London | N.W. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Night, Second January 1864

Dear Sir

Allow me to thank you for the Italian Translation of my Christmas Carol.[†2] I cannot give the authorisation to which your friend refers.

Reciprocating your seasonable good wishes, I am Dear Sir

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Arthur Locker Esquire

To EDGAR MUSGRAVE,[†3] [3 JANUARY 1864]

Envelope only, MS Sr Carlos Ventura. Address: Edgar Musgrave Esquire | Shillington Manor | near | Hitchin | Herts. PM Rochester JA 3 64.

To W. H. RUSSELL, 3 JANUARY 1864

Extracts from typescript in possession of Mrs David Simonds†4, and Sotheby's catalogue, Dec 1982; MS 2pp. On mourning paper.

[a]GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday 3rd Jan. 1864.

My Dear Russell.

Your letter has given me very great pleasure, and I most heartily and cordially reciprocate your good wishes for the New Year, and for our meeting oftener in it than in the old one.[a]

As we get on in life, this constant closing-up of the ranks and marching on, grows startling. But the dream must be dreamed out, 'till we wake somewhere.... alluding to Jerrold's[†5] death some years earlier.[†6]

Concerning the order so shabbily represented t'other day,[†7] he and I have often good-humouredly differed, though at heart we both knew and meant exactly the same thing—and that, what you mean in your reference....

Howsoever far apart we have been since we laughed and rode and talked with poor Jerrold, I have always followed you closely, and have always found new occasion to express my sense of what England owes you for your manly out-speaking and your brilliant description in his despatches from the Crimea.[†1]

[a]Always Cordially Yours
CHARLES DICKENS[a]

To HENRY G. WARREN,[†2] [?EARLY JANUARY 1864]

Mention in Minute-book, MS Newspaper Press Fund, 23 Jan 64. Date: CD was replying to the Secretary's letter, asking him to allow himself to be nominated as a Trustee or Vice-President, of 2 Jan.

Consenting to be nominated.[†3]

To HENRY CHORLEY, 5 JANUARY 1864

Mention in N, III, 377.

To E. S. DALLAS, 5 JANUARY 1864*

MS Berg Collection. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Fifth January 1864

My Dear Dallas

I know the Tin Trumpet[†4] very well, and have it on my shelves[†5]—though of course I can't find it now. By whom it was written, I don't know, but I feel quite sure that it was not written by Thackeray. Of that, I have not the least doubt. I have an impression that there is an older edition of the book than one dated 1836.[†6] Has that book of yours, a frontispiece representing an old gentleman of benevolent aspect with long thin white hair, sitting in a chair, tin trumpet in hand?[†7] Has it a second title called Heads and Tails for the Wise and Waggish? You say, Heads and Tales only. I am sure the second title of mine is the longer one I have just mentioned. Whence I got the notion that the book is older than 1836, I have not the faintest idea, so it cannot count for much.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To W. HEPWORTH DIXON, 9 JANUARY 1864*

MS Rosenbach Museum and Library. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Ninth January 1864

My Dear Dixon.

I passed through London yesterday to keep an engagement near Windsor, but did not come back until past 10 at night, and consequently might as well have been in Egypt for Shakespearian purposes.[†1] This, with all seasonable good wishes for you and yours, in reply to your note.

Ever Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

W. Hepworth Dixon Esquire

To JOSEPH PAYNE,[†2] 9 JANUARY 1864*

MS Dickens House. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Ninth January 1864

Dr. Mr. Payne.

I shall be so very much occupied during the approaching season that I deem it best not to encumber myself with any Readings.

With thanks for your letter, | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To H. G. ADAMS, 11 JANUARY 1864*

MS Huntington Library. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Eleventh January 1864

Dear Mr. Adams

I am very glad indeed to learn that the Reading[†3] produced so handsome a profit.

The receipt you enclosed to me was most unnecessary. The subject was settled in my mind and dismissed from it, when I last saw you here. I hope I have done no harm by, in some mysterious manner, mislaying the said receipt? I cannot find it in your letter, or in my drawer of unanswered letters.

My daughter begs me to thank you for the carte de visite, which is duly enrolled in her noble army. I hope my boys have already thanked you for the little books.[†1] They have given me much pleasure. I knew the Melville Hospital[†2] raven;—came down from London to see him, years ago. He was ordering an imaginary Guard to turn out, when I first made his acquaintance.[†3]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

H. G. Adams Esquire

To DR GILL,[†4] 11 JANUARY 1864*

Text from typescript, Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Eleventh January 1864.

Dear Sir,

I should have answered your letter sooner, but that I have been away from here.

Your patient[†5] has a small allowance from me. It would be a larger one, if I had not reason to believe that I carry through life as long and as heavy a train of dependents as ever was borne by one working man.

If you will apply the enclosed three guineas[†6] as you deem best, I know it will be well expended.

Your faithful servant,
CHARLES DICKENS

Dr Gill.

To GEORGE RUSSELL, 11 JANUARY 1864*

MS Marjorie, Lady Russell. Address: George Russell Esquire | Swallowfield | Reading. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Eleventh January 1864

My Dear Russell

I have been away these last three days, or I would not have left your letter unanswered.

It seems to me very improbable that your flying rumour is correct. Because I have not been to the club[†1] since I resigned as a Member of the Committee,[†2] and I greatly doubt the Committee's agreeing on such an invitation,[†3] possessing no means of knowing how I should receive it. My impression is (before we speak together), that if it did come to me, I would respond, and so begin to work towards your end;[†4] but we must discuss the whole subject.

Can you come down here before Saturday, when my daughter goes a-visiting? Chorley and Lady Molesworth are coming down from Thursday to Saturday, and we have a little dinner on Friday at which we should be delighted to see you. Pray let me know whether you can come, and, if so, when you will come. I dispatch this in haste, to catch the day post from our post-town.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

George Russell Esquire

To E. S. DALLAS, [12 JANUARY 1864]

Envelope only, MS Morgan Library. Address: E. S. Dallas Esquire | 6 Hanover Square | London | W. PM 12 Jan 64.

To GEORGE SMITH, 12 JANUARY 1864*

MS John Murray (Publishers) Ltd. Address: G. Smith Esquire | 45 Pall Mall | London | W. PM 12 Jan 64 Mourning paper and envelope.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.

Tuesday Twelfth January | 1864

My Dear Sir

I have safely received your packet[†5] this morning, and will, of course, take care that its contents are replaced in your hands intact.

Believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

G. Smith Esquire

To GEORGE SMITH, 13 JANUARY 1864*

MS W. A. Foyle. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Thirteenth January 1864

My Dear Sir

I send you the brief article for the Cornhill Magazine, and with it all the papers I have received from you. You will send me a proof to revise, no doubt.

Therefore I mention that I shall be at my office 26 Wellington Street until ½ past 1 on Thursday, and afterwards here. (By Thursday, I mean tomorrow.)

Will you also send a proof to Mr. Dallas, to whom I write a line by this post.

Believe me | My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

George Smith Esquire

To E. S. DALLAS, [13 JANUARY 1864]

Mention in last. Date: written same day.

To MARCUS STONE, 13 JANUARY 1864*

MS Private.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Thirteenth January 1864

My Dear Marcus.

Can you call here tomorrow? Between 10 and 12?[†1]

Affecy Yrs.
CD

To WILLIAM CULLENFORD,[†2] 15 JANUARY 1864

Extracts in N, III, 377.

Gad's Hill Place | 15th January, 1864

I think the Duc D'Aumale[†3] an excellent choice,[†4] as an accomplished gentleman of most agreeable manners, possessing a thorough knowledge of English, and sympathizing with the Arts.

Any application to him ... should be accompanied by a plain brief statement of the strong case of the Fund. No one could make it with greater propriety than Mr. Buckstone. I do not feel that I can with propriety do more than sanction (as I fully do), any reference to myself.

To W. HEPWORTH DIXON, 15 JANUARY 1864*

MS Rosenbach Museum and Library. On mourning paper.

Private

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Fifteenth January 1864

My Dear Dixon

Besides that I have not the time and attention to spare for so extensive an object (being hard at work upon a new book), I do not believe, and never have believed, in its meeting with such a public response as may be called a success. I dread the notion of a statue moreover—shiver and tremble at the thought of another graven image in some public place.[†1] Lastly, I believe that Shakespeare has left his best monument in his works, and is best left without any other,[†2] until the distant time when the Country, through the Government it chooses, shall do some such thing as found Scholarships in his name,[†3] in all the Arts, and so connect young Englishmen sent to study in foreign countries, with the greatest English name.

After more than once excusing myself from joining this movement—on these grounds—I deferred to your letter, because I felt that I had no right to stand aloof from great numbers of my brothers holding contrary opinions. But my convictions remain unchanged; and therefore I could not be so earnest in the endeavour as would justify me in holding a position in which I must constantly press it upon other men.[†4]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

W. Hepworth Dixon Esquire

To GEORGE SMITH, 15 JANUARY 1864

Extract in Christie's catalogue, May 1986; MS 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill Place, 15 Jan 64. On mourning paper. Address (envelope, MS John Murray Publishers Ltd): Private and Immediate | G. Smith Esquire | 45 Pall Mall | London | S.W. PM Rochester 15 Jan 64. Mourning paper.

I send you my proof, corrected.[†5] You will see that I have made it no longer, and that the tail-piece will come in as you originally purposed.[†6]

To GEORGE SMITH, 15 JANUARY 1864*

MS Mrs Seton Gordon. Address: G. Smith Esquire | 45 Pall Mall | London | SW. PM Rochester 15 Jan 64. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Fifteenth January 1864

My Dear Sir

Will you be so good as to cancel the corrected proof I sent you this morning, and substitute the enclosed.[†1]

I had asked Dallas to look it over, and had not heard from him when I sent to you. The corrections I have made, are in pursuance of his suggestions. I have no fancy of my own to gratify, and only wish to do what is most acceptable to poor Thackeray's friends.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

G. Smith Esquire

To THOMAS BEARD, 16 JANUARY 1864

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Place | Maida Hill | W. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Sixteenth January 1864

My Dear Beard

I hear from John (who is down here) of your having been at the office.

I should have written, days ago, to congratulate my dear old friend on the termination of his worst anxieties, but that I had a misgiving—founded on not hearing from you—that the appointment[†2] might not be finally concluded. Said misgiving being now at rest, I shake hands heartily upon it, and report that we have been in great excitement here about it—all of us—and that I have rarely been better pleased in my life.

We shall probably come to Town before the middle of February, for three or four months. Then the celebrated fatted calf must be killed in honour of the Court Newsman. To whom, all loves and regards and congratulations from all sides of Gad's Hill, for the present.

Have you looked for chambers in Buckingham Street, Adelphi? There are a good many in that street (I lived in it once),[†3] and I should say not dear. Or, I think you might find cheerful rooms (and also not dear) high up in a house on the Adelphi Terrace.

Ever My Dear Beard | Heartily Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To THOMAS DIXON,[†1] 16 JANUARY 1864*

MS University of Kentucky. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Sixteenth January 1864

Dear Sir

In reply to your note, I beg that you will do me the favour to read the enclosed and forward it to its destination. I would not give you the trouble but that you have unconsciously imitated the example of Mr. Bewick's daughters,[†2] in giving me no address, as theirs, which I can hopefully put on the superscription of a posted letter.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Thomas Dixon

To MARCUS STONE, [16 JANUARY 1864]

Envelope listed in David J. Holmes catalogue, No. 21. Address: Marcus Stone Esquire | Russell House | Tavistock Square | London | W.C. PM 16 Jan 64.

To JOHN THOMPSON, 18 JANUARY 1864*

MS Walter T. Spencer. Address: John Thompson. | Charles Dickens Esquire | 1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park | London. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Eighteenth January 1864

Dr. John. I shall be at the office tomorrow (Tuesday) afternoon. I don't want my office-room fire, but light the fire in the little drawing room at about 3 o'Clock.

CD.

To THOMAS BEARD, 19 JANUARY 1864

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | F Carr Beard Esquire | 44 Welbeck Street | W.

Athenaeum | Tuesday Night
Nineteenth January 1864

My Dear Beard

I don't want you to miss me,—as I fear you will, if you go by John's imperfect knowledge of my movements. I shall be at the office tomorrow, from 10 till 2, when we have a Guild meeting, of which I must make short work as I have to go to Kingston at 3 to dinner. On Thursday morning, if Thursday should suit you better, I will be ready for you at any hour of which you give me notice, after 10.

I feel pretty sure that you could not do better than in the old Guild rooms.[†1] They are the snuggest little chambers I know—a complete little house—and thoroughly cheerful.

Ever heartily
CD.

To GEORGE RUSSELL, 20 JANUARY 1864*

MS Marjorie, Lady Russell.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Twentieth January 1864

My Dear Russell

I have a letter from Dallas of the Garrick which I should like you to see before I answer it. I shall be here until half past one to day, or from ten to one tomorrow. Can you call?

Faithfully Yours ever
CHARLES DICKENS

George Russell Esquire

To TRACY TURNERELLI,[†2] 20 JANUARY 1864*

MS Th. Siqveland, Consul General for Norway. Address: Tracy Turnerelli Esquire | Belleville | The Vale | Ramsgate.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Twentieth January 1864

My Dear Sir

I beg to send you the twelve stamps, and my best wishes for the prosperity of your excellent endeavour.[†3] But I must beg you not to press upon me your request for the use of my name, as it is my constant endeavour to keep the said name out of print as much as I can, and to avoid obtruding it unnecessarily.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Tracy Turnerelli Esquire

To THOMAS BEARD, [21 JANUARY 1864]

Envelope (MS Dickens House). Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | F. Carr Beard Esquire | 44 Welbeck Street | Cavendish Square | W. PM Jan 21 64. Mourning paper.

To JOSHUA FAYLE,[†1] 21 JANUARY 1864

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Twenty First January 1864

Dear Sir

In reply to your questions, I beg to inform you that the descriptions in Oliver Twist and Barnaby Rudge[†2] are ideal, but are founded on close observation and reflection. The Lewes Fair description[†3] is built on actual facts, but not by me. In any file of the Times for the year (to which I have no clue at hand) when the Mannings were executed, you will find a letter from me, with my name attached, describing the horrors of a public execution in London, and the unimpressible and degraded crowd that it attracts.[†4] Distinguish, if you please, in quoting me, between Public Executions and Capital Punishment. I should be glad to abolish both, if I knew what to do with the Savages of civilization. As I do not, I would rid Society of them, when they shed blood, in a very solemn manner but would bar out the present audience.[†5]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To W. H. WILLS, 24 JANUARY 1864*

MS Huntington Library. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Twenty Fourth January 1864

My Dear Wills. Not long ago, I had a great destruction of old Pass-books, and I doubt if I can verify those figures without going to Coutts's. On Wednesday morning I will do so, if I have no guide in my strong box at the office. It is a question with me, however, whether it would not be gracious to take Low's offer of £1,000:[†6] strictly stipulating that it is not a precedent but is exceptionally taken, in concession to the difficulties of the (American) times.[†7]

Will you let John leave the enclosed at Coutts's.

I am delighted to hear of the noble balance for the end of this month.[†1] It will carry me over my embellishments and Indian outfits, gallantly.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To WILKIE COLLINS, 25 JANUARY 1864

Text from MDGH, II, 209 checked from MS Sotheby's, April 1968.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Twenty Fifth January 1864.

My Dear Wilkie.

I am horribly behind hand in answering your welcome letter;[†2] but I have been so busy, and have had the house so full for Xmas and the New Year, and have had so much to see to—and to pay for—in getting Frank out to India, that I have not been able to settle down to a regular long letter.—Which I mean this to be, but which it may not turn out to be, after all.

First, I will answer your enquiries about the Xmas No. and the new book. The Xmas No. has been the greatest success of all; has shot ahead of last year; has sold about 220,000; and has made the name of Mrs. Lirriper so swiftly and domestic[ally][†3] famous as never was. I had a very strong belief in her when I wrote about her, finding that she made a great effect upon me; but she certainly has gone beyond my hopes. (Probably you know nothing about her? which is a very unpleasant consideration). Of the new book, I have done the two first Nos, and am now beginning the third.[†4] It is a combination of drollery with romance which requires a deal of pains and a perfect throwing away of points that might be amplified; but I hope it is very good. I confess, in short, that I think it is. Strange to say I fel[t][†3] at first quite dazed in getting back to the large canvas and the big brushes;[†5] and even now, I have a sensation as of acting at the San Carlo[†6] after Tavistock House, which I could hardly have supposed would have come upon so old a stager.

You will have read about poor Thackeray's death—sudden, and yet not sudden, for he had long been alarmingly ill. At the solicitation of Mr. Smith and some of his friends, I have done what I would most gladly have excused myself from doing, if I felt I could—written a couple of pages about him in what was his own Magazine.

Therein I have tried—so far as I could, with his mother and children before me—to avoid the fulsome and injudicious trash that has been written about him in the papers,[†1] and delicately to suggest the two points in his character as a literary man that were bad for the literary cause.[†2] Happily (I suppose) you can have no idea of the vile stuff that has been written: the scribes particularly dwelling on his having been "a gentleman", "a great gentleman", and the like[†3]—as if the rest of us were of the tinker tribe; and also on his wonderful gift of putting all people and all companies at their ease; at their perfect repose, enjoyment, and genial ease—which is much as if they should praise me, being dead, for having always lived with my wife. Of course the natural result is, that everybody else begins to disparage the poor fellow, and that people who would have beslavered him living, begin to bespatter him dead.

The Forsters have got into their new house[†4] which has instantly taken them both by the throat, chest, and nose, and caused them excruciating torments. Yet it is impossible to persuade Forster (because he has settled it otherwise) that the walls are not wet. I asked him if they were dry, why they were not going to be papered for 12 months? At which he made pensive and abstracted references to totally different subjects. I don't know what it may come out like, when it is papered and carpeted and furnished in apple-pie order; but at present (we dined there the other day) it is something between a government office and a hospital. And they look as if they were put in at Six and Sixpence a week to take care of it. It has every blessing in it that can emanate from Cubitt's,[†5] and yet I would rather have Leech's house.[†6]

We think of taking a place in town next month, and remaining until June. Whether we can get any place for simply enormous terms, is not yet at all clear. Reade was down here for New Year's Day, and is going to furnish two houses in May Fair, for season-letting. But somehow I think I would rather not have him for a landlord. He told Georgina as an illustration of the various kinds of knowledge sifted into Hard Cash, that before beginning it, he had, expressly for the purpose "read five hundred books, and examined forty five witnesses"![†1]

Wills is in his usual force, but his brother[†2] seems to have struck into the road down which the poor sister[†3] went. George Russell has been down here, to impart frightful conspiracies against the peace of mind of the Garrick. I have joined the gloomy band, and have been duly sworn to Sir Charles-Taylor[†4]-extermination.[†5] We meet, disguised, in the dead of night, in the Cloisters of Westminster Abbey. Palgrave Simpson[†6] I saw at the Athenaeum last Tuesday, with the stuff on his moustache (which smells of Tonquin bean)[†7] coming off, and sticking to the paper he was reading. He was very nice, as he always is, and asked for news of you. Charles Ward[†8] I saw at Coutts's last Thursday, coming towards me with his back confidentially bent, and a letter from you in his hand. Our charming and capable little cook is going away, because her health is bad. Alfred is doing wonderfully well in the City,[†9] and is posted into a very responsible place, over four Senior heads, and will probably go out to China within a year.[†10] Beard is made Court Newsman, am truly happy to say (it is worth full four hundred a year), and is going to take the old Guild Chambers to live in, and is delightfully picked up by sunshine. Frank Beard, I fear, does not improve in worldly circumstances, or in a judicious handling of the circumstances that do come in his way. A.Y.R. was rather dropped[†11] by Reade, but has remained stationary since he finished. When you come back, in the early vegetable [Cov][†12]ent Garden time, the mutton shall be punished and the Rosy drained in the halls of AYR aforesaid.

Concerning the Italian experiment,[†13] De la Rue is more hopeful than you. He and his bank are closely leagued with the powers at Turin, and he had long been devoted to Cavour;[†14] but he gave me the strongest assurances (with illustrations) of the fusion between place and place, and of the blending of small mutually antagonistic characters, into one national character, progressing cheeringly and certainly. Of course there must be discouragements and discrepancies in the first struggles of a country previously so degraded and enslaved. And the time, as yet, has been very very short.

I should like to have a day with you at the Coliseum, and on the Appian Way, and among the tombs, and with the Orvieto.[†1] But Rome and I are wide asunder, physically, as well as morally. I should like to see the Butler contemplating the gory horrors on the walls of St. Stefano Rotondo,[†2] and also the models on the steps of the Trinita del Monte.[†3] I wonder whether the dramatic stable where we saw the Marionetti[†4] still receives the Roman public. And Lord! when I think of you in that hotel, how I think of poor dear Egg in the long front drawing room giving on the Piazza, posting up that wonderful necromantic volume which we never shall see opened![†5]

The Shakespeare Committee (of which I am ashamed, and which I have never attended) is tumbling to pieces.[†6] The best thing it could possibly do. The original author of The Ticket of Leave Man,[†7] accompanied by Theodore Martin[†8] and Shirley Brooks[†9] Esquires, has retired on defeat of a motion for "an endowed Shakespeare Theatre".[†10] Of which, conceive the hideous dreariness! I wonder whether its[†11] wicked, not to [take][†12] to the motion of penal servitude to Shakespeare for life. If the love of the wretch who cannot take to this, be conveyable, without contamination to the Butler, please present it. Likewise, kind remembrances to the Missis,[†13] from the Venerable Grand Patient—who has no room for signature

Ever my Dear Wilkie | Affecy. Yours

CD.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 27 JANUARY 1864

Text from N, III, 379.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Twenty-Seventh January 1864

Sir

I feel much indebted to you for your obliging offer to dedicate your intended book to me, but I beg you to excuse my not accepting the compliment. I do not appreciate such proposals the less, because I often decline them.

Faithfully yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 28 JANUARY 1864*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Night Twenty Eighth Jany.[†1] 1864

My Dearest Georgy.

Having a good deal to do for the office to day and having no time to work at my book, I started off in an incredible manner, and looked at divers houses— among others, of course,[†2] at Marguerite's.[†3] It is in Piccadilly, opposite St. James's Hall.[†4] In excessively good order—exceedingly convenient (except dark kitchen), but wouldn't do. It is over a Tobacconists's. I saw a little house in Park Square East, next the old Diorama,[†5] cheerful, and with two most delightful bedrooms and a pleasant drawing room, but with a dining room like a cheerful Sedan chair. Nothing in Piccadilly. Nothing in Oxford Street, or on the whole line behind it to the top of Montague Square, and thence to the Edgware Road. A house in Welbeck Street may do. I will look at it tomorrow. I have made the acquaintance of a house agent in Regent Street Langham Place,[†6] who is anxious to bait his hook with the Inimitable, and seems well up to his work. "Apartments" everywhere; but to the horrible talk of asking what they consist of, the undersigned is wholly unequal. Gloom and depression of the profoundest character, succeeded to this morning's work. I dined with Ouvry!

and
Robert Chambers!![†7]

From the latter of whom I learnt that "Nina"[†1] has been nearly dead, and is now only turning the corner.

Love to Marguerite and boys. | Ever affecy
CD.

Forster flitted about the Athenaeum as I conversed in the hall with all sorts and conditions of men[†2]—and pretended not to see me—but I saw in every hair of his whisker (left hand one) that he saw Nothing Else.

February

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 3 FEBRUARY 1864*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Third February 1864

My Dearest Georgy.

I have seen the house in Gloucester Place Hyde Park,[†3] and have offered £130 from Saturday February 13th. to Saturday June 4th. This is at the rate of £8 per week. I cannot have an answer before Friday morning—here.[†4]

The same agents begged me to look at a house (belonging to a very pleasant old lady) No. 80 Gloucester Crescent Westbourne Terrace. It is rather far, being behind that new church above Lehmann's, and is smaller than the Gloucester Place House; but is extremely pretty, comfortable, and snug. I think it might be got for about Six Guineas a week. The Drawing rooms are extremely pleasant; and the whole house is furnished well, is airy, light, and pretty. I would immediately offer for it, if the other offer were refused. But I should like you, or Mary, or both, to see it first. Therefore if I telegraph to you on Friday, "Come", come by the Gravesend Express on Saturday morning. I will come down to dinner on Saturday. My little run for a week, I mean to postpone until next month.

—Here Fredk. Chapman came to ask me to go and look at the upper part of a house in Albemarle Street Piccadilly,[†5] which could be had for our time and at my figure. I went. Neat Drawing room with 3 windows, small dining room with folding doors, small bedroom beyond. Over that, 3 bedrooms, over them, 2 Servants' bedrooms. [†a]The ground floor held professionally—an awful circumstance —by

HARRINGTON TUKE![†6]

—but the wretched Being would probably lend it to us, whenever we wanted it.[†a†7] Landlady's housemaid to remain (in a third servants-bedroom not counted) to attend said Medical Donkey. Situation, of course undesirable.

Kitchen, said to be very good and light. Rooms, necessarily squeezy, but all light. May be worth looking at, if Gloucester Place offer refused.

Enclosed unexpected letter from Plorn this morning.

Love to all | Ever affecy

CD.

To GEORGE SMITH, 3 FEBRUARY 1864*

MS John Murray (Publishers) Ltd. Address: Private | George Smith Esquire | 45 Pall Mall.
Mourning envelope.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Third February 1864

My Dear Sir

Being here, I did not receive your obliging letter and its enclosure, until last night. Allow me to return the latter. I cannot take money for that little tribute.

My Dear Sir | Always Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

George Smith Esquire

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 3 FEBRUARY 1864

Extract in unidentified catalogue, Guildhall Museum, Rochester.

I should be happy to dine with you on Saturday, but for this reason:— I think there are a few men in the Committee[†1] and perhaps outside it in the club, who may be absurd enough to suppose that I seek the distinction of presiding on the Dinner Day.[†2] And for this reason plainly I would rather not appear to propitiate anybody, or put myself at all in the club's way, until that great occasion is over.

To MAJOR R. W. CARTER,[†3] [?EARLY FEBRUARY 1864]

Mention in D, VII (1911), 227. Date: CD was replying to Carter's letter of 4 Jan 64 MS Farrer & Co.), from Calcutta.

Replying to Carter's news of Walter Dickens's death on 31 Dec 63; and sending him the inscription for Walter's tombstone.[†4]

To JOHN W. EHNINGER,[†1] 4 FEBRUARY 1864*

MS Dickens House. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Fourth February 1864

Dear Sir

I send you half a dozen autographs in aid of the cause you so modestly and generously advocate.[†2]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John. W. Ehninger Esquire

To EPES SARGENT,[†3] 4 FEBRUARY 1864*

MS Mr Arnold U. Ziegler. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Fourth February 1864

My Dear Sir

On returning home after a short absence I hasten to inform you, with many thanks, that I have safely received your book[†4] exactly as you wished me to receive it, and that I promise myself the pleasure of beginning it tomorrow.

Your letter is extremely pleasant to me, and brings back old times[†5] across the Atlantic.[†6]

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Epes Sargent Esquire

To BARON BERNHARD TAUCHNITZ, 4 FEBRUARY 1864

Extract in Curt Otto, Der Verlag Bernhard Tauchnitz, 1837-1912, p. 57.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT,
Thursday, February 4th, 1864.

My new book will be in 20 monthly numbers. It will be published in the same form, and will be of the same length, as the original editions of Pickwick,

Copperfield, Bleak House, Little Dorrit, etc. The first number will be published at the end of April. You may be sure that the right of reprinting in Germany will be yours on your own terms.[†1]

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 8 FEBRUARY 1864*

MS Morgan Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Monday Eighth February 1864

My Dearest Georgy.

They have taken the offer for the house 57 Gloucester Place,[†2] and I have signed the Agreement and paid the first Instalment. Write to Mr. George Wilson,[†3] and make an appointment for Matilda[†4] to go over the Inventory early on Saturday morning (He says they will make a very easy business of it, having let us a house before). I think Matilda had best sleep here, as I suppose you will, on Friday night. You are to name the hour on Saturday morning, observe, in writing to Mr. George Wilson.

John says he will post you his list of linen here, tomorrow night. He seems to have no present notion about it.

I have been interrupted again today, and am almost beside myself.[†5]

Coals and baths shall be duly looked to.

Ever affecy

CD.

To W. C. MACREADY, 10 FEBRUARY 1864*

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Tenth February 1864.

My Dearest Macready

I ought to have written to you long ago; but my new book and various distractions have made me (which was quite superfluous, for I was bad enough before), the worst of correspondents.

My poor boy died in a very few moments,[†6] and with his mind full of coming home. I have reason to believe (but I do not tell them so, on Georgina's account)[†1] that if he had lived, as I could have wished he had, to see home again, he might probably have dropped dead at the door.

It grieves me to learn that you have been so ill. But I hope and trust that "have been" is now the right phrase, and that you are up again in the old brave Macbeth manner.

I am touched by your having so felt the little paper about poor Thackeray. The injudicious and absurd writing of some of his—miscalled—friends had made it a very difficult thing to do, with his children looking on.

Until June, our address will be in London;—57 Gloucester Place, Hyde Park Gardens, W.

I would rather have heard from you as I have done this morning, than from any man alive. God bless you.

With kindest love to Mrs. Macready and all the house

Ever My Dearest Macready | Your most affectionate friend

CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 12 FEBRUARY 1864

MS Morgan Library. On Gad's Hill headed mourning paper.

57 Gloucester Place, Hyde Park Gardens
Friday Twelfth February 1864

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I have taken this house until June, to be in town when my book is preparing and begins to come out.

I cannot tell you my Dearest Friend—and I know I need not—with what feelings I received your affectionate letter this morning, or how dearly I prize it. Let me give you briefly, the circumstances of poor Walter's death.

He had always been in debt, poor boy, and I never could make out how, except that I suppose the Regiment to have been ill looked after by the Colonel. When Charley was in India the two brothers were together for a fortnight, and Charley paid, as he supposed, everything. Yet before he got back to England, there was more to pay. This led in course of time to Walter's writing to me to say that his difficulties had led to his being placed low on the list for a Company (though he had never failed in exactness in his duty on any occasion), and that he had put his name down for home service. I wrote to him urging the folly of that proceeding and its reduction of his Income, and pointed out to him that although I was very sorry, I was not angry, and that he must now, as a matter of common reason and justice to his other brothers, live upon his own means. Thereupon he wrote to Mary, saying that he had made up his mind to write home no more, "until he was out of debt". So nothing was heard of him for many months. Mary then got—this last Autumn—a short note from him to the effect that he was not well, and would presently write again. Then, about the turn of Christmas, she had another short note from him to say that he had not said how ill he was when he last wrote, for fear of alarming us, but that he had been very ill indeed, and was now packing up to go to Calcutta to be certified by a medical board there, and sent home on sick leave. He said he was "so weak that he could hardly crawl," but otherwise was much better; and he was in joyful expectation of seeing Gad's Hill again. He arrived at Calcutta, from the Station where his regiment was, on the 27th. of December. He was consigned by the Regimental Doctor to the Officers' Hospital there, which is a very fine place. On the last day of the old year at a quarter past 5 in the afternoon he was talking to the other patients about his arrangements for coming home, when he became excited, coughed violently, had a great gush of blood from the mouth, and fell dead;—all this, in a few seconds. It was then found that there was extensive and perfectly incurable aneurism of the Aorta, which had burst. I could have wished it had pleased God to let him see his home again; but I think he would have died at the door.

The immediate cause of his death, his sisters and Charley and I, keep to ourselves; both because his Aunt has the same disorder, and because we observe strong traces of it in one of his brothers.[†1] Another of his brothers, Frank, I sent out to Calcutta on the 20th. of December. He would hear of his brother's death, on touching the shore.

Do not think me unimpressed by certain words in your letter concerning forgiveness and tenderness when I say that I do not claim to have any thing to forgive—that if I had, I hope and believe I would forgive freely—but that a page in my life which once had writing on it, has become absolutely blank, and that it is not in my power to pretend that it has a solitary word upon it.

I am beyond measure interested beforehand, by what you are to tell me. Pray write it as soon as you can.[†2] Do not suppose, that I am unfit to pursue it. I am at work, though in a rather dull slow way for the moment.

On the last night of the old Year I was acting charades with all the children. I had made something to carry, as the Goddess of Discord; and it came into my head as it stood against the wall while I was dressing, that it was like the dismal things that are carried at Funerals. I took a pair of scissors and cut away a quantity of black calico that was upon it, to remove this likeness. But while I was using it, I noticed that its shadow on the wall still had that resemblance, though the thing itself had not. And when I went to bed, it was in my bedroom, and still looked so like, that I took it to pieces before I went to sleep. All this would have been exactly the same, if poor Walter had not died that night. And examining my own mind closely, since I received the news, I recall that at Thackeray's funeral I had sat looking at that very object of which I was reminded. See how easily a marvellours story may be made.

I enclose a line for Mrs. Brown, and am Ever My Dear friend

Your affectionate and grateful

CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS BROWN, [12 FEBRUARY 1864]

Mention in last. Date: no doubt written same day.

To MISS CLARA DIXON,[†1] 12 FEBRUARY 1864*

MS Mr Irving Rosenwater. Address: Miss Clara Dixon | 70 Portsdown Road | Maida Hill | W. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Twelfth February 1864

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Miss Dixon, and regrets that he must class her application among vast numbers of others to which he cannot respond.

To MARCUS STONE, 14 FEBRUARY 1864*

MS Morgan Library. On Gad's Hill headed mourning paper.

57 Gloucester Place, Hyde Park Gardens
Sunday Fourteenth February 1864

My Dear Marcus.

They have been casting new type for my new book, or I should have sent you some print sooner.

Enclosed is the 1st. No.[†2] I hope to get the 2nd.[†3] from the Printer in a day, or two. And the Third[†4] is now under my hand.

I think it will be best for you to read the 1st. two Nos. before we take counsel together.[†5] We will then settle in the first place, what little indication of the story we will have on the cover.[†6] The block for which, will be the first thing to be drawn.[†7] Of course I have now given directions for your name to be put in all future advertisements.[†8]

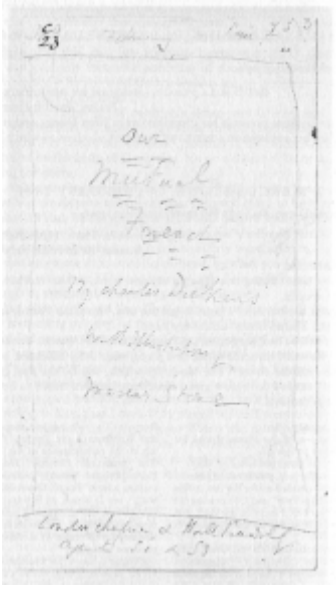
I shall be here to dinner at ½ past 6, every day this week except Tuesday. Will you come and dine one day, when you are ready for consultation.

Ever affecy.

CD.



To THE SECRETARY OF THE ROYAL SOCIETY FOR THE PREVENTION OF CRUELTY TO ANIMALS,[†1] 17 FEBRUARY 1864*

MS University of California, Los Angeles. Address (envelope, MS Mr T. A. B. Corley): The Secretary | of The Royal Society | For the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals | 12 Pall Mall | W. On Gad's Hill headed mourning paper.

57 Glo'ster Place Hyde Park Gardens
Seventeenth February 1864

Sir.

As I am in town until June, my receipt of your letter has been delayed. Moreover, other matters have occupied my attention.

I have a high opinion of the Society you represent, and believe that it does a great deal of good.[†2] But I cannot have the gratification of attending the projected Meeting at Rochester.[†3] The few public engagements of that nature that I have made for the present Season, are the most I can possibly render compatible with my own avocations.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Secretary | of
The Royal Society for

The Prevention of Cruelty to Animals

To LADY MOLESWORTH, 22 FEBRUARY 1864*

MS Swedish Academy, Stockholm. On Gad's Hill headed mourning paper.

57 Gloster Place, Hyde Park Gardens
Monday Twenty Second February 1864.

My Dear Lady Molesworth

I think I had best wait for the small dinner. On the 8th. of March I am going away for a week, but for no longer.

Take care of yourself in this trying weather.

Ever affecy. Yours
CD.

To BARON BERNHARD TAUCHNITZ, 22 FEBRUARY 1864

Extract in Curt Otto, Der Verlag Bernhard Tauchnitz 1837-1912, p. 57.

London, February 22nd. 1864.

I have the pleasure of readily accepting your offer of £—Sterling[†1] for the usual right of republishing my new book. The name will not be announced until about the middle of March. It is intended to publish the first monthly number on the 30th of April.

Charley is very well, and sends you his kindest remembrance and regard. He has two daughters,[†2] of whom the second was born only two or three days ago.

To SIR EDWIN LANDSEER,[†3] 23 FEBRUARY 1864*

MS Private. On Gad's Hill headed mourning paper.

57 Glos'ter Place, Hyde Park Gardens
Twenty Third February 1864

My Dear Edwin Landseer

Many thanks for the little book.[†4] But I cannot say—somehow—I scarcely known why—that it interests me as much as I had expected from Mr. Gladstone's account.[†5] Perhaps it is because the writer does not seem to me at all to understand a child, and is so mightily wise.

Bad weather this, for our Scotch trip!

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To W. T. MITFORD,[†6] 23 FEBRUARY 1864*

MS Mrs W.S. Mitford. Address: W.T. Mitford Esquire MP | 12 Cavendish Square. On Gad's Hill headed mourning paper.

57 Glo'ster Place, Hyde Park Gardens
Tuesday Twenty Third February 1864

Dear Sir

My absence from town delayed my receipt of your letter until last night.

That faithful description of mine to which you refer, is contained in a letter I addressed to the Times on the occasion of the execution of the Mannings, man and wife, at Horsemongers Lane Jail. It was published on the morning after the execution, and was succeeded in a day or two by another.[†7] I have no copies of them, or they should be at your service. Mr. Thackeray, in Fraser's Magazine, described his observation of Courvoisier's execution; at which we were both present.[†1]

The question of Public Executions, I venture to suggest, is not in the least one to theorize about. No man's opinion on the subject (in support of public executions) is worth anything to me unless he has seen the shameful sight. I cannot bear to repeat the experience; but I was outside Newgate last Sunday night at 10 o'Clock, and found the old wicked unimpressible forces in full action.[†2] Two young ladies walked round me, within a few yards of the ground reserved for the scaffold; and the worst class of boys and ruffians in London were already taking their places. The rest of the scene was like a Diabolical Fair.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. T. Mitford Esquire MP.

To MARCUS STONE, 23 FEBRUARY 1864†

MS Morgan Library.

57 Glo'ster Place, Hyde Park Gardens
Tuesday Twenty Third February 1864

My Dear Marcus

I think the design for the cover, excellent, and do not doubt its coming out to perfection. The slight alteration I am going to suggest, originates in a business consideration not to be overlooked.

The word "Our" in the title, must be out in the open, like Mutual Friend; making the Title three distinct long lines—"Our" as big as "Mutual Friend".[†3] This will give you too much design at the bottom. I would therefore take out the Dustman, and put the Wegg and Boffin composition (which is capital), in its place.[†4] I don't want Mr. Inspector or the Murder Reward bill, because those points are sufficiently indicated in the River at the top.[†5] Therefore you can have an indication of the Dustman, in Mr. Inspector's place.[†6] Note, that the Dustman's face should be droll, and not horrible.[†7] Twemlow's elbow will still go out of the frame as it does now, and the same with Lizzie's skirts on the opposite side.[†8] With these changes, work away!

[†a]I have done the St. Andrew Street[†1] place,[†2] and have made it the last Chapter of the 2nd. No.[†3] I will send you a proof when I get it. It is very like, with an imaginary man and an imaginary place in the story.[†a]

Affecy always

CD.

To H.G. ADAMS, 25 FEBRUARY 1864*

MS Dickens House. On mourning paper.

57 Glo'ster Place, Hyde Park Gardens
Thursday Twenty Fifth February 1864

My Dear Mr. Adams.

I am happy to accede to the Committee's request.[†4] And let me thank you personally, for your handsome mention of me in your report.[†5]

Your son[†6] is very much better in the place he has now than in his old department of the Post Office. I congratulate both him and you on the change.

My poor boy in India was coming home on sick leave. One of his brothers would arrive[†7] out in Calcutta, counting upon seeing him after six years, to find that he had been dead a month.

Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

HG Adams Esquire

To JOHN FORSTER, [25 FEBRUARY 1864]

Extract in F, IX, v, 741. Date: 25 Feb 64, according to Forster.

While I was considering what it should be, Marcus, who has done an excellent cover, came to tell me of an extraordinary trade he had found out, through one of his painting requirements. I immediately went with him to Saint Giles's to look at the place, and found—what you will see.[†8]

To CHARLES KENT, 25 FEBRUARY 1864

Mention in Dickens Exhibition catalogue, New Dudley Gallery, 1909; MS 1 p.; dated Glo'ster Place, 25 Feb 64. Address (envelope MS Boston Athenaeum): Private | Charles Kent Esquire | | "Sun" Office | Strand | W.C. PM 25 Feb 64.

To R. J. LANE,[†1] 25 FEBRUARY 1864*

MS Sir John Nicholson. On Gad's Hill headed mourning paper.

57 Glos'ter Place, Hyde Park Gardens
Twenty Fifth February 1864.

My Dear Lane

You have done everything you possibly could do, in reference to that disgraceful publication.[†2] The extraordinary abuse of confidence in the posting about of private letters which I have of late years constantly observed, has moved me to two courses; firstly, to destroy all the letters I receive from private friends, as soon as I have read them;[†3] and secondly to write as short letters as I possibly can.

Macready has been very ill, and is slowly recovering. I doubt the thing's coming in his way, unless some good-natured friend should help him to it.[†4]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard J Lane Esquire

To SIR JAMES EMERSON TENNENT, 26 FEBRUARY 1864*

MS Morgan Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Twenty Sixth February 1864

My Dear Tennent.

I am truly sorry that I cannot have the pleasure of accepting this paper. But it is too much in the nature of a didactic account of a book,[†5] for the purposes of this Journal. And really I think that Mr.

Kelly[†6] might not unnaturally complain of our taking too much from him, and giving him too little in return, in the way of setting off his subject attractively.

Will you kindly convey my thanks to Mr. Howell?[†7] As a mere Review, I think his paper solidly and faithfully done; but that is short of the object here.

Ever Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Sir James Emerson Tennent.

To CHARLES KENT, 27 FEBRUARY 1864*

MS Boston Athenaeum. Address: Private | Charles Kent Esquire | "Sun" Office | Strand | W.C. On Gad's Hill headed mourning paper.

57 Glos'ter Place, Hyde Park Gardens
Saturday Twenty Seventh February 1864

My Dear Kent.

I rather like—as appropriate to all your sub-headings—the title

FOOTPRINTS ON THE ROAD[†1]

I have also thought of it as

FOOTPRINTS ON THE SHORE[†1]

but the first is the better, perhaps.[†2] If you don't like this, or if you see any objection to it, tell me so; then I will cast about again.

Ever Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To GEORGE RUSSELL, 27 FEBRUARY 1864*

MS Marjorie, Lady Russell. Address: George Russell Esquire | Swallowfield | Reading. On Gad's Hill headed mourning paper.

57 Glo'ster Place, Hyde Park Gardens W.
Saturday Twenty Seventh February 1864

My Dear George Russell.

I hope this does not bespeak any weakness in the Reforming cause.[†3] That, of course, is the only thing to care about.

As to the pros and cons—the live pros and cons in the Committee, I mean—it is really not worth while to know more, and on the whole I very clearly decide that it is not worth my while. But I shall be very glad to know how you think you stand as to the General Meeting.[†4] Can you come and dine with us (alone) on Tuesday at half past 6 sharp? If you should be unfortunately engaged and should tell me so, I will be at the Athenæum to meet you, at ½ past 4 on that day.

Faithfully Yours ever
CHARLES DICKENS

George Russell Esquire

To MARCUS STONE, 27 FEBRUARY 1864*

MS Morgan Library. On Gad's Hill headed mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Night, Twenty Seventh Feby. 1864

My Dear Marcus

All perfectly right. Alterations quite satisfactory. Everything very pretty. I am afraid Dalziells[†1] will make rough work of some of those fine lines, mais nous verrons.

Ever affecy.
CD.

I have detained your messenger while I dined[†2]

To A. J. TRIX,[†3] 27 FEBRUARY 1864

Extract in Phillips catalogue, Aug 1983; MS 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill Place, 27 Feb 64; addressed A. J. Trix. On mourning paper.

Rejecting a paper for All the Year Round, although your sea experience is plainly and unaffectedly told, it is not sufficiently novel or striking.

To MRS [?BENZON],[†4] FEBRUARY 1864

Mention in Union Square Book Shop catalogue, Vol. 5, No. 3 (1930); MS 1 p.; dated Feb 64; addressed "My dear Mrs. 'Bunyon'".

March

To CHARLES KNIGHT, 1 MARCH 1864

Text from MDGH, II, 212-13.

57, Gloucester Place, W.,
Tuesday, March 1st, 1864.

My dear Knight,

We knew of your being in the Isle of Wight, and had said that we should have this year to drink your health in your absence. Rely on my being always ready and happy to renew our old friendship in the flesh. In the spirit it needs no renewal, because it has no break.

†a Ah, poor Mrs. White!†1 A sad, sad story! It is better for poor White that that little churchyard by the sea†2 received his ashes a while ago, than that he should have lived to this time.†a

My poor boy was on his way home from an up-country station, on sick leave. He had been very ill, but was not so at the time. He was talking to some brother-officers in the Calcutta hospital about his preparations for home, when he suddenly became excited, had a rush of blood from the mouth, and was dead. †a His brother Frank would arrive out at Calcutta, expecting to see him after six years, and he would have been dead a month.†a

My "working life" is resolving itself at the present into another book, in twenty green leaves.†3 You work like a Trojan at Ventnor, but you do that everywhere; and that's why you are so young.

Mary and Georgina unite in kindest regard to you, and to Mrs. Knight, and to your daughters. So do I. And I am ever, my dear Knight,

Affectionately yours

[CD]

P.S.—Serene View! What a placid address!

To MESSRS DALZIEL BROTHERS, 2 MARCH 1864*

MS Fales Library, New York University. Address: Favored by Fredk. Chapman Esquire | Messrs. Dalziell Brothers. On Gad's Hill headed mourning paper.

57 Glo'ster Place, Hyde Park Gardens, W.
Wednesday Second March 1864.

Dear Sirs

As I am anxious to give Mr. Stone's illustrations to my new book every possible chance, I trouble you with the assurance that I shall feel really obliged to you if you will have the kindness to take the engraving of them under your especial protection.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Dalziell Brothers.

To JOHN HUMPHERY,[†1] 2 MARCH 1864

Extracts in Sotheby catalogue, July 1983 and Sophie Dupré Autographs catalogue, 1985; MS 2 pp; dated, according to Dupré, 2 Mar 64, from Office of AYR, but on Gad's Hill Place headed paper. Address: misspelt "Humphrey" either by CD or cataloguer: see below.

Dear Sir

Your brother Mr. William Humphery has informed me that you will be so very kind as to bid for me at the sale of wine tomorrow.... Not to make your obliging service a difficult one or to encumber you with details I will confine myself to saying that I shall be glad to lay out from £100 to £150 on the '34 Port taking the smaller range if it should go at very high prices and the larger if it should go at eight or nine guineas per dozen.[†2]

John Humphery Esquire

To MISS ANNE MANNING,[†3] 2 MARCH 1864*

MS Walter T. Spencer. Address (MS envelope, Dickens House): Miss Manning | Reigate | Surrey. PM 2 Mar 64.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Wednesday Second March 1864

Dear Madam

I am afraid you will have though me unmindful of your agreeable note, and of the clever book[†4] accompanying it: which I read with much pleasure. If you have deemed me unworthy of either because I have so long delayed these present thanks to you for both, I beg you to restore me to my old place in your good opinion, on receiving my assurance that I am very penitent.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To THE REV. T. W. GOLDHAWK,[†5] 3 MARCH 1864

Extract in Dodd Mead, A Book of Seasonable Nuggets, Large and Small; MS 1 p.; dated 3 Mar 64; addressed The Rev. T.W. Goldhawk.

With this I have the pleasure of sending you a copy of David Copperfield.

To THE REV. W. C. SAWYER, 3 MARCH 1864

Extract in Walter M. Hill catalogue No. 77 (Nov 1918); MS 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill Place, Thursday, 3 Mar 64; addressed The Rev. W. C. Sawyer.

I have decided to let Edward go,[†1] and do not doubt that he will be the better for it.[†2]

To CHARLES DICKENS JNR, 4 MARCH 1864*

MS Mr John Siegel. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Saturday Fourth March 1864

My Dear Charles.

I would have cheerfully gone out of my way to preside for the Rowing-Club,[†3] if I had known of their wish a little sooner. But I am unfortunately disabled from doing so, by having replied to several similar invitations that all the engagements of that nature I can reasonably make for this season, I have already made. If I were to gratify my inclination in this instance, I should give offence elsewhere and fall into inconsistencies. But report to the gentlemen concerned, that I will readily consider them as having a claim on me (if they should care to urge it) "next time".[†4]

Affectionately always
CHARLES DICKENS

To [?CHARLES EDMONDS],[†5] 4 MARCH 1864*

MS Public Library of Newark, New Jersy.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Night Fourth March 1864

The most portable edition of Boccaccio's Decameron, in English[†6]

CHARLES DICKENS

To MARCUS STONE, 4 MARCH 1864*

MS Morgan Library. On Gad's Hill headed mourning paper.

57 Glo'ster Place, Hyde Park Gardens
Friday Fourth March 1864

My Dear Marcus.

The little chapter descriptive of your friend's place of business,[†1] begins at page 58 of the enclosed proof. As I have not got it by me in duplicate, please bring it back on Sunday, after having read it.

Affecy.

CD.

To R. J. LANE, 5 MARCH 1864*

MS Sir John Nicholson. On Gad's Hill headed mourning paper.

57 Glo'ster Place, Hyde Park Gardens.
Saturday Fifth March 1864

My Dear Lane.

I have decided not to pursue this subject[†2] in All The Year Round, but I rather think that the culprit will shortly find himself pilloried elsewhere. Such information as I could give against him, I have freely given, on application.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To EDMUND OLLIER, [EARLY] MARCH 1864

MS Yale University Library. Date: Mar according to Ollier (see below);[†3] early that month to give him time to write "Working Men's Clubs".

I want the article on Working Men's Clubs,[†4] to refer back to "the Poor Man and his beer"[†5] in No. 1, and to maintain the principle involved in that effort.

Also, emphatically to shew that trustfulness is at the bottom of all social Institutions, and that to trust a man, as one of a body of men, is to place him under a wholesome restraint of social opinion, and is a very much better thing than to make a baby of him.

Also, to point out that the rejection of beer in this club, tobacco in that club, dancing or what not in another club, are instances that such clubs are founded on mere whims, and therefore cannot successfully address human nature in the general, and hope to last.

Also, again to urge that Patronage is the curse and blight of all such endeavours, and to impress upon the working men that they must originate and manage for themselves. And to ask them the question Can they possibly shew their detestation of Drunkenness better, or better strive to get rid of it from among them, than to make it a hopeless disqualification in all their clubs, and a reason for expulsion.

Also, to encourage them to declare to themselves[†1] and their fellow workingmen that they want social rest and social recreation for themselves and their families; and that these clubs are intended for that laudable and necessary purpose and do not need educational pretences or flourishes. Do not let them be afraid or ashamed of wanting to be amused and pleased.

To MRS BENZON, 7 MARCH 1864

Mention in J. A. Stargardt catalogue (1958); dated 7 Mar 64; addressed Mrs Benzon.

To A CHIMNEY-SWEEP, 15 MARCH 1864

Text from N, III, 383.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
15th March 1864

Dear Sir,

Since you last swept my study chimney it has developed some peculiar eccentricities. Smoke has indeed proceeded from the cowl that surmounts it, but it has seemingly been undergoing internal agonies of a most distressing nature, and pours forth disastrous volumes of swarthy vapour into the apartment wherein I habitually labour. Although a comforting relief probably to the chimney, this is not altogether convenient to me. If you can send a confidential sub-sweep, with whom the chimney can engage in social intercourse, it might be induced to disclose the cause of the departure from its normal functions.

Faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To GEORGE HOLSWORTH, 15 MARCH 1864

Mention in New Dudley Gallery catalogue of Dickens Exhibition (1908); MS 1 p.; dated 57 Gloucester Place, 15 Mar 64; addressed George Holsworth.

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 15 MARCH 1864

MS Lytton Papers. On Gad's Hill headed mourning paper.

57 Glo'ster Place, Hyde Park Gardens
Tuesday Fifteenth March 1864

My Dear Bulwer Lytton

I want to tell you how deeply I have been impressed by the Boatman.[†1] It haunts me as only a beautiful and profound thing can. The lines are always running in my head, as the river runs with me.

Ever Yours
CD.

To THE LORD CHIEF BARON,[†2] 15 MARCH 1864

Text from MDGH, II, 214.

57 Glo'ster Place
Tuesday Fifteenth March, 1864

My Dear Chief Baron

Many thanks for your kind letter.

Your answer concerning poor Thackeray I will duly make known to the active spirit in that matter, Mr. Shirley Brooks.

Your kind invitation to me to come and see you and yours,[†3] and hear the nightingales, I shall not fail to discuss with Forster, and with an eye to spring. I expect to see him presently; the rather as I found a note from him when I came back yesterday, describing himself somewhat gloomily as not having been well, and as feeling a little out of heart.

It is not out of order, I hope, to remark that you have been much in my thoughts and on my lips lately? For I really have not been able to repress my admiration of the vigorous dignity and sense and spirit, with which one of the best of judges set right one of the dullest of juries in a recent case.[†4]

Believe me ever | Very faithfully Yours

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To GEORGE RUSSELL, 16 MARCH 1864*

MS Marjorie, Lady Russell. Address: George Russell Esquire | 18 St. James's Place | W. On Gad's Hill headed mourning paper.

57 Glo'ster Place, Hyde Park Gardens W.
Sixteenth March 1864

My Dear George Russell

I am sorry that my Proxy for that election has gone to Mr. Salmon,[†1] the founder of the place.[†2]

Early notice shall be given you of Wilkie's return. I am looking out for him.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To BENJAMIN LILLIE, 17 MARCH 1864*

MS Mr Walter F. Lillie.

57 Glo'ster Place Hyde Park Gardens W
Thursday Evening Seventeenth March 1864

Dr. Mr. Lillie

I enclose you a cheque for your bill.[†3] Please to return the latter, receipted.

In all respects I am perfectly satisfied both with the work[†4] and with the charges. This has invariably been the case in all the dealings I have had with you, and it is a great satisfaction to me to be able to tell you so.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To HENRY MORLEY, [17 MARCH 1864]

Mention in To Wills, 18 Mar 64. Date: written previous day.

To W. HEPWORTH DIXON, 18 MARCH 1864*

MS Rosenbach Museum and Library. On Gad's Hill headed mourning paper.

57 Glo'ster Place, Hyde Park Gardens W.
Friday Eighteenth March 1864

My Dear Dixon.

I beg to enclose you my subscription of Ten Pounds towards the Shakespeare Monument; (in which, or in any other such Monument, I dont believe!) I also send an order for £5 to be entered as the subscription of

Charles and Mary Cowden Clarke

The order is addressed to Mr. Novello[†1] of Dean Street, who, they tell me, will pay it.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To W. H. WILLS, 18 MARCH 1864

MS Huntington Library. On Gad's Hill headed mourning paper.

57 Gloster Place
ChapterFriday Eighteenth March 1864

My Dear Wills

I hope you won't send the price of Brandy up, for I want to buy a cask.

Yesterday I went to the office and wrote to Morley about the No.[†2] begging him to send me the Proofs here. For I have given a meeting to Forster to day, who wants to see me. All is right and straight, no doubt. We will take counsel together (I can come to you any day in the afternoon, mind) when Lillie's estimate comes in. The office at present is simply hideous.

I send you the first 3 Nos. of Our Mutual Friend. When you have done with them let me have them again, as they contain my marks for the Printer.

Edmund wrote to ask me what I thought of his going to the Volunteer night-attack and defence in Kent. I told him he might try it.[†3]

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To W. H. WILLS, 19 MARCH 1864*

MS Huntington Library. On Gad's Hill headed mourning paper.

57 Glo'ster Place

Saturday Nineteenth March 1864

My Dear Wills.

I am not at all clear about parting with the No. so soon; and to tell you the truth, my sympathy with "poor Gunther"[†4] in his misfortune is so extremely slight, that I don't care twopence about holding him to his agreement.

I will come round to you (I am not certain when Sampson Low ought to have his first proof),[†5] as soon as I can get round. To day, or tomorrow. I am anxious to work over a certain point of Our Mutual Friend before I tackle the office proofs—which still await me.

Stick to the Brandy Bottle and all good living.

Ever

CD.

To HENRY MORLEY, 21 MARCH 1864*

MS Mr Vincent Starrett. On Gad's Hill headed mourning paper.

57 Glo'ster Place, Hyde Park Gardens

Monday Twenty First March 1864

My Dear Morley.

Will you kindly write a paper upon Forster's book,[†1] for A.Y.R. As I have no doubt that you know the book already, I need not indicate its merits. I send it herewith. I have been thinking of some such title as

H O W K I N G C H A R L E S ' S H E A D L O O S E N E D .[†2]

Ever Yours

CD

To CHARLES ELLIS, 22 MARCH 1864*

MS Mr R. Tomlinson. On Gad's Hill headed mourning paper.

57 Glos'ter Place Hyde Park Gardens W.
Tuesday Twenty Second March 1864

Dear Mr. Ellis

I enclose you a cheque for £40..0..0 in discharge of the enclosed account.[†3] I have not had the bill for the last quarter cask of sherry.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To GEORGE RUSSELL, 22 MARCH 1864*

MS Marjorie, Lady Russell. Address: George Russell Esquire | 18 St. James's Place | S. W.
On Gad's Hill headed mourning paper.

57 Gloster Place, Hyde Park Gardens
Tuesday Night Twenty Second March 1864

My Dear George Russell

Wilkie was expected home yesterday, but has not yet reported himself.

Can you find out for me how the probabilities stand with reference to the election of young Stone, the painter? He tells me this afternoon that he comes up, on Saturday Week. I should be very sorry that he went wrong for want of a word of advice from me. There is no reason on the earth why they should not elect him, and there is the reason of his own ability and manner and character why they should.[†4] But "that's no rule", as the Ghost of Giles Scroggins said.[†5]

Any information will be thankfully received.

For the rest,—"my soul's in arms and eager for the fray".[†1]

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

George Russell Esquire

To MRS NICHOLS, 23 MARCH 1864

Text from N, III, 383.

57 Glo'ster Place, Hyde Park Gardens
Wednesday, Twenty-Third March 1864

Dear Madam,

I will not give you the trouble, in your present state of health, of coming to me, but will call on you on Sunday at 4 o'clock.

Dear Madam | Very faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To RICHARD BENTLEY,[†2] 24 MARCH 1864*

MS Berg Collection. On mourning paper.

Private[†3]

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Twenty Fourth March 1864

Dear Sir

I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your obliging letter, and to assure you that I appreciate and reciprocate the good-feeling expressed in it.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esquire

To GEORGE RUSSELL, 25 MARCH 1864*

MS Marjorie, Lady Russell. Address: George Russell Esquire | 18 St. James's Place | S.W.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Night Twenty Fifth March 1864

My Dear George Russell

Many thanks for your letter. I write hastily to let you know that Wilkie Collins is at home in Harley Street.

Ever Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, 29 MARCH 1864

MS Victoria & Albert Museum. On Gad's Hill headed mourning paper.

57 Glo'ster Place Hyde Park Gardens W.
Tuesday Twenty Ninth March 1864

My Dear Forster. I meant to write to you last night; but—to enable Wills to get away—I had to read a book of Fitzgerald's[†1] through, before I went to bed. Otherwise I could not decide upon a proposal he has made to us.[†2]

My dear fellow, Wednesday the 6th. is the day of the Printers' Pension Dinner! And what can the wretched Chairman do for his own pleasure, on that dismal occasion!![†3]

But let us try another day, either at your house or at this. Say at this. I will take counsel with Mary and Georgina (and Goldsmid[†4] and the London University —which suddenly comes into my mind),[†5] and one of them shall write to Mrs. Forster with a good broad margin, to night.

Concerning Eliot,[†6] I sat down, as I told you, and read the book through, with the strongest interest and the highest admiration. I believe it to be as honest, spirited, patient, reliable, and gallant a piece of biography as ever was written; the care and pains of it, astonishing; the completeness of it, masterly. And what I particularly feel about it, is, that the dignity of the man, and the dignity of the book that tells about the man, always go together and fit each other. This same quality has always impressed me as the great leading speciality of the Goldsmith[†7] —and ingrained[†8] sympathy with the subject, knowledge of it, and pursuit of it in its own spirit—but I think it even more remarkable here. I declare that apart from the interest of having been so put into the time and enabled to understand it, I personally feel, quite as much, the credit and honor done to Literature by such a book. It quite clears out of the remembrance a thousand pitiful things, and sets one up in heart again. I am not surprised in the least, by Bulwer's enthusiasm. I was as confident about the effect of the book when I closed the first Volume,[†9] as I was when I closed the second with a full heart.[†10] No man less in earnest than Eliot himself could have done it—and I make bold to add that it never could have been done but by a man who was as distinctly born to do the work, as Eliot was to do his.

Saturday at Hastings I must give up. I have wavered and considered, and considered and wavered, but if I take that sort of holiday I must have a day or two to spare after it, and at this critical time I have not. If I were to lose a page of the 5 Nos. I have proposed to myself to be ready by the publication day, I should feel that I had fallen short. I have grown hard to satisfy, and write very slowly. And I have so much—not[†1] fiction—that will be thought of, when I don't want to think of it, that I am forced to take more care than I once took.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To get out of town, quickly. It is beastly, at this time. The Sea is of all things the thing you want. Yesterday (I walked, long, against the dust) was a day to fly from. Utterly abominable and unwholesome.

To MRS NICHOLS, 29 MARCH 1864

Text from N, III, 383.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,

Tuesday Afternoon, Twenty-Ninth March, 1864

My Dear Mrs. Nichols,

Coming in here this afternoon, I find your note, and immediately comply with its request concerning the paper. To-morrow afternoon I will send you a pen that I will bring down purposely—with which I have been at work all day on my new book.

Ever yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To MARCUS STONE, 31 MARCH 1864*

MS Admiral Sir Gerald Dickens. Address: Marcus Stone Esquire | Russell House | Tavistock Square W.C. On Gad's Hill headed mourning paper.

57 Glo'ster Place, Hyde Park Gardens
Thursday Night Thirty First March 1864

My Dear Marcus I will come to look at the Picture[†2] tomorrow. Leech was with me yesterday, and I arranged with him his prudent course for Saturday. (He came with that object, having first written.) There is no doubt of his doing all he can.[†3]

Ever affecy.
CD.

April

To FRANK R. MILNES,[†1] 1 APRIL 1864*

MS Miss E. S. de Kock. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday First April, 1864

Sir

I beg to thank you for your very obliging note, and for the ingenious and compact little invention you have had the kindness to present to me.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Frank R Milnes

To MRS NICHOLS, 1 APRIL 1864

MS Berg Collection.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,

Friday First April 1864

My Dear Mrs. Nichols.

You do not understand me—I dare say it is my fault—on the subject of your "Test Medium"?[†2] I do not desire to see him, and indeed altogether decline to see any person making those pretensions. I left those questions with you, not because I have the least scrap of belief in their being answered according to the truth, but because I thought it well that you should find out that they can not be answered. It is not at all in accordance with my reverence for the great mystery of Death and the existence beyond the grave, to put them myself through the interposition of any human creature. I should make a horrible pretence if I did so.

I cannot tell you how glad I am to know that you sleep so well. Next Sunday I am engaged particularly; but I can call on you on Monday (if that will do) at 4 o'Clock.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

My address in town until the 1st. of June, is 57 Gloucester Place, Hyde Park Gardens W. In the meantime I am very little here.

To E. F. FLOWER,[†1] 2 APRIL 1864

MS Fales Library, New York University. Address: Immediate | —Flower Esquire | Great Western Hotel. On Gad's Hill headed mourning paper.

57 Glo'ster Place Hyde Park Gardens
Saturday Night, Second April 1864

Dear Sir

I beg to inform you that I have received no authority from Mr. Fechter to make any communication respecting him to the Stratford Committee.[†2]

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

—Flower Esquire

To DR HENRY KINGSLEY,[†3] 2 APRIL 1864*

MS Shakespeare Birthplace Trust. On Gad's Hill headed mourning paper.

57 Glo'ster Place, Hyde Park Gardens, London
Saturday Night Second April 1864

Sir

I regret that I cannot accept the invitation with which you have honoured me on behalf of your committee, to the Stratford banquet on the Twenty Third.[†4] But it is absolutely necessary that I should be in London on that day,[†5] and I am obliged to forego the pleasure you offer me.

I am Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Dr. Kingsley

To W. H. WILLS, 2 APRIL 1864

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Saturday Second April 1864

My Dear Wills

I hope you are deriving benefit from the sea—and the shore—and the young ladies on horseback—and the Jews—and the riding masters—and the schools— and the gallant seamen who never do what England expects of them,[†1] in the least.[†2]

As next week will not be my working-time at Our Mutual Friend, I shall devote the day of Friday (not the evening) to making up here. Therefore I write to say that if you would rather stay where you are, than come to London, don't come. I shall throw my hat into the ring at ll,[[sic, 11?]] and shall receive all the punishment that can be administered by two Nos. on end,[†3] like a British glutton.

Ever
CD.

To F. DENSON,[†4] 5 APRIL 1864

Mention in Anderson Galleries catalogue, No. 2029 (Feb 1926); dated Gad's Hill Place, 5 Apr 64; addressed Mr. F. Denson.

Declining an invitation.

To GEORGE HOLSWORTH, 9 APRIL 1864*

MS Princeton University Library. Address: Mr. Holsworth | "All the Year Round" Office | 26 Wellington Street | Strand | W. C. Mourning envelope.

Glo'ster Place | 9th. April 1864

Dear Mr. Holsworth. Will you be so good as answer this letter according to my endorsement on it.

Faithfully Yours CD.[†5]

To SAMUEL TIMMINS,[†6] 12 APRIL 1864

Mention in Sotheby's catalogue, 1903; MS 1 p.; dated 12 Apr 64; addressed Sam. Timmins.

In reference to an invitation to the Shakespeare Club.

To W. P. FRITH, 13 APRIL 1864

MS Victoria and Albert Museum. On Gad's Hill headed mourning paper.

57 Glo'ster Place, Hyde Park Gardens
Wednesday Thirteenth April, 1864

My Dear Frith.

That Van Amburgh[†1] of Trafalgar Square[†2] has never told me what the day is, neither do you in your note tell me. Pray enlighten me on this indispensable head. If I am disengaged, I shall be delighted to dine with you.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

W. P. Frith Esquire

To W. P. FRITH, 13 APRIL 1864

MS Victoria and Albert Museum. On Gad's Hill headed mourning paper.

57 Glo'ster Place Hyde Park Gardens
Wednesday Thirteenth April, 1864

My Dear Frith

See what a fellow Edwin Landseer is! He never gave me a hint of the day— said he didn't know it, when he described those evenings to me—said he would look at his list and tell me about it— never has told me any thing more—and here am I, on Saturday the 23rd. going out of town with Forster, Browning,[†3] and Wilkie Collins, to keep Shakespeare's birthday in peace and quiet. Was there ever such a fellow!

Ever Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

To MARCUS STONE, 13 APRIL 1864*

MS Morgan Library. On Gad's Hill headed mourning paper.

57 G.P.
Wednesday Thirteenth April 1864

My Dear Marcus. I discover the absurd circumstance that your portfolio came back to you yesterday, with your own note in it instead of one from me, saying "all right". This is to explain.

Ever

CD.

To F. G. TOMLINS,[†1] [13] APRIL 1864

Text from Morning Advertiser, 15 June 70.[†2] Date: Wednesday was 13 Apr.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday, 12th of April 1864.

My dear Sir,

I am truly honoured by the feeling of the working men towards me, as expressed in your note, and would far rather take part in their interesting proceedings than in any other ceremonial held on that day.[†3]

But I am not free. The request, unfortunately, comes too late. I have declined several public invitations on the ground that I had resolved to take part in none, and had bound myself to a few personal friends for a quiet private remembrance of the occasion. From this conclusion I cannot now depart.

Do me the kindness to assure the delegates with whom you are in communication of my cordial sympathy and respect.[†4]

My dear Sir, | Faithfully Yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

F. G. Tomlins, Esq.

To ROBERT WRITH,[†5] 14 [APRIL] 1864

Extract in Sophie Dupré catalogue No. 20 (1991); MS 1 p.; dated Office of AYR (headed paper), 14 [April] 1864; addressed Robert Writh.

Saying he has read the verses at the end of the volume returned with this note, and beg to express my regret that they cannot be made available in this journal.

To W. H. WILLS, 15 APRIL 1864

MS Berg Collection. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Fifteenth April 1864

My Dear Wills.

By all means. Any time after 3 on Wednesday afternoon. But don't you think you had best come and dine here, and make up the No.?[†6] The office is the Abode of Desolation.[†7]

There was no letter of mine to Thackeray about the Yates matter[†1] (that I can remember), but one— and that was published at the time, in Yates's pamphlet.[†2]

I hope John will get his voice on the margin of the sounding deep.

—— But Lord bless you, you have no idea of what I said, from those wretched accounts.[†3] I hate the thought of anybody's reading them.

Kindest regard to the Ladies

Ever Faithfully

CD.

We'll have a bet on our Mutual Friend, when we meet.[†4]

To HYDE BRISCOE,[†5] 16 APRIL 1864

Extract from catalogue in N, III, 386.

Gad's Hill Place | 16th April, 1864

Your first letter remained unanswered for longer than I had intended, but it often happens that my occupations prevent my maintaining any correspondence. You are at perfect liberty to state that my son Sydney was under your instruction to my perfect satisfaction.

To E. F. FLOWER, 16 APRIL 1864

Extract in Maggs catalogue No. 441 (1923); MS 1 p.; dated 16 Apr 64; addressed Flower.

Thanks for your note; but my occupations are so pressing just now, that I cannot spare time for such an engagement.[†6]

To LOVELL REEVE,[†1] 16 APRIL 1864*

MS Fales Library, New York University. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.

Saturday Sixteenth April 1864

Dear Sir

In reply to your obliging note I beg to assure you that I did not mistake the nature, or under-rate the importance, of your Work, when we last communicated in reference to it.[†2]

But I declined, and still must decline, to sit for any new photograph;[†3] firstly, because I very much dislike that operation; secondly, because my doing so would involve me in the redemption of a dozen conditional promises; and thirdly, because three London photographers can supply me in all manner of shapes and sizes.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Lovell Reeve Esquire

To GEORGE SMITH,[†4] [?MID-APRIL 1864]

MS (draft)[†5] Carl H. Pforzheimer Library. Date: perhaps mid-Apr 64, though some time after Smith's letter.

Private
Sir,

Mr. Charles Dickens's receipt of your letter[†6] has been delayed—he requests me to inform you—by accidental circumstances. This is one of hundreds constantly addressed to Mr. Dickens, the briefest replies to which under his own hand would absorb his whole time. You may judge how little power he has of helping such correspondents. But he charges me to assure you that if you will address to him here, to my care, any of those short pieces to which you refer,[†7] he will read them himself.

To CHARLES ATKINSON,[†1] 21 APRIL 1864

Text from N, III, 386.

57 Glo'ster Place, Hyde Park Gardens
Twenty-First April, 1864

Dear Sir,

In reply to your obliging note, I beg to say that I shall be happy to correct the report of what I said at the Dinner,[†2] in the Proof, if you will have the kindness to send it to me in due course.

Dear Sir, | Faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To DR T. L. NICHOLS,[†3] 21 APRIL 1864

Text from N, III, 386.

57 Glo'ster Place, Hyde Park Gardens

Twenty-First April, 1864

Dear Sir,

My erratic requirements of air and exercise when I am (as at present) much occupied, have delayed my receipt of your note.

I will come tomorrow (Friday) at 4. And I will endeavour to be rather before than after the hour, as I must attend a meeting at 5.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To LOVELL REEVE, 21 APRIL 1864*

Text from typescript, Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Twenty First April, 1864

My Dear Sir

My receipt of your kind invitation to dinner at Girdler's Hall[†4] has been delayed. I regret that I cannot accept it, in consequence of having an engagement out of town today.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Lovell Reeve Esquire.

To HENRY G. WARREN, [?17-23 APRIL 1864]

Mention in Minute-book, MS Newspaper Press Fund, 23 Apr 64. Date: between the "special letter" to him of 16/17 Apr and the Committee meeting of 23 Apr.[†1]

Declining the Committee's invitation to him to attend the annual Dinner on 21 May.[†2]

To THOMAS HUGHES,[†3] 26 APRIL 1864*

MS Private. On Gad's Hill headed mourning paper.

57 Glos'ter Place, Hyde Park Gardens
Tuesday Twenty Sixth April, 1864

My Dear Mr. Hughes.

I have by no means forgotten the days you refer to in your note,[†4] and am happy to have an opportunity of telling you so.

It would give me real pleasure to comply with your request, if I were at all connected with the Borough.[†5] I have no great opinion of the electors and have always studiously kept myself aloof from them in their electoral capacity. Moreover, I sold the house and ground I had in London, five years ago. I may, for anything I know, have a Finsbury vote in right of my office, but I have never voted and have never looked after the qualifications. If you go to the Poll, I will go there too (being legally able) and vote for you. The proposed Meeting is a kind of gathering at which I should be out of place.

Believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Hughes Esquire

To GEORGE RUSSELL, 26 APRIL 1864*

MS Marjorie, Lady Russell. Address: George Russell Esquire | 18 St. James's Place | S. W.
On Gad's Hill headed mourning paper.

57 Gloster Place Hyde Park Gardens
Tuesday Twenty Sixth April 1864

My Dear George Russell

A glorious success! And the thing could not have been better done than it was by you.[†6]

If they should prove so imbecile as to question the immediate action of the election, then I think it would be of the utmost importance to strike on the hot iron, and call a Special General Meeting without delay.

Faithfully Yours Ever
CHARLES DICKENS

To GEORGE RUSSELL, 27 APRIL 1864*

MS Marjorie, Lady Russell. Address: George Russell Esquire | 18 St. James's Place | S. W.
On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Night Twenty Seventh April | 1864.

My Dear George Russell.

I hope those men may not think better of retiring.[†1] Because if they go, their game is up for many a long day.

Of course you will do with me whatever you like. I never do any thing by halves.

I was very sorry to miss you today while I was constitutionally ravaging Hampstead.[†2] A card is coming to you from here, which I hope may find you disengaged on the day named in it.

Cordially Yours Ever
CHARLES DICKENS

Your brother[†3] is thorough game—and looks it.

To MRS BENZON, 30 APRIL 1864*

MS Private. Address: Mrs Benzon | 10 Kensington Palace Gardens. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Thirtieth April, 1864

Mr. Charles Dickens will be very happy to dine with Mr. and Mrs. Benzon on Tuesday the Seventeenth of May.[†4]

May

To JOHN FORSTER, [3 MAY 1864]

Extract in F, IX, v, 742. Date: 3 May, according to Forster.

Nothing can be better than Our Friend, now in his thirtieth thousand, and orders flowing in fast.

To MICHAEL BASS,[†1] [?EARLY MAY 1864]

Text from Michael T. Bass, Street Music in the Metropolis, 1864, pp. 41-2. Date: probably shortly after Bass was given leave to bring in his Bill, 3 May 64 (see below).

Sir,

Your undersigned correspondents are desirous to offer you their hearty thanks for your introduction into the House of Commons of a Bill for the Suppression of Street Music; and they beg to assure you that, in the various ways open to them, they will, out of Parliament, do their utmost to support you in your endeavour to abolish that intolerable nuisance.[†2]

Your correspondents are, all, professors and practitioners of one or other of the arts or sciences. In their devotion to their pursuits—tending to the peace and comfort of mankind—they are daily interrupted, harassed, worried, wearied, driven nearly mad, by street musicians. They are even made especial objects of persecution by brazen performers on brazen instruments, beaters of drums, grinders of organs, bangers of banjos, clashers of cymbals, worriers of fiddles, and bellowers of ballads; for, no sooner does it become known to those producers of horrible sounds that any of your correspondents have particular need of quiet in their own houses, than the said houses are beleaguered by discordant hosts seeking to be bought off.

Your correspondents represent to you that these pecuniary speculations in the misery they endure are far more destructive to their spirits than their pockets; and that some of them, not absolutely tied to London by their avocations, have actually fled into the country for refuge from this unmerited persecution —which is none the less grievous or hard to bear, because it is absurd.

Your grateful correspondents take the liberty to suggest to you that, although a Parliamentary debate undoubtedly requires great delicacy in the handling, their avocations require at least as much, and that it would highly conduce towards the success of your proposed enactments, if you prevail on its opponents to consent to state their objections to it, assailed on all sides by the frightful noises in despite of which your correspondents have to gain their bread.[†1]

CHARLES DICKENS.[†2]

To HENRY HOUGHTON, 4 MAY 1864*

MS Houghton Library, Harvard. Address: H. O. Houghton Esquire | Messrs Brown Shipley and Co | Founder's Court | Lothbury | E.C.[†3] On Gad's Hill headed mourning paper.

57 Gloucester Place, Hyde Park Gardens
Wednesday Fourth May 1864

Dear Sir

I owe you an apology for not having answered your letter sooner. The plain truth is, that I laid it aside during your absence in Paris, and, being closely occupied, forgot it.

Tomorrow morning at eleven o'clock, or Friday morning at the same hour, I shall be here, and happy to see you.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Henry O Houghton Esquire

To MRS NICHOLS, 4 MAY 1864

Text from N, III, 387.

Glo'ster Place | Wednesday, Fourth May, 1864
Dear Mrs Nichols,

I have read the enclosed, just as I might have read it in print. And I like it very much, just as I should have done in that same case.

I had thoroughly agreed in what you write about the position before you expressed it; and had acted accordingly.

The spring weather will make you better yet, I hope. You have certainly been ill in the worst English weather.

Faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 4 MAY 1864*

MS Private. On Gad's Hill headed mourning paper.

57 Glo'ster Place, Hyde Park
Monday | Fourth May 1865

My Dear Ouvry.

I find enclosed unpaid.[†1] Had forgotten it. And now send cheque. Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To W. H. WILLS, 4 MAY 1864*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Fourth May 1864

My Dear Wills. There are no carpets worth having, for the wear and tear of our 2 rooms,[†2] but Persian and Turkey. Of these I have selected one Persian, and one Turkey. They will endure for years and years, but their price is dear. viz:

£7..5..0 each, besides the oilcloth. Shall we go in for this luxury? Tell John.

I have bought a little French carpet for my own room upstairs, but it would be useless for a business room.

I say "oil cloth" instead of stained floors, because the floors, Lillie says are too old to stain.

Friday morning (as I am not at work now) will suit me better than the afternoon.

According to present appearances you seem to be in the way of winning our bet upon Our Mutual![†3]—

Ever
CD.

To F. C. BEARD, 5 MAY [?1864]

MS (envelope only) Cleveland Public Library. Address: F. Carr Beard Esquire | 44 Welbeck Street | Cavendish Square | W. PM London MY 5 [?64]. Date: 1864 probable, because on mourning paper.

To DR HENRY DANSON,[†1] 5 MAY 1864

Text from F, I, iii, 45*n*.

Gad's Hill Place | Thursday, 5th May, 1864.

Dear Sir,

I should have assured you before now that the receipt of your letter[†2] gave me great pleasure, had I not been too much occupied to have leisure for correspondence. I perfectly recollect your name as that of an old schoolfellow,[†3] and distinctly remember your appearance and dress as a boy, and believe you had a brother drowned in the Serpentine.[†4] If you had made yourself personally known to me at the dinner[†5] I should have been well pleased; though in that case I should have lost your modest and manly letter.

Faithfully yours,
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To MARCUS STONE, 5 MAY 1864†

MS Morgan Library. On Gad's Hill headed mourning paper.

57 Glo'ster Place
Thursday Night Fifth May 1864

My Dear Marcus.

The lady on the sands,[†6] to be got up, as to her being un peu passée; but still to be well-looking—engaging looking when she chooses.[†7]

[†a]Mrs. Boffin, as I judge of her from the sketch, very good indeed. I want Boffins oddity, without being at all blinked,[†8] to be an oddity of a very honest kind, that people will like.[†a†9]

Faithfully ever

CD.

To W. H. WILLS, 8 MAY 1864

MS Huntington Library. On Gad's Hill headed mourning paper.

57 Glo'ster Place | Hyde Park Gardens
Sunday Evening Eighth May 1864

My Dear Wills. You have heard, I dare say, of the deplorable condition of poor John.[†1] His life still hangs on a hair, but there seemed a shade of hope this afternoon.[†2] I am going out to him again tonight. Beard is really a Guardian Angel to him.

But it is not to say this, that I write; but to tell you that that diabolical wife and her sister,[†3] being left last night to watch him, got blind drunk together on Gin—omitted everything they had undertaken to do—dropped Gin and God knows what over his poor dying figure—and pitched into the landlady and attendant gossips when with natural indignation they found them this morning and took their gin away. John was then doubled up, his knees to his head, sinking out of life. And so Beard found him—Of course we take care that he is not left to those amicable mercies any more.

Pray have this made known in its fullest atrocity to everybody at the office, and let everybody be strictly charged never on any pretence to let the woman into the house. If she wants anything out of the house, the children must come for it, or she must go without it; but she is never to be let in. And pray let them understand that we would immediately discharge anybody who—even in mistaken compassion, or for any other mistakenly good reason—disobeyed this injunction. I tumbled her out of the sick chamber just now, and will at least (John lost or saved) have done with that abominable bitch.[†4]

I find that she has been perpetually drunk ever since they have been to Kentish Town. I hope to deposit her (with the Lord's help) in Kentish Town Station House yet!

Ever

CD.

To F. C. BEARD, 9 MAY 1864

MS Dickens House. Address: F. Carr Beard Esquire.

57 Gloster Place
Monday Ninth May 1864

My Dear Frank Beard

I dine at Fechter's, St. John's Wood. If you will order our state-carriage as yesterday, I will be with you no later than 10 ½.

Ever

CD.

To MRS HENRY WOOD,[†1] 9 MAY 1864*

MS Robert H. Taylor Collection, Princeton University. On Gad's Hill headed mourning paper.

57 Glo'ster Place, Hyde Park Gardens W.
Monday Ninth May 1864.

My Dear Madam.

In answer to your interesting and obliging note, I beg to assure you that I will readily comply with your request. I leave the colour to you, and will sign twenty cards as soon as you please.[†2]

My Dear Madam | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Henry Wood.

To LADY HOUGHTON, 10 MAY 1864*

MS Trinity College, Cambridge. On Gad's Hill headed mourning paper.

57 Glo'ster Place, Hyde Park Gardens
Tuesday Tenth May 1864

My Dear Lady Houghton

Pray excuse a little delay on my part in answering your kind note. My engagements accumulate so unintelligibly when we are about to leave town, that I am obliged to call in help before I can unravel them.

On Sunday the 29th I shall be delighted to dine with you. On Sunday the 22nd I am unfortunately engaged. Either my daughter Mary or her aunt will come with me as you kindly propose.

Mrs. Rundle[†3] told me of her "share in the Praslin murder",[†4] and I complimented her on not being proud.[†5]

Believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Lady Houghton.

To MRS B. W. PROCTER,[†1] 10 MAY 1864

Summary and extract, made by Dykes Campbell from original text, then in Eastgate House, Rochester.

57 Gloucester Place Hyde Park Gardens
Tuesday Tenth May 1864

My Dear Mrs Procter

Saying he is engaged every day until the 23rd, but is free after that on certain days.

It will be a pleasure to me to come to you as it was to me, to see you and Procter[†2] again the other day—though you were as you always are "overbearing".

Believe me ever | Affectionately yours

To GEORGE RUSSELL, 10 MAY 1864*

MS Marjorie, Lady Russell. On Gad's Hill headed mourning paper. Address: Answer. | George Russell Esquire | 18 St. James's Place.

Tuesday Tenth May 1864.
57 Gloster Place

My Dear George Russell

I send this note to let you know (though I hope it is not at all necessary), that I shall be charmed to see your brother at our family dinner today, and that I am leniently disposed towards those King Street Humbugs[†3] in consideration of their giving me the opportunity of cultivating his friendship. Mary has asked a man (on your side of the house)[†4] and his wife to dine with us; but the stern Parient has issued peremptory orders that they be carried off to the Opera—or elsewhere—instantly after dinner, to the end that the conspirators may be left undisturbed.

Faithfully Yours ever
CD.

To MRS NICHOLS, 12 MAY 1864

Text from N, III, 388.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Morning, Twelfth May, 1864

Dear Mrs. Nichols,

I return you the papers. In reference to the "plan",[†5] I am not a good authority; because I cannot look at it from a third person's point of view, and cannot divest myself of an uneasy consciousness that I ought to be no party to it while it is in progress.

Faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 14 MAY 1864

MS Lytton Papers. On Gad's Hill headed mourning paper.

57 Glo'ster Place
Saturday Fourteenth May 1864

My Dear Bulwer Lytton

On Saturday the 28th. I am unfortunately engaged. But on Wednesday the 1st. of June, we shall all three be delighted to dine with you at ¼ to 8.

I am heartily glad to learn that you are so much better. And I hope, as the East winds must be nearly over, that you will get on at compound interest.

Ever Affecy. Yours

CD.

To MRS STORRAR,[†1] 15 MAY 1864

MS George Bayntun, Bath. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Sunday Morning Fifteenth May 1864

My dear Mrs. Storrar.

Our family-dinner must come off at Gad's Hill, where I have improvements to exhibit, and where I shall be truly pleased to see you and the Doctor again. I have deferred answering your note, while I have been scheming and scheming for a day between this time and our departure. But it is all in vain. My engagements have accumulated, and become such a whirl, that no day is left me—nothing is left me but to get away. I look forward to my release from this dining-life, with an inexpressible longing after quiet and my own pursuits. What with public speechifying, private eating and drinking, and perpetual simmering in hot rooms, I have made London too hot to hold me and my work together. Mary and Georgina acknowledge the condition of imbecility to which we have become reduced, in reference to your kind reminder. They say, when I stare at them in a forlorn way with your note in my hand, "What can[†2] you do!" To which I can only reply, implicating them, "See what you have brought me to!"

With our united kind regard to yourself and Dr. Storrar, I entreat your pity and compassion for an unfortunate wretch whom a too-confiding disposition has brought to this pass. If I had not allowed my cheeild to pledge me to all manner of fellow-creatures, I and my digestion might have been in a state of honorable independence this day.

Faithfully | and Penitently | Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Storrar.

To JOHN LEECH, 16 MAY 1864

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: John Leech Esquire | The Terrace | Kensington | W. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.

Monday Night Sixteenth May 1864

My Dear Leech.

I cannot send you the letter to P.A. Bass[†1] to night, because I find I have no letter paper here, without my engraved address. But it shall follow speedily.

We have only one day left; the third of June. If that be too late for you with reference to your health-seeking trip, of course you will say so to your old friend, plainly.

You looked—and evidently were—at least 1,000 per cent better to day, than when I saw you last.

Ever Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

John Leech Esquire

To GEORGE RUSSELL, 20 MAY 1864*

MS Marjorie, Lady Russell. Address: George Russell Esquire | 18 St. James's Place | S.W.
On Gad's Hill headed mourning paper.

57 Gloster Place
Friday Twentieth May 1864

My Dear George Russell

I am very sorry to differ from your brother and you in my opinion of this matter; but after what has been done, I hold it to be not worth a present effort. Let the club have what the Majority unquestionably want, and let them get all the good out of it they can.[†2]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

George Russell Esquire

To W. H. WILLS, 20 MAY 1864

MS Huntington Library. On Gad's Hill headed mourning paper.

57 Gloster Place
Friday Twentieth May 1864

My Dear Wills. The statement is indeed astounding,[†1] and no doubt expresses in every figure that goes to make up every result, your incessant vigilance and care in every department of A.Y.R. business. This I feel strongly, and am thoroughly well assured of.

When we get into our places again, and often meet at the office, we must dive into that question of the falling-off.[†2] Of course we have to consider that Sala's is not a good name, and that he is accustomed to address a lower audience.[†3] I am inclined to believe that an anonymous story depending on its own merits would be better for us than he.

We must drink a glass of wine together tomorrow, to the next balance-sheet![†4]

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To SAMUEL LOVER, 21 MAY 1864

MS W. A. Foyle. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Twenty First May 1864

My Dear Lover

The Resolution passed at the last General meeting[†5] was the sound and sensible one that the six Committee-Members retiring by rotation should not be eligible for re-election. And that being carried, new men were carried into the Committee, to make it a representative Institution. Thereupon Sir Charles Taylor, Sir George Armytage,[†6] and some other dignitaries, resigned in a huff. Thereupon again, a hundred and seventy men belonging to the Club entreated them (by humble requisition under their three hundred and forty hands) to come back, and be the salvation, humanly speaking, of all Garrick things and persons. Such salvation they, with various flowers of speech and flourishes of graciousness, did yesterday consent to become.[†7]

The requisition I sent you was prepared in case of necessity. It has not been used, because, in the interests of the club and for the sake of peace, it is well to try with perfect honesty and fairness whether the new principles and the old will now act together. Of course the reforming party in the Committee know perfectly well that the results of that last "most extraordinary ballot" were not brought about by them.

I devoutly hope you have got over your Easterly winds for one season, and will bloom with the blooming summer.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Samuel Lover Esquire

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 24 MAY 1864*

MS Huntington Library. On Gad's Hill headed mourning paper.

57 Glo'ster Place

Tuesday Twenty Fourth May 1864

My Dear Ouvry

I think it decidedly worth our while to have a good opinion, formally,[†1] on the question of my powers and liabilities under that agreement.[†2]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Frederic Ouvry Esquire

To MARCUS STONE, 24 MAY 1864*

MS Morgan Library.

Gloster Place
Tuesday Twenty Fourth May 1864

My Dear Marcus

As soon as you have done with these, please return them. The letterings will be:— for No. 3—

The Boffin Progress

The Happy Pair[†3]

Ever affecy.
CD.[†4]

To SAMUEL LINDLEY,[†1] 25 MAY 1864*

MS Mr Frederick Koch. Address: Samuel Lindley Esqre | Naval and Military Gazette | 19 Catherine Street | Strand | W.C. Mourning paper and envelope.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Twenty Fifth May 1864

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Lindley, and regrets that his vote is already given.[†2]

To GEORGE RUSSELL, 26 MAY 1864*

MS Marjorie, Lady Russell. Address: George Russell Esquire | 18 St. James's Place | S. W. On mourning paper.

57 Gloster Place, Hyde Park Gardens
Thursday Twenty Sixth May 1864

My Dear George Russell

This note is not—wonderful to relate—about the Garrick. It is about a rather more delicate question, as you will see.

You know that Mrs. Geils that was,[†3] has married Gilbert Elliot, the Dean of Bristol. Both he and she are old friends of mine, and they have lately sought my advice, in all confidence, on certain social points arising out of their marriage.

I know that she was at a disadvantage in your neighbourhood, after her divorce: though Heaven knows it was not her fault. I want to find out—otherwise I can do them no real service in a question she has referred to me—would she still be at a disadvantage, if she returned to Farley Hill Court?[†4]

Nobody can tell me this better than you; for I should consider your brother's feeling on the subject, of itself decisive. If she would be in a false position there, I think I could keep her away, by strongly urging her not to go. Elliot has taken a great fancy to the place (they are there at this moment), and I want to give them the right counsel before they stand committed.

Faithfully Yours Ever
CHARLES DICKENS

George Russell Esquire

To GEORGE RUSSELL, 27 MAY 1864*

MS Marjorie, Lady Russell. Address: George Russell Esquire | 18 St. James's Place | S. W.
On Gad's Hill headed mourning paper.

57 Glo'ster Place
Friday Twenty Seventh May 1864

My Dear George Russell

Many thanks for your letter. I dine at Kensington tomorrow, and expect to be at home all day, hard at work—unless I break away to Townshend's to see the people at the review.[†1] Therefore you are safe to find me.

Very faithfully Yours
CD.

June

To WILLIAM DAY,[†2] 1 JUNE 1864

Summary from unknown catalogue made by Walter Dexter; dated 1 June 64; addressed Mr Day.

Asking for pulls of Nos. 4-5[†3] to be sent to Marcus Stone.

To R. BERNAL OSBORNE, 1 JUNE 1864*

MS Folger Shakespeare Library, Washington. On Gad's Hill headed mourning paper.

57 Glo'ster Place
Wednesday First June 1864

My Dear Bernal Osborne

I am delighted to hear of your first appearance after your late severe indisposition, and greet you with a round of applause.

Saturday the 11th.—Monday the 13th.—or Wednesday the 15th.—would suit me equally well for the enjoyment of the pleasure you kindly offer me. And of course my dutiful daughter is joyfully bound by the parental will. If all these days should be inconvenient to you, I propose any other day in June, except Thursdays.

Will you let me know, at Gad's Hill, what day I shall book?

Fechter's Hamlet[†4] has some excellent things in it. The dressing is remarkably picturesque, original, and good.[†5] He generally comes down to me on Sundays when I am at home, and I count upon your trying the Falstaff Gin Punch in his company. He is a capital fellow and an Anti-Humbug—which is much the same thing.

If you have room in any odd corner for a set of my books, let me give you my favorite Edition.[†1] There are not many men in whose hands I should better like them to be.

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Bernal Osborne Esquire.

To MRS HENRY AUSTIN, 5 JUNE 1864*

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Fifth June 1864

My Dear Letitia

Thank God you are all right! A pension of £60 a year.

You will see by the enclosed that you must send in the names of two Trustees. I think it will be best to make me one, and Wills the other; because we shall then be always able, one or other of us, to receive the Pension as I receive Poole's. If you approve, his name and address are William Henry Wills Esqre.

22 Regents Park Terrace

Coming down here today I find the letter, and of course immediately write to acknowledge. I send you on the other side the draft[†2] of a letter for you to write without delay.[†3]

I am so delighted that I can hardly write to congratulate you. Cheque enclosed.[†4]

Ever affecy.

CD.

To [C. G. BARRINGTON],[†1] 5 JUNE 1864*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.

Fifth June 1864

Sir

I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your obliging letter of yesterday's date, enclosing a letter for my sister Mrs. Austin informing her that Lord Palmerston has recommended her for a pension of £60 a year on the Civil List.

I have forwarded that communication to Mrs. Austin, and do not doubt that she will immediately and gratefully acknowledge it on her own behalf. But I trust I may take this opportunity of offering my own thanks to Lord Palmerston for his considerate and generous remembrance of her case.

I have the honor to be | Sir | Your faithful Servant

CHARLES DICKENS

[ ] Esquire[†2]

To TOM TAYLOR, 5 JUNE 1864

Mention in N, III, 391; MS 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill Place, 5 June 64; addressed Tom Taylor.

Thanking him for his help in obtaining a Civil List pension of £60 a year for his sister Letitia.

To WILLIAM DAY, 8 JUNE 1864*

MS Benoliel Collection.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,

Wednesday Eighth June 1864

Dear Mr. Day

Will you be so good as send me—by Bearer, if you can—a pull of the corrected No. IV of Our Mutual Friend[†3]

Faithfully Yours

CD

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 8 JUNE 1864

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Eighth June 1864

For The Chancellor of the Exchequer.[†1]

On account of Income Tax.[†2]

By One who is sorry he ever did it.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT,[†3] 9 JUNE 1864*

MS Yale University Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Ninth June 1864

[ ][†4]

Train leaves North Kent Office Charing Cross Station, for Higham, at ten minutes past 4. Take a return ticket. It will bring you back next day.

Ever Cordially Yours

CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [10 JUNE 1864]

Extract in F, IX, v, 742. Date: 10 June 64, according to Forster.

This leaves me going round and round like a carrier pigeon before swooping on number seven.[†5]

To J. C. HORSLEY,[†6] 10 JUNE 1864*

Text from copy left by Walter Dexter, Dickens House.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.

Friday Tenth June 1864

My Dear Mr. Horsley,

I would immediately have referred your letter to my friend Mr. Wills, the subeditor of All The Year Round and he would no doubt have recommended a competent hand for the purpose,[†1] but that I have this morning received a note from Mr. Bass in which he informs me that he has confided the task to a friend of his, an ex. M.P. Herein he has done as well, I dare say, as I could have helped him to do. I wish him all success, and write by this post to tell him so.

Believe me

Faithfully yours
CHARLES DICKENS

J. C. Horsley Esquire

To M. T. BASS, [10 JUNE 1864]

Mention in last. Date: written same day.

To MRS NICHOLS, 11 JUNE 1864

Text from N, III, 391.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday, Eleventh June, 1864

Dear Mrs. Nichols,

I am concerned that you should think it possible that you have given me offence. Pray let me disabuse your mind of any such completely erroneous impression, however shadowy. Without the slightest reservation, I assure you that it is utterly baseless, and I entreat you to dismiss it.

Your anxiety for your daughter[†2] is, no doubt, the main cause of your relapse in health. I hope you will soon be better, now that she is better. In your weakened bodily state such solicitude must have been injurious; for it would have proved so, somehow or other, even though you had previously been as free from illness as with all my heart I wish you had been.

Faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To MARCUS STONE, 14 JUNE 1864*

MS Morgan Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,

Tuesday Fourteenth June 1864

My Dear Marcus. I like these sketches exceedingly, and think them the best we have had. You shall have the lettering in due course.

As to No. 5.[†1] The Orphan Fishing,[†2] is a very good subject. The exact moment to be taken for the other, I leave to you. I thought of Gaffer's lying on the seashore, with the wind taunting him.[†3] But if you like any other moment better, take it.

Affecy. always
CD.

To SHIRLEY BROOKS, 17 JUNE 1864*

MS New York Public Library. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Seventeenth June 1864.

My Dear Brooks.

I have been away from here, or I should have thanked you sooner for that capital coincidence, and still more capital application. May I always be as fortunate in my "Licensed Interpreter"[†4]!—though I don't expect to be.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS WREFORD MAJOR, 17 JUNE 1864

Text from N, III, 392.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday, Seventeenth June, 1864

My Dear Mary,

I cannot send a formal answer to your dinner invitation, because I am really anxious to explain to you that I expect to be in France on the 30th for a few days' holiday. But even if this were not so, my conscience obliges me to add that I fear I could not have accepted. I have had this spring the most severe dinner-eating

I have ever known in London. Every week I had sworn to go out no more, and every week I have perjured myself seven times. Getting here at last, alive, I have re-sworn to stick to my book and dine no more until next year, and this last oath I have a kind of notion of keeping—though I don't positively know what I might have done, if your day had been at another time.

I should have written to you about the christening of Helen Campbell Talfourd,[†1] but that I perceived they were getting into difficulties here, concerning that occasion, and I wished to see how they came out of them. That I believe they have now told you.

I wish you and your husband would come here for a day or two, in the course of your next four or five hundred miles little summer drive. We should be heartily pleased to see you if you would give us notice of your being on the road, and you and I would take a special hob-nob together for the love of Helen Campbell Talfourd and her ever dear grandfather. Do think of it—and act upon it.

Ever your Affectionate friend

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To MARCUS STONE, 18 JUNE 1864*

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Saturday Eighteenth June 1864

My Dear Marcus.

The Letterings for No. 4[†2] will be:

Podsnappery.[†3]

Waiting for father[†4]

Ever affecy.

CD.

To SHIRLEY BROOKS, 21 JUNE 1864*

MS Yale University Library. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Twenty First June 1864

My Dear Brooks.

I have so strong an opinion on the Monument question,[†5] that I feel bound to state it to you. Though of course I expect you to do no more than give it your consideration.

A bust I think infinitely preferable to a statue; mainly for the reason that in the former case you can almost dictate the terms of the subscription, and can certainly ensure its being a complete success. In the latter case, you will want a great deal more money, and may not get it so easily. To have to tout for it, would be to fail. Moreover, the bust is a more modest memorial, and therefore seems to me in better taste.[†1] If I remember right, there is but a bust of Goldsmith there.[†2] I feel convinced that the bust is the better thing, on all accounts.

I got your story of the rather rapid virgin yesterday after a pretty hard day's work; and it made me laugh so, that I seemed to have been doing nothing.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Shirley Brooks Esquire

To LADY MOLESWORTH, 21 JUNE 1864*

MS Dickens House. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Tuesday Twenty First June 1864

My Dear Lady Molesworth

In reply to the enclosed;—if the signature-book be sent to my office 26 Wellington Street Strand, before next Sunday, addressed to me and marked Private, I will with great pleasure place my autograph in it, and return it to Piccadilly.

Mary is away with some friends[†3] at some Hampshire races.[†4] The question of the third week in July shall be referred to her, and she shall write to you. I do not know of anything in the way of that time, and it is a beautiful time for the country scenery.

You are[†5] an Angel, and you always were an Angel, and I hope you always will be!

Affecy. Yours Ever
CD.

To R. BERNAL OSBORNE, 22 JUNE 1864*

MS Houghton Library, Harvard. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Night, Twenty Second June | 1864

My Dear Bernal Osborne

I have been in town two days, and, coming back here tonight, find your kind note. Unfortunately it finds me less pleasantly engaged, and bound to work.

In haste to save the post | Ever Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To PETER FRASER, 26 JUNE 1864*

MS Private. Address: P.S. Fraser Esquire | Stirling | N.B. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Twenty Sixth June 1864

My Dear Fraser

You once ordered for me a most noble cask of whiskey,[†1] which has been the admiration of a large portion of mankind:—of so large a portion, that it is gone! Will you kindly, in your unimpeachable judgment, order me another of your own approved quality?

And your Petitioner shall ever drink.

Faithfully Yours ever
CHARLES DICKENS

P. S. Fraser Esquire

To MRS NICHOLS, 26 JUNE 1864

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Twenty Sixth June 1864

Dear Mrs. Nichols.

Your affecting letter finds me just leaving here on a ten days or twelve days visit to Belgium.[†2] I heartily congratulate you on all the good intelligence it contains, and add the trifling item to it that your two missing papers have been just now found! They were found at the office; but how they got there, I cannot imagine.

The paper I return; having done my best with it.[†1] Let me beg you to believe that I have no "law for myself" in that matter, but the law of kindness and sympathy. But I have an instinctive conviction that you are not strong enough for the more direct personal influence.

I send my kind remembrance to both your daughters,[†2] and to your good husband. God bless you.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To W. H. WILLS, 26 JUNE 1864

MS Huntington Library. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Twenty Sixth June 1864

My Dear Wills. I have carefully gone over all the Proofs, and here they are. The No.[†3] as it stands is a very fair one indeed.

I have complied with all the necessary forms about Mrs. Austin's pension, and am Circumlocutionally apprised that on application at the Paymaster General's Department I shall "receive the necessary instructions as to obtaining the first payment." Will you instruct whosoever goes about Poole's pension after the 1*st. of July,* to make enquiries? I hope there may be arrears to receive.

You will get proof of Our Mutual Friend No. VI,[†4] in a note from Townshend. As I shall want it on my return, please have it ready for me in an envelope on my table. I expect to be at the office on Thursday the 7th, or Friday the 8th. at latest.

I have been working desperately hard to get away.

It has occurred to me that the next Mrs. Lirriper might have a mixing in it of Paris and London—she and the Major, and the boy, all working out the little story in the two places.[†5] As my present Mysterious Disappearance[†6] is in that direction, I will turn this over on French ground with great care. I seem to have a sort of inspiration that may blend the undiminished attractions of Mrs. Lirriper with those of the Bebelle[†7] life in Paris.

Ever
CD.

July

To MARCUS STONE, 7 JULY 1864*

MS Morgan Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Seventh July 1864

My Dear Marcus

I have been away for ten days, and find your note only this morning.

These are both excellent. The lettering will be:

Mrs. Boffin discovers an Orphan.[†1]

The Bird of Prey brought down.+[†2]

As to No. 6, take what you like best. The Dolls Dress Maker perhaps should be one of the subjects.[†3] But she re-appears, under picturesque circumstances, in No. 7 too.[†4]

Ever affecy.

CD.

+Note.[†5] That Mr. Inspector would not wear the usual Constable's hat or coat.[†6] If this figure be a Constable merely,—all right.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 8 JULY 1864*

MS The Rev. W. L. W. Randall. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Eighth July, 1864

With Mr. Charles Dickens's Compliments. His having been abroad, has prevented his sending an earlier reply.

To PETER FRASER, 9 JULY 1864

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Saturday Ninth July, 1864.

My Dear Fraser

A thousand thanks. The whiskey arrived yesterday, and this morning I have had it racked off into the old cask newly hooped for the purpose. Herein I hope I fell into no dismal heterodoxy?—

You will be heartily welcomed here whenever you will come on a solemn Progress as official Taster. This is considered, by its patrons, not a bad hotel; and the undersigned has taken some pains with the bar-department.

Soliciting your favours,
Affectionately Yours ever
CHARLES DICKENS

P. S. Fraser Esquire

To SIR JOSEPH PAXTON,[†1] 9 JULY 1864

Summary in Sotheby's catalogue, Jan 1883; MS 1 ½ pp.; dated 9 July 64; addressed Sir Joseph Paxton.

Asking if he can recommend a workman for his garden.[†2]

To GEORGE RUSSELL, 19 JULY 1864*

MS Marjorie, Lady Russell. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Nineteenth July, 1864

My Dear George Russell

I am delighted to say in reply to your note, that we are elastic enough to receive you with open arms. We shall expect you with the Higgins's[†3] and Lady Molesworth, and will drink to you (like the Lord Mayor) "in a loving cup, and bid you hearty welcome".

The G.[†4] news is charming.

Faithfully Yours ever
CHARLES DICKENS

George Russell Esquire

To W. HEPWORTH DIXON & J.O. HALLIWELL,[†1] 23 JULY 1864*

MS Rosenbach Museum and Library. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Twenty Third July, 1864.

Gentlemen

In reply to your circular letter, I beg to offer my respectful protest against the unanimous opinion of the Executive.[†2] It appears to me that it would be highly ludicrous to invest so small a balance, as the result of so large an appeal, "until The Thames embankment shall have been built and farther steps can be beneficially taken".[†3] Believing that no farther steps can be beneficially taken on the road obstructed by our break-down,[†4] I am for the frank abandonment of the design in deference to the common sense of the public, and the bestowal of the sum in hand (with the consent of a majority of the subscribers) on the projected Shakespeare Schools.[†5]

I have the honor to remain | Gentlemen
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. Hepworth Dixon

and
J. O. Halliwell

Esquires.

To W. H. WILLS, 24 JULY 1864*

MS Huntington Library. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Twenty Fourth July, 1864

My Dear Wills.

Saved for the time,—but I suppose that Vagabond[†6] will throw us at last.

I shall be at the office on Tuesday (will you leave Mrs. Austin's money under cover for me?), and also on Wednesday. On the latter day, I will go over any proofs you have ready for a Making-up,[†1] as I shall have to come back here in the afternoon as a preliminary to falling to work on Our Mutual.

Ever CD.

To PERCY FITZGERALD, 27 JULY 1864

MS Yale University Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Twenty Seventh July 1864

My Dear Mr. Fitz Gerald[†2]

First, let me assure you that it gave us all, real pleasure to see your sister and you at Gad's Hill, and that we all hope you will both come and stay a day or two with us when you are next in England.

Next, let me convey to you the intelligence that I resolve to launch Miss Manuel:[†3] fully confiding in your conviction of the power of the story. On all business-points Wills will communicate with you.—I purpose beginning its publication in our first September No. Therefore there is no time to be lost.

The only suggestion I have to make as to the MS in hand and type, is, that Captain Fermor wants relief.[†4] It is a disagreeable character—as you mean it to be—and I should be afraid to do so much with him, if the case were mine, without taking the taste of him, here and there, out of the reader's mouth. It is remarkable that if you do not administer a disagreeable character carefully, the public have a decided tendency to think that the story is disagreeable, and not merely the fictitious person.

What do you think of the title,

NEVER FORGOTTEN[†5]

It is a good one in itself—would express the eldest sister's pursuit[†6]—would have a delicate reference to Hanbury[†7]—and, glanced at now and then in the text, would hold the reader in suspense. I would propose to add the line, BY THE AUTHOR OF BELLA DONNA.[†8]

Let me know your opinion as to the title. I need not assure you that the greatest care will be taken of you here, and that we shall make you as thoroughly well and widely known as we possibly can.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Percy Fitz Gerald Esquire.

To GEORGE HOLSWORTH,[†1] 28 JULY 1864

Extract in Anderson Galleries catalogue, Dec 1933; MS 1 p.; dated 28 July 64; addressed Holsworth.

Will you return the printed scrap in the enclosed letter, with the following note from yourself. Madam. I have it in charge from Mr. Charles Dickens to express his regret that he cannot send a favourable reply to your letter. It is now his invariable rule in all cases in which a scrap of paper is enclosed to him, accompanied by a request for its return, to make this answer final.

To JOHN FORSTER, [29 JULY 1864]

Extract in F, IX, v, 742. Date: 29 July 64, according to Forster.

Although I have not been wanting in industry, I have been wanting in invention, and have fallen back with the book. Looming large before me is the Christmas work, and I can hardly hope to do it without losing a number of Our Friend. I have very nearly lost one already, and two would take one half of my whole advance.[†2] This week I have been very unwell; am still out of sorts; and, as I know from two days' slow experience, have a very mountain to climb before I shall see the open country of my work.

To CHARLES KENT, 29 JULY 1864†

MS Mrs Geoffrey Williams. Address; Private | Charles Kent Esquire | "Sun" office | Strand | London | W.C. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Twenty Ninth July 1864

My Dear Kent.

[†a]I have been unwell with a relaxed throat, or I should have written to you sooner, to thank you for your dedication[†3]—to assure you that it heartily, most heartily, gratifies me as the sincere tribute of a true and generous heart—and to tell you that I have been charmed with your book itself. I am proud of having given a name to anything so picturesque, sympathetic, and spirited.[†a†1]

Will you come down here on Saturday week, to dinner, or (failing that) on the Sunday forenoon? You know how early we can deliver you in town on the Monday morning.

Affectionately Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Kent Esquire

To WILLIAM RIDDLE,[†2] 29 JULY 1864

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: William Riddle Esquire | South Lambeth | London | S. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Twenty Ninth July, 1864

Dear Sir

In reply to your letter, I beg to assure you that I have never seen published any "reliable materials" for a Biographical account of myself. I never supply any, as I think it may be time to pursue the subject when my life is over.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

William Riddle Esquire

To W. H. WILLS, 29 JULY 1864*

MS Huntington Library. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Twenty Ninth July, 1864

My Dear Wills.

Mrs. Sartoris[†3] has altered her story, and it will do. I shall have some trouble, however, in touching the proof, dividing it into Chapters, and giving it a name.

For the present I have called it "Medusa".[†4] I will send it up, and wish it to be all got into type at once, that I may "go at it" as a whole.

I am mighty slow with my own work just now, though much better in the throat.

Ever

CD.

August

To H. G. ADAMS, 5 AUGUST 1864*

MS University of Kentucky. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Fifth August, 1864

My Dear Mr. Adams

Make me a "Patron"[†1] if you like, though I very much dislike the word. In so doing, I know you will make me the Patron of failure. If these things cannot be done without Patronage, they will never never never be done with it.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

H. G. Adams Esquire

To WILLIAM RIDDLE, [6 AUGUST 1864]

Envelope in Christie's catalogue, May 1986. Address: W. Riddle Esquire | South Lambeth | London | S. PM 6 Aug 64. On mourning paper.

To MRS SARTORIS, [EARLY AUGUST 1864]

Mention in To Mrs Wills, 7 Aug. Date: shortly before that letter.

To MRS WILLS, 7 AUGUST 1864

MS Huntington Library. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Seventh August 1864

My Dear Mrs. Wills

I am exceedingly relieved by your account of the invalid[†2] which came to hand this morning. I read it aloud at breakfast, to the great gratification of an attentive audience, and it made so great a sensation that you really might have thought him rather a popular personage! Yesterday I had it in my mind, somehow, that he was not so well, and was in two minds whether to stay quiet here, or come or send.

Will you tell him with my love that I shall try to work at my book (for I can't do it in this heat, though I make believe every day) until well on in the week— say Friday, when I shall of course be ready to do all Office-needful. Also, that I am producible there, at any time, day or hour. Also, that I have gone over Mrs. Sartoris's story carefully, and sent her for correction my marked proofs. Lastly, will you congratulate him on his nurse, and tell him that, like the Americans I "defy Cre-ation" to produce a better.

Believe me always | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS NICHOLS, 9 AUGUST 1864

Extract in N, III, 395.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday, Ninth August, 1864

Dear Mrs. Nichols,

The chapter of your Unholy Land[†1] that I had before the receipt of your letter is in type. The chapter to which you refer in your said letter I have not, because it has (no doubt) gone to Mr. Wills to be entered in the regular book and way of the office. Assuming it to be at the office, I will return it to you at the end of the week. Even though we were not going to run, for some weeks, two serial stories together, I should still be indisposed to proceed with this series, for the reason that I believe your countrymen are not now in the mood to be told anything from this side of the water concerning themselves, and that they would unconsciously misrepresent the intention, and that we should do more harm than good.[†2]

To FRANCIS WEBB,[†3] 9 AUGUST 1864

Extract in American Art Association Catalogue, Feb 1924; MS 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill Place, 9 Aug 64; addressed Francis M. Webb.

I beg to acknowledge the courteous invitation of the management for the dinner to Messrs. Martin & Kinglake[†4] ... But engagements which I cannot put aside prevent my ... accepting it.

To THE EDITORS OF "THE GAD'S HILL GAZETTE",[†1] [EARLY AUGUST 1864]

Text from J. W. T. Ley, "The Gad's Hill Gazette", D, VI (1910), 175, including facsimile of extract in a feigned hand. Date: Letter appeared in No. 15 of the Gazette, dated 13 Aug [64]; presumably written one or two days before.

Gentlemen,

Ingratitude being one of the worst vices of the human heart, it is with considerable pain I notice that it is stalking rampant in the hearts of so many of your subscribers.

In a spirited leader in your last issue you have justly rebuked the grumblers who have ventured to find fault with the admirable type in which The Gad's Hill Gazette is ever printed. Permit me, however, to say that it is unwise to offer to return the money of those sordid grumblers who would cavil at the caligraphy of your admirable journal. If they do not like it they can leave it alone. For myself, I honestly confess that its perusal over my Saturday morning meal affords me intense gratification. There is a terseness and vigour in its leaders perfectly marvellous, while the news that it contains is always of the lightest and most healthy description, serving to counteract the injurious effects of a heavy breakfast.

The editor of a public journal is a public man, and consequently becomes public property. He is pleased to bask in the sunshine of a people's applause, and must face the winter of their discontent[†2] when it bursts around him. But be not discouraged. You at least have the satisfaction of knowing that your efforts are appreciated by the intelligent, and as for the others—why—having secured their money, you can afford to dispense with their patronage.

WELL WISHER.[†3]

To The Editors of | "The Gad's Hill Gazette".

To JOHN FORSTER, [?11-12 AUGUST 1864]

Extract in F, VIII, vii, 699*n*. Date: Dilke died on 10 Aug 64; CD probably heard the news the next day and wrote that day or the one after.

Poor Dilke! I am very sorry that the capital old stouthearted man is dead.[†4]

To SIR CHARLES DILKE, 12 AUGUST 1864†

MS British Library. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Twelfth August, 1864.

My Dear Dilke.

†a I am truly concerned to hear from Forster of the death of your excellent father—even at his ripe years, and in the mournful order of nature.

You know how heartily I admired and respected him, and what interest I derived from the association I was so fortunate as to have with that sound head, and staunch true heart. Never on this earth shall I fight any fight by the side of a more reliable and faithful man, though I live as long as he!†a†1

It was but a little while ago at dinner, that I was dwelling on his great qualities to Mrs. Chatfield.†2 My thoughts are affectionately with her and with you.

Ever Yours

CD.

Sir Wentworth Dilke.

To MRS NICHOLS, 15 AUGUST 1864

Text from N, III, 395-6.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Monday, Fifteenth August, 1864

Dear Mrs. Nichols,

I am happy to retain Backwoods Life in Canada for insertion in A.Y.R.†3 The enclosed, I regret to say, I cannot make available. If the case of your young charge†4 were mine, I would try either the neighbourhood of Dijon or the neighbourhood of Marseilles. I think I would give the preference to the latter, because of the beautiful sea. The precaution of not living in a situation exposed to the north wind would be very necessary to observe in that country. And I would not live in Marseilles by any means, but somewhere in its vicinity.

Mr. Wills will send you a cheque for Ben's [Beaver],†5 The Unholy Land paper (which I have called On the Mississippi),†6 and Backwoods all in one. I have begged him to do so this very morning.

Looking†1 back to your letter, I note your enquiry whether I think anything could be done in the way of French life for A.Y.R. Without feeling able positively to answer No, I reply, I think not. I have at various odd times done a good deal of French life myself, and we have an old contributor to Household Words always resident in France, who lays hold of French subjects.†2

Pray offer my kind regards to your good husband, with all good wishes for him and for you.

Faithfully yours always

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To MRS NICHOLS [?16 AUGUST 1864]

Text from N, III, 396 (given as part of last in N, but two endings point strongly to separate letters). Date: Mrs Nichols had clearly replied to his first letter; CD would no doubt have answered it at once.

Ben's Beaver I placed in the last No. I made up.

I am much concerned to receive your sad account of your young daughter. As you say nothing of your own health, I hope it is better. I am well and working hard.

Faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

The enclosed very good and true. In the passage you have lined out, you anticipate what I would have erased.

To GEORGE EVILL WEST,[†3] 16 AUGUST 1864*

MS British Library. Address: George Evill West Esquire | Eden Grove House | Cornwall Place | Holloway | London | N. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Sixteenth August, 1864

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. George Evill West, and begs to say that he has read the very youthful composition enclosed, with interest and pleasure. It does not appear to Mr. Dickens to present any remarkable superiority to the average mind of a clever child of seven years old. It is chiefly curious, he thinks, for its dwelling upon love and marriage; and he supposes its inspiration to be a secret tenderness for some diminutive divinity.

To MISS J. L. FRITH, 22 AUGUST 1864*

MS Myers Ltd.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Twenty Second August, 1864

My Dear Miss Frith

I am very sorry that I cannot accept your Manuscript, but I cannot make it available for All The Year Round.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss J. Frith

To H. G. ADAMS, 25 AUGUST 1864

Text from N, III, 396.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Twenty-Fifth August 1864

My Dear Mr. Adams,

I congratulate you on your appointment[†1] because it is not a light thing or a little thing to desire to be held in such estimation.

The President cannot produce himself on the 19th. But there will be speechifying enough without him, [as][†2] there usually is (so it seems to his blighted mind) in most places, with plenty to spare too.

Faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To MARCUS STONE, 26 AUGUST 1864*

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Friday Twenty Sixth August 1864

My Dear Marcus

I return the Sketches[†3] by the first post after the receipt of your letter. The writing will be:

The person of the house and the bad child.[†4]

Bringing him in.[†5]

By tonight's post I will send you a proof of No. 7.[†1] The Printer has No.8,[†2] and shall send you a proof of that too, as soon as I have cleared it of such mistakes as make it unintelligible.

Affecy. Ever
CD.

To SIR JAMES EMERSON TENNENT, 26 AUGUST 1864

Text from MDGH, II, 218-19.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Friday, Aug. 26th, 1864

My Dear Tennent,

Believe me, I fully intended to come to you—did not doubt that I should come—and have greatly disappointed Mary and her aunt, as well as myself, by not coming. But I do not feel safe in going out for a visit. The mere knowledge that I had such a thing before me would put me out. It is not the length of time consumed, or the distance traversed, but it is the departure from a settled habit and a continuous sacrifice of pleasures that comes in question. This is an old story with me. I have never divided a book of my writing with anything else, but have always wrought at it to the exclusion of everything else; and it is now too late to change.

After receiving your kind note I resolved to make another trial. But the hot weather and a few other drawbacks did not mend the matter, for I have dropped astern this month instead of going ahead. So I have seen Forster, and shown him my chains, and am reduced to taking exercise in them, like Baron Trenck.[†3]

I am heartily pleased that you set so much store by the dedication.[†4] You may be sure that it does not make me the less anxious to take pains, and to work out well what I have in my mind.

Mary and Georgina unite with me in kindest regards to Lady Tennent[†5] and Miss Tennent,[†6] and wish me to report that while they are seriously disappointed, they still feel there is no help for it. I can testify that they had great pleasure in the anticipation of the visit, and that their faces were very long and blank indeed when I began to hint my doubts. They fought against them valiantly as long as there was a chance, but they see my difficulty as well as anyone not myself can.

Believe me, my dear Tennent, ever faithfully yours

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To [JOSEPH COUCHMAN],[†1] 27 AUGUST 1864

Extract in American Art Association Catalogue No. 4389; MS 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill Place, 27 Aug. 64.

Please erect in the Coach-house such wooden supports as may be necessary to render the floor of the young gentlemen's room strong enough to bear any thing that may be put upon it.[†2]

CHARLES DICKENS

To FREDERIC CHAPMAN, 28 AUGUST 1864*

MS Yale University Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Twenty Eighth August 1864

My Dear Sir

As to this Canadian concession,[†3] my only difficulty is, that I don't know what it is worth. Would you write and propose his paying £150 for the right of having sheets in advance throughout, enabling him to publish on the day of publication in England—which of course he must not anticipate. Half the money to be paid down; the other half on his receiving No. 18.[†4] If you think £150 too much, will you substitute £100? In either case, remark that the terms are an experiment— not a precedent—and that the fact of 5 Nos. having been published is taken into consideration.

I regard No. 4[†5] as certain to pick up, and I have the strongest faith in the book's doing thoroughly well.[†6] I believe it to be GOOD,[†7] full of variety, and always rising in its working out of the people and the story. (I know I put into it, the making of a dozen books). The circulation is already larger than that of Copperfield or of Chuzzlewit,[†8] as I remember without looking to the accounts. I see no objection whatever to its being divided into 2 Vols, or to the 1st. Volume's being published on the publication of No. Ten. The construction of the story is particularly favorable to it, for No. Ten will end the second book. The time of year (the end of January) will be excellent. But I think we ought to have two title pages when the book is done—that is to say, an Edition (like the old Editions) in One Volume, and another in Two. You may regard it as agreed that we will publish a first Vol composed of Nos. I to X[†1] inclusive. It must be ready with No. X.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Fredk. Chapman Esquire

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 29 AUGUST 1864*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Monday Twenty Ninth August 1864

My Dear Ouvry

I want to look at the agreement with Chapman and Hall for Our Mutual Friend.[†2] Will you kindly send it me round, to refer to.

Ever Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [?LATE SUMMER 1864]

Extract in F, VIII, vii, 699. Date: presumably referring to The King's Butterfly, adapted by the Rev. J. C. M. Bellew (see Vol. VIII, p. 444*n*), probably the summer before its first performance by Fechter, 22 Oct 64, at the Lyceum.[†3]

I have been cautioning Fechter about the play[†4] whereof he gave the plot and scenes to B; and out of which I have struck some enormities, my account of which will (I think) amuse you. It has one of the best first acts I ever saw; but if he can do much with the last two, not to say three, there are resources in his art that I know nothing about. When I went over the play this day week, he was at least 20 minutes, in a boat, in the last scene, discussing with another gentleman (also in the boat) whether he should kill him or not; after which the gentleman dived over-board and swam for it. Also, in the most important and dangerous parts of the play, there was a young person of the name of Pickles[†5] who was constantly being mentioned by name, in conjunction with the powers of light or darkness; as, "Great Heaven! Pickles?"—"By Hell, 'tis Pickles!"—"Pickles? a thousand Devils!"—"Distraction! Pickles?"

September

To THE REV. R. C. SWINTON,[†1] 3 SEPTEMBER 1864*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Saturday Third September 1864

Sir.

Through some mistake, your letter has been laid aside in a great accumulation of correspondence, and has only this day come to light.

I know no such person as Mr. Maitland[†2] concerning whom your enquiries are made, and never did know any one of that name. Therefore I fear you have been grossly imposed upon; the rather as I find, on reference to the Clergy List, that Maitland is not the name of the Rector of Folkestone,[†3] whom (as you inform me) the person in question claimed for his brother.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Rev. R. C. Swinton

To JOHN LEECH, 5 SEPTEMBER 1864

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: John Leech Esquire | 12 Royal Crescent | Whitby | Yorkshire. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Fifth September 1864

My Dear Leech.

Only a word, to say that your friend, arriving at the office with his letter of introduction when I was not there, "elected" (as the Americans say) to deliver it to Wills, and to confer with him as my representative. And further that Wills duly pointed out to him how that Mankind have had a note or two on Shakespeare already, and how that more notes on that theme would swamp the gallant craft wherein I have the honor to hoist my flag as Admiral.

We are all well here, and all send kindest regard to Mrs. Leech and you. I know Whitby very well—used once to go to Mulgrave, not far off[†4]—and would send you overleaf a sketch of the old Ruin on the height,[†5] if I could draw.

If you should meet with an inaccessible Cave anywhere in that neighbourhood, to which a hermit could retire from the memory of Prince Albert and testimonials to the same, pray let me know of it. We have nothing solitary and deep enough in this part of England.

Ever Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN BAINBRIDGE,[†1] 6 SEPTEMBER 1864†

MS Folger Shakespeare Library, Washington. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Sixth September 1864.

Sir.

In reply to your obliging letter, [†a]I must candidly express my opinion that Shakespeare's last Monument is in his works, and that it would be but a poor act of homage to his memory and genius to set up a Memorial to him among the London statues.

This opinion I held—but did not insist upon, in deference to the feeling of what appeared to be a very large majority—when the scheme of a great National Memorial to Shakespeare was first set forth before the public in connexion with the Tercentenary.[†2] All that has since attended the hawking about of his great name and fame, has been Failure. I now desire most heartily to leave that name and fame alone.

Therefore I cannot have the gratification of heading the subscription of the London Workmen, as you do me the great honor to propose. With the highest respect for them and their intentions, I am not of their mind in this matter, and never was. And having once acted against my own conviction, I cannot be more practically penitent than by resolving (in this regard) to sin no more.[†a]

I am Sir
Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. John Bainbridge

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 9 SEPTEMBER 1864

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, June 1979; MS 1 p.; dated Office of AYR, 9 Sep 64; addressed Frederic Ouvry.

Enclosing the cheque for Mrs. Dickens, which I think is due tomorrow.

To W. H. WILLS, 11 SEPTEMBER 1864*

MS Huntington Library. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Sunday Eleventh September 1864

My Dear Wills. I return you now:

Thornbury's Cholera Hospital (rechristened "A Russian Romance[†3])

A Glass of Madeira[†4]

Leather Guns[†1]
These, judiciously distributed, will make a good No. and are about the length you want. Don't put in any mere common place verses.[†2]

We sadly want some better arrangement of our Proofs. The Proof you have sent me of Mrs. Sartoris's story, is the first proof that was pulled.—Since then, I have gone over it carefully—divided it into chapters[†3]—sent it to her for her corrections[†4]—and forwarded the whole to Birtles. This is weeks ago. Pray be sure that you have the right proof when you divide the story into two portions.

The following articles on Birtles's list, are all right: I having already gone over them and returned the proofs.

A Political Parrot[†5]

Backwoods Life in Canada.[†6]
Distribute the Aldershot Exhibition. Of the rest of the articles in type anon.

Wilkie wishes me to tell you that he feels certain Lehmann had two black balls at the Garrick, because he seconded him.[†7] He insists on my telling you this, before we put you down.[†8]

Ever
CD.

To MISS ELLEN WOODGATE,[†9] 16 SEPTEMBER 1864*

MS New York University Library. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Friday Sixteenth September 1864

Dear Madam

I have read your benevolent letter with great interest and deeply regret that you, in common with many hundreds of correspondents—unconsciously exaggerate my powers of bestowing patronage or employment, ten thousand fold. With many claims very near home on such means as I have of striking out paths in life for others, and with communications like yours always pouring in upon me in such numbers that it is often beyond the bounds of all reasonable possibility for a busy man to acknowledge their receipt, I can no more help this unfortunate gentleman to earn a subsistence in London than you yourself can. However confusing you may find this assurance, it is strictly true.

My vote for the Governesses Institution has already been given to a meritorious but unsuccessful applicant.[†10] If I were to withdraw it now that she again renews her application, I should desert and disappoint her for no sufficient reason. This, I am certain, will be a sufficient explanation to you, why my proxy is not available for the sister in whom you are so kindly interested. It is a distressful story, Heaven knows, but beyond my reach.

Dear Madam | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Ellen Woodgate

To WILLIAM DAY, 20 SEPTEMBER 1864*

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Tuesday Twentieth September 1864

Dear Mr. Day

Be so good as make these rough corrections in Nos. 7 and 8 enclosed. And when you send me revises, please to send by post another revise of each No. (7[†1] and 8,)[†2] marked "Private", and addressed

W. H. Wills Esquire
22 Regents Park Terrace
N.W.

Faithfully Yours
CD.

To [?CHARLES EDMONDS],[†3] 21 SEPTEMBER 1864*

MS New York Public Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Twenty First September 1864

Lyell's Principles of Geology[†4]

CHARLES DICKENS

To CLARKSON STANFIELD, 21 SEPTEMBER 1864

MS Yale University Library.

THE ATHENAEUM,
Wednesday Twenty First September 1864

My Dear Stanny.

I met George[†1] in the street a few days ago, and he gave me a wonderful account of the effect of your natural element[†2] upon you at Ramsgate. I expect you to come back, looking about twenty nine, and feeling about nineteen.

This morning I have looked in here to put down Fechter as a Candidate, on the chance of the committee's electing him, some day or other.[†3] He is a most devoted worshipper of yours, and would take it as a great honor if you would second him. Supposing you to have not the least objection (of course if you should have any, I can in a moment provide a substitute), will you write your name in the candidates' Book as his seconder, when you are next in town and passing this way?

Lastly, if you should be in town on his opening night (a Saturday, and in all probability the 22nd. of October), will you come and dine at the office, and see his new Piece.[†4] You have not yet "pronounced" in the matter of that new French stage of his, on which Cal[l]cott[†5] for the said new piece has built up all manner of villages, camps, Versailles gardens,[†6] &c &c &c &c. with no wings, no flies, no looking off in any direction. If you tell me that you are to be in town by that time, I will not fail to refresh your memory as to the precise day.

With kind regard to Mrs. Stanfield, Believe me my Dear old Boy

Ever Your affectionate

DICK

To MARCUS STONE, 23 SEPTEMBER 1864*

MS Private. Address: Marcus Stone Esquire | Russell House | Tavistock Square | London | WC. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Twentythird September 1864

My Dear Marcus

Let us say the Office on Tuesday morning at a quarter past eleven. I leave it at 12.

Ever affecy.

CD

To MRS NICHOLS, 25 SEPTEMBER 1864

Text from N, III, 398.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday, Twenty-Fifth September, 1864

Dear Mrs. Nichols,

This note is to let you know: That I have duly intimated your change of address to Chapman & Hall; that I will certainly read your book,[†1] please God, when I get it; that I am heartily glad of the change in your young invalid; that I found the extract from the letter very droll and true, but too much in the nature of a scrap for A.Y.R.; that I write you a longer letter in the spirit than in the pen, ink, and paper (getting away from my desk when I can); and that I am, with kind regards to your husband and the little recovering patient,

Faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To MARCUS STONE, 29 SEPTEMBER 1864†

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Thursday Twenty Ninth September 1864

My Dear Marcus. This is the kind of man.[†2] [†a]The Doll's dressmaker is immensely better than she was.[†3] I think she should now come extremely well. A weird sharpness not without beauty,[†4] is the thing I want.[†a]

Affecy. always

CD.

To GEORGE HOLSWORTH, 30 SEPTEMBER 1864

Mention in Parke-Bernet catalogue No. 1249; MS 1 p.; dated 30 Sep 64; addressed George Holsworth.

States he is at work on Christmas number; mentions Wills and the office fire.[†1]

October

To W. H. WILLS, 1 OCTOBER 1864

MS Berg Collection. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,

HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday First October 1864

My Dear Wills.

I wrote to Holsworth yesterday about the fire,[†2] saying that I hoped you would not go up to town and that I would be at the office on Monday morning. However you went, and did all. It is much to be regretted that we could not take Taylor[†3] to Bow Street. In the case of so nefarious an offence there really is a duty to be done to Society—though I am almost afraid to use the phrase: it is so horribly abused. It is curious that I anticipated the facts here, on receiving the news.

I don't like Bees[†4] as a subject: having had my honey turned into Gall by Bee Masters in the Times.[†5] I think I have a better paper—a musical one—of Chorley's.[†6] I will see to it the first thing on Monday and will see Morley. All next week (except Thursday) I expect to be at the office.

Mrs. Lirriper is again in hand. I had flown off from the finish of No. IX of our Mutual,[†7] to perch upon her cap. I hope to make way apace with her at the office.

You asked me for Plorn's address. Here it is:

The Rev. W. C. Sawyer
Cambridge House
Tunbridge Wells.

I hope and trust you are by this time getting better. Set yourself up for the Xmas No. campaign, and don't come back too soon.

Kind regard to Mrs. Wills. | Ever Yours
CD.

To MARCUS STONE, 4 OCTOBER 1864*

MS Morgan Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Fourth October 1864

My Dear Marcus. I remember that you have not the letterings for the last subjects done. Here they are.

Ever affecy.
CD.

"Come up and be dead."[†1]
Forming the domestic virtues.[†2]

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 4 OCTOBER 1864

Mention in C. F. Libbie catalogue, Feb 1900; MS 1 p.; dated 4 Oct 64.

Returning a letter of Landor's.[†3]

To CHARLES KENT, 6 OCTOBER 1864*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Sixth October 1864

My Dear Kent. I am truly sorry to hear that you have been suffering again. Like Chorley himself I shudder from head to foot at the remembrance of our having talked so quietly of your former suffering when another operation was impending. God send it may be all past and gone now, and that you may become as strong and as well as I wish you!

Your company on the journey of twenty months,[†4] lightens the way, believe me. There are some things in No. 8[†5] wherein I am sure of a small tear or so from you, beforehand.[†6] In the midst of all that interest and study, I am stopping now for my part in the Christmas No. here, and am pleasing myself very much (!) which details I mention, because I know you sympathize with them.

When you feel in condition again we hope you will come to Gad's Hill for fresh air. My daughter Mary and her Aunt have been touched by my account of you, and send you their kindest regard and tender wishes. Mrs. Collins and her husband have gone abroad for his better health;—I don't know the place, I am sorry to add, where he is likely to find it.

This is noble weather for you and you could hardly be in a better retreat at this season. There and everywhere believe me

Affectionately Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Kent Esquire.

To WILKIE COLLINS, [?EARLY OCTOBER 1864]

Mention in To Miss Hogarth, 12 Oct 64. Date: probably a few days before that letter.

Saying that he could not go to Paris with him, but inviting him to join Georgina Hogarth and himself at Dover instead.[†1]

To MARCUS STONE, 7 OCTOBER 1864*

MS Mr Brian Lake. Address: Marcus Stone Esquire | Russell House | Tavistock Square | W. C.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Seventh October 1864

My Dear Marcus. It is all right. I mean that Lettering rather to explain the general idea[†2] (very difficult to be lettered[†3] otherwise), than the particular passage.[†4]

Affecy always

CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?8 OCTOBER 1864]

Extracts in F, 1872-4, III, xiii, 271*n* and F, IX, i, 726. Date: first extract 8 Oct 64,[†5] according to Forster; clearly correct, since Adah Menken first appeared in London as Mazeppa on 3 Oct; CD finished first story of the Christmas No. by 8 Oct: see To Wills, that day; second extract perhaps written same day.

I went the other night to see the Streets of London[†6] at the Princess's. A piece that is really drawing all the town, and filling the house with nightly overflows.[†1] It is the most depressing instance, without exception, of an utterly degraded and debased theatrical taste that has ever come under my writhing notice. For not only do the audiences—of all classes—go, but they are unquestionably delighted.[†2] At Astley's there has been much puffing at great cost of a certain Miss Ada Isaacs Menk[e]n,[†3] who is to be seen bound on the horse in Mazeppa[†4] "ascending the fearful precipices not as hitherto done by a dummy."[†5] Last night, having a boiling head, I went out from here to cool myself on Waterloo Bridge, and I thought I would go and see this heroine. Applied at the box-door for a stall. "None left sir." For a box-ticket. "Only standing-room sir." Then the man (busy in counting great heaps of veritable checks) recognizes me and says—"Mr. Smith[†6] will be very much concerned when he hears that you went away sir"—"Never mind; I'll come again." "You never go behind I think sir, or—?" "No thank you, I never go behind." "Mr. Smith's box, sir—" "No thank you, I'll come again." Now who do you think the lady is? If you don't already know, ask that question of the highest Irish mountains that look eternal, and they'll never tell you—Mrs. Heenan![†7]

Contrariwise I assisted another night at the Adelphi (where I couldn't, with careful calculation, get the house up to Nine Pounds), and saw quite an admirable performance[†8] of Mr. Toole and Mrs. Mellon—she, an old servant, wonderfully like Anne[†1]—he, showing a power of passion very unusual indeed in a comic actor, as such things go, and of a quite remarkable kind.

I can report that I have finished the job I set myself, and that it has in it something—to me at all events—so extraordinarily droll, that though I have been reading it some hundred times in the course of the working, I have never been able to look at it with the least composure, but have always roared in the most unblushing manner. I leave you to find out what it was.[†2]

To W. H. WILLS, 8 OCTOBER 1864

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Saturday Eighth October 1864

My Dear Wills.

Pray let me know how the leg comes out. I am very anxious to be informed that it's "only" a boil!

I have gone through the No.[†3] carefully, and have been down upon Chorley's paper[†4] in particular, which was "a little bit" too personal.[†5] It is all right now, and good, and them's my sentiments too of The Music of the Future.

Mrs. Lirriper will be in your arms, I trust, two or three days hence. I have enjoined Birtles to the greatest caution in setting it up, and have told him to lock up the type and pull no proof but on a written instruction from me. I have done the opening paper[†6] (longer than 'the last, I fancy),[†7] and am now knocking off the couple of pages or so for the end.[†8] I am something the worse for work, and have an idea of going to the sea for a day or two about Friday next. But I shall be here until further notice.

Ever Faithfully
CD.

To MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL, 10 OCTOBER 1864*

MS Dickens House.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Monday Tenth October 1864

Messrs. Chapman and Hall

Please to deliver to the Bearer for me, one copy of A Child's History of England.

CHARLES DICKENS

To F. D. FINLAY, 10 OCTOBER 1864

MS Comtesse de Suzannet.

Monday Tenth October, 1864

My Dear Finlay

I must add my word of congratulation on your engagement,[†1] and of hearty assurance that what is so nearly and dearly interesting to you is full of interest for me. I count upon having the pleasure of receiving your wife at Gad's Hill, and I hope you will make as good a report of me as you can, beforehand. For it is but fair that she should be prepared to like me, when I am in such an admirable state of preparation to like her.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To THE REV. HUGH ROBERT HUGHES, 10 OCTOBER 1864

MS Mrs A.K. Frazer. Address: The Rev. H. R. Hughes | Madyn Dysw | Amlwch | Anglesey.
On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Tenth October 1864

My Dear Sir

I beg to send you a Post Office Order for a Guinea towards the restoration of your Church.[†2] And I am,

My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Rev. H. R. Hughes

To SYDNEY DICKENS [?10-11 OCTOBER 1864]

Mention in To Georgina Hogarth, 12 Oct 64. Date: probably a day or two before that letter.

To MATILDA [LATER, MRS BUTLER], 11 OCTOBER 1864

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Eleventh October, 1864

Please, Matilda, to send me, in the course of the day, my Pea coat with the green plaid lining (I think it is hanging up in the hall) and my waterproof coat which is hanging in the staircase of the young gentlemen's room.

CHARLES DICKENS

To CLARKSON STANFIELD, 11 OCTOBER 1864*

MS Yale University Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Eleventh October 1864

My Dear Stanny

I am much concerned and disappointed to get your note.[†1] (I have been away, writing my part of the Christmas Number.) Tomorrow afternoon I shall come up and form my own opinion of the lad with the tarry trousers.

Ever affectionately Yours
DICK

To MRS BIRMINGHAM, 12 OCTOBER 1864*

Text from typescript, Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Twelfth October 1864.

Dear Mrs Birmingham

I want to come down to the Lord Warden tomorrow (Thursday) for a few days change. As my sister in law will be with me, I shall require a sea-view sitting room and two bedrooms; and on Saturday when Mr Wilkie Collins will join us,[†2] a third bedroom.[†3] I am at work, and shall be much obliged to you if you can lodge me cheerfully and quietly. We purpose coming down tomorrow evening—I am not quite certain whether to dinner, or by the Mail.

In case you can't take me in, will you kindly telegraph to that effect, here. If I hear nothing from you, I shall conclude that you expect me.

Faithfully yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 12 OCTOBER 1864*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Twelfth October 1864

My Dearest Georgie

As you are so far from Reading, I dare say you will not get these half dozen words before you come back.

I have not been able to get to Our Mutual Friend from Mrs. Lirriper, though yesterday I was able to do some useful touching-up work that was necessary to No. 8.[†1] This being out of sorts makes me the more anxious to get early to Dover. And I should like to be down there to dinner tomorrow. I suppose, this will not be difficult to do, if Mrs. Elliot cannot come up. If she can, of course she will be the first consideration. On this head I shall hear from you tomorrow morning.

Old Mrs. Collins[†2] is fretting about Charley,[†3] and Wilkie is with her. He wrote from Tunbridge Wells to ask me if I could go to Paris with him? I replied No, but told him we were going to Dover, if that would do. He proposes to join us on Saturday.[†4]

I am going this afternoon to see Wills, and also Stanny. I have a very good honest story of Wills to relate.

In this interval, I have settled the regimental part of poor Walter's wretched affairs[†5]—utterly incomprehensible, as they always have been—and have written to Sydney. The first-named misery I have been postponing facing, every day since last July. So I have not been idle, though No. 10[†6] is unborn.

All the scenery is to be tried over the way at 8 tonight. I have not seen Fechter since you left, but he sent Godin[†7] over yesterday to ask me to make the scenery-appointment.[†8] He said of the foot "Ah le mauvais pied—Poof!"—from which I inferred that Fechter still limps.

My love to Mrs. Elliot. I shall be glad to know (tell her) how on earth she got the Gout.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To CHARLES MANBY, 12 OCTOBER 1864

Extract in N, III, 400.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
12th October 1864

I really am not free to sit.[†1] If I sat at all, I should have to sit to half a dozen other people first—and I hate it altogether—and am as little disposed ever to sit again as anybody living can well be.

To ANDREW HALLIDAY, 13 OCTOBER 1864†

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Thirteenth October 1864

My Dear Mr. Halliday.

[†a]Between my book, and my part of the Xmas No. here (on which I have just now been closely occupied), my thoughts are so set upon other ideal creatures[†a] than Edgar,[†2] that I have the greatest difficulty in fixing my attention on that young gentleman. I am going down to Dover tonight, and I will write to you by Sunday's post, on the chance of any additional device occurring to me.

At present I do not see any thing beyond your ken. The Anonyme[†3] suggestiveness requires to be extremely delicate. [†a]The grand point is to impress Lily with the conviction that he is mean and shabby of soul,[†4] and to present Long[†5] before her as the exact contrast.[†a]

Believe me | Very faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Andrew Halliday Equire

To SHIRLEY BROOKS, 16 OCTOBER 1864

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds. On Gad's Hill mourning paper.

Lord Warden Hotel, Dover
Sunday Sixteenth October, 1864

My Dear Brooks.

I have your letter here, where I am resting for a few days. I hope nothing will occur to prevent my attending the meeting[†6] on Thursday at 3.

But if anything should, I will write to you.

Yes to the Prince Albert monument outside my study window,[†1] on condition that an interesting little anecdote connected with the exemplary life of that Illustrious Prince is conspicuously inscribed on its base: It is simply, that a certain British writer of fiction seeing one day written on his bill of fare at home, "Prince Albert Pudding" (that great German being then alive among mortals), did instantly cause those words to be erased, and "Flunkey Pudding" substituted in their stead. These again were afterwards superseded by the words "The Great and Good Pudding"; under which denomination that piece of confectionery is served at his board unto this day.

Ever Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

Shirley Brooks Esquire

To SAMUEL LOVER, 16 OCTOBER 1864

MS W. A. Foyle. On Gad's Hill mourning paper.

Lord Warden Hotel, Dover
Sunday Sixteenth October 1864

My Dear Lover

I am resting here for a few days, and have your letter this morning. When I return to the office, I will endeavour to find out how that mistake[†2] occurred, and will take care, that all is put right in any re-prints of the No. 1 thoroughly understand and thoroughly respect your reasons for pointing out the error.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Samuel Lover Esquire

To J. C. PARKINSON,[†3] 16 OCTOBER 1864

MS Houghton Library, Harvard. On mourning paper.

[GAD'S HILL PLACE,]
HIGHAM [BY ROCHESTER, KENT.][†4]
Sunday Sixteenth October 1864

My Dear Mr. Parkinson

Many thanks for your letter. I had previously heard from Mrs. Alfred[†5] of your great exertions in her little daughter's[†6] behalf, and I do not doubt that she owes her success to you.[†7]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

J. C. Parkinson Esquire

To W. H. WILLS, 16 OCTOBER 1864

MS Huntington Library. On Gad's Hill mourning paper.

Lord Warden Hotel, Dover
Sunday Sixteenth October 1864

My Dear Wills.

I was unspeakably relieved and most agreeably surprised to get your letter this morning. I had pictured you as lying there waiting, full another week. Whereas Please God you will now come up with a wet sheet and a flowing sail,[†1]—as we say in these parts.

My expectations of Mrs. Lirriper's sale, are not so mighty as yours. But I am heartily glad and grateful to be honestly able to believe that she is nothing but a good 'un. It is the condensation of a quantity of subject and the very greatest pains.

George Russell knew nothing whatever of the slightest doubt of your being elected at the Garrick.[†2] Rely on my probing the matter to the bottom, and ascertaining everything about it, and giving you the fullest information in ample time to decide what shall be done. Don't bother yourself about it. I have spoken. On my eyes be it.

[†a]Wilkie sends kindest regard. Ditto Georgina. Mrs. Wills included in all remembrances.[†a]

Ever My Dear Wills | Affecy Yours
CD.

To [?W. H. WILLS],[†3] 16 OCTOBER 1864

Extract in Anderson Galleries catalogue, Dec 1933; MS 1 p.; dated Lord Warden Hotel, Dover, 16 Oct 64.

Also enclosed, is a note of what John[†4] has now to pay for the schooling of his children.[†5] Will you please give it to him and explain.

To LIEUT COLONEL NAPIER STURT,[†1] 17 OCTOBER 1864*

MS Capt. Michael Hobbs. On Gad's Hill mourning paper.

Lord Warden Hotel Dover
Tuesday Seventeenth October 1864

My Dear Sir

I am extremely obliged to you for your kind remembrance, and should have had great pleasure in responding in person to your invitation, but that I have come here to write by the sea (until Thursday) and must give myself no quarter.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Lt. Colonel Napier Sturt.

To FREDERICK S. MILLS,[†2] 21 OCTOBER 1864

Summary from "Antiques Road Show", B.B.C., 16 Jan 1994; MS 1 p.; addressed Mr Mills; dated Gad's Hill Place, 21 Oct 64.

Thanking Mr Mills for his letter, received on returning from the seaside, and regretting that he cannot accept the position he is offering.

To MARCUS STONE, 21 OCTOBER 1864*

MS Mr Philip Dickens.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Twenty First October 1864

My Dear Marcus.

The Printer has sent me these illustrations to put the lettering to.[†3] Will you just note on the back of each where the subject is taken from,—I mean, exactly at what point of the book.
Then please return them here.

Affecy. always
CD.

To MARCUS STONE, 21 OCTOBER 1864

MS Morgan Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Twenty First October 1864

My Dear Marcus.

All right.

The Lettering for the two subjects will be:

— X - 443 —

Our Johnny[†1]

Pa's Lodger, and Pa's daughter[†2]

The accompanying large letter[†3] I was just going to send up to you when your messenger came.

Ever affecy.

CD.

To WILLIAM DAY, [?24 OCTOBER 1864]*

MS Benoliel Collection. Date: p. 211 (see below) of Our Mutual Friend was in No. 7, published 31 Oct 64; therefore letter probably written approx. a week before that. Address: Mr. Day | Messrs. Clowes and Son.

Dear Mr. Day. I have made one correction (page 211) and you can now go to press with the whole.

CD.[†4]

To W. W. F. DE CERJAT, 25 OCTOBER 1864†

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: A Monsieur W.F. de Cerjat | Lausanne | Switzerland. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Twenty Fifth October

My Dear Cerjat.

Here is a limping brute of a reply to your always-welcome Christmas letter! But, as usual, when I have done my day's work, I jump up from my desk and rush into air and exercise, and find letter-writing the most difficult thing in my daily life.

I hope your asthmatic tendencies may not be strong just now; but Townshend's account of the premature winter at Lausanne, is not encouraging, and with us here in England all such disorders have been aggravated this autumn. However, a man of your dignity must have either asthma or gout—and I hope you have got the better of the two!. †aI suppose mighty little cold air ever finds its way into Townshend's bronchial passages?†a

In London there is, as you see by the papers, extraordinarily little news. At present the apprehension (rather less than it was though) of a commercial crisis, and the trial of Müller†5 next Thursday, are the two chief sensations. I hope that gentleman will be hanged, and have hardly a doubt of it, though croakers contrariwise are not wanting.†1 It is difficult to conceive any other line of defence than that the circumstances proved, taken separately, are slight. But a sound Judge will immediately charge the Jury that the strength of the circumstances lies in their being put together, and will thread them together on a fatal rope.†2

As to the Church, my friend, I am sick of it. The spectacle presented by the indecent squabbles of priests of most denominations, and the exemplary unfairness and rancour with which they conduct their differences, utterly repel me.†3 And the idea of the Protestant Establishment, in the face of its own history, seeking to trample out discussion and private judgment, is an enormity so cool that I wonder the Right Reverends, Very Reverends, and all other Reverends, who commit it, can look in one another's faces without laughing as the old Soothsayers did. Perhaps they can't, and don't. How our sublime and so-different Christian religion is to be administered in the future, I cannot pretend to say, but that the Church's hand is at its own throat, I am fully convinced. Here, mere Popery—there, mere Methodism—as many forms of consignment to eternal damnation, as there are articles, and all in one forever quarreling body—the Master of the New Testament put out of sight, and the rage and fury almost always turning on the letter of obscure parts of the old Testament which itself has been the subject of accommodation, adaptation, varying interpretation without end—these things can not last. The Church that is to have its part in the coming Time must be a more christian one, with less arbitrary pretensions and a stronger hold upon the mantle of Our Saviour as He walked and talked upon this earth.

Of family intelligence, I have very little—Charles Collins continuing in a very poor way and shewing no signs of amendment, he and my daughter Katie went to Wiesbaden and thence to Nice where they are now. I have strong apprehensions that he will never recover, and that she will be left a young widow. All the rest are as they were; Mary neither married nor going to be; Georgina holding them all together, and perpetually corresponding with the distant ones; occasional rallyings coming off here, in which another generation begins to peep above the table—I once used to think what a horrible thing it would be to be a Grandfather. Finding that the calamity falls upon me without my perceiving any other change in myself, I bear it like a man.

Mrs. Watson has bought a house in town,†4 to which she repairs in the season, for the bringing out of her daughter.†5 She is now at Rockingham. Her eldest son is said to be as good an eldest son as ever was, and to make her position there a perfectly independent and happy one. I have not seen him for some years—her,

I often see—but he ought to be a good fellow and is very popular in his neighbourhood.

I have altered this place very much since you were here, and have made a very pretty (I think an unusually pretty) Drawing Room. I wish you would come back, and see it. My being on the Dover line, and my being very fond of France, occasion me to cross the channel perpetually.[†1] Whenever I feel that I have worked too much, or am on the eve of over-doing it, and want a change, away I go by the Mail Train, and turn up in Paris, or anywhere else that suits my humour, next morning. So I come back as fresh as a Daisy, and preserve as ruddy a face as if I never bent over a sheet of paper. When I retire from a literary life, I think of setting up as a Channel-Pilot.

Pray give my love to Mrs. Cerjat, and tell her I should like to go up the Great St. Bernard again, and shall be glad to know if she is open to another ascent. Our old days in Switzerland are ever fresh to me, and sometimes I walk with you again, after dark, outside the Hotel at Martigny while that poor girl (Lady Mary Taylour,[†2] wasn't it?) [†a]who was always leaving her nightgown behind, which my man triumphantly produced at Inn-Doors as we were starting[†a]— sang within, very prettily.[†3] [†a]Wasn't it poor Haldimand who was made partially drunk by my having brandy mulled with the wine? It was neither I nor you, but it was somebody. And somebody's bedstead broke as he lay in his cool cell:— poor Watson's, or yours.[†a] Lord, how the time goes! How many years ago!

[†a]Don't fail—but I know you won't—in your Christmas letter; and at Christmas and in the New Year and always, think of me my Dear Cerjat as[†a]

Your affectionate friend
CHARLES DICKENS

To WILLIAM DAY, 25 OCTOBER 1864*

MS Private.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Twenty Fifth October 1864

Dear Mr. Day.

I send you the lettering for the plates in Great Expectations.[†4] On the back of each plate you will find noted by Mr. Stone the point in the story which each illustration is to face.

To W. H. WILLS, [?26 OCTOBER 1864]*

MS Huntington Library. Date: misdated by CD; on 16 Oct, a Sunday, he was at Dover; almost certainly Wed 26 Oct. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Wednesday Sixteenth October, 1864

My Dear Wills. I have reconsidered the advertisement carefully, and I don't like the idea of it. I think it is below our mark, and is American—and I can say no worse of it than that.

Let us abandon the idea, and advertize as we did last year. I saw the posters. It strikes me that the usual long large narrow one is too black. A red line round Mrs. Lirriper's Legacy[†1] would surely improve it. It looks to me as if it were designed to express that Mrs. Lirriper was dead and we were in mourning.

Will you kindly check the accompanying account[†2] of Chapman and Hall (first 6 Nos. of Our Mutual Friend), and tell me, when we meet, whether you see any serious objections to it.

Ever

CD.

Let Birtles lose no time in getting into type and before me, all that comes in for the Xmas No.

To SIR JAMES EMERSON TENNENT, 29 OCTOBER 1864*

MS University of Texas. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Twenty Ninth October, 1864

My Dear Tennent.

I am heartily vexed that you got this set of my books, because I had hoped to send you one when your own book[†3] should be finished. For the present I stand committed to a white lie, in the inscription I have written;[†4] but means must be devised for making it a piece of truth.

Ever affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

November

To [H. COLYER],[†1] 1 NOVEMBER 1864

Extract in Union Square Book Shop catalogue No. 92 (1930); MS 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill Place, 1 Nov 64; addressed Mr. Colger (misreading for Colyer).

Asking him to make necessary repairs such as screw up the Van and tighten up the bolts.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?1 NOVEMBER 1864]

Extract in F, IX, v, 742. Date: evidently three days after Leech's death on 29 Oct 64.

I have not done my number. This death of poor Leech[†2] (I suppose) has put me out woefully. Yesterday and the day before I could do nothing; seemed for the time to have quite lost the power; and am only by slow degrees getting back into the track to-day.

To MRS NICHOLS, 1 NOVEMBER 1864

Text from N, III, 403-4.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday, First November, 1864

Dear Mrs Nichols,

It appears to me that you cannot have received a letter I wrote to you from the office some weeks ago,[†3] in reference (as I suppose) to the very papers which are the subject of your complaint received yesterday. But it was certainly posted along with other letters which reached their respective destinations.

You had written me a note about the papers, in which you mentioned that Mr. Froude[†4] had considered their general subject interesting to the public at this time, and had therefore desired to have them for Fraser![†5] and you added that you knew they were true, particularly referring, if I do not mistake, to a description of a negro preacher. In the letter I wrote you, I replied that I did not concur in Mr. Froude's opinion; that I thought the subject unacceptable to the public, pending the miserable struggle; that I did not believe your compatriots were at all in a humour to receive the truth about anything from this side of the water; and that I would rather leave them alone for the time altogether; under the impression that I should otherwise do more harm than good.[†1] For these reasons (I added, as I remember), I declined the papers without reference to their merits, but they were in type, and would you like to have proofs. No answer has reached me.

With the contents of my note Mr. Wills was unacquainted; but I said to him, "I have written to Mrs. Nichols about those papers, and it is understood between her and me that they will not go in." Since then he has been very ill. I suppose, writing now without having had an opportunity of communicating with him, that he found some memoranda on the papers that they were not for insertion, and forgot under what circumstances those notes were made. But the judgment exercised is most distinctly mine, and not his. And as to him, I am quite sure that he is incapable of treating you with the least intentional disrespect.

Faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To LORD LYTTELTON,[†2] 4 NOVEMBER 1864*

MS The Right Hon. Viscount Cobham.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,

HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Fourth November 1864

Dear Lord Lyttelton

It would be very agreeable to me to come to see you, and to bite at both the baits you dangle in the distance; but my pursuits are so engrossing that I have no leisure for the gratification of my own inclinations in that wise; and as to Reading!—I assure you that if I were to read once, for an audience such as that in which you are generously interested,[†3] I should be assailed from all parts of the United Kingdom for six months to come, and a correspondence would set in tending to frenzy and despair.

Believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Lord Lyttelton.

To HENRY SPICER, 5 NOVEMBER 1864

Mention in Autograph Prices Current, V, 1919-21; MS 1 p.; dated 5 Nov 64; addressed H. Spicer.

To THE REV. CHRISTOPHER CAY,[†1] 7 NOVEMBER 1864

Text from N, III, 404 checked from MS Sotheby's Feb 1957.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Seventh November 1864

Dear Sir

Mrs. Cay having mentioned to my sister in law that you would be glad to compare notes with me on likely means of ensuring audibility in reading to a congregation, I very readily offer you a few slight words of suggestion out of my own practice and experience.

The main point is difficult to express, and will have, I am sensible, a very odd appearance on this paper.—If you could form a habit of finding your voice, lower down—in other words, of reading more from the chest and less from the throat—you would find yourself immensely relieved, and your voice greatly strengthened. When you experience any little distress or difficulty now, I think it is in the throat; and I think that is, because the strain is in the wrong place. If you make the trial, reading aloud alone, of placing your hand on your chest, and trying as it were to originate your voice behind the hand, you will probably soon find a capacity in it almost new to you, while the ease of speaking will be correspondingly increased.

I should have supposed your perfectly unaffected reading of the Lessons to be generally audible throughout the Church. If it be not so, it may pretty surely be made so, by addressing the last persons in the building and by being always watchful and careful not to drop the voice towards the close of a sentence or a verse, but rather to sustain and prolong the distinctness of the concluding words. Always supposing the words to be well separated and never run into one another, I believe that a very moderate voice, observing this method, may be heard with ease and pleasure in a large place, when a very powerful voice, neglecting it, might be quite ineffective. The habit of reading down-hill,—or dropping the voice as the sentence proceeds,—is so extremely common, that perhaps even if Mrs. Cay were to happen to read a few pages to you by the fireside, you would detect yourself asking what this or that lost word towards the close of a sentence was. Imagine how fatal the fault must be to distinctness, when there are listeners at various removed distances.

I should be even more diffident than I am in offering these simple hints, if I had not habitually acted on them, with the result that I am said to be always heard.

To be of the least service to you would be a real gratification to me. With which sincere assurance I am Dear Sir

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Rev. Christopher Cay

To W. H. WILLS, 7 NOVEMBER 1864*

MS Mr L. Mastracci. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Seventh November, 1864.

My Dear Wills

Spicer's Christmas Story[†1] looks to me as if something essential must have been cut out, about three parts through. Did you reduce it at all before the proof came to me?[†2] If so, will you have the MS ready for me at the office when I come on Thursday morning.

Ever
CD

To MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL, [11 NOVEMBER 1864]

Mention in next. Date: written on same day.

To W. HEPWORTH DIXON, 11 NOVEMBER 1864*

MS Yale University Library. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Eleventh November 1864

My Dear Dixon

I really cannot conceive it possible that Chorley ever made such a ridiculous and utterly baseless assertion as you tell me of.[†3] I think there must be some mistake; otherwise he would be a stark lunatic. If I had the slightest grain of offence against you, I should certainly not resort to such a mode of expressing it; but I have none—how can I have any!—I have no feeling towards you or the Athenaeum but perfect friendliness—I have an affectionate regard for Dilke[†4]— and I am more shocked than I can express to you by the statement, though it is so intensely foolish.

Under the impression that Chapman and Hall's people have made some mistake of omission, I write them a trimming[†5] letter by this post. Let me thank you cordially for your frank communication which I highly esteem, and let me assure you that there is not an atom more ground for this monstrous representation than there could be for a statement that you and I jointly murdered Mr. Briggs.[†1] I was perfectly ignorant that you had not received the last No. of Our Mutual Friend, I have never exchanged one word with Chorley on the subject, and I have not seen him these seven weeks.

I shall be in town on Tuesday and will draw Miss Jerrold's balance and enclose it to you.

Hearty thanks once more, for writing so openly

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Hepworth Dixon Esquire

To SIR JOHN BOWRING,[†2] 12 NOVEMBER 1864*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Saturday Twelfth November 1864

My Dear Sir John.

I think such parts of your MS on China as you describe, ought to suit the purposes of this Journal admirably.[†3] If you will send me any portion with which you would like to begin, I hope that what the Journal will then propose in the way of remuneration will be quite satisfactory to you.

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Sir John Bowring.

To MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL, 12 NOVEMBER 1864*

MS Mr Brian Lake.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Saturday Twelfth November 1864

Dear Sirs

As you have announced the republication of "Quite Alone",[†4] I deemed it necessary to place distinctly on record that Mr. Sala failed to supply the Manuscript for the periodical publication of that story in portions here, at the end of the 50th Chapter;[†5] and that I, on my responsibility and in order to keep faith with the public, caused it to be concluded by another hand.[†1] But my responsibility does not extend beyond this Journal in this matter, and therefore please to observe that you republish on your own.[†2]

Dear Sirs | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Chapman and Hall

To FREDERIC CHAPMAN, 12 NOVEMBER 1864*

MS Rosenbach Museum and Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Saturday Twelfth November 1864

My Dear Sir

A certain Mr. Robert Long,[†3] wood-engraver of No. 22 Chancery Lane, has asked me for a recommendation, on the ground that he is (as I believe he is) a kind of cousin of mine. This is not to the purpose, as he says, further than as excusing such a demand from one whom I never saw. But he has sent accompanying his letter, some very admirable specimens of his work—beautifully done, with great honesty and vigour—and if, on this ground, you can put any remunerative occupation in his way, I shall be extremely glad to help him to a trial.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Fredk. Chapman Esquire

To E. S. DALLAS, 12 NOVEMBER 1864

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Saturday Evening Twelfth November 1864

My Dear Dallas.

I have taken my people into council on the subject of poor dear Leech,[†4] but quite in vain. We agree that there is really nothing to tell but what is quite of private and familiar life. All our near intercourse of many years in the confidence of Autumn holidays by the sea, resolve themselves into this phase. All the little jokes we humoured, and exaggerated, originated in things quite apart from the public and the key to which would be wanting. A little incident specially like one class of his drawings, is the only exception—for that reason solely—that I can call to mind. He was very fond of a boy of mine[†1] (an extraordinarily small boy) of a great spirit, who is a Midshipman in the Queen's Navy; and [†a]whenever this boy came home from a Cruise,[†2] he and Leech, and never anybody else, used to go out in great state, and dine at the Garrick, and go to the play, and finish in an exemplary way with kidnies[†3] and harmony. On the first of these occasions the officer came out so frightfully small, that Leech told us afterwards he was filled with horror when he saw him eating his dinner at the Garrick with a large knife. On the other hand he felt that to suggest a small knife to an officer and a gentleman would be an unpardonable affront. So after meditating for some time, he felt that his course was, to object to the Club-knives as enormous and gigantic—to remonstrate with the servant on their huge proportions—and with a grim dissatisfaction to demand small ones. After which, he and the officer messed with great satisfaction, and agreed that things in general were running too large in England.[†a]

Ever Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

If this note be a little behind its time, my occupation of "making up" the Xmas No. is the plea in excuse. For the same reason I cannot write plainly, and can hardly write at all.

To ROBERT LONG, 12 NOVEMBER 1864*

Text from facsimile in Vol I of Illustrated Library edn, 1874 from the library of Rev. W. K. W. Chafy.

Saturday Twelfth November 1864

Sir

I write to-day to Mr. Frederick Chapman, informing him that you have sent me some very admirable specimens of your wood-engraving and I have not the least hesitation in highly recommending your work, after inspecting the excellent productions returned with this.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To GEORGE RUSSELL, 12 NOVEMBER 1864*

MS Marjorie, Lady Russell. Address: George Russell Esquire | 18 St. James's Place | W. Mourning envelope.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Saturday Twelfth November 1864

My Dear George Russell

Will you come and dine here with Wills and me, next Thursday at a quarter before Six? I name this early hour, sharp, because I am going down to Folkestone at night, and have no other disengaged days next week save your engaged days.

One word in answer, to Gad's. | Ever Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS DAVIS, 16 NOVEMBER 1864

MS University College London Library. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Sixteenth November, 1864

Dear Madam

I have received your letter[†1] with great pleasure, and hope to be (as I have always been in my heart) the best of friends with the Jewish people. The error you point out to me had occurred to me[†2]—as most errors do to most people— when it was too late to correct it. But it will no do harm. The peculiarities of dress and manner are fused together for the sake of picturesqueness.[†3]

Dear Madam | Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MESSRS THURSTON & CO.,[†1] 16 NOVEMBER 1864

Mention in Dobell catalogue No. 281 (1919); MS (3rd person) 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill Place, 16 Nov 64; addressed Messrs Thurston & Co.

Telling them that when his table is fitted he wishes it to be supplied with all necessities for Pool.[†2]

To B. H. COOPER,[†3] 17 NOVEMBER 1864*

MS Private. Address: à Monsier B. H. Cooper | Rue Duperré 12 bis | Paris.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Seventeenth November 1864

Sir

I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your obliging note, and to thank you for the proposal contained in it. But I do not think that such a series of articles as you describe, would be suitable to these pages and the prospective arrangements I have made with contributors.

Faithfully yours
CHARLES DICKENS

B. H. Cooper Esquire

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 17 NOVEMBER 1864*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Seventeenth Novr. 1864

My Dearest Georgy. The coachmaker's man will be at the Bull, Dartford,[†4] at Eleven on Monday forenoon. You can be there as soon afterwards as you like. Wills is highly flattered by your going over to receive his present.[†5]

As yet (nearly 4) I have heard nothing from Fechter. If I hear nothing and he addresses you, tell him that you knew I expected the Auberge;[†6] but that no doubt I will do it the instant I come back.[†7] You know how to address me, if need be.

I have had some violent fits of coughing to day, but no pain in the face. On the whole I think the cold is better, and the cough much worse. I have been to Twinberrow's[†1] and have got some wormwood.

Ever Your most affectionate
CD.

I think the exact name of the Hotel is, Hotel Imperial du Pavillon.[†2] But Hotel Imperial would do. I shall not expect to hear from you, but will not fail to write myself.

To MARCUS STONE, 17 NOVEMBER 1864*

MS Morgan Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Seventeenth Novr. 1864

My Dear Marcus. I find these this morning, and immediately return them. All right, but I would like John's false beard and whiskers in the leaving-shop[†3] to be more ragged and shaggy. Letter that one:

Miss Riderhood at home.[†4]

Letter the other:

More dead than alive.[†5]

I am going away for a fortnight. Proceed with No. X[†6] without me. You will receive the proof immediately. You ought to have had it before now.

Ever affy.

CD.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 28 NOVEMBER 1864*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Monday Evg November Twenty Eight 1864

My Dearest Georgy

Safely arrived at a quarter past 5. I will come down tomorrow by my usual train from Charing Cross at 3.30.

Ever your most affectionate

CD.

To CHARLES KNIGHT, 29 NOVEMBER 1864

Text from Alice A. Clowes, Charles Knight | A Sketch by His Grand-daughter, p. 138.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday, Twenty-ninth November, 1864.

My dear Knight,

I am very truly sorry to find your letter[†1] on returning to-day from a French holiday. Georgina (Mary being with Mrs. White) unites with me in affectionate and sympathetic regard to Mrs. Knight[†2] and to you. I follow you in your 'Working Life',[†3] and in all your life, as a loving old friend should, and am ever,

Your faithful
CHARLES DICKENS

To COLONEL THE HON. C. B. PHIPPS,[†4] 29 NOVEMBER 1864

Extract in Phillips catalogue, Mar 1995; MS 1 p; dated 29 Nov 64; addressed "My Dear General Phipps".[†5]

Explaining that he has been away in France, but that he has forwarded his note and its enclosures to his business manager, Wills, who will return them with his own observations thereupon.

To CHARLES BARBER, 30 NOVEMBER 1864*

MS Mr Stanley Court. Address: Mr. Barber | Heath House | Wrecklesham[†6] | Farnham | Surrey.[†7] On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Thirtieth November, 1864

Dr. Barber.

I write to let you know that no question whatever has arisen since you left here, and that everything in your department was found correct and in order. I hope you continue to feel better. We are all well here, and send you kind regards

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To DR C. T. RAMAGE,[†1] 30 NOVEMBER 1864*

MS Miss Mary Hill. Address: C.T. Ramage Esquire L.L.D. | Wallace Hall | Thornhill | Dumfries-shire. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Thirtieth November, 1864

Dear Sir

Allow me to offer you my cordial thanks for your obliging note and its accompanying copy of your Beautiful thoughts from Greek Authors;[†2]—a charming and serviceable book (I take the liberty to say) for which many readers will be much indebted to you.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

C. T. Ramage Esquire L.L.D.

To W. H. WILLS, 30 NOVEMBER 1864

MS Huntington Library. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Thirtieth November, 1864

My Dear Wills

I found the beautiful and perfect Brougham awaiting me in triumph at the station when I came down yesterday afternoon;—Georgina and Marsh both highly mortified that it had fallen dark, and the beauties of the carriage were obscured. But of course I had it out in the yard the first thing this morning, and got in and out at both the doors, and let down and pulled up the windows, and checked an imaginary coachman, and leaned back in a state of placid contemplation.

It is the lightest and prettiest and best carriage of the class, ever made. But you know that I value it for higher reasons than these. It will always be dear to me—far dearer than any thing on wheels could ever be for its own sake—as a proof of your ever generous friendship and appreciation, and a memorial of a happy intercourse and a perfect confidence that have never had a break, and that surely never can have any break now (after all these years) but one.

Ever Your faithful
CHARLES DICKENS

W. H. Wills Esquire.

December

To MRS FORSTER, 2 DECEMBER 1864

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Friday Second December, 1864

My Dear Mrs. Forster.

If the Chittys[†1] will have me on Thursday, I shall be delighted to dine with them.

I enclose some proofs for Forster. Will you ask him to give them me back when he has read them. This I merely mention, because I do not usually need them again.

Ever affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS FITZGERALD,[†2] 3 DECEMBER 1864

MS (envelope[[sic]] only) Professor Robert D. Horn. Address: Mrs. Fitzgerald | The Parsonage | Pratt Street | Camden Town | London | N.W.

To JOSEPH WILLIAM CHITTY, 5 DECEMBER 1864*

MS Mrs Ronald Sinclair.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Monday Fifth December 1864

My Dear Chitty.

Coming to town this morning, I find your kind note. I shall be truly pleased to dine with Mrs. Chitty and you on Thursday

Very faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To SIR JOHN BOWRING, 6 DECEMBER 1864*

MS Torquay Natural History Society.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Sixth December, 1864.

My Dear Sir John.

I hope you will find the enclosed cheque satisfactory for the admirable account of Chinese Competitive Examinations.[†3] Understand that the copyright will remain with you, if ever you should see fit to collect these articles.[†4]

I shall be delighted to receive further contributions from you; the sooner, the better.

Believe me always | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Sir John Bowring

To MISS MARY BOYLE, 6 DECEMBER 1864*

MS Morgan Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Sixth December 1864

My Dear Mary

I should say that the best French town I know for Mrs. Charles Boyle's[†1] purpose, is St. Omer.[†2]

It is a coincidence that I had just been speaking to Fechter on that feminine head when I got your note. He is doing Ruy Blas[†3] until Christmas,[†4] and has then a new version of the Auberge des Adrets;[†5] which ought to be a success, I think. For the rest—nous verrons.

I am dying for love of you, and you will never believe it. So no more at present from

Your | Unfortnet
Jo.

To W. W. JONES,[†6] 10 DECEMBER 1864

Text from copy in Minute book of the Newsvendors' Benevolent and Provident Institution.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Night 10th. Decr. 1864

Sir.

In reply to your letter I beg your Committee to choose between the two days you mention (Tuesday the 5th. of May and Tuesday the 12th.) as either will suit me very well.[†7]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. W. W. Jones.

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 11 DECEMBER 1864

Summary in Sotheby's catalogue, June 1979; MS 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill Place, 11 Dec 64; addressed F. Ouvry.

Enclosing the quarterly cheque, which he omitted to send before leaving the office on the previous day.

[[sic]] W. J. THOMS,[†1] 11 DECEMBER 1864

Text from N, III, 406.

GAD'S HILL PLACE
Sunday Eleventh December 1864

My Dear Mr Thoms,

Coming down here last night from London, I found your acceptable letter and its accompanying volume.[†2] The former is truly gratifying to me, I assure you, and the latter I purpose to enjoy on this appropriate ground this very evening.

Being a diligent reader of my N and Q[†3] I came in due course upon the astounding discovery that the world is indebted to me for all that curious lore.[†4] It may have been very well for you to contradict it, but I should never have done so myself.

Let me send you cordially all the good wishes of the time of year. I hope they may be acceptable, though your Dedication tells me that you need none of them.[†5]

It is delightful to me to know that I have given you so much pleasure, and I esteem it as a high privilege.

Believe me always | Very faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To THOMAS ADOLPHUS TROLLOPE, 11 DECEMBER 1864

Text from N, III, 406.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Sunday Eleventh December, 1864

My Dear Trollope,

I cried over the proof of Mrs. Trollope's last paper,[†1] yesterday, and put it in the N°. I hope she will go on writing, and I hope you will represent to her that she is bound to do so, having such a gift of observation and tenderness bestowed upon her.

You fire my dramatic ardour by your account of your theatrical doings at Florence.[†2] To see that Parliament sitting in the day,[†3] and to act at night, what a treat it would be!

And I am at the oar in this galley—not with Italian youth at the prow, and pleasure at the helm,[†4] in that—and must serve my time out.

Our Deanness[†5] is victorious over High Church, and approving Bishops (of Gloucester) smile upon her.[†6] With a little more patience, I think the game would generally go her way. But she takes a resentful bounce now and then, which is more naturally impulsive than wise. She and Colenso seem to me to be the right man and woman in the wrong places.

My daughter and her Aunt send their kindest regard, and Mary wishes me to add that a new croquet-ground has been constructed for next summer, on which she hopes to play a match with you.

Always my Dear Trollope | with much regard | Cordially Yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To [FREDERIC CHAPMAN], [13 DECEMBER 1864]

Mention in next. Date: written same day.

To W. HEPWORTH DIXON, 13 DECEMBER 1864*

MS Heritage Book Shop Inc., California.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Thirteenth December 1864

My Dear Dixon.

I send you enclosed a cheque for £125..0..0 payable to Miss Jerrold's order. Perhaps you will send me a receipt, in order that the "Jerrold Fund"[†1] papers may explain themselves in time to come.

It is a mercy that I should not have descended upon Chorley in any case, because your note was marked Private.[†2] But I have written to F.C.[†3] to day demanding to know whether he ever did, to any one, make that stupendously false statement. I have told him no particulars.

Faithfully Yours Ever,
CHARLES DICKENS

Hepworth Dixon Esquire

To GEORGE GROVE,[†4] 13 DECEMBER 1864*

Free Library of Philadelphia. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Thirteenth December 1864

My Dear Mr. Grove.

It is possible that the Gentleman's Magazine for 1769 has been got from the London Library for the purposes of All The Year Round; but certainly I have not got it and have never had it. I write to Wills, telling him of your need; and you may be sure of help, if help be in him, without loss of time.

I am much concerned to receive your account of Paxton.[†5]

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

G. Grove Esquire

To W. H. WILLS, [13 DECEMBER 1864]

Mention in last. Date: clearly written same day.

To J. E. MILLAIS,[†1] 18 DECEMBER 1864

Text from J. G. Millais, Life and Letters of Sir John Everett Millais, 1899, I, 275.

GADS HILL PLACE, HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER
Sunday, December 18th 1864

My Dear Millais,

There are certain personal, private circumstances which would render my writing to Lord Palmerston, separately and from myself alone, in the matter of the pension,[†2] a proceeding in more than questionable taste.[†3] Besides which I feel perfectly certain that a reminder from me would not help the powerful case. I should have been glad to sign the memorial, but I have not the least doubt that a letter from myself singly is best avoided. If I had any, I would disregard the other considerations and send it; but I have none, and I am convinced that I am right.

You are a generous and true friend to Mrs. Leech.

Faithfully yours always,
CHARLES DICKENS

To THE REV. S. R. HOLE,[†4] 20 DECEMBER 1864

Text from Memories of Dean Hole, new edn 1893, VIII, 77-8.

GAD'S HILL | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Tuesday, December 20, 1864

My Dear Sir,

I am very much interested in your letter,[†5] for the love of our departed friend, for the promise it holds out of a good record of his life and work, and for the remembrance of a very pathetic voice, which I heard at his grave.[†1]

There is not in my possession one single note of his writing. A year or two ago, shocked by the misuse of the private letters of public men, which I constantly observed, I destroyed a very large and very rare mass of correspondence.[†2] It was not done without pain, you may believe, but, the first reluctance conquered, I have steadily abided by my determination to keep no letters by me, and to consign all such papers to the fire. I therefore fear that I can render you no help at all. All that I could tell you of Leech you know, even (probably) to the circumstance that for several years we always went to the seaside together in the autumn, and lived, through the autumn months, in constant daily association.

Your reference to my books is truly gratifying to me, and I hope this sad occasion may be the means of bringing us into personal relations, which may not lessen your pleasure in them.

Believe me, dear sir, very faithfully yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

To SHIRLEY BROOKS, 24 DECEMBER 1864

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Christmas Eve, 1864

My Dear Brooks.

I heartily reciprocate all your seasonable good wishes, and hope that there are many happy years in store for you and those who are nearest and dearest to you.

The recognition of Mantalini[†3] was a very happy thought; singularly droll and appropriate.—I would lay a small wager that it made me laugh more than it has made the wise gentleman himself[†4] laugh, by a great deal.

Of course I wrote immediately to the gentleman who read the service so pathetically at poor dear Leech's grave. And of course (much respecting his affectionate earnestness), I did not tell him what I nevertheless think: that it is a pity to write that kind of Biography at all. It seems to me that such a man's life is always best told in his works. The notice in Punch[†1] was in the best taste, and told all that our friend had left untold of himself which it concerned the public to know.

The East wind on the top of this hill to day would open an Oyster.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Shirley Brooks Esquire

To CHARLES LEVER, 24 DECEMBER 1864

MS Widener Collection, Harvard. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Christmas Eve, 1864

My Dear Lever.

I am truly sorry that my delay in replying to the first of your two notes (for I have them both), should have caused you any uneasiness. It was occasioned solely by my being very fully occupied, and by my knowing that it would be quite useless to address Chapman and Hall on the subject of an account, until after the turn of Christmas.

The trust you propose to me, I accept without the slightest hesitation, and I think we may rely on bringing Chapman and Hall to a plain statement in figures.[†2] Be sure of my doing my best, and acting as though the case were my own. When I have any thing to communicate, I will immediately write again.

Your account of Mrs. Lever and of yourself is sad indeed,[†3] but I hope for better tidings next time. Meanwhile and ever believe me

Affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Lever Esquire

To BENJAMIN WEBSTER, 28 DECEMBER 1864*

MS Private. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Twenty Eighth December | 1864

My Dear Webster

Our engagement stands for Wednesday the 4th. at 4 O'Clock. I shall try to get up to Hampstead first, to see Stanny. I fear that Roberts's death[†1] has been a severe shock to him in his enfeebled state.[†2]

Ever Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Lirriper's kind regards

To FREDERIC CHAPMAN, 30 DECEMBER 1864*

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Thirtieth December, 1864

My Dear Sir

Please see Mr. Day, and settle with him how many extra pages we must print with No. X for Vol I. I send him by this post, title page, Dedication, and Contents.[†3] When I have corrected a proof of the Volume-matter, you can get to Press with the first Volume as soon as you like.[†4]

Faithfully Yours
CD.

Fredk. Chapman Esquire

To CAPT. CAVENDISH SPENCER BOYLE, 31 DECEMBER 1864

Extract in American Prices Current, II, 74; dated Gad's Hill Place, 31 Dec 64; addressed Capt. Boyle.

When the day's work is done, the pen [goes] into the waste-paper basket, the holder of the pen into fresh air and his correspondence to the wall.

To MISS MARY BOYLE, 31 DECEMBER 1864

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Thirty First December 1864

My Dear Mary

Many happy years to you and those who are near and dear to you. These and a thousand unexpressed good-wishes of his heart, from the humble Jo.

And also an earnest word of commendation of the little Xmas Book.[†1] Very gracefully and charmingly done. The right feeling, the right touch, a very neat hand, and a very true heart.

Ever Your affectionate
CHARLES DICKENS

To [?PHILIP] MORRIS,[†2] 31 DECEMBER 1864

Text from facsimile in Gallery of History Direct catalogue, Oct 1997.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Thirty First December 1864

Mr. Charles Dickens regrets that he cannot comply with the request proffered to him by Mr. Morris. If he were to sit for any new portrait (which he is not at all likely to do), he would have in common justice to remember many previous claims and conditional promises.

To B. W. PROCTER, 31 DECEMBER 1864

Text from MDGH, II, 223.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Saturday, Dec. 31st, 1864

My Dear Procter,

I have reserved my acknowledgment of your delightful note (the youngest note I have had in all this year)[†3] until to-day, in order that I might send, most heartily and affectionately, all seasonable good wishes to you and to Mrs. Procter, and to those who are nearest and dearest to you. Take them from an old friend who loves you.

Mamie returns the tender compliments, and Georgina does what the Americans call "endorse them." Mrs. Lirriper is proud to be so remembered, and says over and over again "that it's worth twenty times the trouble she has taken with the narrative, since Barry Cornwall, Esquire, is pleased to like it."

I got rid of a touch of neuralgia in France (as I always do there), but I found no old friends in my voyages of discovery on that side, such as I have left on this.

My dear Procter, ever your affectionate

[CD]

To ARTHUR RYLAND,[†1] [31 DECEMBER 1864]

Envelope only, MS Mrs Quinney. Address: Arthur Ryland Esquire | Birmingham. PM Rochester 31 Dec 64. On mourning paper.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 31 DECEMBER 1864

Extract in Carnegie Book Shop Catalogue, No. 182; MS 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill Place, "Saturday, Thirty-first December 1864".

Sends New Year's Greetings and adds that my vote for the Royal Hospital is gone.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?1864]

Extract in F, XI, iii, 837. Date: in his fifth year at Gad's Hill, according to Forster; if he dates from CD's spending his first summer there in 1860, then 1864.

A south-easter blowing enough to cut one's throat. I am keeping the house for my cold, as I did yesterday. But the remedy is so new to me, that I doubt if it does me half the good of a dozen miles in the snow. So, if this mode of treatment fails today, I shall try that to-morrow.

Addenda

To JOHN LAMBERT,[†1] 26 APRIL 1862

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, 11 Dec 1997; MS (3rd person) 1 p.; dated Office of AYR, 26 Apr 62; addressed John Lambert.

Sending a cheque for £13..13..00 in payment of Mr. Lambert's claim against the estate of the late Mr. Henry Austin, and asking for a receipt.

To THE MANAGER, KENSAL GREEN CEMETERY COMPANY, 6 AUGUST 1863

Mention in To Mrs Charles Dickens, 6 Aug 63.

To THE STAFF, OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND, 20 SEPTEMBER 1863

Mention in To Ouvry, 20 Sep 63.

Volume XI

1865 – 1867

1865

January

To CAPTAIN DRAKE,[†1] 1 JANUARY 1865*

MS Private.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
New Years Day 1865

My Dear Captain Drake

I feel that I am too notorious a person to occupy the pleasant ground[†2] you offer me. It is one of the inconveniences of having become public property, that a public appearance of that nature must have within it the capacity of being made a piece of Art, or be left alone.

Trust me, no apology was needed for your letter. I am sorry to have missed you, and shall hope for better luck.

Many happy years | Faithfully yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To THOMAS HYDE HILLS,[†3] 1 JANUARY 1865*

MS University of Texas, Austin.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
New Year's Day 1865.

My Dear Mr. Hills

This is a short note to thank you for yours, and to send you our united hearty and cordial wishes for many happy years. I will take care that the Fever Hospital[†4] is not forgotten.[†5] Everybody owes gratitude (if everybody only knew it) to such earnest and experienced men as you who interest themselves in the practical management of such an Institution.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

T. H. Hills Esquire

To TOM TAYLOR,[†6] [JANUARY 1865]

Mention in To Webster, 27 Jan 65. Date: probably early Jan.

Saying that he could not preside at that dinner[†7] this year, but that they could rely on him for the following year.[†8]

To MRS BROWN,[†1] 4 JANUARY 1865*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Mrs. Brown | 1 Stratton Street | Piccadilly | W. Black bordered.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Fourth January 1865

My Dear Mrs. Brown.

Until this morning, I have not been here since the day before Christmas Eve. The welcome little redbreast that I found awaiting me, did me good, and warmed my heart. No leaves ever fall, or are ever strewn by any animated creature, over the remembrances that I have which we share together; so he couldn't do his old office as for the children in the wood, but he was quite as kind in brightening the recollections with his glowing breast.

Many happy years to you. While I live, I shall ever be

Your affectionate friend
CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS,[†2] 4 JANUARY 1865 †

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Fourth January 1865

My Dear Miss Coutts.

[†a]Coming here this morning for the first time since the day before Christmas Eve, I found your dear words of remembrance. I send you out of my innermost heart my wishes for your happiness through many coming years, and my ever grateful and faithful remembrance of many years that are gone.[†a]

Affectionately Yours ever
CD.

To FREDERIC CHAPMAN,[†3] 5 JANUARY 1865

Text from facsimile([aa]) and extract([bb]) in Bauman Rare Books catalogue, 1989. On mourning paper.

[a]GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Fifth January 1865

My Dear Sir

I shall be glad to see you at my office to settle about the new edition[†4] either on Tuesday at half past eleven, or on Wednesday at the same hour, as may best suit your convenience.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS[a]

Fredk. Chapman Esquire

[b]Please put on the free list of Our Mutual Friend, and send all the back Nos. each separately by post, addressed thus: By Overland Mail via Marseilles. Francis Jeffrey Dickens Esquire[†1] ... Nuddea, Bengal.[b]

To JOHN FORSTER,[†2] [7 JANUARY 1865]

Extract in F, 1872-4, III, viii, 185*n*. Date: 7 Jan 65, according to Forster.

The chalet[†3] is going on excellently, though the ornamental part is more slowly put together than the substantial. It will really be a very pretty thing; and in the summer (supposing it not to be blown away in the spring), the upper room will make a charming study. It is much higher than we supposed.

To C. DE LA PRYME,[†4] 8 JANUARY 1865*

MS Dickens House. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Eighth January 1865

My Dear Sir

I lose no time in replying to your kind note, for which I beg to thank you cordially.

I have thoroughly settled it with myself that I am more useful, more congenially occupied, and more free, out of Parliament than I could possibly be in it. Therefore, while I am very sensible of the compliment of being asked to stand for Lambeth,[†5] I would under no circumstances offer myself to the electors.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

C. De la Pryme Esquire

To FREDERIC CHAPMAN, 10 JANUARY 1865

Extract in Maggs Bros catalogue No. 445 (1922); MS 1p.; dated Office of AYR, 10 Jan 65; addressed Frederic Chapman.

I think these covers all rather common-looking. On the whole I prefer the dark red on which I have put 'C.D.'[†1]

All right as to the billing, and as to the additional four pages.[†2]

To MARCUS STONE,[†3] 10 JANUARY 1865*

MS Morgan Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Tenth January 1865

My Dear Marcus. The points I had in my mind for illustration are, what the Dolls' Dress Maker describes at the top of page 14,[†4] and anything in chapter 3.[†5] But if you like anything else better, by all means take it.

Affecy. always
CD.

To DR D. H. TUKE,[†6] 14 JANUARY 1865*

MS Private. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Fourteenth January 1865

Dear Dr Tuke.

If Dr. Bucknill[†7] should be in any danger with the Committee,[†8] I very much doubt the good service of my name there. But I will underwrite him presently and with great pleasure.[†9]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To HENRY G. WARREN,[†1] 14 JANUARY 1865*

MS (copy) Newspaper Press Fund.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.

Saturday Fourteenth January 1865

Sir,

I will with great pleasure preside at the second dinner of the Newspaper Press Fund and the Committee may rely on my loyalty to my old calling.[†2]

May would be more convenient to me than April. I think too remembering when Easter falls this year that it would be the better time for the interests of the Society. Any day of your appointing shall be mine.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Henry G. Warren Esqre

To THOMAS DAKIN,[†3] 16 JANUARY 1865

Mention in N, III, 411.

To E. B. EASTWICK,[†4] 16 JANUARY 1865*

MS Beinecke Library, Yale University. Address (envelope MS Professor Harry Stone): Edward B. Eastwick | 38 Thurloe Square | W. PM Jan 65.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Monday Sixteenth January 1865

My Dear Sir

I am much obliged to Chorley[†5] for remembering that I told him I should be very glad indeed to enlist you for these pages.

Would you think yourself sufficiently remunerated for the proposed series,[†6] if the articles were paid for at the rate of a guinea and a half for each printed page, you retaining the whole copyright as to republication beyond this Journal, and being free to collect the papers immediately on their being completed here?

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Edward B Eastwick Esquire[†1]

To CHARLES KENT,[†2] 17 JANUARY 1865

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: Private[†3] | Charles Kent Esquire | "Sun" office | Strand | London | W.C. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Seventeenth January 1865.

My Dear Kent.

I meant to have written instantly on the appearance of your Paper in its beautiful freshness, to congratulate you on its handsome appearance, and to send you my heartiest good wishes for its thriving and prosperous career.[†4] — Through a mistake of the Postman's, that remarkable letter has been tesselated into the Infernal Pavement,[†5] instead of being delivered in the Strand.

We have been hoping and waiting for your being well enough to propose yourself for a mouthfull of fresh air. Are you well enough to come on Sunday? We shall be coming down from Charing X on Sunday morning, and I shall be going up again at 9 on Monday Morning.

It amuses me to find that you don't see your way with a certain Mutual Friend of ours. I have a horrible suspicion that you may begin to be fearfully knowing at somewhere about No. XII or XIII.[†6] But you shan't, if I can help it.[†7]

Ever Cordially Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To G. F. YOUNG,[†1] 17 JANUARY 1865

Extract in American Art Association and Anderson catalogue No. 4242; MS 1p.; dated Gad's Hill Place, 17 Jan 65; addressed G. F. Young.

When I am at work upon a book, I sacrifice a good deal of pleasure and a good deal of business to it, and give myself wholly to it.

To GEORGE HOLSWORTH,[†2] 18 JANUARY 1865*

MS Mr J. Stevens Cox.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Eighteenth January 1865

Dear Mr Holsworth

Will you get me Chambers's Book of Days.[†3] published by Chambers & Co.[†4]

Will you also go to Mr. Edmonds[†5] at Willis's,[†6] and ask him if he has, or can at once get me, Merryweather's Lives of Misers?[†7] I have present and particular occasion to refer to that book, or any other,[†8] or others, containing accounts of Dancer,[†9] Elwes,[†10] and other Misers well known,[†11] If you can get Merryweather, or any thing else that will give me the means of reference I want, buy it for me and please send a messenger down with it. I shall be saved a great deal of trouble and delay, if I can get what I want, here, tomorrow (Thursday).

Faithfully yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To EDMUND YATES,[†1] 18 JANUARY 1865*

Text from transcript, Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Eighteenth January 1865.

My Dear Edmund.

Unfortunately we have en engagement of some weeks' standing to dine with the Lehmann's[†2] on Saturday, and can't go to Robert.[†3]

I will be at the office at 5 on that day, if that will suit you. Until then, at work here.

Ever
CD.

To EDWARD WILLIAM BEAL,[†4] 19 JANUARY 1865

MS Messrs George Milne and E. R. McAdam Jr.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Nineteenth January 1865

Sir

I have only this afternoon received your letter. To this explanation let me add the expression of my regret that my engagements would in any case have prevented my having the honour of presiding at the Meeting last night.[†5]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Edward William Beal Esquire

To MISS GRACE BARROW,[†6] 20 JANUARY 1865*

MS Maurice Inman, Inc.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Twentieth January 1865

Dear Miss Barrow

I am truly sorry to receive the melancholy tidings you have sent me. You can be to your father in his distress what no other human creature can be, and in soothing his affliction you will soften your own.

May you do both! It does not need very long service in these ranks of Life, to bring home the knowledge that they thin fast and woefully; but they must be closed up and the March must go on. To replace the fallen as far as may be, is to do duty bravely. Your poor mother's cheerful spirit may remain in your father's home, though she has left it.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To WILLIAM MILLER,[†1] 20 JANUARY 1865

Envelope only, MS Huntington Library. Address: William Miller Esquire | Library India Office | Cannon Row | Westminster | S.W. PM 20 Jan 65.

To SIR JAMES EMERSON TENNENT,[†2] 24 JANUARY 1865

Text from N, III, 412.

Gad's Hill Place | Tuesday Twenty Fourth January 1865

My Dear Tennent,

Trade requirements necessitate the publication at this time of the first 10 N^os^ of Our Mutual Friend, as the first volume of that story. That first volume necessarily includes the Dedication to you: otherwise some 30,000 and odd buyers would not have it in their copies. But as the book is not complete, I don't send it to you now. I don't want you to have it from me, until the Dedication is the culmination of a finished whole. Then please God the inscribing of it to you will mean much more, and will better express my love.

With this word of explanation to you,[†3] let me couple my thanks to Lady Tennent[†4] for a delightful letter she wrote me last November.

My Dear Tennent | Faithfully yours ever
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To ABRAHAM HAYWARD,[†5] 25 JANUARY 1865

MS Hamilton College Library, New York.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Twenty Fifth January 1865

My Dear Hayward

This is the most astounding book I have ever read in my life. It is as savage as it is bawdy, — and it would be hard to say more of its ferocious spirit.[†6]

On the whole it seems to me pretty worthy of its subject. Our Dutch friend[†7] and De Morny[†8] and the rest of them are a terrible theme.

I should like to see Victor Hugo[†1] reading it, very much.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

A. Hayward Esquire

To FREDERICK LEHMANN, 25 JANUARY 1865*

MS Mr Simon Reynolds.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Twenty Fifth January 1865

My Dear Lehmann

By a coincidence, this book[†2] has just now been sent to the office.[†3] I think you will find in it, all attainable information concerning the cure of stammering.

Faithfully Yours
CD.

To FELIX MOSCHELES,[†4] 25 JANUARY 1865

Text from N, III, 412.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Twenty Fifth January 1865

My Dear Sir,

You are quite safe on both the points you mention. If I can render you any assistance in your work,[†5] I shall be truly glad to do so.

Faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To THE HOSPITAL FOR CONSUMPTIVES,[†6] 27 JANUARY 1865

Mention in N, III, 413.

To BENJAMIN WEBSTER,[†1] 27 JANUARY 1865

MS Private. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Twenty Seventh January 1865

My Dear Webster

I wrote by return of post to Tom Taylor (who I hope received my letter duly) that I could not preside at that dinner[†2] this year, because all the Chairs I can possibly take this Season, I am already pledged to fill.[†3] But I added that the Fund, tiding over this year, may rely upon me for next year,[†4] please God I am alive and well.

Ever Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To FREDERIC CHAPMAN, 28 JANUARY 1865*

MS University of North Carolina.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Night, Twenty Eighth Jany. 1865

My Dear Sir

Those Nos. of Our Mutual Friend which I asked you to send to my boy in India, have never reached him. Will you now try the luck of two copies of the 1st. Volume? I repeat his address on the other side.

I have at the office, the MS of a Novel by Mr. Chorley. I have been for some time considering it, with a view to its publication in All The Year Round. At length I have come to the conclusion that the story so turns itself as that it could hardly be held in hand by some readers, if it were published in small serial portions. But it is so far beyond my expectations in respect of its merit and variety, and it has in it such remarkable and new pictures of Student and Professional Life in Germany — as well as here — that I can very strongly recommend it to you as well worth your consideration. It has an excellent name (The Prodigy,[†5] or The Adventures of a Prodigy), and is full of character and incident. My doubt of it as a Serial does not apply to it as a book. If on my warranty, you would like to see it, I will tell Mr. Chorley that I have taken it on myself to submit it to your firm.

I shall be at the office tomorrow afternoon and Tuesday afternoon; then, away for a week's run.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Fredk. Chapman Esquire

[†a]Francis Jeffrey Dickens Esqre. | Kishnaghur | Nuddea | Bengal[†a]

To GEORGE RUSSELL,[†1] 29 JANUARY 1865*

MS Marjorie, Lady Russell. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.

Sunday Twenty Ninth January 1865

My Dear George Russell.

As I dare say you will have an interest in reading this private pamphlet of the Dean's,[†2] and as I have two, I send you one.

My kind regard to Sir Charles[†3] | Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To W. H. WILLS,[†4] 29 JANUARY 1865

MS Huntington Library. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Twenty Ninth January 1865

My Dear Wills

Birtles[†5] is too cavalier in his posting of the proofs. To send them to me on a Sunday morning, when you want them posted back on Sunday night, and when our post goes out at noon, is something like impertinence. Not to mention our being snowed up.

I am excessively doubtful about Vauxhall Illuminations.[†6] It is fully as long again as it ought to be.[†7] However estimable these Clergymen are, it is quite out of the question for us to go on spinning out dry catalogues of what they do. I have as much real interest in such deeds as anyone can have, I think; but my soul is weary of this sort of paper. Ever the same, ever the same. Paganini's one string, and no Paganini.[†8] From the time when we did "what a London Curate can do if he tries",[†1] it is but one perpetual drowsy repetition, generally with anything good in the original treatment left out. Pray hold this paper over, and remind Morley[†2] of the great number of similar papers that we have had, and the necessity, if they be still pursued, of more grace of handling and less statement of sums of money, and what an income was and is [†a]at a dozen periods,[†a] and what is wanted for a Church Tower, and what was got from this Church Aid Society, and what from what[†3] the other. All, like a Tract, like the Saturday Magazine,[†4] like Speeches at Exeter Hall,[†5] like the Ecclesiastical-Tackle Shops in Southampton Street,[†6] like Mrs. Brown.

If you are so driven for matter as that you want this paper in a sort of famine, then please re-read it with an eye to my objections, and put the whole of the second slip and half the third into a column.

I will order dinner at 5 on Tuesday.

Never have I seen such a thing as the cutting from the Sheffield paper![†7]

Ever
CD.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 31 JANUARY 1865

MS Huntington Library.

Office, | Tuesday Thirty First January 1865

My Dearest Georgy.

I shall be back here again, on Saturday night. Consequently, I shall be down to dinner on Sunday. If Fechter[†8] should be coming (I shall see him tonight), I will send you another line tomorrow morning. Let Mary know that Layard[†9] is coming on Saturday the 12th. — I mean, the 11th.

The mysterious "arrangement" is, I hope, by no means a bad one.

As I was going to bed here last night, the fire broke out at the Surrey.[†10] I did not go out, but looked from the open window. The rush of people down the street, setting in a torrent over the bridge,[†11] was really fine. The light of the fire was extremely bright.[†12] I had been to Drury Lane.[†13] Hideously dreary (except for a clever child,[†1] and Lydia Thompson);[†2] and Phelps[†3] as Wolsey even too dire and dismal for the Galleries. I have never heard the English language made such droning mouths of. By the way I should exempt that Mr. Belford,[†4] who is very funny as an Ogre, from the general leadenness of the proceedings.

Ever affectionately

CD.

February

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 1 FEBRUARY 1865*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND, | Wednesday Morning First Feby. 1865

My Dearest Georgy. Fechter is[†5] coming on Sunday, and we should be down by the 10.10 Train from Charing X.

Ever affecy

CD.

To AUSTEN HENRY LAYARD, 9 FEBRUARY 1865

MS British Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT

Thursday Ninth February 1865

My Dear Layard.

North Kent Line, Charing Cross Terminus, Train starts at 3.30. Take return-ticket for Higham.

Faithfully Yours Ever

CD.

To W. H. WILLS, 12 FEBRUARY 1865

MS Huntington Library. On mourning paper.

Gad's Hill | Sunday Twelfth February 1865

My Dear Wills.

Miss Power's[†6] little story[†7] is so much more meritorious than anything else in the No.[†1] that I propose to alter the No. as I have marked on your making up. But as that will probably not be matter enough, you can substitute "The Danes"[†2] for "Coaching".[†3] I think highly of Miss Power's story.

Bowring[†4] scrambles in the strangest way. I will try to put the paper[†5] together in some endurable manner, at the office on Tuesday morning.

I am exceedingly doubtful about Edmund's[†6] paper on the Crystal Palace. It is so mechanically done, and in the old Household Words days we did that class of papers so well (when you and I did them,[†7] and when Horne[†8] did them)[†9], that I think it[†10] suggests to our public, falling off. I wish you would tell this to Edmund when you see him, and say that unless that sort of article has some fancy and literary merit, I am against it.

To Halliday's[†11] Poetry of the Pantomimes — No. Pay him for it, of course. But the game is really not worth the candle. If the East end part of it could be quite separated, by himself, from the rest, it might just possibly be worth using.[†12] I have an idea, however, that it would spoil an excellent subject for me a year hence.[†13] On the whole therefore, distribute it.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To H. F. CHORLEY,[†14] 14 FEBRUARY 1865*

MS Mrs Alice Service.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Fourteenth February 1865

My Dear Chorley

I am sorry to say that my vote is already promised, in aid of an unfortunate case that failed last time.[†15]

Ever affecy

CHARLES DICKENS

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON,[†1] 14 FEBRUARY 1865

MS Lytton Papers.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Fourteenth February 1865

My Dear Bulwer Lytton.

I should very much like, if it were possible, to have something else by you in All The Year Round. I think a one-Volume story, so published, and published in a volume promptly afterwards, would be a very popular and profitable thing to you, and I know it would be delightful to me.[†2]

Early in April (about the best time in the year for the purpose) I could command the old place once occupied by the Strange Story,[†3] for three or four months. Have you any thing by you that you could turn to the purpose? If yes — though it seems almost too good to believe — Wills would at once come to you anywhere, and arrange the business part of the transaction.

Kindly write me one line here. Layard left us yesterday morning, and told us he had seen you in the House "looking extraordinarily well". It confirmed me in a wavering intention I had to send you this note, and cured me of infirmity of purpose.[†4]

Ever affecy. Yours

CD.

To FREDERICK DICKENS[†5] [MID-?FEBRUARY 1865]

Mention in To Cunningham, 15 Feb 65. Date: probably a few days before that letter.

To PETER CUNNINGHAM,[†6] 15 FEBRUARY 1865

MS Dickens House.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Fifteenth February 1865

My Dear Cunningham. Many thanks for your kind letter. I have written to Frederick, and earnestly hope he is doing well.

My work has been so prolonged to day that I write in the dark, and must send this over to Rochester through the snow. Mary and Georgina send love to Mrs. Cunningham[†7] and to you. I hope you will not like Our Mutual Friend worse, when you know him better.

Ever Your faithful Manager

CD.

To MRS PROCTER,[†1] 15 FEBRUARY 1865

Text from MDGH, II, 226.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday, Feb. 15th, 1865

My Dear Mrs. Procter,[†2]

Of course I will do it, and of course I will do it for the love of you and Procter. You can give me my brief, and we can speak about its details. Once again, of course I will do it, and with all my heart.[†3]

I have registered a vow (in which there is not the least merit, for I couldn't help it) that when I am, as I am now, very hard at work upon a book, I never will dine out more than one day in a week. Why didn't you ask me for the Wednesday, before I stood engaged to Lady Molesworth[†4] for the Tuesday?

It is so delightful to me to sit by your side anywhere and be brightened up, that I lay a handsome sacrifice upon the altar of "Our Mutual Friend" in writing this note very much against my will. But for as many years as can be made consistent with my present juvenility, I always have given my work the first place in my life, and what can I do now at 35! — or at least at the two figures, never mind their order.

I send my love to Procter, hoping you may appropriate a little of it by the way.

Affectionately yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To MARCUS STONE, 15 FEBRUARY 1865*

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Wednesday Fifteenth February 1865

My Dear Marcus.

Always thinking it better that you should have the proofs tolerably correct, instead of intolerably incorrect, I yesterday sent the proofs of No. XII[†5] back to the printer, with instructions to be quick and send revise to you.

Ever affecy.
CD.

To GEORGE RUSSELL, 16 FEBRUARY 1865*

MS Marjorie, Lady Russell. Address: George Russell Esquire | 18 St. James's Place | London | W. On mourning paper.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Sixteenth February 1865

My Dear George Russell

Many thanks for your Capital Letter.

Wills comes up for ballot[†1] on Saturday week the 25th. After the Iniquities,[†2] will you come round and dine at the office? I have asked Wilkie[†3] to join us.

Ever Cordially
CD.

To MISS FANNY BROWN, 21 FEBRUARY 1865*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Fanny Brown[†4] | Dr. H. B. Wilbur[†5] | Syracuse | New York. Mourning envelope.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Tuesday Twenty First February 1865

Dear Madam

I reply to your letter with some difficulty, occasioned by a wounded foot, a constrained position, and uneasiness consequent upon pain.

You can form no adequate idea of the hopelessness of the office you ask me to discharge. To get a copy of the Times newspaper for some unknown day in 1863, is a task such as is prescribed to the hero of a Fairy Tale, who is blest with a benevolent enchanter to help him.

It is pretty clear to me, however, that the "two columns of eloquence" to which your newspaper-cutting refers, must have had reference — not to the counsel in the case, but to the case itself: no doubt made interesting here as the first instance of the suspension of the habeas corpus in the United States.[†6] I feel no doubt on this head, and I hope it may soften your disappointment in finding me unable to help you.

Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Fanny Brown

To MESSRS CASSELL, PETTER & GALPIN,[†1] 21 FEBRUARY 1865*

MS Private.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Twenty First February 1865

Gentlemen

I am laid up with a wounded foot, and am not able for a time to see any visitors.

But if you would not object to state your business to my confidential friend and business Manager, Mr. Wills, I think him likely to be found here, either tomorrow or next day at 1 o'Clock. He would immediately report it to me. Or if you would prefer to write to myself, you may rely upon my prompt attention.

Gentlemen | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Cassell Petter and Galpin

To JOHN FORSTER, [21 FEBRUARY 1865]

Extract in F, XI, iii, 838. Date: 21 Feb 65, according to Forster.

Saying that he was suffering tortures from a frost-bitten foot.

To BENJAMIN WEBSTER, 23 FEB 1865*

MS David Borowitz Collection.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Twenty Third February 1865

My Dear Webster.

Wills comes up for ballot at the Garrick on Saturday. If you ever go to the Committee, do go and vote for him.

Ever Faithfully
CD.

To MARCUS STONE, 24 FEBRUARY 1865*

MS Morgan Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Twenty Fourth February 1865

My Dear Marcus.

I return the sketches. Here are the Letterings.

Affecy.
CD.

Bibliomania of The Golden Dustman[†2]
The Evil Genius of the House of Boffin.[†3]

To THE SECRETARY, GARRICK CLUB,[†1] 25 FEBRUARY 1865

MS The Garrick Club.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Evening Twenty Fifth February | 1865

Sir

I beg you to have the goodness to withdraw my name from the list of Members of the Garrick Club.[†2]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To | The Secretary

To BENJAMIN WEBSTER, 25 FEBRUARY 1865

MS Private.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND, | Saturday Twenty Fifth February 1865

My Dear Webster. My Nurse thinks that on the first day of going out, my foot is not well enough to come up and down your stairs.[†3] Perhaps she is right. I will postpone it to one night next week, and will ask for a Box without notice.[†4]

Ever Cordially Yours
CD.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, [? FEBRUARY 1865]

Mention in To Unknown Correspondent, ?Feb 65. Date: no doubt shortly before that letter.[†5]

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT [? FEBRUARY 1865]

MS (Draft, with many alterations) Mr Brian Lake. Date: probably soon after hearing of the blackballing of Wills at the Garrick Club (see To the Secretary, 25 Feb 65).

I lose not a single moment in addressing this letter to you.

In good faith and with a desire to act quite openly towards you I made a charge against you in the Garrick Club which I requested might be carried to your ears and which I repeated in writing to you. I indiscreetly made it in the strongest belief that I was right, for which belief I considered that I had the strongest grounds — grounds so strong, that I thought, that I could not be mistaken. Since I left the Committee Room today I have had reason to believe — reason that I could not possibly foresee — that I was wrong. I therefore beg in the fullest and amplest manner to express my regret, and to withdraw my words. This regret and withdrawal I shall take care to state in the club as openly as the words were spoken.

March

To MRS KEMBLE,[†1] 1 MARCH 1865†

MS Robert H. Taylor Collection, Princeton University.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday First March 1865

My Dear Mrs. Kemble.

I am a Southern sympathizer to this extent — that I no more believe in the Northern love of the black man, or in the Northern horror of Slavery having any thing to do with the beginning of the war, save as a pretence — than I believe that the Davenport Brothers[†2] and their Properties are under the special patronage of several Angels of distinction.

But your daughter's[†3] verses[†4] are very picturesque and glowing, and I shall be glad to have them in these pages for their own sake.

Mrs. Collins[†5] has been at Mentone with her sick husband, and is now (I believe at Cannes) somewhere in France on her slow way homeward. The same young lady's father is laid up with a frost-bitten foot, from much walking in deep Kentish snow.

Believe me | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To W. C. MACREADY,[†6] 1 MARCH 1865†

MS Morgan Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday First March 1865

My Dearest Macready

I have been laid up here with a frost-bitten foot (from hard walking in the snow), or you would have heard from me sooner.

My reply to Professor Agassiz[†7] is short, but conclusive. Daily seeing improper uses made of confidential letters, in the addressing of them to a public audience that has no business with them, I made, not long ago, a great fire in my field at Gad's Hill and burnt every letter I possessed.[†8] And now I always destroy every letter I receive — not on absolute business, — and my mind is, so far, at ease. Poor dear Felton's[†1] letters went up into the air with the rest, or his highly distinguished representative[†2] should have had them most willingly.

We never fail to drink old P's[†3] health on his birthday, or to make him the subject of a thousand loving remembrances.

[†a] I wish I could give him an idea of Phelps's Cardinal Wolsey at Drury Lane[†4] — making about Fourteen syllables of the word "crown" — and wearing a perceptible pair of black street-trousers tucked up under his Canonicals![†a]

With best love to Mrs. Macready[†5] and Katie,[†6]

Ever my Dearest Macready | Your most affectionate friend

CD.

To SAMUEL WHITFORD,[†7] [1 MARCH 1865]

MS (envelope) Hospital for Sick Children. Address: Samuel Whitford Esqre. | Hospital for Sick Children | 49 Great Ormond Street | W.C. PM 1 Mar 65.

To W. H. WILLS, 2 MARCH 1865*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Night Second March 1865

My Dear Wills.

After we parted tonight, George Russell shewed me a letter (which he is bound to consider Private) from a man in the G.[†8] not on our side, but who has always been honorable in the matter of the Ballot, saying in effect, in reference to the pending row, "You are wrong about Mr. Wills, if you suppose it to be animosity towards C.D. There was some reason against his election." George Russell said he had had a delicacy in reading it to you without first consulting me, but that he wished, if necessary, to challenge Bell[†9] upon his statement, and therefore to ask you what the matter at issue really was. I replied that I had no doubt you would be glad to tell him. As a time likely to be convenient to all of us, I suggested that he should see you here, tomorrow (Friday)[†10] at 4. If that should not suit you, write to him before 2, and change the hour. In the morning I shall be engaged, but at 4, or afterwards, I will assuredly be here in case you want me. I send this up by the boy as soon as he comes in the morning. If George Russell, knowing the facts, can get that Blackguard Bell out by the collar, you may be sure he will, and throttle this shadowy Lie. Understand that you have no need to write to him if you stand by 4 o'Clock.

Ever

CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [3 MARCH 1865]

Extract in F, XI, iii, 838. Date: ten days after letter of 21 Feb 65, according to Forster.

I got frost-bitten by walking continually in the snow, and getting wet in the feet daily. My boots hardened and softened, hardened and softened, my left foot swelled, and I still forced the boot on; sat in it to write, half the day; walked in it through the snow, the other half; forced the boot on again next morning; sat and walked again; and being accustomed to all sorts of changes in my feet, took no heed. At length, going out as usual, I fell lame on the walk, and had to limp home dead lame, through the snow, for the last three miles — to the remarkable terror, by the bye, of the two big dogs.

To THE SECRETARY, GARRICK CLUB, 3 MARCH 1865

MS The Garrick Club.

GAD'S HILL PLACE | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Friday Third March 1865

Sir

I beg you to be so good as to with-hold my letter of retirement from the Garrick Club until you receive a further communication from me; as it is possible that I may have occasion to enter the Club once more, before finally leaving it.

I have it in charge from Mr. Wilkie Collins who is in Paris, to prefer the same request to you on his behalf for the same reason.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Secretary | of | The Garrick Club

To JOHN HUMPHERY,[†1] 6 MARCH 1865*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

16 Somer's Place Hyde Park W | Monday Sixth March 1865

My Dear Sir

I beg to thank you cordially for the trouble you have so kindly taken in my behalf. We have bought the wine on very good terms, I think, and I am happy to enclose you a crossed cheque for my purchase-money.[†2]

I gladly avail myself of the services of the person whom you employ to move your part of the wine, and — to save you trouble — write his instructions on the other side.

My Dear Sir | Yours faithfully and obliged

CHARLES DICKENS

John Humphery Esquire

Mr. Dickens's 16 Dozen to be divided into two halves:

One half to be sent by North Kent Railway, addressed:

Charles Dickens Esqre. | Gad's Hill Place | Higham

The other half to be delivered to:

John Forster Esqre. | Palace Gate House | Kensington

(close to where the turnpike used to stand)

A note of the whole charge for packing and removing, to be sent to Mr. Dickens, 16 Somer's Place Hyde Park W.

To GEORGE RUSSELL, 6 MARCH 1865*

MS Marjorie, Lady Russell. Address: George Russell Esquire | 18 St. James's Place | W.

16 Somer's Place, Hyde Park W.

Monday Sixth March 1865

My Dear George Russell

I send you my address, being extremely anxious to hear from you or see you, when you have any thing to communicate.[†1] Yates wrote back by my messenger, "The expression of your wish is of course enough. Rely upon me"

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To GEORGE RUSSELL, 7 MARCH 1865*

MS Marjorie, Lady Russell. Address: George Russell Esquire | 4 St. James's Place | W.

16 Somer's Place | Tuesday Seventh March 1865

My Dear George Russell

I cannot tell you how glad I am that you are out of this business.[†2] De Bathe's[†3] letter is just what it ought to be, and puts you right.

I shall be here at and after 4 o'Clock today. We dine alone at half past 6, and shall be delighted if you have no better engagement than to dine with us. Anyhow I shall be here after 4, and all the evening.

Ever Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To GEORGE RUSSELL, 7 MARCH 1865*

MS Marjorie, Lady Russell. Address: George Russell Esquire | 4 St. James's Place | W.

16 Somers Place
Tuesday Evening Seventh March | 1865

My Dear George Russell

I shall be at the office on Thursday from 2 to 1/2 past 4. After that, I go away for 6 days.

Ever Faithfully
CD.

To FREDERIC CHAPMAN, 8 MARCH 1865

Text from facsimile in History-Makers Inc. catalogue, Oct 1997.

16 Somers Place Hyde Park W. | Wednesday Eight March 1865

My Dear Sir

I like[†1] the colour of No. 2 book[†2] very much indeed, and think it will look exceedingly well.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Fredk Chapman Esquire

To SIR CHARLES NICHOLSON,[†3] [?8 MARCH 1865]

Mention in next. Date: probably written same day.

To MRS LEHMANN, 8 MARCH 1865*

MS University of Texas, Austin.

16 Somers Place
Wednesday Evening Eighth March 1865

My Dear Mrs. Lehmann

I think it so well worth while to act upon your kind and thoughtful suggestion concerning Sir Charles Nicholson, that I have written him the enclosed note asking him if he can help me to dispose of this boy of mine in Australia.[†4] Of course I have told him the exact truth without any softening,[†5] and have not otherwise mentioned you than in saying that as I do not know his address, I have asked you to add it to the envelope.

Will you do me that service and let it be posted? In return for which, I will give you a Patriarchal piece of advice. — Don't have any more children. If the childless Kings and Queens in the stories had only known what they were about, they would never have bothered the Fairies to give them families.

Faithfully Yours always

CD.

To THE SECRETARY, GARRICK CLUB, 9 MARCH 1865

MS The Garrick Club.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND, | Thursday Ninth March 1865

Sir

You can now, if you please, make my withdrawal from the Garrick Club known to the Committee.[†1]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To | The Secretary

To J. C. PARKINSON,[†2] 9 MARCH 1865

Extract in Dobell catalogue No. 18 (1922); dated Office of AYR, 9 Mar 65; addressed J. C. Parkinson.

You shall have my vote for the incurable Hospital,[†3] when I get my proxy paper.

To GEORGE RUSSELL, 15 MARCH 1865*

MS Marjorie, Lady Russell.

16 Somers Place, Hyde Park W.
Monday Fifteenth March 1865

My Dear George Russell

Unluckily with a reference to the Athenæum ballot, I am going out of town this morning until Wednesday, or I need not say (for you know) I should have been delighted to have an opportunity of voting for a friend of yours.

You touch me by your sympathy with my poor old friend, Mrs. B. H.[†1] All the hits I have been patiently working up to for more than a year, are now falling into their places; and I hope you will be both interested and pleased with what is to follow.[†2]

Ever affecy. Yours

CD.

To AUSTEN HENRY LAYARD, 16 MARCH 1865

MS British Library.

16 Somers Place, Hyde Park, W.
Thursday Sixteenth March 1865

My Dear Layard

Rely upon our not expecting a mere call from a man so engaged as you are.[†3]

A thousand thanks for your kind remembrance of Charles Collins. He is very much better, and coming home next month. I have no doubt he will thank you on his own behalf — and will avail himself of your kindness, if he should be obliged to go abroad again as next summer dies out.

The Guild summonses are of no consequence. We are building 3 houses on some land of Bulwers,[†4] and the notices are merely formal preliminaries to drawing cheques for the builder.

We are heartily pleased that you enjoyed your visit to Gad's as much as we did. You cannot repeat it too often, believe me. If you would make it your summer resting-place and frequently propose yourself, you would give us all infinite pleasure. Meanwhile you will be charmed to hear that I have been laid up with a frost-bitten foot (from much walking in the snow), and for some eight and forty hours out of a fortnight on sofas, suffered tortures. This delightful intelligence will, I hope, compensate you in some slight degree for that Sunday trudge.

Ever Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

A. H. Layard Esquire.

To W. H. WILLS, 17 MARCH 1865

MS Huntington Library.

16 Somers Place, Hyde Park W. | Friday Seventeenth March 1865

My Dear Wills. You ought to know that Fechter has done a very manly thing in a very delicate way.

I discovered last night, quite incidentally, that he heard of your being blackballed and of my having resigned with Wilkie, a week ago. He instantly sent in his resignation.[†1] It caused some consternation in the Club, and Palgrave Simpson[†2] was deputed to ask him what his offence was? He requested Simpson to reply for him that he resigned "because they had blackballed Mr. Wills, and he would trust himself to no community of men in which such things were done."

Ever Faithfully
CD.

To CHARLES KENT, 20 MARCH 1865

Mention in Dickens Exhibition, New Dudley Gallery, 1909; lent by W. T. Spencer; MS 1, p.; dated Somers Place, 20 Mar 65; addressed Charles Kent.

To GEORGE RUSSELL, 20 MARCH 1865*

MS Marjorie, Lady Russell. Address: George Russell Esquire | Carlton Club.

16 Somers Place
Monday Twentieth March 1865

My Dear George Russell

I am deeply concerned to hear of your condition, but what is to be expected of these abominable and atrocious winds!

My foot is worse again too.

It was tomorrow that you were to dine with me. Only Wilkie and Webster.

In haste | Ever Yours
CD.

To F. C. BEARD,[†3] 21 MARCH 1865

MS Dickens House. Address: Frank Beard Esquire | 44 Welbeck Street | Cavendish Square.

16 Somers Place
Tuesday Morning Twenty First March 1865

My Dear Beard

Here is this confounded foot as bad as ever again. I suffered tortures all last night, and never closed my eyes. We are now at work at the Poppy fomentations again.

Ever Yours
CD.

To MRS HOWITT,[†1] 21 MARCH 1865

MS Mrs Mary Howitt Whittakers Walker.

16 Somers Place | Tuesday Twenty First March 1865

My Dear Mrs. Howitt.

Rely upon me. I should indeed be wanting in my duty to my calling, if you might not make certain of my promptitude and heartiness in such a cause.[†2]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To GEORGE RUSSELL, 21 MARCH 1865*

MS Marjorie, Lady Russell. Address: George Russell Esquire | 4 or 5 St. James's Place | St. James's Street.

16 Somers Place | Tuesday Twenty First March 1865

My Dear George Russell

I trust you may be better than you were, and better than I am. I have had a night of sleepless agony with my foot, and am obliged to postpone the little dinner after all.

Ever Yours
CD.

To LORD HOUGHTON,[†3] 23 MARCH 1865

Trinity College, Cambridge.

16 Somers Place Hyde Park
Thursday Twenty Third March | 1865

My Dear Lord Houghton

I am disabled from accepting your kind invitation, by a cause almost as odd as disagreeable. From much walking in the snow at Gad's Hill, I got laid up with a frost bitten foot, a month ago, like an Arctic Sailor. On Tuesday last, the tortures came on afresh (invited by the East Wind, it is supposed), and have kept me in bed until to day, engendering the weakest submission to my Doctor. In the van of his prescriptions is this one:— "Don't go out this season. And whenever you don't want to be at your desk, rush to the Sea Air." So between Work and Flight, I expect to pass my time, if I can be helped out of pain, until I go back to Kent in June.

It is something to know that Lady Houghton[†4] has even made the progress you describe. I beg to send her my kindest regards

Believe me always | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Lord Houghton

To MRS BENZON,[†1] 25 MARCH 1865*

MS Gresham's School, Holt. Address: Mrs. Benzon. Mourning envelope.

16 Somers Place
Saturday Night Twenty Fifth March | 1865

My Dear Mrs. Benzon

A thousand thanks! But I have been in great pain again from my frost-bitten foot, and am going out nowhere. Work — change of air — training — and work again — are all I see before me until my book is done.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To W. J. LINTON,[†2] 25 MARCH 1865

MS Boston Public Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND, | Twenty Fifth March 1865

My Dear Sir

I have been unwell for some days, and unable to attend to letters until now. This makes me a little behind-hand in thanking you for your book,[†3] but I hope not to be behind-hand in reading it.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. J. Linton Esquire

To W. H. WILLS, 26 MARCH 1865

MS Huntington Library.

16 Somers Place | Sunday Twenty Sixth March 1865

My Dear Wills.

I am rather at sea about the No.[†4] because I only assume that you propose to put in half of the Lottery Dreamer,[†5] and because the printers have (of course) not put the quantity on your Forty Years in London[†6] — which is very good indeed.

But such a list as the enclosed, is the best. "My Idea" could come out, if there were not room.[†7] Or, "The Lottery Dreamer" could be cut anywhere to make room.

I return all the proofs corrected. You will see that I have taken a quantity out of "Talk".[†1]

In your forty years, you have got the maiden name of Mrs. Keeley,[†2] wrong. I have put it right. If you refer to Gale Jones,[†3] he kept a little chemist's shop, and sold Ginger Beer Powders, then rather a crack sort of novelty. The shop was very like the apothecary's in Romeo and Juliet,[†4] and (I suppose in consequence of the master's being politically occupied) always had the door locked. An old woman appeared on a bell being rung, and if you wanted Ginger Beer Powders, and could point them out in the window, and didn't want change, she would sometimes sell them. He was a lean, polite, inoffensive, much-enduring Radical of the peacefullest sort.[†5]

Ever Yours
CD.

P. S. I hope to get away on Friday or Saturday, and should like to see you before I go. Shall we dine at the office, Wednesday or Thursday? If so, appoint day and hour.

P. P. S. You anticipated me about the '34 Port. I had put aside a dozen to ask you to put in your cellar. It is on its way from Gad's — much shaken, of course. Keep the bottles lying down; but stand one up for 3 or 4 days before using. Decant with great care, through a strainer, and a quantity of crust and bee's wing will remain in the bottle. I am assured that the wine is unapproachable.

To DAVID KELLY,[†6] 27 MARCH 1865

MS Benoliel Collection.

London | Twenty Seventh March 1865

Sir

It is reasonably likely that I have as great a tenderness for Mr. Pickwick as any man can possibly have, and I am therefore much obliged to you for your communication. But I fear that I must separate my private feelings from such public matters as rough bills, designed to attract attention at a glance and from a distance.[†7]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. David Kelly

April

To [?MRS WREFORD MAJOR],[†1] 6 APRIL 1865

Extract given from memory by previous owners, B. & D. Clark (Ontario); dated Gad's Hill, 6 Apr 65.

Dear Mary

The years pass and we see so little of each other. Always that perpetual call to here and there ... robbing me of personal liberty of action. I am filled daily until ... but if June will suit you please tell me and I shall join with you ... with complete enjoyment.

Affectionately Yours
CD.

To MR JOHNSON,[†2] 13 APRIL 1865*

Text from transcript, Huntington Library.

Thirteenth April 1865.

Mr Charles Dickens presents his Compliments to Mr Johnson, and begs to say that his compliance with the request of the Committee represented by Mr Johnson is not in reason possible.

To MARCUS STONE, 13 APRIL 1865*

MS Morgan Library.

16 Somers Place | Thursday Thirteenth April, 1865

My Dear Marcus

This is not corrected, but is legible. You will find plenty of subjects in it.[†3] Whether one of the two should be Mr Boffin behind the Alligator's smile, I leave to you.[†4]

Ever

CD.

To CHARLES KENT, 18 APRIL 1865

Extract in E. D. North catalogue No. LXXI; MS 1 p.; dated 16 Somers Place, 18 Apr 65.

Dear Kent

I shall be at home and dining alone with my own people at half past 6 — every day next week, except Thursday. If you will name your own day for coming to dinner and talking about that matter,[†5] I shall be very glad.

To WILLIAM DAY,[†1] 22 APRIL 1865

Mention in Walter M. Hill catalogue No. 152; MS 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill Place, 22 April 65; addressed Mr Day.

Giving him instructions for printing.

To THE REV. S. R. HOLE,[†2] 22 APRIL 1865

Text from transcript made by owner of MS, Major John Hole.

16 Somers Place, Hyde Park W

Saturday Night Twenty Second April | 1865

My dear Sir,

A little uncertainty regarding my movements has delayed my reply to your letter for a day or so. I sincerely hope this may not have inconvenienced you.

On Wednesday or Thursday next at 3 o'clock here or on either day at the Athenaeum Club at 5, I shall be very happy to shake hands with you. Or if all these suggestions should be unsuitable, I could meet you on Friday at 4 at my All the Year Round office 26 Wellington Street, Strand. Pray let me know which appointment I shall hold myself bound to. I shall then entreat you to make our next one — a summer one — at my home at Gads Hill.

Believe me dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To W. C. MACREADY, 22 APRIL 1865

Text from MDGH, II, 227.

16, Somer's Place, Hyde Park
Saturday Night, April 22nd, 1865

My Dearest Macready,

A thousand thanks for your kind letter, most heartily welcome.

My frost-bitten foot, after causing me great inconvenience and much pain, has begun to conduct itself amiably. I can now again walk my ten miles in the morning without inconvenience, but am absurdly obliged to sit shoeless all the evening — a very slight penalty, as I detest going out to dinner (which killed the original old Parr by-the-bye).

I am working like a dragon at my book, and am a terror to the household, likewise to all the organs and brass bands in this quarter. Gad's Hill is being gorgeously painted, and we are here until the 1st of June. I wish I might hope you would be there any time this summer; I really have made the place comfortable and pretty by this time.

It is delightful to us to hear such good news of Butty.[†3] She made so deep an impression on Fechter that he always asks me what Ceylon has done for her, and always beams when I tell him how thoroughly well it has made her.[†4] As to you, you are the youngest man (worth mentioning as a thorough man) that I know. Oh, let me be as young when I am as — did you think I was going to write "old?" No, sir — withdraw from the wear and tear of busy life is my expression.

Poole[†1] still holds out at Kentish Town,[†2] and says he is dying of solitude. His memory is astoundingly good. I see him about once in two or three months, and in the meantime he makes notes of questions to ask me when I come. Having fallen in arrear of the time, these generally refer to unknown words he has encountered in the newspapers. His three last (he always reads them with tremendous difficulty through an enormous magnifying-glass) were as follows:

1. What's croquet?
2. What's an Albert chain?
3. Let me know the state of mind of the Queen.

When I had delivered a neat exposition on these heads, he turned back to his memoranda, and came to something that the utmost power of the enormous magnifying-glass couldn't render legible. After a quarter of an hour or so, he said: "O yes, I know." And then rose and clasped his hands above his head, and said: "Thank God, I am not a dram-drinker."

Do think of coming to Gad's in the summer; and do give my love to Mrs. Macready, and tell her I know she can make you come if she will. Mary and Georgy send best and dearest loves to her, to you, and to Katie, and to baby.[†3] Johnny[†4] we suppose to be climbing the tree of knowledge elsewhere.

My dearest Macready, ever yours most affectionately

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To MARCUS STONE, 22 APRIL 1865*

MS Morgan Library.

16 Somers Place | Saturday Twenty Second April | 1865

My Dear Marcus

There is a rather objectionable sameness in the subjects; both being interiors, and both with two people.

Ever

CD.

Letterings

Mr Fledgeby departs on his errand of mercy[†5]

Mr Wegg prepares a grindstone for Mr Boffin's nose.[†6]

To W.H. WILLS, 22 APRIL 1865

MS Huntington Library.

16 Somers Place | Twenty Second April 1865

My Dear Wills

Cheque enclosed, with thanks.[†1]

You want to bid for something at poor Leech's[†2] sale.[†3] I ditto. Forster (as he writes to me from Bath this morning) ditto. Let us three go into one boat, and charter Schloss[†4] accordingly. I take it we each want a good pencil or water color drawing.[†5] What Maximum shall we go to? Twenty pounds, Thirty Pounds, what? If you will settle that, according to your lights on the subject rely (in this as in all other matters) on the staunchness of the undersigned.

CD.

Tell Mrs. Wills[†6] that I have undergone great unhappiness on the subject of the Port, but am now cheerful — as I hope she is.

To JAMES BIRTLES, 23 APRIL 1865

MS Mrs Anne Eggar.

16 Somers Place Hyde Park
Sunday Twenty Third April 1865

Dear Mr. Birtles

You have some MS of Mr. Chorley's sent to you direct, and there is a third article to follow.[†7] Please set them up with all possible dispatch, and send Mr. Chorley proofs for correction. Otherwise he will go out of town before his corrections are made, and we shall have to await his return: which would be extremely inconvenient to A.Y.R.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To CHARLES KENT, 24 APRIL 1865*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

16 Somers Place | Monday Night Twenty Fourth April | 1865

My Dear Kent.

On Wednesday at 6..30 with true pleasure we shall expect you. And after dinner you and I will take a grave spell at the document[†1] — in which I am hardly less interested than you are.

Ever Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To EDMUND YATES, [24 APRIL 1865]

Envelope in Sotheby sale, May 1986; addressed Edmund Yates Esquire | General Post Office | St. Martin's Le Grand. PM 24 Apr 65.

To FREDERICK LEHMANN, 27 APRIL 1865

MS University of Texas, Austin.

16 Somers Place | Twenty Seventh April 1865

My Dear Lehmann

If I had not settled to go out of town between my two Nos. your kind note would have made sure of me at once. But I have, and settled it these ten days. It is really necessary to the pains I am taking with my book — always was indispensable to my working at my best — and has not become the less so, as my botherations have grown taller. I can throw anything off by going off myself. Not otherwise.

Today I am going out to dinner for the first time. But whether I can keep a boot on, and get it on again for the Academy Dinner on Saturday,[†2] remains to be seen.[†3] If I can't, I shall go off on Saturday for a week. If I can, I shall go off on Sunday.

Mary is going to propound to Mrs. Lehmann a certain distinct time early in June for a visit to Gad's Hill, where I shall be heartily glad to see you and walk with you.

Faithfully Yours always

CD.

To THOMAS MITTON,[†4] 28 APRIL 1865*

Text from typescript, Huntington Library.

16 Somers Place Hyde Park | Twenty Eighth April 1865.

My Dear Mitton

I am sorry to hear you have been ill. There is nothing like the sea for a change, though I fancy you must be rather warm where you are with that high cliff behind you. So changed am I as to the sea, that I cross that Channel in all weathers, and thoroughly freshen myself with its air. (I am going over, tomorrow or next day). If I had no boys holding on to the skirts of my coat, I think I should keep a yacht and go sailing about.

The London heat is quite intolerable. I take it that no one who has become accustomed to live in the country can stand London for many weeks together. I am counting the days until my term here is out: not the less, because I have three public dinners this next month.[†1]

I note your time for going home, and will write to you when you shall have had time to shake down there.

Ever CD.

Letitia wrote me word of poor Milly Thompson's[†2] death. — She spoke to me in Regent Street last Autumn.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 28 APRIL 1865

Extract in Carnegie Catalogue, No. 121; MS 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill Place, 28 Apr 65.

Taking exception to a point of parliamentary procedure raised by the recipient[†3] as not coming within the province of a chairman at a public dinner.[†4]

To FREDERIC OUVRY, [LATE APRIL 1865]

Mention in next. Date: presumably written shortly before that letter.

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 30 APRIL 1865*

MS Huntington Library.

16 Somers Place Hyde Park | Sunday Thirtieth April 1865

My Dear Ouvry

Mr. Fechter the French Actor, who is a very intimate friend of mine, will probably want some sound professional overlooking in an agreement he is likely to enter into respecting his Theatre.[†5] As he has heard me mention my great confidence in you, he has asked me for a letter to you, presenting him as a Client; which I have given him, in case he should have need to consult you during this next week, when I shall be away. I write this to you myself, that I may tell you that you will find him a man of remarkable capacity and perfectly acquainted with our language and customs; but an impetuous impulsive man who particularly wants sound guidance. He is a capital fellow, with the quickest and brightest understanding.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Frederic Ouvry Esquire

May

To SIR JAMES EMERSON TENNENT, 6 MAY 1865*

MS Private.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Saturday Sixth May 1865

My Dear Tennent

I had not forgotten our engagement, and will not fail in punctuality. But I must breakfast at home, in order that I may receive my usual budget from Gad's Hill before going out. Many thanks.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To W. H. WILLS, 6 MAY 1865*

MS Huntington Library.

16 Somers Place | Saturday Night Sixth May 1865

My Dear Wills

First of all, respecting the No.[†1] — I think it best to send the proofs to you.

As there is so much over, you may perhaps (with my cuts) make it up by doing without "Cricket on the Continent"[†2].

"Mabel May"[†3] requires to be carefully compared with Robert Lytton's[†4] MS.

Halliday very good.[†5] The best thing he has done since he became a Regular.[†6]

"The Lions, The Lions!"[†7] Also very much the kind of paper that we want in its degree.

"Going into business".[†8] Is it in 3 parts? If yes, the heading is right. If no, wrong. (I thought it was in 2 parts.)

———————————

The H. W. Budget (as expounded by that eloquent speaker Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer Wills) enthralled the House (as embodied in that magnificent personage who, wherever the English language is spoken, will go down at the small end of the telescope with that surprising genius Mr. Lincoln at the large), and was received with unanimous cheering and the highest encomiums. I very much like that notion of the new story in the new periodical.[†1] — Have high hopes that we shall strike success out of it. Let me get my mind free, and we will discuss it on all manner of sides.

Tell me by Post — shall we go from the office to the News Vendors,[†2] meeting at 1/2 past 6 precisely? Or, shall we meet at the Freemasons? The illustrious chairman is supposed (I think) to beam refulgent on the company at 6..40 with his accustomed punctuality.

Ever faithfully

CD.

To H. G. ADAMS,[†3] 11 MAY 1865

Text from N, III, 420-1.

16 Somers Place, Hyde Park, W.
Thursday Eleventh May 1865

My Dear Mr. Adams,

I send you a certificate of recommendation touching the office you seek to obtain.[†4] I believe I may venture to say that my name is influential in Birmingham, and that supposition) the man not to be already virtually found (rather a large supposition) the certificate would be certain of attention.

I shall be proud of the dedication you propose to honor me with, and am happy to become a subscriber for half a dozen copies of the book.[†5]

We are here until the first week in June, when we return home.

Faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To WILLIAM DAY, 11 MAY 1865*

MS Free Library Philadelphia. Address: Mr. Day | Messrs. Clowes and Sons | Printers | Duke Street | Stamford Street | S.

16 Somers Place | Thursday Eleventh May 1865

Dear Mr. Day

I omitted in my last note, to ask you to be so good as send Revise of No. 15[†6] to Mr. Stone.

In No. 14,[†7] page 109, 18 lines from top, dele the inverted commas after dear Mr. Fledgeby, and before I am.[†8]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To AUSTEN HENRY LAYARD, 11 MAY 1865

MS British Library.

16 Somers Place, Hyde Park, W.
Thursday Eleventh May 1865

My Dear Layard

I am going to send a son of mine (name, Alfred Tennyson; age, 20) out to Melbourne. He has acquired an excellent knowledge of business in a first-rate City house,[†1] and his object is to get into some mercantile employment there with a good firm, and gradually feel his way.

If you can give me any letters for him, either of a business or a social character, I shall be very heartily obliged. I have already good introductions from Sir Charles Nicholson, but should set great store by any that you could give me. I know it is not quite in your way, but all the wide world knows you.

Faithfully Yours Ever
CHARLES DICKENS[†2]

A. H. Layard Esquir

To H. B. MALTBY,[†3] 11 MAY 1865

Text from Weekly Despatch, 4 Feb 1923.

16 Somers Place, Hyde Park, W. | Thursday May 11, 1865

Mr. Maltby,

Please make for my son Mr. Alfred, the list of clothes I send you on the other side, and forward them to me at this address when ready.

As I am going to send him away, and as your account against him was sanctioned by me beforehand, you may charge me with the whole of it.

Faithfully yours
CHARLES DICKENS

[†a]2 white waistcoats

1 pair stout grey trousers

A pea-jacket, waistcoat and trousers to wear aboard ship, blue in colour, and stout in texture. Double breasted waistcoat as well as jacket to turn up in bad weather and fasten well round the neck.[†a]

To LADY HOUGHTON, 17 MAY 1865*

Trinity College, Cambridge.

16 Somers Place
Wednesday Seventeenth May, 1865

My Dear Lady Houghton

I find myself free for Sunday the 28th and shall be delighted to dine with you on that day, bringing my daughter with me.

Faithfully Yours ever
CHARLES DICKENS

To AUSTEN HENRY LAYARD, 17 MAY 1865

MS British Library.

16 Somers Place | Seventeenth May 1865

My Dear Layard

I have been away for three days, or of course, I should have immediately answered the questions respecting my son Alfred Tennyson:

He is 20 years of age, and unmarried.

He has been for two years and more, in a large China House in the City,[†1] and has a special aptitude for business, and a sound practical knowledge of it.

His object is, to become employed in some business-house in Australia, and gradually to make his way in the new world.

He sails for Melbourne on the 29th.[†2] No arrangements are made for him (beyond providing him with some introductions), and as he is going out by his own desire — as the story books say, "to seek his fortune." I believe him to have a knowledge and habit of business, not by any means common in well-educated youths of his age. His earlier training was in France;[†3] his later, in England, at Wimbledon School.[†4] Of course he knows the two languages about equally well.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

A. H. Layard Esquire

To FREDERICK LEHMANN, 17 MAY 1865*

MS University of Texas, Austin.

16 Somers Place | Seventeenth May 1865

My Dear Lehmann

I have heard today from Wills that there is such a great run upon that dinner,[†5] that he had thought it expedient last Monday to go to the Freemasons with the Secretary, and mark the few places I wanted for a few friends. Of course if it be possible to make that bit of the table elastic, they will do it for me. I write to Wills by this next P.O. delivery begging him to precipitate himself upon the Secretary, tooth and nail, and make a strong point of your name and my desire to have a place for it among the rest.

Ever Faithfully
CD.

To W. H. WILLS, [17 MAY 1865]

Mention in last. Date: written the same day.

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 17 MAY 1865*

MS Huntington Library.

16 Somers Place | Wednesday Seventeenth May 1865

My Dear Ouvry

Fechter will call upon you tomorrow at One, unless he should hear from you in the morning (at 18 Marlborough Place St. John's Wood) that you are engaged at that time.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To FREDERICK LEHMANN, 19 MAY 1865*

MS University of Texas, Austin.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Nineteenth May 1865

My Dear Lehmann

It is all right for tomorrow, and you sit with our own people. Will you go to the Freemasons' Tavern at a quarter before 6, and ask for the Stewards' Room. There you will find Wills, in waiting for you.

Ever Yours
CD.

To LADY MOLESWORTH, 19 MAY 1865*

MS Royal Institution of Cornwall, Truro.

16 Somers Place | Friday Nineteenth May 1865

My Dear Lady Molesworth

Until I hear you scream in the basket at Gad's Hill — as I hope I shall, in the midsummer time — I fear we shall not meet; for after being so long disabled, I began engaging myself with a burst; and now, between my work (which is the first demand) and those engagements, I am a gone 'coon,[†1] counting the hours until I get upon the grass and under the trees. After all my virtuous resolutions I have fallen! — Fallen into engagements of business or pleasure for every single day that stands between me and my native heath.

Affectionately Yours ever
CHARLES DICKENS

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, [?MAY 1865]

Extract in unidentified newspaper cutting in Kitton's "Dickens Ana", II, 32. Date: similar wording to next points to a date near it.

Concerning the great music-hall question, as to myself, I have strongly urged the case of the Music Halls against the prosecutions of the Theatrical Managers and have advocated Free Trade in entertainments as in all other speculations.

To R. BERNAL OSBORNE,[†1] 20 MAY 1865†

MS Mrs John Silcock.

16 Somers Place | Saturday Twentieth May 1865

Dear Bernal Osborne

My name is not set to the petition in favor of Locke's bill,[†2] because I never petition if I can possibly help it.

On principle I am for free-trade in popular amusements, and in practice I believe that the conversion of the Musical Halls into Theatres would do a great deal of good.[†3] It would take the Theatrical "trade" out of a few hands, would give increased employment and gains to a great number of struggling people, and would bring into a wholesome competition with ill-conducted Theatres that have gradually brought themselves down some enterprising men with capital at their disposal, and a good knowledge of the public. The sure consequence of a great success of a theatrical kind on the part of one of these, would be the want of more room in front for the accomodation[†4] of the audience; and the sure tendency of that would be, the removal of the tables on which the eatables and drinkables are set, and the substitution of more seats. Why the eating and drinking, however, should be supposed to be so objectionable, I cannot imagine.[†5] In these places at present there is the most rigid enforcement of order, without any distinction of class. I am always looking about, and have never seen drunkenness in a Music-Hall. [†a]As to loose women, I know no means of keeping them out of chapels, if they choose to go there. It is quite a mistake to suppose (as some of your fellow M.P.s do) that they are invited to Music Halls or placed on the Free List there. No such thing. If they go there, they must conduct themselves like the rest of the Audience; and you will see as many men with their wives and daughters at a Music Hall — at least as many — as in the most bumptiously virtuous assembly going.

I observe in society that the Argyll rooms in Windmill Street Haymarket,[†6] is legislatively supposed to be a Music Hall. It is nothing of the sort, and was expressly established as a kind of resort that must exist somewhere in a great city.[†7†a]

The managers don't want to be stirred up in their activity and stirred down in their prices, and that is the whole secret of their opposition. Moreover they have been complaining, as against the Music Halls, for a long time, that they, the managers, can't get singing chambermaids and the like, because the Music Halls take them away — that is to say, give them better pay and more durable engagements.

I know of many such small people who are supporting relations and friends out of number by being respectably engaged and respectably paid at Music Halls.

The Britannia at Hoxton[†1] is an immense Theatre, beautifully constructed, having immense audiences all through the year, the great body composed of the very commonest people. I have seen the gradual transformation of that place from a "Saloon" to a fine Theatre.[†2] That the character of the entertainments has risen as the transformation has progressed, I know beyond all doubt.

Faithfully yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To CHARLES FECHTER, 21 MAY 1865*

MS Öffentliche Bibliothek der Universität Basel.

16 Somers Place | Sunday Twenty First May 1865

My Dear Fechter

It is tomorrow, Monday (not Tuesday) that Forster dines at the office. Pray dine with us at 5. We shall not come over to Don Caesar[†3] tomorrow night, as we wish to keep it quite fresh for Saturday.

Ever Heartily yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 21 MAY 1865*

MS Private.

16 Somers Place | Sunday Twenty First May 1865

My Dear Madam

I am afraid you will think me faithless and rude, but the fault is really not mine — is even, in part, yours! As I hope to explain to you.

Next Wednesday at from three to half past, I will again try to make my way to you.

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To AUSTEN HENRY LAYARD, [?22 MAY 1865]

MS British Library. Date: Alfred had originally expected to sail on 29 May; "in the course of the week" therefore suggests CD wrote on or near 22 May.

16 Somers Place, Hyde Park W.

My Dear Layard

I really cannot tell you how much I thank you for the letters in my boy's behalf, and for your great kindness.

As to a letter from the Colonial Office to the Governor,[†1] presenting him as my son, I should be very glad to have it if you can without laying yourself under obligation or putting yourself to inconvenience obtain it in the course of the week.

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

A. H. Layard Esquire

To CHARLES FECHTER, 23 MAY 1865

MS Berg Collection.

16 Somers Place | Tuesday Twenty Third May 1865

My Dear Fechter

I send you below, the note I recommend.

Ever Cordially
CD.

Dear Madam[†2]

Agreeably to my promise, I send you this letter as a written record of the understanding between us in reference to your engagement with me.

If, in deference to the wishes of your friends, or for any other reason, you should desire altogether to retire from the stage on the expiration of the second season of your engagement, you shall be free to do so; I relinquishing all claim to the fine of two hundred pounds which you would otherwise have to pay to me. But on condition that if you should at any time thereafter return to the stage, you shall not be free to make any engagement elsewhere, without first completing your engagement with me, either by acting for a season at my Theatre, or paying me the forfeiture of two hundred pounds.

To THE REV. WILLIAM HARNESS,[†3] 23 MAY 1865†

MS Berg Collection. Address: The Rev. William Harness | 3 Hyde Park Terrace | Kensington Gore | W.

16 Somers Place | Tuesday Twenty Third May 1865

My Dear Harness.

I cannot tell you how sorry I am that we have not one single day open until the 6th. of June when we must be at Gad's Hill. In despite of the grimmest inflexibility on my part and the most virtuous resolutions, it invariably happens so. They take me into custody here (Mary and her Aunt) in the fatal month of May, somehow, and I am continually impelled in directions diametrically opposed to my wishes.

But I hope I descry good in this. Clearly you must come to Gad's Hill, which is quite another Gad's Hill since you saw it. Before June is out, I shall write and ask you when you will come, and I hope you are from this moment bound to your side of the bargain.

I regret to hear on so good an authority as your own that you have not been well. I am, and have been, hard at work at your conversion — to the opinion that the story of Our Mutual Friend is very interesting and was from the first tending to a purpose which you couldn't foresee until I chose to take you into my confidence. Modest this. — But true.

Ever Your affectionate friend
CHARLES DICKENS

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 23 MAY 1865*

MS Huntington Library.

16 Somers Place | Tuesday Twenty Third May 1865

My Dear Ouvry

If you see no objection will you write to this man whose letter is enclosed,[†1] that I acknowledge no such debts unless my consent is first asked to the giving of the credit. I do not like absolute silence in such a case, having the good or ill fortune to be so conspicuous a personage.

Ever Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To GEORGE RUSSELL, 23 MAY 1865*

MS Marjorie, Lady Russell. Address: George Russell Esquire | St. James's Place | S.W.

16 Somers Place | Tuesday Twenth Third May 1865

My Dear George Russell

The Port is excellent, and I shall be glad to take 6 Dozen. How shall I get it? I want it in two parcels — one for town, and the other for the country. I will either send for it, or pay any one about the cellar to pack it for me.

My principles may be described as "Slipper". But I would certainly vote for the "top-boot" principles[†2] in connexion with your brother Charles,[†3] if I were a free and independent — of that true-born British County which &c.

Ever Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To W. H. RUSSELL,[†1] 26 MAY 1865

Text in N, III, 422 checked from MS Sotheby's, Dec 1968.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Twenty Sixth May 1865

My Dear Russell

I have had a hearty laugh over your note. The Committee[†2] should certainly have deferred to your representations — though I am very glad that they did no such thing.

The dirty-faced man (it must have been the same, because there cannot have been two men, each so dirty-faced) was beset by an idea, after I vacated the chair, that I had lost something. He tried to articulate a sentence to the effect that whatever I had lost should be instantly found. At that period he was supported by an angle between two doors, and his shirt front had the appearance of having been clutched by waiters in personal strife. I think he must have confounded me with himself, and that he had lost his senses in making the preliminary arrangements.

I settle down in these parts early in June. Look out for my making a dash upon you, and endeavouring to prevail upon you to come down and see us. Billiards, croquet, bowls, &c on the premises. Cool cups and good drinks. Good beds. Harmony, most evenings.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. H. Russell Esquire

To SIR EDWIN LANDSEER,[†3] 27 MAY 1865*

MS Exeter University Library. Address: Sir Edwin Landseer R. A. | 1 St. John's Wood Road.

16 Somers Place | Saturday Twenty Seventh May 1865

My Dear Landseer

We are all three most heartily sorry and vexed, but I am engaged for Sunday the 4th. of June. That day and Monday the 5th are our two last engagements before going home to Gad's Hill. But if you should[†4] hold your little festival[†5] any day after the 5th. and should[†4] remember us, we should be delighted to come up for it.

In haste | Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Sir Edwin Landseer.

To ALFRED DICKENS, [?28 MAY 1865]

Extract in Alfred Dickens to G. W. Rusden, 11 Aug 70, MS Trinity College, Melbourne. Date: Alfred had expected to sail for Australia on 29 May 65; letter to be read "when we were out of sight of land"; probably written the day before.

You know that I never interfere with the religious opinions of my children, preferring they should reflect for themselves, as they grow old enough to do so: but in parting from you, as in parting from Sydney & Frank I tell you that if you humbly try to guide yourself by the beautiful new testament, you can never go wrong: also that I hope you will never omit under any circumstances to say a prayer by yourself night & morning.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?END MAY 1865]

Extract in F, IX, v, 742. Date: the day he left for France according to Forster; probably soon after 27 May, when he wrote from 16 Somers Place (see To Landseer, that day).

Work and worry, without exercise, would soon make an end of me. If I were not going away now, I should break down. No one knows as I know to-day how near to it I have been.

June

To MISS MARY DICKENS OR MRS CHARLES COLLINS, [?EARLY JUNE 1865]

Extract in F, VIII, vii, 700. Date: addressed "to his daughter" during "a brief holiday during the summer" before Staplehurst accident, according to Forster.

Before I went away, I had certainly worked myself into a damaged state. But the moment I got away, I began, thank God, to get well. I hope to profit by this experience, and to make future dashes from my desk before I want them.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?END MAY-EARLY JUNE 1865]

Extract in F, IX, v, 744. Date: written from France while he was writing Our Mutual Friend, according to Forster; end May-early June 65 most likely, since by Sep, his second visit to France that year, the novel was finished.

I have been reading a capital little story by Edmond About[†1] — The Notary's Nose.[†2] I have been trying other books; but so infernally conversational, that I forget who the people are before they have done talking, and don't in the least remember what they talked about before when they begin talking again!

To F. C. BEARD, 10 JUNE 1865

MS Dickens House.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,

Saturday Tenth June 1865

My Dear Frank Beard

I was in the terrible accident yesterday,[†1] and worked some hours among the dying and dead.[†2]

I was in the carriage that did not go down, but hung in the air over the side of the broken bridge. I was not touched — scarcely shaken. But the terrific nature of the scene makes me think that I should be the better for a gentle composing draught or two.

I must away to Gad's directly to quiet their minds. John[†3] would get made and would bring down, any prescription you might let him have here. Don't come down to Gad's, yourself, unless you can stay all night and be comfortable. In that case, do.

Ever Yours

CD.

(I can't sign my flourish to day!)[†4]

To WILLIAM DAY, 10 JUNE 1865*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Office A. Y. R. | Saturday Tenth June 1865

Dear Mr Day. There are 3 more pages of this No.[†5] to follow. You shall have them shortly. Proofs to Gad's Hill, as I have left town.

Tell Mr. Clowes[†6] that I was not touched in the terrible Railway accident yesterday. I was in the carriage that did not go over the bridge but hung suspended in the air. I was scarcely shaken, and able to work for hours among the dying and dead.

Faithfully Yrs.

CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, 10 JUNE 1865

Extract in F, I, v, 742.

Saturday, tenth of June 1865.

I was in the terrific Staplehurst accident yesterday, and worked for hours among the dying and dead. I was in the carriage that did not go over, but went off the line, and hung over the bridge in an inexplicable manner. No words can describe the scene. I am away to Gads.

To CHARLES LEVER,[†1] 10 JUNE 1865

MS Widener Collection, Harvard.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND, | Saturday Tenth June 1865

My Dear Lever

I was in the frightful accident yesterday, and worked for hours among the dying and dead.

I was in the carriage that did not go down, but that hung inexplicably suspended in the air over the side of the broken bridge. I am going home to reassure my daughter's mind. Can you come down, say tomorrow? Higham on the North Kent Line from Charing X is my station. Write tonight, or telegraph, if you can come. We shall be heartily glad to see you. There is a room for you, of course.

My address is | Gad's Hill Place | Higham.

Ever Yours Cordially

CD.

I can't sign my flourish, being nervously shaken

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 10 JUNE 1865*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND, | Saturday Tenth June 1865

My Dear Ouvry.

I enclose the cheque.[†2]

I was in the terrific accident yesterday (under-stated in the papers this morning)[†3] and worked for hours among the dying and dead. I was in the carriage that did not go over, and that hung inexplicably in the air over the side of the broken bridge. I am not touched — scarcely shaken. I am away to Gad's to relieve my daughter's mind.

Ever Yours

CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS AND MRS BROWN, 11 JUNE 1865†

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Coutts | Holly Lodge | Highgate | N.W.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Eleventh June 1865.

My Dear Miss Coutts and Mrs. Brown.

My steady heart thanks you better than my unsteady hand for your kind, kind, letters.[†a] I was in the carriage that did not go over the bridge but caught in turning and hung suspended over the ruined brick work. I worked hard afterwards among the dead and dying, and it is that shock — not the shock of the stumbling carriage, which was nothing — that I feel a little. I could not have imagined so appalling a scene.[†a]

Your recommendation my dear Miss Coutts to rest a little, shall not be neglected. I will come to Holly Lodge to thank you, as soon as I go to London.

Ever Your affectionate

CD.

To MRS CHARLES DICKENS, 11 JUNE 1865

MS British Library. Address: Mrs. Charles Dickens | 70 Gloucester Crescent | Regents Park | N.W.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Eleventh June 1865

Dear Catherine

I thank you for your letter.

I was in the carriage that did not go over the bridge, but which caught on one side and hung suspended over the ruined parapet. I am shaken, but not by that shock. Two or three hours work afterwards among the dead and dying surrounded by terrific sights, render my hand unsteady.

Affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

To [?T.J.] ARNOLD,[†1] 12 JUNE 1865*

MS Dickens House.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Monday Twelfth June 1865

My Dear Arnold

I should have answered your note sooner, but — firstly — for having been in France, and — secondly — for having been in the terrible accident on Friday. I was in the carriage that did not go over, but was caught on the turn among the ruins of the bridge, and stood alone — the engine broken from it, before — the train gone down into the valley, behind. I am shaken, not by the dragging of the carriage itself, but by the work afterwards in getting out the dead and dying, which was horrible.

It would give me real pleasure to dine with your brother[†2] and you, but my Doctor says "Make no engagements. Rest." I am afraid my hand may not be very legible, but I thought you would prefer it to another's.

Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

To THOMAS HEADLAND,[†3] 12 JUNE 1865†

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Twelfth June 1865

My Dear Headland. I am very much obliged to you for your letter, and I beg cordially to assure you that I have been touched by its kind feeling and its affectionate good sense.

I should have written to you sooner but for two reasons. Firstly, I have been in France. Secondly, I was in the terrible railway accident last Friday. I was in the Carriage that did not go over into the stream, but was caught on the turn, just as it was dropping over, by the broken girders and brick work of the bridge. I am shaken; — not by the dragging of the carriage itself, but by the work afterwards in getting out the dying and dead, which was horrible.

My handwriting may not be very plain, I fear, but I knew you would rather see mine than a Deputy's. So here it is.

With many thanks, I enclose a crossed cheque,[†4] and am always

Faithfully Your friend
CHARLES DICKENS

To CHARLES LEVER, 12 JUNE 1865

MS Widener Collection, Harvard.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Twelfth June 1865

My Dear Lever.

I wrote to you on Saturday morning before I left town. Your letter seems to have crossed mine, which was addressed to you at the Junior Carlton.

I am shaken, but not by the dragging of the carriage in which I was; — by getting out the dead and dying afterwards.

Let me see you, or hear from you.

Ever affectionately Yours
CD.

To W. C. MACREADY, 12 JUNE 1865

MS Morgan Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Twelfth June 1865

My Dearest Macready

Many thanks for your kind words of remembrance. This is not all in my own hand, because I am too much shaken to write many notes.[†1] Not by the beating and dragging of the carriage in which I was — it did not go over, but was caught on the turn — among the ruins of the bridge — but by the work afterwards to get out the dying and dead, which was terrible.

Ever Your affectionate Friend
CHARLES DICKENS

My Love to Mrs. Macready

To THE HEAD STATION MASTER, CHARING CROSS, 12 JUNE 1865

MS Robert H. Taylor Collection, Princeton University.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Twelfth June 1865

Dear Sir

A lady who was in the carriage with me in the terrible accident on Friday, lost, in the struggle of being got out of the carriage, a gold watch-chain with a smaller gold watch chain attached, a bundle of charms, a gold watch-key, and a gold seal engraved "Ellen".[†2]

I promised the lady to make her loss known at headquarters,[†3] in case these trinkets should be found. Will you have the kindness to note this application.

The carriage was the first class carriage which was dragged aslant, but did not go over, being caught upon the turn. The Engine broke from it before, and the rest of the train broke from it behind and went down into the stream below.

I mention these particulars to make the lady's case plain. I would have spoken to you instead of writing, but that I am shaken; — not by the beating of the carriage, but by the work afterwards of getting out the dying and dead.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Head Station Master | Charing Cross.

To MRS HENRY AUSTIN,[†1] 13 JUNE 1865*

MS Morgan Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Thirteenth June 1865

My Dear Letitia

I am a little shaken; not by the beating and dragging of the carriage in which I was, but by the work afterwards in taking out the dying and dead, which was most horrible. I was in the only carriage that did not go over into the stream. It tilted up, and was caught upon the turn by some of the ruin of the bridge. Two ladies were my fellow-passengers.[†2] I said to them "Pray don't cry out. We can't help ourselves. Let us be quiet and composed." One of them, an elderly lady, replied: "Rely upon me. Upon my soul I won't call out, or stir." We were all down together in a corner of the carriage, and they remained perfectly still until I could get them out.

Ever affecy.
CD.

To J. B. BUCKSTONE,[†3] 13 JUNE 1865†

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: J. B. Buckstone Esquire | Peak Hill | Sydenham.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Thirteenth June 1865

My Dear Buckstone

Many thanks for your kind words of remembrance.

This is not all in my own hand, because I am too much shaken to write many notes. Not by the beating and dragging of the carriage in which I was — it did not go over, but was caught on the turn among the ruins of the bridge — but by the work afterwards to get out the dying and the dead, which was terrible.

Faithfully Yours ever
CHARLES DICKENS[†4]

J. B. Buckstone Esquire

To JOHN DE GEX,[†1] 13 JUNE 1865*

MS Ann Thwaite.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Thirteenth June 1865

My Dear De Gex.

†a Many thanks for your kind words of remembrance. This is not all in my own hand, because I am too much shaken to write many notes. Not by the beating and dragging of the carriage in which I was — it did not go over, but was caught on the turn among the ruins of the bridge — but by the work afterwards to get out the dying and dead. Which was terrible.†a

Faithfully Yours always

CD.

To FREDERICK DICKENS, 13 JUNE 1865*

MS Dr and Mrs Gordon F. Madding.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.

Tuesday Thirteenth July 1865

My Dear Frederick

I am just that much shaken that I am obliged to keep quiet, and cannot yet write half a dozen notes together without feeling the worse for it. My impression is that this is not owing to the beating and dragging of the carriage, but to the terrible work afterwards of getting out the dying and dead, in which I was very active.

My carriage was the only one that did not go over into the stream. It was caught among the ruin of the bridge, as it turned, and seemed impossibly balanced in the act of tilting.

Affecy

CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?13 JUNE 1865]

Extracts in F, IX, v, 743. Date: soon after the Staplehurst railway accident; similar wording to To Wills, 13 June, suggests same day; both extracts probably from same letter.

I am curiously weak — weak as if I were recovering from a long illness.

I begin to feel it more in my head. I sleep well and eat well; but I write half a dozen notes, and turn faint and sick.

To CHARLES KENT, 13 JUNE 1865

Mention in S. T. Freeman & Co. catalogue No. 980; dated Gad's Hill Place, 13 June 65; addressed Charles Kent.

To THOMAS MITTON, 13 JUNE 1865

Text from A. H. Joline, Rambles in Autograph Land, Putnam, 1913, pp. 196-8.

†aGAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.

Tuesday, Thirteenth June 1865

My Dear Mitton. I should have written to you yesterday or the day before, if I had been quite up to writing. †bI am a little shaken, not by the beating and dragging of the carriage in which I was, but by the hard work afterwards in getting out the dying and dead, which was most horrible.†b

I was in the only carriage that did not go over into the stream. It was caught upon the turn by some of the ruin of the bridge, and hung suspended and balanced in an apparently impossible manner. Two ladies were my fellow passengers; an old one, and a young one. This is exactly what passed:— you may judge from it the precise length of the suspense. Suddenly we were off the rail and beating the ground as the car of a half emptied balloon might. The old lady cried out "My God!" and the young one screamed. I caught hold of them both (the old lady sat opposite, and the young one on my left), and said: "We can't help ourselves, but we can be quiet and composed. Pray don't cry†a out." The old lady immediately answered, "Thank you. Rely upon me. Upon my soul, I will be quiet." The young lady said in a frantic way, "Let us join hands and die friends." We were then all tilted down together in a corner of the carriage, and stopped. I said to them thereupon: "You may be sure nothing worse can happen. Our danger must be over. Will you remain here without stirring, while I get out of the window?" They both answered quite collectedly, "Yes," and I got out without the least notion what had happened. Fortunately I got out with great caution and stood upon the step. Looking down, I saw the bridge gone and nothing below me but the line of rail. Some people in the two other compartments were madly trying to plunge out at window, and had no idea that there was an open swampy field 15 feet down below them and nothing else! The two guards (one with his face cut) were running up and down on the down side of the bridge (which was not torn up) quite wildly. I called out to them "Look at me. Do stop an instant and look at me, and tell me whether you don't know me." One of them answered "We know you very well, Mr. Dickens." "Then," I said, "my good fellow for God's sake give me your key, and send one of those labourers here, and I'll empty this carriage." — We did it quite safely, by means of a plank or two and when it was done I saw all the rest of the train except the two baggage cars down in the stream. I got into the carriage again for my brandy flask, took off my travelling hat for a basin, climbed down the brickwork, and filled my hat with water. Suddenly I came upon a staggering man covered with blood (I think he must have been flung clean out of his carriage) with such a frightful cut across the skull that I couldn't bear to look at him. I poured some water over his face, and gave him some to drink, and gave him some brandy, and laid him down on the grass, and he said "I am gone" and died afterwards. Then I stumbled over a lady lying on her back against a little pollard tree, with the blood streaming over her face (which was lead color) in a number of distinct little streams from the head. I asked her if she could swallow a little brandy, and she just nodded, and I gave her some and left her for somebody else. The next time I passed her, she was dead. Then a man examined at the Inquest yesterday (who evidently had not the least remembrance of what really passed) came running up to me and implored me to help him find his wife, who was afterwards found dead. No imagination can conceive the ruin of the carriages, or the extraordinary weights under which the people were lying, or the complications into which they were twisted up among iron and wood, and mud and water.

I don't want to be examined at the Inquest,[†1] and I don't want to write about it. It could do no good either way, and I could only seem to speak about myself, which, of course I would rather not do. I am keeping very quiet here. I have a — I don't know what to call it — constitutional (I suppose) presence of mind, and was not in the least fluttered at the time. I instantly remembered that I had the MS. of a No.[†2] with me, and clambered back into the carriage for it. But in writing these scanty words of recollection I feel the shake and am obliged to stop.

Ever faithfully,

C.D.

To GEORGE RUSSELL, 13 JUNE 1865*

MS Marjorie, Lady Russell. Address: George Russell Esquire | 4 St. James's Place | London | S.W.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Thirteenth June 1865

My Dear George Russell

Many thanks for your affectionate note. I was speaking of you yesterday, and would have written if I could.

I am just so much shaken (not by the dragging and beating of the carriage in which I was, but by the dreadful hours of work afterwards among the dying and dead), as that I cannot do anything but keep quiet, without turning rather faint and sick. But thank God I am in all respects quite uninjured.

The two packets of wine to the office please, when they are delivered: Somers Place being vacated.

Ever Affectionately Yours

CD.

To W. H. WILLS, 13 JUNE 1865

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Thirteenth June 1865

My Dear Wills

I feel it rather more in my head to day than I have done yet. Quiet is the main thing. I write two or three notes and turn faint and sick.[†1]

Ever Heartily

CD.

To MRS SARTORIS,[†2] 14 JUNE 1865*

MS Private. Address: Mrs. Sartoris | Warnford | Bishop's Waltham.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Fourteenth June 1865

My Dear Mrs. Sartoris

[†a]Many thanks for your kind words of remembrance. This is not all in my own hand, because I am too much shaken to write many notes. Not by the beating and dragging of the carriage in which I was — it did not go over, but was caught on the turn among the ruin of the bridge — but by the work afterwards to get out the dying and dead, which was terrible.[†a]

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Sartoris

To MRS WINTER,[†3] 14 JUNE 1865†

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Fourteenth June 1865

My Dear Mrs. Winter

[†b] Many thanks for your kind words of remembrance.

This is not all in my own hand, because I am too much shaken to write many notes. Not by the beating and dragging of the carriage in which I was — it did not go over, but was caught on the turn among the ruin of the bridge — but by the work afterwards to get out the dying and dead, which was terrible.[†b]

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS JEWSBURY,[†1] 15 JUNE 1865

Text from N, III, 427.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Fifteenth June, 1865

My Dear Miss Jewsbury,

Many thanks for your kind words of remembrance. This is not all in my own hand, because I am too much shaken to write many notes. Not by the beating and dragging of the carriage in which I was — it did not go over, but was caught on the turn among the ruin of the bridge — but by the work afterwards to get out the dying and dead, which was terrible.

Faithfully yours ever
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To AUGUSTUS TRACEY,[†2] 15 JUNE 1865*

MS University of Texas, Austin.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Fifteenth June 1865

My Dear Jack

It's all true. I am rather too shaken to write at any length for a few days; not by the beating and dragging of the carriage in which I got suspended in the air at last, but by the terrible work afterwards in getting out the dying and dead.

But I was not touched. Thank God.

Sorry to hear of your having been in the Sick-bay. Glad to hear of your having come out of it.

Faithfully Ever
CD.

To THE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY,[†3] [?JUNE 1865]

Mention in To Cerjat, 30 Nov 65. Date: Lord Shaftesbury, to whom CD is replying, would probably have written to CD, asking his views on greater railway safety, after the Staplehurst accident of 9 June.

To CHARLES FECHTER, 17 JUNE 1865

MS Lenin Library, Moscow.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Seventeenth June 1865

My Dear Fechter.

Pray thank Derrieux for me, most cordially, I am obliged to abstain from writing notes (that is to say, more than 50 a day), as I am still a little below the mark, and have my work to think of.

I was in London yesterday, but had no idea you were at the Theatre. I had promised to go up to Miss Coutts at Highgate, and I had to go to my Doctor, and on other errands of business. The noise of the wheels of my Hansom, and of the London streets, was as much as I could bear. So I made all speed back here again — by a slow train though, for I felt that I was not up to the Express.

When are you coming here again? I had a fancy you would appear tonight or tomorrow morning.

Kindest regard from all | Ever Heartily Yours

CD.

To W. W. JONES,[†1] 17 JUNE 1865*

Text from copy in Minute Book of Newsvendors' Benevolent and Provident Institution.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT

Saturday Seventeenth June 1865

Sir

I beg you to assure the Committee of the Newsvendors' Benevolent and Provident Institution, that I have been deeply affected by their special remembrance of me[†2] in my late escape from death or mutilation, and that I thank them with my whole heart.

Faithfully yours and theirs

CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Walter Jones

To H. M. MERRIDEW,[†3] 17 JUNE 1865*

MS Miss L. M. Merridew.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.

Saturday Seventeenth June 1865

Sir

I beg to thank you for your obliging enquiry, and to assure you that I have not suffered any inconvenience from the terrible Railway accident we encountered together, beyond an incapacity to bear much noise, and an occasional sense of weariness. I trust your shoulder will soon be better.[†4] I am not surprised by your taking time to find out that you were hurt, for I took to London in the carriage that conveyed me up from the scene of the disaster, two wounded passengers who have been lying ill ever since, and who had no notion at the time that there was much the matter with them.

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. H. Melville Merridew.

To [?M. E.] TREEVE,[†1] 17 JUNE 1865

Extract in Nial Devitt Books catalogue No. 43 (1998); MS (3rd person) 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill Place, 17 June 65; addressed Mr Treeve, the Field office.

Saying that he cannot make an appointment to meet him as he is advised to remain quiet here and avoid the noise of London, until he shall have quite recovered the shake of the railway accident — in his case very slight.

To MRS HULKES,[†2] 18 JUNE 1865

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Eighteenth June 1865

My Dear Mrs. Hulkes.

I return the Examiner, with many thanks.

The account is true, except that I had brandy.[†3] By an extraordinary chance, I had a bottle and a half with me. I slung the half bottle round my neck and carried my hat full of water in my hands. But I can understand the describer (whoever he is) making the mistake in perfect good faith, and supposing that I called for brandy, when I really called to the others who were helping, "I have brandy here." The Mr. Dickenson[†4] mentioned, had changed places with a Frenchman who didn't like the window down, a few seconds before the accident.[†5] The frenchman was killed, and a labourer and I got Mr. Dickenson out of a most extraordinary heap of dark ruins in which he was jammed upside down.[†6] He was bleeding at the eyes, ears, nose, and mouth; but didn't seem to know that afterwards, and of course I didn't tell him. In the moment of going over the viaduct, the whole of his pockets were shaken empty! He had no watch, no chain, no money, no pocketbook, no handkerchief, when we got him out. He had been choking a quarter of an hour, when I heard him groaning. If I hadn't had the brandy to give him at the moment, I think he would have been done for. As it was, I brought him up to London in the carriage with me,[†7] and couldn't make him believe that he was hurt. He was the first person whom the brandy saved. As I ran back to the carriage for the whole full bottle, I saw the first two people I had helped, lying dead. A bit of shade from the hot sun, into which we got the unhurt ladies, soon had as many dead in it as living.

Faithfully Yours always
CD.

To W. H. WILLS, 18 JUNE 1865*

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Sunday Eighteenth June 1865

My Dear Wills.

I have made no marks upon these proofs.[†1] — Just look at Patty,[†2] and guard against too many short lines and breaks.[†3]

I shall be at the office (on my cause of anxiety)[†4] next Tuesday, and shall probably remain there two or three days. Is it true what I hear — that you and I are a pair of God-fathers???[†5]

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To E. S. N. DICKENSON, 20 JUNE 1865*

MS Private.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND, | Tuesday Twentieth June 1865

Dear Sir

I send round my servant with this, to enquire how you are. I hope you will not suppose that I have been wanting in interest in you. On the very next morning after the accident, I spoke of you to the Station Master at Charing Cross, who (making some mistake in the flurry of the time) did not couple you with my description. It was only on my going down to my country house last Friday, that he told me you were then still lying at the Hotel.

Do not trouble yourself to try to write. If you could tell my servant by word of mouth how you are, I should be truly glad to know that you are doing well.

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Dickinson Esquire[†6]

To F. C. BEARD, 21 JUNE 1865

MS Dickens House.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Twenty First June 1865

My Dear Frank.

In case you should be projecting a Gad's Hill holiday, I let you know that I am here until Friday morning.

The medicine,[†1] I think, has done me good. My pulse is still feeble and I am unfit for noise and worry, but I suppose I must have time to get over those little defects.

Ever Faithfully
CD.

To MRS ROSS CHURCH,[†2] 21 JUNE 1865*

MS The Rev. John J. McShea.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Twenty First June 1865

My Dear Madam

I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your obliging letter, and to assure you that it would have given me real pleasure if I could have entertained your proposal.[†3] But you will understand my inability to do so, when I state that we have already made arrangements here for three serial stories, two of which are already written and ready for publication.[†4]

I am Dear Madam | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Ross Church

To CHARLES KENT, 21 JUNE 1865*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Twenty First June 1865

My Dear Kent.

If Mr. Norfolk,[†5] the gentleman of whom you tell me, really wishes to see me, I will make an appointment here for that purpose when I next come to town. I use the expression "really wishes to see me", assuming him to understand from you that I never associate myself with any Company or Direction, and that it would merely be a waste of time on his part to have such an interview. I would not even give an opinion on the prospects of such a company as he projects, because I do not know how bright or how cloudy they may be. That, your paper is capable of attracting a larger and still larger circulation, you know, and he must know, because you have the proofs of it in your accounts. Beyond your Paper, and you, and your indubitable capacity as an honorable, accomplished, and experienced Editor, I have no knowledge which would justify me in affecting to pronounce oracularly on the scheme,[†1] and therefore I should altogether decline doing so.

Affectionately Yours Ever
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Kent Esquire

To ARTHUR RYLAND,[†2] 21 JUNE 1865

MS Benoliel Collection.

GAD'S HILL PLACE | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Twenty First June 1865

My Dear Mr. Ryland

I need not assure you that I regard the unanimous desire of the Town Council Committee as a great honor, and that I feel the strongest interest in the occasion, and the strongest wish to associate myself with it.[†3]

But after careful consideration I most unwillingly come to the conclusion that I must decline. At the time in question I shall — please God — either have just finished, or be just finishing, my present book. Country rest and recreation will then be invaluable to me, before casting about for Christmas. I am a little shaken in my nervous system by the terrible and affecting incidents of the late Railway accident from which I bodily escaped. I am withdrawing myself from engagements of all kinds, in order that I may pursue my story with the comfortable sense of being perfectly free while it is adoing and when it is done. The consciousness of having made this engagement would, if I were to make it, render such sense incomplete, and so open the way to others. This is the real state of the case, and the whole reason for my declining.

Faithfully Yours always\
CHARLES DICKENS

Arthur Ryland Esquire

To MARCUS STONE, 21 JUNE 1865*

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: Marcus Stone Esquire | Russell House | Tavistock Square | W.C.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Twenty First June 1865

My Dear Marcus.

The Printer is correcting No. 16,[†4] and will send you the Proof presently. It has been delayed by my having been shaken.

Affy. Ever
CD.

To JOHN THOMPSON, 25 JUNE 1865

Extract in N, III, 429.

Gad's Hill Place | 25th June 1865

Dr. John,

Take Miss Ellen tomorrow morning, a little basket of fresh fruit, a jar of clotted cream from Tuckers,[†1] and a chicken, a pair of pigeons, or some nice little bird. Also on Wednesday morning, and on Friday morning, take her some other things of the same sort — making a little variety each day.

To JOHN FORSTER, [LATE JUNE 65]

Extracts in F, IX, v, 743. Date: before the close of June, according to Forster; both extracts probably from same letter.

I am getting right, though still low in pulse and very nervous. Driving into Rochester yesterday I felt more shaken than I have since the accident.

I cannot bear railway travelling yet. A perfect conviction, against the senses, that the carriage is down on one side (and generally that is the left, and not the side on which the carriage in the accident really went over), comes upon me with anything like speed, and is inexpressibly distressing.

To MRS LEHMANN, 29 JUNE 1865†

MS University of Texas, Austin.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Twenty Ninth June 1865

My Dear Mrs. Lehmann

Come (with self and Partner) on either of the days you name, and you will be heartily welcomed by the humble youth who now addresses you, and will then cast himself at your feet.

[†a] On Sunday the Ninth, The Dean of Bristol is coming here with his Deanness.[†2] As he says he doesn't mean to go to church, I offer no objection. [†b] [I mention him with this explanatory clause, as you might enquire what I do in that galley.][†b]

So you see I am disposed of — as I generally am when I don't want to be — and shall come out upon you in full refulgence on these premises.[†a]

I am quite right again, I thank God, and have even got my voice back; — I most unaccountably brought somebody else's out of that terrible scene. The Directors have sent me a Resolution of Thanks for "assistance to the unhappy passengers, So" &c &c and for &c &c &c

Kind regard to Lehmann | Ever Yours[†3]

To J. COCHRANE,[†1] JUNE 1865

Mention in Sotheby's catalogue, Dec 1877; MS 1 p.; dated June 1865.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?MID-END JUNE 1865]

Extract in F, 1872-4, III, xiii, 273*n*. Date: perhaps shortly after the Coroner's verdict of manslaughter on 15 June: see To Mitton, 15 June, fn.

The railway people have offered, in the case of the young man whom I got out of the carriage just alive,[†2] all the expenses and a thousand pounds down. The father declines to accept the offer. It seems unlikely that the young man, whose destination is India, would ever be passed for the Army now by the Medical Board. The question is, how far will that contingency tell, under Lord Campbell's Act?[†3]

July

To CHARLES KENT, 1 JULY 1865*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: Charles Kent Esquire.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND, | Saturday First July 1865

My Dear Kent.

I must leave here at 1/2 past 1 to keep an appointment, but shall be here until then.

Ever Yours

CD.

To MARCUS STONE, 1 JULY 1865*

MS Private.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND, | Saturday First July 1865

My Dear Marcus. I find these at the office this morning (I don't know how long they have been here), and at once return them.

Affecy Yours always.

CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [EARLY JULY 1865]

Extract in F, IX, v, 743. Date: at the opening of July, according to Forster.

Alas! for the two numbers you write of! There is only one in existence.[†4] I have but just begun the other.[†5]

To JOHN FORSTER, [EARLY JULY 1865]

Extract in F, IX, v, 743. Date: the day after last, according to Forster.

Fancy! fancy my having under-written number sixteen by two and a half pages — a thing I have not done since Pickwick![†1]

To WILLIAM DAY, 5 JULY 1865*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Mr. Day | Messrs. Clowes and Son, | Duke Street | Stamford Street.

Gad's Hill Place | Wednesday Fifth July 1865.

Another Chapter[†2] To Follow[†3]

To CHARLES KENT, 5 JULY 1865*

MS Dickens House.

Office of AYR | Wednesday Fifth July 1865

My Dear Kent

I have this moment come in — Shall be here till 1/2 past 1 when I must go out till 5.

Ever affecy.

CD.

To MISS EMILY JOLLY,[†4] 6 JULY 1865

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Sixth July 1865

My Dear Miss Jolly

You fall into a very natural mistake when you suppose that "half a word" from me to Messrs. Chapman and Hall would ensure your being attended to favourably by the Firm. Without entering into an explanation particularly distasteful to me, I beg you to rely on my assurance that you are wholly in error on that point. I have no influence with them bespeaking the most ordinary civility in behalf of another, and I have proved it very lately.[†5]

There can be no objection to your writing to them to propose your manuscript;[†6] neither to your referring to your connexion with these pages.[†7] I think you would do so, with a very fair chance of success.

Believe me always | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Emily Jolly

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 6 JULY 1865

MS Lytton Papers.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Sixth July 1865

My Dear Bulwer Lytton

You will have heard from Kent that he came over here yesterday on my coming up to town, and that I explained to him that I am not personally acquainted with either of the Novello gentlemen,[†1] though I know Clara[†2] very well. Moreover I have reason to believe (from what I have lately heard from a friend at Genoa)[†3] that they are not likely to be in England at the time of the Election.[†4] Further, you may be certain, I think, that they would vote on the other side, if they voted at all.

I am heartily glad that you were not in that terrible train. Mentioning which, I may remark that if I were a constituent of Milner Gibsons,[†5] he should most certainly hear something from me on his nomination-day, not in the least to his advantage.[†6] Every day of my life, I think more and more what an ill-governed country this is, and what a pass our political system has got to. Here has this enormous Railway No-System grown up without guidance,[†7] and now its abuses are so represented in Parliament by Directors, Contractors, Scrip Jobbers, and so forth, that no Minister dare touch it.

I will never believe that there is any real doubt of your being returned, until the Hertfordshire people have so incredibly disgraced themselves as to convince me.[†8]

Ever Yours affecy.

CD.

To PERCY FITZGERALD,[†9] 7 JULY 1865

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Seventh July 1865

My Dear FitzGerald

I shall be delighted to see you at Gad's Hill on Sunday, and I hope you will bring a bag with you and will not think of returning to London at night.

We are a small party just now, for my daughter Mary has been decoyed to Andover for the election week — in the Conservative interest.[†1] Think of my feelings as a Radical Parent! The wrong-headed Member and his wife are the friends with whom she hunts, and she helps to receive (and *de*ceive) the voters, which is very awful.[†2]

But in the week after this next, we shall be in great croquet force. So I shall hope to persuade you to come back to us then, for a few days, and we will try to make you some amends for a dull Sunday. Turn it over in your mind, and try to manage it.

Sincerely Yours Ever
CHARLES DICKENS

Percy FitzGerald Esquire

To PERCY FITZGERALD, 12 JULY 1865*

MS Guildhall Museum, Rochester.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Evening Twelfth July 1865.
(1/2 past 8)

My Dear FitzGerald

I get your letter as I am starting for Gad's Hill — which will explain why I am not good for a Theatre tomorrow night. Otherwise I should have been delighted.

Let me know in due course by what train you purpose coming to us, that I may send to the station for you and your portmanteau.

In haste | Ever Faithfully Yours
CD.

To CHARLES KENT, [12 JULY 1865]

Mention in Dickens Exhibition, New Dudley Gallery catalogue (1909), lent by W. T. Spencer; dated Gad's Hill; addressed Charles Kent. Date: envelope accompanies; PM 12 July 65.

Referring to the railway accident.

To PROFESSOR RICHARD OWEN,[†3] 12 JULY 1865

Text from MDGH, II, 235.

GAD'S HILL | Wednesday, July 12th, 1865

My Dear Owen,

Studying the gorilla last night for the twentieth time, it suddenly came into my head that I had never thanked you for that admirable treatise.[†4] This is to bear witness to my blushes and repentance. If you knew how much interest it has awakened in me, and how often it has set me a-thinking, you would consider me a more thankless beast than any gorilla that ever lived. But happily you do not know, and I am not going to tell you.

Believe me, ever faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To W. H. WILLS, 12 JULY 1865*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND, | Wednesday Twelfth July 1865

My Dear Wills. I have been looking over the enclosed, and I am afraid it won't do. It is wandering and confused about the Marchioness and Pet; and Mrs. Stubbs's confinement is over done. I sat down to it, intending to get it closer together, and to alter Mrs. Molesworthy's dialect. But I found it beyond the contemplated touches.[†1] I think Mrs. Stretton[†2] had better try to remake it. She is going to collect these papers bye and bye in a Volume,[†3] and I am sure this paper would do her volume no good as it stands. I don't object to your sending her this note, if it will save you trouble.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

All right here in your absence. The No. was a little over (40 lines), but I immediately put it right and gave it back to Birtles. Patient[†4] immensely better.

To FREDERICK LEHMANN, 13 JULY 1865

MS University of Texas, Austin.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Thirteenth July, 1865

My Dear Lehmann

I was vexed that you were put off from coming here, by the inscrutability of Mary's arrangements. But we will try the Fates again when you come back from Heligoland, and I hope they may be propitious. I have no present idea of being away from here for longer than a day or two together, until the Autumn is out.

So I still hope to see you; and you must undertake to report your return. Meantime all good go with [you],[†5] and return likewise.

Faithfully Yours always

CD.

Frederick Lehmann Esquire.

To MISS ADAH MENKEN,[†1] 13 JULY 1865†

MS Beinecke Library, Yale University. Address: Miss Menken | 10 Park Place | Regents Park | London | N.W.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Thirteenth July, 1865

Dear Miss Menken

In reply to your letter (which has been forwarded to me) let me express my regret that I cannot make an appointment with you previous to your departure for America, as I cannot by any means get to London before you leave it. But as your absence is to be a short one, I shall hope to do better on your return.

†a I thank you for the verses enclosed in your note. Many such enclosures come to me, but few so pathetically written, and fewer still so modestly sent.†a

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To WILLIAM DAY, 14 JULY 1865

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Friday Fourteenth July, 1865

Dear Mr. Day

Please make the two following corrections in the revise of No. 16†2 which I sent you yesterday for press, in addition to the other corrections marked on the proof.

Page 167, 22 lines from Bottom. For, "as he lay", read "lying".

Same page, 2 lines higher up. For "lay" down, read "laid himself" down.†3

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To W. H. WILLS, 15 JULY 1865*

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Saturday Fifteenth July, 1865

My Dear Wills. I infer from your letter that you think you have sent me some proofs besides those in your list, and Patty.†4 Anyhow, you have not done so.

I thought "Lightning-struck" was in the last No?†5

All right. I have taken some half a column from the end of the Chinese paper,†1 simply because it has nothing to do with the title.†2 A very fair No. indeed.

I quite agree with you about Patty. There is a great deal too much candle for the game. It is spun out, and confused, and greatly too much broken up into short paragraphs. Mrs. Stretton will strengthen her little book[†3] immensely, by being closer. Patty can have the appearance of rambling, if she wishes it for the character, only through skill. She must not actually do it, to the reader's confusion and weariness.

Ever Faithfully

CD.[†4]

To MARCUS STONE, 19 JULY 1865*

MS Morgan Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Wednesday Nineteenth July, 1865

My Dear Marcus.

You will receive No. 17[†5] from the Printer directly, if you have not done so since you wrote.

Please post the sketches[†6] here, as my being at the Office is uncertain.

Affy.

CD.

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 20 JULY 1865

MS Lytton Papers.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Twentieth July 1865

My Dear Bulwer Lytton

I am truly sorry to reply to your kind and welcome note that we cannot come to Knebworth on a visit at this time: Firstly, because I am tied by the leg to my book. Secondly, because my married daughter and her husband are with us. Thirdly, because my two boys are at home for their holidays.

But if you would come out of that murky electioneering atmosphere and come to us, you don't know how delighted we should be. You should have your own way as completely as though you were at home, you should have a cheery room, and you should have a swiss chalet all to yourself to write in. [†a] Smoking regarded as a personal favor to the family.[†a] Georgina is so insupportably vain on account of being a favorite of yours, that you might find her a drawback; but nothing else would turn out in that way, I hope.

Won't you manage it? Do think of it. If for instance you would come back with us, on that Guild Saturday.[†1] I have turned the house upside down and inside out since you were here, and have carved new rooms out of places then non-existent. Pray do think of it, and do manage it. I should be heartily pleased.

I hope you will find the purpose and the plot of my book very plain when you see it as a whole piece. I am looking forward to sending you the proofs complete, about the end of next month. It is all sketched out, and I am working hard at it, giving it all the pains possible to be bestowed on a labour of love. Your critical opinion two months in advance of the public will be invaluable to me. For you know what store I set by it, and how I think over a hint from you.

I notice the latest piece of poisoning ingenuity, in Pritchard's case.[†2] When he had made his medical-student-boarders sick, by poisoning the family food, he then quietly walked out, took an emetic, and made himself sick. This, with a view to ask them, in examination on a possible trial, whether he did not present symptoms at the time, like the rest? — A question actually asked for him, and answered in the affirmative.[†3] From which I get at the fact.

If your constituency don't bring you in, they deserve to lose you, and may the Gods continue to confound them! I shudder at the thought of such public life as political life. Would there not seem to be something horribly rotten in the system of it,[†4] when one stands amazed how any man — not forced into it by position, as you are — can bear to live it?

But the private life here is my point, and again I urge upon you, Do think of it and Do come.

Ever affectionately Yours

CD.

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 20 JULY 1865

MS Professor Michael Slater.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Twentieth July, 1865

My Dear Ouvry

Here is a New Zealand vagabond playing the old nefarious game with our Mutual Friend[†1] (who now has me by the throat, and will hold me until the end of August.) Terrify him, terrify him, terrify him![†2]

And your petitioner will ever pray.

CD.[†3]

To CHARLES FECHTER, 21 JULY 1865*

MS Mlle Françoise Fechter.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Twenty First July, 1865

My Dear Fechter

First, about this accursed business of Beatrice.[†4] I have told Ouvry that, unless he hears from you to the contrary, before 12 on Monday, he may open a negociation for settling the action,[†5] and may begin to try to make terms with the opposite lawyers. I have made this condition about 12 o'clock, because I think it important that you should ascertain from Madame Fechter,[†6] exactly what passed between her and Arnold.[†7] If Arnold would willingly undertake the negociation with Beatrice, then I think you might get easier terms than from her lawyers, uninfluenced by any friend of hers. In that case, you will stop Ouvry, and tell him why.

Next, as to the appearance of Lucy Ashton[†8] at the New Royalty, I think it monstrous. I could not believe my eyes when I saw the announcement.[†9] Whosoever advised it, damaged you immensely, and damaged the young lady cruelly. I believe it to be the greatest and completest mistake that could be made in such a case. A mistake in judgment, a mistake in justice, an irreparable stroke of blundering. But mon cher how could you engage her, without stipulating that she should appear on no stage before yours?

What an unfortunate fellow you are to have had that accident,[†1] and what a fortunate fellow to have escaped it without a broken limb! I cannot make up my mind whether I ought to congratulate you, or sympathize with you. But you must indeed have passed a wretched congé, and I most earnestly hope that you will soon come here and forget it. We are all looking forward to having you here again. But you will miss the poor dogs.[†2] Turk has been killed upon the Railway; and Linda is almost beyond hope, from canker in the ear. The sufferings of the poor creature are very distressing to see.

I have been constantly working in the upper room of the chalet, and never worked better any where. It is a most delightful summer atelier. I am almost as much attached to it, as I am to you!!!

We all unite in kindest regards to Madame Fechter, and to Marie,[†3] and our particular friend Paul.[†4] I hope the air of this house will blow away the accident, the Beatrice, the Lucy Ashton, and all the other bedevilments, ten thousand miles off, and set you up again.

Ever my Dear Fechter | Heartily Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Minerva's[†5] duty. There was a cricket match in the field the other day, and she seemed to think it was a performance in the Cirque, in which she was expected to do something. She looked very hard at the ball.

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 21 JULY 1865*

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT

Friday Twenty First July 1865.

My Dear Ouvry.

I had a letter from Fechter yesterday evening, in which he begs me to explain to you that he has been laid up for eight days from the consequences of an accident (he was thrown out of a carriage through a wheel's coming off) and even now cannot write more than one letter. This is the cause of his not having answered yours. He also says that he wishes altogether to divest and rid himself of the Beatrice business, and to pay whatever money must be paid to settle it. He adds that if we cannot wait until his return, will I accept carte blanche to act in the matter as I would for myself, "and conclude this vexatious affair at a blow". But he intends to return tomorrow (Saturday).

As I apprehend that no harm can be done by our waiting until Monday — supposing him to return tomorrow — I have written him a note that he may find on arriving at home, in which I have said that you will on Monday (unless you hear from him before 12) open the negociation with the opposite solicitors for getting out of the action on such terms as can be made. I suppose you will begin by offering a sum of money, considerably short of the expected damages? Or by asking them what they will take? You know best about that. My powers from Fechter are unlimited.

He bitterly complains that your partner "l'associé de M. Ouvry" has advised the lady engaged for next season, to play this last week at the New Royalty Theatre.[†1] It was a desperate mistake, whosoever so advised her. Damaging in the highest degree to the young lady herself,[†2] and, I think, positively cutting Fechter's season from under him.[†3] I stood aghast when I saw the announcement in the papers. As a matter of judgment, and as a matter of justice, the mistake seems to me equally irreparable.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To W. H. WILLS, 24 JULY 1865*

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Monday Twenty Fourth July, 1865

My Dear Wills

The letters enclosed, A and B.

A from Edmonds at Willis and Sotheran's[†4] who seems to have an exalted idea of your Power; and B for a "Readings" reply according to form in such case made and provided.[†5]

Disturbed in mind by Our Mutual, and in body by myriads of minute flies,

Nervously Yours
CD.

To MRS PROCTER, 26 JULY 1865

Text from N, III, 432-33.

Gad's Hill Place | Wednesday Twenty Sixth July 1865

My Dear Mrs. Procter,

As I decided on finishing my book (in August, please God) before doing the little Memoir,[†1] Mr Daldy's[†2] question is a difficult one to answer moreover, I do not know with any moderate approach to certainty the size of the page. Lastly, the question is (between ourselves) a quackish question, smelling disagreeably of Touting over yonder in a Touting Land.[†3] As there is little to tell and as the little would be spoiled by spinning out, I should say that six or eight pages would hold all.[†4] The fewer the bookseller expects the better — he will cheat the less beforehand. Do you and Procter be sure that I will make them as many as I can and do them as well as I can — I am as right as a man can be who is working his head off — beginning with the hair.

Ever affectionately yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To MRS ALMON,[†5] 29 JULY 1865

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, Feb 1972; MS 1 p. (3rd person); dated Gad's Hill Place, Higham by Rochester, Kent, Saturday, 29 July 65

Regretting that he has no interest whatever in reference to the Alms Houses at Northfleet.[†6]

To GEORGE CHILDS,[†7] 31 JULY 1865

Text from N, III, 433.

GAD'S HILL PLACE | Monday, Thirty-First July 1865

Dear Sir,

In reply to your letter forwarded to me by Mr. Trubner, I beg to say that I shall be happy to consider any proposal you may make me at your convenience, for purchasing the exclusive right of having early proof sheets in America of the next story I may write, with a view to simultaneous publication in England by me and in the United States by you.

As I am but now finishing Our Mutual Friend it is not likely that I shall fall to work upon another novel yet awhile. Perhaps at your leisure you will let me know.

Firstly, your offer in the case of my next book being the length of Great Expectations and published weekly here.

Secondly, your offer in the case of my next book being the length of Our Mutual Friend and published monthly here.[†1]

You may rely on my carefully and justly giving my attention to any project you may explain to me, and of course, I shall receive it in confidence.

Dear Sir, | Faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To GEORGE RUSSELL, 31 JULY 1865*

MS Marjorie, Lady Russell. Address: George Russell Esquire | Swallowfield | Reading.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thirty First July, 1865

My Dear George Russell

I have read all the speeches; have attended the triumph and partaken the gale,[†2] from nomination to declaration; and hereby send hearty congratulation.[†3]

I am made uncomfortable by what the Dean[†4] has told me concerning this foolish Mr. Kitcat.[†5] There seems to be no doubt that the Dean has right on his side, and that the Kitcat conduct forces him to assert it. This he is doing. The inevitable result would appear to be that Mr. Kitcat must exercise the functions he is bound to discharge, or must go, or be suspended. Now, is not this, with all the tittle tattle and botheration inseparable from it, a miserable state of things, and is there no way of preventing the impending proceedings?[†6]

The Dean was here some three weeks or a month ago, and was expounding to me what is perfectly true, — that he has no choice in the matter, that coercion is forced upon him, and that he must go on. I looked into the authorities, and could see nothing on the Kitcat side. I made up my mind that after the election was over, I would write to you and tell you what I knew. It really seems to me a lamentable mistake which the Clergyman does not understand.

Faithfully Yours Ever
CHARLES DICKENS

(Working like a Dragon)

To NICHOLAS TRÜBNER,[†1] 31 JULY 1865*

MS Beinecke Library, Yale University.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Thirty First July 1865

Dear Sir

The enclosed letter to Mr. Childs will explain itself to you if you will have the goodness to read it before forwarding the same. I am obliged to you for your letter, and am

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

N. Trubner Esquire.

To [?J. T. FIELDS],[†2] [?SUMMER 1865]

Extract in F, VIII, iii, 654-5; addressee "an American Friend", according to Forster. Date: perhaps the first summer since the chalet was installed in early 1865.

I have put five mirrors in the châlet where I write, and they reflect and refract, in all kinds of ways, the leaves that are quivering at the windows, and the great fields of waving corn, and the sail-dotted river. My room is up among the branches of the trees; and the birds and the butterflies fly in and out, and the green branches shoot in at the open windows, and the lights and shadows of the clouds come and go with the rest of the company. The scent of the flowers, and indeed of everything that is growing for miles and miles, is most delicious.

August

To CHARLES KENT, 2 AUGUST 1865*

MS Fales Library, New York University. Address: Private | Charles Kent Esquire | "Sun" Office | Strand | London | W.C.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Second August, 1865

My Dear Kent

I should have sent you round a note yesterday, but for being very closely occupied at the office until Train-time.

Your note delighted me, because it dwelt upon the places in the No.[†3] that I dwell on. Not that that is anything new in your case, but it is always new to me in the pleasure I derive from it. Which is truly inexpressible.

The account of the Guild-Day[†1] (really a great success, I thought) was exactly what its best friends could have desired.[†2] — You didn't mention by the bye that the sherry presented strong internal evidence of having come from the late Dr. Pritchard's cellar.[†3]

Umbrella-exchange faithfully effected.

Ever Your affectionate

CD.

To MESSRS COUTTS & CO.,[†4] 3 AUGUST 1865

Extract in Union Art Gallery catalogue No. 55; MS 1p.; dated 3 Aug 65; addressed Messrs Coutts & Co.

Please remit on my account to your correspondent at Boulogne Sur Mer, France the sum of 1,200 francs (one thousand and two hundred francs)[†5] payable to the order of M. Bourgeois[†6] Laurisand[†7] of that town, CHARLES DICKENS

To WILLIAM WHALE,[†8] 3 AUGUST 1865

Extract in American Art Association catalogue, Mar 1924; MS 1p.; dated Office of AYR, 3 Aug 65; addressed William Whale.

It is very painful to me to discharge the duty of telling you — on the authority of your letter and its accompanying extracts, that I believe you have mistaken your vocation. But it is kinder to tell you what appears to me to be a self evident truth, than to deceive you. I do so in a spirit that would soften this communication greatly, if it could be conveyed to you as it proceeds from me.[†9]

To JOHN FORSTER, [15 AUGUST 1865]

Extract in F, XI, iii, 822. Date: 15 August 65, according to Forster.

You read that life of Clare?[†1] Did you ever see such preposterous exaggeration of small claims? And isn't it expressive, the perpetual prating of him in the book as the Poet?[†2] So another Incompetent used to write to the Literary Fund when I was on the committee: "This leaves the Poet at his divine mission in a corner of the single room. The Poet's father is wiping his spectacles. The Poet's mother is weaving." — Yah!

To SIR GEORGE GREY,[†3] 16 AUGUST 1865*

MS Mr David J. Holmes.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Sixteenth August 1865

Sir

As I am assured that it will be no intrusion on you, if I certify my knowledge of the merits and qualifications of Mr. Dallas[†4] who aspires to fill the chair left vacant by the death of Professor Aytoun,[†5] I beg leave to do so.

I believe Mr. Dallas to be highly qualified in all respects, for the Professorship he seeks to obtain; and I doubt if there be many men living who possess at once the same extensive knowledge of Literature and Philosophy and the same power of imparting it in a brilliant and striking manner. I found this opinion, not merely on my acquaintance with Mr. Dallas's critical writings in the Times newspaper,[†6] but also on the perusal of some portions of a work of his, which my own publishers are now passing through the press,[†7] and which is in itself exhaustive of the chief topics that such a Professor's lectures must comprise. I am thoroughly convinced that Mr. Dallas's scholarship, combined with his habit of presenting his thoughts to an audience in a winning and terse form, render him a candidate very remarkably and unusually qualified to fill the responsible post in question.

I have the honor to be | Sir | Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS[†8]

The Right Hon: | Sir George Grey MD.

To THE EARL RUSSELL,[†1] 16 AUGUST 1865

Text from MDGH, II, 235.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday, Aug. 16th, 1865

My Dear Lord Russell,

Mr. Dallas, who is a candidate for the Scotch professional chair left vacant by Aytoun's death, has asked me if I would object to introduce to you the first volume of a book he has in the press with my publishers, on "The Gay Science of Art and Criticism." I have replied I would not object, as I have read as many of the sheets as I could get, with extreme pleasure, and as I know you will find it a very winning and brilliant piece of writing. Therefore he will send the proofs of the volume to you as soon as he can get them from the printer (at about the end of this week I take it), and if you read them you will not be hard upon me for bearing the responsibility of his doing so, I feel assured.

I suppose Mr. Dallas to have some impression that his pleasing you with his book might advance his Scottish suit. But all I know is, that he is a gentleman of great attainments and erudition, much distinguished as the writer of the best critical literary pieces in The Times, and thoroughly versed in the subjects which Professor Aytoun represented officially.

I beg to send my regard to Lady Russell[†2] and all the house, and am ever, my dear Lord Russell,
Your faithful and obliged
[CHARLES DICKENS][†3]

P. S. I am happy to report that my sailor-boy's[†4] captain, relinquishing his ship[†5] on sick leave, departs from the mere form of certificate given to all the rest, and adds that his obedience to orders is remarkable, and that he is a highly intelligent and promising young officer.

To MADAME PAULINE VIARDOT,[†6] 16 AUGUST 1865

MS M and Mme Le Cesne.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Sixteenth August, 1865

My Dear Madame Viardot

I take the opportunity of Chorley's coming near you, to thank you for your kind and affectionate letter received after my escape from that terrible accident. It gave me the greatest pleasure to be so remembered by one whom I so heartily admire, and whose genius I so fervently recognize.

The scene was so affecting when I helped in getting out the wounded and dead, that for a little while afterwards, I felt shaken by the remembrance of it. But I had no personal injury whatever. My watch (which is curious) was more sensitive, physically, than I, for it was some few minutes "slow" for some few weeks afterwards. Except that I cannot yet travel on a Railway at great speed, without having a disagreeable impression — against all reason — that the carriage is turning over on one side, I have not the least inconvenience left.

Will you tell Chorley how I can best send you a book next October. It will be "Our Mutual Friend" which I am now finishing with great pains, and which I hope will interest you half as much as it interests me!

My kindest regard to your good husband,[†1] and to the young ladies,[†2] whether they remember me or no. I have not been to the Opera these four years, missing you. When you were in the Prophète,[†3] I went perpetually. And if you were to do Orphée,[†4] in London, I believe I should go every night.

Believe me always | Affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To W. H. WILLS, 16 AUGUST 1865*

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Wednesday Sixteenth August, 1865

My Dear Wills

I am going away from here tomorrow, until Sunday evening. Will you advise Morley, or Birtles, or both, accordingly, in case there is any thing to send me? I am very doubtful of the "Madeira" you tell me of; being greatly indisposed to traverse such a Dismal Swamp as that Fortnightly Bosh.[†5]

You are in a wonderful place, among a wonderful people indubitably descended from the Kilmarnock weaver.[†6] I am deep in my book, and proportionately neuralgic. Patient much better, I am thankful to say, but not yet well. Do you know I have a strong impression that that murderous piece of flatulency, Mister Southey,[†7] is our correspondent Mr. White?[†8]

— XI - 84 —

Sell your shares in the Atlantic cable.[†1]

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To E. S. DALLAS, 17 AUGUST 1865*

MS Mr David J. Holmes.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Seventeenth[†2] August 1865

My Dear Dallas

I write without waste of words, as I have but half an hour before going away.

The parcel arrived safely yesterday evening, and I read half the proofs last night.[†3] I think the subject, so far, admirably treated. The writing is charming, and the felicity of illustrations veery remarkable. You are sure to captivate your readers and carry them along, whether they agree with you or no.

The best way of approaching Lord Russell in such a matter, is the way I propose:— when you have read the enclosed letter to him, merely post it. Just close it, and post it. When your first volume follows on Saturday, add a note to it to the effect that I said I would introduce your book to him, and that you do not doubt I have done so.

Letter to Sir George Grey, also enclosed. If you don't like it, have another, and tell me where I shall amend.

Observe that I purpose being back here to dinner on Sunday. I am very hard at work finishing my book, and am celebrating the occasion with a little festival of Neuralgia in the face.

Faithfully Yours alys
CHARLES DICKENS

To WILLIAM DAY, 22 AUGUST 1865

MS Benoliel Collection.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Twenty Seventh August, 1865

Dear Mr. Day

Please send Mr. Stone a proof of No. 17[†4] directly. You shall have some MS of the double No. 19 & 20[†5] from me tomorrow. It will be a great convenience to me if you can follow me closely with proofs through this concluding No.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To GEORGE RUSSELL, 22 AUGUST 1865*

MS Marjorie, Lady Russell. Address: George Russell Esquire | Swallowfield | Reading.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Twenty Second August, 1865

My Dear George Russell

Without your kind and valuable intervention, the thing could not possibly have been done.[†1] I am heartily glad on all accounts.

I am in the agonies of finishing my book. With what pains and patience no man knows, except the undersigned. Hence the brevity of this note.

With kind regard to Sir Charles

Ever | My Dear George Russell | Heartily Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To SAMUEL LOVER,[†2] 23 AUGUST 1865

MS W. A. Foyle.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Twenty Third August 1865

My Dear Lover

I have been away, and am but now in receipt of your letter.

I am of your mind in the matter to which the enclosed verses refer, and I like the verses very much. But I fear they would do harm rather than good, by exasperating an animosity that Heaven knows needs no aggravation.[†3]

Faithfully Yours always
CD.

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 23 AUGUST 1865*

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Wednesday Twenty Third August 1865

My Dear Ouvry.

I am working so closely, that I don't think it worth while to lose a day in this month for the New Zealand pirate.[†4] Early in next month I will make an appointment to go through the needful performances.[†5]

Ever Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To W. H. WILLS, 25 AUGUST 1865*

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Friday Twenty Fifth August, 1865

My Dear Wills

I send you enclosed, a few A.Y.R. letters. A story referred to in one of them, I will send you up by hand. I am hard at it, and don't want to move until I have done my book.

Neuralgia flying about. Patient[†1] much the same.

I doubt the expediency of inserting Madeira. But I will look it over again. I don't see what we have to do with reviewing the Fortnightly Review in such a case.[†2]

Ever Faithfully
CD.

Mr. Cook[†3] who wrote those letters about my being his "Murder"er,[†4] is the esteemed Mr. Southey — otherwise Forward,[†5] who murdered his wife and children lately.[†6]

To W. H. WILLS, 27 AUGUST 1865†

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Night Twenty Seventh August | 1865

My Dear Wills

No news, — except that I am working like a Dragon, and that I hope something near a week may bring me through it. In the course of this next week, I will appoint a day (probably Monday 4th. September, or Tuesday 5th.) for our Meeting at the office, before I decamp for about a fortnight. But observe. If you should want to go away before either of those days, then try to come down here on a little visit, and we will Do, after my day's work, what we may have to do.

I am already buckling myself up for A.Y.R.

Enclosed is the MS story that I did not send the other day.

Ever

CD.

Mary Boyles[†7] Madeira[†8] may go,[†9] it must[†10] be throughout, either "I" or "We".[†11]

And the Fortnightly needn't be called "one of our leading Reviews" but "one of the Reviews".[†1]

[†a]The Sheriff[†2] and his wife[†3] are sending letters addressed (without leave of course) to that John Gordon[†4] who went to China, and who is evidently on the way back. I am resolved to have no more of that sponging.[†5] Will you put Holsworth up to the fact, and to being cool when the young man appears, and also to not allowing him to use the Office anyhow, "unless he (Holsworth) has instructions to that effect from you or me" — [†a]

To MARCUS STONE, 29 AUGUST 1865†

MS Morgan Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Tuesday Twenty Ninth August 1865

My Dear Marcus.

By this same post I return you the sketches for No. 18, with the Lettering attached.[†6]

[†b]I think the Frontispiece to the Second Volume should be the Dustyard with the three mounds, and Mr. Boffin digging up the Dutch Bottle, and Venus restraining Wegg's ardor to get at him.[†7] Or Mr. Boffin might be coming down with the bottle, and Venus might be dragging Wegg out of the way, as described.[†b]

I hope to send you the complete proofs of Nos. 19 and 20,[†8] next week. There will be 3 other illustrations to choose from them, you know.[†9]

Affecy.

CD.

To EDWARD J. WOOD,[†10] 29 AUGUST 1865*

MS Lesley College, Mass.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Twenty Ninth August 1865

Dear Sir

I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your very agreeable and welcome note, here, this morning. Allow me to thank you for it and for your book.[†11] The latter has not yet come to hand (being probably at my office in town), but it refers to an interesting locality with which I am pretty well acquainted, and it could not find a reader better prepared to be pleased with it.

I have an impression that Mr. Wegg will sustain a disappointment that may make him but a snarling reader in his leisure hours.[†1] Mr. Venus's frame of mind, however, I think will be more propitious and appreciative.[†2] I am proud of your remembrance of both.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Edward J. Wood Esquire

September

To WILLIAM DAY, 2 SEPTEMBER 1865*

MS Berg Collection.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Second September 1865

Dear Mr. Day.

I send you the whole conclusion of the text of Our Mutual Friend — the Preface[†3] — Contents of 2nd. Volume &c. Please to set up the Preface in such leaded type as I enclose a page of.

Not having all the Proofs I don't know exactly where I may be. But I apprehend you will want a list of my books to complete the 4th. sheet,[†4] containing the Preface &c. Proofs of the double No. to Mr. Stone, when ready.

With this I also send you No. 18[†5] for press.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MARCUS STONE, 2 SEPTEMBER 1865*

MS Morgan Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT

Saturday Night, Second September 1865

My Dear Marcus.

I have done the book, and I send you all the proofs of the concluding double No that I yet have. The Printer will send you the rest. They are not corrected, and no doubt you will find them very often consequently incoherent. But you will be able to make out what they mean.

I am now going away, perhaps for the whole month.[†6] If you get to work upon the final Illustrations soon, don't wait for me to see the sketches, but go on. As soon as you have decided on your subjects, let me know what they are, and I will send you the Lettering. Write here — as the shortest plan — and your letter will be forwarded to me.

Ever affecy.

CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?EARLY SEPTEMBER 1865]

Extract in F, VIII, vii, 700*n*. Date: in Autumn 1865, according to Forster; perhaps September, before going away.

I have got a boot on to-day, — made on an Otranto scale,[†1] but really not very discernible from its ordinary sized companion.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, [?EARLY SEPTEMBER] 1865

Facsimile[aa] and extract (re-translated into English) in Libraire de l'Echiquier catalogue (1989); facsimile[bb] of ending, and date, given in Maison Charavay catalogue, May 1988. MS 1 1/2 pp.; dated Rochester, 1865. Date: perhaps beginning of Sep, before going to France. Letter cut off after signature, presumably removing addressee's name.

He regrets that he cannot see him since he is going immediately to Switzerland,[†2] having need of change and rest. He thanks him for his two interesting letters and for his book. ... I am not the author of the article on your system[†3] which I consult abundantly. It was written by an English gentleman resident in France.[†3]

[a]I beg you on your return to Paris to embrace my dear Dumas,[†4] and to assure him of the undiminished admiration and regard of his fellow-labourer.[a]

[b]Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS[b]

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 9 SEPTEMBER 1865

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, June 1979; MS 1p.; dated Boulogne 9 Sep 65; addressed Frederic Ouvry.

Enclosing the quarterly cheque[†5] which he has remembered while passing through this place on a short ramble and informing him that he purposes being at the office on the night of Sunday the 17th.

To JOHN THOMPSON, [9 SEPTEMBER 1865]

Mention in next.

To W. H. WILLS, 9 SEPTEMBER 1865*

MS Huntington Library.

B.S.M.[†6] | Saturday Ninth September 1865

My Dear Wills.

As soon as I have made my arrangements, I write to you again; in order that you may know, well in advance, what they are.

I purpose being at the office about Midnight, on Sunday the 17th. of this month. Both on Monday the 18th. and Tuesday the 19th. I must be away in the day, but can dine with you at the office, on either day, at the usual hour.

As I am going on to Paris from here for a single night to make a little purchase for myself, I may want more money than I have. Will you send me two £10 notes for the enclosed cheque.

The enclosed note for John.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To MARCUS STONE, 13 SEPTEMBER 1865†

MS Morgan Library.

Hôtel Du Helder, Paris
Wednesday Thirteenth September 1865

My Dear Marcus.

[†a]I send you this note as soon as I see my way home.[†a]

I leave here tomorrow, and propose going to the office by Tidal Train next Saturday evening. Through the whole of next week, on and off, I shall be at the office; when not there, at Gad's; but much oftener at the office. The sooner I can know about the subjects you take for illustration, the better, as I can then fill the list of illustrations to the Second Volume, for the printer, and enable him to make up his last Sheet. Necessarily that list is now left blank, as I cannot give him the titles of the subjects, not knowing them myself.

It has been fearfully hot on this side, but is something cooler.

Ever affecy. Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

P. S. On glancing over this note, I find it very like the King's love-letter in Ruy Blas.[†1] "Madam. There is a high wind. I have shot six wolves."[†2]

To EDMUND YATES, 13 SEPTEMBER 1865

MS Robert H. Taylor Collection, Princeton University.

Hotel du Helder, Paris
Wednesday Thirteenth September 1865

My Dear Edmund

This new story of yours,[†3] altogether beats me. I cannot see any good way through it. There is, somehow, a want of wholesome air in it; and I can find no Archimedes station on which to plant a lever.[†4] I don't see what the people are at, and I don't like the people. Mitford starts so wrong that you can't get him right.

And he gets so right, that you can't get him wrong again.[†1] The Colonel has so often caught those ponies[†2] that he really ought to take to something else by this time; and in coming to that mysterious young woman,[†3] you come too close upon Wilkie.[†4] The game of the Garrick[†5] is not worth the candle, — to the public, or any one else but the Garrick — and I see no open country beyond it all, in which to get at any brisk skirmishing that would wind it up with a Field Day.[†6] I have been completely baffled. At first, I thought I must be out of sorts — and tried again. But I was worse the second time. — And remain still worse at this present writing.

I leave here tomorrow, and purpose being at the Office on Saturday night. All next week, I shall be there, off and on; — "off", meaning Gad's Hill, the office will be my best address. The heat has been excessive on this side of the Channel, and I got a slight sun-stroke last Thursday, and was obliged to be doctored and put to bed for a day. But thank God I am all right again. The man who sells the Tisane[†7] on the Boulevards,[†8] can't keep the flies out of his glasses, and, as he wears them on his red velvet bands, the flies work themselves into the ends of the tumblers, trying to get through and tickle the man. If fly-life were long enough, I think they would at last. Three paving-blouses came to work at the corner of this street last Monday — pulled up a bit of the road — sat down to look at it — and fell asleep. On Tuesday, one of the Blouses spat on his hands, and seemed to be going to begin, but didn't. The other two have shewn no sign of life whatever. This morning the industrious one ate a loaf. You may rely upon this, as the latest news from the French Capital.

Faithfully Ever

CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?MID-SEPTEMBER 1865]

Extracts in F, VIII, vii, 700*n*. Date: first extract during Autumn 1865, after a "few days holiday", probably during his stay at Boulogne, where he was on 9 Sep (To Wills, that day); second extract end of that letter, according to Forster.

I began to feel my foot stronger the moment I breathed the sea air. Still, during the ten days I have been away, I have never been able to wear a boot after four or five in the afternoon, but have passed all the evening with the foot up and nothing on it. I am burnt brown, and have walked by the sea perpetually, yet I feel certain that if I wore a boot this evening I should be taken with those torments again before the night was out.

As a relief to my late dismal letters, I send you the newest American story. Backwoods Doctor is called in to the little boy of a woman-settler. Stares at the child some time through a pair of spectacles. Ultimately takes them off, and says to the mother: "Wa'al marm, this is small pox. 'Tis marm, small pox. But I am not posted up in Pustuls, and I do not know as I could bring him along slick through it. But I'll tell you wa'at I can do, marm:— I can send him a draught as will certainly put him into a most etarnal Fit, and I am almighty smart at Fits, and we might git round Old Grisly that way."

To THE REV. WILLIAM HARNESS, [?EARLY-MID SEPTEMBER 1865]

Mention in To Harness, 19 Dec 65. Date: probably written during his fortnight's stay in France in early-mid Sep (see To Wills, 27 Aug).

To ALFRED W. BENNETT,[†1] 18 SEPTEMBER 1865*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Eighteenth September 1865

Sir

In reply to your letter, I beg to say that I do not desire to interpose any obstacle in the way of any publication of any photograph of myself by Mr. Mason,[†2] that may be agreeable to that gentleman. With reference to any "biographical notice" of myself that may accompany it, allow me to add that whosoever undertakes such a performance must do so on his own responsibility, and not on mine.

Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

Alfred W Bennett Esquire

To THE REV. J. M. BRACKENBURY,[†3] 18 SEPTEMBER 1865*

MS Dickens House.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Monday Eighteenth September 1865

My Dear Sir

Before returning to school just now, Harry spoke to me and told me that he did not wish to enter the Indian Civil Service. I told him in reply that many of us have many duties to discharge in life which we do not wish to undertake, and that we must do the best we can to earn our respective livings and make our way. I also clearly pointed out to him that I bear as heavy a train as can well be attached to any one working man, and that I could by no means afford to send a son to College who went there for any other purpose than to work hard, and to gain distinction. So we came to this point:— that I would write to you, and beg you, between this and Christmas, to tell me whether you believe that he really will be worth sending to Cambridge, and really has the qualities and habits essential to marked success there. And that if you should be of this opinion, he should study accordingly.[†1] And that if you should not be of this opinion, he should decidedly go up for the Indian Civil Service Examination.

Will you kindly, at your leisure and convenience, give me the result of your observation of him, before the next holiday time? I fear his name is too notorious to help him, unless he can very strongly help himself; — I mean that in competing in a great race, he would have to justify some higher expectation than would attach to the son of a private gentleman, or would virtually fail, and had far better be out of the lists.

Believe me always My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Rev. W. Brackenbury

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 18 SEPTEMBER 1865

Summary in Sotheby's catalogue, June 1979; MS 1 p.; dated Office of AYR;[†2] addressed Frederic Ouvry.

Sending another letter concerning his son,[†3] for such notice as he thinks right, and informing him, if he deems it advisable to mention the fact, that he has sanctioned his having credit at a certain tailor who makes for his younger boys.[†4]

To BENJAMIN WEBSTER, 19 SEPTEMBER 1865*

MS Walter T. Spencer.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Nineteenth September 1865

My Dear Webster

I have come back from France, and want to see Mr Jeaffreson.[†5]

If you will leave me a box for tomorrow (Wednesday)[†6] I will bring Mr and Mrs Forster with me.

Faithfully Yours Ever
CHARLES DICKENS

To MESSRS FARRER, OUVRY & FARRER, 20 SEPTEMBER 1865*

MS Private.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Twentieth September 1865

My Dear Sirs

The Messrs. Chapman will be here on Friday morning at eleven precisely, to make the Declaration[†1] at Bow Street with me, if you will kindly send some one from your office to attend us.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Farrer Ouvry and Farrer.

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 20 SEPTEMBER 1865

MS Lytton Papers.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Twentieth September 1865

My Dear Bulwer Lytton

I think Mr. Folkestone Williams[†2] a very good candidate indeed.[†3] We will presently call a Meeting of the Guild, and propose him as your suggestion. I do not know, neither does Wills know, any thing of his social ways and habits. Neither of us has ever seen him. Will you tell me what you personally know of him?[†4] It is as well that I should be able to report some sort of knowledge of him in the flesh. Not that there is the least likelihood of any difference of opinion, but merely to make the case more tangibly interesting.

Ever affectionately
CD.

I shall be here all the week; then, at Gad's Hill.

To THOMAS BEARD, 21 SEPTEMBER 1865

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Place | Maida Hill | W.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Twenty First September 1865

My Dear Beard

I send you enclosed, another note under my sign-manual,[†5] which you can send to your friend, in proof of your having discharged your trust. There is nothing whatever in the papers, that could not be done by any man with half an eye — and that, none of the best.

I am delighted to hear of your being so well up there in the cherubic regions.[†1] But I wish you would come and try Gad's Hill again, and see what a changed place it is. Can't you manage it from a Saturday night to a Monday morning? I am not going down myself until this next Saturday and would wait for you on the slightest encouragement.

I have been working my head off, but finished my book on the Second of this month.

Ever My Dear Beard | Heartily and affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

To MARCUS STONE, 22 SEPTEMBER 1865*

MS Morgan Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Twenty Second September 1865

My Dear Marcus. These will be the Letterings of the last illustrations:

The Dutch Bottle
Lightwood at last.
Mrs.[†2] Boffin does the honors[†2] of the Nursery-Door.
Not to be shaken off[†3]

Ever affecy.
CD.

To PERCY FITZGERALD, 23 SEPTEMBER 1865†

MS Beinecke Library, Yale University.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Saturday Twenty Third September [1865][†4]

My Dear FitzGerald

I cannot thank you too much for Sultan.[†5] He is a noble fellow, has fallen into the ways of the family with a grace and dignity that denote the gentleman, and came down to the Railway a day or two since to welcome me home (it was our first meeting) with a profound absence of interest in my individual opinion of him which captivated me completely. I am going home to day to take him about the country, and improve his acquaintance. You will find a perfect understanding between us, I hope, when you next come to Gad's Hill. (He has only swallowed Bouncer[†1] once, and temporarily.)

Your hint that you were getting on with your story[†2] and liked it, was more than golden intelligence to me in foreign parts. The intensity of the heat, both in Paris and in the Provinces, was such that I found nothing else so refreshing in the course of my rambles.

[†a]I hope you have not forgotten t[he][†3] Mimmery[†4] at South Mims,[†5] and that when you next find yourself as near it as London, you will come to Gad's Hill instead.[†a]

With many more thanks for the Dog than any sheet of paper could hold.

Believe me ever | Very faithfully Yours

[CHARLES DICKENS][†6]

To CHARLES KENT, 24 SEPTEMBER 1865*

MS New York Public Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Twenty Fourth September 1865

My Dear Kent.

Agreeably to solemn compact between us, I send you for your private perusal, the remainder of Our Mutual Friend. Observe that these are not corrected sheets (those are with the printer); but don't trouble yourself to mark them, because the revises have gone back to Clowes's office.

When will you come here? Sunday? Sunday week? Say when. I wrote myself neuralgic — fled to France when I had done — and have come back un-neuralgic.

Affecy. Yours Ever

CD.

To MRS PROCTER, 26 SEPTEMBER 1865

Text from MDGH, II, 238.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Sept. 26th, 1865

My Dear Mrs. Procter,

I have written the little introduction,[†7] and have sent it to my printer, in order that you may read it without trouble. But if you would like to keep the few pages of MS., of course they are yours.

It is brief, and I have aimed at perfect simplicity, and an avoidance of all that your beloved Adelaide would have wished avoided. Do not expect too much from it. If there should be anything wrong in fact, or anything that you would like changed for any reason, of course you will tell me so, and of course you will not deem it possible that you can trouble me by making any such request most freely.

You will probably receive the proof either on Friday or Saturday. Don't write to me until you have read it. In the meantime I send you back the two books, with the two letters in the bound one.

With love to Procter, | Ever your affectionate Friend

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To SIR JOHN BOWRING, 27 SEPTEMBER 1865

Extract in Maggs Bros catalogue, No. 451 (1924); MS 1p.; dated Office of AYR, 27 Sep 65; addressed Sir John Bowring.

I shall be extremely glad to have the interesting article you suggest.[†1]

To E. S. DALLAS, 28 SEPTEMBER 1865*

Text from transcript, Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Twenty Eighth September 1865.

My Dear Dallas

Pray tell me when you have leisure, whether the election to that chair of Aytoun's[†2] has taken place, or is taking place, and whether you have any chance.[†3] I suspect a little Scotch jobbery in that direction.

I took the remaining sheets[†4] abroad with me when I had done my book, and thoroughly enjoyed them. The theme is delightfully pursued and maintained. I allow a great deal more than you do, to attention. It is highly satisfactory to me to find (what I didn't know) that Malebranche[†5] sets store by it,[†6] for I constantly hold forth on that point here, and indeed had a notion that it was a kind of discovery of my own!

Faithfully yours always

CD.

E. S. Dallas Esquire.

To [?GEORGE HOLSWORTH], 29 SEPTEMBER 1865

MS Beinecke Library, Yale University.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND, | Friday Twenty Ninth September 1865

The Nos. of Our Mutual Friend No. 18 have not arrived at Gad's Hill. Please send them by Bearer

CHARLES DICKENS.

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 29 SEPTEMBER 1865

MS Lytton Papers.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Twenty Ninth September 1865

My Dear Bulwer Lytton

I write in great haste. We have had a Meeting of the Guild to day, and have made the following Minute in the book.

"Two letters from Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton having been read recommending Mr. Folkestone Williams as a Candidate for the occupation of one of the Guild houses,[†1] minute made that the Honorary Secretary be requested to beg Mr. Williams to communicate with him personally on the subject."

In pursuance of which, I enclose a letter from Wills to Mr. Williams. Will you kindly forward it, as we have not his address?

Ever affectionately

CD.

October

To WILLIAM JOHNSON,[†2] 1 OCTOBER 1865*

Text from transcript, Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday First October, 1865.

As I must be in town tomorrow morning, Johnson, and shall be due at the office by half past 10, don't post any letters to me.

CD.

To THE REV. JAMES BARMBY,[†3] 6 OCTOBER 1865

Facsimile (pro forma letter) Christian Science Monitor Magazine, 29 July 1950, p. 17.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND, | Oct. 6, 1865

Mr Charles Dickens begs to thank the writer of the paper entitled

Petticoat Government[†1]

for having done him the favor to offer it as a contribution to these pages. He much regrets, however, that it is not suited to the requirements of All the Year Round.

The Manuscript will be returned under cover, if applied for as above.

To WILLIAM DAY, 6 OCTOBER 1865

MS Berg Collection.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND, | Friday Sixth October 1865

Dear Mr. Day.

Will you be so good as to send me a pull of the concluding double No. of Our Mutual Friend.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 6 OCTOBER 1865

MS Lytton Papers.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Sixth October 1865

My Dear Bulwer Lytton

We find there is a story against Mr. Folkestone Williams, that, having papers of the late Duke of Buckingham's[†2] entrusted to him, he with-held some, and made terms for their restoration.[†3] Also, that on this ground he lost his post as reader for a publishing house.[†4]

We have worded a minute as delicately as possible, to the effect that the Honorary Secretary be requested to ask him whether he is disposed to offer to the guild any explanation of any such transaction. And we have adjourned for a fortnight.

Ever affectionately
CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?EARLY OCTOBER 1865]

Extract in F, IX, vi, 745. Date: CD began Doctor Marigold's Prescriptions in Sep 65 and awaited the first proofs on 18 Oct (To Birtles, that day); letter probably written in early Oct.

If people at large understand a Cheap Jack,[†5] my part of the Christmas number will do well. It is wonderfully like the real thing, of course a little refined and humoured.

To E. S. DALLAS, 13 OCTOBER 1865*

Text from transcript, Huntington Library

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Thirteenth October, 1865.

My Dear Dallas

Better luck next time. I see Masson[†1] gazetted,[†2] and suppose it is true.

Faithfully yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

E. S. Dallas Esquire.

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 13 OCTOBER 1865

MS Lytton Papers.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Thirteenth October 1865

My Dear Bulwer Lytton

It seems, on careful enquiry, that Mr. Williams did not with-hold or restore those letters for any money consideration. He received them from Hurst and Blackett. He returned them to Hurst and Blackett, as they supposed. But, 30 remained in his hands; how, why, or wherefore, Heaven knows. He himself then wrote to the Duke of Buckingham[†a]'s[†3] brother in law,[†a†4] to say that he found those 30 in his possession, and that he was ready to return them "free of expence". But in as much as he had received them — not from the Duke [†a]or any of his family[†a] but from Hurst and Blackett, and [†a]in as much as he[†a] addressed the Duke[†a]'s brother in law[†a] as if he were anxious to get into personal communication with the family,[†5] the awkward fact remains, that Hurst and Blackett did discharge him from his readership on this ground, although they expressly say to Wills that they do not accuse him of any corruption. Now, these circumstances — more or less distorted; and I need not say to a man with your knowledge of human nature, much more than less — are known among publishers and newspaper men. And one of our Members, belonging to the Daily News,[†6] spoke to me the other day, saying that he had felt very delicate of giving utterance to a word at the Meeting, in reference to any one whom you had suggested, and therefore had held his peace, but that he had a strong impression that Mr. Williams was "the wrong man, and would get us into trouble."

Now, what shall we do? The next Meeting is this day week. I am much inclined to believe from what I noticed at the Meeting when Mr. Williams was suggested, that another of our Members (a Dramatic author)[†7] has some dim knowledge of this cloud. I do not believe that our Members would reject any one of your proposing, but I think it very likely that they might place you and me in the difficult position of begging us to confer on the subject, and recommend, in serious trust for the Guild, what we think right.

Write to me, either at Gad's Hill before Wednesday, or here afterwards.

Mr. Williams appointed to call on Wills to day, here, before one. But Wills had appointments away from here, after one, and was obliged to go as soon as the time was up. At a little after the time came Mr. Williams.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To JAMES BIRTLES, 18 OCTOBER 1865†

MS Dickens House.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Eighteenth October 1865

Dear Mr Birtles

Send no proof of the enclosed[†1] to Mr Wills or to the office, until I shall have corrected the proof you will please send me here. Then, when my corrections are made, send Mr Wills a revise.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To FREDERICK LEHMANN, 23 OCTOBER 1865

Extracts in Heritage Bookshops Inc, 1995 ([aa]), and Swann Galleries catalogue No. SN 349 ([bb]); MS 1 p.; mention in Anderson Galleries catalogue No. 2065 (Apr 1926) giving date; dated Gad's Hill Place, 23 Oct 65; addressed Frederick Lehmann

[a]Accept my heartiest thanks for the noble Dog.[†2] Surely, the finest specimen that ever was seen[a] ... [b]the sweetest temper, the utmost spirit of enquiry, and the gentlest docility.[b] ... [a]again, a million thanks.

Faithfully Yours ever
CHARLES DICKENS[a]

To F. L. WALTER,[†3] 23 OCTOBER 1865*

Text from transcript by owner of MS, R. L. Bayne-Powell.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Monday Twenty Third October, 1865

Dear Sir,

I have the pleasure of enclosing you a guinea towards the cost of your [——],[†4] and am

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

F. L. Walter Esquire

To HENRY CHORLEY, 28 OCTOBER 1865

Text from MDGH, III, 222.

OFFICE OF "ALL THE YEAR ROUND"
Saturday, 28th of October, 1865

My Dear Chorley,

I find your letter here only to-day. I shall be delighted to dine with you on Tuesday, the 7th, but I cannot answer for Mary, as she is staying with the Lehmanns. To the best of my belief, she is coming to Gad's this evening to dine with a neighbour. In that case, she will immediately answer for herself. I have seen the Athenæum, and most heartily and earnestly thank you.[†1] Trust me, there is nothing I could have wished away,[†2] and all that I read there affects and delights me. I feel so generous an appreciation and sympathy so very strongly, that if I were to try to write more, I should blur the words by seeing them dimly.

Ever affectionately yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 28 OCTOBER 1865

MS Lytton Papers.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Saturday Twenty Eighth October 1865

My Dear Bulwer Lytton.

I did not send your letter to Mr. Williams, because his explanation to Wills was still pending. It afterwards took place, and there is little difference on any question of fact, between his account of the transaction, and Hurst and Blackett's. The only point important to notice, is Mr. Williams's representation that he had been accustomed constantly to communicate with principals, without previous reference to Hurst and Blackett his employers; and that in communicating straight with the Duke of Buckingham's brother in law, he was but doing what he constantly did in the ordinary course of his business.

Here follows an extract from the Guild Minute Book, made at the Meeting yesterday week.

"Minute made, on the suggestion of Mr. Stirling Coyne,[†3] that the Honorary Secretary be requested to ascertain from Messrs. Hurst and Blackett, whether they will in writing recommend Mr. Folkestone Williams as an occupant of one of the Guild Houses, on their firm's 30 years knowledge of him as their confidential literary adviser." (The underlining is not in the books.)

Wills then seeing them on this point, they were decidedly unwilling to write at all, and in the end confined themselves to this letter:

"Having heard that Mr. Folkestone Williams has made application for one of the houses in the gift of the Guild of Literature, we beg to state that if the Committee should so decide, we think the gift would be most appropriately bestowed, and it will afford us great pleasure to hear that Mr. Williams has received it."

With this letter we must take the opinion of the Council three weeks hence. Whether there will be a feeling that it falls short of the noted-down requirement, I cannot in the least pretend to divine.

Heraud[†1] may also present himself as a candidate on that day.

An excellent man accepts, on the sounding of Professor Owen. Doctor Latham,[†2] author of a very great variety of scientific and educational works, and a Fellow of the Royal Society.[†3] He is now engaged on some important Dictionary[†4] for the Longmans.[†5] I do not know him, but I believe the case to be everything we could desire.[†6]

This is all the Guild news so far. I have sent your copy of Our Mutual Friend to the binder.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To MRS PROCTER, 29 OCTOBER 1865

Text from MDGH, III, 223.

GAD'S HILL, | Sunday, 29th October, 1865

My Dear Mrs. Procter,

The beautiful table-cover was a most cheering surprise to me when I came home last night, and I lost not a moment in finding a table for it, where it stands in a beautiful light and a perfect situation. Accept my heartiest thanks for a present on which I shall set a peculiar and particular value.

Enclosed is the MS. of the introduction.[†7] The printers have cut it across and mended it again, because I always expect them to be quick, and so they distribute my "copy" among several hands, and apparently not very clean ones in this instance.

Odd as the poor butcher's feeling appears, I think I can understand it. Much as he would not have liked his boy's grave to be without a tombstone, had he died ashore and had a grave, so he can't bear him to drift to the depths of the ocean unrecorded.[†8]

My love to Procter. | Ever affectionately yours

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To JOHN HILLS,[†1] 31 OCTOBER 1865*

MS P. J. Radford.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Thirty First October 1865

My Dear Mr. Hills

I trouble you with this note, because I want some — Poison!

We have a sudden invasion of rats in the gardens and outhouses. My gardener, a very careful man, is confident of exterminating them with Arsenic. Will you kindly give directions for a packet to be sent to him here? His name is John Russell. By being consigned straight to him, the delay that might otherwise be consequent on its being addressed to me, will be avoided. I may be in London on my Xmas No. business for a week or more. He expects the packet, and is methodically prepared to place it in immediate safety.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

John Hills Esquire

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 31 OCTOBER 1865*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Thirty First October, 1865

My Dear Ouvry

I went to the Arts Club[†2] some days ago ("on information I had received" from Wills), to second you, but found you already seconded. Therefore I underwrote you.

I am at present in the Christmas Mill, but expect to be flour very shortly.

Ever Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

November

To W. B. RYE,[†3] 3 NOVEMBER 1865

MS Fales Library, New York University.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Third November 1865

Dear Sir

I beg you to accept my cordial thanks for your curious "Visits to Rochester".[†4] As I peeped about its old corners with interest and wonder when I was a very little child, few people can find a greater charm in that ancient City than I do.

Believe me | Yours faithfully and obliged
CHARLES DICKENS

W. B. Rye Esquire

To PROFESSOR RICHARD OWEN, 4 NOVEMBER 1865*

MS Benoliel Collection.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Saturday Fourth November 1865

My Dear Owen.

Is it quite settled and resolved on, that you begin the Sunday Lectures for the Sunday League?[†1] Because if it be, I will certainly follow so noble a leader, and give them a Sunday reading.[†2] One word in answer will be sufficient.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Professor Owen

To JOHN FORSTER, [?EARLY NOVEMBER 1865]

Extracts in F, IX, vi, 745. Date: probably accompanying an advance copy of Doctor Marigold's Prescriptions; shortly before 6 Nov 65, when he recorded Forster's admiration of it to Kent.

I do hope that in the beginning and end of this Christmas number you will find something that will strike you as being fresh, forcible, and full of spirits.[†3]

Tired with Our Mutual, I sat down to cast about for an idea, with a depressing notion that I was, for the moment, overworked. Suddenly, the little character that you will see,[†4] and all belonging to it,[†5] came flashing up in the most cheerful manner, and I had only to look on and leisurely describe it.

To CHARLES KENT, 6 NOVEMBER 1865[†6]

MS Berg Collection. Address: Private | Charles Kent Esquire | "Sun" Office | Strand.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Monday, Sixth November 1865

My Dear Kent.

No, I won't write in this book[†7] — because I have sent another to the binder's for you.

I hope and believe the "Doctor"[†1] is nothing but a good'un. He has perfectly astonished Forster, who writes "Neither good, gooder, nor goodest, but superexcellent. All through, there is such a relish of you at your best, as I could not have believed in, after a long story."

I shall be charmed to see you tonight.

Ever affectionately | CD.

To JAMES BIRTLES, 7 NOVEMBER 1865*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: Mr. James Birtles.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Seventh November 1865

Dr. Mr. Birtles

Go on breaking into pages and making up,[†2] in the order in which I send you. So far, it stands:
I To be taken immediately
II Not to be taken at bedtime.
III To be taken at the dinner-table[†3]

CD.

To FREDERICK LEHMANN, 7 NOVEMBER 1865

MS University of Texas, Austin.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Seventh November 1865

My Dear Lehmann

The recipe for one dog's allowance, is this:
2 pints oatmeal
1 pint Barley Meal
1 pound Mangel Wurzel
boiled together, and then mixed with pot-liquor, which is poured over it. If there be no pot liquor in the house, a sheep's head will make it very well. Any bones that happen to be about, may be put into the mixture, for the exercise of the dog's teeth. Its effect upon the body and spirits of the creature is quite surprising. I have my dogs fed, once a day, always at the same hour.

I am sorry to say that I cannot take my pleasure tomorrow, having to "make up" the Xmas No. with the printer. Always a tough job.

Ever Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To R. M. MORRELL,[†1] 9 NOVEMBER 1865

Text from facsimile owned by Mrs Steffens.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Ninth November 1865

Dear Sir

Do me the favor to make known to your Committee that I will follow Professor Owen and Dr. Carpenter,[†2] and will read the Christmas Carol to a Sunday-evening audience.

It is very likely that you know the requirements of such a place as St. Martin's Hall, and the arrangements necessary to ensure audibility for a speaker who is to go on continuously for an hour or more in so large a building. But as I have had much experience in this regard, I trouble you by mentioning what is indispensable to me. There must be no one in the Orchestra, and the platform must be advanced into the hall to its utmost limits, the empty sides of the Orchestra being screened or curtained off. My servant has a screen of my own to be placed behind me, and assist the voice; also, my own gas-fittings. These I shall be happy to lend your Society, for the use of the other lecturers. Some such aids are indispensable, or the most practised speaker cannot be long heard, and the audience will be restless and disappointed.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

R. M. Morrell[†3] Esquire

To ALAN SUMMERLY COLE,[†4] 14 NOVEMBER 1865*

MS Mrs Roger Dutnall.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Fourteenth November 1865

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Alan Summerly Cole, and readily accepts the proffered dedication of the All The Year Round Waltzes,[†5] with thanks.

To MISS MARY DICKENS, 14 NOVEMBER 1865

Text from MDGH, II, 243.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Tuesday, Nov. 14th, 1865

My Dear Mamie,

As you want to know my views of the Sphinx,[†1] here they are. But I have only seen it once; and it is so extraordinarily well done, that it ought to be observed closely several times.

Anyone who attentively notices the flower trick[†2] will see that the two little high tables hung with drapery cover each a trap. Each of those tables, during that trick, hides a confederate, who changes the paper cone twice. When the cone has been changed as often as is required, the trap is closed and the table can be moved.

When the curtain is removed for the performance of the Sphinx trick, there is a covered, that is, draped table on the stage, which is never seen before or afterwards. In front of the middle of it, and between it and the audience, stands one of those little draped tables covering a trap; this is a third trap in the centre of the stage. The box for the head is then upon IT, and the conjuror takes it off and shows it. The man whose head is afterwards shown in that box is, I conceive, in the table; that is to say, is lying on his chest in the thickness of the table, in an extremely constrained attitude. To get him into the table, and to enable him to use the trap in the table through which his head comes into the box, the two hands of a confederate are necessary. That confederate comes up a trap, and stands in the space afforded by the interval below the stage and the height of the little draped table! his back is towards the audience. The moment he has assisted the hidden man sufficiently, he closes the trap, and the conjuror then immediately removes the little draped table, and also the drapery of the larger table; when he places the box on the last-named table with the slide on for the head to come into it, he stands with his back to the audience and his face to the box, and masks the box considerably to facilitate the insertion of the head. As soon as he knows the head to be in its place, he undraws the slide. When the verses have been spoken and the trick is done, he loses no time in replacing the slide. The curtain is then immediately dropped, because the man cannot otherwise be got out of the table, and has no doubt had quite enough of it. With kindest regards to all at Penton,[†3]

Ever your most affectionate
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To GEORGE RUSSELL, 14 NOVEMBER 1865*

MS Marjorie, Lady Russell. Address: George Russell Esquire | Swallowfield | Reading.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Fourteenth November 1865

My Dear George Russell

I send you many thanks for your cordial letter. It is more gratifying to me than I could easily express, if I were to try. I am going to do no such thing, however, and only express my hope that you may long hold a foremost place among my readers and friends. You will receive a new acquaintance[†1] early in December, in whose behalf I have been much interested lately, and of whom I am rather proud and hopeful.

Believe me always | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

George Russell Esquire

To THE EARL RUSSELL, 14 NOVEMBER 1865*

MS Public Record Office.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Fourteenth November 1865

My Dear Lord Russell

I will not attempt to tell you how deeply I feel your kindness in taking such friendly and considerate thought for me, at a time when you must be overwhelmed by business.[†2] With all my heart I thank you.

Unfortunately I have no disposable son, at present of an age to profit by your nomination. But I esteem your offer quite as highly as if I had a dozen.

Lady Russell would have received a book from me some days ago, but for the binder's slowness. As he cannot by any exercise of ingenuity be much longer about it, I venture to hint at its being on its way to Chesham Place[†3] by easy stages.

With renewed thanks on my private score, and with a public admiration of you and confidence in you which were as strong and steady as any man's in England long before I owed you any, I am always

My Dear Lord Russell | Your faithful and obliged
CHARLES DICKENS

The Earl Russell.

To COLONEL TRAVERS,[†4] 14 NOVEMBER 1865*

MS Boston Public Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Fourteenth November 1865

My Dear Sir

I am most ridiculously unlucky. I get your note this morning after four days rest and recreation, and it finds me engaged in London (to Lady Molesworth and the Theatre) for next Thursday. Pray let us conspire against the Fates, and resolve to get the better of them yet.

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Colonel Travers.

To CHARLES KENT, 17 NOVEMBER 1865*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Seventeenth November 1865

My Dear Kent.

Please keep this inviolable secret and terrific mystery,[†1] in the Bluest Chamber[†2] on your premises. When done with, please return it to me at Gad's. Besides my beginning and end, there is a queer story of mine in the body of the No. "To be taken with a grain of salt".[†3]

Ever affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To ARCHIBALD MICHIE,[†4] 19 NOVEMBER 1865*

MS Mitchell Library, Sydney.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Nineteenth November, 1865

My Dear Sir

Allow me to thank you most heartily for your very kind letter, and for your generous interest in my boy. Sir Charles Nicholson has told me of his also having heard from you, and of your great consideration in keeping Alfred out of the fangs of the Wolf, Idleness.[†5]

Your account of poor Horne[†6] made me laugh extremely, in spite of its making me rather melancholy too. His wanderings and climbings will never land him in the castle at the top of the beanstalk, where the Giant keeps his money;[†7] I wish they might ever drop him at some halfway house in the clouds! But he will always find somebody to leave his door open, everywhere.

You should have seen him as I saw him, when he was inventing an immense corkscrew with which infallibly to extract gold from any Diggings in those parts. He had only to find the spot where gold lay hidden; the corkscrew would then be worked by twelve men shipped to the Antipodes for the purpose, and all turning to with a will (unless they had run away); when the corkscrew bit thoroughly, an enormous mass of gold could not choose but come up; they would then all fall over on their backs, and their fortunes would be made.

Your hospitable invitation is not the less welcome or the less highly appreciated, because my prospects of seeing Australia are dim indeed. But I have long had a great desire to read there, and I seem to have done something towards its gratification when I say at home here (as I often do) "Who knows! More unlikely things have come to pass."

As all countries (like some women) seem to take a great deal of ruining, I hope this may find Melbourne standing where it did,[†1] and you quite well in the midst of it. In any case it brings you many cordial thanks from

My Dear Sir | Yours very faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

Archibald Michie Esquire

To MRS MANBY,[†2] 20 NOVEMBER 1865

Summary in American Art Association catalogue, Feb 1929; MS 1 p.; dated London, 20 Nov 65; addressed Mrs Manby.

Expressing his regret that he, his daughter and sister-in-law are unable to keep an appointment because of the illness of a friend.

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 24 NOVEMBER 1865

MS Lytton Papers.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Twenty Fourth Novr. 1865

My Dear Bulwer Lytton

I believe Mr. Folkestone Williams's statement to be perfectly correct — with the single exception that I apprehend the Family[†3] irritation on the subject, to have been stronger than one would infer from reading it, and to have far exceeded Messrs. Hurst and Blackett's.

We have most unfortunately lost Dr. Latham. He went down with his wife to see the house, and was charmed with it. But he is under obligations to his wife's relations, and they held that it would be better for him to pay rent at Bedford and so get a cheap education for three sons in the Bedford foundation-school,[†4] than to live rent free at Stevenage without educational advantages. He was very unwilling to withdraw his acceptance of the house, but we made a minute that we quite recognized his right and reason in the matter.

So we have again to seek three Coming Men!

Ever affecy. Yours

CD.

To THE REV. J. S. SIDEBOTHAM,[†1] 24 NOVEMBER 1865

MS King's School, Canterbury.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Twenty Fourth November 1865

Dear Sir

In thanking you for your obliging letter and its accompanying little book,[†2] allow me to assure you that I never was at the King's School, Canterbury; and that if there be any resemblance between David Copperfield's Doctor Strong and the Doctor Birt[†3] whom you mention, it must be purely accidental, inasmuch as I never before heard of the existence of the last-named gentleman.[†4]

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Rev. J. S. Sidebotham

To MISS ANNIE THOMAS,[†5] 25 NOVEMBER 1865*

MS Private.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND
Saturday Twenty Fifth November 1865

My Dear Miss Thomas

In reply to your note, allow me to explain to you that there is no "second place" for a serial story in these pages. It is by no means advantageous to a publication comprising only 24 pages in each number, to have two serial stories in progress together; and it is only when the main story is found to require support, that I so encroach on the available space — unless in the case of some narrative not extending beyond a few chapters. The first place is the place devoted to a serial story, and that is filled, for at least a year to come.[†6]

Therefore if I were to receive for perusal, those chapters of your new novel[†1] which you kindly offer me, I could only tell you that I had no means of presenting them to the public. In which plight, it is obviously right that I should at once decline them and give you the plain reason for my doing so.

With many thanks for your letter, Believe me always

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Annie Thomas

To AUSTEN HENRY LAYARD, 27 NOVEMBER 1865

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, Dec 1990; MS 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill Place, 27 Nov 65; addressed Austen Henry Layard.

Informing him that Mr. Otway[†2] will come down on Monday 18 December to dine and to attend, the next day, a pre-Christmas reading by CD of his Christmas Carol to Mr. Otway's constituents[†3] ... and he will smile in person on the occasion. If you could come down also, for what the Sporting newspapers would call "the double event", we should be most heartily delighted to see you.

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, [?28 NOVEMBER 1865]

Extract in F, IX, i, 721. Date: 28 Nov 65: see To Dallas, 30 Nov. He would have replied to Lytton immediately.

I cannot tell you, how highly I prize your letter,[†4] or with what pride and pleasure it inspires me. Nor do I for a moment question its criticism (if objection so generous and easy may be called by that hard name) otherwise than on this ground — that I work slowly and with great care, and never give way to my invention recklessly, but constantly restrain it; and that I think it is my infirmity to fancy or perceive relations in things which are not apparent generally. Also, I have such an inexpressible enjoyment of what I see in a droll light, that I dare say I pet it as if it were a spoilt child. This is all I have to offer in arrest of judgment.

To MRS DAVID LLOYD,[†5] 29 NOVEMBER 1865†

MS Mr J. D. K. Lloyd. Address: Mrs. Lloyd | 1 Queen's Gate Terrace | South Kensington | London | S.W.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Twenty Ninth November 1865

My Dear Mrs. Lloyd

I am exceedingly sorry to reply to your note that my [†a]vote for the Royal Hospital[†6] is gone.[†a] It always is gone. I am the victim of that class of Incurables who are in a chronic state of raging fever for Proxies; and have some idea of founding an establishment in which the worst cases may be secluded for life.

My daughter and her aunt send their kindest regards

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To W. W. F. DE CERJAT, 30 NOVEMBER 1865[†1]

Text from MDGH, II, 240-43 and [aa]N, III, 444-46.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT

[a]Thirtieth November, 1865[a]

My Dear Cerjat,

Having achieved my book and my Christmas number, and having shaken myself after two years' work, I send you my annual greeting. How are you? Asthmatic, I know you will reply; but as my poor father (who was asthmatic, too, and the jolliest of men) used philosophically to say, "one must have something wrong, I suppose, and I like to know what it is."

In England we are groaning under the brigandage of the butcher, which is being carried to that height that I think I foresee resistance on the part of the middle-class, and some combination in perspective for abolishing the middleman, whensoever he turns up (which is everywhere) between producer and consumer. The cattle plague[†2] is the butcher's stalking-horse,[†3] and it is unquestionably worse than it was; but seeing that the great majority of creatures lost or destroyed have been cows, and likewise that the rise in butchers' meat bears no reasonable proportion to the market prices of the beasts, one comes to the conclusion that the public is done. The commission[†4] has ended very weakly and ineffectually, as such things in England rather frequently do; and everybody writes to The Times,[†5] and nobody does anything else.

If the Americans don't embroil us in a war before long it will not be their fault. What with their swagger and bombast, what with their claims for indemnification,[†1] what with Ireland and Fenianism,[†2] and what with Canada,[†3] I have strong apprehensions. With a settled animosity towards the French usurper, I believe him to have always been sound in his desire to divide the States against themselves,[†4] and that we were unsound and wrong in "letting I dare not wait upon I would."[†5] The Jamaica insurrection[†6] is another hopeful piece of business. That platform-sympathy with the black — or the native, or the devil — afar off, and that platform indifference to our own countrymen at enormous odds in the midst of bloodshed and savagery, makes me stark wild. Only the other day, here was a meeting of jawbones of asses[†7] at Manchester,[†8] to censure the Jamaica Governor[†9] for his manner of putting down the insurrection![†10] So we are badgered about New Zealanders[†1] and Hottentots,[†2] as if they were identical with men in clean shirts at Camberwell, and were to be bound by pen and ink accordingly. So Exeter Hall holds us in mortal submission to missionaries, who (Livingstone[†3] always excepted) are perfect nuisances, and leave every place worse than they found it.

Of all the many evidences that are visible of our being ill-governed, no one is so remarkable to me as our ignorance of what is going on under our Government. What will future generations think of that enormous Indian Mutiny[†4] being ripened without suspicion, until whole regiments arose and killed their officers? A week ago, red tape, half-bouncing and half pooh-poohing what it bounced at, would have scouted the idea of a Dublin jail not being able to hold a political prisoner.[†5] But for the blacks in Jamaica being over-impatient and before their time, the whites might have been exterminated, without a previous hint or suspicion that there was anything amiss. Laissez aller, and Britons never, never, never!——

Meantime, if your honour were in London, you would see a great embankment rising high and dry out of the Thames on the Middlesex shore, from Westminster Bridge to Blackfriars. A really fine work, and really getting on. Moreover, a great system of drainage. Another really fine work, and likewise really getting on.[†6] Lastly, a muddle of railways in all directions possible and impossible, with no general public scheme, no general public supervision, enormous waste of money, no fixable responsibility, no accountability but under Lord Campbell's Act.[†7] I think of that accident in which I was preserved. Before the most furious and notable train in the four-and-twenty hours, the head of a gang of workmen takes up the rails. That train changes its time every day as the tide changes, and that head workman is not provided by the railway company with any clock or watch! Lord Shaftesbury wrote to me to ask me what I thought of an obligation on railway companies to put strong walls to all bridges and viaducts. I told him, of course, that the force of such a shock would carry away anything that any company could set up, and I added: "Ask the minister what he thinks about the votes of the railway interest in the House of Commons, and about his being afraid to lay a finger on it with an eye to his majority."

I seem to be grumbling, but I am in the best of humours. All goes well with me and mine, thank God.

Last night my gardener came upon a man in the garden and fired. The man returned the compliment by kicking him in the groin and causing him great pain. I set off, with a great mastiff-bloodhound[†1] I have, in pursuit. Couldn't find the evil-doer, but had the greatest difficulty in preventing the dog from tearing two policemen down. They were coming towards us with professional mystery, and he was in the air on his way to the throat of an eminently respectable constable when I caught him.

My daughter Mary and her aunt Georgina sent kindest regard and remembrance. Katey and her husband are going to try London this winter, but I rather doubt (for they are both delicate) their being able to weather it out.

It has been blowing here tremendously for a fortnight, but to-day is like a spring day, and plenty of roses are growing over the labourers' cottages. The Great Eastern[†2] lies at her moorings beyond the window where I write these words; looks very dull and unpromising. A dark column of smoke from Chatham Dockyard, where the iron shipbuilding is in progress, has a greater significance in it, I fancy.

[a]Believe me, my Dear Cerjat, | Ever Faithfully Yours[a]

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To E. S. DALLAS, 30 NOVEMBER 1865*

MS Morgan Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Thursday Thirtieth November | 1865

My Dear Dallas

I do not doubt that I am indebted to you for yesterday's notice in The Times, of my last book. It has afforded me such heartfelt gratification and unusual pleasure, that I cannot refrain from thanking you for your generous sympathy.†3 It may be interesting to you to know that I had but the day before received a very long and earnest letter from Bulwer Lytton on the same subject, and that you might have looked over his shoulder as he wrote it, so close is the parallel between your remarks and his, in many places.

As you could not write of my work of love in such a way, without thoroughly knowing what I would feel in reading your words I will say no more on that head here. But as you have divined what pains I bestowed upon the book,†1 perhaps you might set some little value on the Manuscript, as your corroboration. At all events I have sent it to day to the Binder to put together substantially, and it will be very pleasant indeed to me if you will give it house-room as a token of my grateful regard.†2

Believe me | Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

E. S. Dallas Esquire

To PERCY FITZGERALD, 30 NOVEMBER 1865†3

MS Robert H. Taylor Collection, Princeton University.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Thirtieth November 1865

My Dear FitzGerald

I should have answered your last note long ago, but for having been perpetually occupied.

That notion of the Ship-Breaker's Garden takes my fancy strongly. If I had not been already at work upon the Xmas No. when you suggested it to me, I think I must have tried my hand upon it. As it is, I often revert to it, and go about and about it, and pat it into new forms, much as the buttermen in the shops (who have something of a literary air at their wooden desks), pat the butter. I have been vexed by not being able to get your story into Dr. Marigold. I tried it again and again, but could not adapt its length to the other requirements of the No. Once, I cut it; but I was not easy afterwards, and thought it best to restore the excision, and leave the whole for a regular No.†4 The difficulty of fitting and adjusting this annual job, is hardly to be imagined without trying it. For the rest, I hope you will like the Doctor — and know him at once — as he speaks for himself in the first paper and the last. Also I commend to your perusal, a certain Ghost Story, headed "T[o] be taken with a grain of salt".†5

Sultan has grown immensely, and is a sight. But he is so accursedly fierce towards other dogs, that I am obliged to take him out, muzzled. Also he has an invincible repugnance to soldiers, which, in a military country, is inconvenient. Such is the spirit of the dog that, with his muzzle tight on, he dashed into the heart of a Company in heavy marching order (only the other day), and pulled down an objectionable Private. Except under such provocation, he is as gentle and docile with me, as a dog can possibly be. Last night, the Gardener fired at some man in the garden, upon whom he came suddenly, and who [kicked] him in a dangerous manner. I imme[d]iately turned out, unloosed Sultan, and [hu]nted the vagabond. We couldn't get hold [of] him, but the intelligence of the dog, and the [de]lighted confidence he imparted to me, as we [stum]bled across country in the dark, were [qu]ite enchanting. Two Policemen appearing in [the] distance and making a professional show [of] stealthiness, had a narrow escape. As [he] was in the act of flying at them, I was obliged to hold him round the neck with both arms (like the little boy in the snow with the St. Bernard dog, grown up), and [ca]ll to the Force to vanish in an inglorious [ma]nner.

A friend has sent me from America, a thorough-bred young Black Newfoundland Dog, since you were here. Sultan (who hates him mortally) he, Linda, I, and three or four small dogs in the [na]ture of canine parasites and toadies, [ma]ke a show in the lanes and roads, [wh]ich I specially beseech you to come and see. We only want the renowned Dog Cæsar, to render us matchless.

I hope you are in force and spirits with your new story,†1 and †aI hope you noticed in the Times the other day, that†a †bour friend of The Mimmery, South Mims, [is] married.†b†2

My Dear FitzGerald | Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

December

To CHARLES DICKENS JUNR, [9 DECEMBER 1865]

Envelope only, Sotheby's catalogue, July 1983; addressed Charles Dickens Esquire Junr. | 106 Leadenhall Street | London | E.C. PM 9 Dec 65.

To [HENRY RUSSELL],†3 9 DECEMBER 1865*

MS Sheridan Russell.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT

Saturday, Ninth December, 1865

Dear Sir

In reply to your letter, I beg to assure you that I shall be happy to devote my personal attention to any MSS you may desire to offer to "All The Year Round". If you will address them to me at the office in Wellington Street, and will mark them Private on the outside of the cover, you may rely on my reading them very willingly.[†4]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To FRANK [DICKENS], 10 DECEMBER 1865*

MS (fragment) Dickens House.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Tenth December 1865

My Dear Frank. This will be a very short letter, as I merely want to tell you of a very gratifying communication I have had,[†1] and as you have lately received an exhaustive reply of home news[†2]

To CHARLES KENT, 10 DECEMBER 1865

Extract in Swann Galleries catalogue, No. 221; MS 1.; dated 10 Dec 65; addressed Charles Kent.

I duly received the proof[†3] ... your letter was welcome, stimulating, and delightful.

To AUSTEN HENRY LAYARD, 10 DECEMBER 1865

MS British Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Sunday Tenth December 1865

My Dear Layard

I received yours from Rome this morning, and I impatiently await the budget that is to be longer than a number of any periodical.[†4]

We dine on Monday the 18th. at 7 1/4. You can come to Gravesend from Charing Cross, by Express at five minutes past four, or you can come to Higham from the same Charing Cross at 5.40. The first is by far the best train as it stops only once, and from Gravesend you can get a good fly to bring you on here. I read on Tuesday the 19th, at 8.[†5] Nothing is easier than for you to go to the Foreign Office in the day, and get down again to dine. You can be at Charing Cross at a quarter past 10 in the morning, or at a quarter before 1 at midday, or you can be at Victoria at twenty five minutes past 11. Only choose between these hours, and trust the rest to me.

I shall be most heartily glad to see you.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To R. M. MORRELL, [9-10 DECEMBER 1865]*

Text from MS copy sent by CD to Owen. Date: no doubt the same day as that letter or day preceding.

My Dear Sir

You will remember that when the Deputation from your Society[†1] did me the honor to wait upon me respecting my reading one Sunday night at St. Martin's Hall, I expressed my doubts of your having an audience really bent upon such harmless use of a Sunday evening, and my fears that a project originating in the best intentions, might engender a scene of ill will and contest.[†2] You will also remember that your deputation, in reply, gave me the strongest assurances of their perfect acquaintance with the feeling of Working Men on the subject, and of their absolute certainty that my objections were unfounded.

The honesty and good faith of this reply, I do not for an instant impugn. But the proceedings at a recent Public Meeting called by yourselves,[†3] convince me that it is a mistake. I withdraw my promise to read, solely on the ground, that you have not been able to prove your case, and that the proof is against you. In so doing, I think it right to forward a copy of this note, to my friend Professor Owen.

I am &c
[CHARLES DICKENS]

Mr. Morrell.[†4]

To PROFESSOR RICHARD OWEN, 10 DECEMBER 1865

MS Benoliel Collection. Address (envelope, MS Sotheby, May 1986): Professor Owen | Sheen Lodge | Richmond[†5] Park | Surrey. PM Rochester 10 Dec 65.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Tenth December 1865

My Dear Owen. I have sent the Secretary of the Sunday League, a letter of which I enclose you a copy. It is clear to me that they are wrong in their facts, and that the time is not ripe for the proposed Lectures. They cannot[†6] get Working Men together in sufficient force to declare their desire for that Sunday recreation. On the other hand, their opponents can (and do) get working men together in sufficient force to put them down and declare that they don't want it

Every Cordially Yours
CD[†7]

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 12 DECEMBER 1865*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Twelfth December 1865

My Dearest Georgy. I send you all the tickets that Adams[†1] has forwarded.[†2]

Boucicault's[†3] "advice" (in two letters), was that Carlotta[†4] was made expressly for the part, and that if he had got up the piece at the Princess's he would have engaged her solely for it!!! Whether this was extracted from him by a plot, or not, you will form your own opinion about. Fechter begged me to go in front last night, and tell him "if her figure was not much thinner". I reported gravely: "Very much thinner, but at the expense of her face. I can say no more about her for such a part."[†5]

Meantime this morning's post brings me a secret and tremendous letter from Madame Fechter,[†6] imploring me to make representations to Fechter which are perfectly right in themselves but absolutely and hopelessly impracticable at this last moment. I suppose he may have driven it to this last moment, of a set intention and express purpose to make any such representations ill timed and useless.

As I foresaw, Mrs. Ternan[†7] was instantly suggested for Alice;[†8] and the weaker the piece, the more store was set by getting her. Barnett[†9] went to her this morning (I let her know he was coming), but I have not yet heard the result.

Barnett's ineradicable opinion is, that Carlotta has been learning the part all along. "The poor man, Sir, daren't give it to anybody else", he groaned to me in deep depression behind a box door last night.

So no more at present from your Ever affectionate

CD.

To THE HON. EMILY EDEN,[†1] 13 DECEMBER 1865

MS Beinecke Library, Yale University.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thirteenth December 1865

My Dear Miss Eden

You would have heard from me before you wrote your kind and welcome note, but for my binder's being over busy at this season of the year. Pray accept the accompanying two volumes,[†2] with my cordial thanks for your invaluable aid in the matter of my India boy.[†3]

I have sent him a copy of Mr. Beadon's[†4] reference to him,[†5] and I feel sure he will be very proud of it.

Believe me always | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Hon. Miss Eden

To JOHN FORSTER, [?14 DECEMBER 1865]

Extract in F, IX, vi, 315*n. Date:* Nov 65, according to Forster; but clearly a slip for Dec, as Doctor Marigold's Prescriptions was published on 7 Dec 65; the "first week" would therefore end on 14 Dec.

Telling Forster that the sale of Doctor Marigold's Prescriptions had gone up, in the first week, to 250,000.

To AUSTEN HENRY LAYARD, 17 DECEMBER 1865

MS British Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Seventeenth December 1865

My Dear Layard

If you come by the Express at five minutes past 4 (this in answer to yours) remember that it is the foremost train, quite out at the end of Charing X Station. I send you this caution because another train, also going to Gravesend, follows the Express, and the two look like one. If you don't appear by that train, I will send the basket to our own Station to meet the other train that you mention.

In haste | Ever Heartily Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN THOMPSON, 17 DECEMBER 1865*

MS Walter T. Spencer.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Seventeenth December 1865

Dr. John

My back is so bad that I cannot dine with Lady Molesworth to day. Put into Marsh's bag,[†1] the new suit of dress-clothes and the black silk boots, and let him bring them down. We shall expect you here tomorrow morning.

CD.

To THE REV. WILLIAM HARNESS, 19 DECEMBER 1865

MS Mrs Caroline Duncan-Jones.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Nineteenth December, 1865

My Dear Harness.

I am greatly surprised to find from your welcome note that you never received a letter I wrote to you from France:— I think, from Paris. In that lost literary treasure, I explained that, having been very hard at work here finishing my book, I had absconded for some weeks from my office in town, during which time that quaint, quiet, and curious volume[†2] you kindly sent me, had lain there, awaiting my coming. I added that I had lighted upon it before taking the train for Folkestone — had carried it away with me — and had derived unusual pleasure from its perusal, as putting me down in the midst of quite another time, and that in a charmingly natural and easy way. And behold you were none the wiser for this choice epistle!

Your account of yourself, I take leave flatly to contradict, and utterly to disbelieve. If you be "as old as the hills", I will assert and support against all comers, that you are as fresh and as green. There is not a wholesomer hill upon the earth, or one less spoiled by the hand of man. In witness whereof, your loving[†3] undersigned doth here subscribe his hand, on the day and year first above written.

L.S.[†4]
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 21 DECEMBER 1865*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Twenty First December 1865

My Dearest Georgy

I write, because I have received your letter and enclosure — not because I have much news.

[

]†1

To my horror, I yesterday found Fechter utterly unacquainted with his part;[†2] absolutely ignorant of it; and evidently without a fixed purpose as to the way of rendering it. I shall be very much astonished if he can get the words now. I have never seen any one in a condition so absurdly unfit for rehearsal as he was, only yesterday.[†3] They were all loose in the last degree,[†4] except Mrs. T[†5] and Carlotta.[†6] They were both what is technically called "letter perfect". It is difficult to form a judgment on such wretched evidence, but I should not be surprised if Caleb Balderstone[†7] came out rather strongly. What change tonight may produce, I don't know. Yesterday I sat and glowered so gloomily that perhaps I made them worse. But even in his stage management Fechter seemed paralyzed.

The Forsters are not going to the play on Saturday, and are not coming to Gads at the arranged time. I have an affectionate letter from him to day on both heads.
— And talking of heads, I never heard of such a thing as the accident to Matilda's![†8]

Ever My Dearest Georgy | affectionately Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Tell the boys with my love, that I must enquire, personally and on the ground, into the Wire-question.

To JOSEPH SLY,[†9] 22 DECEMBER 1865

MS Public Library and Museum, Lancaster, Address: Mr. Sly | Kings Arms and Royal Hotel | Lancaster.

THE ATHENAEUM,
Friday Twenty Second December 1865

Dear Mr. Sly.

I am exceedingly obliged to Mrs. Sly and you for the noble box of game you have sent me, and for which I beg you, both, to accept my cordial thanks. It arrived in the best condition.

With all good wishes in and out of season, for the prosperity of your matchless and fine old house, Believe me always

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To FREDERICK J. FARADAY,[†1] 23 DECEMBER 1865*

Text from copy left by Walter Dexter in Dickens House.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Twenty Third December 1865

Dear Sir,

Do me the kindness to assure "the aspiring youths who compose the Crichton Club"[†2] that I have just now received their Annual with much pleasure, and that I highly esteem it as a seasonable mark of their friendly remembrance.

Faithfully yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

Fredk. J. Faraday Esquire.

To HENRY KOLLE,[†3] 26 DECEMBER 1865*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Twenty Sixth December, 1865

My Dear Kolle.

I have not marked the accompanying copy of your daughter's[†4] verses, because the little that I have to say about them may be best said generally.

They are very musical, very creditable, very good. As editor of a periodical, I read many much worse, and many much better. As the composition of a young lady in private life, they are interesting and meritorious; but I cannot do such violence to what I believe to be the truth, as to encourage a sensitive young creature to enter the public lists so armed. Great disappointment and (consequently) great unhappiness would result from so rash a venture. There may be promise in your daughter not expressed in these verses. Judging her solely by their internal evidence, I find her on a level with hundreds — thousands — of unheard of amateurs. There is a curious expression of conscious weakness in every page but one. The purpose that cannot express itself in words, without italicizing them, is waited on by a misgiving that it wants force and struggles for expression in vain.

If the lines were by my own daughter, I should tell her exactly what I tell you.

When I got to Paris on that occasion to which you refer, I carried out my part of our compact as heartily as I now send all good Christmas wishes to you and yours.

My Dear Kolle | Faithfully Yours always
Charles Dickens

Henry Kolle Esquire

To MRS BALL WILSON,[†1] 26 DECEMBER 1865

MS Walter T. Spencer.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Tuesday Twenty Sixth December, 1865

My Dear Rebecca.

You make a very natural mistake in supposing me to be able to answer letters at all times. But I am so much occupied, that my correspondence is often weeks in arrear.

affecy Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To ALFRED DICKENS, [27 DECEMBER 1865]

Mention in next. Date: written same day.

To G. W. RUSDEN,[†2] 27 DECEMBER 1865

MS Trinity College, University of Melbourne.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.

Wednesday Twenty Seventh December, 1865

My Dear Sir

I cannot sufficiently thank you for your considerate and most valuable letter in reference to my son Alfred, and for all the kindness you have shewn him. I am strongly in favor of his accepting Mr. De Sailly's[†3] proposal,[†4] if, on making himself personally acquainted with the realities of such a life, he should feel (as I hope he may) that he can face it manfully. I know its leading incidents, from books and verbal description, very well. I am strongly impressed with the conviction that the sons of a father whose capital can never be the inheritance of his children, must — perhaps above all other young men — hew out their own paths through the world, by sheer hard work. And my boys are well accustomed to the admonition that so, only, can they hope to sustain their name.

Observing Mr. De Sailly's delicacy in leaving Alfred's judgment free, I have also, in the letter I send him by this Mail, left him free to choose. But I have told him that if, on seeing what the life is, he should feel that he can boldly enter on it, he has my heartiest concurrence.

Once again My Dear Sir I beg you to accept my cordial thanks, and to believe me

Very faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

G. W. Rusden Esquire

To MRS WILLS, 28 DECEMBER 1865

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.

Thursday Twenty Eighth December 1865

My Dear Mrs. Wills

I am very sorry indeed to receive this poor account of Wills, and am truly grieved to know that he is again enduring pain.

Will you kindly tell him with my love, that when I have made up the No.[†1] at the office tomorrow, I shall come to Regents Park Terrace to enquire about him of you. But pray add that I shall not in the least expect or want to see him, if he prefer (as he very likely will) to remain undisturbed. Do impress this upon him, as being sincerely meant.

Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

To SIR JOHN BOWRING, 29 DECEMBER 1865

Mention in Swann Galleries catalogue Oct 1961; MS 1 p.; dated 29 Dec 65; addressed Sir John Bowring.

Giving his opinion of these specimens of the Hungarian poet.[†2]

To SAMUEL LOVER, 29 DECEMBER 1865

MS W. A. Foyle.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Twenty Ninth Decr. 1865

My Dear Lover

Glad to retain the verses[†3] for insertion.

Many thanks for your letter.

Writer of Irish story of Diablerie,[†4] unquestionably Irish.

In haste | Faithfully Yours

CD.

To FREDERIC CHAPMAN, 31 DECEMBER 1865*

MS Southeast Missouri State College.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Thirty First December 1865

My Dear Sir

A Happy New Year to you and yours.
I have received your advice dated the day before yesterday.

Will you send a copy of the original edition of The Haunted Man,[†1] to John Poole Esqre. 8 Fitzroy Place, Kentish Town.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Fredk. Chapman Esquire

To R. H. HORNE, [31] DECEMBER 1865

MS Beinecke Library, Yale University. Date: Sunday was 31st in 1865.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Thirtieth December 1865

My Dear Horne.

This is a very hasty letter in the midst of an enormous correspondence. I hope it may not prove too late for the next Mail.

I send you a thousand thanks for your kind and sound advice, but I have not the least notion of coming out to Australia. How Mr. Michie (to whom I am much indebted for his kindness to Alfred) ever came to believe that I had any, I cannot imagine.

Enclosed is my photograph — the nearest approach I believe, to a resemblance. Somehow I never "come like" in these productions. I believe upon the whole I am pretty much as you left me.

We all send you cordial wishes for a happy new year.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 31 DECEMBER 1865

MS Lytton Papers.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Thirty First December 1865

My Dear Bulwer Lytton.

I received your letter in praise of Dr. Marigold, and read and re-read all your generous words, fifty times over, and with inexpressible delight. I cannot tell you how they gratified and affected me. This is the reason why I have not touched the subject until now.

Be sure of my finding "leisure" to read your new book,[†1] pretty soon after Murray[†2] sends it to me! It will not be in this house many hours before I am master of its every line.

Anxiously expecting it, I am Ever | Affectionately Yours
CD.

We all affectionately wish you a Happy New Year.

To RICHARD DAVEY,[†3] [1860-1865]

Extract in R. Davey, The Pageant of London, 1906, II, 495*n*. Date: presumably when Davey was still a youth (i.e. early or mid-1860s) and perhaps hoping to contribute to AYR.

If you want to know anything about old London ask P.P.O'C,[†4] and what he or Timbs[†5] cannot tell you is, believe me, not worth the knowing.

To G. M. FENN,[†6] [1865]

Mention in D, x (1909), 266. Date: probably late 1865 since his story, published AYR, 27 Jan 66, was returned with letter.

Replying to his letter and sending proofs of his story.[†7]

To JOHN FORSTER, [1865]

Extract in F, VI, vi, 538. Date: five years before his death, according to Forster.

I find this looks like my poor father,[†8] whom I regard as a better man the longer I live.

1866

January

To CHARLES EDMONDS, 1 JANUARY 1866*

Text transcribed by W. J. Carlton from MS then in possession of J. Stevens Cox.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday First January 1866

Dear Mr Edmonds

The engagements of the time of year have caused me to overlook your letter; for which I am extremely sorry.

I am not conscious of having made any mistake; but I have no proxy-paper for those schools[†1] among my miscellaneous accumulation, nor do I remember to have received one.

Faithfully yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Edmonds Esquire

To MRS BIRCH,[†2] 2 JANUARY [1866]

Text from N, III, 411. Date: probably misdated 1865 by CD, followed by N; Our Mutual Friend published in 2 vols, Nov 65.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Tuesday Second January 1865

My Dear Mrs Birch,

I write by this post to my publishers requesting them to send you early tomorrow, a copy of Our Mutual Friend, in the hope that it may beguile an hour or two of your journey to India.

With kind regards to your husband, and best wishes for your happiness.

Believe me | Very faithfully yours

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL, [2 JANUARY 1866]

Mention in last. Date: written same day.

To HERMANN VEZIN,[†3] 4 JANUARY 1866*

MS Berg Collection.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.

Thursday Fourth January 1866

Dear Sir

I hope the season of the year, and my having had this house full of visitors in consequence, will be my sufficient excuse for having left your letter unanswered these last few days.

I am so constantly asked to read MSS, and have so little leisure to bestow on that occupation, that I am obliged to guide myself by a strict rule in that regard, or

I assuredly could never write. My rule is, invariably to decline, unless there should be a chance of the MS being suitable to the requirements of my literary journal 'All The Year Round', and consequently of my being really useful to the writer.

In the case of a dramatic work, there is clearly no such hope. But if Mr. Fechter should discern any likelihood of turning Mr. Albery's[†1] play[†2] to successful account, he is pretty certain to mention it or bring it to me. In either case, I will then read it attentively.

And if Mr. Albery should write anything with a view to All The Year Round, I willingly empower you to tell him that (on your introduction) he may address it to me personally, and may count on my reading it myself and having an interest in it beforehand.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Hermann Vezin Esquire

To J. B. BUCKSTONE, [?EARLY JANUARY 1866]

Mention in To Buckstone, 6 Jan. Date: probably written a few days before that letter.

To MISS MARY BOYLE, 6 JANUARY 1866†

MS Morgan Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Saturday Sixth January 1866

My Dear Mary

Feeling pretty certain that I shall never answer your letter unless I answer it at once (I got it this morning) here goes!

I did not dramatize The Master of Ravenswood,[†3] though I did a good deal towards and about the Piece, having an earnest desire to put Scott — for once — upon the stage, in his own gallant manner.[†4] It is an enormous success, and increases in attraction nightly. I have never seen the people in all parts of the house, so leaning forward, in lines sloping towards the stage, earnestly and intently attentive, as while the story gradually unfolds itself. But the astonishing circumstance of all, is, that Carlotta (never thought of for Lucy until all other Lucies had failed) is marvellously good, highly pathetic, and almost unrecognizeable in person! What note it touches in her, always dumb until now, I do not pretend to say; but there is no one on the Stage who could play the contract scene[†5] better, or more simply and naturally — and I find it impossible to see it without crying! [†a]My girls at home stared when I told them before the Play came out: "I don't know whether there is any thing amiss or weak in me; but Carlotta so affects me at Rehearsal that I would go out, if I could, and not see the trying part of the Play."[†1] But they cried with all their hearts on the first night, and so does the House in general every night. As a picture of an utterly forlorn and broken-hearted girl, shrinking under the influence of a cruel mother[†2] and gradually slipping away into distraction, it is a most remarkable achievement.[†a] Almost everyone plays well, the whole is exceedingly picturesque, and there is scarcely a movement throughout, or a look, that is not indicated by Scott. So you get a Live Romance with beautiful illustrations,[†3] and I do not expect ever again to see a book take up its bed and walk[†4] in like manner.

I am charmed to learn that you have had a freeze out of my Ghost story.[†5] It rather gave me a shiver up the back, in the writing. Doctor Marigold has just now accomplished his 200,000. My only other news of myself is, that I am doubtful whether to read, or not, in London this season. If I decide to do it at all, I shall probably do it on a great scale.

[†a]They are all well at Gad's, and would send best love if they knew me to be writing — which they don't. Katie and Charles Collins are gone on a visit to Mrs. Sartoris. The former was very delicate when they left us on the 2nd. The latter, on the whole much better.

I do not forget that I am bound to the Bonbonnière[†6] on your return, and that you are there to present me to Lady Marian Alford.[†7] You were well over the Channel before the gales set in. It has been blowing hurricanes at Gad's, so that sometimes we have scarcely been able to hear each other speak.[†a]

Many happy years to you my dear Mary. So prays your ever affectionate

JO.

To J. B. BUCKSTONE, 6 JANUARY 1866

Extract in Jeffrey Stern catalogue One (new series); MS 1 p.; dated Office of AYR, 6 Jan 66; addressed J. B. Buckstone.

Your pleasant note reminds me that I omitted to tell you in mine that the Lord Mayor[†8] is going to write to you.[†9]

To W. H. WILLS, 8 JANUARY 1866*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Monday Morning Eighth January 1866

My Dear Wills.

This is to let you know that I go down to Gad's this morning, but am producible at any moment on your summons, in case my presence should be necessary in consultation on the "Readings" question.[†1] If you should not summon me, I shall be here again on Thursday morning.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To SHIRLEY BROOKS,[†2] 9 JANUARY 1866

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Ninth January 1866

My Dear Brooks

Many thanks for your note, and many returns of your good and seasonable wishes, to you and to yours.

In reference to the Shropshire newspaper-scrap,[†3] what do you think of getting your Members[†4] to bring in a bill for making every parish clergyman able to read? Perhaps that Act of Parliament had best precede the other?

You have never told me what I shall give you for my share in poor Thackeray's monument.[†5] I take it for granted that you don't yet know how the account stands.

Is it not curiously significant of the action of a great Railway accident on the nerves of human creatures, that my watch (a chronometer) got so fluttered in my pocket on that Staplehurst occasion, that it has never since been itself to the extent of two or three minutes? I reasoned myself out of an inability to travel by Express, but I can't reason the watch out of this absurd behaviour.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Shirley Brooks Esquire

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 9 JANUARY 1866

Mention in N, III, 454; dated Office of AYR, 9 Jan 66; addressed Georgina Hogarth.

To WILKIE COLLINS, 10 JANUARY 1866

MS Morgan Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Wednesday Tenth January 1866

My Dear Wilkie

Proofs, Proofs, Proofs! Where are the Armadale[†1] proofs I was to have? O where and O where! — &c.[†2]

If, in the remote dark coming ages when you shall have done this book, you would care to come back to the old quarters[†3] — not for such another labor thereawhile, but for Idle Apprentices[†4] and such-like wanderings, with the Inimitable Undersigned — always remember that Wills with Carte blanche, and I with open arms, await you.

Ever affecy.
CD.

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 10 JANUARY 1866

MS Dickens House.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Tenth January 1866

My Dear Bulwer Lytton.

The book[†5] arrived yesterday, and in the evening I had the inexpressible pleasure of reading it through. When I closed it at past midnight, my mind was filled with a crowd of new delights; and today I have read the book again and the crowd is twice as big.

My ear instantly took to the metre. When it changed, I changed as easily and sympathetically. Insomuch that I cannot represent to myself any one of the Tales, as told in any other way than your way.[†6] I mention this, because I am not usually free from a certain unadaptable obstinacy as to novelties in poetic rhythm, and to this hour am forced to separate some ideas of some friends of ours from the mechanism with which they are associated — altogether to separate the one from the other, and to express the thoughts to my thoughts, in my own manner.

The extraordinary beauty, picturesqueness, and completeness, of The Secret Way, so fascinated me last night that I returned to my first love before I went to bed,[†7] and returned again after breakfast. Argiope holds her place in my heart against all her rivals. When she is led in by the Priest and takes the cup,[†8] she is peerless against all the world of women. But the narrative itself, the painting in it, the distinctness attained, the glowing force of it, the imagination in it and yet the terseness and closeness of it, these astonish me! I declare to you that I have never read any story, whatsoever the manner of its telling, so perfectly amazing to me in these respects quite apart from its winning tenderness and grace. Of Death and Sisyphus[†1] at table — again — I have as clear and vivid a picture as if I had looked in at the window and seen them together: while the last twenty lines of that poem are most magnificent.[†2] I suppose the Oread's[†3] Son to have been one of the most difficult of the Tales, to tell, because this legend in one form or other is the most familiar of all by far. But for a perfectly different kind of beauty, my pastoral reading can not match it: and the reed is broken[†4] by the Master hand that I used to wonder (in the days of the Last Days of Pompeii)[†5] whether I should ever make myself famous enough to touch. The sacrifice of the Wife of Miletus,[7[[sic]][†6] and the picture of the Temple in Cydippe,[6[[sic]][†7] are the two things next distinctest in the new host by which I found myself begirt last night. But if I were to go on further I should never have done.

I have not a doubt, my dear friend and beloved Brother in Art, that you will find a great general response to this labor (I call it labor, because I see what infinite pains its care and finish have cost you) — to this great work.[†8] Unless I am much mistaken, the popular sympathy will be so conquered by The Secret Way, that it will attract readers and students of the rest of the Volume which without that triumph of Romance you would not have enchained. The farther those advance, the more firmly you will hold them. They may be in their way as true to their first love as I am to mine, but it will lead them on to an appreciation of the amazing variety and wealth of the rest of the Volume which that class would not otherwise have been competent to estimate aright. I am no Mage, or that is The Secret Way to unlearned thousands, as well as to the souls of accomplished readers

Ever | Your affectionate and admiring

CD.

To HENRY CHORLEY, 12 JANUARY 1866*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Friday Twelfth January 1866[†9]

My Dear Chorley.

I book Friday the 26th. at a quarter past seven with great pleasure.

Mrs. Lirriper had also occurred to me. The difficulty is (the old lady herself being the narrator) that it must be done with little change of voice; and I am afraid I have accustomed the audience to expect variety in that wise.[†1] If I do Doctor Marigold — objection would be strengthened by his being in much the same plight.[†2] It would be a small objection in a small place, but expands in proportion to the size of the Hall. The greater the room and the larger the audience, the more imperative the necessity for something dramatic. Remember the little unchanging figure, seen from afar off, and the very little action that can be got into a bird's-eye view of that table.

Ever affecy

CD.

To FREDERICK HINE,[†3] [12 JANUARY 1866]

Envelope only, MS Fales Library, New York University. Address: Mr. Frederick Hine | 3 Provident Place | Lady Wood Lane | Birmingham. PM London 12 Jan 65.

To W. H. WILLS, 15 JANUARY 1866

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Monday Fifteenth January 1866

My Dear Wills

Coming here this afternoon, and finding your letter dated yesterday, I suppose the Railroads to have recovered, and the British Post to have asserted itself triumphantly.[†4]

As soon as I read yours, I sent for Birtles and the making up.[†5] The latter was all right and even, (wonderful to relate!) and stood in need of no change whatever. Sala[†6] has sent a paper on the Havannah,[†7] which has duly gone to Beaufort House[†8] the Sprightly. All things else, official, are in status quo.

In the matter of Beale,[†1] it occurs to me that he may, perhaps, ask for 30 Readings instead of 25. I should not be indisposed (for I should not think it unfair) to let him have 30 for 2000 Guineas. Perhaps he may not come near the mark at all. In such case, I think I will resolve to keep quiet and not read at all.[†2]

I send my kindest regard to Miss Coutts[†3] and am Ever | Heartily Yours

CD.

To CHARLES KENT, 16 JANUARY 1866*

MS Boston Athenaeum. Address: Private | Charles Kent Esquire. | "Sun" Office | Strand.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Sixteenth January 1866

My Dear Kent.

Can you come down to Gad's from Saturday to Monday? There will be no one there but my sister, and we can be quite at our ease.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

I go back about mid-day tomorrow. If you come, take Express to Gravesend at 4..5 Saturday afternoon, and I will drive you over

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 17 JANUARY 1866

MS Lytton Papers.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Seventeenth January 1866

My Dear Bulwer Lytton

I think I can set your mind at rest about the late Mr. Southey.[†4] He offered some trash to All The Year Round, and here are two of his letters (he wrote several, as I remember), on the subject of their rejection. The one at the beginning of which I have placed a X was written not long before the murders. Simply an intolerable braggart, with an insolence in him which penny a liners, chaplains, and such like, called "talent". I recognized his "style" in the published letters when he was first apprehended, and quickly traced him out as the writer of these effusions. You will notice that he signs the woman's name.[†5]

The lady for the Lady of Lyons[†6] has certainly turned up at Fechter's. Miss Leclercq who does Lucy in the Master of Ravenswood, and who has astonished me more than the audiences who see her (for I never supposed her to be capable of such work), can assuredly do it with Fechter for Claude.[†7] When the run of the Master (which is an immense success) shall be out,[†1] I feel convinced that he will make a sensation and a hit with the Lady of Lyons.[†2] I very much like the few alterations he suggests for Stage purposes. If, when the time comes, you would like to leave the Rehearsals to me, depend upon it that Fechter and I together will strike a new stage picturesqueness out of it, thoroughly belonging to the play itself. These are early days for mentioning it, and I know that you have not yet sanctioned the slight changes; but I clearly see a new success for the play and a very striking representation of it.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To W. H. RUSSELL, 17 JANUARY 1866

MS Beinecke Library, Yale University.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Seventeenth January 1866

My Dear Russell

My triumvirate of Post Captains[†3] perversely choose the 25th. which I fear is the day you stand otherwise engaged for. But will you come down from the following Saturday the 27th. to Monday? If you can and will, I will go down with you from here at 20 minutes to 4.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. H. Russell Esquire

To CHARLES KENT, 18 JANUARY 1866†

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Eighteenth January 1866

My Dear Kent.

[†a]I had a — what shall I call it — magnetic misgiving that you were in bed! I felt quite sure of it yesterday, and was not in the least surprised when I received your note this morning.[†a]

I cannot tell you how grieved we all are, here, to know that you are suffering again. Your patient tone however, and the hopefulness and forbearance of Ferguson's[†4] course, gives us some reassurance. Apropos of which latter reference, I dined with Ferguson at the Lord Mayor's[†5] last Tuesday,[†6] and had a grimly-distracted impulse upon me to defy the Toastmaster, and rush into a speech about him and his noble art, when I sat pining under the imbecility of a variety of Constitutional and Corporational idiots. I did seize him for a moment by the hair of his head (in proposing the Lady Mayoress),[†1] and derived some faint consolation from the Company's response to the reference. O![†2] No man will ever know under what provocation to contradiction and a savage yell of repudiation, I suffered at the hands of the renowned Mr. Goschen:[†3] — feebly complacent in the uniform of Madame Tussaud's Own Military Waxers,[†4] and almost the worst speaker I ever heard in my life! Mary and Georgina sitting on either side of me, urged me to "look pleased". I replied in expressions not to be repeated. Shee[†5] (the Judge) was just as good and graceful, as He (the Member) was bad and gawky.

[a]My mind is at present divided on the subject whether I shall sell myself; — not to the Arch Enemy, but to a London Proposer for five and twenty readings.[†6] I don't like the trouble, but the money looms large.[a]

Bulwer's Lost Tales of Miletus, a most (I can't write to day) noble book! He is an extraordinary fellow, and fills me with admiration and wonder.

[a]The Master of Ravenswood an immense success for Fechter. It will put him soundly on his legs, long before its run is out.[a]

It is of no use writing to you about yourself, my Dear Kent, because you are likely to be tired of that constant companion, and so I have gone scratching (with an execrable pen) about and about you. But I come back to you, to let you know that the reputation of this house as a Convalescent Hospital stands (like the house itself) very high, and that testimonials can be produced from credible persons who have recovered health and spirits here, swiftly. Try us. Only try us; and we are content to stake the reputation of the establishment on the result.

Ever affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To EDWIN ROFFE,[†7] 18 JANUARY 1866

MS University of California, Los Angeles.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Eighteenth January 1866

Dear Sir

Coming home from another part of the country, I find your letter a week old.

I have preserved no record of the dramatic performances which took place at Tavistock House when it was my property. There was an account of the last of them[†1] in the Times[†2] (somewhere about the end of 1856 or beginning of 1857), and in the Illustrated News,[†3] and Musical World[†4]. As to Saint Pancras Parish, the only interest I have ever regarded it with, is comprehended in the fact that I consider its vestrymen, paving boards, and other squabbling and jobling luminaries, a public nuisance, the abolition of which unto the end of time is highly desirable.[†5]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Edwin Roffe Esquire

To ROBERT MURRAY SMITH,[†6] 18 JANUARY 1866

MS Mrs Nora Keppel-Palmer.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Eighteenth January 1866.

My Dear Sir

I am greatly obliged to you for your kind interest in the prospects of my son Alfred, and for the invaluable assistance you have rendered him in so generously supporting him with your advice and credit. It is scarcely necessary to add that I have accepted and paid the bill drawn on me, with your guarantee, for Sixty Pounds; and that I thank you heartily.

Immediately on the receipt of Alfred's letter informing me of the Bush-life opening before him, I wrote back to him by the Mail, expressing my unqualified approval of his taking to it, if he could.[†7] A duplicate of that letter I consigned to the care of one of the officers of the Steam Ship, London, whom Alfred had entrusted with a letter to me. Unhappily that devoted ship has foundered at sea with nearly all her passengers and crew.[†8] Perhaps both my letters have gone down in her; one certainly has.

Allow me to repeat my thanks to you, and to wish you many happy years.
My Dear Sir | Yours faithfully and obliged
CHARLES DICKENS

Robert Murray Smith Esquire

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 19 JANUARY 1866

Extract in Sotheby's catalogues Mar 1979 and 1981; MS 2 pp.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Nineteenth January 1866

My Dear Ouvry.

I saw Edward Chapman, the retiring partner this morning and I spoke to him as we agreed.... With moderation and forbearance I insisted on exercising his right of having my books, in so far as they relate to my own affairs and partnership, thoroughly examined by an accountant, stock taken and so forth and all payments charged against me verified. In short, that I must have a thorough and complete audit. And that to that end, I thought it best that they should put their solicitors in communication with you.

He at once replied that nothing could be more reasonable, and that he would immediately comply and act.

I pointed out to him the objections that I had to his cousin's[†1] remaining in the business alone, and that my main objection was, that "he could do nothing straight". He replied, it was no doubt a just objection, and that it had been strongly urged upon him in the Trade, since the first intention on his (Edward's) part, of retiring, had become known.

Faithfully yours ever

CHARLES DICKENS

Frederic Ouvry Esquire.

To W. H. RUSSELL, 19 JANUARY 1866

MS Washington State University.

[Copy sent to Uxbridge][†2]

Gad's Hill Place | Higham by Rochester
Friday Night Nineteenth Jany | 1866.

My Dear Russell.

You will be as welcome as the flowers in May,[†3] on Thursday the 25th. Leave Charing Cross for Gravesend, by Express, at five minutes past 4 in the afternoon, and outside the Gravesend Station you will find me waiting to drive you over to my house.[†4]

Observe: you must be careful to get into the Express Train, as 2 trains bound for Gravesend start nearly together.

No Post captain[†5] shall hurt a hair of your head.

Heartily Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS HENRY WOOD,[†1] 19 JANUARY 1866*

MS Robert H. Taylor Collection, Princeton University. Address: Mrs. Wood | Ashbury House | St. John's Wood Park | N.W.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Nineteenth January 1866

My Dear Mrs. Wood

I doubt your having the power of preventing the representation at the Surrey,[†2] or indeed of preventing any theatrical representation founded on any book of yours. The publication of a resumé of your book,[†3] I think you could certainly prevent by applying to the Court of Chancery for an Injunction against it. The fact of the Play being American,[†4] has, to the best of my belief, nothing to do with the case. The establishment of an American copyright in the piece, could carry no copyright here. But our English law (which has little tenderness for such an idle thing as Literature) does not, to the best of my belief, give you the power of preventing ANY stage adaptation of your book.

To prevent some of my works from being dramatized, I have myself at the time of their publication caused them to be arranged in a dramatic form, and have entered the "play" — or the hurried jumble of the book so called — at the Stamp Office and Stationers' Hall, as my copyright, and my work.[†5] The Managers have as yet been afraid to try the question with me whether this artifice invests me with any legal right of preventing their producing any dramas on those stories. I resorted to the device, because I believed I was quite powerless without it.

Mr. Webster cannot have handed you over to the Surrey, in virtue of his agreement, if (as I take for granted) his agreement was made between you and him and his own Theatre the Adelphi.

In haste, Believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Wood.

To SIR WILLIAM FERGUSSON, 23 JANUARY 1866*

MS Private.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Twenty Third January 1866

My Dear Sir William

I am heartily sorry that we have some people coming here on Saturday, and therefore are not free to accept your kind and welcome invitation. It would have afforded me very great pleasure to do so, and I am not at all in a hospitable mood towards my expected visitors.

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Sir William Fergusson

To MRS BROOKFIELD,[†1] 24 JANUARY 1866*

MS Morgan Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Twenty Fourth January 1866

My Dear Mrs. Brookfield

The difficulty is this:— We have just begun the publication of a story nine or ten months long.[†2] The publication of two serial stories together, in so small a space, is very hazardous. Only under very exceptional circumstances have I tried it, and then with very great distrust.

[†a][There are a good many Verys in the above paragraph. Please regard them as expressive of the earnestness inseparable from my communication with you.][†a]

But if you would like me to read your story[†3] myself, I will gladly do so — on the one condition that you promise not to hate me, if nothing comes of it. I can afford to be hated by some people, but I am not rich enough to put you in possession of that luxury.

Faithfully Yours ever
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Brookfield

To MISS MARY DICKENS, [26 JANUARY 1866]

Envelope only, MS Fales Library, New York University. Address: Miss Dickens, | Gad's Hill Place, | Higham | by | Rochester. PM 26 Jan 66.

To JOHN FORSTER, 26 JANUARY 1866

Text from MDGH, III, 225.

OFFICE OF "ALL THE YEAR ROUND"
Friday, 26th January, 1866

My Dear Forster,

I most heartily hope that your doleful apprehensions will prove unfounded. These changes from muggy weather to slight sharp frost, and back again, touch weak places, as I find by my own foot; but the touch goes by. May it prove so with you!

Yesterday Captain [Randolph],[†1] Captain [Houston Stewart],[†1] and Captain [Tatham],[†1] dined at Gad's. They are, all three, naval officers of the highest reputation. [Randolph] is supposed to be the best sailor in our Service. I said I had been remarking at home, à propos of the London,[†2] that I know of no shipwreck of a large strong ship (not carrying weight of guns) in the open sea, and that I could find none such in the shipwreck books. They all agreed that the unfortunate Captain Martin[†3] must have been unacquainted with the truth as to what can and what can not be done with a Steamship having rigging and canvas; and that no sailor would dream of turning a ship's stern to such a gale — unless his vessel could run faster than the sea. ———[†4] said (and the other two confirmed) that the London was the better for everything that she lost aloft in such a gale,[†5] and that with her head kept to the wind by means of a storm topsail[†6] — which is hoisted from the deck and requires no man to be sent aloft, and can be set under the worst circumstances — the disaster could not have occurred. If he had no such sail, he could have improvised it, even of hammocks and the like. They said that under a Board of Enquiry into the wreck, any efficient witness must of necessity state this as the fact, and could not possibly avoid the conclusion that the seamanship was utterly bad; and as to the force of the wind, for which I suggested allowance, they all had been in West Indian hurricanes and in Typhoons, and had put the heads of their ships to the wind under the most adverse circumstances.

I thought you might be interested in this, as you have no doubt been interested in the case. They had a great respect for the unfortunate Captain's character, and for his behaviour when the case was hopeless,[†7] but they had not the faintest doubt that he lost the ship and those two hundred and odd lives.

Ever affectionately

[CD.]

To W. H. WILLS, 28 JANUARY 1866

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Twenty Eighth January | 1866

My Dear Wills.

After we parted yesterday I chance-lighted on the information that Mitchell,[†8] having of yore burnt his fingers a good deal, speculates very little now, yet likes to be considered as doing much in that way.

This is worth bearing in mind.[†1] Also, that he may have some dread of giving offence to Fanny Kemble.[†2]

Proceeding on your own judgment and observation, of course you will more than satisfy me. I suggest that perhaps it would be best to keep our figures back, — always, if you approve. I would take up the ground thus: Here is Mr. Dickens, whose position you understand probably at least as well as I do, constantly entreated to read, and proposed to in all manner of ways. He is enough at leisure to undertake in town and country (suggesting the country places) 30 readings, or 20, or 15. The business of such things is not in our way since the death of Mr. Arthur Smith.[†3] He is willing to undertake them for a sum of money. Are you willing to enter into negociation with me for buying him?

Questions of detail to be agreed upon, if terms agreed upon. They are chiefly, avoidance of morning readings[†4] as much as possible, both as distasteful to me, and as not addressing my large miscellaneous following, which is limited to no class — limitation of country places, to those first class ones which I have proved to be the best for me — and agreement beforehand between us, on the rooms to be engaged, according as I also have proved them.

I would lead him to an offer, if he should be disposed to make one; but I would throw the terms of it, in money, upon him.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To THOMAS HYDE HILLS, 29 JANUARY 1866

Extract in American Art Association catalogue, Nov 1927. MS 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill Place, 29 Jan 66; addressed Thomas Hyde Hills.

Your note reminds me of an unkept promise to send two boxes of those admirable Pickwick Lozenges[†5] to my friend Layard. Will you cause them to be forwarded as from me.

To MRS PROCTER, [29 JANUARY 1866]

Envelope only in Phillips catalogue, June 1996. Address: Mrs. Procter | 32 Weymouth Street | Portland Place | London | W. PM 29 Jan 66 Rochester.

To CHARLES FECHTER, [LATE JANUARY 1866]

Mention in To Miss Hogarth, 31 Jan 66. Date: clearly written shortly before that letter.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 31 JANUARY 1866*

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Thirty First January 1866

My Dearest Georgy

I will come down by the Express tomorrow afternoon, and will expect the Basket at Gravesend.

Andalusia[†1] was immensely impressed by the Play[†2] last night. It went very finely. I had found a long letter here from Fechter, in which he had asserted his views of the Palgrave Simpson affair;[†3] to which I had replied that he had acted in a highly intemperate manner, and that to be highly intemperate was to be wrong. When I went round to his room he said that he knew he ought not to have committed himself by writing the letter, and that he wished he had not done it; but that P.S. was the last drop in a full cup, and it bubbled over in that form. So he was very reasonable.

Andalusia told me, as an instance of the extraordinary irascibility that has shewn itself in Cockburn, this lively anecdote:— She was talking to Cockburn[†4] in a corner at some party, when Bernal Osborne came up, and said, "Oho! Well! A very good match. The Chief Justice and Lady Molesworth will make an excellent pair."[†5] In acknowledgement of which facetious compliment, Cockburn suddenly replied with the strongest emphasis: "Sir, I will tell you what you are. You are a damned impertinent vulgar scoundrel."

I am awaiting the evening with my usual feelings.[†6]

Ever affectionately

CD.

Tell Harry[†7] that I looked over Mrs. Hulkes's proof[†8] yesterday, and corrected a printer's mistake in it. I hope there were no others.

To J. L. O'SULLIVAN,[†9] 31 JANUARY 1866*

MS Beinecke Library, Yale University.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Thirty First January 1866

Dear Sir

I am sorry to reply to your letter that I cannot possibly undertake to originate, or to guarantee, any such appeal in the Times as you describe. My so doing would involve me (as I know by experience) in a hopeless maze of correspondence and interview.

Surely this unfortunate gentleman's[†1] case could be stated through the instrumentality of some responsible minister of his own Church?

I shall be happy to make my subscription Three Guineas,[†2] and to respond to your call for it at any time.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

J. L. O'Sullivan Esquire

To JOHN CHORLEY,[†3] [?JANUARY 1866]

Text from N, III, 532 (dated [1867], without authority). Date: presumably not too long after Christmas 1865, when Chorley inscribed his book to CD (see below); perhaps, in view of CD's apology, late Jan 66.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT

My Dear Sir

I should have thanked you sooner for the remarkable book[†4] in which you have done me the honour to inscribe my name, but that I wished to do so by the hands of my[†5] brother,[†6] who leaves here to-morrow. Accept, I entreat you, my cordial thanks for your most acceptable remembrance of a brother writer and for the emotion you have awakened in me by the Wife's Litany.[†7] I have read it with great attention and have been greatly impressed by it. Some years ago I also was so haunted by a vivid dream that I had no rest until I wrote it.[†8] In the telling of this dream of yours there is a wild weird music — a ghostly night strain — which seems familiar to my broken sleep, and which is sounded by a master hand. And if I had as a child heard the Mariners on Cape Despair[†9] read by father at the fireside, I should not have found a distincter place for it in my memory than it holds.

My dear sir, | Yours faithfully
[CHARLES DICKENS]

February

To FREDERIC CHAPMAN, 2 FEBRUARY 1866

Extract in Henry Bristow of Ringwood catalogue No. 277 (1982); MS 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill Place, 2 Feb 66; addressed Frederic Chapman.

Commiserating with Chapman in the illness of his wife[†1] and other domestic misfortunes, and assuring him that he would not expect to see him at such a time.

To PERCY FITZGERALD, 2 FEBRUARY 1866

MS Berg Collection.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Second February 1866

My Dear FitzGerald.

I ought to have written to you days and days ago, to thank you for your charming book on Charles Lamb[†2] — to tell you with what interest and pleasure I read it as soon as it came here — and to add that I was honestly affected (far more so than your modesty will readily believe) by your intimate knowledge of those touches of mine concerning childhood.[†3]

Let me tell you now that I have not in the least cooled, after all, either as to the graceful sympathetic book, or as to the part in it with which I am honored. It has become a matter of real feeling with me, and I postponed its expression because I couldn't satisfactorily get it out of myself, and at last I come to the conclusion that it must be left in.

My Dear FitzGerald | Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Percy FitzGerald Esquire

To W. C. MACREADY, 2 FEBRUARY 1866*

MS Morgan Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Second February 1866

My Dearest Macready

I should have written to you at Christmas time, but that I have been debating whether to read or no, and paused until I should have glimmerings of the probabilities and improbabilities of my coming to Cheltenham again for that purpose. I might just as well have made no pause, for at this moment I am quite in the dark about it. The difficulty of getting the business-details well managed is so great that I have become sick at heart of imbecility, and have ideas of selling myself out and out to some Demon of the Mitchell circle. Then arises the irreconcileable difference that the Seller of his Soul for a certain number of nights, looks at the bargain from the Artist's point of view; the Infernal Bidder, from the tradesman's. Places, times, subjects, get suggested, that the undersigned Faust cannot stomach. He and the Fiend then glare at one another, and make no progress.

And yet it was only last Wednesday night that I went up to Islington[†1] (of all places in the world) to read for Oxenford,[†2] or rather for a work in which he was interested;[†3] and really the crowds turned away, and the effect of Copperfield upon those who got in, "Keyinder" (as your friends the Americans would say) reproached me for not going on with it.[†4]

We are all in fair trim here. Katie's husband is very much better. He will never be strong, but he is greatly better. Katie herself is rather delicate — about the chest and heart, I think — and could not maintain the family reputation in some Scotch Reels. Mary and Georgina are both very well. Boys all well. (I never sing their praises, because they have so often disappointed me). One of them, Alfred, went out to Melbourne in the last outward passage of the London, preceding her ship-wreck. Her second officer came to me at the office, and took out letters now lying with himself at the bottom of the Ocean. We have here the Captain who is considered the best sailor in our service (Randolph[†5] of the Orlando),[†6] and also Captain Houston Stewart,[†7] Superintendent of Chatham Dockyard, an officer of very high reputation, and also Captain Tatham,[†8] now fitting out the Bellerophon,[†9] of which great things are expected. These three, dining here the other day, had not the faintest doubt, that that unfortunate ship went down through bad seamanship. They had all three been in typhoons and hurricanes, and they said that no sailor could conceivably put his ship about, to run before such a gale, because the wind and sea, being faster than his ship, must inevitably destroy it; whereas, under a storm trysail[†10] with her head to the wind, she would have knocked the passengers about, but, humanly speaking, would have brought them through it. They explained that such a sail is hoisted from the Deck without any man going aloft; and also that if the ship were so ill found in canvas as to have no such sail aboard (which they thought likely) a man of resource would have had it made, in any weather that ever blew, even out of the men's hammocks. I was so greatly interested in their modest certainty on the matter, that I think you may be.

Fechter is drawing greatly, with a new version of the Bride of Lammermoor; to which I did a good deal, stimulated by the desire to put Scott on the stage in his own gallant manner and exactly like himself. And I really think that the Piece is the book in action. Pantomimes at Drury Lane and Covent Garden, both attractive.[†1] Fund[†2] getting very poor. The demands upon them are heavy, and the Public Subscriptions are split between it, the Dramatic College, and the Equestrian and Theatrical Fund.[†3] I have got the present Lord Mayor (whom I have known some time) to take the Chair for them,[†4] this next Passion-Week. He is a Jew, and will carry with him Rothschild,[†5] Montefiore,[†6] and all the rich Jews: so I hope the one dinner will be at least as productive as two. Buckstone (in a wig, contrived with great art) rather younger than he was a quarter of a century ago. Men's minds failing them with fear,[†7] as a dismal Rumour strengthens that the Keans[†8] are coming back to the Princess's.[†9]

My dear Macready I won't dispute your right to be a little (a very little, mind!) infirm: but Lord! here is Forster, eighty four years of age! I saw him at the Athenaeum the day before yesterday, as ferociously gouty as Commodore Trunnion,[†10] and not in the least sensible of the delightful spectacle he had before him in seeing me. Wilkie Collins is seventy seven, but very cheerful. Edwin Landseer attained (by nerves) his hundred and twenty eighth birthday, last week. Quin[†11] is so asthmatic that you are a Babby to him, but in reckless joviality he is twenty three. Boxall[†12] (with those three perpendicular dints in his forehead, which Nature always seems to me to have made, with an intention of finishing him off bye and bye, which she never carried out), moons amiably here and there, whispering about poor Lady Eastlake:[†13] who has come back to Fitzroy Square,[†14] and is, for the time, greatly broken.

You won't be surprised to see me, one way or other, before long? I am writing a word on that head to Mrs. Macready and a word to Katie, too, about her little book.[†1]

Ever My Dearest Macready | Your most affectionate and attached

CD.

To MRS MACREADY, 2 FEBRUARY 1866

Extract in Francis Edwards catalogue, No. 4; dated 2 Feb 66; addressed Mrs Macready.

I have been writing a few words to Macready by this post, I have been telling him how my Christmas and New Year remembrances (written remembrances only) have been delayed by my uncertainty whether to resume my Readings or not, and now I am still undecided.

To MISS CATHERINE MACREADY, [?2 FEBRUARY 1866]

Mention in To Macready, 2 Feb. Date: probably written same day.

To MRS ROBERTS,[†2] 2 FEBRUARY 1866*

MS Mr Geoffrey Sircom.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Second February 1866.

Madam.

I can only assure you in reply to your letter, that I quite concur with your observations — that I had nothing whatever to do with the business arrangements of last Wednesday Evening[†3] — and that I was much inconvenienced by them myself. The keeping of strict faith with all classes of the public, and the reception of them with the utmost courtesy, are the first considerations impressed upon all persons entrusted with any part in the management of my own Readings.

Faithfully Yours
Charles Dickens

Mrs. Roberts

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 5 FEBRUARY 1866*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | †aEhrenberg Hall | Torquay.†a

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Fifth February 1866

My Dear Miss Coutts

You know Mr. Sawyer†4 of Tunbridge Wells, with whom your nephew†5 was, and with whom my youngest boy is.†1 I have the highest opinion of him, as a thoroughly conscientious and good man; and I am more than usually interested in him just now, by reason of his having thrown upon his poor means (through a sudden death), a widowed sister and six little children.

He is very desirous to get a Colonial Bishopric, in a climate where these children and his own could live. I believe a better man for the purpose could hardly be. Tasmania — Australia and New Zealand — are the fields of his limited ambition. The Archbishop of Canterbury†2 and the Bishop of London†3 are (as I understand the case) cognizant of his wish, and favorably disposed towards him.†4 If you could give him your aid, it would undoubtedly serve him greatly.†5 He is too modest to ask for it himself.

He is discreet, learned, a good preacher, a frank conscientious man, with the soul of a Christian gentleman. Such a clergyman, at the head of two families of English children†6 and accompanied by a wife†7 who has a remarkable power of winning the attachment and confidence of young people, would surely carry with him into an English Colony, the influences most important in such an office as he seeks to fill.

Believe me ever | Your affectionate and faithful
CHARLES DICKENS

To F. C. BEARD, 8 FEBRUARY 1866

MS Dickens House. Address: F. Carr Beard Esquire | 44 Welbeck Street | Cavendish Square.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Eighth February 1866

My Dear Frank Beard

I shall be very glad to be thoroughly examined, and will be with you some five minutes before 6.30.

But as I have told the chef at Verey's†8 that I am going to dine there, let us still do so — with Wilkie — at 7. Will you send round to Wilkie and let him know with my love that I expect him at Verey's aforesaid to dine with us there at 7 this day?

Ever Yours

To DR F. T. BOND,[†1] 8 FEBRUARY 1866

Text from Henry Bristow of Ringwood catalogue No. 286 (1985); MS (3rd person) 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill Place, 8 Feb 66; addressed Dr Bond.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Dr. Bond, and begs to say, in reply to Dr. Bond's obliging letter, that he cannot have the pleasure of reading to the members of the Hartley Institution.[†2]

To MRS BROOKFIELD, [8 FEBRUARY 1866]

MS (envelope) Dartmouth College, New Hampshire. Address: Mrs Brookfield | 6 Sydney Place | Onslow Square | S.W. PM 8 Feb 66.

To PERCY FITZGERALD, 8 FEBRUARY 1866

Text from Percy Fitzgerald, Memories of CD, 1913, p. 36.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday, Eighth February 1866.

My dear Fitzgerald,

I send you the enclosed[†3] from Procter, just as I received it here last night.

Faithfully yours always,
CHARLES DICKENS.

To MRS LOVE,[†4] 8 FEBRUARY 1866

Mention in Anderson catalogue No. 4289 (Jan 1937); MS 1 p.; dated 8 Feb 66; addressed Mrs Love.

Saying that the second and third instalments of an article had not been received.[†5]

[? H. N.] O'NEIL,[†6] 8 FEBRUARY 1866

MS Professor K. J. Fielding.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Eighth February 1866.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his Compliments to Mr. O'Neil, and must beg to be excused from appearing in a list of "Patrons" of the intended performance, as he has a great objection to patronizing anything.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 9 FEBRUARY 1866

MS Berg Collection.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Ninth February 1866

My Dearest Georgy.

I found your letter here when I came back on Wednesday evening, and was extremely glad to get it.

Frank Beard wrote me word that with such a pulse as I described, an examination of the heart was absolutely necessary, and that I had better make an appointment with him alone for the purpose. This I did. I was not at all disconcerted, for I knew well beforehand that the effect could not possibly be, without that one cause at the bottom of it. There seems to be degeneration of some functions of the heart. It does not contract as it should. So I have got a prescription of iron, quinine and digitalis, to set it a going, and send the blood more quickly through the system. If it should not seem to succeed, on a reasonable trial, I will then propose a consultation with someone else. Of course I am not so foolish as to suppose that all my work can have been achieved without some penalty, and I have noticed for some time a decided change in my buoyancy and hopefulness:— in other words, in my usual "tone."

I shall wait to see Beard again on Monday, and shall most probably come down that day. If I should not, I will telegraph after seeing him. Best love to Mamie.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To W. H. WILLS, 9 FEBRUARY 1866

Extract in Anderson Galleries catalogue No. 2130 (1927); MS 1 p; dated 9 Feb 66; addressed Wills.

There seems to be degeneration of some functions of the heart.... I am not so foolish as to suppose that all my work can have been achieved without some penalty, and I have noticed for some time a decided change in my health.

To SAMUEL LOVER, 10 FEBRUARY 1866

MS W. A. Foyle.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Saturday Tenth February 1866

My Dear Lover.

The Blush[†1] is not yet published, and I enclose Proof for your correction.

I fear the enclosed MS is not strong enough, put side by side with the tremendous realities of the late storms.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Samuel Lover Esquire

To THE EDITOR, UNIVERSALIST NEWSPAPER, [?MID-FEBRUARY 1866]

Mention in To Terry, 21 Feb. Date: probably written earlier in same month.

To F. C. BEARD, 16 FEBRUARY 1866

MS Dickens House. Address: F. Carr Beard Esquire | 44 Welbeck Street | Cavendish Square | W.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Sixteenth February 1866

My Dear Frank Beard

When I am in the rare circumstances of being in the least amiss, I am so surrounded on all sides by anxious people — here, at Gad's Hill, and where not — that I don't like you to bear the whole responsibility of my being out of sorts, and don't like them to worry me. Therefore if you don't find me "picking up", and promising to be permanently picking up, next Monday, let us have a conference with some one, and so afterwards go on wheels. I have a notion of Brinton[†1] of Brook Street. Priestley[†2] (for whom I have a great personal liking) once took him to Wills, and no harm came of it. — You see my expectations of another advisor are not exaggerated!

Ever Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOSEPH BLAND,[†3] 17 FEBRUARY 1866*

MS Brian Lake. Address: Mr. Bland | 478 New Oxford Street | W. C.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Seventeenth February 1866

Mr. Charles Dickens sends his compliments to Mr. Bland, and is very sorry that he should have supposed the appointment for this afternoon to have gone off; but he made that mistake, in consequence of not having received the address at which he was to call. He will shortly propose another, but is not at this moment sufficiently certain of his engagements to do so.

To CHARLES KNIGHT,[†1] 17 FEBRUARY 1866*

MS University of Kentucky.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Seventeenth Feby 1866

My Dear Knight

I am delighted to have your reminder of the 15th. of March.[†2] We have booked it, and look forward to it.

Ever Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To THOMAS ADOLPHUS TROLLOPE,[†3] 17 FEBRUARY 1866

MS Berg Collection.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Seventeenth February | 1866

My Dear Trollope.

I am heartily glad to hear from you. It was such a disagreeable surprise to me to find that you had left London, on the occasion of your last flying visit, without my having seen you, that I have never since got it out of my mind. I felt as if it were my fault (though I don't know how that can have been!), and as if I had somehow been traitorous to the earnest and affectionate regard with which you have inspired me.

The lady's verses[†4] are accepted by that Editorial Potentate, and shall presently appear.

I am not quite well, and am being touched up (or down) by the Doctors. Whether the irritation of mind I have endured pending the discussions of a preposterous Clerical Body called a Convocation,[†5] and whether the weakened hopefulness of mankind which such a dash of the Middle Ages in the color and pattern of 1866 engenders,[†6] may have anything to do with it, I don't know.

What a happy man you must be in having a new house to work at![†7] When it is quite complete and the roc's[†8] egg hung up, I suppose you will get rid of it bodily and turn to at another.

Daily News correspondent,[†1] Novel,[†2] and Hospitality! Enough to do indeed. Perhaps the day might be advantageously made longer for such work — or say the Life. And yet I don't know. Like enough we should all do less, if we had time to do more in.

Layard was with us for a couple of days a little while ago, and brought the last report of you — and of your daughter,[†3] who had made a great impression on him. I wish he had had the Keepership of the National Gallery,[†4] for I don't think his Government will hold together through many weeks.[†5]

I wonder whether you thought as highly of Gibson's[†6] art, as the lady did who wrote the verses. I must say that I did not, and that I thought it of a mechanical sort, with no great amount of imagination in it. It seemed to me as if he "didn't find me" in that, as the servants say, but only provided me with carved marble, and expected me to furnish myself with as much idea as I could afford.[†7]

My Dear Trollope | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To H. G. ADAMS, 19 FEBRUARY 1866

Text from N, III, 460.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Monday Nineteenth February 1866

Dear Mr. Adams,

I am thoroughly well pleased to know that my last reading[†8] was so useful to the Institution.[†9]

There is, I am sorry to say, no kind of vacancy here, except for suitable contributors. These are always welcome, always paid for, and always listed by their suitability alone.

I have no faith in the prospering of any periodical addressed to the young ones. The greater should include the less, and a good miscellany for grown people, should have much in it of interest to growing people.

This is not as hopeful a reply to your letter as I could desire to write, but it is the honest truth.

Faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To JOHN HOLLINGSHEAD,[†1] 19 FEBRUARY 1866*

MS David Borowitz.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Monday Nineteenth February 1866

My Dear Hollingshead

Unfortunately my vote is promised to another wretched fellow creature.[†2] The competition of Misery and Pain for these comparatively slight benefits, is most deplorable.

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

John Hollingshead Esquire

To R. M. ROSS,[†3] 19 FEBRUARY 1866

Text in MDGH, III, 226 checked from MS Sotheby's, Oct 1975.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, | KENT.
Monday Nineteenth February 1866

Dear Sir

I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your obliging letter, enclosing a copy of the Resolution passed by the members of the Saint George Club on my last past birthday.

Do me the kindness to assure those friends of mine that I am touched to the heart by their affectionate remembrance, and that I highly esteem it. To have established such relations with readers of my books is a great happiness to me, and one that I hope never to forfeit by being otherwise than manfully and truly in earnest in my vocation.

I am Dear Sir | Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

R. M. Ross Esquire

To MRS BROOKFIELD, 20 FEBRUARY 1866

MS Morgan Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Twentieth February 1866

My Dear Mrs. Brookfield

Having gone through your MS[†1] (which I should have done sooner, but that I have not been very well), I write you these few following words about it. Firstly, with a limited reference to its unsuitability to these pages. Secondly, with a more enlarged reference to the merits of the story itself.

If you will take any part of it and cut it up [†a](in fancy)[†a] into the small portions into which it would have to be divided here for only a month's supply, you will (I think) at once discover the impossibility of publishing it in weekly parts. The scheme of the chapters, the manner of introducing the people, the progress of the interest, the places in which the principal incidents fall, are all hopelessly against it. It would seem as though the story were never coming, and hardly ever moving. There must be a special design, to overcome that specially trying mode of publication; and I cannot better express the difficulty and labor of it than by asking you to turn over any two weekly Nos. of a Tale of Two Cities, or Great Expectations; or Bulwer's story,[†2] or Wilkie Collins's,[†3] or Reade's,[†4] or "At the Bar",[†5] and notice how patiently and expressly the thing has to be planned for presentation in these fragments, and yet for afterwards fusing together as an uninterrupted whole.

Of the story itself,[†6] I honestly say that I think highly. The style is particularly easy and agreeable — infinitely above ordinary writing — and sometimes reminds me of Mrs. Inchbald at her best.[†7] The characters are remarkably well observed, and with a rare mixture of delicacy and truthfulness. I observe this particularly in the brother and sister,[†8] and in Mrs. Neville.[†9] But it strikes me that you constantly hurry your narrative (and yet without getting on) by telling it, in a sort of impetuous breathless way, in your own person when the people should tell it and act it for themselves. My notion always is, that when I have made the people to play out the play, it is, as it were, their business to do it, and not mine. Then, unless you really have led up to a great situation like Basil's death, you are bound in art to make more of it. Such a scene should form a chapter of itself.[†10] Impressed upon the reader's memory, it would go far to make the fortune of the book. Suppose yourself telling that affecting incident in a letter to a friend. Wouldn't you describe how you went through the life and stir of the streets and roads, to the sick-room? Wouldn't you say what kind of room it was, what time of day it was, whether it was sunlight, starlight, or moonlight? Wouldn't you have a strong impression on your mind of how you were received, when you first met the look of the dying man, what strange contrasts were about you and struck you?[†1] I don't want you, in a novel, to present yourself to tell such things, but I want the things to be there. You make no more of the situation than an index might, or a descriptive playbill might in giving a summary of the Tragedy under representation.

As a mere piece of mechanical workmanship, I think all your chapters should be shorter; that is to say, that they should be subdivided. Also, when you change from narrative to dialogue, or vice versâ you should make the transition more carefully. Also, taking the pains to sit down and recall the principal landmarks in your story, you should then make them far more elaborate and conspicuous than the rest. Even with these changes I do not believe that the story would attract the attention due to it, if it were published even in such monthly portions as the space of Fraser[†2] would admit of. Even so brightened, it would not, to the best of my judgment, express itself piecemeal. It seems to me to be so constituted as to require to be read "off the reel." As a book in two volumes, I think it would have good claims to success,[†3] and good chances of obtaining success. But I suppose the polishing I have hinted at (not a meretricious adornment, but positively necessary to good work and good art) to have been first thoroughly administered.

Now don't hate me if you can help it.

Ever very faithfully yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The MS shall be delivered at your house tomorrow. And your petitioner again prays not to be &c.

To THOMAS HEADLAND, 21 FEBRUARY 1866*

MS Maggs Bros Ltd.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,

Wednesday Twenty First February 1866

My Dear Headland.

Can you remember the names of the Agents we employed for the Readings, at Liverpool,[†4] Cheltenham,[†5] and Glasgow?[†6] I think the Liverpool name was Hime, and the Glasgow name Wood. Is that right? Of the Cheltenham name I have no remembrance whatever.

Alfred went out in the London, that unfortunate ship.[†1] He was in the Bush, learning stock Farming, when he last wrote. Frank has, so far, done extremely well in India, and has a very high character. They have both asked to be remembered to you.

I hope you are doing well; and am always | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To CHARLES E. TERRY,[†2] 21 FEBRUARY 1866*

MS Dickens House.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Twenty First February 1866

My Dear Sir

I entreat you to accept my cordial thanks, both for your letter to me and for your letter to the Universalist newspaper.[†3] I have addressed a few words (as you will probably know before you receive this) to the Editor of that journal,[†4] in refutation of a most monstrous assertion[†5] which I hope may now become self-evident.

With renewed thanks
Believe me My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles E. Terry Esquire

To W. C. MACREADY, 23 FEBRUARY 1866*

MS Morgan Library.

6 Southwick Place, Hyde Park, W.
Friday Twenty Third February 1866.

My Dearest Macready.

Would next month, March, be a good time for the Morning Reading and an Evening Reading at Cheltenham?[†6]

The local agents on the last occasion were Messrs. Hale[†7] and Son. Are they people of good repute, or are there any better in their line? Would you ascertain from them the best morning and the best evening in the week for such a purpose — on which the room where I read before, could be had?

I have abandoned the idea of leasing myself out, because I have been unwell! I have been, and still am, really unwell!!! The cause of this phenomonon is pronounced to be "great irritability of the heart". Rest is enjoined, but an occasional Reading rather encouraged than objected to.

With best love to all your house
Ever My Dear Macready | Most affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Wills would represent Headland in checking the local people, and being acting Manager for me. As I read Copperfield in the morning last time, I think I would read it in the evening this time, along with the Trial from Pickwick. In the morning, Little Dombey.

To MRS BENZON, 27 FEBRUARY 1866*

MS Mrs Miriam Green.

6 Southwick Place, Hyde Park W.
Tuesday Twenty Seventh February 1866

My Dear Mrs. Benzon.

We took possession here, only yesterday; Mary indeed, has not yet done so.

Unfortunately, besides that I am not at all well at this present writing, I have an engagement for Sunday, if I should be up to keeping it. Your kind invitation therefore, finds me doubly down.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To [T. R. EELES],[†1] 27 FEBRUARY 1866*

MS R. W. Hansen

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Twenty Seventh February 1866

Dear Sir

Be so good as to bind these 2 Readings separately according to the pattern sent herewith, and to let me have them at your earliest convenience.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To W. C. MACREADY, 27 FEBRUARY 1866*

MS Morgan Library.

6 Southwick Place, Hyde Park W.
Tuesday Twenty Seventh February 1866

My Dearest Macready.

Many thanks for your ready help. Wills has written to Hale[†2] and Son by this post, and takes the Friday evening and the Saturday morning.

My love to Katie, and "Retribution" (which I have called Nemesis)[†1] is at the Printer's. I am not quite clear about the other, but am perfectly clear concerning the power and passion of the first. — Will reconsider the second.[†2]

My young friend that is to be,[†3] has struck out a riddle that he will never get an answer to on this side of the dim water!

With kindest love to all | Ever Your most affectionate

CD.

To GEORGE RUSSELL, 28 FEBRUARY 1866*

MS Marjorie, Lady Russell. Address: George Russell Esquire | 4 St. James's Place.

6 Southwick Place Hyde Park W.
Wednesday Twenty Eighth February 1866

My Dear George Russell

I most heartily congratulate you upon your happiness,[†4] and believe me my Dear fellow I am touched by the manner in which you tell me of it, and am proud of being so soon remembered in it.

At any time on Sunday here, or at any time on Monday at the Office, or at any time on Wednesday anywhere, I shall be charmed to be presented to the lady whom I hope to call my friend through many years to come. — I hope she will be a little prepared to like me, in right of my love for her husband.

Pray tell me when and where I shall hold myself at your disposal, to be so honored.

Ever Heartily and Faithfully | Your friend

CHARLES DICKENS

George Russell Esquire

To E. A. HART,[†5] LATE FEBRUARY 1866

Text from The Times, 5 Mar 66. Date: during the week before the meeting of Sat. 3 Mar (see below).

My Dear Sir,

An annual engagement,[†6] which I cannot possibly forego, will prevent my attending next Saturday's meeting,[†7] and, consequently, my seconding the resolution to be intrusted to me for that purpose.[†8] My knowledge of the general condition of the sick poor in workhouses is not of yesterday, nor are my efforts, in my vocation, to call merciful attention to it.[†1] Few anomalies in the land are so horrible to me as the unchecked existence of many shameful sick wards for paupers, side by side with a constantly recurring expansion of conventional wonder that the poor should creep into corners to die rather than fester and rot in such infamous places.[†2] You know what they are,[†3] and have manfully told what they are, to the awakening at last it would seem, of rather more than seven distinguished sleepers.[†4] If any subscription should be opened to advance the objects of the association, do me the kindness to set me down for 20*l.*[†5]

My dear Sir, faithfully yours,
CHARLES DICKENS.

Ernest Hart Esq.

March

To ROBERT CROMPTON,[†6] 1 MARCH 1866

MS Miss Mabel Crompton.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday First March 1866.

Dear Sir,

I am much gratified by the earnestness of your letter and I most readily accept your proffered Dedication.[†7]

As you are so considerate as to consult me in reference to its terms, I beg to reply that the briefer and simpler they are, the more acceptable they will be to me.[†8]

Dear Sir | Faithfully yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Robert Crompton Esquire

To MRS ELLIOT, 2 MARCH 1866

Extract in Goodspeed's Bookshop catalogue No. 293 (Jan 1938); MS 2 pp.; dated 2 Mar 66. Mention of same letter in American Book-Prices Current, 1937-8 gives some more information. Dated from 6 Southwick Place, on AYR paper.

My dear F.[†1]
... I have not yet decided upon going to Bristol at all, as I am wavering between doing a few readings with my own people or selling myself, Faust-like, for thirty readings to a large London house.[†2] In health and spirits I am greatly better, thank God; in short almost myself.... As to my romance[†3] it belongs to my life and probably will only die out of the same with the proprietor.

To MESSRS CLOWES & SON, 5 MARCH 1866*

MS Private.

6 Southwick Place, Hyde Park W | Monday Fifth March 1866.

My Dear Sirs

Will you have the kindness to print the accompanying Reading for me, like the others just now done, and to send me the Proofs here for correction.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Clowes & Son

To GEORGE RUSSELL'S "COUSIN H", 5 MARCH 1866

Mention in next.

To GEORGE RUSSELL, 5 MARCH 1866*

MS Marjorie, Lady Russell. Address: George Russell Esquire | 7 Beaufort Gardens.

6 Southwick Place Hyde Park W
Monday Evening, Fifth March 1866

My Dear George

"Monday the 12th. and that day at 12". According to this elaborate extract from your last, expect me at 7 Beaufort Gardens.

It is a dreadful position — but what can be done concerning your dear Cousin H?[†4] The watches of the night were at odds with those of the morning which was which,[†5] when, in the dim dawn of this Monday, arrived a weary groom, haggard with orders not to leave this unpretending structure (No. 6) until its temporary master under his hand answered a fearful note he brought. This terrible dispatch (of a jocosely mysterious character) referred to your approaching change of condition,[†6] and said in effect:

"Name the day for dining with G. R. and his other Soul, here". After an interval of mental agony in which I turned grey — as you will see — I feebly and bestially replied in my weakness, — "I" — Ha ha ha! — "I am waiting for a letter from George, making another engagement. When that is settled, I will write to you again". — What is now to be done? After dispatching this note, I shall send my man round to the stable for a few straws, and will play with them until I receive your reply to this staggering question:—

It's not my fault. I have not made myself happy and the envy of mankind, as my recompense for the sacrifice:— If I go, will you go?

Distractedly Yours

CD.

To MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL, 6 MARCH 1866*

MS Private.

6 Southwick Place Hyde Park W | Tuesday Sixth March 1866

Please to deliver to the Bearer for me, two copies of the Little Dombey Reading.

CHARLES DICKENS

To ARTHUR CHAPPELL,[†1] 6 MARCH 1866†

MS Beinecke Library, Yale University.

6 Southwick Place Hyde Park W. | Tuesday Sixth March 1866

My Dear Sir

I enclose you my acceptance of the terms.[†2] I have (to prevent any mistake) added a few words about my two people, whom I presume you will pay at just the same rate as poor Arthur Smith allowed them. (They had a fixed sum per week, each, in travelling, and boarded and lodged themselves). One of them has been in my service six and twenty years.[†3] They are both zealous, quick, and well accustomed to the work; and will be generally available at night in any capacity of trust. They have been used to take charge of all the luggage. I may mention while I think of it that Mr. Townsend[†4] shall have a packet of my personal cards. He will find them very useful with Railway-officials, in obtaining many facilities.

I shall be out of town on this next Thursday, Friday, and Saturday.

If you should happen to be disengaged on Sunday, will you join our family dinner here at 1/2 past 6 precisely? It would give my daughter and myself much pleasure.

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To MESSRS CHAPPELL & CO., [?EARLY MARCH 1866]

Summary in George Dolby, CD as I Knew him, p. 5. Date: probably soon after To Chappell, 6 Mar.

He hoped Mr Dolby was a man of resources, otherwise he would find considerable pressure put upon him, and the same difficulties would present themselves as had caused the abandonment of the Readings for three years.[†1]

To JOHN FORSTER, [?EARLY MARCH 1866]

Extract in F, VIII, vii, 700-701. Date: end of Feb 66 according to Forster, but clearly shortly after accepting Chappell's terms on 6 Mar, and the month of his readings at Cheltenham on 23 and 24 Mar (see below).

For some time I have been very unwell. F. B. wrote me word that with such a pulse as I described, an examination of the heart was absolutely necessary. "Want of muscular power in the heart," B. said. "Only remarkable irritability of the heart," said Doctor Brinton of Brook-street, who had been called into consultation. I was not disconcerted; for I knew well beforehand that the effect could not possibly be without the one cause at the bottom of it, of some degeneration of some function of the heart. Of course I am not so foolish as to suppose that all my work can have been achieved without some penalty, and I have noticed for some time a decided change in my buoyancy and hopefulness — in other words, in my usual "tone." But tonics have already brought me round. So I have accepted an offer, from Chappells of Bond-street, of £50 a night for thirty nights to read "in England, Ireland, Scotland, or Paris", they undertaking all the business, paying all personal expenses, travelling and otherwise, of myself, John and my gasman; and making what they can of it. I begin, I believe, in Liverpool on the Thursday in Easter week, and then come to London. I am going to read at Cheltenham (on my own account) on the 23rd and 24th of this month,[†2] staying with Macready of course.

To THE SECRETARY, ROYAL HOSPITAL FOR INCURABLES,[†1] [?7 MARCH 1866]

Mention in next. Date: no doubt written same day.

To H. G. ADAMS, 7 MARCH 1866

Text from N, III, 464.

6 Southwick Place, Hyde Park, London, W.
Wednesday Seventh March 1866

Dear Mr Adams,

I have lost sight of the Incurables Hospital for some time; but when it was originated I twice presided for it,[†2] and did my best to set it a-going. I have written to the Secretary strongly recommending yourself and Mrs Adams.[†3]

Faithfully Yours always
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To LADY HARRINGTON,[†4] 7 MARCH 1866*

MS University of Texas, Austin.

6 Southwick Place, Hyde Park
Wednesday Seventh March 1866

My Dear Lady Harrington

I am sorry to reply that I must deny myself the pleasure. I am engaged to George[†5] for Monday the 12th. and I am obliged to dine out on Thursday the 15th. Both these engagements (the second the birthday of an old man)[†6] are opposed to the strict injunction of my doctor. I have been very unwell, and have 30 Readings before me, or I wouldn't mind him!

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To EDMUND YATES, 7 MARCH 1866

MS Robert H. Taylor Collection, Princeton University.

6 Southwick Place Hyde Park W
Wednesday Seventh March 1866

My Dear Edmund.

I have read up "Land at Last",[†7] from the point where we settled it on the occasion of that Cobham walk. Perhaps I cannot better express what I think of its execution than by saying honestly, that all the things in the book the most difficult to do, are the best done.

IF[†1] I could make the necessary opening in A.Y.R. could you tell me any broad leading idea of a story in your mind? And could you follow FitzGerald, IF[†1] I could strike in for you at that point?[†2]

I am going away in the morning, until Sunday only.

Ever
CD.

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 8 MARCH 1866*

MS Huntington Library.

6 Southwick Place Hyde Park W
Thursday Eighth March 1866

My Dear Ouvry

We have come to town until the middle of June.

The Enclosed cheque[†3] is due when dated:— on the 10th. I send it now, as I am going to day into the country until Sunday.

I have just sold myself to the Powers of Evil, for 30 readings:— some in London at St. James's Hall, after Easter. If you would ever like to come and hear David Copperfield (the best) or Doctor Marigold (the newest), I shall be delighted by your giving me notice.

Ever Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [11 MARCH 1866]

Extract in F, VIII, vii, 701. Date: 11 Mar 66, according to Forster.

As to the readings, all I have to do is, to take in my book and read, at the appointed place and hour, and come out again. All the business of every kind, is done by Chappells.[†4] They take John and my other man, merely for my convenience. I have no more to do with any detail whatever, than you have. They transact all the business at their own cost, and on their own responsibility. I think they are disposed to do it in a very good spirit, because, whereas the original proposition was for thirty readings "in England, Ireland, Scotland, or Paris," they wrote out their agreement "in London, the Provinces, or elsewhere as you and we may agree." For this they pay £1500 in three sums: £500 on beginning, £500 on the fifteenth reading, £500 at the close. Every charge of every kind, they pay besides. I rely for mere curiosity on Doctor Marigold (I am going to begin with him in Liverpool, and at St. James's Hall). I have got him up with immense pains, and should like to give you a notion what I am going to do with him.

To ROBERT BROWNING,[†1] 12 MARCH 1866

Text from MDGH, III, 227.

6, Southwick Place, Hyde Park
Monday, 12th March, 1866

My Dear Browning,

Will you dine here next Sunday at half-past six punctually, instead of with Forster? I am going to read Thirty times, in London and elsewhere, and as I am coming out with "Doctor Marigold," I had written to ask Forster to come on Sunday and hear me sketch him.[†2] Forster says (with his own boldness) that he is sure it would not bore you to have that taste of his quality after dinner. I should be delighted if this should prove true. But I give warning that in that case I shall exact a promise from you to come to St. James's Hall one evening in April or May, and hear "David Copperfield," my own particular favourite.

Ever affectionately yours

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To W. C. MACREADY, 12 MARCH 1866*

MS Morgan Library.

6 Southwick Place, Hyde Park W.
Monday Twelfth March 1866.

My Dearest Macready

We did not forget your last past birthday,[†3] but drank to you most lovingly.

As I am almost myself again, and as my Doctor thinks that Readings on the whole may do me more good than harm, I have sold myself to Chappells of Bond Street for 30. In this number, the Little Go[†4] of Cheltenham does not count: the room being so small. But what does count in my Cheltenham proceedings is this. — Wills has determined (partly that he may have assurance of there being nothing amiss with me, and partly that our All The Year Round business may go on as usual without check) to accompany me everywhere. It is very good of him, and I should not like altogether to desert him in any place. Therefore, while I come to you each day, I will ask your leave to have my bedroom at the Inn. He will feel the little grace, I know, and he is so faithfully attached to me that it is his due. Perhaps you will tell me the name of the best Hotel at leisure. And will you ask Katie if she can let me have another copy of the Bird of Paradise?[†1] I cannot imagine when, where, or how, I have mislaid the first. But I cannot put my hand upon it, high or low.

Do you mean to make acquaintance with Little Dombey? It is so difficult, even after all these repetitions, to read aloud with composure, that I have to day begun to go into training, to harden myself to it.

I purpose coming down on the Thursday, in time to dine with you that day. And am, with much love from Self and Co. to you and yours

Ever Your affectionate
CHARLES DICKENS

To DR CHAPMAN,[†2] 13 MARCH 1866*

MS Salisbury House Library, Iowa.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Thirteenth March 1866

Dear Sir

I have been absent, or your note should have been immediately answered.

If it will suit your convenience to call at the office of All The Year Round, on Friday between 12 and 2, I should be happy to see you.[†3]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Dr. Chapman

To CHARLES KENT, 13 MARCH 1866*

MS Lauriat Lane, Jr.

6 Southwick Place, Hyde Park W
Tuesday Thirteenth March 1866

My Dear Kent

Can you come in here on Sunday Evening at halfpast 8, and hear me sketch my Reading of Doctor Marigold, for the edification of Forster, Fechter, and ourselves?

Affecy Yours ever
CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS MORRISON,[†1] 13 MARCH 1866*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Private

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Thirteenth March 1866

Dear Madam

I of course receive your interesting letter in confidence.[†2]

My condemnation cannot in strict reason, I think, be considered so indiscriminate as you would make it, for I purposely used the word "many", in referring to bad sick wards in work houses, so that there should remain an outer margin for the good.[†3] The Vestry of the Parish of Saint Swiffins[†4] describe themselves through their own words and acts, and the responsibility of that description is their own.

For some months to come, I shall have so many engagements out of London, that I cannot at present contemplate a visit to your charge. But I am very glad to have the assurance I derive from your communication, that you administer it in the best spirit.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs Morrison

To DR CHAPMAN, 16 MARCH 1866

MS F. S. Johnson.

Private

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Sixteenth March 1866

Dear Sir

I have had a conversation (of course in confidence) with Mr Wills on the subject of your visit, since you left here today. It is, I regret to assure you, altogether of my opinion that your projected application[†5] would be hopeless.[†6]

Under these circumstances we would both strongly recommend you not to make it.

I beg to enclose the two papers you desired to be returned, and am
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Dr Chapman

To JOHN CROKER BARROW,[†1] [19 MARCH 1866]

Envelope only, MS Professor Harry Stone. Address: John Croker Barrow Esquire | 9 Clarendon Terrace | Ramsgate. PM 19 Mar 66.

To LADY HOUGHTON, 21 MARCH 1866*

MS Trinity College, Cambridge. Address: The | Lady Houghton | Fryston Hall | Ferrybridge | Yorkshire

9 Southwick Place, Hyde Park W.
Wednesday Twenty First March 1866

Dear Lady Houghton

I send you many thanks for your kind remembrance and invitation. But unfortunately I shall have no time at my own disposal, pending the fulfilment of the engagements which will take me into the North. They so cross and recross each other, that it will be as much as I can do to produce myself at my various destinations, — not to mention my having to turn up every now and then in London, as a matter of course, under the most surprising Express circumstances. My acknowledgments to you and Lord Houghton are none the less genuine, believe me.

Trusting that your health may be greatly improved, and that I may have the pleasure of hearing your own testimony to that effect in London here,

I am always | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The | Lady Houghton

I am wearying for bright colour in the sunshine.

To MESSRS WILLIAM SKINNER & CO.[†2] 21 MARCH 1866*

MS P. J. Radford.

6 Southwick Place, Hyde Park.
Thursday Twenty First March 1866

Messrs. Skinner and Co.

Please to make my son Mr. Sydney Smith Dickens R.N. a suit of clothes agreeable to his directions. And a white waistcoat.

CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 23 MARCH 1866*

MS Huntington Library.

Plough Hotel, Cheltenham
Friday Twenty Third March 1866

My Dearest Georgy.

We arrived here quite prosperously, exactly to our time. The local agents are singularly dull and uncommunicative (so Wills reports), but the room seems to be nearly all stalls, both tonight and tomorrow morning. An excellent hotel and good rooms.

I am sorry to report Macready greatly aged, and with bronchitis on him. Johnny[†1] much too tall — listless — and evidently consumptive. Katie, shrunken from her plump condition, and depressed. The "baby"[†2] a fine little fellow, and a capital child — really a child, and not like the Macready children of old. With great difficulty I persuaded Macready (who has not been out for some time) to bring Mrs. M, Katie, and Johnny, to supper here, after tonight's reading. He brightened up wonderfully, in the course of a long talk, but it is a sad truth that he has aged exceedingly.

Ever Your affectionate
CD.

I had No Collars[†3] in the Portmanteau. The faithful Wills plunged out of bed this morning, and bought Six.

To SAMUEL CARTWRIGHT,[†4] 27 MARCH 1866*

Text from transcript, British Dental Association.

6 Southwick Place, Hyde Park W.
Tuesday Twenty Seventh March 1866

My Dear Cartwright

I will call for you tomorrow at 10 minutes past 6.

Faithfully yours ever
CHARLES DICKENS

To THE EDITOR OF THE ATHENÆUM,[†5] 28 MARCH 1866

Facsimile of p. 1 (aa) in Parke-Bernet catalogue No. 79 (Jan 1939); remainder of text from the Athenæum, 31 Mar 66.

[a]GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Twenty Eighth March 1866

To The Editor of the Athenæum
Sir

As the Author of the Pickwick Papers (and of one or two other books), I send you a few facts, and no comments, having reference to a letter signed R Seymour,[†1] which in your editorial discretion you published last week.[†2]

Mr. Seymour the Artist never originated, suggested, or in any way had to do with, save as illustrator of what I devised, an incident, a character (except the sporting tastes of Mr. Winkle), a name, a phrase, or a word, to be found in the Pickwick Papers.

I never saw Mr. Seymour's hand-writing, I believe, in my life.

I never even saw Mr. Seymour but once in my life, and that was within eight and forty hours of his untimely death.[†3] Two persons, both still living, were present on that short occasion.[a†4]

Mr. Seymour died when only the first twenty-four printed pages of the "Pickwick Papers" were published; I think before the next [†b]three or four pages[†b] were completely written; I am sure before one subsequent line of the book was invented.

In the Preface to the Cheap Edition of the "Pickwick Papers," published in October, 1847, I thus described the origin of that work: "I was a young man of three-and-twenty, when the present publishers, attracted by some pieces I was at that time writing in the Morning Chronicle newspaper (of which one series had lately been collected and published in two volumes, illustrated by my esteemed friend Mr. George Cruikshank), waited upon me to propose something that should be published in shilling numbers — then only known to me, or, I believe, to anybody else, by a dim recollection of certain interminable novels in that form, which used, some five-and-twenty years ago, to be carried about the country by pedlars, and over some of which I remember to have shed innumerable tears, before I served my apprenticeship to Life. The idea propounded to me was that the monthly something should be a vehicle for certain plates to be executed by Mr. Seymour, and there was a notion, either on the part of that admirable humorous artist, or of my visitor (I forget which), that a 'Nimrod Club,' the members of which were to go out shooting, fishing, and so forth, and getting themselves into difficulties through their want of dexterity, would be the best means of introducing these. I objected, on consideration, that although born and partly bred in the country I was no great sportsman, except in regard of all kinds of locomotion; that the idea was not novel, and had been already much used; and that it would be infinitely better for the plates to arise naturally out of the text; and that I should like to take my own way with a freer range of English scenes and people, and was afraid I should ultimately do so in any case, whatever course I might prescribe to myself at starting. My views being deferred to, I thought of Mr. Pickwick, and wrote the first number; from the proof sheets of which Mr. Seymour made his drawing of the Club, and that happy portrait of its founder, by which he is always recognized, and which may be said to have made him a reality. I connected M. Pickwick with a club, because of the original suggestion, and I put in Mr. Winkle expressly for the use of Mr. Seymour. We started with a number of twenty-four pages instead of thirty-two, and four illustrations in lieu of a couple. Mr. Seymour's sudden and lamented death before the second number was published, brought about a quick decision upon a point already in agitation; the number became one of thirty-two pages with two illustrations and remained so to the end."

In July 1849, some incoherent assertions made by the widow of Mr. Seymour, in the course of certain endeavours of hers to raise money,[†1] induced me to address a letter to Mr. Edward Chapman, then the only surviving business-partner in the original firm of Chapman and Hall, who first published the "Pickwick Papers," requesting him to inform me whether the foregoing statement was correct.

In Mr. Chapman's confirmatory answer, immediately written, he reminded me that I had given Mr. Seymour more credit than was his due. "As this letter is to be historical," he said, "I may as well claim what little belongs to me in the matter, and that is, the figure of Pickwick. Seymour's first sketch," made from the proof of my first chapter, "was of a long thin man. The present immortal one he made from my description of a friend of mine at Richmond."[†2]

CHARLES DICKENS

To WILLIAM CULLENFORD,[†3] 29 MARCH 1866*

MS Royal General Theatrical Fund. Address: William Cullenford Esquire | Theatre Royal Haymarket | S.W.

6 Southwick Place, Hyde Park W.
Twenty Ninth March 1866

Dear Mr. Cullenford.

I enclose you Sir Anthony de Rothschild's[†4] cheque.[†5]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To FREDERIC CHAPMAN, 31 MARCH 1866*

MS Dickens House.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Thirty First March 1866

My Dear Sir

I am truly sorry to receive your sad intelligence, and condole with you in your bereavement[†1] with heartfelt sympathy.

It quite concerns me that you should have thought of my business at such a time.[†2]

Hard as it seems to believe so now, Life and Hope are before you; and even in the remembrance of so quiet a death, God already gives you some comfort.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Fredk. Chapman Esquire

April

To THE EDITOR OF THE ATHENÆUM, 3 APRIL 1866

Text from the Athenæum, 7 Apr 66.

There is a verbal mistake in the letter I addressed to you last week, as it is printed in your journal. In the fifth paragraph, the passage "I think, before the next three or four pages were completely written," should stand "I think, before the next twenty-four pages were completely written."

CHARLES DICKENS

To ROBERT PUZEY,[†3] 3 APRIL 1866

MS Widener Collection, Harvard.

6 Southwick Place, Hyde Park | Tuesday Third April 1866

Dear Sir

Your obliging note[†4] has been forwarded to me at this London address. As I have a house here only for the season, and my Library is at my own house in the country, I reply to it, without reference to the original edition of the Pickwick Papers. But I cannot accept your corrections notwithstanding.

The first and the second No. of the Pickwick Papers contained each what is technically called a sheet and a half. Such a sheet of paper folded into such a page must fold into 16 pages. Each of those Nos. must have contained 24 pages, neither more nor less, and the two together cannot possibly have contained 50.

You do not distinguish the difference between what is wholly or partly written — or what is wholly or partly printed — and what is published. Mr. Seymour shot himself before the second No. of the Pickwick Papers (not the third as you would have it) was published. While he lay dead, it was necessary that search should be made in his working-room for the plates to the second No. the day for the publication of which was then drawing on. The plates were found unfinished, with their faces turned to the wall. It was Mr. Chapman who found them and brought them away.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Robt. Puzey Esquire

To WILLIAM LONGMAN,[†1] [4 APRIL 1866]

Envelope only (MS Private). Address: William Longman Esquire | Paternoster Row | E. C.
PM 4 Apr 66.

To BENJAMIN NEAVE,[†2] 4 APRIL 1866*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: Benjamin Neave Esqre. | 5 Highbury Grange | N.

6 Southwick Place, Hyde Park, W. | Wednesday Fourth April 1866.

Sir

In reply to your letter, I beg to inform you that Mrs Alfred L Dickens[†3] is the widow of a deceased brother of mine,[†4] and that I have not the slightest doubt of her responsibility and punctuality as tenant of your house[†5] at £37 per year.

I am Sir | Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

Benjamin Neave Esqre.

To JOHN THOMPSON, [?4 APRIL 1866]*

MS Dr Malcolm Andrews. Date: probably shortly before the first reading tour managed by Chappells (10 Apr-12 June), when they would be preparing publicity; perhaps Wed 4 Apr, when he also wrote from 6 Southwick Place.

6 Southwick Place | Wednesday Morning

John. Mr Chappell wants at least one bill of an old Reading. If you have not got one, perhaps Mr Johnson the Printer[†6] can give or lend you one. One is wanted, somehow or other, immediately.

CHARLES DICKENS

To J. C. PARKINSON, [?EARLY APRIL 1866]

Extract in Percy Fitzgerald, Memories of CD, 1913, p. 322. Date: Five papers by Parkinson appeared in AYR, Apr-June 66, including "Derby Dregs" (see below); CD was probably writing early in Apr.

I think all the subjects good.[†1] "The Derby"[†2] seems to me the least promising, but I may not catch it from your point of view.[†3]

To JOHN BLACKWOOD,[†4] 7 APRIL 1866*

MS Harold Mortlake & Co.

6 Southwick Place, Hyde Park | Seventh April 1866.

My Dear Blackwood

I am heartily obliged to you for your friendly remembrance. Unfortunately, I shall have no open day, no open hour, in Edinburgh; for besides the usual wear and tear of the Readings, I shall be kept in a state of dizzy oscillation between Edinburgh and Glasgow. But I do not thank Mrs Blackwood[†5] or you, the less. I hope you will let me see you in the Retiring-Den.

The trip will be such a whirl, that I shall leave my daughter at home. She begs her kindest regard to Mrs Blackwood and yourself, in which I join.

Believe me always | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

John Blackwood Esquire

To BENSON RATHBONE,[†6] 7 APRIL 1866*

MS Myers & Co.

6 Southwick Place Hyde Park London
Saturday Seventh April 1866

My Dear Sir

I am truly obliged to Mrs Rathbone and you for your hospitable remembrance of me, and beg you both to accept my cordial thanks for it. But there is so much of wear and tear in those readings and travellings, that, whenever I undertake them, I deny myself all personal pleasure, and never make a visit, however strongly disposed. I find this Spartan conduct to be the only means of preserving voice and undivided attention.

Heroically Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Benson Rathbone Esquire

To MRS GORDON,[†1] 8 APRIL 1866*

MS New York Public Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Eighth April 1866

My Dear Mrs. Gordon

I have been away — getting myself into training for thirty Readings (for I have not been quite well lately), and am only now in receipt of your letter. As I shall not be in London until Tuesday, when I read, and as I leave for Liverpool early on Wednesday morning, I write to you at once, instead of coming to see you as I should otherwise have done.

I regret to assure you that I am in fetters as to the Governesses Institution.[†2] Every year, I vote for the same lady. Every year, she doesn't get in. Until she or the Institution is tired of the failure, my promised vote must remain a part of it.

As I am to be in Edinburgh in the week after this next, I shall take your address there with me, and shall try to see you, in the event of your having by that time returned. In the meanwhile Mary and Georgina charge me with their kindest regard, to which I add my own.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS STANFIELD,[†3] 9 APRIL 1866*

MS Beinecke Library, Yale University.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,

Monday Ninth April 1866

My Dear Mrs. Stanfield

I receive your kind note here only this morning, and am heartily glad to get it, and cordially thank you for it.

Unfortunately, I cannot get to Hampstead, before the Pictures go in,[†4] for this reason. — Today, I am obliged to go 20 miles from town.[†5] Tomorrow, I come back, and read at St. James's Hall (for the first time) a very difficult reading.[†6] On Wednesday morning early, I go to Liverpool, to read there the same night. Then, to Manchester. Then, back to Liverpool. Then, on to Edinburgh and Glasgow. I have just sold myself (rather in the Faust way!) for 30 readings, and these rapid movements are the result.

But I send my dear love to Stanfield,[†1] and will come to see him, the moment I draw breath. I heard of your having moved,[†2] and should have come before, but that since I finished my book in the Autumn, I have been very unwell with "Irritability of the heart", and have gone nowhere. As you may infer from my present intentions, I am now coming out again!

I was with Macready at Cheltenham, the week before last. He talked much of Stanfield. He is troubled with bronchitis, but is otherwise not much older. His little boy, the child of the present Mrs. Macready (a really charming woman) is a capital little fellow. And I had my doubts, between ourselves, whether there was not some prospect of another addition to the family party.[†3]

Believe me Ever | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To FELIX MOSCHELES, 12 APRIL 1866*

MS Mrs Danby.

Liverpool, Thursday Twelfth April 1866

My Dear Sir

I am exceedingly sorry that I was so very hard pressed before leaving town last Wednesday morning, that I could not by any means come to you to see the Dombey picture.[†4] But you may rely on my bestowing on it all possible interest and attention when it is hung.

In haste — | Believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Felix Moscheles Esquire

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 13 APRIL 1866†

MS Beinecke Library, Yale University.

Adelphi, Liverpool | Friday Thirteenth April 1866

[

]†5

The reception at Manchester last night was quite a magnificent sight; the whole of the immense audience standing up and cheering.†6 I thought them a little slow with Marigold, but believe it was only the attention necessary in so vast a place. They gave a splendid burst at the end. And after Nickleby (which went to perfection)†1 they set up such a call, that I was obliged to go in again. The unfortunate gas man,†2 a very steady fellow, got a fall off a ladder and sprained his leg. He was put to bed in a public house opposite, and was left there, poor man.

[

]†3

†aWe leave here at 2 on Monday afternoon for Carrick's Royal Hotel, Glasgow: which we reach, I believe, at about 10 that night. The Edinburgh address is the Waterloo Hotel.†a This is the first very fine day we have had. I have taken advantage of it by crossing to Birkenhead and getting some air upon the water. It was fresh and beautiful.

I send my best love to Mamie and hope she is better. I am of course tired (the pull of Marigold upon one's energy, in the Free Trade Hall, was great), but I stick to my tonic and feel, all things considered, in very good tone. The room here (I mean the Hall) being my special favorite and extraordinarily easy, is almost a rest!

Ever My Dearest Georgy | Your most affectionate

CD.

To MISS MARY DICKENS, 14 APRIL 1866

Text from MDGH, II, 252-53.

Adelphi, Liverpool | Saturday, April 14th, 1866

My Dearest Mamie,

The police reported officially that three thousand people were turned away from the hall last night.†4 I doubt if they were so numerous as that, but they carried in the outer doors and pitched into Dolby†5 with great vigour. I need not add that every corner of the place was crammed. They were a very fine audience, and took enthusiastically every point in "Copperfield" and the "Trial." They made the reading a quarter of an hour longer than usual. One man advertised in the morning paper that he would give thirty shillings (double) for three stalls, but nobody would sell, and he didn't get in.

Except that I cannot sleep, I really think myself in much better training than I had anticipated. A dozen oysters and a little champagne between the parts every night, constitute the best restorative I have ever yet tried. John appears low, but I don't know why. A letter comes for him daily; the hand is female; whether Smudger's,[†1] or a nearer one still and a dearer one, I don't know. So it may or may not be the cause of his gloom.

"Miss Emily"[†1] of Preston is married to a rich cotton lord, rides in open carriages in gorgeous array, and is altogether splendid. With this effective piece of news I close.

[Ever your most affectionate
CHARLES DICKENS][†2]

To R. J. GREENE,[†3] 14 APRIL 1866

Extract in N, II, 466.

Liverpool | 14th April, 1866

I decidedly object to the sale of any letter or letters of mine addressed to the late Lady Blessington.[†4] They were written in the confidence of private friendship, and cannot be sold without a breach of confidence and violation of good faith.

To THE COUNTESS RUSSELL, 17 APRIL 1866

Extract in Desmond MacCarthy and Agatha Russell, Lady John Russell, 1910, p. 205.

My Dear Lady Russell,

... In sending my kindest regards to Lord Russell, let me congratulate you on the culminating victory before him, and on the faith and constancy with which the country carries him in its great heart. I have never felt so certain of any public event as I have been from the first that the national honour would feel itself stung to the quick if he were in danger of being deserted.[†5]

Dear Lady Russell, | Ever faithfully yours,
CHARLES DICKENS.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 17 APRIL 1866†

MS Huntington Library.

Glasgow | Seventeenth April, 1866

My Dearest Georgy.

We arrived here (except Wills who went up to Brighton and came back in the night last night)[†1] at 10 yesterday evening. I don't think the journey shook me at all. Dolby provided a superb cold collation and "the best of drinks", and we dined in the carriage, and I made him laugh all the way.

The Let here is very large. Over 400 stalls sold for each night — all the twos sold — and great rush of ones expected. Every precaution taken to prevent my platform from being captured as it was last time;[†2] but I don't feel at all sure that it will not be stormed at one of the two readings.[†3] Wills is to do the genteel tonight at the Stalls, and Dolby is to stem the shilling tide if he can. The poor gasman cannot come on,[†4] and we have got a new one here who is to go to Edinburgh with us. All signs and portents look like a rush here. Of Edinburgh we know nothing, but as its first night has always been shady, I suppose it will stick to its antecedents. [†a]Applications for Readings pour in from all parts of Scotland.

This morning I had a most dismal letter from Fechter who has no ease "ni du corps, ni du cœur", and who expresses his hope that I will not desert him![†5] As I have asked him to come and dine on Sunday at 6, I should like Mary to ask Madame to come too. Of my projected arrival from Edinburgh at about 5 on Sunday morning, I will write tomorrow or next day.[†a]

I like to hear about Harness and his freshness. The Let for the next reading at St. James's is "going" — they report — "admirably". Lady Russell asked me to dinner tomorrow, and I have written her a note today. The rest has certainly done me good. I slept thoroughly well last night, and feel fresh. What tonight's work, and every night's work this week, may do contrariwise, remains to be seen. [†a]You remember Sir Charles Styles[†6] at Lausanne? Think of his turning up, as living at Bath,[†7] and inviting me to stay with him "on my approaching visit to that city to read" — which I hope there is no chance of my visiting in my life for any such purpose.[†8]

I may as well clear the enclosed bill out of my writing-desk, by sending it to you.[†a] I hope Harry's knee may be in the way of mending, from what you relate of it. [†a]My best love to Mamie. Also to the boys.

Ever My Dearest Georgy | Your most affectionate

CD.

As an instance of that part of St. James's Hall which it is impossible to touch, — the Priestleys[†1] (Wills says), I think on the 19th row of stalls, could not hear; while the people behind them, and before them, were driving them mad by hearing perfectly. So on the 8th. row at the Crystal Palace the Music is all confused. On the 7th. and the 9th. all right.[†a]

To CHANDOS WREN HOSKYNS,[†2] 17 APRIL 1866*

MS Dickens House.

Glasgow, | Tuesday Seventeenth April | 1866.

My Dear Wren Hoskyns.

Your letter finds me reading here, or of course I should have gone to the club[†3] and voted for you. My being away from London has prevented my knowing that your name was up, or I should have underwritten it instantly.

I hope — and believe — that there was no need of either service, and that you came in with flying colors.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Chandos Wren Hoskyns Esquire

To JAMES PAYN,[†4] 17 APRIL 1866

MS Christopher Dickens.

Glasgow, Tuesday Seventeenth April | 1866

My Dear Payn

Your letter finds me reading here, and sheds a genial light upon me. I feel its spirit and its expressions, tenderly, and thankfully reply YES![†5] and with all my heart.[†6]

Affectionately Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

James Payn Esquire

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, [?17 APRIL 1866]

Mention in next. Date: probably written same day.

To EDMUND YATES, 17 APRIL 1866

MS Robert H. Taylor Collection, Princeton University.

Carrick's Royal Hotel, Glasgow
Tuesday Seventeenth April 1866

My Dear E. Y.

I hope the enclosed[†1] may be about the best sort of letter for you to use. You are free, of course, to use it in any serviceable way.

I shall be at the Waterloo Hotel Edinburgh, until Saturday Evening. — At St. James's Hall on Tuesday night.

The Flaneur[†2] is very pretty, and has greatly pleased me. The crowds have been enormous. Far ahead of all my previous experience.

Ever Affecy
CD.

To EDWARD DE GEX,[†3] [18 APRIL 1866]

Envelope only, MS Guildhall Museum, Rochester. Address: Private | Edward De Gex Esquire | 4 Raymond Buildings | Gray's Inn | London | W.C. PM Edinburgh 18 Apr 66.

To MISS MARY DICKENS, 18 APRIL 1866

Extract in MDGH, II, 254-55.

Waterloo Hotel, Edinburgh | Wednesday, April 18th, 1866

We had a tremendous house again last night at Glasgow; and turned away great numbers. Not only that, but they were a most brilliant and delicate audience, and took "Marigold" with a fine sense and quickness not to be surpassed. The shillings pitched into Dolby again, and one man writes a sensible letter in one of the papers this morning, showing to my satisfaction (?) that they really had, through the local agent,[†4] some cause of complaint.[†5] Nevertheless, the shilling tickets are sold for to-morrow, and it seems to be out of the question to take any money at the doors, the call for all parts is so enormous. The thundering of applause last night was quite staggering, and my people checked off my reception by the minute hand of a watch, and stared at one another, thinking I should never begin. I keep quite well, have happily taken to sleeping these last three nights; and feel, all things considered, very little conscious of fatigue. I cannot reconcile my town medicine with the hours and journeys of reading life, and have therefore given it up for the time. But for the moment, I think I am better without it. What we are doing here I have not yet heard. I write at half-past one, and we have been little more than an hour in the house. But I am quite prepared for the inevitable this first Edinburgh night. Endeavours have been made (from Glasgow yesterday) to telegraph the exact facts out of our local agent;[†1] but hydraulic pressure wouldn't have squeezed a straight answer out of him. "Friday and Saturday doing very well, Wednesday not so good." This was all electricity could discover.

I am going to write a line this post to Katie, from whom I have a note. I hope Harry's leg will now step out in the manner of the famous cork leg in the song.[†2]

To MRS CHARLES COLLINS, 18 APRIL 1866

Mention in To Mary Dickens, 18 Apr; no doubt written same day.

To GEORGINA HOGARTH, 19 APRIL 1866†

MS Berg Collection. Address: Miss Hogarth | 6 Southwick Place | Hyde Park | London | W.

Edinburgh Thursday Nineteenth April | 1866

[†a] My Dearest Georgy

Before going over to Glasgow, I write to you — hurriedly, of course.[†a]

The house was more than twice better than any first night here previously.†3 There was £90 in it. They were, as usual here, remarkably intelligent, and the Reading went brilliantly. I have not sent up any Newspapers, as they are generally so poorly written that you may know beforehand all the commonplaces that they will write. But the Scotsman has so pretty an article this morning, and (so far as I know) so true a one,†4 that I will try to post it to you, either from here or Glasgow. John and Dolby went over early, and Wills and I follow them at half past eleven.

†b †b

It is cold and wet here. We have laid half crown bets with Dolby that he will be assaulted to night at Glasgow. He has a surprising knowledge of what the receipts will be always, and wins half crowns every night. Chang†5 is living in this house. John (not knowing it) was rendered perfectly drivelling last night by meeting him on the stairs. The Tartar Dwarf†1 is always twining himself up stairs sideways, and drinks a bottle of whiskey per day, and is reported to be a surprising little villain.

†cI will write a line to Mamie tomorrow. My best love to her.

Ever My Dearest Georgy | Your most affectionate

CD.†c

To HENRY GLASSFORD BELL,†2 19 APRIL 1866*

MS Beinecke Library, Yale University.

Royal Hotel Glasgow, Nineteenth April | 1866

My Dear Sir

I am truly sorry to receive the tidings of your sad bereavement,†3 and beg to offer you the assurance of my cordial sympathy.

It may interest you, I hope, to know that I was with Macready at Cheltenham a month ago, and that he hoped I would give you his kindest regard. He suffers from bronchitis, and I found him on the whole much older. But a little talk about the world of occupation and Art which he unquestionably was wrong in excluding himself from, did wonders in the way of reviving his old fire.

Believe me My Dear Sir

Always Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Henry Glassford Bell Esquire

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 19 APRIL 1866*

MS Huntington Library.

Glasgow | Thursday Nineteenth April 1866

My Dearest Georgy

In writing to you from Edinburgh this morning, I forgot to tell you that the address to which to send Mitton's tickets is this:

Thomas Mitton Esquire
Lampton near Hounslow
W.[†4]

Great precautions being taken here against the crowd tonight. Dolby prepared by pills, to defend himself to the last extremity.

Ever affecy.
CD.

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 19 APRIL 1866*

MS Huntington Library.

Glasgow | Thursday Nineteenth April | 1866

My Dear Ouvry.

Mrs. Alfred Dickens, widow of a brother of mine (who lives on an income I allow her) has recently taken a London-suburban house[†1] which proves to be alive with bugs. She has written of her griefs to me, and I have told her, if she gets into difficulty with the landlord, to come straight to you for advice.

I am reading here and in Edinburgh, and have come from Liverpool and Manchester. The crowds turned away have been enormous, and far beyond all previous experience.

Ever Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

Frederic Ouvry Esquire

To MISS MARY DICKENS, 20 APRIL 1866

Extract in MDGH, II, 256-57.

Waterloo Hotel, Edinburgh | Friday, April 20th, 1866

No row at Glasgow last night. Great placards were posted about the town by the anxious Dolby, announcing that no money would be taken at the doors. This kept the crowd off. Two files of policemen and a double staff everywhere did the rest, and nothing could be better-tempered or more orderly. Tremendous enthusiasm with the "Carol" and "Trial." I was dead beat afterwards, that reading being twenty minutes longer than usual; but plucked up again, had some supper, slept well, and am quite right today. It is a bright day, and the express ride over from Glasgow was very pleasant.

Everything is gone here for to-night. But it is difficult to describe what the readings have grown to be. The let at St. James's Hall is not only immense for next Tuesday,[†2] but so large for the next reading afterwards,[†3] that Chappell writes: "That will be the greatest house of the three." From Manchester this morning they write: "Send us more tickets instantly, for we are sold out and don't know what to do with the people." Last night the whole of my money under the agreement had been taken. I notice that a great bank has broken at Liverpool,[†4] which may hurt us there, but when last heard of it was going as before. And the audience, though so enormous, do somehow express a personal affection, which makes them very strange and moving to see.

I have a story to answer you and your aunt with. Before I left Southwick Place for Liverpool, I received a letter from Glasgow, saying, "Your little Emily has been woo'd and married and a'! since you last saw her;"[†5] and describing her house within a mile or two of the city, and asking me to stay there. I wrote the usual refusal, and supposed Mrs. —— to be some romantic girl whom I had joked with, perhaps at Allison's[†1] or where not. On the first night at Glasgow I received a bouquet from ——, and wore one of the flowers. This morning at the Glasgow station, —— appeared, and proved to be the identical Miss Emily, of whose marriage Dolby had told me on our coming through Preston. She was attired in magnificent raiment, and presented the happy ——.

To CHARLES MATHEWS,[†2] 20 APRIL 1866

MS The Garrick Club.

Waterloo Hotel, Edinburgh | Friday Evening Twentieth April | 1866

Dear Sir

I hear that you purpose coming to the Queen Street Hall tomorrow afternoon.[†3] Allow me to assure you that it will give me real pleasure to see you there, and that I heartily wish I could see you elsewhere tonight.[†4]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Mathews | Esquire

To MRS W. H. WILLS, 20 APRIL 1866

MS Huntington Library.

Edinburgh. Friday Twentieth April | 1866

My Dear Mrs. Wills

As a reminder of my having deprived you of your husband (not that you are likely to need any!) I bring you from Edinburgh, a shepherd's Plaid silk dress, which I shall entrust to his care. When you wear it, forgive me as nearly as you can.

There are 20 yards of the dress, in order that there may be something in the nature of a jacket superadded. At least, I believe that is the intention, but your excellent housewifery will know all about it.

Faithfully Yours ever
CHARLES DICKENS

To CHARLES KENT, 22 APRIL 1866

Mention in Parke Bernet catalogue, April 1945; MS 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill Place, 22 Apr 66; addressed Charles Kent; with envelope.

To MRS LAING,[†1] 23 APRIL 1866*

MS Norwich Public Libraries.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Twenty Third April, 1866

My Dear Mrs. Laing

I am happy to find that your heart is still in the work you have so long pursued, and on which you first entered with your late good husband.[†2]

Do not measure the amount of my interest in it, by the brevity of my present reply to your letter. I have work to do elsewhere which will render it impossible for me to attend the dinner.[†3]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To W. P. FRITH,[†4] 24 APRIL 1866*

MS Mr Paul Anthony DeSimone.

6 Southwick Place, Hyde Park W. | Twenty Fourth April | 1866

My Dear Frith

I shall be away, reading, on the day for which you kindly invite me[†5] — and indeed have so much to do, in so many places, that I am obliged to forego all such pleasures this season.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

W. P. Frith Esquire

To JOHN FORSTER, [?25 APRIL 1866]

Extract in F, VIII, vii, 702. Date: from Liverpool, according to Forster; CD arrived there 25 Apr.

It was a terrible shock to me, and poor dear Carlyle[†6] has been in my mind ever since.[†7] How often I have thought of the unfinished novel.[†8] No one now to finish it. None of the writing women come near her at all.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 26 APRIL 1866†

MS Huntington Library.

Liverpool | Thursday Twenty Sixth April 1866

My Dearest Georgy.

[†a]I write a hurried line before going over to Manchester,[†1] and will write to Mamie tomorrow. We must dine at 7 on Sunday by the bye, for the Sunday train is all day long upon the road and is not due until half past 6.[†a]

We noticed between London and Rugby (the first stoppage), something very odd in our carriage yesterday; not so much in its motion as in its sound. We examined it as well as we could, out of both windows, but could make nothing of it. On our arrival at Rugby, it was found to be on fire! And as it was in the middle of the train, the train had to be broken to get it off into a siding by itself, and get another carriage on. With this slight exception we came down all right.

My voice is much better,[†2] I am glad to report, and I mean to try Beard's remedy after dinner to day. This is all my present news, except that Mr. Desmond Ryan's[†3] Jew-attorney[†4] has bolted with the damages obtained against the Orchestra![†5]

With best love | Ever my Dearest Georgy | Your most affectionate

CD.

To MISS MARY DICKENS, [27 APRIL] 1866

Extract in F, VIII, vii, 703. Date: CD read in Manchester on 26 Apr. Address: "his daughter" according to Forster.

Such a prodigious demonstration last night at Manchester, that I was obliged (contrary to my principle in such cases) to go back. I am very tired to-day; for it would be of itself very hard work in that immense place, if there were not to be added eighty miles of railway and late hours to boot.

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 28 APRIL 1866

MS Lytton Papers.

Liverpool, Saturday Twenty Eighth April 1866

My Dear Bulwer Lytton

I am reading here,[†1] and have had your letter forwarded from home to day.

Unfortunately I have no copy of the letter to which you refer. It was addressed to the Times, and was published in that paper, on the day after the execution of the Mannings, husband and wife, at Horsemonger Lane Jail.[†2] The date of that execution could be easily found, but I do not remember it.

Ever Yours affectionately

CD.

May

To THE REV. THOMAS HELMORE,[†3] 1 MAY 1866

Mention in Autograph Prices Current, VI, 54; MS 1 p.; dated 6 Southwick Place, Hyde Park (on Gad's Hill paper), 1 May 66; addressed The Rev. Thomas Helmore.

To J. T. FIELDS,[†4] 2 MAY 1866

Extract in J. T. Fields, Yesterdays with Authors, pp. 158-9; address and date in N, III, 470.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT | 2nd May 1866

Your letter is an excessively difficult one to answer, because I really do not know that any sum of money that could be laid down would induce me to cross the Atlantic to read. Nor do I think it likely that any one on your side of the great water can be prepared to understand the state of the case. For example, I am now just finishing a series of thirty readings. The crowds attending them have been so astounding, and the relish for them has so far outgone all previous experience, that if I were to set myself the task, "I will make such or such a sum of money by devoting myself to readings for a certain time," I should have to go no further than Bond Street or Regent Street, to have it secured to me in a day. Therefore, if a specific offer, and a very large one indeed, were made to me from America, I should naturally ask myself, "Why go through this wear and tear, merely to pluck fruit that grows on every bough at home?" It is a delightful sensation to move a new people; but I have but to go to Paris, and I find the brightest people in the world quite ready for me. I say thus much in a sort of desperate endeavor to explain myself to you. I can put no price upon fifty readings in America, because I do not know that any possible price could pay me for them. And I really cannot say to any one disposed towards the enterprise, "Tempt me," because I have too strong a misgiving that he cannot in the nature of things do it.

This is the plain truth. If any distinct proposal be submitted to me, I will give it a distinct answer. But the chances are a round thousand to one that the answer will be no, and therefore I feel bound to make the declaration beforehand.

.... This place has been greatly improved since you were here, and we should be heartily glad if you and she[†1] could see it.

Faithfully yours ever,
CHARLES DICKENS.

To GEORGE DOLBY, 3 MAY 1866*

MS Fales Library, New York University.

6 Southwick Place | Thursday Third May 1866

My Dear Dolby

Many thanks to you for so considerately sending my cache-nez[†2] after me.

Wills and I gloomily perceived yesterday as we rode back from Sydenham,[†3] that some roots and spring water would be necessary for us three anchorites tomorrow night after the reading.[†4] We resolved to leave you to decide the question whether our frugal fare should be ordered to be ready for us anywhere at Greenwich, or whether it should be eaten in my Brougham on the way home. Will you decide this question, and in any case provide for each of us, a watercress or two, and a crust, and a Temperance-League draught? I am the more interested in the subject as my modest dinner (hazel nuts and an onion) will be eaten as early as 3 o'Clock.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

George Dolby Esquire

To MISS FORD,[†5] 3 MAY 1866

Text from N, III, 471.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND, | Thursday Third May 1866

Mr Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Miss Ford, and regrets that he must return the accompanying verses; — but solely because he does not think it advisable to return to the subject in these pages.

He can honestly assure Miss Ford that he considers the lines very spirited, but he cannot take upon himself the responsibility of advising her as to her pursuit of a literary career.

To CHARLES KENT, 3 MAY 1866*

MS Beinecke Library, Yale University Address: W. Charles Kent Esquire | "The Sun" Office.

6 Southwick Place | Thursday Third May 1866

My Dear Kent

I must send you a line to tell you how delighted I have been with your charming Marigold article.[†1] I should have thanked you sooner, but for having been perpetually reading and travelling.

Affecy. Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [?EARLY MAY 66]

Extract in F, VIII, vii, 703. Date: "some weeks before the first batch of readings closed", according to Forster; the last reading was in St James's Hall, London, on 12 June; letter probably, therefore, written in early May.

It would be unreasonable to ask anything now on the ground of the extent of the late success, but I am bound to look to myself for the future.[†2] The Chappells are speculators, though of the worthiest and most honourable kind. They make some bad speculations, and have made a very good one in this case, and will set this against those. I told them when we agreed: "I offer these thirty Readings to you at fifty pounds a night, because I know perfectly well beforehand that no one in your business has the least idea of their real worth, and I wish to prove it." The sum taken is £4720.[†3]

To M. R. L. MEASON,[†1] 7 MAY 1866

Mention in Meason to CD, 8 May 66 (MS Messrs Farrer & Co.). Date: written the day before.[†2]

To SAMUEL CARTRIGHT, 8 MAY 1866*

MS New York Public Library.

6 Southwick Place | Tuesday Eighth May 1866

My Dear Cartwright.

I am truly sorry that I cannot enjoy the pleasure of dining with you on Thursday the 24th. but I read at Portsmouth (my native place) that evening.

Faithfully Yours ever
CHARLES DICKENS

Samuel Cartwright Esquire

To J. P. HULLAH,[†3] 8 MAY 1866

MS Comtesse de Suzannet.

6 Southwick Place Hyde Park | Tuesday Eighth May 1866

My Dear Hullah

I received your former letter, though not in due course. I have been constantly away, and have been for a few days disabled from writing, through having accidentally hurt my hand.

I am not proud of my share in the Village Coquettes,[†4] and would rather let the songs (the words of the songs, I mean) die quietly, than revive them with the name of their respected parent attached. But if you like to republish them as compositions of yours, making no mention whatever of the ingenious author's name, but leaving him to blush anonymously, you are at perfect liberty to do so.[†5]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

John Hullah Esquire

To J. C. PARKINSON, 8 MAY 1866*

MS Fales Library, New York University.

6 Southwick Place, Hyde Park
Tuesday Eighth May, 1866

My Dear Mr. Parkinson

I send you enclosed, my proxies for the Incurables' Hospital.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

J. C. Parkinson Esquire

To HENRY GLASSFORD BELL, 9 MAY 1866*

MS Huntington Library.

Clifton,[†1] Bristol | Wednesday Ninth May | 1866.

My Dear Sir

Unfortunately it is not in my power to accept either of your kind invitations. I shall not be at Glasgow (on my way from Aberdeen) until late on the Thursday night; I read there on the Friday; and close an exceptionally fatiguing week by reading at Edinburgh on the Saturday afternoon, and going up to London by the Limited Mail that night.

Believe me always | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Henry Glassford Bell Esquire

To H. NYE CHART,[†2] 10 MAY 1866*

MS Massachusetts Historical Society.

Birmingham, Thursday | Tenth May 1866

Dear Sir

Your letter of yesterday has reached me this morning. Your former letter did come to hand — though not in due course — but I have for some weeks been so constantly travelling and so much occupied, that it escaped my remembrance. I beg you to excuse the omission.

I cannot have the pleasure of sanctioning the production of a dramatic adaptation of my book, "Our Mutual Friend" at Sadlers Wells Theatre. Do me the favor to assure Mr Nation[†1] that my reply involves no depreciation of the establishment or the company.[†2]

I am Dear Sir | Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

H. Nye Chart Esquire

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT,[†3] [?JANUARY-MAY 1866]

Mention in next. Date: CD had probably written earlier in same year.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 11 MAY 1866†

MS Huntington Library. Address (envelope, MS Professor Robert D. Horn): Miss Hogarth | 6 Southwick Place | Hyde Park | London | W. PM 11 May 66.

Down Hotel Clifton | Friday Eleventh May 1866

My Dearest Georgy

I received your note before I left Birmingham this morning. It has been very heavy work getting up at half-past 6 each morning after a heavy night, and I am not at all well to day. We had a tremendous hall at Birmingham last night — £230 odd — 2,100 people.[†4] I made a most ridiculous mistake. Had Nickleby on my list to finish with, instead of Trial. Read Nickleby with great go, and the people remained.[†5] Went back again at 10, and explained the accident, and said if they liked I would give them the Trial. They did like, and I had another half hour of it in that enormous place.

†aWill you tell Mrs Elliot that I cannot (I am sorry to say) address Harpers†6 in the way her man wants. I never addressed them in my life. Moreover I have a rather uneasy wonder why he should want such a thing, remembering that I expressly wrote him a letter calculated to get him a situation, when he went away. Having been so furnished forth, his looking for another letter has a very shy†7 appearance.

I hope to be at home on Monday by 11 or 12, and then to pack the portmanteau. I shall want the carriage at 1, as I must go to the office, having to meet Ouvry on our libel case.†a†1

This stoppage of Overend and Gurney in the City†2 will play the deuce with all public gaieties and with all the Arts. [

]†3

I will try presently to write a line to Chauncy.†4 I have so severe a pain in the ball of my left eye that it makes it hard for me to do any thing after 100 miles shaking since breakfast. My cold is no better, nor my hand either. John fell off a platform about 10 feet high, yesterday, and fainted. He looks all the colors of the rainbow to day, but does not seem much hurt beyond being puffed up one hand, arm, and side.

With kindest love to all | Ever My Dearest Georgy
Your most affectionate
CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [16 MAY 1866]

Extract in F, VIII, vii, 704. Date: 16 May 66, according to Forster. From Aberdeen.†5

We arrived here safe and sound between 3 and 4 this morning. There was a compartment for the men, and a charming room for ourselves furnished with sofas and easy chairs. We had also a pantry and washing-stand. This carriage is to go about with us.

To GEORGINA HOGARTH, 16 MAY 1866*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Hogarth | 6 Southwick Place | Hyde Park | London. | W.

Aberdeen, Wednesday Sixteenth May 1866

My Dearest Georgy. We arrived here safe and sound at a quarter before 4 this morning. There was a Saloon carriage for us containing a compartment for the men, and a charming room for ourselves furnished with two large sofas and three easy chairs. We had also a pantry and washing-stand. This carriage is to go about with us, and take us back to King's Cross on Sunday morning. Marsh and the Brougham to meet me there, please, at 9..30.

I know nothing about this place (its go,[†1] I mean) but suppose it to be all right — This note being scratched off before I go out, I have not yet so much as seen the room. It is fine weather but cold, and the ride was very beautiful all yesterday.

I shall very likely send you another line from Glasgow on Friday. We purpose getting there to dinner tomorrow evening.

With love to all | Ever My Dearest Georgy | Your most affectionate

CD.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 18 MAY 1866†

MS Huntington Library.

Carrick's Royal Hotel, Glasgow
Friday Eighteenth May 1866.

My Dearest Georgy.
[†a][

]

.... Industrial Exhibition at Edinburgh[†2] while I am reading tomorrow! I wanted to be off the bargain, but £80 worth of tickets being already sold, it must be gone through with. Disagreeable enough, but there is no help for it. The Edinburgh reading comes off at 2.[†3]

[†b]We halted at Perth yesterday, and got a lovely walk there. I hope I became better from that time, for until then I had been in a condition the reverse of flourishing; half strangled with my cold, and dyspeptically gloomy and dull. I feel much more like myself this morning, and as it is moderately fine we are going to get some fresh air aboard a steamer on the Clyde.[†b] (£170 is already taken for tonight). [†a][

]

Will you write and ask FitzGerald to dine with us on Monday and go to the Lyceum?[†4] I must frankly confess that I don't feel particularly ardent about having Chauncy all to myself on Sunday, but there is no help for it. The unfortunate Fechter does well to stay at home and save himself, I think. John has not fallen down again, and everybody else is in good condition.

With love, Ever My Dearest Georgy
Your most affectionate

CD.

To THE HON. ALBERT CANNING,[†1] 21 MAY 1866*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: Albert S G Canning Esquire | 31 Portman Square | W.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Twenty First May 1866

Dear Sir

I have been for some weeks almost continually absent, or I should have returned an earlier answer to your note.

If you will send the MS of your story addressed to me at the office of All The Year Round 26 Wellington Street London W.C. it shall be read with as little delay as possible. But I feel bound at once to warn you, in the event of its being a long story — I mean, a novel, or a tale that would have to be divided into several parts — that its acceptance would be, for that reason alone, simply impossible, with a reference to literary engagements already made.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Albert S G Canning Esquire

To HENRY CHORLEY, 21 MAY 1866*

MS Mrs Mary Moorman.

6 Southwick Place, Hyde Park
Monday Twenty First May 1866

My Dear Chorley

Will you come and dine with us on Wednesday the 30th. May at 7 1/4.

Affectionately Always
CHARLES DICKENS

To M. A. COSTA,[†2] 21 MAY 1866*

MS Boston Dickens Fellowship.

6 Southwick Place, Hyde Park W
Monday Twenty First May 1866

My Dear Mr. Costa.

Will you come and dine with us in a friendly way, on Wednesday the 30th. at 7 1/4 o'Clock. If this should fortunately find you disengaged, it will give me the truest pleasure to see you.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To ALFRED DORRINGTON,[†1] 21 MAY 1866

Mention in Retz & Storm catalogue No. 6; MS (3rd person): 1 p.; dated 21 May 66; addressed Mr Dorrington.

Sending a subscription of five guineas to the Printers' Orphan Asylum Fund.[†2]

To MRS BROOKFIELD, 22 MAY 1866*

MS Dartmouth College, New Hampshire.

6 Southwick Place Hyde Park W.
Tuesday Twenty Second May 1866

My Dear Mrs Brookfield

I have been so continually travelling and reading, since I received your last note, that I really have had no opportunity of answering it until now.

The accompanying paper is rather too slight as it stands. Don't you think you can contrive to work it out a little more? As for instance by showing how a not very difficult combination of reason and kindness works like effects with other classes of people as well as cabmen? I like what there is, very much; but it needs to be rendered a little more important and less fragmentary.[†3]

I am heartily glad that you have disposed of your story.[†4]

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To DR JAMES SHERIDAN MUSPRATT,[†5] 22 MAY 1866*

MS Mrs K. Sprigge.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.[†6]
Tuesday Twenty Second May 1866

My Dear Muspratt.

The other photograph was such a Beast of a thing, that I have sacrificed it to the Furies.

I was much concerned to hear of your having been so ill, and very sorry not to have shaken hands with you.

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 24 MAY 1866*

MS Huntington Library.

Portsmouth,[†1] Thursday Twenty Fourth May | 1866.

My Dearest Georgy

Fechter's question shall be asked of Chappell (Between ourselves it is mere madness), forthwith. A sad account of him![†2]

Will you call for me at the Athenaeum on Sunday at 3 — or say half past 2. Wait there for me.

You need have no fear about America.[†3]

Ever Your affectionate

CD.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 25 [MAY] 1866*

MS Huntington Library. Date: misdated by CD: he was in Portsmouth on Friday 25 May (see last). Address (envelope, MS Beinecke Library, Yale University): Miss Hogarth | 6 Southwick Place | Hyde Park | London | W. PM Portsmouth 25 May 66.

Portsmouth | Friday Evening Twenty 5th. March 1866

My Dearest Georgy

Wilkie is here, and I write very hurriedly just before going down to the room.

Wills's day is Friday 8th. June.

I had two notes from Chauncy (from the office) at the Railway yesterday morning. He comes on Sunday.

Looking at the ABC, I find that we had best make it a quarter past 3, at the Athenaeum on Sunday.

Ever Your most affectionate

CD.

P. S. Frank Beard is NOT here.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?28 MAY 1866]

Extract in F, VIII, iii, 656. Date: Spring 1866 according to Forster; perhaps during his flying visit on 28 May.

My small work and planting really, truly, and positively the last, are nearly at an end in these regions, and the result will await summer inspection.

To MR BARKER,[†4] 29 MAY 1866*

MS Carl H. Pforzheimer Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.

Tuesday Twenty Ninth May 1866

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Barker, and begs to say

(in reply to Mr. Barker's note of enquiry), that he believes he has never seen the picture in question.

To GEORGE DOLBY, 29 MAY 1866

MS Huntington Library.

6 Southwick Place | Tuesday Twenty Ninth May 1866

My Dear Dolby

We left the question of the last Reading thus:— If to-night's Let seemed to demand another Marigold, in spite of tonight's Marigold being announced as the last, then Marigold was to be put up for the Last Reading; which point I understood it should be left to Mr. Chappell to decide. Supposing Marigold to be put up again, Mrs. Gamp may go up with him. Supposing Marigold not to be put up again, then I would put up Boots at the Holly Tree Inn, Mr. Bob Sawyer's Party, and the Trial from Pickwick OR[†1] Mrs. Gamp. If Marigold is announced once more, then I would word the bill in this way.

[†a]St. James's Hall
Mr. Charles Dickens's Last Reading
Tuesday Evening 12th. June.[†a]
In deference to the general desire
[†a]Doctor Marigold[†a] will be repeated on this final occasion, together with [†a]Mrs. Gamp[†a]

I will wait at home until halfpast 12 this morning in case you should want to see me.[†2]

Faithfully Yours ever
CHARLES DICKENS

To B. L. FARJEON,[†3] 29 MAY 1866

MS Miss Eleanor Farjeon. Address: Private | B. L. Farjeon Esquire | Times Office | Dunedin | Otago | New Zealand.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Twenty Ninth May 1866.

Dear Sir

I am concerned to find that I have by an accident left your letter of last January's date, unanswered.

Your dedication,[†1] as an interesting and acceptable mark of remembrance from the other side of the world, gave me great pleasure. And I read the little book with much satisfaction.

But I am bound to lay before you the consideration that I cannot on such evidence (especially when you describe yourself as having written "hurriedly") form any reasonably reliable opinion of your power of writing an acceptable colonial story for All The Year Round. As to my reproducing this story, such a proceeding is as wide of the design and course of that Journal as anything can possibly be.

If you write and offer for All The Year Round, any original communication, I will read it myself, very heartily desiring to accept it, if I can deem it suitable to those pages.[†2] Do not, I beg, suppose that I intend to discourage you when I say no more. I simply mean to be honest with you and to discharge a duty that I owe to you and to myself.

Accept my thanks And believe me Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To THE VERY REV. THE DEAN OF EDINBURGH,[†3] 29 MAY 1866

Text from E. B. Ramsay, Reminiscences of Scottish Life and Character, 22nd edn, Edinburgh, 1874 (Memoir by Cosmo Innes, p. lxv).

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday, 29th May 1866.

My dear Sir

I am but now in the receipt of your kind letter, and its accompanying book.[†4] If I had returned home sooner, I should sooner have thanked you for both.

I cannot adequately express to you the gratification I have derived from your assurance that I have given you pleasure. In describing yourself as a stranger of whom I know nothing, you do me wrong however. The book I am now proud to possess as a mark of your goodwill and remembrance has for some time been too well known to me to admit of the possibility of my regarding its writer in any other light than as a friend in the spirit; while the writer of the introductory page marked viii. in the edition of last year had commanded my highest respect as a public benefactor and a brave soul.[†1]

I thank you, my dear Sir, most cordially, and I shall always prize the words you have inscribed in this delightful volume,[†2] very, very highly.

Yours faithfully and obliged,
CHARLES DICKENS

To THOMAS CARLYLE, 30 MAY 1866

MS National Library of Scotland.

6 Southwick Place, Hyde Park W.

Wednesday Thirtieth May 1866

My Dear Carlyle.

I have not written to you from any part of the country where I have lately been employed (and I have been working hard in many parts), for a reason that I instinctively felt you would understand. Even now I touch one hand with mine in the spirit, hardly venturing to press it.

My dear friend my thoughts have been very much with you,[†3] for I truly love and honor you. To your great heart and mind, little can come out of mine but sympathy. — That has been with you from the first, and ever will be while I live.[†4]

Your truly affectionate friend
CHARLES DICKENS

To GEORGE DOLBY, 30 MAY 1866*

MS Beinecke Library, Yale University.

6 Southwick Place | Wednesday Thirtieth May 1866.

My Dear Dolby

In remembrance of our late pleasant time together, and of the tact and delicacy with which you lightened its work for me, do me the favor to accept from my hands the edition of my books that I like the best.[†1]

With all good wishes | Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

George Dolby Esquire

To JOHN FORSTER, [30 MAY 1866]

Extracts in F, VIII, vii, 702. Date: 30 May 66, according to Forster; second extract from same letter.

I came back last Sunday, with my last country piece of work for this time done. Everywhere the success has been the same. St. James's Hall last night was quite a splendid spectacle. Two more Tuesdays there, and I shall retire into private life. I have only been able to get to Gadshill once since I left it, and that was the day before yesterday.

Saying also that he had a heavy cold and was very tired and depressed.

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 31 [MAY] 1866*

MS Huntington Library. Date: misdated by CD: endorsed 31 May 66, a Thursday in 1866.

6 Southwick Place Hyde Park
Thursday Night Thirty First March | 1866.

My Dear Ouvry

Mr. Edmund Yates wants to ask your advice again, on another (and different) matter of business[†2] on which I am not a good adviser. He has asked me what I thought of his coming to you, and I have said "Certainly". He is going to take his chance of finding you on Tuesday between 10 and 11. I have no doubt you will keep him out of harm's way.

Faithfully Yours Ever
CHARLES DICKENS

My daughter will send you your Copperfield ticket, duly.

June

To ANDREW HALLIDAY,[†3] [1] JUNE 1866

Envelope only, MS Private. Address: Andrew Halliday Esquire | 122 Camden Street | N.W. PM London [1] 1 Jun 66. Date: postmark blurred, could be 1 or 11 Jun.

To LADY HOUGHTON, 2 JUNE 1866*

MS Trinity College, Cambridge. Address: The | Lady Houghton | 16 Upper Brook Street | W.

Saturday Second June 1866
6 Southwick Place, Hyde Park

My Dear Lady Houghton.

I am in the distressful position of having allowed my daughter to engage me for every day until we leave town. Having been constantly away and disabled from going out to dinner; until I worked myself free just a week ago, I told her before hand she might do what she would with me between last Monday and the 18th. of June. Availing herself of this permission, she presented me on my return with a methodically drawn-up set of fetters in which I am now champing.

I am cordially obliged to you for your kind note, and to Lord Houghton also; to whom I beg to send my regards. Pray compassionate my helplessness!

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

The | Lady Houghton

To DR WILLIAM LOMAS,[†1] 4 JUNE 1866*

MS Queen's University, Ontario.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND, | Monday Fourth June 1866

Dear Sir

My absence from town on business has prevented my returning an earlier reply to your letter.

I shall be happy to retain your MS[†2] for insertion, availing myself of the permission you give me to condense it in some places where it is — for the purposes of this Journal — a little too general and diffuse; the rather as the main subject is one to which I have repeatedly called public attention.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Dr Lomas

To GEORGE RUSSELL, 7 JUNE 1866*

MS Marjorie, Lady Russell. Address: George Russell Esquire | St. James's Place | W.

6 Southwick Place, Hyde Park | Thursday Seventh June 1866

My Dear George

A thousand thanks for your kind care of Mary. I soon got right after being in the open air; but its impurity in that house[†3] nearly floored me, after late hard work.

Your sister in law[†1] Miss Ethel[†2] told me you had been speaking of coming to my Readings. Next Tuesday's reading is the last this season. If you should have any design of coming that night, I count upon your telling me how many stalls you want, and I can then ensure your being placed near me. Not to mention that I would not have you come, under any circumstances, as of the public.

Faithfully Yours ever
CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS RICHARD JOHNS,[†3] 8 JUNE 1866

Text from N, III, 474.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Friday Eighth June 1866

My Dear Mrs Johns,

I very much fear that you will enter on a hopeless task in applying for a pension on the Civil List.

To my knowledge there are very many demands on the small fund at the disposal of the Government — and I fear that if you make your appeal on a literary ground (as I suppose you must if you make it at all) it will not stand the slightest chance of success against others that I know and have been for some time in abeyance.

It is for you to decide whether on re-consideration, you will hazard the mortification and disappointment. If you resolve to apply, I recommend you by no means to send in several papers, but only one memorial written out by yourself on a sheet of foolscap paper stating your case and what poor Johns did,[†4] (especially referring to the Calendar of Victory)[†5] and making your application. I need scarcely add that I will sign it, as being well acquainted with the circumstances set forth.[†6]

The pension of £300 a year to Eastlake (who didn't want it) was one of the Queen's whims. Eastlake had smoothed down the Prince Consort whenever he could,[†7] and the Queen took her pen in hand and made the grant herself without either application or advice. There is no public service like having walked in the ways of the Late Lamented.

Ever your friend
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To CHARLES KENT, 8 JUNE 1866*

MS Mrs Craddock-Hartopp.

6 Southwick Place Hyde Park W. | Friday Eighth June 1866

My Dear Kent.

Next Sunday will be our last in town this time. Can you dine with us that day at half past 6? No party.

Affecy Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To W. C. MACREADY, 8 JUNE 1866†

MS Morgan Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Eighth June 1866

My Dearest Macready

I have cast about in all directions, and find myself quite without influence among Christ's Hospital[†1] Governors. This is not a new discovery, for, a year or two ago, I tried to help another case, and found it quite hopeless. Where I had, or fancied I had, or might could would or should have had, some influence, there had been a chopping and changing of nominations — mine so many years hence for yours now, or vice versa — altogether incomprehensible and impracticable.[†2]

I was very sorry not to have been in town when Mrs. Macready was here. You will be interested in knowing that the success of this series of Readings has been quite astounding. I have only one left on the list, thank Heaven, and that comes off at St. James's Hall next Tuesday.

My garden has had a severe touch of Mrs. Macready's sciatica. East winds and late frosts have absolutely ravaged it. It is (like Mrs. Macready I trust) getting better, under the influence of the warm weather: but I expect no wall fruit and very little else.

Dining at Tennent's last Wednesday, we heard from an old Ceylon gentleman just come home, enthusiastic praises of Buttie.[†3]

With kindest love to all, | Ever My Dearest Macready
Your most affectionate
CD.

To F. C. BEARD, 10 JUNE 1866

MS Dickens House. Address: F. Carr Beard Esquire | 44 Welbeck Street | Cavendish Square | W.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Tenth June 1866

My Dear Frank Beard

I have written to Dolby, begging him to commit a fraud upon somebody, and to send you a good stall for Tuesday near me. You will be sure to receive it, and I hope you may like your brother-doctor.[†1]

Ever Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

To GEORGE DOLBY, [?10 JUNE 1866]

Mention in last. Date: probably written the same day.

To FREDERIC CHAPMAN, [? FEBRUARY-10 JUNE 1866]

MS (fragment) Dunedin Public Library. Date: CD was at Southwick Place 23 Feb-10 June 66.

I shall be in Southwick Place again, on Monday Morning.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Fredk. Chapman Esquire

To GEORGE RUSSELL, 10 JUNE 1866*

MS Marjorie, Lady Russell.

6 Southwick Place | Sunday Tenth June 1866

My Dear George

I duly heard from Mrs. Elliot that you wanted 4 more tickets to make up your No. Enclosed you will find them. They are all close to me, and 3 of them (as you will see) are adjoining one another. Chappell has somehow wrested them for me from some innocent holders; but by what pious frauds, I don't know.

Ever Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

George Russell Esquire

To JOHN FORSTER, [?10 JUNE 1866]

Extract in XI, iii, 825. Date: probably written same day as To Yates, 10 June.

You asked me about new writers last night. If you will read Kissing the Rod, a book I have read to-day, you will not find it hard to take an interest in the author of such a book.

To EDMUND YATES, 10 JUNE 1866

MS Robert H. Taylor Collection, Princeton University.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Tenth June 1866

My Dear Edmund.

I have read your book[†1] with great surprise, and have been profoundly affected by it. It has touched me deeply, and moved me to many tears. Hold fast, I adjure you, to the deeper emotional faculty that you unquestionably possess, and do justice to the tenderness that is most beautifully and pathetically wrought out in the last of these three volumes.[†2]

Ever Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Edmund Yates Esquire

To ROBERT MELROSE,[†3] 11 JUNE 1866*

MS Marion Public Library, Ohio.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Eleventh June 1866

Dear Sir

I have been so constantly occupied since I received your last note that I have not had leisure to reply to it until now.

Your little book[†4] is highly creditable to you, and I have read it with interest and pleasure. But I cannot say that I observe in it any special quality which invests it with any hopeful power of address to the general public. For this reason I must beg to excuse myself from perusing your Manuscript verses.[†5] I can only undertake that task (or I should do nothing else in life) when there is some probability of my being useful to the writer, through the pages of my own journal. And I do not see that likelihood before me in the present case.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Robert Melrose Esquire

To MRS RICHARD JOHNS, 13 JUNE 1866

Text from N, III, 475.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Wednesday Thirteenth June 1866

My Dear Mrs. Johns,

I send you in this envelope my testimonial,[†1] and I heartily wish you success.

Faithfully Yours Always
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To DRINKWATER MEADOWS,[†2] 13 JUNE 1866*

MS Private.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Thirteenth June 1866

My Dear Mr. Meadows,

I had missed your familiar face at my Readings, and was exceedingly glad to get your letter — for, to be plain with you, though it does report you as being "creaky and croaky", I am resolved not to believe it. Your mention of Mr. Macready reminds me to tell you that I was with him at Cheltenham not many weeks ago, and told him you charged me with remembrances to him, whenever I saw you. He expressed much pleasure and interest, and charged me with his kindest regard to you in return. He was much inconvenienced by bronchitis (it was in the time of the bitter Easterly wind), but was otherwise hale and jovial. His last son, four years old or so, is as jolly and hearty a little boy as I ever had a game at romps with. Which I beg you to bear well in mind when you talk about creakiness.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Drinkwater Meadows Esquire

To W. HEPWORTH DIXON, 14 JUNE 1866

Text from N, III, 475.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Fourteenth June 1866

My Dear Dixon,

I send you enclosed, fifty pounds (£50) being the amount I this day find at Coutts's to Miss Jerrold's[†3] credit.[†4]

Many thanks for your kind offer as to the United States. But I will not inflict a letter upon you, for I know most feelingly what boredom would ensue, making your holiday[†1] a horror. My respects to the Chief of the Mormons,[†2] and to as many hundreds of his young family as you may fall in with.[†3] Don't forget Mrs Dixon at home.

Faithfully yours always
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To MISS LILY BENZON,[†4] 18 JUNE 1866

Text from facsimile in Grolier Club Catalogue of an Exhibition of the Works of CD, 1913.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Monday Eighteenth June 1866

My Dear Lily.

I am sorry that I cannot come to read to you "The Boots at The Holly Tree Inn", as you ask me to do, but the truth is, that I am tired of reading at this present time, and have come into the country to rest and hear the birds sing. There are a good many birds, I dare say, in Kensington Palace Gardens,[†5] and upon my word and honor they are much better worth listening to than I am. So let them sing to you as hard as ever they can, while their sweet voices last (they will be silent when the winter comes), and very likely after you and I have eaten our next Christmas pudding and mince-pies, you and I and Uncle Harry[†6] may all meet together at St. James's Hall; Uncle Harry to bring you there, to hear the Boots; I, to receive you there, and to read the Boots; and you (I hope) will applaud very much, and tell me that you like the Boots. So God bless you, and me, and Uncle Harry, and the Boots, and Long Life and Happiness to us all!

Your affectionate friend
CHARLES DICKENS

(There's a flourish!)

To F. RUDALL,[†7] 18 JUNE 1866*

MS Dickens House. Address: F. Rudall Esq. | Victoria Station | Pimlico | S. W.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Eighteenth June 1866

Mr. Charles Dickens sends his compliments to Mr. Rudall, and (in reply to Mr. Rudall's letter and enclosure) begs him to assure Madame Sezzi[†1] of Mr. Dickens's regret that he cannot advance her views. The scheme[†2] appears to Mr. Dickens to be almost hopeless; and he would dissuade the lady from pursuing it, as fraught with mortification and disappointment.

To DR F. H. RAMSBOTHAM,[†3] 20 JUNE 1866*

MS McGill University Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Twentieth June 1866

My Dear Dr. Ramsbotham

I have gone through your MS book,[†4] and I find it to be — as I knew beforehand it would be — the production of a scholar; a gentleman with a well-stored mind and good observation; an amiable and quick spirit.

But I do not think there is any 'vantage ground of address in it, to the great general public. I am strongly of opinion that if it were published for miscellaneous circulation and sale, it would fall dead. Make up your mind to such a result as you might, beforehand, it would still be distasteful and disappointing when it happened. Therefore I would not so publish it.

I have not the least doubt that even if you did so publish it, you could only do so at your own cost.

Whether, consequently, you will publish it at your own cost for private circulation among your friends, I take to be the [good][†5] and sensible little issue to which the case is narrowed. As a part of yourself, interesting to those who know you — as your pleasant occupation betweenwhiles in your carriage, in exact accordance with your own description of its origin — as a remarkable instance of freshness and good humour and vivacity in the midst of the routine of a trying life — it has a merit of a tangible, direct, and highly agreeable kind, which could not fail to be appreciated; — but which I think would fail of appreciation, separated from your personality.

Believe me always | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To WILLIAM ORR,[†6] 24 JUNE 1866

Mention in unidentified catalogue (1902) in Kitton's "Dickens Ana", IV, 14; MS 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill Place, 24 June 66; addressed William Orr.

To JOHN HENNING,[†1] 25 JUNE 1866*

MS British Library.

Private

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Twenty Fifth June 1866

Dear Sir

I have been away since the date of your letter, and have read it and its accompanying specimens, only this morning.

I regret to say that I cannot make the latter available for All The Year Round. It is on rare occasions that I reproduce in those pages, French compositions in an English dress. It is a principle of mine to avoid doing so: firstly, because I should otherwise give my brother-writers across the water, just reason of complaint: secondly, because French literature is so easily accessible in the original.

The other pieces are too slight, and not sufficiently distinct, for the purposes of the same journal.

Unfortunately I have no literary employment to bestow, because the regular writers in those pages have come to be so, expressly and solely through the suitability of their writing. I can only assure you that there is always an opening in them for a contributor who can hit the mark, and that I am always heartily glad to find one.

The enclosed trifle being merely a mark of sympathy with an educated gentleman in distress, requires, I hope, no further mention between us. Your MSS will be left under cover addressed to you at the office, after Wednesday.

Dear Sir Your Faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

John Henning Esquire

To GEORGE DOLBY, 26 JUNE 1866

Mention in Parke-Bernet catalogue No. SN 1683; MS 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill Place, 26 June 1866; addressed George Dolby.

Sending him an invitation.

To JAMES BIRTLES, 29 JUNE 1866*

MS Beinecke Library, Yale University. Address: (Please set up directly) | Mr. John Birtles.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Twenty Ninth June 1866

Dr. Mr. Birtles

Please to send me down to Gad's Hill, another complete Revise of Aunt Margaret.[†2] And from week to week, let me have the Weekly Portion, here.

Faithfully Yours
CD.

To EMILE DE LA RUE,[†1] 29 JUNE 1866*

MS Berg Collection.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Twenty Ninth June 1866

My Dear De la Rue.

Being here this morning, I find (to my amazement) the card of the Secret Visual Ray whom I love.[†2]

Pray come to Gad's Hill before you go back, and see it really in good order and like itself. I shall be there tomorrow, Sunday, Monday, and Tuesday. Either on Wednesday or Thursday, I may leave it again, and take a run for two days. BUT[†3] (notice this, my Michel Perrin[†4] of Northern Italy), I will arrange, any how, to be there, at any time of which you will give me notice. I count upon your coming. Don't spirit yourself away mysteriously.

May the God of Free Nations and just Battles[†5] give our Soldiers the Victory next time![†6] If Prussia and Austria could destroy each other, and we could get and hold Venice[†7] and unite Italy, — why then (as the Ghost of Gibbs[†8] whispers in my ear)[†9] "Vi lascio a giudicare!"[†10]

Ever Your affectionate Friend
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 29 JUNE 1866*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Twenty Ninth June 1866

My Dearest Georgy

I infer from your last note, that Harry did not deliver a message I gave him in the Basket; namely, that the Basket was to come to Gravesend for me, to meet tomorrow afternoon's Express.

I will get home how I can. Let dinner by ready for me at half past 6.

Ever Affecy.

CD.

To MISS MARY BOYLE, 30 JUNE 1866*

MS Carl H. Pforzheimer Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Saturday Thirtieth June 1866

My Dear Mary.

If you and Cavendish[†1] should chance to be disengaged on Monday, I wish you would come down to Gad's. We shall be quite alone. You can be in town on Tuesday morning at any time you like. Propoge it to Bedsey[†2] from Sairey.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To CHARLES KENT, 30 JUNE 1866

Mention in Dickens Exhibition, New Dudley Gallery catalogue, 1909; MS 1 p.; dated Office of AYR, 30 June 66; addressed Charles Kent; with envelope.

July

To FREDERIC OUVRY 4 JULY 1866

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, June 1979; MS 1 p.; dated Office of AYR, 4 July 66; addressed Frederic Ouvry.

Sending an enclosure referring to my Australian son[†3] and instructing Ouvry if you see no objection to let the writers know that I pay no tradesman who trusts a son of mine, without first referring to me.[†4]

To J. E. H. SKINNER,[†5] 6 JULY 1866*

MS Commander J. Bickford-Smith, R. N. Address: J. E. Hilary Skinner Esquire | 35 Blandford Square | London | N.W.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Sixth July, 1866

Dear Sir

I beg you to accept my thanks for your courteous note, and for your book, "After The Storm".[†6] I have read the two volumes, let me assure you, with very great interest and pleasure. The fidelity and liveliness of your descriptions, and the sound good nature and good sense of your views, have impressed me most agreeably. Your well-timed pages can hardly fail to do some good on both sides of the Atlantic, and I heartily hope that they may otherwise achieve a success which will be satisfactory to you.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

J. E. Hilary Skinner Esquire

To S. H. LANE, 7 JULY 1866*

MS Fales Library, New York University. Address: Private | Samuel Lane Esquire | Britannia Theatre | Hoxton | N.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Seventh July, 1866.

Dear Mr. Lane.

I cannot empower you to make any use of my name as sanctioning your production of a dramatic version of Our Mutual Friend,[†1] but I readily give you my private assurance that I will not interfere with it or object to it. I hope this reply to your letter will be satisfactory to you.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To WILKIE COLLINS, [10] JULY 1866

MS Morgan Library. Date: Tuesday was 10 July in 66.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Ninth July, 1866.

My Dear Wilkie

I have gone through the play[†2] very carefully. The plot is extraordinarily got together; its compactness is quite amazing; and the dialogue is very excellent in all the rare essentials of being terse, witty, characteristic, and dramatic.[†3]

But inseperable and ineradicable from the whole piece is — DANGER.[†4] Almost every situation in it is dangerous. I do not think any English audience would accept the scene in which Miss Gwilt in that widow's dress, renounces Mid-winter.[†5] And if you got so far, you would never get through the last act in the Sanatorium.[†6] You could only carry those situations, on a real hard wooden stage and wrought out (very indifferently) by real live people face to face with other real live people judging them, — you could only carry those situations by the help of interest in some innocent person whom they placed in peril, and that person a young woman. There is no one to be interested in here. Let who will, play Midwinter, the saving interest cannot be got out of him. There is no relief from the wickedness of the rest;[†1] and in exact proportion to the skilful heaping of it up, the danger accumulates.

I know as well as you do that this is merely one man's opinion. But I so strongly entertain the opinion that the odds are heavily against an audience's seeing the play out, that I should not be your friend if I blinked it. I see the piece before me on the stage. Then I change my point of view, and act Midwinter, and act Miss Gwilt. A perfect terror of the difficult and dangerous ground oppresses me in both positions; and I feel my inability to carry the situations myself, as strongly as I feel the inability of any professed actor or actress alive to carry them for me.

In reference to your two questions, I have no doubt whatever as to the first that the substitution of the Manuscript for the marked printed pages, is a decided improvement.[†2] As to the second, I think that any advantage to be gained from acting those events instead of narrating them, would be more than counterbalanced by lengthening the play. They don't take long to tell, as they stand, and seem quite clear. Again; I think they would be much more difficult to act, than to narrate.

Touching Aunt Margaret's Trouble,[†3] it is curious how the details of such things depend on the understanding one brings to them. It has never for an instant occurred to me that the young man drops his papers and takes Margaret in his arms, because he loves her, or because he ever did love her, but because of his joy at finding that she has forgiven her else-solitary sister.[†4] And I take her softened feeling towards the child, to be simply the feeling of relief and thankfulness that something innocent has so soon sprung up from that plotting and deceit.[†5] As to Mrs. Brookfield, tell our clever friend that her novel[†6] has been in my hands, and is now in the hands of Chapman and Hall who are going to publish it.[†7] But the writer of Aunt Margaret[†8] is a round fifteen years younger than Mrs. Brookfield, and is so singularly unlike her and removed from her, that I do suppose the world could not have held a wider or a wilder guess.[†9]

I will send the play book to you tomorrow, by the hands of one of the office people. Next week, I purpose being at the office on Saturday at One. At ten minutes past 2 on the said Saturday in next week, I purpose coming down here. Can you come with me?

Ever Affectionately

CD.

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 11 JULY 1866

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, June 1979; MS 1 p.; dated Office of AYR, 11 July 66; addressed Frederic Ouvry. Envelope in Sophie Dupré catalogue No. 20

(1991); Address: Frederic Ouvry Esquire, 66 Lincoln's Inn Fields, W.C. (not through post), misdated (in another hand) 10th July 1866.

My having dealt with Mr. Williams[†1] simply makes the matter worse.[†2] All the more easily and naturally could I have been communicated with, before credit was given by a Jeweller to a boy. I will not pay in any such case.

To LORD HOUGHTON, 15 JULY 1866*

MS Trinity College, Cambridge.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Fifteenth July, 1866

My Dear Lord Houghton

Many thanks for your kindness in sending me the printed notes of your Literary Fund address,[†3] and many more for your reference to myself.[†4] It is a touching and acceptable reminder to me that a good many years have gone by since we first knew each other.

I should have written to you sooner about the twentieth, but that I have not until to day had my daughter at hand to refer to for a reminder of coming visitors here. I am sorry to report that I cannot have the pleasure of dining with you on that day, as I am bound to home. When we came back here after my Reading was done for the time, I allowed myself to be disposed of for three days in each week, for three months. The twentieth turns out to be one of the days sacrificed to this amiable weakness.

I beg to send my kindest regard to Lady Houghton, and am always

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Lord Houghton

To THE MARQUIS TOWNSHEND,[†1] 15 JULY 1866

Extract in Swann Galleries catalogue, No. SN 233; MS 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill Place, 15 July 66; addressed Lord Townshend.

I have left town for the season and have family visitors here.

To PERCY FITZGERALD, 16 JULY 1866

Text from N, III, 478.

Gad's Hill Place | Monday Sixteenth July 1866

My Dear Fitzgerald,

I send you the enclosed note, received yesterday from Bulwer, because I think it may interest and please you. His praise is well worth having,[†2] inasmuch as he is a very careful student and an admirable artist.

Faithfully yours always
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To LORD LYTTON, 16 JULY 1866

MS Lytton Papers.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Sixteenth July, 1866

My Dear Lytton

First, let me congratulate you on the honor that Lord Derby[†3] has conferred upon the Peerage.[†4] And next, let me thank you heartily for your kind letter.

I am sorry to report that we are so incumbered with engagements, in the way of visitors coming here, that we cannot see our way to getting to Knebworth yet.

[†a]While we had a house in town this season, I was constantly absent, reading; and when I at last came back, we had got into such an accumulation of arrears, that I gave Mary free leave to tick them off prospectively in this house. The result is, that we are for some time preposterously hampered on the four days in every week on which I am producible in these parts, and that we must gradually work ourselves clear. Both Mary and Georgina are forced to admit this, though very reluctantly; and I am sure that on the least encouragement from me they would have broken faith all round. But it is best to get it over, and swear (with certain perjury before us) never to do so again.[†a]

They send you their kind regard, and hope that the delight of coming to see you is only deferred.

FitzGerald will be so proud of your opinion of his Mrs. Tillotson, and will (I know) derive such great encouragement from it, that I have faithfully quoted it word for word and sent it on to him in Ireland. He is a very clever fellow (you may remember perhaps that I brought him to Knebworth on the Guild day), and has charming sisters and an excellent position.[†1] [†a]Between ourselves, I am grievously disappointed that Mary can by no means be induced to think as highly of him as I do.[†2] — What a wonderful instance of the general inanity of Kings, that the Kings in the Fairy Tales should have been always wishing for children! If they had but known when they were well off, having none![†a]

Ever affectionately Yours
CD.

The | Lord Lytton

To FREDERIC CHAPMAN, 17 JULY 1866*

MS Dickens House.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Tuesday Seventeenth July, 1866.

My Dear Sir

The authoress of the Tale of Aunt Margaret's Trouble, wishes the little book to have the Dedication-leaf which I send you on the other side.

Faithfully Yours alys
CHARLES DICKENS

Fredk. Chapman Esquire

The proofs of the book had best be sent to me.

This Little Story is Affectionately Dedicated
To
E. L. T.[†3]

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 17 JULY 1866*

Text from facsimile in Tooley's catalogue, 1982.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Seventeenth July 1866

My Dear Ouvry.

I fully agree with you in reference to the enclosed.[†1]

Faithfully Yours alwys
CHARLES DICKENS

To J. A. HERAUD, 21 JULY 1866

Extract in Maggs Bros catalogue No. 1112 (1990/1); MS 1 p.; dated Office of AYR, 21 July 66; addressed John A. Heraud. Address: (envelope, MS Charles W. Traylen): John A. Heraud Esquire | 2 Cloudesly Terrace | Liverpool Road | Islington | N. PM JY 21 66.

I am much obliged to you for your offer,[†2] but I do not think it desirable to discuss the report of the Committee, on the general subject, in detail. I have already advocated the principle of the removal of restrictions and have repeatedly dwelt in these pages on the want of popular amusements.[†3]

To THOMAS ADOLPHUS TROLLOPE, 25 JULY 1866†

MS Berg Collection.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Twenty Fifth July, 1866.

My Dear Trollope

Here is some hitch that we cannot understand, about the lady's poem of which you made mention in your last to me.[†4] Wills has been waiting and waiting for its arrival, and still has always reported "Not come." At length, knowing your exact habits, I have got it into my head that you may possibly have sent the verses by post, addressed nicely to the Editor of A.Y.R. and that the letter has been opened by a clerk (as such letters usually are), and that we may actually have the MS. without knowing whence it comes. What is it called? If you will tell me, I can ascertain in five minutes whether we have got it or not. Without that piece of information, I am in a most forlorn state of helplessness.

[†a]If Italy could but achieve some brilliant success in arms![†1] That she does not, causes (I think) some disappointment here, and makes her sluggish friends more sluggish, and her open enemies more powerful. I fear too that the Italian Ministry have lost an excellent opportunity of repairing the national credit in London City, and have borrowed money in France — for the poor consideration of lower interest — which they could have got in England, greatly to the reestablishment of a reputation for public good faith. As to Louis Napoleon, his position in the whole matter is — to me — like his position in Europe at all times, simply disheartening and astounding. Between Prussia and Austria there is in my mind (but for Italy) not a pin to choose. If each could smash the other, I should be, as to those two powers, perfectly satisfied. But I feel for Italy almost as if I were an Italian born. So there you have in brief my confession of faith.[†a]

Truly, as you say, it seems a long while ago that I gave [——][†2] a letter of commendation to your kindness.[†3] Though it is but a few years, she has experienced such warmth of friendship from you and yours, that I shouldn't wonder if it seemed to her a life. I am heartily glad, both for her sake and for yours, that she is with you.[†4]

[†a]Mr. Home,[†5] after trying to come out as an actor, first at Fechter's[†6] (where I had the honor of stopping him short), and then at the St. James's Theatre under Miss Herbert[†7] (where he was twice announced and each time mysteriously disappeared from the bills),[†8] was announced at the little Theatre in Dean Street

Soho,[†1] as a "Great attraction for one night only" to play last Monday. An appropriately dirty little rag of a bill,[†2] fluttering in the window of an obscure dairy behind the Strand, gave me this intelligence last Saturday. It is like enough that even that slinking business did not come off, for I believe the public to have found out the scoundrel.[†3]

In which lively and sustaining hope, this leaves me at present.[†a]

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To H. CHOLMONDELEY PENNELL,[†4] 30 JULY 1866

Extract in Anderson Galleries catalogue, Feb 1922; MS (3rd person) 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill Place, 30 July 66.

Saying that he will be happy to see Mr. Cholmondeley Pennell at the Office of All the Year Round.

To W. H. WILLS, 30 JULY 1866

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Thirtieth July, 1866

My Dear Wills

Forster, being here yesterday, asked me what there was amiss between him and you? I said that I did not know from you that anything was amiss. He rejoined that he had made such and such approaches to you, which you had avoided, and that if there were something wrong between you, it was quite unconsciously on his part.[†5] I repeated what I had already said. He then asked me if I would let you know that he had spoken to me? I replied, Most willingly. Hence this note.

I shall look in at the office at One on Wednesday (in case any Writer of transcendent genius should have turned up since Saturday).

Ever Faithfully
CD.

To THE REV. WILLIAM JOYNES,[†1] 31 JULY 1866

Text from N, III, 479.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Tuesday Thirty-First July 1866

Dear Sir,

I hear from my boys that the return match[†2] between Higham and Chalk is to take place in my field on Wednesday the 8th of August. Will you give my daughter and myself the pleasure of your company at dinner that day? We will try to adapt our dinner hour to the progress of the game, and to incumber the occasion with very little ceremony.

Faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

August

To GEORGINA HOGARTH, 1 AUGUST 1866

MS Dickens House.

Wednesday First August 1866

My Dearest Georgy.

I find the enclosed[†3] at the office here.

If you have no objection on your part, I wish you would reply to it that I have asked you to answer it, and that you think it well to tell her at once that you are absolutely certain that I never will go to her house, and that it is my fixed purpose (without any abatement of kindness otherwise), to hold as little personal communication with her as I possibly can. You may add — as you like — either that you do, or that you do not, know the reason for this; but that you are perfectly sure that no effort will ever elicit a word from me on the subject.

> About the house,[†4] I can give no opinion. She must decide the question out of her o > domestic knowledge of it. If she has any question to ask me of her boy,[†5] she can ei

This last paragraph marked with a bracket, will be all you have to say for me, if you don't like to say the rest.

It is pretty clear to me that she very well knows what is amiss, and has been put up by somebody to trying to get hold of me.

Ever affecy.
CD.

Love to all.

To ARTHUR CHAPPELL, 2 AUGUST 1866

MS Berg Collection.

Eton,[†1] Thursday Second August, 1866[†2]

My Dear Mr. Chappell.

As I arranged with you that you should know my views in reference to reading again, in the course of this month — and as I have considered the matter — and as I find myself waiting for a train here after a walk — I cannot do better than write to you now.

I am prepared so to dispose my time and occupations in advance, as to read again after Christmas. I will engage with you, if you like, to read 40 times at £60 per night, and all expences paid as before, including my hotel charges. (You will have no difficulty in estimating these last, as Dolby knows exactly what they always are.)

Or, to make our contract for an even sum of money, I will engage with you to read 42 times for £2,500.

We know by pleasant experience that we are not likely to have the least difference of opinion respecting details. In the main, 4 readings a week would be about the most agreeable and convenient mark to me; but that must be subject, of course, to local circumstances and considerations of travelling cost. Those, I and Dolby would be certain to see from the same point of view. And I assume as a settled point that I should have him with me.

I am at the office of All The Year Round on Saturdays, and at Gad's Hill on most other days.

Believe me always | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

S. Arthur Chappell Esquire

To GEORGE DOLBY, 2 AUGUST 1866

MS Huntington Library.

Eton, Thursday Second August 1866

My Dear Dolby

This is written on a pause in a walk, while waiting for a train. It is to let you know that I have by this same post sent a proposal to Mr. Chappell touching a course of Readings after Christmas, agreeably to an understanding I made with him when the last Readings came to an end. No doubt he will tell you this, almost as soon as I do; but I wish you to know it from myself, because I look upon you as my (Reading) right hand.

I have had a very large proposal from America, but cannot bear the thought of the distance and absence.

Unless my memory deceives me, you were making some arrangements when I saw you last, for being left en garçon for a time. Pray bear in mind that if you will come to Gad's Hill from Saturdays to Mondays, or from any other days to any other, you will be heartily received.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

George Dolby Esquire

To R. H. MASON, 3 AUGUST 1866

Text from N, III, 480.

Windsor[†1] | Friday Third August 1866

Dear Sir,

I beg to say that Monday will suit me perfectly, and that I will expect you at Gad's Hill on that day.

I am merely walking in the Park here, but write from this place, in consequence of having omitted to do so in town.

Faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To THOMAS HEADLAND, 4 AUGUST 1866

Extract in P. F. Madigan catalogue, 1914; MS 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill Place, 4 Aug 66. Address (given with briefer extract in Dickens Miscellanies, Vol. I, No. 292, Lot 280a at Guildhall Museum, Rochester): Mr. Headland | Sussex Hotel | Eastbourne.

I could not read anywhere on this side of Christmas, and even then it is likely that there may be an understanding between the Chappells and myself which would make the business arrangements wholly theirs.[†2]

The last series was a wonderful success.

To EMILE DE LA RUE, 6 [AUGUST] 1866*

MS Berg Collection. Date: misdated by CD; 6 July was Friday but Monday was 6 Aug in 1866; he is replying to de la Rue's letter of 27 July (see below).

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Sixth July, 1866

My Dear De la Rue.

It happened that when I received your letter,[†3] I had before me the proof of an article by an English gentleman who has been with Garibaldi,[†1] in which he treats of Garibaldi's humanity to Austrian Prisoners.[†2] This gave me the opportunity — of which I availed myself — to add a note to the article, in my own person, stating the Austrian cruelties at Lissa,[†3] exactly as you stated them to me. The paper in question is called "Campaigning in the Tyrol", and will appear in the Number of All The Year Round which will be dated Saturday the 18th. of this month, and which will be published in London on Wednesday the 15th. As we must always be a fortnight in advance of the Public (because of the mechanical exigencies of such a publication) you will see that I have lost no time.

If Italy can prove a case against Persano,[†4] I earnestly hope he will be brought to a Court Martial.[†5] But if there be a reasonable chance of failure in proof against him, then I as earnestly hope that he will not be tried. Because a breakdown in the case for the prosecution would be misinterpreted into its having originated in the mortification of defeat. I think that the friends of Italy in England are — generally speaking — grievously disappointed by the result of Lissa, and that Austria (may the Fates confound her, more and more!) has been making great efforts and using great influence, to represent herself as grandly victorious on the occasion.[†6]

In the article to which I have referred, the Government administrators, of the smaller class, are charged with obstructing and neglecting Garibaldi, and leaving him destitute of even the most ordinary hospital stores.[†7] This is stated on the faith of an eye-witness whom I know very well. I have softened the terms of the statement, but could not take upon myself to question it.

With love to Madame De la Rue,

Believe me My Dear Friend | Ever Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To ARTHUR CHAPPELL, 7 AUGUST 1866*

MS Boston Public Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.

Tuesday Seventh August, 1866.

My Dear Mr. Chappell.

On Saturday between halfpast eleven and one, and again from two to three I purpose being at my office and shall be happy to see you there.

It seems to me that the best thing we can do in all new places where there is but one Reading, will be invariably to put up Doctor Marigold and the Trial from Pickwick.

Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

S. Arthur Chappell Esquire

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 7 AUGUST 1866*

MS L. Ramon Secrest.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Seventh August 1866

My Dear Ouvry.

I address the enclosed cheque in discharge of my account,[†1] to you, merely for safety's sake.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Farrer Ouvry and Farrer.

To MISS SIMPSON,[†2] 7 AUGUST 1866*

MS Arnold Zeigler. Address (envelope MS Mrs Ivy Davison): Miss Simpson | 40 Duncan Terrace | Islington | London | N. PM 7 Aug 66.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Seventh August 1866

Mr. Charles Dickens regrets that he cannot possibly accept the responsibility of complying with Miss Simpson's request.[†3]

To J. C. PARKINSON, 8 AUGUST 1866

Mention in Walter M. Hill catalogue No. 28 (Nov 1909); MS 1 p.; dated Tuesday 8 Aug 66; addressed J.C. Parkinson.

To W.H. WILLS, 11 AUGUST 1866

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Eleventh August 1866[†1]

My Dear Wills.

Many thanks for the information concerning that loose fish.[†2] Ouvry held it best to wait until the halfyear's accounts come in next month, before taking action. I think he must already have paid the balance due upon them, if not more. He has been paying £300 per month on account, since the last settlement.[†3]

The picture of the Tinsley fete,[†4] magnificent!

I don't think I shall come to town (there being things to look after here) until Thursday; but I may, if I can get away, look in at the office tomorrow evening. Will you leave the proofs for me? If I come on Thursday, it will be soon after 11 A.M. to remain until after lunch.

The Xmas No.[†5] continues to reside in the Limbo of the Unborn — as Tinsley's friend Tom Carlyle would say.

Ever

CD.

To [MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL], 13 AUGUST 1866

MS Johns Hopkins University.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Thirteenth August 1866

Dear Sirs

Be so good as to make up a packet containing a complete set of my books, and to send it by South Western Railway, addressed thus:

Sydney Smith Dickens Esqre. R. N.

H. M. S. "Bristol"

Care of Messrs. Seagrove and Co.[†6]

The Hard

Portsea.

Carriage Paid

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To B. W. PROCTER, 13 AUGUST 1866

Text from MDGH, II, 259.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT,
Monday, Aug. 13th, 1866

My Dear Procter,

I have read your biography of Charles Lamb[†1] with inexpressible pleasure and interest. I do not think it possible to tell a pathetic story with a more unaffected and manly tenderness. And as to the force and vigour of the style, if I did not know you I should have made sure that there was a printer's error in the opening of your introduction, and that the word "seventy" occupied the place of "forty."[†2]

Let me, my dear friend, most heartily congratulate you on your achievement. It is not an ordinary triumph to do such justice to the memory of such a man. And I venture to add, that the fresh spirit with which you have done it impresses me as being perfectly wonderful.

Ever affectionately yours

To JOHN FORSTER, [?14 AUGUST 1866]

Extract in F, VIII, vii, 703. Date: Chappell accepted CD's proposal on 14 Aug (endorsement to To Chappell 2 Aug); letter probably written same day.

Chappell instantly accepts my proposal of forty nights at sixty pounds a night, and every conceivable and inconceivable expense paid. To make an even sum, I have made it forty-two nights for £2500. So I shall now try to discover a Christmas number,[†3] and shall, please Heaven, be quit of the whole series of readings so as to get to work on a new story for the new series of All the Year Round early in the spring.[†4] The readings begin probably with the New Year.[†5]

To "A WORKING MAN", 14 AUGUST 1866*

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: To | A Working Man.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Fourteenth August 1866

A working man is recommended to go to work immediately, and mind his own business. Story tellers have been in quarantine for several ages, at short intervals.[†6]

To P. LE PIPER,[†1] 20 AUGUST 1866

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue (1903), in Kitton's "Dickens Ana", IV, 13; MS 1 p.; dated 20 Aug 66; addressed P. Le Piper.

I have no influence with my publishers that extends beyond my own writings. But whatever is offered as a contribution to my journal "All the Year Round" at its office is honestly read, and all accepted articles are paid for.

To SIR JAMES EMERSON TENNENT, 20 AUGUST 1866

MS Morgan Library. Address: Sir James Tennent | Tempo Manor | Enniskillen | Ireland.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Twentieth August, 1866

My Dear Tennent.

I have been very much interested by your extract,[†2] and am strongly inclined to believe that the Founder of the refuge for Poor Travellers[†3] meant the kind of man to which it refers.[†4] Chaucer certainly meant his "Pardoner"[†5] to be a humbug, living on the credulity of the people. After describing the sham reliques he carried, he says:

But with these relikes whanne that he found
A poure personne dwelling up on lond,

Befor a day he gat him more monnie
Than that the personne gat in monethese tweis,
And thus with fained flattering and japes
He made the personne, and the people, his apes.

— And the worthy Watts (founder of the Charity) may have had these very lines in his mind when he excluded such a man.

When I last heard from my boy,[†6] he was coming to you and was full of delight and dignity. My Midshipman has just been appointed to the Bristol,[†7] on the West coast of Africa, and is on his voyage out to join her. I wish it had been another ship and another station. She has been unlucky in losing men.[†8]

Kindest regard from all my house to all yours.

Faithfully Yours ever
CHARLES DICKENS

Sir James Emerson Tennent

To SIR JAMES EMERSON TENNENT, 21 AUGUST 1866*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Private | Sir James Emerson Tennent | Board of Trade.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Twenty First August 1866

My Dear Tennent

I am most heartily obliged to you for your letter crossing mine. Be assured that I shall act upon it, and that I highly esteem your true friendship.

He[†1] is a very good boy, and clever and industrious. The Wimbledon masters, therefore, naturally wish to have him back. But he shall be thoroughly examined by a good surgeon[†2] (by Fergusson[†3] when he comes to town), and I will for the present place him with a private tutor at Tunbridge Wells.[†4]

The terms in which you mention him are quite delightful to me. That unfortunate elder brother of his[†5] to whom you were so kind, is shewing, I hope, a quiet determination to recover himself in Australia. He is up the country at a lonely station, and seems to have taken off his coat in earnest to repair his fortunes.

With kindest regard from all | Affectionately Yours ever
CHARLES DICKENS

To WALTER THORNBURY,[†6] 26 AUGUST 1866*

MS Miss B. J. McLeary.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.

Sunday Twenty Sixth August 1866

My Dear Thornbury

Your object in the paper called "Dilapidations"[†7] being to call attention to the abuses of a system,[†8] I think it desirable to make the paper as general as possible.[†9] I have therefore taken out the details of the poor clergyman's death, and also the part about his wife's counting the strokes of the bell. What is left, might happen to any clergyman and any clergyman's widow; and is not that what we want?

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Walter Thornbury Esquire

To W. H. WILLS, 26 AUGUST 1866*

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Sunday Twenty Sixth August 1866

My Dear Wills

I have seldom been more disheartened by proofs than by these.[†1] Let me go through them now, in detail.

The disgusting snobbery of Sidney's,[†2] is ineradicable. But I have made it as little offensive as it can be made, and let us print it with those corrections and be rid of it. It is enclosed.

Thornbury's "Dilapidations" has got all that coffin relish in it which disfigures his mind. I think I perceive too, that it is an assertion of some particular case which would very easily get us into trouble. I have taken out the deadly business, and made the case general. Proof enclosed, and also a line to him to explain.[†3]

Saxonhurst[†4] has given me a world of trouble, for Fitzgerald writes so loosely, that he really seems sometimes to write in his sleep. I tried to patch the last chapter,[†5] but stopped short, finding it quite impossible. I have therefore dele'd the whole of that portion (called The Return), and perhaps you will tell him that I think the subject without it, has as much treatment as it will bear. Proof enclosed.

No to the Donnybrook old and new.[†6] It is full of the strangest confusion, and is a puff of a Catholic Chapel.
No[†7] to Hazlitt's[†8] Proverbs. Laborious in the extreme, and nothing else in it.

A Monster Aquarium. O Lord! O Lord!! Its efforts at humour, make Dodd[†9] a fine comic writer. Even with these struck out, it conveys no definite idea to me of the place intended to be described. But if you like to use it as altered, do. Proof enclosed, under the title of An Artificial Ocean.[†10]

Oxenford will do.[†11] But I have changed his title. Proof enclosed.

I don't know whether I ought to infer from your note received this morning, that you meant to send me any later-proposed Making Up than this which I now send back. But I have no other. I don't think there is much to choose between one article and another, and I doubt whether we should be stronger by changing it. But I wouldn't put Our Yacht[†1] and A Good Hack together, if it can be avoided.[†2]

I purpose being at the office on Wednesday soon after eleven.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

The Proof you sent me, "Katchen's Caprices",[†3] is the beginning of an unfinished paper by Aunt Margaret.[†4] We cannot touch it until I get more.

September

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 1 SEPTEMBER 1866*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Saturday First September 1866

My Dearest Georgy

I write this, after such an interview with Boucicault and Fechter, that I seem not to have a grain of sense left. I have heard so much of "him", and "thater man", and the "oother one", that I am perfectly dazed. But my bewildered impression is, that the story is a fine one — that the situations are very strong, though sad — and that if (a large if!) Boucicault plays no tricks, the chances of interest and success are great.[†5] It seems to me that the hidden scheme (if there be one; — I cannot conceive why there should be one, but I can't help thinking there is) tends towards the withdrawal of Mrs. Boucicault.[†6] In which case, "cette creature"[†7] will do the part.

I should like the basket to meet me at Higham on Monday, I starting from Charing X by the 2.10 train. As I suppose we must have some of the local notabilities to dinner soon, I wish you would give my love to Mary — if she be at home — and ask her to devise a dinner — or two dinners — before I come, so that we may have nothing to do but choose the precise day or days, and send off the notes.

I will write to Mr. Brackenbury by this post concerning Harry.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To SIR CHARLES W. DILKE,[†1] 4 SEPTEMBER 1866*

MS British Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Fourth September 1866

My Dear Dilke,

I have been away from here for a few days, or I should have lost no time in answering your kind note.

We have the best will in the world to profit by your hearty invitation and should be delighted to do it. But at a solemn council of three, held last night, it was resolved that we have got ourselves into such a complicated condition, through asking people here, through people asking themselves here, through lame boys not yet healed,[†2] and sound boys not to be trusted alone,[†3] that we are in a condition of incapacity, imprisonment, immobility, and mental mortification.

Our only consolation is in the axiom "Better luck next time."

We are fresh from a military funeral. A splendid dog,[†4] as big as an average lioness, ferociously cast down and bit a village child whom he knew, and should have respected. Sentence of Death was passed by drum head Court Martial. The victim went out into the meadow with the greatest cheerfulness, attended by the executioner, double barrelled gun, and wheelbarrow (for conveyance of body back) and supernumeraries. Evidently supposed a general Lark to be in contemplation, including a journey to bring back something to eat in the wheelbarrow. Died mistaken.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Sir C Wentworth Dilke

To GEORGE DOLBY, 4 SEPTEMBER 1866*

MS Beinecke Library, Yale University.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Fourth September 1866

My Dear Dolby

I shall expect you here on Friday the Fourteenth, and will meet you at any train-time you appoint. Of course I shall so arrange as not to have to go to town until the following Monday.

All here unite in kind regard to Mrs. Dolby[†5] and the young lady.[†6] I hope the latter is not likely to see more disconsolate weather in the course of the next ninety years, than that which is howling about the Gad's Hill windows at present.

Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

George Dolby Esquire

To MESSRS ESSELL, KNIGHT & ARNOLD,[†1] 4 SEPTEMBER 1866*

MS Mrs M. Broughton.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.

Tuesday Fourth September 1866

Dear Sirs

I am informed by Mr. Langford[†2] that I should forward the enclosed letter to you, with the object of having it laid before the Board at their Meeting at Gravesend tomorrow.[†3]

I take the opportunity of sending you my cheque for a year's rent of land.

Dear Sirs | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Essell Knight and Arnold[†4]

To THE BOARD OF COMMISSIONERS OR TRUSTEES OF ROADS, 4 SEPTEMBER 1866

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, July 1996; MS 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill, [Tuesday][†5] 4 Sep 66; addressed Board of Commissioners or Trustees of Roads.

Requesting permission to plant a row of lime-trees on the side of the high-road along the whole wall-frontage of his property at Gad's Hill. I trust you may be of opinion that the road could sustain no damage from being so ornamented, and that the appearance of the trees would be refreshing and pleasant to passers by.

To CHARLES FECHTER, 4 SEPTEMBER 1866

Text from MDGH, II, 260-62.

Gad's Hill | Tuesday, Sept. 4th, 1866

My Dear Fechter,

This morning I received the play[†6] to the end of the telegraph scene,[†7] and I have since read it twice.

I clearly see the ground of Mr. Boucicault's two objections;[†8] but I do not see their force.

First, as to the writing. If the characters did not speak in a terse and homely way, their idea and language would be inconsistent with their dress and station, and they would lose, as characters, before the audience. The dialogue seems to be exactly what is wanted. Its simplicity (particularly in Mr. Boucicault's part)[†1] is often very effective; and throughout there is an honest, straight-to-the-purpose ruggedness in it, like the real life and the real people.[†2]

Secondly, as to the absence of the comic element. I really do not see how more of it could be got into the story, and I think Mr. Boucicault underrates the pleasant effect of his own part. The very notion of a sailor, whose life is not among those little courts and streets, and whose business does not lie with the monotonous machinery, but with the four wild winds, is a relief to me in reading the play. I am quite confident of its being an immense relief to the audience when they see the sailor before them, with an entirely different bearing, action, dress, complexion even, from the rest of the men. I would make him the freshest and airiest sailor that ever was seen; and through him I can distinctly see my way out of "the Black Country" into clearer air.[†3] (I speak as one of the audience, mind.) I should like something of this contrast to be expressed in the dialogue between the sailor and [Jem],[†4] in the second scene of the second act. Again, I feel Widdicomb's part (which is charming, and ought to make the whole house cry)[†5] most agreeable and welcome, much better than any amount in such a story, of mere comicality.

It is unnecessary to say that the play is done with a master's hand. Its closeness and movement are quite surprising. Its construction is admirable. I have the strongest belief in its making a great success.[†6] But I must add this proviso: I never saw a play so dangerously depending in critical places on strict natural propriety in the manner and perfection in the shaping of the small parts.[†7] Those small parts cannot take the play up, but they can let it down. I would not leave a hair on the head of one of them to the chance of the first night, but I would see, to the minutest particular, the make-up of every one of them at a night rehearsal.

Of course you are free to show this note to Mr. Boucicault, and I suppose you will do so; let me throw out this suggestion to him and you. Might it not ease the way with the Lord Chamberlain's office, and still more with the audience, when there are Manchester champions in it, if instead of "Manchester" you used a fictitious name?[†1] When I did "Hard Times" I called the scene Coketown. Everybody knew what was meant, but every cotton-spinning town said it was the other cotton-spinning town.

I shall be up on Saturday, and will come over about mid-day, unless you name any other time.

Ever heartily
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To DION BOUCICAULT, 4 SEPTEMBER 1866*

MS Private.

Gad's Hill | Tuesday Afternoon Fourth September 1866

My Dear Sir

Your note just received by the afternoon post, immediately before the going out of the evening[†2] post from here. Before receiving it, I had written to Fechter. I have only time to beg you to ask him for that note, and to tell you that I think the piece EXCELLENT.[†3]

In great haste | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Dion Boucicault Esquire

To F. C. BEARD, 6 SEPTEMBER 1866

MS Dickens House. Address: F. Carr Beard Esquire | 44 Welbeck Street | Cavendish Square | London | W.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Sixth September 1866.

My Dear Frank Beard.

I have been bothered for weeks — months — at intervals with distention and flatulency, and disagreeable pains in the pit of the stomach and chest, without any disarrangement of the bowels, worth speaking of. Sometimes I have it all day, sometimes at capricious intervals, sometimes all night after 2 or so.

In a similar sickly season, I had exactly the same uncomfortable symptoms at Boulogne, ten years ago. Elliotson[†4] who was there, gave me some simple prescription in which the main (if not the only) ingredient was cajeput oil.[†5] It succeeded immediately.

Can you, on this diagnosis, send me a prescription to relieve this small distress? Or I shall be in town all Saturday, and could come to you, or see you at the office or anywhere, after 1 o'clock. Though I really feel that it is not in the least worth while to trouble you to that extent.

Faithfully Yours ever
CHARLES DICKENS

Elliotson's prescription was white, I remember — small in dose — and imperceptible in its effect, except on the annoyance.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?6 SEPTEMBER 1866]

Extract in F, VIII, vii, 703. Date: "September", according to Forster; if the symptoms were the same as those he complained of to F. C. Beard on 6 Sep, then perhaps same date.

I think there is some strange influence in the atmosphere. Twice last week I was seized in a most distressing manner — apparently in the heart; but, I am persuaded, only in the nervous system.

To EDWARD M. CURTISS,[†1] 6 SEPTEMBER 1866

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Sixth September 1866

Dear Sir

In reply to your letter, I beg to assure you that when David Copperfield took leave of Steerforth in his own house, he (David) had no suspicion whatever respecting the seduction of Emily. Nor had he any misgiving of the truth until the night when Ham announced her flight to him in the old boat. Then, piecing the scattered past together in his mind, and coupling it with Ham's imploring him to go out of hearing before he told Mr. Peggotty the Man's name, he (David again) felt that the man was his friend — "the friend I had happily introduced there". The difference of opinion on this head which you make known to me, may be considered as distinctly and decidedly set at rest by this present note.[†2] You should have received it sooner, but that I have been away from home.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Edward M Curtiss Esquire

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 6 SEPTEMBER 1866

Mention in S. F. Henkels catalogue No. 1280; MS (3rd person) 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill Place, 6 Sep 66.

To G. W. RUSDEN, 7 SEPTEMBER 1866

MS Trinity College, University of Melbourne.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Seventh September 1866

My Dear Sir

Again I have to thank you very heartily, for your kindness in writing to me about my son. The intelligence you send me concerning him is a great relief and satisfaction to my mind, and I cannot separate these feelings from a truly grateful recognition of the advice and assistance for which he is much beholden to you, or from his strong desire to deserve your good opinion.

Believe me always My Dear Sir
Your faithful and truly obliged

CHARLES DICKENS

G. W. Rusden Esquire

To F. C. BEARD, 10 SEPTEMBER 1866

MS Dickens House. Address: F. Carr Beard Esqre. | 44 Welbeck Street | Cavendish Square | W.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Monday Tenth September 1866

My Dear Frank Beard

I think that there is no question that the enclosed prescription at once touches the disagreeables; but it has a tendency to affect the bowels in the way of relaxation, though not moving them oftener than the regular once a day. If this be right, please return me the prescription here. If wrong, please post me an altered triumph of medical skill.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 10 SEPTEMBER 1866*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Monday Tenth September 1866

My Dearest Georgy

Will you send me here by return (in order that I may give it to Fechter), the name and address of the Gas-Bath Maker,[†1] as they hang up in our Bathroom.

And will you ask Harry to write to Mr. Canning, and tell him I am obliged to confess that I positively cannot read his Manuscript.[†2] He need not add that it is quite intolerable that any man should send such preposterous writing to be perused by any human creature. It really is a liberty that no Jackass has taken since Household Words began.

With love to all | Ever Your most affectionate
CD.

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 10 SEPTEMBER 1866

Summary in Sotheby's catalogue, June 1979; MS 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill, 10 Sep 66; addressed F. Ouvry.

Enclosing the quarterly cheque.

To GEORGE DOLBY, 12 SEPTEMBER 1866

Extract in N, III, 484.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND, | 12th September, 1866

I was on the very point of writing to you to come on Saturday instead of Friday, as Fechter has his most important Rehearsal[†1] on Friday night, and nothing will induce him to believe that he can prosper with the piece unless I am there according to custom. What I now propose, in our combination of difficulties, is this:— Don't come to Gad's Hill until after your return from your next engagement. Come here at 3 on Friday and we will carefully discuss the tour.

To MISS MARGUERITE POWER, 12 SEPTEMBER 1866*

MS Lloyd E. Roscoe.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Twelfth September 1866

My Dear Marguerite

I accept the Tropical Episode,[†2] in any case. I am not quite clear about it for the Xmas No. but will consider it well in that connexion, as the said No. works its way into being — with much greater difficulty than the tropical child did.[†3]

Sorry to hear that you have not been well, and amazed to learn from John this morning that Frank Beard has broken his arm. At a Great Ill Luck Exhibition, he certainly would get the first gold medal.[†4]

It has blown gales and rained Niagaras, at Gad's Hill, for some years.

Ever affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

To HARRY SYDNEY,[†5] 15 SEPTEMBER 1866

MS Berg Collection.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND, | Saturday Fifteenth September 1866

Sir

I have received your letter of the day before yesterday, and now have the pleasure of replying to it.

In this dead time of the year, I have not the opportunity of at once communicating with the writer of the article to which you refer; but I have refreshed my memory concerning the article itself, by reading it again. It is to be found in No. 383 of this journal, dated Saturday August 25th.[†1]

The passage to which I suppose you to object is this:—

"'Fortey's[†2] Edition of new and popular songs'[†3] is recommended to the public as containing Sydney's great song of Who likes Gravy on their Taters."[†4]

Whether Mr. or Mrs. Fortey (for I am unacquainted with the sex of the vocal collector in question) may be trading on the popularity of your name, or whether that lady or gentleman may be desirous of exalting some obscure person of the same name, I cannot tell. But this is a mere statement of a fact. The thing is so. The book the title of which is given, contains that passage. And it would be absurd for these pages gravely to discuss its authority.

When I have the opportunity, I will beg the writer of the article in question to make some good humoured reference to your communication when he next writes on some kindred subject for All The Year Round. In the mean time you may be perfectly sure that he has merely made a quotation from one out of several books that I remember to have been purchased for his enlightenment. As to myself, I have strongly urged the case of the Music Halls as against the prosecutions of Theatrical Managers, and have advocated Free Trade in entertainments[†5] as in all other speculations. I cannot possibly therefore have any prepossession against you.

I am sir | Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

Harry Sydney Esquire

To WALTER THORNBURY, 15 SEPTEMBER 1866

Text from MDGH, II, 262-3.

ALL THE YEAR ROUND OFFICE,
Saturday, Sept. 15th, 1866.

My dear Thornbury,

Many thanks for your letter.

In reference to your Shakespeare queries, I am not so much enamoured of the first and third subjects as I am of the Ariosto[†6] enquiry, which should be highly interesting. But if you have so got the matter in your mind, as that its execution would be incomplete and unsatisfactory to you unless you write all the three papers, then by all means write the three, and I will most gladly take them.[†7] For some years I have had so much pleasure in reading you, that I can honestly warrant myself as what actors call "a good audience."

The idea of old stories retold is decidedly a good one. I greatly like the notion of that series.[†1] Of course you know De Quincey's paper on the Ratcliffe Highway murderer?[†2] Do you know also the illustration (I have it at Gad's Hill), representing the horrible creature as his dead body lay on a cart, with a piece of wood for a pillow, and a stake lying by, ready to be driven through him?[†3]

I don't quite like the title, "The Social History of London." I should better like some title to the effect, "The History of London's Social Changes in so many Years." Such a title would promise more, and better express your intention. What do you think of taking for a first title, "London's Changes"? You could then add the second title, "Being a History," etc.[†4]

I don't at all desire to fix a limit to the series of old stories retold.[†5] I would state the general intention at the beginning of the first paper,[†6] and go on like Banquo's line.[†7]

Don't let your London title remind people, by so much as the place of the word "civilisation," of Buckle.[†8] It seems a ridiculous caution, but the indolent part of the public (a large part!) on such points tumble into extraordinary mistakes.

Faithfully yours always
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To CHARLES KENT, 16 SEPTEMBER 1866

Mention in Dickens Exhibition, New Dudley Gallery catalogue, 1909; MS 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill Place, 16 Sep 66; addressed Charles Kent.

To CHARLES KENT, 18 SEPTEMBER 1866

Mention in Anderson Galleries catalogue No 2298; dated 18 Sep 66; addressed Charles Kent.

To MARCUS STONE, 25 SEPTEMBER 1866*

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: Marcus Stone Esquire | Russell House | Tavistock Square | London | W. C.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Twenty Fifth September | 1866

My Dear Marcus

Will you kindly undertake a little commission for me, and so enable me to render an acceptable attention to a contributor to whom I cannot offer money.[†1]

Will you select me 6 or even 8 good photographs of those admirable French pictures[†1] we spoke of (of course only one of each subject, and comprising all the best subjects — which I think make up about either[†2] of those Nos.), and will you instruct your frame-maker to frame them separately for hanging, each in a light gilt moulding with a plate-glass, and then to send the whole to me at the office in a case, with his account. I had best, I suppose, pay you for the photographs, and him for the framing.

In Christmas Agonies[†3]
Believe me | Affectionately Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Marcus Stone Esquire

To THE MARCHIONESS OF DOWNSHIRE,[†4] 26 SEPTEMBER 1866

Text from N, III, 485-6.

Gad's Hill Place
Wednesday Twenty-Sixth September 1866

Dear Lady Downshire,

What a favored mortal you are! I wish my correspondents would once in a way be half as amusing as these of yours. Mine are of two classes. One class wants print; the other class wants money. Both are extremely lachrymose, and are surrounded by friends who hold them in unspeakable estimation, but somehow don't tangibly express it.

I have not had an approach towards the merit of Mrs. Russell Todd[†5] for a long time, except during the Fenian raid in Canada,[†6] when a begging-letter writer (born in Whitechapel and naturalized and resident in St Giles's) wrote to me that he was a Canadian, and that if he were armed with ten shillings and an old coat he would "fly to repel the invader."

I beg to be recalled to the kind remembrance of Lady Alice,[†7] and am
Always Faithfully Yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 27 SEPTEMBER 1866*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Twenty Seventh September 1866

My Dearest Georgy

I purpose coming down on Sunday by the train that leaves Charing X at 1.15. It is all but certain that Fechter will come with me, but not wholly certain. Basket to Higham Station.

I am to see Beard at his own house on Sunday at 11. You know where to find me in the mean time.

The train was half an hour late this morning. I have been so put about since, having a world to do, that I have been in a perpetual convulsion.

Will you write to Bourgois, and tell him that he will find the amount of his account remitted to the Bank at Boulogne as usual.[†1] He may send to Gad's:

6 Doz: Champagne (very careful that it is the best of the usual quality).

5 Doz: Leoville

6 Doz. Chablis.

He may also send 6 Doz: of the same champagne to Tennent in town. Perhaps you will write Lady Tennent to let her know it is duly ordered.

Love to Letitia and Harriett[†2] | Ever affecy

CD.

To EDWIN ROFFE, SEPTEMBER 1866

Mention in Sotheby's catalogue, Apr 1895 (Library of J. A. Clarke); dated Sep 66; addressed Edwin Roffe.

October

To MESSRS FARRER, OUVRY & FARRER, 1 OCTOBER 1866*

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT

Monday Night First October 1866

Dear Sirs

Mr. Ouvry writing from Folkestone, sends me the enclosed draft of a letter,[†3] saying that you will duly address it to Mr. Cave, the Lessee of the Marylebone Theatre, if I wish it dispatched. As I do wish it to be dispatched, I beg to forward the draft to you.

Dear Sirs | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Farrer Ouvry and Farrer

To W. H. WILLS, 1 OCTOBER 1866*

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT

Monday Night, First October 1866

My Dear Wills

I cannot submit to that audacious statement of Mr. Cave's,[†1] and I have therefore forwarded the draft letter[†2] to Ouvry's Firm, with a request that it may be sent.

As your brain is "no softer", I have vague hopes of its lasting our time! I am still unapproachable on the general subject of Xmas Nos. myself — am lame — ferocious — and dangerous.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

I suppose you must report me —

— gratified

— flattered

— proud

— honored

— and accepting Mrs. Gascoigne's[†3] dedication[†4] with feelings more easily imagined than described.

To THE HON. ALBERT CANNING, 4 OCTOBER 1866

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Fourth October 1866[†5]

My Dear Mr. Canning

The return of the shorter MS by book-post, has been accidentally delayed by my having taken great pains to lock it up (it seems) when I was last here, after it had been put in its wrapper. It is posted today. Pray excuse this accident.

No "newspaper office" would dream of undertaking anything so out of its way as printing a MS having no sort of connexion with its columns. But I have requested the foreman of the printer who contracts to print this Journal,[†1] roughly to "cast off" your King James MS[†2] and to estimate the cost of printing say 250 copies of it. (Fewer would cost a mere trifle less). His calculation, if it should arrive before post time shall be sent at the foot of this letter; if not, in an early successor to it.

I need not tell you that what you impart to me concerning Harry, is highly gratifying to me; though I earnestly hope that so generous a mark of your interest in him is destined to grow very yellow and dusty among long-hoarded papers, before it sees the light.[†3] Your letter I have of course destroyed.

Believe me always | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

The Hon. Albert Canning.

To WILKIE COLLINS, 4 OCTOBER 1866

MS Morgan Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Fourth October 1866

My Dear Wilkie

None of the scenery[†4] was painted over, but it was cut down into small panels for the decoration of the Theatre-Room in Tavistock House. Those canvasses still exist in Chapman and Hall's warehouse, where they are carefully preserved.[†5] But they are so separated from their contexts (so to speak) and are, for stage purposes, so unintelligible — being small bits of complicated sets — that I think they would put the Olympic Painter[†6] into chains, instead of helping him. Moreover, it would be hardly fair to the dear old boy[†7] who painted them, to reproduce them, for such a purpose, at such a disadvantage.

If your memory fails you anywhere, as to the position of any practicable parts of the Scenery on which "Business" depends,[†8] I have no doubt I can jog it.

Retain your last faith. Trust my stomach, as an Institution superior to the cavils of scepticism.

This is a pretty state of things! — That I should be in Christmas Labour, while you are cruising about the world, a compound of Hayward[†9] and Captain Cook![†10]

But I am so undoubtedly one of the sons of Toil — and fathers of children — that I expect to be presently presented with a smock frock, a pair of leather breeches and a pewter watch, for having brought up the largest family ever known, [†a]with the smallest disposition to do anything for themselves.[†a]

Ever Affectionately

CD.

To LORD LYTTON, 4 OCTOBER 1866

MS Lytton Papers.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.[†1]
Thursday Fourth October 1866

My Dear Lytton.

Is there any chance of your being able and willing to come and see us for a few days, on the 23rd. or 24th.? I name that time because Lady Molesworth is coming then. It would give us inexpressible pleasure to see you here again.

Ever affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Lord Lytton

To EDWIN ROFFE, 4 OCTOBER 1866*

MS Edward S. Moore III. Address: Edwin Roffe Esquire | 48 Ossulton Street | Somers Town | N.W.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Fourth October 1866

Dear Sir

I am happy to retain your amusing and clear paper[†2] for insertion, with very slight curtailment.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Edwin Roffe Esquire

To CHARLES KENT, 4 OCTOBER 1866*

MS Dickens House. Address: Private | Charles Kent Esquire | "Sun" Office | Strand.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Evening Fourth October 1866

My Dear Kent.

Going to the Athenaeum to day after I saw you here, I found the enclosed[†3] lying there for me. I knew that my entry of your name was irregular, unless Lytton put down his name as your proposer, at once. But I understood from you that he would do so immediately, and therefore defied the Circumlocutional Demon.

Ever
CD.

To JAMES BIRTLES, 8 OCTOBER 1866*

Text from facsimile in Dickens House.

A. Y. R. Office | Monday Eighth October | 1866

Dr. Mr. Birtles.

I send you with this, in an outer envelope, two articles to be set up.[†1]

The enclosed copy of mine, follows on (as you will see) the copy already sent,[†2] with particular instructions. Another article[†3] to follow this again, I will send you over in two or three days.

CD.

To CHARLES KENT, 8 OCTOBER 1866*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: Private | Charles Kent Esquire | The Sun Office | Strand.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Monday Eighth October 1866

My Dear Kent.

I am afraid I must stick to it here, all tomorrow and Wednesday, until 4 or 5 in the afternoon. But will you come round either day, and dine at 1/2 past 6 sharp?

The Secretary of the Athenaeum[†4] told me to day that he had been obliged to call my attention to my being out of order, otherwise in a Club so much sought, there would be twenty similar circumlocutional breaches effected in a few days; numbers of members having no hesitation in seconding a man, who would be slow to propose him. I explained to him (though it was not necessary) that no such thing arose in this case — that I had merely left the Proposing to Lytton as a mark of deference to a friend whom I greatly admired and esteemed — and that I made the entry under the impression that he would immediately add his name. Herewith the Secretary replied that he had heard from Lytton, who would come in today or tomorrow to put down his name, and there was an end of it. I said "If the informality is of the least importance to our candidate, I will at once erase the entry, and leave it for Lytton to put down afresh." The Secretary would not hear of this — said it would all be quite right now — and so we parted, exchanging blessings and blessing the Universe at large.[†5]

Ever affecy.
CD.

To ANTONIN ROCHE,[†1] 8 OCTOBER 1866†

MS Mr Eric Hawkesley. Address: A. Roche Esquire | Cadogan Gardens | S.W.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Eighth October 1866

Dear Sir

In reply to your letter dated the 2nd. of this month (which has only just now reached me, in consequence of my having been absent), I beg to assure you that you are quite mistaken in supposing your charming negociator[†2] to have failed. My reply to my daughter was:— "How could I give a permission the nature of which was not explained to me? And surely it was quite a novelty, and rather an inconsistent one, to ask me to be selected from, and also to select from myself."

[†a]Joan of Arc's story from the Child's History of England — as you name that passage[†3] — is quite at your service for the purpose of your projected work.[†4] Or you can make any other extract, of similar length, from any of my books except the "Sketches by Boz".[†a] I would rather not have Mr. Sparkins[†5] or any of his immediate family quoted, because they are juvenile and hasty productions.[†6]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

A Roche Esquire

To [JAMES BIRTLES], 10 OCTOBER 1866

Text from New York Book & Art Auction Co. catalogue, Feb 1938.

This is to follow "THE BOY AT MUGBY".[†7] The rest of the paper shall be sent in the course of the morning.

CD.

To THE LORD MAYOR ELECT[†1] AND THE SHERIFFS OF LONDON AND MIDDLESEX,[†2] 13 OCTOBER 1866*

MS Mr Maurice Canter.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Thirteenth October, 1866

Mr. Charles Dickens begs to express his regret that he is prevented by another engagement from having the honor of accepting the invitation of The Lord Mayor Elect and the Sheriffs of London and Middlesex, to dinner on Lord Mayor's Day.[†3]

To W.R.S. RALSTON,[†4] 15 OCTOBER 1866

MS Institute of Russian Literature (Pushkin House), of the Academy of Sciences, St Petersburg. Address: W. R. S. Ralston Esquire | British Museum | London | W.C.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Fifteenth October, 1866

My Dear Sir

I beg you to accept my thanks for your obliging letter, and also for the interesting paper on the Russian poet[†5] — which I have read with much pleasure.

It would be exceedingly agreeable to me to accept any suitable Russian papers from your pen, for All The Year Round: I think it right to lay stress on the word "suitable", because both in Household Words and in All The Year Round, several Russian papers have already appeared. In the former case, the writer was a visitor merely;[†6] in the latter case, an old resident, well acquainted with the wilder parts of the country,[†7] and deriving from the Emperor[†8] himself, certain facilities and experiences.

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

W. R. S. Ralston Esquire

To MRS HENRY AUSTIN, 16 OCTOBER 1866*

MS Morgan Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Sixteenth October, 1866

My Dear Letitia

It was a slight shock to receive your tidings of the death of poor old Mrs. Austin,[†1] but one could hardly wish it otherwise. It is a curious question with me, whether he[†2] will pine and mope away; or whether he will quickly overcome the loss, with the dulled sensibility of age.

Ever affectionately[†3]

To J. T. FIELDS, 16 OCTOBER 1866†

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Sixteenth October 1866

My Dear Fields.

Although I perpetually see in the papers that I am coming out with a new Serial, I assure you I know no more of it at present. I am not writing (except for Christmas No. of All The Year Round), and am going to begin, in the middle of January, a series of 42 Readings. Those will probably occupy me until Easter. Early in the summer, I hope to get to work upon a story that I have in my mind.[†4] But in what form it will appear, I do not yet know, because when the time comes I shall have to take many circumstances into consideration. [†a]Regarding the choice of an American house, of course my personal feelings are with you. But I have no reason to complain of Harpers,[†5] and I have by me another proposal from Philadelphia.[†6] When I shall have decided on my mode of publication (having got to work as aforesaid), I will describe it to you, and to Harpers, and to the Philadelphian proposer, and my business decision shall be made according to the three replies.[†a]

A faint outline of a Castle in the Air always dimly hovers between me and Rochester, in the great Hall of which I see myself reading to American audiences. But my domestic surroundings must change, before the Castle takes tangible form. And perhaps I may change first, and establish a Castle in the other world. So no more at present.

Believe me ever | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

James T Fields Esquire

To W. H. WILLS, 21 OCTOBER 1866†

MS Huntington Library

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Twenty First October 1866

My Dear Wills

I have mislaid the proof of the Xmas No. advertisement. But it was wrong, I remember. The important word "stories" was omitted altogether. Let it stand in this way — "will contain in addition to other stories to be announced shortly" — and then my list.[†1]

I read The Boy to Miss Boyle, my two girls, and Georgina, last night, with such extraordinary peals and tears of laughter, that I think I foresee a great success. I don't think I ever saw people laugh so much under the prosiest of circumstances.

[†a]That news of Augustus,[†2] I think may be taken as true.[†3] It was very thoughtful of you — and like you — to send it. Poor fellow! A sad business altogether! My mind misgives me that it will bring upon me a host of disagreeables from America.[†a†4]

Mr. Horace Wigan[†5] so presses me about Wilkie's play,[†6] that I must come up on Tuesday, and go to Rehearsal at 12. I will call at the office about 1/2 past 11, in case you would care to go with me. Will you tell Birtles to have two things ready for me. First, the exact cast-off in pages of what I have done [†a]for Xmas No.[†a†1] Second, a complete proof of Katchen's Caprices.[†2]

Many thanks for the Ouvry & Farrer report. It will not do to bear this kind of insolence, as a consequence of a perfectly independent and moderate piece of criticism.[†3] He must apologize in the papers, or we positively must go on with an action for libel.[†4] It is nothing, to say that the man is insignificant. The precedent is dangerous and compromising. I wish you would impress this on Lincolns Inn Fields.

The secret concerning our Vestiges friend,[†5] remains a secret.[†6] [†a]We know the Nicholsons[†7] very well. They are people of the best kind here, and in high esteem.[†a]

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To AUGUSTUS MAYHEW,[†8] 24 OCTOBER 1866

Mention in Anderson Galleries catalogue No. 1572 (Apr 1921); MS 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill Place, 24 Oct 66; addressed Augustus Mayhew.

To H. N. KING,[†9] 27 OCTOBER 1866*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Twenty Seventh October 1866

Sir

I have to thank you, for your polite attention in sending me some admirable Photographs, and I beg to do so.

My Readings are, as to their business arrangements, entirely in the hands of the Messrs. Chappell. But I have made known to them the purport of your letter; — I do not otherwise interfere.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. H. N. King

To CAPTAIN JOHN HINDLE,[†1] 28 OCTOBER 1866*

MS Berg Collection. Address: Captain Hindle | 5 St. Mary's Vale | Chatham.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Twenty Eighth October 1866

My Dear Hindle.

Your letter stands in need of no excuse, and I would gladly help you, if I could. But I really know no man in Paris who would accept the delicate function of interposing between the Emperor, and a system he has examined and decided in favor of. — I mean, no man of any influence.

I think your idea of adapting your signals to Marryatt's[†2] code,[†3] an excellent one. The signal denoting a ship's position, also impresses me as very useful. But the means of regulating the motion of that shifting plate (especially, remembering that a ship afloat is not a fixture like a railway) are an important feature in the case, and their simplicity and efficiency should beyond all doubt be set forth.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To CHARLES KENT, 29 OCTOBER 1866

Mention in Dickens Exhibition, New Dudley Gallery catalogue, 1909; MS 1 p.; dated 29 Oct 66; addressed Charles Kent.

To G. W. SMALLEY,[†4] 29 OCTOBER 1866*

MS J. and S. Graphics, Inc. Address: — Smalley Esquire.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Monday Twenty Ninth October 1866

Dear Sir

I shall be happy to see you here tomorrow (Tuesday) at 2, or on Wednesday or Thursday at 12.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

G. W. Smalley Esquire

To THE LORD MAYOR[†1] AND LADY MAYORESS[†2] OF LONDON,* 30 OCTOBER 1866

MS Dickens House.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Thirtieth October, 1866

Mr. Charles Dickens begs to express his regret that he will be prevented, by a severe cold in the throat, from having the honor of dining this evening with The Lord Mayor and The Lady Mayoress.

November

To THOMAS ADOLPHUS TROLLOPE, 2 NOVEMBER 1866†

MS Miss Katharine Longley. Address (MS Free Library of Philadelphia): T. Adolphus Trollope | Post Restante | Paris [Brest].[†3]

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Second November, 1866

My Dear Trollope.

I should have written immediately to congratulate you on your then approaching marriage,[†4] and to assure you of my most cordial and affectionate interest in all that nearly concerns you, [†a]but that I thought it best to wait until I should have seen Nelly and her mother on their return,[†5] and should have known from them[†a] how best to address you.[†6]

No friend that you have can be more truly attached to you than I am. I congratulate you with all my heart, and believe that your marriage will stand high upon the list of happy ones. As to your wife's winning a high reputation out of your house — if you care for that — it is not much, as an addition to the delights of love and peace and a suitable companion for life — I have not the least doubt of her power to make herself famous.

I little thought what an important Master of the Ceremonies I was, when I first presented the late Fanny Ternan to you. Bear me in your mind even as the unconscious instrument of your having given your best affections to a worthy object, and I shall be the best paid Master of the Ceremonies since Nash drove his coach and six through the streets of Bath.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

T. Adolphus Trollope Esquire

To MRS COWDEN CLARKE,[†1] 3 NOVEMBER 1866

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds. Address: Mrs. Cowden Clarke | Villa Novello | Via san Giacomo | Genova.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Saturday Third November 1866.

My Dear Mrs. Cowden Clarke.

I am happy to accept Minnie's Musings[†2] for insertion here. When it appears (unless I hear from you to the contrary) Mr. Wills's business cheque shall be enclosed to the care of Mr. Littleton in Dean Street.[†3]

This is written in the greatest haste and distraction, by reason of my being in the height of the business of the Xmas No. And as I have this year written half of it myself, the always difficult work of selecting from an immense heap of contributions is rendered twice as difficult as usual, by the contracted space available.

Ah! your plan brings before me my beloved Genoa, and it would gladden my heart indeed to look down upon its bay once again from the high hills.

No green leaves in present prospect.[†4]

Affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

My best regard to Cowden Clarke.[†5]

To ANDREW HALLIDAY, 3 NOVEMBER 1866†

MS Walter T. Spencer.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Saturday Third November 1866

My Dear Mr. Halliday

Pray do the paper you mention,[†6] by all means.

I have done so much of the Xmas No. myself (half of it),[†1] that I cannot as yet answer for what I can get in. But of your subject's being in accordance with the plan, there is no kind of doubt.[†2] I have specially noted it among the mass of contributions now tumbling in.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Andrew Halliday Esquire

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 3 NOVEMBER 1866*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Saturday Third November 1866

My Dearest Georgina.

If you open this letter in presence of either of the Stone girls,[†3] do not be betrayed into any expression of surprise.

On no account come here on Monday, or come here at all for the present. This to Mary also.

A horrible business occurred here yesterday. On the previous afternoon, 8 sovereigns had been stolen from the cashbox. Yesterday morning (there having been a great disturbance in the meantime) they were replaced. It was the clumsy manner of the restoration, that most helped the discovery of the culprit. Not in the least suspecting the truth, I sent Wills to Scotland Yard for Walker, the head Inspector of the Detective Police.[†4] He came here with Williamson the head Superintendent.[†5] They examined all the people here and all the place, and came to the irresistible conclusion that the thief was — John![†6] What is worst of all is, that on a smaller scale the thing has been often done for a long time, and that the wretched Johnson has been impoverished by having to borrow money to make up inexplicable deficiencies in his daily accounts.

What I am to do with, or for, the miserable man, God knows. But we must make our gloomy way through it alone together, and it would be inexpressibly painful to me to have any third person present who knew him through his old long service.

He is discharged from the office, and is only waiting here as my private servant, until he can get some place to put his furniture in, and can move it away.

Do you think the place[†7] would suit Ellen?[†8] Could she undertake it with a girl to help her? If you make any move towards ascertaining this, keep the secret from the servants. Say that you believe John is going into some small business — anything of that kind — and be careful not to give them any reason for suspicion.

If you come to town on Monday, let me have a note here that morning, saying at what hour you will call at the Athenaeum. I will go there accordingly.

Mary will no doubt read this. If she will take the direction of the alteration of my chimney piece upon herself, it will be quite as well done as I could do it. Certainly yes, as to the dressing-room window. I can hardly think it possible that Aldridge[†1] has made so great a mistake.

I will write to Marsh on Monday, telling him when to bring up two of the little dogs for me.

Ever affecy

CD.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 5 NOVEMBER 1866*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Monday Fifth November 1866

My Dearest Georgina

I am heartily glad to hear that the stuff has come from Paris, and hope that the curtains and couch will be immediately got to work upon.

I wish you would write to Ellen,[†2] and tell her what the place is. There is no objection to her child, and she will have a good sitting room at the bottom of the house, three bright airy rooms adjoining each other at the top, coals and candles, and a guinea a week. [†a][But out of these wages, she must keep a girl.][†a] You know the duties. They are, to keep the house perfectly clean, to attend to me when I am here, and to Wills when he wants anything — which seldom extends beyond a cup of tea for lunch, or a chop. She would have leisure to do needlework in considerable quantities I should say: though of course this place would be the first consideration. The kitchen is, or shall be, furnished. Other furniture she would have to find. [†a][If she wanted a little help for this last purpose and it were absolutely necessary, I would advance her a few pounds.][†a] When we come up from Gad's, we could always bring a servant. Tell her to send her reply to you. The place would be ready for her, if she could be ready for it, next week. A housekeeper's bell will ring from my room, and from Wills's, both to the bottom of the house and to the top.

Fechter was (or he would have known nothing of the matter) here, just before the Detectives came. When he heard this morning what the enquiry elicited, he burst into tears and sobs. He is a fellow with a very gentle heart. I am sorry to add that he is in great trouble at the Theatre, and that the Boucicaults — from no fault of his — will probably leave him in the lurch after next Saturday.[†3]

It will be advisable towards the end of the week, to look up Homan.[†4] I shall be down on Sunday at latest.

Ever affecy.

CD.

Geo Russell has sent some Yarmouth Bloaters to Gad's.

To PERCY FITZGERALD, 6 NOVEMBER 1866

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Tuesday Sixth November 1866

My Dear FitzGerald

It is always pleasant to me to hear from you, and I hope you will believe, that this is not a mere fashion of speech.

Concerning the Green Covers,[†1] I find those leaves to be budding — on unquestionable newspaper authority — but upon my soul I have no other knowledge of their being in embryo! Really I do not see a chance of my settling myself to such work, until after I shall have accomplished 42 Readings to which I stand pledged.

I hope to begin this series, somewhere about the middle of January, in Dublin.[†2] Touching the details of the realization of this hope, will you tell me — in a line as soon as you can — Is the Exhibition Room a good room for speaking in?[†3]

Your mention of the late Sultan touches me nearly. He was the finest dog I ever saw, and between him and me there was a perfect understanding. But to adopt the popular phrase it was so very confidential that it "went no further". He would fly at anybody else with the greatest enthusiasm for destruction. I saw him, muzzled, pound into the heart of a regiment of the Line; and I have frequently seen him, muzzled, hold a great dog down with his chest and feet. He has broken loose (muzzled) and come home covered with blood, again and again. And yet he never disobeyed me, unless he had first laid hold of a dog.

You heard of his going to Execution, evidently supposing the Procession to be a party detached in pursuit of something to kill and eat? It was very affecting. And also of his bolting a blue-eyed kitten, and making me acquainted with the circumstance by his agonies of remorse (or indigestion)?

I cannot find out that there is any one in Rochester (a sleepy old City) who has anything to tell about Garrick,[†4] except what is not true. His brother the Wine-Merchant would be more in Rochester's way,[†5] I think. How on earth do you find time to do all these books? You make my hair stand on end — an agreeable sensation, for I am charmed to find that I have any. Why don't you come here yourself, and look after Garrick? I should be truly delighted to receive you.

My Dear FitzGerald | always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Percy FitzGerald Esquire

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 6 NOVEMBER 1866*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Sixth November 1866

My Dearest Georgina

I forgot the billiard room door. I think it is quite time Homan took that in hand. For two reasons. Firstly, because he will get the seats in, much more easily when the door is so altered. Secondly; because the little painting involved could not be better done than now.

Will you tell Marsh to get two little suitable baskets and to come up on Thursday by morning train from Higham, with the Dog like Linda (the dog: not the lady) for me, and the best of the 2 Sultan Dogs for Wills. I will tell him about going on to Wills's from here.

I am afraid John very little feels the enormity of his offence, except as it inconveniences himself. Wills telling him to day that he might be able to get him made a Waiter at the Reform Club, he replied "Oh I couldn't do that, Sir."

I have a little parcel for you, to which the enclosed letter refers.†1

Ever affecy.
CD.

To [?R.B.] GILMORE,†2 [6 NOVEMBER 1866]

Mention in next. Date: written the same day.

To MRS HOWE,†3 6 NOVEMBER 1866*

Text from Goodspeed's catalogue No. 169; MS 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill, 6 Nov 66.

Dear Mrs. Howe,

I have written to Mr. Gilmore today, to tell him that I am not at present at work on any new serial; and that if I were, I should still be at liberty to accept any new proposal for America.

On since reading the letter Mr. Gilmore enclosed to you, I find he also proposes for an early copy of the Xmas No. of All the Year Round. May I ask you to be good enough to let him know that that was purchased in America by anticipation, long ago.†4

With all pleasant remembrances and good wishes,

Believe me always, | Faithfully yours,

CHARLES DICKENS

To GEORGE RUSSELL, 6 NOVEMBER 1866*

MS Marjorie, Lady Russell. Address: George Russell Esquire | St. James's Place.

Office | Tuesday Sixth November, 1866

My Dear George Russell

A thousand thanks for the Bloaters. None the less, because I am a prisoner to the Xmas No. here, and have not yet tasted those corrupt delights.

Will tomorrow evening suit you for a Play? If so, will you dine with me at Verey's at 6? If tomorrow will not do, will Saturday? A word to Wellington Street, and I book myself accordingly.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To H.F. CHORLEY, 7 NOVEMBER 1866*

MS Dickens House.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Seventh November 1866

My Dear Chorley

You may be sure that I looked after St. Cecilia[†1] long before I got your note and that I heartily rejoiced to make out — which I did without the least difficulty or doubt — that she was a splendid success. I congratualte[[sic]] you. I read the words when I first had them, with great pleasure, and felt that there was a fine dramatic force in them.[†2]

The 15th. of December is in capitals in my little book.[†3]

Ever affectionately

CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 7 NOVEMBER 1866*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Seventh November 1866

My Dearest Georgy

The remembrance of a passage in your letter yesterday — which I forgot at the time — makes me so very much afraid of your doing something wrong with that French stuff[†4] that I go the length of sending a boy down with this, express.

You write about the sofa not having arrived to be covered, and about "the great chair" — or "the arm-chair" — being covered. There is no chair whatever to be covered in my room. Curtains are to be made to the large window and the two small windows, and the new sofa is to be covered. That is all. There is no chair to be covered.

Every affecy.

CD.

See that the boy has his dinner.

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 7 NOVEMBER 1866

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Seventh November 1866

My Dear Ouvry

First ascertaining beyond all reasonable possibility of doubt that this Vagabond's statement that I was drunk in his Theatre,[†1] IS[†2] libellous, — fire away.[†3]

Ever Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To GEORGE RUSSELL, 7 NOVEMBER 1866*

MS Marjorie, Lady Russell. Address: George Russell Esquire | 4 St. James's Place | S.W.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Seventh November 1866

My Dear George

I had lost sight of the fact that some changes here will deprive me of my bedroom next Saturday. Shall we say Saturday week? Can you throw in Gad's Hill too, and come down with me this next Saturday afternoon?

Ever Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

George Russell Esquire

To JAMES BIRTLES, 8 NOVEMBER 1866*

MS Houghton Library, Harvard.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Thursday Eighth November 1866

Dr. Mr. Birtles

There will be another paper, I find, for the Xmas No. from Miss Edwards.[†4] You shall have it soon after mid-day to day.

CD.

To THE HON. MRS RICHARD WATSON,[†1]
8 NOVEMBER 1866

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Thursday Eighth November 1866.

My Dear Mrs. Watson

I should have written sooner to congratulate you on your daughter's[†2] marriage,[†3] but that I have been (and still am) involved in the reading of interminable contributions for the Christmas No. In the midst of which has sprung up too, the horrible discovery of robbery on the part of a person implicitly trusted in, at the office.[†4] It has so shocked me, that I have had to walk more than usual before I could walk myself into composure again. However, I have happily done so, and that's all over.

Your account of your son in law is delightful; and it particularly addresses me because my heart always warms towards a sailor. But I was yet in the full glow of it, when I heard from Mary Boyle of George's[†5] intended marriage![†6] I half began to doubt whether I had better not wait until all your children were married, before writing. When they begin to go off at this rate, who can say where they will stop!

Indifferent practical authority on the subject as I am, I yet believe I am more interested than most men in marriages of affection and suitability. I most heartily sympathize with you in your natural joy and pride, and most fervently bless the dear old Castle[†7] and all in any way belonging to it. The old times there will always bloom in my remembrance, and I never had a friend whom I held higher in my affection and esteem than the gentle spirit never to be dissociated from it in my mind.

I dare say Mary will have told you that I have been working for Christmas (which makes my handwriting thus illegible), and that towards the middle of January, I purpose entering on a small course of 42 Readings. They seem an immense number, looked at from afar off; but every hill looks higher than it is, before one begins to mount it.

Believe me My Dear Mrs. Watson
Always Your affectionate Friend

CHARLES DICKENS

The Hon. Mrs. Watson

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 9 NOVEMBER 1866*

MS Huntington Libary.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Ninth November 1866

My Dearest Georgy

Let the Basket go over to Gravesend tomorrow afternoon, to meet me by the Express from Charing X at five minutes past 4. George Russell is coming with me, to stay till Monday.

With love to Mamie, if she be at home,

Ever affectionately

CD.

To WILLIAM RIDDLE,[†1] 9 NOVEMBER 1866

Text from Adrian H. Joline, Rambles in Autograph Land, 1913, p. 177.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday The Ninth. | November, 1866.

Dear Sir:

I have read your little daughter's story. I do not understand whether or not you suppose it to have any claim to publication, or any address to general readers. If you do, I think you are altogether mistaken.

Regarded as the production of a very clever child, it is interesting and curious. But the working of children's minds, when watched, is always so. I have certainly known other children to write as well, and to display more fancy, who had no faculty whatever of authorship in them as they grew older. If the case was mine, I would show just the same playful interest in this effort of childish invention as in any other more usual one; I would on no consideration lead the child to think that I regarded it as very exceptional; and I would quietly observe (taking some years for the purpose) whether it developed or died out.

Faithfully yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

William Riddle Esquire

To GEORGE RUSSELL, 9 NOVEMBER 1866*

MS Marjorie, Lady Russell. Address: George Russell Esquire | 4 St. James's Place | S.W.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Ninth November 1866

My Dear George

Let us go down by Express to Gravesend at 5 minutes past 4 tomorrow afternoon; meeting on the Platform a good 10 minutes earlier.

Ever Faithfully
CD.

To JOSEPH SLY, 9 NOVEMBER 1866

MS City of Lancaster Public Library. Address: Mr. Sly | King's Arms and Royal Hotel | Lancaster.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Friday Ninth November 1866

Dear Mr. Sly

Doctor Hood,[†1] a friend of mine who stayed at your house last Friday, thought very highly of a portrait of myself that I gave you, and has written to ask me where the engraving can be got. I do not remember what portrait it is. Will you be so good as let me know whether there are any names — of painter, engraver, publisher, or what not — attached to it, and, if any, what the names are.[†2]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [10 NOVEMBER 1866]

Extract in F, XI, iii, 822. Date: 10 Nov 66, according to Forster.

Sharply criticizing a pamphlet[†3] proposing royalties for authors instead of the half-profit system. What does it come to? what is the worth of the remedy after all? You and I know very well that in nine cases out of ten the author is at a disadvantage with the publisher because the publisher has capital and the author has not. We know perfectly well that in nine cases out of ten money is advanced by the publisher before the book is producible — often, long before. No young or unsuccessful author (unless he were an amateur and an independent gentleman) would make a bargain for having that royalty, to-morrow, if he could have a certain sum of money, or an advance of money. The author who could command that bargain, could command it to-morrow, or command anything else. For the less fortunate or the less able, I make bold to say — with some knowledge of the subject, as a writer who made a publisher's fortune long before he began to share in the real profits of his books — that if the publishers met next week, and resolved henceforth to make this royalty bargain and no other, it would be an enormous hardship and misfortune because the authors could not live while they wrote. The pamphlet seems to me just another example of the old philosophical chess-playing, with human beings for pieces. "Don't want money." "Be careful to be born with means, and have a banker's account." "Your publisher will settle with you, at such and such long periods according to the custom of his trade, and you will settle with your butcher and baker weekly, in the meantime, by drawing cheques as I do." "You must be sure not to want money, and then I have worked it out for you splendidly."

To THE REV. WILLIAM BENHAM,[†1] 12 NOVEMBER 1866*

MS Dickens House.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Twelfth November, 1866

Dear Sir

I am under the necessity of qualifying my compliance with your request, because similar applications are made to me every day.

I am happy to give you permission to extract into your projected compilation,[†2] either the opening of the Seven Poor Travellers,[†3] or the Story of old Cheeseman.[†4] But I cannot extend the permission to both, or to the Story of Richard Doubledick.[†5] The Clerk's story[†6] is not of my writing.

The article you were so good as to enclose in your letter[†7] I have read with much pleasure. And I beg you to believe that the feeling expressed in it towards myself,[†8] is deeply gratifying to me.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

William Benham Esquire

To W. H. WILLS, 12 NOVEMBER 1866*

Text from facsimile in Sotheby's catalogue, Mar 1998; checked from MS Sotheby's.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Twelfth November 1866

My Dear Wills

Another discovery! — There seems to be no end of the carelessness in the Xmas No.

Page 17. The sentence in caps, at the top. For "the gentleman from Nowhere," read "the gentleman for Nowhere".[†1]

Ever Faithfully
CD.

To JAMES BIRTLES, [13 NOVEMBER 1866]

Mention in To Wills, 13 Nov. Date: no doubt written same day.

To MESSRS CASSELL, PETTER & GALPIN, [13 NOVEMBER 1866]

Envelope only, MS Private. Address: Messrs. Cassell Petter and Galpin | La Belle Sauvage Yard | Ludgate Hill | London | E. C. PM Rochester 13 Nov 66.

To W. H. WILLS, 13 NOVEMBER 1866

MS Huntington Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Thirteenth November 1866

My Dear Wills.

It is curious I should not have noticed that mistake. The substitution of "to day" for "yesterday" makes all right. I have sent the correction to Birtles in a parcel.

†aEllen†2 has been here. She has "very nice furniture", she says, for her own rooms. I told her that she would find the Kitchen furnished for her. I think it better not to summon her before Saturday. I will be at the office that day, to make it easier for her. Let us make up the No. at the same time. There is not a doubt, I hope, of her being exactly the person we want.†a Tomorrow (Wednesday) I am due at the office at half past eleven, and am to sit to Mason in Bond Street (for some tattoo'd staring monster to be displayed in the Paris Exhibition)†3 at 12. At 1, I go with Chappell to explain a notion I have for improving the acoustics of St. James's Hall. After that, I shall look in at the office again.

Tell Miss Coutts with my kindest regard and remembrance, that I shall be delighted to try my hand promptly at the inscription.†4

What do you mean by this passage in one of your notes received this morning? "I sent a despatch last night, one Xmas No." Do you mean sent it to me? I have never had it.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To EDWARD STIRLING,†1 14 NOVEMBER 1866

Text from Edward Stirling, Old Drury Lane. Fifty Years' Recollections of Author, Actor and Manager, 1881, I, 187.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.

Wednesday, Fourteenth November, 1866

Dear Sir,

I shall be happy to come to "Faust" next Saturday evening.[†2] My address in town is (as I dare say you know) 26 Wellington-street.

Faithfully Yours,
CHARLES DICKENS.

Edward Stirling, Esquire

To WILLIAM DAY, 17 NOVEMBER 1866†

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: Mr. Day | Messrs. Clowes's Printing Office | Duke Street | Stamford Street | S.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Saturday Seventeenth Novr 1866

Dr. Mr Day.

I want to send to Messrs. Clowes's another reading to be printed for myself;[†3] and it would be a great convenience to me to have it done as soon as possible. But as it is from the forthcoming Xmas No. of this Journal, which will not be published until the 10th. of December, I write to ask you whether you can ensure its being kept secret and not getting out of the Printing office? If you should have any doubt on that subject, I must wait until within a day or two of publication here.

A word in reply will find me here on Thursday next.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To WILLIAM RIDDLE, 17 NOVEMBER 1866

Mention in John Anderson Jr catalogue, Dec 1915; MS 1 p.; dated Athenaeum Club, Saturday Night, 17 Nov 66; addressed William Riddle.

Telling him to collect the MS[†4] from the Office of All the Year Round.

To R. H. MASON, 20 NOVEMBER 1866

MS Myers & Co.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Tuesday Twentieth November 1866

Dear Mr. Mason

In these last instances, I think the Camera has let me off more easily than usual. I will not ask you to cancel any of the photographs you have sent me.[†1]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To GEORGE RUSSELL, 20 NOVEMBER 1866*

MS Marjorie, Lady Russell. Address: George Russell Esquire | 4 St. James's Place | London | S.W.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Tuesday Twentieth November | 1866

My Dear George.

Espinasse[†2] is from 72 to 74 years of age; is of decidedly apopleptic tendency; is a pompous ass; gives nonsensical decisions under vinous inspiration; lives in a froggy, duck-weedy, ditch-haunted swampy bower at Boxley,[†3] between this and Maidstone; and is confidently expected to "go off" at a moment's notice. I had all this yesterday on the two best authorities in this part of the County; and one of them (the Rochester Banker) said: "I would back the life of any tolerably healthy and sensible man of 82 against his".

It seems he was the Judge of the old Small Debts Court here, when the County Courts were established, and that he came into this preferment as a matter of course — none the less, because he was profoundly unfit for it.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN WATKINS,[†4] 20 NOVEMBER 1866

Mention in N, III, 491. MS 2 pp.; dated Gad's Hill, 20 Nov 66; addressed John Watkins.

Concerning a portrait Watkins had sent him.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 20 NOVEMBER 1866

Mention in John Waller catalogue No. 114 (1877); dated Gad's Hill, 20 Nov 66.

Writing of his "Books", a likeness of himself, his readings.

To MRS HUGHES,[†1] 21 NOVEMBER 1866*

MS Mrs A. K. Frazer.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Twenty First November 1866

My Dear Madam

I truly regret that it is not in my power to comply with your request. My vote for the Governesses Benevolent Institution[†2] is pre-engaged in behalf of a lady who has tried in vain several times, but hopes by dint of trying to succeed at last. While she is on the list of candidates I am pledged to support her.

Believe me always Dear Madam | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs Hughes.

To THE HON. ALBERT CANNING, 23 NOVEMBER 1866

Extract in Scheuer catalogue No. 3 (1927); MS 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill, 23 Nov 66; addressed The Hon. Albert Canning; with envelope.

Your MS has never reached this house or my office since you had it back.[†3] Like you, I have heard nothing from Harry about his leg for weeks, but I have no doubt this is because he has nothing to tell. The doctors said it would slowly gain strength.

To SAMUEL LOVER, 23 NOVEMBER 1866

MS W. A. Foyle.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Twenty Third November 1866

My Dear Lover.

A thousand thanks. But I don't think the brisk little shot is quite in our direction.[†4]

I sincerely hope you are better, and in your old good spirits.

Faithfully Yours Ever
CHARLES DICKENS

To FREDERIC CHAPMAN, [?20-24 NOVEMBER 1866]

Mention in To Frederic Chapman, 25 Nov. Date: probably written within a few days of that letter.

To THE MARQUIS OF DUFFERIN AND AVA,[†1] 24 NOVEMBER 1866*

MS Rosenbach Museum and Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Twenty Fourth November 1866

My Dear Lord Dufferin

I have only just now received your letter.

I will send you one of my books with the greatest pleasure, and shall be proud to know that it is among your series. I would rather give you Copperfield[†2] than any other, because it is my peculiar favorite. Unless you should let me know that you would really prefer a Xmas book, I will take care that Copperfield makes his way safely to Highgate[†3] in the course of this next week.

Believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Lord Dufferin

To JAMES BIRTLES, 25 NOVEMBER 1866*

MS Johns Hopkins University.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Twenty Fifth November 1866

In yesterday's make-up, there is an article by Mr. Wilkie Collins, called the Dead Lock in Italy.[†4] Since I went over it, I remember a passage that I wish to take out. I purpose being at the office tomorrow (Monday) at a quarter before one. If you will bring me, or send me, the proof, I will strike out the passage while the proof is waited for.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To FREDERIC CHAPMAN, 25 NOVEMBER 1866

MS University of Texas, Austin.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Twenty Fifth November 1866

My Dear Sir

This note will serve personally to introduce to you Mr. John Watkins, in reference to whose portrait of myself as rendered by Mr. Lane, I have already written you a note.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Fredk. Chapman Esquire

To GEORGE DOLBY, 25 NOVEMBER 1866*

MS Mr Tom Brown.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Twenty Fifth November 1866

My Dear Dolby

At 6 exactly, tomorrow Monday, in the large back public room at Verey's, a stately form will be discernible, prepared for any amount of trip-arrangement and detail. The noble stranger will have to leave town again at about 9 o'Clock, and I daresay you will be glad to get home in good time.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN WATKINS, 25 NOVEMBER 1866*

MS Cornell University Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Twenty Fifth November 1866

Dear Mr. Watkins

I write to Mr. Frederick Chapman by this post, and I also send you a note of introduction to him. As it is essential that the announcement should be short and should refer to nothing else but the subject in hand, I have taken three lines out of your draft.[†1]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Watkins Esquire

To JOHN WATKINS, [25 NOVEMBER 1866]

Mention in last.

Introducing Watkins to Chapman.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 26 NOVEMBER 1866

Mention in N, III, 492; dated Office of AYR, 26 Nov 66; addressed Miss Hogarth.

To CHARLES KENT, 26 NOVEMBER 1866*

MS Dickens House. Address: Private | Charles Kent Esquire | Sun Office | Strand.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Monday Twenty Sixth November 1866

My Dear Kent.

According to promise I send you for your perusal an early proof of the Xmas No. Of course you will keep it darkest of the dark, until you get your official early proof from here. Don't hurry; but when you have done with it, please return it to me here, marked Private.

Ever affectionately Yours

CD.

To R. H. MASON, 28 NOVEMBER 1866

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Wednesday Twenty Eighth November | 1866

Dear Mr. Mason

I think the enclosed griffin should be cancelled.†1

Faithfully Yours

CD.

To S. PERKES,†2 29 NOVEMBER 1866

MS Berg Collection. Address: Private | S. Perkes Esquire | West Dulwich | S.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Twenty Ninth November 1866

Sir

I beg to acknowledge, with many thanks, the receipt of your pamphlet†3 and your obliging letter. This I should have done some days sooner, but for having been absent.

While I highly respect the philanthropic objects so earnestly and (I am quite convinced) sincerely stated in your pages, I have not sufficient faith in any Parliament that could be got together in England, or in any Public Department that could be established, or in any Administration that could be formed, to trust to such bodies the sole undertaking of all great works for the public benefit and use. I do not in the least believe that through such agencies Jobbery would cease out of the land. Quite the contrary. Nor can I assume that such authorities would achieve none but profitable works. Quite the contrary again.

I do not profess to be at all learned (for indeed I am not) in currency doctrines. The more I have read about them, the more hazy my understanding of them has become. But as, in the transaction of my own limited affairs, I should very strongly object to any Government's having the power to force me to accept a piece of paper in lieu of a sovereign, so I cannot conscientiously recommend the public to vote for that Legal Tender of which you think so highly. And concerning that "mere stroke of the pen" which is to make a country prosperous and virtuous, I frankly avow to you that my mind is so constituted as to be utterly unable to receive the belief.

In truth I am so hopeless a subject, that my making an appointment with you for the discussion of these questions would be to waste your time and mine. I thank you again sincerely, and beg to remain

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

S. Perkes Esquire

To MISS MINA BEHRENS,[†1] [30 NOVEMBER 1866]

Envelope only, MS Private. Address: Miss Mina Behrens | Springfield House | Bradford.
PM 30 Nov 66.

December

To THE REV. HENRY BLINK,[†2] 7 DECEMBER 1866

MS Rawlins Collection, Isle of Man. Address: The Rev. Henry S. Blink | Watlington | Oxon.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Friday Seventh December 1866

Dear Sir

I beg to assure you that you have my full permission to carry out your purpose of reading my Christmas Carol in public.[†3] But my correspondents are far too numerous, to leave me leisure for explaining how I am accustomed to condense it when I read it myself.[†4]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS[†5]

The Rev. Henry S Blink

To MISS CONSTANCE CROSS,[†1] 7 DECEMBER 1866*

Text from typescript, Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Seventh December 1866

Mr Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Miss Constance Cross, and begs to assure her in reply to her letter, that he is far too much occupied, to be able to comply with the requests of the innumerable correspondents who ask him to read manuscript novels. Compliance would leave him no leisure for any other pursuit in life.

But he would gladly cause Miss Cross's novel to be honestly read in this office with a reference to its suitability to these pages, if there were the slightest prospect of there being, within a couple of years, an opening in them for a long serial story. As the arrangements already made, however, extend over that period of time[†2] he has no right to subject Miss Cross to the anxiety and disappointment that would inevitably ensure on her sending her manuscript here.

To THE CAPTAIN AND QUEEN'S SCHOLARS, WESTMINSTER SCHOOL, 8 DECEMBER 1866*

MS Mr R. V. Forward.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Eighth December, 1866

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his Compliments to the Captain and Queen's Scholars, and begs to acknowledge the receipt of their obliging invitation.[†3] He very much regrets that he is prevented from having the pleasure of accepting it, by two previous (and far less interesting) engagements.

To FREDERIC CHAPMAN, 9 DECEMBER 1866*

MS Dickens House.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Ninth December 1866

My Dear Sir

Thank you for the books.[†4] They are exceedingly well got up, and are highly creditable to the House.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Fredk. Chapman Esquire

To GEORGE DOLBY, 12 DECEMBER 1866*

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds. Address: George Dolby Esquire | Royal Hotel | Torquay.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Twelfth December 1866

My Dear Dolby

The change you suggest, would not at all inconvenience me. But you know that I always desire Chappell to have every possible advantage towards making his money out of the arrangements between us; and I feel convinced that the earlier we begin, the better it will be for him. I found this opinion on the enormous success of the Xmas No. (In two days and a half, we have sold two hundred thousand, and we really do not know what number we may get to.) Now, as I propose to read the Boy, when we want any thing new — and Barbox also — and as so many thousands of people have this fresh interest in my books, I am very strong for beginning as soon after Xmas as possible. This being my quite disinterested opinion, I give it you freely. Always understand on the other side, that the 28th. of January would be soon enough for me.

Whenever you write in reply, address me at Gad's Hill.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

George Dolby Esquire | Over

P.S.
I shall be here on Saturday from 5 to 7. I dine with Chorley that day, as it is his birthday. I shall be here also on Sunday from 10 to 1. I note this, as I see you will be in town then, on re-reading your note.

(Signed)
"THE BOY"

To MRS HENRY AUSTIN, 13 DECEMBER 1866*

MS Morgan Library.

THE ATHENAEUM | Thursday Thirteenth December 1866

My Dear Letitia

I am much afraid that I shall not be able to manage an evening with you before I go away reading, unless my departure should be (as it is not unlikely it may) put a little further on in January than was at first designed. I am engaged for the early part of next week and then must go back to Gad's to receive Plorn's tutor (who is made a Colonial Bishop),[†1] and then must stay there for the Annual Gathering until the Xmas holidays are over. But all domestic arrangements are subject to Katie, with whom both Georgina and Mamie now are. She is ill with nervous fever — was very ill two days ago — but I hope is mending steadily though slowly. She is a bad subject for illness, having long been in an unsatisfactory and declining state.

The Xmas No. to day is the astonishing number of 40,000 ahead of even Doctor Marigold at the same date.

Ever affecy.
CD.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 13 DECEMBER 1866*

MS (pro forma letter) Dickens House.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND, | [†a]Dec 13 1866[†a]

Mr. Charles Dickens begs to thank the writer of the paper entitled

†aThree Roses†a

for having done him the favor to offer it as a contribution to these pages. He much regrets, however that it is not suited to the requirements of All the Year Round.

The Manuscript will be returned under cover, if applied for as above.

To CHARLES KENT, 14 DECEMBER 1866†

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: Private | Charles Kent Esquire | "Sun" Office | Strand.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Fourteenth December 1866

My Dear Kent.

Many thanks for your photograph, which is more than welcome, and is a very good likeness too. It will appear on an honored page of the Gad's Hill Book,†1 you may be sure.

I should have written to you before now, but for having been much occupied (with getting up my Readings for the New Year), and for having been put out by the illness of my daughter Mrs. Collins. †bIt delighted me to find you so taken by the Xmas No.†b and I meant to have told you so.

†bYesterday evening, Mugby Junction was 11,000 past the 200,000. And it was 40,000 and odd ahead of Doctor Marigold at the same date after publication!†b†2

Ever affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To GEORGE RUSSELL, 14 DECEMBER 1866*

MS Marjorie, Lady Russell. Address: George Russell Esquire | 4 St. James's Place | S.W.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Friday Night 14th. Decr. 1866

My Dear George.

I have been kept here by my daughter Katie's having been seriously ill†3 (I hope she is now surely mending, though slowly). Thus I have only to night received your note.

There remains but tomorrow in this week, and it is Chorley's birthday and I dine with him. On Sunday, Monday, and Tuesday (Katie keeping better), I am going on a visit into Buckinghamshire.†1 On Tuesday I dine in town, but (Katie always keeping better) may go back on my visit for Wednesday and Thursday. After the latter day I shall be at Gad's. My usual Christmas Housefull will probably keep me there until Twelfth Night. That passed, I could dine with you, probably any day until the 14th. When I enter on a course of 40 Readings in all sorts of places.

The neglected children of London have been an interesting subject to me ever since I began to write, and I hope I have never lost an opportunity of impressing their dreadful condition on the public heart.[†2] I have a misgiving that a better House of Commons, and (consequently) a better form of Government altogether — I have used the wrong word, for I mean a reality and not a form — alone can deal with the gigantic and unchristian horror. But I shall be glad to know what this plan is.

Ever Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

George Russell Esquire

To THOMAS BEARD, 15 DECEMBER 1866

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Saturday Fifteenth December 1866

My Dear Beard

You remember Bousfield[†3] — once O'Connell's[†4] special Reporter[†5] — who used to sit at the end of that blessed old Bench long burnt (Praise the Lord!), and afterwards on the Times? An appeal has been made to me — without his knowledge, my correspondent states — for help in distress. Can you enlighten me touching a vague and misty impression I have that he was a bad subject altogether? I cannot trace it to its source in my mind.

Ever affectionately
THE BOY (AT MUGBY)

To GEORGE DOLBY, 19 DECEMBER 1866*

MS British Library. Address: George Dolby Esquire | 230 Regent Street | W.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Nineteenth December 1866

My Dear Dolby

I had not written to the Dean[†1] when I got your letter, so there is not the least harm done.

It escaped my memory to mention to you on Sunday, that I think the Screen was pretty well knocked to pieces in the last tour, and that I believe we shall want a new one made. Will you kindly have it looked to?

I have just heard from Mr. Ryland of Birmingham that "Our Missis and our Young Ladies" at Mugby[†2] are going to give up their places, declaring that "they cannot bear the public facetiousness occasioned by Mr. D's show up"[†3]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

George Dolby Esquire

To M. JEAN HARLAY,[†4] 19 DECEMBER 1866*

MS Bibliothèque Nationale, Paris. Address: à Monsieur Jean Harlay | Office of "L'International" | 76 Strand.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Nineteenth December 1866

Sir

In reply to your obliging letter, I have the honor to inform you that I have already made arrangements in reference to "Mugby Junction", which render it impossible for me to concede to the newspaper "L'international" — on any terms — the right of translating that work.

With high consideration | I am, Sir, | Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

Monsieur Jean Harlay

To MISS HORNER,[†5] 19 DECEMBER 1866*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Nineteenth December, 1866.

Dear Miss Horner

I am exceedingly obliged to you for your note (forwarded to me by your sister Lady Lyell),[†6] and beg you to accept my thanks for the offer of your novel.

But if I were to receive the Manuscript for perusal, I should do you a great wrong, seeing that I have already made arrangements in connexion with All the Year Round which will fill the serial portion of those pages for nearly two years.[†1]

In pursuing the fortunes of your novel elsewhere I fear you will find that you are not very well informed as to the advantages derivable from simultaneous publication in America. A reputation must be established here (so far as I know), before an English writer is in a position to negotiate with an American publisher. Miss Horner.

Faithfully Yours | CHARLES DICKENS

To GEORGE RUSSELL, 19 DECEMBER 1866*

MS Marjorie, Lady Russell.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Nineteenth December 1866

My Dear George.

I think this notion far too crude and immature to go before the public yet.

I have no doubt that an enormous quantity of good food is wasted in this town, and that the habit of wasting it — this is an important consideration — engenders a vast amount of pilfering, lying, secret huckstering in petty spoil, and consequent deterioration of character among servants. Also I have no doubt that if such food were well recooked and well re-distributed among poor children, it would soon prove itself to be so much labour-stamina.

But the scale on which it is proposed to try the experiment in the beginning — the place in which it is proposed to try it — the sort of kitchen — the sort of dining Hall — the staff and its wages — the rent to be paid — the cost of the cooking apparatus to be erected — the hours at which meals can be had — all these things must be made subjects of accurate calculation and statement, before the public help can be got to any useful purpose. Then there would be the vantage-ground occupied: "For so much money, to be so spent, such a system can be fairly tried". And then I think the money could be got. Otherwise, no.

I see danger in the halfpenny. Thus. It would instantly multiply by an unknown figure, the number of little mendicants. The whole neighbourhood of the Scrap Kitchen would be thronged with children each begging for that halfpenny. The parents in the mass would never give the halfpenny. They would say "Go out and get it". Then the Police would bring the children up before the Magistrates, by the half dozen at a haul.

Again. To try the scheme — on any terms — in only one place, would be to swamp that place instantly, and to assemble in it from various quarters a crowd of famishing children (even supposing they were not beggars), who must be disappointed soon after the opening of the doors. And supposing that nearest the doors there are 500 little thieves, and on the outer skirts of that crowd 500 starving children who are not thieves (the most likely to be shouldered out), is the Scrap Kitchen to exhaust itself on the former, and leave the latter unfed?

Surely there must be some sort of enquiry established, or some principle of selection?

I think Chadwick[†1] as likely a man as any, to meet these difficulties, and I should much like Dr. Stallard[†2] to take his opinion.

Ever Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

George Russell Esquire

To [?HENRY GLASSFORD BELL],[†3] 22 DECEMBER 1866

Extract in Henry Bristow of Ringwood catalogue No. 299 (1989); MS (3rd person) 1 p.; dated Gads Hill Place, 22 Dec 66; addressed Mr. ?Doell according to catalogue.

Enclosing a cheque in aid of the objects of the Glasgow Bazaar,[†4] and regretting that absence prevented him receiving Miss Hingston's[†5] request for one of his books to sell.

To MRS MILNER GIBSON,[†6] 22 DECEMBER 1866*

MS Trinity College, Cambridge.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Twenty Second December 1866

My Dear Mrs. Milner Gibson

It really is a delight to me to receive your welcome letter, and to be assured at this time of the year of the lasting remembrance and regard of an old friend.

Unfortunately my vote is always pre-engaged in behalf of a persevering applicant who seems to be always kept out of the Hospital,[†7] and always hoping to get in to it.

Georgie is in attendance, day and night, on my married daughter Katie who has been seriously ill with nervous fever, but who I hope is slowly working round again. Otherwise I know she would have sent you many more cordial messages than I should have delivered. Mamie too is away, but I look forward to their resuming their household places on Christmas Day.

I cannot imagine Alice[†1] the mother of three children, just as I never can imagine myself the grandfather of four. That objectionable relationship is never permitted to be mentioned in my presence. I make the mites suppose that my lawful name is "Wenerables": which they piously believe.

Take care that you don't get "croup" next. You children are very subject to it.

With all affectionate good wishes in and out of season, Believe me always Faithfully Your old friend
CHARLES DICKENS

To A. C. LEWIS,[†2] 22 DECEMBER 1866*

MS Mr Frederick Koch. Address: Albert C Lewis Esquire | 27 Oakley Square | London | N.W.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Saturday Twenty Second December 1866

Dear Sir

I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your interesting and obliging letter, and to express my regret that I cannot witness the agreeable scene it suggests to me,†3 by reason of being pre-engaged here to my own family circle.

With all the good wishes of the time, I am Dear Sir

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Albert C Lewis Esquire

To JOSEPH SLY, 22 DECEMBER 1866

MS Public Library and Museum, Lancaster.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT
Saturday Twenty Second December 1866

Dear Mr. Sly

I beg to acknowledge with many thanks the safe receipt of your box of fine game, which arrived here in the very best condition.

With all the good wishes of the time, Believe me†4

To WALTER THORNBURY, 22 DECEMBER 1866*

MS Berg Collection.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Twenty Second December 1866

My Dear Thornbury

I have looked up that passage in the Annual Register,†5 and I do not think it at all conclusive. That the poor girl, under the terrors of an Evangelical holding forth, may have made a general confession of sinfulness, I do not doubt. That she confessed that crime, I do most decidedly doubt. The argument that the Government of the day hanged her, is stark imbecility. The Government of the day would have hanged anyone. The clergyman admits that she denied the crime immediately after his interview with her. That she always denied it before, is indubitable. That there was no sufficient evidence to convict her, and that she was unfairly tried, is evident on the face of the account of the Trial.[†1] Moreover, I have a strong impression that the crime was confessed to by some dying man years later.[†2] Gurney[†3] the short hand writer, too, was by no means a shining light, but as dull a man as need be.

A merry Christmas and a happy new year to you.

Ever Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [25 DECEMBER 1866]

Extract in F, XI, iii, 833. Date: the Christmas Day before he went to America, according to Forster.

Footraces for the villagers come off in my field tomorrow. We have been hard at work all day, building a course, making countless flags, and I don't know what else. Layard is chief commissioner of the domestic police. The country police predict an immense crowd.[†4]

To G. MAYER,[†5] 27 DECEMBER 1866*

MS Dickens House.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Thursday Twenty Seventh December 1866.

Dear Sir

I beg to enclose you a Post-Office order, and to convey to you my best thanks for the advantage my son Harry has derived from your tuition.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

G. Mayer Esquire

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 27 DECEMBER 1866

Text from MDGH, III, 229.

Gad's Hill, Thursday 27th December, 1866

Dear Madam,

You make an absurd, though common mistake, in supposing that any human creature can help you to be an authoress, if you cannot become one in virtue of your own powers. I know nothing about "impenetrable barrier," "outsiders," and "charmed circles." I know that anyone who can write what is suitable to the requirements of my own journal — for instance — is a person I am heartily glad to discover, and do not very often find. And I believe this to be no rare case in periodical literature. I cannot undertake to advise you in the abstract, as I number my unknown correspondents by the hundred. But if you offer anything to me for insertion in "All the Year Round," you may be sure that it will be honestly read, and that it will be judged by no test but its own merits and adaptability to those pages.

But I am bound to add that I do not regard successful fiction as a thing to be achieved in "leisure moments."

Faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To W. C. MACREADY, 28 DECEMBER 1866

MS Morgan Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT,
Friday Twenty Eighth December 1866

My Dearest Macready

I have received your letter with the utmost pleasure, and we all send our most affectionate love to you, Mrs. Macready, Katie, Johnny, and the Boy of Boys.[†1] All good Christmas and New Year greetings are to be understood as included.

You will be interested in knowing, that, encouraged by the success of Summer Cricket Matches, I got up a quantity of footraces and rustic sports in my field here[†2] on the 26th. last past. As I have never yet had a case of drunkenness, the landlord of the Falstaff had a drinking-booth on the ground. All the Prizes I gave, were in money too. We had two thousand people here. Among the crowd were soldiers, navvies, and labourers of all kinds. Not a stake was pulled up, or a rope slackened, or one farthing's worth of damage done. To every competitor (only) a printed bill of general rules was given, with the concluding words: "Mr. Dickens puts every man upon his honor to assist in preserving order." There was not a dispute all day, and they went away at sunset rending the air with cheers, and leaving every flag on a 600 yards course, as neat as they found it when the gates were opened at 10 in the morning. Surely this is a bright sign in the neighbourhood of such a place as Chatham!

Mugby Junction turned, yesterday afternoon, the extraordinary number of 250,000.

In the middle of next month I begin a new course of 42 Readings. If any of them bring me within reach of Cheltenham with an hour to spare, I shall come on to you, even for that hour. More of this when I am afield and have my list: which Dolby (for Chappell) is now preparing.

Forster and Mrs. Forster were to have come to us next Monday to stay until Saturday. I write "were", because I hear that Forster (who had a touch of bronchitis when he wrote to me on Xmas Eve) is in bed. Katie, who has been ill of low nervous fever, was brought here yesterday from London. She bore the journey much better than I expected, and so I hope will soon recover. This is my little stock of news.

I begin to discover in your riper years that you have been secretly vain of your handwriting all your life. For I swear I see no change in it! What it always was since I first knew it (a year or two!) it is. This I will maintain, against all comers.

Ever affectionately | My Dearest Macready

CD.

To PROFESSOR RICHARD OWEN, 30 DECEMBER 1866†

MS Benoliel Collection.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Thirtieth December 1866

My Dear Owen.

I must write one word of congratulation to Mrs. Owen, your son, and you, on the interesting intelligence you give me.†1 Your delight in it has delighted me, and I cannot too cordially assure you of my heartfelt sympathy. May there be many happy years in store for all concerned!

Faithfully Yours Ever
CHARLES DICKENS

Professor Owen

To THE REV. CHAUNCY HARE TOWNSHEND, [31 DECEMBER 1866]

Mention in To Cerjat, 1 Jan 67. Date: written day before.

To MR JARVIS,†2 1866*

Text from Dobell catalogue No. 2 (1911); MS 1 p.; dated Gad's Hill, 1866; addressed Jarvis.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Jarvis, and begs to thank him for his very obliging letter. As Mr. Dickens, however, feels quite certain that the book in question cannot be his, he will not trouble Mr. Jarvis to forward it for his inspection. He does not write his name in his books, and he never had such a volume among them.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 1866

Extract in Walter T. Spencer catalogue, Dickensiana, II, 335, Guildhall Museum, Rochester; dated 26, Wellington Street, 1866.

Madam,

I regret to assure you that my ability to be useful to the incredible number of my unknown correspondents halts very — very — far short of my inclination.

I can really do absolutely nothing for your husband's compositions, beyond myself reading any that you may offer for insertion in these pages, honestly and attentively, and with a sincere desire to make some of them profitable to him, if I can. But I need scarcely tell you that I can only have that satisfaction in the event of their being suitable to the requirements of this journal.

1867

January

To W. W. F. DE CERJAT, 1 JANUARY 1867

MS Dartford College, New Hampshire.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
New Year's Day, 1867

My Dear Cerjat.

Thoroughly determined to be beforehand with "the middle of next summer" your penitent friend and remorseful correspondent thus addresses you.

The big dog,[†1] on a day last Autumn having seized a little girl (sister to one of the servants) whom he knew, and was bound to respect, was flogged by his master, and then sentenced to be shot at 7 next morning. He went out very cheerfully with the half dozen men told off for the purpose, evidently thinking that they were going to be the death of somebody unknown. But observing in the procession, an empty wheelbarrow and a double-barreled gun, he became meditative, and fixed the bearer of the gun with his eyes. A stone deftly thrown across him by the village blackguard (chief-mourner) caused him to look round for an instant, and he then fell dead, shot through the heart. Two posthumous children are at this moment rolling on the lawn; one will, evidently, inherit his ferocity — and will, probably, inherit the gun. The Pheasant was a little ailing towards Christmas Day, and was found dead under some ivy in his cage, with his head under his wing, on the morning of the twenty seventh of December, one thousand eight hundred and sixty six. I, proprietor of the remains of the two deceased, am working hard, getting up Barbox and The Boy at Mugby,[†2] with which I begin a new course of Readings, in London on the 15th.[†1] Next morning I believe I start into the country. When I read, I don't write. I only edit, and have the proof sheets sent me for the purpose. Here are your questions, answered.

As to the Reform question, it should have been, and could have been, perfectly known to any honest man in England that the more intelligent part of the great masses were deeply dissatisfied with the state of the representation, but were in a very moderate and patient condition, awaiting the better intellectual cultivation of numbers of their fellows. The old insolent resource of assailing them and making the most audaciously hardy statements that they were politically indifferent, has borne the inevitable fruit. The perpetual taunt "Where are they?" has called them out with the answer, "Well then; if you must know, here we are." The intolerable injustice of vituperating the bribed to an assembly of bribers, has goaded their sense of justice beyond endurance. And now what they would have taken, they won't take, and whatever they are steadily bent upon having, they will get. Rely upon it this is the real state of the case.[†2] As to your friend Punch, — you will find him begin to trim[†3] at the very selfsame instant when the new game shall manifestly become the losing one.[†4] You may notice his shoes pinching him a little, already. (He put them on, immediately after Lord Russell had given Leech's son[†5] a nomination to the Charter House.)[†6]

My dear fellow, I have no more power to stop that mutilation of my books, than you have. It is as certain as that my property in my books is confiscated when my descendants most want it. It is as certain as that every inventor of any thing designed for the public good and offered to the English government, becomes ipso facto, a criminal, to have his heart broken on the Circumlocutional wheel. It is as certain as that the whole Crimean story will be retold, whenever this country again goes to war. And to tell you the truth, I have such a very small opinion of what the great-genteel have done for us, that I am very philosophical indeed concerning what the great vulgar may do: having a decided opinion that they can't do worse.

This is the time of year when the Theatres do best, there being still numbers of people who make it a sort of religion to see Christmas pantomimes. Having my annual family house-full, I have, as yet, seen nothing. Fechter has neither pantomime nor burlesque, but is doing a new version of the old Trente Ans de la Vie d'un joueur.[†1] I am afraid he will not find his account in it.[†2] On the whole, the Theatres, except in the articles of scenery and pictorial effect, are poor enough. But in some of the smaller houses, there are actors who, if there were any Dramatic Head-Quarters as a School, might become very good. The most hopeless feature is, that they have the smallest possible idea of an effective and harmonious whole: each "going in" for himself or herself. The Music Halls attract an immense public, and don't refine the general taste. But such things as they do, are well done of their kind, and always briskly and punctually.

The American Yacht Race[†3] is the last sensation. I hope the general interest felt in it on this side, will have a wholesome interest on that. It will be a woeful day when John and Jonathan throw their caps into the ring. The French Emperor is indubitably in a dangerous state. His Parisian popularity wanes, and his Army are discontented with him. I hear on high authority that his secret police are always making discoveries that render him desperately uneasy.[†4]

You know how we have been Swindling in these parts. But perhaps you don't know that Mr. Peto,[†5] the "eminent" contractor, before he fell into difficulties settled one million of money on his wife. Such a good and devoted husband!

My daughter Katie (Mrs. Collins) has been very ill of nervous fever. On the 27th. of December she was in a condition to be brought down here (old high road and post horses), and has been steadily getting better ever since. Her husband is here too, and is on the whole as well as he ever is — or ever will be, I fear.

Give my love to Mrs. Cerjat,[†6] and to everybody else belonging to you who remembers me. I wrote to Townshend yesterday, and thought of you both, last night.

We played forfeit-games here, and then Pool. For a billiard room has been added to the house since you were here. Come and play a match with me.

Ever My Dear Cerjat | Your faithful friend

CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [1 JANUARY 1867]

Extracts in F, XI, iii, 833-4. Date: Both extracts from same letter of 1 Jan 67, according to Forster.

We had made a very pretty course, and taken great pains.[†1] Encouraged by the cricket matches experience, I allowed the landlord of the Falstaff to have a drinking-booth on the ground. Not to seem to dictate or distrust, I gave all the prizes (about ten pounds in the aggregate) in money. The great mass of the crowd were labouring men of all kinds, soldiers, sailors, and navvies. They did not, between half-past ten, when we began, and sunset, displace a rope or a stake; and they left every barrier and flag as neat as they found it. There was not a dispute, and there was no drunkenness whatever. I made them a little speech from the lawn, at the end of the games, saying that please God we would do it again next year. They cheered most lustily and dispersed. The road between this and Chatham was like a Fair all day; and surely it is a fine thing to get such perfect behaviour out of a reckless seaport town. Among other oddities we had A Hurdle Race for Strangers. One man (he came in second) ran 120 yards and leaped over ten hurdles, in twenty seconds, with a pipe in his mouth, and smoking it all the time. "If it hadn't been for your pipe," I said to him at the winning-post, "you would have been first." "I beg your pardon, sir," he answered, "but if it hadn't been for my pipe, I should have been nowhere."

The sale of the Christmas number[†2] was, yesterday evening, 255,380.

To MRS HENRY AUSTIN, 2 JANUARY 1867*

MS Morgan Library.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.

Wednesday Second January 1867

My Dear Letitia

Kindest love and New Year's wishes from all here.

I shall take it for granted (unless I hear from you to the contrary) that you and Harriett will like Stalls for my new reading on Tuesday the 15th. — I may be able to send you four, as I doubt whether Mary and Georgina will be able to go. Katie is here, and is steadily and rapidly getting well; but I doubt her being so well by that time as to be able to release them.

The Xmas No. had sold, up to last night, the extraordinary circulation, 256,000, odd hundreds, of copies.

Affectionately Ever

CD.

To MISS SODEN[†1] AND MRS EDWARDS,[†2] 4 JANUARY 1867*

MS Private.

GAD'S HILL PLACE | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER KENT

Saturday Fourth January 1867

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Miss Soden and Mrs. Edwards, and — with every respect for, and sympathy with their excellent endeavours — must beg to express his regret that his compliance with their request[†3] is not reasonably possible.

To PETER LE NEVE FOSTER,[†4] 5 JANUARY 1867

MS Royal Society of Arts.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.

Saturday Fifth January 1867.

Sir

I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your circular letter, honoring me with an invitation to become a member of the Committee for promoting the study of the Paris Exhibition by artizans of the United Kingdom.[†5]

While I readily place my name in this connexion, at the disposal of the Council of the Society, I deem it right to inform you that my engagements will oblige me to be constantly occupied in various parts of England and Scotland during the next three months, and that I shall be quite unable to attend any meeting during that term at least.

I am Sir | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS.

P. le Neve Foster Esquire

To GEORGE DOLBY, 6 JANUARY 1867†

MS Doheny Memorial Library, California.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sunday Sixth January 1867

My Dear Dolby

†a Is your list so far arranged by this time, as that you can tell me when we start, and where we go first? †a†1

Reply to the office. In case of your wanting to see me, I mention that I purpose being visible there on Wednesday next at 4.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

George Dolby Esquire

To C. J. RIBTON-TURNER,†2 6 JANUARY 1867*

MS Percy Dobell & Son.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Sixth January 1867

Sir

I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, and to inform you in reply that I must decline the honor of becoming one of the Vice Presidents of the intended Conference on the licensing system.†3

I am Sir | Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

J. Ribton Turner Esquire

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 9 JANUARY 1867*

MS Huntington Library

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Ninth January 1867

My Dearest Georgy.

I think I shall be able to squeeze out an additional dozen of collars. If I should want more, I can buy them anywhere.

We shall have to pack the large portmanteau on Sunday, as I will bring it to town with me on Monday. As I know exactly what I shall require from Gad's, it will not be a difficult business.

In the middle drawer of my wardrobe are a dress coat and a pair of dress trousers — the upper pair (for there are two) — lying together. As I dare say both have suffered from my beard during the various banquets, will you with the end of a clean towel and Eau de Cologne from my scent case — cleanse them, by daylight, where they are splashed: I will do the same by the dress clothes here. [Slippers, Dressing gown, and sponge are here, by the bye.]

I start on Wednesday[†1] afternoon for Liverpool, and then go on to Chester, Derby, Leicester and Wolverhampton. On Tuesday the 29th. I read in London again, and then take it pretty easily for a fortnight. On Saturday the 16th. Feby I read at Manchester and then go on into Scotland.

I write to Mary by this post about my coming down on Saturday.

In great haste. | Ever My Dearest Georgy | Your most affectionate

CD.

To MARY DICKENS, [9 JANUARY 1867]

Mention in last. Date: written same day.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?9 JANUARY 1867]

Extract in F, VIII, vii, 704. Date: no doubt same as To Miss Hogarth, 9 Jan.

I start on Wednesday afternoon (15th of January) for Liverpool,[†2] and then go on to Chester, Derby, Leicester and Wolverhampton. On Tuesday the 29th I read in London again, and in February I read at Manchester and then go on into Scotland.

To MESSRS SEAGROVE & CO., 14 JANUARY 1867*

MS Mr and Mrs W. T. Mendell. Address: Mr. Seagrove | 22 and 23 Hard | Portsea.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.

Fourteenth January 1867

Mr. Charles Dickens begs to have a stamped receipt for the enclosed cheque (£53..3..0) in discharge of Mr. Seagrove's account.[†3]

To THE REV. JOHN TAYLOR,[†4] 14 JANUARY 1867

MS Mrs Marjorie Beverley

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.

onday Fourteenth January 1867

Dear Sir

I beg to thank you for your obliging letter; — a pleasure I should have had sooner, but that I have been absent for the last ten days.

Edward[†1] will return to Tunbridge Wells at the appointed time. Perhaps Mr. Sawyer may have mentioned to you that I have it in contemplation to withdraw him this next summer, with a view to his special preparation for an active life.[†2] In the meantime I trust him to your care with perfect confidence, and beg to assure you that you have already won his esteem, and that I believe him to be really desirous to deserve your good opinion.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Rev. J Taylor M. A.

To MRS DALLAS,[†3] 16 JANUARY 1867

Extract in Swann Auction Galleries catalogue, Mar 1951; MS 1 p.; dated 16 Jan 67, Office of AYR; addressed Mrs Dallas.

It is perfectly delightful to me to get your fervent and sympathetic note ... I will take care that two places on the front row are reserved.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 16 JANUARY 1867*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Wednesday Sixteenth January 1867

My Dearest Georgy.

I received your note, and the letters. Many thanks for both.

You were so far right about the people's not having sensational stages at which to applaud, as that the close of Barbox brought down a perfect storm of accumulated plaudits last night. The Boy was a shout from beginning to end.[†4]

Ever affectionately
CD.

To T. T. PAGET,[†5] 18 JANUARY 1867*

MS Mr Gavin Turner. Address: T. T. Paget Esquire | Humberstone | near | Leicester.

Adelphi Hotel, Liverpool | Friday Eighteenth January 1867

My Dear Sir

I beg to thank you for your obliging note and hospitable invitation, and to express my regret that I cannot have the pleasure of accepting the latter.

But when I travel on such business as that which will bring me to Leicester next week, I am obliged to observe the rule of never making a visit, and of always living with my secretary and manager at an hotel.

My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

T. T. Paget Esquire

To W. H. WILLS, 18 JANUARY 1867

MS Huntington Library.

Adelphi Hotel Liverpool | Friday Eighteenth January 1867

My Dear Wills.

Here are all the proofs. Take the "B" making up.[†1] Look at Sala,[†2] and look at the Sentimental Journey. If Sterne calls the Hotel, "the Hotel Dessein",[†3] leave it so. But the real name is Dessin.[†4]

We came triumphantly through Mugby,[†5] it being too cold and snowy for curiosity. We had a bad house last night, but have a capital Let tonight. The suburban roads are all bad. More, next time of writing.

Dolby's regard.

Ever Faithfully
CD.

To W. H. WILLS, 20 JANUARY 1867

MS Huntington Library.

Adelphi Hotel, Liverpool | Sunday Twentieth January 1867

My Dear Wills

The second and third Readings here have gone with such wonderful enthusiasm[†6] and have so astonished the natives, that we are coming back here for two more in the middle of next month.[†7] The weather continues so severe, and the suburban roads are so heavy, that we feel it in the stalls; but the half crowns and ones (who don't come in from distances, with horses) crowd their places splendidly.

We have been over to Rock Ferry[†8] to day, to see the Great Eastern, lying high and dry there for repairs. She looks hideous, and (strange to say) not very big, so situated! A very large and strong pack of Ice is on that side of the river, and the general appearance of things is Arctic.

Will you kindly read the enclosed letter.[†9] Is it hopeless? Or can any reasonable thing be done? I am afraid it is a weary and intangible case.

Dolby is always talking about you, and said to me on Friday night (when I did exactly one million one hundred thousand and one new things with Marigold, which the audience seized, each with exactly one million one hundred thousand and one rounds) "Why isn't Wills here!" I told him he reminded me of Collingwood and Nelson.[†1] In terms disrespectful to both of those great English Worthies, he rejoined: "Neither of them was Wills, and I want Wills!"

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To F. D. FINLAY,[†2] 21 JANUARY 1867

MS Comtesse de Suzannet.

Adelphi Hotel, Liverpool | Monday Twenty First Jany. 1867

My Dear Finlay.

I am reading in these regions, and write to you for help in yours.

Mr. Dolby my manager for Chappell's house in Bond Street London, to whom I sell myself in these excursions, purposes bringing me to Belfast on Monday the 18th, of February. He does not know whom to appoint there as seller of tickets,[†3] and does not desire to risk the chances of laying his hand on the wrong person. He asks me how and where they were sold before? I cannot remember, but I know that you must know, simply because you did everything for us.

Kindly advise me. I am so perfectly satisfied with my existing arrangements that the Chappell interest is mine, and I do all I can to advance it. I shall be at the Hen and Chickens Hotel, Birmingham, on Thursday; at the Bell (I mean that for BELL)[†4] Leicester, on Friday.

Ever Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 21 JANUARY 1867†

MS Huntington Library.

Adelphi Hotel Liverpool

Monday Twenty First January 1867

My Dearest Georgy

First I send you my most affectionate wishes for many many happy returns of your birthday. That done from my heart of hearts, I go on to my small report of myself.

The Readings have produced such an immense effect here that we are coming back for two more in the middle of February. Marigold and the Trial on Friday night, and the Carol on Saturday afternoon, were a perfect furore. And the surprise about Barbox has been amusingly great. It is a most extraordinary thing, after the enormous sale of that Xmas No. that the provincial public seems to have combined to believe that it won't make a Reading. From Wolverhampton and Leeds we have exactly the same expression of feeling beforehand. Exactly as I made Copperfield — always to the poorest houses I had with Headland, and against that Luminary's entreaty — so I should have to make this, if I hadn't Marigold always in demand.

It being next to impossible for people to come out at night with horses, we have felt the weather in the stalls, and expect to do so through this week. The half crown and shilling publics have rushed to their places most splendidly. The enthusiasm has been unbounded. On Friday night I quite astonished myself; but I was taken so faint afterwards, that they laid me on a sofa at the Hall for half an hour. I attribute it to my distressing inability to sleep at night, and to nothing worse.

Scott[†1] does very well indeed. As a dresser he is perfect. In a quarter of an hour after I go into the retiring-room where all my clothes are airing and everything is set out neatly in its own allotted place, I am ready, and he then goes softly out, and sits outside the door. In the morning he is equally punctual, quiet, and quick. He has his needles and thread, buttons and so forth, always at hand; and in travelling he is very systematic with the luggage. What with Dolby and what with this skilful valet, everything is made as easy to me as it possibly can be. Dolby would do any thing to lighten the work, and does everything.

There is great distress here among the poor (four thousand people relieved last Saturday at one work house), and there is great anxiety concerning seven Mail Steamers some days overdue. Such a circumstance as this last has never been known. It is supposed that some great revolving storm has whirled them all out of their course. One of these missing ships is an American Mail; another, an Australian Mail.

Same afternoon

We have been out for 4 hours in the bitter East wind — over at New Brighton, and walking on the sea shore, where there is a broad strip of great blocks of ice. My hands are so rigid that I write with great difficulty.

[†a]My best love to Mamie, to whom I will write next.

I have been from the first, greatly concerned about poor Charley Collins, and very much afraid of the result. Your letter just received, and Mamie's ditto, do not lessen my fears. Tell Mamie that I write an encouraging line to Katie by this post.

Two cheques enclosed. To the house-cheque I have added £3. That is to say £1 for the boys expences, and £1 each for pocket money.

With best love | Ever my Dearest Georgy

Your most affectionate

CD.[†a]

We have been constantly talking of the terrible Regent's Park accident. I hope and believe that nearly the worst of it is now known.[†2]

To MRS CHARLES COLLINS, [?21 JANUARY 1867]

Mention in last. Date: no doubt written the same day.

To MISS MARY DICKENS, 22 JANUARY 1867

Extract in MDGH, II, 273-4.

Chester, | Tuesday, Jan. 22nd, 1867

My Dearest Mamie,

We came over here from Liverpool at eleven this forenoon. There was a heavy swell in the Mersey breaking over the boat; the cold was nipping, and all the roads we saw as we came along were wretched. We find a very moderate let here; but I am myself rather surprised to know that a hundred and twenty stalls have made up their minds to the undertaking of getting to the hall. This seems to be a very nice hotel, but it is an extraordinarily cold one. Our reading for to-night is "Marigold" and "Trial." With amazing perversity the local agent[†1] said to Dolby: "They hoped that Mr. Dickens might have given them 'The Boy at Mugby.'"

Barton, the gasman who succeeded the man who sprained his leg, sprained his leg yesterday!! And that, not at his work, but in running downstairs at the hotel. However, he has hobbled through it so far, and I hope will hobble on, for he knows his work.

I have seldom seen a place look more hopelessly frozen up than this place does. The hall is like a Methodist chapel in low spirits, and with a cold in its head. A few blue people shiver at the corners of the streets. And this house, which is outside the town, looks like an ornament on an immense twelfth cake baked for 1847.

I am now going to the fire to try to warm myself, but have not the least expectation of succeeding. The sitting-room has two large windows in it, down to the ground and facing due east. The adjoining bedroom (mine) has also two large windows in it, down to the ground and facing due east. The very large doors are opposite the large windows, and I feel as if I were something to eat in a pantry.

To MISS MARY DICKENS, 24 JANUARY 1867

Extract in MDGH, II, 275-6.

Hen and Chickens, Birmingham, | Thursday, Jan. 24th, 1867.

Since I wrote to your aunt just now, I have received your note addressed to Wolverhampton. We left the men there last night, and they brought it on with them at noon to-day.

The maimed gasman's foot is much swollen, but he limps about and does his work. I have doctored him up with arnica.[†2] During the "Boy" last night there was an escape of gas from the side of my top batten, which caught the copper-wire and was within a thread of bringing down the heavy reflector into the stalls. It was a very ticklish matter, though the audience knew nothing about it. I saw it, and the gasman and Dolby saw it, and stood at that side of the platform in agonies. We all three calculated that there would be just time to finish and save it; when the gas was turned out the instant I had done, the whole thing was at its very last and utmost extremity. Whom it would have tumbled on, or what might have been set on fire, it is impossible to say.

I hope you rewarded your police escort on Tuesday night. It was the most tremendous night I ever saw at Chester.

To THE EDITOR OF THE BIRMINGHAM DAILY POST, 24 JANUARY 1867*

MS Mr David Niven Jr.

Private

Hen and Chickens, Birmingham | Twenty Fourth January 1867

Dear Sir

If the gentleman[†1] who wrote the affecting description of "Poverty at Home" published in your paper of to day,[†2] will kindly undertake to distribute the enclosed five pounds among some of the families he saw, I shall feel truly obliged to him and to you. Do me the favor to consider this note a private one.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Editor of | The Daily Post.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 24 JANUARY 1867†

MS Huntington Library.

Hen and Chickens, Birmingham
Thursday Twenty Fourth Jany. 1867

[†a] My Dearest Georgy.

I forget to whom I wrote last:— whether to you or to Mary. But as I think my last was to Mary, I send this to you.[†a]

At Chester we read in a snowstorm, and a fall of ice. I think it was the worst weather I ever saw. Nevertheless [†a]we had £66 in the house, and[†a] the people were enthusiastic.[†3] At Wolverhampton last night[†4] (the thaw had thoroughly set in, and it rained heavily) [a]we had £78.[a] We had not intended to go back there, but have arranged to do so, on the day after Ash Wednesday. Last night I was again heavily beaten. We came on here after the Reading (it is only a ride of forty minutes), and it was as much as I could do to hold out the journey. But I was not faint, as at Liverpool. I was only exhausted. I am all right this morning; and tonight, as you know, I have a rest.

[a]The enclosed key is the key of the drawers of my writing table at Gads. In the left hand top-drawer is a bunch of keys, one of which has a bone-label attached to it. That key is the key of the nest of drawers on the top of the stand with the looking-glass door, between the new window and the large window. In one of those drawers (I think the second or third from the bottom) are several of the bound books of my Readings. TWO[†1] of them are Nicholas Nickleby. I want those TWO NICKLEBYS[†2] sent up to town, so that I may find them at the office on Monday. If you will copy these instructions for Matilda, she cannot go wrong. Let her lock all up again, and return the key to you.[a]

I trust that Charley Collins is better, and that Mamie is strong and well again. Yesterday I had a note from Katie, which seemed hopeful and encouraging.

With best love | Ever My Dearest Georgy | Your most affectionate

CD.

I see in "Fun" this week, a very droll version of Fechter's play.[†3] It is really not very wide of the truth.

To W. H. WILLS, 24 JANUARY 1867

MS Huntington Library.

Hen and Chickens, Birmingham
Thursday Twenty Fourth Jany. 1867

My Dear Wills.

We shall evidently sell our 265,000.[†4] Expect me at the office on Monday afternoon, say at 4 o'Clock. Also on Tuesday.

We have been reading in snow-storms, and down-pourings of sheets of solid ice. At Chester it was such a night as one sees once in half a century. Nevertheless we had close upon £70, and the people were enchanted. Last night at Wolverhampton the thaw had set in thoroughly, and it rained heavily. There, we had close upon £80. The Mersey was like the channel on a bad day, between England and France, when we came across. The cold was stupendous. Today is pleasant here, and quite warm. I have been fainter of a night, after leaving off, than I like. This, on two occasions.

The Ci devant Miss Marryat's[†1] letter, I shall not answer. Concerning the letter of the lady who referred to Halliday, what is to be done?[†2] I am very much afraid, from its terms, that it is quite beyond my reasonable reach. Would you mind writing to her with that express caution, and telling her that you will see her at the office at such or such a time?

Dolby's legs stand as they did.[†3] His right eye becomes inflamed of a morning, only when he goes out, after I go to bed, to treat the local agent. He appeared at breakfast one morning at Liverpool, with three glasses of gin and water and two cigars distinctly to be seen under his right eye-lid. Our pervading joke is "Schloss's Solicitor". We recognize him in all sorts of shabby genteel people at stations and elsewhere. This mild recreation keeps us going.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To F. D. FINLAY, 25 JANUARY 1867

MS Comtesse de Suzannet.

Leicester, Friday Night Twenty Fifth January | 1867

My Dear Finlay

Our night at Belfast is Wednesday the twentieth March — not Monday as I at first told you, because of the Popular Concerts.[†4]

I have spoken to Mr. Dolby about the sale of Tickets. He says, "There is nothing in Mr. Finlay's objection, but don't trouble him. I really should not feel justified in troubling him. Much better work is in his way, and it would be throwing him away." So he shall appoint his agent.

Now, my dear Finlay, the work of these Readings, combined with the travelling, is so very, very, hard that I must observe my rule (and this in spite of myself), of not going out before or afterwards. But come and dine with us at the Imperial,[†5] on Tuesday the Nineteenth of March at 7 o'Clock, bringing Mrs. Finlay[†6] with you, and you will really do me a kindness and heartily please me. You know what a regard I have for you, and I have (though I have never yet seen him) a great regard for your wife's father, as an independent upright and rare man who is an honor to his calling and country.[†7] So do let it be understood between us that we will have this little meeting as old friends and on the easiest of terms.

You know Mr. Dolby's sister, I dare say, and what a fine singer she is.[†8] He is just of as honest and genial a nature. We will try to mark our evening with a white stone.[†9]

We feel that we must run the chances of the big room. But we know how to help a big room greatly, by throwing out an advanced platform. Having a clear day at Belfast before the Reading, we hope to do a great deal in this way.

May I send my love to Mrs. Finlay? And here is a consolatory piece of intelligence for you. Before I went to America, I underwent your operation.[†1] It never troubled me afterwards.

Ever Yours faithfully

CHARLES DICKENS

Frank D Finlay Esquire

To HENRY JAMES,[†2] 25 [JANUARY] 1867†

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Date: clearly misdated "Feb" by CD; Friday was 25 Jan 67, when he was in Leicester.[†3]

Bull Hotel, Leicester.
Friday Twenty Fifth February 1867

My Dear Mr. Henry James.

[†a]I am reading in the country with short intervals of flits to town, and have only two days within the limits you so kindly give me, on which I could possibly dine in London.[†a] Those are, Tuesday the 5th. and Wednesday the 6th. of February. I shall be delighted, on either of those days, to give George Russell the Happy Dispatch[†4] in a better fashion than the Japanese,[†5] with many thanks to you for affording me the opportunity.

Your letter reached me here to day, and of course I answer it by the next post. A note from you addressed to me at All The Year Round Office 26 Wellington Street W.C. will be sure to find me with the least possible delay.

Believe me always | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Henry James Esquire

To THE EDITOR OF THE TIMES, 26 JANUARY 1867

Text from The Times, 29 Jan 67.

Jan. 26.

Sir,

As it is better to prevent a horrible accident by a timely caution than sagaciously to observe after its occurrence that any one acquainted with the circumstances out of which it arose could have easily foreseen it, I beg most earnestly to warn the public through your columns against the morning express train on the Midland railway between Leicester and Bedford.

I took that train this morning, leaving Leicester at 9 35. The reckless fury of the driving and the violent rocking of the carriages obliged me to leave it at Bedford rather than come on to London with my through ticket. When we stopped at Market Harborough general alarm was expressed by the passengers, and strong remonstrances were urged on the officials, also, at Bedford. I am an experienced railway traveller at home and abroad; I was in the Staplehurst accident; I have been in trains under most conceivable conditions, but I have never been so shaken and flung about as in this train, and have never been in such obvious danger.

The very obliging authorities suggested that the road was "rough" from the thaw, and that I was in a light carriage. As to the first suggestion, I am certain from experience on other railways since the thaw set in that there is no such "roughness" on other railways. As to the second, one of the passengers who protested the most strongly was a gentleman in a heavy carriage next to my own.

I may add that my companion in the carriage[†1] (who left the train with me) is almost constantly on English railways, and fully confirms what I have here written,

Your faithful servant,
CHARLES DICKENS[†2]

To J. T. DELANE,[†3] 26 JANUARY 1867*

MS Archives of The Times.

Bedford, Twenty Sixth January | 1867

My Dear Delane

I have sent a letter to the Times just now, about a most desperately dangerous train from Leicester to London, which I was obliged to quit at this place. I hope it will appear, and I cannot too strongly assure you of its urgent necessity.

Faithfully Yours ever
CHARLES DICKENS

John Delane Esquire

To CHARLES MACKAY,[†4] 27 JANUARY 1867

Mention in John Anderson Jr catalogue No. 1627; MS 1 p.; dated Office of AYR, 27 Jan 67; addressed Charles Mackay.

Regarding the difficulties of selecting and publishing the proper contributions each week.

To JOHN FORSTER, [29 JANUARY 1867]

Extract in F, VIII, vii, 705. Date: five days after To Georgina Hogarth, 24 Jan 67, according to Forster.

I am very tired; cannot sleep; have been severely shaken on an atrocious railway;[†1] read to-night[†2] and have to read at Leeds on Thursday. But I have settled with Dolby to put off our going to Leeds on Wednesday, in the hope of coming to dine with you, and seeing our dear old friend.[†3] I say, "in the hope," because if I should be a little more used-up to-morrow than I am to-day, I should be constrained, in spite of myself, to take to the sofa and stick there.

February

To MISS MARY DICKENS, 1 FEBRUARY 1867

Extract in MDGH, II, 276.

Leeds, Friday, Feb. 1st, 1867

We got here prosperously, and had a good (but not great) house for "Barbox" and "Boy" last night. For "Marigold" and "Trial," to-night, everything is gone. And I even have my doubts of the possibility of Dolby's cramming the people in. For "Marigold" and "Trial" at Manchester, to-morrow, we also expect a fine hall.

I shall be at the office for next Wednesday. If Charley Collins should have been got to Gad's, I will come there for that day. If not, I suppose we had best open the official bower again.

This is a beastly place, with a very good hotel. Except Preston, it is one of the nastiest places I know. The room is like a capacious coal cellar, and is incredibly filthy;[†4] but for sound it is perfect.

To EDWIN LANDSEER, 1 FEBRUARY 1867*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Leeds Friday First February 1867

My Dear Landseer

I am reading in this disagreeable place,[†5] and am on the wing for Manchester tomorrow morning, and from there to all sorts of places in all points of the compass; but I cannot help sending you this hearty note to congratulate you on the completion of your Lions, and to assure you of the immense satisfaction with which I have read the description of them in the Times to day.[†1] I am proud of every word of that animated praise; and entrust the post office with the enclosed cordial shake of the hand, and clap on the back, of my masterly old friend, with real delight.

So no more at present from | Yours affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN ANGUS,[†2] [3] FEBRUARY 1867*

MS Mr P. J. Radford. Date: misdated by CD: Sunday was 3 Feb 67.

Manchester, Sunday Second February 1867

My Dear Sir

Before leaving this place (my visit extends to but a few hours), I write you a hasty note to express my regret that I could not see your son[†3] last night. But I have written him a line this morning, telling him that I will look at his MS, if he will send it to me in London.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Angus Esquire

To [WILLIAM] ANGUS, [3 FEBRUARY 1867]

Mention in last.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, [3] FEBRUARY 1867*

MS Huntington Library. Date: misdated by CD, as last.

Manchester | Sunday Second February 1867

My Dearest Georgy.

As I told Mamie in my last (which crossed yours), Wednesday is my day of home leisure in next week. But it is not completely so after all; for Henry James's party to dismiss George Russell from the order of bachelorhood, comes off at 7 1/2 that day at the Garrick.

We had £190 here last night, and boundless enthusiasm.[†1] This is all my present news, and little enough too.

With best love to Mamie | Ever Your most affectionate
CD.

To MRS ELLIOT, 4 FEBRUARY 1867

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Monday Fourth February 1867

My Dear F.

Don't come to Bath. I hate the people, and only read there at Chappell's solicitation.[†2] We shall be greatly hurried in that place — Dolby (DOLBY) will be with me — very likely Chappell also — three attendants to boot — and privacy will be impossible. I think there is hardly a doubt of my coming to Clifton in the course of the trip. Then we shall do much better — you and I, I mean.

On coming here from Manchester last night, I found your note, to which I immediately reply. I am so shaken by railways that I can hardly write. The Readings have been doing wonders.

Henry James Q.C. gives a dinner next Wednesday in honor of George Russell's approaching marriage. I must go, though I go nowhere while these fatigues are in action.

I shall be very glad to have a line from you at the York House, Bath, to tell me how, where, when, and why, the Times are hard, Bristolward.[†3] Believe me as ever

Your affectionate friend

CD.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 4 FEBRUARY 1867*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Monday Fourth February 1867

My Dearest Georgy

My letter to you, posted at Manchester yesterday, will already have told you that after all we must meet here on Wednesday, as Henry James gives his George Russell party that evening. On Thursday I start again.

Enclosed are the two cheques for stores.[†1] ]†2
[

Ever Most affectionately

CD.

To E. LUCIEN RICHIE,[†3] 4 FEBRUARY 1867*

MS Library of Western Reserve University, Cleveland, Ohio. Address: E. Lucien Richie Esquire | Post Office-Box 2196 | Philadelphia | U.S. of America.

GAD'S HILL PLACE | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Monday Fourth February 1867
Dear Sir

I am obliged to you for your letter dated the fifteenth of last month, and beg you to accept my thanks and the assurance that I highly esteem it.

But I cannot entertain the proposal with which it offers to favor me.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

E Lucien Richie Esquire

To [?WILLIAM ANGUS],[†4] 5 FEBRUARY 1867

MS Mr P. J. Radford.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND, | Tuesday Fifth February 1867

Dear Sir

I have looked at the larger half of the first Volume of your novel, and have pursued the more difficult points of the story through the other two volumes.

You will, of course, receive my opinion, as that of an individual writer and student of Art, who by no means claims to be infallible.

I think you are too ambitious, and that you have not sufficient knowledge of Life or Character to venture on so comprehensive an attempt. Evidences of inexperience in every way, and of your power being far below the situations you imagine, present themselves to me in almost every page I have read. It would greatly surprise me if you found a publisher for this story, on trying your fortune in that wise, or derived anything from it but weariness and bitterness of spirit.

On the evidence thus put before me I cannot even satisfy myself that you have the faculty of authorship latent within you. If you have not, and yet pursue a vocation towards which you have no call, you cannot choose but be a wretched man. Let me counsel you to have the patience to prove yourself carefully, and the courage to renounce this endeavour if you cannot establish your case on a very much smaller scale. You see around you, every day, how many outlets there are for short pieces of fiction in all kinds. Try if you can achieve any success within those modest limits (I have practised in my time what I preach to you), and in the meantime put your three volumes away.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Your MS will be returned separately from this office.

To H. N. KING, 8 FEBRUARY 1867

MS Victoria Art Gallery & Municipal Libraries, Bath.

York House, Bath | Friday Eighth February 1867

Dear Sir

I regret that I cannot possibly sit to you tomorrow. It is a thing I never do on these occasions — and very rarely do at any time — or I should inevitably be photographed out of my senses.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

H. N. King Esqre.

To WILKIE COLLINS, 12 FEBRUARY 1867

MS Morgan Library.

Office, Tuesday Twelfth February 1867

My Dear Wilkie,

Coming back here yesterday, I found your letter awaiting me.

Owing to my heavy engagements I have not read Charles Reade's[†1] last book;[†2] but I will take it away with me tomorrow, and do so at once. If the trial[†3] should come off in this present month, however, I cannot be a witness; for I go to Scotland tomorrow, and come back for only one night at St. James's Hall before going to Ireland. The public announcements are all made and heavy expences are incurred by Chappell; wherefore I must be producible, in common honor. But I hope the action may not be tried so soon. I do not agree with the legal authorities, and I rather doubt Cockburn's allowing such evidence to be given — on the ground that the onus probandi lies with the reviewer, and that it is not disproof that is required — but this is beside the question. Say everything that is brotherly in Art from me to Reade, and add that I will write to you again after having got through the story.

I am as fresh as can possibly be expected under the work of the Readings. But the Railways shake me, as witness my present handwriting. Since the Staplehurst experience, I feel them very much.

This day fortnight I shall be at St. James's Hall in the evening, and perhaps we can then have a word together? Unless you are in Paris by that time?

Ever affecy.

CD.

To GEORGE DOLBY, 12 FEBRUARY 1867*

MS British Library.

OFFICE OF ALL THE YEAR ROUND,
Tuesday Twelfth February 1867

My Dear Dolby

Here is the Manchester note re-enclosed to you; and one (equally important) from Whitehaven. No news. I have been Vapour-Bathed, Head-Shampooed, and Stomach-Cockled;[†1] and am ready to come up smiling to the scratch.[†2]

Ever Yours

CD.

To E. P. HINGSTON, 12 FEBRUARY 1867

Mention in N, III, 508.

To CAPTAIN W. E. LOCKHART,[†3] 13 FEBRUARY 1867*

MS R.V. Tooley Ltd. Address: Captain Lockhart | &c &c &c | South Camp | Aldershot.

Birmingham, Thirteenth February 1867

Dear Sir

I regret to be obliged to assure you that my compliance with your request is not within the bounds of reasonable possibility. Believe me, if I could bring it within those limits, I would.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Captain Lockhart.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 15 FEBRUARY 1867†

MS Huntington Library.

Liverpool | Friday Fifteenth February 1867

My Dearest Georgy.

My short report of myself is, that we had an enormous turnaway last night,[†1] and do not doubt about having a cram tonight.[†2] The day has been very fine, and I have turned it to the wholesomest account by walking on the sands at New Brighton[†3] all the morning. I am not quite right within, but believe it to be an effect of the Railway shaking. There is no doubt of the fact that, after the Staplehurst experience, it tells more and more, instead of (as one might have expected) less and less.

The charming room here, greatly lessens the fatigue of this fatiguing week. I read last night with no more exertion than if I had been at Gad's — and yet to 1100 people, and with astonishing effect. It is Copperfield tonight, and Liverpool is the Copperfield stronghold.

[†a]The account of poor Charley Collins is very discouraging. Enclosed is that disagreeable woman's[†4] cheque.[†5]

With best love to Mamie
Ever My Dearest Georgy | Your most affectionate
CD.[†a]

To J. C. PARKINSON, [?MID-FEBRUARY 1867]

MS (draft) Free Library of Philadelphia. Date: written (in pencil) on back of note from Sir John Bowring to CD, 12 Feb 67; no doubt CD wrote the note on 13 Feb or soon after.

What is Sensational?[†6]

Under this title I want the most ferocious and bitter attack made upon Mr. Hardy[†7] of the Poor Law Board, that can possibly be made by a writer who respects himself and his vocation.[†8]

In his official capacity Mr. Hardy refers to the case of a wretched pauper (I think his name was Gibson) who died under the most frightful circumstances of disease, neglect and filth in a workhouse.[†1] And being quite unable to contradict the facts, Mr. Hardy says the case was the subject of "Sensational" articles in the Newspapers.[†2]

What does he mean by Sensational?

[†a]Is it Sensational to tell the Truth?

Is it Sensational to call the public attention to a noteworthy example of a costly Board existing under false pretences and showing mankind How not to do it?

Is it Sensational to be poor, abject, wretched, dying?

Is it Sensational in a public officer when he has nothing to say for his Department, basely and meanly to shelter himself under the Miserable Slang of the hour?

Is the commonest humanity — the narrowest charity Sensational?

What is Mr. Hardy's opinion of the New Testament? A sensational performance surely! The Good Samaritan. A highly sensational character! The 12 Apostles. What a Sensational dozen!

Their Divine Master. Inconveniently and most ably Sensational!

There was a time when men symbolically appended their names in what was called a "Rebus".[†3] Maybe it is the last Sensational effect, for a public Servant to do this in a new way, and thus Mr. Hardy sensationally exhibits himself as the most hardy man alive.

The House of Commons may be all that Mr. D Israeli says it is, or it may be[†4] the different thing that most other men know it to be; but in either case it is surely remarkable that there is no man in it to put a notice in the paper "to ask the chief of the Bumbles for his definition of Sensational.[†a]

To MISS MARY DICKENS, 17 FEBRUARY 1867

Extract in MDGH, II, 278-9. Address (envelope, MS Benoliel Collection): Miss Dickens | Gad's Hill Place | Higham | by | Rochester. PM Glasgow 17 Feb 67.

Glasgow, Sunday, Feb. 17th, 1867.

We arrived here this morning at our time to the moment, five minutes past ten.[†5] We turned away great numbers on both nights at Liverpool; and Manchester last night was a splendid spectacle.[†1] They cheered to that extent after it was over, that I was obliged to huddle on my clothes (for I was undressing to prepare for the journey), and go back again.

After so heavy a week, it was rather stiff to start on this long journey at a quarter to two in the morning; but I got more sleep than I ever got in a railway-carriage before, and it really was not tedious. The travelling was admirable, and a wonderful contrast to my friend the Midland.

I am not by any means knocked up, though I have, as I had in the last series of readings, a curious feeling of soreness all round the body, which I suppose to arise from the great exertion of voice. It is a mercy that we were not both made really ill at Liverpool. On Friday morning I was taken so faint and sick, that I was obliged to leave the table. On the same afternoon the same thing happened to Dolby. We then found that a part of the hotel close to us was dismantled for painting, and that they were at that moment painting a green passage leading to our rooms, with a most horrible mixture of white lead and arsenic. On pursuing the enquiry, I found that the four lady book-keepers in the bar were all suffering from the poison.

To F. C. BEARD, 18 FEBRUARY 1867

MS Dickens House. Address: F. Carr Beard Esquire | 44 Welbeck Street | Cavendish Square | London | W.

Carrick's Royal Hotel, Glasgow
Monday Eighteenth February 1867

My Dear Frank Beard

I am reading here — and there — and everywhere — with the most wonderful success; but I don't write to bother you with that.

Occasionally, as you know, I have some slight inconvenience (but not much) from piles. Yesterday night, having travelled hard and been much fatigued, I took one of Brinton's[†2] pills. This morning I have lost a considerable quantity of blood. Will you tell me, — shall I do anything except take a gentle aperient? If yes, what shall I do?

On Wednesday my address will be: Phillip's Hotel | Bridge of Allan | Scotland.

On Thursday, I shall be here again.[†3] On Friday and Saturday, Graham's Hotel, Prince's Street Edinburgh. On the following Tuesday I read in town, and can come to you in the morning.

Faithfully Ever
CD.[†4]

If you should think any immediate direction necessary in circumstances where my efficiency is all important, will you telegraph? My "treatment" on my own hook will be (as usual) regularity of bowels, cold baths and good †a regular †a living. But I shall declare on claret until you instruct me.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 19 FEBRUARY 1867

MS Huntington Library.

Bridge of Allan†1 | Tuesday Ninteenth February | 1867

My Dearest Georgy

I was very glad to get your letter before leaving Glasgow this morning. This is a poor return for it, but the post goes out early, and we come in late.

Yesterday morning I was so unwell †b with an internal malady that occasionally at long intervals troubles me a little — and it was attended with the sudden loss of so much blood — †b that I wrote to Frank Beard, from whom I shall doubtless hear tomorrow. I mention it, only in case you should come in his way, for I know how perversely such things fall out. I felt it a little more exertion to read, afterwards, and I passed a sleepless night after that again; but otherwise I am in good force and spirits today. I may say, in the best force.

The quiet of this little place is sure to do me good. The little Inn in which we are established, seems a capital house of the best country sort.

Ever My Dearest Georgy | Your most affectionate

CD.

To WILKIE COLLINS, 20 FEBRUARY 1867

MS Morgan Library.

Bridge of Allan, Scotland
Wednesday Twentieth February 1867.

My Dear Wilkie

I have read Charles Reade's book,†2 and here follows my state of mind — as a witness†3 — respecting it.

I have read it with the strongest interest and admiration. I regard it as the work of a highly accomplished writer, and a good man; a writer with a brilliant fancy, and a graceful and tender imagination.†4 I could name no other living writer who could, in my opinion, write such a story nearly so well. As regards a so-called critic who should decry such a book as Holywell Street literature†5 and the like, I should have merely to say of him that I could desire no stronger proof of his incapacity in, and his unfitness for, the post to which he has elected himself.

Cross-examined, I should feel myself in danger of being put on unsafe ground, and should try to set my wits against the cross-examiner, to keep well off it. But, if I were reminded (as I probably should be, supposing the Evidence to be allowed at all) that I was the Editor of a periodical of large circulation in which the Plaintiff himself had written,[†1] and if I had read to me in court those passages about Gaunt's going up to his wife's bed drunk[†2] and that last child's being conceived, and was asked whether, as Editor, I would have passed those passages, whether written by the Plaintiff or anybody else? I should be obliged to reply, No. Asked why? — I should say that what was pure to an artist might be impurely suggestive to inferior minds (of which there must necessarily be many among a large mass of readers), and that I should have called the writer's attention to the likelihood of those passages being perverted in such quarters. Asked if I should have passed the passage where Kate and Mercy have the illegitimate child upon their laps and look over its little points together?[†3] — I should be again obliged to reply No, for the same reason. Asked whether, as author or Editor, I should have passed Neville's marriage to Mercy, and should have placed those four people, Gaunt, his wife, Mercy, and Neville, in those relative situations towards one another?[†4] — I should again be obliged to reply No. Hard pressed upon this point, I must infallibly say that I consider those relative situations extremely coarse and disagreeable.

I am staying in this quiet, pretty place for a day and a half, to recruit a little. Tomorrow night I am in Glasgow again, and on Friday and Saturday in Edinburgh (Graham's Hotel, Prince's Street). Then I turn homeward for Tuesday night at St. James's Hall. Enormous crowds everywhere.

Affectionately Ever

CD.

To MISS MARY DICKENS, 21 FEBRUARY 1867

Extract in MDGH, II, 279-80.

Glasgow, Thursday, Feb. 21st, 1867

After two days' rest at the Bridge of Allan I am in renewed force, and have nothing to complain of but inability to sleep. I have been in excellent air all day since Tuesday at noon, and made an interesting walk to Stirling yesterday, and saw its lions,[†5] and (strange to relate) was not bored by them. Indeed, they left me so fresh that I knocked at the gate of the prison,[†6] presented myself to the governor, and took Dolby over the jail, to his unspeakable interest. We then walked back again to our excellent country inn.

Enclosed is a letter from Alfred,[†1] which you and your aunt will be interested in reading, and which I meant to send you sooner but forgot it. Wonderful as it is to mention, the sun shines here to-day! But to counterbalance that phenomenon I am in close hiding from — ,[†2] who has christened his infant son in my name, and, consequently, haunts the building. He and Dolby have already nearly come into collision, in consequence of the latter being always under the dominion of the one idea that he is bound to knock everybody down who asks for me.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 22 FEBRUARY 1867*

MS Huntington Library.

Edinburgh, Friday Twenty Second February | 1867

My Dearest Georgy

A hasty line. I got some sound rest last night, and am quite in force. I have had no return whatever of that indisposition.

I wrote to Mamie the other day that I enclosed Alfred's letter — and then found I had not done so. I send it now.

We had £180 odd last night at Glasgow,[†3] for the second time. Here (as invariably happens with me here) we begin more modestly; though less modestly than usual, as I think we have some 200 stalls.[†4]
[

]†5

With best love to Mamie
Ever My Dearest Georgy | Your most affectionate
CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [22 OR 23 FEBRUARY 1867]

Extract in F, VIII, vii, 706. Date: written from Edinburgh, according to Forster, where he read on 22 and 23 Feb 67.

†aEverything is done for me[†6] with the utmost liberality and consideration. Every want I can have on these journeys is anticipated, and not the faintest spark of the tradesman spirit ever peeps out.[†a] I have three men in constant attendance on me; besides Dolby, who is an agreeable companion, an excellent manager, and a good fellow.

To MRS HEDDERLEY, 23 FEBRUARY 1867

Summary in N, III, 511; dated Edinburgh, 23 Feb 67; addressed Mrs Hedderley, Office of AYR.

Saying that he will arrive at King's Cross at a quarter before ten, proceed to Regent Street to get a vapour bath and then come to the office for breakfast.

To DR T. B. CHRISTIE,[†1] 26 FEBRUARY 1867*

MS Huntington Library. Address: Dr. Christie | North Riding Lunatic Asylum | Clifton | York.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Twenty Sixth February 1867

My Dear Sir

I receive your kind note only this day, on coming to London for four and twenty hours[†2] between returning from Edinburgh, and going back to York.[†3]

Accept my cordial thanks for your hospitable offer. But when I travel on such business as that which will bring me into your neighbourhood, I observe the unvarying rule of never making a visit under any circumstances whatever, and always living at an hotel, with my secretary, in the strictest privacy. But for this combination of repose with great fatigue, I should be killed in no time. (I leave York again on Friday morning.)

I hear the very best tidings of Alfred and from him. He is hard at work in the veritable Bush life — has never had an hour's Illness of any kind — is highly interested in what he has to do — and reports himself as perfectly happy. His industry and adaptability to the strange circumstances, have put him on a pecuniary footing which enables him to be quite independent; and he leaves untouched some money that I banked for him in case of need.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Dr. Christie

To DR JOHN STORRAR,[†4] 26 FEBRUARY 1867

Summary in Nouveau Drouot catalogue, Oct 1980; MS (retranslated into English) 2 pp.; dated Higham by Rochester, 26 Feb 67; addressed Dr Storrar.

He has had his friend's note on his return from Edinburgh. He begs him to thank Mr. Fitch[†5] in his name for his offer that he has greatly appreciated. When his travels bring him into his neighbourhood he will go to see him, but he reminds his friend of his invariable rule, that he stays at a hotel with his secretary.

To MRS MONTGOMERY ATWOOD,[†1] 27 FEBRUARY 1867†

MS Berg Collection.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Twenty Seventh February | 1867.

My Dear Madam

[†a] I agree to write you — between this date and the first of August next — a new tale[†2] of the length of "Hunted Down"[†3] (which Mr. Wills has placed in your hands), and to assign you the Copyright of that Tale, in consideration of the sum of One Thousand Pounds sterling.[†a]

You agree, at the same time, to place in the hands of Messrs. Brown Shipley and Co. of London,[†4] the sum of One Thousand Pounds to be payable to my order, when it shall be presented to that House by my bankers Messrs. Coutts and Co. accompanied with a sealed packet containing the Manuscript of the Tale in question.

Dear Madam | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Montgomery Atwood

To THE REV. F. BROWN,[†5] 27 FEBRUARY 1867*

MS Private. Address: The Rev. F. Brown | Vicarage | Barnard Castle.

GAD'S HILL PLACE, | HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Twenty Seventh February | 1867

Dear Sir

I beg to thank you cordially for your proferred hospitality; not the less, because my coming to Barnard Castle is wholly out of the bounds of reasonable possibility.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Rev. F. Brown

To CHARLES KENT, 27 FEBRUARY 1867

Extract in Dickens Exhibition, New Dudley Gallery catalogue, 1909; MS 1 p.; dated Office of AYR, 27 Feb 67; addressed Charles Kent.

Saying that he will start for York that afternoon.

To GEORGE RUSSELL, 27 FEBRUARY 1867*

MS Marjorie, Lady Russell. Address: With a Packet | George Russell Esquire | Carlton Club | Pall Mall.

GAD'S HILL PLACE,
HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT.
Wednesday Twenty Seventh February | 1867

My Dear George Russell

This accompanying little remembrance[†1] of your wedding-day,[†2] I send for the kind acceptance of your charming wife and yourself, with my love and affectionate best wishes.[†3]

Believe me Ever | Heartily Yours | (and hers)
CHARLES DICKENS

March

To MRS DAVIS,[†4] 1 MARCH 1867

MS University College London Library.

Bradford,[†5] Yorkshire | Friday First March 1867

My Dear Mrs. Davis

I am working through a series of Readings, widely dispersed through England Scotland and Ireland and am so constantly occupied that it is very difficult for me to write letters. I have received your highly esteemed note[†6] (forwarded from my own house in Kent), and should have replied to it sooner, but that I had a hope of being able to get home and see your present,[†7] first. As I have not been able to do so, however, and am hardly likely to do so for two months to come, I delay no longer.

