They travelled post to Paris in five days. We got through the journey charmingly, though not quite so quickly as we hoped. The children as good as usual, and even Skittles[†2] jolly to the last. (That name has long superseded Sampson Brass, by the bye. I call him so, from something skittle-playing and public-housey in his countenance.) We have been up at five every morning, and on the road before seven. We were three carriages: a sort of wagon, with a cabriolet attached, for the luggage; a ramshackle villainous old swing upon wheels (hired at Geneva), for the children; and for ourselves, that travelling chariot which I was so kind as to bring here for sale.[†3] It was very cold indeed crossing the Jura—nothing but fog and frost; but when we were out of Switzerland and across the French frontier, it became warmer, and continued so. We stopped at between six and seven each evening; had two rather queer inns, wild French country inns;[†4] but the rest good. They were three hours and a half examining the luggage at the frontier custom-house[†5]—atop of a mountain, in a hard and biting frost; where Anne and Roche had sharp work I assure you, and the latter insisted on volunteering the most astonishing and unnecessary lies about my books, for the mere pleasure of deceiving the officials. When we were out of the mountain country, we came at a good pace, but were a day late in getting to our hotel[†6] here.

Residence in a hotel was not desirable with several tons of luggage, other tons of servants, and other tons of children, and his first day in Paris did not close before he had offered for an eligible mansion. That same Saturday night he took a colossal walk about the city, of which the brilliancy and brightness almost frightened him; and among other things noticed rather a good book announced in a bookseller's window as Les Mystères de Londres par Sir Trollopp.[†1] Do you know him?

The first man who took hold of me in the street, immediately outside this door, was Bruffum[†2] in his check trousers, and without the proper number of buttons on his shirt, who was going away this morning, he told me, but coming back in two months, when we would go and dine—at some place known to him and fame. On Sunday he took another long walk: The dirty churches, and the clattering carts and waggons, and the open shops (I don't think I passed fifty shut up, in all my strollings in and out), and the work-a-day dresses and drudgeries, are not comfortable. Open theatres and so forth I am well used to, of course, by this time; but so much toil and sweat on what one would like to see, apart from religious observances, a sensible holiday, is painful.

As to the Review,[†3] I strongly incline to the notion of a kind of Spectator (Addison's)—very cheap, and pretty frequent. We must have it thoroughly discussed. It would be a great thing to found something. If the mark between a sort of Spectator, and a different sort of Athenæum, could be well hit, my belief is that a deal might be done. But it should be something with a marked and distinctive and obvious difference, in its design, from any other existing periodical.

P.S. Monday afternoon. Saying that a house was taken; that, unless the agreement should break off on any unforeseen fight between Roche and the agent, a French Mrs. Gamp, he was to be addressed at No. 48, Rue de Courcelles, Faubourg St. Honoré; and that he believed the premises were the most ridiculous, extraordinary, unparalleled, and preposterous in the whole world, something between a baby-house, a shades,[†4] a haunted castle, and a mad kind of clock. They belong to a Marquis Castellan, and you will be ready to die of laughing when you go over them.
P.S. His lips should be sealed till Forster beheld for himself. By Heaven it is not to be imagined by the mind of man!
P.S. One room is a tent. Another room is a grove. Another room is a scene at the Victoria. The upstairs rooms are like fanlights over street-doors. The nurseries—but no, no, no, no more!

To W. S. LANDOR, 22 NOVEMBER 1846

Text from MDGH, I, 157-9.

Paris, Sunday, November 22nd, 1846.

Young Man,

I will not go there if I can help it. I have not the least confidence in the value of your introduction to the Devil. I can't help thinking that it would be of better use "the other way, the other way," but I won't try it there either, at present, if I can help it. Your godson[†1] says is that your duty? and he begs me to enclose a blush newly blushed for you.

As to writing, I have written to you twenty times and twenty more to that, if you only knew it. I have been writing a little Christmas book, besides, expressly for you. And if you don't like it, I shall go to the font of Marylebone Church as soon as I conveniently can and renounce you: I am not to be trifled with.

I write from Paris. I am getting up some French steam. I intend to proceed upon the longing-for-a-lap-of-blood-at-last principle, and if you do offend me, look to it.

We are all well and happy, and they send loves to you by the bushel. We are in the agonies of house-hunting. The people are frightfully civil, and grotesquely extortionate. One man (with a house to let) told me yesterday that he loved the Duke of Wellington like a brother. The same gentleman wanted to hug me round the neck with one hand, and pick my pocket with the other.

Don't be hard upon the Swiss. They are a thorn in the sides of European despots, and a good wholesome people to live near Jesuit-ridden kings on the brighter side of the mountains. My hat shall ever be ready to be thrown up, and my glove ever ready to be thrown down for Switzerland. If you were the man I took you for, when I took you (as a godfather) for better and for worse, you would come to Paris and amaze the weak walls of the house I haven't found yet with that steady snore of yours, which I once heard piercing the door of your bedroom in Devonshire Terrace, reverberating along the bell-wire in the hall, so getting outside into the street, playing Eolian harps among the area railings, and going down the New Road like the blast of a trumpet.[†2]

I forgive you your reviling of me: there's a shovelful of live coals for your head —does it burn? And am, with true affection—does it burn now?—

Ever yours,
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To [WILLIAM CULLENFORD], [?22-23 NOVEMBER 1846]

Extract from Argosy Book Stores catalogue No. 319; MS 1 p.; from Paris. Date: clearly 1846, since from Paris about General Theatrical Fund dinner, and presumably before deciding to return to London in Mar 47—a decision taken soon after hearing from his father on about 22 Nov: see To Forster, ?30 Nov. Address: Cullenford was the Fund's secretary.

He regretfully declines the invitation to preside at a dinner of the General Theatrical Fund,[†3] giving his reasons, and adding that my interest in their Success and my desire to promote it by any means in my power, continues unabated.

To W. W. F. DE CERJAT, 27 NOVEMBER 1846†

MS Berg Collection. Address: William Cerjat Esquire | Belle Rive | pres de Lausanne | Canton de Vaud | La Suisse.

Paris. 48 Rue de Courcelles. St. Honoré.
Friday Twenty Seventh November 1846.

My Dear Cerjat. When we turned out of your view on that disconsolate Monday when you so kindly took horse and rode forth to say good by'e, we went on in a very dull and drowsy manner, I assure you. I could have borne a world of Punch in the rumble, and been none the better for it. There was an uncommonly cool Inn that night,[†1] and quite a monstrous establishment at Auxonne the next night, full of flatulent passages and banging doors. The next night, we passed at Montbard, where there is one of the very best little Inns in all France. The next at Sens.[†2] And so we got here. The roads were bad, but not very—for French roads. There was no deficiency of horses anywhere; and after Pontarlier, the weather was really not too cold for comfort. They weighed our plate at the Frontier custom House, spoon by spoon, and fork by fork, and we lingered about there, in a thick fog and a hard frost, for three long hours and a half, during which the officials committed all manner of absurdities, and got into all sorts of disputes with my Brave Courier. This was the only misery we encountered—except leaving Lausanne, and that was enough to last us, and did last us, all the way here. We are living on it now. I feel, myself, much as I should think the Murderer felt on that fair morning, when, with his grey-haired victim (those unconscious grey hairs, soon to be bedabbled with blood)[†3] he went so far towards Heaven as the top of that mountain of St. Bernard, without one touch of remorse.[†4] A weight is on my breast. The only difference between me and the Murderer is, that his weight was guilt, and mine is regret.

I haven't a word of news to send you. I shouldn't write at all, if I were not the vainest man in the world, impelled by a belief that you will be glad to hear from me, even though you hear no more than that I have nothing to say. Dombey is doing wonders. It went up, after the publication of the second number, over the thirty thousand. This is such a very large sale so early in the story, that I begin to think it will beat all the rest.[†5] Keeley and his wife are making great preparations for producing the Christmas story; and I have made them (as an old Stage-manager) carry out one or two expensive notions of mine about Scenery and so forth—in particular, a sudden change from the inside of the Doctor's house in the midst of the ball, to the orchard in the snow—which ought to tell very well.

But actors are so bad, in general, and the best are spread over so many theatres, that the "cast" is black despair and moody madness. There is no one to be got for Marion but a certain Miss May,[†1] I am afraid—a pupil of Miss Kelly's who acted in the Private Theatricals I got up a year ago. Macready took her, afterwards, to play Virginia to his Virginius, but she made nothing of it, great as the chance was.[†2] However, I have promised to show her what I mean, as near as I can—and if you will look into the English Opera House on the morning of the 17th 18th or 19th of next month, between the hours of 11 and 4, you will find me, in a very hot and dusty condition, playing all the parts of the piece, to the immense diversion of all the Actors, Actresses, Scene shifters, Carpenters, Musicians, chorus-people, tailors, dress-makers, scene painters, and general ragamuffins of the Theatre.

Moore, the poet, is very ill—I fear, dying. The last time I saw him was immediately before I left London, and I thought him sadly changed and tamed, but not much more so, than such a man might be under the heavy hand of Time. I believe he suffered severe grief, in the death of a son, some time ago.[†3] The first man I met in Paris was Brougham,[†4] who took hold of me as I was getting into a coach at the door of the hotel. He hadn't a button on his shirt (but I don't think he ever had), and you might have sewn[†5] what boys call "mustard and cress" in the dust on his coat. I have not seen Lord Normanby yet, as we have only just got a house (the queerest house in Europe!) to lay our heads in—but there seems reason to fear that the growing dissensions between England and France, and the irritation of the French King, may lead to the withdrawal of the Minister on each side of the Channel.[†6]

Have you cut down any more trees—played many more rubbers—propounded any more teazers to the players at the Game of Yes and No? How is the old horse, how is the grey mare, how is Crab[†1] (to whom my respectful compliments) —Have you tried the Punch[†2] yet—if yes, did it succeed—if no, why not? Is Mrs. Cerjat as happy and as well as I would have her—and all your house ditto ditto? Does Haldimand play Whist with any "science" yet? Ha ha ha! The idea of his saying I hadn't[†3] any! And are those damask-cheeked Virgins, the 'Miss Forbes's'[†4] still sleeping on dewey rose-leaves near the English church?

Remember me to all your house, and most of all to its other head, with all the regard and earnestness that a "Numble Individual" (as they always call it in the House of Commons) who once travelled with her in a car over a smooth Country, may charge you with. I have added two lines to the little Christmas Book that I hope both you and she may not dislike. Haldimand will tell you what they are. Kate and Georgy send their kindest loves—and Kate is "going" to write, "next week." Believe me always, my dear Cerjat, full of hearty and cordiall[†5] recollections of this past Summer, and Autumn, and your part in my part of them—

Very faithfully Your Friend.
CHARLES DICKENS

[†a]P.S. Will you tell Mr. Goff from me that the Carriage did its duty admirably. It has been cleaned and put in perfect order, and is now at the Coachmakers. It shall be advertized next week. Not being sold in a fortnight or so, had it not better come here, where there is plenty of room for it, instead of standing where it would have rent to pay?[†a]

To WILLIAM HALDIMAND, 27 NOVEMBER 1846†

MS Bibliothèque Cantonale et Universitaire, Lausanne. Address: Affranchie. | William Haldimand Esquire | Denantou | pres de Lausanne | Canton de Vaud | La Suisse.

Paris. 48 Rue de Courcelles, St. Honoré.
Friday Twenty Seventh November 1846.

My Dear Haldimand. First, let me bestow upon you, through the Post, an accolade like that in which we indulged in descending from the Great Saint Bernard[†6] on that memorable, bright, fresh morning when the lake behind the Monastery was brighter and crisper than any other party will see it until we go back there, and when I drowned the recollection of having been begrudged and denied more Bishop over-night, in the cold mountain streams that made the road so pleasant. Secondly, let me report my small caravan safely arrived, and lodged in a most extraordinary house. Thirdly, let me release myself from the importunate messages of Mrs. Dickens and her sister by telling you that I never could write (unless I wrote a book for the purpose) half the remembrances and enquiries they are screaming out to me, every moment,—and therefore relinquish the idea in a mild despair.

I feel as if I had passed my life—or the best of it, in every sense—at Rosemont, and am strange and paralytic without Denantou, Belle Rive, and Elysée. Ages seem to have elapsed since we left Lausanne. I talk of it already, as of a recollection of old time. You are ethereal to my imagination. I play celestial whist with you, yes, and even exhibit "science", though you said (to the wife of my bosom) that I never did. I hear you trying to speak through what now appear to me to be the fogs and hoarsenesses of my infancy. The Brougham which you were perpetually getting in and out of, when we went to see the drunken man (for he was drunk; believe me, he was very drunk indeed) at that Lake public house, might have been a pumpkin once, and might now be a pumpkin again, for any air of work-a-day reality I can invest it with. A sort of pleasant sorrow seems to have settled over all our quiet Swiss life, and I don't believe a word of it.—Nevertheless ask Piron (is that the way to spell his name, or is there such a man?) to let that bed be sometimes turned, which I am to occupy next Spring. For I wouldn't let go of the belief and hope that I shall come back to see you all again, for more money than I could set forth in figures on this piece of paper.

And I wonder why it is, that I write on half a sheet! I have a wild and shadowy idea that Postage is precious, and ought not to be encouraged, but I have not the slightest conception why. I wish you would regard my Christmas Books, and Dombeys, and so forth, as letters to you: and when you find anything you particularly like, would take it as your own exclusive property. Then I should be entitled to an answer, and should always be an active and punctual correspondent. †aTalking of which, reminds me to say that I have written to my printers, and told them to prefix to the Battle of life, a Dedication that is printed in illuminated capitals on my heart. It is only this

This Christmas Book is cordially inscribed
To my English friends in Switzerland.

I shall trouble you with a little parcel of three or four copies to distribute to those whose names will be found written in them, as soon as they can be made ready: and believe me there is no success or approval in the great world beyond the Jura, that will be more precious and delightful to me, than the hope that I shall be remembered of an evening in this coming winter time at one or two firesides I could mention, near the Lake of Geneva. It runs with a spring-tide that will always flow and never ebb, through my memory; and nothing less than the Waters of Lethe shall confuse the music of its running, until it loses itself in that great Sea for which all the currents of our life are desperately bent.†a†1 There may be good parties to glorified St. Bernards beyond it—who knows!

Paris is just what you know it—as bright, and as wicked, and as wanton, as ever. There is a great uproar afloat, about the Cracow business, and I hear this evening that the state of affairs with England is very feverish indeed, and that there is really solid foundation for the Newspaper Rumours.†1 If Lord Palmerston be not very careful, I am afraid he may split the Ministry before they meet the Parliament. He is a clever man, but I always doubt him, and feel afraid of his diplomacy.†2 It need be careful just now.

Try, by some friendly effort of imagination, to regard this as a letter—and whether you succeed or no, believe me, my dear Haldimand Affectionately Yours CHARLES DICKENS
William Haldimand Esquire.

To THE HON. RICHARD WATSON, 27 NOVEMBER 1846

MS Huntington Library. Address: Affranchie. | The Hon: Richard Watson | Elysée | pres de Lausanne | Canton de Vaud | La Suisse.

Paris. 48 Rue de Courcelles. St. Honoré.
Friday Twenty Seventh November 1846.

My Dear Watson. We were housed, only yesterday. I lose no time in dispatching this memorandum of our whereabout in order that you may not fail to write me a line before you come to Paris on your way towards England, letting me know on what day we are to expect you to dinner.

We arrived here, quite happily and well—I don't mean here, but at the Hotel Brighton in Paris—on Friday Evening between 6 and 7 o'Clock. The agonies of house-hunting were frightfully severe. It was one paroxysm for four mortal days. I am proud to express my belief that we are lodged, at last, in the most preposterous house in the world. The like of it cannot (and so far as my knowledge goes, does not), exist in any other part of the globe. The bedrooms are like opera boxes. The dressing-rooms, staircases, and passages, quite inexplicable. The dining room is a sort of cavern, painted (ceiling and all) to represent a Grove, with unaccountable bits of looking-glass sticking in among the branches of the trees. There is a gleam of reason in the drawing room. But it is approached, through a series of small chambers, like the joints in a telescope, which are hung with inscrutable drapery. The maddest man in Bedlam, having the materials given him, would be likely to devise such a suite, supposing his case to be hopeless and quite incurable.

Pray tell Mrs. Watson, with my best regards, that the dance of the two sisters in the little Christmas Book, is being done as an illustration by Maclise:[†3] and that Stanfield is doing the Battle Ground, and the outside of the Nutmeg Grater Inn. Maclise is also drawing some smaller subjects[†1] for the little Story, and they write me that they hope it will be very pretty, and that they think I shall like it. I shall have been in London before I see you, probably, and I hope the book itself will then be on its road to Lausanne to speak for itself, and to speak a word for me too. I have never left so many friendly and cheerful recollections[†2] in any place: and to represent me in my absence its tone should be very eloquent and affectionate indeed.

Well! If I don't turn up again next summer, it shall not be my fault. In the meantime I shall often and often look that way with my mind's eye, and hear the sweet, clear, bell-like voice of Cheeseborough[†3] with the ear of my imagination. In the event of there being any change—but it's not likely—in the appearance of his cravat behind—where it goes up into his head, I mean, and frets against his wig—I hope some one of my English friends will apprize me of it, for the love of the Great Saint Bernard.

I have not seen Lord Normanby yet. I have not seen anything, up to this time, but houses and lodgings. There seems to be immense excitement here on the subject of Cracow, however, and a perfectly stupendous sensation getting up. I saw the King,[†4] the other day, coming into Paris. His carriage was surrounded by Guards on horseback; and he sat very far back in it, I thought, and drove at a great pace. It was strange to see the Prefet of Police on horseback, some hundred yards in advance, looking to the right and left as he rode, like a man who suspected every twig in every tree in the long Avenue.

The English relations look anything but promising, though I understand that the Count St. Aulaire is to remain in London, notwithstanding the newspaper alarms to the contrary. If there be anything like the sensation in England, about Cracow[†5] that there is here, there will be a bitter resentment indeed. The democratic society of Paris have announced this morning, their intention of printing and circulating fifty thousand copies of an appeal[†6] in its behalf, in every European language. It is a base business beyond question, and comes at an ill time.

Mrs. Dickens and her sister desire their best regards to be sent to you, and their best loves to Mrs. Watson. In which I join, as nearly as I may. Believe me, with great truth, Very Sincerely Yours.

CHARLES DICKENS

[†a] Mrs. Dickens is going to write to Mrs. Watson, next week, she says.[†a]

To SAXE BANNISTER,[†1] 29 NOVEMBER 1846*

MS Dickens House.

48 Rue de Courcelles, Paris. | Twenty Ninth November 1846.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Saxe Bannister, and begs to thank him for his obliging letter, and for his pamphlet—only just now received, in consequence of Mr. Dickens having been absent from England, and residing in Switzerland for six months. Mr. Dickens hastens to assure Mr. Bannister that his connexion with the Daily News ceased very soon after the establishment of that Journal, and that he has no share whatever in that enterprize or its management.

To JOHN FORSTER [?30 NOVEMBER 1846]

Extracts in F, V, vii, 444, 444-5, 445 (two extracts), 446-7, 447*n*, V, vi, 440-1*n*. Date: first extract from the letter "following" 23 Nov, according to Forster—the natural time for him to describe the house more fully (but the reference to Henry Bulwer may come from a later letter: see To Thompson, 2 Dec); second extract 30 Nov according to Forster; third extract almost certainly same letter (cf. To Watson, 27 Nov), and fourth extract probably so; fifth and sixth extracts 30 Nov (or "same letter") according to Forster; final extract "end of November".

Never, till Forster saw it, should the house be described. I will merely observe that it is fifty yards[†2] long, and eighteen feet high, and that the bedrooms are exactly like opera-boxes. It has its little courtyard and garden, and porter's house, and cordon to open the door, and so forth; and is a Paris mansion in little. There is a gleam of reason in the drawing-room. Being a gentleman's house, and not one furnished to let, it has some very curious things in it; some of the oddest things you ever beheld in your life; and an infinity of easy chairs and sofas. . . . Bad weather. It is snowing hard. There is not a door or window here—but that's nothing! there's not a door or window in all Paris—that shuts; not a chink in all the billions of trillions of chinks in the city that can be stopped to keep the wind out. And the cold!—but you shall judge for yourself; and also of this preposterous dining-room. The invention, sir, of Henry Bulwer,[†3] who when he had executed it (he used to live here), got frightened at what he had done, as well he might, and went away. . . . The Brave called me aside on Saturday night, and showed me an improvement he had effected in the decorative way. "Which," he said, "will very much s'prize Mis'r Fors'er when he come." You are to be deluded into the belief that there is a perspective of chambers twenty miles in length, opening from the drawing-room.

He had not been two days in Paris when a letter from his father made him very anxious for the health of his eldest sister. I was going to the play (a melodrama in eight acts, five hours long), but hadn't the heart to leave home after my father's letter, and sent Georgy and Kate by themselves. There seems to be no doubt whatever that Fanny is in a consumption.[†1] She had broken down in an attempt to sing at a party in Manchester; and subsequent examination by Sir Charles Bell's nephew,[†2] who was present and took much interest in her, sadly revealed the cause. He advised that neither she nor Burnett should be told the truth, and my father has not disclosed it. In worldly circumstances they are very comfortable, and they are very much respected.[†3] They seem to be happy together, and Burnett has a great deal of teaching. You remember my fears about her when she was in London the time of Alfred's marriage,[†4] and that I said she looked to me as if she were in a decline? Kate took her to Elliotson, who said that her lungs were certainly not affected then. And she cried for joy. Don't you think it would be better for her to be brought up, if possible, to see Elliotson again? I am deeply, deeply grieved about it. Charles Sheridan[†5] was dying of the same disease; and his chief, Lord Normanby, was as informal and good-natured as ever, but not so gay as usual, and having an anxious haggard way with him, as if his responsibilities were more than he had bargained for.

A glimpse of the king impressed him unfavourably. There were two carriages. His was surrounded by horseguards. It went at a great pace, and he sat very far back in a corner of it, I promise you. It was strange to an Englishman to see the Prefet of Police riding on horseback some hundreds of yards in advance of the cortège, turning his head incessantly from side to side, like a figure in a Dutch clock, and scrutinizing everybody and everything, as if he suspected all the twigs in all the trees in the long avenue.

He saw almost everywhere signs of canker eating into the heart of the people themselves. It is a wicked and detestable place, though wonderfully attractive; and there can be no better summary of it, after all, than Hogarth's unmentionable phrase.[†6]

He had got his papers into order and hoped to begin that day. But his Paris plans had been unsettled: he must, for family reasons, return to London in four months' time—three months sooner than he had designed; and as his own house would not be free till July, would have to hire one from the end of March. In these circumstances I think I shall send Charley to King's-college after Christmas. I am sorry he should lose so much French, but don't you think to break another half-year's schooling would be a pity? Of my own will I would not send him to King's-college at all, but to Bruce Castle instead. I suppose, however, Miss Coutts is best. We will talk over all this when I come to London. This would be in December; he suggested the middle of January for Forster's visit. It will then be the height of the season, and a good time for testing the unaccountable French vanity which really does suppose there are no fogs here, but that they are all in London.

Mamey and Katey have come out in Parisian dresses, and look very fine. They are not proud,[†1] and send their loves. Skittles is cutting teeth, and gets cross towards evening. Frankey is smaller than ever, and Walter very large. Charley in statu quo. Everything is enormously dear. Fuel, stupendously so. In airing the house, we burnt five pounds' worth of firewood in one week!! We mix it with coal now, as we used to do in Italy, and find the fires much warmer. To warm the house thoroughly, this singular habitation requires fires on the ground floor. We burn three.

I may tell you, now it is all over. I don't know whether it was the hot summer, or the anxiety of the two new books coupled with D.N. remembrances and reminders, but I was in that state in Switzerland, when my spirits sunk so, I felt myself in serious danger.[†2] Yet I had little pain in my side; excepting that time at Genoa[†3] I have hardly had any since poor Mary died,[†4] when it came on so badly; and I walked my fifteen miles a day constantly, at a great pace.

To LORD JEFFREY, 30 NOVEMBER 1846†

MS Berg Collection. Address: Angleterre | The Hon: | Lord Jeffrey | Moray Place | Edinburgh | Scotland.

Paris. 48 Rue de Courcelles. | Thirtieth November 1846.

My very dear Lord Jeffrey. A word before the Post goes out!—[†a]We have come from Switzerland, all well and happy, and purpose remaining here until the end of March. My friend Forster, who does all my business for me in England while I am away, and is my right hand and cool shrewd head too, will send you by post, probably in the course of this week, proofs of the Christmas Book. There is something in the idea, that I hope will please you. It will not be published until the 18th. of December.[†a†1]

I shall hope, when you have read it, to see your handwriting. Don't worry yourself to write much. Say "I am well and have not forgotten you", and that will be enough. Kate sends her love. [†b]Your godson[†2] thrives, and is a pretty fellow. Dombey is a great success. I have forgotten all about the newspaper, and don't believe I ever had anything to do with it,[†b] or ever received a dissuasion from an affectionate friend "i' the North".[†3]

God bless you! Our united regards to Mrs. Jeffrey. When shall I see Scotland again!

Ever Affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

December

To JOHN FORSTER, [?NOVEMBER-DECEMBER 1846]

Extract in F, VI, ii, 478. Date: on receiving Dombey No. 111 (probably an advance copy), published 30 Nov.

I am really distressed by the illustration of Mrs. Pipchin and Paul. It is so frightfully and wildly wide of the mark. Good Heaven! in the commonest and most literal construction of the text, it is all wrong. She is described as an old lady, and Paul's "miniature arm-chair" is mentioned more than once. He ought to be sitting in a little arm-chair down in a corner of the fireplace, staring up at her. I can't say what pain and vexation it is to be so utterly misrepresented.[†4] I would cheerfully have given a hundred pounds to have kept this illustration out of the book. He never could have got that idea of Mrs. Pipchin if he had attended to the text. Indeed I think he does better without the text; for then the notion is made easy to him in short description, and he can't help taking it in.[†5]

To T. J. THOMPSON, 2 DECEMBER 1846†

MS Mrs Sowerby. Address: A Monsieur | Monsr. T. J. Thompson | Clermont | Lausanne | Canton de Vaud | La Suisse.

48 Rue de Courcelles, St. Honoré, Paris.
Second December 1846.

My Dear Thompson. We got to Paris in due course, on the Friday Evening. We had a pleasant and prosperous journey, barring rather cold weather in Switzerland and on the borders thereof, and a slight detention of three hours and a half, at the frontier Custom House, atop of a mountain, in a hard frost and a dense fog. We came into this house last Thursday. It has a pretty drawing room, approached through four most extraordinary chambers. It is the most ridiculous and preposterous house in the world, I should think. It belongs to a Marquis Castellane, but was fitted up (so Paul-Pry Poole[†1] said, who dined here yesterday) by Henry Bulwer[†2] in a fit of temporary insanity, I have no doubt. The dining-room is mere midsummer madness, and is designed to represent a bosky grove.

At this present writing, snow is falling in the street, and the weather is very cold, but not so cold as it was yesterday. I dined with Lord Normanby on Sunday last. Everything seems to be queer and uncomfortable in the diplomatic way, and he is rather bothered and worried, to my thinking. I found young Sheridan (Mrs. Norton's brother) the attaché. I know him very well, and he is a good man for my sight-seeing purposes. There are to be no theatricals, unless the times should so adjust themselves as to admit of their being French, to which the Markis seems to incline, as a bit of conciliation, and a popular move.

Lumley, of Italian Opera notoriety, also dined here yesterday, and seems hugely afeared of the opposition opera at Covent Garden, who have already spirited away Grisi and Mario—which he pretends to consider a great comfort and relief.[†3] I gave him some uncompromising information on the subject of his Pit, and told him that if [he d]idn't[†4] conciliate the middle classes he might depend on being damaged—very de[cid]edly.[†5] The danger of the Covent Garden enterprize seems to me to be that they are going [for] Ballet too; and I really don't think the house is large enough to repay the double expence.

Forster writes me that Mac has come out with tremendous vigor in the Xmas Book, and took off his coat at it with a burst of such alarming energy that he has done four Subjects! Stanfield has done three. Keeleys are making that "change"[†1] I was so hot upon at Lausanne, and seem ready to spend money with bold hearts, but the cast (so far as I know it at present) would appear to be black despair and moody madness. Mr. Leigh Murray[†2] from the Princess's is to be the Alfred, and Forster says there is a Mrs. Gordon[†3] at Bolton's[†4] [†a](that immeasurable villain!)[†a] who must be got for Grace. Oxberry,[†5] I am horribly afraid, will do one of the lawyers, and there seems to be nobody but Miss May[†6] for Marion. I shall run over and carry consternation into the establishment, as soon as I have done the No. But I have not begun it yet—though I hope to do so tonight—having been quite put out by chopping and changing about, and by a vile touch of biliousness that makes my eyes feel as if they were yellow bullets. Dombey has passed its 30,000 already. Do you remember a mysterious man in a straw hat—low-crowned—and a Petersham coat, who was a sort of manager or amateur man servant at Miss Kelly's? Mr. Bayntun Rolt, Sir—Came out, the other night, as Macbeth, at the Royal Surrey Theatre.[†7]

There's all my news for you! Let me know, in return, whether you have fought a Duel yet, with your milingtary landlord, and whether Lausanne is still that giddy whirl of dissipation it was wont to be. Also full particulars of your fairer and better half, and of the baby; [†b]respecting both of whom, Katherine and Georgy are continually screaming out messages as I write. Commend me, as lovingly as I may desire to be commended, to both of them, and give our united remembrances and regards to Mrs. Weller.[†b] I will send a Christmas Book to Clermont, as soon as I get any copies. And so no more at present from Yours ever

CHARLES DICKENS

[†c]P.S. Juvenile remembrances and blushes to Tom.[†c†1]

To CHARLES SHERIDAN, [?4 DECEMBER 1846]*

MS Princeton University Library. Date: Dec 46 rather than Jan 47, because of reference to Switzerland: 4 Dec the only possible Friday.

Rue de Courcelles | Friday

My Dear Sheridan

I find my man[†2] must and will dine at the trois frères[†3] today, as he goes away tomorrow. Two Sets of brothers running would be agin the Dombey, I'm afraid—frightful dissipation after Switzerland. Shall our lark stand over until Wednesday or Thursday in next week? Will that do for you? We shall meet, I dare say, in a day or two (why don't you come here?) and arrange.

Ever Faithfully

CD

Charles Sheridan Esquire.

To AUGUSTE-MARSEILLE BARTHÉLEMY,[†4] 5 DECEMBER 1846*

MS Chas J. Sawyer.

48 Rue de Courcelles. | Samedi 5 Decembre 1846.

Monsieur:

Je m'empresse a repondre a votre billet. Croyez-moi, Monsieur, que vous vous tromper en supposant, un moment, que je suis insensible a l'honneur ou aux actes de politesse que vous m'avez rendu. Tout au contraire, Monsieur, je vous assure.

Mais il-y-a, Monsieur, deux semaines (dans tous les mois de l'an) quand je suis bien engagé dans ces poursuites litteraires aux quels vous aussi etes devoué, and avec quels vous pouvez bien sympathier. Ils arrivent, en generale, au commencement du mois, et alors je ne puis jamais rendre visite à personne—Dimanche excepté.

J'avais l'honneur de reçevoir votre carte avant-hier, et j'avais l'intention de me faire l'honneur de vous rendre visite et de vous donner cette explanation, demain.

Permettez-moi d'esperer, Monsieur, que ce que j'ai dit est assez a un collabarateur,[†1] que vous le reçevrez, comme je l'ecris, de bonne foi et de bon coeur.

Reçevez, Monsieur, l'assurance de ma consideration distingue

CHARLES DICKENS

À Monsieur | Monsr. Barthèlemy

To JOHN FORSTER, [6 DECEMBER 1846]

Extracts in F, V, vii, 447-8, 446 (2 extracts); VI, ii, 479; V, vii, 445. Date: first and fourth extracts 6 Dec according to Forster; second and third extracts suggest that he had been in Paris for a week or more, and third deals with "politico-economical subjects" referred to in dated extract; fifth extract probably same letter since after "rather frequently" visiting the Morgue.

Cold intense. The water in the bedroom-jugs freezes into solid masses from top to bottom, bursts the jugs with reports like small cannon, and rolls out on the tables and wash-stands, hard as granite. I stick to the shower-bath, but have been most hopelessly out of sorts—writing sorts; that's all. Couldn't begin, in the strange place; took a violent dislike to my study, and came down into the drawing-room; couldn't find a corner that would answer my purpose; fell into a black contemplation of the waning month; sat six hours at a stretch, and wrote as many lines, &c. &c. &c. . . . Then, you know what arrangements are necessary with the chairs and tables; and then what correspondence had to be cleared off; and then how I tried to settle to my desk, and went about and about it, and dodged at it, like a bird at a lump of sugar. In short I have just begun; five printed pages[†2] finished, I should say; and hope I shall be blessed with a better condition this next week, or I shall be behind-hand. I shall try to go at it—hard. I can't do more. . . . There is rather a good man lives in this street, and I have had a correspondence with him which is preserved for your inspection. His name is Barthélemy. He wears a prodigious Spanish cloak, a slouched hat, an immense beard, and long black hair. He called the other day, and left his card. Allow me to enclose his card, which has originality and merit. Roche said I wasn't at home. Yesterday, he wrote me to say that he too was a "Littérateur"—that he had called, in compliment to my distinguished reputation—"qu'il n'avait pas été reçu—qu'il n'était pas habitué à cette sorte de procédé—et qu'il pria Monsieur Dickens d'oublier son nom, sa mémoire, sa carte, et sa visite, et de considérer qu'elle n'avait pas été rendu!" Of course I wrote him a very polite reply immediately, telling him good-humouredly that he was quite mistaken, and that there were always two weeks in the beginning of every month when M. Dickens ne pouvait rendre visite à personne. He wrote back to say that he was more than satisfied; that it was his case too, at the end of every month; and that when busy himself, he not only can't receive or pay visits, but —"tombe, généralement, aussi, dans des humeurs noires qui approchent de l'anthropophagie!!!" I think that's pretty well.

The quays on the other side of the Seine were not safe after dark; nor were the best quarters of the city. I took Georgy out, the night before last, to show her the Palais Royal lighted up; and on the Boulevard, a street as bright as the brightest part of the Strand or Regent-street, we saw a man fall upon another, close before us, and try to tear the cloak off his back. It was in a little dark corner near the Porte St. Denis, which stands out in the middle of the street.[†1] After a short struggle, the thief fled (there were thousands of people walking about), and was captured just on the other side of the road.

It is extraordinary what nonsense English people talk, write, and believe, about foreign countries. The Swiss (so much decried) will do anything for you, if you are frank and civil; they are attentive and punctual in all their dealings; and may be relied upon as steadily as the English. The Parisian workpeople and smaller shopkeepers are more like (and unlike) Americans than I could have supposed possible. To the American indifference and carelessness, they add a procrastination and want of the least heed about keeping a promise or being exact, which is certainly not surpassed in Naples. They have the American semi-sentimental independence too, and none of the American vigour or purpose. If they ever get free trade in France (as I suppose they will, one day), these parts of the population must, for years and years, be ruined. They couldn't get the means of existence, in competition with the English workmen. Their inferior manual dexterity, their lazy habits, perfect unreliability, and habitual insubordination, would ruin them in any such contest, instantly. They are fit for nothing but soldiering—and so far, I believe, the successors in the policy of your friend Napoleon have reason on their side. Eh bien, mon ami, quand vous venez à Paris, nous nous mettrons à quatre épingles, et nous verrons toutes les merveilles de la cité, et vous en jugerez. God bless me, I beg your pardon! It comes so natural.

Here am I, writing letters, and delivering opinions, politico-economical and otherwise, as if there were no undone number, and no undone Dick! Well. Così va il mondo (God bless me! Italian! I beg your pardon)—and one must keep one's spirits up, if possible, even under Dombey pressure. Paul, I shall slaughter at the end of number five. His school ought to be pretty good, but I haven't been able to dash at it freely, yet. However, I have avoided unnecessary dialogue so far, to avoid overwriting;[†1] and all I have written is point.

He went rather frequently to the Morgue,[†2] until shocked by something so repulsive that he had not courage for a long time to go back. On that same occasion he had noticed the keeper smoking a short pipe at his little window and giving a bit of fresh turf to a linnet in a cage.

To H. K. BROWNE, [?6 DECEMBER 1846]

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Date: Almost everything that CD tells Browne is included in the equivalent of "five printed pages" of Ch. 11 already written by 6 Dec.

1st Subject.

Paul (a year older) has left Mrs. Pipchin's, and gone to Dr. Blimber's establishment at Brighton. The Doctor only takes ten young gentlemen. Doctor Blimber's establishment is a great hothouse for the young mind, with a forcing apparatus always at work. Mental green peas are produced there, at Christmas, and intellectual asparagus all the year round. Every description of greek and latin vegetable is got off the driest twigs of boys, under the frostiest circumstances. Mrs. Blimber is proud of the boys not being like boys, and of their wearing collars and neck-kerchiefs. They have all blown before their time. The eldest boy in the school—Young Toots by name—with a swollen nose and an excessively large head—left off blowing suddenly one day, and people do say that the Doctor rather overdid it with him, and that when he began to have whiskers, he left off having brains. All the young gentlemen have great weights on their minds. They are haunted by verbs, noun-substantives, roots, and syntactic passages. Some abandoned hope half through the Latin Grammar, and others curse Virgil in the bitterness of their souls. Classical Literature in general is an immense collection of words to them. It's all words and grammar, and don't mean anything else.[†3]

Subject. These young gentlemen out walking—very dismally and formally (observe; its a very expensive school) with this lettering

Doctor Blimber's young gentlemen as they appeared when enjoying themselves.[†4]

I think Doctor Blimber, a little removed from the rest, should bring up the rear, or lead the van, with Paul, who is much the youngest of the party. I extract the description of the Dr.[†1]

"A portly gentleman in a suit of black, with strings at his knees, and stockings below them. He had a great bald head that shone tremendously, a deep voice, and a chin so very double that it was a wonder how he ever managed to shave into the creases. He had likewise a pair of little eyes that were always half shut up, and a mouth that was always half expanded into a grin, as if he had, that moment, posed a boy, and were waiting to convict him from his own lips. Insomuch that when the doctor put his right hand into the breast of his coat, and, with his other hand behind him, and a scarcely perceptible wag of his head, made the commonest observation to a nervous stranger, it was like a sentiment from the Sphynx, and settled his business."

Paul, as last described, but a twelvemonth older. No collars or neck-kerchief for him of course. I would make the next youngest boy, about three or four years older than he.[†2]

To THOMAS FRASER, 8 DECEMBER 1846*

MS Yale University Library.

48 Rue de Courcelles | Tuesday December Eighth 1846.

Dear Fraser.

Last Sunday week, I went out to make some calls—taking with me a list of names and addresses. Among other places, I called at No. 9 Boulevart[†3] des Capucines—or my coachman (I don't know him from Adam) stopped at a house which he swore was the veritable No. 9; and a shrill woman said nobody nearer your name than Fish-à lived there. After swearing which, she plunged into a little lodge and was seen no more.

When I got home, I looked high and low for your card, but couldn't find it. I concluded I had made some mistake in copying the address, and waited to tell you all this, until I should see you in the street or at the Theatre. Today I found it,—and with it, this identical address neatly printed in the corner!

As I may be obliged to leave Paris for a few days, on a visit, next week, and as I may not be able: being busy just now: to get out of doors at any Christian hour in the meantime—I write this note to explain an apparent but perfectly innocent delay on my part in returning the visit of an ancient Companion in arms. Though what mistake the Coachman and the woman contrived to make between them, Heaven knows.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

T. Fraser Esquire.

To MM. FERRÈRE LAFFITTE, 10 DECEMBER 1846

Text from unidentified catalogue; MS 1 p.; dated Hotel Castellane, 48 Rue de Courcelles, 10 Dec 46.

M. Charles Dickens présente ses compliments à Messrs. Ferrère Laffitte, et sera très obligé s'ils auront la bonté de donner la valeur des billets de change circulaire enclos au porteur Louis Roche, son courier. M. Charles Dickens les a contresigné, et il a donné a Louis Roche sa lettre d'Indication.

M. Charles Dickens prie Messrs. Ferrère Laffitte d'accepter l'assurance de sa considération.

(Enclos cinq billets de change, chacun pour vingt livres sterling).[†1]

To WILLIAM CULLENFORD, 12 DECEMBER 1846

Mention in Sotheby's catalogue, June 1911; MS 1 p.; dated Paris, 12 Dec 46.

He hopes to be able to return to London to preside at a dinner of the General Theatrical Fund.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?12 DECEMBER 1846]

Extracts in F, V, ii, 439-40; V, vii, 448*n*. Date: first extract not later than 12 Dec, for Forster to receive it before CD's arrival on 15 Dec (letters took two days), and hardly earlier, since "too late for remedy"; second extract doubtless in the last letter before the visit.

After seeing Leech's illustration: When I first saw it, it was with a horror and agony not to be expressed. Of course I need not tell you, my dear fellow, Warden has no business in the elopement scene. He was never there![†2] In the first hot sweat of this surprise and novelty, I was going to implore the printing of that sheet to be stopped, and the figure taken out of the block. But when I thought of the pain this might give to our kind-hearted Leech; and that what is such a monstrous enormity to me, as never having entered my brain, may not so present itself to others,[†3] I became more composed; though the fact is wonderful to me. No doubt a great number of copies will be printed by the time this reaches you, and therefore I shall take it for granted that it stands as it is. Leech otherwise is very good, and the illustrations altogether are by far the best that have been done for any of the Christmas books. You know how I build up temples in my mind that are not made with hands[†4] (or expressed with pen and ink, I am afraid), and how liable I am to be disappointed in these things. But I really am not disappointed in this case. Quietness and beauty are preserved throughout. Say everything to Mac and Stanny, more than everything! It is a delight to look at these little landscapes of the dear old boy. How gentle and elegant, and yet how manly and vigorous, they are! I have a perfect joy in them.

I shall bring the Brave, though I have no use for him. He'd die if I didn't.

To MRS CHARLES DICKENS, 19 DECEMBER 1846

MS British Museum. Address: À Madame | Madame Charles Dickens | 48 Rue de Courcelles | St. Honoré | Paris.

58 Lincoln's Inn Fields.[†1] Saturday December Nineteenth 1846.

My dearest Kate. I really am bothered to death by this confounded dramatization of the Xmas Book.[†2] They were in a state so horrible at Keeley's yesterday (as perhaps Forster told you when he wrote) that I was obliged to engage to read the book to them this morning. I have just finished. They all cried very much, and seemed honestly moved. It struck me that Mr. Leigh Murray, Miss Daly†3 and Vining[†4] seemed to understand it best. Certainly Miss Daly knew best what she was about, yesterday—to my unbounded amazement. But she is too old for Grace, and not pretty enough. At 8 tonight, we have a Rehearsal with Scenery and band, and everything but dresses. I see no probability of escaping from it before 1 or 2 o'clock in the morning. And I was at the Theatre all day yesterday. Unless I had come to London, I do not think there would have been much hope of the Version being more than just tolerated—even that, doubtful. All the actors bad. All the business frightfully behind-hand. The very words of the book confused in the copying into the densest and most insufferable nonsense. I must exempt, however, from the general badness, both the Keeleys.[†5] I hope they will be very good. I have never seen anything of its kind, better, than the manner in which they played the little supper scene, between Clemency and Britain, yesterday. It was quite perfect, even to me.

The small manager,[†1] Forster, Talfourd, Stanny, and Mac, dine with me at the Piazza to-day, before the Rehearsal. I have already one or two uncommonly good stories of Mac. I reserve them for narration. I have also a dreadful cold, which I would not reserve if I could help it. I can hardly hold up my hand, and fight through from hour to hour, but had serious thoughts just now, of walking off to bed.

Christmas Book published today—23,000 copies already gone!!![†2] Browne's plates for the next Dombey, much better than usual.[†3]

I have seen nobody yet, of course. But I sent Roche up to your mother[†4] this morning, to say I am in town and will come shortly. The reading to the Lyceum people took place here. Forster provided 76 ham sandwiches (purchased in Holborn) of the largest size and newest bread; and when the shapes of the ladies were horribly deformed by the distention of these materials within them, his despatching the 42 uneaten sandwiches to the poor of the neighbourhood: with strict injunctions to Henry to find out very poor women and institute close enquiry into their life, conduct, and behaviour before leaving any sandwiches for them, was sublime.

There is a great thaw here today, and it is raining hard. I hope you have the advantage (if it be one: which I am not sure of) of a similar change in Paris. Of course I start again on Thursday. We are expecting (Roche & I) a letter from the Malle Poste people, to whom we have applied for places. The journey here was long and cold. 24 hours from Paris to Boulogne. Passage not very bad, and made in two hours.

I find I can't write at all, so I had best leave off. I am looking very impatiently for your letter on Monday Morning. I will write again on Monday or Tuesday. Give my best love to Georgy, and kisses to all the dear children. And believe me ever my love. Most affecy. CD.

To MRS CHARLES DICKENS, 21 and 22 DECEMBER 1846

Text from MDGH, I, 166-7.

Piazza Coffee-House, Covent Garden,
Monday, Dec. 21st, 1846.

My Dearest Kate,

In a quiet interval of half an hour before going to dine at Macready's,[†5] I sit down to write you a few words. But I shall reserve my letter for to-morrow's post, in order that you may hear what I hear of the "going" of the play to-night.

Think of my being there on Saturday, with a really frightful cold, and working harder than ever I did at the amateur plays, until two in the morning. There was no supper to be got, either here or anywhere else, after coming out; and I was as hungry and thirsty as need be. The scenery and dresses are very good indeed, and they have spent money on it liberally. The great change from the ball-room to the snowy night is most effective, and both the departure and the return will tell, I think, strongly on an audience.[†1] I have made them very quick and excited in the passionate scenes, and so have infused some appearance of life into those parts of the play. But I can't make a Marion, and Miss [May] is awfully bad.[†2] She is a mere nothing all through. I put Mr. Leigh Murray[†3] into such a state, by making him tear about, that the perspiration ran streaming down his face. They have a great let. I believe every place in the house is taken. Roche is going.

Tuesday Morning.—The play went, as well as I can make out—I hoped to have had Stanny's report of it, but he is ill—with great effect. There was immense enthusiasm at its close, and great uproar and shouting for me.[†4] Forster will go on Wednesday, and write you his account of it. I saw the Keeleys on the stage at eleven o'clock or so, and they were in prodigious spirits and delight.[†5]

To MISS MARION ELY, [21 DECEMBER 1846]†

MS Library of Congress. Date: two days before CD's departure on 23 Dec; wrongly dated 2 Dec 44 in N, I, 648. Address: Miss Ely.

Piazza Coffee House. | Monday Night.

My Dear Miss Ely.

[†a]Coming home late—'home' I say naturally, but it is a ridiculous phrase here—I found your kind note. For my sins, I am engaged tomorrow!—Hopelessly engaged to dine with Ainsworth.[†a]

For my other sins (how many I must have committed!) I am going away next morning early. The sight of your handwriting is always so pleasant to me, that I have some consolation in putting your letter in my pocketbook, as a reminder of many old happy days—and braving the detestability[†1] of the Packet and the Malle Poste on the strength of that talisman. But my main consolation is, that we are coming back in March, and that March is next to February, February to January, and January to December.

[†b]If you can bear a Rehearsal,—God knows you must have a generous enthusiasm in such things. The first I ever saw, filled me with dismay; the second, with weariness.[†b] But they have never disenchanted the Theatre to me, and when I saw you sitting in the Stalls the other night, I felt its captivation, under otherwise uncomfortable circumstances, more than ever.

The Loves I was to bring to Russell Square from Kate and Georgy!—Suppose them enclosed, with many more of mine, to all the house. And ever believe me

Most Cordially Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

My writing-desk is packed up already; and I have no envelope, pen, paper, ink, or sealing-wax.[†2]

To THE COUNTESS OF BLESSINGTON, 22 DECEMBER 1846*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Piazza Coffee House
Tuesday Twenty Second December 1846.

My Dear Lady Blessington.

I came to you the other day to tell you how, much business, coupled with some family matters of a distressing nature, so beset me in my hurried visit that I could not avail myself of that kind offer you made me when we parted.[†3] You were not at home. I was going to write to you yesterday, when I swore I would repeat my visit tomorrow morning, and Either strangle the man at the Gate, or force a way to your presence. This morning comes my servant to my bedside with an awful list of trains and steamboats, and obstinate tides, from which it seems that to be in time at Boulogne for the Malle Poste of Thursday, I must cross tomorrow (instead of next day as I had intended) and leave town at 8 o'Clock in the Morning. Everything is against me in my hurry and turmoil, and away I go again without having set eyes upon you!

But I am coming home for good, please God, in March: and if in the meantime you will think of me as having written you (in intention) scores of letters, you will only do me justice. I should love to see your handwriting at No. 48 Rue de Courcelles, St. Honoré, Paris (Henry Bulwer's old house) and if you would give me my credentials to Eugene Sue,[†1] I would rather have them from your hand than any other.

My love to Count D'Orsay, and the next thing to it to Miss Power and her sister.

Ever My Dear Lady Blessington | Most Heartily Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

The Countess of Blessington.

To FREDERICK DICKENS, [22 DECEMBER 1846]

MS Benoliel Collection. Date: PM 23 Dec 46 (Wednesday). Address: Frederick Dickens Esquire | Commissiariat | Treasury | Whitehall.

Piazza | Tuesday Night

My Dear Fred.

I had not received your note when I saw you tonight.

Mr. Weller had called here, I found when I returned, and left a memorandum on a card, saying he would call again, late. I was later than he, I have no doubt.

It is hardly necessary for me to say that you may depend he never gets any opinion on so delicate a subject from me, and that if he be disposed to play any tricks in this quarter, he will find that there are two parties to any such game.[†2]

In the midst of packing and bustle | Ever affectionately

CD.

To THOMAS MITTON, [22 DECEMBER 1846]*

MS Yale University Library. Date: clearly same day as last. Address: Thomas Mitton Esquire | 23 Southampton Buildings.

Piazza | Tuesday

My Dear Mitton

I find, to my horror, that owing to the state of the tide in Boulogne Harbor, I must leave town tomorrow morning at 8, and I am driven to my wits' end to get my business done. I have only time to say, write to me when you have finally arranged with Alfred about coming to Paris. Sir James Duke will send you some money on account of his rent.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To LORD JEFFREY, 27 DECEMBER 1846

Mention in Jeffrey to CD, 31 Jan 47, Lord Cockburn, Life of Lord Jeffrey, II, 406-8.

Answering Jeffrey's comments on Dombey, and giving some account of his finances.

To JOHN FORSTER, 27 DECEMBER 1846

Text from MDGH, I, 167-9, and extract (aa) from F, VI, ii, 480-1 (wrongly dated "Christmas Day").

48, Rue de Courcelles, Paris,
Sunday Night, Dec. 27th, 1846

My Very Dear Forster,

Amen, amen. Many merry Christmases, many happy new years, unbroken friendship, great accumulation of cheerful recollections, affection on earth, and heaven at last, for all of us.

I enclose you a letter from Jeffrey,[†1] which you may like to read. Bring it back to me[†2] when you come over. I have told him all he wants to know.[†3] Is it not a strange example of the hazards of writing in numbers that a man like him should form his notion of Dombey and Miss Tox on three months' knowledge? I have asked him the same question, and advised him to keep his eye on both of them as time rolls on. ([a]I do not at heart, however, lay much real stress on his opinion, though one is naturally proud of awakening such sincere interest in the breast of an old man who has so long worn the blue and yellow. . . . He certainly did some service in his old criticisms, especially to Crabbe.[†4] And though I don't think so highly of Crabbe as I once did (feeling a dreary want of fancy in his poems), I think he deserved the painstaking and conscientious tracking with which Jeffrey followed him.([a]

We had a cold journey here from Boulogne, but the roads were not very bad. The malle poste, however, now takes the trains at Amiens. We missed it by ten minutes, and had to wait three hours—from twelve o'clock until three, in which interval I drank brandy and water, and slept like a top. It is delightful travelling for its speed, that malle poste, and really for its comfort too. But on this occasion it was not remarkable for the last-named quality. The director of the post at Boulogne told me a lamentable story of his son at Paris being ill, and implored me to bring him on. The Brave doubted the representations altogether, but I couldn't find it in my heart to say no; so we brought the director, bodkinwise, and being a large man, in a great number of greatcoats, he crushed us dismally until we got to the railroad. For two passengers (and it never carries more) it is capital. For three, excruciating.

Write to Poole[†1] what you have said to me. You need write no more. He is full of vicious fancies and wrong suspicions, even of Hardwick,[†2] and I would rather he heard it from you than from me, whom he is not likely to love much in his heart. I doubt it may be but a rusty instrument for want of use, the Pooleish[†1] heart.

My most important present news is that I am going to take a jorum of hot rum and egg in bed immediately, and to cover myself up with all the blankets in the house. Love from all. I have a sensation in my head, as if it were "on edge". It is still very cold here, but the snow had disappeared on my return, both here and on the road, except within ten miles or so of Boulogne.

Ever affectionately
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To CHARLES SHERIDAN, 29 DECEMBER 1846

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

48 Rue de Courcelles | Tuesday Twenty Ninth December 1846

My Dear Sheridan

If your cold is better (I have had a beastly one, since I came back), I am your man, any afternoon this week except the day after to-morrow,[†3] for stirring up the Parisian Lions. Supposing we sallied forth on some day when you had no dinner-engagement, we might perhaps send Charley home in the Bruffum, and dine tete a tete at the trois freres or the Cafe de Paris, or some such over-praised establishment?

Ever Yours faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

The Wellington Statue seemed to me worse than Punch's wildest exaggeration of it.[†4] I have more news of Wainewright the Murderer.[†5]

To AMÉDÉE PICHOT, 30 DECEMBER 1846*

MS Universiteits-bibliotheek, Amsterdam. Address: À Monsieur: | Monsr. Amédée Pichot | Revue Britannique | 1 Rue Grange Bateliere | Paris.

48 Rue de Courcelles. | Wednesday Thirtieth December | 1846.

My Dear Sir

Allow me to thank you, very heartily, for your kind note, and the books with which it was accompanied. I glanced over some pages of the Christmas Stories before going to bed last night, and had great pleasure in seeing them so skilfully and conscientiously rendered into French.[†1]

I am going to shut myself up as closely as I can (but I can never seal my doors hermetically) for about a fortnight. When that vigorous fit of writing shall be past and over, I shall hope to have an early opportunity of presenting you to Mrs. Dickens and my six live volumes now in private circulation.

Believe me | Dear Sir | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Monsieur Amédée Pichot.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?31 DECEMBER 1846]

Extract in F, VI, ii, 481. Date: Forster calls this "six days later" than the letter which he dated Christmas Day but which is really 27 Dec. He then quotes a letter of "two days later", and "after three days more" an extract of which the third sentence begins "Friday morning" (i.e. 8 Jan), which would point to 2 Jan for the present letter. But difficult to see why CD should delay beginning No. V; To Pichot, 30 Dec suggests an immediate start, and Forster's visit was to begin as soon as the No. was finished, which at one point CD thought might be 13 Jan.

After sitting down to write No. V of Dombey, he found himself most abominably dull and stupid. I have only written a slip, but I hope to get to work in strong earnest to-morrow. It occurred to me on special reflection, that the first chapter should be[†2] with Paul and Florence, and that it should leave a pleasant impression of the little fellow being happy, before the reader is called upon to see him die.

I mean to have a genteel breaking-up at Doctor Blimber's therefore, for the Midsummer vacation; and to show him in a little quiet light (now dawning through the chinks of my mind), which I hope will create an agreeable impression.[†1]

Addendum

To T. J. SERLE, 12 FEBRUARY 1844

Text from Sotheby's catalogue, June 1976; MS 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 12 Feb. 44.

Not having received the promised exposition of the views of our illustrious friends,[†1] I cannot answer the enclosed note. Which, to a man possessed of what the Americans (especially the Pennsylvanians)[†2] call "a moral sense," is distressing.

Volume V

1847 – 1849

1847

January

To THE HON. RICHARD WATSON,[†1] 1 JANUARY 1847

MS Huntington Library.

48 Rue de Courcelles | New Year's Day 1847.

My Dear Watson.

I have had a note from Sheridan[†2] this morning, telling me that he is obliged to go, this afternoon, with Lord Normanby[†3] to the King:[†4] and proposing to change our dinner appointment to tomorrow. As I think it not unlikely that you may be glad of a day's rest, I write this to say that if you have no engagement for tomorrow, I will come to Meurice's[†5] at a quarter to three, and tell you at what hour we propose to dine at the trois freres[†6]—instead of coming today. But in case you should have any other plan for tomorrow, pray let me know this morning, as in that case you and I can still dine together today, and go to the Theatre afterwards.[†7]

I shall remain at home, in case you should send for, or fetch me: being wholly at your disposal, and always

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS HENRY AUSTIN,[†8] 2 JANUARY 1847*

MS Morgan Library.

Paris. | Second January 1847.

My Dear Letitia. Of course I shall be delighted to see you here, and to shew you the Lions to the best of my ability, if you will come.[†9] I took that as being so entirely a matter of course, that I never dreamed of adding anything to the letter I knew Kate had written you.

I was surprised, when I heard of your intended visit, that they had said nothing about it to me in Norton Street.[†1] But as my visits were very rapid and hasty (for I had a world of business to attend to), I supposed they had forgotten it.

Unless the weather should change: which does not seem probable just now: you will feel for the first time in your life, what Cold is, when you come here. Everything that is capable of being frozen, freezes, in every room in the house, as hard as Marble.

When Henry[†2] turns up in any quarter of the world, send him my love.

Always Affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Henry Austin.

To JOHN FORSTER,[†3] [?4 JANUARY 1847]

Extract in F, VI, ii, 481. Date: three days before letter of 7-8 Jan, according to Forster, though his comments are not quite consistent.

I am working very slowly. You will see in the first two or three lines of the enclosed first subject,[†4] with what idea I am ploughing along. It is difficult; but a new way of doing it, it strikes me, and likely to be pretty.[†5]

To JOHN FORSTER, [EARLY JANUARY 1847]

Extracts in F, V, vii, 449. Date: c. 5 Jan; according to Forster, on CD's return to Paris, he had "frequent reports" of progress with Dombey No. V; he gives the extracts in a single paragraph, but it seems unlikely that they were all from one letter.

It would be miserable to have to work while you were here. Still, I make such sudden starts, and am so possessed of what I am going to do, that the fear may prove to be quite groundless, and if any alteration would trouble you, let the 13th stand at all hazards.[†6] The cold was so intense, and the price of fuel was so enormous, that though the house was not half warmed (as you'll say, when you feel it) it cost him very nearly a pound a day. Begging-letter writers had found out Monsieur Dickens, le romancier célèbre, and waylaid him at the door and in the street as numerously as in London: their distinguishing peculiarity being that they were nearly all of them Chevaliers de la Garde Impériale de sa Majesté Napoléon le Grand, and that their letters bore immense seals as large as five shilling pieces. On 31 December he had visited the Morgue and seen an old man with a grey head lying there.[†1] It seemed the strangest thing in the world that it should have been necessary to take any trouble to stop such a feeble, spent, exhausted morsel of life. It was just dusk when I went in; the place was empty; and he lay there, all alone, like an impersonation of the wintry eighteen hundred and forty-six. . . . I find I am getting inimitable, so I'll stop.[†2]

To CHARLES SHERIDAN, 7 JANUARY 1847

MS Comtesse de Suzannet.

At the Parisian Phenomenon (Rue de Courcelles)
Thursday Night, Seventh January | 1847.

My Dear Sheridan. I am heartily sorry for the occasion of your postponement,[†3] though glad of the postponement itself. I am slaughtering a young and innocent victim—[†4] and it takes a deal of time.

So much, indeed, that I must postpone now, until a week or more is past, and No. 5 is on its way to the shores of Albion—if you ever heard of that uncommon locality. Meantime Charley considers us (I see it plainly) a pair of humbugs, and broods darkly over his wrongs.[†5]

I think of demanding my passport, in consequence of the immense extent to which the French nation makes a water-closet of my wall. If the British Lion were bred for this, he had better have been born a jackall[†6] or hyæna, and then he might at least have got an honest livelihood out of it.[†7]

Ever Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Sheridan Esquire.

To JOHN FORSTER, [7-8 JANUARY 1847]

Extract in F, VI, ii, 481. Date: three days after letter of 4 Jan, according to Forster; apparently written during Thursday and Friday; Fri was 8 Jan.

I see that the "good old Times" are again at issue with the inimitable B. Another touch of a blunt razor on B.'s nervous system.[†1]—Friday morning. Inimitable very mouldy and dull. Hardly able to work. Dreamed of Timeses all night.[†2] Disposed to go to New Zealand[†3] and start a magazine.

To JOHN FORSTER, [10-11 JANUARY 1847]

Extract in F, V, vii, 449-50. Date: Forster left home on 15 Jan and, since the date was settled on which he was to come (see To Forster, early Jan), this letter can hardly have been written sooner than the 10th or later than the 11th.

I have written[†4] to the Hôtel des Bains at Boulogne to send on to Calais and take your place in the malle-poste.[†5] . . . Of course you know that you'll be assailed with frightful shouts all along the two lines of ropes from all the touters in Boulogne, and of course you'll pass on like the princess who went up the mountain after the talking bird;[†6] but don't forget quietly to single out the Hôtel des Bains commissionnaire. The following circumstances will then occur. My experience is more recent than yours, and I will throw them into a dramatic form. You are filtered into the little office, where there are some soldiers; and a gentleman with a black beard and a pen and ink sitting behind a counter. Barbe Noire (to the lord of L.I.F.).[†1] Monsieur, votre passeport. Monsieur. Monsieur, le voici! Barbe Noire. Où allez-vous, monsieur? Monsieur. Monsieur, je vais à Paris. Barbe Noire. Quand allez-vous partir, monsieur? Monsieur. Monsieur, je vais partir aujourd'hui. Avec la malle-poste. Barbe Noire. C'est bien. (To Gendarme.) Laissez sortir monsieur! Gendarme. Par ici, monsieur, s'il vous plait. Le gendarme ouvert une très petite porte. Monsieur se trouve subitement entouré de tous les gamins, agents, commissionnaires, porteurs, et polissons, en général, de Boulogne, qui s'élancent sur lui, en poussant des cris épouvantables. Monsieur est, pour le moment, tout-à-fait effrayé, et bouleversé. Mais monsieur reprend ses forces et dit, de haute voix: "Le Commissionnaire de l'Hôtel des Bains!" Un petit homme (s'avançant rapidement, et en souriant doucement). Me voici, monsieur. Monsieur Fors Tair, n'est-ce pas? . . . Alors. . . . Alors monsieur se promène à l'Hôtel des Bains, où monsieur trouvera qu'un petit salon particulier, en haut, est déjà préparé pour sa réception, et que son dîner est déjà commandé, aux soins du brave Courier, à midi et demi. . . . Monsieur mangera son dîner près du feu, avec beaucoup de plaisir, et il boirera de vin rouge à la santé de Monsieur de Boze, et sa famille intéressante et aimable. La malle-poste arrivera au bureau de la poste aux lettres à deux heures ou peut-être un peu plus tard. Mais monsieur chargera le commissionnaire d'y l'accompagner de bonne heure, car c'est beaucoup mieux de l'attendre que de la perdre. La malle-poste arrivé, monsieur s'assiéra, aussi confortablement qu'il le peut, et il y restera jusqu'à son arrivé au bureau de la poste aux lettres à Paris. Parceque, le convoi (train) n'est pas l'affaire de monsieur, qui continuera s'asseoir dans la malle-poste, sur le chemin de fer,[†2] et après le chemin de fer, jusqu'il se trouve à la basse-cour du bureau de la poste aux lettres à Paris, où il trouvera une voiture qui a été dépêché de la Rue de Courcelles, quarante-huit. Mais monsieur aura la bonté d'observer—Si le convoi arriverait à Amiens après le départ du convoi à minuit, il faudra y rester jusqu'à l'arrivé d'un autre convoi à trois heures moins un quart. En attendant, monsieur peut rester au buffet (refreshment room), où l'on peut toujours trouver un bon feu, et du café chaud, et des très bonnes choses à boire et à manger, pendant toute la nuit.—Est-ce que monsieur comprend parfaitement toutes ces règles pour sa guidance?—Vive le Roi des Français! Roi de la nation la plus grande, et la plus noble, et la plus extraordinairement merveilleuse, du monde! A bas des Anglais!

CHARLES DICKENS,
Français naturalisé, et Citoyen de Paris.[†3]

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS,[†1] 12 JANUARY 1847

MS Morgan Library.

48 Rue de Courcelles, Paris. | Twelfth January 1847.

My Dear Miss Coutts. I have been casting about, in reference to the blind machine.[†2] No way of recommending it occurs to me at this moment, or has yet presented itself, but I will not forget it, if I can find one, depend upon me. Do you know there are many inventions for the same purpose already in use?

I am very glad you have seen Mr. Chesterton.[†3] He may be implicitly relied upon. His experience is as great as any man's alive, on such subjects,[†4] and his humanity and good sense are equal to it.[†5] I know nothing of him but what is good.

Do you know, I question the laying down of that rule though, which he recommends, in reference to those who have contracted habits of intoxication?[†6] I more than question it, and shall venture to make a great stand with him and you for no such principle being established. Remind him, or Mr. Tracey,[†7] when you see them both, that it would exclude such a case as "Wilton's".[†8] And I believe that girl was, of all others, exactly the object for such an Institution as yours. It would be very difficult indeed to know what should be called habits of intoxication. No poor creature is likely to be ever in the place, at any time, of whose previous life intoxication has not been a continual incident. From all modes of existence that are precarious, miserable, degrading, and suggestive of self-reproach—but most especially from theirs—drunkenness, to a greater or less extent, is well nigh inseparable.

As to there being no hope of drunkards, we mustn't start from that point. If we can't find hope ready-made (but I believe we can) we must try to make it. I am not friendly to total abstinence societies, nor have I ever promoted one, but I do not doubt that they have set this question at rest, and have demonstrated the possibility.

I would make the decision between trying, or rejecting, dependant[†1] in every case of which Chesterton and Tracey gave us any knowledge, on the woman herself, and her apparent earnestness, and the best judgment that could be formed from what she said. The Saviour laid down no rules that kept the wretched at a distance from Him; and a noble effort like this should be, in that respect I think, as accessible and free.[†2]

The Schools of which I spoke to you are at Limehouse. They were established through the exertions of the Chairman of the Board of Guardians, Mr. G. F. Young[†3] of that place—a shipowner who acquired the character of a prodigious bore, in Parliament, by speaking immediately before every Division, great or small, to the anguish and horror of all parties; but he is a worthy man, and you will think so, if he accompany you over these schools. He lives close to the church, at the corner of Church Row; and I enclose a note of introduction to him in case you should care to use it.

Let me thank you my dear Miss Coutts for Toby's[†4] magnificent cake,[†5] and for that best of wishes (for it includes all other good ones) that you send him in your letter to me. He will present himself in Stratton Street, with a Kings College paper[†6] for you to sign, a day or two before the end of the Month. I have arranged that he shall board at Dr. Major's[†7] in Bloomsbury Square—coming home from Saturday to Monday when we return to England.

I feel it is a kind of common honesty to say, that from some of the public opinions and proceedings of the Bishop of London,[†8] I must strongly dissent—holding them to be ungenerous and inconsiderate towards the multitude who work hard for their bread[†9]—and by no means conceived in the true Spirit of Christianity. But I desire to say this to you—not to him—and I will willingly call on him when I come back: trusting in the unlikelihood of such questions arising out of any conversation between us.[†1]

Charley, and his brothers and sisters, and his Mama join with me in cordial remembrances and fervent wishes, seasonable and unseasonable. And I am, as Ever,

Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

NP.[†2] I would make an appointment with Mr. Young, to make sure of his being there.

To GEORGE F. YOUNG, 12 JANUARY 1847

Mention in last.

To JOHN FORSTER, [13 JANUARY 1847]

Summary and extract in F, VI, ii, 481. Date: 13 Jan according to Forster.

A very brief letter saying that he had worked so hard the day before (Tues 12 Jan), and so incessantly, night as well as morning, that he had breakfasted and lain in bed till midday. I hope I have been very successful.

To FRANÇOIS REGNIER,[†3] 17 JANUARY 1847

MS Comédie Française.

48 Rue de Courcelles. | Dimanche 17 Janvier 1847

Mon cher Monsieur

M. Forster et moi, nous viendrons chez vous, demain, apres quatre heures. Quand nous esperons d'avoir le plaisir de vous trouver à la maison.

Je suis très faché que je n'ai pas eu le plaisir de vous voir aujourdhui

Croyez moi, cher Monsieur | Toujours votre tout devoué

CHARLES DICKENS

A Monsieur Regnier

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 18 JANUARY 1847

MS Morgan Library. Address: Angleterre. Affranchie | Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street | Piccadilly | London.

Paris, 48 Rue de Courcelles | Eighteenth January 1847

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I cannot help sending you a hasty note to explain what must appear rather an extraordinary omission on my part.—I should have thanked you for the print of Sir Francis Burdett,[†1] but that it did not get to the Piazza Coffee House[†2] until I had left, and I had not the least idea of your having sent it to me, until I heard so from a friend last Saturday, who had received it from the Hotel, together with some letters and papers. Let me thank you for it now, and assure you sincerely, that I shall value it highly, and shall place it, on my return, in that work-room which I hope you and Mrs. Brown will see, one of these days, after all.

I have had a long letter from Mr. Chesterton, full of interest and earnestness in reference to the project. He tells me of having brought Tracey to you on the previous day.

Charley expects to leave here, this day fortnight. His movements depend on the gentleman[†3] who is to bring him over, but they are not likely to be longer delayed.

Between ourselves—Paul is dead.[†4] He died on Friday night about 10 o'Clock; and as I had no hope of getting to sleep afterwards, I went out, and walked about Paris until breakfast-time next morning.

Always most Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To MRS FILLONNEAU,[†5] 18 JANUARY 1847

Text from D, I (1905), 205-6.

48, Rue de Courcelles. | Eighteenth January, 1847

My Dear Mrs. F.

I send you, on the other side, the tremendous document which will make you for ninety years (I hope) a beautiful Punchmaker in more senses than one.

I shall be delighted to dine with you on Thursday. Mr. Forster says amen. Commend me to your Lord, and believe me (with respectful compliments to Lord Chesterfield)[†1] always

Faithfully yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. F.

TO MAKE THREE PINTS OF PUNCH[†2]

Peel into a very strong common basin (which may be broken, in case of accident, without damage to the owner's peace or pocket) the rinds of three lemons, cut very thin, and with as little as possible of the white coating between the peel and the fruit, attached. Add a double-handfull of lump sugar (good measure), a pint of good old rum, and a large wine-glass full of brandy—if it be not a large claret glass, say two. Set this on fire, by filling a warm silver spoon with the spirit, lighting the contents at a wax taper, and pouring them gently in. Let it burn three or four minutes at least, stirring it from time to time. Then extinguish it by covering the basin with a tray, which will immediately put out the flame. Then squeeze in the juice of the three lemons, and add a quart of boiling water. Stir the whole well, cover it up for five minutes, and stir again.

At this crisis (having skimmed off the lemon pips with a spoon) you may taste. If not sweet enough, add sugar to your liking, but observe that it will be a little sweeter presently. Pour the whole into a jug, tie a leather or coarse cloth over the top, so as to exclude the air completely, and stand it in a hot oven ten minutes, or on a hot stove one quarter of an hour. Keep it until it comes to table in a warm place near the fire, but not too hot. If it be intended to stand three or four hours, take half the lemon-peel out, or it will acquire a bitter taste.

The same punch allowed to grow cool by degrees, and then iced, is delicious. It requires less sugar when made for this purpose. If you wish to produce it bright, strain it into bottles through [silk].[†3]

These proportions and directions will, of course, apply to any quantity.

To EMILE DE LA RUE,[†1] 22 JANUARY 1847

MS Berg Collection. Address: Affranchie. Italie | À Monsieur | Monsr. Emile De la Rue | Messrs. De la Rue freres | Genes | Italie.

48 Rue de Courcelles, Paris. | Twenty Second January 1847

My Dear De la Rue

Of course you think I am a forgetful vagabond. But I am not. A hundred occupations and distractions have combined to prevent my writing to anyone—and a parcel designed for Madame De la Rue has entered into the conspiracy, and never come here from England.[†2] But Forster, who is here now, and returns home tomorrow week, will send me another parcel immediately on his arrival,—and before I dispatch it I will write you a long letter, containing all the news I can think of.

You will be glad, I know, to hear in the meanwhile that the Battle of Life has beaten all the other Christmas Books out of the field[†3]: and that Dombey is doing wonders. You run away at Railroad speed (and more than Railroad speed) in estimating its profits;[†4] but I will set you right in that long epistle I am going to perpetrate.

Give my love to Madame De la Rue, and tell her I have become an accomplished Frenchman. And entreat her never to suppose when I am tardy in my correspondence, that I am unmindful of my friends. It would be difficult to do me a greater injustice.

To William[†5] and all remembering friends—Consuls,[†6] Butlers,[†7] Gibbses,[†8] and the rest—give my regards. Expect a letter of such tremendous length as shall make your hair stand on end!

Ever Cordially Yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

Monsieur De la Rue.

To THE HON. MRS RICHARD WATSON,[†1] 25 JANUARY 1847

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Address: Favored by Mr. Watson. | The Hon. Mrs. Watson.

Paris, 48 Rue de Courcelles | Twenty Fifth January 1847

My Dear Mrs. Watson. I cannot allow your wandering Lord[†2] to return to your—I suppose "arms" is not improper?—arms, then, without thanking you in half a dozen words, for your letter, and assuring you that I had great interest and pleasure in its receipt, and that I say Amen to all you say of our happy past and hopeful future. There is a picture of Lausanne—St. Bernard—the tavern by the little Lake between Lausanne and Vevay,[†3] which is kept by that drunken dog whom Haldimand believes to be so sober—and of many other such scenes, within doors and without—that rises up to my mind very often, and in the quiet pleasure of its aspect rather daunts me as compared with the reality of a striving[†4] life; but please God we will have some more pleasant days, and go up some more mountains—somewhere—and [†a]have some more readings—of something—and[†a] laugh together—at somebody—and form the same delightful little circle again—somehow.

I quite agree with you about the Illustrations to the little Christmas Book.[†5] [†b]Except Stanfield's, they all shocked me, more or less.[†b] I was delighted with yours.[†6] Your good Lord before-mentioned will inform you that it hangs up over my chair in the drawing room here; and when you come to England (after I have seen you again in Lausanne) I will shew it you in my little Study at home, quietly thanking you on the bookcase. Then we will go and see some of Turner's[†7] recent pictures, and decide that question, to Haldimand's eternal[†8] confusion.

You will find Watson looking wonderfully well, I think. When he was first here, on his way to England, he took an extraordinary bath, in which he was rubbed all over with chemical compounds, and had everything done to him that could be invented for seven francs. It may be the influence of this treatment that I see in his face. But I think it's the prospect of coming back to Elysée.[†9] All I can say is, that when I come that way, and find myself among those friends again, I expect to be perfectly lovely—a kind of Glorious Apollo,[†1] radiant and shining with joy.

Kate and her sister send all kinds of loves in this hasty packet; and I am always, My Dear Mrs. Watson.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To THE COUNTESS OF BLESSINGTON,[†2] 27 JANUARY 1847†

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: Angleterre. | The Countess of Blessington | Gore House | Kensington | London.

48 Rue de Courcelles, Paris | Twenty Seventh[†3] January 1847

My Dear Lady Blessington

I feel very wicked in beginning this note, and deeply remorseful for not having begun and ended it, long ago. But you know how difficult it is to write letters in the midst of a writing life; and as you know too (I hope) how earnestly and affectionately I always think of you, wherever I am, I take heart, on a little consideration, and feel comparatively good again.

Forster has been cramming into the space of a fortnight, every description of impossible and inconsistent occupation in the way of sight-seeing. He has been now at Versailles, now in the Prisons, now at the Opera, now at the Hospital, now at the Conservatoire, and now at the Morgue, with a dreadful insatiability.[†4] [†a]As[†5] I have been at all these places too, and have been whirled out of one into another with breathless speed[†a] I begin to doubt whether I ever had anything to do with a book called Dombey, or ever sat over it, day after day, until I half began, like the Monk in poor Wilkie's[†6] story, to believe it the only reality in life, and to mistake all the realities for short-lived shadows.[†7]

Among the multitude of sights, we saw our pleasant little bud of a friend, Rose Cheri,[†1] play Clarissa Harlowe the other night. I believe she did it in London just now,[†2] and perhaps you may have seen it? A most charming, intelligent, modest, affecting piece of acting it is: with a Death, superior to anything I ever saw on the Stage, or can imagine, except Macready's in Lear.[†3] The Theatres are admirable just now. We saw Gentil Bernard[†4] at the Varietes the other night, acted in a manner that was absolutely perfect. It was a little picture by Watteau—animated and talking—from beginning to end. At the Cirque, there is a new shew-piece called the French Revolution, in which there is a representation of the National Convention, and a series of battles (fought by some five hundred people who look like fifty thousand) that are wonderful in their extraordinary vigor and truth.[†5] The Explosive Cotton[†6] gives its name to a general review, at the Palais Royal, of the Parisian 1846, which is dull enough, saving for the introduction of Alexander Dumas,[†7] sitting in his study beside a pile of quarto Volumes about five feet high which he says form the first tableau of the first act of the first piece to be played on the first night of his new Theatre. The revival of Moliere's Don Juan[†8] at the Francais, has drawn money. It is excellently played, and it is curious to observe how different his Don Juan and valet, are, from our English ideas of the Master and Man. They are playing

— V - 15 —

Victor Hugo's[†1] Lucreece[†2] Borgia again, at the Porte St. Martin; but it is poorly performed, and hangs fire drearily, though a very remarkable and striking play.[†3] We were at his house last Sunday week. A most extraordinary place, looking like an old curiosity shop, or the Property Room of some gloomy vast old Theatre.[†4] I was much struck by Hugo himself, who looks a Genius, as he certainly is, and is very interesting from head to foot. His wife[†5] is a handsome woman with flashing black eyes, [†a]who looks as if she might poison his breakfast any morning when the humour seized her.[†a] There is also a ditto daughter[†6] of fifteen or sixteen, with ditto eyes, [†a]and hardly any drapery above the waist, whom I should suspect of carrying a sharp poignard in her stays, but for her not appearing to wear any.[†a] Sitting among old armour, and old tapestry, and old coffers, and grim old chairs and tables, and old Canopies of state from old palaces, and old golden lions going to play at skittles with ponderous old golden balls, they made a most romantic show, and looked like a chapter out of one of his own books.

[†a]Eugene Sue[†7] is not in Paris, and has relinquished his apartment in the Rue de la Pépinière.[†8] But I have sent Count D'Orsay's letter to him in the country.[†9]

— V - 16 —

The end of March will see me, please God, safely housed in London again, and reporting to you more about him. Let me thank you cordially, my dear Lady Blessington, for the Book of Beauty and the Keepsake.[†1] They flourish on the Drawing Room Table of this extraordinary house[†2] (sixty yards long, by fourteen feet high) and have given me—through your graceful but strong-handed share in them—and in the contributions of one or two others—great pleasure. I have heard whispers of negociations with Bradbury and Evans, which I hope may be brought to bear.[†3] They understand their business, and are honest men. That is saying much, in the land of Colburns and Bentley's.[†4]

Remember me, most heartily, to Count D'Orsay,[†5] and most gently to the Miss Powers.[†6] I have been obliged to do something under the green cover,[†7] this month, which I hope they will not consider cruel. It was to be, and I couldn't help it. What sort of day shall we have, I wonder, for our trip to Rosherville![†8] May would be a good time—don't you think so?

Ever My Dear Lady Blessington | Faithfully Your friend

CHARLES DICKENS

The Countess of Blessington.[†a]

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 27 JANUARY 1847*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Angleterre. Affranchie. | Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street | Piccadilly | London.

Paris, 48 Rue de Courcelles. | Twenty Seventh January 1847.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I trouble you with this very short note, to say that Charley will call on you next Wednesday at One o'Clock.[†9] Perhaps you will have the kindness to give him the enclosed paper to carry to Dr. Major, with your signature attached. The fees I have sent straight to the Doctor.

Charley goes to his house on Wednesday Evening. I will not attempt to tell you how ardently I hope that his career may do honor to your friendship and kindness, or how much I stake on the belief and trust that it will.

Mrs. Dickens begs me to send her cordial regards. Charley is in great spirits at present, and full of great intentions, but I don't know how he may feel when he gets into the Malle Poste that is to take him away from his sisters and all the rest. But it is "only for two months" he says, in allusion to our coming home again; "and they are soon gone".

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To FREDERICK DICKENS,[†1] 28 JANUARY 1847

MS Benoliel Collection.

48 Rue de Courcelles, Paris | Thursday Twenty Eighth January 1847.

My Dear Fred. I am much troubled by the receipt of your letter. Pray read this of mine, attentively, and as dispassionately as you can.

Apart from delicacy of expression, which I do not expect to find in Mr. Weller's letters,[†2] I must say that I have little fault to find with them: and that he has, distinctly, reason on his side. Consider for a moment. You say the letter to you was sent down to you while you were a guest at Mr. Shaw's[†3] house. In the same breath you say that Mr. Shaw has been a worthy seconder of Mr. Weller. Were you not, then, in a very false position when you found yourself in Mr. Shaw's house at all—when you resorted there, week after week, and laid yourself under continual obligations to him—when you presented yourself, uninvited, at the table of a person who had no desire to see you, and was opposing you to your own knowledge? And is not that which Mr. Weller impresses upon you, the plain, uncomfortable, ugly Truth?

Now it seems to me that there is another and a better way of asserting your gentlemanly feeling and self-respect, as against such people, than by rushing into a marriage with which self-respect is almost inconsistent and irreconcileable—for believe me it would be difficult of preservation among the daily and hourly recurring miseries of domestic shabbiness and poverty. Hold no terms with Mr. Shaw, contract no more obligations grudgingly conceded and bragged of by their cost in pounds and shillings afterwards—see Anna by other means, and out of his house, at reasonable intervals—wait—above all, wait—and there will be more true gentlemanly feeling and self respect, two years hence, in saying I Did[†1] wait, than you can ever maintain against the just charge that you did not, though you were prepared to exhibit in your married life such an example of endurance and self denial as was never seen before.

What "reasonable intervals" are, is a question we might easily settle. What they are not, Mr. Weller tells you. Again he has reason on his side.[†2] However disagreeable, it is common sense. When I was in London last, your own father and mother were quite as much alive to the want of common sense and reason in these weekly journies, as Mr. Weller is.—How much of the furniture of a small neat house, do you think they would pay for in two years, Fred?

[†a]When I believed you serious and resolved in regard to Anna Weller, I immediately withdrew all such family objections—so to call them—as I had pointed out to you, and felt that to urge them any longer would be indelicate and ungenerous. But the objection of her age, remains. Nothing but time can alter or remove it. In two years time, she will be very young to be married—unusually young, even then. But let it be then. I will do what I can for you,[†a] then, in the way of starting you in life; I will use my utmost influence with Mr. Weller to arrange all matters of dispute between you, happily. Or, on that understanding, I will even step in now—very much against my will—and endeavour to conclude some friendly and reasonable arrangement which shall recognize your claim to some kind of communication with Anna Weller which does not involve a weekly sojourn some hundred and twenty miles away, in the house of a man who does not desire to receive you; or her giving you the meeting at other houses, where she herself goes on sufferance, and at your solicitation.

[†b]Your life is one of perfect misery, you say. I have no doubt of it, in this scrambling, unsettled, disjointed state of things. But it would be greatly changed, and immeasurably improved, if you would look the prospect before you, steadily in the face—mark out some definite and sensible course of action for such a period as I have named—and abide by it. It is not very difficult to do. It is done by many people, every day—by men older than you, and women (still girls) far older than Anna—for much longer terms.[†b]

And you must balance your present condition, and the improvement you might so effect in it—not against a honeymoon or a wedding-day, but against a drudging life, with butchers, bakers, landlords, tax-gatherers, doctors, and sickbeds, coming round in their turns as regularly as any star in the sky. If it came to a struggle after all, one of you certainly would bear it better two years hence—and both of you, I think.

You persuade yourself that you have considered all these things, deliberately. I know better. There is the strongest evidence to the contrary in every pothook in your letter, and the whole temper of your mind. Take time to consider, or take time until we can talk.[†3]

To THE REV. EDWARD TAGART,[†1] 28 JANUARY 1847

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address (envelope, MS Dickens House): The Reverend Edward Tagart | Porchester Terrace | Bayswater | London.

Paris. 48 Rue de Courcelles. St. Honore | Twenty Eighth January, 1847.

My Dear Sir.

Before you read any more, I wish you would take those tablets out of your drawer, in which you have put a black mark against my name, and erase it neatly. I don't deserve it. On my word, I don't,—though appearances are against me, I unwillingly confess.

I had gone to Geneva, to recover from an uncommon depression of spirits,[†2] consequent on too much sitting over Dombey and the little Christmas Book, when I received your letter as I was going out walking, one sunshiny, windy day. I read it on the banks of the Rhone, where it runs, very blue and swift, between two high green hills, with ranges of snowy mountains filling up the distance. Its cordial and unaffected tone gave me the greatest pleasure—did me a world of good—set me up for the afternoon—and gave me an evening's subject of discourse. For I talked to "them" (that is, Kate and Georgy) about those bright mornings at the Peschiere,[†3] until bed time, and threatened to write you such a letter next day as would—I don't know exactly what it was to do, but it was to be a great letter, expressive of all kinds of pleasant things, and perhaps the most genial letter that ever was written.

From that hour to this, I have again and again and again said "I'll write tomorrow"; and here I am today full of penitence—really sorry and ashamed—and with no excuse but my writing life, which makes me get up and go out, when my morning's work is done, and look at pen and ink no more until I begin again.

Besides which, I have been seeing Paris—wandering into Hospitals, Prisons, Dead-houses, Operas, Theatres, Concert Rooms, Burial-grounds, Palaces, and Wine shops. In my unoccupied fortnight of each month, every description of gaudy and ghastly sight has been passing before me in a rapid Panorama. Before that, I had to come here from Switzerland, over frosty mountains in dense fogs, and through towns with walls and drawbridges, and without population, or anything else in particular but soldiers and mud. I took a flight to London for four days, and went, and came back, over one sheet of snow—sea excepted; and I wish that had been snow too! Then Forster (who is here now, and begs me to send his kindest regards) came to see Paris for himself, and in shewing it to him, away I was borne again like an enchanted Rider. In short, I have had no rest in my play; and on Monday I am going to work again. A fortnight hence, the Play will begin once more; a fortnight after that, the Work will come round; and so the letters that I care for, go unwritten.

Do you care for French news? I hope not, because I don't know any. There is a melodrama called the French Revolution, now playing at the Cirque, in the first act of which there is the most tremendous representation of a people that can well be imagined. There are wonderful battles and so forth in the piece but, there is a power and massiveness in the Mob, which is positively awful. At another Theatre, Clarissa Harlowe is still the rage. There are some things in it, rather calculated to astonish the Ghost of Richardson, but Clarissa is very admirably played, and dies better than the original to my thinking—but Richardson is no great favorite of mine, and never seems to me to take his top-boots off, whatever he does. Several pieces are in course of representation, involving rare portraits of the English.[†1] In one, a servant called "Tom Bob", who wears a particularly English waistcoat, trimmed with gold lace and concealing his ankles, does very good things in deed. In another, a Prime Minister of England who has ruined himself by Railway speculations, hits off some of our national characteristics very happily—frequently making incidental mention of "Vishmingster"—"Re Geenstreet", and other places with which you are well acquainted. "Sir Fakson" is one of the characters in another play—English to the core—and I saw a Lord Mayor of London at one of the small Theatres the other night, looking uncommonly well in a Stage coachman's waistcoat, the order of the garter, and a very low-crowned broad-brimmed hat, not unlike a dustman's.

I was at Geneva at the time of the Revolution.[†2] The moderation and mildness of the successful party were beyond all praise. Their appeals to the people of all parties—printed and pasted on the walls—have no parallel that I know of, in history, for their real, good, sterling christianity, and tendency to promote the happiness of mankind. My sympathy is strongly with the Swiss Radicals. They know what Catholicity is; They see, in some of their own vallies, the poverty, ignorance, misery, and bigotry, it always brings in its train wherever it is triumphant; and they would root it out of their children's way, at any price. I fear the end of the struggle will be that some Catholic Power will step in to crush the dangerously well-educated Republics (very dangerous to such neighbours) but there is a spirit in the people, or I very much mistake them, that will trouble the Jesuits these many years, and shake their altar-steps for them.

This is a poor return (I look down and see the end of the paper) for your letter, but in its cordial spirit of reciprocal friendship it is not so bad a one if you could read it as I do—and it eases my mind, and discharges my conscience. We are coming home, please God, at the end of March. Kate and Georgy send their best regards to you, and their loves to Mrs.[†3] and Miss Tagart,[†4] and the children. Our children wish to live, too, in your children's remembrance. You will be glad, I know, to hear that Dombey is doing wonders, and that the Christmas Book shot far ahead of its predecessors. I hope you will like the last Chapter of No 5. If you can spare me a scrap of your handwriting in token of forgiveness—do. If not, I'll come and beg pardon on the 31st. of March.

Ever Believe me | Cordially and Truly Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Reverend Edward Tagart.

February

To MESSRS COUTTS & CO.,[†1] 3 FEBRUARY 1847*

MS Dickens House.

48 Rue de Courcelles, Paris | Third February 1847.

Gentlemen.

I beg to acknowledge the safe receipt of the Circular Notes.[†2] Uncertain whether business would not render it necessary for me to return to London sooner than I had intended, I have not thought it worth while to write to you for a letter of credit since I left Switzerland. As it is, I shall return home at the end of March. When I know about what sum of money I am likely to require here, I will write to you for a credit on Messrs. Ferrere Laffitte.[†3]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [4 FEBRUARY 1847]

Summary and extract in F, VI, ii, 481. Date: 4 Feb according to Forster, who says he left CD on 2 Feb, "with his writing-table in readiness" for Dombey, No. VI.

Enclosing subjects for illustration,[†4] but saying he was not under weigh yet. Can't begin.

To WILLIAM CULLENFORD,[†5] 5 FEBRUARY 1847*

MS Private.

Paris, 48 Rue de Courcelles. | Fifth February 1847.

Dear Sir

I have been very glad indeed to hear (through Mr. Macready, before receiving your letter) what Chairman you have secured.[†6] A more appropriate one, or one more likely to do service to the fund, and good service too, in the public recognition of it, could not, I am certain, have been found.

I am delighted to say (and I hope the Committee will not be uninterested to hear) that I shall be able, please God, to attend the Dinner this year. I have arranged so to leave here, as to be in London and at home again on the 27th. of March, and I beg you not only to insert my name in the list of Vice Presidents, but to keep a seat and a toast for me,—to both of which I will do as much honor as my cordial interest in the Meeting and its objects can muster.

Dear Sir | Very Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

William Cullenford Esquire

To FREDERICK DICKENS, 5 FEBRUARY 1847

MS Benoliel Collection.

48 Rue de Courcelles | Friday Night Fifth February | 1847.

My Dear Fred.

The kindest thing I can say, in reply to what you say about income and so forth, in your letter received today, is that it is all folly. No one knows better than you (except myself, in my own conscience) that there is not a successful man in the world who attaches less importance to the possession of money, or less disparagement to the want of it, than I do.

I stated to father, Mr. Weller's points and power in this matter. One of them is, that you are not now in a position to incur the hazard of having to support a young family. Not all the fuming in the world can deprive him of that reasonable ground of objection. It is one that might be urged against you, if you were a younger son of the Duke of Bedford[†1] & therefore is not very personal.

I stated this, among other facts, to shew that you cannot defy Mr. Weller, and that you must, if this engagement is to proceed, conciliate him. Moreover, that your Intended must conciliate him too, and not ride high horses.

How do you think I could write to Mr. Weller, when I have no more idea than the Emperor of China has, where he lives or is to be addressed?[†2] How can you wildly and unreasonably suppose that there is the faintest, dimmest, ghostliest, film of an idea expressed in your answer to my long letter, implying that you had the least expectation or desire that I should write to him at all?

Further—how can I take this matter up, like a man, and with any hope of coming to any rational conclusion, unless I know what you want—what part of your own wishes you are prepared to yield to his—what promises you are content to make him—what assurances you have to give him—what the thing is to be brought to—definitely what you want of him, and what is to be wrested from him if possible. I swear as it stands I have no understanding of the facts, at all. The only fact of which I am clear, is that I can't understand your letters.

I would have written, certainly, if I had known where to write, and had known you wished me to write. But I do not regard the delay as at all to be regretted, for I have no doubt it will do him good. I know him to be a perfectly unreasonable and wrong-headed man,[†1] even in his management of any shade of a reasonable and right-headed idea; and if you would take my advice, you would leave him alone altogether, until I come home next month. He won't mind me at this distance half so much as if I were in Devonshire Terrace.

Your letter to Mr. Shaw was as rambling and wide of the mark, as your letters to me. There was a plain inconsistency in his, on which you might have challenged him, in a calm and gentlemanly manner, and at a great advantage, to tell you what he meant. He said, first of all, that you were not to come to his house, because you had told his sister in law, not to correspond with her parents. On the same side of paper, he said he did not believe you had told her. Upon which you should have asked him, whether he decided against you without hearing a word you had to say, because he did believe it, or because he didn't? And in either case whether he thought his proceeding one that would bear to be referred, with his other question, to me—and whether he was content to refer it to me as it stood.

I am not at all clear that it was well to send his other letter back, unopened. Apart from that being the last affront almost, that can be put upon anybody, you don't know what was inside, and the chances are that, coming from such a man, it might (discreetly used) have done you good, and could have done you no harm. But it is gone back; and now I want to know, supposing I write to Mr. Weller opening the business, and he writes back, what is to be brought about? Not your going to Mr. Shaw's again, is it?

Affectionately always

CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [7 FEBRUARY 1847]

Extracts in F, VI, ii, 481-2. Date: 7 Feb, his birthday, according to Forster.

Could not begin before Thursday last,[†2] and find it very difficult indeed to fall into the new vein of the story. I see no hope of finishing before the 16th at the earliest, in which case the steam will have to be put on for this short month. But it can't be helped. Perhaps I shall get a rush of inspiration. . . . I will send the chapters as I write them, and you must not wait, of course, for me to read the end in type. To transfer to Florence, instantly, all the previous interest, is what I am aiming at.[†3] For that, all sorts of other points must be thrown aside in this number. . . . We are going to dine again at the Embassy[†4] to-day—with a very ill will on my part. All well. I hope when I write next I shall report myself in better cue. . . . I have had a tremendous outpouring from Jeffrey about the last part, which he thinks the best thing past, present, or to come.[†1]

To JOHN FORSTER, [10 FEBRUARY 1847]

Extract in F, VI, ii, 482. Date: three days after letter of 7 Feb, according to Forster.

I have taken the most prodigious pains with it;[†2] the difficulty, immediately after Paul's death, being very great. May you like it! My head aches over it now (I write at one o'clock in the morning), and I am strange to it. . . . I think I shall manage Dombey's second wife (introduced by the Major), and the beginning of that business in his present state of mind, very naturally and well.[†3] . . . Paul's death has amazed Paris. All sorts of people are open-mouthed with admiration. . . . When I have done, I'll write you such a letter! Don't cut me short in your letters just now, because I'm working hard. . . . I'll make up. . . . Snow—snow—snow—a foot thick.

To LORD ALBERT CONYNGHAM,[†4] 10 FEBRUARY 1847

MS Widener Collection, Harvard.

Rue de Courcelles | Tenth February 1847.

Dear Lord Albert Conyngham.

At two o'Clock tomorrow morning, I dare not. It would play the very Devil-in-a-masked-ball[†1] with my tomorrow's occupation; and that, like todays, is Dombey and Son. I am always a prisoner, more or less, at this time of the month; and this month—the shortest in the year—is a wicked imposition.

I had not forgotten our engagement, and had put down Saturday, when I could have managed it very well. But I shall now consider it off—releasing you for tonight's ball, which pray see instead—and hoping that we may find some other reason for going somewhere, some-day.

Many thanks for your kind note.

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Lord Albert Conyngham.

To LORD ALBERT CONYNGHAM, 12 FEBRUARY 1847

MS Harvard College Library.

48 Rue de Courcelles. | Twelfth February 1847.

Address: The | Lord Albert Conyngham.

Dear Lord Albert Conyngham

I am afraid I am not to see a masked ball, just now. There are a host of printed documents coming to me on Sunday Morning, I learn, connected with a project[†2] in which I have a great and very valuable interest,[†3] which will require to be looked over with as cool a head as may be, and sent back to England by Sunday's post. I expected to have received them yesterday, but they are delayed; and my opportunity of considering them being so abridged, I have no business to be up and out, half the previous night.

On Tuesday, or Wednesday, I shall be as free as I could wish. I purpose endeavouring to find you at home then, and substituting some other French Lion, if you will consent, that may secure to me the pleasure of your company.

Have you seen De la Roche's[†1] fresco yet? If not, let me play the Showman. Or have you seen the French Revolution at the Cirque? Or the Blind men in the Palais Royal who act Vaudevilles?[†2] I think we may strike out something—not as good as a masked ball, but odd enough.

Believe me | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Lord Albert Conyngham.

To FREDERICK DICKENS, 12 FEBRUARY 1847

MS John Rylands Library.

Paris. 48 Rue de Courcelles. | Friday Night, Twelfth February | 1847.

My Dear Fred.

I am desperately busy. In reference to your question concerning Mr. Shaw, I would say that all imperfect reconciliations are bad things,—that a reconciliation in any case, but especially in such a case as this, should be complete, if it take place at all—and that I would not advise you to suffer what has passed, to make any alteration in your acceptances or refusals of his offered courtesies.

I have no doubt that you have been very ill used—but all in wild and dreary-headed giddiness—a sort of intoxication on gruel which is peculiar to the family—and its[†3] past and over.

Loves from all. So arrange your proceedings in future, as to have no secrets from Mr. W. That seems to be the sorest of his itching points.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?12 FEBRUARY 1847]

Extract in F, V, vii, 452*n*. Date: 12 Feb according to Forster, but it may have been earlier since he also wrongly says that it was CD's "first letter" after Forster's "return" from Paris (see To Forster, 4 Feb).

Do you remember my writing a letter to the prefet of police about that coachman? I heard no more about it until this very day, when, at the moment of your letter arriving, Roche[†4] put his head in at the door (I was busy writing in the Baronial drawing-room) and said, "Here is datter 'cocher'!"—Sir, he had been in prison ever since! and being released this morning, was sent by the police to pay back the franc and a half, and to beg pardon, and to get a certificate that he had done so, or he could not go on the stand again! Isn't this admirable?

But the culminating point of the story (it could happen with nobody but me) is that he WAS DRUNK WHEN HE CAME!! Not very, but his eye was fixed, and he swayed in his sabots, and smelt of wine, and told Roche incoherently that he wouldn't have done it (committed the offence, that is) if the people hadn't made him. He seemed to be troubled with a phantasmagorial belief that all Paris had gathered round us that night in the Rue St. Honoré, and urged him on with frantic shouts. . . . Snow, frost, and cold. . . . The Duke of Bordeaux is very well, and dines at the Tuileries[†1] to-morrow. . . . When I have done, I will write you a brilliant letter. . . . Loves from all. . . . Your blue and golden bed looks desolate.

To DOUGLAS JERROLD,[†2] 14 FEBRUARY 1847

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

48 Rue de Courcelles | Sunday Night | February Fourteenth 1847.

My Dear Jerrold.

I will only say of the Christmas matter[†3] that never was there a more innocent victim than I—but byegones are ever byegones with me (or I try to make them so) unless they are of a pleasant complexion; and so, as you say, let that pass.

We are delighted with your intention of coming to Paris.[†4] I will give you a programme of our proceedings, with dates and so forth, that you may make your arrangements accordingly, and tell me, when you have quite decided, how they suit you.

The fifteenth of March is on a Monday. Now you can't cross to Boulogne on a Sunday, unless in summer-time; and I would recommend you to come over on the Saturday—the fourteenth.[†5]

That's the first step. Tell me you will resolve to do so, and I will get on with my work, so that I may be in readiness for you here.

The Railroad from Abbeville hither, finished sometime, is announced to open on the 1st. of March.[†1] I think there is no probability of its opening being postponed. This would leave you only sixty miles of Diligence from Boulogne to Abbeville, which you could perform easily (there are plenty of coaches) on the same Saturday, and either come on by railroad that night, or on Sunday. There is really no other direction to give but this. All I want, is, your exact description of what you mean to do, that the Brave and I may be on the look-out for you at the right time. In the event of the railroad not opening, then I ought to take you a place in Saturday's Malle Poste from Boulogne at least a fortnight before. But I don't think, as I have said, there is any fear of failure in that respect.

You understand? Good. Take the time before you by the throat my boy—make arrangements to crush it, à la Ainsworth[†2]—hurge the hartists hon—and write to me as soon as you can. We purpose leaving here on the 25th. You ought not to have a shorter stay than from the 14th. to that day. We will take three days for the journey home (arranging together, how we will go, and by what places) and arrange to be in London on Saturday Night the 27th. Voila tout—as we say.[†3]

If there is no more soot in the soup, since your last, I shall be glad, as becometh me, to enlist myself among the Museum-ites.[†4] If you will give in my adhesion, I shall be happy to send an order for the necessary mineralogical specimen, on knowing what it should be, and to whom paid.

I am rejoiced to hear of the success of your paper.[†5] I received it on the day of its enlargement, but not for a long time before, and not since. Thereby, Tadpole's[†6] politics (for Heaven's sake bring them in your waistcoat pocket) are "unbeknown" to me. Mr. Boursicault[†7]—I beg his pardon—you know he's a Viscount?[†8]—is one of a school that I utterly detest, abominate, and abjure,[†9] as you do, and as young attornies on their admission do the Pope. Shall I ever forget Vestris in London Assurance[†1] bursting out into certain praises (they always elicited three rounds) of a—of a country morning I think it was! The atrocity was prepetrated, I remember, on a Lawn before a Villa. It was led up to by flowerpots. The thing was as like any honest sympathy or honest English as the rosepink on a Sweep's face on May Day, is to a beautiful complexion, but Harley generally appeared touched to the soul, and a man in the pit always cried out "Beau-ti-ful!"

I am somehow reminded of a good story I heard the other night from a man who was a witness of it, and an actor in it. At a certain German town, last Autumn, there was a tremendous furore about Jenny Lind, who, after driving the whole place mad left it, on her travels, early one morning.[†2] The moment her carriage was outside the gates, a party of rampant Students who had escorted it, rushed back to the Inn, demanded to be shewn her bedroom, swept like a whirlwind up stairs into the room indicated to them, tore up the sheets, and wore them in strips as decorations. An hour or two afterwards a bald old gentleman of amiable appearance—an Englishman—who was staying in the hotel—came to breakfast at the table d'hote, and was observed to be much disturbed in his mind and to shew great terror whenever a Student came near him. At last he said, in a low voice, to some who were near him at the table, "You are English, Gentlemen, I observe. Most extraordinary people these Germans! Students as a body, raving mad gentlemen!"—"Oh no," said somebody else, "excitable, but very good fellows, and very sensible". "By God Sir", returned the old Gentleman, still more disturbed, "then there's something political in it, and I am a marked man. I went out for a little walk this morning after shaving, and while I was gone"—he fell into a terrible perspiration as he told it—"they burst into my bedroom, tore up my sheets, and are now patrolling the town in all directions with bits of 'em in their button-holes!" I needn't wind up by adding that they had gone to the wrong chamber.[†3]

The Marchioness[†4]—it is too true—sends her kindest regards. So does Mrs. Dickens. Could you bring Mrs. Rodwell[†5] with you, do you think? or have you passion too?

Ever Heartily Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Douglas Jerrold Esquire.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 15 FEBRUARY 1847

Mention in N, II, 16.

To JOHN FORSTER, 17 FEBRUARY 1847

Extract in F, v, vii, 453*n*.

Paris: Wednesday, 17th February, 1847.

I am horrified to find that the first chapter makes at least two pages less than I had supposed,[†1] and I have a terrible apprehension that there will not be copy enough for the number![†2] As it could not possibly come out short, and as there would be no greater possibility of sending to me, in this short month, to supply what may be wanted, I decide—after the first burst of nervousness is gone—to follow this letter by Diligence to-morrow morning. The malle poste is full for days and days. I shall hope to be with you some time on Friday.

To MRS CHARLES DICKENS, [20 FEBRUARY 1847]

MS British Museum. Address: France | À Madame | Madame Dickens | 48 Rue de Courcelles | St. Honoré | Paris PM: 20 Feb 47.

Piazza Coffee House, London. | Saturday afternoon

My Dearest Kate.

I crossed from Boulogne yesterday at half-past eleven—a frightful sea running nearly as bad as the Atlantic. Everybody was ill. I, worse than on our American Voyage.[†3] I never knew anything like the sickness and misery of it. And besides that, I really was alarmed; the waves ran so very high, and the fast boat, going at that speed through the water, shipped such enormous volumes of it. It had blown a gale over night. All Boulogne turned out to see "the Princess Clementina" get over the bar; and I dare say it was much prettier from the shore than from the water.

I made some Edinburgh friends[†4] in the Diligence, and we were very pleasant. I had also the good luck to catch the express train at Folkestone, which brought us up in two hours and twenty minutes. I found Forster waiting for me. We dine (with Charley) at Hampstead today. And he (Charley) dines with us (I found him already engaged there) at Gore House[†5] tomorrow. He is here now—looks very well and very happy—sends all sorts of loves—and talks incessantly.

I shall be obliged to leave Folkestone on Tuesday at 3. By consequence I have no help for it but to sleep that night at Boulogne. I have engaged with the people at the Inn there, to take me a place in Wednesday's Malle Poste, if it can be got. If not, in the Wednesday's Diligence (Caillard & Co.'s) that leaves Boulogne at 11 in the forenoon.

B and E's accounts had just reached Forster. They are exactly what I supposed, and will leave me, thank God, £2000[†1] clear, to put away.[†2] C and H's have not arrived yet.

Best loves (in which Forster joins) to Georgy and the children. I am horribly bilious and queer, and not at all right in any respect. Two pages of the No. to do, as I supposed. No news. Ever affectionately CD.

March

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH,
[28 FEBRUARY OR 1 MARCH 1847][†3*]

MS Huntington Library. Address: France | Miss Hogarth | 48 Rue de Courçelles | St. Honoré | Paris. Date: PM 1 Mar 47.

My Dearest Georgy. I have only time to add[†4] a very few words, but I hope to be more interesting next time. Will you remember to ascertain about the clock,[†5] and how much a dashing article would be? Will you also tell Simpson[†6] that I shall be obliged to him if he will buy me a pair of those prints (he knows what I mean) framed, and another pair (the same) not framed.[†7] You will pay the bill. They[†8] had better pack all four, at the shop, in a little case or box for travelling. Ask him to secure the best impressions.

Good bye.[†9] | Loves to all the Darlings
Ever Sincerely affectionately
CD.

I still hope to come over for you when I have done the No.[†10] I hope we shall get into some lodgings tomorrow night.[†11]

To MARY DICKENS,[†1] 4 MARCH 1847

Text from MDGH, I, 176-7.

Victoria Hotel, Euston Square, | Thursday, March 4th, 1847.

My dearest Mamey,

I have not got much to say, and that's the truth; but I cannot let this letter go into the post without wishing you many many happy returns of your birthday,[†2] and sending my love to Auntey and to Katey, and to all of them. We were at Mrs. Macready's last night, where there was a little party in honour of Mr. Macready's[†3] birthday. We had some dancing, and they wished very much that you and Katey had been there; so did I and your mamma. We have not got back to Devonshire Terrace yet, but are living at an hotel until Sir James Duke[†4] returns from Scotland, which will be on Saturday or Monday. I hope when he comes home and finds us here he will go out of Devonshire Terrace, and let us get it ready for you. Roche is coming back to you very soon. He will leave here on Saturday morning. He says he hopes you will have a very happy birthday, and he means to drink your health on the road to Paris.

Always your affectionate
[PAPA][†5]

To AUGUSTUS TRACEY, 8 MARCH 1847*

MS University of Texas.

1 Chester Place, Regents Park | Monday Morning March Eighth 1847.

My Dear Tracey.

We have been brought home suddenly (that is to say Mrs. Dickens and I—for Miss Hogarth and the children are still in Paris) by the illness of our dear Charley, who was taken with the Scarlet Fever at King's College, and removed to his grandmother's where he is now, thank God, recovering. His mother being in the way in which &c &c, the Doctors will not allow her to see him, for fear of contagion: and lest I should take contagion to her, they will not allow me to see him either.

As there seems no prospect of our getting our tenant out of Devonshire Terrace before Midsummer at the earliest, we have taken this house. Orders have been despatched to Cramers'[†6] the Music Sellers, to bring a van (not the Van)[†7] to Tothill Fields tomorrow, for a prisoner of the name of P. Forte, whose body this is your warrant and authority to release from confinement. I suppose the aforesaid criminal is not much altered by the endurance of his punishment; hard labor not having been included in his sentence?

I shall hope to see you very soon. Meanwhile with best regards from Mrs. Dickens to yourself and your bright boy,[†1] in which I heartily join—and with respectful compliments from Timber[†2] who is more ridiculous than ever,

Believe me always My Dear Tracey | Very Cordially Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, [9 MARCH 1847]

Text from MDGH, I, 177.

Chester Place | Tuesday Night

My Dearest Georgy, . . .

So far from having "got through my agonies," as you benevolently hope, I have not yet begun them. No, on this ninth of the month I have not yet written a single slip. What could I do; house-hunting at first, and beleaguered all day to-day and yesterday by furniture that must be altered, and things that must be put away? My wretchedness, just now, is inconceivable. Tell Anne,[†3] by-the-bye (not with reference to my wretchedness, but in connection with the arrangements generally), that I can't get on at all without her.

If Kate has not mentioned it, get Katey and Mamey to write and send a letter to Charley; of course not hinting at our being here.[†4] He wants to hear from them.

Poor little Hall[†5] is dead, as you will have seen, I dare say, in the paper. This house is very cheerful on the drawing-room floor and above, looking into the park on one side and Albany Street on the other. Forster is mild. Maclise, exceedingly bald on the crown of his head. Roche has just come in to know if he may "blow datter light." [†a]Love to all the darlings. Regards to everybody else. Love to yourself.[†a]

Ever affectionately
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To H. K. BROWNE,[†6] 10 MARCH 1847

MS Dickens House.

1 Chester Place, Regents Park. Tenth March 1847.

My Dear Browne. I can't get into my own house, having come home before my time; and am living here, until my Devonshire Terrace tenant performs that perfectly unintelligible ceremony which is called, in the vulgar, walking his chalks.[†1]

The occasion of my coming home, makes me very late with my number, which I have only begun this morning.[†2] Otherwise you should have been "fed" sooner. My eldest boy's illness will excuse me, I hope.

The first subject[†3] which I am now going to give, is very important to the book. I should like to see your sketch of it, if possible.[†4]

I should premise that I want to make the Major, who is the incarnation of selfishness and small revenge, a kind of comic Mephistophelean[†5] power in the book; and the No. begins with the departure of Mr Dombey and the Major on that trip for change of air and scene, which is prepared for in the last Number. They go to Leamington, where you and I were once.[†6] In the Library, the Major introduces Mr. Dombey to a certain lady, whom, as I wish to foreshadow, dimly, said Dombey may come to marry in due season. She is about thirty—not a day more—handsome, though haughty-looking—good figure—well dressed—showy—and desirable. Quite a lady in appearance, with something of a proud indifference about her, suggestive of a spark of the Devil within. Was married young. Husband dead. Goes about with an old mother who rouges, and who lives upon the reputation of a diamond necklace and her family.—Wants a husband. Flies at none but high game, and couldn't marry anybody not rich—Mother affects cordiality and heart, and is the essence of sordid calculation—Mother usually shoved about in a Bath chair by a Page who has rather outgrown and out-shoved his strength, and who butts at it behind, like a Ram, while his mistress steers herself languidly by a handle in front—Nothing the matter with her to prevent her walking, only was once sketched (when a Beauty) reclining in a Barouche, and having outlived the beauty and the barouche too, still holds on to the attitude, as becoming her uncommonly. Mother is in this machine, in the Sketch. Daughter has a parasol.

The Major presents them to Mr. Dombey, gloating within himself over what may come of it, and over the discomfiture of Miss Tox. Mr. Dombey (in deep mourning) bows solemnly. Daughter bends. The Native in attendance, bearing a camp-stool and the Major's great coat. Native evidently afraid of the Major and his thick cane. If you like it better, the scene may be in the street or in a green lane.[†7] But a great deal will come of it: and I want the Major to express that, as much as possible in his apoplectico-Mephistophelean observation of the scene, and in his share in it.

Lettering.[†1]

Major Bagstock is delighted to have that opportunity.[†2]

To [WILLIAM] PHILLIPS,[†3] 11 MARCH 1847*

MS Private.

1 Chester Place, Regents Park | Eleventh March 1847

Dear Sir.

I beg to say that I have taken this house until Sir James Duke's term in Devonshire Terrace shall have expired.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Samuel Phillips Esquire

To H. K. BROWNE, 15 MARCH 1847

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Address: Immediate | Hablot. K. Browne Esquire | 3 Furnivals Inn | Holborn

1 Chester Place | Monday Night Fifteenth March 1847.

My Dear Browne. The sketch is admirable—the women quite perfect.[†4] [†a]I cannot tell you how much I like the younger one.[†a] There are one or two points, however, which I must ask you to alter. They are capital in themselves, and I speak solely for the Story.

First—I grieve to write it—that Native—who is so prodigiously good as he is—must be in European Costume.[†5] He may wear ear-rings, and look outlandish, and be dark brown, but his fashion must be of Moses, Mosesy—I don't mean old testament Moses, but him of the Minories.[†6]

Secondly, if you can make the Major older, and with a larger face—do.

That's all.[†1] Never mind the Pump Room now, unless you have found the Sketch, as we may have that another time. I shall propoge[†2] to you, a Trip to Leamington together.[†3] We might go one day and return the next.

I wish you had been at poor Hall's funeral,—and I am sure they would have been glad. They seem to have had a delicacy in asking anyone not of the family, lest it should be disagreeable. I went myself, only after communicating with Chapman, and telling him that I wished to pay that last mark of respect, if it did not interfere with their arrangements. He lies in the Highgate Cemetery, which is beautiful. He had a good little wife, if ever a man had;[†4] and their accounts of her tending of him at the last, are deeply affecting. Is it not a curious coincidence, remembering our connexion afterwards, that I bought the Magazine in which the first thing I ever wrote was published—from poor Hall's hands?[†5]—I have been thinking all day of that, and of that time when the Queen went into the City,[†6] and we drank Claret (it was in their earlier days) in the Counting-house. You remember?

Charley, thank God, better and better every hour. Don't mind sending me the Second Sketch. It is so late. Ever Faithfully my dear Browne—CD.

To THE SECRETARY, KING'S COLLEGE SCHOOL,[†7] LONDON [MID-MARCH 1847]

Summary in MS Minutes of the School Council, King's College, London, for the meeting of 26 Mar. Date: Presumably CD wrote within about two weeks before the Council meeting.

Requesting that the fees paid for his son's education in the school for the next term should be returned on the ground of ill-health.[†8]

To W. HARRISON AINSWORTH, 18 MARCH 1847*

Text from transcript by owner of MS, Mr E. J. Collings, Dickens Collection, I, Percy Fitzgerald Dickens Library, Eastgate Museum, Rochester.

1 Chester Place | Eighteenth March 1847

My Dear Ainsworth,

I write in the grip of Dombey. I am late through Charley and moving.

Mrs. Hooton[†1] I take it for granted has made her application to the L.F.?[†2] I need not say to you that I will zealously back it, or that I will give my mite cheerfully to your kind subscription.

Though if I were on a Jury [or] a Commission de lunatico, I would find poor Hooton capable of managing his own and Bentley's affairs on your evidence! I have rarely heard of anything more sane & broadly benevolent than his design.[†3]

I have no Parisian wrinkle for you unless it be an earnest entreaty to you to go to the School of Painting at the Palais des Beaux Arts across the river—seize the concierge by the throat & demand to see a fresco by Paul de la Roche which I believe to be the greatest work of art in the world.[†4]

Come back soon & let us be jovial

Ever yours heartily
CHARLES DICKENS

To PERCY BOYD,[†1] 18 MARCH 1847

MS Dickens House.[†2] Address: Percy Boyd Esquire | 30 South Frederick Street | Dublin.

Devonshire Terrace, London | Eighteenth March 1847.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Percy Boyd, and begs to thank him, with sincere cordiality, for his most obliging and welcome note, and the flattering tribute sent with it.

Mr. Percy Boyd will acquit Mr. Dickens of any negligence (he hopes) in replying to so esteemed a favor, when he mentions that he has been abroad for nearly a year, and is only just now returned to England, and an immense arrear of correspondence.

Mr. Dickens begs to reciprocate Mr. Boyd's kind wishes, and to assure him of his friendly consideration.

To R. J. LANE,[†3] 18 MARCH 1847*

MS Sir John Nicholson.

1 Chester Place. | Eighteenth March 1847.

My Dear Sir.

I am your near neighbour,[†4] I find, until I can get into my own house.

This is a tardy return of many thanks for your pleasant book,[†5] which is full of good spirits—and water[†6]—and which I have read with very great pleasure.

But I have not had it long (having been in Switzerland these many months and the false Forster having forgotten to tell me of it, until I made a run, like a Mad Dog, from Paris hither months ago); and in that kindness of heart which is engendered in your nature, and promoted by wet sheets,[†7] you will, I hope, give me the benefit of the old proverb.[†8]

How is the man who knows, and enquires after, the other man in the broad walk?[†9] My heart yearns towards him. Though there is yet enough of it left to be always

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard J. Lane Esquire.

To VISCOUNT MORPETH,[†1] [?20 MARCH 1847]

Mention in To Austin, 26 Apr. Date: probably soon after Lord Morpeth introduced his Public Health Bill, 18 Mar 47.

To THOMAS BEARD,[†2] 22 MARCH 1847

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Place | Edgeware Road.

1 Chester Place, Regents Park | Twenty Second March 1847.

My Dear Beard

John Henry Barrow[†3] (Esquire, of the Honourable Society of Gray's Inn Barrister at Law) dines here next Sunday at half past five for a quarter to Six. Will you come and meet the little man?

Here's weather! All the Savage (I am sure in some former state of existence I was a slap-up Chief: a little Buffalo or a Great Bear or something of that sort) stirs within me, and impels me to go and look out for cottages on banks of Thameses. Well, I say nothing; but if you don't get your rights this year, I'll never believe in myself any more.[†4]

I understand you have got for a leader writer at the Herald, a Jew of the name of Phillips,[†5] who wrote (but he little thinks I know it) the attacks on me in the Times,[†6]—and volunteered them, I am told, in return for old acts of good nature on my part.[†7] I have a mighty mind to break down the anonymous, resolutely and fiercely, in that kind of stabbing,—and if I do nail up the said Phillips by name on the cover of Dombey,[†8] I'll be damned if it shall be easy to take him down again.*

Ever Heartily

CD.

*This between ourselves

To S. BENDIXON,[†1] 22 MARCH 1847*

MS Yale University Library.

1 Chester Place, Regents Park | Twenty Second March 1847.

Sir.

I beg you to excuse my not having written to you sooner, in reference to the visit you did me the honor to make me some days ago. There is a certain part of every month when I cannot make appointments or prevent an accumulation of correspondence: otherwise I should have acknowledged your politeness without delay.

I am exceedingly unwilling that you should have the trouble of bringing your drawing[†2] here. I will therefore, with your permission, do myself the pleasure of calling on you, to look at it, on Thursday Morning next, at Twelve o'Clock.

I am Sir | Your faithful Servant

CHARLES DICKENS

S. Bendixen[†3] Esquire

To HENRY COLE,[†4] 22 MARCH 1847*

MS Morgan Library.

1 Chester Place, Regents Park | Twenty Second March 1847

My Dear Sir

Under ordinary circumstances I should have answered your kind note (as I trust you will believe) immediately on its receipt. But I have been in a state of continual oscillation between London and Paris, and so much pressed besides by various matters requiring close attention and the devotion of much time, that I hope you will excuse this tardy reply to an esteemed favor.†5

If Thursday next, at One o'clock will suit you for that journey of discovery you so pleasantly propose (as I shall take for granted it will, unless I hear from you to the contrary) I will do myself the pleasure of calling on you at that time.

Believe me | My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Henry Cole Esquire

To EMILE DE LA RUE, 24 MARCH 1847†

MS Berg Collection. Envelope with final paragraph and ending written on inside, MS Miss Gladys Storey. Address: Italy. Paid. | À Monsieur: | Monsr. Emile De La Rue | Messrs. De La Rue Freres | Genes | Italie. PM 25 Mar 47.

1 Chester Place, Regents Park, London. | Twenty Fourth March 1847.

My Dear De la Rue.

You will have been amazed, long ago, to receive five Nos. of Dombey and the Battle of Life in the Virgin's†1 Directing, without a word from me. Behold the explanation, and shed tears for the suspicions you have entertained in the meanwhile.

At the end of February—that is, in the last week—I suddenly discovered in Paris, to my horror, that the current No. was two pages short. I instantly started to England post haste, to supply what was wanted, and remained in London three or four days. On the day before I left, Charley (then at school at King's College) was with me. On the very day I went away, he was seized with Scarlet Fever. On the day after my arrival in Paris, I received the intelligence, and started off again for England, with his mother. For a fortnight afterwards, we didn't know what to do for a house: our own tenant not going out until July. I couldn't begin my No. for April until I was settled somewhere: and the moment we got housed here, I fell into a dream of work, from which I only awoke last night!

Charley, thank God, has got quite well again, and is now going out of town. We have not seen him, for his mother is going to be confined very early in May (I thought it was a false alarm when you asked me at Vevay, but it turned out to be the real original Fire Bell), and the Doctors were afraid of infection. He has been lying all this time at his Grandmother's in the next street. Forster and Elliotson removed him there from School, wrapped up in blankets, when the Fever was crimson on him. The children, servants, and Virgin, have remained in Paris (which they leave tomorrow) and you may imagine the confusion in which we have been plunged.

It is unquestionably true that at the time when Miss Gaberel[†2] said that, I was[†3] thinking more than usual about you,[†4] and had been mentioning her case to Forster, and had been saying how distressed I was, at not having written to you, yet how immensly[†5] difficult I found it, with my work, and the correspondence I must get through, to sit down and do so—my natural tendency always being to lie on the sofa and take a book, or get up and go out. It is very extraordinary, but no doubt wholly and entirely true. It is impossible to account for such things. One can do no more than know that they are.

You write of one man imitating the Inimitable! By Heaven they all do—to an extent that is perfectly inconceivable! I cannot take up a Magazine or story book of any kind, but I see the most palpable and blundering imitation of myself over and over and over again—coupled, very likely, with some disparagement of myself by the same hand.[†1] I believe there never was anything like it in Literature. Meantime thank God, Dombey is, out of all question, the most popular book, in the best sense of the word, I have ever written. And I assure you, I take enormous pains with it. Your visual ray, my dear friend, is a visionary ray, I am inclined to believe, on the subject of profits. You don't consider how many profits—of the paper-maker, printer, wholesale bookseller, retail bookseller, binder, and what not—have to be made before the total comes to me at all. I'll tell you how that stands. I have three fourths of the profits. The Sale is now about three and thirty thousand every month. The three fourths of the profits, about £400 per Number.[†2] When the book is finished, and published in one Volume, there may be some £15,00[†3] perhaps to add to that.

Have you seen anything of the enclosed?[†4] I believe it is the greatest venture—indeed I have no doubt of it—ever made in books. If it should succeed (it must be an immense sale, to succeed sweepingly) I hope to get a great deal of money out of the idea.

Well! About Paris! I am charmed with the place, and have a much greater respect for the French people than I had before. The general appreciation of, and respect for, Art,[†5] in its broadest and most universal sense, in Paris, is one of the finest national signs I know. They are 'specially intelligent people: and though there still lingers among them an odd mixture of refinement and coarseness, I believe them to be, in many high and great respects, the first people in the universe. Of all the literary men I saw, I liked Victor Hugo best. Half my time, I worked. Half my time, I played. If you would like to hear the French language spoken in its purity, you'd better come to London and enquire for me.

Tell Madame De la Rue with my hearty love, that the piece called Irene ou le Magnetisme,[†6] in which Rose Cheri is making a great sensation in Paris now, is charmingly written, and wonderfully well played by her. I was quite fascinated by it, and delighted Scribe by bringing it over to Elliotson.[†7] The story is beautiful. The whole idea most touchingly and elegantly worked out.

Tell me also, how I can best send Dombey regularly from here. Tell me also whether you will be glad to see me if I come to Italy en garçon (as I am already swearing I will, with God's permission) next year, when I shall have finished Dombey.[†8] Tell Madame that the Thompsons[†9] are not happy, and that he screws and pinches her (I don't mean with his fingers) villainously, I am told, in respect of common comforts. My brother Fred is transported to madness with love of Mrs. Thompson's sister. And from him, and from her mother, I hear odd stories, which I pretend to doubt, but don't very much.

Maclise is painting a great picture of the Sacrifice by Noah,[†1] after the retirement of the Waters. He took the subject because he couldn't put in more than eight people[†2] (his tendency always is to cram in, hundreds): there being no more, at that time, in the world. But I believe he has made it up in Beasts. He gives me to understand that he is "faded", and says he is seasick of the world in general.

This is the day which our wise legislators have appointed for a general fast.[†3] There is a very general opinion that Lord John should have stoutly resisted any such absurdity, and that the yielding to it, was weak and timorous. Though they are my friends (or supposed to be) I despise them for such [†a]rot.

However, I won't leave off in a bad humour—I still continue to eat but little. But that little I enjoy—Your Examiner I will resume next Monday—Remember me kindly to William,[†4] and all enquiring friends: including poor Brown—[†5] I magnetized a man at Lausanne among unbelievers, and stretched him on the dining room floor—[†6]

Ever My Dear De la Rue | Heartily

The Inimitable

B[†a]

To W. C. BENNETT,[†7] 25 MARCH 1847*

MS Yale University Library.

London Twenty Fifth March 1847.

Mr. Charles Dickens (who is newly returned home from abroad) presents his compliments to Mr. Bennett, and begs to thank him for his very obliging note of the 20th. of last month. Mr. Dickens has read its enclosures[†1] with great interest and pleasure.

To SIR ALEXANDER DUFF GORDON,[†2] 25 MARCH 1847*

MS Professor Philip McM. Pittman.

1 Chester Place Regents Park | Twenty Fifth March 1847.

My Dear Gordon.

You suppose me—perhaps—an amiable man—oscillating continually between London and Paris—never in the receipt of your kind note until now—writing my regrets with a good grace and face—&c &c &c.

No such thing. I received your letter instantly—put it in my dressing gown pocket—smote my forehead—went on with Dombey—and forgot all about it.[†3]

That's the plain truth. I had been brought home in a great hurry by my eldest boy's illness; had been driven about from post to pillar, in search of a house until my own tenant takes his departure at the end of July; had begun my work unusually late; fell into my month's dream, the day before I got your letter; and only woke yesterday.

Here is Forster saying why didn't I at least tell him about it—and using threatening language![†4] I shall come down and make my peace with Lady Gordon[†5] straightway: and in the meantime, to the end that the stones in Queen Square[†6] Westminster may not rise when I do come, I send you this.

Being always | Very faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Sir Alexander Duff Gordon.

To THE REV. F. W. H. LAYTON,[†1] 25 MARCH 1847*

MS Mr George H. E. Layton.

Regents Park | Twenty Fifth March 1847.

Dear Sir

I should have replied to your kind letter long since; but I have been abroad for nearly a year, and am only just now, on my return, in the receipt of it.

As I really do not know what orthodoxy may be, or what it may be supposed to include—a point not exactly settled, I believe, as yet, in the learned or unlearned world—I am not in a condition to say whether I deserve my lax reputation in that wise. But my creed is the creed of Jesus Christ, I believe, and my deepest admiration and respect attend upon his life and teaching, I know.

I am sincerely gratified and affected by your communication. Such things are very welcome to me—are a great reward to me—and will never make me more unworthy, or less desirous in my own heart not to betray such trust as I hold, than I was when they were written.

I thank you truly. And I am Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

The Reverend Frederick W. H. Layton

To MRS CHARLES WILSON,[†2] 25 MARCH 1847

MS Mrs R. A. Rendall. Address: Mrs Wilson. | Wavertree | near | Liverpool.

London Twenty Fifth March 1847.

Respected Madam.

I have read your letter with the pleasure and interest which a communication so frank and agreeable could scarcely fail to awaken in any breast.

Let me assure you, in reply, that I have a great respect for the exertions of Father Matthew[†3] and the advocates of Temperance in general, and that I believe them to have been productive of unspeakable good amongst Drunkards. But I do not—because I cannot, with such perceptions as I have of what is reasonable and what is unreasonable—go along with those excellent persons in confounding the use of anything with its abuse or in denying any man the cheerful enjoyment of a glass of wine, or beer, or spirits and water, because his neighbour is prone to make a Beast of himself by irrational excess in those things. I know nothing whatever allowed us for use and capable of abuse (as everything without us and within us is) that might not be denied to moderate people, and made a sinful enjoyment, on the same terms.

I have no doubt whatever that the warm stuff in the jug at Bob Cratchit's Christmas dinner, had a very pleasant effect on the simple party.[†1] I am certain that if I had been at Mr. Fezziwig's ball,[†2] I should have taken a little Negus—and possibly not a little beer—and been none the worse for it, in heart or head. I am very sure that the working people of this country have not too many household enjoyments; and I could not, in my fancy, or in actual deed, deprive them of this one when it is innocently shared. Neither do I see why I should deny it to myself.

Dear Madam, there are two sides to this question. If I were so disposed, I could shew, I believe, where and how the proscription of the use of these refreshments, leads to their abuse in a very striking manner. But I would endeavour, in my poor way, to teach people to use such goods of life, cheerfully and thankfully, and not to abuse them. I am not sure but that this is the higher lesson, and that the principle will last the longer in the better[†3] ages of the World.

At any rate there will be the record of a certain Marriage Feast in Galilee,[†4] and of a certain supper where a cup was filled with Wine and not with water, to bear it company.[†5]

May you ever be as happy as you are now, and may I never have a less sincere and truthful correspondent![†6]

Madam | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Wilson.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, [27 MARCH 1847]*

MS Morgan Library. Date: CD had been at Chester Place from 8 March; the news of Miss Coutts's donation was recorded by Macready on the 28th as below.

1 Chester Place | Saturday Night

My Dear Miss Coutts

I have this moment come back from fetching my children and sister in law home[†1]—and find your kind note. I will call tomorrow at halfpast Two.

Many thanks for your donation to the General Theatrical Fund.[†2]

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To WILLIAM JERDAN,[†3] 30 MARCH 1847*

Facsimile, Library of Congress Quarterly Journal, XXVII (1970), 308.

1 Chester Place. | Thirtieth March 1847.

My Dear Jerdan[†4]

Many thanks for the enclosed. His spirit shines through him in all he does.[†5] It is the most single-hearted, innocent, captivating letter I have ever read in my life.[†6]

Always Cordially Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To DR FORBES WINSLOW,[†7] 30 MARCH 1847*

Text from transcript by Mr Walter Dexter.

London | March 30 1847

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Dr. Forbes Winslow, and begs to thank him for the very singular and curious document he has had the goodness to enclose.[†8]

To DANIEL MACLISE,[†1] [30 MARCH 1847]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: the day after the Theatrical Fund Dinner, of 29 Mar, at which Macready was Chairman.

Chester Place | Tuesday.

My Dear Mac

You know what a queer fellow Macready is, in some things; and as he was again—at that dinner yesterday—expressing himself to me as being hurt that you were not there,[†2] and had taken no notice of the request to support him, let me suggest it would be well if you wrote him a line, saying that you would have gone, but for your picture.[†3] Without enquiring whether he does well to make this kind of thing so personal to himself when it is a public occasion, one may say, perhaps, that it is not very unreasonable in him to expect some interest and attention from his so-very-intimate friends on a theatrical demonstration.[†4]—We stood in unusual relations towards him when he had a Theatre,[†5] you know: and being on such terms it is a pity that any little carelessness should have ever so slight a sore place in such a man's mind.

I hope you are getting on bravely. We shall meet, of course, at our carnival celebration on Friday.[†6]

Ever affectionately

CD.

To JOSEPH C. KING,[†7] 31 MARCH 1847

Extract in Parke-Bernet Galleries catalogue No. 1787; MS 3 pp.; dated Chester Place, 31 Mar 47.

I removed Charley, as you are aware, to King's College, in compliance with Miss Coutts's wish. She is very much attached to him. . . . When I told Miss Coutts of my intention[†8] the other day, she proposed his going to a certain establishment in Surrey.[†9]

To THE COUNTESS OF LOVELACE,[†1] 31 MARCH 1847*

MS University of Texas.

1 Chester Place Regents Park | Thirty First March 1847.

Mr. Charles Dickens (just now returned home from abroad, and residing at this temporary address, until his own house is ready for him) presents his compliments to Lady Lovelace, and will feel much obliged if Lady Lovelace will tell him where he had best address a letter to Sir George Crawford,[†2] with whom he desires to communicate in reference to an old Servant[†3] of Sir George's in whom he has an interest.

To MR SEWELL,[†4] 31 MARCH 1847

Mention in N, II, 21.

April

To F. CRICHTON,[†5] 1 APRIL 1847*

MS Stanford University Library.

Regents Park, London. | First April 1847.

Sir.

I am very happy to receive your letter. It is most welcome and pleasant to me, and I am proud to have awakened so strong an interest in your breast.

Accept my thanks for your tribute of praise, and believe that I set great store by it.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. F. Crichton.

To MISS THOMASINA ROSS,[†6] 1 APRIL 1847

MS Huntington Library.

1 Chester Place, Regents Park. | First April 1847

My Dear Miss Ross

I beg to thank you—from my temporary residence; we can't get into our own house before July—for your kind and welcome remembrance of me. The book of travel in Peru[†7] has given me great pleasure in the perusal; and I assure you, honestly, that I have been very much struck by the ease and clearness of the style. It is as if the book were not a translation, but had been written originally in English, and in thorough good English too.

It would be a heavy blow and great discouragement to me to believe (which I never will) that the Portrait in the Volume on Spanish Literature is like Cervantes.[†1] If I be not mistaken, Cervantes in his introduction to Don Quixote, tells a story of a painter who when he painted a Bull for a sign, wrote under it, to prevent mistakes, "This is a Bull."[†2] I can't help thinking that that very painter, in revenge, must have limned this head, and written under it, "This is Cervantes."

Believe me always | Dear Miss Ross | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Ross.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 2 APRIL 1847*

MS Morgan Library.

1 Chester Place | Friday Second April 1847

My Dear Miss Coutts.

The enclosed from Charley's schoolmaster, in reply to a letter I wrote him proposing Charley's return to his care,[†3] is so very disinterested, sensible, and kind, that I think it will please you, and therefore send it. I would propose his going there, as a weekly boarder, at Midsummer or thereabouts, if you think it well.

I saw Charley on Tuesday, and shall see him again today. He is very much thinner; and his face is, for the time, a good deal changed. But his appetite is prodigious, and he is running about in the fresh air all day. So I hope to see a great improvement in him when I go down to Richmond this Afternoon.

May I ask you whether you received a letter last week from Mr. Macready on the subject of that General Theatrical Fund for which you so kindly sent me Ten Pounds?[†4] I observe an uneasy sense in him of not having received an answer, and a vague idea that he must unwittingly have given you some offence.

I have seen Mr. Chesterton and Mr. Tracey twice. The mistake in the mind of the former, I have set right—in reference, I mean, to the time of beginning—and I hope we shall soon have everything in a forward state of preparation.

Mr. Brown[†1] is going on well, I trust. With best regards to him and his good wife,[†2]

I am always Dear Miss Coutts | Your obliged and faithful

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

Chesterton and Tracey are both very strong in their complaints that Mr. Dunn[†3] was not confided to them. The latter had him in his care twice. He would lead a very different kind of life[†4] in either of those Castles, and a well-merited one.

To THE SECRETARY, KING'S COLLEGE SCHOOL,[†5] 3 APRIL 1847*

MS King's College, London.

1 Chester Place, Regents Park | Third April 1847

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to the Secretary of King's College, and begs to say, that he finds it necessary, in consequence of the state of his son's health, to withdraw him from that Institution. He will not be able, therefore, to avail himself of the advantages of the ensuing term.[†6]

To MISS M.,[†7] 3 APRIL 1847

MS Huntington Library.

Regents Park, London. | Third April 1847

Dear Madam

I am very sorry that I cannot assist you, in the publication of the enclosed translations.[†1] [†a]My own publishers are not disposed to incur the expence of printing them; and I am not in communication with any others.[†a]

You write English extremely well, and your Manuscript stands in need of very little revision. If you will allow me to point out one little Error into which you frequently fall, it is the use of a wrong tense in the verbs. As thus. Instead of "Who did cut with my knife", we should write, in England, "who cut with my knife?"—"The frog that yesterday, in the forest, fetched back my golden ball"—[†2] not has fetched. And so on.

[†a]The tales are charming, to me. I have read Snow Whitey[†3] to my two little girls, with prodigious success. I have six children (four of them boys) and expect to have a seventh child some fine morning in May.[†4] So you see I command a pretty large audience for Fairy Stories.

Unless I am mistaken, some of these tales have been already translated into English. Little Red Cap, under the name of little Red Riding Hood, is a very old English story—a hundred years old, at the least, I should say.[†5] But the cutting open of the Wolf by the Hunter, and the restoration of Little Red Cap to life, which is no part of the English story, seems familiar to me, as if I had read it before.[†a†6] If so, I must have read it in a translation; for I regret to say that I do not understand German.

Let me assure you, in answer to your apologies, that your letter is exceedingly welcome to me, and that I receive it as a very pleasant mark of your frankness and your kind nature. It is so agreeable to me, indeed, that it induces me to break through the rule I generally observe of never replying to a correspondent who writes to me anonymously, as I hold no one justified in adopting that most objectionable and stealthy form of address.

I am Dear Madam | With all good wishes | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss M.

To COUNT D'ORSAY, 5 APRIL 1847

MS Comte de Gramont.

Chester Place | 5 April 1847.

Je vous remercie beaucoup, mon cher ami, de m'avoir envoyé la lettre d'Eugene Sue. Je l'ai lu avec le plus vif interet, et je suis charmé de savoir que j'ai l'honneur d'etre estimé d'un si spirituel auteur et si galant homme.

Votre filleul[†1] se porte à merveille, mais il est diablement feroce. Charley alla a Richmond il-y-a une semaine, pour y reprendre ses pleines forces. Sa maladie est tout à fait passée, graces a Dieu!

Je vais ecrire livraison 8 de Dombey. Ah Mon Dieu! Que les mois s'ecoulent avec une terrible rapidité! L'instant que je me trouve libre, je me trouve encore un forçat lié a la rame. N'importe! Courage Inimitable Boz! Vous l'aimez assez-bien mon Brave, après tout!

Apropos de cela.—Le brave Courier cherche encore un protecteur qui va voyager. Il est, en verité un tresor; je suis desolé de laisser partir un si admirable domestique, mais je n'ai point d'occupation pour un brave Courier, chez-moi, en Angleterre.

Adieu mon cher ami. J'espere que je verrai votre grand tableau de la Reine, a l'exposition de l'Academie Royale.[†2] Dix milles amitiés à milady, et les deux Miss Powers.

Toujours | Votre tout devoué
CHARLES DICKENS

Tandis que je vous ecris je vois par la fenêtre beaucoup de monde que se promènent ce jour de fête dans The Regents Park, avec des pantelons blancs. Oh Ciel, que l'on a froid! Il y a un jeune homme vis à vis de la maison, sur l'instant, qui donne le bras a une petite soubrette de dix huit ans, avec un parasol-repandu (sans un morceau de soleil) dont le nez est rouge, avec le froideur excessif de sa toilette et du printemps de notre climat etincelant.[†3]

To DANIEL MACLISE, [?5 APRIL 1847]*

MS Private. Date: after 8 Mar when CD went to Chester Place; and before 29 Apr when he was considering a house to be taken off Acton Road; probably at the end of Mar or beginning of Apr when he was free for such excursions. Address: Daniel Maclise Esquire | 14 Russell Place.

Chester Place | Monday Morning

My Dear Mac

You were talking of roaming about, today, in quest of bagatelle boards, and the like. If you are in the same mind, still, I am your man. I have nothing to do, but to call on Chesterton about Miss Coutts's Asylum, and afterwards to go to the house we propose to take for it—near Brook Green.[†4] To these two places we can take the carriage, and afterwards dismiss it. I will call on you at 10 minutes past 12.

Ever affectionately
CD.

To MRS DANIEL GASKELL,[†1] 6 APRIL 1847*

MS Dickens House. Address: Mrs Gaskell | Lupset Hall | [†2]Wakefield | Yorkshire.

Regents Park London | Sixth April 1847.

My Dear Madam

I beg to send you a small cheque—I take that form of remittance as the easiest—in aid of the tribute to Mr. Wilderspin.[†3] I wish my contribution to such an object, were larger; but I am so overwhelmed with every description of appeal, that my pocket would hardly keep pace with the public demands upon it, though it were tacked on to a Duke's coronet.

I am happy to have had the pleasure of receiving a note from you, and assure you it required no apology.[†4]

Dear Madam | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Gaskell

Mrs. Dickens begs me to send her kind regards.

To JOHN FORSTER, 9 APRIL 1847

Text from MDGH, 1893, 169.

Friday, Ninth April, 1847.

My dear Forster,

Your messenger didn't wait, or cook, who took the note in, said I wasn't at home—or summat of that sort.

The dinner-hour is six to-morrow. I have only just begun.[†1] I have been trying for three or four days, but really have only just begun. I am particularly anxious not to anticipate in this No. what I design for the next,[†2] and consequently must invent and plan for it.

We got a box from Buckstone[†3] (Stanny, Mac, and I), and went to the Adelphi the night before last. I think that performance of Miss Woolgar's[†4] in "The Flowers of the Forest"[†5] the most remarkable and complete piece of melodrama I have ever seen upon the stage; and indeed I question whether I have ever seen anything better. It perfectly amazed me; it is so admirably considered and made out.

Jeffrey is coming here this afternoon at four. I received a note from him this morning. From what he says, I should infer that they will be off with the sun—or wind—to-morrow,[†6] and that you won't see Empson[†7] therefore if you don't see him to-day.

Deepest of despondency (as usual in commencing Nos.).

Ever affectionately
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To AUGUSTUS TRACEY, 9 APRIL 1847*

MS University of Texas.

1 Chester Place. | Friday Ninth April 1847

My Dear Tracey

Don't forget that our dinner hour tomorrow, is Six o'Clock.

Always Faithfully Yours
The Inimitable B.

To BERNHARD TAUCHNITZ,[†1] 11 APRIL 1847

Extract in Kurt Otto, Der Verlag Bernhard Tauchnitz, 1837-1912, Leipzig, 1912.

Regent's Park, London, April 11th, 1847

Will you allow me to ask you . . . whether I am right in my impression that the agreement between yourself and me has been formed under the law referred to[†2] and is a conclusive reason against entertaining the proposal? . . . I really do not understand the subject and have no hesitation in referring it to you, as I have with reason entire confidence in your honour and integrity.

To T. J. SERLE,[†3] 14 APRIL 1847

MS Berg Collection.

1 Chester Place, Regents Park. | Wednesday Fourteenth April | 1847.

My Dear Serle

I am residing here pro tem: until I can get my own respected tenant out of Devonshire Terrace, at the end of July.

Your proposal in reference to the happy pair[†4] (I hope Forster is not a jackass but appearances are against him) meets with my fullest concurrence. Don't you think it would be well to make that Seven pounds—ten? The difference is not great, and the latter sum has a pleasanter aspect to me.

If you should have any commands for Australia after Dombey is finished, I think of making a little excursion there. I shall come round home by way of China (if you want any chopsticks); desiring to ascertain for myself whether the Inhabitants of that country, really dance with their forefingers going up and down close to their ears—and whether twelve of them look all at once P.S, and then O.P[†1]—and whether they get behind one another in a row, the tallest man last, and a boy in front—as I have seen them represented once or twice in the British Draymer.[†2]

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

T. J. Serle Esquire
P.S. You can think about your commissions. Dombey has twelve months to run.

To MAJOR JOSHUA JEBB,[†3] 15 APRIL 1847*

MS Mr W. A. Foyle.

1 Chester Place | Fifteenth April 1847.

Dear Sir

I am much indebted to you for your kindness, and for the clear and interesting account of the Pentonville Prison[†4] accompanying the order you have been so good as to obtain for me.

At this time of the month I am rather closely engaged. In case it would suit your convenience, I would propose to visit the prison on Monday week the Twenty Sixth, at 2 oClock.[†5] As it would much enhance the interest of the visit, in my regard, to have the advantage of your company there, may I beg the favor, in the event of that day being inconvenient to you, of your telling me what day after that time would suit you best?[†6]

Dear Sir | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Major Jebb.
I certainly should like to have the power of speaking to a Prisoner.

To J. W. CUNNINGHAM, 19 APRIL 1847*

MS King's College, London.

1 Chester Place, Regents Park | Nineteenth April 1847

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Cunningham, and thanking Mr. Cunningham for his obliging letter,[†1] begs to enclose the receipt in question.

To W. C. MACREADY,[†2] 19 APRIL 1847*

MS Morgan Library.

Chester Place. | Monday Night Nineteenth April | 1847.

You will have heard I dare say, my very dear Macready, of yesterday[†3]—and you will have imagined what our anxieties were. Dr. Henry Davis,[†4] whom I fetched wildly—getting hold of Locock[†5] at the same time—told me he had seen but one such case in his experience; and of course my dear Kate suffered terribly. But thank God she is as well today as ever she has been at such a time: as well as anyone can be: and sends all sorts of loves to you.

On Saturday I received from Miss Sturch,[†6] her cheque for £500; and from Miss Macready[†7] yours for £100.[†8] To day I went down to Coutts's, who immediately undertook to do the needful without the least trouble to either of us. They advised the three per cents rather than the three and a quarter[†9]—will buy in, immediately, in our joint names—and write me a letter informing me how much the purchase has realized. They say that the Bank will recognize no trust in such a case. That the money must stand in their books in our names. And that if there be any deed of settlement in reference to it, that is a matter of private arrangement among the parties concerned.

What do you think of this—of having any deed of settlement, I mean? It will be time enough, I presume, to speak of it when you return. Also, shall we give Coutts's a power of attorney to receive the Dividends?[†1] It will cost a Guinea. That, too, can stand over until you come home.

I should have liked few things better than to have come down to you at Birmingham.[†2] Ma, eccomi[†3] Signore, on this Nineteenth night of the month, sitting in my smallest of temporary dens, with one half of the current Number yet to write—with my thoughts so shaken by yesterday, that I cannot fall to work—and yet with such an infinite relish for the story I am mining at, that I don't care twopence for being behindhand,[†4] and hope to make a dash, a plunge, and a finish, with what the people who entice you to play, on the race-courses, call, "a firm heart and a bold resolution, them as don't play can't win, and luck attend the Ryal[†5] Sportsman!"

Here are my two little girls just come in from visiting at your house, open-mouthed with stories of all your children. Here is Georgy begging to be remembered. And here am I, with a sore throat which never occurred to me until this moment.—So I'll go to bed, and leave you alone.[†6]

Ever My Dear friend | Heartily and wholly Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. C. Macready Esquire.

To LORD ROBERTSON,[†7] [?22 APRIL 1847]

Text from Sotheby's catalogue, 13 Dec 1977. Date: 22 Apr was a Thursday; for "convulsions of Dombey", compare To Austin, 26 Apr; CD was able to report Catherine well, after the birth of Sydney.

Chester Place | Thursday

My Dear Robertson

Thank God, heartily well. She sends her love. Don't forget Monday at half past one. I wotes for dinner at Greenwich.

Ever Yours most Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

(In convulsions of Dombey)
Lord Robertson

To HENRY AUSTIN, 26 APRIL 1847*

MS Morgan Library.

Chester Place | Twenty Sixth April 1847.

My Dear Henry.

The moment I came to town—which was very soon after I received your letter—I went off to Lord Morpeth. I couldn't find him, and so wrote him at full length,[†1] setting forth all your qualifications,[†2] and expressing myself in the very strongest terms. I said in conclusion "I don't want you to write, or say, anything to me about this,—but you know what I seek, and I am sure you will do it for me, if you can".

As the Devil would have it, there was a long letter of his to me, gone to Paris, wherein he had besought me at the request of sundry Fashionables, to act with them at the St. James's Theatre tomorrow night.[†3] I had seen the Fashionables in the meanwhile—didn't think the Fashionables at all promising—and had given the Fashionables a cold shoulder. I have not seen him since, and I fancy (otherwise he would have been sure to have been here), that he had told the Fashionables I would certainly do what he had asked me, and that he is, in consequence, what people call "put out". If so, he must put himself in again, as he best can. I only mention the matter to account to you for my not having seen him since my return, and as an assurance to you that I have not been unmindful of your note.

With love to Letitia, believe me always—and at present just recovered from convulsions of Dombey, after which I can never write legibly—

Affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Henry Austin Esquire.

To MRS MACREADY,[†4] 26 APRIL 1847*

MS Morgan Library.

Chester Place | Twenty Sixth April 1847.

My Dear Mrs. Macready.

The amount realized, is £599..2..10.[†5] I enclose you Coutts's letter, to send, if you please, to the Solicitors.

My young 'ooman continues, thank God, to thrive brilliantly, and has come out with an amount of curl on the temples, that stupefies me. I was horribly alarmed last Sunday!—

Love to all the house, from my dear Mrs. Macready

Your faithful friend
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Macready.

To WILLIAM SHAEN,[†1] 26 APRIL 1847†

MS Mr L. C. Staples.

Regents Park | Twenty Sixth April 1847.

My Dear Sir

I fear it will not be in my power to attend the Whittington Soirée[†2] on the Twelfth.[†3] The day happens to be particularly inconvenient to me. But if I should descry any change for the better in the probabilities I will tell Jerrold. Though I see little chance of such an alteration.

Pray excuse my not having written an earlier reply to your note. It reached me at a busy time, when I can write no letters, and I have not a moment's leisure except for the open air.[†4]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

William Shaen Esquire.

To OCTAVIAN BLEWITT,[†1] 27 APRIL 1847*

MS Royal Literary Fund.

Chester Place, Regents Park. | Twenty Seventh April 1847.

My Dear Sir

As I shall be prevented from attending the Anniversary Dinner, I think it well to return you the tickets you have been so good as to send me.[†2]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Octavian Blewitt Esquire

To EDWARD CHAPMAN,[†3] 28 APRIL 1847*

MS Morgan Library.

Chester Place | Twenty Eighth April 1847.

My Dear Sir

There seems to me to be some mistake in the "American Notes" item of the account to Christmas last.—Advertizing, £7..7..8, against Sales to the amount of £9..15..0. Surely this is not correct? Is it?[†4]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Edward Chapman Esquire

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 29 APRIL 1847*

MS Morgan Library.

1 Chester Place. | Twenty Ninth April 1847.

My Dear Miss Coutts

I am going on Saturday Morning, with Mr. Chesterton, to look at a house near Notting Hill,[†1] that we think likely to suit the Institution.[†2] Unless I should hear from you to the contrary, I will call on you that same day with my report, at about One o'Clock.

Mrs. Dickens, I am happy to say, is wonderfully well: and Charley has come home (with very short hair) to his brothers and sisters.

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To C. R. LESLIE,[†3] 29 APRIL 1847*

MS Mr Thomas L. Twidell.

1 Chester Place | Twenty Ninth April 1847.

My Dear Sir

I am much gratified by your kind letter, and have the greatest pleasure in it.

I have no doubt that if we can get the drawing[†4] on the wood, by the end of May, we shall do very well.[†5] I will tell you exactly, when I see you at the Academy on Saturday.[†6] The great advantage of having it in good time, is, that there is then no need to hurry the wood-engraver,[†7] and he has no excuse for doing badly.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

C. R. Leslie Esquire.

To PERCIVAL LEIGH,[†8] 30 APRIL 1847*

Text from typescript, Huntington Library.

1 Chester Place, Regents Park. | Thirtieth April, 1847.

My dear Sir,

I cannot resist the desire I feel, to assure you, in reply to your note, of the sympathy and interest with which I heard of your bereavement and of my hope that God will put it in your heart to be comforted.

Mrs Dickens is very anxious that I should say something very kind to you from her. Believe that we both feel for you, earnestly.

My Dear Sir, | Very faithfully yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Percival Leigh Esquire.

May

To [EDWARD CHAPMAN],[†1] 3 MAY 1847

MS Rosenbach Foundation.

Chester Place | Monday Third May 1847.

My Dear Sir

Here is a young lady—Miss Power, Lady Blessington's niece—has "gone and been", and translated, a story by Georges Sand the French Writer, which she has printed, and got four woodcuts ready engraved for. She wants to get it published—something in the form of the Christmas books—at 3s./6d. I know the story, and it is a very fine one.[†2]

Will you do it for her? There is no other risk than putting a few covers on a few copies. Half profits is what she expects, and no loss. She has made appeal to me; and if there is to be a hard-hearted Ogre in the business at all, I would rather it should be you than I; so I have told her I would make proposals to Your Mightiness.

Answer this, straightway; for I have no doubt the fair translator thinks I am tearing backwards and forwards in a cab, all day, to bring the momentous affair to a conclusion.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

It would be called So and So. "From the French". I wouldn't say more in the title.

To LORD ROBERTSON, 6 MAY 1847

Extract in American Art Association catalogue, Dec 1927; MS 2 pp.; dated Regent's Park, 6 May 47.

In case I should not find you at home when I call with this I write to say how grievous[ly][†3] vexed I am that I engaged myself to dinner on Saturday the fifteenth,[†4] just before the receipt of your note. All sorts of bad dispositions have been impelling me to throw that bidder overboard, on some desperately false pretence, and come to Mr. and Mrs. Pat[†1] (to whom pray present my compliments instead); but Virtue triumphs, and I am sorry for it. Kate is in a brilliant state, and will be delighted to see you before you go away. . . . I should have been to see you before now, but on Monday last I drove down to Chertsey Cottage hunting:[†2] and one of the horses I drove took it into his head (I believe under the impression that I had gone into his stall to steal his corn, which upon my honor I had no intention of doing) to make a sudden attack upon me in the stable, tear my coat sleeve and my shirt sleeve off, and very nearly take the great muscle of my arm with it. As it was, however, he merely struck the arm with his teeth and head, but bruised it so, that I have worn a poultice ever since, and am still invested with that decoration.

To MR & MRS T. N. TALFOURD,[†3] 6 MAY 1847*

MS Berg Collection.

Regents Park | Sixth May 1847.

Mr. Charles Dickens will be happy to have the pleasure of dining with Mr. Serjeant and Mrs. Talfourd on Saturday the Twenty Second of May.

(P.S. Private and confidential. Mr. Charles Dickens feels it remarkably odd to be writing to Russell Square in this polite style.)

To THOMAS CHAPMAN,[†4] 10 MAY 1847

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds. Address: Thomas Chapman Esquire | 14 Montagu Place | Bryanstone Square.

Regents Park | Tenth May 1847.

My Dear Sir

Though I disavow any allegiance to the Railway King—[†5] believing His Majesty to be the Giant Humbug of this time, and not a pleasant illustration of our English Virtues—I shall be delighted to dine with you, whenever and wherever ever you propose. Wherefore I have ticked off Monday the seventh of June, in my Calendar, and hope to appear at Blackwall at Six o'Clock that afternoon.

I have been very unwell these last few days, with a low dull nervousness of a most distressing kind—a rare complaint with me—but I hope I am getting over it, and seem to have a faint consciousness of myself again this morning.[†1]

Mrs. Dickens, who is in a flourishing state, unites with me in best remembrances to Mrs. Chapman, yourself, and the young lady.

Always My Dear Sir | Very Cordially Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Chapman Esquire

To DOUGLAS JERROLD, [10 MAY 1847]

Mention in next.

To W. C. MACREADY, [10 MAY 1847]*

MS Huntington Library. Date: almost certainly Mon 10 May, when he complained of ill-health (see To Chapman, that day); two days before the Soirée of the Whittington Club (see To Shaen, 26 Apr).

Monday Morning

My Dear Macready

I am still queer—was, on getting up, hideously queer—but hope I am turning the corner. The Whittingtonians, however, I feel I must—sorely against my will—avoid; for my speaking nerves are all unstrung. I have written Jerrold to that effect this morning. I will keep at home that night, and see what comes of it.

Ever affectionately
CD.

To C. L. LORDAN,[†2] 13 MAY 1847*

MS Private.

Regents Park | Thirteenth May 1847.

Sir

I beg to assure you, in reply to your note, that I have no objection whatever to your publishing the few words extracted from mine, and printed in the slip you have had the goodness to enclose to me. I only wish they were more likely to do you any service than I can suppose them to be.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

C. L. Lordan Esquire.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 16 MAY 1847

MS Morgan Library. Address: To be forwarded. | Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street | Piccadilly.

1 Chester Place | Sixteenth May 1847.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I cannot help thinking there must have been some mistake in the delivery of a letter I wrote to you more than three weeks ago,[†1] wherein I appointed a certain day for calling on you. I called on that day—heard you were out of town—and that the letter had been forwarded—but have not heard anything more. My object was (and is) to consult you about a house[†2] Mr. Chesterton and I had seen, which is not dear, and we think would suit your project better than almost any other, not built for the purpose. I prevented the owner[†3] from advertizing it, as he had intended to do;[†4] and he has been to me since, but I could say nothing to him.

I have been so very unwell from an accident, that I have not been able to write, and we are going to Brighton tomorrow (148 King's Road)[†5] for change. If you will let me hear from you there, I will send you full particulars of this house. Or maybe you are at Brighton, and I can see you there?

Always Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To H. K. BROWNE, [MID-MAY 1847]

MS Mrs A. M. Stern. Fragment c. 4" × 2"; salutation cut from middle of sheet for an autograph collector, leaving only a few lines in front and signature on back. Date: This must refer to Dombey, No. IX (see below), which CD wrote at Brighton 17-23 May (see To Miss Coutts, 16 May; To Austin, 23 May). Note, therefore, probably written from Brighton, whether CD's original instruction or his comment on Browne's trial sketches.

[ ][†6] Dombey. It is a part of his character that he should be just the same as of yore. And in the second subject, I should like Edith Granger to possess the reader with a more serious notion of her having a serious part to play in the story.[†7] I really hardly know, however, what [is left][†8] (beyond an expression of utter indifference towards Dombey . . .[†9]

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To [JOSEPH] ELLIS,[†1] 17 MAY 1847*

MS Bodleian Library.

148 Kings Road | Monday Seventeenth May 1847.

Dear Mr. Ellis

I shall be much obliged to you if you will have the goodness to send me round, between this and five o'Clock, half a dozen of good dry sherry, and half a dozen of dry old port. In case you should have any of the Chichester Punch in the house, I should be glad of two or three bottles. I give you the trouble of asking you to send me these things, because I know they are sure to be good.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Ellis.

To THE REV. H. M. WAGNER,[†2] [20 MAY 1847]†

MS Dr Gregg M. Sinclair. Date: Watermark on paper is 1846; CD's next visit to Brighton was 17-29 May 47; his ill-health and Catherine's recovery from giving birth to Sydney account for their not intending to dine out; and, of two possible Thursdays (20 and 27), the earlier agrees better with their hope to call.

Brighton | Thursday Evening

My Dear Sir

We find that Mrs. Dickens's maid so exactly observed her instructions as to our having no intention of going out while here, that she has brought no evening dress for either of us! In which unhappy state of circumstances, I deem it right to send this substitute to explain our not having the pleasure of coming to you this evening.

We hope to have another and early opportunity of saying to you in person how much we regret this.

Believe me | Dear Sir | Faithfully yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Reverend H. M. Wagner.

To THOMAS WAGHORN,[†1] [?23 MAY 1847]

Mention in next. Date: probably written same day as next.

To HENRY AUSTIN, 23 MAY 1847

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

148 King's Road, Brighton | Sunday Twenty Third May 1847.

My Dear Henry

I have written to our friend the gallant Lieutenant—[†2] whose writing looks as if it had come express, night and day, from the Himalaya Mountains, and hadn't had time to shave or brush its hair on the road—[†3] thanking him for his invitation, and pleading absence.

We come back next Saturday. I shall hope to see you, somehow, soon afterwards. I wish to Heaven you could help me to a cheap Willa, either up or down the river—with a field whither you would come and play trap-bat and ball.

I was very unwell when I left town, and had not the heart to go at my Number![†4] I have gone since, however, and with such good will that the Number is very nearly gone too.

Kate and Georgy unite in loves to Letitia.

Ever affectionately

CD.

Henry Austin Esquire.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 23 MAY 1847

MS Morgan Library.

148 King's Road, Brighton | Sunday Twenty Third May 1847.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I am glad my letter did not miscarry.[†5] That was all I cared about. I thought it possible, because it happens curiously that the letter you wrote to Macready at Manchester has never, to this hour, reached him: though various letters have gone there for him since he left, and been forwarded to town.[†1]

Some little interval has passed since I received your note here; but I know you will excuse it when I tell you that I was so very unwell before I left town, that I had not the heart to sit down to the current Dombey. Ever since I have been here, I have been hard at work. And I wish you may ever be half as much interested in the story, as I am—or think it half as good as I do!!![†2]

I return to town next Saturday, and will come to you this day week at about 2, unless you say no. In the meantime, these are, in brief, the particulars of the house.

It is on the Acton Road. Less than two miles, I should say, from Hyde Park in Oxford Street.[†3] I have not the particulars here, but it may be got, I think for sixty or sixty five pounds a year, on lease for 7, 14, or 21 years. It is retired, but cheerful. There is a garden, and a little Lawn. The taxes are very low.

A Stable would have to be changed into a wash-house, and I would decidedly fence the garden all round. It seems to me to want only that. I do not know the expence of such a thing, but I should say that an expenditure of fifty pounds or seventy five pounds may-be, in addition to Chesterton's estimate, would amply cover the whole. I have no doubt this is the outside.

Chesterton thinks he has found an unexceptionable Matron.[†4] I am sure the house would please you. I told the owners it was designed for an Institution, and they did not object. I did not say what the objects were, or would be, or had been, because it seems to me a great point of usefulness and merit that this should never be told. I wouldn't label them among the neighbours.

Charley, who came down yesterday for the Whitsun holidays, sends his love. Mr. King reports him rather weak still, but I mean to tumble him in to the Sea, tomorrow, and I hope that will freshen him up.

Dear Miss Coutts | Ever Yours most Faithfully

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To FRANÇOIS REGNIER,[†5] 23 MAY 1847*

MS Comédie Française.

148 King's Road Brighton | Dimanche Mai 23. 1847.

Mon cher Regnier.

Je suis desolé que j'ai ete[†6] malade et que j'ai perdu le plaisir de vous reçevoir chez moi. Je m'empresse de vous ecriver aujourd'hui, et voici pourquoi!—Je me porte beaucoup mieux (grace à Dieu) et je vais retourner à Londres aujourdhui en huit. Voulez-vous, vous et Madame, venir avec nous a Greenwich, Mardi en huit, pour y diner? Dites-moi oui, mon cher, et nous arrangerons une petite partie, et nous serons aussi heureux que nous le pourrons.

Ecrivez-moi, ici, en reponse.

Mille amitiés à Madame, de la part de Madame Dickens, Madlle Hogarth, et moi!

Croyez-moi, toujours | Mon cher Regnier | Votre tout devoué

CHARLES DICKENS

À Monsieur Regnier.

To MARY AND KATE DICKENS,[†1] 24 MAY 1847

MS Mr Harry Secombe.

148 Kings Road, Brighton. | Monday 24th. May 1847.

My Dear Mamey and Katey

I was very glad to receive your nice letters. I am going to tell you something that I hope will please you. It is this. I am coming to London on Thursday;[†2] and I mean to bring you both back here, with me, to stay until we all come home together on the Saturday. I hope you like this.

Tell John[†3] to come with the Carriage to the London Bridge station, on Thursday morning at 10 o'Clock, and to wait there for me. I will then come home and fetch you.

Mama, and Auntey, and Charley, send their loves. I send mine, too, to Walley, and Spim,[†4] and Alfred, and Sydney.

Always my dears | Your Affectionate Papa

[†a]CHARLES DICKENS

To Miss Mary Dickens and Miss Katey Dickens.[†a]

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, [26 MAY 1847]*

MS Morgan Library. Date: the Wednesday before Macready's dinner party on 30 May (see below). Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street | Piccadilly.

Brighton | Wednesday Evening | 8 O'Clock

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I hasten to say how sorry I am that I am engaged to dinner on Sunday. I am going to Macready's to meet Jenny Lind, who is almost the greatest genius, to my thinking, that the world has ever produced.[†1]

But I shall have plenty of time to come up to you about 3 o'Clock, and will not fail to do so.

Ever Yours most Faithfully

CHARLES DICKENS

To COUNT D'ORSAY, 26 MAY 1847

MS Comte de Gramont.

148 King's Road, Brighton. | Mercredi Mai 26 1847.

Mon cher ami

J'ai ete malade et obligé de venir ici. Je me porte beaucoup mieux, Graces a Dieu, et je retournerai à Londres, Dimanche prochain.

Voulez-vous venir diner avec moi et Madame, à Greenwich (the Trafalgar) Mardi, 1 Juin, a six heures? Nous serons charmé de vous voir. Ne croyez-pas qu'une grande reunion va avoir lieu; j'ai invité Regnier (du Theatre Français) qui j'aime beaucoup, sa femme, Forster, Maclise, et le petit docteur Quin.

Mille amities à Milady et the Miss Powers. Le livre de Milady[†2] est un grand succès. Il-y-a beaucoup de choses dans ce livre, tout-a-fait extraordinaire.

Toujours, mon cher, | Votre tout devoué
CHARLES DICKENS

À Monsieur
Le Comte D'Orsay.

To JAMES SHERIDAN KNOWLES,[†3] 26 MAY 1847

Text from MDGH, III, 92-3.

148 King's Road, Brighton, 26th May, 1847.

My Dear Knowles,

I have learned, I hope, from the art we both profess (if you will forgive this classification of myself with you) to respect a man of genius in his mistakes, no less than in his triumphs. You have so often read the human heart well that I can readily forgive your reading mine ill, and greatly wronging me by the supposition that any sentiment towards you but honour and respect has ever found a place in it.

You write as few lines which, dying, you would wish to blot,[†1] as most men. But if you ever know me better, as I hope you may (the fault shall not be mine if you do not), I know you will be glad to have received the assurance that some part of your letter has been written on the sand and that wind has already blown over it.[†2]

Faithfully yours always
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To THE REV. FRANCIS S. MAHONY,[†3] 26 MAY 1847

MS Comtesse de Suzannet.

148 Kings Road, Brighton | Twenty Sixth May 1847.

My Dear Mahoney.[†4]

I have considered your letter in every possible way, with the view of discovering some modified means of assisting you in your object.[†5] But I can discover none.

It may seem, at first sight, a strange position, but it is no less true that the Public are singularly indisposed to accept any "Editing", or gentleman-ushering of other people's books, from me. There is a notion that it is a kind of cocking of my hat, which I have no right to found upon my own success—and that I am thrusting something upon them which is not in our bargain.

I have seen this, so clearly, that even when Moxon[†6] wanted me to "edit" a book of poor Hood's after his decease (for whom I had a great regard, and whose genius I most thoroughly admire) I pointed out my reasons for declining—and declined.[†7] They seemed, on explanation, very reasonable, and I really believe he felt them to be so. The Grimaldi[†1] was many years ago, but it was a mistake nevertheless.

In addition to this general objection, the force of which in my own mind I can hardly exaggerate, there is yet another as regards your letters. I made a false step in ever connecting myself with the Daily News. I retraced it, at some cost of money, mental uneasiness, and personal inconvenience. I succeeded in detaching myself from it, very early in its existence, by a great wrench; and anything, arising now, that would connect me with its columns, would undo all I did with so much pain.[†2] The very thought puts me in a perspiration.

You know how readily I fell in with your project of writing these letters, and I know with what interest and pleasure I have always read them in the Paper. My course therefore, I need hardly tell you, is quite apart from their merits. No one can think more highly of them than I do.

I truly wish, my dear Mahoney, I could have seen any way out of this, that without clashing with my objections would have at all advanced your purpose. But, as I have already said, there seems to me, No Thoroughfare.

Believe me, I reciprocate all your cordiality, most sincerely. It would give me real pain if you supposed me in the least indifferent or lukewarm to an aim in which you feel so much interest. But I have a confidence that you will not; and that even if you should be indisposed to admit the full weight of my objections, you will be well assured that I state them with all friendly heartiness.[†3]

I shall be sending to town tomorrow, and will send your book in a parcel to Wilkinsons.[†4]

Always My Dear Mahoney | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Reverend F. Mahoney.

To DR F. H. F. QUIN,[†5] 26 MAY 1847*

MS National Library of Scotland.

148 King's Road, Brighton. | Mercredi 26 Mai 1847

Br-r-r-r-r-ave Docteur!

Voulez-vous venir diner avec moi et Madame, à Greenwich, Mardi prochain, Juin 1, a six heures? Le diner aura lieu a the Trafalgar. Si vous pourrez venir avant le fromage,—tant mieux.

Il n'y aura pas, beaucoup de monde, Docteur. Je n'ai qu'invité Regnier (du Theatre Francais) et sa femme, Maclise, Forster, et "that go-o-od" D'Orsay.[†1] Venez-donc! Buvons a la santé et au succès de l'homöepathie! Empoisonnons tout le monde, pour l'amour de la science! Allons!—

Apropos de la science de Medecine, j'ai etè malade. Me voici ici, pour reprendre mes pleines forces! Je me porte beaucoup mieux, brave Docteur, et je vais retourner chez-moi, Dimanche prochain

Ah Mon Dieu, quel morceau de papier! Excusez-moi—c'est homöepathique.

Toujours | Mon cher | Votre tout devoué
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOSEPH SOUL,[†2] 31 MAY 1847

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, 6 June 1978; MS 1p.; dated Regents Park, 31 May 47.

Regretting that he cannot attend the dinner to be held on behalf of the Orphan Working School on Wednesday, and saying that he must therefore reluctantly consign the toast with which the committee had proposed to honour him to other hands. Absence from town has prevented his earlier reply, and he encloses a small contribution[†3] to the funds.

June

To THE REV. FRANCIS S. MAHONY, 2 JUNE 1847

MS Watt Monument Library, Greenock.

Regents Park | Second June 1847.

My Dear Mahony.

Fire away![†4]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To FRANÇOIS REGNIER, 2 JUNE 1847

MS Comédie Française.

Regents Park | Juin 2, 1847.

Mon cher Regnier.

Vous trouverez, ci-enclos, "Nicholas Nickleby" (avec le portrait par Maclise) et "Pictures from Italy". Je vous prie de les reçevoir, pour l'amour de l'auteur.[†1]

Avec l'esperance de vous revoir à Paris,[†2] avant votre troisieme visite à Londres, je reste, mon ami

Toujours | Votre tout devoué
CHARLES DICKENS

Mille amities a Madame (qui n'est pas fatiguée, j'espere, aujourd'hui) et a votre belle fille.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 3 JUNE 1847

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Brent Lodge | Finchley.

1 Chester Place, Regents Park. | June Third 1847.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

The terms of the house are to be sixty guineas a year, for seven, fourteen, or twenty one years.[†3] The proprietor's name and address—it is the address of our house too, for that is close to it—is "Mrs. Scott,[†4] near the White Horse,[†5] Shepherd's Bush". The Solicitors are Messrs. Hawkins, Bloxam, Stocker, & Co., New Boswell Court. I have appointed to be there (at Boswell Court, I mean) between 2 and 3 on Saturday, to give instructions for the lease. I will then tell them to send the draft to your Solicitors[†6] for revision. Will you (I forgot to make a note of it on Sunday) send me that gentleman's name and address?

Always Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To W. B. HODGSON,[†7] 4 JUNE 1847

Text from MDGH, III, 93-4.

Regent's Park, London, Friday, 4th June, 1847.

My Dear Sir,

I have rarely, if ever, seen a more remarkable effort of what I may call intellectual memory than the enclosed.[†8] It is evidence, I think, of very uncommon power. I have read it with the greatest interest and surprise, and I am truly obliged to you for giving me the opportunity. If you should see no objection to telling the young lady herself this much, pray do so, as it is sincere praise.

Your criticism of Coombe's[†1] pamphlet[†2] is as justly felt as it is earnestly and strongly written. I undergo more astonishment and disgust in connection with that question of education almost every day of my life than is awakened in me by any other member of the whole magazine of social monsters that are walking about in these times.

You were in my thoughts when your letter arrived this morning, for we have a half-formed idea of reviving our old amateur theatrical company for a special purpose,[†3] and even of bringing it bodily to Manchester and Liverpool, on which your opinion would be very valuable. If we should decide on Monday, when we meet, to pursue our idea in this warm weather, I will explain it to you in detail, and ask counsel of you in regard of a performance at Liverpool. Meantime it is mentioned to no one.

Your interest in "Dombey" gives me unaffected pleasure. I hope you will find no reason to think worse of it as it proceeds. There is a great deal to do—one or two things among the rest that society will not be the worse, I hope, for thinking about a little.

May I beg to be remembered to Mrs. Hodgson?[†4] You always remember me yourself, I hope, as one who has a hearty interest in all you do and in all you have so admirably done for the advancement of the best objects.

Always believe me very faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To PERCIVAL LEIGH, 4 JUNE 1847*

MS Huntington Library.

1 Chester Place, Regent's Park | Friday, June Fourth 1847

My Dear Sir[†1]

One or two of our old amateur company concur with me in a very earnest wish to act again, for the attainment of an object with which, I am sure, you will heartily sympathize.[†2]

It is proposed that we should meet at Forster's chambers (as a central place) on Monday next at half past two for three exactly; when I hope to have the pleasure of explaining to you what the object is, and to take your opinion as to the best way of setting about it.[†3] I would merely say that I hope it will occasion you very little trouble and much gratification; and that it is a part of the scheme that no expence whatever, shall be sustained by any one of us.

Always My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Perceval[†4] Leigh Esquire

To BENJAMIN LUMLEY,[†5] 4 JUNE 1847

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (Enthoven Collection).

1 Chester Place, | Regent's Park. | Friday Fourth June 1847.

My Dear Sir

I am sure it would be rendering you a poor service, in return for your great courtesy and kindness, to withhold any just ground of complaint against an officer of your Theatre, and therefore I make no apology for adding this note to your Managerial afflictions; begging you to understand that it requires no answer whatever.

Mrs. Dickens and her sister went to the Opera last night,[†6] some ten minutes in advance of myself and Doctor Elliotson, and told the box door keeper, in presenting the card, that two gentlemen were coming directly. We presented ourselves accordingly. What number was the box, asked the Doorkeeper. No. 72 or 73, said I, but I really did not remember exactly which, though I was pretty sure it was the latter. He had no such card, he said; there was no such party—no such name—the ladies must have gone in by the pit door. Though I knew very well that it was not so, we went down to the Pit door. There, the answer (politely given—very unlike that above stairs, which was most discourteous) was, that the ladies had undoubtedly gone in, up stairs. Up stairs we returned again; and there the answer (given in the same discourteous manner) was, that a party of four had gone in, and we couldn't pass. I temperately remonstrated with the person who made this reply, and said, "how can you receive in this manner the assurance of a gentleman—of whose name you may already have some knowledge—and how can you keep us here, in this unpleasant position, when you have the means at hand of ascertaining in a moment whether I am correct or no, by sending to No. 73?" I added that I had the pleasure of knowing you, and that I should be constrained to represent such extraordinary conduct to you, and to complain of it. This seemed to produce its effect; for a messenger (there were three or four disengaged people there) was at last sent to the box, who, of course returned with the gratifying intelligence that I had not been lying elaborately for ten minutes—and so we got in. The moment we were in the Lobby, this messenger came running after me, to demand a Fee for his trouble! I told him that it was not my mistake he had corrected—that I should certainly not give him money for correcting those of the door-keeper—and that I should report his application along with my complaint.

I have only to add, upon my honor, that there was no hurry at the time—that the house was nearly full, and consequently that very few parties were passing in—that the behaviour of the doorkeeper was more disparaging and uncivil than I have ever had occasion to notice, in any public place I have ever entered—and that I write to you, not even on my own individual impression of the matter; for Doctor Elliotson's is just the same.

I am My Dear Sir | Yours faithfully and obliged

CHARLES DICKENS

B. Lumley Esquire

To LEONARD SIMPSON,[†1] 5 JUNE 1847*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: À Monsieur: | Monsieur Leonard Simpson | 31 Rue de l'Arcade | Paris.

Regents Park, London. | Saturday Fifth June 1847.

My Dear Simpson.

I am very sorry indeed, to hear of your dismissal by the potent Doctor.[†2] At the same time I am perfectly certain that it is attributable to no fault or failure on your part.

There can be no objection to your letter to Mr. Jerrold.[†1] I fear, however, that a weekly paper is not likely, just now, to be in such need of such correspondence, as to pay for it with any sort of regularity. I am engaged to dine with him today; and in case I should see any chance of being useful to you, you may depend on my seizing it.

Unfortunately, this is a bad t[im]e,[†2] and a bad season, for newspaper employm[en]t—as I am told every day.[†3] If any translating [oc]cupation in London could turn up, I think I could then suggest a means of adding just so much to your income as would make enough of what would otherwise not be enough. But that starting point is in the clouds, for anything I see at this moment.

I wish my power were greater than it is. Rely on my not forgetting you, if any chink presents itself that is capable of being widened.

We are all well; and Charley is quite recovered, though a little weak. Mrs. Dickens and her sister, unite in kind regards.

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Leonard Simpson Esquire.

To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK,[†4] 8 JUNE 1847†

MS Folger Shakespeare Library.

Chester Place. | Eighth June 1847.

My Dear George.

We met yesterday, and everybody was delighted to join in such a purpose.[†5] Ainsworth is not with us—which will please you.[†6]

[†a]The nights of playing in London, will be, Wednesday July 14th., and Monday July 19th. At Manchester Monday 26th. at Liverpool Wednesday 28th. We meet at Forster's on Thursday at 3 o'Clock, to the moment, to compare parts in the Merry Wives of Windsor, when everyone will please to bring his own book. All other Rehearsals will be in the evening. First Rehearsal, on Monday Night next.

The country engagements depend, of course, on our being able to get the Theatres on those nights. We shall see about that, immediately.[†a]

There is a small part—but a good bit, as Actors say—in every Man in his Humour, which I think you would like to do.[†1] [†b]It is only one scene,—a drawling, puritanical blade, in an enormous ruff. Lemon has the dress. I will provide a book of this piece, for you, on Thursday. Your old part[†2] in comfortable Lodgings, you will get up easily, no doubt.

Ever Faithfully

CD.[†b]

To BENJAMIN LUMLEY, [8 JUNE 1847]*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Date: the Tuesday after the meeting of 7 June to revive the Amateur Company.

Chester Place | Tuesday Afternoon

My Dear Sir

The matter on which I had the pleasure of seeing you,[†3] certainly does press, because, until we decide on our Theatre, we cannot issue any prospectus; and in the meantime a great deal of time is being lost. Since the receipt of your note of this morning, I have stayed a negociation into which I had entered,[†4] and will on no account proceed in it, until I shall have seen you.[†5] I shall be at my temporary home here, tomorrow, from 10 until 3—and at the Athenaeum from a quarter before four, until four. I would offer to call on you at the Opera, but for the difficulty of obtaining admittance.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

B. Lumley Esquire.

To JOHN FORSTER, 9 JUNE 1847

MS Comtesse de Suzannet.

Athenaeum.[†6] | Wednesday Night | Ninth June 1847.[†7]

My Dear Forster.

I saw Gordon[†8] just now (½ p 9) and in handing him your letter,[†9] said what you wished. He read it, attentively, and said he presumed there was an end of the matter. Did I think Thackeray had anything more to do? I said, No. That I had considered that an end of it, and had said so much to you. He then observed that Thackeray was coming at eleven o'Clock, and he would give it to him, and so close the business.

I said that as far as Thackeray was concerned, and separ[a]ting[†1] my remark from you, or your affair, I should tell him, if he were there, that I thought these things arose in his jesting much too lightly between what was true and what was false, [†a]and what he owed to both,[†a] and not being sufficiently steady to the former. Gordon said he quite assented to this. I added that I was bound to say beyond this, that in reference to his Imitations in Punch[†2] (out of which, as I understand from you, the conversation with Mr. Taylor[†3] had arisen) I had a strong opinion of my own: and that it was, that they did no honor to literature or to literary men, and should be left to very inferior and miserable hands. Which I desired Thackeray to know. Gordon quite assented to this, also, and said that your letter did you, in his opinion, great credit—that it was full of good sense and manly dealing—and that he had read it with great satisfaction. I told him, with reference to that paragraph of retort on Thackeray, that as I had reason to know its force, better than you did even,[†4] I had not objected to it, but had felt it ought to be there. And I told him (as I never told you, though I had my reason 7 or 8 years ago)[†1] why.

Gordon said, towards the close of our interview, that he hoped this wod. have no unpleasant bearings on Mr. Taylor who, he was sure, had merely spoken in jest.[†2] I said that I understood you had been, during my absence from England, in habits of intimacy and familiarity, and that I denied a man's right to jest, after that fashion. I said, moreover, that I could not oppose your sending a copy of that letter to Mr. Taylor, if you were so inclined,[†3] though I should object to your addressing him on the subject in any other form. Gordon replied that he thought your desire would be a reasonable one, if you did desire to send him that copy.

Beyond this, I described your real conversation with Mr. Taylor, as you described it to me. And Gordon said, more than once, that he thought Thackeray altogether wrong in the sort of behaviour he had adopted towards you at Procter's, and that he had better have taken you aside, and told you his offence.

I have omitted nothing of the purport of our conversation—which I detail here, of course, only for you. Nothing could possibly be more frank, sensible, or gentlemanly in the best sense, than Gordon's behaviour through the whole affair. There did not appear to be the smallest difference of opinion between himself and me.

So Good night my dear Forster, and I am heartily glad nothing stood over until tomorrow.[†4]

Always affectionately

CD.

To THOMAS MITTON,[†1] 9 JUNE 1847*

MS Omaha Public Library.

Ninth June 1847.

My Dear Mitton

I find by my book that I am engaged on Sunday, Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday. Therefore if you can hook Smithson[†2] for Thursday—do.

Ever Faithfully

CD

To T. J. THOMPSON, [10 JUNE 1847]

MS Huntington Library. Date: misdated by CD; Thursday was 10 June.

1 Chester Place | Thursday Ninth June 1847.

My Dear Thompson

Out of the Merry Wives,[†3] I fear;[†4] the "shares" not yet "allotted" being poor. But certainly not out of the provincial trip,[†5] as we should not dream of acting the same play at Manchester and Liverpool, and shall undoubtedly act every Man in his Humour, at one of the two places.[†6]

—To say nothing of the chances of our playing a new Farce, in which I should hope to provide better for you. In Comfortable Lodgings, which we acted for Miss Kelly,[†7] and shall now repeat, there is a mysterious Prefêt of Police—[†8] very well acted by Forster, last time—who has one uncommonly good scene, in the acting, with me.[†9] If you would like to take it, Forster will be happy to relinquish it. The dress and making-up are good; and the one scene is very funny. Understand, that Forster is cast for it again, and ready to play it again—but I suggested that you might not dislike it.[†10]

The only unappropriated parts in the Merry Wives are, Bardolph, Simple, and John Rugby. The fact is, that Stone, as an artist (we are trying hard, to get some more artists, as we think it very important to the scheme) was too valuable to be let go; and in his damnable impracticability, and Bardolphian injury,[†11] had settled within himself that Shakespeare, by unconscious predestination, wrote

Page expressly for him (Stone) to act, in the year eighteen hundred and forty seven. For which, may jackasses browze[†1] upon his father's grave![†2]

Ever Faithfully

CD.

We can't get the Italian opera until after their season—[†3] though then we could have the whole establishment for nothing. I am now stirring up the subcommittee of Drury Lane Theatre.

To AUGUSTUS TRACEY, 10 JUNE 1847*

MS University of Texas.

Chester Place | Tenth June 1847.

My Dear Tracey.

I am going to bring a gentleman[†4] (rather deaf) to look over your domain, at about one tomorrow, who is the Emperor of Lausanne in Switzerland, whenever you go that way—an Englishman of great fortune—founder of blind Asylums and all sorts of things[†5]—and one of the best creatures in the World. Consequently, he wants to see your management.

I hope you will not be out, as I think you would like to know him. But if you have an Engagement, hand me over, like a good man and true,[†6] to my friend Cree—[†7] though whether he spells his name in anything like that form, I don't know.

I shall bring Timber, on the chance of my young friend[†8] being at liberty.[†9]

To MISS FANNY KELLY,[†10] 11 JUNE 1847

Extract in Maggs Bros catalogue, Dec 1922; MS 1 ½ pp.; dated 11 June 47, Regents Park.

We, the old company, are going to act, on a large stage, for a good purpose, one of these fine evenings. For our first rehearsal, and getting the books marked by Wilmott,[†11] we want to come to your little theatre. Will you let us do so, next Monday evening?

To W. M. THACKERAY,[†1] [12 JUNE 1847]

MS (shorthand draft)[†2] Dickens House. Date: written on back of Thackeray's letter to CD of 11 June 47, clearly on day of receipt.[†3]

My Dear Thackeray,

I received your note at breakfast this morning and will take care to do what I ought with it in the course of the day.[†4] Trust me I have [†5] myself for [†6] carry out this measure.[†1] It is without doubt a very definite success for sense, and coming[†2] to the root of those 3 mistakes you state so fairly at the end of your letter. I have seen such [†3] on the part of the 3 words unfortunately[†4] concerned in them [†5] and such a spirit[†6] that I have every hour more and more regretted that there should be any division among such men.

To JOHN FORSTER, [12 JUNE 1847]

Mention in Forster to CD (see below).[†7] Date: CD sent Thackeray's letter to Forster the same day, 12 June, that he received it.

Saying that he could not but respect the spirit of Thackeray's letter.

To W. B. HODGSON, 12 JUNE 1847

Text from MDGH, III, 95-6.

Regent's Park, London, June 12th, 1847.

My Dear Sir,

I write to you in reference to a scheme to which you may, perhaps, already have seen some allusion in the London Athenæum of to-day.[†8]

The party of amateurs connected with literature and art, who acted in London two years ago, have resolved to play again at one of the large theatres here for the benefit of Leigh Hunt, and to make a great appeal to all classes of society in behalf of a writer who should have received long ago, but has not yet, some enduring return from his country for all he has undergone and all the good he has done.[†9] It is believed that such a demonstration by literature on behalf of literature, and such a mark of sympathy by authors and artists, for one who has written so well, would be of more service, present and prospective, to Hunt than almost any other means of help that could be devised.[†1] And we know, from himself, that it would be most gratifying to his own feelings.

The arrangements are, as yet, in an imperfect state; for the date of their being carried out depends on our being able to get one of the large theatres before the close of the present London season. In the event of our succeeding, we purpose acting in London, on Wednesday the 14th of July, and on Monday the 19th. On the first occasion we shall play "Every Man in His Humour", and a farce; on the second, "The Merry Wives of Windsor", and a farce.

But we do not intend to stop here. Believing that Leigh Hunt has done more to instruct the young men of England, and to lend a helping hand to those who educate themselves, than any writer in England, we are resolved to come down, in a body, to Liverpool and Manchester, and to act one night at each place. And the object of my letter is, to ask you, as the representative of the great educational establishment of Liverpool, whether we can count on your active assistance; whether you will form a committee to advance our object; and whether, if we send you our circulars and addresses, you will endeavour to secure us a full theatre, and to enlist the general sympathy and interest in behalf of the cause we have at heart?

I address, by this post, a letter, which is almost the counterpart of the present, to the honorary secretaries of the Manchester Athenæum.[†2] If we find in both towns such a response as we confidently expect, I would propose, on behalf of my friends, that the Liverpool and Manchester Institutions should decide for us, at which town we shall first appear, and which play we shall act in each place.

I forbear entering into any more details, however, until I am favoured with your reply.

Always believe me, my dear Sir, | faithfully your Friend

To THE HON. SECRETARY[†3] OF THE MANCHESTER ATHENAEUM, 12 JUNE 1847

Summary in Manchester Guardian, 3 July 47; dated 12 June.

Proposing, on behalf of the company of amateurs, to visit Manchester, and give a theatrical benefit on behalf of Mr. Leigh Hunt, requesting the co-operation and assistance of the directors of the Athenaeum in the furtherance of that object, and stating that the amateurs proposed to set apart the evenings of July 26th and 28th, for performances in Manchester and Liverpool, and requesting to be informed which of those nights would be most convenient for the Manchester performance.[†1]

To EDWIN LANDSEER,[†2] 13 JUNE 1847†

MS Private.

Chester Place | Thirteenth June 1847

My Dear Landseer

I can forgive a short notice much better and easier than a long one, for the latter binds me to an engagement tomorrow.[†3†a] May the man who has tied my hands, never know what it is to have oysters and kidnies[†4] in his beefsteak puddings!

Ever Yours
CHARLES DICKENS
otherwise
Wan Amburg[†5†a]

E. Landseer Esquire

To W. C. MACREADY, 13 JUNE 1847*

MS Morgan Library.

Chester Place | Sunday Thirteenth June | 1847

My Dear Macready.

I am afraid—keeping my eye on the day of the month—to make an appointment for going to the nightingale's[†6] nest.[†7] To day, I am obliged to call, with my other half, on the Godfather[†8] from Switzerland who failed in his truth, and who, if he be better, is going back forthwith. Tomorrow, and in deed every day until I have done my Number[†9] (not yet begun!) I have no business to venture out, until the owls are getting up. I think I had best leave you to make this next call alone, or I might embarrass you by suggesting some preposterous season.

I had a shadowy idea the other evening, of some engagement for Thursday.

We are obliged to go to Miss Coutts's, or I should have been proud to have gone to Mr. Dillon's[†1] dinner; for I respect and honor him very much.

Ever Yours My Dear Macready
CHARLES DICKENS

W. C. Macready Esquire.

To H. P. SMITH,[†2] 14 JUNE 1847

MS Miss Mabel Hodge.

Chester Place. | Fourteenth June 1847

My Dear Smith,

Haldimand stayed at No. 7 Connaught Place, Hyde Park, where I saw him yesterday. But he was then going to cross to Boulogne today.

The young Paria[†3] seems pretty comfortable. He is of a cosmopolitan spirit, I hope, and stares, with a kind of leaden satisfaction, at his spoons, without afflicting himself much, about the established church.

Affectionately Yours ever
CHARLES DICKENS[†4]
H. P. Smith Esquire.

To W. M. THACKERAY, [14 or 15 JUNE 1847]

Mention in Thackeray to Mrs Macready, 15 June 47,[†5] Letters and Private Papers of W. M. Thackeray, ed. G. N. Ray, II, 304. Date: see below.

To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, 15 JUNE 1847*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Tuesday | June Fifteenth 1847.

Mr. George Cruikshank

Merry Wives.—Rehearsal

at Miss Kelly's Theatre on Friday Evening, at ¼ before 6, for 6 exactly.[†6]

———

My Dear George. Do you think you can ask your friend Mr. Greenwood,[†7] whether Mr. Phelps had any basketwork made for his making-up of Falstaff,[†1] and if so, whether we can have the loan of it. Affecy. CD.

To G. H. LEWES,[†2] 15 JUNE 1847*

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel.

1 Chester Place, Regents Park | Fifteenth June 1847.

My Dear Lewes.

This is a short note, for between my Dombey and my managerial responsibilities, I am invisible and lost in abysses of work.

But it is to the purpose, and the purpose is this.—You know what we are going to do for Leigh Hunt, and how we purpose acting in London on the 14th. and 19th. of July, and in the country on the 24th. and 28th. or thereabouts. You have a hearty sympathy for Hunt,[†3] and are, I am told, an excellent Actor. The characters to let, are, the Host in the Merry Wives of Windsor (a very good part), and old Knowell in Every Man in his Humour. [The first is played from Charles Knight's sixpenny Edition[†4] with a green cover; the second from Cumberland's Acting Edition.[†5]]

If you will take these characters you will find yourself in excellent good company, and received with open arms. It is a point of honor among us that no expence whatever, is imposed on any one for anything; the plan providing dresses, travelling expences, &c &c. I should be delighted to hear that you are with us, and that you will attend the next Rehearsal of the Merry Wives next Friday Evening. Place, Miss Kelly's little Theatre 73 Dean Street Soho, where we rehearse at present, though we shall act on a very large stage. Time, a quarter before 6, for 6 to the moment.

My Dear Lewes | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

G. H. Lewes Esquire.

To R. B. PEAKE,[†1] 15 JUNE 1847*

MS Chicago University Library.

1 Chester Place, Regents Park. | June Fifteenth 1847.

My Dear Sir

Though I have not finally concluded, I believe we may consider the question of a Theatre, set at rest, without more pursuit of Drury Lane.

Jerrold told me you would not object to go on, in some character that would not cost you much trouble. Will you take John Rugby,[†2] and attend the next Rehearsal, at Miss Kelly's Theatre, on Friday Evening next, at a quarter before 6, for 6 exactly?

Perhaps it would be well, with a view to our getting to work, in earnest, if you could conveniently give me a call here, in the course of tomorrow, between 10 and 3.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

R. B. Peake Esquire.

To H. P. SMITH, 16 JUNE 1847

MS Huntington Library.

1 Chester Place | Sixteenth June 1847.

My Dear Smith

I am very much obliged to you for your kind note, and have the money ready.[†3] I am obliged to wait at home for three people this morning (to say nothing of Dombey) but if I can get down to Blackfriars[†4] between 3 and 4, I will. Do not wait for me an instant.

Faithfully Yours ever
CD

H. P. Smith Esquire.

To W. B. HODGSON, 17 JUNE 1847*

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel.

Regents Park, London | Seventeenth June 1847

My Dear Sir

Your letter, received last night, gives me the most cordial pleasure; for although I was prepared for a quick and cheerful response from you in such a cause, there is a wholesome and earnest air in all your energetic proceedings, that does me even more good than I had expected.

We have, today, concluded for Covent Garden Theatre; and I hope we shall get our circulars out, on Monday. I presume I had best send you down a packet of them, for the local committee to do as they think best with? The first great point is to ascertain as soon as we can, about the Liverpool and Manchester Theatres; and then, with reference to the former place, we will do nothing but what you recommend.

The Theatre Royal,[†1] beyond all question.

I write a short note, by this post, to Mr. Ireland,[†2] saying how happy we shall be of his co-operation and assistance. In writing shortly to you, I do so,—not because I want matter (as your heartiness is the best theme I could desire) but because my Managerial work is stupendously heavy, and coming on the weight of Dombey, makes me stoop a little.

Always believe me | My Dear Sir | Faithfully Your friend
CHARLES DICKENS

W. B. Hodgson Esquire.

To ALEXANDER IRELAND, 17 JUNE 1847

Text from MDGH, III, 97.

Regent's Park, London, | June 17th 1847.

Dear Sir,

In the hope that I may consider myself personally introduced to you by Dr. Hodgson, of Liverpool, I take the liberty of addressing you in this form.[†3]

I hear from that friend of ours, that you are greatly interested in all that relates to Mr. Leigh Hunt, and that you will be happy to promote our design in reference to him. Allow me to assure you of the gratification with which I have received this intelligence, and of the importance we shall all attach to your valuable co-operation.[†4]

I have received a letter from Mr. Langley, of the Athenæum, informing me that a committee is in course of formation, composed of directors of that institution (acting as private gentlemen) and others. May I hope to find that you are one of this body, and that I may soon hear of its proceedings, and be in communication with it?

Allow me to thank you beforehand for your interest in the cause, and to look forward to the pleasure of doing so in person, when I come to Manchester.

Dear Sir, very faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To J. B. LANGLEY, [?17 JUNE 1847]

Summary in Manchester Guardian, 3 July 47. Date: not before 17 June: see last.

Expressing his thanks (in reply to Langley's[†1] letter) to the Manchester men who had stirred in the cause of Leigh Hunt, and requesting to be informed to whom he should address himself.[†2]

To R. B. PEAKE, 17 JUNE 1847*

MS Chicago University Library.

1 Chester Place. | Seventeenth June 1847.

My Dear Sir

We have concluded for Covent Garden Theatre.[†3] I told Mr. Beale today that it was important you should be able to communicate with their man of business—and he mentioned one Mr. Cathcart.[†4] Can you contrive to see, or to send to, him, tomorrow, for a plan of the house—which I gave Beale to understand would be the first thing wanted. It is of the most urgent importance that we should have it at Miss Kelly's tomorrow night, as, without looking it over, we cannot fill up the prices of admission to the different parts of the house, in the Circular.[†5] I have directed the Printer's boy to come to Miss Kelly's for the proof, as I can not send it back, in a complete state for the Press, until I shall have seen you and the plan.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

R. B. Peake Esquire.

To W. H. WILLS,[†6] 17 JUNE 1847*

MS Huntington Library.

Regents Park | June Seventeenth 1847.

My Dear Wills.

I will not forget the name of the young woman in question, though the appointment[†7] does really not rest with me, more than with one or two others who are anxious to carry out, and have bound themselves, to carry out, the design, to the best of their ability. I hope Emily Willshire[†1] understands what is wanted of such a functionary as she desires to become, a little better than the lady does who writes, in her behalf, of a "horrible task". There is very little chance for her in the proposed Institution, if she do not.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

W. H. Wills Esquire.

To JOHN PARRY,[†2] 19 JUNE 1847

Extract in Parke-Bernet Galleries catalogue, 18 Apr 1944; MS 2 pp.; dated Chester Place, 19 June 47.

We are going to play at Covent Garden on the second night, The Merry Wives of Windsor. We were discussing about Sir Hugh [Evans][†3] last night, when Leech, and some others who know you (it is the only part unfilled) suggested how splendidly you would act it. Said some of them, will he play? Said others, Yes! Said others (but these the feeblest) No! Said others (these the cautious men) Who'll ask him? Says I (the bold one, you observe) I don't mind if I do. I was instantly taken at my word, with horrible readiness and accordingly you have this letter. . . . Write me an answer speedily, as I expect to remain out of health until I get it.[†4]

To T. J. THOMPSON, 19 JUNE 1847*

MS Berg Collection.

Saturday Night | Nineteenth June 1847

My Dear Thompson. Between Dombey and Management, I am one half mad and the other half addled.

Here are the Calls.

I have looked carefully at the Covent Garden newly constructed (went down the other day on purpose), and should not think the "speaking up" difficult. The size of the Stage, and its roll into the house—leaving a good-sized audience high and dry behind the actor—are the trying things—the great facts.

Ever Yours

CD.

To DR JAMES KAY-SHUTTLEWORTH,[†1] 21 JUNE 1847*

MS Mrs Jessie Stewart.

From My Cell. | Monday Morning | Twenty First June 1847.

My Dear Sir

I am taming a spider or two in my solitude,[†2] and weaving a small web of my own—with a very long beard, and talons in place of nails—and shaking my grizzled locks refuse to be comforted or to come out. This very day, the world and I become again acquainted, on a special occasion; and for that very reason, I must go back to my spiders, inexorably, tomorrow morning.

I should have been truly glad to have accepted your invitation—to descend to common life—but I am bidden tomorrow to the marriage of a friend of mine—one Dombey—[†3] and I am afraid if I stayed away, the Ceremony would scarcely come off; so much importance is attached to my presence. In fact, I give away the bride.

Yours gloomily

CHARLES DICKENS

(For Self and Partner)

K.[†4] Kay Shuttleworth Esquire.

To JULIA FORTESCUE, [21 JUNE 1847]

Mention in next.

To MARK LEMON, 21 JUNE 1847

MS Benoliel Collection.

Twenty First June 1847 | Monday.

My Dear Lemon.

Miss Jane Mordaunt[†5] has written to say that it will give her the greatest gratification to act on both nights if we wish it. I have appointed to call on her tomorrow afternoon.

I suppose it is best to send you the note to Miss Fortescue[†6] (which pray seal, after reading) in order that it may go, without more delay, if you—coming into possession of Mrs. Stirling's[†7] reply—find it necessary.

Ever Yours

CD.

To MR JONES,[†1] [?21 JUNE 1847]*

MS Victoria & Albert Museum.[†2] Date: To Kay-Shuttleworth, 21 June, implies that Ch. 30 was finished by 21 June. Presumably CD sent it to Bradbury & Evans, with the instruction, the same day.

Mr. Jones. Please to begin this chapter on Page 298 of the work.[†3]

To H. P. SMITH, 22 JUNE 1847

MS Huntington Library.

Chester Place | Tuesday Twenty Second June 1847

My Dear Smith

I received a note from Mr. Kirby[†4] last evening, apprizing me of the appointment, and instantly wrote back to say that I could not possibly attend at the time mentioned, but that half past 3, or 4, would do. On the faith of its being in the afternoon, as you and I settled, I have an engagement tomorrow morning, that leaves me no choice or free-will (if there be such a thing) whatever. According to my reply from Mr. Kirby, I will be punctual as the Sun.[†5]

Alas! We go to Broadstairs on Monday Morning, and Brighton is beyond our reach!

Faithfully Ever

CD.

I think of bringing an action against you for a new sort of breach of promise, and calling all the Bishops to estimate the damage of having one's christening postponed for a fortnight.[†6] It appears to me that I shall get a great deal of money in this way. If you have any compromise to offer, my Solicitors are Dodson and Fogg.[†7]

To THE FRIENDS OF LEIGH HUNT, c. 23 JUNE 1847

Text from lithographed Circular, in CD's hand,[†1] British Museum. Date: That sent to Lady Blessington (see below) was dated "June 23rd, 1847".

Office of the Secretary, Mr. Peake.
Piazza Coffee House, Covent Garden. | June 1847

I offer no apology for soliciting your attention to the enclosed document,[†2] feeling assured that it addresses itself to all who are known to sympathize, by taste and education, with what is good in English Literature, or who may be supposed, from their position, happy to avail themselves of any convenient opportunity of acknowledging its claims to compensation.

Allow me to remain, on behalf of those gentlemen associated with Literature and Art, who are embarked in this undertaking, and who have commissioned me to address you,

Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS[†3]

To MRS MACREADY, 24 JUNE 1847*

MS New York Public Library.

Regents Park | Twenty Fourth June 1847.

My Dear Mrs. Macready.

I am wretched to the last degree—can't come to dinner[†4]—keep Georgina away, to prevent your being Thirteen at table—[†5] have been obliged to go out today, for no earthly purpose as it turned out, in the middle of my work—come home, sit down at my desk again, and give the finishing dig at Dombey in a vicious despair. If I can get out, by any means, in the Evening, I will come then. Give my love to Macready, and pity me, and tell him to do the same; for I deserve it.

Ever Yours faithfully

CD.

To MR JONES, [24 or 25 JUNE 1847]*

MS Victoria & Albert Museum.[†1] Date: To Mrs Macready, 24 June, implies that CD hoped to finish Dombey No. X that evening. He presumably sent it to Bradbury & Evans, with instructions, the same night or the next day.

Mr. Jones. Don't send any of this out, until you have the chapter completed and please to begin on a fresh page as I will lengthen the thirtieth a little.[†2]

CD

To MARK LEMON, [25 JUNE 1847]

MS Benoliel Collection. Date: the Friday after To Lemon, 21 June.

Devonshire Terrace, | Friday Evening.

My Dear Lemon. I could go to the Theatre tomorrow, but at this late time, it wod. be quite impossible to get anything like a full rehearsal. I think, therefore, it had best stand over until Monday. What time on Monday, would you propose? It is quite frightful postponing Improvement now.[†3] But I think a rehearsal with only half the people, almost useless.

Miss Fortescue wrote to me this morning.

Always Yours faithfully

CD

To FRANCIS ROBINSON, [26 JUNE 1847]

Mention in next.

To ALEXANDER IRELAND, 26 JUNE 1847

Text from MDGH, III, 98-9.

Athenaeum Club, London, | Saturday, June 26th, 1847.

My Dear Sir,

The news of Mr. Hunt's pension is quite true. We do not propose to act in London after this change in his affairs, but we DO still distinctly propose to act in Manchester and Liverpool. I have set forth the plain state of the case in a letter to Mr. Robinson by this post (a counterpart of which I have addressed to Liverpool), and to which, in the midst of a most laborious correspondence on the subject, I beg to refer you.

It will be a great satisfaction to us to believe that we shall still be successful in Manchester.[†1] There is great and urgent need why we should be so, I assure you.[†2]

If you can help to bring the matter speedily into a practical and plain shape, you will render Hunt the greatest service.[†3]

I fear, in respect to your kind invitation, that neither Jerrold nor I will feel at liberty to accept it. There was a pathetic proposal among us that we should "keep together;" and, as president of the society, I am bound, I fear, to stand by the brotherhood with particular constancy. Nor do I think that we shall have more than one very short evening in Manchester.

I write in great haste. The sooner I can know (at Broadstairs, in Kent) the Manchester and Liverpool nights, and what the managers say, the better (I hope) will be the entertainments.

My dear Sir, very faithfully yours

[CHARLES DICKENS]

P.S.—I enclose a copy of our London circular, issued before the granting of the pension.

To J. B. LANGLEY, 26 JUNE 1847

Summary in Manchester Guardian, 3 July 47; dated 26 June.

Stating that although it was now unnecessary to perform in London, he and his friends still intended to visit Manchester and Liverpool, and that the performances in both these places would consist of Every Man in His Humour, and a farce; the farce to be different in each place.

To L. J. NATHAN,[†4] 26 JUNE 1847*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Athenaeum Club | Saturday 26th. June 1847

Mr. Nathan.

In consequence of the Government having granted a pension to Mr. Leigh Hunt, for whose benefit the intended performances at Covent Garden Theatre were to have taken place, they are relinquished for the present. The Merry Wives of Windsor will certainly be postponed for a long time;[†5] but I have every reason to believe that we shall act Every Man in His Humour at Liverpool and Manchester, towards the end of July; and in that case, all you were to have done for that play, will require to be done, still.

As soon as this Liverpool and Manchester business is settled—which I have no doubt it will be, in the course of this next week—I will write to you positively, on the subject. In the meantime I shall be glad if you will, either tonight or tomorrow morning, send up to No. 1 Chester Place Regents Park (for I have just come home from abroad, and am not in my own house) for my Bobadil's dress, which wants smartening up a little. There is a piece of armour—a gorget—with it, which will need to be well burnished. Please not to send later than tomorrow morning, or the servants will have gone with me into Kent.

Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To CHARLES RAWLINS,[†1] 26 JUNE 1847

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel.

Athenæum Club, London | Saturday Twenty Sixth June 1847

Dear Sir

You will perhaps be aware, before receiving this, that the Government, in recognition of Mr. Leigh Hunt's literary services, have just now granted him a pension of two hundred pounds a year.

This most generous and worthy act of a liberal administration relieves the gentlemen associated in the proposed performance for Mr. Hunt's benefit, from the necessity of acting in London: in as much as the large receipts expected at Covent Garden Theatre are no longer necessary to his support in comfort.[†2] But we do not propose to relinquish the intended representations at Liverpool and Manchester, as there are reasons which render them still exceedingly desirable, and useful:[†3] and as the gentlemen whom I represent, are most unwilling to deprive the mass of education and intelligence in those two great towns of the opportunity it has shewn itself so ready to embrace of testifying its respect for Literature, and grateful feeling towards an honored English writer.

Allow me to say therefore, that we trust we may still rely on your assistance and sympathy, and that we promise ourselves the pleasure of coming among you.

I now desire to add, for the private information of the Committee, that Mr. Hunt's circumstances are really in that condition that he cannot enjoy the gift he has received, without such assistance as you can help us to give him. But, not wishing—for reasons that will be sufficiently plain to you—to put this consideration prominently forward, we would rather make our effort in his behalf, one, as it were, of congratulation.

I should notice perhaps, as a matter of detail, that as the production of The Merry Wives of Windsor, without the expected London receipts, would involve a new and very great expence, it is proposed to act Every Man In his Humour (the dresses for which play are already prepared) both in Manchester and Liverpool; varying the afterpieces in each place.

I shall be happy to hear from you, with a view to our final arrangements, at your earliest convenience;[†1] and shall be much obliged if you will have the goodness to address your letter to me at Broadstairs in Kent.

I am Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

I beg to enclose the circular we had issued in London, before the granting of the pension.

Charles Rawlins Esquire Junr.

To THOMAS BEARD, 27 JUNE 1847

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | Morning Herald Office | Shoe Lane | Fleet Street.

Athenaeum. | Sunday Twenty Seventh June 1847.

My Dear Beard

We go to Broadstairs tomorrow. I have taken the house[†2] next Barnes's,[†3] mainly because it is the most cheerful, and partly because (I don't know how many years ago) I started the old man and the child on their Curiosity-Shop wanderings,[†4] from that Mansion.

Kate went down the other day expressly to arrange for your weekly quartering a yard or two off. Which she satisfactorily accomplished, and now we are ready for you.

You'll come down next Saturday of course. [†a]And I hope besides your weekly visitations, you'll take Baldwin[†5] by the throat, and squeeze a month's holiday out of him.[†a]

I have another piece of good news. The Margate Theatre will certainly be opened. But I have not yet heard of Conway Lingham's[†6] engagement.

I don't send the Railroad list with this, because mine is not for July. But the trains go and come at all sorts of times. You will get the paper in the Regent's Circus.

Having shamed the Government into doing something handsome for Leigh Hunt, we mean to drop our proposed Covent Garden performances, but I think we shall play, towards the end of July, at Manchester and Liverpool. I had arranged to dress the Merry Wives, in the legitimate costume of Henry the Fourth—everybody from a picture. It would have been very curious and complete.

Write me a line at Broadstairs to say you are going to nail yourself to the Mast, and ever believe me

My Dear Beard | Heartily Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 27 JUNE 1847

MS Morgan Library.

Athenaeum | Sunday Twenty Seventh June, 1847.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

Last Thursday week, Mrs. Dickens and I (in great state) repaired to Stratton Street, in accordance with an invitation still producible in any Court in Christendom, and not being able to get in, withdrew in melancholy splendor.[†1] I should have reported this fact long ago, but I have been so extremely busy, that I have not had an hour by day (and not many by night) to call my own.

Tomorrow morning we are going down to Broadstairs, where we purpose remaining until the end of September—though of course I shall be continually coming backwards and forwards. Our children have all got the whooping cough, and the change is recommended for them. They never cry, but go into corners to be convulsed, and come out cheerful.

May I impress upon you, that it would be an immense thing for the Institution, to begin before it is Winter weather, and while the garden is green and sunny. Your solicitor places Chesterton and myself in the awkward position of seeming to have acted, in the matter of the lease, without authority; he is so very tardy.

A line from you, addressed to Broadstairs, telling me where you will be through July, will be very welcome, as I shall make a point of seeing Chesterton often, as soon as we have the power of proceeding.

With best regards to Mr. and Mrs. Brown,

I am ever dear Miss Coutts | Yours most faithfully

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To MORITZ FEIST,[†1] 27 JUNE 1847

Mention in J. A. Stargardt catalogue, 1957.

To JOHN [PEARSON],[†2] 27 JUNE 1847*

Photograph, Longfellow House, Cambridge, Mass.

Athenaeum Club, London | Twenty Seventh June 1847.

Sir

I am flattered by the request contained in your letter of the Twenty-Fourth. But I am already connected with so many similar institutions which I can hardly hope ever to visit, that I would suggest to you whether you may not serve the Institution in question, much better, by placing some gentleman of local influence, at its head.

I am Sir | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. John [Pearson].

To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, [JUNE-JULY 1847]

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel. Date: not before 21 June (the Monday after the first rehearsal: see To Cruikshank, 15 June), nor after Mon 19 July, the last rehearsal.

Monday Morning

My Dear Cruikshank

Rehearsal tonight at the usual hour.

Faithfully Always

CD

To THOMAS CURRY,[†3] 29 JUNE 1847

MS Huntington Library.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Twenty Ninth June 1847.

My Dear Curry.

I am very sorry not to have had the pleasure of receiving your friend Captain Lomex.[†4] But when he brought his letter of introduction, I was at Brighton, recovering from the consequences of an accident.[†5] Since then, I have been very little in town, and always hard at work. And now, we have come down here for three months, with all the children ill of the whooping cough. In addition to these small mischances, we have not been able to get into our own house since our return home from Switzerland and France, last March (in consequence of having let it, before going abroad, for a term not yet expired) but have been living a Tartar kind of life, in a sort of Tent hard by. All this I have explained to the Good Captain by letter, adding that I hope to have the pleasure of welcoming him to my own household Gods when we return to town in the Autumn. I trouble you with an explanation thus long, because I would not, for a great deal, that you supposed me indifferent to any friend in whose behalf you bespeak my interest and hospitality. I do not forget old Genoa, so easily.

Will you tell De la Rue that these are the reasons which have prevented me from sending his books by the last Steamer, but that they shall come by the next? Also, that the same reasons have caused his newspaper to stagger on the road to Italy, but that I hope it will get over the ground, henceforth, in good style. Remember me most heartily to him, and Madame De la Rue.

Mrs. Dickens and her sister are stunning me with so many messages to Mrs. Curry—and the children are shrieking so many reminders and remembrances to your children—that I think the shortest plan is to leave them to the imaginations of the parties concerned. Which cannot be too earnest, or too cordial, for the truth.

Fletcher[†1] appeared in London, some two months ago, with a very red face and a very excited eye. He is living quietly down in Somersetshire somewhere, along with a country clergyman and his wife. He has a lively remembrance of your giving him an early dinner one day before he dined at Charles Gibbs's, and very nearly occasioning him to put a knife into the breast of said Charles Gibbs,[†2] and a fork into the throat of Mr. Driver.[†3] Which I perfectly recollect too, for I am inclined to think that if I had not been there, he would have opened Gibbs like an Oyster.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

T. Curry Esquire.

To [G. H. LEWES], 29 JUNE 1847

MS Mr L. C. Staples.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Twenty Ninth June 1847.

Mine host of the Garter.[†4]

Though I be now old, and of the peace,[†5] I will be there, unless prevented by any untoward circumstance. Bodikins mine host, I never asked Bully Beale if he would discard,[†1] but simply told him we would. I have some of the salt of my youth left in me, mine host, and sprinkled it upon him.

They write from Liverpool today, delighted that the performance goes on.

Thine | Shallow
(Custalorum)[†2]

To A. MESS,[†3] 29 JUNE 1847

Extract in N, II, 36 (from catalogue source); dated Broadstairs, 29 June 47.

Edward's[†4] mother and sisters, and nephews and nieces, desire to be kindly remembered to him. I trust he will do credit to your kindness and attention, and become worthy of your regard.

To DR SOUTHWOOD SMITH,[†5] 29 JUNE 1847*

MS Mr W. A. Foyle.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Twenty Ninth June 1847.

My Dear Dr. Smith.

Sitting down last night to write to Lords Lansdowne[†6] and Normanby, such a strong sense came over me, on consideration, that it would be better for you to write in your own person, and that it would be a wiser assertion of your indisputable claim to the office in question[†7] so to do, that I resolved (nothing but the loss of a day's post being involved in the delay) to put that to you, before sending any letter of mine. I am strongly of opinion that the exercise of such poor influence as mine, is a lowering of your position in the matter. It is a kind of assumption that this post may reasonably be the subject of recommendation; which, after your services to, and close association with, the Sanatory question, I altogether deny. It should be given to you of right, and for what you have done, and for what you have the undoubted capacity of doing better than anybody else; and the more I reflect about it, the more clear it seems to me that, to serve yourself efficiently, you should set forth your own claims, modestly but manfully, and rest upon them. If that be not enough, I am sure my assistance is of no avail; and I think it might disparage the dignity and justice of your position before these men.

I wish you would ask Forster what he thinks of this.[†1] I need not ask you to believe that I am ready to write immediately (as I undertook to do, when I had not reflected on the subject) if you tell me you still desire it.[†2] I have not the slightest personal indisposition or dislike to do so. But when I came to look, as it were, at my letters in black and white last night, I felt so convinced that they came from the wrong person, and that they ought to be yours, that I could not make up my mind to send them until you had considered the point again.

I wait to do, whatever you tell me. Being always

My Dear Dr. Smith | Faithfully Your friend

CHARLES DICKENS

Dr. Southwood Smith.

To T. N. TALFOURD, 29 JUNE 1847*

MS Mrs A. M. Stern.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Twenty Ninth June 1847.

My Dear Talfourd.

We have thought it delicate, after the granting of the pension, to abandon the intended London performances for Leigh Hunt's benefit.[†3] The box and pit stall list was pretty strong in one day, and I have no doubt we should have had great houses.

But, with a view to Poole, we purpose standing by the announced representations at Liverpool and Manchester; being thereunto encouraged by local desires and assurances. We purpose starting Hunt onwards with a certain portion of the receipts (still keeping his name forward, as on a sort of congratulatory occasion) and giving Poole the rest.[†4] The proportions will be regulated by the receipts themselves. We do not, now, play the Merry Wives—which would occasion a very great expence, but repeat Every Man In his humour, with new farces. Bulwer still writes his address,[†1] and I hope I may look to you for yours,[†2] and rehearse it on the Sands here. Anything general, about sympathy with Literature, and the sympathy there should be among its professors, with an allusion to Poole, if you like, and anything graceful (if you should like that, either) about the Government's recognition of Hunt, will do the deed. [†a]*The Manchester people would receive any allusion to themselves, from you, with a great shout.[†a†3] I wish I could hope you would come down by Railroad, Saturday or Sunday, and strolling hereabouts with me, make it out to the Music of the Sea.[†4] But my mind misgives me that those Reading men are hunting you up and down.[†5] Otherwise, it would be a good fresh change to you, and nothing is easier than the journey now.

Pray tell me, when you have leisure to write a line, how the Reading business stands, and whether those unreasonable dissenters have capped the Miracles, by any approach to reason and moderation.

Ever affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Serjeant Talfourd.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 30 JUNE 1847*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street | London.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Thirtieth June 1847.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

Pray don't think there was the least occasion for writing one grave syllable or semi-syllable of explanation about the party that did not take place. I mentioned it, only as a droll occurrence.

Charley is, I hope, recovered from his cough, and begins to look fat and well. His sisters are the worst just now.

I think it would be well if I were to bring the proposed Matron to you, before she is positively engaged, as it might be a satisfaction[†1] to you to see her. As soon as the signing and sealing are over, I will arrange for a meeting between myself and Chesterton, and will propose a time to you, if you please, for this purpose.

Dear Miss Coutts | Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To MESSRS BRADBURY & EVANS, 30 JUNE 1847

Mention in Sotheby's catalogue, Mar 1903; MS 2 pp.; dated 30 June 47.

Concerning Poems by Harriet and Rose Acton.[†2]

To FREDERICK DICKENS, [APRIL-JUNE 1847]

MS John Rylands Library. Date: after 27 Mar when Kate and Georgy returned from Paris and before the end of June when the house at Chester Place was given up.

Chester Place. | Sunday

My Dear Fred

If you will take a ride with me in the carriage this afternoon, I want to make a few calls, and need not then take anybody else but Kate and Georgy. I shall leave here at a quarter past two. Will you come round by that time, or will you be on the look-out for me in Norton Street?

A word in answer | Affectionately Always

CD.

July

To THE MARQUIS OF NORMANBY, 1 JULY 1847*

Broadstairs, Kent. | First July 1847

Summary from MS The Marquis of Normanby.

Writing on behalf of Dr Southwood Smith; adding that, as he is writing, he wishes to say that in six or seven months' time he will ask leave of Lady Normanby[†3] to grace a little Dedication page[†4] to Dombey, with her name.

To THE SECRETARY OF THE POST OFFICE, [BROADSTAIRS],[†1] 1 JULY 1847

Mention in Sotheby's catalogue, July 1910; MS 1 p.; dated Broadstairs, 1 July 47.

About the delivery of his letters.

To WILLIAM CULLENFORD, 2 JULY 1847

Mention in Sotheby's catalogue, June 1911; MS 1 p.; with addressed envelope dated Broadstairs, 2 July 47.

To R. B. PEAKE, 2 JULY 1847*

MS Chicago University Library.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Second July 1847.

My Dear Sir

It was agreed with Leigh Hunt, on the occasion of his knocking you up in the middle of the night,[†2] that the announcement of the postponement in London and the acting in the Country, should be made at one and the same time.[†3] I have heard from Liverpool, but not from Manchester; and until the Committees in the two towns shall have arranged with the Managers and fixed the nights, I with-hold the advertizement, in pursuance of this understanding. I expect, by every post that comes in, to receive the final settlement. The moment it reaches me, I will send you the advertisement.[†4]

In the meantime, as there is no doubt that the benefit will not take place in London, it will be well, I think, if you will have the kindness to signify that fact to those who have taken boxes and stalls for the Covent Garden representation.

I am delighted to hear that your piece[†5] is doing so well, and hope you will have substantial reasons to be pleased by its success.

Always Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

R. B. Peake Esquire.

To MISS MARGUERITE POWER, 2 JULY 1847

Text from MDGH, I, 179-80.

Broadstairs, Kent, July 2nd, 1847.

My Dear Miss Power,

Let me thank you, very sincerely, for your kind note and for the little book.[†1] I read the latter on my way down here with the greatest pleasure. It is a charming story gracefully told, and very gracefully and worthily translated. I have not been better pleased with a book for a long time.

I cannot say I take very kindly to the illustrations. They are a long way behind the tale to my thinking. The artist understands it very well, I dare say, but does not express his understanding of it, in the least degree, to any sense of mine.

Ah Rosherville![†2] That fated Rosherville, when shall we see it! Perhaps in one of those intervals when I am up to town from here, and suddenly appear at Gore House, somebody will propose an excursion there, next day. If anybody does, somebody else will be ready to go. So this deponent maketh oath and saith.

I am looking out upon a dark gray sea, with a keen north-east wind blowing it in shore. It is more like late autumn than midsummer, and there is a howling in the air as if the latter were in a very hopeless state indeed. The very Banshee of Midsummer is rattling the windows drearily while I write. There are no visitors in the place but children, and they (my own included) have all got the hooping-cough, and go about the beach choking incessantly. A miserable wanderer lectured in a library last night about astronomy; but being in utter solitude he snuffed out the transparent planets he had brought with him in a box and fled in disgust. A white mouse and a little tinkling box of music that stops at "come," in the melody of the Buffalo Gals, and can't play "out to-night,"[†3] are the only amusements left.

I beg from my solitude to send my love to Lady Blessington, and your sister, and Count D'Orsay. I think of taming spiders, as Baron Trenck did.[†4] There is one in my cell (with a speckled body and twenty-two very decided knees) who seems to know me.

Dear Miss Power, | Faithfully yours ever

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To L. J. NATHAN, 3 JULY 1847†

MS Harvard College Library.

[†a]Broadstairs, Kent. | Third July 1847.

Mr. Nathan.[†a]

You may prepare the dresses that you have to make or alter for Every Man in his Humour, and also the dresses for Comfortable Lodgings.[†1] We shall act in Liverpool on the 28th. and in Manchester most probably on the 26th. or 27th. On, and after, the 17th. you will find us, every night, at Miss Kelly's after halfpast 6.

[†a]Some of the trimming is off my Bobadil coat,[†2] I think. Besides this, and the cleaning of the boots and gauntlets, I want, if you please, a new, and broader, and stiffer, sword-belt of the same red color, with a larger and fiercer buckle to it. I have a great pair of good spurs of my own. The hat wants smartening too. I also want a pair of good red legs.

Yours

CHARLES DICKENS[†a]

To FRANCIS ROBINSON, 3 JULY 1847*

MS Mr Frederick Burkhardt.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Third July 1847.

Dear Sir.

I am extremely glad to find that all is going on so well in Manchester, and that we are in such good hands.

As soon as I hear from you that the Theatre is secured and the night fixed, I will send you the bill in MS, as I should wish a printer of the town to be employed upon it. The distribution of this bill, the issuing of tickets, and all such arrangements, I would beg to leave to the sub committee. But perhaps I may remark at once, that I should wish to commence the performances at 7 to the moment (unless there be any good reason to the contrary) and to have no longer pause than five minutes between the conclusion of one piece, and the commencement of the Overture to the next. I mention this, as I purpose making these clauses a part of the Bill.[†3]

I enclose a reply to the letter from Mr. Brooks, and am

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Francis Robinson Esquire.

To [S. L.] BROOKS,[†4] [?3 JULY 1847]

Mention in last.

Replying to a letter.

To FRANK STONE, 4 JULY 1847

MS Comtesse de Suzannet.

Rehearsal Call.[†1]

———

Every Man In His Humour.

———

Mr. Stone—Downright.

At Miss Kelly's Theatre, on Saturday the 17th. July, at halfpast 6 exactly. Please to understand that there will also be a call (either for this play, or Comfortable Lodgings) at the same time and place for every night in the then ensuing week.

———

Night of performance in Liverpool, the 28th. In Manchester (not yet fixed) most probably the 26th. or 27th.

Broadstairs, Kent | 4th. July 1847.

My Dear Stone. I don't know Egg's[†2] address.[†3] Will you send him the enclosed.

Ever Yours Cordially

CD.

Frank Stone Esquire

To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, 4 JULY 1847†

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel. Address: George Cruikshank Esquire | 23 Amwell

Street | Pentonville | London.

[†a]Rehearsal Call.

Every Man in His Humour.

Mr. George Cruikshank—Formal.

At Miss Kelly's Theatre, on Saturday the 17th. July at halfpast 6 exactly. Please to understand that there will also be a call, at the same time and place, for every night in the then ensuing week—either for this piece or comfortable Lodgings. Night of acting in Liverpool, the 28th. In Manchester (not yet fixed) most probably the 26th. or 27th.

Over[†a]

Broadstairs, Kent.
Sunday Fourth July 1847.

My Dear George

Enclosed is your "call". If I can find any suitable new farce,[†1] with a part for you that I think you will like, you shall hear from me again, very soon.

Ever Yours affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

George Cruikshank Esquire

Manchester Monday 26th.[†2]

Every Man in His Humour. Cruikshank as Cob
Good Night's Rest.
Turning the Tables.

Liverpool 28th. Wednesday

Every Man in His Humour. Cruikshank as Formal.
Turning the Tables.
Comfortable Lodgings.

To JOHN FORSTER, [4 JULY 1847]

Mention in To Lemon, 4 July.

Asking his advice about the choice of programme for the performances at Manchester and Liverpool, and probably enclosing his rehearsal "Call".

To MISS FANNY KELLY, 4 JULY 1847

Extract in Maggs Bros catalogue No. 399 (1920); dated Broadstairs, 4 July 47.

I wish to bespeak your kind assistance for our Rehearsals thus:—

We want the Stage on Saturday the 17th instant at half past 6, and every night in the ensuing week.

Pray do not trouble yourself to write, if you can arrange to let us have the Theatre on these nights. I will take your silence for an assurance that we can.

To MARK LEMON, 4 JULY 1847

Text of letter from F. G. Kitton, CD by Pen and Pencil, 1899, pp. 111-2; MS of Rehearsal Call and envelope, Benoliel Collection. Address: Prepaid | Mark Lemon Esquire | Brook Green | near London. PM 5 July 1847.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Sunday Night, 4th July, 1847

My Dear Lemon,

I enclose you a call. It is needless to bespeak your punctuality.

THREE points of business—First, will you undertake to secure the needful ladies? pay if needful. My impression is, that they ought to be paid. As you began a negotiation on this head with Mrs. Romer,[†1] I think you ought to go on; and as I am not on the spot, it will be an immense relief to me, if you will kindly do so.

Secondly, will you call on Wilson,[†2] and secure him and his wigs—particularly impressing on him that my brother Augustus[†3] is to wear in Cash, the light wig he wore the first time, and not the dark Ojibbeway wig the second.[†4] For I fear the sight of the latter peruke might move me to an act of fratricide—as it very nearly did at the St. James's Theatre.

Now, my dear Stranger,[†5] to the grand point of my note—the new farce. I have looked at Old Regimentals,[†6] The Jew and the Doctor,[†7] Charles the Twelfth,[†8] and some others. I can find nothing among them that I think will suit us, except Poole's Turning the Tables.[†9] Now, do you think it would be safe to give Jack Humphries[†10] to Lewes, and Jeremiah Bumps[†11] to Cruikshank, who is good at disguise?[†12] Lewes has nothing but Old Knowell, and certainly has a claim upon us. Cruikshank has hardly anything at all—is a little discontented—[†13] and his name is very important. If you think this could be done, without lunacy, I would make the bill.

FOR MANCHESTER.

Talfourd's Address [spoken by Dickens].
Every Man in his Humour.
A Good Night's Rest[†14] (absolutely promised).
And Turning the Tables.

AT LIVERPOOL

Bulwer's Address.
Every Man in his Humour.
Turning the Tables.
And Comfortable Lodgings.

—Begin in each place at 7 exactly, and five minutes' wait between the conclusion of one piece, and the overture to the next. There would not be too much in the bill by any means, and all the people poorly off would be thus brought in, and, on the other hand, I confess I have a fear of a farce without either you or me in it; and as we know our old farces are a roar, the new one ought certainly to be so too. It is because I feel in this difficulty, and do not know what to decide on for the best, that I seek your hurried advice. I have also written to ask Forster what he thinks. The devil of it is, that the preparations at each town are now tremendous, and they are so pressing me for the Bill in detail, that I am at my wit's end.

You couldn't run down here by rail? Of course not. I could give you a bed—but—well—do something to help me out, for the love of Snobbington.

Ever yours heartily,
CHARLES DICKENS.

Mark Lemon, Esquire.

Ladies to act in Every Man, and in Comfortable Lodgings. Also in new farce, yet a reserved question.

Rehearsal Call.

———

Every Man In His Humour

———

Mr. Mark Lemon—Brainworm

At Miss Kelly's Theatre on Saturday the 17th. July, at halfpast 6 exactly. Please to understand that there will also be a call, at the same time and place, for every night in the then ensuing week. Either for this piece, or another.

Night of acting in Liverpool, the 28th. In Manchester (not yet fixed) most probably the 26th. or 27th.

To G. H. LEWES, 4 JULY 1847*

MS Mr R. W. Hansen.

Broadstairs, Kent | Sunday Fourth July 1847

My Dear Lewes

Enclosed is your formal "call". I am on the look-out for a farce, with a good part for you. If I find one, you shall hear from me again, very soon. Don't forget De what's-his-name[†1] in Comfortable Lodgings.

Ever Yours
CD.

To T. J. THOMPSON, 4 JULY 1847

MS Huntington Library.

Rehearsal Call

———

Every Man in His Humour.

Mr. T. J. Thompson—Wellbred

———

At Miss Kelly's Theatre on Saturday the 17th. July at halfpast 6 exactly. Please to understand that there will also be a call, at the same time and place, for every night in the then ensuing week.

Night of acting in Liverpool, the 28th. In Manchester (not yet fixed) most probably the 26th. or 27th.

Over

Broadstairs, Kent. | Sunday Night, Fourth July 1847

My Dear Thompson

I am on the look-out for a farce, with such a part for you in it, as you indicated to me. If I can find such a one, you shall hear from me again, very soon.

In a whirlwind of managerial correspondence—

Ever Yours
CD.

To H. P. SMITH, 4 JULY 1847

MS Huntington Library.

Broadstairs, Kent | Sunday Fourth July, 1847.

My Dear Smith

As our friend[†1] knows his own mind so little, I think I would rather not have anything more to do with him. Which I say, rather on the popular principle of cutting off one's nose to be revenged on one's face, than because I shouldn't still like to pocket his money.[†2] Seriously, as the transaction is so temporary and different a one, and I have that knowledge of his brother[†3] which will pretty surely bring us together again one day, I think it best to give Bernard Granville Esquire, the wide berth he has given me—possibly for something of the same reason.

Of course, I decide on your assurance that I am at perfect liberty (as between you and me) to do so; for I should ill return your interest and kindness, and should poorly shew my estimation of the friendship between us, if I hesitated one instant to confide in you most thoroughly and gratefully.

Accept my hearty thanks, and Ever believe me

Affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

H. P. Smith Esquire
P.S. Children generally better. But little Mary worst. Young Christian[†1] also coughing. Loves from all to all.

To THOMAS MITTON, 4 JULY 1847

MS Huntington Library.

Broadstairs, Kent | Fourth July 1847.

My Dear Mitton

The investment did not come off, after all![†2] Mr. Granville had never paid at that rate before—has £2,000 stock which he can draw out, on the return of certain trustees to town within two months—resolved to take that, in preference—wouldn't come up to the scratch—and sent his bill for the money, at 3 months, to be discounted instead. I told Smith (who offered it to me) that I didn't think it worth while, for so temporary and small a transaction, to enter into such relations with a man whose brother I knew very well, and whom I am pretty sure to encounter again, when he returns, with the regiment he commands, to England. So, Smith discounted the bill himself, and there is an end of the matter.

If anything safe and good should fall in your way, I should be glad to invest twelve or fifteen hundred pounds, now lying idle.

I suppose there is no chance of your turning up at Liverpool and Manchester—at Fanny's[†3] for instance—during the play time.

Ever Faithfully
CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [5 JULY 1847]

Mention in To Willmott, 6 July.

Giving information about the rehearsals, emphasizing their importance, and asking him to see to the scenery at Liverpool and Manchester.

To JOHN WILLMOTT,[†1] 6 JULY 1847†

MS Shakespeare Memorial Library.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Sixth July 1847.

My Dear Willmott

Not knowing your address, I wrote to Mr. Forster yesterday, begging him to write to you,[†2] and to say that I had sent round the first Rehearsal Call for Every Man in His Humour, for Saturday the 17th., at Miss Kelly's, at half past 6 exactly. Also that I had summoned the whole company to some Rehearsal or other, at the same time and place, all through the then ensuing week. We shall act at Liverpool [†a]on the 28th.[†a] and at Manchester (day not yet fixed) on the 26th. or 27th., I have no doubt. [†a]We must be very particular with the Rehearsals, as we shall lose you a day or two before the performance. For I intend asking you to go down that much before us, to look out the Scenery and Properties.[†a]

We shall have great houses, I have no doubt, and a pleasant expedition.

[†a]Prompt-books I will bring, on Saturday the 17th.[†a]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Willmott.

To FRANCIS ROBINSON, 7 JULY 1847†

MS Yale University Library.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Seventh July[†3] 1847.

My Dear Sir.

[†b]As it has been proposed that we should act in Liverpool on the 28th. I presume I may consider the 26th. as the night fixed for Manchester.

We shall be down to rehearse on the stage, on the Morning of performance,[†b] and we will send Mr. Willmott—perhaps you will have the kindness to inform them at the Theatre—who was Mr. Macready's Stage Director in London, a day or so before, to look to the Scenery and properties.

You do not mention whether the Band is included in the charge for the Theatre. We wish it to be good, and efficient, and I shall feel greatly obliged, if some of the Committee will have the kindness to see to this for us—strengthening it, even, at some small additional expence, if need be.

We should wish, if possible, to have at least one private box on the Stage, retained for the Company—two would be better, but we should be sorry to engross a second, if it could be well let.

I should like to have the Overture to Fra Diavolo, before the Comedy; the Overture to La Gazza Ladra, before the interlude; and the Overture to Massaniello before the Farce.[†1] The Music between the Acts, as cheerful as possible. I mention all these things as they occur to me to save you the trouble of referring to future letters.

[†b]A Memorandum of the Bill, I enclose.[†b†2] Not in any set form, but merely for you to use as you think best. If there be any local objection to the proposed time of beginning (which I hope there may not be) you will, of course, alter it.[†3]

Now, as to the Prices. I have never dared to place before myself, in imagination, the exact Sum to be realized in Manchester; and I have a very imperfect idea of the capacity of the House, in which I have only once been. But I should, I need not say, desire to get as much as possible—still, not to exclude any class of real "sympathizers".

[†b]The proposed Liverpool prices,[†4] are very good, I think

Lower boxes	10/-
Upper boxes	7/6
Do. boxes	5/-
Pit	5/-

Gallery eighteen pence or two shillings.

But it is impossible for me to be so good a judge on this head, as the Committee. Whatever the Committee decide on, I shall be certain is the best thing.[†b†5]

Dear Sir Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

F. Robinson Esquire

P.S [†b]I have not, in this bill, mentioned the Ladies. They will all be local Actresses, I believe.[†b†6] In the complete bill, I will insert them.

To WILLIAM JERDAN, 8 JULY 1847

Mention in American Art Association Catalogue, 22 Nov 1922; MS 2 pp.; dated Broadstairs, 8 July 47.

Regarding the Benefit performances for Leigh Hunt and John Poole, at Liverpool and Manchester, July 1847.[†7]

To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, 9 [JULY] 1847*

MS Carl Pforzheimer Library. Date: Clearly "June" was written in mistake for July: see next. Address: George Cruikshank Esquire | 4 Clifton Terrace | near the Baths | Gravesend.

Broadstairs Ninth June 1847

My Dear George

Buy Turning the tables—Duncombe's Edition of the Acting Drama—No. 101, I think—and look at Old Knibbs.†1 I think you would make it funny. There is not much in it, but there are very few words (which, in the short time, is a great point, as I believe you are busy, and not a "quick study") and if you will do it, and come prepared on the 17th., my troubles are over.

Ever Yours Cordially

CD

To MARK LEMON, 9 JULY 1847

MS Benoliel Collection.

Broadstairs. | Friday Ninth July 1847.

My Dear Lemon.

I have decided thus—To write to Jerrold, and ask him if he would like to play Bumps. If not, to play it myself—though I hate it†2—and so try to get the piece through, quickly.

Cruikshank I will ask to play old Knibbs!!!†3

Rehearsal, my dear fellow, I cannot reasonably postpone: having made such an immense point of it with all the people concerned—and the time will be so very short. But can't you come later?†4 I would then try to get on with Turning the Tables, first. I have ousted all sorts of people from Miss Kelly's that night.

I don't understand about your endeavouring to get the ladies to the next Rehearsal. I thought they were to be local—but it is all one, and I know you will do what is unquestionably best. There are now three wanted for Turning the tables. Miss Knibbs, Mrs. Humphries, Patty Larkins.

No, no—Good Night's rest, second, at Manchester, because of the Dressing. We are safe. They an't.†5

Ever Yours heartily

CD

Or couldn't you change your Punch day, at such a pass, and with such a notice, and make it Friday ? ? ? ? ? ? ? ? ? ?†6 I assure you my daily inconveniences and correspondence are overwhelming so that if I could draw (like you) I should represent myself thus†7

To DOUGLAS JERROLD, [9 JULY 1847][†1]

Mention in last. Envelope only, MS Dunedin Public Library. Date: PM Ramsgate 9 July 47. Address: Douglas Jerrold Esquire | West Lodge | Putney Heath | near London.

Asking Jerrold if he would like to take the part of Jeremiah Bumps in Turning the Tables.

To G. H. LEWES, 9 JULY 1847*

MS Berg Collection.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Ninth July 1847.

My Dear Lewes

Invest six pence in the purchase of Poole's Turning the Tables—Duncombe's Edition of the Acting Drama—No. 101, I think—get up Jack Humphries (an admirable part) and come prepared on the 17th.

Cordially

CD.

To H. P. SMITH, 9 JULY 1847†

MS Miss Mabel Hodge.

Broadstairs. Ninth July 1847.

My Dear Smith.

[†a]I don't think I have got the money!!—Don't be alarmed. I haven't spent it; but my solicitor wrote to ask me if I should like a good Mortgage at 5 per cent, and I told him yes, and I presume it will come off.[†2] I shall have no more to "dispoge"[†3] of, in that case, until two or three months hence. I had therefore best say "No. Engaged." to Mr. Kirby.[†a†4]

I am really more obliged to you for your kindness about the Eagle (as I always call your house[†5]) with its tiddle tol toor rul[†6] &c (as your singing doctor calls it) than I can say. But when I come to town, tomorrow week, for the Liverpool and Manchester plays, I shall have Kate and Georgy with me. Moreover, I shall be continually going out and coming in, at unholy hours. Item, the timid will come at impossible seasons, to "go over" their parts, with the Manager. Item, two Jews with musty sacks of dresses,[†1] will be constantly coming backwards and forwards. Item, sounds as of groans will be heard, while the Inimitable Boz is "getting" his words—which happens all day. Item, Forster will incessantly deliver an address by Bulwer. Item, one hundred letters per diem will arrive from Manchester and Liverpool; and five actresses, in very limp bonnets, with extraordinary veils attached to them, will be always calling, protected by five mothers.

No no, my actuary. Some congenial Tavern is the fitting scene for these things, if I don't get into Devonshire Terrace, whereof I have some spark of hope. Eagles couldn't look the Sun in the face,[†2] and have such enormities going on in their nests.

I am, for the time, that obscene thing, in short, now chronicled in the Marylebone register of births—

A Player[†3]

Though still Yours

CD.

To T. J. THOMPSON, 9 JULY 1847

MS Huntington Library.

Broadstairs | Ninth July 1847.

My Dear Thompson

Will you invest sixpence in the purchase of Turning the tables Duncombe's Edition of the Acting Drama (No. 101, I think) and get up Thornton;[†4] the part you spoke of. Come prepared on the 17th.

Ever

CD.

I write 100 letters a day, about these plays.

To JOHN FORSTER [10 JULY 1847]*

MS Private. Date: A note in another hand below CD's signature records "10/25 | 10 July 47",[†5] perhaps recording time of receipt as well as date.

To[†6] Mr. Forster, 58 Lincolns Inn Fields, London,[†7] Mr. Charles Dickens will come from Broadstairs today on business; arriving at London Bridge at a quarter to three. Mr. Forster, to find Mr. Douglas Jerrold, if possible.

CHARLES DICKENS

To WILLIAM JERDAN, [9 or 10 JULY 1847]

Mention in Jerdan to Hans Andersen, 11 July: see To Jerdan, 14 July 47, fn.

To ALEXANDER IRELAND, 11 JULY 1847†

MS Berg Collection.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Eleventh July 1847.

My Dear Sir

[†a]Did Mr. Knowles of the Manchester Theatre, ever act Shylock? He seems to me the very man for the part. His conception, in regard of the pound of flesh, I should think would be very fine.[†a]

I am much indebted to you for the present of your notice of Hunt's books.[†1] I cannot praise it better or more appropriately, than by saying it is in Hunt's own spirit, and most charmingly expressed. I had the most sincere and hearty pleasure in reading it.

Your announcement of the Working Man's Life, had attracted my attention, by reason of the title, which had a great interest to me.[†2] I hardly know why there is something wanting, to my fancy, in a certain genuine simple air I had looked for, in the first part. But there is great promise in it, and I shall be earnest to know how it proceeds.[†3]

Now, to leave these pleasant matters, and resume my managerial character, which I shall be heartily glad (between ourselves) to lay down again, though I have none but pleasant correspondents, and the most easily governable company of actors, on earth.

I have written to Mr. Robinson by this post, that I wish these words, from our original London circular, to stand atop of the bills, after "For the Benefit of Mr. Leigh Hunt."—

"It is proposed to devote a portion of the proceeds of this benefit, to the assistance of another celebrated writer—whose literary career is at an end, and who has no provision for the decline of his life."[†4]

I have also told him that there is no objection to its being known that this is Mr. Poole, the author of Paul Pry[†5] and Little Pedlington,[†6] and many comic pieces of great merit; and whose Farce of Turning the Tables we mean to finish with, at Manchester. Beyond what he will get from these benefits, he has no resource in this wide world, I know.[†1] There are reasons which make it desirable to get this fact abroad, and if you see no objection to paragraphing it at your office (sending the paragraph round, if you should please, to the other Manchester papers) I should be much obliged to you.

You may like to know, as a means of engendering a more complete individual interest in our actors, who they are. Jerrold and myself, you have heard of. Mr. George Cruikshank and Mr. Leech (the best caricaturists of any time perhaps) need no introduction. Mr. Frank Stone (a Manchester man)[†2] and Mr. Egg, are artists of high reputation. Mr. Forster is the critic of the Examiner, the author of the Lives of the Statesmen of the Commonwealth, and very distinguished as a writer in the Edinburgh Review. Mr. Lewes is also a man of great attainments in polite literature, and the author of a Novel published not long since, called Ranthorpe.[†3] Mr. Costello[†4] is a periodical writer, and a gentleman renowned as a Tourist.[†5] Mr. Mark Lemon is a dramatic author, and the Editor of Punch—a most excellent actor, as you will find. My brothers play small parts, for love, and have no greater note than the Treasury and the City confer on their disciples. Mr. Thompson is a private gentleman, [†b]who fell in love with Miss Weller, the fair piano forte player of Liverpool once upon a time, and married her.[†b] You may know all this; but I thought it possible you might like to hold the key to our full company. Pray use it, as you will.

My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To MARK LEMON, 11 JULY 1847

Text from Letters to Mark Lemon by CD, ed. T. J. Wise, privately printed, 1917, p. 7.

Broadstairs, | Sunday, Eleventh July, 1847.

My Dear Lemon,

The manner in which they are persecuting me, at Manchester and Liverpool, for the "full bill"! You can form no idea of it.

Can you tell me who plays these parts:—

Comfortable Lodgings {
Dame Kitely—
Bridget—
Madame Pelagie—Antoinette—

Turning the Tables {
Miss Knibbs—
Mrs. Humphries—
Patty Larkins—[†1]

For the love of mental repose in general, fill up these blanks with all speed, and return me the dramatis personae. So will I play up in tip-top style my Stranger and my Rigmarole.[†2]

Ever yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

To DR SHERIDAN MUSPRATT,[†3] 11 JULY 1847*

MS Miss Phyllis L. Ruddock.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Eleventh July 1847.

My Dear Sir

First let me thank you, for myself and for my brothers, for your most kind invitation.[†4] I would readily have accepted it; but as the President of the party, I should not have felt it right, under any circumstances, to desert my post at the head of the table; and I recollect an affecting appeal being made by the weaker vessels, at the outset of this enterprize, that we should "keep together", &c. &c. To this, I solemnly bound myself, in a patriarchal manner; and to Mr. Radley,[†5] I must render up myself, accordingly. But, I assure you, I thank you none the less.

Will you allow me to beg that in all future bills,[†6] after the words "for the Benefit of Mr. Leigh Hunt", which should now be printed after the name of the Theatre, these words, from our original London circular, may be added: viz:

"It is proposed to devote a portion of the proceeds of this benefit, to the assistance of another celebrated writer—whose literary career is at an end, and who has no provision for the decline of his life."[†7]

There is no objection to its being known that this is Mr. Poole, the author of Paul Pry, and little Pedlington, and many other productions of great celebrity and merit, who, without this assistance, has really no resource on earth. So far from its being objectionable to have this known, there are reasons which make it rather desirable. And if you could cause a paragraph to be inserted in any of the Liverpool papers, noticing this second clause, and saying, in effect, it was understood Mr. Poole was aimed at, I should be greatly beholden to you. He is distinctly referred to, in the address.[†1]

You do not mention the Liverpool night. I take it for granted it is the 28th.

I will send you the complete bill, as soon as I receive the names of the ladies from Mr. Lemon, to whom I have confided their engagements. Can you tell me, by return of Post, which Interlude you think would be best liked in Liverpool—"A Good Nights Rest, or Two o'Clock in the Morning"—very effective, and in which there are only two parts—played by Mr. Lemon and myself—or Mr. Poole's Farce of Turning the Tables, in which there are four or five parts, and which is also very droll. By return of post again, I will then send you the full bill, which, I take it, would come out with great effect, about Saturday next.

The Company are particularly anxious that nobody should come behind the scenes, while the performance is in progress—so anxious, that I mention it.

I have given Mr. Ireland of Manchester, a clue to the different performers, in case there be any whose names are not known in Liverpool and Manchester. If you would like to have that key, he will be happy to give it you I am sure—though I dare say he will notice it in his paper.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Dr. Sheridan Muspratt.

To MISS MARGUERITE POWER, [13] JULY 1847

Text from MDGH, I, 181-2. Date: misdated by CD; Tuesday was 13 July.

Broadstairs, Kent, Tuesday, July 14th, 1847.

My Dear Miss Power,

Though I am hopeless of Rosherville until after the 28th—for am I not beckoned, by angels of charity and by local committees, to Manchester and Liverpool, and to all sorts of bedevilments (if I may be allowed the expression) in the way of managerial miseries in the meantime—here I find myself falling into parenthesis within parenthesis, like Lord Brougham[†2]—yet will I joyfully come up to London on Friday, to dine at your house and meet the Dane,[†1] whose Books I honour, and whose—to make the sentiment complete, I want something that would sound like "Bones, I love!" but I can't get anything that unites reason with beauty. You, who have genius and beauty in your own person, will supply the gap in your kindness.

An advertisement in the newspapers mentioning the dinner-time, will be esteemed a favour.

Some wild beasts (in cages) have come down here, and involved us in a whirl of dissipation. A young lady in complete armour[†2]—at least, in something that shines very much, and is exceedingly scaley—goes into the den of ferocious lions, tigers, leopards, etc., and pretends to go to sleep upon the principal lion, upon which a rustic keeper, who speaks through his nose, exclaims, "Behold the abazid power of woobad!" and we all applaud tumultuously.

Seriously, she beats Van Amburgh. And I think the Duke of Wellington must have her painted by Landseer.

My penitential regards to Lady Blessington, Count D'Orsay, and my own Marchioness.[†3]

Ever, dear Miss Power, | Very faithfully yours

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To THOMAS BEARD, 14 JULY 1847

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | Morning Herald Office | Shoe Lane | Fleet Street.

Broadstairs | Fourteenth July 1847.

My Dear Beard

What are you a talking on? An't we coming to London (Victoria Hotel Euston Square) on Friday, to attend Rehearsals of charitable plays at Manchester and Liverpool? Shan't I be absent from here, until the 1st of August? Isn't my life weary along o' these draymers? That you should have been and gone and missed last Saturday! Wild beasts too, at Ramsgate, and a young lady in armour, as goes into the dens, while a rustic keeper who speaks through his nose, exclaims, "Beold the abazid power of woobbud!"

Never mind, never mind. The Margate Theatre's a going to open,[†1]—but there is no Conway Lingham. We will try the other actors. I understand there are some Pashangermarjits among 'em from whom much may be expected. We will discourse of all this, in the great metropolis.

Ever Heartily

CD

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 14 JULY 1847*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Coutts | Stratton Street.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Fourteenth July 1847.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I shall be in town next week (Victorial[†2] Hotel, Euston Square) and will come to you, either on Wednesday or Thursday Morning.[†3]

Always Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Charley thoroughly recovered—fat—and brown.

To [W. B. HODGSON], 14 JULY 1847*

MS Berg Collection.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Fourteenth July 1847.

My Dear Sir.

As I take it for granted that the proposed change in your way of life, is for the better,[†4] I congratulate you upon it, and as one who has a very sincere interest in you, am glad it is to take place. But I look upon your loss to that great Institution in Liverpool,[†5] as perfectly irreparable; and that, I cannot but regret.

I feel that we have wanted you, sorely, in reference to the Benefit. Their emendation of the Circular (between ourselves) was not judiciously made. I should like them to have stated plainly, exactly what I stated in my letter: namely, that without help, Hunt could really not enjoy his late pension. I send a line to that effect, today, for the top of the bills[†6]—to Dr. Sheridan Muspratt.

The inconsistency of the two scales of prices,[†7] is equally manifest. But I have the greatest confidence in your management; and when I suppose you to be at Liverpool, shall feel quite easy.

Mr. Ireland's article on Hunt,[†1] most excellent. He told me the Oxford letter was yours;[†2] and I read it with the greatest pleasure and satisfaction.[†3]

Always Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

To WILLIAM JERDAN, 14 JULY 1847

Text from W. T. Spencer catalogue No. 104 (1901). MS 1 p.; dated Broadstairs, 14 July 47.

My Dear Jerdan,[†4]

I dine at Gore House on Friday, when we will discuss our great question.[†5] Tell Andersen not to let the Nimrods[†6] of London kill him, but to live and write more books. I mean, if I can, to live and read 'em.[†7]

Ever yours, dear Jerdan,
CHARLES DICKENS

To DR SHERIDAN MUSPRATT, [14 JULY 1847]

Mention in To Hodgson, 14 July, possibly with the "full bill"[†8] and notes on the performers,[†9] mentioned in To Muspratt, 11 July.

To [WILLIAM] PHILLIPS,[†1] 14 JULY 1847*

MS Private.

Broadstairs, Kent | Fourteenth July 1847.

My Dear Sir

Will you have the goodness, whenever you shall receive a request to that effect from Sir James Duke, to send a clerk to Devonshire Terrace, to go over the inventory[†2] at such time as he may appoint? I will take care to have a servant there, at the same time, to occupy the house.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

—— Phillips Esquire

To JOHN FORSTER [?9-19 JULY 1847]

Extracts in F, VI, i, 456. Dates: from various letters according to Forster, but not necessarily in Forster's order followed below; the last extract c. 19 July, "ten days after the casting" which was not before 9 July; all have a note of urgency suggesting that the rehearsals were fairly well advanced. Forster says they were about both farces and comedies, but especially farces.

Good Heaven! I find that A.[†3] hasn't twelve words, and I am in hourly expectation of rebellion!

You were right about the green baize, that it would certainly muffle the voices; and some of our actors, by Jove, haven't too much of that commodity at the best.

B. shocked me so much the other night by a restless, stupid movement of his hands in his first scene with you,[†4] that I took a turn of an hour with him yesterday morning, and I hope quieted his nerves a little.

I made a desperate effort to get C. to give up his part. Yet in spite of all the trouble he gives me I am sorry for him, he is so evidently hurt by his own sense of not doing well. He clutched the part, however, tenaciously; and three weary times we dragged through it last night.

That infernal E. forgets everything.

I plainly see that F. when nervous, which he is sure to be, loses his memory. Moreover his asides are inaudible, even at Miss Kelly's; and as regularly as I stop him to say them again, he exclaims (with a face of agony) that "he'll speak loud on the night", as if anybody ever did without doing it always!

G. not born for it at all, and too innately conceited, I much fear, to do anything well. I thought him better last night, but I would as soon laugh at a kitchen poker.

Fancy H,[†1] ten days after the casting of that farce, wanting F.'s part therein! Having himself an excellent old man in it already, and a quite admirable part in the other farce.

To RICHARD CREED,[†2] 22 JULY 1847*

MS Railway Museum, York.

Victoria Hotel. | Thursday Twenty Second July 1847.

Sir.

I had the honor of calling on you at your office[†3] this morning, and sent a card to you by one of the gentlemen there. But you were busily engaged and could not be found. Hence, I trouble you with this note.

What I desired to say, is, that a large party of gentlemen connected with Literature and Art, purpose going to Manchester, on a public occasion, by the Ten o'Clock train on Sunday Morning next. As they are under my guidance, I shall be much obliged if you will direct four compartments of first class carriages to be marked "Engaged", in my name (there will be four and twenty persons in the party); and that if I could, consistently with the official regulations, pay the fares beforehand, it would be an additional convenience, perhaps.[†4]

I am Sir | Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

R. Creed Esquire.

To JAMES RADLEY, 22 JULY 1847*

MS Huntington Library.

Victoria Hotel, Euston Square, London | Twenty Second July 1847.

Dear Mr. Radley.

The whole Amateur Company intend making a descent on your house[†5] on Tuesday.[†6] I send you, on the other side, a list of the bedrooms we shall require; and to prevent confusion on the arrival of so large a party, I think it will be a wise arrangement if you will have the name of each bedroom's occupant, put up outside the door. We shall require a pretty large sitting-room, I need not say—and dinner on Tuesday, if you please, at 5 o'Clock.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Bedrooms.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Dickens	33[†1]
Miss Hogarth	29
Mr. and Mrs. Lemon	30
Mr. and Mrs. Leech	20
Mr. and Mrs. Thompson[†2]	11
Mrs. Shaw	19
Mr. and Mrs. Costello	21
Mr. and Mrs. Lewes	23
Mrs. Wigan	55
Mr. Jerrold	56
Mr. Forster	58
Mr. Willmot	59
Mr. Stone	60
Mr. Maclise	82
Mr. George Cruikshank	83
Mr. Egg	72
Mr. A. Dickens	9
Mr. F. Dickens	9	18 bedrooms in all.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, [23 or 24 JULY 1847]*

MS Morgan Library. Date: Friday was 23 July, but see fn.

Finchley | Friday

My Dear Miss Coutts. I came out this morning with Mrs. Dickens, in the hope of seeing you. I am going to Manchester tomorrow,[†3] and purpose returning on Thursday next. I will take my chance of finding you out here, next morning—Friday—unless I should hear (by note addressed to me at the Victoria Hotel Euston Square) that you will be in town instead.

Always Dear Miss Coutts | Faithfully Yours

CD.

To HANS CHRISTIAN ANDERSEN, 30 [JULY] 1847

MS Royal Library, Copenhagen. Date: misdated by CD; he returned on 30 July.

Victoria Hotel, Euston Square.
Friday Night Thirtieth August 1847.

My Dear Sir.

Returning to town this evening from Liverpool, four and twenty hours later than I had expected, I am sorry to find that my tenant,[†1] having some opposition to his election in Scotland[†2] (for he is a Member of Parliament) has gone out of town hurriedly, and entreated me to allow him to remain in occupation of my house, a fortnight longer. In addition to this vexatious circumstance, a lady who came back with us has been taken ill here, and there is great confusion and distress in consequence:[†3] the hotel being very full.

I write this hasty note to express my regret that I find myself, thus unexpectedly, without a house and home to receive you in on Sunday Morning,[†4] and am forced—sorely against my will—to postpone the pleasure of seeing you as my guest, until your next visit to London. I will do myself the pleasure of calling on you tomorrow at about 2 o'Clock, to express my regret in person, and to bring you those books which you made me happy by saying would be acceptable to you.[†5]

My Dear Sir I am always, with admiration and regard,

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Hans Andersen Esquire

To HANS CHRISTIAN ANDERSEN, [30 JULY 1847]

MS Royal Library, Copenhagen. Date: confirmed by Andersen's diary (see E. Bredsdorff, Hans Andersen and CD, 1956, p. 22).

In Your room | Saturday ½ past 2

My Dear Sir

I call on you, and find you, unfortunately, from home—Accept the little parcel of books[†6] I leave with this—and write me one line addressed to me at "Broadstairs, Kent" telling me when you leave town.

Faithfully Yours ever
CHARLES DICKENS

Hans Christian Andersen Esquire.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, [31 JULY 1847]

MS Morgan Library. Date: CD had returned from Liverpool on Fri 30 July.

Stratton Street | Saturday

My Dear Miss Coutts

I seem fated to miss you. Having been detained in Liverpool a day longer than I had expected,[†1] I did not reach Town until 9 o'Clock last night. To day I fear it will be impossible for me to get to Finchley; and I have promised the children that I will be at Broadstairs tomorrow, to dine with them.

I shall see Mr. Chesterton today, and learn from him how the business of the Lease[†2] is progressing. I can easily come to town in a few hours, whenever you wish to see me, and by taking the Express train can easily reach here any day by 12 o'Clock. Supposing nothing arises to produce a summons from you (for which, however, I shall always be in readiness, as I can return on the same day, in case I should be busy at the time) I will write to you some few days before my next visit to town, which I think will be on this day fortnight, and make an appointment for bringing the Matron.[†3] All the initiative proceedings in the way of alteration and adaptation are quite understood between Mr. Chesterton and myself, and ready to be entered upon, as soon as the Lease is settled. I understand from him that the delay is not attributable in any way to your solicitor, but to the determination of our side that you are not to be taken advantage of, because of your position. Which is sound sense and justice.

You will be glad to hear that our Nurse writes great news of the disappearance of the whooping cough, and that Charley is every day more robust and hearty.

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most faithfully Yours
CD.

August

To THE SUPERINTENDENT OF THE LOST LUGGAGE DEPARTMENT, 1 AUGUST 1847*

MS The Misses Schön.

Broadstairs Kent. | Sunday First August 1847.

Sir.

I beg to solicit your good offices in reference to a dark green dispatch box, with a brass handle in the lid, but without any name or other mark outside, which was by some means mislaid on the Railway, between Liverpool and London, on Friday last.

I left Liverpool by the eleven o'Clock day train, and put the box myself in the coupé[†1] of a Mail carriage, which the superintendent of the Station there, had the goodness to set aside for the convenience of myself and my party. I travelled in the coupé as far as Whitmore.[†2] My companion alighting at that part of the line, I took my seat in another compartment of the same Mail carriage—forgetting, however, to remove the box, which was under the seat. When I arrived in London with my companions (who occupied the whole mail carriage, exclusive of the coupé) the box was not to be found; and my impression is, that it must have been taken out, for safety's sake, by some servant of the Company at Birmingham. It is possible however that this may have been done, even in London, as some delay arose before I enquired about it, in consequence of the sudden indisposition of a lady[†3] in the centre compartment of the Mail.

My servant made some enquiries at the London Terminus, both yesterday and this morning, respecting this box. As there was no intelligence of it, and as I left town for this place this morning, I beg to say that I am exceedingly anxious to recover it, and that Mr. Horne of the Victoria Hotel Euston Square, will be happy to take charge of it, if it be found. I have very little fear of its being lost, if you will do me the favor to institute a search for it.[†4]

I have the honor to be | Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Superintendent | of | The Lost Luggage Department

To THOMAS BEARD, 2 AUGUST 1847

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | Morning Herald Office | Shoe Lane | Fleet Street | London.

Broadstairs | Monday Second August 1847.

My Dear Beard

We are returned after a most brilliant and successful trip;[†5] and are now anchored in this port—as we seafaring men observe—and hoping to see you. If you don't come down on Saturday, my opinion is that you are done for, so far as your character for reliability is concerned.

Every Yours Heartily
CD.
Loves from all
Thomas Beard Esquire

To MISS FANNY KELLY, 2 AUGUST 1847

Extract in N, II, 45 (from catalogue source); dated Broadstairs, 2 Aug 47.

As I am making up the accounts of the late benefit which you will be glad to hear has been brilliantly successful, will you do me the favour to send me a memorandum by post of the amount in which we all are indebted to you.

To JOHN FORSTER, [3 AUGUST 1847]

Extract in F, VI, i, 458. Date: 3 Aug according to Forster.

All well. Children immensely improved.[†1] Business arising out of the late blaze of triumph, worse than ever.[†2]

To MARK LEMON, 3 AUGUST 1847

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Tuesday August Third 1847.

My Dear Lemon.

Many thanks for the Manchester Notice[†3]—the best I have seen, I think—of course.

What a tremendous chance that Leech's little girl was not born on the Railway! I trust in God, having gone so far, all will go on well and happily.

Mrs. Dickens wants to know—and so do I—why you and Mrs. Lemon can't make a start down here, either by boat or rail (I prefer boat) and stay two or three days with us. We can give you everything but a bed, and that we can provide for you, next door. It is the quietest little place in the world—the sea, delicious—nobody to mind, or dress for—a hearty welcome—and an opportunity for you and me to discuss one or two little points about the business matters of the late blaze of triumph, which will be very useful. Come! Say when! Kate sends love to Mrs. Lemon, and calls upon her to say when! All times are alike to us.

I find that charging every gentleman with his own lady, and not charging the ladies to the general body (which on this occasion at all events I think the most independent, and the fairest way) a whip of £3..10..0 each will handsomely and generously pay the wine charges on the late trip. Will you receive the various contributions, and when you have them all, or a good round sum, pay it in to my account at Coutts's? I write to everybody by this post, begging them to remit their money to you, and informing all that as soon as the accounts are all got in, everybody shall receive a copy of the balance sheet I will make out.[†1] Egg's letter I enclose to you, as I don't know his address.

Do you think it quite consistent that Nathan should charge us £25 for each night, when on one night the dresses for Comfortable Lodgings were not used?[†2]

Wilson's charges[†3] I suppose you have not yet got, as he came down to Herne Bay[†4] in the same boat with me last Sunday, on his way to the bewigment of the Canterbury amateurs.[†5]

Ever My Dear Lemon | Cordially Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Will you get from B and E, their charges for printing and paper,[†6] as against the dropped Covent Garden Benefits?
Mark Lemon Esquire

I ought to repay you for your dinner on the day you left Liverpool. And I will, if you will tell me the amount.

To G. H. LEWES, 3 AUGUST 1847*

MS Berg Collection.

(Circular)

Broadstairs, Kent. | Third August 1847.

My Dear Lewes

I send you on the other side, a Statement of your debt to the Fund. Will you remit the amount to Mark Lemon, Punch Office, 85 Fleet Street.

I will send you a copy of the complete balance sheet, as soon as it can be made out.

Faithfully Yours

CD.

G. H. Lewes Esquire.

G. H. Lewes Esquire

G. H. Lewes Esquire

1 lady's Railroad fare	1..	17..	6
Do. Hotel Expences, five days and a half	5..	15..	6
Your Wine subscription	3..	10..	0
	£11..	3.	0

Add Railroad fare to Liverpool—		6.	6
	£11	9.	6

To FRANK STONE, 3 AUGUST 1847*

MS Benoliel Collection.

(Circular)

Broadstairs, Kent | Third August 1847.

My Dear Stone.

Going through the accounts, and charging each gentleman with his own lady or ladies, I find that a subscription of £3..10..0 each, for Wine, will be a sufficient and very handsome relief to the benefit fund, on the score of hotel charges.

Will you be so kind as to remit that amount to Mark Lemon 85 Fleet Street? I will send you a copy of the final and complete balance sheet, as soon as it can be made out.

Faithfully Yours always

CD.

Frank Stone Esquire.

To T. J. THOMPSON, 3 AUGUST 1847

MS Huntington Library.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Tuesday Third August 1847.

My Dear Thompson.

I send you, on the other side, your debit to the Benefit Fund. Will you remit the amount to Mark Lemon 85 Fleet Street, or at Bradbury and Evans's Whitefriars.

As soon as the accounts are all got in and settled, I will send you a copy of the balance sheet.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

T. J. Thompson Esquire

T. J. Thompson Esquire

1 lady's fare by Railway	1..	17..	6
Do. Hotel charges, 5 days and a half at a guinea	5..	15..	6

Do. Mrs. Shaw,[†1] say four days	4..	4..	0
Do. for servant, say	1..	0..	0
Your wine subscription	3..	10..	0
2 lady's railroad fares to Liverpool	—..	13..	0
	£17..	0..	0
Add servants Railway fares	1..	16..	6
	£18.	16.	6[†2]

To MARY DICKENS, 4 AUGUST 1847

Text from MDGH, I, 182-3.

Broadstairs, Wednesday, August 4th, 1847.

My Dearest Mamey,

I am delighted to hear that you are going to improve in your spelling, because nobody can write properly without spelling well. But I know you will learn whatever you are taught, because you are always good, industrious, and attentive. That is what I always say of my Mamey.

The note you sent me this morning is a very nice one, and the spelling is beautiful.

Always, my dear Mamey,

Your affectionate Papa.

To JOHN FORSTER, [4 AUGUST 1847]

Extract in F, VI, i, 458. Date: 4 Aug according to Forster.

Saying that he wanted to add a further £100 to the fund[†3] raised by the Amateur players, by writing a little jeu d'esprit in the form of a history of the trip, to be published with illustrations from the artists; and his notion was to write it in the character of Mrs Gamp.[†1] The title-page would describe it as an Account of a late Expedition into the North, for an Amateur Theatrical Benefit, written by Mrs. Gamp (who was an eye-witness), Inscribed to Mrs. Harris, Edited by Charles Dickens, and published, with illustrations on wood by so and so, in aid of the Benefit-fund.

What do you think of this idea for it? The argument would be, that Mrs. Gamp, being on the eve of an excursion to Margate as a relief from her professional fatigues, comes to the knowledge of the intended excursion of our party; hears that several of the ladies concerned are in an interesting situation;[†2] and decides to accompany the party unbeknown, in a second-class carriage—"in case". There, she finds a gentleman from the Strand in a checked suit, who is going down with the wigs[†3] and to his politeness Mrs. Gamp is indebted for much support and countenance during the excursion. She will describe the whole thing in her own manner: sitting, in each place of performance, in the orchestra, next the gentleman who plays the kettle-drums. She gives her critical opinion of Ben Jonson as a literary character, and refers to the different members of the party, in the course of her description of the trip: having always an invincible animosity towards Jerrold, for Caudle reasons.[†4] She addresses herself, generally, to Mrs. Harris, to whom the book is dedicated,—but is discursive. Amount of matter, half a sheet of Dombey: may be a page or so more, but not less.[†5] Mac will make a little garland of the ladies for the title-page. Egg and Stone will themselves originate something fanciful, and I will settle with Cruikshank and Leech. I have no doubt the little thing will be droll and attractive.

To W. B. HODGSON, [4 AUGUST 1847]

Mention in next.

To ALEXANDER IRELAND, 4 AUGUST 1847*

Text from typescript, Huntington Library.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Wednesday Fourth August | 1847.

My Dear Sir,

See what comes of your being so kind as to give me leave to trouble you.

May I ask the favour of your sending round the advertisement written on the other side, to all the respectable Manchester papers, and paying for its insertion, once in each.[†1] If you will send me a note of the cost, I will forward you, by return, a Post Office order for the amount.

I have sent a counterpart to Hodgson at Liverpool,[†2] with a similar request in reference to the Liverpool papers. The counterpart has reference to Liverpool, of course, and goes by this post.

My Dear Sir,
[CHARLES DICKENS][†3]

To A. Ireland Esquire.

To EDWARD CHAPMAN, 6 AUGUST 1847*

MS Morgan Library.

Broadstairs. | Sixth August 1847.

My Dear Sir

When you have the halfyear's accounts to the end of June, made out, will you post them to me here, as I am anxious to look over them, with a view to the cheap Edition.[†4]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Edward Chapman Esquire.

To MARK LEMON, 6 AUGUST 1847

Text from Letters to Mark Lemon by CD, ed. T. J. Wise, pp. 7-8.

Broadstairs, | Friday, Sixth August, 1847.

My Dear Lemon,

Write about!—Lord love you, I have a million of theatrical things to write about to you, if I had time and pens. Forster will have told you by this time of my notion of the book.[†1] I hope you'll like it. I think it will be funny.

If you don't go to America with the money (which I wouldn't, if I were you, because, under the late treaty,[†2] the Republic will give you up—when you have spent it) of course you must come here with Mrs. Lemon. I have been revolving the Prospectus of the new Association[†3] in my head to such a devil of an extent that I am ready—though I haven't attached your plan to it—and in one fine morning on the sands we could fix it in black and white. All you have got to do is to write and say when you are coming. Please do that, Mister Rigmarole,[†4] and I'll meet you on the shore whenever and wherever it be. I should recommend a Margate boat, with a view to Mrs. Lemon.

Poor Leech! I have a ludicrous idea of him in that smallest of coops.[†5] But the comicality is tempered and chastened in my mind by a fore-knowledge of the bill. It is the very dearest house I know.

I enclose two cheques. One (crossed) of £55 15 0, for Nathan—one, not crossed, of £3, for Miss Romer.[†6]

Here's the African Roscius playing at Margate.[†7] We must go, you know.

Kate and her sister send loves to Mrs. Lemon. I send anything that will be taken in.

Ever yours heartily,
CHARLES DICKENS.

Will you tell Wilson to send me his account directly? I am mad to get the balance-sheet disposed of.

To R. B. PEAKE, 6 AUGUST 1847*

MS Chicago University Library.

Broadstairs. | Sixth August 1847.

My Dear Sir

I send you immediately, the balance due on the Covent Garden expenditure.[†1]

The country performances went off with astonishing success. Such brilliant audiences, and such extraordinarily generous responses to the appeal made, one could hardly have imagined possible.

I will not fail to let you know the result, as soon as I am enabled, by having all the documents together, to make out the balance sheet. "I have an idea"[†2] as somebody says in one of those dismal Morton[†3] Comedies, which shall be yours anon.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

R. B. Peake Esquire.

To THOMAS MITTON, 8 AUGUST 1847*

MS The Royal Shakespeare Theatre Library.

Broadstairs | Sunday Eighth August 1847.

My Dear Mitton

I should have sent you those newspapers which crossed your letter, sooner; but a Dispatch box of mine containing them, was lost upon the railway coming home,[†4] and not recovered here, until last Friday.

The success was brilliant, and you can imagine nothing like the reception they gave me at both places—standing up as one person, and shouting incessantly for a good ten minutes.[†5] The whole company acted excellently—I do not think any of them could have done better. It was hard work of course, for we were at it all day. But, at night, a very beautiful scene indeed—the Theatres being both large and crammed to the roof with people in full dress, who "took" everything in a manner I never saw equalled.[†6] We received nine hundred pounds, odd! But the expences are large, by reason of the charges incurred for the dropped Covent Garden Benefit.

I intend turning this to account once a year, and trying to shame the English Government, by giving as much every year to the reduced professors of Art, Literature, and Science, as the whole Civil List gives, on account of Great Britain. I have a scheme[†1] in my head for the purpose.

So I hope you will, one of these days see that Two o'Clock in the Morning, which, though I say it as shouldn't, is the best done thing, from beginning to end, and the drollest, you ever saw. The people laughed so, at it, at Manchester—as the grave Court did at the St. James's[†2]—that it was impossible to keep a grave face, and all but impossible to go on. I never heard or saw such laughing in a theatre. The people were drooping over the fronts of the boxes like fruit. And the carpenters and people behind, who were attending to the machinery of the scene (of which there is a good deal) had the most ridiculous tears rolling down their faces all the time.

I couldn't stand upon my legs on the Thursday after the Liverpool night: having been upon them, in the Theatre, fourteen hours[†3]—and the same at Manchester—and having danced, like a Madman on the Tuesday night.[†4] I was obliged to stay at Liverpool all Thursday, to rest.[†5] Before acting on the Wednesday night, I had a mustard poultice on my throat—being hoarse—and ate a bushel of anchovies, without bread or anything else, in the course of the evening, to keep my voice going! the oldest and best theatrical recipe.

Nothing could have been more complete. It amply repaid all trouble, and was perfectly splendid.

We have quite got over the whooping cough, thank God. I propose staying here, until the end of September. Let me hear where you go, and how you get on. I'll pay Roper.[†6] I may possibly call upon you on Tuesday next, but don't wait in, as it is very uncertain. Faithfully Ever

CD.

To MESSRS COUTTS & CO., 11 AUGUST 1847*

MS Mrs M. Long-Fox.

Broadstairs | Eleventh August 1847

Gentlemen

I beg to say, in reference to your obliging letter of the 9th. Instant, that the amount paid in as from Mr. Mark Lemon,[†1] is not the sum from Liverpool to which I referred. The latter will amount, according to my calculation, to £352, odd shillings.[†2]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Coutts & Co.

To MISS FANNY KELLY, 11 AUGUST 1847

Mention in Autograph Prices Current, III (1917-18); MS 1 p.; dated Broadstairs, 11 Aug 47.

Sending her a cheque for £5[†3] for 10 rehearsals at her theatre.

To MARK LEMON, 11 AUGUST 1847

MS Benoliel Collection.

Broadstairs | Wednesday Eleventh August 1847.

My Dear Lemon

Your note was put into my hands yesterday, as I was rushing off to catch the train.

Thompson is quite right. I return his letter and cheque (crossed).[†4]

Come along!

Ever Yours

CD.

I also enclose a cheque for Wilson, if you will have the kindness to give it to him. I have paid Miss Kelly £5. Whenever you are near there,[†5] will you knock at the door, and give that most miserable of porters—himself, or he'll never get it—one sovereign, which I will repay you?

To MARK LEMON, 11 AUGUST 1847

MS Mr Ashley W. Olmsted. Address: Mark Lemon Esquire | 11 Bouverie Street.

No. 2.

Broadstairs. | Wednesday Eleventh August 1847

My Dear Lemon

I was beginning Dombey when I dispatched my other and bulkier missive[†1] to you this morning,—and forgot the little book.

I think it will be best to substitute for "The New Piljans Projiss", either—

Mrs. Gamp's Vacation

or

Mrs. Gamp in the Provinces

—retaining the rest of the title.[†2] I have thought of several other titles, but of none that suggests the matter, or that is so easily asked for, as these.

Ever

CD.

To G. H. LEWES, 11 AUGUST 1847

MS Berg Collection.

Broadstairs. | Eleventh August 1847.

My Dear Lewes

The delay has arisen in my desire to accept Giles Homespun's[†3] invitation (honest Man!) and in my casting about for a way of doing so. But I haven't found it—after more trials than you have any idea of—for I am hard and fast here, until October. Not with work alone (that I could do in Staffordshire)[†4] but with family-visitors, and other bedevilments of that nature, which perplex a man who has had the misfortune in infancy to pray for the welfare of a great many relations and friends.

I enclose a note for Giles. I shouldn't wonder if he were to ask me again, at some odd time or another.

I am at a great loss for a means of blowing my superfluous steam off, now the play is over—but that is always my misfortune—and find myself compelled to tear up and down, between this and London, by express trains. The little book descriptive of the Amateur Theatricals is nearly done. It is written by Mrs.

Gamp, and inscribed to Mrs. Harris. It seems that Mrs. Gamp, hearing of the expedition, and being informed that several of the ladies attached to it were in various stages of an interesting state, accompanied it, unbeknown, in a second cladge carriage, on the chance of being called in.

I wonder she wasn't—seeing that Mrs. Leech was taken ill at the London Station—wheeled to the Victoria Hotel in a Bath chair—and there confined triumphantly. She was in my carriage; so I was a witness to the seizure and the wheeling. She is a capital little woman, and I'm glad its over.

From any future personal participation in such achievements, may the humble individual who now addresses you (father of seven young children) be himself delivered!

Ever Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

I am reading Ranthorpe[†1] with great interest and pleasure. More of that, anon.

To [?SWYNFEN JERVIS],[†2] 11 AUGUST 1847

Mention in last.

To THOMAS BEARD, 12 AUGUST 1847

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | Morning Herald Office | Shoe Lane | London.

Broadstairs. | Twelfth August 1847.

My Dear Beard

You have been prepared for, and expected, ever since we have been here; and unless you do come next Saturday, my opinion is, that it's all up with you in this family. Therefore the Express had better produce you in Ramsgate at halfpast 7 on that evening, or I won't answer for the consequences.

You will find Costello and his wife[†3] here,[†4] I think. We will endeavour to be jolly.

I am happy to say that I have discovered old Lingham (Conway's father) at the Margate Theatre. The son's style, and massive manner, ripened and matured in the father by excessive age, presents a spectacle of the most astonishing and perplexing nature to a contemplative mind.

Ever Heartily
CD.

To J. C. PRINCE,[†1] 12 AUGUST 1847*

MS Morgan Library.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Twelfth August 1847.

Dear Mr. Prince

I received your two letters together, to day. I entreat you to accept of the enclosed as my subscription to your book,[†2] and with it my best wishes, and the assurance of my regard.

I write hastily, not to lose the post.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. John C. Prince

To HENRY WATSON,[†3] 15 AUGUST 1847

MS County Museum, Aylesbury. Address: Henry Watson Esquire, Aylesbury.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Fifteenth August 1847.

Sir.

I greatly regret to say that I cannot have the great pleasure of accepting the invitation with which I am honored, to the dinner at Aylesbury[†4] to my friend Lord Nugent.

Few public occasions could, I assure you, be more truly interesting to me than one which at once recognizes Lord Nugent's worth, and his devotion to those liberal and enlightened principles of which he has ever been the able and consistent champion.[†5] No slight engagement or occupation[†6] should stand between me and it. But business which admits of no postponement demands this sacrifice from me, and I cannot help myself.[†7]

I am Sir, | With much regret, | Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

Henry Watson Esquire

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 17 AUGUST 1847*

MS Morgan Library.

Broadstairs. | Seventeenth August 1847.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I am very much behind-hand with my month's work, having been delayed by other business. I fear that I shall not be able to call on you in town before the 26th. or 27th. but on one of those days I hope, certainly, to present myself in Stratton Street.

Before I received your last note, I had been again in communication with Mr. Chesterton, from whom I had heard of the conclusion of the Lease. As he and I had previously agreed upon the alterations to be made, and the contractor to be employed, I begged him to have the estimate made and the work begun without loss of time. Which I have no doubt is already done.

In great haste | Always Yours most faithfully

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To JOHN TAYLOR,†1 [17 AUGUST 1847]

Mention in next.

To JOHN FOWLER,†2 17 AUGUST 1847*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Broadstairs, Kent | Seventeenth August 1847.

Sir.

I have written by this post to Mr. Taylor, expressing my regret that it is quite impossible for me, in the midst of pressing avocations that cannot be postponed, to accept the Committee's Invitation.

You may suppose that this time of the year is a particularly inconvenient one to me for such a purpose, when I tell you that I have been obliged to decline some half a dozen similar requests within this fortnight, and have not been able to promise to go to Leeds†3 for a like purpose, until December.

I am Sir†4

[CHARLES DICKENS]

John Fowler Esquire.

To JOHN FORSTER, [23 AUGUST 1847]

Extracts in F, VI, i, 465, aa in footnote, bb in text. Date: 23 Aug according to Forster.

[a]Here we are in the noble old premises; and very nice they look, all things considered.[†1] . . . Trifles happen to me which occur to nobody else. My portmanteau "fell off" a cab last night somewhere between London-bridge and here. It contained on a moderate calculation £70 worth of clothes. I have no shirt to put on, and am obliged to send out to a barber to come and shave me.[a]

[b]Thank God! the MS. of the chapter wasn't in it.[†2] Whenever I travel, and have anything of that valuable article, I always carry it in my pocket.[b†3]

To W. P. FRITH,[†4] 24 AUGUST 1847

MS Victoria & Albert Museum.

1 Devonshire Terrace | Tuesday August Twenty Fourth | 1847.

My Dear Sir

I shall be very much obliged to you if you will make enquiry after Kate Nickleby, and get her sent back to me. I am newly returned to my own house here, and am very anxious to get it thoroughly in order. I am very incomplete without the presence of that young lady, to which I attach great value.[†5]

Believe me | Very truly Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

W. P. Frith Esquire

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 26 AUGUST 1847

MS Morgan Library.

At your house in town.

Thursday Twenty Sixth August 1847.

Dear Miss Coutts. I have missed you—of course. But before coming here, I went to Mr. Chesterton, and from him heard what you had done this morning. I am going to see the Matron tomorrow, and we are afterwards going to the house. Several of the proposed inmates have passed in review before me this morning, at Mr. Chesterton's prison; and though they necessarily present a most distressing subject for contemplation, it is still a most hopeful and encouraging one.[†1] The Matron of that place,[†2] who is very intelligent and has (as you may suppose) great experience, told me this morning (not knowing my strong conviction on that head) that she was sure it was of great importance to the design, to hold before them, as prominently as possible, their final restoration to society, and their hope of becoming wives, in another country.[†3] Nothing would touch them so much, she said, and nothing else would give them such earnest emotions of gratitude, or inspire them with such a desire to do well. To observe the effect of this upon them, is one of the most touching things you can imagine.

I hope we shall be ready, very early in October, to shew you the Institution in perfect order. If you would not dislike it, I should particularly like you—you can sit in the room perfectly unnoticed and unknown—to see, at Mr. Chesterton's House of Correction, the young women who are coming from there, as they are, and in their prison dresses.[†4] You will feel so much more, afterwards, the change that with God's leave, will be worked in them.

I am going back to Broadstairs on Saturday morning, and shall remain there, until the end of September, when I return to my own house in Devonshire Terrace, which my tenant has, at last, deserted. I heard that some one on your behalf had been looking at a house at Broadstairs. Some faint hope was lingering within me that you might be coming there after all, until I read in your letter that you were going to Sandgate.

Will you tell Mrs. Brown that I hope she will soon see that mysterious inside of my house, which has been a Blue Chamber[†1] for so many years. It looks almost strange to me now; it is so long since I have seen it.

Dear Miss Coutts | Yours most faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

To FRANK STONE, 26 AUGUST 1847*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Devonshire Terrace. | Twenty Sixth August 1847.

My Dear Stone.

The Ten (10) o'Clock Margate Boat, from London Bridge wharf on Saturday Morning. We will be aboard in good time, as Margate boats on Saturday mornings[†2] are raythe crowded.

Always affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

Frank Stone Esquire

To [?CHARLES] HERBERT,[†3] 28 AUGUST 1847

Text from John Waller catalogue No. 97 (1873); MS 1 p.; dated Broadstairs, 28 Aug 47. Address: probably Charles Herbert, as on 22 Dec 48.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Herbert, and regrets that his vote for the Orphan Working School election[†4] is already promised.

To SAMUEL PHELPS, 29 AUGUST 1847

MS Dickens House.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Twenty Ninth August 1847.

Dear Sir.

I cannot resist the impulse I feel to thank you for the very great pleasure I derived from the representation of Cymbeline at your Theatre on Thursday night.[†5] The excellent sense, taste, and feeling, manifested throughout—the great beauty of all the stage arrangements—and the respectful consideration (so to speak) shewn by everyone concerned, for the creation of the poet—gave me extraordinary gratification. Nor could I readily express to you, if I were to try, how strong a sense I have of the great service such a Theatre renders to all who visit it, and to the general cause of Literature and Art.[†1]

Even at the risk of seeming to intrude this sense upon you, I really cannot help assuring you of my warm interest and admiration. And perhaps you will receive my note with the greater favor, when I confess to having resisted a similar impulse after two or three former visits to Sadlers Wells, in my unwillingness to trouble you.

Let me hope that I may have the pleasure of associating my public knowledge of you, with a more private and personal one when I return to town in October. And believe me

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

—— Phelps Esquire.

To HANS CHRISTIAN ANDERSEN, 30 AUGUST 1847

MS Hans Andersen House, Odense.

37 Albion Street, Broadstairs
(next door but one to the Albion Hotel)
Thirtieth August 1847.

My Dear Andersen.

I am delighted to receive your cordial note.[†2] We are crowded together here—wife, children, and all—in a little house on the seashore. Come and look at us at five o'Clock exactly to day, and share our family dinner. We have nobody staying with us, but Mr. Stone, a clever artist; and we shall all be heartily pleased to see you.[†3]

When you come back to England—which you must take an oath today, to do soon—I shall hope to see you often in my own house in London, where I have a few little pictures and so forth, that I hope may interest you.[†1] But wheresoever you are, believe that I always am

Your friend and admirer

CHARLES DICKENS

Hans Christian Andersen.

To EDWARD CHAPMAN, 31 AUGUST 1847*

MS Morgan Library.

Broadstairs | Thirty First August 1847.

My Dear Sir.

My chief interest in the past halfyear's accounts, was in the accounts of the re-issue.[†2] But if they cannot be made out now, there is no help for it, and I must wait until they can be. Meantime my interest will by no means decay, but quite the contrary.[†3]

The balance on the other accounts,[†4] you can pay into Coutts's, if you please, as usual.[†5]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Edward Chapman Esquire.

To FRANZ DUNCKER,[†6] 31 AUGUST 1847*

MS Mr and Mrs Robert Abrahams.

Broadstairs | Thirty First August 1847.

Dear Sir

I hasten to reply to your letter, in case I should not have the pleasure of seeing you, when you come towards this part of the country.

It is most probable that there will be a Christmas book this year, written by me, and published by Messrs. Bradbury and Evans.[†7] If there be, it will be published sometime between the first and tenth of December; and it will be illustrated with woodcuts. Late in October I shall be able to give you (through the publishers) more detailed and decisive information on the subject, but I fear not earlier.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Franz Duncker Esquire

September

To JOHN FORSTER, [2 SEPTEMBER 1847]

Extracts in F, VI, i, 463-4.[†1] Date: 2 Sep according to Forster.

At Canterbury yesterday I bought George Cruikshank's Bottle.[†2] I think it very powerful indeed: the two last plates most admirable,[†3] except that the boy and girl in the very last are too young, and the girl more like a circus-phenomenon[†4] than that no-phenomenon she is intended to represent. I question, however, whether anybody else living could have done it so well. There is a woman in the last plate but one, garrulous about the murder, with a child in her arms,[†5] that is as good as Hogarth. Also, the man who is stooping down, looking at the body.[†6] The philosophy of the thing, as a great lesson, I think all wrong; because to be striking, and original too, the drinking should have begun in sorrow, or poverty, or ignorance—the three things in which, in its awful aspect, it does begin.[†7] The design would then have been a double-handed sword—but too "radical"[†8] for good old George, I suppose. . . .

Mentioning other matters of interest, including the accounts for the first half-year of Dombey, which were much better than expected.

The profits of the half-year are brilliant.[†9] Deducting the hundred pounds a month paid six times, I have still to receive two thousand two hundred and twenty pounds,[†10] which I think is tidy. Don't you? . . . Stone is still here, and I lamed his foot by walking him seventeen miles the day before yesterday; but otherwise he flourisheth. . . . Why don't you bring down a carpet-bag-full of books, and take possession of the drawing-room all the morning? My opinion is that Goldsmith[†1] would die more easy by the seaside. Charley and Walley have been taken to school this morning in high spirits, and at London Bridge will be folded in the arms of Blimber.[†2] The Government is about to issue a Sanitary commission, and Lord John, I am right well pleased to say, has appointed Henry Austin secretary.[†3]

To THE REV. DAVID LAING,[†4] 2 SEPTEMBER 1847*

MS Governesses' Benevolent Institution.[†5]

Broadstairs, Kent | Second September 1847

My Dear Sir

My objection to the Governesses Institution, is increased every year. I think that canvassing, one of the social vices of this time; and am ashamed of possessing a vote, when I find so many reduced ladies driven to the necessity of seeking it in vain. It appears to me that there is an amount of degradation and humiliating solicitation imposed upon the candidates which is very poorly paid for, even in a successful instance, and which we are not justified in inflicting upon any class of persons, however willing they may be to undergo it. This is an objection, and, as I have said, a continually increasing one, which applies, in my mind, to many of the charities of the day; but it applies particularly to the Governesses Institution, by reason of the education and rightful social position of the objects of its care, which render it especially desirable that such an Institution should be foremost to set a good example in this respect, and to establish some other mode of election.[†6]

When anything of this kind attains a preposterous height, it is sure to stagger and fall; and I am convinced that a very few annual returns of a Governesses Institution contest, must startle a great many supporters of what is in its design so good and generous, and set them thinking whether they do not seem to be buying for themselves the greatest possible amount of bustle and excitement that can be got for so many guineas, rather than providing, calmly and quietly, for decayed Governesses.

I know how much you have the real object at heart, and I cannot forbear, for the second time,[†1] observing to you where I think it is going astray; being well assured that we both wish for the same end, though we may differ—if we do differ—about the means of attaining it.

A pretty intimate acquaintance with our prisons, sharpens my perception of the case you so feelingly and truthfully describe. I have seen hundreds upon hundreds, thousands upon thousands, like it. Nothing will set such wrongs right, but the beginning to deal with these unhappy creatures before they go to Jail—but the barring of the Jail Door outside, quite as carefully as within. Is it not extraordinary that with Christianity nearly two thousand years old, we, who profess and call ourselves Christians, should be so far from the very beginning of justice and mercy? Indeed you have good reason to write so earnestly (and not "tediously") of the wickedness and foolishness of our social arrangements. I have been glad to read your letter.

My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Reverend David Laing.

To JOHN FORSTER, [5 SEPTEMBER 1847]

Extracts in F, VI, i, 464-5. Date: 5 Sep according to Forster.

Supposing your Goldsmith made a general sensation, what should you think of doing a cheap edition of his works? I have an idea that we might do some things of that sort with considerable effect. There is really no edition of the great British novelists in a handy nice form,[†2] and would it not be a likely move to do it with some attractive feature that could not be given to it by the Teggs[†3] and such people? Supposing one wrote an essay on Fielding for instance, and another on Smollett, and another on Sterne, recalling how one read them as a child (no one read them younger than I,[†4] I think), and how one gradually grew up into a different knowledge of them, and so forth—would it not be interesting to many people? I should like to know if you descry anything in this. It is one of the dim notions fluctuating within me.[†5] The profits, brave indeed, are four hundred pounds more than the utmost I expected. . . .[†6] The same yearnings have been mine, in reference to the Praslin business. It is pretty clear to me, for one thing, that the Duchess was one of the most uncomfortable women in the world, and that it would have been hard work for anybody to have got on with her.[†1] It is strange to see a bloody reflection of our friends Eugène Sue and Dumas in the whole melodrama.[†2] Don't you think so . . . remembering what we often said of the canker at the root of all that Paris life? I dreamed of you, in a wild manner, all last night. . . . A sea fog here, which prevents one's seeing the low-water mark. A circus on the cliff to the right, and of course I have a box to-night! Deep slowness in the inimitable's brain. A shipwreck on the Goodwin sands[†3] last Sunday, which WALLY, with a hawk's eye, SAW GO DOWN: for which assertion, subsequently confirmed and proved, he was horribly maltreated at the time.

To W. P. SNOW,[†4] 6 SEPTEMBER 1847*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Monday Sixth September 1847.

Sir

Your letter and book of MS[†5] have been forwarded to me here.

You may suppose that it is not easy for me to find time for the perusal of long sheets of writing; and I can assure you that if I read one fiftieth part of what is sent to me in this way, I should be able to do little, if anything, else. I do not pretend to have read your book through, or to have done more than you ask of me, when you beg that I will "glance" at it. But I have made myself sufficiently acquainted with it, to be very earnest—and to be certain that I have reason to be very earnest—in advising you to abandon all thoughts of literature, as a pursuit; and in expressing to you my firm conviction that if you do not, you will devote yourself to a life of misery, heartache, disappointment, and regret.

Whether the substance of your book be true or fictitious, is nothing to the purpose. If you cannot grace truth in the narration, and have not the faculty of telling it in writing, you should either leave it untold, or leave it to the chance of being told by some one else. If it were a reason for writing, that what is written is true, surely there is nothing to prevent the whole civilized world from becoming authors, in as much as every man, woman, and child, has some truthful experience, and might, on such a plea, rush into print with it.

I do not discern in this piece you have sent me, one element of success. And I see such obvious defects in it, as regards the commonest rules of literary composition, that I honestly believe you would find it as difficult to bring it into any shape or form of merit, as you would—if you were to try—to make a steam-engine of it.

I write this with great reluctance, and with little expectation that you will defer to my judgment. But, discharging the ungracious task you have imposed upon me, at all, I am bound to discharge it honorably. The sad consequences that flow from a mistaken trade, present themselves frequently before me in terrible shapes. However poor you are now, rely upon it you will never be the richer for this kind of effort, and will only lavish upon it the time, the hope, and energy, that, otherwise directed, might lead to happiness.

If you knew how much it costs me to write this, and how often I endeavour to make the resolution that I will never read what is sent to me as your Manuscript has been, you would at least value it for its sincerity. If you will reflect that there is nothing wrong or disgraceful in such a mistake as I believe you are tending to, and that it is one of every day occurrence, you will at least receive it as kindly as I mean it.

I am Sir | Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. W. P. Snow.

To ALFRED DICKENS,[†1] 7 SEPTEMBER 1847

Extract in Maggs Bros catalogue No. 436 (1923); MS 2 pp.; dated Broadstairs, 7 Sep 47.

Offering to stand Godfather to his brother's child.[†2] I call our last young man The Spectre—in consequence of his having unnaturally large eyes, which he stares with in a frightful manner.[†3] Referring also to a number of friends.

To MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL, 7 SEPTEMBER 1847

Mention in S. F. Henkels catalogue No. 1029 (1911); dated Broadstairs, 7 Sep 47.

To JOHN FORSTER, [7 SEPTEMBER 1847]

Extract in F, VI, i, 466*n*. Date: 7 Sep according to Forster.

Do you see anything to object to in it?[†1] I have never had so much difficulty, I think, in setting about any slight thing; for I really didn't know that I had a word to say, and nothing seems to live 'twixt what I have said and silence. The advantage of it is, that the latter part opens an idea for future prefaces all through the series,[†2] and may serve perhaps to make a feature of them.

To THOMAS BEARD, 8 SEPTEMBER 1847

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | Morning Herald Office | Shoe Lane | London.

Broadstairs | Wednesday Sept. 8th. 1847.

My Dear Beard

We shall be delighted to see you on Friday. The Sea will be noble for Noon bathing, and the Demon Shower Bath is in full force.

May I trouble you with two commissions. One, to bring me from Twinborrows's,[†3] Chemist, 2 Edwards Street, Portman Square, a half crown bottle of his Essence of Wormwood.[†4] The other, to go to my study in Devonshire Terrace; twist round the rewolving table in the middle of the room, open all the drawers—there is alternately a real drawer and a sham, and the key is in one of them—until you find a half bound Diary for 1847, which bring unto me. I left it there t'other day.

Ever heartily

CD.

An authority to the Duenna in charge, may be necessary. I write it on the other side.

Broadstairs
8th. September 1847.

Josephine.

Mr. Beard, the gentleman who shews this to you, is to go into my Study, and look in my table drawers for a book he is good enough to promise to bring down for me. Let the gentleman into the house as if he were myself.

CHARLES DICKENS

To MR CAMPBELL,[†1] 8 SEPTEMBER 1847*

MS Dickens House.

Broadstairs, Kent | Wednesday Eight September 1847.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his Compliments to Mr. Campbell, and begs to decline accepting the invitation with which he is honored, to become connected with the Metropolitan Assistant Drapers Company.[†2] Mr. Dickens greatly doubts the expediency of an association based on the prospectus he has received.

To THOMAS MITTON, 8 SEPTEMBER 1847

MS Huntington Library.

Broadstairs | Wedy. 8th. September 1847.

My Dear Mitton

Many thanks for the agreement.[†3] I am sorry to hear you are ailing, but hope it is only these continual and violent changes of weather.

I am sorry to hear that the Devonshire Terrace term is so short—I had thought it two years longer.[†4] I have just put Gas into the hall, staircase, and kitchen. How about my Fixtures? I am paid for them when my time is up; am I not?

We leave here on the 26th. or 27th. and come home. It has been cold, but is fine again. Where shall you be, when we return? In the wilds of Middlesex?[†5]

Ever Yours truly

CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?8-9 SEPTEMBER 1847]

Extract in F, VI, i, 465. Date: probably between letters of 5 and 10 Sep, according to Forster.

Vagrant music is getting to that height here, and is so impossible to be escaped from, that I fear Broadstairs and I must part company in time to come. Unless it pours of rain, I cannot write half-an-hour without the most excruciating organs, fiddles, bells, or glee-singers. There is a violin of the most torturing kind under the window now (time, ten in the morning) and an Italian box of music on the steps—both in full blast.

To MR BARNES,[†1] 10 SEPTEMBER 1847*

Text from typescript, Huntington Library.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Tenth September 1847.

Mr Charles Dickens begs to inform Mr Barnes that as the term unexpired of his present lease is a short one, and as the room would cost more than he supposed (though he has no doubt of the estimate being correct) he will prefer to abandon the idea for the present, and not to have it built.

To JOHN FORSTER, [10 SEPTEMBER 1847]

Extract in F, VI, i, 465-6. Date: 10 Sep according to Forster.

Mentioning improvements at the Margate Theatre. We went to the manager's benefit on Wednesday: As You Like It really very well done, and a most excellent house.[†2] Mr. Dowton[†3] delivered a sensible and modest kind of speech on the occasion, setting forth his conviction that a means of instruction and entertainment possessing such a literature as the stage in England, could not pass away; and, that what inspired great minds, and delighted great men, two thousand years ago, and did the same in Shakespeare's day, must have within itself a principle of life superior to the whim and fashion of the hour.[†4] And with that, and with cheers, he retired. He really seems a most respectable man, and he has cleared out this dust-hole of a theatre into something like decency.

To W. P. SNOW, 10 SEPTEMBER 1847

MS University of Texas.

Broadstairs | Friday September Tenth 1847.

Sir.

I cannot help telling you how much I admire the manly feeling and excellent sense of your letter dated yesterday.

And allow me to point out to you that there is a great difference between the writing of a plain letter or treatise on a social question, and the writing of a long work of fiction. I would not discourage you too much; and I beg you to understand that my advice on the latter head, by no means includes an adjuration to you to abandon all hope or effort in reference to the former.[†1]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. W. P. Snow

To DUDLEY COSTELLO, [11 SEPTEMBER 1847]

Envelope only, MS Private. Address: 14 St Cenn's Villas | Acacia Road | St. John's Wood.
PM 11 Sep 47.

To OCTAVIAN BLEWITT, 12 SEPTEMBER 1847*

MS Royal Literary Fund.

Broadstairs, Kent. | 12th. September 1847.

My Dear Sir

Can you tell me anything about Mr. Stein Von Skork,[†2] who has written me a letter, complaining of all sorts and conditions of men, from the Bishop of London downwards? I seem to remember that there was something against him at the Literary Fund.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

O. Blewitt Esquire.

To MESSRS COUTTS & CO., [12 SEPTEMBER 1847]

Envelope only in Sotheby's catalogue, 21 Feb 1978; postmarked 12 Sep 47.

To JOHN FORSTER, [12 SEPTEMBER 1847]

Summary in F, VI, i, 466. Date: 12 Sep according to Forster.

Sending the first few slips of The Haunted Man proposed for his next Christmas Book,[†1] and saying he must finish it in less than a month if it was to be done at all, Dombey having become very importunate.[†2]

To FREDERICK DICKENS, 14 SEPTEMBER 1847

Mention and date in N, II, 54.

To JOHN FORSTER, [19 SEPTEMBER 1847]

Extracts in F, VI, i, 466-7. Date: a week after CD's letter of 12 Sep, according to Forster.

Have been at work all day, and am seedy in consequence. Dombey takes so much time, and requires to be so carefully done, that I really begin to have serious doubts whether it is wise to go on with the Christmas book. Your kind help is invoked. What do you think? Would there be any distinctly bad effect in holding this idea over for another twelvemonth? saying nothing whatever till November; and then announcing in the Dombey that its occupation of my entire time prevents the continuance of the Christmas series until next year, when it is proposed to be renewed. There might not be anything in that but a possibility of an extra lift for the little book when it did come—eh? On the other hand, I am very loath to lose the money. And still more so to leave any gap at Christmas firesides which I ought to fill. In short I am (forgive the expression) BLOWED if I know what to do. I am a literary Kitely[†3]—and you ought to sympathize and help. If I had no Dombey, I could write and finish the story with the bloom on ____ but there's the rub. . . .[†4] Which unfamiliar quotation reminds me of a Shakspearian (put an e before the s; I like it much better)[†5] speculation of mine. What do you say to "take arms against a sea of troubles"[†6] having been originally written "make arms," which is the action of swimming. It would get rid of a horrible grievance in the figure, and make it plain and apt. I think of setting up a claim to live in The House at Stratford, rent-free,[†7] on the strength of this suggestion. You are not to suppose that I am anything but disconcerted to-day, in the agitation of my soul concerning Christmas; but I have been brooding, like Dombey himself, over Dombey these two days, until I really can't afford to be depressed.[†1]

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 21 SEPTEMBER 1847*

MS Morgan Library.

Broadstairs. | Twenty First September 1847.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

In present transports of Dombey, and prospective visitations from two friends in town,[†2] I could not reply to your kind note from Sandgate,[†3] until I knew what portion of my time this week—I am going home on Monday—would be at my own disposal. Pending the receipt of your promised note from Ramsgate, I dispatch this at a venture[†4] to say that although still at work all day, I hope to manage to come that short distance,[†5] as soon as I know where to come to. For if I miss you any more, I shall begin to think myself a sort of amiable Mr. Dunn with the best intentions in the world.

I have appointments with Mr. Chesterton next week.

Always Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To SAMUEL PHELPS, 21 SEPTEMBER 1847

Text from W. May Phelps and J. Forbes-Robertson, The Life and Life-Work of Samuel Phelps, 1886, p. 389.

Broadstairs, Kent | September 21st, 1847.

My Dear Sir,

I have received your letter[†6] with very great pleasure. I had anticipated, in my own mind, the occasion of my not hearing from you—with a misgiving that I had not given you at all clearly to understand my whereabouts[†7]—and therefore was in no surprise, and should have had the satisfaction of calling upon you on my return to town. Which I still promise to myself; not the less agreeably, you may suppose, for the kind and welcome assurance you give me in your note.

My dear Sir, faithfully yours,

CHARLES DICKENS

S. Phelps, Esquire.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 26 SEPTEMBER 1847*

MS Morgan Library.

Broadstairs | Sunday Twenty Sixth September | 1847.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I confide this to the care of the manager of the Pavilion Hotel[†1] in the event of your being there tomorrow. Firstly, to say how sorry I am that I was not here the other day when you were. Secondly to say how sorry I am that I cannot come to Folkestone myself, being engaged to go to Maidstone.[†2]

Immediately after receiving your note in which you told me that you were coming to Ramsgate, I wrote, addressing to you at that place, and saying how and why I had not answered your kind letter from Sandgate. I fear you will not have received that note, and that it may be still lying at the Ramsgate Post Office.

I purpose being at home on Wednesday Evening, and I have an appointment with Mr. Chesterton for Saturday morning. The house being now very nearly ready for the furniture, I take it for granted that I have your authority to proceed with the fittings in all respects. I should be glad to receive a line from you in Devonshire Terrace, telling me where I can write to you, if I wish. Or, if there be anything you will better like to say to me, I shall be delighted to make a day by Railroad at the beginning of the week after this now coming week, and visit you anywhere.

Always Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To MARK LEMON, 26 SEPTEMBER 1847*

MS Morgan Library.

Broadstairs | Sunday Twenty Sixth September | 1847.

My Dear Lemon.

We (Inimitable B and Co)[†3] leave here for Maidstone tomorrow morning. Leech who is drawing from twenty five to forty blocks per diem, follows for the same place at a quarter before Six in the Evening.

We purpose being at the Bull at Rochester[†4] about mid day on Tuesday. Dinner will be ordered at that hostelry at 5 o'Clock on Tuesday; and if you don't come to it, you will in our flowing cups be remembered[†5] with execration.

Jerrold writes that his Magazine has required his attention until now, and that the Whittingtonians have laid embargo on him, as soon as glimpses of freedom gladdened his eyes. So he don't come.

There is nothing new in Broadstairs. Everybody except Leech is going away I understand next week, and there appears a strong probability, of himself Mrs. Leech Mrs. Eaton[†1] and the babby getting up an involuntary representation of the Family Robinson Crusoe.[†2] I understand that Mrs. Eaton is strong in pantomime, but is seldom easy in her words. She will do the heavy mother, and will go out with a hatchet in the first scene to cut wood, after rubbing her eyes with the backs of her hands several times, and stretching herself, to express that she has got up very early. The babby will hang in a tree, and be watched by the Real Dog. &c &c.

Kate and Georgy unite with me in best regards to Mrs. Lemon.

Always Cordially Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mark Lemon Esquire

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, [JUNE-SEPTEMBER] 1847

Mention in Goodspeed's catalogue No. 106; MS 2 ½ pp.; from Broadstairs, 1847.

About Fielding's monument.[†3]

October

To H. P. SMITH, 1 OCTOBER 1847*

MS Miss Mabel Hodge.

Devonshire Terrace | First October 1847.

My Dear Smith

One line—just to say that we are come home, and that I am over my eyebrows in papers and correspondence. That we are resolved, in acceptance of your kind invitation, to have a jovial Sunday with you. And that my Missis will write to your'n, more particularly, early in the ensuing week.

Ever cordially
CHARLES DICKENS

Loves from all to all.

To THE REV. B. T. STANNUS,[†1] 2 OCTOBER 1847*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Private

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Saturday Evening 2nd. October 1847.

Dear Sir.

I beg to assure you, in reply to your kind letter, that until I received it, I had no knowledge of any announcement having been made in the public papers[†2] to the effect that the theatrical amateurs of whom I am the representative were about to act in Liverpool for the benefit of Sheridan Knowles;[†3] and that I have had no communication with anyone, in Liverpool or elsewhere, on the subject.

It is very possible, nevertheless, that in pursuance of a scheme we are now maturing (into which I cannot, at present, enter more particularly) we may, before long, desire to pay such a visit to Sheffield as we paid to Liverpool a few months since. In that case, I shall be happy to give you early notice of the objects we shall have in view—with which, I have the satisfaction of knowing from your letter, you will cordially sympathize.

I am Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Reverend B. F. Stanners[†4]

To EDWARD CHAPMAN, 4 OCTOBER 1847*

MS Morgan Library

Devonshire Terrace | Fourth October 1847.

My Dear Sir

Will you send Eeles[†5] two copies of the cheap Pickwick, with instructions to half-bind them in red morocco as he does my own set usually, and to let me have them with all convenient dispatch.[†6]

Will you also get me the volumes of the Annual Register since 1836 (not inclusive of that year), and the volumes of Napier's peninsular war since Vol 5 (not inclusive of that volume).[†7]

It has occurred to me that it would be satisfactory and convenient to make out the accounts of the Cheap Edition, by the works, and not by the halfyearly periods. Thus—as soon as it can be conveniently done after the Pickwick subscription, to make an account taking in all Pickwick. To make out the next, at the same period after the close of Nickleby, and so on. If you should descry no practical objection to this, it would give me a clearer view of the matter, certainly.[†1]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Edward Chapman Esquire.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 4 OCTOBER 1847

Mention in Bangs & Co. catalogue, May 1885; MS (3rd pers.) 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 4 Oct 47.

To SAMUEL PHELPS, 5 OCTOBER 1847

MS British Theatre Museum. Address: S. Phelps Esquire | 8 Canonbury Square, | Islington.

1 Devonshire Terrace | Tuesday Evening | Fifth October 1847.

My Dear Sir.

Mr. and Mrs. White[†2] are coming to dine with us on Sunday at Six o'Clock, to dispose of a Haunch of Venison that has arrived today. If you should have no better engagement, and would take your seat at our family table, both Mrs. Dickens and I would be cordially glad to see you.[†3]

My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

S. Phelps Esquire.

To MARK LEMON, 7 OCTOBER 1847

MS Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Seventh October 1847.

My Dear Lemon.

Good.—I shall be at home. I enter into your feeling about Rodwell,[†4] and told him expressly, this morning, that I should desire to connect myself only with our own proceedings.[†1] Also I explained to him that I could say nothing more on our accounts until we should have met on Monday, when I would tell him decisively what the answer was, to his application. But in as much as he seems in earnest upon the subject of the professional benefit, and nobody else has originated or set about a provision for the family, I cannot, of course, in justice to them, souse his exertions in cold water.[†2] Personally, I don't like him.

Ever Yours

CD.

To W. C. MACREADY, 7 OCTOBER 1847*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Seventh October 1847. | Thursday

My Dear Macready.

You have seen, I dare say, that Peake is dead. I believe he was a very honest upright man, and bore himself in poverty, in a manly and stedfast way.

Mr. Rodwell came to me this morning, to ask me if I would ask you a favor on behalf of Mr. Peake's widow and children. He had a delicacy in asking you himself, though he appears to be exerting himself earnestly, in getting up a benefit for them. You may suppose what the Petition is. That if they get Covent Garden Theatre for the purpose, and all the foremost people play, you will act too, in something that will put you least out of the way.[†3]

I told him (I did not see that I could well do otherwise) that I would undertake to convey the entreaty to you in so many words, and to answer to him that you said Yes, or No.

If I don't hear from you, I will call tomorrow afternoon

Ever affectionately

CD.

W. C. Macready Esquire

To [?THOMAS] RODD,[†4] 7 OCTOBER 1847

Mention in catalogue of The Collections of Autographs of Ferdinand Julius Dreer, Philadelphia, 1890; dated 7 Oct 47.

To CLARKSON STANFIELD, 7 OCTOBER 1847*

MS Folger Shakespeare Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Thursday Seventh October | 1847

My Dear Stanny

I enclose a note from Kate to Mrs. Stanfield[†1]—or rather, I send it along with this—to which I hope Mrs. Stanfield will reply 'Yes'. If you should be inclined to see Phelps's Macbeth tonight, I shall be glad to go; and perhaps we might dine together at the Garrick, first. What do you say? I will either call for you at any time you like in the Afternoon, or will wait at home for you to call on me.

A word in answer | Ever affectionately

CD

Clarkson Stanfield Esquire.

To MISS FANNY KELLY, 10 OCTOBER 1847*

MS Yale University Library. Address: Miss Kelly | 73 Dean Street | Soho.

Devonshire Terrace | Sunday Tenth October 1847.

My Dear Miss Kelly.

I shall be at home, and happy to see you, on Tuesday at from two o'Clock to half past two.

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Kelly.

To T. J. THOMPSON, 12 OCTOBER 1847

MS Mrs Sowerby.

Broadstairs. | Twelfth October 1847.

My Dear Thompson

We are delighted to hear that your wife is happily out of her troubles, and we send hearty congratulations and kindest regards both to her and to yourself.[†2]

A very short time,[†3] quotha! Marry Master Thompson, thou wilt have a patriarchal home, and that right deftly.[†4]

Ever Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

T. J. Thompson Esquire.

To FREDERICK DICKENS, 12 OCTOBER 1847*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Devonshire Terrace. | Twelfth October 1847.

My Dear Fred.

I have now reduced the Amateur Plays to a system,[†1] which I explained last night to Lemon, Jerrold, and Forster.[†2] We must have a Secretary at fifty pounds a year, and Jerrold proposed that you should be he, to which the two others very warmly assented. If you like the post, and will come to me, I will give you further explanation.[†3] Something better, even, may come of all this; but this salary is sure, and—for what is to be done—good.

It is very painful for me to express any opinion on another and a very different subject, that is likely to be unwelcome to you. But the more I think of it, the more certain I am that I should do wrong, if I permitted any absurd notion of delicacy to prevent me from saying to you most earnestly that after what I saw at Broadstairs[†4] I am confident your engagement is one of the greatest mistakes that ever was made, even in a matter so liable to mistake as that. I forbear to dwell upon the why and wherefore, because you will give me credit for forming this opinion on what seem to me to be sufficient grounds—and I have a very firm belief, besides, that those grounds cannot have altogether escaped your own observation. But I say this much, in the hope that you will remember it and suffer it to turn the scale, if you ever come to hesitate on this question. If you do not, it is better perhaps that we should take no more notice of it, especially as my opinion could only be shaken by an entire alteration in the whole character, mental constitution, and behaviour, of Anna Weller.

Ever affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

To FREDERICK DICKENS, 14 OCTOBER 1847

MS Mr W. A. Foyle.

Devonshire Terrace. | Fourteenth October 1847.

My Dear Fred.

I have no right to object to anything in your letter, except your complaint that I have "unnecessarily" touched upon that very distressing subject. I apprehend that what is done, in such a case, with the purest and best intentions, and with a claim to be attentively heard upon a question of temper and character which is at least as good as any other man's, cannot be properly considered as unnecessarily done. Your letter is only an assurance to me, if I wanted any, that it is very necessary—however useless and hopeless—that I should not disguise my deliberate opinion from you. All I say is, if you ever, before it is too late, see any occasion to be startled, in the least yourself—to ask yourself the question whether you are as comfortable and easy in your attachment as you think you would be in any other attachment under precisely the same worldly circumstances—to remember what I told you, in the beginning, that I do, in my soul believe there is an "impracticability" in that blood, which cannot be reconciled with happiness[†1]—do give to my opinion just as much weight as you would give to it in any other matter, and no more, and no less. And do consider whether in all you hear me say of people generally, you do or do not find that I am tolerant and forbearing, and much more disposed to find out what is pleasant and agreeable in them, than what is unpromising and disagreeable.

That I have as good means of forming a correct opinion in this case, as you have, no third person of sense would, I think, deny. A bystander usually sees much more of the game than a player; and your impression was a blinded one, before it was reasonably possible to form any impression at all. My feeling is not one of dislike or prejudice. It is a deliberate conviction, forced upon me, that by natural composition, and by artificial aid—such as breeding, education, and the weakest parents on this globe—a character has been made, in this instance, which never can come right. It is impossible for you to be more earnest or honest in your opinion than I am in mine.

With this, I leave it. I shall never, from this time forth, express it in any other way to any one.

About the Society—I am very busy, and hardly know how to make an appointment. But at dinner time to day, or at dinner time tomorrow, or at dinner time on Sunday, or on Sunday Evening, I can tell you what the circulars[†2] are that should not be sent out later than Monday, and would be best sent out before.

Affecy. Ever

CD.

To W. C. MACREADY, 15 OCTOBER 1847*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Friday October fifteenth 1847.

My Dear Macready

I am grieved to say—so late am I, and so forced to creep carefully over the ground I am laying for the No. after this one I am now writing—[†3] that I cannot[†4] spare those two hours tomorrow. But you know how interested I am in such a matter,[†1] and how truly concerned I should be to lose the occasion. Can you appoint any evening, except Sunday Evening? I shut up shop at dinner time, and could manage that, excellently well.

Ever most affectionately

CHARLES DICKENS

P.S. I think of getting up a testimonial to Cooper,[†2] as the most outrageous ass of this time.

To MRS T. COOKE,[†3] 18 OCTOBER 1847*

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: Mrs. Cooke | 92 Great Portland Street.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Monday Eighteenth October | 1847.

My Dear Mrs. Cooke.

I am pretty well thank you. How do you find yourself?[†4]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. T. Cooke.

To BERNHARD TAUCHNITZ, 18 OCTOBER 1847

Extract in Kurt Otto, Der Verlag Bernhard Tachnitz, 1837-1912, Leipzig, 1912.

London, 1, Devonshire Terrace, York Gate, Regent's Park,
October 18th 1847.

The occupation of my time with that story[†5] is so great just now, and I devote so much attention to it, that I have resolved not to publish a Christmas book this year, as I could not complete the Christmas story I wish to write, under such circumstances, in that great labour and fatigue.[†1] But I purpose resuming the series, with God's leave, next year. I would have given you earlier notice of this,[†2] but I have really been undecided whether I should go on or not.

To MRS MILNER GIBSON,[†3] 26 OCTOBER 1847*

MS Mr Ralph Crawford.

Devonshire Terrace. | Tuesday Twenty Sixth October | 1847.

My Dear Mrs. Gibson

I have seen your pretty protegée and like her extremely.—Indeed I have some idea of booking her for the reversion of Mrs. Dickens's place, in case of her leaving it vacant by any accident.

There is a great difficulty, without distressing her—or I fancy so—in exactly stating to her what the object of this Institution is.[†4] For she is so young, and (necessarily) inexperienced, that I hardly know how to come at her with such notions. Now, old Sinners like you and I may approach anything easily, and I think I could make it much plainer to her through you than through myself.

So, seriously, if you can draw up that blind of yours any morning and call on me before one, I will give you the exact history of the place, and the advantages as well as disadvantages to which the young lady would be exposed. I think she would do exceedingly well, if[†5] she entered on the duty with a perfect understanding of its nature beforehand. But if she entered on it without this, or without the most thorough consideration, I fear it would be nothing but a disappointment and a failure to all concerned.

My Dear Mrs. Gibson | Faithfully Yours Always

CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Milner Gibson.

P.S.

I would propose to come to you, but that I am obliged to wait at home in the morning at this time of the month, to see people.

To M. M. PROVAN,[†1] 26 OCTOBER 1847*

MS Dr Henry von Witzleben.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Sixth October 1847.

Dear Sir.

I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, and to say that I hold myself engaged to the Directors[†2] for the 28th. of December.[†3]

I am much obliged to you for your offer of information; and in case I should have occasion to ask for any as the time approaches, I shall take the liberty of troubling you.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

M. M. Provan Esquire

To MISS SARAH BIFFIN,[†4] 27 OCTOBER 1847*

MS University of Texas.

Devonshire Terrace, London | Twenty Seventh October 1847.

Mr. Charles Dickens sends his compliments to Miss Biffin, and regrets to say that he cannot have the pleasure of adding his name to her subscription list—not because he is indifferent to Miss Biffin's case, but because of the enormous number of similar applications, of which he is in the continual receipt.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 28 OCTOBER 1847

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street | Piccadilly.

Devonshire Terrace | Thursday Night
Twenty Eighth October 1847

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I am in a state of great anxiety to talk to you about your "Home" (that is the name I propose to give it) with which I have been very busy for some time, and which will be ready for the reception of its inmates, please God, on Saturday fortnight. I have a perfect confidence in your approving of the details, but it would be most interesting to me to talk them over with you.

You have so long overstayed your time,[†1] that I begin to think you must be keeping out of the way to preserve that spell unbroken. I send this to Stratton Street by the post, on the chance of its finding you somewhere.

I cannot tell you how much cause I have seen, and see daily, during the preparation of this place, to admire the goodness and devotion of Mr. Chesterton, whose time is always at our command, and whose interest in the design cannot be surpassed.

There are two objects[†2] (promising, I hope) recently discharged from his prison, who are giving the best proof of the sincerity of their desire to come to us, by remaining in the prison—prison clothed and fed—until we are enabled to take them. Which I think is an affecting and encouraging circumstance, as they knew on the evening when their time was up, that some of their old companions were waiting at the gate to bear them away. There is another girl—only seventeen—born of drunken parents, ill used from her cradle, plundered of her clothes that they might be sold for liquor, and sent to evil courses for their gain, to whom we are giving a few shillings now and then (her discharge took place some weeks ago, and they could not keep her in the prison too) until we are ready to take her. She comes to Mr. Chesterton at stated times, clean, decent, and quiet, and apparently quite altered. We have now eight,[†3] and I have as much confidence in five of them, as one can have in the beginning of anything so new. As we go on, I sincerely trust and believe you will do more good than your most sanguine expectations picture now.

We were at Mr. Tracey's to day to look for some others. There is a young woman there, who has more feeling—who shews more at least—than I have seen in any of them, but some points in her wretched history remain to be examined. I have taken some pains to find out the dispositions and natures of every individual we take; and I think I know them pretty well, and may be able to give the matron some useful foreknowledge of them, and to exercise some personal influence with them in case of need. A most extraordinary and mysterious study it is, but interesting and touching in the extreme.

I think it well to say to you that I have avoided Macconochie's[†4] ideas,[†5] as they hardly seemed (or I fancied so) to meet with your full approval, and as they were perhaps unsuited to so small an establishment. The design is simply, as you and I agreed, to appeal to them by means of affectionate kindness and trustfulness,—but firmly too. To improve them by education and example—establish habits of the most rigid order, punctuality, and neatness—but to make as great a variety in their daily lives as their daily lives will admit of—and to render them an innocently cheerful Family while they live together there. On the cheerfulness and kindness all our hopes rest.

I am very anxious about Mr. Tracey's chaplain.[†1] But if I go on entering into all my points of anxiety and interest, I shall never leave off. Therefore I will only say that I hope you will write to me as soon as you come home, and give me an opportunity of unburdening my mind.

You must not see the house until it is quite ready. The bedsteads will not be put up for ten days, and there will be some trifling matters to get in after that. The dresses and linen are bought and making. The Superintendant's[†2] rooms are furnished, and she is living there.

I still remain in the hope that you will come with me to Mr. Chesterton's, where there is nothing to shock you but the sight of women in captivity—and where there is very much to gratify you in the humanity with which they are treated—for unless you see them now, you never can sufficiently feel what you will have done for those who turn out well.

We found it necessary that there should be some appeal for Mr. Chesterton to read to them, and then give them to read in their Cells. I wrote the enclosed[†3] for the purpose, and he found it affect them very heavily indeed.

Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

P.S. I forgot to mention in reference to the Bishop of London that I shall be happy to call upon him when he is in town, if you please.

To SAMUEL PHELPS, 28 OCTOBER 1847*

MS Rosenbach Foundation.

Devonshire Terrace. | Twenty Eighth October 1847.

My Dear Sir

I shall be much obliged to you if you will send that neat copyist of yours to me, as I can give him a play (not mine—Heaven forbid!) to write out in parts.[†4]

I enclose a card, to save you the trouble of writing the address for him.

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Over

Samuel Phelps Esquire.

He will find me at home any morning between 10 and 12.

To GEORGE REYNOLDS,[†1] 28 OCTOBER 1847*

MS Guildhall Library, London. Address: George Reynolds Esquire | 12 Great Trinity Lane | City.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Eighth October 1847.

Sir.

I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, and to express my regret that I have not, at present, any spare copies of any of my books. Indeed they are so often asked of me, that I find it difficult to preserve my own set, unbroken.

But if you will have the goodness, when the Post-Letter Carriers' Library[†2] is formed, to let me know where it is, I will make a memorandum of your request, and endeavour to comply with it at some future time.

I am Sir | Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

George Reynolds Esquire.

To MRS SYDNEY SMITH,[†3] 28 OCTOBER 1847*

MS New College, Oxford.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Eighth October 1847.

My Dear Mrs. Smith

I remember perfectly that my reason for not writing in this book[†4] at the time, was, that it could not be got ready before I left England for Italy, and was sent to Green Street[†5] after I had gone.

You will not be displeased, I hope, to know that in my affectionate remembrance of the name I have now written there, I bestowed it, six months ago, on my youngest boy;[†6] thinking it no mean thing for him to be associated even so with one of the wisest and wittiest of this age.

Believe me Dear Mrs. Smith | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To AUGUSTUS TRACEY, 28 OCTOBER 1847*

MS University of Texas.

Devonshire Terrace | Thursday Night | October Twenty Eighth 1847.

My Dear Tracey.

I send you eight copies of the little address—[†7] no more, because they fill the envelope. But I have plenty by me, and can send you any number you may desire to have.

I omitted, in my interest about the miserable women, one point on which I was very anxious to speak to you to day. You may possibly remember my having told you, when the idea was first in discussion that I mentioned your Chaplain[†1] to Miss Coutts as a gentleman for whom I had great respect, and in whose judicious performance of his duties I had the utmost faith. It would be a great relief to my mind if I could say to her that he could be induced to undertake the charge of this Home, by paying certain stated visits to the inmates,—and I know she would be glad to accept his services without hesitation (remunerating them of course) in preference to those of any other clergyman.

But I do not like to come and speak to him on the subject, without ascertaining whether he has leisure to accept the charge. If you could sound the way for me, I should esteem it a great service, and would follow up your beginning, in any way you might think right. I have confidence in him, and should be made very uneasy by the introduction of a stranger to such people, however zealous and benevolent.

Let me hear a word from you at your convenience, and Believe me always (though you were reported fierce)
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Lieutenant Tracey.

November

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 3 NOVEMBER 1847

MS Morgan Library. Address: Free | Miss Burdett Coutts | Hotel Bristol | Place Vendôme | Paris.

Devonshire Terrace | Wednesday Third November 1847.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I will answer the points you mention—if the slight means of a note like this may be dignified with the name of answer—in the order of which you mention them, and without any preparatory matter.

I had no idea of concluding the question of the chaplain, until your return. But I was very anxious, about Mr. Tracey's, as I knew him to possess remarkable qualifications for the post—exercised daily among that class of persons—and was morally certain of your approval when you should come to know him. My anxiety was to ascertain whether he was free to accept the trust. And I am very sorry to find (his own engaging him from morning until night) that he is not.

I have great faith in the soundness of your opinions in reference to the religious instruction; knowing you to be full of that enlarged consideration for the special circumstances under which it is to be administered in this case, without which nothing hopeful or useful can be done. I trust that those enlightenments to which you refer, are to be found in the New Testament?[†2] I am confident that harm is done to this class of minds by the injudicious use of the old—and I am hardly less confident that I could shew you how, in talking the subject over.[†1]

The expediency of explaining to them that the rules of the Establishment may alter, I greatly doubt. For this reason.—If we did so, they would immediately conceive that we did not know what we were about, and that we were experimentalizing. Which would desperately shake their trust in us. Such rules as we agree upon in the outset will be known only to the Superintendents and ourselves. They will not be told to the Inmates. There will be a certain daily routine which they will be called upon to observe. If we see fit to alter it, it will be altered as a matter of course, I should say—explaining to them beforehand, the why and wherefore. But, if the establishment worked well, I would strongly counsel you not to try experiments. My belief is, that nothing would unsettle them so much, or render their staying with us so doubtful.—[†a]Recollect that we address a peculiar and strangely-made character.[†a]

There is this objection to the address of the chaplain to each person individually.—It would decidedly involve the risk of their refusing to come to us. The extraordinary monotony of the Refuges and Asylums now existing, and the almost insupportable extent to which they carry the words and forms of religion, is known to no order of people as well as to these women; and they have that exaggerated dread of it, and that preconceived sense of their inability to bear it, which the reports of those who have refused to stay in them, have bred in their minds. I am afraid if they were thus taken to task, and especially by a clergyman, they would be alarmed—would say "its the old story after all, and we have mistaken the sort of place. It's better to say at once that we are not fit for it"—and that so we should lose them. That they are sensible of the sinfulness and degradation of their lives—that nothing else but that, has been impressed upon them by society since they began those lives—is, to say the least, reasonably probable. And he must be a very remarkably discreet and gentle man indeed, who could execute this very difficult task, without rendering them apprehensive of what was to follow.—[I should add here that Mr. Chesterton has addressed them on this head, repeatedly, and very sensibly.]

That their past lives should never be referred to, at the Home, there can be no doubt. I should say that any such reference on the part of the Superintendent would be an instance of blind mistake that in itself would render her dismissal necessary.

The temptation that has occurred to you, in pursuance of Macconnochie's idea, suggests this consideration—that it is one to which in all probability, they will never be exposed abroad, and that it is a very severe one.[†2] If a girl goes out by herself, where is she to go? Every one she knows now is, to a greater or less extent, an infamous associate; and suffering her to go out by herself would be to expose her to the arts and temptations and recognitions of fifty such—Even supposing that her old habits and her new freedom didn't lead her among them, it is likely some of them would come in her way; and her very decency might give them the advantage, as by inducing her to go away with them in the first instance; rather than be jeered and mocked in the open streets. I propose that, in the country, about the house, they shall constantly go out in twos or threes[†1] with Mrs. Holdsworth.[†2] I would, as they advanced in their training, and shewed decided improvement, trust them with keys,[†3] and with many little offices within-doors that would test their self-denial. But the streets of London, I confess I view with very great apprehension. We shall have ample leisure to discuss this point, and could easily take the opinion of Macconnochie (who, I am happy to say, is appointed by Government to exercise his system on a number of convicts employed in the construction of a Harbor at Weymouth),[†4] but I mention it in this passing manner, because you mention it.

One great point that I try to bear in mind continually, and which I hope the clergyman will steadily remember, is, that these unfortunate creatures are to be tempted to virtue. They cannot be dragged, driven, or frightened. You originate this great work for the salvation of these women who come into that Home; and I hold it to be the sacred duty of every one who assists you in it, first to consider how best to get them there, and how best to keep them there. Every other consideration should fade before these two, because every other consideration follows upon them, and is included in them, and is impracticable without them. It is for this vital reason that a knowledge of human nature as it shews itself in these tarnished and battered images of God—and a patient consideration for it—and a determined putting of the question to one's self, not only whether this or that piece of instruction or correction be in itself good and true, but how it can be best adapted to the state in which we find these people, and the necessity we are under of dealing gently with them, lest they should run headlong back on their own destruction—are the great, merciful, Christian thoughts for such an enterprize, and form the only spirit in which it can be successfully undertaken. Do you not feel, with me, that this must be kept steadily in view, and that a chaplain imbued with this feeling in the outset, is the only Minister for this place?[†5]

I forgot to mention in its right place, about the temptation, that I saw, at Mr. Tracey's prison the other day, a girl who was there, some time ago (merely, if I remember right, for being in the streets, or, if for felony for some offence arising out of that life) whose appearance and behaviour had so interested some lady or other, living hard by, that when her term was over, she took her for a servant. That girl, although she had the reputation of being a drunkard, worked hard and honestly in this employment for seven or eight months, and had wine and spirits constantly in her keeping, which she never touched. But in an evil hour her Mistress gave her a holiday. She fell among her old companions—her removal from whom had been the main cause of her reformation, poor creature—never went back again, fell into her old way of life, and is in prison now. I saw her with Mr. Chesterton, and talked to her, but thought it best to decline her: for besides the danger of her attachment to liquor (though I do not, like Mr. Chesterton: neither does Mr. Tracey attach overwhelming importance to that, in a young[†1] woman of that way of life, who drinks because she is utterly miserable—a middle aged woman who drinks, is another thing, and is always hopeless) she had a singularly bad head, and looked discouragingly secret and moody.

I must tell you of one of the two young women who were remaining in Prison voluntarily, until we could take them. When I first went there, about your home, she was produced to me by Mr. Chesterton, before I saw any of the others, as a model.[†2] She was the Matron's model, and the head female turnkey's model, and the peculiar pet and protegée of Mr. Rotch[†3] the Magistrate, who is a very good man, and takes infinite pains in the prisons—though I doubt his understanding of the company he finds there. She was much better educated than any of the others (some of whom are extremely ignorant), had a very intelligent face, and a remarkably good voice; but she impressed me as being something too grateful, and too voluble in her earnestness, and she seemed, in a vague, indescribable, uneasy way, to be doubtful of me. Which I suppose made me doubtful of her. However this was, I observed her as closely as I could, and when they had all gone, told Chesterton that he would be amazed at what I was going to say, but that I doubted the Model more than any of them, and believed that if we failed with anybody, we should fail with her. This made such a rebellion among the Matrons and turnkeys that I was almost ashamed of myself, and heartily wished I had kept my opinion quiet. But we have always talked about her since, naturally; and when she stayed in prison of her own accord, I gave way altogether, and became quite abject. Last Saturday, Chesterton and I were at the Home together, and the Model was still in great force. Last Sunday, I went to him by appointment on this same theme, and the Model was gone!—

The other girl, remaining in prison voluntarily, who had an affection for her, cried all day, and had cried ever since she went. But she made no effort to go too, though the parting was very bitter to her—for she really had hoped to reform, with this companion, and had thought they would become like sisters. I sent a dress down to the Prison yesterday, to be made for her to come to Shepherd's Bush in when we are ready, thinking that the knowledge of our actually preparing for her, would keep her in her good resolutions. If she remain, I have no doubt of her, and hope we may count upon her reclamation as almost certain.

This brings me to the day of opening. I hope you do not contemplate our postponing it beyond Saturday Week, if we should be ready then? otherwise we shall be in this difficulty—that more of these unfortunate creatures' terms will have expired, and we shall not know what to do with them. There is a certain Emma Lea,[†1] of whom I am disposed to be hopeful, who is released next Sunday, and there are others who will be released this week and next week. These girls have been continually spoken to, and have had the address in their hands for days upon days together; and it would be a deplorable thing, if they really are in the improved state of mind they profess (and they seem sincerely anxious to come) to let them fall back again. Which they cannot help doing—it is the literal truth—can not help—unless we take them. I shall be very glad to receive a few lines from you on this point. We are at present not certain of the assistant, and that may retard us. But I hope not, and shall make every exertion to prevent it

The poor girl out of prison continues to do well. I have sent for her to day. I am afraid of every hour, in her case, because she is constantly exposed to the hazard of going among old companions. But she certainly has done well as yet, and on a very, very little money. And hers is, like some other cases that we have, a case in which it was next to impossible but that she must have gone, in youth, the way she has gone. It is dreadful to think how some of these doomed women have no chance or choice. It is impossible to disguise from one's self the horrible truth that it would have been a social marvel and miracle if some of them had been anything else than what they are.

I have laid in all the dresses and linen of every sort for the whole house—purchasing the materials at Shoolbred's in Tottenham Court Road, at the wholesale prices. I have made them as cheerful in appearance as they reasonably could be—at the same time very neat and modest. Three of them will be dressed alike,[†2] so that there are four colors of dresses in the Home at once; and those who go out together, with Mrs. Holdsworth, will not attract attention, or feel themselves marked out, by being dressed alike. In their living room I have put up two little inscriptions selected from the sermons of Jeremy Taylor and Barrow[†3]—both very simple and beautiful in themselves, and remarkably appropriate

(as I hope you will think) to the purpose. Also a little inscription of my own, referring to the advantages of order, punctuality, and good temper; and another setting forth the Saviour's exposition of our duty towards God, and our duty towards our neighbour. In each bedroom is another Inscription, admonishing them against ever lying down to rest, without being affectionate and reconciled among themselves. And I am now writing a little address which Mrs. Holdsworth shall read to each, alone, when she comes in. The enclosed paper[†1] is for that lady and ourselves. I shall be glad if you will read it, and tell me whether you have any objection to anything it contains. You will see that I speak of the "Governors", for want of any better word. I have provided a form of book, in which we shall keep the history of each case,[†2] and which has certain printed enquiries to be filled up by us, before each comes in, and a final blank headed its "Subsequent History", which will remain to be filled up, by degrees, as we shall hear of them, and from them, abroad. I hope there is nothing whatever, in the business arrangement, which is not in working order.

The arrangements in the printed paper[†3] I send with this, for the domestic duties and their allotment, I have taken from the Normal School for Governesses at Whitelands.[†4] I am also getting their books of instruction, with some other reading of my own selection.[†5] The arrangements (not mentioned in the paper) for washing and dressing, and putting away of clothes, and everything of that kind, I have endeavoured to form with a view to every chance and mischance to which we are exposed—and something that escaped from the Model before she went away—or from a friend of hers—I forget which—shewed, in a remarkable manner, that one of them was right.[†6] In short, I believe that nothing has been done without a reason; and I must again say, that I cannot tell you how efficient and devoted Mr. Chesterton has been.

You will see, in the printed paper I send you, an allusion to Music, as a means towards our end.[†1] If you will authorize me, I will see Mr. Hullah[†2] (who is an old friend of mine) and consult with him about the times and forms of instruction.[†3] I think it extremely important that the assistant should at least be able to play simple tunes on the Piano; and I am looking about, high and low, for a cheap second-hand one, to stand in Mrs. Holdsworth's room. The fondness for music among these people generally, is most remarkable; and I can imagine nothing more likely to impress or soften a new comer, than finding them with this art among them, and hearing them sing their Evening Hymn before they go to bed. Treating of bed, by the bye, Mr. Chesterton, Mr. Tracey, and I, have proposed ten o'Clock as the time for their being in bed, from our common knowledge of the terrible mistake that is sometimes made in this regard, and the danger of shutting them up, with unoccupied minds, at preposterously early hours.[†4]

Mrs. Holdsworth promises very well indeed, I think, and improves greatly on acquaintance. We have already had some Rehearsals of the routine of each day's life, (not set forth in the regulations) and we shall have some more on Saturday, and next week. I hope the Furniture will be completed on Saturday. It is all promised.

I was vexed to see a stupid account of the Home in the Newspapers some time ago.[†5] If they blunder upon anything else, the design can be easily explained, as you wish, either by my writing a letter on the subject, or an account of the Institution:[†6] selecting any channel of publication that is within reach, and that you may think most desirable. It is possible that there may be nothing more written about it: but if there be, it is easily set right.

We are trying now, whether we can find two or three sufficiently hopeful cases that have not been in Prison at all. I cannot say—yet, with what success. The advantage of selecting from Prisons in the infancy of such a design, is, firstly that we know more about them, and secondly, that there is an important break in old habits and associations.

I most entirely agree with you that it is right they should feel perfectly free before going abroad. If this system hold (and I have a faith in its doing so, simply because it is the system of Christianity, and nothing more or less) I believe they will feel perfectly free, when that time comes. But we can examine into this, and devise for it, leisurely. It has occurred to me that it would be an admirable means of promoting friendly and affectionate feelings among them, to give them to understand that no one should Ever be sent abroad alone.[†1] It would be a beautiful thing, and would give us a wonderful power over them, if they would form strong attachments among themselves. To say nothing of the encouragement and support they would be to one another in a foreign country.[†2]

My Dear Miss Coutts, you will attribute my earnestness to the true cause—the unspeakable interest I have in a design fraught with such great consequences, and the knowledge I have (if I have any knowledge at all) of these sad aspects of humanity, and their workings—when I again refer to that indispensable necessity of remembering the formed character that is to be addressed, and of considering everything that is addressed to it, not with reference to itself alone, but in connexion with its adaptability to the nature, sufferings, and whole experiences of the objects of your benevolence. In proportion as the details of any one of these young lives would be strange and difficult to a good man who had kept away from such knowledge, so the best man in the world could never make his way to the truth of these people, unless he were content to win it very slowly, and with the nicest perception, always present to him, of the results engendered in them by what they have gone through. Wrongly addressed, they are certain to deceive. The greatest anxiety I feel, in connexion with this scheme—it is a greater one than any that arises out of my sense of responsibility to you, though that is not slight—is, that the clergyman with whom I hope I am to act as one confiding in him and perfectly confided in, should be not only a well-intentioned man, as I believe most clergymen would be, but one of the kindest, most considerate, most judicious, and least exacting of his order.

Believe me Always Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

Kind regards to Mr. and Mrs. Brown. Mrs. Dickens desires the same.

To SAMUEL PHELPS, 3 NOVEMBER 1847

Text from W. May Phelps and J. Forbes-Robertson, The Life and Life-Work of Samuel Phelps, p. 390.

Devonshire Terrace. | Wednesday Evening.

My Dear Sir,

The Reverend James White is coming here to-night to learn the fate of his play;[†3] and I believe two friends of his are coming too. For whose consolation a lobster and a glass of wine will be awaiting our return. If you should not be too fatigued, and would assist me to make the Reverend J. W. miserable, by describing the progress of the evening, I should be glad to carry you home here, and would wait until you had exchanged the garments of John Savile for your own. In that case, will you send someone round to me, merely to say "Wait?" I need not observe that no dressing is necessary for such a refection, and that we have not the least idea of sitting late. But the smallest congratulation would be so incomplete without you—or the smallest condolence either, in which you decidedly have a just share—that I hope I shall take you prisoner in virtue of this warrant.[†1]

Believe me, very faithfully yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

Samuel Phelps, Esquire.

To MARK LEMON, 4 NOVEMBER 1847

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: Mark Lemon Esquire | Brook Green | Hammersmith.

Devonshire Terrace. | Fourth November 1847.

My Dear Lemon.

I have got the prospectus[†2] into shape, and should like to have a talk with you about it. For I think you and I are better men of business than the Society in general. We might walk up to Hampstead, and dine one day—tomorrow, for instance, would suit me very well, if we left here at 3. Can you manage that? If you reply, "yes", I will send up in the morning, and order a bit of fish and a steak. If you say "no", say what day would suit you better.

"Reply, reply, re-ply!"

Ever Affecy.
CD.

To ANDREW PARK,[†3] 5 NOVEMBER 1847

Text from Andrew Park, Songs, Glasgow, 1848.

London, | 1 Devonshire Terrace, York Gate, Regent's Park,

5th November, 1847.

Sir,

I cannot but be proud of the honour of your proposed Dedication,[†4] and gratified by the handsome terms in which it is offered.

I accept it with pleasure, and entreat you to believe that I am truly sensible of the spirit in which you have written to me,—not the less so from being previously familiar with some of your sweet verses.

Faithfully yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

Andrew Park, Esq.

To G. H. LEWES, 7 NOVEMBER 1847†

MS Mrs Robert Nuttall.

Devonshire Terrace | Sunday Seventh November 1847.

My Dear Lewes.

I do not myself see—having altered the Prospectus, and coupled it with two or three small forms that appear necessary—any impracticability in the Insurance idea. We are not pledged to it, certainly. But unless your objections[†1] should be very strong indeed, I should be excessively unwilling to abandon it. [†a]Any new going round with the Hat, I abhor the idea of—whether it be for Winter peaches, Spring lamb,[†2] Midsummer ice, unnatural cucumbers, or gold headed walking sticks.

On Tuesday evening I will come to you with a great deal of pleasure. I wish you would write to Lemon at Brook Green, and ask him, and tell him why; for he is a good sound man of business, as I have occasion to know—which is a rare thing in our Society.[†a†3]

I ought to have written to you long ago,[†4] about Ranthorpe;[†5] but I have a most accursed diffidence about writing to men concerning their own books, as though I were setting myself up for a kind of literary special-pleader, and sending out my opinions with grave importance. It has pleased me very much indeed; and I would I saw more of such sense and philosophy in that kind of Literature—which would make it more of what it ought to be. It occurred to me here and there, in the perusal, that the characters were, sometimes, not sufficiently distinct from each other, and that instead of your being metaphysical for them, they are a little too metaphysical for themselves. But it is a book that I am certain would have attracted and fixed my attention, though I had had no knowledge of the writer, and that would have inspired me with a wish to know him, and a conviction that he was not a common man. This may not seem much to read, but

I mean a great deal by it in the writing; and I hope I see, and feel, and appreciate, in Ranthorpe, all that you know you have put there. When Literary men shall begin to feel the honor and worth of their pursuit, as you would teach them to, Literature will be a happier calling; and I wish I were as certain it would lose nothing in other hands, as I am certain it will gain in yours.

My Dear Lewes | Very faithfully Your friend
CHARLES DICKENS

G. H. Lewes Esquire.

To OLIVER GOLDSMITH,[†1] 8 NOVEMBER 1847*

MS Mrs Donald F. Hyde.

London, 1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate, Regents Park.
Eighth November 1847.

Sir.

I am afraid I can give you no advice in reference to your Manuscript,[†2] which will not already have suggested itself to your own mind.

If it be sufficiently short for insertion in a London Magazine, you no doubt know the names of the principal periodicals, and you will find on each, the place at which it is published. If it be too long for that purpose, and you design it for publication as a book, there are Mr. Colburn of Marlborough Street, Messrs. Chapman and Hall of the Strand, and Mr. Bentley of New Burlington Street, all of whom publish novels, and any of whom you can address. I would assist you with pleasure, if I had any means of doing so, but I have none. My own publishers would form their own judgement of your tale, without the least regard for mine if it were favorable (you will understand that I am stating what I know; not what I believe might happen) and with them, or any other publishers, the name you bear, would undoubtedly attract attention to your work.

In the love I bear your Ancestor, believe me I give you the best counsel in my power. I have no doubt your tale will be read, by any publisher to whom you send it. The present times are supposed to be disadvantageous to new books, but I know nothing else against your receiving reasonably fair consideration.

I am Sir | Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

Oliver Goldsmith Esquire

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 9 NOVEMBER 1847

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Hotel Bristol | Place Vendome | Paris.

Devonshire Terrace
Tuesday Ninth November 1847.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I write a hasty line to say that I have marked some prayers in the book of Common Prayer, for Mrs. Holdsworth's temporary use,[†1] morning and night. If the Assistant[†2] is engaged by Saturday (I am now in communication with her) I would propose to open on that day. One of the girls, who has remained in prison three weeks voluntarily, is now there, with Mrs. Holdsworth, and is making her own clothes. Her remaining in confinement so long, seemed to dispirit the others rather; and we therefore thought it best (as she seemed oppressed herself, too, by the continuance of the heavy discipline of the jail) to take her out yesterday, and carry her[†3] to the Home. I went out to see her last evening at 9 o'Clock, and she expressed herself as being very happy and grateful.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To JAMES CROSSLEY, 9 NOVEMBER 1847

MS Berg Collection. Address: James Crossley Esquire | Manchester.

Devonshire Terrace | November Ninth 1847.

My Dear Crossley.

I am grieved to say than an attack of Dombey (a periodical indisposition) will oblige me to make so flying a visit to Manchester, as to come down by the Train on the day of demonstration,[†4] and return, if possible, that night. I would have anticipated and prevented this dire necessity but for two reasons—firstly, that these attacks hold me much longer than any similar disorder I have ever undergone; and secondly because I am engaged just now, in the promotion of a good design which occupies the whole of my spare time.[†5]

But if you will settle your dinner without reference to the unfortunate who now addresses you, and will give him word of notice thereof, and will permit him to insinuate himself into any odd corner, if he should make any unexpected start, and be able to come down earlier or stay later, he will take it as a real and friendly kindness.

I have just heard from Alison,[†1] who seems well pleased with his post,[†2] and who, I have no doubt, will become it excellently well.

Forster is buried in Goldsmith and Examiner. When I last saw him, his eyebrows were scarcely visible above the mass of work in which he was engulfed. He told me you had written to him, and was very pathetic on the subject.

My Dear Crossley | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

P.S.

Under the circumstances of my flight, I had better fly to the Queen's Hotel, than make any man's hospitable house wretched, and myself too, by carrying confusion into the bosom of a family. But take my thanks which are yours none the less heartily.[†3]

James Crossley Esquire.

To JAMES CROSSLEY, 11 NOVEMBER 1847*

MS Morgan Library. Address: James Crossley Esquire | Manchester.

Devonshire Terrace | Eleventh November 1847.

My Dear Crossley

I begin to be seriously afraid—I am so deeply and unpostponably engaged—that I shall not be able to come to Manchester on the 18th.—and I think it well to ask you, as President of the year, if you will have the kindness to make this possibility known to the active officers, in order that I may not suddenly and unexpectedly excuse myself.[†4] If I can by any means come, I need not say that I hold myself bound to do so; but so many circumstances have combined to render that period of the month an impracticable time for such a flight, that I tremble by anticipation.

In great haste | Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

James Crossley Esquire.

To MRS SYDNEY SMITH, 11 NOVEMBER 1847*

MS New College, Oxford.

Devonshire Terrace. | Eleventh November 1847.

My Dear Mrs. Smith.

Accept my warmest thanks for your present.[†1] I shall ever prize it highly, and can say, honestly, that I believe there is no man in the world who could accept such teaching as his, in a more admiring or grateful spirit than I do.

When I took the book out of the parcel this morning, I opened at the Sermon on Toleration.[†2] I could not lay it down. The wisdom, truth and beauty, of it—the manly denunciation of the wicked social misdoing that is always active among us—and the true Christian spirit shining through every sentence, and illuminating the whole piece as with a celestial light—perfectly enchanted me. As he was one of the wisest of men, so I am sure he was one of the best; and this, which increases your sorrow in his loss, increases your comfort twenty thousand fold, thank God!

There is not a word in the true and vigorous description of that preposterous abuse, Puseyism,[†3] that does not find an echo in my heart. I would that the church could better afford to lose such a servant, and the World such a Teacher, as the writer of this book. I cannot tell you how much I thank you for it.

Believe me always | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Sydney Smith.

To EDWARD CHAPMAN, 12 NOVEMBER 1847*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Friday November Twelfth 1847.

My Dear Sir

I confess that another look at Mr. Leslie's Sketch,[†4] and another look at a Bank of England sketch for the same amount, renders me so doubtful of the first work of Art, that if you have said or done nothing with him in reference to it, I will send it back to you. But if he has the least reason to think it is to be purchased, pray do nothing but pay him for it, as I am not very particular on the subject in as much as a collection of the Sketches would be incomplete without this one.[†5]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Edward Chapman Esquire

To THE REV. HENRY JONES,[†1] 12 NOVEMBER 1847

Extract in Anderson Galleries catalogue, May 1915; dated London, 12 Nov 47.

As the Post Office people here inform me . . . that they cannot find out the name of the Postmaster[†2] at Farnley, I beg to trouble you with the enclosed.[†3]

To MISS FANNY KELLY, 12 NOVEMBER 1847*

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel. Address: Miss Kelly | 73 Dean Street | Soho.

Devonshire Terrace | Friday Twelfth November 1847

My Dear Miss Kelly.

I expected to have seen you after you had called on Talfourd; and hope you have had no reason to alter your plans.[†4]

We want to read a play at your Theatre on Tuesday next, at 7 o'Clock.[†5] If we can come there, conveniently to you, do not take the trouble to write an answer.

My mind misgives me that ten shillings a night, can hardly cover the expences of such visits as ours. I shall take leave, in future, to make that, a pound. Which everybody will consider little enough, I am very certain.[†6]

Dear Miss Kelly | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Kelly

To MARK LEMON, 15 NOVEMBER 1847

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Evening November Fifteenth | 1847.

My Dear Lemon

If I need say anything in reference to the Jerusalem-Pony[†7] part of your note, it shall be briefly this:—

Firstly, that it would require a very different sort of man from Mr. Bunn,[†8] to move me in my regard and esteem for you.

Secondly, that I have resolved to adopt, with reference to any friend of mine, a principle I have never once violated, for ten years, in connexion with myself.[†1] And that is, when I know anything is printed to defame and insult him, never to read one word of it.

We shall meet tomorrow.

Believe me always | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mark Lemon Esquire.

To ALEXANDER IRELAND, 18 NOVEMBER 1847*

MS University of Texas.

London, 1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Eighteenth November 1847

My Dear Sir

I assure you that if it had depended on my personal choice, or power of coming or staying away, I should not have written to Mr. Crossley a week ago, to express my fear of being unable to attend the Athenaeum Soirée, and should not have hesitated on the receipt of your letter—if it had found me in possession of any reasonable means of compliance—to come down by the Train this morning.[†2] But apart from a benevolent undertaking (I may fairly call it so, for it is not mine) of the utmost importance, requiring my attendance nearly five miles off, tonight, tomorrow, and Saturday,[†3] I am so situated that it is quite certain, if I had taken this journey, the monthly number of Dombey could not have appeared. This is the plain fact. Circumstances over which I have no power at all, have delayed me, and I could not foresee them when I promised to come.

Two days I could not spare now, even if I had not that Evening engagement to which I have referred. And I need not tell you that that Manchester journey would not be a mere interruption of two days, but would stop me in the heart of a great interest at which I have been working for a long time—which I could not[†4] resume at pleasure—and which I cannot postpone.

I am My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
[CHARLES DICKENS][†5]

Alexander Ireland Esquire

To MRS MACREADY, 18 NOVEMBER 1847*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Thursday Eighteenth November | 1847.

My Dear Mrs. Macready

Tell Macready, with my love, that I shall be delighted to come on Tuesday.[†1]

A beaming and intellectual countenance[†2] will be observable, I understand, in the Stalls of the Princess's Theatre on Monday night,[†3] which is inseparably associated with much that is delightful in the imaginative Literature of this time.

Apropos of which, I hear that some terrible circumstances are taking place in Mr. Dombey's family.[†4]

Ever Yours faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Macready

To JOHN FORSTER, [19 NOVEMBER 1847]

Extract in F, VI, ii, 483. Date: 19 Nov according to Forster.

Of course she hates Carker in the most deadly degree. I have not elaborated that, now, because (as I was explaining to Browne the other day) I have relied on it very much for the effect of her death.[†5] But I have no question that what you suggest will be an improvement.[†6] The strongest place to put it in, would be the close of the chapter immediately before this last one.[†7] I want to make the first two chapters as light as I can, but I will try to do it, solemnly, in that place.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 20 NOVEMBER 1847

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Poste Restante | Boulogne | France.

Devonshire Terrace | Twentieth November 1847 | Saturday

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I received your letter today. I am going, next Saturday, into Northamptonshire for five or six days.[†1] If you don't come home before then,[†2] I shall think the spell impossible to be broken, until I can find a Hermit sitting on the road to a Mountain, unable to speak in consequence of the length of his white beard; having cut off which, with a pair of scissors, I shall receive his instructions where to find the talisman that will do it. To this talisman I shall be conducted by a bowl (given me by the Hermit) which will roll on of itself before the Horse's feet, until it arrives at the Mountain which I shall ascend on foot, until I descry, amidst the tumult of threatening voices around me—&c &c—&c.[†3]

Mary Anne Stonnell, the little girl in whom you were interested as being allowed a trifle out of doors, goes into the Home tonight.[†4] Also another girl of the name of Rosina Gale. There will then be four—[†5] and more are coming next week, and more the week after. All these girls I have seen repeatedly, and know very well, and I believe they have the strongest disposition to be confiding and faithful. The two at present in the Home (both of whom stayed voluntarily in prison three weeks) are wonderfully happy and grateful, and have altered in appearance in a most extraordinary manner. Not with eating, certainly, for they have had no appetite yet—being much troubled (so to speak) by their thankful feelings. I don't know whether I told you that the first girl cried very much when she saw her Bed. There is a vast deal to do, of course, in the making of clothes and so forth, and their industry is beyond all praise. Indeed, I have told Mrs. Holdsworth not to let that be carried too far.

I have had great anxiety in endeavours to obtain an eligible second lady. I thought it (so did Mr. Chesterton) of vital importance to the plan that she should be young—and many ladies were afraid of it, and evidently shrunk from the association. Mrs. Fisher, the lady at last secured and now there, is a widow of six and twenty—very youthful looking—vitally interested in the project—of mild sweet manners—accustomed to teaching young people—and who has known great sorrow. I have been out there, on alternate evenings, since I wrote to you last. I wish you could have seen them at work, on the first night of this lady's engagement—with a pet canary of hers walking about the table, and the two girls deep in my account of the lesson books, and all the knowledge that was to be got out of them, as we were putting them away on the shelves.

I will not say any more until you come home, or I shall sacrifice a quire of paper. Divers schemes in connexion with the secular education have occurred to me, to be developed (if you approve) as we go on—including a series of small evening lectures which I should like to deliver to them in April when Dombey is done.[†1]

Dear Miss Coutts | Faithfully Yours ever
CHARLES DICKENS

Pray let me know as soon as you are in town.

To AUGUSTUS TRACEY, 21 NOVEMBER 1847*

MS University of Texas.

Devonshire Terrace. | Twenty First November 1847.

My Dear Tracey

I will come down and see you on Thursday about mid-day (unless I hear from you to the contrary) to talk about the girl you introduced to me. In case Miss Coutts, who is now coming home from Paris,[†2] should ask me to go to Shepherd's Bush with her that day, perhaps you'll come too.[†3]

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 23 NOVEMBER 1847

Mention in N, II, 61.

Referring to the Home at Shepherd's Bush.

To CHARLES MACKAY,[†1] 23 NOVEMBER 1847*

MS Goodspeed's Book Shop.

Devonshire Terrace | Tuesday Twenty Third November | 1847.

My Dear Mackay

I should have written to you sooner, but this is my very busiest time, and I have not been able, until now, to make an appointment.[†2]

I shall be at home tomorrow, at One.[†3] Or I could call upon you at eleven or twelve o'Clock next day, if tomorrow should be inconvenient to you.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Mackay Esquire.

To W. C. MACREADY, 23 NOVEMBER 1847

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Tuesday Morning Twenty Third November 1847.

My Dear Macready

I am in the whirlwind of finishing a Number with a Crisis in it,[†4] but I can't fall to work without saying, in so many words, that I feel all words insufficient to tell you what I think of you after a night like last night.[†5] The multitudes of new tokens by which I know you for a great man, the swelling within me of my love for you, the pride I have in you, the majestic reflection I see in you of the passions and affections that make up our mystery, throw me into a strange kind of transport that has no expression but in a mute sense of an attachment which in truth and fervency is worthy of its subject.

What is this to say! Nothing, God knows,—and yet I cannot leave it unsaid.[†1]

Ever affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS[†2]

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 25 NOVEMBER 1847*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace
Thursday Evening Twenty Fifth November | 1847.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I called on you this afternoon, on my way from Shepherd's Bush. It was a kind of consolation to find the Spell in such perfect vigor.

I left word that I would call at one tomorrow, unless I heard from you to the contrary. But I think it better to write this evening, and ask you whether I shall take you out to Shepherd's Bush tomorrow? If yes, will you name your own hour (all hours are alike to me) and I will be punctual in Stratton Street. If no, will you tell me still, at what time you would be likely to be found at home, supposing there were no spell in existence.

I am going away, as I told you, on Saturday Morning for a week. But I shall be at my post again, at the expiration of that time.

Always Dear Miss Coutts | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Coutts

To EDWARD CHAPMAN, 26 NOVEMBER 1847

MS Johns Hopkins University.

Devonshire Terrace | Friday Twenty Sixth November | 1847.

My Dear Sir

I shall be glad if you will get the enclosed books,[†3] and send them out to Urania Cottage[†4] by Parcels' Delivery.[†5] I don't know who published "Little Henry and his Bearer",[†6] but I am told it is well known.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Edward Chapman Esquire.

To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, 26 NOVEMBER 1847

MS Mr Bernard A. M. Lazarus.

Devonshire Terrace | Friday Twenty Sixth November | 1847.

My Dear George,

An unexpected engagement arising out of this Home of Miss Coutts's obliges me to postpone the pleasure of a chat with you until after I return from the country.[†1] I shall not be gone more than a week.

I send you, enclosed, your part in the Alchemist.[†2]

Always Faithfully,
CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [26 NOVEMBER 1847]

Extract in F, VI, i, 467*n. Date:* 26 Nov according to Forster.

The Leeds appears to be a very important institution,[†3] and I am glad to see that George Stephenson[†4] will be there, besides the local lights, inclusive of all the Baineses.[†5] They talk at Glasgow of 6,000 people.

To THOMAS WEBSTER,[†1] 26 NOVEMBER 1847*

MS Private.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Twenty Sixth November 1847.

My Dear Sir

You are possibly aware that a Cheap Edition of my books—as far, at least, as Martin Chuzzlewit—is in course of publication, and that I purpose having a Frontispiece to each, engraved on wood from a design by some eminent artist. There is only one of these yet published, and that is from a Sketch by Leslie.[†2]

I need not say to you that I should feel any attempt thus slightly to connect what is best in English Art, with these stories, as most incomplete if it did not include your name. And I am particularly desirous to have for Nicholas Nickleby, which is now in course of publication, a sketch of the Yorkshire School from your hand.

It would be necessary to have it in February next. If you would make a colored sketch (I venture to make that request, in order that I may possess it, afterwards)[†3] which could be transferred to the wood block, subject to your approval, it should be engraved by Thompson[†4] with the greatest care. Allow me to add that the Publisher will be happy to accede to your own terms, or I should on no account trouble you with this note.

I will not attempt to tell you how much pleasure I should have in your assent to this proposal, for that would involve a bootless endeavour to express the delight I always have in the contemplation of your exquisite pictures.

Dear Sir | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Webster Esquire.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 27 NOVEMBER 1847*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace
Twenty Seventh November 1847. | Saturday

Dear Miss Coutts.

You will perhaps have inferred from my not going out of town this morning, and from my calling on you, that I have disappointment Number One.[†1] to communicate, which I was summoned out, as I was going to bed last night, to see to, and have been busy with all night and ever since. I am now obliged to follow Mrs. Dickens who was obliged to go away without me this morning, and am half dead with cold on the chest and loss of voice, but not in the least disheartened as to the Home.

Mr. Chesterton will call on you at One on Monday; for you should know the particulars of this matter. My address until next Friday (with the exception of one day at Leeds) will be The Hon. Richard Watson's, Rockingham Castle Northamptonshire—unless this subject should require my return, when Mr. Chesterton will immediately summon me.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

December

To JOHN W. BOWDEN,[†2] 2 DECEMBER 1847

Summary in Daily News, 21 Dec 71.[†3] Dated 2 Dec 47.

Replying to a request for his autograph from Bowden and assuring him, in answer to his question, that he was Bowden's old schoolfellow.

To JOHN FORSTER, [2 DECEMBER 1847]

Extract in F, VI, i, 467*n. Date:* The meeting of the Leeds Mechanics' Institute was on 1 Dec (F, 1872-4 misdates the letter 29 Dec; F, 1876, changes to 4 Dec).

A most brilliant demonstration last night, and I think I never did better.[†4] Newspaper reports bad.[†5]

To THOMAS MITTON, 5 DECEMBER 1847

MS Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Sunday Night | Fifth December 1847.

My Dear Mitton

I shall be at home tomorrow morning, until a quarter before one, when I am obliged to go to Miss Coutts. If this should be too limited an appointment, write me a line, and I will make another forthwith. I have been "going" to write to you ever since I came from Broadstairs, but have been extraordinarily engaged, and besides not having the faintest idea of the name of your place,[†1] have been expecting, constantly, to see or hear from you.[†2]

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 8 DECEMBER 1847*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Eighth December 1847. | Wednesday

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I will be with you as soon after five to day, as I possibly can. I have an appointment in the afternoon with Mr. Chesterton, and, after that, I must attend a Committee of the Literary Fund; but I will make short work of the latter.

All is going on, in a most orderly and quiet manner, at Shepherd's Bush. I was there, after I left you on Monday. Nothing could be better. Number five went out there yesterday, and number six will be received tomorrow. Both such cases as you would desire to have.

Always most faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts

To AUGUSTUS TRACEY, [DECEMBER 1847]*

MS University of Texas. Date: probably when writing a chapter in which advice was needed on the nautical terms used by Cuttle and Bunsby: e.g. Ch. 49 (Jan 48), the first that could have been written in Devonshire Terrace.

Devonshire Terrace. | Wednesday.

My Dear Tracey. This comes to inform you that I am going to invade your fortress this Evening (if you are not engaged) to ask you a question on one or two little nautical points, in order that I may be quite right in Dombey. If you don't say no, by Bearer, I'll come.[†3]

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 9 DECEMBER 1847*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Thursday Morning | Ninth December 1847.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I send you the Case Book,[†4] which you will perhaps return to me after you have seen Mrs. Holdsworth on Saturday—or rather, after you have seen Mrs. Fisher on Monday—in order that I may fill up Emma Sea's history. Neither of those ladies are acquainted with the circumstances of each case, otherwise than very generally indeed. If I feel it necessary to give them any particular caution or piece of advice in reference to any Individual, I give them the immediate reason I have for so doing—but nothing more.

The sequel of Sarah Wood's history is stated in the book.[†1] I mention this, to prevent your accidentally putting any one in possession of it, to whom you have not mentioned the circumstance.

Dear Miss Coutts | Always Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To EDWARD CHAPMAN, 9 DECEMBER 1847

MS Dickens House.

Devonshire Terrace | Ninth December 1847.

My Dear Sir

If you will tell me when the Nickleby illustration must be had, at latest, I will communicate with Mr. Webster immediately. If Mr. Leslie's sketch has not gone back, I should like to buy it, as it would be pleasant to me to have them all.

Faithfully Always

CD.

Edward Chapman Esquire.

To WILLIAM HAZLITT,[†2] 10 DECEMBER 1847

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, March 1903; MS 1 p.; dated 10 Dec 47.

To THE HON. SPENCER LYTTELTON,[†3] 10 DECEMBER 1847†

MS Berg Collection. Address: The Hon: Spencer Lyttleton | Post Office | Yarmouth.[†4] Envelope marked "Victoria Hotel", in another hand.

London, 1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park

Tenth December 1847.

My Dear Lyttleton

[†a]I fell into a swoon on receipt of the Captain's[†5] joke,[†a] and have been very weak, ever since. [†b]He dined here yesterday, with the Watsons[†b]—appeared quite hardened—and shewed no glimpse of contrition. [†c]They had been marrying Lord George[†1] in the morning. That gay youth[†2] and his lovely bride went down to Rockingham last night; and I have no doubt that any number of Cupids (a little weak of wing, and wearing flannel drawers as a precaution against rheumatism) have been fluttering about the grounds this morning.

London is in a very hideous state of mud and darkness. Everybody is laid up with the Influenza, except all the disagreeable people,[†c] and they are very punctual in coming and talking about it.[†3] [†d]I was at the Theatre (the Shakespeare House benefit)[†4] on Tuesday, and a most extraordinary effect was produced by the whole audience being in a paroxysm of sniffing,[†d] during the whole of the entertainments.

They say that the "late gales"[†5] will do severe damage to the bloater trade.[†6] No doubt you are master of the subject by this time. I suppose you eat nothing but herrings and ship biscuit, and that you drink out of a small wooden keg, like a theatrical smuggler.

Mrs. Dickens and Miss Hogarth send their regards to you. They don't cough incessantly now. I have known them silent, half a minute at a time. [†e]I am in a frightful state of mental imbecility myself, and am pursuing Dombey under difficulties. With a presentiment that nothing but Orange Brandy will bring me round,[†e] I have sent into the City to try if I can buy some. Meantime, I am on a low regimen of Chichester Punch, which, if you never tasted, I hope you will come and taste here.

Always Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To R. SHELTON MACKENZIE,[†7] 10 DECEMBER 1847

Text from R. Shelton Mackenzie, Life of CD, Philadelphia, [1870], p. 174.

Devonshire Terrace | Tenth December, 1847

My Dear Sir,

My engagements are so very numerous just now, that I cannot have the pleasure of immediately seeing Mr. Tovey's drawings.[†1] But I have made a note of that gentleman's address, and propose calling at his studio one day towards the end of the month.[†2]

Yours Faithfully,
[CHARLES DICKENS]

R. Shelton Mackenzie, Esquire.

To JOHN HULLAH,[†3] 12 DECEMBER 1847

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

Devonshire Terrace | Sunday Twelfth December 1847.

My Dear Hullah

I am actively engaged, for Miss Coutts, in the Management of a private establishment (called her Home) for the reclamation of certain young women, and for the training of them for Colonization.

We want them to learn to sing in parts, on your system. The class is now six or seven strong, and will never be more than thirteen. The place is at Shepherd's Bush, accessible by Acton Omnibus from Oxford Street. If you will empower any one of your masters[†4] whom you may think best adapted to such a purpose, to communicate with me, and will beg him to call upon me any morning between half past ten and two—armed with your card, which will be his passport—I will settle with him such questions as whether one attendance in a week will be often enough, and will conclude the engagement on the spot. I am very anxious for the instruction beginning without delay, as I attach immense importance to its refining influences.

Ever Yours Cordially
CHARLES DICKENS

John Hullah Esquire.

To WILLIAM HAZLITT, 13 DECEMBER 1847†

MS Mr Joseph P. Hennessy.

1 Devonshire Terrace | Monday Evening
Thirteenth December 1847

My Dear Sir

I know Charles Buller,[†1] but I have a strong and special reason (not personally relating to him) for desiring to avoid any such direct application just now, to any official person,[†2] as you think would serve you. But [†a]if you would like me to write you a letter expressive of my opinion of your capacities and deserts, believe me it will be a pleasure to me to do so.[†a] I very much regret my inability to be of more efficient use to you, for my good wishes are with you;[†3] but, so far, I entreat you to command me, if you think fit.

Faithfully Yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

W. Hazlitt, Esquire

To AUGUSTUS TRACEY, 13 DECEMBER 1847*

MS University of Texas.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Thirteenth December 1847.

My Dear Tracey

As I think you said Monday would suit you as well for our little Committee[†4] over yonder, as any other day, I will name, if you please, every Monday at halfpast 3 exactly, then and there, for that purpose—when the Tax Collector's book[†5] shall be produced, and all other due formalities observed.[†6]

To MR WILSON,[†1] 15 DECEMBER 1847

MS University of Michigan.

Devonshire Terrace, London | Fifteenth December 1847.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Wilson, and begs to inform Mr. Wilson, in reply to his enquiry, that his first book was The "Sketches, by Boz"—published, as the title would imply, under the signature of Boz.

To SIR WILLIAM ALLAN,[†2] 18 DECEMBER 1847

Summary in Anderson Galleries catalogue No. 4217 (1936); extract in Mitchell's catalogue No. 7; MS 2 pp.; dated London, 18 Dec 47.

Expressing his regret that he and Mrs Dickens cannot accept a dinner engagement while in Edinburgh.

How is our friend Doctor Henry—and the pig—and the three leggit stool—.[†3]

To WILLIAM HAZLITT, 18 DECEMBER 1847*

MS Benoliel Collection.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Eighteenth December 1847.

My Dear Sir.

I really have some difficulty in bearing testimony to your qualifications;[†4] for I feel it a kind of presumption to do so, when you have given such good evidence of them to all the world as is to be found in your edition of your father's works.[†5] But as many years have passed since I first knew you, and as I have had business-opportunities of a more recent date, of becoming acquainted with your industry, punctuality, and faithful and prompt discharge of very responsible and difficult duties,[†6] I have, perhaps, some slight individual title to recommend you in these respects.

I do so, conscientiously, and with a full knowledge of your deserts. I know you to be perfectly qualified for any employment to which a thoroughly well informed gentleman of talent and honor can render justice. It would be a hearty satisfaction to me if I could ever believe that I had helped you to any such, by this poor testimony.

I am My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. Hazlitt Esquire.

To LORD JEFFREY, 18 DECEMBER 1847

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, March 1903; MS 1 p.; dated 18 Dec 47.

If you will take Kate and me in, or take us in at intervals on the 30th of this month, and keep us until early morning on the second of January, write the word.[†1] I am in a gloomy state of wrath at not having heard from you, and will write no more on this sheet.

To JOHN FORSTER, [21 DECEMBER 1847]

Extracts in F, VI, ii, 483-4. Date: both extracts 21 Dec according to Forster.

I am thoroughly delighted that you like what I sent. I enclose designs. Shadow-plate, poor. But I think Mr. Dombey admirable.[†2] One of the prettiest things in the book ought to be at the end of the chapter I am writing now.[†3] But in Florence's marriage, and in her subsequent return to her father, I see a brilliant opportunity.[†4]

. . . Note from Jeffrey this morning,[†5] who won't believe (positively refuses) that Edith is Carker's mistress.[†6] What do you think of a kind of inverted Maid's Tragedy,[†7] and a tremendous scene of her undeceiving Carker, and giving him to know that she never meant that?

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 22 DECEMBER 1847*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace. | Twenty Second December 1847.
Wednesday Evening

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I received this enclosed note at about 4 o'Clock this afternoon. I cannot but think there is some mistake in the case; still I think it indispensable that your solicitor (if he be a sharp one) should see this Mrs. White immediately, and, if it be not a mistake, give her in custody. I am quite clear that this should be done, by a Solicitor, and done promptly.

I am obliged to dine in that neighbourhood today, and will see Mrs. Holdsworth this Evening. Tomorrow I shall be forced to imprison myself the whole day long, finishing Dombey; but of course I will see any one you may send to me. In any case I shall be glad to receive a line from you. I would favor Mrs. White[†1] with a call tonight, but I am sure that to do the thing effectually, she should be waited on by two people, and one of those a solicitor who might presently dispose of her.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Don't be alarmed. No more Sarah Wood![†2]

To A. H. ENGELBACH,[†3] [22 DECEMBER 1847]

Envelope only, MS Mr William Miller. Date: PM 22 Dec 47. Address: A. H. Engelbach Esquire | Coll. Land & Emigration Office | 9 Park Street | Westminster.

To DR J. W. HUDSON,[†4] 24 DECEMBER 1847

Extract in American Art Association catalogue, 24 and 25 Nov 1924; MS 2 pp.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 24 Dec 47.

I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 27th, and the document[†5] accompanying it. . . . I have been too busy to look at them at all, yet, but I purpose giving them my best attention tomorrow and I will by no means forget the ladies.[†6]

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 24 DECEMBER 1847*

Text from transcript by Mr Walter Dexter.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty fourth December 1847

My Dear Miss Coutts,

A thousand thanks for the noble turkey. I thought it was an infant, sent here by mistake, when it was brought in. It looked so like a fine baby.

I shall see you to-day, as I proposed yesterday. On Monday morning I go to Glasgow, but I shall be in Shepherd's Bush again, please God, on that day week. I was there last night.

Very faithfully yours,

C.D.

To JOHN FORSTER, [24 DECEMBER 1847]

Extract in F, VI, i, 467 n. Date: 24 Dec according to Forster.

You have got Southey's Holly Tree.[†1] I have not. Put it in your pocket to-day. It occurs to me (up to the eyes in a mass of Glasgow Athenaeum papers) that I could quote it with good effect in the North.[†2]

To H. M. GIBB,[†3] 24 DECEMBER 1847

Summary in Kitton's "Dickens Ana", IV, 13 (in Dickens House), where the name is given as "Gibbs"; MS 1 ¼ p. (third person); dated Devonshire Terrace, 24 Dec 47.

Asking to have a bed-room, sitting-room, &c., prepared for his wife and himself.

To JOHN POOLE, [?24 DECEMBER 1847]

Mention in John Poole to Talfourd, 27 Dec 47, photocopy Dickens House. Date: received "a few days" before Poole's letter.[†4]

To THOMAS RODEN,[†1] 24 DECEMBER 1847*

MS University of Texas.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park

Twenty Fourth December 1847.

Sir.

I beg to say, in reply to your letter, that I settled with the late Mr. Peake, immediately after the design in question[†2] was abandoned, for (as I understood him) every kind of expense that had been incurred in its prosecution. But, perfectly convinced by your letter, that the advertizing charges of the Morning Herald were omitted from his list,[†3] I enclose you a cheque for the amount,[†4] with many thanks to you for your courteous intimation to me of this oversight.

I am Sir | Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Roden Esquire.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 29 DECEMBER 1847

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street | Piccadilly | London.

Glasgow | Twenty Ninth December 1847.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I am very much obliged to you for writing to me so soon, on the subject of Mrs. Fisher. I cannot but say that I greatly regret her departure, and that the cause of it, is extremely painful to me, as it involves a point, on which, though I have no sympathy whatever with her private opinions, I have a very strong feeling indeed—which is not yours.[†5] At the same time I have no doubt whatever, that she ought to have stated the fact of her being a Dissenter to me, before she was engaged; and I should then, before engaging her, have most certainly stated it to you. With these few words, and with the fullest sense of your very kind and considerate manner of making this change, I leave it.

After leaving Jeffrey (to whom I go tomorrow) I shall have to pay a visit of a few hours at Malton in Yorkshire.[†6] It being doubtful, therefore, whether I shall be able to get home before Tuesday Morning, I will write to Mr. Chesterton and Lieutenant Tracey, and appoint that day for our meeting, instead of Monday.

My presidency went off with great success last night, and was a very grand scene indeed, attended by nearly four thousand people.[†7] I would send you a newspaper of this morning with an account of the proceedings, but my speech is so dismally done in the report,[†1] that I can't make up my mind to send it.

I have been over the prison,[†2] this morning, and see exactly the same things here, that we are dealing with at Shepherd's Bush.

Mrs. Dickens (who was taken ill on the Railroad,[†3] and couldn't go last night, after coming all this way) sends her kindest regards.

Dear Miss Coutts | Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To GEORGE HODDER,[†4] 29 DECEMBER 1847*

MS Newberry Library, Chicago.

Glasgow. | Twenty Ninth December 1847.

My Dear Sir

I am most reluctantly obliged to say that I cannot comply with your request. I have a very special and particular reason for not addressing any minister on such a subject, at this time.[†5] And I hope I need not say that it has no reference to yourself, whom I would gladly serve if it were in my power.

I am very sorry to hear that you and the Daily News have parted company, but I am quite sure there is no fault in you.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

George Hodder Esquire

To JOHN FORSTER, [30 DECEMBER 1847]

Extracts in F, VI, i, 467-8 and 467*n*. Date: 30 Dec according to Forster.

We came over this afternoon, leaving Glasgow at one o'clock. Alison lives in style in a handsome country house out of Glasgow,[†6] and is a capital fellow, with an agreeable wife, nice little daughter, cheerful niece, all things pleasant in his household. I went over the prison and lunatic asylum[†7] with him yesterday.[†8]

Tremendous distress[†1] at Glasgow, and a truly damnable jail,[†2] exhibiting the separate system[†3] in a most absurd and hideous form. Governor[†4] practical and intelligent; very anxious for the associated silent system; and much comforted by my fault-finding. At the Lord Provost's[†5] had gorgeous state-lunch with the Town Council; and was entertained at a great dinner-party at night. Unbounded hospitality and enthoozymoozy the order of the day, and I have never been more heartily received anywhere, or enjoyed myself more completely.[†6] The great chemist, Gregory,[†7] who spoke at the meeting, returned with us to Edinburgh to-day, and gave me many new lights on the road regarding the extraordinary pains Macaulay seems for years to have taken to make himself disagreeable and disliked here.[†8] No one else, on that side, would have had the remotest chance of being unseated at the last election; and, though Gregory voted for him, I thought he seemed quite as well pleased as anybody else that he didn't come in. . . . I am sorry to report the Scott Monument[†9] a failure. It is like the spire of a Gothic church taken off and stuck in the ground.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, [30] DECEMBER 1847

Text from MDGH, I, 183-4, where wrongly dated 13 Dec.

Edinburgh, Thursday, December 13th, 1847.

My Dear Georgy,

I "take up my pen," as the young ladies write, to let you know how we are getting on; and as I shall be obliged to put it down again very soon, here goes. We lived with very hospitable people in a very splendid house near Glasgow, and were perfectly comfortable. The meeting was the most stupendous thing as to numbers, and the most beautiful as to colours and decorations I ever saw. The inimitable did wonders. His grace, elegance, and eloquence, enchanted all beholders. Kate didn't go! having been taken ill[†1] on the railroad between here and Glasgow.

It has been snowing, sleeting, thawing, and freezing, sometimes by turns and sometimes all together, since the night before last. Lord Jeffrey's household are in town here,[†2] not at Craigcrook, and jogging on in a cosy, old-fashioned, comfortable sort of way.[†3] [†a]We have some idea of going to York on Sunday, passing that night at Alfred's, and coming home on Monday; but of this, Kate will advise you when she writes, which she will do to-morrow, after I shall have seen the list of railway trains.[†a]

She sends her best love. She is a little poorly still, but nothing to speak of. She is frightfully anxious that her not having been to the great demonstration should be kept a secret. But I say that, like murder, it will out, and that to hope to veil such a tremendous disgrace from the general intelligence is out of the question. In one of the Glasgow papers[†4] she is elaborately described. I rather think Miss Alison, who is seventeen, was taken for her, and sat for the portrait.

Best love from both of us, to Charley, Mamey, Katey, Wally, Chickenstalker, Skittles, and the Hoshen Peck;[†5] last, and not least, to you. We talked of you at the Macreadys' party on Monday night.[†6] I hope —— came out lively, also that —— was truly amiable. Finally, that —— took everybody to their carriages, and that —— wept a good deal during the festivities?[†7] God bless you. Take care of yourself, for the sake of mankind in general.

Ever affectionately, dear Georgy
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To AUGUSTUS TRACEY, 31 DECEMBER 1847*

MS University of Texas.

Edinburgh | Thirty First December 1847.

My Dear Tracey.

Many happy new years to you! says an amiable and mellifluous voice, from among the frost and snow in the North.

It also says that as it can't be home before Monday night, it proposes Tuesday for Shepherd's Bush, instead of Monday.

After which it subscribes itself

Heartily Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [?DECEMBER 1847]

Extract in F, VI, vi, 521. Date: "at the close" of 1847, according to Forster.

Mentioning his regret[†1] on discovering that he would have to give up the house at Devonshire Terrace "next lady-day three years. I had thought the lease two years more".[†2]

To JOHN FORSTER, [DECEMBER 1847]

Extract in F, VI, vii, 551. Date: Dec 47 according to Forster.

If you should have an opportunity pendente lite,[†3] as my father would observe—indeed did on some memorable ancient occasions when he informed me that the ban-dogs[†4] would shortly have him at bay.[†5]

To CHARLES GILPIN,[†6] [1847]

Extract in C. F. Libbie catalogue, Feb 1892; MS 1 p.; dated 1847.

But I will consider this and talk with George Cruikshank about it.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, [?1847]*

MS Morgan Library. Date: Handwriting suggests 1847.

Devonshire Terrace | Thursday Evg.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I am always for the promptest measures—and I suppose made you laugh by my ferocity.

I could call on you tomorrow afternoon at a quarter past four. If I don't hear from you, I will come then.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To J. W. MARRIOTT,[†1] [?1847]*

MS Mr William Marriott. Date: Handwriting suggests 1847.

[†2]It may be possible, but I am at present unable to speak with certainty on the subject, to couple a private remembrance of this gentleman with a scheme I am just now maturing.[†3] If I should ever see my way to the useful advocacy of his claims, without exposing them to the hazard of the objection I have hinted to you, rely upon my not being unmindful of them.

I beg to be remembered to the fair circle among whom I found myself one pleasant night, so many—I am almost afraid to think how many—years ago.[†4] And I am Dear Sir

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

J. Marriott Esquire.

To MR STACEY,[†5] [?1847]

Extract in Jolly & Sons catalogue, 7 March 1969; MS (3rd person) 1 p. Date: CD would not have been asked for Sue's autograph before 1847.

Saying that he has not an autograph of M. Sue's in his possession.

To JOHN DALY,[†6] [?LATE 1847]*

MS Mrs S. S. White, III. Date: Signature suggests Winter 1847-8.

. . . [†7]guilty to any remembrance of the old promise you set forth in your note, I perfectly remember you and your humourous acting. Often since those ancient times of Braham's Theatre,[†8] when I have been in country towns, I have looked in the play-bills for your name, among others of the St. James's Company of that day, but I have never stumbled on any[†9] . . .

If I ever find myself within your circuit, I shall be glad to give you a personal assurance that I have not forgotten you, and will not fail to do so.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Daly Esquire.

To DR JAMES KAY-SHUTTLEWORTH,[†1] [WINTER 1847-8]†

MS Private. Date: Handwriting suggests Winter 1847-8; letter suggests an early visit to the Home, after its Monday committee meetings were established, the first of which was 20 Dec (see To Tracey, 13 Dec).

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday Evening

My Dear Sir

It's a long way, and we must allow half an hour at least.

I am in my monthly harness, and dare not dine out on Monday—Mrs. Dickens and I would both be delighted to accept your and Mrs. Shuttleworth's kind invitation, but for this reason which breaks down all inclination.

—Especially when I attend Committees in the middle of the day!

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

H[†2] Kay Shuttleworth Esquire

To [EDWARD YOUL],[†3] [?LATE 1847]

Mention in To Miss Coutts, 22 Apr 48, where the correspondent referred to was almost certainly Youl. Date: "some months" before 22 Apr 48.

Refusing to give his opinion on a dispute between William Howitt and "a publisher" [John Saunders], about terms which he considered unfair.[†4]

1848

January

To ALFRED DICKENS, 1 JANUARY 1848

Text from N, II, 69.

Edinburgh | Saturday Night, New Year's Day 1848

My Dear Alfred,

I am vexed beyond measure to think that you will have been to York[†1] unavailingly, and that you will all have thought us faithless, before I can hope to set you right by this note.

Kate was taken very ill on the way from this place to Glasgow, on Tuesday—a miscarriage, in short, coming on, suddenly, in the railway carriage. When we got to the House where we were engaged to stay, she was immediately undressed and put to bed—couldn't go to the Demonstration—and remained in bed 'till late next night. Moreover I was obliged to call in a famous Doctor. She seemed quite well until this morning, when she was again taken violently ill—another famous Doctor[†2] called in—and again got into bed with all speed. I must be in town on Tuesday morning. The famous Doctor No. 2 says she cannot possibly travel tomorrow, but may come by the Express Train on Monday (that by which I purposed going from you)[†3] as he thinks by that time she will be quite right.

I don't know what to give my Godson[†4] that will be useful to him, until he gets a little older. Pending that decision, I went out this morning as it was New Year's Day (Kate was with me, and was taken ill in the street) and bought Helen[†5] a little bracelet, which, if I see you at York on Monday, I will beg you to take to her. If I don't, I will send it back from Town. Kate joins in loves to you and Helen and the boy, and Fanny and Burnett[†6], and is full of regret and grief that we can't come. But I tell her we will come, Please God, another time,

In great haste ever affecy.

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To JOHN FORSTER, [1 JANUARY 1848]

Extract in F, VI, i, 468. Date: 1 Jan 48 according to Forster.

Jeffrey, who is obliged to hold a kind of morning court in his own study during the holidays, came up yesterday in great consternation, to tell me that a person had just been to make and sign a declaration of bankruptcy; and that on looking at the signature he saw it was James Sheridan Knowles.[†1] He immediately sent after, and spoke with him; and of what passed I am eager to talk with you.[†2]

To FRANK STONE, 4 JANUARY [1848]*

MS Benoliel Collection. Date: misdated 1847 (on 4 Jan 47 CD was in Paris); clearly 1848 when newly returned from Scotland.

Devonshire Terrace. | Fourth January 1847.

My Dear Stone.

I returned from Scotland late last night, and hasten to say (though we shall meet this evening) that I can have nothing but pleasure in the proposed design,[†3] and the prospect of your executing it.

There will be some children of both small and large growth, here on Thursday (Twelfth Night) and some dancing of Sir Roger de Coverley. Kate hopes you'll come, and so so I.

Ever Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Frank Stone Esquire

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, [?4 JANUARY 1848]

MS Morgan Library. Date: no doubt the Tuesday before 10 Jan, when he told Miss Coutts that Catherine was downstairs again. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street.

Devonshire Terrace. | Tuesday Evening

My Dear Miss Coutts.

Your note was answered by Mrs. Dickens this morning; but I find, on enquiry, that it was posted instead of sent. Which I hope will explain your not having received an earlier reply.

Mrs. Dickens, I am sorry to say, is in her own room, and likely to be there for two or three days. I am not without some idea that the indisposition of my intended host of tomorrow,[†1] may release me. In that case, I shall present myself in Stratton Street, however informal the circumstances of my coming there.

I was at the Home today, where all appears to be progressing with perfect comfort and promise. Archdeacon Sinclair[†2] was there, and seemed much pleased, I thought, with what he saw and heard.

Our friend Mrs. Graves[†3] is rather of a delicate gentility, I fear; as her aspect is sombre. She will enter on her duties on Saturday week. Mrs. Fisher will retire on the same day.

I will endeavour to make out the accounts tomorrow morning. Whatever has occurred to me to say to you on any little point, I will say when I shall have the pleasure of seeing you.

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts

I hope you liked the little loves of Florence and Walter?[†4] If you had seen Jeffrey crying over them the other night,[†5] you would have been charmed with him at all events.

To DR W. P. ALISON,[†1] 5 JANUARY 1848

Extract in Alwin J. Scheuer catalogue No. 6 (1931); MS 1 ½ pp.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 5 Jan 48; addressed Dr. William Pulteney Alison, York Gate, Regents Park.[†2]

Thanking him for a pamphlet.[†3] . . . the subject is deeply important and I know with what tenderness and truth you handle it. Mrs. Dickens (still very unwell) [unites][†4] with me in cordial regards to Mrs. Alison[†5]—with whose paper knife I broke ground yesterday.

To H. K. BROWNE, 5 JANUARY [1848]

MS Mrs A. M. Stern. Date: misdated 1847 (on 5 Jan 47 CD was in Paris); for Browne's four Dombey portraits, see fn.

Devonshire Terrace | Wednesday Fifth January | 1847.

My Dear Browne.

I think Paul very good indeed[†6]—a beautiful little composition altogether. The face of Florence strikes me as being too old, particularly about the mouth. Edith, not so handsome as in the little drawings, and something too long and flat in the face.[†7] The better Alice of the two, decidedly that which is opposite Edith.

I write hastily, as your messenger is waiting.[†8]

Always Faithfully

CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 7 JANUARY 1848

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace. | Seventh January 1848.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I enclose you a list of all the expences of Shepherd's Bush, from the date of the lease to the present time. The amount is greatly swelled by the builder's account for necessary repairs, fence-making, and so forth; but you will find that everything that has been bought, has been bought at the lowest ready-money prices for good things, and at the most respectable wholesale warehouses.

I have numbered every bill, for the greater convenience of your reference. You will see that receipts are not attached to some of them. In those cases, they have been paid by Mr. Chesterton, and the receipts have not yet come in to me. But I have paid everything.[†1]

I shall be glad if you will tell me when you can see me. I wish to explain to you how the case stands about the gas. I have been much dismayed by what I have heard about the books (I mean the reading books) at the Home, and imagine there is some mistake, but it makes me very unquiet, and extremely anxious to speak with you on the subject.[†2] There is also a point in reference to the acceptance or rejection of one new Inmate that I deem it necessary to submit to you for your decision. The straw-plaiting,[†3] and one or two other questions, also occur to me as requiring mention.

Charley has just brought me in a document which looks so like a begging-letter[†4] that I am afraid to send it by itself lest it should not be taken in[†5]—and therefore enclose it.

Dear Miss Coutts | Always Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [7 JANUARY 1848]

Extract in F, VI, i, 465*n*. Date: 7 Jan 48 according to Forster.

Mac and I think of going to Ireland for six weeks in the spring, and seeing whether anything is to be done there, in the way of a book?[†6] I fancy it might turn out well.

To PERCY B. ST JOHN,[†1] 7 JANUARY [1848]*

MS Mr and Mrs Melville N. Rothschild, Jr. Date: misdated 1847 (on 7 Jan 47 CD was in Paris). Handwriting supports Jan 48.

Devonshire Terrace | Seventh January 1847.

Dr. Sir.

I regret to say that I have no personal acquaintance with any of the distinguished gentlemen, mentioned in your letter. When I was in Paris, I mingled very little with society; being anxious to have my time entirely at my own disposal, and to see what I wished to see out of doors, with my own eyes.

Otherwise I should have had pleasure in complying with your request.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Percy B. St. John Esquire

To GEORGE HODDER, 9 JANUARY [1848]*

MS Walter T. Spencer. Date: misdated 1847 (on 9 Jan 47 CD was in Paris); Sunday was 9 Jan in 1848.

Devonshire Terrace | Sunday Ninth January 1847

Dear Sir

I was absent from home all day yesterday, or I would have answered your note sooner. I very much regret to say that I cannot comply with your request. I have no kind of right to trouble Dr. Southwood Smith in reference to Mr. Rowland Hill, whom I have never seen in his company, and whom he may have no acquaintance with, so far as I know. The reason which I have already informed you I have, for not addressing any member of the Government immediately, applies with particular force to the Sanitary Commission, where I have already exerted the strongest influence I could urge, in behalf of some one else.[†2]

I have no kind of doubt that Dr Southwood Smith will recollect you perfectly well, as having been engaged at the Sanatorium,[†3] and that you need no other introduction to him than your own statement of the fact.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

George Hodder Esquire

To W. M. THACKERAY, 9 JANUARY 1848

Text from The Letters and Private Papers of W. M. Thackeray, ed. G. N. Ray, II, 336.

Devonshire Terrace, | Sunday Ninth January 1848.

My Dear Thackeray,

I need not tell you that I have been delighted—and cut tender, as it were to the very heart—by your generous letter.[†1] You would never have written it if you had not known how truly and heartily I should feel it. I will only say the spirit in which I read it, was worthy of the spirit in which you wrote it, and that I think there is nothing in the world or out of it to which I am so sensitive as the least mark of such a manly and gallant regard.

I do sometimes please myself with thinking that my success has opened the way for good writers. And of this, I am quite sure now, and hope I shall be when I die—that in all my social doings I am mindful of this honour and dignity and always try to do something towards the quiet assertion of their right place. I am always possessed with the hope of leaving the position of literary men in England, something better and more independent than I found it.

There's a wild and egotistical fancy for you! See what it is to get into my confidence so thoroughly!

It is curious, about Punch, that I was so strongly impressed by the absurdity and injustice of my being left out of those imitations,[†2] that I several times said at home here I would write to you and urge the merits of the case. But I never made up my mind to do so, for I feared you might misunderstand me.

I will tell you now, candidly, that I did not admire the design—but I think it is a great pity to take advantage of the means our calling gives us with such accursed readiness, of at all depreciating or vulgarizing each other—but this seems to me to be one of the main reasons why we are generally more divided among ourselves than artists who have not those means at their command—and that I thought your power thrown away on that series, however happily executed. So now I have made a clean breast too, and have nothing more to confess but that I am saving up the perusal of Vanity Fair[†1] until I shall have done Dombey[†2] and that I cried most bitterly over your affecting picture of that cock-boat manned by babies,[†3] and shall never forget it.[†4]

Kate says that whomsoever you bring on the 26th. will be warmly welcomed. We don't go in for grandeur on the occasion, and I am bent on a prodigious country dance at about the small hours.

Believe me my dear fellow I am very proud of your letter and very happy in its receipt. If I were to pursue the subject, I should come out in a style that would be full of all sorts of faults not insincerity. You have given me a new reason (if I wanted any) for interest in all you do, and for gratification in your progress afterwards: and though I did not write about Harness[†5] with the least grain of ill humour, I think of him now as if he had done me a great service in occasioning me to write at all.

Affectionately yours,

CHARLES DICKENS.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 10 JANUARY 1848

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Night | Tenth January 1848.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I am concerned to hear there is anything wrong at Shepherd's Bush. I should have been there yesterday or today, but am perfectly overpowered with a cold that seems like a second Edition of my former one, and is most ridiculously intense. But I shall be at my post tomorrow, and will not fail to let you know through Mr. Brown all that has been done.

Julia Mozley's letter was immediately forwarded to its destination. It will happen no doubt, in many of these cases, that the friends are not disposed to renew the broken intercourse. It is a most extraordinary circumstance that the girls themselves seem to have no idea of this. She can write again, I will tell her tomorrow, if she likes.

Mrs. Dickens is down stairs again, and wishes me to thank you for your kind remembrance of her.

Dear Miss Coutts | Always Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To MISS MARION ELY,[†1] 10 JANUARY 1848*

MS Mitchell Library, Sydney.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Night | Tenth January 1848.

My Dear Miss Ely.

Next Saturday at half past Seven precisely, D.V. we shall besiege the doors of the Theatre. I am delighted to be beckoned thither by your own fair hand[†2]—writing.

Faithfully Yours Ever

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Ely.

To MARK LEMON, 10 JANUARY [1848]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: misdated 1847; Dombey No. XVII was published on 1 Feb 48. Address: Mark Lemon Esquire.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday, Tenth January 1847.

My Dear Lemon. I shall be at home all day and evening. I have sitch a cold!—Sniffing, and wheezing, and hating myself, and trying to begin Dombey No. XVII,[†3] and not able to see the paper.

There is cold roast beef, I know—and some soup (soup not soap) I think—on the premises here, at half past five. Come at that hour if you can, and dine with us. We are quite alone, and Kate recovered.[†4]

To ANDREW PARK, [10] JANUARY 1848

Text from George D. Smith catalogue, 1901. Date: misdated by CD; Monday was 10 Jan in 1848. Clearly 1848, since the Preface to Park's Songs is dated Dec 47.

London, 1 Devonshire Terrace | Monday Eighth January 1848

Dear Sir.

I beg you to accept my cordial thanks for the volume you have kindly sent me;[†1] and my assurance that I esteem the dedication of it to myself, as a great and flattering compliment. Absence from home [has][†2] prevented my acknowledging your favor until now.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

Andrew Park Esquire

To FRANK STONE, 10 JANUARY 1848*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Devonshire Terrace | Tenth January 1848.

My Dear Stone.

I am obliged to make some changes in the Rent Day,[†3] with the view of getting in George Cruikshank who at present has nothing to do in either piece.

This gives me an opportunity of asking you whether you would prefer Toby[†4] (my old part) to Hyssop.[†5] If yes, it is at your disposal. If no, keep Hyssop. But let me know in the course of tomorrow what you decide upon, that I may settle George.

Ever Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

Frank Stone Esquire

To MISS JULIA FORTESCUE, [?EARLY JANUARY 1848]

Mention in Julia Fortescue to CD, ?Jan 48 (see To Miss Fortescue, 26 Jan, fn). Date: CD's apology to Miss Fortescue on 26 Jan for delay in answering her letter of thanks suggests he had written originally early in the month.

Inviting her to act in the Amateur Theatricals and enclosing a present of books.[†6]

To [WILLIAM BROWN], 11 JANUARY [1848]

MS Morgan Library. Address: clearly to Brown, like other letters on Urania Cottage business. Date: misdated 1847 (on 11 Jan 47 CD was in Paris); Tuesday was 11 Jan in 1848.

Devonshire Terrace. | Tuesday Night | Eleventh January 1847.

My Dear Sir

Miss Coutts begged me to let you know what was done at Shepherd's Bush today.

Only Archdeacon Sinclair and Mr. Tennant[†1] were there, besides myself; Lieutenant Tracey being ill, and Mr. Chesterton suddenly called away on business.[†2]

It appears that Mrs. Holdsworth was led to suspect that Julia Mozley might be secretly holding communication with some person, over or through the garden fence, in consequence of her regularly absenting herself from the long room, for the last ten evenings or so, immediately after tea, and remaining absent, a quarter of an hour or twenty minutes—sometimes alone, and sometimes (that might naturally happen) with one or other of the other girls. That in consequence of this, she begged the gardener to watch, last Sunday night, outside the fence, on the side near the wash-house. That the gardener did watch accordingly, and a man soon came by him, going along the fence towards that corner. That the gardener "happening", as he says "to have the influenza" (as if it were a strange event!) coughed prematurely, and the man came back. That the gardener caught him by the coat, to detain and question him, and tore his coat, and so he ran away. But not before the gardener recognized him for a young man of 17 or 18, who is a brickmaker out of work[†3]. This morning or yesterday (I forget which) the gardener encountered this person again, elsewhere, and by chance: who seemed ill at ease at having been caught there—told him he needn't have been so sharp upon him, as he was about no harm—and gave a reason for being there, which might possibly be true. On that Sunday night, Julia Mozley's manner was observed to change, and she has been low-spirited, silent, and churlish ever since. It should be observed, however, that she is not well. On being told today that we had reason to believe some communication had been held with some person outside, she most strenuously denied any such proceeding on her part, and asseverated over and over again that nothing was farther from her thoughts. She also said that she knew of no such communication on the part of anybody else, and was very staunch indeed in her defence, though I did not think she shewed the least surprise on the subject being mentioned to her; and on my saying beforehand, "you seem changed in your manner. Is there anything the matter with you?" she replied "Not as I knows on."

You will understand that the gardener did not see her, and that the man did not communicate, or try to communicate, with anybody inside, while he was there. We agreed that if we could, beyond all doubt, connect her with the man, that would be a sufficient reason for immediately dismissing her; but there is no such proof at all. The suspicious circumstances against her, are 1stly. the coincidence between Mrs. Holdsworth's suspicion and the man's appearance and 2ndly. the alteration in her manner from the time of his encountering the gardener, as if she divined that he had been caught and prevented from coming any more. That her manner is greatly altered, there seems no doubt. But, as I said before, she is not well; and that, and the consciousness of being suspected, may sufficiently account for the change.

The main circumstance against the man, is his running away. But he is a brickmaker; and all brickmakers are supposed to be prowling vagabonds with more or less reason to run away, arising in petty-larceny recollections.

We admonished her about her temper, and said if she resumed her old manner, we hoped we should have no reason to revert to this topic. In the present unsatisfactory state of the matter, we did not feel justified in doing any more. But I gave the gardener a charge to resume his watch, and a sovereign (by way of Christmas Box) to sharpen it; and I begged Mrs. Holdsworth, in the event of her noting the least demonstration in the girl of increased sullenness, or determination to resort to that place or any other, to let me know immediately.

My own impression is, that she is in the restless state which precedes the determination to go away. I think it possible that she may have got this man to go to some other man with whom she was formerly acquainted, and that this other man has returned some message importing that he has no desire to renew the acquaintance. Which would depress and irritate her. But supposing she resumes her old demeanour, I shall think this is not the case, and that there really has been no communication at all. My reason for desiring to know accurlately what she is about, is, that we may be beforehand with her, and, if we have any new reason to believe she is going, that we may—for the general example—discharge her. I will go out on Thursday night, and see her again. And if I should be summoned in the meantime, will go there immediately.

I should have called to tell you all this in a few words, but did not leave the Home until after five o'Clock. All the rest appear to be doing very well, and are looking very well, and everything is in perfect order.

My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

She is to have some medicine, and some application to her throat tonight. Mrs. Holdsworth thinks nothing of her indisposition.

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON,[†1] 12 JANUARY [1848]

MS Lytton Papers. Date: misdated 1847; Bulwer Lytton presided at the General Theatrical Fund annual dinner on 17 Apr 48.

Devonshire Terrace. | Twelfth January 1847.

My Dear Sir Edward.

The committee of the General Theatrical Fund (who are all actors) are anxious to prefer a petition to you to preside at their next annual dinner at the London Tavern; and having no personal knowledge of you have requested me as one of their Trustees,[†2] through their Secretary Mr. Cullenford,[†3] to give them some kind of presentation to you.

I will only say that I have felt great interest in this design which embraces all sorts and conditions of actors, from the first,[†4] and that it has been maintained by themselves with extraordinary perseverance and determination. It has been in existence some years, but it is only two years since they began to dine. At their first festival I presided[†5]—at their second, Macready.[†6] They very naturally hold that if they could prevail on you to reign over them now, they would secure a most powerful and excellent advocate whose aid would serve and grace their cause immensely. I sympathise with this feeling so cordially, and know so well that it would certainly be mine if I were in their case (as indeed it is, being their friend), that I comply with their request for an introduction. And I will not ask you to excuse my troubling you, feeling sure that I may use this liberty with you.[†7]

Believe me always | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 14 JANUARY 1848

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Coutts.

Devonshire Terrace | Fourteenth January 1848.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

Mr. Wardley[†1] (in a most amusing letter, which I must save to shew you) writes to inform me that he has discovered one Mrs. Leslie,[†2] aged thirty six, whom he recommends for the vacant post of Instructress. Would you like to see her, first, or shall I?

I was at Shepherd's Bush last night, and spoke very kindly to Julia Mozley. Her manner of replying, in the presence of the rest, was so very sullen and insolent that I fear some strong notice of it must be taken on Tuesday. In observance of the principle laid down for the other governing powers, I did not take the least notice of it to anybody, at the time, but it will not do to let it pass.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

I have sent out the Carpenter to make the alteration of the upper bedroom door, this morning.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, [14 JANUARY 1848]

Mention in next.

To WILLIAM BROWN, [14 JANUARY 1848]*

MS Morgan Library. Date: endorsed 14 Jan 48 (a Friday).

Devonshire Terrace. | Friday Night

My Dear Sir

I had some one with me, reading a play to night (in which I was not interested) and my servant brought me a note from you, saying it was from Miss Coutts. I read it hastily, and thought it applied to the moral Julia—not the physical. The answer I hurriedly returned to her,[†3] is for you of course—as I have no doubt you will be this time have discovered.

Ever Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. Brown Esquire.

To WILLIAM BROWN, 16 JANUARY 1848

MS Morgan Library.

Sunday Sixteenth January 1848.

My Dear Sir.

Of the cases I saw yesterday, I would greatly desire, with Miss Coutts's sanction, to take in one—Adelaide Thomas, aged 17—ignorant—poor in the last degree—her history most awful—and her fall, in its beginning, impossible to be attributed to herself. Mr. Chesterton, his matron, and I, saw the girl's mother (her father went mad, in his grief for this child) and are acquainted with her whole story from her cradle. We strongly believe she may be saved without much difficulty. If we reject her, nothing on earth can stop her in her course to destruction.[†1]

Her appearance is pleasant, and her disposition, we are assured, patient and good humoured. She is very anxious to go abroad. She has never been in any Institution.

Among the other applicants (who, for various sufficient reasons, I cannot recommend) is one whose case Miss Coutts may perhaps like to reconsider.—Martha Goldsmith,[†2] aged 21; the girl who was a year in the Magdalen,[†3] and discharged yesterday. It appears that they are only kept in the Magdalen one year, and are then discharged.[†4] Supposing that situations are not to be got (as at this time) they are discharged at the twelvemonths'[†5] end, to make room for new inmates. This girl was sent away yesterday, with an excellent testimonial from the matron,[†6] a change of clothing, and three shillings. She has no relatives but sisters who are in service, or poor, and cannot take her in. It appears to me that the Magdalen is an absurdity (the public statement of such a case as this, would do it grievous damage)[†7] and that this girl is positively worse off, than if she had never been there. She is terribly depressed at finding herself again in the world, with a horror of her old life, and no means of taking to a better. One of her sisters was with her, crying bitterly, and implored me so earnestly to make another appeal to Miss Coutts (though I explained the general objection to her, which she very reasonably received) that I feel obliged to state these facts. She is a good plain needlewoman—having worked at her needle, through her year—ordinary looking, though not ugly, and with a discreet quiet manner.

I shall be glad to have your answer relative to these two cases, without loss of time, to avoid keeping the people in a state of painful anxiety.

I may also repeat that Mr. Chesterton, Mrs. Meriton (his matron) and Lieutenant Tracey, all most decidedly recommend that we should now take in some girls who have not been tried and imprisoned. It would be next to impossible to have stronger authorities in such a case, and they all consider this infusion necessary to the welfare of the Home.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. Brown Esquire.

To [?THOMAS RODD], 17 JANUARY 1848*

MS Dickens House. Address: CD's Account-book entry (see below) suggests correspondent was "Mr Rodd"—perhaps Thomas Rodd, bookseller.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Evening | Seventeenth January 1848.

Dear Sir

I am greatly obliged to you for the little book,[†1] which is a very curious compilation—to say nothing of the reverend author's inventive powers, which seem to have been pretty strong.

Let me take this opportunity of enclosing you a cheque for the amount in which I am indebted to you.[†2]

Believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, [?20 JANUARY 1848]*

MS Morgan Library. Date: PM 21 [month illegible] 1848; since dated Thursday night, presumably written on the 20th. In 1848, 20 Jan, Apr and July were Thursdays. Not 20 July, since CD in Glasgow then; 20 Apr unlikely, since CD wrote to Miss Coutts the following Sat evening; 20 Jan the most probable.

Devonshire Terrace | Thursday Night

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I grieve to say, I am engaged on Saturday. My anxiety to know that secret reason of Sarah's,[†3] is so intense that I will call on Monday between one and two, on the chance of finding you at home, and becoming a party to her mystery.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To J. MACGREGOR,[†1] [?24] JANUARY 1848†

MS Auckland Public Library. Date: Misdated by CD; Monday was 24 Jan in 1848. Next letter supports the year.

Devonshire Terrace. | Monday Twenty Eighth January 1848.

My Dear Sir

I write a hurried line to say that my better half and her sister will be with you today, but that I fear I shall be wanting.

I never accept an engagement for about this day in the month; being always liable, if my proofs are late, to have to revise them at the printers, and if there is too much matter (as is the case this month)[†2] to take it out, and put them all to rights, and leave them on the Press. I cannot begin to do this, before five or six or seven o'Clock this evening (though I tried very hard to accomplish it this morning) and I hardly descry a possibility of keeping my engagement with you.

I would not have made it, but for being really anxious to come, and not to swell our black list of refusals and mutual impossibilities of accepting invitations, with another one. I am sure I need not say to you that the matter which keeps me away, will admit of no postponement, and is one over which I have no power of arrangement.

Mrs. Dickens will tell you about Wednesday, when I hope we shall see you.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

J. MacGregor Esquire

To DANIEL MACLISE, [24 JANUARY 1848]*

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel. Date: almost certainly the same day as last, when he declined MacGregor's invitation; handwriting supports.

At Your house | Monday

My Dear Mac

I am going (under the rose, for I ought to dine with MacGregor) to Jack Straws, where I have to see Forster about my proofs. We dine there alone at 5, if you are dispoged to come.

Ever CD.

To MISS JULIA FORTESCUE, 26 JANUARY 1848*

Text from transcript by Mr A. Mortelli from MS in the possession of Lady Iveagh.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty sixth January 1848

Dear Miss Fortescue

I should have acknowledged the receipt of your kind note[†1] sooner, but for having been very busily occupied.

Allow me to enclose you a copy of the Rent Day, and to add that we have changed our rehearsal nights to Wednesday in each week, at 7—beginning this day week, when we purpose rehearsing the first two acts of Money and the Rent Day.[†2]

I am going out of my "Line" to enact Martin[†3] therein.

Always believe me | Very faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Fortescue.

To R. H. HORNE,[†4] 26 JANUARY 1848

MS University of North Carolina.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Sixth January 1848.

My Dear Horne.

Dombey alone—relentless savage that he is!—has prevented my writing sooner, to tell you that I was greatly interested and entertained by your lecture.[†5] Pray let me pay the debt now, with all the interest that is due upon it, in right of my subsequent reflexion thereanent.

No cold taken—not much felt, indeed—by me. Maclise who was with me, observed once that he thought there was a door open somewhere in the neighbourhood—and mildly whispered at another time that he felt as if a Baker were rasping him up the back. But he seemed to think it a part of the Institution, and was quite satisfied.

Always My Dear Horne | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

R. H. Horne Esquire

To MISS OPPENHEIM,[†1] 26 JANUARY 1848

Extract in Francis Edwards catalogue No. 477 (1926); MS 1 ½ pp.; dated 26 Jan 48.

The signature of your note carried me back—I wont say how far—rambling among all sorts of old days and once familiar faces. But as I have quite made up my mind never to grow old myself (within, at all events) and never to believe that anybody else has done so, except upon the strongest evidence, it was a very pleasant reminder to me which I am delighted to acknowledge.

To JOSEPH BOULT,[†2] 28 JANUARY 1848

Extract in John Heise catalogue No. 9745 (1925); MS 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, York Gate Regents Park, 28 Jan 48.

I beg to acknowledge the receipt of the letter with which you have honored me on behalf of the Council of the Roscoe Club,[†3] and also to express my regret that I cannot possibly accept the Society's invitation. I am . . .

To MESSRS WILLIAMS & CLAPHAM[†4], 28 JANUARY 1848

MS Dickens House.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Eighth January 1848.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his Compliments to Messrs. Williams & Clapham, and will thank them, when they send home the seal ring, to send him, once more, the diamond ring he was inclined to choose the other day, but thought too dear. He would like to reconsider it.

To THE NATIONAL PROVIDENT INSTITUTION, [28 JANUARY 1848]

Mention in next.

To THOMAS MITTON, 29 JANUARY 1848

Text in N, II, 70, checked from MS Chas. J. Sawyer Ltd.

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday Twenty Ninth January 1848.

My Dear Mitton.

I cannot reply with absolute certainty touching Monday, as I signified, only yesterday, to the Life Insurance Company with whom I am in communication in reference to my proposed scheme for authors and artists,[†1] that I would attend any appointment that might be proposed for that day. But it is not at all likely that I shall be out before one—and on Tuesday I shall be home until two.

All well, thank God. I am heartily glad of the cold weather (though the morning shower bath, encrusted with ice, is startling) and the Doctors say it will do wonders for the general health.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To G. W. YAPP,[†2] 29 JANUARY 1848

MS Mr W. A. Foyle.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Ninth January 1848.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Yapp, and regrets that his engagements prevent his having the pleasure of accepting the invitation with which he is honored by the council of the Whittington Club.[†3]

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 31 JANUARY 1848

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street | Piccadilly.

Devonshire Terrace. | Monday Night | Thirty First January 1848.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I am very glad indeed to hear that there is a prospect of our soon filling up that gap at the Home. It is very important that it should not remain vacant, longer than is absolutely necessary.

Mrs. Brown's report is also extremely cheering. I am quite confident that she is right. I never go there, but the same feeling impresses me, strongly.

I was there on Friday afternoon, and wrote Martha Goldsmith's history into the book. Her manner pleased me greatly. She answered all I asked her, very well indeed, and (I have no doubt) truly.

Mr. Hullah is going out with me this week, to begin his course.

My own impression is,—No Shutters! I will explain why, to Mr. Brown tomorrow. Of course if you should still think them necessary, I will take care that they are immediately made.

I was in the Prisons today. One girl of the Rubina Waller[†1] class—that is, who has never committed any theft—may possibly turn out sufficiently promising to be enquired about,—but there are other cases also, out of doors.

I hope Dr. Skey[†2] will find himself better of that disorder he thought I had given him, this month. Tortures should not have elicited a word from me when I was reproached in Stratton Street.

My Dear Miss Coutts | Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN HULLAH, 31 JANUARY 1848*

MS Chas. J. Sawyer Ltd.

Devonshire Terrace. | Monday Night | Thirty First January 1848.

My Dear Hullah.

I have an appointment in the City (concerning a plan I have for getting the general mass of authors and artists to ensure their lives; and to which I am going to devote the Amateur-Theatrical means of raising the wind)[†3] on Wednesday afternoon at 3. I fear, with a view to getting back in good time, and also with a view to the dinner-hour of our protegées, that that afternoon won't do for our visit.[†4] But Thursday, Friday, or Saturday, at 2, or 3, or any time thereabouts that will suit you, I will undertake to transport you to Shepherd's Bush and bring you back.[†5] Therefore, if you will only write and tell me on what day and hour you will be here, I will undertake for all the rest.

It is astonishing how your little girl reminds me of your wife[†6] when she was a little girl. No less astonishing how you remind me of old times.[†7] I do hope we shall manage to see each other oftener than we have done in these latter years, and dance more country dances with the dew of our youth (mere boys as yet) upon us.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Hullah Esquire.

To G. H. LEWES, 31 JANUARY 1848*

MS Princeton University Library.

Devonshire Terrace. | Thirty First January 1848.

My Dear Lewes.

It now becomes necessary to "Back! Back!"[†1] In other words (as I have settled for the St. James's Theatre, and all is fairly moving on)[†2] to arrange the Insurance scheme, with energy. Wherefore, this comes to express a hope that you can meet Lemon and me at the National Provident Office in Gracechurch

Street City, on Wednesday at 3 to the moment, when said Lemon and I may sit with our chins resting thoughtfully on our hands, in the character of umpires, while you and Mr.—Marsh,[†3] I think his name is—discuss the one moot point.[†4]

Ever faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

G. H. Lewes Esquire.

To HANS CHRISTIAN ANDERSEN, [?LATE JANUARY 1848]

MS Royal Library, Copenhagen. Date: CD returned from Edinburgh on 3 Jan; "a few weeks ago" suggests not before end of the month.

A Thousand thanks, my dear Andersen, for your kind and dearly-prized remembrance of me in your Christmas book.[†5] I am very proud of it, and feel deeply honored by it, and I cannot tell you how much I esteem so generous a mark of recollection from a man of such genius as you possess.

Your book made my Christmas fireside, happier.[†1] We were all charmed with it. The little boy, and the old man, and the pewter soldier, are my particular favorites. I read that story[†2] over and over again, with the most unspeakable delight.

I was in Edinburgh a few weeks ago, where I saw some of your friends,[†3] who talked much about you. Come over to England again, soon! But whatever you do, don't leave off writing, for we cannot afford to lose any of your thoughts. They are too purely and simply beautiful to be kept in your own head.

We have long since come back from that sea-shore where I said Adieu to you,[†4] and are in our own house again. Mrs. Dickens says I am to give you her love. So says her sister. So say all my children. And as we are all in the same mind, I beg you to receive mine into the bargain, as the love of your true and admiring friend

CHARLES DICKENS

Hans Christian Andersen.

February

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 3 FEBRUARY 1848*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street | Piccadilly.

Devonshire Terrace. | Third February 1848.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I was not at home until late last night, but I sent off to Charter House[†5] this morning (where I knew Mr. Hullah was) and stopped the dragon[†1] in Mr. Illingworth's[†2] path.

There was no intention of doing anything. I imagine he would not have been ten minutes there.

He came to me afterwards, and is so very earnest about the twice a week, and in his representations of trials of once a week having always failed, that I trust you will, at all events, let the thing be tried as it was originally settled. Two hours in the week is not much—each lesson is only an hour long—and there is nothing necessary to be prepared between lesson and lesson.

I have arranged to take him out, for a few minutes, at Mid-day on Tuesday.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To MR INGRAM,[†3] 3 FEBRUARY 1848*

Text from transcript by owner of MS, Mr E. E. Bissell.

Devonshire Terrace | Third February 1848.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Ingram, and begs to say, in reply to Mr. Ingram's letter, that from twelve to fourteen years ago, and while his Sketches were in course of publication in the Morning Chronicle,[†4] he was connected with that newspaper as a parliamentary reporter.[†5]

To WILLIAM LOCKE,[†6] 3 FEBRUARY 1848*

MS University of California, Los Angeles.

Devonshire Terrace. | Third February 1848.

Dear Sir.

You may remember that some time ago, I received certain small sums in trust for the Ragged Schools.[†7]

They amounted, in all, to Four pounds, ten shillings. Yielding to a representation that was made to me, I entrusted the greater part of this money to a certain person who informed me that he could employ it immediately, in opening a very effective Ragged school. I had reason (as I thought) to believe this statement, but as I have never seen or heard of its author since, I still hold myself accountable to the Ragged School union for the whole amount; in discharge of which debt, with good interest, I beg to enclose you a cheque for Six pounds, ten.

I am Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Locke.

To JOSEPH C. KING, 7 FEBRUARY 1848

Extract in N, II, 71 (from catalogue source); dated Devonshire Terrace, 7 Feb 48.

I beg to enclose you a cheque for the amount in which I am indebted to you.[†1] I have no suggestion to make in reference to any of the items, being quite sure that you have made them what they ought to be.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 8 FEBRUARY 1848*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts.

Devonshire Terrace. | Tuesday Morning | Eighth February 1848.

My Dear Miss Coutts. I am now going out to Chelsea Hospital to fetch Mr. Hullah, and take him to the Home. Perhaps I shall see you there.

I am very sorry to hear you have not been well—and very sorry too, that we are so unfortunate as to be again engaged tonight.

May the Dragon turn out as well as I expect! I have really very great hopes of the beneficial influence of the singing, in combination with all the other things. For it seems to me, to be so much the kind of ingredient we want.

My Dear Miss Coutts | Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Howard has entered on her "place" here.

To MRS BUTLER,[†2] 10 FEBRUARY 1848

Extract in Kingston Galleries catalogue No. 35; MS 1 p.; dated 10 Feb 48.

I do not easily forget any meeting with one for whose genius I have so great and sincere an esteem as I entertain for yours.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 10 FEBRUARY 1848*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace. | Thursday Morning | Tenth February 1848.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

No. He[†1] does not begin, until next Wednesday. I am not sure whether he begins himself—I think not—but I will ascertain from him when he proposes to come in person, and will let you know. On the same day, please God, I shall attend also, as I am much interested in understanding the system.[†2]

Dear Miss Coutts | Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To J. DURANCÉ GEORGE,[†3] 10 FEBRUARY 1848*

Text from transcript by Mr N. C. Peyrouton.

Devonshire Terrace | Tenth February 1848.

My Dear Sir.

I was very sorry to be unable to come to your house the other night, and I regret to say too, with a view to the next meeting, that I am engaged every Wednesday evening.[†4]

You are at perfect liberty to put me on the Committee.[†5]

I should have had the pleasure of answering your note before, but I have been from home for a couple of days.

Believe me | My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Durancé George Esquire.

To EDWARD CHAPMAN, 15 FEBRUARY 1848*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace. | Fifteenth February 1848. | Tuesday Night.

My Dear Sir.

When I saw Mr. Webster on the subject of the Nickleby illustration,[†6] I begged him to make his sketch in colors and presentable, in order that I might purchase it afterwards[†7]—thinking we had not quite succeeded in the other instance.[†8]

It is now ready (I have seen it today), and most admirable. You will be greatly pleased with it. If you will beg whomsoever is to copy it,[†1] to fetch it from his house (his address is, The Mall, Kensington, and he will be at home any Morning this week), he will think the sooner it is taken into hand, the better, as he is very desirous to have it back, if possible, for exhibition at the Academy.[†2]

It is clear to me that we must go on, in the cheap Edition, with the Stories, and not take in the Sketches yet.[†3]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Edward Chapman Esquire.

To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, 15 FEBRUARY 1848

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel. Address: George Cruikshank Esquire | 48 Mornington Place | Hampstead Road.

Devonshire Terrace | Fifteenth February 1848.

My Dear George.

I particularly wish to know whether there is anything that you object to, in the enclosed letter. They oblige me to state my opinion on the subject, and I wish (I need not say) to state it in the manner most agreeable to you. I think those Temperance Societies (always remarkable for their indiscretion) are doing a very indiscreet thing in reference to you[†4]—and that they will keep many of your friends, away from your side when they would most desire to stand there.

I will do anything you like. If you would rather have nothing written, I will go down to these Committee men myself, on one of their evenings of meeting, and tell them my impression in six words.[†1]

Ever Yours affecy.
CD.

To G. H. LEWES, 15 FEBRUARY 1848

Mention in N, II, 71.

To FRANK STONE, 15 FEBRUARY 1848*

MS Benoliel Collection. Address (envelope, Mr J. D. Fielding): F. Stone Esquire | Tavistock House | Tavistock Square.

Devonshire Terrace. | Fifteenth February 1848.

My Dear Stone.

I am much obliged to you for your letter, and have withdrawn from the Club.[†2]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

F. Stone Esquire.

To G. H. LEWES, 17 FEBRUARY 1848

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

Devonshire Terrace. | Thursday Night February Seventeenth | 1848.

My Dear Lewes.

If you keep in the same mind after the receipt of this note, and tell me so, I will speak to Bradbury and Evans with the utmost readiness and pleasure. But before I hazard a refusal, I think you ought to know this—which I know, perfectly and certainly, having seen Bradbury here, this morning. They do not desire to come into the field as publishers. They think it is likely to hurt their printing business. They have now got their old bookselling connexion about them again, and there seems to be a general understanding that, with the exception of what they publish in connexion with Punch,[†3] and in virtue of their arrangement with me[†4] (which is generally recognised in Paternosterian circles[†5] as a special one) they have no intention of clashing with that interest. They are so particular on this head, that in the case of Forster's advertized book on Goldsmith, they got Chapman to connect himself with the publishing of it[†1]—as I verily believe for no other reason in the world.

My impression therefore is, that they would not accept your proposal.[†2] But if you still wish it to be made, I will make it, and impress upon them that I do so, confidentially.[†3]

The twenty eighth is an open day with us.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

G. H. Lewes Esquire

To THE REV. EDWARD TAGART, 17 FEBRUARY 1848

Text from N, II, 71.

Devonshire Terrace | Seventeenth February, 1848

My Dear Sir,

I am deep in No. 18.[†4] I did not show on that Friday morning, because the snow was on the ground, and walking difficult. I can avouch it, as I walked half our distance, alone.

There are two or three words I should like to say to you, before deciding in the matter of the College.[†5] If you will walk to Harrow next Friday, and will have your hat on at a quarter before eleven A.M.—and will tell me so—I will call for you, D.V.

Faithfully Yours always

[CHARLES DICKENS]

Dombey flourishes exceedingly. I know of some of those discussions, and hugged myself in private.[†6] At this present writing, I am in a state of dense stupidity, and have hardly done anything all day.

To MISS FANNY KELLY, 18 FEBRUARY 1848

Extract in Alwin J. Scheuer catalogue No. 3 (1927); MS 2 pp.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 18 Feb 48.

I speak for myself, and not for Serjeant Talfourd in reply to your note. I think your circular[†7] very becoming, and cannot possibly object to the use of my name.

But Talfourd's, as a matter of propriety, must be mentioned first.[†1] Tomorrow evening I hope to give you some intelligence of a new Lady Franklin.[†2] I have none yet.

To MISS FRANCES HOOD,[†3] 19 FEBRUARY 1848*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Devonshire Terrace. | Nineteenth February 1848.

My Dear Miss Hood.

I am afraid I have but very few and unimportant letters of your lamented father's writing, as we generally communicated personally. But I will see if I can find any; and if my search should be successful, I will not fail to send them to you.[†4]

Indeed I fear that sorrow has been too familiar to you since I saw you last.[†5] If I can ever render you the least service of advice or friendship, pray think of me as one who will be truly glad to do so.

Mrs. Dickens and Miss Hogarth send their kindest regards.

Always Dear Miss Hood | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MARK LEMON, 24 FEBRUARY 1848*

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

Shepherd's Bush. | Thursday Twenty Fourth February | 1848.

My Dear Lemon. I am anxious that we should have some few hours together, on the subject of the Play. I shall be very busy finishing Dombey,[†6] in a few days, and would greatly desire to have all the forms of advertisement, ticket-vouching, and so forth, arranged before I begin, as the Rehearsals will be quite sufficient occupation for the slight leisure I shall have. Will you think of this, so that we may arrange for an appointment when we meet on Saturday?

Faithfully Yours ever

CHARLES DICKENS

Mark Lemon Esquire.

To HENRY AUSTIN, 25 FEBRUARY 1848*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace. | Twenty Fifth February 1848.

My Dear Henry.

Many thanks for the report.[†1] And as to that preposterous and idiotic bond[†2] of humbugs called the Corporation, allow me to say, in the words of a friend of mine (Captain Edward Cuttle) "Hooroar my lad, Hooroar, Hooroar[†3]!"[†4]

To CHARLES BABBAGE,[†5] 26 FEBRUARY 1848

MS British Museum.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Sixth February 1848.

My Dear Sir.

Pray let me thank you for your pamphlet.[†6]

I confess that I am one of the unconvinced grumblers,[†7] and that I doubt the present or future existence of any Government in England, strong enough to convert the people to your Income tax principles.[†8] But I do not the less appreciate the ability with which you advocate them, nor am I the less gratified by any mark of your remembrance.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Babbage Esquire.

To MISS FANNY KELLY, 28 FEBRUARY 1848

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: Miss Kelly | 73 Dean Street | Soho.

Devonshire Terrace. | Monday Twenty Eighth February | 1848.

My Dear Miss Kelly.

I have decided to relinquish the Amateur Performances—not having the least hope, as you know, of some of the parties concerned.[†1]

I beg to enclose you a cheque for the Rehearsal nights,[†2] and with much regret that I shall not see you on the Stage again, as I had hoped, am always

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Kelly.

To G. H. LEWES, 28 FEBRUARY 1848*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Devonshire Terrace. | Monday Night | Twenty Eighth February 1848.

My Dear Lewes. I am very sorry to say, that being engaged on and after tomorrow, I have a great deal that I must to do[†3] tonight, in endeavouring to disengage myself from the St. James's Theatre people—the dressers—and the other arrangements into which I have ventured on the faith of our punctual friends. If I can come to you, I will. If not, you will forgive me, for the sake of the botherations I have to manage.

Ever Yours
CD.

To G. H. LEWES, 28 FEBRUARY 1848

MS Dr James Hasson.

Devonshire Terrace. | Monday Twenty Eighth February 1848.

My Dear Lewes.

The experience of every new Rehearsal-night, gives me such strong assurance that I was mistaken in supposing there to be an universal feeling of common consideration among us, one for another, which would prevent any of us from inconveniencing and utterly disregarding the rest, (to say nothing of the purpose to which we stood pledged, or the expences incurred in promoting it) that I must though very reluctantly, abandon my share in the design.[†4]

I therefore address this note to every member of the Company, as an intimation that I have, henceforth, nothing more to do with it.[†1]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

G. H. Lewes Esquire.

To L. J. NATHAN, 28 FEBRUARY 1848*

MS L. & H. Nathan Ltd.

Devonshire Terrace. | Twenty Eighth February 1848.

Mr. Nathan.

Circumstances have arisen which have led to the abandonment of the contemplated Amateur performances. You will therefore please to proceed no further with the dresses at present.

I hope that Five Pounds will be a sufficient compensation to you for your trouble and charge. Mr. Frederick[†2] will call on you, probably tomorrow.

Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To EMILE DE LA RUE, 29 FEBRUARY 1848*

MS Berg Collection.

Devonshire Terrace
Twenty Ninth February 1848.

My Dear De la Rue

Looking at the date of your last letter, I should feel a little qualmy in the region of my conscience, but for the steadiness and constancy with which I have been at work at Dombey, ever since its receipt. I am going down to Brighton today, to finish that immortal story (the success of which, is most triumphant and glorious, and has been throughout) but before I go, I must write a few lines to say how are you, and Madame—and does she ever think of her old doctor[†3]—and do you ever think of his visual ray[†4]—and stands Genoa where it did[†5] in these exciting times?[†6]

I have never known anything at all like the sensation that is made here, by the French Revolution. There was hardly room to stand in the Athenaeum last night among the bishops priests and deacons, lords, artists, authors, members of Parliament, and genteel tag rag and bobtail, who were busily discussing it. The aristocratic feeling of England is against it, of course.[†1] All the intelligence and liberality, I should say, are with it, tooth and nail.[†2] If the Queen should be marked in her attentions to old Papa Philippe, I think there will be great discontent and dissatisfaction expressed, throughout the country.[†3] Meantime, we are in a queer position ourselves, with great distress in the manufacturing towns, and all sorts of public bedevilments.[†4]

Maclise and I have been talking about coming to Italy together, and starting on the first of May.[†5] If Anybody were concerned, but that man, I should say I was pretty certain to come. What change his indecision, and impossibility of forming any resolution, may bring upon me, I don't know; but at present I have strong hopes of seeing you in Genoa before the Autumn. He has made a great hit, with his frescoe[†1] in the House of Commons,[†2] and has been besought by the Commissioners of Fine Arts, to paint another.[†3] So much the more ought he to go to Italy, which naturally makes me think that so much the more he won't do anything of the sort.

In the Examiner I sent you yesterday, there is a Paper about Ghosts,[†4] in which you will recognize an allusion to our patient.[†5] I wrote the article for Forster, who is now the Editor in place of Fonblanque,[†6] who has got a Government appointment.[†7]

The Shakespeare House Committee are imploring and beseeching me to call my Amateur Company together, and act for the benefit of the Fund, and the endowment of a Curatorship for the House, in favor of Sheridan Knowles. I am not particularly anxious to take the needful trouble, and am holding off at present;[†8] but it is very possible that the thing may be done, because of the difficulty of getting out of it.

All well, and thriving. Give my kind love to Madame, and believe me always, My Dear De la Rue

Cordially Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Remembrances to William,[†1] and to all friends.

P.S. For Madame. I saw (at Edinburgh, the other day) Callandar[†2] and his new wife[†3]—I have not spelt his name right, I think, but never mind. You know whom I mean. She is very handsome—has a noble head—and looked, in a wreath she wore, like a younger daughter of Juno, who took surprisingly after her mother.

To JOHN FORSTER, 29 FEBRUARY 1848

Text from F, VI, iii, 486.

Mardi, Février 29, 1848. MON CHER. Vous êtes homme de la plus grande pénétration! Ah, mon Dieu, que vous êtes absolument magnifique! Vous prévoyez presque toutes les choses qui vont arriver; et aux choses qui viennent d'arriver vous êtes merveilleusement au-fait. Ah, cher enfant, quelle idée sublime vous vous aviez à la tête quand vous prévîtes si clairement que M. le Comte Alfred d'Orsay se rendrait au pays de sa naissance![†4] Quel magicien! Mais—c'est tout égal, mais—il n'est pas parti. Il reste à Gore-house, où, avant-hier, il y avait un grand diner à tout le monde. Mais quel homme, quel ange, néanmoins! MON AMI, je trouve que j'aime tant la République,[†5] qu'il me faut renoncer ma langue et écrire seulement le langage de la République de France—langage des Dieux et des Anges—langage, et un mot, des Français! Hier au soir je rencontrai à l'Athenæum Monsieur Mack Leese, qui me dit que MM. les Commissionnaires des Beaux Arts lui avaient écrit, par leur secrétaire, un billet de remerciements à propos de son tableau dans la Chambre des Députés, et qu'ils lui avaient prié de faire l'autre tableau en fresque, dont on y a besoin.[†6] Ce qu'il a promis. Voici des nouvelles pour les champs de Lincoln's Inn! Vive la gloire de France! Vive la République! Vive le Peuple! Plus de Royauté! Plus des Bourbons! Plus de Guizot![†7] Mort aux traîtres! Faisons couler le sang pour la liberté, la justice, la cause populaire! Jusqu'à cinq heures et demi, adieu, mon brave! Recevez l'assurance de ma considération distinguée, et croyez-moi, CON CITOYEN! votre tout dévoué, CITOYEN CHARLES DICKENS.

To MAJOR JOSHUA JEBB, 29 FEBRUARY 1848

MS Huntington Library.

1 Devonshire Terrace, York Gate. | Twenty Ninth February 1848.

Dear Sir

I write this note, to leave when I have the pleasure of calling on you this morning, in case I should not be so fortunate as to find you at home.

Archdeacon Sinclair has mentioned to me, as an eligible person for admission into Miss Coutts's Home, a young woman who is now in the Pentonville Prison, in whose case, he informs me, Sir George Grey[†1] is interested. And he has referred me to you for the particulars of her history.

I am going down to Brighton today, to finish the story on which I am at present engaged, and am not likely to return to town for more than a few hours at a time, until the twentieth or twenty fifth of March. But any note sent to me here, will be immediately forwarded, and if it should suit your convenience I should be extremely glad, on my return, to make my long-deferred visit to Pentonville, in your company.[†2]

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

General Jebb.[†3]

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 29 FEBRUARY 1848

Mention in Sotheby's catalogue, May 1917; MS ½ p.; dated 29 Feb 48.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, [?FEBRUARY 1848]

MS Morgan Library. Date: between 31 Jan 48, when it was hoped to fill the vacancy at the Home (To Miss Coutts, that day), and 1 Apr 48, when Miss Coombs had been appointed (To Brown, that day). Initials suggest Feb.

Devonshire Terrace | Tuesday.

My Dear Miss Coutts

I have seen Miss Coomes[†4] this morning—she could hardly be called interesting, certainly, even in Newspaper reports, but she seems to understand her business.

She is to come out to Shepherds Bush today, to see the place; and I impressed upon her, among other things, that she must try to come before next Monday week (the day she suggested) if possible.

I think we want a little more conciliation of manner and feeling, among our ladies. I doubt Mrs. Holdsworth in that respect, but not Mrs. Graves. Mrs. Holdsworth always seems to me to have a secret idea that her charges are her natural enemies.

I think Ann Cattle (whom I have seen this morning) the best case we have yet taken. I should not have had the faintest idea from her appearance or manner that she was an applicant for admission.

Faithfully Yours always

CD

To JOHN FORSTER, [?1846—FEBRUARY 1848]

Extract in F, XI, iii, 837. Date: between 1846, when CD and Forster first visited Mazzini's La Scuola Italiana in Holborn (F, VI, vi, 530: Vol. IV, pp. 418-19*n*), and 29 Feb 48, when the school closed on Mazzini's return (via Paris) to Italy.

I was among the Italian Boys from 12 to 2 this morning.

March

To G. H. LEWES, 2 MARCH 1848*

MS Berg Collection.

Brighton | Second March 1848.

My Dear Lewes.

I will tell you (in answer to your kind note) what alarmed me in the late remissness, and caused me to regard it as something more serious than an inconvenience and annoyance to all us punctual and earnest men.

I thought, if there be such defaulters in the very beginning of the scheme, how shall we get at these same men as it waxes older? And what a frightful thing it would be to tempt a number of poor men into an expenditure they can but indifferently afford, on the strength of the steadfastness of a body that I know not to be stedfast, and not to be relied on! When I see, in the outset of such a design, an imperfect sense, anywhere, of the responsibility incurred, and the positive moral duty undertaken, I believe that I am true to all the true men concerned it it, when I do my best to prevent their doing an unintentional wrong where they mean to do a great kindness.

This is, of course, between ourselves. But don't you see reason in this?

Ever Yours

CD.

G. H. Lewes Esquire.

To W. C. MACREADY, 2 MARCH 1848

MS Morgan Library.

5 Junction House, Brighton | Second March 1848.

My Dear Macready.

We have migrated from the Bedford, and come here, where we are very comfortably (not to say gorgeously) accommodated. Mrs. Macready is certainly better,[†1] already, and I really have very great hopes that she will come back in a condition so blooming as to necessitate the presentation of a piece of plate to the undersigned Trainer.

You mean to come down on Sunday? And on Sunday week? If you don't, I shall immediately take the Victoria,[†2] and start Mr. Gough[†3] of the Theatre Royal Haymarket as a smashing Tragedian. Pray don't impose upon me, this cruel necessity.

I think Lamartine,[†4] so far, one of the best fellows in the world;[†5] and I have lively hopes of that great people establishing a Noble Republic.[†6] Our Court had best be careful not to overdo it in respect of sympathy with ex Royalty[†7] and ex Nobility. These are not times for such displays—as, it strikes me, the people in some of our great towns would be apt to express, pretty plainly.[†7]

However, we'll talk of all this, on those Sundays—and Mr. Gough shall not be raised to the Pinnacle of Fame.

Ever affectionately Yours | My Dear Macready
CHARLES DICKENS

W. C. Macready Esquire.

To FREDERICK MARRYAT,[†8] 6 MARCH 1848

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Brighton | Monday Sixth March 1848.

My Dear Marryat

I was coming round to see you this morning, but find myself obliged to go to London by the 2 o'Clock train, with no time for preparation. As I shall not be back until tomorrow night, and as I fear you will have left in the interval, I write this to say that Kate and I were delighted to find you had been here, and were so happily recovered from your illness.[†1] I assure you my dear fellow I was heartily rejoiced, and drank your health at dinner with[†2] all the honors.

Do write me a word in Devonshire Terrace, some fortnight hence, where you are, and how you are,—and if you be within reach let us foregather, and bring old Stanfield from his Saints and Missals[†3] to join us.

In great haste | Most Heartily Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To THE REV. H. M. WAGNER, [6 MARCH 1848]

MS Yale University Library. Date: clearly same day as last, written before leaving for London.

Brighton | Monday Morning

My Dear Sir

I was on the point of writing to you, when your note came.

I am obliged to go to London today. In anticipation of being so obliged to alter my arrangements, I delayed answering your note—being doubtful, and far from certain.

But I shall be at the Institution tomorrow, at half past three exactly. This is the address—

Urania Cottage near The White Horse
Shepherd's Bush

It is accessible by Acton Omnibuses from Oxford Street, which go past the corner of the lane in which the House stands.[†4] There are not so many of these, however, and they are rather uncertain. But it is also accessible by Hammersmith Omnibuses from Piccadilly, which leave a walk of about half a mile. These are very numerous, and to be relied on. In case you should not come tomorrow, I will bring you back a couple of printed papers, descriptive of the place, its regulations, and objects. If you should come tomorrow (as I hope you will) I shall be happy to give them to you there, and to shew you all about it.

Believe me | My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Reverend H. M. Wagner.

To W. C. MACREADY, [7 MARCH 1848]*

MS Morgan Library. Date: endorsed by Macready "March 7"; clearly 1848, referring to the visit to the Home mentioned in last.

Devonshire Terrace | Tuesday Morning

My Dear Macready.

I was just going to write to you when your Messenger came.

I think we had better postpone our visit,[†1] until I come back, for it would otherwise be a hurried and bad one. There are two young women whom I have to see today, before going out there, and as soon as I shall have done there, I shall have to run away on other business—not returning home. Therefore, with the showman's pride, I would rather, if you don't object, that you see the place under more favorable circumstances.

Affectionately Ever
CD.

To JOSEPH ELLIS,[†2] 10 MARCH 1848*

MS Mrs K. M. Jonas.

Brighton. | Friday Tenth March 1848.

Dear Mr. Ellis.

I thank you, cordially, for the most excellent paté, and am very much obliged to you for your kind remembrance.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To [?WILLIAM BRADBURY], 12 MARCH 1848

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, Dec 1902; MS 2 pp.; dated Brighton, 12 Mar 48. Address: clearly either to Bradbury & Evans or to one of the partners; Bradbury more likely in light of letter to him of 1 Dec.

Mr. Browne has come down here today with his frontispiece.[†3] He wants to know whether, instead of his etching the lettering on the title-page[†4] (which never looks well) you will have time to get the title engraved after receiving the plate from him.[†5]

To MISS FANNY KELLY, 15 MARCH 1848†

MS Carl H. Pforzheimer Library. Address: Miss Kelly | 73 Dean Street | Soho | London.

Brighton. | Fifteenth March 1848.

My Dear Miss Kelly

I have come down here to finish my book, and have been working so hard that I have scarcely written any letters this fortnight past. Pray accept this as my true excuse for not having answered yours. After the 25th.[†1] I shall be in Devonshire Terrace, and visible any morning at 11 o'Clock.

Faithfully Yours

CD.

To W. C. MACREADY, 17 MARCH 1848*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace. | Friday Seventeenth March 1848.

My Dear Macready

When the sun shines again and the flowers are in bloom, I am your man. One feels, on a day like this (another of my incapable days, by the bye!) as if such things would never be, again.

Here is Frederick Douglass.[†2]

We were truly sorry to leave Mrs. Macready yesterday; and nothing but the necessity of being near the printer now, should have brought me away. I was thinking of coming and having some talk with you about her, but may as well write what I would say. I doubt whether Brighton is exactly the kind of place for her state of health. A Brighton Doctor is not the best judge of that, perhaps. It strikes me, strongly, that a more exhilarating and bracing air would do more good. And if I were you, I would most certainly impress upon her the necessity of riding out into the highest and best air constantly, and getting out to walk, as often and as much [as][†3] she can, without fatigue. Nothing is so easy as to rally her by cheerfulness; and I really believe it would be very difficult to give her too much change or chirping sociality with people whom she likes. For this reason, I would not leave her at Brighton with only Katey.[†4] If we made up little jaunts now and then, from home here, I think—for example—it would be much better. This has impressed itself upon me so very plainly, that I cannot think it right not to say it, though, very likely, it has all occurred to you.

Quite apart from any uneasiness of mind about poor Susan,[†1] (which I do not think affects her much), it is quite clear that she is extremely feeble, and that her general vitality is, for the time, become languid and dull. I should not be the least doubtful of her speedy restoration, if I were you, by such means as I have hinted at. But I doubt all others. And it seems to me that these are likely to be a thousand times more serviceable at this time tha[n][†2] at any other.[†3]

You know why I say all this, and therefore I should feel it quite monstrous to make any excuse for it. What may be the worth of it all, except for its sincerity, is another thing, and that I leave to your judgment.

—To return to Frederick Douglass. There was such a hideous and abominable portrait of him in the book, that I have torn it out, fearing it might set you, by anticipation, against the narrative.[†4]

Ever My Dear Macready, | Most affectionately Yours

CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 21 MARCH 1848†

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace
Tuesday Evening | Twenty First March 1848.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I failed to ask Mr. Brown today, whether you still wished to see me tomorrow morning. But, in any case,[†a] I must resign myself to Dombey (not yet finished, but whom I am lingering over, with a great desire to carry my care of him and his to the last)[†5] until,—I think,—Thursday Night.[†a†6] Mrs. Dickens and I would like to dine with you that day, very much indeed, but, even if I have finished by dinner-time I shall be in a foolish kind of condition where I am better left to walk about by myself. Therefore, unless I hear from you to the contrary, I will come to you (having a few things I should like to say in reference to Shepherd's Bush) on Friday at 11. I am going out of town on Sunday night, for two days.

Mr. Brown will have told you that all was right to day.

Dear Miss Coutts | Always Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [LATE MARCH 1848]

Extract in F, VI, ii, 484. Date: CD was "lingering over" the end of Dombey on Tues 21 Mar (see last); he had perhaps just sent Forster Ch. 61, the penultimate chapter, and received it back almost at once.

I need not say, I can't, how delighted and overjoyed I am by what you say and feel of it. I propose to show Dombey twice more; and in the end, leave him exactly as you describe.[†1]

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 24 MARCH 1848

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Fourth March 1848.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

It occurred to me in walking home from Stratton Street today, that you might have some interest in hearing all about Dombey before everybody knows about him; and if we could manage it, I should be delighted to read it to you and Mr. and Mrs. Brown. The only evening that would seem to answer the purpose—with reference to my Salisbury trip,[†2] and the time of publication—would be next Wednesday.[†3] Mrs. Dickens would be greatly pleased if you and Mr. and Mrs. Brown could dine with us on that day at half past six. We would not ask anybody else, except perhaps the Kaye[†4] Shuttleworths. And we would see the end of our (of course immortal) acquaintances, after dinner.

Always faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To JOHN FORSTER, [25 MARCH 1848]

Extract in F, VI, ii, 484. Date: Sat 25 Mar 48 according to Forster.

I suddenly remember that I have forgotten Diogenes.[†5] Will you put him in the last little chapter? After the word "favourite" in reference to Miss Tox, you can add, "except with Diogenes, who is growing old and wilful." Or, on the last page of all, after "and with them two children: boy and girl" (I quote from memory), you might say "and an old dog is generally in their company," or to that effect. Just what you think best.[†6]

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 26 MARCH 1848*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street.

Devonshire Terrace | Sunday Morning Twenty Sixth March | 1848.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

Miss Brass[†1] mentioned to me yesterday, with a stoney[†2] pathos which touched me, that she never slept—on account of their[†3] being no bedstead for little Thomas. I dare say she may have mentioned the matter to you, but in case she should not have done so, I write you a line before going out of town to hint that Mrs. Holdsworth does not appear to have any particular chair[†4] in her eye. And really, the state of grimness into which our friend must for ever fall if those eyes of hers (already very blunt and obdurate) are kept open much longer, is dreadful to contemplate.

Always Dear Miss Coutts | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS CHARLES DICKENS, [27] MARCH 1848

MS British Museum. Date: Monday was 27 Mar in 1848; postmark 28 Mar 48. Address: Mrs. Charles Dickens | 1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate, Regents Park | London.

White Hart, Salisbury | Monday Twenty Sixth March 1848.

My Dearest Kate.

I have just time to say that we have been out on the Plain on horseback, all day—the greater part of it at full gallop. We were excellently mounted; and though we got wet through at starting, the weather cleared after the first two or three hours, and it became a most glorious expedition. We have come back (to a very fair Inn), and changed, and are now waiting for dinner. There is a sofa in the room, on which Forster is, of course, lying stretched at full length.

We talk of getting some conveyance to Marlborough tomorrow (30 miles from here) to see some more Druidical remains,[†5] and then coming home by the Great Western Railway. But none of our arrangements will interfere with my return sometime tomorrow evening or night.

Best love to the darlings and Georgy. I hope to find your throat quite well.
Here's the dinner!

Ever affectionately

CD.

Forster sends kind loves.

To EDWARD CHAPMAN, [?29 MARCH 1848]*

MS Private. Date: Handwriting and signature suggest Spring 48. Chapman had sent the first Cheap Edition accounts (see below) on 23 Mar (CD received the second in Broadstairs in July).

Devonshire Terrace | Wednesday Morning

My Dear Sir

I wish to speak to you on the subject of the Cheap Edition accounts[†1]—and will call on you today at 2, or a little before.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Edward Chapman Esquire

To THOMAS BEARD, 30 MARCH 1848

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Place | Edgeware Road.

Devonshire Terrace | Thirtieth March 1848.

My Dear Beard.

I purpose holding a solemn "Dombey dinner", here, on Tuesday the Eleventh of April at half past six. Book yourself for that day and hour, and for a half a pint or so of the rosy.

Ever affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Beard Esquire.

To W. C. MACREADY, 30 MARCH 1848*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Thirtieth March 1848.

My Dear Macready.

I must ask you, à la Captain Cuttle, to "make a note of" Tuesday the Eleventh of April. On which occasion, I purpose holding a solemn dinner here, to celebrate the conclusion of a certain immortal work. Which dinner can't take place without you.[†2]

Ever affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. C. Macready Esquire.

To W. M. THACKERAY, 30 MARCH 1848

MS Berg Collection.

Devonshire Terrace | Thirtieth March 1848.

My Dear Thackeray.

I purpose holding a solemn dinner here, on Tuesday the 11th. of April, to celebrate the conclusion of a certain immortal book.[†1] Hour, half past six. It couldn't be done without you. Therefore, book it cher citoyen!—

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. M. Thackeray Esquire.

To W. HARRISON AINSWORTH, 31 MARCH 1848

MS Johns Hopkins University.

Devonshire Terrace | Thirty First March 1848.

My Dear Ainsworth.

Pray come and dine with me at a little "Dombey dinner" here, on Tuesday the 11th. of April at half past six. I think I can promise that we shall steep the finished book in some undeniably good wine.[†2]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

William Harrison Ainsworth Esquire.

To COUNT D'ORSAY, 31 MARCH 1848*

MS Comte de Gramont.

Devonshire Terrace | Jeudi 31 Mars 1848.

Mon cher ami.

Me voici libre!—Dombey est fini, mon travail est accompli, et je respire!—

Je vais donner, Mardi 11 Avril, un petit diner à la Dombey, en celebration de la conclusion de cet ouvrage (sans doubte) immortel. Voulez-vous venir diner chez moi, ce jour là? Je serai charmè de vous voir. Tous les convives sont deja connues a vous; et vous etes (malheureusement) une apparition extraordinaire à ma table et ma maison.—Venez donc!—[†1]

C'est possible que la revolution anglaise ait lieu, le meme jour. Dans ce cas là, nous dinerons le lendemain. Ou, si M. le duc de Wellington serait tuè d'un grand coup de fusil en Trafalgar Square lui donnè par un de nous concitoyens, alors nous ne dinerons pas, jusqu'a le 15—comme une epreuve de notre respect à sa memoire.

J'envoye mille amitiès a Milady et les deux Miss Powers. J'espere que la petite se porte beaucoup mieux—qu'elle est parfaitement retabliè[†2]—et qu'elle nous accompagnera a Rosherville quand les beaux jours du printemps seront arrivés.

Je n'ai pas vu le petit docteur avec la visage courte[†3]—ah mon dieu!—depuis cinq ou six ans! Est-ce qu'il existe encore, ou est-ce qu'il a temerairement avalè de sa medicine, et qu'il est mort?

Mon cher | Votre tout devouè
CHARLES DICKENS

Six heures et demie—le diner.

To JOSEPH ELLIS, 31 MARCH 1848*

MS Bodleian Library. Address: Mr. Joseph Ellis | The Bedford Hotel | Brighton.

Devonshire Terrace. | Thirty First March 1848.

Dear Mr. Ellis.

My small debt to you having been forgotten when we left Brighton, I beg to enclose you a post office order for the amount.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Joseph Ellis

To MRS PRICE,[†1] 31 MARCH 1848

Text from N, II, 77.

1 Devonshire Terrace, York Gate, Regents Park
Thirty First March 1848

Madam,

I regret to say that I am quite powerless to assist you in the publication of your poems.

However strange it may appear to you, it is nevertheless true, that I have no influence with publishers, save such as may attach to my own writings. I do not think I ever recommended a manuscript, even to my own booksellers, successfully. For years past I have refrained from any such useless interference, not only as a point of feeling, but as a matter of necessity; for I receive so many letters similar to yours, that I should keep my booksellers' house in perpetual occupation, if I took charge of half the Manuscripts that are offered to me in the course of the year. Hence I receive none, convinced that it is the only kind and honest proceeding I can adopt towards their authors.

I do not think you will find any bookseller prepared to publish a collection of your verses.[†2] I question whether it is within the bounds of probability that you could ever get them published otherwise than by subscription, or at your own cost. They are very agreeable and womanly, but I do not discern in the specimens you have sent me, any novelty, either of thought or expression, that is likely to attract attention. I fear the pursuit of this idea of publication in collected form, will only cause you bitter disappointment and regret. I feel convinced that it can never advance your worldly circumstances and therefore I would counsel you to abandon it.

This is merely my individual opinion, and I know it involves advice that it is very difficult to take. But I entreat you to believe that it is offered with feelings of sincere kindness and consideration.

I am Madam, | Your faithful servant
[CHARLES DICKENS]

April

To WILLIAM BROWN, 1 APRIL 1848*

MS Morgan Library. Address: W. Brown Esquire | 1 Stratton Street | Piccadilly.

Devonshire Terrace | First April 1848.

My Dear Sir

I was at Shepherd's Bush yesterday, (where Rubina Waller was laid up in bed with gout, by the bye), and there Julia Mozley told me that she wished to have a private conference with you, as she had not told you that she believed her illness to be "along of her past misconduct." I told her that it was of no use her seeing you unless she told you what she did complain of, and she intimated that she hadn't been able to do so, privately. It appearing from the testimony of the grim Coombes, that her medicine regularly made her sick, I advised said Coombes, under these circumstances, not to administer it any more until she had seen you, and you had heard the patient's story. Which I hope you approve of?

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. Brown Esquire.

To MISS FANNY KELLY, 1 APRIL 1848

Extract in Maggs Bros catalogue No. 13 (1929); MS 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 1 Apr 48.

I have been thinking of your project,[†1] and am quite certain that you can do nothing before Easter, and that you would severely damage it by attempting to carry it into execution until after the holidays. I therefore advise you on no account to announce your first evening for any earlier period than when both houses of Parliament shall have re-assembled, and people shall have come back to town.

To SAMUEL NEWTON,[†2] 1 APRIL 1848*

Text from typescript, Huntington Library.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate, Regents Park, | First April 1848.

Sir,

I beg to assure you that you are mistaken in supposing that I have any power of facilitating the publication of your book. In respect of publishers, as in respect of the community of readers, it must depend entirely on its own intrinsic means of attracting attention. Any influence that I possess with any of those gentlemen is so entirely personal and limited to my own books, that I do not remember to have ever successfully recommended a Manuscript, even to my own booksellers. But I have long since been obliged to desist from recommending any; because every week of my life, I receive so many letters exactly similar to yours, that my introductions must otherwise utterly swamp and overcome any publishing-house in London. Believe me, I am quite serious in this, and mention it as one of the main reasons which render me powerless to assist you. For I am anxious that you should understand that my refusal does not arise in indifference to the struggles and aspirations of a young writer, but in sheer necessity.

The mere glance that my avocations have enabled me to bestow upon your verses, (for if I sat down, deliberately, to the perusal of such books of manuscript, I should read scarcely anything else, and should write nothing) induces me to believe that you have a facility of versification, and that you can sometimes express your thoughts in a spirited and rapid manner. Whether there is sufficient originality in the thoughts themselves, or in the form of their expression, to constitute you a Poet, or to invest you with any reasonable chance of improving your worldly circumstances by encouraging your poetical inclinations, is a question I will not take upon myself to decide, but which I very earnestly entreat you to consider. Think of the vast crowd of young men who can write verse, and of the handful who can write poetry; and rely upon it that the worst you may have ever heard or read of the misery inseparable from a mistaken ambition, in Letters, is nothing to the dread reality.[†1]

Faithfully yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr Samuel Newton.

To GEORGE HOGARTH,[†2] 2 APRIL 1848

MS John Rylands Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Sunday Second April 1848

My Dear Hogarth

I assure you I am quite as sensitive to applause which I know to be sincere, as I was a dozen years ago—more so, I think. Therefore your note has given me real pleasure, and I thank you for it heartily.

I must acknowledge that I have great faith in Dombey, and a strong belief that it will be remembered and read years hence. Its success in these days is quite prodigious.[†3] All through, I have bestowed all the pains and time at my command upon it—and I feel in the strangest of states, now that it has gone from me.

I am going to have a "Dombey dinner" here, on Tuesday the eleventh, at half past six, to celebrate the completion of the story. Will you come?

Always Affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

George Hogarth Esquire.

To THE COUNTESS OF BLESSINGTON, 4 APRIL 1848*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Devonshire Terrace. | Fourth April 1848.

My Dear Lady Blessington

I should have come to you this[†4] morning, to answer your note myself, but for having just now received a note from Jeffrey (who has been very unwell and confined to his bed) saying he is coming in the course of the day, if I can make it convenient to stay at home. So I write this.

I greatly fear that I cannot be of service to you, in the matter of your book.[†5] And you will see how this is, when I explain the occasion of my misgiving.

Bradbury and Evans found their starting as publishers, so damaging to their business as printers, that they drew in their horns almost as soon as they had put them out, and made every effort to have it understood in the trade that their connexion with me was a special affair, and that they would, in future, extend their publishing business no further. This was so well received, and so immediately useful to them, that they have confined themselves rigidly to Dombey, and those things arising out of Punch, previously publishing at the Punch office. In the case of Forster's Goldsmith even (which they purchased, years ago) they distrusted the idea of being the publishers when the Manuscript was, the other day, completed; and accordingly Chapman and Hall's name was added to theirs, as an expression to the booksellers that Bradbury and Evans hadn't failed in their truth.[†1]

Under these circumstances, I am so certain of their not taking your book, that I feel it would be wrong towards you to offer it, as placing you, knowingly, in a position of some disadvantage. I am quite sure of the result.

Chapman and Hall publish nothing at Novel price—their knowledge of books, is pretty much on a par with yours and mine of dragons—and they have never once, in all these years, entered into any enterprize I recommended to them, though I have very often tried my utmost.

I will come and see you one morning this week, and talk the subject over. I wish I could see any way of being of any use.

I am heartily pleased by all that you say, so kindly, of Dombey.[†2] In the strangeness of my separation from all those people, I am quite forlorn; and such a cordial and genial remembrance of them, as yours, is delightful.

Dear Lady Blessington | Ever truly Your friend
CHARLES DICKENS

The Countess of Blessington.

To THE DUKE OF DEVONSHIRE,[†3] 4 APRIL 1848*

MS Devonshire Collections, Chatsworth.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park | Fourth April 1848.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Dickens present their compliments to the Duke of Devonshire, and greatly regret that an old engagement out of town, will prevent their having the honor of coming to Devonshire House tomorrow evening. But they beg to assure the Duke of Devonshire that they are very sensible of his kindness, and are much gratified by it,—and they hope to have an early occasion of personally making their acknowledgements.

To THE REV. DAVID LAING, 8 APRIL 1848

Mention in N, II, 78.

To AUGUSTUS TRACEY, 8 APRIL 1848

Text from N, II, 78.

H.M.S. Devonshire | Eighth April 1848

My Dear Admiral,

Keep your weather eye on that there Lion figure-head o' yourn, o' Monday, for in case I hoist my pennant aboard o' the Chartist Flagship,[†1] I'm damned if I don't pour in a broadside on you (in answer to your'n) and rake you fore and aft, you swab![†2]

So no more at present from—CHARLES DICKENS his ✕ mark

To FREDERICK DICKENS, [10 APRIL 1848]

MS Benoliel Collection. Date: The invitation was clearly for the Dombey dinner on Tues 11 Apr—to which Bradbury was unable to come (see next). Handwriting supports. Dated July 1843 in N, I, 529.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Night

My Dear Fred

I write this to let you know that Bradbury is laid up with pleurisy, and that consequently I have a spare place at the table tomorrow, which I hope you will fill.[†1] We dine at half past 6.

I take it for granted you were not killed today.[†2]

Affectionately Ever

CD.

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 10 APRIL 1848

MS Lytton Papers.

Devonshire Terrace. | Tenth April 1848. | Monday Evening.

My Dear Bulwer Lytton.

I confess to small faith in any American projects, having international copyright for their aim. But I will carefully consider Blackwood's letter[†3] (when I get it) and will call upon you and tell you what occurs to me in reference to it, before I communicate with that Northern Light.[†4]

I have been "going" to write to you for many a day past, to thank you for your kindness to the General Theatrical Fund people,[†5] and for your note to me. But I have waited until I should hear of your being stationary somewhere. What you said of the Battle of Life, gave me great pleasure.[†6] I was thoroughly wretched at having to use the idea for so short a story.[†7] I did not see its full capacity until it was too late to think of another Subject—and I have always felt that I might have done a great deal with it, if I had taken it for the groundwork of a more extended book.

I have not been special constable-ing, myself, today. Thinking there was rather an epidemic in that wise abroad,[†8] I walked out and looked at the preparations,[†9] without any luggage of staff, warrant, or affidavit.

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton

To FRANK STONE, 11 APRIL 1848*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Devonshire Terrace | Tuesday Eleventh April 1848.

My Dear Stone

I have (at half past six today) a little "Dombey dinner" here, to celebrate the close of the book. Necessity (and the size of a table) has no law, and I have been fain to leave out many I would have asked. Bradbury, one of my printers, is ill. Will you take his place, like a Trump?[†1] Write a word in answer, for the bearer is a frenchman.[†2]

Ever Faithfully
CD

To R. W. EMERSON,[†3] APRIL 1848

MS[†4] Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: presumably written, whether sent or not, before Emerson's letter to Ireland of 13 Apr (see below).

LONDON April, 1848

Dear Sir,

We, the undersigned, being desirous of the gratification of hearing from you a course of Lectures in London, hereby unite in respectfully requesting you to comply with our wishes, (which we feel confident are participated in by a large number of persons), by appointing a time for the purpose, in order that the required arrangements may be made.[†5]

THOMAS CARLYLE[†7]
E. B. LYTTON[†6] B. W. PROCTER[†8]
CHARLES DICKENS[†9]
JOHN FORSTER[†10]

To Ralph Waldo Emerson, Esqr.[†11]

— V - 276 —

— V - 277 —

To G. H. LEWES, 12 APRIL 1848*

MS University of Texas.

Devonshire Terrace. | Twelfth April 1848.

My Dear Lewes.

Many thanks for your book,[†1] which I am going to read, and whereof more anon.[†2] I can't call a second farce[†3] for Saturday; having just got the Review,[†4] and fearing that I descry impracticabilities therein.

Ever Yours
CD.

To MRS COWDEN CLARKE,[†5] 14 APRIL 1848

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds. Address: Mrs. Cowden Clarke | Craven Hill Cottage | Bayswater.

Devonshire Terrace. | Fourteenth April 1848.

Dear Mrs. Cowden Clarke

I did not understand, when I had the pleasure of conversing with you the other evening,[†6] that you had really considered the subject, and desired to play.[†7] But

— V - 278 —

I am very glad to undertand it now; and I am sure there will be an universal sense among us of the grace and appropriateness of such a proceeding.[†1]

Falstaff[†2] (who depends very much on Mrs. Quickly) may have, in his modesty, some timidity about acting with an amateur actress.[†3] But I have no question, as you have studied the part and long wished to play it, that you will put him completely at his ease on the first night of your rehearsal.[†4] Will you, towards that end, receive this as a solemn "call" to Rehearsal of the Merry Wives, at Miss Kelly's Theatre, tomorrow, Saturday, week, at 7 in the evening?[†5]

And will you let me suggest another point for your consideration. On the night when the Merry Wives will not be played, and when Every Man in His Humour will be, Kenney's[†6] farce of Love, Law and Physic[†7] will be acted.[†8] In that farce, there is a very good character (one Mrs. Hilary,[†9] which I have seen Mrs. Orger,[†10] I think, act to admiration) That would have been played by Mrs. C Jones,[†11] if she had acted Dame Quickly, as we at first intended. If you find yourself quite comfortable and at ease among us, in Mrs. Quickly, would you like to take this other part too?[†12] It is an excellent farce, and is safe, I hope, to be very well done.[†13]

We do not play to purchase the house (which may be positively considered as paid for)[†14] but towards endowing a perpetual curatorship of it, for some eminent literary veteran.[†1] And I think you will recognise in this, even a higher and more generous object than the securing, even, of the debt incurred for the house itself.

Believe me | Very Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Cowden Clarke.

To JOHN FORSTER, [14 APRIL 1848]

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC). Date: The Daily News editorial to which CD refers appeared on Fri 14 Apr, and CD's "Ignorance and Crime" the following week.

Devonshire Terrace | Friday

My Dear Forster.

I think the Goldsmith[†2] very great indeed—exceedingly large—and congratulate you with all my heart and soul.[†3]

Your note finds me at work upon the article[†4]; which is not done, but would have been at 4; which I am not much in the way of doing well; which was anticipated to some extent in the Daily News this morning;[†5] and which I am glad enough to lay aside.

Qy. Whether I oughtn't to go to Lord Northampton's tomorrow? But I doubt myself. Let us dine here, on Sunday.

Ever affectionately
CD.

Hill,[†1] bringing everything round to Corfu[†2] last night,[†3] and [- - - -][†4] delight therein, were good. I don't think the latter gets well out of that hair cutting. Eh?

To THE EDITOR OF THE SUN,[†5] 14 APRIL 1848

MS Yale University Library. Address: The Editor of | "The Sun" | "Sun" Office | Strand.

Private

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Friday Fourteenth April 1848.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to the Editor of the Sun, and begs that gentleman will have the goodness to convey to the writer of the notice of "Dombey and Son", in last evening's paper,[†6] Mr. Dickens' warmest ackknowledgements and thanks. The sympathy expressed in it, is so very earnestly and unaffectedly stated, that it is particularly welcome and gratifying to Mr. Dickens; and he feels very desirous indeed, to convey that assurance to the writer of that frank and genial farewell.[†7]

To MISS ANNE ROMER, 14 APRIL 1848*

MS Private.

1 Devonshire Terrace, | York Gate, Regents Park | Fourteenth April 1848.

Dear Miss Romer.

We are going to play—at the request of the Shakspeare House Committee, and for a very good purpose closely connected with their design—twice in London, and twice in the country.[†1] The London performances will probably take place between the middle and the end of May.

Your good nature induces me to hope that we may count upon you for Anne Page in the Merry Wives (enclosed) and for Constance in Animal Magnetism (also enclosed). Whatever song you may wish to introduce in the latter character, I shall be happy to see to. I fear so short a notice may not find you disengaged, but we rehearse Animal Magnetism tomorrow (Saturday) evening at 7 at Miss Kelly's Theatre.

There is another farce for the second night, in which I should be delighted to offer you a part, if you would like to play it.[†2]

Believe me always | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Anne Romer.

To MARK LEMON, 16 APRIL 1848

MS Benoliel Collection.

Devonshire Terrace. | Sixteenth April 1848. | Sunday.

My Dear Lemon

A word in answer. Will you come and dine with me, solus, on Tuesday? We will have Nathan here, and discuss other play points.

I shall be at Shepherd's Bush from 2 to 3 on that day. Will you call there for me, or shall we meet here?

Ever Yours

CD.

To MRS COWDEN CLARKE, 16 APRIL 1848

Text in N, II, 80, checked from MS Sotheby's, Nov 1952.

Devonshire Terrace | Sunday Morning | Sixteenth April 1848.

Dear Mrs. Cowden Clarke.

As I am the stage Manager,[†3] you could not have addressed your enquiry[†4] to a more fit and proper person. The mode of address would be unobjectionable, but for the knowledge you give me of that family usage[†1]—which I think preferable, and indeed quite perfect.

Enclosed is Knight's Cabinet Edition[†2] of the Merry Wives; from which the Company study. I also send you a copy of Love, Law, and Physic.

Believe me always | Very faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Cowden Clarke.

To W. P. FRITH, 16 APRIL 1848

Text from W. P. Frith, My Autobiography and Reminiscences, 1888, III, 380.

Devonshire Terrace | April 16, 1848

My Dear Sir,

Pray don't think me indifferent to your kind invitation to see your pictures before they went to the Academy.[†3] Mrs. Dickens and I, having an old engagement for the afternoon of the day,[†4] were obliged to cut short a pictorial pilgrimage we were elaborately performing—to leave a very interesting part of it undone—and to fly, as for our lives, to an early dinner-party.

Believe me, | Faithfully yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

To G. H. LEWES, 16 APRIL 1848

Extract in N, II, 80, checked from MS Sotheby's, 4 Mar 1980; MS 1 ½ pp.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 16 Apr 48.

I can't find a suitable farce with an Irishman in it. I have no doubt you are a good countryman, however; and in the enclosed farce[†5] (excellent for our purpose) there is [a] very excellent and telling part of Emery's-Andrew.[†6] Will you take it?[†7] In case you should like Flexible[†8] better, I should be very glad to give him up to you, and to take Andrew instead, myself.

To [J. P. KNIGHT],[†9] 16 APRIL 1848

Mention in Anderson Galleries catalogue No. 4278 (1936); MS (3rd pers.) 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 16 Apr 48.

Accepting an invitation to the Royal Academy.[†10]

To JOHN FORSTER, 18 APRIL 1848

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC).

Devonshire T. | Eighteenth April 1848.
Birth Day of the Ocean Spectre.[†1]

My Dear Forster.

The naval captain[†2] who alluded to Captain Cuttle, made the best speech of the kind, I ever heard in my life.[†3] The dinner went off capitally. Hirsute[†4] very good, but with that strange unfortunate manner[†5] in full force, and a dodge in the way of action[†6] that I will describe to you vivâ voce. Dick[†7] was very good—but that of course—both in reply to the Capting, and the Sheriff[†8]—who had said a very odd thing.[†9] Also to be described.

Upon my soul I think the Goldsmith admirable.[†1] I had intended to be dumb until I had turned the last page and shut up the book; but can't help saying that much now.

John has crossed this. Never mind.

Ever affecy.
CD.

To CHARLES KENT, 18 APRIL 1848

MS Yale University Library. Address: W. Charles M. Kent Esquire | "Sun" Office | Strand.

1 Devonshire Terrace. | York Gate Regents Park
Eighteenth April 1848.

Dear Sir

Pray let me repeat to you personally, what I expressed in my former note.[†2] And allow me to assure you, as an illustration of my sincerity, that I have never addressed a similar communication to anybody except on one occasion.[†3]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. Charles. M. Kent Esquire.

To W. C. MACREADY, 20 APRIL 1848*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Twentieth April 1848.

My Dear Macready

His[†4] address is, 22 Rue de Londres.

When the weather shall be propititious, I am your man. I always am!—

Ever Affecy.
CD.

To THE COUNTESS OF BLESSINGTON, 21 APRIL 1848*

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: The | Countess of Blessington | Gore House | Kensington.

Devonshire Terrace | Friday Night, Twenty First April | 1848.

My Dear Lady Blessington.

Mr. Leech (whose pencil in Punch has made him so famous)[†5] has told me that he is very desirous to have the gratification of being presented to you. And as I very well understand and appreciate that desire, and feel pretty sure that you will readily respond to it, in behalf of a very modest and agreeable gentleman, I write you this note (requiring no answer) as a threat that I will descend upon Gore House on Sunday at about two, taking the chance of finding you at home and so being able to effect this introduction.

With best regards to Count D'Orsay, and the Miss Powers

Believe me | Dear Lady Blessington | Ever Faithfully Your friend
CHARLES DICKENS

To PETER CUNNINGHAM,[†1] 21 APRIL 1848

MS Princeton University Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Friday Night | Twenty First April 1848.

My Dear Sir

I am very anxious—with a view to our making a great success[†2]—to receive news of Lumley[†3] from you;[†4] and, in the event of his seeming to diplomatize, that another iron should be got into the managerial fire, without delay. It appears to me very important that your Committee[†5] should be in a condition to get out some announcement of the plays, immediately. There is nothing like taking the field in such a case—especially when its being taken later, will effect a jostling between the plays and the ball.

It would be expensive to hire the Haymarket, but I have reason to believe that an arrangement might probably be effected with Mr. Webster, for his shutting up that Theatre and letting it to us. The Opera House[†1] would be decidedly preferable, but I mention this probability, thinking it well that you should know of it, in case of Lumley being indisposed to acquiesce. One of our company is a friend of Mr. Webster's,[†2] and could reduce the matter to a certainty (if need were) in a very few hours.[†3]

The Stratford Theatre will hold I take it, at high prices, about £200.[†4] The Company being at Birmingham, it would certainly be desirable to act there to so much money—if it could be filled—as the additional expences would be very small indeed.[†5]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Peter Cunningham Esquire.

To MARK LEMON, 21 APRIL 1848†

MS Folger Shakespeare Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Friday Night. | Twenty First April 1848.

My Dear Lemon

On all my pleasantest expeditions, of all sorts and kinds, I'll tak', please God, my new coat aboot me, in remembrance of you.[†6] I got into it instantly, when I found it here on Wednesday evening—remained in it, to the great terror of my family, until I went to bed—wore it, out to dinner, yesterday—glory in it, love it, and will assert it against all comers to be the coat of the world. [†a]It's the pleasantest coat I ever had to my back.[†a] —Touching theatricals. Lumley, delaying with the Shakespeare Committee as to his answer to their letter, seems to me to be diplomatizing. I have sent (through the Post) a small red hot poker for the stirring up of those gentlemen (meaning the Committee) and thrown out the Webster matter.[†7] [†a]I have little doubt that the said poker will attract them here tomorrow,—and[†a] in case I should have anything to speak to you about, before Rehearsal time, I'll come down to Whitefriars, [†a]on the chance of finding you there.

Ever affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS[†a]

Mark Lemon Esquire.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 22 APRIL 1848*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street.

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday Evening | Twenty Second April 1848.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I have not the slightest knowledge of the writer of the enclosed,[†1] beyond such as he himself states that I possess. A letter signed with the same name, was written to me some months ago, and the writer requested me—as a friend of Mr. Howitt's,[†2] though not, as he said with the knowledge of that friend of his—to examine certain correspondence relating to a dispute between Mr. Howitt and a publisher,[†3] and write an opinion upon it which was to be published, if it were favorable to Mr. Howitt. I immediately wrote back that I would give no opinion on such terms, which I conceived to be unfair; and that I would not assume the position of an arbitrator in the matter, unless my decision were equally public, whomsoever it affected, and unless I acted by the desire of both parties to the dispute. I heard no more of it.

I could easily ascertain in the course of Monday, whether the story told you is a true one. Which I will do, unless you should desire me not.

Faithfully Yours always
CD.

To [PETER CUNNINGHAM], 22 APRIL 1848*

MS Berg Collection. Address: clearly to Cunnigham, referring to previous day's letter.

Devonshire Terrace. | Twenty Second April 1848.

My Dear Sir

Forgetting Stratford (where I shall not be on Monday) I wrote to you last night, suggesting an immediate application to Mr. Webster, who, I have reason to believe, would let the Haymarket for the purpose. I will endeavour to clear the ground for you, before you return, when I shall hope to see you at your earliest convenience.

—For I think immediate proceedings in reference to public announcement, most important to the success of the scheme.[†1]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Will you look at the Stratford Theatre while you are there, and see what condition it appears to be in.

To JOHN FORSTER, 22 APRIL 1848

MS Victoria and Albert Museum (FC).

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday Twenty Second April 1848.

My Dear Forster.

I finished Goldsmith yesterday, after dinner; having read it from the first page to the last with the greatest care and attention.

As a picture of the time, I really think it impossible to give it too much praise. It seems to me to be the very essence of all about the time that I have ever seen in biography or fiction, presented in most wise and humane lights, and in a thousand new and just aspects. I have never liked Johnson half so well. Nobody's contempt for Boswell ought to be capable of increase, but I have never seen him in my mind's eye half so plainly. The introduction of him is quite a masterpiece[†2]—I should point to that, if I didn't know the author, as being done by somebody with a remarkably vivid conception of what he narrated, and a most admirable and fanciful power of communicating it to another. All about Reynolds, is charming; and the first account of the Literary Club,[†3] and of Beauclerc,[†4] as excellent a piece of description as ever I read in my life.[†5] But to read the book, is to be in the time. It lives again in as fresh and lively a manner, as if it were presented on an impossibly good stage by the very best actors that ever lived, or by the real actors come out of their graves on purpose.[†6]

And as to Goldsmith himself, and his life, and the tracing of it out in his own writings, and the manful and dignified assertion of him without any sobs, whines, or convulsions of any sort, it is throughout a noble achievement, of which, apart from any private and personal affection for you, I think (and really believe) I should feel proud as one who had no indifferent perception of these books of his—to the best of my remembrance—when little more than a child. I was a little afraid in the beginning, when he committed those very discouraging imprudences that you were going to champion him somewhat indiscriminately; but I very soon got over that fear, and found reason in every page to admire the sense, calmness, and moderation, with which you make the love and admiration of the reader, cluster about him: grow with his growth, and strengthen with his strength—and weakness too, which is better still.[†1]

I don't quite agree with you in two small respects. 1st. I question very much whether it would have been a good thing for every great man to have had his Boswell, inasmuch as I think that two Boswells, or three at most, would have made great men extraordinarily false, and would have set them on always playing a part, and would have made distinguished people about them, for ever restless and distrustful. I can imagine a succession of Boswells bringing about a tremendous state of falsehood in society, and playing the very devil with confidence and friendship. 2ndly. I cannot help objecting to that practice (begun I think, or greatly enlarged, by Hunt) of italicizing lines and words and whole passages in extracts, without some very special reason indeed.[†2] It does appear to be a kind of assertion of the editor over the reader—almost over the author himself—which grates upon me.[†3] The author might almost as well do it himself, to my thinking, as a disagreeable thing; and it is such a strange contrast to the modest, quiet, tranquil beauty of the Deserted Village for instance, that I would almost as soon hear the town crier speak the lines.[†4] The practice always reminds me of a man seeing a beautiful view, and not thinking how beautiful it is, half so much as what he shall say about it.

In that picture at the close of the third book (a most beautiful one) of Goldsmith sitting looking out of window at the Temple Trees, you speak of the "grey-eyed" rooks. Are you sure they are grey-eyed? The Raven's eye is a deep lustrous black; and so, I suspect, is the rook's, except when the light shines full into it.

I have reserved for a closing word—though I don't mean to be eloquent about it: being far too much in earnest—the admirable manner in which the case of the Literary Man is stated throughout this book. It is splendid. I don't believe that any book was ever written, or anything ever done or said, half so conducive to the dignity and honor of literature, as the life and Adventures of Oliver Goldsmith by J.F. of the Inner Temple. The gratitude of every man who is content to rest his station and claims quietly on Literature, and to make no feint of living by anything else, is your due for evermore. I have often said, here and there, when you have been at work upon the book, that I was sure it would be.

And I shall insist on that debt being due to you (though there will be no need for insisting about it) as long as I have any tediousness and obstinacy to bestow on anybody. Lastly, I never will hear the biography compared with Boswell's, except under vigorous protest.[†1] For I do say that it is mere folly to put into opposite scales, a book, however amusing and curious, written by an unconscious coxcomb like that, and one which surveys and grandly understands the characters of all the illustrious company that move in it.

My Dear Forster I cannot sufficiently say how proud I am of what you have done, or how sensible I am of being so tenderly connected with it.[†2] When I look over this note, I feel as if I had said no part of what I think—and yet if I were to write another, I should say no more, for I can't get it out. [†a]I desire no better for my fame when my personal dustyness shall be past the controul of my love of order, than such a biographer and such a Critic.[†a†3] And again I say, most solemnly, that Literature in England has never had, and probably never will have, such a Champion as you are, in right of this book.

Ever affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS[†4]

John Forster Esquire

To MOWBRAY MORRIS,[†1] 25 APRIL 1848*

MS New York University Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Fifth April 1848.

My Dear Sir

I am extremely sorry to say that I am engaged on Friday, otherwise I should have had the greatest pleasure in dining with you.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mowbray Morris Esquire.

To MESSRS REEVES,[†2] 25 APRIL 1848*

MS University of Texas.

Devonshire Terrace | Tuesday Twenty Fifth April | 1848.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Messrs. Reeves, and begs to acknowledge the receipt of their prompt and polite communication.

DR [J]. G. FLÜGEL,[†3] 27 APRIL 1848*

MS Fales Collection, New York University Library.

London, 1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
27th. April 1848.

Respected Sir

I feel honored by the confidence you have bestowed on me in your letter of the 30th. of last month. And I assure you that your statement is not made to an uninterested or inattentive listener.

It is not in my power, I fear, to render you any substantial service in the matter. Being a writer of fiction, and not being the conductor of any newspaper or literary journal, I have but scanty means of directing general attention to such a wrong as you have suffered.[†1] But I have never lost, nor shall I ever lose, any occasion of calling the attention of literary men to the defective and shameful state of the law of copyright as between different countries. Of which your case would seem to be a very striking instance.

I am Sir, with every sentiment of consideration and esteem,

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Dr. T.[†2] G. Flügel

To MISS LEONARD,[†3] 28 APRIL 1848

Extract in Ritter Hopson Gallery Inc. catalogue No. 40; MS (3rd person) 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 28 Apr 48.

Mr. Dickens presents his compliments to Miss Leonard and begs to apologize for having mistaken the sex of his unknown correspondent—

To PETER CUNNINGHAM, 29 APRIL 1848*

MS Berg Collection.

Devonshire Terrace. | Saturday Twenty Ninth April 1848.

My Dear Sir

The delay which has been occasioned in our proceedings, by Mr. Kean's[†4] being in the country, and Mr. Webster's not knowing where, is at length removed. He willingly consents to change his nights of performance[†5]—and our nights are, accordingly, the 15th. and 17th.

I send to you immediately, thinking it possible that you may be able to get your preliminary announcement into some of tomorrow's papers. It is of great importance to fire away.

I have thought of an easy plan by which the vouchers may be made to extend to the transfer of tickets, without any increase of trouble to the applicants.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Peter Cunningham Esquire

To W. C. MACREADY, [?29 APRIL 1848]*

MS Morgan Library. Date: endorsed "Dickens | April 29". Signature on envelope and ending "Yours affecy" point to 1846-8; on 29 Apr 48 Macready went with CD to the Royal Academy dinner (Diaries, II, 389). Address: W. C. Macready Esquire.

My Dear Macready

I write with the lather on my face, which I hope will excuse the mendicity-society character of this.[†1] At 10 before 4 I am your man, and will call for you in a fly.[†2]

Very sorry to hear that you have had illness in the house so recently.[†3]

Ever Yours affecy.

CD.

To W. C. MACREADY, 30 APRIL 1848*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Sunday Thirtieth April 1848.

My Dear Macready

I am afraid I must not engage myself for Wednesday, but must keep myself free for some part or other of this play. Therefore I must be *in*flexible as well as flexible,[†4] and savagely deny myself the pleasures of social existence.

Ever affectionately

CHARLES DICKENS

To MARK LEMON, 30 APRIL 1848

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: Mark Lemon Esquire.

Devonshire Terrace | Sunday 30th. April 1848.

My Dear Lemon.

You will receive with this, a Circular[†5] that I have sent round to everyone today,[†1] and will post all over the Stage on Tuesday. I am bent on going at it in earnest.

Do you think you could find out by Tuesday's Rehearsal, what the Haymarket day arrangements for Rehearsal are, just now?

Ever affecy.

CD.

May

To PETER CUNNINGHAM, 2 MAY 1848

MS Princeton University Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Tuesday May Second 1848.

My Dear Sir

I shall be at Miss Kellys Theatre 73 Dean Street, all day, from 11 to 4, which will materially abridge your journey. I have an amendment to suggest in the announcement—making it more general.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Peter Cunningham Esquire

To MRS HENRY BURNETT, 3 MAY 1848

Extract and date in Henry Burnett to F. G. Kitton, 23 Dec 1888[†2] (MS Mr. H. W. Watkins).

Are you in any debt?[†3]

To PETER CUNNINGHAM, [3] MAY 1848

MS Princeton University Library. Date: misdated by CD; Wednesday was 3 May in 1848.

Devonshire Terrace. | Second May 1848. | Wednesday

My Dear Sir

I have arranged to have tickets, bills, and everything that is to be in print, ready in proof for you tomorrow. I shall be at Miss Kelly's from 3 until 9, but if you could conveniently meet me there, at from 3 until ten minutes past—I mean tomorrow, Thursday, of course—it would be best; as we should be able then to go through that business quietly, before the commencement of the Rehearsal.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Peter Cunningham Esquire

To MARK LEMON, 3 MAY 1848

MS Benoliel Collection.

Shepherd's Bush. | Wednesday Third May 1848.

My Dear Lemon. Do you think you could manage before we meet tomorrow to get from the Musical Director of the Haymarket[†1] (whom I don't know) a note of the Overtures he purposes playing on our two nights.[†2] I am obliged to correct and send back the Bill-proofs tomorrow (they are to be brought to Miss Kelly's), and should like, for completeness' sake, to put the Music in.—Before the Merry Wives, it must be something Shakespearian. Before Animal Magnetism, something very telling and light—like Fra Diavolo.[†3] Wednesday night's music "in a concatenation accordingly", and jolly little Polkas and Quadrilles between the pieces: always beginning the moment the Act Drop is down. If any little additional strength should be really required in the Orchestra, so be it.

Can you come to Miss Kelly's by three? I should like to show you bills, tickets, and so forth, before they are worked. In order that they may not interfere with or confuse the Rehearsal, I have appointed Peter Cunningham to meet me there, at 3, instead of halfpast.

Faithfully Ever

CD.

If you shod, be disposed to chop together, early, send me a line to the Athenæum. I have engaged to be with Barry[†4] at 10, to go over the Houses of Parliament.

When I have done so, I will go to the club, on the chance of a note from you—and would meet you where you chose.

To THE REV. JAMES WHITE, 4 MAY 1848

Text from MDGH, I, 193.

Athenæum | Thursday, May 4th, 1848

My Dear White,

I have not been able to write to you until now. I have lived in hope that Kate and I might be able to run down to see you and yours for a day, before our design for enforcing the Government to make Knowles the first custodian of the Shakespeare house should come off.[†1] But I am so perpetually engaged in drilling the forces, that I see no hope of making a pleasant expedition to the Isle of Wight until about the twentieth. Then I shall hope to do so for one day. But of this I will advise you further, in due course.

My doubts about the house you speak of[†2] are twofold. First, I could not leave town so soon as May, having affairs to arrange for a sick sister. And secondly, I fear Bonchurch is not sufficiently bracing for my chickens, who thrive best in breezy and cool places.[†3] This has set me thinking, sometimes of the Yorkshire coast, sometimes of Dover. I would not have the house at Bonchurch reserved for me, therefore. But if it should be empty, we will go and look at it in a body. I reserve the more serious part of my letter until the last, my dear White, because it comes from the bottom of my heart. None of your friends have thought and spoke oftener of you and Mrs. White than we have these many weeks past. I should have written to you, but was timid of intruding on your sorrow. What you say, and the manner in which you tell me I am connected with it in your recollection of your dear child, now among the angels of God, gives me courage to approach your grief—to say what sympathy we have felt with it, and how we have not been unimaginative of those deep sources of consolation to which you have had recourse. The traveller who journeyed in fancy from this world to the next was struck to the heart to find the child he had lost, many years before, building him a [bower][†1] in heaven.[†2] Our blessed Christian hopes do not shut out the belief of love and remembrance still enduring there, but irradiate it and make it sacred. Who should know that better than you, or who more deeply feel the touching truths and comfort of that story in the older book, where, when the bereaved mother is asked, "Is it well with the child?" she answers, "It is well."[†3]

God be with you. Kate and her sister desire their kindest love to yourself and Mrs. White, in which I heartily join.

Being ever, my dear White, | Your affectionate Friend
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To PETER CUNNINGHAM, 4 MAY 1848

Text from N, II, 85.

Miss Kelly's | Thursday Fourth May 1848.

My Dear Sir,

Will you amend the advertisement in all the Papers, by inserting after my name these two words—And Brothers.[†4]

I forgot it just now. | Ever Yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

P.S. In the draft of the advertisement, I put that line which refers to the tickets admitting to both nights of performances, in italics. Please see to this (which it is important not to have misunderstood) and keep the line either in italics or capitals.[†5]

To PETER CUNNINGHAM, 5 MAY 1848*

MS Berg Collection.

Devonshire Terrace. | Fifth May 1848. Friday

My Dear Sir

I shall hope to see you tomorrow evening at Miss Kelly's between 7 and 9. As no note from you accompanies the two applications for parts, I don't know whether you have answered them. But the pieces are all full, and of course no strangers could be taken in.

Faithfully Always
CD.

Peter Cunningham Esquire

To PETER CUNNINGHAM, 5 MAY 1848

MS Princeton University Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Friday Night—Late | Fifth May 1848.

My Dear Sir

I am afraid I must ask you if you can come up to me in the morning—the earlier, the better. I would come to you, but that I have something I must do, in connexion with my cheap Edition.[†1] The point is, a clear understanding about the taking of places, to prevent your Committee from getting into difficulties and responsibilities. I have the house plans here. Faithfully Yours

CD.

Peter Cunningham Esquire

To MARK LEMON, [5 MAY 1848]

MS Dickens House. Date: no doubt the Friday before 7 May, when the advertisements did not appear (see To Cunningham, 7 May).

Devonshire Terrace. | Friday Night

My Dear Lemon.

I'm afraid we shall lose the Sunday papers, but I'll seize Peter Cunningham by the hair of his head immediately.

Supper?

Well—	Dickens	3
	Lemon	2
	Leech	2
	Forster (I suppose)	1
	Total	8

If we should be one more—as Egg or so—it'll be elastic enough for that, I dare say.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To THE REV. EDWARD TAGART, 6 MAY 1848

Text from N, II, 86.

Devonshire Terrace | Sixth May 1848

My Dear Sir,

I have taken five places for you, in the fourth row of the pit, counting from the Stage—about the best position in the house. Your tickets will admit to both nights of performance, and the damage thereof is five guineas. I have had some reason this morning to believe that the places will go very fast.

When I receive the tickets from the Shakespeare people, I will forward them to you.

Meantime I am living, like Falstaff, "in a state of continual dissolution and thaw",[†1] with the protracted agonies of management.

Faithfully yours always
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To JOHN FORSTER, [?MAY 1848]

Extract in F, I, i, 9 (marginally noted as a letter in F [1872], p. 15). Date: perhaps one of the "personal revelations" which, according to Forster (F, VI, vi, 521), CD refers to in next; and therefore of the same period.

On the night before we came away, my good master came flitting in among the packing-cases to give me Goldsmith's Bee as a keepsake. Which I kept for his sake, and its own, a long time afterwards.

To JOHN FORSTER, [7 MAY 1848]

Extract in F, VI, vi, 521. Date: 7 May, the eleventh anniversary of Mary Hogarth's death.

I hardly know why I write this,[†2] but the more than friendship which has grown between us seems to force it on me in my present mood. We shall speak of it all, you and I, Heaven grant, wisely and wonderingly many and many a time in after years. In the meantime I am more at rest for having opened all my heart and mind to you. . . . This day eleven years, poor dear Mary died.

To PETER CUNNINGHAM, 7 MAY 1848*

MS Berg Collection.

Devonshire Terrace | Sunday Seventh May 1848.

My Dear Cunningham.

I am quite horror-stricken to find no advertisement, either in the Examiner[†3] or the Observer.[†4] It is a terrible omission, I think. I trust in all that is good, that you have made your arrangements at the Haymarket box office?[†5]

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To C. A. COLE,[†1] 7 MAY 1848

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, 28 Nov 1913; MS 1 ½ pp.; dated 1 Devonshire Terrace, 7 May 48.

I enclose you a pass for the Haymarket stage door[†2] adopted to keep strangers out. We shall hope to see you at 2 tomorrow (Monday) the more especially as Nathan the tailor is in agonies to measure you.[†3] I think you made some mistake about the rehearsal last night.

To JOHN LEECH, 7 MAY 1848

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: John Leech Esquire | Notting Hill Terrace.

Devonshire Terrace | Sunday May Seventh 1848.

My Dear Leech.

I am so uneasy about "Animal Magnetism", that I cannot help writing you a note on the subject of your part.[†4]

It is of the greatest importance to the Piece.[†5] That the words should be correctly spoken, is essential:—because so much of the business depends upon them and takes its cue from them, that the farce and everybody in it go staggering and wandering about, at a dead stoppage and loss, unless they are spoken at the right time. Thus, last night, although all the rest are nearly if not quite perfect, all were perplexed and put out by the gallant Marquis.[†6] And this at the two most critical points of the piece, especially.

If you could get the words you would play it capitally, and look it too infinitely better than any other among us. But, I am quite sure that if you cannot get the words by the next Rehearsal, you will be placed in a most uncomfortable and awkward position on the night, in a fast piece of that kind, and will maim the piece dreadfully, besides. What I would urge upon you is,—if you feel you can safely and certainly get them, do get them at once (and this I should like much better than anything else) but if you have a doubt about it, or feel that you cannot get them, will it not be better to try and get some one else into the part, before it is too late? At a week's notice there would be little difficulty in filling it; but to let the time run out, without being perfect yourself or enabling us to become so either, would not only be injurious to the play but most mortifying to you, I am certain. Believe me, if you are not in a condition to rehearse such a character perfectly, at least three times, it is sure to be distressing on the night of performance. The rapidity of the farce, the interruptions of the audience, and the exaggeration of the whole thing are enough to drive words out of any head that does not hold entire command of them; and such a situation is very ridiculous.

Do think of this, and tell me when we meet tomorrow what you feel safest and surest in deciding on.[†1]

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Leech Esquire.

[†a]P.S. I am not sure whether you have a Pass for the Haymarket Stage-Door. I enclose you one.[†a]

To FRANK STONE, 7 MAY 1848*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Devonshire Terrace | Sunday Seventh May 1848.

My Dear Stone.

I enclose you a pass for the Haymarket Stage Door—adopted to keep strangers out.

Faithfully Ever

CD.

Frank Stone Esquire

To MRS HENRY BURNETT, 9 MAY 1848

MS Dickens House.

Devonshire Terrace | Ninth May 1848. | Tuesday.

My Dear Fanny.

I have been very glad to receive your letter this morning. I think you have acted most wisely in all respects, and that you could not possibly have done better. I fully understand the difficulty of going away[†2] in the middle of a quarter. In having made up your mind, and thoroughly resolved, I am sure you will find comfort.

In regard to the cough, you must recollect that a quick change into an atmosphere, like this, is trying to all complaints, and that the preparation of morphine is but a very imperfect artificial rest, which is constantly disturbed by your teaching. I do not think you can hope to have it greatly better, until the advantage of actual bodily and mental rest, begins to tell upon you.

I shall certainly, please God, come on to see you, when I go to Birmingham.[†1] And I will not fail to give you full notice of the day.

Kate sends her best love to you and Burnett, in which I unite. Georgy and all the children also desire messages of remembrance. I am very busy with these Shakespeare House Theatricals, having extracted a promise from the Government that Knowles (who is very poor indeed) shall be made the keeper of the House.[†2] When I find myself at the Haymarket all day, and at Miss Kelly's half the night, I begin to wonder why one does such things for nothing.

The weather in London is most delightful. Love to Harry.

Ever My Dear Fanny | Affectionately Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To THOMAS BEARD, 10 MAY 1848

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Square | Edgeware Road.

Devonshire Terrace | Wednesday Tenth May 1848.

My Dear Beard

Will you come and dine with us (alone) at 5 on Sunday? We can then crack a peaceful bottle of the Port, and arrange about next night.[†3]

———

Would you like to have a young unicorn, a little griffin, or a small dragon? Timber is at length giving such frightful and horribly unnatural tokens of virility, in connexion with an insignificant, drivelling, blear-eyed little tame rabbit of the female sex, that I am in constant expectation of a litter of monsters.—Excuse my concluding abruptly, but he has just sneaked past the window, sniffing after this deplorable animal and making stupid attempts to mount—and I must go and whop him.

Ever affectionately

CD.

P.S. Having whopped him, I may mention that the Company are all nearly worked to death. Stone is affected with congestion of the kidneys, which he attributes to being forced to do the same thing twenty times over, when he forgets it once. Beads break out all over Forster's head, and boil there, visibly and audibly. Fred says upon his soul he never saw anything like it in all his life. And Leech is limp with being bullied.

To PETER CUNNINGHAM, 10 MAY 1848*

MS Berg Collection.

Devonshire Terrace | Wednesday Morning Tenth May | 1848.

My Dear Sir

Here is a note that came to me yesterday Evening, from the managing gentleman at Mitchell's[†1] in Bond Street. Lord Gardner[†2] is a friend of Miss Fortescue, and to Miss Fortescue we are really under very great obligations.[†3] I hope you will be able to seat him. Will you have it seen to, at once?

In case you have not got the booksellers perfectly in hand and don't know what is let and what is unlet, I would strongly recommend the engagement of this very Mr. Chapman who is an excellent man in all such business. We must not throw a chance away.

The Duke of Devonshire. Have you sent to him?

Don't you think the poster, copied out (I dare say you will see it on the walls today) will make a better and shorter advertisement for the papers, than the present one?[†4]

I was to have mentioned to you that Mr. Forster wants to take two places in the Dress Circle and bend of the house (front row, he says) for Mr. Maclise.[†5] Will you see to this too?

I shall hope to hear from you tonight at Miss Kelly's, that the Theatre is filling fast.

Ever Yours

CD.

Peter Cunningham Esquire

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 10 MAY 1848*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street.

Devonshire Terrace | Wednesday Tenth May 1848.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I have a letter from Mr. Hullah this morning, asking me to meet him at Shepherd's Bush on Friday, when he purposes trying Mr. Bannister's[†1] pupils, himself. Thinking you might ike to be there too, and would find it interesting, I send you this notice.

I shall probably be out there, today.

Maconnochie[†2] has sent me a kind of protocol concerning such Institutions,[†3] which seems to me to be wrong from beginning to end. I will make my notes upon it, and shew it to you. His head seems to be so full of the Mark System, that he has not room to turn another idea in it.[†4]

Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To W. C. MACREADY, 10 MAY 1848

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel.

Devonshire Terrace. | Wednesday Tenth May 1848.

My Dear Macready.

We are rehearsing at the Haymarket now,—and Lemon mentioned to me yesterday that Webster had asked him if he would sound Forster or me, as to your intention of having a Farewell Benefit[†5] before going to America[†6]—and whether you would like to have it at the Haymarket—and also as to its being preceded by any short engagement there. I don't know what your feelings may be on this latter head, but thinking it well that you may know how the land lies in those seas, send you this; the rather (excuse Elizabethian phrase—but you know how indispensable it is to me under existing circumstances)[†1]—the rather that I am thereto encouraged by thy consort, who has just come a visiting here, with thy fair daughters Mistress Nina and the little Kate.[†2] Wherefore, most selected friend, perpend at thy leisure, and so God speed thee!

And no more at present from,

Thine Ever

CHARLES DICKENS

From My Tent
In my Garden.

To PETER CUNNINGHAM, 11 MAY 1848*

MS Berg Collection.

Haymarket | Thursday 11th May 1848.

My Dear Sir

I hurriedly add my word to Lemon's, to say, earnestly, that I think your letter to the Shakespeare Committee, of great importance and quite indispensable.

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Peter Cunningham Esquire

To PETER CUNNINGHAM, 12 MAY 1848

MS Princeton University Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Twelfth May 1848.

My Dear Sir

I shall look to hear from you at Miss Kelly's tonight, how the House closes at the shutting of the box office at 4 o'Clock.

Something was suggested by Lemon last night, which certainly renders it desirable—unless you have already issued the newspaper tickets—that none of them should be in the second tier of boxes. I will explain why, when we meet.

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Peter Cunningham Esquire

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 12 MAY 1848*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street.

Devonshire Terrace | Twelfth May 1848.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I have received the money safely. I fear I shall have left the Home before you get there, but I will remain as long as I possibly can.

Faithfully Yours ever
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To MISS FANNY KELLY, 13 MAY 1848

Mention in Reginald Atkinson catalogue No. 36 (1919); MS 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 13 May 48.

Regarding some letters and making an appointment to see her about them.

To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, 13 MAY 1848

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel.

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday Thirteenth May | 1848.

My Dear George

I will make the enquiry this morning,—but I fear a bill of this sort will not do. A publisher in Woburn Place, is something so out of the way,[†1] that I have hardly a hope of success.

Faithfully Always
CD.

To PETER CUNNINGHAM, 13 MAY 1848

MS Princeton University Library.

Devonshire Terrace. | Thirteenth May 1848.

My Dear Sir

There is one thing very important to be seen about, at once—the printed numbers that are to be sewn on the seats. I apprehend they can be bought; but if so, they must be bought today (if you have not done this, already) for the Haymarket people must be at work with them, the very first thing on Monday Morning, if not tomorrow.

This necessitates the putting in of the cushions, as soon as possible, after the performances are over, tonight. For in the amphitheatre the Nos will have to be put, on the covering of the seats; and it will be a very long job.

It will also be desirable for you to see Mr. Webster at the Theatre this morning, and arrange with him for the supply of these numbers, and the prompt arrangement of them all over the house.—Otherwise you will get into inextricable difficulty and confusion.

Faithfully Yours always

CD.

To THE HON. RICHARD WATSON, 15 MAY 1848

MS Huntington Library.

Haymarket Theatre | Monday afternoon | Fifteenth May 1848.

My Dear Watson.

I enclose you the best place, left. You will observe that one of the cards is for tonight; the other, for Wednesday. I am delighted that you are coming, and hope you may like it all.[†1]

With best regards. | Ever Faithfully Yours

CD.

The Hon. Richard Watson.

To THE HON. MRS RICHARD WATSON, [17 MAY 1848]

MS Huntington Library. Date: endorsed in pencil "May 17, 1848"—the night of the Amateur Company's second farce, Love, Law, and Physic.

Haymarket | Wednesday afternoon

Dear Mrs. Watson

I write in a ferocious state of business and botheration—Glad you are coming to see the farce, but sorry it is not Animal Magnetism—I have spoken with the box book keeper who has suggested your bringing the enclosed, instead of a Card. There is some confusion about the private boxes, and they don't exactly know which are Let. Ever Cordially Yours

The wretched Manager.

To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, 18 MAY 1848

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel.

Devonshire Terrace | Eighteenth May 1848.

My Dear Cruikshank.

It has been proposed, as a social reunion of our little company, that we should dine together at Greenwich on Tuesday next, at a cost not exceeding five and twenty shillings each. Will you be one of the party?[†1] I hope on that day to be able to announce the country arrangements.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS[†2]
George Cruikshank Esq.

To PETER CUNNINGHAM, 18 MAY 1848

MS Princeton University Library.

Devonshire Terrace. | Eighteenth May 1848.

My Dear Sir

I have taken all the preliminary proceedings this morning, in reference to Liverpool. I hope to move in the Birmingham business, tomorrow.[†3] No time must be lost.

Ever Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Peter Cunningham Esquire.

To [R. V.] YATES,[†4] 18 MAY 1848*

MS Mr Keith Valentine.

1 Devonshire Terrace, | York Gate Regents Park
Eighteenth May 1848

My Dear Sir

I am anxious to have your opinion as to the hopefulness of a performance at Liverpool by our amateur Company, of The Merry Wives of Windsor (with which we have just now made some noise in London) and a merry farce,[†5]—for the benefit of the Shakespeare House Curatorship Fund. You are perhaps aware that it is our object to secure the appointment for Sheridan Knowles—we have already a Minute from the Shakespeare House Committee, recognizing his undoubted claims to it—and there would be no objection to connecting his name distinctly with the announcement.

I would propose to act in Liverpool, on Monday the 5th. of June. We should probably play at Birmingham on the previous Saturday.[†6] Do you think our Liverpool friends would take the matter up warmly, and fill the house as before? If so, I should be very glad to be a Member of any committee that might be formed, and to come down, for a week or so beforehand, to assist them.

I write this morning to Dr. Sheridan Muspratt, asking these same questions. It is desirable and essential that in our country arrangements we should take advantage of the freshness of the sensation here. No time consequently is to be lost. We have all the pleasantest recollection of our Liverpool audience, and would all be delighted to face it again, if it would be glad to welcome us.

Any assistance you can render us in this matter, will be a real and great service to one of the most distinguished Literary men of this day—unhappily in very adverse circumstances—and will be very sincerely esteemed by all my Company.†1

Mrs. Dickens unites with me in best compliments to yourself and Mrs. Yates. And I am My Dear Sir,

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

—†2 Yates Esquire

To DR SHERIDAN MUSPRATT, [18 MAY 1848]

Mention in last.

To BERNARD BARTON,†3 19 MAY 1848*

MS Dr M. Ray Adams.

Devonshire Terrace. | Nineteenth May 1848.

Esteemed friend.†4

I am greatly obliged to you for your verses†5 and your letter—both very pleasant and agreeable to me, for their earnestness and cordiality.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Bernard Barton.†4

To CHARLES EVANS,†6 19 MAY 1848*

MS Mitchell Library, Sydney.

London, 1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Nineteenth May 1848.

Dear Sir

It occurs to me that you may possibly be able to help me in an object I have very much at heart, and I take it for granted that in any case you will be willing.

You are perhaps aware that in compliance with a very urgent solicitation from the Shakespeare House Committee, the Amateurs whom I have the pleasure of heading and representing, have recently been acting in London in aid of the fund for the Curatorship of that property. Certain provincial representations form part of the scheme; and the object of the scheme is, to endow the office with as much money as we can raise—to hand it over to the Government—and to secure the appointment of Sheridan Knowles as the first curator at such annual Salary as the Government, so assisted, will attach, in perpetuity to the office. We have not announced Knowles' name in London, but are quite ready to do so, in the country.[†1]

Now the Shakespeare House Committee not being good men of business, I have resolved to take the country arrangements into my own hands. I think we ought to act in Birmingham; and touching Birmingham, I wish to ask you these questions—

1.—Whether you think that we can fill the Theatre, through the means of tickets sold beforehand, at half a guinea each, for the pit and dress boxes, seven shillings for the upper boxes, and some proportionate price for the Gallery.[†2] Whether, through your connexion with the Polytechnic Institution, or other knowledge of the influential people there, you can get up a good committee for the issue and sale of these tickets and general recognition of the thing as a matter of interest[†3] (we have had such committees with the greatest success, both in Liverpool and Manchester) and whether you could immediately set the thing a going, and feel the Birmingham pulse, with reference to a performance that should be a great success—on Saturday the 3rd. of June; when we would play The Merry Wives of Windsor, and Love Law and Physic.[†4] If you could get together some of the best people for such a purpose, with the certainty of a general response in the town, I would send you down all particulars immediately, and would gladly come myself, to meet the committee, say this day week.[†5] But the great point is, to have the design broached publicly, straightway; and to be assured that there would be the excitement about it in Birmingham, that we have found elsewhere.

2. Whether the play-going part of the town is large enough, and the feeling strong enough, to justify a second performance (Every Man in his Humour, and Animal Magnetism) on Tuesday the 6th. of June.[†6] In that case, we should play nowhere else but at Liverpool. If this second performance, however, were not a safe and certain success, it could not take place. We can only act three times, and should then have to look to some other town for that night.

I think I have put you in possession of all it is at this time necessary to know. If the Birmingham people will be glad to have such a visit, and will take it up gallantly, out of hand, the details will be easy of adjustment. I know you are an excellent man of business, and a very energetic one—and I believe I am not deficient in those qualities.

The greatest point of all, is, to take the field, if it is to be taken at all, with a rush, and without the loss of a day.

So that I leave to you—and presuming that by this time your hair is standing on end, add no more at present.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Evans Esquire.

To [CAPTAIN ALEXANDER MACONOCHIE], 19 MAY 1848*

Text from typescript, Huntington Library. Address: Reference to "your paper" and CD's disagreement with it (see To Miss Coutts, 10 May) strongly suggest Maconochie.

Devonshire Terrace, | Nineteenth May 1848.

My Dear Sir,

I have been so constantly occupied, that I have not had leisure to make any notes on your paper,[†1] though I have read it attentively. I hope to be able to do so, tomorrow. I do not agree with you, generally, and take your remarks to apply to a much larger Institution.

In reference to the case of the poor girl in whom you are interested, I am sorry to say there is no hope of her admission into the Home. For the only vacancy, there are already several unhappy candidates, one of whom I saw, months ago. Another very strong case has recently presented itself; and it is quite out of the question to extend, at present, the limits of the establishment.[†2]

Faithfully yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

I am grieved to hear you have been so unwell. Our doctor says (which is no great consolation) that the hot sun and the East Wind, have made colds and rheumatism flourish.

To MISS CUNLIFFE,[†3] [20 MAY 1848]

Mention in next.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 20 MAY 1848

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday Twentieth May 1848.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

Every enquiry that Mr. Tracey's matron has made, personally, about the girl Godfrey, substantiates her statement in the minutest particular. While I was at the Prison today, the Schoolmistress was gone to Mile End, to make one additional enquiry. Assuming that to be equally satisfactory, all the evidence is clearly and distinctly in the girl's favor; and with that reservation, I have made arrangements for her admission on Wednesday Evening.

I afterwards proceeded to call on Miss Cunliffe; but she had gone out, to call on you. I therefore enclosed a card in your note, informing her that I should be at home here, on Monday, between 11 and 1 o'Clock.

Dear Miss Coutts | Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To G. H. LEWES, 20 MAY 1848

MS Dr James Hasson.

Devonshire Terrace. | Twentieth May 1848.

My Dear Lewes.

I am sorry you can't join the gay and festive Scene, the halls the halls of dazzling white[†1]—bait;[†2] but virtue is, and should be, triumphant.

I think (but am not yet certain) that the third of June will be "our opening day" in the country.

These rehearsals and botherations have obliged me to put almost as great a gap between your second and third Volumes,[†3] as is supposed to occur sometimes, between the second and third act of an Adelphi Melo Drama. But I read the third yesterday. And I must say to you that it affected me extremely, and manifests, I think, very great power.[†4] It has left the strongest impression on me. The whole history of Chamberlayne and his wife,[†5] is admirably done. I had noted a great many other striking things as I went along, but this swallowed them all up, and left me, last night, in a damned black brooding state—not at all like Flexible—which I have not quite come out of, this morning. Indeed, I didn't mean to write about it—I take these things so much to heart—but what I have written, has leaped out of the inkstand, and its[†1] of no use crying "Back! Back!"[†2] to it.

Ever Heartily
CHARLES DICKENS

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 20 MAY 1848*

MS New York University Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Twentieth May 1848.

My Dear Sir

The cheque safely received, with many thanks. I am glad you were so well pleased with the performances. They seem to have given universal satisfaction.

Heaven speed you with St. Augustine![†3]

Ever Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 22 MAY 1848

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Second May 1848.

Dear Miss Coutts.

I brought away the references by mistake. Here they are.

In case you should, by any evil chance, in visiting Stonnell,[†4] encounter a magistrate of the name of Rotch, let me advise you to say nothing to him, either about her, or the Home.[†5] For whatever is said to him, he is as certain to pervert, if it should suit his purpose, as the Sun is to rise tomorrow morning.[†6]

I am expecting Miss Cunliffe. Godfrey's references turned out quite satisfactory. The materials for her clothes, have gone down to Mr. Tracey's this morning. I had a note from Mrs. Holdsworth last night, reporting Rubina Waller gouty, Martha Goldsmith ricketty, and the rest of the family "charming".

Dear Miss Coutts | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MARK LEMON, 22 MAY 1848

MS Benoliel Collection.

Devonshire Terrace. | Twenty Second May 1848.

My Dear Lemon

I am up to the eyes in L'pool and Birmingham correspondence.

The Saturday Night won't do for Birmingham. We must play there, on the Tuesday. They want Every Man in preference to the Merry Wives.[†1] On the Monday, we play at Liverpool—Monday the 5th. Where the Devil to go on the Saturday, I can't decide; but we must go somewhere. I think I will try it on with the Manchester people, by this post.[†2] Then, we could take Stratford and Leamington together, in another trip.[†3]

We shall be a very small party tomorrow, but I suppose it had better come off.[†4] House, Crown and Sceptre. Hour, 6. Egg is coming here at 2, to the end that we may have a stroll in the Park. Shall we call for you, anywhere, about 3 or so?

The Liverpool people respond like trumps. I mean to bear a flaming beacon, both into that town and into Birmingham, in my own hand, about Friday next. I am bent on setting right the doleful Peter's[†5] mistakes.

I hear that Lord John and the whole ministry, are going to resign in Jerrold's favor, and that the House of Lords and Church Establishment intend abolishing themselves in deference to him.[†6] Is it true?

Ever Affectionately

CD.

Oh Heaven! the agitation into which I have plunged the unfortunate Mr. Yates[†7] of the Dingle near Liverpool!!!

To FRANCIS ROBINSON, [22 MAY 1848]

Mention in next.

To ALEXANDER IRELAND, 22 MAY 1848

Text from MDGH, III, 104-5

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty-second May, 1848

My Dear Sir,

You very likely know that my company of amateurs have lately been playing, with a great reputation, in London here. The object is, "The endowment of a perpetual curatorship of Shakespeare's house, to be always held by some one distinguished in literature, and more especially in dramatic literature,"[†1] and we have already a pledge from the Shakespeare House Committee that Sheridan Knowles shall be recommended to the Government as the first curator. This pledge, which is in the form of a minute,[†2] we intend to advertise in our country bills.

Now, on Monday, the Fifth of June, we are going to play at Liverpool, where we are assured of a warm reception, and where an active committee for the issuing of tickets is already formed.[†3] Do you think the Manchester people would be equally glad to see us again, and that the house could be filled, as before, at our old prices? If yes, would you and our other friends go, at once, to work in the cause?[†4] The only night on which we could play in Manchester would be Saturday, the 3rd of June. It is possible that the depression of the times may render a performance in Manchester unwise.[†5] In that case I would immediately abandon the idea. But what I want to know, by return of post, is, is it safe or unsafe?[†6] If the former, here is the bill as it stood in London,[†7] with the addition, on the back, of a paragraph I would insert in Manchester,[†8] of which immediate use can be made. If the latter, my reason for wishing to settle the point immediately is that we may make another use of that Saturday night.

Assured of your generous feeling I make no apology for troubling you. A sum of money, got together by these means, will insure to literature (I will take good care of that) a proper expression of itself in the bestowal of an essentially literary appointment, not only now but henceforth. Much is to be done, time presses, and the least added the better.

I have addressed a counterpart of this letter to Mr. Francis Robinson, to whom perhaps you will communicate the bill.

Faithfully yours always,
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 23 MAY 1848

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace. | Tuesday Twenty Third May | 1848.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

Nothing can be better, I think, than the letter to Sally.[†1] I am sorry for her,—but I must say I think she is less adapted to the situation than anything else in the human form of which I have any idea.

It strikes me that Mrs. Graves must walk without knowing why, and that everybody else must walk after her.

Miss Cunliffe was here yesterday. I like her very much. There is something in her face, exceedingly agreeable and promising, and she improves greatly on being talked to. She seems to have a little conscientious timidity, in reference to the task before her, for which I like her none the worse. Whether she has any susceptible gentility, I don't quite know, but I think she promises very well indeed, and I feel an interest in her.

Dear Miss Coutts | Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To MISS JULIA FORTESCUE, [?23 or 24 MAY 1848]

Mention in Julia Fortescue to Lord Gardner, ?25 May 48 (MS Lady Iveagh). (See To Francis Robinson, 24 May, fn).

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 24 MAY 1848

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street.

Devonshire Terrace | Wednesday Twenty Fourth May | 1848.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I thought there was something in my way.—Talfourd and I are under a compact to Miss Kelly to shed the refulgence of our presence upon a private reading she is going to hold tomorrow night, as a feeler for getting a livelihood through the provincial Literary Societies and Mechanics' Institutions.[†1] It is really a question of existence to her, and we have both endeavoured, for some time past, to keep her creditors away from her.[†2] Consequently, I must go; and Mrs. Dickens (who don't want to go) is pledged, through me, any time these two months, to make a similar bright example of herself.

On Friday Morning, I am going to Birmingham; and I think I shall be away, ten or twelve days. I have set my heart on seeing Sheridan Knowles installed at Stratford on Avon, as the Curator of Shakespeare's House—the only and the best resource I know for him—and am going, in advance of my troupe, to interest the sympathies of his friends in that town, and in Liverpool, and Manchester—at the same time pursuing those other observations I have in my mind, and mentioned to you yesterday.[†3] If you should have anything to write to me about the Home, and will send it here, it will be immediately forwarded to me.

The blind-Maker and I, held a great council yesterday. And the blind-maker shewed me such good reasons for the common outside Venetian blinds, drawing up into cases, being at once the most enduring, the neatest, and cheapest, for our purpose, that I unhesitatingly concluded to order that kind. They will be done in about nine days.

I send you back the little pamphlet. Apropòs[†4] of which—I have a tempting offer just now, to be returned, free of expence, for one of the largest Metropolitan boroughs,[†5] and I believe I could be brought in, very triumphantly. But considerations of the greater peace and happiness of my own pursuits—to say nothing of the butcher and baker—hold me back, gently, as they have done twice before.[†6] To which I add the reflection,—if I did come out in that way, what a frightful Radical you would think me!

Always Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To PETER CUNNINGHAM, 24 MAY 1848

MS Princeton University Library.

Devonshire Terrace. | May Twenty Fourth 1848. | Wednesday

My Dear Sir

I am going to Birmingham early on Friday Morning, and shall be glad if you can call here between 1 and 3 tomorrow.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Peter Cunningham Esquire

To MISS FANNY KELLY, 24 MAY 1848*

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel. Address: Miss Kelly | 73 Dean Street | Soho.

Devonshire Terrace. | Wednesday Night
Twenty Fourth May 1848.

My Dear Miss Kelly.

Don't worry yourself about this note, until you have got your reading[†1] over. Then peruse it, and write me your reply, at the Royal Hotel Birmingham. It relates to Miss Kenworthy.

I have considered that matter, and discussed it in council since I saw you today. I do not like the responsibility of objecting to the young lady's father accompanying her. Indeed, I would rather that he did. What I would propose, therefore, is this.—That Miss Kenworthy and her escort hold themselves in readiness to attend Rehearsal at the Theatre we may open at (probably Manchester) on the Morning of Saturday the 3rd. of June. The like at Liverpool, on the morning of Monday the 5th. of June. The like at Birmingham on Tuesday the 6th. On those three nights, and at those three places, we shall act, I believe. I would propose to pay all the Railroad Fares for Miss Kenworthy and her father, and to offer them besides, for their expenses of board and lodging during this time, Ten Pounds. This would enable them to consult their own tastes and make their own arrangements.

It would be necessary for them to leave London, on Friday the second. All particulars of trains &c, my brother[†2] shall duly communicate, if these terms be agreeable to them. We shall probably have a second short trip for two nights, on the 12th. and 13th. of June. But this we can arrange afterwards. What I wish to know, is, whether this offer be quite agreeable and satisfactory to the young lady and her father. If not, there is no harm done—we shall part in mutual good humour, I hope—and I will look for another, but less pretty, Mistress Page.[†3]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN T. LAWRENCE,[†1] 24 MAY 1848

Text from N, II, 92.

London, 1 Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Fourth May 1848

Dear Sir,

I am much indebted to you for your obliging invitation to dinner on Friday, and have great pleasure in accepting it.

Dear Sir, | Faithfully Yours,
[CHARLES DICKENS]

P.S. I shall have the pleasure of meeting the committee at the Town Hall on Friday at 2.

To FRANCIS ROBINSON, 24 MAY 1848†

MS Yale University Library.

Devonshire Terrace. | Twenty Fourth May 1848. | Wednesday.

My Dear Sir

I am very much obliged to you for your kind letter. I have not the least doubt that whatever you decide, in reference to prices, will be wisest and best.

On Friday Morning, I am going to Birmingham. Will you have the kindness to address to me at the Royal Hotel there? If the proceedings go on in Manchester, I shall come on to see you, probably on Tuesday next.

My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

F. Robinson Esquire

The following alterations for the bill

———

In the caste[†2] of the Merry Wives.

For "Miss Fortescue of The Theatre Royal Haymarket"[†3]

—substitute

Miss Emmeline Montague.[†4]

After that lady's name, insert

Mrs. Page —— Miss Kenworthy.

In the caste[†1] of Animal Magnetism again Substitute for Miss Fortescue,

Miss Emmeline Montague.[†2]

To LORD HOLLAND,[†3] 25 MAY 1848*

MS The Earl of Ilchester.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park.
Twenty Fifth May 1848.

My Dear Lord.

Many distinguished men in all phases of public life, have empowered Mr. Macready's friends to attach their names to a document of which I enclose a copy,[†4] and in reference to which Lord Lansdowne[†5] especially has been very kind and earnest. Your name is so connected in my mind with many conversations I have held about him in Holland House,[†6] and would be so valuable and acceptable to him, that I take the liberty of enquiring whether you will authorize me to place it among these requisitionists?[†7] I should esteem it as a very great kindness, and the compliment would be bestowed upon a gentleman and a scholar who has done good public service.

Your faithful and obliged
CHARLES DICKENS

The Lord Holland

To AUGUSTUS TRACEY, 25 MAY 1848*

MS University of Texas.

Devonshire Terrace | Thursday Twenty Fifth May | 1848.

My Dear Tracey. It occurs to me that you may be able to assist me in an idea I have. And if you can, I know you will.

My amateur Company are going to play at Liverpool, Manchester, and Birmingham, in aid of the fund for the endowment of the Curatorship of Shakespeare's House, and the bestowal of that office in the first instance on Sheridan Knowles. We may afterwards play in Bristol, and Macready tells me we could not go to a better place than Plymouth. Now, to Plymouth we would certainly come in a body, and play the Merry Wives of Windsor and Animal Magnetism, if the gentry and influential people there, were so alive upon the subject that they would form a Committee (which is done in all the other towns), [†a]engage the Theatre,[†a] fix the prices, sell the tickets, and advertize and [†b]do such business needful to be done on the spot,[†b] and fill the Theatre for us. But as I know nobody there, I have not known how to open the business, until I suddenly thought of a sweet little cherub sitting up aloft,[†1] with one swab on his shoulder. To whom I instantly dispatch this broadside.

We would play in Plymouth, on Monday the 12th. of June. They could choose either the pieces I have mentioned, or Every Man in his Humour, and Love Law and Physic. The prices in the country are sometimes ten and sixpence best places, seven and sixpence second best; sometimes, seven and sixpence best places, five shillings second best. All particulars for bills and so forth, could be sent down, of course, immediately. The admission in these cases is always by tickets purchased beforehand, except to the Gallery; for which money is usually taken. It is possible there may not be the curiosity and interest about such a performance, in Plymouth, which exists elsewhere. In that case, no harm is done. But if there be any influential people who would like to have us, and could move the town, and they, on your representation, would go to work, I should be happy to receive any communication from them, and to respond immediately.[†2]

I write in haste to save the post, and shall look for your answer. I shall be at the Royal Hotel Birmingham, until Sunday afternoon. At Seaforth Hall,[†3] near Liverpool, until Wednesday Morning.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Lieutenant Tracey.

To PETER CUNNINGHAM, 26 MAY 1848

MS Princeton University Library.

Royal Hotel Birmingham | Friday May Twenty Sixth 1848.

My Dear Sir

They think it very important here, that the Leamington and Stratford people should know, from authority, that we are not going to play in either of those towns[†4]—as, they say, it will bring people here. Will you write by tomorrow's post to your Stratford friend, and to—Elliston[†1] Esqre Leamington, and make the announcement officially; laying the blame on the small size of the Theatres.

I have attended an excellent committee here today, and all looks very flourishing indeed.

Faithfully Yours
CD.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 26 MAY 1848*

MS Huntington Library.

Royal Hotel, Birmingham | Friday Twenty Sixth May 1848.

My Dear Georgy. Kate (I being dressed for dinner, and she not), asks me to write you a line, to say that we got down here safe and sound, and that we send our loves to you and the darlings.

I have been to the Committee Meeting, and to the Theatre. All looks brilliant. The Theatre is a little more dingy than I thought it was—"but that's not much".[†2]

Tell Topping,[†3] in the most particular and emphatic manner, that I rely upon the little Mare being thoroughly well exercised, every day.

Always affectionately

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Hogarth.

To [FRANCIS ROBINSON], [?26 or 27 MAY 1848]

Mention in To Lemon, 28 May 48. Address: CD probably wrote to Robinson as Hon. Secretary, as on 24 May and 1 June, rather than to him and Ireland. Date: To Robinson, 24 May, makes it clear that CD would have written from Birmingham.

To MISS FANNY KELLY, 27 MAY 1848*

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel. Address: Miss Kelly | 73 Dean Street | Soho | London.

Birmingham, Twenty Seventh May 1848. | Saturday.

My Dear Miss Kelly.

I send you, enclosed, a list of Miss Kenworthy's calls—having received your note, here, this morning. My brother Fred will see about her Railroad passes, and will communicate with you thereupon.

In haste | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

MISS KENWORTHY[†1]

Calls for Rehearsal.

At the Theatre, MANCHESTER,[†1] on Saturday Morning the 3rd. of June, at ten exactly. Merry Wives of Windsor. Performed that night.

At the amphitheatre, LIVERPOOL,[†1] on Monday Morning, the 5th. of June, at ten exactly. Merry Wives of Windsor. Performed that night.

At the Theatre, BIRMINGHAM,[†1] on Tuesday the 6th. of June, at One o'Clock exactly (necessary to leave Liverpool, not later than halfpast nine that morning). Every Man in his Humour. Performed that night.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 27 MAY 1848*

MS Dickens House.

Birmingham | Twenty Seventh May 1848.

I would write some passage out of Dombey, if I could, but I can't recollect one. So here is my name, and no more.

CHARLES DICKENS

To MARK LEMON, 28 MAY 1848*

MS Miss M. D. Whinney.

Royal Hotel, Birmingham | Sunday Twenty Eighth May 1848.

My Dear Lemon. I look out of the sea of business which is overwhelming me, and shaking the spray thereof from my bothered hair, hail you, lustily.

All is going on, well.[†2] Excellent committee here, of all parties and persuasions. High prices, big posters, and great confidence. Theatre a little more dingy than I had expected, but a good one. Town very much excited on the subject.

At Manchester, I think they have made the prices too low. They ought to know best, however, and they say it is in a worse state than it ever has been. Both Robinson and Ireland write, "There will be, on these terms, a Bumper House." 5/- lower boxes, 5/- pit stalls—3/6 upper boxes—2/6 pit—Galleries 2/- and 1/-. I wrote in reply that I thought this was very little, and I hoped they were ready to make the whole pit into stalls, if the demand arose.[†3] I laid great stress on that.

I have given Willmott[†4] a tremendous letter of instructions, and I hope, notwithstanding the quickness of the work, all will be smooth and straight-forward. I hope you may be able to come down with us on Friday, or at all events that you will not be later than the Night Mail. For Emmeline Montague, remember, has not rehearsed, and is in both pieces.

—Said Emmeline I suppose, will go down under my wing, and Georgy's. Kate, I shall leave at Liverpool, to meet us at Manchester. Does Mrs. Romer[†1] go with her son and daughter. If so, will you let Fred know, with a view to the number of Railroad passes we shall require.

Nathan—Will you see him about the buck basket,[†2] and the lantern head-dresses from the Haymarket, for the Fairies, which he must bring down. I am almost ashamed to ask you to get and give him the old Bobadil sword,[†3] but to what will not necessity impel a destitute man!

Wilson—[†4] I take it for granted you have seen, and duly terrified.

Parts for Miss Romer's songs.[†5] Has she got 'em?

I don't think there is anything else,—but in case there should be, I will write you again. Will you arrange to come and dine with me in Devonshire Terrace, on Thursday at half past 5? I shall be at home, please God, on Wednesday Evening. Meanwhile, at Seaforth Hall near Liverpool.

I am in great hopes of arranging both for Bristol and Plymouth, before I see you.

Ever My Dear Lemon | Heartily Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To MARK LEMON, [29] MAY 1848

MS Dickens House. Date: misdated by CD; Monday was 29 May in 1848.

Liverpool | Monday May 30th. 1848.

My Dear Lemon.

I have remembered something else, and accordingly take a shy at you.

—Miss Montague's dress!

—Also dresses must be bought for the bearers of the buck basket, and for the servants in Every Man.

—Miss M. has her three books,[†6] I suppoge?

Look to it, brother business-man, and fail not!

Ever Affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

Mark Lemon Esquire

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 30 MAY 1848

Mention in N, II, 93.

To AUGUSTUS TRACEY, 30 MAY 1848*

MS University of Texas. Address: Lieutenant Tracey. R.N. | &c &c &c Darley House | Plymouth.

Manchester, Tuesday 30th. May 1848.

My Dear Tracey

I am truly indebted to you for your explicit and business-like letter, which I received at Liverpool this morning, before expressing over here. It tells me all I desired to know, and couldn't have known otherwise. It is quite clear that the lieges of Plymouth, are not the boys (or girls) for us, and accordingly they will not be illuminated with the light of genius.

Cordially Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To THOMAS CHAPMAN,[†1] 31 MAY 1848*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Devonshire Terrace. | Wednesday Evening
May Thirty First 1848.

My Dear Sir

I have been, many times, intending to write to you about Augustus's part in these theatricals, and the two or three days it will expose him to the loss of, in the country; but I have been so exceedingly closely engaged with them, in my anxiety to see the only feasible provision made for Knowles—who has literally no other—that I have always put off doing so, to some other time.

I did not like to propose to Augustus to have no share in this undertaking, for I know Knowles well enough to believe that he would feel the default of any member of the old company[†2]—most of all, of anyone bearing my name—as a something almost personal to his recognition and assertion. But I have always felt that it would be better for Augustus, and more "business-like" altogether, to do without him on future occasions if any should arise.[†3]

He and I have been talking about it tonight, and I fancy from what he tells me that you may perhaps have felt this too. I am really unwilling, however, even now, to trouble you with a word upon the subject; for I know your consideration so well, and am so unaffectedly impressed by it, that I am chary of seeming to make the least demand upon it by bringing myself to your recollection in connexion with him.

I have been travelling for three or four days, and am almost blinded by a cold. I hope you will see to read this, better than I see to write it.

Always My Dear Sir | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Chapman Esquire.

June

To CAPTAIN ALEXANDER MACONOCHIE, 1 JUNE 1848*

MS Dickens House.

Devonshire Terrace. | First June 1848.

My Dear Sir

Being at home, between two country visits, for only a few hours, I find your letter. I hope you have not been inconvenienced by my unavoidable delay in sending the enclosed,[†1] which I have read with great attention and interest.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Captain Maconnochie.[†2]

To FRANCIS ROBINSON, 1 JUNE 1848*

MS Private.

Devonshire Terrace. | First June 1848.

My Dear Sir

I think we had best have the enclosed Notice printed as a little handbill, and plentifully distributed among the people as they come into the Theatre. If you think so too, will you kindly direct it to be done?[†3]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Francis Robinson Esquire.

over[†4]

Will you tell them at the Queen's[†5] that Mrs. Cruikshank will come with Mr. Cruikshank, and that Mr. Compton's name is to be substituted for Leech's in the bed room list.

NOTICE[†6]

It is respectfully announced that MR. LEECH[†6] is prevented, by the severe illness of his only child,[†7] from having the honor of appearing this evening. MR. COMPTON[†8] of the Theatre Royal Drury Lane &c, will therefore perform the part of Master Slender in the comedy; and the Marquis de Lancy in the farce will be undertaken by MR. G. H. LEWES.[†8]
Manchester, Saturday 3rd June 1848.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, [9 JUNE 1848]*

MS Morgan Library. Date: endorsed 9 June 48 in unknown hand.

Devonshire Terrace | Friday Night

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I am indeed pleased to find that you had formed so liberal an idea of the expences. I know that they have been incurred most carefully, and that I should resent the least abuse of your generous nature, in any one with whom I had any dealing on your behalf, as fiercely as I should resent anything—even the supposed swindling of our friend the carving and gilding lady—but I know, too, how these things will mount up, and the increasing row of items rather took my breath away, when I was writing it out.

I will come to the bank tomorrow, at twelve o'Clock.

Always Most Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To H. T. ELLISTON, 9 JUNE 1848

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, 27 June 1923; dated 9 June 48.

. . . in case the arrangements for Leamington of which we spoke on the Stage at Birmingham the other night . . . it would be a great convenience to our Company . . . if the night appointed . . . could be the 24th or 27th of June.[†1]

To [CHARLES EVANS], 9 JUNE 1848†

MS Folger Shakespeare Library. Address: clearly to Evans, Hon. Secretary of the Birmingham Theatricals Committee, like the letters of 15 and 17 June.

Devonshire Terrace | Ninth June 1848.

My Dear Sir

Monday the 26th. would suit us excellently well.[†2] [†a]I am quite sure that Mr. Simpson[†3] is right in preferring to have the performance before Mr. Macready's appearance.[†4] Nor do I doubt that it will be of service to the Theatre in the long run. Webster of the Haymarket, who is no bad authority, has always proceeded on that assumption since we first began to play in London,[†a] and has never seen reason to change his opinion.

Pray tell Mr. Simpson from me, with my compliments, that he need not be under the least concern about Two o'Clock in the Morning.[†1] The Dramatic Authors' Society (which we never pay on such occasions) will perfectly understand that he has nothing to do with the representation of the piece, and will not gain one farthing by it.

[†b]I have a little difficulty in sending you the exact caste of the Merry Wives, because if Leech should still be unable to come,[†2] I shall play Slender, and somebody else will act my present part of Shallow.[†b] I would therefore put the bill out, in the first instance, according to the enclosed form. The heading of the last bill to be retained, with such other announcement of the second performance, as the committee may think best. I would begin the Overture that evening, at a quarter before 7—say ten minutes before 7; and then we should have the Curtain up at 7 o'Clock.

I cannot tell you how much indebted we all feel to you for your excellent business arrangements, or how pleased we all are with our Birmingham Audience.[†3]

Always believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To PETER CUNNINGHAM, 10 JUNE 1848

MS Princeton University Library.

Devonshire Terrace. | Saturday June Tenth 1848.

My Dear Cunningham.

Enclosed I send you a cheque for the tickets Mrs. Cowden Clarke had.

I want to get the accounts made out to the present time. Will you tell me what you paid for Railway fares? And as I have several charges against the Haymarket performances, will it not be best for you to pay me whatever balance there is in favor of that account? Otherwise, I shall be irrationally saddling the country representations, with expences that don't belong to them.

I think there will be another performance in Birmingham, on Tuesday fortnight. I am in communication with Glasgow and Edinburgh.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Peter Cunningham Esquire

To ANGUS FLETCHER,[†1] 10 JUNE 1848

MS Comtesse de Suzannet.

London, 1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Tenth June 1848.

My Dear Sir

Sitting down today, to cast about in my mind for somebody who had leisure to consider the subject I am about to open to you, and good nature and good sympathies to bestow upon it, I immediately thought of you. Therefore, I beg you will charge those qualities in yourself with the trouble I am going to give you, and not me—an innocent man.

I don't know whether the fame of my amateur Company of performers may have travelled into Scotland. But it has made some noise in England, and we have just been acting in London, Liverpool, Manchester and Birmingham, to the unbounded satisfaction of the lieges. Object, the endowment of a Curatorship of Shakespeare's House at Stratford; to be always bestowed on some one distinguished in Literature and more especially in Dramatic Literature, and to be conferred in the first instance, on Sheridan Knowles.

Now, Knowles has many friends in Glasgow, and we are strongly urged and entreated to go to Glasgow and act one night. Whereupon, it comes into my head, but why not act one night in Edinburgh too?

Whenever we act out of London, a Committee is formed of the most eminent men in the place whose names are printed in the advertisements as a Committee of general direction, and one of them is a Secretary, who superintends the taking of the Theatre for us, the advertizing, issuing of the tickets and so forth, and who employs such local assistance (paid for) as he thinks proper. To him I transmit the form of the bill, ticket,[†2] and his advice I particularly ask in the first instance as to the probability of a great success, and as to the prices that might safely be charged on such an occasion.

The questions I would ask you, are—Do you think such a performance would be very attractive in Edinburgh? Could you, and would you, take the trouble to get together, in that case, a good committee? Could you advise me about prices? Would you ascertain what Murray[†3] would want for the Theatre Royal, and what it would hold at the proposed prices? Would you act as Secretary?[†4] And would you advise me what time in July would be best for the purpose? The night must[†5] be a Monday,[†6] as we should play on the Tuesday in Glasgow, and should then be obliged to return home, for the convenience of those among us, who are connected with weekly periodical literature or Art.

If you tell me there is not likely to be that curiosity and interest on the subject in Edinburgh which prevails elsewhere, you will settle the point I want to decide, and will greatly oblige me. If you tell me that there appears to be that feeling in existence, then your help on these other points would be invaluable. I cannot think of any one so likely to find out safely and promptly, and to do so willingly, as you yourself.

We could either play as the first piece, Ben Jonson's Every Man in his Humour, or Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor, with (in either case) a good, merry farce. I would rather leave the choice between the two comedies, to the local powers.[†1]

Having poured out this amazing flood of botheration (at which I imagine your hair standing on end) I will give you breathing-space, merely adding that I am very earnest in the matter, because Knowles has no earthly provision—well deserves one—and will have an honorable, dignified, appropriate and independent one through these means.

Mrs. Dickens (who unites with me in compliments to Mrs. Fletcher) is at variance with me, touching your address. I therefore enclose this letter to Jeffrey, and beg him to send it on to you.

My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

Angus Fletcher Esquire

To W. C. MACREADY, 10 JUNE 1848*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace. | Tenth June 1848.

My Dear Macready

On Tuesday, we shall be delighted to dine with you[†2]—I write, with a man boring me horribly about certain private affairs of his own, which he calls "the cause of Literature."

I am going to take Drury Lane—the Strand—the Olympic—the Victoria[†3]—Sadlers Wells—and the Marylebone. I don't mention the Haymarket, because (though I am going to take that too) it's a mere fleabite.

Are you open to an engagement?

Ever affectionately

CD.

To COUNT D'ORSAY, 10 JUNE 1848*

MS Comte de Gramont.

Devonshire Terrace | Juin 10. 1848.

Mon Cher Ami,

J'ai ete[†4] a la Campagne, depuis deux semaines. Quand je revins chez moi, hier au soir, j'y trouvai nos deux amis, que je reçus avec le plus grand plaisir et qui j'ai mis dans deux positions d'honneur,[†1] à la fois a cause de mon admiration d'eux memes, et de mon amour de l'artiste.

Mille amitiès à Milady, Miss Power, et ma chere petite Marquise![†2]—

Votre affectionate

CHARLES DICKENS

À Monsieur | Le Comte D'Orsay.

To DAVID SCOTT,[†3] 10 JUNE 1848

MS Dickens House.

London, 1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park

Tenth June 1848.

Sir.

I beg to acknowledge the receipt of the invitation with which you have favored me, on behalf of the Committee of the Pudsey[†4] Mechanics Institution. I regret to state, in reply, that I cannot extend the list of public engagements to which I am already pledged.

Your faithful Servant

CHARLES DICKENS

David Scott Esquire

To W. SMITH JR,[†5] 10 JUNE 1848*

MS Dickens House.

London, 1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Tenth June 1848.

Sir.

I beg to acknowledge the receipt of the invitation with which you have honored me on behalf of the Directors of the Sheffield Athenaeum,[†6] to preside at their forthcoming soirée.

I do some violence to my own inclinations, I assure you, in excusing myself from compliance with a requisition so agreeable and interesting to me; but I cannot, remembering my own leisure and occupations, extend the list of public engagements to which I am already pledged.

I remain Sir | Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

W. Smith Esquire Junior.

To MR SCOTT,[†7] ?EARLY JUNE 1848

Mention in To Miss Coutts, 20 June 48. Date: Scott's reply to CD's letter reached the Home by 20 June—"after much pondering", according to CD.

Asking Scott's permission to heighten the fence at the Home.

To ANDREW S. DALGLISH,[†1] 12 JUNE 1848*

MS Folger Shakespeare Library.

London, 1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Monday Twelfth June 1848.

Dear Sir

Dr. Muspratt and other friends of Sheridan Knowles, assure me with such complete confidence, that I may address myself to you without any preface or introduction, and that I may certainly count on your assistance,—that I do not hesitate in acting on their advice. If I trouble you by doing so, I beg you to forgive me, and to blame them.

You are aware, I dare say, that the company of Amateurs connected with Literature and Art, whom I have the pleasure to represent, have been acting at Liverpool and elsewhere in behalf of the Fund "for the endowment of a perpetual Curatorship of Shakespeare's House, to be always held by some one distinguished in Literature and more especially in Dramatic Literature, and to be bestowed in the first instance on Mr. Sheridan Knowles". I should observe that before moving in this matter at all, I obtained from the Shakespeare House Committee, a Minute (which we print at the top of our playbills) distinctly recognizing Knowles's claims to the appointment; and furthermore that I will take excellent care that this money goes to nobody else, by never handing it over (it is in my own possession) for the endowment of any first Curator but Knowles.[†2]

We now propose to play in Edinburgh and in Glasgow.

It would be necessary, with a view to the occupations of some of our company, to play in Glasgow on a Tuesday night, in July—on what particular Tuesday night, I can inform you in my next.[†3] My present object is, to ask you if you would kindly form a committee of the most influential people in the place, under whose auspices our announcement shall be put forth, and whether (as Dr. Muspratt assures me we may) we may count upon you as the Secretary or Treasurer of that Committee?[†4]

Assuming this to be done, I would beg to ask you, and such other gentlemen as you may take counsel with:

1st. What prices may be safely charged to the different parts of the Theatre on such an occasion. What it will be necessary to pay for the hire of the Theatre, completely lighted and worked in all respects, and how much, at the proposed prices, the Theatre will hold.

2ndly. Whether you would recommend Ben Jonson's Comedy of Every Man in his Humour being played, with a Merry farce. Or whether you would give the preference to Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor, and a farce?[†5] On this point, as on the points of prices, announcement, and so forth, I consider your local knowledge quite decisive.

Immediately on receiving your answer, I could send you the form of playbill, with all details—the form of ticket we generally use—and all other means of setting a Glasgow printer to work, and taking the town by storm. This kind assistance of the local Committee has in no case failed to accomplish the object, but without such assistance it would be impossible for me, at so great a distance, to bring the thing to bear with that decisive success, anything short of which, in such a case, is failure.

I shall be very anxious to receive your reply, and shall—on behalf of Knowles—be greatly encouraged, and made sure of a brilliant crowning result to our endeavours in his behalf, if I have the pleasure to learn from you that the project is taken up warmly and with interest by those who are most influential in Glasgow.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Stephenson Daglish[†1] Esquire

To ANDREW S. DALGLISH, 12 JUNE 1848*

MS Professor K. J. Fielding.

London. | Twelfth June 1848.

Dear Sir

Since I addressed you this morning (with the omission, for which I apologize, of a letter in your name) I have seen Mr. Clow[†2] of Liverpool who brought me the enclosed,[†3] which I beg to present to you through the post.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

A. S. Dalglish Esquire

To MARK LEMON, 12 JUNE 1848

MS Benoliel Collection.

Devonshire Terrace | Twelfth June 1848.

My Dear Lemon.

I would have come to you at Whitefriars to day, but between the Scotch correspondence, the Birmingham (where Tuesday the 27th. will be the day) the Leamington (where, it strikes me, our friend Elliston is fooling us) and Shepherd's Bush, I am like an over-driven Bull.

Miss Montague and Ann Romer [†a]and her brother.[†a†4]—Will you write and book them for the Birmingham night, with a possibility of Leamington on the previous Saturday or Monday?

And now we cannot drivel about Leech, but must either have him in, or leave him out. The Birmingham bill is incomplete—the Scotch bills will have to be got ready directly—and it is utterly impossible to go on with the caste,[†1] or to put anything, or arrange anything, or begin anything, or finish anything, in a preposterous state of uncertainty which unhinges each play.[†2] Will you cut this Gordian Knot?

Affectionately Ever
CD.

To H. K. BROWNE, 13 JUNE 1848

MS Berg Collection.

Devonshire Terrace. | Thirteenth June 1848.

My Dear Browne.

A thousand thanks for the Dombey Sketches,[†3] which I shall preserve and transmit as heirlooms.[†4]

This afternoon, or Thursday, I shall be near the whereabout of the boy in the flannel gown,[†5] and will pay him an affectionate visit. But I warn you, now and beforehand (and this is final you'll observe) that you are not a going to back out of the pigmental finishing of said boy, for if ever I had a boy of my own, that boy is

MINE![†6]

And, as the Demon says at the Surrey[†7]

[†a]I claim my Victim.
Ha! Ha! Ha![†a]

At which you will imagine me going down a sulphurous trap, with the boy in my grasp—and you will please not to imagine him merely, in my grasp, but to hand him over.

For which this is your warrant and requirement.

(Signed)
CHARLES DICKENS

Witness
William 卐 Topping his Groom

To E. [D]. DAVIS,[†1] 13 JUNE 1848

Extract in Maggs Bros catalogue No. 451 (1924); MS 2 pp.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 13 June 48; addressed E. B. Davis according to catalogue—a mistake for E. D. Davis.

Your letter bears no date, but I fear that by reason of its having been directed to the Punch office[†2] (with which I have no connexion) and re-posted and re-delivered at my proper address, it may have grown rather old.

I beg . . . to express my regret that I fear it will not be possible for the Amateur Company to visit Newcastle.

To JOHN T. LAWRENCE, 13 JUNE 1848

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds. Address: John T. Lawrence Esquire | Balsall Heath | near Birmingham.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Thirteenth June 1848.

My Dear Sir

Mrs. Dickens and I are both unfeignedly obliged to you and all in your hospitable house for your kind invitation.[†3] I greatly regret, however, that we cannot have the pleasure of accepting it. I never, on these occasions, leave my post of President at the general table; and the habit of on no account departing from any regulation that has been observed among us, alone ensures that unanimity, punctuality, and attention, without which we should be all astray.

No less consideration, I assure you, should deprive me of the pleasure you so kindly propose.

I am delighted to find that we have left so agreeable an impression in Birmingham. I am very confident indeed that our second night's performance (which is certainly a better one) will not disappoint our good friends there.

Mrs. Dickens unites with me in warmest remembrances.

And I am My Dear Sir, with true regard,

Very faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

John T. Lawrence Esquire.

To JOHN LEECH, 13 JUNE 1848

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: John Leech Esquire | 31 Notting Hill Terrace. | Notting Hill.

Devonshire Terrace. | Thirteenth June 1848.

My Dear Leech.

I need not, I am sure, tell you how sorry I have been, both for your absence from the late most pleasant excursion, or for the occasion of it.[†1] Or how very much we all missed you.

I do not write, therefore, on that head, but with a view to the next. And what I am obliged to do, is, to ask you at once to decide whether you will undertake to go, or not. I will shew you the point cannot be left open.—On Tuesday week, there will be another performance at Birmingham. I must send down the complete bill directly. In July there will be performances in Edinburgh and Glasgow. I must send down complete bills there, and have been already asked for them. If you don't go, it will be necessary for me to play Slender, and for Topham[†2] to play Shallow.[†3] I cannot ask him to study Shallow on the chance, nor can the dresses be altered on the chance. So the whole proceedings are really at a stand-still, and they must be wound up and set going. The interval is short—Topham has never been in the play—the bills must be sent off—and if changes are to be made, it is indispensable that they should be made at once. If made, they cannot be changed again.

Nobody but you, can decide. If you feel the least uneasiness or doubt about your little child, however, then I would urge you to abandon the thought of going, for the sake of the play itself—with which we really could do nothing if you came in again, and failed us at last. If you feel it, according to all human calculation and your own resolution, safe to undertake to go, then rush into the arms of the Company as its long-lost offspring. But the essential thing, is, that one way or other the matter be made certain, and nothing left in peril. Therefore I ask you to decide it finally, and so as to leave us no reasonable likelihood or chance of discomfiture.

Always My Dear Leech | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Leech Esquire

To CHARLES STEWART,[†4] 13 JUNE 1848*

MS Private.

London, Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Thirteenth June 1848.

Sir.

I beg to assure you very sincerely (though in few words) that I respect the motive which has induced you to write to me—that I esteem your confidence—and that I would help you to a publisher if I could. But when I assure you that

I receive similar communications by hundreds, you will be at no loss to understand why I have long since forborne to ask any favor of booksellers in this regard, or to take charge of any Manuscript.

I am Sir | Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Stewart Esquire

To FRANK STONE, 13 JUNE 1848*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Devonshire Terrace. | Thirteenth June 1848

My Dear Stone

Andrew[†1] is now at Mr. Topham's service. Will you undertake to tell him so, with my regards, adding that I hope to let him know, within two days, whether Shallow will be also at liberty.

I will alter Love Law and Physic immediately. Will you ask Mr. Topham if he will come here to compare parts (the alterations, as they concern him, are slight, but will exclude one short scene) on Thursday evening at ½ past 7. We can then arrange a rehearsal of the piece, for next week.

Faithfully Always
CD.

Frank Stone Esquire

To MRS TAGART, 13 JUNE 1848

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Devonshire Terrace. | Thirteenth June 1848.

My Dear Mrs. Tagart.

I am very much occupied myself, with this matter for Sheridan Knowles, and must write briefly.

I cannot, of course, speak decisively as to the feeling that may exist among Hunt's literary friends in reference to this new application,[†2] nor have I had an opportunity of interchanging a word with any one on the subject, since I saw you on Sunday. My impression is, however, that it will be extremely difficult if not absolutely impossible to call forth any general answer among them to the present appeal. My own conviction of the hopelessness of the five hundred pounds required, doing any real service to any one on earth, even if the sum were raised tomorrow, is so strong that I do not feel justified in drawing on any literary man who can ill afford the money, by putting down my own name for £5. Nor could I conscientiously do anything in such a case, but bring up the rear of the subscription if it approached the desired amount—and then in spite of my persuasion—my certainty—that it is an absurdity, and that, for any good it will do Hunt, it might as well be left alone. This letter is, of course, between yourself and Mr. Tagart and me. As to what the Northampton gentleman writes of "debts unavoidably contracted before the recent grants", I can only say that I was one of some five or six who, not quite a year ago, when we were about to act those plays in the country, did, again and again, ask Hunt what money would set him clear of the world. Advancing on what we could get out of him, considerably, we put that sum at £250. Those £250 were got, and paid to him. We went into debt £50 to make up the money. For that sum we are responsible, and it is not paid yet, out of our acting proceeds.

Mrs. Dickens and Georgy unite with me in best regards. We very much regret that on Wednesday the 21st. we are hopelessly engaged.

Dear Mrs. Tagart | Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN GREEN,[†1] 14 JUNE 1848*

MS Royal Literary Fund.

Devonshire Terrace | Fourteenth June 1848.

Sir

I beg to thank you for the little book,[†2] and to add, in reply to your letter, that I shall attend the Committee of the Literary Fund today, and should in any case have considered it my duty to state what I know of your misfortunes[†3] and deserts.

Your faithful Servant

CHARLES DICKENS

John Green Esquire

To [CHARLES] HERBERT, 14 JUNE 1848*

MS New York Public Library. Address: probably Charles Herbert, as on 22 Dec 48.

Devonshire Terrace, London. | Fourteenth June 1848.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr Herbert, and begs to say that his vote at the next election of the Orphan Working School,[†4] is already promised in behalf of a very deserving case.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 14 JUNE 1848

Extract in J. F. Drake catalogue No. 189 (1927); MS (3rd person) 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, London, 14 June 48.

Submitting his vote in behalf of an applicant to the Orphan Working School.

To CHARLES EVANS, 15 JUNE 1848

Extract in N, II, 101 (from catalogue source); dated Devonshire Terrace, 15 June 48.

I presume that all you want for the bills, in addition to what I have already sent you, is the cast of the Merry Wives, which you will find on the other side. Will you drop the following into their proper places in the bill—first appearing the leader of the orchestra [here follows the list of music to be played].[†1] . . . Leech, as you will observe, proposes to play. I will enter the Prompter's guinea, agreeably to your directions.

To JOHN LEECH, 15 JUNE 1848

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: John Leech Esquire | Notting Hill Terrace.

Devonshire Terrace. | Fifteenth June 1848. | Thursday.

My Dear Leech.

I have sent down the Birmingham bill (Tuesday week[†2] not Tuesday) with your name for Slender. In the Scotch bills, I have put myself down for Slender, and omitted you.

Faithfully Ever

CD.

John Leech Esquire.

To [CHARLES EVANS], 15 JUNE 1848*

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel. Address: clearly to Evans (see To Evans, 17 June, final sentence).

Devonshire Terrace | Thursday Night Fifteenth June | 1848.

My Dear Sir

We have made an important addition to our company, which necessitates an alteration in the bill. In Love, Law, and Physic, Andrew, instead of being played by Mr. Lewes, is played by

MR. F. W. TOPHAM

Will you kindly see to this alteration being made?

In haste Faithfully Yours

CD.

To ANDREW S. DALGLISH, 16 JUNE 1848

MS Mr Robert K. Black.

1 Devonshire Terrace, London | Sixteenth June 1848.

Dear Sir

I beg to thank you for your ready and kind letter. I saw Mr. Donald[†1] yesterday, and we had a long conversation together.

We have never paid more than £50 for a provincial Theatre for one night—and for Theatres much larger than that of Glasgow. This sum has always included Carpenters, door keepers, gas, and band—except such additions as we have thought fit to make to the regular Orchestra, at our own expence.

It is quite clear, I take it, that we are at the mercy of this Mr. Alexander,[†2] and must make (through you) the best terms that we can. But I strongly recommend that the Sum paid him should have no reference whatever to the amount received, but should be agreed upon beforehand, and positively determined.[†3] Also I would recommend that he be as far as possible disconnected from the proceedings of the night. The less we have to do with him, the better; and for the Stage preparations and arrangements, Mr. Willmott (Mr. Macready's Stage Director at Drury Lane and Covent Garden) will come down a day, or two, beforehand.

I cannot positively name the day of performance I would propose, in this letter; but I think, and am almost sure, it will be Tuesday July 17th.[†4] Tomorrow, or at latest on Monday, I will let you know decisively.

Now, if we acted a second night, it must be (with a complete change of performance) on the following Thursday. But I would advise, if I may, that no hint whatever, be thrown out, anywhere, of this second night, or it will certainly injure the first. The having a second night at all, will rest entirely with you and the Committee. If you should find the feeling, and demand for tickets for the first night, so strong as to induce you to think a second night would be certainly successful, I will take measures for being ready for it, on any hint of such a probability from you.[†5]

I feel almost confident that at the Liverpool prices the Glasgow house will not[†6] hold £600, or anything near that sum.[†7] An immense Theatre at Liverpool, crammed to the roof, did not hold £500. I believe this statement to be a part of Mr. Alexander's smartness.

In my next, I will send you the bill and ticket. I shall be very curious to know what you settle with the Manager.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Andrew S. Dalglish Esquire

To D. M. MOIR,[†1] 17 JUNE 1848

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Address: D. M. Moir Esquire | Musselburgh | N.B.

London, 1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Seventeenth June 1848.

My Dear Moir.

When I look at your letter, and see "18 Feb" for the date, I become so red in the face that if you were by, I think you would treat me for apoplexy. And yet I have been, ever since its receipt, so occupied in one way or other that although I have been thinking of it almost every day, I have never laid violent hands upon a pen, to answer it.

—Because I have always had the intention of writing at such tremendous length! But I never will cherish such an idea again, for nothing leads so surely to interminable delay. And therefore I write at anything but tremendous length now.

Your pleasant account of yourself and your family and your life, has interested me extremely. And though I grudge any occupation of your time that prevents the devotion of your genius to Literature, even I cannot regret its being so well employed.

My oldest daughter is little more than half as old as yours, and she has one sister and five brothers representing a little flight of stairs of which the bottom step is one year old. They are all well, all good, and all happy. I am not rich, for the great expences of my position have been mine alone from the first, and the Lion's share of its great profits has been gorged by the booksellers. But I have changed all that, within these three years or so,—have worked back half of all my copyrights which had gone from me before I knew their worth[†2]—and have got, by some few thousand pounds (I could count the thousands on one hand) ahead of the world. Dombey has been the greatest success I have ever achieved. Although Literature as a profession has no distinct status in England, I am bound to say that what I experience of its recognition, all through Society, in my own person, is honorable, ample, and independent. I find that to make no exacting assertion of its claims, on the one hand—and steadily to take my stand by it, on the other, as a worthy calling, and my sole fortune—is to do right, and to take sufficient rank. Go where I will, in out of the way places and odd corners of the country, I always find something of personal affection in people whom I have never seen, mixed up with my public reputation. This is the best part of it, and it makes me very happy.

One phase of this I have seen so often, and felt so much, that I can't help giving you a little illustration of it. I was down at Leeds some months ago, on an errand similar to that which took me to Glasgow; and when the Meeting was over, the people cheered very much. One gentleman on the platform, in particular, when they had all done and I was going out, cried very earnestly for "another cheer for the Author of Little Nell". When I got home to the house I was staying at, I asked the lady of it if that gentleman had lost a child, ever. She said yes, a little daughter—lately—and that he had held to that story as a sort of comfort, ever since. Poor Basil Hall lost a little boy for whom he had a great love—I think his insanity began about that time—and he wrote out all the secret grief and trial of his heart to me, wherever he went afterwards.[†1] [†a]Always referring to the same book.[†a]

—There! After so much about myself, I begin to be afraid that you will repent of having been so confidential to me. And yet it comes so naturally, after another reading of your letter, that I don't find my apoplectic symptom return, now that I have looked it over, again.

I think, about the middle of July, of paying a hasty visit to Glasgow and Edinburgh. The Amateur Company whereof I am Manager are coming down to perform there, in furtherance of a scheme for the benefit of Sheridan Knowles, who greatly needs it. I shall have little time at my own disposal, but I hope I shall see you—and I hope you will see us too.

There is nothing new in London. Chartist fears and rumours shake us,[†2] now and then, but I suspect the Government make the most of such things for their own purpose, and know better than anybody else how little vitality there is in them.[†3] Have you read Forster's Goldsmith, and, if so, don't you think it very good? When will there be no patients in Musselburgh and thereabouts? And then we will smoke a Cigar together, on the top of Saint Pauls. If in Autumn, all the better, just when she > —passes, bright at first

> In eye, and firm of step, her cincture rich,
> Of wheat-ear and of vine-wreath intertwined.

—as an obscure poet writes.[†4]

Mrs. Dickens begs to be kindly remembered to Mrs. Moir[†5] and to you. I am always, with affectionate sincerity,

My Dear Moir | Faithfully Your friend
CHARLES DICKENS

D. M. Moir Esquire

To CHARLES EVANS, 17 JUNE 1848

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday Seventeenth June | 1848.

My Dear Sir

I think—I am not sure, but I think—that if you look at my rough draught again, you will find that Mr. Cole is down for Nym, and nobody for Bardolph. My brother Augustus does not come this second time, and the truth is, I really don't know at this moment who will play Bardolph. Mr. Cole has done so, as yet, but I think he will prefer Nym, as he once expostulated with me, very plaintively, on the subject of wearing Bardolph's red nose.[†1]

The Company dine here to-day, in a body; and I will then settle these points, and write to you by Monday Morning's post.

The Page and John Rugby, we have never "billed" in the Country, as they are generally done by local satellites.[†2]

You have received my correction, touching Mr. F. W. Topham?

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles M. Evans Esquire

To F. W. TOPHAM, 18 JUNE 1848†

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: F. W. Topham Esquire.

Devonshire Terrace | Sunday Eighteenth June 1848.

My Dear Sir

[†a]In consequence of one of my brothers not being able to go to Birmingham, the part of Nym in the Merry Wives, is vacant.[†3] I hope you will consent to play it.[†4] What there is of it, is (as you know) good; and there is not a great quantity of words to learn, as he disappears early in the play.[†a]

This bears reference to Birmingham. The great Shallow question still remains unsettled as to Scotland.

I am obliged to fill up the Birmingham bill immediately, and shall feel it a very great relief and assistance, if I may set you down for Nym as well as Andrew.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

F. W. Topham Esquire

To MR CLARIDGE,[†5] 20 JUNE 1848

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Devonshire Terrace. | Twentieth June 1848.

Mr. Charles Dickens is much obliged to Mr. Claridge for the offer of Lord Byron's flute.[†6] But as Mr. Dickens cannot play that instrument himself, and has nobody in his house who can, he begs to decline the purchase, with thanks.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 20 JUNE 1848*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Tuesday Evening | Twentieth June 1848.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I was out at Shepherd's Bush to day, and there found a communication from Mr. Scott, who, after much pondering, has arrived at the conclusion that he can just bear the addition of a lattice-work, two feet high, to the present fence. How, or by what process, he got to that express measurement, I don't know. But he intimates that one additional inch would be the death of him.

I suppose you will think it best to accept this condition? It would be a great convenience and improvement, and would effect much that we desire, though not all. I said, in my letter, three or four feet, but that seems hopeless.

Will you tell me what you decide on? I shall be there again, on Thursday between 12 and 2, and will see to the change being made, if you desire it.

Always most faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To MISS FANNY KELLY, 20 JUNE 1848*

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel. Address: Miss Kelly | 73 Dean Street | Soho.

Devonshire Terrace. | Tuesday Night | Twentieth June 1848.

Dear Miss Kelly.

We act again at Birmingham (the Merry Wives) on Tuesday the 27th. and if Miss Kenworthy will arrange to leave town on Monday the 26th. in the afternoon, I shall be happy to pay her expences for herself and her father.

Our trip to Glasgow and Edinburgh will take place next month. We shall probably leave London on the 15th. of July.

We shall want to rehearse a condensation of Love Law and Physic, at your Theatre next Friday Evening at 7. But Mr. Lemon and I will be there for our 2 o'Clock in the Morning,[†1] at 6.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS ANNE ROMER, 20 JUNE 1848

MS Bernard Halliday.

Devonshire Terrace. | Twentieth June 1848.

My Dear Miss Romer.

Will you and your brother appear at Dee's Royal Hotel, Birmingham, on Monday Evening the 26th. preparatory to rehearsing at the Theatre next morning and playing at night?

I have every reason to believe that we shall start for Scotland, on Saturday the 15th. of July, and be absent about five days.

Believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Anne Romer.

Will you provide the parts for your own and your brother's songs in the Merry Wives,[†1] for the Birmingham orchestra.

To ANDREW S. DALGLISH, 21 JUNE 1848

MS Folger Shakespeare Library.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Twenty First June 1848.

My Dear Sir

I beg to acknowledge the receipt of yours of the 19th. informing me of the terms on which you have engaged the Theatre. I subscribe to them very readily—having no choice—but am bound to say, as the representative of the body concerned and the object to be obtained, that they are much higher than the charges for larger theatres at Manchester, Liverpool, Birmingham, and London itself. That they are, in short, higher than I have ever paid.[†2]

———

I write thus far, for you to read to the implacable Alexander the Little, if you think right; but I must break off here, to say that I laughed heartily on receipt of your letter this morning, and that the picture of the Manager and his greatest chum nearly coming to single combat, has been really too much for my gravity (which is far from imperturbable) ever since.

I hardly know whether I ought, in strictness, to trouble you, or Mr. Lamond,[†3] with what follows. But to make it as plain as possible, I will put each matter under its separate head.

THE SECOND NIGHT.[†4]

depends entirely on the discretion of the Committee. If they decide in favor of a second performance, on the Thursday, I would propose to play "USED UP,"[†5] LOVE LAW AND PHYSIC,[†5] or TURNING THE TABLES[†5]—I am not quite sure which[†6]—and TWO O'CLOCK IN THE MORNING.[†5†7] The bill for that night, I could send down by return of post, at any time.

BILLS AND TICKETS FOR THE FIRST NIGHT,[†4]

I enclose a draught of the Bill (with one blank for Nym, which must remain in the first impression) and also the form of ticket we generally use, which is printed on Card, and cut as this form is. The ticket-taker at the door, tears off the smaller part, and gives it back to the person admitted. It is then the place-keeper's authority and reference, for giving him his seat. The same form of ticket, with the substitution of the word "Pit" for "Box", admits to the Pit, and so on to all parts of the house. It is a great convenience to have each description of Ticket, printed on a different colored card. As, red for boxes, Yellow for Pit, Green for Upper Boxes, &c. You will observe that there is printing on the back.

BAND[†1]

I felt a cold chill when I found they were amateurs, as the tendency of Amateur Bands is to be so extensively musical—which you have evidently experienced. But I have left blanks in the bill for the stipulation of their two Overtures; and it may keep them down a little to be forewarned that we are always very quick between the acts, and generally "ring up", within five minutes.

POSTING BILLS &C.[†1]

The Committee will of course do what they think best, and what they consider needful, in this regard. But I shall feel personally obliged to them if they will have the kindness to give no greater prominence to my name, than to the names of all the other gentlemen concerned.

I think this is all I have occasion to trouble you with at present—and I am afraid you will say it is enough too.

I am My Dear Sir | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Andrew Stephenson Dalglish Esquire.

To H. P. SMITH, 21 JUNE 1848

MS University of California, Los Angeles.

Devonshire Terrace. | Twenty First June 1848.

My Dear Smith

I am your man—and Kate is your woman—for the first of July.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

H. P. Smith Esquire.

To PETER CUNNINGHAM, 22 JUNE 1848

MS Berg Collection.

Devonshire Terrace. | Twenty Second June 1848.
Thursday Morning

My Dear Cunningham

I shall be at Miss Kelly's tomorrow Evening, from 7 to 8, and shall hope to see you there, for a little conversation touching the Railroad arrangements.

All preparations completed in Edinburgh and Glasgow. There will be a great deal of money taken—especially at the latter place.[†1]

I wish I could persuade you—seriously—to come into training for Nym in the Merry Wives.[†2] He is never on by himself, and all he has to do, is good, without being difficult. If you could screw yourself up to the doing of that part in Scotland, it would prevent our taking some new man, and would cover you (all over) with glory.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

P.S. I am fully persuaded that an amateur manager has more correspondence than the Home Secretary.

To ANGUS FLETCHER, 22 JUNE 1848

MS Comtesse de Suzannet.

Devonshire Terrace. | Twenty Second June 1848.

My Dear Sir

I am greatly obliged to you for your letter, received last night. The cordial response we have received both from Edinburgh and Glasgow (where they are making great preparations) assures me of a glorious conclusion to our exertions for Knowles. He needs them sorely, poor fellow!

To make my letter the clearer and easier for reference, I will write what I have to write, under separate heads; premising that we are obliged to make the night, Monday the 17th.

PLAYBILLS[†3]

I send you the draught of the bill.[†4] You will observe that one part (Nym) is left blank. It must remain so, in the first impression, as I am not quite certain who will play it, in the Northern Expedition.[†5] As soon as I know, you shall know. Anything the Committee may wish to add, about the distribution of tickets, had best be added where I have left the blank for the prices. You will order such posting bills to be printed for the Walls and so forth, as your local knowledge suggests the necessity of. I would merely ask that no greater prominence is given to my name, than to those of the other gentlemen concerned—unless it should be deemed indispensably necessary.[†6] We usually put at the bottom of the bills and tickets EVENING DRESS[†3] but that you will insert or omit as you think right.

TICKETS.[†1]

I send you the form of ticket, I have always hitherto adopted. It is printed on a card, which is cut as this rough draught is. The ticket-taker tears off the smaller portion, and returns it (the bit torn off) to the person entering; it then becomes the authority and reference to the place-keeper to give him or her, that particular seat. The same form, with the substitution of "Pit" for "Box", or whatever it may be, answers for all parts of the House. You will observe that there is some printing, on the back of the card.[†2]

It is a great convenience and avoidance of confusion to use a different colored card for each description of places. As, red for the pit, green for the lower boxes, yellow for the upper boxes, &c. Every seat, except in the galleries, should be numbered.

BAND.[†3]

It will require to be a larger and better one, I imagine, than the usual Orchestra of the Theatre. But the Leader will undertake to augment and make it an efficient one, if he be spoken to, and authorized to do so. That will not be very expensive. I have selected the Overtures (subject to his assent) and put them in the bill.[†4]

STAGE.[†3]

Mr. Willmot (Mr. Macready's Stage Director at Drury Lane and Covent Garden) will make an appointment to meet the Master Carpenter, Property Man &c, a day or two beforehand, at the Theatre, and will bring his Scene and Property Plots with him. Also a list of the required Supers &c. This is a babylonic kind of jargon to read, but Murray will understand it, and it will set his mind at rest, as to that part of the proceedings. I shall ask him, [†a]through you,[†a] as an especial favor, to take care for us that the Stage is kept perfectly clear, and that nobody (himself excepted, of course) comes behind, who is not engaged on the night.

Looking over your kind letter, and thanking you very earnestly for the trouble you are taking with so much cordiality, I see nothing else that I need mention, except the Committee. I will tell you candidly how this point stands on our side—Wherever we have been, on a similar occasion, the first men in the place have always connected themselves with the occasion. And this, my band, I know, feel a kind of attention and recognition,[†5] which is of a different sort of importance from any amount of attraction that the names of such a Committee would present to the local satellites. Therefore, I do not hesitate to say, that they would greatly esteem an Edinburgh Committee-ship, and missing a general public knowledge that there was an influential Committee, would beset me with enquiries why

Edinburgh was different in this regard from all other places. If it be practicable therefore to make it notorious in the place that the influential and worthy take an interest in the arrangements, and are not aloof from their general direction, I would ask that much of my friends, as urgently as I may.[†1]

Gordon[†2] I shall be truly delighted to see. I have remembered him well, ever since—and his speech too.[†3] I called at his house when I was last in Edinburgh. But he was—as a wonderfully stalwart and handsome little boy who came running into the entry, informed me—"joost at Doomfries".—I think it was Dumfries at least.

The prices are capital;[†4] and everything else seems, like the general arrangements of Goldsmith's Bear-Leader, "in a concatenation accordingly".[†5] I really am very much indebted to you for your promptitude and kindness. And I shall make your old Master[†6] happy, by telling him how you end your letter.

Believe me always | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Angus Fletcher Esquire

To ANGUS FLETCHER, 22 JUNE 1848*

MS Dr A. G. M. Severn.

Devonshire Terrace | Thursday Twenty Second June | 1848.

My Dear Sir

Since despatching my gigantic envelope, I have received yours of yesterday. I think the "Merry Wives" will "go" best. It is prettier to look at, and a lighter play. Therefore, as you leave so much of the choice to me, I do not make any change in that wise.

I have only time to add that nothing shall induce me to blow you up, and that Murray behaves like a gentleman, and unlike the genus Manager.

In haste to save the post | Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Angus Fletcher Esquire

To JOHN LEECH, 22 JUNE [1848]

MS Benoliel Collection. Date: 22 June was Thursday in 1848; year supported by handwriting. Address: John Leech Esquire | 31 Notting Hill Terrace | Notting Hill.

Devonshire Terrace. | Thursday Twenty Second June

My Dear Leech.

My mind misgives me that I said Saturday today, for our appointment. I meant Monday of course, in any case.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To C. D. DONALD, 23 JUNE 1848*

MS Fales Collection, New York University Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Third June 1848.

My Dear Sir

Will you give Mrs. Dickens and myself the pleasure of seeing you at dinner next Thursday at half past Six? We shall be merely a family circle.

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

C. D. Donald Esquire Junr.

To W. C. MACREADY, 23 JUNE 1848*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace. | Twenty Third June 1848.

My Dear Macready

I am afraid the Sadlers Wells performance cannot be brought to bear. When "the Company" dined here last Saturday, I did not read your letter, nor did I say to anyone but Lemon what was in the wind. I sounded others, however, and found them so plainly of his mind that there should not be another performance in London this year, and that it would be objectionable to fly immediately from this Knowles idea to another, however meritorious, that I feel sure it is no go.[†1]

I would rather you decided whether I shall still propose the thing, plainly.

Ever Yours affectionately

CHARLES DICKENS

W. C. Macready Esquire

To PETER CUNNINGHAM, 24 JUNE 1848*

MS Berg Collection.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Fourth June 1848.

My Dear Cunningham.

I don't think any amount of Champagne will produce a generous glow behind the white waistcoat of the Giant Humbug of England.[†2] But he must be tried; and if you will try him, it will be a great service.[†3] Saturday the 15th.—by the Express Train—to Edinburgh—will be the day and time.

Brooks,[†4] I will see to, forthwith.

I have no doubt whatever, of a great success in Scotland.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Peter Cunningham Esquire.

To THOMAS MITTON, [?JUNE 1848]

Mention in To Mitton, 1 July. Date: Mitton had presumably replied to it during the last week of June.

A letter unintentionally upsetting Mitton—partly through a mention of Forster.[†1]

To W. C. MACREADY, 27 JUNE 1848*

MS Victoria Art Gallery, Bath.

Theatre Birmingham | Tuesday Twenty Seventh June 1848.

My Dear Macready

Lemon tells me that Compton is not at Liverpool.[†2] He is in London, and will be best addressed (Lemon says) under cover to him (Lemon) Punch Office Fleet Street.[†3]

Affectionately always | (in great haste)
CHARLES DICKENS

W. C. Macready Esquire

To W. C. MACREADY, 27 JUNE 1848*

MS Morgan Library.

Birmingham | Tuesday Twenty Seventh June 1848

My Dear Macready

This is letter No. 2. Since No. 1, little Miss Anne Romer has asked me if you would like her to come to London to sing Angels Ever bright and fair,[†4] on the 18th.[†5] If you say yea, I will conclude.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To W. C. MACREADY, 29 JUNE 1848*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Thursday Twenty Ninth June | 1848.

My Dear Macready.

I remembered, immediately after writing to you, that 'Angels ever bright and fair', would not be sung.

Coming home last night, I found the enclosed from Miss Cushman,[†1] which I ought to answer immediately. I suppose I may say "yes", to the question of expences?[†2]

Ever Yours affectionately

CD.

W. C. Macready Esquire.
Return me Miss Cushman's note.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 29 JUNE 1848*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace. | Twenty Ninth June 1848.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I should like to know whether your genius can make out Mr. Scott's meaning. Mine can't. He is one of the most abstruse letter writers I ever had to deal with.

I enclose his note,[†3] which, in its general style, is not unlike that which was sent to Lord Monteagle about the gunpowder plot.[†4]

I also send you another letter, written by a Middlesex Magistrate, and (strange as it is to say so, in that connexion)[†5] a very learned and good gentleman, formerly a tutor at Oxford.[†6] He knows something of one or two of our protegées, and the letter is so clearly designed to reach you, that I send it. I have not the least interest in, or knowledge of, the case; but I know he is to be relied upon.

This is sad sickness at Shepherd's Bush, whither I am now bound. If I do not find you there, shall you be at home at 2 or 3 tomorrow?

Dear Miss Coutts | Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 30 JUNE 1848*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace. | Friday Thirtieth June 1848.

My Dear Miss Coutts

Tomorrow at 4, I will be at the Home.

Faithfully Yours Ever
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To JOHN HULLAH, 30 JUNE 1848*

MS Chas. J. Sawyer Ltd.

Devonshire Terrace. | Thirtieth June 1848.

My Dear Hullah

You know perhaps that the Queen has commanded a complimentary benefit to Macready, which will take place on Monday July the 10th. at Drury Lane, when she will go in State.[†1]

It has occurred to me, in assisting to make the arrangements, that it might possibly suit your views to form a chorus of your people[†2] for God save the Queen, if the fact of its being yours were put in the bill. Benedict,[†3] who is the Conductor on the occasion, thinks it would be very grand, and jumps at the idea.

Braham[†4] and others[†5] sing the solo parts.

What do you say? I may be altogether mistaken as far as the practicability of the thing, and your liking it, are concerned. If so, there is no harm done,

I know. If not, and you approve of setting that "dainty dish before the Queen",[†1] the powers that be, for the occasion, will be delighted to have it.[†2]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

John Hullah Esquire

To MARK LEMON, 30 JUNE 1848

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

Devonshire Terrace. | Thirtieth June 1848.

My Dear Lemon

If you will repay Webster the £2..0..0, I will repay you when I see you.

I enclose your part in Used Up.[†3] When will it suit you to rehearse? Could you come up and dine with us [alone][†4] at half past 5 today? We would fix Rehearsals then.

Mr. Ray[†5] may possibly be wanted as an Actor, but in Prompterian capacities we must of course use Murray's people. I send you back his letter, and have made a note of his address.

Sir James Clark[†6] tells me that my sister cannot possibly live many weeks. I have seen him this morning.

Affectionately always
CD.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, JUNE 1848

Mention in Ernest Dawson catalogue, March 1933; MS 1 p.; dated June 1848.

Mentioning his daughter Katey.

To W. WILLIAMS,[†7] [?JUNE 1848]

Mention in To Williams, 25 July 48.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, [?SUMMER 1848]*

MS Morgan Library. Date: Signature suggests Summer 1848.

Devonshire Terrace | Friday Night

My Dear Miss Coutts.

Until twenty minutes before Four tomorrow (when I am going to see some young women proposed to us from the Magdalen) I shall be here, and delighted to see you.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To MARK LEMON, [?SUMMER 1848]

MS Benoliel Collection. Date: Initials suggest Summer 1848.

Devonshire Terrace. | Monday.

My Dear Lemon.

O'Wednesday Morning—I'm your man and will be at home—and as you've often called my voice a bird's, I hope you'll like the sound of it then.

Ever Yours
CD.

July

To MRS HENRY BURNETT, 1 JULY 1848*

MS Mr Edward S. Moore III.

Devonshire Terrace. | First July 1848. | Saturday.

My Dear Fanny.

I send this out, by father, who I understand is coming to see you today.[†1]

There is a certain Dr. Hastings[†2] whom I know, who has been so extraordinarily successful in affections of the mucous membrane, and has done such wonderful things so easily, that I am bent upon his seeing you. He is a quiet kind creature, and you will like him the moment you see him. I have arranged for his coming out to you tomorrow afternoon at 3—which he has promised to do very readily. I shall be greatly disappointed, if he does not almost immediately relieve your cough.

I called upon my acquaintance Mr. Kesteven[†3]—the medical man in your neighbourhood—yesterday. Pray give him an encouraging reception when he comes. He will not trouble you in the least, and will not obtrude his visits I know.

I shall come over tomorrow, before Dr. Hastings arrives. Mind. I have perfect faith in his doing you good. He has succeeded to Sir James Clark over and over again, to my certain and absolute knowledge, and has done wonders where Clark really did nothing. If I were not sure of this, I shouldn't care about him at all.

Ever affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Burnett.

To MRS COWDEN CLARKE, 1 JULY 1848.

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds. Address: Mrs. Cowden Clarke | Craven Hill Cottage | Bayswater.

Devonshire Terrace. | First July 1848.

My Dear Mrs. Clarke.

I enclose the part I spoke of, in Used Up.[†1]

Will you meet the rest of the Dramatis Personae here, to read the play and compare the parts on Monday Evening at 7.

Faithfully Yours always
The implacable Manager.
Mrs. Cowden Clarke.

To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, 1 JULY 1848

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel.

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday First July 1848.

My Dear George.

Whichever of these two enclosed parts in Used up, you don't undertake, Lemon will. Choose for yourself. The blacksmith John Ironbrace, is a rough bare-armed strong fellow, always in a passion. Sir Adonis Leech is a middle-aged dandy, with no heart and a mighty appetite. You will observe that there are a good many words in Ironbrace, and that there is not a very long time to study them in.[†2]

Will you come here, on Monday evening at 7, to read the play and compare the parts—bringing both these MSS with you.

Ever Yours
CD.

To ROBERT LAMOND,[†1] 1 JULY 1848

Extract in N, II, 107 (from catalogue source); dated Devonshire Terrace, First July 1848

I think your [prices][†2] excellent,[†3] and hope the Glasgow public will think so too. . . . I shall be interested in hearing how the tickets go off.[†4] Mrs. Dickens and I both regretted when we came to town on Wednesday night, to find your second night annihilating your first.

To OSSIAN[†5] MACPHERSON,[†6] 1 JULY 1848

Mention in Rosenbach Co., Catalogue of Rare Books of Six Centuries, 1935; MS 1 p.; dated 1 July 48.

Saying that he will be very happy to become a subscriber for a copy of Macpherson's book.[†7]

To THOMAS MITTON, 1 JULY 1848*

MS Berg Collection.

Devonshire Terrace. | Saturday First July 1848.

My Dear Mitton.

I have been out of town, and am only just now in receipt of your letter.

Thompson's cheque for £25,[†8] safely received.

It grieves me truly, to find that you have taken my letter so much to heart.[†9] I had not the least idea or intention of giving you a moment's pain. I wrote what was on my mind, simply because it was there, and, once discharged of it, thought no more about it. I meant to write most kindly, and really believed, I had done so. Pray think no more of it. This is not a world in which there is time enough for any real coldness or indifference between such old friends. Nothing was more remote from my intention than to engender any. And when you speak of estrangement between us, do not, I entreat you, suppose that in this house there is a grain of ill-will felt towards you. The truth is quite the contrary. And in regard to Forster I can solemnly assure you that in all these years your name has never been mentioned between us, except when he has asked me how and where you were, or what you were doing. That is the utmost and the plainest truth. If you came here oftener, or proposed to come here oftener, there is not the substance of a straw in your way.

I never wrote anything more unreservedly in my life, than I write these words.

There has been an oven erected at Shepherd's Bush, for baking bread. It is not in the house, but in a coach-house adjoining. Miss Coutts has an idea that it ought to be mentioned in the policy of Fire Insurance. If she be right, will you cause it to be done?

Ever Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

I fear that poor Fanny is certainly dying, and not by very slow degrees.

To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, 3 JULY 1848

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Third July 1848

My Dear George.

Your part—Your part! Send me your part, that I may compare it tonight. There may be ten thousand mistakes in it, for anything I know.

Faithfully Ever

CD.

To W. C. MACREADY, 3 JULY 1848*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Third July 1848.

My Dear Macready.

As soon as you can let us have the complete cast,[†1] do so. We want to get out a full bill on Wednesday, if possible.

And I wish you would tell Willmott to send me a list of Rehearsals, in order that I may know your (and his) whereabout, if I have anything to communicate.

Further.—Will you give me a list of any names on your or Mrs. Macready's list, for the Stage.[†1]

Since I intimated to you the other day that I had doubts of my being glad to receive the Queen, even if she were content to be so received, I have considered the matter, and am quite clear that as I have never been to Court, or presented myself before her either in my public capacity or as a private gentleman, it would not be becoming or agreeable to me to claim her recognition on such an occasion. Forster has undertaken to find Bulwer, and ascertain whether he will receive her—and, if he will, whether D'Eyncourt[†2] will join him. But I confess to you, I very much doubt Bulwer's assenting, and do not think it at all probable.

I shall probably know that, tomorrow. In the event of his declining—I suppose there is no alternative but Mitchell,[†3] and somebody belonging to the Theatre?[†4]

What do you say?

Affectionately always

CHARLES DICKENS

I have begged them at the Chamberlains Office, to give Chapman their final instructions about the Suite[†5].

To JOSEPH WATSON,[†6] 3 JULY 1848*

MS Mrs S. S. Clephan. Address: Joseph Watson Esquire | Newcastle on Tyne.

Third July 1848.[†7]

Dear Sir.

I am exceedingly sorry that I cannot have the gratification of accepting the invitation with which you honor me, in terms so obliging and agreeable.

The occasion, and the great objects it cannot fail to advance, suggest to me many reasons for feeling the greatest reluctance in declining your proposal.[†8]

But my intended journey to Scotland involves already, quite as much occupation as I can, in any reason, bind myself to; and on my return home I am going into the country with my family, and shall not, for some months, make any public engagement.

I am Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MARK LEMON, 4 JULY 1848

MS Benoliel Collection.

Devonshire Terrace | Tuesday Fourth July 1848.

My Dear Lemon

I will write to McGregor today, and give him such recommendation of Mr. Dives[†1] as your testimony warrants.

George holds on by the blacksmith. Consequently, I send you the beau.[†2] We compared parts last night, and the first rehearsal is called for Friday at 7, at Miss Kelly's.

Dr. Hastings went out to my poor sister, by appointment, on Sunday last. She was greatly pleased with him, and impressed with a great liking for his manner and a strong belief in him. He said immediately on coming out, that Sir James Clark was quite right. That it would be monstrous in himself if he held out the least hope. That the disease must be fatal, and was too far gone to admit of any chance of recovery. He prescribed for her, some rare combination of things (which could only be got at Bell's in Oxford Street) and said it would probably diminish the cough, promote rest at night, and stimulate the appetite. It was quite impossible, he said, that she could live through the summer, unless this medicine worked some very complete and extraordinary effect,—of which he was not at all sanguine. He made no appointment to see her again (evidently considering it altogether useless) but I have thought it so important to her hope and peace that she should not think he too had given her up, that I have since arranged for his seeing her again, next Sunday.

So runs the World away!—[†3]

Compton wouldn't play for Macready under Ten Pounds—and he gets it.[†4] I can't make out whether Webster is a knave or a fool; but certainly his proceedings about that benefit of his, savor very much of the latter quality. Macready is all aghast at me, because I won't put on a court dress, and receive the Queen!—I hear that Mister Chorley[†5] flashes his little pen in a sentence about Amateurs in Frazer[†6]—and I have some idea of enshrining him in the Christmas Book, as a feeble tribute to his deserts.

Kate and Georgy unite in loves to Mrs. Lemon—Ever affectionately CD.

To THE COUNTESS OF LOVELACE, 4 JULY 1848*

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: The | Countess of Lovelace.

Devonshire Terrace. | Tuesday Fourth July 1848.

My Dear Lady Lovelace.

I am going to look at a house at Folkestone tomorrow morning, and may, possibly, go to Hythe and Sandgate, and not get back before Thursday forenoon. Therefore, as I have the pleasure to be engaged to you for that evening, I think I had best make half past six on Thursday, my next time of appearance.

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Countess of Lovelace.

To W. C. MACREADY, 4 JULY 1848*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace. | Fourth July 1848.

My Dear Macready.

Bulwer declines; not for any reason that the thing is, in itself, objectionable; but for private considerations of convenience, no court dress, &c.

He is distinctly and decidedly of opinion that my doing it, would be in the worst taste and all wrong.

He thinks D'Eyncourt would do it—and Milnes.[†1] Will you ask them? You mentioned Lord Nugent and Milner Gibson,[†2] yesterday. I feel morally certain that the latter would as soon replace the statue of Shakespeare over the Porch. And I think Lady Nugent's[†3] death[†4] would prevent the former's compliance, if nothing else did. But this is for your consideration.

I enclose Miss Cushman's answer, received today.[†5]

I have not heard from Willmott, but will go down to a rehearsal when I shall have received a note from him, and will give those stage tickets to Mrs. Nisbett[†6] and Phelps.

Forster did not find Bulwer till this morning, or I should have written to you last night.

Ever Affecy.

To MISS ANNE ROMER, 4 JULY 1848

Extract (facsimile) in T. F. Madigan catalogue, 1935; dated Devonshire Terrace, 4 July 48.

Mary used to be dressed like a (theatrical) farmer's daughter, in a pink muslin frock with short sleeves, apron with pockets and ribbons, a little mob cap and so forth. She is a simple, warm-hearted, earnest girl, and loves ME very much.†1

I don't know yet, for certain, that we shall act a second night at Glasgow; and am obliged to keep it perfectly quiet at present, lest we should spoil the first. But the moment I know, Friday, I should say, you shall know too, and, if yes, be summoned to town. In the meantime, we are all getting the words and working away as if we were dead sure of doing it.†2 For we must be prepared, or we should have nothing to put up.

Some nice melody with a plain sentiment in it, about love, or bowers, or showers, or flowers, or bygone hours, or something of that sort, would be best.†3

To JOHN FORSTER, [5 JULY 1848]

Extract in F, VI, vi, 521-2. Date: 5 July according to Forster.

A change took place in poor Fanny about the middle of the day yesterday, which took me out there last night. Her cough suddenly ceased almost, and, strange to say, she immediately became aware of her hopeless state; to which she resigned herself, after an hour's unrest and struggle, with extraordinary sweetness and constancy. The irritability passed, and all hope faded away; though only two nights before, she had been planning for "after Christmas." She is greatly changed. I had a long interview with her to-day, alone; and when she had expressed some wishes about the funeral, and her being buried in unconsecrated ground,†4 I asked her whether she had any care or anxiety in the world. She said No, none. It was hard to die at such a time of life, but she had no alarm whatever in the prospect of the change; felt sure we should meet again in a better world; and although they had said she might rally for a time, did not really wish it. She said she was quite calm and happy, relied upon the mediation of Christ, and had no terror at all. She had worked very hard, even when ill; but believed that was in her nature, and neither regretted nor complained of it. Burnett had been always very good to her; they had never quarrelled; she was sorry to think of his going back to such a lonely home; and was distressed about her children, but not painfully so. She showed me how thin and worn she was; spoke about an invention she had heard of that she would like to have tried, for the deformed child's†1 back; called to my remembrance all our sister Letitia's patience and steadiness; and, though she shed tears sometimes, clearly impressed upon me that her mind was made up, and at rest. I asked her very often, if she could ever recall anything that she could leave to my doing, to put it down, or mention it to somebody if I was not there; and she said she would, but she firmly believed that there was nothing—nothing. Her husband being young, she said, and her children infants, she could not help thinking sometimes, that it would be very long in the course of nature before they were reunited; but she knew that was a mere human fancy, and could have no reality after she was dead. Such an affecting exhibition of strength and tenderness, in all that early decay, is quite indescribable. I need not tell you how it moved me. I cannot look round upon the dear children here, without some misgiving that this sad disease will not perish out of our blood with her; but I am sure I have no selfishness in the thought, and God knows how small the world looks to one who comes out of such a sick-room on a bright summer day. I don't know why I write this before going to bed. I only know that in the very pity and grief of my heart, I feel as if it were doing something.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 5 JULY 1848*

MS Yale University Library. Address: clearly to the printer of the play-bill for Macready's Royal Command performance at the Haymarket on 11 July.

Devonshire Terrace. | Wednesday Night | Fifth July 1848.

Dear Sir

Since I sent you the bill, I have had a letter from Mr. Whitworth[†2]—then doubtful—who will sing in God Save the Queen. Will you insert his name, next after Brahams.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To PETER CUNNINGHAM, 6 JULY 1848*

MS Berg Collection.

Devonshire Terrace. | Sixth July 1848.

My Dear Cunningham.

On Saturday the 15th. for Edinburgh by the Express Train in the Morning. [Nathan and his luggage by Mail train that night].[†3] On Tuesday Morning the 17th from Edinburgh to Glasgow. Return from Glasgow—some on Wednesday, and the remainder either on Thursday or Friday. All return within that week at all events.

Faithfully Yours
CD.

Party from 20 to 25
Peter Cunningham Esquire.

To ROBERT LAMOND, 6 JULY 1848*

MS Mr Ashley W. Olmsted.

Devonshire Terrace, London | Sixth July 1848.

My Dear Sir.

I shall be glad to hear, when it shall be in your power to advise me, touching another performance on the Thursday.[†1] In any case, some of our company will be obliged to leave on the Wednesday, and I am consequently preparing a piece called "Used up", for the first piece, on the chance of our acting a second time.

In reference to the hospitable intentions of Mr. Dalglish, Mr. Tennant, and others, I have no alternative but at once to decline them with my hearty thanks. The heat, hurry, and fatigue, of these excursions and performances is very great indeed—fully as much as those who have a great deal to do in the plays, can bear—and we make it a rule never to go out on such occasions, or to eat and drink away from our own table.

I do not quite understand whether you mean that the author of the play you speak of,[†2] wishes to have it acted. But if that is his object, I should say that I believe it to be, in these times, perfectly hopeless and unattainable.

Dear Sir | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Robert Lamond Esquire

To W. C. MACREADY, 6 JULY 1848*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace. | Sixth July 1848.

My Dear Macready.

I will write to Milnes, appointing the Stage-Door at ½ past 6.[†3] I will come down to the Theatre on Monday Morning—there will be directions to be given to the Hall-Porter, which perhaps you will prepare him to receive from me and to attend to—and we can settle then what room these gentlemen shall be shewn to, at night. I have not the requisition[†4] here, but I cannot remember any one else whom I think likely to attend—except such as would not do for the purpose. I think you, all along, made the natural mistake of supposing that all the requisitionists are at our disposal. Whereas very many of them have no idea, I dare swear, of coming near us, but signed the requisition because they were asked—and there an end.

Two, I should suppose, would be enough for the Queen? Three abundance?

I have told Willmott that I think you ought to have forty in the Chorus. I cannot help thinking that any smaller number of voices would be very feeble—remembering that there is no miscellaneous company in the Theatre who will be there to swell the noise. He always does too little, if he can. You know him.

I have got the rheumatism in my back, one arm, and shoulder. Very badly. Georgina tells me you were winking last Evening with an abominable cold. I hope it's better? But that is a bad stage at Birmingham[†1]

—full of cold airs

That give one pain and hurt one.[†2]

Ever affectionately

CD.

To MRS COWDEN CLARKE, [?6] JULY 1848*

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds. Date: PM 7 July 48. Address: Mrs. Cowden Clarke | Craven Hill Cottage | Bayswater.

The Implacable's Reply.[†3]

At Miss Kelly's Temple of Mirth, 73 Dean Street, Soho, at 7 o'Clock on Friday Evening, July the Seventh, eighteen hundred and forty eight.[†4]

To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, 8 JULY 1848

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel. Address: George Cruikshank Esquire.

Devonshire Terrace. | Eighth July 1848.

My Dear George

On coming home last night, I found the enclosed from Alison.[†5] He tells me it is an invitation to you to go to his house.[†6] I have answered—for myself—that we never visit under those hurried and busy circumstances: having no time, and being greatly fatigued. Answer for *your*self—but don't hint at any possibility of your not going down. I don't, although Mrs. Burnett is certainly dying.

I hope Mrs. Cruikshank is no worse, or, if she be, that she will soon be better.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

George Cruikshank Esquire.

To MRS HOGARTH, 8 JULY 1848*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday Eighth July 1848.

My Dear Mrs. Hogarth.

In an interview I had with poor Fanny the other day, alone—when she first knew that her recovery was hopeless—in speaking about her husband and children, she introduced the subject of her wishes in reference to her funeral. She said that she desired to be buried in the Highgate cemetery, and in that portion of it which is not consecrated ground. I received this, of course, as an injunction to be religiously respected and carried out. And I feel—though nothing passed on that head—that the grave must be her husband's; either for her remains to rest in it alone, or for the reception of his, or their children's[†1] ashes, too, as he may think best, and God may order.[†2]

I am sensible of the feeling in which your kind note has originated. There is no change in my mind. Nothing can disturb the associations connected, in my memory, with that small spot of ground at Kensal Green.[†3]

Ever Affectionately
CD.

To SAMUEL JOSEPH,[†4] 8 JULY 1848*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Eighth July 1848.

Dear Sir.

I have not the least idea, I assure you, of the probability or improbability of your finding a purchaser for my bust. I need scarcely say that I am not a very likely person to be informed on the subject, as I could scarcely set that price on my own head which would seem to justify me in recommending my friends to possess a copy of it.

Although I confess to a breach of the Tenth Commandment in coveting so beautiful a work of Art, I am not rich enough, just now, to secure it to myself.[†5] Nor should I like to set up more graven images of myself among my household Gods, than they already comprize.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Samuel Joseph Esquire

To W. C. MACREADY, 8 JULY 1848*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday Eighth July 1848.

My Dear Macready

As you will be tired, I will come up to you tomorrow at 2 o'Clock, in case there should be anything to say, on either side. Perhaps you will take me up, next morning, on your way to the Theatre.[†1]

I signified to Willmott three or four days ago, that I felt certain there ought to be forty people in the Chorus. Remembering that there is no miscellaneous company to join in it (as there usually is) I am confident that any less number would be absurdly weak and poor.

I have heard the Prince Albert story,[†2] but I don't believe it—can't, I should have written.

There was a large poster, without a printer's name, put out yesterday afternoon, with these words

Who plays for Macready?[†3]

It occurred to me, after hearing of it, to be just possible that some small man or other might have engaged himself to act, with the intention of staying away at night. I thought it possible—just barely possible—that somebody might have been put up to this. I have therefore sent a dispatch to Willmott this morning, enjoining him to review his lesser names, carefully, and if he have the least reason in the world to doubt the owner of any one among them, quietly to double that man.

Have you thought about the Money—I mean whom it is to be handed over to, that night? I have arranged with Willmott to meet him at the Treasury next morning, and have everything paid, then and there.[†4]

I hope there will be a very good show of Ladies, in the God save the Queen.

Affectionately Ever

CD.

To MISS LOUISA [WANSEY],[†1] 8 JULY 1848*

MS Mr T. Brown.

London, 1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Eighth July 1848.

Dear Madam.

I beg to acknowledge the safe receipt of your post office order for Two Pounds Ten Shillings, in aid of the Fund for the purchase of Shakespeare's House. For which I beg, in the name of the Treasurer (to whom I have handed it) to thank you very cordially.

If I wrong one gentleman by the superscription of this note, I trust he and you will excuse me, in consideration of my willingness to believe that there is a possibility of some humble disciple of Shakespeare, aspiring to the hands of my generous correspondent.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Louisa Wanley

To PETER CUNNINGHAM, 8 JULY 1848

MS Princeton University Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Eighth July 1848.

My Dear Cunningham

The enclosed has been sent me, for the House Fund, by Miss Louisa Wan[s]ey (at least I suppose she's a Miss—God knows) of Sambourne, Warminster, Wilts. With a happy mixture of fact, fancy, and facetiousness, I have briefly acknowledged its receipt.

So no more at present from

The Manager.

To JOHN BRAHAM, 9 JULY 1848*

MS Lord Strachie. Address: John Braham Esquire | 5 Gloucester Road | Hyde Park Gardens.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Ninth July 1848.

My Dear Sir

I beg to inform you that God Save the Queen is called for Rehearsal with the band, at Drury Lane Theatre, tomorrow (Monday) at 2 o'Clock.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Braham Esquire.

To G. H. LEWES, 9 JULY 1848

MS Dr James Hasson.

Devonshire Terrace | Sunday Ninth July 1848.

My Dear Lewes

Mrs. Cruikshank (whom the Saints confound!) is suddenly well again, and George wants his blacksmith back. Will you give me Adonis Leech for Lemon, and take back Tom Saville?†1

O questa faemina maladetta! †aO questa signora ubriaca!†a O Impressario sfortunato!—Ma, sempre dolce, tranquillissimo, cristianissimo—Esempio di pazienza!—Impressario admirabile! Uomo di buona pasta! In una parola—

Carlo†2

To J. W. RAY, 9 JULY 1848*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Devonshire Terrace, London | Ninth July 1848.

Sir.

I have informed Mr. Willmott that you will be so good as to do Nym.

I infer from your recommendation of Mr. Howard,[†3] that that gentleman is sufficiently youthful in appearance, for Fenton. But, lest you should have overlooked this consideration (which is not probable), I write to you, instead of directly answering a note I received from him last night, along with yours, I beg you will have the kindness to take this necessity into account, and in the event of your feeling confident on the point, to inform him that I shall be very happy to accept his services. I mention the point, as Anne Page is very youthful-looking, and too old a lover would be absurd.

Both in your case, and in Fenton's, I would desire to have the favor of this assistance, both in Edinburgh and in Glasgow.[†4] The dresses will be brought down, and altered if need be.

Mr. Willmott will be at the Theatre Royal, on Thursday morning at 11 o'Clock; when he will be glad to see you, if you can make it convenient to meet him.

I am Sir | Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

J. W. Ray Esquire

To ROBERT MORRISSON,[†1] 10 JULY 1848*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Robert Morrisson Esquire.

T. R. Drury Lane | Monday Tenth July 1848.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Morrisson, and begs—on behalf of Mr. Macready and as one of the Committee engaged in making the arrangements for tonight—to answer Mr. Morrisson's note.

Mr. Dickens exceedingly regrets that compliance with Mr. Morrisson's request, is not feasible. Though personally desirous to afford the required facility under the circumstances stated, he feels—and so do Mr. Macready and the other gentlemen concerned—that this application cannot reasonably be separated from many others of the like nature, which cannot, in good faith towards the public, be acceded to.

To PETER CUNNINGHAM, 11 JULY 1848*

MS Berg Collection.

Devonshire Terrace | Tuesday Night. | Eleventh July 1848.

My Dear Cunningham.

It is time I wrote round to the Company, telling them what train we go by, and all particulars thereof.[†2]

Likewise, I must, on Thursday, write (per agreement) to Emmeline Montague at Manchester, telling her by what train we come northward, and what is the nearest place to Manchester at which it calls, and at what time. Will you, before post-hour on that day, get me these particulars.

Nineteen (19) first-class places, including yours,[†3] and two (2) second, without Nathan.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Peter Cunningham Esquire

To MISS FANNY KELLY, 11 JULY 1848*

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel. Address: Miss Kelly | 73 Dean Street | Soho.

Devonshire Terrace. | Eleventh July 1848.

My Dear Miss Kelly.

Rehearsals of Used Up, on Thursday and Friday Evenings at 7 o'Clock.—

Miss Kenworthy and her father to be ready for going to Scotland, at ½ past 9 on Saturday Morning.

Faithfully Yours
CD.

To MARK LEMON, 11 JULY 1848

MS Benoliel Collection.

Devonshire Terrace | Tuesday Night Eleventh July, 1848 | (Late)

My Dear Lemon.

I am tired out, with last night and many less agreeable matters, but I can't go to bed without sending you the enclosed, and entreating you not to think of James.[†1] The parts are distributed—I went to Lewes's myself today—and I am fully convinced that your not playing Leech or the Blacksmith would sacrifice the piece. Pray remember that Leech was your own idea originally, and don't make a Jackass of yourself by coming out with such preposterous suggestions. I think of playing James myself, and giving Sir Charles to Stone—or I soon shall, if you go on with such monstrous imaginings.

Rehearsals on Thursday and Friday Evenings, at 7.[†2]

Ever Yours amiably | (though indignantly)
In-Flexible.

To W. C. MACREADY, 11 JULY 1848*

MS New York Public Library.

½ past 5 | 11th. July 1848.

My Dear Macready

We have been paying the people,[†3] this morning—and since then, I have been obliged to go to Hornsey[†4] and to Shepherd's Bush,—so have only just come home.

The address is, Buckingham Palace. And I address him, The Honorable C. B. Phipps.[†5]
Affectionately Ever
CD.[†6]

To MISS FANNY KELLY, 12 JULY 1848

Extract in Maggs Bros catalogue No. 441 (1923); MS 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 12 July 48.

If you will appoint your own day next week (Tuesday excepted) for being at Serjeant Talfourd's chambers in Serjeants Inn Chancery Lane, at a quarter past four, he and I will meet you there.

To PETER CUNNINGHAM, 13 [JULY] 1848*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Date: misdated April by CD; PM 14 July 48. Address: Peter Cunningham Esquire | Audit Office | Somerset House | Strand.

Devonshire Terrace | Thursday Night | Thirteenth April[†1] 1848.

My Dear Cunningham

Will you, in arranging finally with Brooks, provide for Nathan and the luggage. Those articles of lumber are to come down to Edinburgh by the train which leaves London on Saturday night.[†2]
Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To R. H. HORNE, 13 JULY 1848*

MS (copy made by Horne) Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: R. H. Horne Esquire | Fallow Lodge | Finchley.

Devonshire Terrace | Thirteenth July 1848

My Dear Horne.

I think your prospectus[†3] an excellent one, and pregnant with strong matter—with so much matter, that it seems to me an unavoidable necessity that the Voyages and Travels should not be in that series. Think of Columbus! A traveller and voyager cannot be said to be of any country, I think.

Bunyan—I don't see old John in your list and among the authors of children's books, I don't see Mr. Day—the Sandford & Merton man.[†4] I should say that story had had great influence on many boy's[†1] (and consequently mens')[†1] minds.[†2]

It seems to me that the intention of leaving the literature of travel and discovery out of the question for the time being, might be gracefully and appositely stated in the introduction to the first lecture.[†3] But I must throw this out for your better judgment.

Mrs. Dickens would have come out[†4] to see Mrs. Horne before now, but I have a sister lying at Hornsey very ill indeed—and our suburban pilgrimages are at present restricted to that quarter.

My dear Horne | Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

R. H. Horne Esq.

To MRS HENRY BURNETT, 15 JULY 1848*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday Morning | Fifteenth July 1848.

Dearest Fanny

A blunder on the part of the Shakspeare people between two lines, and two hours A.M. and P.M, occasion our going away, in an indescribable state of confusion, this morning.[†5]

I have arranged with father to write me the fullest particulars about you, and shall lose no time in coming home again. I have given Topping instructions to bring out some more claret on Wednesday. God bless you a thousand times!

Your ever affectionate brother

CHARLES DICKENS

Fred sends his best love. I am afraid you had but a poor night; last night. We hardly closed our eyes, here. Kate is better, and charges me with all dear remembrances.

To MRS COWDEN CLARKE, 22 JULY 1848

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Twenty Second July 1848.

My Dear Mrs. Clarke.

I have no energy whatever—I am very miserable. I loathe domestic hearths. I yearn to be a Vagabond.[†1]

Why can't I marry Mary![†2] Why have I seven children—not engaged at sixpence a night apiece, and dismissible for ever, if they tumble down, but taken on for an indefinite time at a vast expence, and never—no, never, never—wearing lighted candles round their heads![†3]

I am deeply miserable.

A real house like this, is insupportable after that canvass[†4] farm wherein I was so happy.[†5] What is a humdrum dinner at half past five, with nobody (but John) to see me eat it, compared with that soup,[†6] and the hundreds of pairs of eyes that watched its disappearance!

[ ][†7]

Forgive this tear.—It is weak and foolish, I know.—

Pray let me divide the little excursional excesses of the journey, among the gentlemen, as I have always done before. And pray believe that I have had the sincerest pleasure and gratification in your co-operation and society. Valuable and interesting on all public accounts, and personally of no mean worth nor held in slight regard.

You had a sister once—when we were young and happy—I think they called her Emma.[†8] If she remember a bright being who once flitted like a vision before her, entreat her to bestow a thought upon the "Gas" of departed joys.

I can write no more. | Y.G. | The (darkened) G.L.B.[†9]

To JOSEPH ELLIS, 23 JULY 1848*

MS Bodleian Library. Address: Private | Mr. Joseph Ellis | Bedford Hotel | Brighton.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Third July 1848.

Dear Mr. Ellis

I am going to ask an odd sort of favor of you, but I dare say you will grant it very willingly.

Among the out of the way letters I receive every day, I have just got one from a Mr. "Lambert Marshall, No. 24 Western Road Hove, Brighton"—who it seems is a guard in the Post office on a small salary, and a kind of Amateur Painter too; and he writes to me for £5 to enable him to finish a picture on which he is now engaged. He entreats that I will depute somebody to call at his house, and prove his statement by ascertaining that he really has a picture in progress.

I cannot think of anyone now in Brighton whom I would so soon ask to do thus much for me as you. If you will send somebody to look at the picture from me, and will tell me if there really be one going on, and that it is not absolutely ridiculous, and that he seems a decent man, I shall be very sincerely obliged to you.[†1]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Joseph Ellis Esquire

To T. N. TALFOURD, 23 JULY 1848*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Third July 1848.

My Dear Talfourd

I can't imagine what you mean by "a card from me". But I suppose it is some precious proceeding of Miss Kelly's, of which I have no more knowledge than the Emperor of China. And apropòs of that lady, I am sorry to say that my observation of her assures me she is not to be trusted. There is a moral sinuosity about her—a kind of corkscrewism—that leads her, as in the case of Durrant's[†2] nephew,[†3] to make, for her own purpose, mountains of molehills.

Exactly and precisely what you understand to be our promise to her, I understand too. There can be no doubt about it. I should have written it down, if asked, without communication with you, in just those words. I distrust her so much—between ourselves—that when you come back, I think we had best meet these creditors and wash our hands of the affair. If you will write to me at Broadstairs, I will [†a]make an appointment to[†a] meet you in town at your convenience. And we might perhaps dine together, in the old style.

She told me that the greater part of that thousand pounds—within a hundred, if I remember right—was paid away, immediately, for arrears of rent and taxes. This may be true. God knows. She fumbles about, in a basket full of what is apparently theatrical snow, but which she calls "documents", and pretends that they are vouchers for all she says. The inside of them, however, is a mystery to me.

I have been in Scotland, and am only now come home, or I should have written sooner. Hearty thanks for the Memorials of Lamb,[†1] which arrived last night, and which I am now going to read luxuriously, in the garden.

Affectionately always
CD.

To CHARLES CUSHMAN,[†2] 24 JULY 1848*

MS Duke University Library.

1 Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Fourth July 1848.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Cushman, and begs to forward him the enclosed,[†3] agreeably to Miss Cushman's wish.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 25 JULY 1848

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace. | Tuesday Twenty Fifth July | 1848.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I am afraid I cannot come to Shepherd's Bush today, as I want to go to Broadstairs to see my children, and have been unable to do so, on account of certain sad daily visits to a sister at Hornsey, who is dying. In case of your going yourself, and entering on any accounts, I enclose you some outstanding bills. Also Mr. Walesby's acknowledgement for the £5.[†4]

Will you let me know on what days and at what hours you will probably be at home this week, after tomorrow?

Dear Miss Coutts | Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To CHARLES EVANS, 25 JULY 1848

Mention in Myers catalogue, July 1908; MS 2 pp.; dated 25 July 48; addressed Charles M. Evans (Birmingham).

Referring to accounts of a dramatic performance.[†5]

To W. WILLIAMS, 25 JULY 1848*

MS Cornell University Library.

Devonshire Terrace. | Twenty Fifth July 1848.

Sir

I have been in Scotland since I last wrote to you, or I should have had the pleasure of requesting your acceptance of the enclosed,[†1] before.

Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

Over[†2]

Mr. W. Williams.

To EDWARD CHAPMAN, 27 JULY 1848*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Seventh July 1848.

My Dear Sir

When my half yearly account[†3] is ready, will you have the goodness to forward it to me at Broadstairs?

Also, will you pay twelve guineas to my account at Coutts's, and charge it against the Nickleby as paid to Mr. Webster.[†4]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Edward Chapman Esquire.

To THE HON. MRS RICHARD WATSON, 27 JULY 1848†

MS Huntington Library.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Twenty Seventh July 1848.

My Dear Mrs. Watson.

I thought to have been at Rockingham, long ago! It seems a century since I, standing in big boots on the Haymarket stage, saw you come into a box upstairs and look down on the humbled Bobadil. Since then, I have had the kindest of notes from you. Since then, the finest of venison, and yet I have not seen the Rockingham flowers, and they are withering, I daresay.

But we have acted at Manchester, Liverpool, Birmingham, Edinburgh, and Glasgow; and the business of all this—and graver and heavier daily occupation in going to see a dying sister at Hornsey—has so worried me, that I have hardly had an hour—far less a week. I shall never be quite happy, in a theatrical point of view, until you have seen me play in an English version of the French piece, l'homme blasé,[†5] which fairly turned the head of Glasgow, last Thursday night as ever was; neither shall I be quite happy in a social point of view, until I have been to Rockingham again. When the first event will come about, Heaven knows.[†1] The latter will happen, please God, about the end of the November fogs and wet weather. For am I not going to Broadstairs now, to walk about on the sea-shore (why don't you bring your rosy children there?) and think what is to be done for Christmas!—The idea occurs to me all at once. I must come down and read you that book before its[†2] published.[†3] Shall it be a bargain?

Were you all in Switzerland? I don't believe I ever was. It is such a dream now. I wonder sometimes whether I ever disputed with a Haldimand—†aor found it impossible to dispute with a Cerjat, because everybody's opinion was his opinion exactly.†a Whether I ever drank mulled wine on the top of the great St. Bernard, or was jovial at the bottom, with company that have stolen into my affection. Whether I ever was merry and happy in that Valley on the Lake of Geneva, or saw you one evening (when I didn't know you) walking down among the green trees outside Elysée, arm in arm with a gentleman in a white hat, †bwho was afterwards shampoo'd at Paris.†b I am quite clear that there is no foundation for these visions. But I should like to go somewhere, too, and try it all over again. I don't know how it is, but the ideal world in which my lot is cast, has an odd effect on the real one, and makes it chiefly precious for such remembrances. I get quite melancholy over them sometimes—especially when, as now, those great piled up semicircles of bright faces at which I have lately been looking—all laughing, earnest, and intent—have faded away like dead people. They seem a ghostly moral of everything in life to me.

†cThe other day—two or three weeks back—I saw Spencer Lyttelton on the Birmingham Railway. He told me, with a perspicuous and lucid manner, which you will easily recal,†4 that you "were getting too fat, and the doctors were giving you things to make you thin." I left him standing in the middle of the road at Birmingham, with his hat more off than on, one hand in his pocket, and his great coat hanging over his shoulder like a Red Man's blanket. On the way home again, we encountered once more; and I left him in exactly the same attitude in the midst of enormous Druidical altars of other peoples' luggage, at Euston Square.†c but that she is already gone to Broadstairs with the children. We think of following on Saturday morning—but that depends on my poor sister. Pray give my most cordial remembrances to Watson, and tell him they include a great deal.

Kate sends her best love, in which Georgy would as heartily unite, I know,

I meant to have written you a letter. I don't know what this is, there is no word for it. So, if you will let me still owe you one, I will pay my debt—on the smallest encouragement—from the seaside. Here, there, and elsewhere, I am with perfect truth, believe me,

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To THOMAS BEARD, 28 JULY 1848

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Place | Edgeware Road.

Devonshire Terrace. | Twenty Eighth July 1848. | Friday

My Dear Mus'r Beard.

We have, for a novelty, fixed, as our autumnal abiding-place, on

———

(I must go over leaf to write it)

—where, in a larger house than usual, is a bed (and bedstead) perpetiwally at your service, and where you are expected every Saturday for the next eight or ten weeks.

N.B. A boat for Margate every Saturday afternoon, at half past three. On Sunday next, ribs of venison. On Sunday week, a haunch of ditto, just sent up from Northamptonshire.

Poor Fanny still lingers on, to the amazement of the doctors and all who see how worn and wasted she is. I am going down to Broadstairs tomorrow, but shall probably run up again on Monday to see her.

Do make arrangements to benefit by the air and water, regularly.

Loves from all | Ever Heartily

CD.

To PETER CUNNINGHAM, 28 JULY 1848

MS Princeton University Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Eighth July 1848.

My Dear Cunningham.

I shall be glad to know, at your convenience, all particulars of that Haymarket balance, and of your Railroad expenditure on account of the Shakespeare Curatorship. After the receipt of which information I will go to work to square the accounts with all the speed I may.

It would facilitate the matter perhaps, and not render it less agreeable, if you could bring that "green-a-bok"[†1] of yours, down to Broadstairs one Saturday—tomorrow week, for example. There is a Margate boat leaves London Bridge Wharf at half past 3 on a Saturday afternoon. I would meet you at that pearl of the ocean—entertain you at Broadstairs (where we have a house) with my accustomed geniality until Monday Morning—and return you by Express train which arrives in London at half past 10 a.m. There is a haunch of Venison in the larder, just come up from Northamptonshire, which won't be ready sooner. But if you are making holiday and can come sooner—tant mieux.

How are the archaeological dummies?[†2]

An infatuated wretch of the name of John Clow Tennant,[†3] of Liverpool, wishes to become a member of the Shakespeare Society.[†4] I will propoge the poor creature, if you like, and perhaps you'll second him.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Peter Cunningham Esquire

To W. C. MACREADY, 28 JULY 1848*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace. | Twenty Eighth July 1848. | Friday.

My Dear Macready.

I send you in a dispatch box (key inclosed) the balance, balance-sheet, accounts, vouchers, and all other papers connected with your benefit. When you have emptied the box, will you send it me, home? We hope that everything will be plain to you.

You are mistaken in regard of Mr. Ryder,[†5] who took his five pounds. He was down on the list for four guineas, but Forster and I, by reason of that very position of his in reference to yourself which seems to present itself to your mind in quite another aspect,[†6] decided to pay him well, and give him five pounds. We thought it right in the abstract, and did not consider, from his appearance and standing altogether, that he could very well afford to be generous, even if he would. It was a relief to both of us, I think, that he didn't, Mrs. Chick-like, "make the effort".[†1]

It is possible that of the accompanying treasure, you may be called upon to refund a few shillings. One or two stray tickets are yet dropping in.[†2] Mr. Chapman resisted payment in one case, and was summonsed yesterday. He intended to object on principle merely, by reason of the lapse of time, but expected (though I have not yet heard the result) to have to pay. I mention this, that you may understand the point, if it should ever be mentioned again. The amount is nothing.

Affectionately always
CHARLES DICKENS

W. C. Macready Esquire

To THE REV. JAMES WHITE, [28 JULY 1848]

Mention in To Macready, 4 Aug. Date: the night before CD left for Broadstairs.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 29 JULY 1848*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace. | Saturday Morning | Twenty Ninth July 1848.

My Dear Miss Coutts

Not hearing from you until last night, I imagined you were out of town for a time, and arranged to take Mrs. Dickens (who is not very well) down to Broadstairs to join the children, today. I shall be in town, either on Monday or Tuesday, and will call for you in the forenoon. If I have sufficient fore-knowledge of my movements, I will write to you on the previous day. If not, I will trust to my better fortune to find you at home at about eleven o'Clock.

Dear Miss Coutts | Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts

To LAMBERT MARSHALL, [?30 JULY 1848]

Mention in next.

Enclosing £5 to help him finish a painting.

To JOSEPH ELLIS, 30 JULY 1848*

MS Bodleian Library. Address: Private | Mr. Joseph Ellis | Bedford Hotel | Brighton.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Thirtieth July 1848.

Dear Mr. Ellis

I am very much obliged to you for the trouble you have taken in reference to Mr. Marshall. As I have not his letter here, and cannot remember his address, may I ask you to have the kindness to send him the enclosed letter?

What you say of the mention of the Bedford in Dombey,[†1] gives me great pleasure, I assure you.
Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Joseph Ellis Esquire.

To JOHN L. HATTON,[†2] JULY 1848

Summary by owner of MS, Mr J. H. Foley. Date: July 48 according to owner; Hatton visited America that summer (see below).

Saying that he has no knowledge of any musical person in America to whom he could give Hatton an introduction on his forthcoming visit to the United States,[†3] but that he is glad to give his testimony to Hatton's merits as an accomplished musician and composer.

August

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 3 AUGUST 1848*

MS Morgan Library.

Broadstairs | Thursday, Third August 1848.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

Mr. Brown will have told you that we purpose meeting at Shepherd's Bush, at the usual hour next Tuesday. I hope you will have no objection to that circumstance of their having had in spirits, through the assistance of some workmen, being then very closely enquired into, with a view to the immediate dismissal of the actual go-between in that business. It also does seem to me, after maturely considering the subject, that they can not have been as well looked after as they ought to be, considering the amount and cost of the superintendence provided. I think this is a point, also demanding very careful investigation. The lapse of a week will prevent our acting in any momentary irritation or surprise—as I would tell them, all together, if the rest of the Committee were of my mind—but I would take this time for making an example, and whoever had been active in that business, I would certainly discharge. I am quite clear that it is of no use taking any middle course, and that this is the proper kind of occasion for being sternly just with them.

Other points have occurred to me, in connexion with the general arrangements, but I mention this, now, because I feel it so very important that we should not let the matter drop.

Dear Miss Coutts | Always Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 4 AUGUST 1848

MS Lytton Papers.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Fourth August 1848.

My Dear Sir Edward.

I called upon you when you were staying near the opera, but you were not then in town. I have not written sooner—as I should otherwise have done—knowing that considerations and remembrances very different from my projected visit, have unhappily occupied your mind since we met last.[†1]

But, in the hope that I may now live in your recollection again without disturbance of your deeper thoughts, I write to say that I have been obliged to relinquish the pleasant hope your hospitable invitation awakened, and to come down here. Mrs. Dickens is at present in that *un*interesting condition which makes visiting irksome to her,[†2] and she has entreated me to bring her away from town, and let her grumble "unbeknown" to all, but our hoarse old monster-friend the sea here.

—Though she is very anxious for all that, that I should make it understood that she does not relinquish the prospect of coming to see you under more auspicious circumstances. Which indeed I am not indisposed to insist upon, for my own sake.

I was much gratified by what you wrote me, touching the Battle of Life.[†3] I was wretched when I sat down to the little book, to feel the great capacity there was in the idea, and the waste of it that the limits of the story hopelessly involved. But for an insuperable aversion I have to trying back in such a case, I should certainly forge that bit of metal again, as you suggest. One of these days perhaps—

I have been so bewildered by the Shakspeare Curatorship business, that I have read nothing for weeks and weeks past. But I have brought Harold[†4] down here, and am going away now (it is very sunny and cheerful, strange to say) to lie down on the sand with him.

The best reason in the world for finishing this note!

Ever Very truly Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To W. C. MACREADY, 4 AUGUST 1848*

MS Morgan Library.

Broadstairs | Friday August Fourth 1848.

My Dear Macready.

I took it into my head, from your writing sometime since to ask me how Phipps should be addressed, that the money for the Queen's Box had been sent to you. I forgot, afterwards, to ascertain from you whether I was right.

By this post, I will write to Chapman and tell him to apply at the Chamberlain's Office for the needful.[†1] Also to pay it in, when he gets it, to your account at Ransom's.[†2]

Knowing you were out of town, I wrote direct to White,[†3] in answer, as it were, to the letter I got from you touching his living, on the night before I left. I pointed out to him that it was extremely probable that Lord Denman,[†4] as Chief Justice, would be particularly sensitive in respect of incurring, or seeming to incur, any obligation in the slightest matter of patronage. White writes me in reply that exactly the same idea had presented itself forcibly to him, and that he feels assured it is a reasonable one.

Therefore he writes to the Chancellor himself—a very plain and manly letter, of which he has sent me a copy—and Heaven speed him as a man of whom I would there were more, among the parsonic creation.

I should like to have seen the rush of four. But I am afraid you strive to conceal the fact that two of them were babies.—Talking of babies, my love to Mrs. Macready, in which Kate, Georgy, and all the small fry very heartily join.

I shall come up to see you, of course, before you start for dear, modest, honest, gentlemanly-minded and thoroughly independent Uncle Sam's.

There is no news from Hornsey—I almost wish there were, she lies so wasted and worn.

Ever affecy. CD.

To MRS COWDEN CLARKE, 5 AUGUST 1848†

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds. Address: Mrs. Cowden Clarke | Craven Hill Cottage | Bayswater | London.

Broadstairs, Kent | Saturday Fifth August 1848

My Dear Mrs. Clarke.

Although I really do not believe that there are two people in the world who would better take care of Shakespeare's house than yourself and your husband—and although I should greatly like, for your own sakes and for the sake of the relic itself, to see you installed as joint custodians thereof—and although I feel, both publicly and personally, a great deal more that is favorable to yourselves than I will trouble you by expressing—I fear there are two rocks ahead that there is no steering clear of.

The first is—Knowles. The appeal has been made, in places where he has powerful friends, so distinctly for Knowles, that I apprehend he must be made the first custodian. If any question should arise in the Shakespeare House Committee on this head, I should not feel justified in handing over the money (this is strictly between ourselves) until I had the authority and sanction of the Liverpool and Glasgow play-committees to do so. I have a misgiving that any proposal to have another curator in his stead, would throw the whole question into what is expressively called "the Devil's own state" of embroilment, and that there would be very great difficulty in bringing it to any reasonable adjustment.

The second rock in the course of your bark, is this. In the stipulation I myself made with the Shakespeare House Committee, it is set forth that the Curatorship "shall always be bestowed on some one distinguished in Literature, and more especially in Dramatic Literature". If Knowles should not have it, there are two strong claims that rise upon my mind directly. One is, Poole's. The other, Kenney's.[†1] Both have been dramatic writers of great merit, and I think it would be impossible to put them aside.

Of all these men, it is not likely that one will live many years.[†2] What changes no great flight of time may make, God knows. But at present, I do not see any means of clearing your prospect, without an abandonment of the ground so recently taken up.

If you should desire it, after thinking of the matter and talking it over with your other half, I will myself propose to the Shakespeare House Committee, to record your desire to hold this appointment. It might, with a view to the future, be useful. There is no hurry. The accounts of the plays are not yet completed, and I will give you ample notice of the time when I shall meet the committee. You need not decide until then. Many unexpected lights may shine in upon us, meanwhile.

[†a]"I am completely blasé—literally used up. I am dying for excitement. Is it possible that nobody can suggest anything to make my heart beat violently, my blood boil, my hair stand on end—but no."[†1]

Where did I hear those words (so truly applicable to my folorn condition) pronounced by some delightful creature—In a previous state of existence, I believe. Oh Memory, Memory!—

Ever Yours faithfully

Y—no C. G—no D.[†2] C.D. I think it is—but I don't know—there's nothing in it.[†a]

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 6 AUGUST 1848*

MS Morgan Library.

Broadstairs | Sunday Sixth August 1848.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

The Express train, by which I shall come to town on Tuesday, arrives at London Bridge at half past 10 in the Morning. I will come direct to Stratton Street.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To COUNT D'ORSAY, 7 AUGUST 1848*

MS Comte de Gramont.

Broadstairs | Aout 7. 1848.

Mon cher ami.

Je suis excessivement faché que je ne pourrai avoir le grand plaisir de diner a Gore House, demain. C'est vraiment longtemps que je n'y ai pas eté. Mais, quoique je viendrai à Londres demain j'aurai tant d'affaires, que je ne serai pas libre, un moment. Il me faudra, aussi, à la soirée, rendre visite a ma pauvre sœur (femme de Burnett qui chanta si doucement à la petite Dombey fête) qui reste a present a Hornsey, et qui est très malade—c'est impossible, malheureusement, qu'elle reprendra jamais ses forces.

Mille amities a Milady. Il me parait que je ne l'ai pas vu, depuis cinq cent ans. Alfred D'Orsay[†3] vous envoit ses devoirs. Il est brave garçon—très fort et très fiers.[†4]

Croyez moi, toujours, | Mon cher ami | Votre tout devoué
CHARLES DICKENS
Le Triton

À Monsieur | Le Comte D'Orsay.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 10 AUGUST 1848

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street | Piccadilly | London.

Broadstairs, Kent | Thursday Tenth August | 1848.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I enclose the two accounts of Mr. King, relative to Charley. I will have a long talk with him, as to the expediency of Charley's removal at Christmas,[†1] and will let you know what his opinion is, in good time. I am going to bring him back to town to school, tomorrow.

Before receiving this, I dare say you will have seen Mrs. Holdsworth. I told her, in the course of the committee proceedings the other day, that you wished her to get up on every alternate washing-day; Mrs. Graves taking the other. She did not object then, but afterwards—when I was going, and the rest were gone—informed me, with a face of most portentous woe and intensity, that "she couldn't do it". I informed her, in reply, that that was an answer which I could by no means give to you, in so easy a matter, and that she must make that communication to you herself.[†2]

We had an accident here yesterday, which might have been a very bad one. I have a pretty little poney,[†3] nearly thorough-bred, who is not vicious, but requires great care in the driving. Mrs. Dickens, in a little phaeton which this animal draws, set off for Margate to meet me, under the coachmanship of our footman. At the top of a hill the poney made a sudden start, and the man instantly jumped out (he says he was thrown out, but it could not have been so) leaving her galloping[†4] down a steep hill, with the reins wound round the wheel, and his mistress astounding the whole Isle of Thanet with her screams. However, she kept her seat and the poney plunging over a steep bank, broke the shafts and tumbled down on her side, without upsetting the carriage! A lady and gentleman living near, who were driving by in their carriage, got Mrs. Dickens out, and sent for some Wine and so forth, and took her home to their house, where the man was carried too, and where (to my unspeakable astonishment) I was borne off to see them, when I landed from the boat. She is none the worse, I hope, for the fright, but the man is greatly cut and bruised from head to heel, and the Surgeon is afraid he may be lamed, from the injury done to some leading sinews of his legs. I am going to take the poney to the scene of the disaster this morning, where I shall try to cure her of such freaks for the future.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To ELIZABETH COLLINGS & SONS,[†1] 10 AUGUST 1848

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, 22 July 1975; MS 1 p.; dated Broadstairs, Kent, 10 Aug 48.

Sending a cheque for wine supplied by them. The Wine can be binned on Saturday Morning.[†2]

To JOHN FORSTER, [10 AUGUST 1848]

Extract in F, VI, iii, 494-5. Date: The accident took place on 9 Aug (To Miss Coutts, 10 Aug)—not, as Forster says (F, ibid.), "after bringing up his boys to school"; CD no doubt wrote to Forster the following day.

Coming to meet Catherine at Margate, he had found her, not in a small chaise, as he expected, but in a large carriage and pair followed by an excited crowd, the chaise's driver bruised and bandaged on the box. You may faintly imagine my amazement at encountering this carriage, and the strange people, and Kate, and the crowd, and the bandaged one, and all the rest of it. Then came the story. At the top of a steep hill on the road, with a ditch on each side, the pony bolted, upon which what does John[†3] do but jump out! He says he was thrown out, but it cannot be. The reins immediately became entangled in the wheels, and away went the pony down the hill madly, with Kate inside rending the Isle of Thanet with her screams. The accident might have been a fearful one, if the pony had not, thank Heaven, on getting to the bottom, pitched over the side; breaking the shaft and cutting her hind legs, but in the most extraordinary manner smashing her own way apart. She tumbled down, a bundle of legs with her head tucked underneath, and left the chaise standing on the bank! A Captain Devaynes[†4] and his wife were passing in their carriage at the moment, saw the accident with no power of preventing it, got Kate out, laid her on the grass, and behaved with infinite kindness. All's well that ends well, and I think she's really none the worse for the fright. John is in bed a good deal bruised, but without any broken bone, and likely soon to come right; though for the present plastered all over, and, like Squeers, a brown-paper parcel chock-full of nothing but groans.[†5] The women generally have no sympathy for him whatever; and the nurse says, with indignation, how could he go and leave a unprotected female in the shay!

To R. H. HORNE, 10 AUGUST 1848

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Address (envelope MS Mr Richard Russell): R. H. Horne Esquire | Fallow Lodge | Finchley | near | London.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Tenth August 1848.

My Dear Horne. Look at the name of the place whence I date this letter. Mrs. Dickens being in an *un*interesting condition, has besought me to bring her out of that stagnant air of London for two months—and here we are accordingly. And yesterday she was all but frightened to death by that poney running away with her, head long, down hill—our footman, who had been trusted to drive her, "losing his head" as they call it, and jumping out directly the said poney set off—in return for which the wheels went over his legs; and here he lies plastered all over—like Mr. Squeers—"a brown-paper parcel chock full of nothing but groans."

My other half kept her seat, and happily is none the worse, though the horse fell over a steep bank, a mere bundle of legs, with a head tucked up somewhere inside. She begs to be kindly remembered to Mrs. Horne,[†1] and very sincerely hopes that when we come back to town, they will become acquainted, preparatory to sundry fireside evenings.

Always My Dear Horne | Very truly Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

R. H. Horne Esquire

To JOSEPH C. KING, 10 AUGUST 1848*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Broadstairs. | Tenth August 1848.

My Dear Sir

We have kept Charley and Walter here, until now, that they might have the benefit of some sea-bathing. They are coming back to school tomorrow. I hope to bring them myself, about five or six o'Clock in the afternoon.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Joseph C. King Esquire

To ROBERT LAMOND, 10 AUGUST 1848

MS Yale University Library.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Tenth August 1848.

My Dear Sir

As I am anxious to make up the Shakspeare Curatorship accounts as soon as possible, may I ask you, at your convenience, to let me have the Glasgow balance-sheet, and to remit the balance to my account at Coutts's.[†1]

With best remembrances to all friends, believe me,

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Robert Lamond Esquire

To MR LEVESON,[†2] 10 AUGUST 1848

MS Harvard College Library.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Tenth August 1848.

Mr. Charles Dickens sends his compliments to Mr. Leveson, and begs to answer his enquiries:

Mr. Dickens was the Editor of certain memoirs of Grimaldi.[†3] It is not his intention to include "Dombey and Son" in the cheap Edition,[†4] which will close with Martin Chuzzlewit.[†5] And Mr. George Cruikshank never adopted the name "Phiz", which was assumed by another gentleman.[†6]

THE REV. HENRY PIPER,[†7] 10 AUGUST 1848†

MS Yale University Library.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Tenth August 1848.

Dear Sir.

Your letter (I mean your first letter) was duly forwarded to me here. But I had gone to London for a day or two, and missed it. Yesterday morning I received, in London, your second letter. And when I returned here in the evening, I found your first.

I regret to say that I cannot have the pleasure of accepting the invitation with which you honor me. I have come down here for retirement and exercise, long walks and cold plunges, and have "registered a vow"[†8] against all public engagements, however interesting to me, for the next three months at least. I am not the less sensible of the importance of the object to which your letter refers, or the proffered hospitality incidental to it. In both of which regards, I beg you to report me as having a very cordial feeling.

The case of the young woman is not one that I should feel justified in recommending to Miss Coutts. A violent temper would be an immense objection to an applicant for admission into any such asylum, but in the case of this one, which is very small, and where one violent person must of necessity disturb the whole body, I regard it as fatal and conclusive. Experience shews us that of all things it is the most difficult to combat. It is certain to break out, like a madness, in the restraint and enforced self-denial inseparable, under the best circumstances, from such a retreat. No faith whatever, is to be placed in its temporary subjection, under the discipline of a prison, or the correction of a sentence. We have no such means of keeping it down. I think I know the poor girl perfectly, from your description; and I have hardly a doubt that she would be a failure. Two of our Committee are very intelligent governors of large prisons,[†1] and they are hopeless of that kind of subject.

I am Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Reverend Henry Piper

To T. J. SERLE, 10 AUGUST 1848

MS Mr Peter Brandt.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Tenth August 1848.

My Dear Serle

Unless you should think it absolutely necessary for us to meet on Esther Elton's[†2] return, I would propose to defer it until October, as I am curing and pickling here, for winter preservation. But a second summons from you, will produce me at any time.

The account[†3] shall be got from the banker's, and sent to you.

I am sorry the coffee has gone to the dogs, instead of the men and women for whom it was intended. What a surprising time the dogs must have had of it, this year or two past! All sorts of commerce and enterprize, trades and professions, seem to have gone to them. They must have been greatly disconcerted, one would think, by the enormous number of unexpected visitors that have "dropped in", and never taken leave again.

I understand that the British Drayma is kenneled somewhere near the Haymarket, where the dogs are very busy with it indeed.[†4]

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

T. J. Serle Esquire

To THE REV. W. VALENTINE,[†1] 10 AUGUST 1848*

Text from transcript by Mr W. J. Carlton from MS in the possession of Mr J. Stevens Cox.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Tenth August 1848.

Sir.

I beg to enclose you a few scraps of my hand-writing.[†2] Allow me to add that I feel obliged to you for your letter, and that my best wishes attend your Christian enterprise.

I am Sir | Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

The Reverend W. Valentine.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 13 AUGUST 1848

MS Morgan Library.

Broadstairs | Thirteenth August 1848.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I brought Charley to town on Friday Evening; but coming against tide, and having a long detention in the river, we did not arrive until 6 o'Clock. As I knew that would be a very inconvenient time for our calling on you, I carried him direct to school, and came back here myself early next morning.

I found, at home, your kind present, and its accompanying note. Believe me, I accept the picture with feelings of the truest gratification, and shall ever attach a value to it which can only belong to a gift from such a friend.

Mrs. Holdsworth's balance of duties, I enclose. Miss Cunliffe's sketch I gave back to her, last Tuesday, requesting her to have the goodness to give it to you.

Captain Macconnochie's paper,[†3] I will forward to you in a day or two.

I hope you will keep Mrs. Graves and Mrs. Holdsworth to their tether. It is intolerable to be met with such mincing nonsense from those toiling and all-enduring dowagers. I wish I could draw Mrs. Holdsworth's face for you, as she appeared when she opened her objection to me.

Mrs. Dickens is very much obliged by your kind solicitude. I hope she is none the worse, but have cautioned her to keep quiet for some days. It was a very great alarm; and I assure you, on looking at the place, I cannot imagine how she escaped. The man is still disabled, but I don't think myself that he has received any permanent injury. The poney made two or three similar attempts with me, but we are pretty well acquainted, and in the course of five and twenty miles' trot, she seemed to begin to think a quiet life the best.

Whenever you will like to have a conference on the proposed arrangements, I will come to Stratton Street or elsewhere at 11 o'Clock, if you will give me a day or two's notice.

With regards to Mr. and Mrs. Brown

Believe me dear Miss Coutts | Ever Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To FREDERICK DICKENS, 13 AUGUST 1848

MS Benoliel Collection.

Broadstairs | Sunday Thirteenth August | 1848.

My Dear Fred.

Devonshire Terrace is so inundated with begging letters, that I have given Topping written instructions not to take in anything that he suspects to be one. But as he cannot be certain, I have told him if he does take in any that he afterwards doubts about, not to forward it, but to keep it for you. Will you call there now and then in the morning—open such communications—and write in answer merely that I am out of town until the winter, and have begged you not to forward to me, in the country, anything of the kind, as my experience of such communications has decided me not to heed them, and to endeavour to do good in some more hopeful form?[†1]

I have about three shillings worth of postage to pay today for Imposter's[†2] documents.

You will have heard about the poney and Kate! All well, thank God.

When do you mean to come down again?

Affectionately Ever

CD.

Loves from all.
P.S. I wish you would do what I have asked with a damned packet I send with this. The address is Mr. Frederick De Krüger,[†3] 5 Boundary Place, Blackfriars Road. Pay the postage.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 13 AUGUST 1848

Extract in John Heise catalogue No. 58; MS (signed initials) 1 p.; dated 13 Aug 48.

We shall expect you with pleasure.

To JOHN FORSTER, 17 AUGUST 1848

Mention in Anderson Galleries catalogue No. 4289 (1937); MS (signed initials) on inner flap of envelope; dated Broadstairs, 17 Aug 48.

To MISS FANNY KELLY, 18 AUGUST 1848†

MS Berg Collection. Address: Miss Kelly | 73 Dean Street | Soho.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Eighteenth August 1848. | Friday

My Dear Miss Kelly.

I am staying here, and do not expect to be very soon in town. If you will write to me as you propose, I shall be happy to advise you to the best of my ability.

I should like your letter to the Honorary Secretary of the Manchester Athenæum, better, if it were more direct. I don't think going, like the old riddle, "round and round the house without ever touching the house",[†1] is a good course to adopt towards any one, but with a plain man of business, of all people, it is a very bad one, and quite certain not to succeed. Surely you could write, plainly, and say that you consider yourself entitled to the first scale of remuneration for such things, whatever it be, and that you would feel much obliged if he would tell you what it is.[†2]

If you write to these gentlemen about the favor of the public and so forth, they will get an impression—be sure of it!—that you are a difficult person to deal with, or to hold to a point. And that will be fatal to your design, in the outset. Business, plain straight-forward business, is the only quality that will serve you in correspondence of this kind. Anything else is a rock ahead, and you'll go to pieces on it.

Faithfully Yours always

CD.

To MESSRS COUTTS & CO., 19 AUGUST 1848*

MS Mrs M. Long-Fox.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Saturday, Nineteenth August | 1848

Gentlemen

I beg to enclose a Bank Post Bill for £167..9..0. and to request the favor of your placing that amount to my account.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Coutts & Co.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 20 AUGUST 1848

MS Morgan Library.

Broadstairs | Sunday August Twentieth | 1848.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I will come up on Wednesday Morning, as that is one of the two convenient days you mention, and shall hope to be in Stratton Street by eleven o'Clock. I will bring Captain Macconnochie's paper with me, and your rules also. Generally, I quite concur in them all—I mean your rules. There are one or two little points on which we can say a word or two when we meet. They are merely slight matters which occur to me as being practically difficult of incorporation with the Mark system.

I should have written sooner, but I have been considering the subject and thinking about something for Christmas[†1] besides.

I am happy to say that Mrs. Dickens seems quite well, and has been out with me behind the identical poney—whom I drove to Dover and back yesterday. The servant is getting on very well, and will certainly not be lame, though he is still invalided.

Dear Miss Coutts | Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts

To JOHN RYDER, 20 AUGUST 1848

Extract in C. F. Libbie catalogue, May 1898; dated Broadstairs, 20 Aug 48.

It would have given me great pleasure to have come over to your benefit,[†2] if it were not unfortunately fixed for an evening when I have an engagement with some friends at Canterbury. . . . Accept my good wishes for your health and prosperity in America, and for your prosperous return.[†3]

To THOMAS BEARD, [?20 AUGUST 1848]

Envelope only in Sotheby's catalogue, 21 Feb 1978; addressed Morning Herald Office | Shoe Lane; postmarked ?20 Aug 48.

To W. C. MACREADY, 26 AUGUST 1848†

MS Morgan Library.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Twenty Sixth August 1848. | Saturday.

My Dear Macready.

I was about to write to you when I received your welcome letter.

You know I would come from a somewhat longer distance than this, to give you a hearty God speed and farewell on the eve of your journey.[†1] What do you say to Monday the fourth? Or Saturday the Second? Fix either day—let me know which suits you best—at what hour you expect the Inimitable—and the Inimitable will come up to the scratch like a man and a brother.

[†a]Kate and Georgy send their best loves to you and Mrs. Macready and all the house. Katey is thrown into a tremendous state of mind by your mention of a communication for her, and has been very red in the face ever since I told her of it at breakfast this morning.

I enclose a letter from Mitchell, which you may as well see.[†a]

Permit me in conclusion to nail my Colors to the Mast. Stars and Stripes are so-so—showy perhaps—but my colors is which I am told has the remarkable property of having braved a thousand years the battle AND[†2] the breeze.[†3] Likewise it is the flag of Albion—the Standard of Britain—and Britons, as I am informed, never never never—will—be—Slaves!

THE UNION JACK[†2]

[†b]There is not a throat in Britain, where its lies and glozings and shortcomings, stick more intolerably than in mine. And, as a general principle, I have no such thing as patriotism about me. But[†b] my sentiment is:—[†c] Success to the United States as a golden campaigning ground, but blow the United States to 'tarnal smash,[†4] as an Englishman's place of residence.[†5] Gentlemen, air you all charged?—[†c]

Affectionately Ever

CD.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, ?27 AUGUST 1848

Mention in next.

To PETER CUNNINGHAM, 27 AUGUST 1848

MS Dickens House.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Twenty Seventh August | 1848.

My Dear Cunningham.

Not remembering who are the bankers of the Shakespeare House Committee,[†1] I have written to confess my ignorance in that wise to the writer of the enclosed: adding that I have forwarded his letter to you who are the Honorary Treasurer of the renowned Body, and who (I have said) will have the pleasure of communicating with him.

What a jolly summer!

Ever Yours

CD.

To MRS BROWN, 28 AUGUST 1848

MS Morgan Library. Address: Mrs. Brown | 81 Piccadilly | London.

Broadstairs. | Monday Twenty Eighth August | 1848.

My Dear Mrs. Brown.

Will you tell Miss Coutts that I have read her suggestions several times, and think I quite understand them. I will immediately set about drawing up the different papers she refers to, for her revision. The Mark tables I believe are perfectly clear and simple as I have sketched them, but I will keep them a day or so to look at again with a fresh eye, before I send a copy to Miss Coutts. I do not propose to encumber them with any explanations, but to make all explanatory matter a part of the other printed papers.

I will write to Miss Coutts either tomorrow or Wednesday, proposing a day either at the end of this week, or the very beginning of next, for our talk,—and for that day I shall hold myself entirely at her disposal. I am waiting for a note from Macready to whom I have given a choice of days for a farewell confabulation before he goes to America—and one journey to town will thus answer both purposes. I am greatly obliged by your kind offer of a bed, but I can sleep at home quite comfortably. I will bring all the papers Miss Coutts suggests, with me. The Mark Table itself, I will send her, when I write to propose our day of meeting.

Mrs. Dickens is not very well, but I don't think the poney is to blame. She sends her kindest regards.

I am beginning to think about Christmas, when I hope we may have another little reading in Devonshire Terrace.

Dear Mrs. Brown | Very faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Brown.

To W. C. BENNETT, 29 AUGUST 1848

Text from Testimonials of Intellectual Ability [compiled by W. C. Bennett], privately printed, 1871, p. 19.

Broadstairs, Kent, | Twenty ninth August, 1848

Dear Sir,

I beg to assure you, in reply to your obliging note, that I have felt from the first the liveliest interest in those verses which you have kindly sent me from time to time,[†1] and that I have very highly esteemed those marks of your remembrance. Believe me I feel indebted to you for giving me this opportunity of saying, that I have been deeply moved and affected by some of your writings, and that I thank you with all my heart.

Dear Sir, | Faithfully yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. C. Bennett, Esq.

To G. L. CHESTERTON, [29 AUGUST 1848]

Mention in next.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 29 AUGUST 1848

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street | Piccadilly | London.

Broadstairs. | Twenty Ninth August 1848. | Tuesday.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

If Friday next will suit you, I and the large box will appear, with drafts of all the documents you have suggested.[†2]

I infer from Mrs. Brown's note, that if you should be disengaged on that day, you mean to ask me to dinner. Would you not wish to see me in the morning also? I intended yesterday, to have sent you the Mark Table with this, but I think it will be better for me to reserve it, until I am by, to give all needful explanation.

Will you write me a word to say at what time I shall come? All times between eleven in the morning and ten at night (when I will make another engagement) will be alike to me.

I have heard from Mr. Chesterton this morning, and he is evidently a little hurt and mortified by the impression that the "Committee"[†3] are rather summarily discharged of their duties, and have no very powerful existence but in name. I have written to give him another aspect of the case; but as he has always been greatly interested in the design, and is a very sincere and zealous man, perhaps, if you should see him again, you would not object to set him right yourself. I merely mention this, because I think you ought to know it, and because no one else can so gracefully reassure him. Looking at the matter from his point of view too, I don't think he sees it in an unreasonable light.

Dear Miss Coutts | Always most faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 31 AUGUST 1848*

MS Morgan Library.

Broadstairs | Thursday Evening | Thirty First August 1848.

Dear Miss Coutts.

Your letter has just now arrived—having been posted, I suppose, too late for this morning's delivery. I think the best way of proceeding, with a view to our progress, is, to send you the enclosed papers[†1] to look over—to meet you at Mrs. Brown's at 7 tomorrow—and, after talking the matter over, with you there—to come to Stratton Street on Saturday (when I shall remain in town) at your own time in the morning. Not being sure at what hour I should want to leave here tomorrow, I have so mismanaged things, as that it will be a great convenience to me to remain here until the post is in—and then come up by the boat. I hope (as I have said) that my doing so, will rather facilitate our advancement, than otherwise.

I write in haste, to save the post.

Dear Miss Coutts | Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

I can't help opening the note to say that I haven't lost a scrap of heart—no, not even on account of wretched little Adelaide Thomas!

September

To MRS CHARLES DICKENS, 1 SEPTEMBER 1848

MS British Museum. Address: Mrs. Charles Dickens | Broadstairs | Kent.

Devonshire Terrace | Friday afternoon ½ past 5.
First September 1848

My Dearest Kate.

Finding there is time to write, by sending this to Vere Street, I dispatch it to say that I am this moment returned from Hornsey—where I found poor Fanny in one of those paroxysms described by my father (the worst one she has had), and could have conceived nothing more terrific. No words can express the terrible aspect of suffering and suffocation—the appalling noise in her throat—and the agonized look around, which lasted, I should think a quarter of an hour. From that, she sunk into a kind of lethargy. Sleep seems quite gone, until the time arrives for waking no more.[†2]

I do not think it possible that such a condition can endure long. If anything should occur, I will send you down a message by the telegraph.

Love to Georgy, and to the darlings.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 2 SEPTEMBER 1848*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace. | Second September 1848.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

My poor sister died this morning. I am going back to make some family arrangements[†1] and fetch Mrs. Dickens. I will come to you on Tuesday at half past two, unless you advise me otherwise.

Faithfully Yours ever

CHARLES DICKENS

To W. C. MACREADY, 2 SEPTEMBER 1848*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday Second September | 1848.

My Dear Macready.

You know that no common occurrence would prevent my coming to you today. My poor sister died this morning. I am going back to fetch Kate, and will come to see you on Tuesday forenoon.

Loves to all. Ever Affectionately Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To FREDERICK DICKENS, 3 SEPTEMBER 1848

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Sunday Third September 1848.

My Dear Fred.

I will not express an opinion in reference to the enclosed letter,[†2] as I could say nothing of it that would be gratifying to you.

Neither will I put it to your reasoning consideration how far a young lady who cannot make a stand against[†3] the postponement of her marriage on the most unanswerable ground,[†1] is likely to make a stand against the struggles and sacrifices it is certain to demand of her.

Neither will I ask you whether you see nothing in all this, so opposed to the commonest social delicacies and restraints, as to be very new and startling.

But, once again, and for the last time, I must do my duty by protesting against this connexion as fatal and hopeless. I regard the hour in which I encountered this family, as the most unfortunate of my life.[†2] And I do in my soul believe that the step you are about to take, is as disastrous and ill-advised a one as ever was taken in the like direction by mortal man.

Less than this, I can not say. More I will not—for it would be fruitless—and with this, I leave the subject for ever.

Your letter, received last night, gives me, for the first time, a piece of information which sets your position in an entirely new light before me. I learn from it that you are in debt. I never supposed it possible that you would contemplate marriage, on your income, with such fetters on your limbs. Whenever I have thought that you owed money, I have supposed that you were gradually paying it, and that you could, very reasonably and easily, do so—taking time. When I wrote from Paris, this was my belief. And I thought that if I could assist you to furnish your house or lodgings,—your income being clear before you—I should be justified in such an outlay. But, whether I can reconcile it with any remembrance of my children and the heavy claims upon me, to fling any sum of money into the unfathomable sea of such a marriage with debt upon its breast, is a grave question on the deliberation of which I enter for the first time. And I can not possibly enter on it now, unless I have the means before me, in writing, of ascertaining what your liabilities are, and what your exact position is. And I must ask to know that, apart from the intangible and baseless visions with which you delude yourself of extraordinary[†3]

To HENRY BURNETT, 5 SEPTEMBER 1848

Summary and date in Burnett to F. G. Kitton, n.d. (MS Mr H. W. Watkins).

Referring to expenses he had "insisted on undertaking" from the time of Fanny's "coming to die in London" until Burnett's return with the children to Manchester, and mentioning a sum he was adding for the boys.

To THOMAS BEARD, 6 SEPTEMBER 1848

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Place | Edgeware Road.
On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Sixth September 1848.

My Dear Beard

Many thanks for your kind note, which is quite a relief to me, as I feared you must be ill. We shall certainly remain at Broadstairs until the end of the month, and shall be delighted to see you whenever you come. But I hope you will defy the Baldwinians,[†1] and stay at least a fortnight.

Poor Fanny is to be buried on Friday. I begin to think, like the Monk who spoke to Wilkie, that we are the Shadows, and Pictures the more robust realities.[†2]

Affectionately Always

CD.

To THE EARL OF MULGRAVE,[†3] 6 SEPTEMBER 1848

Envelope only,[†4] MS Victoria & Albert Museum (Enthoven Collection). Address: The Earl of Mulgrave | Mulgrave Castle | Yorkshire. PM 6 Sep 48.

To JOHN LEECH, 6 SEPTEMBER 1848

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: John Leech Esquire | Albion Hotel | Broadstairs | Kent.
On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Wednesday Sixth September | 1848.

My Dear Leech.

I hoist this signal in token of our return to Broadstairs, soon.

My poor sister is to be buried on Friday, and we purpose coming back by the Little Western on Saturday Morning.

Kate and Georgy send their loves to Mrs. Leech. To which I add something as near my ditto, as is lawful and right.

It is a sad thing to see the little deformed boy whom my sister has left half unconscious of his bereavement.—It is sad and melancholy, altogether.

Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

John Leech Esquire.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 8 SEPTEMBER 1848

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Friday Night | Eighth September 1848.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

As I understand, on coming home, that your servant has only just now been here, I write you this hasty note.

Stonnell, in prison, will always, I think, be tolerably good. Out of it, until—perhaps—after great suffering, I have no hope of her. I have no doubt she feels (as God knows she should) what she writes to you.[†1] If she were free, she might feel it still, at odd times, but I firmly believe would feel it to no good end.

Miss Cunliffe misses one of my intentions, and an important one. I will write to her from Broadstairs, and explain. I will send you a proof of the proposed Mark Table, in three or four days, and convey the same explanation to you.

The best Hotel at Liverpool is one of the very best in England—the Adelphi. The Landlord, Mr Radley, is an excellent fellow, and much respected. I have quite a regard for him. I will answer for your being well pleased by his manner and face, and by everything he does for you.

If you will give me, when you write, the name and address of your solicitor (with whom I have never communicated directly) I will explain Mrs. Scott's case[†2] to him, as her son explained it to me the other day. It involves a little point of Property Tax-law (the right is quite plain) which I think it would be best for a practical lawyer to decide.

I am afraid I write illegibly[†3]—but I have been at my Sister's funeral today, and my hand is not as steady as usual.

Dear Miss Coutts | Ever Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To MARY DICKENS, 8 SEPTEMBER 1848

Text from MDGH, I, 199.

Devonshire Terrace | Friday, Sept. 8th, 1848

My Dearest Mamey,

We shall be very glad to see you all again, and we hope you will be very glad to see us. Give my best love to dear Katey, also to Frankey, Alley, and the Peck.[†1]

I have had a nice note from Charley just now. He says it is expected at school that when Walter puts on his jacket, all the Miss Kings[†2] will fall in love with him to desperation and faint away.

Ever, my dear Mamey, | Most affectionately yours,
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To FRANK STONE, 8 SEPTEMBER 1848*

MS Benoliel Collection. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Eighth September 1848.

My Dear Stone.

I have received the enclosed from my friend Regnier who (you will see) labors under a groundless apprehension of your historical inaccuracy.

If there is anything you would wish me to write to him in reply, I will do so very gladly. Address me at Broadstairs, whither I return tomorrow morning.

I will not forget to give you timely notice of the Homeward Bound Voyage pr. Maidstone and Rochester.

Faithfully Ever
CHARLES DICKENS

To EDWARD CHAPMAN, 10 SEPTEMBER 1848*

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Tenth September 1848.

My Dear Sir

I have looked over the half year's accounts to last Midsummer, received this morning. The times are no doubt very much against us; and I am the more glad to see the preposterous mistake of overprinting, that was made in the commencement, set right.[†1]

Will you tell me how it is, that in the general account there is no mention made of Nickleby? Oliver Twist is quoted there, although there is no Sale; but Nickleby is not mentioned at all.[†2]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Edward Chapman Esquire.

To MISS FANNY KELLY, 11 SEPTEMBER 1848†

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel. Address: Miss Kelly | 73 Dean Street | Soho | London. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Eleventh September 1848.

Dear Miss Kelly.

The death of my eldest sister, and many distractions consequent upon it, have prevented my answering your letter sooner.

I am very glad indeed, to hear of your Manchester engagement; and I do not think the Whittington people[†3] of the least importance to you, now. If I were you, I would direct my attention rather to working on from Manchester, and after it, than to any engagement of minor importance before that one comes off. If you could effect any decidedly good one, it would be another thing; but I don't see in what place that can be done. Sea-side company make desperately bad (or, technically speaking, "shy") audiences, and I would advise you to be very careful not to lower the position which Manchester will give you. If you can, availing yourself of the Manchester offer of introduction, make prospective engagements from that place, it seems to me the safest and least hazardous course.

[†a]Mind!—Once more!—Wherever you go, or write, go straight to the point instead of round it, and you will thank me, one of these days, for perpetually flourishing that piece of counsel before your reproachful eyes.[†a]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To G. H. LEWES, 11 SEPTEMBER 1848

MS Dr James Hasson. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Eleventh September 1848.

My Dear Lewes.

You are right in both your positions—Nos. 1 and 2. I am somewhat riddled by stray shots of divers kinds, but your address to me, in propria, is delicate and considerate, and I feel much obliged to you.

I am very sorry to hear about Heraud.[†1] Put me on the Committee[†2] by all means, and against my name write down five pounds—unless that should be more than others give, and then please rate me according to the standard. When I know what I owe you in this wise, I will pay it pr. post.

Best regards, from both sisters and the undersigned, to yourself and Mrs. Lewes.[†3]

Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

G. H. Lewes Esquire

To EDWARD CHAPMAN, 13 SEPTEMBER 1848*

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Wednesday Thirteenth Septr. | 1848.

Dear Sir

I knew, of course, that the Nickleby had not made its appearance in the past accounts; but as that involved no very logical reason why it should never appear in the present or future accounts, I stood in need of the explanation you have given me.

If you will pay the amount of the two balances (£500..3..11) to my account at Coutts's, at your convenience, I shall be obliged.[†4]

I thank you for not sending "tar and pipe-clay". I will write, by this post, to the author of that great performance unknown, and explain to him why I never read MSS.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Edward Chapman Esquire

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 13 SEPTEMBER 1848

MS W. A. Foyle. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Thirteenth September | 1848.

Sir

Messrs. Chapman and Hall have forwarded your letter to me, but not your Manuscript—acting on a general request from me not to forward any documents, except at my desire.

I regret that I cannot serve you in reference to your book. I never read Manuscripts; for I am asked to do so, by so many correspondents, that compliance would be impossible, and would leave me no leisure for any other kind of occupation. And even if I were to read yours, and to think it good, my opinion would not serve you in the least, as a publisher would prefer his own, and act upon it. I state what I know of my own experience, in this regard, and not what I believe.

In begging, therefore, to be excused from complying with your request, I do what is at once imperative upon myself, and plainest and fairest towards you.

I am Sir | Your faithful Servant

CHARLES DICKENS

P.S. I must add, that in answering an anonymous letter, I deviate from my usual course; as I hold no person justified in adopting that most objectionable form of address, or entitled to expect a reply.

To EDGAR GOLDSMITH,[†1] 13 SEPTEMBER 1848

Mention in Parke-Bernet Galleries catalogue, Jan 1947; MS (3rd person) 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 13 Sep 48.

Referring to Goldsmith's proposed trip to America.

To MISS EMMELINE MONTAGUE, 14 SEPTEMBER 1848

Text from T. E. Pemberton, CD and the Stage, 1888, p. 134.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Fourteenth September, 1848.

My Dear Miss Montague,

Allow me to forward you, by favour of our friend, Mark Lemon, the enclosed cheque,[†1] which is the mere business part of a crowd of pleasant remembrances I shall always associate with you, that are not to be coined into any sort of money I know of.

Believe in my sincere interest in all that concerns your prosperity and happiness, and in the real satisfaction I shall have if I can ever testify it by any means of usefulness to you.

Always faithfully yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Emmeline Montague.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 17 SEPTEMBER 1848

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs | Sunday Seventeenth September | 1848.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I send you a proof (only received this morning) of the Mark Table. It shall not be finally printed, until I have heard from you.

I have received no tidings from Mrs. Holdsworth, and therefore have no doubt that all is going on well. I dare say I shall hear from her, in the course of tomorrow.

There is the finest weather here, I ever saw. It don't seem to agree with Rogers,[†2] who is horribly cross.

Dear Miss Coutts | Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To MRS COWDEN CLARKE AND MISS NOVELLO,[†3] 19 SEPTEMBER 1848

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs. | Nineteenth September 1848.

Dear Mrs. Clarke and Miss Novello.

We, the undersigned, truly mindful in our hearts, of your kind remembrance of us in your beautiful and ever-carefully-to-be preserved gift,[†4] and of the happy hours we have passed together, entreat you to accept our hearty thanks, proffered in all love and friendship. They have been (like Royal Charlie in the Jacobite song) "lang o comin' ";[†1] but they will be longer still o'going—out of our minds. At least we hope so, for such remembrances can only go out with our five senses, and we hope to keep ours for these many years.

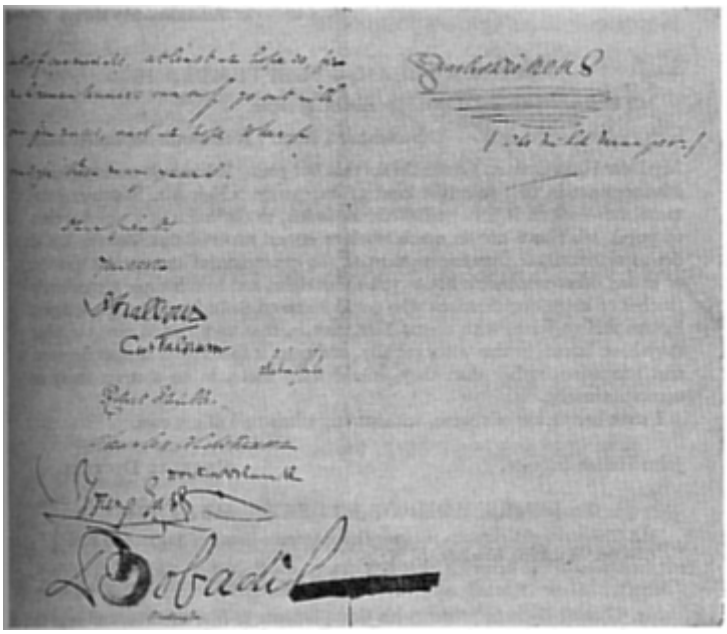
Dear friends | Yours ever

Shallow | Custalorum[†2] | Abraham Slender | Robert Flexible
Charles Coldstream | Doctor Blank | Young Gas | Bobadil |
P. Snobbington[†3]

CHARLES DICKENS
(The Mild Manager)



To FREDERICK DICKENS, 19 SEPTEMBER 1848*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs | Nineteenth September 1848.

My Dear Fred.

With however dry a pertinacity I strive to hold to the mere letter of your note, avoiding all those troubles inseparable from its spirit which are at issue between us, I cannot understand it, sufficiently to decide on my reply.

Do you owe £200 now?

If you do not, what do you owe?

If you do owe £200 now, and contemplate paying that sum of debt, supposing you could get the money (of the hopefulness of which I design to say nothing here) how do you propose to establish a home? By getting into new debt? Or by what means?

If you put it to me to answer your letter without having an answer to these enquiries,[†1] I will do so. But I must answer it, then, on my own idea of the case, and that may be a wrong one, or an incomplete one.

Affectionately always

CD.

To JOHN HULLAH, 19 SEPTEMBER 1848

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Nineteenth September 1848.

My Dear Hullah. Miss Coutts thinks that our young ladies have made sufficient advancement in that scientific kind of instruction which Mr. Bannister communicates—which is better adapted, she holds, to the wants of a superior class of pupils who have not so much work to attend to—and therefore she would desire to terminate that engagement at the expiration of the current quarter, or at any other reasonable notice you think right, and to substitute some female teacher of lower qualifications who could come on Saturday Evenings, and sing hymns and so forth, with them. Her wish is, that they should now use what they have learnt, in this wise, socially, and turn it to account in their devotion and relaxation, rather than they should learn more, as an abstract study or accomplishment.

I state her views, of course, without any admixture of my own.

Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

John Hullah Esquire.

To JAMES MONROE,[†2] 19 SEPTEMBER 1848*

MS University of Kentucky. Address: James Monroe Esquire | 122 Jermyn Street | London. Mourning envelope.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Nineteenth September 1848.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his Compliments to Mr. Monroe, and begs to say, in reply to Mr. Monroe's note of enquiry, that Mr. Fletcher[†1] is at present staying (he believes) in Somersetshire, but that he does not know, exactly, how a letter to that gentleman should be addressed. If he should come to London and call upon Mr. Dickens, Mr. Dickens will communicate Mr. Monroe's note to him.

To JOHN LEECH, 21 SEPTEMBER 1848

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: Private. Favored by J. T. Gordon Esqre.[†2] | John Leech Esquire. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs | Twenty First September 1848.

My Dear Leech.

Mr. Pitt, being asked to dinner by the Duchess of Gordon, at eight o'Clock, replied that he was engaged to sup with the Bishop of Lincoln at seven.[†3]

Faithfully Ever
CHARLES DICKENS

To FREDERICK DICKENS, 24 SEPTEMBER 1848

MS John Rylands Library.

Broadstairs | Sunday Twenty Fourth September | 1848.

Dear Frederick.

Do not deceive yourself, and discover it too late. I shall never justify the mean opinion you have of me, when you suppose it possible that such a Thing as your letter of Friday, can move me in the least.

CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS ELIZABETH SCOTT, 24 SEPTEMBER 1848

MS Benoliel Collection.

Broadstairs, Kent | Twenty Fourth September | 1848.

Mr. Charles Dickens sends his Compliments to Mrs. Scott, and begs to inform her that he has (at Miss Coutts's request) finally referred the question of the payment of the Income Tax assessment on Urania Cottage, to Miss Coutts's Solicitors. It is the opinion of those gentlemen that Miss Coutts is bound to pay the assessment and to deduct it from the rent; and that she has no choice in the matter, or power, of doing otherwise. But they add that "Mrs. Scott might probably be relieved from the trouble of obtaining a return of the Tax, were she to apply to the Stamp office for an order to discharge the property from the assessment."

To AUGUSTUS TRACEY, 26 SEPTEMBER 1848*

MS University of Texas. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Twenty Sixth September 1848.

My Dear Tracey.

You may perhaps have no intention of attending the next Shepherd's Bush Committee Meeting. But as I am proposing to all concerned, to have it on Wednesday the 4th. of October at the usual hour (instead of Tuesday the 3rd. when I may not have returned to town) I trouble you with this.

All well. A gale of wind blowing just now, and thick squalls coming up from the South East.— Rather nautical this.

Ever Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

P.S. Timber's respectful compliments to his young friend.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 26 SEPTEMBER 1848*

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Twenty Sixth September | 1848.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

The printing of the Mark Tables is delayed until I hear from you. I mention this, as it is possible you may not have received a proof which I sent by post to Stratton Street.

I would propose to have the next Committee Meeting on Wednesday the 4th. at the usual hour, instead of Tuesday the 3rd. when I hardly think I shall be home in time. Will you communicate this to Mr. Tennant (whose address I don't know) and to Mr. Shuttleworth if he should be in town? I have taken care to give notice to all the rest.

Dear Miss Coutts | Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To FRANK STONE, 26 SEPTEMBER 1848*

MS Benoliel Collection. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Twenty Sixth September | 1848.

My Dear Stone.

We intend leaving here on Saturday Morning—getting home, either on Monday or Tuesday: most probably the latter. What do you say? Maidstone—Rochester—&c.

Ever Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS KIRKLAND,[†1] 27 SEPTEMBER 1848

MS Seattle Public Library. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Twenty Seventh September | 1848.

Dear Madam.

I fear I shall not be in town before the end of next week; but if, after that delay, you should still wish me to make an appointment with you, I shall be very happy, I assure you, to have that gratification.

Believe me | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Kirkland.

To JOHN KENYON,[†2] 29 SEPTEMBER 1848*

MS Dickens House. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs | Twenty Ninth September | 1848.

My Dear Mr. Kenyon.

I very much regret to say that only a day or two before I received your note, I had promised my Orphan School votes. Otherwise, I need not add I should have wished them no better or more useful fortune than to have been made yours.

Mrs. Dickens and her sister beg me to send you their kind regards.

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Kenyon Esquire.

To JOHN FORSTER, [AUGUST-SEPTEMBER 1848]

Summary and extract in F, VI, iii, 495. Date: during his 1848 stay at Broadstairs, according to Forster.

Reporting himself thrice wet through on a single day, dressed four times, and finding all sorts of great things, brought out by the rains, among the rocks on the sea-beach.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?LATE SEPTEMBER 1848]

Extract in F, VI, iii, 495. Date: during CD's 1848 stay at Broadstairs, according to Forster; if, as seems almost certain, "Emmeline" is Miss Montague, letter written after 14 Sep, when she was still unmarried (To Miss Montague, that day).

Sketching morsels of character, including this. F†3 is philosophical, from sunrise to bedtime: chiefly in the French line, about French women going mad, and in that state coming to their husbands, and saying, "Mon ami, je vois ai trompé. Voici les lettres de mon amant!" Whereupon the husbands take the letters and think them waste paper, and become extra-philosophical at finding that they really were the lover's effusions: though what there is of philosophy in it all, or anything but unwholesomeness, it is not easy to see. . . . Likewise about dark shades coming over our wedded Emmeline's†1 face at parties; and about F, handing her to her carriage, and saying, "May I come in, for a lift homeward?" and she bending over him out of window, and saying in a low voice, I DARE NOT! And then of the carriage driving away like lightning leaving F more philosophical than ever on the pavement.

To JOHN FORSTER, [LATE SEPTEMBER 1848]

Extracts in F, VI, iii, 495-6[aa] written at "the close of September"; and F, VI, iv, 507[bb] written at the end of "his 1848 Broadstairs holiday", according to Forster.

He twits Forster for a broken promise in not joining him. [a]We are reasonably jolly, but rurally so; going to bed o'nights at ten, and bathing o'mornings at half-past seven; and not drugging ourselves with those dirty and spoiled waters of Lethe that flow round the base of the great pyramid.[a] Mentions the friends who had left him—Gordon,†2 the Leeches, Lemon, Egg and Stone. [a]Reflection and pensiveness are coming. I have NOT "—seen Fancy write

With a pencil of light
On the blotter so solid, commanding the sea!"†3

but I shouldn't wonder if she were to do it, one of these days. Dim visions of divers things are floating around me; and I must go to work, head foremost, when I get home. I am glad, after all, that I have not been at it here; for I am all the better for my idleness, no doubt. . . . Roche was very ill last night, and looks like one with his face turned to the other world, this morning.†4 When are you coming? Oh what days and nights there have been here, this week past![a]

[b]At last I am a mentally matooring of the Christmas book—or, as poor Macrone†5 used to write, "booke," "boke," "buke,"†6 &c.[b]

To JOHN FORSTER, [LATE SEPTEMBER 1848]

Extract in F, VI, iii, 496. Date: shortly before Sat 30 Sep, when CD left Broadstairs.

Suggesting that Forster should meet him on his way back and join him in a walking-excursion home. You will come down booked for Maidstone (I will meet you at Paddock-wood),[†1] and we will go thither in company over a most beautiful little line of railroad. The eight miles walk from Maidstone to Rochester, and a visit to the Druidical altar[†2] on the wayside, are charming. This could be accomplished on the Tuesday; and Wednesday we might look about us at Chatham, coming home by Cobham on Thursday.[†3]

To RICHARD QUIN,[†4] [?SEPTEMBER 1848]

Mention in To Mrs Watson, 5 Oct 48.

October

To THE REV. WILLIAM DRAGE,[†5] 1 OCTOBER 1848†

MS University of California, Los Angeles. On mourning paper.

Bull Hotel, Rochester | Sunday First October 1848.

Dear Sir.

I understand here, that you desire to speak to me in reference to Miss Coutts's Home. Pray allow me to assure you that I recollect you perfectly well,[†6] and that I shall have much interest and pleasure in seeing you again. I will call upon you tomorrow morning at halfpast ten,[†7] and I hope the case that has awakened your sympathy, may prove admissible into my excellent friend's Institution.[†8]

[†a]I trust to my childish remembrance for your christian name.[†a]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Reverend William Drage.

To MRS CHISHOLM,[†1] 5 OCTOBER 1848

Extract in Swann Galleries catalogue No. 116; MS (3rd pers.) 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 5 Oct 48.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Miss Chisholm,[†2] and begs to become a subscriber to her undertaking[†3]—and to enclose the amount of his subscription.[†4]

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 5 OCTOBER 1848

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Birthwaite Hotel | Windermere | Westmoreland. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace. | Thursday October Fifth | 1848.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

On coming home the night before last, I found your two notes, and your MSS. I think I read the latter correctly, and that you will find the proof sheets pretty accurate. The explanation shall go to the printer's tomorrow (I am just now having the copy made from dictation) and I shall hope to send you the proofs by next day's post—including the amended Mark Table. Will you lose no time in returning them to me? They are all very anxious at the Home to begin.

I was there, yesterday. Everything seemed comfortable and quiet. There were no complaints of any kind.

Mrs. Holdsworth had, about a fortnight ago, fifteen pounds for petty cash. The bills paid yesterday were £32. 12. 6.

I received from you	£50..	0..	0
I have paid	47..	12..	6
Consequently, I have in hand	£2..	7..	6

The blind-Maker's bill, in accordance with his estimate, has come in. It amounts to £19.. 6.. 0. There is also a bill for books of £19.. 7.. 6. But of this, I have some part (I think) in hand, out of a little balance you left with me when we first settled accounts, for printer and bookseller.

The field at the side, and the field at the bottom of the garden—in all about 2 ½ acres—can now be rented, if you wish, on reasonable terms. As you were thinking of a removal, one of these days,[†1] I suppose you will not take them? But an answer must be given at once. Therefore, will you empower me to decline, if that be your wish? Or to come to some decision?[†2]

I hope I have the name of your hotel, right? I have been hammering again and again in the most ridiculous manner, at a rather illegible passage in one of your notes. I read it "____ could simplify it more". Who could, was the great question I had to solve. Proglyns? It looked like Proglyns. I began to think whether I had ever met any clear-headed gentleman of that name, at your house. Not remembering him, I looked at it again. "Judy's son" it was then, plainly. But I rejected that, as a manifest impossibility. Tennyson—July sawyer—Wednesday night—p.n.d.y.s.G. N. (which looked like a Welsh name) until all at once I found it was "perhaps you"—and was very much relieved and complimented.

I think the explanation admirably calculated to supply what is otherwise wanting in the spirit of the system, and am really sanguine on the subject.

Best regards to Mr. and Mrs. Brown.

Dear Miss Coutts | Always Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS MACREADY, 5 OCTOBER 1848*

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Thursday Fifth October | 1848.

My Dear Mrs. Macready

All heartfelt and fervent congratulations on his safe arrival—which I regard as the first of a series of triumphant congratulations on his safe return!—

We had been watching the papers, down at Broadstairs, for news of the Ship; and, seeing her reported to have arrived at Halifax,[†1] drank her health, and his, and yours, with acclamations.

Ever Your faithful friend

CHARLES DICKENS

To DR JAMES KAY-SHUTTLEWORTH, 5 OCTOBER 1848†

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Fifth October 1848.

My Dear Sir

Coming home from Broadstairs, I find your kind letter, to which I immediately indite this reply.

I wish it were a ready acceptance of your hospitality!—[†a]But I am going to write a little Christmas book[†2]—and have not begun it—and should do nothing in your old hall,[†3] I know—and must hermetically seal myself up, in my own room, here, in the mornings—and wander about the streets full of faces, at night.

I feel a sort of Roman dignity—a lofty constancy—in writing this, and feeling how very much it goes against the grain to do it.[†a]

Perhaps we may have another little reading, before Christmas?[†4] And perhaps Mrs. Shuttleworth will come? So says Mrs. Dickens in a tone of sober enquiry, as she sits here begging to be remembered. [†b]I say nothing, but, frowning very much, proceed at once to the flourish belonging to my signature,[†b] lest I should give way yet, before finishing.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

H. Kaye[†5] Shuttleworth Esquire

To THE HON. MRS RICHARD WATSON, 5 OCTOBER 1848

MS Huntington Library. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Fifth October 1848.

My Dear Mrs. Watson.

I write this hasty note to tell you that I can't tell you what pleasure it gave me, on coming home from Broadstairs the night before last, to find that welcome mark of your remembrance awaiting me—and to hang it forthwith on the staircase —where I esteem it, believe me, as a very precious possession, and look at it when I go up and down, with the double gratification that attaches to it as a thing of delightful association, and as a most beautiful and faithful little work of art.[†1] I am quite charmed with it, and could be sentimental here (and would) but in a tender regard and consideration for you.

I wonder what will come of the Christmas book! I have entered on the first stage of its composition this morning, which is, sitting frowning horribly at a quire of paper, and falling into a state of inaccessibility and irascibility which utterly confounds and scares the House. The young family peep at me through the bannisters[†2] as I go along the hall; and Kate and Georgina quail (almost) when I stalk by them.

What if I were to go to the Great St. Bernard, and get snowed up from mankind! I shall carry the picture with me, if I am driven to that extremity, and, standing on the shore of that Lake comparing it with the original, will recal[†3] that bright morning when we were all laughing there, together.[†4]

I had a very cordial letter from your brother[†5] the other day—which looked hot and thirsty in the very paper.[†6] I lost no time in writing him an answer, in which I propounded various enquiries to him about the Blacks as a species.[†7] When I receive his reply, I shall enter on a few other speculations.

Accept our affectionate remembrances, and convey them to your good husband, whose very sincere friend, and yours, believe me I am always.

CHARLES DICKENS

To JAMES PHIPPEN,[†8] 6 OCTOBER 1848*

MS Dickens House. On mourning paper.

London, 1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Sixth October 1848.

Sir.

Pray allow me to acknowledge the receipt of the two books[†9] you were so kind as to send me at Maidstone. For which, and for the obliging note that accompanied them, I beg you to accept my best thanks.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

James Phippen Esquire.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 7 OCTOBER 1848*

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday Evening | Seventh October 1848.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I receive the enclosed, only just in time to send them by this post. Therefore my communication must be very brief.

I propose to amend the placard for the bedrooms, by inserting all the heads mentioned in the Mark Table.[†1] The card also.

The explanation wants a more defined and plain division between the three sets of columns. If you think it plain in other respects, I will take care to arrange this with the Printer.

I have not put many words, or the particularly appropriate words, into Italics; firstly, because I doubt whether it would not direct attention rather to bits and scraps of the explanation than to the whole of it; and secondly, because Italics are always considered objectionable in printed text, with a view to clearness and general plainness. But if you will underline any words that you wish to be so printed, I will make the necessary cabalistic signs upon the proof for the edification of the Printer.

Do I understand that your letter to Miss Cunliffe is to be printed too?

It will be best, I think, to defer Mrs.-I-don't-know-her-Name's instructions, until we shall have ascertained, by a few weeks' experience, exactly what duties are required from her. It is so very desirable to avoid any departure from what we gravely lay down.

Dear Miss Coutts | Always Faithfully Yours
CD.

To EARL GREY,[†1] [7 OCTOBER 1848]

Summary and date in Benjamin Hawes[†2] to CD, 14 Oct 48 (MS Public Record Office).

Asking whether Dr Lang[†3] held authority from the Government to offer a free passage to emigrants to New South Wales or South Australia, or a grant of land in either Colony.[†4]

To PETER CUNNINGHAM, 9 OCTOBER 1848*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Ninth October 1848.

My Dear Cunningham.

In reply to your letter, I may observe that I have completed the accounts (which I am sorry to say do not shew so large a balance as I could have desired and had hoped),[†5] and that I have called the company together, here, on Saturday next to consider them and a suggestion I shall have to offer thereupon. If Monday would suit the Sub Committee for communicating with me on the general subject, and if it would not be inconvenient to them to meet here, that afternoon at 4 exactly, I should be ready to receive them, and to hand over to them a statement of our position and report of our proceedings.

Will you advise me whether I may consider this, a settled appointment?[†1]

Mrs. Dickens and her sister desire their kind remembrances.

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Peter Cunningham Esquire.

To JOHN LEECH, 9 OCTOBER 1848

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: John Leech Esquire | 32 Notting Hill Terrace | Notting Hill. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday 9th. Oct. 1848.

My Dear Leech.

I would rather, if I may beg leave, change the curry-eating engagement to Wednesday Week at the same hour. Remember the Meeting here, at 2 on Saturday afternoon.

Ever Yours
CD.

To FRANK STONE, 9 OCTOBER 1848*

MS Benoliel Collection. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Ninth October 1848.

My Dear Stone.

I have a business reason for begging leave to change the curry-eating engagement to Wednesday Week, at the same hour. Remember the Meeting here, at 2 on Saturday afternoon.

Ever Yours

CD.

To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, [10] OCTOBER 1848

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel. Date: misdated by CD; Tuesday was 10 Oct in 48. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Tuesday, Ninth October 1848

My Dear Cruikshank,

I propose a Special Meeting here, at 2 o'clock exactly, next Saturday afternoon, to consider the result of the Accounts, and the report that shall be made to the Shakespeare committee.

Faithfully yours

CHARLES DICKENS[†2]

George Cruikshank Esq.

To W. P. FRITH, 10 OCTOBER 1848

MS Victoria & Albert Museum. On mourning paper.

Advertisement.

———

To K——e N——y

The Young lady in black.

K.N. If you will return to your disconsolate friends in Devonshire Terrace, your absence in Ireland will be forgotten and forgiven, and you will be received with open arms.[†1] Think of your dear sister, Dolly,[†2] and how altered her appearance and character are, without you. She is not the same girl. Think, too, of the author of your being, and what he must feel when he sees your place empty, every day!
Tenth October 1848.

To FRANK STONE, 11 OCTOBER 1848*

MS Benoliel Collection. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Wednesday October Eleventh | 1848.

My Dear Stone.

Will you let me know, by Bearer, what the fare from Preston was? I can't send the Accounts to the Copyist without knowing.

Faithfully Ever

CD.

To PETER CUNNINGHAM, 13 OCTOBER 1848

MS Princeton University Library. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Thirteenth October 1848.

My Dear Cunningham.

I shall expect you on Monday, as you propose. The accounts, after all payments, do not shew a greater balance than between five and six hundred pounds.[†3]

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To FREDERICK DICKENS, 13 OCTOBER 1848*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace. | Friday Thirteenth October | 1848.

My Dear Frederick.

I shall say nothing of the aspect in which this business of yours has presented itself to me in the past.

Treating of the present, I shall say no more than that there are, here, a good many claimants on my affectionate remembrance; and that I do not think you, with your income, justified in looking upon me as a pecuniary resource, or myself justified in consenting to be so regarded.

Eighty pounds is a large sum to be taken out of my pocket and flung away. If I were asked to pay it to do you some good, or to procure you some advance in life, that would be another thing. But it is quite unworthy of an independent spirit, to want it for the payment of debts; and that appeal is not one that enlists my sympathy, or that ought to enlist it—as I believe. [†a]Because self-extrication is in your own power.[†a]

I cannot make the least approach to a promise that I will produce this money, in the absence of a perfect knowledge of your position and intentions. If you think proper to tell me to whom, and for what, you would pay it if you had it—what you would then leave unpaid, and how you would propose to clear off that—and exactly what effect these arrangements would have on your intentions as to marriage[†1]—[ ][†2]—

I will then consider your request and decide. But I must repeat that I cannot and do not, in my present absence of enlightenment on these heads, make the least approach to a promise that I will advance the money.[†3]

I shall be at home on Sunday after church. But as all this must be written down, at last, before I could clearly understand it, I think it would be better and speedier, if you wrote it down at first, and gave me an opportunity of reading it, before speaking to you on the subject.

Affectionately always
CHARLES DICKENS

To A. H. ENGELBACH, [OCTOBER 1848]

Mention in To Miss Coutts, 14 Oct 48. Date: probably shortly before writing that letter.

To THE REV. WILLIAM TENNANT, [OCTOBER 1848]

Mention in next. Date: probably shortly before that letter.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 14 OCTOBER 1848

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday Night. | Fourteenth October 1848.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I have made the alterations and additions you suggested in those papers, and they are now finally printing.

Mr. Tennant was so kind as to write to me on the subject of the enclosed, and give me the same explanation. I replied that of course we could do nothing, until we knew your own view of the matter. Mine, I will state now.

On the first head, I have very strong doubts indeed, of the policy of accepting Mrs. Wharton's[†1] offer. I cannot forget the strong emphatic exception that was made by the Matron of the Magdalen as to the hopefulness of any disposal of Martha Goldsmith, at home.[†2] She knows her, much better than we do; and I do not think it fair to the girl, or to the Home, to put her into this association in London.

The second point, as to the Cambridge Heath Laundry, is also a very difficult one. I certainly don't know anybody, in the Home now, whom I could comfortably trust there. I can imagine its being a very desirable place for a comparatively trustworthy girl, and a very wholesome change; but I think that those who are in the Home now, are better in the Home than anywhere else in this country.

Even supposing the head of this Laundry to be a very wise and discreet person—which women of that class very commonly are not, and which ought to be very distinctly shewn to be the case.

The third offer[†1] seems to me the most valuable of all. In reference to the Emigration Committee,[†2] I have received a letter from Mr. Engelbach, begging me to address an official kind of statement of your views and wants to them. But I cannot well do this (as I have told him, in answer) until you shall have returned, and I shall have been able to speak with you on the subject.[†3] It would be an excellent thing to have a steady young woman as Jane Westaway's (and, I suppose, Martha Goldsmith's?) companion on the Voyage.[†4] But we don't yet know—which seems to be the difficulty at this moment, of settling the matter—where they are to go or how they are to go, or that they are going at all in this young woman's direction.

You know Miss Newton,[†5] I presume? I don't.

With best regards to Mr. and Mrs. Brown, dear Miss Coutts

Faithfully Ys. alwys.

CD.

To MARK LEMON, 15 OCTOBER 1848

MS Benoliel Collection. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace. | Sunday October Fifteenth | 1848.

My Dear Lemon.

I was quite sure of your authority, and reported it accordingly. I apprehended you had seen Leech before you saw me. I consider it quite impossible for any man to hold, on a consideration of all the figures and circumstances, that that deduction could be made with any spirit and manliness.[†6]

Ever affecy.

CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, [?16 OCTOBER 1848]*

MS Morgan Library. Date: after 26 Sep 48, when CD told Miss Coutts that he did not have Tennant's address; he was presumably writing on Mon 16 Oct, when the Sub-Committee of the Shakespeare Society called on him (To Cunningham, 9 and 13 Oct).

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Morning

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I am unfortunately obliged to wait at home this morning to receive some gentlemen from the Shakespeare Committee, whose intended visit I had forgotten, and with whom I have an appointment. I will call on you, if you please, tomorrow, at 12. In the meantime can you send me Mr. Tennant's address,[†1] in order that I may let him know there is no Committee tomorrow.

I was at the Home yesterday. The volatile little Fairy was at church.

Dear Miss Coutts | Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To HENRY AUSTIN, 18 OCTOBER 1848*

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace. | Eighteenth October 1848. | Wednesday

My Dear Henry.

I want a Copy (to send to someone in the Country) of your Second Report.[†2] If you have one at hand, will you let John have it? If not, will you do what is as good, and tell him where to buy it?

Ever affecy.
CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 18 OCTOBER 1848*

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Wednesday Eighteenth October | 1848.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I have addressed and sent the letter to Lord Grey, this morning. It contains everything that requires to be said, I think. And I cannot but imagine that the Government may be a better assistant (if it will) than the Emigration Companies.[†3]

I was at the Home the evening before last. All quiet and well.

The Dairy, I should say, would certainly be practicable now.

I asked about Miss Newton, because she was somehow associated in my mind with Lord Ashley,[†1] who makes such mistakes (he seems to be a kind of amiable Bull, in a China-Shop of good intentions), that I am afraid of his agents.[†2]

I shall hope to hear from you when you come home. If you wish to make an appointment with me, afterwards, will you make it in the afternoon. I am trying to be industrious in the mornings.

Dear Miss Coutts | Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 18 OCTOBER 1848

Mention in Sotheby's catalogue, July 1908; dated Devonshire Terrace, 18 Oct 48.

To HENRY GLASSFORD BELL,[†3] 20 OCTOBER 1848*

MS Private.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate, Regents Park
Twentieth October 1848.

Dear Sir.

I wish to thank you, very particularly, for the mark of remembrance I have lately received from you.

Not alone for the pleasure I have had in the perusal of that book,[†4] and in tracing the delicate, gentle, graceful spirit that pervades it—

But also for the privilege of being admitted to this participation in what I know to be sacred in your remembrance, and in that of your dearest ties on earth.[†5]

Believe me, I feel no ordinary emotion, and use no common courtesy, in thanking you, and entreating you to receive the assurance of my sympathy and regard.

My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Henry Glassford Bell Esquire

To JOHN LEECH, 23 OCTOBER 1848

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: John Leech Esquire | 38 Notting Hill Terrace | Notting Hill. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace. | Monday Twenty Third October | 1848.

My Dear Leech.

There is rather a good Britannia Saloon Bill, out, announcing a gentleman with a wooden leg to dance the Highland Fling. There is a portrait of him in the bill, with his wooden leg highly ornamented with rosettes.[†1]

It appears to me that this demands our attention. Egg says he would like to go with us, and that if you will send him round a note, propoging an evening and a time for calling on him, he will, with yearnings, respond. Therefore if you'll send me one line, mentioning what evening this week you'll both call here—say at 7—I will be (as you know I always am)[†2] to the fore at the appointed time.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To CHARLES MANBY, 24 OCTOBER 1848

Mention in American Art Association catalogue, Feb 1929; MS 2 pp.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 24 Oct 48.

Making an arrangement for Manby to visit him.

To JOHN LEECH, 25 OCTOBER 1848

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: John Leech Esquire | 38 Notting Hill Terrace | Notting Hill. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace. | Wednesday Twenty Fifth October | 1848.

My Dear Leech.

On Friday Evening I shall expect you, and shall be (D.V.) ready for you.[†3]

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 26 OCTOBER 1848*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street | Piccadilly. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Thursday Twenty Sixth October 1848.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I am afraid Furze[†1] is rather thorny and irritating.

I send you so much of a note from Mr. Chesterton to me as relates to her.[†2] I had been there on the previous night, when I thought Furze looking grimmer and more gratuitously vinegary than she need. I think she has an idea that she is to serve as a sort of human rasp, or file, or nutmeg-grater, in respect of the general establishment.

I had, before, heard from Mrs. Holdsworth, that the said Furze had greatly over-rated her powers of "cutting out" in the millinery way. And Mrs. Holdsworth reports her, since, as certainly having a provoking way of dealing with the girls.

We are now all ready for the Mark System, and I hope to begin on Monday.

Dear Miss Coutts | Always Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To JOHN LEECH, 29 OCTOBER 1848

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: John Leech Esquire | 31 Notting Hill Terrace | Notting Hill. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Sunday Night | October Twenty Ninth 1848.

My Dear Leech.

Lemon (whose devotion to Webster, you know)[†3] suggested to me afar off, the other day, that the characters of the book[†1] might, for stage purposes, be made to approach unto the resemblance of certain actors!—I "repudiated" such an idea, immediately, but in case he should have mentioned it to you, I write to say that I "utterly detest, abominate and abjure"[†2] it.

I know he would say nothing about it, except in perfect good faith and honor. But as he may, by some remote possibility, have thrown it out, I put you in possession of my sentiments thereanent.

Ever Yours faithfully

CD.

I hope Morgan[†3] came soon, and that Baby's better.

To JOHN LEECH, 30 OCTOBER 1848

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Address: John Leech Esquire. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Night | Thirtieth October 1848.

My Dear Leech.

I am quite delighted to find that you like what is done of the book, so well. I was pleased myself when I read it, and thought it a pretty idea. May Heaven speed it!—[†a]And make everybody as much interested as[†4] I am!—[†a]

Mr. Tenniel[†5] has been here today and will go to work on the frontispiece.[†6] We must arrange for a dinner here, very shortly, when you and he may meet. He seems to be a very agreeable fellow, and modest.

Kate will still hope to see Mrs. Leech, if she can come out. I am really distressed by what you say about your baby. But babies do fight through most wonderful adversities, and there is always as much hope as life with them.

Perhaps you will look in tonight? Nobody here but Egg.

Ever Heartily

CD.

To THE SECRETARY, CHESTER MECHANICS' INSTITUTION, [?SEPTEMBER-OCTOBER 1848]

Mention in next.

To THE REV. WILLIAM GILES,†1 31 OCTOBER 1848

Facsimile in Arthur Humphreys, CD and his First Schoolmaster, Manchester, 1926, p. 16.

London, 1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park

Thirty First October 1848.

My Dear Sir

I had answered the letter of the Chester Mechanics' Institution, before I received your kind communication. If anything could have induced me to recall my reply, it would have been your appeal to me. But the reasons for declining the invitation which I stated briefly to the Secretary, are so very pressing and urgent, when I remember my projects and engagements that I fear I must be firm in spite of myself.

It is not, in these cases, a question of the time actually occupied by the journey and the occasion—which would be no great consideration—but the unsettled state into which I fall when I have such a promise impending, is unfavorable to my own pursuits, and troubles me when I ought to be yielded up to them.

I am grieved to hear that so many who have been dear to you have gone before, to that world of rest, of which some solemn glimpses open to the happiest and most fortunate among us. Heavy and insupportable indeed, such sorrows would be, but for our blessed hopes through the Redeemer of Mankind.

When I read your handwriting, I half believe I am a very small boy again; and you magnify, in my bewildered sight, into something awful, though not at all severe. I call to mind how you gave me Goldsmith's Bee†2 when I left Chatham†3 (that was my first knowledge of it) and can't believe that I have been fledging any little Bees myself, whose buzzing has been heard abroad.

I am half inclined to say, now, "if you please Sir, may I leave off?"—And if I could make a bow in writing, I certainly should do it.

—As to Mrs. Charles Dickens, there is manifestly no such person.—It is my mother, of course, who desires to be cordially remembered to yourself and Mrs. Giles.[†1] It can't be anybody else.

Ever My Dear Sir | Yours faithfully and obliged
CHARLES DICKENS

The Reverend William Giles.

November

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 1 NOVEMBER 1848

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace. | First November 1848.
Wednesday Afternoon

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I want to ask your kind assistance in getting a highly esteemed and valued old servant of mine, who went abroad with us—the Brave Courier of my little Italian book[†2]—into St. George's Hospital.

His case, the surgeon says, is distinctly admissible there. It would be also admissible at the Brompton Hospital for diseases of the chest. That institution is under an old obligation to me,[†3] and they are very ready and willing to take him in; but the bed he is to occupy (if he should live to go there) is not likely to be vacant for the next two or three months.

I enclose the medical description of his case, on which I have it much at heart to get him into St. George's Hospital forthwith.[†4] I don't know how to set about it. It has occurred to me that perhaps you may have some direct power of nominating him as a patient, and that if you have not, Mr. Brown (on whose good-feeling I know I may rely) will help me with his advice.

Pray forgive my troubling you. I have the deepest interest in the matter. He is a most faithful, affectionate, and devoted man. He is dreadfully changed from a fine handsome fellow, in a very short time. His doctor urgently recommends his being got into a hospital where he will never be left alone (he is in a poor little lodging now), and I must accomplish it if it can be done.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 2 NOVEMBER 1848

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Second November 1848.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I am exceedingly obliged to you for your prompt kindness, and I thank you heartily. Pray tell Mr. Brown, with my best regards and acknowledgements, that I will not trouble him to endeavour to get the poor man in, before the next reception day. His case does not appear to be so very urgent, as to justify it. He shall go on Wednesday at the appointed time.

Dear Miss Coutts | Ever Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To FREDERICK DICKENS, 2 NOVEMBER 1848*

MS New York University Library. Address: Frederick Dickens Esquire | Norton Street. Mourning envelope[†1].

Devonshire Terrace | Second November 1848.

My Dear Frederick. I wish you would enquire into this for me, without delay.[†2] Beard would ask the Morning Herald clerk if you could call upon him. See the man himself, and his room. Don't be imposed upon, whatever you do. If the story were true, I would give him a couple of pounds—nothing, if he be in the habit of writing such letters.

Affy. always

CD.

To SAMUEL PHELPS, 4 NOVEMBER 1848*

MS Rosenbach Foundation. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Fourth November 1848. | Saturday

My Dear Sir

Mrs. Milner Gibson (the Wife of the late Vice President of the Board of Trade)[†3] has entreated me, very particularly, to hand you the enclosed letter. The lady being a friend of mine, I cannot refuse, but I have consented to do so, under this protest.—That I do not make myself a party to any proposal she may make on behalf of an Institution, and that I will not consent, so far as I am concerned, to entail upon you even the trouble of replying to this present note of mine.

Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

S. Phelps Esquire.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 6 NOVEMBER 1848†

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday November Sixth | 1848.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

The signature is not that of either of my Mr. Chapmans,[†4] but it may possibly be the signature of some other partner in the house. My own personal friend Mr. Chapman, is the Chairman of the shipping Committee of Lloyds; and the House are merchants, and large ship-owners.

— V - 435 —

I can easily ascertain the point, because he took my youngest brother into the house, whom I will send for, and ask the question. I will retain the address, until I have done so.

It never occurred to me before, to speak to him about the Emigration; but he is an excellent gentleman whom I am sure you would like (I first knew him in connexion with the Sanatorium,[†1] of which we were both Directors) and an admirable man of business, with an interest in all good things. And I know they send ships to that part of the world, constantly.

There is a Mr. Grainger's[†2] name to the address. I think he was also a director of the Sanatorium.

I sent the Agreement[†3] to Miss Steinberg,[†4] on the day you signed it. But I can easily make another copy for your new signature, and send Mrs. Holdsworth to exchange it.

[†a]I am in the act of grinding at my Christmas book. I hope we shall have another little reading here, if your remembrance of the last one[†5] has no deterring influence. I have hit upon a little notion for the book, which I hope is a pretty one, with a good Christmas tendency.[†6†a]

Dear Miss Coutts | Ever Faithfully Yours

CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 7 NOVEMBER 1848*

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace. | Seventh November 1848.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

Having occasion to call at the Bank yesterday afternoon on my own business, I saw that Mr. Engelbach,[†7] who told me what his brother was enabled to tell you; which seems very important and satisfactory, and before which our greatest difficulties seem to clear away, very hopefully. He represented to me that it was necessary for me, as a matter of form, to write on your behalf to the Committee who would then officially direct his brother to assist you. As you say nothing of this in your note, I shall not do it without further instructions.

— V - 436 —

Neither will I communicate, at present, with Mr. Chapman—whose assistance may not be required.

It is a prodigious comfort to me that Mrs. Furze is going. Your arrangement about the Mark Paper, is indeed a master-stroke. I think you would, after that, make a brilliant figure as a Diplomatist.

I must say, however, that that feeling of which you say some symptoms are still latent, does not encourage me, because it appears to me a stubborn and unreasonable one, and to bespeak anything rather than the right state of mind. No woman at the Home who is not quite satisfied that her past life was vicious and miserable, will ever keep out of it when she is free again. The delicacy which can't bear such a homoepathic[†1] dose of truth as that, won't bear work I fear.

Dear Miss Coutts | Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To THE GOVERNORS OF ST GEORGE'S HOSPITAL,[†2] 7 NOVEMBER 1848*

MS Mrs Humphry House. On mourning paper.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Seventh November 1848.

Gentlemen.

In sending as a claimant for admission into your hospital, with a letter of recommendation from Miss Burdett Coutts, Louis Roche, formerly a servant of mine, for whom I have the highest esteem and regard, I beg to enclose a description of his case from Mr. David Davies[†3] of Lower Belgrave Street, who has attended him.

I trouble you with it, thinking you may require such a document for your satisfaction. I have not made its contents known to the poor fellow himself.[†4]

I am Gentlemen | Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

The Governors of St. George's Hospital.

To EFFINGHAM WILSON,[†1] 7 NOVEMBER 1848

Text from MDGH, I, 199.[†2]

1 Devonshire Terrace, York Gate, Regent's Park
Nov. 7th, 1848

Sir,

I beg you to accept my best thanks for your pamphlet[†3] and your obliging note. That such a theatre as you describe would be but worthy of this nation, and would not stand low upon the list of its instructors, I have no kind of doubt. I wish I could cherish a stronger faith than I have in the probability of its establishment on a national footing within fifty years.[†4]

Faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 9 NOVEMBER 1848*

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Thursday Ninth November 1848.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I enclose the paper you ask for.

When I think of the moral indignation of Mary Anne Hoy! (of all others!) I want somebody to attack; I become so desperately vicious.

Dear Miss Coutts | Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MARK LEMON, 9 NOVEMBER 1848*

MS Huntington Library. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace. | Thursday Ninth November | 1848.

My Dear Lemon.

If tomorrow (Friday) at 5 will do, I shall be delighted to expect you. As we dine at ½ past, perhaps you'll stay and take pot luck?

Affy. Always
CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS WILLIAM GILES, 11 NOVEMBER 1848

MS New York University Library. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace. | Eleventh November 1848.

Dear Madam.

I am so closely occupied at present, that I answer your kind note briefly, with a strong misgiving that if I entertained any idea of doing otherwise I might not answer it at all.

In spite of the conditional denunciation of the Oracle (which is not delivered in a fit of absolute inspiration, for on such occasions as that proposed to me, I never accept any pecuniary consideration, or entertain such an offer for a moment) I must respond to that nearer claim which my own pen makes on me, and abandon Chester[†1] and be true to London.

So pray remember me to the awful creature on the tripod, and tell him this with my rebellious duty.

Dear Madam | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Giles.

To LOUIS ROCHE, 11 NOVEMBER 1848

Text from N, II, 127. Address (envelope, MS Private): Mr. Louis Roche | King's Ward | St. George's Hospital.

Devonshire Terrace, | 11th November 1848

Mon Cher Roche,

Je suis charmé de recevoir si bonnes nouvelles de vous et j'espère, après tout ce que j'ai entendu, de Dr. Wilson et d'autres, que vous bientôt reprendrez vos forces, pour faire le voyage à un climat plus doux, dans l'hiver, que le climat de l'Angleterre.

Avant deux ans s'écouleront, il nous faudra (le Brave et moi) voyager à l'Espagne. A le bonne heure!

Madame et Mlle Hogarth et toutes les enfants vous envoient mille amitiés. Ici, tout le monde demande continuellement: "Et Roche, le Brave, comment se porte-t-il maintenant?"

En attendant cette petite voyage à l'Espagne dont j'ai parlé, il vous faudra devenir excessivement robuste et rouge. Courage donc, mon ami! C'est à vous à proclamer le grand success de l'Hôpital de St. George, et l'addresse merveilleuse de messieurs les docteurs!

Toujours—Votre fidèle.

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To P. JOHNSON TRIARY,[†1] 11 NOVEMBER 1848

Extract in Kingston Galleries catalogue No. 32; dated 11 Nov 48.

I am much indebted to you for sending me a copy of your daughter's verses. They are very remarkable as the production of so young a miss; they have interested me very much; and I feel it a great honor to have been the source of their inspiration . . . give my love to the poetess.

To DR JAMES A. WILSON,[†2] 11 NOVEMBER 1848*

MS Mrs Humphry House. On mourning paper.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Eleventh November 1848.

My Dear Sir

I could not thank you enough for your kind letter, though I tried never so hard. Pray believe me when I say, in few words, that I set the highest value on it; and that nothing in the world is more acceptable to me, or touches me more nearly, than such an assurance of interest and regard.

My Dear Sir | Very faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Dr. J. A. Wilson.

To JOHN FORSTER, [13 NOVEMBER 1848]

Extract in F, VI, vi, 523. Date: 13 Nov according to Forster.

Proposing to repeat the Salisbury Plain idea[†3] in a new direction in mid-winter, to wit, Blackgang Chine[†4] in the Isle of Wight, with dark winter cliffs and roaring oceans.[†5]

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 15 NOVEMBER 1848

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace. | Wednesday Fifteenth November 1848.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I kept the paper until I had an opportunity of ascertaining whether the Chapman signature was my Chapman. This house is cousin to my house.[†1] Having discovered so much, I return the document as you request.

I was at Shepherd's Bush yesterday Evening, and went carefully over the Mark Papers already filled up, with Miss Cunliffe. She seems to understand the system very well indeed, and I hope it will be productive of excellent results.

The great thing to avoid, and the danger towards which I certainly think we rather tend at present, is the being too grim and gloomy.

Miss Cunliffe thinks it would be well for her to select some little things from Wordsworth,[†2] and some from Crabbe,[†3] to read to them. Have you any objection to the introduction of these books, subject to her selection? I think the library might be extended, in this direction, with great advantage. All people who have led hazardous and forbidden lives are, in a certain sense, imaginative; and if their imaginations are not filled with good things, they will choke them, for themselves, with bad ones.

Mr. Wardley came to me yesterday to say that Mr. Duffy[†4] (whom he represents as the impersonation of glowing disinterestedness) is anxious to "finish off" those young women who are likely to go soon; and that he would gladly, without any additional charge, extend their evening lessons by two or three hours a week. Will you let me know what I shall reply? I incline to the impression that it would interfere with other pursuits, without being attended with a counterbalancing advantage; but of course you only can decide.

The Haunted Man says he thinks he will want a little fresh air shortly. I think of taking him down to Brighton next week for ten days or so, and putting an end to him.[†5]

Dear Miss Coutts | Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To CLARKSON STANFIELD, 15 NOVEMBER 1848*

MS Mr C. V. Bliss.

Devonshire Terrace | Wednesday Fifteenth November | 1848.

My Dear Stanny

I heard you were in Wales, but thought you were at Cwymllrwyndeniswymllestevodd ap mweddyslwynn—for the scenery in that little village is very fine.

A thousand thanks for your kindest of notes.

I am afraid of the leg of mutton, as I am working all day at my second part,[†1] which bothers me rather. But on Saturday evening, at from 7 to 8, I'll come up, and look at you on that sofa, where my fancy pictures you as a kind of old commodore, a gouty old commodore, a tough old commodore, a jolly old commodore, he—&c!

In the meantime I send you my proof of the first part of the extraordinary tale in question.

Ever affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 18 NOVEMBER 1848

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday Evening | Eighteenth November 1848.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I return you the enclosed letter, which seems very promising and satisfactory. Between the Government and the Company,[†2] I hope we shall soon get this knot untied.

The poor Courier is as comfortable and contented as it is possible for man to be. He recovered very considerably during the first two or three days, but, after that, began to go back a little. These changes of weather, I imagine, are very much against that kind of complaint. But better attention or greater kindness, he could not (thanks to you) by any possibility receive.

I had a very kind letter from Dr. Wilson who admitted him, and expressed warm interest in him—and I have no doubt I shall be told if he seem to grow much worse.

The haunted man won't do something I want him to do—or at least nothing would induce him to do it until this morning, when he suddenly seemed to become more tractable.

Dear Miss Coutts | Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To JOHN LEECH, 18 NOVEMBER 1848

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: John Leech Esquire. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday Eighteenth November | 1848.

My Dear Leech.

Do it[†1] by all means.

I am going up to Stanfield tonight, and will communicate with you again, when I know what he intends to take for his subjects.[†2]

Ever Faithfully
CD.

To JOHN LEECH, 19 NOVEMBER 1848

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: Wait. | John Leech Esquire | Notting Hill Terrace. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Sunday Morning | November Nineteenth | 1848.

My Dear Leech.

All work and no play makes Jack (Leech) a dull boy.—

I have a propogician.

I want to go to Brighton tomorrow. Will you come—returning at night? Fast Mail leaves at 10. We could breakfast here at twenty minutes before 9, and have a delicious day's walk on the margin of the briny. The impulse to exertion next day would be absolutely terrific—I have no doubt you would smash the haunted man, out of hand.

"Reply, reply, RE-[†3]ply!"

[Old Tone[†4] dines here today, by the bye, at 5—in case there should be any indispensable necessity for conference between us, in regard of the H.M.]

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To JOHN LEECH, 19 NOVEMBER [1848]

MS Benoliel Collection. Date: Mention of the trip to Brighton, supported by handwriting and form of "CD", makes it clear that this was a second letter written on 19 Nov 48. Address: John Leech Esquire | Notting Hill Terrace. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Nineteenth November

My Dear Leech.

I am finishing part 2 (very strikingly I hope—ahem!) and will wait at home 'till you come, when I am going up to Topham's (will you?) to look at a picture he is making for me.[†1] I dispatch this, express, to ask you to entreat Lemon to go to Brighton with us.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [21 NOVEMBER 1848]

Extract in F, VI, iv, 508-9. Date: 21 Nov according to Forster.

You must suppose that the Ghost's saving clause[†2] gives him those glimpses without which it would be impossible to carry out the idea. Of course my point is that bad and good are inextricably linked in remembrance, and that you could not choose the enjoyment of recollecting only the good. To have all the best of it you must remember the worst also. My intention in the other point you mention is, that he should not know himself how he communicates the gift, whether by look or touch; and that it should diffuse itself in its own way in each case. I can make this clearer by a very few lines in the second part.[†3] It is not only necessary to be so, for the variety of the story, but I think it makes the thing wilder and stranger.

To FRANK STONE, 21 NOVEMBER 1848

MS Benoliel Collection. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Tuesday Twenty First November | 1848.

My Dear Stone

I send you, herewith, the second part[†4] of the book, which I hope may interest you. If you should prefer to have it read to you by the Inimitable, rather than to read it, I shall be at home this evening (loin of mutton at ½ past 5) and happy to do it.

The proofs are full of printers' errors, but with the few corrections I have scrawled upon it, you will be able to make out what they mean.

I send you, on the opposite side, a list of the subjects already in hand for this second part. If you should see no other in it that you like[†5] (I think it important that you should keep Milly, as you have begun with her) I will, in a day or two, describe you an unwritten subject from the third part of the book.[†1]

Ever Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

Subjects in hand, for the second part.

1. Illuminated page.[†2] Tenniel. Representing Redlaw going upstairs, and the Tetterby family below.
2. The Tetterby supper.[†3] Leech.
3. The boy, in Redlaw's room, munching his food, and staring at the fire.[†4]

To JOHN LEECH, 22 NOVEMBER 1848

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Address: With a Stick. | John Leech Esquire | Notting Hill Terrace. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Second November 1848.

My Dear Leech.

I send the stick with this.

Your illustrations in the second part will be, I suppose, the Tetterby family and the boy at the fire. Unless anything else should strike you particularly, these would "do", I think. But speed is now of transcendant importance.[†5]

I am going to the Bedford at Brighton, today. Early next week, I will describe the large illustration of the dinner to you.

Faithfully Ever
CD.

To ROBERT SCANLAN,[†6] 22 NOVEMBER 1848*

MS Private.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Second November 1848.

My Dear Sir

I beg to enclose you a formal recommendation[†7] which, if you desire it to be amended in any respect, I shall be most happy to alter.

With the best wishes for your success, Believe me

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Robert Scanlan Esquire.

To FRANK STONE, 22 NOVEMBER 1848*

MS Benoliel Collection. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Second November 1848.

My Dear Stone.

I am off today to the Bedford Hotel, Brighton.

Faithfully Ever
CD.

To THOMAS CHAPMAN, 22 NOVEMBER 1848

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds. Address (envelope, MS Mr N. C. Peyrouton): Thomas Chapman Esquire | 14 Montague Place | Bryanston Square | London. On mourning paper.

Bedford Hotel, Brighton | Wednesday Night
Twenty Second November 1848.

My Dear Sir

Mrs. Dickens and I have been often talking of late about one theme. You will be amused when I mention it, I dare say, and will think this an odd sort of beginning. The question has been whether we should ask you to come to breakfast with us in Devonshire Terrace, on the day of Augustus' Marriage.[†1]

At last, coming down here to finish my little Christmas book, I have resolved to write, and using that privilege of friendship which I am sure I may use with you, ask you whether I shall ask you, or not?

I need not say that I know it would be, in the highest degree, gratifying to Augustus if you were present on an occasion so important to him, and it is as needless for me to add that your coming would give Mrs. Dickens and me a new interest in a little party in which we are almost strangers, as it is mainly composed of his young wife's relations.[†2] But I feel it so probable that it might be inconvenient or tiresome to you, or that there may be very rational and necessary considerations to render it "unbusiness-like" (I use the phrase for want of a better) in reference to so young a man engaged in your house, that I feel the plain course as between you and me is to do just what I do now.

Your coming would please me extremely, but I should wish it to please you too, and I feel confident that you will use no reserve with me, if I use none on my part.[†1]

I cannot let this opportunity pass, without assuring you that I am deeply sensible of your extraordinary kindness to Augustus, and that your interest and your friendly consideration are warmly appreciated by me, and have, from the time of our first communication in reference to him, impressed me in the strongest manner.

Ever My Dear Sir | Very Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Chapman Esquire.

To FRANK STONE, 23 NOVEMBER 1848

MS Benoliel Collection. On mourning paper.

Brighton | Thursday Night | November Twenty Third 1848.

My Dear Stone

We are unanimous.

The drawing of Milly on the chair, is charming.[†2] I cannot tell you how much the little composition and expression please me. Do that, by all means.

—I fear she must have a little cap on.[†3] There is something coming in the last part, about her having had a dead child, which makes it yet more desirable than the existing text does, that she should have that little matronly sign about her.—Unless the artist is obdurate indeed, and then he'll do as he likes.

I am delighted to hear that you have your eye on her in the Student's room.[†4] You will really, pictorially, make the little woman whom I love.[†5]

Kate and Georgy send their kindest remembrances. I write hastily to save the Post.

Ever My Dear Stone | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Frank Stone Esquire.

To LEIGH HUNT, 26 NOVEMBER 1848

MS British Museum. On mourning paper.

[†a]If I could think of the "KINDEST" WORD[†1] in the language, I'd put it here, to begin with[†a]

Bedford Hotel, Brighton | Sunday 26th. November 1848.

My Dear Hunt.

I grieve to say that such a performance[†2] is impracticable.

Firstly, because if I played at all, to get money, I am bound and pledged to play for another purpose.

Secondly, because such a proceeding would not be well judged in reference to yourself, and would not—I believe most confidently—succeed.

On the first point, I write by the card, and with no sort of honorable escape. On the second, I have such a strong opinion (not lightly taken up) that I think Forster—for example—would form the same instantly, on the same premises, and hold it to be fatal.[†3]

I write this as openly as you ask me, as to the letter, and, believe me, as heartily and cordially as you can possibly imagine, in the spirit.

Ever My Dear Hunt | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Leigh Hunt Esquire.

To FRANK STONE, 27 NOVEMBER 1848

MS Dr A. Wilhelm. On mourning paper.

Bedford Hotel, Brighton | Twenty Seventh November 1848.
Monday Night

My Dear Stone

You are a

TRUMP;[†4] emphatically,
a
TRUMP![†5]

—And such are my feeling[†6] towards you at this moment, that I think (but I am not sure) that if I saw you about to place a card on a wrong pack at—Bibeck (?)[†1]—I wouldn't breathe a word of objection.[†2]

Sir, there is a subject I have written today for the third part, that I think and hope will just suit you. Scene Tetterbys. Time, morning. The power of bringing back people's memories of sorrow, wrong, and trouble, has been given by the Ghost to Milly—though she don't know it herself. As she comes along the street, Mr. and Mrs. Tetterby recover themselves, and,[†3] are mutually affectionate again, and embrace—closing rather a good scene of quarrel and discontent. The moment they do so, Johnny (who has seen her in the distance and announced her before; from which moment they have begun to recover) cries "Here she is!"—and she comes in, surrounded by the little Tetterbys, the very spirit of morning, gladness, innocence, hope, love, domesticity, &c &c &c &c

I would limit the illustration to her and the children, which will make a fitness between it and your other illustrations, and give them all a character of their own. The exact words of the passage, I inclose on another slip of paper. Note. There are six boy Tetterbys present (young 'Dolphus is not there) including Johnny; and in Johnny's arms is Moloch the baby, who is a girl.

I hope to be back in town, next Monday, and will lose no time in reporting myself to you. Don't wait to send me the drawing of this. I know how pretty she will be with the children, in your hands, and should be a stupendous Jackass if I had any distrust of it.[†4]

The Duke of Cambridge[†5] (do you know the man?) is staying in this house, and its his daughter's[†6] birthday, and they are driving me mad by having Life Guards' Bands under the windows, playing our overtures!!![†7]—I have been at work all day, and am going to wander into the Theatre,[†8] where (for the Comic Man's[†9] benefit) "two gentlemen of Brighton" are performing two Counts in a Melo Drama.[†10] I am quite addle-headed for the time being, and think an Amateur[†11] or so would revive me.

—No, Tone! I don't in the abstract approve of Brighton—I couldn't pass an Autumn here—but its a gay place for a week or so—and when one laughs, and cries, and suffers the agitation that some men experience over their books, it's a bright change to look out of window and see the gilt little toys on horseback going up and down before the mighty sea and thinking nothing of it.

Kate's love—and Georgy's. They say you'll contradict every word of this letter!—

Faithfully Ever

CD.

[†a]"Hurray! Here's Mrs. William!" cried Johnny.

So she was, and all the Tetterby children with her; and, as she came in, they kissed her, and kissed one another, and kissed the baby, and kissed their father and mother, and then ran back and flocked and danced about her, trooping on with her in triumph.[†a]

———

(After which she is going to say, "What! Are you all glad to see me too. Oh! How happy it makes me to find every one so glad to see me this bright morning")[†1]

To MARK LEMON, 28 NOVEMBER 1848

Text from MDGH, I, 203-4.

Bedford Hotel, Brighton, Nov. 28th, 1848.

My Dear Mark,

I assure you, most unaffectedly and cordially, that the dedication of that book[†2] to Mary and Kate (not Catherine) will be a real delight to me, and to all of us. I know well that you propose it in "affectionate regard,"[†3] and value and esteem it, therefore, in a way not easy of expression.

You were talking of "coming" down, and now, in a mean and dodging way, you write about "sending" the second act![†4] I have a propogician to make. Come down on Friday. There is a train leaves London Bridge at two—gets here at four. By that time I shall be ready to strike work. We can take a little walk, dine, discuss, and you can go back in good time next morning. I really think this ought to be done, and indeed MUST be done. Write and say it shall be done.

A little management will be required in dramatising the third part, where there are some things I describe (for effect's sake, and as a matter of art) which must be said on the stage.[†5] Redlaw is in a new condition of mind, which fact must be shot point-blank at the audience, I suppose, "as from the deadly level of a gun."[†1] By anybody who knew how to play Milly,[†2] I think it might be made very good. Its effect is very pleasant upon me. I have also given Mr. and Mrs. Tetterby another innings.

I went to the play last night—fifth act of Richard the Third.[†3] Richmond by a stout lady,[†4] with a particularly well-developed bust, who finished all the speeches with the soubrette simper. Also, at the end of the tragedy she came forward (still being Richmond) and said, "Ladies and gentlemen, on Wednesday next the entertainments will be for My benefit, when I hope to meet your approbation and support."[†5] Then, having bowed herself into the stage-door, she looked out of it, and said, winningly, "Won't you come?" which was enormously applauded.

Ever affectionately
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 29 NOVEMBER 1848

Text from typescript, Huntington Library. Address: clearly to one of the staff of Bradbury & Evans: probably the head printer or the accountant Mr Joyce.

Bedford Hotel, Brighton. | Twenty Ninth November 1848.

Dear Sir,

Allow me to acknowledge the safe receipt of your note of hand,[†6] and to thank you for it.

Also to return your little document, with my signature attached.[†7]

I have kept back the earlier proofs of the book, as it is possible that I may desire to insert a few lines which are not there now, or to render them a little plainer; and I should wish you to have it in its completest state.

You shall certainly not publish before the 18th at the earliest,[†8] and I hope by next Wednesday's post[†9] to send you all the little book.

Faithfully yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To DANIEL MACLISE, [?AUTUMN 1848]

MS Benoliel Collection. Date: Initials suggest late Autumn 1848.

Devonshire T. | Thursday

Dear Mac.

Forster dines here today at ½ past 5. Will you dine with us? I mean to leave off, and go out for a ride—now. Will you come with us? Kate waits, and will bring you to me.

In haste | Always
CD

December

To WILLIAM BRADBURY, 1 DECEMBER 1848

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. On mourning paper.

Bedford Hotel Brighton | Friday First December 1848.

My Dear Bradbury.

I finished last night, having been crying my eyes out over it—not painfully but pleasantly as I hope the readers will—these last three days.

On getting your letter this morning at breakfast, I should have run up, straightaway, if the trains had been convenient. As they were not, however, and as I shall be all the better, I dare say, for a country walk, I send you this parcel.

Enclosed in it, is a note for Leech—explaining that not knowing how his time may serve, I have given the dinner subject to Stanfield. Enclosed also, is a note for Stanfield himself, which if you can put yourself in a Cab and give him (he is sure to be at home, for he has a bad leg) will do the business. You will then hear from him, at once, when he will have it ready for the engraver.

Stone's third subject,[†1] is in the third part.

I keep the Copy back, to read to Lemon (for theatrical purposes) when he comes tonight. But I will send it to you, either by tonight's post, or by an early parcel. My proofs of the two first parts, you shall have by Lemon tomorrow. My corrections had better be made, and then the fresh proof go to Mr. Forster for the usual corrections. I will arrange with him for their being immediately done, as I have promised Tauchnitz of Leipzig[†2] proofs by Tuesday or Wednesday next.[†3]

Faithfully Yours ever
CHARLES DICKENS

To CLARKSON STANFIELD, [1 DECEMBER 1848]

Mention in next.

To JOHN LEECH, 1 DECEMBER 1848

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Address: John Leech Esquire | Notting Hill Terrace. On mourning paper.

Bedford Hotel Brighton | First December 1848.

My Dear Leech.

I send this letter up, in a parcel to Whitefriars, to be immediately sent on to you.

You will have a rough proof of the third part, I have no doubt, tomorrow night. The time being so very pressing, and you so pressed, I have thought it best (acting, I hope, as you would have me) to write to Stanfield and ask him if he will do that dinner in the old hall, to conclude with.[†1] If done at all, it will necessarily be a very full subject, for which I fear you would not have leisure. Anything else in the third part is free from illustration, except Milly surrounded by the children, which Stone has done. Bradbury told me that you wished to do some comedy. You will find plenty of bits, I trust, in connexion with the Tetterby family.[†2]

I write so hurriedly that I have hardly time to send Kate's and Georgy's love to Mrs. Leech, and add all cordial remembrances from myself.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Leech Esquire.

To WILLIAM SAWYER,[†3] 1 DECEMBER 1848*

MS University of Texas. On mourning paper.

Bedford Hotel, Brighton | First December 1848.

Sir

I should reproach myself very much, for not having answered your cordial and acceptable letter, sooner, but that I believe and hope my excuse will present itself to you in a sufficient and not unwelcome form, about Christmas time. I have been closely occupied, since I have been in Brighton, with the completion of my forthcoming little book: the last portion of which, I came here to write. And I have written nothing else, or I should have written to you.

I thank you, very earnestly indeed, for your unaffected assurance of interest and regard—which I so far deserve, that I can never feel indifferent to such a communication, and never fail to regard it as among the best honors that a writer can win. I have found such correspondents as you (I thank God) in every part of the world in which I have been; but the happiness of finding them is as new to me as ever.

Accept my thanks and good wishes, and believe me

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. William Sawyer.

To FRANK STONE, [5 DECEMBER 1848]*

MS Benoliel Collection. Date: Augustus Dickens was married on 5 Dec 48. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Tuesday Morning

My Dear Stone

I paid immediate attention to your letter.

Augustus is married, this morning. If I come round to you about 4, will you walk up to Jack Straw's castle at Hampstead, with me, and have a chop. I will then read you the third part. I propose Hampstead instead of this place, as I think it probable that some of my very affectionate relations may hold on here, as long as there is anything to drink—and my only chance of certain escape is to rush madly out.

Faithfully Ever

CD.

To EDWARD CHAPMAN, 6 DECEMBER 1848*

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace. | Sixth December 1848.

Dear Sir

I shall be glad to receive the balance due on the last halfyear's account, at your convenience.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Edward Chapman Esquire

To A. R. DE MONTARCIS,[†1] 7 DECEMBER 1848

MS Mr Ashley W. Olmsted. On mourning paper.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
7 December 1848.

Monsieur.

J'ai ete à la campagne depuis quelques semaines, et je n'ai que sur l'instant reçu votre billet.

Le plan que vous m'avez fait l'honneur de me proposer, m'a eté dejà suggeré deux ou trois fois— mais, comme je n'ai pas assez de loisir pour entreprendre la revision d'une traduction de mes livres, et comme il y auraient (j'ai peur) plusiers difficultés mechaniques, à propos de leur publication a Londres et a Paris en meme temps, je les ai toujours decliné, avec ma reconnaissance et mes remerçiements.[†2]

Reçevez Monsieur, l'assurance de ma consideration distinguée

CHARLES DICKENS

À Monsieur de Montarcis

To MARK LEMON, 7 DECEMBER 1848

Text from Letters to Mark Lemon by CD, ed. T. J. Wise, p. 9.

Devonshire Terrace | Thursday, Seventh December, 1848.

My Dear Lemon

I shall hope to see you at half past Six. I have just done a short notice for Forster,[†1] and will go through the account immediately.

Ever affectionately

To TOM TAYLOR, 7 DECEMBER 1848

Mention in Sotheran catalogue, Mar 1907; MS 1 p.; dated 1 Devonshire Terrace, 7 Dec 48.

To FRANK STONE, [?10 DECEMBER 1848]*

MS Benoliel Collection. Date: Mourning paper, "Ever affecy" and stroke—not flourish—under "CD", suggest late 1848 or early 1849. The reference is probably to the dramatized Haunted Man; perhaps written the Sunday after 5 Dec, when he invited Stone to walk to Hampstead with him. On mourning paper.

Sunday Morning

My Dear Stone

You intimated the other night at Hampstead, that you would like to see the meeting of the actors and actresses,[†2] who I believe will all be here tonight, except the Keans[†3] and Miss Woolgar[†4] who dine with Horace Twiss.[†5] I didn't pursue the subject, really having a selfish apprehension that you would grow tired of the book.[†6] But as you called last night, possibly with some idea of asking when the assemblage was to come off, I write to say at ¼ before 7 tonight. If you come, I shall be delighted.

Ever affecy.

CD.

To THOMAS BEARD, 12 DECEMBER 1848

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Place | Edgeware Road. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Tuesday Twelfth December | 1848.

My Dear Beard

I want to ask you a question. Will you give me a call as you go by, tomorrow morning, on your way to Shoe Lane[†1] and the great Propagater?[†2]

Faithfully Ever

CD.

To CHARLES MANBY, 12 DECEMBER 1848

Text from The Outlook, XXXII (1913), 467.

Devonshire Terrace Twelfth December 1848 | Tuesday.

My Dear Sir

I am much indebted to you for your note. I do not regard the Mosaic Arab[†3] in question,[†4] as an important person, but any breach of faith is most important, and into that, I must enquire narrowly.

I have already instituted a searching investigation at the theatres where my suspicion mainly lies, notwithstanding that we enforce the greatest caution throughout the establishment. May I ask you (for this is very necessary for me to know) to ascertain from Mr. Webster whether the Mosaic Arab implied to him that he knew the story[†5] from having read it, or from having heard about it—and whether he appeared to know what its conclusion was.

You may rely on my not compromising you or Mr. Webster in the least degree, without your own authority. I do not consider that it will be at all needful for me to ask it.

My Dear Sir | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Manby Esquire.

To ALEXANDER MAXWELL,[†6] 13 DECEMBER 1848*

MS Private. Address: Alexander Maxwell Esquire | Watt Institution | Dundee. On mourning paper.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Thirteenth December | 1848.

Sir

I regret that my engagements render it quite impossible for me to have the honor and gratification of accepting the invitation of the Directors of the Dundee Watt Institution.[†1]

I am Sir | Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

Alex: Maxwell Esquire

To MARK LEMON, 13 DECEMBER 1848

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Address: Mark Lemon Esquire | 11 Bouverie Street. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Wednesday Thirteenth Decr. | 1848.

My Dear Lemon.

I have cut out the Phantom scene, and now return it.

I see no objection to the Stage darkening whenever the change takes place, but I don't think it would do to shew the Phantom. I think it would involve an absurdity in reference to the prevailing idea of the book, and, †atheatrically,†a would destroy the effect of Redlaw's appeal for supernatural help at †bthe end of†b the second act, and of the Phantom's reappearance at the beginning of the third. I think it would be better to darken the stage for the moment, and let them speak through some very short and low fragment of the strain that runs through the piece. We might try this on Saturday?

—By what fatality is it, that you still use the uncorrected proofs? The sheet I return, has not got in it those breaks which I inserted expressly to make the scene clearer on the Stage.

I shall be at Bouverie Street at 2 today, and when I leave there, will walk home by the Strand, on the Bouverie Street side of the way—so that, if there should be anything you want to see me upon, we may be provided with a locus in quo.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To MARK LEMON, [?13 DECEMBER 1848]

MS Benoliel Collection. Date: probably written same evening as last, referring to Manby's note acknowledged the previous day. Signature supports. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Wednesday Evening

My Dear Lemon

Here is another letter from Manby (in which Webster's account is obviously absurd) whereof you can tell B and E as much or as little as you like. I send it to you, mainly because of what he says about Phillips,†2 whom (if I don't like the caste there) I shall certainly not look after, nor any body else of that unholy brotherhood.†3

Ever affecy.

CD.

To THE HON. MRS RICHARD WATSON, 13 DECEMBER 1848*

MS Yale University Library. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Thirteenth December | 1848.

My Dear Mrs. Watson.

I enclose you the little book.†1 It will not be published until next Tuesday.

And I hope you will not like it less, when you come to read it quietly.†2

Ever Believe me | Very faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To DR JAMES A. WILSON, 13 DECEMBER 1848*

MS Mrs Humphry House. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Thirteenth December 1848. | Wednesday

My Dear Sir

Roche is very anxious that I should ask you "whether you think him well enough to undertake the journey to his own country, and whether you think the climate would be favorable to his disorder". I turn his own words into English. He says he knows he is very ill, but that he makes bold to solicit me to ask you what you really think on this head, as a friend of his is going to set out for Nice this week, and it would be a great protection and comfort to him if he could take advantage of such company.[†3]

I will not ask you to forgive my troubling you, for that would be to distrust your kindness.

My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Dr. Wilson.

To GEORGE HOGARTH, 15 DECEMBER 1848

MS John Rylands Library. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Friday Fifteenth December | 1848.

My Dear Hogarth.

I am delighted to find that you like the little book (which comes to you with this)[†4] so well. I confess that I have been much impressed by the notion myself, and that it has affected me uncommonly in the working out. I have no doubt of its doing me good with thoughtful readers.[†5]

We have subscriptions and orders already, for 16,000 copies.

I quite concur with you about the dramatizing. But in the accursed state of the law on this subject, I have no power to prevent it; and therefore I think it best to have at least one Theatre where it is done in a less Beastly manner than at others, and where I can impress something (however little) on the actors. This I can only do, by giving one the start of the rest of the base pack,—and so it comes to pass.[†1]

Ever affectionately

CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN BANVARD,[†2] 16 DECEMBER 1848*

MS Minnesota Historical Society. Address: Private | John Banvard Esquire | Mississippi Panorama Exhibition | Egyptian Hall | Piccadilly. On mourning paper.

Private

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Sixteenth December 1848.

Sir.

You were so good as to send me a card of admission to the private view of †athe result of† your extraordinary perseverance and energy. I could not avail myself of it, being out of town at the time; but I have since visited the Exhibition,†3 and in thanking you for your remembrance of me, cannot refrain from saying that I was in the highest degree interested and pleased by your picture—by its truthfulness—by your account of it—by its remarkable characteristics—by the striking and original manner in which the scenes it represents, are plainly presented to the spectator. Accept my best wishes for your success in England.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

—— Banvard Esquire

To BENJAMIN WEBSTER, 18 DECEMBER 1848

Extracts in Walter M. Hill catalogue No. 16 (Dec 1905); MS 3 pp.; dated Adelphi Theatre, 18 Dec 48.

Monday, Eighteenth December, 1848

Dear Sir,

I have attended the rehearsal of the Haunted Man this morning and am quite persuaded and convinced that if you bring the piece out tomorrow night, it will not succeed . . . slovenly and imperfect state in which this version is . . . will disappoint the public and you too . . . I think it right to send you this opinion and to urge you to reconsider the matter.†1

To THOMAS BEARD, 19 DECEMBER 1848

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Place | Edgeware Road. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Tuesday Night | Nineteenth December 1848.

My Dear Beard

A thousand thanks for your kind letter—a proof to me (if I needed any; which I don't) of your hearty and affectionate interest in the inimitable B.†2 I feel such things more than most men, I am sure—and am, so far, worthy of them. This is the best thing I can say, in the way of thanks to you.

The Haunted Man has sold at this minute (being published this morning)

18,000[†3]

! ! !

I am gravely devising a small dinner of those concerned with him.[†4] Further particulars anon. I shall call upon you to occupy your Dombey place on the occasion, my buck. So, as Captain Cuttle says, Stand by!

Ever affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 19 DECEMBER 1848†

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace. | Tuesday Nineteenth December | 1848.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I am only able to answer your letter this afternoon, for [†a]I discovered yesterday that barbarous murder was being done upon me at the Adelphi, and was fain to go down there and pass the day in bettering their interpretation of my haunted friend.[†a] I was down there at 10 this morning with the same view, and have been there all day. And as [†b]every word the actors say, is a rack to me,[†b] I am sure you will forgive my being so occupied.

After another day's torture, I will call on you tomorrow, at from 3 o'Clock to ½ past 3, and take my chance of finding you at home.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To THE HON. MRS RICHARD WATSON, [?20 DECEMBER 1848]*

MS Carl H. Pforzheimer Library. Date: Mention of the "Dombeys" strongly suggests 1848; probably the Wednesday after 13 Dec, when he sent Mrs Watson a copy of The Haunted Man for herself.

Devonshire Terrace | Wednesday

My Dear Mrs. Watson

In a violent hurry, I send you the parcel. I am afraid it looks large. It contains a Xmas Book for Cerjat—another for Haldimand; a Dombey for Mrs. Cerjat;[†1] a ditto for Haldimand.

How I wish I could contradict him.

I enclose a tremendous Document that I know interests you.[†2]

My love to your lord | Ever Dear Mrs. Watson
Yours very faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 22 DECEMBER 1848*

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Second December 1848.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I am exceedingly obliged to you for your kindness, but I remembered, walking home last night (I always forget such things at the time—especially in the mortification of defeat) that I am obliged to go out to dinner tomorrow.

Otherwise nothing would have pleased me better, than to have gone to Exeter Hall with your party.[†1]

I will call on Monday—no; that's Christmas Day—on Tuesday—about your lunch-time. Eton is an assumption of Mr. King's, founded on my entreaty to him about a peculiar mode he has, of teaching the Latin Grammar.[†2] I have no doubt whatever, that Harrow is a better school for a boy who has to live, in after-years, by his own exertions.[†3]

I shall take another look at Nautical presently. I begin to think there must be an o in it—and I am quite sure there's an e. A very little would induce me to believe in a z.[†4]

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 22 DECEMBER 1848*

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Friday Night, Twenty Second Decr. | 1848.

My Dear Miss Coutts

As I am going to Holloway on Sunday, and as Tuesday (which I forgot this morning) is our Committee Day at Shepherd's Bush, I will take my chance of finding you at home tomorrow, at 3.

I am amazed that none of us (especially you) thought of Zodiacal.[†5] It only shews how many words may be found out!

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To CHARLES HERBERT, 22 DECEMBER 1848

Mention in Sotheby's catalogue, 30 Nov 1931; dated 22 Dec 48.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 23 DECEMBER 1848*

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Third December 1848.

My Dear Miss Coutts

Not to hurry you home today, I will come on Tuesday at 2.—I don't know why, but I took it for granted that it was an absolute impossibility that Stratton Street and the Committee could by any means be united.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To THOMAS CHAPMAN, 27 DECEMBER 1848

MS Private; seen before destruction in Prestwick air-crash Dec 1954. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace
Wednesday December Twenty Seventh | 1848.

My Dear Sir

I am much obliged to you for your considerate note. An occasion has arisen to prevent my coming into the City this morning, but I will take my chance of finding you between 1 and 2 tomorrow.

It has occurred to me that you can give me some advice and direction, in reference to a point connected with "Miss Coutts's Home" at Shepherd's Bush.[†1] Which is the reason of my troubling you.

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Chapman Esquire.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 27 DECEMBER 1848*

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace. | Wednesday Morning
December Twenty Seventh | 1848.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I send you the Australian Documents,[†2] of which I have made a sufficient Memorandum for our other purpose.[†3]

Faithfully Yours ever

To JOHN LEECH, 29 DECEMBER 1848

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: John Leech Esquire | 31 Notting Hill Terrace. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Friday Twenty Ninth Decr. | 1848.

My Dear Leech.

I should like to have a walk. Also a talk, about going out of town. Don't you think we might improve upon the Isle of Wight,[†1] and find out some other place where there is something to see, and where Men resort?[†2] I am going to take down the beauties of England and Wales presently (in 30 Vols thick 8^{0})[†3] and look over them.

Let me know tomorrow, what you say to Monday. Anywhere, or any hour—all one to Yours ever

CD.

To W. P. FRITH, [30 DECEMBER 1848]

Mention in next.

To EDWARD CHAPMAN, 30 DECEMBER 1848*

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday Thirtieth December | 1848.

My Dear Sir

I have to acknowledge the receipt of your note and the payment of the balance of the Midsummer Account into Coutts's.[†4] For both of which, I am much obliged.

Don't take the trouble of getting the engraving you speak of. I have written to Mr. Frith this morning, to ask him how the case stands. I will send you his reply.

Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

Edward Chapman Esquire.

To MRS GAWTHROP,[†5] 30 DECEMBER 1848*

MS The Subunso-Book Store, Japan. Address (envelope, MS private): Mrs. Gawthrop | Hawkshead | near | Ambleside. On mourning paper.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park

Thirtieth December 1848.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mrs. Gawthrop, and regrets that he cannot comply with her request, as he has already set aside his vote for another deserving and melancholy case.[†1]

To MR TAYLOR,[†2] 30 DECEMBER 1848*

MS Mr. H. E. Quick. On mourning paper.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Thirtieth December 1848.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Taylor, and begs to thank him for his very obliging letter and apt quotation.

To JOHN FORSTER, [31 DECEMBER 1848]

Extract in F, VI, vi, 523. Date: "on the last day of the year" according to Forster.

It would be better[†3] to make an outburst to some old cathedral city we don't know, and what do you say to Norwich and Stanfield-hall?[†4]

To FRANK STONE, 31 DECEMBER 1848*

MS Benoliel Collection. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Thirty First December 1848.

My Dear "Tone".

I send you the works of an obscure Writer, of our acquaintance, with all cordial wishes for your happiness through many succeeding years.

By some ingenious mistake in the region of Whitefriars, I find that the set does not comprize the Christmas Books. I will instruct the Binder to remedy this mistake, and send them straight to you, when ready in their new coats.

Ever Affecy. Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Frank Stone Esquire.

To [THOMASINA ROSS], [DECEMBER 1848]

Extract in S. J. Davey's catalogue, 1889. Address: clearly to Thomasina Ross, translator of El Buscapié (see below). Date: Thomasina Ross had no doubt sent CD her translation in book-form, published Dec 48 (see below).

I thank you very cordially for your kind recollection of me. I look forward to putting my feet on the fender to-night and thoroughly enjoying a prodigious cold in the head, and El Buscapie[†1] together.

It is comfortable to see this portrait of Cervantes.[†2] It strikes me that the former one[†3] must be a true likeness of the rash and miserable man who produced a second part of Don Quixote,[†4] and that his unworthy visage has come to be confounded in the mind of some collector with that of our immortal friend.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, [?LATE 1848]

MS Morgan Library. Date: Signature suggests late 1848.

Devonshire Terrace | Thursday Evg.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I am always for the promptest measures—and I suppose made you laugh by my ferocity.

I could call on you tomorrow afternoon at a quarter past four. If I don't hear from you, I will come then.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To FREDERIC TOLFREY,[†5] [?LATE 1848]

Mention in To Blewitt, 5 Feb 49. Date: On 5 Feb 49 CD told Blewitt that Tolfrey had written him two "very defiant epistles", and that he had replied to the first. Late 1848 is perhaps likelier than early 1849.

Concerning Tolfrey's application for help from the Royal Literary Fund.

To THE REV. CHARLES B. DALTON,[†1] [?LATE 1848]*

MS (fragment) Mr James M. Osborn. Date: Possible reference to Miss Coutts's gift in July 48 (see below) suggests later in same year. Handwriting supports.

reference to Southwark generally, that I have already forwarded a similar sum to the Magistrate at the Southwark Police Office.[†2]

With many thanks for your attention

I remain Dear Sir

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Reverend Charles B Dalton.

1849

January

To THE EARL OF CARLISLE,[†3] 2 JANUARY 1849*

MS Mr George Howard. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Second January 1849.

My Dear Lord Carlisle.

I must tell you what pleasure I have had in the receipt of your pleasantest of letters, and how highly I esteem your affectionate frankness.

[†a]Here follows my defence.[†a]

William Swidger's catchword,[†4] I give up. The temptation to intemperance in that wise, in a little book, where it is very difficult to mark the individuality of the characters, is great. We were merry about it here, too, because it is taken from a servant of ours, who invariably gives me that reply—and the more profoundly ignorant he is of what I speak of, the more earnest he makes it.

As the inventor of this sort of story, I may be allowed to plead that I think a little dreaminess and vagueness essential to its effect. I am greatly mistaken if the points that do tell, as they stand, would not be weakened without it. But the introduction of such a quality into any of my longer books, is what I never thought of in the remotest manner, and is something that I contemplate with a perfect shock. If it be there, it can only be because of my having taken great pains and thought about the subject in all its lights and shades. I shall set a close watch upon myself in future.

The process of my mind in the construction of such a picture as the opening one of twilight, is one incessant process of rejection. I bring it down to that, by working at it very slowly, and with infinite pains—rejecting things, day after day, as they come into my thoughts, and whipping the cream of them. But the heaping up of that quantity of shadows, I hold to be absolutely necessary, as a preparation to the appearance of the dark shadow of the Chemist.[†5] People will take anything for granted, in the Arabian Nights or the Persian Tales, but they won't walk out of Oxford Street, or the Market place of a county town, directly into the presence of a Phantom, albeit an allegorical one. And I believe it to be as essential that they come at that spectre through such a preparation of gathering gloom and darkness, as it would be for them to go through some such ordeal, in reality, before they could get up a private Ghost of their own.

—As the Counsel for the Prisoner says—"That is my case my Lud."

Mrs. Dickens can't understand why you should expect to be treated as Johnny was by Mr. Tetterby,[†1] except on the principle of Mr. Tetterby's having boxed the ears of the wrong boy.[†2] It is a very just view of the case, I think.

I know you will be glad to hear that the little book has been a wonderful success. And I know you will believe me when I add that your earnestness and cordiality are stored away in my breast, among the most cherished associations connected with it.

Dear Lord Carlisle | Yours ever faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

The Earl of Carlisle.

To JOSEPH ELLIS, 2 JANUARY 1849*

MS Bodleian Library. Address: Private | Mr. Ellis | Bedford Hotel | Brighton. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Second January 1849.

Dear Mr. Ellis

Many thanks to you for the paté,—which arrived quite safely and in admirable condition, last night, and is most acceptable, both for your sake and its own.

I have been much amused by your description of your unsatisfactory state of mind and its causes and cure. You will be glad to hear that the little book is an immense success, and that we have not been able to print it fast enough.[†3]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To MARK LEMON, 2 JANUARY 1849

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Tuesday Second January | 1849.

My Dear Tom Moore[†4]—(I mean Lemon—but the verses have confused me—)

I fear I shall not be able to come to Drury Lane[†5] in any reasonable time, for I have an appointment this evening, to which I must attend. But I will go to Offleys[†1]—at about half past 10 or from that to 11—and, in the dining room, either find or expect you.

Ever Heartily
CD.

To L. C. MARTIN,[†2] 3 JANUARY 1849

Text in N, II, 141, checked from MS Sotheby's, July 1972. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Third January 1849.

Dear Sir

I am much obliged to you for the proofs you had the kindness to send me, yesterday.[†3] The drawings of course appear to greater advantage in such a form, but I think—all things considered—that they have been very well rendered in the book, and especially the frontispiece.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

L. C. Martin Esquire

To OCTAVIAN BLEWITT, 4 JANUARY 1849*

MS Fales Collection, New York University Library. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace. | Fourth January 1849.

My Dear Sir

I am exceedingly sorry to learn from your obliging note, that I have only attended the General Committee[†4] once, since the March Election.[†5] On Wednesday next, I shall be out of town, and I fear I cannot by any means get back in time to attend the Committee on that day, and save my seat.[†6]

I was under the impression that my requisite number of attendances within the year, was not only completed, but exceeded. I presume, however, that I have been erroneously calculating from last January instead of from March.

My ceasing to be a Member of the Committee is so far from being intentional on my part, that I shall hope to be re-elected at some future time, and shall feel obliged to you if you will find some means of expressing my regret to the Committee, and assuring them of my humble interest in the Society.

My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Octavian Blewitt Esquire.

To CHARLES MANBY, 4 JANUARY 1849*

MS Benoliel Collection. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Fourth January 1849.

My Dear Sir

You can, if you please, at your perfect convenience, pay the £100 for the Christmas Book permission,[†1] to my account at Coutts's.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Manby Esquire

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 5 JANUARY [1849]

Extract in Kingston Galleries catalogue No. 32; dated 5 Jan 48 according to catalogue; presumably misdated by CD by a year, like letters of early 1848; on obtaining the Family Bible (now in Dickens House), CD entered in it (clearly all at the same time, since ink and writing are identical) the births of his first eight children, ending with Henry Fielding Dickens, born 16 Jan 49. Addressee's name erased in salutation and subscription cut away, according to catalogue.

Can you get me . . . [any][†2] account of the Cenci family[†3] in connexion with the history of the unfortunate and beautiful[†4] . . .? I have promised to lend the history and I find that I haven't got it. I also want, according to your judgment and . . . convenience, the best Family Bible, large, plain in type, and bound.

To CHARLES MANBY, 6 JANUARY 1849

MS Harvard College Library. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Sixth January 1849.

My Dear Sir

I beg to acknowledge, with thanks to you, the receipt of £100—the sum agreed to be paid by the Managers of the Adelphi Theatre for permission to play the dramatized version of the Haunted Man, by Mr. Lemon, as by my sanction, and in advance of any other Theatre.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Manby Esquire

To THE POSTMASTER OF NORWICH, [8 JANUARY 1849]

Mention in next.

To MRS CHARLES DICKENS, 8 JANUARY 1849

MS British Museum. Address: Mrs. Charles Dickens | 1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate, Regents Park | London. On mourning paper.

Norwich | January Eighth 1849.

My Dearest Kate. I have had a miserably bad night's rest, and am rather seedy in consequence this morning, but hope to be improved by a ride to Stanfield Hall[†1] (9 miles off) and afterwards to Yarmouth, whither we are going this afternoon. I have written to the Post Master here, directing him to send your letter on to me.

We had a very tedious and cold journey down, only improved by the Sparkler's conversational powers. Wright[†2] and Bedford[†3] were in the train, going down to see a young man at Bishop Storford,[†4] newly come into property and portwine, bequeathed him by an uncle. Mr. Mellon[†5] the Musical Director of the Adelphi was with them, and one Mr. Bellingham[†6] of the Lyceum. The host himself, who came down to the station to receive them, made up a picture that I never saw surpassed. It was so evident that his late uncle's gifts wouldn't last long—and that he would be imbecile with his own port in five minutes, and leave his distinguished guests to enjoy themselves in their own way, after he was carried off to bed.

We are going out to see the Cathedral and the other lions, before starting for Stanfield Hall. It seems a dull place.—I am told that the manufacture of Norwich scarfs, is quite at an end, and that they are only to be got in London.

We shall be home, please God, some time on Wednesday Evening; but I will write again tomorrow to say when. I hope the darlings will enjoy themselves tonight, and I look forward to receiving some stupendous anecdotes of the Captain.[†1]

I dreamed of Morgan[†2] last night. Not ominous, I suppose?[†3]

My best love to Georgy, and to all the children.

Ever affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS CHARLES DICKENS, 9 JANUARY 1849

MS British Museum. On mourning paper.

Royal Hotel, Yarmouth.
Tuesday Night Ninth January 1849

My Dearest Kate.

I received your letter here this morning, and was very glad (and a good deal relieved) to find that you were quite well when you wrote. We have had a two or three and twenty mile walk to day—to Lowestoft[†4] in Suffolk (Mrs. Gibson's country)[†5] and back, and are sitting round the fire, giving encouragement to Lemon, who did his walking admirably, but is somewhat disposed to snore. He breaks into a snore in a most wonderful manner, instantly after he has been broad awake.

I bought you a shawl at Norwich—I don't think much of it. It's Norwich manufacture. That's all I can say. But it's bright and cheery besides—I forgot that.

Tell Georgy with my love that I should have bought her one, but I thought she would prefer a muff. She shall have which she likes, in town.

We purpose leaving here tomorrow morning for Home, but staying a couple of hours at Cambridge on our way. As this will bring us to the London station, dinnerless and famished, we shall go to dine somewhere in the neighbourhood. But I shall hope to be home in good time in the evening, beyond question.

I want Topping to come to meet us, to take the luggage, which would otherwise be a great inconvenience. These are his instructions. To be at the Terminus of the Eastern Counties Railway, in Shoreditch, at a quarter past 6, with the carriage. He must be no later, or we may be there before him.

Best love to all the darlings. I write hastily, for the post's sake.

Ever affectionately, my dear

CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 11 JANUARY 1849

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace. | Eleventh January 1849. | Thursday

My Dear Miss Coutts

I have been out of town since Sunday, or I would have answered your letter sooner.

I shall go to the Home on Saturday at 3. As that is often your day for going there, perhaps I shall see you before I come away. I am very glad that Jane Westaway and Martha Goldsmith are provided for, in the Emigration regard.[†1] But I fear Julia Mozley will become restless, if she be left behind.[†2]

I have thought, much and often, of that point in the little address,[†3] which encourages them with the possibility of Marriage.[†4] I am quite satisfied and convinced that it is a powerful, and a justly powerful, incentive to patience and good conduct; and I can not, of my own deed, take it out of the paper. If they, or any of them, labor under any mistake on this point, I suppose it to be a part of Miss Cunliffe's business to set them right. You will not think me claiming much, if I claim to know much better than she does, or by any possibility can, what the force of that suggestion secretly is. I even think it—to say the truth—a little presumptuous in her, coming to the consideration of such things so freshly, to suggest the alteration. Of its being an alteration enormously for the worse, I have no more doubt than I have of my writing this note with my right hand.

Charley had a very merry birthday[†1]—I had the honor of conjuring for the party, in a chinese dress and a very large mask—and his noble cake was the admiration and wonder of all beholders. We are at present engaged in getting up a play in a toy theatre. I am steeped to the very eyebrows in glue and paste.

Dear Miss Coutts | Ever Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 12 JANUARY 1849

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace. | Twelfth January 1849

My Dear Miss Coutts.

Monday or Tuesday will do perfectly well—so far as I am concerned—for a special committee. I will ask you tomorrow, which you decide on.

I thought you told me Miss Cunliffe had suggested the disputed alteration.[†2] I understood you—or misunderstood you, rather—to say so, when we spoke about it.

Dear Miss Coutts | Ever Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts

To JOHN FORSTER, [12 JANUARY 1849]

Summary and extract in F, VI, vi, 523. Date: 12 Jan according to Forster: almost certainly date written, not received, since, says Forster, four days before letter of 16 Jan announcing the birth of Henry Fielding Dickens.

Saying that Stanfield Hall had nothing attractive about it[†3] unless the term might be applied to a murderous look that seemed to invite such a crime.[†4] We arrived between the Hall and Potass farm,[†1] as the search was going on for the pistol[†2] in a manner so consummately stupid, that there was nothing on earth to prevent any of Rush's labourers from accepting five pounds from Rush junior[†3] to find the weapon and give it to him. Norwich, a disappointment; all save its place of execution,[†4] which we found fit for a gigantic scoundrel's exit. But the success of the trip, for me, was to come. Yarmouth, sir, where we went afterwards, is the strangest place in the wide world: one hundred and forty-six miles of hill-less marsh between it and London. More when we meet. I shall certainly try my hand at it.

To THE COMMITTEE FOR MR GILES'S TESTIMONIAL,[†5] 12 JANUARY 1849

Text from Arthur Humphreys, CD and his First Schoolmaster, p. 18.

Devonshire Terrace | 12th January, 1849.

Gentlemen,

I exceedingly regret that I feel obliged to decline your invitation to present the testimonial to our old schoolmaster.[†6] I am honoured and gratified by your selection of me as President on so interesting an occasion, but I am forced, by many engagements and considerations, to remain in London now, and to relinquish the pleasure you propose to me, in favour of some other gentleman who had the advantage of Mr. Giles's tuition.[†7]

Although I lost that advantage myself, when I was very young indeed, I am not the less sensible of its value. Nothing that can be said in grateful recognition of it on the evening in question will exceed my appreciation of its worth.

I am, Gentlemen, | Your faithful servant,
CHARLES DICKENS

To the Committee of Mr. Giles's Testimonial.

— V - 475 —

To A. KEILY,[†1] 12 JANUARY 1849*

MS Mr Jim Walsh. Address: A. Keily Esquire | 14 Hunter Street | Brunswick Square. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Twelfth January 1849

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Keily, and regrets that he cannot give him the information and advice he seeks. Whenever Mr. Dickens has had occasion for the assistance of gentlemen who engrave on wood, they have been selected, either by the artists or by the publishers. For such a purpose as Mr. Keily describes, Mr. Dickens thinks any wood-engraver, almost, would be available.[†2]

To CHARLES SABINE,[†3] 12 JANUARY 1849*

MS Oswestry Public Library. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Twelfth January 1849.

Dear Sir

Allow me to thank you for your little book for poor little people[†4]—a kind remembrance of the children of those whom "we have always with us",[†5] and a worthy Christmas thought.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Sabine Esquire.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 12 JANUARY 1849

Extract in Stewart Kidd catalogue, Oct 1929; MS 1 p.; dated Devonshire [Terrace], 12 Jan 49.

[I] received your letter & will not forget it. I should be really happy to assist you to any suitable employment if it were in my power; but I know of none and I fear I am not likely to know of any.

To MRS COWDEN CLARKE, 13 JANUARY 1849

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds, Address: Mrs. Cowden Clarke. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Thirteenth January 1849.

My Dear Mrs. Clarke.

I am afraid that Young Gas[†1] is forever dimmed, and that the breath of calumny will blow henceforth on his stage management, by reason of his enormous delay in returning you the two pounds non forwarded by Mrs. G.[†2] The proposed deduction on account of which you sent it, was never made.

—But had you seen him in "Used up",
His eye so beaming and so clear,
When on his stool he sat to sup
The oxtail—little Romer near[†3]
&c &c
—you would have forgotten and forgiven all.

Ever Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Cowden Clarke

To JOHN WESTLAND MARSTON,[†4] 15 JANUARY 1849*

MS Benoliel Collection. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Fifteenth January | 1849.

My Dear Sir.

In reference to the resolution[†5] you were so kind as to send me some time since, concerning Mr. Heraud, I regret to say that I cannot make use of the circulars, for I am obliged always to observe the Total Abstinence principle in that wise, or I should very soon become a terror to all my friends. But, if the other Members of the Committee collect their ten pounds each, I shall be most happy to increase my subscription to £10. And if they do not, I shall still be very happy to increase it to £5.[†6] Will you do me the favor to bear this in mind, and make use of me accordingly.

My Dear Sir | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

J. Westland Marston Esquire

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 15 JANUARY 1849

Mention in John Anderson Jr catalogue No. 808; MS ½p.; dated London, 15 Jan 49.

Declining an invitation.

To JOHN FORSTER, [16 JANUARY 1849]

Extract in F, VI, vi, 523. Date: Henry Fielding Dickens was born on 16 Jan 49.

All over happily, thank God, by four o'clock this morning.

To T. WOOLNOTH,†1 16 JANUARY 1849†

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. On mourning paper.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Sixteenth January 1849

Sir.

In reply to your obliging note, †a I must beg to decline giving you my name in form and not in substance. But I shall be very happy to enrol myself as a subscriber for a best copy of your book.†a†2

If you will have the goodness to direct it to be delivered, when published, to Messrs. Bradbury and Evans 11 Bouverie Street, they will receive it and pay the subscription on my account.

I am Sir | Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

T. Woolnoth Esquire

To FRANK STONE, 20 JANUARY 1849*

MS Benoliel Collection. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday Twentieth Jany. | 1849.

My Dear Stone

Here are the rest of the books. I don't forget that I have to come and write in them.

We expect you tomorrow at 5. Kate is, thank God, wonderfully well.
Ditto No. 8†3 (! ! ! ! ! ! ! ! ! ! ! !)

Ever Affecy.

CD.

To THE REV. EDWARD TAGART, 20 JANUARY 1849

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Twentieth January 1849.

My Dear Sir

This is a hasty note to say that I propose to be duly forthcoming on the day and at the hour you so agreeably set forth.[†1] Ditto the gentle Georgina. But I fear there is not much chance of Kate's responding to Mrs. Tagart's kind note, in as much as she was confined last Monday night, and although brilliantly well (thank God) is, according to the precedents, hardly presentable yet.

Ever very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Reverend Edward Tagart.

To WILLIAM EMPSON, 21 JANUARY 1849*

MS Liverpool Public Library. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Sunday Twenty First January | 1849.

My Dear Empson.

I write this, in case I should not see you when I call this morning.

I am happy to report that Kate is as well as it is possible to be. Her confinement was almost as bad a one as its predecessor, but Chloroform did wonders,[†2] and she knew nothing of it. She begs to be most kindly remembered to you and Mrs. Empson.[†3]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

W. Empson Esquire.

To THOMAS CHAPMAN, 22 JANUARY 1849

Mention in Sotheby's catalogue, 1 June 1957; MS 1 ½ pp.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 22 Jan 49.

Saying that he cannot dine with Mrs Chapman[†4] as he had hoped to do and adding that his wife is well.

To T. H. MAGUIRE,[†1] 24 JANUARY 1849

MS Rosenbach Foundation. Address: T. H. Maguire Esquire | 98 Great Russell Street | Bedford Square. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Fourth January 1849.

Sir.

I beg to assure you that I have only been prevented from acknowledging, and thanking you for, your beautiful and most acceptable present,[†2] by not knowing (until I heard from you, yesterday) how to address my letter. If I had known the name of the publisher of the lithograph, I should have consigned it to his care; but, having sent the impression to be framed, I was not even possessed of this information.

It is a most beautiful and admirable specimen of your art, carried to a pitch of excellence that I really should have thought it impossible to attain. I shall hang it in a post of honor near the Bobadil,[†3] and I beg you to believe that whenever I look at it, it will be a source of pleasure and interest to me.

Yours faithfully and obliged
CHARLES DICKENS

T. H. Maguire Esquire.

To DUDLEY COSTELLO, 26 JANUARY 1849

Text from MDGH, I, 205.

Devonshire Terrace | Friday Night, Jan. 26th, | 1849.

My Dear Costello,

I am desperate! Engaged in links of adamant to a "monster in human form"—a remarkable expression I think I remember to have once met with in a newspaper[†4]—whom I encountered at Franconi's,[†5] whence I have just returned, otherwise I would have done all three things right heartily and with my accustomed sweetness. Think of me another time when chops are on the carpet (figuratively speaking), and see if I won't come and eat 'em!

Ever faithfully yours,
[CHARLES DICKENS]

P.S. I find myself too despondent for the flourish.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 27 JANUARY 1849

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Seventh Janry. 1849.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I hope it was all well, yesterday. Nothing could have been better, more kindly, or more carefully arranged, I think.

Mr. Illingworth and I are to see the new girl No. 2, to day.

I am sorry to say that I have been brooding very gloomily over our Shepherd's Bush prospects. All possible deductions and allowances made, it is quite clear to me that Miss Cunliffe is a woman of an atrocious temper, and that she violently mistakes her office and its functions. I do not descry any prospect of our keeping the young women in the house, when she has the sole charge of them. The idea of hectoring and driving them, is the most ignorant and the most fatal that could be possibly entertained. I am quite confident she will bring about such an outbreak as we have not had there.[†1]

Faithfully Yours ever
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOSEPH ELLIS, 27 JANUARY 1849*

MS Mrs K. M. Jonas. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Seventh January 1849

Dear Mr. Ellis

I have been so busy this day or two, that I have not been able to write any letters.

I shall be really happy to subscribe my guinea and my name towards the portrait of Mr. Robertson.[†2] Pray put me down, and do not think it necessary to send me the prospectus.[†3] I cannot answer for Mr. Lemon, but I think it would be a little out of his way.[†4]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Joseph Ellis Esquire

To COUNT D'ORSAY, 29 JANUARY 1849*

MS Comte de Gramont. Address: A Monsieur: | Monsr. Le Comte D'Orsay | Gore House | Kensington. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | 29 Janvier 1849.

Mon cher Comte.

Tracey, et mon ami Chesterton (aussi governeur d'une prison immense, et tres brave homme) vont diner chez moi Lundi prochain a 6 ½ precisement, pour causer de prisons, des criminels, et des choses, en generale, les plus agreeables du monde!—Le bon Forster (ah mon Dieu qu'il est excessivement gras!) se rendra ici, le meme[†1] jour, et la meme heure. Pouvez-vous, et voulez-vous, venir? Nous ne serons que six. Je serai heureux et charmè de vous voir, en garçon et sans ceremonie.

Madame et son fils vous envoient mille amities. Votre filleul[†2] est serieusement affligè de la maladie de Forster.[†3]

Je vais, demain, à Bath, pour-y-rester le jour seulement. J'y vais diner avec Landor. C'est son jour de fete. Il aura demain, je crois, 75 ans.[†4]

Votre tout devouè
CHARLES DICKENS

Dites a Milady que je l'aime toujours, et que je l'aimerai toujours.

To H. G. ADAMS,[†5] 30 JANUARY 1849*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Thirtieth January 1849

Dear Sir

In reply to your note, I beg to assure you that I know nothing whatever, of the paper you suppose to have been written by me.[†1] I infer that the attaching of my name to it, was an act of "smartness" on the part of the American Editor, which will greatly endear him to his admirers.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

H. G. Adams Esquire.

To HENRY BURNETT, 31 JANUARY 1849

MS Dickens House.

Devonshire Terrace | Thirty First January 1849.

My Dear Burnett.

As I am setting out to Lewisham to see my father who, my mother writes me, is exceedingly unwell there, I receive your sad letter. I cannot go out without sending you a few words of most affectionate condolence and sympathy.

My Dear fellow, I cannot but believe that the mercy of God has removed your poor dear boy.[†2] I cannot but think, though his death reopens that wound within you which has been so recently and imperfectly closed,[†3] that a few hours will reconcile you to his loss. A child so afflicted, even with the inestimable blessing of a mother's care to support him, must, if he lived, be inevitably doomed to great mental anguish, to a weary struggle with the difficulties of life, to many years of secret comparison in his own breast between himself and more healthy and more fortunate children. I hope that if I were you, I could—when the first burst of my love and grief was past—thankfully confide him to that better Father to whom he has passed, and to that enduring world, where, we may believe, he has rejoined his mother, and for ever cast away his early sorrows and infirmities[†4] [†a][ ][†a]

Do what will console you most, and what you think she would have liked.

You have a brave fine boy[†5] to rear [u]p still, and God send that he may be a source of happiness to you!

Kate and Georgina unite in [be]st remembrances.[†6]

To CHARLES WENTWORTH DILKE,[†1] [31 JANUARY 1849]

Mention in To Mrs Austin, 1 Feb 49.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?LATE JANUARY 1849]

Summary and extract in F, VI, vi, 524. Date: presumably not long after Henry Fielding Dickens's birth.

Telling Forster that he had decided to call his newly-born son Henry Fielding instead of Oliver Goldsmith, as a kind of homage to the style of the novel he was about to write. What should you think of this for a notion of a character? "Yes, that is very true: but now, What's his motive?"[†2] I fancy I could make something like it into a kind of amusing and more innocent Pecksniff. "Well now, yes—no doubt that was a fine thing to do! But now, stop a moment, let us see—What's his motive?"

February

To MRS HENRY AUSTIN, 1 FEBRUARY 1849*

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | First February 1849.

My Dear Letitia.

I am very sorry to hear that Henry (my love to him) has been so unwell.[†3] His doctor seems, from his prescriptions, to be a very sensible fellow; and if to that good living and fresh air, he added another article of my belief—plenty of cold water—I should consider him an Oracle.

I had a letter from poor Burnett the night before last, to which I replied, yesterday morning, gently pointing out to him why I thought it good and merciful for the poor dear child's sake, that he should be seen of men no more. But I do not wonder at his fatherly affliction, God knows.

Hearing from mother that father was exceedingly unwell, I went out to Lewisham yesterday to see him. They said he was better than he had been. He was in bed, and seemed low and weak. But I did not, on the whole, find him so ill as I had expected. I shall go out there again, today. As he was worrying himself about that eternal Daily News, I quieted his mind by saying I should write to Dilke, and tell that potentate how he was going on.[†4] Which I did last night.

If Henry is pedestrian, and if you should be at Brighton either next Tuesday or next Thursday (which may suit him best) and if you would ask me to accept of a mutton chop, I think I shouldn't be averse to coming down by a morning train, and coming back by an evening one. But maybe you will yourselves be running home before then.

Kate and the baby are in high feather, and unite with Georgy (at least I have no doubt the baby would if he could) in loves.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To THE REV. CHARLES DE LA PRYME,[†1] 2 FEBRUARY 1849†

MS Berg Collection. On mourning paper.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Second February 1849.

Dear Sir

[†a]I hasten to thank you for your "Curiosity of Literature",[†a†2] for your very obliging note, and for your flattering remembrance of me. For all of which, I am much beholden to you.

[†b]As I am not[†3] favorable to Censorships generally,[†b] or to Papal Censorships in particular, I hope your pamphlet[†4] will always remain the Curiosity it has become. The only Censor I can call to mind whom I should care to see revived, is Mr. Isaac Bickerstaff of Shoe Lane London.[†5]

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles De la Pryme Esquire

&c &c &c

To W. C. MACREADY, 2 FEBRUARY 1849†

MS Morgan Library. Address: By Post Office Steamer. | W. C. Macready Esquire | Care of David Colden Esquire | Laight Street | Hudson Square | New York. Signed bottom left "Bully and Meek."

Devonshire Terrace | Friday February Second, 1849.

My Dear Macready.[†6] Is it true that you gave "our illustrious Countryman"[†7]

— V - 485 —

Mister Forrest,[†1] five thousand pounds to perpetrate his published Card?[†2] I think it was very little, do you know? It certainly was worth ten to you, and I question whether twenty would have compensated him for eating such a waggonload of dirt.—And so you begin to think there is something a leetle rotten in the State of Denmark?[†3] Ha!—I say no more.

I dined the other day with Ainsworth[†4] at the Garrick, where I was talking, before dinner, with Fladgate,[†5] Dance,[†6] Wallack[†7] &c. It really was wholesome and good to hear the genuine disgust and indignation that prevailed in respect of our distinguished feller cit'zen. There was nothing feigned or got up, in it. It was a comfortable, palatable, plain outpouring of divers full vessels of wrath, that quite refreshed my ears.

I have been reading the Queen's Speech,[†8] this morning, and the Debate thereupon; and as a similar refreshment to myself after that awful and most frightful humbug, sit down to write to you. Oh that I had the wings of a dove,[†1] and could flee (with a select circle) to some pleasant climate, where there are no Royal Speeches, and no professed Politicians! Heavens and Earth, to read the circumcised Dog[†2] D'Israeli[†3] apropòs[†4] of War[†5] and Cobden![†6]

— V - 486 —

You have heard, perhaps, how that I now stand seised and possessed of six sons and two daughters. YOU,[†7] old Parr![†8] YOU!!![†9] Sir, I am the original. There never was such an old man as I consider myself to be. You will find me very grey. My hat a world too wide for my shrunk locks.[†10] I am quite a heavy father, and think of going in, in future, for the blessing business—not the "Damme-you-dog-, you-shall-marry-her" line—that's too light—but the "Bless thee my child!" to slow music, [†a]and then going into the Garden Water closet, which has a very low door, and will represent the Cottage set on second grooves.[†11] O.P.[†12][†a]

Kate is wonderfully well—eating mutton chops in the drawing room—and sends you her dear love. The boy is what the Persian Princes might have called a "moon-faced" monster. [†b]He did not, however, come into the world as he ought to have done (I don't know in what we have offended Nature, but she seems to have taken something in us amiss) and we had to call in extra counsel and assistance. Foreseeing the possibility of such a repetition of last time, I had made myself thoroughly acquainted in Edinburgh with the facts of chloroform[†13]

— V - 487 —

—in contradistinction to the talk about it—and had insisted on the attendance of a gentleman from Bartholomew's Hospital,[†1] who administers it in the operations there, and has given it four or five thousand times. I had also promised her that she should have it. The doctors were dead against it,[†2] but I stood my ground, and (thank God) triumphantly. It spared her all pain (she had no sensation, but of a great display of sky-rockets) and saved the child all mutilation. It enabled the doctors to do, as they afterwards very readily said, in ten minutes, what might otherwise have taken them an hour and a half; the shock to her nervous system was reduced to nothing; and she was, to all intents and purposes, well, next day. Administered by some one who has nothing else to do, who knows its symptoms thoroughly, who keeps his hand upon the pulse, and his eyes upon the face, and uses nothing but a hand kerchief,[†3] and that lightly, I am convinced that it is as safe in its administration, as it is miraculous and merciful in its effects. This the Edinburgh Professors[†4] assured me, and certainly our experience thoroughly confirms them.[†b]

A very curious pamphlet[†5] has been published by Barber[†6]—the solicitor who was transported for life, in the famous Miss Slack case.[†7] You remember a whole party of men and women being elaborately got up, to represent an Executrix and her friends at the Bank of England, and drawing out three or four thousand pounds of unclaimed Stock? There has since arisen a strong presumption—one may almost say, certain proof—of Barber's innocence, and after two years of Norfolk Island[†1] he has been pardoned. He now republishes his case, with all the documents that have since come into existence. It is a tremendous illustration of the inefficiency of Lords and Gentlemen as Home Secretaries[†2]—of the manner in which they may receive Memorials from innocent men in the agony of supposed guilt, and endurance of frightful punishment—put them away in drawers, and never so much as read them—and of the indispensable necessity there is, for a public and solemn Court of Appeal in all criminal cases.[†3]

I was going to tell you, but I should want a sheet for it, how Mrs. Macready and I did dance on Twelfth Night. We had no party here, but we had a cosey[†4] little knot of us old Patriarchs to look at the children, and then we supped together (we old ones) and talked of the days of our youth, and the fashions and customs of that remote period. We also drank your health. I propoged it; and though every furrow in my grief-worn cheek, had been the channel to a flood of—years, I mumbled what their dimmed ears understood. We then dashed into Sir Roger de Coverley—then into a reel[†5]—for two mortal hours, false Parr, your great original, and your wife, danced without ceasing—breatheing[†6] Willie,[†7] prostrating Nina,[†8] reducing to 'tarnal smash[†9] (as we say in our country) all the other couples one by one. With shame and grief I own that at last I—I[†10]—gave in, when She[†11] was fresh and active still.

The little deformed child of my poor sister is (happily) just dead, and Burnett brings the little coffin up today, to lay it in her grave at Highgate. God knows that it is good and kind it should be so, but it is difficult to fill him with that knowledge yet, poor fellow.

I meant to have written you such a letter—so amusing—so pathetic—so full of news. I must try again. Better luck next time. You will like to know how our friends are. Forster, whiggish of necessity,[†12] but writhing under the Writers Radical onslaughts. Rogers, sour.[†13] H. P. Smith, quite white all over, for want of a little wine. Kenyon,[†14] smooth, oily, beaming, and slippery (He is my particular friend, and I dine with him today). Mrs. Brockedon,[†1] dining out in immense black velvet hats, which servants crush in putting dishes on, and blind themselves behind. Bancroft[†2] ditto, as to dining—with his head like a blacking-brush, outside, but good stuff within. Lord Lansdowne, gouty and solemn. D'Orsay, looking, as I take it, towards France.[†3] Maclise, invisible. Stanfield, rubicund and jovial, but extremely Papal. Mrs. Stanfield, cold and fishey.[†4] Dickens, revolving new books in his mind, and walking perpetually. Georgy and all the children, sending loves innumerable. All wishing you back, and getting ready to greet you with open arms.[†5] None more so, my dearest Macready than your ever affectionate CD.

To HENRY [AUSTIN], 3 FEBRUARY 1849

Extracts in Rosenbach Co. catalogue No. 16 (1913), (aa) and American Art Association catalogue April 1929, (bb); MS 2 ½ pp.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 3 Feb 49. Address: to "his brother Henry", according to Rosenbach Co. catalogue; but clearly to his brother-in-law, Henry Austin.

[a]My dear Henry

[b]I am revolving a new work;[†6] and I fear that on this account, and with an eye to Kate, who is coming down tomorrow, I can't make more than a day of it at Brighton.[a] But on Thursday, please God, I will appear early, and at the worst, come back late. . . . Poor Burnett has been here this morning. He buries the child on Monday. Father is better. I saw Elliotson last night (tell Tish)[†7] and he says there is nothing at all to apprehend, if he be taken care of.[b] . . .

[a]CHARLES DICKENS[a]

[a]the genuine orthography is—tate o' peelins.[a†8]

To CHARLES ELLIS,[†1] 3 FEBRUARY 1849*

MS Dickens House.

Devonshire Terrace | Third February 1849.

Dear Mr Ellis

If it will quite suit your convenience, I shall be glad to accept your draft at three months.[†2]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Charles Ellis

To OCTAVIAN BLEWITT, 5 FEBRUARY 1849*

MS Royal Literary Fund. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Fifth February 1849.

My Dear Sir

Can you tell me anything about Mr. Tolfrey, who has been relieved twice by the Literary Fund?[†3]

He is the author of a book called the Sportsman in Canada[†4] and has written me a couple of very defiant epistles, because I have felt it necessary to decline to "lend" him ten pounds. He says in one of them that an interval of two, if not three, months, must elapse between the date of a distressed author's application to the Fund, and his receipt of any assistance. I have told him, in reply that I distinctly know the fact to be otherwise.[†5] Whereupon he writes again, persisting in his assertion.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Octavian Blewitt Esquire

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 5 FEBRUARY 1849

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Fifth February 1849.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I was at the Home on Saturday, when I found Miss Cunliffe looking like a Stage Maniac in a domestic drama, or an illustration of "The Bottle"[†6] on very bad paper. All that Mrs. Holdsworth related of the three emigrants,[†1] interested and pleased me very much.

Will you not receive the new girl on Saturday?

What day in the week would you prefer for the single weekly lesson of Mr. Hullah? I have promised to inform him.

Am I to pay the Mark Money into the Savings' Bank? If so, how much?

I think this is all I have to ask, touching Shepherd's Bush. I enclose Charley's Memorandum to Christmas. Sometime ago, you gave me a begging letter to make enquiry about, from one Mr. Tolfrey, who represented himself as the author of a book, called The Sportsman in Canada.[†2] I am afraid it is not likely, in such an enormous correspondence as you have of that nature, that you can remember any more of it, or refer to it. But if you can, by any possible chance, do either, may I entreat you to do so, for a particular reason that I have.

Dear Miss Coutts | Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To LEONARD SIMPSON, 5 FEBRUARY 1849*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace. | Fifth February 1849.

My Dear Sir

I am extremely glad to receive your translation[†3] and your note after having, for so long a time, seen nothing of you in this Giant City. I shall hope to remedy that, when Mrs. Dickens is about again.

I have (as you may suppose) done little more than cut the leaves of your book this morning; but I have loitered here and there, upon the way, to read; and I assure you I have been very much pleased by the ease and smoothness of the English. The absence of all affectation in the translator, and the presence of good sense, is everywhere manifested most agreeably.

Believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Leonard Simpson Esquire.

To JOHN W. CALCRAFT,[†1] 7 FEBRUARY 1849

Text from N, II, 144-5.

London, Devonshire Terrace, | York Gate, Regents Park
Seventh February, 1849

Sir,

I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your obliging letter.

The Amateur Company, however, being for the present dispersed and their performance in behalf of the Shakespeare Curatorship having been brought to a close in Scotland last Summer, I am unable to entertain your proposal.

I am, Sir, | Your faithful servant
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To FRANK STONE, 7 FEBRUARY 1849*

MS Benoliel Collection. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Wednesday Seventh February | 1849.

Halloa Tone!

This is my birthday, and Kate being (thank God) well enough to take her usual place at table, Mus'r Beard and Forster are coming to dinner at ½ past 5. Will You come? No one else. Affectionately Ever

CD.

To FREDERICK DICKENS, 9 FEBRUARY 1849†

MS Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace. | Ninth February 1849.

My Dear Fred.

I thank you for your remembrance of me on my birthday. I should have done so yesterday, but that I went down to Brighton to see Henry.

[†a]Blackmore[†2] has (at your request) your copy of the Haunted Man. I don't know how I made the mistake, but I thought I had certainly sent you one.[†a] I have told him when he has read the little book, to restore it to you.

The Minute[†3] is "a long time coming",[†4]—but I hope it will prove to be a good one, when it does come.

Ever Affectionately
CD.

To G. LAVAN,[†1] 9 FEBRUARY 1849*

MS J. N. Bartfield Books Inc. On mourning paper.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Ninth February 1849.

Sir.

Allow me to thank you very cordially for your poem. I can, without putting any strain whatever on my conscience, echo the assurance which your friends give you that it is both "interesting and instructive". I have read it with real pleasure, and with a strong impression of its merits as a picture of the rugged, fierce, old time.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

G. Lavan Esquire

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 10 FEBRUARY 1849*

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday Evening | Tenth February 1849.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I beg to report all quiet and comfortable at Shepherd's Bush this afternoon. Miss Cunliffe rigidly secluded in her own chamber—making a perfect Brougham of herself in point of Oratory, I have no doubt.

In entering Isabella Gordon's case, by the bye, I incidentally found that the aforesaid Miss Cunliffe (but that is no matter, as she is going) had been already questioning her about her past life.[†2]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To EDWARD CHAPMAN, 12 FEBRUARY 1849†

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Twelfth February 1849.

My Dear Sir

[†a]The boys at Charley's School[†3] have established a library among themselves. Will you have the goodness to send with the enclosed note, and to that address, all the cheap Editions of my books yet published,[†4] in boards, and Barnaby in Numbers?[†5†a] Also, henceforth the weekly number every week—or the monthly part perhaps will be much better—sending me only one copy, as that is quite enough. With the cheap Editions, have the kindness to send the cheapest edition of Macaulay's lays of Ancient Rome.[†1]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Edward Chapman Esquire

To JOSEPH ELLIS, 12 FEBRUARY 1849*

MS Bodleian Library. Address(envelope MS Mrs K. M. Jonas): Mr. Joseph Ellis | The Bedford Hotel | Brighton. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace. | Twelfth February 1849.

Dear Mr. Ellis

Mrs. Dickens and I are going to stay, with some friends, at Junction House for a week. Will you have the kindness to send there, on Wednesday Morning, what I have noted on the other side, addressed to Charles Dickens and John Leech Esquires.

I hope the Portrait[†2] matter is going on well.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Joseph Ellis Esquire.
1 Doz: Sherry

½ doz: light old port.
Bottle brandy, Bottle Rum, Bottle Hollands.

———

(Mrs. Wilkinson's Junction House Brighton)

To JOHN FORSTER, [?EARLY FEBRUARY 1849]

Extract and summary in F, VI, vi, 524. Date: probably early Feb, since his mind was still "running . . . on names" for Copperfield on 18 Feb (To Forster, that day).

Deepest despondency, as usual, in commencing, besets me. Telling Forster of his anxiety in selecting a name for the novel.

To JOHN THOMPSON, 14 FEBRUARY 1849

Summary in Sotheby's catalogue, 25 July 1972; dated Athenæum Club, 14 Feb 49; to "John".

Asking him to put the key to his envelope case, from the round table in his study, into the pocket of his great coat which Topping will bring him that afternoon, when he fetches him with the carriage.

To MRS FISHER, 15 FEBRUARY 1849*

MS Yale University Library. On mourning paper.

Junction House, Brighton | Fifteenth February 1849.

Dear Mrs. Fisher.

I beg to enclose you (agreeably to your request) a formal testimonial of my good opinion. My sister in law forgets for what purpose you require it. If it should not be adapted to your purpose, I shall be happy to alter it, as I shall always be, let me assure you, to render you any assistance in my power.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To THE COUNTESS OF LOVELACE, 16 FEBRUARY 1849*

MS Lovelace Papers. Address: 37 Marine Parade [Brighton]. On mourning paper.

Junction House | Friday February Sixteenth 1849

My Dear Lady Lovelace.

When the attendant at the Bath gave me your note this morning, I felt as Aladdin might have done if the Princess Baralbadour[†1] had entrusted a similar communication to the attendant at her Bath. The shock of a "cold shower" was nothing to my amazement. It made no impression on me, by comparison.

We are staying here, for five days, with some friends.[†2] And I am under a solemn vow and covenant not to go out to breakfast, dinner, tea, lunch, supper, or other refection, during that period. But as I recollect 4 o'Clock to be (in the distant regions about Hyde Park), a likely time for finding you at home, I promise myself the pleasure of calling to see you at that hour tomorrow, unless you tell me that you won't be visible.

I find, on further consideration, that I don't like Manzanilla! People who dine with me won't hear of it. I have been horribly reproached for offering it. I find that weak cammomile[†3] tea is a wonderful imitation of this wine. It's very hard—but everything that is wholesome seems to be nasty—why should the grape that Mr. Ford commends[†4] have such a direful quality of bitterness!

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To MARK LEMON, [?FEBRUARY 1849]

Facsimile in Charles Dickens and Maria Beadnell, privately printed, Bibliophile Society, Boston, 1908. Date: almost certainly between 14 and 21 Feb 49, when CD, Catherine, their children, Georgina and the Leeches were all at Brighton; handwriting supports.

NEW SONG.[†1]

TUNE[†1]—"Lesbia hath a. beaming eye".[†2]

1.

Lemon is a little hipped,
And this is Lemon's true position—
He is not pale, he's not white-lipped,
Yet wants a little fresh condition.
Sweeter 'tis to gaze upon
Old Ocean's rising, falling, billers
Than on the Houses every one
That form the Street call'd Saint Anne's Willers![†3]

Oh my Lemon round and fat
Oh my bright, my right, my tight 'un,
Think a little what you're at—
Don't stay at home, but come to Brighton!—

(Please turn over)

2.[†1]

Lemon has a coat of frieze,
But all so seldom Lemon wears it,
That it is a prey to Fleas,
And ev'ry Moth that's hungry, tears it.

Oh! That coat's the coat for me,
That braves the Railway sparks and breezes,
Leaving ev'ry Engine free
To smoke it, 'till its owner sneezes!

Then my Lemon round and fat
L, my bright, my right, my tight 'un.
Think a little what you're at—
On Tuesday first,[†4] come down to Brighton!

CATHARINE DICKENS
ANNIE LEACH
GEORGINA HOGARTH
MARY DICKENS
KATIE DICKENS
JOHN LEECH.[†5]

T. S

To THE COUNTESS OF LOVELACE, 18 FEBRUARY 1849*

MS Lovelace Papers. On mourning paper.

Bedford Hotel, Brighton | Eighteenth February 1849

My Dear Lady Lovelace

You will not wonder at our silence and invisibility on Friday[†1] Evening, when I tell you that we were troubled, immediately after dinner, with a little episode of a poor girl in the house who had been raving mad before, becoming much more mad, and her father going horribly mad too, for company. Whereupon such shrieks arose, such cursings, strugglings, and appalling strife and uproar, that we were obliged to decamp with all speed and come here. The whole deplorable business occupied the evening; and when we had got here, and were quit of it, and had restored two little girls to their senses, which were scattered to the four winds, in the tumult—it was nigh eleven o'Clock and you were hating me.

I hope you won't do so any more.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To SAMUEL ROGERS, 18 FEBRUARY 1849

Text from P. W. Clayden, Rogers and his Contemporaries, 1889, II, 337.

Brighton. Eighteenth February, 1849.

My Dear Mr. Rogers,

I was detained on Monday—I mean Wednesday, last—first by business with Bradbury and Evans, and afterwards at the Literary Fund, until I was more than due at the railway. My servant stands charged to bring you "Mary Barton"[†2] to-morrow.[†3] If I had had a spare moment before I came away, I should have brought it myself.

Kate and her sister send you their loves. Brighton is just as you left it. The people, in carriages, on horseback, and afoot, jingling up and down the esplanade under the windows like gay little toys; and the great hoarse ocean roaring unheeded beyond them, and now and then breaking with a deep boom upon the beach, as if it said sullenly, "Won't anybody listen?" But nobody does; and away they all go, jingling up and down again, until the sun sets, and then go home to dinner.

Ever faithfully yours,

CARLO.[†1]

To JOHN THOMPSON, 18 FEBRUARY 1849†

MS (fragment) Suzanne Haney. On mourning paper.

Bedford Hotel, Brighton | Eighteenth February 1849.

John.

Direct the letters until Wednesday, when we shall return home, to this address, instead of Junction House.

On my round table in the study, are two books, called "Mary Barton", Vols 1 and 2. Take them down, as soon as you receive this, to Mr. Rogers, and[†2]

To JOHN FORSTER, [?18 FEBRUARY 1849]

Summary and extract in F, VI, iii, 496. Date: The incident at Junction House apparently took place on 17 Feb (To Lady Lovelace, 18 Feb: "Friday Evening" seems a slip for Saturday); CD was probably writing the following day.

Telling Forster that both the landlord of his lodging and the landlord's daughter had gone raving mad and that he had been forced to move to the Bedford Hotel. If you could have heard the cursing and crying of the two; could have seen the physician and nurse quoited out into the passage by the madman at the hazard of their lives; could have seen Leech and me flying to the doctor's rescue; could have seen our wives pulling us back; could have seen the M.D. faint with fear; could have seen three other M.D.'s come to his aid; with an atmosphere of Mrs. Gamps, strait-waistcoats, struggling friends and servants, surrounding the whole; you would have said it was quite worthy of me, and quite in keeping with my usual proceedings.

A sea-fog to-day, but yesterday inexpressibly delicious. My mind running, like a high sea, on names—not satisfied yet, though.

To JAMES DONALDSON,[†1] 20 FEBRUARY 1849

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: Strip cut off bottom of letter, removing correspondent's name; "J. Donaldson Esq." written on cover to letter, in another hand. On mourning paper.

Brighton | Tuesday Evening | Twentieth February 1849

Sir.

I beg to assure you that I am very sensible of the feeling which has induced you to propose me as a candidate for the Lord Rectorship of your College;[†2] and that I feel much beholden to you for that mark of your regard and consideration.

But in reply to your note in which you do me the favor to ask my consent to this nomination,[†3] I am constrained to say, without any reservation whatever, that I do not aspire to the high honor in question, and that I must entreat you to withdraw my name at my express desire.

I take the earliest opportunity in my power of making this communication to you; but my absence from town for a week past, and my absence from this place during this day, have combined to prevent my answering your letter sooner. It was forwarded here, this morning.

I am Sir | Yours faithfully and obliged
CHARLES DICKENS

To HENRY AUSTIN, 22 FEBRUARY 1849*

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace. | Thursday Twenty Second February | 1849.

My Dear Henry

We came home yesterday. I send this down to say that I am at your service for Notting Hill,[†4] either today, tomorrow, or next day.[†5]

To JOHN FORSTER, [23 FEBRUARY 1849]

Extract in F, VI, vi, 524. Date: 23 Feb according to Forster.

I should like to know how the enclosed (one of those I have been thinking of)[†1] strikes you, on a first acquaintance with it. It is odd, I think, and new; but it may have A.'s difficulty of being "too comic, my boy".[†2] I suppose I should have to add, though, by way of motto, "And in short it led to the very Mag's Diversions. Old Saying"[†3] Or would it be better, there being equal authority for either, "And in short they all played Mag's Diversions. Old Saying"?

"Mag's Diversions.

Being the personal history of

MR. THOMAS MAG THE YOUNGER,

Of Blunderstone House."[†4]

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 23 FEBRUARY 1849

MS Lytton Papers. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Third February 1849

My Dear Sir Edward.

I have not written sooner to thank you for King Arthur,[†5] because I felt sure you would prefer my reading it before I should do so, and because I wished to have an opportunity of reading it with the sincerity and attention which such a composition demands.[†6]

This I have done. I do not write to express to you the full measure of my gratification and pleasure (for I should find that very difficult to be accomplished to my own satisfaction) but simply to say that I have read the Poem, and dwelt upon it, with the deepest interest, admiration, and delight; and that I feel proud of it as a very noble instance of the genius of a great writer of my own time.

I should feel it as a kind of treason to what has been awakened in me by the book, if I were to try to set off my thanks to you, or if I were tempted into being diffuse in its praise. I am too earnest on the subject, to have any misgiving but that I shall convey something of my earnestness to you, in the briefest and most unaffected form of expression.

Accept it for what a genuine word of homage is worth, and believe me

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton

To JOHN FORSTER, [24 FEBRUARY 1849]

Extract in F, VI, vi, 524. Date: the first of three alternative forms of Mag's Diversions sent to Forster within three days of 23 Feb.

"Mag's Diversions, being the Personal History, Adventures, Experience and Observation of Mr. David Mag the Younger, of Blunderstone House."

To JOHN LABOUCHERE,[†1] 24 FEBRUARY 1849*

MS Dickens House.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Twenty Fourth February 1849

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Labouchere, and regrets that his engagements will not admit of his accepting the office of Steward at the next Anniversary Dinner[†2] of the Society of Friends of foreigners in distress.[†3]

To JOHN FORSTER, [24-25 FEBRUARY 1849]

Summary in F, VI, vi, 524. Date: the second alternative form of Mag's Diversions sent to Forster between 23 and 26 Feb.

Omitting "Adventures" and calling his hero Mr David Mag the Younger, of Copperfield House.

To JOHN FORSTER, [25-26 FEBRUARY 1849]

Summary in F, VI, vi, 524. Date: the third alternative form of Mag's Diversions sent to Forster between 23 and 26 Feb.

Transforming Mr David Mag into Mr David Copperfield the Younger and his great-aunt Margaret.

To JOHN FORSTER, [26 FEBRUARY 1849]

Extract in F, VI, vi, 525. Date: 26 Feb according to Forster.

I wish you would look over carefully the titles now enclosed, and tell me to which you most incline. You will see that they give up Mag altogether, and refer exclusively to one name—that which I last sent you. I doubt whether I could, on the whole, get a better name.

1. The Copperfield Disclosures. Being the personal history, experience, and observation, of Mr. David Copperfield the Younger, of Blunderstone House.
2. The Copperfield Records. Being the personal history, experience, and observation, of Mr. David Copperfield the Younger, of Copperfield Cottage.
3. The Last Living Speech and Confession of David Copperfield Junior, of Blunderstone Lodge, who was never executed at the Old Bailey. Being his personal history found among his papers.
4. The Copperfield Survey of the World as it Rolled. Being the personal history, experience, and observation of David Copperfield the Younger, of Blunderstone Rookery.
7. The Last Will and Testament of Mr. David Copperfield. Being his personal history left as a legacy.

6. Copperfield, Complete. Being the whole personal history and experience of Mr. David Copperfield of Blunderstone House, which he never meant to be published on any account.

Or, the opening words of No. 6 might be Copperfield's Entire;[†1] and The Copperfield Confessions might open Nos. 1 and 2. NOW, WHAT SAY YOU?[†2]

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 27 FEBRUARY 1849*

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Seventh February 1849.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I am very sorry we were engaged last night, until it was too late to come to you. But I must add, in self defence, that I had no idea you were going to have a party, and had no forewarning of it, until I came home at nearly six o'Clock yesterday and found your note.

I shall be very glad to hear what you have done about the Home, and will come to you at any time you like, before 5, either tomorrow or next day, to hear the particulars.

If your box at Franconi's is not engaged for Friday next, may I beg it?

Dear Miss Coutts | Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

In the first agonies of a new book.

To MARY DICKENS, 27 FEBRUARY 1849

Text from MDGH, I, 205.

Devonshire Terrace | Tuesday Night, Feb. 27th, 1849.

My Dearest Mamey,

I am not engaged on the evening of your birthday.[†1] But even if I had an engagement of the most particular kind, I should excuse myself from keeping it, so that I might have the pleasure of celebrating at home, and among my children, the day that gave me such a dear and good daughter as you.

Ever affectionately yours

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To PETER CUNNINGHAM, 28 FEBRUARY 1849

MS Dickens House. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Eighth February 1849.

My Dear Cunningham.

I shall have great pleasure in dining with you this day week, at half past six.

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Peter Cunningham Esquire.

To JOHN FORSTER, [28 FEBRUARY 1849]

Extract in F, VI, vi, 525. Date: 28 Feb according to Forster.

The Survey[†2] has been my favourite from the first. Kate picked it out from the rest, without my saying anything about it. Georgy too. You hit upon it, on the first glance. Therefore I have no doubt that it is indisputably the best title; and I will stick to it.

March

To FRANK STANFELL,[†3] 2 MARCH 1849*

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel. Address: Frank Stanfell Esquire | Royal Naval Hospital | Haslar | Gosport. On mourning paper.

London, 1 Devonshire Terrace | Second March 1849.

Dr. Sir.

I beg to inform you in reply to your letter of enquiry, that the passage in question refers to a joke between myself and my friend Mr. Stanfield, the celebrated Marine Painter—whose name, in Captain Cuttle's mouth, changes accidentally to yours.[†1]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Frank Stanfell Esquire

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 3 MARCH [1849]

MS Morgan Library. Date: Clearly should be 1849, when 3 Mar was Saturday; reference to "the Coombses and the Cunliffes" supports. CD and Catherine were in Brighton on 3 Mar 48. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday Evening | Third March 1848.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I had gone to the Home when you called, and when I was very sorry to miss you—as was Mrs. Dickens too, who was out walking.

Everything was orderly and comfortable; not the less so, by reason of Miss Cunliffe's taking herself off, very solemnly, in a fly while I was there.

I have a reasonably good little anecdote in reserve, of Rachael Bradley,[†2] whom I "booked"[†3] today. There was a simplicity in the circumstance that I thought a good omen.

In reference to Sir George Grey's case,[†4] I have not the least doubt of the expediency of immediately taking it. His interest in it is very agreeable to observe. I know the Recorder of Birmingham (Mr. Hill)[†5] and know him to be a man of good experience and discernment, and much kind feeling, in all these matters. I have no doubt he has well investigated the case.

The name of Mrs. Tripp[†6] is naturally a severe shock[†7] to me, but I try to bear it as I ought. I would suggest to you, seriously, that it would be most advisable for Mrs. Holdsworth to remain in power for a fortnight after Mrs. T—p's arrival in London, and for Mrs. T—p to go out there, three or four times a week, during that interval, to become acquainted with the place, and the young women. She and Mrs. Holdsworth could not possibly clash then, and it would no doubt (from her own letter) meet Mrs. T—p's convenience too. I think it scarcely probable that Mrs. T—p could go into the place at once, suddenly deposing Mrs. Holdsworth, and get on well. And this has now become such an important subject, after our experience of the Coombses and the Cunliffes, that I really should not be in any strength of hope, under less precautionary arrangements.

Will you think of this?

Dear Miss Coutts | Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [?5 MARCH 1849]

Extract in F, VI, vi, 526*n*. Date: according to Forster, "of nearly the same date" as letter of 19 Apr 49 (F, VI, vi, 526*n*); but the only bad Indian news of this period was the loss suffered at the Battle of Chillianwallah, reported in English newspapers on 5 Mar (see below).

Pen and ink before me! Am I not at work on Copperfield! Nothing else would have kept me here until half-past two on such a day. . . . Indian news bad indeed.[†1] Sad things come of bloody war. If it were not for Elihu,[†2] I should be a peace and arbitration man.[†3]

To JOHN LEECH, 9 MARCH 1849

MS Benoliel Collection. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Friday Ninth March 1849.

My Dear Leech.

I am deeply distressed (as we all [are] here) to receive your melancholy letter.

All consolation is poor and feeble in the first weight of such an affliction, I know, but I cannot help sending you this word of affectionate sympathy and friendship.

Try to think it better that the dear little child is spared from greater uneasiness and pain, and is at peace now, than it could or would have been if she had lived a few years longer[†1]—to take a stronger hold upon you and her mother every day—and to leave a mightier blank in your hearts. Above all, try to remember that she has certainly gone to the inestimable happiness of God, and that she is among his angels evermore.

Our loves to Mrs. Leech, with whom our thoughts are this morning. It is a great relief to know that the end of your darling was so calm. It must be so to her and you—or will be, when you have thought a little more about it, I feel sure.

I do not write as I would, for I really cannot say what I would. Believe me that all that is cordial, true, and earnest—and full of sympathy and interest and affection—is what we feel here, and what I am quite unable to express, because [I] feel it so sincerely.

Ever My Dear Leech | Affectionately Your friend

CHARLES DICKENS

To FRANK STONE, 10 MARCH 1849*

MS Benoliel Collection. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday Night | Tenth March 1849.

My Dear Tone.

There is a small alteration in the order of the Day for tomorrow, to wit,

6 exactly

instead of ½ past 5 ditto.

Ever Yours

CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 13 MARCH 1849

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Tuesday March Thirteenth | 1849.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

Mr. Tracey has sent me the enclosed. Will you be kind enough to return it to me, as he wishes to have it back?

Mr. Hullah begs to know (as it is important to his other arrangements) what is proposed to be done about the singing in future—whether it is to take place once a week—and if so, on what day. The agreed payment for one year on the old principle of two lessons a week (£50) is also due.

Is Mrs. T[†2] on regular probation?

Dear Miss Coutts | Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 13 MARCH 1849*

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Tuesday Night | Thirteenth March 1849.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I think Mr. Engelbach's idea of an Emigrant Ship in the Steerage[†1] Department, must be received with that amount of deduction which his connexion with an Emigration Company[†2] and his having become like the Dyer's hand, "subdued to what it works in",[†3] may properly warrant. I have no doubt myself that it is very bad, that Miss Morris[†4] had no idea what it was, when she shipped herself with that order of passengers. I never was so much astonished in my life as when I saw the Steerage of an American Liner—on the passage[†5]—and I remember Mr. Tracey's face assuming a most extraordinary appearance when I told him the young women were going in the Steerage of the Posthumous. I mention this, as he is a naval officer of considerable experience, and universally respected.

At the same time I certainly am not at all agreeably impressed by the letter the girls[†6] have written you. I doubt their delicacy very much indeed, and I think they should have undergone anything short of actual offence, before they dreamed of taking such a step.[†7] That about the washing is sheer nonsense. The best-provided passenger on board a passenger-ship, endures all kinds of inconveniences in that respect—and I question whether they will find themselves much better off at first, after they land.

No doubt the best course is that which you have taken.[†8]

The Bishop of London[†9] is a mystery I can't penetrate—unless they have got somebody else's books.[†10]

When I look at the style and orthography of these two letters, and call to mind Jane Westaway's too, I am emboldened to state to you an opinion I have been gradually forming of late, and which the abrupt disappearance of the estimable Trip has confirmed, that it would be sound and wise to try[†1] Mrs. Holdsworth and a servant woman. I feel confident that under any more settled sort of administration there, she could teach the girls better than they have yet been taught, and enable them to do you and your great generosity and charity more credit than these results do. We are sure of her temper, sure of her good intentions, and sure of their (I mean the inmates) being prepared to like her. Moreover, she has a positive, practical, experience of the place. And I believe this combination to be more important, than any sort of flourish of trumpets with which anybody else could enter on the duty. For the plain, limited education that is required, I think she is competent; and in those other qualities without which the instruction of the best successor would be a dismal failure, I really consider her quite a remarkable person. Whatever my opinion is worth, it is worth so much the more for this—that I had no leaning towards her, at first, and have really come to like her without the least inclination to do so. Such restrictions upon the comings and goings of her children as you might think right, could be easily placed upon her, but I do not think it likely that—for the money—or for anything near the money—we shall ever find so unobjectionable a person again. And nobody would be more resolute against counselling you to spend more on this head, than I am; because I sincerely feel that it would be unjust and wrong.

I think with you that the habit of asking is a bad one, but I confess I would increase the quantity of writing paper. Some of them may have nobody to write to; but the separation even from so much Earth that they have been used to, is a tremendous one, and the feeling that they can connect themselves with England by a few pothooks, twenty times or thirty times instead of six or eight, is not an unwholesome one.[†2] Indeed I am inclined to believe it has its root in a sentiment that it is desirable, with a view to our future hopes of them, to encourage.

I am just going to bed with an abominable cold, and hope I may have written more intelligibly than I am able to speak.

Dear Miss Coutts | Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To MARK LEMON, 16 MARCH 1849*

MS Professor A. A. Adrian. Address: Mark Lemon Esquire. On mourning paper.

Sixteenth March, 1849 | Friday

My Dear Lemon.

I have been at work all day, and should greatly like a small—very trifling—"out" in the streets or elsewhere, tonight. As you say you are "wanted" until 7, I will come down to that attic in Whitefriars,[†1] not later than 8—maybe sooner—on the chance of your being available. But it is very likely you may have gone away on some previous engagement. If so, it's all one. I must come out.

Ever Affectionately
Sparkler

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 17 MARCH 1849*

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday Seventeenth March | 1849.

Dear Miss Coutts.

I am not in a fit state of mind yet, to give an opinion on those two girls' going away. I was so unspeakably relieved to find they had come back again, that my reasoning powers in connexion with that subject, have deserted me.

After what you say of Mrs. Holdsworth, I shall only hope the best of Morson[†2]

When do you propose to have another Meeting, for the bills and so forth?

Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To MARK LEMON, 17 MARCH 1849

MS Benoliel Collection. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday Seventeenth March | 1849.

My Dear Lemon

Thinking over the theatricals while dressing this morning, a question arises in my mind whether any objection connected with that Ass in Manchester, would not be best and most completely avoided by postponing the idea—say 'till Christmas time—an excellent Season for it, and when the Theatre will perhaps be more at our disposal. For I confess that this weighs with me, and that the notion of a new difficult piece—a melodrama of all things—unrehearsed upon the stage, gives me fears of the ridiculous.[†1] The Bridge, the door latch, the carrying off of the body, the dance, the last Scene, &c &c.

Think of this, till Monday.[†2]

Ever affectionately

CD.

To JOHN LEECH, 17 MARCH 1849

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: John Leech Esquire | 31 Notting Hill Terrace. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday Seventeenth March | 1849.

My Dear Leech.

I like the Uxbridge notion very much, and will call for you punctually at eleven on Monday forenoon.

Ever Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

John Leech Esquire.

To FRANK STONE, 17 MARCH 1849*

MS Benoliel Collection. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday Seventeenth March | 1849.

My Dear Stone.

—Sorry you were engaged yesterday. Many thanks for the enclosed, which I also received. It is written by Miss Jewsbury,[†3] who sent it to Forster,[†4] begging him to put it in the Examiner—which he don't mean to do. I am afraid our friend the Jew[†1] is an idiot.[†2]

Ever Affectionately
CD.

To MESSRS BRADBURY & EVANS, 21 MARCH 1849

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace. | Wednesday Evening
Twenty First March 1849.

My Dear B and E.

Thus let it stand.[†3] And may Heaven speed us!

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Bradbury and Evans.

To EDWARD CHAPMAN, 21 MARCH 1849

MS Dickens House. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Wednesday Night
Twenty First March 1849.

My Dear Sir.

I feel it rather early to take Chuzzlewit,[†4] but I feel convinced that—in poor times especially—the Sketches would make a dangerous break in the continuity of the sale,[†5] and perhaps damage what followed. Under these circumstances I think it would be best to take 1[†6] Chuzzlewit next, then 2 Oliver, then 3 the American Notes, and lastly 4 the Sketches[†7] and so to alter the order in the announcement on the cover.[*†8]

* putting this line after the Sketches
WITH WHICH THE CHEAP EDITION WILL TERMINATE.[†9]

But if you should have any other suggestion to make, I should like very much to have the benefit of it before we finally decide.

The accounts will be welcome when they come, as I am anxious to know how they stand.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Edward Chapman Esquire

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 21 MARCH 1849*

Text from transcript by Mr Walter Dexter.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty first March 1849

My Dear Miss Coutts,

Frances Barclay arrived at Mr. Chesterton's yesterday afternoon for a month—committed for an assault on a Policeman in this neighbourhood.

I hope your cold is better.

Faithfully yours ever,
CHARLES DICKENS

To CORNELIUS MATHEWS,[†1] 22 MARCH 1849*

MS Auckland Public Library. Address: Cornelius Mathews Esquire | New York | U.S. of America.

London, 1 Devonshire Terrace, | York Gate Regents Park
Twenty Second March 1849.

My Dear Sir

I assure you I have not forgotten, either our correspondence or our acquaintance.[†2] And I should have been very glad if I could have complied with your request.[†3]

But my publishers are at this moment engaged in a negociation (to which I do not feel myself at liberty to refer more particularly)[†4] which places it out of my power to do so.

This being the case, I lose no time, as you request, in writing a brief reply to your letter.

With all good wishes for your success

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Cornelius Mathews Esquire.

To THE REV. JOHN KENNEDY,[†1] 23 MARCH 1849†

MS Fales Collection, New York University Library.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Twenty Third March 1849.

Sir.

In reply to your letter of enquiry, I beg to say that I believe my opportunities of observing Mrs. Fisher to have been very good, and that I can most conscientiously recommend her as a person of tact, energy, self-controul, and ability to exercise a wholesome controul and influence over those whom she instructs. I saw her under difficult circumstances, and thought her capable of being very quickly formed by what was about her, and by her own intelligence, for almost any situation in which these qualities are required. I consider her nature particularly calculated to impress children.

I had not the pleasure of knowing her late husband, though I believe I corresponded with him on some occasions. I mention this, merely to suggest my impartiality in respect of her.

I do not gather from your note that there are any other points on which you require my opinion in detail. I therefore content myself with generally recommending this lady, very earnestly, and in the full confidence that she thoroughly deserves it.

I am Sir | Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

The Reverend John Kennedy.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 24 MARCH 1849†

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday Twenty Fourth March | 1849.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I regret to say that I cannot meet you at Shepherd's Bush today. In pursuance of virtuous resolutions to be beforehand, I am hard at work finishing the first Number of my new book.[†2]

But any day next week, except Monday, I shall be happy to attend any appointment that may suit you, between 2 and 5. Will you let me know, as soon as you conveniently can, what day and time will suit you best.

I will then tell you what occurs to my mind on your two Mark-Table suggestions.

With best regards to Mrs. and Mr. Brown

Dear Miss Coutts | Ever Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To [MARK LEMON], 25 MARCH 1849*

MS Mr Philip Whinney. Address: clearly to Lemon, Leech or Stone, the other members of the "Walking Club"; almost certainly Lemon, since one of three letters endorsed "Mrs. D. Blaker", the other two being to Lemon. On mourning paper.

Board of Sparkler Controul | Twenty Fifth March 1849.

[†a]WHEREAS[†a] I am informed on the authority of one Bradshaw, that a Train for Slough leaves the Great Western Railway Station at Paddington tomorrow, Monday, Morning at eleven o'Clock, [†a]NOW I DO HEREBY CONVOKE AND APPOINT[†a] the Walking Club[†1] to be and assemble at the Booking Office of the said Station tomorrow, Monday, Morning, at a quarter before eleven o'Clock.

(Signed)

CHARLES DICKENS

To JAMES WYATT,[†2] 26 MARCH 1849

Summary from Weatherhead & Son catalogue, July 1975; dated 1 Devonshire Terrace, 26 Mar 49.

Explaining why he must decline the invitation of the Committee of the Bedford Library and Scientific Institution.[†3]

To MISS FANNY KELLY, 27 MARCH 1849*

MS Indiana University Libraries. Address: Miss Kelly | 30 Moscow Road | Bayswater.

Devonshire Terrace. | Twenty Seventh March 1849.

Dear Miss Kelly.

I am afraid I have not sufficient faith in the Oxford Amateurs,[†1] to venture on the acceptance of your kind offer.[†2]

Either on Saturday or Monday Morning between 11 and 12, I shall be at home and glad to see you, if you wish to see me.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Kelly.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 27 MARCH 1849*

MS Fales Collection, New York University Library.

1 Devonshire Terrace, York Gate, Regents Park
Twenty Seventh March 1849.

I knew Mr. Thomas Holcroft[†3] some years ago,[†4] and can very earnestly add my recommendation of him to that which I have read in the words of my friend Mr. Carlyle.[†5] I am well assured of his industry, ability, and integrity; I perfectly concur in that testimony to his merits; and I am glad to have the opportunity of corroborating it.

CHARLES DICKENS

To HENRY AUSTIN, 28 MARCH 1849*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace. | Twenty Eighth March 1849.

My Dear Henry.

I am very glad to find that you have moved into your present part of the world[†1]—the advantage of which change, in a thousand [†a][ ][†a] health, and [†b][ ][†b] than of yore.

I am going to Lord Carlisle's[†2] on Saturday. Very glad to find you are.

I have been wallowing in my new book for the last month—very comfortably, and (I hope) successfully.

Kate and Georgy unite with me in love to Letitia.

[†c][ ][†c]

I suppose you have been washing in a cheese-plate this morning, and breakfasting out of a clothes-basket. Those agonies of moving, though two years off, afflict me already.[†3]

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 28 MARCH 1849*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street.

Devonshire Terrace. | Twenty Eighth March 1849.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

Referring to Mr. Hullah's letter, I find his expression is this:—"Mr. Bannister has been at work once a week, since February"—This in reply to my telling him that Mr. Bannister was to come back for one weekly lesson, in about a month.

Thank you for the papers in reference to the balance. I will look them over, and make out how the case stands.

I think in reference to Mrs. Morson's knowing about the girls, that her information ought to be strictly confined to such general ideas of their several characters as I can give her for her guidance, founded on some broad explanation of their several histories. Firstly, because of the promise of confidence under which they have yielded up their secrets. And secondly because Mr. Tracey and Mr. Chesterton were strongly of opinion when the Home was first established that this was a very essential point. They find some illustration of its being so, in the Prisons, every day.

Dear Miss Coutts | Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

On Saturday between 11 & 12, I will call on you.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 29 MARCH 1849†

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Ninth March 1849.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

As I believe you will give me credit for being very slow to intrude upon your generosity, I will say nothing[†1] in defence of this application.

There has come to my knowledge a case, in which if you should feel disposed to render any assistance, I can answer for its being well bestowed. The object is, to help the family of the grandson of that Henry Goldsmith[†2] to whom Oliver dedicated the Traveller,[†3] and who is supposed to have been the original of some parts of Mr. Primrose's character in the Vicar of Wakefield—a book of which I think it is not too much to say that it has perhaps done more good in the world, and instructed more kinds of people in virtue, than any other fiction ever written.

This grandson[†4] has six sons and a daughter. On an income never exceeding two hundred a year, and for a great part of his life never exceeding a hundred and sixty, he has contrived to bring them up well (those that are grown) and to get two of them abroad as Sailors, and another into the Naval School.[†5] He is a Lieutenant in the Navy himself, and now in command of a Revenue Cruizer;[†6] but the expences of his family, and in particular the having borrowed £50 for the outfit of one of his sons, have involved him in temporary distress; and unless he can clear himself, it is probable that he will be seriously damaged at the Admiralty.

I have a letter by me from his wife,[†7] which is very plainly and pathetically written, and which convinces me that lasting good may be done to a very deserving man, by a little money. A private subscription among some literary men is the only thing that occurs to me, as a way of raising the whole sum borrowed (the least amount, I take it, that would do him real service) and if you feel yourself justified in aiding it, I shall be very heartily sensible of your assistance.

Don't take the trouble to write, as I am to see you on Saturday. I think Mrs. Morson very promising.

Dear Miss Coutts | Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

To EDWARD CHAPMAN, 31 MARCH 1849*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace. | Saturday Thirty First March 1849.

Dear Sir.

I have gone over the accounts.[†1] The result is certainly not what I had wished, or even expected, but the times have no doubt been sorely against us.[†2]

If you are prepared to pay the balance into Coutts's, I shall be glad if you will do so.

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Edward Chapman Esquire.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?MARCH 1849]

Summary and extract in F, VI, vi, 525. Date: probably not long after he had decided on the title David Copperfield.

Replying to Forster, who had pointed out that the initials of David Copperfield were his own reversed, saying that he was much startled, but that it was in keeping with the fates and chances which were always befalling him. Why else should I so obstinately have kept to that name when once it turned up?

To FREDERICK DICKENS, [?SEPTEMBER 1848-MARCH 1849]

MS Benoliel Collection. On mourning paper. Date: Sep 48-Mar 49 on form of initials and mourning paper (for Fanny Burnett's death).

Devonshire Terrace | Sunday

My Dear Frederick

I think it will be best to tell this man that I am informed he is addicted to drink, and that therefore I must decline to assist him—not because I claim any right to judge his failings, or to punish them, but because I know it is useless and hopeless to give money to a drunkard.

But as they seem to be in real distress, I would give the wife, the enclosed, and, if the baby is still lying unburied, I would pay Chesterton's proposed agent, to perform that office.

Affectionately Ever

CD.

To P. O. BRIEN,[†1] [LATE JANUARY-MARCH 1849]*

MS Dickens House. On mourning paper. Date: late Jan-Mar 49 on handwriting and mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday.

Dear Sir

Allow me to say 6 (exactly) tomorrow, instead of half past five.

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

P. O. Brien Esquire.

To FRANK STONE, [?JANUARY-MARCH 1849]*

MS Benoliel Collection. On mourning paper. Date: not before 1849 on ending "Affecy"; stroke, not flourish, under "CD", points to Jan-Mar 49.

Devonshire Terrace. | Monday

My Dear Stone

—Hopelessly engaged (wus luck!) and just going out.

Ever Affecy.

CD.

April

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 2 APRIL 1849*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Second April 1849.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I know Serjeant Shee,[†2] who is referred to in the letter you sent me, but I am afraid he is on circuit. I will write (of course without using your name) and make private enquiry of him about the writer. I don't think that allusion to your late father[†3] is in his favor. I always regard that kind of thing as possibly comprehending a sort of threat.

I am almost sorry we sent that letter to Mr. Chesterton, he is in such extraordinary concern about it. It seems that some scoundrel, as yet undiscovered, has been writing anonymous letters, to him and about him, for some few weeks past. He writes to me immediately, in reference to this, (which he says is in the same handwriting) as follows:

"Pray do not let Miss Coutts imagine for a moment, that I am this unsafe man. Wednesday last, is distinctly written in the letter to Miss Coutts. If any proof were necessary (I hope none is) of its detestable falsehood, my family could very easily avouch that last Wednesday I was at home all the evening, and that for weeks and weeks past we have had little reunions at home on Wednesdays, and I have not been out from home, once, upon any of those nights. As for an Omnibus at night, Heaven knows when I have been in one!

"As a positive name is given, and a locality, I shall send to see if such a place and such a person really have existence. I shall be surprised to find either the case".

He retains the letter with this view. I think that with his police-facilities he ought to, and I hope he will, find out the writer.[†1]

Dear Miss Coutts | Faithfully Yours ever

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Coutts.

To CHARLES MASON,[†2] 2 APRIL 1849*

MS University of Texas.

Devonshire Terrace | Second April 1849.

Sir.

I do not understand from your note, whether Mr. Foot would be disposed to take my little mare in part exchange for his gelding. Unless he should be so disposed, or unless you can particularly recommend the gelding as a very good and serviceable horse in harness, I should hardly like to trouble you to drive him up here, as I would prefer to get the little mare off my hands, either in purchasing another horse, or before purchasing another horse. I shall be at home tomorrow (Tuesday) at 2 o'Clock, however.

Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Mason.

To WILLIAM SHEE, [?3 APRIL 1849]

Mention in To Miss Coutts, 2 Apr. Date: CD must have written at once, since he refers to Shee's reply on 7 Apr.

To CHARLES SABINE, 4 APRIL 1849

Mention in American Art Association catalogue, May 1922; MS 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 4 Apr 49.

Thanking him for a book[†3] and note received.

To MARK LEMON, [6 APRIL 1849]

Text in N, II, 149 checked from MS Sotheby's, Oct 1967. Date: Good Friday was 6 Apr in 1849.

Good Friday 1849.

My Dear Lemon.

Will you come up today (as it is our usual foregathering day of the week) and eat some salt fish and cold beef and salad, at ½ past 5?

Affectionately Always
CD

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, [9] APRIL [1849]*

MS Morgan Library. Date: misdated by CD; from references to Shee and Mrs Goldsmith clearly 1849, when Monday was 9 Apr (Easter Monday).

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Seventh April

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I do not think it will be necessary for me to see you until you come back from Brighton.—I will go out to Shepherd's Bush, and pay the rent for the field.—I think with you about the applicant to whom Serjeant Shee's letter refers. From Mrs. Goldsmith there has come a second letter (a most honorable one) hoping to do with half the money—at all events just now, pending the expected return of the eldest son from sea. The rest was raised, but I have sent her your gift (saying it is from a lady whose name I am not at liberty to mention) and now hold the rest.

In haste | Dear Miss Coutts | Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To LORD NUGENT, 9 APRIL 1849

Extract in Hodgson's catalogue, 9 Mar 1904; MS 2 pp.; dated 9 Apr 49.

I deeply feel your letter and heartily desire to convey to you in reply all that a very sincere friend would say, if he could, on such a subject.[†1]

To FRANK STONE, [9] APRIL 1849*

MS Benoliel Collection. Date: misdated by CD; Monday was 9 Apr in 1849.

Monday Seventh April 1849.

My Dear Stone

Hogarth's reply is, that the proposed title Adagio con moto would be "quite ridiculous and preposterous, and would involve a most extravagant musical mistake", but that Andante con moto would be perfectly correct.[†2]

Affy. Ever
CD

To THE COUNTESS OF BLESSINGTON, 10 APRIL 1849

MS Carl H. Pforzheimer Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Tenth April 1849.

My Dear Lady Blessington.

I am heartily obliged to you for your most kind note, and appreciate your friendship and your enduring remembrance of me on all occasions, with inexpressible earnestness.

I shall not fail to see you this week.[†1] Those blessed Railroads unite Paris and London so closely now, that I shall try never to think of you as gone at all out of my reach.[†2] Moreover, I shall hope to see you in Paris, pretty often, and to begin doing so pretty soon—for I have some idea of running over for a few days, very early in May.[†3]

If you should be writing to Count d'Orsay, pray give him my love. And ever believe me, Dear Lady Blessington,

Your attached and faithful friend
CHARLES DICKENS

To H. K. BROWNE, [10 APRIL 1849]

Envelope only in Spencer catalogue No. 144; addressed H. K. Browne; PM 10 Apr 49.

To DAVID ROBERTS,[†4] 10 APRIL 1849*

MS Berg Collection.

1 Devonshire Terrace | Tenth April 1849.

My Dear Roberts.

I am very sorry that being out of town all day yesterday, I could not avail myself of your kind remembrance of me, and have the pleasure of coming to see your pictures.[†1]

Mrs. Dickens and I will be very happy if you will come and dine here on Saturday the 21st. at half past six, on which day and date we are going to christen a "babby" (No. 8).

Believe me | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

David Roberts Esquire.

To CHARLES [?I]. WARD,[†2] 10 APRIL 1849*

MS Mr Bernard A. M. Lazarus.

Devonshire Terrace | Tenth April 1849.

My Dear Sir

I beg to return you the Chimes, with my sign-manual affixed,[†3] and to thank you for your obliging note.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles I.[†4] Ward Esquire.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 11 APRIL 1849*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Wednesday Eleventh April | 1849.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I am exceedingly pleased with the letter from the first party of girls. It is very encouraging and hopeful indeed, I think. I have observed your instructions in reference to it.

I will talk to Mr. Hill[†5] about Jones, before I see you again. It is most likely that he will have by him his notes of her trial, and that he will be able to say whether there is any reasonable possibility that her denial may be true. I will see her myself about our register[†6] (in which she is not put down yet) and perhaps she will make the denial to me, and give me some means of judging whether it seems to have any likely foundation in fact.

Mrs. Morson certainly begins well, and I hope will prove to be the person we want.

It must be some comfort to Mrs. Brown, to have such an unheard-of cold. While one is about it, to beat all competitors and predecessors is a triumph. Vanity apart, I thought I had made an approach to perfection in this way, myself, three or four months ago; but I am now content to hide my diminished head,[†1] and the diminished cold in it. I scarcely feel it right to suggest a hope that she is better, and that she has come down from that height of pre-eminence—but if I may, modestly, do so, I will.

Mrs. Dickens unites with me in best regards.

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

I have done as you so kindly authorize me in reference to Mrs. Goldsmith.

To THOMAS CROFTON CROKER,[†2] 13 APRIL 1849

Text from N, II, 150.

1 Devonshire Terrace | Thirteenth April 1849

My Dear Sir,

I assure you I should have been delighted to accept your kind invitation for Wednesday, but that Mrs. Dickens has long laid an embargo[†3] on me to be at home that day to receive some friends at dinner. I hope the Lord High President of the Council with the tremendous name[†4] will bear me in his gracious remembrance some other Wednesday, when I shall be truly happy to attend his summons.

Believe me, my dear Sir, | Very faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To THE COUNTESS OF BLESSINGTON, 14 APRIL 1849*

MS Comte de Gramont.

Athenaeum. | Saturday Afternoon | Fourteenth April 1849.

My Dear Lady Blessington.

I came here in despair from Gore House, whither I went this afternoon

(surely you said any afternoon this week),[†1] to say good by'e to you,—and found you gone.[†2]

I cannot tell you what a blank it was to me to look at your empty house, or how grieved I am not to have taken your kind hand before you went away. But I write, to pray you not to think I have been unmindful of you, now, or ever, and to send after you my most affectionate and earnest wishes.

Ever believe me | Dear Lady Blessington | Your faithful friend
CHARLES DICKENS

My love to Count D'Orsay.

To THE REV. CHARLES SPEAR,[†3] 14 APRIL 1849*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

London, 1 Devonshire Terrace. | Fourteenth April 1849.

Sir.

I beg to say, in reply to your circular letter, that my engagements will not admit of my sending you any contribution for your Journal.[†4] I am too much occupied.

Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

The Reverend Charles Spear

To MESSRS ROBERTSON & SCHRODER,[†5] 18 APRIL 1849*

MS Yale University Library. Address (envelope, MS Mrs J. R. Cohen): Aux Messieurs: | MM. Robertson & Schroder | 23 Rue Coppens | Bruxelles.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Eighteenth April 1849.

Gentlemen.

I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your obliging letter, and to thank you for the courteous terms in which it is expressed. I cannot, however, have the pleasure of giving you the permission you seek, as I hold myself bound in that regard to Mr. Tauchnitz of Leipzig, from whom I have invariably received the most honorable treatment.[†1]

I am Gentlemen | Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Robertson and Schroder

To JOHN FORSTER, [?19 APRIL 1849]

Summary and extract in F, VI, vi, 525-6. Date: 19 Apr according to Forster;[†2] but see below.

Telling Forster that the novel was to begin on 1 May, with the title: "The Personal History, Adventures, Experience, and Observation of David Copperfield the Younger, of Blunderstone Rookery, which he never meant to be published on any account."[†3]

My hand is out in the matter of Copperfield.[†4] To-day and yesterday I have done nothing. Though I know what I want to do, I am lumbering on like a stage-waggon. I can't even dine at the Temple to-day, I feel it so important to stick at it this evening, and make some head. I am quite aground; quite a literary Benedict, as he appeared when his heels wouldn't stay upon the carpet;[†5] and the long Copperfieldian perspective looks snowy and thick, this fine morning.

To MARK LEMON, 19 APRIL 1849*

MS Bodleian Library. Address (envelope, MS Benoliel Collection): Mark Lemon Esquire | 3 St. Ann's Villas | Royal Crescent | Notting Hill.

Devonshire Terrace | Thursday Nineteenth April | 1849.

My Dear Lemon.

I am afraid I cannot be forthcoming on Monday, as I am obliged (by an unexpected change in our arrangements) to be at Shepherds Bush at ½ past 3. Do you think it would suit you and Leech to make the day, generally, Wednesday instead?—Or to make it Wednesday for next week?—Think it over. I hope to see you here on Saturday night, and then we can decide.

Affectionately Ever
CD.

To EDWARD CHAPMAN, 21 APRIL 1849*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday Twenty First April | 1849.

Dear Sir

I beg to acknowledge the receipt of the £394..13..4.[†1] I do not think we have any other reason to complain of the Sale of the cheap Edition, than that it would probably have been much better, if the times had been more propititious.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Edward Chapman Esquire.

To JOHN LEECH, 24 APRIL 1849

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: John Leech Esquire | 31 Notting Hill Terrace | Notting Hill.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Fourth April 1849. | Tuesday.

My Dear Leech.

As Lemon is not producible tomorrow, I take it for granted the Walking Club does not issue forth?

Ever Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

To DUDLEY COSTELLO, 25 APRIL 1849

Facsimile in D, XXXII (1936), 125.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Fifth April 1849.

My Dear Costello

Many thanks for your note. I hope David Copperfield will "do", for your good correspondent. The world would not take another Pickwick from me, now; but we can be cheerful and merry I hope, notwithstanding, and with a little more purpose in us.

Faithfully Yours Ever
CHARLES DICKENS

Dudley Costello Esquire.

To JOHN LEECH, [?26 APRIL 1849]

MS Benoliel Collection. Date: Mar-May 49 on form of initials and "T" of "Terrace"; the only Thursday on which both Catherine Hayes and Jenny Lind were performing in London between these dates was 26 Apr. Address: Wait answer. | John Leech Esquire | Notting Hill Terrace.

Devonshire Terrace. | Thursday

My Dear Leech

Will you come to Covent Garden tonight,[†1] to hear Miss Hayes?[†2] I have just got two Orchestra Stalls. We have also a box at the other house, and can run over and hear Jenny[†3] if we be in the mind.

A verbal answer will do. If Yes—come here.

Ever Yours

CD.

To MARK LEMON, [?29 APRIL 1849]

MS Benoliel Collection. Date: Form of initials points to 1849; "un-Spring-like" to before May. Probably written on 29 Apr, the Sunday after he had heard Catherine Hayes (see last).

Devonshire Terrace | Sunday

My Dear Lemon.

The weather is so very bad and un-Spring-like, that I really think it is a question whether we had not better postpone the walking for a week (when there surely must come fine weather) and dine together. But as I will on no account make a change in what I regard as a binding engagement, without the general consent (I may be outvoted perhaps) I will come straight down to your house today starting from Oxford Street at 3. Perhaps I shall meet you on the road. We will then decide.

Affectionately Ever

CD

P.S. I think Miss Hayes the freshest and most delicious thing I have ever heard.

To [?T.F.] ELLIS,[†1] [?30 APRIL 1849]

Mention in next. Date: probably written the same day.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 30 APRIL 1849*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace. | Monday Evening | April Thirtieth 1849.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I have written to Mr. Ellis, and proposed to call upon him on Wednesday at 12, after which I will come to you. My impression of the case, is, that it is not one which is well adapted to the Home, and that the friends themselves do not even seem to have any clear idea what the home is for. If the unfortunate child have confirmed habits of pilfering, I fear it would be best for her to go into a different kind of training altogether, with companions of a different age. And I have a great dread, now that we seem at last to be doing thoroughly well, of introducing a Stonnellian[†2] element into our formation.

I say this, however, in ignorance of your own view of the case, and shall merely mention it to Mr. Ellis, of course, as my impression—unless anything he should tell me, should go towards altering it.

Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To JOHN LEECH, 30 APRIL 1849

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: John Leech Esquire | 31 Notting Hill Terrace | Notting Hill.

1 Devonshire Terrace | Thirtieth April 1849.

My Dear Leech.

I was heartily pleased, just now at dinner, by the receipt of your note. There are very few things indeed that could be more delightful to me, than such a cordial and genial outburst of praise.[†3] You do me good, and make me hold my pen with a sturdier hand, afterwards. I thank you with all my heart.

I suppose Lemon will not come on Wednesday. My other half is a little nervous about it; and I imagined within myself that this was the reason why he didn't come last Wednesday:[†4] though I don't attach the remotest importance to any such idea of bringing home infection, myself. In any case, I shall expect you towards two o'Clock.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Leech Esquire

P.S. I passed Gore House to day, and saw the bills up for a Sale[†1] (in the East Wind) with a very doleful eye.

May

To F. M. EVANS, 1 MAY 1849*

MS Bradbury, Agnew & Co. Ltd.

Devonshire Terrace. | First May 1849.

My Dear Evans

I hope and trust we have made a good start, and that we shall fetch up Dombey.[†2]

I send you the second chapter.[†3] The Third is to come, yet. The first, I will send to Browne tomorrow. As the second subject[†4] is in this now sent, proofs are important.

I am glad to hear your children are doing well. Let me know about them whenever you write, as Mrs. Dickens is much interested.

Ever Faithfully

CHARLES DICKENS

F. M. Evans Esquire.
P.S. You mustn't get into the habit of asking for Copy.—It's a bad one.

To OCTAVIAN BLEWITT, 3 MAY 1849*

MS Royal Literary Fund.

Devonshire Terrace. | Third May 1849.

My Dear Sir

As I shall not attend the Dinner,[†1] I beg to return you the tickets.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Octavian Blewitt Esquire

To LEWIS GAYLORD CLARK,[†2] 3 MAY 1849*

MS John F. Fleming, Inc.

Devonshire Terrace | Third May 1849.

My Dear Clark

Many thanks for the Knickerbocker,[†3] which is as good as ever—and that is saying a good deal.

Certain emotions of shame and confusion arise within me, when I think of a previous letter of yours, unanswered. But I am a bad correspondent, having an enormous correspondence with an infinity of people (chiefly about nothing) which I must dispatch from day to day—and it was, and is, so hopeless to attempt to comply with the request you preferred in that letter, that I held my peace.

We are all heartily well and thriving, thank God. Mrs. Dickens sends her love to Mrs. Clark,[†4] and I send something as near it as a gentleman may. Also my love to Washington Irving when you see him, who I hope has not forgotten the flower-garnished julep we drank together at Baltimore.[†5] I never have.

Eight children, at this present writing. It begins to look serious, I am afraid.

Ever Yours faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

To H. K. BROWNE, 4 MAY 1849

Text from N, II, 151.

Devonshire Terrace | Fourth May 1849, Friday

My Dear Browne,

I send you the second chapter.[†6] The proofs have been delayed, I find, by Bradbury's illness, and Hivins's[†7] absence.

— V - 532 —

Will you come and dine here tomorrow week, at ¼ before 7? We shall have two or three people to dinner, and perhaps a little good music in the evening.[†1]

Ever faithfully

[CD]

To CHARLES COWDEN CLARKE,[†2] 5 MAY 1849

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

Devonshire Terrace | Fifth May 1849.

My Dear Sir

I am very sorry to say that my Orphan Working School vote, is promised in behalf of an unfortunate young orphan who after being canvassed for, subscribed for, polled for, written for, quarreled[†1] for, fought for, called for, and done all kinds of things for, by ladies who wouldn't go away and wouldn't be satisfied with anything anybody said or did for them, was floored at the last election, and comes up to the scratch next morning, for the next election, fresher than ever.

— V - 533 —

I devoutly hope he may get in, and be lost sight of for evermore.

Pray give my kindest regards to my quondam Quickly,[†2] and believe me

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Cowden Clarke Esquire.

To F. M. EVANS, 5 MAY 1849

MS Dickens House.

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday afternoon, Fifth May | 1849.

My Dear Evans.

I send you herewith, the end of the Number.[†3] If it should make a little too much (as I think it may[†4]) let them begin chapter 5 on page 46, where there is now a great blank.[†5] As soon as you have proofs, send me the whole, made up, and send me Mr. Forster's proofs too. I will correct and give them to him.

I am very sorry that we cannot get on, without calling forth such letters as the enclosed. What does it mean? Is it not ill-advised, and very ill-advised, to give any semblance of color to such complaints?[†6] They used never to be made, and how is it that they begin now? Pray see into this without delay, and let me know what the case is, and what you have done, before I answer the letter.[†7]

I think it excessively injudicious if there be any departure on your parts from the old course of my books.[†1]

I am very glad to hear that your children are so much better.

Ever Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 7 MAY 1849

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace. | Monday Seventh May 1849.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

Pending some further enquiries of Mr. Tracey's, I have arranged to be at his prison on Wednesday at 12, to see a young girl of 16, whose case he hopes is a good one. The worst of it, is, that she is committed for six months, and has only been there three; but possibly we might get her sentence commuted, if the circumstances seem favorable. I will report to you after seeing her.

I want to ask you to give me your permission to put you down as a Subscriber to a certain book of poetry price ten Shillings.[†2] I have a horror of Subscription-books in general, but the Writer of this is Mr. Charles Whitehead[†3] (the author, some years ago, of a very clever novel indeed, called Richard Savage).[†4] He has been struggling with poverty all his life,[†5] and resorts to this form of publication as a means of keeping his brother (a lunatic) another year in an asylum. I am much interested in helping him to good names.

Dear Miss Coutts | Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To THOMAS CARLYLE, 7 MAY 1849*

MS Private.

Devonshire Terrace | Seventh May 1849.

My Dear Carlyle.

I shall take it as a personal favor if you will give me your permission to put you down as a subscriber to a certain book of poems, price (when published) ten shillings. I have an invincible objection to subscription-books in general: but the Author in this case is Mr. Charles Whitehead (who wrote a very clever novel, some years ago, called Richard Savage) and the object he seeks to obtain by this means is such a very melancholy and unusual one[†1] that I am much interested in getting him the best names in Literature. He has never been a successful man, but he is a man of unquestionable ability.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Carlyle Esquire.

To F. M. EVANS, [7 MAY 1849]

Mention in postscript to Evans's draft letter to CD of 7 May: "your second note came and really almost knocked me over" (MS Bodleian).

Complaining that Jerdan had not received copies of Copperfield for the Literary Gazette.

To RICHARD MONCKTON MILNES, 7 MAY 1849*

MS Mr Robert B. Riss.

Devonshire Terrace | Seventh May 1849.

My Dear Milnes.

You escaped me in the crowd last night,[†2] but I had a design upon you. I wanted to ask you a favor—don't be frightened—in behalf of a literary man who I think has a claim upon us all.

It is, that you will give me your permission to put you down as a subscriber to a certain book of poetry, price (when published) Ten Shillings. I have the strongest objection to Subscription-books in general, but the author in this case is Mr. Charles Whitehead (who wrote, a few years ago, a very clever novel called Richard Savage); and the family calamity he seeks to soften by this means is such a very melancholy one, that I am much interested in aiding him to obtain the highest names in Literature.

He has not been a successful man, but he is a man of unquestionable ability, and no utterer of base coin in rhyme.[†1]

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Monckton Milnes Esquire

To H. K. BROWNE, 9 MAY 1849

Text from D. C. Thomson, Life and Labours of Hablot K. Browne, 1884, p. 68.

Devonshire Terrace, | Wednesday, ninth May, 1849

My Dear Browne,

I think the enclosed[†2] capital. Will you put Davy on a little jacket instead of this coat, without altering him in any other respect?[†3]

Faithfully ever

C.D.

To F. M. EVANS, 10 MAY 1849

MS Dickens House.

Devonshire Terrace | Tenth May 1849.

My Dear Evans.

I am sorry you took the complaints[†4] (which, of course, are not mine, and I can know nothing about, until you tell me) so much to heart. It is necessary, I need not say, that I should enquire into them.

I am very glad indeed, that we have so decisive and final an answer to Jerdan's.[†5]

In reference to that of Mr. Gilbert[†6] (whom I have referred to you) I must say that I think it would have been infinitely better, not to have departed in the least from Chapman and Hall's usual course of proceeding. The saving is a great and tempting one, but that is no proof of the wisdom of the alteration.[†7] We might save as much again, I dare say, by doing something that would nevertheless be very impolitic and ill-advised.

When my copies go out at the end of this month, please to place on the Free list, Mr. Costello 54 Acacia Road St. John's Wood—sending him, then, both

No. 1 and No. 2. And if you send a copy to any Newspaper at Liverpool, please to add the Liverpool Mercury[†1] to the list.

Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

To EDWIN LANDSEER, 10 MAY 1849

Summary and extract in Sotheby's catalogue, July 1972; MS 2 pp.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 10 May 49.

Giving him permission to look at his pony at Tattersall's after the owner of a horse farm at Acton, Mr Mason, had moved her there. If you think it worth while to go and look at her, she will be found in his name—Mr. Mason's Pony.

To RICHARD MONCKTON MILNES, 10 MAY 1849

Extract in Walter M. Hill catalogue No. 50; MS 2 pp.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 10 May 49.

Many thanks. Mr. George Stephens[†2] was . . . an independent gentleman. He sold £1200 out of the funds to get up a tragedy of his own called MARTINUZZI, when certain madmen called the Syncretics had the Lyceum Theatre.[†3] He must have spent a good deal more, in publishing his own books.[†4] Family differences, besides, have impoverished him and he has been for some time ill, and in the deepest and most distressful indigence.[†5] We granted him £45 yesterday, at the Literary Fund[†6]

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 11 MAY 1849

MS Lytton Papers.

Devonshire Terrace | Eleventh May 1849.

My Dear Bulwer.

I have delayed writing to you until I should have seen Whitehead, who had made an appointment to come here yesterday. When he came, I shewed him your letter, the true generosity and sympathy of which affected him so much, that he did not know how to write his thanks to you himself, and earnestly begged that I would undertake to do so for him.

The strait in which he is, is this:—He has a brother who is a lunatic, and who, by hard scraping and gathering together of money, has been kept in an asylum for some time—I don't know how long. The day will soon arrive when he must either come out, or be paid for, for another year; and Whitehead seeks, by republishing his poem "The Solitary", and publishing another new poem with it,[†1] by subscription, to raise fifty or sixty pounds and defray that expense.

I have got him several good names, as Hallam,[†2] Macaulay, Rogers, Lady Lovelace, and so forth. But whether these will bring the requisite number (200) remains to be seen.

You are spending your Christmas in the Country, I suppose? Let me wish you a merry one. It is fine, severe, seasonable weather.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

I have taken it for granted, I suddenly find, that you know Whitehead to be poor. He has never been a successful man.

To LEIGH HUNT, 13 MAY 1849

Envelope only in Percy Dobell & Son's catalogue No. 24 (1923); addressed Leigh Hunt, 4 Upper Cheyne Row, Chelsea; dated 13 May 49.

To T. N. TALFOURD, 14 MAY 1849*

MS Winifred A. Myers (Autographs) Ltd. Address: Mr. Serjeant Talfourd | &c &c &c | Serjeants Inn | Chancery Lane.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Fourteenth May 1849 | 11 o'Clock

My Dear Talfourd

I write in great haste to say that I have only just now got your letter, and that I am in a state of the utmost vexation at not being able to come today. I feel that we ought to dine somewhere together, afterwards; and I am engaged (for my sins) to go with Mary Barton[†1] to the German opera[†2], and to dine with her, first.[†3]

But do let us make a day, for one of our old-time walks. Can you give me any notion of what days there are in perspective, when you can be idle? I will compare them with mine, then, and we can fix one with which nothing foreseen, shall interfere.[†4]

Ever affectionately

CD.

To HENRY AUSTIN, 15 MAY 1849*

MS Morgan Library. Address (envelope MS Messrs George Baynton): Henry Austin Esquire | Gwydyr House | Whitehall.

Devonshire Terrace. | Tuesday Fifteenth May 1849.

My Dear Henry.

Both day and hour will suit me perfectly well. I have booked myself accordingly.

Affectionately Ever

CD.

Henry Austin Esquire.

To MRS JOLL,[†1] 15 MAY 1849*

MS G. F. Sims. Address: Mrs. Joll. | Regent Street | Plymouth.

Devonshire Terrace. | Fifteenth May 1849.

Madam

I regret that I cannot add my name to your subscription list.

It would have given me real satisfaction to comply with your request, after reading your letter, if I felt it consistent with a principle of right which I have always maintained, to do so. But I cannot understand that you are justified in republishing portions of the works of living writers, without their consent.[†2] I think there is a confusion of ideas abroad, on this subject, which it is the duty of all who are devoted to literature, to discourage. And therefore I must very reluctantly decline doing what you ask me.

Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Joll.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 16 MAY 1849

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Wednesday Sixteenth May | 1849.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I send you, enclosed, a document relating to Mary Jones, which Mr. Hill the Recorder of Birmingham has sent me. I stated Mary Jones's case (as she puts it) in writing for him, that there might be no mistake, and at his request.

I am afraid her story is quite untrue. There is still a possibility of its being true, because there is a possibility of the neighbour represented to have seen her take money out of the till, being false. But the probabilities are very strong indeed against her.

Dear Miss Coutts | Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

I have been at Shepherds Bush three times lately, and have seen a good deal of Mrs. Morson and taken counsel with her in reference to a dispute between Isabella Gordon and Rachael Bradley. I have a very strong hope that she is exactly the person we have always wanted.

To MRS MORSON, 16 MAY 1849

Summary in N, II, 153; MS 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 16 May 49. Address (envelope, MS Miss Grace Hughes): Mrs Morson. | Urania Cottage | Near The White Horse | Shepherds Bush.

Respecting Isabella Gordon.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 17 MAY 1849*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace. | Seventeenth May 1849.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I have read both the pamphlet[†1] and your letter.

It seems to me (I may be wrong, knowing nothing of the hand from which it comes), that the pamphlet is written by somebody who has conceived Puseyite ideas,[†2] and who has got one foot and the best part of one leg into the Romish Church. The suggested place is but a kind of Nunnery.[†3] If it be meant to be anything else, it is a mere vision, which, reduced to practice, would come to that. I think such places very promising offshoots from the root of all mischief, and believe this sprig would blow, in time, like the rest.

Your letter is perfectly plain and clear, and does not omit any strong point of objection. It seems to me to state all the points of objection very strongly and extremely well.[†4] The proposed Sisterhood, in particular, is most wisely handled. It would be difficult, to my thinking, to devise any—not wicked—scheme, of a more pernicious and unnatural nature. As if every home in all this land, were not a World, in which a woman's course of influence and action is marked out by Heaven![†1]

Upon the nature of their repentance and the inculcation of Christianity as an essential part of every phase of life, I think you take the only true, sensible, and practical ground. "All others", as they say in the advertisements of patent things "are counterfeits", I am perfectly convinced.

In short, I really do not think that you have left any part of the question untouched, except that one into which you are not called upon to enter, even if you think with me—and that is, that the model of this scheme is in the practice of a perverted form of religion which all experience shews us to be irreconcileable[†2] with the peace, welfare, and improvement of mankind.

Of course I do not doubt the good intentions of the writer, but I must confess that every day I live, I grow more and more afraid of these amiable ships without any rudders that drift about the crowded ocean called Life, and get into the best-intentioned entanglements with all sorts of things.

Dear Miss Coutts | Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To MARK LEMON, 17 MAY 1849

MS Benoliel Collection.

Devonshire Terrace | Seventeenth May 1849.

My Dear Lemon

Just as I was going to send to Newman's[†3] this morning, I find the project[†4] in a new difficulty. Egg, you know, is not here. Who is to fill his place? Don't let us have a barouche, before we know who is to go in it.—Affecy. Ever

CD.

To MARK LEMON, 19 MAY 1849

MS Benoliel Collection.

Devonshire Terrace | Nineteenth May 1849.

My Dear Lemon.

The name of Mr. Gray[†5] of Earl Street Blackfriars, makes me, as they say in the melo Dramas, "a boy again".[†6] In the palmy newspaper days, he was the Chronicle Horseman; and many a "four" of his have I urged on to fourteen mile an hour, in my time.[†1]

When we go to the London Tavern[†2] (observe! Not the Freemasons') we will look at the Carriages. The discomfort of a Indiwidial alone in his glory behind, has presented itself to me in lively colors, I confess, in connexion with the cane body.

Am I to lay in the provender? Is it so far arranged, that I am safe in laying in the Provender and the Champagne (6 bottles)

I pause for a reply

?

Affectionately Ever

CD.

[†a]P.S. Damn it, lets'[†3] us have four horses, and do you enagage[†4] the best Carriage at once.[†a]

To MARK LEMON, 19 MAY 1849

MS Benoliel Collection.

Devonshire Terrace. | Nineteenth May 1849. | Saturday.

My Dear Lemon.

Forster would rather not go.[†5] [†a]He has written this morning.[†a] Therefore, the carriage you sketch—for 3 of us—would be better still I suppose? I have not the least wish to take John,[†6] otherwise than that I thought it would be a great convenience to have somebody to look after things. Topping is such an infernal ass—or he might ride down on the Bay—

I think, as you are arranging for the carriage, it will be best for you to engage the Horses. You can do so in my name and address, if you think there is any advantage in that. I enclose a card. Whatever we do, let us look up to the mark if we go at all. Go, or not go, I shall be quite content with anything you arrange, and leave it in your hands. Will you give me a call at 2 tomorrow, or write to me tonight, or Monday, telling me what is done? †bThat I may see to Fortnum and Mason†7 without loss of time, if we go?—†bAnd will you tell Leech that I shall expect him on Monday at 5—here—

Ever affectionately

CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 19 MAY 1849*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday Evening | Nineteenth May 1849.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I have seen Mr. Illingworth, and would like to say a word to you about this letter†1—though it really is almost too pitiful and contemptible a thing, addressed to a lady of your position and character, to talk seriously about.

Shall you be at home from 2 to half past, tomorrow? Or on Monday at 4? If you will let me know which time will suit you best, I will come to Stratton Street.

Dear Miss Coutts | Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 20 MAY 1849*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Twentieth May 1849.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I was received at home when I came back just now, with a yell of derision. We had promised Lord Nugent to go down to Lilies,†2 on Whit Monday and Tuesday. And I didn't know that Whit Monday was your Monday!

Friday or Saturday in this next week, or Thursday, Friday, or Saturday in the Whitsun Week following will, I hope, suit you. Will you tell me what day I shall consider myself engaged to you for?

I had a good savage talk with Mr. Chesterton, and shewed him that the course for him to take was to keep himself quiet, and tell his solicitors (not ask them) to get a written apology from Mr. Onion,†3 stop the action, and so make an end of it.[†4] This, I left him resolute to do; and if it be done, I don't think we shall hear any more of this fellow until he comes to be hanged.—I have no doubt he's an Irishman.[†5]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To I. K. BRUNEL,[†1] 21 MAY 1849

Extract in N, II, 155 (from catalogue source); dated Devonshire Terrace, 21 May 49.

Expressing his regret at having to decline an invitation. A kind of presentiment I have on the subject inspires me with the hope that the extraordinary spell there seems to have been against our meeting is almost broken. In fact I think it's virtually gone, Elliotson notwithstanding.[†2]

To CHARLES ELLIS, 21 MAY 1849

Facsimile from unidentified source.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty First May 1849.

Dear Mr. Ellis.

I am much obliged to you for your letter. The claret is excellent,[†3] but I have drunk so little of it that I do not want more at present. I shall be glad to have 3 dozen of the chablis, at your convenience.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr Charles Ellis

To MARK LEMON, [21 MAY 1849]

MS Benoliel Collection. Date: The references to John Thompson, the carriage and Fortnum & Mason's all point to the Monday after To Lemon, 19 May.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday.

My Dear Lemon.

Gordon[†4] goes.[†5] He breakfasts here at ½ past 9, so say your own time.

Is there room for John? And can he see the Carriage? I want him to look at the Stowage. We have got a japanned footbath, which would be a most brilliant thing for the ice, if it will go in.

Fortnum and Mason have undertaken the Hamper—a very neat little collation.

I am in deep depression, at the prospect of the dinner[†6] today. Leech must hold me up.[†7]

Ever affecy.
CD.

To FRANK STONE, 24 MAY 1849

Text from R. S. Mackenzie, Life of CD, Philadelphia, [1870], p. 220.

Devonshire Terrace, | Twenty-fourth May, 1849.

My Dear Stone,

I "took" a good deal yesterday[†1]—but not in the way of odds.[†2] I understand from my ladies that not much was taken at Arethu[s]a's[†3] last night.

It is most annoying that on Tuesday I shall be at Aylesbury, down at old Nugent's. I come back, however, that evening, and am your man when ever you like afterward.

Yours affectionately,
[CHARLES DICKENS]

Frank Stone, Esquire.

To ICHABOD C. WRIGHT,[†4] 29 MAY 1849*

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

Devonshire Terrace | Tuesday Evening | Twenty Ninth May 1849

My Dear Sir

I regret exceedingly that we are engaged on Thursday. We have but this moment (½ past 9) returned from Buckinghamshire where we have been staying two days, or I should have answered your note sooner.

Mrs. Dickens unites with me in kind remembrances to Mrs. Wright.[†5]

Believe me My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

I. C. Wright Esquire.

To WILLIAM BROWN, 30 MAY 1849*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace. | Wednesday Evening | Thirtieth May 1849.

My Dear Sir

I am quite vexed to hear that you have called upon me twice to no purpose. But I was at Lilies until last night; and this morning I went out to see Mrs. Macready (about this horrible uproar at New York) directly after breakfast.

I hope and trust there is nothing amiss at Shepherd's Bush?

Tomorrow, I shall be at home all day. Or I dine, at ½ past 7, with Edmund Phipps[†1]—near you[†2]—and could easily call on you on my way there, if that would do as well.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

William Brown Esquire.

To ELIHU BURRITT, 30 MAY 1849

Mention in Sotheby's catalogue, Feb 1929; MS 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 30 May 49.

Concerning an engagement.

To MRS MACREADY, [?30 MAY 1849]

MS Morgan Library. Date: First reports of the Astor Place riot of 10 May 49 were published in English papers on the 29th; the report Macready sent presumably reached CD the same day. CD must have taken this letter with him when he went to see Mrs Macready on Wed. morning (To Brown, 30 May), in case she was out—or written it later, "on cooler reflection".

Devonshire Terrace. | Wednesday Morning

My Dear Mrs. Macready.

When I came home to dinner yesterday afternoon, I found an American Paper[†3] from Macready. In the first transports of my unbounded indignation, I was coming up to you; but I thought, on cooler reflection, that there was no reason why I should worry you in the joyful prospect of his immediate return,[†4] with my feelings anent the New Yorkers.

But this I must say.—That the scene astounds even me.[†1] I know perfectly well that many things may take place in the first City of the United States which could not possibly occur in a remote nook of any other country in the World,—but the bestiality of this business, and the incredible business of that public opinion to which Mr. Clarke[†2] (whoever he is) deferred when he apologized for his engagement,[†3] I regard as a positive calamity to the rational freedom of men.

To Macready it signifies nothing, except that it takes him out of that damnable jumble (you'll excuse me) of false pretensions and humbugs, a week or so sooner. And that's a good thing for all of us.

It strikes me that we ought to have a dinner to him here—just large enough for the proceedings to be made public—and no larger—in which this thing should be properly noticed, and a reasonable expression of gentlemanly disgust given vent to. I will talk the matter over with Forster. My own opinion is, that it should certainly be done. I don't think it ought to be passed over.†4

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Macready.

June

To HANS CHRISTIAN ANDERSEN, 4 JUNE 1849

MS Royal Library, Copenhagen.

Devonshire Terrace, London | Fourth June 1849

My Dear and admired Andersen.

I send this hasty note across the water to you, to thank you for the delight your kind letter†1 has given me, and to assure you that you live, always fresh, in my remembrance. My wife and children entreat me to give their loves to you, and we all want to know when you are going to make us happier and better by writing a new book.†2 We feel jealous of Stockholm, and jealous of Finland, and we say to one another that you ought to be at home, and nowhere else (unless indeed in England where we should receive you most heartily) with a pen in your hand and a goodly pile of paper before you.

The two Baronesses†3 arrived here safely. Charming Baronesses they were; and I took them to my bosom with all honor, love, and gallantry.

I am quite charmed to have heard from you again, and to send this small messenger back, though only to take you by the hand and assure you of the cordial sympathy, friendship, and esteem of

Your friend | And faithful reader
CHARLES DICKENS†4
Hans Christian Andersen.

To DR SHERIDAN MUSPRATT, 4 JUNE 1849†

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: Dr. Sheridan Muspratt | College of Chemistry | Liverpool.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Fourth June 1849.

My Dear Dr. Muspratt.

One line to acknowledge the receipt of yours, and to say that we shall hope to see you when you come to town.

I received the papers,[†5] and saw that they came from you. Your account does not surprise me. I have managerial experience in that wise, you know, and know what it must have been.[†1]

[†a]Delighted to hear such good intelligence of Knowles. Forrest I take to be a roaring madman. I would shave his head, blister his legs, and apprentice him for seven years at Astleys[†2] to ride dray-horses.

Mrs. Dickens and her sister unite with me in best remembrances[†a] to your other and better half.[†3] And pray commend us heartily to all at Seaforth.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

I understand the Noble Heart[†4] says that "nothing has been seen like it, since the days of Kean". I should think not.

To FRANK STONE, 4 JUNE 1849

MS Benoliel Collection.[†5]

Devonshire Terrace. | Monday Fourth June 1849.

My Dear Stone

Leech and Sparkler having promised their ladies to take them to Ascot, and having failed in their truth, propoge to take them to Greenwich instead, next Wednesday. Will that alteration in the usual W. C.[†6] arrangements be agreeable to Gaffin S? If so, the place of Meeting is the Sparkler's Bower, and the hour one[†7]

exactly.

Ever Yours
CD.

To FREDERICK DICKENS, 6 JUNE [1849]

Extract in John Waller catalogue No. 117 (1878); MS 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, Wednesday, Sixth of June. Date: 1849 was the only year during CD's tenancy of Devonshire Terrace, in which 6 June was a Wednesday.

I am going to Greenwich to day.[†8] Shall be home tomorrow (before going out to dinner) from 6 to ½ past 7.

Affecy. etc.
C.D.

To JOHN FORSTER, [6 JUNE 1849]

Extract in F, VI, vi, 536. Date: 6 June according to Forster; clearly 1849.

Copperfield[†1] half done. I feel, thank God, quite confident in the story. I have a move in it ready for this month;[†2] another for next; and another for the next.[†3]

To C. H. BRACEBRIDGE,[†4] 8 JUNE 1849

Text from American Autograph Shop catalogue, Aug 1937.

Devonshire Terrace | Eighth June 1849

My Dear Sir,

Mrs. Dickens begs me to thank you and Mrs. Bracebridge for the honey, and I beg to thank you, firstly for your kind note, secondly for the Equitable Boors' late advocate[†5] (which I shall immediately study) and thirdly for your invitation to that interesting and pleasant festivity. It would have been most agreeable to have accepted it, but for an unlucky engagement of a public nature, for the same day, from which I cannot escape.

Beg[†1] present my remembrances, and those of Mrs. Dickens, to Mrs. Bracebridge,[†2] and believe me
Very faithfully yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 8 JUNE 1849*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Eighth June 1849.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

The letter of Job Joynes[†3] (as he calls himself) is so very affecting that I am angry with myself for having laughed until I cried, at it. The most comical circumstance about it seems to be that poor Joynes plumes himself immensely on his composition—and there is something, I am ashamed to say, quite irresistible in that idea, and in his extraordinary use of the "unworthy" adjective, and the wonderful means he resorts to for spelling some of his words. But really it is very touching for all that; and I think his book-marker (I could not make out what on earth it was, or why it was pinned there, until I came to the explanation) a piece of genuine pathos—though it did come out of that girl's new hat, five and thirty years ago.

When I spoke to my brother in law,[†4] the Board of Health Secretary, about Mr. Scott's ponds, he had no doubt that we could present them.[†5] But I had a very strong doubt, in return, whether Mr. Scott, if he were well advised, could not present us, as a counter-move, for emptying our drain on his property. Which I decidedly think he could. But I will ascertain before this next week is out, whether there is any other way of making him drain the ground. And if we seem to have any reasonable security for his not turning round upon us to your annoyance, I will write to him and make a formal demand to have those ponds cleared, and see what he says to it.

I return Mr. Onion's letter, with Joynes's.

Dear Miss Coutts | Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To FRANK STONE, 12 JUNE 1849*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Devonshire Terrace | Tuesday Twelfth June | 1849.

My Dear Stone.

There is nothing for tomorrow. But next day (Thursday) Leech and I propose to go to Cobham, which I have a reason for revisiting.[†1] If you like to go, be at New St. Pancras Church at exactly a quarter past 9, and I will take you up as we go by to London Bridge Wharf in the little carriage.

Ever affecy.
CD.

To JOHN LEECH, 12 JUNE 1849

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: John Leech Esquire | 31 Notting Hill Terrace | Notting Hill.

Devonshire Terrace | Tuesday Twelfth June | 1849.

My Dear Leech.

I will breakfast on Thursday at halfpast 8, and expect you if you can come. But remember that we must leave here by 9. We will go to London Bridge Wharf in my little carriage.

I have told Stone there is nothing for tomorrow, but that if he likes to go with us on Thursday, he can. Ever affecy.

CD.

Will Lemon go? I suppoge not. Let us arrange (you and I) for one of our preliminary seaside surveys.

To FRANK STONE, 13 JUNE 1849*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Devonshire Terrace | Wednesday Thirteenth June | 1849.

My Dear Stone

The Cobham expedition is postponed to Saturday, at the instance of Leech.[†2]

Affecy. Ever

CD.

To JOHN LEECH, [13 JUNE 1849]

MS Benoliel Collection. Date: no doubt the day before the Hampton Races (14 June), Leech having postponed the expedition to Cobham.

Devonshire Terrace | Wednesday

My Dear Leech.

Let it be Hampton tomorrow! I suppose I had better come to you. Will you tell me (by post or otherwise, so that I may be sure to get your note this evening) at what time I shall present myself at Notting Hill. Don't fail in this.

Saturday, Cobham.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 15 JUNE 1849*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Friday Night | Fifteenth June 1849.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I called on you this afternoon, but hardly expected to find you at home.

I have heard nothing of Jemima Hiscock, but what your note tells me.

I was at Shepherd's Bush today. (I took with me a friend from Edinburgh who is the Sheriff of Mid Lothian,[†1] with considerable daily experience of such matters, and who was greatly pleased with the whole system). All was going on perfectly well. I referred to the Book, for little Hearn's case, and find that the impression I had on my mind when I saw Mr. Brown, is correct. She certainly has not been guilty of deceit, on any material point of her case—most unquestionably practised no deception in reference to the main passages of her life. Which are fully admitted.

Bagster the Gardener being there, I examined, with him, the course of our drain in reference to Mr. Scott's land. It is quite clear that we cannot possibly present his stagnant water as a nuisance, when our Drain runs into it. It is a terrible thing to think of its running into the open air and undoubtedly poisoning the atmosphere about the house—but it does. Whether there is any other possible remedy, I will learn before I see you at the Home on Tuesday. Bagster spoke to me (by your directions he said) about the having cows into the field to graze. I told him after he had mowed it, he had certainly better make a bargain with our Milkman for his cows being turned out there.

Dear Miss Coutts | Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To AUGUSTUS TRACEY, 15 JUNE 1849*

MS University of Texas.

Devonshire Terrace | Friday Night | Fifteenth June 1849.

My Dear Tracey

Our Committee Day at the Bush, is next Tuesday at the usual hour. I saw Isabella today—looking very well again—and heard a good account of her. She was a little envious of the people going by to Hampton Races, and said 'how she would like to be going with em'![†2]

To PETER CUNNINGHAM, 18 JUNE 1849*

MS Private.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Eighteenth June 1849.

My Dear Cunningham.

Let me thank you, very heartily, for the present of your book.[†1] And let me congratulate you, no less warmly, on the admirable manner in which you have executed a task of very great difficulty[†2] and ministered to a want that I, for one, have very often felt, when no such book was to be got.

I have gone over several parts of both volumes which I knew to be difficult ground, and I cannot tell you how well I think they are done. The poetical illustrations[†3] give a charm to the whole which sets up the old Theatres again, and fills them with the old company, and delights the fancy; while the dustiest authority is stated with a precision and conciseness, worthy of all imitation. In both respects you have taken such extraordinary pains and read so much, that (but for the juvenility of your appearance in the flesh) I should rather have believed you had been Seventy years, than seven, over your work.

All prospering and friendly wishes for it and you!

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Peter Cunningham Esquire.

To THE SECRETARY OF THE UNITED LAW CLERKS SOCIETY,[†4] 19 JUNE 1849*

MS Mr Michael Meredith. Address: The Secretary | (or acting Stewards) | of the United Law Clerks Society | Freemasons' Tavern.

Devonshire Terrace | Nineteenth June 1849.

Dear Sir

I beg to inform you that I shall bring with me to the dinner today[†5] (if you will have the kindness to provide him with a seat beside me) Mr. John Gordon, a distinguished member of the Scottish Bar, who is Sheriff[†1] of Edinburgh, and Lord Rector of Marechal College[†2] Aberdeen.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Secretary | &c &c

To THOMAS BEARD, 21 JUNE 1849

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | "Morning Herald" Office | Shoe Lane.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty First June 1849

My Dear Ould Mus'r Beard.

No! The Villain Bentley has been true to himself and false to Corkram[†3] and the inimitable. The book has never come. I imagine it must have reached Forster, for he noticed it (or I am greatly mistaken) in the Examiner.[†4] But the inimitable B has it not.

Come and dine with us at 5 on Sunday week—next Sunday we are going out. We will have out the Battledores, leaping-poles, and other athletic instruments—including a glass of rare port, and a bottle of iced gin punch.

You are right Sir. June is a fine month for the country. On the 1st. of August we shall disappear, and if you dont come and Stop a long time and keep on coming and stopping a long time until the end of September, you'll find yourself in the wrong box, ever after. I have not decided on the place yet, but it will be down a railroad and where there is good sea bathing. You may rely upon that, my buck.

I should have written to you yesterday but I went to see certain Highlanders go mad in Holland Park,[†5] and didn't get home until Midnight. M'Ian[†6] was in a frightful state of perspirational excitement.

Ever affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Beard Esquire.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 21 JUNE 1849*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Thursday June Twenty First | 1849.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I am much obliged to you for your note. I shall be glad of the British Institution tickets,[†7] as I have never been there in the evening.

It was clear to me on Tuesday,—not only that Isabella Gordon had been in the habit of talking in a disorderly manner, but that she had certainly said (and believed) she could do what she liked with us. I therefore thought it right to assume a severity towards her which should have an effect upon her, and through her upon the rest of them. I had not an opportunity of saying to you that I hoped you approved of it. I believe it will be beneficial, as it certainly was in Emma Lea's case—though I am not sanguine of her remaining with us.

I have some idea that I have found out a very good case. It is not a prison one. If my further enquiries should turn out to be satisfactory, I will come to you.

Dear Miss Coutts | Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [21 JUNE 1849]

Extract in F, VI, iii, 496. Date: 21 June according to Forster.

Fourteen miles to-day in the country, revolving number four![†1]

To W. C. MACREADY, 21 JUNE 1849*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty First June 1849.

My Dear Macready

I forgot to tell you the other night that I want you to give me permission to put you down as a subscriber to a ten shilling book of poetry. It is not a common affair. It is by Mr. Whitehead, and published for a very melancholy purpose. I have got him all the best names in literature, Macaulay, Hallam, & so forth, and he is particularly anxious to have yours.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To W. C. MACREADY, 22 JUNE 1849*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace. | Twenty Second June 1849.

My Dear Macready

Many thanks for the two bottle[†2]—of a glorious form—and as full of Promise as Maraschino.

Georgina is very proud of your kind remembrance of her, and will be (of course) happy to come on Sunday.[†1]

Ever affectionately

CHARLES DICKENS

To FRANK STONE, 23 JUNE 1849*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Devonshire Terrace. | Saturday Twenty Third June | 1849

My Dear Stone

Would you like to go up to Hampstead today—Finchley—Highgate—Hendon—anywhere? I am mortal lazy, and if you were to come round, think I might be tempted out to play.

Faithfully Ever

CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [24 JUNE 1849]

Extract in F, VI, iii, 496-7. Date: 24 June according to Forster.

On leaving you last night, I found myself summoned on a special jury in the Queen's Bench to-day. I have taken no notice of the document, and hourly expect to be dragged forth to a dungeon for contempt of court. I think I should rather like it. It might help me with a new notion or two in my difficulties.[†2] Meanwhile I shall take a stroll to-night in the green fields from 7 to 10, if you feel inclined to join.

To R. H. HORNE, 25 JUNE 1849*

MS Dickens House.

Devonshire Terrace. | Twenty Fifth June 1849.

My Dear Horne.

Will the afternoon do?[†3] At half past 4? Either Wednesday—or Thursday—or tomorrow?—

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

R. H. Horne Esquire.

To MARK LEMON, 25 JUNE 1849

Text from MDGH, I, 207.

Devonshire Terrace, Monday, June 25th, 1849.

My Dear Lemon,

I am very unwilling to deny Charley the pleasure you so kindly offer him. But as it is just the close of the half-year when they are getting together all the half-year's work—and as that day's pleasure would weaken the next day's duty, I think I must be "more like an ancient Roman than a—"[†1] Sparkler, and that it will be wisest in me to say nothing about it.

Get a clean pocket-handkerchief ready for the close of "Copperfield" No. 3;[†2] "simple and quiet, but very natural and touching."—Evening Bore.

Ever affectionately
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To G. J. HOLYOAKE,[†3] 27 JUNE 1849

Mention in Hodgson's catalogue, June 1928; dated 27 June 49.

To EDWARD CHAPMAN, [28 JUNE 1849]

Mention in To Horne, 1 July 49. Date: CD says that he had written "on Thursday", i.e. 28 June.

To J. D. COLERIDGE,[†4] 29 JUNE 1849*

MS Dickens House.

Devonshire Terrace. | Twenty Ninth June 1849. | Friday Evening

Dear Sir

I beg to enclose my subscription of Two Guineas towards the object in which you kindly interest yourself,[†1] and to express my regret that I cannot aid it in connexion with any of the names you mention to me.

Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

J. D. Coleridge Esquire

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 29 JUNE 1849*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Ninth June 1849.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

In the case I mentioned to you, I find that the girl has some friends (attracted to her by her good conduct of late) who are willing to send her out to Australia as a Government Emigrant. Under these circumstances I have thought it right to leave her to them, and not so to fill up a Vacancy at the Home.

After I shall have finished my next number[†2]—which desirable event will take place, I hope, in about a fortnight—I will ask you to have the kindness to give me half an hour one morning and let me devote it to the subject of Charley.[†3]

Dear Miss Coutts | Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To JOHN LEECH, 29 JUNE 1849

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: John Leech Esquire.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Ninth June 1849.

My Dear Leech.

Will you look into that almanack which I know you always keep, in one of those tidy drawers of yours, and set apart a couple of days in the week beginning on Monday the 16th. for our quest of a sea-side retreat? We had better keep two, or even three, days, open, in case of our going to the Isle of Wight.[†4] But I will enquire in the meantime, and have some other places ready to suggest.

Make a note of the days that will suit you best, and then let me know what they are—to the end that I may check them off in my calendar too, and so provide for this grave piece of business, beforehand.

Ever Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

John Leech Esquire.

To MR MARSHALL, [?JUNE 1849]

Mention in To Fowler, 27 July 49. Date: Probably the original invitation had been sent a month in advance.

Declining an invitation from the Sheffield Athenæum and Mechanics' Institute.

July

To R. H. HORNE, 1 JULY 1849

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel.

Devonshire Terrace | Sunday First July 1849.

My Dear Horne.

On Wednesday Evening and Thursday Morning, I read your manuscript.[†1] I am delighted with the story. I think it quite novel in the idea, and admirably executed. A bookseller might suggest that the introduction and the conclusion are scarcely so thoroughly allied to the main notion as they might be, but we will leave the animal in question to find it out if he can.

On Thursday I wrote to Chapman, telling him I had a Manuscript—author known in Literature—of which I thought highly—which was very new—very good—and might, I thought, with a very little management, succeed well. That I was not disposed to make any hard bargain with it, but I must make a quick one, must have Fifty Pounds down, subject to no after deductions or accountings, and must prevent the copyright from passing from the author—who, in short, supposing the Publisher properly paid for his venture, must then come in. [†a]I added that if he thought there was a probability of his acceding to such terms, he should see the MS. Otherwise, I would rather with-hold it.[†a]

He was out of town. Last night he wrote me the enclosed.[†2] I have this day left the MS for him—first carefully erasing your name and initials, wherever they appeared. The moment I receive his answer, you shall know it. I have known him go as far as this, before, and do nothing after all.

Ever Faithfully Yours

CD.

To HENRY AUSTIN, 2 JULY 1849*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Second July 1849.

My Dear Henry.

I shall be at home all day, until halfpast seven, when I am obliged (for my sins) to go out to dinner. If you can make it convenient to come at about 6, I will have gone through all your papers[†3] before then, and will be ready with the best advice it is in my power to offer. It is necessary to explain, no doubt; but, beyond this, I do not see any cause for uneasiness in the matter.

Affectionately Ever

CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 2 JULY 1849*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Second July 1849. | Monday.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I was at Shepherds Bush, both on Saturday Evening and yesterday.

On consideration, I thought it better not to send anybody to the man Browne,[†1] as—being a brute and a dull fellow I dare say—it might suggest to his wrong-headedness that we were disposed to treat or temporize with him. Therefore I abandoned that idea; which I had mentioned to our Mr. Brown.

I went to the Police Station at Brook Green,[†2] and saw the Acting Inspector, and clearly explained the whole case to him, in case the man should at any time be given into custody for making a disturbance at the Home. It is all perfectly understood there, and they would have nothing to do at Urania Cottage but to give him into custody, and send here. I do not think it could be better provided for. My own opinion is, that he will not shew himself at all.

The Magistrate of that district is a Mr. Painter,[†3] who I am told is an obliging and sensible man.

Everything was quiet and comfortable at the Home. I spoke to little Browne[†4] and told her she need not be at all uneasy. I also spoke to my poor friend Isabella Gordon, who was very white when she saw me come in; but whether with vengeance or contrition, I don't know.

Dear Miss Coutts | Ever Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To [JAMES] HUNT,[†5] 3 JULY 1849*

MS Dr S. Lehming. Addressed to James Hunt according to Sotheby's catalogue, 24 Jan 1950.

Devonshire Terrace | Tuesday Third July 1849.

My Dear Sir

I am exceedingly sorry that I cannot have the pleasure of dining with you today. I had a slight fall on Sunday which I disregarded yesterday, but which is attended with some uncomfortable local consequences that oblige me to be cupped, and laid up in ordinary on a sofa for the next four and twenty hours. I assure you I should have postponed it until tomorrow, but for being hurt and in pain.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

—Hunt Esquire.

To FRANK STONE, [3 JULY 1849]*

MS Benoliel Collection. Date: Half-flourish under "CD" points to July 49, before CD left for Bonchurch; Lucrezia Borgia was performed at Her Majesty's Theatre on Tues 3 July.

Devonshire Terrace. | Tuesday

My Dear Stone.

Here, tomorrow, at 2 o'Clock exactly.

We have a loin of mutton at ½ past 5 today, and are going to see Lucrezia Borgia,[†1] afterwards. Will you come to the Mutton and the Opera?

I am very much pleased with your pleasure in the Number.[†2] Kept up? It must be, please God. I should hope so. Hooray!

Ever affectionately
CD.

To F. M. EVANS, 4 JULY 1849

MS Dickens House.

Devonshire Terrace | Wednesday Fourth July | 1849.

My Dear Evans.

The enclosed is only a portion of the first chapter;[†3] but as Browne's first subject[†4] is in it, it had better be set up.

I got an awkward fall on Sunday on my weak side (the only "weak side" I have, is the left, where there is an inflamed kidney sometimes) and yesterday I was obliged to be cupped and lose a good deal of blood, and today—for a change—I am being blistered. A touch of caustic tomorrow, will make it quite a merry-go-rounder (as Mr. Peggotty says).[†5]

Ever Yours
CD.

To HENRY AUSTIN, 6 JULY 1849*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Sixth July 1849.

My Dear Henry

I saw Forster this afternoon, who told me he had anticipated your wish, and written to you. He said the subject[†1] was too late for this week,[†2] and also mentioned to me that your letter was in the Times today.[†3]

Beard will do all he can,[†4] having Baldwin behind him.

I have been cupped and blistered on the side, and have been very unwell since I saw you. I think of going, on Sunday, to the Hotel at Broadstairs for a few days. I hope I need not say that any sort of help I can render you, I claim to be asked to give.

Love to Letitia.
Ever affectionately[†5]
[CHARLES DICKENS]

Henry Austin Esquire.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 6 JULY 1849*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street | Piccadilly.

Devonshire Terrace | Sixth July 1849.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I received, yesterday, the enclosed letter[†6] from Miss White,[†7] whom you most generously assisted some time ago. I should not send it to you, were it not so clearly intended for your perusal—for when she addresses me, she means, of course, to address the anonymous lady on whose behalf I gave her that former donation—that I should feel in a moral difficulty on the subject, if I were to with-hold it.

When she writes of her father[†1] in connexion with "the Court", she means, with the Court Newsmen, under whom he either held, or hoped to have held, some small employment.[†2] I have no doubt that her narrative is true—indeed the leading facts came to my knowledge as a member of the Literary Fund not long ago[†3]—but whether there is any possibility of doing her real good, is for you, only, to consider.

I have been very unwell this week, from the effects of a fall, and have been cupped and blistered in the side pretty smartly. I think of going to the Albion Hotel at Broadstairs for three or four days, but I shall be back next week—on Friday or Saturday.

Dear Miss Coutts | Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To W. G. PRESCOTT,[†4] 6 JULY 1849*

MS Massachusetts Historical Society.

Devonshire Terrace | Friday Sixth July 1849.

My Dear Sir

I enclose you a letter of introduction to Mr. Haldimand at Lausanne, who is Lausanne in himself, and one of the noblest-hearted gentlemen in the world.

(N.B. He is a little deaf)

Hoping to see you on your return, and assuring you that it will give us real pleasure to do so,
I remain always | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

William G. Prescott Esquire.

To R. H. HORNE, [?6 JULY 1849]

Extract in Anderson Galleries catalogue No. 1516; MS (signed initials) 1 p.; dated 1849. Date: CD no doubt sent Horne Chapman's letter of 6 July (see below) on its arrival.

Chapman declines! Here is his letter.[†1] I send it to you, because he sets quite as little account by my opinion as by your M.S.

To EDWARD CHAPMAN, [EARLY JULY 1849]

Quoted in To Mrs Hall, 18 July. Date: no doubt shortly before 7 July, when Chapman replied to it.

Enclosing a letter from the widow of Robert Seymour.[†2] Be good enough to inform me whether you are as much surprized as I have been, by the enclosed communication,[†3] and whether there is any truth in it.[†4]

To JOHN LEECH, [?MARCH-EARLY JULY 1849]

MS Benoliel Collection. Date: 1849 on handwriting; probably not before March, since not on mourning paper; but before he left for Broadstairs on 8 July. Address: John Leech Esquire | 31 Notting Hill Terrace.

Devonshire Terrace | Thursday Morng

My Dear Leech.

As I have not (which is a remarkable fact) sat to Egg today,[†5] will you come here, not a moment later than ½ past 3, instead of my coming to you?

Ever Faithfully
CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?8 JULY 1849]

Extract in F, VI, iii, 496; summary in F, VI, vi, 532. Date: CD told Austin on 6 July that he planned to leave for Broadstairs on Sun 8th.[†1]

Saying that he was rushing to Broadstairs to finish the fourth number of Copperfield and describing the Mansion House dinner the previous night (see To Editor of Daily News, 11 July, fn).

To HENRY AUSTIN, 9 JULY 1849*

MS Morgan Library.

Albion Hotel, Broadstairs | Monday Ninth July 1849.

My Dear Henry.

Mr. Robert Leigh the brother of a friend of mine (which friend is no less a personage than the celebrated Mr. Pips)[†2] is anxious to have an introduction to you, which I very readily give him.[†3] He is by profession a surveyor. I do not know his immediate object in seeking this, or I would state it to you, but I know perfectly well that I need not commend him to your kind attention.

Ever affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

Henry Austin Esquire

To JOHN LEECH, 9 JULY 1849

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: John Leech Esquire | 31 Notting Hill Terrace | Notting Hill | London.

Albion Hotel, Broadstairs | Monday Ninth July 1849.

My Dear Leech.

This has occurred to me.—

Supposing I write back to say "done", could you do this—Could you meet me at Folkestone on Saturday Afternoon? All you would have to do, would be to come there by Dover Railway, and Lemon would tell you about the Trains. I myself should be there, any time after 12 at noon.

The advantage of such an arrangement would be, that on Saturday we could make ourselves masters of Folkestone and Hythe—on Sunday, if need were, master Herne Bay—and on Monday Morning be in a condition for any fresh start that might be necessary—though I really hope we could establish ourselves, prospectively, somewhere on this coast.

Consider of your arrangements, and tell me, as aforesaid, suppoging I write back by return to say "done", could you meet me at Folkestone on Saturday?

I have not the least idea of the domiciliary advantages of the place (there may be none) but I know the place itself to be a good one, and most accessible. And we ought to look at it.

Answer, as like a man of business as may be. Ahem!

There never was such a day as this is, here. I am still of opinion that Broadstairs beats all watering places into what the Americans call "sky-blue fits". Ballards[†1] contradictory habit has settled itself down into incurable madness. I can advance no proposition whatever, that he will assent to. He lays traps for me. He says things that seem invitations and lures to certain replies—and when I make those replies, contradicts me dead. I praised his little girls today, and he shook his head and said "You should see the boy Sir"—

There is no Shower Bath like the Demon.[†2] That is my creed. There is but one sea, and the Demon is its showerer.[†3] Barnes[†4] is several degrees more offensive than ever. Miss Collin,[†5] having drunk more Vinegar in the recess, is tighter in the waist, and her gowns have washed out a little more, and look like the things that are put on when you have your hair cut. No other news.

Kate and Georgy (who will leave me to go en garçon on our voyage of discovery) unite in love to Mrs. Leech. I send something as near mine as you may think proper.

Ever My Dear Leech | Faithfully Yrs.

CD.

To F. M. EVANS, 10 JULY 1849

MS Dickens House.

Albion Hotel Broadstairs | Tuesday Tenth July 1849.

My Dear Evans

I send you, by this Post, 9 Slips of copy, containing Mr. Browne's second subject.[†6] Get it up with all speed, and send a proof to him (to whom I now write) and another to me, that I may know exactly where I am, which is important to the construction of the No.

In great haste | Ever Yours

CD.

To H. K. BROWNE, [10 JULY 1849]

Mention in last.

To JOHN FORSTER, [10 JULY 1849]

Summary and extract in F, VI, iii, 497. Date: 10 July according to Forster.

Telling Forster that in accordance with the plan they had discussed he had introduced a great part of his MS[†1] into the fourth number of Copperfield. I really think I have done it ingeniously, and with a very complicated interweaving of truth and fiction.[†2] Vous verrez. I am getting on like a house afire in point of health, and ditto ditto in point of number.

To C. R. LESLIE, 10 JULY 1849

Extract in T. F. Madigan catalogue (n.d. but c. 1930); MS 1 p.; dated Broadstairs, 10 July 49; addressed Charles R. Leslie.

I came down here on Sunday, not being very well, and remain a week. Otherwise I should have had the greatest pleasure in coming to you tomorrow. So would Kate and her sister, if they were not with me and sending kind remembrance to all your house at this instant.

To THE EDITOR OF THE DAILY NEWS, [11 JULY 1849]

Text in F, VI, vi, 532-3. Date: 11 July 49 according to Forster.

I have no other interest in, or concern with, a most facetious article on last Saturday's dinner at the Mansion-house,[†3] which appeared in your paper of yesterday, and found its way here to-day, than that it misrepresents me in what I said on the occasion.[†1] If you should not think it at all damaging to the wit of that satire to state what I did say,[†2] I shall be much obliged to you. It was this . . . That I considered the compliment of a recognition of Literature by the citizens of London the more acceptable to us because it was unusual in that hall, and likely to be an advantage and benefit to them in proportion as it became in future less unusual. That, on behalf of the novelists, I accepted the tribute as an appropriate one; inasmuch as we had sometimes reason to hope that our imaginary worlds afforded an occasional refuge to men busily engaged in the toils of life, from which they came forth none the worse to a renewal of its strivings; and certainly that the chief magistrate of the greatest city in the world might be fitly regarded as the representative of that class of our readers.†3

To JOHN FORSTER, [11 JULY 1849]

Summary in F, VI, vi, 532. Date: no doubt written same day as last.

Asking Forster to forward last letter to the Editor of the Daily News.

To [?MISS BERTHA WIGHT], 11 JULY 1849

Mention in next. Address: Bertha Wight seems the most likely recipient of the donation; see To Miss Coutts, 6 July.

Sending a donation of £5 on behalf of Miss Coutts.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 11 JULY 1849*

MS Morgan Library.

Albion Hotel, Broadstairs. | Wednesday Eleventh July 1849.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I received your kind gift of £5 safely, this morning. In remitting it to that most unfortunate lady,†4 I have hinted afar off at the hopelessness of her doing anything lasting, here.†5

I am happy to say I am quite well, and hope to report myself personally in Stratton Street, early next week.

A variety of adventures are in preparation†1 for you and Mrs. Brown this month, which I hope will only make you moderately poorly.†2

Dear Miss Coutts | Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?12 JULY 1849]

Extract in F, VI, iii, 497-8 n. Date: 13 July according to Forster; but almost certainly written on the 12th, the same day as next, before he had changed his plans.

About Saturday sir?†3—Why sir, I'm a-going to Folkestone a Saturday sir!—not on accounts of the manifacktring of Bengal cheroots as there is there but for the survayin' o' the coast sir. 'Cos, you see sir, bein' here sir, and not a finishin' my work sir till to-morrow sir, I couldn't go afore! And if I wos to come home, and not go, and come back agin sir, wy it would be nat'rally a hulloxing of myself sir. Yes sir. Wy sir, I b'lieve that the gent as is a goin' to 'stablish hisself sir, in the autumn, along with me round the corner sir (by Drummins's-s-s-s-s-s bank) is a comin' down to Folkestone Saturday arternoon—Leech by name sir—yes sir—another Jack sir—and if you wos to come down along with him sir by the train as gits to Folkestone twenty minutes arter five, you'd find me a smoking a Bengal cheroot (made of clover-chaff and horse-beans sir) on the platform. You couldn't spend your arternoon better sir. Dover, Sandgate, Herne Bay—they're all to be wisited sir, most probable, till sich times as a 'ouse is found sir. Yes sir. Then decide to come sir, and say you will, and do it. I shall be here till arter post time Saturday mornin' sir. Come on then! Sloppy

His X mark.

To JOHN LEECH, 12 JULY 1849

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: John Leech Esquire | 31 Notting Hill Terrace | Notting Hill | London.

Albion Hotel, Broadstairs | Thursday Twelfth July 1849.

My Dear Leech.

Done, to the Train that arrives at Folkestone, at 20 minutes past 5, on Saturday. I will be (please God) on the platform to receive you, and will have ordered dinner for 6—but not beds—in case we should take it into our heads to go elsewhere.

Best loves and regards | Ever Faithfully

CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [13 JULY 1849]

Extract in F, VI, iii, 498. Date: 15 July according to Forster, but clearly written on the 13th, as next.

I propose returning to town to-morrow by the boat from Ramsgate, and going off to Weymouth or the Isle of Wight, or both, early the next morning.

To JOHN LEECH, 13 JULY 1849

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: Immediate[†1] | John Leech Esquire | 31 Notting Hill Terrace | Notting Hill | London.

Broadstairs | Friday Evening | Thirteenth July 1849

My Dear Leech

No no no—dont come to Folkestone tomorrow—strike, but hear me.[†2]

I have only this moment heard, from some people here who have been there, that Folkestone wont do; that there is neither house room nor bathing. And the objections to the other little places near it we already know from Miss Coutts.

What I propose, therefore, is, that we start together from London at 9 on Sunday Morning, either for Weymouth in Dorsetshire, which I understand is a noble place—or for the Isle of Wight (which is on the same line)[†3] or for both—if need be. I will come up tomorrow by the Duchess of Kent boat, which leaves Ramsgate at 10. If I should find you waiting at London Bridge Wharf, we will go and dine somewhere together. If I should not find you there, I shall expect you at Devonshire Terrace in the evening, to arrange for our next morning's flight.

This will save a waste, both of time and money.

Ever Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN VAN VOORST,[†4] [JULY 1849]

Mention in To Horne, 28 July. Date: probably not long after 6 July, when Chapman declined Horne's The Poor Artist.

Offering him Horne's The Poor Artist for publication.[†5]

To MRS CHARLES DICKENS, 16 [JULY] 1849

MS British Museum. Date: misdated June by CD; PM 16 July 49. Address: Prepaid | Mrs. Charles Dickens | 1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park | London.

Shanklin, Isle of Wight
Monday Night Sixteenth June 1849

My Dear Kate.

I have but a moment—Just got back, and post going out. I have taken a most delightful and beautiful house belonging to White, at Bonchurch[†1]—cool, airy, private bathing, everything delicious—I think it is the prettiest place I ever saw in my life, at home or abroad.[†2] Anne may begin to dismantle Devonshire Terrace. I have arranged for carriages, luggage, and everything.[†3] We shall be home, most probably tomorrow night. If I don't get back before John goes to bed, tell him to leave the Iron gate open, that I may be able to ring him up. If anything should occur to detain us until Wednesday, you will not be alarmed. Best loves to Georgy and the children.

The man with the postbag is swearing in the passage.

Ever affecy.
CD.

A waterfall on the grounds, which I have arranged with a carpenter to convert into a perpetual shower bath.

To THOMAS BEARD, 18 JULY 1849

MS Dickens House.

Devonshire Terrace. | Wednesday Eighteenth July 1849

My Dear Mus'r Beard.

I came to town last night, and immediately dispatch my report.

Behold my address from Monday next, until the end of September

Inimitable B.
Winterbourne Villa
Bonchurch
Isle of Wight
! ! ! ! ! !

There is a Waterfall in the grounds which I have driven a carpenter almost mad by changing into a—

SHOWER BATH[†1]

—with a fall of 150 feet! It is really an exquisite place altogether. As to getting at it, you leave Waterloo Station at ½ past 10—get to Portsmouth at ½ past 2—cross in a steamboat, in half an hour, to Ryde, and come on, either in a stage coach or a Fly. No such scenery in England, certainly. I say no more until you come. All you have got to do, now, is to name your own time, and stay ours—which is, at the lowest, a fortnight, on a penalty of leaping, with a pole, over a bathing machine (full of children) and three horses. But you must arrange for more visits than one—and look alive.

We were dreadfully shocked, at Broadstairs, by seeing the Baldwinian Twins,[†2] whom I have taken the liberty of calling

The Measeliese Twins

—as opposed to the Siamese.[†3] Oh the apparent age of those young Codgers! They were on the sands, in the blue stage of rickets, with their small noses very red, and pinched up sharp at the ends. They slobbered as they dangled over the nurse's shoulder, and, feebly crooning, looked out to sea, as if they were expecting the Marine Goblins who had changed them at their birth, to come and fetch them away to bowers of slime and seaweed. It was a dreadful spectacle—with a vague smell of cheese about it—and one I never can forget.

Ever Heartily
CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS S. C. HALL,[†4] 18 JULY 1849

MS Berg Collection.

Devonshire Terrace | Wednesday Eighteenth July 1849.

My Dear Mrs. Hall.

I have been out of town until last night, or I should have written to you sooner, to tell you that your present made me laugh heartily (you cannot conceive the ridiculous gravity with which I opened the box before I knew its contents) and that I am very much obliged to Hall[†5] for his good natured and exact remembrance of my wishes. I think I should have come down[†6] to say so, but that we are going to Bonchurch on Monday, for ten weeks, and I am over head and ears, clearing off a few hundred letters in reply to a few hundred people who have written to me on various subjects, taking a wide range between nothing at all, and proposals from elderly ladies in Wales that I will set their sons up in business in various parts of the world.

I have received a letter from Mrs. Seymour,[†1] the widow of Seymour the artist, of a perfectly mad character—extraordinarily insulting[†2]—and containing various statements about the origin of Pickwick, which are utterly false from beginning to end.[†3] Among a number of people she names, of whom I know nothing,[†4] and a rambling account she gives of circumstances I am supposed to know, of which I never heard, she mentions, as friends who have been kind to her, yourself and Hall.[†5] Now, although I believe very confidently that neither of you would suppose me to be guilty of a meanness or injustice, I am sufficiently impressed by the audacious character of this woman's assertions to desire, that if you really have been in communication with her, you should know what kind of person she is, in reference to that little essential of life which we call Truth. And if it will not bore you to read two letters, I should be glad to send you what she has written to me, and what Mr. Chapman the bookseller has also written to me,[†6] on my sending him her letter with these words "Be good enough to inform me whether you are as much surprized as I have been, by the enclosed communication, and whether there is any truth in it"?

Shall I send you the two letters?

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. S. C. Hall.

To MRS SEYMOUR, [?JULY 1849]

Mention in Mrs Seymour's Account of the "Pickwick Papers", privately printed, c. 1854 (reprinted in W. Miller and E. H. Strange, A Centenary Bibliography of the Pickwick Papers, p. 198). Date: in reply to Mrs Seymour's letter, referred to in last.

Saying that Mrs Seymour's account of his connexion with her husband was untrue, and declining to have any further connexion with her.[†1]

To F. M. EVANS, 19 JULY 1849*

MS Dickens House.

Devonshire Terrace | Nineteenth July 1849.

My Dear Evans.

I want a hundred pounds to be paid into Coutts's, if you can achieve that performance. If convenient, I shall be much obliged to you to do this at once.

I enclose a few heads for Mr. Joyce,[†2] concerning a weekly visit he will receive, during my absence from town, from Topping.

My address, from Monday until the end of September, will be

Winterbourne Villa
Bonchurch
Isle of Wight.

If you should ever feel inclined (as I think you will) to run away on a holiday, and will come to the aforesaid address, you shall receive a very hearty welcome, and see a very beautiful place. "A favorable opportunity now offers", as Mr. Pecksniff used to say in his advertisements,[†1] and I hope you'll not neglect it.

I don't know what the Devil is the matter with your people, in connexion with my Manuscript, but nothing between folio 10 and folio 24 of the last No. is returned. Will you get the missing portion for me, and relieve my mind by blowing up somebody?

I think this is all I have to say at present.

Faithfully Ever
CHARLES DICKENS

Have you heard from Bradbury?

To J. A. WIDGER, 19 JULY 1849

Envelope only, MS Yale University Library. Address: Mr. J. A. Widger | Upholsterer | Kennington Common | Surrey. PM JY 19 1849.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 20 JULY 1849*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Twentieth July 1849.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I send you a copy of the prescription for Dr. Southwood Smith's pill, which I know to be an excellent medicine to keep in the house.[†2] It is to be taken on the occurrence of any symptoms that appear, as Shakespeare says, "new-hatch'd to the woeful time".[†3]

He gave it to me himself, and my private opinion is, in the usual language of the advertisements, that "no family should be without it"—especially a family under those mephitic[†4] Shepherd's Bush circumstances.

Faithfully Yours ever
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 21 JULY 1849

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty First July 1849.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

When Mrs. Goldsmith wrote that honorable letter about the money which you so generously sent her,[†5] I told her that if anything could ever be done for any of her children by speaking to any one on her behalf, and she would tell me so, I would try my best to help to do it. Yesterday she wrote, emboldened by this, as follows:

"I most cordially desire to get our son William Burgess (who is now in the Royal Hospital School, Greenwich) into the Royal Naval School, New Cross,[†1] on the reduced or gratuitous list, as the instruction in this school is much superior to Greenwich. I inclose an abstract of the relative services of my husband's and my own family, to prove that we have some claim on the privileges of this excellent Institution."

That abstract, I send you with this.

"Or", she adds, "if we could succeed in securing a presentation to Christ's Hospital, for either of our younger boys—Hugh Colville, who was nine last February, or Edward, who will be seven next July, I believe the Travers foundation in Christ's Hospital is expressly for the sons of Lieutenants in the Royal Navy."[†2]

The last, I am afraid, is out of the question.[†3] But I have such an exalted opinion of this lady, founded upon the character her letters disclose, and the high sense of truth and honor she exhibited in that last transaction, that I venture to ask you whether, among the Powers that be, there is any one with whom you are on sufficiently friendly terms to ask the first favor from? I should conceive that it is a very slight one, and that the great name this lady bears, and her whole case altogether, would present a strong claim to any man of worth.

Will you write to me at Bonchurch?

Dear Miss Coutts | Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To THE HON. RICHARD WATSON, 21 JULY 1849

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Address: The Hon. Richard Watson | Rockingham Castle | Northamptonshire.

Devonshire Terrace. | Twenty First July 1849.

My Dear Watson.

Kate tells me that in my absence she has written to Rockingham on the Swiss question, and also on another to which I shall presently refer.

I really believe there is nothing I should like better than to go with you to Switzerland, over the pleasant old ground, and have a good obstinate contradiction of Haldimand on all possible questions. But after considering the feasibility of this delightful journey (only postponed, I sincerely hope) I became afraid, in this stage of my story, of so entirely departing from my inventive habits for a fortnight or more. If it be only half an hour's sitting alone in a morning, in my leisure part of the month, and half an hour's look at pen ink and paper, it seems to keep me in the train. And with so much before me, and the necessity always present to me of doing my best and sustaining my reputation at its highest point, I feel it better and wiser to keep near my oar. This is the exact state of the case.

But I wish to Heaven you and Mrs. Watson would come and see us at your own time, in the Isle of Wight. If you have not been there lately, I can assure you it is more beautiful than ever; and our Cottage (I believe it is the identical "humble shed" that Young Love lived in, in the song)[†1] is in a charming situation that would afford more opportunities to Mrs. Watson for sketching, than could be summed up within the limits of this sheet of paper. We have no friends we should be more heartily pleased to see; and a good laugh or two, and a pleasant jaunt or two (both in the Swiss manner) would freshen us all up, marvellously. Now, do consider of this, and we will have a return-match at Rockingham in the winter. By way of Portsmouth and Ryde, it is a journey of not more than eight hours. And I should bring you, from Shanklin, by a path across the fields (sending those boxes on by the road) that is more like the shore of the Mediterranean than anything under these dull skies.

I shall look for your answer, with a mixture of confidence and defiance, until I find it is the right one.[†2]

Disgust with that detestable nation the French,[†3] and admiration of Mazzini[†4] and his friends, have divided my thoughts for the last three months. I am very anxious Mazzini should come home and not get into danger,[†5] for the world cannot well afford to lose such men. Our friends the Whigs have not improved much, since we last talked about them—have they?[†6] Talfourd is in a state of deep anxiety about the vacant judgeship,[†1] and I fear won't get it.[†2] Everybody else wants everything and gets nothing—which seems to me to be an expressive summary of the House of Commons. There has been a kind of grim imbecility and gouty Chesterfieldianity about Ld. Lansdowne this year, remarkable to behold.[†3] It delights me that D'Israeli has done such justice to his conscience-less self, in regard of the Jews.[†4] Kate and Georgina send their loves to Mrs. Watson. I, mine, if I may. Ever my Dear Watson

Faithfully Yours—

CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?LATE JULY 1849]

Extract in F, VI, iii, 498. Date: in "his first Bonchurch letter", according to Forster; he began his stay there on 21 July, and wrote again to Forster on the 28th.

He is excellent, but she is better.[†5]

To MR MARSHALL,[†1] [?JULY 1849]

Mention in To Fowler, 27 July 49.

To G. LINNÆUS BANKS,[†2] 27 JULY 1849*

MS Manchester Central Library.

Bonchurch, Isle of Wight | Twenty Seventh July 1849.

My Dear Sir

I shall be very happy to become a Subscriber for a copy of your book,[†3] which Messrs. Bradbury and Evans 11 Bouverie Street, will receive, when published, and pay for. As I believe it will be a book I shall desire to read often, be so kind as to set me down for one of the bound copies.

With all good wishes, | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

G. Linnæus Banks Esquire.

To MISS BROWNE,[†4] 27 JULY 1849*

MS New York University Library.

Bonchurch, Isle of Wight | Twenty Seventh July 1849.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Miss Browne, and begs to thank her sincerely for her extremely pretty gift. He is very proud of that mark of her remembrance, and assures her that he accepts it with the utmost pleasure.

To JOHN FOWLER, 27 JULY 1849*

MS Mrs Reggiori. Address: John Fowler Esquire | Athenæum and Mechanics Institute | Sheffield.

Bonchurch, Isle of Wight | Twenty Seventh July 1849

Dear Sir

Your note has been forwarded to me here, where I am passing the summer.

I very much regret that I cannot accept the invitation to which you refer. But, for reasons I have assigned in my note to Mr. Marshall, I cannot have that satisfaction and pleasure.

Faithfully yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Fowler Esquire

To HENRY AUSTIN, 28 JULY 1849*

MS Morgan Library.

Winterbourne, Bonchurch, Isle of Wight.
Sunday Twenty Eighth July 1849.

My Dear Henry

Between work, and walks, and answering all sorts of letters from all sorts of unknown people about every variety of Nothing, I am not a first-rate correspondent. But I write to say that I shall be glad to hear when there is any change in the aspect of the "Tunnel scheme".[†1] Also to report that we have a very pretty cottage here in a perfectly lovely place, and that if you and Letitia intend to make holiday at any time between this and the end of September, we shall be delighted to receive you. Every morning until 2 or so, you could do any work you had—Invisibility being the Inimitable's law of necessity, from breakfast until that stage of the day.

Kate and Georgy unite in loves.

Ever affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

Henry Austin Esquire.

To WILLIAM BRADBURY, 28 JULY 1849

MS Dickens House.

Winterbourne, Bonchurch, Isle of Wight.
Twenty Eighth July 1849.

My Dear Bradbury.

I received your letter here, this morning, and cannot forbear writing by return of post to congratulate you on your "jolly good health". I am perfectly delighted to find you in such good spirits, and getting into such tiptop condition. We will get into such harness one of these days, please God, in connexion with that long-deferred-but-never-sufficiently-to-be-considered-and-never-to-be-approached-though-not-yet-planned-or-named Periodical[†2] as shall carry us to Chambers-like[†1] profits at a hand gallop. I won't say how long I intend to give you to grow into full business feather, but it's clear to me you are fledging fast.

We have taken a very pretty cottage here until the end of September. Leech and his wife live close by. A friend of mine is the Lord of the Manor,[†2] and we have made all visitors in search of the Picturesque, mad, by putting up an immense wooden caravan on the Beach, to shut in a noble waterfall and convert it into with some five hundred[†3] feet of Fall. Which we take, every morning, to the unbounded astonishment of the aboriginal inhabitants.

A Shower Bath!

Mrs. Dickens and Miss Hogarth unite in best regards to you and Mrs. Bradbury. I shall drink confusion to all the complaints you are coming out of, this day at dinner.

Once again let me heartily congratulate you.

Faithfully Your friend
CHARLES DICKENS

William Bradbury Esquire.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, [LATE JULY 1849]

Mention in next.

To JOHN FORSTER, [28 JULY 1849]

Extract in F, VI, iii, 499. Date: 28 July according to Forster.

From the top of the highest downs, there are views which are only to be equalled on the Genoese shore of the Mediterranean; the variety of walks is extraordinary; the things are cheap, and everybody is civil. The waterfall acts wonderfully, and the sea bathing is delicious. Best of all, the place is certainly cold rather than hot, in the summer time. The evenings have been even chilly. White very jovial,[†4] and emulous of the inimitable in respect of gin-punch. He had made some for our arrival. Ha! ha! not bad for a beginner. . . . I have been, and am, trying to work this morning; but I can't make anything of it, and am going out to think. I am invited by a distinguished friend[†5] to dine with you on the 1st of August, but I have pleaded distance and the being resident in a cave on the sea shore; my food, beans; my drink, the water from the rock.[†1] . . . I must pluck up heart of grace to write to Jeffrey,[†2] of whom I had but poor accounts from Gordon just before leaving.[†3] Talfourd delightful, and amuses me mightily.[†4] I am really quite enraptured at his success, and think of his happiness[†5] with uncommon pleasure.

To R. H. HORNE, 28 JULY 1849*

MS Morgan Library. Address: R. H. Horne Esquire | Fallow Lodge | Finchley | near London.
Endorsed by Horne: "With a copy of note from me for Van Voorst to see".

Winterbourne, Bonchurch, I of Wight
Sunday Twenty Eighth July 1849.

My Dear Horne.

Mr. Van Voorst writes—"I will venture on the publication of the Manuscript by Mr. Horne"—he had previously asked, after reading it, if I objected to confide to him the author's name—"provided he will make the alteration suggested"—which I have already hinted to you—"and accept fifty pounds for the copyright and for seeing it through the press".

Or, he proposes half profits.

Will you accept the first proposal? Write to me here at once, and I will close the business.

I got at him through Forster, who had been able, I remembered, to call attention to some good books of his.[†6] I thought it best, in asking Forster for an introduction to him, to shew him (Forster) the Manuscript. And when I wrote my opinion of it to Mr. Van Voorst, Forster wrote his, also.[†1] Which was in effect mine—and yours.

This is all right, I hope? I need not say that you do not stand committed to any acceptance of Mr. Van Voorst's offer, in the event of your wishing to decline it.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

R. H. Horne Esquire.

To JOHN LEECH, 31 JULY 1849

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: John Leech Esquire.

Winterbourne | Tuesday Thirty First July 1849.

My Dear Leech.

I feel incapable this morning, and if you are for a walk to Black Gang[†2] before dinner, will be ready at 12. What do you say?

Ever Faithfully
CD.

I send you Copperfield.[†3]

To T. N. TALFOURD, 31 JULY 1849

Extract in Maggs catalogue No. 258 (1910); MS 1 ½ pp.; dated Bonchurch, 31 July 49.

Inviting Talfourd to visit him and continuing: This morning's post brought me a letter from Jeffrey,[†4] who, I fear is very ill, and certainly thinks himself dying. But I hope he may not be so bad as he thinks himself to be.

August

To JOHN FORSTER, [1 AUGUST 1849]

Extract in F, VI, iii, 499. Date: 1 Aug according to Forster.

I have just begun to get into work. We are expecting the Queen to come by very soon, in grand array,[†1] and are going to let off ever so many guns. I had a letter from Jeffrey yesterday morning, just as I was going to write to him. He has evidently been very ill, and I begin to have fears for his recovery. It is a very pathetic letter, as to his state of mind; but only in a tranquil contemplation of death, which I think very noble.[†2]

To MRS MILNER GIBSON, 3 AUGUST 1849*

MS Trinity College, Cambridge.

Winterbourne, Bonchurch. | Friday Third August 1849.

My Dear Mrs. Gibson.

I am happy to send you, enclosed, my mite[†3] towards the relief of those brave men[†4] who have resisted a despicable nation in one of the most detestable and damnable (you'll excuse the word) attempts, that ever were recorded.[†5]

If I were richer, it should be more.

Kate and Georgy send you their best loves. Do you bathe at Hampstead? Or sail at all?

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To FRANÇOIS REGNIER, 4 AUGUST 1849

MS Comédie Française.

Winterbourne, Bonchurch, Isle of Wight. | Aoüt 4, 1849.

Mon cher Regnier

Je suis desolé d'avoir reçu de Poole, les nouvelles affligeantes de votre triste calamité.[†1] Je ne vous ecris[†2] pas, pour vous consoler, parceque je suis sensible qu'il faut laisser votre consolation a la main de Temps et a la bonté de Dieu. Mais, reçevez je vous prie, mon ami, l'assurance de ma sympathie la plus profonde, et de mon amitie la plus sincère; et croyez que vous[†3] amis en Angleterre partagent avec vous (autant que c'est possible) votre affliction et vos regrets.

Que le temps ne soit pas eloigné quand les souvenirs de votre fille, si jeune, si belle, si chere, dechargeé pour jamais des troubles et des tristesses de la terre, et heureuse pour jamais dans la societé des Anges de Dieu, deviendront votre soulagement ici, et votre esperance dans l'avenir!

Ma femme et sa soeur, envoient mille amities à vous, et à Madame Regnier. Et je reste toujours

Mon cher Regnier | Votre tout devoué
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [4-5 AUGUST 1849]

Summary and extract in F, VI, iii, 499. Date: 5 Aug according to Forster; but begun on the 4th, before receiving Poole's letter about Regnier's loss.

Describing himself as still at work; but also as taking part in dinners at Blackgang, and picnics of tremendous success on Shanklin Down.

Two charity sermons for the school are preached to-day,[†4] and I go to the afternoon one. The examination of said school t'other day was very funny. All the boys made Buckstone's bow in the Rough Diamond,[†5] and some in a very wonderful manner recited pieces of poetry, about a clock, and may we be like the clock, which is always a going and a doing of its duty, and always tells the truth (supposing it to be a slap-up chronometer I presume, for the American clock in the school was lying frightfully at that moment); and after being bothered to death by the multiplication table, they were refreshed with a public tea in Lady Jane Swinburne's[†1] garden.[†2] The rain came in with the first tea-pot, and has been active ever since. On Friday we had a grand, and what is better, a very good dinner at "parson" Fielden's,[†3] with some choice port. On Tuesday we are going on another picnic; with the materials for a fire, at my express stipulation; and a great iron pot to boil potatoes in. These things, and the eatables, go to the ground in a cart.[†4] Last night we had some very good merriment at White's, where pleasant Julian Young[†5] and his wife[†6] (who are staying about five miles off) showed some droll new games[†7]—rousing his ambition to give a mighty conjuring performance for all the children in Bonchurch.[†8]

A letter from Poole has reached me since I began this letter, with tidings in it that you will be very sorry to hear. Poor Regnier has lost his only child; the pretty daughter who dined with us that nice day at your house, when we all pleased the poor mother by admiring her so much. She died of a sudden attack of malignant typhus. Poole was at the funeral, and writes that he never saw, or could have imagined, such intensity of grief as Regnier's at the grave. How one loves him for it. But is it not always true, in comedy and in tragedy, that the more real the man the more genuine the actor?

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 5 AUGUST 1849

MS Morgan Library.

Winterbourne, Bonchurch | Sunday Fifth August 1849

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I sent up to town for the enclosed list (your note reaching me here, and not in Devonshire Terrace), and only received it this morning. I allude to the list of Vice Presidents &c of the Naval School.[†1]

Along with it, I send Mr. King's opinion of Charley for the half year, and his usual Memorandum. Charley is with us, of course. He did not seem to me to look at all well when we came down, and had a sort of faded air about him that made me think of taking him back again, for medical advice. But I think the place, and the being constantly in the open air, have done him a great deal of good. We have also discovered a small poney in the neighbourhood, which carries him about the Downs, very much to the improvement of his looks.

As I am at work on Copperfield, and the going and coming between this and London is a work of time, I shall not come up to the next Committee; supposing (as I hear nothing from Shepherds Bush) that everything is going on well. Have you had any conversation with Mrs. Morson about that unlucky Drain, which has resulted in her not writing to me, after seeing a workman on the subject, as I arranged with her that she should? I have been expecting, every day, to receive a letter from her, and cannot understand (except on this supposition) why she has not done as we distinctly arranged. I am very uneasy about its remaining in its present state (it is so extremely dangerous to health) if anything reasonable can be done with it.

I hope the troublesome affairs which keep you in town, may be progressing as favorably as such affairs ever can or do. I hope too that Mrs. Brown's "temper" is better, in respect of that monthly trial to which it is unhappily subjected.[†2]

It is delightful here, though rather cold. You will be sorry to learn, for I think you know and like him, that I had a letter from Jeffrey the day before yesterday, in which his description of his present state of health is such that I fear he will live but a short time longer. I have the greatest affection for him; and if I should receive any confirmation or aggravation of this account, should go away to Edinburgh, if it were only for an hour, to see him once more.

Is there any intelligence of any of our emigrants?[†3]

Dear Miss Coutts | Ever Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

I find that Charley's documents have a most unaccountable smell of Medicine about them, which I hope will evaporate in the Post office.

To THE REV. F. B. DANBY,[†1] 5 AUGUST 1849

Mention in Anderson Galleries catalogue No. 1709 (1923); MS 2 pp.; dated Winterbourne, 5 Aug 49.

To JOHN FORSTER, [EARLY AUGUST 1849]

Extract and summary in F, VI, iii, 500. Date: "a few days" after letter of 5 Aug according to Forster.

I have made it a rule that the inimitable is invisible, until two every day. I shall have half the number done, please God, to-morrow. I have not worked quickly here yet, but I don't know what I may do. Divers cogitations have occupied my mind at intervals, respecting the dim design.[†2]

Telling Forster of discomfort in his health; of an obstinate cough; and of his determination to mount daily to the top of the downs.

It makes a great difference in the climate to get a blow there and come down again.

To THE REV. G. F. HILL,[†3] 9 AUGUST 1849*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: The Reverend George Frederick Hill | Norwich.

Bonchurch, Isle of Wight. | Ninth August 1849.

Dear Sir

I am extremely obliged to you for your kind letter,[†4] which has been forwarded to me here, this morning, and which I hasten to acknowledge the receipt of, and to thank you for.

The information you give me as to the provincialisms, I have no doubt I shall find useful. The term "flats", is not used, I think, as any part of the local vernacular,[†1] but to explain to those who do not belong to that part of England, a general aspect of country which would hardly be understood if described by any other term. What we call "sands", here, for example, or in Kent, or Sussex, is something very unlike the great wild level at Yarmouth.[†2]

I am Dear Sir | Yours faithfully and obliged

CHARLES DICKENS

The Reverend George Frederick Hill.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 12 AUGUST 1849

MS Morgan Library.

Bonchurch, Isle of Wight | Twelfth August 1849.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

Very many thanks on Charley's behalf. He has quite recovered his good looks, I am happy to say, and is climbing about the whole neighbourhood all day long.

I am not guilty of the cherries. But I am so fond of that place,[†3] that I almost wish I were. It will be quite an event in my life to see it from the inside after knowing it, outside, so long. Let me congratulate you on getting at last into your present Selkirkian[†4] position in reference to it.

I think with you about the Cape,[†5] and hold that nothing could be better or more to the purpose than the Bishop's letter[†6] (enclosed).[†7] The letter from the girls[†1] (also enclosed) looks very well indeed.

I am sorry, but not surprised, to hear of Isabella Gordon. I should have come to town on Tuesday, but for my friend David, who has a tight hold upon me at this distance, but will release it for the month (I hope) next day. Will you ask Mrs. Morson, if she be expelled, to write and tell me exactly how she goes away. I have a particular reason, as a point of experience, for asking this, and for hoping that she will observe her behaviour particularly.

By a letter I have received from Mr. Tracey this morning, I learn that he has a case of which he thinks very well, and which he is anxious we should take.[†2] I have written back to inform him that we shall be glad to receive the girl on his recommendation. Her term of imprisonment has expired, and she is now "staying back", with a view to the Home. I have also begged him, as Isabella Gordon came from his Prison, to attend on Tuesday if he possibly can.

I cannot recollect the exact pedigree of Mrs. Goldsmith's family, in connexion with our dear friend.[†3] My impression, is, however, that her husband is the Grandson of the brother[†4] to whom he dedicated the deserted Village.[†5] But I have written home for a letter, in which the fact is stated—shall receive it here on Tuesday Morning—and will write to you again, on Tuesday Night.

The only point I should be particularly careful about, if I were at the Committee on Tuesday, would be to ascertain beyond all question that the charge against Isabella Gordon is an undoubted matter of fact, and does not originate in any league against her.[†6]

Dear Miss Coutts | Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To R. H. HORNE, 12 AUGUST 1849

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel.

Bonchurch, Sunday 12th August 1849.

My Dear Horne.[†7]

I do not think the reappearance of the Seven Seers,[†8] is the thing wanted—though I am not sure that what is wanted in the way of working it round, might not be accomplished by the agency of the Bee.[†9] But my idea, is, that instead of his exhibiting those Sketches taken from the insects' descriptions,[†10] certain human experiences should be brought to bear upon some other work or works of his, which would present the same idea, in analogy, and in its reference to men, strongly to the reader. I would have it beaten into them that there are vast differences in the eyesights of men—that different grades of men view the same thing from different points, and that there is a moral for our consideration in the very truths of science out of which your romance comes.[†1] The lawyer, the physician, the butcher,[†2] &c &c couldn't they all come and look at some picture of his, and all differ about it for different reasons—and yet with a plain likeness to the bee, the cat, the fish, and so forth?[†3] And couldn't the painting of something that man never saw (according to the old Uncle)[†4] be the painting of something that no number of men had ever seen in the same point of view.

I am writing in a hurry to save the post, and am not sure that I express myself clearly to you, though I do so to myself. Do you understand me?

Then, the love part must be more pleasantly and rapturously disposed of—for all sorts and conditions of people would object to your slighting it, after that pretty introduction, whatever they thought about it themselves. I have no doubt of that.[†5]

And that note about the Cat and the Mouse, I would certainly omit, as being founded on no better evidence than the gigantic gooseberries that roll, every fruit-season, through the newspapers.[†6]

Let me hear from you on the main point.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

R. H. Horne Esquire.

To JOHN THOMPSON, 12 AUGUST 1849

Extract in N, II, 168 (from catalogue source); dated Bonchurch, 12 Aug 49.

John,

Ask Anne to make up Miss Hogarth's bed, on the chance of my coming to Town tomorrow (Saturday) night.

If I come at all, of which I am not quite sure, I shall send my carpet bag home before me. In case you receive it, you will know I am coming, and will then sit up until I arrive.

To JOHN FORSTER, [AUGUST 1849]

Summary and extract in F, VI, iii, 500. Date: probably soon after he first told Forster of his cough in early Aug.

Telling Forster of the doctor stethoscoping him,[†1] of his hope that all was right in that quarter, and of rubbings à la St. John Long[†2] being ordered for his chest.

To BERNHARD TAUCHNITZ, [?AUGUST 1849]

Mention in To Evans, 13 Sep 49. Date: probably shortly before beginning the number.

Promising to send him the proofs of Copperfield No. VI as soon as they were ready.[†3]

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 15 AUGUST 1849

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street | Piccadilly | London.

Winterbourne, Bonchurch | Fifteenth August 1849.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

Many thanks for your note. I answer it hastily, with the postman in waiting.

If I come to town at all before I return for good, I shall hope to be initiated into the beauties of Holly Lodge. But ever since I have been here, I have been quite unwell with a monstrous cold, which has now resolved itself (for a change) into a cough like "the faithful watch-dog's honest bark".†4

Mrs. Goldsmith's husband is the Grandson of the brother to whom he dedicated the Traveller. My mind misgives me that I said "deserted Village" the other day. He is the Grandson of the identical clergyman "passing rich with forty pounds a year",†1 whom Oliver admired and loved.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

I am all in suspense about the wretched Isabella Gordon.

To JOHN FORSTER, [AUGUST 1849]

Extract in F, VI, iii, 500-1. Date: probably the week following the treatment for his cough.

There has been a Doctor Lankester†2 at Sandown, a very good merry fellow, who has made one at the picnics, and whom I went over and dined with, along with Danby (I remember your liking for Danby, and don't wonder at it), Leech, and White.

To EDMUND FRY, 16 AUGUST 1849†3

Mention in Libbie & Co. catalogue, May 1894; MS 1 p.; dated Bonchurch, 16 Aug 49.

Declining to join the "Peace Congress".†4

To T. N. TALFOURD, [17] AUGUST 1849

Mention in J. W. Jarvis & Son "Dickens Catalogue", 1884; MS 1 p. Date: misdated 16 Aug 49 by CD; correct date 17th (To Talfourd, 19 Aug).

To JOHN FORSTER, [AUGUST 1849]

Extract in F, VI, iii, 501. Date: "towards the close of August", according to Forster; Talfourd came on Tues 21st (To Talfourd, 19 Aug); CD was probably writing on the 17th or 18th.

We had games and forfeits last night at White's. Davy Roberts's pretty little daughter[†1] is there for a week, with her husband,[†2] Bicknell's[†3] son. There was a dinner first to say goodbye to Danby, who goes to other clergyman's[†4]—duty, and we were very merry. Mrs. White unchanging; White comically various in his moods. Talfourd comes down next Tuesday, and we think of going over to Ryde on Monday, visiting the play,[†5] sleeping there (I don't mean at the play), and bringing the Judge back. Browne is coming down when he has done his month's work. Should you like to go to Alum Bay[†6] while you are here? It would involve a night out, but I think would be very pleasant; and if you think so too, I will arrange it sub rosâ, so that we may not be, like Bobadil, "oppressed by numbers."[†7] I mean to take a fly over from Shanklin to meet you at Ryde; so that we can walk back from Shanklin over the landslip, where the scenery is wonderfully beautiful. Stone and Egg are coming next month, and we hope to see Jerrold before we go.

To T. N. TALFOURD, 19 AUGUST 1849*

MS Dartmouth College, New Hampshire.

Bonchurch | Sunday Nineteenth August | 1849.

My Dear Talfourd

Many thanks for your kind letter. I feel penitent for having given you the trouble to write it.

I was perfectly sure that there was such a rule among the Judges[†8]—and sometime ago, when White asked me, through Forster,[†9] if I would speak to Lord Denman about the matter, I positively declined. You know how these things are forced upon one. He came in red hot on the day of my note (which ought to have been dated the 17th.) and was sitting by, when I wrote. I made that allusion to Lord Denman, really to be spared—if I could manage it—the pain of another refusal [†a]on my part.[†a] I was perfectly certain that you could do nothing in the matter.

At Ryde on Tuesday![†1]—I am afraid you will have to return to town on Thursday Evening.

Ever Faithfully Yours

CD.

To THOMAS BEARD, 20 AUGUST 1849

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | Office of "The Morning Herald" | Shoe Lane | London.

Bonchurch, Isle of Wight. | Twentieth August 1849.

To the Editor of The Morning Herald

Sir.

Knowing the extent of your acquaintance with sporting subjects, I make no apology for asking you the following question.

Can you (or any of your numerous correspondents) inform me of the date of birth of the lively young colt, Holiday, got by Beard out of Baldwin?

Your obedient Servant
Flaster Floby.[†2]

To JOHN FORSTER, [22 AUGUST 1849]

Extract in F, VI, ii, 503. Date: 22 Aug according to Forster.

Your suggestion is perfectly wise and sound. I have acted on it.[†1] I have also, instead of the bull and china-shop delusion,[†2] given Dick the idea, that, when the head of king Charles the First was cut off, some of the trouble was taken out of it, and put into his (Dick's).[†3]

To FRANK STONE, 22 AUGUST 1849*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Bonchurch. | Wednesday Twenty Second August | 1849.

My Dear Stone

I will certainly do my best with the Refugee Statement.[†4] I cannot absolutely promise to write it tomorrow, for Talfourd is here, and (besides) I must have leisure to lash myself into a state of indignation. But I will do it at once, and send it to you; and you may rely upon its being, at least, earnest, and having a drop of heart's blood in it.

We shall be delighted to see you and Egg. Will you let us know beforehand, when you both conveniently can, on what day you purpose coming? For in this outlandish place, Beds need to be arranged for. I am sure you will like it, and I think you will be surprised by the scenery. N.B. Nobody is allowed to come for a shorter term than a fortnight.

The Chuzzlewit notion,[†5] I think excellent.

Affectionately Ever
CD.

To HENRY AUSTIN, 26 AUGUST 1849*

MS Morgan Library.

Winterbourne, Bonchurch | Twenty Sixth August 1849.

My Dear Henry.

We shall be delighted to receive you and Tish, as you propose. It will be perfectly convenient to us, and you could not come at a better time.

The proper train to come by, leaves Waterloo Station at ½ past 10 in the Morning. You take your ticket for Gosport. There, a Steamer will be waiting to bring you (in half an hour) to Ryde. There, a good coach will be waiting to bring you here, where you will arrive at about 6. It is usual for ladies and gentlemen to come outside; the views, as you approach this place, being beautiful.

Kate begs me to beg you to tell Tish with her love that she wishes to encumber you with a Ham (which you shall afterwards eat, for your trouble) and that our butterman has orders to send the same to your house.

Let me know on what day we are to expect you,—as we will fix our dinner hour accordingly, and I will be on the look-out for the coach.

Ever affectionately
[CHARLES DICKENS][†1]
Henry Aus[tin Esquire].[†1]

To JAMES STANSFELD,[†2] 26 AUGUST 1849

Text from N, II, 168 (from catalogue source); dated Bonchurch, Isle of Wight, 26 Aug 49.

My Dear Sir,

I can have no objection to the alterations you propose to make in the address.[†3]

There are two more, equally slight, which I should like to make. For the phrase "almost as new in Rome as Rome is old," I would substitute "new in Rome,"[†1] and for the phrase "let us remember" in reference to More [O']Ferrall,[†2] I would substitute the words "it must not be forgotten."[†3]

Will you do me the favor to see that in the printing it is carefully corrected?

Faithfully Yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To FRANK STONE, 27 AUGUST 1849*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Winterbourne, Bonchurch. | Monday Twenty Seventh August | 1849.

My Dear Stone.

It occurs to me to propose, unless you and Egg shall have finally settled your arrangements, that you defer your visit, so as to arrive here on Saturday the 15th. of September. The advantage of this arrangement would be, that it would enable us to clear off some stragglers by whom we are, and are to be, unexpectedly invaded, and would find me with my work done and wholly disengaged; which, in a place like this where there are many little trips to be made, would be a great consideration.

Not being sure that you are in town, I address a counterpart of this note to Egg, care of Frith, at Hastings—in the hope of catching one of you, that you may take counsel together. But if your plans for coming at once are concluded, pray understand most expressly and explicitly that we shall be delighted to see you now, and that I only suggest this change as the better of two good things.

Ever Affectionately

CD

Frank Stone Esquire.

To AUGUSTUS EGG, [27 AUGUST 1849]

Mention in last.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 30 AUGUST 1849

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Holly Lodge | Highgate | London.

Bonchurch Thirtieth August 1849.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

The sense of the question is so clearly stated in your letter received yesterday, that I have no doubt it will be best for Charley to go first to Eton, and then (for the professional conclusion of his education) to King's College.[†1] I know Dr. Hawtrey,[†2] who is head master at Eton. I also know (and so does Mr. King) Mr. Evans the water-color painter,[†3] who is drawing Master at Eton; who is in great repute among the other masters, and very popular with the boys.[†4] He has, for some years, been one of the Masters who receive boys in their houses; and I have no doubt that Charley will be happier and better watched in his house, than he could be at any Dame's.[†5] I should be quite at ease about him, if he could be placed there.[†1] Mr. Chitty,[†2] the special pleader, has had two sons[†3] with him, both much distinguished at Eton, and found him (I know from himself) everything that could be desired. Therefore, if you please, when I come to town, I will go down and see Dr. Hawtrey, and Mr. Evans, and ascertain every particular that we should desire to know. In the meantime I will write to Mr. King, and beg him to prepare

Charley specifically for Eton at Christmas. Mr. King has a plan of his own, about the Latin Grammar, which will have to be departed from with a view to that school.[†4]

I hope you will tell Mrs. Brown (as some claim upon her charitable consideration) that I have never forgiven my father and mother, and that my possession of those names is a secret which I had thought Tortures would never extract from me.[†5] The superscription of your letter (though delicate and kind, as all you do is—being limited to the initials) greatly shocked me, and is supposed to have affected the Postman; who looked haggard this morning.

In the matter of that unfortunate young chartist, I have done what you kindly empower me to do.[†6] I quite agree with you as to the principle of such a subscription, and must add that while I feel for many working men who are Chartists[†7] and mean no ill by it, I have no sympathy for the Amateur Members of that body.[†8] But I have no doubt that in this instance the money will do good.

I hope Isabella Gordon is justifying the clemency that has been shewn her.

With many thanks for your excellent advice, believe me Dear Miss Coutts

Ever Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To W. C. MACREADY, 30 AUGUST 1849*

MS Morgan Library.

Bonchurch | Thirtieth August 1849.

My Dear Macready

I have deferred answering your note, until I should have heard from Miss Coutts. She doubts (as I must say I do too) the expediency of the example of this assistance, however distressing and pitiable the facts of the case.[†1] Therefore she cannot appear as a Subscriber, or give much. But she begs me to put down "A lady—£2..2..0." I will give you the two guineas when I see you—or I will give them to Mrs. Macready if I see her first. Between ourselves I must observe that I feel strongly for the genuine working men who are Chartists, but have no sympathy whatever with the amateurs. Let me, in confidence, call your attention and that of Mrs. Schwabe[†2] and Mrs. Cobden[†3] to the reason of my having separated the statement (in sending it to Miss Coutts) from the list of subscriptions. If "Mr. G. W. Reynolds" be the Mr. Reynolds[†4] who is the Author of the Mysteries of London,[†5] and who took the chair for a mob in Trafalgar Square before they set forth on a window-breaking expedition,[†1] I hold his to be a name with which no lady's, and no gentleman's, should be associated. And if anything could deprive this unfortunate young man of his liberty ticket, I am pretty confident that it would be a knowledge on the part of the Government at home that he had such a champion. It may not be the same person, but the initials are the same.

—Yes, my venerable Parr,[†2] we have pic-nic'd, and leap frog'd, and country-danced, and so forth, here, but there have been hard Copperfieldian mornings before these entertainments. Galley slavery has preceded merry making, and, the brief holiday consequent on the completion of No. 5, being over, the time is therefore come when I to Number 6 must render up myself.[†3] In the meantime I hear of you like a meteor—now here, now there—pervading space—and blazing away prodigiously.[†4] When you approach your Family again, in the fulfilment of that eccentric orbit which your Magnificence revolves in, give them a packet of loves from here that will be old by that time, perhaps, but not worn threadbare or a bit the worse.

Ever affectionately | My Dear Macready
CHARLES DICKENS

W. C. Macready Esquire.

To JOHN FORSTER, [LATE AUGUST 1849]

Extract in F, VI, iii, 501-2. Date: "a few days earlier" than his visit to CD at the beginning of Sep, according to Forster. CD was about to begin Copperfield No. VI on 30 Aug, he told Macready (see last).

Before I think of beginning my next number, I perhaps cannot do better than give you an imperfect description of the results of the climate of Bonchurch after a few weeks' residence. The first salubrious effect of which the Patient becomes conscious is an almost continual feeling of sickness, accompanied with great prostration of strength, so that his legs tremble under him, and his arms quiver when he wants to take hold of any object. An extraordinary disposition to sleep (except at night, when his rest, in the event of his having any, is broken by incessant dreams) is always present at the same time; and, if he have anything to do requiring thought and attention, this overpowers him to such a degree that he can only do it in snatches: lying down on beds in the fitful intervals. Extreme depression of mind, and a disposition to shed tears from morning to night, developes itself at the same period. If the Patient happen to have been a good walker, he finds ten miles an insupportable distance; in the achievement of which his legs are so unsteady, that he goes from side to side of the road, like a drunken man. If he happen to have ever possessed any energy of any kind, he finds it quenched in a dull, stupid languor. He has no purpose, power, or object in existence whatever. When he brushes his hair in the morning, he is so weak that he is obliged to sit upon a chair to do it. He is incapable of reading, at all times. And his bilious system is so utterly overthrown, that a ball of boiling fat appears to be always behind the top of the bridge of his nose, simmering between his haggard eyes. If he should have caught a cold, he will find it impossible to get rid of it, as his system is wholly incapable of making any effort. His cough will be deep, monotonous, and constant. "The faithful watch-dog's honest bark"[†1] will be nothing to it. He will abandon all present idea of overcoming it, and will content himself with keeping an eye upon his blood-vessels to preserve them whole and sound. Patient's name, Inimitable B. . . . It's a mortal mistake!—That's the plain fact. Of all the places I ever have been in, I have never been in one so difficult to exist in, pleasantly. Naples is hot and dirty, New York feverish, Washington bilious, Genoa exciting, Paris rainy—but Bonchurch, smashing. I am quite convinced that I should die here, in a year. It's not hot, it's not close, I don't know what it is, but the prostration of it is awful. Nobody here has the least idea what I think of it; but I find, from all sorts of hints from Kate, Georgina, and the Leeches, that they are all affected more or less in the same way, and find it very difficult to make head against. I make no sign, and pretend not to know what is going on. But they are right. I believe the Leeches will go soon, and small blame to 'em!—For me, when I leave here at the end of this September, I must go down to some cold place; as Ramsgate for example, for a week or two; or I seriously believe I shall feel the effects of it for a long time. . . . What do you think of that? . . . The longer I live, the more I doubt the doctors. I am perfectly convinced, that, for people suffering under a wasting disease, this Undercliff is madness altogether. The doctors, with the old miserable folly of looking at one bit of a subject, take the patient's lungs and the Undercliff's air, and settle solemnly that they are fit for each other.[†2] But the whole influence of the place, never taken into consideration, is to reduce and overpower vitality. I am quite confident that I should go down under it, as if it were so much lead, slowly crushing me. An American resident in Paris many years, who brought me a letter from Olliffe,[†1] said, the day before yesterday, that he had always had a passion for the sea never to be gratified enough, but that after living here a month, he could not bear to look at it; he couldn't endure the sound of it; he didn't know how it was, but it seemed associated with the decay of his whole powers.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?AUGUST 1849]

Summary in F, VI, iii, 500. Date: perhaps Aug (following the only reference to Swinburne's mother, in To Forster, 4-5 Aug).

Referring to a golden-haired son of the Swinburnes[†2] with whom his own boys used to play.[†3]

September

To LORD FITZROY SOMERSET,[†1] [?SEPTEMBER 1849]

Mention in next. Date: probably written after his previous letter to Miss Coutts, 30 Aug, in which Somerset's name was not mentioned.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 7 SEPTEMBER 1849

MS Morgan Library.

Bonchurch Seventh September 1849.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I am greatly mortified to hear from Mrs. Morson of what has happened at Shepherd's Bush. Though it is a great comfort to me that the girl is a new girl[†2] and not one in whom we have trusted and been long deceived. I have told Mrs. Morson that I hope she will lay stress, in speaking of it to the others, on her not having had the benefit of the Home's instruction and advice for any length of time.

I do not make out, from Mrs. Morson's letter, whether the wardrobe from which the girl took the bonnet and shawl, was locked and the key taken away—in short whether she forced it open. If she did anything but force it open, I think there was, so far, a little remissness on Mrs. Morson's part. I have repeatedly cautioned her on that subject, and warned her to leave nothing open, or about. The always having some one or two of whom we know very little, is the best reason in the world to the general body, for this.

I hope we have, generally, gone on so well since Sarah Wood,[†3] that you will not be much discouraged by this circumstance. I can hardly imagine how any one can be so wantonly and ungratefully wicked, but such things are, outside the Home, and will be, I am afraid, for many a long year.

I acknowledged the receipt of Lord Fitzroy Somerset's letter,[†4] immediately.

Dear Miss Coutts | Faithfully Yours ever
CHARLES DICKENS

What does Mrs. Brown say? I must go (I think) and ask the Lime Burner[†5] what he says to it.

To THOMAS BEARD, 9 SEPTEMBER 1849

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | Morning Herald Office | Shoe Lane | London.

Bonchurch, Isle of Wight. | Sunday Ninth September 1849.

My Dear Beard.

We shall be truly and cordially delighted to see you on the 17th. You could not come at a better time, for I hope (please God) to finish my month's work on that day, or, at latest, on the next.

There is a coach leaves the Pier at Ryde, at about a quarter before 4 every day. If you time your coming from Portsmouth so as to come by that coach (which meets the boat) you will find it the best and cheapest conveyance, and you will find us waiting dinner for you. You will be hailed by a deputation from the Inimitable, as soon as you arrive in Bonchurch.

I am much concerned by your Baldwinian intelligence.[†1] But I hope and trust something better can be done before long.

Affectionately Ever
CHARLES DICKENS

I have got a special curiosity in the vinous way, here.

To WILLIAM BROWN, 9 SEPTEMBER 1849*

MS Morgan Library. Address: W. Brown Esquire | Holly Lodge | Highgate | London.

Bonchurch, Sunday Ninth September 1894.

My Dear Sir

I am much obliged to you for your letter. I had heard (as Miss Coutts will probably have told you) of the robbery and flight; but not of what you had done afterwards; which I think perfectly discreet and wise. I am happy to say that I have never seen the young lady. Mr. Chesterton wrote to me about her, since I have been here.[†2]

Mrs. Dickens unites with me in kindest regards to Mrs. Brown and Miss Coutts. I hope Mrs. Brown is better than she used to be, on the first of each month.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

W. Brown Esquire.

To F. M. EVANS, 13 SEPTEMBER 1849

MS Dickens House.

Bonchurch | Thirteenth September 1849.

My Dear Evans.

I hope to finish on Tuesday next. Any day, after that, that will suit you best, I shall be delighted to see you. Write to me a day before, that I may not be roaming anywhere, when you come.

I promised Mr. Bernhard Taüchnitz of Leipzig that he should have the proofs of No. 6 as soon as ever they should be ready—with a view to his first volume of Copperfield, which he proposes to bring out at the end of this month, and which he wants to get the end of, translated into German for that purpose, with all dispatch.[†1] As I told him somewhere about the 15th. would be the probable time, and as I am a little late this month, it has struck me that it would be a convenience to him to have the first sheet[†2] at once. Therefore, will you get the corrections I have marked on it (inclosed) very carefully made—the half page that is wanting,[†3] carefully made up from the inclosed folio of MS—and send it to him by post directly, with an intimation that you will forward the concluding sheet as soon as it is ready?

Faithfully Yours always

CD.

To J. H. NODAL,[†4] 15 SEPTEMBER 1849*

Text from transcript by Mr Walter Dexter.

Bonchurch, Isle of Wight | Saturday Fifteenth September 1849

Sir,

I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your obliging note which has been forwarded to me here. I think any such local help to the Italian Exiles[†5] as you ably advocate, must be left to local influence, and could hardly be set agoing by a stranger. Even if I were in town, and able to attend closely to the subject (which is not the case) I should feel it my part to leave Manchester to speak for herself, without prompting.[†6] I am not the less indebted to you for your communication.

Faithfully yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

J. H. Nodal Esquire

To JOHN FORSTER, [SEPTEMBER 1849]

Extract in F, VI, i, 455*n*. Date: Sep 49 according to Forster; after the 15th, when Stone was invited to Bonchurch (To Stone, 27 Aug).

Stone has painted the Ocean Spectre, and made a very pretty little picture of him.[†7]

To WALTER SAVAGE LANDOR, 20 SEPTEMBER 1849*

MS University of North Carolina.

Bonchurch. Isle of Wight. | Twentieth September 1849.

My Dear Landor

I am never so occupied, but that the sight of your handwriting is a delight to me. It greeted me when I came, in a glow, out of the sea this morning, in the heartiest manner. And I gave it a cordial welcome.

My theatrical influence I fear is very very small. But if I can ever serve Miss Dickenson[†1] by my good word, or by any effort I can make in her behalf, I hope I need not assure you that I shall do my utmost. If there be anything that Kate can do, in the way of friendly encouragement or useful introduction, she says I am to tell you it shall be done too. Perhaps you can let her know, when we come back to town in November, where Miss Dickenson is to be found.

She sends you her love. So does her sister. So does your godson.[†2] So do all his brothers and sisters. So do I. Being ever My Dear Landor

Affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Walter Savage Landor

To JOHN FORSTER, [21 SEPTEMBER 1849]

Extract and summary in F, VI, iii, 503. Date: two days before letter of 23 Sep, according to Forster; presumably his first letter after Forster's return to London ("when he next wrote", says Forster: F, VI, iii, 502).

Browne has sketched an uncommonly characteristic and capital Mr. Micawber[†3] for the next number. I hope the present number is a good one.[†4] I hear nothing but pleasant accounts of the general satisfaction.

Going on to tell Forster of his intention to go to Broadstairs, put aside by doubtful reports of its sanitary condition.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?22 SEPTEMBER 1849]

Extract in F, VI, iv, 509. Date: Evans visited Bonchurch between 19 and 24 Sep, and was clearly there on the 22nd, the day of Leech's accident, since he asked for reports on him (To Evans, 25 Sep). Letter written after last, if Forster is correct; "Evans says" suggests during his visit or shortly afterwards.

The accounts are rather shy, after Dombey, and what you said comes true after all. I am not sorry I cannot bring myself to care much for what opinions people may form; and I have a strong belief, that, if any of my books are read years hence, Dombey will be remembered as among the best of them: but passing influences are important for the time, and as Chuzzlewit with its small sale sent me up, Dombey's large sale has tumbled me down. Not very much, however, in real truth. These accounts only include the first three numbers, have of course been burdened with all the heavy expenses of number one, and ought not in reason to be complained of.[†1] But it is clear to me that the Periodical must be set agoing in the spring; and I have already been busy, at odd half-hours, in shadowing forth a name and an idea. Evans says they have but one opinion repeated to them of Copperfield, and they feel very confident about it. A steady twenty-five thousand, which it is now on the verge of, will do very well. The back numbers are always going off. Read the enclosed.[†2]

To JOHN FORSTER, [23 SEPTEMBER 1849]

Extract and summary in F, VI, iii, 503-4. Date: 23 Sep according to Forster.

Yes, we have been sufficiently rollicking since I finished the number[†3]; and have had great games at rounders every afternoon, with all Bonchurch looking on; but I begin to long for a little peace and solitude. And now for my less pleasing piece of news. The sea has been running very high, and Leech, while bathing, was knocked over by a bad blow from a great wave on the forehead. He is in bed, and had twenty of his namesakes on his temples this morning. When I heard of him just now, he was asleep—which he had not been all night.

He closed his letter hopefully.

To MRS JOHN LEECH, [23] SEPTEMBER 1849

MS Benoliel Collection. Date: misdated by CD; Sunday (on which CD and Beard sat up with Leech all night: To Forster, 24 Sep) was 23 Sep in 1849. Address: Mrs. Leech.

Winterbourne, Sunday Night | Twenty Seventh September 1849.

My Dear Mrs. Leech.

I cannot help thinking that it would be better—and that it would be more comfortable for you—if Beard and I came and sat upon the little sofa in the sitting room[†1] until Morning. I wish you would think with me, and say Yes. The probability is that Leech will fall into a sleep, and get infinitely better, but I don't like to think of you alone there,—and it would be an immense relief to me to be your friend at hand, as I ever am at heart. Let me beg you to think of this again—not for any need's sake (thank God) but for your own greater ease, and ours.

Ever Affectionately Yours

CD.

John waits for a word.

To THE REV. T. PROTHERO,[†2] 23 SEPTEMBER 1849

Summary in I. Kyrle Fletcher catalogue No. 227; MS 1 ½ pp.; dated Winterbourne, [Bonchurch],[†3] 23 Sep 49.

Saying that it would give him much pleasure to accept Prothero's kind invitation, but he was engaged all the week, as he had friends staying with him, and he would be leaving on Saturday. Sends compliments to Mrs Prothero[†4] from himself and Mrs Dickens.

To THE REV. JAMES WHITE, 23 SEPTEMBER 1849

Text from MDGH, I, 208-9.

Winterbourne | Sunday Evening, Sept. 23rd, | 1849.

My Dear White,

I have a hundred times at least wanted to say to you how good I thought those papers in "Blackwood"[†1]—how excellent their purpose, and how delicately and charmingly worked out. Their subtle and delightful humour, and their grasp of the whole question, were something more pleasant to me than I can possibly express.

"How comes this lumbering Inimitable to say this, on this Sunday night of all nights in the year?" you naturally ask. Now hear the Inimitable's honest avowal! I make so bold because I heard that Morning Service better read this morning than ever I have heard it read in my life.[†2] And because—for the soul of me—I cannot separate the two things, or help identifying the wise and genial man out of church with the earnest and unaffected man in it. Midsummer madness, perhaps, but a madness I hope that will hold us true friends for many and many a year to come. The madness is over as soon as you have burned this letter (see the history of the Gunpowder Plot),[†3] but let us be friends much longer for these reasons and many included in them not herein expressed.

Affectionately always
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To JOHN FORSTER, [24 SEPTEMBER 1849]

Extracts in F, VI, iii, 504 and iv, 510. Date: both 24 Sep according to Forster.

Leech has been very ill with congestion of the brain ever since I wrote, and being still in excessive pain has had ice to his head continuously, and been bled in the arm besides. Beard and I sat up there, all night.

The old notion of the Periodical, which has been agitating itself in my mind for so long, I really think is at last gradually growing into form.

To F. M. EVANS, 25 SEPTEMBER 1849†

MS Huntington Library.

Bonchurch, Tuesday Twenty Fifth September | 1849.

My Dear Evans.

This letter is really addressed both to you and Lemon—to whom Leech is anxious I should write. As I promised yesterday to repeat my report to you, I write as to you to day, and will write to Lemon (at Whitefriars) tomorrow.

Leech continued pretty much the same until early yesterday evening, when he became worse; and, complaining afresh of the pain in his head, had leeches on again—mustard poultices to the back of his neck—[†a]a mustard bath to his feet[†a]—[†b]and bread-poultices on the leech-bites.[†b] I was there from 8 until ½ past 10, and observing the terrible restlessness of his condition, and knowing the utter impossibility of his getting better, and the moral certainty of his becoming worse, unless he could fall asleep, suggested that it might be well to mesmerize him. As neither he nor Mrs. Leech were anything but anxious that it should be done, on my assurance that it could not possibly do him any harm, †bwe arranged that he should give some slight composing medicine of the Doctor's, a fair trial, and, if it did not succeed send to me. That they might do so, easily, I left John there, and came home to bed.†b At ½ past 2 this morning he knocked me up, and I went there. His restlessness had become most distressing, and it was quite impossible to get him to maintain any one position for five minutes. He was more like a ship in distress, in a sea of bedclothes,†1 than anything else. In the difficulty of getting at him, and of doing the thing with any reasonable effect, at first, in a dark room, it was more than half an hour before I could so far tranquillize him (by the magnetism I mean) as to keep him composed, awake for five minutes together. Then, that effect began, and he said he felt comfortable and happy. As the clock struck four, he asked me (in the odd way, common to all people under that influence) what it meant by striking twice—and in a few minutes fell fast asleep, breathing deeply and regularly, and neither snoring nor starting. †bWith one short interval of waking (less than a quarter of an hour) he slept an hour and thirty five minutes, during which a gentle perspiration came out upon his skin, and his face lost a very unpromising anxiety it had worn, and became quiet and perfectly peaceful. At the end of the sleep (the first he has had since he has been ill) as he expressed himself much refreshed, and took some breakfast in good spirits and with a relish, and as it was broad day, and there was no reason for his sleeping again, unless naturally, until tonight, I did not repeat the use of the agency, and came home at 7 o'Clock. I have seen him for two hours since. The doctor pronounces him greatly better (the said doctor was despondent and uneasy †ato me,†a last evening), and is much pleased with the improvement.†b To prevent talk about it, we have agreed not to tell him, †athe Doctor,†a of the thing—at all events for the present—though I understand he is favorable to Magnetism. †bI shall sleep there tonight, and I have little doubt, please God, that restlessness, which is the only thing to dread, can be kept off.

He is to have a whiting for his dinner.†b

Mrs. Leech†c has been out for a little to day—it is a most beautiful day—and has bathed in the sea, and so got freshened. She†c is in great spirits at the improvement, and was much astonished in the night when we talked across him †cas if he had been a Woolpack. His Eyes are not intolerant of light, he is not in pain, and he is quite cheerful. I am in great hopes that the improvement will continue. I have no doubt it will, if he can get rest tonight.†c

I am rather stupid, and write drowsily. Best remembrances from all.

Faithfully Yours always

CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [26 SEPTEMBER 1849]

Extract in F, VI, iii, 504. Date: 26 Sep according to Forster.

My plans are all unsettled by Leech's illness; as of course I do not like to leave this place while I can be of any service to him and his good little wife. But all visitors are gone to-day, and Winterbourne once more left to the engaging family of the inimitable B. Ever since I wrote to you Leech has been seriously worse, and again very heavily bled. The night before last he was in such an alarming state of restlessness, which nothing could relieve, that I proposed to Mrs. Leech to try magnetism. Accordingly, in the middle of the night I fell to; and, after a very fatiguing bout of it, put him to sleep for an hour and thirty-five minutes. A change came on in the sleep, and he is decidedly better. I talked to the astounded little Mrs. Leech across him, when he was asleep, as if he had been a truss of hay. . . . What do you think of my setting up in the magnetic line with a large brass plate? "Terms, twenty-five guineas per nap."

To MARK LEMON, 26 SEPTEMBER 1849

MS Benoliel Collection.

Winterbourne, Bonchurch
Twenty Sixth September 1849. Wednesday

My Dear Lemon.

I am happy to tell you that Leech is, beyond all doubt, a great deal better this morning. I found him so quiet and disposed to sleep last night, that it was not necessary to repeat the Magnetism; and I went to bed in the next room, to be called if he were restless. I was not called, however, all night; he slept very well indeed; is down in the sitting room today; and is to have a boiled fowl for his dinner. He looks a good deal the worse, of course, and still complains a little of his head—but there can be no doubt at all of his having made an immense advance. I should hope that the chances of his falling back again, are exceedingly slight.

I hardly know how to answer your question about your coming to take care of him. Leigh,[†1] I am quite satisfied, is not to be thought of. He had much better have nobody. Tact and cheerfulness are the only qualities that can render him the least service. I had intended to leave here on Saturday, and to go, for a fortnight, to Broadstairs. My reason for designing to leave on Saturday, was, that I might get to work on the 1st. of the month. But I should not think of going away, whoever might be here, unless he were to all intents and purposes quite well. Therefore I am not to be considered—as far as his having somebody to look after him, goes—on the wing at all.

Do you think you could come down on Saturday? We could then talk the matter over. By that time we may know from the Doctor when it would be well to remove him—perhaps from himself what change he would like, and where he would wish to go. I will also have taken an opportunity of speaking to Mrs. Leech on these points. It seems to me that if this be practicable, it is on all accounts the best course. I hope you will think so too, and will be able to adopt it. Let me know. All future arrangements could[†1] be quite easy if we could hold such a small council, on the spot.

The good little woman has had some rest, and looks a great deal the better for it, and is going out for a walk with Kate, while the humble individual who now addresses you looks after the invalid.

I am very sorry to hear of Thackeray.[†2] Cordial remembrances (in which all unite) to Evans. Kate and Georgy send their loves to Mrs. Lemon and all the babbies.[†3]

Ever My Dear Lemon Affectionately Yrs.

CD.

To F. M. EVANS, 27 SEPTEMBER 1849*

MS Private.

Winterbourne Twenty Seventh September | 1849. Thursday

My Dear Evans.

Leech was down in the sitting room, dressed, all day yesterday—and had a boiled fowl for his dinner, of which he ate the two wings with great satisfaction. Going up there, at a little after 8 last night, I found he had gone to bed, and was restless again and tossing about. I soon began to magnetize him. He became composed immediately, and lay in a perfect calm, though without sleeping more than two or three minutes at a time (and then very soundly) until 12 o'Clock, during the whole of which time I continued the magnetism. As he was then cheerful and quiet, though not—as he said—drowsy any more, I thought it best to come home, and leave John there to call me in case I should be wanted. He slept very well, however, (though he woke often) and there was not the least necessity to send.

(I observed exactly this effect several times, in a lady whom I magnetized every day for Six months, in Italy.[†1] Her disorder was tic Doloreux in a most horrible form.[†2] In some states of nervous excitement she never went to sleep for more than a minute or two at a time, but was invariably tranquillized and made easy by the process.)

I am going up there at 12 o'Clock, and will finish this letter after I have sat with him for an hour or two, and seen how he is.

———

2 oClock. afternoon

He is greatly better, and has very much surprised the Doctor. He had a haddock and a bit of boiled mutton for his dinner, and dispatched them in a twinkling. He made divers overtures to me (in Mrs. Leech's absence) concerning a glass of port wine and water—which I didn't understand; so he went on swallowing toast and water, and barley water. Appearance greatly improved, and spirits better altogether. We intend to have another operation tonight, if there should seem to be the least occasion. I think he is at least 100 per cent better than he was yesterday.

As you are interested in the Magnetism, I will tell you, when I have an opportunity, a very curious piece of observation in reference to it, of Mrs. Leech's, which she mentioned last night. The most remarkable incident of it, is, that a great German chemist of the name of Rheimbacher[†3] whose investigations changed him from a disbeliever into a believer mentions exactly the same observation as having been made by some female patients of his,[†4] and lays great stress on it [in] a pamphlet he wrote.[†5] I need not say that she never heard of him or his book.

Faithfully Always
CHARLES DICKENS

To CHARLES BLACK,[†6] 28 SEPTEMBER 1849*

MS University of California, Los Angeles. Address: Charles Black Esquire | Marlborough Road | St. John's Wood | London.

Bonchurch, Isle of Wight. | Twenty Eighth September 1849.

My Dear Black.

I am extremely sorry to say that we are on the very eve of leaving Bonchurch.

The exact when, depends on the recovery of a friend who has been taken ill here, and the exact where may possibly be contingent on his being ordered to some other sea-side place; in which case we should go to the same place if it were feasible. But my present belief is, that we shall leave here on Monday for the Albion Hotel at Broadstairs—which little hostelry would make a good day's halting place for you, if you were to return abroad by way of Folkestone.[†1] We are, all three, extremely anxious to see you before you go back, and we hope you will be able to contrive for our passing an evening together.

On Sunday or Monday, when I certainly know our plans, I will write to you again. In the meantime Mrs. Dickens and her sister send you their loves, and I am, as always,

Cordially Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Black Esquire.

To HENRY AUSTIN, 30 SEPTEMBER 1849*

MS Morgan Library.

Winterbourne, Bonchurch | Sunday Thirtieth September 1849.

My Dear Henry.

I think you quite right in resigning from that preposterous jumble of imbecility and rottenness,[†2] but I hold beyond all question that the grounds of your resignation ought to be plainly and explicitly stated in some letter from yourself, which shall be, henceforth, a part of the records of the Commission. I am quite sure that this is the true course, and hope you will not be persuaded one inch out of it, though all the harmful good nature in the County of Carlisle[†3] were enlisted to move you.

Leech is, I am glad to say, a great deal better—getting quite well. Kate Georgy, Mamey and Katey and I, are going to Broadstairs tomorrow, where I purpose writing my next number before coming to town. The children will go straight home from here, on Wednesday.

Ever affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Henry Austin Esquire.

To MR BALLARD, 30 SEPTEMBER 1849†

MS Dickens House.

Bonchurch, Isle of Wight | Sunday September Thirtieth 1849.

Dr. Mr. Ballard.

I am not quite sure that the Post office arrangements will enable you to get this letter before you see me. But, on the chance of its preceding me, I write to say that [†a]Mrs. Dickens, Miss Hogarth, myself, and the two little girls, are coming tomorrow evening to stay a week or two at your house, if you can find room for us.[†a]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Ballard.

To JOHN FORSTER, [30 SEPTEMBER 1849]

Summary and extract in F, VI, iii, 504. Date: 30 Sep according to Forster, the day before he left Broadstairs.

Saying that Leech was so clearly on the way to recovery that he was himself next day to leave for Broadstairs with Catherine, Georgina, Mamey and Katie.

I will merely add that I entreat to be kindly remembered to Thackeray;[†1] that I think I have, without a doubt, got the Periodical notion; and that I am writing under the depressing and discomforting influence of paying off the tribe of bills that pour in upon an unfortunate family-young-man on the eve of a residence like this. So no more at present from the disgusted, though still inimitable, and always affectionate B.

To DOUGLAS JERROLD, [? SEPTEMBER 1849]*

MS (fragment) Pennsylvania Historical Society. Date: Signature suggests 1848-49; just possibly refers to their move from Bonchurch to Broadstairs on 1 Oct 49.

. . . going away again tomorrow. I am very sorry indeed that you are not going too, along with me.

Always Heartily Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Douglas Jerrold Esquire

October

To JOHN LEECH, 5 OCTOBER 1849

MS Dickens House, Broadstairs. Address: John Leech Esquire | 31 Notting Hill Terrace | Notting Hill | London.

Broadstairs | Friday Fifth October 1849.

My Dear Leech.

We are delighted to receive your good report of yourself, and Mrs. Leech's kind letter this morning.

Being unexpectedly mowed down by a fit of laziness, I went over to Canterbury yesterday—alone—and refreshed myself with a day's rain there. I returned at night, not wholly free from Snases[†2] Bloomfieldian.[†3]

Kate has seen Walter,[†1] who says he quite understands what is the matter with her, and that it is nothing but what will very easily yield to very simple medicines, now in course of administration.

There has been a trifle of rain here—a spot or two. But to day is one of the most wonderful and charming days I ever saw—the air so brisk and bracing as it is nowhere but at Broadstairs—the Channel so busy and alive with shipping as it is nowhere but off Broadstairs—the hotel so cosey[†2] and like a private house as it is nowhere but in Broadstairs—everything as nothing is out of Broadstairs. Veeve la Broadstairs!

I write, as my friend Mr. Micawber says, "with a sickly mask of mirth",[†3] but I am rather behind time, and have been hammering away all day, until I don't know whether this is my head that is oppressing my shoulders, or a pumpkin stuffed with lead.—I am off to the North Foreland to enquire.

With loves from all to Mrs. Leech.

Ever My Dear Leech | Faithfully Yours

CD.

John Leech Esquire.

To JOHN FORSTER, [EARLY OCTOBER 1849]

Extract in F, VI, iii, 504-5. Date: his first letter, according to Forster, from Broadstairs, where he had arrived on 1 Oct.

Such a night and day of rain, I should think the oldest inhabitant never saw! and yet, in the ould formiliar Broadstairs, I somehow or other don't mind it much. The change has done Mamey a world of good, and I have begun to sleep again. As for news, you might as well ask me for dolphins. Nobody in Broadstairs—to speak of. Certainly nobody in Ballard's. We are in the part, which is the house next door to the hotel itself, that we once had for three years running, and just as quiet and snug now as it was then. I don't think I shall return before the 20th or so, when the number is done; but I may, in some inconstant freak, run up to you before. Preliminary despatches and advices shall be forwarded in any case to the fragrant neighbourhood of Clare-market and the Portugal-street burying-ground.[†4] On the Portsmouth railway, coming here, encountered Kenyon. On the ditto ditto at Reigate, encountered young Dilke,[†1] and took him in tow to Canterbury. On the ditto ditto at ditto (meaning Reigate), encountered Fox,[†2] M.P. for Oldham, and his daughter.[†3] All within an hour. Young Dilke great about the proposed Exposition under the direction of H.R.H. Prince Albert, and evincing, very pleasantly to me, unbounded faith in our old friend his father.

To EDWARD CHAPMAN, 6 OCTOBER 1849*

MS Morgan Library.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Sixth October 1849.

Dear Sir.

I have looked over the accounts to Midsummer last. I could wish the profit larger,[†4] but the times have not been such as to justify any sanguine expectations in that regard.[†5] It seems to me, however, that the stock on hand is too large. Would it not be advisable to reduce the Numbers printed?[†6]

I shall be glad if you will pay the balance in my favor, into Coutts's.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Edward Chapman Esquire.

To JOHN FORSTER, [7 OCTOBER 1849]

Extract in F, VI, iv, 510-11. Date: 7 Oct 49 according to Forster.

I do great injustice to my floating ideas (pretty speedily and comfortably settling down into orderly arrangement) by saying anything about the Periodical now: but my notion is a weekly journal, price either three-halfpence or two-pence,[†7] matter in part original and in part selected, and always having, if possible, a little good poetry. . . .[†1] Upon the selected matter, I have particular notions. One is, that it should always be a subject. For example, a history of Piracy; in connexion with which there is a vast deal of extraordinary, romantic, and almost unknown matter. A history of Knight-errantry, and the wild old notion of the Sangreal. A history of Savages,[†2] showing the singular respects in which all savages are like each other; and those in which civilised men, under circumstances of difficulty, soonest become like savages. A history of remarkable characters, good and bad, in history; to assist the reader's judgment in his observation of men, and in his estimates of the truth of many characters in fiction. All these things, and fifty others that I have already thought of, would be compilations; through the whole of which the general intellect and purpose of the paper should run,[†3] and in which there would be scarcely less interest than in the original matter.[†4] The original matter to be essays, reviews, letters, theatrical criticisms, &c, &c, as amusing as possible, but all distinctly and boldly going to what in one's own view ought to be the spirit of the people and the time. . . . Now to bind all this together, and to get a character established as it were which any of the writers may maintain without difficulty, I want to suppose a certain SHADOW, which may go into any place, by sunlight, moonlight, starlight, firelight, candlelight, and be in all homes, and all nooks and corners, and be supposed to be cognisant of everything, and go everywhere, without the least difficulty.[†5] Which may be in the Theatre, the Palace, the House of Commons, the Prisons, the Unions, the Churches, on the Railroad, on the Sea, abroad and at home: a kind of semi-omniscient, omnipresent, intangible creature. I don't think it would do to call the paper THE SHADOW:[†6] but I want something tacked to that title, to express the notion of its being a cheerful, useful, and always welcome Shadow. I want to open the first number with this Shadow's account of himself and his family. I want to have all the correspondence addressed to him. I want him to issue his warnings from time to time, that he is going to fall on such and such a subject; or to expose such and such a piece of humbug; or that he may be expected shortly in such and such a place. I want the compiled part of the paper to express the idea of this Shadow's having been in libraries, and among the books referred to. I want him to loom as a fanciful thing all over London; and to get up a general notion of "What will the Shadow say about this, I wonder? What will the Shadow say about that? Is the Shadow here?" and so forth. Do you understand? . . . I have an enormous difficulty in expressing what I mean, in this stage of the business; but I think the importance of the idea is, that once stated on paper, there is no difficulty in keeping it up. That it presents an odd, unsubstantial, whimsical, new thing: a sort of previously unthought-of Power going about. That it will concentrate into one focus all that is done in the paper.[†1] That it sets up a creature which isn't the Spectator, and isn't Isaac Bickerstaff, and isn't anything of that kind: but in which people will be perfectly willing to believe, and which is just mysterious and quaint enough to have a sort of charm for their imagination, while it will represent common-sense and humanity. I want to express in the title, and in the grasp of the idea to express also, that it is the Thing at everybody's elbow, and in everybody's footsteps. At the window, by the fire, in the street, in the house, from infancy to old age, everyone's inseparable companion. . . . Now do you make anything out of this? which I let off as if I were a bladder full of it, and you had punctured me. I have not breathed the idea to any one; but I have a lively hope that it is an idea, and that out of it the whole scheme may be hammered.

To JOHN FORSTER, [OCTOBER 1849]

Extract in F, VI, iv, 512. Date: replying to Forster's objections to the plan he had outlined on 7 Oct.

I do not lay much stress on your grave doubts about Periodical, but more anon.

To JOHN LEECH, 9 OCTOBER 1849

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: John Leech Esquire | 31 Notting Hill Terrace | Notting Hill | London.

Hotel Ballard, Broadstairs sur Mer
Tuesday Night Ninth October 1849.

My Dear Leech.

I am quite delighted to receive such brilliant accounts of you, under your own hand and seal. I am well pleased too to learn that you have some idea of coming down here. You cannot think how delightful and fresh the place is (when it's fine) and how good the walks are. Room there is plenty, and to spare. I don't think there is any one in the hotel but ourselves, and I am sure we could not be more comfortable. So I hope you really will come, and give Ballard a turn.

As to him, he is a more decided and hopeless Maniac in point of contradiction, than he ever was. The last summer seems to have ripened him thoroughly. He won't let me have an opinion of my own, and bruises me (as Maclise would say) and dances on my body every day at dinner. Here is a specimen.

Scene, Our room. Time, halfpast 5.P. M. Kate, Georgina, and Inimitable, seated at dinner. In attendance—Ballard, and the amiable Waiter (the latter, decidedly the most affectionate and soft hearted man in the world.)
Inimitable (taking Punch) And how's Miss Collin going on, Ballard?
Ballard. Oh, well Sir, she ain't going on at all—not what can be called going on Sir, you know.
Inimitable (after being a little put down, and slightly recovering). Is she going off at all? Is she going to be married?
Ballard. No Sir, not much of that.
Inimitable. No, I suppose not? (Smiles)
Ballard (quickly) Not but what she's been very near it Sir once or twice—and is now, in deed—but I never believe a thing you know Sir till its done Sir.
(The ladies laugh.)
Georgina (here you must suppose the imitation) But she drinks, don't she Mr. Ballard.
Ballard. Oh dear no Miss!

Inimitable (to Georgina fiercely). What the Devil are you so fond of disparaging people for? Drinks! Who ever heard of her drinking! What a damned extraordinary thing it is, that you can't hold your tongue!—
I never heard of her drinking (to Ballard) nor anybody else.
Ballard (with a smile of pity) Oh everybody here, has heard of it Sir—and knows it well—but we don't see these things in Broadstairs Sir, and make it a rule among ourselves never to mention 'em you know Sir. It's best not.
Inimitable (much affected by this Christian axiom) You're quite right Ballard. Nobody need know anything about it.
Ballard. Oh! They can't help[†1] knowing all about it Sir.
Inimitable (disconcerted). Why?
Ballard. Why, you see Sir when you come to be picked up in the street, four times in one winter, it gets talked about, you know. It gets to be the talk of the whole place, and who can wonder at it!

(Exit Ballard with dish-cover. Waiter takes round punch, and Scene closes).

I think I shall remain here until I have done the No., which will probably be about the 19th. or 20th. I am glad to find that you miss me, for I miss you too, and look forward to all sorts of snug evenings and other interchanges of friendship, in London, this next winter.

Kate and Georgy, Mamey and Katey, unite with me in loves, to you and Mrs. Leech. We all hope that if you come, she will come too, and maybe we might all return together?

Ever My Dear Leech | Heartily Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Leech Esquire.

To LORD ROBERTSON, 9 OCTOBER 1849*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Ninth October 1849 | Tuesday Night.

My Dear Lord Robertson.

I have been in the Isle of Wight all the Summer, and have received your letter here on my way homeward. I purpose proceeding to my Ancestral Halls (No 1 Devonshire Terrace) in a week or ten days.

I infer from your welcome note that a book[†1] is awaiting me in the aforementioned halls. Wherefore, I content myself with saying, now, that I feel sincerely pleased to live in your remembrance as a "selected victim"; and that as soon as I get home, and have read it, I shall send you a sort of sacrificial chaunt, in that capacity.

In the meanwhile accept all cordial greetings from me and mine—not without a hope from me that I may run down to Edinburgh before long.

I am told that Willie Allan[†2] is perpetually relating those same stories without any voice; but that at a certain blink of his eye, people know he is telling about "Dochter Henry"—and that at a certain other blink of his eye, they know he is on the subject of that Pig who was found upon a water closet in Belgium—and laugh accordingly, and don't miss anything.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Lord Robertson.

To HENRY AUSTIN, [18] OCTOBER 1849*

MS Morgan Library. Date: misdated by CD; Thursday was 18 Oct in 1849.

Devonshire Terrace | Thursday Night | Nineteenth October 1849.

My Dear Henry

Though I am very sorry that you should be out of a charge that ought to be so interesting and beneficial to all sorts and conditions of men, I am quite clear you had no other course to adopt.[†3] As to the Commission that has superseded the first,[†4] I believe with you that the principle is preposterous,[†5] and as rotten at bottom as the worst Sewer in London.

I wish you would arrange to come and dine here, Friday or Saturday next week—and Letitia too—at your own hour. I should like to talk over things Sanitary and insanitary—of which latter there seems to be a ripe harvest just at present.

—Come and dine with me towards the end of next month, in the City, when I preside for the "News Wenders".[†1] I think it'll be a good occasion for making 'em a sanitary speech, and banging at the wooden headed, porpoised[†2] souled old Idols of aldermen, whom—I was going to say may God confound[†3]—but He has done it.[†4]

To GEORGE BEADNELL,[†5] 19 OCTOBER 1849

MS Winifred M. Myers (Autographs) Ltd.

Devonshire Terrace | Friday Night Nineteenth October | 1849

My Dear Sir

Absence from town prevented my receiving your sad intelligence[†6] in due course. I am but now in possession of it.

Believe me that I feel the sympathy of an old friend, with you in your affliction; and that the memory of many old kindnesses, bestowed upon me when I was a mere boy, rises before me vividly, in connexion with your melancholy tidings. I hardly dare to say to you, whose grief is of a sacred kind, how much I felt your letter, and how many affecting and regretful thoughts it awakened within me.

I am sure few better creatures ever lived. Hard as the separation is to bear,—harder in some sense because of that,—it is in the mercy of God, I know, to make that conviction a comfort to you.

And when the first shock of such a heavy trial is lightened by Time, the attachment of the children she bore you, and of their children too, will not be the less deep or the less consoling because one of the springs of its life, is, for a little while, dried and seen no more.

In their love, and in everything, may you find some comfort! My wife and I have talked about you very much, and are full of heartfelt wishes for your peace.

Ever faithfully yours
CHARLES DICKENS

George Beadnell Esquire.

To JAMES GILBERT, 19 OCTOBER 1849*

Text from transcript by owner of MS, Professor Edward Ford.

1 Devonshire Terrace, | Friday night, Nineteenth October, | 1849.

Sir,

Absence from town has prevented my receiving your letter until now. I beg you to accept this as a sufficient excuse for my having delayed to answer it.

I have excused myself, by reason of many engagements, from compliance of late, with several requests similar to that with which you honor me on behalf of the Newsvendors' Benevolent and Provident Institution. But I cannot resist the claim of that establishment, and shall be happy to preside at its first public dinner.

If the last day you name in November should be convenient to all parties, and quite as well calculated as any other to advance the interests of the Institution, I should prefer it.[†1]—But I am quite sincere in requesting that the welfare of the association may be the first and greatest consideration.

I am Sir | Your faithful Servant,
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. James Gilbert.

To W. C. BENNETT, 20 OCTOBER 1849*

MS Private.

Devonshire Terrace | Twentieth October 1849

Dear Sir

I have been absent from London during the last three months, and have had no parcels forwarded to me during that time. It is only on my return home now, that I find your obliging remembrance.[†2] I hasten to say that I receive it with many thanks, and promise myself much satisfaction from its perusal.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. C. Bennett Esquire.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 20 OCTOBER 1849*

MS Yale University Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday Evening October Twentieth | 1849.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

We returned to town, for good, the night before last. Calling at your house this afternoon to learn what your movements were and when you were expected home, I heard, from the Porter, of the unfortunate accident to your carriage and its contents, on the French Railway—a story which he told me with such extraordinary unction and excitement that he came out in quite a new light: having always appeared to me, before, a very calm person—a man not easily moved, and when moved not moved far out of himself. I esteem him much more than I did, finding a capacity of emotion in him for which I was wholly unprepared.

What a blessed thing you were not in the carriage! For in the difficulty of communication with the guard, one is horrified by the mere thought of what might have happened. I hope you are none the worse, except in respect of the loss—in itself sufficiently annoying, I fear.

I was at the Home today, and had a long talk with Mrs Morson. All was going on very well. I shall be there again on Monday, for some hours, making up the book. It has occurred to me that in connexion with the Mark system, we may make a little change in the routine which will be calculated to improve their business habits. I will tell you what I mean, when you come home.

We left the Isle of Wight on the first, and came to Broadstairs for a fortnight, for the advantage of one of my little girls.[†1] Hearing you were at Ramsgate I went over there to report myself, and called at the Albion on the very day you left.

London looks very dull, and is dark and dreary enough after the bright sea side.—I mean to take a walk up my Highgate lane[†2] tomorrow, and satisfy myself that you have not been making any encroachments on my property.

Charley is very anxious that I should send "his love". Mr. King is keeping him very hard at it, with a view to Eton, but is doing it (I think) most sensibly and satisfactorily. Both he and Charley are highly excited on the subject, and I have little doubt that the latter will take as good a position there as any boy of his age would be likely to take.†3

The only additional piece of news I have (after being out of the world so long) is that Mrs. Dickens dreamed all last night that Rogers was learning to dance.†4 From which we are full of dismal auguries that he must be dead†5—though I don't know by what process we get at that conclusion rather than at any other.

She unites with me in sincere remembrances to yourself, and Mr. and Mrs. Brown. And I am ever, Dear Miss Coutts

Most Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Brown.†6

To EDWARD CHAPMAN, 20 OCTOBER 1849*

MS Dickens House.

Devonshire Terrace | Twentieth October 1849.

Dear Sir

Will you send me one of my portraits.†1

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Edward Chapman Esquire

To THOMAS CHAPMAN, 20 OCTOBER 1849

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Address: Thomas Chapman Esquire | 14 Montagu Place | Montagu Square.

Devonshire Terrace | Twentieth October 1849.

My Dear Sir

I believe Augustus will have shewn you (in an American Newspaper) a new proof of the villainy and unblushing falsehood of that execrable rascal Powell.†2

A reprint of my American Notes will be the next issue in my Cheap Edition, and will not occupy, in completing, more than a couple of months, I think. I hope you will see no objection to my instancing (in a new Preface) this fellow's easy connexion with an American Newspaper, as a striking proof of the justice of the estimation in which I hold that Press, and to my setting forth his history in the plainest possible terms.[†3] I think such an unmitigated villain should be denounced,[†4] and I know that it would go all over the States instantly.

Believe me | Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Chapman Esquire.

To LEWIS GAYLORD CLARK, 22 OCTOBER 1849†

MS Yale University Library.

Devonshire Terrace, London.
Monday Twenty Second October 1849.

My Dear Clark.

I have not been in London for between three and four months, having had a cottage in the Isle of Wight during that time. As no parcels were forwarded to me (only letters) I did not receive your Knickerbocker and its accompanying note, until my return home on Friday last. I immediately got a portrait (it is an impression of one that was originally published in Nickleby) and sent it by Railroad addressed as you direct. And I hope it will reach you safely one day or other.[†1]

The cholera has been, as no doubt you know, very bad in London—chiefly among the poor and badly lodged.[†2] I am happy to say we are all well, and have not lost any friends by the dire disease. It is supposed to be quite past now, and I trust in God it is.[†3]

Macready is playing with enormous success at the Haymarket Theatre.[†4] Copperfield takes a great hold, and goes on bravely. I think that is all the news I have, after my long sojourn on the seashore, except that my girls (like yours) are growing taller, though they are not tall yet—that my eldest boy is going to Eton at Christmas—and that Mrs. Dickens sends her love, in which I join as far as I lawfully may, to Mrs. Clark. I am very glad to see your portrait,[†5] and very glad to see Knickerbocker. I think the former, however, might be more like. It looks to me like the likeness of a testy, contradictory fellow—which I am sure you are not. It is still like the original, too, which is an aggravating kind of merit.[†6]

[†a]But I have another piece of news. I am going to give you a serious caution respecting a man who has been, and may possibly yet be, in New York, and who I think very likely to have fallen in your way. You know my opinion of American newspapers generally. Therefore you will believe, when you come to the end of what I am going to tell you, that I am not surprised to learn from a brother of mine, that one of them (I think it is called the New York Evening Post) has been puffing a Mr. Thomas Powell, an English Literary Gentleman, and publishing a life of me by that eminent Individual, purporting to be a part of some forthcoming book, which is, from beginning to end, one intact and complete Lie.[†1] I think Mr. Powell a very likely kind of man indeed, to form a ready connexion with a pretty large portion of the American Press.

He is a Forger and a Thief. He was Managing Clerk to an eminent Merchant's House in the City of London, and during a series of years forged and altered cheques until he had defrauded them to the extent of Thousands upon Thousands of pounds.[†2] His robberies being discovered one day, he took up his hat, went to a chemist's, bought some laudanum, walked off to a warm bath, and was found in it insensible. I don't know whether he took Laudanum enough to kill himself, but I should say he was careful to keep on the safe side. He was recovered, and forgiven by the gentlemen he had robbed—dismissed, of course, but not prosecuted. They were tender of his wife and family. After some months endurance of the misery and shame of his position, he was taken up at Croydon (ten miles from London) for passing several forged cheques to divers tradespeople in that neighbourhood—was stated to the Magistrate to be mad—and was actually confined for some time in a Lunatic Asylum, that the prosecutions against him might not go on.[†3] From the Lunatic Asylum, he found his way to New York. He arrived there, with a forged letter of recommendation to credit, purporting to come from a partner in the very house he robbed, and drew two bills upon that gentleman (in New York) which, of course, have been protested and returned.[†1] The very same House, to whose moderation he is indebted for his not working in chains in Norfolk Island at this instant, is, of course, the object of his blackest ingratitude, and is libelled in all sorts of ways—in his aforsesaid life of me.[†2]

Before his character was discovered, he wrote some plays[†3]—one dedicated to me[†4]—by pushing which he got into the houses of certain Literary men, and among others into mine, where he once dined,[†5] I am sorry to say. I know his late employers well, and tell you this story with a full and complete personal knowledge of its truth in every particular. It is under-stated.

I shall certainly relate these facts myself in a Preface to the Cheap Edition of my American Notes,[†6] which will appear in [†b]a Serial Re-Issue of my books, in some two or three months. You are at liberty to make any use of this communication that you like.[†7] I am responsible for its truth, and think your American Readers will do well to consider whom they trust to, sometimes.

Ever My Dear Clark Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS[†a†b]

To T. N. TALFOURD, 22 OCTOBER 1849

MS Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Second October 1849.

My Dear Talfourd.

You will observe that these bills[†8] are very red. They turned that color this morning, when I took them out of my desk on returning home, and remembered that I engaged to send them to Russell Square almost two months ago.

Ever affecy. Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To EDWARD COLE,[†1] 24 OCTOBER 1849*

MS Mr D. Farringdon.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Fourth October 1849.

Sir.

I beg to say in reply to your letter that the 21st. of November will suit me perfectly well.[†2]

Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Edward Cole.

To WILLIAM BRADBURY, 29 OCTOBER 1849*

MS Dartmouth College, New Hampshire.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Ninth October 1849.

My Dear Bradbury

I am delighted to get your letter this morning, and to find you in such brave health and spirits.

In all you say about the size and form of The Shadow,[†3] and the reasons for the size and form, I thoroughly concur. I have no doubt of the reasons being good.

Wait 'till you see my Model number!!! Between this and Christmas, please God, we'll have him in type, and then—Wont[†4] we have a Council!—Oh no (as one of the characters observes, in an obscure book called Oliver Twist)—by no manner of means—certainly not![†5]

Mrs. Dickens sends you her best regards, and Miss Hogarth says she thinks you are shamming.

Last Wednesday night, at the performance of King Lear at the Haymarket,[†6] there was that gay young Man, Evans[†7]—rosy, and full dressed—escorting your wife to a front row in the best box, with a sprightliness worthy of Don Giovanni!

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

P.S. They are, still, always hard at it, whenever I go to Bouverie Street—eating and drinking in the most extraordinary manner.[†8]

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 30 OCTOBER 1849

Mention in unidentified catalogue (n.d.); dated 30 Oct 49.

To MISS BLANCHE PAXTON[†1], 30 OCTOBER 1849

Mention in James Borg's A Dickens Miscellany, Christmas 1978; MS 1 p.; dated 30 Oct 49.

A page signed by CD, Forster, Jerrold, Stone, Egg, Leech[†2] and Lemon—giving her their autographs.

To AUGUSTUS TRACEY, [?OCTOBER 1849]*

MS University of Texas. Date: Tracey was married on 17 Nov 49; letter clearly before 3 Nov, when CD sent him wishes for the wedding.

[†3]You can't imagine the state of excitement in which my ladies are, about your marriage.[†4] They send their loves, and say you ought to be ashamed of yourself for having put it off so long.

Timber also wheezes forth a congratulatory bark.

Ever Heartily Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MARK LEMON, 31 OCTOBER 1849

MS Benoliel Collection.

Devonshire Terrace | Wednesday Morning Thirty First October | 1849.

My Dear Lemon.

I can't conceive what I have done with the Memorandum I made.[†5] I can't find it anywhere. In the course of the day, I will write it again from memory, and Topping shall leave it at your house this evening.

Ever affecy.
CD.

November

To JOHN LEECH, 1 NOVEMBER 1849

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: John Leech Esquire | 31 Notting Hill Terrace | Notting Hill.

Devonshire Terrace | Thursday Morning, First November | 1849.

My Dear Leech.

I forgot last night (of course) an engagement I had for next Sunday. Will you let our Ragged School appointment stand for Sunday Week, when I shall expect you to dinner at 5 ?[†1]—I have written to à Beckett.[†2]

Faithfully Ever
CHARLES DICKENS

John Leech Esquire

To W. P. SNOW, 1 NOVEMBER 1849

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

London, 1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
First November 1849.

Sir.

I have read your letter with much interest and pleasure, and I have also read (at your request) your published sketch of my life.[†3] The latter is incorrect in several particulars, beginning with the place of my birth; but the spirit in which it is written, demands, and has, my cordial and grateful recognition. If I do not now set you right as to the respects in which you are wrong, it is because if I ever corrected my volunteer biographers, I should begin a labor which would only end, in all probability, with my life itself.

Your allusion to an imposition practised on the New York public by one Mr. Thomas Powell, in the form of another life of me, renders it necessary for me to say that I have been made acquainted with its contents, and that it is, from first to last, an invention and a lie. But you will be the less surprised at this, perhaps, when I inform you that the life of this same Mr. Powell has been, for many years past, a course of forgery and theft. His history is perfectly well known to me, and to many other gentlemen now in London. He was a trusted clerk in a merchant's house for many years, and, for years, robbed his employers by innumerable acts of forgery and fraud. Being forgiven by them, when detected, he has (very naturally for such a man, as I think) libelled them ever since—even in the very composition to which I have just now referred. After being dismissed from their service, he was carried before the Magistrates at Croydon, charged with passing forged cheques to a variety of tradespeople in that neighbourhood; and only escaped the punishment due to this offence by getting some friends who had known him in the days when he was supposed to be honest, to confine him in a lunatic asylum, where he actually remained for some time as a Madman, and whence he emigrated to New York to delight and enlighten the American Public as a distinguished literary character from England.

As he has obtained money in New York, on the strength of certain bills, drawn (and cashed, I believe) on the faith of a forged letter of credit from England; and as those bills have been returned protested, with a formal declaration that he is a swindler; I presume his literary and truthful course in America is already run,—the more especially as I have myself written these particulars to a friend in that City. But in case he should be still administering to the intellectual gratification of the New York public, you are at perfect liberty to make any use of this communication that you please.[†1]

I shall always be interested to hear of your proceedings, I assure you; and the circumstances you bring to my recollection, I had not forgotten.[†2]

With all good wishes for your prosperity and success, Believe me

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. P. Snow Esquire.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, [?NOVEMBER 1849]

Mention in To Miss Kelly, 6 Nov 49; addressed to the secretary of a Glasgow Society or Institution. Date: presumably Nov, since on 6 Nov CD reported receiving an answer "by return of post".

A letter to Glasgow on Fanny Kelly's behalf.

To AUGUSTUS TRACEY, 3 NOVEMBER 1849*

MS University of Texas.

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday Third November 1849.

My Dear Tracey.

I am vexed—really in no ordinary degree—to say that we have some friends come out of Northamptonshire,[†3] who can only dine here on Monday, and to meet whom I have been obliged to bespeak two or three correspondent friends. Otherwise, throwing all ceremony to the four winds (for I wouldn't put anything so uncongenial to me, in my pocket) I would have come to you with real delight.

I wish you all joy and happiness herein, instead. And I hope to do the like on Wednesday.[†4] When, if the Colonel[†5] bores us with any of that damned nonsensical sort of arrangement to which he is so much attached, I vow to go over to the Rotch[†1] faction![†2]

[CHARLES DICKENS]

P.S. Committee at Shepherd's Bush on Tuesday.
P.P.S. I have a good (and very short) story about Miss Sesini.[†3] Whom I consider a rum 'un.

To WILLIAM BROWN, 6 NOVEMBER 1849

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Tuesday Night, Sixth November 1849.

My Dear Sir

We had a Committee at the Home today, when we transacted the usual business, and I paid all the bills. Mr. Chesterton, Mr. Illingworth, and Mr. Tennant were there with me.

I made them acquainted with the contents of the Bishop's[†4] letter from Adelaide, which made upon all of them, as it had previously done upon me, an impression of heavy disappointment and great vexation.[†5] God send we may do better with some of the others! (I must claim, once more, to have been never a believer in Goldsmith.[†1] And I think the Bishop's emphasizing marriage as their only chance of reclamation, most important. That idea I have steadily had in view, always.)

We found that Isabella Gordon was endeavouring to make a party in the house against Mrs. Morson and Mrs. Macartney[†2]—was disturbing the general peace again—and intended coming to us with complaints. We investigated them with the utmost care, confronted her with Mrs. Morson, and were convinced that her whole story was utterly false and malicious. We ordered her to her room while we considered the subject, and she danced upstairs before Mrs. Morson, holding her skirts like a lady at a ball.

We were all of opinion that the authority of the place must be upheld—especially after the receipt of such news from abroad as the bishop's letter put us in possession of—and that however repugnant to our own feelings it might be, our duty to Miss Coutts and her beneficent undertaking must be discharged, and could only be discharged in one way. We therefore had her down again some time afterwards, and, to her utter bewilderment and amazement and that of the whole house, dismissed her.

Hannah Myers,[†3] who was unquestionably in concert with her, we spoke to in like manner, and confronted with both ladies. Her whole statement was evidently false, and her malignity against them (for the time) very intense and passionate. We informed her that after such conduct she could have no marks whatever for a week, and that she would, on the first repetition of such behaviour, be inexorably dismissed. She was not in the least prepared for this, and was quite as much amazed as the other.

A girl of the name of Sesina, lately come from Mr. Tracey's, and who I am persuaded is the pertest, vainest, (preposterous as the word seems in such a connexion) and most deceitful little Minx in this town—I never saw such a draggled piece of fringe upon the skirts of all that is bad—was the third party. I gave this young lady to understand, in the plainest and most emphatic words, that she appeared to us to misunderstand the place—and its object. That she must thoroughly change her whole feelings and demeanour, and put on a very different character, and conduct herself towards both the superintendents as a new creature altogether, if she had the least hope of remaining. My impression is that she will not remain; and I have no doubt, after taking her history and observing her closely while she tried to gloze it, that it will be much better for us if she goes away.

It was five o'Clock, and dark, when we had got to this. As it was quite impossible to say what Isabella Gordon might or might not do if she were left alone with them, Mr. Chesterton and I remained there, until she went away. As she had no clothes she departed, of necessity, in those she had on, and in one of the rough shawls. We gave her half a crown to get a night's lodging, and directed her to a certain charity where she is sure to be taken in if she chooses, and if she means to work. Her going away, was a most pitiable sight. They all cried bitterly (Mrs. Morson and Mrs. Macartney included) and Rachael Bradley held to her skirts as she went out at the door, and implored us to let her stay and to give her one more trial—sobbing and weeping terribly. The girl herself, now that it had really come to this, cried, and hung down her head, and when she got out at the door, stopped and leaned against the house for a minute or two before she went to the gate—in a most miserable and wretched state. As it was impossible to relent, with any hope of doing good, we could not do so. We passed her in the lane, afterwards, going slowly away, and wiping her face with her shawl. A more forlorn and hopeless thing altogether, I never saw.

It has made a great impression on the rest, unquestionably. How long it may last, Heaven knows. As I know you will report this, all, to Miss Coutts I do not write to her about it,—the rather as I am in a dull state myself, just before going to bed, with the whole of the sad picture in my mind. Pray convey my best remembrances to Miss Coutts, and to Mrs. Brown.

I am glad to receive your hopeful and interesting account of Paris. I have heard here that the Legitimist party are plotting darkly in the desperate hope of setting on the Throne another of that ill-fated and incapable House.[†1] You see no signs of that, I suppose?

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS FANNY KELLY, 6 NOVEMBER 1849

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: Miss Kelly | 30 Moscow Road | Bayswater.

Devonshire Terrace. Sixth November 1849.

Dear Miss Kelly

I remembered a reason, after you left me, for delaying my letter to Glasgow a few days. I received, by return of post, the enclosed answer. Will you write me such a business letter on it, as I can send to the Secretary in reply; returning me his note at the same time?

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Kelly.

To MISS M. E. TAYLER,[†1] 6 NOVEMBER 1849*

MS Mr Kenneth Tayler. Address: M. E. Tayler | 1 Park Place | Loughborough Road | Brixton.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Sixth November 1849.

I am uncertain whether the correspondent to whom I address these few words be a gentleman or lady—and, if the latter, whether she be married or single.[†2] As the fault is not mine, I trust I need not apologize for the superscription of this letter.

In my opinion the Street Punch is one of those extravagant reliefs from the realities of life which would lose its hold upon the people if it were made moral and instructive. I regard it as quite harmless in its influence, and as an outrageous joke which no one in existence would think of regarding as an incentive to any course of action, or a model for any kind of conduct. It is possible, I think, that one secret source of the pleasure very generally derived from this performance, as from the more boisterous parts of a Christmas Pantomime, is the satisfaction the spectator feels in the circumstance that likenesses of men and women can be so knocked about, without any pain or suffering.

In countries where Punch is still a censor of the follies of the day, his influence is not beneficial. In the most popular Theatre in Naples, that is still his character every day and night; and Naples is perhaps the wickedest City upon earth.

CHARLES DICKENS

To WILLIAM BROWN, 7 NOVEMBER 1849

MS Morgan Library. Address: W. Brown Esquire | Hotel Bristol | Paris.

Devonshire Terrace. | Wednesday Seventh November 1849.

My Dear Sir

As a sequel to my letter of last night, I write to let you know that at halfpast eight this morning Mrs. Morson came here in a fly to tell me that little Sesina had been very insolent last night, and had been ordered to her own room; and that this morning she positively refused to get up, or to return any answer whatever, to any of the remonstrances that were made to her. In consequence of her behaviour they had kept the gardener in the house all night—a precaution at which I could not help laughing, when I thought of its object being a little dumpy atom of a girl whose head may be somewhere on a level with Mrs. Macartney's waist.

I directed Mrs. Morson to go back, give her her own clothes, and tell her she was to dress herself, and leave the place directly; or that when I came, in half an hour, if I found her still in bed, or found her there at all, I should send for a policeman and give her in custody for being there without our consent and making a disturbance. On receipt of this message she parleyed a little, and, after making a slight pretence of being ill, th[r]ew her nightcap to one end of the room and her nightgown to the other, and proceeded, very leisurely, to dress herself. On coming down stairs, she objected that she couldn't go away in the rain, on which she was told that she had better sit in the long room then, 'till I came. Declining this offer, she walked off. I met her in the lane, taking her departure. Before she went, she told Mrs. Morson "that she know'd Miss Coutts's address, and would write her a good long letter, telling her what treatment was had there." I passed her afterwards, walking in a jaunty way up Notting Hill, and refreshing herself with an occasional contemplation of the shop windows.

All the rest were very quiet, and Hannah Myers was very much subdued. My belief is that this Sesina will join Isabella Gordon somewhere, today. I think she would corrupt a Nunnery in a fortnight.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

W. Brown Esquire.

To F. M. EVANS, 7 NOVEMBER 1849

Extract in N, II, 183 (from catalogue source); MS 1 p.; dated 7 Nov 49.

Devonshire Terrace | 7th November 1849

I have great doubts . . . whether it is expedient for you to renew the subject with Jerrold.[†1]

To JOHN LEECH, 7 NOVEMBER 1849

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Address: John Leech Esquire | 31 Notting Hill Terrace | Notting Hill.

Devonshire Terrace | Seventh November 1849.

My Dear Leech.

Of course you never brought away a Cigar case of mine from Hivins's,[†1] under a pledge to restore the same to me?

I give in, about the Mannings.[†2] The doleful weather, the beastly nature of the scene, the having no excuse for going (after seeing Courvoisier),[†3] and the constantly-recurring desire to avoid another such horrible and odious impression, decide me to cry off.[†4]

If we don't meet before, don't forget 5 on Sunday.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To JOHN LEECH, 9 NOVEMBER 1849

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: Favored by the Ladies. | John Leech Esquire | Notting Hill Terrace. Date: 9 Nov, Lord Mayor's Day.

Devonshire Terrace | Friday Lord Mayor's Day | 1849

My Dear Leech.

It's Antony and Cleopatra at Sadlers Wells tonight.[†5] If you should be disposed to go, I am your man.

Faithfully Always
CD

To CHARLES MANBY, 10 NOVEMBER 1849*

MS Private.

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday Evening | Tenth November 1849.

My Dear Sir

I write (in great haste) to say that I am engaged today to an annual party—a birthday—at Talfourd's[†1] which admits of no "divided duty".[†2] I should have written to the gentleman you introduce, and left a card on my way, but there is no address to his note! Whether he is East, West, North, or South, I have no idea.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Manby Esquire

To JOHN LEECH, 12 NOVEMBER 1849

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Address: Wait. | John Leech Esquire | 31 Notting Hill Terrace.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Twelfth November | 1849.

My Dear Leech.

We have taken the whole of the roof[†3] (and the back kitchen) for the extremely moderate sum of Ten Guineas, or two guineas each.[†4] The passage would clearly have been a dismal failure, and I am not sure but that even this arrangement may turn out a Do.

It is proposed that we meet to supper, at the Piazza Coffee House Covent Garden, at 11 exactly. But if you should like to wile away the evening anywhere, and will come here at any time you like, I will be ready for you.

Tell me what you say to this last propogicion, by Bearer.

Ever Faithfully

CD

To THE EDITOR OF THE TIMES, 13 NOVEMBER 1849

Text from The Times, 14 Nov 49.

Devonshire-terrace, Tuesday, Nov. 13.

Sir,

I was a witness of the execution at Horsemonger-lane this morning. I went there with the intention of observing the crowd gathered to behold it, and I had excellent opportunities of doing so, at intervals all through the night, and continuously from daybreak until after the spectacle was over.

I do not address you on the subject with any intention of discussing the abstract question of capital punishment, or any of the arguments of its opponents or advocates. I simply wish to turn this dreadful experience to some account for the general good, by taking the readiest and most public means of adverting to an intimation given by Sir G. Grey in the last session of Parliament, that the Government might be induced to give its support to a measure making the infliction of capital punishment a private solemnity within the prison walls (with such guarantees for the last sentence of the law being inexorably and surely administered as should be satisfactory to the public at large),[†1] and of most earnestly beseeching Sir G. Grey, as a solemn duty which he owes to society, and a responsibility which he cannot for ever put away, to originate such a legislative change himself.

I believe that a sight so inconceivably awful as the wickedness and levity of the immense crowd collected at that execution this morning could be imagined by no man, and could be presented in no heathen land under the sun.[†2] The horrors of the gibbet and of the crime which brought the wretched murderers to it, faded in my mind before the atrocious bearing, looks and language, of the assembled spectators. When I came upon the scene at midnight, the shrillness of the cries and howls that were raised from time to time, denoting that they came from a concourse of boys and girls already assembled in the best places, made my blood run cold. As the night went on, screeching, and laughing, and yelling in strong chorus of parodies on Negro melodies, with substitutions of "Mrs. Manning" for "Susannah," and the like, were added to these. When the day dawned, thieves, low prostitutes, ruffians and vagabonds of every kind, flocked on to the ground, with every variety of offensive and foul behaviour. Fightings, faintings, whistlings, imitations of Punch, brutal jokes, tumultuous demonstrations of indecent delight when swooning women were dragged out of the crowd by the police with their dresses disordered, gave a new zest to the general entertainment. When the sun rose brightly—as it did—it gilded thousands upon thousands of upturned faces, so inexpressibly odious in their brutal mirth or callousness, that a man had cause to feel ashamed of the shape he wore, and to shrink from himself, as fashioned in the image of the Devil. When the two miserable creatures who attracted all this ghastly sight about them were turned quivering into the air, there was no more emotion, no more pity, no more thought that two immortal souls had gone to judgment, no more restraint in any of the previous obscenities, than if the name of Christ had never been heard in this world, and there were no belief among men but that they perished like the beasts.[†1]

I have seen, habitually, some of the worst sources of general contamination and corruption in this country, and I think there are not many phases of London life that could surprise me. I am solemnly convinced that nothing that ingenuity could devise to be done in this city, in the same compass of time, could work such ruin as one public execution, and I stand astounded and appalled by the wickedness it exhibits. I do not believe that any community can prosper where such a scene of horror and demoralization as was enacted this morning outside Horsemonger-lane Gaol is presented at the very doors of good citizens, and is passed by, unknown or forgotten. And when, in our prayers and thanksgivings for the season, we are humbly expressing before God our desire to remove the moral evils of the land, I would ask your readers to consider whether it is not a time to think of this one, and to root it out.[†2]

I am, Sir, your faithful servant,
CHARLES DICKENS.

To THOMAS MITTON, 13 NOVEMBER 1849

MS Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Tuesday Evening | Thirteenth November 1849.

My Dear Mitton

I dont understand from your note (which I am sorry my absence rendered necessary) on what terms the thousand pounds are required. For how long a term is it to be lent, and when is he or I to have the privilege of calling it in?

I have the money quite ready, and should be very glad to get 5 per cent instead of 3 & a quarter for it. But I cannot decide whether to lend it or no, without having considered these particulars.

I shall be at home tomorrow,—and on Thursday from 1 until 2—and on Friday pretty well all day. Or if you will write to me again, explaining what I want to know, I will reply immediately.

Ever Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

To THE HON. MRS RICHARD WATSON, [14] NOVEMBER 1849

MS Huntington Library. Date: incorrectly dated by CD; Wednesday was 14 Nov 49.

Devonshire Terrace | Wednesday Night | Thirteenth November 1849

My Dear Mrs Watson.

Many thanks for the enclosed. I have "made a note" (Captain Cuttle like) of the Eton particulars, and beg you to thank Mr. James,[†1] cordially, in my name, for them.

I am glad "the other and the worser half" of your estimable self was interested on Sunday. I have seen stranger things since, whereat my hair is even now standing on end.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To HENRY CHRISTY,[†2] 15 NOVEMBER 1849

Text from D, XII (1916), 328.

Fifteenth November, 1849.

My Dear Sir,

I am extremely gratified by the receipt of your letter—the more so as it is one of many on the same subject which inspire me with great hope of success in abolishing the dreadful evil of public executions.[†1]

The only publication in which my influence could assist you in carrying out your proposed plan,[†2] is my own Copperfield.[†3] But for that, about considerably more than double the number you propose to print would be required.

I doubt, myself, whether by stitching the letter into the Magazines, you would address any considerable audience at present not secured. The Times has carried it to enormous numbers of readers—I believe it was in some of the evening papers too; and I daresay it will be reproduced in some of the weekly papers.[†4]

It is heartily at your service for the philanthropic purpose you contemplate, but I beg you to consider the doubt I have suggested.

Dear Sir, Your faithful Servant,
CHARLES DICKENS

Henry Christy, Esquire.

To JOHN FORSTER, [15 NOVEMBER 1849]

Extract in F, VI, vi, 536. Date: 15 Nov according to Forster.

I think it is necessary to decide against the special pleader.[†5] Your reasons quite suffice. I am not sure but that the banking house might do. I will consider it in a walk.

To CHARLES GILPIN, 15 NOVEMBER 1849

MS Yale University Library.

Devonshire Terrace. | Thursday Evening | Fifteenth November 1849.

Dear Mr. Gilpin.

In reply to your letter of yesterday (which other engagements have prevented my sooner answering) I regret that I cannot attend the Meeting on Monday next,[†1] because I think, and have thought for some time past, that the general mind is not in that state in which the total abolition of Capital Punishment can be advantageously advocated by Public Meetings.

I believe that the enormous crimes which have been committed within the last year or two, and are fresh, unhappily, in the public memory, have indisposed many good people to share in the responsibility of abandoning the last punishment of the Law. And I know that there are many such who would lend their utmost aid to an effort for the suppression of public executions for evermore, though they cannot conscientiously abrogate capital punishment in extreme cases.

Now, it seems to me, when we know what a painful and brutalizing sight a public Execution is, and when we know that we must do a great national service by bringing it to pass that such a sight shall never take place again, that the right course is to enlist this help (otherwise rejected) in behalf of the great reform of causing capital punishment to be privately and solemnly inflicted. I have not the least faith in the power of any amount of public meetings that can be held, to advance the abolition of Capital Punishment one jot, for a long time to come. But I feel convinced that the other vast improvement could be compassed in a very short time, and that it would save a prodigious amount of harm, indecency, and horror.

Therefore I have resolved to limit my endeavours to the bringing about of that improvement as one greatly to be desired, certain to be supported by a very general concurrence, and irresistible (as I think) if temperately urged, by any Government. I wish I could learn that such a Meeting as that which you propose to hold on Monday night, had resolved to do so too.[†2]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Gilpin.

To CHARLES F. ELLERMAN,[†3] 16 NOVEMBER 1849*

MS Dickens House.

Devonshire Terrace | Sixteenth November 1849.

Sir.

In reply to your letter I feel it right distinctly to assure you that you are mistaken in supposing that I have the power of essentially serving you, or of serving you at all, in reference to your Drama.[†1] I never communicate with any Manager on such subjects, or with any one, as a Mediator for any purpose. Nor do I ever give an opinion on any such production for the purpose of its being published or used. You have no idea of the enormous number of applications I receive, every week of my life, to break through this rule, or you would at once understand why I am forced to observe it.

If you should still wish me, after this assurance, to make an appointment with you, I shall be happy to do so for the end of next week. But I beg you to receive this assurance as final in all respects, and one which no circumstances could affect.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles F Ellerman Esquire.

To H. W. PICKERSGILL,[†2] 16 NOVEMBER 1849*

MS Harvard College Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Sixteenth November 1849.

My Dear Sir

Allow me to thank you for your cordial sympathy and encouragement, and to assure you in a kindred spirit that it is not thrown away.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

H. W. Pickersgill Esquire

To MRS SYDNEY SMITH, 16 NOVEMBER 1849*

MS New College, Oxford.

Devonshire Terrace | Sixteenth November 1849.

My Dear Mrs. Smith.

Your handwriting is always a most welcome sight to me for many reasons. Believe me, I am cheered and encouraged by your support, and that every word of your letter (in which I thoroughly agree) gives me new heart.

I hope to do something with this "great enormity", before long. Such proofs of a general concurrence in the necessity of the change we advocate, have poured in upon me since Wednesday Morning that I begin to hope it may be brought about at no distant day. I am considering what to do next, towards that righteous end.

Ever Faithfully Yours

Mrs. Smith.

To JOHN FORSTER, [17 NOVEMBER 1849]

Extract in F, VI, vi, 536. Date: 17 Nov according to Forster.

Banking business impracticable on account of the confinement: which would stop the story, I foresee. I have taken, for the present at all events, the proctor.[†1] I am wonderfully in harness, and nothing galls or frets.

To DOUGLAS JERROLD, 17 NOVEMBER 1849

MS Mr Douglas Jerrold.

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday Seventeenth November | 1849.

My Dear Jerrold

In a letter I have received from Gilpin this morning, he quotes a recent letter from you, in which you deprecate the "mystery" of private hanging.[†2]

Will you consider what punishment there is, except Death, to which "mystery" does not attach? Will you consider whether all the improvements in prisons and punishments that have been made within the last twenty years, have, or have not, been all productive of "mystery"? I can remember very well, when the silent system was objected to as mysterious, and opposed to the genius of English Society. Yet there is no question that it has been a great benefit. The Prison Vans are mysterious vehicles, but surely they are better than the old system of marching prisoners through the streets chained to a long chain, like the galley slaves in Don Quixote.[†3] Is there no mystery about transportation, and our manner of sending men away to Norfolk Island or elsewhere? None in abandoning the use of a man's name, and knowing him only by a number? Is not the whole improved and altered system from beginning to end a mystery? I wish I could induce you to feel justified in leaving that word to the Platform-people, on the strength of your knowledge of what crime was, and what its punishments were, in the days when there was no mystery connected with these things, and all was as open as Bridewell when Ned Ward[†4] went to see the women whipped.[†5]

[CHARLES DICKENS][†6]

To THE EDITOR OF THE TIMES, 17 NOVEMBER 1849

Text from The Times, 19 Nov 49.

Devonshire-terrace, Saturday, Nov. 17.

Sir,

When I wrote to you on Tuesday last I had no intention of troubling you again; but as one of your correspondents has to-day expressed a reasonable desire that I would explain myself more clearly,[†1] and as I hope I may do no injury to the cause I would serve by stating my views upon it a little more in detail, I shall be glad to do so, if you will allow me the opportunity.

My positions in reference to the demoralizing nature of public executions are—

First, that they chiefly attract as spectators the lowest, the most depraved, the most abandoned of mankind; in whom they inspire no wholesome emotions whatever.

Secondly, that the public infliction of a violent death is not a salutary spectacle for any class of people; but that it is in the nature of things that on the class by whom it is generally witnessed it should have a debasing and hardening influence.

On the first head I must appeal again to my own experience of the execution of last Tuesday morning; to all the evidence that has ever been taken on the subject, showing that executions have been the favourite sight of convicts of all descriptions; to the knowledge possessed by the magistracy and police of the general character of such crowds; to the police reports that are sure to follow their assemblage; to the unvarying description of them given in the newspapers; to the indisputable fact that no decent father is willing that his son, and no decent master is willing that his apprentices or servants, should mingle in them; to the indisputable fact that all society, its dregs excepted, recoil from them as masses of abomination and brutality. (That there were not more robberies committed at this last execution was not the fault of the assembled thieves, whose numbers on the occasion the Home Secretary may easily learn from the Commissioners in Scotland-yard, but the merit of the police, whose vigilance was beyond all praise.)

On the second head, after a passing allusion to the hardening influence which familiarity even with natural death produces on coarse minds, I must again refer to my own experience. Nothing would have been a greater comfort to me—nothing would have so much relieved in my mind the unspeakable terrors of the scene, as to have been enabled to believe that any portion of the immense crowd—that any grains of sand in the vast moral desert stretching away on every side—were moved to any sentiments of fear, repentance, pity, or natural horror by what they saw upon the drop. It was impossible to look around and rest in any such belief. With every consideration and respect for your suggestion that the concourse may have been belying their mental struggles by frantic exaggerations, I am confident that if you had been there beside me, seeing what I saw, and hearing what I heard, you could never have admitted the thought. Such a state of mind has its signs and tokens equally with any other, and no such signs and tokens were there. The mirth was not hysterical, the shoutings and fightings were not the efforts of a strained excitement seeking to vent itself in any relief. The whole was unmistakeably[†1] callous and bad. As the ferocious woman who was charged on the same day with threatening to murder another in the midst of the multitude, proclaiming that she had a knife about her, and would have her heart's blood, and be hanged on the same gibbet with her namesake, Mrs. Manning, whose death she had come to see—as she had her evil passions excited to the utmost by the scene, so had all the crowd. I believe this was the whole and sole effect of what they had come to see, and I hold that no human being, not being the better for such a sight, could go away without being the worse for it.

To prevent such frightful spectacles in a Christian country, and all the incalculable evils they engender, I would have the last sentence of the law executed with comparative privacy within the prison walls. Before I state how, let me strengthen this proposal with some words of Fielding on this subject, to whose profound knowledge of human nature you, I know, will render full justice:—

"The execution should be in some degree private. And here the poets will again assist us. Foreigners have found fault with the cruelty of the English drama, in representing frequent murders upon the stage. In fact, this is not only cruel, but highly injudicious: a murder behind the scenes, if the poet knows how to manage it, will affect the audience with greater terror than if it was acted before their eyes. Of this we have an instance in the murder of the King in Macbeth. Terror hath, I believe, been carried higher by this single instance than by all the blood which hath been spilt upon the stage. To the poets I may add the priests, whose politics have never been doubted. Those of Egypt in particular, where the sacred mysteries were first devised, well knew the use of hiding from the eyes of the vulgar what they intended should inspire them with the greatest awe and dread. The mind of man is so much more capable of magnifying than his eye, that I question whether every object is not lessened by being looked upon, and this more especially when the passions are concerned; for those are ever apt to fancy much more satisfaction in those objects which they affect, and much more of mischief in those which they abhor, than are really to be found in either. If executions, therefore, were so contrived that few could be present at them, they would be much more shocking and terrible to the crowd without doors than at present, as well as much more dreadful to the criminals themselves."[†1]

From the moment of a murderer's being sentenced to death, I would dismiss him to the dread obscurity to which the wisest judge upon the bench consigned the murderer Rush.[†2] I would allow no curious visitors to hold any communication with him; I would place every obstacle in the way of his sayings and doings being served up in print on Sunday mornings for the perusal of families. His execution within the walls of the prison should be conducted with every terrible solemnity that careful consideration could devise. Mr. Calcraft,[†3] the hangman (of whom I have some information in reference to this last occasion), should be restrained in his unseemly briskness, in his jokes, his oaths, and his brandy. To attend the execution I would summon a jury of 24, to be called the Witness Jury, eight to be summoned on a low qualification, eight on a higher, eight on a higher still; so that it might fairly represent all classes of society. There should be present, likewise, the governor of the gaol, the chaplain, the surgeon, and other officers, the sheriffs of the county or city, and two inspectors of prisons. All these should sign a grave and solemn form of certificate (the same in every case) that on such a day, at such an hour, in such a gaol, for such a crime, such a murderer was hanged in their sight. There should be another certificate from the officers of the prison that the person hanged was that person, and no other; a third, that that person was buried. These should be posted on the prison-gate for 21 days, printed in the Gazette, and exhibited in other public places; and during the hour of the body's hanging I would have the bells of all the churches in that town or city tolled, and all the shops shut up, that all might be reminded of what was being done.

I submit to you that, with the law so changed, the public would (as is right) know much more of the infliction of this tremendous punishment than they know of the infliction of any other. There are not many common subjects, I think, of which they know less than transportation; and yet they never doubt that when a man is ordered to be sent abroad he goes abroad. The details of the commonest prison in London are unknown to the public at large, but they are quite satisfied that prisoners said to be in this or that gaol are really there and really undergo its discipline. The "mystery" of private executions is objected to; but has not mystery been the character of every improvement in convict treatment and prison discipline effected within the last 20 years? From the police van to Norfolk Island, are not all the changes changes that make the treatment of the prisoner mysterious. His seclusion in his conveyance hither and thither from the public sight, instead of his being walked through the streets, strung with 20 more to a chain, like the galley-slaves in Don Quixotte[†1] (as I remember to have seen in my school-days),[†2] makes a mystery of him. His being known by a number instead of by a name, and his being under the rigorous discipline of the associated silent system—to say nothing of the solitary, which I regard as a mistake—is all mysterious. I cannot understand that the mystery of such an execution as I propose would be other than a fitting climax to all these wise regulations, or why, if there be anything in this objection, we should not return to the days when ladies paid visits to highwaymen, drinking their punch in the condemned cells of Newgate, or Ned Ward, the London spy, went upon a certain regular day of the week to Bridewell to see the women whipped.

Another class of objector I know there are, who, desiring the total abolition of capital punishment, will have nothing less; and who, not doubting the fearful influence of public executions, would have it protracted for an indefinite term, rather than spare the demoralization they do not dispute, at the risk of losing sight for a while of their final end. But of these I say nothing, considering them, however good and pure in intention, unreasonable, and not to be argued with.

With many thanks to you for your courtesy, and begging most earnestly to assure you that I write in a deep conviction that I incurred a duty when I became a witness of the execution on Tuesday last, from which nothing ought to move me, and which every hour's reflection strengthens,[†3]

I am, Sir, your faithful servant,

CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [20 NOVEMBER 1849]

Extract in F, VI, vi, 536. Date: 20 Nov according to Forster.

Copperfield done after two days' very hard work indeed; and I think a smashing number.[†4] His first dissipation[†5] I hope will be found worthy of attention, as a piece of grotesque truth.

To R.P. GILLIES,[†1] [?NOVEMBER 1849]

Mention in To Roscoe, 23 Nov 49. Date: probably shortly before that letter.

To MRS OLLIFFE,[†2] 20 NOVEMBER 1849*

MS Mrs David H. Clarke.

Devonshire Terrace | Twentieth November 1849.

My Dear Mrs. Olliffe

You did not mean to give me a reproachful shock in the sight of your pretty handwriting, but you did. My conscience, so awakened, is very hard with me for that I have not written to you before. If you knew what an enormous number of letters, chiefly about nothing, I am obliged to write to all sorts and conditions of men (and women), and how regularly I correspond with you in intention, you would quite forgive me, and regard me as the best of correspondents.

I hope you like the second letter no worse than the first.[†3] It is a great pleasure to me to think of you, so far off,[†4] watching me so nearly. Accept the earnest assurance of my regard and friendship (in which the other and the worser half of you is included) and always believe me

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Olliffe.

To MR SHUCKARD,[†5] 20 NOVEMBER 1849*

MS Fales Collection, New York University Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Twentieth November 1849.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his Compliments to Mr. Shuckard, and begs to inform him that the passage in question,[†6] is to be found in "An enquiry into the causes of the late increase of robbers &c" to be found in the last Volume of Murphy's Edition of Fielding's works.[†7]

To DR SOUTHWOOD SMITH, 20 NOVEMBER 1849*

MS Mr W. A. Foyle.

Devonshire Terrace | Twentieth Novr. 1849.

My Dear Dr. Smith

I am sincerely obliged both to you and to Lord Ashley[†1] for the trouble you have taken. The latter interprets my wish quite accurately.

I will take a share in the permanent Society.[†2] If you will kindly give the Treasurer (whenever you may happen to see him) the cheque you hold on account, I will pay him the balance if he will communicate with me.[†3]

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Dr. Southwood Smith

To THE REV. EDWARD TAGART, 20 NOVEMBER 1849

Text from N, II, 186.

Devonshire Terrace | Twentieth November 1849

My Dear Sir,

I write in the midst of such a roaring sea of correspondence, brought upon me by those two letters in The Times, that I seem to have no hope of land.

I am very sorry to say that I am engaged this afternoon; otherwise I should have had real gratification in coming to see you.

I quite understood about the enclosed. I am glad we think so nearly alike.

I assure you that your warm and earnest expressions of friendship give me the truest pleasure, and that I cordially reciprocate them.
Best regards to all.

In great haste, | Ever faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 20 NOVEMBER 1849

Extract in P. J. Dobell catalogue No. 281 (1919); MS 3rd. person; dated Devonshire Terrace, 20 Nov 49.

Thanking his correspondent for his gratifying and welcome letter.

To CHARLES BRAITHWAITE,[†4] 21 NOVEMBER 1849

Mention in N, II, 186.

To THOMAS CROFTON CROKER, [?NOVEMBER 1849]

Summary in Hodgson's catalogue, Jan 1920. Date: perhaps shortly after 21 Nov.

Referring to the Newsvendors' Dinner on 21 Nov 49.

To THE REV. THOMAS BINNEY,[†1] 23 NOVEMBER 1849

Extract in N, II, 186 (from catalogue source); dated Devonshire Terrace, 23 Nov 49.

Dear Sir,

I am happy to hear from you again and thank you very much for your letter. . . . I have not yet had leisure to read your little book[†2] through but I have read the passage to which you call my attention,[†3] and some others; and have been greatly pleased with their good sense, good purpose, and earnestness.

Very faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To THOMAS ROSCOE,[†4] 23 NOVEMBER 1849*

MS Mr Leonard Bloom.

Devonshire Terrace | Friday Night Twenty Third Novr. 1849.

Sir

Before receiving your letter, I had written [Mr. R. Gillies].[†5]

Communications like his, come to me—not by twos or threes, but by scores upon scores. If I were a rich nobleman or banker, instead of what I am, I could not nearly keep pace with them. When [Mr. Gillies][†5] first wrote to me, I made careful enquiries concerning him, of a gentleman whom you and I know and respect. The information that he gave me, assured me that in the pressure of such demands which is continually upon me, I could hope to do him no real good whatever.[†1] Therefore, I must include this among many constrained refusals, even after your communication, to which I attach no slight weight.[†2]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

T. Roscoe Esquire.

To R. J. WATTS,[†3] 23 NOVEMBER 1849

Extract in Newark Galleries catalogue, Oct 1932; MS 2 pp.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 23 Nov 49; addressed to R. J. Watts, according to Sotheby's catalogue, 13 Dec 1911.

I know of no place of resort in London where bad characters can find any sight half so bad in its influence upon them as a public execution—half so indecent and bad itself—or at all like it in any respect.

To HENRY CHRISTY, 24 NOVEMBER 1849

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

Devonshire Terrace. |
Saturday Night | Twenty Fourth November 1849.

Dear Sir

I regret to say that I fear you are too late for Copperfield, and that the No. will be working before you can get your bills to the Publishers. I am leaving town for a few days,[†4] but have written to Mr. Evans (Messrs. Bradbury and Evans 11 Bouverie Street Fleet Street) that, in case you should communicate with him on the subject and there should be yet time, your republication of my letter is to be stitched into the No. without any charge. He will inform you how many they can undertake positively.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Henry Christy Esquire.

To LOUIS D'ELBOUX,[†5] 24 NOVEMBER 1849

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Address: Louis D'Elboux Esquire | Regents Park | Millbrook | Southampton.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park
Twenty Fourth November 1849.

My Dear Louis.

I have had great pleasure in the receipt of your letter. I am sure you wrote it in the spirit you explain to me;—and that, in its earnestness and sincerity, is above all price.

Your account of your happiness in life,[†1] is quite delightful to me. It cannot be very far short of a quarter of a century, since I saw or heard of you;[†2] but it is so difficult to realize that passage of time, in a heap, that when I came to your mention of ten children[†3] I was quite as much amazed as if, instead of having eight of my own, I hadn't one.

My father and mother are alive, and very well. They shall see your letter, and I daresay one of them will answer for both of them that they are generally steady in London, the whole year round. Fanny my eldest sister, died (poor girl!) last September twelvemonth. All the rest are living and married, and doing well.

In the fine time of the year, I make flying expeditions about the country, pretty often. It is not at all improbable that one of these may bring me, some summer day, to Southampton for half an hour. If that should ever come to pass, I shall present myself before you (but not, as of yore, in a Prussian jacket, and a soldierly young cap),[†4] and try if you know me.

All happiness, and my good wishes, be with you and all yours!

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Louis D'Elboux Esquire

As I write your name, I wonder whether this will find you still sitting over an immense copper-plate! Your hair will have recovered from that fever you had—and fallen off again, perhaps—by this time!

To F. M. EVANS, [?24 NOVEMBER 1849]

Mention in To Christy, 24 Nov 49. Date: presumably written the same day.

To RICHARD BENTLEY, 26 NOVEMBER 1849*

MS Berg Collection.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Twenty Sixth November | 1849.

Dear Sir.

I observe that you advertize for republication in this country, a book recently published in America by one Mr. Thomas Powell, called The living Authors of England.

I feel quite sure that you don't know Mr. Thomas Powell, and that you must be wholly unacquainted with his history—of which I have felt it necessary to send to America, some particulars. I think that after the receipt of this, you will not republish his book without further and careful enquiry. But I beg to say that if it be republished here by any one, I shall immediately publish my knowledge of Mr. Thomas Powell, which is of a rather startling and quite conclusive character.[†1]

I am Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esquire.

To MR DANIELL,[†2] 27 NOVEMBER 1849*

MS Private.

Rockingham Castle, Northamptonshire
Twenty Seventh November 1849.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Daniell, and in reply to his letter (which has been forwarded to him from London, whence he is absent for a short time) begs to acknowledge the receipt of that obliging communication, and to return his cordial thanks for it.

To MISS JOLL, 27 NOVEMBER 1849

MS Berg Collection.

Rockingham Castle, Northamptonshire
Twenty Seventh November 1849.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Miss Joll. He is on principle opposed to Capital Punishment, but believing that many earnest and sincere people who are favorable to its retention[†3] in extreme cases, would unite in any temperate effort to abolish the evils of Public Executions, and that the consequences of Public Executions are disgraceful and horrible, he has taken the course with which Miss Joll is acquainted, as the most hopeful, and as one undoubtedly calculated to benefit society at large.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT,[†4] 29 NOVEMBER 1849

Extract in T. F. Madigan's Autograph Bulletin (n.d.); MS 1 p.; dated Rockingham [Castle], 29 Nov 49.

I will look over the book, and consult with you when we meet presently. The "Rivals" is more droll, as a mere piece of drollery, but the "School for Scandal" is a more delightful piece of comedy. Will you kindly send me "Nickleby"?

To RICHARD BENTLEY, 30 NOVEMBER 1849*

MS Berg Collection.

Rockingham Castle, Northamptonshire. | Thirtieth November 1849.

Dear Sir

I should have acknowledged the receipt of your very obliging letter before now, but that I have been staying here all the week, and did not receive it in due course. I address this to New Burlington Street, in the hope that it may reach you sooner than it would if I sent it to Brighton.

I have several reasons for begging you to get some other chairman in the matter of Dr. Cooke Taylor.[†1] But I shall be happy to attend the meeting,[†2] and will make a point of doing so. I will move or second anything that you may think expedient—and indeed you may command and rely upon me in any respect, with the single exception I have mentioned.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esquire.

To JOHN FORSTER, 30 NOVEMBER 1849

Text from F, VI, vi, 534-5.

Rockingham Castle: Friday, thirtieth of November, 1849.

Picture to yourself, my dear F, a large old castle, approached by an ancient keep, portcullis, &c, &c, filled with company, waited on by six-and-twenty servants;[†3] the slops (and wine-glasses) continually being emptied; and my clothes (with myself in them) always being carried off to all sorts of places,[†4] and you will have a faint idea of the mansion in which I am at present staying. I should have written to you yesterday, but for having had a very busy day. Among the guests is a Miss B,[†1] sister of the Honourable Miss B[†2] (of Salem, Mass.), whom we once met at the house of our distinguished literary countryman Colonel Landor.[†3] This lady is renowned as an amateur actress, so last night we got up in the great hall some scenes from the School for Scandal; the scene with the lunatic on the wall, from the Nicholas Nickleby[†4] of Major-General the Hon. C. Dickens (Richmond, Va.); some conjuring; and then finished off with country-dances; of which we had two admirably good ones, quite new to me, though really old. Getting the words, and making the preparations, occupied (as you may believe) the whole day; and it was three o'clock before I got to bed. It was an excellent entertainment, and we were all uncommonly merry. . . . I had a very polite letter from our enterprising countryman Major Bentley[†5] (of Lexington, Ky.), which I shall show you when I come home. We leave here this afternoon, and I shall expect you according to appointment, at a quarter past ten A.M. tomorrow. Of all the country-houses and estates I have yet seen in England, I think this is by far the best. Everything undertaken eventuates[†6] in a most magnificent hospitality; and you will be pleased to hear that our celebrated fellow citizen General Boxall[†7] (Pittsburg, Penn.) is engaged in handing down to posterity the face of the owner of the mansion and of his youthful son and daughter.[†8] At a future time it will be my duty to report on the turnips, mangel-wurzel, ploughs, and live stock;[†9] and for the present I will only say that I regard it as a fortunate circumstance for the neighbouring community that this patrimony should have fallen to my spirited and enlightened host. Every one has profited by it, and the labouring people in especial are thoroughly well cared-for and looked after. To see all the household, headed by an enormously fat housekeeper, occupying the back benches last night, laughing and applauding without any restraint; and to see a blushing sleek-headed footman produce, for the watchtrick, a silver watch of the most portentous dimensions, amidst the rapturous delight of his brethren and sisterhood; was a very pleasant spectacle, even to a conscientious republican like yourself or me, who cannot but contemplate the parent country with feelings of pride in our own land, which (as was well observed by the Honourable Elias Deeze,[†1] of Hartford, Conn.) is truly the land of the free. Best remembrances from Columbia's daughters. Ever thine, my dear F.,—C.H.[†2]

To THE HON. MRS RICHARD WATSON, 30 NOVEMBER 1849

Text from MDGH, I, 209-210.

Devonshire Terrace
Friday Night, Nov. 30th 1849. | A Quarter-past Ten

My Dear Mrs. Watson,

Plunged in the deepest gloom, I write these few words to let you know that, just now, when the bell was striking ten, I drank to and to all the rest of Rockingham; as the wine went down my throat, I felt distinctly that it was "changing those thoughts to madness."[†4]

H.E.R.![†3]

On the way here I was a terror to my companions, and I am at present a blight and mildew on my home.

Think of me sometimes, as I shall long think of our glorious dance last night. Give my most affectionate regards to Watson, and my kind remembrances to all who remember me, and believe me,

Ever faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

P.S.—I am in such an incapable state, that after executing the foregoing usual flourish I swooned, and remained for some time insensible. Ha, ha, ha! Why was I ever restored to consciousness!!!

P.P.S.—"Changing" those thoughts ought to be "driving." But my recollection is incoherent and my mind wanders.

December

To JOSEPH C. KING, 1 DECEMBER 1849

Text from MDGH, III, 109-111.

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday, December 1st, 1849.

My Dear Sir,

I hasten to let you know what took place at Eton today. I found that I did stand in some sort committed to Mr. Evans,[†1] though not so much so but that I could with perfect ease have declined to place Charley in his house if I had desired to do so. I must say, however, that after seeing Mr. Cookesley[†2] (a most excellent man in his way) and seeing Mr. Evans, and Mr. Evans's house, I think I should, under any circumstances, have given the latter the preference as to the domestic part of Charley's life. I would certainly prefer to try it. I therefore thought it best to propose to have Mr. Cookesley for his tutor, and to place him as a boarder with Mr. Evans. Both gentlemen seemed satisfied with this arrangement, and Dr. Hawtrey expressed his approval of it also.

Mr. Cookesley, wishing to know what Charley could do, asked me if I would object to leaving him there for half-an-hour or so. As Charley appeared not at all afraid of this proposal, I left him then and there.

On my return, Mr. Cookesley said, in high and unqualified terms, that he had been thoroughly well grounded and well taught—that he had examined him in Virgil and Herodotus, and that he not only knew what he was about perfectly well, but showed an intelligence in reference to those authors which did his tutor great credit.†3 He really appeared most interested and pleased, and filled me with a grateful feeling towards you, to whom Charley owes so much.

He said there were certain verses in imitation of Horace (I really forget what sort of verses) to which Charley was unaccustomed, and which were a little matter enough in themselves, but were made a great point of at Eton, and could be got up well in a month "from an Old Etonian."†4 For this purpose he would desire Charley to be sent every day to a certain Mr. Hardisty,†5 in Store Street, Bedford Square, to whom he had already (in my absence) prepared a note. Between ourselves, I must not hesitate to tell you plainly that this appeared to me to be a conventional way of bestowing a little patronage. But, of course, I had nothing for it but to say it should be done; upon which, Mr. Cookesley added that he was then certain that Charley, on coming after the Christmas holidays, would be placed at once in "the remove," which seemed to surprise Mr. Evans when I afterwards told him of it as a high station.†1

I will take him to this gentleman on Monday, and arrange for his going there every day; but, if you will not object, I should still like him to remain with you, and to have the advantage of preparing these [amazing]†2 verses under your eye until the holidays. That Mr. Cookesley may have his own way thoroughly, I will send Charley to Mr. Hardisty daily until the school at Eton recommences.†3

Let me impress upon you in the strongest manner, not only that I was inexpressibly delighted myself by the readiness with which Charley went through this ordeal with a stranger, but that I also saw you would have been well pleased and much gratified if you could have seen Mr. Cookesley afterwards. He had evidently not expected such a result, and took it as not at all an ordinary one.

My dear Sir, yours faithfully and obliged
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To MISS MARY BOYLE, 3 DECEMBER 1849

Envelope and enclosure†4 only, MS Harvard College Library. Address: Immediate | Miss Mary Louisa Boyle. | Hon. Richard Watson's | Rockingham Castle | Northamptonshire. On bottom left of envelope: "P. Teazle".†5

To CHARLES COWDEN CLARKE, 3 DECEMBER 1849*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Devonshire Terrace | Third December 1849.

My Dear Sir

I should have answered your note sooner, but that I have been out of town.

I am very sorry. My vote[†6] is gone again. Whenever a breach is made in the Orphan Working Walls, the besiegers rush in, boy in hand, in such a tumultuous manner, that I invariably find myself carried away and overthrown before I know what is the matter.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Cowden Clarke Esquire.

To MISS FANNY KELLY, 5 DECEMBER 1849

MS Mr W. A. Foyle. Address: Miss Kelly | Moscow Road | Bayswater.

Devonshire Terrace | Fifth December 1849.

My Dear Miss Kelly

My busy time of the month is now, and for a fortnight to come. But in case you should call at any time when I am unable to see you, my other half will be glad to receive you, and to make an appointment on my behalf.

I think you would have done better to have closed with the Glasgow people[†1] at once. But "a wilful man must have his way"[†2]—and of course a wilful woman must.

Do not suppose that I am ever unwilling to listen to anything on any subject in which you are deeply interested. If I sometimes affect a sternness foreign to my nature, it is because I feel it a duty when I see you wandering up and down all sorts of No Thoroughfares, to say plainly, "My Dear Miss Kelly, that is no thoroughfare, and I should be false to you and myself if I affected to believe that it's an open street."

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Kelly.

To WILLIAM BROWN, 6 DECEMBER 1849*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Thursday Night Sixth December | 1849.

My Dear Sir

Many thanks for the enclosed. I have read Mignet's[†3] address,[†4] this evening, with a good deal of interest, and think it, in many places, very admirable. But I must say that some of the statements in the latter part of it, are rather strong and staggering—even in a Frenchman.[†5]

Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

W. Brown Esquire.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, [7] DECEMBER 1849

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street. Date: incorrectly dated by CD; Friday was 7 Dec in 1849.

Devonshire Terrace | Friday Night, Sixth December | 1849.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I trouble you with this note, to put you in possession of what I had not a suitable opportunity of saying today.

I have given the best consideration (as you may suppose) that I could possibly give, to the alternative you so kindly mentioned to me on Sunday, for Charley.[†1] I hope my anxiety may not have obscured my judgment, but I think his first destination, better than the Cadetship. I need not explain to you that my position is too public and prominent a one, to leave me much hope of ever being rich. I cannot but consider, mainly, in what position Charley would be most likely to be of service to his sisters if I were dead. I think he would be far more likely to have a beneficial influence on them, and on all who might have to look up to him to sustain their name in honor and respect, if he took the chances of being within reach which a regiment of the line would give him, than if he went for so many years to India.

Again, I think your friendship and his own name would be of far greater service to him in our Army, than they could be in the Indian Army—where he must be, to some extent, lost to the great English World. If he should be a clever man, I think his ability would be likely to stand him in better stead here, than in India. His education and companions would be of more use to him, too, here, than there. Lastly, I think his life would be (under God) infinitely safer and more to be hoped for,—as he, and all our children, have shewn, so far, a peculiar sensitiveness to heat when the English summer has come round.

I am so sure of your generous interest understanding, on a mere hint, all I would say, that I say not a tithe of what I think. If I had any reason to believe that you have the least inclination towards the Cadetship in preference to the other idea, I should feel an uneasiness in coming to this conclusion, though I must still think it the right one. But I do not understand that to be the case.

I shall be very, very, glad, if you, on consideration, think with me.

Dear Miss Coutts | Ever Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

In reference to Mrs. Morson and the Mark Papers.—I think if I took the latter home every week and looked into them at my leisure, I could form a pretty certain judgment—knowing their construction and intention—whether she was doing right, and, if not, where she was wrong. Do you see any objection to this? If not, perhaps when you speak to her you will suggest it.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, [8] DECEMBER 1849

MS Morgan Library. Date: incorrectly dated by CD, like last; assuming "Friday Night" correct there, this must have been written on Sat 8 Dec.

Devonshire Terrace | Seventh December 1849.

My Dear Miss Coutts

I will not attempt to thank you for your most kind note; for no words I could use, would do it. I am sure it is because you know in some degree how much I feel the value of your inestimable friendship, and of what a load it lightens me, and what an accession it is to the happiness of my life, that you give me such extraordinary proofs of your goodness and regard.

For Charley's next brother, Walter Landor, now nine years old,[†1] I never could desire to do a better thing than you propose.[†2] He is a tougher subject than Charley, not so quick or sensitive, a hard-working, patient, capable child, better fitted in all respects for such a life, and much more safely to be left to himself. I feel certain he would strive on and do well in India; and that Charley nearer home, as the eldest of so many children (to say nothing of his mother, who might live long after me) would have a good influence upon him, and upon himself, and upon all the rest.

He is at Mr. King's, doing very well indeed.[†3] For a child of his age, he already knows a good deal. And I don't think I can do better than leave him there, until the Haileybury[†4] time comes on?

I shall be very glad to have the talk that you propose about the Marks. I thought about them a good deal, coming home yesterday, and I feel that they may be very much improved. Would this evening do? If I don't hear from you, I will come at 8. If I do hear from you that you are engaged, will you choose between next Tuesday, Wednesday, or Thursday?

Dear Miss Coutts | Ever Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To FRANK STONE, 8 DECEMBER 1849*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Devonshire Terrace. | Eighth December 1849.

My Dear Stone

The domestic Adelphi Party[†5] which was to have come off last night, stands postponed until tonight. Whereby I am not available for the Haymarket,[†1] though I shall be happy to go next week. Will you communicate with Charley Landseer?[†2]

And will you come and dine here tomorrow, at ½ past 5, to meet old King,[†3] and Sloppy?[†4]

Ever affectionately

CD

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 10 DECEMBER 1849*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street.

Devonshire Terrace |
Monday Morning | Tenth December 1849.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I enclose you the letter from Mrs. Manning's guardian.[†5]

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To JOHN T. LAWRENCE, 10 DECEMBER 1849

MS Mr Ashley W. Olmsted.

Devonshire Terrace, London | Monday Tenth December 1849.

My Dear Sir

I am truly obliged to you for your kind invitation,[†6] and I sincerely wish it were in my power to accept it; as I should have great pleasure in seeing you and your amiable family again. But at this time of the month, and for about ten days onward, every month, I am the Slave of the Lamp called Copperfield. It would hardly light you on the 1st. of January, if I were to make the holiday you propose; and I am assured by what you say of it, that you would rather miss me than it.

Mrs. Dickens says she certainly would have come, if I could have come—which I thoroughly believe. We unite in cordial regards to yourself and all your house, and we intend to live in the hope of seeing you at some more propitious time.

Believe me My Dear Sir | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John T Lawrence Esquire.

To [LEWIS GAYLORD CLARK], [?13 DECEMBER 1849]

Mention in next. Address: CD clearly sent his pamphlet, justifying the charges he had made against Powell, to Clark to whom he had sent the original charges on 22 Oct. Date: sent as urgently as possible, to catch the steamer, after receipt of Chapman & Co's. letter (see To Ireland, 24 Dec 49).

To MESSRS JOHN CHAPMAN & CO., 13 DECEMBER 1849

Text from CD's privately printed pamphlet, Proof, copy in Free Library of Philadelphia.

Devonshire Terrace, | Thursday, 13th. December, 1849.

Dear Sirs,

I beg to call your attention to the accompanying extract,[†1] cut from an American newspaper called the "New York Tribune", in which, in a letter to Mr. Clark of New York, I describe MR. THOMAS POWELL as "a Forger and a Thief";[†2] and I entreat the favour of your informing me whether he was employed in your house many years, and whether you detected him, at last, in any proceedings which justify that description.

I also beg you to state to me, if you can, when certain criminal charges were preferred against him before the Magistrates at Croydon.[†3]

Dear Sir, | Faithfully yours,
CHARLES DICKENS[†4]
Messrs. John Chapman & Co.

To OCTAVIAN BLEWITT, 14 DECEMBER 1849*

MS Royal Literary Fund.

Devonshire Terrace | Fourteenth December 1849.

My Dear Sir

I beg to acknowledge the safe receipt of £50, in trust for Mr. Poole; being the amount of the Literary Fund's last handsome grant to him.[†5]

And I am very sorry I was not at home when you did me the favor to call with it.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Octavian Blewitt Esquire.

To THOMAS CHAPMAN, 14 DECEMBER 1849*

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel.

Devonshire Terrace | Fourteenth December 1849.

My Dear Sir

I am much obliged to you for the enclosed,[†1] which has interested and pleased me. I have dispatched matter,[†2] by the steamer, enough (in any country but America) to beat this unutterable scoundrel into dust.[†3]

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Chapman Esquire.

To THE EDITOR OF THE SUN, 14 DECEMBER 1849

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Private and Confidential.

Devonshire Terrace | Friday Fourteenth December | 1849.

Sir.

I depart from the usual course in addressing you thus, and in forwarding to you a Proof I have had privately printed for this purpose only, under special circumstances.

Being advised from America that "Mr. Thomas Powell, a literary gentleman from England", was about to enter on a course of scurrility and libel there, which he had already begun by publishing a "Life" of myself, in all respects utterly false; and knowing Mr. Powell's history and the certainty of his proceeding in this course to any extent, unless summarily stopped; I deemed it necessary to expose him. I therefore wrote to a friend in New York that the Mr. Powell in question was "a Forger and a Thief", and had been confined as a Lunatic besides—and requested him to publish that piece of intelligence.

It appeared, I learn from my friend, in a great many American Newspapers, being copied from one into another; and the Mail which arrived yesterday informs me that there is now much virtuous discussion and threatening of actions for libel, among them, on the subject. With no view whatever to the publication of the facts in this country (which, indeed, I wish to avoid if possible)[†1] but simply that, in case any of these numerous references to the matter should meet your eye, you should be possessed of the facts, I take the liberty as between two gentlemen to forward them to you, as I have collected them within a few hours.

I am Sir | Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

The Editor of | The Sun.

To SAMUEL PHELPS, 14 DECEMBER 1849*

MS Rosenbach Foundation.

Devonshire Terrace | Friday Evening | Fourteenth December 1849.

My Dear Sir

I am much obliged to you for your manly and plain letter in reference to one of the most audacious scoundrels in the world. I send you, in return, a little light I devoted yesterday to the letting in of, upon him.[†2] You will see that it is at present Private and Confidential. I may have to use it in an expensive action for Libel brought by this immaculate gentleman;[†3] and in that case it is very desirable it should be quite fresh and new.

Very faithfully Yours[†4]
[CHARLES DICKENS]

Samuel Phelps Esquire.

To JAMES GILBERT, 17 DECEMBER 1849

Text in N, II, 192, checked from MS Sotheby's, July 1972.

Devonshire Terrace | Seventeenth December 1849.

Dr. Sir

I am very much obliged to you for your letter, and shall be exceedingly glad to believe that I have been enabled to render any effectual service to the Newsvendors' Institution.[†5]

In reference to your suggestion, I will simply observe that I have no reason whatever to be dissatisfied with my Cheap Edition, and could not think of reducing it still further in price.[†1] Also, that there is one small item of consideration which seems to have escaped you; namely, that in every one of my books published in twenty numbers, there is about three times the amount of matter comprised in an ordinary Novel.[†2]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. James Gilbert.

To JAMES WALLACK,[†3] 17 DECEMBER 1849*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Devonshire Terrace. | Seventeenth December 1849

My Dear Wallack

I write to congratulate you on your Twenty Fifth birthday—which, it is quite clear to me, was on Saturday[†4] last. As to your sons,[†5] "they are altogether a mockery a delusion and a snare[†6]". They are somebody else's property. You may come to such an inheritance as a grown up son[†7] in time but I am not to be deluded into the belief that you have anything of that sort belonging to you yet awhile.

It was a most delightful performance full of the best kind of good spirit and good spirits[†8]—and we enjoyed it exceedingly.

I know it is hopeless to ask you come[†9] and dine here, on any day but Sunday. Will you join our family party next Sunday at halfpast five? Say yes, and I'll ask Stanfield and Davy Roberts (and no one else)[†10] to meet you.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To MARK LEMON, 18 DECEMBER 1849

Text from F. G. Kitton, CD by Pen and Pencil, 1890-2, II, 114.

Devonshire Terrace, | Tuesday, 18th Dec., 1849.

My Dear Lemon,

Many thanks for the Box and best congratulations on the play.[†1] It went A D M I R A B L Y — rose as it went on—mounted immensely in the third act—and closed in triumph. Howe[†2] was not good, but the rest were. Wallack beyond all praise.[†3] I have never seen such a fine, picturesque, splendid piece of melodrama. He really bore the whole play on his shoulders, and did gallant service. I believe he dines here next Sunday at ½ past 5. If so will you come? No party. I begin to think you live in Australia.

Affecy. ever,
CHARLES DICKENS

Mark Lemon, Esquire.

To MRS JANE SEYMOUR HILL,[†4] 18 DECEMBER 1849

MS (copy in clerk's hand) Comtesse de Suzannet.

Devonshire Terrace | Tuesday Morng. eighteenth Decr. 1849

Madam.

I am most exceedingly and unfeignedly sorry to receive your Letter[†5] and to have been the unfortunate occasion of giving you a moment's distress. I am bound to admit that in the character to which I take it for granted you refer, I have yielded to several little recollections of your general manner but I assure you that the original of a great portion of that character is well known to me and to several friends of mine and is wholly removed from you and a very different person. Indeed I never represent an individual but always a combination of individuals in one. To avoid giving offence, when I was conscious of remembering you—as where the person is represented as using a chair for a table & so forth—I was most careful (as I considered) to keep the calling,[†1] domestic circumstances &c of the character quite clear of yours and I assure you that I had no idea of mixing you up with it further than by a whimsical shadowy possibility of association that I thought might be even amusing and serviceable to you rather than the reverse.

As to personal appearances, I have been for years in the habit of meeting in the streets some one unknown to me by name or pursuit, whom it resembles almost if not quite as much as it resembles you. If I had the least thought of presenting you personally in my book I could have had your portrait drawn any morning in the week and put there. Pray consider all these things and do not make yourself unhappy.

I should be most truly pained if you were to remain under the impression that you have any cause of complaint against me or that I have done you any injury however innocently. I am so sincere in this believe me that rather than you should pass another of those sleepless nights of which you write to me or go another morning tearfully to your daily work, I would alter the whole design of the character and remove it, in its progress, from the possibility of that bad construction at which you hint.[†2]

I am quite serious in this. I do not mean it to be a very good character now, but I will make it so, and oblige the Reader to hold it in a pleasant remembrance[†3]—if that will give you any relief from this—by me quite unexpected and unforeseen distress.

Faithfully yr
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Seymour Hill

To JOHN FORSTER, [18 DECEMBER 1849]

Extract in F, VI, vii, 548. Date: 28 Dec 49 according to Forster; but clearly the 18th, the day CD received Mrs Seymour Hill's letter (see last).

I have had the queerest adventure this morning, the receipt of the enclosed from Miss Mo[w]cher![†1] It is serio-comic, but there is no doubt one is wrong in being tempted to such a use of power.

To W. BLANCHARD JERROLD,[†2] 20 DECEMBER 1849

MS Mr. A. G. Schaw Miller.

Devonshire Terrace. | Twentieth December 1849.

Dear Sir

I should have answered your letter sooner, but that I have been too busy for some days to answer any letters.[†3]

I do not like to be oracular, and therefore have a difficulty in replying to your questions,[†4] agreeably to myself. But if you can call here, any morning this week, at Eleven o'Clock, I shall be happy to speak with you—or on Sunday at half past one.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. Blanchard Jerrold Esquire.

To ROBERT ROGERS,[†5] 21 DECEMBER 1849

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Address: Robert Rogers Esquire | 3 Union Court | Old Broad Street.

Devonshire Terrace. | Twenty First December 1849.

Sir.

I received your letter,[†6] late last night.

Now that I learn from you that Mrs. Hill and her friends consider that the alteration I offered (in my letter to her) to make in the character in question, will tend to repair the uneasiness I have unintentionally caused her, I have not the least hesitation in pledging myself to make it.

But, I must beg you to understand that it can only be made, in the natural progress and current of the story. Even if the next number were not already in the Press, it would be impossible to be made there, because the character is not introduced, and the course of the tale is not at all in that direction.

I am Sir | Your obedient Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

Robert Rogers Esquire.

To CARL VON HOLTEI,[†1] 22 DECEMBER 1849*

MS Mr Walter Krieg.

Devonshire Terrace, London | Twenty Second December 1849.

Dear Sir.

It is a great happiness in my life, that I have many unknown friends and readers in Germany, and that many letters come to me from among that great and good people, full of earnest regard.

But not one of these has ever been more pleasant to me than yours, for not one has ever been more cordially and unaffectedly written. I am sincerely obliged to you, and I beg you to believe that if I have had the happiness to give you pleasure, you have returned it to me, well.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Herr Carl Von Holter.[†2]

To R. W. MAJOR,[†3] 22 DECEMBER 1849

Mention in N, II, 193.

To T. J. PETTIGREW,[†1] 22 DECEMBER 1849

Mention in Sotheby's catalogue, 26 Feb 1906; MS 2 pp.; dated 1 Devonshire Terrace, 22 Dec 49.

Thanking him for a book.[†2]

To MARK LEMON, [?23 DECEMBER 1849]

Envelope only, MS Winifred A. Myers (Autographs) Ltd. Address: Mark Lemon Esquire | St. Anne's Villas | Royal Crescent | Notting Hill. Date: PM looks most like 23 DE 1849, but could be 28 DE 1849.

To JOHN HULLAH, [LATE DECEMBER 1849]

Mention in To Miss Coutts, 27 Dec. Date: "a few days before that letter".

To ALEXANDER IRELAND, 24 DECEMBER 1849

MS Mr Charles Hamilton.

Private
Devonshire Terrace, London. | Twenty Fourth December 1849.

My Dear Sir

You will not be offended by my saying that (in common with many other men) I think "our London Correspondent" one of the great nuisances of this time, in as much as our London Correspondent, seldom knowing anything, feels bound to know everything, and becomes in consequence a very reckless gentleman in respect of the truthfulness of his intelligence.

In your paper[†3] sent to me this morning, I see the Correspondent mentions one Thomas Powell, and records how I was wont to feast in the house of the said Thomas Powell.[†4] As I never was in the man's house in my life, or within five miles of it that I know of,[†5] I beg you will do me the favor to contradict this.[†6]

You will be the less surprised by my begging you to set this right, when I tell you that hearing of his book, and knowing his history, I wrote to New York denouncing him as "a Forger and a Thief". That he thereupon put the gentleman who published my letter into Prison.[†7] And that having but one day before the sailing of the last steamer to collect the proofs printed in the accompanying sheet (which are but a small part of the Villain's life) I got them together in that time, and sent them out, to justify the character I gave him. It is not agreeable to me, to be supposed to have sat at this amiable person's feasts.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Alexander Ireland[†1] Esquire.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 25 DECEMBER 1849

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts.

Devonshire Terrace | Christmas Day 1849.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

The best and truest wishes of the time, to you and all who are dear to you!

I should have mentioned Hullah's account[†2] to you before, but was unwilling to trouble you. It is five and twenty pounds (I think). I will pay it tomorrow.

As I have engaged to go to Eton with Charley, to spend the day, on Tuesday the first, I propose (if you have no objection) to hold our Committee Meeting on Monday, the last day of the old year.

I was at the Home on Saturday for some time, making up the book[†3]—and shall be there again tomorrow. Everything was going on well. Mrs. Morson has such a small son in blue-coat boy's clothes,[†4] that he looks like a toy. He ought to have a little wire handle just below his shoes, to make dismal music when turned round.

Mr. Cooksley,[†5] Charley's tutor at Eton, has written a very handsome letter about him to Mr. King. And Mr. Hardisty the Clergyman, under whom he is learning to make those Verses every day, has written to Mr. Evans, praising Charley highly.

I hope your accounts of poor Mrs. Otway Cave[†6] may improve. When I see you, I will give you the latest Mowcher intelligence. It has been of a threatening character,[†7] but I hope has become pacific.

With best regards and wishes to Mr. and Mrs. Brown,

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

P.S. The man who alone executed the whole of the nefarious Howitt imposition, is, I have ascertained, one Mr. Youls.[†1] He wrote a begging-letter to you once, in his own name, and I made some enquiries about him for you. I am afraid you gave him some money then.[†2] He is a most abandoned and wicked thief, but he had not begun this career at that time.

To WILLIAM JERDAN, 25 DECEMBER 1849*

MS Mr David Borowitz.

Devonshire Terrace | Christmas Day 1849.

My Dear Jerdan

Merry Christmas and happy new Year!

As you reprint the extraordinary lies of the New York Herald,[†3] perhaps you may like to know something more of their authority. I therefore send you for your own perusal (for I must not anticipate the defence to the ingenious Mr. Powell's American actions for libel) a few small passages in the life of the distinguished "literary gentleman from England", who is in question.[†4]

Faithfully Yours always

CD.

W. Jerdan Esquire

To MARK LEMON, 25 DECEMBER 1849*

MS Private. Address: Mark Lemon Esquire | St Anne's Villas | Royal Crescent | Notting Hill.

Devonshire Terrace | Christmas Day 1849.

My Dear Lemon.

Merry Christmas and happy new year, to you and all yours!

Are you for a pankelmime[†5] on Thursday?[†6] If so, name your hour of dinner—anywhere—and I think I can bring Stanny with me.

Ever Yours

CD

To CHARLES ROSS,[†1] 25 DECEMBER 1849*

MS Mr Norman Holland.

Devonshire Terrace | Christmas Day 1849.

My Dear Ross.

As I found your card when I came home yesterday from a walk, I write to say that if you wish to see me, I shall be at home, either tomorrow or next day between 11 and 1, and happy to receive you.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Ross Esquire

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 27 DECEMBER 1849*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace, Twenty Seventh December 1849.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I will have Mr. Hullah's receipt, on Monday at Shepherd's Bush. I wrote to him a few days since, begging him to send here for what was due to him, either yesterday or today. He has not yet done so.

Mr. Chesterton writes to me that he hopes to get Maria Cridge[†2] into St. Bartholomew's Hospital, and that I shall hear finally from him on that subject in the course of the day.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.
£25 safely received by your messenger's hand.

To THE SECRETARY OF THE GARRICK CLUB, 27 DECEMBER 1849

MS The Garrick Club.

Devonshire Terrace. | Twenty Seventh December 1849.

Sir.

Will you have the goodness to inform the committee, with the assurance of my respectful consideration, that I beg to retire from the Garrick Club, and to have my name withdrawn from the list of Members.[†3]

Your obedient Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

The Secretary | of | The Garrick Club.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 28 DECEMBER 1849*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Eighth December 1849.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I find that Mr. Hullah's £25 Account, did not extend to Christmas. His whole bill I enclose.[†1] I have paid it, and the teaching is at an end.

Will you tell Mr. Brown from me, that we got Maria Cridge into Bartholomew's yesterday?

Dear Miss Coutts | Ever Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To W. W. F. DE CERJAT,[†2] 29 DECEMBER 1849

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel. Address: Affranchie. | William Cerjat Esqre. | Lausanne | Switzerland.

Devonshire Terrace. | Saturday Twenty Ninth December 1849.

My Dear Cerjat.

I received your letter at breakfast-time this morning, with a pleasure my eloquence is unable to express, and your modesty unable to conceive. It is so delightful to be remembered at this time of the year, in your house[†3] where we have been so happy, and in dear old Lausanne that we always hope to see again, that I can't help pushing away the first page of Copperfield No. 10[†4]—now staring at me with what I may literally call a blank aspect—and plunging energetically into this reply.

What a strange coincidence that is, about Blunderstone House! Of all the odd things of that kind, I have ever known (and their name is Legion) I think it is the oddest.[†5] I went down into that part of the country on the 7th. of January last year,[†6] when I was meditating the story; and chose Blunderstone for the sound of its name. I had previously observed much of what you say about the poor girls. In all you suggest with so much feeling of their return to virtue being cruelly cut off, I concur with a sore heart. I have been turning it over in my mind for some time, and hope, in the history of Little Em'ly (who must fall—there is no hope for her)[†7] to put it before the thoughts of people, in a new and pathetic way, and perhaps to do some good. You will be glad to hear, I know, that Copperfield is a great success.[†1] I think it is better liked than any of my other books.[†2]

We had a most delightful time at Watson's (for both of them we have preserved and strengthened a real affection) and were the gayest of the gay. There was a Miss Boyle staying in the house who is an excellent Amateur Actress, and she and I got up some scenes from the School for Scandal, and from Nickleby, with immense success. We played in the old hall, with the Audience filled up and running over with servants. The entertainments concluded with feats of legerdemain (for the performance of which I have a pretty good apparatus, collected at divers times and in divers places) and we then fell to country dances of a most frantic description, and danced all night. We often spoke of you and Mrs. Cerjat, and of Haldimand, and wished you were all there. Watson and I have some fifty times "registered a vow" (like O'Connell)[†3] to come to Lausanne together, and have even settled in what month and week. Something or other has always interposed to prevent us; but I hope, please God, most certainly to see it again, when my labors-Copperfieldian shall have terminated.[†4]

You have no idea what that hanging of the Mannings really was. The conduct of the people was so indescribably frightful, that I felt, for some time afterwards, almost as if I were living in a city of Devils. I feel, at this hour, as if I never could go near the place again.[†5] My letters[†6] have made a great to-do, and led to a great agitation of the subject; but I have not a confident belief in any change being made, mainly because the total abolitionists are utterly reckless and dishonest (generally speaking) and would play the deuce with any such proposition in Parliament, unless it were strongly supported by the Government—which it certainly would not be: the Whig motto (in office) being "laissez aller". I think Peel[†7] might do it, if he came in. Two points have occurred to me, as being a good commentary on the objections to my idea. The first is, that a most terrific uproar was made, when the hanging-processions were abolished, and the ceremony shrunk from Tyburn to the Prison Door. The second is, that at this very time, under the British Govt.—in New South Wales—executions take place within the prison Walls, with decidedly improved results. [I am waiting to explode this fact, on the first man of mark who gives me the opportunity.][†8]

Unlike you, we have had no marriages or givings in marriage, here. We might have had, but a certain young lady whom you know, is hard to please.[†9] The children are all well, thank God! Charley is going to Eton, the week after next, and has passed a first rate examination. Kate is quite well, and unites with me and Georgina, in loves to you and Mrs. Cerjat, and Haldimand—whom I would give a good deal (tell him) to have several hours contradiction of, at his own table. Good Heaven, how obstinate we would both be! I see him leaning back in his chair, with his right forefinger out, and saying "Good God!" in reply to some position of mine—and then laughing.

All in a minute, a feeling comes over me, as if you and I were still walking, smoking cigars, outside the Inn at Martigny[†1]—the piano sounding inside, and Lady Mary Taylour[†2] singing. I look into my garden (which is covered with snow) rather dolefully, but take heart again, and look brightly forward to another expedition to the Great St. Bernard,[†3] when Mrs. Cerjat and I shall laugh as [†a]I fancy I have never laughed since, in one of those one-sided Cars[†b]—when somebody's bed at the Convent (was it yours or Watsons?) shall break down again—[†b] and when we shall again learn from Haldimand, in a little dingy Cabaret,[†4] at lunch-time, how to secure a door in travelling (do you remember?) by balancing a chair against it, on its two hind legs!

I do hope that we may all come together again, once more, while there is a head of hair left among us, and in that hope remain my Dear Cerjat Your faithful friend

C.D.[†a]

To ALEXANDER IRELAND, 29 DECEMBER 1849*

MS Buffalo & Erie County Public Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Ninth December 1849

My Dear Sir

I am much obliged to you for your note. I do not wish the papers[†5] to be published at present (and therefore have prevented their appearance here), because I wish to explode them on this most consummate Villain, in America.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Alexander Ireland Esquire.

To JAMES SHERIDAN KNOWLES, 29 DECEMBER 1849*

MS Messrs Goodspeed's Book Shop. Address: James Sheridan Knowles Esquire | John Driver's Esquire | Egremont | Liverpool.

Devonshire Terrace |
Saturday Evening | Twenty Ninth December 1849.

My Dear Knowles.

Immediately after receiving your letter this morning, I set myself to think about poor Mr. Haydn.[†1] It appeared to me that the Queen's Bounty idea was not a very hopeful one, in asmuch[†2] as his wants are pressing, and Rogers is a slow coach, and the Ministers are slower coaches still, and this is a difficult time of the year for finding them.[†3] So I went down to Mr. Haydn (calling on Di[†4] by the way) designing to induce him to make application to the Literary Fund who I am sure would grant him five and twenty pounds or so, and where I (being a member of the Committee) could urge his claims effectually. As they don't meet until the second Wednesday in January, I also designed to offer myself to lend him ten pounds in the meanwhile. He was unfortunately not at home, but I left my card for him, and word that I should be happy to see him if he could call on me at halfpast one tomorrow—adding that I called, after receiving a letter from you. On my way home I went to the Literary Fund—ascertained that he had never applied—and prepared the Secretary to shew him every attention. There are no booksellers on the Committee,[†5] and his application (if he will make it) is certain to be kindly considered.[†6]

I write in haste to save the post. I hope you will think I have done right.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Over

James Sheridan Knowles Esquire.

It is clear he will be none the worse for having two irons in the fire. If Rogers heats his, well and good. I will (Mr. Haydn consenting) heat mine all the same.

To JOSEPH HAYDN, [?29 DECEMBER 1849]*

MS (end of letter only) Mr David Anderson. Date: perhaps end of note referred to in last. Form of signature supports.

I wish to God you may be able to let me know that something good comes of this.

Dear Sir Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Joseph Haydn Esquire

To WILLIAM HEPWORTH DIXON,[†1] 31 DECEMBER 1849*

MS Rosenbach Foundation.

Devonshire Terrace | Thirty First December 1849

Dear Sir

I beg to thank you for the book[†2] you have kindly sent me, and to assure you that I am gratified by that mark of your remembrance.

Several of its chapters had previously attracted my attention in the Columns of the Daily News.[†3] Being well acquainted with some of the Prisons described,[†4] I was able to test and confirm the general accuracy of your descriptions and observation. I have not had leisure, since the receipt of your obliging present, to improve my acquaintance with it to any great extent, though I hope to do so almost immediately. But I turned at once to the head of Pentonville,[†5] and cannot help saying that it gives me great pleasure to find the scheme of that prison so well understood in such a work, and its glaring absurdities so plainly exposed.[†6]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Hepworth Dixon Esquire

To MRS SYDNEY SMITH, 31 DECEMBER 1849*

MS Mr D. C. L. Holland.

Devonshire Terrace | Thirty First December 1849.

My Dear Mrs. Smith.

I am honored and gratified by your remembering me as one of those to whom you entrust this mark[†1] of your love for the great genius and good man whose labors are at an end.[†2]

It is before me now, and I have already read several chapters of it. I think you have exercised a sound discretion in not permitting such a book to perish—I am sure of it. You describe it just as I could have desired to describe it myself. Everywhere, it bears the mark of his hand and heart; and the earnest purity of its intention is no less manifest in every page.

I see that the last of these beautiful lectures was delivered six years before I was born.[†3] Years after I am dead, I hope they may have some influence on the character of my little Sydney Smith, now just able to talk![†4]

Accept my warmest thanks, and best wishes. And ever believe me

Dear Mrs. Smith | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FOWLER, DECEMBER 1849

Mention in N, II, 196; dated Dec 49.

Declining an invitation to visit Sheffield.

To DANIEL MACLISE, [?JUNE-DECEMBER 1849]*

MS Private. Date: June-Dec 49 on form of initials. Address: Daniel Maclise Esquire.

Devonshire Terrace. | Thursday.

My Dear Maclise

What is Bankes's[†5] address? I promised to let him know what time we dine next Sunday—and don't know where he lives.

Do you feel vagabondishly disposed for this evening?—I have a confused idea of Astley's or some such place, and in case you were in the same plight would call upon you, or be glad to see you here, about 7 o'Clock or so.

Faithfully Yours always

CD.

[†a]Or, I am now going out Willesden-wards to ride and walk. How do you say about that? We might be public house-ish.[†a]

Addendum

To EDWARD CHAPMAN, 26 APRIL 1847

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, June 1899; MS 2 pp.; addressed Edward Chapman Esq.; dated 26 Apr 47.

I think it will be a great thing to advance the parts[†1] as you propose. I am sanguine for our getting up to the hundred thousand, including the first issue of the complete work. You shall hear from me about the Frontispiece[†2] very shortly. I will take care of it without loss of time. But I shall be glad to have a couple myself, always regularly and promptly. Will you mention to your book-keeper that in case he should meet a Fair copy of our accounts to last Christmas,[†3] walking about anywhere, I shall be glad if he will give her my compliments, and say she may rely upon a welcome whenever she is disposed to come towards this end of the town.

Volume VI

1850 – 1852

1850

January

To MISS ELIZA METEYARD,[†1] 1 JANUARY 1850*

MS Iowa University Library.

Devonshire Terrace | First January 1850.

Madam.

I feel much obliged to you for your note, and beg to assure you that I am no stranger to some of your writings.[†2]

It is not in my power, at present, distinctly to pledge myself to the acceptance of contributions to the proposed miscellany,[†3] with the exact contents of which I am unacquainted. There is a peculiarity in its design,[†4] which places me in an awkward position, when I have to reply, so long beforehand, to a favor like yours. But if you should think it worth while, either now or at any other time; to impart to me the general idea of any essay you may have in contemplation, I should be able to tell you if it were already anticipated, and (I think) if it would be likely to adapt itself to the general scheme I have before me.[†5]

I am Madam | Yours faithfully and obliged

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Meteyard.

To THE REV. JAMES WHITE,[†6] 1 JANUARY 1850*

MS Mrs Isabel Painter, Mrs Holme Taylor, Mrs Margaret Cleminson.

Devonshire Terrace | First January 1850.

My Dear White

This is to wish you, and all near and dear to you, many many happy years, and to reciprocate most heartily all that you say in your kind letter.

Lauder[†7] shakes me—for he is a painter!—but I have long resolved to sit no more, and I will try to keep my resolution, even now. I confess that my organ of firmness, however, feels rather flabby.

Ever affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

The Reverend James White

To W. C. BENNETT,[†1] 3 JANUARY 1850*

MS The Times Bookshop.

Devonshire Terrace | Third January 1850.

Dear Sir

I hope to have the pleasure and advantage of being able to accept some contributions from your pen (which you so obligingly offer), when the weekly Journal in question shall come into existence.[†2] You may rely on receiving every attention and consideration from those who will assist me in its more active editorial duties.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. C. Bennett Esquire.

To GEORGE HOGARTH,[†3] 3 JANUARY 1850*

MS Bergen University Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Third January 1850.

My Dear Hogarth.

I think the Paper capital in all respects—very interesting, full of curious matter, and written (which is essential) in a popular and interesting manner.[†4] I shall be glad if you will do something else. In the mean time I will give you—when I see you on Monday—Ten pounds on account of what is, and is to be, between us.[†5]

If you could turn up a good Scotch Trial, next, or anything that would make (for variety's sake) a narrative—tant mieux. But I don't wish to bind you to this.

Affectionately Always
CD.

To JAMES SHERIDAN KNOWLES,[†6] 3 JANUARY 1850

Text from MDGH, I, 215-16.

Devonshire Terrace, January 3rd, 1850.

My dear good Knowles

Many happy New Years to you, and to all who are near and dear to you. Your generous heart unconsciously exaggerates, I am sure, my merit in respect of that most honourable gentleman who has been the occasion of our recent correspondence.[†1] I cannot sufficiently admire the dignity of his conduct, and I really feel indebted to you for giving me the gratification of observing it.

As to that "cross note," which, rightly considered, was nothing of the sort, if ever you refer to it again, I'll do—I don't exactly know what, but something perfectly desperate and ferocious. If I have ever thought of it, it has only been to remember with delight how soon we came to a better understanding, and how heartily we confirmed it with a most expressive shake of the hand, one evening down in that mouldy little den of Miss Kelly's.[†2]

Heartily and faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]
"Paddy"[†3] Knowles.

To DAVID ROBERTS,[†4] 3 JANUARY 1850

Text from MDGH, I, 215.

Devonshire Terrace, January 3rd, 1850.

My dear Roberts,

I am more obliged to you than I can tell you for the beautiful mark of your friendly remembrance which you have sent me this morning.[†5] I shall set it up among my household gods with pride. It gives me the highest gratification, and I beg you to accept my most cordial and sincere thanks. A little bit of the tissue paper was sticking to the surface of the picture, and has slightly marked it. It requires but a touch, as one would dot an "i" or cross a "t," to remove the blemish; but as I cannot think of a recollection so full of poetry being touched by any hand but yours, I have told Green[†6] the framer, whenever he shall be on his way with it, to call on you by the road. I enclose a note from Mrs. Dickens, which I hope will impress you into a country dance, with which we hope to dismiss Christmas merrily.[†7]

Ever, my dear Roberts, | Faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To RICHARD WARHAM JNR,[†1] 3 JANUARY 1850*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Devonshire Terrace | Third January 1850.

Sir.

I have an imperfect recollection of the receipt of the letter to which yours of yesterday, refers. I receive so many letters, on so many subjects, from so many unknown correspondents, that I am occasionally obliged to leave some of them unanswered.

I cannot take upon myself to give you an answer, from my own personal observation, to the question you put to me. I can only leave it to your common sense to consider the possibility of slavery existing without "oppression and tyranny".

Your obedient Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Warham Esquire Junr.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS,[†2] 5 JANUARY 1850*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street.

Devonshire Terrace | Fifth January 1850.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I am extremely sorry for the anxiety and distress you have undergone,[†3] and have been anxious to hear of you for some days, but have thought it best not to worry you by making enquiries.

Charley[†4] goes to Eton this day week, and has a party on Monday.

Your letter enclosed £16. 13. 6. I cannot remember what it is for, unless you tell me. All the payments I have made for Shepherd's Bush,[†5] are entered and cast up in Mrs. Morson's[†6] book, and include all the halfyearly and other general bills. Mr.

Hullah's,[†1] as I recollect, was even money. And I cannot divine what this sum is for. I can think of nothing that approaches to it.

(A £10 note, a £5 note, a sovereign, a half sovereign, three shillings, and six pence.)

Dear Miss Coutts | Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, [5 JANUARY 1850]

MS Morgan Library. Date: clearly same day as last, Sat 5 Jan, from reference to Hullah's account. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts.

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday Night

My Dear Miss Coutts.

You are perfectly right, and I very much regret having given you the trouble to convince me of it. I had a fixed idea that Mr. Hullah's account was £50; and being just dull from a day's work, when your kind enclosure came, could not get it out of my head. I have now referred to my memorandum, and find (as I might have known) not only what it was intended for, but what it accurately tallies with.

Charley's cake[†2]—a most splendid one—arrived an hour ago. He and his two sisters instantly celebrated the event by putting it on a table and dancing a polka round it.

Dear Miss Coutts | Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Maria Cridge will be back in a week. I begged Mrs. Morson to make some particular enquiries about her at the Hospital,[†3] and the answers were most satisfactory.

To THE KENTISH TOWN LITERARY INSTITUTION,[†4] [?EARLY JANUARY 1850]

Mention in the Daily News, 9 Jan 50. Date: a few days before the meeting of 8 Jan.

Regretting that he cannot attend their first meeting.

To PROFESSOR MUNCH,[†5] 6 JANUARY 1850

Extract in T. F. Madigan catalogue, Apr 1930; MS 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 6 Jan 50.

Mrs. Dickens has a party tomorrow evening, in celebration of our eldest boy's birthday, and will be happy to see you if you should be disengaged.

To WILLIAM HEPWORTH DIXON,[†1] 9 JANUARY 1850*

MS Rosenbach Museum and Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Ninth January 1850.

Dear Sir

I am truly obliged to you for your letter, and beg to assure you that I shall have much pleasure in accepting the book you so kindly offer me.[†2]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Hepworth Dixon Esquire.

To MRS GASKELL,[†3] 9 JANUARY 1850*

MS Berg Collection.

Devonshire Terrace. | Wednesday Ninth January 1850.

My Dear Mrs. Gaskell.

I am very much afraid I cannot help you in the distressing case you describe.[†4] I assist Miss Coutts in the management of her "Home", and have at all times a great deal to do with it. But the Voyage out, has been, and still is, our great difficulty. The ships are for the most part disgracefully managed; and the temptations to a renewal of the old life on board, we find a most serious and disheartening circumstance.

I therefore fear that Miss Coutts would not like to take the responsibility of sending out this girl, or allowing her to accompany any of our people; nor could I urge it upon her if I saw her inclined to object, because we have, within our knowledge, some very strange and sad experiences. But I will communicate with her today, and write to you again, tomorrow.

We have no matron to send out with them, because of the distance and the long duration of the Voyage. We have a very reliable correspondent in Australia—a lady emigrant, with whom four of our girls went out[†5]—and we are not without some similar help at the Cape.[†6] But I feel certain that Miss Coutts would not think it expedient to consign your protegée to either place, unless she first came into the Home, and enabled us to form a personal knowledge of her from our own observation. And I doubt Miss Coutts's inclination to admit her, as she is not altogether a helpless outcast, but may get abroad without her help. However, as I have said, I will see, in the course of the day, whether we can do anything in the matter.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Dickens and her sister send their best love to you.

To MRS HENRY AUSTIN,[†1] 10 JANUARY 1850

Mention in Autograph Prices Current, IV (1918-19); dated 10 Jan 50.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 10 JANUARY 1850

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Tenth January 1850.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

What you suggest to me to say to Mrs. Gaskell about the girls and the passage, I wrote to her yesterday. All the rest that you so kindly write, I will make known to her tonight.

Addiscombe is the Military College—Haileybury, the Civil. Walter Landor, as a Cadet, will have to go, I take it, to the former.[†2]

Mr. Hardisty[†3] is not Charley's Tutor at Eton. He is a clergyman here—one of the Curates of St. Giles's in the Fields—to whom, as an old Etonian, his Eton tutor wished him to go, in the holidays.

I will be very particular to ascertain exactly how he goes on, and what he is doing, during the first three months. I will go down pretty often for the purpose. I do not think there is much fear of their over-working him, as it is not a very ferocious school.

If you should remain at Brighton after the twenty second or twenty third, and should encourage me to do so, (by a silence on the subject) I hope to call one morning.

Charley sends his love. And I, a thousand thanks

Dear Miss Coutts | Ever Faithfully Yours

CD.

To MRS GASKELL, [10 JANUARY 1850]

Mention in To Miss Coutts, 10 and 14 Jan; envelope only, MS John Rylands Library. Address: Mrs Gaskell | 121 Upper Rumford Street | Manchester. PM 10 Jan 50.

Sending her the first page of Miss Coutts's letter to him about arrangements for Pasley's emigration.

To JOSEPH HAYDN,[†1] 12 JANUARY 1850*

MS Walter T. Spencer.

Devonshire Terrace | Twelfth January 1850.

My Dear Sir.

I should blush to accept your beautiful present, endeared to you by so honorable and gratifying an association, (for I know how little I have done to deserve it),[†2] if I did not feel a sincere pride in your good opinion, and an exalted respect for your character, and its unaffected modest independence. As a reminder of what it is good for me to have become acquainted with, and what it would be very bad for me to forget, and as something that I never can look upon without pleasure, I accept the seal[†3] with many thanks, and shall wear it from this time forth, religiously.

Your former letter,[†4] my dear Sir, I thought it hardly respectful to answer. I was silent for this reason only.

After the 21st. I am pretty sure to be at home any morning between eleven and one. I shall be truly glad to see you at your convenience, and to commence a personal knowledge of you that I hope will last for many years.

My Dear Sir | Yours faithfully and obliged

CHARLES DICKENS

Joseph Haydn Esquire.

To EDMUND OLLIER,[†5] 12 JANUARY 1850

Text from N, II, 199.

Devonshire Terrace | Twelfth January 1850

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Ollier, and begs to acknowledge the receipt of his obliging note.

It is proposed to admit good occasional contributions into the projected Miscellany, and to have all that are offered carefully read. But it is not within the power of Mr. Dickens to pledge himself, beforehand, to the acceptance of any article, or to have the pleasure of offering any regular engagement to Mr. Ollier.[†6]

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 14 JANUARY 1850

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Fourteenth January 1850.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I send you a letter I have received from Mrs. Gaskell this morning (to whom, with your permission, I sent the first sheet of your letter) by which you will see what she has done.[†1] She is perfectly discreet and modest, and I knew would take no advantage of your kindness.

I left Charley at Eton, on Saturday Evening. I dined with his tutor.[†2] Evans's[†3] boys had not come back, and he looked dull enough, in a big hall with an immense fireplace, by himself. But he made no sign of shrinking, and left here, amidst a prodigious wailing from his brothers and sisters, like a man.

I hope this note may be intelligible. But I am in such a state of imbecility from a bad cold, and am so little able to see the paper on account of the enormous size of my own head, that I am not at all clear about it.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS HURNALL,[†4] 14 JANUARY 1850*

MS Mrs Stuart Chevalier.

Devonshire Terrace, London | Fourteenth January 1850.

Dear Madam

I regret that it is quite out of my power to assist the friend in whom you are interested, in the object he has in view. My knowledge of London Managers is limited, and my intercourse with them in the way of their profession, more limited still. I should think there are few things more improbable than that any one of them would bring out a Tragedian utterly unused to the Stage. A wearisome life in the country, and repeated trials in Edinburgh, or Dublin, or both, usually precede an appearance in London. Real talent, in this case, as in most other instances, must find and force its own way—and if it be real and thoroughly in earnest it will do so.

I am much interested by your letter, and have read it with great pleasure. I wish I could send you a more agreeable reply, but it would be very unworthy in me to amuse[†1] either you or your friend with false hopes of my being able to serve this aspirant.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Hurnall.

To JOSEPH HAYDN, [?14 JANUARY 1850]

Text from N, I, 363. Date: probably the Monday following To Haydn, 12 Jan, on receipt of a reply suggesting 21 or 22 Jan for their meeting.[†2]

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Night

My Dear Sir,

Will you allow me to appoint next Wednesday Morning at the hour you name? I shall not be disengaged in the morning until then.

Very faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To JOHN KITTO,[†3] 16 JANUARY 1850*

MS Mr F. E. N. Surridge.

Devonshire Terrace | Sixteenth January 1850.

Sir.

I regret my inability to assist your correspondent. Similar letters pour in upon me always, in such an overwhelming and unbroken stream, that the barest acknowledgement of their receipt is not a light part of my daily occupation. Latterly, they have increased in number so far beyond all my previous experience, that I could hardly keep pace with them if I were one of the richest noblemen in England, instead of Your faithful Servant

CHARLES DICKENS

Dr. John Kitto

To JOHN FORSTER,[†1] [?MID-JANUARY 1850]

Extract in F, VI, iv, 512. Date: probably first half of Jan since Forster says that the title "took some time and occupied many letters" and that this was "one of the first thought of".

Suggesting as a title for the periodical The Robin. With this motto from Goldsmith. The redbreast, celebrated for its affection to mankind, continues with us, the year round.[†2]

To MRS MILNER GIBSON,[†3] 21 JANUARY 1850*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty First January 1850.

My Dear Mrs. Gibson

I suppose the enclosed is the best form of bearing solemn testimony to Mrs. Lega Fletcher's[†4] merits?

Many thanks for your list of words, which is particularly well-timed, and will be extremely useful to me.[†5] I have laughed over the letter (I think it is the finest I ever read) until my eyes are dim.

I am not imprisoned yet, nor fined, nor put in the stocks. So I am content to pocket my dignity, and begin to hope they haven't missed me.[†6]

Kate and Georgy send their best loves.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Milner Gibson.

To GEORGE HODDER,[†7] 21 JANUARY 1850*

MS Arnold Zeigler.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty First January 1850.

Dear Sir

I am afraid my arrangements will not enable me to avail myself of your obliging offer. So far as I can see into the preparation of the broth at present, there seems to me, to be rather a redundancy of cooks; and the first thing to be done, is to diminish their number so that they may take close working order. I fear that the kind of employment you seek, will not present itself, except in connexion with other duties already provided for.[†1]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

George Hodder Esquire.

To ALEXANDER IRELAND,[†2] 21 JANUARY 1850

Text from N, II, 200.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty First January 1850

My Dear Sir

I am obliged to you for your letter, and beg to assure you that I quite understand and appreciate the frankness of its spirit.

But my working time is fully occupied, and I am wholly unable to entertain your proposal.[†3]

Very faithfully Yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To DANIEL MACLISE,[†4] 21 JANUARY 1850

MS Rosenbach Museum and Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty First January 1850.

My Dear Mac

I shall be delighted. I will present myself, please God, at the Athenaeum, at about half past four.[†5]

Ever Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

Daniel Maclise Esquire.

To MISS THOMASINA ROSS,[†1] 21 JANUARY 1850

MS University of Texas.

Devonshire Terrace. | Twenty First January 1850.

My Dear Miss Ross.

I owe you many thanks for your kind note.

I think I may often avail myself of your offer, to our mutual advantage. If you can suggest to me (either at once, or in the course of the next few weeks) any particular book or subject, Spanish or German, of which you could write a popular account, I will immediately tell you whether it would hit what I have in my mind.[†2] It should be interesting, of course; if somewhat romantic, so much the better; we can't be too wise, but we must be very agreeable.

The plan of the paper (as you will see, directly you know what it is) will render it impossible to attach contributors' names to their productions. But I don't anticipate any practical objection to their appearing in the Index to the Volume.[†3] I merely mention this, as a feature of necessity belonging to the idea.

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Ross. PS. Mrs. Dickens begs me to send her kind regards.

To W. H. WILLS,[†4] 21 JANUARY 1850*

MS Huntington Library.

Monday Evening | Twenty First January 1850.

My Dear Wills.

At One tomorrow, I am pretty certain to be at home.[†5] It is possible (though not probable) that I may be taken out for half an hour or so in the morning, but I hope to be quite punctual.

Faithfuly Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. H. Wills Esquire

To W. H. WILLS, 22 JANUARY 1850

MS Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Second January 1850.

My Dear Wills.

I have fully discussed the matter with Bradbury and Evans,[†6] on which we spoke today. We have concluded to make you the offer (which I hope may be satisfactory) of Eight Pounds a week absolutely, and one eighth share in all the profits of the Work, as well as of any other works that we may publish in connexion with it.[†1]

If you can let me know your decision on this proposal before we meet on Thursday, it may facilitate our business.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

W. H. Wills Esquire.

To JOHN FORSTER, [23 JANUARY 1850]

Extract in F, VI, vi, 536-7. Date: 23 Jan according to Forster.

I feel a great hope that I shall be remembered by little Em'ly, a good many years to come.[†2]

To W. H. WILLS, 24 JANUARY 1850*

MS Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Thursday Morning | Twenty Fourth January 1850.

My Dear Wills.

As your letter requires a good deal of consideration, I will, if you please, propose to defer our appointment for this morning. I will write to you by next Monday at latest.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. H. Wills Esquire

To DANIEL MACLISE, 24 JANUARY 1850*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Fourth January 1850. | Thursday.

My Dear Mac.

Let us meet, at the Rainbow in Fleet Street,[†1] on Saturday at 5. Forster and I are obliged to go into the City in the afternoon, and that will be a perfect arrangement.

Affecy. always
CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 25 JANUARY 1850*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Bedford Hotel | Brighton.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Fifth January 1850.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I mean to take the chance of calling upon you on Monday, at about twelve o'Clock. If you should have any engagement, don't mind me, as I shall have the fresh air in any case.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To AUGUSTUS DICKENS,[†2] 25 JANUARY 1850

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Fifth January 1850.

My Dear Augustus.

I wish you would shew the enclosed letter to "the House".[†3] It is from one of the first Lawyers in New York, and points out what I must do, in defending this Scoundrel's action.[†4] He lays his damages at 10,000 dollars!

If you will endeavour to get the information provided for me, I will call tomorrow (Saturday) in Leadenhall Street, at from three to half past.

Affecy. always

CD.

Augustus Dickens Esquire.

To W. H. WILLS, 25 JANUARY 1850*

MS Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace. | Twenty Fifth January 1850.

My Dear Wills

I will immediately see my partners[†1] in this matter, and I shall expect you tomorrow at One o'Clock.

In haste | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

W. H. Wills Esquire.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 28 JANUARY 1850

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Eighth January | 1850.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I return you the two letters from the Cape[†2] (with which I have been greatly pleased), and also M. Soyer's[†3] plan. I send too, the Diary for Mrs. Brown's[†4] eventful chronology, (which cannot now be got unruled), Sydney Smith's book,[†5] the two Emigrant books,[†6] the Shepherd's Bush red book, and a Memorandum of what I have paid on the Home account.[†7] Likewise (what an enormous catalogue!) Charley's Memoranda in a separate envelope. You will see that Mr. King[†8] proposes to make a deduction for the time (during the cholera) when I kept Charley in the Isle of Wight. I did not think it just to allow of this generosity in Walter's case; and perhaps you will think that the deduction ought not to be allowed in Charley's either.[†9]

Soyer's scheme,[†1] like everything he does, has a certain amount of good sense and good purpose in it, with a considerable infusion of puffing and quackery. I think the scheme of teaching young ladies domestic economy, admirable, but to exclude the system of daily classes to which they could go, and from which they could come home, seems to me absurd. "The Mansion", and the musical instruments, and all that, is very well for the dignity and renown of the name of Soyer, but would make the thing ridiculous— and a failure besides. I conceive that the model of the thing should be, Mr. Hullah's classes. Young ladies at such an hour, and on such terms. Working men's wives and daughters at such an hour, on such terms. Servants, or improvers, or whatever he likes to call them, at such another hour on such other terms. For a couple of hours together, or whatever period he might choose to make it, they could be practically shewn, in a sort of hall-kitchen made for the purpose, every useful household duty, in a regular course of exposition. There could be no harm in connecting with this, a residence for those young people who should come from the country, but the two branches (to make the scheme thoroughly useful) should be distinct. This learning could be very easily imparted to numbers at once. And I am sure I should send my own daughters to acquire it, if they were old enough.

All is well at the Home. I write in haste, having been there until nearly dinner-time.

With best regards to Mr. and Mrs. Brown

My Dear Miss Coutts | Ever Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To F. M. EVANS, 28 JANUARY 1850*

MS Bradbury, Agnew & Co. Ltd.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Twenty Eighth January | 1850.

My Dear Evans

I have conversed at length, with Mr. Forster, on the subject of the Periodical; and I have proposed to him to render us all possible assistance, and to take an eighth share, and not to receive other payment for his writings in its pages.[†1] With this he is quite satisfied, and I have a strong conviction that he will do us good service.[†2] It is a great relief to me to put that point at rest.

In reference to our own matters, I wish you would call upon him this morning and discuss them with him. If it should be convenient to you, having done so, to come to me tomorrow (Tuesday) I shall be glad to conclude that part of the business.[†3] If another morning—as little delayed as possible—should suit you better, please let me know.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

F. M. Evans Esquire.

To HENRY AUSTIN,[†4] 29 JANUARY 1850*

MS Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Ninth January 1850.

My Dear Henry

Many thanks for the Report.[†5] I hope to be able to do the Sanatory cause good service, in my new periodical[†1]—by pressing facts upon the many-headed.

Can you and Letitia come and dine on Sunday? Say yes, and I'll tell you at what early hour.

Affectionately always
CD.

Henry Austin Esquire

To MR FLIGHT,[†2] 29 JANUARY 1850

Extract in John Wilson catalogue (1981); MS (3rd person) 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 29 Jan 50.

Dickens has not the least knowledge of Mr. J. H. Barron's[†3] address, or of any of his proceedings.

To J. G. LOCKHART,[†4] 29 JANUARY 1850

MS National Library of Scotland.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Ninth January 1850.

My Dear Sir

A brother in law of mine—Mr. Burnett[†5] of Manchester—who is a Musician of considerable accomplishments, made one or two very pretty songs, some time ago, from your Spanish Ballads.[†6] He wishes to publish them, and I have promised him that I would ask you for your permission.

I can answer for his music being appropriate to the words, and full of melody. Also, for his modesty and merit.

Believe me | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

J. G. Lockhart Esquire

To MISS THOMASINA ROSS, 29 JANUARY 1850*

MS University of Texas.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Ninth January 1850.

My Dear Miss Ross

Last night (before the receipt of your note) I spoke to Mr. Wills, to whom I have confided the general business management of the periodical, and begged him to communicate with you.

He is a gentleman of great experience in such matters; and being perfectly possessed of all my plans, will be able, I hope, to arrange some subject with you without difficulty.[†1]

Dear Miss Ross | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [29 JANUARY 1850]

Extract in F, VI, vi, 535. Date: 29 Jan according to Forster.

Poor dear Jeffrey![†2] I bought a Times at the station yesterday morning, and was so stunned by the announcement, that I felt it in that wounded part of me, almost directly; and the bad symptoms (modified) returned within a few hours. I had a letter[†3] from him in extraordinary good spirits within this week or two—he was better, he said, than he had been for a long time—and I sent him proof-sheets of the number only last Wednesday. I say nothing of his wonderful abilities and great career, but he was a most affectionate and devoted friend to me; and though no man could wish to live and die more happily, so old in years and yet so young in faculties and sympathies, I am very very deeply grieved for his loss.

To DANIEL MACLISE, [?29 JANUARY 1850]*

MS Benoliel Collection. Date: Jan-Mar 50, from reference to "articles" (see fn), and almost certainly referring to the Victoria where he saw May Morning; 29 Jan was the only Tuesday during the run of May Morning when it was followed by the afterpiece named in CD's article—Red Riven, the Bandit.

Devonshire Terrace | Tuesday.

My Dear Mac. I am alone (Kate and Georgina having gone to see Charley), and want to go to the Victoria[†1] tonight, with a view to some articles I am writing,[†2] to see a Melo Drama.[†3] It begins so confoundedly early, that one must be there by a little after halfpast 6. Are you disposed to go, and to eat (literally) a chop with me here, at ½ past 4?

Ever affecy.

CD

To JOHN FORSTER, [?24-30 JANUARY 1850]

Text from F, VI, iv, 512. Date: after rejection of "The Robin" (To Forster, ?mid-Jan) and before sending another suggestion to Forster on ?31 Jan.

Suggesting as a title for the periodical Mankind. This I think very good.

To MRS GASKELL, 31 JANUARY 1850

MS John Rylands Library. Address: Mrs. Gaskell | Manchester.

Devonshire Terrace | Thirty First January 1850.

My Dear Mrs. Gaskell

You may perhaps have seen an announcement in the papers, of my intention to start a new cheap weekly journal of general literature?[†4]

I do not know what your literary vows of temperance or abstinence may be, but as I do honestly know that there is no living English writer whose aid I would desire to enlist, in preference to the authoress of Mary Barton (a book that most profoundly affected and impressed me)[†1] I venture to ask you whether you can give me any hope that you will write a short tale, or any number of tales, for the projected pages.[†2]

No writer's name will be used—neither my own, nor any others—every paper will be published without any signature; and all will seem to express the general mind and purpose of the Journal, which is, the raising up of those that are down, and the general improvement of our social condition. I should set a value on your help, which your modesty can hardly imagine; and I am perfectly sure that the least result of your reflection or observation in respect of the life around you, would attract attention and do good.

Of course I regard your time as valuable, and consider it so, when I ask you if you could devote any of it to this purpose.

If you could, and would prefer to speak to me on the subject, I should be very glad indeed to come to Manchester for a few hours, and explain anything you might wish to know. My unaffected and great admiration of your book, makes me very earnest in all relating to you.

Forgive my troubling you, for this reason, and believe me ever

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Dickens and her sister send their love.[†a] I should like to know what you have done with your protegée.[†a]

To G. P. R. JAMES,[†3] 31 JANUARY 1850*

MS Williams College, Mass.

Devonshire Terrace | Thirty First January 1850.

My Dear James.

One Dr. Spiers,[†4] now in Paris, and the author of a Dictionary represented to me as very meritorious, addresses the enclosed letters to his friend Mr. Chamerovzow[†5] in London. The owner of the short and euphonious name last mentioned, brings them to me, and (having always interested himself in International copyright) proposes that you and I and some others should hold a council on the subject, and represent to the French Government what we want—all in the way of reciprocity—as to republication, translation, &c &c.[†1]

Now, the question I want you to consider, is, shall we stir in the matter at all? And if so, shall we take to our business and our bosoms, Chamerovzow, who is secretary to the Society for the protection of aborigines[†2], and seems to be a perfectly respectable man?

You were speaking of coming here, concerning our (rather dishonest) brother Jonathan. Could we kill the French and American birds with one stone? I am at your service any day next week at any hour—except Monday, when I go out at One. If you would tell me at what hour it would suit you best to dine, and would dine with me (any hour that would best suit your return home would suit me) you would give me unaffected pleasure.

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

G. P. R. James Esquire.

To MESSRS MIRFIELD AND FRASER,[†3] 31 JANUARY 1850*

MS Mr Philip McCormick. Address: Messrs. Mirfield and Fraser, | St. Martin's Hall | Long Acre.

Devonshire Terrace | Thirty First January 1850.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Mirfield and Mr. Fraser, and very much regrets that he cannot have the pleasure of joining the party on the 7th. of February,[†1] as it happens unfortunately to be the evening of his birthday, which he always passes at home. Otherwise he would have been most happy to be present.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 31 JANUARY 1850*

MS Yale University Library.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park | Thirty First January 1850.

Sir.

I regret that it is not in my power to render you any service in reference to the Manuscript you mention in your letter. I am so constantly asked to peruse Manuscripts, that I have no refuge but in a rule of total abstinence in this regard, from which I never depart. Otherwise, I sincerely believe I should have very little leisure for any other occupation.

You know, by the public papers, what periodicals there are, and what publishers there are. There is no course that I know of, in such a case as yours, but to try either the one, or the other, or both. If I could give you any better advice, I would, but I cannot honestly encourage you to believe that there is any short cut or smooth road to the honors and perils of print.

Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

To ALFRED DICKENS,[†2] 31 JANUARY 1850*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Devonshire Terrace | Thursday Evening Thirty First Jany. | 1850.

My Dear Alfred

I have been so very much engaged, that I have not had one evening at home since you called. Will you dine with us on Sunday at 5. Or I dine at home tomorrow and next day, at halfpast.

Affectionately Ever
CD.

Alfred Dickens Esquire

To DANIEL MACLISE, 31 JANUARY 1850*

MS Yale University Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Thursday Evening | Thirty First January 1850.

My Dear Mac.

The train by which we must meet the boat, leaves Blackwall Railway Station, Fenchurch Street, at ½ past 1. Consequently, we should assemble at your house, at ¼ past 12 for not a moment later than ½ past 12.

For how many, dinner?

Affecy. Ever

CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?31 JANUARY 1850]

Extract in F, VI, iv, 512-13. Date: the first of three letters written, according to Forster, on successive days, possibly after 28 Jan when CD thought of consulting Miss Coutts about titles and certainly before 4 Feb when he confided his final choice to her: see To Miss Coutts, that day.

And here a strange idea, but with decided advantages. "CHARLES DICKENS. A weekly journal designed for the instruction and entertainment of all classes of readers. CONDUCTED BY HIMSELF."

February

To MISS EMMELY GOTSCHALK,[†1] 1 FEBRUARY 1850

Text from N, II, 203.

Devonshire Terrace, London | First February, 1850

My Dear Young Friend

You know that my replies to your letters will as usual be brief—not because I ever fail to take a real and strong interest in yours, but because I generally have so many to write every day.

The state of mind which you describe to me is not a wholesome one, I am afraid, and not a natural one. The remedy for it, however, is easy, and we all have it at hand—action, usefulness—and the determination to be of service, even in little things, to those about you, and to be doing something.

In every human existence, however quiet or monotonous, there is range enough for active sympathy and cheerful usefulness. It is through such means I humbly believe that God must be approached, and hope and peace of mind be won. The world is not a dream, but a reality, of which we are the chief part, and in which we must be up and doing something. A morbid occupation, as your mind with books—even with good books—and sad meditation is not its purpose. There should be its beliefs and rewards. Come out into the world about you, be it either wide or limited. Sympathize, not in thought only, but in action, with all about you.

Make yourself known and felt for something that would be loved and missed, in twenty thousand little ways, if you were to die, then your life will be a happy one, believe me.

Be resolute in this, I ask you. Let me have the great gratification of believing, one day, that the correspondence you have opened with me has done some good, and made a lighter and more cheerful heart than it found in you when it started.

Be earnest—earnest—in life's reality and do not let your life, which has a purpose in it—every life upon the earth has—fly by while you are brooding over mysteries.

The mystery is not here, but far beyond the sky. The preparation for it, is in doing duty. Our Saviour did not sit down in this world and muse, but labored and did good. In your small domestic sphere, you may do as much good as an Emperor can do in his.

Always Faithfully Yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To JOHN FORSTER, [?1 FEBRUARY 1850]

Extract in F, VI, iv, 513. Date: the day after To Forster, ?31 Jan according to Forster.

I really think if there be anything wanting in the other name, that this is very pretty, and just supplies it. THE HOUSEHOLD VOICE. I have thought of many others,[†1] as—THE HOUSEHOLD GUEST. THE HOUSEHOLD FACE. THE COMRADE. THE MICROSCOPE. THE HIGHWAY OF LIFE. THE LEVER. THE ROLLING YEARS. THE HOLLY TREE (with two lines from Southey for a motto).[†2] EVERYTHING. But I rather think the VOICE is it.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?2 FEBRUARY 1850]

Extract in F, VI, iv, 513. Date: the day following To Forster, ?1 Feb according to Forster.

HOUSEHOLD WORDS.[†3] This is a very pretty name.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 4 FEBRUARY 1850

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Bedford Hotel | Brighton.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Fourth February 1850.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I will immediately apply myself to getting all the information you want. It fortunately happens that I have already directed the gentleman of whom I spoke the other day (as the person to whom I had entrusted the active business management of the new design) to see the writers of those pamphlets, and confer with them on the practicability of our doing something useful, in the Periodical, on the subject of emigration. In sending me those books, they wrote me a very earnest letter, expressive of their desire to become contributors on that subject. I will ascertain exactly what kind of man the brother now here is (for I fancy the Bushman brother[†1] has gone back again), and will take care if there should seem to be the least doubt about him, to keep you in the background while the information is obtained. Everything connected with the expences of a vessel, I will have ascertained as if for the purposes of the Work; and as this gentleman of mine is an extremely careful, methodical man, and a great part of his office is to get facts together, I have no doubt the result will be perfectly reliable.

The perusal of those books, and the knowledge they give me of a state of society of which one could have no previous understanding, and which would seem to be quite misunderstood, or very little known, even in the cities of New South Wales itself, leads me to much the same conclusion as it leads you.[†2] I am not quite sure that perfect penitence in these women—in the best of them I mean—would lead them in all cases not to Marry; for I can certainly (I think) descry a kind of active repentance in their being faithful wives and the mothers of virtuous children; but in all other respects I most certainly concur with you.

To prevent your being committed in any way to new prison cases (of which Mr. Tracey[†3] had one, the other day, while Mr. Illingworth[†4] had, I believe, one or two in contemplation) I announced at our last meeting that you had decided to change the character and object of the Home.[†1]

I shall be very glad indeed to talk with you on the sad subject to which you have—with a moral bravery which you must forgive my saying I cannot enough respect—directed your thoughts. It is difficult to approach, in pages that are intended for readers of all classes and all ages of life; but I have not the least misgiving about being able to bring people gently to its consideration.[†2] You will observe that I am endeavouring to turn their thoughts a little that way, in Copperfield. And I hope before I finish the story, to do something strongly suggestive, in that kind of preparation.

Will you tell "the General Objector",[†3] with my best regards that I sent her that ruled Diary, because, in consequence of the men of business (so inferior to the women of business!) objecting to plain Diaries, the Manufacturer now makes none of the last mentioned description? I knew she had a ruled one already, but I thought she wanted two volumes—one as a kind of daybook, for that eventful existence of hers, and the other as a Ledger, into which the entries were to be "posted". I wonder whether she would listen to any liberal proposal for a series of extracts from her journal, for my new Miscellany! We might call them "Passages in the life of a General Objector"—or "Scraps of my daily observation. By a shrewd Woman." If you think this literary Adventure might be accomplished, perhaps you would use your influence!

I was going to consult you about names for the thing, the other day—but forgot it. What do you think of the proposed one,[†4] which I write underneath? It is the profoundest secret and most mighty mystery, except to you and Mrs. and Mr. Brown.

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

"Household Words"

A Weekly Journal

To SIR THOMAS NOON TALFOURD,[†1] [4 FEBRUARY 1850]

Envelope in Christie's sale, Feb 1983; addressed T. N. Talfourd; postmarked 4 Feb 50.

To MRS GASKELL, 5 FEBRUARY 1850*

MS Berg Collection.

Devonshire Terrace. | Fifth February 1850.

My Dear Mrs. Gaskell

I cannot tell you with what true delight and gratification I have received your letter. I am perfectly confident of your power in regard to short tales, because I am morally certain that nothing so true and earnest as your writing, can go wrong under your guidance. After you shall have tried your hand once, and told me, in sending me the result, how you feel about it, I will engage to exchange opinions as freely with you as if you had placed me under a vow of fidelity in that wise. In the meanwhile I should really think it presumptuous to say more than the few words I am now going to write, in answer to your two objections.

These are, first that I am not at all afraid of the interruptions necessary to your domestic life, and that I think you will be far less sensible of them in writing short stories than in writing a long one. Secondly, that the tendency to detail, where detail is an indispensable part of the art and the reality of what is written (as it decidedly is, in your case) cannot be an objection or impediment to any kind of fiction.

I shall look forward, with great anxiety, to the receipt of a small packet from you—but with patience too, and in implicit faith. If you should really find your hand painfully cramped, or should entertain any idea that you think would be done injustice to, in too small a space, I should say it might be spread into four portions—though more would be objectionable, as I conceive, to the fair reading of the story. But this is a premature discussion now. When you send me anything which I can shew you, in our own pages as they will actually be, we shall have some resting-place for our feet.[†2]

I am very glad to hear that your poor girl is safe, so far.[†3] Let me caution you about the Cape. She must be[†4] profoundly silent there, as to her past history, and so must those who take her out. Miss Coutts and I, are just now in the receipt of reliable intelligence from that quarter[†5] (we have sent three girls there)[†6] which assures me that this caution is imperative, or she will either be miserable or flung back into the gulf whence you have raised her.[†7]

To MR SHAND,[†1] 5 FEBRUARY 1850

Photograph, Dickens House.

Devonshire Terrace, London. | Fifth February 1850.

Mr. Charles Dickens sends his compliments to Mr. Shand. The Sketches were first published.[†2] Part of them appeared in the Morning Chronicle newspaper; part in the Monthly Magazine.[†3]

To THE REV. JAMES WHITE, 5 FEBRUARY 1850

Text from MDGH, I, 217-18.

Devonshire Terrace, Tuesday, Feb. 5th, 1850.

My dear White,

I have been going to write to you for a long time, but have always had in my mind that you might come here with Lotty[†4] any day. As Lotty has come without you, however (witness a tremendous rampaging and ravaging now going on upstairs!), I despatch this note to say that I suppose you have seen the announcement of "the" new weekly thing, and that if you would ever write anything for it, you would please me better than I can tell you. We hope to do some solid good, and we mean to be as cheery and pleasant as we can. (And, putting our hands in our breeches pockets, we say complacently, that our money is as good as Blackwood's any day in the week.)[†5]

Now the murder's out!

Are you never coming to town any more? Must I come to Bonchurch?[†6] Am I born (for the eight-and-thirtieth time) next Thursday, at half-past five, and do you mean to say you are not coming to dinner? Well, well, I can always go over to Puseyism[†7] to spite my friends, and that's some comfort.

Poor dear Jeffrey! I had heard from him but a few days, and the unopened proof of No. 10 was lying on his table when he died. I believe I have lost as affectionate a friend as I ever had, or ever shall have, in this world.

Ever heartily yours, my dear White
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To FREDERICK DICKENS,[†1] 7 FEBRUARY 1850

MS Dickens House.

Devonshire Terrace | Seventh February 1850.

My Dear Fred.

Many many thanks for your affectionate letter.[†2]

I am safe to be at home to dinner tomorrow, and in the evening.

Love to Anna,[†3] whom Kate is coming to see.

In haste | Ever affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

Frederick Dickens Esquire

To HENRY AUSTIN, 8 FEBRUARY 1850*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Eighth February 1850.

My Dear Henry.

The enclosed is a part of a letter from Lever the Novelist,[†4] to Chapman the bookseller.[†5] That side which I have enclosed in pencil brackets, refers, as you will see, to your brother Robert, and is referred to me. What shall I say? That he is your brother, and has been a tutor,[†6] but I have had no knowledge of him since his boyhood? I want, if I can, to do what you think best.

Ever affecy.
CD.

To THE REV. JOHN HAYES,[†1] 8 FEBRUARY 1850

Extract in Anderson Galleries catalogue No. 1870 (Nov 1924); MS 1 p.; dated 8 Feb 50; addressed The Rev. John Hayes.

But the style of expression and manner of thought, of which you make such generous mention, come naturally to me, and are (as it were) a part of myself.

To CHARLES KNIGHT,[†2] 8 FEBRUARY 1850

Text in MDGH, I, 218, checked from MS Sotheby's 2½2 July 1983.

Devonshire Terrace | Eighth February 1850.

My Dear Knight.

Let me thank you in the heartiest manner for your most kind and gratifying mention of me in your able pamphlet.[†3] It gives me great pleasure, and I sincerely feel it.

I quite agree with you in all you say so well, of the injustice and impolicy of this excessive taxation.[†4] But when I think of the condition of the great mass of the people, I fear that I could hardly find the heart to press for justice in this respect,[†5] before the Window duty is removed.[†6] They cannot read without light—they cannot have an average chance of life and health without it—much as we feel our wrong, I fear that they feel their wrong more, and that the things first done in this wise must bear on mere physical existence.

I never see you, and begin to think we must have another Play—say in Cornwall—expressly to bring us together.[†1]

Very faithfully Yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Knight Esquire.

To HENRY RICHARDS,[†2] 8 FEBRUARY 1850

Extract in Parke-Bernet Galleries catalogue, Nov 1967; MS 1 ½ pp.; dated 1 Devonshire Terrace, 8 Feb 50; addressed Henry Richards.

having been informed by my brother that you were so kind as to arrange with him for letting me have office copies of the depositions taken . . . in the case of Thomas Powell[†3] . . . it is most important that I should be in possession of them today to send to America.[†4]

To GRAHAM WILLMORE,[†5] 8 FEBRUARY 1850

MS Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Eighth February 1850.

Sir.

I beg to thank you for your very courteous and gratifying note, and to acknowledge the receipt of your pamphlet.[†6]

I have read the latter, carefully, and though I quite agree with you in the abstract as to the importance of trial by jury, I cannot say that I participate in your alarms.[†7] I think it very wholesome that there should be this power of summarily convicting small offenders; vast numbers of whom have constantly escaped, under the old law, by reason of the natural disinclination of prosecutors to bear the great trouble and delay to which they were exposed. I regard it as very salutary, in the towns, against the worst classes of petty offenders; and I think it less dangerous, in the country, than the lying in prison for a small offence from assize to assize, and learning all the wrong that a prison can teach.

I have been much interested by your views, nevertheless, and your temperate manner of stating them.[†1]

I am Sir | Yours faithfully and obliged
CHARLES DICKENS

Graham Willmore Esquire.

To MRS GASKELL, 9 FEBRUARY 1850*

MS Mr Maurice F. Neville.

Devonshire Terrace | Ninth February 1850

Dear Mrs. Gaskell

I hasten to tell you before the post goes out, that three pages and a half of Mary Barton (third Edition) make one page of my journal. I would rather that you occupy just as many pages as you think your design wants, than that I should put any constraint upon you.

In great haste | Faithfully Yours Ever
CHARLES DICKENS

To MR SIMPSON,[†2] 9 FEBRUARY 1850

Mention in Anderson Galleries catalogue No. 1720 (1923); MS 1 p.; dated 9 Feb 50.

To W. H. WILLS, 11 FEBRUARY 1850

MS Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Eleventh February 1850.

My Dear Wills

I send the book. I observe (in reference to something you said on Saturday night) that Chambers' use the single inverted comma for quotations. And I think its adoption by us, decidedly objectionable on that account. There is nothing I am more desirous to avoid, than imitation.[†1]

Faithfully Always
CD.

W. H. Wills Esquire

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 12 FEBRUARY 1850*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace. | Tuesday Twelfth February 1850.

My Dear Miss Coutts

I couldn't answer your note until I heard from the Watsons,[†2] who are in town, and to whom I was conditionally engaged. That engagement, however, has gone off, and I shall be happy to come to you at half past six.

A good deal of the colonial information you want, I am already fully possessed of. The ship-estimates are in course of being ascertained, but are not yet to be depended on.

I am at present repairing Miss Mowcher's injury—with a very bad grace, and in a very ill humour.[†3]

Dear Miss Coutts | Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

P.S. A little news of the Home, which I will give you this evening.

To THOMAS MILNER GIBSON,[†4] 12 FEBRUARY 1850*

MS Trinity College, Cambridge. Address: The Rt. Hon. T. Milner Gibson MP | &c &c.

Devonshire Terrace | Twelfth February 1850.

My Dear Gibson.

I cannot sign the petition, because I am not at all clear of the effect of the removal of the stamp-duty from newspapers.[†5] I have not maturely considered the subject, but I am disposed to think that the tax increases their respectability—that they have a fair return for it in the postage arrangements—and that if it were taken off, we might be deluged with a flood of piratical, ignorant, and blackguard papers, something like that black deluge of Printer's Ink which blights America.[†1]

Faithfully Yours Ever
CHARLES DICKENS

T. Milner Gibson Esquire
&c &c &c

To R. H. HORNE,[†2] 12 FEBRUARY 1850

MS (copy made by Horne) Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: R. H. Horne Esq. | Beaumont Cottage | College Road | Chalk Farm Lane | Hampstead Road.

Devonshire Terrace. | Twelfth February 1850.

Dear Horne.

I cannot say anything about the shipwreck matter[†3] without knowing what it is; and I fear it is not at all likely that I shall be a free man in the "coming" (out) way, until the 22nd. or 23rd.[†4] Will you wait? or see Wills? He is always to be laid hold of.

How goes on the coal rig?[†5] That execution account, intensely horrible.[†6]

Ever faithfully yours

C.D.

R. H. Horne Esq.

To W. BLANCHARD JERROLD,[†1] 12 FEBRUARY 1850

Mention in Sotheby catalogue, June 1891; MS 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 12 Feb 50.

To EDWARD CHAPMAN, 13 FEBRUARY 1850

MS Dickens House.

Devonshire Terrace. | Thirteenth February 1850.

Dear Sir

George Cruikshank,[†2] by all means. Please to conclude with him for the frontispiece for Oliver.[†3]

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Edward Chapman Esquire

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 13 FEBRUARY 1850†

MS Carl H. Pforzheimer Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Thirteenth February 1850.

My Dear Miss Coutts

I send you enclosed, all the letters from the Shepherd's Bush box.

I also venture to send you, the original Manuscript of a little book[†4] you heard read, and in which you took a kind interest.[†5] Such things are sometimes interesting to the real friends of the writer—not for their own worth, but as a memorial of some of his pains-taking hours, and a sort of personal intimacy with them.

With best regards to Mr. and Mrs. Brown,

Dear Miss Coutts | Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To F. M. EVANS, 15 FEBRUARY 1850

MS Dickens House.

Devonshire Terrace | Friday Fifteenth February | 1850.

My Dear Evans.

We are extremely sorry to hear of Mrs. Evans, what you tell me in your note of last night. My wife is very much concerned indeed.

I will look over the agreement[†1] very shortly, and return it to you.

If you have not yet begun to print the name, don't do so, without first communicating with me. I am still trying to hammer out a better one;[†2] and though it does not seem likely to present itself, I want to have a chance to the last.

I shall be glad to have the Copperfield accounts as soon as they are ready,—for I am poor.[†3]

You are getting on, I hope, in Wellington Street. Let us have gas in the room upstairs.

Ever Yours

CD.

F. M. Evans Esquire

To FRANK STONE,[†4] 18 FEBRUARY 1850*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Eighteenth February 1850.

My Dear Stone.

I forgot.—I am engaged to dinner to day. The Noble Heart will have to beat without me.[†5]

Ever Affecy.

CD

To MASTER GEORGE WATSON,[†1] 18 FEBRUARY [1850]

Extract in Anderson Galleries catalogue, Mar 1916; MS 2 pp.; dated London, 18 Feb; 1850 on reference to Copperfield.

I beg to send you, as a small mark of my remembrance,[†2] a small printing press, which I hope you will find an amusing thing. . . . as I have been detained by a gentleman by the name of Copperfield, since ten this morning, and it is now almost six, I hope you will excuse my writing so short a letter.

To MRS HOWITT,[†3] 19 FEBRUARY 1850

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Tuesday Evening | Nineteenth February 1850

Dear Mrs. Howitt.

I address this note to Mr. Howitt, no less than to you. You will easily divine its purpose I dare say—or at all events you would, if you knew what companions of mine you have both been.

You may have seen the first dim announcements of the new cheap literary weekly Journal I am about to start.[†4] Frankly, I want to say to you that if you would ever write for it you would delight me, and I should consider myself very fortunate indeed in enlisting your assistance.

I propose to print no names of contributors, either in my own case or any other, and to give established writers the power of reclaiming their papers after a certain time. I hope any connexion with the enterprise would be satisfactory and agreeable to you in all respects—as I should most earnestly endeavour to make it—and I should be proud to give you, personally, any explanation you might like to have.

If I wrote a book, I could say no more than I mean to suggest to you in these few lines. All that I leave unsaid, I leave to your generous understanding.

Believe me always | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Howitt

To JOHN FORSTER, [20 FEBRUARY 1850]

Text from F, VI, vi, 537. Date: 20 Feb according to Forster.

I begin to have my doubts of being able to join you, for Copperfield runs high, and must be done to-morrow. But I'll do it if possible, and strain every nerve. Some beautiful comic love, I hope, in the number.[†1]

To HENRY AUSTIN, 21 FEBRUARY 1850*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty First February 1850.

My Dear Henry

I ought to know the kind of man.[†2] Give me another day to try to remember him in.

Affecy. always

CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 21 FEBRUARY 1850*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Thursday Evening | Twenty First February 1850.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

The only letters I find in the box, I send you. One of them is from Miss Morriss.[†3] I think you must have the letter from the Emigrants at the Cape.

I believe I am now in possession of the leading Emigration information you require.[†4] When shall I come to explain it to you? The afternoon of Saturday, Monday, or Tuesday, would suit me perfectly; but if Saturday, after 4.

Dear Miss Coutts | Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 22 FEBRUARY 1850*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street | Piccadilly.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Second February 1850.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

Is the enclosed case (of which I only know what you will know, when you shall have read the letter) one in which you would feel disposed to give anything, if I should find out that it is strictly true? I have just now read it, and I refer it to you with this question, feeling sure that you will answer it without the least reserve.

Ever Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To MRS HOWITT, 22 FEBRUARY 1850

MS Fitzwilliam Museum.

Devonshire Terrace | Friday Twenty Second February 1850.

My Dear Mrs. Howitt.

I am very much gratified by the terms of your kind and generous note; and I beg you and Mr. Howitt to accept my hearty thanks.[†1]

The kind of papers of which I stand most in need, are short stories, with such a general purpose in them as we all three have in all we do. But I only mention this, as a direct answer to your direct question. Whatever you may write earnestly and to your own pleasure, will be most welcome to me.

All social evils, and all home affections and associations, I am particularly anxious to deal with, well.

As to time, all that my modesty will permit me to say on this head, is, no time can be too soon. I am now getting a great mass of matter together, from a variety of sources; I purpose beginning on the 30th. of March; and it will be necessary to be always three weeks in advance. Some foreign arrangements render this obligatory on us.[†2]

With many thanks | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Howitt

To DANIEL MACLISE, 22 FEBRUARY 1850*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Devonshire Terrace | Friday Twenty Second February | 1850.

My Dear Mac

You may remember that I spoke of coming round today, to see Macready's picture?[†1] If you are disengaged, and would like to go out in the afternoon, I should like it very much. I want to see the panorama of the Nile[†2] (I believe it begins at 3); and if you have not seen it, perhaps you will go. If you have seen it, I will come later. Send me a word by Bearer.

Affecy. always
CD.

Daniel Maclise Esquire

To MARK LEMON,[†3] 22 FEBRUARY 1850

MS Huntington Library.

The Shop | Friday 22nd. Feb/50

My Dear Lemon

Maclise and I are going to the Panorama of the Nile, today at 3. We are going to dine at the Rainbow at ½ past 5. After that, we are going anywhere. If you are disengaged, and a Man, join us at one or other of these places!

Affy. Ever

CD

To MRS MARSH,[†1] 22 FEBRUARY 1850*

MS Pickering & Chatto Ltd.

London, 1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park. |
Twenty Second February 1850.

Dear Madam.

You have interested my leisure hours so often and so long, and have given me so much heartfelt pleasure by your writings, and by your generous approval of mine,[†2] that I cannot address you as a stranger.

Nor can I divest myself of the feeling that I may state the object I have in writing to you, rather with the frankness of an old friend, than with the reserve and ceremony of one who is corresponding with you for the first time.

I don't know whether you are aware that I purpose starting at the end of next month, a new cheap weekly journal of general literature, "designed for the instruction and entertainment of all classes of readers", and intended to crush, if possible, some of the weekly atrocities now issued to the town? I purpose publishing in this Miscellany, none of the names of the Writers in it (neither my own, nor any others), and to reserve to the foremost of them the right of reclaiming their children, should they be disposed to do so, after the lapse of a certain time.

If I could hope that you would assist me in this design, and that I could prevail upon you to write me some short stories for this Paper,[†3] I should most sincerely consider that I had, then, the aid of one of the most original, earnest, and delightful writers that have ever graced our language; and that among all who have responded to my appeal for co-operation, not a name could be more dear to me than that of the authoress of Emilia Wyndham.

I hope I need not say that I should strive to make the business arrangements satisfactory to you in all respects, and to conduct them in no unworthy spirit.

This, in plain words, is my case. If I were to endeavour to tell you how much I have been moved and affected by your books, I should almost feel as if I were parading the secrets of my heart. And yet I cannot help saying that they alone are the occasion of my writing to you, and that if I write in the perfect confidence that you will forgive me for the trouble to which I put you, the blame must lie on their heads.

Believe me Dear Madam | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Marsh.

To MISS GERALDINE JEWSBURY,[†1] FEBRUARY 1850

Text from Selections from the Letters of Geraldine Endsor Jewsbury to Jane Welsh Carlyle, ed. Mrs Alexander Ireland, 1892, p. xi. Date: verbally close to To Mrs Howitt, 19 Feb, but perhaps a little later in view of her letter to Mrs Carlyle: see fn.

Devonshire Terrace, London | Feb. 1850.

Dear Miss Jewsbury,

I make no apology for addressing you thus, for I am a reader of yours, and I hope I have that knowledge of you which may justify a frank approach.[†2]

I don't know whether you know that I am about to commence, at the end of next month, a new, cheap, weekly literary journal, intended to displace some of the offensive matter in that form now afloat. Be this as it may, I am steadily and actively engaged in such a design, and if I could induce you to write any papers or short stories for it I should, I sincerely assure you, set great store by your help, and be much gratified in having it.[†3]

I purpose publishing none of the writers' names—neither my own nor any others—in the periodical itself, but to give to these parents, in such a case as yours, the power of reclaiming their own children, after a certain time, if they should desire to do so. The payment, of course, is prompt and good. In no respect, I trust, would you have to regret forming the connection, and in all respects I should be truly earnest in my desire to make it most agreeable to you.

If I were to write a whole book on the subject I hardly know that I could do more than impress you with a sense of my being in want of your aid, because I estimate its value highly. I have a kind of confidence that I cannot mean to do that so steadfastly without doing it somehow, even in this short note. Therefore I leave it here.

Believe me, faithfully yours,

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Jewsbury.

To MISS HARRIET MARTINEAU,[†1] [?JANUARY-22 FEBRUARY 1850]

Mention in Harriet Martineau, Autobiography, 1877, II, 329. Date: not later than invitations to the Howitts (19 Feb) and Mrs Marsh (22 Feb), and perhaps as early as Jan: see fn.

Inviting her to write for Household Words.†2

To PERCIVAL LEIGH,†3 23 FEBRUARY 1850*

Text from transcript, Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Third February 1850.

My Dear Leigh.

I do not send you the enclosed†4 because I have the least thought—but that I am sure you know—of interfering with any of your subsisting engagements,†5 in the slightest degree. It is merely to give me the opportunity of saying that if ever you should have inclination and leisure to write anything in these pages, I should be sincerely pleased to number you among the contributors to them.†1

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Percival Leigh Esquire.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, [?23 FEBRUARY 1850]*

MS Morgan Library. Date: early 1850 on handwriting; perhaps 23 Feb, after seeing the letter from the Cape referred to in To Miss Coutts, 21 Feb.

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday Night

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I am really quite overjoyed in the first glimpse I have of this letter while your servant is waiting. Let me keep it, to read attentively, until tomorrow, when I will return it.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, [?25 FEBRUARY 1850]*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street. Date: dated by reference to the death of Nina Macready on Sunday 24 Feb (see fn).

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Night

My Dear Miss Coutts. I send you the jottings that we have spoken of. I should have done[†2] so this morning, but that I was called out.

Poor Macready's[†3] eldest child is dead.[†4]

Ever Faithfully Yours CD.

To HENRY AUSTIN, 27 FEBRUARY 1850*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Seventh February 1850.

My Dear Henry

Thornton Hunt[†1] has been very anxious to accept, but some good friends of his, who have assisted him in the matter of the proposed Paper, think otherwise, and he unwillingly declines.[†2]

For the life of me I can't think of anybody else who would do.

Many thanks for the Report, which is extraordinarily interesting. I began to read it last night, in bed—and dreamed of putefraction[†3] generally.[†4]

I am your man for Erith,[†5] any Sunday you like—or any day you like!

Ever affecy.

CD.

Henry Austin Esquire.

To W. S. BROWN,[†1] 27 FEBRUARY 1850*

MS Miss Janet Phillips.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Seventh February | 1850

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his Compliments to Mr. Brown, and regrets that his occupations render it quite out of his power to comply with the request of the Committee of the City of London Hospital for Diseases of the Chest.[†2]

To MRS GASKELL, 27 FEBRUARY 1850

Extract and facsimile (aa) in Sotheby catalogue, June 1976; MS 2 ½ pp.; dated Office of Household Words, 27 Feb 50.

Discussing the publication of "Lizzie Leigh" in the first number of Household Words.[†3] I think it excellent.[†4] I have no doubt that in your anxiety you have quite deceived youself; being unable to get far enough away from it to see it as I do. It interested me greatly, as I read it. And it made me cry—which I mention because I take that to be indisputable proof of its effect. Suggesting how the story might be brought a little closer in the first part by the omission of a line or two here and there in the Proof, and how it might be divided into weekly parts; then discussing the conclusion of the story. Do not let me interfere with any idea you may have in your mind when I ask if you propose to make Lizzie dead, at this time? I seem to see through that means, a forcible lesson on the postponement of forgiveness, and the way we have of only leaving that legacy when we are obliged to leave all legacies—at the point of Death. To leave the story with a notion of her child attaching herself to Susan's child (when, in good time she had one) and devoting herself to it would be very pretty, I fancy. But again I earnestly conjure you not to let me interfere with any idea you may have formed.[†5] Asking if he should christen the story.[†6] Saying that he has sent all he has to the printer and [a]be assured that you do yourself mere justice. Mind! I have not the least reservation or doubt, of any sort.

Dear Mrs. Gaskell | Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS[a]

To W. C. MACREADY, 28 FEBRUARY 1850*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Thursday Twenty Eighth February | 1850.

My Dearest Macready.

I write these words to you, as I should silently press your hand if I were by;—not to mourn for the dear girl who is gone; not audaciously to touch those springs of certain consolation which have long raised your thoughts to a serener air, far above the dust of this shadowy world; but as a mark of love and sympathy which, however useless, still relieves my heart of something.

God be with you, and her mother, and all else!

Ever My Dearest Macready

Your most affectionate friend

CHARLES DICKENS

W. C. Macready Esquire.

To W. H. WILLS, 28 FEBRUARY 1850

MS Huntington Library.

Office of Household Words | Twenty Eighth February 1850.

My Dear Wills. I think the addresses I enclose in this, the best. I would certainly give all these, in the article.[†1] If you have a fac-simile of any, I recommend Valparaiso.[†2]

There are several letters and proffered articles, waiting your attention here. I have put them in the right hand drawer of your table.

We must have a great reform in the Printing arrangements, without which it will be quite impossible to go on. I have not yet seen one line in proof. The consequence will be that I shall be worried and fretted to death by being overwhelmed with proofs, when I am turning to Copperfield—that I shall not have leisure to look at them as carefully as I would—that the public is not more at sea than I am, as to what we are doing—and that I cannot, with my occupations, do work in this way. I get into a state of irritation quite incompatible with it.

Mrs. Crowe's[†1] story I have read. It is horribly dismal; but with an alteration in that part about the sister's madness (which must not on any account remain)[†2] I should not be afraid of it. I could alter it myself, in ten minutes. This, too, is in your drawer here.

A great part of Mrs. Gaskell's story has come in. It is very good, but long. It will require to be printed, either in three or in four numbers.[†3]

I have written two articles—the opening one, and another[†4]—and sent them to Mr. Stacey.[†5] I suppose I might almost as profitably have put them on the top of the Theatre opposite.[†6]

At 3 on Saturday.

Faithfully Always

CD.

To CHARLES KNIGHT, [LATE FEBRUARY 1850]

Extract in Charles Knight, Passages of a Working Life, III, 112. Date: probably late Feb 50, in view of To Knight, 4 Mar, rather than "a week or two" before HW, No. 1 was published, as Knight says.

If you will write in my paper you will give me the utmost gratification, and be more welcome than the flowers in May.

March

To SAMUEL LAURENCE,[†7] 1 MARCH 1850

Mention in Puttick & Simpson catalogue, Aug 1928; dated 1 Mar 50.

Concerning an introduction.

To MARK LEMON, 1 MARCH 1850

MS Benoliel Collection.

Devonshire Terrace | First March 1850.

My Dear Lemon.

I think you asked me for this. Behold it!

How's Corn?—You are a protectionist, of course.[†8]

—Pigs looking up at all?

—Sheep lively?

—Anything new concerning Calves?[†1]

—Mangel Wurzel now. How's that?

Affecy. Ever

CD

To W. H. MURRAY,[†2] 1 MARCH 1850

Text from N, II, 207.

Devonshire Terrace | First March 1850

Dear Sir

I beg to acknowledge your kindness in giving me intelligence of the death of our late friend Sir William Allan;[†3] for whom I had a high esteem, and whose death was a source of great surprise and regret to me.

Faithfully Yours,
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To THOMAS SOUTHWOOD SMITH,[†4] 1 MARCH 1850*

MS Mr W. A. Foyle.

Devonshire Terrace | First March 1850.

My Dear Dr. Smith

Many thanks for your letter and its accompanying book. I think the report[†5] an honor to the country in which it is produced; and a monument of good sense, moderate reasoning to[†6] demonstration, and noble feeling.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Dr. Southwood Smith

To DANIEL MACLISE, 2 MARCH 1850*

MS University of Texas.

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday Morning | Second March 1850.

My Dear Mac. Send me a "Yes" or a "No" by the Early Bird who brings this.

Will you come and dine with me at the office in Wellington Street, today at ½ p 5, sharp. Stone is coming, and I want to go to a Saloon, to write about it.[†1]

Ever Affecy.
CD

To PERCIVAL LEIGH, 3 MARCH 1850*

Text from transcript, Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Sunday, Third March 1850.

My Dear Leigh,

I find, on looking to my appointment-Book (the contents of which, I can never carry in my head one yard) that I shall be at home here, all day tomorrow, until 4. If it should not suit you to call, I shall be happy to meet you at the office in Wellington Street (corner of Exeter Street) on Tuesday at ½ past 4.

Faithfully Yours
C.D.
Percival Leigh Esquire.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 4 MARCH 1850*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Fourth March 1850.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

The Colonial letters[†2] are certainly discouraging; but less so, having the girls here, than if we had sent them out.

I return Sir W Napier's[†3] letter. It is a very good and characteristic one, and has interested me very much.

I dream of Mrs. Chisholm,[†1] and her housekeeping. The dirty faces of her children are my continual companions.[†2] I forgot to tell you that she asked me if it were true that the girls at Shepherd's Bush "had Pianos". I shall always regret that I didn't answer yes—each girl a grand, down stairs—and a cottage in her bedroom—besides a small guitar in the wash-house.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To CHARLES KNIGHT, 4 MARCH 1850

Extract in Sotheby catalogue July 1983; MS 1 p.; dated 4 Mar 50; addressed Charles Knight.

CD has gone over the enclosed for Household Words and it is most capital. Suggests reversing the order of the articles as it is better to begin with a subject unconnected with our own immediate interest as engaged in a publication.[†3]

To TOM TAYLOR,[†4] 4 MARCH 1850*

MS Dickens House.

Devonshire Terrace | Fourth March 1850.

My Dear Taylor

If you should find it within your inclination and convenience to write anything in my Household Words,[†5] I am sure I need not say (though I do say, nevertheless,) that I should be very sincerely gratified.

Ever Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Tom Taylor Esquire.

To BENJAMIN WEBSTER,[†1] 4 MARCH 1850*

MS British Museum.

Devonshire Terrace | Fourth March 1850.

My Dear Sir

You may rely, I hope, on me. I stedfastly purpose to attend the dinner; and I shall be truly happy to do all in my power (little enough, I am sure!) to support you, manfully.[†2]

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Benjamin Webster Esquire.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 6 MARCH 1850

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street | Piccadilly.

Devonshire Terrace | Sixth March 1850.

My Dear Miss Coutts

I have been working away so hard, at these Household Words, that I am going to Brighton tomorrow for a fortnight, to pursue Copperfield[†3] in peace. My address is, 148 King's Road.[†4] I shall be at 16 Wellington Street North, on Saturday at 3.

I mention these interesting particulars, in case you should want me for anything.

You will be pleased to hear, I know, that Mr. Cooksley[†5] gave us, yesterday, a most brilliant account of Charley.[†6] He says he is a frank ingenuous boy, "who wears his heart upon his sleeve"—that work is no trouble to him, and he always does it admirably—that he has never had any pupil in whom he has been so warmly interested—and that he is fast becoming one of the most popular boys at Eton.

With kind regards to Mr. and Mrs. Brown,

Always Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To JOSEPH KING, [?6 MARCH 1850]

Mention in Henry Bristow of Ringwood catalogue No. 281 (1983); MS fragment with signature. Date: no doubt the same day that he gave Miss Coutts Cookesley's report on Charley: see last.

Describing the good impression Charley is making on Mr Cookesley.

To MRS GASKELL, 6 MARCH 1850*

MS Massachusetts Historical Society.

Devonshire Terrace | Sixth March 1850.

My Dear Mrs. Gaskell

I send you, enclosed, an uncorrected proof of your story, as far as it has yet gone. Don't you think Lizzie Leigh a pretty name for it?

You will observe that I purpose to state in the beginning how many chapters it contains, in order that the readers may prepare themselves for so much continuation of interest. Let me particularly beg you not to put the least constraint upon yourself, as to space. Allow the story to take its own length, and work itself out. I will engage to get it in, very easily, whatsoever the extent to which it may go.

Your design as to its progress and conclusion are undoubtedly the best. The inventor's, I consider, must be.

I am sorry you positively refuse to be comforted. I may mention in spite of that, however, that I am not at all singular in my opinion of Lizzie. Forster (who has a share in the publication) came to me in a state of the highest admiration after reading the proof; and the printers were very much impressed by it too.

Pray address me here, as usual. I merely dated my note from the office, because I happened to be writing there, and had no other note paper.

Mrs. Dickens and her sister beg me to send their love.

Dear Mrs. Gaskell | Always Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Gaskell.

P.S. I ought to apologize for omitting to address my last as you directed. Not being certain where I ought to send this, I send it to Manchester.

To W. H. WILLS, 6 MARCH 1850

MS Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Sixth March 1850.

My Dear Wills

I should wish Hogarth to see that article before it is used.[†1] Will you see him, and set him to work on something else? He has nothing in hand now. And will you name to me, certain days and hours when you can always be found in Wellington Street? So that I may know, for my own guidance, and that of any one whom I may want to send to you.

I have given Greening[†1] a little article of my own, called "A Bundle of Emigrants' Letters"—introducing some five or six originals, which are extremely good.[†2]

I don't feel your objection to Lizzie Leigh so much, for this reason.—She had seen and watched Susan, before she deserted the child; and she has yet to give her own account of that transaction.[†3]

Tomorrow I am going to Brighton (148 King's Road) whence I shall come up, of course, for Saturday. I should like to have a proof of the Funeral article[†4] sent down to me. I understood it to be quite arranged that we were only to make up one Number, at this next Meeting. Will you tell them to have the fire lighted at the Office, at 10 on Saturday?

Ever Faithfully

CD.

I understand my father went on like the Steam Leg (oratorically speaking) at your dinner.

To W. H. WILLS, 6 MARCH 1850*

MS Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Wednesday Evening | Sixth March 1850.

My Dear Wills

I left your enquiry as to the newspaper, unanswered. Don't you think Lemon would answer the requirements, and that the occupation might be useful to him?[†5]

Ever Yours

CD.

To THE BISHOP OF [OXFORD],[†1] 7 MARCH 1850

Extract in Maggs catalogue, Spring 1933; MS 1 p.; dated Brighton, 7 Mar 50; addressed Bishop of [Oxford].

I shall be very happy to become a member of the Committee to which that letter refers, and to do all in my power to advance its objects.

To HENRY COLE,[†2] 7 MARCH 1850

Text from N, II, 209.

Brighton, 148 Kings Road | Thursday Evening, Seventh March 1850

My Dear Sir

I have done the needful by the Bishop, and told him I shall be happy to serve on the committee.[†3]

Will you kindly take charge of the enclosed cheque for £5, as my subscription towards the Leviathan fund?[†4]

Faithfully Yours

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To EFFINGHAM WILSON,[†1] 7 MARCH 1850*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Brighton, 148 Kings Road | Seventh March 1850. | Thursday Night

Dear Sir

I beg you will accept my very cordial thanks for the letter you have had the goodness to write to me, in reference to the case of Thomas Powell.[†2] I have no serious apprehension of the success of that Rascal; but a manful communication like yours is very important assistance towards that entire demolition of him which I hope to effect—only because I know him to be so irreclaimable and dangerous a criminal, that society cannot bear him.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Effingham Wilson Esquire

To EDWARD CHAPMAN, 9 MARCH 1850*

MS Berg Collection.

Brighton, 148 King's Road | Ninth March 1850.

Dear Sir

I shall be glad in the accounts for the half year ending last Xmas, and in all future accounts, to have a separate abstract of the results of Oliver Twist, as I have sharers in my interest in that book.[†3]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Edward Chapman Esquire.

To MRS GASKELL, 9 MARCH 1850*

MS Yale University Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday Ninth March 1850

My Dear Mrs. Gaskell

I write in the greatest haste to save the post.

I intend putting the beginning of Lizzie—the two first chapters—ending "when Tom had left the room, he prepared to speak"—into the 1st. No.[†4] And the 1st. No will have to go to Press on Tuesday Morning. If there be anything you wish to alter

(we will have the proof carefully corrected), in this part of the story, or if you object to the name, will you let me know without fail by Monday's post. Otherwise Heaven knows how many copies will be worked off.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Gaskell

To CHARLES KNIGHT, 9 MARCH 1850

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, July 1983; dated 9 Mar 50.

Thinks Miss Martineau's proposal for a series most useful and timely.[†1] I read the Lucifer match[†2] as I was coming up from Brighton, and am greatly delighted with it.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 10 MARCH 1850*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street | Piccadilly | London.

Brighton, 148 Kings Road | Tenth March 1850.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I really think it an extraordinary good thing to be rid of Myers.[†3] I don't know where she could have been sent, or what could have been hoped of her.

It is remarkable that on the day when Walsh was discharged, I shewed the Committee two entries I had made in her case. The first was, that she gave me the idea of having come into the Home at all, with the design of urging a certain young man to take her away from it; the second, that immediately on coming in, she had attached herself to Myers, which looked bad. I don't think she wanted much instigation; and I believe, after what we saw of her that day, that she is a very false, worthless, vicious person. It is infinitely better (heavy discouragements as these things are) that she should come out in her true colors here, than aboardship.

It is comfortable to think that the class of inmates is to be changed.[†4] And I still hope that you will have saved a dozen women when we have got rid of these.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To AUGUSTUS DICKENS, 10 MARCH 1850

MS Comtesse de Suzannet.

Brighton, Tenth March 1850.

My Dear Augustus.

I should have been quite delighted to do all in my power for Mr. Chapman, but that I have retired from the Parthenon[†1] some years—five, I should think.

Pray tell John Barrow[†2] that I am much obliged to him for his kind and valuable assistance in the matter of the slandered Powell.

Affecy. always
CHARLES DICKENS

To PERCIVAL LEIGH, 10 MARCH 1850*

Text from transcript, Huntington Library.

Brighton, 148 King's Road. | Sunday, Tenth March 1850.

My Dear Leigh,

I am greatly pleased with your notion[†3]—except that I wouldn't make the churchwarden to have been asleep. We have another story now in hand, which is a dream;[†4] and I think it would be better to imply that it was said he had been thinking for himself a little, and had cleaned his spectacles and looked about him, and so forth; though there were a few Aldermen and other luminaries who never could be brought to believe it, because they said, why do that? They never had had their spectacles cleaned: they saw better through the dirt; and they could see further into millstones, too, than most men—&c &c.

Some such change as this, and the intimation that we must always go on improving the times, would adapt it perfectly to my purpose.[†5] Your moral that the real old times are the oldest times, is charming,[†1] and I shall be delighted to have the whole story as soon as it is finished.

To conclude with a bran new phrase, "I am on the tip toe of expectation"![†2]

Ever Faithfully yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Percival Leigh Esquire.

To JOHN THOMPSON,[†3] 10 MARCH 1850*

MS Miss L. E. Godden.

Brighton, Sunday | Tenth March 1850.

I forgot to tell you John, if Mr. Wills calls, to shew him any letters there may be, and to admit him into the study, and allow him to take any books or papers he requires.

CHARLES DICKENS

To W. H. WILLS, 12 MARCH 1850

MS Huntington Library.

Brighton, 148 Kings Road | Tuesday Night Twelfth March | 1850

My Dear Wills.

My objection to entering into the Sunday business[†4] is, that whatever we state, is sure to be contradicted; and I observed Rowland Hill[†5] to be a very cautious and reserved man, whom I should strongly doubt as to his backing qualities in such a case. If the passage stand at all, I should wish it to stand as I have altered it.[†6] But I should be glad if you would shew it to Forster, as a casting opinion. We will abide by his black or white ball.[†1]

I have made a correction or two, in my part of the Post office article. I still observe the top heavy household Words in the Title. The title of the amusements of the People, has to be altered as I have marked it. I would as soon have my hair cut off, as an intolerable Scotch shortness put into my titles by the elision of little words.[†2] "The Seasons"[†3] wants a little punctuation. Will the Incident in the Life of Madlle Clairon go into those two pages? I fear not, but one article would be infinitely better, I am quite certain, than two or three short ones. If it will go in,—in with it.[†4]

I shall be back, please God, by dinner time tomorrow Week. I will be ready for Smithfield,[†5] either on the following Monday Morning at 4, or on any other morning you may arrange for.

Would it do, to make up No. 2.[†6] on Wednesday the 20th. instead of Saturday? If so, it would be an immense convenience to me. But if it be distinctly necessary to make it up on Saturday, say so by return, and I am to be relied on. Don't fail in this.

Supposing you had a plan for the Household Narrative, and we would [and][†7] could come distinctly to the understanding of it, I should incline to Forster's opinion. But I apprehended, last Saturday, that neither was your plan sufficiently matured, nor were the materials for its execution sufficiently considered (as to assistance and so forth) to admit of our beginning now, otherwise than short-sightedly—say with a blindness of one eye.

Thanks for the prison facts.[†8]

Faithfully Always

CD.

W. H. Wills Esquire.

To HENRY AUSTIN, 13 MARCH 1850*

MS Morgan Library.

Brighton, 148 Kings Road | Wednesday Evening | Thirteenth March 1850.

My Dear Henry. I don't know anything about Tom Taylor's "antecedents", but I am quite sure that he is in all respects a capital man for your purpose[†1]—though I should have thought the Man in the Moon a more likely one. He may be a little inconstant[†2] (though I don't know that he is); but he achieved a great distinction at the university,[†3] has genius besides, of a certain kind; and can work soundly, if he pleases. I should think him a great catch.

Such weather here! So bright and beautiful! And here I sit, glowering over Copperfield all day—though God forbid I should represent there being any hardship in that.

In haste, to write by return | Ever affecy.

CD.

To T. E. WELLER,[†4] 13 MARCH 1850

Extract in John Wilson catalogue 8; MS 1 p.; dated Brighton, 13 Mar 50.

Thanking him for having sent a list of names, and expressing regret that my vote for the orphan working school[†5] is long since promised.

To WILLIAM BRADBURY, 14 MARCH 1850

MS Dickens House.

148 Kings Road, Brighton | Fourteenth March 1850.

My Dear Bradbury

"Positively for this occasion only", I think the proposed change in the Preliminary Word, good. The title now looks excellent.[†1]

I really think it is an extraordinary production; and if the Public be not satisfied, I don't know what they would have.[†2] I never read such a Number of anything else.

And here's a man for you!—They sent me today the proposed No. 2, in a list of articles. The amazing undersigned feels a little uncomfortable at a want of Household tenderness in it. So he puts away Copperfield, at which he has been working like a Steam Engine—writes (he thinks) exactly the kind of thing to supply the deficiency—and sends if off, by this post, to Forster!

What an amazing man!

Ever Yours

CD.

My love to Evans. P.S. All pieces of plate to be addressed, 1 Devonshire Terrace.

To MRS GASKELL, 14 MARCH 1850

MS John Rylands Library. Address: Mrs Gaskell | Upper Rumford Street | Manchester.

Brighton, 148 Kings Road | Fourteenth March 1850.

My Dear Mrs. Gaskell

Will you address your answer to this, to Devonshire Terrace, and write by return?[†3]

I am strongly of opinion that as Lizzie is not to die, she ought to put that child in Susan's own arms, and not to lay it down at the door. Observe!—The more forcibly and strongly and affectingly, you exhibit her mother's love for her, the more cruel you will make this crime of desertion in her. The sentiment which animates the mother, will have been done violence to by the daughter; and you cannot set up the one, without pulling down the other.

The slightest alteration will suffice to set this right.[†1] If you will make it, in your answer, I should prefer it to our doing it; but rely upon it, it will do Lizzie an immense service,—and I am sure you would do anything to serve her! I am quite confident of its removing an objection otherwise certain to suggest itself—and the better you write, the stronger it is.[†2] I can't tell you how earnestly I feel it.

Dear Mrs. Gaskell | Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [14 MARCH 1850]

Extract in F, VI, iv, 513. Date: Brighton, 14 Mar 50, according to Forster.

Looking over the suggested contents of number two at breakfast this morning I felt an uneasy sense of there being a want of something tender,[†3] which would apply to some universal household knowledge. Coming down in the railroad the other night (always a wonderfully suggestive place to me when I am alone) I was looking at the stars, and revolving a little idea about them. Putting now these two things together, I wrote the enclosed little paper,[†4] straightway; and should like you to read it before you send it to the printers (it will not take you five minutes), and let me have a proof by return.

To T. E. WELLER, 15 MARCH 1850*

MS Watt Monument Library, Greenock.

Brighton, 148 King's Road | Fifteenth March 1850.

My Dear Sir

I am sorry to say my vote is gone.[†1] The moment a periodical breach is made in the Orphan Working Walls, there is a rush of besiegers always, who carry me (and the greater portion of the subscribers, I believe) off, at the point of the bayonet.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

T. E. Weller Esquire

To CAPTAIN E. E. MORGAN,[†2] 17 MARCH 1850*

MS Houghton Library, Harvard. Address: Captain Morgan | Packet Ship 'Southampton' | East India Docks | London.

Brighton, 17 March 1850.

My Dear Sir

I thank you warmly, for your kind remembrance of me. It gratifies me very much.

Mrs. Dickens desires her kind regards. We shall be back in town on Wednesday. Have you any better engagement for this day week, than to join our family dinner at ½ past 5? If not, I shall be delighted to find a note at home, saying we may expect you.[†3]

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Captain Morgan.

To MR CLARKSON,[†4] 18 MARCH 1850*

MS Private.

Brighton | Eighteenth March 1850

Mr. Charles Dickens sends his compliments to Mr. Clarkson, and is happy to add his name to Mr. Clarkson's List.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 19 MARCH 1850*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | 1 Stratton Street | Piccadilly | London.

Brighton, 148 Kings Road | Nineteenth March 1850.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I know you will be hardly less pleased than we are, to read the enclosed note and list from Mr. Cooksley. The novelty and all things considered, I think my dear boy has done all that we could wish, thank God!

I am coming home tomorrow. I don't know where my head is; but I have been working it off, and it is not here.

With best remembrances to Mr. and Mrs. Brown

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MARTIN FARQUHAR TUPPER,[†1] 19 MARCH 1850

MS Berg Collection.

Brighton, Nineteenth March 1850.

My Dear Sir

I am extremely gratified by the terms in which you address me. Your letter is most welcome to me, and has given me the utmost pleasure. I too, as a reader of yours, (though I could wish you had given me more to do) have all kinds of pleasant and interesting associations with you. And hence the uncommon satisfaction I have in your genial consideration of me.

I shall not remain here many days longer, and shall be delighted to see you in town if you will propose a time that will suit your convenience. My engagements (of business) are so very numerous just now, that I fear I am not at all likely to make a burst into your part of the country,[†2] yet awhile.

When I went to America,[†3] I did not take my children, though I took my wife. We had not such an amazing Caravan then, as we have now, but I left them at home.

I am perfectly acquainted, however, as you may suppose, with every kind of accommodation and want of accommodation in travelling, all over the States, as well as on the Voyage. I will take the last, first.

Most decidedly, no steamer will take you for anything like the money you name. And I have not the shadow of a shade of a doubt—as Brougham says[†1]—that you ought to go in a Liner: i e a packet ship. There is infinitely more room; you can make room, by knocking two "state rooms" into one (as I did, coming home); you can contract for your whole family without difficulty, for about half a steamer's charges; the motion is incomparably easier; the interest of the passage much greater; you might even take the whole of the Ladies Cabin, and be in a perfect house of your own. Against all these advantages, you have merely to set a longer passage. But I apprehend time to be less important to you than comfort; and the sea-sickness once over (mind! You would not be half so sick in an airy, skimming ship, as in a mad, plunging Sea-Bull of a steamer, bent on rushing head first at every demoniacal obstacle that is to be found in the Atlantic, and going through the water instead of over it) another week or two is a mere luxurious idleness.[†2] I expect to see the Captain[†3] of the finest Packet Ship in this trade, on Sunday next. I will sound him closely about all the ships; knowing him to be one of the most honest and skilful mariners in the World. The result of our discourse shall be yours when you please.

If you have two servants accustomed to children, on whom you can thoroughly depend, I would recommend you to take them. An American Help is a tremendous misnomer, even in an American case. But in an English case!—I should say Mrs. Tupper would go mad in a month.

There would be a Cow (I mean that for C.O.W.)[†4] aboard-ship. The steward would tell you, in consultation, whether you would require, with that milk-consuming band, any tins besides.

The children would be as hearty aboard ship as under any circumstances in the World. Few packet ships carry Surgeons. Take a Medicine chest. Surgeons in the steamers.

I cannot think of any place in America where I would like to leave my children, they being strangers to the air and soil, so well as at Boston or in the neighbourhood of Boston; or at, or near, Hartford in Connecticut. In the latter place, they would be more in your way (I don't mean as incumbrances) when you were travelling about, than in the former. But if I contemplated such a Move, I should almost be inclined to leave mine in Canada—at Kingston or Montreal—surrounded by English. There are delightful people among the Americans—more simple-hearted and good natured than almost any I know—but it would be an extraordinarily strange thing to a lady, to find herself alone for months together, in a little American town. Boston always excepted. And supposing you sailed to New York, you would very easily take them there. New York would not do—much too feverish.

I shall be very happy to give you any amount of details you may ask me for. Generally, this is what now occurs to me in answer to your questions. I believe I am quite "up" in the subject in all its branches. Either to Boston, or to Canada, I could give you letters[†1] that would help to make Mrs. Tupper happy, and at home.

Believe me, | My Dear Sir
Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Martin Farquhar Tupper Esquire.

To HENRY AUSTIN, 20 MARCH 1850*

MS Morgan Library.

Household Words Office | Wednesday 20th. March 1850

My Dear Henry

Will you come and dine with me on Friday—name your own hour, writing to Devonshire Terrace—to meet my Sub, who wants to ask you about some things sanitary? We shall be quite by ourselves.

And will you kindly look at the enclosed rough Proof, and tell me whether there is anything challengeable in it. It is by the Sub, aforesaid.[†2]

Ever affecy.

CD.

To HENRY AUSTIN, 21 MARCH 1850*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Thursday Night | Twenty First March 1850.

My Dear Henry

At 6 tomorrow, I shall expect you. I have asked Horne who has been working out some suggestions of mine, admirably.[†3] Let me explain to you about Wills, that he has not the ghost of an idea in the imaginative way; but that I have chosen him for a union of qualities very necessary to the business-part of such a design as the great one in hand. Whatever you know to be wrong in his Water article,[†4] I shall oblige to be amended. Don't shirk the fact, as it is within your knowledge, from any delicacy.

I will shew you tomorrow a few lines of Sanitary Preface I have done, to the cheap Oliver. I have gone to the expence of printing it to "sew up" with Copperfield at the end of this month[†1]—with the patriotic view of "sewing up" at the same time, Sir Peter Laurie[†2]—

—That incarnation of a Vulgar Soul and a thoroughly mean and sordid spirit. Eh bien! Attendons!—

Ever affecy.

CD.

To F. M. EVANS, 21 MARCH 1850

MS Dickens House.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty First March 1850.

My Dear Evans.

As the work, in Household Words, will be always in advance, and must be when it ceases to be done (though I hope that's a long way off), a month's Salary must be paid to me, and to Wills, on the publication of the first number. I should like mine to be paid in monthly, as the Copperfield hundred pound is.[†3]

I wish to mention now, that in case we ever should find it expedient to put anybody into the house in Wellington Street, I want to reserve that post for my man John. He has been with me ten years, and is an excellent servant and a most ingenious fellow, and I should be very sorry indeed to lose him. But he has spoken to me on the subject (with a view, I suppose, to getting married), and I feel that I have no right to stand in his way, but am bound to reward him with what he likes best, if I can.

Will you send me two or three pulls of the preface to Oliver Twist. Where would you put it in Copperfield? Facing the last page? We ought to keep the place between the Illustrations and the first page, for Household Words.[†4]

Ever Yours
CD.

F. M. Evans Esquire.

To MRS SYDNEY SMITH,[†1] 21 MARCH 1850*

MS Mr D. C. L. Holland.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty First March 1850.

My Dear Mrs. Smith

I cannot forbear writing to say, that I greatly rejoice in your determination;[†2] and that I have read the letter of my late dear friend Jeffrey,[†3] with the warmest interest and sympathy.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Sydney Smith

To THOMAS BEARD,[†4] 22 MARCH 1850

MS Dickens House. Address: Favored by Charley. | Thomas Beard Esquire | Morning Herald Office | Shoe Lane.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Second March 1850.

My Dear Beard

Charley, the Bearer, who has already distinguished himself like a Brick, at Eton—got a prize—been declared at the head of his division, and floored all the boys therein—wants, in these Easter Holidays to learn to swim at the Holborn Baths,[†5] as he can't otherwise "get into the boats"—and that's not to be thought of. I am not sure, but I think I have heard you say that you know the Proprietor of these baths. At all events you are amphibious, and would introduce him with the best effect. Might I ask you, my ould boy, if you would call for him as you come by, tomorrow morning, and take him to the place and arrange for his being taught the noble art? I should take it very kindly.

Are you engaged on Sunday? If not, will you come and dine at half past 5, and drink success to Household Words.

Ever affectionately

CD.

Thomas Beard Esquire.

To F. M. EVANS, 22 MARCH 1850

MS Dickens House.

Devonshire Terrace. | Saturday Twenty Second March | 1850.

My Dear Evans

I will meet you tomorrow, under the gateway of Somerset House (western side) at 5 minutes before 12.

It strikes me that the Oliver preface ought decidedly to be a Bill at the end. These proofs have not got the heading I wrote for that purpose.[†1] Have you got it?

My object is, not to make a place for John, but to reserve this one for him, in case we should think it advisable or necessary, at any time, to put anyone in the house.[†2]

Ever Yours

CD.

F. M. Evans Esquire.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 24 MARCH 1850*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Sunday Twenty Fourth March | 1850.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

Thinking you may like to see this cheap venture,[†3] before my friend with the many heads sees it, I send it you.

Ever Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To MOWBRAY MORRIS,[†4] 24 MARCH 1850

MS Mr W. A. Foyle.

Devonshire Terrace | Sunday Twenty Fourth March | 1850.

My Dear Morris

Will you tell your friend Mrs. Elliot,[†5] that I am not the vagabond I know she thinks me? That I have not forgotten my promise. That I enquired into that case of Elliotson's,[†6] and deemed it not a good one for a novice to see. But that when I hear of a better, I shall prove myself the most faithful of men?

Do you mean to try the spell? I am your man for the experiment[†1]—next Sunday for instance—if you have really a mind to test your susceptibility.

With regards to Mrs. Morris | Believe me | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mowbray Morris Esquire

To CHARLES KNIGHT, 26 MARCH 1850

Extract in N, II, 212, from catalogue source; MS 2 pp.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 26 Mar 50.

The Illustrations of Cheapness[†2] are most admirable. We have opened number 3 with the Lucifer Match,[†3] and I assure you it comes out gloriously. Odd enough, I was in that Parker[†4] Street the other day, and looking through the little window at that identical globe-maker![†5] I was conning in my mind, as I came away, some faint idea of describing him as a traveller who was for ever going round the world, without stirring out of that small street,[†6] but I never thought of him in his far better capacity as an Illustrator of cheapness. I have a story, in three parts, from Miss Martineau,[†7] and am going to read it to-day.

To MR LEE,[†8] 26 MARCH 1850

Text from N, II, 213.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Sixth March 1850

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Lee, and begs with many thanks to acknowledge the receipt of Mr. Lee's book, and very courteous and obliging note.

To MISS MARTINEAU, [?27 MARCH 1850]

Mention in To Stone, 2 Apr 50. Date: soon after reading her story on 26 Mar (see To Knight, that day).

To FRANK STONE, [?27 MARCH 1850]

Mention in To Stone, 2 Apr 50. Date: posted at same time as last: see To Stone, 2 Apr 50.

Approving of the course Stone had taken and promising that they would do all they could to make his wife and children happy;[†1] concluding with an invitation to dine at Wellington Street on 30 March.

To W. H. WILLS, 29 MARCH 1850

MS Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Ninth March 1850.

My Dear Wills.

I have sent a note to you just now, in Wellington Street. I suppose you'll get it before you get this?

[†a]I really can't promise to be comic. Indeed your note puts me out a little, for I had just sat down to begin "It will last my time".—I will shake my head a little, and see if I can shake a more comic substitute out of it.[†2†a]

The first part of Miss Martineau's Story is in Greening's hands. It is heavy.[†3]

[†a]As to two comic articles, or two any sort of articles, out of me, that's the intensest extreme of nogoism.[†4†a]

Faithfully CD.

To JOHN LEECH,[†1] 30 MARCH 1850

MS Benoliel Collection.

Office of Household Words | Thirtieth March 1850.

My Dear Leech.

I find (on account of the Railway Trains not running in church-time)[†2] that we must meet tomorrow morning, at a quarter before 10. We are here, this evening,[†3] if you should be leaving your Punch early.[†4] Tell Lemon so, from me.

Ever Faithfully

CD

To DANIEL MACLISE, 30 MARCH 1850*

MS Mr Walter Leuba.

Office of Household Words | Thirtieth March 1850.

My Dear Mac.

We must each leave our home tomorrow morning, at a quarter before 10, as the Blackwall Trains[†5] don't run in church-time. Don't fail.

Forster begs me to say that he "propoges" to see you on Monday, instead of Sunday, in re Hogarth.[†6]

Ever Affecy.

CD.

To DANIEL MACLISE, 30 MARCH 1850*

MS Howes Bookshop Ltd.

Office of Household Words | Thirtieth March 1850.

My Dear Mac.

I have discovered a means of avoiding the early starting, proposed in my letter of this evening No. 1. If you leave home exactly at a quarter before eleven,[†7] it will do.

Affecy. always

CD.

April

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 1 APRIL 1850

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace. | First April 1850.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

We held the Committee, last Tuesday. There were no complaints, and all was going on well.

The Monthly book (including fire insurance, gardeners salary &c) was £44.1.11 ½, in addition to which I have given Mrs. Morson, she having no money, £5 for petty cash. Her salary and Miss Macartney's[†1] being due, I should have paid them also, but that I was not sure whether you would prefer to pay them yourself. Shall I do so, now?

I enclose Mr. Evans's account of Charley's expences at Eton, with the vouchers belonging to them. Some of the charges, you will see, belong to the commencement of his career there. I have a sort of half doubt whether I ought to send them all to you, but as they are all included in the one statement I decide to do so.

Dear Miss Coutts | Ever Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To W. W. GREEN,[†2] 1 APRIL 1850

Text from Barnet J. Bayer Inc. catalogue (?1929); MS 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 1 Apr 50; addressed Mr Green.

Mr. Charles Dickens sends his compliments to Mr. Green, and has to inform him, in reply to his letter, that all the business arrangements connected with the new publication to which it refers, have been for some time completed.

To DANIEL MACLISE, 1 APRIL 1850*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday First April 1850.

My Dear Mac. I don't know where you got to, last night. The young lady was not interesting, and I was after you in three or four minutes.

I have written to Forster that you will meet him at the Rainbow today, at halfpast five. I don't think I shall come, having my eye on tomorrow.

Affecy. always

CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?1 APRIL 1850]

Mention in last. Date: probably written the same day.

To F. O. WARD,[†1] 1 APRIL 1850*

MS Massachusetts Historical Society.

Devonshire Terrace | First April 1850.

Dear Sir

I am exceedingly obliged to you for the interesting and affecting memorial of poor Hood,[†2] which you have had the kindness to send me. I shall set great store by it, and I beg to tender you my cordial thanks.

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

F. O. Ward Esquire.

To FRANK STONE, 2 APRIL 1850*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Devonshire Terrace | Tuesday Second April 1850.

My Dear Stone.

I can't conceive what has become of that letter. Another, posted at the same time and by the same hand, for Miss Martineau in Westmoreland, reached her in due course.

It was to tell you how convinced I was of the rectitude and truthfulness of the course you had taken, and to say that we claimed the privilege, whenever your arrangements should come to that, of doing all we could to make your wife and children happy. It finished by asking you to dine in Wellington Street last Saturday with Henry Austin, Wills, and me. Your empty chair first suggested to me that it might have miscarried.

In haste (going to Richmond)[†3]

Ever affecy.

CD

To RICHARD DOYLE,[†1] 3 APRIL 1850

Summary in Sotheby's catalogue, Oct 1950; dated Devonshire Terrace, 3 Apr 50.

Welcoming him home from a tour abroad,[†2] facetiously informing him that since he has been away there have been several expeditions to the North Pole, that Franklin has not been discovered,[†3] and that Dr. Wiseman[†4] has died and made a good end.

To THOMAS TODD,[†5] 3 APRIL 1850*

MS Dickens House. Address: Mr. Thomas Todd | 35 Garden Street | Wakefield.

Devonshire Terrace | Third April 1850.

Sir.

I beg to thank you for your letter, and to assure you that as a genuine and unaffected expression of good will,[†6] it is most pleasant and welcome to me.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Thomas Todd

To W. H. WILLS, 3 APRIL 1850*

MS Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Wednesday Night | Third April 1850.

My Dear Wills

I think I have got a notion for that column and a half,[†1] which is capable of resumption at divers times and in all such emergencies. I will do it, either tonight (I have been working all day) or the first thing tomorrow morning.

Ever Yours

CD.

To HENRY MORLEY,[†2] [?4 APRIL 1850]

Mention in H. S. Solly, The Life of Henry Morley, p. 149. Date: enclosed in a letter from Forster received by Morley 5 Apr.

Requesting him to write on sanitary matters in Household Words.[†3]

To PERCIVAL LEIGH, 5 APRIL 1850*

Text from transcript, Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Friday Fifth April 1850.

My Dear Leigh,

I like your story[†1] very much—have gone carefully over it—and sent it to the Printer. You will probably receive a proof, at the Punch dinner tomorrow.

Faithfully Yours

C.D.

Percival Leigh Esquire.

To WILLIAM HOWITT, 6 APRIL 1850

Mention in Sotheby's catalogue, Apr 1891; MS 1 p.; dated 6 Apr 50.

Saying that he has read Howitt's story[†2] with great interest.

To [PERCY][†3] B. ST JOHN,[†4] 6 APRIL 1850

Extract in Lowe Bros catalogue No. 1200; MS 3 pp.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 6 Apr 50.

I do not feel justified in giving any decided opinion on the suitability of such a series of tales as you propose to . . . Household Words[†5] . . . The subject is very interesting and important, but it would require the most delicate handling and the utmost tact; for there is a general repulsion in England from what is considered the wild inconstancy and restlessness of the French people . . .

The dangerous classes of France are not, I take it, altogether so unknown to English readers as you suppose.

To EDWARD HERFORD,[†6] 8 APRIL 1850*

MS Carl H. Pforzheimer Library.

Devonshire Terrace, London | Eighth April 1850.

Dear Sir

I regret that I cannot have the pleasure of accepting your invitation to become a member of the Committee for promoting the important design in which you are interested. But I have resolved that I will not, in future, connect myself, by name only, with any public object; and my present engagements are so very arduous that I could not hope to bestow any attention or time upon this.

Let me assure you that I perfectly remember our communication on the subject of the Lyceums.[†1]

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Edward Herford Esquire

To PERCIVAL LEIGH, 8 APRIL 1850*

Text from transcript, Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace, | Eighth April 1850.

My Dear Leigh,

An excellent subject, fraught with a good plain purpose. I think if it were written in the first person as a recollection (supposing that should come easy and natural to you) it would be best presented to the reader.[†2]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Percival Leigh Esquire.

To MR GREENING, 9 APRIL 1850*

MS Bradbury, Agnew & Co. Ltd. Address: Mr. Greening | Messrs. Bradbury and Evans | Printers | Whitefriars | Fleet Street.

Sigs C & D of the American Notes,[†3] being carefully read, may go to Press.[†4]

To F. M. EVANS, 10 APRIL 1850

MS Dickens House.

Devonshire Terrace | Tenth April 1850.

My Dear Evans.

You will see by the enclosed and the letter accompanying it (which please return) that there will be no profits on Oliver Twist until next half year.[†1] I suppose it is all correct. I never understand his accounts. The other books are all paying very well.[†2]

Faithfully Yours

CD.

F. M. Evans Esquire

To MR GREENING, [?10 APRIL 1850]*

MS Bradbury, Agnew & Co. Ltd. Date: probably 10 Apr 50 since about proofs of "Pet Prisoners", HW, 27 Apr 50 (I, 97).

Devonshire Terrace, Wednesday Night

Dr. Mr. Greening. The queries in Pet Prisoners, are all nonsense. Please to put the article to press as I sent it back to you, if you have not already done so.

CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 12 APRIL 1850

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Twelfth April 1850.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I return the Bishop's letter.[†3] It really puts one in heart again. I do not think upon the whole, after all, that we have been very unfortunate or have much reason to be discouraged.

Myers was tried the other day at the Middlesex Sessions for a felony, and found guilty.[†1] She begged very hard to be transported, and probably would have been gratified, but that Mr. Chesterton,[†2] not thinking her gratification advisable under the circumstances, exerted himself against it with the Judge. She is at Mr. Tracey's for twelve months.

I cannot think of any better plan for finding inmates for the Home, than getting a room near the Magdalen[†3] on their Receiving-Days, and seeing the girls whom they cannot take in. Will you think of this? In the course of my nightly wanderings into strange places, I have spoken to several women and girls, who are very thankful, but make a fatal and decisive confusion between emigration and transportation. In this, as in everything else, this country suffers frightfully, and will suffer more, from ignorance. It is astonishing and horrible to find how little education (worthy of the name in any respect) there has been among the common people.

The Household Words I hope (and have every reason to hope) will become a good property. It is exceedingly well liked, and "goes", in the trade phrase, admirably. I dare say I shall be able to tell you, by the end of the month, what the steady sale is.[†4] It is quite as high now, as I ever anticipated; and although the expences of such a venture are necessarily very great, the circulation much more than pays them, so far. The labor, in conjunction with Copperfield, is something rather ponderous; but to establish it firmly would be to gain such an immense point for the future (I mean my future) that I think nothing of that. It is playing havoc with the villainous literature.

What a stock of objections Mrs. Brown must have got up against it by this time!

There is a Mr. Forster on the Morning Post,[†5] but he is a very different man from my Forster. My Forster distinguished himself a good deal in the Edinburgh Review, and wrote, for many years, the Literary and Dramatic criticisms in the Examiner. Since Mr. Fonblanque has held a place in the Board of Trade, Mr. Forster has been the Editor of that paper.[†6] He has no other connexion with that very uncomfortable Engine which is popularly called "The Press".

The Bush Salaries were £15.4.6.[†7]

Dear Miss Coutts | Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To CHARLES MACKAY,[†1] [?MID-APRIL 1850]

Extract in Waller catalogue No. 118 (1878); MS 1 ½ pp.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 1850. Date: probably soon after publication of Egeria, 13 Apr 50.

Many thanks for your Book which I have read with the utmost pleasure—I should have been sorry to come to the end of Egeria,[†2] if I had not come to the Fancy under the Trees[†3]—It seems to be your fancy. I know it so well—I have been hoping to have something from you for Household Words.[†4]

To JOSEPH CARTWRIGHT,[†5] 16 APRIL 1850

Summary from Christie's catalogue, Mar 1978; MS (3rd person) 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 16 Apr 50.

Presenting compliments to Mr. Cartwright and enquiring price of tickets for concert[†6] to which Mr. Cartwright's letter referred.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 17 APRIL 1850

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Holly Lodge | Highgate.

Devonshire Terrace | Seventeenth April 1850.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

Last night, Mrs. Morson being out and Mrs. Macartney at home, that very bad and false subject, Jemima Hiscock,[†7] forced open[†8] the door of the little beer cellar with knives, and drank until she was dead drunk; when she used the most horrible language and made a very repulsive exhibition of herself. She induced Mary Joynes (!)[†9] to drink the beer with her; and that young lady was also drunk, but stupidly and drowsily. Mrs. Morson, with the gardener's assistance, wisely abstained from calling in the Police, got them both to bed, locked them up, and came to me this morning.

Being obliged to write all day, I told her to go back straight, and immediately discharge Jemima Hiscock—to put her on her own clothes, however bad—and on no account to give her any money. As to Mary Joynes, to keep her in disgrace, until I should get out there this afternoon, and enquire further into the matter. They had both confessed to these particulars.

I have no doubt myself, that they had spirits from outside. I am perfectly sure that no woman of that Jemima Hiscock's habits, could get so madly intoxicated with that weak beer. I am inclined to think, from the difference in the states of the two, that she had spirits and Mary Joynes had not. A woman was seen looking over the palings where Hannah Myers and Ellen Walsh broke out; and from certain circumstances and artifices recently observed in Jemima, I am strongly impressed with the belief that she was in communication with people outside, and wanted to lay hands upon the linen on the first convenient opportunity, after it was washed and ironed.

This same woman made the most pious pretences of any in the place, and wrote the most hypocritical letters. I am afraid Mr. Illingworth makes grave mistakes, in attaching undue importance to this prostitution of Religion. He believed her when she made a pretence of having seen somebody she had known, in Church, and wishing to stay away. I thought it (knowing the girl's antecedents) a piece of unmitigated falsehood. I have no doubt of her having had a design to make off, after robbing you. There are strong reasons to bear out this notion.

And now, what on earth is to be done with Mary Joynes? I really think Sir George Grey[†1] ought to know this. And I would most strongly suggest to you that nothing ought to induce us, ever to retain a woman whom we have seen reason to discharge. In every case in which we have shewn this vacillation (Ellen Walsh and this Jemima Hiscock being the two last) the end has been failure. And God knows how they infect the rest. In haste Dear Miss Coutts, Ever Faithfully Yrs.

CD.

To JOSEPH CARTWRIGHT, 18 APRIL 1850

Summary from Christie's catalogue, Mar 1978; MS (3rd person) 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 18 Apr 50.

Sends compliments and will be glad to receive (whenever they may be ready) four double tickets for the body of the hall.

To SAMUEL ROGERS,[†1] 18 APRIL 1850

MS Professor E. S. Pearson.

Devonshire Terrace | Thursday Evening | Eighteenth April, 1850.

My Dear Mr. Rogers.

I am poor in words—but not in heart—to thank you for the beautiful mark of your remembrance which you left for me to day.[†2] Believe me, I shall prize it all my life, and set no common store by it for your sake.

Any thing I could write, would read coldly to me, with such a token of your friendship and regard, lying on my table. I could thank you better in a few lines of your own immortal verse, but somehow I am better satisfied to give no expression to all that I affectionately feel towards you. Your kind and generous imagination may be trusted with it safely.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Samuel Rogers Esquire.

To CHARLES KNIGHT, 18 APRIL 1850*

MS Colonel Hugh Ballantyne.

Devonshire Terrace. | Thursday Night | Eighteenth April 1850.

My Dear Knight.

I send you a proof of the excellent Illustration, Eggs.[†3] I have read it with great pleasure and interest.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Knight Esquire

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, [?18 APRIL 1850]*

MS Morgan Library. Date: perhaps Thurs 18 Apr 50, and referring to the way he dealt with two of the girls on 16 Apr: see To Miss Coutts, 17 Apr.

Devonshire Terrace | Thursday Evg.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I am always for the promptest measures—and I suppose made you laugh by my ferocity.

I could call on you tomorrow afternoon at a quarter past four. If I don't hear from you, I will come then.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To R. H. MASON,[†1] 20 APRIL 1850*

MS Private; seen before partial destruction in Prestwick air-crash Dec 1954; fragment (aa) MS Yale University Library.

Office of Household Words | Twentieth April 1850.

Dear Sir

I must ask you to forgive me for having, in the pressure of occupations that carry me into quite another region, forgotten your papers (though I remembered you) until I blushed to receive your reminder.

I have read them carefully. They seem to me to want purpose, and to stop short of any decided point of interest. They are not violent or unnatural—the Virginian family for example, might have existed just as you describe them; which is not in itself any reason for putting them into print—but they come to nothing. The mere circumstance of a Slave Dealer wanting to buy a slave, and his master refusing to sell him, is not enough. To make that dramatic (I don't mean in the Theatrical sense, but as a piece of art) the slave should be in doubt about his destiny, and the master should draw the Slave-Dealer out, by asking questions, as if he were undecided. Then, the landlord should have something about him, in his way of thinking and expressing himself, like a landlord, and a collector of curiosities. And the good-natured gambler ought to have something about him, expressive of his character and pursuits. It is not enough to say that they were this, or that. They must shew it for themselves, and have it in their grain. Then, they would act on one another, and would act for themselves whether the author liked it or no. As it is, there is not enough reason for your writing about them, because they do nothing and work out nothing.

[a]I promised to tell you the truth. And this is the truth, as I feel it.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS[a]
R. H. Mason Esquire

To PAUL NINNIS,[†2] 20 APRIL 1850*

MS Berg Collection.

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday Night | Twentieth April, 1850.

Sir.

I should be most happy to receive the Deputation on whose behalf you have done me the honor to write to me, if I felt justified in occupying their time. But, as my present engagements render it quite impossible for me to attend on the occasion to which their proposed visit would refer, I think it best to express my regret, without troubling them, and to assure you of my inability to accept the Invitation of the Walworth Institution,[†1] though I should be sincerely glad to so do if I could.

I am Sir Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Paul Ninnis Esquire.

To MRS HERBERT,[†2] 21 APRIL 1850*

MS Dickens House.

Devonshire Terrace | Sunday[†3] Twenty First April | 1850.

Dear Mrs. Herbert.

I am exceedingly sorry (and so is Mrs. Dickens) that I am engaged for the day you mention. I have delayed writing until I was quite sure of there being no escape; but it is a business matter, and what must be—must be.

In haste | Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To DANIEL MACLISE, 21 APRIL 1850*

MS University of Texas.

Devonshire Terrace | Sunday Twenty First April, 1850.

My Dear Mac. Blossommy,[†4] Forster, Ainsworth,[†5] I, (and I hope Stanny)[†6] propose to dine at the Trafalgar, Greenwich, on Wednesday at 6, to talk over a projected small club, to dine together now and then. Can you leave your[†7] executional duties[†8]—say at 4 (when Forster and I would be waiting in Wellington Street for you), and come? Say yes. Its a poor heart which never rejoices![†9]

Ever Affectionately

CD.

To FRANK STONE, 23 APRIL 1850*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Office of Household Words. | Twenty Third April 1850.

My Dear Stone.

A new club of about a dozen—literary men, artists, and maybe a Doctor or so—is talked of, to dine together now and then. Robert Bell,[†1] Forster, Ainsworth, Costello,[†2] I, Goaden,[†3] (!) and Frazer[†4] (the man who sang Mary Morrison[†5] that night in Edinburgh) are going to dine at the Trafalgar at Greenwich, tomorrow at 6,—ostensibly to talk it over, but I suppose to enjoy ourselves. Can you come, and will you. If so, be here, by ½ past 4 exactly, and several of us will go together.

I am half dead with work,[†6] and my head is swimming on a wild sea—out in the Pacific at least.

Ever Affecy.

CD.

Frank Stone Esquire

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 25 APRIL 1850

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street | Piccadilly.

Devonshire Terrace | Thursday Evening | Twenty Fifth April, 1850.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I am sincerely concerned to find from your note that you have been so much troubled and annoyed[†7] of late. And I confess I feel a selfish kind of dissatisfaction, that you should be in a difficulty, and one of your most attached and zealous friends unable to be of any use to you in it. I hope it is past and gone. In that case, I shall be interested in the story, whenever you will tell it me.

Mr. Brown will have told you what we did today. I am more indignant with that Mary Joynes, than I have ever been with any of them. For I now believe Matthew Hill,[†8] and utterly discredit her story about her case. I had already made the enquiries you suggest, into the Beer question, and asked the girl if she supposed we were such Idiots as to deem it possible—I could not say probable, but possible—that they could have taken beer enough to produce that effect. I have not the least doubt that spirits were handed over the Wall.

What do you think of a very big dog in a barrel, at that part of the garden? Mrs. Morson would always know, then, of a stranger on the other side.

I have let the field for five months, for cows and a poney to graze in, to a very respectable neighbour—at least he appears so. He is a married gentleman of steady aspect, and has what he calls "a Milk Walk", in the Vicinity.

My best regards to Mrs. Brown, whose better health I was very glad to hear of, from her (of course) worser half, today.

Household Words I shall report of, when I see you in peace and quiet again.

Dear Miss Coutts | Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

I administered a mild dose of dissatisfaction to Miss Templin[†1] today. I am afraid she is deceitful.

To PHILIP PHILLIPS,[†2] 25 APRIL 1850

Mention in Winifred A. Myers catalogue No. 334 (1941); dated 25 Apr 50.

To MRS HOWITT, 26 APRIL 1850*

MS Private.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Sixth April 1850.

Dear Mrs. Howitt

I am very happy indeed, to receive your paper. When you shall have finished what remains to be added, will you kindly send it to me, as I want to see (with a view to its division) what the story makes, and how it ends.[†3]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Howitt

To DIGBY P. STARKEY,[†4] 26 APRIL 1850

Extract in Papantino Bookshop, Nov 1942; MS 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 26 Apr 50.

I shall not fail to point out the coincidence you mention, to the author of the story . . . which is not mine (as I think you suppose) except in the suggestion of the general idea.

To JOSEPH CARTWRIGHT, 30 APRIL 1850

Extract in Christie's catalogue, Mar 1978; MS 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 30 Apr 50; addressed Joseph Cartwright.

Thanking him for the tickets, but saying he did not understand that Cartwright wished for permission to use his name or he would have objected. I have a great objection to being supposed to "patronize" anything or anybody; and I think the term exceedingly unpleasant in connexion with an effort so laudable and self-reliant as that in question.

May

To W. H. G. KINGSTON,[†1] [?1 MAY 1850]

Mention in To H. P. Smith, 1 May 50. Date: probably written same day as To Smith.

Rejecting a verse contribution to Household Words[†2] because he had already made two engagements on the subject of emigration.[†3]

To H. P. SMITH,[†4] 1 MAY 1850

MS Huntington Library.

Office of Household Words, | First May 1850.

My Dear Smith

I have written to Mr. Kingston, for whom I can do nothing, as we have already made two engagements on the subject of Emigration. I thought his request to have those verses inserted immediately, because he was going to publish them elsewhere, approaching in temperature to the weather; but that I have not told him.

Best regards at home. | In haste | Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

H. P. Smith Esquire

To P. MEADOWS TAYLOR,[†1] 1 MAY 1850†

MS Mr Graham Storey.

Office of Household Words, | First May 1850.

Dear Sir

I beg to thank you for your obliging note, and am happy to retain the Mischief-Maker[†2] for insertion.

On its publication, a remittance for the amount due to you on the usual terms of the Journal, will be made by Post.[†3]

Thanking you once again for your very welcome letter, I am Dear Sir

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

P. Meadows Taylor Esquire.

To THE SECRETARY, ROYAL ACADEMY, [?MAY 1850]

Mention in W. C. Macready, Diaries, II, 466.

Declining an invitation to that year's Royal Academy Dinner.

To JOSEPH CARTWRIGHT, 3 MAY 1850

Extract in Christie's catalogue, Mar 1978; MS 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 3 May 50, addressed Mr. Joseph Cartwright.

Asking him not to alter any arrangements as a result of CD's previous letter to him. The thing that I object to, is done. I am quite sure you had done it with the most upright intentions.

To JOHN KENYON,[†4] 3 MAY 1850*

MS McGill University Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Third May, 1850.

My Dear Kenyon.

I am very sorry and most unwilling to say that I cannot dine with you today. A scout has brought me long-expected word of an unaccountable sort of thing being to be seen tonight in an unaccountable sort of place—which I want for Household Words. I want to come to you, and I don't want to wander to the theatrical den in the far East[†1] whither these tidings summon me; and I feel a Roman heroism upon me when I decide to sacrifice myself.

You know how much I have to do just now,—and I have a misty sensation of entitling myself to your admiration by not coming to enjoy myself.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

John Kenyon Esquire.

To [WILLIAM] NICOL,[†2] 3 MAY 1850*

MS Charles W. Traylen.

Devonshire Terrace | Third May, 1850.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Nicol, and regrets that his engagements prevent his having the honor of accepting the invitation of the President and Council of the Artists' General Benevolent Institution.[†3]

To DR SPENCER THOMSON,[†4] 3 MAY 1850

MS Mr F. H. Marchbank.

Devonshire Terrace, London | Third May, 1850

Sir.

I have not had the pleasure of receiving your book.[†5] I shall be happy to do so, in acknowledgment of your obliging letter; but I ought to add, perhaps, that notices of new books form no part of the design of Household Words.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Dr. Spencer Thomson.

To FRANK STONE, 4 MAY 1850*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Office of Household Words | Saturday Fourth May 1850.

Ould un!

Are you disengaged this afternoon? If so, will you come here about ½ past 4, and go out with Fred and me? There is something at "the Bower Saloon",[†1] likely to suit Mr. Whelks,[†2] I think. I was going to the Haymarket, but Jerrold's play is put off 'till Thursday.[†3]

Ever affecy.

CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [7 MAY 1850]

Extract in F, VI, vi, 537*n. Date:* 7 May according to Forster.

I am extremely sorry to hear about Fox.[†4] Shall call to enquire, as I come by to the Temple.[†5] And will call on you (taking the chance of finding you) on my way to that Seat of Boredom. I wrote my paper for H.W.[†6] yesterday, and have begun Copperfield this morning.[†7] Still undecided about Dora, but MUST decide to-day.[†8] La difficulté d'écrire l'Anglais m'est extrêmement ennuyeuse. Ah, mon Dieu! si l'on pourrait toujours écrire cette belle langue de France![†1] Monsieur Rogere![†2] Ah! qu'il est homme d'esprit, homme de génie, homme des lettres! Monsieur Landore![†3] Ah qu'il parle Français—pas parfaitement comme un ange—un peu (peutêtre) comme un diable! Mais il est bon garçon—sérieusement, il est un de la vraie noblesse de la nature. Votre tout dévoué, CHARLES. À Monsieur Monsieur Fos-tere.

To UNKNOWN LADY, 7 MAY 1850*

MS University of California, Los Angeles.

Devonshire Terrace. | Seventh May 1850.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to the Lady who addressed him in reference to the performance of last Evening, and begs to express his regret that he was prevented by a business engagement from availing himself of the box;—which he had fully intended to occupy.

To DR MAYO,[†4] 8 MAY 1850*

MS Mr Frederick Koch.

Devonshire Terrace | Eighth May 1850.

My Dear Sir

I regret exceedingly, that I am engaged for Saturday. Otherwise, I should have had the greatest pleasure in dining with you; and I beg to assure you that I am truly sensible of the cordiality of your kind note, and much gratified by it; and that I respond to the feeling with which it is written, most heartily.

Trusting that I may have the good fortune to meet Mr. Buckle[†1] on some other occasion,
I am always My | Dear Sir | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Dr. Mayo

To T. J. SERLE,[†2] 8 MAY 1850

MS Mr Peter Brandt.

Devonshire Terrace | Eighth May 1850.

My Dear Serle.

I want to see you about the wood-cutting Miss Elton,[†3] of whom Mrs. McIan[†4] has spoken to me. Shall you be in town on Saturday? If so, could you call on me (appointing your own time) at the Household Words Office, 16 Wellington Street North?

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

T. J. Serle Esquire

To JOHN BRITTON,[†5] 9 MAY 1850

MS H. Le Roy Edgar.

Devonshire Terrace | Ninth May, 1850.

My Dear Sir

Many thanks for your kind note; and for the interesting documents accompanying it. May you live 'till I am rich; and I promise you, you will live for a long time!

As I am not very proud of the enclosed book* (which was written some dozen years ago, chiefly to please Cruikshank), I make a kind of merit in circulating this copy.[†1]

His name reminds me of your wanting his address.[†2] It is Mornington [Place,][†3] Hampstead Road—I forget the number[†4]—Stanfield's old house—one door from the Crescent.

Ever Yours faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

John Britton Esquire

To R. H. HORNE, 9 MAY 1850*

MS State Library of Victoria.

Devonshire Terrace. | Ninth May, 1850.

My Dear Horne.

It is extraordinarily difficult for me to get out in the morning, at this time of the month. But look for me, outside the Stage Door of Sadlers Wells, on Saturday at 11 to the moment.[†5]

You[†6] surprised by any shortcomings on the part of English Actors, except in Snobbery!—Well!!

Ever Yours
CD.

To EDWARD CHAPMAN, 11 MAY 1850*

MS Johns Hopkins University.

Devonshire Terrace. | Eleventh May 1850.

Dear Sir

Mr. Stanfield will draw the packet ship, for the frontispiece to the American Notes. He says "lithography is better than wood for that kind of subject". Please to let me know immediately, whether it will suit us to lithograph it.[†1]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To DR JOHN FORBES,[†2] 11 MAY 1850

Text from N, II, 215.

1 Devonshire Terrace | Eleventh May 1850

My Dear Sir

I am sincerely gratified by your kind remembrance of me and by your friendly note. Accept my cordial thanks.[†3] I shall accompany you on your holiday excursion in a country where I have been very happy, with great interest, I know.

Faithfully Yours always
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To HENRY AUSTIN, 12 MAY 1850*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Sunday Twelfth May, 1850.

My Dear Henry

The Sanitary fellows are such terrible people, and give such short notice! The Meeting was originally to have been on Monday Week; then they change it to Monday.[†4] Now, on Monday I really can't go. My work (as you may suppose) is very hard just now; and at this time of the Month, I must get air and exercise in the evening—and think. It is not the time it would take that is of importance, but the putting of myself out. If I get fierce and antagonistic about burials, I can't go back to Copperfield for hours and hours. This is really the sort of condition on which I hold my inventive powers; and I can't get rid of it.

I am sincerely anxious to serve the cause, and am doing it all the good I can, by side-blows in the Household Words—in the compilation, the "Narrative" too. You will see next week, that I have turned a paper called "The Begging Letter Writer", to sanitary purposes.[†1] I will. [ ][†2] gaps and trapdoors of advocacy, that open unexpectedly when I have my hands (and head) full of other work.

I shall be very glad to have the High-Pressure notes.[†3] Will you dine in Wellington Street on Saturday.[†4]
Henry Austin Esquire.

To JACOB BELL,[†5] [12] MAY 1850

MS Benoliel Collection. Date: clearly written on Sunday, which was 12 May.

Devonshire Terrace | Eleventh May, 1850. Sunday

My Dear Sir

I have thought a great deal about that woman, the Wardswoman in the Itch Ward, who was crying about the dead child. If anything useful can be done for her, I should like to do it. Will you bear this in mind, in confidence, and if you can put me in the way of helping her, do me the kindness of telling me how it can be best done? I am not afraid to ask you, because I have an inward assurance that you will understand me?

Without identifying the Workhouse, I have written a fanciful kind of description of our Walk,[†6] which you will find at page 204 of the enclosed proof. Will you return it to me, whenever you may have had leisure to read it? I hope it will not remind you, disagreeably, of this day Week.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Jacob Bell Esquire

To PETER CUNNINGHAM,[†1] 12 MAY 1850

MS Mr Ashley W. Olmsted.

Devonshire Terrace | Twelfth May, 1850.

My Dear Cunningham

Many thanks for your valuable book in its new form,[†2] and for your enshrinement of those words about the horrible scene at Horsemonger Lane.[†3]

—Also, for your suggestions in reference to the Narrative. Wills is a capital fellow for his work, but decidedly of the Nutmeg-Grater, or Fancy-Bread-Rasper-School you mention. The promotions and preferments shall be preserved hence-forth, like flies in amber,[†4] but I am afraid we shall not have room for the documents.[†5] You can't put Lincolns Inn Fields into a hand basin,—though you can put it, wonderfully well, into a hand book.[†6]

I am delighted with the Christ's Hospital subject. And I think I see my way to a long perspective of good papers on divers subjects, if you should be inclined to walk along it.[†7]

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Peter Cunningham Esquire.

To JACOB BELL, 13 MAY 1850

MS St Lawrence University, New York.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Thirteenth May | 1850.

My Dear Sir

I am sorry I cannot make the alteration you suggest, because (in consequence of the obligation our arrangements impose [on][†8] us, of being a good deal in advance of the Public) the Number has been printed for some days. I purposely forebore sending you the Proof until the Number was at Press, because I thought it delicate and right to abstain from making you in any way a party to the article.

And I omitted Miss Bridges (though I was strongly tempted to describe her), and the two blind men, because they would necessarily identify the description with that Workhouse, in the minds of many people.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Jacob Bell Esquire.

To SPENCER HALL,[†1] 14 MAY 1850*

MS Berg Collection.

Devonshire Terrace | Fourteenth May 1850.

Dear Sir

It would be of little use my seeing Mr. Barnard,[†2] as I did not write the paper, and have not attended to the subject, otherwise than in suggesting it and reading it. But Mr. Wills, the Sub Editor of Household Words, will immediately communicate with Mr. Barnard.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Spencer Hall Esquire.

To SIR HENRY ELLIS,[†3] 16 MAY 1850*

MS British Museum.

Devonshire Terrace. | Sixteenth May, 1850.

My Dear Sir Henry

Allow me to offer you my very best thanks for your kind note. I cannot imagine why my letter of recommendation[†4] has been wandering about the world so long.

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Sir Henry Ellis

To R. H. HORNE, 17 MAY 1850*

MS State Library of Victoria.

Devonshire Terrace | Seventeenth May, 1850.

My Dear Horne.

All I will say of your next appearance,[†5] is, that I hope it may be under my (I mean that word for MY) stage-management,—when it is made a matter of stern business, for weeks, that everything intended to be done at night, down to the square inch on which you stand, shall be done in the day; and when, if you don't do it, you keep on beginning again, 'till you do—which soon happens, under those circumstances.[†1]

In the matter of the excellent good sense you speak of, I felt it, believe me, far more strongly than you. And if I had not been very certain of the real original article being in your possession, I should not have come to Sadlers Wells that morning.[†2]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

R. H. Horne Esquire.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 18 MAY 1850*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street.

Devonshire Terrace | Eighteenth May 1850.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I am sorry that I shall be obliged to leave at a quarter before nine, but I shall come to dinner with great pleasure—for ages seem to have rolled away, and I to have grown very grey, since I saw you.[†3]

Faithfully Yours Ever
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN LEECH, 18 MAY 1850

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: John Leech Esquire.

Office of Household Words | Saturday 18th. May 1850

My Dear Leech.

Book me for the Derby[†4]—but don't you think we ought to have four on 'em? As to a hamper from Fortnum & Mason's,[†5] that I consider indispensable.

I shall be here this evening.

Ever Faithfully
CD

To DANIEL MACLISE, 19 MAY 1850*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Devonshire Terrace | Nineteenth May, 1850.

My Dear Mac.

I was very sorry not to see you last night (we were very merry), but supposed you had not come back.

Many thanks in the Bank matter.[†1] Supposing I were to go there, next Friday, would you be inclined to go with me?

I am not safe, I think, for a whole day until tomorrow, Monday week. Shall we decide to set that aside for our day on town.

Reply in a word.

Ever affecy.
CD.

To EDWARD CHAPMAN, 22 MAY 1850

MS Johns Hopkins University.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Second May, 1850.

Dear Sir

Mr. Stanfield wonders you didn't send him a paving-stone to draw upon, as soon as a block in this unprepared state.

I send you his drawing, to do the best you can with.[†2] It costs nothing; and I wish it to be kept very clean, and returned to me.[†3]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Edward Chapman Esquire.

To EDWARD W. COLE,[†4] 22 MAY 1850*

MS Dickens House.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Second May, 1850.

Sir.

I beg you to assure the Members of the Newsvendors' benevolent and Provident Institution, that I am very much gratified by their generous remembrance of me on the occasion of their last Annual Meeting;[†5] and that any services I can render them, at any time, are freely and cordially at their command.

Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Edward W. Cole.

To CHARLES F. ELLERMAN,[†1] 22 MAY 1850*

MS Dickens House.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Second May, 1850.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Ellerman, and begs to acknowledge the safe receipt of Mr. Ellerman's drama,[†2] and of his obliging note.

To DANIEL MACLISE, 22 MAY 1850*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Second May, 1850.

My Dear Mac.

I called on you yesterday, but you were out. They would prefer another day in town.[†3] If you will let me know at what hour we shall meet for Ditton,[†4] I shall be (of course) punctual. Whereabouts in that Wilderness, the Bank, am I to ask for Mr. Hankey?[†5]

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To JAMES G. WINN,[†6] 22 MAY 1850*

MS Fitzwilliam Museum.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Second May, 1850.

Sir.

In reply to your courteous letter, I beg to say, that my avocations would not admit of my responding to such a requisition as you describe,[†7] though I should be very sensible of the honor of its presentation to me.

I am Sir | Yours faithfully and obliged
CHARLES DICKENS

James G. Winn Esquire.

To SIR THOMAS NOON TALFOURD, 24 MAY 1850*

MS British Museum. Address: The Hon. Mr. Justice Talfourd | Russell Square.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Fourth May, 1850.

My Dear Talfourd

I am deeply sensible of the kindness of your note. I never meant to express anything, seriously, that should give you the trouble of writing it; but I am too glad of such encouragement and friendship, to feel anything but pleasure in its receipt.[†1]

Ever Yours affecy.
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Justice Talfourd

To BENJAMIN WEBSTER, 24 MAY 1850

Summary in Sotheby's catalogue, Jan 1883; MS 1 ½ pp.; dated 24 May 50.

In favour of Mr Scharf.[†2]

To JOHN FORSTER, 25 [MAY] 1850

Mention in Chas. J. Sawyer catalogue No. 128 (1936); MS 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, Saturday 25th 1850; signed initials. Date: May was the only month in 1850 when Saturday fell on 25th.

To MICHAEL FARADAY,[†3] 28 MAY 1850

MS Institution of Electrical Engineers.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Eighth May, 1850.

Dear Sir

I take the liberty of addressing you as if I knew you personally; trusting that I may venture to assume that you will excuse that freedom.

It has occurred to me that it would be extremely beneficial to a large class of the public, to have some account of your late lectures on the breakfast-table,[†1] and of those you addressed, last year, to children.[†2] I should be exceedingly glad to have some papers in reference to them, published in my new enterprize "Household Words". May I ask you whether it would be agreeable to you,—and, if so, whether you would favor me with the loan of your notes of those Lectures for perusal?[†3]

I am sensible that you may have reasons of your own, for reserving the subject to yourself. In that case, I beg to assure you that I would on no account approach it.

With great respect and esteem, I remain Dear Sir

Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

Michael Faraday Esquire.

To MR HORTON,[†4] 30 MAY 1850*

MS Dickens House.

Devonshire Terrace, Thirtieth May | 1850.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Horton, and begs to say that his avocations do not admit of his making appointments with gentlemen whom he has not the pleasure of knowing, unless he is informed of the object with which they are sought, and believes he can advance it. If Mr. Horton will have the goodness to address a note to Mr. Dickens, it shall receive his immediate attention.

To DANIEL MACLISE, 30 MAY 1850*

MS New York Public Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Thirtieth May, 1850.

My Dear Mac.

I enclose you my article,[†5] which will be published next Wednesday Week, in the Number now printing. I feel perfectly sure that you will see nothing in it but what is fair public satire on a point that opens very serious social considerations.[†1] If such things were allowed to sweep on, without some vigorous protest, three fourths of this Nation would be under the feet of Priests, in ten years.[†2]

Now, I have a serious proposal to make, about Paris. Should you like to go there, for a fortnight? If yes, I am your man! In that case, I would arrange to write the next No. of Copperfield there—working all day, while you worked with your eye in your own way—and devoting the evenings to a reg'lar course of Theatres guingettes[†3] &c &c. But, as it is important to me to begin work, with as little delay as possible, I should be obliged to stipulate for your cutting Macready[†4] short, and coming back to start at once.

There! What do you say to it? We shall meet tonight, and then we can arrange for a decided yes, or no.

Ever affecy

CD

They swear by the Overland Mail[†5] tomorrow, and I have taken places.

To WILLIAM J. THOMS,[†1] 30 MAY 1850

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Address: William. J. Thoms Esquire | 25 Holy-well Street | Millbank.

1 Devonshire Terrace | Thirtieth May, 1850.

My Dear Sir

I am much indebted to you for your kind letter, and beg to enclose you what I presume to be the maximum of an individual subscription towards the repair of brave old Chaucer's Tomb.[†2]

It has given me, I assure you, great pleasure to see my good friend Captain Cuttle's name (and sentiment) appended to your very curious and interesting publication.[†3]

I am Dear Sir | Very faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

William. J. Thoms Esquire

To MICHAEL FARADAY, 31 MAY 1850

MS Institution of Electrical Engineers.

Devonshire Terrace | Thirty First May, 1850.

My Dear Sir

I really cannot tell you how very sensible I am of your great kindness, or what an honor I feel it to be to have interested you in my books.

I think I may be able to do something with the Candle; but I will not touch it, or have it touched, unless it can be re-lighted with something of the beautiful simplicity and clearness of which I see the traces in your notes.

Since you are so generous as to offer me the notes of the lectures on the breakfast table, I will borrow them when you have done with them, if it be only for my own interest and gratification. I deeply regret now, not having heard the lectures to children, as it would have been a perfect delight to me to have described them, however generally.

I should take it as a great favor if you could allow me (in the event of my being unfortunately unable to come myself) to introduce my Sub Editor to your next lecture;[†1] for a subsequent comparison of his recollection of it, with your notes, might enlighten us very much.

Pray let me add, as one who has long respected you, and strongly felt the obligations Society owes to you, that the day on which I took the liberty of writing to you will always be a memorable day in my calendar, if I date from it—as I now hope I shall—the beginning of a personal knowledge of you.

My Dear Sir | Yours faithfully and obliged

CHARLES DICKENS

Michael Faraday Esquire.

June

To F. M. EVANS, 1 JUNE 1850*

MS Bradbury, Agnew & Co. Ltd.

Office of Household Words | Saturday First June 1850

My Dear Evans.

I give you my honor that I have never heard, directly or indirectly, one syllable of the matter to which Thackeray's[†2] letter refers. Forster never mentioned it to me[†3]—did quite right in abstaining from doing so—and knew me perfectly well in taking that course.

I will write to Thackeray[†4] tomorrow[†5]

To MICHAEL FARADAY, 6 JUNE 1850*

MS A great-niece of Michael Faraday. Address (envelope MS Private): Michael Faraday | Royal Institution | Albemarle Street.

Devonshire Terrace | Sixth June, 1850.

My Dear Sir

Very many thanks for your second precious book of notes. I hope, with the assistance of a friend and contributor who has a practical knowledge of chemistry, to be able to convey some very small installment[†1] of the pleasure and interest I have in them, to others.[†2]

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Michael Faraday Esquire.

To FRANÇOIS REGNIER,[†3] 6 JUNE 1850

MS Mr Ashley W. Olmsted.

Devonshire Terrace | Juin 6, 1850.

Mon cher Regnier.

Je n'ai pas invité M. Scribe[†4] venir diner ici, Dimanche prochain, parceque Ma Femme, a eté[†5] un peu faible et fatiguée, mais vous nous trouverez chez nous a 5 ½, neanmoins,[†5] et nous serons charmé de vous revoir sans ceremonie.[†5]

Ma femme et ma belle soeur vous envoient mille amitiés

Votre tout devoué
CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS GEORGE SMITH,[†6] 6 JUNE 1850*

MS University of North Carolina.

Devonshire Terrace | Sixth June, 1850.

Mr. Charles Dickens very much regrets that he is prevented by other and less agreeable engagements[†7] for tomorrow evening, from accepting Mrs. George Smith's very kind invitation.[†8]

To EDWARD BAINES,[†1] 7 JUNE 1850*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Devonshire Terrace | Seventh June, 1850.

My Dear Sir

I have read the letter you have done me the honor to address to me in the Leeds Mercury,[†2] with the interest and attention it could not fail to command.

I differ from you, on the question of State Education. I think it right that the State should educate the people; and I think it wrong that it should punish Ignorance, without enlightening or preventing it.

But I would limit its power, and watch it very carefully. I suppose the sense and virtue of the people to have expression in the State; and I do not contemplate the possibility of the Government in England, at this time of day, presuming to tread the minds of the people under its feet.

I apprehend that there are certain sound rudiments of a good education, and certain moral and religious truths, on which we might all agree. I would have those taught in State Schools, to the children of parents of all Christian denominations; favoring no one Church more than another.

This may not be exactly expressed in the quotation from Wordsworth to which you call my attention, but I take it to be in accordance with the general spirit of the passage. I am not the writer of the paper, nor have I ever had the least sympathy with the political views of the Lake Poets.

In all my hopes and convictions as to Education by the State, I look forward—not backward. What Governments have done to pervert good things, Governments (at all events in England) can do no more.

We are both earnest, I am sure, in the cause of education, and of general advancement. We can agree to differ, and to pursue our great object by different roads. But you must not carry me thousands of leagues on mine without my own consent, or suppose that I would not set impassable barriers to the Government's power.

With much respect and all good will

I am My Dear Sir | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Edward Baines Esquire.

To THE REV. R. BARING CLAIBORNE,[†1] 7 JUNE 1850*

MS Dickens House.

Devonshire Terrace | Seventh June, 1850.

Dear Sir

In compliance with your Earnest wish, I have opened your Poem.[†2] Lack of time has prevented me from reading it quite through, but I have read much of it, and (I think) fully possessed myself of its spirit.

It's purpose, earnestness, and honesty, I greatly admire. And I have met with many passages of powerful and beautiful verse. But I cannot conscientiously say that I believe it would attract a large audience if it were published, or that it would produce a great impression on the minds of men. There are far too many words, I fear, from which the thoughts are to be culled.

Dear Sir | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Reverend R Baring Claiborne

To W. C. MACREADY, 11 JUNE 1850†

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Tuesday Evening, Eleventh June | 1850.

My Dear Macready.

In next week, either Monday, Thursday, or Friday, will suit us perfectly[†3]—and we shall be most heartily happy to talk over those trips that we mean to take down into Dorsetshire.[†4] We don't at all take to the idea of your going away, and can't, as our American friends say, "realize" it. I shall forswear that side of the Park, ever after your departure.

[†a]Scribe and Halévy are going to dine here next Tuesday at 7.[†1] Kate and I have been discussing whether it would be well to tell you so, and to ask you whether you feel so far restored to your public position and character, as to be able to pay them the compliment of meeting them. I have told her that I have not the least doubt of the propriety of asking you, feeling very well assured that in our case you will consult nothing but your own heart.[†a]

They return home, I believe, immediately afterwards.

Between Copperfield and Household Words, I am as busy as a bee. I hope to go down to that old image of Eternity[†2] that I love so much, and finish the former [†a](when we shall have got over our little troubles here)[†a] to its hoarse music. May it be as good a book as I hope it will be, for your children's children's children to read!

With most affectionate loves | Ever My Dear friend | Yours most Sincerely
CHARLES DICKENS

W. C. Macready Esquire.

To [FREDERICK] SANG,[†3] 14 JUNE 1850*

MS University of Texas.

Devonshire Terrace | Fourteenth June 1850 | Friday Evening

Sir.

In acknowledging the receipt of your good-humoured letter, and in informing you that I have referred it to the writer of the article of which it complains,[†4] I beg to assure you that I believe that gentleman had no intention of giving you the least offence, or of seriously disparaging[†1] your elegant art.[†2]

And for myself I really feel bound to tell you that whatever I have seen of yours has pleased me, and that I think the fancy you have been instrumental in introducing into this country, was much needed here.

I am Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

B. Sang Esquire.

To THE REV. J. R. BEARD,[†3] 15 JUNE 1850*

MS (in Wills's hand) Unitarian College, Manchester.

Office of Household Words, | 15 June 1850.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his Compliments to Dr. Beard and with thanks for the offer of the biographies mentioned in his letter of the 7th. begs to state that subjects of present interest are only specially treated in the new Miscellany.

Such memoirs as he suggests would not, therefore, be acceptable. J. R. Beard, Esqe. D.D.

To MESSRS COUTTS & CO., 18 [JUNE] 1850*

Text from transcript by owner, Mrs M. Long-Fox. Date: Month said to be illegible; perhaps June, as the mislaid power of attorney which CD destroyed might have been the "portentous document" sent from Rockingham before CD left for Paris (see To Mrs Watson, 3 July).

Devonshire Terrace | Eighteenth [June] 1850

Gentlemen

I beg to send you the power of attorney,[†4] duly executed and attested. The mislaid one to which you refer in your obliging letter, I destroyed.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Coutts & Co.

To DANIEL MACLISE, 20 JUNE 1850*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Devonshire Terrace. | Thursday Night | Twentieth June 1850.

My Dear Mac

I shall be ready, please God, for Saturday evening. Perhaps you will dine here that day at 5, and we will call for your portmanteau afterwards, on our way to the Railroad.

Tomorrow (Friday) as soon as I shall have done Copperfield, I will come round to Russell Place, to go and get the passports with you.[†1] I cannot say at what time, without knowing how the inventive powers may be, but I will come as early in the day as I can—and will not in any case be too late for the office hours.

Affecy. always

CD.

Daniel Maclise Esquire

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 22 JUNE 1850*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Second June, 1850.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I enclose you the book of the Shepherd's Bush bills—which I have paid.

I am off to Paris this evening, having again broken my head with hard labor.

Ever Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS CHARLES DICKENS, 23 JUNE 1850

MS British Museum. Address: À Madame | Madame Charles Dickens | 1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park | London.

In a Café, Paris | Sunday Twenty Third June, 1850.

My Dearest Kate. Being out with Regnier[†2] (and frightfully bored by sights I don't care for) I plunge into a café to save the Post.

The Hotel Brighton was full—ditto Meurice's[†3]—Paris being crammed (strange to say) with foreigners. But Regnier had taken us a very nice apartment at the Hotel Windsor, and there we are, and there you must write.—It is in the Rue de Rivoli, close to the Brighton.

We were in Paris at a quarter before 9 this morning. The passage across was wonderfully fine, and we were quite well, and drank brandy and water on deck. My best love to Georgy and to all the children. I shall expect to hear from you, directly you have received this.

I coughed abominably, all the way to Dover, but got better in the sea air. Today, I am at it again.

In great haste, Ever affecy.

CD.

To MRS CHARLES DICKENS, 24 JUNE 1850

MS British Museum. Address: Mrs. Charles Dickens | 1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park | London.

Hotel Windsor, Paris | Monday Twenty Fourth June, 1850.

My Dearest Kate.

As we are going to Fontainbleau with Regnier tomorrow (to dine in the Forest out of a basket) I write this before going out to dine at the trois freres[†1]—not to come by todays post, for it is too late, but by tomorrows.

We purpose leaving here on Saturday, and going to Rouen. So, whenever you write until Thursday inclusive, address here. If you should write after Thursday, I think it will be best to address Poste Restante Rouen. We shall probably go from Rouen, either to Havre or Dieppe; and I intend so to fashion the arrangements, if possible, as to be home on Tuesday Evening, or night.

I saw Poole[†2] today—very shakey. De Fresne[†3] proposes great dinners, but I am so indescribably tired, and the heat is so extraordinary, that I have resolved I won't stand it, or (unless I am captured by ill luck) even see him. We are going to dine with Olliffe[†4] on Friday. I have not even called on Ld. and Lady Normanby,[†5] nor, as yet, on D'Orsay,[†6] who is in Paris. I suppose when you compare notes with Forster he will tell you that he knows all this—but he don't—except as to De Fresne.

We dined at home here, yesterday, in the usual way. Maclise gallantly proposed you and Georgina, after dinner. Sleeping last night was quite out of the question. I have discovered a shower bath in a sort of distempered coach-house—rough and barbarous in all respects, except that it enables one to take as much water as one pleases. Which is the grand point.

We are going to some of the little Theatres tonight after dinner, and to see Rachel[†1] on Wednesday. On Thursday, I hope to renew my acquaintance with the Franconi troupe.[†2]

I don't observe that the place is very much changed. There are not so many carriages in the streets perhaps, but the shops are just as they used to be. The landlady of the Brighton really seemed delighted to see me, and enquired after my wife, and sister in law, and my charming family, with quite an honest interest.

It is much hotter than in Genoa in July. I can do nothing but drink, and go to sleep in the daytime.

My love to Georgy and all the children. Maclise writes. I don't know what he may have, in a portmanteau like a Bible; but he certainly don't put it on, whatever it is. His shirt in front is very like a pillow-case; and I expect him, at the trois freres presently, to be the terror and consternation of the assembled guests.

Ever Most affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Charles Dickens.

To JOHN FORSTER, [24 JUNE 1850]

Extract in F, VI, vi, 536. Date: 24 June 50, Hôtel Windsor, Rue de Rivoli according to Forster.

There being no room in the Hôtel Brighton, we are lodged (in a very good apartment) here. The heat is absolutely frightful. I never felt anything like it in Italy. Sleep is next to impossible, except in the day, when the room is dark, and the patient exhausted. We purpose leaving here on Saturday morning and going to Rouen, whence we shall proceed either to Havre or Dieppe, and so arrange our proceedings as to be home, please God, on Tuesday evening. We are going to some of the little theatres to-night, and on Wednesday to the Français, for Rachel's last performance[†3] before she goes to London. There does not seem to be anything remarkable in progress, in the theatrical way. Nor do I observe that out of doors the place is much changed, except in respect of the carriages which are certainly less numerous. I also think the Sunday is even much more a day of business than it used to be. As we are going into the country with Regnier to-morrow, I write this after letter time, and before going out to dine at the Trois Frères, that it may come to you by tomorrow's post. The twelve hours' journey here is astounding[†1]—marvellously done, except in respect of the means of refreshment, which are absolutely none. Mac is very well (extremely loose as to his waistcoat, and otherwise careless in regard of buttons) and sends his love. De Fresne proposes a dinner with all the notabilities of Paris present, but I WON'T stand it! I really have undergone so much fatigue from work, that I am resolved not even to see him, but to please myself. I find, my child (as Horace Walpole would say),[†2] that I have written you nothing here, but you will take the will for the deed.

To W. H. WILLS, 27 [JUNE] 1850

MS New York Public Library.

Hotel Windsor, Paris | Thursday July[†3] Twenty Seventh, 1850. |
after Post-time[†4]

My Dear Wills.

†aI send you the Model paper, with a good title. It's place in the No. we can discuss when I come home.†a†5 I have had much ado to get to work; the heat here being so intense that I can do nothing but lie on the bare floor all day. I never felt it anything like so hot, in Italy.

†aI am afraid this will floor the Whelks idea, as far as Paris is concerned.†a There is nothing doing at the Theatres, and the atmosphere is so horribly oppressive there, that one can hardly endure it. I came out of the Français last night, half dead. I am writing at this moment with nothing on but a shirt and a pair of white trousers, and have been sitting four hours at this paper,—but am as faint with heat as if I had been at some tremendous gymnastics. And yet we had a thunderstorm last night!

I hope we are doing pretty well in Wellington Street? My anxiety makes me feel as if I had been away a year. I hope to be home on Tuesday Evening or night at latest. I have picked up a very curious book of french statistics, that will suit us†6—and an odd proposal for a Company connected with the gambling in California—of which you will also be able to make something.†7

†aI can correct the proof of this paper when I come home. You will see in the Proof that I speak of forty associates belonging to the Royal Academy. I am not sure that their constitution includes so many—and I don't like to ask Maclise, lest we should stumble on any point of difference.†a†1

I saw a certain "Lord Spleen"†2 mentioned in a playbill yesterday, and will look after that distinguished English Nobleman tonight, if possible. Rachel played last night for the last time before going to London, and has not so much in her as some of our friends suppose.

†aPoole is staggering about like a bad automaton, and†a the English people are perpetually squeezing themselves into courtyards, doorways, blind alleys, closed edifices, and other places where they have no sort of business. The French people, as usual, are making as much noise as possible about everything that is of no importance, but seem (as far as one can judge) pretty quiet and good-humoured. They made a mighty hallaballoo at the Theatre last night, when Brutus (the play was Lucretia) declaimed about Liberty.†3

Ever faithfully

CD.

W. H. Wills Esquire.

To MRS CHARLES DICKENS, 28 [JUNE] 1850

MS British Museum.

Hotel Windsor, Paris | Friday Twenty Eighth July,†4 1850.

My Dearest Kate.

This is probably my last note before returning home. Tomorrow (as I told you) we go to Rouen; on Sunday evening we purpose going on to Dieppe; and we shall come by the boat from that place, either on Monday or Tuesday, but most probably the former. The boat may be, very possibly, a night one on Monday, but I don't know.

I have been a good deal vexed by something Poole has told me about Madlle Denain.[†5] It seems that she made a small faux pas, some indefinite time ago, and had a child. Poole did not think it necessary to mention this to Rogers, thinking that only Hardwick[†1] and I were going to dine there; and he says he was amazed to see you—and then was afraid to say anything. At this point of the story I stopped him, and said it was no matter. I had said at the time that virgins were not usually to be found in French Theatres; that it was no business of ours after Rogers had presented her; and that we knew nothing, and wanted to know nothing. But then it came out that she is now Lord Normanby's mistress (Poole is monstrously chivalrous and absurd concerning Lord Normanby) and that this is very well known in Paris. Now I cannot remember what ladies dined with us that day, but I am satisfied you ought to call upon them, and, without making too much of it, just say "that her history is not quite correct, you find, and that Rogers was mistaken in presenting her, but you never mean to tell him so—though you feel you owe this explanation to them, whom you asked to meet her."[†2] This you must do at once. Of course I said nothing angry to Poole, in our relative situations, and would on no account make it known to Rogers—who is so revengeful, that I think if he did know it, he would instantly bowl Poole out of any chance of a pension. And we must not do anything to starve him, whatever we do.

There has been thunder and rain; and the heat is a little abated. We dine at Olliffe's today, to meet D'Orsay. I have not called at the Embassy (Maclise objecting to go) but intend doing so, presently, when I shall go on to the Rue de Courcelles,[†3] and see how it looks. We have been to the Français where the acting was odious (including Rachel's, who was very like Celeste)[†4] and to Franconi's, which was delightful. Also to my old blackguard theatre, the Funambules,[†5] and divers guingettes. Mac has been a little heavy since yesterday morning, and rather disposed to be cross,—but don't say so, to Forster. We looked in at the Morgue just now, where there was a body horribly mutilated with a musket ball in the head, and afterwards drowned. It made him so sick, that to my infinite disconcertment, he sat down on a doorstep in the street, for about ten minutes, resting his cheek (like Juliet) on his hand.[†6] He is now at the Swimming Bath on the Seine.

I have written a paper for Household Words, and sent it to Wills by this Post. Which, I think, all things considered, is pretty sharp work. We had a very merry day with Regnier at Fontainebleau, and he persisted in paying for everything—saying it was but a poor acknowledgement of the kindness we had shewn him in London. I really believe him to be a very good little fellow, in spite of Poole.

My best love to Georgy, and to the darling children. I hope my cold is quite gone, except out of my head. I suppose you have been eternally at the opera, and whirling in a round of dissipation—Paris, and my letters, are tame in the comparison. Mac met the Bicknells[†1] yesterday, and the day before. They are spending a few days here, on their way home.

Ever most affectionately CD.

Mac sends best regards. He has come back, looking much cleaner.

July

To THE EARL OF CARLISLE,[†2] [?2 JULY 1850]

Mention in To Cullenford, 3 July 50. Date: after CD's return from Paris on 1 July.

Inviting him to take the chair at the 1851 dinner of the General Theatrical Fund.[†3]

To WILLIAM CULLENFORD,[†4] 3 JULY 1850

Extract in Maggs catalogue No. 291 (1912); MS 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 3 July 50.

Referring to the Theatrical Fund Dinner. . . . I have communicated with Lord Carlisle, on the subject of the next dinner. I am sorry to say that there are reasons which positively prevent his accepting the office of chairman.[†5]

To MRS GASKELL, 3 JULY 1850

MS John Rylands Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Third July, 1850.

My Dear Mrs. Gaskell.

This is a brief letter, but—if you only knew it!—a very touching one in its earnestness.

Can't you—won't you—don't you ever mean to—write me another story? I should be better pleased[†6]

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 3 JULY 1850

MS Private.

Devonshire Terrace | Third July, 1850. I have been in Paris for the last ten days, and have but just come home.

Faithfully Ever
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS HARRIET MARTINEAU, [3 JULY 1850]*

MS Dickens House. Address: Miss Martineau | Ambleside. PM 3 July 50.

†1 I am very very sorry to see Peel's death in the paper this morning.†2 He was a man of great importance to the country just now, and could ill be spared from among the great dust-heap of imbeciles and dandies that there is no machinery for sifting, down in Westminster.†3

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Martineau

To THE HON. MRS RICHARD WATSON, 3 JULY 1850

MS Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Third July 1850.

My Dear Mrs Watson

I have been endeavouring to tighten the screws of my head, in Paris. They become a little loosened about the twenty second of each month, by hard work; and change I find to be the best oil and most efficient restoration.

This is the reason of my not having written sooner, to thank you for the transmission of that portentous document. By what earthly means it ever got into that table drawer, I cannot conceive. The wonder of the matter is, that Coutts's were certain they had sent it to me at Rockingham,†1 and I was certain they had not; so, after a little amicable discussion of the matter, they decided that the fault was theirs. I must now assure them that it was mine,—though I have not, and never had, the faintest remembrance of having ever opened the paper. I must have been laughing or doing something ridiculous, I suppose, instead of minding what I was about.

The Gunnings†2 were here one evening, a few weeks ago, accompanied by a young gentleman whom I rather suspected of being desperate on the pretty daughter. (I am sorry to observe, by the bye, that her nose will soon be too sharp.)

Tell Watson with my love that I am in a very despondent state of mind about Peel's death. He was a man of mark, who could be ill-spared from that great Dust Heap down at Westminster. When I think of the joy of the D'Israelis, Richmonds, and other Impostors and Humbugs,†3 I think of flying to Australia and taking to the Bush.—What do you think of entering into the scheme, asking Haldimand†4 to join us, and founding a settlement to be called the Paradox?†5

Every one is cheering David on, and I hope to make your book[†6] a good one. I like it very much myself—thoroughly believe it all—and go to work every month with an energy of the fieriest description. I hope you like Miss Martineau's story, The health and sickness of Blaeburn,[†7] in Household Words.

We have taken a house at Broadstairs, whither we shall transport the children early in August, and ourselves when our troubles are over. We intend remaining there until the end of October, for I want to finish David quietly, on the great seashore.

After that, if I were asked to come to Rockingham, there is no knowing how long I should stay!—

Kate and Georgy unite with me in best remembrances and loves to all And I am ever with great truth

My Dear Mrs. Watson | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To [EDMUND] A. MENCH,[†1] [?3 JULY 1850]

Extract in John Anderson Jr catalogue No. 530; dated Office of Household Words. Date: probably refers to Paris visit of June 50, and may be 3 July (cf. To Unknown Correspondent, that day).

With the compliments of Mr. Charles Dickens, who is only recently returned from France.

To LADY KAY-SHUTTLEWORTH,[†2] 4 JULY 1850*

MS The Hon. Mrs Charles Leaf.

Devonshire Terrace | Thursday Fourth July | 1850.

Dear Mrs. Shuttleworth.

I should have been truly happy, I assure you, to comply with your request, if compliance were at all feasible. But my work (which is particularly hard just now) obliges me to avoid all public meetings,[†3] and almost all other interruptions of my attention, except long country walks and fresh air. If I were to permit anything to interfere with these relaxations just now, I fear the old spelling-book would "come true", and Jack would be but a dull boy.

Believe me always | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Kay Shuttleworth.

To WILLIAM ALLINGHAM,[†4] 5 JULY 1850*

MS Carl H. Pforzheimer Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Fifth July, 1850.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. William Allingham, and has much pleasure in assuring Mr. Allingham that he is at perfect liberty to republish the Verses inserted in Household Words.[†5]

To R. H. HORNE, 6 JULY 1850

MS Dr Robert Fellman. Address: R. H. Horne Esquire | Beaumont Cottage | College Road | Chalk Farm Lane | Hampstead Road.

Devonshire Terrace | Sixth July, 1850.

My Dear Horne.

A thousand thanks for the Wine! Delicious in itself (I have tried it already), and doubly generous and palatable, for your remembrance of me.

I hope you and Mrs. Horne[†1] will come down and see us at Broadstairs this year, where I have a good bold house on the top of a cliff,[†2] with the sea Winds blowing through it, and the gulls occasionally falling down the chimnies by mistake.

I shall not fail to let you know, at the H. W. Office, when we have migrated to that wild region, there to remain (please God) until the end of October.

Ever My Dear Horne | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

R. H. Horne Esquire.

To THOMAS MITTON,[†3] 6 JULY 1850*

MS Mr Lewis P. Kinsey, Jr.

Devonshire Terrace | Sixth July, 1850.

My Dear Mitton

All right as to the money.[†4] I had a dim idea about the Dividend Day, but thought it best to know how it was.

I think it will be advisable to decide to call in the money at Christmas. If I can find any purchase to suit me, I shall certainly not rent another house.[†5] Laying out a good sum, it will be necessary to have this amount. Therefore, I have no doubt of the expediency of your giving Thompson notice accordingly.[†6]

It is a long time since we dined together. When you come with that cheque, can't you come—say at four or five—and we will go and dine at Verey's[†7] in Regent Street, or some such place. If you will write, when you know when the cheque will come to you, and give me choice of two days, I will immediately reply. You can go back afterwards, you know, by Omnibus.[†1]

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To T. J. SERLE, 6 JULY 1850

MS Mr Peter Brandt.

Devonshire Terrace | Sixth July, 1850.

My Dear Serle.

I was not at home when Mr. Scott[†2] called; but, even if I had been, I could not have complied with his request. For my work (pretty brisk just now) obliges me to forego all public, and many private, appearances.

Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

T. J. Serle Esquire.

To THOMAS BEARD, 8 JULY 1850

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Place | Edgeware Road.

Devonshire Terrace. | Eighth July, 1850.

My Dear Beard.

Fort House, Broadstairs, until the end of October!!!—which I believe is a fine month. You can't (but that you know) come down often enough, or stay long enough. I understand the Baldwinian powers[†3] will abandon these shores in September—anyway, the Fort House is furthest from his, in all that village. And he will be still further circumvented by that tremendous fortification that used, in the ferocious old days, to keep the Pirates out.

A haunch of Wen'son will be roasted here, next Sunday at 5. Will you come?

Ever Heartily

CD.

I have just come back from Paris, where I saw Fraser,[†4] who begged to be remembered to you cordially, and told me that whenever anybody asked him for a letter of introduction to the London newspapers he "just gav' him one for Bird."

To MRS M'IAN, 8 JULY 1850*

MS Miss Elena Klasky.

Devonshire Terrace | Eighth July, 1850

My Dear Mrs. McIan

I have read the gardener's book,[†1]—which I enclose. Some of his descriptions are very pretty, and the whole of his book is very good to have thought. Whether it is quite as good to have written, may be another question.

It seems to me to be no better and no worse, than a vast cloud of verse, that is always rising from all sorts of quarters. I see something every day, of the misery and bitterness consequent on mistaken rushings into print. I would on no account encourage a tendency to authorship in this writer. It would be to do him no kindness. He cannot too clearly understand that the difficulties under which he writes, are no reason for his writing; and that the men who have laid down the spade or hammer for the pen, and become famous, have been among the most extraordinary men the world has ever produced.

Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. McIan

To DANIEL MACLISE, 8 JULY 1850*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Eighth July, 1850.

My Dear Mac.

I send you, on the other side, a Memorandum of our French account. I don't trouble you with the items, thinking you likely to be bored thereby. I have made them out carefully, of course.

Ever affecy.

CD.

MEMORANDUM:[†2]

The Sum Total of our expences, from home back again, is £20..12..6 each. You gave me, on account, £10 in English money, and 10/- in french money. This leaves the balance that you have to give me, £10..2..6

To W. C. MACREADY, 8 JULY 1850*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Eighth July 1850.

My Dear Macready

I was amazed to hear from Forster yesterday, that you were in town. And we think of hiring one hundred and fifty free and independent republicans from the City of New York, to wait upon your reappearances at the Haymarket,[†3] because you didn't tell us so, and dine here yesterday.

Here is something I brought over for you from Poole, who is staggering about Paris like a bad Automaton. He said (galvanically) something about "T-a-a-a-Alma",[†1] when he gave it me. That's all I know.

Ever My Dear Macready | Affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. C. Macready Esquire.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 9 JULY 1850*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts

Devonshire Terrace | Tuesday Evening | Ninth July, 1850.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I received a note from you at ten minutes to seven this evening, asking me to dine at Holly Lodge—I suppose, today, it being dated today, and no other day mentioned—at half past Six! This being clearly an impossibility, I folded my hands in a calm despair, and send this to explain why and how I fell into that condition of mind.

Dear Miss Coutts | Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To MARK LEMON, 12 JULY 1850

MS Benoliel Collection.

Devonshire Terrace | Twelfth July, 1850.

My Dear Lemon.

You recollect Attwood[†2] of the Strand Theatre in Hammond's time? Do you know anything of him, or anything against him?[†3] Should you think he was deserving of a little aid? I should be very glad of your opinion.

Do you know anything of one De Lara,[†4] an artist, who represents himself as having been a[†5]

To THE REV. CHAUNCEY HARE TOWNSHEND,[†1] 12 JULY 1850*

MS Mr D. V. Arnold. Address: The Reverend C Hare Townsend[†2] | Post Office | Wisbeach[†2] | Cambridgeshire.

Devonshire Terrace | Twelfth July, 1850.

My Dear Townshend.

"Yes verily, and by God's help so I will!" (see catechism).[†3]

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Reverend Chauncey Hare Townshend.

To W. H. WILLS, 12 JULY 1850

MS Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Twelfth July, 1850. | Friday

My Dear Wills. I observe a Report in the Times this morning of a most intolerably asinine Speech about Smithfield, made in the Common Council by one Taylor.[†4] It would be a good beginning of our Playing at Parliament.[†5] If you will look to the other papers, and send me the best Report, or a collation of the greatest absurdities enunciated by this wiseacre, I will try to make something of it—in any case, to enshrine it in a Chip, but perhaps to do something better.[†6]

Ever Faithfully
CD.

To W. H. WILLS, 12 JULY 1850

MS Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Twelfth July, 1850.

My Dear Wills.

You remember, I suppose, that the statement in question is NOT OURS?[†7] It is in the records of that Establishment which is described, and is—I am quite certain—unmitigated gammon. I must consider whether it is worth while to alter the making up by putting it in again; but in future don't touch my articles without first consulting me.[†1]

I wonder you think "a Night with the Detective Police" would do for a title![†2] After all those nights with Burns,[†3] and the Industrious Fleas,[†4] and Heaven knows what else!! I don't think there could be a worse one within the range of the human understanding.[†5]

We'll have another night, certainly. I suppose Forster has corrected my Detective Proof? I think the Bank Note very good indeed. Do. the Hippopotamus. Do. Swinging the Ship.[†6]

Faithfully Always

CD. [†7]Yes, to Mason.[†8] I have learned to be suspicious, in spite of myself, of all such things.

To THE REV. JAMES WHITE, 13 JULY 1850

Text from MDGH, I, 220-1.

Devonshire Terrace, July 13th, 1850.

My dear White,

Being obliged (sorely against my will) to leave my work this morning and go out, and having a few spare minutes before I go, I write a hasty note, to hint how glad I am to have received yours, and how happy and tranquil we feel it to be for you all, that the end of that long illness has come.[†1] Kate and Georgy send best loves to Mrs. White, and we hope she will take all needful rest and relief after those arduous, sad, and weary weeks. I have taken a house at Broadstairs, from early in August until the end of October, as I don't want to come back to London until I shall have finished "Copperfield." I am rejoiced at the idea of your going there. You will find it the healthiest and freshest of places; and there are Canterbury, and all varieties of what Leigh Hunt calls "greenery,"[†2] within a few minutes' railroad ride. It is not very picturesque ashore, but extremely so seaward; all manner of ships continually passing close inshore. So come,[†3] and we'll have no end of sports, please God.

I am glad to say, as I know you will be to hear, that there seems a bright unanimity about "Copperfield."[†4] I am very much interested in it and pleased with it myself. I have carefully planned out the story, for some time past, to the end, and am making out my purposes with great care.[†5] I should like to know what you see from that tower of yours. I have little doubt you see the real objects in the prospect.

"Household Words" goes on thoroughly well. It is expensive, of course, and demands a large circulation; but it is taking a great and steady stand, and I have no doubt already yields a good round profit.

To-morrow week I shall expect you. You shall have a bottle of the "Twenty."[†6] I have kept a few last lingering caskets with the gem enshrined therein, expressly for you.

Ever, my dear White, | Cordially yours

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To MRS MORSON, [14 JULY 1850]

Mention in next.

Sending her Caroline Canlon's address.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 14 JULY 1850*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts.

Devonshire Terrace | Sunday, Fourteenth July | 1850.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I dined at Greenwich yesterday, and did not find your notes until I came home at night. I have the letters, carefully bundled and labelled, here. I have sent to Mrs. Morson today, Caroline Canlon's address—her name is Hunt[†1]—exactly copied from her letter.

Ever Faithfully Yours

CD.

To HENRY AUSTIN, 15 JULY 1850*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace. | Fifteenth July 1850. | Monday Evening

My Dear Henry

Any day next week, except Monday or Saturday, I shall be delighted to place myself at your disposal. Kate, being rather unwieldy for going out at present, I think will do better at home,—where Georgina will take care of her.

I should be very glad indeed, if you could find leisure to write or suggest anything (the former, the better) tending to promote the Sanitary cause, for the H.W.[†2] Shall we have another small dinner there, after yours, and talk it over? Or a walk one day?

Ever affectionately

CHARLES DICKENS

To RICHARD VEEVERS AND JOHN CROFT,[†3] 15 JULY 1850*

MS Manchester Central Library.

Devonshire Terrace, London | Fifteenth July, 1850.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Neevers[†3a] and Mr. Croft, and regrets that his engagements render it out of his power to accept the invitation of the Council of the Preston Institution.[†4]

To DANIEL MACLISE, 16 JULY 1850*

MS Yale University Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Sixteenth July, 1850.

My Dear Mac.

Forster proposes to dine "and go somewhere" tomorrow. If disengaged, will you join us in Wellington Street at the office, not later than 5?

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To CHARLES MANBY,[†1] 20 JULY 1850

Text from Outlook, XXXII (1913), 496.

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday Twentieth July 1850

My Dear Manby,

If you should happen to stand possessed of an Adelphi box[†2] for tonight,[†3] and should have no other suppliant to bestow it upon than the undersigned mendicant, will you show your charity towards him.

Faithfully yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To DANIEL MACLISE, [?20 JULY 1850]*

MS Yale University Library. Date: Handwriting suggests spring or summer 1850; probably 20 July since about a box at the theatre: see last.

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday

My Dear Mac.

The Box is all right. As I shall dine in the Temple, and dress in Wellington Street, I think it will be the shortest plan if you will join me at the latter place, at from 7 to 10 minutes past 7. Or, if you prefer my calling at the Athenaeum at 20 minutes past 7, I will do that.

Which shall it be?

Affecy. Ever CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 22 JULY 1850*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Second July, 1850.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

Mrs. Dickens is out. I can answer for myself, and I think for her, for tomorrow.

I don't know accurately what "half past and"—which is your time—stands for. Maybe half past six? Unless you correct my reading of the clock, I shall take that for granted.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 24 JULY 1850*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Fourth July, 1850.

My Dear Miss Coutts

I am truly sorry that I have an old engagement to dine with Chauncey Townshend on Saturday. But I will come up before dinner on Sunday.

I will take care that no one comes in, at Shepherd's Bush.

Faithfully Yours Ever
CD.

To DANIEL MACLISE, 24 JULY 1850*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Fourth July, 1850. | Wednesday Evening

My Dear Mac.

Your friend Oldham[†1] of the Bank, is coming to dine at the H.W. Office (to talk about forgeries)[†2] on Friday at halfpast 5. Will you meet him?

Ever Faithfully
CD.

P.S. How a man of your energy (in laziness and avoidance of Boredom) could ever have got himself into that Nugentian scrape, I cannot imagine! If it had been —"Billy Robinson, Maclise"—

I shouldn't so much have wondered. But Nugent![†1]

!!
!!!
!!!!
!!!!!

To WILLIAM ALLINGHAM, 25 JULY 1850*

MS Mr P. H. L. Allingham.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Fifth July, 1850. | Thursday

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. William Allingham, and begs to say that he will be at home, and happy to see Mr. Allingham,[†2] this afternoon at 5, if that hour will suit his convenience.

To G. A. A'BECKETT,[†3] 26 JULY 1850

Mention in A'Beckett to CD, 29 July 50 (MS Morgan Library).

Asking if he can recommend any one for admission to the Home for Homeless Women.[†4]

To HENRY ASHWORTH,[†5] 26 JULY 1850*

MS Indiana University Libraries.

Devonshire Terrace, London | Twenty Sixth July, 1850.

Respected Sir

I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your obliging letter, and its accompanying pamphlet[†6] referring to a subject full of interest and importance.

Allow me to thank you, and to remain

Yours faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

Henry Ashworth Esquire.

To W. J. BRODERIP,[†1] 26 JULY 1850*

MS Mr J. Orde Poynton.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate, Regents Park | Twenty Sixth July, 1850.

My Dear Sir.

I am sure that I need not apologize for troubling you with this note, when I state its object.

I assist my friend Miss Coutts in the management of a small private Institution she maintains, for reclaiming young women, instructing them in all sound domestic knowledge, and sending them out to Australia or elsewhere.

We don't consider a Magdalen qualification indispensable, but we don't object to it, and we are glad (when we are not full) to receive any reasonably hopeful case of distress or offence. We would prefer not to have them beyond twenty years of age, and we impress upon them that Emigration is an essential part of our compact.

We have sent out several, who have done well, and married happily. As I am in the habit of observing (at a distance) the humanity and wisdom with which you administer justice, it has occurred to me that you might, at some time or other, have some miserable girl before you, for whom you would be happy to make such good provision. If this should ever be, and you would write to me, I should be very happy to come to you and understand the case.[†2]

My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. J. Broderip Esquire.

To J. BERNARD BURKE,[†3] 26 JULY 1850*

MS National Library of Wales.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Sixth July, 1850.

Dear Sir

Pray allow me to thank you for your very obliging note, and for your curious and interesting book.[†4] I feel much gratified by your kind expressions.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

J. Bernard Burke Esquire

To MESSRS COUTTS & CO., 26 JULY 1850

Extract in Maggs catalogue No. 916 (1969); MS 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 26 July 50.

Asking them to pay two guineas to the Arundel Society,[†1] and also on the first of May in each year . . . to pay to the account of the Same Society my annual Subscription of One Guinea.[†2]

To H. C. LLOYD,[†3] 26 JULY 1850*

MS Yale University Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Sixth July, 1850.

Dear Sir

I am very much obliged to you for your kind note, and the interesting papers accompanying it. I am most thoroughly of your opinion as to the teaching of pauper boys—and all boys. In "Dombey and Son", I tried to suggest the absurdity of the favorite method of instruction, by describing an unhappy charity-boy as being subjected to "a perpetual bruising of his intellectual shins, against all the hard proper names of all the tribes of Judah".[†4] He turned out but indifferently, though he was a tremendous Hohen genealogist.[†5]

I shall not lose sight of the subject.

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Henry Clements Lloyd Esquire.

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON,[†6] 26 JULY 1850

MS Lytton Papers.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Sixth July, 1850.

My Dear Sir Edward

I have delayed answering your kind and welcome note until now, in the hope that through some chink or cranny I might in the interval descry a gleam of probability that I might be able to come to you with Macready[†7] and Forster.[†8] But home affairs, and my work (the latter heavy, just now) admonish me, after all, that I must remain here. I regret it very much, but that old adage about necessity is my comfort.

In the matter of the Play—which stirs my blood like a trumpet[†1]—I have not yet had conference with Forster, who has been sitting, since his return from you, with a touzled head, a dirty blouse, and extraordinarily dishevelled pantaloons, anathematizing Henry,[†2] in an equable state of distraction. The last time I saw him, his eyebrows were just visible above a dirty sea of proofs.[†3] I should suppose that he may be expected to emerge, tomorrow,—and, after conference holden, I shall report myself to you touching Bobadil.[†4]

[†a]You gratify me more than I can tell you by what you say about Copperfield[†5]—the more so, as I hope myself that some heretofore deficient qualities are there.[†6] You are not likely to misunderstand me when I say that I like it very much, and am deeply interested in it—and that I have kept, and am keeping, my mind very steadily upon it.[†a] Which is my main reason for keeping very quiet until it shall be finished, please God, in October.

Believe me always | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

When I come to see you, I must compare notes with you about an idea that has occurred to me, generally, for a Comedy[†7]—which I am NOT[†8] going to write.

To MRS BRUNEL,[†9] 27 JULY 1850*

MS Bodleian Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Seventh July, 1850.

My Dear Mrs. Brunel.

I return you, herewith, the little book[†10] you so kindly remembered in my behalf.

I have written my name in it at your request, though it seems an act of uncommon audacity to take that formal possession of somebody else's property.

Pray thank the owner in my name too. I have read the story with the greatest pleasure. Much of my delight may be owing to my childish recollections of it, which are very strong and accurate indeed, I find—except—I must have been very young!—that I had not the faintest idea of there being any Love in the case.

With best regards to Mr. Brunel,[†1] | Believe me | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Brunel.

To FRANK STONE, 27 JULY 1850*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday Twenty Seventh July | 1850.

My Dear Stone.

We must dine at 5 tomorrow, because I have—which I dare say will interest you—to go two Ragged Schools in the evening, to select some girls for Miss Coutts's place.

Ever affecy.

CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 30 JULY 1850*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Thirtieth July, 1850.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I saw a number of most miserable and appalling cases, on Sunday night, but could not make up my mind to hazard more than one. I can only say of that one, that the girl was trembling on the verge of destruction, and that I think it just promising enough to be tried. The rest were too miserable and low for our purpose. I do not think you could dispose of such unfortunate creatures.

Tomorrow afternoon I am to go to the Westminster Ragged School. In the meantime I send you the answers of the three Magistrates[†2] to whom I wrote. They are so very earnest, that it seems to me that the best direction in which we can turn for objects, is probably that one; and that it will be well to have space to be so filled up.

Dear Miss Coutts | Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To JOHN LEECH, 30 JULY 1850

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: John Leech Esquire | 33 Notting Hill Terrace | Notting Hill.

Devonshire Terrace | Thirtieth July, 1850.

My Dear Leech

Alas! I have consulted the H. W. Oracle, and it says "No! The Inimitable B must write!"[†1] So no Thames at present, for that remarkable man.

Ever Faithfully
CD.

To JOHN KENYON, 31 JULY 1850*

MS Dickens House. Address: John Kenyon Esquire | York Terrace.

Devonshire Terrace | Wednesday Thirty First July | 1850.

My Dear Kenyon.

Many thanks for your kind note. I think I had better find my own way to Forster's, however, as I have some business to attend to out of doors, and hardly know whither it will take me.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Kenyon Esquire.

To H. P. SMITH, 31 JULY 1850*

MS Miss Mabel Hodge.

Devonshire Terrace | Thirty First July, 1850.

My Dear Smith.

London is such a strange place, that one never does see anybody in it—and I have seen less than nothing of most of my friends, this year, on account of my heavy work. But after October (when I hope to finish Copperfield) I shall be more at liberty, I trust.

In spite of the rarity of our meetings, your going away again seems in a manner wonderful to me, and to make a blank somewhere. A general cry of "Lor!" pervaded the house this morning, when I announced your departure, and we haven't got used to it yet.

I have been ransacking my memory for some such person as you describe, in any Italian city you are going to,—but all in vain. Most of the people I knew, have left that country, or are now staying in London—in the latter category are even included our consul at Genoa and his family.[†2]

So, being resolved not to introduce you to bores, I send you no letters at all. Only our loves and best remembrances (including Charley's to Mrs. Smith)[†1] and all sincere and cordial wishes for your great enjoyment abroad, and happy return home.

My Dear Smith | Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

H. P. Smith Esquire.

August

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 1 AUGUST 1850

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street.

Devonshire Terrace. | First August 1850.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

It is extraordinary to me,—but I cannot find any one who knows Mr. De Lara.[†2] I have enquired among artists, great and small—among theatrical people—among the gentlemen engaged at Household Words, who I should have thought almost certain to have some trace of such a man—but quite unsuccessfully.

Of course I have been careful to give no clue to my reason for asking about him.

I cannot say that I think his second letter very good, yet there is something in his first that looks real. I need not say, of course, that I will see him with pleasure if you wish it. But I have not thought it right to do so, without your instructions—or to ask Ackermans,[†3] or Moon,[†4] to whom he refers, and both of whom I know. I have abstained, because of the reference being in his letter. Shall I make enquiry in one of those two quarters? If you say yes, I can to do so in a morning. Will you let me know?

Yesterday, I went to the Westminster Ragged School, but, though I went by appointment, the Master was not there. It is an awful place, in a maze of filth and squalor,[†5] so dense and deserted by all decency, that my apparition in those streets in whose heart it lies, brought out the people in a crowd. We were on a very good understanding, however, and some people to whom I talked, took occasion to admire my diamond ring. I left word for the master to come to me, but I greatly doubt our finding any cases there, that will do. They are so very low and wretched.

I went to look at the Church,[†1] and I cannot tell you how pleased I was, with the little garden. I am confident of the humanizing influence of a few leaves and flowers in that place. It will suggest to the commonest mind that you wish to please the poor, and will make a thousand people think about you, who might not be addressed otherwise.

I return Mr. De Lara's letters, but have made a note—like Captain Cuttle—of his address.

Dear Miss Coutts | Ever Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FRANCIS,[†2] 2 AUGUST 1850

Extract in N, II, 224 from catalogue. MS 1 ½ pp.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 2 Aug 50.

I beg to thank you for the book you have so kindly lent me. . . . I think I know the pamphlet about Patch[†3] to which you refer.

To JOHN A. HERAUD,[†4] 2 AUGUST 1850*

Text from transcript, Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace, | Second August 1850.

My Dear Sir,

I quite agree, in that regard, with Coleridge and Wordsworth.[†5] But that is not what I desire to do. I want to tempt and entice people to think, instead of taking them by the throat.

I have great pleasure, I assure you, in adding my name to your list.[†6] As I am presently going out of town, perhaps you will excuse my troubling you, as the shortest course, with a post office order (made payable to "John Heraud") for the amount of my debt.

Believe me | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

John A. Heraud Esquire.

To MRS GASKELL, 7 AUGUST 1850

MS Dickens House.

Devonshire Terrace | Seventh August, 1850.

My Dear Mrs. Gaskell.

I have been extraordinarily amused by this Sermon, which is the best (of its kind) I ever saw or heard in my life, and infinitely better than any theological discourse whatever.

The fact of its having been reprinted ten years ago, makes me doubt the propriety of putting it in Household Words, or I should have been delighted to do so.

It would be ungrateful to say that anything in your pleasant handwriting could disappoint me. I only thought when I saw it, outside the letter, that there might be a tale by you, within. That, I couldn't help, you know.

Kate and her sister send their kind loves.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Gaskell.

To F. G. MOON, 7 AUGUST 1850

Mention in Moon to CD, 12 Aug 50. (MS Morgan Library).

Enquiring about a Mr. De Lara.[†1]

To JOHN SMITH,[†2] 9 AUGUST 1850

Extract in Anderson Galleries catalogue No. 4422 (1938); MS 1 p.; dated 9 Aug 50; addressed to John Smith, Liverpool.

My dear Sir, I am much satisfied, I assure you, by the receipt of your kind note, and beg to thank you for it cordially.

To W. H. WILLS, 9 AUGUST 1850

MS Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Ninth August, 1850.

My Dear Wills

I shall be obliged to you if you will write to this man, and tell him that what he asks, I never do—firstly, because I have no kind of connexion with any Manager or Theatre; secondly, because I am asked to read so many Manuscripts, that compliance is impossible, or I should have no other occupation or relaxation in the world.

†1—A foreign gentleman—with a Beard—name unknown, but signing himself "a Fellow Man", and dating from nowhere—declined, twice yesterday, to leave this house for any less consideration than the insignificant one of "Twenty Pounds". I have had a Policeman waiting for him all day.

Faithfully Always

CD.

To W. C. BENNETT, 10 AUGUST 1850*

MS Mr James L. Clifford.

Devonshire Terrace | Tenth August, 1850.

Dear Sir

I have pleasure in assuring you that you are at perfect liberty to reprint the two poems of yours that have been published in Household Words.†2

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

W. C. Bennett Esquire.

To R. H. HORNE, [?10 AUGUST 1850]

Mention in next.

Approving Horne's proposal for an article on travel for HW.

To W. H. WILLS, 10 AUGUST 1850

MS Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Tenth August, 1850.

My Dear Wills.

I have written to Horne. The idea is a good one.†3 The execution, the main thing.

My travels are chiefly old,†4 and I have none of those books. But I have told him you will get them.

I will consider about Port Natal.†5 I think I do know somebody—but he might lie, or favor lies.

The New Zealand sketch[†1] is exactly the kind of thing that weighs upon my mind, frightfully. I don't know where to put it. I haven't the courage to destroy it—and it reappears awfully, every now and then, like an evidence of Crime.

I send you a communication from one of our innumerable Starvers.

Ever Yours

CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 12 AUGUST 1850*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Holly Lodge.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Evening | Twelfth August 1850.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I send you Moon's answer about De Lara, just received.—And very satisfactory!![†2]

I will enquire immediately about Mr. Elliott.[†3] I know his hand, but cannot recall how. And I have a disagreeable impression in connexion with it, though I can't remember what.

Which is also extremely satisfactory.

I purpose attending the Shepherd's Bush Committee tomorrow, at half past 3. There are no other cases yet ready, unless you like to have "the raggedest". There is a kind of Ashley glaze[†4] upon those girls, unless in dire extremity. She whom I picked out, declines—or her father for her.

Dear Miss Coutts | Ever Faithfully Yours

CD.

To J. H. JEWELL,[†5] 13 AUGUST 1850

Extract in N, II, 226.

Devonshire Terrace | 13th August, 1850

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Jewell, and begs to thank Mr. Jewell for his obliging note, and very pretty songs,[†6] with which he is much pleased.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?13 AUGUST 1850]

Extracts in F, VI, vi, 537. Date: first extract 13 Aug according to Forster; second extract (aa) probably from same letter as CD visited Shepherd's Bush 13 Aug (see To Miss Coutts, 12 Aug) but was in Broadstairs on 20 Aug, the date given by Forster.

Work in a very decent state of advancement domesticity notwithstanding. I hope I shall have a splendid number.[†1] I feel the story to its minutest point.

[a]Obliged to go to Shepherd's Bush to-day, and can consequently do little this morning. Am eschewing all sorts of things that present themselves to my fancy—coming in such crowds![a]

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, [?13 AUGUST 1850]

Text from unidentified newspaper cutting in Kitton's "Dickens Ana", II, 32. Date: just possibly 13 Aug 50 when CD had unexpectedly to read "doubtful articles" for HW (see next); if so, Wills had recovered from his illness by 14 Aug (see To Wills, that day).

I am sorry to say that I cannot have the pleasure of accepting them. They possess no kind of characteristic to render them available. Between ourselves—and not for the information of their authoress—they are of that intensely dreary & commonplace description to which not even the experience of this place reconciles my wondering mind. Everybody could write such things I imagine, but how anybody can contentedly sit down to do it is inscrutable. Don't you feel the same astonishment? People don't plunge into churches and play the organs without knowing the notes or having a ghost of an ear. Yet fifty people a day will rush into manuscript for these leaves only, who have no earthly qualification but the actual physical art of writing. Wills is ill, and I am at this moment sitting (up to the neck) in a quagmire of these productions.

To T. YEATS BROWN,[†2] 14 AUGUST 1850*

MS Mrs R. E. Yeats-Brown.

Devonshire Terrace | Fourteenth August, 1850. | Wednesday

My Dear Brown.

Georgina tells me you are going to the Opera, next Tuesday. Now (as our servants are out of town, and we are in an Anti-Malthusian state[†3] here) I want you and Mrs. Brown to come and dine with me, at the Star and Garter at Richmond, on the following Friday.[†4] I will drive you down, and we will dine early; so that if we feel disposed for Vauxhall, we may go there, very easily, afterwards.

Is it a bargain? I name that day, because I am not likely to be free before, being now hard at work.

My good friend Mr. Ellis[†1] of the Star and Garter is used to me, and knows how to make us comfortable.

Say yes, and I elevate my pen in the air, after the Roman manner, and swear by it to call for you next Friday week, at 3!

With best regards to Mrs. Brown,[†2] and all the pets (including, when you write, the child with the name which I am not sufficiently Biblical to be able to spell).[†3]

Believe me | Very Cordially Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

T. Yeats-Brown Esquire.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 14 AUGUST 1850

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Fourteenth August, 1850. | Wednesday

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I was about to come down last night, agreeably to your kind remembrance of me, to be delighted by the genius of that matchless actress whom you so much admire,[†4] when I was waylaid by a parcel, in dimensions like a spare bed, containing "doubtful articles" for Household Words, on which decision was necessary to the peace of mind of the writers.[†5] As my days are taken possession of by Copperfield, I had no alternative but to sit down and have them read to me. And extremely dreary they were—all with a drone of imitation of myself in them, which pervaded the whole parcel, as the Anabaptist strain does the Opera.[†6]

I believe Mr. Elliot is not known by name to Bentley's Miscellany.[†7] That would not invalidate his story, of itself, as he might have written something in an assumed name. But I am quite confident that I know his handwriting; and I have a strong impression, either that it is the writing of a man who wrote begging letters for years under the name of Collins, or that it is the writing of another man, and a great Impostor, against whom I once appeared at a Police Office.[†8] I feel certain that I know the character, well; and the contents are quite in the regular style. I would not answer the letter if I were you.

I retain it for a day or so, that I may ask my printers (whom I shall probably see to day) about the two references. Even supposing them to have authorized that use of their names, I believe they are of doubtful weight.

I enclose Charley's accounts.

There are two suggestions I wish you would consider, relative to Shepherd's Bush. If they cannot, with that small number, do the washing of themselves, then, I think a woman should be hired to come and help—which would teach the girls. To put the washing out, seems to me a great mistake of Mrs. Morson's. If they cannot bake, somebody should come and help (and teach) in that work too, I think. But I would not let them buy bread, with that oven there.

Dear Miss Coutts | Faithfully Yours ever
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To W. H. WILLS, 14 AUGUST 1850

MS Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Wednesday Fourteenth August | 1850

My Dear Wills.

I have gone down to Maidenhead[†1] this afternoon. Will you come, to make up, AT 10 TOMORROW MORNING,[†2] before I begin a good day's work.

You will find, on this paper, two proofs, in which I have made some alterations. "Evil is wrought",[†3] I have touched at the end. It left off with a disagreeable impression as to the feeling between the sisters. Mr. McKaye[†4] I have shorn of his humour in the emetical line, and also of his account of a Calm—which is less correct than I hope his other facts are. I have seen a calm on the Atlantic, three or four days long,[†5] when the ship had no more motion than this table.

Faithfully Ever

CD.

W. H. Wills Esquire.

To JOHN FORSTER, [15 AUGUST 1850]

Extract in F, VI, vi, 537. Date: 15 Aug according to Forster.

Mrs. Micawber is still, I regret to say, in statu quo.[†6] Ever yours, WILKINS MICAWBER.

To W. H. WILLS, 16 AUGUST 1850

MS Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Sixteenth August, 1850.

My Dear Wills.

I will not enter on that question of comparison which you raise in your note, because I do not think my doing so would at all facilitate or soften our business.

I have not the least intention, at present, of making any change in Horne's engagement. I think (as you know) highly of his abilities, and I have always seen him most willing and anxious to work. If, on its being distinctly shewn to him what he is required to do, it should appear, either that he dislikes doing it, or cannot do it, the case would be different. But I do not feel that it would become me to assume any such thing from your premises.

If you will write me such a letter as I can put before him, distinctly stating what assistance you require from him, which you have not, I will write to him immediately, and enclose that communication. And I have no doubt, the matter will be easily arranged.[†1]

But you must excuse my saying that I think you are hardly so disposed to accommodate matters with Horne (and never have been) as it would be pleasant and advantageous for all of us that you should be.

I send you an Illustration of cheapness, and some papers you left here yesterday.

Mrs. Dickens being happily confined,[†2] I go to Broadstairs this afternoon. My address there, is Fort House.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. H. Wills Esquire.

To J. G. GENT,[†3] [MID-AUGUST 1850]

Mention in To Miss Coutts, 23 Aug 50. Date: probably just before or shortly after CD's leaving London for Broadstairs.

Pointing out to him the importance of the Union's finding a suitable girl for Miss Coutts's Home.

To MRS CHARLES DICKENS, 17 AUGUST 1850

Text from a copy made by the Comte de Suzannet.[†1]

Broadstairs | Saturday Night | 17th. August 1850

My Dearest Kate,

Although I am writing at one table and Georgy at another in the same room, I have no idea what she is writing to you, so, if there should be any repetition between us, it is not my fault or hers. Upon the whole, I think the baby rather a failure down here. Charley was the most struck last night as connecting it with you. Sydney I think has been the most reflective on the subject to-day. He was playing the piano after dinner while I was reading and suddenly left off with, "I say Pa, can Dora talk?" On my replying No, he seemed to think that weak on her part and put the question, "Is she tall?" In answer to this I measured off about a quarter of a yard on the table and said she was about that size. He gave her up after that and except suggesting that Mrs. Gobson's[†2] little girl's name must be Dora too, said no more on the subject. He is in great force. Frank is so handsome that he is quite a sight to behold; they all look wonderfully well.

The house is excellent. We were in mighty confusion last night and this morning getting it to rights, but it is now quite orderly and is full of sweet air, sea views and comfort. I was not successful in getting to work to-day but I hope to resume tomorrow. Without you we shall be quite incomplete and a great blank everywhere.

I suppose Georgy will have told you the Broadstairs news—how the place is full[†3]—how little Miss Baldwin[†4] is the sworn friend of Mamey & Katey—how Miss Collin[†5] still wears the pink gown a little more washed—how Barnes[†6] had a paralytic stroke (which came on without notice when he was going up in the steamer the other day and now lies speechless in London). I see by bills on the walls hereabouts that a maniac by the name of Gill (Fanny Vining's husband very possibly) has the Margate Theatre[†7] and there are two new houses in Broadstairs.

I will not attempt to tell you, my love, how delighted I have been to receive such good tidings of you, and what relief and happiness we felt last night in coming down to think that it was over, and that we had left you so well. I thank God most heartily. Of course I shall see you next week as soon as I can possibly finish the No. concerning which I am rather low and penitent to-night, but shall brush up, I have no doubt, to-morrow. I have arranged to write in the Drawing Room. I tried Georgina's room, but the Preventive men looked at me, and you know what a settler that would be to the most retiring of writers. Take every care of yourself and don't let them coddle you or weaken you by too much conventionality. I think of you all day. You will not be able to write before I see you I suppose, but when you can write I know you will. God bless you my darling,

Ever most affly yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

To MR WALKER,[†1] 19 AUGUST 1850

MS Boston Public Library.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Nineteenth August, 1850.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Walker, and begs to say that he cannot comply with Mr. Walker's suggestion, by reason of the Cheap Edition arrangements being quite concluded.

To W. H. WILLS, 19 AUGUST 1850

MS Huntington Library.

Broadstairs | Nineteenth August, 1850.

My Dear Wills.

Yes—very gently—as to Miss Martineau.[†2] And say I want to cut the end of Woodruffe.[†3] (I have no proof.)

What shall we do about the making up? What Mrs. Micawber calls "the unconscious stranger"[†4] has so put me out, that I can't leave here before Friday, clearly.

In great haste | Faithfully Always
CD.

To MRS CHARLES DICKENS, 20 AUGUST 1850

MS British Museum.

Broadstairs | Tuesday Twentieth August, 1850.

My Dearest Kate.

This is a very short note, for I have been working nine hours at a stretch today, and did the same yesterday (being at a different point), and have only just laid down my pen, and you see the date!

I am not sure whether I shall be able to get to town on Thursday, or whether I shall not finish until that evening, and be prevented from coming until Friday. It depends upon Dora—I mean my Dora.[†1] You shall know by the Post on Thursday morning.

I am quite delighted, and can stick to my work bravely, hearing such excellent accounts of you. I got your mother's letter (tell her with my love) yesterday in good time, and her second this morning. I am happy to think that you have named your day for coming down, please God. We all want you very much, and I think you will be thoroughly pleased with the house and garden.

Ever Most affectionately

CD.

P.S. I never heard such a thing as that about Henry's wife![†2] I can't make out how that visitation of Fire has fallen on him.

P.P.S. The Spectre[†3] in great glory. A fresh wind blowing, and nearly blowing him off his legs in the garden—His hair all over his face—his hat nowhere in particular—and he lugging a seat about—equal in weight, I should think, to six legs of mutton.

To CLARKSON STANFIELD, 20 AUGUST 1850*

MS Dartmouth College, New Hampshire.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Twentieth August, 1850.

My Dear Stanny

—A short note, in the midst of my work.

There are two Ramsgate boats—a good 'un and a bad 'un—and the bad 'un comes down next Monday. Therefore, come by a Margate boat, which is sure to be good. It will leave London Bridge Wharf exactly at 10, and I will be at Margate to receive you and bring you over here.

Write me a line to say yes to this arrangement, and to say whether Mrs. Stanfield[†4] is coming with you—as Georgy hopes she is. Also to say that you mean to stay a Week, at the least.

Kate sends brilliant accounts of herself thank God.

Ever Affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

Clarkson Stanfield Esquire.

To JOHN FORSTER, [20 AUGUST 1850]

Extract in F, VI, vi, 537. Date: 20 Aug 50 according to Forster.

I have been very hard at work these three days, and have still Dora to kill.[†1] But with good luck, I may do it to-morrow.

To MRS CHARLES DICKENS, 21 AUGUST 1850

MS British Museum. Address: Mrs. Charles Dickens | Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park | London.

Broadstairs | Wednesday Night | Twenty First August, 1850.

My Dearest Kate.

I received your letter with the utmost delight this morning, and never thought your handwriting so good.

Even now, I am uncertain of my movements, for, after another splitting day, I have still Dora to kill—I mean the Copperfield Dora—and cannot make certain how long it will take to do. But if I could manage it before dinner tomorrow, I should come up by the Express train tomorrow night, arriving at home between 11 and 12. This is not for your information (as you will have shut up shop then), but for Annes,[†2] that she may make my bed in the night-nursery where I can have air. If I can't come tomorrow, I shall come on Friday, when I have a good deal before me at the H.W. office. I shall not come back until Saturday morning in any case. And of course come when I may, I shall come straight home.

Ever my Dearest | Most affectionately
(John waiting for the Post, with his mouth open, like a Post office in itself)
CD.

To W. H. WILLS, 21 AUGUST 1850

MS Huntington Library.

Broadstairs | Wednesday Night, | Twenty First August 1850.

My Dear Wills

I have cut Woodruffe as scientifically as I can, and I dont think Miss Martineau would exactly know where.

The Illustrations of Cheapness having become known to our readers, I think I would put the Steel Pen first.[†3] It has an Educational reference—is very good—and I think upon the whole might exchange places with the Forgery chapters to advantage, as we have already had the Bank first, in a former No.

Of course they have NOT[†4] sent me the Forgery Proofs.

The contents otherwise, are very fair, I think. Of course I proceed on the idea that you have not found any new first article.

If I have a favorable days work to-morrow (it may be a wayward one, as I am particularly ready to do it, and have considered it a long time) I shall be at the office all day on Friday. Also, I shall be happy to have Downing Bruce[†1] to dinner on Friday at 6.[†2] That subject[†3] should be nailed. Have a roast loin of mutton for one thing. We had nothing to cut and come again at, last time.

I received both the letters you mention. Ask Forster to dine on Friday.

What do you and Mrs. Wills say to coming down about tomorrow week—as soon as you have got that weeks number off your hands?

I enclose a note, which I dont understand. What on earth does the man mean, by returning an incivility?

Faithfully Always

CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 23 AUGUST 1850

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | 1 Stratton Street | Piccadilly.

Office of Household Words | Friday Twenty Third August 1850.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I am at Broadstairs with my various children—real and imaginary—and only got your kind note there, yesterday. To day I am here on business—and shall go back tomorrow.

Reverting in my mind to the Ragged Schools before I left town, and reviewing the mental portrait I brought away with me of the only girl I saw at all likely to suit us, I could not make up my mind to take her, as the matter stands. I feel sure you would agree with me, if you saw the case and all its accompaniments. I have thought it best to write to the Secretary (who is out of town) and gravely point out to him the immense importance of what you propose to do, and of their trying to take advantage of it in a proper manner. The teachers at those schools, though devoted to their uninviting work, are so narrow-minded and odd—and the whole thing (which might be so good) is such a scramble—that unless they exert themselves and interest themselves zealously in a case, I really think we ought not to take it, even if we could find it. They seem to have no idea of the value of such help as your taking one or two would be.

Do you recollect promising me a note to the Librarian at the India House?[†1] And will you send it to me at Broadstairs?

I am happy to say that Mrs. Dickens is in a noble condition, and that Household Words is taking its ground vigorously.

With regards to Mr. and Mrs. Brown, believe me ever

Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

There are several cases (which I have gone into) preparing, from Mr. Chestertons;[†2] and I dare say Mr. Tracey will be heard from soon.

To GEORGINA HOGARTH, 23 AUGUST 1850

Mention in N, II, 229. Dated Office of Household Words, 23 Aug 50.

To FRANK STONE, 23 AUGUST 1850*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Office of Household Words. | Friday Twenty Third August 1850.

My Dear ould Pump.

What do you say to going back with me tomorrow—just for a taste of a holiday, until Monday or so? You can't think what a fresh state the place is in. And they say that for a gent who has anything the matter with his K's—or his I's[†3]—it's miraculous.

Then, we'll settle for the longer wisit. Come!

I think of going down per Ramsgate boat. If you'll come and breakfast with me in Devonshire Terrace, at ¼ past 8, you shall anoint your K's with eggs and ham.

Reply, by the young Mercury who bears this. I shall be here this evening until 9 or so, and afterwards at home.

Kate, brilliant! Ditto, little Dora!

Ever My Pump | Affectionately

Sparkler[†4]

To R. H. HORNE, [LATE AUGUST 1850]

Mention in To Wills, 27 Aug 50. Date: based on Wills to CD, 17 Aug (see To Wills, 16 Aug, fn) and not later than 24 Aug to allow for Horne's reply.

Giving him the heads of Wills's complaints.[†1]

To UNKNOWN LADY, 24 AUGUST 1850*

MS Dickens House.

Broadstairs, Kent | Saturday Evening | Twenty Fourth August 1850.

Madam.

My absence from town in the first instance, and from this place afterwards, when your letter was forwarded, will be my excuse, I trust, for this delay in replying to you.

I can strongly recommend Roche to you. He is the brother of a deceased travelling servant of mine,[†2] for whom I had a great regard and affection. He and his family are most respectable and trustworthy. He has been about my house for some months—is shrewd and clever—knows France, Italy, &c well—and is thoroughly honest, zealous, and good tempered. I believe you will find him everything you can desire; and if I were going abroad tomorrow, I would take him with me in the capacity in which he is to serve you.

I am Madam | Your faithful Servant

CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS CHARLES DICKENS, 26 AUGUST 1850

MS British Museum. Address: Mrs. Charles Dickens | 1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park | London.

Broadstairs | Monday Evening | Twenty Sixth August, 1850.

My Dearest Kate.

I have regularly been making holiday today. Cricket, with Stone, Charles Knight, Charley, Wally, and Franky, all the morning—plunge in the sea (over and above early shower bath) before lunch—over to Margate and back, afterwards—then, garden with children. Whence I come in, to write these hasty lines.

Stanny has not appeared. Perhaps he may be coming by the Express Train tonight. Stone is just gone, and we are by ourselves again. It has been a most lovely afternoon, and I have really been basking in the sun, and in idleness, after some very hard work.

I read the No.[†3] to Stone and Georgy, yesterday afternoon, and threw them (especially the former) into a dreadful state. I hope you were affected by it? Georgy sends her love, and begs me to say that she will write to you tomorrow. She does not write tonight, on account of my doing so. She is still in the garden with the children. Ally[†1] is with them (for the first time since he was ill), and is quite himself as to his face, and looks a great deal better. They all send their loves, and desire me to say that they are looking forward to Friday week.

I hope I shall know, tomorrow, when I shall be in town. I think it will be Friday, and I don't forget that I am engaged to dine with you.

Ever my Dearest Kate | Most affectionately Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Charles Dickens. Love to your Mama.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 26 AUGUST 1850*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street | London.

Broadstairs | Monday Evening | Twenty Sixth August, 1850.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I write hastily, to let you know (the post just going out) that I hope we have two girls from the Field Lane Ragged School. The most active female teacher[†2] there, has written a very proper letter of entreaty (which I think it proper that you should have, in such a case), and I have received it this evening. I have appointed to see her, and the girls, on Friday.

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To W. H. WILLS, 27 AUGUST 1850

MS Huntington Library.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Twenty Seventh August, 1850.

My Dear Wills. I enclose you some papers I have received, in connexion with the H.W. Among them, a letter from Horne, in answer to one from me, pointing out to him the heads of your statement. You will see that he is willing and anxious to do anything, and to render you assistance in any way in which you will allow yourself to be assisted.

I have been in a kind of prostrated condition, as to any power of thinking about anything, since I finished my last Copperfield. Consequently, what I am to do for H.W. is still a sheet of blank paper. I suppose (like Mr. Micawber) that Something will turn up.

When I know, for certain, on what day I shall be in town, I will write to you again—probably by tomorrow's Post. You remain in the same mind about Saturday?

Always Faithfully Yours

CD.

W. H. Wills Esquire.

To WILLIAM CULLENFORD, 28 AUGUST 1850*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Broadstairs | Wednesday Twenty Eighth August | 1850.

Dear Mr. Cullenford

I return you the form, duly signed and attested.[†1]

In reference to your question, I can only say that I would recommend you to endeavour to get a chairman,[†2] distinguished for some association with some Art. I doubt the policy of your rushing to the young Duke of Cambridge,[†3] very much.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Cullenford.

To W. H. WILLS, 29 AUGUST 1850

MS Huntington Library.

Broadstairs | Thursday Twenty Ninth August | 1850.

My Dear Wills.

I send you the best resumé my used-up-ed-ness will yield, of the three best Police Stories.[†4] Will you please look carefully at the Proof, and be particular with the turned comma in the Dialogue.

Stanfield being here, I shall come to town on Saturday Morning, and be at the H.W. at 11 o'Clock, to dispatch all needful business. I purpose returning by the Boat on Sunday Morning. Is there anything in the Presbyterian way, to prevent you and Mrs. Wills[†5] coming back with me? If so, and you would prefer preceding me by a train on Saturday Afternoon, write to that effect [†a](to my little housekeeper Miss Hogarth)[†a] by return, and she will expect you.

In haste

Always Faithfully
CD.

To R. R. BROWN,[†1] 31 AUGUST 1850*

MS University of California, Los Angeles.

Devonshire Terrace | Thirty First August, 1850.

Sir.

I beg to thank you for your very obliging communication, and for the pleasure I have had in the inspection of the drawings I now return agreeably to your request.

Yours faithfully and obliged
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard R. Brown Esquire.

To MRS MORSON, [31 AUGUST 1850]

Mention in next.

Sending her instructions about two new inmates for the Home.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 31 AUGUST 1850

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street.

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday Evening | Thirty First August, 1850.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I this afternoon saw four girls—attendant at the Field Lane Ragged School—whom I think we may try. I am not sanguine about them all (if I am, in any strong sense of the word, about any of them) but I think they represent a class, fairly, and are worth the experiment. They all appear pretty strong and healthy. The youngest is 15; the eldest "going on", as she says, "for 19".

I promised to take two, Ellen Glyn and Emma Spencer; and have sent the necessary instructions to Mrs. Morson about the clothes &c., with the tidings that she may expect them on Wednesday afternoon. They have both been in Clerkenwell Workhouse. Both are terribly destitute and wretched. Each assured me, separately, that she in no sense belonged to the class from whom the greater part of our inmates have been taken. I cannot say that I quite believe this, but I have no other reason to doubt it, than the suspicion which their faces awaken within me. One is 17; the other 15. I don't know, from their stories, how they very well could have been less wretched than they are. Neither has been in prison.

I thought it best—that they might attach due value to the Home—not to promise the two of whom I am now going to write, that they would be taken. I said I would represent their cases to you, and I hoped you might think it well to try them, but could not answer for it. One of these, is Charlotte Glyn, the sister of Ellen, long in attendance on a dying mother (the teacher has constantly seen her there) and now occupied in waiting for this mother's release by Death from a most forlorn and abject state. I did not think it well to ask this girl the question I usually put. It is probable that what I doubt in the other cases, may be true in hers.

The last of these unpromised two, is Mary Anne Wilson: a desolate creature without father or mother. This is she who is "going on for 19". She answered me plainly, and said she had been about the streets for a year. I believe she told me the whole truth. I should like to give her a trial, in consequence. She would be a robust strong girl, after a little regular food and shelter.

I arranged with the teacher that in taking the two accepted ones to the Home on Wednesday, she should ask Mrs. Morson if the other two were to be received; and, if Mrs. Morson said "Yes", she should bring back their clothes. Therefore, if you object to them for any reason, perhaps you will tell Mrs. Morson so, before Wednesday. If you try these two, as well as the two first, I think you will give the Ragged-School class of objects, a very reasonable trial indeed.

As I am going back to Broadstairs tomorrow morning, I write all this long rigmarole in order that the business may be all arranged as if I were here.

The Raven sends you his duty. He says (with a respectful croak) that if all the people who were attentive to the Nepaulese were like you, he should have nothing to remark upon.[†1] But he must take the liberty (he adds) of considering you as a very different person indeed, in all things, from the crowd of their admirers. He hopes you may have read an article called The Paper Mill.[†2]

My regards to Mr. and Mrs. Brown.

Ever dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts. I trust I shall be able to get to Shepherd's Bush next Thursday, about mid-day.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 31 AUGUST 1850

MS Dickens House.

Office of Household Words | Saturday Thirty First August 1850.

My Dearest Georgy

I write these hasty—&c &c—to say that Forster is not coming. Consequently if Fred is (which I suppose you know) he may have the Pump Room.

Affectionately Ever

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Hogarth.

To DANIEL MACLISE, 31 AUGUST 1850*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Broadstairs | Saturday Thirty First August | 1850.

My Dear Mac. I am going down again tomorrow morning (having come[†1] up today), and should be delighted if you would go down with me. Forster will be there, and you could, if so dispoged, return with him on Tuesday Evening.[†2]

What do you say?

If you are not at home when I send this, you can either meet me tomorrow morning, on board the Margate boat which leaves London Bridge Wharf at 8 (breakfast aboard), or if you will send me a word round here, any time this evening, I will call for you in a cab about ¼ past 7.

Ever affectionately

CD.

Kate's love.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 31 AUGUST 1850

Mention in Ernest Dawson catalogue No. 101; dated Devonshire Terrace, 31 Aug 50.

September

To MRS CHARLES DICKENS, 3 SEPTEMBER 1850

MS British Museum. Address: Mrs. Charles Dickens | 1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park | London.

Broadstairs | Tuesday Third September | 1850.

My Dearest Kate.

I enclose a few lines from Georgy, and write these to say that I purpose being home at some time on Thursday, but I cannot say precisely when, as it depends on what work I do tomorrow. Yesterday, Charles Knight, White, Forster, Charley, and I, walked to Richborough Castle and back. Knight dined with us afterwards, and the Whites, the Bicknells, and Mrs. Gibson came in, in the evening and played Vingt et un. [†a]Forster was in a tip top state of amiability, but I think I never heard him half so loud. (!) He really, after the heat of the walk, so disordered me that by no process I could possibly try, could I get to sleep afterwards. At last, I gave it up as a bad job, and walked about the house 'till 5—paying Georgina a visit, and getting her up for company. I was just as I was that night at Geneva. But I tumbled out again at half past 7 this morning, and tumbled into the sea.[†a]

Having no news, I must tell you a story of Sydney. The children, Georgy, and I, were out in the garden on Sunday evening (by the bye, I made a beautiful passage down, and got to Margate a few minutes after one) when I asked Sydney if he would go to the Railroad and see if Forster was coming. As he answered very boldly, Yes, I opened the garden gate. Upon which he set off, alone, as fast as his legs would carry him; and being pursued, was not overtaken until he was through the Lawn House Archway, when he was still going on at full speed—I can't conceive where. Being brought back in triumph, he made a number of fictitious starts, for the sake of being overtaken again, and we made a regular game of it. At last when he and Ally had run away,—instead of running after them, we came into the garden, shut the gate, and crouched down on the ground. Presently, we heard them come back and say to each other with some alarm, "Why, the gate's shut, and they are all gone!" Ally began in a dismayed way to cry out, but the Phenomonon, shouting "Open the gate!" sent an enormous stone flying into the garden (among our heads) by way of alarming the establishment. I thought it a wonderful piece of character, shewing great readiness of resource. He would have fired a perfect battery of stones—or very likely have broken the pantry window, I think—if we hadn't let him in.

They are all in great force, and send their loves. They are all much excited with the expectation of receiving you on Friday—and would start me off to fetch you, now, if I would go.

Our train on Friday will be halfpast 12. I have spoken to Georgy about the partridges, and hope we may find some.

Ever my Dearest Kate | Most affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 3 SEPTEMBER 1850

MS Lytton Papers.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Tuesday Third September 1850.

My Dear Sir Edward.

I have had the long contemplated talk with Forster about the Play,[†1] and write to assure you that I shall be delighted to come down to Knebworth, and do Bobadil or anything else, provided it would suit your convenience to hold the great Dramatic Festival in the last week of October. The concluding number of Copperfield will prevent me from leaving here, until Saturday the 26th. of that month. If I were at my own disposal, I hope I need not say I should be at yours.

Forster will tell you with what men we could do the Play, and what laurels we would propose to leave for the gathering of new aspirants, of whom I hope you have a reasonable stock in your part of the country.

Do you know Mary Boyle—the Hon. Mary—daughter of the old admiral?[†2] Because she is the very best actress I ever saw, off the stage—and immeasurably better than a great many I have seen on it. I have acted with her[†3] in a country house in Northamptonshire, and am going to do so again, next November. If you know,[†4] I think she would be more than pleased to play; and by giving her something good in a farce, we could get her to do Mrs. Kitely. In that case, my little sister in law would "go on" for the second lady, and you could do without actresses—besides giving the thing a particular grace and interest.

But may be you know nothing about the said Mary? And in that case, I should like to know what you would think of doing.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

If we could get Mary Boyle, we would do Used Up[†1]—which is a delightful piece—as the farce.

To CHARLES KNIGHT, 4 SEPTEMBER 1850

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, July 1983; dated Broadstairs Wednesday Night, 4 Sep 50.

As [he is] going up by an early express next day CD hopes to meet Knight over a cigar on Saturday or Sunday evening.[†2] About Mr. Devlin[†3] I cannot say that I derive a comfortable impression of him from his note or that I think him easy to be hopefully assisted. But I am almost ashamed of building up any opinion on such slight premises. He writes about his books,[†4] rather as if he saw his letter in it. Is it so,—or am I a Beast whom Begging Letter Writers have made, out of a Beautiful Prince?

Let us say Saturday, unless you object.

Ever My Dear Knight | Cordially Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, [?5 SEPTEMBER 1850]*

MS Huntington Library. Date: between 1848 and 1851 on handwriting; during those years the only period when Catherine remained at Devonshire Terrace without CD, Georgina and the children was after the birth of Dora, 16 Aug 50; 5 Sep the only Thursday when CD was in London (see To Miss Coutts, 6 Sep) between 16 Aug and 6 Sep, when he brought Catherine to Broadstairs.

Devonshire Terrace | Thursday Afternoon

My Dearest Georgy. I have run up here before dinner, and find Kate looking greatly fatter, rosier, and better. The Leeches want to come into a Lodging for a month. Will you look round about, tomorrow, and see what there is? I can't make out from him, neither can Kate from her, whether he is coming down in advance tomorrow. If he be (not very likely, I think) we must give him some dinner. Therefore have steak enough, in case, and an extra morsel of Fish.

Ever Affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Hogarth.

To SIR ROBERT CAMPBELL,[†1] [?6 SEPTEMBER 1850]

Mention in To Miss Coutts, 6 Sep 50 and perhaps written the same day.

Thanking him for his kindness[†2] and saying that he would call on him in a fortnight.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 6 SEPTEMBER 1850

MS Morgan Library.

Broadstairs | Friday Evening, Sixth September | 1850.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I was in town yesterday, or I should have written to you.

Anticipating the possibility of your being away from home, I had told Mrs. Morson that if she did not hear from you to the contrary, she should inform the Ragged School teacher when she brought the two promised girls, that the two unpromised were accepted. Therefore there was no hitch in the matter, in any case.

I shall now be obliged to remain here without going to town, until I shall have got through the next Copperfield. I have written to Sir Robert Campbell to thank him for his kindness, and to say that I shall have the honor of calling on him in a fortnight. I have thanked him, of course, for his courtesy expressed through you;—I never thank you, for all your recollections of me; they are so many.

It would be a great thing for all of us, if more who are powerfully concerned with Education, thought, as you do, of the imaginative faculty. Precisely what you say in your note, is always in my mind, in that connexion. The three best houses for childrens' books, are Arthur Hall, Paternoster Row—Grant and Griffiths Saint Paul's Churchyard—Darton & Co. Holborn Hill.[†1] Tegg of Cheapside,[†2] also published a charming collection of stories, called The Child's Fairy Library[†3]—in which I had great delight on the Voyage to America. I have begged my printers to see whether the Houses I have mentioned, publish Catalogues. They doubt whether the usages of "The Trade" apply to these little books; but if there be such things, they will get them for me, and I will immediately send them on to you.

Charley has grown two inches since the receipt of your message relative to his commander in chief. He is as brown as any boatman here, and goes back to Eton tomorrow week.

Will you tell me, at your leisure, whether I shall try to get a number of little books for you to select from—and when?

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

Yours Miss Burdett Coutts.

To W. H. WILLS, 8 SEPTEMBER 1850

MS Huntington Library.

Broadstairs | Sunday Eighth September | 1850.

My Dear Wills.

I send you the beginning of our joint article on Cumming[†4] Bruce's theme.[†5] I have endeavoured to make it picturesque, and to leave the ground open for you. I return your notes. You are wrong about the £45 in a day.[†6] I have stated it as I understand the fact to have been.

I don't like the name I have given the subject. What do you think of "The Fate of Wills, in England" instead? Or something of that sort? If you will send the proof to me when you have done, I will try to put a few lines at the end, so as to wind up with an effect.[†7] I think we shall make a great hit with the subject.

The diplomacy,[†1] splendid. I should like to begin that, with a Sketch of an aristocratic attaché and so forth. I know the reality very well, having seen a good deal of it abroad.

Horne spoke to me—wrote to me, I mean—about the Steam Plough,[†2] and I meant to have called your attention to it, but forgot it. You have done quite right.

The parcel is a clean set of curtains for the office windows, when wanted, and the glass-cloths we bought.

Will you tell Nall[†3] to receive and pay for, two dozen champagne and two dozen claret? They will come in cases, and had better be put in the top room.

The 14th. of October, impossible.[†4] I am afraid I shall not be available for the 26th. either, having made a pledge to Bulwer.[†5] But the event may not come off. I can't say, yet.

—Looking back to your letter, I observe that you speak of my letting you have "the first article". You understand, I suppose, that we agreed I should send you the opening of the first article for you to go on with?[†6]

I am very glad to hear of the Edinburgh man again.

Faithfully Always

CD.

Even Paxton[†7] must be second-fiddle to the Ecclesiastical subject, in case you do perceive there, a divided duty.[†8] Remember me to him, with congratulations.

To W. H. WILLS, 12 SEPTEMBER 1850*

MS Huntington Library.

Broadstairs | Thursday Twelfth September | 1850.

My Dear Wills. I sent back the parcel as you desired—I, 25,[†9] train—addressed to you in Wellington Street—to be called for, at the London Bridge Station.

I now enclose three letters. Two refer (as I take it) to the H.W. If you could enquire about the third for me, and should think it a really good case, I am good for three pounds if you like—that is myself one, and from two funds I hold, two.[†10]

I have small faith in young Jerrold, but, if it be necessary to engage anyone—I mean if Hogarth does not do it himself, which he unquestionably must have the alternative of undertaking or declining—I don't object to his being tried.[†1] But don't speak to him until you have communicated with me once more.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 13 SEPTEMBER 1850

MS Morgan Library.

Broadstairs | Thirteenth September 1850.

My Dear Miss Coutts. Not being able (on account of my work) to go to town when the last Committee Day came round, and knowing you to be away too, I told Mrs. Morson not to call the usual meeting, but to write to me, and send me the papers. I enclose the book. I have added (at her request) £5 for petty cash, to the total, and paid it.[†2] I am sorry to say that the Ragged School girls seem (on her report) desperately unpromising. If they fail, we shall have tried 'em—and made an end of 'em!

Miss Payne, their teacher, addresses the enclosed to you, and sends it to me to forward. I am afraid you will not find it agreeably expressed—she seems to me to be always blowing a shrill set of spiritual Pan's pipes—but she is earnest, though bitterly in want of sound teaching for the office of teacher.

I have requested Bradbury and Evans, if they can get a quantity of those little books from "the Trade", to send them, for your inspection, to Stratton Street.

In about a week or so, when I hope to have finished the current Copperfield, I shall come to town for a day, and carry a severe countenance into the Bush.

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS GORE,[†3] 13 SEPTEMBER 1850

Extract in N, II, 232, from catalogue source; dated Broadstairs, 13 Sep 50. ([aa]Facsimile in Rev. Dr Scott and Samuel Davey, A Guide to the Collector of Historical Documents, Literary Manuscripts and Autograph Letters, 1891, p. 46.

In these inaccessible fastnesses (where we live chiefly on sea weed and turtles' eggs), your letter arrived yesterday; being cast into the valley of certain diamond-merchants who frequent the heights above, and snow our letters on us in the diamond-season.[†1] I see no prospect of emerging from this solitude (where I am finishing my book) until the end of October, but your kind remembrance is pleasant to me and to all of us, and I thank you very much—[a]Though I am not at all clear about the soundness of your inference concerning my children; for if this sort of thing (I mean the unconscious-stranger[†2] sort of thing) goes on much longer, I think I shall run away, and bestow my society on my friends.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS[a]

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 15 SEPTEMBER 1850*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street | Piccadilly | London.

Broadstairs | Sunday Fifteenth September 1850.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

The consternation into which I was thrown by the arrival of that Registered Letter—not imagining you would take that trouble for such a purpose—defies description.

I would suggest the admission of Miss Payne on regular visiting days—perhaps a little oftener—but not to teach in any way. Miss P to be pledged to abstinence.

Mary Anne Wilson, the girl you mean, told me (which none of the others did) The Truth; I mean the whole Truth. Therefore, notwithstanding her Visage, I have hopes of her. I was struck by her manner of doing so, which was

GOOD.[†3]

(I put that in a line by itself, for emphasis)

You have received, I hope, a quantity of childrens'[†4] books for examination.

Dear Miss Coutts | Ever Faithfully Yours

CD.

To THOMAS BEARD, [15 SEPTEMBER 1850]

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | Morning Herald office | Shoe Lane | London. PM Ramsgate Sep 15 1850.

T.B. Your continued absence from the Stairs, occasions great surprise and consternation. Come, and all will be forgiven. September is a fine month. October also. Why do you try the feelings of your friends by prolonged absence?

To JOHN FORSTER, [15 SEPTEMBER 1850]

Extract in F, VI, vii, 555. Date: 15 Sep 50 according to Forster.

I have been tremendously at work these two days; eight hours at a stretch yesterday, and six hours and a half to-day, with the Ham and Steerforth chapter,[†1] which has completely knocked me over—utterly defeated me!

To MISS MARY BOYLE,[†2] 16 SEPTEMBER 1850

MS Berg Collection.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Monday Night Sixteenth September | 1850.

My Dear Miss Boyle.

Your letter having arrived in time for me to write a line by the evening post, I come out of a paroxysm of Copperfield, to say that I am perfectly delighted to read it, and to know that we are going to act together, in that merry party.[†3]

We dress "Every Man" in Queen Elizabeth's time. The acting copy is much altered from the old play, but we still smooth down phrases when needful.[†4] I don't remember any one that is changed. Georgina says she can't describe the dress Mrs. Kitely has worn before. I shall be in town on Saturday, and will then get Maclise to make me a little sketch of it, carefully explained, which I will post to you. At the same time, I will send you the book. After consideration of Farces, it has occurred to me (old Ben being, I dare say, rare;[†5] but, I do know, rather heavy here and there) that Mrs. Inchbald's Animal Magnetism, which we have often played,[†6] will "go" with a greater laugh than anything else. That book I will send you on Saturday too. You will find your part (Constance, I think its called,[†7] but it's a waiting maid) a most admirable one; and I have seen people laugh at the piece, until they hung over the front of the boxes, like ripe fruit. It's a costume-piece. You may dress the part, to please yourself, after reading it. We[†8] wear powder. I will take care (bringing a theatrical hairdresser down, for the company) of your Wig.—!!!

We will rehearse the two pieces, when we go down—or at least everything with which you have to do—over and over again. You will find "my company" so well used to it, and so accustomed to consider it a grave matter of business, as to make it easy. I am now awaiting the French-books,[†1] with an eye to Rockingham—and hope to report of that too, when I write you on Saturday.

My Dear Miss Boyle | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Mary Boyle.

To AUGUSTUS EGG,[†2] 16 SEPTEMBER 1850

Mention in To Frank Stone, 16 Sep 50.

To DANIEL MACLISE, 16 SEPTEMBER 1850*

MS Yale University Library.

Devonshire Terrace.—Lord, look here! | I mean Broadstairs! | Monday Night, Sixteenth September | 1850.

My Dear Mac.

Will you do me a favor—for Bulwer's theatricals? I want to send Miss Boyle—Amateur, who plays one part—Georgina t'other(!)—a little sketch of Mrs. Kitely's dress; with colors indicated, and something of that Bobadil-red, carried through it here and there. I hope to be in town on Friday, and will come to you. Will you have it for me—such a thing as you can do in a minute—and I will send it her, by that day's post, in a letter. She is anxious to be picturesque. Perhaps you will indicate Georgy for me too? With a little notion in it of she being maid, and Mrs. Kitely wife.

Will you dine somewhere, on Friday, if I shall have done my number and come as I expect?

Best remembrances | Ever Faithfully

CD

To FRANK STONE, 16 SEPTEMBER 1850*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Broadstairs | Monday Night | Sixteenth September 1850.

My Dear P.[†3]

From a paroxysm of Copperfield, I emerge to let you know that I write to Egg by this post, and propose Monday the 7th. of October, for the Establishment of this here High-Art Studio. Come on!

And perhaps you haven't heard—but you will—of your being wanted for Downright,[†1] towards the end of that month, at a country house, under your old Manager! If we are not Jolly, it shall not be our fault. That's all I have to say.

Ever Cordially

CD.

Lady Actresses!

Bridget—Miss Hogarth![†2]

Young Lady (in Animal Mag:)—Miss Hogarth!!

To W. H. BROUGHAM,[†3] 17 SEPTEMBER 1850

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, Nov 1890; MS 1 p.; dated Broadstairs, 17 Sep 50. Summary in Ellis & Elvery General Catalogue, 1894; addressed W. H. Brougham; dated 17 Sep 50.

Putting off an engagement. I have scarcely leisure at present, for ordinary correspondence.

To W. H. WILLS, 17 SEPTEMBER 1850

MS Huntington Library.

Broadstairs | Tuesday September Seventeenth | 1850

My Dear Wills. I am extremely sorry to hear about your brain—but if you suppose that our Number went down, because the Illustration was first, and wouldn't have gone down if the Forgery had been first,[†4] I think the disease must be, the gigantic strength of your imagination.

Youll[[sic]] find Broadstairs do you more good, than anything could.

I am in that tremendous paroxysm of Copperfield—having my most powerful effect in all the Story, on the Anvil—that you might as well ask me to manufacture a Cannon seventy four pounder, as to finish the Turtle,[†5] or do the Junk,[†6] or do anything NOW.[†7] But I will be at the Office, please God, at eleven on Friday Morning; and if we have, as I fear we must have, in default of anything else, the second Will article in the No. I will write the introduction then and there.[†1] I have arranged to go over the asylum for Idiots,[†2] that day, which ought to afford a fine description.

I will look over Hints on Emergencies,[†3] with the view you suggest, if it comes.

You may tell Mr. Field that the only word in that passage which he did not use, is "slow" as applied to "Justices". I put that in, to express what his manner expressed. But, that if he means to say he didn't mention about "while they were looking over the Acts of Parliament", he means to say the thing which is not.[†4] Lemon's recollection, and Leech's, be my judge! There would be no objection to a facetious Chip about the "slow", but what Mr. Field did say, shall not be unsaid—can't be.[†5]

I enclose you, from a correspondent, a Post Office order for a Sovereign in favor of that Westminster Reclamatory Institution whereof we have treated.[†6] Also a communication from Mr. Parry[†7]—another name for Blight, and Locust.

Ever Faithfully

CD

To JOHN LEECH, 18 SEPTEMBER 1850

MS Benoliel Collection.

Broadstairs | Eighteenth September 1850.

Recreant!

Here are three soundly-useful letters.[†1] I could write letters ad infinitum, but they would be merely social introductions to expensive people who could render no real service in such a case.

Brush up the Marquess!!! Tell Lemon when you see him, Animal Mag[†2] is the order of the day.

Ever Faithfully

CD

To CAPTAIN E. E. MORGAN, 18 SEPTEMBER 1850*

MS Mr and Mrs Anthony C. Clarkson.

Broadstairs, Kent | Eighteenth September 1850.

My Dear Morgan.

The bearer of this letter, Mr. Leigh,[†3] the brother of a literary friend of mine, proceeds to America with his family, with the idea of settling on land in Illinois. He knows nobody in the States, and has heard that he might—just by remote possibility—be taken in, if he acted without knowing what he was about.[†4] If you can direct him (and I believe nobody can better) I shall feel very heartily obliged to you.

Mrs. Dickens and her sister unite with me in kindest remembrances to yourself and Mrs. Morgan.

Cordially Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Captain Morgan.

To DANIEL MACLISE, 19 SEPTEMBER 1850

Extract in Stan V. Henkels catalogue, Mar 1925; MS 1 p.; dated Broadstairs, 19 Sep 50; salutation "My dear Mac"; signed initials.

I don't know whether as a Painter, you would care to see what I am going to see at Highgate tomorrow, an asylum of Idiots.

To MR THORPE,[†1] 19 SEPTEMBER 1850*

MS Fales Collection, New York University Library.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Nineteenth September 1850.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his Compliments to Mr. Thorpe. He begs to thank Mr. Thorpe for his communication, but has no interest in the matter.

To MISS MARY BOYLE, 20 SEPTEMBER 1850

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Friday Twentieth September 1850.

My Dear Miss Boyle.

I enclose you the book of Animal Magnetism, and the book of Every Man in his Humour. Also a sketch by Mr. Maclise of a correct and picturesque Mrs. Kitely. Mr. Forster is Kitely—Mr. Lemon, Brainworm—Mr. Leech, Master Matthew—Mr. Jerrold, Master Stephen—Mr. Stone, Downright. Kitely's dress is a very plain purple gown like a blue-coat boy's.[†2] Downright's dress is also very sober; chiefly brown and grey. All the rest of us are very bright. I am flaming red.

Georgina will write you about your colors and hers, in Animal Magnetism. The gayer, the better. I am the Doctor—in black with red stockings. Mr. Lemon (an excellent Actor) the Valet—as well as I remember in blue and yellow, and a chintz waistcoat. Mr. Leech is the Marquess—and Mr. Egg the one-eyed servant.

What do you think of doing Animal Magnetism as the last piece (we may play three in all, I think) at Rockingham? Is your brother[†3] equal to the Valet, and would he do it? If so, we might make Quin[†4] do the one-eyed servant—and beat up, with Mrs. Watson, for a Marquess. Will you tell me what you think of this, addressed to Broadstairs.

I have not heard from Bulwer again—I dare say I have crossed a letter from him by coming up today—but I have every reason to believe that the last week in October is the time.

Ever Very faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

This is quite a Managerial letter,—but I write with all manner of appointments and business-discussions going on about me—having my pen on the paper, and my eye on "Household Words"—my head on Copperfield—and my ear nowhere particularly.

P.S. I will let you know about A Day after the Wedding[†1]—I have sent for the book—on Monday.

To SPENCER T. HALL,[†2] 21 SEPTEMBER 1850*

MS Mr F. Atkinson.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Twenty First September 1850

Dear Sir

Allow me to thank you for the book you have so kindly sent me,[†3] and to add that I shall have great pleasure in becoming a subscriber to your proposed volume.[†4]

Your faithful servant

CHARLES DICKENS

Spencer T. Hall Esquire.

To WILLIAM BROWN, 22 SEPTEMBER 1850*

MS Morgan Library. Address: W. Brown Esquire | Miss Burdett Coutts | Holly Lodge | Highgate | near | London.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Twenty Second September 1850.

My Dear Sir.

Unfortunately I did not receive your note—having been away from here, and in town—until last night. But even if I had received it in due course, I should have been unable, I am sorry to say, to avail myself of the pleasure it proposed to me, as I was rigid with Copperfield, on Thursday, from head to foot.

Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

W. Brown Esquire.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 22 SEPTEMBER 1850

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Holly Lodge | Highgate | near London.

Broadstairs. | Twenty Second September 1850.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I have told Mr. Brown how I came not to answer his kind note on your behalf, in due course.

I went to Shepherd's Bush yesterday, where I found Mrs. Morson very hopeful—the Ragged School Girls apparently improving—and decidedly much changed for the better, in their appearance. Before going out there, I went to the Office of the Commissioners of Sewers in Greek Street, and delivered a most pathetic and moving address on the subject of the Drains—at which the Surveyor was so much touched, that he engaged to go out there, immediately, and then "communicate with" me, here. Notwithstanding the vague nature of this repentant promise, I have hopes that we shall shortly (though not, I am afraid, without incurring some expence) remove that nuisance. At any rate, as the affected Surveyor said, "The premises must be relieved". And what kind of relief is proposed, I will let you know, after I have been "communicated with".

As I shall soon be sitting down to my final wrestle with Copperfield,[†1] and as it takes some time, I am afraid I shall not be able to attend at Shepherd's Bush, on the next regular Committee Day. Would you wish the Committee to be holden on that day? Perhaps you will let me know. Mrs. Morson asked me, yesterday, and I told her I would ask you.

Mr. Charles Knight considered it expedient to withhold the greater part of your gift to that Mr. Develin[†2] (after consulting with me) until he was sure of its doing him some good: otherwise, he had made up his mind to return it to me. But Mr. Develin is now going to America; and (although I find it difficult to understand how that can do anybody good) we have descried hopefulness in giving him the rest. I mention this, in case he should write to thank you, and you should wonder why he does so, now, instead of long since.

Ever dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To WILLIAM NICHOLAS,[†3] 22 SEPTEMBER 1850*

MS Yale University Library.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Twenty Second September 1850.

Sir.

I regret to say that I had too much to do, and too many appointments to keep, in London yesterday morning, to be able to get out to Highgate by 12 o'Clock. I therefore very reluctantly abandoned the attempt. My visit must now stand over until my return to London in November; but I will not fail to communicate with you, then.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

William Nicholas Esquire.

To THE REV. EDWARD TAGART,[†1] 22 SEPTEMBER 1850

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Sunday Twenty Second September | 1850.

My Dear Tagart.

I have read the story, carefully, and am sorry to say it will not do for Household Words. I need not say to you,[†2] that something more is wanted in such a Narrative, than its literal truth—that it is in the very nature of such Truths as are treated of here, to require to be told, artistically, and with great discretion. Now, the young man's illness appears to me to be very common-place—ditto, the proposal of the married gentleman to the heroine—ditto, Helen Winslow's narrative, in the last degree. In the last-named young lady, I discern a diluted remembrance of a little book called (if I remember right) the Chimes; and the heroine's dread about her own child, was shadowed out, I think, in the same little Volume. On the whole, our readers would decidedly think that there is nothing in it to excuse its length. All this, I say to you,[†2] leaving you to deliver it, "after what flourish your nature will",[†3] to the Author;—to whom I entreat you to report me kindly, though quite decidedly.

I looked at that house at North End,[†4] and was much pleased with it. The grounds, delightful.

Mrs. Dickens and Georgy unite with me in best remembrances to Mrs. Tagart and all your house.[†5]

Ever Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

The Reverend Edward Tagart.

To MISS MARY BOYLE, 24 SEPTEMBER 1850*

MS Morgan Library.

Broadstairs | Tuesday Twenty Fourth September | 1850.

My Dear Miss Boyle.

All is going on, briskly, at Knebworth. I receive constant reports of the preparations. Mrs. Kitely's dress, extremely good (I will get one of the "County Men" who are to do the small parts, into Canary Color) but won't Lisette's color (lemon) be too like Mrs. Kitely's (canary)??? I ask this, in mild and timid ignorance.

—As to Rockingham. The Marquess[†6] is very important, and moreover his words (to a Novice) are not easy to learn (having no coherence in them) and his "business" (like the business of the whole piece) is enormous. We must consider what to do.

Your brother we will book. And I will send Mrs. Watson Quin's part.[†1] With a patch over his eye, and a lame leg, he ought to be brilliant!

I know the two pieces your brother mentions—both very good—but I have a piece in my mind that I once saw done at the Haymarket; of which I don't remember the plot—or the story—or the situations—or anything whatever—except that I have a general impression of Webster and Celeste at a table, in some easy thing that had a Melodramatic interest in it, (I don't think more than 3 parts) and was very picturesque. It may have been some anecdote of the French Revolution—I don't know—I think a pistol was fired in it—perhaps it was only a bell rung—I can't say. They send me word from the Theatre, on these lively recollections of mine, that the piece was called Louison,[†2] and was only played once. Madame Celeste has the Manuscript, and will be in town next week. I have written to her,[†3] to give it to me then.

Animal Magnetism will utterly kill anything else in the Laughing Way; and it requires, besides, fresh spirits in the Audience. Therefore I think if we could get something with an interest, between A day after the Wedding, and that—say in this order

Day after the Wedding
Louison
Animal Magnetism

—we should present each piece at an advantage. Don't you think so?

I have a wild dream that in this mysterious piece (one scene, one act) somebody was hid somewhere on account of something. But I can't say who, or why, or when, or on what occasion—and very likely I shall find that nothing of the sort is in it!

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Boyle.

To MARK LEMON, 24 SEPTEMBER 1850*

MS Houghton Library, Harvard.

Broadstairs, Twenty Fourth September | 1850.

My Dear Lemon.

I have no doubt that must be the Piece. If you would kindly take so much trouble for me, I should like to have it, if I can. For, although I remember nothing about it, I have an otherwise incorrigible idea that it would suit my purpose. Pray express all that is polite from me to Madame.

Ever affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

Mark Lemon Esquire

To THE HON. MRS RICHARD WATSON, 24 SEPTEMBER 1850

MS Huntington Library.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Twenty Fourth September 1850.

My Dear Mrs. Watson.

Coming out of a paroxysm of Copperfield, into a condition of temporary and partial consciousness, I plunge into histrionic duties, and hold enormous correspondence with Miss Boyle—between whom and myself, the most portentous packets are continually passing.

I send you a piece we purpose playing last, at Rockingham, which "My Company" played in London, Scotland, Manchester, Liverpool, and I don't know where else. It is one of the most ridiculous things ever done, and I have seen the people hang over the boxes with laughter, like over-ripe fruit. We purpose, as I have said, playing it last. Why do I send it to you?

Because there is an excellent part (played in my troupe by George Cruikshank) for your brother in it—Jeffrey. With a black patch over his eye, and a lame leg, he would be charming—noble! If he is come home, give him my love and tell him so. If he is not come home, do me that favor when he does come.

And add that I have a Wig for him, belonging to the part, which I have an idea of sending to the Exposition of '51, as a triumph of human ingenuity!

I am The Doctor—Miss Boyle, Lisette—Georgy, the other little woman.

We have nearly arranged our "Bill" for Rockingham. We shall want one more reasonably good actor, besides your brother and Miss Boyle's—to play the Marquess in this piece. Do you know a Being, endowed by Nature, with the requisite qualities?

There are some things in the next Copperfield that I think better than any that have gone before.[†1] After I have been believing such things with all my heart and soul—two results always ensue. First, I can't write plainly to the eye. Second, I can't write sensibly to the mind.

So, Copperfield is to blame, and I am not, for this wandering note. And if you like it, you'll forgive me?

With my affectionate remembrances to Watson.

Ever Dear Miss[†2] Watson | Very faithfully Yours

CD.

(I find I am not equal to the flourish)

To HENRY COLE, 25 SEPTEMBER 1850

MS Morgan Library.

Broadstairs | Twenty Fifth September 1850.

My Dear Sir

I am truly sorry that I didn't see you when you called here. On the first day, I was in London; on the second, at Ramsgate.

Your proof[†1] has greatly interested me. I shall be happy to "join the Union",[†2] and I am now at work on a paper for Household Words,[†3] which I hope may help the question in a taking manner.

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Henry Cole Esquire.

To FREDERICK DICKENS, 26 SEPTEMBER 1850

MS Benoliel Collection.

Broadstairs | Twenty Sixth September 1850.

My Dear Frederick

It gives me extraordinary pain to refuse you anything, but I cannot make up my mind to be security for the performance of so extensive a contract.[†4] I am uneasy in the lightest thought of bequeathing such an obligation to those of these nine children who may outlive me, if I bequeath anything. The responsibility would be most oppressive to me, always impending over my head. I cannot undertake it.

I have an invitation from Bulwer to you, to come down to Knebworth on the 26th. of October, and act there on the 28th. and 30th. in his Hall. It is only an hour and a half from London. Your charges, of course, are my concern.

Affectionately Ever

CD

To JOHN LEECH, 26 SEPTEMBER 1850

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: John Leech Esquire | Notting Hill Crescent | Notting Hill | near | London.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Twenty Sixth September 1850.

My Dear Leech.

I enclose you a note from Bulwer. Please answer it, addressed

Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton Bart.
Knebworth
Hertfordshire.

It is proposed to play twice—Monday night the 28th. and Wednesday night the 30th. of October; going down on Saturday the 26th. (it is only an hour and a half by Railway) and rehearsing that night.

Faithfully Ever

CD

To MESSRS COUTTS & CO., [26 SEPTEMBER 1850]

Mention in next.

To T. J. SERLE, 26 SEPTEMBER 1850

MS Mr Peter Brandt.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Twenty Sixth September 1850.

My Dear Serle.

I am very busy here, and not likely (I think) to be in London before November. But I write to Coutts's by this post, requesting them to send you the Elton account.

Ever Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

T. J. Serle Esquire.

To FRANK STONE, 26 SEPTEMBER 1850*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Twenty Sixth September 1850.

My Dear Stone.

I enclose you a note from Bulwer. Please answer it, addressed
Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton Bart.
Knebworth
Hertfordshire.

It is proposed to play twice—Monday night the 28th. Octr. and Wednesday night the 30th.—going down on Saturday the 26th. (it is only an hour and a half by Railway) and rehearsing that night.

Faithfully Ever
CD

To THE MAYOR OF DERBY,[†1] 28 SEPTEMBER 1850

MS County Borough of Derby. Address: His Honor The Mayor of Derby.

Broadstairs, Kent | Twenty Eighth September 1850.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to the Mayor of Derby, and regrets that his avocations render it quite impossible for him to accept the invitation of the Derby Mechanics' Institution,[†2] which the Mayor has done him the honor to forward.

To JOHN MOSS,[†3] 28 SEPTEMBER 1850

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, July 1975; MS (3rd person) 1 p.; dated Broadstairs, 28 Sept 50; addressed John Moss

Regretting that avocations render it quite impossible for him to accept the invitation of the Derby Mechanics' Institution.

To THOMAS A'BECKETT,[†4] [?SEPTEMBER 1850]*

MS (fragment) Mrs à Beckett Opffer. Date: A'Beckett landed in Australia in Jan 51 so the ship (unidentified) probably left about Sep 50.

But I have no doubt you will either hear, at such a place as Silvers[†5] the outfitters, of some passenger in want of such employment, or will find her on board.[†6]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas A'Beckett Esquire.

October

To THOMAS BEARD, 1 OCTOBER 1850

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | Morning Herald Office | Shoe Lane | Fleet Street | London.

Broadstairs | Tuesday First October 1850.

My Dear Beard

I hope the repentant (and inscrutable) Governor[†1] will keep his word and release you. We shall be delighted to see you, and we hope you mean to book yourself for a long holiday.

You will probably find a few "Household Words" here; to wit, Wills and his wife, and Horne and his wife; but we have laid on a Supplementary cottage, and have plenty of room. Egg and Stone will be down on Monday, to keep you company o' Mornings, when I am at work.

Ever My Dear Beard | Affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Beard Esquire.

To W. F. DE CERJAT,[†2] 1 OCTOBER 1850*

MS University of Kentucky Libraries. Address: Favored by the Reverend Chauncey Townshend | William Cerjat Esquire | Lausanne.

Broadstairs, Kent | First October 1850.

My Dear Cerjat.

I am very desirous to make a particular friend of mine, known to you. I give this note to the Reverend Mr. Townshend, the friend in question, who is staying in Lausanne; in the assurance that both he and you will like me the better for doing so. He has heard me speak of you (and yours) with the regard that is an inseparable part of dear old Switzerland to me, and does not like to be near to you, and strange to you, after that.

He is a gentleman of great attainments, highly distinguished in many ways, and to whom I am much attached. I wish I were at Rosemont, to come down the Hill with him, and ring your bell with my own hand!

Watson and I have threatened, twice, to make a descent on Lausanne. I really begin to think we shall do it, please God, next year. We have been dreadfully in earnest.

Kate and her sister send their loves to Mrs. Cerjat[†3] and all your house. I send mine too, if I may. I am finishing Copperfield here—writing to the Music of the sea—and here are all the nine children, and the rest of the Caravan. We are going to have some Private Theatricals at Watson's early next month,[†1] and the note of preparation[†2] already reaches these quiet regions.[†3]

When I write your name, I have always an association with that night at Martigny[†4] when we walked up and down before the Inn, smoking Cigars, and our party were singing inside.—You remember? Why my memory should select that particular time, I don't know—but it always does.

To COUNT ALFRED D'ORSAY, 1 OCTOBER 1850

MS Comte de Gramont.

Broadstairs, Kent. | 1 Octobre, 1850.

Mon cher Comte D'Orsay.

Je vous envoi ci-enclos, le livre[†5] dont je parlai quand j'eus le grand plaisir de vous revoir, mon cher, a Paris. Il a eté "out of print" ou je vous aurais ecrit il-y-a quelques semaines.

Ah! Que nous avons, souvent, parlé Maclise et moi de vous, et de ce jour la quand nous dinames, chez Oliffe,[†6] avec une societé—tres agreeable sans doubte[†7]—mais qui nous avons donné mille fois au Diable. Il nous parait que nous n'avons dit rien a vous—que nous n'avons exprimé presque rien de notre amitie, de notre amour. Quand je pense à cet homme avec le riban bleu—cet Irlandais maudit!—je le deteste comme un Brigand. Aussi le veillard avec sa maniere courte et sa peruque qui disait des riens toute la soirée. Aussi, meme l'innocent docteur. Mais le bon temps viendra. Jurons diner—aux trois freres par exemple—nous trois seuls (viendrons à Paris, exprès, Maclise et moi) pour causer des jours qui s'ont ecoulés, et, pour soulager nos regrets!—

Je suis fort occupé, en ecrivant le dernier livraison de Copperfield—meilleur (j'espere et je crois) de mes livres, à present. Je vais rester ici, avec madame et toute la famille, jusqua la fin d'Octobre quand nous irons a Knebworth, chez Bulwer. Forster fut ici, hier. Il est extremement gros—extremement fort—extremement bon. Maclise a eté, depuis environ six mois, horriblement oisif; mais tout-a-coup il a commencé travailler toute la journée, depuis 7 heures au Matin, jusqua 5 heures a la Soirée. Il fait un grand tableau (commandé par Colburn,[†8] libraire) de Caxton l'inventeur de l'art d'imprimer.[†1] Il va l'envoyer a l'exposition de 1851 Marotte du Prince, et mort de Brougham.[†2]

Il n'y a point de nouvelles dans cette Ile desolée de Thanet. Je l'aime, neanmois parcequ'elle est tranquille et je puis penser et rever ici, comme un geant. Avant je laissai Londres en Aout, je dinai, un jour, avec Lanny.[†3] Nous parlames beaucoup de vous et nous buvames a votre santé avec dix milles souvenirs. Quand nous nous rencontrons—Maclise, Forster, Lanny, moi—nous parlons toujours de vous. Vous etes toujours dans nos coeurs.

Votre filleul[†4] vous envoit ses devoirs. Il est sauvage et feroce—pas encore civilisé. Sa mere et ma belle soeur, vous envoient milles amities. Elles disent qu'il n'y a presque personne dans le monde qui elles aimaraient tant, revoir. Elles ont raison. Je sens, et je sentirai toujours la meme chose.

Toujours | Mon Ami | Votre tout devoué
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN LEECH, 1 OCTOBER 1850

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: John Leech Esquire | 31 Notting Hill Terrace | Notting Hill | London.

Broadstairs | First October 1850.

My Dear Leech.

Yes. Kate and Georgina are both going—the latter plays, you know. They hope Mrs. Leech[†5] will go too. I understand no strangers will be staying in the house, and that the Dukes, Duchesses, and the like, who come to see the Play will do what the Americans call "clear", after the representation.

Nathan[†6] dresses us. Hadn't you better leave your Master Mathew[†7] dress out for him? I will tell him to send for it within a week and furbish it up a little, as we must be very smart. As the time approaches, will you call there, and look after the Marquess's dress?

Ever Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

John Leech Esquire.

To THE HON. MRS RICHARD WATSON, 1 OCTOBER 1850

MS Huntington Library.

Broadstairs | First October 1850.

My Dear Mrs Watson

I have made minute enquiries into the construction and dimensions of Mr. Hewitt's[†1] Theatre, and I think I now understand it—for the first time. It cannot be used in part, it seems, but must be set up, altogether,—I mean the scenic part—and that is, unhappily, too large for your rooms, being, at the smallest, twenty feet high. In depth and width it would exactly do,—precisely do,—but its height appears to be altogether fatal to any idea of using it at Rockingham. It must be set up as it is made, because what we stage Managers professionally call the "rollers of the cloths"—that is, the piece of wood on which each scene that drops, winds and unwinds itself, requires its own particular support and place. In short it is a perfect little mechanical structure, of which one part cannot be used without another. The different pieces screw and fit like Cabinet-work, and fill a waggon!

In right of my trusteeship for all the strolling actors in England,[†2] I know a good many strange people in the vagabond way, who would do anything in an honest direction to please me. If the worst came to the worst, I think I know three scenes (we should hardly want more) that I last heard of in the Market place at Uxbridge, and which are perpetually travelling about to Fairs and small Theatres—which I could lay hold of, and bring down, to be erected by our own ingenuity. But I think I have a better idea still. One Nathan, in Titchbourne Street Haymarket, a "Costume-Maker" has dressed all my Company's plays—dresses Every Man in His Humour, and Animal Magnetism—and goes to Knebworth with us. He is a Jew, but for a Jew a very respectable man indeed. He has scenery, expressly for rooms and country houses, I know; and it strikes me, all at once, that he would fit you up a little boudoir stage and take it away again, with great ease, very neatly, and at small cost. If you would like to know further about him (which I don't at all assume without hearing from you) I would send him down to you bodily by Railroad, and you could judge for *your*self, and he could judge for *him*self directly. He stands in great awe of my managerial ferocity (of which he has had great experience) and would be as quiet and tractable as any Lamb.

Understand,—when I use the word "Stage", I merely mean a Curtain, scene-lights, and Scenes. Nothing else.

I am turning over all sorts of things in my mind, to see whether Miss Boyle and I couldn't do something particularly applicable to the farmers, on the second night—something in the agricultural line, with a country boy and girl in it.

Ever Dear Miss[†3] Watson | Most Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

I expect Bulwer to emigrate, before his play takes place. He is building a Stage, and taking appalling steps.

To J. W. BLOCKLEY,[†1] 3 OCTOBER 1850*

MS Dickens House. Address: J. W. Blockley Esquire | 35 Gloucester Street | Gloucester Gate | Regents Park | London.

Broadstairs, Kent | Third October 1850.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Blockley and begs, with many thanks, to acknowledge the receipt of Mr. Blockley's obliging note and very pretty song.

Mr. Dickens has also to thank Mr. Blockley for his polite offer of the words of the song. Mr. Dickens cannot have the pleasure of accepting it, as he thinks the title of the work sufficiently referred to, in the opening paper of the first number.[†2]

To MARK LEMON, 5 OCTOBER 1850

MS Benoliel Collection.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Saturday Fifth October 1850.

My Dear Lemon.

This is to enclose the sketch of Georgina's dress, and to say that I propose to rehearse in London, on Friday the 1st. and Saturday the 2nd. of November. As soon as you let me know where the Rehearsals are to take place, I will send round calls to everybody. Get up Jack Humphreys.[†3]

This is also to trouble you with two Commissions, respecting my Northamptonshire Theatricals. First, if you have Louison will you send it me at once, either by post or Railway parcel, according to its size. Secondly, will you take the following trouble on yourself, for the love of your Manager.

Finding our Knebworth Theatre too large for my Northamptonshire friend's rooms—which are ancient and low—it occurred to me the other day that Nathan advertizes Scenery for Amateur plays; and I wrote to Mrs. Watson (my friend's wife) to say that I thought it probable he could fit them up a sufficiently neat little stage. She takes mightily to the notion, and wants Nathan to go down there, next Tuesday if possible—see the place—and consult, and propoge. Said Nathan being ill, perhaps his wife can send his brother or some competent respectable[†4] person. Will you see if it can be done? I write on the enclosed card, how he is to go.

Ever affecy.

CD.

I don't think Leech is coming here at all.

To MRS GASKELL, 6 OCTOBER 1850*

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

Broadstairs, Kent | Sunday Sixth October 1850.

My Dear Mrs. Gaskell.

By some unaccountable omission of mine, I never found out what was written in the envelope of your tale![†1] I never dreamed of its coming from you, and, being extremely occupied on Copperfield, laid it aside until I should have a few days with the Sub Editor of Household Words, for going over Manuscripts.

I need not say that I read it with avidity as soon as I knew it was yours, and that I shall be delighted to have it.

Mrs. Dickens and her sister are much concerned to hear of your indisposition.[†2] They beg me to send you their kindest remembrances.

Dear Mrs. Gaskell | Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To E. J. SAGE,[†3] 6 OCTOBER 1850*

MS Central Library, Stoke Newington.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Sixth October 1850.

Sir,

I have read your letter with gratification and am happy to comply with your request for an autograph.

Faithfully yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. E. J. Sage.

To MISS MARY BOYLE, 7 OCTOBER 1850*

MS Morgan Library.

Broadstairs, Kent | Monday Seventh October 1850.

My Dear Miss Boyle.

I send you now,

LOUISON!!![†4]

I have only received it an hour or so. Consequently, I send it with all the Prompter's absurd mistakes and shortcomings in the copying way. It is not much to read, but I see great capacity in it. The gun, I consider a sure thing. The eating and drinking should go off, even better than the gun. I see you, (in my mind's eye) unable to eat, looking nervously at the place where the Marquis (another Marquis!)[†1] is concealed; and I see myself, as Michel, watching you; and I see a vast amount of Business, over the half fowl and bottle of wine, only to be appreciated, and discerned afar off, by practised actors like ourselves. Also, I behold you with a bright handkerchief on your head, and large ear-rings in your ears—and when I think of myself, in a red cap and with a gunpowdery face (to say nothing of the row outside, which I have a wonderful project for making impressive) I am transported beyond the ignorant Copperfieldian present,[†2] and soar into the Rockinghamian future!

The Prompter is copying the parts. If you will send me back the piece (by return of post, if you can read it so soon) I will send you your part, as soon as I get it. Very likely, the two documents will cross. We can have brilliant rehearsals of Louison in Devonshire Terrace.

Now, about My Grandmother.[†3] I have not the least objection to substitute it for Animal Magnetism, but I am quite confident—have not what Brougham calls the shadow of a shade of a doubt—of its being, in every respect, stupendously inferior, and failing to "go" one twenty thousandth part as well. Besides the excruciating nature of the Dialogue—which makes me feel as if I were being rubbed down with a gigantic Baker's-Rasp—and the hoary-headed jokes, of which the greater part must have been uttered before Old Parr[†4] when he was carried in arms to a dramatic performance in a barn—and must have been then the oldest inhabitants of the worst jest-books—it is not a piece in which Animal spirits can tell at all. Briskness and animal spirits would carry Animal Magnetism anywhere. I am quite sure your brother would feel the part, after rehearsing it. It can be all made so delightfully rapid, and the situations are so wonderfully good! As to my making what Mrs. Malaprop calls "Caparisons",[†5] that wild apprehension can only originate in his modesty; and he cannot[†6] be modest and an actor—so I dismiss it.

Pray let him know what I think about it. I will willingly do the old gentleman (the phrase has quite a diabolical appearance, I find as I write it!) if he be bent, on fresh consideration, on that piece of my Grandmother. But I am certain it will never tell, and can never tell, and never might, could, would, or should, ever tell, like Mrs. Inchbald's farce. I think I can see exactly what can be done with my Grandmother—and I know what can be done with Animal Magnetism—wherefore I stand by the latter, and vote for it with three obstinate cheers.

On the second night at Knebworth, we play Turning the Tables. I send you the book and cast.

You will please—I now become strictly Managerial—to consider yourself "called" for two Rehearsals in London, to wit on the 1st. and 2nd. of November. You are further requested to be "easy in the words" of Mrs. Kitely, Lisette, and Patty Larkins.[†7]

(Signed)
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Mary Boyle.

To G. L. CHESTERTON, [?7 OCTOBER 1850]

Mention in next.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 7 OCTOBER 1850*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Albion Hotel | Ramsgate.

Broadstairs | Monday Seventh October 1850.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I have received a letter from Mr. Chesterton, expressing his very strong and earnest interest in the case of Julia Dye a girl of 18, in prison for the first time, whose sentence will expire this day fortnight. It seems to be a very good case, and well adapted to the Home. I have informed him, in reply, that I have no doubt I may answer for your taking it.

I have been in a state of dense idleness and incapacity since I saw you. This morning I am looking very hard at a blank quire of paper, and trying to persuade myself that I am going to begin Nos. 19 and 20 in earnest. Otherwise I should have come over, instead of sending this note.

With kind remembrances

Dear Miss Coutts | Ever Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To CAPTAIN DAVIES,[†1] 7 OCTOBER 1850*

MS Dickens House.

Broadstairs | Monday Seventh October 1850.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Captain Davies, and takes the liberty of asking if he may be favored with an order empowering himself and two or three friends who are staying with him, to see the North Foreland Light House in the evening.

On applying at the Light House two or three nights ago, Mr. Dickens was informed that he could not be admitted after sunset, without an order from Captain Davies.[†2] He trusts Captain Davies will excuse him therefore, for making this application.

To THE HON. MRS RICHARD WATSON, 8 OCTOBER 1850

MS Huntington Library.

Broadstairs | Tuesday Night | Eighth October 1850.

My Dear Mrs. Watson.

I have a moment, after the receipt of yours and before the going out of the night's post, to say how grieved I feel by what you tell me.

Don't think of our project until you can do so pleasantly, except to remember that I shall make no sort of engagement for the turn of the year, after Christmas, until I know at what time I shall come to you.

At your full convenience and comfort, tell me. I have not the least necessity to know it until you have dismissed this sad care from your mind.[†1]

Believe me, nothing is indifferent to me that moves you. I should be a worse friend, and a more easily made one than I hope I am, else.

Kind regards, | In great haste | Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MARK LEMON, 15 OCTOBER 1850

Text from Unpublished Letters of CD to Mark Lemon, ed. Walter Dexter, 1927, p. 84.

Broadstairs, | Tuesday, Fifteenth October 1850.

My dear Lemon,

Don't unintentionally wrong the Industrious Artist.[†2] He never for a moment represented you as being put out. It was the mistake (which I explained to him) that he thought a joke.

Will you write to Forster for those men's addresses?[†3] I think he knows them.

I am afraid, I must say, of an amateur prompter. I think an actor would be greatly preferable. Besides which, he positively must go on for Formal.[†4] There's no one else.

Ever affectionately yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS MARY BOYLE, 15 OCTOBER 1850*

MS Morgan Library.

Broadstairs, Kent | Tuesday Night | Fifteenth October 1850.

My Dear Miss Boyle.

I am obliged—I fear, possibly at the risk of giving you some inconvenience—to entreat that you will endeavour to be in London for the Rehearsals of the 31st. of this month, and the 1st. of next.[†1] I would not, for a moment, press this request upon you, if only my old own company of well-used people were concerned; but the introduction into small parts, of some of Bulwer's "County people", renders the grouping &c so extremely difficult, that I tremble at the thought of your absence. I know what the Rehearsals at Knebworth must inevitably be—how imperfect in the midst of his preparations—and forgive me if I make it a personal request to you to be at these Rehearsals in town. I have appointed them at that time, in order that the places on the stage may be thoroughly understood, and marked in each person's book as the Rehearsals go on, and studied afterwards. And although I have unbounded confidence in your perfect readiness and perception of what is required in such cases (remembering what I saw of you in that way at Rockingham) I cannot forget how many other people would be inevitably compromised by your absence, and what a serious responsibility—for it really is a serious responsibility to undertake, as I do, to save these untried people from mortification and failure—rests on me. I don't think it possible to carry the new recruits through (the male recruits I am speaking of, observe!) with honor to all of us, without having you at these Rehearsals. I sincerely believe that your absence would damp the spirits of every one concerned—with the unlucky manager fearfully wet-blanketed, to begin with.

Do come! Pray come! I turn from heaps of Copperfieldian blots to beseech you to come. We had it in our minds to ask you, if, coming to our house for this purpose, you could not remain with us until we go to Knebworth. But, having poured out, from the fulness of my Managerial anxiety, this earnest request to you, I content myself with limiting this new encroachment to the following small note of interrogation

?[†2]

My servant (who has been sneezing, to attract my attention, ever since I began) now observes, like an uneducated Ghost in a new Hamlet—so solemn is his warning—

"The Post is a closen of itself Sir!"

—and shuts me up.

Ever dear Miss Boyle

(He's lighting the sealing-wax, and won't allow time for a signature in full)

CD.

To GEORGE LINLEY,[†1] 17 OCTOBER 1850

MS Mr Brian Lake.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Seventeenth October 1850.

Dear Sir

Mrs. Dickens has the greatest pleasure in accepting the Dedication with which you propose to honor her.[†2]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

George Linley Esquire

To EDWARD BALDWIN, [18 OCTOBER 1850]

Mention in next.

To THOMAS BEARD, 18 OCTOBER 1850

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | William Beard Esquire | Lewes | Sussex.

Broadstairs, Kent | Friday Night | October Eighteenth 1850.

My Dear Beard

The enclosed hideous and infernal-looking document arrived under cover to me this morning, with the enclosed request. I have written back, to the father of those prematurely ripe little Stiltons (the twins)[†3] "that I have sent it after you, but fear it may not reach you, as I know you were going to several places in quick succession.[†4]

Everybody sends best love. Stone addressed me for two hours (in the course of a walk this afternoon after a stunning day's work) on the subject of his "conception of Knibbs."[†5] The only changes in Broadstairs, are, that we had fried oysters (and claret) to start on, at dinner today—and that four herrings were taken last night in seventy five million, six hundred and eighty four thousand, nine hundred and fifty three, yards of net.

Ever Affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Beard Esquire

To THE REV. JOSEPH MOULD,[†1] 18 OCTOBER 1850*

MS University of Texas.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Friday Evening | Eighteenth October 1850.

Dear Sir

In reply to your letter, I beg to send you a cheque for Three Guineas towards your benovolent object,[†2]—one guinea from myself, one from a charitable trust I have to administer on the part of some subscribers in India,[†3] and one from the Reverend C.H.T.[†4]

Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

The Reverend J. Mould.

To EDWARD CHAPMAN, 18 OCTOBER 1850

MS Johns Hopkins University.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Friday Night | Eighteenth October 1850.

Dear Sir

I am much obliged to you for your suggestions in reference to the Cheap-Edition-accounts of Oliver Twist. I will not trouble you to make out any other statement, but will arrange the matter with my partners,[†5] according to those just and reasonable considerations which you explain.

Have the kindness to pay the balance in my favor, to my account at Coutts's.[†6]

Faithfully Yours

Edward Chapman Esquire.

To FREDERICK DICKENS, 21 OCTOBER 1850

MS John Rylands Library.

Broadstairs | Monday Night | Twenty First October 1850.

My Dear Fred. It is proposed to act at Sir Bulwer Lytton's on Monday Tuesday & Wednesday, the 18th. 19th. & 20th. November, and to meet there on Saturday the 16th. for Rehearsal in his house—whereunto he begs me to invite you cordially. If you should have occasion to come back in the day time, the station is Stevenage, and the time very short.

On the 31st. Octr. and the 1st. of Novr., we Rehearse at Miss Kelly's[†1] at ¼ before 7. I want you, if you don't object, to do Cash instead of Young Knowell. Four "County Men"[†2] have come in, and have taken the uphill parts of Old Knowell, Justice, and Wellbred. I was obliged to throw them in Young Knowell, because there is no one among them sufficiently used to us to do Cash.

You will also have your old part of Tom Thornton in Turning the Tables. Nathan dresses. Wilson[†3] should make you light-looking (as to hair) and youthful, for Cash.

I shall be at Household Words all day on Thursday, from 11 to 5.

Affecy. Ever

CD.

To SYDNEY WILLIAMS,[†4] 21 OCTOBER 1850

Extract in T. F. Madigan catalogue No. 54 (1929); MS 2 pp.; dated Broadstairs, 21 Oct 50; addressed Sydney Williams.

On Thursday, I hope to send you (I purpose being in town and at the Household Words office all day) proofs of the concluding numbers of Copperfield,[†5] in good time for the evening post. I cannot engage to do so sooner, because although I have very nearly finished the book—within a page or so—the sheets can not well be ready before that time. But you will be quite safe in preparing Mr. Bernard Tauchnitz[†6] to receive them agreeable to this arrangement.

And pray tell him, with my compliments, that I shall be very happy to see him when he comes to town.

To JOHN FORSTER, [21 OCTOBER 1850]

Extract in F, VI, vii, 547. Date: 21 Oct 50, according to Forster.

I am within three pages of the shore; and am strangely divided, as usual in such cases, between sorrow and joy. Oh, my dear Forster, if I were to say half of what Copperfield makes me feel to-night, how strangely, even to you, I should be turned inside-out! I seem to be sending some part of myself into the Shadowy World.[†7]

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 23 OCTOBER 1850

MS Morgan Library.

Broadstairs. | Wednesday Twenty Third October | 1850.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I have just finished Copperfield, and dont know whether to laugh or cry.

Will you look at these two letters (No. 2, in answer to an enquiry of mine, after the receipt of No. 1) and tell me whether it shall be done? If you will write to me, at home in town, I shall probably get your letter the sooner. I have an idea of wandering somewhere for a day or two—to Rochester, I think, where I was a small boy—to get all this fortnight's work out of my head, but I shall be at home soon.

Dear Miss Coutts | Ever Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

I beg my regards to Mr. and Mrs. Brown. I hope "She" will like the close of the story—to say nothing of You!

To F. M. EVANS, 23 OCTOBER 1850

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

Broadstairs | Wednesday Night | Twenty Third October 1850.

My Dear Evans.

I enclose you the last chapter of Copperfield, the Preface, and the errata. If any of your people should have observed any misprint, let it be added. I have removed Mr. Rackham's unhappiness—as he's a friend of yours.[†1]

If you should not have sent the two sets of proofs to Wellington Street before you receive this, don't send them. Send (as soon as ready) only proofs of the MS sent now, title, &c. Because I have had time to go through the sheets, and if you will get my corrections, enclosed, made immediately (so that I may send complete proofs to Williams and Norgate before Post time) it will be easier for the German Translators,[†2] and will save me a great deal of trouble.

I purpose being in Wellington Street at 11 in the Morning. Let me know if I may rely on the corrections in good time.

Ever Faithfully
CD.

F. M. Evans Esquire.

To LORD NUGENT,[†1] 24 OCTOBER 1850*

MS University of North Carolina.

Office of Household Words | Twenty Fourth October 1850.

My Dear Lord Nugent.

I should have written to you sooner, but for having been so closely occupied with Copperfield, as to have had no leisure for any kind of correspondence.

Coming to town today, I have read Humpty Dumpty. I am extremely sorry to say that I do not think it at all suitable to Household Words. If I had had the least doubt on the subject, I need not assure you (I hope) that I should have instantly given the full benefit of it to any friend of yours—to a lady most of all. But I am quite sure it would not do. It wants more of the breath of life, and is altogether wide of our mark.

I send it to you, enclosed, begging you to thank the fair authoress on my behalf, and to assure her of my respectful consideration.

My movements for the next week or so are not quite certain, but I think I am pretty sure to be in town next Saturday and Sunday—I mean, this very next Saturday and Sunday Week. Shall you be away in foreign parts before then—or will you engage to dine with us in Devonshire Terrace en famille[†2]—and not to come by mistake after supper?

Believe me always | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The | Lord Nugent.

To W. B. HODGE,[†3] [25] OCTOBER 1850*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Date: misdated by CD; Friday was 25 Oct in 1850.

Office of Household Words. | Friday Evening Twenty Fourth October 1850.

Dear Sir.

I take the liberty of troubling you with this note to introduce my brother Frederick, whom I wish to place in the hands of some respectable Life Insurance Office. He is in the Treasury—and in debt. If I were to lend him the money to pay his debts, I should not be likely to recover it; and I bear a long train of similar experiences in other cases.

But the sum he requires not exceeding £600, on the highest calculation, I would go so far as to become Security for him, if he could borrow that sum, to be repaid out of his income, on such terms as I thought reasonably hopeful. I am not aware whether such proceedings form any part of the business of your office;[†1] but, even if they do not, I have thought it possible that you might be able, and not unwilling to advise him where to go.

If you can, I shall feel very sincerely obliged to you, as I am anxious (for his own respectability) that he should arrange his affairs at once. He has been heedless enough, but there is not the least harm in him.

My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

—Hodge Esquire

To E. V. HARCOURT,[†2] 26 OCTOBER 1850*

MS Yale University Library.

Office of Household Words, | Saturday Twenty Sixth October 1850.

Sir.

Allow me to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, dated on Tuesday last.[†3]

I shall be happy to make the statement you desire me to make, on your authority, in reference to the amount of your professional income. It shall appear in the next Number printed. But I may observe, in case you should suppose me to be delaying the statement, that the business arrangements of the journal require certain numbers to be always prepared in advance; and that the next number to be printed is No. 34 which will be dated on the 16th. of November.[†4]

I feel it right to add that I shall consider it just towards the writers of the original article, to explain, in making that statement, that the late Archbishop of York divided the office between his two sons (of whom [one][†5] was a Minor) and who are now the Registrar Chancellor,[†6] and Registrar Scribe.

The fact of the improvements of 1837, shall also be distinctly set forth.

I conceive that you must be misinformed when you suppose the Clerk to have "never actually received any money for furnishing information on these printed forms" in reference to the Weddings by Licence.[†1] Because I assure you that I have before me, at this moment, a receipt of that gentleman's for such a fee. On this point, I would also beg to call your attention to a letter published in the York Herald of this day and signed "A County Magistrate",[†2] which has been shewn to me this morning.

In conclusion, I hope it is not necessary for me to assure you, that I have had no object in giving publicity to these articles, but the establishment of a just principle—that I cannot entertain the slightest personal animosity towards any gentleman connected with any Registry—and that your manner of addressing me commands my utmost respect and consideration.

I am Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Egerton V. Harcourt Esquire.

P.S. A proof of the explanation to be published as I have mentioned, shall be sent to you when ready.

To THE HON. MRS RICHARD WATSON, 26 OCTOBER 1850

MS University of Texas.

Office of Household Words, | Saturday Twenty Sixth October 1850.

My Dear Mrs. Watson.

As Copperfield is your book,[†3] you know, it has occurred to me that you might possibly like to see the end of it before the rest of the World does. Being in town today, I send you the sheets of the conclusion.[†4] Will you and Watson (to whom my love) kindly keep them to yourselves until publication-time?

They are not finally corrected, and have several verbal errors in them, I dare say.

We return to town on Monday Evening for good. I am going to meet Kate and Georgina at Tunbridge Wells this afternoon, on their way home.

Believe me | Dear Mrs. Watson | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS MARY BOYLE, 30 OCTOBER 1850

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Thirtieth October 1850. | Wednesday

My Dear Miss Boyle.

We are all extremely concerned and distressed to lose you. But we feel that it cannot be otherwise, and we do not, in our own expectation of amusement, forget the sad cause of your absence.[†1]

Bulwer was here, yesterday; and if I were to tell you how earnestly he, and all the other friends whom you don't know, have looked forward to the projected association with you, and in what a friendly spirit they all express their disappointment, you would be quite moved by it, I think.

Pray don't give yourself the least uneasiness on account of the blank in our arrangements. I did not write to you, yesterday, in the hope that I might be able to tell you, today, that I had replaced you, in however poor a way. I cannot do that yet, but I am busily seeking out some means of filling the parts before we rehearse tomorrow night. And I trust to be able to do so, in some out of the way manner.[†2]

Mrs. Dickens and Bridget[†3] send you their kindest remembrances. They are bitterly disappointed in not seeing you today, but we all hope for a better time.

Dear Miss Boyle | Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To W. B. HODGE, 30 OCTOBER 1850*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Devonshire Terrace | Thirtieth October 1850.

My Dear Sir

I am very sincerely obliged to you for your kindness in reference to my brother. Let me thank you.

I envy Mr. and Mrs. Smith at Rome. All my Tartar propensities are stirred, when I read of them, there, in your note.

With regards to Mrs. Hodge

Believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. B. Hodge Esquire.

To LORD NUGENT, 30 OCTOBER 1850*

MS Miss Elena Klasky.

Devonshire Terrace | Wednesday Morning Thirtieth October | 1850

My Dear Lord Nugent

I write you this, in the greatest haste, to say that I have come home and have found your letter, but am unhappily engaged this evening, tomorrow, and next night, in preparations and drillings for Bulwer's play. But when shall you be back in town? Jerrold tells me you are not going abroad so I shall hope to test that boasted-on-your-part, and-on-my-part-resolutely-denied Punctuality, sooner than in your roving fit you thought for.

Ever Yours cordially
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 31 OCTOBER 1850*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street.

Devonshire Terrace | Thirty First October 1850.

My Dear Miss Coutts

I return the letters. If you will let me know where you are, and when visible, I should like to come and have a little talk with you about them and about the Great Drainage question.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

November

To THE METROPOLITAN COMMISSION OF SEWERS,[†1] [1 NOVEMBER 1850]

Mention in next.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 1 NOVEMBER 1850

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Westfield Lodge | Brighton.

Devonshire Terrace | First November 1850.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

Our letters crossed. Exactly what you have written to me, on the Great Drainage Question, I was going to say to you.

I have been to the Commissioners' office today, and seen my sympathetic friend. It is necessary, as a matter of form, that a letter should be written to "the Board", stating your desire to have the work done, and that the money estimated as its cost, should be enclosed. This I have just done. I am assured that "the premises shall be relieved immediately".

With kind regards | Ever dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To F. P. DELMÉ RADCLIFFE,[†1] 2 NOVEMBER 1850

MS Boston Public Library.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park | Second November 1850.

My Dear Sir

I lose no time in letting you know that I purpose engaging the Theatre for the Rehearsal (twice or thrice, carefully) of Turning the Tables,[†2] at one o'Clock in the day, on Thursday the 14th. if it should be convenient and agreeable to you. This would leave you the evening unbroken. Will you kindly tell me if this hour will suit you?

I know you will be glad to hear that Mrs. Dickens had a very good night, and is doing exceedingly well, and has no pain.[†3]

My Dear Sir | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Delmé Radcliffe Esquire.

To MRS LEMON,[†4] [3 NOVEMBER 1850]

Mention in next.

Urging her to play Tib and Mrs Humphries in the Knebworth theatricals, in place of Catherine, who had injured her foot.[†5]

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 3 NOVEMBER 1850

MS Lytton Papers.

Devonshire Terrace | Sunday Night | Third November 1850.

My Dear Bulwer Lytton.

I should have waited at home today, on the chance of your calling, but that I went out to look after Lemon.

And I went, for this reason.—The surgeon assures me that there is no probability of Mrs. Dickens' being able to play. She is going on "as well as possible" (which I sincerely believe), [†a]but the swelling is so great that it is impossible to say to what extent the tendons of the foot are injured; and he thinks the chance of their being able to support the weight of her form, so soon, infinitessimal.[†1] I will call in Quain[†2] tomorrow, and have it carefully examined, but I have no reason at all to distrust the skill of the gentleman who was hastily called in, when the accident happened, and whom I have since retained.[†a]

Now, when it happened, Mrs. Lemon told my little sister in law, that she would gladly undertake the parts, if it should become necessary. Going after her today, I found that she and Lemon had gone out of town, but would be back at the Hotel where they are staying (the Bedford, in Covent Garden) tonight. I have written to her, earnestly urging her to the redemption of her offer. I have no doubt of being able to get her well up in the characters; and I hope you approve of this remedy? If she once screws her courage to the sticking place,[†3] I have no fear of her, whatever.

—This is what I wanted to say to you. †bI shall have her answer tomorrow morning, no doubt. I shall be at home until a quarter past 2.†b If I don't see you here, I will write to you at Forster's, reporting progress. Don't be discouraged, for I am full of confidence, and resolved to do the utmost that is in me—and I well know they all will—to make the nights at Knebworth triumphant. Once in a thing like this—once in anything, to my thinking—it must be carried out like a mighty enterprise, heart and soul.

†cOn Wednesday, please God, I shall be with you. And when the Theatre arrives too.†c Pray regard me as wholly at the disposal of the Theatricals until they shall be gloriously achieved.

My unfortunate other half (lying in bed) is very anxious that I should let you know that she means to break her heart, if she should be prevented from coming as one of the audience—and that she has been devising means, all day, of being brought down in the Brougham, with her foot upon a T.†4

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton

P.S. I enclose a note which Forster left with me an hour or two ago.

To L. A. CHAMEROVZOW, 4 NOVEMBER 1850*

MS Yale University Library.

Devonshire Terrace. | Fourth November 1850.

Dear Sir

I beg to acknowledge the receipt of the Volumes you have done me the favor to forward to me on behalf of the Aborigines Protection Society;†1 and also to thank you for your own book on New Zealand,†2 for which I am very much obliged.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Louis Alexis Chamerovzow Esquire.

To T. WESTWOOD,†3 4 NOVEMBER 1850*

MS Mr Frank Bradburn.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park London | Fourth November 1850.

My Dear Sir

My absence from town has prevented my receiving your book,[†4] and the very courteous and gratifying letter which accompanied it, until today. I beg to assure you that I am deeply sensible of such consideration, and that I should vainly endeavour to express the pleasure it affords me.

Yours faithfully and obliged
CHARLES DICKENS

T. Westwood Esquire.

To WILLIAM JERDAN,[†5] 4 NOVEMBER 1850*

MS Liverpool Public Libraries.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Night | Fourth November 1850.

My Dear Jerdan

My hearty thanks for your kind note.[†6] It gives me the greatest pleasure.

With kind regards, | Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. Jerdan Esquire

To LEWIS NATHAN, 4 NOVEMBER 1850*

MS L. & H. Nathan Ltd.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Night | Fourth November 1850.

Mr. Charles Dickens begs to inform Mr. Nathan, that he and Mr. Lemon will call on Mr. Nathan on Wednesday Morning punctually at 12, to see all the gentlemen's dresses, and satisfy themselves that everything is complete.

The polished leather shoes with red heels, which were sent to Mr. Nathan with Mr. Dickens' Bobadil dress, are for Mr. Dickens' Animal Magnetism dress, and will require paste buckles.

To JOHN FORSTER, [EARLY NOVEMBER 1850]

Extract in F, VI, iii, 505. Date: clearly after publication of Wiseman's Pastoral on 29 Oct and probably not later than 4 Nov when Russell's "Durham Letter" appeared.

Taking a gloomy view of public affairs in connexion with Cardinal Wiseman's Pastoral given out of the Flaminian Gate,[†1] and speaking unhappily of some family matters.[†2]

Yours | Despondently, | And | Disgustedly,
WILKINS MICAWBER

To [? W. C. BENNETT], 6 NOVEMBER 1850

Text from Maggs Bros catalogue No. 977 (1976); MS 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 6 Nov 50. Address (envelope only MS Mr Philip Cornwell): W. C. Bennett Esquire | 11 Croom's Hill Grove | Greenwich. PM 6 Nov 50.

I hasten to acknowledge the receipt of your book,[†3] and the very gratifying terms in which you have the kindness to present it to me. I assure you that I feel them strongly, and that you can have no more interested or approving reader than I have been for a long time.

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 7 NOVEMBER 1850

MS Lytton Papers.

Devonshire Terrace | Thursday Afternoon | Seventh November 1850.

My Dear Bulwer Lytton

[†a]On the principle of postponing nothing connected with the great scheme, I have been to Ollivier's,[†1] where I found our friend the Choremusicon[†2] in a very shattered state—under repair—his mouth wide open—the greater part of his teeth out—his bowels disclosed to the public eye—and his whole system frightfully disordered. In this condition he was speechless. I cannot therefore report, touching his eloquence, but I find he is a Piano as well as a Choremusicon—that he requires to pass through no intermediate stage between Choremusicon and Piano—and therefore that he can easily and certainly accompany songs.[†a] I have enquired into the Window Seat matter, and they (Ollivier and Moss) are decidedly of opinion that he can be hoisted into the window: a temporary scaffolding or stooling being made for Lewis Moss[†3] to sit upon. If the Great Northern[†4] take carriages—which I suppose they do—they will take the Choremusicon. It would come in a Van, which would be put on a Truck. It would come by the first train on Monday Morning—would only require to be met at Stevenage by one horse in harness—and would be adjusted, set up, &c &c by Lewis Moss, assisted by our carpenters. The Choremusicon will recover its usual health and spirits within a week.

[†a]Now, will you have it?[†a] I have promised to let them know, on Saturday Morning. [†a]I am inclined to believe that on the whole it is the best thing,[†a] and I think we could so arrange it as not to obstruct the view. But I haven't heard it, and can't hear it. They are extremely confident of its being better than three Musicians.

Ever Faithfully Yours

CD.

To MRS MARY HOWITT,[†1] 8 NOVEMBER 1850

Mention in Knight, Frank & Rutley catalogue, Oct 1968; dated Devonshire Terrace, 8 Nov 50.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 8 NOVEMBER 1850

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street.

Office of Household Words | Friday Evening Eighth Novr. 1850

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I have come here from Shepherds Bush, just in time for Post.

Mrs. Morson tells me that she has written you an account of the disaster—very unexpected; for I was there on Tuesday, when all seemed prosperous and thriving. I found, in addition to what she had told me, a purse of Mrs. Macartney's gone, containing half a crown. It seems that it may have been taken out of her drawer at any time since Sunday (when she saw it last) but how, remains a mystery; for she declares it has been always locked, and that the key has been always, as it is now, attached to the key of the gate. I have directed all the beds to be narrowly and secretly examined this evening while the girls are in the long room—in case it should have been taken and secreted by any one but the runaways.

I find this curious circumstance in the case, which makes me a little suspicion[†2] of some one—I don't know whom—still in the house. Davies slept by herself; Humphreys[†3] in the room on the first floor. It is remarkable that the key which happened to fit Mrs. Morson's Wardrobe, was not taken out of that little press in that bedroom, but out of the other Press in the upstairs bedroom—and yet, when I bethought myself of trying if the key in Humphries first floor room, would open the same Wardrobe too, I found it would!—From which I rather conclude that some one sleeping in the top-room must have found out that use for the key there, and told Humphries. Because, if Humphries had been prowling about, to make that discovery for herself, it is reasonable to suppose that she would have begun with the key most ready to her hand and eye.

I will write to you on Monday, in reply to your kind note received yesterday. At present I am in a mighty state of indignation—and the Post presses. I have instructed the Police to take the girls up, if they can find them,[†4] as I am confident that the example would be better than any precept. I ought to tell you that I have narrowly investigated everything, and that I cannot conclude that any blame attaches, either to Mrs. Morson or Mrs. Macartney.

Dear Miss Coutts | Ever Faithfully Yours

CD.

To [MISS] J. A. HEAVISIDES,[†1] [?7-8 NOVEMBER 1850]

Mention in D, XXVI (1929/30), 47. Date: since CD had left London on the morning of the Saturday in Nov when the letter asked her to call, but was able to call on her next day, the appointment must have been for 2 or 9 Nov (16 and 23 Nov impossible because of Knebworth, 30 Nov unlikely because CD was at Devonshire Terrace) and the letter not later than 7 or 8 Nov.

Acknowledging receipt of her father's book Poetical and Prose Remains of Edward Marsh Heavisides[†2] and asking Mr Heavisides to call at Devonshire Terrace on a Saturday in November.[†3]

To THOMAS COE,[†4] 9 NOVEMBER 1850*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate, Regents Park | Ninth November 1850.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Coe, and will feel obliged if

Mr. Coe can call upon him on Monday at any time between eleven and one, bringing a copy of the Scene plot in each of the three pieces, with him. Mr. Dickens will then give Mr. Coe the necessary information as to his coming down to Knebworth on Saturday next.[†1]

To FREDERICK DICKENS, 9 NOVEMBER 1850

Mention in Autograph Prices Current, V (1919-21); MS 2 pp.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 9 Nov 50; addressed "My dear Frederick"; signed initials.

Mentions going to Knebworth for rehearsal with Kate and Georgy.

To JOHN HEWETT, 9 NOVEMBER 1850*

MS The Rev. Noel Boston.

Devonshire Terrace | Ninth November 1850.

Dear Sir

Mr. Forster writes to you today, I understand, touching the arrangements for the arrival of the Theatre at Knebworth on Tuesday Evening.

Do I understand that all the lamps required for the stage and float, will be of the same size and pattern? If so, I shall be obliged to you if you will send me one of those you have hired, in order that I may take down my two dozen to Knebworth with me. I presume they fit to something, or screw upon something? If you will make a small railway parcel of your "Model Lamp" and forward it to me here, it may save me a great deal of confusion and trouble, and sending up to London from Hertfordshire at the last moment.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Hewett Esquire.

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 9 NOVEMBER 1850

MS Lytton Papers.

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday Ninth November 1850.

My Dear Bulwer Lytton

The Choremusicon has surprisingly recovered. I saw him today, looking remarkably well, with an immense crimson silk waistcoat on.

Ollivier has ascertained that the Great Northern (or Direct Northern, or whatever it is—I mean your Railway) will bring him. Tidings of the precise train by which that service will be performed, I will bring with me on Thursday Evening.

The Theatre will (as I expected) take "full" two days putting up—which I suppose means three. It will be at Knebworth on Tuesday Evening, and your carpenter and two assistants who were to have been ready for it on Thursday Morning, must now be ready for it on Wednesday Morning. Will you let Gilbert[†1] know this?

[†a]I have not heard of anything more having happened to anybody.[†a]

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton.

To FRANK STONE, 9 NOVEMBER 1850*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Devonshire Terrace | Ninth November 1850.

My Dear Stone

As Georgina has "called" you for the Rehearsal on Thursday at I exactly, I need only tell you that the train by which you had better come [†b]to Knebworth,[†b] will leave the King's Cross Station on Saturday at exactly 2. You will take a ticket for Stevenage (an hour and five minutes) where I am informed that two carriages and a cart for the luggage will be in waiting. The dinner hour will be 4, with a view to the night's Rehearsal.

Ever affecy.
CD.

Frank Stone Esquire.

To WILLIAM HOWITT, 11 NOVEMBER 1850

Text from N, II, 244.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Evening, Eleventh November, 1850

My Dear Sir

I am extremely sorry, on reading your story, to find that we have anticipated it, and have a paper on the same subject (by Horne) in a number which has been at Press some days.[†2] I like yours very much, and know the Captain perfectly. Nothing but what I have mentioned, could have stood in its way.

I am not a Freemason and should very much like to read the book[†3] you so kindly offer me.

With regards to Mrs. Howitt.

Believe me always, | Faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To WILLIAM HOWITT, 12 NOVEMBER 1850

MS Mr Theodore Hewitson.

Devonshire Terrace | Twelfth November 1850.

My Dear Sir

I will read your paper (an admirable title) immediately, and also let you know about the space in the Xmas Number.[†1]

Pray let me assure you that there is nothing at all like the Captain in Horne's paper; and that he wrote his, in compliance with a suggestion from Wills who mentioned the subject to me as being down on his list, in consequence of its having attracted so much attention lately.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

William Howitt Esquire.

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 13 NOVEMBER 1850

MS Lytton Papers.

Office of Household Words | Wednesday Evening Novr. 13th. 1850.

My Dear Bulwer Lytton

[†a]I come in here, to write a line or two to you. Not that I have anything very important to say, but that I may as well report Progress.

First. We purpose coming down tomorrow; leaving town, post, at 5. We shall send our man and woman by the 6 o'Clock train. I shall have the farce-people in hand, from 1 o'Clock at noon.

Secondly, I got a little uneasy in my mind, the other day, about the stage lights; rather suspecting, either that there was some confusion, in consequence of the Theatre being made for gas, or that Mr. Hewett was not quite reliable in that particular. I wrote to him, assuming that it was all right. He wrote back, declaring that it was all wrong—that he had mentioned to Forster that he was only prepared for gas—that, after receiving my letter, he had hired two dozen lamps, but we should want two dozen more from London—I say, more probably three dozen. Further, I discovered that it was absolutely impossible that his man could attend to the working of the stage, and to so many lights also. But that, as you know we were prepared for.

The upshot of it all, is, that I have been pervading London all the afternoon and seen nothing better than to allow my lamp-man, Tucker of the Strand†2 (a very respectable merchant with whom I have dealt for the last fourteen years) to send down anything extra, required, including a steady well-conducted man. I cannot get him to a positive contract, because so much must necessarily depend (he says) upon the usage of the lamps, the amount of heat and so forth, but he pledges his long-tried reputation with me, to do the thing thoroughly and well, and brilliantly, and without smell (providing his own oil) and on as reasonable terms as it could be so done. I have been to Forster, and to Lemon, but we find the difficulty and uncertainty of attempting any other arrangement so great, and the necessity of being thoroughly provided, so strong, that we think there is nothing for it but to complete this. I should say that it would occasion an extra expence (including the man) of about five or six pounds. Of course I will look closely into it—I take the responsibility on my devoted head—and that's all.

Except this—Will you let Mr. Webb†1 know that a public-house bed will be wanted for "the Lamp-man". He will appear by the first train on Saturday Morning, as the trimming and arranging will be an entire day's work.†a

If I should not find you gone to Australia or elsewhere, and should not have occasion to advertize you in the third column of the Times,†2 I shall hope not to add to your misfortunes—I dare not say, to afford you consolation—by shaking hands with you tomorrow night, and afterwards keeping every man connected with the Theatrical Department, to his duty.†3

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton.

To [THOMAS TUCKER],†4 [13 NOVEMBER 1850]*

MS Walter T. Spencer. Date: 13 Nov: see To Lytton, that day.

Train on Saturday Morning, at [ ]†5 o Clock
From the King's Cross Station, Battlebridge
Take a ticket for Stevenage

Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton's
Knebworth Park
is about 2 miles from Stevenage, but there will be a Musical Instrument going on, for which a cart will be sent, and the lamps[†6] can be put into that conveyance. They (and two dozen other lamps, already at Knebworth) will all have to be lighted on Saturday Evening.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 13 NOVEMBER 1850

Extract in Swann Gallery catalogue No. 248; MS (3rd person) 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 13 Nov 50.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments . . .[†1] and begs to remind (merely to prevent the occurrence of any mistake) that the AMATEUR PARTY WILL BE AT THE THEATRE FOR REHEARSALS, tomorrow, at one exactly.

To GEORGE CHAMBERS,[†2] 23 NOVEMBER 1850*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate, Regents Park | Twenty Third November 1850.

Sir.

I shall be at home on Tuesday between 11 and 2, and happy to see you if such an appointment should suit your convenience. But I deem it right to add (that I may not unnecessarily occupy your time) that if your visit should refer to any public invitation with which your Institution proposes to honor me, I cannot possibly accept it; being too much engaged, and too completely overwhelmed by such invitations from various parts of England, to render acceptance within the bounds of any reasonable possibility.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

George Chambers Esquire.

To EDWARD CHAPMAN, 23 NOVEMBER 1850

MS Johns Hopkins University.

Devonshire Terrace. | Twenty Third November 1850.

Dear Sir

Mr. Townshend writes me that you are going to send him a parcel of books "at Christmas" by which I can send him one. Will you have the kindness to let me know of the intended departure of that same parcel, two or three days before it goes?

Faithfully Yours

Edward Chapman Esquire.

To DR JOHN ELLIOTSON,[†1] 23 NOVEMBER 1850

Extracts in Goodspeeds catalogue No. 106, and in Parke-Bernet catalogue, Nov 1944 where dated Devonshire Terrace, Saturday Evening, 23 Nov 50 (MS 2 pp.).

Will you do me the new kindness to see what is the matter with the bearer of this note, Mr. Wilson [hairdresser] to all the chief theatres in London, of whom I had much knowledge in our amateur plays, and who is a very worthy and zealous man—not gaining much, by great exertion—quite an artist in his way—most attentive, punctual, steady, and reliable in all things. He is certainly in want of sound medical advice, and I can recommend him (but that's little to say) to none so sound and kind as yours.

To E. S. JACKSON,[†2] 23 NOVEMBER 1850*

MS Private. Address: Mr. E. S. Jackson | Harbour Hill | Queenstown | Ireland.

1 Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Third November 1850.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. E. S. Jackson. No such boy as Michael Harvey has ever been in his service nor has he any knowledge of the name.

To BERNHARD TAUCHNITZ, 23 NOVEMBER 1850

Extract in Curt Otto, Der Verlag Bernhard Tauchnitz, 1837-1912, Leipzig, 1912, p. 52.

London, 1, Devonshire Terrace, Novbr. 23rd, 1850.

I much regret not having the pleasure of seeing you this year. . . . I beg to acknowledge the safe receipt of your draft for £. . .,[†3] and to assure you that I shall not fail to give you timely notice of any new work I may undertake.

To LORD ASHLEY,[†4] 23 NOVEMBER 1850*

MS Private.

Devonshire Terrace. | Saturday Evening | Twenty Third November 1850.

Dear Lord Ashley

I have read the passage you so kindly marked for me, with horror, but (I am sorry to add) without surprise. I have strolled about the place myself, and only wondered (as who can help doing, in such scenes!) how the world, and we in it, went on for a year.

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

I say nothing of my determination on all occasions to render this great cause[†1] all the help I can. That, I believe you will take for granted.

To WILLIAM BROWN, 23 NOVEMBER 1850*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday Evening | Twenty Third November 1850.

My Dear Sir

On coming back from Knebworth, I find your note. I am very glad we have a case so well recommended, and hope to see the girl on Monday. A clergyman, the Reverend Mr. Burrows,[†2] has written to me (on the suggestion of Mr. Ellis)[†3] concerning another case; and I have appointed to see him and the subject of it, with her nearest relations, on Monday.

If anything could surprise me in such a direction, I should be surprised to hear of the conduct of Little Cummins, who always behaved so well at the Home. But it is a great comfort to find the other two so promising. Two to one, are consolotory[†4] odds.

I don't return their letter now, because I have another to give Miss Coutts back, and hope to run down to Brighton with both, after a week or so, when I shall have got together a Christmas Number of Household Words.

Mrs. Dickens is greatly better, but cannot walk yet.

With my best regards to Miss Coutts, and to Mrs. Brown,
Believe me always | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. Brown Esquire.

To THE HON. MRS RICHARD WATSON, 23 NOVEMBER 1850

MS Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday Evening | Twenty Third November 1850.

My Dear Mrs. Watson.

Being well home from Knebworth—where everything has gone off in a whirl of triumph, and fired the whole length and breadth of the County of Hertfordshire[†1]—I write a short note to say that we are yours, any time after Twelfth Day, and that we look forward to seeing you with the greatest pleasure.[†2] I should have made this reply to your last note, sooner, but that I have been waiting to send you Copperfield in a new waistcoat. His tailor is so slow, that it has not yet appeared, but when the resplendent garment comes home, it shall be forwarded.

I have not your note at hand, but I think you said "any time after Christmas." At all events, and whatever you said, we will conclude a treaty on any terms you may propose.

And if it should include any of Charley's holidays, perhaps you would allow us to put a brass collar round his neck, and chain him up in the Stable?

Kate, and Georgina (who has covered herself with glory) join me in best remembrances and regard to Watson and you, and all the house.—I have stupendous proposals to make, concerning Switzerland in the Spring!

I promised Bulwer to make enquiry of you about "Miss Watson" whom he once knew, and greatly wished to hear of. He associated her (but was not clear how) with Lady Palmer.[†3]

My Dear Mrs. Watson | Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Hon: Mrs. Watson.

To WILLIAM BROWN, 24 NOVEMBER 1850*

MS Morgan Library. Address: W. Brown Esquire | Westfield Lodge | Brighton.

Devonshire Terrace | Sunday Afternoon | Twenty Fourth November 1850.

My Dear Sir

No time must be lost in getting the unfortunate Brighton girl into some Hospital. Her condition is so horrible, that she is obliged to be kept apart; the very odor from her sores, being unendurable as they say. What shall we do?

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. Brown Esquire

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 24 NOVEMBER 1850

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Westfield Lodge | Brighton.

Devonshire Terrace | Sunday Afternoon | Twenty Fourth November 1850.

My Dear Miss Coutts

Those wretched girls who robbed the Home, gave themselves up, last night, at a Police Station in the City. Going to Shepherds Bush just now, I found that the Police had just been there, requiring Mrs. Morson to be at the Mansion House at 12 tomorrow.[†1]

After thinking about it, I have adopted the following course, which I hope you will deem the best that such circumstances will admit of. I think you may desire, if possible, to give the case no additional notoriety, by the introduction into it of my very notorious name. I have therefore possessed my Solicitor[†2] (who is a very shrewd, intelligent person) with the facts of the case, and requested him to send some one from his office with Mrs. Morson tomorrow, to ensure its being properly and concisely stated. I have made him acquainted with my part in the business, and explained to him why it may be best not to refer to me unless there should be some positive necessity—which I consider most unlikely; all the property stolen being Mrs. Morson's. No unnecessary sensation will be made, and I have made him perfectly understand the bearings of the circumstances all through.

I write hastily, and will write again by tomorrow night's post. I enclose a short note for Mr. Brown.

Dear Miss Coutts | Ever Most Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To THE REV. HENRY W. BURROWS, 25 NOVEMBER 1850*

MS Yale University Library.

1 Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Fifth November 1850.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Burrows, and begs to say, in acknowledging the receipt of Mr. Burrows' note of Saturday,[†1] that he will be happy at any time to enter on the consideration of any case for Miss Burdett Coutts's Home, in which Mr. Burrows may be kindly interested.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 25 NOVEMBER 1850

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Westfield Lodge | Brighton.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Fifth November 1850.

My Dear Miss Coutts

Mr. Loaden[†2] (the solicitor I mentioned) went himself with Mrs. Morson today, and stated everything as quietly as possible. The girls neither spoke nor looked up, and were committed for trial. Mrs. Morson will be taken before the Grand Jury at the Old Bailey, next Wednesday.[†3] I have just time to write this.

Ever Most Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To GEORGE CHAMBERS, 26 NOVEMBER 1850

Mention in Anderson catalogue No. 4221; MS 2 pp.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 26 Nov 50.

Referring to an appointment.[†4]

To HENRY AUSTIN, 28 NOVEMBER 1850*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace. | Twenty Eighth November 1850.

My Dear Henry

I am sorry to say that I cannot go on Saturday, for I must work all day at the Christmas No.[†1] of Household Words. But, any other day, after Wednesday, I shall have great interest and pleasure in seeing the place.[†2]

Kate and Georgina unite in love to Letitia. Kate's foot is much better, but she can only, as yet, walk a very little.

You will see that I have done something Sanitary this week.[†3] Also in the next No. but one, I have kept the subject alive.[†4]

Affecy. Ever

CD.

To HENRY BICKNELL, 28 NOVEMBER 1850

MS Dickens House.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Eighth November 1850.

My Dear Mr. Bicknell.

If I ever did such a thing, believe me I would do it at your request.[†5]

But I don't. And if you could see the ramparts of letters from similar Institutions, with which my desk bristles every now and then, you would feel that nothing lies between Total abstinence (in this regard) and utter bewilderment and Lecturation.[†6]

Mrs. Dickens and her sister unite with me in kind regards to you and Mrs. Bicknell. The consequences of the accident are fast fading, I am happy to say. We all hope to hear, shortly, that Mrs. Bicknell has recovered that other little accident, which (as you and I know) will occasionally happen in well-regulated families.[†7]

Very faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Henry Bicknell Esquire.

To CHARLES KNIGHT, 28 NOVEMBER 1850

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, July 1983; dated Devonshire Terrace, 28 Nov 50; addressed Charles Knight.

Looking out from a sea of letters to say he is delighted with Pudding[†1] but Knight has forgotten The Salt![†2] Asks him to put in that spoonful and CD will read the proof anywhere and would like to meet at Wellington Street on Thursday when the No. is made up.

To FREDERICK DICKENS, 28 NOVEMBER 1850

MS Dickens House.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Eighth November 1850. | Thursday Night

My Dear Fred.

What is the nature of the security that I should be required to give to Mr. Manning[†3] (a very unpromising name)?[†4] What the instrument, and what its provisions?

Affecy. always

CD.

To JAMES MONCREIFF,[†5] 28 NOVEMBER 1850*

MS Dickens House.

Devonshire Terrace, London. | Thursday Night | Twenty Eighth November 1850.

Dear Sir.

I have been out of town for some days, or I should not have delayed answering your kind letter.

Pray let me thank you for it, and for that most touching and eloquent remembrance of our dear friend, by which it was accompanied.[†6] I read that tribute to his memory, with an interest and admiration which I will not endeavour to express to you. Your fervent words found an echo in my heart, and filled it with the liveliest emotions.

Allow me to assure you that I cannot regard you as a stranger, when we feel so strongly in common—and to express the hope that we may have an opportunity before long (and may not lose it) of being personally acquainted.

Dear Sir | Yours faithfully and obliged

CHARLES DICKENS

J. Moncreiff Esquire.

To THE HON. MRS RICHARD WATSON, 28 NOVEMBER 1850

MS Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Thursday Night. | Twenty Eighth November 1850.

My Dear Mrs. Watson.

We joyfully book ourselves for the 8th. of January in the Year of our Lord One Thousand Eight hundred and fifty one.

In reference to your kind invitation of "some person or persons unknown", I should be very glad to do any feasible thing to assist our project. If I were to ask anybody, for such a purpose, Mr. Lemon would be, by many degrees, and out of all comparison, the best. But, besides that he is much engaged and has just come back from Knebworth, and besides a little awkwardness that I should feel in exactly knowing how to set about it (though he is a most agreeable and good humoured creature, and perfectly devoted to his Manager) I don't know that you have anything for him to do. He always plays La Fleur in Animal Magnetism, and you know we already have Miss Boyle's brother for that. He is much too good an Actor, and too used to act with me in that sort of relation, to be put into a smaller or less difficult part—and Mr. Forster has no comedy in him—and Mr. Leech would be (in a room, which they are not used to), hardly more valuable in the Marquess than the Mysterious Stranger whom Miss Boyle used darkly to hint at, in various quires of note paper that passed between us last October—[†a]and concerning whom, I believe you and she had some correspondence?[†a†1] But I should not have the least objection to trying to impress Mr. Lemon, if[†2] we could use him (theatrically speaking) according to his wont. And whether he could come or no, I would discover straightway, if our plans led us to that.

Now, I don't want to frighten you, but I am pretty well used to these things, and as I know you will give me credit for understanding them from experience, I think it right to say——That, if we are to have a creditable Play, on the 13th. of January, it will be necessary at once to complete all the arrangements for it—to know what is to be acted—and to cast all the parts—and to send them out to the people who are to play—and to leave nothing to chance.

—That such arrangements as the construction of the little Theatre, and especially the lighting of it,[†3] would require my looking into, in the closest manner, now, or they would never be done at last. You have no idea what a perfect little machine anything remotely approaching to a Theatre must be, in all respects of careful and provident arrangement, or how monstrously absurd it becomes, and what a ridiculous failure. If I were to tell you what I did at Knebworth, you would hardly believe that so much care for minute things could be necessary; and though we do it, comparatively, as a mere Christmas game at Rockingham, the same care is necessary (or more necessary) to make the lesser means tell for their utmost worth. And if all this were arranged within the next fortnight, the drill at Rockingham, between the

8th. and the 13th. in the Rehearsal way, would be something utterly astounding and bewildering to all unused beholders!

Into all this, I am ready to plunge with the utmost rapture and vehemence, and with a more than British constancy of purpose—and I have no doubt of the ultimate astonishment of the dazzled and delighted neighbourhood—but, there is no time to lose in settling all the preliminaries; and, before they are settled, I say thus much about them to shew you what a serious piece of business they involve. If Miss Boyle be certain to come to you, the first best thing would be for she and I to take counsel about the parts—the three little pieces I think we are clear of. Georgina you are certain of,—and Kate, if there be anything for her to do. When we had got so far, I should like to see you for an hour or so, and would run down by the Railroad with the greatest pleasure, and summon the Jew[†1] to meet us. If we were in any serious difficulty for a good Actor, I would try to find him, and in case I could get Mr. Lemon, there is a piece we do (which has only he and I in it)[†2] which is one of the most ludicrous things possible, and which, in that event, we might play. But, as we originally proposed, I don't think (as I have already said) we could very well use such aid.

With best regards | My Dear Mrs. Watson | Ever Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

I have been in Spitalfields all day, among the Weavers.[†3] Their looms are rattling in my mind, and I hope have not woven this letter into an unintelligible pattern.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 29 NOVEMBER 1850*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts.

Devonshire Terrace | Friday Evening | Twenty Ninth November 1850.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

The Post which brought me your letter just now (half past eight) brought me the enclosed from Mr. Loaden, which I think it right to send to you, by reason of the terms in which it mentions Mrs. Morson.[†4] I will tell Mr. Loaden of your satisfaction and I know it will gratify him.

Your enquiry in reference to the children's books (which I will immediately inform myself upon, and then write to you at Brighton) reminds me of what I told my publishers I would ask you some days ago—but have forgotten. Are those books sent to you to look at to be returned; and if so, may they be sent for to Stratton Street?

Will you let me have one word as to this?

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

December

To S. C. HALL,[†1] 1 DECEMBER 1850

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Devonshire Terrace | Sunday First December 1850.

My Dear Hall.

You so exactly anticipate my forlorn situation as to Sittings in general, that you leave me nothing to say, in reply to your kind note, except that I have explained my helplessness, and Total Abstinence principles (in that regard) with all possible consideration and courtesy, to Mr. Wivell.[†2]

Our united regards and remembrances to Mrs. Hall.[†3] You have grown into such a complete Country Gentleman[†4] that I suppose you are always going about in top boots and a shirt frill, asking everybody for Protection?

Faithfully Yours whether or no
CHARLES DICKENS

S. C. Hall Esquire

To JOHN HARDWICK, 1 DECEMBER 1850

Mention in N, II, 248. Dated Devonshire Terrace, 1 Dec 50.

Accepting an invitation.

To FELIX JOYCE,[†5] 2 DECEMBER 1850

Mention in Maggs catalogue No. 436 (1923); MS 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 2 Dec 50.

Referring to his 'Christmas Carol'.

To C. E. COTTERELL,[†6] [?EARLY DECEMBER 1850]

Mention in To Auldjo, 9 Dec 50 ("our common friend the Banker in the Chiaja", Naples); Date: "a few days" before 9 Dec.

To WALTER SAVAGE LANDOR, 4 DECEMBER 1850

Text from MDGH, I, 230.

Office of "Household Words", | Wednesday, Dec. 4th, 1850.

My dear Landor,

I have been (a strange thing for me) so very unwell since Sunday, that I have hardly been able to hold up my head[†a]—a bilious attack, I believe, and a very miserable sort of business.[†a] This, my dear friend, is the reason why I have not sooner written to you in reference to your noble letter, which I read in The Examiner, and for which—as it exalts me—I cannot, cannot thank you in words.[†1]

We had been following up the blow in Kinkel's favour,[†2] and I was growing sanguine, in the hope of getting him out (having enlisted strong and active sympathy in his behalf), when the news came of his escape. Since then we have heard nothing of him. I rather incline to the opinion that the damnable powers that be connived at his escape, but know nothing. Whether he be retaken or whether he appear (as I am not without hope he may) in the streets of London,[†3] I shall be a party to no step whatever without consulting you; and if any scrap of intelligence concerning him shall reach me, it shall be yours immediately.

Horne wrote the article. I shall see him here to-night, and know how he will feel your sympathy and support. But I do not wait to see him before writing, lest you should think me slow to feel your generosity. We said at home when we read your letter, that it was like the opening of your whole munificent and bare heart.

Ever most affectionately yours, | My dear Landor
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To HENRY AUSTIN, 4 DECEMBER 1850*

MS Mr Leonard Bloom. Address: Henry Austin Esquire | Gwydyr House | Whitehall.

Office of Household Words | Wednesday Evg. Fourth Decr. 1850

My Dear Henry.

Saturday at 2[†1]—at the Exposition[†2]—on the ground—punctuality guaranteed. Shall you be coming from Gwydyr House?[†3] Unless you say no, I shall conclude Yes, and will be waiting for you at the Athenaeum at half past One.

Ever affecy.
CD.

To MISS MARY BOYLE, 5 DECEMBER 1850*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Thursday Fifth December 1850.

My Dear Miss Boyle.

Mrs. Watson is here,[†4] and we have been going into the Play with all possible elaboration. As I find Mr. Lemon by no means safe to come, I absolutely reject him, and propose to keep your brother (with his good leave and kindness) in La Fleur. Which I am certain of his liking, after we have rehearsed. Louison, I propose to abandon, in favor of "Used Up",[†5] if we can possibly manage, for it is a splendid piece in which You and Your Ever Devoted (meaning the undersigned) should do a great deal. The Bill would stand

USED UP.[†6] You, Mary. Your brother, Farmer Wurzel, a very good part indeed. after which A DAY AFTER THE WEDDING.[†6] You, Lady Elizabeth. Your brother, James. to conclude with ANIMAL MAGNETISM.[†6] You, Lisette. Your brother, La Fleur.[†7]

Mr. Stafford O Brien[†8] is proposed for your Marquess, and Mr. Stopford[†9] for Jeffrey. If they come in, I hope (with three days severe rehearsing) we shall be all right. And as soon as I hear Mrs. Watson's report of their acceptance, I will send you and your brother The[†1] "Used Up" parts. Your brother will be your uncle!

Mrs. Watson is going to write to you today.

Dear Miss Boyle | Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Boyle.

To MARK LEMON, [5 DECEMBER 1850]

Mention in To Mrs Watson, 7 Dec 50; written "before I saw you on Thursday" (5 Dec).

To W. H. WILLS, 5 DECEMBER 1850*

MS Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Thursday Evening | Fifth December 1850.

My Dear Wills

Have the goodness to look at the end of the First Article in the enclosed 2 Nos. sent me from the office yesterday.[†2]

I particularly mentioned to you that any copies printed with that mistake,[†3] must be cancelled. If the mistake has not been corrected at all, I shall at once call the Proprietors together, and positively refuse to proceed with the work, under the subsisting printing arrangements.

Faithfully Always
CD.

To MISS ANNE ROMER,[†4] 6 DECEMBER 1850

Extract from N, II, 248; MS 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 6 Dec 50.

I am heartily glad to hear of the success of "our" efforts, and heartily wish you all success at the Haymarket and everywhere else.[†5]

To THE HON. MRS RICHARD WATSON, 7 DECEMBER 1850

MS Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday Seventh December 1850.

My Dear Mrs. Watson.

This will be quite a diplomatic document, I suppose,—but we shall fill the Post Office before we have got the Plays up.

My brother is exceedingly sorry that he can't come. He has already exceeded his leave, and the New Year is a busy time in his department of the Treasury.

But, if you find the "Young Man" you were to look after, I don't think this will matter. My Brother's part in "Used Up" was a Tiger. And it strikes me that if Charley's holidays be long enough, I can have him dressed as a first rate Tiger, and can teach him the part. "The young man" will be in Used Up, in the part originally proposed for him.

Now, in case Mr. Stafford O Brien should decline, I am happy to say (as per inclosed) we can get Mr. Lemon after all.[†1] Let me tell you how the enclosed comes to be written, before you read it. Before I saw you on Thursday, I had written to him, proposing the visit. He wrote back, telling me exactly what business he should have to do in connexion with Punch (he is the Editor) and also in bringing out a new Play of his at the Haymarket,[†2] and begging me to make every acknowledgement to you, in connexion with his excusing himself on these grounds. I replied I was sorry, but there was no help for it—and last night I received the enclosed.

Now, if Stafford O Brien's refusal should throw us back on Mr. Lemon, I feel it right to say to you, with whom I may observe entire confidence, that while he (Mr. Lemon) is one of the plainest and most modest of good creatures, he is a man of a particularly sensitive nature, who visits very little, and never, within my knowledge, except where his wife goes. And I don't think it possible that you could ask him to Rockingham without asking her. I believe it would be a mere compliment, and that she would not be at all likely to come (they live out of town, near Uxbridge, and have a family of children who would be all at home then), but I feel the necessity. If he had accepted at once, I should have felt it an act of delicacy in me to have mentioned this to you. On the mere chance of our using him, I feel it equally. I know him so well, and all these gentlemen are so much in the habit of relying on me in anything connected with our theatrical doings, that I seem to have no choice in the case—and I should consider myself in exactly the same position, if I knew you less.

If Mr. Stafford O Brien comes up to the mark—there's an end. Ever Faithfully Yrs.

To THE HON. MRS RICHARD WATSON, 9 DECEMBER 1850

MS Huntington Library.

This is No. 2.[†1]

Devonshire Terrace | Ninth December 1850. | Monday Morning

My Dear Mrs. Watson

Your note to me, of Saturday, has crossed mine to you, I find. If you open both mine together, please to observe this is No. 2.[†2]

You may rely on Mr. Tucker's doing his work thoroughly well, and charging a fair price. It is not possible for him to say beforehand, in such a case, what it will cost, I imagine—as he will have to adapt his work to the place. Nathan's stage-knowledge may be stated in the following figures 00000000000. Therefore I think you had best refer Mr. Tucker to me, and I will apply all needful screws and tortures to him.

I have thought of one or two very ingenious (hem!) little contrivances for adapting the difficulties of "Used Up" to the small stage. They will require to be so exactly explained to your carpenter (though very easy little things in themselves) that I think I had better, before Christmas, send my Servant down for an hour—he is quite an old stager now—to shew him precisely what I mean. It is not a day's work, but it would be extremely difficult to explain in writing. I developed these wonderful ideas to the Master Carpenter at one of the Theatres, and he shook his head with an intensely mournful air, and said "Ah Sir, it's a universal observation in the profession Sir, that it was a great loss to the public wen you took to writing books!"—which I thought complimentary to Copperfield.

Ever Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN AULDJO,[†3] 9 DECEMBER 1850*

MS New York Public Library. Address: John Auldjo Esquire | Noel House | Kensington.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Ninth December | 1850.

My Dear Sir

I am sincerely sorry to hear of the death of poor Le Gros,[†4] who interested me greatly when I was at Naples, and whom I had hoped to walk and talk with again, one day. I was not aware that he had left Italy; and had written to our common friend the Banker on the Chiaja, only a few days since, charging him with many friendly messages and reminders to him.

I feel extremely sensible of your kindness in giving me the intelligence. Pray let me thank you cordially for that mark of your remembrance, and assure you that I am much gratified by it, and that I highly esteem it.

My Dear Sir | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Auldjo Esquire.

His faithful, loving, little Dog—that he was so very fond of. I wonder what has become of the Dog—whether it was alive and with him.

To THOMAS COE, 9 DECEMBER 1850*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Ninth December 1850.

Dr. Mr. Coe.

I have been remiss in not sooner acknowledging the receipt of your note, and its accompanying prompt-books,[†1] so very neatly and carefully returned.

Allow me to assure you, on the part of all the gentlemen concerned, that you gave the fullest and completest satisfaction at Knebworth, and that I shall be most happy to avail myself of your services on any future occasion of that kind.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 9 DECEMBER 1850

MS Lytton Papers.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Ninth December 1850.

My Dear Bulwer

I have gone over your notes again, and am, if possible, even better pleased with them than I was last night. I feel quite confident that you have struck out the right path, and that we may follow it to a noble end.

What I write, now, to suggest to you, is, that I think in the present state of the law a charter[†2] (advisable perhaps in any case) will be positively necessary before we can begin. Will you consider whether it may not be advisable to get one early in the proceedings, and to apply ourselves to the getting of it with the least possible expence?

Forster once told me that you knew Le Gros (who interested me a good deal) at Naples. He is dead. I have just received a letter informing me of his death from fever, in a boat on the Nile, near Alexandria. He was Private Secretary to Murray[†3]—had been in Syria, all the summer—had received a slight stroke of the Sun and got better—and suddenly lay down, in a bilious fever, and died.

Faithfully Yours ever
CHARLES DICKENS

Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton.

To DANIEL MACLISE, 9 DECEMBER 1850*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Ninth December 1850.

My Dear Mac

On Wednesday at 4, I am your man. As I have to go to Westminster first, I will meet you at that hour (unless you say no) in the Athenaeum Hall. Then, any adventures you please! I find London growing smaller, every day. I don't see how I am to get on, at all.

Ever Faithfully
CD.

To MICHAEL FARADAY, 11 DECEMBER 1850

MS Institution of Electrical Engineers.

Devonshire Terrace | Eleventh December 1850.

My Dear Sir

Will you do me the favor to accept the accompanying book—a poor mark of my respect for your public character and services, and my remembrance of your private kindness in so generously lending me your valuable notes.

Concerning which, let me say that I have them in safe keeping, and will shortly return them. The gentleman who has them to refer to, still tells me when I ask if he has done with them, "that they are not so easily exhausted, and that they suggest something else."[†1]

My Dear Sir | Yours faithfully and obliged
CHARLES DICKENS

Professor Faraday.

To JOHN HEWETT, 11 DECEMBER 1850*

MS The Rev. Noel Boston.

Devonshire Terrace | Eleventh December 1850.

Dear Sir

I am much obliged to you for your note. The price of the Theatre is much too high, with reference to the alterations and additions it would require for a purpose I have in contemplation; but I do not at all disparage its real merits or value, in abandoning the idea of buying it.

It was perfectly successful in all respects (the lamps excepted; which failure I had anticipated and provided against), and gave the utmost possible satisfaction. I ought to add that Bentley's attention and diligence deserve the highest commendation, and that I never had to do with a better man.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Hewett Esquire.

To THE HON. MRS RICHARD WATSON, 11 DECEMBER 1850

MS Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Eleventh December 1850.

My Dear Mrs. Watson.

Don't write, either to Mr. Stafford or Mr. Stopford!!! Captain Boyle has just been here, and wants to play La Fleur. So its all settled, and there's no change. It is just as it was.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CD.

To W. H. WILLS, 12 DECEMBER 1850

MS Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Thursday Twelfth December | 1850.

My Dear Wills. This proof of Morleys, when corrected, will require to be very carefully looked to. I had better go over it myself. I can't make out whether he means Mr. Buster to be actually a prize-fighter, or a person in the position of a gentleman with prize-fighting tastes.[†1] I have adopted the latter hypothesis, as involving less inconsistency and incongruity.

Mrs. Gaskell's story, I enclose—with two or three slight corrections. The name[†2] I have given it, expresses it better than any other I can think of. Withal, it is not a common name. The story is very clever—I think the best thing of hers I have seen, not excepting Mary Barton—and if it had ended happily (which is the whole meaning of it) would have been a great success.[†3] As it is, it had better go into the next

No., but will not do much, and will link itself painfully, with the girl who fell down at the well, and the child who tumbled down stairs.[†4] I wish to Heaven, her people would keep a little firmer on their legs!

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To W. H. WILLS, [?12 DECEMBER 1850]*

MS Huntington Library. Date: clearly written later on same day as last.

Devonshire Terrace | Thursday afternoon

My Dear Wills. I have sent Morley's paper (altered) to your house, with a note: thinking you would soon be turning homeward to dinner.

I will think about Hunt's gratifying note, and also send you (I think) a short Chip concerning the Good Hippopotamus.[†1]

Ever Faithfully

CD

To DANIEL MACLISE, [?13 DECEMBER 1850]*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Date: late 1850 or early 1851 on handwriting; 13 Dec the latest possible Friday in 1850.

Athenaeum | Friday afternoon

My Dear Mac. I send this up to let you know that Leech and I are on the tiles, and going to dine at Verey's in Regent Street at ½ past 4, previous to theatrical and other entertainments. Will you come?—If not at our time, at any time before ½ past 6—? But we purpose achieving a snug little dinner.

Ever Affecy.

CD.

To CHARLES KNIGHT, 14 DECEMBER 1850

Extract in Autograph Prices Current, II, 72; MS 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 14 Dec 50; addressed to "My dear Knight".

This day week, I am happy to say, I am still yours. I have read the pamphlet[†2] once attentively. I will read it again to-night, and soundly master it.

To LORD JOHN RUSSELL,[†3] 14 DECEMBER 1850*

MS Public Record Office, London.

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday Fourteenth December 1850.

My Dear Lord.

In troubling you with this note, pray allow me, in perfect sincerity, to assure you that it requires no answer and that I expect none.

I merely wish to recall to your recollection the name of Mr. Poole, who has already experienced your generous kindness, and Her Majesty's considerate munificence.[†1] I feel that I hold it in trust to present his name to you, as one on whom a Literary Pension (when any such may be available) would be well bestowed; and I am encouraged to execute this duty, by your former ready acceptance of him.

I am | My Dear Lord | Your faithful and obliged servant
CHARLES DICKENS

The Lord John Russell.

To FRANK STONE, 14 DECEMBER 1850*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Devonshire Terrace | Fourteenth December 1850.

My Dear Stone.

I enclose you Nathan's account against you. It was originally more, but I have heavily taxed his bill.

The amount of certain stage-charges which I purpose with your consent to divide equally among the Amateur Company, twelve in number (such as Nathan's expences, Wilson's charges and expences, Prompter's, Miss Anne Romer's, Carriage hire and cart hire, Rehearsal rent and light, &c &c) is £38.8.0 in all; being £3..4.0 each.

Faithfully Ever
CHARLES DICKENS

Frank Stone Esquire.

To THE HON. MRS RICHARD WATSON, 14 DECEMBER 1850

MS Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday Fourteenth December | 1850.

My Dear Mrs. Watson.

I shall be delighted to come on the 7th. instead of the 8th. We consider it an engagement. Over and above the pleasure of a quiet day with you, I think I can greatly facilitate the preparations (That's the way, you see, in which we cheat ourselves into making duties or pleasures!) by being at Rockingham a day earlier. So, that's settled.

I was quite certain when that Child of Israel mentioned those dimensions, that he must be wrong. For which woodenheadedness the Child shall be taken to task on Monday morning; when I am going to look at his preparations, by appointment. About the door—don't you observe that the Scenery not being made expressly for the room, it may be impossible to use it, as you propose? There is a scene before that wall, you know. And unless the door in the Scene (supposing there to be one, which I am not sure of) should come exactly into the place of the door of the room, the door of the room might as well be in Africa. If it could be used, it would still required to be "backed" (excuse professional technicality) by another scene in the passage. And if it be rather in the side of the bottom of the room (as I seem to remember it) it would be shut out of sight—or partially—by the side scenes. Do you comprehend these stage-managerial sagacities?

That piece of additional room, in so small a stage, would be of immense service, if we could avail ourselves of it. If we can't, I have another means (I think) of discovering Leech, Saville, and Coldstream at table.†1 I am constantly turning over in my mind the capacities of the place, and hope, by one means or other, to make something more than the best of it. †aBut I think I must contrive to run down for an hour or so (this next week, if I can)†2 [ ] comes two feet nearer to the Audience.†a As to the fire-place, you will never be able to use that. The heat of the lamps will be very great; and ventilation will be the thing wanted.

Thirteen feet and a half of depth, diminished by stage fittings and furniture, is a small space.—I think the doorway could be used in the last Scene with the little steps and platform for a staircase,†3 running straight through it towards the hall! Nous verrons. I will write again, about my visit of inspection, probably on Monday.

†bI don't know that it matters, but I am afraid you are wrong about Mr. Stopford and Mr. Stafford. It ought to stand thus†2 [ ]. They are all good parts, but the man with the best address, the best face, the best figure, and the most to be relied upon as knowing what he is about, should certainly play the Marquis.†b†4

Will you let them know that Messrs. Nathan of Titchbourne Street, Haymarket, will dress them, if they please, and that I will engage for their doing it thoroughly well. Also that Mr. Wilson, Theatrical Hair Dresser, Strand, near St. Clement's Churchyard, will come down with Wigs, and to "make up" everybody—that he has a list of the pieces from me—and that he will be glad to measure the heads, and consult the tastes, of all concerned, if they will give him the opportunity beforehand? I should like to see Sir Adonis Leech and the Hon. T. Saville,†5 if I can! For they ought to be wonderfully made up—and to be as unlike themselves as possible—and to contrast well with each other, and with me.

I rather grudge your Caro Sposo coming into the Company. I should like him so much to see the Play! If we do it at all well, together, it ought to be so very pleasant. I never saw a great mass of people so charmed with a little Story, as when we acted it at the Glasgow Theatre.†6 But I have no other reason for faltering when I take him to my arms—I feel that he is the man for the part—I see him with a blue bag, a flaxen Wig, and green spectacles†7—I know what it will be—I foresee how all that Sessional experience will come out—I reconcile myself to it, in spite of the selfish consideration of wanting him elsewhere—and while I have a heavy sense of a light being snuffed out in the audience, perceive a new luminary shining on the stage!

Your brother would make a capital tiger[†1] too! Very short tight surtout—doeskins—bright top boots—white cravat—bouquet in buttonhole—close Wig—Very good—Ve-ry good. It clearly must be so. The thing is done.

I told you we were opening a tremendous correspondence when we first began to write on such a busy subject. But do let me tell you, once and for all, that I am in the business, heart and soul—and that you cannot trouble me respecting it—and that I wouldn't willingly or knowingly leave the minutest detail unprovided for. It cannot possibly be a success, if the smallest pepper-corn of arrangement be omitted. And a success it must be! I wouldn't go into such a thing—or anything—halfway, or help to bring you poorly out of it, for any earthly consideration.

Talking of forgetting, isn't this odd?—I doubt if I could forget words I had learned; so long as I wanted them. But, the moment the necessity goes, they go. I know my place and everybody's place, in this identical piece of Used Up, perfectly, and could put every little object on its own square inches of room, exactly where it ought to be. But I have no more recollection of my words now, (I took the book up, yesterday) than if I had only seen the play as one of the audience at a Theatre. Perhaps not so much.

With cordial remembrances | Ever dear Mrs. Watson | Faithfully Yours

CD.

To W. H. WILLS, 14 DECEMBER 1850

MS Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday Fourteenth December | 1850.

My Dear Wills.

I heard something last night, which makes me averse to reviving the Good Hippopotamus. I must therefore trouble you to take out that article after all, and put in another Chip.[†2]

I could not think of making so important an alteration in Mrs. Gaskell's story, without her consent. It must therefore stand as it is.

I forgot to tell you yesterday that Egg proposes to meet us at the Blackwall Railway at 3 on Monday to go down (by appointment with the Proprietors) to those Plate Glass Works.[†3] He says the visit will occupy some three hours. Therefore our friend H.W. must improvise a City dinner, afterwards. I shall be at the office on Monday, between 12 and 1.

I have taken out the Cripple in the Railway paper,[†1] because he has hobbled bodily out of Head's book.[†2]

There are a few alterations elsewhere.

Ever Yours

CD.

To CHARLES KNIGHT, 15 DECEMBER 1850

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, July 1983; dated Devonshire Terrace, 15 Dec 50; addressed Charles Knight.

Returning Knight's pamphlet and explaining that he has marked a few places where he disagrees with the examples Knight has used to illustrate an argument, but emphasising that I . . . greatly admire the point and condensation with which the case is stated.

To LORD DENMAN,[†3] 16 DECEMBER 1850*

MS University of Texas.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Sixteenth December | 1850.

My Dear Lord Denman.

I need not say to you that I have an inexpressible horror of slavery[†4] and all its atrocities; but I have avoided (as yet) any more distinct expression of opinion on the subject than is suggested by the article to which you refer, because I am not satisfied that the African Blockade advances the great end it is designed to promote.[†5] I cannot reconcile its efficacy with such accounts of its effects as I have been able to find in the Parliamentary Reports.[†6] But, being sincerely anxious to arrive at a right conclusion, I will carefully read the papers I have received from Captain Denman,[†1] and, in particular, the document to which you call my attention.[†2]

I have no doubt that the comparative indifference in the public mind, has been mainly occasioned by the better knowledge the public has acquired in these latter days, and is constantly improving, of the many wrongs nearer home, that have to be set right.[†3]

I cannot tell you, my dear Lord Denman, what pleasure it has given me to hear from you, and with what gratification I find that in the retirement[†4] whither the love and respect of all who have ever had the privilege of knowing you, have followed you, I have borne you company. I deeply feel it. To be, month after month, so near to one who has led such a noble life, and who is the object of the grateful admiration of the whole Empire,—and to have "cheered his hours of affliction",—is a distinction that moves me very much, and for which I heartily thank God.

I beg to be cordially remembered to My Lady[†5] (as does Mrs. Dickens) and to all your house. And I am ever with the truest regard and esteem,

My Dear Lord Denman | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The | Lord Denman.

To WILLIAM PHILLIPS,[†6] 16 DECEMBER 1850

Text from Spencer catalogue, n.d.; MS 2 pp.; dated 16 Dec 50; addressed William Phillips.

Dear Sir,

I find that I shall be so delayed and utterly swamped and cast away by letters of introduction, during the time of the Great Exhibition, if I remain in town, that I must fly to save myself. Therefore I shall be glad to let my house for six months—if I can get a good price for it. I should say that I ought to have £300, or it would be better shut up.

To THE HON. MRS RICHARD WATSON, 16 DECEMBER 1850

Extract in Sarah Bersohn catalogue (1952/3); MS 2 pp.; dated 16 Dec 50; addressed Hon. Mrs. Watson.

CD hopes to come down on Friday . . . I have taken an airing in Bradshaw this morning . . . over to Dublin and back . . . find myself at Watford in Hertfordshire, without having encountered allusion[†1] to Rockingham.

To MRS GASKELL, 17 DECEMBER 1850*

MS Berg Collection.

Devonshire Terrace. | Seventeenth December 1850.

My Dear Mrs. Gaskell.

You have made me laugh so heartily about the mysterious card, that I find great difficulty in getting my business-face back; and feel that I am achieving this note with a preposterous composite expression of countenance, infinitely ridiculous.

This is the way (I have no doubt) in which that portentous bit of card board came to bewilder you. I think The Heart of John Middleton—that's the name I have given it—a story of extraordinary power, worked out with a vigor and truthfulness that very very few people could reach. Reading it at the office, in print (for it is in the next number but one) I sat thinking about it for sometime, and then said to Wills that I wished you had not killed the Wife—that I thought it an unnecessary infliction of pain upon the reader, not justified by the necessities of the story—and that it seemed to me that the alteration of the last twenty lines or so, to the effect that she recovered, and saw her daughter grow into a woman, and still exercised her influence for all good over her husband, would be a wiser termination, though possibly a less striking one.[†2] Whereupon, says Wills, "Mrs. Gaskell is in town. Shall I go to her?" "Well", said I, "if you will shew her this proof, and tell her exactly what I say, and that I would not dream of altering it myself, or of asking her to do it unless she felt on reflection exactly as I do, you can't do better." Forthwith, he puts on a very uncomfortable looking hat with a very narrow brim, and disappears. Bye and bye, he comes back, with his nose extremely red (I am not certain whether from cold or disappointment) and says "Oh! Mrs. Gaskell's not in town, and won't be here 'till next Tuesday."[†3] "Very good", said I, "Then we will print the story as it stands, and not trouble her." Which was accordingly done.

My solution of the mystery is, that when he enquired for you, he left that mind-disturbing card—never dreaming that it would be sent after you.

Mrs. Dickens and her sister, beg me to send their love. If Captain Holland[†1] should be still near you, pray remember us all to him, very kindly.

Ever dear Mrs. Gaskell | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Gaskell.

To H. P. SMITH, 17 DECEMBER 1850*

MS Miss Mabel A. Hodge.

Devonshire Terrace | Seventeenth December 1850.

My Dear Smith.

Welcome home again! We have got up a fog or two, in order to do our best in the way of a triumphal entry for you.

Will you let me introduce my brother Frederick to you, in reference to whom I am very anxious to have the benefit of your friendly counsel and assistance, if you will excuse my asking so much. He will explain under what circumstances and in what manner I want to help him out of a difficulty.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

H. P. Smith Esquire.

To LORD JOHN RUSSELL, 18 DECEMBER 1850

MS Berg Collection.

Devonshire Terrace. | Wednesday Eighteenth December | 1850.

My Dear Lord.

Allow me to thank you for your ready and kind reply to my note, and to put you in possession of the exact state of Mr. John Poole's case.

He is 64 years of age. He is in a prematurely shattered state, and perfectly unable to write. He is very anxious to do so, and has (to my certain knowledge) tried hard; but the achievement of the most ordinary sentence in a letter, is a work of infinite labor to him. If he could even have compiled skilfully, I could have put the means of living without present anxiety, in his way, through employment on "Household Words", but no sort of capacity for any description of Literature is left in him. He has proved this, over and over again, in a very agony of fruitless endeavour to do Something. He is the author of a great number of Dramatic Pieces—many of them, such as Paul Pry, and Turning the Tables, of high repute—but wrote for the Theatres under bad managers, and was always poorly paid. His Magazine Writings are very numerous too, and his "Little Pedlington"[†2] is a famous piece of observation of English Life and Character; but these compositions were spread over a great many years—were always produced slowly and with difficulty—and never afforded him more than the means of living on from month to month. For some few years past, he has been living on a fifth story in a house in the Rue Neuve Luxembourg in Paris (on the proceeds of an Amateur Theatrical Performance for his benefit, of which I undertook the management and stewardship and which I have dispensed to him half yearly);[†1] and such is the nervous affection, of his hands particularly, that, when I have seen him there, trembling and staggering over a small wood fire, it has been a marvel to me, knowing him to live quite alone, how he ever got into, or out of, his clothes. To the best of my belief, he has no relative whomsoever. He must either have starved, or gone to the workhouse (and I have little doubt that he would have done the former) but for the funds I have doled out to him,—which were exhausted before you generously assisted him from the Queen's Bounty. He has no resource of any kind. Of that, I am perfectly sure. In the sunny time of the day, he puts a melancholy little hat on one side of his head, and, with a little stick under his arm, goes hitching himself about the Boulevards; but for any power he has of earning a livelihood he might as well be dead. For three years, I have been in the constant expectation of receiving a letter from the Portress of the house, to say that his ashes, and those of his wood fire—both of a very shrunken description—had been found lying together on the hearth. But he has lived on; and, for a few hours every day, has so concealed his real condition, out of doors, that many French Authors and Actors (who treat him with deference as an English man of letters) would stand amazed to know what I now tell you. I have endeavoured to put him before you precisely as he is, and neither to exaggerate his claims, nor to invest him with any interest that does not attach to him. He has lived in Paris, to make the least of his poverty, and the most of his means. Mr. Justice Talfourd, Mr. Hardwick the Police Magistrate, Mr. Forster the Editor of the Examiner, and I, are (I think) his only English friends. We all know him, just as I have described him.

I do not think he would hold a small pension very long[†2]—I need not add that he sorely needs it—and I do not doubt that the Public are well-acquainted with his name and works.

With every apology I can offer for troubling you at this length,

I am My Dear Lord | Your very faithful and obliged Servant

CHARLES DICKENS

The | Lord John Russell

To FREDERICK DICKENS, [?18 DECEMBER 1850]

MS Benoliel Collection. Date: late 1850 or 1851 on handwriting; possibly 18 Dec 50, referring to the letter of introduction to Smith of Fri 17 Dec.

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday Morning

My Dear Fred

The boy brought the letter back yesterday, in consequence of the extraordinary and unaccountable impertinence of your messenger,[†3] who said That he knew nothing about you—that if the boy couldn't find you, he had better take the letter away—that that wasn't the place for private affairs—and the like. I think you might mildly mention that I have a very strong belief that if I made a representation of his behaviour in the proper quarter, his private affairs would be likely to become embarrassed rather.

Ever Affecy.

CD.

To F. O. WARD, 19 DECEMBER 1850*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Devonshire Terrace. | Nineteenth December 1850.

My Dear Sir

I write in haste to tell you that I find I shall be obliged to go out of town on Monday Morning at ½ past 6, and that I cannot return until late at night. It is a matter of business, which I had hoped to be able to do tomorrow, but cannot. I am going to a place, difficult to get at, on the Rugby and Stamford line, and there is no help for it. I am extremely sorry, but hope this timely notice may prevent your being inconvenienced. I made so certain, when I wrote to you last, of going tomorrow, that I did not think it necessary to hint at the possibility of this engagement interfering. I sincerely hope you will excuse what I cannot possibly help.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

F. O. Ward Esquire.

To THE HON. MRS RICHARD WATSON, 19 DECEMBER 1850

MS Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Nineteenth December 1850.

My Dear Mrs. Watson

I am sorry to say that business (Household Words business) will keep me in town tomorrow. But on Monday, I purpose coming down; returning the same day. The train for my money, appears to be the half past six. AM[†1] (horrible initials!) and to that invention for promoting early rising, I design to commit myself.

I am shocked, if I also made the mistake of confounding those two (and too) similar names.[†2] But I think Mr. S-T-A-F-F-O-R-D[†3] had better do Ironbrace.[†4] I am glad to find that we agree—but we always do!

I have closely overhauled the little Theatre, and the Carpenter and Painter. The whole has been entirely repainted (I mean the Proscenium and Scenery) for this especial purpose, and is extremely pretty. I don't think, the scale considered, that anything better could be done. It is very elegant. I have brought the Child[†5] to this.

For the hire of the Theatre—£15..0..0 The carriage to be extra. The Child's fares and expences (which will be very moderate) to be extra. The stage carpenter's wages to be extra. Seven shillings a day. I have just been taxing the Child's Knebworth bills to a frightful extent, and he perfectly understands that he can play no tricks. I don't think, when you see the thing, that you will consider this, too much. It is as good as the Queen's little theatre at Windsor; raised stage excepted. I have had an alteration made, which will enable us to use the door. I am at present breaking my man's heart, by teaching him how to imitate the sounds of the smashing of the window, and the breaking of the balcony, in Used Up.[†1] In the event of his Death from grief, I have promised to do something for his Mother.

Thinking it possible that you might not see the enclosed until next month, and hoping that it is seasonable for Christmas,[†2] I send it. Being, with cordial regards and all seasonable loves and good wishes

Ever Dear Mrs. Watson | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

This [[†2a]] is a tear over the devotion of Captain Boyle, who (as I learned from the Child of Israel this morning) would not decide upon Farmer Wurzel's coat,[†3] without referring the question of the buttons to Managerial approval.

To MISS DOLBY,[†4] 20 DECEMBER 1850

MS Mr W. A. Foyle.

Devonshire Terrace | Twentieth December 1850.

Dear Miss Dolby

I have seen Mr. Lemon, and I think he has a novel and good idea, free from the difficulties we descried on Sunday, and likely to be very successful. It would necessitate your having some assistance—but not much—and seems to me extremely agreeable, and promising. He is quite willing to work it out for you if you like it, and it would certainly bear no resemblance to anything yet done.[†5]

He dines with me today, on his way out of town (he lives in the country) and you would find him here I have no doubt, if you wished to see him, at 7. Or, if you address him at the Punch Office Fleet Street, you can easily arrange an appointment between you.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Dolby.

To MRS GASKELL, 20 DECEMBER 1850

MS John Rylands Library. Address: Mrs. Gaskell | 42 Chester Terrace.

Devonshire Terrace | Friday December Twentieth | 1850

My Dear Mrs. Gaskell

On the receipt of your note yesterday morning, I immediately bestirred myself to investigate the possibility of altering the end of the story. But (as I feared) I found it at Press, and 20,000 copies already printed. Consequently, it was too late. Never mind. It is a very fine story, nobly written,—and you can put a pleasanter end to the next one.

Mrs. Dickens and her sister send their love.

In haste | Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Gaskell

To DANIEL MACLISE, 21 DECEMBER 1850*

MS Yale University Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday Twenty First December | 1850.

My Dear Mac

Fred and I propose to leave here tomorrow morning about 10, taking an Omnibus in the New Road, & leaving the London Bridge Terminus, for Strood, at 5 minutes before 11. I hope it will be a delightful day for a walk by the Medway. What do you say? If you go, we will expect to meet you in the New Road, between this house and the corner of Southampton Street.

Ever affecy.

CD.

To THE HON. MRS RICHARD WATSON, 21 DECEMBER 1850

MS Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty First December 1850.

My Dear Mrs. Watson

Another letter!!—But I am not going to change the day of coming—it is only the hour. I forgot an engagement with Miss Coutts, to look after a Provident Society of Poor (of hers) down in Westminster, early on Monday Morning. I will come by the 12 o'Clock Train on Monday, and return next morning.

Ever Faithfully Yours

CD.

Will you put me into a small room—such as my old dressing room? When I am a bachelor-traveller, I have a weakness in favor of condensed comfort. Vastness overpowers me.

To MISS EMMELY GOTSCHALK, 23 DECEMBER 1850

MS Private. Address: Miss Emmely Gotschalk, 122 Amaliegade | Copenhagen.

London, 1 Devonshire Terrace | 23rd. December 1850.

My Dear Miss Gotschalk

I should have written to you long ago, but that I had mislaid your former letter (in the midst of a great mass of correspondence) and could not remember your address. When you wrote again, on the third of this month, and did not mention it, I began to despair of ever being able to write. But I made another search, and found what I wanted.

As I believe that you are happier than when you first wrote to me, because you are better, I shall not say much as to those darker shadows of your mind. If we all sat down to brood on Death, this scene of Duty would become a dismal place—no Duty would be done—mankind would soon sink into ignorance and misery—and Death would find us with a poor account to render, of our work. I apprehend it is because we are placed here to work (all of us in our spheres of action can work, whatever those spheres be) that it is so natural to us to dismiss the contemplation of that end that must come in the fulness of God's time. Our business is to use Life well. If we do that, we may let Death alone.

Action, in an earnest spirit, is the refuge from Gloomy thoughts. My fair young correspondent, trust me no one can be more useful in the World's byeways (from which its highways are made) or can act to better purpose, than an affectionate, true-hearted woman. I believe you to be full of the qualities that make one; and I have no fear of your happiness, and usefulness, and peace.

And so, may God bless you, and the true spirit of this Christmas season influence your heart!

Faithfully Your friend
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Emmy Gotschalk

To THE EARL OF CARLISLE, 24 DECEMBER 1850†

MS Birthplace Museum, Portsmouth.

Devonshire Terrace | Christmas Eve, 1850

My Dear Lord Carlisle.

I was going—in virtue of some mesmeric influence I take it—to write to you, when your note came to me. And I should have expressed in my note, if I had written it, my fear that my only available time in January was not likely to be yours. I shall hope that we may meet soon, in London. It does me good to have a quiet evening with you!

All seasonable wishes and congratulations come to you from this house. And I am ever with sincere regard

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Earl of Carlisle.

To JOHN POOLE, 24 DECEMBER 1850

Text from MDGH, I, 236.

Devonshire Terrace, Tuesday Night, Christmas Eve, 1850.

My dear Poole,

On the Sunday when I last saw you, I went straight to Lord John's with the letter you read. He was out of town, and I left it with my card.

On the following Wednesday I received a note from him, saying that he did not bear in mind exactly what I had told him of you before, and asking me to tell it again. I immediately replied, of course, and gave him an exact description of you and your condition, and your way of life in Paris and everything else; a perfect diorama in little, with you pervading it.[†1] To-day I got a letter from him, announcing that you have a pension of a hundred a year! of which I heartily wish you joy.[†2]

He says: "I am happy to say that the Queen has approved of a pension of one hundred pounds a year to Mr. Poole.

"The Queen, in her gracious answer, informs me that she meant to have mentioned Mr. Poole to me, and that she had wished to place him in the Charter House, but found the society there was not such as he could associate with.†3

"Be so good as to inform Mr. Poole that directions are given for his pension, which will date from the end of June last."†4

I have lost no time in answering this, but you must brace up your energies to write him a short note too, and another for the Queen.

If you are in Paris, shall I ascertain what authority I shall need from you to receive the half-year, which I suppose will be shortly due? I can receive it as usual.

With all good wishes and congratulations, seasonable and unseasonable,

Always faithfully yours

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To LORD JOHN RUSSELL, 24 DECEMBER 1850†

MS University of Texas.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Fourth December 1850.

My Dear Lord.

I have conveyed to Mr. Poole by tonight's post, the joyful intelligence of Her Majesty's gracious approval of your generous suggestion in his favor; and I do not doubt that he will endeavour to express to you (over that brighter fire) something of the happiness he owes to you.

You will excuse my saying, for myself, that I am truly sensible of your noble readiness of attention to this case, and that I must always remember it with the highest admiration and respect.

I knew Mr. Kenney,†1 and can thoroughly appreciate his state of mind under the ink-bottle affliction.†2 I must make it my apology for describing Mr. Poole's condition to you, when I first saw him in Paris. It was a very cold dark day, and after ringing the bell at the outer door of his apartment for some time, I turned the handle of the lock, and walked in. There was a glass door across the little hall (which had only the remains of his breakfast in it, on a small white plate), and after looking, close to the glass for a minute or two, I gradually became aware that Mr. Poole (in his shirt) was close to it on the other side, looking at me. I called to him by name, and he instantly sprung into his bed, which was in a little recess, and invited me to open the glass door and enter the inner room where the recess and the bed both were. I complied, and held a conversation with him,—he in bed, nervously quivering under the bedclothes, and I sitting by the fire—which was repeatedly interrupted by violent and unaccountable blows on the ceiling. I tried to conceal the discomposure which these mysterious shocks occasioned me, but I suppose he noticed the effort, for he said, with the entire nervousness of his whole frame concentrated in his face as it looked over the counterpane "The people—Professor Keller—and his wife—and several strong men—who do the Poses Plastiques—at the Theatre—have taken—a sort of attic-loft—overhead—to rehearse in. Classical groupings—all day! They—they—they begin—with Ajax defying the lightning—at daybreak. They—they—defy—the lightning—all day. I—I know I shall die here. They are my murderers!" I endeavoured to comfort him, but at the next crash he disappeared altogether under the bedclothes—where I left him—and but for the Professor and his Company providentially being in debt and flying from Paris, I really believe he never would have lived to be put on the Pension List.

I am My Dear Lord | Your faithful and obliged Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

The | Lord John Russell.

To THE HON. MRS RICHARD WATSON, 24 DECEMBER 1850

MS Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Christmas Eve, 1850.

My Dear Mrs. Watson

Pondering as I came homeward to day, I came to the conclusion that the "Float" ought only to be fifteen feet long. Will you alter the Carpenter's instructions accordingly?

And will you let me know—say, by Monday next—what the gentlemen are to be called in the bill—whether they have Christian names which their godfathers and godfathers gave them in their Baptism wherein they were made—&c.[†1]—as Higham Stafford, or Wellington Gardner Rodney Stopford, or Jubilee Vernon?[†2]

I saw a brown box, apparently full of clothes, lying unowned at the Euston Square Station today. I wonder whether Captain Quin's wardrobe was in a brown box!—With several brass nails wanting?—

My regards to him, if he be yet with you, and to all your house. I hope the Christmas tree took root in the hearts of your rosy and good children.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To DANIEL MACLISE, 25 DECEMBER 1850*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Devonshire Terrace | Christmas Day, 1850.

My Dear Mac

Forster wrote me that, yesterday. I was both sorry and surprised to hear it—though, mind!—There can be no kind of question that you had a perfect right to apply, and that it is the Prince alone who is in the false position.[†3] It is as certain as the existence of the Sun.

Many happy years my dear old fellow! I wish you would pluck up spirit to come and dine here today at 6. You would only find the families—hot punch—and a jovial welcome. Now, don't you think you can make up your mind—for once—and come?[†1]

Ever affectionately

CD.

To DR ELISHA BARTLETT,[†2] 26 DECEMBER 1850

Text from facsimile, New York Public Library.

Devonshire Terrace, London | Twenty Sixth December, 1850

My Dear Sir,

Accept my brief, but cordial Christmas greetings, in return for yours. I will not wait for time to write a longer note, but write on the receipt of your welcome communication.

I suppose I may congratulate you on your appointment to a chair in the New York University?[†3] It has a pleasant sound in my ears, and I like to think of you as a Teacher—for I am sure you are a good one.

I have not yet received your account of Dr. Wells,[†4] but I have no doubt it will come to hand.

When I look back upon those Western Waters and thundering Niagara, it is delightful to me to think of you as reading the Child's Dream of a Star.[†5] Have you read David Copperfield, by the same author? They tell me he bestowed a great deal of time upon it, and took an unspeakable interest and pleasure in its composition.

Mrs. Dickens joins me in best regards to yourself and Mrs. Bartlett.[†6] We are gradually getting mad, here, on the subject of the Great Exhibition. I wonder whether you have begun to recover, in New York, from the Jenny Lind[†7] paroxysm—or whether Mr. Barnum[†8] will ever be President!

My Dear Sir | Very Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Dr. Bartlett

To T. B. BRINDLEY,[†1] 26 DECEMBER 1850*

MS Private.

Devonshire Terrace. | Twenty Sixth December 1850.

Dear Sir

I am very glad to receive your note, and such a good account of your Poems.[†2] Accept my sincere thanks for the assurances you give me of your having found good company in David Copperfield, and believe me

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

T. B. Brindley Esquire.

To WILLIAM PHILLIPS, 26 DECEMBER 1850*

MS Phillips, Son & Neale Ltd.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Sixth December, 1850.

Dear Sir.

I am very much obliged to you for your sound advice, and will leave the business of my house in your hands. If you could find a good tenant who would give £300 for six months, I would arrange to decamp as might best suit that tenant's convenience. Pray consider yourself authorised to act accordingly.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

William Phillips Esquire.

To WILLIAM BOXALL,[†3] [27 DECEMBER 1850]

Mention in To Mrs Watson, 27 Dec 50.

Saying that he would see him on Monday.[†4]

To THE HON. MRS RICHARD WATSON, 27 DECEMBER 1850

MS Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Seventh December 1850.

My Dear Mrs. Watson

I had had Charley measured for his tiger's suit, yesterday, and his top boots were building. But I have revoked these extensive preparations, and the field is now clear for the Captain[†1] (to whom my love, and congratulations not only on his safe return but on his clothes) and also for Mr. James's brother.[†2] Will you ask Captain Quin what he will do about his Tiger's dress? I presume Nathan is to make it—and precisely the same livery (as to color and form) that I had ordered for Charley, will be the thing. But will he go to Nathan, or send him his measure from his tailor? One of the two things must be done. (His card enclosed.) Also his Boots ought to be beautiful. Their tops of the purest.

I think he ought to play Lord Rivers too, certainly. When you have settled this, and Mr. Vernon,[†3] let me know. Also the hour to be decidedly put in the bill. I think your time too late[†4]—but you know best.

I have written to Boxall, and told him I will be with him on Monday. Tomorrow, I am sorry to say, I can't—as it is my day for being, all day, at Household Words office.

Did you tell Tucker to come to me, or am I to tell him?

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, [28] DECEMBER 1850

Extract in American Art Association catalogue, Nov 1924; MS 1 ½ pp.; dated Devonshire Terrace, Saturday 29 Dec 50. Saturday was 28 Dec in 1850

I had a purblind idea, last night, that there was some shadow of a Wednesday's engagement. . . . On coming home and shouting my difficulty, I was received with a shriek of "New Year's Day". On which high occasion, I am always engaged. As I have no disengaged day . . . I must perforce abandon my part in the proposed expedition. . . . I hope the rest of the company will eat venison—and like it.

To THE HON. MRS RICHARD WATSON, 30 DECEMBER 1850

MS Huntington Library.

(No. 148, 279, 643, 122, 544.)[†1]

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Morning 30th. Decr. 1850.

My Dear Mrs. Watson.

As your letter is decided, the scaffolding shall be re-erected round Charley's boots (it had been taken down, and the workmen had retired to their respective homes in various parts of England and Wales); and his dress proceeded with. I have been very much pleased with him in the matter, as he has never made the least demonstration of disappointment or mortification, and was perfectly contented to give in.

(Here I break off to go to Boxall)
(Here I return, much exhausted)
Your time shall be stated in the bills for both nights.

I propose to rehearse in the day on Thursday and Friday, and in the evening on Saturday, that we may try our lights. Therefore Nathan and Stage Carpenter	Will come on Tuesday 7th. January, as there must be a responsible person to anathematize, and as the company seem so slow about their dresses, that I foresee the strong probability of Nathan having a good deal to do at Rockingham in that respect.

Wilson	Will come on Saturday 11th. Jany
Tucker	Will come on Saturday 11th. Jany

I shall be delighted to see your brother, and so no more at present from

Yours Ever

Coldstream Freelove Doctor Dickens[†2]

P.S. As Boxall (with his head very much on one side, and his spectacles on) danced backward from the canvass incessantly, with great nimbleness—and returned, and made little digs at it with his pencil, with a horrible grin on his countenance—I augur that he pleased himself this morning

To THE HON. MRS RICHARD WATSON, 31 DECEMBER 1850

MS Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Tuesday Thirty First December | 1850.

My Dear Mrs. Watson.

—Just a word. On cross examination of the Stage Carpenter, I have decided that it will not be necessary for Nathan to come down so soon. The Carpenter will come by the first train on Tuesday Morning. Will you send a Cart or something, to meet him at the Station? He will want the assistance of your Carpenter; and the first thing they will jointly have to do, will be to select some wood from your stores, for the supports &c. I shall be down, before they come to any serious work. I have seen Mr. Tucker, and he thinks it will be necessary for his man to come down on Friday night, instead of Saturday. We purpose coming by the 12 o'Clock train on Tuesday.

Ever Faithfully Yours

CD.

I have had a long letter from Cerjat, this morning.

To HENRY BURNETT, [?1849—50]

Mention in Burnett to Kitton, 7 Jan 89 (MS Mr H. W. Watkins). Date: after Burnett's sister's illness.

Saying I am sorry to hear [that Burnett is anxious about the money CD had given him,[†1] and urging him not to try to repay it][†2] or to think that I think of it.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?1850]

Extract in F, VI, vii, 548. Date: context and marginal note, "1850" (F, [1872-4], III, i, 4), suggest end of that year.

Alluding to a common friend, a dreadful thought occurs to me! how brilliant in a book![†3]

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT,[†4] [?1849-50]

MS Walter T. Spencer. Date: probably during publication of Copperfield.

been delighted to come to you to meet our friends. And believe me, I am unaffectedly pleased and moved by your earnest words concerning Copperfield.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

1851

January

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 1 JANUARY [1851]

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts. Date: misdated by CD; clearly Jan 1851, before the visit to Rockingham Castle on 9 Jan.

Devonshire Terrace. | First January 1850.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

Many many happy Years to you and all who are dear to you!

The enclosed note is indeed a delightful one to begin a new Year with.[†1] Looking back on the history of your noble effort—especially with this added light—I sincerely think it has prospered as well as our most hopeful anticipations could have reasonably encouraged us to believe.—Don't you?

I was there; yesterday, alone in my glory. I enclose the bill book. I paid all the accounts set down in it, and there is a sum of twelve shillings to add to the total, for a Diary for the New Year for Mrs. Morson.[†2] I saw all the girls as usual, and looked over the Mark Tables. In one or two instances where I thought them not perfectly correct, I told Mrs. Morson so, and explained why. There were no complaints, and everything was quiet. The drains in progress at last. Mrs. Morson brisk. Mrs. Macartney useful. Mrs. Morson's hair in the old places, with reference to her eyebrows.

I went into the bonnet question with her—only with her, for I think she exercised a sound discretion at the time of the mysterious business, in affecting not to suspect. I have little doubt but that two among them contemplated a move—not that day, but before the following Sunday. I mistrust the smaller Glyn[†3] as having been one of the two. I have no reason for it, but her supernatural mildness—and a certain queer look that was trying to get back into her eyes before it came out.

I enclose Charley's "documents". His tutor writes me very highly of him, and he is first in his department. He is going to Rockingham with us on Tuesday,[†4] for a country run of ten days or so. After which, his Mama will avail herself of your kindness, and write to ask for the box at Drury Lane.[†5]

I have sent your Copperfield to Stratton Street.

Dear Miss Coutts | Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To MISS FANNY M. LOMAX,[†6] 1 JANUARY 1851

MS Huntington Library.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate, Regents Park | First January 1851.

My young friend

I beg to thank you for your book, and to assure you that I have read it with pleasure, as the reflection of a young, earnest, and truthful heart.

But—these terrible buts!—I am bound in honesty to advise you, not to dream of venturing (except for pleasure-voyages) on the great sea of literature. The public have no concern with anything connected with your aspirations, save their results. What is very good to be "written" between the ages of twelve and fifteen, may not be so good to be published. My advice to you, is—dont venture on that aforesaid sea, out of sight of home. I fear you may be shipwrecked.[†1]

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Fanny M. Lomax.

To THE HON. MRS RICHARD WATSON, 1 JANUARY 1851

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

Devonshire Terrace. | First January 1851.

My Dear Mrs. Watson

Many happy years to you and yours!

The order of the pieces which has suggested itself to you, is the order I have always contemplated and in which the bill (of which I hope to send you a proof tomorrow; is in an ordinary playbill, with no jokes in it) is already made out.[†2] You could take twenty minutes for tea, after Used Up, very well.

I have put in the bill,—open at a quarter before 8, begin at 8. Of course we shall not begin, until you tell me you are ready.

I was in hopes your brother would have appeared here, yesterday, for we had a country dance last night (of nearly all my Amateur Company) which was of the wildest description, and the most appalling duration. He would have been amused to see them all together, I think, and would not have had a leg to stand upon this morning. [I write this on my back on the floor.]

But he has not appeared yet. I hope he may come tomorrow, when Miss Boyle dines here.

I hope the actors will come out pretty well??? Sometimes I am shaken with frightful apprehensions of their not minding what they are about.

Bulwer has done his comedy,—and raised a sea of business for me, in the achievement of that triumph, which I contemplate with some discomposure. He is going to read it here, on Saturday or Monday, and we shall immediately dash into the great scheme. I am rather afraid I am a lover, who comes out in a stupendously generous way at last.[†3] I think I'd rather not love, unless I could do it in an original manner. I seem to have been always doing it in the regular way, ever since I ran alone.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To THE REV. W. G. COOKESLEY, [?1 JANUARY 1851]

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Date: "Monday" is CD's error for Wednesday. Inscription of Copperfield makes Jan most likely.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Evening | First January 1851.

My Dear Cooksley.[†1]

I owe you many thanks for your kind and generous interest in Charley. And I devoutly hope he may become, by God's blessing, an honor to you and me!

Accept this book, with my cordial regard, for its author's sake.[†2]

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Reverend W. G. Cooksley.

To JOHN FORSTER [?EARLY JANUARY 1851]

Extract in F, VI, 535. Date: presumably shortly after CD had seen the first rehearsals for 15 Jan 51.

Describing Captain Quin, Mrs Watson's brother, as a very good comic actor, but loose in words;[†3] and Augustus Stafford as more than passable, and a son of Vernon Smith's,[†4] really a capital low comedian.

To WESTMINSTER HOSPITAL,[†5] 3 JANUARY 1851

MS Lt Col. R. A. Crouch, deceased: summary by solicitors of his estate.

Enclosing £5 from trust money confided to him for charitable purposes.[†6]

To J. A. WIDGER,[†7] 3 JANUARY 1851*

MS Yale University Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Third January 1851.

Sir

In reply to your note, enquiring whether Mr. Frederick Dickens were correct in directing you to supply him with articles of certain descriptions therein set forth (beyond the value of £150 for which I made myself responsible to you, on his behalf and the receipt of which you acknowledge),[†1] and to look to me for payment of the same, I have to say that he certainly was not correct if he ever did any such thing, as he never had any shadow of authority from me for doing it.

And I am surprised that you can ask the question, remembering (as I presume you do) that I expressly limited my responsibility to the sum of £150, which I paid (of course) on its being demanded.

I am Sir | Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Widger.

To MRS HOWITT, [4 JANUARY 1851]

Envelope only, MS Mr Ashley W. Olmsted. Address: Mrs. Howitt | 28 Upper Avenue Road | Regents Park. Date: PM 4 Jan 51.

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 5 JANUARY 1851

MS Lytton Papers.

Devonshire Terrace | Sunday Night | Fifth January 1851.

My Dear Bulwer

I am so sorry to have missed you!—I had gone down to Forster, Comedy in hand.

I think it most admirable.[†2] Full of character, strong in interest, rich in capital situations, and certain to go nobly.[†3] You know how highly I thought of Money,[†4] but I sincerely think these three acts[†5] finer. I did not think of the slight suggestions you make, but I said, en passant, that perhaps the drunken scene[†1] might do better, on the stage, a little concentrated.[†2] I don't believe it would require even that, with the leading-up which you propose. I cannot say too much of the Comedy, to express what I think and feel concerning it. And I look at it too, remember, with the yellow eye of an actor!! I should have taken to it (need I say so!) con amore in any case, but I should have been jealous of your reputation, exactly as I appreciate your generosity. If I had a misgiving of ten lines, I should have scrupulously mentioned it.

— VI - 257 —

Stone will look[†3] the Duke capitally; and I will answer for his being got into doing it, very well. Looking down the perspective of a few winter evenings here, I am confident about him. Forster will be thoroughly sound and real. Lemon is so surpassingly sensible and trustworthy on the stage that I don't think any actor could touch his part as he will. And I hope you will have opportunities of testing the accuracy of this prediction. Egg ought to do the author, to absolute perfection.[†4] As to Jerrold—there he stands, in the play![†5] I would propose Leech (well made up) for Easy. He is a good name; and I see nothing else for him.[†6]

This brings me to my own part. If we had any one, or could get any one, for Wilmot,[†7] I could do (I think) something so near your meaning, in Sir Gilbert,[†8] that I let him go with a pang. [†a]Assumption has charms for me—I hardly know for how many wild reasons—so delightful, that I feel a loss of O I can't say what exquisite foolery, when I lose a chance of being some one, in voice &c not at all like myself.[†a] But—I speak quite freely, knowing you will not mistake me—I know, from experience, that we could find nobody to hold the play together, in Wilmot, if I didn't do it. I think I could touch the gallant, generous, careless, pretence—with the real man at the bottom of it—so as to take the audience with him from the first scene. I am quite sure I understand your meaning. And I am absolutely certain that as Jerrold, Forster, and Stone, come in,[†1] I could, as a mere little bit of mechanics, present them better, by doing that part, and paying as much attention to their points as my own, than another Amateur Actor could. Therefore I throw up my cap for Wilmot, and do hereby devote myself to him, heart and head![†2]

— VI - 258 —

I ought to tell you that in a play we once rehearsed and never played (but rehearsed several times and very carefully) I saw Lemon do a piece of reality, with a rugged pathos in it, which I felt, as I stood on the stage with him, to be extraordinarily good.[†3] In the serious part of Sir Gilbert, he will surprise you.[†4] And he has an intuitive discrimination in such things, which will just keep the suspicious part from being too droll [†b]in the outset[†b]—which will just shew a glimpse of something in the depths of it.

The moment I come back to town (within a fortnight, please God) I will ascertain from Forster where you are. Then I will propose to you that we call our Company together—agree upon our general plan of action—and that you and I immediately begin to see, and book, our Vice Presidents &c. Further, I think we ought to see about the Queen. I would suggest our playing first, about three weeks before the opening of the Exhibition,[†5] in order that it may be the town-talk, before the Country people and Foreigners come. Macready thinks with me that a very large sum of money may be got in London.

I propose (for cheapness, and many other considerations) to make a Theatre expressly for the purpose, which we can put up and take down, say in the Hanover Square Rooms, and move into the country. As Watson wanted something of a Theatre made for his forthcoming Little Go,[†6] I have made it a sort of Model of what I mean, and shall be able to test its working powers before I see you. Many things that, for portability, were to be avoided in Mr. Hewitt's[†7] theatre, I have replaced with less expensive and weighty contrivances.

[†c]In Re Tucker.[†1]

I have looked carefully over the bill. It appears very large, but I had not come far short of that amount in my mind. An immensity was done to every lamp of any consequence, in your house, with the best workmanship, in the shortest time. They were all wrong, and Mr. Payne did not spare the opportunity—nor could it really have been spared. Mind! I saw the men at work. It is not pretended, observe, that 32 chimnies were broken; but that certain of that number were supplied to your lamps, and certain others to the Theatre's. Now, as to the former, I assuredly did see the men (having my eye upon them) fitting such glasses to your lamps; and as to the latter, I know there were a good many broken. It always happens in a Theatre—even with gas, which is more handy and manageable—and the rollers of the scenes, and the heat, broke a good many to my knowledge. I don't think the man would exaggerate the quantity of oil consumed (which could be so very easily estimated to a certainty) and the quality was made, with my sanction, very good, in order that there might be no smell. If it were my case—considering that the work was undeniably well done, and very cheerfully done under difficulties, and that it extended by degrees all over your house—I should not dispute the bill, as one applying to a special occasion. But I want to impress two considerations upon you in saying this. First, that it is not a part of what you once called my "large way", because I oblige my other half to be very careful in all such matters, concerning which we hold solemn weekly councils when I consider it my bounden duty to break a chair or so, as a frugal demonstration. Secondly, that I should not have the least shadow of uncomfortable feeling as regards Mr. Tucker, if you did dispute the bill.[†c]

Now my dear Bulwer I have come to the small hours, and am writing alone here, as if I were writing something to do what your Comedy will. At such a time, the temptation is strong upon me to say a great deal more, but I will only say this—in mercy to you—that †dI do devoutly believe that this plan, carried, will entirely change the status of the Literary Man in England, and make a revolution in his position which no Government, no Power on earth but his own, could ever effect. I have implicit confidence in the scheme—so splendidly begun—if we carry it out with a stedfast energy. I have a strong conviction that we hold in our hands the peace and honor of men of letters for centuries to come, and that you are destined to be their best and most enduring benefactor.

Oh what a procession of new years might walk out of all this, after we are very dusty!†d

Ever Yours faithfully

CD

I have forgotten something. I suggest this title.

Knowing the World.

Or

Not so bad as we seem.†2

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 7 JANUARY 1851

MS Lytton Papers.

Devonshire Terrace | Seventh January 1851.

My Dear Bulwer

Having had a laugh with myself (and at myself) about the mysterious Sovereign,†1 I scratch this note before flying to the Railroad, to beg and entreat that you will not give yourself the least uneasiness about bringing out Wilmot in the last Act. Let him do exactly what the story requires, and no more. I assure you I have not the least desire to be strong in that Act.†2 It would be quite enough to give him the tag†3 to speak. I am extremely anxious that you should be perfectly free from any sordid stage consideration in the matter.

Ever Faithfully Yours

CD

Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton.

To LORD JOHN RUSSELL, 9 JANUARY 1851

Mention in Sotheby's catalogue, June 1891; MS (3rd person) 1 p.; dated Rockingham Castle, 9 Jan 51.

Accepting an invitation to dinner.†4

To THE SECRETARY OF UNKNOWN FUND, [JANUARY 1851]

Mention in To Talfourd, 12 Jan. Date: probably shortly before that letter.

To FREDERICK DICKENS, 12 JANUARY 1851*

MS Huntington Library.

Rockingham Castle | Sunday Twelfth January 1851.

My Dear Fred.

I am very glad that Lemon has kindly undertaken to see the people, and hope that something may be done at last. I think delay ruinous to you—extremely likely to prejudice you at the Treasury—and that whatever the end is, it had better come than be deferred.†5

On the other side, I send you a draft of the note which you will send with the proof†1 to each of our own people.

I have contrived a beautiful and complete little Theatre here,†2 and there are some good actors in the Company—one or two whom I should certainly [wish] to recruit,†3 if we had any Parts to offer.†4

Ever affecy.

CD.

My Dear†5

I send you with this, at my brother Charles's request, a private proof of Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton's scheme. My brother begs me to explain that the Provident Fund will form the subject of a distinct and separate statement.

I have also to inform you that the comedy is nearly finished, and that my brother purposes to call a meeting of our company, to discuss the scheme and all future proceedings, soon after he comes back from the country—where he is now, and will remain until next Thursday.

To SIR THOMAS NOON TALFOURD, 12 JANUARY 1851

MS Yale University Library.

Rockingham Castle, Northamptonshire. | Twelfth January 1851

My Dear Talfourd.

Your letter has been forwarded to me here, where I am staying for a week or so. I purpose returning home next Thursday, and will come to you immediately afterwards. In the meantime I have written to the Fund people, and told them what you so kindly suggest, in reference to the Memorial.

If Sloane goes off upon his Bail, I strongly suspect that the law will be altered, in reference to that class of cases.[†6]

It is a beautiful day here, but more like Spring than Winter. It is no great news to report that the farmers grumble—but they really do grumble, extra, about the moderate weather, and say, with Mr. Primrose "The Lord send we may be all the better for it this time twelvemonth!"[†1]

Ever affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS MARY BOYLE, 15 JANUARY 1851*

MS Morgan Library.

Loft over Stable | Wednesday January 15th. 1851.

My Dearest Mary.

I am like the man in the play[†2]—do you know the drama?—In five acts—sentimental comedy—virtue in distress—lovely woman—and all that—well!—Like that man, the call of honor stands between me and my rest—baulks my inclination—beckons me from happiness—to the regions (do you understand, my Angel?) of state formality &c &c. The figure of the wretched Premier haunts me.[†3] I hear a noise—look round—see an unoccupied chair in Chesham Place[†4]—put down my head to shut out the terrible vision—and rush towards the Spectre—which is not a dream—for I knock my head—against Poole's pension[†5]—and many other acts—of personal attention and respect. To stay here, tomorrow, would be most delightful to me, but would be too much pepper[†6]—I mean happiness. I have learnt a good lesson. A man's happiness, after all, don't depend upon himself. With employment for the mind—exercise for the body—a domestic hearth—and a cheerful spirit—there may be many things wanting to complete his happiness[†7]—and he may be confoundedly miserable—

As I am—| Ever Affectionately my darling
Joe.

P.S. I think of taking advice. Unce[†8]—I have resolved to call in a Ffizz-ishin.[†9]

To PETER CUNNINGHAM, 15 JANUARY 1851

Mention in Thomas Birch catalogue, 1895; MS 2 pp.; dated 15 Jan 51.

To MARK LEMON, 16 JANUARY 1851

MS Benoliel Collection.

Devonshire Terrace. | Thursday Night | Sixteenth January 1851.

My Dear Lemon

I will meet you at the H.W. at 2 tomorrow.

Ever affecy.

CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 18 JANUARY 1851

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Eighteenth January 1851.

Dear Miss Coutts.

I receive (you will readily believe) a good many letters intended for your eye, which I put in the fire.

But the enclosed commendation of its enclosure to me, is so extraordinarily French and out of the way, that I have thought it might afford you a laugh. Hence, I send it.[†1]

Your note about Charley gave his Mama and me the greatest delight. It came most opportunely, for I am not so happy with some of my other relations, who are mill stones round my neck. One of my brothers is rasping my very heart just now, by trading on my name.[†2] However, when I think of you and all your attendant phaenomona,[†3] I have the consolation of good company!

With kind regards to Mr. and Mrs. Brown,

Believe me Ever | Most Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

P.S. Are you ever coming home any more?

To MISS ELY,[†4] 18 JANUARY 1851*

Text from transcript, Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace, | Eighteenth January 1851.

My Dear Miss Ely,

I will joyfully come over Wednesday Evening.

It is never too late to receive a good wish from an old friend so familiar and dear as you are. Let me reciprocate it, heartily.

Faithfully yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Ely.

To GEORGE HARTLAND,[†1] 18 JANUARY 1851*

MS Private.

1 Devonshire Terrace | Eighteenth January 1851.

Dr. Mr. Hartland

A great accumulation of correspondence, consequent on my having been visiting in the country, has prevented my returning an earlier reply to your note.

I am afraid I am not likely to find any means of assisting you to such employment as you seek. What interest I have, I have already exerted in behalf of others. But if you can ever use my recommendation with effect for any particular object that may present itself, I shall be happy to give it you to the fullest extent, and you may freely command it.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. George Hartland.

To THE REV. JOHN CLAY,[†2] 20 JANUARY 1851

Text from Frank Hammond catalogue, No. 33; MS 2 pp.

London, 1 Devonshire Terrace, | Twentieth January 1851.

Dear Sir,

I have been visiting in the Country, or I should have returned an earlier reply to your obliging and interesting letter. Allow me to thank you for the Prison reports,[†3] and to assure you that I shall read them with the greatest interest and attention: Also to assure you very sincerely that they required no other commendation more (though I have a high regard for our two friends whom you mention)[†1] than your own character, experience and earnestness. I hope to lose no time in profiting by your kindness, and I am Dear Sir,

Very faithfully Yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

To HENRY AUSTIN, [23] JANUARY 1851*

MS Morgan Library. Date: misdated by CD; Thursday was 23 Jan 51.

Office of Household Words | Thursday Evening 22nd. January 1851

My Dear Henry

I have seen a place at Highgate which, if all the circumstances attending it were favorable—rather an extensive proviso—I should "make an effort" (Mrs. Chick like)[†2] to possess myself of. I should like to have your opinion of it in a sanitary and soft watery pint[†3] of view &c &c &c. When could you go up there with me? If you have not time to walk, in the daylight, I would take you up in the little carriage and bring you back, all within an hour and a half or so. Would Monday or Tuesday suit you. Your hour shall be mine of course, and I'll call for you at Gwydyr House.[†4]

Ever affecy.

CD.

P.S. Have you any printed particulars in any Reports, concerning the more obvious absurdities & evils of the Window Tax? If you have, and can send them up to me (in Devonshire Terrace) in the course of tomorrow forenoon, I think I can do great service to the Repale[†5] cause.[†6]

To THE REV. W. L. HARDISTY, 24 JANUARY 1851*

MS Eton College.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Fourth January 1851.

My Dear Sir

Allow me to forward the enclosed,[†7] with many thanks for your kindness and interest.

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

The Reverend W. L. Hardisty

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS'S TENANT AT SHEPHERD'S BUSH, [LATE JANUARY 1851]

Mention in To Miss Coutts, 28 Jan 51. Date: clearly several days before the 28th, as the tenant had paid his rent by then.

Requesting payment of two quarters' rent.

To THE HON. MRS RICHARD WATSON, 24 JANUARY 1851

MS Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Fourth January 1851.

My Dear Mrs. Watson.

[†a]What shall I do, about the enclosed?[†1] My course, in the case of my own people, is to divide it among the gentlemen concerned. I did so, at Knebworth, and always do. But as I can't very well get at them in this case, I think it best to consult you first. I can consign a little billet-doux for each of them, to your care, if you like?[†a]

Kate will have told you, I dare say, that my despondency on coming to town was relieved by a talk with Lady John[†2] of which you were the subject, and in which she spoke of you with an earnestness of old affection and regard that did me good. I date my recovery (which has been slow) from that hour. I am still feeble, and liable to sudden outbursts of causeless rage, and demoniacal gloom—but I shall be better presently. What a thing it is, that we can't be always innocently merry, and happy with those we like best, without looking out at the back windows of life! Well—one day perhaps—after a long night—the blinds on that side of the house will be down for ever, and nothing left but the bright prospect in front.

[†a]I am grieved to see in the paper this morning, the melancholy death of a cousin of yours.[†3] Georgina has just shewn it to me.[†a]

Concerning Supper-Toast (of which I feel bound to make some mention) you did, as you always do, right, and exactly what was most agreeable to me.

My love to your excellent husband (I wonder whether he and the Dining room have got to rights yet!) and to the jolly boys, and the calm little girl.[†4] Somehow, I shall always think of Lord Spencer[†5] as eternally walking up and down the platform at Rugby, in a high chill wind, with no apparent hope of a train—as I left him. And somehow I always think of Rockingham, after coming away, as if I belonged to it and had left a bit of my heart behind—which it is so very odd to find wanting, twenty times a day.

Ever Dear Mrs. Watson | Faithfully Yours—and his—

CHARLES DICKENS

To HENRY AUSTIN, 25 JANUARY 1851*

MS Morgan Library.

Office of Household Words | Saturday Twenty Fifth January 1851.

My Dear Henry.

I am much concerned to hear that you have not been well. But everybody seems to be ill, more or less, all along of the late unseasonable weather.[†1]

Tuesday morning will be brilliant for me, but I am afraid that the time you propose, may be a trifle too early for the inmates of the Willa[†2]—for it has inmates—as I found to my horror the other day, when a lady, with curls like tight sausages, rushed out of the dining room, card in hand, and enquired of the humble individual who has now the honor to address you, if he were the real original inimitable to whom she was indebted for so many hours of—&c &c. Would you say a quarter past eleven, instead of half past ten, in Devonshire Terrace? I shall construe silence into assent.

Ever affectionately

CD.

Love to Letitia.

To JOHN LEECH, 25 JANUARY 1851

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: John Leech Esquire.

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday Night | January Twenty Fifth 1851.

My Dear Leech

This is to let you know that I am not in Wellington Street, but have come home.

Also to say, for your consideration, that I think of going to Paris, for a purpose,[†3] within the next fortnight or so—I could make the time, yours—and that if you really would like two days there, I am really disposed to bind the bargain.

Faithfully Ever

CD.

To JOHN LEECH, 27 JANUARY 1851

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: John Leech Esquire | 31 Notting Hill Terrace | Notting Hill.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Morning | Twenty Seventh January 1851.

My Dear Leech.

I find that Macready's last Haymarket Night, is,—not Tuesday, as I had supposed, but Monday.[†4] This would so hurry and inconvenience us, that it seems to put the present week out of the question. If next week would be inconvenient for the reasons you mentioned yesterday, let us think of some other time. I think I can make your time, mine.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

John Leech Esquire.

To CHARLES MANBY, 27 JANUARY 1851*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Night | Twenty Seventh January 1851

My Dear Mr. Manby.

I will endeavour to ascertain in the course of the morning whether anything can be done in the matter of your and Mr Webster's kind suggestion.[†1] I know that Mr Macready has a strong desire to make his last appearance on the stage, in a large Theatre[†2]—and I think he is right—but I feel the force of what you say in your plain, straight-forward note. I will either come down to the Haymarket in the evening, and see you—or send a line or two to you there.

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Manby Esquire.

I write this, late at night, finding your letter on my return home from a dinner, and understanding that your messenger will call early in the morning.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 28 JANUARY 1851*

MS Victoria Library, London. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Piccadilly.

Devonshire Terrace | Tuesday Night | Twenty Eighth January 1851.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

Mr. Brown will have told you that all was orderly and right, at Shepherds Bush today.

Mrs. Morson informed me the other day, that the man who rents the field, owed two quarters; and that the Gardener (the most mysterious man on earth, with the most portentous suspicions occupying his whole frame from the soles of his feet to the crown of his head) gloomily whispered that he owed all manner of debts to all manner of people. Upon this, I wrote him a serenely and severely civil epistle, requesting him to be so good as pay the money. He has dreadfully disappointed the gardener by doing so. And I have therefore informed Mrs. Morson that the tenant aforesaid may continue his tenancy if he desire to do so.

May I ask you if Mr. Illingworth has ever had any remuneration for his Services and Omnibuses? I have a reason for doing so, which I will readily tell you, of course. (I find I have written "doing so", three times in a dozen lines. I attribute it to a dismal cold.)

I am going to "make an effort", (like my friend Mrs. Chick) to buy a little place to live in, close to Holly Lodge! It is up the private road[†1] at the back of those obtrusive cottages, and is so well adapted to my young people, that I have warily broken ground with the agents. I took the Board of Health[†2] to look at it this morning—and the Board urging me on, with unqualified approval of its sanitary advantages, I am screwing myself up to the steady contemplation of the tremendous compact. Whether we shall come to terms or no, is yet in the clouds—or somewhere else.

It has occurred to me that I might,—afar off and keeping clear of all personal approach or identification,—write a little account of the Home, in Household Words,[†3] that might lead to our finding strange cases, hardly to be got at otherwise. The most extraordinary things turned up (excuse Mr. Micawber's phrase), consequent on the account, some time ago, of "what might be done by a London Curate, if he tried".[†4] Should you see any objection to my discreetly touching the subject? Perhaps you'll think of it. It only came into my head, today.

My Dear Miss Coutts | Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To CHARLES KNIGHT, 28 JANUARY 1851

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, July 1983; MS 4 pp.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 28 Jan 51.

Thanking him for his more than kind note. Has taken the Board of Health to the House; Austin says situation and house unobjectionable. Has opened [his] fire on the agents.

The cottages had not escaped me. Miss Coutts and he had talked about them. But the Willa looks away from them. Holly Lodge[†5] would be (for my children's recreation and so forth) as good as my own.

About the Paper duties.[†6] He has some mysterious men (*un*connected therewith) coming to HW Office tomorrow, in whom I fancy I descry two or three good papers. But I write tonight to Mr Huggett the Secretary,[†1] saying that you will represent me;[†2] and whatever you do, I will gladly do. Should Knight see fit to bind him to attend the Deputation on Thursday, he will do it.[†3] He places himself entirely in Knight's hands. Tell Chambers[†4] he has full power to answer for CD at his own discretion.[†5]

To GEORGE HUGGETT,[†1] [28 JANUARY 1851]

Mention in last.

To JOHN LEECH, 28 JANUARY 1851

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: John Leech Esquire | 31 Notting Hill Terrace | Notting Hill.

Devonshire Terrace | Tuesday Night | Twenty Eighth January 1851.

My Dear Leech.

No—hem!—I had not forgotten my birthday[†6]—but—a—a—the—a—modesty of the man—a—did not admit of—a—so humble an individual as himself—a—positively!

What I should propose (as Jack Humphries[†1] might observe) would be this. That we go on Monday the 10th. of February.[†2] Pr. Mail. We could then be back, please God, safe and sound for the following Saturday—and all right. What do you say? Shall that be a final bargain?

I shall be at the Household Words office all day tomorrow (Wednesday) and, except dining at the Temple from ½ past 5 to ½ past 6, available for any honest purpose.

Ever Yours
CD.

To CHARLES MANBY, 28 JANUARY 1851*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Devonshire Terrace | Tuesday Night | Twenty Eighth January 1851.

My Dear Mr. Manby

Our friend Mr. Macready is extremely sensible of your interest and friendliness, and is anxious that I should say so.

But, besides the objection he entertains to the thought of raising the prices of admission to the great body of the Theatre—the pit and galleries—in which I strongly and entirely agree with him, his arrangements, though not settled, are yet in such a state of approach to completion that he could not at this moment entertain a new offer, even if it were free from the great obstacle I have mentioned. Therefore I can do no more tonight than assure you (and, through you, Mr. Webster) of our perfectly understanding, and cordially responding to, your good feeling.

I am half blind with a cold.

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Manby Esquire.

To THE HON. MRS RICHARD WATSON, 28 JANUARY 1851

MS Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Tuesday Night | Twenty Eighth January 1851.

My Dear[†3] Mrs. Watson.

I presume you mean Mr. Stafford[†4] and Mr. Stopford, to pay Wilson[†5] (as I have instructed him) a guinea each?—Am I right? In that just case, I still owe you a guinea for my part. I was going to send you a Post Office Order for that amount, when a faint sense of absurdity mantled my ingenuous visage with a blush, and I thought it better to owe you the money until we meet. I hope it may be soon!

I believe I may lay claim to the mysterious inkstand. Also to a Volume lettered on the back "Shipwrecks and Disasters at Sea, II"[†1] which I left, when I came down at Christmas. Will you take care of them as Hostages, until we effect an exchange?

Charley went back in great spirits, threatening to write to George. It was a very wet night, and John took him to the Railroad. He said on his return, "Mas'r Charles went off very gay Sir. He found some young gen'lmen as was his friends, in the train Sir." "Come," said I, "I am glad of that. How many were there? Two or three?" "Oh dear Sir, there was a matter of forty Sir! All with their heads out o' the coach winders Sir, a hallooing 'Dickens!' all over the Station!"

Her Ladyship, and the Ward of the Fiz-ZISH-un,[†2] send their best loves in which I heartily join. If you and your dear husband come to town before we bring out Bulwer's Comedy, I think we must have a snug reading of it.

Ever dear Mrs. Watson | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To B. WOODCROFT,[†3] 28 JANUARY 1851

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue Oct 1980; MS (3rd person): 2 pp.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 28 Jan 51 (misdated 1857 in catalogue); addressed B. Woodcroft.

Mr. Dickens cannot (in the midst of many engagements) inspect his proof[†4] . . . but he is much interested by the table of contents of the Volume,[†5] and will be happy to receive it when published.

To [HENRY] SUTTON,[†6] [LATE JANUARY 1851]

Mention in To Lytton, 30 Jan 51. Date: presumably a day or two before the 30th.

To HENRY AUSTIN, 30 JANUARY 1851*

MS Morgan Library. Address (envelope, MS Private): Henry Austin Esquire | Gwydyr House | Whitehall. PM 30 Jan 51.

Devonshire Terrace | Thirtieth January 1851.

My Dear Henry

I have offered—with fear and trembling—for the House. The Agent mysteriously hints at the offer of another "party", being also on the stocks. And that's all at present.

—Paris departure settled for Monday Evening February 10th. Now Sir, what do you say to that? Back, at latest, by the following Saturday forenoon. (Note. I am mysterious to the unknown Sanitarian,[†1] as to precise movements, in order that we may not be bothered en route). If he turns up in Paris for the Abattoirs, by appointment, that will do.[†2]

I hope to join the Deputation tomorrow[†3]—but (like Sir Giles Overreach)[†4] an undone Article sits upon my sleeve. Not the same sort of article as sat upon his—his was a widow[†5]—but a tempting subject too. I call it "Red Tape".[†6]

Ever affecy.
CD.

To JOHN LEECH, 30 JANUARY 1851

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: John Leech Esquire | 31 Notting Hill Terrace | Notting Hill.

Devonshire Terrace. | Thirtieth January 1851.

My Dear Leech.

Fixed (D.V.) for the 10th.!! Austin (a capital fellow as you know, without his wife) had some idea of going at the same time, on a Cemetery Commission[†7]—but I don't think he will.[†8]

—I have another idea! I observe that on Monday Evening the 3rd.—next Monday—there is a great Sparring Demonstration over in the Westminster Bridge Road.[†9] I want to see it. Could we go together? If so, you might call in the afternoon (say at 5) at the H.W.—we might chop—and take pugilistic diversion afterwards. We might then arrange when we would go together for the laissez-passer.[†10] A friend of mine (not you of course) is hardly to be trusted, I think, to get one, alone.

—I have another idea! If you were to answer this by post now?—Eh?—

Ever Yours

CD.

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 30 JANUARY 1851

MS Lytton Papers.

Devonshire Terrace | Thirtieth January 1851.

My Dear Bulwer.

I have heard from Mr. Sutton—a kind of Ghoule or Harpy, I have little doubt—and he says in his note that our scheme is one "which by an unfortunate coincidence appears very similar to that of my own".[†1] He asks for an interview. I have replied (serenely—with compliments) that I don't consider myself at liberty to discuss our scheme, until the gentlemen concerned shall have agreed upon its public announcement—and that I must beg to excuse myself from making an appointment.

Lemon's knowledge of him is just what yours is. He begs me to tell you so. I think he sent me an introductory letter from Buckstone[†2] the Actor sometime ago, stating that he wanted to develop his Insurance Scheme, with a view to getting me to be a Director. I know that I civilly declined to see him.

I had not thought of the Royal Society of Literature.[†3] Except for my knowledge of the existence of a brass doorplate, bearing that inscription, in St. Martin's Lane, I really don't know what it is![†4]

Hurrah for the conclusion of the Play! We are all agog here, standing like greyhounds (especially Lemon, who is very like a greyhound[†5] in the slips).[†6]

Kate and Georgina beg to be kindly remembered

Ever Faithfully,

CD.

To F. M. EVANS, 31 JANUARY 1851*

MS Yale University Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Thirty First January 1851.

My Dear Evans.

I am not sure—but I may very possibly—require to anticipate the accounts of the last half year, by drawing five or six hundred pounds from you. IF[†7] I should require about such a sum, in a week or ten days, can you, on this notice, conveniently do it?[†1]

Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN LEECH, 31 JANUARY 1851

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: John Leech Esquire | 31 Notting Hill Terrace | Notting Hill.

Devonshire Terrace | Thirty First January 1851.

My Dear Leech.

I have another idea!!! Monday being Macready's last appearance at the Haymarket[†2]—which I hope you have not forgotten—perhaps you would like to come into our box?[†3]

Ever Yours

CD

To MARK LEMON, 31 JANUARY 1851

Text from MDGH, I, 243.

Devonshire Terrace, Friday, Jan. 31st, 1851.

My dear Lemon,[†4]

We are deeply sorry to receive the mournful intelligence of your calamity.[†5] But we know you will both have found comfort in that blessed belief, from which the sacred figure with the child upon His knee is, in all stages of our lives, inseparable, for of such is the kingdom of God!

We join in affectionate loves to you and your dear wife. She well deserves your praise, I am sure.

Ever affectionately yours

[CD]

February

To DR THOMAS STONE,[†1] 2 FEBRUARY 1851

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Devonshire Terrace. | Sunday Second February 1851.

Dear Sir

I take the liberty of offering a few remarks to you in reference to your paper[†2] on Dreams. If I venture to say that I think it may be made a little more original, and a little less recapitulative of the usual stories in the books,[†3] it is because I have read something on the subject, and have long observed it with the greatest attention and interest.

In the first place I would suggest that the influence of the day's occurrences, and of recent events, is by no means so great (generally speaking) as is usually supposed. I rather think there is a kind of conventional philosophy and belief, on this head. My own dreams are usually of twenty years ago. I often blend my present position with them; but very confusedly; whereas my life of twenty years ago is very distinctly represented.[†4] I have been married fourteen years, and have nine children, but I do not remember that I ever, on any occasion, dreamed of myself as being invested with those responsibilities, or surrounded by those relations. This would be so remarkable if it were an idiosyncrasy that I have asked many intelligent and observant men, whether they found their dreams usually of the same retrospective character. Many have thought not, at first; but on consideration have strongly confirmed my own experience. Ladies, affectionately and happily married, have often recalled, when I have made the same remark in conversation, that while they were engaged—though their thoughts were naturally much set on their engagement—they never dreamed of their lovers.[†5] I should say the chances were a thousand to one against anybody's dreaming of the subject closely occupying the waking mind—except—and this I wish particularly to suggest to you—in a sort of allegorical manner. For example. If I have been perplexed during the day, in bringing out the incidents of a story as I wish, I find that I dream at night—never by any chance, of the story itself—but perhaps of trying to shut a door that will fly open—or to screw something tight that will be loose—or to drive a horse on some very important journey, who unaccountably becomes a dog, and can't be urged along—or to find my way out of a series of chambers that appears to have no end. I sometimes think that the origin of all fable and Allegory—the very first conception of such fictions—may be referable to this class of dreams.

Did you ever hear of any person who, by trying and resolving to fix the mind on any subject, could dream of it—or who did not, under such circumstances, dream preposterously wide of the mark? When dreams can be directly traced to any incidents of recent occurrence, it appears to me that the incidents are usually of the most insignificant character—such as made no impression, of which we were conscious, at the time—such as present themselves again, in the wildest eccentricity.—Like Macnish's[†1] friend, with the stone, and the wooden leg, and the building.[†2] The obvious convenience and effect of making the dreams of heroes and heroines bear on the great themes of a story as illustrated by their late experiences, seem to me to have led the Poets away from the truth, on this head—and to have established the conventional belief from which I differ.

Recurring dreams which come back almost as certainly as the night—an unhealthy and morbid species of these visions—should be particularly noticed. Secrecy on the part of the dreamer, as to these illusions, has a remarkable tendency to perpetuate them. I once underwent great affliction in the loss of a very dear young friend. For a year, I dreamed of her, every night—sometimes as living, sometimes as dead, never in any terrible or shocking aspect. As she had been my wife's sister, and had died suddenly in our house, I forbore to allude to these dreams—kept them wholly to myself. At the end of the year, I lay down to sleep, in an Inn on a wild Yorkshire Moor, covered with snow. As I looked out of the window on the bleak winter prospect before I undressed, I wondered within myself whether the subject would follow me here. It did. Writing home next morning, I mentioned the circumstance, cheerfully, as being curious.[†3] The subject immediately departed out of my dreams, and years passed before it returned.[†4] Then, I was living in Italy, and it was All Souls' Night, and people were going about with Bells, calling on the Inhabitants to pray for the dead.—Which I have no doubt I had some sense of, in my sleep; and so flew back to the Dead.[†5]

The assistance supposed to be sometimes furnished, in sleep, towards the solution of Problems, or invention of things that had baffled the waking mind, I take to be the result of a sudden vigorous effect of the refreshed intellect in waking.[†a] But language has a great part in dreams. I think, on waking, the head is usually full of words.[†a]

—The sudden picture of a whole life, in a certain stage of drowning, I cannot but consider an indisputable phenomonon. In Captain Beaufort's[†1] case, it has been most remarkably and minutely stated by himself.[†2] I think I remember a similar description, in the autobiographical part of the life of Mathews the comedian.[†3] I have also received it from the lips of persons who have been saved. That others have been saved, who have not experienced the same sensations, is a fact that does not disprove these stories. Without enquiring whether these latter people may have been drowned enough, or drowned too much, I think we have sufficient evidence on which to found the conclusion that this remarkable mental feature has presented itself in drowning accidents, and in no other class of accidents.[†4]

Are dreams so very various and different, as you suppose? Or is there, taking into consideration our vast differences in point of mental and physical constitution, a remarkable sameness in them? Surely, it is an extremely unusual circumstance to hear any narration of a dream that does violence to our dreaming experience or enlarges it very much.[†5] And how many dreams are common to us all, from the Queen to the Costermonger! We all fall off that Tower—we all skim above the ground at a great pace and can't keep on it—we all say "this must be a dream, because I was in this strange, low-roofed, beam-obstructed place, once before, and it turned out to be a dream"—we all take unheard-of trouble to go to the Theatre and never get in—or to go to a Feast, which can't be eaten or drunk—or to read letters, placards, or books, that no study will render legible—or to break some Thraldom or other, from which we can't escape—or we all confound the living with the dead, and all frequently have a knowledge or suspicion that we are doing it—we all astonish ourselves by telling ourselves, in a dialogue with ourselves, the most astonishing and terrific secrets—we all go to public places in our night dresses, and are horribly disconcerted, lest the company should observe it.

—And this appears to me, to suggest another very curious point—the occasional endeavour to correct our delusions, made by some waking and reasoning faculty of the brain. For, it is to be observed that we are,[†1] actually, in our night dress at the time. I suspect that a man who lay down in his clothes under a hedge, or on a ship's deck, would not have, and could not have, this very common kind of dream. It has no connexion with our being cold, for it constantly presents itself to people warm in bed. I cannot help thinking that this observant and corrective speck of the brain suggests to you, "my good fellow how can you be in this crowd, when you know you are in your shirt?" It is not strong enough to dispel the vision, but is just strong enough to present this inconsistency.

If you think any of these random remarks worth your consideration, I should be happy to appoint a time for discussing the subject still further with you. I shall be happy to insert the paper, as it stands, if you prefer it—but in that case I should desire to pursue it with my own hints of experience and opinion—and if we could agree, we might dispatch the subject in one paper.[†2]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Dr. Stone.

To ELIOT WARBURTON,[†3] 2 FEBRUARY 1851*

MSS Professor Harry Stone (aa) and Professor Angus Easson (bb).

[a]Devonshire Terrace | Sunday Second February | 1851.

My Dear Sir

I was obliged to dine at Hampstead on Friday, and got home too late to present myself at Mrs. Warburton's[†4] party—which I should otherwise have done with the greatest pleasure. Since then I have been grasped in the throat by a most dismal cold; and I am wrestling violently with the enemy at this present writing.[a] [b]I am not clear which of us will throw the other, but I am afraid he has the best of it.

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Eliot Warburton Esquire.[b]

To MRS JOHN LEECH, 3 FEBRUARY 1851

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: Mrs John Leech | 31 Notting Hill Terrace.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Morning February Third | 1851.

My Dear Mrs. Leech.

Our poor little Dora is very ill—with something like congestion of the Brain. She was taken with it on Saturday at midnight, and, though better this morning, is not out of danger. Kate therefore will not go to the Theatre[†1] tonight, neither will Georgina. So I would recommend your coming straight to the Household Words office, and there taking up Leech and me. If your fly presents itself at that vast establishment at twenty five minutes before 7, that will be the right time. My engagement with Leech,[†2] I consider undisturbed. Kate and Georgina send their loves. The little thing was so ill yesterday, that we thought it right to have her baptized by White,[†3] who was dining here.[†4]

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. John Leech

To EDWARD BREWSTER,[†5] 5 FEBRUARY 1851*

MS Mr J. Carville.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park | Fifth February 1851.

Dear Sir

You will see, from the enclosed draft,[†6] in what matter I want your printing aid.

Will you have the kindness to make a good poster of it, and send it without delay to the London Tavern, to be displayed outside. They expect it.

With as little delay as possible, you shall receive the List of Stewards (from Mr. Forster, if I should be out of town for a few days) and then you will be able to set out a more detailed bill, and to print the tickets.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

—Brewster Esquire.

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 6 FEBRUARY 1851

MS Lytton Papers.

Devonshire Terrace | Thursday Night | Sixth February 1851.

My Dear Bulwer.

I think "Our order" an admirable name—regarding it as one of our Order. But, endeavouring to look at it from another point of view, as an outsider and one of the Public, I doubt it. I think we want a name suggestive of a grave and well considered Institution that is to last a long time. I hesitate about this, uncertain whether there is not a kind of Fancy in it that would bewilder Mr. Bounce[†1] of the Royal Exchange. I think it should be a plain name expressive of an Institution of Literature and Art.[†2]

Poor little Anne Romer! I am very sorry she is going to be married so soon.[†3] Not that I am otherwise than glad, in the abstract, when young ladies are married—but I fear her husband will have to refer the baker to the Haymarket Treasury, oftener than is hopeful. Then, she may have children out of number—and that interferes with professional avocations—and—altogether, I wish she had waited twelve months.[†4]

I saw her the other night—in a bad part, of her husband's writing[†5]—and there was a freshness about her (she sang as if her voice were a sort of bird's, all in bloom) that pleased the audience amazingly, and was, as Mr. Pepys says, mighty pretty to see.[†6]

Ever Cordially Yours

CD

P.S. Georgina is deeply impressed by the profundity of your occult knowledge. She thinks that man (we can't remember who he was) who took you for a Wizard,[†7] knew better than we thought he did.

To THOMAS MITTON, 6 FEBRUARY 1851*

MS Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Sixth February 1851.

My Dear Mitton

I should be very glad if I could help you to obtain an appointment under the Registration Act,[†1] but I am bound to assure you that you (most unconsciously I have no doubt) exaggerate my power of doing service in such a case. If any offices were known to be immediately in the gift or nomination of any one whom I know (and so know, as that I could independently ask a favor of) it would be a pleasure to me to go into the enquiry "are they such as I honestly know you would be fitted for, and is it reasonable to ask for one?" But, that in the present state of the subject—with no knowledge of the measure itself—of the nature of the patronage—of the authorities with whom it will rest—of any thing about it—that in such a state of the matter, I could hope to take any useful step, or should do right in encouraging you to believe that I could—our old friendship forbids me to imagine for a moment. It would be a weak and miserable assumption of a power I don't possess.

As to Martin,[†2] no judge ever asks for an appointment, for any one, from any authority whomsoever. The moment he accepts that post, he lays down all use of such influence. I believe there is no Judge in this kingdom who would ask the Postmaster General, to make his Servant a Letter Carrier. There is no point of honor, in any station, more rigidly observed.

As to urging your request, as a matter of compensation,[†3] it would be absolute Lunacy. Any approach to such a presentation of such a claim, would be certain to receive the most signal discouragement and rejection. I can present nothing to my imagination, more injudicious.

And I think the difficulty altogether, will be immensely greater than you imagine. For all the legal offices, there will be young Barristers striving hard. For all the others, there will be every kind of offshoot from the existing Registration in Somerset House (where a system of extraordinary care and accuracy has been established) and from the other Government Offices. The Staff will be (I take it) much less numerous than you suppose. I see, wherever I go, numbers of men, educating themselves, in mind and manner and appearance, with extraordinary pains, for any such chance.

Until we know what offices are to be made, what qualifications are necessary, what duties are to be done, and what examination is to be insisted on—rely upon it, the appointments will be hedged round, in these ticklish times, by many such conditions—it is impossible even to discuss the subject with the least advantage. If, when we get this knowledge, I can personally befriend you, of course I will. But I do assure you most sincerely that there are not three men in power from whom I would ask anything. And I do not conceive that such a measure as this, would come in the way of any one of them.

Let us wait and see. I know that kind of life pretty well, and I know that what I write is the truth and sense of the case. If I blinked it in the least, to swell my own importance or your hopes, I should be very unworthy of your confidence.

Faithfully Always

CD.

To MESSRS HOLLAND AND SONS,[†1] 7 FEBRUARY 1851*

Facsimile in John Wilson catalogue, 1984.

Devonshire Terrace | Seventh February 1851.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Messrs. Holland and Sons, and begs to say that he has seen the house No. 1 Cambridge Terrace,[†2] and likes it exceedingly. But the heavy ground-rent is an insurmountable objection to his making an offer for the purchase.

To CHARLES BABBAGE,[†3] 8 FEBRUARY 1851

MS British Museum.

Devonshire Terrace | Eighth February 1851.

My Dear Babbage.

Many thanks for your kind letter. Can you tell me how many tickets you want?[†4] Otherwise, in the great press for them, I shall not know how to reserve your places. A word in reply.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Babbage Esquire

To WILLIAM JERDAN, 8 FEBRUARY 1851*

MS British Museum.

Devonshire Terrace | Eighth February 1851.

My Dear Jerdan

I have put you down for the benefit, and also for the dinner. In the benefit-case, I am sorry to say I cannot undertake for Mr. Durham and Mr. Hunt.[†1] In the dinner-case, I have put their names on the ticket list; and (in those names) their tickets can be purchased at the London Tavern on the afternoon of the 15th. or afterwards.

I will gladly and heartily serve on the Testimonial Committee.[†2] I strongly advise this,—that there be no public notification of, or allusion to, the design, until that committee shall have been formed—and shall have met—and decided on their course. It seems to me exceedingly important, for many reasons, to be strict in observing this rule.

I am going to Paris, but purpose being at home again this day week.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

W. Jerdan Esquire.

To JOHN FORSTER, [EARLY FEBRUARY 1851]

Text from F, VI, vi, 537. Date: early Feb, according to Forster; Georgina's letter (see below) suggests near 8 Feb.

Little Dora is getting on bravely, thank God![†3]

To JOHN LEECH, 8 FEBRUARY 1851

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: John Leech Esquire.

Household Words Office | Eighth February 1851

My Dear Leech

I never was more astounded than I have been by a proposal from Spencer Lyttelton,[†4] to go with us to Paris! As he is the jolliest of the jolly I have said Yes—hoping you will like the addition of a man with high spirits, who is up to anything.

Ever Yours

CD

To BENJAMIN WEBSTER, 8 FEBRUARY 1851

Mention in Ogden Goelet sale, January 1935; dated 8 Feb 51.

Telling him that he had been chosen as a steward for the Farewell Dinner to Macready.

To HENRY BICKNELL, 10 FEBRUARY 1851*

MS Victoria & Albert Museum. Address: Henry Bicknell Esquire | Effra Road | Brixton.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Tenth February 1851.

My Dear Sir

I have put you and Roberts down at 16 box places (the Stalls will be a guinea). I think your friends had better "fight it out at the box office", in future, for I really don't know how [†a]on earth[†a] many of the people already striving for seats will be got into the house. Anyone in whom you are really interested, of course I shall be sincerely glad to help still if I can. I begin to think that the whole party, audience and actors, had better be got over to Rome (I mean the City—not the Church), so that the play may come off in the Ruins of the Coliseum. Though they would be rather small for the purpose.

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Henry Bicknell Esquire.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 10 FEBRUARY 1851*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street | Piccadilly.

Devonshire Terrace | Tenth February 1851.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I was very sorry to miss you the other day. I should have been at your house before now, but for constant occupation that has held me all day, every day—and a cold that has made me a snivelling phaenomonon.[†1]

By way of curing it, I am running off to Paris, for a Household Words purpose,[†2] by the Mail Train tonight. I purpose being at home again in a week, and shall hope to present myself immediately afterwards. I think Mr. Tracey has a fair case for us.

Excellent reports of Charley.

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

I have lost the house at Highgate—outbidden, by what the Agent calls "another party".

To MRS CHARLES DICKENS, 10 FEBRUARY 1851

MS British Museum.

London Tavern | Monday Night | Tenth February 1851.

My Dear Kate.

I forgot to say that letters are to be sent (if you will send them by John) to Wills, every day. He will select those belonging to Macready's Dinner for Forster.

Ever affectionately
CD

P.S. Lyttelton is extremely jovial, and sends regards. Love to Georgina and the children.

To J. A. EVANS,[†1] 10 FEBRUARY 1851*

MS (fire fragment) Yale University Library. Envelope and heading transcribed before partial destruction in Prestwick air crash, Dec 1954. Address: Mr J. A. Evans | 17 Maddox Street.

Devonshire Terrace | Tenth February 1851.

Mr. Charles Dickens sends his compliments to Mr. Evans and is obliged to him for his note (which absence has prevented Mr. Dickens from answering sooner) but is not disposed to purchase the dressing case.

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 10 FEBRUARY 1851

MS Lytton Papers.

Devonshire Terrace | Tenth February 1851.

My Dear Bulwer

I am tearing over to Paris for five days, but I hurry over this note to say:

Firstly, and irrepressibly, That I think Gleig[†2] is an ass.[†3]

Secondly, That Endowment is a very good name. I doubt whether we could ever get a better.

Thirdly, That Forster has written to you with a note of a little suggestion of mine as to [the] situation[†4] between the Duke and Softhead. I think it may be made much more droll, by putting Softhead into a sedan chair to wait for "Marston Moor"—and that Irish Porter would be one of the chairmen.[†1]

Fourthly, That the cuts will suggest themselves, as the men get perfect on the stage. I will observe most carefully, and communicate with you.[†2]

Fifthly, that we are putting in motion all kinds of strange plots and devices, as to the place where we shall play in London.

Sixthly, that it's quite clear little Anne Romer ought to put off her Nuptials,—but that perhaps if the gentleman has quite made up his mind to expect it (I only mean the Nuptial benediction) he may be unwilling to postpone it.—Marriage and chairmanship, totally irreconcileable, no doubt.

London is a vile place, I sincerely believe. I have never taken kindly to it since I lived abroad. Whenever I come back from the Country, now, and see that great heavy canopy lowering over the housetops, I wonder what on earth I do there, except on obligation.

Ever Cordially Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

You come up for the Reading?[†3]

To ALEXANDER ROBERTSON,[†4] 10 FEBRUARY 1851*

MS Irvine Burns Club.

Devonshire Terrace, London | Tenth February 1851.

Sir.

I beg to assure you that I have the greatest pleasure in becoming an honorary member of the Irvine Burns Club,[†5] originated in memory of that immortal genius. Oblige me by having the kindness to convey my cordial good wishes and thanks to my unknown friends who have held me in such gratifying recollection.

With many thanks for your obliging favor, I am

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Alexander Robertson Esquire.

To FRANK STONE, 10 FEBRUARY 1851*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Devonshire Terrace | Tenth February 1851.

My Dear Stone.

The Comedy, being finished, will be read (by Mr. Macready) at Forster's rooms on Wednesday the 19th. at 3 o'Clock; when your attendance, with the rest of the company, is particularly requested.

In the meantime, you will receive Sir E.B.L.'s draft of the proposed scheme, and judge for yourself of its vast importance to all associated with Literature and Art.

Ever Faithfully

CD

over

I have put you down, my Pump, for 3 box places.[†1]—I too have had a horrible cold.—As a cure for which, I am off to Paris tonight by Mail Train, on a Household Wordian Expedition. I purpose being back on Saturday. I suppose you are very grey? It was in 1834, I believe, that we last met.

To AUGUSTUS TRACEY, 10 FEBRUARY 1851*

MS University of Nebraska, Lincoln.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Tenth February | 1851.

My Dear Tracey.

I am obliged to run over to Paris tonight.—On Monday (this day week) at 2, I will come and see the girl. I should say that she is just the case for us.

Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

To W. H. WILLS, 10 FEBRUARY 1851

MS Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Tenth February 1851.

My Dear Wills

There is a small part in Bulwer's Comedy—but very good, what there is—not much—my servant, who opens the play—which I should be very glad if you would like to do.[†2]

Pray understand that there is no end of men who would do it, and that if you have the least objection to the trouble, I don't make this the expression of a wish even.

Otherwise, I should like you to be in the scheme, which is a very great and important one, and which cannot have too many men who are steadily—not flightily, like some of our friends[†1]—in earnest, and who are not to be lightly discouraged.

If you do the part, I should like to have a talk with you about the Secretarial duties. They must be performed by some one, I clearly see, and will require good business direction. I should like to put some young fellow to whom such work, and its remuneration, would be an object, under your eye, if we could find one entire and perfect chrysolite[†2] anywhere.

Let me know whether I am to rate you on the Ship's books, or not.[†3] If yes, consider yourself "called" to the Reading (by Macready) at Forster's rooms on Wednesday the 19th. at 3.[†4]

And in the meantime you shall have a proof of the plan.

Ever Yours

CD.

To MRS CHARLES DICKENS, [13] FEBRUARY 1851

MS British Museum. Date: misdated by CD: Thursday was 13 Feb 51.

Hotel Wagram, Paris | Thursday Twelfth February | 1851.

My Dearest Kate

I received your letter this morning (on returning from an expedition to a market 13 miles away, which involved the necessity of getting up at 5),[†5] and am delighted to have such good accounts of all at home.

We had D'Orsay to dinner yesterday, and I am hurried to dress now, in order to pay a promised visit to his "atelier."[†6] He was very happy with us, and is much improved both in spirits and looks.[†1] Lord and Lady Castlereagh[†2] live downstairs here, and we went to them in the evening, and afterwards brought him upstairs to smoke. Tonight we are going to see Lemaitre[†3] in the renowned Belphegor piece.[†4] Tomorrow at noon, we leave Paris for Calais (the Boulogne boat does not serve our turn), and, unless the weather for crossing should be absurd, I shall be at home, please God, early on the evening of Saturday. It continues to be delightful weather here—frosty, but very clear and fine. Leech and I had a charming country walk before breakfast this morning—at Poissy—and enjoyed it very much. The rime was on the grass and trees, and the country most delicious.

Spencer Lyttelton is a capital companion on a trip, and a great addition to the party. We have got on famously, and been very facetious.

With best love to Georgina and the darlings

Ever most affectionately

To W. H. WILLS, 13 FEBRUARY 1851*

MS Huntington Library.

Hotel Wagram, Paris | Thursday Thirteenth February | 1851.

My Dear Wills

I write a hasty line to report progress. I hope to be home on Saturday Evening, but I doubt whether I shall be in time to call at the Office on the way.

I have seen the abattoirs and the Market. They will make a decent description, I think, and Mr. Grantham[†5] is very agreeable. But I could have seen everything quite as well without him.

I did not contemplate any provincial business in your case.[†1] I doubt the possibility of any coming off, before next Christmas time. I shall be very glad indeed to have your services in the business department.[†2]

To JOHN COLEMAN,[†3] [?MID-FEBRUARY 1851]

Mention in John Coleman, Players and Playwrights I Have Known, 1888, I, 56. Date: probably mid-Feb, when he was sending out tickets for the dinner: see next.

Replying to his appeal for a seat at Macready's farewell banquet and enclosing a ticket.

To MR JOSEPH,[†4] 17 FEBRUARY 1851*

MS (in unknown hand) Wellcome Historical Medical Library.

London Tavern | 17 February 1851

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr Joseph and begs to say that his name is placed on the list for six tickets & that they can now be purchased at the bar of the London tavern in that name.

The ladies' tickets can be purchased, at seven and sixpence each, on and after Friday next.

Mr. Dickens begs to add that the list of stewards is complete.

To [?W. C. BENNETT], 18 FEBRUARY 1851*

MS Yale University Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Eighteenth February 1851.

My Dear Sir

I have put Mr. John Bennett's[†5] name on the list, for the full number of tickets required. Supposing this number to include yours, I have not put down your name too; but, if you still desire any, they can be purchased at the bar of the London Tavern.

I regret that I cannot have the pleasure of accepting the accompanying lines.[†1] It is perhaps best that I should avoid the subject. I have been in Paris, or I would have returned them immediately.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To T. K. HERVEY,[†2] 18 FEBRUARY 1851

Mention in Sotheby's catalogue, Mar 1879; MS 2 pp.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 18 Feb 51.

On the subject of a benefit.[†3]

To R. J. LANE,[†4] 18 FEBRUARY 1851*

MS Sir John Nicholson.

Devonshire Terrace | Eighteenth February 1851.

My Dear Lane.

One word, in certain cases, is not only "as good as a thousand"[†5]—but much better. Thank you!—Coming back from a short trip to Paris, I find your cheery little book,[†6] and am truly gratified and affected by your cordial dedication.[†7] It is most acceptable and welcome to me, and I am sincerely proud to know how well you like me.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard J Lane Esquire.

To JAMES ROGERS,[†1] 18 FEBRUARY 1851

Text from Sotheby's catalogue, Mar 1980; MS (3rd person) 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 18 Feb 51.

Regretting that he cannot attend the Anniversary Dinner of the London Orphan Asylum.

To FRANK STONE, 18 FEBRUARY 1851*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Devonshire Terrace | Tuesday Eighteenth February | 1851.

My Dear Stone

I have written 60 letters (about the dinner) since 8 last night[†2]—have an awful arrear of my own correspondence—and think of flying the country.

I have secured tickets for yourself and Mr. Dillon.[†3] They shall both be sent to you in a day or two.

Affecy. Ever

CD.

To AUGUSTUS [DICKENS],[†4] 19 FEBRUARY 1851

Extract in Christie's catalogue, Nov 1981; MS 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 19 Feb 51; catalogue wrongly assumed addressed to Augustus Egg.

The whole extent of the Hall of Commerce[†5] was filled almost instantly.[†6] Even the accommodation designed for ladies must, I fear, be sacrificed. I dare not occupy another inch of space, and fifty times a day am obliged to say so, to people of great consideration in such a matter.

To E. CHAPMAN,[†7] 19 FEBRUARY 1851*

MS Dickens House. Address: E. Chapman Esquire | 15 Burton Street | Burton Crescent.

London Tavern | Nineteenth February | 1851.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Chapman and regrets to be obliged to inform him that every ticket that can possibly be issued for the dinner to Mr. Macready, is sold.

To JOHN HULLAH, 19 FEBRUARY 1851*

MS Mrs G. C. E. Rosser.

Devonshire Terrace | Nineteenth February | 1851.

My Dear Hullah.

I was charmed with the Hall[†1] today, which—for proportion, construction, convenience, and sound—is the best I was ever in. But, unhappily, regard being had to tables, waiters, and other nightmares, we can dine a greater number of guests at the Hall of Commerce. Consequently, I am obliged, in a delirious condition, to take the Macready dinner "bock again",[†2] and to write letters to the seven or eight hundred people who can't be got in.

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To EDWARD LAND,[†3] 19 FEBRUARY 1851*

MS Fitzwilliam Museum, Cambridge. Address: Edward Land Esquire | 5 Foley Place | Langham Place.

Devonshire Terrace | Wednesday Nineteenth February | 1851.

Dear Sir

I am called out to the London Tavern, where we are in a great difficulty by the rapid sale of the whole re-issue of tickets—which is entirely gone—and the impossibility of accommodating hundreds of applicants. Would it suit you to call at 5 this afternoon, instead of at 12? Or, if not, may I hope to see you tomorrow morning?

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

—Land Esquire

To [?E.L.] NUGENT,[†4] [19 FEBRUARY 1851]

Mention in To Manby, 20 Feb 51.

Explaining that there is not a ticket of any sort, for the dinner to Macready.

To CHARLES BABBAGE, 20 FEBRUARY 1851

MS British Museum.

Devonshire Terrace | Twentieth February 1851.

My Dear Babbage

All your tickets are in reserve, and will be sent to you on Monday Morning, except Mr. William Byron's.[†1] He is not upon the list, and I fear is a new name. I say, fear, because the rush for tickets has been so extraordinary and the London Tavern people have made such an unfortunate mistake in hastily exaggerating the capacity of the new room, that every inch of space is appropriated, and to issue another ticket is an utter impossibility.[†2]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Babbage Esquire

To OCTAVIAN BLEWITT,[†3] 20 FEBRUARY 1851*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Devonshire Terrace. | Twentieth February 1851.

My Dear Sir

I am exceedingly sorry to have vacated my seat at the General Committee of the Literary Fund, but it has happened on the last few days of meeting, that some other engagement has interfered with my attendance.[†4]

I shall be very happy to be nominated as a Member of the Council. I beg you to assure the General Committee with my respectful acknowledgements that I accept their obliging offer most readily.[†5]

When Mr. Poole was placed on the Pension List, I was still his banker to the extent of some portion of the last generous grant most considerately and delicately made to him by the Literary Fund.[†6] He now begs me to remit the enclosed to you, with a request that it may be entered in the books as a Subscription "from a friend to the Institution" by my hands.

I am Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Octavian Blewitt Esquire

To S. C. HALL, 20 FEBRUARY 1851*

MS University of California, Los Angeles.

Devonshire Terrace. | Twentieth February 1851.

My Dear Hall.

They object to dinners in Exeter Hall.

I am grieved to say I cannot manage the ticket.[†1] It is physically impossible. We are even obliged to with-hold the Ladies' tickets.[†2]

Ever Yours
CD.

To CHARLES MANBY, 20 FEBRUARY 1851

MS Dickens House.

Devonshire Terrace | Thursday Twentieth February 1851

My Dear Mr. Manby.

I wrote to Mr. Nugent yesterday morning, elaborately explaining to him that there is not a ticket of any sort, for the dinner to W. C. Macready, to be had. Every inch of space is so closely occupied, that it is absolutely impossible to issue another.

I have been to Paris on business, and was obliged to leave the Patent Laws in the hands of the Civil Engineers.[†3] I am beginning to think by the way, that if the Crystal Palace don't begin to fall down very soon, one or two of the C Es will look a little dim in the sight of the public before long.[†4]

Faithfully yours
CHARLES DICKENS

PS.—I could not issue a ticket yesterday either to Mr. Barry[†5] or to James Wallack.[†6] We could sell a thousand easily, if we could find a sufficiently large room to hold a dinner for so many in.

To AUGUSTUS TRACEY, 20 FEBRUARY 1851*

MS University of Texas.

Devonshire Terrace | Twentieth February 1851.

My Dear Tracey

Supposing you have discovered nothing adverse to her story, we will take the little girl I saw.[†1] I have instructed Mrs. Morson to send her clothes to you.

Sir Edwin Landseer remembered the Model very well,—and so did Maclise,—but neither knew more of her.

Faithfully Always
CHARLES DICKENS

To F. O. WARD, 20 FEBRUARY 1851*

MS John Rylands Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Twentieth February 1851

My Dear Sir

I fear I shall be frying other fish on Sunday. But if my cookery be at my own choice and disposal, I shall bear your note in mind.

You are not quite right, I suspect, about the Rats.[†2] Without going to the full extent of the Rat author (whom the article did not profess wholly to confide in)[†3] I have prodigious faith in their power of eating grain, or almost any vegetable substance—bearing a lively remembrance of a certain Garden I once had at Genoa.[†4] And I doubt your position about weight. I know some lean men with shining eyes, who have most portentous twists,[†5] and who would give the fattest alderman a turkey or two, and beat him.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

F. O. Ward Esquire.

To MISS MARY BOYLE, 21 FEBRUARY 1851

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Friday Night. Late. | Twenty First February 1851.

My Dear Miss Boyle.

I have devoted a couple of hours this evening to going very carefully over your paper (which I had read before), and to endeavouring to bring it closer, and to lighten it, and to give it that sort of compactness which a habit of composition, and of disciplining one's thoughts like a regiment, and of studying the art of putting each soldier into his right place, may have gradually taught me to think necessary. I hope, when you see it in print, you will not be alarmed by my use of the pruning-knife. I have tried to exercise it with the utmost delicacy and discretion, and to suggest to you, especially towards the end, how this sort of writing (regard being had to the size of the journal in which it appears) requires to be compressed, and is made pleasanter by compression. This all reads very solemnly, but only because I want you to read it (I mean the article) with as loving an eye, as I have truly tried to touch it with a loving and gentle hand.

I propose to call it My Mahogany Friend.[†1] The other name is too long, and I think not attractive. Until I go to the office tomorrow, and see what is actually in hand, I am not certain of the No. in which it will appear, but Georgy shall write on Monday and tell you. We are always a fortnight in advance of the public, or the mechanical work could not be done.

I think there are many things in it that are very pretty. The Katie part,[†2] is particularly well done. If I don't say more, it is because I have a heavy sense, in all cases, of the responsibility of encouraging any one to enter on that thorny track where the prizes are so few, and the blanks so many—where[†3]—

But I won't write you a sermon. With the fire going out, and the first shadows of a new story hovering in a ghostly way about me[†4] (as they usually begin to do, when I have finished an old one) I am in danger of doing the heavy business, and becoming a heavy guardian or something of that sort instead of the light and airy Joe.[†5]

So good night, and believe that you may always trust me, and never find a grim expression (towards you) in any hat I wear.

Ever Yours CD.[†6]

To DAVID ROBERTS, 21 FEBRUARY 1851

MS Berg Collection. Address (envelope, MS Cornell University Library): David Roberts Esquire R.A. | 7 Fitzroy Street | Fitzroy Square, PM 21 Feb 51.

Twenty First February 1851.

Oh my dear Roberts[†7] if you knew the trouble we have had—and the money we pay—for Drury Lane for one night, for the benefit, you would never dream of it for the Dinner. There is no possibility of getting a Theatre. I will do all I can for your charming little daughter,[†8] and hope to squeeze in half a dozen ladies at the last—but we must not breathe the idea, or we shall not dare to execute it, there will be such an outcry.

Faithfully Ever

CD.

To THE RIGHT HON. CHARLES TENNYSON D'EYNCOURT,[†1] 21 FEBRUARY 1851*

MS Lincolnshire Archives Committee.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty First February 1851.

My Dear Sir

I will take care to represent you aright to Mr. Macready. We shall all regret your absence; but I quite understand its being unavoidable.

I am extremely sorry that I cannot have the pleasure of sending Mr. Williams[†2] a ticket. But the pressure is so extraordinary that I have at least twenty special names enrolled as claimants for any tickets that may lapse as yours has done. The first is that of Mr. Wallack,[†3] who has been on the stage so many years, and to whom I am in honor bound to transfer it. I have not the least doubt that we could dine five hundred more, if we could find space.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

The Right Hon. | C. Tennyson D'Eyncourt.

To THE CHEVALIER BUNSEN,[†4] 25 FEBRUARY 1851†

MS Dunedin Public Library.

1 Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Fifth February 1851.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to the Chevalier Bunsen, and in acknowledging the receipt of his obliging note begs to say that the Committee will esteem it a great favor if he will kindly propose the toast "The Artists", in connexion with the President of the Royal Academy,[†5] at Mr. Macready's dinner.[†6]

Mr. Dickens will be happy to forward a list of the artists who will be present, including the most distinguished in England, if the Chevalier Bunsen would desire to glance at it.[†7]

To COMMANDER T. PICKERING CLARKE,[†8] 25 FEBRUARY 1851*

MS Indiana University Libraries.

1 Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Fifth February 1851.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Captain Pickering Clarke, and begs to thank him for his very obliging note. But Mr. Dickens believes that Captain Sir George Back[†1] is already on the list, as returning thanks for the Navy at Mr. Macready's Dinner.[†2]

To D. WHITTLE HARVEY,[†3] 25 FEBRUARY 1851

Mention in Myers & Co. catalogue No. 128 (1908); MS 4 pp.; dated London Tavern, 25 Feb 51.

Asking for police aid at the Macready Dinner.

To W. C. MACREADY, [26 FEBRUARY 1851]

Mention in Macready, Diaries, II, 495.

Enclosing a note from Miss Coutts.[†4]

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, [?26 FEBRUARY 1851]

Mention in Quaritch catalogue No. 286 (1910).

Instructions concerning tickets.[†5]

To W. C. MACREADY, 27 FEBRUARY 1851

MS Comtesse de Suzannet.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Seventh February | 1851.

My Dear Macready

Forster told me today, that you wish Tennyson's Sonnet to be read, after your health is given on Saturday.

I am perfectly certain that it would not do, at that time. I am quite convinced that the audience would not receive it, under those exciting circumstances, as it ought to be received. If I had to read it, I would on no account undertake to do so, at that period, in a great room crowded with a dense company. I have an instinctive assurance that it would fail. Being with Bulwer this morning, I communicated your wish to him; and he immediately felt as I do. I could enter into many reasons which induce me to form this opinion. But I believe you have that confidence in me, that I may spare you the statement of them.[†1]

I want to know one thing from you. As I shall be obliged to be at the London Tavern in the afternoon of tomorrow, Friday (I write, observe, on Thursday Night) I shall be much helped in the arrangements if you will send me your answer by a messenger (addressed here) on the receipt of this. Which would you prefer? That Auld Lang Syne should be sung after your health is given and before you return thanks—or, after you have spoken?[†2]

I cannot forbear a word about last night.[†3] I think I have told you sometimes, my much-loved friend, how, when I was a mere boy, I was one of your faithful and devoted adherents in the Pit—I believe as true a member of that true host of followers as it has ever boasted. As I improved myself and was improved by favoring circumstances in mind and fortune, I only became the more earnest (if it were possible) in my study of you. No light portion of my life arose before me when the great vision to which I am beholden, in I don't know how great a degree, or for how much,—who does?—faded so nobly from my bodily eyes last night.[†4] And if I were to try to tell you what I felt—of regret for its being past for ever—and of joy in the thought that you could never take your leave of me but in God's own time—I should only blot this paper with some drops that would certainly not be of ink, and give very faint expression to very strong emotions.

What is all this in writing! It is only some sort of relief to my full heart, and shews very very little of it to you—but that's something, so I let it go.

Ever My Dearest Macready | Your most affectionate friend

CD.

My very flourish departs from me for the moment.

To MRS YONGE,[†1] 28 FEBRUARY 1851

MS Miss Elizabeth Joyce.

Devonshire Terrace | Friday Twenty Eighth February | 1851.

Dear Madam

I regret that it is quite impossible for me to have the pleasure of complying with your request. The room is absolutely full[†2]—every inch of it is assigned—and I cannot add one person to the dense crowd for which provision is made.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Yonge.

March

To SIR JAMES [?MURRAY],[†3] 3 MARCH 1851

Extract in Sophie Dupré catalogue No. 2, 1983; MS 1 p.; dated 1 Devonshire Terrace, 3 Mar 51; addressed Sir James.

If I can get to the Athenaeum tonight, I shall be very happy to vote for your son[†4] . . . but I am engaged at dinner and I fear I may not be able to attend before the ballot closes.

To MR RUSSELL,[†1] 3 MARCH 1851*

Text transcribed by Professor Sylvère Monod from MS then in possession of Michel Castaine.

London, 1 Devonshire Terrace | Third March 1851

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Russell, and begs to acknowledge the receipt of his favor. Mr. Dickens regrets that the engagements to which he is already pledged, render it impossible for him to pursue the subject.

To ELIOT WARBURTON, 3 MARCH 1851*

MS Miss C. I. Warburton.

Devonshire Terrace. | Third March 1851.

My Dear Sir

Many thanks for your kind note, and many apologies for not having sooner answered your note of Friday.[†2] But the business and correspondence connected with that dinner, have been something overwhelming and almost incredible.—I had hoped to shake hands with you there, but it was such a wide world that I spoke to no one half a dozen chairs off.[†3]

In respect of tomorrow morning, you try my constancy very much; but I have kept one rule, for years, unbroken—never to go out to breakfast. Except on one occasion when I was going abroad next day and breakfasted with Rogers,[†4] I believe I have never departed from this principle. Busy or idle, I have found it such a comfort always to have the first few hours of the morning to myself, that I cannot bear to un-nail my colors from the Mast. It would destroy my character—render a new epitaph necessary for my tomb (He never went out to breakfast, is the inscription I contemplate), and shake my confidence in my own resolution. After which last evil, I don't know what would become of me.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Eliot Warburton Esquire.

To THE DUKE OF DEVONSHIRE,[†1] 4 MARCH 1851

MS Devonshire Collections, Chatsworth.

1 Devonshire Terrace | Fourth March 1851.

My Lord Duke.

May I take the liberty of entreating your attention to the enclosed private proof?[†2] It is but the preface to a much greater liberty, as you will presently see; but I can most unaffectedly say (if this be any excuse) that there is no other gentleman in England whom I would so trouble. Simply because there is no other on whose generous attachment to Letters and Art, I so implicitly rely.

The design to which I venture to direct your notice is intended to supply a great want in England, and to remove a great reproach from her. If it should prosper, I believe it would do incalculable good. It originated with Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton, when I and a party of friends not wholly unknown to you acted a Play at his house a few months ago. He proposed to write us a new Comedy, with the profits of the Amateur-representation of which, the Association should be endowed; and he gave us a valuable portion of land on which to erect the college.[†3] Following up the project with extraordinary ardor, he immediately went to work with his pen; and I have now the completed comedy in my hands—a work of great merit and singular power, surpassing anything he has yet produced on the stage, I am quite certain.

By means of this comedy alone (without reference to public subscriptions) I hope to endow the Institution, before the year is out, with three or four thousand pounds. And if we could present it to the public from that vantage ground, I am confident of their making a very liberal response to the appeal the Institution prefers to them. I have projected a moveable Theatre, Scenery, Mechanism &c capable of being erected and removed, in any suitable room, in a very few hours; and we purpose presenting this comedy at the Hanover Square Rooms, on the stage so to be constructed, and with all possible appliances. We conceive that the changing current of people probably setting into London during the time of the Exhibition, might afford us an Audience at high prices, about once every three weeks.

Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton and I, considering the matter in every possible light—with a view to the success of what our daily experience shews us to be so necessary—are agreed that the first representation of this comedy ought to be before Her Majesty and the Court; as the circumstance of its having been produced under such auspices, would have great weight with those who would form the staple of our after-audiences. We have seen reason to conclude that if it could be played on that occasion in a private house, it would be another great advantage. And the end of our deliberations, is, that I have resolved to take upon myself to ask your Grace if the comedy could be played for the first time at Devonshire House.

I am perfectly aware that this is a very bold idea, but I am so certain of your interest in the cause that I have not the least apprehension of its offending you. I doubt whether you, who make so light of your own generosity, can adequately understand the value and importance of such a beginning; and therefore I beg to assure you that, on this head, all of us who are concerned, are most strongly agreed. For my own part, I believe it would render success certain.

And therefore, being thoroughly devoted to the object and having resolved for its sake to forego a visit I had hoped to make to Italy in a season of comparative leisure—and being supported by my little company who sacrifice something of their private projects and relaxations for the same object—I venture to lay the case before you, confident that if there should be any insuperable objections in the way of your rendering us the immense and invaluable aid I have the hardihood to suggest, our object is certain to have your sympathy and your kindest consideration.

I will only add that it will be necessary to produce the comedy, either at the end of April or the commencement of May; and that the draft I enclose, is just as it was roughly drawn by Sir Edward Lytton, and consequently has not that especial reference, either to the comedy or to his other gift of land, which I must insert in it before it is made public.

With every apology for the trouble I give your Grace, and every sincere assurance of the respect which seems to justify me to myself in doing so,

I have the honor to remain | Your Grace's Very faithful Servant

CHARLES DICKENS

The Duke of Devonshire.

To EDWARD LAND, 4 MARCH 1851*.

MS Mr N. C. Peyrouton.

Devonshire Terrace | Fourth March 1851.

My Dear Sir

I was (as I believe everybody was) delighted with the musical arrangements, which were most admirable in all respects.[†1]

The project to which you refer,[†2] is not likely to include any such necessities;[†3] but I assure you I shall be most happy to hold you in any remembrance that may be useful to you, on any feasible occasion.

May I beg you to have the kindness to favor me with a note of your expences, as I wish to settle the accounts with all convenient dispatch.[†4]

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Edward Land Esquire.

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 4 MARCH 1851

MS Lytton Papers.

Devonshire Terrace | Tuesday Night | Fourth March 1851.

My Dear Bulwer

I know you will be glad to hear what I have to tell you.

I wrote to the Duke of Devonshire this morning, enclosing him the rough proof of the scheme, and plainly telling him what we wanted—i:e: to play for the first time at his house, to the Queen and Court. Within a couple of hours, he wrote me as follows

Dear Sir

I have read with very great interest the Prospectus of the new endowment which you have confided to my perusal.

Your manner of doing so, is a proof that I am honored by your good will and approbation.

I am truly happy to offer you my earnest and sincere co-operation. My services, my house, and my subscription, will be at your orders. And I beg you to let me see you before long, not merely to converse upon the subject, but because I have long had the greatest wish to improve our acquaintance, which has as yet been only one of crowded rooms.[†1]

&c &c

———

—

This is quite princely, I think, and will push along as brilliantly as heart could desire. Don't you think so too?

Yesterday, Lemon and I saw the Secretary of the National Provident Institution[†2] (the best office for our purpose, I am inclined to think) and stated all our requirements. We appointed to meet the Chairman and Directors[†3] next Tuesday, so on the day of our reading and dining I hope we shall have that matter in good train.

The theatre is also under consultation;[†4] and directly after the reading, we shall go briskly to work in all departments.

I hear nothing but praises of your Macready speech—of its eloquence, delicacy, and perfect taste.[†1] All of which it is good to hear, though I knew it all beforehand as well as most men can tell it me.

Ever Cordially

CD.

To EDWARD BREWSTER, 6 MARCH 1851

Mention in N, II, 277. MS 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 6 Mar 51.

Accompanying a remittance.[†2]

To JOHN FOWLER,[†3] 6 MARCH 1851*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: John Fowler Esquire | 50 Occupation Road | Sheffield.

Devonshire Terrace, London | Sixth March 1851.

Dear Sir

I beg to thank you for your obliging letter.[†4] There is no present intention of visiting Sheffield, but, if it should ever be considered desirable to do so, I shall remember your communication, and be happy to avail myself of your assistance.[†5]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Fowler Esquire

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, [APRIL 1850-7 MARCH 1851]*

MS Morgan Library. Date: probably after Apr 50, when he took a room near the Magdalen for their receiving days and perhaps 7 Mar 51, the last Friday he spent at Devonshire Terrace before the death of his father; handwriting supports.

Devonshire Terrace | Friday Night

My Dear Miss Coutts.

Until twenty minutes before Four tomorrow (when I am going to see some young women proposed to us from the Magdalen) I shall be here, and delighted to see you.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts

To CHARLES KNIGHT, 7 MARCH 1851

MS Dickens House.

Devonshire Terrace | Friday Night | Seventh March 1851.

My Dear Knight.

I am charmed with your idea, which is a most delightful one, and full of all good suggestions. I shall be more than pleased to have the papers,[†1] and am eager to begin.

There is a train leaves town on Monday at halfpast one, and stops at Edenbridge. There is an earlier train—leaves at ½ past 11—don't stop at Edenbridge—does stop at Reigate, eleven miles from it. Which shall we take? If it should be a fine day, we might make out the distance (eh?) pleasantly. But either will suit me equally well, and I await your choice.

Ever affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To THE STEWARDS OF THE ROYAL INFIRMARY FOR ASTHMA & CONSUMPTION,[†2] 8 MARCH 1851*

MS Dickens House.

Devonshire Terrace | Eighth March 1851.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to the Stewards of the dinner for the Royal Infirmary for Asthma and Consumption, and regrets that his engagements will not admit of his accepting their obliging invitation.

To DR JAMES WILSON,[†1] 8 MARCH 1851

MS Boston Public Library.

1 Devonshire Terrace | York Gate Regents Park | Saturday Eighth March 1851.

Dear Sir

I take the liberty of addressing you without any preamble, relying on your knowledge of Sir Edward Lytton,[†2] and other friends of mine.[†3]

I am anxious to place Mrs. Dickens under your care. As her case is a nervous one and of a peculiar kind,[†4] I forbear to describe it, or to state what Dr. Southwood Smith has particularly requested me to mention to you, as rendering great caution necessary, until I have the pleasure of seeing you.

As I think it may be advisable for Mrs. Dickens to remain at Malvern some time, and as I shall come with her, and her sister also, (several of our children probably following) I do not contemplate her living in your house.[†5] Indeed, under any circumstances, I should have my reasons (founded on my knowledge of her) for desiring to settle her in some temporary home of her own. With this view, I purpose sending down a trusty female servant, who has been with her many years and accompanied her in all our travels,[†6] on Wednesday, to take some cheerful cottage or house for us in your neighbourhood; and if you will kindly allow me to send her to you, and to hope that some one in your service will give her a little assistance and direction, I shall be very truly indebted to you.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Dr. Wilson.

To AUGUSTUS EGG, 8 MARCH 1851

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday Night | Eighth March 1851.

My Dear Egg.

I think you told me that Mr. Wilkie Collins[†1] would be glad to play any part in Bulwer's Comedy; and I think I told you that I considered him a very desirable recruit. There is a Valet, called (as I remember) Smart—a small part—but, what there is of it, decidedly good—he opens the play—which I should be delighted to assign to him, and in which he would have an opportunity of dressing your humble servant—frothing some chocolate with an obsolete milling-machine that must be revived for the purpose—arranging the room—and dispatching other similar "business", dear to Actors. Will you undertake to ask him if I shall cast him this part? If yes, I will call him to the reading on Wednesday—have the pleasure of leaving my card for him (say where)—and beg him to favor us with his company at dinner on Wednesday Evening. I knew his father[†2] very well, and should be very glad to know him.

Write me a word in answer, and Believe me ever

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

[†a]A secret among us, as yet—but all triumphantly settled at Devonshire House![†a]

To AUGUSTUS TRACEY, 9 MARCH 1851*

MS University of Texas.

Devonshire Terrace | Sunday Ninth March | 1851.

My Dear Tracey.

I shall feel very much obliged to you if you will allow my friend the Bearer Mr. Horne, to see your boys. His visit is with reference to a paper for Household Words in which that hopeful family will be referred to as a part of a general sad picture, but not in any direct connexion with their residence with you as an Individual "Governor".[†1] Mr. Horne is a gentleman of great ability and attainments, for whom I have a high regard.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Lieut: Tracey.

To THE HON. MRS RICHARD WATSON, 9 MARCH 1851

MS Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Sunday Ninth March 1851.

My Dear Mrs. Watson.

I cannot tell you how delighted I am with the beautiful mark of remembrance which you and Watson have sent me.[†2] I shall keep it on my desk from this time forth, and make it my inseparable companion. I wanted nothing to keep you both in my most loving thoughts—nothing to enshrine you in my dearest remembrance—and yet I am so glad to have this token before me, that I cannot prize it sufficiently, or tell you with what feelings I regard it.

You don't know me as I thought you did, though, if you suppose that those quiet chambers of my heart in which I keep my real friends, are ever disturbed—or ever can be—by the noisier and busier part of my life. The longer I live and the longer I work, the better I perceive that the most precious parts of Fame are stored up in those garners. In the voices of the Many, I hear chiefly the echoes of the voices of the Few, and come home to them, as it were, every day of my life.

—I have said enough about myself.

Don't appear to know it, but I am rather uneasy about Kate, who has an alarming disposition of blood to the head, attended with giddiness and dimness of sight. I am inclined to believe that it is not at all a new disorder with her. After taking the most sensible advice I could get (including my own) I have resolved to carry her down to Malvern, and put her under rigorous discipline of exercise, air, and cold water. We go on Thursday Morning—to come back for good, I don't know when. But I shall be backwards and forwards once or twice a week:

sometimes, oftener. For, not to mention Household Words, this Play sits heavy on my shoulders.

They have told you why I can't come to see Used Up—which I should have liked of all things?[†1] Do you think you would be interested in hearing Macready read the comedy,[†2] and would have time to spare? It is read at Mr. Forster's at 3 on Wednesday. If you would like to hear it, I would call for you and take you. I could certainly so far infringe my own Spartan Rules, as to introduce two ladies (you and Mrs. Boyle)[†3] into that dread Masonic Assembly.

With my love and thanks to Watson, and kind regards to all at Rockingham, I am ever my Dear Mrs. Watson

Faithfully Your Friend
CHARLES DICKENS

Have you read Mary Boyle's paper in the aforesaid Household Words?[†4]

To W. H. WILLS, 9 MARCH 1851*

MS Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Sunday Ninth March 1851. | Midnight.

My Dear Wills. I think the Clergyman in difficulties,[†5] very good. I have made a slight alteration here and there, to make it lighter, compacter, and pleasanter. I hope you wont think it the worse therefor.

Along with it, I enclose the Bill-Sticking Proof.[†6] I have left two blanks for the sizes of two bills, as the names express nothing to the general reader.[†7] Will you get those dimensions at Whitefriars, and insert them?

I am off to Edenbridge early in the morning.

Faithfully Ever

CD.

If you think my last sentence in the Clergyman not to the purpose, take it out. I am not sure about it.[†8]

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 11 MARCH 1851*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street | Piccadilly.

Devonshire Terrace | Tuesday Night | Eleventh March 1851.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

One of the cases at Mr. Tracey's of which I spoke to you—that of Mary Anne Church[†1]—being (I find) now due, I have instructed Mrs. Morson to receive her.

If I should receive the necessary information on either of the points we spoke about on Sunday, before I come to town from Malvern, I will write to you—if not, I will bring my report myself.

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To DR JAMES WILSON, 11 MARCH 1851†

MS Duke University Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Tuesday March Eleventh | 1851.

My Dear Sir

I am truly indebted to you for your kind letter, and beg to thank you cordially.

The maid will come down tomorrow, and I shall be very happy on her behalf to avail myself of your most obliging proffer. But I am so anxious that Mrs. Dickens should begin with a favorable impression of Malvern, and I am so certain of the impossibility of engendering that impression if she be on any visit, or in any house but our own, (from what I have lately observed when we have been staying in the country houses even of intimate friends) that I am obliged, however reluctantly, to decline your hospitable proposal in relation to ourselves.

The maid will perfectly understand her errand, and will be sure (with your kind help) to make the wisest arrangement that the circumstances will admit of. She is well used to such arrangements, and knows from me what we want.

I am Dear Sir | Yours faithfully and obliged
CHARLES DICKENS

Dr. Wilson.

To HENRY AUSTIN, 12 MARCH 1851*

MS Morgan Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Twelfth March 1851.

My Dear Henry

I was very sorry to miss you the other day, and to hear—then from Chadwick[†2] and last night from yourself—that you are not well. I hope you will resolve to take regular air and exercise, come what come may, and plenty of both. Nothing else will do.

I lost the Highgate house—Thus. I offered the money, on condition that they conveyed to me, at their own charge, the freehold of the doubtful little bit of ground. This, they engaged to negociate for, straightway, when the other "party" who had been looking at the house, said, "If Mr. Dickens stands out on that point, I will buy the house at the same price without that stipulation". Which he accordingly did. He was right. Nothing so good will ever turn up again, I believe, for the money. I am going to look at another house close by it, this morning, but am not sanguine.

Kate is so exceedingly unwell (and has been at intervals these 3 or 4 years) with a tendency of blood to the head, and alarming confusion and nervousness at times, that I am advised to take her to Malvern, and put her under a rigorous discipline of air, exercise, and cold water. We go tomorrow—when to come back, I don't know—though, of course, I shall be backwards and forwards constantly.

In former cases, I have merely booked the house with an agent, and put a board up. In the sum I have asked, I have always been guided by the Agent. I have never asked much. I should say some man near Hyde Park would be a good man for your purpose. There is one Mr. Deeks—I think in Albion Street near the Edgware Road[†1]—who does a good deal of business, and whom I should consider the best for your object. When we came home from Switzerland, I took a house from him.

They all say that there are innumerable furnished houses to let wildly, on account of the Exhibition, for which there never can be a demand. I think with you that it will be a bad season than otherwise, for getting rid of one.

Ever affecy.

CD.

To W. BOOTH,[†2] 13 MARCH 1851

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Devonshire Terrace | Thirteenth March 1851.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Booth, and begs to say that he is disposed to make an offer for the purchase of Balmoral House:[†3] but that before he does so, he wishes to go over it again, with an architect, to consider how a study of good size could best be built out from the existing villa.

Mr. Dickens is obliged to leave town for Malvern this morning, as it is necessary to take Mrs. Dickens to that place for her health. But he will be in town, either on Tuesday or Wednesday Morning and will then make another visit to Balmoral House, if it should be convenient to the inmates. He will trouble Mr. Booth with another note in the meantime, mentioning the day and hour on which he proposes to call there. He cannot make a definite appointment until he gets to Malvern.

To HENRY AUSTIN, 15 MARCH 1851*

MS Morgan Library.

Knotsford Lodge, Great Malvern[†1] | Friday Fifteenth March 1851.

My Dear Henry.

I have seen a house in the Avenue Road that is a decidedly good "Family Residence". I should very much like you to see it, and to give me your advice about the building of a Study. Could you go there with me (from Devonshire Terrace) on Tuesday Morning? If yes, and you will tell me by return at what hour, I will prepare the Inmates to receive our visit.

Ever affecy.

CD.

Loves to Laetitia.

To W. BOOTH, 15 MARCH 1851*

MS Auckland Public Library.

Knotsford Lodge | Great Malvern | Fifteenth March 1851.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Booth, and begs to say that he purposes calling at Balmoral House, at from eleven to half past, on Tuesday Morning. He will be in Town on Monday night.

To THE DUKE OF DEVONSHIRE, 15 MARCH 1851

MS (copy in unknown hand) Devonshire Collections, Chatsworth.

†a(Copy)†a

Knotsford Lodge Great Malvern | Fifteenth March 1851

My Dear Lord Duke

As Mrs. †aDickens'†a health has brought me here, and for some weeks I am not likely to be in town except on particular days, I hope you will excuse my troubling you with this note.

But I think it right to report to you:—

That we read the Comedy last Wednesday. That we put it in rehearsal next Tuesday. That we shall then rehearse it at least twice a week until it is ready. That the Theatre, dresses, &c are all being made. And that we can engage ourselves to produce it at Devonshire House, either in the last week of April or the first week of May—as you may think best.

Might I take the liberty of asking you to consider what course should be taken in reference to Her Majesty and the remainder of the Company? I think I need not add that our project is entirely in your hands, and that we have no desire, now, to impose any conditions of secresy upon you. I am exceedingly unwilling to trouble your kindness, but I think you will see that I cannot stir in this important part of the matter, without your instructions.

The Rehearsal nights being (at all events for the present) Mondays and Tuesdays, I shall be in Devonshire Terrace as a matter of course every Tuesday Morning, and should be happy to have the honor of coming to you if you should desire to see me. Or, I would come from here, at any other time that might better suit your convenience.

I hope you will find that the presentation of the piece does no discredit to your great generosity. We are endeavouring to make it a very accurate and brief picture of the time of George the first.

With high respect and esteem | Your Grace's Faithfully obliged

CHARLES DICKENS

The Duke of Devonshire.

To JOHN FORSTER, [15 MARCH 1851]

Text from F, VI, vi, 537. Date: 15 Mar according to Forster.

It is a most beautiful place. O Heaven, to meet the Cold Waterers (as I did this morning when I went out for a shower-bath) dashing down the hills, with severe expressions on their countenances, like men doing matches and not exactly winning! Then, a young lady in a grey polka going up the hills, regardless of legs; and meeting a young gentleman (a bad case, I should say) with a light black silk cap on under his hat, and the pimples of I don't know how many douches under that. Likewise an old man who ran over a milk-child, rather than stop!—with no neckcloth, on principle; and with his mouth wide open, to catch the morning air.

To JOHN HODGSON,[†1] 15 MARCH 1851*

MS Brigadier W. G. Shacklock.

Great Malvern | Fifteenth March 1851.

Sir.

I write from this place where the indisposition of my wife has brought me, to express my regret that I cannot, in your case, depart from my established rule of never reading pieces offered to me for my opinion. If you could form any adequate idea of the number of my unknown correspondents, you would readily understand how serious I am in saying that unless I observed this rule I could do nothing in life that I want to do.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Hodgson Esquire

To PETER CUNNINGHAM, 18 MARCH 1851

MS University of Kentucky. Address: Peter Cunningham Esquire | Audit Office | Somerset House.

Devonshire Terrace | Eighteenth March 1851

My Dear Cunningham

I observe, with the terror which a Public Office naturally awakens in a well-regulated mind, that the enclosed Power of Attorney from Poole,[†1] appears to require (see Margin) Registration at that awful establishment where you (and the Ordnance Maps?) keep the Nation's Clock[†2] perpetually right to a second. Once more, will you shield me from the Eye of Office![†3]

Ever Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

To R. H. HORNE, 18 MARCH 1851

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds. Address: R. H. Horne Esquire | Beaumont Cottage | College Road | Chalk Farm Lane | Hampstead Road.

Devonshire Terrace | Eighteenth March 1851.

My Dear Horne.

I did not anticipate the contents of your letter,—but I have no right to gainsay them.[†4]

You know my opinion of your powers. I would merely say, therefore, in reference to Mr. Hunt[†5] and Mr. Morley that what they have done for us (especially Mr. Hunt) has unquestionably done us very good service indeed.[†6]

Let me suggest to you that it would be better, and fairer towards yourself, if you would continue on the old terms, for at least another month.[†7] And let me assure you, with real affection, that it would give me inexpressible pain, if, after that time, you were to cease or slacken your connexion with Household Words as a Contributor.[†8] The rate of remuneration shall be higher in your case, I pledge myself, than in any other,[†9] and I shall ever have a peculiar delight in your friendly aid.

Being, really, | Ever Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

R. H. Horne Esquire.

To FRANK STONE, 18 MARCH 1851*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Devonshire Terrace | Eighteenth March 1851. | Wednesday

My Dear Pump.

I suppose you will want to go over your part,[†1] according to ancient usage, with your despised and unrequited[†2] Manager. If so, this comes to say that I am your man for any engagement of that kind, before Rehearsals on Tuesdays—not Mondays, as I only get to town just in time.

Ever affecy.

CD

My address, Knotsford Lodge, Great Malvern

To F. W. TOPHAM,[†3] 18 MARCH 1851*

MS Private.

Devonshire Terrace | Eighteenth March 1851, | Wednesday

My dear Topham

I can't help saying before I go back to Malvern, that I think you have got a very rich and capital notion of Easy,[†4] and will do it admirably.

Ever Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To W. BOOTH, 20 MARCH 1851

Extract in N, II, 283. MS 2 pp.; dated Great Malvern, 20 Mar 51.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Booth, and begs to make the offer of £2,700 for Balmoral House. As the alterations necessary for his purpose would be expensive, he thinks it right to add that this is an offer on which he cannot advance.[†5]

In making it Mr. Dickens supposes the stables, etc., and the stable road to be completed. Also the ground-lease to be in its provisions satisfactory to his solicitor.

To DR J. S. BUSHNAN,[†1] 20 MARCH 1851*

MS Morgan Library.

Knotsford Lodge, Great Malvern | Twentieth March 1851.

Dear Sir

I have received the pamphlets[†2] for which I am indebted to your kind remembrance, this morning, and hasten to thank you.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Dr. Bushnan.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 20 MARCH 1851

MS Morgan Library.

Knotsford Lodge, Great Malvern | Twentieth March 1851. | Thursday.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I can find no reprints in English, or in any language but German, of Strauss's Life of Christ[†3] (that are known in this country at least)[†4] but a 2 Vol. 8° English Edition, printed in America,[†5] price 36/- and one published by John Chapman of the Strand[†6]—and one published by "Taylor Birmingham, and Hetherington London".[†7] The prices of the two latter, which it is important to know—especially the last—I have not got yet, but I will have them by Tuesday, when I hope to be at Shepherd's Bush at 3—not ½ past.[†8]

I have no reliable Clerkenwell information[†9] either, but hope to have that too, at the same time, and have little doubt I shall.

I send you enclosed, the first proof of the design which Bulwer and I have projected, and for which he has written the Comedy. It is still susceptible of many little improvements and explanations which we are gradually getting into it. The Duke of Devonshire has taken it up (on my shewing it to him) in a most generous and noble manner, and we are going to play the Comedy for the first time, at his House, in the last week in April. On which occasion the Queen is to be invited, and I don't know how much money made.

The maze of bewilderment into which I have got myself with carpenters, painters, tailors, machinists, and others, in consequence—to say nothing of two nights every week when the whole company are drilled for five hours, the undersigned presiding—or of this trifling addition to my usual occupations—is of the most entangled description; but, if I could help to set right what is wrong here and what I see every day to be so unhappily wrong, I should be munificently recompensed.

Mrs. Dickens has derived great advantage, I am glad to say, from this place. Charley has been "out of school", laid up with Influenza, but is much better.

Always Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To PETER CUNNINGHAM, 20 MARCH 1851

Text from N, II, 283.

Knotsford Lodge, Great Malvern | Thursday Twentieth March 1851

My Dear Cunningham

You are the likeliest man I can think of, to help me in a theatrical difficulty.

Do you know any correct print of Will's Coffee House that can be begged, borrowed, stolen, bought, sketched, or looked at? I want such a scene for Bulwer's comedy,[†1] and want to have it correct.

I have looked in the Ordnance maps, but can't find it.[†2]

Ever Faithfully
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To THE DUKE OF DEVONSHIRE, 20 MARCH 1851

MS Devonshire Collections, Chatsworth.

Knotsford Lodge, Great Malvern | Thursday Twentieth March 1851.

My Dear Lord Duke.

I am very sorry to find that you are afflicted with that most disagreeable and oppressive disorder;[†3] but if it be any comfort—I am never quite sure in my own case whether it is or is not, but I think it is—to know that everybody else is, has been, or will be, similarly visited, you are in full possession of that solace.[†4] It is more general now, I believe, than it ever has been—both in England and in France.

It would concern me more than my own influenza did, if I thought you could suppose I had intended to tax your kindness by throwing the difficult responsibility I can so well understand, on you. Nothing could have been farther from my thoughts. I did not think it right to advance a step, without knowing whether you had any wishes to express. I did desire to have your most valuable help and advice in opening the matter at court; and in that particular, your kindness has done all I could possibly require. On my having the honor to hear from you again, I shall of course proceed without a moment's loss of time, as Colonel Phipps[†1] may suggest. I presume it would be well to state in the Prospectus that the first performance is to take place at Devonshire House?

I cannot, I take it for granted, fix a day, without knowing that it would be convenient to Her Majesty. I would propose, if you should think it right, Monday the 28th.—Tuesday the 29th.—or Wednesday the 30th.—of April. Leaving Her Majesty the choice.[†2]

There would be no difficulty in removing Her Majesty from the rest of the audience, as in the ordinary case that occurs to you.

If you would not think it very unreasonable, I should ask your permission to have the room at my disposal for a week before. My reason is, that the machinery and scenery being new would require to be elaborately tried, a great many times, in that place and no other—and the Comedy and Farce, being new too, would be greatly benefited by being rehearsed there. But as the word difficulty is not in my Theatrical Vocabulary, we will manage—within any shorter space of time you can allow us more conveniently—to get everything right.

I have never known Bulwer so anxious about anything he has written, or so intensely interested in it. He hovers around the Comedy, whatever we are doing with it, as if he could not possibly detach himself from even the—to an author—most disheartening preliminaries.

I will see Mr. Ridgway myself,[†3] when I go to town for the next Rehearsal. If Colonel Phipps should suggest anything rendering it necessary for me to be there, sooner than Monday evening, I shall instantly decamp.

I am Ever My Dear Lord Duke | Yours faithfully and obliged

CHARLES DICKENS

His Grace | The Duke of Devonshire.

To J. L. GRUNDY,[†4] 20 MARCH 1851*

MS Private.

Great Malvern | Twentieth March 1851.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Grundy, and begs to acknowledge the receipt of Mr. Grundy's very obliging letter. He fears however that his absence from town just now, will prevent his having the pleasure of availing himself of the pleasure it proposes to him.[†5]

To DAVID ROBERTS, 20 MARCH 1851†

MS Huntington Library.

Knotsford Lodge, Great Malvern. | Twentieth March 51. | Thursday.

My Dear Roberts.

Mrs. Dickens has been unwell (but is much better), and I am here with her; [†a]except when the duties I have undertaken to discharge in connexion with the project of which you will receive a "Proof" with this, take me (pretty frequently) to town.[†a]

I want you to give a quarter of an hour to the perusal of that Prospectus—to consider the immense value of the design, if it be successful, to Artists young and old—and then to bestow your favorable consideration on the assistance I am going to ask of you, for the sake and in the name of the cause.

For the representation of the new Comedy Bulwer has written for us, to start this scheme, I am having an ingenious Theatre made by Webster's people, for erection on certain nights in the Hanover Square Rooms. But, it will first be put up in the Duke of Devonshire's House, where the first representation will take place before a brilliant company, including (I believe) the Queen.

Now, will you paint us a scene—the scene of which I enclose Bulwer's description from the Prompt-Book?[†1] It will be a cloth, with a set-piece.[†2] It should be sent to your studio, or put up in a Theatre Painting Room as you would prefer. I have asked Stanny to do another scene[†3]—Edwin Landseer[†4]—and Louis Haghe.[†5]

The Devonshire House performance will probably be on Monday the 28th. of April.[†6] I should want to have the scenery complete by the 20th. as it would require to be elaborately worked and rehearsed. You could do it in no time after sending in your pictures—and will you?

What the value of such aid would be, I need not say. I say no more of the reasons that induce me to ask it, because if they are not in the Prospectus they are nowhere.

On Monday and Tuesday nights I shall be in town for Rehearsal, but, until then, I shall be here. Will you let me have a line from you in reply?

My Dear Roberts | Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

David Roberts Esquire.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 20 MARCH 1851

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, Oct 1973; MS 2 pp.; dated Knotsford Lodge, Great Malvern, 20 Mar 51.

Referring to himself as at Malvern with Mrs. Dickens who has been very unwell; apologizes for unusual unpunctuality in correspondence; says that he would as soon have thought of being in Egypt just now, as at Malvern; explains that he cannot come to London for the proposed early dinner on Saturday . . . I shall have to work that day

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 20 MARCH 1851

Extract in Carnegie Book Shop catalogue No. 157; MS 2 pp.; dated Malvern 20 Mar 51.

If you want a laugh fit the enclosed pieces together . . . and consider the astonishing impudence of this rascal . . . I think it is the kind of epistle that could be sent to nobody on earth but me.[†1]

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 21 MARCH 1851†

MS Morgan Library.

Great Malvern | Twenty First March 1851.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

Cummins's[†2] letter is indeed surprising!—that is, if one could allow anything to be so; but I have resolved not to have the weakness of a capacity of being surprised, any more.

It is most encouraging and delightful! Imagining backward to what these women were and might have been, and forward to what their children may be, it is impossible to estimate the amount of the good you are doing.

I shall be very glad to make the selections from Household Words, as presentable as possible, if you will give me a list of them—or to try how we can best do so. The difficulty is this. We don't keep sheets; the great point in such a work being only to print close to the number wanted—otherwise, the profit would be all in stock—and one prefers money!! Consequently, as the numbers fall out of print, they are reprinted from stereotype plates. These plates, being exact copies in metal of the types as they stood in every page, cannot print one article and omit another, and yet have the appearance of going on consecutively. In leaping over intermediate matter, they will necessarily leave gaps—but I think we might manage to make your Elegant Extracts presentable in a sort of Scrap Book.[†1] At all events, if you will give me the list, I'll try.

I don't know whether I make myself understood? I have a misgiving that all this looks horribly complicated.

They are very careful with the cold water here, and don't commit excesses.[†2]

Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To PETER CUNNINGHAM, 21 MARCH 1851

Summary in Sotheby's catalogue, Dec 1877; according to catalogue dated Household Words Office, 8 and 21 Mar 51; but 21 Mar much more likely on probable reference to To Cunningham, 20 Mar: see below.

Thanking him for the Sign Manual;[†3] referring to Charles Knight, Mark Lemon at the Bedford hotel[†4] and the scene painter at the National Gallery.[†5]

To LIEUT. COLONEL THE HON. C. B. PHIPPS, [21] MARCH 1851

Text from MS copy in Georgina Hogarth's hand, Devonshire Collections, Chatsworth. Date: To The Duke of Devonshire, 21 Mar, makes it clear that CD wrote to Phipps the same day.

1 Devonshire Terrace, York Gate, Regent's Park.[†6] | Twenty Second March 1851.

Sir.

In the name of Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton no less than in my own, and also on the part of all the other gentlemen associated in the project of which I have the honour to forward you a proof of the first early prospectus, I beg the favour of your bringing that prospectus under the notice of Her Majesty and His Royal Highness Prince Albert.

I am induced to ask this act of consideration at your hands, on the part of a body of Her Majesty's dutiful subjects who, in the pursuit of Art and Literature do no discredit to Her Majesty's reign, because I have a lively hope that Her Majesty and His Royal Highness will be interested in the object we have at heart, and will generously entertain the petition I have it in charge to prefer.

Leaving the prospectus (which Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton and I are both sensible is yet susceptible of a more complete explanation in some of it's details) to speak for itself, I will only observe of the design, that we have originated it, because we have daily and sad experience of it's necessity, in our daily observation. Few who are unconnected with our pursuits, can guess how much.

The original comedy which Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton has so generously written for the benefit of this scheme, will be acted, for the first time, by the Amateur Company I represent, at Devonshire House; His Grace the Duke of Devonshire having in his own noble way, most readily placed it at our disposal for that purpose. And the favour I am desired to solicit of Her Majesty and His Royal Highness, through your means, is, that they will deign to honour that performance with their presence.

It is unnecessary for me to say, that Her Majesty's countenance in the outset of such an undertaking, would have a prodigious influence on its hopes of success; and would strengthen us, to an extent which nothing else could do, in our hold upon the general public during the time of the Exhibition. On former occasions we have turned what was at first, the amusement of a Winter's Night, to good account, in releasing from distress and difficulty, three distinguished literary men whom Her Majesty has since placed on the Pension List;[†1] and in now exerting ourselves in a similar manner for a much larger and broader kindred purpose, we should receive an inexpressible impulse and encouragement from Her Majesty's personal support.

I venture to hope that Her Majesty and His Royal Highness will view the project with favour; because I share the general knowledge of their consideration for Letters and Art, and because, as the more fortunate advocate of some of my brethren, I have been made acquainted with some of their more private acts of delicate munificence.

The Comedy (with which it's Author has taken extraordinary pains, and which is a very striking picture of the time of George the First) will be ready for representation at Devonshire House in the last week of April. On Monday the 28th., Tuesday the 29th. or Wednesday the 30th. of April, it would be presentable at Her Majesty's command. In the name of it's author, and of all the authors and artists united in this endeavour to render a lasting service to their order, and therefore to England, I beg to entrust you with our loyal appeal to Her Majesty.

I have the honour to be
&c &c &c
The Honourable | Colonel Phipps

To LIEUT. COLONEL THE HON. C. B. PHIPPS, [21 MARCH 1851]

Mention in next.

Saying that he would be in London on Monday.

To THE DUKE OF DEVONSHIRE, 21 MARCH 1851

MS Devonshire Collections, Chatsworth.

Great Malvern | Friday Twenty First March 1851.

My Dear Lord Duke.

I received your kind note this morning, and immediately wrote a letter to Colonel Phipps, of which I enclose you a copy. I accompanied it with a private note, saying that I should be in town on Monday evening, to receive any communication or wait upon him at any time if he should desire to see me.

I beg to enclose his note to you, and to express my very sincere hope that you are as well as any one with the Influenza can be.

Remaining, with many thanks and acknowledgments

Yours Grace's | Faithfully and obliged
CHARLES DICKENS

The | Duke of Devonshire.

To F. M. EVANS, 22 MARCH 1851

MS Robert H. Taylor Collection, Princeton.

Great Malvern | Saturday Twenty Second March 1851.

My Dear Evans.

The accounts are perfectly satisfactory in all respects. The times you mention for the payment of the balance will suit me, with this exception—that if you can manage say two hundred pounds of the first five hundred before Thursday, it will prevent my having to sell as much funded money.[†1] If you cannot do this conveniently, don't mind. But I have overdrawn my account, and don't like to leave it so, when I go to the Bank—as I must on Tuesday.

The question I now ask, is for my own edification; not at all as implying any obscurity or remissness in the accounts. Do they include the subscription-sale of Copperfield or any part of it? And what have you sold of the completed book since Christmas?[†2]

I shall be in town tomorrow evening, and at the Household Words office at Noon on Tuesday.

Our settling days in future, I note as duly understood.

Mrs. Dickens (still getting on famously) unites her regards with her sister's. It has now rained here, almost without stopping, one week.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

F. M. Evans Esquire

To JONATHAN JONES,[†3] 22 MARCH 1851

MS John Rylands Library. Address: Jonathan Jones Esquire | 39 Brunswick Square | London.

Great Malvern | Twenty Second March 1851.

Dear Sir

My being here with Mrs. Dickens for her health, has prevented my answering your note sooner.

I fear I can give you no information on the topics to which you refer, which I have not already given, or suggested, in my books. There is nothing in London that is not curious. But the aspect of it, within my knowledge, which is most curious, is also the most sad and the most shocking. These shadows of the great moving picture, you propose (very judiciously I think) to exclude from your treatise,[†1] and I really cannot suggest to you any new lights.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Jonathan Jones Esquire.

To MRS MARSH, 22 MARCH 1851*

MS Messrs Pickering & Chatto. Address: Mrs Marsh | Eastbury | near | Watford | Herts.

Knotsford Lodge, Great Malvern. | Twenty Second March 1851.

My Dear Madam.

My being here, on account of the indisposition of Mrs. Dickens (who is much better) has delayed my receiving your welcome letter.

I now hasten to answer it.

Generally, I rather think that people who have to do with land, are undergoing what people who have to do with almost any other kind of property are either suffering or have suffered—excessive competition, heavy taxes, the stern necessity of shaking off the drowsiness of prejudice and usage, and exerting their wits. Therefore, though I hope and believe I have a tender heart, I do not find it—as yet—particularly moved by their distresses.

Stories are certainly not indispensable for Household Words. I suggested them when I last wrote to you, mainly because I had been so much moved and so deeply interested by your books. I have little doubt that your quick perception will instinctively adapt whatever you touch, to the general tone and object of the paper. But I will pay immediate attention to the "specimen" you so kindly propose to send,[†2] and communicate with you again, as shortly after its receipt as possible. Will you kindly address me at the office 16 Wellington Street North, Strand, London? I constantly receive communications thence.

I am always Dear Madam | Very faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs Marsh.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 23 MARCH 1851†

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street | Piccadilly | London.

Great Malvern | Sunday Twenty Third March 1851.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

We always intended to have the controul over the subjects and treatment of those Lectures.†3 But I think your suggestion so sound, that I have written to Bulwer to say I shall add a provision in the Prospectus to that effect, and elucidatory of their wholesome purpose.

We know among ourselves, of course, whether a man would really want one of those places or not.†1 But all such assistance hitherto, has been so much in the way of alms-giving that we purposely make the merit, rather than the means of the applicant, our test.†2 In addition to our own professional knowledge, we assume that no man would ask for such a thing, unless he wanted it. But we consider it so important that a man of character and ability should set the example of accepting that aid, that we would rather at first get a man who did not actually want it, to take it, than bestow it on any man who has held out his hat in any way, before.

I have perceived a dim shadow of your mysterious objection to my acting, before now. Yet I hope you will go to this Play, consoling your mind with the belief that we have on former occasions done a great deal of good by it, and that no such thing would ever be done but for me, and that there is no one else whom these men would allow to hold them together, or to whose direction they would good-humouredly and with perfect confidence yield themselves. It was in the circumstance of Bulwer's being so much struck and surprised by this union when we played at his house a few months ago, that this scheme originated. For he said, "this is a great power that has grown up about you, out of a winter-night's amusement, and do let us try to use it for the lasting service of our order."

You will not find it like any other Amateur Plays, I think. You will be impressed by the general intelligence and good sense. And you will find a certain neatness in it which I should compare with the French stage, if you were not so profoundly English!

As to the mournful spectacle of your friend upon the boards, I can only ask you to do your best to forget him. If I thought that deeply-anchored objection were capable of being argued down, I should press you, darkly to reveal it. But I have no such belief, for I think you are in your way as obstinate as—Mrs. Brown—I can't say more.

Ever Most Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Charley is better. The influenza there, is beyond precedent. Five and twenty boys laid up, in Evans's house alone.

To PETER CUNNINGHAM, 23 MARCH 1851

MS Princeton University Library.

Great Malvern | Sunday Twenty Third March 1851.

My Dear Cunningham.

A thousand thanks for your kind letter. I am truly obliged to you.

It is a notion of the Interior of Will's that I want. It was on the first floor, I believe, over a Hosier's?[†1] I take it, it ought to be a wainscoated[†2] room in pannels?[†2] And that the boxes should have curtains? If you should have, or could buy me, any little print or drawing of such a room, I should greatly like to have it as an instruction to the Scene Painter.

I shall be on the Stage at Covent Garden tomorrow night and Tuesday between 7 and 10. I will leave your name with the porter, in case you would like to see me there.

Faithfully Ever

CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [23 MARCH 1851]

Text from F, VI, v, 515-16. Date: 23 March according to Forster.

I have written the first scene,[†3] and it has droll points in it, "more farcical points than you commonly find in farces,"[†4] really better. Yet I am constantly striving, for my reputation's sake, to get into it a meaning that is impossible in a farce; constantly thinking of it, therefore, against the grain; and constantly impressed with a conviction that I could never act in it myself with that wild abandonment which can alone carry a farce off. Wherefore I have confessed to Bulwer Lytton and asked for absolution.

You have no idea of the immensity of the work as the time advances, for the Duke even throws the whole of the audience on us, or he would get (he says) into all manner of scrapes.

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 23 MARCH 1851

MS Lytton Papers.

Knotsford Lodge, Great Malvern | Sunday Twenty Third March 1851.

My Dear Bulwer.

I have resolved to forego the idea of my Farce,[†5] and play an old one![†6] Pray understand my reasons, for I am very anxious to present them to you. I have no doubt you will agree with them.

The amount of business and correspondence that I have to attend to in connexion with the Play, is about (I should imagine) equal to the business of the Home Office. As the time approaches, it will enormously increase, for the Duke throws the whole collection and arrangement of the audience upon us, to prevent himself (which I can conceive to be very necessary) from giving offence to two or three hundred very particular and very sensitive friends. Carpenters, scene painters, tailors, bootmakers, musicians, all kinds of people, require my constant attention. Stone, in himself, is a Millstone—I shall have to go over that part with him (out of Rehearsal) at least fifty times—round my neck. To crown all, deducting Rehearsals and journies, I have but three days in the week to myself, and, in those, I have the Household Words to write for and think about. Over and above all this, I go the Farce doubtfully. I have written the first scene, which is very rapid and droll; but I don't feel the writing of a farce to be quite suited to me. I am continually trying to get a meaning into it, of which a farce is not susceptible. I have an uneasy sense of the impossibility of expressing anything, through such a vehicle, that people would expect from me. I know they must be disappointed, by the very nature of the thing. And I feel the incongruity so much, that I am certain I could not abandon myself to my own farce as I could to another writer's—And we have a sort of reputation for farce-acting (Lemon and I) which induces people to make up their minds beforehand, to be made to roar.

For all these reasons, I am happier in dismissing it, and morally sure that the Plays will be the better for it. I don't doubt that you will feel as I do.

Miss Coutts has suggested to me that it would be well to provide in the Prospectus, for the subjects and objects of those Lectures being under the controul of the Committee. Don't you think it would be well to insert a Paragraph to that effect?†1 And shall I do it, or will you? It may give a graver and more educational aspect to them. If you write to me before Thursday, address me in town.

†aI hope you saw, in Lemon the other day, the germ of a very fine presentation of Sir Geoffrey? I think Topham, too, will do Easy, admirably.†a We rehearse tomorrow night and Tuesday, at Covent Garden. I shall begin to know, then, what we are doing.

Ever Faithfully Yours My Dear Bulwer
CHARLES DICKENS

Ladies send best regards.
I have written to the Queen, through Phipps.

To FRANK STONE, 23 MARCH 1851*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Great Malvern | Sunday Twenty Third March 1851.

My Dear Stone.

Next Tuesday is my Shepherd's Bush day, and I fear I should have no time between 3 and the Rehearsal. On future Tuesdays, I am your man!

After you have sent in your pictures,[†2] what do you think of coming down here with me, one Wednesday, and returning for Rehearsal next Monday? From these breezy hills, we would produce the Duke of Middlesex complete.

You have no idea of the extent of business in which this Play involves me. Entre nous, I shall abandon the Farce, and play an old one. Plans, letters, parts, painters, carpenters, tailors, Queens, Dukes of Devonshire—I am constantly at my desk. And all the while, I am working at Household Words, more than ever.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 25 MARCH 1851

MS Lytton Papers.

Devonshire Terrace | Tuesday Morning | Twenty Fifth March 1851.

My Dear Bulwer

Coming home at midnight last night from our first Rehearsal I find your letter.[†a] I have not seen Forster since,[†a] but I write to entreat you, if you make any change in the first three acts, to let it be only of the slightest kind. Because we are now fairly under way—everybody is already drilled into his place—and [in][†1] two or three Rehearsals those acts will be in a tolerably presentable state.

It is of vital importance that we should get the last two acts soon. The Queen and Prince are coming—Phipps wrote to me yesterday the most earnest letter possible—the time is fearfully short—and we must have the Comedy in such a state as that it will go like a Machine. Whatever you do, for Heaven's sake don't be persuaded to endanger that.

[†b]I don't see the possibility of your making the change you propose, for Softhead, Flint,[†2] and those men.[†3] In the first place, how is it to be got in? We have at least 30 or 40 minutes to cut out of the play now.[†4] In the second—it is so difficult to fill these small parts, that I strongly believe we shall be thrown on small actors for them[†5]—with the exception of Horne, who is, between ourselves (I speak seriously) the very worst actor that the world ever saw, and who must not, on any account, be entrusted with more words than he has already.[†6]

I am disquieted by your note, and I particularly want to speak to you—about Forster—who seems to me to be going a little wrong[†1]—and about Lemon—who makes the character too farcical.[†b†2] Even at the risk of your falling into the Pit with despair, at beholding anything of the Comedy in its present state, if you can by any possibility come down to Covent Garden Theatre tonight—do.[†b] I will leave your name with the Stage Door-Keeper.[†b]

We really did wonders last night, in the way of arrangement. I see the ground-plan of the first three acts, distinctly. The dressing and furnishing and so forth, will be a perfect picture.[†3] And I will answer for the men, in three weeks' time.

In great haste My Dear Bulwer

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MR HAYNES,[†4] 25 MARCH 1851*

MS (in Wills's hand) Dickens House.

Household Words Office | 25 March 1851

Mr Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr Haynes and much regrets that the number of applications[†5] similar to that of Mr Haynes which is daily pressed on his notice prevents him from affording any aid in the way Mr Haynes proposes.

Mr Dickens hopes that Mr Haynes will by his own exertions preserve that home to which he seems so creditably attached.
Mr Haynes

To MRS MORSON, 25 MARCH 1851*

MS Dr A. A. Silverman.

Tuesday afternoon | Twenty Fifth March 1851
Dear Mrs. Morson

News was suddenly brought to me this morning, of the alarming illness of my father (who lies in London) and the necessity of his instantly undergoing a terrible operation.[†6] I need not say that this has engaged me, all day, and absorbed my whole attention. He is as well now, as anyone having undergone so severe a trial can be.

I shall be glad to hear from you by my messenger that all went on well to day, and also who was there, in order that I may make the usual entry in the Minute Book. I can scarcely write plainly, I have been so shaken.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS CHARLES DICKENS, 25 MARCH 1851

MS British Museum. Address: Mrs. Charles Dickens | Knotsford Lodge | Great Malvern.

Office | Tuesday Night Twenty Fifth March | 1851.

My Dearest Kate. I have been greatly hurried and shocked today. Mr. Davy[†1] came here this morning, to say that he thought it impossible my father could live many hours.[†2] He was in that state from active disease (of the bladder) which he had mentioned to nobody, that mortification and delirium, terminating in speedy death, seemed unavoidable. Mr. Wade[†3] was called in, who instantly performed (without chloroform) the most terrible operation known in surgery,[†4] as the only chance of saving him. He bore it with astonishing fortitude, and I saw him directly afterwards—his room, a slaughter house of blood. He was wonderfully cheerful and strong-hearted. The danger is that the wounds will slough and he will fall into a low fever—but the strength of his constitution may save him. I have been about, to get what is necessary for him, and write with such a shaking hand that I cannot write plainly.

You shall hear more at length by tomorrow's post. I hope to get down on Thursday. All this goes to my side directly, and I feel as if I had been struck there by a leaden bludgeon.

Children all blooming. Love to Georgy.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To THE DUKE OF DEVONSHIRE, 26 MARCH 1851

MS Devonshire Collections, Chatsworth.

Devonshire Terrace. | Wednesday Twenty Sixth March | 1851.

My Dear Lord Duke.

I have just time, before the Post goes out, to send you the two enclosed letters from Colonel Phipps—No. 2 received to day.

I hope to be at Great Malvern again tomorrow.

My Dear Lord Duke | Ever Faithfully and obliged

CHARLES DICKENS

The | Duke of Devonshire

To MRS CHARLES DICKENS, 26 MARCH 1851

MS British Museum.

H.W. Office | Wednesday Twenty Sixth March | 1851.

My Dearest Kate.

I reserve all news of the play, until I come down. The Queen appoints the 30th. of April. There is no end of trouble.

My father slept well last night, and is as well this morning (they send word) as anyone in such a state, so cut and slashed, can be. I have been waiting at home for Bulwer all the morning (it is now 2) and am now waiting on Lemon before I go up there. I will not close this note until I have been,[†a] and also until I know whether I can come back tomorrow—as I most earnestly hope to do.[†a]

It is raining here incessantly. The streets are in a most miserable state. A van containing the goods of some unfortunate family, moving, has broken down outside—and the whole scene is a picture of dreariness.

The children are quite well and very happy. I had Dora down this morning, who was quite charmed to see me. That Miss Ketteridge[†1] appointed 2 today for seeing the house[†2]—and probably she is at this moment disparaging it.

My father is very weak and low, but not worse, I hope, than might be expected. I am going home to dine with the children. By working here late tonight (coming back after dinner) I can finish what I have to do for the Play. Therefore I hope to be with you tomorrow, in good time for dinner.

Ever affectionately

CD.

Love to Georgy

To LIEUT. COLONEL THE HON. C. B. PHIPPS, 26 MARCH 1851

MS Bodleian Library.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Sixth March 1851.

My Dear Sir

I cannot forward the enclosed,[†3] without thanking you most cordially for your former kind note. I feel most sincerely indebted to you for your courtesy, and can assure you that those for whom I act esteem it, one and all, in no ordinary manner.

Very faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

The Hon. Colonel Phipps.

To MRS TAGART, 26 MARCH 1851

Text from N, II, 288.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Sixth March 1851

My Dear Mrs. Tagart

I am very much obliged to you for your kind note. I have a particular liking for that house,[†1] but I have resolved to "rent" no more, and have just enough doubt of my own iron virtue, to forbear rushing into temptation. Therefore I adjust my dressing gown like a toga, and put the card in the fire.

I am glad Mr. Tagart is going to the Fund Dinner.[†2] I observe by the Newspapers that they propose selling the ladies' tickets. I would recommend you to write to secure such as you want, to Mr. Cullenford, Adelphi. He is the Secretary.

Mrs Dickens has been very unwell, and we are down at Malvern.

Faithfully Yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To JOHN FORSTER, [27 MARCH 1851]

Text from F, VI, vi, 538. Date: 27 Mar according to Forster.

I saw my poor father twice yesterday, the second time between ten and eleven at night. In the morning I thought him not so well. At night, as well as any one in such a situation could be. He hoped he might join Forster and Lytton at Knebworth to discuss the play.

To W. H. WILLS, [27 MARCH 1851]

MS Huntington Library. Date: clearly 27 Mar, on the reference to his father's illness.

Devonshire Terrace | Thursday Morning

My Dear Wills

I think it not unlikely that Horne may unintentionally commit us to some mistake on the Sewer[†3] question,[†4] without careful revision.[†5]

Will you show Henry Austin the proof, and read it with him? We shall then be quite safe.

The Cabmen[†6] I shall expect tomorrow.

Mr. Sloman,[†1] and also Pitt the Scene Painter,[†2] are instructed that you will fork out from time to time as they require money for their work—You will receive a certain List of Properties today, which please put in your letter to me tonight. I think Pitt had better have Rehearsal-notices, in order that he may know where to find us.

In case my poor father should take any bad turn, and they should want me hurriedly, I have given my mother a paper, which in that case she would send to you. It contains a memorandum of the best way of sending a messenger down to Malvern. I saw him last night, and he was then doing quite well.

Ever Faithfully
CD.

W. H. Wills Esquire

To THE DUKE OF DEVONSHIRE, 28 MARCH 1851

MS Devonshire Collections, Chatsworth.

Great Malvern | Twenty Eighth March 1851.

My Dear Lord Duke.

I am delighted to hear that you are vanquishing the enemy[†3] with great spirit and in so genial a manner. And I hope this glorious morning will be the death of him.

May I ask your opinion—as you said I might—on two points connected with the admissions to Devonshire House. Of course I do so, merely for my own guidance.

Do you think it would be well to endeavour to get a sort of Committee of distinguished ladies, to give vouchers for the purchase of tickets; or do you think it would be enough for the Secretary to address a Circular to a certain List of the Nobility and gentry (it might be made out from your visiting List if there were no objection to his using it as a convenient reference) asking them if they wish to secure cards of admission?[†4]

And I should greatly like to know what you think we should charge. Do you conceive that Three Guineas a ticket would be too much?[†5]

I feel sure that you will not misunderstand my troubling you with a solicitation for your advice on these points. I am naturally anxious to act for the best and to have the benefit of your kind suggestions.

My idea of the best way of disposing of Her Majesty, I will shew you on the spot (if you will allow me) when the twelfth of April is past.[†6]

We have been busy in London three nights this week, until far into the early morning. Everybody is working hard, and Bulwer flies to and fro continually, in energetic restlessness.

My Dear Lord Duke | Ever Yours faithfully and obliged
CHARLES DICKENS

The | Duke of Devonshire

To CHARLES KNIGHT, 28 MARCH 1851

Extract in Passages of a Working Life, III, 114, checked from MS Sotheby's, July 1983; dated Great Malvern | Friday Night | Twenty Eighth March 1851.

Jerrold tells me that you will do Hodge, the Country Servant, in Bulwer's Comedy.[†1] Is that so, my noble trump? If yea, he is to present himself at Miss Kelly's theatre for rehearsals on Tuesday and Wednesday Evening.

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 28 MARCH 1851

MS Lytton Papers.

Great Malvern. | Twenty Eighth March 1851. | Friday

My Dear Bulwer. I think the enclosed a very great and a most decided improvement. I have copied it for myself, but I send it back, in case you should not have it in duplicate by any chance. The alteration you contemplate in the fifth act is also most important.[†2] And if you will keep them short and close, they will be immensely aided by this new trouble of yours. I shall find a note from you in Devonshire Terrace on Tuesday, saying whether you come to Tuesday night's or Wednesday night's Rehearsal, shall I?

The scenery and machinery are all in hand. Grieve paints the Mall as a present. Telbin the street, do.[†3] Louis Haghe the tapestry chamber in the fifth act, do. Egg, and Ward the Painter,[†4] direct the wardrobe people[†5] and look to the furniture—of which I have made out a long list. I hope we shall be very complete.

Faithfully Ever

CD.

Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton.

To THOMAS MITTON, 28 MARCH 1851

Extract in N, II, 290. MS 1 ¼ pp.; dated Great Malvern, 28 Mar 51.

Referring to a begging letter he had received;[†1] also I am here with Kate for her health—cold water cure! My father, I am afraid, is very dangerously ill.

To F. O. WARD, 28 MARCH 1851†

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

Great Malvern | Twenty Eighth March 1851.

My Dear Sir

I am here at present with Mrs. Dickens who has not been well; and I received your note today.

I enclose the two "cases" duly crossed.[†2] I am not sure whether I do right in adding my own version as a third, but you will forgive me if I be wrong.

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

F.O. Ward Esquire

CD.

Case 1.

But I think it would be infinitely better, thus—"or a hand to straighten their cramp-gnarled limbs, or decently to close their staring eyes when they were dead."

Case 2.

And I think it would be better "these were thus crushingly" &c.—not "they"—which seems to make a confusion in the sentence with "their", preceding.

/over[†3]

To W. H. WILLS, 28 MARCH 1851

MS Huntington Library.

Great Malvern | Twenty Eighth March 1851. | Friday

My Dear Wills

I will read the Execution Paper[†4] by young Dumas,[†5] this evening. I am not able to do so before post-time (early here) having an arrear of letters to get through, but I will return it by the Morning Post tomorrow, in case you should desire to know what I think about it at the office tomorrow Afternoon. Generally, I don't like, for such a purpose, descriptions of Executions—and that kind of Frenchman is not likely to enlighten one's mind about them. But we shall see.

I find in the letter of yours which I missed when I came up,[†1] a begging letter (about the twentieth from the same hand) signed Thomas Lewis.[†2] I can't make out whether the man's mad or only an unusual vagabond—I merely mention him, as a caution to you, not to give him anything.

The Cabs[†3] I will do what I can for, tomorrow.

Ever Faithfully

CD

To W. H. WILLS, 28 MARCH 1851

MS Huntington Library.

Great Malvern | Friday Night | Twenty Eighth March 1851.

My Dear Wills.

I don't like young Dumas' paper at all. Nothing can justify such a subject, but some exceedingly vigorous treatment of it—and this is in the last degree flat and poor. Add to the nature of the thing itself that it is a translation from a French Newspaper, and it is yet more objectionable. I am quite clear against it.

I send a paper by Chesterton which has not much in it, but which, called

Coolness among Thieves

—and altered by the softening of some of his hardest words and finest writing, will—do.[†4] I can't say more for it.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To MRS COWDEN CLARKE,[†5] 29 MARCH 1851

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds. Address: Mrs. Cowden Clarke | Craven Hill Cottage | Bayswater.

Great Malvern | Twenty Ninth March 1851.

My Dear Mrs. Cowden Clarke.

Ah those were days indeed—when we were so fatigued at dinner that we couldn't speak, and so revived at supper that we couldn't go to bed—when wild in Inns the noble savage ran[†6]—and all the world was a stage gas-lighted in a double sense—by the Young Gas[†7] and the old one![†8]

When Emmeline Montague[†1] (now Compton[†2] and the mother of two children)[†3] came to rehearse in our new comedy the other night, I nearly fainted. The gush of recollection was so overpowering that I couldn't bear it.

I use the portfolio[†4] for managerial papers still. That's something.

But all this does not thank you for your book.[†5] I have not got it yet (being here with Mrs. Dickens who has been very unwell) but I shall be in town early in the week, and shall bring it down to read quietly on these hills, where the wind blows as freshly as if there were no Popes and no Cardinals whatsoever—nothing the matter anywhere. I thank you a thousand times, beforehand, for the pleasure you are going to give me. I am full of faith.

Your sister Emma.[†6] She is doing work of some sort on the P.S.[†7] side of the boxes, in some dark Theatre, I know—but where I wonder.[†8] Wilmott[†9] has not proposed to her yet, has he? I understood he was going to offer his hand and heart, and lay his leg at her feet.[†10]

Ever Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Cowden Clarke.

To W. H. WILLS, 29 MARCH 1851

MS Huntington Library.

Great Malvern | Saturday Twenty Ninth March 1851.

My Dear Wills

I find there is no day-post from here, so you will only get the rejected Guillotine paper[†11] with this.

Enclosed, the Cab paper.[†12] I have done what I can with it,[†13] but it is a poor opportunity. I hope the information generally, is more correct than that appertaining to Paris, as I found it.

I think I shall come to town on Monday, and be at the office in good time on Tuesday Morning.

I keep this note open, until the arrival of tomorrow's Post. But I must not forget to say that you exercised the soundest possible discretion in the matter of Chambers, and that I think very well of him indeed, for his wholesome view of the subject.[†1]

Sunday

I am coming up this afternoon, with the view of dashing over to Bulwer's somehow or other, to confer with him upon some points in reference to which he is in sudden agonies.[†2] In good time on Tuesday, I shall see you at the office.

Ever Faithfully

CD

To THE DUKE OF DEVONSHIRE, 30 MARCH 1851

MS Devonshire Collections, Chatsworth.

Great Malvern | Sunday Thirtieth March 1851

My Dear Lord Duke

I cannot forbear replying in a word or two to your kindest of letters—though I do so very hastily, having to get across country by some means or other to Bulwer's house in Hertfordshire, to settle some alterations in the comedy suddenly suggested by Mr. Macready and communicated to me by Bulwer (in agonies)[†3] by this morning's post.[†4]

Your acceptance of the trust I have been so anxious about, clears away all difficulties as if by enchantment. I see nothing but radiance in the prospect. Nor do I now think five guineas too much.[†5] But I would seat everybody, with the exception of such gentlemen loungers as could stand in the entrances from the staircase. Nothing is so bad, both for actors and audience, as the presence of people who can neither see nor hear.

Ever My Dear Lord Duke | Yours faithfully and obliged
CHARLES DICKENS

The | Duke of Devonshire.

To DR WILLIAM SMITH,[†1] [LATE MARCH 1851]

Mention in Thomas Thorp catalogue No. 342 (1921); MS 2 ½ pp.; dated Knotsford Lodge, Great Malvern. Date: since from Malvern, probably between 20 and 30 Mar.

To THOMAS BEARD, 31 MARCH 1851

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | "Morning Herald" Office | Shoe Lane | Fleet Street. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Thirty First March 1851.

You will be sorry, in the remembrance of a good many years my Dear old fellow, to learn that my poor father died this morning at five and twenty minutes before six. I had taken Kate to Malvern for her health (she has a nervous illness about her) and came to town last night, almost by chance. He didn't know me, or any one, and quietly declined until he died.

I had left him, last Wednesday Evening, composed and pretty cheerful—but I had very very little hope of his recovery. He had kept his real malady so profoundly secret, that when he did disclose it his state was most alarmingly advanced towards this sad end. He suddenly drooped about noon yesterday, and never rallied afterwards.

Ever affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Beard Esquire

To THE EDITOR OF THE DAILY NEWS, [31 MARCH 1851]

MS Berg Collection. Date: The notice was clearly sent to the papers on 31 Mar, since it appeared in the Morning Post and Morning Chronicle, as well as the Daily News, on 1 Apr.

DEATH.[†2]
On Monday the 31st. March, in Keppel Street Russell Square, Mr. John Dickens in his 66th. year.
CHARLES DICKENS

Daily News[†3]

To JOHN FORSTER, 31 MARCH 1851

Extract in F, 1872-4, II, XX, 457-8.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday, thirty first of March 1851.

My poor father died this morning at five and twenty minutes to six.[†1] They had sent for me to Malvern, but I passed John on the railway; for I came up with the intention of hurrying down to Bulwer Lytton's to-day before you should have left.[†2] I arrived at eleven last night, and was in Keppel-street at a quarter past eleven. But he did not know me, nor any one. He began to sink at about noon yesterday, and never rallied afterwards. I remained there until he died—O so quietly . . . I hardly know what to do. I am going up to Highgate to get the ground.[†3] Perhaps you may like to go, and I should like it if you do. I will not leave here before two o'clock. I think I must go down to Malvern again, at night, to know what it is to be done about the children's mourning; and as you are returning to Bulwer's I should like to have gone that way, if Bradshaw gave me any hope of doing it. I wish most particularly to see you, I needn't say. I must not let myself be distracted by anything—and God knows I have left a sad sight!—from the scheme on which so much depends. Most part of the alterations proposed I think good.

To GEORGE HOGARTH, 31 MARCH 1851

MS Dickens House.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Thirty First March 1851.

My Dear Hogarth

Will you attend my poor father's funeral? It will be necessary to meet at 34 Keppel Street, at ½ past 10. I have arranged for Saturday, but if it should be necessary to have it on an even earlier day, Wills will kindly let you know.

Ever affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

George Hogarth Esquire.

To C. A. BARRY,[†1] [? MARCH 1851]

Extract[†2] in Walpole Galleries catalogue, No. 132. Date: If, as seems possible, the drawing was for CD's costume as Lord Wilmot, then Mar 51 would be the likely date for these instructions.[†3]

Mr. Dickens has seen this sketch and is pleased with its appearance. The figure should be slighter [with] Dress-coat, white cravat, gold double chain.

April

To G. S. RIDGWAY, [1 APRIL 1851]

MS Devonshire Collections, Chatsworth. On mourning paper. Date: clearly the same day as the Duke agreed to have vouchers sent out for the first performance of the play (see To the Duke of Devonshire, 30 Mar, fn).

Devonshire Terrace. | Tuesday Night

Dear Sir

As The Duke approves of my plan of our Secretary sending round the circulars, I shall be much obliged to you if you can spare me the visiting-book.[†4]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

—Ridgway Esquire.

To [JAMES][†5] BLACKWOOD, 3 APRIL 1851*

MS Bodleian Library. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Third April 1851.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Blackwood,[†6] and begs to say that no portrait is prefixed to the cheap Edition of his books.

To WILLIAM HAZLITT,[†1] 3 APRIL 1851

MS Queens' College, Cambridge. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Third April 1851

My Dear Hazlitt

Mr. Macready will be proud of your dedication, and honored by it.[†2] I am remiss in not having told you so before, but I really meant to accept the compliment with the earnestness I know he would feel, when you spoke to me at the London Tavern.

Faithfully Yours Always
CHARLES DICKENS

W. Hazlitt Esquire.

To CHARLES MANBY, 3 APRIL 1851

Text from Outlook, 11 Oct 1913.

Devonshire Terrace | Third April 1851

My dear Manby,

All I know of the matter on which you wrote me is this. Jerdan wrote me, mentioning certain names, and asking me would I be one of such a committee, and what was my advice? I replied that I would be one, and that my advice was that the thing should on no account be made public, my opinion being (this I say to you and did not say to him, but reserved for the committee) that it is not a public case.[†3]

Faithfully your's
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Manby Esquire.

To W. H. WILLS, 3 APRIL 1851

Text from MDGH, I, 250-1.

Devonshire Terrace, Thursday Morning, April 3rd, 1851.

My Dear Wills,

I took my threatened walk last night, but it yielded little but generalities.

However, I thought of something for to-night, that I think will make a splendid paper. I have an idea that it might be connected with the gas paper[†4] (making gas a great agent in an effective police), and made one of the articles. This is it: "A Night in a Station-House."[†5] If you would go down to our friend Mr. Yardley,[†6] at Scotland Yard, and get a letter or order to the acting chief authority at that station-house in

Bow Street, to enable us to hear the charges, observe the internal economy of the station-house all night, go round to the cells with the visiting policeman, etc., I would stay there, say from twelve to-night to four or five in the morning.[†1] We might have a "night-cap," a fire, and some tea at the office hard by. If you could conveniently borrow an hour or two from the night we could both go. If not, I would go alone. It would make a wonderful good paper at a most appropriate time, when the back slums of London are going to be invaded by all sorts of strangers.[†2]

You needn't exactly say that I was going in propriâ (unless it were necessary), and, of course, you wouldn't say that I propose to-night, because I am so worn by the sad arrangements in which I am engaged, and by what led to them,[†3] that I cannot take my natural rest. But to-morrow night we go to the gas-works. I might not be so disposed for this station-house observation as I shall be to-night for a long time, and I see a most singular and admirable chance for us in the descriptive way, not to be lost.

Therefore, if you will arrange the thing before I come down at four this afternoon, any of the Scotland Yard people will do it, I should think; if our friend by any accident should not be there, I will go into it.

If they should recommend any other station-house as better for the purpose, or would think it better for us to go to more than one under the guidance of some trustworthy man, of course we will pay any man and do as they recommend. But I think one topping station-house would be best.

Faithfully ever

[CD.] †aP.S.—I write from my bed.†a

To THE DUKE OF DEVONSHIRE, 4 APRIL 1851

MS Devonshire Collections, Chatsworth. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Fourth April 1851.

My Dear Lord Duke.

A family bereavement—the death of my poor dear father—has necessarily directed my thoughts, for a few days, away from our scheme. But it is too great a one to be long dismissed, and the interests involved and the number of willing heads and hearts that cannot act without me, bring me back to it with the steady cheerfulness belonging to a good employment.

I enclose you—not to trouble you, but wishing you to see them as proofs before they are finally printed—the proposed letter which we shall send—the proposed Voucher, which you will sign—and the proposed ticket which Mr. Mitchell†4 will sign, and issue in exchange.†5 If you would advise any alteration in any one of these, or in all, I trust to your kindness to instruct me what it is. Had I not better ask Colonel Phipps at what hour Her Majesty would wish the play to begin?

I shall be at Malvern tomorrow night, and happy to receive a few words from you. I suddenly remember that I have forgotten one thing. In sending round the circular letter, would there be any objection to our sealing it with your seal, or putting a fac-simile of your signature in the corner of the envelope?—Merely to ensure its not being confounded with a common circular? I make the enquiry, not as asking the favor, but in the perfectly confiding spirit you infuse onto me. I am sure you will say no, if you think no.

I have been the innocent occasion of the Rehearsals being stopped for a week; but we resume next Tuesday, and they are all so ardent that they will make up for the lost time, I am sure, in a single day.†1 Mr. Maclise the academician, a dear friend of mine, has proposed to me (I think you will be interested to hear) to paint a picture for the Guild, representing the Green Room at your house,†2 with portraits of the actors and author†3—and to ask your leave bye and bye to dedicate it to you—and to have it engraved and published for the benefit of the design.†4 I think it a very graceful and generous suggestion—in all things worthy of a man of his genius.

My Dear Lord Duke | Most Faithfully yours

CHARLES DICKENS

The | Duke of Devonshire

To MRS CHARLES DICKENS, 4 APRIL 1851

MS British Museum. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Friday Fourth April | 1851.

My Dearest Kate.

I have been so worried and worn since I have been here that I have not even had the power of taking rest—having been up, now, three whole nights—and out and walking about, two. I hope to leave it all behind me tomorrow afternoon.—I need.

We shall come down please God by the afternoon Express tomorrow, which will enable us to reach Malvern by a little after 11 at night. Will you have the wine, hot and cold water &c ready. Forster will be with us. He returns on Monday.[†5] Tell Anne that for so short a time he must have my dressing room for a bedchamber, and that if she will remove my supplementary jug and basin into Georgina's room, I must make out as well as I can to dress there.

I am afraid you have had but a dull time of it this week—with no amusement but baths—and little to look at but bad weather. I have sometimes felt, myself, as if I could have given up, and let the whole battle ride on over me. But that has not lasted long, for God knows I have plenty to cheer me in the long run.

I have sent Mamey and Katey with Georgina to Blackheath today, with power to ride donkeys &c. I don't expect they will do much house hunting, but I thought it would be a treat for the girls.

The children are all well and as happy as possible. Your health was drunk at Forster's on the second, with loud acclamations.[†1]

Ever most affectionately

CD.

To W. H. WILLS, 5 APRIL 1851*

MS Huntington Library. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday Afternoon | Fifth April 1851.

My Dear Wills.

The poor Governesses'[†2] circumstances remain the same, whatever little claims of an unexpected nature have come upon me. I can't reconcile it to myself to disappoint her.[†3] Will you do what you think necessary?[†4]

I send the Memorandum of my Guild payments[†5]—the Prospectus[†6] with an alteration or two—and the Voucher with the alteration I pointed out to you. I hope, by Forster on Monday, to be able to send you final instructions for getting to Press with these. I feel, now, so worried out that I can scarcely write.[†7]

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To JAMES BALLARD,[†8] 7 APRIL 1851*

MS Yale University Library. On mourning paper.

Knotsford Lodge | Great Malvern, Worcestershire | Monday Seventh April, 1851.

Dr. Mr. Ballard.

On what terms could I have the Fort House, furnished as usual, from the middle of May until the end of October? If you will tell me for what sum of money the owner will be willing to let it to me for that period, I will inform you without loss of time whether I will take it.[†9]

You know that it is not my habit to bargain in such cases, and therefore I rely on your naming the lowest sum at once. You need not cast it off, to me, by weeks or months, but mention the price for the whole term.

As my days for being in town are uncertain at present, have the goodness to address your reply to me, here.

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Ballard.

To FRANK STONE, 7 APRIL 1851*

MS Benoliel Collection. On mourning paper.

Great Malvern | Monday Seventh April | 1851.

My Dear Stone

Although I shall see you tomorrow evening, I think it well to let you know that we return by the Express Train on Wednesday afternoon at 5—having barely time (I suppose) after Wednesday's Day Rehearsal, to swallow a chop before taking to the Rail.

In haste | Ever Affectionately

CD.

To W. H. WILLS, 7 APRIL 1851

MS Huntington Library. On mourning paper.

Great Malvern | Monday Seventh April 1851.

My Dear Wills.

Don't you think it will be best for us to breakfast together—with a general view to H.W.—on Wednesday Morning? Will you breakfast with me in Devonshire Terrace at 10? I shall see you tomorrow night of course, but I send this note in case I should otherwise interfere with your arrangements.

I shall also want to take counsel with you about my prospective occupation of the two back rooms in Wellington Street,[†1] with iron bedsteads, during the Expositional absence of myself and family.[†2] I have an idea (if the Broadstairs people be not made, Expositionally, more than usually sharkish) of taking the Fort House from May to October. And in that case I shall want occasionally to make my tent comfortable at the office.

Faithfully Ever

CD.

To [?ISIDOR] GERSTENBERG,[†3] 9 APRIL 1851*

MS (in Wills's hand) Fales Collection, New York University Library.

Office of Household Words, | 9 April 1851

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Gerstenberg and although it would give him great pleasure to find that Mr. Gerstenberg had succeeded in his objects as respects Professor Kinkel,[†1] regrets that his time is so fully occupied as to be quite unable to give even the small assistance asked by Mr. Gerstenberg & his friends.[†2]

J Gerstenberg Esqr.

To THE DUKE OF DEVONSHIRE, 10 APRIL 1851

MS Devonshire Collections, Chatsworth. On mourning paper.

Great Malvern | Tenth April 1851.

My Dear Lord Duke.

Your note reached me yesterday, as I was leaving the Theatre[†3] after a hard day's work, and flying to the Train.

I hope all the circulars will be got out by Saturday at latest. The Voucher-forms will be sent to you. May you easily get rid of them![†4]

We rehearse on Tuesday, all the morning and all the evening. In the interval between the two periods (as nearly as I can calculate at about four) I will come to Devonshire House unless you tell me not to come, with the hope of seeing you.

The lady-characters are slight. The heroine is Mrs. Compton—late Miss Emmeline Montague[†5]—quite a lady, and of the purest character. She has acted with us often before. Miss Anne Romer was to have played the other part[†6] (who has also often acted with us, both in London and in the country)[†7] but I am obliged suddenly to find someone in her place,[†8] by reason of her being in the Easter piece at the Haymarket.[†9] This is no difficulty.

I hope to form a Band,[†10] of the students of the Royal Academy of Music, and to get an overture steadily played.[†11]

The company are beginning to get quite pale with the slow agonies of incessant drill.

With many thanks for your kind note

My Dear Lord Duke | Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The | Duke of Devonshire

To WILLIAM CULLENFORD, [11 APRIL 1851]

Envelope only, MS Dr Robert Newsom. Address: Mr Cullenford | Royal Adelphi Theatre | London. PM Malvern 11 Apr 51.

To MRS GASKELL, 13 APRIL 1851

Mention in American Art Association catalogue, May 1925; MS 1 p.; dated Great Malvern, 13 April 51.

CD says he is staying at Great Malvern with Mrs Dickens who is not well, though now greatly improved in health.[†1]

To W. H. WILLS, 13 APRIL 1851

MS Huntington Library. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace |—I write it naturally—meaning | Great Malvern |
Sunday Thirteenth April 1851

My Dear Wills

I enclose you the Police Article.[†2] I have cut down the number of cases, to save tediousness. Two drunken men, for example, could scarcely have been done well.[†3] It occurs to me that I have not described the Cells. But I had better "put in that", and any other line or so that occurs to me, when I get the proof.[†4] For the present slips are horribly mauled. I have done all I could—sat at it 9 hours without stirring—and hope it will come out well.

I preside at the Fund Dinner tomorrow.[†5] I suppose you don't go. Will you breakfast with me again, on Tuesday Morning, to talk over things in general?

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To ROBERT DAVEY, [?MID-APRIL 1851]

Mention in "The Parents of Charles Dickens" (undated letter from Mrs Davey),[†1] Lippincott's Magazine, XIII [June 1874], 773). Date: presumably not long after John Dickens's death.

To J. C. HORSLEY,[†2] APRIL 1851

Mention in Goodspeed's catalogue, March 1908; MS 1 p.; dated Great Malvern, Apr 51. Date: since from Malvern, between 6 and 14 April.

To HENRY AUSTIN, 15 APRIL 1851

Text from N, II, 297.

Devonshire Terrace | Fifteenth April 1851

My Dear Henry

Word was brought to me last night, as I rose out of the chair at the Fund Dinner, that our poor little Dora had died in a moment—I had been nursing her, before I went out.

I want your advice. I wish to buy a piece of ground where we may lay the child, and be laid ourselves one day. What shall I do? Would it be expedient to buy it in a cemetery,[†3] or to wait to purchase under better auspices—such as the Bill[†4] opens out?[†5] In the latter case would you advise me to lay the little coffin in a catacomb?—

could I do it?[†1]—for the meantime? I will do what you would do yourself in such a case.

Ever affectionately

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To MRS CHARLES DICKENS, 15 APRIL 1851

MS British Museum. Address: Mrs. Charles Dickens. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Tuesday Morning | Fifteenth April 1851.

My dearest Kate.

Now observe. You must read this letter, very slowly and carefully. If you have hurried on thus far without quite understanding (apprehending some bad news), I rely on your turning back, and reading again.

Little Dora,[†2] without being in the least pain, is suddenly stricken ill.[†3] She awoke out of a sleep, and was seen, in one moment, to be very ill. Mind! I will not deceive you. I think her very ill.

There is nothing in her appearance but perfect rest. You would suppose her quietly asleep. But I am sure she is very ill, and I cannot encourage myself with much hope of her recovery. I do not—why should I say I do, to you my dear!—I do not think her recovery at all likely.

I do not like to leave home,[†4] I can do nothing here, but I think it right to stay here. You will not like to be away, I know, and I cannot reconcile it to myself to keep you away. Forster with his usual affection for us comes down to bring you this letter and to bring you home. But I cannot close it without putting the strongest entreaty and injunction upon you to come home with perfect composure—to remember what I have often told you, that we never can expect to be exempt, as to our many children, from the afflictions of other parents—and that if—if—when you come, I should even have to say to you "our little baby is dead", you are to do your duty to the rest, and to shew yourself worthy of the great trust you hold in them.

If you will only read this, steadily, I have a perfect confidence in your doing what is right.

Ever affectionately

CHARLES DICKENS xml:id="dk06.1730tm"/>[†1]

To THE DUKE OF DEVONSHIRE, 15 [APRIL] 1851

MS Devonshire Collections, Chatsworth. Date: misdated May by CD; the day after Dora's death. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Tuesday Fifteenth May 1851.

My Dear Lord Duke.

At Four to day, as we agreed, my card was presented at your house, but you were unfortunately out. The servants said you had gone down to the House of Lords.

It was presented by Mr. Lemon and not by myself, for a sad reason. I presided at a Public Dinner in the City yesterday; and on leaving the Chair was informed of the instantaneous death of my infant child. She had died in a moment, during the dinner, and my servant deferred telling me until I had finished my duty.[†2] We had called her Dora, in remembrance of my last story—it was an ill omened name—I had had her in my arms just before I went out—and I have now to tell her mother that though she was quite gay then, she is now only a remembrance.

I do not dwell on this to weary you or because I cannot resign an innocent little child to God. But a few days' rest from the toils of the Play, I feel to be necessary after a sudden blow which falls so soon upon a previous trial. This I begged my friend Mr. Lemon to explain to you. I begged him to ask you if you would kindly write to Colonel Phipps briefly saying how it is—and asking Her Majesty to change the day to any day between the 13th. and 20th. of May, both inclusive.

May I ask you this favor, as he could not?

I feel it to be of great importance that we should advertize the new day with the least possible delay; and if Her Majesty's kindness and consideration would enable me to do so, I should be much relieved.[†3]

One other favor, my dear Lord Duke, I have to ask. Would it inconvenience you if the Stage were erected next Tuesday, and if we rehearsed on it next day and pretty regularly afterwards? We should not be in the house more than a few hours at a time, and could be very quiet.

Your kind reply will set my mind at ease. I have told all the company that I shall be ready again for Rehearsal, tomorrow week; and in the meanwhile I will direct the Honorary Secretary in all the announcement business.

My Dear Lord Duke | Ever Faithfully and obliged
CHARLES DICKENS

The | Duke of Devonshire.

To MARK LEMON, 15 APRIL 1851

MS Benoliel Collection. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Fifteenth April, 1851.

My Dear Mark

I am quite sure that in my confusion I have proposed to put the play off, too long. Say to the Duke instead, to propose to the Queen to fix any day between the 13th. and the 20th. of May. And say so to all the Company besides.

Ever and Ever affectionately
CD.

To THE DUKE OF DEVONSHIRE, 17 APRIL 1851

MS Devonshire Collections, Chatsworth. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Seventeenth April 1851.

My Dear Lord Duke.

I am deeply sensible of your sympathy. From my heart I thank you for it, and return your friendship. I am going to take my poor little pet to Highgate this morning, and could never feel your tenderness more acutely than now.

Ever believe me | Your faithful and attached
CHARLES DICKENS

The | Duke of Devonshire

To F. M. EVANS, 17 APRIL 1851

MS Berg Collection. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Thursday Seventeenth April | 1851.

My Dear Evans.

I am very sensible of your sympathy. I feel your kind note very much.

We bury our poor little pet this morning. And it is a blessed thing to know, as I do thoroughly in my heart, that if, with a wish, I could cancel what has happened and bring the little creature back to life, I would not do it. God be thanked!

Mrs. Dickens is as well as I could hope. I am not without some impression that this shock may even do her good.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

F. M. Evans Esquire

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 17 APRIL 1851†

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Thursday Night | Seventeenth April 1851.

My Dear Miss Coutts

Our poor little Dora!—I had just been playing with her, and went to preside at a Public Dinner to which I was pledged. Before it was over—even before they sang the Grace—she was dead. I had left her well and gay. My servant came down with the sad news, but they kept it from me until the meeting was over.

Mrs. Dickens was at Malvern. By bringing her to town on a pretence of the poor little pet's being hopelessly ill, we made the shock as gradual as we could. She is as well as I could hope, and begs me to say so to you and to thank you earnestly.

We laid the child in her grave today. And it is a part of the goodness and mercy of God that if we could call her back to life, now, with a wish, we would not do it.

Ever Most Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Our kind regards to Mr. and Mrs. Brown.

To R. H. HORNE, 17 APRIL 1851*

MS Yale University Library. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Seventeenth April, 1851.

My Dear Horne.

I strewed your flowers over our poor little pet, last night. They will be buried with her today.

You know how we felt that precious sympathy and tenderness in you and your dear wife, O far better than I can tell you now.

Faithfully Yours ever
CD.

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 18 APRIL 1851

MS Lytton Papers. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Eighteenth April, 1851.

My Dear Bulwer.

It was a happiness to me last night, to be remembered by you so kindly.

Kate is as well as I could hope. I do not yet know what the effect of such a shock may be on her nervous condition, but she is quite resigned to what has happened and can speak of it tranquilly. She is so good and amiable that I hope it may not hurt her.

She and Georgina send their kind regards.

I shall be at my post, please God, on Wednesday, and have neglected nothing. Your dedication (which Forster shewed me last night) is most beautiful.[†1] Mitchell says we are certain of a thousand pounds on the Queen's night.

Ever Affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS MORSON, 18 APRIL 1851*

MS Dr A. A. Silverman.

Devonshire Terrace | Good Friday 1851

Dear Mrs. Morson

You had better summon the committee for Tuesday. I hope to be certainly with you.

Faithfully Yours

CD.

To FRANK STONE, 18 APRIL 1851*

MS Benoliel Collection. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Good Friday, 1851.

My Dear Stone

I am anxious to direct Kate's attention to our removal, and to keep it engaged.

Would it suit Mrs. Stone and you, if we called to look at your house,[†1] either on Monday or Tuesday? If so, will you say which day and at what hour.

Ever Affectionately

CD.

To MRS HENRY AUSTIN, 19 APRIL 1851*

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Nineteenth April 1851.

My Dear Laetitia.

I write hastily to acknowledge the receipt of your note, and to tell you that Kate has borne her shock as well as I could hope, but that she is very far from well. We have buried our poor little pet, and can quite quietly (I hope) entrust her to God.

With loves to Henry, if he be with you,

Ever affectionately

CHARLES DICKENS

To THOMAS BEARD, 19 APRIL 1851

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Place | Edgeware Road.
On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Sunday Nineteenth April | 1851

My Dear Beard.

You have heard of our domestic sorrow. This note is not to refer to it, but to a public matter for which I have long been working.

The advertisement[†1] I append to the other side of this note will appear (I send it now, only to enlighten you) in the Herald on Monday.[†2] If you will give some notice of the enclosed prospectus, and call attention to it, you will serve a cause of the highest importance—to which we are all zealously bound—and will gratify the owners of all the names you will find associated together;—the owner of my name not the least.

Kate is very low. We have let our own house, and taken the dear old Fort at Broadstairs from the middle of May until the end of October. So I hope this will prove a refreshing year for you, and often find you cooling yourself out of hot London in the sea breeze.

Ever affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Beard Esquire.

To J. B. BUCKSTONE, 19 APRIL 1851

Mention in N, II, 300. Dated 19 Apr 51.

To FREDERICK DICKENS, 19 APRIL 1851

Mention in Anderson Galleries catalogue No. 1628 (1922); MS 2 pp.; dated 19 Apr 51.

On the death of his daughter Dora.

To THOMAS MITTON, 19 APRIL 1851

MS University of Texas. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Nineteenth April 1851.

My Dear Mitton

I have been in trouble, or I should have written to you sooner. My wife has been, and is, far from well. [†a]Frederick caused me great vexation and expence.[†a] My poor father's death caused me much distress[†b]—and more expence[†1]—but of that, in such a case, I say nothing.[†b] I came to London last Monday to preside at a public dinner—played with little Dora my youngest child before I went—and was told, when I left the chair, that she had died in a moment. I am quite myself[†2] again, but I have undergone a good deal.

[†c]I send you all the papers I have, relating to Thompson's[†3] affair.[†4] I am in town again now, and shall be at home on Monday, Tuesday, Friday, and Saturday, Mornings. [†c] I am not going back to Malvern, but have let this house until September, and taken The Fort at Broadstairs.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To FRANK STONE, 20 APRIL 1851*

MS Benoliel Collection. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Sunday Twentieth April 1851.

My Dear Stone.

Thanks for your kind note. We will come tomorrow at 4.[†5]

Ever Affectionately

CD.

Frank Stone Esquire.

To W. H. WILLS, 20 APRIL 1851

MS Huntington Library. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Sunday Twentieth April 1851.

My Dear Wills.

Charles Knight left the enclosed here, today.

I am taking Mrs. Dickens out, under a variety of pretences. I make one now, that I am not decided whether to go to Wellington Street for our barrack quarters,[†1] or to Lancaster Place.[†2] Will you instruct Johnson[†3] to be at the latter chambers tomorrow (Monday) at a quarter past 4, and wait till I come? I will shew them to her. We are going to look at Stone's house just before.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To T. O. BARLOW,[†4] [?23 APRIL 1851]

Mention in To Maclise, 25 Apr 51. Date: a few days before that letter.

Acknowledging his offer to engrave Maclise's proposed picture of the Company.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?24 APRIL 1851]

Mention in To Lytton, 28 Apr 51. Date: "a few days" before that letter.

An earnest note, warning him against being too loud and violent[†5] in the play.

To WILLIAM HOWITT, 24 APRIL 1851*

MS University of California, Los Angeles. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Thursday Evening | Twenty Fourth April, 1851.

My Dear Sir

Pray don't estimate the regard in which I hold a letter from you, by the length of this reply. I am constantly occupied just now, to the utmost limits of my spare time, in working at Bulwer's play for the establishment of the new scheme.

I must own that I have not sufficient confidence in American publishers, editors, and otherwise, to go with the least spirit into the sort of conference that has occurred to you.[†1] Nor can I believe that it would lead to any but evasive results.

I thoroughly agree with you concerning the forest, every leaf of which is precious to its rightful and loving possessor the people. Pray write me a paper in the Forest's behalf.[†2] We have missed you sadly of late, and you belong to the Forests[†3]—should be at the head of the Woods and Forests if I could place you there. I shall hope to hear from you very soon.

With kind regards to Mrs. Howitt, and that charming little "bit of Life" in Munich,[†4] Believe me

Ever Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

William Howitt Esquire.

To OCTAVIAN BLEWITT, 25 APRIL 1851*

MS Royal Literary Fund. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Fifth April, 1851.

Dear Sir

As I shall not be able to attend the dinner,[†5] I beg to return the enclosed tickets.

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Octavian Blewitt Esquire.

To MESSRS BROOKES & SONS,[†1] 25 APRIL 1851

MS Yale University Library. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace, London | Friday Night | Twenty Fifth April 1851.

My Dear Sirs.

I am most truly obliged to you for your elegant present[†2] and its accompanying letter. The beautiful production of your Manufactory is enhanced in value to an extent which your modesty can scarcely imagine by your manner of sending it to me. I accept it with the greatest gratification, and, I hope, in no uncongenial spirit.

The introduction of your name in the story,[†3] is one of those remarkable coincidences that defy all calculation. I had no idea that I was taking a liberty with any existing firm; and why I added Sheffield to Brookes (of all the towns in England) I have no kind of knowledge. It came into my head as I wrote, just as any other name and address might have done if I had been diverting the attention of a real child.

As I wish to continue on such pleasant terms with you, and as I remember an old superstition concerning the severance of friendship with knives, and the absolute necessity of offering some trifle in exchange, I shall beg you to do me the favor of accepting my own copy of Copperfield, which, as coming from the shelves in my study will perhaps have an interest for you that another copy might not possess.[†4]

I will send it tomorrow, and I remain with many thanks and all good wishes,

Yours faithfully and obliged

CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Brookes and Sons.

To EDWARD CHAPMAN, 25 APRIL 1851*

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Fifth April 1851.

Dear Sir

I have gone over the accounts, and find them quite satisfactory. I cannot object to the charge for Warehouse room, which appears quite fair and moderate.

Have the goodness to pay the balance due to me, to my account at Coutts's.[†5]

—And, at your convenience to let me have the half year's sale of Oliver Twist in the cheap Edition, in a separate account. You did not perhaps understand that I wish it always to be separate as I have a partner in that book,[†6] and cannot arrange satisfactorily respecting it, unless it is so stated.

If you will do this for me at your leisure, therefore, I shall be much obliged. Also if you will, like my friend Captain Cuttle, "make a note of it"[†1] for the future.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Edward Chapman Esquire.

To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, 25 APRIL 1851

MS Yale University Library. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Fifth April, 1851.

My Dear George.

I assure you that I have never felt the slightest coolness towards you, or regarded you with any other than my old unvarying feeling of affectionate friendship. A host of those small circumstances that sometimes seem to fly together in busy lives, by a strange attraction, have interposed between us, [†a]and prevented our meeting;[†a] but I have never had in my heart the slightest unkindness or alienation.[†2] If I could find it there, I should be grieved by your letter, besides being touched (as I unaffectedly am) by its tenderness. But it is not there, and it has never been there.

My wife, I am sorry to say, is far from well. She wants quiet, and we are going to Broadstairs very soon, to remain until the end of October. She sends her kind regards to Mrs. Cruikshank. So does Georgina.

I shall come to see you very soon, when I hope with one shake of the hand to dispel any lingering remainder—if any there be—of your distrust. I am quite willing to admit that I have seemed to justify it (though I don't know how) and that I am to blame (though I have never consciously erred in this regard), but pray believe that I write in the utmost sincerity and without a grain of reservation.

Being ever | Faithfully Your friend
CHARLES DICKENS

George Cruikshank Esquire.

To EMILE DE LA RUE,[†3] 25 APRIL 1851

MS Berg Collection. Address: À Monsieur | Monsr. Emile De la Rue | Messrs. De la Rue frères | Genoa | North Italy | Affranchie. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace, London | Twenty Fifth April, 1851.

My Dear De la Rue.

I should have written to you long ago; but many distractions (among them the sickness and death of my father, and the sudden death of our baby-daughter—Dora, in remembrance of Copperfield) have shaken me from my desk for a little while.

A thousand thanks for your kindness to our old Cook, who brought with her a most earnest and pathetic remembrance of it, I assure you. She is now happily married and staying with her sister. We lost no time in getting it done as lawfully as priests, Protestant and Roman, could do it. They have been married in both churches, and are (I suppose) doubly blessed.[†1] We are exceedingly thankful to you and Madame De la Rue[†2] for your care of her. I cannot tell you how much so.

London is filling to that preposterous extent already, that we are going down to the seaside, to remain there all the season. Of course you and Madam De la Rue mean to come to the Exhibition, and of course you'll let me know of your whereabout. (My address will be Broadstairs, Kent). I am at present up to the throat in work. You may have seen in the papers that Bulwer, I, and some others, have a design for the establishment of a certain "Guild of Literature and Art". To set it going, he has written a new Comedy, which is to be played at The Duke of Devonshire's, under my management, before The Queen. All day long, and half the night sometimes, we are roaring away at this (the undersigned amidst a mob of carpenters, gasmen, decorators, scene-painters, upholsterers, theatrical supernumeraries, tailors, wig-makers, and Heaven knows what else) until we can hardly stagger home. It comes out on the 16th. and I shall have no peace until that night is over.

My love to my dear old Patient.[†3] But for this design, I should have seen you both this Spring; for I had made up my mind to run over to Genoa and Venice. I live in hope. The Examiner, I fear, is getting fearfully irregular! It goes to Charley at Eton, and never comes back—and he ought to post it, and never does. I enclose a piece of my heart in this hasty note, and beg you to be careful of it as you take it in your pocket up those stairs, and across those landings, and past all those busts, and up that upper staircase, and so come to the bell-pull, which Michele (or some one else) answers, and so lets you into the room where the tea used to be on hot nights. My God, how well I remember it all! I seem to look down out of the high windows, out of breath, now I have got up there![†4]

Ever Faithfully Yours My Dear De la Rue
CHARLES DICKENS

To FREDERICK GYE,[†5] 25 APRIL 1851*

MS Private. Address: Frederick Gye Esquire | Royal Italian Opera | Covent Garden.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty First April 1851

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Gye, and begs Mr. Gye to accept his very cordial thanks, on behalf of the gentlemen whom he represents, for so obligingly placing Covent Garden Theatre at their disposal on the two nights when they wished to rehearse there. Mr. Dickens has been prevented by family circumstances from sooner acknowledging Mr. Gye's obliging courtesy, but he assures Mr. Gye that he is very sensible of it.

To ASHLEY LA TOUCHE,[†1] 25 APRIL 1851

Extract in Arthur Pforzheimer catalogue No. 5; MS (mourning paper) 1 p.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 25 Apr 51.

Your judgment was perfectly correct. The paper is not mine and was written by a lady.[†2]

To D. M. MOIR,[†3] 25 APRIL 1851*

MS National Library of Scotland. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace, London | Twenty Fifth April, 1851.

My Dear Moir

I have read your lectures[†4] with the greatest pleasure, and should have been much interested in hearing you deliver them, if that had been my good fortune. I am not at all surprised at your surprising yourself. Such a modest nature has extraordinary means of being astonished by its possessor. And I shouldn't wonder if you amazed yourself unspeakably, one of these fine days.

I bestow more time than you suppose on Household Words, and do not contemplate any immediate resumption of my green leaves. But I hope (reversing the order of vegetable things) to come out again, about the dead of winter.[†5]

At present I am working hard at a scheme which Bulwer, I, and some others, are very anxious to establish for the benefit of literary men and Artists. You may have seen some advertisements about it in the newspapers, and I hope will see many more.

Mrs. Dickens begs me to send you her kindest regards. Believe me, we always hold you in the tenderest remembrance, and often speak of you. We have had reason lately, to revert to your child-poems,[†1] and it has been comfortable to have your letter near the book.[†2]

I hope we may meet sooner than seems likely now, and am[†3]

[CHARLES DICKENS][†4]

To BENJAMIN WEBSTER, 25 APRIL 1851

Mention in J. W. Jarvis & Son catalogue, 1884; MS 1 p.; dated 25 Apr 51.[†5]

To THOMAS COE, 25 APRIL 1851*

MS Houghton Library, Harvard. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Friday Evening | Twenty Fifth April 1851.

Dear Mr. Coe.

Have the goodness to have a new copy of the part of Barbara[†6] made immediately from your prompt book. I hope to be able to let you know tomorrow where to send it.[†7]

Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To DANIEL MACLISE, 25 APRIL 1851*

MS Benoliel Collection. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Friday Night | Twenty Fifth April 1851.

My Dear Mac.

One Mr. Barlow, dating from Camden Square,[†8] after making an ineffectual attempt to get at me here, a day or two since, wrote me a note, accompanying the "specimens" I now forward—saying that he was an Engraver—and proposing, for love of the design, to engrave your proposed picture of the Amateurs,[†9] free of cost. I know nothing of him. I wrote back civilly, that I would refer his specimens to you, but thought it right to add that I presumed all the details connected with the print would be confided to a publisher and that we should have no—&c—&c.

I trouble you with this and his aforesaid specimens, in order that in the not improbable event of his ever addressing you, you may be up in the subject. Otherwise you might be astonished.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To F. M. EVANS, [?26 APRIL 1851]

Summary in Bloomsbury Book Auctions catalogue, June 1986; MS 1 p. Date: presumably the note mentioned in next.

Asking Evans to send him a specially bound copy of Copperfield.

To F. M. EVANS, 27 APRIL 1851

MS Dickens House. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Sunday Twenty Seventh April | 1851.

My Dear Evans

I think I forgot to mention in my note yesterday afternoon, that I shall be glad to have that prettily bound Copperfield[†1] as soon as possible.

Chapman has now sent me the enclosed separate account of Oliver Twist.[†2] I don't understand it. Perhaps you will. At any rate, if you will make it all square to this time, either with his assistance or without, I shall be glad to know (on our Household Words Audit Day will be a good opportunity) what I have to pay you, and to have your demonstration of the labyrinth.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

F. M. Evans Esquire

To MEMBERS OF THE AMATEUR COMPANY,[†3] 28 APRIL 1851*

MS Comtesse de Suzannet.

Devonshire House | 28th. April, 1851.

Memorandum.—Special

It is proposed that the Company shall dine together at the Bedford Hotel Covent Garden, on Wednesday next at half past 5,[†4] in order that the whole of the dresses may be tried on there, after dinner, while there is yet ample time before the Dress Rehearsal for making any needful alterations.

Those gentlemen who assent to this arrangement will have the kindness, this morning, to attach their names to this paper.[†1]

CHARLES DICKENS

To [?S. C. HALL],[†2] 28 APRIL 1851*

MS (ending and signature in CD's hand, the rest in hand unknown) University of California, Los Angeles.

London Tavern | 28th. April 1851

Dear Sir,

I beg to inform you on behalf of the Committee for the dinner to Mr. Macready, that your portion as Steward of the surplus of expenses over receipts, amounts to £3.10.0. which I shall feel greatly obliged by your paying to my account at Coutt's as soon as may suit your convenience.[†3]

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS xml:id="dk06.1791tm"/>[†4]

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 28 APRIL 1851

MS Lytton Papers. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Monday Twenty Eighth April | 1851.

My Dear Bulwer

I see you are so anxious, that I shall endeavour to send you this letter by a special Messenger. I think I can relieve your mind completely.

The Duke has read[†5] the play. He asked for it a week ago, and had it. He has been at Brighton since. He called here before 11 on Saturday Morning, but I was out on the play business. So I went to him at Devonshire House yesterday. He almost knows the play by heart.[†6] He is supremely delighted with it, and critically understands it. In proof of the latter part of this sentence, I may mention that he had made two or three memoranda of trivial doubtful points, every one of which had attracted our attention in Rehearsal as I found when he shewed them to me. He thoroughly understands and appreciates the comedy of the Duke—threw himself back in his chair and laughed—as I say of Walpole, "till I thought he'd have choaked"[†1]—about his first Duchess who was a Percy.[†2] He suggested that he shouldn't say "you know how to speak to the heart of a Noble", because it was not likely he would call himself a Noble.[†3] He thought we might close up the Porter and Softhead a little more (already done)[†4] and was so charmed and delighted to recall the comedy that he was more pleased than any boy you ever saw, when I repeated two or three of the speeches in my part for him. He is coming to the Rehearsal today[†5] (we rehearse now at Devonshire House three days a week, all day long) and, since he read the play,[†6] has conceived a most munificent and noble improvement on the Devonshire House plan by which I dare say we shall get another thousand or fifteen hundred pounds.[†7] There is not a grain of distrust or doubt in him. I am perfectly certain that he would confide to me, and does confide to me, his whole mind on the subject. [†a]Your lady[†8] is altogether wrong, if ever lady were wrong since Eve was made.[†a]

More than this—the Duke comes out the best man in the Play. I am happy to report to you that Stone does the honorable manly side of that pride, inexpressibly better than I could have supposed possible in him. The scene where he makes that reparation to the slandered woman is certain to be an effect.[†9] He is not a jest upon the order of Dukes,[†10] but a great tribute to them. I have sat looking at the Play (as you may suppose) pretty often, and carefully weighing every syllable of it. I see in the Duke, the most estimable character in the piece. I am as sure that I represent the Audience in this, as I am that I hear the words when they are spoken before me. The first time that scene [†b]with Hardman[†b] was seriously done, it made an effect on the Company that quite surprised [†b]and delighted[†b] me. And whenever and wherever it is done (but most of all at Devonshire House) the result will be the same.

Every one is greatly improved. I wrote an earnest note to Forster a few days ago, on the subject of his being too loud and violent.[†1] He has since subdued himself with the most admirable pains, and improved the part a thousand per cent. All the points are gradually being worked and smoothed out with the utmost neatness, all through the play. They are all most heartily anxious and earnest, and upon the least hitch, will do the same thing twenty times over. The scenery, furniture &c are rapidly advancing towards completion and will be beautiful. The dresses are a perfect blaze of color, and there is not a pocket-flap or a scrap of lace that has not been made according to Egg's drawings, to the quarter of an inch. Every wig has been made from an old print or picture. From the Duke's snuffbox to Will's Coffee House, you will find everything in perfect truth and keeping. I have resolved that whenever we come to a weak place in the acting, it must, somehow or other, be made a strong one. The places that I used to be most afraid of, are among the best points now.

Will you come to the Dress Rehearsal, on the Tuesday Evening before the Queen's night? There will be no one present but the Duke.

I write in the greatest haste,—for the Rehearsal time is close at hand, and I have the Master Carpenter and Gasman to see before we begin. Miss Coutts is one of the most sensible of women, and if I had not seen the Duke yesterday I would have shewn her the play directly. But there can't be room for any doubt or anxiety on the head that has troubled you so much. You may clear it from your mind as completely as the Gunpowder plot.

In great haste | Ever Cordially

CD.

To BENJAMIN WEBSTER, 28 APRIL 1851

Extract in Sotheran's Price Current of Literature No. 822 (1931); MS 1 p.; dated Devonshire House, 28 Apr 51; addressed Mr. Benjamin Webster.

I hope the ladies[†2] will be agreeable and will instruct Mr. Coe to ask you this morning whether he shall call Miss Chaplin[†3] for to-morrow.

To G. W. CURTIS,[†1] [?APRIL 1851]

Extract in N, II, 305. MS 2 pp. Date: Devonshire Terrace, London: May 51, according to N; Apr 51, according to Goodspeed's catalogue No. V (1936) which gives same extract. Probably Apr, before the opening of the Great Exhibition on 1 May.

As you do not say that you are coming to see the great exhibition I conclude that you intend to be the man, memorable through future ages, who didn't see it.

May

To THE DUKE OF DEVONSHIRE, 1 MAY 1851

MS Devonshire Collections, Chatsworth. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | First May, 1851

My Dear Lord Duke.

When Paxton is got safely out of his court-dress,[†2] and his sword no longer sticks crosswise in your mind, you may perhaps have a moment's leisure to read the short article I have written about the Guild for next week's Household Words.[†3] I make no apology to your kind interest in the subject, for enclosing it. I have endeavoured to say the little that needs to be said, with forbearance and good humour; and I hope the article will not contrast disadvantageously, with any aggression deficient in those qualities.[†4]

My Dear Lord Duke | Ever wholly Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The | Duke of Devonshire

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 1 MAY 1851

MS Lytton Papers. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | First May 1851.

My Dear Bulwer.

We had rather a severe day yesterday with the Play, and I was at Devonshire House when you called. I should have come up to you this morning, but I am now obliged to fall to work on the Farce, in which I am assisting Lemon and which must be finished this week. I think it will be very good. It is called

Mr. Nightingale's Diary

I have not made the alterations in the Duke's part; being perfectly convinced that they are unnecessary, and feeling that any change now (when the cast has been published in some of the papers) would point the very thing you wish to blunt. Your altered copy is locked up in a Dispatch-box of mine at Devonshire House. I will send for it in the course of the morning and let you have it.

You may suppose that I have seen the Play pretty often, by this time. I have immense confidence in it. I observe that all the loungers who somehow or other cluster about Rehearsal—band, barbers, supers, &c—are strongly interested in it, and it does not seem to me, now, to hang at all. We have got it down most materially in point of time—without any new cuts[†1]—by acting it up closely. We played the first act yesterday within half an hour. By giving Lucy a work basket and so forth, I have made that part of the second act (which I was most afraid of) very pretty to look at. In the little love-bit, she sits faltering at her needlework, while Wilmot toys with the ribbons and trifles before her.[†2] She is very good indeed—and Barbara too will be charmingly done by Miss Ellen Chaplin from the Adelphi.

Now, I hope I shall not shock you for more than five minutes by what I am going to say. I would on no account do the Epilogue.[†3] All of us who have any stage knowledge are so strongly of that opinion, that we have never yet rehearsed it. We act no farce on the first night, as the Queen gets very restless towards 12 o'Clock.[†4] If we get the Curtain down with a good impression (as I strongly hope) and with a real sense of its being a hit, the pause of even a minute or two, and the raising of the curtain again on the same people in the same dresses, with something new to say, would engender a kind of hopelessness—and a sense of incompleteness—and would damp the audience. I need not add that if you should still positively wish it to be done, it shall be done, but I am clear that we shall do better without it. So are Jerrold, Lemon, and Forster.

I have written the enclosed article for the next Number of Household Words, in which I shall put it first. It will be published next Wednesday. I hope you may think its calmness and forbearance calculated to make a favorable impression on the public, and to make our Times-friend[†5] a little ashamed.

I have noble things to tell you of the Duke. Where shall you be tonight? If at the Athenaeum, I am going to Miss Coutts's[†a] at home,[†a] and would meet you there at 9 or 10. I shall be here until 2 this morning. Or I will come to you tomorrow at any time you like to name.

The Dress Rehearsal is appointed for Monday Evening the 12th. at ¼ before 7. I should like you not to come before that night (unless you wish to come sooner) in order that you may see the Comedy in a certain state of completeness.

Ever Cordially Yours

CD.

To WILLIAM PHILLIPS, 1 MAY 1851*

MS Private. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | First May 1851

Dear Mr. Phillips

I looked at Bloomfield Lodge,[†1] long ago—and it is one of the most transcendent little humbugs that are to be found in brick and mortar.

Kingsbury[†2] would be too far off. I will let you know next week, when this house will be ready for an Inventory to be made.[†3]

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

William Phillips Esquire

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, [?2 MAY 1851]

MS Private. On mourning paper. Date: 1 Apr-Fri 9 May 51 on mourning paper and leaving Devonshire Terrace for the HW Office on 14 May; 2 May seems the most likely Friday.

Devonshire Terrace | Friday Morning

My Dear Bulwer.

I shall be at home today until 4, and delighted to see you.

Every Yours
CD.

To DR JOHN FORBES,[†1] 3 MAY 1851*

MS Fales Collection, New York University Library. Address: Dr. Forbes | 12 Old Burlington Street. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Third May 1851.

My Dear Sir

I am most truly obliged to you for your kind note and its accompanying papers. Deferred Annuities are already a part of our plan; but I have no doubt that we shall find great service in your documents, and I shall take the liberty of asking your advice bye and bye (I dare say) if I may take leave to profit by your experience still further.

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Dr. Forbes.

To MRS SYDNEY SMITH, 3 MAY 1851*

MS New College, Oxford.

Office of Household Words | Third May, 1851.

My Dear Mrs Smith

I am more pleased than I can tell you with your anecdote, which is as well told as anything I ever read in my life. Many many thanks!

I would on no account alter what is so good. I have changed the names, and will send you a proof almost immediately. If you would like to alter it in any way—[†a]I mean, to alter my little setting forth—[†a]pray do so, and return it to me.[†2]

Ever most cordially Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS SYDNEY SMITH, 5 MAY 1851*

Text from typescript, Huntington Library.

Devonshire Terrace, | Monday Fifth May 1851.

My Dear Mrs Smith,

If there be any thing in the enclosed that you don't like, will you kindly strike it out? I will send for the Proof tomorrow morning.

Ever Faithfully yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs Sydney Smith.

To W. S. JOHNSON,[†1] 6 MAY 1851*

MS Mr Brian Lake. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Tuesday Sixth May 1851.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Johnson, and begs to enclose a corrected proof of the bill,[†2]—of which (with the various alterations) he will be glad to see a revise tomorrow at Devonshire House. He will certainly be there, from 11 until 3 or 4.

Mr. Dickens begs also to return three selected specimens of fringe for Her Majesty's white satin bills. He begs to have one of the gold—one of the silver—two of the red—and two of the blue—making half a dozen white satin bills in all.

To MRS COWDEN CLARKE, 7 MAY 1851

Text from N, II, 305. Mention in Ernest Dawson catalogue No. 116 with envelope. On mourning paper.

Devonshire House | Wednesday, 7 May 1851

My dear Mrs. Clarke,

Will you come and look at your old friends next Monday?[†3] I do not know how far we shall be advanced towards completion, but I do know that we shall all be truly pleased to see you.

Faithfully yours always
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To PROFESSOR RICHARD OWEN,[†4] 7 MAY 1851*

MS University of Texas. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Seventh May 1851.

My Dear Sir

I am most heartily obliged to you for your kind note of the other day, which I should have sooner acknowledged but for constant occupation.

Both your proposals are most delightful to me, especially the Zoological one.[†1] A perfect storm of letters of introduction rising in all quarters of the earth and bursting on my devoted head, obliges me to take a house at the seaside, and let this until the Exhibition is over. But we shall pitch a gipsey tent at the Household Words office next week, and I shall then come round to you and bring Mrs. Dickens along with me.

Believe me with true regard | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Professor Owen.

To E. M. WARD, 7 MAY 1851

MS New York Public Library. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Seventh May 1851. | Wednesday

My Dear Sir

It fortunately happens that I have occasion for my purse in the very first scene.[†2] I have no doubt the purse you kindly offer, will do admirably. Can you send it me by bearer?

I enclose a Card you will merely shew when you come to Devonshire House.

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

E. M. Ward Esquire

To PETER CUNNINGHAM, 9 MAY 1851

Text in N, II, 307, checked from MS Sotheby, 6 July 1953. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Ninth May 1851.

My Dear Cunningham

I hope Mrs. Cunningham[†3] will come to the Dress Rehearsal. I write the needful document on the other side.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Peter Cunningham Esquire.

[†a]DEVONSHIRE HOUSE[†a]

¼ before 7.

Monday May 12th. 1851.

CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Cunningham.

To MISS FANNY KELLY,[†1] 9 MAY 1851*

MS Berg Collection. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Ninth May 1851.

My Dear Miss Kelly.

The Duke of Devonshire has requested me to ask you to come to our dress Rehearsal of the new Comedy at Devonshire House, next Monday Evening at 7. He thinks you would be interested, and you know his kind feeling towards you.[†2] On the other side I write the necessary passport[†3] as a matter of form; but you are to understand, if you please, that the invitation is the Duke's.

There will be no strangers present—only our wives and sisters.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To THE DUKE OF DEVONSHIRE, 9 MAY 1851

MS Devonshire Collections, Chatsworth.

Devonshire Terrace | Friday Morning Ninth May | 1851.

My Dear Lord Duke.

Thinking you may like to know exactly who are coming to the Rehearsal[†4] (as you asked yesterday) I send you a complete list of the names. Will you kindly let me know which of your people will have charge, on both nights, of the admissions? It is important that Mr. Wills and I should have a little talk with him. I have spoken to Inspector Field of the Detective Police (one of my Night-Guides, and wholly devoted), and have requested him to attend Mr. Wills on both nights in plain clothes. He is discretion itself, and accustomed to the most delicate missions. Upon the least hint from Mr. Wills, he would shew our fair correspondent[†5] the wrong way to the Theatre, and not say a word until he had her out of hearing—when he would be most polite and considerate.

Everybody who is coming, even to the Rehearsal, has an admission-paper signed by me.[†6] This extreme precaution may be unnecessary, but we cannot be too careful of everything, with a view to complete success.[†7]

I have written, as you requested, to Miss Kelly and to Leigh Hunt.[†1]

Ever My Dear Lord Duke | Most Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The | Duke of Devonshire.

Rehearsal.

Mrs. Charles Dickens and her sister	2
Mrs. Stone and her daughter	2
Mrs. Costello	1
Mrs. Jerrold and her daughter	2
Mrs. Lemon and her sister	2
Mrs. Topham and her nephew	2
Mrs. Cunningham	1
Mrs. Marston	1
Mrs. Horne	1
Mrs. Charles Knight and 3 daughters	4
Mrs. Collins and her son[†2]	2
Mrs. Bell	1
Mr. Frith (of the Royal Academy) & his wife	2
Mr. Pitt, Mr. Absolon, Mr. Louis Haghe	3	[†a]all these have 2 painted scenes[†a]
Mr. Stanfield R.A & Mr. Roberts R.A	2
Mr. Grieve and Mr. Telbin	2
Mrs. Cowden Clarke (the authoress of the Shakespeare Concordance, who once acted with us) and her sister	2
Mr. Mulready R.A	1
	33

To F. M. EVANS, 9 MAY 1851*

MS Rosenbach Museum & Library, Philadelphia. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Ninth May 1851. | Friday

My Dear Evans.

Do you know, or can you discover, what has become of the bound copy of Copperfield?[†1]

And will you send me by Bearer a pull of the Farce for the Duke, who wants to read it?

Faithfully Ever

CD

To MRS ADOLPHUS GILLET,[†2] 9 MAY 1851

Facsimile in John Wilson catalogue, 1983. On mourning paper.

1 Devonshire Terrace | Ninth May 1851

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mrs. Adolphus Gillet, and begs to express his regret that he cannot have the pleasure of availing himself of her obliging offer of professional assistance. The comedy has been for some time in Rehearsal and is quite full, or it would have been a gratification to Mr. Dickens to respond to any recommendation from Miss Woolgar.[†3]

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 9 MAY 1851

MS Lytton Papers. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Friday Ninth May 1851.

My Dear Bulwer.

After some few days' reflection, I decide on troubling you with this note, because we ought to leave nothing undone that can ensure our success at Devonshire House, so far as success can be ensured.

I think you may not be unprepared for it.—That misfortune of your life whom I need not name, has addressed a letter to the Duke.[†4] It would be perfectly unimportant of course, but that she expresses some intention of attending as an Orange girl,[†1] and distributing some effusions[†2] among the company. Now this, of course, is simply preposterous, but the possibility[†3] crosses my mind of a ticket being transferred (after being obtained either in some other real name or in a feigned one) and so of her being present among the Company. This is preventible to an absolute certainty, if I can have some one at my disposal who knows her. I do not know how to get such a person without communicating with you, and therefore I make known to you what I should otherwise have utterly dismissed. For I feel that I ought [†a]not[†a] to set the delicacy I naturally feel on such a point, against the remotest chance of anything happening before the Queen that would pain you. I should be merely sparing myself, at the price of all friendship and duty.

Mr. Wills, who is exceedingly discreet and entirely in my confidence, would place such a person in the hall, and carefully instruct him. [†a]He would be there himself, besides.[†a] I have already sent for Inspector Field of the Detective Police (who is used in all sorts of delicate matters, and is quite devoted to me)[†4] and have told him that I shall wish him to come with Wills, in plain clothes, and remain in the Hall all night. Upon the least hint that this person coming in was not to go up, he would very respectfully shew the way in a wrong direction, and say not a word until he had conducted the lady out of all hearing. Any of the Detective men will do anything for me, and, with your approval, I would have one or two more outside, to see that the people in the carriages were not interfered with. But nothing can, by possibility, go wrong, with the precaution I have already taken, if you can give me such a person as I have described. I am half inclined to smile at the[†5] [†a]remoteness of the chance against which I propose this guard[†a] but, on consideration, I think it so expedient, though a most extreme one, that I write.

And pray do not connect me involuntarily with the subject, or hold it in your thoughts a moment after you have empowered me (if you think it right to do so), to take these steps.

Ever Faithfully Yours

CD.

Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton

To DAVID MASSON,[†1] 9 MAY 1851*

MS Mr M. Tyson. Address: David Masson Esquire | 8 Huntley Street | Bedford Square. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Ninth May 1851.

Dear Sir

I beg to assure you that I have read with the utmost pleasure the paper in the North British Review,[†2] to which you have done me the kindness to call my attention. I am truly gratified by the praise which is so eloquently and thoughtfully bestowed, and tender you my cordial thanks for the great satisfaction you have given me.[†3]

David Masson Esquire

To MISS WOOLGAR, 9 MAY 1851

Text from N, II, 308.

Devonshire Terrace | Ninth May 1851

My Dear Miss Woolgar

I should have been truly glad if I could have responded to a recommendation of yours, and would have instantly done so, had it been in my power. But the Comedy has been for some time in Rehearsal, and is quite full.

I have written to Mrs. Gillet explaining this.

Always Believe me | Very faithfully Yours

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To THE REV. W. G. COOKESLEY, EARLY MAY 1851

Mention in CD Jnr to Mrs CD, 11 May 51, MS Lytton Papers.[†1]

To THE DUKE OF DEVONSHIRE, 10 MAY 1851

MS Devonshire Collections, Chatsworth. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday Afternoon | Tenth May 1851.

My Dear Lord Duke.

I have postponed the Rehearsal until Wednesday at the same hour. Can you have the kindness to make an appointment with me for settling (among a few other points) about the printing for the second night, which should now be put in hand? I shall be happy to come to you at any time that may suit you best, either tomorrow afternoon or on Monday[†2]

To W. S. JOHNSON, [10 MAY 1851]*

MS Henry Bristow Ltd. Date: clearly 10 May, the Saturday after he had sent Johnson the corrected proof of the playbill (To Johnson, 6 May). On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Saturday Night

Mr. Charles Dickens sends his Compliments to Mr. Johnson and begs to call his attention to a correction in the enclosed revise which was made in the previous proof but not attended to.

Under the superintendence of Mr. Augustus Egg A.R.A.

is to be in a line by itself—and Mr. Dickens would prefer to have that line in a rather different type.[†1]

With this correction the bills may be immediately worked, and sent to the office of the Guild, 10 Lancaster Place.

To J. WESTLAND MARSTON,[†2] 10 MAY 1851*

MS Mr Richard Garnett. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Tenth May 1851.

My Dear Marston

Most certainly. A relative in that degree,[†3] is strictly within the understanding. I write the order, with pleasure, on the other side.[†4]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

J. Westland Marston Esquire.

To DR JAMES WILSON, [?10 MAY 1851]

Mention in Brentano's catalogue No. 53. Date: Catherine left Malvern on 15 Apr, but the gift was apparently not ready by 9 May (To Evans, that day).

Presenting copies of David Copperfield and Dombey and Son as an expression of thanks for his kindness and attention to Mrs Dickens when she was ill.[†5]

To E. M. WARD, 11 MAY 1851

Text from N, II, 308.

Devonshire Terrace | Sunday Eleventh May 1851

My Dear Sir

You will have received an intimation (I hope) that the Dress Rehearsal is postponed until Wednesday. I send another order on the other side.

And I return the purse[†1] with many thanks. I have a property purse which will make more glitter I think, and do in other respects as well.

Very Faithfully Yours

[CHARLES DICKENS] On the back is:]

Devonshire House.

¼ before 7.

Wednesday 14th May 1851.

CHARLES DICKENS.

Mr. & Mrs. Ward.

To FRANK STONE, [11 MAY 1851]*

MS Benoliel Collection. Date: clearly 11 May, the Sunday before the dress rehearsal of the play, postponed from 12 to 14 May. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Sunday

My Dear Stone

You have no doubt received notice of the postponement of the Rehearsal, rendered necessary by Carpenters. I only write to say that I have got you a beautiful Snuff box[†2] from Storr & Mortimer's.[†3]

Ever Affecy.

CD

To MRS BROWN, 12 MAY 1851*

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

Devonshire House | Monday Morning | Twelfth May 1851.

My Dear Mrs. Brown

If you will have the kindness to send me in by my servant the bearer, that beautiful basket, I will take the greatest care of it. It is for the heroine's work table in Bulwer's comedy, and exactly makes out the combination of color I want.[†4]

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Brown

To WILKIE COLLINS, 12 MAY 1851

MS Morgan Library.

Office of Household Words | Monday Twelfth May 1851.

My Dear Collins.

My only hesitation in the matter is this—I apprehend that the Duke in his great generosity intends to give a sort of supper to the whole party.[†1] I infer this, from his so particularly desiring to know their number. Now, I have already given him the list;[†2] and he is so delicate that he would not even ask Landseer without first asking me. Under these circumstances, I feel the introduction of a stranger like Mr. Ward's brother[†3]—Mr. Ward and his wife being already on the list—a kind of difficulty; but I do not like to refuse compliance with any wish of my faithful and attached valet, whom I greatly esteem. I therefore merely mention this and send him the order.

I have been there all day, and am covered with Sawdust.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

W. Wilkie Collins Esquire.

To LEIGH HUNT, 12 MAY 1851

Extract in W. T. Spencer, 40 Years in my Bookshop, 1923, p. 119.

Devonshire House, | Monday, May 12th, 1851.

My Dear Hunt

The Duke is anxious that you should be asked to the Dress Rehearsal of Bulwer's Comedy, here, on Wednesday evening at a quarter before seven o'clock. I therefore write you this note. Please understand that I do so at the Duke's request and that it is his invitation.[†4]

To BENJAMIN WEBSTER, 12 MAY 1851*

MS British Museum. Address: Favored by Mark Lemon | Benjamin Webster Esquire. On mourning paper.

Devonshire House | Monday Twelfth May 1851.

My Dear Sir

I begged Mr. Wills to write to you on Saturday, the moment I knew that it would be necessary to alter the night of our Dress Rehearsal here. I hope you will be able to let us have Miss Chaplin.

Our second night here (still a profound and tremendous mystery)[†1] instead of being Friday the 23rd. is the following Tuesday the 27th. This is the last change I shall have to trouble you with, I hope and believe.

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Benjamin Webster Esquire.

To THOMAS BEARD, 13 MAY 1851

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | Morning Herald Office | Shoe Lane | Fleet Street. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Tuesday Thirteenth May 1851.

My Dear Beard.

Wills will take care that Mr. Hastings[†2] has a book,[†3] before he leaves Devonshire House on Friday night; but the Comedy cannot be given out sooner. Even the Queen will not have it until the fifth Act is on.[†4]

I was at first sorry (on reading your note) that you are not going yourself; but, on second thoughts, I am glad. For I shall be able to give you a snug seat at the Hanover Square Rooms, and we shall have a New Farce there which I think will be a "Screamer".

I am sorry for that brisk young Blade,[†1] and have observed his gradual decay. But I can't help it. What he undertakes to do, he must do—even to the plucking out of his whiskers; an embellishment which I can by no means allow in connexion with that time.[†2] You have no idea of the work I have had. My legs swell so, with standing on the stage for hours together, that my stockings won't come off. I get so covered with sawdust among the carpenters, that my Infants don't know me. I am so astonishingly familiar with everybody else's part, that I forget my own. I roar to the Troupe in general, to that extent that the excellent Duke (who is deaf) thinks in the remoteness of his own little library that the wind is blowing hard. Tailors, painters, gasmen, property ditto, supernumeraries, all sorts of strange beings, cluster round me all day long.

Actresses entreat to be allowed to wear pearls (in the City—early in the morning) and I won't hear of it. I steel my heart against all the fascinations of life.

But I have set it on getting Ten thousand pounds in 2 years for the establishment of this project—and if I don't, it shall not be my fault—nor that young fellow's either.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To JOSEPH J. JENKINS,[†3] 13 MAY 1851*

MS Carl Pforzheimer Library. Address: Joseph J Jenkins Esquire | 5 Newman Street | Oxford Street. On mourning paper.

1 Devonshire Terrace | Thirteenth May 1851.

Dear Sir

Allow me to offer you my cordial thanks for your beautiful design[†4] and most valuable assistance. Mr. E M Ward is also designing a Card. I propose to use yours and his, alternately.

I would propose that the Writing be what I now set forth on the other side of this sheet. I can offer no suggestion as to the design, which appears to me to be simple, appropriate, and beautiful.

Dear Sir, | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Joseph J Jenkins Esquire

Admit

_____

To The Performance

at _____

On _____ day, the _____185____

The Curtain rises at ____o'Clock precisely

(Signed) _____

Paid _____

To MISS FANNY KELLY, 13 MAY 1851

Extract in T. F. Madigan catalogue, undated but circa 1930; MS 1 p.; dated 13 May 51.

I have read your letter to the Duke at your request, and think it (as I could hardly fail to do) full of natural grace and propriety, and marked by real feeling. I will give it to him today.

To LADY BULWER LYTTON, [?12-13 MAY 1851]

MS (fragment) Benoliel Collection.[†1] Date: if CD's reply to Lady Lytton's letter about the play (see below), then presumably a few days before the first performance on 16 May; the year is confirmed by the signature.

CHARLES DICKENS xml:id="dk06.1883tm"/>[†2]

Lady Bulwer Lytton

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT,[†1] [MAY 1851]

Extract in Goodspeed's catalogue No. 117 (1916); MS 2 pp.; dated Devonshire Terrace, 1851. Date: clearly shortly before first performance of the play.

I am not quite sure you have 404. It IS a number. The ladies who come as visitors will present passes addressed to you and signed by me, the Artist of the Illustrated London News do.[†2]

To MISS GERALDINE JEWSBURY, [?12-13 MAY 1851]*

MS (fragment) Free Library of Philadelphia. Date: 1851 on handwriting; closeness of wording to To Beard, 13 May, strongly suggests written during final rehearsals of Not so Bad as we Seem.

am on those blessed boards, swallowing gas by the hundred cubic feet, and surrounded by an army of carpenters, tailors, barbers, property men, musicians, and other nameless but numerous theatrical Camp-followers, who would do nothing at all unless they were incessantly roared at with a brisk politeness, and always beheld the visage of the undersigned looking at everything.

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Geraldine Jewsbury.

To SIR EDWIN LANDSEER, [?JULY 1850-14 MAY 1851]

Extract in American Art Association catalogue, Feb 1924; MS 1 ½ pp.; dated Devonshire Terrace, Tuesday Morning; addressed Sir Edwin Landseer. Date: after July 50 if catalogue is correct in describing the letter as addressed to "Sir Edwin Landseer"; before 14 May 51 as from Devonshire Terrace.

My announcement at breakfast this morning that I was going to eat suet Pudding with you, was received with . . . shrill yells of consternation and despair. In consequence of our being engaged to dinner—which I forgot—which I always do forget when anybody else asks me anywhere that's much more agreeable, as in this case.

To W. H. WILLS, 14 MAY 1851

MS Huntington Library. On mourning paper.

H.W. Wednesday Evening 14th. May | 1851.

My Dear Wills

Thornton[†1] asked for you here, at 5. I sent word through Mr. Holdsworth that you would be at Devonshire House after 7, and could be seen on demand. You had best instruct the Devonshire House servants, accordingly, on receipt of this.

I have had it in my mind to say to you—and may as well do it now, as at another time—that if your removal[†2] really should have put you out for a hundred pounds or so, and you would prefer to borrow where you can certainly incur no obligation rather than where you possibly might incur one without meaning it—I shall be truly pleased to become your banker.[†3]

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To THOMSON HANKEY, 17 MAY 1851*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. On mourning paper.

16 Wellington Street North | Seventeenth May 1851.

My Dear Sir

I think I can quite relieve your mind, and sustain the dignity of the Bank of England too.

Messrs. Nathan of Titchbourne[†4] Street Haymarket, will make you any sort of dress after any design you please, on hire. They will do it as well as it can be done; and I should say you could hardly go beyond Twenty Guineas or so—I can't imagine that you would have the least occasion to spend very much more.

They have dressed me repeatedly, and all my Company. They would take particular care of any recommendation of mine and if you like I will send one of them to you.

I shall be in town, and here, on Monday Morning at Eleven and shall be most happy to be of the least service to you in anything.

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Hankey Esquire Junr.[†5]

To COUNT ARRIVABENE,[†6] [?18 MAY 1851]

Mention in To D'Orsay, 18 May 51. Date: on or shortly before 18 May.

Explaining that he had not been able to see the Count, since he was in the country.

To HENRY AUSTIN, 18 MAY 1851*

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs | Sunday Eighteenth May 1851.

My Dear Henry

I have availed myself of a quiet morning here to write the speech—which is, I believe, word for word, exactly as it was delivered.[†1] I have not put in any hears or cheers; but you heard it, and, if you want them, can shake them out.[†2]

I shall be in Wellington Street all next week. I go up by the Express tomorrow morning.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To COUNT D'ORSAY, 18 MAY 1851*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: Affranchie | À Monsieur: Monsr. Le Comte A. D'Orsay | Rue de la Ville d'Eveque | Paris.

Broadstairs, Kent | Dimanche Mai 18, 1851.

Helas, mon cher ami, je comprends trop bien que j'ai l'apparence d'etre profondement insensible, et bien faux; mais j'espere et je crois que vous me connaissez au fond, et que vous ne me jugez pas autrement.

La mort de mon pauvre père m'a donné beaucoup de chagrin,[†3] et m'a occupé de beaucoup d'affaires. Ma femme ne se portait pas bien, et nous allames a Malvern—the cold water cure. En attendant, quand elle commença reprendre ses forces j'allai à Londres, un jour pour presider à "un diner publique". J'avais laissé a Devonshire Terrace, sur l'instant, notre petite Dora. Quand je quittai la table Forster me dit "La petite est morte".[†4] Alors arriva la triste difficulté d'en faire savoir sa mere, les nouvelles. Depuis trois mois j'ai ete incessament occupé d'un projet pour les hommes de lettres et les artistes que j'originai avec Bulwer, et pour lequel il a ecrit une nouvelle comedie, qui nous representâmes (moi et mon ancienne Societé) à Devonshire House avant-hier, en presence de la Reine et de la cour—un succès immense![†1] Ainsi, mon cher, j'ai ete continuellement agité et bouleversé depuis ma derniere visite a Paris.[†2]

Je ne puis soutenir le bruit, et la foule, de Londres—òu tout le monde est meme plus fou que l'ordinairement, apropos de l'Exposition. J'ai quitté ma maison, et nous voici à Broadstairs encore une fois! Nous allons rester ici jusqu'a la fin d'Octobre. Ah que nous serions charmés si vous viendriez nous voir! Il-y-a une petite chambre-a-coucher donnant sur la mer—si tranquille, si agreeable—il-y-a ma femme qui vous avez appelé "si sympathetique that good wife"—il-y-a la cathedrale, et les anciennes eglises de Canterbury—il-y-a Domes[†3] presque vis a vis (nous le voyons, souvent)—et vous seriez si bien venu! N'est pas possible mon cher?

Je suis bien faché que je n'ai pas encore vu M. Le Comte Arrivabene, mais je lui ai rendu visite, et je lui ai ecrit lui expliquant que je suis à la campagne. J'ai grand peur qu'il la trouvera une bien mauvaise saison à Londres. Il n-y-a rien—rien—partout—excepté l'Exposition.

Les tableaux de Maclise et de Lanny[†4] sont les deux succes de l'exposition de l'Academie Royale.[†5] Maclise n'a jamais fait si bien, tout le monde est d'accord. Forster est bien gros.

Votre filleul[†1] aussi. Il parle beaucoup de son crayon, mais sa mere lui montre, seulement, à present. Elle le conserve—comme l'on dit—"in lavender".

Macready existe comme un prisonnier d'Etat, doloureux et majestique, à Sherborne, Dorsetshire. Il vint à Londres, l'autre jour, au diner de l'Academie. Il me parait qu'il commence trouver sa retraite un peu triste, et qu'il s'ouvert la bouche continuellement, pour avaler les applaudissements qui ne viennent pas. Apropòs de celà il me faut vous dire une tres bonne chose d'un petit garçon fils de Mrs. Pollock,[†2] belle-fille de The Chief Baron.[†3] "Maman" dit-il, quand Macready alla se retirer de sa vie publique, "pourquoi va M. Macready se retirer—eh?" "Parceque, mon fils il est gené du Theatre; il est fatigué des applaudissements. Il cherche la societé de sa femme et de ses enfants."—"Oh! Mais, Maman, est-ce qu'il ne deviendra pas (croyez-vous) aussi fatigué et gené de sa femme et ses enfants? Eh?" La philosophie de telles petites, est, après tout, la seule vraie philosophie que je connais, je crois!

Adieu mon cher. Ecrivez-moi bientôt. Ma femme et ma belle soeur vous envoient mille amities. Je suis toujours

Votre devoué
CHARLES DICKENS

To THE HON. SPENCER LYTTELTON, 20 MAY 1851

Extract in Henkels catalogue No. 873. MS 2 pp.; dated Office of Household Words, 20 May 51; addressed The Hon. Spencer Lyttelton.

An epistle from you which has something of the appearance of a sheet of note paper over which a very long-legged spider, dead drunk with ink, has wildly staggered after tumbling into a bottle of that useful article, gives me the agreeable invitation (as I take it) to dine with you at the Trafalgar,[†4] Tuesday the 3rd. Alas mon ami we act on Tuesday the 3rd at the Hanover Square Rooms; and dinner that day is out of the managerial list of possibilities.

If it had been another day!—Well che Sara, Sara (somebody's motto[†5], I believe) must be mine.

I am living in a gipsy tent here,[†6] until Tuesday next, or so. You will find me—usually before 2—boiling a kettle suspended by a cord from three sticks, and living chiefly on stolen fowls and broken victuals.

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 20 MAY 1851

MS Lytton Papers.

Office of Household Words | Tuesday Twentieth May 1851.

My Dear Bulwer.

I have called the Comedy for Monday at 12, to make those little changes you propose[†1]—all of which I think most essential.

We rehearse the farce today at Devonshire House at ½ past 2. Lemon and I will be there at 2 to meet you.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To HENRY AUSTIN, 21 MAY 1851*

MS Morgan Library.

Office of Household Words | Wednesday Twenty First May 1851

My Dear Henry

I remember that I have omitted a little point about a chronometer.[†2] It lies in two sentences.[†3] If you will send me back the speech at any time, I will put them in.

Affectionately Ever

CD.

To JOSEPH J. JENKINS, 21 MAY 1851*

MS Carl Pforzheimer Library.

Office of Household Words | Wednesday Twenty First May 1851.

My Dear Sir

Many thanks for your kind note. The writing will certainly be best with Guild of Literature and Art as you suggest.[†4]

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Joseph J Jenkins Esquire

To E. M. WARD, 21 MAY 1851

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

Office of Household Words | Wednesday Twenty First May 1851.

My Dear Sir

I am going to Epsom today,[†1] but will call on you tomorrow at a little before 2. Mr. Jenkins of the Water Colors has done another ticket, which I believe will come to me engraved. I propose to use the two alternately, after yours is finished.[†2]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

I have a house on the Kentish coast where my children are, and have let my own.

To HENRY AUSTIN, 21 MAY 1851*

MS Morgan Library.

Office of Household Words | Wednesday Evening Twenty First May 1851

My Dear Henry

I send you the Speech with the little Insertion made.

Thanks for your congratulations on the Play. It is undoubtedly a great success, and we begin by making a great deal of money. I hope to have an order or two, soon after we get to the Hanover Square Rooms—maybe on the first night there, but I am not certain yet. We play there, first, upon the third of June.

Ever affecy.
CD.

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 21 MAY 1851

MS Lytton Papers.

Office of Household Words | Wednesday Night 21st. May 1851.

My Dear Bulwer.

I have thrown up my (best) hat, and given three cheers for Tomline![†3]

I send you a pull of the corrections. I took out the last aside in my concluding bit, in the exercise of the prerogative with which you invest me, because I feel I could not say it without impairing the earnestness of the passage.[†1] And I think earnestness exactly what is wanted after the drunken scene.

I hope the farce will "go" charmingly. I have a few words as an old sexton, near the end, which I particularly hope to make something of, as a natural picture. The changes[†2] are fearfully quick, but I trust they will go right. I noted what you hint about Costello, yesterday, but upon my life I have not the heart to take a word away from him, after the cheerfulness with which he has done Lord Loftus.

I am pleased with Macaulay's letter.[†3] It shews an interest in the subject, and may be (as I have no doubt it has been by you) very satisfactorily answered. It is an uncommon satisfaction to me to find him so hearty about the play.

Hazlitt's notion—in this stage of the business, or, I should say, within a dozen years—would simply ruin us.[†4]

In addition to the corrections enclosed, I have charged Egg in the garret scene—in adoption of Dickey Milnes's suggestion, though upon my soul I don't understand it—to stop at "people". "Dine with my people. His people Sir!"[†5]

I have just come home from the Derby.[†6] I never saw such a crowd as on the road coming home.[†7]

The scene of the farce (I meant to say this just now, when I was on that branch of the present tree) is merely a room in a country inn. It is painted for the purpose, and will be duly presented like the performance of Goldsmith's Bear Leader, "in a concatenation accordingly".

Ever Faithfully Yours

CD.

Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton.

To JOHN BRUCE,[†1] [?23 MAY 1851]

Mention in List of Correspondents inserted in bound volume of MS letters to John Bruce, "Admissions of Literary Inquirers to Records" (MS Dr A. N. L. Munby), but letter removed. Date: between letters of Henry Hallam and Macaulay to John Bruce, 22 and 24 May 51.

Acknowledging a copy of Bruce's proposed letter[†2] to Sir John Romilly,[†3] and agreeing to sign it.[†4]

To JOHN HARDWICK, 23 MAY 1851

Extract in W. V. Daniell catalogue, Dec 1894; MS 2 pp.; dated Office of Household Words, 23 May 51; address from identical, undated extract in Anderson Galleries catalogue No. 1593 (1921).

Wishing him to meet Mr Boulnois,[†5] the proprietor of the Duke Street Bazaar, [who] has developed to me a project he has for controlling cabs and making them subservient to some very good police regulations.

To BENJAMIN WEBSTER, 23 MAY 1851

Facsimile in Lettres autographes composant la collection de M. Alfred Bovet, Paris, 1887.

Guild of Literature and Art | Twenty-third May 1851

My Dear Sir

Many thanks for your note. Pray do not suppose that I wish to trespass on your good nature by pressing for Miss Chaplin,[†6] after Monday's rehearsal and Tuesday's second night's performance. I only referred to the subject for this reason—that if we have Miss Honey[†1] for the Hanover Square rooms, she will have two parts to get up in a few days.[†2]

Faithfully yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS ELLEN CHAPLIN, 23 MAY 1851*

MS Charles W. Traylen.

Guild of Literature and Art, | Friday Evening 23rd May 1851

My Dear Miss Chaplin

I have a note from Mr. Webster this evening, in which he says that he "can and will spare you after the first piece on Monday." We may therefore conclude, I presume, that our Dress Rehearsal will come off, as originally proposed, at 10.

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Ellen Chaplin

To W. C. MACREADY, 24 MAY 1851†

MS Morgan Library.

Office of Household Words | Saturday Twenty Fourth May 1851.

My Dear Macready.

†aThe name and address of the "London Agent for the sale of Stafford's Flour and Farina", is, Mr. Joseph Stansbury 5 St. Matthew's Place Hackney Road.†3 I should have told you so, by return of post, but for being overwhelmed with business.†a

We are getting in a good heap of money for the Guild. The comedy has been very much improved in many respects since you read it. The scene to which you refer is certainly one of the most telling in the play. And there is a farce, to be produced on Tuesday next, wherein a distinguished Amateur will sustain a variety of Assumption-parts, and in particular Samuel Weller and Mrs. Gamp—of which I say no more.†4

I am pining for Broadstairs where the children are. At present I lurk from the sun, during the best part of the day, in a villainous compound of darkness, canvass, saw-dust, general-dust, stale gas (involving a vague smell of pepper) and disenchanted properties. But I hope to get down, on Wednesday or Thursday.

Ah! You country gentlemen who live at home at ease, how little do you think of us among the London fleas!†1 But they tell me you are coming in for Dorsetshire. You must be very careful when you come to town to attend to your Parliamentary duties never to ask your way of people in the streets. They will misdirect you, for what the vulgar call "a lark"—meaning, in this connexion, a jest at your expence. Always go into some respectable shop or apply to a Policeman. You will know him by his being dressed in blue, with very dull silver buttons, and by the top of his hat being made of sticking-plaister. You may perhaps see in some odd place an intelligent-looking man with a curious little wooden table before him and three thimbles on it. He will want you to bet, but don't do it. He really desires to cheat you. And don't buy at Auctions, where the finest plated goods are being knocked down for next to nothing. These too are delusions. If you wish to go to the play to see real good acting (though a little more subdued than perfect Tragedy should be) I would recommend you to see †aMr. James Anderson†a†2 at the Theatre Royal Drury Lane. Anybody will shew it to you. It is near the Strand, and you may know it by seeing no Company whatever, at any of the doors. Cab fares are eightpence a mile. A mile, London measure, is half a Dorsetshire mile, recollect. Porter is twopence per pint;—what is called Stout, is fourpence. The Zoological Gardens are in the Regents Park, and the price of admission is One Shilling. Of the streets, I would recommend you to see Regent Street and the Quadrant, Bond Street, Piccadilly, Oxford Street, and Cheapside. I think these will please you after a time, though the tumult and bustle will at first bewilder you. If I can serve you in any way, pray command me. And with my best regards to your happy family so remote from this Babel,

Believe me My Dear friend | Ever affectionately Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

P.S. I forgot to mention just now, that the black equestrian figure you will see at Charing Cross as you go down to the house, is a statue of King Charles The First.

To MRS SIGOURNEY,†1 24 MAY 1851*

MS Berg Collection. Address (envelope, MS Connecticut Historical Society): By Mail Steamer. | Mrs. Sigourney | Hartford | Connecticut | U.S. of America. PM 25 May 51. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent.[†2] | Twenty Fourth May 1851.

My Dear Mrs. Sigourney.

Pray let me assure you that I have had uncommon gratification in the perusal of your kindest of letters, and that a tribute so earnest and fervent is more delightful to me than I can possibly express.

Your book[†3] is blooming on my table here, by the great hoarse sea. I am reading it with the truest pleasure, and could not easily tell you—if I were to try—how much I am impressed by its tenderness and beauty. The thoughtful voice upon the beach sets music to your verses. I could scarcely read them in a better place.

If I had it in my heart to quarrel with you, I could almost do so, for not having written your name in the title page. But I have put your letter there instead, and can well forgive you.

Mrs. Dickens begs me to give you her best regards, and to tell you that she has not forgotten our meeting in America. She has not been well of late, but is better. Our infant daughter—called Dora, in remembrance of Copperfield—died in a moment; and it was a shock to her.

We have eight children—six boys and two girls. Here follows the list you ask me for.

	about
Charley	aged 14 —at school at Eton
Mary	—13 —
Kate	—11
Walter Landor	—10 (going to India bye and bye)
Francis Jeffrey	— 7
Alfred Tennyson	— 5
Sydney Smith	— 4
Henry Fielding	— 2

All the boys have good godfathers[†4] you see, and will try hard, I hope, to do justice to their names.

Let me again thank you for the heartfelt pleasure you have given me and let me charge you with something as near my love as I may send to your fellow-reader of my last-finished story.[†5]

Ever dear Mrs. Sigourney | Very faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Sigourney.

You dedicate your book to Rogers.[†1] Do you know that he was disabled, nearly a year ago, by an accident, and cannot stand or walk? But he is very cheerful, and still receives small breakfast-parties.

To THE DUKE OF DEVONSHIRE, [27 MAY 1851]

MS Devonshire Collections, Chatsworth. Date: Tuesday 27 May 51, the day of the second performance of Not so Bad as we Seem at Devonshire House, followed by the Duke's Ball. On mourning paper.

Devonshire House | Tuesday Evening

My Dear Lord Duke.

The enclosed note to you from Mary Boyle,[†2] has been wandering about the world in some unaccountable manner, so that it did not reach Mrs. Dickens (to whom she entrusted it) until I came home from Rehearsal this afternoon. I have given directions—I hope with your kind approval—that she is to be admitted without a ticket, if she should eagerly arrive tonight. But Cavendish, her brother, informs us that she did not arrive in town by the Train just now, by which he expected her to come. Therefore it is likely she will not appear.

Mrs. Compton is—as who is not!—so deeply sensible of your kindness that she has earnestly begged me to explain to you that she is very far from well, and cannot stand long, and fears she may be obliged to deny herself the pleasure and honor of remaining for the ball.[†3] I know her to have been very ill since her confinement, and fear this is but too probable.

Ever My Dear Lord Duke | Yours most Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

The | Duke of Devonshire.

To MRS GASKELL, 27 MAY 1851

Extract from typescript, Brotherton Library, Leeds. Address (envelope, MS John Rylands Library): Mrs Gaskell | Plymouth Grove | Manchester. PM 27 May 51.

Office of Household Words | 27th May 1851.

I have just received "Disappearances"[†4] from the printer's. It is very curious and interesting, and I can't help writing to thank you for it at once. It is exactly suited to us.[†5]

To MARK LEMON, 27 MAY 1851

MS Benoliel Collection.

Office of Household Words | Tuesday Night 27th. May 1851 | (After we parted at D.H)

My Dear Mark

I think we had best settle for the H.S.[†1] Rooms tomorrow. I have to meet Chadwick[†2] at the Laborers Model cottages[†3] by the Exposition at 11—shall leave here, at ½ past 10. Can we, by that time, effect an appointment? Will you come round here, about breakfast time?

Ever Affecy.

CD.

To MESSRS COUTTS & CO., 28 MAY 1851*

MS Boston Public Library.

London Twenty Eighth May 1851

Please to deliver my bankers' book to my servant the bearer.

CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Coutts & Co.

To W. H. WILLS, 29 [MAY] 1851

MS Huntington Library. Date: misdated 29 Mar by CD, when he was at Malvern. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs | Thursday Twenty Ninth March | 1851.

My Dear Wills.

I think we shall now have a very good article.[†4] I have two requests to make in connexion with the enclosed copy. First, that you will severely reprove the Whitefriars people[†1] in my name, for having the negligence to send me yesterday the uncorrected proof after all. Secondly that you will very carefully correct the proof of the new matter, and, if you have any doubt, refer to the Manuscript.

The cheques I enclose, signed.

This is all I have to say about Household Words.

GUILD.[†2]

I enclose a Memorandum for Foster the Property man.

Will you ask at Simpson's what they will put on a plain cold supper upstairs in their own place, for, on the next Play-night at about 12, running the chance of the number who may come, and of what each man may order to drink for himself? I would merely have cold joints, lobsters, salad, and plenty of clean ice. Perhaps there might be one hot dish, as broiled bones. But I would have only one, and I would have it cheap.

Then I think Johnson might send round this to the company.

NOTICE[†2]

There will be a plain cold supper ready at Mr. Simpson's, the Albion, by Drury Lane Theatre, after the Farce on Tuesday, at per head; not including wine, spirits, or beer, which each gentleman will order for himself.

I hope to begin the Police Article[†3] tomorrow. I have gone to Epsom[†4] very freshly. Weather beautiful. Wife not so well.

Faithfully Ever

CD

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 30 MAY 1851

MS Lytton Papers. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Friday Thirtieth May 1851.

My Dear Bulwer.

I will endeavour to get all those little changes faithfully made. It is extremely difficult now, the Rehearsals being over and the men fixed in their old ways, but I will speak to every one concerned in them before the curtain goes up on Tuesday night.

When I say to Lucy "this is my answer", I say what Forster elaborately wrote into my part, and what I have always said against my will. That was my enforced reason for saying it. I much prefer what you give me now. The embrace also, is not my doing.[†5] I understood you to wish it. I never did it before.

The seats at Hanover Square, unhappily we cannot raise.[†6] We have no means of doing it in the time, and cannot touch them. But the stage will be higher there. I hope this may suffice. We are quite powerless as to the House-part of the affair.

I am delighted by your opinion of the Farce, and will certainly insert a few words on your suggestion, explanatory of the first disguise.[†1]

Don't be afraid of my going wrong in the Coffee Room again.[†2]

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To W. H. WILLS, 30 MAY 1851

MS Huntington Library. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs | Thirtieth May 1851. | Friday

My Dear Wills

Since you feel that objection, perhaps it will be best to alter the heading of the advertisement. But it did not occur to me when I saw it in the Times yesterday. I thought it well placed, and very good.[†3]

Of course I shall not answer the begging letter enclosed. If you should receive another from the same man, I should like the Mendicity Society[†4] to have them.

Have you heard from Land?

Don't you think some one should supply refreshments—as tea, coffee, soda water, and ices—at Hanover Square, for the [†a]Audience if they choose, as at other places of entertainment.[†a]

If the house should be bad on Monday Morning, I would immediately issue, per Johnson, four tickets to every member of the Company. I would also send four to Stanfield The Green Hill Hampstead—four to Roberts 7 Fitzroy Street Fitzroy Square—four to Austin Board of Health—four to Beard (Private) Herald Office. It is most important that we should be full, whatever we do, and these would be all safe. Perhaps you will confer with Mark, according to circumstances.[†5]

I have begun the Night article,[†6] and hope to bring it up with me, finished.

Ever Faithfully

CD[†7]

June

To THE DUKE OF DEVONSHIRE, 1 JUNE 1851

MS Devonshire Collections, Chatsworth. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs | Sunday First June 1851.

My Dear Lord Duke.

It is quite delightful to me to have something to say to you, and a real solid reason for writing. Not that I can ever want one while I remember (as I always must) your extraordinary kindness and generosity, and while I feel (as I ever shall) faithfully devoted to you with a strong attachment; but that I know you are too noble in your favors to bear with a hundredth part of the use I could make of that pretext for inflicting my tediousness upon you.[†1]

I have decided to postpone the first night at the Hanover Square Rooms, until the originally contemplated second night—Wednesday the 18th. of June! The booksellers who have the tickets in charge[†2] unanimously declare that for next Tuesday the notice is too short—that it is impossible to expect a good house—that they can do nothing in the time, after the two Devonshire House Performances. And the Honorary Secretary coming down to me express last night, to tell me so, I immediately changed the evening.

I hope you will think I did right, and that you will have leisure to look in upon us on the 18th.—I really believe the actors will go all wrong and want all heart, if they don't see you in your box.

I am in a favorite house of mine here, perched by itself on the top of a cliff, with the green corn growing all about it and the larks singing invisible all day long. The freshness of the sea, and the associations of the place (I finished Copperfield in this same airy nest)[†3] have set me to work with great vigor—and I can hardly believe that I am ever a Manager, and ever go about with a painted face, in gaslight.

When I first had the happiness of seeing you in the room where we have since held so many Councils, you gratified me very much by your affectionate remembrance of Copperfield. I am having him put into a decent suit of morocco, and, when he comes home in his new dress, shall entreat you to give him a place on your shelves for my sake.—You see how dangerous it is to give me encouragement!

When I saw you last, I was quite full of the melancholy of having turned a leaf in my life. It was so sad to see the curtain dropped on what you had made so bright and interesting and triumphant, that something of the shadow of the great curtain which falls on everything seemed for a little while to be upon my spirits. I have an indescribable dread of leave-takings; and the taking leave of such a gracious scene, made me almost miserable.

—Which I acknowledge here, because it was certainly and undoubtedly your fault.

With the utmost earnestness of my heart, I am Ever My Dear Lord Duke

Yours faithfully and obliged

CHARLES DICKENS

The | Duke of Devonshire.

To JOHN FORSTER, [1 JUNE 1851]

Extract in F, VI, vi, 541. Date: 1 June according to Forster.

It is more delightful here than I can express. Corn growing, larks singing, garden full of flowers, fresh air on the sea.—O it is wonderful! Why can't you come down next Saturday (bringing work) and go back with me on Wednesday for the Copperfield banquet? Concerning which, of course, I say yes to Talfourd's kind proposal. Lemon by all means. And—don't you think Browne?[†1] Whosoever, besides, pleases Talfourd will please me.[†2]

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 1 JUNE 1851

MS Lytton Papers. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs | Sunday First June 1851.

My Dear Bulwer.

I write to you hastily, to say that the First Hanover Square night, is postponed.[†3] Coming home last evening from a walk, I was surprised to find Wills here. He had come down by the Express Train to say that the booksellers could do nothing with the tickets in the time—that they all protested against it—had sold very few indeed—and had from Thursday morning (when they got the bills) declared that it would not do, but that for Hanover Square there must be (and in all cases is) much more time. I immediately postponed the play until the proposed second night, Wednesday the 18th. and he returned this morning, to dispatch all the business consequent on this decision. If it had been safe, in so short an interval, to run the chance of filling the house with orders, I would have done it. But it was not. When I came to look closely into the matter, I was convinced that it wouldn't do to take that risk.

The announcement will merely say that it is "unavoidably postponed". And I have informed the Company that the [†a]public[†a] reason is, that changes were necessary in the adaptation of the Theatre to the place, for which there was not time.

We must go at it with double vigor!

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 4 JUNE 1851†

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street. On mourning paper.

Household Words Office | Fourth June 1851. Wednesday

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I am quite concerned that Mrs. Brown's basket[†1] should not have been returned before now. The "Property-Man" put it away by mistake among the other "Properties", instead of giving it to my servant to return immediately, as I desired. Pray excuse me to my obstinate friend. Your note (not being dated) does not explain where "here" is. Is it Stratton Street I wonder! I send the basket to Stratton Street, in the hope that it is.

I came up from Broadstairs yesterday for the Committee, and duly presided at that great Tribunal. Our charges were one and all the most innocent and deferential of girls. The first one (Rupkin) spoke very low, with her arms hooked behind her, and her eyes on the ground—and all the others, one after another, did exactly the same.

As Mrs. Morson said she wanted money, I paid the bills.

Broadstairs is charming. The green corn growing, and the larks singing, and the sea sparkling, all in their best manner. When I was in town about ten days ago, I went down to Eton and saw Charley, who was very well indeed, and very anxious to be reported to you. He was much commended, by his tutor, but had previously been reported rather lazy for the time being. I had therefore stopped his boat, and threatened other horrible penalties.

Dear Miss Coutts | Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 4 JUNE 1851

MS Lytton Papers.

Office of Household Words | Wedneday Fourth June 1851.

My Dear Bulwer.

I have required (by solemn circular) all the Guild Company to meet for dispatch of business at the Guild office 10 Lancaster Place near here, on Monday the 16th. at halfpast 3. I hope you will be able to come. You will come if you can?

Ever Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton.

To ROBERT BAKER,[†1] 6 JUNE 1851

Mention in Spencer catalogue No. 128; dated 6 June 51.

Thanking him cordially for the loan of a book.[†2]

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 6 JUNE 1851

MS Lytton Papers. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs | Friday Sixth June 1851.

My Dear Bulwer

I write you a few words hastily, endeavouring to catch the morning post—not the newspaper.

I missed both your letters. Found one, on returning here yesterday afternoon—Received the other this morning.

I have called the Company together, merely to go through the accounts, and receive a general statement of the condition of the Guild. I think as a matter of business it ought to be done, and ought to continue to be done at regular intervals. Another advantage of having them in a body on the Monday before playing, will be, that we can then ascertain—supposing it necessary to put many people into the house—what each can quietly and certainly do. I have issued two orders to each of the Company, already, and two to each of the gratuitous Scene Painters.[†3] This, with the Newspapers, makes a free list of about a hundred and twenty or so. The Booksellers seem earnest, now, and pretty sanguine. As the price has been five pounds and then two, I see no objection to reducing the charge at the Hanover Square Rooms after the first performance there,[†4] to seven shillings, or (after that) even to five.

If you can come and preside on Monday week, I wish you would. I am obliged to close suddenly, or I shall lose the Post.

Ever Faithfully

CD

I forgot to tell you—Your friend of the Sun[†5] had the good taste to return his ticket for the second night at Devonshire House.

To DR [JAMES] WILSON, 6 JUNE 1851*

MS Huntington Library. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Sixth June 1851.

My Dear Sir

Through some mistake, I am only just now in receipt of your letter.[†1]

I shall be at the Household Words Office on Tuesday Morning at halfpast Ten, or I would call on you with great pleasure at a quarter before eleven. I fear, from the terms of your note, that you may leave town before that day, however. If you can find time to inform me in one line addressed here, whether you go or stay—do. If not, I shall conclude you gone, and busy until you went.

Very faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Dr. Wilson.

To THE DUKE OF DEVONSHIRE, 8 JUNE 1851

MS Devonshire Collections, Chatsworth. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs | Sunday Eighth June 1851.

My Dear Lord Duke.

I am charmed by the enclosed letter,[†2] and owe you many thanks—let me pay them—for the perusal of it. The patience and cheerfulness of the writer, are as touching as her perception is quick and playful. It would be hard to say more in praise of her delightful writing—as natural as her own flowers.

I used to see her, last year, lying in an invalid chair on the breezy cliff behind this house, attended by a little white dog. But I never "took on" even to see her as I passed; knowing that she was ill, and thinking that I could not do better than leave the whole clover-field to her.[†3]

You told me you were pleased with the Metropolitan Protective Police paper.[†4] I have written, for next Wednesday's Household Words, another of a similar kind, descriptive of a Night Walk with the Police,[†1] which I told you one morning (in those happy times at Devonshire House, which seem to have fled these four or five years) I had just taken. I hope it may amuse you. It is very true.

And I hope you will soon recover from that strange disorder. I wonder you don't establish an unparalleled Yacht—such a Yacht as you would have, if you had any—and sail away out of the knowledge of Hay![†2] But perhaps you would be sea-sick—and nothing can be worse than that most ignoble affliction.

Bulwer writes me a letter every other day with a suggestion of something new that somebody is to say in the comedy, or something old that somebody is not to say. The consequence is, a confusion in my mind of the most distracting nature. I begin hardly to know who I am in the piece, or where I come from, or what I have to do, or why I do it.

It has been blowing hard here for three days—harder, I dare say, at Brighton.

Ever My Dear Lord Duke | Yours truly attached
CHARLES DICKENS

The | Duke of Devonshire.

To H. P. SMITH, 8 JUNE 1851

MS Huntington Library. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs | Sunday Eighth June 1851.

My Dear Smith

I am very sorry your Household Words letter should have miscarried. By what accident it has done so, I don't know, but I suppose it has been shuffled into some wrong nook of the immense correspondence that flows into that devoted office.

Kate is going to write to Mrs. Smith, to say how much we regret that we cannot accept either of your invitations. In the meantime I say so, thus informally, delighted to know that you are all alive and well at that enormous distance[†3]—for Heaven knows you might be in Australia and we in Africa, for anything that either side sees to the contrary.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

H. P. Smith Esquire

To MRS CHARLES DICKENS, [10 JUNE 1851]

Mention in Mrs CD to Sir E. Bulwer Lytton, 11 June 51 (MS Lytton Papers).

Telling her that he had seen Bulwer Lytton on 10 June and that Lytton had invited them both to pay another visit to Knebworth.[†4]

To H. P. SMITH, 13 JUNE 1851*

MS Miss Mabel Lodge. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs | Friday Thirteenth June | 1851.

My Dear Smith

On coming back here last night from a few days' business in town, I found your note.

I am sorry to say that on that day—otherwise my only disengaged one in my next trip Eastward[†1]—I am engaged to dine with Brunel. Otherwise, I should have been glad to have eaten and drunk with you—just for the sake of novelty!
Loves from all.

Truly Yours
CD.

To MRS BROWN, 14 JUNE 1851*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Mrs Brown | Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street | Piccadilly | London. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs | Saturday Fourteenth June 1851.

My Dear Mrs. Brown.

I received your kind note, here, this morning. I should have been very much interested in seeing that ancient Lady if I had known of it sooner. I am coming to town on Monday for two or three days, and hope to have the melancholy satisfaction of looking on her ashes[†2]—that is, if I can baffle iron fate, and the spell that binds me to the stoney door step.

Ever truly Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To PETER CUNNINGHAM, 14 JUNE 1851*

MS Private. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs | Saturday Fourteenth June | 1851.

My Dear Cunningham

Thank you for sending me the enclosed note, which is certainly one of the most singular I ever read in my life.

Quite apart from my confidence in Paxton and my respect for his veracity, my knowledge of the subject is the knowledge that has been conveyed during the last half year to the whole civilized world in all the languages of Europe, and of which (so far as I know) no man has ever beheld one printed word of contradiction.[†3] I should as soon think of communicating the contents of Mr. Tomolin's[†1] letter to Paxton, if I encountered him (which is not at all likely) as I should of informing him that Sir Christopher Wren never built Saint Pauls.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Peter Cunningham Esquire.

To THOMAS BEARD, 17 JUNE 1851

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | Morning Herald Office | Shoe Lane.

Guild of Literature and Art, | Tuesday 17th. June 1851

My Dear Beard

In my "official capacity" I have three tickets to give away for our performance at the Hanover Square Rooms tomorrow night. Would you like to use them? If so, say the word, and I will send them round straightway.

Ever affectionately
CD.

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 17 JUNE 1851

MS Lytton Papers.

Office of Household Words | Tuesday Seventeenth June 1851.

My Dear Bulwer.

All is right at the Lord Chamberlain's office. I have explained that the Comedy and Farce are already licensed.[†2] Upon this we receive a licence to act at the Hanover Square Rooms according to Law.

You will be pleased to hear that the sale of tickets has taken such a great start today, that it becomes necessary to send round to all the booksellers warning them to sell no more, or we cannot get the people in—and this, after recalling as many as could be got hold of, of those that were issued to the Company yesterday. We shall see whether many people want to pay at the doors besides; and we shall then know what to do another time. I do not think it in the least disadvantageous to be obliged on this occasion to refuse money.[†3]

I assure you I am most sincerely gratified by your kind little note, and so cordially rely on the truth of its contents, that if any dinner had been given to me in the ordinary acceptation of that term, I should have said to the promoters that I confidently believed you would be glad to do me the kindness of taking a part in it. But the small affair at Richmond (there were only nine people I think) was Talfourd's.[†1] It arose out of a postponed proposal of his that I should dine with him somewhere in the Country, on the completion of Copperfield. He was the host. And that was all.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To FRANK STONE, 17 JUNE 1851*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Office of Household Words. | Tuesday Seventeenth June 1851.

My Dear Stone.

The sale of tickets has taken such a start today, that we are obliged to stop the booksellers from proceeding with it, or it would be impossible to get the people in. We have also tried to reduce the issue on the part of the Company. I send you five instead of ten. Will that do?

Ever Affectionately

CHARLES DICKENS

Frank Stone Esquire

To EMILE DE LA RUE, 20 JUNE 1851*

MS Berg Collection.

Guild of Literature and Art, | Friday Twentieth June 1851.

My Dear De la Rue

I have this morning received your note. I send immediately, to entreat you to come and dine with me at Richmond to day, and to meet me here at ½ past 4. Thompson[†2] is in town, and I will endeavour to lay hold of him too.

Faithfully Yours Ever

CHARLES DICKENS

To F. W. TOPHAM, 20 JUNE 1851*

MS Mr T. A. G. Pocock.

Office of Household Words | Friday Twentieth June 1851.

My Dear Topham

I forget Mr Barlow's address.[†1] Will you have the kindness to ask him how Ward's ticket is progressing? I wanted to use it for our next performance. But, as the tickets must be printed and delivered to the booksellers next Wednesday, it will be impossible to use it unless it be now finished.

Can you ascertain at once?

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W.F.[†2] Topham Esquire.

To DANIEL MACLISE, 21 JUNE 1851*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Office of Household Words | Saturday Twenty First June 1851.

My Dear Mac.

We meet here tomorrow, at ½ past 1. If the day be as fine as this, the boat will be delightful.

Ever affecy.
CD.

To T. J. THOMPSON, 21 JUNE 1851*

MS University of Texas.

Guild of Literature and Art, | Saturday June 21st. 1851

My Dear Thompson

In case you should go to the Golden Cross[†3] before coming round here again, I dispatch this missive to say how sorry I am that I am engaged to dine with Miss Coutts and go with her to the Prophete.[†4] Otherwise I should have been really delighted to dine with you.

De la Rue is at the British Hotel, Jermyn Street.

Faithfully Yours ever
CD.

To G. S. HERBERT,[†1] 23 JUNE 1851

Text from D, VII (Sep 1911), 232.

Office of Household Words | Monday Morning, June 23rd, 1851

Dear Sir

As I am going into Dorsetshire this morning on a short visit[†2] (I purpose returning here on Thursday evening), I think it right to send you the particulars of a transaction on the North Kent line in reference to which I left my card with the Station Master at the Terminus last night.

I was in the corner of one of the large first-class Strood carriages, and there was a good deal of confusion along the line up, in consequence of there not being enough room for the second and third class passengers who were waiting at the Stations. I got in at Gravesend at 20 minutes past 8. Three or four second or third class passengers were put into my carriage (for want of room elsewhere) at various stations. Among them was a young woman who was alone. When we came to the terminus, and she presented a second class ticket, the ticket collector demanded 4d. extra from her. Although I knew this was wrong, I did not consider myself called upon to interfere—but no other passenger who had been put into the carriage for want of room in the class to which he or she belonged would pay anything extra. She (being the first who was required to do so) gave the collector a shilling, and twice or thrice before he left the carriage asked him for the change, which he said he would "bring." I was so strongly impressed (from his manner) with the belief that he had not the least intention of bringing it that I mentioned the circumstance to a friend who was with me and said I should watch the result. He did not bring it—nobody, of course, knew anything about it—all the passengers went away—the carriages were removed—and the young woman was left alone vainly endeavouring to get some redress for this very gross misconduct. I then exerted myself to find out the station-master, who was busy with the arrival of the Paris train, and mentioned to him that I was a friend of Mr. MacGregor's[†3] and felt it due to him to see that the matter did not escape notice. He behaved with the utmost civility and propriety, and paid every attention to it.

I should add for your information that I do not believe the ticket collector was called suddenly away. We waited a long time before we could get into the station, and my impression is that he passed the carriage twice or thrice before he was wanted for the Paris train after he took this shilling. As I have already said, I was attracted to the proceeding by his manner, and I felt perfectly sure that he would not come back.

Dear Sir, faithfully yours
CHARLES DICKENS

J. S. Herbert, Esq.[†4]

To THE REV. DR HAWTREY,[†1] 24 JUNE 1851

Text from N, II, 320.

Sherborne House | Tuesday Twenty-Fourth June 1851

My Dear Sir

I trouble you with this out of Dorsetshire where I am staying on a short visit, to beg the[†2] favor of your allowing my boy and three of his friends—Messrs. Mitford,[†3] Willes[†4] and Congreve[†5]—to accompany me on a little excursion up the river, on Tuesday next, July the first. I propose to come down to Windsor early and give them a gipsy-dinner in our boat. I need not add, I hope, that I will take every care of them, and will return them in good condition at night. I am, Dear Sir, With much respect

Very Faithfully Yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To THOMAS BEARD, 25 JUNE 1851

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Place | Edgeware Road | London.

Sherborne, Dorsetshire | Wednesday Evening 25th. June | 1851.

My Dear Beard

I write to you from Macready's where we have been staying a few days, to enquire if you can make next Tuesday the 1st. July a holiday?—For this reason. I have promised Charley that I will appear at 11 that morning at Slough, armed with a hamper from Fortnum and Mason's, and take him and three other young Etonian Shavers up the river. He "knows a bank"[†6] where we can dine; and if you can come, you and I will console ourselves for our antiquity, after dinner, with a trifle of tobacco and champagne* in the starn of the wessel.

I shall be at my gipsey tent at the Household Words office 16 Wellington Street North, tomorrow evening, and probably until after Wednesday. If you will send me a line there, I hope it will be to say that you can come—and we'll try to make out jovially.

Ever Heartily Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Beard Esquire [†a]*N.B. Ice in the Hamper[†a]

To MISS GERALDINE JEWSBURY, 25 JUNE 1851*

MS Alexander Turnbull Library, New Zealand.

Sherborne House. Dorsetshire | Twenty Fifth June 1851.

Dear Miss Jewsbury

Being here on a short visit, and receiving your note immediately before I left town, I brought the papers down with me to read. I am very sorry to say they are not adapted to the purposes of Household Words. It would have given me real pleasure to have accepted them on your recommendation if I could have thought them suited to our requirements. But they are quite wide of the mark. I may say this, without any disparagement of the pieces themselves.

The invaders from all nations have terrified me out of London by their letters of introduction—the most tremendous engines that have ever been levelled against my peace. We have taken refuge on the Kentish Coast, where there is a Crystal Palace not made with hands,[†2] in which are many wonderful inventions that I never tire of.

I fear I may not have the pleasure, consequently, of seeing you. But it would give me great pleasure to improve our personal acquaintance, and to tell you how very glad I should be, if you could find time to write something for Household Words.[†1] I must confess to a little disappointment when I found that your packet was not all your own.

Believe me | With much esteem | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Jewsbury I shall be in town on Saturday, and will return the papers to your address.

To DANIEL MACLISE, 27 JUNE 1851

Extract in Maggs Bros. catalogue No. 436 (1923); MS 2 pp.; dated Office of Household Words, 27 June 51.

As to giving Evans a handsome dinner at the Star and Garter, Richmond.[†3]

To THE REV, W. G. QUEKETT,[†1] 27 JUNE 1851*

MS Mr David Niven Jr.

Office of Household Words, | Friday Twenty Seventh June 1851.

My Dear Sir

I am exceedingly sorry that I could not attend your dinner,[†2] where I would gladly have spoken, had my presence been feasible. But an old engagement (which I overlooked when I became a steward) took me into Dorsetshire, whence I returned only last night, to find your note.

Believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Reverend W. G. Quekett.

To DR THEOPHILUS THOMPSON,[†3] 27 JUNE 1851*

MS Dickens House. Address: Dr. Theophilus Thompson | 3 Bedford Square.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Twenty Seventh June 1851.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Dr. Theophilus Thompson, and begs (on his return from a short absence in Dorsetshire) to thank Dr. Thompson for the Australasian,[†4] which is in all respects a most creditable production of that distant Press. Mr. Dickens would think it a more encouraging sign of the progress of the Colony, if its literature were original, or honestly purchased, rather than pirated[†5]—but he hopes in all good humour that it will be, in the good time that is coming—at some indefinite period. The American example in this particular, is not a good one.

To STEPHEN TUCKER,[†6] [?27 JUNE 1851]

Envelope only, in Sotheby's catalogue, June 1969; addressed Stephen [?J]. Tucker Esquire | Erith | Kent; postmarked 27 June 51.

To THOMAS BEARD, 30 JUNE 1851

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | Morning Herald Office | Shoe Lane.

H.W. Office | Monday 30th. June | 1851.

My Dear Beard.

Contemplating the possibility of our being otherwise marooned by those young pirates, I have told Charley to turn-out a big galley with an awning—the latter precaution ineffectual already, as far as I am concerned. I am so burnt, that I cannot calculate the amount of cold cream and powder that will have to be applied to my visage on Wednesday night, before I can "go on" as a youthful Lord.[†1] I don't see my way through the process.

The Mail train starts from Paddington at a quarter past 10. Let us meet on the Platform about 10.

I went down to Broadstairs yesterday, and came back this morning.—O the sea!—

Ever Heartily

CD.

To VISCOUNT INGESTRE,[†2] [?JUNE 1851]

Mention in Dobell catalogue No. 1 (1911); MS (3rd person) 1 p.; dated Broadstairs, 1851. Date: Ingestre founded the General Society for Improving the Dwellings of the Labouring Classes[†3] in June 51; invitations to join its Committee were probably issued the same month.

Regretting his inability to join a proposed committee[†4] as requested by Lord Ingestre.

July

To JOHN BRUCE, 4 JULY 1851*

MS Mr R. Slifer. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent | Fourth July 1851.

Dear Sir

Your card and I have missed each other until today. Pray do me the favor to add my name to the Memorial.[†1]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

—Bruce Esquire

To A. F. GORE,[†2] 4 JULY 1851

Extract in Dawson's Book Shop catalogue No. 323 (1961), misdated 1857; MS (mourning paper) 1 p.; dated Broadstairs, Kent, Friday, 4 July 51.

I am happy to retain your sporting adventure for insertion in Household Words.[†3] It is very graphic and agreeable and I have read it with pleasure.

To MRS GORE, 4 JULY 1851*

MS Berg Collection. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Fourth July 1851.

My Dear Mrs. Gore.

Your kind note and I have been performing the most extraordinary evolutions. First, I was in Dorsetshire. It came after me too late. Then I was in London. Meanwhile it came here. I returned to the present Hermitage[†4] last night, and found it referring with a placid countenance to remote periods for ever disposed of among the yesterdays that have lighted the public in general to dusty death.[†5]

I was in town, and was disengaged.

Pity me!—as Rogers used to write when he couldn't come.—

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Gore.

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 4 JULY 1851

MS Lytton Papers. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Fourth July 1851.

My Dear Bulwer.

I am exceedingly sorry that you were not better supported at the Copyright meeting.[†1] I have seen no one who has failed to render justice to your own exertions and intentions, though there is (and I think with reason) a strong prejudice against the putting forward of Bohn[†2] in such a matter.[†3] I am quite sure your brother[†4] would do more than any fifty other Ministers—but I doubt the Americans being honest for years and years to come, mainly because the interest at stake is not the interest of authors or publishers in America, but the interest of the Newspapers—than which the earth knows nothing more profoundly blackguard, or before which the free and independent more submissively crouch.

I am very, very, sorry—and so we all were—that you were not with us on Wednesday.[†5] The play was never so well acted, and it was a noble audience. They took every point—gave rounds of applause after the Acts—broke into perfect enthusiasm at the end, and had the Curtain up again in a whirlwind of applause. It really was delightful—and, through the raising of the stage, everybody saw well, and the thing looked beautiful. I quite lament your absence.

The enclosed letter has just reached me.

Kate and Georgina send their kindest regards.

Ever Cordially Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Dr. Wilson is here, and begs to be remembered.[†6]

To W. H. WILLS, 4 JULY 1851

MS Huntington Library. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent | Fourth July 1851.

My Dear Wills.

The enclosed[†1] will do. I have written to the Author, accepting it. It wants a few new paragraphs, and the omission of a familiar slang phrase here and there.

Paxton suggested to me, through Evans, a good subject. Ice, and why should its use be confined to great towns. How useful to the Farmer, for his butter and so forth—how easily an ice-house constructed—and why dont he construct one, and have it filled on odd winter's days when his men are lounging about the stable door.[†2]

Baines. Don't forget Baines.[†3]

I am astonished to find that I had put the letter about my poor father's bill, into my dispatch box. I must have taken it out of the drawer, specially, but I have not the least remembrance of having done so. I enclose it, but suppose the bill will probably have been paid from the Memorandum left at the D.N.[†4] office.

Will you kindly read the enclosed and see the man?[†5] I have communicated with him before, and (if I remember right) given him money. The books he speaks of are bad, but it seems an affecting history, and I should be glad to give him £5 or so, if you thought it would do him real service.

Will you, further, send Callaghan to Reeves the Stationers[†6] in Cheapside for two red solid blotters, folio size, which Mark will bring me down if Callaghan will leave them addressed to me, to his care, in the course of the day at the Bedford.[†7]

Will you, further, ask Charles Knight if he remembers the address of the agent to be communicated with about the two new houses on Hampstead Heath—he gave me an advertisement during the Play, which I mislaid for want of a pocket—and, if he does, will you write a note to the man in my name, asking extent of accommodation, and purchase-particulars.[†8]

I think this is trouble enough, for one note!

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To FRANK STONE, [4 JULY 1851]

Envelope only, MS Mr J. Fielding. Address: F. Stone Esquire | Tavistock House | Tavistock Square. PM Broadstairs 4 July 51. On mourning paper.

To M. N. JUDD,[†1] 5 JULY 1851*

MS (in Wills's hand) Mrs R Clasby.

Office of Household Words | 5 July 1851

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his Compliments to Mr. Judd, & begs to thank him for his Communication; the substance of which shall be published in an early number of Household Words.[†2] M. N. Judd Esq

To W. H. WILLS, 7 JULY 1851*

MS Huntington Library. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent | Monday Seventh July 1851.

My Dear Wills

I think Horne is right in that introductory Paragraph.[†3] It is impossible to interest the Reader in anything purporting to be a real story, of which the incident is the stealing of a thing which the Reader knows perfectly well, from the beginning, never was stolen. Therefore I think the paragraph judicious and necessary.[†4]

I did not write to Boulogne, having no commission.
Many thanks for your timely arrangements in reference to the Bill and the D.N.[†5] I am very sincerely grateful to you.

I return the No.[†6] with the notes you ask for.

I am at work on the Child's History.[†7]—Began this morning.

What shall you have for a first article for the No.?[†8]

Is the Narrative Judgment never never never going to be given, I wonder![†9]

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To THE EARL OF CARLISLE, 8 JULY 1851

MS Lord Howard of Henderskelfe. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, | Eighth July 1851.

My Dear Lord Carlisle

We shall be delighted to see you, if you will come down on Saturday. Mr. Lemon may perhaps be here, with his wife, but no one else. And we can give you a bed that may be surpassed,—with a welcome that certainly can not be.

The general character of Broadstairs, as to size and accommodation, was happily expressed by Miss Eden when she wrote to the Duke of Devonshire (as he told me) saying how grateful she felt to a certain sailor who asked leave to see her garden, for not plucking it bodily up, and sticking it in his button hole. As we think of putting mignonette-boxes outside the windows, for the younger children to sleep in bye and bye, I am afraid we should give your servant the cramp if we hardily undertook to lodge him. But in case you should decide to bring one, he is easily disposable hard by.

Don't come by the boat. It is rather tedious, and both departs and arrives at inconvenient hours. There is a Railway train, from the Dover Terminus to Ramsgate, at ½ past 12 in the day, which will bring you in three hours. Another at half past 4 in the afternoon. If you will tell me by which you come (I hope the former) I will await you at the Terminus with my little Brougham.

You will have for a night light, in the room we shall give you, the North Foreland Lighthouse. That, and the sea and air, are our only Lions.[†1] It is a very rough little place, but a very pleasant one, and you will make it pleasanter than ever to me.

Faithfully Yours Always

CHARLES DICKENS

The | Earl of Carlisle.

To F. M. EVANS, 10 JULY 1851*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Thursday Tenth July, 1851.

My Dear Evans.

I want a neat Copperfield, such as Mr. Joyce sent me the other day,[†2] to be forwarded for me to the H.W. Office on receipt of this. I purpose being there, tomorrow morning.

Do you think you can get me, from your brother, the christian name and address of his and my friend Mr. Lawrence of Birmingham?[†3] I cannot, for the life of me, remember either, and I want to write to him.

Faithfully Yours always

CD.

F. M. Evans Esquire.

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 10 JULY 1851

MS Lytton Papers. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent | Tenth July 1851. Thursday

My Dear Bulwer.

I omitted in my last note to you, to refer to the Sheridan offer.[†1] I think it will be best declined, on the ground that our pieces are got up, and our bill finally arranged.

As I hear you have one or two of the Company with you on Saturday, I think it will be well for you to know from me how our matters-Theatrical stand at present. They don't know, yet. I want you to be informed about it, because both Jerrold and Forster require keeping to their purpose, and not to be humoured in any loosening from it, by so much as a stray word—Jerrold, because he is constitutionally inconstant and unsettled[†2]—Forster, because he thinks he is not appreciated in Hardman. This is in the strictest confidence, of course, but both of them (and especially Forster) have been lately wet-blanketing the proceedings, more than I should have thought likely in men so pledged.[†3]

I am making enquiries of the best authorities at Bath, Bristol, Liverpool, Manchester, Birmingham, Sheffield, Newcastle, Hull, and York, as to the best times of playing at those towns. I hope within ten days or a fortnight, to be able to propound the plan of this Campaign. And I purpose, on or before the 21st. when we play again in town, issuing a circular to the Company to meet at about the end of this month to have it proposed to them. I hope you will be able to attend that meeting, as it devolves on you and me to keep the stragglers in their ranks.

I have not got the accounts of the Hanover Square Room performances, but I should say the net profit has been about £60 per night. This is most certain—that their effect is exceedingly valuable, and that the Play has steadily risen. The unmistakeable effect upon the audience, and the greatly increased talk and interest out of doors, I should have considered not dearly purchased at that amount of loss instead of gain. I therefore consider them (and so does Lemon) decidedly successful. I even doubt whether we ought to leave off, while we can make that money so easily. The second house was much better than the first, both in money and interest. And Mitchell's people confidently say that the third will certainly bring us more money than either.

In any reference you may make to the subject on Saturday or Sunday, I want you to speak of it (as I always make a point of doing) steadily and gravely, as a very serious matter to which we are all committed and in which we have voluntarily incurred a great responsibility—and if any other kind of reference is made to it (which is not probable, before you) to bring it back to this complexion. It seems ridiculous that one should need this caution in dealing with grown men, but you know men too well to despise it. And I know it will be very useful.

No great thing ever was done (I suppose) without being hammered at with a sledge hammer. At any rate, I have taken mine in hand for this piece of work, and mean to keep it going.

Kate and her sister send their best regards.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton.

To AUGUSTUS TRACEY, 10 JULY 1851*

MS University of Texas. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Tenth July, 1851.

My Dear Tracey.

Miss Coutts tells me there was a young woman under your care—of the name of Jessup,[†1] I think, or something like that—who was spoken of for the Home, some time ago, when she could not be taken. Is she forthcoming now? If so, Miss Coutts is willing.

Ever Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To FRANK STONE, 11 JULY 1851*

MS Benoliel Collection. On mourning paper. Address: (envelope MS Mr J. Fielding) F. Stone Esquire | Tavistock House | Tavistock Square. PM Broadstairs 11 July 51.

Broadstairs. | Friday Eleventh July 1851.

My Dear Stone.

Many thanks for your kind trouble, and for your note and its enclosure received this morning. I purpose coming up on Monday to pursue the subject, and, if possible decide. Two other houses have been lately offered to me—one at Hampstead—one at Highgate. I have both to look at, but strongly incline towards Tavistock[†2] as the most prudent venture.

Talking of my coming up, suggests to me that you might perhaps be able to come down, and return with me—just to get a summer taste of your old autumnal air. You will find nobody here but Lord Carlisle, whom I think you like. There is a cheap Express 3 hour train (first class 10/- second 7/-) tomorrow, Saturday, at ½ past 12—a boat (5/-) at 9 on Sunday Morning. We should be delighted to see you, and you would get freshened up.

Kate and Georgina unite in kind regards to you and Mrs. Stone and all the house. The Spectre[†3] is great—running races on the sands. The place is beginning to fill, and Miss Crampton[†4] blooms.

Ever Affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

Frank Stone Esquire.

To THE HON. MRS RICHARD WATSON, 11 JULY 1851

MS Huntington Library. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Eleventh July 1851.

My Dear Mrs. Watson.

I am so desperately indignant with you for writing me that short apology for a note, and pretending to suppose that under any circumstances I could fail to read with interest anything you wrote to me, that I have more than half a mind to inflict a regular letter upon you.—If I were not the gentlest of men, I should do it!

Poor dear Haldimand. I have thought of him so often. That kind of decay is so inexpressibly affecting and piteous to me that I have no words to express my compassion and sorrow. When I was at Abbotsford,[†1] I saw in a vile glass case the last clothes Scott wore. Among them an old white hat, which seemed to be tumbled and bent and broken by the uneasy, purposeless wandering hither and thither of his heavy head. It so embodied Lockhart's pathetic description of him when he tried to write, and laid down his pen and cried,[†2] that it associated itself in my mind with broken powers and mental weakness from that hour. I fancy Haldimand in such another,[†3] going listlessly about that beautiful place;[†4] and remembering the happy hours we have passed with him, and his goodness and truth, I think what a dream we live in until it seems for the moment the saddest dream that ever was dreamed.

Pray tell us if you hear more of him. We really loved him.[†5]

To go to the opposite side of life for a relief, let me tell you that a week or so ago, I took Charley and three of his schoolfellows down the river, gipseying. I secured the services of Charley's godfather[†6] (an old friend of mine and a noble fellow with boys), and we went down to Slough accompanied by two immense hampers from Fortnum and Mason's, on (I believe) the wettest morning ever seen out of the tropics. It cleared before we got to Slough, but the boys (who had got up at 4: we being due at 11) had horrible misgivings that we might not come. In consequence of which, we saw them looking into the carriages before us, all face. They seemed to have no bodies whatever, but to be all face; their countenances lengthened to that surprising extent. When they saw us, their faces shut up, as if they were put on strong springs, and their waistcoats developed themselves in the usual places. When the first hamper came out of the luggage-van, I was conscious of their dancing behind the Guard. And when the second came out—with bottles in it—they all stood wildly on one leg. We then got a couple of flies to drive to the boathouse. I put them in the first, but they couldn't sit still a moment, and were perpetually flying up and down, like the toy-figures in the sham snuff boxes. In this order we went to "Tom Brown's the tailor's" where they all dressed in aquatic costume—and then to the boathouse where they all cried in shrill chorus for "Mahogany"—a gentleman so called by reason of his sunburnt complexion, and a waterman by profession. [†a][He was likewise called, during the day, "Hog", and "Hogany", and seemed to be conscious of no proper-name whatever][†a]. We embarked—the sun shining now—in a galley with a striped awning, which I had ordered for the purpose, and all rowing hard went down the river. We dined in a field. What I suffered for fear those boys should get drunk—the struggles I underwent in a contest of feeling between hospitality and prudence—must ever remain untold. I feel, even now, old with the anxiety of that tremendous hour. They were very good, however. The speech of one became thick, and his eyes too like the lobster's to be comfortable, but only temporarily. He recovered, and I suppose outlived the Salad he took. I have heard nothing to the contrary, and I imagine I should have been implicated on the Inquest if there had been one. We had tea and rashers of bacon at a public house, and came home, the last five or six miles, in a prodigious thunderstorm. This was the great success of the day, which they certainly enjoyed more than anything else. The dinner had been great, and Mahogany had informed them, after a bottle of light champagne, that he never would come up the river "with ginger-beer company", any more. But the getting so completely wet through was the culminating point of the entertainments. You never in your life beheld such objects as they were—and their perfect unconsciousness that it was at all advisable to go home and change, or that there was anything to prevent their standing at the Station two mortal hours to see me off, was wonderful. As to getting them to their Dames' with any sort of sense that they were damp, I abandoned the idea. I thought it a success when they went down the street as airily as if they were just up and newly dressed—though they really looked as if you could have rubbed them to rags with a touch, like saturated curlpaper.[†1]

I am sorry you have not been able to see our Play, which I suppose you won't see now, for I take it you are not going on Monday the 21st.—our last night in town? It is worth seeing—not for the getting up (which modesty forbids me to approve) but for the little bijou it is, in the scenery, dresses, and appointments. They are such as never can be got together again, because such men as Stanfield, Roberts, Grieve, Haghe, Egg, and others, never can be again combined in such a work. Everything has been done at its best, from all sorts of authorities, and it is really very beautiful to look at.

I find I am "used up"[†2] by the Exhibition. I don't say "there's nothing in it"—there's too much. I have only been twice. So many things bewildered me. I have a natural horror of sights, and the fusion of so many sights in one has not decreased it. I am not sure that I have seen anything but the Fountain[†3]—and perhaps the Amazon.[†1] It is a dreadful thing to be obliged to be false, but when anybody says "have you seen—?" I say "Yes," because if I don't, I know he'll explain it—and I can't bear that. Miss Coutts took all her Schools one day.[†2] One School was composed of a hundred "Infants"—who got among the horses' legs, in crossing to the main entrance from the Kensington Gate, and came walking out from between the wheels of coaches, undisturbed in mind. They were clinging to horses, I am told, all over the Park. When they were collected and added up by the frantic monitors, they were all right. They were then regaled with cake &c. and went tottering and staring all over the place—the greater part wetting their forefingers, and drawing a wavy pattern over every accessible object. One Infant strayed. He was not missed. Ninety and nine were taken home, supposed to be the whole collection, but this particular Infant went to Hammersmith. He was found by the Police at night, going round and round the Turnpike—which he still supposed to be a part of the Exhibition. He had the same opinion of the police. Also of Hammersmith Workhouse, where he passed the night. When his mother came for him in the morning he asked when it would be over? It was a Great Exhibition, he said, but he thought it long.

As I begin to have a foreboding that you will think the same of this act of vengeance of mine, this present letter, I shall make an end of it, with my heartiest and most loving remembrances to Watson. I should have liked him of all things to have been in the Eton Expedition tell him, and to have heard a song (by the bye I have forgotten that) sung in the thunderstorm, solos by Charley, chorus by the friends, describing the career of a Booby who was plucked[†3] at College; every verse ending—

I don't care a fig what the people may think,

But what WILL[†4] the Governor say![†5]

—which was shouted with a deferential jollity towards myself, as a Governor who had that day done a creditable action, and proved himself worthy of all confidence.

With love to the boys and girls | Ever Dear Mrs. Watson |

Most Sincerely | Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To W. H. WILLS, [11 JULY 1851]

MS Huntington Library. Date: Both Ch. 6 of A Child's History of England and "In the Name of the Prophet—Smith!" appeared in HW on 19 July; the reference to the proof of A Child's History shows that CD must have been writing on the Friday of the previous week. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs | Friday Morning | In bed

My Dear Wills. I am laid up with a most severe cold, and pains all over me. I received yesterday, only the enclosed bit of proof, instead of the whole.[†1] The morning's post is not come in when I send this. I suppose it will bring the rest.

I wish Hannay[†2] would not imitate Carlyle.[†3] Pray take some of the innumerable dashes out of his article—and for God's sake don't leave in anything about such a man believing in himself—which he has no right to do & which would by inference justify almost anything.[†4] Yankee does not mean American but New England merely—I think.[†5]

In the name of the prophet—Smith! would be a better title.

Faithfully Ever

CD.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, [?JULY 1851]*

MS Morgan Library. Date: Similar travel instructions in To Lord Carlisle, 8 July 51, suggest that CD was writing, perhaps also in July, to one of the many friends who visited him in Broadstairs that summer.

Office of Household Words

There is an Express Train to RAMSGATE[†6] from London Bridge Terminus, at ½ past 12. There is another at ½ past 4; but the first is the better of the two. If you let me know when you are coming, I will come over to Ramsgate for you.

To HENRY AUSTIN, 14 JULY 1851*

MS Morgan Library.

Office of Household Words | Monday Fourteenth July 1851.

My Dear Henry.

I have a great idea of buying (for five and forty years) Stone's house.—Tavistock House, Tavistock Square.[†1] It is in the dirtiest of all possible conditions, but I want a Surveyor's opinion as to its substantial repair—I mean as to the likelihood of the roof tumbling into the kitchen, or the walls becoming a sort of brick and mortar minced veal, on any early occasion. Can you recommend me to such a man? If yes, can you make any appointment to come with him and me tomorrow morning to see the house? I should very much like to have your opinion. It is decidedly cheap—most commodious—and might be made very handsome. I am in town for the purpose, and will be ready for you, here, at any hour you may name.

Ever affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

To THE HON. SPENCER LYTTELTON, 15 JULY 1851

Extracts in Maggs Bros catalogue, 1900 (aa), and Anderson Galleries catalogue No. 1774 (1923) (bb); MS 2 pp.; dated Office of Household Words, 15 July 51.

[a]Yesterday brought me to town, and to-day takes me back (I hope) to the breezy sea, which is most delightful to me ever—from the beach.[a]

[b]The establishment seems to me to transact its business in rather a sneaking manner.[b†2]

To MISS EMMELY GOTSCHALK, 16 JULY 1851

Text from N, II, 328.

Broadstairs, Kent | Wednesday 16th July 1851

Dear Miss Gotschalk,

Being in London for a few hours yesterday—for I am passing the summer on the sea beach here—I sent you a copy of David Copperfield, dated on the eighth of last month. I wrote your name in the book; I hope you will receive it safely and that it may express to you, though it has no voice, some of the good wishes for you and interest in you with which I give it.

My fair young friend, I do not know how to answer your inquiry, what I may think on a subject so difficult, which has baffled and divided the wisest men of all times. I may want to be enlightened thereupon, as much as you. If I took upon myself presumptuously to settle it for you, I could not settle it in my own breast, and could not rid myself of the consciousness that I am but a rash poor leader who do not see myself, the way I profess to others.

My advice to you, for your own peace and happiness, is to dismiss such speculations as you have and do right. It matters little what we call evil things, if we know them. Why should it concern you to embody or disembody evil? The great commandments of our Saviour are distinct and plain, and comprise as he said all the laws and rules. Your way in life is sufficiently clear and straight when you admit of your trying with a cheerful heart and with no discouragement to regulate your life's conduct by them. I think this is enough for your youth and innocence to do. And in so doing, it will make you more merciful and gentle to consider and forgive those who in the midst of a wilderness of adverse circumstances, lose their way and claim your pity.

The day will come to all of us when the meaning of life will be plain. Meanwhile the only certain light that shines upon us, shines along our path of duty. That is not hidden from you, I am sure. Whoever treads that path, my dear, induces someone else to tread it. It offers you, I think, not a hard journey—but I hope—a long and bright one. You sit down too soon to brood on all these matters by the way. Perhaps they will be clearer farther down the road. Take courage and try.

Your faithful friend
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To THE COUNTESS GREY,[†1] 16 JULY 1851*

MS University of Durham. Address: The | Countess Grey | 13 Carlton Terrace | London. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Wednesday Sixteenth July, 1851.

Dear Lady Grey.

Your note has been forwarded to me here. I assure you I am very happy to find that the little notice of that very excellent effort was so well-timed.[†2] It is an endeavour in the best direction, and worthy of all encouragement and support.

I will cause the error in the name of the place to be duly corrected.[†3]

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The | Countess Grey.

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 16 JULY 1851

MS (fragment) Lytton Papers. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Sixteenth July, 1851.

My Dear Bulwer.

Your account of the rising Member of Parliament[†1] has made me laugh heartily. His condition is evidently improved.[†2] He was very decidedly endeavouring to achieve the performance Lord Castlereagh made famous, of turning his back upon himself.[†3] And he did, I am certain, proselytise Jerrold.[†4]

I hope you will come next Monday. I have called the[†5]

To JOHN T. LAWRENCE, 16 JULY 1851

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Sixteenth July, 1851.

My Dear Sir

Earnestly remembering your kind interest on a former occasion, I am sure I need offer no apology to you for asking your advice and assistance in reference to our proposed Guild of Literature and Art.

In arranging our Country expedition with Sir Edward Bulwer's new Comedy and the Farce by Mr. Lemon and myself, prospectively, I naturally think of Birmingham. Now, you are perhaps aware that we have an ingenious stage of our own completely appointed, with Scenery by the first artists, and every possible decoration and appliance of the best, which can be erected in two or three hours in any large place, without touching the walls or roof. The first question I would ask you, is, If we came to Birmingham, could we have the Town Hall for the purpose?[†6]

Secondly, would it be free, or would it cost us any thing?

Thirdly, what would be the best time before Christmas? What would be the best time after Christmas?

Fourthly, do you think we might be certain of a great many people, if we took a wide range of prices, so as to comprehend all classes?

These queries look so troublesome and awful on paper, that I am afraid to inflict a longer letter upon you. If you can kindly give me the benefit of your opinion by the end of next week, we shall then hold a solemn council, and decide what towns to visit and when to visit them.

Mrs. Dickens begs to unite with me in cordial regards and remembrances to all your house.

I am Ever My Dear Sir | Very faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

John T. Lawrence Esquire

To J. R. ROBINSON,[†1] 16 JULY 1851†

MS Yale University Library. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Sixteenth July, 1851.

Dear Sir.

In reply to your note, I beg to say that I do not understand Mr. Charles Hugo[†2] to have been prosecuted and imprisoned, solely because he published a paper in opposition to Capital Punishment.[†3] I surely remember that it was expressly shown and enforced, upon his trial, that in the article proceeded against, he represented a not very amiable criminal as a Victim of Society, and represented his prosecutors as tyrants and oppressors.[†4] It was argued that this was [†a]very dangerous social ground to take,[†a] and that it was unjustly taken.[†5]

I think it was. And therefore, however much I may question the policy of such a prosecution or its consistency under a Republican Government, I cannot sign the Memorial to which you have invited my attention.†6

I am not deficient in interest in M. Charles Hugo.†a I have the honor of knowing his father, whose genius I hold in the profoundest admiration, and for whom I entertain great personal respect.†a†1

I am Dear Sir | Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

J. R. Robinson Esquire.

To FRANK STONE, 16 JULY 1851*

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Wednesday Sixteenth July, 1851.

My Dear Middlesex.

I this day send by post the following letter to Robins.†2

Ever yours
Wilmot.

Dear Sir.

Mr. Stone had the kindness to hand me your favor to him of the 11th. respecting the house No. 1 Tavistock Villas. I think it more convenient that I should now address myself directly to you, on the subject of the purchase of the house, as saving both time and trouble.

I am ready to give £1300 (thirteen hundred pounds) for it, for the term you mention, free, as I understand it to be, from any ground rent. But I beg you to observe that I make this offer for the house in its present state, leaving you to receive from Mr. Stone and his co-tenant,†3 in addition, whatever may be the estimated cost of such repairs as they are bound by their lease to make. I have mentioned this to Mr. Stone, who quite approves.

My proposal is subject, of course, to my Solicitor's†4 approval of the title and its conditions. After having the house carefully examined, I am advised that the price I offer for it is a perfectly fair one. It is very well suited to my purpose, but would require considerable decoration and improvement.

If you should be disposed to accept my offer—which I make, I assure you, without any idea of bargaining for the property, or affecting to depreciate it—I would instruct my Solicitor to communicate with you at once, with a view to the conclusion of the business.

Dear Sir
&c &c

To MR ROBINS, [16 JULY 1851]

Text given in last.

To W. H. WILLS, 16 JULY 1851

MS Huntington Library. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Sixteenth July 1851

My Dear Wills. [†a]The cheque you have to pay to my act. for the Greenwich dinner,[†1] is £12..10..6.[†a] The enclosed note and its enclosed papers are from Lady Grey (Lord Grey's[†2] Wife). I have written to her. Can you make a Chip out of them,[†3] and correct our orthography of the place?[†4]

You know that I have no faith in advertizing[†5] beyond a certain reasonable extent. I think it a popular delusion altogether. But I do not desire to stand in the way of what you and Evans may concur in deeming a business idea. And if the expence would be advisable, the Household Narrative decision given, I think it is little less advisable, the decision not given.[†6] Therefore you had better summon the Lincolnian Mammoth[†7] to a meeting at 3 on Saturday, and Evans too, if he be come back. We will then decide what shall be done, and have it done immediately.

GUILD.[†8]

Miss Boyle changes her mind, and wants a family ticket.[†9] I have therefore directed her to burn the one you have sent her. Will you tell Johnson to send her a family ticket, for 3 places together near the Stage, to 3 Hamilton Place, Piccadilly,[†10] instead?

In writing to Ireland,[†11] I would propound two questions—what is the best time (if any) before Christmas? what is the best time after Christmas?[†12]

I have a letter from Bulwer this morning, in which he expresses a great solicitude that in case of the house being very good on Monday, there should be (with a view to the effect upon the Provinces) another last night—but only if the house should decidedly seem to justify it. Will you take counsel and confidence with Mitchell upon this? If it were decided to be done, I would give it out at the end of the Comedy.[†1] Or can Mitchell suggest any other place in London where we could make one dash?

Have Lady Bulwer looked after. A last chance might stimulate her Ladyship to desperate action.[†2]

Faithfully Always
CD

The Meeting with a view to the Country,[†3] Monday the 28th. at 4 EXACTLY.[†4] Of course they are to be called to Rehearsal on the stage, next Monday at 12.

To W. H. WILLS, 17 JULY 1851

MS Huntington Library. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Seventeenth July 1851.

My Dear Wills.

You cannot have remarked it—but I spoke to you, before leaving, about those parcels. It is all right. They were to go to their respective addresses.

I am glad of Brockedon's[†5] note.[†6] He knows a good deal about some curious places[†7]—is very ingenious—and may be very useful.[†8]

A Name for the Custom-House article?[†9] Hum!—Let me see—

What do you say to

The Great House of Detention[†10]
The Castle of Giant Despair.
The Dull End of the Broad Arrow.
Her Majesty's only Disagreeable Customs.
The Great Bar in the Harbor of London[†11]

They are all pretty good.

Faithfully Ever
CD.

To SIR JAMES KAY-SHUTTLEWORTH,[†1] 18 JULY 1851*

MS The Hon. Mrs Charles Leaf. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs. | Friday Night Eighteenth July 1851.

My Dear Sir James.

I should have written to you this morning, but for having been at work the whole day until dinner time—since which event, I have dashed out for my postponed walk. Having now dashed in again, let me hurriedly say that I shall be delighted to have your two proffered papers (if you will kindly write them), on the subject on which none have a better right to speak than you, and to which none can have devoted themselves more entirely.[†2]

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Sir James Kay Shuttleworth.

To FRANK STONE, 20 JULY 1851

MS Benoliel Collection. On mourning paper.

Household Words | Sunday Twentieth July 1851.

My Dear Stone.

I have been considering the great House Question since you kindly called yesterday Evening, and come to the conclusion that I had better not let it go. I am convinced it is the prudent thing for me to do, and that I am very unlikely to find the same comforts for the rising generation, elsewhere, for the same money.

Therefore, as Robins no doubt understands that you would come to me yesterday—passing his life as he does amidst every possible phase of such negociations—I think it hardly worth while to wait for the receipt of his coming letter. If you will take the trouble to call on him in the morning and offer the £1,450 I shall be very much obliged to you. If you will receive from me full power to conclude the purchase (subject of course to my solicitor's approval of the lease) pray do. I give you carte blanche to £1,500;—but I think the £1,450 ought to win the day.

I don't make any apologies for thrusting this honor upon you, knowing what a thorough-going old Pump you are.

Lemon and his wife are coming here, after the Rehearsal, to a gipsey sort of cool dinner. Time halfpast 3. Viands, pickled salmon and cold pigeon pie. Occupation afterwards, lying on the carpet as a preparation for histrionic strength. Will you come with us, from the Hanover Square Rooms?

Ever Affectionately

CD.

To MRS MARSH, 23 JULY 1851*

MS Pickering & Chatto Ltd. Address: Mrs Marsh | Eastbury | near Watford | Hertfordshire.
On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Wednesday Twenty Third July | 1851.

My Dear Madam.

Your note has been forwarded to me here, and I assure you I have much pleasure in replying to it.

The Pine Cultivation was declined, on a principle from which I instruct the gentlemen who assist me, never to depart if they know it. If it were only partly observed, it would occasion so much inconvenience and so many difficulties—and such an indefinable and incomprehensible kind of responsibility would be incurred—that I think it best to prohibit any sort of exception.

We never extend a story beyond four weekly numbers—forming one monthly part—and we do not wish it to contain more than about six pages in each of the four instalments. We even prefer stories to be shorter—regulating our proceedings in this respect, by what we can understand of the requirements of our Subscribers. But a tale of the length I have mentioned, we have no reason to suppose in any way objectionable. The rate of payment is a guinea a page. A story could not be accepted, I think, on this scale of remuneration with a permission to the author to republish it within a shorter interval than a year.

I confine myself to a mere business answer to your enquiries, because I understand you to require one. I write it myself, in the hope that it may be more agreeable to you to communicate directly with me. If you should decide to send me any Manuscript, and if in that case you will have the kindness to address it to me here, I will lose no time in writing to you.

I hope I understand your note, and that in this ledger-and-ruler kind of reply, I give you in the shortest form the information you desire. Having disposed of the business part of my communication let me have the pleasure of renewing the assurance of the admiration and esteem with which I am always My Dear Madam

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs Marsh.

To DR SHERIDAN MUSPRATT,[†1] 23 JULY 1851*

MS Liverpool Public Libraries. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Twenty Third July, 1851.

Dear Dr. Muspratt.

I think our time for Liverpool will certainly not be until after Christmas. We meet on the 4th. of August to decide. The meeting over, I will write to you again.

I do not know whether you are aware that our whole Theatre (Stage and all) is made, and that the Scenery is by Stanfield, Roberts, Grieve, Telbin, Louis Haghe, Pitt, &c—presenting a very beautiful little whole that nothing else could get together, and which can be ingeniously, and without touching a wall or ceiling, erected in any large room in a few hours. Now, although it could be put up in a Theatre, certainly, it would be better out of one. And we have paid so enormously and preposterously for Theatres on previous occasions, that we all object to them for that reason if for no other.

This will put me in a difficulty respecting Liverpool, when I come to state my reports and projects to the Company. Is there no other place of large size in the whole town?

I have not seen Lover[†1] these many years[†2]—I have heard of him, much as you describe him.

With Compliments to Mrs. Muspratt,[†3] in which my ladies join,

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Dr. Sheridan Muspratt.

To MR ROBINS, [23 JULY 1851]

Mention in next.

Offering £1,500 for Tavistock House.[†4]

To FRANK STONE, 23 JULY 1851*

MS Benoliel Collection. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Wednesday Twenty Third July 1851.

My Dear Stone.

Many thanks for your trouble.

This morning's post which brought me your note, brought me one from Robins also, to the same effect. I have replied that I will give the fifteen hundred pounds for the house and fixtures, and that I instruct Loaden of Bedford Place, my solicitor, to proceed in the business with him forthwith.

So I hope we shall be neighbours, and have many a jolly evening in the Willers[†5] my Pump!

I will report progress, as the men of Law proceed.

Affectionately Ever
CD.

The hōshen[†6] sends his duty.

To W. H. WILLS, 23 JULY 1851*

MS Huntington Library. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs. | Twenty Third July 1851.

My Dear Wills. I return the proof of No. 70[†1] which I received from you this morning. As nothing came in the envelope with it, except a note to me from Mr. Forster of Munich[†2]—and as you were to have sent the making-up of the next No.—I conclude that you left out some other enclosures by mistake.

I must call your attention to the South American Scraps,[†3] the slovenliness of which, is quite disgraceful to the publication. I have marked at p 425, an instance of most intolerable English.[†4] I have marked at p 426, a nominative case in the plural with the verb in the singular[†5]—at p 427 a piece of nonsense[†6]—but at pp 429 and 430, the thing becomes such a heap of involved, inextricable, damnable whirlwind of words that it puts all patience to flight.[†7] I never saw anything so utterly detestable. Every fault of composition that can possibly be amassed, is in the paper. You really should have taken care to correct it, and not to let such a bestial piece of bewilderment find admission.

I return the Watering-place[†8] corrected.

Faithfully Ever

CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 24 JULY 1851*

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Thursday Twenty Fourth July | 1851.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

The Book-keeper having been so remiss as to send those books[†9]—even on approval and for inspection as he supposed—without making out a list of them, I really don't see how we can help him, even if the dismal apprehension that has seized upon your mind should be well-founded. But I should think, his memory would be gently refreshed by some of the other wholesale houses that supplied the books, if he were to make any great mistake in the matter.

It is raining here, in the most forlorn manner!

With best regards to Mrs. Brown

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To [J. T. GORDON],[†1] 24 JULY 1851

Extract in American Art Association catalogue, Nov 1924; MS 1 ½ pp.; dated Broadstairs, Kent, 24 July 51; addressed "My dear Goaden", probably cataloguer's misreading of "Gordon". On mourning paper.

Are you coming here this year? . . . I suppose you never got a certain letter from me when you were last in town, proposing a dinner at the Household Words Office? . . . if you didn't, that literary treasure is now falling to pieces at the Reform Club. Kate is not very well. Georgina & the children are. . . . No more at present.

To GEORGE W. PUTNAM,[†2] 24 JULY 1851

MS Alfred Goddard Kay Collection, Princeton.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Thursday Twenty Fourth July, 1851.

My Dear Mr. Putnam.

I have received your letter with very great pleasure, as it is quite delightful to me to have a new assurance of your attachment, and a reminder (though I need none) of your old fidelity and zeal. I have often travelled, in fancy, over the old ground and water in America, and have over and over again beheld you coming at dusk into the storm-gallery of a Western steamer, with a little jug of some warm mixture intended for my very little Cabin. Sometimes (this present year for instance) I have had an impression that you would come to England, and should not have been in the least surprised to behold you bodily entering my study.

Whether we look as we used to look, I can't quite determine. I am much redder and browner, I believe, than I was in those times—more robust—less interesting—shorter haired—a more solid-looking personage—and not younger. But I take great exercise, and am very strong. Mrs. Dickens is stouter, though not quite so well in health as she used to be then. Anne,[†3] who has been with us in Italy and in Switzerland, is with us still, and looks (in my eyes) much the same. They both desire to be kindly remembered to you—and an immense sensation has been created in their minds by your allusion to your daughter.—Which has given unbounded satisfaction.

I write from the sea side—from a fishing village and small watering-place to which we generally come at this time of the year. We still reside, however, in London—our headquarters being always there. We have eight children, and have had nine—a little girl died suddenly, not long ago. The picture of the four we had when we were in America, hangs in our dining room at home.[†1] It is in a gay round frame now, and has these many years forgotten the sliding lid of the box you used to take off, before you set it up on a side table at each of the four and twenty thousand Inns we stayed at. I wonder whether you recollect the Inn at Hartford where the "Levee" wouldn't go away[†2]—or at Newhaven where they kicked the staircase, to express impatience[†3]—or at Columbus where they came in, arm in arm, at about midnight[†4]—or at St. Louis where we had (I think) a ball[†5]—or at Pittsburgh, where I recollect one man with very large buttons on his waistcoat, who got behind the door and couldn't be got out[†6]—or at Philadelphia, where a little hatter with black whiskers did the honors![†7] I feel as if I should like to see all those places again, so much—and to have another ride on a corduroy road, and to sit at another very long table with nothing particular to eat upon it, aboard the Messenger.[†8]

I see many Americans in London, and find them the old good-humoured kind-hearted people.[†9] We never quarrel, but "get along" (as you would say) quite merrily and pleasantly. If I ever find one, in travelling about, I try to make him more at home, in remembrance of my old welcome. Sometimes he seems disposed to consider me a sort of Monster, at first, but he soon gets over it. I want to save the next leaf for the Autographs you ask for. Therefore I will only ask you to give my cordial regards to your wife[†10] (quite a Matron, I suppose, since I saw her at the Tremont House) and a kiss to the little girl, and to believe me

Always Faithfully Your friend

CD.

Twenty Fourth July, 1851.

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS [†11]

To LORD ROBERTSON,[†1] 24 JULY 1851*

MS Yale University Library. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Twenty Fourth July, 1851.

My Dear Lord Robertson.

This is not (as you will soon see) a letter. It is merely an abortion of a note, to say two things.

Firstly, how sorry we were, not to see you when you were last in town—by reason of our having let our house, and being here, and never being in town more than a few hours together; it being too noisy and crowded for Catherine, far from well:

Secondly, that I received your kind and welcome congratulation on the close of my last book,[†2] with the sincerest pleasure. You can hardly think how sensible I am of such encouragement, or how earnestly I feel it.

I did think of being in Edinburgh for a day this year, to say thus much and more for myself. The probability rather fading, I cannot longer delay sending you my signature, fearing you might otherwise think of me, some rainy day, as a graceless wretch.

Kate, and Georgina* send their loves.

Ever Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

---

* Not married yet—nor going to be

To HENRY AUSTIN, 25 JULY 1851*

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Twenty Fifth July, 1851. | Friday.

My Dear Henry. I am afraid it is quite out of my power to do the cause[†3] any good service within the short time. I am now doing the Child's History for the number that will be published next Wednesday Week.[†4] I cannot myself do anything else for that Number,—and even that, you see, will not be in anybody's hands until the prorogation of Parliament,[†1] supposing it could be taken to pieces for another's handling of the subject. Which would then be quite useless.

To write to the Times on such a subject, would involve an amount of correspondence that I really could not (with the least hope of keeping my thoughts in order) encounter. The enormous mass of business I brought upon myself by the letter on the execution of the Mannings,[†2] is almost incredible. Besides which I do not like—having really so little excuse, with a widely-circulated journal of my own—to step out of my niche and occupy that ground, unless for some very extraordinary reason—as my having especially been somewhere or especially seen something, to which individual testimony should be borne. Which reason I have not, in this case by any means.

I will do anything, in my own way and in Household Words, to advance the cause—to keep public attention fixed upon it—to shew the dangers and absurdities by which it is environed. But to do anything in time to avert this present peril, seems to me beyond me.

Don't you consider it so, on this shewing?

I have agreed to give fifteen hundred pounds for Tavistock House, including the fixtures. The lawyers are now (or ought to be) bringing the arrangements and agreements to bear.

Ever affecy.

CD.

To MRS MORSON, 25 JULY 1851*

MS Miss Grace Hughes. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs | Friday July Twenty Fifth 1851.

Dear Mrs. Morson.

Please to make the Committee Tuesday WEEK[†3] at the usual hour.

Faithfully Yours

CD.

To HENRY AUSTIN, 27 JULY 1851*

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Sunday Twenty Seventh July 1851.

My Dear Henry.

I hope the Board will wholly reject the measure.[†4] I have a great idea that we can really serve the question in the recess. I have already projected a series of Tormentors for Vestrylization[†1] that will sting it smartly, and prepare the way.

I can't go to the Paris fetes[†2] if I would, because of the Guild Play, tomorrow Week. But if you are for four and twenty hours out, I think I can suggest a pleasant little trip for one day in that Play Week. I will tell you when I come to town, what I think of strolling away to see.

By the bye, would you like to go to the Play? Any time between this and next Saturday, would do for saying Yes.

I am afraid you will be tired of me, when I once get hold of that house lawfully, before I have done holding Consultations with you. But I shall lean upon you as a very staff, in the invention and execution of the proposed tremendous renovations.

I have heard nothing of the Deeds[†3] yet.—I suppose somebody is fighting somebody else to death, about Nothing of the least importance to anybody—as usual in such cases.

Ever affecy.

CD.

To CHARLES KNIGHT, 27 JULY 1851

Text from MDGH, I, 259-60, checked from MS Sotheby 2½2 July 1983. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Sunday Twenty Seventh July 1851.

My Dear Knight.

A most excellent Shadow![†4] I have sent it up to the Printer, and Wills is to send you a Proof. Will you look carefully at all the earlier part, where the use of the past tense instead of the present, a little hurts the picturesque effect? I understand each phase of the thing to be always a thing present, before the mind's eye—a shadow passing before it. Whatever is done, must be doing. Is it not so? For example. If I did the Shadow of Robinson Crusoe, I should not say he was a boy at Hull, where his father lectured him against going to sea[†5] and so forth—but he is a boy at Hull—there he is, in that particular Shadow, eternally a boy at Hull—his life to me is a series of Shadows, but there is no "was" in the case. If I choose to go to his manhood, I can. If I choose to go to his boyhood, I can. These shadows dont change as realities do. No phase of his existence passes away, if I choose to bring it to this unsubstantial and delightful life, the only death of which, to me, is my death—and then he is immortal to unnumbered thousands. If I am right, will you look at the proof (through the first third or half of the Paper,) and see whether the Factor comes before us in that way?[†1] If not, it is merely the alteration of the verb here and there that is required.[†2]

You say you are coming down to look for a place, next week. Now Jerrold says he is coming on Thursday by the cheap Express at ½ past 12, to return with me for the Play, early on Monday Morning. Can't you make that a holiday too? I have promised him our only spare bed, but we'll find you a bed hard by, and shall be delighted "to eat and drink you"—as an American once wrote to me. We will make expeditions to Herne Bay—Canterbury—where not?—and drink deep draughts of fresh air. Come! They are beginning to cut the corn. You will never see the Country so pretty. If you stay in Town these days, you'll do nothing—I feel convinced you won't buy the Memoirs of a Man of Quality![†3]—Say you'll come?

Ever affecy

CD

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, [?27 JULY 1851]

Mention in next.

To W. H. WILLS, 27 JULY 1851

MS Huntington Library. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Sunday Twenty Seventh July | 1851.

My Dear Wills

H.W.[†4]

I am sorry the Brockedon business (though almost unavoidable) should have arisen.[†5] I have written to the wrathful being,[†6] with a view to mollification.

Bamford[†7] (returned herewith) won't do.[†a] "The Right One", poor—but I think just passable.[†a†8]

I enclose you another Shadow from Charles Knight.[†1] Have it put in type at once, and send him a proof. I have suggested to him some slight alterations in the beginning—of a tense here and there—which will make it more fanciful.[†2] He can easily make them in the proof. They are a mere nothing.

I send the History of England[†3]—with a very pretty bit in it, describing the drowning of the Son of Henry the First.[†4] Proof to me for correction.

Also a proof of that whole No.[†5] I have had none whatever, of next Wednesday's No.[†6]

I am glad you like the Watering Place[†7] so much. It pleased me exceedingly.

How about Hannay and the Dreadnought?[†8]—I am in correspondence with Horne, about some articles that I think he will do very well indeed.[†9]—Have you told Morley about the Phantom Ship?[†10]

I should like a day or so to consider about the advertizing. In the meantime go on as at present, and don't alter the arrangement. †b*Why is it not (as agreed) across the page in the Examiner*†b†11 It is not unwise, I suppose, to speak of those matters in the Row???†12 I don't wonder at Punch falling;†13 for anything so bad, I suppose, never was done. But H.W. really is so good, that it is hardly a parallel case. Never mind. We must stand to our Guns in the most indomitable manner, and make it better yet. I have always had an instinctive feeling against the Exhibition, of a faint, inexplicable sort.†14 I have a great confidence in its being a correct one somehow or other—perhaps it was a foreshadowing of its bewilderment of the public. My apprehension—and prediction—is, that they will come out of it at last, with that feeling of boredom and lassitude (to say nothing of having spent their money) that the reaction will not be as wholesome and vigorous and quick, as folks expect.

When do you go to Paris? I can't remember. And by what Train? And when do you come back?

Grammar-school paper returned herewith.†1

GUILD.†2

Of course Costello's idea about postponing the next night,†3 is simply frenzy.

What I want to be able to do at the Meeting,†4 is to be able to say, at such a time I propose such a trip—at such another time such another trip—at such another time, such another. Derby? Have you made any enquiries about Derby—say, for April?†5 Paxton is the man.

Keep in view the making of the house on Monday night by the Company, if needful.†6

GENERAL BOTHERATION†2

It is impossible to go on with that unfortunate Mr. Keys.†7 I met him in the street the last time I was in town, and told him that if I could ever give him anything to do, I would. But that I saw no means or opening.†8

Pray explain to him that his condition can have nothing to do with him in the character of a Contributor as between us and the public—that whatever goes into the Journal goes in for its own sake, and not through any interest of any sort—otherwise I should make contributors of a Legion of clients, including all my poor relations.

I think this is all at present.

Ever Faithfully

CD

P.S. TO MY LARGE LETTER.†2

Don't lose sight of the Playing at Parliament.†9 I don't see why you took out that allusion to the Hotel de Londres (in the Chamouny paper)†10 as it is a most respectable house; and the non-gaming house certainly deserves a Lift against the gaming house. It was not quite judicious. What about Ice?[†1] It won't do so well bye and bye.

To THE HON. MRS RICHARD WATSON, 29 JULY 1851

MS Huntington Library. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Twenty Ninth July 1851.

My Dear Mrs. Watson. I am quite delighted to think that you are coming to the Play, before it gets any older.[†2] You will find the first three acts of the Comedy rather heavy, I am afraid, but it picks up afterwards. I have always a vicious desire to electrify Mr. Forster (when he is acting) violently, in some sensitive part of his anatomy. I shall be interested in knowing whether you are afflicted with the same cruel aspiration.

There are no Boxes, properly so called; because, as they are very large and would be very expensive, we number the chairs in them as seats. Do you know the Room? There is a certain Royal box, at the end opposite the stage, in the very centre, greatly raised. I have reserved you two seats in the front row there. I have also reserved you two seats on the ground, next to the stage—that is to say, where the stage rises immediately before you, with the Orchestra interposed, as in the front row of Stalls at a Theatre. You can choose between these, and let me know (here) which you prefer. Or, if you like to ask for me at the Rooms, during the Rehearsal-time on Monday (between 12 and ½ past 2) I will shew you the actual places and you shall decide then. I think, myself, the front of the Royal box on the whole the better place; but it is at the end of the room, and you might like to be nearer. If you like to be close, the other is the better situation.

I am indeed rejoiced to hear of Haldimand.[†3]

I write in haste to save the post, after a hard day's work.

With love to Watson | Ever Dear Mrs. Watson | Faithfully Yours

CD.

To W. H. WILLS, 30 JULY 1851

MS Huntington Library. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs Wednesday Night, | Thirtieth July, 1851.

My Dear Wills.

I went over to Dover—having no other trip on hand—to see you. Was at the Railway this morning. But could hear nothing of the train you mention in your note. It is no matter. I had nothing of any moment to say—merely wished to pat you on the back.

I have gone through the No. since returning home. †aAgain†a I observe one or two of the articles in a very slovenly state, both as to the Queen's English and pointing. I have not had time to set them quite right. I wish you would look to the Proof I have sent Greening, to understand what I mean.

The notion I think of trying with Horne, is a kind of adaptation of an old idea I once had (when I was making my name) of a fanciful and picturesque "beauties of England and Wales". For I never look at the grimgriffinhoof†1 "Beauties"†2 without thinking what might be done. I have not told Horne what my general idea is—I have a notion that it might be made a tremendous card for us—but I have proposed to him to come down with me to Chatham after the next play (on my way back) and take certain bits of the Dockyard & fortifications.†3 Don't you think a series of Places, well chosen, and described well, †awith their peculiarities and popularities thoroughly seized, †awould be a very promising series?—And one that people would be particularly likely to identify with me?—†4

In haste to save the Post

Ever Faithfully

CD.

Over

If I found the Chatham paper come out well, I would cast about for a way of making a splash with it, as a new branch of the H.W. Tree.†5

To JOHN FORSTER, [LATE JULY 1851]

Text from F, 1872-4, II, xviii, 409. Date: "end of July" according to Forster; but in time for reply and second letter (see next) before CD left for London.

Vague mention of a next book escaped in a letter at the end of July.†1

To JOHN FORSTER, [?LATE JULY-EARLY AUGUST 1851]

Text from F, 1872-4, II, xviii, 409. Date: replying probably at once to Forster's reply to last. If Aug, before 4 Aug when CD in London.

Good advice, but difficult: I wish you'd come to us and preach another kind of abstinence. Fancy the Preventive men finding a lot of brandy in barrels on the rocks here, the day before yesterday! Nobody knows anything about the barrels, of course. They were intended to have been landed with the next tide, and to have been just covered at low water. But the water being unusually low, the tops of the barrels became revealed to Preventive telescopes, and descent was made upon the brandy.†2 They are always at it, hereabouts, I have no doubt. And of course B.†3 would not have had any of it. O dear no! certainly not.

To JOHN FORSTER, [SUMMER 1851]

