Text from F, VI, iii, 505-6. Date: "in this particular summer" (1851), according to Forster, introducing his account of CD's reading (see below).[†4]

By the bye, I observe, reading that wonderful book the French Revolution[†5] again, for the 500th time, that Carlyle, who knows everything, don't know what Mumbo Jumbo[†6] is. It is not an Idol. It is a secret preserved among the men of certain African tribes, and never revealed by any of them, for the punishment of their women. Mumbo Jumbo comes in hideous form out of the forest, or the mud, or the river, or where not, and flogs some woman who had been backbiting, or scolding, or with some other domestic mischief disturbing the general peace. Carlyle seems to confound him with the common Fetish; but he is quite another thing. He is a disguised man; and all about him is a freemasons' secret among the men.

I finished the Scarlet Letter[†1] yesterday. It falls off sadly after that fine opening scene.[†2] The psychological part of the story is very much overdone, and not truly done I think. Their suddenness of meeting and agreeing to go away together, after all those years,[†3] is very poor, Mr. Chillingworth[†4] ditto. The child out of nature altogether.[†5] And Mr. Dimmisdale certainly never could have begotten her.[†6]

Of the clever story of another popular writer, he wrote The story extremely good indeed; but all the strongest things of which it is capable, missed. It shows just how far that kind of power can go. It is more like a note of the idea than anything else. It seems to me as if it were written by somebody who lived next door to the people, rather than inside of 'em.

To THE HON. SPENCER LYTTELTON, [SUMMER 1851]

Mention in To Lyttelton, 9 Oct 51. Date: CD implies he had written a month or two before.

August

To WILLIAM CULLENFORD, 2 AUGUST 1851

Extract in Stan V. Henkels catalogue No. 1249 (1920); MS 1 p.; dated Broadstairs, Kent, Sat 2 Aug 51 (Catalogue mistakenly reads 1857, when CD was at Gad's Hill).

I send you this document, signed, as I see no form of attestation upon it. I suppose no attestation of my signature to be necessary. I am very happy to become one of the Honorary Directors,[†7] and to accept the office you do me the honor of propose to me.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 5 AUGUST 1851*

MS Morgan Library.

Household Words. | Tuesday Fifth August | 1851.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

Many thanks for telling me the dinner-hour.

I am sending you Charley's usual papers, I send you also a note from his tutor,[†1]—as I am anxious that you should know as much about him as I do.

Ever dear Miss Coutts | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To LORD COCKBURN,[†2] 7 AUGUST 1851

Mention in S. T. Freeman & Co. catalogue No. 960; MS 3 pp.; dated London, 7 Aug 51.

To HENRY AUSTIN, 8 AUGUST 1851*

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Friday Eighth August 1851.

My Dear Henry.

I spoke to Knight, who seems to take kindly to the idea, and to be prepared to carry it out.[†3] He is now here with his family (I found him in the boat this morning, as I came down)[†4] but purposes being in town for business early next week, and will call on you at your office.

Affectionately Ever
CD.

To JOHN HILLS,[†5] 9 AUGUST 1851

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Ninth August, 1851.

Dear Sir

I have read the Paper on the treatment of Lunatics.[†6]

It is a little too dry and didactic for Household Words, and a little too long besides.[†1] Nor am I quite sure that it would be well to give such a Government as ours, a Monopoly in a question of such magnitude, or that I could make that proposal mine.[†2] But it suggests, and very well puts, considerations of importance, and I am unwilling to reject it if the Author[†3] will give me leave to take some Editorial liberties with it. As I think you told Miss Hogarth that he had some idea of making a Pamphlet of the Article,[†4] and as he might therefore object to its being altered,[†5] I shall not consider it as subject to my discretion unless you should be empowered to give me the assurance that it is so. If it be offered for publication in Household Words, intact, exactly as it stands, I cannot have the pleasure of accepting it, and will then return it to you with my thanks to the Writer.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Hills Esquire.

To JOHN T. LAWRENCE, 9 AUGUST 1851*

MS Newbery Library, Chicago. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Saturday Ninth August 1851.

My Dear Sir

We have decided on coming to Birmingham with our Play, in February—early in a week, and after the middle of the month. I think it will now be best that I should leave the matter in your hands, and decide to run down to Birmingham, when you may think it expedient with a view to the settlement of the details of our arrangements. I suppose about Christmas would be time enough? But I will regulate my course by your advice, and come to ask for the Town Hall in such season as you recommend.

My Dear Sir | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John T. Lawrence Esquire.

To DR SHERIDAN MUSPRATT, 9 AUGUST 1851*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Ninth August, 1851.

My Dear Dr. Muspratt.

I have delayed writing to you until after we should have met, and settled our prospective arrangements.

We propose to take Manchester, Birmingham, and Liverpool, in February next, as we find it impracticable to do so before Christmas. At Manchester they will give us the Free Trade Hall free of charge; at Birmingham (I have no doubt) the Town Hall. Our coming to Liverpool at all, must depend on the cost of the room and on its capacity—for if the terms were great, and the room small, it would be necessary for us to go elsewhere; the cost of moving our Theatre, its great value, and our whole object, rendering Rent and space for spectators all-important considerations.

I should not much assist you by giving you the dimensions of our Machinery, as they would be (at a distance) almost inexplicable. The best way would be to send down the Master-Carpenter to look at any proposed place (if the terms could be borne) when you should think it necessary to conclude an arrangement. The main thing to know, now, is whether we could have the Philharmonic Hall, and what it would cost us. Where Gas is not already introduced, we bring it in from the street: all the fittings for lighting the scenery being a part of the stage and travelling with it. You may suppose that we do not damage floor, wall, or ceiling, when I tell you that the Theatre stood for weeks in the most splendid room in Devonshire House, fitted in the costliest manner—gilded—brocaded—panneled[†1]—pictured—and decorated in the richest way in all possible respects.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Dr. Sheridan Muspratt.

To MISS RYLAND,[†2] 9 AUGUST 1851*

MS Mrs Quinney. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent | Ninth August, 1851.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his Compliments to Miss Ryland, and begs to thank her for her interesting note, and for the graceful translation which his children are now enjoying.[†3] He is not quite sure that the father of English poetry needs any Monument, or that—as Monuments and statues go—a new one would be very much to his honor. But he will consider the subject.[†4]

To W. H. WILLS, 10 AUGUST 1851

MS Huntington Library. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs | Sunday Tenth August 1851.

My Dear Wills. I send you two slight notes for corrections in proofs I have been reading.

In Hannay's Dreadnought,[†1] for Yankees read Americans.[†2]

In the May Festival[†3] of Miss Howitt[†4] (very good) for the Lord's love don't let us have any allusion to the Great Exhibition. Make the first sentence the first paragraph, and then go on with the second paragraph as it stands. Also, substitute Names for those initial letters, Mr. G—and the like.[†5]

I don't know what to write about, in the absence of your Paris-trip notes, but I think of a paper on "Whole Hogs"—Peace Society, Temperance Do., and Vegetarians[†6]—all of whom have lately been making stupendous fools of themselves.[†7]

Faithfully Ever
CD.

To MISS MARY DICKENS, 11 AUGUST 1851*

MS Private; seen before destruction in Prestwick air-crash Dec 1954. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs | Monday Eleventh August | 1851.

My Dearest Mamey.

I address my answer to you, as you are the first on the list of signatures to the petition I have received by the faithful hands of the Ocean Spectre.[†8]

You and Katey are always so good, that I am delighted to do anything to please you. You shall both make holiday, if you like, until Rosa[†1] goes away. I am sorry she is going so soon, but I hope she will come again next year.

Ever affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

Yours Miss Dickens.

To GEORGE AUGUSTUS SALA,[†2] [?13 AUGUST 1851]

Extract in George Augustus Sala, Things I have Seen and People I have Known, 1894, I, 68. Date: mention in To Wills, 13 Aug 51.

Saying he had read Sala's "Key of the Street"[†3] and that he had retained it for early publication. As some of Sala's experiences had been of a nature approaching the horrible, CD had made a few alterations to the manuscript so as not to shock young and lady readers.[†4]

To W. H. WILLS, 13 AUGUST 1851

MS Huntington Library. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Thirteenth August 1851.

My Dear Wills.

I have written to the Author[†5] of the Key of the Street,[†6] accepting his paper.[†7] It is a very remarkable piece of description, and (although there is little fancy in it) exceedingly superior to the usual run of such writing. I have delicately altered it myself, so as to leave no offence in it whatever. If the young man can write, generally, as well as that, he will be an acquisition to us. I think it quite good enough for a first article—but we will not put it first, for fear we should spoil him in the beginning. It's sure to tell. [†a]Will you send him a Proof? George A. Sala, 17 Upper Wellington Street.[†a]

I expect the proof of Whole Hogs tomorrow morning, and will send it back by return.

I am now going at once to do the "Flight to France". I think I shall call it merely "A Flight"[†1]—which will be a good name for a fanciful paper. Let me have your notes by return. Don't fail.

Can you give me any facts about Waste of money at Chatham?[†2] If so—do.

Miss Martineau[†3] all right. Send Howitt his proof to correct.[†4]

You will find (I think) that my other half's invitation refers to next month—when I hope you will be better able to accept it.

[†b]GUILD.[†b]

Lemon will look into all those matters.

[†b]MYSELF.[†b]

I wish, when you can, you would take an opportunity of seeing our friend the Registrar of Merchant Seamen,[†5] and ask him from me whether he is ever acquainted with the individual characters of Australian Emigrant Ships and their Discipline, and could say to me (this is with a view to Miss Coutts's Home) Such a Ship going to sail at such a time, is a good one—Captain may be trusted. If he has such means of knowledge, and would favor me by communicating them (of course in confidence) he could render me just the help we want and do a great deal of good.

Will you send Callaghan twice a week to Devonshire Terrace, to see whether there are [any][†6] letters in the hall or in the garden letter box.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To HENRY AUSTIN, 14 AUGUST 1851*

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Thursday Fourteenth August | 1851.

My Dear Henry.

I don't know whether you may be disposed for another out—of two days?

But I have a desire to go down (by Great Western) to the valley of Stroud in Gloucestershire,[†1] where there is a natural picture I wish to look into.[†2] I am coming to town next Wednesday, and if you should be inclined for so much refreshment and relief, would go by Express on Thursday Morning. Otherwise, not.

Write me a line here.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 14 AUGUST 1851

MS Lytton Papers. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Fourteenth August, 1851. | Thursday

My Dear Bulwer.

I have received the enclosed this morning, from Thomas Miller.[†3] I am afraid it is a case in which no permanent good can be done—I have several times sat upon it when at the Literary Fund,[†4] and I fear he has mistaken his vocation, and is a little impracticable besides—but he seems in great affliction now.[†5] You will see in the letter itself, why I send it to you.[†6]

I hope you are better. The last night was a great night, and the Play went most gallantly. We all wished you had been there. I opened the proceedings in the Morning by saying that we must have £3,000, whatever trouble it cost to get it. We then settled to go to Bath and Bristol in November—to Manchester Liverpool and Birmingham in February—to take another expedition (probably Sheffield, Derby, & Newcastle)—in April. Perfect unanimity prevailed and Nobody said Nay to anything.

Ever Faithfully Yours

CD.

To AUGUSTUS EGG, [?14 AUGUST 1851]

Mention in next.

Inviting him to Broadstairs.

To FRANK STONE, 14 AUGUST 1851*

MS Benoliel Collection. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Fourteenth August 1851. | Thursday Evening.

My Dear Stone.

I take it for granted that you are by this time aware that your annual visit here is a thing without which Broadstairs (in sheer astonishment) would be wrecked.

I have written to Augustus Egg (A.R.A.)[†1] and said the same. I have a kind of prejudice in favor of October, because of its wild cool days, and its bright warm evenings, and because you were here last year (not uninterested) when I finished Copperfield. But all times are alike to us, and whatever suits you two, will suit and please

Yours Ever | (and Co.)

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Crampton sends her respectful duty.

To HENRY AUSTIN, 17 AUGUST 1851*

MS Morgan Library. Address (envelope MS Berg Collection): Henry Austin Esquire | Board of Health | Whitehall | London. PM Aug 17 51. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Sunday August Seventeenth | 1851.

My Dear Henry.

I am very sorry to hear that Laetitia is so unwell, but I hope she will get on now, like a house on fire.

Thursday Week will suit me for Stroud Valley, just as well. Will you let me know, in the fulness of time, whether we shall enter into a bond for that day?

Ever affecy.

CD.

To J. M. LANGFORD,[†2] [?17 AUGUST 1851]

Mention in next.

To JOHN BLACKWOOD,[†1] 17 AUGUST 1851*

MS National Library of Scotland.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Seveneenth August, 1851.

Dear Sir

I received your letter here, this morning. I shall be in town for a few hours on Wednesday, and have written to Mr. Langford of your London house (who forwarded yours to me) that I will most gladly sign the Memorial that morning. I had a warm regard for Moir,[†2] and am more ready to comply with your request than I can very well express to you.

It is exceedingly kind in you to be so active in the good cause.

Believe me | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

John Blackwood Esquire

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 17 AUGUST 1851

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street | Piccadilly | London. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Seventeenth August, 1851.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I don't see anything to distrust much, in Rachel Bradley's[†3] letter—which I retain for the present, to note it in our book.[†4] How she got the "ladies' old clothes" is inscrutable to us, but the state of society is strange and unsettled where she is, and there may be ways and means of proceeding there, that look unlikely to old-world eyes.

After I left Highgate the other day, intending to write to the Australian Merchant I spoke of, it suddenly occurred to me (I cannot conceive how it comes to pass that I never thought of it before) that I knew a certain Commodore Brown[†5] who is officially "The Registrar of Merchant Seamen", and who I thought must know all about the Emigrant Ships: I accordingly wrote to him,[†1] and he sends me this reply.

"I am able and most willing to give exactly the sort of information you want. Whenever you will let me know where you wish to send—when—and how many—I will ascertain at any time which is the best ship, and who is the best Captain, and all other particulars."

I really hope this will relieve you of one of the most troublesome and anxious of the details. He is (as you may suppose from his office) a thoroughly practical man, well acquainted with the whole mercantile service.

Perhaps you will have the kindness, in the matter of Charley, to do just what is most convenient to you.

I begin to be pondering afar off, a new book.[†2] Violent restlessness, and vague ideas of going I don't know where, I don't know why, are the present symptoms of the disorder.

I understand Lord Granville[†3] is to be made the next President of the French Republic.[†4] Have you heard it? Also that Lady Granville[†5] is to go into the French Chamber of Peers, as the first representative of the Rights of Women—and that the Lord Mayor[†6] wants to be naturalized as a French Subject.[†7] This looks bad for England.

I have not heard again from Mr. Dunn.[†8]

Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

To A. W. MUNRO,[†9] 18 AUGUST 1851

MS National Library of Scotland. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Eighteenth August, 1851.

Sir.

I very much regret that in my absence from London your letter has only just now reached me.

I feel truly flattered and obliged by the compliment you propose to pay me. If I plainly reply that I would rather not accept it, I do so (believe me)—not because I am insensible to it in any way, but because I am always reluctant to occupy that honored place too often, and because I receive so many letters similar to yours.

With sincere thanks, I am Sir

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

A. W. Munro Esquire

To T. J. THOMPSON, 19 AUGUST 1851*

MS Yale University Library. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Tuesday Ninteenth August | 1851.

My Dear Thompson

I received your letter here, this morning.

I know Charley Gibbs's[†1] House at Quarto—[†a]I mean Quinto[†a†2]—almost as well as I know the Peschiere itself.[†3] Your better half[†4] I have no doubt saw a Sunset there.[†5] It can be seen to greater advantage nowhere in Italy. The situation is delightful—the garden just large enough, with a beautiful way out to the hills—and your recollection of the iron rails, and the orange trees, and the teagarden dining-room, and the bare camere di letto, is quite accurate. There is a very good Sala, and a little Snuggery inside it, painted as a Landscape—something like a Suburban Dairy—or another tea garden. The bedrooms are very reasonably good. But, the furniture (when I was there last) was of the scantiest nature conceivable by the English intellect. I don't think anything was perfect, except a little pair of bellows in one particular chimney—and that is not much, for a family. If the house be in such repair as to keep out the weather, and if you contemplate the hiring of a few things to make the place comfortable, (unless more furniture should have been put into it: which is quite possible) I think you may safely take it on good terms. I should not at all object to it myself, if I were going there, to live out of the City. It is decidedly cheerful. It is not at all a "rambling" house. I would rather have it—as a house—without reference to the bellows—than almost any house I know in that region. It is (for an Italian house) exceedingly compact and well in hand.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

P.S. I have been in constant communication with Lemon, but he has never spoken or written to me on, or made any kind of allusion to, the subject to which your Postscript refers. It is entirely new to me, I assure you.[†1]

To HENRY AUSTIN, 22 AUGUST 1851*

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Friday Twenty Second August | 1851.

My Dear Henry.

I write this note, with a brain addled by severe study of Bradshaw.

It appears indispensable (with a view to the Guild performances) that Lemon and I should go to Bath on Wednesday, and see a man there.[†2] We propose to leave the Paddington Terminus at ¼ past 10 in the morning.

Now, if you can spare three days for our Trip (for I suppose we shall be in town again on Friday afternoon) and will come to Bath with us, as aforesaid, then, we shall only have to come back to Swindon (you and I) on Thursday morning, and thence go on to Stroud. Therefore, if you can accomplish this additional bit of excursion, I propose that we meet at the Paddington Terminus, at 10 on Wednesday.

But, if you cannot manage that, then I propose that you leave town for Stroud, on Thursday morning by the Express at 10 minutes before 10.[†3] On the Platform at Swindon you will in due season behold the intelligent countenance of the undersigned, waiting with a carpet bag to proceed with you to Stroud.

You understand? But try to manage Bath, for it is a pretty place, and Lemon the best of all possible fellows to go out with. Decide, and write me a line here as soon as you can.

I hope Laetitia is quite well again? Best loves.

Ever affecy.

CD.

Henry Austin Esquire.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 22 AUGUST 1851

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street | Piccadilly | London.
On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Twenty Second August 1851.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

The gentleman to whom the enclosed letter is addressed (I mention this to explain its being addressed to a name you don't know) is my Secretary and Sub Editor at The Household Words, whom the Commodore (who is the writer) supposes to represent all my affairs in my absence. Will you read it? The Ship mentioned sails, I fear, too soon, and leaves too short an interval for your preparations? I will write to the Commodore again, on the other points of his note, after hearing from you.

Many thanks for the Hieroglyphic Suggestion. It is an excellent subject, but the difficulty in treating it for so large an audience is to find any one well acquainted with it, who has the power of sufficiently popularizing it: I hope, however, that I can discover the man.[†1]

The Government will do with those Irish Ruffians,[†2] exactly what it did with Puseyism—interfere, feebly, when the mischief is done.[†3] I feel quite certain that but for the laisser-aller dealing with the Candlestick and Confessional matters, we never should have got to this pass—for the Pope was made, through that medium, to believe that there was a tendency towards him in England which does not exist—and presumed upon it—and went too far to retract.[†4] Now, a War between the Roman Catholic Religion—that curse upon the world—and Freedom, is inevitable.[†5] And numbers of people of the better order of sense and spirit are so indignant with the Protestant Church for its indolent temporizing and its miserable internal squabbles, that they have lost their natural interest in the struggle. I cannot tell you how strongly I am confirmed, when I reflect upon all this, in my unvarying faith that Reform is the only true Preservation. If we had had a bold Government, boldly setting right the abuses in the Church, twenty years ago, its strength at this moment would have been Sampson's[†6] to General Tom Thumb's[†7]—and if the Universities had been forced to adjust themselves to the character of the times, we never should have had to bless Oxford for the intolerable enormity it has dug out of the mire.[†1]

Terrible things will be done and suffered, before we get out of this trouble. I believe it will produce the last, great, long, direful War of the world.

Charley is down at Watson's in Northamptonshire, for a fortnight.[†2] If you should not have gone abroad when he comes back, I will present him. He is very much grown—an excellent boy at home, and as good to his brothers and sisters as if he had never been away. All he wants, is a habit of perseverance. With that, he could do any thing. He wants it as a fixed purpose and habit of his nature. He gets on at Eton, with credit, so easily that he merely takes short rides on his Pegasus and jumps off again, when he ought to be putting him at great leaps.

I am going to send Walter[†3] (the Cadet) at Christmas, to a Mr. Trimmer[†4] at Putney who educates expressly for Addiscombe and India. I don't think he is so clever as Charley, but he is a very steady amiable boy, of a good reliable capacity, and brings exalted certificates from Mr. King.

You will write to me about the ship? I presume you will prefer the next good one after this mentioned in the note?

Dear Miss Coutts | Ever Most Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To W. H. WILLS, 22 AUGUST 1851

MS Huntington Library.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Twenty Second August 1851. | Friday

My Dear Wills. I want the enclosed change made, in the work of the World.[†5]

The introduction to Soldiers' Wives[†6] must be entirely re-written, and should be a plain and earnest representation of an obvious impropriety.[†7] Pray take out of the Correspondent's part the passage about "quivering at the smell of gin"—which makes me shudder from head to foot, in its unspeakable badness.[†8]

The Whitsuntide Festival is so horribly maudlin and washy, that nothing can be done with it.[†9]

I want a great paper done, on the distribution of Titles in England. It would be a very remarkable thing to take the list of the House of Peers, the list of Baronets and

Knights, and (without personality) divide the more recent titles into classes and ascertain what they were given for. How many chemists, how many men of science, how many writers, how many aldermen

How much intellect represented.

How much imagination.

How much learning.

How much expression of the great progress of the country—How much of Railway construction, of Electric Telegraph discovery, of improvements in Machinery, of any sort of contribution to the happiness of mankind. How much soldiering. How much Law.

I think this well done, would make a prodigious impression. And if you can get a powerful array of the facts together, plainly stated for my use, I will do the Paper, and (I feel confident) with great advantage to us, and to the question.[†1]

What is Brown's address? Is he Commodore or what? Tell me and I will write to him.[†2]

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To M. D. HILL, 23 AUGUST 1851*

MS Houghton Library, Harvard. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Twenty Third August 1851.

My Dear Sir

I think the subject you kindly mention, a very interesting one, and highly desirable to be explained to the public. I shall be very glad indeed to have a paper on it from your hand.[†3]

I have had a long letter from Ld. Brougham, and have confided the subject, with special instructions, to a safe hand.[†4]

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

M. D. Hill Esquire

(Over)

I was very glad indeed, to see your just and gallant letter in behalf of Macconnochie.[†5] Between ourselves, I wish to Heaven he would do more himself with a continuous and steady energy, and keep his wife[†1] quiet. It strikes me she is a rock ahead—means well, I have no doubt—but is so accursedly strong minded.[†2]

To WILLIAM LOADEN, [23 AUGUST 1851]

Mention in next.

To FRANK STONE, 23 AUGUST 1851

MS Benoliel Collection.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Saturday Twenty Third August | 1851.

My Dear Stone.

A "dim wision" occurs to me, arising out of your note—also presents itself to the brain of my other half.

Supposing you should find, on looking onward, a possibility of your being houseless at Michaelmas, what do you say to using Devonshire Terrace as a temporary encampment? It will not be in its usual order, but we would take care that there should be so much useful furniture of all sorts there, as to render it unnecessary for you to move a stick. If you should think this is a convenience, then I should propose to you to pile your furniture in the middle of the rooms at Tavistock House, and go out to Devonshire Terrace two or three weeks before Michaelmas, to enable my workmen to commence their operations. This might be to our mutual convenience and therefore I suggest it. Certainly the sooner I can begin on Tavistock House the better. And possibly your going into Devonshire Terrace, would relieve you from a difficulty that might otherwise be perplexing.[†3]

I make the suggestion (I need not say to you) solely on the chance of its being useful to both of us. If it were merely convenient to me, you know I shouldn't dream of it. Such an arrangement, while it would cost you nothing, would perhaps enable you to get your new house into order comfortably—and do exactly the same thing for me.

Ever Affecy.
CD.

PS. I anticipated your suggestion, some weeks ago. When I found I couldn't build a stable, I said I ought to have permission to take the piece of ground into my garden—which was conceded. Loaden writes me this morning, that he thinks he can get permission to build a Stable one story high, without a chimney. I reply that on the whole I would rather enlarge the garden than build a stable with those restrictions.

To E. M. WARD, 23 AUGUST 1851

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent | Twenty Third August, 1851.

My Dear Sir

I am very sincerely obliged to you for your kind note, and for the beautiful mark of your remembrance accompanying it.[†1] Pray accept my earnest thanks, and confide in my assurance that I shall prize it highly, always.

We hope to see you and Mrs. Ward,[†2] frequently, when we come back to town. It will give us great pleasure to improve the opportunity the "Guild" has given us.

Believe me | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

E. M. Ward Esquire

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 24 AUGUST 1851*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Holly Lodge | Highgate | London. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs | Sunday Twenty Fourth August | 1851.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

You put me in despair. I cannot possibly write the particulars of the Ship,[†1] to Mrs. Morson, because I don't know them. You have not returned me the letter in which they are stated!

If there were any means of sending this to you by Railway (to facilitate your communicating with Mrs. Morson) I would send it so; but there is no train until late in the afternoon. You would not receive my letter so certainly as by the Post, and it could reach you very little (if any) sooner.

I am going to Bath on Tuesday, but purpose being here again by Saturday, and shall be delighted to bid you good bye at Folkestone,[†2] if you will give me a day or two's notice of your coming there.

Ever Dear Miss Coutts, | Most Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To DR SHERIDAN MUSPRATT, 24 AUGUST 1851

Extract in Lettres Autographes composant La Collection de M. Alfred Bovet, Paris, 1887; MS 1 ½ pp.; dated 24 Aug 51; addressed Dr. Sheridan Muspratt à Liverpool. On mourning paper.

I wish I could be there to meet Baron Liebig,[†3] one of the greatest men in Europe, and in whom I am (as who is not?) most strongly interested.[†4] But I can only feel proud at a distance, to know that I have the honour to number him among my readers.

To HENRY CAREY,[†5] [26 AUGUST 1851]

Mention (envelope only) in Anderson Auction Co. catalogue No. 1012 (1913); addressed Henry Carey Esq. | Burlington, | U.S. of America; postmarked 26 Aug 51.

To MADAME CELESTE, [26 AUGUST 1851]

Mention in To Stone, 26 Aug 51.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 26 AUGUST 1851*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Holly Lodge | Highgate | London. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Tuesday Twenty Sixth August 1851.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

If your former letter reduced me to despair, your registered letter, enclosing £40 and received this morning, drives me to my wits' end. The Ship sailed to Gravesend yesterday, and leaves Gravesend tomorrow morning. I don't know what to do—can[†1] do nothing! If I were not going to Bath tomorrow morning (as I am) I should still be quite incapable of arranging the matter in the time. Nor have I the least idea (as you don't tell me anything about it) whether Mrs. Morson knows they are going. In a word, I never was so bewildered, mystified, stupified, and stunned. It appears to me that my only course is to put the £40 in my desk, and conclude that the girls will go by the next available ship, until I hear from you.

My condition is truly deplorable.

Ever Faithfully Yours

CD.

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To FRANK STONE, 26 AUGUST 1851*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Office of Household Words. | Tuesday Twenty Sixth August 1851.

My Dear Stone

I received your note this morning, before I came away. Tomorrow morning I am going to Bath—but, about the middle of next week (when my tenant will have gone out and Devonshire Terrace will be mine again) I shall be in town.

I am now going to dine with Charles Knight, at the Rainbow in Fleet.[†2] I have written a note to Celeste for a box at the Adelphi[†3] after dinner. I suppose there is pretty safe to be one vacant. But in the hope of seeing you, I will leave word here, where I am for the evening, in case you don't appear at the Rainbow.

Ever Affecy.

CD

To W. H. WILLS, [?28-29 AUGUST 1851]

Mention in To Wills, 31 Aug. Date: written from Stroud, which CD visited on 28 Aug, probably staying until the 29th (To Austin, 22 Aug).

To DR SHERIDAN MUSPRATT, 30 AUGUST 1851*

Text from private owner's typescript.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Thirtieth August, 1851.

My dear Dr. Muspratt.

Baron Liebig makes me proud. I read your reply on his behalf and thought it complete.

We must pay the fifty guineas.[†1] I hope in about a month to be able to fix a night in February, and communicate it.

Faithfully yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Is there any night desirable to be avoided?

To FRANK STONE, 30 AUGUST 1851*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: Frank Stone Esquire | Tavistock House | Tavistock Square | London. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs | Saturday Thirtieth August | 1851.

My Dear Stone.

I don't think (judging from your note) that you or Mrs. Hawkes[†2] understand that I propose to keep a trustworthy person in the house myself—always—who would be as careful of any furniture left there, as anyone in the world could be. It would be infinitely more convenient to us, to have our own servant there than to have Mrs. Hawkes's, because upholsterers and other people will be perpetually coming backwards and forwards, who will have to be instructed about measurements and so forth, and who could only take their instructions from someone quite possessed of our plans. As you know the regularity and precision with which the domestic affairs of a certain "Inimitable" creature are usually conducted, you will be able to assure Mrs. Hawkes that my servant would be in all things quite as reliable as her own, and that I should make an especial trust of such of her possessions as she might leave in the house. Whereas it would be, both an inconvenience and an unnecessary expence to me, to employ her people.

If Mrs. Hawkes could have her movables arranged in the middle of any room or rooms, so that we could get at the walls if we desired it, while they were still there[†3]—and would trust the keys of that room or of those rooms to me—I would take care that no one had access to those places but in the presence of my servant. She may rely that if they were caskets of jewels that she left, they should be carefully preserved, and rendered up to her exactly as she left them.

Do you know how long she may probably desire shelter for these chattels? I only ask, to know what grace I may extend to the Carpet Makers.

I will come to you on[†1] Thursday next, at 5 o'clock. Kate will come to town with me, and will be happy to do anything to satisfy Mrs. Hawkes, and to accommodate and please us all. She[†2] hopes to see Mrs. Stone when I see you, and to tell her that Devonshire Terrace is perfectly at your service on Saturday.

Affectionately always

CHARLES DICKENS

To W. H. WILLS, 31 AUGUST 1851*

MS Huntington Library. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Sunday Thirty First August | 1851.

My Dear Wills.

I postpone the History of England.[†3] I have not received your answer to my enquiry from Stroud, but decide to do so.

It was injudicious to make the paper on Seals,[†4] a Chip. It was quite important enough to stand alone, and ought to have stood alone.[†5]

Animal Magnetism, still quite out of the question.[†6]

Morley's paper[†7] to begin with what I return of his MS, and to have the little word "can", inserted where I have put it in the enclosed slip. I do not understand why he has taken no notice of that Red Republicanism manifested among the papers sent to him.[†8] But it is no matter.

The Witness[†9] is so extremely personal, that it will not do without considerable alteration. Besides which the Writer seems incapable of attaching importance to anything. How can a man be such an Ass,[†10] as to put the Roman Catholic attempt against the progress of the World[†11]—the public health—and Mr. Jacob Bell[†12]—all on the same footing!

I had no proof of the Flying Artist,[†1] until it was in the No. It is objectionable, I think, for reasons I will point out to you when I come to town[†2]—either on Wednesday or Thursday.

The Gallop for Life is so surprisingly good that (in the absence of any social paper of decided merit) it must go first in the No.[†3] I do not think I shall do anything for this No. If I should change my mind tomorrow, I will write tomorrow.[†4]

What has become of the Alice-and-the-Angel man, whose name I always forget?[†5]

Ever Faithfully

CD.

September

To CHARLES KNIGHT, 1 SEPTEMBER 1851

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue July 1983; MS 1 p.; dated Broadstairs, Kent, 1 Sep 51.

CD had put the book away so carefully that he lost it . . . was obliged for the offer of the house[†6] but our part in Devonshire Terrace is sufficient from September onwards. | Pills are a wonderful medicine "no family should be without" them.[†7] Will bring a box for Knight and a copy of the prescription.

To W. H. WILLS, 2 SEPTEMBER 1851*

MS Huntington Library. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Tuesday Second September 1851.

My Dear Wills. I am pledged to go to Dover tomorrow, to meet Miss Coutts on her way abroad,[†8] but I hope to be at the office before Eleven on Thursday morning.

Faithfully Always

CD.

To MRS MARSH, 3 SEPTEMBER 1851*

MS Private. Address: Mrs Marsh | Eastbury | near | Watford | Herts. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Wednesday Third September 1851.

My Dear Madam

I have read your tale[†1] with considerable interest, and have been honestly affected by it. The suggestions I shall venture to make, will not (I hope) offend you, or induce you in the least to doubt the estimation in which I hold it.

It is indispensable that the threads of a story so published, should be brought closely together. The introduction is too long,[†2] and in many places the dialogue needs abbreviation. I would shorten it more especially in the first scene between Matty and the two sisters[†3]—in the scene between Ella and her father[†4]—and in the scene between Ella and the narrator at last.[†5] What might not be long in a book, is very long in a more detached form.

In reference to the religious character of the tale[†6] (and in what you say in your note, on that subject, I entirely concur) I would merely observe that it requires to be managed with great circumspection—not, as I think, because of an audacious indifference on the part of readers in general to religion, but because it most unfortunately happens that the profession of it is so often substituted for the practice, that people shrink from talk about it. They do unfortunately see, on occasions when great religious professors make public appearances, such a substitution of the letter for the Spirit, that they become suspicious and antagonistic; and it becomes more than ever important to enquire—not whether the religious advice we may wish to give, be good and true (of which we are already satisfied) but whether it be given with the least danger of awakening a not unnatural or unsubstantial prejudice, and consequently with the greatest hope of being useful.

In this point of view, I rather doubt your management of Matty,[†7] and would most decidedly omit her enthusiasm about the charity school.[†8] I feel satisfied that it is not likely to do good.

I have a confidence that you will not so far misunderstand me as to suppose that in these remarks I am laying down the law as an authority therein. I am merely hinting at my own individual opinions.

It is very possible that you may by no means agree with me, and may not like to alter the story by such omissions as I generally suggest. I would make them myself with the greatest anxiety to make them with the utmost care, if you would like me to do so.[†1] But I will do nothing until you favor me with your reply. And pray let me add that while I should be sorry to lose so affecting and powerful a story, I do not for a moment question your right to withdraw it in all good humour and courtesy, if you cannot, on consideration, allow any weight to my objections.

My Dear Madam | With great regard | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs Marsh.

To [?GEORGE] BARCLAY,[†2] 5 SEPTEMBER 1851

Text from N, II, 340.

5th. September 1851

Mr. Charles Dickens's compliments to Mr. Barclay, and begs to say that the enclosed article[†3] may now go to press as he has no more corrections to make in it.

To T. A. FAIRS,[†4] 5 SEPTEMBER 1851*

MS (Wills's hand)[†5] Mr J. C. Reid.

Office of Household Words | 5 Septr 1851

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Fairs and begs to thank him for the suggestion contained in his letter of the 30th. Ult.; & which shall not be lost sight of.[†6]
T. A. Fairs Esq

To FRANK STONE, 5 SEPTEMBER 1851*

MS Benoliel Collection. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Fifth September 1851.

My Dear Stone.

It was so late when I saw Loaden, that I was obliged to run away to Shepherd's Bush, and my Virgin charges there.

He says I may safely pay the money on a mere agreement for a Lease[†7] (to be solemnly concluded at leisure, when Dukes'[†8] Lawyers and other great Lights shall be in town), and that he will endeavour to get that done immediately, that I may go to work with a steady mind.

You will be here on Monday, of course.

Ever Affectionately
CD.

To MRS HENRY AUSTIN, 7 SEPTEMBER 1851*

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Sunday Seventh September 1851.

My Dear Laetitia.

Will you forward the enclosed by the next post to Henry, if (as I suppose you do) you know where he is? I can't send any body into my new house to do any work until I hear from him—and, not hearing from him, am rapidly going distracted.

Kate, Georgina, and the children, unite in kindest loves to you and mother.

Ever Affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Henry Austin

To HENRY AUSTIN, 7 SEPTEMBER 1851

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs | Sunday Seventh September | 1851.

My Dear Henry. I am in that state of mind which you may (once) have seen described in the newspapers, as "bordering on distraction"—the house given up to me, the fine weather going on (soon to break, I dare say), the Painting season oozing away, my new book waiting to be born, and along of my not hearing from you!! I have torn all my hair off, and constantly beat my unoffending family.

NO WORKMEN ON THE PREMISES[†1]

Wild notions have occurred to me of sending in my own Plumber to do the Drains. Then I remember that you have probably written to prepare your man, and restrain my audacious hand. Then Stone presents himself, with a most exasperatingly mysterious visage, and says that a Rat has appeared in the Kitchen, and it's his opinion (Stone's—not the Rat's) that the Drains "want compo-ing."[†2]—for the use of which explicit language, I could fell him without remorse. In my horrible desire to "compo" everything, the very postman becomes my enemy because he brings no letter from you, and, in short, I don't see what's to become of me unless I hear from you tomorrow. Which I have not the least expectation of doing.

Going over the house again, I have materially altered the plans—abandoned conservatory and front balcony—decided to make Stone's Painting Room the drawing room (it is nearly six inches higher than the room below) to carry the entrance passage right through the house to a back door leading to the garden, and so reduce the once-intended drawing room, now school-room, to a manageable size—making a door of communication between the new drawing room and the study. Curtains and Carpets, on a scale of awful splendor and magnitude are already in preparation, and still—still—

NO WORKMEN ON THE PREMISES.†1

To pursue this theme is madness. Where are you? When are you coming home? Where is the man who is to do the work? Does he know that an army of artificers must be turned in at once, and the whole thing finished out of hand? O rescue me from my present condition. Come up to the scratch, I entreat and implore you!

I send this to Laetitia, to forward.
Being, as you well know why,
Completely floored by N.W.I.

Sleep

I hope you may be able to read this. My state of mind does not admit of coherence.

Ever affectionately

CD.

P.S. NO WORKMEN ON THE PREMISES!†1

Ha! Ha! ha! (I am laughing demoniacally)

To HENRY AUSTIN, 8 SEPTEMBER 1851†

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, | Monday | Eighth September 1851.

My Dear Henry.

Your letter, received this morning, has considerably allayed the anguish of my soul. Our letters crossed, of course. Letters under such circumstances always do.

I quite agree in the William Cubitt†2 suggestion—assuming it to be worth his while to undertake a business which involves so little in the brick and mortar way, and so much in the painting and papering departments.

Thursday will suit me admirably, and I hope would lead to the men being actively at work on the following Monday Morning. Your time will of course be mine. If you propose earlier than half past eleven, I will come up on the Wednesday night. If not earlier, I can come up on the Thursday Morning. You will arrange for our being met there, by the builder? There will be papers to chose, and colors. Perhaps he should know that.

Kate, who was in a state of despair, has greatly recovered since the receipt of your note this morning, and begins to think that we shall have a house after all.

A great to do here. A steamer lost on the Goodwin yesterday, and our men bringing in no end of dead cattle and sheep.[†1] I stood a supper for them last night, to the unbounded gratification of Broadstairs. They came in from the Wreck, very wet and tired, and very much disconcerted by the nature of their prize—which I suppose after all will have to be re-committed to the Sea, when the hides and tallow are secured.[†2] One lean-faced boatman murmured, when they were all ruminative over the bodies as they lay on the Pier, "Couldn't Sassages be made on it?"—but retired in confusion shortly afterwards, overwhelmed by the execrations of the bystanders.

You will write me one line more, informing me positively of our time of meeting at Tavistock House?

Ever affectionately

CD.[†3]

P.S. If you should not receive this in time to reply, or if I should not hear from you to the contrary, or receive any other appointment from you, I will be at Tavistock House at half past eleven on Thursday.
Henry Austin Esquire

To W. H. WILLS, 9 SEPTEMBER 1851*

MS Huntington Library. On mourning paper.

No. 2.[†4]

Broadstairs, Kent. | Tuesday Ninth September 1851.

My Dear Wills

Since I closed my other letter,[†5] I have remembered to ask you if you will ask that gardener you mentioned,[†6] to send some competent person to meet me at Tavistock House at 2 on Thursday (with a view to seeing the ground and making an estimate of expence), and first to go to Devonshire Terrace, and see whether the greater part of the shrubs &c in the garden, can be transplanted. I put them all there, and don't want to leave them there.

Faithfully Ever

CD.

W. H. Wills Esquire.

To F. W. TOPHAM, 10 SEPTEMBER 1851*

MS Mr T. A. G. Pocock. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Tenth September 1851.

My Dear Topham.

You will probably receive an official note soon after this if not before it, but (for fear you should act on a wrong impression) I scratch these words to let you know that I believe the Bath and Bristol days will be the 10th. and 12th. of November.[†1]

Faithfully Yours Ever

CD.

To MRS CHARLES DICKENS, 11 SEPTEMBER 1851

MS British Museum.

Office of Household Words | Thursday Eleventh September 1851.

My Dearest Kate. I have had a perfectly tremendous day with Henry Austin. He thought it best to go over the whole place in detail with only me, and to make plans and statements of all the alterations (which he did with infinite trouble) and to make his own estimate, and see Cubitt himself tomorrow. He proposes to offer him a month to do it in, and says it should be well done within a week of that time. We shall get a broad notion of the expence (I hope) before I leave for Broadstairs tomorrow.—I quake, I must say.

You can hardly imagine, even in the midst of the dirt and desolation, the effect upon the house of the windows being open and the dirty blinds gone![†2] Of the bow in the drawing room, and of the general air of the room, I cannot speak in terms of sufficient praise. I almost begin to doubt whether the back room on the second floor which we once intended for Mamey and Katey, will not be the best room for us. It is half as large again as the front one,—with an outside place on the top of the drawing room bow, just like that outside the Devonshire Terrace nursery, to which I have ordered the wirework to be fitted. You shall decide.

I think it will be best for you in a week or so, to come up with me for a few hours and choose the paperings.

Think of the Stones not having gone to Devonshire Terrace until today,—and of course of Josephine's[†1] not having come in to Tavistock House!! Think of all the broken birdcages in the world, sticking in all the broken chairs, with their legs uppermost—and you will have a faint idea of their "moving"—not including the dust.

Talfourd comes down with me. See that Georgina's room is made as comfortable as possible, with any little garniture that can be ingeniously got into it—a larger washing stand—table with ample writing materials—the books upon it, the Scarlet letter,[†2] and Sydney Smith's lectures on Moral Philosophy.[†3]

You will bring the little carriage to meet the cheap Express. Dinner at ½ past 5.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To [MESSRS BRADBURY & EVANS], [?MID-SEPTEMBER 1851]

Mention in Pickering & Chatto, The Book Lovers Leaflet No. 13 (1888); MS 1 p.; dated Broadstairs; on mourning paper. Date: possibly ordering the set of his books he promised to Austin on 21 Sep 51; if so, then probably a week or so before then.

Ordering a set of his works.

To HENRY AUSTIN, 14 SEPTEMBER 1851*

MS Huntington Library.

Broadstairs | Sunday Fourteenth September 1851.

My Dear Henry. Kate and I will meet you at Tavistock House, at ½ past 11 on Tuesday, and we will then go round to Cubitts, all three together, at any hour you may appoint with that Potentate.

I am afraid that the enclosed letter from Mr. Cardale[†4] shews him to entertain views concerning the right of way, which will disable me from taking the lane into my garden[†5]—though no doubt I could polish it up, and exchange the wall for iron rails. The best thing will be for us to see him on Tuesday (I write him to that effect) and to get the best concession we can. In the meantime, in case the Workmen should begin taking the wall down, I send a Messenger to town this day, with instructions that it is not to be touched until your further orders.

Many thanks

Ever affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

To J. B. CARDALE, [14 SEPTEMBER 1851]

Mention in last.

To F. M. EVANS, [?16 SEPTEMBER 1851]

Text from N, II, 350. Date: CD's books were packed up by 26 Sep (To Smith, that day); the only Tues in Sep when he was in London was the 16th.

Devonshire Terrace | Tuesday

My Dear Evans,

Will you have the kindness to let me have eight pulls of this,[†1] with the corrections, by 9 tomorrow morning.

Eeles's[†2] people are now here, putting my books into a perfect fortification or barricade of tea chests.

Faithfully always

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To [?JAMES BALLARD],[†3] 17 SEPTEMBER 1851*

MS Miss Dora L. Tattam and Miss Gladys Waterer.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Wednesday 17th. September 1851.

Mr. Dickens begs to have dinner prepared on Thursday the 18th. for 15 persons at 5 o'Clock. The party will bring some fish with them.[†4]

To WILLIAM J. CLEMENT,[†1] 18 SEPTEMBER 1851*

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Eighteenth September 1851.

Dear Sir

Our friend Mr. Justice Talfourd has written me the enclosed note, which I hope will be my sufficient excuse for addressing you.

I have a misgiving that your audience would be scarcely large enough to justify the expences of so long an excursion for our numerous body and our bulky machinery. But I may be wrong, and should be very happy to find that I am so.

Can you do me the favor to let me know where we should play in Shrewsbury if we played there at all—what the dimensions of the place are—what its capacity of accommodation is—what prices you think might be charged on such an occasion—and whether the local feeling would be likely to be very strongly interested.

I should explain to you that our own Theatre has been made at a great expence, with Scenery and so forth made expressly for the purpose by the first artists of the time, and that we shall usually erect it in a large public room—as in the Town Hall at Birmingham, the Free Trade Hall at Manchester, the Philarmonic Hall at Liverpool—and not in a Theatre. Where there is no very large room, it could be erected as a Theatre within a Theatre. In that case, it would be desirable to know what charge would be made for rent.

If you can enlighten me at your leisure on these particulars, I will communicate with the Honorary Secretary, and return you an official reply.[†2]

Dear Sir | Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

W. J. Clement Esquire

To MRS MORSON, 18 SEPTEMBER 1851

Text transcribed by Prof. Edgar Johnson from MS then in possession of Maurice Inman Inc.

Broadstairs, Kent | Eighteenth September 1851

Dear Mrs. Morson,

There are some things in the enclosed notice, which I must get you to insert, with Mrs. Scott's[†3] assistance.

The name of the Parish in which the house is situated, I don't know.[†4] The amount of the rent, I am not sure of—I think it is £60.[†5] The annual value I know nothing about. Nor the amount at which it is rated to the Poor.[†1] Each of these heads has a column for itself, you will see. Fill them up, with Mrs. Scott's aid, and then return the paper to the proper officer.

If I had any control over the Australian ships, you would not be troubled with our young friends an hour. Not having the least, I can't help you. It is arranged that I am to be informed when the first recommendable one sails.[†2] And the moment I receive such intelligence I will write to you.

Its coming is so uncertain, and is so likely (I think) to take us by surprise, that I would recommend you on the whole not to go to your little boy until we have got rid of these girls. If it should by any remote possibility happen that you were wanted for such a purpose when you were not on the spot, I think it might damage you with Miss Coutts.

I am investigating a Ragged School case that I think may turn out well. If it should appear advisable to be taken, I will write the necessary instructions to you of course.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Morson.

To HENRY AUSTIN, 19 SEPTEMBER 1851†

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs | Friday Nineteenth September | 1851.

My Dear Henry.

Mr. Cardale is particularly anxious, with a view to the prevention of otherwise-possible nuisances, that the wall enclosing the lane, should be made "flush" with the front of my house.[†3] I believe that is already your intention, and that it is hardly necessary for me to write this.

[†a]I am perpetually wandering (in fancy) up and down the house, and tumbling over the workmen. When I feel that they are gone to dinner, I become low. When I look forward to their total abstinence on Sunday, I am wretched. The gravy at dinner has a taste of glue in it. I smell paint in the Sea. Phantom lime attends me all day long. I dream that I am a carpenter, and can't partition off the hall. I frequently dance (with a distinguished company) in the drawing room, and fall into the Kitchen for want of a pillar.[†a]

Ever affectionately

CD.

P.S. I have asked Cardale whether Cubitts people had not better level and enclose all the three new gardens at once. The expence is to be afterwards divided between him, Stone, and me.[†1]

To J. B. CARDALE, [19 SEPTEMBER 1851]

Mention in next.

To FRANK STONE, 19 SEPTEMBER 1851*

MS Benoliel Collection. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Nineteenth September 1851.

My Dear Stone. I have had a conference with Mr. Cardale—quite satisfactory and neighbourly in all respects—in which he proposed our entering into the enclosed agreement.[†2] If you should not have contemplated the extension of your own garden, I shall be quite ready to pay the expense of lengthening your wall. If you should think the advantage you gain, sufficient to compensate for your paying the cost of that alteration yourself, well and good. There is no fear of our falling out about it.[†3] In either case (as this is matter private to ourselves) will you sign the agreement and return it to Mr. Cardale? I shall suggest to him that Cubitts men, now working for me, had better do the garden-lengthening work for all the three houses at once.

I enclose a note from Mr. Cardale, also, for you to read. I have replied to it that I quite consent to the front court alteration and to his retaining the direction as to its being kept in order[†4]—and that I am sure I may answer for you too.

Ever affectionately

CD

To HENRY AUSTIN, 21 SEPTEMBER 1851

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs | Sunday Twenty First September | 1851.

My Dear Henry.

It is quite clear we could do nothing else with the Drains than what you have done. Will it be at all a heavy item in the Estimate?

If there be the least chance of a necessity for the pillar, let us have it. Let us dance in peace, whatever we do, and only go into the kitchen by the staircase.

Have they cut the door between the drawing room and study yet? The foreman will let Shoolbreds[†1] know when that feat is accomplished.

O!—And did you tell him of another brass ventilator in the dining room, opening into the dining room flue?

I don't think I shall come to town until you want to shew me progress. Whenever that may be, I shall look forward to another dinner. And I think we must encourage the Oriental,[†2] for the goodness of its wine.

Will you post the Hop Report[†3] to the office? Wills has my instructions about it.

I am getting a complete set of a certain distinguished Author's works prepared for a certain distinguished Architect[†4]—which I hope he will accept, as a slight though very inadequate—&c &c—affectionate—&c—so heartily and kindly taking so much interest—&c &c.

Loves to Laetitia

Ever affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

To FRANK STONE, 21 SEPTEMBER 1851†

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: Wait answer. | Frank Stone Esquire | Tavistock House. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, | Sunday Twenty First September | 1851.

My Dear Stone.

My "tate o' peel"[†5] on the subject of the garden walls, is this. Mr. Cardale seems a very good sort of man, but is evidently "fussy"—and on the whole I did not anticipate getting his consent to the lane retraction (though an obvious improvement to his property) so easily. I was therefore very glad to take it on his terms—the rather as I apprehend the expence of the walls will be very slight; there being so many bricks on the spot, available on the pulling down of the old wall. Now, having arranged with him and ventured to say that I was sure I could answer for you, I should fail a little in his confidence if the question were re-opened. Therefore I wish you would sign the agreement. But, I anticipated what you say about your short term, and therefore proposed, and still propose, to leave your third an open question between yourself and me, which we can arrange—either when you see your way more clearly to the purchase of the house, or at any other convenient time. I do not propose (for that would be presuming on our friendship) to pay anything that you ought to pay, but I am truly desirous that you should not pay a shilling unreasonably, for my convenience. Sign the agreement—leave me to pay the two thirds now—and we will examine the nicer merits of the question whenever you like. I am quite aware that I sacrifice a little to Mr. Cardale, but I think the improvement amply worth it.[†1]

The last clause of your letter in reference to the conservation of the front court is perfectly right, and so distinctly agreed among us.[†2]

Would it not be worth your while to make some agreement with Robins for being allowed something of your three years rent in the purchase money, if you should buy the house? For I think you could buy it pretty easily, by joining a Building Society.[†3]

I am quite distressed that Mrs. Hawkes should be in tribulation, and I cannot conceive why Josephine didn't accept the key—unless she declined with some superstitious remembrance of Blue Beard. Kate writes to her by this post with the following directions—That when the workmen are not in that little room, she is to keep it locked. And that when they are there, she or her husband is to be there too. She now understands that there are valuables there, and that she is to guard them quietly, with the utmost care.

I have not found anything to speak of, requiring to be done in the house beyond our first calculation—except the drains. They are very big and very dirty; and we have decided to lay down the tubular drainage instead. Your friend the Rat[†4] (assisted by his family and several friends) had eaten a few bricks from under the sink, and made his entrance that way.

[†a]You never saw such a sight as the Sands between this and Margate presented yesterday. This day fortnight a steamer laden with cattle going from Rotterdam to the London Market, was wrecked on the Goodwin—on which occasion by the bye, the coming in at night of our Salvage Luggers laden with dead cattle which were hoisted up upon the pier, where they lay in heaps, was a most picturesque and striking sight. The sea since Wednesday has been very rough, blowing in straight upon the land. Yesterday, the shore was strewn with hundreds of oxen, sheep, and pigs (and with bushels upon bushels of apples) in every state and stage of decay—burst open, rent asunder, lying with their stiff hoofs in the air, or with their great ribs yawning like the wrecks of ships—tumbled and beaten out of shape, and yet with a horrible sort of goblin humanity about them. Hovering among these carcases was every kind of water-side plunderer, pulling the horns out, getting the hides off, chopping the hoofs with pole axes &c &c attended by no end of donkey carts, and spectral horses with scraggy necks, galloping wildly up and down as if there were something maddening in the stench. I never beheld such a demoniacal business![†a†1] And if you had seen Horne facetiously flying from one carcass, tumble over another, you would have laughed yourself as faint as his wife, Georgina, and I, did.

Best remembrances from all, to all in Devonshire Terrace

Ever Affectionately My dear Stone

CD

Over

I don't trouble you with a note when I want anything taken away—as the bookshelves for example, which I suppose the Pantechnicon people have fetched. You will take it for granted that its all right.

To FRANK STONE, 23 SEPTEMBER 1851*

MS Benoliel Collection. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Tuesday Twenty Third September | 1851.

My Dear Stone.

Mr. Cardale (I take it) couldn't very well make duplicates of that document,[†2] without knowing, first, that we would sign it. I assume it to be quite sure that he will make one now for each of us with his signature attached. If he should not do so in a day or two, I shall have no hesitation whatever in asking him for that exchange. But I think it would have been sharp practice to assume that he was going to take any but the plain and usual business-course.

Ever affectionately

CD

O Heaven, such a morning!—The brightness of it!—

To HENRY AUSTIN, 24 SEPTEMBER 1851

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs. | Wednesday Twenty Fourth September | 1851.

My Dear Henry.

Calm in my great confidence in you—sedate—even cheerful—I shall remain here, until summoned to behold the Works.

I perfectly understand the enclosed plan, and consider the idea of the second recess, an inspiration. It had better be a cupboard, as it will then contain a useful article of crockery. [†a]Unless that would be an expence. If so, only a recess in the bookcase for uniformity's sake.[†a]

The bookcase not yet being begun, I have directed the maker to come to you at Whitehall, to have the alteration explained to him. Thinking it may save you trouble to have the plan, I enclose it. Will you tell him:

1st. To make the top of the bookcase flat, to stand casts on.

2nd. Whether the two sliding doors—one to the cupboard, and one to the drawing room—(supposing two—but you decide that) are to be faced with real shelves, or with imitation backs of books. If the latter, he is to apply to me for instructions as to the binding and lettering of the said fictitious volumes.[†1]

I have arranged with Mr. Cardale and Stone, that Cubitt's people at work for us, shall level the additional ground for all three gardens, and make the walls and gates—using, as far as practicable, our old bricks. Will you give this direction, and let that little job be the subject of a separate bill, for the convenience of our afterwards dividing it among us?

I give the Pantechnicon man a card of mine addressed to you, as an introduction of himself.

Ever affectionately

CD.

P.S. Mrs.

HAWKES'S[†2]

property I have told Josephine to keep her eye on. I hope it will be taken away this week, but am bound to make the best of it, as she pitched her goods into confusion, to accommodate me.

P.P.S. The name of that forgotten pass over the Alps, Sir, is the

S.P.L.U.E.G.A.N.[†3]

(I ought to have put the e before the u, but never mind)

[†b]Is the Rat dead?[†b]

To WILLIAM J. CLEMENT, 24 SEPTEMBER 1851*

MS Private.

Broadstairs, Kent | Twenty Fourth September | 1851.

My Dear Sir.

I am exceedingly obliged to you for your very hospitable letter, and beg (both on my own behalf and on that of Mrs. Dickens) to thank you and Mrs. Clement, warmly.

I hope we may be able to arrange for a performance at Shrewsbury. Early in November, we go to Bath and Bristol. We then do nothing until February, when we purpose playing at Manchester, Liverpool, and Birmingham. The exact nights for that trip, I cannot arrange until the Bath and Bristol expedition shall be over; but I shall then, without loss of time, settle the post-Christmas Campaign, and then, with your permission, I will renew our correspondence. It will give me great pleasure to come to Shrewsbury, if it can be contrived, and there will be more than ample time for all needful note of preparation.[†1]

My Dear Sir | Very faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

William J. Clement Esquire.

P.S. I ought to observe perhaps, that we are bound to the towns I have mentioned, in the order I have set forth—but Shrewsbury might possibly be squeezed in, before Birmingham.

To CHARLES ELLIS,[†2] 24 SEPTEMBER 1851

Mention in Bertram Rota catalogue, Spring 1971; MS 1 p.; dated Broadstairs, 24 Sep 51.

Requesting him to submit an account for a dinner.[†3]

To F. M. EVANS, 24 SEPTEMBER 1851

Text from N, II, 344 with date and signature from Anderson Galleries catalogue No. 1639 (May 1922).

Broadstairs | Twenty Fourth September 1851.

My Dear Evans,

A remarkable circumstance has occurred here, in which I think you will be interested. A voice, apparently proceeding from the Ocean, continually utters these words, in a voice indescribably forlorn—"No accounts yet." What is your opinion of this prodigy?[†4]

Faithfully yours

CD.

To JAMES MACGREGOR,[†5] [24 SEPTEMBER 1851]

Mention, envelope only, in Maggs Bros. catalogue No. 283 (1912); addressed James MacGregor; postmarked Ramsgate 24 Sep 51.

To J. WESTLAND MARSTON, 24 SEPTEMBER 1851*

MS Century Association, New York. Address: Westland Marston Esquire | 22 Rochester Road | Camden Road Villas | London. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Twenty Fourth September 1851.

My Dear Marston.

I am truly sorry, while here, to receive your letter. I deeply regret to lose you,[†1] and sincerely condole with you on the causes of your withdrawal.[†2]

But I defer to them without a word, though I hope you will come back when you are happier and better.

If you will kindly leave your dress out, it shall be sent for and treated with all possible care.

Mrs. Dickens desires to unite with me in kind regards to Mrs. Marston[†3] and yourself, and to assure you both that we did not observe your affliction without concern and sympathy.

My Dear Marston | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Westland Marston Esquire

To MRS MORSON, 24 SEPTEMBER 1851*

MS Dr A. A. Silverman.

Broadstairs, Kent | Twenty Fourth September 1851

Dear Mrs. Morson

Unless you have made some mistake in sending me the enclosed, I cannot conceive how it came to be addressed to me, as I know nothing whatever about it, or about anything or anybody mentioned in it.[†4]

It will be best, I think, to defer the Committee for this month. I shall return to town, I hope, by next month, and shall then see you much oftener.

I am constantly expecting to have a ship recommended,[†5] but, as yet, have heard nothing more.

Faithfully Yours
CD.

To FRANK STONE, 24 SEPTEMBER 1851*

MS Benoliel Collection. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs | Twenty Fourth September 1851.

My Dear Pump.

I am glad to find (from certain document received) that the Sparkler[†1] was right.[†2] What a remarkable creature that Sparkler is!

Ever Affecy.
CD.

Topping[†3] is a greater Ass[†4] than ever. He has just thrown the horse down, and cut his head open, and both legs.

To HENRY AUSTIN, 25 SEPTEMBER 1851*

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Thursday Twenty Fifth September | 1851.

My Dear Henry.

I send this up by Forster who is leaving here, in the hope that you may receive it before you leave the office, and be able to write me an answer BY RETURN.[†5]

I am a good deal bothered about ordering a looking glass for the drawing room, to fit that recess opposite the fireplace. It is very tempting, but very costly. It occurs to me, in considering the question, that the glass-door may be saved. Don't you think—the new door matching now, as to position, with the drawing room entrance door (except in being in a recess)—that it would do, on the drawing room side, merely painted like the entrance door? If you should think so, I think I could find it in my heart to order the large mirror. If you should not think so, I should hesitate.

How does the thing look in the eye of your fancy?

Ever affectionately

CD.

To CHARLES COOTE,[†6] 25 SEPTEMBER 1851*

MS Mr Peter Goodricke. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Twenty Fifth September 1851.

My Dear Sir

We are going to act at Bath on Monday the 10th. of November, and at Bristol on Wednesday the 12th. The band will be composed, on each occasion, of local musicians engaged for the purpose by the Proprietor of the Assembly rooms at Bath[†1]—and I have no doubt your conducting them would change them, from a sow's ear to a silk purse.[†2]

You recollect our conversing on this subject at the Hanover Square Rooms, and your thinking it just possible that you might be able to go with us? And what will it cost the Guild?

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

C. Coote Esquire.

To FRANK STONE, 25 SEPTEMBER 1851*

MS Benoliel Collection. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs. | Twenty Fifth September 1851. | Thursday

My Dear Pump.

Will you take a yard measure (or a bit of string in the absence of one), and give me by to night's post if you get this in time, as I hope you will, the width and height of the glass in the drawing room, which is opposite the fireplace?

Ever Affectionately

CD.

To HENRY AUSTIN, 26 SEPTEMBER 1851†

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs. | Twenty Sixth September 1851.

My Dear Henry.

Noble—noble!—But, being an open door on the drawing room side when the two rooms were put en rapport, would it not then have an air of incompleteness? Suppose it were on that kind of hinge, on the drawing room side, that it could be lifted off bodily when required—and suppose it could then be put in the wall somewhere—I merely suggest—bashfully—humbly—meekly—with implicit reliance. I am in your hands. You know far better than I do what is practicable, and what will look neat and complete.

I think I have now estimated every new thing in the way of furniture and fitting that will be wanted,—and furthermore arranged for its being forthwith provided. The figures are rather stunning,—but it is a life business (I hope) and ought to be complete.

It[†3] will be a door like the other door, in appearance, and not looking glass. That, I have decided (ordering the other glass for the recess) but all the rest I leave to you with an undisturbed soul.

Affectionately Ever

CD.

[†a]P.S. I dream of the workmen every night. They make faces at me, and won't do anything.[†a]

To F. M. EVANS, 26 SEPTEMBER 1851

MS Dickens House. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Twenty Sixth September 1851. | Friday.

My Dear Evans.

Clearly a magnetic fact! The voice is now silent.

I guessed the balance within £6. Please to pay it into Coutts's.[†1] It won't be there long; for I find my new house so remarkable for nothing as for its Drainage—which is of a most powerful description.

I am very glad to hear good accounts of our Third Volume.[†2] Wait, till I get rid of my workmen and get to my work, and see if we don't raise the (East) wind!—[†3]

Faithfully Yours always

CD.

F. M. Evans Esquire.

To BASIL W. SMITH,[†4] 26 SEPTEMBER 1851

Text from N, II, 344.

Broadstairs, Kent | Friday Twenty-Sixth September 1851

Sir,

I have decided as follows:

To abandon the chairs altogether. To have the centre recess in the drawing room fitted with one plate of the best glass (according to your estimate) "with a space of nine inches left on each side to correspond with the two side recesses, and a little additional ornament at the top." Also to have the plate under Console table, and the two glasses from Devonshire Terrace fixed in the side recesses regilt where necessary, and additional ornaments at the top. All this agreeably to your estimate. I do not require any such pendant from these, as you mention.

The large chimney-glass in Devonshire Terrace will require a little regilding here and there. Please take it down, and have it done.

At the same time, you may fetch away if you please the large dining table (substituting some other, on loan, in its place) and the rosewood Card tables from the best bedroom. These to have such repair, as they need.

I also wish the Console glass from Devonshire Terrace, to be taken away, for the following purpose:

The maker of the Bookcase will have learnt from Mr. Austin that that side of it which will be opposite to the windows of the study, is to have two recesses in it, instead of one, on account of our having altered the position of the proposed doorway. Now, midway between these two recesses, I wish this looking-glass to be let into the bookcase—of course without its gilt frame. The bookshelves all round it being finished off in mahogany, it will be in a mahogany frame, and built in on all four sides with the books; the bookshelves below it (two rows, probably for rather large books) being finished off at the top with a mahogany slab, so that there will be a shelf before the looking-glass, as in the case of a chimney piece; and the centre and higher part of the Bookcase being over it, on account of the glass being itself in the middle of that side of the room.

I shall be glad to know that you quite understand this.

As dispatch is very important to me with a view to my avocations, I have to request that no time may be lost in executing this work and I rest on your assurance that it shall be promptly done. The ornamental papering of the drawing room, of course cannot be executed until the glasses are fixed: nor can I get at my books (at present packed in a number of boxes) until they can be arranged on their shelves.

Yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To MESSRS W. S. BURTON,[†1] [27 SEPTEMBER 1851]

Mention in To Austin, 28 Sep 51.

Complaining about their not delivering picture-rods to Tavistock House.

To W. H. WILLS, 27 SEPTEMBER 1851

MS Huntington Library. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs | Twenty Seventh September 1851.

My Dear Wills.

I send this by Topping who comes to town, partly for H.W. and partly for me, and whose costs and charges I shall divide between the two concerns.

I have gone through Mr. Sala's paper,[†1] and have cut a great deal out, and made it compact and telling. I wish you would see him and tell him that I have kept it as close as I could to his title—not because the omitted parts were bad (indeed they are very good) but because they refer to used-up aspects of the subject. It had better go into the next No.

There is nobody about us whom we can use, in his way, more advantageously than this young man. It will be exceedingly desirable to set him on some subjects. I will endeavour to think of a few, suited to him. Suggest to him Saturday night in London, or London Markets—Newport Market, Tottenham Court Road, Whitechapel Road (where there are the most extraordinary men holding forth on Saturday night about Corn Plaister—the most extraordinary things sold, near Whitechapel Workhouse—the strangest Shows—and the wildest cheap Johns)—the New Cut &c &c &c. I think he would make a capital paper out of it.[†2]

I enclose a curious chip from Peter Cunningham.[†3]

Also a note and cutting[†4] from Jerrold. You might get hold of the man. Mr. Sala would do him, capitally.[†5] Scott of the Advertizer[†6] will give you any information that he possesses, if you ask in my name.

I want Miss Jewsbury's paper.[†7] I must read it myself, and write to her.

Topping returns early tomorrow morning. If he should not find you when he brings this, he shall arrange with Callaghan that he will call at the office for anything you have to send, tomorrow Morning at 8.

I have not thought of anything yet. But I hope to cudgel something out of myself yet.[†8].

Faithfully Always

CD.

W. H. Wills Esquire

To HENRY AUSTIN, 28 SEPTEMBER 1851*

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Sunday Twenty Eighth September | 1851.

My Dear Henry.

I perfectly understood your note in reply to mine.

The defaulter in the matter of the Picture Rods (ordered both for the dining room and the landing) is Burton of Oxford Street; to whom I yesterday indited and sent by special messenger, a fulminating epistle that I have no doubt will instantly produce them.

Kate thinks two shelves will be best, in the Pantry.

I have told the Pantechnicon people[†1] to submit a pattern or two for the tops of the glasses in the drawing room, to your inspection—just to make sure that they do nothing objectionable.

I am going to run down to Chatsworth to see the best of Dukes, on Wednesday next; returning on Saturday. If I MAY[†2] come to the house on that day, I will consult Bradshaw, and appoint to meet you there. After which we might perhaps dine Orientally?[†3] But if you desire me to keep my distance, I am profoundly submissive.

Will you tell me (either by return, or by Tuesday's post) whether or no we shall foregather on Saturday.

Affectionately Ever | And meekly now,

CHARLES DICKENS

Henry Austin Esquire.

To PETER CUNNINGHAM, 28 SEPTEMBER 1851

Extract in American Art Association catalogue, May 1925; MS 1 p.; dated Broadstairs, Kent, Sunday, Twenty Eighth September 1851.

My dear Cunningham. I am very much obliged to you for the interesting and curious "chip" you have so kindly sent me. I have called it Superstitious Murder.[†4]

To THE DUKE OF DEVONSHIRE, 28 SEPTEMBER 1851

MS Devonshire Collections, Chatsworth. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Sunday Twenty Eighth September | 1851.

My Dear Duke of Devonshire.

Your kindest of letters was forwarded to me here, this morning. I am in the first throes of a new book, and am spasmodically altering and arranging a new house besides,—and am walking by the sea every day, endeavouring to think of both sets of distraction to some practical end,—but the prospect of renewing, even for a day, an intercourse which is perfectly delightful to me, makes everything else fade out of my view. I shall look forward to the happiness of coming down to Chatsworth by the train that leaves London at a quarter past ten on Thursday Morning—returning in good time on Saturday, when I am obliged to be in town.

Mrs. Dickens and her sister beg me to say how much honored and gratified they are by your kind remembrance, and how hard they find it to resist your flattering invitation. But Mrs. Dickens being not quite hardy enough at present to travel so fast, they are obliged (with a very bad grace) to deny themselves the enjoyment of the great pleasure you offer.

I heard from Lord Carlisle that you had been very unwell,[†1] and should have made bold to write to you but that I was really fearful of troubling you. Meanwhile I have thought and talked of you, so often, that I have insensibly seemed to be doing something (without exactly knowing what) to keep myself in your remembrance.

This, I can safely affirm—that I continually come, in the spirit, into your room at Devonshire House, and add to that stock of noble and winning remembrances with which it will always be inseparably associated in my mind, and which is always enlarging.

My Dear Duke of Devonshire | Yours ever faithfully and obliged

CHARLES DICKENS

The | Duke of Devonshire.

To THE HON. MISS EMILY EDEN, 28 SEPTEMBER 1851

Text from MDGH, III, 128-9 with additional extract in Autograph Prices Current, VI, 52(aa).

[a]Broadstairs, | Sunday, Twenty Eighth September 1851.[a]

My Dear Miss Eden,

Many thanks for the grapes; which must have come from the identical vine a man ought to sit under.[†2] They were a prodigy of excellence.

I have been concerned to hear of your indisposition, but thought the best thing I could do, was to make no formal calls when you were really ill.[†3] I have been suffering myself from another kind of malady—a severe, spasmodic, house-buying-and-repairing attack[a] (I have made three attempts to write the word plainly)[a]—which has left me extremely weak and all but exhausted. The seat of the disorder has been the pocket.

I had the kindest of notes from the kindest of men this morning, and am going to see him on Wednesday. Of course I mean the Duke of Devonshire. Can I take anything to Chatsworth for you?[†1]

Very faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To F. M. EVANS, [?29 SEPTEMBER 1851]

Mention in next. Date: probably written the same day.

To W. H. WILLS, 29 SEPTEMBER 1851†

MS Huntington Library. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Monday Twenty Ninth September 1851.

My Dear Wills.

The "sparkling" Muse[†2] has not been at all propitious. I didn't like Rising with the Subject—put it away. Began another paper called a Steam Soliloquy—didn't like that either, and put it away too.[†3] Today I have begun another, called Our School—like that better, but don't know when I may be able to finish it—doubt doing so, tomorrow, for next No.—can't say—may be—may not.

I have had such an affectionate note of invitation from the Duke, that I can't help running down to Chatsworth, howsoever short the time I can spare for the purpose. I shall go down on Thursday, and return on Saturday. If you have no engagement in the way, let us dine at the office at ½ past 5 on Wednesday next,—the day after tomorrow. We can dine, arrange the No., and break up the meeting, in two or three hours. I shall want the evening after 9 o'Clock, and cannot make any other appointment.

[†a]I have written to Evans, on both the points.[†a]

The Guild matters we will dispose of on Wednesday.

The paper you mention, is (as I told you, but you have forgotten) in the left hand drawer of my writing table at the office. The case has been examined, but no such note can be found here.

Faithfully Ever

CD.

To MADAME CELESTE, [?JULY-SEPTEMBER 1851]

Mention in American Book Prices Current, No. 80 (1975). Date: probably during her reappearance at the Adelphi in The Green Bushes and other melodramas, 17 July-22 Sep 51 (see To Stone, 26 Aug 51).

Requesting a box for some friends.

To JOHN FORSTER [?LATE SEPTEMBER 1851]

Text from F, VI, vi, 541. Date: "not . . . many days" after close of Forster's Broadstairs visit,[†1] according to him, hence late Sep.

I very nearly packed up a portmanteau and went away, the day before yesterday, into the mountains of Switzerland, alone![†2] Still the victim of an intolerable restlessness, I shouldn't be at all surprised if I wrote to you one of these mornings from under Mont Blanc. I sit down between whiles to think of a new story, and, as it begins to grow, such a torment of a desire to be anywhere but where I am; and to be going I don't know where, I don't know why; takes hold of me, that it is like being driven away. If I had had a passport, I sincerely believe I should have gone to Switzerland the night before last. I should have remembered our engagement—say, at Paris, and have come back for it; but should probably have left by the next express train.

October

To HENRY AUSTIN, 1 OCTOBER 1851*

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs | First October 1851. | Wednesday

My Dear Henry.

NO. 1.—BELLS[†3]

In the best bedroom, I think I would have the bell ringing downstairs, by the bedside. The bed will be where you have marked it. In all other bedroom cases, I would either have it by the door, or by the fireplace, as may be most convenient in the hanging. A bell from the best bedroom to the Nursery (front)—and a bell from outside the dining room door to the Nursery (front) and also from outside the drawing room door to the Nursery (front).

NO. 2. KITCHEN RANGE.[†1]

The infamous Burton shall receive instructions to send you the dimensions instantly.

NO. 3. WIREWORK.[†1]

By no means necessary. But I think I would have one bar, by way of Rail.

NO. 4. BATHROOM[†1]

I would decidedly partition off the W.C. I am quite aware that the two conveniences of B and W.C. could never be in use together—nor need they be—as any person in extremity could fly to the Hall for shelter. But I think (as a matter of sentiment) the Bather would be happier and easier in mind, if the W.C. did not demonstrate itself obtrusively. I feel that I could hardly bear the box in the corner—speaking as the taker of the Shower Bath every morning. I have not sufficient confidence in my strength of mind, to think that I could begin the business of every day, with the enforced contemplation of the outside of that box. I believe it would affect my bowels. It might relax, it might confine, but I mistrust its having some influence on the happy mediocrity it is my ambition to preserve. And therefore I would mask the W.C.

[Will you let the whole of the little Window you make, open, for the sake of fresh air always pouring in?]

NO. 5. COALS.[†1]

Coals shall be sent in, tomorrow.

NO. 6. BOOKCASES.[†1]

By all means, make the second recess on the drawing room side, a dummy. A closet is really not of the least importance, nor worth the least expence, as anything it would hold can be furtively disposed in an article of furniture. Therefore, undoubtedly dummy. I don't mean the looking glass opposite and fireplace to be flush with the books. I mean it to be against the wall, and entirely built in and about with bookshelves—so that it will be in a recess formed by the bookshelves, and (of course) the depth of the bookshelves. We have a glass, so enclosed, at the Athenaeum; and it looks very pretty.

Therefore there will be no closet whatever, in the Study.

NO. 7. STAIRCASE.[†1]

The undersigned adopts the proposed unknown suggestion, with a mild and smiling confidence.

NO. 8. APPOINTMENT FOR SATURDAY.[†1]

The intense folly of the unmeaning Bradshaw, has rendered this a work of much discomfiture. My opinion is, that I can leave Chesterfield at three minutes past seven on Saturday Morning, and be due at Euston Square at a quarter to three in the afternoon, which (making allowance for being behind time) would justify me in hoping to be at Tavistock House at ½ past 3, there to wait for you. Will you consider this our appointment, unless I write from Chatsworth to make any change—which I shall not do, unless I find, when I get down there, that the perjured Bradshaw has deceived me. Any note from you, addressed to me there in the meanwhile (if you should have any occasion to write) will find me.

We dine together on Saturday, of course.

The delay of these lawyers! I am not in legal possession of the house—haven't paid the Money[†1]—haven't signed anything—never hear of anybody—dont expect to, at all.

Ever affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

Henry Austin Esquire.

Over

I send this, by John. I have come up with him (in case you want to see me) and dine at the Household Words Office, with Wills, at ½ past 5 today. Will you come? I put this in a Postscript, in case of your being gone when John arrives.

To MESSRS COUTTS & CO., 1 OCTOBER 1851

MS Private.

London, First October 1851.

Messrs. Coutts and Co.

Please to deliver my banking book to the Bearer,

CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Coutts and Co.

To MRS S. C. HALL, 1 OCTOBER 1851

MS Dickens House. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent. | October First, 1851.

My Dear Mrs. Hall.

I am only just now in possession of your note and books.[†2]

The article[†3] was not written by me. I am very sorry that your name was not mentioned in that evidently hasty list;[†4] nor do I now see how I can remedy the omission, as the subject is (for the present at all events) closed. If I had seen that part of the Article in proof, I think it would have struck me that the words "and some others" included some distinguished others who had better have been mentioned if any names were[†1]—but as Fate would have it, that last page was not written when I read it.

I will not fail to read the book you commend to me,[†2] which I shall approach with the liveliest faith in your healthy and cordial spirit, and which my children are now devouring with great delight. My little girls had read it before.

It is but right that I should say that I am sure the writer of the paper would have desired to do you all manner of justice, and would be much concerned if he knew of your note. As you have marked it Private, however, I do not feel myself justified in shewing it to him without your permission.

Mrs. Dickens and Georgina unite in kind remembrances to yourself and Hall. Believe me always

Very faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

I will not lose an opportunity of repairing the fault.

To MRS CHARLES DICKENS, 2 OCTOBER 1851

MS British Museum.

Chatsworth. | Thursday Night Second October 1851. | Twelve o'Clock.

My Dearest Kate. As I see little chance of being able to write tomorrow (if the Duke executes but half his intentions in respect of shewing me the place) I take the precaution, before going to bed, of scratching off the present report of myself as in a high state of preservation—now in a state bedchamber of enormous dimensions, with a bedstead like a brocaded and golden Temple—without the slightest idea of anything beyond me but corridors and staircases innumerable. Two old ladies staying in the house, and two gentlemen—one, the Doctor in ordinary.[†3] Delayed at Chesterfield by its being race time and no horses to be got—and not here until nearly 8. Purpose leaving at 7 on Saturday morning, and leaving town on Sunday by a train at half past 10, which gets to Ramsgate at 10 minutes past 3. Perhaps you will come over for me.

So with best love to Georgina and the darlings, I am now going to bed, intending to add a line to this, tomorrow.

Friday 3 o'Clock

Just leisure to say that the place is the most wonderful thing in the world, and that the principal Fountain is just twice the height of the Great Horse Shoe Fall at Niagara[†1]—which gives a general notion of the scale on which matters are managed.

Ever affecy.

CD.

To SYDNEY WILLIAMS, 4 OCTOBER 1851

Mention in Samuel T. Freeman & Co. catalogue, Sep 1933; MS 1 p.; dated London, 4 Oct 51.

Regarding payment made by Tauchnitz.[†2]

To HENRY AUSTIN, 5 OCTOBER 1851*

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Sunday Fifth October 1851.

My Dear Henry.

As I have not ordered a stove for the Study, of the infamous Burton, I think (apprehensive of another Meeting of the Partners) that Cubitts had better fix one there—not a very expensive one—a good sensible study-stove—grate, low—fire, good and bright.

We understand that we decide to abandon the little slab-tables to the side-glasses.

Also, not to countermand anything in the bookcase, for the sake of the position of the glass, if it be already in hand. If otherwise, we will certainly have it between the two recesses.

Will you kindly impress upon the slow perceptions of the Pantechnicon, the VITALITY OF EXPEDITION?[†3] It really becomes of the most serious importance to me, to get into my Study.

Supposing I came up on Saturday for a Morning Inspection of the Premises, would you run back with me—do you think—and stay 'till Monday or so.

I have driven them wild here (in five minutes,—being only just returned) with my prodigious accounts of the triumphant progress of the works!

In haste | Ever affecy.

CD.

To HENRY AUSTIN, 6 OCTOBER 1851*

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent | Sixth October 1851.

My Dear Henry

As you will very likely see the bewildered Pantechnicon soon, I send you a facetious list of letterings for the backs of the dummy books. I suppose these will be sufficient (being some hundred and thirteen in No.), but if they want more,[†1] they can have more. If they want less, they had better omit some of the sets—such as Cats' lives in 9 volumes.[†2] They are all supposed to be single Volumes, except when otherwise specified.

—A letter box with a glass back, in the street door. Is it ordered? I cannot quite remember.

Ever affecy.

CD.

If the Pantechnicon is not perfectly confident of doing the book-backs properly, my Binder would do them in no time.

To THOMAS BEARD, 6 OCTOBER 1851

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | Morning Herald Office | Shoe Lane | London. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent | Sixth October 1851. Monday

My Dear Beard.

I am getting quite uneasy about you. I have a misgiving that I may be obliged to leave here on the 20th. to look after our new house in town—for I am wild to begin a new book—and can't, until I am settled—and have all manner of workmen, scooping, grooving, chiseling, sawing, planing, dabbing, puttying, clinking, hammering, and going up ladders apparently with no earthly object but that of staying there until dinner time, every day. Here has Horne been[†3] (with a guitar) bathing at "Dumblegap",[†4] the flesh-colored Horror of maiden ladies. Here has Forster been and gone, after patronizing with suavity the whole population of Broadstairs, and impressing Tom Collin[†5] with a profound conviction that he (F) did the Ocean a favor when he bathed. Here likewise has Mrs. Horne been, full of beauty. Also Wills, with a frosty nose and a dribbling pretence of Shower-Bath.

Likewise—but never mind who has been—you have not been—and Catherine begins to think you must have been at Somebody's wedding, and got a chill.[†1]

When ARE you coming?[†2]

Ever affecy.

CD.

To JOSEPH C. KING, 6 OCTOBER 1851*

MS Mr Robert D. Fellman. Address: Favored by Harry Ingersoll Esquire | Joseph C. King Esquire | 9 Northwick Terrace | St. Johns Wood | London. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent | Sixth October 1851.

My Dear Sir

This will introduce to you, Mr. Ingersoll,[†3] the American gentleman in reference to whom I have already communicated with you. I have expressed to Mr. Ingersoll something of my trust in you, and of my gratitude to you for your unwearied and discriminating interest in your pupils. I have told him how much I am your debtor for your training of Charley, and I have recommended his son to your care on the best of grounds.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Joseph C. King Esquire.

To THE SECRETARY OF THE GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY,[†4] [EARLY OCTOBER 1851]

Mention in To Wills, 6 Oct 51.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?6 OCTOBER 1851]

Mention in To Wills, 6 Oct.

To RICHARD WOOD,[†5] 6 OCTOBER 1851

MS Mr W. A. Foyle. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Sixth October 1851. Monday

Sir.

By this post, I send Mr. Wills a ground-plan of the garden of Tavistock House, as I wish it done. If you will see him without loss of time, he will give it to you, and explain it beyond any possibility of misconception. I do not bear in my mind the Poplar-Trees you mention in your letter to me (which I should have answered sooner, but for having been in Derbyshire) but if you will send me, here, your estimate by Wednesday night's post, I will write to you appointing to meet you at Tavistock House on Saturday, and we can then decide that point on the spot. I wish the paths drained, but I must refer your manner of doing so, to my brother in law Mr. Austin of the Board of Health who is directing the repairs of the house for me, and has just put the House-Drainage into a perfect condition. He will be there with me, on Saturday. I wish your Estimate, if you please, to state what cost would be saved by transplanting such things as you have considered fit to be transplanted, from Devonshire Terrace. I also wish it to mention the utmost length of the time you would require for the work,—as punctuality and dispatch are conditions on which I invariably rest in all transactions, and for which I always stipulate. I would on no account have anything done, near me or for me, that failed in these particulars. I attach such paramount importance to them that I think it indispensable to impress this upon you, as the first feature of any contract[†1] I make.

If you will have the goodness to forward me your Estimate (as nearly as you can make it) on this understanding, I will conclude the matter with you on Saturday, one way or other.

CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Richard Wood.

To W. H. WILLS, 6 [OCTOBER] 1851

MS Huntington Library. On mourning paper. Date: CD's error for 6 Oct: see last, To Wood.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Monday September Sixth, 1851.

My Dear Wills.

Let me have a note of what you propose for the next No.[†2]—reserving the History of England for the No. afterwards.[†3] Let us have the best Nos., now, that we possibly can have. [†a]Also let[†4] me see a made-up Proof.[†a]

Morley's Gold[†5] requires looking over, for a little carelessness here and there—the repetition of buts and howevers &c.

In Horne's ballooning,[†6] always insert "Mr." before "Green".[†7] [†b]Also insert "Mr." before "Poole", and call him the well-known Author.[†b†8] At the end of the third paragraph from the commencement, instead of "fanatical sentence[†b] was carried into execution",—[†b]read "Sentence of the Holy Catholic Church was carried into Christian execution."[†1]

I think of deciding to return to town on the 20th.—perhaps remaining a week or so at the office, before I remove my furniture, and restore the second floor room. Therefore, any time after that, (you are getting up in the meanwhile all the preliminary part of the subject) you may appoint with the Pawnbroker.[†2] On Saturday the 25th. we had better dine at the office—with Morley, Horne, and (I suppose) Forster—to decide upon the form and idea of the Christmas No. I think it would be well to let Morley and Horne know beforehand what we are going to meet for; as they might then have some suggestion to make. On second thoughts Monday the 27th. might be better. The Saturday might be required for the Pawnbroker.

[†c]In The London Tavern,[†3] dele "the Actor", after "Mr. Macready".[†c†4]

I wish Forster to try the marking of the Extracts. I write to him to that effect, and inform him that you will let him know when it must always be done.

GUILD.[†5]

I return Proofs of the bills,[†6] now to be referred to Mr. Chute.

Will you write Webster a note, asking for Miss Young and Mr. and Mrs. Coe,[†7] on the Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday?

I have not yet got Coe's Property List, and consequently cannot instruct Mr. Chute, as to the Furniture we shall want hired.

I have written to the Secretary of the Great Western.

Nathan's bill, I will look over and refer to Mark.

PERSONAL.[†5]

I have told the Gardener to see you, and you will explain to him exactly what I want done at Tavistock House. He will then make an estimate of the probable cost, and send it to me. On a separate piece of paper, I make a rough plan, which I hope you may comprehend [†d]without difficulty.[†d]

Faithfully Always

CD.

W. H. Wills, Esquire.

I have told the Gardener, in writing to him for his estimate, that punctuality and dispatch are conditions on which I always insist. Will you bear testimony to him that I usually am in earnest on these heads?

To HENRY AUSTIN, 7 OCTOBER 1851

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Seventh October 1851.

My dear Henry.

O! O! O! Damn[†1] the Pantechnicon. O!—

I will be at Tavistock House at 12 on Saturday, and there will wait for you until I see you. If we return together—as I hope we shall—our Express will start at ½ past 4, and we ought to dine (somewhere about Temple Bar) at 3.

The infamous Burton[†1] says the Stoves[†2] shall be fixed tomorrow.

O! If this were to last long—the distraction of the new book—the whirling of the story through one's mind, escorted by workmen—the Pantechnicon's[†1] imbecility, the wild necessity of beginning to write, the not being able to do so—the—O!—I should go—O!—

Ever affecy.

CD.

Henry Austin Esquire. P.S. None. I have torn it off.[†3]

To ROBERT LATTIMER,[†4] 7 OCTOBER 1851*

MS Carlisle Public Library. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Seventh October 1851.

Sir.

I am only just now in the receipt of your letter, addressed to me on behalf of your Soirée Committee.[†5] I have been absent elsewhere—I hope not seriously to your inconvenience.

It is with real regret that I am obliged to reply that the many demands upon my time, render compliance with your request absolutely impossible. Cordially interested as I am in your prosperity, I am obliged to decline the gratification you propose to me.

Rely upon it, I am not likely ever to be in the neighbourhood of your Institution without coming to see it and its staunch promoters[†1]—to whom I beg you to convey my friendly remembrances and regards.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Robert Lattimer

To EMILE DE LA RUE, 8 OCTOBER 1851*

MS Berg Collection. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Eighth October 1851.

My Dear De la Rue.

I have some friends staying here,[†2] and greatly fear I may not be able to get to town within a week. But, as it is quite clear to me that you will be perpetually and constantly coming backwards and forwards in future,[†3] I shall hope, on the occasion of your next visit, to welcome you to my own house, and instal[†4] you in my own Den.

Give my best regards to Madame De la Rue.—If I should get away from here before you leave the regions of Jermyn Street,[†5] of course I shall look after you—but, our friends only arriving to day, I fear it is not likely.

I suppose you came over this last time, in four and twenty hours or so?

Ever Cordially Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To W. H. WILLS, 8 OCTOBER 1851*

MS Huntington Library. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Wednesday Eighth October | 1851.

My Dear Wills. I write in the greatest haste, to save a train.

I undertook in a solemn manner, so to correct this story[†6] as to endeavour to shew Mrs. Marsh what I considered its faults of detail to be. I have not got the beginning of the second part,[†7] most unfortunately, but I will go over it in the Proof. You must be extraordinarily particular that all my corrections in the part going into the next No. are made with scrupulous accuracy. Of the rest, send me a revise, and I will go over it with care.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To W. H. WILLS, 8 OCTOBER 1851*

MS Huntington Library. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs | Wednesday Night | Eighth October 1851.

My Dear Wills

I have but a moment, before the Post leaves, to impress upon you that I implicitly rely on your going over my corrections in Mrs. Marsh—revise and proof[†1]—with the utmost care. I can think of no better name for the London Tavern than that plain one.[†2]

You feel quite sure that it is safe to mention Hertz in that way? I am anything but sure. I think it would be best to have no Chip,[†3] and put in the Garden by the River[†4] instead. My mind misgives me that Botheration would come of this.[†5]

I will write tomorrow. | Ever Faithfully

CD.

To THOMAS BEARD, 9 OCTOBER 1851

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | Morning Herald Office | Shoe Lane | London. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs. | Thursday Ninth October 1851.

My Dear Beard.

We shall be delighted to see you on Monday. But we only receive you on the condition that you don't think of leaving us until that day week. Our return to town involves no preparation whatever, as only Catherine and I are going—none of the rest, yet awhile.

You will find Pump (Stone) mooning about here, and also Egg. They are at present in a fearful state of idleness in the Drawing Room—lying on their faces, on their backs, on their sides, on their heads—flushed, tousled, and crumpled with intensest laziness—on a regular straight-down, misty, steady, lead-colored wet day.

Ever affecy

CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 9 OCTOBER 1851

MS Morgan Library. Address: To be forwarded | Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street | Piccadilly | London. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Thursday Ninth October 1851.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

Until within these few days, I have heard nothing in the way of Ship-recommendation from my friend the Registrar of Merchant Seamen.[†1] But at last I am happy to say I have his strongest possible recommendation of a ship that sails on the 25th. As she was beset by gold-seekers, mad to get a passage on any terms, he caused three berths to be reserved, as soon as he knew of her certainly going. I have now paid for them—£ 45—and I hope we shall export these lingering Three in safety.

There has been some small commotion—but not much—at Shepherds Bush; Mr. Tracey's last girl demanding to go; and the Irish girl shewing a very national incapability of getting on with anybody on any subject—accompanied with expressions of a violent desire to "do for" the establishment in general. The Irish girl is accordingly discharged as incurable; but Mr. Tracey's girl being extremely penitent, and most earnestly imploring (when it came to the point) not to be sent away, remains on her good behaviour. I have taken a new case from the Field Lane Ragged School,[†2] and have rejected another, in which it was quite clear to me that the girl would never go abroad. I have also (I hope) paved the way for the supply of more cases from that source, when we want them. Mrs. Morson and Mrs. Macartney go on zealously, and in a business-like way.

I have no news—except that I am three parts distracted and the fourth part wretched, in the agonies of getting into a new house—Tavistock House, Tavistock Square. Pending which desirable consummation of my troubles, I can not work at my new book—having all my notions of order turned completely topsy-turvy. I hope when you come back you will find us settled, and me hard at work—and will approve, both the tangible house and the less substantial Edifice.

I have excellent accounts of Charley at Eton, who was the best of boys at home here all the holidays through. I think of leaving here for town about the 20th of this month, and shall then go down and see him.

As for you, I suppose you are full of the change, novelty, and delight of travelling,[†3] and feel an elevated pity for the captives on a poor Cliff like this. Mrs. Brown, I take it for granted, agrees with Dr.

Skey,[†4] in reference to all the Institutions you examine. I wish I were with you, to help the general unanimity! Pray remember me kindly to both of them and to Mr. Brown, and believe me Dear Miss Coutts

Ever Most Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To THE HON. SPENCER LYTTELTON, 9 OCTOBER 1851*

MS Morgan Library. Address: The Hon. Spencer Lyttelton | 2 Rue de la Ville l'Eveque | Paris. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Thursday Ninth October | 1851.

My Dear Lyttelton.

All sorts of congratulations on the wadded condition of that important part of your dress![†1] When I received the former welcome intelligence from you, I immediately wrote to you at Dover. You didn't say where you were going at that port of Albion, but I concluded to the Ship.[†2] So I wrote to the Ship. A few weeks ago, happening to go to the Ship myself, says the Landlady to me, "Dear me Sir, why there's a letter with your name outside, been lying in the Bar this length of time!" Says I to the Landlady, "As it is clear to me that the gentleman will not be here to receive it, now, will you do me the favor to return it to me?" She assenting, I opened and perused it—and it read surprisingly flat, under the circumstances.

I am afraid that there is no chance of a country-holiday for me in November of this year. I am just beginning a new book, and am horribly put out by the anguish of moving—(to Tavistock House, Tavistock Square). Our new abode is at present in the possession of an army of workmen, who terrify me to that degree that when I go to town, I peep at the house round a corner and run away. They are continually going up ladders, and never appear to me to come down again. They roll barrels of lime into the garden, and tap them by the dozen, like a sort of dusty beer. They pick at walls with iron instruments (for no reason that I can discover), and the walls fall down. They talk of "compoing" everything. They stand on scaffolds, whistling, in the most sacred chambers. There is no privacy anywhere. Yesterday week, I saw a hairy Irishman cultivating mortar with spade-husbandry in the room I am to write in!

You may faintly picture to yourself how low this makes the undersigned, who is accustomed to keep everything belonging to him in a place of its own, and to sit in the midst of a system of Order. He is at present unable to compass the idea of enjoyment at Rockingham—of peaceable invention in his own room—of anything but idiotic bewilderment with his hands in his pockets—from which the wadding flies by the whole fleece. This is his present condition. Summoning his utmost strength of mind, for begging to be remembered to Mrs. Spencer Lyttelton[†3] very cordially, and for adding that his wife and her sister unite in their regards, he lapses into an imbecility too complete to admit of his signing his name at full length—being unequal (from prostration) to the performance of the necessary flourish.

C.D.

To W. H. WILLS, 9 OCTOBER 1851

MS Huntington. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Thursday Ninth October 1851.

My Dear Wills. Perhaps you will answer the enclosed letters. To Miss Bunbury,[†1] I should be inclined to say that we don't want her papers, and that I cannot undertake the responsibility of mediating in such a matter with any other Editor. Mr. Keith[†2] you will perhaps appoint to see yourself. If his proposal involves my sitting to anybody, acceptance is quite out of the question.

Market Gardens near London, is a fine subject. Chadwick can open the way to a first-rate Market Gardener, if you will consult him in my name. This is another subject you might get ready by the time of my return.[†3]

I purpose being at the office between 1 & 2 on Saturday. If Erasmus Wilson[†4] should call, will you see him? I understand he has something to communicate.[†5]

Mrs. Marsh's[†6] story will be very good now, I think. It would be as easy (almost) to write one, as I found it to get point and terseness out of such an infernal hash.

I think I have no more to say, today—except that the Gardener[†7] has sent a very business-like, prompt, plain, and not unreasonable estimate.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To MISS MARY BOYLE, 10 OCTOBER 1851

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Tenth October 1851.

My Dear Miss Boyle.

Your remembrance at such a time—not thrown away upon me, trust me—is a sufficient assurance that you know how truly I feel towards you, and with what an earnest sympathy I must think of you now.[†8]

God be with you! There is indeed nothing terrible in such a death—nothing that we would undo—nothing that we may remember otherwise than with deeply thankful, though with softened, hearts.

Kate sends you her affectionate love. I enclose a note from Georgina. Pray give my kindest remembrances to your brother Cavendish, and believe me now and ever.

Faithfully Your friend

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Mary Boyle.

To THE DUKE OF DEVONSHIRE, 10 OCTOBER 1851

MS Devonshire Collections, Chatsworth. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Tenth October 1851.

My Dear Duke of Devonshire.

As I travelled from Chesterfield in the Railway Carriage, I read the little book[†1] I now return, with a pleasure I can scarcely express to you. It was so like going over the house again with you, and hearing you talk about it, that it had a perfect charm for me. And besides this, I found it in itself so natural and unaffected, so gracefully sensible, and altogether so winning and so good, that I read it through, from the first page to the last, without once laying it aside.

I could mention some things in it which it would require a very nice art to do as well in fiction. The little suggestive indications of some of the old servants,[†2] and old rooms[†3]—and the childish associations—are perfect little pieces of truth. I know that lingering old smell of the spirit lamp, for instance, so well![†4]

The American Hobbs[†5] could do nothing so agreeable or a thousandth part so agreeable with any Lock in the world, as you have done with that lock wherein the man's hat must be pulled over his eyes. It is quite a spring-description. Touched in the right place and done with.[†6]

I meant to have told you how much I was moved by the tribute to Paxton—rendered with such a generous and noble earnestness.[†7] But I am afraid you would begin to think me a victim to the habit of authorship, and remorselessly inflicting on you a regular Review of the book.

I must, however, thank you from my heart for all your kindness and hospitality, and assure you that among your "Troops of friends",[†1] there cannot be one more obliged to you and attached to you than I am. I feel as if there were a sort of boastfulness in writing as much, even for your eye, but I cannot help it.

My Dear Duke of Devonshire | Ever Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

The | Duke of Devonshire.

To AUGUSTUS TRACEY, 10 OCTOBER 1851*

MS University of Texas. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Friday Tenth October 1851.

My Dear Tracey.

Many thanks for your Report. I had heard of the matter from Mrs. Morson, and had thoroughly agreed with you in all particulars, beforehand.

I purpose returning to town in about a fortnight, and—after convulsions of moving: which may be expected to last for about another fortnight—to settle down in our new abode, Tavistock House Tavistock Square. I have made it mine for fifty years, and have turned in an army of Cubitt's workmen this month or so.

Then, I hope we shall see more of you and of Mrs. Tracey.[†2] We have been laid up in ordinary[†3] here, these six months. All the Nations of the Earth brought letters of introduction to me in London—and there was nothing for it but Flight.

Faithfully Yours ever
CHARLES DICKENS

To SYDNEY WILLIAMS, 10 OCTOBER 1851*

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Friday Tenth October 1851.

Dear Sir

As I am not quite certain when I may be in town, and as I do not like to defer any business in which my good friend Mr. Tauchnitz is interested, perhaps you will have the kindness to write to me here. I will give immediate attention to your explanation on his behalf.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Sydney Williams Esquire.

To F. M. EVANS, 12 OCTOBER 1851

MS Dickens House. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent | Sunday Twelfth October 1851.

My Dear Evans.

I send on the other side a sketch of a Bill-Advertisement for all the Magazines.[†1] Will you consider whether it is best left so, or whether it would be well to add, at the close, "the first Number will appear, early in the new year"?[†2]

As I never get a moment's respite from the convulsions incident to my present severe attack of Tavistock House, but am perpetually falling out of one fit into another, I can by no means get to work. But I hope by vigorous exertions to get settled in three weeks or so, and then go at it Ding-Dong.

Consider the advertisement well.

Faithfully Yours always

CD.

To W. H. WILLS, 12 OCTOBER 1851*

MS Huntington Library. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Sunday Twelfth October 1851.

My Dear Wills.

I enclose the Guild Cheques, signed. Tomorrow, I will get to work at the Child's History.[†3]

When you have pursued that five hundred "drop"[†4] to its source, I shall be glad to know what you make of it. I think our "Temperance" subscribers may perhaps have had something to do with it.[†5]

Faithfully Always

CD.

To [WILLIAM JACKES][†6], [?13 OCTOBER 1851]

Mention in next.

To HENRY AUSTIN, 13 OCTOBER 1851*

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Monday Thirteenth October | 1851.

My Dear Henry.

I enclose a Legend to be inscribed (in characters of Fire) on a conspicuous part of the side gate. There is a desolate sternness in it that makes me cold.[†1]

I have written to Nineteen and a half.—Will communicate his reply, as soon as received.

Ever affecy.

CD.

To SYDNEY WILLIAMS, 13 OCTOBER 1851*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Monday Thirteenth October | 1851.

Dear Sir

I enclose you a sketch of a memorandum of agreement, embodying the terms set forth in your letter to me of last Saturday's date on behalf of Mr. Tauchnitz.[†2] I have signed it. If Mr. Tauchnitz would prefer to have it concluded in any other terms embodying the same arrangement, I shall be happy to adopt his views.

I beg you, if you please, on receiving the remittance from Mr. Tauchnitz of the £ 100 already due, to be so good as to pay it to my account at Coutts's.

Also to assure Mr. Tauchnitz of my regard and friendship, and to beg him never to come to London without affording me the opportunity of improving my very agreeable knowledge of him.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Sydney Williams Esquire. P.S. Your letter supposes that the Volumes of Household Words are published yearly. As they are published half-yearly, I so describe them in the Memorandum.

To HENRY AUSTIN, 14 OCTOBER 1851*

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

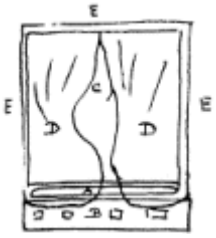
Broadstairs, Kent. | Tuesday Evening | Fourteenth October 1851.

My Dear Henry

So far from my being tired of your handwriting, my anguish is the apprehension that you will be found (by trusty messengers) lying on your back on the office-floor, exhausted by the contemplation of mine.

I have not the least objection to curtains (water-proof) in lieu of partition, on the following conditions—always entirely subject to your approval.

I append an elegant drawing



REFERENCE TO ELEGANT DRAWING[†1]

A. The Warm Bath
B. Wooden front, masking warm bath
C. Wooden back against Wall

D D. Light, cheerful-colored water proof curtains, extending the whole width of Warm Bath, and capable of being drawn close for shower

Same being hung on rings and rod appended to Centre E. E, E, E, supposed to be a wooden frame (as narrow as you please) enclosing bath and bath-space altogether.—Shower supposed to fall behind Curtains, from between the intersecting point E, and the point C.

You understand???

I don't care for the possibility of a Tepid Shower. But what I want is, a Cold Shower of the best quality, always charged to an unlimited extent, so that I have but to pull the string, and take any shower of cold water I choose. If the Redoubtable thinks this more certainly attainable by means of his separate tank I dont object to it in the least. But this is what has become a positive necessary of life to me. And without any disparagement to the Warm Bath, this, in perfection, it is my first object to secure.

I now leave it, with the most entire confidence, to you.

DRAWING ROOM.[†1]

Let us have (in the papering) panneled[†2] patterns in the wider spaces of the bow. You recollect its being left doubtful whether they should be plain or no? But I am now clear that they had better be ornamented, in case of the Curtains revealing those spaces at any time.

STUDY[†1]

I suppose the Bewildered Pantechnicon will sketch out the bookcases on the Wall, to facilitate the paper-hanging in the two designs—larger pattern (you recollect?) in the shewn Wall; smaller behind the books.

ORNAMENTS ROUND LAMPS—ON CEILING[†1]

Yes, in the Hall. No, in the Schoolroom.

19 & ½[†1],[†2]

I enclose his consent. I suppose it will cost very little—not merely to "whiten" the side of his[†3].

To THE REV. GEORGE M. MUSGRAVE,[†4] 15 OCTOBER 1851*

MS Berg Collection. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs. | Fifteenth October 1851.

My Dear Sir.

I assure you my friend Edgar[†5] has not been out of my mind. But whenever I have set myself to the consideration of that list of books we spoke of, I have been positively unable to think of one which it was not more than probable that he already knew.

We have some friends staying here this week, and I fear it is probable I may be required in town next Monday, and may not have leisure to return this year. But, if I remain, I will not fail to see my friend next week. I hope he will understand, if I do not appear, that the usual occupation of my time is greatly augmented just now by my removal, and by my very great desire to get settled in my new Home-Study that I may work the more steadily at a new book with which I hope he will soon become acquainted. The distractions consequent on this object—the employment of an army of Mr. Cubitt's workmen—the country arrangements in connexion with our Guild and Sir Edward Bulwer's comedy—and the rolling of a sea of correspondence which always flows and never ebbs—leave me less leisure than usual, though I be never so orderly. Always excepting leisure for long walks, which I consider a part of my daily life.

My Dear Sir Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Reverend George M Musgrave.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 15 OCTOBER 1851†

MS Berg Collection. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Wednesday October Fifteenth | 1851.

Dear Madam.

I regret to say in reply to your letter that I have not seen the statue of Oliver Twist,[†6] and have not been in London to do so since the receipt of your favor. Nor do I know any one whom I could with any delicacy ask to give the Artist a Commission for such a work. As to possessing it myself, you may easily imagine that I have very frequent and urgent occasion to exercise my self-denial in similar instances.

Ever Madam | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To F. M. EVANS, 16 OCTOBER 1851

MS Dickens House. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Thursday Sixteenth October | 1851.

My Dear Evans.

I think you are right as to the mention of the time. It must be fixed in the next advertisement however.

Do you think it would look simpler and plainer to dele The Pickwick Papers and Nicholas Nickleby, and leave only Copperfield as I have done in the enclosed? If you think it best to leave the whole—do so.[†1]

Faithfully Ever

CD.

[†a]Diffuse the bill as widely as possible.[†a]

To W. H. WILLS, 16 OCTOBER 1851

MS Huntington Library. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs | Thursday Sixteenth October | 1851.

My Dear Wills.

I sent the proof of The Child's History[†2] by the cheap Train.

I have been looking over the back Numbers. Wherever they fail, it is in wanting elegance of fancy. They lapse too much into a dreary, arithmetical, Cocker-cum-Walkingame[†3] dustyness that is powerfully depressing.[†4]

Faithfully Always

CD.

To HENRY AUSTIN, 17 OCTOBER 1851*

MS Morgan Library. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Seventeenth October 1851.

My Dear Henry

Certainly as to nineteen and a half.[†5] I had not the least idea of giving any direction about it. In saying "stucco", I thought I was merely repeating your intention. There is no doubt of your notion being the best.

Ditto as to Bath curtains.

O the perjured, beastly, odious, and incompetent Burton! The Imbecile pretender!! I expect to receive a vote of scornful censure from the united Partners. I cannot hope for their forgiveness.

I doubt whether we shall get on in the Nuisance Department, without a Notice.[†1] Coming after such a vast amount of dirt and neglect, I doubt it very much. But I am content to try Sir—quite content.

Catherine is gradually falling into a state of feverish imbecility as Monday draws on.[†2] The official dinners admit but of fish and joint; but Wenham Lake Ice[†3] is accessible, and we'll drink a glass of champagne to the new House, and the Illustrious Architect.[†4]

To FREDERICK POLLOCK,[†5] 17 OCTOBER 1851

MS Mr David Niven Jr. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs | Friday Seventeenth October | 1851.

My Dear Pollock

There is a project afoot for walking to Minster and back (15 miles) this morning, and chartering a Fly for the recreant portion of the company who may be basely disposed to ride one way. Will you come? If you walk there, we start at 12. If you ride there, the degrading machine will creep through the sunny air at halfpast 12.[†6]

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Frederick Pollock Esquire.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 17 OCTOBER 1851

Text from N, II, 353.

Broadstairs | Friday Seventeenth October 1851.

My Dear Sir,

Since you were so kind as to ask me (through my other half) to fix my own evening for smoking a cigar with you, I have had friends here,[†1] and have had no will of my own as to going out. They remain until Monday, when I go to town with them. It is doubtful whether I shall return this season. Under these circumstances, will you come in tomorrow evening at half past six and smoke your cigar with me?—so that I may not altogether lose you.

Faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To T. R. EELES, 21 OCTOBER 1851

Text from facsimile in Charles Ruben and J. Christian Bay, The Dummy Library of Charles Dickens at Gad's Hill Place (privately printed), 1934, pp. 13-14. On mourning paper.

Household Words Office | Tuesday Evening | Twenty First October 1851.

Dear Mr. Eeles.

There are two spaces in my new study, which I want filled with imitation backs of books. It occurs to me (especially as I wish them to be well done and with dispatch) that it might not be out of your way to do this for me;—and that you would be sure to do it infinitely better than the Cabinet Maker who makes the bookcases, I am very certain. Could you make it convenient to meet me at my new house (Tavistock House, Tavistock Square) tomorrow (Wednesday) Morning at ¼ past 10?[†2]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Eeles.

To T. R. EELES, 22 OCTOBER 1851

Text from facsimile in Charles Ruben and J. Christian Bay, The Dummy Library of Charles Dickens at Gad's Hill Place (privately printed), 1934, p. 15. On mourning paper.

Household Words Office | Wednesday Evening | Twenty Second October 1851.

Dear Mr. Eeles.

I send you the List†3 I have made for the book-backs.†4 I should like the History of a short Chancery Suit to come at the bottom of one recess, and the Catalogue of Statues of the Duke of Wellington at the bottom of the other.†1 If you should want more titles, and will let me know how many, I will send them to you.

Faithfully Yours

CD

To ELIOT WARBURTON, 23 OCTOBER 1851*

MS Miss C. I. Warburton.

Office of Household Words | Thursday Twenty Third October 1851.

My Dear Sir

Many thanks for your kind suggestion. But the subject has grown to be—may I venture to say it!—such a horrible nuisance, that I never could do anything with it, if I were to try my utmost.†2 It has become my rock ahead in life. It seems to me a very Fortunatus's†3 purse of Boredom. When we get rid of the Exhibition, we begin to grind a new edge to the question of the Building. I have been furtively lingering on the sea-shore for six months, sequestering myself from the letters of introduction of all Nations; and now the whole American Republic seems to be coming over, to talk about "Your government, in opposition to the wishes of your people, removing your Exhibition building from your public park."†4 I have not the courage to go that way in any light. It is a humiliating confession, but this is my true state.

Very faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Eliot Warburton Esquire.

To HENRY AUSTIN, 25 OCTOBER 1851

MS Morgan Library. Address (envelope, MS George Baynton): Henry Austin Esquire | Post Office | Sherborne | Dorsetshire. PM 25 Oct 51.

Office of Household Words, | Saturday Twenty Fifth October 1851.

My Dear Henry.

On the day of your departure, I thought we were going—backward—at a most triumphant pace. But yesterday we rather recovered. The painters still mislaid their brushes every five minutes, and chiefly whistled in the intervals—and the Carpenters (especially the Pantechnicon) continued to look sideways, with one eye, down pieces of wood, as if they were absorbed in the contemplation of the Perspective of the Thames Tunnel,[†1] and had entirely relinquished the vanities of this transitory world—but still there was an improvement; and it is confirmed to day. White lime is to be seen in the kitchens—faint streaks of civilization dawn in the Water Closet—the Bath Room is gradually resolving itself from an abstract idea into a fact—youthful—extremely youthful—but a fact. The drawing-room encourages no hope whatever. Nor the Study. Staircase, painted. Irish Laborers howling in the schoolroom, but I don't know why: I see nothing. Gardener vigorously lopping the trees, and really letting in the light and air. Foreman, sweet tempered but uneasy. Inimitable hovering gloomily through the premises all day, with an idea that a little more work is done when he flits, bat-like, through the rooms, than when there is no one looking on. Catherine all over paint. Mister McCann,[†2] encountering. Inimitable in doorways fades obsequiously into areas, and there encounters him again, and swoons with confusion. Several reams of blank paper constantly spread on the drawing-room walls, and sliced off again—which looks like insanity. Two men still clinking at the new stair rails. I think they must be learning a tune; I cannot make out any other object in their proceedings.

Since writing the above, I have been up there again, and found the young paperhanger putting on his slippers, and looking hard at the walls of the servants' room at the top of the house, as if he meant to paper it one of these days. May Heaven prosper his intentions!

When do you come back? I hope soon?

Ever affectionately

CD.

To THOMAS COE, 25 OCTOBER 1851*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Office of Household Words | Saturday Twenty Fifth October 1851.

Dear Mr. Coe.

We must get John or Johnson into the Drawer at Bath and Bristol, for Mr. Marston cannot play, and I shall have to beg the favor of your doing his part.[†1]

Will you let me know how many Supers you will want?

And will you bear in mind that it will be necessary for you to go down on the Sunday (as I must also) in order that we may have a careful Rehearsal of the Scenery, Properties, and Supers, at 10 on Monday Morning? The employment of new people renders this indispensable.

You will receive due notice of our Day of Rehearsal in town, in the week after next.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Coe.

To THE MAYOR OF READING,[†2] 25 OCTOBER 1851

MS Yale University Library.

Tavistock House, Tavistock Square, London.[†3] | Saturday Twenty Fifth October | 1851.

Sir.

Allow me to acknowledge the receipt of your obliging letter, and to thank you for it cordially on behalf of the gentlemen whom I represent.

I cannot decidedly say whether I could, in the execution of my trust, propose to them a performance at Reading, without begging you to give me some information on the following points.

First, the measurement of the largest room in the town, the number of seated persons it will accommodate; whether it belongs to the town or otherwise (I mean to the Corporation of Reading) and would be lent to us gratuitously or on hire. If the latter, on what terms.

Secondly, what prices you think could be safely charged on such an occasion, and what sum of money we might hope (not deducting expences) to receive.

Thirdly, whether you suggest any particular time for the purpose, or any particular night of the week?

If you will do me the favor to address your reply to me at the Office of The Guild of Literature and Art, 10 Lancaster Place, Strand, I will, immediately on its receipt, pursue the consideration of your kind proposal.[†1]

I have to apologize to you for a ridiculous difficulty in which I find myself placed. I cannot satisfy myself, on looking closely at your signature, that I read your name correctly. I therefore append an official address merely, to the present note.

I have the honor to be | Sir | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Mayor of Reading

To WILLIAM FARREN,[†2] [25] OCTOBER 1851*

MS University of Texas. Date: misdated by CD: Saturday was 25 Oct 51.

Athenaeum Club | Saturday Evening Twenty Fourth Octr. | 1851.

Sir

I have sustained a very disagreeable inconvenience at your Theatre this evening, which I wish to represent to you. Allow me to add that I do not by any means desire to do so, as one whose public position gives him any peculiar claim upon your courtesy, but as any private gentleman might.

I went in, at a little before ten o'Clock,[†3] to see the Burlesque[†4] and paid Four Shillings for a stall. I received a ticket "No. 59"—gave it to the Stall Keeper, who was perfectly quiet and untroubled at the time—entered the Stalls, and took possession of Seat No. 59. I found myself presently, the subject of a rather closer scrutiny from my neighbours than is usual, and could not account for it, until a friend of theirs came in [†a](the Drop Curtain was down the whole time)[†a] and claimed his seat, which he had occupied the whole evening. I represented that I had bought No. 59. "O!" said he—"They don't go by the numbers here!" I moved into the next seat. That was another friend's who was coming back directly. I now began to think that they ought to go by the numbers here and were not going very well, and accordingly represented my case to the money taker. After being bandied about a little between him, and somebody else, and the Stall Keeper—a kind of proceeding to which, I may remark in all good humour, I am not accustomed—I mentioned my name and requested to have my money returned to me. This was a thing not to be heard of, but I could have another stall. I replied that I did not choose to have another stall, after my unpleasant experience of two, and must request the return of my money, as the very least compensation for an annoyance I did not choose to run the risk of again. It was still among the Impossibilities of the Earth, and I therefore write to you, taking leave to represent to you (with great personal respect and admiration) that if the Stall Keeper (not "going" by his numbers) turned me loose into the stalls because I did not give him an additional shilling, he committed what would be a gross impropriety at any time, but what, at that time of night, was a monstrous imposition.

I am Sir Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

William Farren Esquire

To MRS BAKER,[†1] 28 OCTOBER 1851*

MS (in Wills's hand)[†2] Auckland Public Library.

Office of Household Words | 28 October 1851

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mrs. Baker, and begs to assure her that the demands upon his time and attention are so pressing that he is unable to peruse manuscripts with the object of merely expressing an opinion on them.

He can only therefore return the poems which Mrs. Baker was so good as to forward, with the hope that her kindly efforts on behalf of Mr. Brucks[†3] may eventually be of service to him.

To GEORGE MEREDITH,[†4] [?29 OCTOBER 1851]

Mention in next.

To T. CROFTON CROKER,[†5] 29 OCTOBER 1851

MS University of California, Los Angeles. On mourning paper.

Household Words Office | Wednesday Night | Twenty Ninth October 1851.[†6]

My Dear Sir.

I don't quite understand the Postscript to Lord Londesborough's[†7] letter—unless he refers to the Monthly Part (which possibility occurs to me as I write this), because you already have the words in the Weekly Number. I should be most happy to give either him or you any facility whatever, and am only sorry that I don't see how anything short of magic would enable me to have that pleasure, the words being already in legible type as you know.

In compliance with a rule I always observe, I do not consider myself at liberty to communicate the name of the Writer of those excellent lines without first asking his consent. I have written to him with that view, and entertain no doubt that he will immediately, and with much gratification, empower me to give you his authority for the Cannon.[†1] As soon as his reply reaches me, I will send you the shortest of notes—probably tomorrow.[†2]

I have not seen your anecdote of Belzoni,[†3] which seems to have stopped short with the gentleman who first opens the Manuscripts sent here. I have asked for it, and do not doubt that I shall have it before I write again.[†4]

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

T. Crofton Croker Esquire.

To MRS MARSH, 29 OCTOBER 1851*

MS Pickering & Chatto Ltd. Address: Mrs Marsh | Eastbury | near | Watford | Herts. On mourning paper.

Household Words Office | Wednesday Evening | Twenty Ninth October 1851.

Dear Mrs. Marsh.

I send you enclosed, in a Registered Letter, Twenty Pounds in payment for your excellent and affecting story. I shall be very glad if you can find it in your conscience, in acknowledging the safe receipt of the money, to relieve my mind by the assurance that however roughly I may have seemed to deal occasionally with the letter of the tale,[†5] I have not impaired its beautiful spirit.

The Manuscript is preserved, and shall be sent to you by any mode of conveyance you may point out.

Ever Dear Madam | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs Marsh.

To PETER CUNNINGHAM, 31 OCTOBER 1851

MS Dickens House.

Guild of Literature and Art, | Friday Thirty First October 1851

My Dear Cunningham.

I have received a letter from Mr. Chute[†1] our business-man at Bath & Bristol, in which he informs me that the room at Bath is already filled, and that all the Bristol tickets were sold immediately on their being issued—though the room where we perform at that city is of immense size. In this letter he so strongly urges a second performance at Bristol on the Thursday Night (Nov. 13th.)—and that the second night's receipts, as involving very slight additional expenses, will be so exceedingly important to the Guild—that I have taken on myself (being obliged to decide without delay) to pledge the company to such second representation.

I hope that this will put you to no inconvenience, as you can return to London in two or three hours on Friday Morning, or even by the Mail Train on Thursday Night if necessary.[†2]

Faithfully Yours Ever
CHARLES DICKENS xml:id="dk06.2628tm"/>[†3]

Peter Cunningham Esquire.

To [THE MAYOR OF READING],[†4] 31 OCTOBER 1851

MS University of California, Los Angeles.

Guild of Literature and Art, | Friday Thirty First October 1851.

Dear Sir

I have gone carefully over the figures which your letter and its accompanying plan present to me.

Our stage is 23 feet long. Allowing for the blank space required (for effects' sake) to be left between the footlights and the first row of seats (in which blank space I usually place the Orchestra) our stage-Carpenter will take off from the room, as available for an Audience, thirty feet. I apprehend this will leave sitting-room for 720 persons, from whom—taking half of them at 7/6 each, and half at 5/—£ 225 would be received for tickets.

If any plan could be devised by yourself and other local gentlemen to ensure the Guild, positively, £200 as the receipts for the sale of tickets, I should be happy to undertake that a Performance should take place at Reading. And in that case I would suggest Tuesday December the Ninth[†5]—the Moon being at the full, on the previous evening.

I will explain to you plainly, why I find it necessary to stipulate for this guarantee. It is not only because the expences of moving the Theatre and company, are very large (the machinery being exceedingly ingenious, and the scenes rare works of Art requiring great care) but because we have already agreed upon a certain list of excursions always combining two or three towns in one trip: which greatly lessens the charges. And I should find it difficult to induce the gentlemen associated to enter upon this separate and additional performance, on any less decisive terms.

You know far better than I can suggest, what the probabilities are, of the room being entirely full. I will merely mention that the Assembly Rooms at Bath where we act in the week after next are already pre-engaged throughout; and that [†a]all the tickets for[†a] the Victoria Rooms at Bristol (an exceedingly large place) were sold immediately on their being issued. Similar results have invariably attended our announcements in the North of England.

Allow me to add that if the plan I suggest be found impracticable, I shall still feel truly obliged to you for your kind proposal though unable to accept it.

I am Dear Sir | Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

Of course The Guild would bear all charges and expences, out of the sum I have named.

To THE HON. RICHARD WATSON, 31 OCTOBER 1851

MS Huntington Library. Address (envelope MS Robert H. Taylor Collection, Princeton): The Hon. Richard Watson | Rockingham Castle | Northamptonshire. PM 1 Nov 51.

Office of Household Words | Friday Thirty First October 1851.

My Dear Watson.

I am MOST[†1] unwilling to decline an invitation so originated and so seconded as that which you have sent me. But I fear I have no possible alternative. Besides being hard at work, I am at present in such convulsions of repairing and moving, that it takes Thirty (of Cubitt's) men to hold me. I am perfectly wild to get into my new Study (having a new book on my mind); and all the Trades of the civilised earth seem to be whistling in it, and intending to grow grey in it. In addition to these trifles, and the ordinary demands upon my attention made here, I have the Guild Army to drill and put in motion for three nights at Bath and Bristol in the week after next. Besides all this, I am asked to attend Soirées of Mechanics' Institutions (of which as you know I am a warm advocate) continually, and have, for many months past, excused myself on the ground of my many engagements. Hence, if I could even make an exception in this case (which I really do not see the possibility of doing, with the slightest reference to what I have around me and before me) I should get into no end of contradictions and inconsistencies, and a hail of additional correspondence would pour down on my devoted head immediately.

I hope you may be able to read this, but I can't see it as I write it for a tremendous cold, which has shut up my right eye—made a mere steel button of my left—communicated the lively expression of a codfish to my mouth—muffled my voice—rasped the inside of my chest with a rough file—and reduced my mental condition (as you may perceive) to one of mere drivel and imbecility.

(Each of the foregoing marks represents a sneeze which seized me at this point) Pray make my best remembrances to Mrs. Watson, and tell her that it seems so strange to me not to be coming to see you at about this time of year! Georgina and the children are still at Broadstairs, until we shall have prepared a pigeon-hole or two into which they may creep. Catherine is here with me and sends her kind love. She is all over paint, and seems to think that it is somehow being immensely useful to get into that condition. We sit in our new house all day, trying to touch the hearts of the workmen by our melancholy looks, and are patched with oil and lime and haggard with white lead. We sit upon a ladder. All the doors are always open; and there is no repose or privacy, as Irish Labourers stare in through the very slates.

Ever Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

November

To ALEXANDRE DUMAS,[†1] 3 NOVEMBER 1851

MS Yale University Library. On mourning paper.

Broadstairs, Kent. | Lundi 3 November 1851.

Mon chèr et honoré collaborateur.

J'ai eté ailleurs, à la campagne, (je vous ecris à la distance de trente-trois lieues de Londres ou je reste à present) et je n'ai pas reçu jusqu'aujourdhui, votre lettre si bienvenue, si flattante, et si charmante. Je m'empresse de repondre, et de vous assurer de tout mon coeur, que je serai enchanté de vous embrasser.

Malheureusement, je ne crois pas que je reviendrai à Londres, pour y rester, jusqu'au commencement de Decembre. Dans ce moment-ci je change mon domicile, et je me trouve parfaitement bouleversé—tous mes livres et mes meubles—tout ce que m'appartient—dispersés ici et la. Mais apres le Ier. Decembre, j'espere que je serai certainment et comfortablement etabli chez moi.

Voici ma nouvelle addresse à Londres—Tavistock House, Tavistock Square, bien proche des Hotels Victoria, et Euston, les deux hotels du chemin de fer The North Western.[†2] Je suis generalement libre, après 2 heures après midi, et je serai charmé de vous servir comme "Guide à Londres" (faute de mieux) et aussi si vous prendrez le diner chez moi (sans trouble et sans ceremonie) tous les jours de votre sejour, quand vous pourrez me donner ce plaisir-la.

Maddle. Faucit[†1] est de mes amies. Elle vient de se marier,[†2] et elle ne joue pas.[†3] Les bonnes actrices sont tres rares à Londres—plus rares qu'a Paris; et j'ai grand peur mon ami qu'à present votre protegée ne pourrait apprendre presque rien ici, excepté tout-ce qu'elle ne doit pas imiter—comme votre ami Regnier vous dira.

Dites-moi quand j'aurai la felicité de vous recevoir à Londres, et croyez-moi, mon confrere, toujours votre admirant et devoué

CHARLES DICKENS

À Monsieur | Monsr. Alexander Dumas.

To AUGUSTUS TRACEY, 4 NOVEMBER 1851*

MS University of Texas.

Shepherds Bush. | Tuesday Fourth November 1851.

My Dear Tracey.

I am very sorry to let you know that a bonnet and gown were found taken [†a]from the Wardrobe,[†a] and concealed among the dirty clothes, last Sunday. Some previous circumstances suggested to Mrs. Morson that Martha Williamson had taken them with a view of decamping. On being plainly taxed to this effect, she confessed, and professed great contrition. Observe she has some clothes of her own—wretched things, but still some rags here. And further observe that she was going to take a spare dress with her; having one on.

I heard of it this morning, and immediately came here—had her in—and discharged her. I told Mrs. Morson (before her) to keep her tonight, but to send her away at 12 tomorrow.

But I added to Mrs. Morson (of course not in presence of the girl) that if you came or sent out in the meantime personally requesting that she should have another trial, and making it known to her that it was your personal request, she was to remain beyond all question. You may have that interest in her, or that knowledge of her, or that kind-heartedness about her, that you would like to give the destitute wretch another trial. I would like to do so, but I am afraid the circumstances are very bad.[†4]

If you do wish her to remain, don't fail to communicate with Mrs. Morson before 12 tomorrow. If you should wish to see me, I shall be at the Household Words Office 16 Wellington Street North, Strand all this Evening.

Faithfully Yours Ever

CD.

To SIDNEY HERBERT,[†1] [EARLY NOVEMBER 1851]

Mention in To Miss Coutts, 17 Nov. Date: CD no doubt wrote shortly after seeing the two sisters on 5 Nov.

Asking Herbert whether his Colonization Committee would accept two sisters for emigration under their scheme.

To ROBERT TUCKER,[†2] 8 NOVEMBER 1851

Text from typescript, Huntington Library.

Guild of Literature and Art, | 10, Lancaster Place, Strand, | Saturday
November 8th 1851.

Dear Sir,

I have the greatest pleasure in acknowledging the receipt of your obliging letter, and in begging you to convey my cordial thanks to the professional Members of the Bristol Academy for the Promotion of the Fine Arts[†3] for the gratifying recognition with which they have honored my friends and myself.

It may save you some trouble if I undertake to convey to the gentlemen whom I represent, the terms of the Resolution with which you have favored me. I cannot answer for them, as to their ability to pay a visit to the Institution, but I fear I can answer for myself; my time being so constantly occupied with a variety of business-details on these occasions, that I have rarely half an hour for any recreative purpose but rest.

I am Dear Sir, | Yours faithfully and obliged

CHARLES DICKENS

Robert Tucker Esquire.

To MRS CHARLES DICKENS, 10 NOVEMBER 1851

MS British Museum.

Bath. | Monday Tenth November 1851.

My Dearest Kate.

I have just time to let you know that we are all safely here, and that everything is ready and in good order—except the Wigs which, in consequence of some infernal mistake of Wilsons,[†1] have not yet come.[†2] Our address at Bristol is The Bath Hotel Clifton,[†3] where I shall hope to hear from you of the Progress of things at home. If any letter should come from me with the Reading postmark, or should come to the office (concerning which you can ask Mr. Holdsworth) send it on to me, as it will be important to the Guild.

With best love to Georgina and Mamey and Katey,

Ever affectionately

CD.

To HENRY AUSTIN, 13 NOVEMBER 1851*

MS Morgan Library.

Clifton, Thursday Thirteenth November | 1851.

My Dear Henry. The sight of your hand writing this morning, threw me into a cold perspiration—expecting the statement of the balance.[†4] I recovered, but wish it were over.

That Copperfield is mine. I thought it must be there, when I found it not sent home with my books. If you can conveniently bring it on Sunday, perhaps you will.

We had a great room at Bath but they are a horribly dull audience.[†5] Last night here, was wonderful.[†6] That great room crammed to excess, presented a most magnificent sight—the enthusiasm was prodigious—and we went wildly all through. We expect another great house tomorrow.[†7]

We are in a very good hotel, close to Brunel's unfinished Suspension Bridge[†1] and out of the smoke and filth of Bristol. My eyes are so redolent of Gas, that I can hardly see to write this. As to voice, I am a Raven. And my hair has got into that state from wigs, glue, and exhaustion, that it is more like a Ratcatcher's cage for his game—than what Mr. Rowland would call the greatest ornament of the human form.[†2], [†3]

To MRS CHARLES DICKENS, 13 NOVEMBER 1851

MS British Museum.

Clifton Thirteenth November 1851.

My Dearest Kate. I have just received your second letter, and am quite delighted to find that all is going on so vigorously, and that you are in such a methodical, business-like, and energetic state. I shall come home by the Express on Saturday morning, and shall hope to be at home between 11 and 12.

We had a noble night, last night. The room (which is the largest but one in England) was crammed in every part. The effect of from thirteen to fourteen hundred people, all well dressed, and all seated in one unbroken chamber, except that the floor rose high towards the end of the hall, was most splendid; and we never played to a better audience. The enthusiasm was prodigious; the place delightful for speaking in; no end of gas; another hall for a dressing room; an immense stage; and every possible convenience. We were all thoroughly pleased, I think, with the whole thing, and it was a very great and striking success. Tomorrow night, having the new Hardman,[†4] I am going to try the Play with all kinds of cuts, taking out, among other things, some half dozen printed pages of Wills Coffee House.[†5]

We are very pleasant and cheerful [†a](I was obliged to pitch into Stone last night, but that's nothing).[†6] Not having champagne is a great improvement. There is very little drunk, all things considered, and moderation is universal.[†a] They are all going to Matthew Davenport Hill's to lunch, this morning and to see some woods about six or seven miles off. I prefer being quiet, and shall go out at my leisure and call on Elliot[†1]. [†a]I find the Barrow[†2] who lives here (to my great astonishment)[†3] a gentleman of condition and a very agreeable man. [†a]We are very well lodged and boarded, and, living high up on the Downs, are quite out of the filth of Bristol.

I saw old Landor at Bath, who has bronchitis, [†a]and I don't think will last long.[†a†4] When he was last in town, Kenyon drove him about, by God, half the morning, under a most damnable pretence of taking him to where Walter[†5] was at school, and they never found the confounded house![†6] He had in his pocket on that occasion a Souvenir for Walter, in the form of a rather seedy Union[†7] shirt pin: which is now in my possession, and shall be duly brought home.

I am tired enough, and shall be glad when tomorrow night is over. We expect a very good house. [†a]Have you seen an advertisement of Nathan's in the Times, announcing as to be let on hire, "the Theatre that was used at Rockingham Castle by Charles Dickens Esquire and friends"?[†8] I shall wait until this trip is over, and then discard him for his pains.[†a]

Forster went up to town after the performance last night (O Heaven how hot he was!!)[†9] and promised to report to you that all was well. Jerrold is in extraordinary force. I don't think I ever knew him so humorous.[†1] And this is the whole of my news—which is [†b]little enough.[†b] I am continually thinking of the House in the midst of all the bustle, but I trust it with such confidence to you that I am quite at my ease about it.

With best love to Georgy and the girls, ever my Dearest Kate, Most affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

I forgot to say that Topham has suddenly come out as a Juggler, and swallows candles, and does wonderful things with the Poker—very well indeed, but with a bashfulness and embarrassment extraordinarily ludicrous.[†2]

To THE SECRETARY, NEW RIVER WATERWORKS,[†3] [17 NOVEMBER 1851]

Mention in To Austin, 17 Nov 51.

To WILLIAM CUBITT & CO., [17 NOVEMBER 1851]

Mention in To Austin, 17 Nov 51.

To DR WILLIAM BROWN, 17 NOVEMBER 1851*

MS Morgan Library.

London, Tavistock House Tavistock Square | Seventeenth November 1851.

My Dear Sir

As I hope it has by this time left off raining—and that Mrs. Brown has no cold—and that you are all sight-seeing all day long[†4]—I will not inflict more than half a minute's reading on you. For, as I write by this same opportunity to Miss Coutts, I need only thank you for your kind letter and the pleasure I derived from its intelligence—and wish you well home again—and beg you to give my best regards to my perpetual contradicter,[†5] who I suppose is laying up a stock of illustration and argument that will utterly defeat me for the rest of my life.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. Brown Esquire.

To MISS BUCKLEY,[†1] 17 NOVEMBER 1851*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House, Tavistock Square | Seventeenth November 1851.

My Dear Miss Buckley.

I do not at present see my way to any fresh mention of the Potteries, in Household Words,[†2] because I could only do so, serviceably, apròpos of something and as the subject arose naturally. But I will bear your letter in mind and not lose any chance of helping your good work.[†3]

Mrs. Dickens and her sister join me in best regards to your good mother and your sister.[†4] Believe me always

Very Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Buckley.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 17 NOVEMBER 1851

MS Morgan Library.

London, Tavistock House Tavistock Square | Seventeenth November 1851.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

As I was sitting down this morning to write to you, I received a letter from Mr. Brown dated Berlin, in which he gives me an account of the missing Trio that fills me with pleasure on your account.

You may perhaps have seen in the Times how one of our girls has given us a little trouble.[†5] She came from Mr. Tracey's. On a certain morning not long ago, Mrs. Morson appeared here with a report that the said girl had contrived (behind Mrs. Macartney's back) to secrete a bonnet and some clothes out of the Wardrobe room, with which she had intended to decamp—that being singled out by Mrs. Morson, and taxed as the delinquent (and I think her penetration does her great credit) she admitted her guilt, but implored not to be turned away as she was utterly destitute—&c &c. I immediately went out, and decided in my own mind, on the road, that I would act, as to this last punishment of expulsion, according to the girl's appearance and manner; and that if they inspired the least belief in her repentance, I would give her one more trial. I had her into the parlor the instant I arrived at the Home, in order that she might have no time for preparation; and, finding no extenuating circumstance in the case, but all sorts of aggravating circumstances instead—and being perfectly convinced that she was altogether imposing upon me, or trying to do it—told Mrs. Morson in her presence, that she must put her old clothes upon her and discharge her at 12 next day. But I privately added instructions to Mrs. Morson not to discharge her in rags. At six next morning, she robbed the place and made off, but was taken in the lane by a policeman, brought back, and locked up in a bedroom while Mrs. Morson once more came to me. I felt an example so indispensable that I immediately transferred her to Mr. Loaden,[†1] with instructions to Mr. L to give the girl into custody directly, take her before the Magistrate, and beg the Magistrate, quietly, to convict her summarily and so prevent trouble and noise at the Old Bailey. All this was done, and she is now undergoing two months of Mr. Tracey's severest discipline.[†2]

I hope you approve of these proceedings?

Mr. A Beckett the Magistrate[†3] wrote to me on the very same day, about a girl who had been brought before him for trying to get admission into the workhouse at an unseasonable hour. I went over to his Court, immediately, and found her to be a little country girl of 17—rather pretty—who had been deserted by her father, and had been tramping and hop-picking and vagabondizing generally, all her life. She told me the truth about herself, and I took her. She is profoundly ignorant, but very quiet, and much gentler (so far) than we could have supposed. If she can be brought to learn, I think it may turn out a strong case. At any rate, it is decidedly worth the trial.

I saw, on the same day at the same Court, as applicants for relief from the Poor box two sisters—daughters of a deceased harbor master at Ramsgate—one 30, the other 40—both young for their years, strong, stout-hearted, full of courage though unable to live by slop needle-work, and horribly reduced—of great natural cheerfulness in the midst of their misery—of excellent manners and unblemished character. All they desired was to be got abroad, and to live by their own hard work. I was so very much impressed by these women, and so deeply sensible of the pathetic contrast between their ardent desire to have such charitable aid as the other pestilent wretch had thanklessly flung away, that I was strongly impelled to take them into the Home, and try the influence of two such inmates on the rest. I did not, however, feel myself justified in making that departure from your usual plan, in your absence and without your concurrence. As I could not bear to leave them in that state without an effort, I wrote to Sidney Herbert about them, and have great hopes from the reply I have received, that his Committee[†4] will accept them, though they are not strictly within their rules.[†5] But in case they should not, would you wish me to do anything with them?

If I were not profoundly confident in your English sympathies, I should be tempted to believe that you were by this time forgetting this small Island, and debating whether it would be worth while ever to come back to it. It has fallen into a pleasant dulness since the closing of the Great Exhibition[†1]—an event for which I am fervently thankful.

I saw Charley a little while ago, who was very well and strongly praised by his tutor. He wrote home this morning for—a pound of tea (!)—and dwelt, with some enthusiasm, on the circumstance that the holidays will commence in three weeks. We are beginning to be settled in our new house (which I hope you will think a pretty one, when you do come back) and I am beginning to find my papers, and to know where the pen and ink are. For the last month, I have been drearily watching Cubitt's workmen, in strong draughts, all day. They have fled at last (thank God) from the miserable expression of my face, and Order is re-established.

I will not inflict a longer letter upon you; being already very doubtful whether you will ever get to this point. For of course you carry that Secretarial table, covered all over with correspondence and other documents, wherever you go. I always picture you as having it set up, the instant you arrive in a town, and falling to work on the spot.

Mrs. Dickens and her sister beg me to send their kind regards to you and your fellow travellers; and I am ever Dear Miss Coutts

Most Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To T. R. EELES, 17 NOVEMBER 1851

Text from MDGH, I, 269.

Tavistock House, Tavistock Square, Nov. 17th, 1851.

Dear Mr. Eeles,

I must thank you for the admirable manner in which you have done the book-backs in my room. I feel personally obliged to you, I assure you, for the interest you have taken in my whim, and the promptitude with which you have completely carried it out.

Faithfully Yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To SIR THOMAS NOON TALFOURD, 17 NOVEMBER 1851

MS Houghton Library, Harvard.

Tavistock House, Tavistock Square | Seventeenth November 1851.

My Dear Talfourd

I want to ask your kind advice in reference to a re-publishing offer I have received from America;[†2] my acceptance of which would endanger (as I apprehend) my copyright here. Will you let me know at what hour I can come round to you at home with the least inconvenience to yourself.

Affectionately Yours Ever
CHARLES DICKENS

To HENRY AUSTIN, 17 NOVEMBER 1851*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Monday Night | Seventeenth November 1851.

My Dear Henry.

Here is the Devil to pay, about the bath, and upper service of water. It has twice failed altogether. Finding not so much as a tear in the shower bath, cistern, "hot", "cold", "waste" or anywhere else in the regions towards the sky, this morning, I dispatched indignant missive to Water Works. Secretary promptly writes polite note, and sends Inspector. Inspector says Cistern is too small, and it is absolutely impossible to maintain the service with such Cistern, and with pipe of such small diameter as is now employed, unless another Cistern capable of holding from 300 to 400 gallons of water is erected downstairs by the Kitchen, and kept in perpetual communication with the "Biler". Helpless and affrighted undersigned immediately writes menacing letter to Cubitts to make such cistern, and furthermore, indites present epistle.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To HENRY AUSTIN, 18 NOVEMBER 1851*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Eighteenth November 1851.

My Dear Henry.

I will look up the Tulip Noir.[†1] It is not here. Must be at the office I think.

You will have seen the foreman, I dare say, before you receive this, as he settled to call on you. There is no doubt whatever that the Inspector saw the right Cistern (and not the water closet one) because he measured it with his rule and told me what it held—speaking of 300 gallons or so—and positively saying that another Cistern of at least equal capacity was wanted below. He said so, confidently, and without the least doubt, and after a second close examination by two men of the whole apparatus. I have no kind of question that we never can get on—with the apparatus and the Company together—without this second supply.

If you are coming up this afternoon, pray come to dinner. Half past five is the hour, and we are alone.

Affecy. Ever

CD.

To F. M. EVANS, 21 NOVEMBER 1851*

MS Indiana University Library.

Tavistock House | Friday Twenty First November | 1851.

My Dear Evans.

I think—all things considered, and with a reference to Household Words, and the Christmas Number, and the getting on beforehand—that we had best decide to begin on the 1st. of March. Or rather, it will be best to make the advertisement run that "on the 28th. of February will be published" &c—it does not look so far off. Would it be desirable to keep the announcement at the foot of each weekly Number of Household Words?[†1]

Would you announce the name sooner than in the February Magazines?[†2]

It has occurred to me that it might not be a bad project to publish the first volume of the Child's History of England, for Christmas time and the New Year. You and I, going over the matter, would know when the second volume could be published, and could decide in how many volumes it would be—all of which could be duly advertized.[†3] What do you think? You will find me at home every morning, if you would like to discuss all these points viva voce.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

F. M. Evans Esquire.

To WILLIAM BRADBURY, 22 NOVEMBER 1851

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

Tavistock House | Saturday Night Twenty Second Novr | 1851.

Mr Dear Bradbury

I am more vexed than I can possibly tell you, that you did not come up to my room this morning. I only heard on going down to dinner (after being a prisoner all day) that you had been here,—and the bare idea of a general order of mine being so literally interpreted as to exclude YOU,[†1] of all men, on such a pretence as MY[†1] beginning a new book, fills me with remorse! We have been so long and closely associated in all such efforts of my life, that I really grieve for the accident more than I can express.

Do, like a good christian, come round tomorrow before 2 and let me make you free of my sanctum and all belonging to it for the next hundred years. For I am indeed

Always your faithful friend
CHARLES DICKENS

W. Bradbury Esquire.

To MRS GASKELL, 25 NOVEMBER 1851

MS John Rylands Library.

Tavistock House | Twenty Fifth November 1851.

My Dear Scheherazade[†2]—for I am sure your powers of narrative can never be exhausted in a single night, but must be good for at least a thousand nights and one.

When I received your letter yesterday morning, my first impulses being of a remorseful nature[†3] I immediately repaired to my Solicitor and made over to you, for ever, all the plate glass and Californian bullion-fringe on these premises, which you will receive (carriage free) as soon as the men employed in their removal can find them. They are now searching in every direction, and have got to the kitchen—an apartment painted in an Arabesque manner, with perfumes burning night and day on tripods of silver—crimson hangings of silk damask concealing the saucepans—and melodious singing-birds of every country, pendant in gilded cages from the fretted roof.

When I found I didn't know the right end of the Ghost Story,[†4] I was so much relieved in my mind that I had some thought of cancelling the settlement I had made upon you; but did not do so. And I hereby, in addition, offer to tell you another, which shall be the comfort and solace of Mr. Gaskell's[†5] life when faithless cabs again leave him with a stony host, in otherwise-helpless despair.[†6] [†a][If it will afford either him or you the least satisfaction in the bereavement for which I am responsible, I will see the Ghost myself.][†a]

But I never yet met anybody who read the Keepsake;[†1] and I am not without hopes that you will soon take courage and try the face again—beginning, say, on some mild bore, and gradually working up to lofty intellects—say Mrs. Tagart.[†2]

Seriously, I hope I have not damaged the incident of the Face?[†3] It came into my mind (you remember that it struck me very much when you told it) as a very remarkable instance of a class of mental phenomena at which I have glanced in the little sketch[†4]—certainly the best known, and the best certified, and among the most singular class out of many. It also led up, by natural degrees, to another story (Ghost-story) which I have told in the same place,[†5] and which I believe to be, in the slightest incident, perfectly true. I told it, some time ago, to Elliotson, who printed it in a note to his Physiology.[†6]

Yet I[†7] never complained!

More than that, Crows have plucked at the fleeces[†8] of other Ghosts of mine before now—but I have borne it meekly. Ghost-stories, illustrating particular states of mind and processes of the imagination, are common-property, I always think—except in the manner of relating them, and O who can rob some people of that!

Mrs. Dickens and her sister (who now dress entirely in brocade of gold, with each a tag to her stay lace composed of one inestimable diamond) beg me to send their loves, and to say that they are not proud.[†9]

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Gaskell

To THOMAS BEARD, 26 NOVEMBER 1851

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | Morning Herald Office | Shoe Lane.

Tavistock House, Tavistock Square | Wednesday Twenty Sixth November | 1851.

C. Dickens presents his respects to Thomas Beard Esquire, and takes the liberty of mentioning that the above premises will be on View on Sunday next at 5 o'Clock exactly, when refreshments (modestly assuming the form of dinner) will be provided free of charge.

To PETER TERRY,[†1] [27] NOVEMBER 1851

Summary in Sotheby's catalogue, May 1985; MS 1 p.; addressed Peter Terry; dated Tavistock House, Thursday, 28 Nov 51. Date: Thursday was 27 Nov, not 28 Nov; CD made the same mistake in To Stone (below).

Agreeing to attend his Anniversary Dinner[†2] and become a steward.

To FRANK STONE, [27] NOVEMBER 1851*

MS Benoliel Collection. Date: misdated by CD.

Tavistock House | Thursday Night | Twenty Eighth November 1851.

My Dear Stone.

This is the Right-of-Way key through my garden—a Blue Beard sort of enclosure, but perfectly harmless.

Ever Affectionately

CD.

December

To F. M. EVANS, 2 DECEMBER 1851

MS Dickens House.

Tavistock House. | Second December 1851.

My Dear Evans. Topham (who was here yesterday) has an idea of subjecting the Frontispiece to two printings, in differently-tinted inks.[†3] I told him that I presumed there was no objection. He seemed rather confident of getting some new and good effect out of it.

He will want a gentle reminder as to time, from you.

We shall come out briskly now, of course, with our H.W. advertisements, after yesterday's decision?[†1]

Faithfully Always

CD.

To HENRY MORLEY, 2 DECEMBER 1851*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Tavistock House, Tavistock Square | Second December 1851.

My Dear Sir

If you should have nothing better to do on Thursday evening next, than to give Mrs. Dickens the pleasure of knowing you, she will be very happy indeed to see you if you will take what the Essayists[†2] used to call "a dish of tea" here.[†3]

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Henry Morley Esquire.

To MRS GASKELL, [4] DECEMBER 1851

MS John Rylands Library. Date: misdated by CD; Thursday was 4 Dec.

Tavistock House | Thursday Afternoon Fifth Decr. | 1851.

My Dear Mrs Gaskell

I write in great haste to tell you that Mr. Wills in the utmost consternation has brought me your letter just received (4 o'Clock) and that it is too late to recall your tale.[†1] I was so delighted with it that I put it first in the No. (not hearing of any objection to my proposed alteration[†2] by return of Post) and the No. is now made up and in the Printer's hands. I cannot possibly take the Tale out—it has departed from me.

I am truly concerned for this, but I hope you will not blame me for what I have done in perfect good faith. Any recollection of me from your pen, cannot (as I think you know) be otherwise than truly gratifying to me; but with my name on every page of Household Words there would be—or at least I should feel—an impropriety in so mentioning myself. I was particular, in changing the author, to make it Hoods Poems in the most important place—I mean where the Captain is killed—and I hope and trust that the substitution will not be any serious drawback to the paper, in any eyes but yours.[†3] I would do anything rather than cause you a minute's vexation arising out of what has given me so much pleasure, and I sincerely beseech you to think better of it, and not to fancy that any shade has been thrown on your charming writing, by the unfortunate but innocent

CHARLES DICKENS

[†a]I write at a Gallop, not to lose another Post.[†a]

To THOMAS COX,[†4] [EARLY DECEMBER 1851]

Mention in H. S. Solly, The Life of Henry Morley, p. 198. Date: presumably shortly before or after the publication of CD's Chip "A Free (and Easy) School" on 6 Dec 51 (HW, IV, 260).†5

Enclosing a copy of his Chip.

To F. M. EVANS, 7 DECEMBER 1851

MS Dickens House.

Tavistock House | Sunday Seventh December 1851.

My Dear Evans.

Child's History†1

I have gone over the Proofs, and taken them to Mr. Forster. I don't think he will delay them at all; but, in case he should, send a boy to him.

I have to leave off what I am at present working at, for the Xmas No. of H.W. I hope to knock off King John in no time, while I am doing my Xmas paper. You shall have him as soon as he is out of hand. Is Topham looked up?†2 We cannot be out too soon.

H.W.

The words "Extra Number", seem to me to want throwing up, as I see the advertisement in today's Examiner.†3

Bleak House

You will be glad to hear that I have only the last short chapter to do, to complete No. 1.†4

Faithfully Always

CD.

F. M. Evans Esquire.

To JOHN BINKS,†5 8 DECEMBER 1851*

MS Old Curiosity Shop, Portsmouth Street, Kingsway. Address: John Binks Esquire | Mechanics Institution | Wakefield.

London, Tavistock House Tavistock Square | Eighth December 1851.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Binks, and regrets that his occupations render it quite out of his power to have the pleasure of accepting the invitation of the Committee of the Wakefield Mechanics' Institution.

To W. H. WILLS, 8 DECEMBER 1851†

MS Huntington Library.

Tavistock House | Eighth December 1851.

My Dear Wills.

I can't begin the Xmas article[†6]—and am going out to walk, after vain trials.

I send you some papers that I have, and the book from Willis's[†7] (did you pay for it?) out of which I think Morley can make a good article as to the Science of our ancestors.[†1] I don't agree with you about Lever's[†2] article. Reading it this morning before going to return it, I thought it sensible and useful and quite in our way. I send it to you with a new name, to be set up.[†3]

It seems to me that what the Xmas No. wants, is something with no detail in it, but a tender fancy that shall hit a great many people. This is what I am trying for. If I can get it, it will not be lengthy.[†4]

I am much obliged to you for the Chancery information. I had got to that Number of Solicitors—by a sort of instinct I suppose—but had modestly limited my costs to from forty to fifty thousand pounds.[†5]

I have not received a proof of Sydney's[†6] article[†7] intact and uncut. Let me have it.

Faithfully Always

CD.

W. H. Wills Esquire

P.S. I enclose a bill from Seager & Evans,[†8] of which the last two items belong to me. If you will settle my proportion of the discount, I will give you a cheque for my share when you come here.[†9]

To W. H. WILLS, [?11] DECEMBER 1851

MS Huntington Library. Date: misdated by CD; Thursday was 11 Dec.

Thursday Night | Tenth Decr. 1851.

"You are quite right My Dear Wills" (as a friend of ours[†10] would say) about Saint Michael's Mount. I had associated with the place in Cornwall, for which I have a romantic tenderness, another little historical passage—and so firmly settled in my own mind that this passage occurred there, that I take it very ill it didn't.[†11] Your suggestion fired (in half an hour) a train of damp gunpowder, which blew my belief to shivers.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To F. M. EVANS, [?8-11 DECEMBER 1851]

Extract in Bloomsbury Book Auctions catalogue, June 1986; MS 1 p. Date: clearly written between To Evans, 7 Dec and 12 Dec 51.

You now want King John. When do you want him?

To F. M. EVANS, 12 DECEMBER 1851

MS Dickens House.

Tavistock House | Friday Twelfth December 1851.

My Dear Evans.

You shall have King John the first thing on Monday morning (will you direct a boy to be sent for it before breakfast?) and it can be easily printed and corrected in the course of the day. I let you know this, in case you should want to announce the day of publication.

It will be best to set it up, first, for the book—and I can afterwards give it out for Household Words. Will you let me know what the last Chapter—King Richard—is in the book? I am not sure whether it is X or XI.[†1]

Faithfully Yours

CD.

I have taken great pains with the Xmas No. and think it is a very good one.

To CHARLES MACKAY, [?6-13 DECEMBER 1851]

Mention in C. F. Libbie & Co. catalogue, May 1880; n.d. Date: perhaps shortly after the first of Mackay's series of "English Songs & Melodies", Illustrated London News, 6 Dec 51.

On Mackay's national songs.[†2]

To THOMAS CHAPMAN,[†1] 13 DECEMBER 1851*

MS Private.

Tavistock House, Tavistock Square | Thirteenth December 1851.

My Dear Sir

Will you allow me to present to you, Mr. Wills—who is my confidential friend and assistant in the management of Household Words, and on whom I have the fullest reliance—to explain to you a scheme he has originated in connexion with mercantile and shipping matters, and in which he has already much interested some high authorities?[†2] I cannot do him a better service, I am sure, than by giving him an occasion of stating his views to you; and I hope you will find them practical, clear, and worthy of attention. Indeed I am sure you will, or I would not trouble you with this note.

My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Chapman Esquire.

To F. M. EVANS, [14] DECEMBER 1851

MS Dickens House. Date: misdated 13 Dec in error; Sunday was 14 Dec 51.

Tavistock House | Sunday Evening | Thirteenth December 1851.

My Dear Evans.

I send you King John, to finish the Volume.

Also, the introductory sheet.[†3] Take care that the Readers have carefully checked all the figures in it, or that they do so—as I can't remember them in detail, and have no copy of my draught.

The sooner we can publish, the better. I think Forster is out of town. Therefore (if you have all the previous sheets from him) you had best send King John to me for correction. He will be back on Tuesday, I have no doubt—I don't mean King John (God forbid!) but Mr. Forster—in case there is still any part of the little book in his hands.

Ever Yours
CD.

To DANIEL MACLISE, 15 DECEMBER 1851*

MS University of Texas.

Tavistock House | Monday Fifteenth December 1851.

My Dear Mac.

I didn't reply to your note about the Indian Dress[†4]—which you have now safely got, I hope—because it immediately precipitated me, head foremost, into an Abyss of enquiries. The confiscation of Tons of indescribable objects, consequent on the removal to this commodious Family Mansion, extended to that very greasy tunic, which was bestowed upon John with injunctions never to let it reappear above the surface of the domestic earth. He gave it to the Carpenter—the Carpenter gave (or sold) it to somebody else—somebody else parted with it to somebody else—and in short it went on, like the Starling in the Sentimental Journey, through all the letters of the Alphabet,[†1] and had got to Z when your note came. Pending its recovery or total loss, I waited on from day to day to write about it, and thus, even the Punctual Inimitable B may have appeared oblivious, even when most mindful!

Ever affecy.
CD.

To CHARLES ELLIS, 16 DECEMBER 1851

MS Charles Ellis & Co.

Tavistock House, Tavistock Square | Tuesday Sixteenth December | 1851.

Dear Mr. Ellis

Have you any Port Wine of a rather high character—old and perfectly free from sweetness, yet of a good body and color—which you could so send me as that it should be in good condition for drinking on the last day of this month? If you have, and are quite sure of its possessing these qualities and answering this description, I should be glad to know the cost of five or six Dozen. As I know I can quite rely on your recommendation,—if you have no doubt yourself of the particular wine you would wish to send me I think I need not take the trouble of coming down to taste it. But I will do so, if you wold prefer it.

Faithfully yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To F. M. EVANS, 16 DECEMBER 1851

MS Dickens House.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Sixteenth December 1851.

My Dear Evans

I declare before God that your men are enough to drive me mad! After all the trouble and care I have taken with that Xmas No. I open it now, and find in the second page—in my own article—"therefore we commit his body to the Dark"—for Deep[†2]—which was never wrong until now. I don't believe there is a beastly unstamped newspaper in London in which such a flagrant and unpardonable mistake would be made. I am so disgusted by it, that I throw down my pen in an absolute despair, and could as soon paint an historical picture as go on writing.

Faithfully Yours always
CD.

To A. H. LAYARD,[†1] 16 DECEMBER 1851

MS British Museum.

Tavistock House, Tavistock Square | Sixteenth December 1851.

My Dear Layard.

I want to renew your recollection of "the last time we parted"—not at Wapping Old Stairs,[†2] but at Miss Coutts's—when we vowed to be more intimate after All Nations should have departed from Hyde Park, and I should be able to emerge from my cave on the sea-shore.[†3]

Can you, and will you, be in town on Wednesday the last day of this present Old Year? If yes, will you dine with us at a quarter after six, and see the New Year in with such extemporaneous follies of an exploded sort (in genteel society) as may occur to us. Both Mrs. Dickens and I would be really delighted if this should find you free to give us the pleasure of your society.

Believe me always | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Austen Henry Layard Esquire.

To MRS MORSON, 17 DECEMBER 1851*

Text transcribed by Prof. Edgar Johnson from MS then in the possession of James F. Drake Inc., and misdated 1857.

Tavistock House, December 17, 1851

Dear Mrs. Morson

You will receive from Mr. Chesterton, tomorrow, a young woman named Eliza Clayton, who will come in her own clothes, which you will please change (as usual) for those of the Home, as soon as possible. Very likely you have under-clothing ready, that will do for her.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Morson

To CHARLES ELLIS, 18 DECEMBER 1851†[1]

MS Charles Ellis & Co.

Tavistock House | Thursday Eighteenth December | 1851

Dear Mr. Ellis.

I shall be glad to receive on your recommendation, 3 dozen of the old Port at 90/- and 2 dozen of that at 105/-. The cellar will be ready for it, whenever you send.

Faithfully yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To HENRY AUSTIN, 20 DECEMBER 1851†

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Twentieth December 1851.

My Dear Henry.

My mind misgives me at the notion of the Walk. There is something so fortuitous in it, that I cannot look my defenceless position in the face. He would have me by the arm, probably,—it is dreadful to contemplate.

But I'll (the first word of this paragraph is meant for B.U.T.) but I'll engage to meet him, for purposes of light and vigorous conversation, on Saturday next, or on Monday week next, at any hour between 11 and 4, either here or at the Board of Health—the latter perhaps would be preferable, because I could run away.[†2] If you will make the appointment, and, as Mitton would write "notify same to me", I will make it my business to keep it.

Ever affectionately

CD.

[†a]Sometimes I think Cubitts' bill is too long to be added up, until Babbage's Calculating Machine[†3] shall be improved and finished. Sometimes, that there is not Paper enough ready made, to carry it over and bring it forward upon.[†a]

To MRS BROWN, 20 DECEMBER 1851*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Twentieth December 1851.

My Dear Mrs. Brown.

I cannot tell you how pleased I am with your elegant little present—most acceptable for its own beauty, and more than most acceptable as a remembrance from you.[†4]

It has taken up its position this morning on the centre table in my room; where I hope you will see it, hundreds of times; and where I assure you it looks charming.

With many cordial thanks, and all good wishes seasonable and unseasonable, if any good wishes be ever unseasonable

Believe me Ever | (In spite of Louis Napoleon)[†1] | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

I am going out to Shepherds Bush this morning, to enquire after the health (and cap) of the Widow Lady.[†2]

To JOHN DICKER,[†3] 20 DECEMBER 1851*

MS Mr R. N. Walker.

Tavistock House, Tavistock Square | Twentieth December 1851.

Sir.

I assure you that I have received your letter with much pleasure,[†4] and that it is a great satisfaction to me to have helped to render justice to a deserving body of men.[†5]

You owe me no thanks. On the contrary, I feel indebted to you for your valuable assistance, and for the great intelligence and moderation with which it was rendered.

The case you mention, occurred to me, as a supposititious one, when I was looking at your customers. I have no doubt whatever that Mrs. Flathers would be infinitely worse off with an obliging neighbour than with any Pawnbroker whomsoever.[†6]

I am Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. John Decker.[†7]

To MRS GASKELL, 21 DECEMBER 1851

MS John Rylands Library.

Tavistock House | Sunday Twenty First December 1851

My Dear Mrs. Gaskell

If you were not the most suspicious of women, always looking for soft sawder in the purest metal of praise, I should call your paper delightful, and touched in the tenderest and most delicate manner. Being what you are, I confine myself to the observation that I have called it "A Love-Affair at Cranford", and sent it off to the Printer.[†1]

Faithfully Yours Ever
CHARLES DICKENS

We have just bought a neat little dinner service of pure gold for common use. It is very neat & quiet.[†2]

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 22 DECEMBER 1851

MS Morgan Library. Address: To be forwarded. | Miss Burdett Coutts.

Tavistock House | Monday Twenty Second December | 1851.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I found Mrs. Morson on Saturday, full of sympathy for the Widow. Whose curtsey is certainly low, but is meant to be very respectful, and who is exceedingly humble and grateful.

Finding her very different from the rest of our people—able to work and embroider, and a much better "Scholar" than we are ever able to make—I thought it right to give her some encouragement. I told her that as she already knew what we usually taught, I had no doubt you would be disposed to send her abroad much sooner than usual, if you were satisfied with her general conduct and behaviour. That of course she must understand that whatever she was required to do in the Home, she was to do with the rest on all occasions. And that she could not too thoroughly understand that everything done there would be necessary to be done; and useful to be known, in a new country. I said I would represent to you what I had mentioned to her, and that we should rely on her setting a good example, and going hopefully and cheerfully to work. She expressed a most earnest desire to do so, but had been in much distress of mind. Mrs. Morson had discreetly told Matilda Thompson (as the most civilized of our young friends) to give her any little help and support that she could.

I notice a most singular lie in Charlotte Glyn, who persists in representing herself as 13 years old, and whose mother (whether originating or imitating the absurdity I don't know) makes the same representation. It is needless to say that it's ridiculous impossibility is self evident. And referring to the memorandum I made of her case when I first saw her at the Ragged School Teacher's in Newgate Street, I find that she stated herself to be then 15. I have no doubt it was her real age.

I considered it necessary to caution Mrs. Morson respecting Mary Anne Church, whose pilfering propensities (I find on her own shewing) to have been very strong, and exercised under no pressure of necessity; and whom I greatly doubt.[†1] Little Elizabeth Hogg is quite a phaenomonon of slyness, I think. I was there some hours making up the Case Book which I want to leave in no arrear at the close of the year—and made these remarks in the course of that operation which is still unfinished.

I enclose Charley's papers, and a testimonial that Mr. Evans[†2] sent me from one of the Masters.

Dear Miss Coutts | Ever Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To DR SHERIDAN MUSPRATT, 25 DECEMBER [1851]

Extract in G.H. Last catalogue No. 245 (1939); MS 1 p. Date: misdated Christmas Day 1857 in catalogue; but 1851, since referring to Liverpool performance of 13 Feb 52.[†3]

All seasonable and good wishes to you and yours from me and mine; asking him to book the Philharmonic Hall for Feb 13th, that is the proposed Liverpool night at last.

To W. BRIDGES ADAMS,[†4] 26 DECEMBER 1851*

MS Carl H. Pforzheimer Library.

Tavistock House, Tavistock Square | Twenty Sixth December 1851.

My Dear Sir

Your kind note assures me that I need not say how interested I feel in such a gallant effort as that to which it calls my attention, or how readily I would do what our manly friends require of me, if I could do it with the least regard to the pressure of many other engagements.[†1]

But I am sorry to say this is not the case. I have as much before me just now, as I can possibly accomplish; and scarcely a day passes on which I am not obliged to decline some similar proposal. I hope you will explain for me that I do not excuse myself lightly in this case, but from absolute and unavoidable necessity.

Believe me | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. Bridges Adams Esquire.

To PETER CUNNINGHAM, 26 DECEMBER 1851

MS Huntington Library.

Tavistock House | Twenty Sixth December 1851.

My Dear Cunningham.

About the three papers.

1st. With Mr. Plowman of Oxford,[†2] Wills will communicate.

2nd. (now returned) I have seen, in nearly the same form, before. The list of names is overwhelming.[†3]

3rd. I am not at all earnest in the Savage matter, firstly because I think so tremendous a Vagabond never could have obtained an honest living in any station of existence or at any period of time; and secondly because I think it of the highest importance that such an Association as our Guild should not appear to resent upon society[†4] the faults of individuals who were flagrantly impracticable.[†5] At its best, it is liable to that suspicion, as all such efforts have been, on the part of many jealous persons to whom it must look for aid. And any step that in the least encourages it, is one of a fatal kind.

I do not think, myself—but this is merely an individual opinion—that Savage was a man of Genius,[†6] or that anything of his writing would have attracted much notice, but for the Bastard's reference to his mother.[†7] For these reasons combined,

I should not be inclined to add my subscription of two Guineas to yours unless the Inscription were altered as I have altered it in pencil.[†1] But in that case I should be very glad to respond to your suggestion, and to snuff out all my smaller disinclinations.

Faithfully Yours Ever
CHARLES DICKENS

Peter Cunningham Esquire

To JOHN T. LAWRENCE, 26 DECEMBER 1851†

MS Mrs K. F. MacClaren.

Tavistock House, Tavistock Square, | London Twenty Sixth December 1851.

My Dear Sir

I have duly received both your kind notes. I have delayed thus long, answering the first one because I have been in daily expectation of being able to see my way clearly to our Northern arrangements; and because the difficulty of adjusting the convenience of one town with the convenience of another, and adjusting the convenience of several, with the convenience of our numerous body; has been perfectly distracting.

†aI would now propose to act in Birmingham on Monday the 9th. of February, if we could have the Town Hall for that Evening.†a In the event of its being engaged then, I must of course devise some other night;†2 but this night would suit us best, and would save us a good deal of expence.

In reference to your kind invitation, Mrs. Dickens begs me to say for herself that she is not just now in travelling condition, and stays at home perforce.†3 For *my*self, I am most unwillingly obliged to add that my time is so precious that I must even make my application for the Town Hall by letter (if you should think it feasible), or, if that cannot be done, must come down and return on the same day.

And this is the point I wish to consult you upon. To whom should I make the application? I will proceed exactly as you advise, if you will have the kindness to advise me. And in case you think it very desirable that I should make the application personally, I will do so of course.

†aWe have been very successful indeed at the few places to which we have yet been, and we look forward to our old Birmingham audience with great hope and pleasure.†a

Mrs. Dickens unites with me in cordial regards to all your house, and I am My Dear Sir with great truth

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

I have spoken in the Town Hall†1—perfectly remember it—and have no doubt of its answering our purpose well. We should take off 30 feet in depth (and of course the whole width of that space) for our stage. John. T. Lawrence Esquire.

To RUSSELL STURGIS,†2 26 DECEMBER 1851*

MS Yale University Library. Address: Russell Sturgis Esquire | 5 Upper Portland Place.

Tavistock House | Twenty Sixth December 1851.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Russell Sturgis, and begs to acknowledge the safe receipt of a brace of canvas-back ducks,[†3] for which he is indebted to Mr. Charles Norton[†4] through the kindness of Mr. Russell Sturgis.

They arrived in admirable condition,[†5] and flourished exceedingly at Yesterday's dinner.

To WILLIAM ALLINGHAM, 29 DECEMBER 1851*

MS Carl H. Pforzheimer Library.

London, Tavistock House Tavistock Square | Twenty Ninth December 1851.

My Dear Sir

I am happy to receive your paper,[†6] which is very curious and good, and which I retain for speedy insertion with great pleasure.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

William Allingham Esquire Junr.

To W. BRIDGES ADAMS, 31 DECEMBER 1851*

MS University of Texas.

Tavistock House | Thirty First December 1851.

Dear Sir

I am very much obliged to you for the offer of the accompanying article, but I regret that I cannot have the pleasure of availing myself of it, by reason of its wanting the peculiar tone and form of address that are necessary for Household Words. It is extremely sensible, but it is far too long; and its points (often very striking in themselves) are not so pleasantly or familiarly put as they should be for that publication. I should have offered to alter it myself to the best of my power; but, on second thoughts, I have feared that my mode of treating it would be too alarmingly surgical to be borne by any mortal parent of a pen-ink-and-paper Child.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. Bridges Adams Esquire.

To HENRY AUSTIN, 31 DECEMBER 1851*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House, Tavistock Square | Thirty First December 1851.

My Dear Henry

I want to give you—or at least I don't want, but I am going to do it—some more trouble.

Here is a certain man[†1] wants to get into Devonshire Terrace head foremost like a Harlequin. The said man wants me to get the repairs I am bound to make estimated by a Surveyor, and so to make terms with him and let him make them himself, and pay me for taking immediate possession. Will you estimate them for me, or produce "a man as will" (I use the Mittonian grammar),[†2] and can you do either in the course of tomorrow—New Year's Day? Name your hour, and I will meet you in Devonshire Terrace.

Affectionately Ever

CD.

Henry Austin Esquire

P.S. The man is mad for dispatch.

To THE REV. EDWARD TRIMMER, 31 DECEMBER 1851*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Tavistock House | Thirty First December 1851.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his Compliments to the Reverend Mr. Trimmer, and begs to say that he wishes his second son (for whom he has a Cadetship) to have the advantage of being educated by Mr. Trimmer with a view to Addiscombe, if it should be convenient and agreeable to that gentleman to take charge of him. He has nearly attained his eleventh year.

Mr. Dickens will be happy to wait on Mr. Trimmer, either on Saturday next, or on Monday, or on Tuesday, at 3 o'Clock, if Mr. Trimmer will have the kindness to let Mr. Dickens know which day will be most convenient to him.

To THE DUKE OF DEVONSHIRE [?LATE 1851]*

MS (fragment) The Hon. Mrs Charles Leaf. Date: late 1851 on signature; probably after Oct, since not on mourning paper.

in the position in which I stand myself. I cannot but think that I ought to have no reservation from you, and I decide to have none.

My Dear Duke of Devonshire | Ever most Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

The | Duke of Devonshire.

To A. H. LAYARD, [?LATE 1851]

MS Mr Ashley W. Olmsted. Date: Signature and same ending as on 16 Dec 51 suggest late 1851.

Athenaeum | Sunday

My Dear Layard.

Mary Barton and Susan Hopley[†1]—two ladies whom you may have met in print—are going to dine with us on Tuesday at ½ past 6. Can you come? We have no other party.

Finding your card, almost as soon as you had left it, on returning from a visit to a sick friend, I came out to make this desperate plunge at you.

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

A. H. Layard Esquire.

To C. K. SALA,[†2] [?LATE 1851]

Mention in [G. L. M. Strauss], Reminiscences of an Old Bohemian, 1882, II, 69. Date: possibly late 1851, when the two Sala brothers collaborated in a pantomime: see below.

Thanking him for "The Fish"[†3] and saying that seldom had a skit amused him so much.

To GEORGE AUGUSTUS SALA, [?DECEMBER 1851]

Mention in George Augustus Sala, Things I have Seen and People I have Known, 1894, I, 73. Date: 1851, after he had written "perhaps half a dozen papers" for HW, according to Sala (above); if taken literally, CD's note would have been in Dec 51.[†1]

Saying he would like to see Sala on a given forenoon at the office in Wellington Street.[†2]

To F. P. DELMÉ RADCLIFFE, 1851

Mention in J. F. Drake catalogue No. 225; envelope only postmarked 1851

To ALDERMAN SALOMONS,[†3] 1851

Mention (envelope only) in Sotheby catalogue, July 1972; dated 1851; addressed Alderman Salomons.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 1851

Extract in Anderson Galleries catalogue No. 347; MS 3 pp.; dated 1851.

There are few things in this world more improbable than that you could get the tragedy produced upon the stage. You would earn nothing but hope deferred, great bitterness of heart, and continual unhappiness. . . . I have no kind of influence or connection with any theatre, and I am quite powerless to serve you.

To S. L. BLANCHARD,[†4] [?1851]

Text from Frederick Locker-Lampson, My Confidences, ed. Augustine Birrell, 1896, p. 327. Date: no clue given by Locker-Lampson; possibly 1851, the year in which Blanchard had most contributions published in HW.

Dear Blanchard, too much string.[†5]

Yours,
C.D.

To FREDERICK LOCKER,[†1] [?1851]

Mention in Frederick Locker-Lampson, My Confidences, ed. Augustine Birrell, 1896, p. 327. Date: written "at or about the same time" as last, according to Locker.

Politely declining his verses, "Beggars",[†2] which he had offered to Household Words.

To [?FREDERICK DICKENS],[†3] [?1851]

MS (fragment) Private. Date: probably 1851 on initials.

to the gentleman who sent me the pamphlet, and assure him that I will not fail to read it (most likely this evening) attentively.

Best loves from all. | affectionately ever
CD

To DR SHERIDAN MUSPRATT, [?1851]

Fragment in Sotheby's catalogue, June 1957. MS 1 p. [p. 3 of a folded sheet making 4 pp., of which pp. 1 & 2 have been torn off]. Date: Signature supports 1850-1.

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Dr. Sheridan Muspratt.

1852

January

To MISS MARIA GOODLUCK,[†4] [EARLY] JANUARY 1852

Extract in Hodgson's catalogue, 30 Oct 1947; MS 2 pp.; dated Tavistock House, Jan 52.

Referring to a proposed dedication which he would rather not accept but if you still wish to dedicate your little Poems to my younger children . . . I readily accept the compliment for them.[†5]

To HENRY AUSTIN, 2 JANUARY 1852*

MS Morgan Library.

Office of Household Words | Friday Second January 1852

My Dear Henry.

I called at the Board of Health Office[†1] this morning, with the enclosed, which I have abstracted from the original lease.[†2] It seems (as well as my memory of yesterday's proceedings serves me) to reduce my fixtures to something infinitessimal.[†3]

I left word with the Messenger that I would call in Parliament Street again, today. On reconsideration, as your coming was reported to be very uncertain, I send this. Are you engaged at home this afternoon, or can you come and dine at Tavistock? Our hour is halfpast five. If you could come, we might finish the business perhaps, and enable Wills to see the Enemy[†4] tomorrow. If you can't come, will you send me a note. I am available tomorrow at all times and seasons, until a quarter before 8 at night.

I shall remain here until the boy comes back—then go for a walk.

Ever affecy.

CD.

To HENRY AUSTIN, 2 JANUARY 1852*

MS Morgan Library. Date: the day, not the date, is mistaken. Clearly CD was answering the note which "the boy" of preceding letter had brought back, and wrote "Saturday" with their meeting on that day in his mind. Reference to visit to schoolmaster confirms, Saturday being much more likely than Sunday.

Tavistock House | Saturday Second January | 1852

My Dear Henry

I can call on you tomorrow with the greatest ease[†5]—for I am going to Putney to see a schoolmaster for Walter.[†6] I will be with you about 2.

Affectionately Ever

CD.

To MRS HERING,[†1] 2 JANUARY 1852*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Tavistock House | Second January 1852.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mrs. Hering, and regrets that he does not consider the accompanying MS suited to Household Words, though it is far from being devoid of merit.

As Mrs. Hering cannot be expected to know what a very great number of Manuscripts are forwarded every week for insertion in that publication, Mr. Dickens cannot feel surprised at the tenor of her second note. But he begs to say that they can only be classified and read, systematically—that, for this purpose, they must go to the office to be placed in order as they are received—and that the business is not at all facilitated, but quite the contrary, by their being sent to his private house.

To J. P. HARLEY,[†2] 5 JANUARY 1852*

MS Berg Collection.

Tavistock House | Fifth January 1852

My Dear Harley.

And many many happy New Years to you and yours likewise! And "this comes hoping"—I have not the courage to brazen out the old story by putting two p's[†3] to the word—that we shall see more of you in the year present than in the year past.

The arrears[†4] shall be duly posted up. I am obliged to wait a little, in consequence of some of the books not being immediately come-at-able; but they shall be yours "anon anon Sir".[†5]

When I think of Douglas's[†6] red face and starting eyes!—

Faithfully Yours Ever
CHARLES DICKENS

J. P. Harley Esquire.

To JAMES BOWER HARRISON,[†1] 5 JANUARY 1852

MS Private; seen before partial destruction in Prestwick air-crash Dec 1954; fragments (aa)
MS Yale University Library. Address: James Bower Harrison Esquire | Higher Broughton | Manchester.

Tavistock House, Tavistock Square | Fifth January 1852.

Dear Sir

I have just received the book[†2] you have had the kindness to send me; and beg to thank you for it, and for your obliging note, cordially. It is a very curious little volume—deeply interesting[†3]—and written (if I may be allowed to say so) with as much power of knowledge and plainness of purpose as modesty.

[a]Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

James Bower Harrison Esquire.[a]

To FRANK STONE, 7 JANUARY 1852*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Seventh January 1852

My Dear Stone.

All good wishes, seasonable and unseasonable, from all in this house to all in yours.

I received the books[†4] (I wondered what on earth had become of them, and had no idea they were in your keeping) as I might have received so many bad debts. Pray don't be so ridiculous as to complete The Crimes Celebres.[†5] The missing Volume is not of the least importance, and I no more want it than I want to be made Lord Mayor.

Affectionately Ever
CD.

Frank Stone Esquire.

To BENJAMIN WEBSTER, 7 JANUARY 1852

Text from typescript at Dickens House.[†1]

Tavistock House | Seventh January 1852

My Dear Sir

I was just going to write to you when your note arrived. I am sorry to say I must deny myself—or rather I am denied—the pleasure of dining with you: to my great mortification—Our friends Mr. Forster and Lemon will tell you that they left me here last night with a most deplorable bilious cold and it really is so bad today that I can hardly hold up my head. I have tried bed, occupation, medicine, compressing,[†2] every sort of remedy, but am thoroughly imbecile. I can hardly see out of my eyes to write these few lines.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Benjamin Webster Esquire

To HENRY AUSTIN, 7 JANUARY [1852]*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Wednesday Night. | Seventh January 1851.[†3]

My Dear Henry

Mr. Indermaur[†4] (the would-be tenant of Devonshire Terrace)[†5] proposes to Wills that his Solicitor Mr. Friend[†6] of Bedford Row—I have written Solicitor, but I mean Surveyor—should have a conference with you. I have therefore empowered Wills to give Indermaur aforesaid, your address at the Board of Health for Friend aforesaid. Friend will write to you accordingly.

How are you? Better, I hope? For the first time these I dont know how many years, I am floored today; having, besides my cold, a Bilious attack which has robbed me of my appetite—set the dull knobs of two rusty pokers in my head instead of eyes—and generally enfeebled discomfited and perplexed me. As Witness my—unintelligible—hand.

Ever affectionately

CD.

Henry Austin Esquire.

To FRANK STONE, 8 JANUARY 1852*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Thursday Eighth January 1852

My Dear Stone

The torn Volume[†1] will do perfectly well for my purpose. I therefore return the copy from Jeffs'.[†2]

I am paying some arrears of taxes here. When I am pretty sure that there are no more to come, I will send you in the Vouchers. Then, at your convenience, you can excogitate the business with the Hawkes[†3] party.

Affecy. Ever

CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 9 JANUARY 1852*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street.

Tavistock House | Friday Ninth January 1852

My Dear Miss Coutts

I received the money yesterday, quite safely. Many thanks!

I enclose the letters you wish to have returned to you.

A sloppy education is a kind of bringing up, that I think I can thoroughly understand—though I don't remember to have ever heard it so expressively described. In case Mrs. Clayton[†4] should turn out sloppy in other respects, don't you think it would be well to put her working abilities to the test, and to give her something difficult to do with her needle, and see how she does it?

I am very glad you had that reason to be pleased with little Hudson.[†5] She certainly told me the truth in the same way, when I saw her in the magistrate's private room.

These last two days I have been ridiculously ill, with a bilious attack added to the ponderous cold; and have been able to do nothing but doze and stagger. Although much better to day, I have been obliged to put off the proposed visit to little Hudson at Shepherds Bush, and fear I shall not have the pleasure of seeing you tonight.

Dear Miss Coutts | Ever Most Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To JOHN T. LAWRENCE, 9 JANUARY 1852†

MS Yale University Library. Address: John T. Lawrence Esquire | Balsall Heath | near | Birmingham.

Tavistock House | Ninth January 1852

My Dear Sir

I enclose a note to the Mayor,[†1] asking for the Town Hall on Wednesday the Twelfth of May. The Corporation being favorable to one night's entertainment, and it being clear that it is a special one which cannot by any sane person be construed into a rivalry of Mr. Simpson,[†2] or tortured into the magic circle of his talent, I hold his opinion on the subject to be a matter of perfect indifference. I dare say he is not without a belief that we might be foolish enough to pay him for the privilege!—He will be grievously disappointed in that case.[†3]

It would have pleased us all, to have begun in Birmingham, so far as our expeditions of eighteen hundred and fifty two are concerned. But as that cannot be, we must make the best of what can be, and come there with the gayest spirit that is in us.

Always My Dear Sir | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John T. Lawrence Esquire.

To HENRY SMITH,[†4] 9 JANUARY 1852

MS Yale University Library.

London, Tavistock House | Tavistock Square, Ninth January 1852

Sir.

I take the liberty to ask you to accord to the Guild of Literature and Art, the use of the Town Hall at Birmingham on Wednesday the 12th. of May next, for an Amateur dramatic performance in aid of the funds of that Institution.

As I believe its objects are already known to you as being of a kind that can hardly fail to interest so generous and spirited a people as the people of Birmingham; and as I have had experience of their sympathy and support on former occasions of a kindred but less comprehensive nature; I will not occupy your time with any statement of the grounds on which the Guild would appeal to your consideration.

Allow me respectfully to prefer my solicitation through my friend Mr. Lawrence who has the kindness to take charge of this letter; and to assure you on behalf of the body of gentlemen whom I represent, that your compliance will be highly and gratefully esteemed.

The theatre erected on such occasions, and especially designed for them, is (I may mention) most ingeniously constructed for being fitted up in any large building without the least defacement of the walls, floor, or ceiling; and, together with the gas fittings necessary for the purpose, is commonly fixed and removed in the course of a few hours.

I have the honor to be | Sir | Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

Henry Smith Esquire | The Mayor of Birmingham

To S. R. STAREY,[†1] 9 JANUARY 1852*

MS Yale University Library.

Tavistock House, Tavistock Square | Ninth January 1852

Dear Sir

I regret that my engagements render it impossible for me to have the pleasure of accepting the interesting invitation[†2] you have had the kindness to convey to me. But I am constantly under the necessity of refusing similar invitations, and have no alternative, unfortunately, in this instance.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Samuel Robert Starey Esquire.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 13 JANUARY 1852

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Thirteenth January 1852

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I think the heads you have sent me, and which I have read with the greatest interest, admirable. In general, I do not think their wisdom to be questioned. Some minor points occur to me from time to time, which I jot down and will mention when we talk the subject over. But I believe it to be certain that a scheme like yours is the only hopeful way of doing lasting good, and raising up the wretched.[†3]

I saw Inspector Field last night. I could only approach the subject afar off, in consequence of his horrible sharpness,[†4] but I am disposed to doubt the efficacy of his peculiar sort of knowledge and sagacity in this stage of the matter. A locality chosen, I have no doubt that, at a small expence, his assistance in the beginning would be of immense service; or, a locality suggested, that his observations upon it would also be very important—for, if there were a serious objection, he would be certain to know it. But the habits of his mind hardly lead him (I think I observe) to the present point before us.

I have been thinking a good deal about it, and it seems to me that Dr. Southwood Smith is the man of all others, to consult first. His fever-practice has made him, for many years, well acquainted with all the poor parts of London; he is in possession of all the reports made to the Board of Health in the late Survey; and he knows what work there is in this or that place; and how the people live; and how their tenements are held; and all about them. I am well acquainted with him—have both advised him and advised with him in many delicate matters—and can implicitly trust him. Not that I should think it necessary to mention you, or to proceed beyond generalities, but I mean, I can trust his interest in such a subject and his giving an opinion on sound knowledge and careful consideration and well regulated humanity. I do not go to him straightway, because I would rather get your concurrence first, but if you will write me "Yes", I will see him without delay, and afterwards see Field again. I have no doubt of our opening the way as clearly as it can be opened, by such means.[†1]

In reference to the Shower Bath (by the bye, I suppose the baths for the Infants are not to be Showery?) I am really and truly affected by your solicitude. But I do sincerely believe that it does me unspeakable service. I take but a very small part of the shock, on the head; and I have quite a remarkable power of enduring fatigue for which I believe I am very much indebted to this treatment, as the power has certainly increased since I have pursued it. It is because my cut-out way in life obliges me to be so much upon the strain, that I think it is of service to me as a Refresher—not as a taker out, but as a putter in of energy. However, I shall certainly not observe its influence from day to day, the less narrowly, because of your kind caution. For which, and for much more, my heartiest thanks.

You have not seen the dreadful instrument yet, as it is set up here! And have not returned to see the whole house in the daylight!

I shall be delighted to dine with you on Friday—when I hope Wheatstone[†2] in the exposition of those marvels will not be too shrill.

Sydney, my peculiar protegé among the smaller fry, is in a dreadful state of anticipation at this moment; the eventful occasion (of which I am going to be a spectator) of his first appearance in your box or any Theatre being so near at hand. Of the many wonderful contrasts that one sees, I can hardly imagine a greater one than being with little children at the play tonight,[†3] and sitting last night, for hours, with that grim Inspector in a world of villainy and punishment.

It is dreadfully difficult to work at the new book on these dull days.

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To F. O. WARD, 14 JANUARY 1852*

MS Johns Hopkins University.

Tavistock House. | Fourteenth January 1852

My Dear Ward. I am very doubtful in reference to the proposed Committee,[†4] and cannot by any means make up my mind, as yet, to have any hand in it.

In hesitating, I oppose all my personal sympathies and inclinations, and do a violence to my detestation of the cold-blooded scoundrel at the head of France—or on it.[†1] But we are all solemnly bound to consider, before we take the least step on such volcanic ground, whether we may impulsively do anything tending to involve our own countrymen in the tremendous social evils of War. And I have a great doubt whether a public move of this kind, industriously misrepresented in France, might not be twisted into a new pretence for quarrelling.[†2]

This is hard, you'll say, upon the banished men.[†3] I know it is, and it is a part of the strength of the Usurper's case; but the position of France and England is so perilous and so peculiar, that I cannot make up my mind to act in this instance as I would act in any other.[†4]

Since his preposterous conduct on the Sanitary questions, I have seen so little of Lord Dudley Stuart,[†5] that I have no idea what he might do on this point. I cannot but think, however, that if you address many men you will find some not undeserving of consideration to whom my misgivings must have occurred.

Faithfully Yours always

CD.

F. O. Ward Esquire

To GEORGE CATTERMOLE,[†6] 15 JANUARY 1852

MS Kyoto University of Foreign Studies.

Tavistock House | Fifteenth January 1852

My Dear Cattermole

I was going to set off a tremendous joke about the new Number coming out bye and bye resplendently "in parts" (you perceive the subtle point?) when my spirits were dashed and my intention balked, by your not having told me the sex[†7]—which was absolutely necessary to the elaboration of the idea. But for this mortification, I should have had nothing but pleasure in the receipt of your note—on account of the baby, on account of the mother, on account of the father, on account of the welcome I give your handwriting and any sort of communication with you, however shadowy—on all accounts, and for all sorts of loving reasons.

Kate and Georgina, who are delighted with the news, bring this and make their personal enquiries at the same time. Now, don't you think (if I may be allowed to make an enquiry of another sort) don't[†1] you think you could manage to dine here, at the fam'ly board, either next Sunday, or next Sunday after that,[†2] at 5 exactly? Couldn't we, if only as a novelty, meet as we used to do in byegone ages? Do let us try—How can it be that Claphim Rise[†3] gets so far off!

If you will come I'll ask Sloppy[†4] to meet you, and we'll have a leg of mutton from Tucker'sesesesesesesesesesesesesses[†5] in the Strand, where I understand they are perpetually a hulloxinin of Devonshire Sassageses round the corner.

Ever Heartily Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

George Cattermole Esquire.

To HENRY AUSTIN, 16 JANUARY 1852*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Friday Sixteenth January 1852

My Dear Henry.

The Enemy don't seem to be much in a hurry at any rate.

In reference to a certain benevolent project[†6] with which I am entrusted and which may be the means of doing immense social service, I want confidentially to take Southwood Smith's opinion on a question I will propose to him. I shall be very glad to have yours too, at the same time. Will you let me know when I can see you both at Richmond Terrace? Would tomorrow afternoon at 4, or Monday afternoon (Monday, I mean that word for) at 4, suit you? If so, say which. If otherwise, say when.

As soon as we shall have penetrated through the Mists of time and got at Cubitts' little bill,[†1] there is a Job to be done here, in steadying the floor of the School Room (which we have danced pretty nearly down)[†2] the necessity of which I will explain when I see you. I think myself it will be advisable to have a pillar or two in the Kitchen. They would be no inconvenience there, and would make the whole house firmer—wouldn't they?

Ever affecy.

CD.

To CHARLES KNIGHT, 17 JANUARY 1852

Extract in Sotheby catalogue, July 1983; MS 1 p.; dated Tavistock House, 17 Jan 52; addressed Charles Knight.

Thanking him for a very singular pamphlet.[†3] He has no doubt it is a fraud.

"O Sing Sweet bird[†4]—a few Household notes! Asks if he is never going to chirp in Wellington Street any more.[†5]

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 17 JANUARY 1852

MS Lytton Papers.

Tavistock House | Saturday Seventeenth January | 1852.

My Dear Bulwer.

The enclosed papers refer to a scheme, in reference to which a certain Mr. Tomlins,[†6] its originator, has several times addressed me. Recently, he begged me to appoint an interview; which I did. I could clearly discern then, without any extraordinary sagacity, what his object was, and I said to him (after stating some of my objections to his scheme) "I am but an individual in the Guild; nothing definite, as to that body, can come of what you say to me or of what I say to you; and if you have any proposition to make to it, you had better make it formally, and I will call the gentlemen together to consider it". The enclosed alarming-looking packet is the result.

I have no doubt of your concurrence in the expediency of formally dealing with such a proposal. Firstly, because it is really our duty to consider all shades and grades of literary men. Secondly, because it is most important that we should give no reason to any of them to regard us as exclusive or as a clique; and thirdly because I mistrust at least one of our own men[†1] quite enough to suspect the likelihood of his otherwise turning upon us, one of these days, and saying "If you hadn't rejected this offer, or if I had known of it, then, instead of being &c &c &c, we should now be &c &c &c."

I think it particularly important that you should attend the Meeting at which Mr. Tomlins shall be received and informed of our decision. I therefore write (before sending any circular to our men) to ask you if you can appoint any day between this and the end of the first week in February, when we (the Guild) may meet at ½ past 2, and appoint Mr. Tomlins at 4. I have no doubt myself of the inexpediency of any such junction,[†2] but I have no doubt either, that we ought to assemble in Council on the subject.

Faithfully Yours Ever
CHARLES DICKENS

Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton. P.S. Return me the MS letter of the Tomlins when you write, as I shall want it copied for a general circular.

To W. M. TARTT,[†3] 19 JANUARY 1852†

MS Private; seen before destruction in Prestwick air-crash Dec 1954.

Guild of Literature and Art, | 10, Lancaster Place, Strand, | Nineteenth January 1852

Sir.

I feel much indebted to you for your courteous and obliging letter, and beg to thank you for it cordially.

I find with much regret on referring to a former communication[†1] describing the size and capacity of the two largest rooms in Cheltenham, that there does not appear to be any public Hall in that town sufficiently large for our purpose. To justify the expences contingent on one of our performances, the transmission and erection of the Theatre, the employment of many people accustomed to work it, &c &c, a very numerous audience is necessary. And in selecting the places we can contrive (at no slight personal inconvenience) to visit, it is indispensable, for this substantial reason, to give the preference to large towns.

I am not the less obliged to you for your interest and politeness, and beg to remain

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. M. Tartt Esquire.

To [?W.J.] COLLINS,[†2] 20 JANUARY 1852

Mention in Autograph Prices Current, I, 50 (1914-16); MS 4 pp.; dated 20 Jan 52.

Respecting a plan for the protection of infant life.[†3]

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 20 JANUARY 1852*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Night | Twentieth January 1852

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I will take care to see the girl whom you have promised to admit, and to reduce her story to as plain a one as I can make it.

In Sir George Grey's case,[†4] I would certainly enquire, before giving any positive reply, on what ground she is recommended by the Quarter Sessions for admission into an Institution. For it is exceedingly possible that the ground—if any—may be some mental or physical disqualification that would hamper you very much. Or the recommendation may have no basis at all; and in that case is worthless.

I have seen Dr. Southwood Smith, and considered all your points myself. If I don't hear from you to the contrary, I will call tomorrow (on my way to dine at Bayswater) between 4 and ½ past 4.

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To F. O. WARD, 20 JANUARY 1852*

MS John Rylands Library.

Tavistock House | January Twentieth 1852

My Dear Ward.

As to the Exiles,[†1] I don't think you will get any committee worth having, who will consent to be announced. I therefore don't think you can make an appeal from house to house—and I don't think it would pay the expence of being made, if you could.

As to the Engineers,[†2] I agree with you in the main. But I believe the difficulty in the way of compromise, from the very beginning, is not so much with the masters as with the men. Honorable, generous, and spirited, themselves, they have fallen into an unlucky way of trusting their affairs to contentious men,[†3] who work them up into a state of conglomeration and irritation, and are the greatest Pests their own employers can encounter on earth. I am much mistaken if this be not the case.

Faithfully Yours

CD.

To HENRY AUSTIN, 21 JANUARY 1852*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Wednesday Twenty First January | 1852

My Dear Henry.

Many thanks for your kindness in the Devonshire Terrace matter, which gets me out (as I consider) on easy and splendid terms.

I cannot tell you how much I am concerned to see Chadwick and Southwood Smith both harping so much on the past, in reference to the Interment Bill.[†4] It is quite useless. Nothing can recover the bill, and usefulness lies in the future alone.[†1] No great thing was ever done by looking back. Nor have I the least doubt that they will associate with the Board, an unjust notion of impracticability if they go on in this way. What can be the use of seeking a man to tell the House of Commons how and why the Interment Bill is not to be carried out. It is not to be carried out; and the wise thing is to take less, and make it the best that it can be made.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 21 JANUARY 1852

MS Lytton Papers.

Tavistock House | Twenty First January 1852

My Dear Bulwer. I would not speak to Disraeli[†2] if I were you. I have not the least idea of amalgamation, or Tomlinsation,[†3] or any ation but Repudiation of that creation. All I want is, to decline in a formal manner, and to give Mr. T a fair hearing. The objections to alliance seem to me decided and insurmountable—unless we should hear some extraordinary news from him![†4]

Let us say Saturday the 21st. of February at ½ past 2. I will appoint Mr. Tomlins at ½ past 3, and we can arrange the order of proceeding before he comes. The place, The Guild office.[†5]

Ever Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To RICHARD S. COX,[†6] 22 JANUARY 1852*

MS University of Kentucky.

Tavistock House | Twenty Second January 1852

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his Compliments to Mr. Cox and regrets that he cannot at present have the pleasure of subscribing to the Dispensary in which Mr. Cox is so kindly interested.

To MR MILLS,[†1] 22 JANUARY 1852*

MS Boston Public Library.

Tavistock House | Twenty Second January 1852

Mr. Charles Dickens sends his compliments to Mr. Mills and regrets to assure him that he has no means whatever of recommending Mr. Mills to the employment he seeks.

To EDWARD BLAKELY,[†2] 23 JANUARY 1852*

MS Fales Collection, New York University Library. Address: Edward Blakely Esquire | Thorpe Hamlet | near | Norwich.

Tavistock House, Tavistock Square, London | Twenty Third January 1852

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his Compliments to Mr. Blakely, and begs to thank Mr. Blakely for his obliging note, and the very interesting and curious memoir[†3] by which it was accompanied.

To [R.] H. MASON, 23 JANUARY 1852*

MS Arthur Rogers. Address: K. H. Mason[†4] Esquire | Albert Villa | Harrow.

Tavistock House | Twenty Third January 1852

Dear Sir

Allow me to thank you for your book[†5] (which I shall esteem as a mark of your kind remembrance), and to congratulate you on the improved circumstances[†6] of its publication. I do so, very truly.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

K. H. Mason Esquire

To MRS GASKELL, 24 JANUARY 1852

MS John Rylands Library.

Tavistock House | Twenty Fourth January 1852

My Dear Mrs. Gaskell

I send you the enclosed, myself, from Mr. Wills's book[†7] (£9..10..0 Love affair at Cranford; 10/- "balance from last") in order that I may tell you how glad I am that his mistake is rectified,[†1] and how anxiously I am looking for your next communication.[†2]

If I say any more, you'll call it soft sawdor.[†3] I enforce myself therefore to discreet silence. I suppose I may say, without suspicion, that I am Faithfully Yours

C.D.??

To DANIEL MACLISE, 24 JANUARY 1852*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Saturday Twenty Fourth January | 1852

My Dear Mac

If you are not engaged tomorrow, will you come and dine here at 5, and see George Cattermole.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To MRS GASKELL, 27 JANUARY 1852

MS New York Public Library.

Tavistock House | Twenty Seventh January 1852

My Dear Mrs. Gaskell.

I am very busy, and write shortly—not from choice but because needs must when You-don't-know-who[†4] drives.

It would give me great pleasure to accept your invitation[†5]—real pleasure and interest—if I were ever able to accept any invitation on these occasions. But I am obliged to be in the Theatre the whole day; and at dinner and supper I am never absent from my post at the head of the table. I can't imagine what the Company would think, if the Manager were away. As to their ever producing themselves in due costume at the proper time, under such circumstances—or as to any of the many unseen workmen doing what they ought to do—that, I am quite clear about.

Besides these small encroachments on my leisure, I am dressed in the course of the evening (as I hope you mean to see with your own eyes) fourteen times.[†6] And I am usually taken to bed speechless.

Pray give my regards to Mr. Gaskell,[†1] whom I am quite satisfied I know very well by this time—

And Believe me | always Faithfully | (and never sawdoringly.) | Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To FRANK STONE, 30 JANUARY 1852*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Friday Thirtieth Jan 1852

My Dear Stone

I will come in to you as soon as I have done my day's work—sometime before dinner.

Affectionately Ever

CD.

To JOSEPH JANION,[†2] 31 JANUARY 1852

MS Dr and Mrs Gordon F. Madding.

Guild of Literature and Art, | 10, Lancaster Place, Strand. | Saturday Thirty First Jany. 1852.

Sir.

I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of yesterday's date.[†3]

I can very sincerely assure you that nothing can be more remote from my mind or from the minds of those gentlemen with whom I am associated, than any idea of doing an injustice to Mr. Knowles, or an injury to the property his spirit and enterprise have created for the people of Manchester, or disparaging[†4] his Theatre in any way.[†5] If it had been reasonably possible for the Amateur Company to act Sir

Edward Bulwer Lytton's comedy in a Theatre, there is none in England where it could have been presented to greater advantage than in the Theatre belonging to Mr. Knowles, or with greater satisfaction and pleasure to those concerned. But it is necessary to act elsewhere, because, for the display of the scenery painted in support of the objects of the Guild by artists of the first eminence, a stage on a reduced scale, which would be ridiculously dwarfed on an ordinary stage, has been made expressly; with every requisite belonging to it.[†1] The comedy has never been represented in a Theatre, anywhere. And we first conceived the scheme of representing it with our own means and appliances, partly to the end that we might not interfere with Theatres, or seem to make unreasonable demands on Managers. If you saw the appliances of which I speak, you would know, at a glance, that they are impossible of adaptation to a place like the Manchester Theatre, and would understand that they have no more to do with Theatres than with Churches.

For the rest, I cannot suppose that the rights of the proprietors of licensed and patent Theatres, are for an instant endangered or invaded in any place by one such performance as we contemplate, or that an occasion which is an exception, in the course of years can be converted into a dangerous precedent as to other occasions with which it has not the least analogy.[†2]

I therefore hope to survive in the good humour of my friend Mr. Knowles and of yourself, even if I so far differ from you in opinion as to think it very desirable indeed "that the performances advertized to take place at the Free Trade Hall should be there represented".[†3]

I am Sir | Your faithful Servant

CHARLES DICKENS

Joseph Janion Esquire

To W. C. MACREADY, 31 JANUARY 1852

Text from MDGH, I, 273-5.

Tavistock House, January 31st, 1852.

My dear Macready,

If the "taxes on knowledge" mean the stamp duty, the paper duty, and the advertisement duty, they seem to me to be unnecessarily confounded, and unfairly too.[†1]

I have already declined to sign a petition[†2] for the removal of the stamp duty on newspapers. I think the reduced duty is some protection to the public against the rash and hasty launching of blackguard newspapers. I think the newspapers are made extremely accessible to the poor man at present, and that he would not derive the least benefit from the abolition of the stamp. It is not at all clear to me, supposing he wants The Times a penny cheaper, that he would get it a penny cheaper if the tax were taken off. If he supposes he would get in competition two or three new journals as good to choose from, he is mistaken; not knowing the immense resources and the gradually perfective machinery necessary to the production of such a journal.[†3] It appears to me to be a fair tax enough, very little in the way of individuals, not embarrassing to the public in its mode of being levied, and requiring some small consideration and pauses from the American kind of newspaper projectors. Further, a committee has reported in favour of the repeal,[†4] and the subject may be held to need no present launching.

The repeal of the paper duty would benefit the producers of periodicals immensely. It would make a very large difference to me, in the case of such a journal as "Household Words." But the gain to the public would be very small. It would not make the difference of enabling me, for example, to reduce the price of "Household Words," by its fractional effect upon a copy, or to increase the quantity of matter. I might, in putting the difference into my pocket, improve the quality of the paper a little, but not one man in a thousand would notice it. It might (though I am not sure even of this) remove the difficulties in the way of a deserving periodical with a small sale. Charles Knight holds that it would. But the case, on the whole, appeared to me so slight, when I went to Downing Street with a deputation on the subject,[†5] that I said (in addressing the Chancellor of the Exchequer) I could not honestly maintain it for a moment as against the soap duty,[†1] or any other pressing on the mass of the poor.[†2]

The advertisement duty has this preposterous anomaly, that a footman in want of a place pays as much in the way of tax for the expression of his want, as Professor Holloway pays for the whole list of his miraculous cures.[†3]

But I think, at this time especially, there is so much to be considered in the necessity the country will be under of having money, and the necessity of justice it is always under, to consider the physical and moral wants of the poor man's home, as to justify a man in saying: "I must wait a little, all taxes are more or less objectionable, and so no doubt are these, but we must have some; and I have not made up my mind that all these things that are mixed up together are taxes on knowledge in reality."[†4]

Kate and Georgy unite with me in kindest and heartiest love to dear Mrs. Macready. We are always with you in spirit, and always talking about you. I am obliged to conclude very hastily, being beset to-day with business engagements. Saw the lecture[†5] and was delighted; thought the idea admirable. Again, loves upon loves to dear Mrs. Macready and to Miss Macready also, and Kate and all the house. I saw [Anderson][†6] play (O Heaven!) "Macbeth,"[†7] the other night, in three hours and fifty minutes, which is quick, I think.

Ever and always affectionately.

[CHARLES DICKENS]

February

To THOMAS COE, 1 FEBRUARY 1852

Extract from N, II, 374. MS 1 ½ pp.; dated Tavistock House, 1 Feb 52.

A change that has been rendered necessary[†1] in the cast of the comedy obliges me to ask you to be so good as to double Smart with Lord Loftus.[†2]

To THOMAS CONNOLLY,[†3] 3 FEBRUARY 1852*

MS Yale University Library.

Private | Tavistock House, Tavistock Square | Third February 1852

Sir.

I have read the little Volume[†4] you sent me some six or seven weeks ago, and, in replying to your note, will first beg you to have the kindness to add the enclosed trifle to the amount your generous friendship has got together for its Author.

I cannot honestly say that I recommend him to continue the pursuit of authorship. For, I do not honestly believe that he would or could succeed in it. However remarkable this book is, considering the circumstances of its production, it (or any other work from the same hand) can only be read or left unread, and can only be judged, according to its intrinsic claims. With all beyond, the public have nothing to do. I hold myself bound to read it, remembering the responsibility you impose upon me, as if I knew nothing whatever about its Author. So reading it, I think it well enough and put it by—among ten thousand other books possessing the same sort of claims.

I see something of the misery of engaging in literature on insufficient grounds, and may, for anything I know, be a little too much influenced by it in such a case as this. But it is better to be a qualified soldier than an unqualified poet—a good worker in iron, than a bad worker in gold—and I have a grave doubt whether Literature (as a Calling) would make this young man any the happier, any the richer, any the better in any way.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Thomas Connolly.

To A. H. FORRESTER,[†1] 3 FEBRUARY 1852*

MS Huntington Library.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Third February 1852

My Dear Sir

I beg to thank you for your note, through which your spirit shines in the pleasantest of characters. Also to transmit to you (through the Post) an autographical shake of the hand.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Alfred Henry Forrester Esquire.

To H. C. LLOYD,[†2] 3 FEBRUARY 1852*

MS Dickens House.

Third February 1852

My Dear Sir

I have not heard the issue of your case,—but the objection seems to me perfectly absurd, and the whole proceeding on the part of the Benchers as nearly incomprehensible as anything proceeding from so august a Body may be.[†3]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

H. C. Lloyd Esquire

To JOHN WESTWOOD,[†4] 3 FEBRUARY 1852

Facsimile Birmingham Weekly Post, 4 Mar 1949.

Tavistock House, London | Third February 1852.

Dear Sir

I feel exceedingly obliged to you for your interesting and elegant little present,[†5] to which the kind terms of your note communicate a great additional value. Pray accept my cordial thanks, and the assurance that I am sincerely gratified by your remembrance.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. John Westwood.

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 4 FEBRUARY 1852

MS Lytton Papers.

Tavistock House. | Fourth February 1852. Wednesday

My Dear Bulwer. From the general tenor of your note, I have little doubt that Moncrieff's[†1] representation is correct—and most correct—in the main. Poole's[†2] account to me when he came with a wild weeping shock upon him after seeing the poor brothers "fed" (as he called it) was very bad. I have no doubt the place is very bad; and have felt (since the Guild originated) so much as you feel, as to the power of such an instance to point the necessity for it, that I have again and again endeavoured to get a good description of the Charter House for Household Words, but have had it driven off by the indisposition and the engagements of a very trustworthy and good describer[†3] to whom I confided it.

If you will send Moncrieff's letter to me, and with it any little sum you may be disposed to give him, I can promise you that the letter shall be carefully tested (without his knowledge) and the money applied to his greatest needs, in the most prudent way. Mr. Wills knows him, and has been several times to him lately. He will undertake the task most readily, and may be implicitly relied upon.

I have driven my letter off until nearly post time (having been hard at work on my new book all day) and must touch Guild matters shortly, until we meet. But here they are.

Jerrold—who never in his life was true to Anything—has deserted us! When the walls of Manchester and Liverpool had been for days covered with bills announcing him for next week in his part! How deserted us, you will hear on our Meeting Day. I immediately called the Company together, and they unanimously passed a severe censure upon him, discarding all private considerations (as men must in such a matter if they have any good faith in them) and heavily reflecting on his conduct.[†4] But before then I had sent for Wilkie Collins (Smart) and proposed the part to him. He fell upon it with great alacrity and heartiness—has gone over it here, with great pains and care—and I hope will do it very well.

Meanwhile nothing can be better than the prospects at Manchester and Liverpool, (Wednesday & Friday in next week) where there are the two largest rooms in England. At Manchester, we have a Committee headed by the Mayor and Corporation; at Liverpool, ditto, and the Mayor proposes a dinner to the Guild at the Town Hall on the day before the play. At Birmingham (May) the Corporation present the Town Hall for the purpose. And at Shrewsbury (where the room is of more moderate dimensions) the chief Inhabitants are endeavouring to guarantee us £300, free of all local expenses—without which I don't like to go there, knowing that we could easily add a larger town to the Birmingham expedition. There is nothing in the country but earnestness and enthusiasm. The Managers of the Country Theatres try to stop us, certainly, (because we don't pay them) but I flatter myself I am a match for those gentry, and that they have vague suspicions of it.

Ever My Dear Bulwer | Cordially Yours

CD

Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton

To DR SHERIDAN MUSPRATT, [?EARLY FEBRUARY 1852]*

MS (fragment) Yale University Library. Date: early Feb on handwriting, and evidently before Muspratt to CD, 5 Feb (see To Wills, 6 Feb) but replying to some earlier letter.

Mint[†1] to boot.

We are heartily obliged to you for all the trouble you are taking.[†2] "I begin to be aweary of the"[†3]—Amateur Coulisses, but it would be a great thing to set this scheme up firmly, and that I keep before me.

My hair stands on end at the bare notion of those suits at law you tell me of.[†4]

Mrs. Dickens is "as well as"[†5]—you know what follows—and sends her kindest regards to Mrs. Muspratt. I begin to count the children incorrectly, they are so many; and to find fresh ones coming down to dinner in a perfect procession, when I thought there were no more.

Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

Dr. Sheridan Muspratt

To THOMAS BEARD, 5 FEBRUARY 1852*

MS Dickens House.

Tavistock House | Thursday Fifth February | 1852

My Dear Beard

Next Saturday as ever is, is the Inimitable's Birthday. Will you come and dine with us, and drink that noble creature's health, at 6.[†6]

Ever Yours

CD.

Thomas Beard Esquire

To THOMAS CONNOLLY, 5 FEBRUARY 1852*

MS Yale University Library.

Tavistock House | Fifth February 1852

Sir

In reply to your very sensible and candid letter received this morning, I beg to say to you that I do not at all desire the young Soldier to be possessed of my opinion. I lay no injunction of secresy upon you; but I have written for your eye, less tenderly than I should have written for his.[†1]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Thomas Connolly.

To JOSEPH ELLIS,[†2] 5 FEBRUARY 1852

MS Bedford Hotel, Brighton.

Tavistock House, Tavistock Square | Fifth February 1852.

Dear Mr. Ellis

Mr. Leech and I are coming down tomorrow, to get a walk upon the Downs. We shall want to have a nice little dinner at the Bedford at 5 o'Clock. Will you order it for us in some snug corner.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To FRANK STONE, 5 FEBRUARY 1852*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Thursday Fifth February 1852

My Dear Stone.

I am very sorry to say I can't to day—the disposition I have strongly though. I am obliged to go to the office in an hour, and after that have engaged to dine with Forster, and take my people to the Puppets.[†3]

You are duly booked at the Athenaeum.[†1] Edwin[†2] has seconded.

Affecy. always
CD.

To AUGUSTUS TRACEY, 5 FEBRUARY 1852*

MS University of Texas.

Tavistock House | Fifth February 1852

My Dear Tracey.

Mary Ann Church[†3] is giving a great deal of trouble, and I fear may have to be turned out. Miss Coutts is beset by the possibility of having to eject her into the bare streets, and wishes to know whether any of her relations would receive her. She speaks of an Aunt "in Turks' Head Court"[†4]—which I rather believe to be a non-existent place. It is clear to me that her relations are sick of her. But can you manage to send some trustworthy person to see Mrs. Morson and to hunt out anybody concerned who really seems to have a local habitation and a name?[†5]

Faithfully Yours always

CD.

To THE REV. EDWARD TRIMMER, [?6 FEBRUARY 1852]

MS (fragment) Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: The Reverend Edward Trimmer | Putney Heath. Date: postmark looks like 6 Feb 52.

remembered to Mrs. Trimmer. And I am My Dear Sir

Very faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

The Reverend Edward Trimmer

To W. H. WILLS, [6 FEBRUARY 1852]*

MS Morgan Library. Date: clearly written immediately on receipt of Muspratt's letter (see below) postmarked London, 6 Feb.

Friday Mg.

My Dear Wills. I get the enclosed[†6] just before going to Brighton. I shall be at home at 10 tonight.

The success is so brilliant,[†7] & the extra expenses would be small, that I propose (if you agree) that Johnson[†8] immediately send round this Circular to all the company

Sir. I am directed by Mr. Charles Dickens to call your attention to the following copy of a letter received from our local Secretary in Liverpool this morning.

(Here copy the parts of the letter which I have underlined)[†1]

For these reasons, it is proposed to act a second time in Liverpool on the Saturday night, and to return to London on the Sunday.

You will be glad to hear that the success at Manchester[†2] is also quite unprecedented.

I am &c[†3]

Will you see Forster directly. He can cut on the Saturday,[†4] and can come down by the Morning Train. Will you write to Muspratt tonight (as I can't) and let him have the necessary announcements—remembering the change in Hardman for Saturday. I shall rely on seeing you or hearing a word from you tonight.

To F. M. EVANS, 7 FEBRUARY 1852*

MS Bradbury, Agnew & Co. Ltd.

Tavistock House | Saturday Seventh February 1852 | (My Birthday)

My Dear Evans.

You may send a boy for No. 2[†5] as early as you like on Monday. Is Young[†6] looking up Browne?[†7] In any case, he had better do it.

Faithfully Yours Ever

CD

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, [9] FEBRUARY 1852

MS Morgan Library. Date: Monday was 9 Feb.

Tavistock House | Monday Eighth February 1852

My Dear Miss Coutts.

The indisposition of my fellow-counsellor in the matter of the Bethnal Green Survey,[†1] has obliged me to postpone our appointment and take it out of this last week. I am further obliged to put it into next week now, instead of this present one, as I am going to Manchester and Liverpool tomorrow, and shall be absent five or six days.[†2]

I have communicated with Mr. Tracey about Mary Anne Church, and I am sorry to say he gives no encouragement at all. He says, as to communicating with that Aunt, "its all moonshine"—and he has exactly that opinion of her which I mentioned to you I had formed myself—I ought to add that I have expressed none to him. He says that he could not press his own opinion of the girl against the united opinions of his two chaplains[†3] that she was a proper subject for the Home; but that her conduct in the Home, and her previous history, deprive him of any faith in her. He has evidently my apprehension that she will get the better of us at last; and he has been looking freshly into her story. She seems not to have had a second "place" (as she told me, and, as I entered in the book, I believed falsely) but to have been taken in, out of charity, by a poor woman whom she basely robbed. She had a great capacity for taking in the chaplains, and would take in most people who had any thing to do with teaching her. It is hopeless to expect the least assistance from her relations,—and, if she do not most thoroughly and entirely amend, she is not a girl with whom it will be possible to hold any lenient terms. I make this report without in the least thinking that it ought to prejudice her if she should do well in future—but, if she do not, it becomes a case of self-defence, and there will be nothing for it but to turn her out.

I purpose being back in town, at latest, this day week. In the meantime any letter addressed to me at Liverpool would find me.

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Would you care to hear my first Number before it comes out?[†4] If you would (though it is reading at a disadvantage to read an incomplete thing) I should be delighted to read it to you—though I needn't say that!

To JOHN INDERMAUR, [?10] FEBRUARY 1852

Mention in next.

To HENRY AUSTIN, 10 FEBRUARY 1852*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Tenth February 1852

My Dear Henry.

As the Guild business takes me (and Wills too) to Manchester and Liverpool today, and as I suppose the Devonshire Terrace half quarter will fall out in my absence, I have written to Mr. Indermaur, the tenant, that you will be happy to conclude the arrangement with him when he pleases. Will you kindly do so. I enclose a cheque[†1] for a whole quarter's rent from Christmas to Lady Day, less Eight Pounds—which will settle the money-part of the business. All he has to give you is an undertaking from Captain Johnson[†2] the Lessor, that he receives him henceforth as a Tenant in my stead.

I suppose you won't be coming to Liverpool on Friday or Saturday? The room in which we act, will be an extraordinary sight. Any letter addressed to me at the Adelphi Hotel will find me from Thursday to Sunday inclusive.

Ever affectionately
CD.

Henry Austin Esquire.

To MRS CHARLES DICKENS, 12 FEBRUARY 1852

MS British Museum.

Adelphi Hotel Liverpool | Thursday Afternoon Twelfth February | 1852

My Dearest Kate.

I found your note here when I arrived at half past twelve today, and was very glad indeed to get it and to know that you and all are well.

I sent you a Manchester Guardian yesterday, in which I suppose you saw a letter from Knowles the manager, printing his solicitor's to me, and my reply, and ending the matter by saying that he never had any intention of interrupting us.[†3] As to the Play, we never attained anything near the success of last night. It was so prodigious that I stepped forward to the front when we were called after the Comedy, and made them a little speech. There were nearly 3000 people present, and (I believe) £600 was taken in money.[†4] It was the most prodigious scene from the Stage, I ever saw. Everything went to perfection. Collins was admirable—got up excellently, played thoroughly well, and missed nothing. Miss Mitchell ditto.[†5] As to the Farce, they cannot have heard half of it, they laughed to that amazing extent. I really had doubts whether we should ever get beyond the Scene with the fowl and bottle, after the combat.[†6] There was a call after the Farce too,—and in short I never saw such people.

Burnett was there, and lingered about the Rehearsal in the morning, and supped with us. He is doing well, and looks well, and the boy is a capital boy with a healthy face.[†1]

Of Mr. Copeland,[†2] the manager here, I (as yet) know nothing. It is now a quarter past 4, and we are going to dine at the Town Hall at 6, and I have been keeping myself quiet by my bedroom fire, with a book. Radley[†3] looks just the same, and asked after you with a good deal of interest. We have the same rooms as when we were here last—had the same at Manchester too. Mrs. Muspratt called this morning, looking extraordinarily older. If the second night be a decided bumper, I cannot make out a less result of profit altogether, from this trip, than a Thousand Pounds!

John has just come in (looking very seedy) with my dress boots. A violent telegraphing is going on between this and Manchester, about Lemon's portmanteau, which has been left behind. Dudley is writing a long letter to Mary. Wills has fallen asleep, with a rasped red nose, in the act of writing "to the little woman". Horne is discovered to be sweet in secret, both on little Miss Young[†4] and on Miss Mitchell—Bell, damnably jealous. Topham lost Charles Knight's luggage this morning (nobody can imagine what he had to do with it) and made me laugh so by his ridiculous confusion that I feel as if I had been crying.

God bless you. Loves to Georgina, Mamey, Katey, Keeryleemoo,[†5] Alfred, Sydney, and the Jolly Post Boy.[†6]

Ever affectionately

CD.

Mrs. Charles Dickens.

To MRS CHARLES DICKENS, 13 FEBRUARY 1852

MS British Museum.

Adelphi Hotel Liverpool | Friday Thirteenth February 1852

My Dearest Kate. Instead of taking my pleasure today as I expected to do, I found something frightfully wrong at the Philharmonic Hall,[†1] and had to find (in a moment) half a dozen upholsterers, 200 yards of calico, and no end of invention in the way of contrivance.[†2] I was detained there until nearly 4 (instead of 3—our dinner hour) and scribble this before going down to dress.

It is a most beautiful hall—fitted with numbers of private boxes, and very like an Italian Theatre. It will look very fine, when full.

A requisition has come from Manchester, signed by everybody, to the effect that if we will give another performance there in May, when we go to Birmingham,—they will fill the Free Trade Hall once more.[†3] The success seems to have been quite astounding.[†4]

Our dinner with the Mayor[†5] yesterday, was far handsomer than a dinner at Windsor Castle.[†6] He is a fine young fellow (extraordinarily unlike a Mayor), is a great Yachter, and is the man who took the people out of the Ocean Monarch when she was lost. Perhaps you remember the case.[†7] A brilliant snuff box presented to him afterwards, was handed round at dinner; and, having to propose his health, I turned it on the snuffbox, to the boundless fervor of the guests—who persisted in drinking my health three times, to get three speeches.[†1] Our men were in such a state of enthusiastic delight with their Representative that they were embracing me all round, when we came home. And indeed the earnest admiration and love of the people towards one, is something quite bewildering—or would be, if one were not steady in such matters.

Lemon appears, ready for the Theatre (desiring all manner of kind remembrances) so I close abruptly. I shall be home, please God, in good time on Sunday Evening.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To CHARLES KNIGHT, 15 FEBRUARY 1852*

MS Dickens House.

Tavistock House | Sunday Night | February Fifteenth 1852

My Dear Knight

John brought the enclosed from Liverpool this evening. Don't forget that you dine with me on Monday the first of March at a quarter past Six.

Faithfully Yours Ever

CD.

Charles Knight Esquire.

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 15 FEBRUARY 1852

MS Lytton Papers.

Tavistock House | Sunday Night | Fifteenth February 1852

My Dear Bulwer. I left Liverpool at 4 o'Clock this morning, and am so blinded by excitement, gas, and waving hats and handkerchiefs, that I can scarcely see to write—but I cannot go to bed without telling you what a triumph we have had. Allowing for the necessarily heavy expences of all kinds, I believe we can scarcely fund less than a Thousand Pounds out of this trip alone. And more than that—the extraordinary interest taken in the idea of the Guild by "this grand people of England" down in those vast hives, and the enthusiastic welcome they give it, assure me that we may do what we will, if we will only be true and faithful to our design. There is a social recognition of it, which I cannot give you the least idea of. I sincerely believe that we have the ball at our feet, and may throw it up to the very Heaven of Heavens. And I don't speak for myself alone, but for all our people—and not least of all for Forster, who has been absolutely stunned by the tremendous earnestness of these great places.

To tell you (especially after your affectionate letter) what I would have given to have had you there, would be idle. But I can most seriously say that all the sights of the earth turn pale in my eyes, before the sight of three thousand people with one heart among them, and no capacity in them, in spite of all their efforts, of sufficiently testifying to you how they believe you to be right and feel that they cannot do enough to cheer you on. They understood the play (far better acted by this time than ever you have seen it) as well as you do. They allowed nothing to escape them. They rose up, when it was over, with a perfect fury of delight—and the Manchester people sent a requisition after us to Liverpool, to say that if we will go back there in May when we act at Birmingham (as of course we shall) they will joyfully undertake to fill the Free Trade Hall again. Among the tories of Liverpool,[†1] the reception was equally enthusiastic.[†2] We played, two nights running, to a Hall crowded to the Roof[†3]—more like the opera at Genoa or Milan, than anything else I can compare it to. We dined at the Town Hall, magnificently, and it made no difference in the response. I said what we were quietly determined to do (when the Guild was given as the Toast of the night) and really they were so noble and generous in their encouragement that I should have been more ashamed of myself than I hope I ever shall be, if I could have felt conscious of having ever, for a moment, faltered in the work.

I will answer for Birmingham—for any great working town to which we choose to go. We have won a position for the idea which years upon years of labor could not have given it. I believe its worldly fortunes to have been advanced in this last week, fifty years at least. I fully express to you what Forster (who couldn't be at Liverpool,[†4] and has not those shouts ringing in his ears) has felt from the moment we set foot in Manchester. Believe me, we may carry a perfect fiery cross through the North of England and over the Border, in this cause, if need be—not only to the enrichment of the cause, but to the lasting enlistment of the people's sympathy.

I have been so happy in all this, that I could have cried on the shortest notice any time since Tuesday. And I do believe that our whole body would have gone to the North Pole with me, if I had shewn them good reason for it.

I strongly question now, whether it is expedient to contemplate, as yet, any specific time for discontinuing these exertions. I will think of it, between this and Saturday when we meet, but I am very much disposed to put it to the rest that we must go on while great towns remain open to us.

I hope I am not so tired but that you may be able to read this. I have been at it, almost incessantly, day and night, for a week, and I am afraid my hand-writing suffers. But in all other respects I am only a Giant refreshed.[†5]

The Company are going to dine with me on Monday the 1st. of March at a quarter past 6. I will not ask you to come, fearing you may not be well enough.

We meet next Saturday, you recollect? Until then, and ever afterwards, believe me

Heartily Yours

CD.

Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton.

To ROBERT ADDISON,[†1] 16 FEBRUARY 1852*

MS Mr Leonard Bloom. Address: R. Addison Esquire | 210 Regent Street.

Tavistock House | Sixteenth February 1852

Dear Sir

You are at perfect liberty to assure Mr. Brandard[†2] that I have great pleasure in giving him the permission he asks for.[†3]

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

R. Addison Esquire.

To HENRY AUSTIN, 16 FEBRUARY 1852*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Sixteenth February 1852.

My Dear Henry

If you will return me the cheque, Wills shall settle with the enemy.

We have made such a prodigious success at Manchester and Liverpool, that we shall bank (after payment of all the heavy expences) a Thousand Pounds from that short trip alone.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To FREDERICK ESSE,[†4] 16 FEBRUARY 1852*

MS Signore Francesco Pertile.

Tavistock House | Sixteenth February 1852

Dear Sir

I have been out of town for a week, and received your kind note and its accompanying pamphlet[†5] only yesterday.

Allow me to thank you cordially for your remembrance, and to remain

Very faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Frederick Esse Esquire

To THE DUKE OF DEVONSHIRE, 17 FEBRUARY 1852

MS Devonshire Collections, Chatsworth.

Tavistock House, Tavistock Square | Tuesday Seventeenth February 1852

My Dear Duke of Devonshire

I know you will share my delight when I tell you that we have just returned from our first real earnest Guild trip, with triumphant success. We have played one night in Manchester, and two in Liverpool. The enthusiasm of the people, and their appreciation of our object, have known no bounds. Mayors and Corporations have given us splendid entertainments; the halls where we have played, have been crammed to the roof with rapturous auditors of all degrees; requisitions have come after us, entreating us to go back and play again (as you may be sure we shall!), and, although we have been away only five days, I believe we shall bank at once, after payment of all the necessarily heavy expences, more than a good round one thousand pounds. Besides which, the general interest is so extraordinarily fervent that I believe we may turn it to almost any honest account we will. I can hardly tell you how encouraged we all are.

Jerrold, you will be sorry to hear, has deserted us under circumstances that do not at all improve the act. I have said "deserted us", but I ought rather to say has deserted himself. It is no new infirmity of his, however, never to be true to himself. I am mistaken if he do not bitterly repent this false step, long after it is too late.

The whole company, and the Artists who painted the Scenes, are going to dine with me here, on Monday the 1st of March at a quarter past six. We all feel so naturally and gratefully that you are our Head, that I am emboldened to add what now follows.—If you feel in your kindness that it would not be disagreeable to you to join such a party, and if your health should admit of your doing so without inconvenience, you would delight a number of devoted gentlemen and would honor my house. I will not say more. I have (with reason) that profound confidence in you which assures me that I cannot seem to presume upon your generosity when I give expression to what I most earnestly feel and desire; and I will only add that your presence would be a precious addition to our reasons for being very seriously in earnest.[†1]

Believe me | My Dear Lord Duke | Ever Yours faithfully and obliged
CHARLES DICKENS

The | Duke of Devonshire

To JOHN LEECH, 17 FEBRUARY 1852

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: John Leech Esquire | 31 Notting Hill Terrace.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Night | Seventeenth February 1852

My Dear Leech.

We talked of having a day at Eton. Will you go down with me on Tuesday next—Shrove Tuesday? If you reply "yes", I will let you know at what time I propose that we shall meet at the Great Western Paddington Terminus.

Ever Yours Cordially
CD.

John Leech Esquire.

To CHARLES MANBY, 17 FEBRUARY 1852

Text from Outlook, XXXII (1913), 524.

Tavistock House | Tuesday, Seventeenth February 1852.

My dear Manby.

I find that in my absence from town, my wife has been adding to the number of our obligations to you. Nevertheless, I am so hardened as to say, in spite of this knowledge, that I shall be very glad to have an Adelphi[†1] box for Saturday, if you should have one to spare. I want it for some country people[†2] about me who I know right well would never pay, or I wouldn't have the request on my conscience. That I always consider a point of honor.

Faithfully yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Manby Esquire.

To JOHN MITCHELL, 17 FEBRUARY 1852*

MS Shakespeare Memorial Library, Stratford.

Tavistock House, Tavistock Square | Tuesday Seventeenth February 1852

My Dear Sir

Will you have the kindness to let me know—of course I ask this, privately—when you expect our good friend Regnier?[†3] I want to make an arrangement to be in town then.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Mitchell Esquire

To DAVID ROBERTS, 17 FEBRUARY 1852

Summary in Sotheby catalogue, Nov 1887; dated Tavistock House, 17 Feb 52; addressed David Roberts.

Asking him to dine with him to meet the Amateur Company of the Guild of Literature and Art.

To MARK LEMON, 18 FEBRUARY 1852*

MS University of Kentucky.

Red Lion Court[†1] | Wednesday 18th. February | 1852

My Dear Mark. I called to report Progress,[†2] and have a word about things in general. I am now going to stroll up (on the St. Bride's side of the way,[†3] except in St. Pauls Churchyard) as far as Cornhill, and back. If I don't meet you, I will repeat my call here, on my return.

Affectionately Ever
CD.

Mark Lemon Esquire

To JOHN T. SINNETT,[†4] 18 FEBRUARY 1852

Extracts in T. F. Madigan catalogue, Christmas 1937 and Sotheby catalogue, Aug 1934 (aa); MS 3 pp.; dated Tavistock House, 18 Feb 52; addressed John T. Sinnett.

I only feel myself at liberty to assure you that whatever is offered to me for insertion in Household Words is honestly read, and is considered as offered in confidence.[a] I may observe that I am an advocate of Temperance, but think Total Abstinence an unreasonable thing to be forced upon temperate people.[a†5]

To MISS WELCH,[†6] 18 FEBRUARY 1852

Extract in John Heise catalogue, No. 2455; MS (3rd person) 1 p.; dated Tavistock House, 18 Feb 52.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Miss Welch and begs to acknowledge receipt of her obliging note. He regrets, however, that other engagements deprive him of the pleasure of accepting Miss Welch's invitation.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 19 FEBRUARY 1852

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Thursday Nineteenth February | 1852

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I have appointed to go to the House of Detention[†1] today at 2 o'Clock to see the girl recommended by Mr. Hardwick the Magistrate[†2] (brother to the Architect); whom I shall take, in accordance with your wish, if her case seem a good one.

I return the Dens of London.[†3] It is perfectly true in the main, though the accounts which such people give of themselves are perhaps as little to be trusted as anything that can be put into human speech.[†4] Moreover, it is done (to my thinking) with such an excruciating flatness and insipidity that it is hard labor to read it.[†5]

Mr. Austin having only just gone on his Board of Health expedition, and Mr. Hardwick having found that piece of ground[†6] (which promises capitally) what do you think of Mr. Brown and I making an expedition to the spot in the first instance? Such questions as suggest themselves to us, we can then refer to Dr. Southwood Smith and Mr. Austin, with whom I will then make another expedition. I think we shall get at everything desirable to be known, in this way, without losing time. Or I will ask Dr. Southwood Smith to go with Mr. Brown and me on the first voyage of discovery, if he can.

I am going down to have a holiday with Charley next Tuesday;[†7] and on Wednesday evening I must present myself at Lady John's.[†8] I have no other engagement (except Work) next week, and should be happy to dine with you any day. If you will arrange with Mr. Brown, I will be at his disposal, for exploring purposes, any afternoon he likes to name in next week, subject to these two engagements.

The idea of the wooden building[†9] is an excellent one,—but I fear the Building Act, which (like most other Acts) is full of preposterous stipulations.

With kindest regards to Mrs. Brown

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, [19] FEBRUARY 1852*

MS Morgan Library. Date: misdated by CD; clearly follows the preceding letter.

Tavistock House | Thursday Eighteenth February | 1852

My Dear Miss Coutts. I send this as a Postscript to my former letter of this morning, for two reasons. Firstly, because in that letter I forgot that I am engaged on Monday Evening, to visit the Ragged School Dormitory.[†1] Secondly, to add that I have been to the House of Detention, and seen three cases—neither of which will do, in consequence of the girls not wanting to go abroad.

Ever Faithfully Yours

CD.

To JOHN LEECH, 20 FEBRUARY 1852

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: John Leech Esquire | 31 Notting Hill Terrace.

Tavistock House | Friday Night | Twentieth February 1852

My Dear John Leech (see Tupper).[†2]

On Tuesday next, the train for Slough, starts at a quarter before eleven A. M. Faithful to his rule of being at Railways a quarter of an hour before the starting-time, a youth of noble form[†3] and stately (but not severe) presence, will be descried on the steps of the first-class booking office Door at the Paddington Terminus, as the bells of this great city chime half past ten. In the features of that noble youth, an observer will descry the lineaments of

The Inimitable

CHARLES DICKENS

To [FRANK] TOOLE,[†1] 21 FEBRUARY 1852*

MS Princeton University Library.

Tavistock House | Twenty First February 1852.

Mr. Charles Dickens begs to inform Mr. Toole that he is engaged on Monday, and cannot avail himself of the enclosed tickets. Nor could he, in any case, give Mr. Toole any information as to the probabilities of a Dramatic author's writing an entertainment for his brother.[†2]

To FRANK STONE, 22 FEBRUARY 1852*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Sunday Twenty Second February | 1852.

My Dear Stone.

I put my name on Mr. Wyatt's balloting paper[†2] last night, with great pleasure. Forster also appended his.[†3] It is very numerously and well signed.

Faithfully Ever
CHARLES DICKENS

Frank Stone Esquire.

To W. H. WILLS, 22 FEBRUARY 1852*

MS Huntington Library.

Tavistock House | Sunday Twenty Second February | 1852.

My Dear Wills

Perhaps you may like to read the enclosed,[†1] in advance of the Public.

When you have done with it will you let me have it back, as I have promised it to Talfourd, and don't like to multiply Proofs, lest I should multiply the chances of their getting about.

Faithfully Ever
CD.

W. H. Wills Esquire

To JOHN T. LAWRENCE, 23 FEBRUARY 1852*

MS Clifton College. Address: John T Lawrence Esquire | Balsall Heath | near | Birmingham.

Guild of Literature and Art, | 10, Lancaster Place, Strand. | Monday Afternoon 23rd. Feby. 1852

My Dear Sir

Before coming out just now, I found your note. I write a few words in reply on arriving here.

Nothing can be better than two nights in succession at Birmingham, as a great deal of expence will thus be saved. Therefore, I book Wednesday the 12th. May and Thursday the 13th. as our two Town Hall nights.

I quite agree with you that Mr. Simpson would venture to do nothing; the like sound and fury in Manchester and Liverpool having come (against the popular sentiment contrariwise) to nothing. Still I think it well to be within the law, and quite concur with you as to getting the License. All doubt on that point therefore, I consider disposed of.

Mr. Wills and I will arrange to come down before March is out.

Mrs. Dickens appreciates your encouragement to revolt, in the highest manner, and is now quite beyond controul. She joins me in kindest remembrances, and I am My Dear Sir

Ever Cordially Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John T. Lawrence Esquire.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 24 FEBRUARY 1852

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Twenty Fourth February 1852

My Dear Miss Coutts

At the Ragged School last night, I saw a case (among several impracticable cases) which I hope may turn out a good one. The girl is 17. I accepted her, and have sent instructions to Mrs. Morson respecting her clothes.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts

To MRS GASKELL, 25 FEBRUARY 1852

MS John Rylands Library.

Tavistock House | (Silver Street, Golden Square, California)[†1] | Twenty Fifth February 1852

My Dear Mrs Gaskell. A hasty note, after writing my head nearly off. Thomas Wright[†2] shall be heartily championed, and with all possible speed.[†3] By a curious coincidence I had sent, the day before I received your letter, my small help to his subscription.[†4] O what a lazy woman you are, and where IS[†5] that article![†6]

Ever Faithfully Yours
CD.

To [?THOMAS CHAPMAN], [?27 FEBRUARY 1852]

Mention in To Wills, 28 Feb 52.

Reply to letter suggesting article about Light Buoys.

To ALBANY FONBLANQUE, 28 FEBRUARY 1852*

MS Yale University Library.

Tavistock House | Twenty Eighth February 1852

My Dear Fonblanque

I have thought that a very brisk and pleasant paper for Household Words might be made out of yachting. As Mr. Horne, to whom I should entrust it, would require to be crammed, I have been casting about in my mind for somebody who might know some other enthusiastic somebody who would stand a cross-examination on the subject. All at once you have come into my mind as an Aquatic Sporter with whom I once breakfasted on board a certain Craft, and on every delicacy of the season![†1] Can you think of any Amateur Sailor who would like to be the source of inspiration? There must be some such people in the R.T.Y.C.[†2] surely![†3]

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Albany Fonblanque Esquire.

To JOHN HILLS, 28 FEBRUARY 1852

Text from N, II, 380-1.

Tavistock House | Twenty Eighth February 1852

Dear Sir

I have delayed reading the paper on the treatment of the insane, until a great accumulation of matter in type for Household Words, which it was absolutely necessary to release, should be cleared away and I should be enabled to read it to some purpose.

I have now gone through it carefully. The remarks I am about to make in reference to it, do not apply to its abstract merits or demerits, but simply to its suitability to the pages of my Journal.

It is, for the matter that is in it, far too long. If we were to treat every subject in the same way we could do nothing. It is too didactic and in several places, wanders about when it should go straight to the point. If it were printed in its present form it would obtain but few readers out of a very large audience and would be positively injurious to the number in which it appeared. I think it might be reduced by at least one third, and serve the cause much more than it could ever do uncondensed.

I should be happy to accept it and to reduce it without compromising any principle maintained in it, if I were sure of the author's sanction.[†4] But as I am not, and as I remember that he was not perfectly satisfied on a former occasion I prefer not to touch it, and to leave him to withdraw it intact if he should desire so to do. To hold discussions on such details, is absolutely impossible—it would consume my whole life, if I did nothing else. I can only accept his confidence with a wish to do it perfect justice, if he will give it unreservedly. If not I would rather, in all good humour, decline it: though I am much interested in the subject he treats, and highly esteem his claim of a hearing.[†1]

Faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To LOVELL A. REEVE,[†2] 28 FEBRUARY 1852*

MS University of Texas.

Tavistock House | Twenty Eighth February 1852

My Dear Sir

I owe you many thanks for the Literary Gazette.[†3] I have read the paper on Shelley[†4] with the greatest satisfaction, as a manly, generous, and gallant championship.[†5]

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. Lovell Reeve Esquire.[†6]

To W. H. WILLS, 28 FEBRUARY 1852

MS Huntington Library.

Tavistock House | Twenty Eighth February 1852

My Dear Wills

These people[†7] have really managed the expences most admirably, and deserve our best consideration.

I immediately replied to the enclosed[†1] about the Light Buoys.[†2] I wish you would go down, see the nature of the thing, and make an appointment for Horne, unless it seems to you something that you and I could decidedly do better together. If Horne does it, tell him that the question of the Trinity House, or the Corporation, has no need to be touched at all—that we want a piece of good description.[†3]

Miss Zornlevin, or whatever her name is[†4]—have you asked about her? Miss Coutts is coming here this evening, and I should like to be able to give her some information, or Miss Z's address, or something.

In the Parliamentary matter,[†5]—it is impossible that I could go into it with the new book in hand. If I had only H.W. I might possibly make the dash, but I should be worried to death if I did it now. And I don't know but I am far more useful (and certainly far more happy) in my own sphere of service than among the bellowers and prosers of St. Stephens.

Ever Faithfully

CD

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 29 FEBRUARY 1852*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Sunday Twenty Ninth February | 1852.

My Dear Miss Coutts. I opened the enclosed (from the chaplain of the House of Detention)[†6] after you left last night. I don't like to reply to it without first writing to you, but I fear there is no possibility of our taking the case, on account of our being full?—Is there?

Ever Most Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To FRANK STONE, 29 FEBRUARY 1852*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Sunday Twenty Ninth February | 1852.

My Dear Stone. Are you disposed for a long walk this morning?[†1] I am going out at 12, by Hampstead, Hendon, and round home by the Edgeware Road,[†2] where the little Carriage will come to meet me.[†3]

Affecy. always

CD.

Frank Stone Esquire

March

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, [?1 MARCH 1852]*

MS Morgan Library. Date: CD's "Monday Twenty Sixth February 1852" may be error for Mon 1 Mar; Mon 23 Feb impossible, as CD at Eton next day, and Thurs 26 Feb very unlikely in view of reference to being at the Home "tomorrow".

Tavistock House | Monday Twenty Sixth February | 1852

My Dear Miss Coutts.

Although the facts stated in Sir George Grey's letter, may afford no reason for hope in us, they certainly give a reason for the recommendation of the Court of Quarter Sessions, and relieve the case from any suspicion of extra-stupidity or misrepresentation. I think upon the whole I would try the case[†4] at the Home.

Tomorrow is our day there.

Ever Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 2 MARCH 1852

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Evening | Second March 1852

My Dear Miss Coutts.

This was the Committee Day at Shepherds Bush. Mr. Chesterton and Mr. Tracey attended. The girls were all looking very well, and everything was satisfactory. As Mary Anne Church is, in a manner, out of our hands, I thought it best not to have her in. There being a complaint of Watts in Mrs. Morson's Diary, Mr. Tracey (from whose place she came) spoke very gravely to her.

I send you the book, for 5 weeks. As Mrs. Morson had no money for petty cash, I gave her, in all, a cheque for fifty Pounds.

Mr. Hardwick and I paid a visit to the ground[†5] yesterday, and went minutely over it, and the immediate neighbourhood. I mentioned something to him in reference to the position of such houses as you may build which I will mention to you, and which I think you will quite agree with. We afterwards went to "The Model Buildings"[†1]—a collection of small houses which I visited when they were first erected by a Society, and which I should greatly like you to see one day.[†2]

I enclose the plan.

The chip shall be duly presented.[†3] We were obliged to go to Press again with Bleak House No. 1, last night.

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Mamey and Katey are in ecstacies, as I write, with Mrs. Brown's kind notes and presents.

To DAVID ROBERTS, 2 MARCH 1852*

MS Fales Collection, New York University Library.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Second March 1852

My Dear Roberts. As we were interrupted in speaking of our G. friends[†4] last night,[†5] I write you this short note to beg you not to be at the trouble of doing more than denying (if you do so much) such ridiculous stories.[†6] I should begin to feel ashamed of myself if I thought any friend of mine had need to notice them if he knew me.

Faithfully Yours Ever
CHARLES DICKENS

David Roberts Esquire.

To DAVID ROBERTS, 2 MARCH 1852*

MS Cornell University Library.

Tavistock House | Second March 1852.

Pray do not suppose, my dear Roberts, that I misunderstood you in the least, or had anything but a hearty pleasure in your cordiality—as I always have. I was only afraid, this morning, that you might treat a trifle not worth consideration, more earnestly than it deserved, and therefore wrote you a line. I would on no consideration lay out so good a quality to such ill advantage. Let the thing go by! Whatever is true, will assert itself.

Ever faithfully Yours
CD.

To MRS COWDEN CLARKE, 3 MARCH 1852.

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

Tavistock House | Third March 1852

My Dear Mrs. Clarke.

It is almost an impertinence to tell you how delightful your flowers were to me; for you who thought of that beautiful and delicately-timed token of sympathy and remembrance,[†1] must know it very well already.

I do assure you that I have hardly ever received anything with so much pleasure in all my life. They are not faded yet—are on my table here—but never can fade out of my remembrance.

I should be less than a Young Gas, and more than an old Manager—that commemorative portfolio[†2] is here too—if I could relieve my heart of half that it would say to you. All my house are my witnesses that you have quite filled it, and this note is my witness that I can not empty it!

Ever Faithfully | And Gratefully | Your friend
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Cowden Clarke.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 3 MARCH 1852

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Third March 1852

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I have received the money, safely.[†3]

The "Model Buildings" are close to Bagnigge Wells.[†4] They lie between it and Calthorpe Street Gray's Inn Road.[†1] Drive to either place, and any one will shew you where they are, close at hand. Don't be alarmed by the apparent size of the little houses, because every house is in reality two complete houses.[†2] Knock at any door, and ask the people to let you see their rooms. There are houses of two sizes. Pray see both. The people are very civil and obliging, and will explain anything to you.

One house (I think No. 17)[†3] is a large one, let in single rooms to widows and old women. It is capital. For eighteen pence a week, an old creature lives healthily, peacefully, and in perfect comfort—as far as her lodging and washing go.[†4]

Ever Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To CHARLES F. ELLERMAN, 3 MARCH 1852*

MS Dickens House.

Tavistock House, Tavistock Square | Third March 1852

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Ellerman, and begs to assure Mr. Ellerman that he will accept the proposed compliment[†5] with pleasure, and that he is very sensible of the feeling with which it is proffered.

To THOMAS COE, 4 MARCH 1852*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Thursday Night | Fourth March 1852

Dear Mr. Coe. Will you have the goodness to get me a correct copy from the Prompt Book of the part of Hardman. I can do better with it than we have yet done, in getting it under-studied.[†6] Let all the business and places be in it.

I think we shall want another Prompt-Book for the Orchestra. I will tell you what I want to do with it,[†1] if you will call on me any morning at your convenience.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To F. M. EVANS, 4 MARCH 1852*

MS Bradbury, Agnew & Co. Ltd.

Tavistock House | Fourth March 1852

My Dear Evans.

Will you send the first No. of Bleak House "From the Author", to Charles Manby Esquire 25 Great George Street Westminster, and place his name on the Free List regularly.[†2]

—Accounts to last Christmas?[†3]

Faithfully Yours always
CD.

F. M. Evans Esquire

To GEORGE HOGARTH, 4 MARCH 1852

MS John Rylands Library.

Tavistock House | Fourth March 1852

My Dear Hogarth

I was very much pleased to get your kind note yesterday, and to find that you think so highly of No. 1.[†4] It has been a very great success, and is blazing away merrily.[†5]

Affectionately Ever
CHARLES DICKENS

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 4 MARCH 1852

MS Lytton Papers.

Tavistock House | Thursday Fourth March 1852

My Dear Bulwer

I am heartily obliged to you, and the General Theatrical Fund are quite out of their wits, for you relieve them from an immense difficulty.[†6] They will send you their report and so forth very soon. They beg me to return their most grateful thanks, and to say that they will proceed to announce you, relying on electioneering *im*probabilities.[†1]

With reference to the Guild it is a particularly graceful and well-timed thing to render them this help. For it will suggest, both to the profession and the public, that the Curmudgeon Managers who grumble about us are unconscionable and thankless fools.[†2]

I shall be delighted to have that talk about Bleak House.

Ever Heartily Yours

CD.

Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton.

To AUGUSTUS TRACEY, 4 MARCH 1852

Mention in next.

To AUGUSTUS TRACEY, 4 MARCH 1852*

MS University of Texas.

Tavistock House | Fourth March 1852

My Dear Tracey. Since I wrote to you just now, I have heard from Forster that he has received news of his mother's death[†3] (she has been decaying a long time), and is obliged to go to Newcastle.

He says will Saturday the 13th. suit you, instead of the previous proposal?

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 5 MARCH 1852*

MS Morgan Library.

Friday Fifth March 1852

My Dear Miss Coutts.

Will you read the enclosed letter from Mr. Hardwick's brother, the Magistrate, and tell me what you think of the case. It perplexes me, because it seems at first so strange that the woman should leave her child—unless she has a vague idea of having it bye and bye restored to her abroad, when she can support it, and be free from her present misery. I do not like to go and see her, without knowing your opinion.[†4]

I have made enquiries into the case of the working Men, whose letter I return. There is no doubt of their being in great distress, but I fear there is no doubt too of their being quite wrong in supposing it possible, to proceed without the assistance of Capital. Their masters may be to blame in some things; but their general charge against them about the reduction of wages is a blind mistake of suffering men. These workmen have fallen behind the time; they are in many respects extraordinarily difficult men to deal with; and what they propose to do, I believe to be impossible. I am assured that they are quite astray in their business, and that this manufacturing warehouse of theirs presents a very hopeless spectacle. There is no doubt (let me say again) of their being very poor and distressed.[†1]

I enclose Mr. Claxton's[†2] letters. I have made, for next week's No., what I hope you may think an interesting little chip. I have called it, The Fine Arts in Australia.[†3]

Dear Miss Coutts | Ever Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To JOHN HARDWICK, 5 MARCH 1852*

MS University of California, Berkeley.

Tavistock House | Fifth March 1852

My Dear Hardwick

The child is the difficulty. It might be ill, she might be unhappy about it, it might die away from her, we might assume the position of seeming to encourage the relinquishment of the strongest of the natural affections.

If you think very well of the case, Miss Coutts (who feels these objections conclusive as to its admission into the Home, where we have not, and never had, any such instance) would "willingly help her to go out".[†4] Shall I come and see her? Name a time, in any afternoon, that will suit you (the later in the afternoon, the better for me), and I will present myself to hold counsel with you.

Faithfully Yours Ever

CHARLES DICKENS

John Hardwick Esquire.

To T. CROFTON CROKER, 6 MARCH 1852

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: T. Crofton Croker Esquire | 3 Gloucester Road | Old Brompton.

Tavistock House | Sixth March 1852

My Dear Sir

I have the greatest interest in those gallant men,[†5] and should have been delighted to dine in their company. I feel truly obliged to you for your kind remembrance on such an occasion.

But I am engaged to Lord Lansdowne[†1] on Wednesday, and can only drink to them in the spirit—which I have often done when they have been farther off.[†2]

I hope you will find occasion to put on your cocked hat,[†3] that they may see how terrific and imposing "a fore and after"[†4] can be made on shore.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

T. Crofton Croker Esquire.

To AUGUSTUS TRACEY, 6 MARCH 1852*

MS University of Texas.

Tavistock House | Sixth March 1852

My Dear Tracey.

On Saturday the 13th. at 6 (six) we will drop alongside your steak, and grapple, yard arm to yard arm. Excuse my being so nautical—but as an old Salt you know Messmate I can't help it.

Ever Yours
CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 7 MARCH 1852

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street | Piccadilly.

Tavistock House | Sunday Evening | Seventh March 1852

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I went to Mr. Hardwick's Court, yesterday, by appointment, and saw the girl. Her name is Almina (!) Holgate,[†5] and she is twenty seven years of age, but looks younger. She is of exceedingly respectable appearance, and is a good Milliner and Dress Maker. You would have no suspicion of her history from seeing her.

It appears that she has no idea of abandoning her child. The poor people who take care of it for her are so persuaded of that, that they have not the least objection to retain it if she goes to Australia; knowing very well (she says) that she will surely remit money for its support from her earnings. Mr. Hardwick has seen it (it is a little boy aged nine months) and says it is very clean and healthy, and evidently well cared for. She looks forward to having it sent out to her in good time. There was an idea on Mr. Hardwick's part before he wrote to me of sending her down to Lincoln where she knows some poor people. But she said it was of no use; she had better try to begin afresh, and get over all this, and go abroad. It was her only chance of recovering herself.

She is to present herself to him again, on Tuesday Afternoon. How would you wish me to proceed? It seems to be a good case; and if you should think it well to send her out, without passing her through the Home, it occurs to me that it would not be a bad experience for Mrs. Morson if she were to see the girl (as she might do here) and manage the details along with her—throwing the girl upon herself to help herself, but taking care that all you might desire to be done, was thoroughly and faithfully done. Shall I come round to you at a quarter past three on Tuesday, before I go to Mr. Hardwick's Court again? Bleak House will probably hold me until the afternoon.

Dear Miss Coutts | Ever Most Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To F. M. EVANS, [?7 MARCH 1852]

Mention in next.

A note of remonstrance.

To THOMAS BEARD, 8 MARCH 1852

MS Dickens House.

Tavistock House | Monday Evening | Eighth March 1852

My Dear Beard

Evans—strong in conscious probity—returns me the enclosed answer[†1] to my note of remonstrance. I had an idea of trampling on his body, but he seems to dance a mild hornpipe on mine.

Ever Heartily Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Beard Esquire.

To THE REV. W. G. COOKESLEY, MARCH 1852

Mention in To Regnier, 9 Mar 52.

To FRANÇOIS REGNIER, 9 MARCH 1852

MS Comédie Française.

Tavistock House, Tavistock Square | Londres, Mardi 9 Mars, 1852

Mon cher Regnier

Mitchell me dit que vous allez venir a Londres, a la fin du mois courant.[†2] J'espere mon ami que nous aurons, encore une fois, le plaisir de vous recevoir bien souvent, et de vous assurer de notre amitié.

En attendant, je vous ecris sur la part de mon ami The Reverend Mr. Cookesley, homme de lettres très distingué, qui est un des plus erudits professeurs et savants d'Eton College, et qui y demeure. Son fils[†1] va reciter, Juin prochain, quelques morceaux de Moliere devant de la Reine, lors de la visite de Sa Majesté au College.[†2] Son fils etant le premier pupil de l'Ecole, M Cookesley est fort soliciteux qu'il declamerait avec toute la proprieté et toute la grace possible, et il m'ecrit "Do you know any distinguished gentleman attached to the French Theatre, who would hear my boy recite this part, and set him right where he is wrong? I would send him any morning or every morning at any hour, for so desirable a purpose."[†3] Je lui ai repliquai, "Je connais M. Regnier. Personne ne pourrait faire si parfaitement ce que vous voulez, et je lui ecrirai." Mr. Cookesley devient, tout de suite, plein de joie!

Voici tout! M. Cookesley n'est pas riche, mais il est un des hommes les plus distingués en Angleterre, pour sa connaissance des Auteurs Grecs et Latins, et des belles lettres generalement; et je crois que vous—comme artiste, comme bon enfant, en un mot comme Regnier—l'aimerez beaucoup.

Ma femme et ma belle soeur, vous envoient mille amities. Aussi mille amities à Madame Regnier. Est-ce que vous allez amener Madame Regnier a revoir Old England?

Mon cher Regnier | Toujours | votre tout devoué
CHARLES DICKENS

Vous regretterez que Madame Macready ne se porte pas bien. Elle est très malade, et elle l'a eté depuis plusieurs mois. J'ai grande peur qu'elle mourra.[†4]

To JOHN FORSTER, [?9 MARCH 1852]

Text from F, VII, ii, 568. Date: Forster gives 7 Mar, but also says the birth referred to took place on 13 Mar "four days later"; and the dinner with Lord Lansdowne "tomorrow" was 10 Mar.

My Highgate[†5] journey yesterday was a sad one. Sad to think how all journeys tend that way. I went up to the cemetery to look for a piece of ground. In no hope of a Government bill, and in a foolish dislike to leaving the little child shut up in a vault there, I think of pitching a tent under the sky.[†1] . . . Nothing has taken place here: but I believe, every hour, that it must next hour.[†2] Wild ideas are upon me of going to Paris—Rouen—Switzerland—somewhere—and writing the remaining two-thirds of the next No.[†3] aloft in some queer inn room. I have been hanging over it, and have got restless. Want a change I think. Stupid. We were at 30,000 when I last heard.[†4] . . . I am sorry to say that after all kinds of evasions, I am obliged to dine at Lansdowne House to-morrow. But maybe the affair will come off to-night and give me an excuse! I enclose proofs of No. 2. Browne has done Skimpole,[†5] and helped to make him singularly unlike the great original.[†6] Look it over, and say what occurs to you.[†7] . . . Don't you think Mrs. Gaskell charming?[†8] With one ill-considered thing[†9] that looks like a want of natural perception, I think it masterly.

To JOSEPH C. KING, 10 MARCH 1852

Extract in Henry Bristow of Ringwood catalogue No. 281 (1983); MS 1 p.; dated Tavistock House, 10 Mar 52; addressed Joseph King.

Explaining that it has constantly been his intention to call on him with the enclosure[†10] but my occupations have so constantly enforced me with the substitution of the will for the deed that he has not been able to do so, and therefore sends it.

To WILLIAM CHALLINOR,[†11] 11 MARCH 1852

Text from William Challinor, Lectures, Verses, Speeches, Reminiscences, &c (1891), p. 243.

Tavistock House, Tavistock Square, | London | Eleventh March 1852.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Challinor, and begs with many thanks to acknowledge the receipt of his pamphlet[†12] and obliging note.

To CHARLES KNIGHT, 11 MARCH 1852*

MS Dickens House.

Tavistock House | Thursday Evening | Eleventh March 1852

My Dear Knight.

We shall both be delighted to come and wish you many happy returns of the day, next Monday.[†1] You have not, and never had, and never will have, a friend who could do so more heartily than

Yours ever affectionately

CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Knight Esquire

To W. H. WILLS, 13 MARCH 1852

MS Huntington Library.

Tavistock House | Saturday Thirteenth March | 1852

My Dear Wills. I am happy to say that Mrs. Dickens is just confined with a brilliant boy[†2] of unheard-of dimensions, and is wonderfully well.

Will you send Callaghan round with the enclosed, and give him the money to pay for their insertion.[†3]

And don't you think Horne and Morley had best dine with us on Thursday,[†4] with a view to the possible collision of ideas.[†5]

Ever Faithfully

CD.

W. H. Wills Esquire

To MRS GASKELL, [?13-14 MARCH] 1852

Extract[†1] in Goodspeeds Book Shop catalogue No. 150 (1923); MS 2 pp.; dated Office of [Household Words], 1852; addressed Mrs Gaskell.

A golden baby has just arrived at Tavistock House—a perfect Californian[†2] little Duncan—his silver skin laced (internally) with his golden blood.[†3] We think of calling him, appropriately remembering the enchanting home of his infancy, Tom Tiddler.[†4]

To HENRY COMPTON[†5], 15 MARCH 1852*

MS Free Libray of Philadelphia.

Tavistock House Tavistock Square | Monday Fifteenth March 1852

My Dear Sir

It is with great unwillingness that I resist the appeal[†6] you make to me. But similar invitations are proposed to me by scores and by hundreds—so that it is really no small part of the business of my life to answer them. Acceptance being impossible, with any reasonable regard to my pursuits or relaxations, I am obliged to single out two public dinners (very rarely more) in the beginning of a season, to which I will go. And those two settled, I am obliged to be as inflexible to all others as the statue near your windows.[†7] I stand committed to preside for the Gardeners,[†8] and to appear, like a dutiful Trustee, at the General Theatrical Fund.[†9] This shuts me up, double locks, bars, bolts, and chains me. I am not to be broken open by any kind of implement known.

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

H. Compton Esquire

To THE REV. W. G. COOKESLEY, 15 MARCH 1852

Text from Spencer catalogue, n.d.

Tavistock House | Fifteenth March 1852.

My dear Cookesley,

I send you Regnier's letter, from which you will see how readily and heartily he enters into the cause.

Faithfully yours ever
CHARLES DICKENS

The Reverend W. Cookesley, Eton.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 16 MARCH 1852

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts. | Wait.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Sixteenth March 1852

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I shall be delighted to dine with you, this day week.[†1]

The enclosed Nova Scotian proposals[†2] seem to me to be fair enough. I had previously gone over the plan carefully, with Mr. Hardwick,[†3] on the ground. Before you sanction any plan of building, decidedly, I hope you will take Dr. Southwood Smith and Mr. Austin into consultation. I think you would save a great deal of money by doing so, and would get good sanitary arrangements on the most efficient and simple terms. The knowledge that the Board of Health has acquired of all these things, founded upon their personal inspection of the abodes of the poor in all parts of the country, is very important in such a work. I should not like to say this to Mr. Hardwick (knowing what tender corns architects usually have) but I have no doubt that your noble design would benefit by such a course. They know little (but most important) things, beforehand, which an architect would only find out, probably, by your experiencing the want of them when the building was done.

I am happy to say that Mrs. Dickens and the seventh son—whom I cannot afford to receive with perfect cordiality, as on the whole I could have dispensed with him—are as well as possible, and in a most blooming state. I had been in an unsettled and anxious condition for a week or so, but may now shut myself up in Bleak House again.

The Wonderful Lamp does its duty in the most splendid manner.

Dear Miss Coutts | Ever Most Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?10-16 MARCH 1852]

Text from F, VII, ii, 569. Date: probably soon after Forster answered the letter of 9 Mar and before To Forster, 17 Mar.

Refers to the inability to grind sparks out of this dull blade, and strikes out a scheme for Paris. I could not get to Switzerland very well at this time of year. The Jura would be covered with snow. And if I went to Geneva I don't know where I might not go to.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 17 MARCH 1852*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Wednesday Seventeenth March | 1852

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I hope the usually methodical condition of this room, and the state of the envelope-case, will be my sufficient excuse to you for a most ridiculous mistake I have made in accepting your kind invitation for Tuesday. I have been engaged for that day this fortnight past,[†1] and had entirely forgotten it until my sister in law seeing me to day record my pledge to you with all becoming gravity on my slate, arrested me with a sudden reminder that appalled me.

I hope to be able to present myself in the evening at Stratton Street, but I am doubly bound to my unfortunate dinner because my engager is my Household Words Sub-Editor—and if he, or that staff, could suppose their punctual and orderly chief, capable of such a mistake, I tremble to think of the consequences!

Dear Miss Coutts | Ever Most Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To JOHN FORSTER, [17 MARCH 1852]

Extract in F, 1872-4, III, i, 7. Date: 17 Mar according to Forster.

You will see from the enclosed, that Procter[†1] is much of my mind.[†2] I will nevertheless go through the character again in the course of the afternoon, and soften down words here and there.[†3]

To JOHN FORSTER, [18 MARCH 1852]

Extract in F, VI, vii, 550. Date: 18 Mar according to Forster.

But before the day closed, Procter had written to him again, and this was the result. I have again gone over every part of it very carefully, and I think I have made it much less like. I have also changed Leonard to Harold.[†4] I have no right to give Hunt pain, and I am so bent upon not doing it that I wish you would look at all the proof once more, and indicate any particular place in which you feel it particularly like. Whereupon I will alter that place.[†5]

To WILLIAM HOWITT, 19 MARCH 1852†

MS Berg Collection. Address: William Howitt Esquire | Avenue Road | Regents Park.

Tavistock House | Nineteenth March 1852

My Dear Sir

Many thanks for your note and for your paper[†6] also—which I was delighted to open at the office yesterday morning, and to send off straightway to the Printer. A proof shall be sent to you for correction.

I am happy to say that Mrs. Dickens and her boy are in a most blooming condition. I am not quite clear that I particularly wanted the latter, but I have no doubt that he is good for me in some point of view or other.

With kind regards to Mrs. Howitt

Believe me | Ever Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

William Howitt Esquire.

To JOHN LEECH, 19 MARCH 1852

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: John Leech Esquire | 31 Notting Hill Terrace.

Tavistock House | Friday Nineteenth March | 1852

My Dear Leech. I should be delighted to dine with you on Tuesday were I not unfortunately engaged to Wills (for the first time). So is Forster, I know, for Wills told me yesterday he had "booked him".

Ever Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

I am afraid White will have a new and sad trial in Lotty.

To THE HON. MRS RICHARD WATSON, 22 MARCH 1852

MS Huntington Library.

Tavistock House | Monday Night | Twenty Second March 1852

Mr Dear Mrs. Watson.

If you are in a state of sparebedativeness and repose at Rockingham, and will allow me to bring with me my confidential sub Editor &c. &c. and our Guild Honorary Secretary, all summed up in the person of Mr. Wills, who is a very intelligent gentleman (though I could wish him not quite so thin and sharp-nosed) I shall be on my way to Birmingham and one or two other places with my aforesaid Trusty, next week, and propose to myself the undermentioned pleasure:

Namely—to bring Charley to Rockingham on Wednesday Week—to come down by a fast Morning train (I have visions of vague Expresses at 9 or 10) so that we may have a day there—to stay with you that night, and go on to Birmingham next morning. If you should have any kind of engagements or visitors that stand in the way, I believe you will tell me so, and therefore I dont hesitate to "propose" (as a friend of ours[†1] might say) in this business-like manner.

Talking of which friend, I can't help adding that I was so delighted with him the other day! I do think that noble freshness and enthusiasm that can confidently afford to be itself and shew itself, is one of the finest qualities (including no end of others) in the World! The manner in which my uncountable children disappeared when he talked to me, and I stood again upon the enchanted Island of those brilliant old proposals of my own (accepted in the most fervent manner, and never coming to anything) which graced the thousands of years (as they seem to me now) when I was yet an infant in the eye of the law[†1]—is a proof to me, in itself, of the goodness of such a character.

I have been writing all day,[†2] and, if I were to write more here, should go on for I can't foresee how many pages. I had better go out, instead, and have a long walk—for both our sakes.

My loving remembrances to the Member for Peterboro'.[†3] I think I shall make you and him laugh by telling you about a little dinner I had with Brougham at Rogers's last Friday, which for a spectral and ghastly Boredom surpasses all my experience.

Ever Dear Mrs. Watson | Most Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 25 MARCH 1852*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Thursday Twenty Fifth March | 1852

My Dear Miss Coutts. I was at the Household Words Office all day yesterday, and did not receive your note until night.

Will Tuesday do? If it will, I shall be delighted (with Miss Hogarth's full permission) to come and meet Layard. On Wednesday I am going down to Rockingham for the night, and then on to Shrewsbury, for a five day's[†4] absence altogether—and Monday afternoon will be a Household Words job. But Tuesday will be the very thing, if it will suit you. I shall be back by the Sunday following, and available for any day in that week, if the said Tuesday should not do.

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To JAMES BOWER HARRISON, 26 MARCH 1852

MS Private (destroyed in Prestwick air-crash Dec 1954). Address: James Bower Harrison Esquire | Higher Broughton | Manchester.

London, Tavistock House | Twenty Sixth March 1852

Dear Sir

I beg to thank you for your interesting pamphlet,[†1] and to add that I shall be very happy to accept an article from you on the subject, for Household Words.[†2] I should already have suggested to you that I should have great pleasure in receiving contributions from one so well and peculiarly qualified to treat of many interesting subjects, but that I felt a delicacy in encroaching on your other occupations.

Will you excuse my remarking that, to make an article on this particular subject, useful, it is essential to address the employed, as well as the employers. In the case of the Sheffield grinders, the difficulty was, for many years, not with the masters, but the men. Painters who use white lead are, with the greatest difficulty, persuaded to be particular in washing their hands. And I dare say I need not remind you that one could not generally induce domestic servants to attend to the commonest sanitary principles,[†3] in their work, without absolutely forcing them to experience their comfort and convenience.

Dear Sir | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

James Bower Harrison Esquire.

To MRS MORSON, 26 MARCH 1852

MS Miss Alice West.

Tavistock House | Twenty Sixth March | 1852

Dear Mrs. Morson

Yes.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN T. LAWRENCE, 29 MARCH 1852

Summary from N, II, 384. Dated Tavistock House, 29 Mar 52; addressed John T. Lawrence.

Saying Mr. Wills and he purpose visiting Birmingham on Thursday; he hopes to see Mr. Lawrence at the station, and intends going on to Shrewsbury in the evening.

To CHARLES COOTE, 30 MARCH 1852*

MS Mr Peter Goodricke. Address: C. Coote Esquire.

Tavistock House, Tavistock Square | Thirtieth March 1852

My Dear Sir

I am going to ask you to do the Guild a service which no man can better render it, or be (I am inclined to think) more willing to render it, than you.

You remember the dark lady of Deadman's lane in our Comedy? I have observed, in acting to great audiences, that the effect of her appearance would be immensely increased, if there were a very low mysterious strain of music just breathed by the Orchestra whenever she appears.†1 I would have it always the same strain, and I would connect it with her all through the play, to where I am waiting behind the chair in the last Scene, and where Mr. Lemon†2 goes out to be reunited to her. It should be "spoken through", as on the French stage, and played Pianissimo.

Now will you compose such a strain for us—a few bars merely, to be repeated as long as necessary—a something expressive of the memory of old joys and a broken home? &c &c It needn't be longer than a Theatrical "Hurry"†3—but it will tell wonderfully; I saw at Manchester, clearly, what the effect would be. If you will do me such a thing within the next fortnight or so, and let me have it in parts for such instruments as you would like to play it, you will really oblige me inexpressibly.

We act at Shrewsbury on the 10th. of May, and at Birmingham on the 12th. and 13th. Is there any chance of your being able to go?

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

C. Coote Esquire.

To THE HON. SPENCER LYTTELTON, 30 MARCH 1852*†4

MS Rosenbach Foundation.

Tavistock House, Tavistock Square | Thirtieth March 1852

My Dear Lyttelton

This is not a note. It is merely a kind of posted wink of explanation.

I have delayed answering your letter thus long, because I really did believe, and have really gone on believing until the last Sunday that ever was, that I should be able to come to Paris for this week. But it was mere lunacy, and tomorrow I am going down (for one afternoon, and half a morning) to Rockingham; taking up

Mary Boyle on my way, at a Station[†1] which, as I read it in her note (you know her hand—twisted like the rustic work of which they make garden chairs), does not exist on the face of the earth.

I don't see, Mon ami, that D'Orsay has a place yet.[†2] If you see him, commend me to him heartily.—Also make my compliments at No. 5.[†3]

We are all blooming, and unite in kind regards to Mrs. Lyttelton.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

The Hon. Spencer Lyttelton

To MRS WAYLEN,[†4] 30 MARCH 1852*

MS Bodleian Library.

Tavistock House | Thirtieth March 1852.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mrs. Waylen, and regrets to say that the case of the Protestants of Louisendorf,[†5] is one of the multitude constantly presented to him, in reference to which he can offer no advice or assistance.

April

To MRS CHARLES DICKENS, 1 APRIL 1852

MS British Museum.

Rockingham, | First April 1852

My Dearest Kate.

Thinking you will like to have a word from me, I write a hasty one before leaving here for Birmingham, to report that I am quite well, and to hope (as the children say) that you are the same. We were very pleasant here yesterday. No one at dinner, but Mary Boyle and Mr. Bigg.[†6] All are in a blooming condition, and send their kindest regards.

We think of going on tonight from Birmingham to Stoke upon Trent.[†1] I don't quite know (the Honorary Secretary's[†2] study of Bradshaw being confused) whether we shall turn up at the times and places of which I gave Georgina a list—but I will write again tomorrow, as you can only hear again on Saturday, before I return.[†3]

With best love to Charley, Mamey, Katey, Frankey, Rightfollarollidedee rightfollarollora, and the Jolly Post Boy—and also to Georgina,—

Ever affectionately
CD.

To FELIX JOYCE, 5 APRIL 1852*

MS Doheny Memorial Library, California.

Tavistock House | Monday Fifth April 1852

Dear Mr. Joyce.

I am much vexed to hear from Mr. Carlyle (who is on my list) that he has not received No. 2 of Bleak House.[†4] Pray do me the favor to have this omission rectified immediately.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Joyce.

To THOMAS CARLYLE, [?5-6 APRIL 1852]

Mention in Carlyle to his mother, 10 Apr (New Letters of Thomas Carlyle, ed. A. Carlyle, II, 126-7).

A friendly note[†5] apologizing for the publishers' failure to send Carlyle No. 11 of Bleak House.

To THE HON. MRS RICHARD WATSON, 6 APRIL 1852

MS Huntington Library.

Tavistock House | Sixth April 1852

My Dear Mrs. Watson.

My lost "Character"[†1] was one of those awful documents occasionally to be met with, which will[†2] be everywhere. It glared upon me from every drawer I had—fell out of books—lurked under keys—hid in empty inkstands—got into portfolios—frightened me by inscrutably passing into locked Dispatch boxes—and was not one character, but a thousand. This was when I didn't want it. I look for it this morning, and it is nowhere!—Probably will never be beheld again.

But it was very unlike this one,—and I have no doubt that when these ventures come out good, it is only by lucky chance and coincidence. She never mentioned my love of order, before. And it is so remarkable (being almost a *dis*order) that she ought to have fainted with surprise when my handwriting was first revealed to her.

I was very sorry to leave Rockingham the other day, and came away in quite a melancholy state. The Birmingham people were very active; and the Shrewsbury gentry quite transcendant.[†3] I hope we shall have a very successful and dazzling trip. It is delightful to me to think of your coming to Birmingham. And by the bye, if you will tell me in the previous week, what Hotel accommodation you want, Mr. Wills will look to it with the greatest pleasure.[†4]

Your bookseller ought to be cashiered. I suppose "he" (as Rogers calls everybody's husband)[†5] went out hunting with the idea of diverting his mind from dwelling on its loss. Abortive effort!—

Charley brings this, with himself.

With kindest regards and remembrances | Ever Dear Mrs. Watson | Most Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

The Hon. Mrs. Watson

To R. H. HORNE, 6 APRIL 1852

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel. Address: R. H. Horne Esquire | 9 Lower Sackville Street | Dublin.

Tavistock House | Sixth April 1852

My Dear Horne. Wills had faithfully reported to me concerning the Poor Artist.[†1] I am only delighted to have an opportunity of referring[†2] to so excellent a book.

Snails, admirable![†3] I shall be very curious to be enlightened on that singular subject. I know nothing whatever about a Snail, except that I could wish him dryer, and don't like the trail he leaves—a sort of dirty-nosed remembrance of the way he went. Besides which, I may not want to receive this slimy information of the direction of his walks. In fact, I dont.

Mrs. Horne will have told you that I propose Friday. But I hope you won't dine on my account?

I have read the Preface[†4] very carefully. I fully subscribe to your principle, and believe it to be sound—indispensable in this age. But I more than doubt the expediency of the preface. I would reduce it by five sixths of its present amount. It is a strong impression, even with the discerning portion of the public, that a man makes a weak case when he writes to explain his writing.[†5] His writing should explain itself; rest manfully and calmly on its knowledge of itself; and express whatever intention and purpose are in him. If it cannot do this, it is held (I think not unreasonably) to be a shortcoming. I would on no consideration whatever make those references, either to Orion,[†6] or the Dreamer and the Worker.[†7] I am absolutely certain that they will be misunderstood, if they be made, and will make you antagonists where you would otherwise find none, and will do you infinite damage.

I would state my principle—retain that interesting and gallant passage descriptive of your having burnt your way on—but nothing less than the Rack should induce me (speaking as if I were you) to print the rest. I do not expect you to act on my advice, but I give it with the most unbounded and unhesitating confidence. I am quite certain—absolutely sure—that your Preface would take your book by the throat and strangle it.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

R. H. Horne Esquire

To E. R. CUTLER,[†1] 7 APRIL 1852*

MS Private.

Tavistock House, Tavistock Square | Seventh April 1852

Dear Sir

I beg to say in reply to your letter that Monday the 14th. of June[†2] will suit me perfectly, and that I am rejoiced to learn that you have so good a prospect.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

E. R. Cutler Esquire

To MARK LEMON, 7 APRIL 1852

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

Tavistock House | Seventh April 1852

My Dear Mark.

The scene of action is the Walworth Literary & Scientific Institution—"Lecture Hall Carter Street," wherever that may be.[†3] The time of commencing is a quarter past 7. So I will call for you at a quarter before 7.[†4]

Mr. Wood, Bedford Nursery, Haverstock Hill, Hampstead Road, is the gardener's address.[†5]

Ever Affecy.
CD.

To SIR EDWIN PEARSON,[†6] 7 APRIL 1852

MS Winifred A Myers (Autographs) Ltd. Address: Edwin Pearson Esquire | 7 Chester Terrace | Regents Park.

Tavistock House | Seventh April, 1852

Sir.

Allow me to acknowledge the receipt of your interesting letter, the justice of which I fully acknowledge.

It would give me great satisfaction to belong to your society,[†7] if I could hope to connect myself with it, at present, in anything but name. But as I can not, being fully occupied; and as I have a great objection to connecting myself in name alone with any undertaking; I think it right to decline, and to confine myself to advancing its general objects by the exercise of such means as are already within my power.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Edwin Pearson Esquire

To E. M. WARD, 7 APRIL 1852

Text from Mrs E. M. Ward's Reminiscences, ed. Elliott O'Donnell, 1911, p. 193; dated Tavistock House, 7 Apr 52.

My dear Ward,

I am much obliged to you for your kind invitation to see your pictures—not the less so because, having been in Staffordshire[†1] for a few days, I was so overwhelmed with business yesterday that I could enjoy the pleasure of no such visit. But I may congratulate you though I have not yet seen them, for I hear you have outdone yourself![†2]

Faithfully yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To THE EDITORS OF THE WESTMINSTER REVIEW,[†3] 7 APRIL 1852*

MS McGill University Library.

Tavistock House | Seventh April 1852.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to the Editors of The Westminster Review, and begs with thanks to acknowledge the receipt of the April No.[†4] which they have had the kindness to send him. He would have done this sooner, but for his absence from town for a few days.

He will not fail to give his best attention to the article[†5] which the Editors recommend to his consideration. He has little doubt of its advocating the sensible and just view of the case.[†1]

To HENRY AUSTIN, 10 APRIL 1852*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Saturday Night Tenth April | 1852.

My Dear Henry.

The enclosed is a cheque for the balance of my "small account"[†2] with Cubitts' in respect of this house. For that part of the garden work which is to be paid by Stone and Cardale, we must have a new bill. I return the garden account to you, with a note of Cardale's thereon. Will you let Cubitts people know that the gates and the pulling down of the old lane-wall are to be charged to me—the lengthening of his own wall, and the making of the door therein, and the levelling of his own additional piece of garden, to Cardale—the do. do. and do. as to Stone's garden, to Stone? I shall be glad to have the receipt for my bill if you will kindly send it to me, as I can then put it away in a drawer and out of my mind.

On Thursday at rather before ½ past 4, I will come to you to fetch you and the worthy Doctor.[†3]

Affecy. Ever

CD.

Henry Austin Esquire.

To F. M. EVANS, 10 APRIL 1852

MS Dickens House.

Tavistock House | Tenth April 1852

My Dear Evans.

On the other side I send you the lettering for the plates.[†1]

I was yesterday asked by Mr. Horne to propose to you a venture of Poems (the most remarkable of them connected with progress and the real spirit of the time) in five Nos. at a shilling each: each No. to contain three small 8° sheets. I told him that B & E were not general publishers, and I did not consider it at all likely that they would be disposed to engage in such an enterprize. But as he still desired to have it offered to you, I could no longer resist his wish.

You know perhaps that he has written some remarkable Poems in H.W.—as the Electric Telegraph, the Christmas Carols, the Camera Obscura, and so forth.[†2] If you would like to know more of the contents of his book, I will tell you more. He has read the greater part of it to me.

If you have no such inclination but would prefer to decline at once, without any reference to its contents, will you write me such a note on the subject as I can put before him.[†3]

Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

F. M. Evans Esquire.

To G. L. CHESTERTON, 12 APRIL 1852

Text from N, II, 387.

Tavistock House | Twelfth April 1852

My Dear Chesterton

Haven't I heard you mention some place where they take all sorts and conditions of impracticable girls in, if they will work? If so, will you tell me what it is called and where it is? We shall have (I think) to send Church away after all, and Miss Coutts wants her to have some sort of a possibility of a chance, in leaving the place where she has been such a consistent botheration.

Mr Illingsworth[†4] will shew you a good letter to Miss Coutts from Mary Ann Browne.

Faithfully yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 12 APRIL 1852*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Twelfth April 1852 | Monday

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I am glad you have come to the conclusion that a paper in Household Words on the Home, would not be objectionable. I think it would do a great deal of good—especially in impressing on people the sensible point you state in your note—which I sincerely believe to be the whole truth and wisdom of the case.[†1] You shall see the Proof before the article is published.[†2]

I am ashamed to say that I am in some measure responsible for Mr. Forster. He spoke to me on the subject of your last series of evenings and his invitations thereunto, and, after shewing me (which indeed I knew beforehand) that they fell at times when he was much engaged with his own occupations and was obliged to be regular and to get up early, asked me if I would tell you that he was very sensible of your kind remembrance, though unable to avail himself of it at that time? I utterly discouraged any such proceeding, as seeming to be self-important; and told him that he had much better leave it alone, and not seem to suppose that his absence was of any moment to anybody. I am bound to add that he appeared by no means clear that I was right, but submitted.

Therefore it is really my fault. And my modesty—or my innoculation[†3] of him with that disorder—is alone to blame.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

I have not yet got Mr. Chesterton's answer, about the Refuge real or supposed, but expect it every moment.

To RICHARD MONCKTON MILNES,[†4] 12 APRIL 1852*

MS Trinity College, Cambridge.

Tavistock House, Tavistock Square | Twelfth April 1852

My Dear Milnes

I am glad you did me the justice of believing that the formal and solemn invitation was by no means necessary.

We should have been truly glad to dine with Mrs. Milnes[†5] and you on the 19th. but that we are unfortunately engaged for that day—formally and solemnly too, which makes it worse.[†6]

We shall hope, however, to have the pleasure of improving the opportunity you so agreeably propose to us, at another time. (I find I use the "we", as if I were writing a mercantile letter for self and partner).

Believe me | Very truly Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Monckton Milnes Esquire.

To MRS [ ], [?5-13 APRIL 1852]

Mention in diary of William Howard Russell (John Black Atkins, Life of Sir William Howard Russell, 1911, I, 113-14). Date: April 1852 according to Russell; before 14 Apr when Thackeray (see below) left for Scotland and after CD's return to London on 4-5 Apr.

Excusing himself from visit to Watford.[†1]

To THOMAS COE, 14 APRIL 1852*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Fourteenth April 1852 | Wednesday

Dear Mr. Coe.

If it will suit your convenience, I shall be glad if you will come here for an hour on Wednesday afternoon the 21st. at ½ past 4. Mr. Lemon and I, want to add "the rounds" to the Combat;[†2] and we shall be glad of your help.

I am sorry to hear you have been ill, and hope you are quite recovered.

Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To THOMAS [PITT],[†1] 14 APRIL 1852

Extract in Dobell catalogue No. 68, 1941. MS 1 p.; dated 14 Apr 52.

CD wishes to meet Pitt to settle about the borders, . . . at the Grecian Saloon[†2] there is a Proscenium Border which seems to me exactly what we want all our borders[†3] to be.

To RICHARD BENTLEY, 15 APRIL 1852*

MS Berg Collection.

Tavistock House | Thursday Afternoon | Fifteenth April 1852

Dear Sir

I am sorry not to have been at home when you and Mr. Chapman did me the favor to call today—the rather, as I similarly missed Mr. Chapman a few days since. If half past four tomorrow afternoon will suit you both, I shall be happy to receive you here at that hour; or (in the event of this appointment not being convenient) I would await you at the Athenaeum on Saturday, at any time after three that might suit you better.[†4]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esquire

To FRANK STONE, 15 APRIL 1852*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Fifteenth April 1852

My Dear Stone

Will you come in next Wednesday Evening at ½ past 7, to take a turn at Not so bad as we seem with Tenniel the new Volunteer in Hardman?[†5]

Ever affecy.
CD.

To MEMBERS OF THE AMATEUR COMPANY, [?MID-APRIL 1852]*

MS (draft) Morgan Library. Date: before 24 Apr, when train time was fixed; about three weeks' notice of dates would be appropriate.

Guild of Literature and Art

I am directed to inform you that the Amateur Company will act at Shrewsbury on Monday the 10th. of May (rehearsing there, that morning) and at Birmingham on Wednesday and Thursday the 12th. and 13th. It is proposed to leave London on Sunday the 9th. and to return on Friday Morning the 14th. The hour of departure shall be duly notified to you.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 18 APRIL 1852

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Sunday Eighteenth April | 1852

My Dear Miss Coutts.

Two points occur to me in reference to this paper. In the first place, it is indispensable to the Specification of the plans required, that the size and shape of the piece of ground should be accurately stated. In the second place, it seems to me very important that the request for plans should be kept altogether separate from the request for suggestions. I would therefore have two papers instead of one, and I would print both of them; it being very difficult to get people to read writing, or to read it without confusion if they read it at all.

Should you think with me, I will measure the ground (Mr. Austin could do it by walking over it), and go through these notes to render them as plain as possible, and then have them printed. I enclose them now, in case you should think of anything to add.[†1]

It is a very good thing to try several descriptions of houses, but I have no doubt myself (after long consideration[†2] of the subject) that the large houses are best. You never can, for the same money, offer anything like the same advantages in small houses. It is not desirable to encourage any small carpenter or builder who has a few pounds to invest, to run up small dwelling houses. If they had been discouraged long ago, London would be an immeasurably healthier place than it can be made in scores of years to come. If you go into any common outskirts of the town, now, and see the advancing army of brick and mortar[†3] laying waste the country fields and shutting out the air, you cannot fail to be struck by the consideration that if large buildings had been erected for the working people, instead of the absurd and expensive separate walnut shells in which they live, London would have been about a third of its present size, and every family would have had a country walk, miles nearer to their own door. Besides this, men would have been nearer to their work—would not have had to dine at public houses—there would have been thicker walls of separation and better means of separation than you can ever give (except at a preposterous cost) in small tenements—and they would have had gas, water, drainage, and a variety of other humanizing things which you can't give them so well in little houses. Further, in little houses, you must keep them near the ground, and you cannot by any possibility afford such sound and wholesome foundations (remedying this objection) in little houses as in large ones. The example of large houses appears to me, in all respects, (always supposing their locality to be a great place like London) far better than any example you can set by small houses; and the compensation you give for any overgrown shadow they may cast upon a street at certain hours of the day, is out of all proportion to that drawback.[†1]

I know everybody at Manchester,[†2] and in most of those places. But I think the people for the suggestion-paper are people connected with Railways passing through remote Yorkshire Moors, where they have had to frame schools and churches, and establish an orderly system of society out of the strangest disorder—as in one case in Yorkshire, now, where a Tunnel has been making for some years.[†3] Also large iron-masters—of whom there are some notable cases—who have proceeded on the self-supporting principle, and have done wonders with their workpeople.[†4] Also other manufacturers in isolated places[†5] who have awakened to find themselves in the midst of a mass of workpeople going headlong to destruction, and have stopped the current and quite turned it by establishing decent houses, paying schools, savings banks, little libraries, &c. Several of these instances come into my mind as I write this, and I have no doubt we could get the results of such experience by merely asking for them.

I enclose Charley's papers. I am having some grave councils with him in reference to the future, and I will report the result to you very soon. On second thoughts I have considered it best not to advise with Mr. Cookesley. He is very fond of Charley, and has a high opinion of his abilities, and would like nothing better than to keep him making Latin verses for the next five years. Quite natural to a man of his pursuits, but not quite rational in such a case.

Many thanks for the Polling Paper.

I hope you have recovered Doctor Smith's extreme rapidity and rush of words? He reminds me in that respect of Charles Matthews. He is a very sound man indeed, notwithstanding—but he is too voluble and dashing.[†1]

Dear Miss Coutts | Ever Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

To T. CROFTON CROKER, 18 APRIL 1852

MS The Folio Society Ltd.

Tavistock House | Sunday Eighteenth April, 1852

My Dear Sir

I am most unfortunate in respect of the Noviomagians.[†2] I am engaged on Wednesday;—to no Lord or Lady (don't do me the wrong of supposing so!),[†3] but to the proposed Guild of Literature and Art; which I hope to make the means of doing great good one of these days, and to which I stand pledged on that evening for the transaction of indispensable business.

A thousand thanks!

Very faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

T. Crofton Croker Esquire.

To R. H. HORNE, 18 APRIL 1852

MS Yale University Library.

Tavistock House | Eighteenth April 1852

My Dear Horne.

I think the subject a very good one (I am speaking of the subject proposed by Dr. Stone),[†4] but have no ambition to take it from you; having already several on my list. Will you therefore pursue it?

Evans, after much consideration, has written me in reference to your poems the enclosed note. I wish it were of a different nature, but it embodies in the main the deterring reasons that I foresaw.

I am sorry that I cannot myself propose the book to any one else, not having that knowledge of any bookseller which would enable me to do so, with the least additional effect—and having just that knowledge of some booksellers which renders me averse to propounding to them any matter of business. But I will with the greatest pleasure be referred to by you, in any such proposal you may make for yourself (if you should think that desirable in any stage of your proceedings) and will be bottle-holder, second, umpire, referee,[†1] &c &c &c.

I still think Mr. John Chapman[†2] the best man to try.

I have read the two poems I now return, with the greatest satisfaction and the highest admiration. "Body and Soul", and Timbuctoo (say, for example) are the two pieces I would rest my case upon, if I were you, if the contents of your proposed book should come in question in any treaty. In Timbuctoo, I remarked, when you were reading it, the expression "pitcher or pan". Are you quite certain that water would be carried in such vessels in Timbuctoo? In "China", I observed the expression "Perennial infancy". I doubt that,—because it is the main marvel of China that it should not be in a state of infancy (which would be mere savage life), but should have grown to a certain age, and there stopped. In the Dwarf on the Wall, I remarked the word "talented"—which cannot be a word, I think, because you cannot make a participle in English out of a substantive.[†3]

Excuse these slight objections, and believe me ever

Faithfully Yours

CD.

R. H. Horne Esquire

To MARK LEMON, [19] APRIL 1852

MS Benoliel Collection. Date: Monday was the 19th.

Tavistock House | Monday Eighteenth April | 1852

My Dear Mark. I find our Spring water comes from Woburn Place, near Russell Square. Don't forget that you are due here, at ½ past 4 on Wednesday.

Ever Affecy.

CD.

To FRANK STONE, 19 APRIL 1852*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Monday Nineteenth April | 1852

My Dear Stone. If you should be disposed for a walk tonight, I shall be ready for one at ½ past 7.

Affecy. always

CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 20 APRIL 1852

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Twentieth April 1852

My Dear Miss Coutts

After some trouble (in consequence of her being too late for her appointments) I have at last seen the Sidney Herbert[†1] girl. I cannot say I am at all confident of success in the case, but I think it one it is quite right to try. The two best things I observed in her were, her trembling very much while I was talking to her, and her being extremely grateful when I gave her hope. In manner, dress, &c she is above the general run of our girls, but she can't write. I doubted one expression in her letter to you as not being what the girl herself would be likely to use; and, on pressing her, I found that the letter had been written for her by some one. I am not at all clear of the innocent nature of her knowledge of the Mr. Vernon[†2] whose letter you gave me.

Nevertheless, she seems quite earnest in her application; and if you can save her, you will save a very good average representative of a large class. I would most certainly try her. If you will reply "yes", I will send Mrs. Morson for her, tomorrow.

Most Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts P.S. She says she wants to be sent to Port Philip[†3] if possible "because she has been told she has an uncle there, who is rich."

To [?NATHANIEL] GOULD,[†4] 20 APRIL 1852*

MS Private.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Twentieth April | 1852

My Dear Sir

I have been prevented from writing to you before, by an unsettled engagement. I purpose having the pleasure of calling on you on Thursday at ½ past 2.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

[ ][†5] Gould Esquire.

To MARK LEMON, 20 APRIL 1852

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Twentieth April 1852

My Dear Mark

If you are at home and alone (which I don't expect) and further, if you are disposed for a Street-Lounge this evening, I'll call for you at 20 minutes before 8.—But if I don't hear from you in reply to this—I won't.

Affecy. always
CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 21 APRIL 1852*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Wednesday Twenty First April 1852

My Dear Miss Coutts.

Yesterday afternoon, I received the enclosed from Mr. Austin. After reading it over two or three times, I think it best to send it, just as it stands, to you. I need scarcely observe that I have held no kind of communication with him on the subject. Of his sound practical knowledge in such a matter, there can be no doubt.[†1]

As that girl is in suspense, will you bear her case in mind, and let me know what to do as soon as you decide.

Faithfully Yours Ever
CD.

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To THE DUKE OF DEVONSHIRE, 22 APRIL 1852*

MS Devonshire Collections, Chatsworth.

Tavistock House, Tavistock Square | Thursday Evening | Twenty Second April | 1852.

My Dear Duke of Devonshire.

I am afraid you have long since become accustomed to associate my handwriting with every sort of unreasonable and troublesome petition. I want to lay violent hands upon Mr. Coote now; and I feel as if you must be contemplating (while you read these words) the strong probability of my asking for the loan of the Emperor[†2] from Chatsworth, next!

We are going to act at Shrewsbury on the 10th. of May, and at Birmingham on the 12th. and 13th.—for which purpose, we shall leave town on the 9th. and come back on the 14th. Having seen reason to believe that a strain of low music running through Bulwer's Comedy, and always played in association with that silhouette of a Mysterious Lady, would greatly enhance the effect, I got Mr. Coote to write it. And now he has written it, I am afraid to launch it for the first time on the very uncertain ripple of a local orchestra without having the security of his conductorship as he knows the play so well. I have horrible apprehensions of their playing it, otherwise, in insane places—perhaps in the Farce—or as an accompaniment to my panegyric on the Queen, in David Fallen's garret.

If your kindness could spare Mr. Coote, without real inconvenience, for the space of time I have mentioned, it would be a great service to the Guild, and he should be kept in excellent preservation and returned undamaged. But nothing would induce me to write you this note—as I hope you will readily believe—if I thought it possible that even your generosity would receive it as a sort of constraint to do an inconvenient thing. I am not so bad as I seem, and can most easily foresee the probability of your decidedly wanting him. In the faith of your keeping him in that case, and not being angry with me—and really rather anticipating the novel sensation of your saying No to me—I am Ever my Dear Duke of Devonshire,

Yours most Faithfully and obliged
CHARLES DICKENS

The | Duke of Devonshire

To THE REV. REES LEWIS LLOYD,[†1] 22 APRIL 1852

Text from D, XVIII (1922), 8.

Tavistock House | 22 April 1852

My Dear Sir.

Your letter, and the resolution of your Reading Party, have afforded me unspeakable gratification. To be so remembered is among the greatest honours and happinesses of my life.

Pray assure your friends of the Reading Party that the affectionate terms in which they thank me, touch my heart. That I receive their thanks and good wishes with no ordinary pleasure. And that they never can be more interested in me than I am interested in them.

With all good wishes, believe me, my dear Sir,

Faithfully yours (and theirs),
CHARLES DICKENS

To CHARLES COOTE, 24 APRIL 1852*

MS Mr Peter Goodricke. Address: Charles Coote Esquire | Messrs. Coote & Tinney | Duke Street | Manchester Square.

Tavistock House | Saturday Twenty Fourth April | 1852

Dear Sir

On the receipt of your last note I wrote to the Duke, who immediately replied—as I have no doubt you know by this time—in the kindest manner.

If you should wish to see me before we assemble at the Terminus of the North Western Railway at Euston Square, on Sunday morning the 9th, at a quarter before ten (the train starting at ten) I am almost always at home and at work from 10 until 2. In regard to the "Accomplices"[†1] I may mention to you that they are already engaged in each place by the local committee of gentlemen of the town, and will be "called" for Rehearsal, both at Shrewsbury and Birmingham, at 12 o'Clock. I have had an Orchestra-Book[†2] of the Comedy made, to render the introduction of the Mysterious Lady's Music, easier. Of course all that must be carefully rehearsed on the morning, in the right places.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Coote Esquire.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 25 APRIL 1852*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Sunday Twenty Fifth April | 1852.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

It appears to me that Mr. Hardwick does not understand your arrangement as you understand it. On my meeting him accidentally, yesterday afternoon at the Athenaeum, he told me that he had settled with you that we were to meet forthwith—he, Mr. Manby, Mr. Austin, Dr. Smith, and I, and discuss the subject—no word of any plans being made first, or of anybody making plans at all—or anything of the kind. Of course I could only say that whatever you had arranged, I was ready to act upon, and it was agreed that we should meet the week after next.

Now, besides that such a Meeting could do no good, with no deliberate preparation in black and white to discuss, and on which to compare ideas, I doubt whether any professional man would like to attend it. I therefore think it best to mention my doubt to you. Foreseeing the probability of some such difficulty I have not communicated with Mr. Austin since I sent you his letter. Therefore, I have not proposed to him to make any plan, and no harm is done.

Always Most Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts

To THE DUKE OF DEVONSHIRE, 25 APRIL 1852

MS Devonshire Collections, Chatsworth.

Tavistock House | Twenty Fifth April 1852

My Dear Duke of Devonshire

It would be quite ridiculous in me to begin to thank you,—for when could I leave off! So I won't begin, and I send this note to say so.

Ever Yours most Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

The | Duke of Devonshire.

To MARK LEMON, 25 APRIL 1852

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Sunday Morning Twenty Fifth April | 1852

My Dear Mark.

I congratulate you heartily on last night's success[†1]—thoroughly deserved by an excellent piece, and most heartily, spontaneously, and gallantly rendered by a delighted Audience.[†2]

They all played well.[†3] I never saw Webster play half so well.[†4]

I would take out the baby—or take it straight into the house as it comes on from the Christening.[†5] And the window of the coffee house which is the last Scene of the second act, should then have a long curtain before it, the time being then night. The Scene has been shewn before—and it obviously is not night, though supposed to be.[†6]

The third act (in which they were imperfect) requires a very little bringing together. It would be immensely improved if you could get Miss Reynolds—generally very good—in her scene in that act with Webster, to shew more feeling.[†7] She lost it in the endeavour to be frank. It is quite right that she should be frank, but it is altogether out of nature not to be more touched and more touching.

It went admirably throughout, and was never in the least distress. The act-Waits[†8] were something quite terrific—

Ever affectionately

CD.

To PETER CUNNINGHAM, 26 APRIL 1852

MS Mr Ashley W. Olmsted.

Tavistock House | Twenty Sixth April, 1852

My Dear Cunningham

A thousand thanks for your curious and interesting book,[†9] which is exceedingly acceptable to me—both for its own sake, and as a mark of your friendly remembrance. I have had the greatest pleasure both in receiving and in reading it.

I may take this occasion of mentioning that my wife and sister in law (accompanied, I believe, by Mrs. Lemon and Mrs. Wills) mean to join us at Birmingham on Tuesday the 11th. coming down under their own escort by the express Train. If you should have any idea, under these circumstances, of giving Mrs. Cunningham what a friend of ours[†1] would call "a hout", they would be delighted.

Ever Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

I hope you intend to give that new reading of your part, which I took the liberty to suggest? The more I think of it, the more I see the power of that view of the character.[†2]

To MARK LEMON, 26 APRIL 1852

Mention as being in Cullum Collection, Trinity College, Cambridge; present whereabouts unknown.

Making an appointment for 27 April.

To OCTAVIAN BLEWITT, 28 APRIL 1852

MS Royal Literary Fund.

Tavistock House | Twenty Eighth April, 1852.

Dear Sir

As I shall be out of town on the 12th. and am unable to attend the dinner,[†3] I beg to return you the tickets sent to me.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

O. Blewitt Esquire.

To MARK LEMON, 28 APRIL 1852

MS Private; seen before partial destruction in Prestwick air-crash, Dec 1954; fragment (aa)
MS Yale University Library.

Tavistock House | Wednesday Twenty Eighth April | 1852

My Dear Mark

I waited for you last afternoon and evening, I think—ahem!—I think—by appointment!—

[a]I have received a note from Pitt,[†1] asking me to go and look at the Borders this evening. You will find me at the Household Words office (if so dispoged)[†2] at 8

Affecy. Ever
CD.[a]

To MRS GASKELL, [?28 APRIL 1852]

Mention in To Solger, 5 May 1852, fn.

Promising to help Dr Reinhold Solger.

To W. H. WILLS, 29 APRIL 1852

MS Huntington Library.

Tavistock House | Twenty Ninth April, 1852

My Dear Wills.

We forgot to speak, yesterday, about the begging letters. I send with this a black surtout. That and £2 will be sufficient I think for the Rathbone Place man.

£2 for Macpherson, the Orphan

£1 for the Needlewoman.

And after this, I really must pull up. For I have no funds but my own, in hand or in reversion; and I get these letters by hundreds—not counting those that you get.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To WILLIAM J. CLEMENT, 30 APRIL 1852*

Text from transcript, Huntington Library.

Tavistock House, | Thirtieth April, 1852.

My Dear Sir,

I have never applied for a Licence in any provincial town but Birmingham—where the thick-headedness of a ridiculous Manager[†3] was considered to make it necessary. In all other places, the Magistrates (being on the Guild Committee) have laughed at the idea of any interference. But I am always for being on the right side, if possible, and am therefore very glad you have had the kindness to send me the form of application—for which many thanks! I now return it, duly filled up and signed.

I have given the Company, due Managerial notice of your invitation, and have no doubt that they will be happy to render all honor to it.

My Dear Sir | Very faithfully yours

CHARLES DICKENS

William J. Clement Esquire.

May

To FRANK STONE, 1 MAY 1852*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | First May 1852

My Dear Stone. The Bootmaker's name is Hall. His address, the quadrant. I forget the No. It is about a third of the way down, going from Regent Street, on the right hand side.[†1]

I hope to be in full twig for walking tomorrow, at one o'Clock. I am trying to finish No. IV (rather a stunner)[†2] before going to the Academy Dinner[†3] today.

Ever Affecy.

CD.

To W. H. WILLS, 1 MAY 1852*

MS Huntington Library.

Tavistock House | Saturday First May 1852

My Dear Wills.

H.W.[†4]

I will be at the Office all the morning (with a view to the two Nos. we have to make up),[†5] on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday. I will endeavour to be primed by Monday Morning, with a view to the dictating experiment in the matter of the Child's History.[†6]

GUILD.[†4]

Is the Manchester Day fixed? That is the first thing I want information on, before I tackle Knowles. Will you write to our Secretary there,[†7] explaining that Knowles is again a-field, and that I wish to apply for a license[†8] for the second night. It is important to get all possible influence and information about it, and I should like to get the licence at once. Mention that for certainty's sake we have got one at Birmingham and also at Shrewsbury. (For Clement sent me the form of application yesterday morning, & I returned it, duly filled up, by last night's post.)

Faithfully Always

CD.

W. H. Wills Esquire

To L. GAYLORD CLARK, 2 MAY 1852†

MS Mr Archibald Barrow.

Tavistock House, London | Second May 1852

My Dear Clark

I write this hastily, to present to you a cousin of mine—Mr. Barrow[†1]—who is proceeding to New York on a responsible Mission connected with the Great Exhibition, and who will probably remain there for some time.[†2]

I have told him that in the event of his wanting a little honest advice (which is possible) on matters touching print and paper, you will give it him and save him from those roaring Lions who go about (even in America, I am told) seeking whom they may devour.

I have received your letter concerning the Powellian Vagabond,[†3] and will take care that the money is paid. When I find that I am made to smart to that extent for saving your fellow citizens from a Swindler, I begin to think your law must be as bad as ours—I can't think worse of it. I can't advise you as to the publication of the evidence. You must judge for yourself. I have no wish or care, either way.

We are all well, and Mrs. Dickens unites with me in kind remembrances to you and yours. "We are seven"[†4]—and two over. Have been three over, but a real little Dora closely followed her imaginary namesake to the Land of Shadows.

Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

L. Gaylord Clark Esquire.

To SIR JOSEPH PAXTON, 2 MAY 1852

Mention in Myers catalogue No. 351, Spring 1948. Dated 2 May 52.[†5]

To DR REINHOLD SOLGER, 2 MAY 1852

Mention in To Solger, 5 May 1852.

Offering an appointment on 3, 4, or 5 May.

To MRS GASKELL, 2 MAY 1852

Mention in To Solger, 5 May 1852.

Telling her he couldn't find Dr Solger.

To THE AMATEUR COMPANY, AND CHARLES COOTE, [?MAY 1852]*

MS (draft) Morgan Library. Address: To the Company, & to Charles Coote Esquire | Messrs Coote & Tinney | Duke Street | Manchester Square. Date: the word "next" implies a date of 2 May or later though train was fixed by 24 Apr (see To Coote, that day).

Sir.

I beg to inform you that the Train by which the company will travel to Shrewsbury, will leave the North Western Terminus at Euston Square, at ten o'Clock on Sunday Morning next. It is important, with reference to the Safe bestowal of the luggage, that you should have the kindness to be on the platform, a full quarter of an hour before that time.

I am also to mention that Mr. Charles Dickens has undertaken to convey to you, and every gentleman of the company individually, an invitation from Mr. Clement of the Council House Shrewsbury, to a late breakfast on the Tuesday Morning (the eleventh) before the departure for Birmingham. Mr. Clement is one of the principal inhabitants and magistrates, and has exerted himself unremittingly in behalf of the Guild.

I am &c

To JOHN T. LAWRENCE, 3 MAY 1852

MS Private.

Guild of Literature and Art | 10, Lancaster Place, Strand | Third May 1852

My Dear Sir.

I have not written sooner, in reply to your kind note, because I have been so very uncertain whether I shall be able to have the pleasure of availing myself of your kind invitation for the forenoon of Thursday the 13th. I write, even now and after all, without having it in my power to pledge myself to its acceptance.

Besides being very much fatigued (I dress fourteen times each night), I shall have, on the Thursday, a new gentleman in the place of Mr. Forster who will be obliged to return to town. The character is a very long one, and, though I have devoted some time to this gentleman here, I think it exceedingly likely that he alone may occupy my Thursday morning; for our hour of beginning, obliges us to dine about 3 o'Clock, and the morning is thus materially shortened. I think the best thing I can do is to answer for Mrs. Dickens and her sister, and to leave my own pleasure an open question. I need not assure you (I think) how happy I shall be to come if I can.

In begging to be kindly remembered to you and to all your house, Mrs. Dickens begs me also to say that she will have the pleasure of calling on your family after she comes down on the Tuesday.

Our prospects with you seem to be glorious. At Shrewsbury also, we are doing wonders.

I hope Mr. Simpson is recovering?

My Dear Sir | Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John T. Lawrence Esquire.

To MRS SYDNEY SMITH, 3 MAY 1852

MS Lord Knutsford.

Tavistock House | Monday Third May 1852

My Dear Mrs. Smith.

The letters are most freely and entirely at your service, to deal with as you think right.[†1]

I have been unfortunate in my endeavours to see you; but I shall make another when we come to finer weather, and bring my young Sydney Smith in my hand.[†2]

Always most Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Sydney Smith

To JOHN W. PARKER,[†3] [?3] MAY 1852

MS Company of Stationers. Date: other letters in the collection bear dates of 1-14 May; but 3 May is the commonest date and found on Wills's equally brief reply ("I do not").

No. Most certainly not.

CHARLES DICKENS

To GEORGE BEADNELL,[†1] 4 MAY 1852

MS Rosenbach Foundation.

Office of Household Words | Tuesday Fourth May 1852

My Dear Sir

Receiving your note as I was coming out at my door this morning, I brought it with me down here to answer. Your handwriting is like a breath of my hobbydehoyhood[†2] and is delightful to encounter.

I am sorry to say that I cannot enjoy the pleasure you propose to me. I should like it very much, but I can never take any private enjoyment on these occasions. For what Sir James Graham calls "the reason why",[†3] I sketch the following short list of my avocations.

I am on the stage all day, rehearsing with everybody, from breakfast until dinner. I preside at all the meals of the Amateur Company, and carve all the large joints. We carry into the country a perfect army of carpenters, gasmen, tailors, barbers, property-men, dressers, and servants; all of whom have become accustomed to do everything with the utmost precision, and accuracy under the Managerial eye, but none of whom would do anything right, if that luminary were withdrawn from any of them for five minutes at a stretch. So I am perpetually hovering among and fluttering these smaller birds. At the last minute when the Hall has been filled for weeks, all sorts of impossible people want all sorts of impossible places, and have to be given the most urbane explanations. I then settle down for an hour or so before the rising of the curtain, to dress—enter upon two parts, something longer (I should say) than the whole play of Hamlet—am dressed fourteen times[†4] in the course of the night—and go to bed a little tired.

Add to this, that we start for Birmingham on the Tuesday Morning to do all this over again, and act in the Town Hall two nights running—and I leave you to guess what hope of Wales is in me!

I should like to shake hands with you nevertheless—I hope I may find time for that!—and if you should ask for me at the Music Hall on Monday between 11 and 2, you are sure to find me in full-career of botheration.

Pray give my love to Margaret,[†1] and ask her to give the same to Maria if she should see her. (I am exactly 19, when I write their names.)

Also remember me kindly to Mr. David Lloyd,[†2] and believe me ever, with ten thousand old recollections

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

George Beadnell Esquire

To THE REV. H. J. BIGGE, 5 MAY 1852

Text from copy made by Walter Dexter, Dickens House.

Office of Household Words | Wednesday Fifth May 1852

My dear Sir,

I have reserved a ticket for you, according to Mrs. Watson's foresight. But the tickets are not bodily here, for they are issued by the Local committee at Birmingham.

Presuming that you will come to Birmingham in the course of the Wednesday of the performance, I will cause your ticket to be enclosed in an envelope addressed to you, and to be left (for your calling for it) at the office of the Local Secretary, Mr. Arthur Ryland, 40 Cherry Street, Birmingham. It shall be there, all day.

My dear Sir,
Always faithfully yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

The Reverend H. J. Bigge.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 5 MAY 1852

MS Morgan Library.

Office of Household Words, | Wednesday Fifth May 1852

My Dear Miss Coutts.

Mr. Austin called here yesterday, and was very anxious that I should explain to you his reasons for declining to make any plan in the manner proposed. I will not trouble you with them in detail. They are, generally, that, with Mr. Hardwick's first position in the matter as having been consulted by you, it would be a mere waste of time—hopeless representation of necessities that he would never recognize, and stipulation for common requirements of which he has no knowledge—uphill contention for principles of cheap usefulness and healthfulness, which the nature of his general works has not required him to observe,—wild endeavours to adapt poor men to Grosvenor Square—&c &c &c.[†1] It is sufficient to say that he has certainly convinced himself, and that he almost convinced me.

So the matter now stands with Mr. Hardwick and Mr. Manby. I doubt, myself, the probability of Mr. Manby's making plans (I know him very well) but we shall see. It seems to me that having Mr. Hardwick in the business, we had better make the best of him! I so far agree with Mr. Austin, that I don't think any other professional man will improve him.

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To R. H. HORNE, 5 MAY 1852*

MS Charles W. Traylen. Address: R. H. Horne Esquire | Beaumont Cottage | College Road | Chalk Farm Lane | Hampstead Road.

Office of Household Words, | Wednesday Fifth May, 1852

My Dear Horne. I have a letter from Paxton this morning. He is at Chatsworth. He says:

"I shall be very happy to see Mr. Horne when I come again to town, which may not be for a fortnight or more, as our Rent Day takes place next week.

"Or, Mr. Horne can either write to me, or come down to Chatsworth, where I hope to be found all this week and next, and shall be happy to see him."

You could get there, without much trouble or expence, from Birmingham.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CD.

R. H. Horne Esquire.

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, 5 MAY 1852

MS Lytton Papers.

Office of Household Words | Wednesday Fifth May 1852

My Dear Bulwer. I am happy in the thought of seeing you at dinner tomorrow.[†1] We have no set party, and no botheration.[†2]

I have conferred with Forster on the subject of the American letters[†3]—went out to him for that purpose this morning, immediately on their receipt. We are both so decidedly of opinion that Longmans and Murray would put down no money on the strength of such documents, and would certainly feel that there is not the least security for the treaty (supposing it made), lasting six months, that we think it best to represent our conviction to you, before entrusting them with the secret correspondence.[†1] It is so profoundly unsatisfactory, that I feel perfectly sure the money is not to be got.[†2]

Therefore we do not take them into council until after tomorrow. I have little doubt of getting them here at a few hour's notice (say on Friday or Saturday) if you should still desire it.[†3]

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton

To DR REINHOLD SOLGER,[†4] 5 MAY 1852*

MS Pennsylvania Historical Society.

Office of Household Words, | Wednesday Fifth May 1852

Dear Sir.

I fear that without the explanation I am about to give you, you must have thought me but a churlish and careless person.[†5]

Having been so unfortunate as to miss you twice (at my busiest period of the month), and having to go into the country last Sunday Morning, I entrusted Mrs. Dickens with my card and with a note to you, saying that I should be here, today, yesterday, and Monday, and happy to see you. Mrs. Dickens in accordance with my wish called, thus armed, at your address 78 York Road,[†6] and was positively assured by a woman-servant that no such person lived there. She had your card in her hand, but, still receiving this assurance, was fain to bring back my card and letter; and I have the latter by me now.

I immediately told Mrs. Gaskell that I couldn't find you.

If this letter, more fortunate than my messenger, should reach you, I beg to say that I shall be here on Friday Morning[†1] at halfpast 12, and very happy to see you. On Sunday Morning I am going out of town for at least a week.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Dr. Reinhold Solger.

To JOHN BLACKWOOD, 6 MAY 1852

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, June 1979; dated Tavistock House, 6 May 52; addressed John Blackwood.

Thanking him for the memoir.[†2] I think its spirit irreproachable[†3] and saying that he is rejoiced to hear such good accounts of the testimonial to poor Moir.[†4]

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 6 MAY 1852*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Thursday Sixth May 1852

My Dear Miss Coutts.

We have been christening the baby today, and I dare not go out. It would be considered heresy.

Perhaps I shall find you at home tomorrow, about 2, or from that to half past? At all events I will call. If I can find Mr. Austin at the Board of Health, I will see him first.

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

To PATRICK FRASER,[†1] 6 MAY 1852

MS National Library of Scotland.

Tavistock House, Tavistock Square | Thursday Sixth May 1852

My Dear Sir

The whiskey[†2] (of a wonderful quality!) has arrived in safety, and I thank you for it with the greatest cordiality. Your kind note gives me great pleasure, and I am happy to live in your remembrance. All this, and a great deal more, I hope to tell you at our next merry meeting.[†3] If it be as agreeable as our last I shall be well satisfied.

I suppose Gordon occasionally dines—on solemn holidays even sups, and sits a little, maybe, after supper—here and there in Edinburgh? He is never heard of in these parts now. We have quite given him up. Well! He was a jolly dog, and had a pleasant way with him once.

My Dear Sir | Very faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

P. Fraser Esquire

To JOHN KNOWLES, 6 MAY 1852†

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House, Tavistock Square | Thursday Sixth May 1852

My Dear Sir

I beg to say in reply to your letter that your information is correct, and that the Amateur Company of the Guild of Literature and Art having been honored by a requisition in writing from many of the principal inhabitants of Manchester, to give another performance there, most certainly intend to do so.

But I cannot agree with you that this at all impairs[†4] the exceptional nature of such a visit, or detracts from the unusual character of such a representation. Quite the contrary.

I believe the Amateur Company will close their career on the occasion of their next visit to Manchester, and I hope (notwithstanding the vigor of your protest) to close it in good humour with you and everybody else.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Knowles Esquire

To THE HON. MRS RICHARD WATSON, 6 MAY 1852

MS Huntington Library.

Tavistock House | Thursday Sixth May 1852

My Dear Mrs Watson.

I am quite delighted that you are going to Birmingham. If you had left a blank in your places, I should have been quite a dispirited comedian. Will you let me know—when you know—whether Mary Boyle and Mrs. Cavendish[†1] use two places? Because, if we should have any to spare (not probable I hope) out of our small reserved number, sundry Mayors and other eminent personages are waiting for them.

Mr. Wills will be at Birmingham on Saturday, on his way to Shrewsbury. He will then see to our hotel accommodation and to yours. From what I remember of the Birmingham hotels, I fear you would not get good rooms in any house lodging our very large party. But if they are to be got in the same house, he will get them. If not, he will make comfort his main consideration, and take them elsewhere. He will arrange for them to be ready for you on the Wednesday Morning, and will write you a line before he leaves Birmingham telling you what he has done, and the name of the Hotel.[†2] I have also begged him to look up some of the most interesting "Works" for Thursday Morning.

Mr. Boythorn is (between ourselves) a most exact portrait of Walter Savage Landor.[†3] Five and thirty thousand, every publishing day, is the present mark of Bleak House, thank God!

I had a most extraordinary dream about Watson last night, who I thought had gone mad, and was perpetually pursueing me, with a Revolver. I suffered the greatest agonies of mind, both on his account and my own.

With my love, and much anticipation of the pleasure of meeting you both,

Ever Dear Mrs. Watson Most Faithfully Yrs.
CHARLES DICKENS

To HENRY AUSTIN, 7 MAY 1852*

MS Morgan Library.

Office of Household Words | Friday Seventh May 1852

My Dear Henry.

Will you read the enclosed, & tell me what I shall say? I am going to call there, at about 2 o'Clock.

Affecy. Ever
CD.

To JOHN CHAPMAN,[†1] 7 MAY 1852*

MS Yale University Library.

Office of Household Words, | Friday Seventh May 1852

My Dear Sir

Is it not necessary that I should have those Resolutions[†2] from you, and see you concerning their transmission to Lord Campbell? I shall be here at 5 o'Clock exactly, if it should suit your convenience to call. On Sunday morning, I am going out of town for a week.

Will you have the goodness to send me by the Messenger, a MS of Madame Dubary's,[†3] which Professor Newman[†4] left for me in your Office the other Evening?

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Chapman Esquire

To RICHARD MONCKTON MILNES, 7 MAY 1852*

MS Trinity College, Cambridge.

Office of Household Words, | Friday Seventh May 1852

My Dear Milnes.

I trouble you with a note of introduction, in your capacity of President of the Whittington Club.[†1]

Dr. Reinhold Solger is the gentleman to whom I give it, and who will deliver it to you. He is most strongly recommended to me from high quarters in Manchester, and is, I believe, a gentleman of great accomplishments and desert. He has delivered in various parts of the country, a series of Lectures on European governments, and wishes (on certain easy conditions, involving no impossible expectations) to lecture in the Theatre of the Whittington club. If you would kindly put him in communication with the Secretary[†2] or other Powers that be, there, you will serve a very deserving gentleman and much oblige

Yours Very faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Monckton Milnes Esquire M.P.

To J. W. BOURKE,[†3] 8 MAY 1852

MS Rosenbach Foundation.

Tavistock House, London. | Saturday Eighth May 1852

Sir.

I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your obliging letter dated on the fifteenth of last month, and to thank you, on behalf of The Guild of Literature and Art, for the obliging proposal set forth in it.[†4]

I regret to add, after considering the subject well, that the distance it would be necessary for the large body concerned, to traverse; and the very great difficulties in the way of an absence from London prolonged beyond four or five days consecutively; combine to impose upon me the disagreeable task of declining the visit you suggest. I discharge the duty, I assure you, with great reluctance.[†1]

I have the honor to be | Sir | Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

J. W. Bourke Esquire.

To W. F. DE CERJAT, 8 MAY 1852

MS Dickens House. Address: William F. De Cerjat Esquire | Beau Regard | Lausanne | Switzerland.

London, Tavistock House, Tavistock Square | Saturday Eighth May 1852

My Dear Cerjat. Your second kind letter would have been a real reproach to me, if I had not so often tried to answer your first—one of my most acceptable and pleasant Christmas remembrances—and so often failed in the midst of my much writing, that I felt as if you must have some mesmeric knowledge that I was writing to you (in the Spirit—with invisible ink—on impalpable paper) almost every day of my life.

I cannot tell you how delighted I have been by your account of our excellent friend.[†2] The Watsons and I had been talking of him, and of you all, a few days before; and it came upon me with indescribable pleasure. God grant that he may continue to be himself! He has only to be that, to be one of the most loveable men upon earth. There are few things I should like better than to contradict him for half an hour, once more!

We had a plot (we and the Watsons) to make a dash over to Lausanne at Midsummer, and to leave the ladies there for a week, and carry you off into the Mountains, and have the grandest expeditions! I am afraid the plot is in danger, in consequence of Watson's electioneering projects,[†3] and some other distractions[†4] of which she wrote to me vaguely the day before yesterday. But I have still dim shadows of Hope—and I won't let them go, as long as I can hold one by the least film. I am, as you may suppose, very busy; but I think I could manage it, by some cutting and contriving. We are to hold a solemn council at Birmingham next Wednesday. My Amateur Company perform there, at the Town Hall, and the Watsons are coming over to see the Play. I wish to Heaven you and Mrs. Cerjat could come too! It is one of the prettiest things to look at, you can imagine—the Scenery so exquisitely painted—the dresses so rich and beautiful—the light so brilliant—and the whole such a perfect picture of the time of George the Second. But I am wandering away from the Council—which is to decide (as I understand

Mrs. Watson) whether our design is to take its place among the accomplished or the unaccomplished ideas of this devising world.[†1]

My wife is quite well again, after favoring me (I think I could have dispensed with the compliment) with No. 10. Our last baby, we called Dora, in remembrance of Copperfield. It was an ill-omened name, and she followed her predecessor to the land of Shadows. I hope you will like Bleak House better and better as you go on. It is a most enormous success; all the prestige of Copperfield (which was very great) telling upon it, and raising its circulation above all my other books. I am very much interested, having just written No. IV[†2]—and look forward to good things whereof the foundations are built.

There is nothing new here. Politically, everybody is unsettled by the prospect of a General Election between the Hay and Corn Harvests. Musically, we have a wonderfully fine Italian Opera at Covent Garden,[†3] and a quarrel (as I dare say you know as well as I do, if not better), between rival managers, for a German songstress.[†4] Pictorially, we have the Exhibition open, and some (but not many) good pictures in it.[†5] I saw the Duke of Wellington last, at the preliminary dinner a week ago. You cannot imagine how old he looks (it was his 83rd. birthday) or how long he was in jerking a short speech out of himself[†6] (like a series of words of command!) Rogers (five years older) is lamed by an accident, and passes his life in one arm chair which is lifted in and out of his carriage—wheeled to his table—carried upstairs, with him in it, if he goes anywhere (which he very rarely does) and put to bed with him I suppose.[†7] In all other respects he is the same as ever. Vivacious enough—and vicious enough—tells the same stories, to the same people, in the same words, twenty times in a day—and has his little dinner parties of four, where he goes mad with rage if anybody talks to anyone but himself. Tom Moore has left a very curious Diary for publication, to be edited by Lord John, who shewed it me the other day.[†8] It is extraordinarily good as a little gossiping picture of his time—I think the best Diary since Pepys. Mrs. Austin is writing Sydney Smith's life,[†1] which I dare say will be very good, he had such a noble wit, and she is such a clever woman.

There's a dull catalogue for you My Dear Cerjat, but I can't amend it. As I write, I see myself walking with you outside the Hotel at Martigny in the dusk, smoking, while our ladies are playing and singing within—You remember?[†2] Apropos of which, I saw Lady Virginia Taylor[†3] the other night—looking positively old, if you can believe in such an unearthly[†4] transformation. I fear (I don't know the fact, but suspect it) that Lady Mary has lost her reason. Georgina is not yet married (talking of ladies) and not in the least likely to be. She seems unaccountably hard to please.

She sends her kindest love to Mrs. Cerjat and all your house, and you. Mrs. Dickens most heartily joins. So do I. Pray say all that is affectionate and attached, to Haldimand, from all of us.

And ever believe me My Dear Cerjat, with great regard

Very faithfully Your friend

CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 8 MAY 1852*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | 1 Stratton Street | Piccadilly.

Tavistock House | Saturday Eighth May 1852

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I received the enclosed (from the Sidney Herbert girl) most opportunely, this morning. I have received her, and instructed Mrs. Morson to fetch her on Monday afternoon. I have not yet seen Mr. Austin, who I think must be about some Health Works in the country.[†5]

Dear Miss Coutts | Ever Most Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To LORD CAMPBELL,[†6] [?8 MAY 1852]

Mention in The Times, 18 May, in report of deputations to Lord Campbell at Stratheden House on 17 May; "Lord Campbell said that he had received a letter from Mr Dickens". Date: after To John Chapman, 7 May but before CD left London on 9 May.

Accompanying an account of the proceedings at a meeting of authors, publishers, and booksellers.[†7]

To HENRY AUSTIN, 17 MAY 1852*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Monday Seventeenth May 1852

My Dear Henry.

I came home on Saturday night.

I have forwarded your note concerning the new scheme, to Miss Coutts who is out of town. I know it will give her great satisfaction.

You have done perfectly right in effecting that change in your position.[†1] I have not the least doubt of it. The more I have considered the subject since we first spoke of it, the more certain I have been of this. I am heartily glad you have made the change.

Affectionately Ever

CD.

To THE DUKE OF DEVONSHIRE, 17 MAY 1852*

MS Devonshire Collections, Chatsworth. Address: His Grace | The Duke of Devonshire | Chiswick.

Tavistock House | Monday Morning, May Seventeenth | 1852.

My Dear Duke of Devonshire.

I have seen Mr. Coote retiring to his room every night with such constancy, to write to you, that I know he has left me nothing to report concerning our late trip[†2]—except that we were all delighted with his good sense, good taste, and modesty; and that we all parted from him with great regret.[†3] Apart from this, his usefulness has been greater than I can express. Instead of a band of hiccupping fiddles, maudlin flutes, and staggering instruments of brass, blaring on their own account into the air, his tact has given us a charming orchestra drilled to their work in a couple of hours.[†4] What he has saved me, in point of ears and temper, will never be known. To crown all, he is associated with Devonshire House—and anything in that connexion comes like a Cordial to every one of us!

Two more trips—one in July, and one in September[†1]—will close our Theatrical Campaign, I believe. At present I am a little tired, having no particular voice to speak of—or with—and feeling in every joint like a stiff Dutch doll.[†2] But I am more than ever bent on success, and am resolved, like my friend Mr. Gabblewig, to "come up smiling, and at it again!"[†3]

I promised the Company before we parted, that I would bear our united testimony to Mr. Coote's merits and would thank you with all my heart. I will say no more, or I feel you will have a misgiving that I want to borrow him again prospectively, and that I must come at last to the Emperor[†4] or the Liber Veritatis.[†5]

My Dear Duke of Devonshire

Ever Yours Most Faithfully | And truly obliged

CHARLES DICKENS

The | Duke of Devonshire

To THE REV. DR BENJAMIN HALL KENNEDY,[†6] 17 MAY 1852*

MS Mrs P. M. C. Hayman. Address: The Reverend Dr. Kennedy | &c &c &c | Shrewsbury.

Tavistock House, London. | Seventeenth May 1852

My Dear Sir

I am very sincerely obliged to you for your kind note, and for the plan of the Exeter Rooms. In the event of my deciding to move the Amateur Company westward, I shall not hesitate to avail myself of your excellent introduction,[†7] and to trouble you again upon the subject. But I am inclined to think that the North still beckons us, with a Bumper in each of its many hands.

I beg to be kindly remembered to Mrs. Kennedy[†1] and the young ladies,[†2] and am my Dear Sir

With much regard | Very faithfully yours

CHARLES DICKENS

The Reverend Dr. Kennedy.

To SIR JOHN POTTER,[†3] 17 MAY 1852

MS Manchester Central Library. Address: John Potter Esquire | Manchester.

Tavistock House, Tavistock Square | Monday Seventeenth May 1852

Sir.

I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your obliging letter, and to assure you that I have great pleasure in accepting the invitation of the Committee of the Manchester Free Library. My engagements are very numerous; but the occasion is too important and the example too noble, to admit of hesitation.

Very faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

John Potter Esquire.

To W. H. WILLS, 17 MAY 1852*

MS Huntington Library.

Tavistock House | Monday Seventeenth May 1852

My Dear Wills. Get Howitt's paper[†4] cast off (allowing, say two of his written pages to be cut out) and send me the money for it in the course of the day. I must positively write to him at once.[†5]

Miss Coutts wants (I don't know why) to find out the character of the paper[†6] to which the enclosed announcement refers. Do you know anything about it?

Ever Faithfully
CD.

— VI - 675 —

To RICHARD BENTLEY, 18 MAY 1852*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Eighteenth May 1852

My Dear Sir

Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton is in possession of some very curious papers having reference to the passing of an International Copyright law with America.[†1] He has communicated them to me, and we agree that they ought to be privately[†2] imparted to you and one or two others interested in like manner in the question; and that we ought to hold immediate Council on the subject. Will you meet Sir Edward here on Saturday next, at 3 o'Clock in the afternoon?[†3]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esquire

— VI - 676 —

To EDWARD CHAPMAN, 18 MAY 1852*

MS University of California, Los Angeles.

Tavistock House. | Tuesday Eighteenth May 1852

My Dear Sir

Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton is in possession of some very curious papers having reference to the passing of an International Copyright Law with America. He has communicated them to me, and we agree that they ought to be privately imparted to you and one or two others interested in like manner in the question; and that we ought to hold immediate Council on the subject. Will you meet Sir Edward here on Saturday next at 3 o'Clock in the afternoon? The matter presses.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Edward Chapman Esquire.

To JOHN MURRAY, 18 MAY 1852*

MS Sir John Murray.

Tavistock House, Tavistock Square | Tuesday Eighteenth May 1852

My Dear Murray.

Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton is in possession of some very curious papers having reference to the passing of an International Copyright law with America. He has communicated them to me, and we agree that they ought to be privately imparted to you and one or two others interested in like manner in the question; and that we ought to hold immediate Council on the subject. Will you meet Sir Edward here on Saturday next at 3 o'Clock in the afternoon? The matter presses.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

John Murray Esquire.

To OCTAVIAN BLEWITT, 18 MAY 1852*

MS Royal Literary Fund.[†1]

Tavistock House | Tuesday Eighteenth May 1852

Dear Sir

I am desirous very earnestly to recommend the case of Mr. Chatto,[†2] to the favorable consideration of the Committee of the Literary Fund. It is one of great distress and affliction, and Mr. Chatto is a most industrious man of upright character and steady habits, whose misfortunes have not been of his own seeking.[†3]

His application is one of that class which I always supported when I had the honor of a seat at the Committee Board, and in reference to which I frequently ventured to suggest that the noblest usefulness of the Literary Fund can be most beneficially exercised. I beg to support it with whatever strength of recommendation I can urge.[†1]

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

O. Blewitt Esquire.

To MARK LEMON, 18 MAY 1852*

MS Mr Edward J. Quinn.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Eighteenth May 1852

My Dear Mark.

We start from London Bridge at 12 tomorrow. If you like to begin the day by strolling down there, and will leave here with me at 11, (or a little before will be better) Catherine will take Mrs. Lemon in the little carriage.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To WILLIAM HOWITT, 18 MAY 1852*

MS University of Texas. Address: William Howitt Esquire | Upper Avenue Road | Regents Park.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Evg. Eighteenth May | 1852

My Dear Sir

My absence from town on the Guild business, has prevented me from answering your note until now.

I have reserved the Religious Credulity paper,[†2] in the hope (having very great faith in the perpetual appearance of that class of mania before the public), that some thing might occur to render its publication particularly seasonable. But I ought not also to have deferred fresh recognition of it as between you and me. For this, pray excuse me in the pressure of much business.

It is in type beside me, but not cast into pages. I think (with a slight condensation towards the end) it will make, as nearly as possible, six pages.[†3] We are in Miss Howitt's debt,[†4] two guineas. I enclose a cheque for eight—"errors excepted".

I am much concerned to find that you are not quite in good humour with Wills's critical powers. If you have any greater faith in mine, and will in future send your papers to me, I have a lively hope in our getting on without much difficulty.

Frankly and earnestly, let me assure you that it would give me real pain to displease you, or to find that any thing in the least disagreeable to you arose out of our intercourse.

My Dear Sir | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

William Howitt Esquire

I have not had an opportunity of looking at the Bone of contention.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 18 MAY 1852

Extract from Goodspeeds Book Shop catalogue No. 147 (1922); MS 2 pp.; dated Tavistock House, 18 May 52.

I write briefly, being surrounded at this moment (in spirit) by no end of babies, and grown up—all calling out of the gloom—"Take me next"—"Look at me!"—&c &c.

To ANTONIO GALLENGA,[†1] 20 MAY 1852

Extract in American Art Association catalogue,[†2] Feb 1924; mention in Samuel T. Freeman & Co. catalogue, 12 Nov 1935; MS 1 p.; dated Tavistock House, 20 May 1852.

Allow me to assure you in reply to your letter, that I have no influence whatever in the affairs of the London Library.[†3] I have never taken any part in its administration, and am not now, even in name, a member of the committee.

To R. H. HORNE, 20 MAY 1852*

MS (copy made by Horne) Free Library of Philadelphia, checked from MS Sotheby, July 1983. Address: R. H. Horne, Esq. | Beaumont Cottage | College Road | Chalk Farm Lane | Hampstead Road.

Tavistock House. | Thursday Evening Twentieth May 1852

My Dear Horne.

I am very much affected by your letter.[†4] The unwritten part[†5] of it is fully expressed to me. She could not have friends more truly and deeply interested in her; and I would earnestly entreat with her and you to have no reserve with us, and to rely upon us, and to let us prove our warmth of heart.

For your expedition itself, I will do nothing but hope, now. I will most faithfully right you if I ever know you to be wronged in the matter while you are absent, and I hereby confidingly salute the colors you have nailed to the mast so manfully!

One thing troubles me. I am not sure but that as a mere matter of policy, with a view to the golden proceedings, the better sort of passage[†1] might be a good investment. If you think so, borrow the difference of me. This is one branch of the one thing. It has two branches. The passage part of the question may have nothing in it, and, in the general shake and jumble of being vomited up by the Kent on the Australian shores, all shades and distinctions of passengers may be very easily confounded. But a small sum of money over and above your estimate, even as a means of retreat if necessary, might be of the last importance. Take Fifty Pounds from me. I can give it you in some safe form—payable to your order in some accessible place in Australia—impossible to be lost or stolen—always available if need be. By ever having it in your power to repay me easily, you will gladden me beyond expression. My dear friend if you should never be so fortunate, what can that matter between you and me, and where, in our Books, (if we have any claim to keep them on the face of this earth) will such an entry ever be found!—

You are going away, and I write, (as I would speak to you if I were bidding you good bye), without one roundabout word. I hope I would at no time set up forms and fashions between us—at this time, least of all. If it were in my nature, it would be a poor acknowledgement of our intimacy within the last two years and the light in which it has presented you.

Ever Faithfully Your friend

CHARLES DICKENS

R. H. Horne Esquire.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 21 MAY 1852*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House. | Twenty First May 1852 | Friday

My Dear Miss Coutts.

Mr. Broderip the Magistrate, enclosed the accompanying note to me (No. 1) with a strong recommendation of the writer for admission into the Home. He had caused the most particular enquiries to be made—believed her character to be without any stain—and had ascertained her statement to be perfectly correct.

I went to the Police Court yesterday, and saw the girl[†2] in his presence, and in that of the Police constable who had made the enquiries. It appears to be a very good case, and I think the girl will do well.

Have you any idea when a ship will sail for the Cape, and give us room to receive her? In the meantime (if you sanction her admission) she has help out of the Poor's box, and lives with an old widow woman who has been truly charitable to her.

The accompanying note from Mr. Austin (No. 2) I received last week at Birmingham. I hope you will approve of it.

Where you are—at what distance—in what climate—on what coast—with what intentions of remaining or returning—are mysteries of the profoundest nature to me.

With kind regards to Mr. and Mrs. Brown

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To R. H. HORNE, 21 MAY 1852

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds. Address: R. H. Horne Esquire | Beaumont Cottage | College Road | Chalk Farm Lane | Hampstead Road.

Tavistock House | Friday Twenty First May 1852

My Dear Horne.

I cannot very well judge of the proposed story. It depends so very much upon the execution. But you know as well as any man what is wanted for Household Words; and I have no doubt that a thousand things will occur to you on board ship (either in this form or in others) that will be most acceptable. The voyage out, and the journey to the Diggings, are full of promise. Perhaps those idle sunny days aboard, will suggest papers of their own and insist on having them written.

I at once agree with pleasure, on behalf of the proprietorship, to continue our arrangement for four months. You will let me know how you wish the money to be paid. When you get "out there", you will let me know (all in due time, as things naturally fall out) what you see to be feasible as to Household Words, for the future.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

R. H. Horne Esquire.

To J. C. [?HANKIE].[†1] 22 MAY 1852

MS McGill University Library.

Tavistock House, London | Twenty Second May 1852

Sir.

Your letter dated the day before yesterday, is almost unintelligible to me by reason of its referring to a supposititious enclosure which is not enclosed in it. I fear it proposes an occupation of my time which my previous engagements render impossible; but I am unwilling to reply to it in my present benighted condition. If you will have the goodness to forward me the Circular you intended to have sent, I shall be happy to answer you.

I have the honor to be Sir | Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

J. C. Hankie Esquire

To MRS GASKELL, 23 MAY 1852*

MS Dr C. Holland Child. Address: Mrs Gaskell | Plymouth Grove | Manchester.

Tavistock House | Sunday Twenty Third May 1852

My Dear Mrs. Gaskell.

The Report is a very remarkable document indeed;[†1] and I feel, in reference to it, just as you do. If you will do a paper on it for Household Words,[†2] I shall be delighted to have it; and I think a writer of your tact and feeling (this is hard fact, not soft sawder) can very impressively and sufficiently point Mr. Wilson's letter, in reference to its being made a show-place.[†3] Which it certainly ought not to be. I would suggest treating of the place generally without a name—mentioning the name at last, and then in this connexion and with earnest agreement in Mr. Wilson's[†4] perception of what it ought not to become.

Very small is the kindness—to use the popular inverted sentence of this year of grace—that I have been able to shew Dr. Solger. I am woefully afraid that the object with which he comes to London is a most unpromising one just now, and will lead to the mere Shipwreck of any Cargo of hopes he may have brought here. I have tried to put this gently before him. The very best thing he could do, would be not to lecture in the Metropolis,[†1] I fully believe. I don't think there is an opening, and we all know how the season is forestalled and cut up by the electioneering perspective.

Forster is very ill with Rheumatic gout. He has been in bed this fortnight, and is brought very low. I think him getting better now, but he is extremely weak. He was obliged to leave the Amateur Company at Shrewsbury[†2] in the beginning of a trip, and became so bad, even on the journey home, that he had to be lifted out of the carriage. (I don't know who did it, but I suppose it was a Crane.)

I shall look forward with real pleasure to knowing Mr. Gaskell—whom I ought to have known so long ago, that I think I do know him if he only knew it.

Dear Mrs. Gaskell | Ever Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 23 MAY 1852*

MS (fragment) Major M. F. Hobbs.

Tavistock House, Tavistock Square | Twenty Third May 1852

obliging note, and very interesting and useful essays on a most important subject.[†3]

To FRANK STONE, 24 MAY 1852*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Monday Evening | Twenty Fourth May 1852

My Dear Stone.

I have a letter from Costello, shewing (as I feared) the great difficulty of his contriving the projected ten days trip. If I could manage it otherwise, would you object to do old Nightingale in the Knibbsian manner?[†4] There is not much to learn in the way of words, and you know it is a good part.[†1] If you would take the part, you would keep it of course. As to the Business, two evenings with Mark and me would make that complete.

Affectionately Ever

CHARLES DICKENS

Frank Stone Esquire.

To W. J. BRODERIP, 25 MAY 1852

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Evening | Twenty Fifth May 1852

My Dear Broderip.

Miss Coutts will be glad to receive Sarah Youngman, and I am happy to add that we can receive her now. If you will let one of your people arrange for her being producible at the Magistrate's door in Vincent Square, on Saturday afternoon at 5 o'Clock, Mrs. Morson the Superintendent of the Home will call to take her there, at that hour.

I earnestly hope you are getting better, and gradually going into training for that same dinner.[†2]

Believe me with much regard | Very faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

W. J. Broderip Esquire

To MRS MORSON, 25 MAY 1852

MS Morgan Library. Address: Mrs. Morson | Urania Cottage | Near The White Horse | Shepherd's Bush.

Tavistock House | Twenty Fifth May 1852

Dear Mrs. Morson—

If you will call on Saturday afternoon at 5 o'Clock at the Magistrates door of the Westminster Police Court, in Vincent Square just beyond Miss Coutts's church, Sarah Youngman, the new Inmate, will be waiting for you. As you are going to a Police Court, I ought to mention that she is merely recommended by the Magistrate as a distressed dress Maker. She has never committed any offence, and her character is considered irreproachable. I tell you so much, in justice to the girl.

Please to summon the Committee.

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To J. B. CARDALE, 27 MAY 1852

MS Dickens House.

Tavistock House | Thursday Twenty Seventh May | 1852

My Dear Sir.

I perfectly agree with you touching the gate,[†1] and am very much obliged to you for your note. I had not the least idea that it was so used, or that my man (to whom I had entrusted the key) ever suffered the key to be out of his possession. I have lost no time in taking it into my own keeping again, and I can answer for no tradesman of mine, or anybody belonging to me, saving himself trouble by means of that short cut in future.

My Dear Sir | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John B Cardale Esquire

To MARK LEMON, 27 MAY 1852

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Twenty Seventh May 1852

My Dear Mark. I am horrified to find that we are engaged—and have been for I don't know how long—to dine with Pollock[†2] on Monday. As you spoke to Simpson last night, will you write him one line deferring the dinner[†3] until the following week—day to be settled in conference between you and me, and afterwards communicated to said Simpson?[†4]

In haste | Ever Affecy.
CD

To R. H. HORNE, 28 MAY 1852

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds. Address: R. H. Horne Esquire.

Tavistock House | Twenty Eighth May 1852

My Dear Horne.

Lemon has suggested to me that a few of our Guild brothers would like to give you a little parting dinner before you go away.

Would it be agreeable to you to meet them, quietly and privately. If so, would Monday the 7th. of June suit you for that purpose?

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

In writing your reply, enclose me your signature on a separate piece of paper. I want it for the Bank at Port Philip.

To W. H. WILLS, 28 MAY 1852*

MS Huntington Library.

Tavistock House | Twenty Eighth May 1852

My Dear Wills.

I don't know that its worth while sending the enclosed to that eminent Journal, except as a check on those very cool statements.[†1] If you think it is worth while, let Callaghan take it. Otherwise, put it in the fire. I have no wish on the subject, though I rather incline to the sending of it.[†2]

I have made up my mind to Charley[†3] tomorrow, and shall expect him (and you, of course) here, say at 6 exactly, to give him more time; unless I hear from you to the contrary.

Guild

I enclose the letter from Newcastle. Touching Derby[†4] I receive a preliminary flourish in a newspaper from Chesterfield[†5] this morning.

I think, as our men (with a view to their Autumn arrangements) are at present on a wrong scent, it would be well to send them round a short note, announcing our hope of being able to make the two trips, one.[†6] I will endeavour to come round to Wellington Street today, before you leave.

Your getting out of town so soon, will be a great point gained and a great move made.

Will Horne be at the Office today? If so, will you give him the enclosed note? If not, will you send it on. It refers to the proposed little dinner.

Ever Faithfully CD.

To J. B. CARDALE, 29 MAY 1852*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Twenty Ninth May 1852

My Dear Sir

I think it indispensable to close the Gate for a time. I have already kept my own little Carriage outside, since the gravel began to be prepared for.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John B Cardale Esquire.

To MARK LEMON, 29 MAY 1852

MS Benoliel Collection.

Household Words | Saturday Twenty Ninth May | 1852

My Dear Mark.

Read the enclosed letter from Horne, and say whether, under these circumstances, the Dinner cannot be proposed for Saturday. Send me a word by Bearer to my house, as I am anxious to get the notes out if it is to come off at all.

Affecy Ever

CD

To THOMAS CHAPMAN, 31 MAY 1852*

MS Walter T. Spencer. Address: Thomas Chapman Esquire | 2 Leadenhall Street.

Tavistock House | Monday Thirty First May, 1852

My Dear Sir

I am precluded from having an article in Household Words on the subject to which the enclosed note refers, because such Institutions have been already especially noticed in that Journal.[†1] Many months have elapsed since they were strongly advocated, and their principal features of merit described.

Otherwise I should have been truly happy in this case, as in any other, to respond to a wish of yours.

Mrs. Dickens unites with me in kind regards to Mrs. Chapman. I suppose your Daughter[†2] is not married yet? Time flies so fast, and it seems so long since we met, that I have a dim and general impression of her being almost twenty!!

My Dear Sir | Very faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Chapman Esquire.

June

To MRS GASKELL, LATE MAY-EARLY JUNE 1852

Mention in To Sir James Emerson Tennent, 29 June 52.

Telling her that J. P. Wilson did not wish for an article on his school in Household Words.

To J. P. WILSON, LATE MAY-EARLY JUNE 1852

Mention in To Sir James Emerson Tennent, 29 June 52.

About his factory school.

To CHARLES COOTE, 1 JUNE 1852*

MS Mr Peter Goodricke. Address: Charles Coote Esquire | Messrs. Coote and Tinney | 17A Duke Street | Manchester Square.

Tavistock House | Tuesday First June 1852

My Dear Sir

Mr. Horne has made a sudden resolution to go to Australia, and will leave this country—probably for ever—in a few days. A few of his friends in the Guild (a small party of eight or so) are going to entertain him at a parting dinner next Saturday—time, 6 for ½ past precisely—place, the Albion by Drury Lane Theatre.[†1] They beg me to say that if you can contrive to become their Guest also, it will give them very great pleasure. And having written this on their behalf, I beg to add a similar and equally strong assurance from myself.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Coote Esquire.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 1 JUNE 1852

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Evening | First June 1852

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I am delighted to welcome you home again.

Mr. Sidney (referred to in the letter you have sent me) is, I presume, a gentleman connected with the Government Emigration Office who has written various stories arising out of Australian life which have appeared in Household Words.[†2] Before seeing the girl[†3] referred to (which I will gladly do) I will write him one line of enquiry respecting this Mr. Crookenden[†4]—to make sure that he is what he represents himself.

I think the case described, a very possible one as to its present history—not as to its past history. I very much doubt that part of the statement. However, to arrest such a course in the beginning, would be to do immense good. Whether the girl's character be what it is represented, or any thing near it, can only be found out (I think) by seeing her.

Pursuing the enquiry I had begun when I last wrote to you, about the Australian Newspaper, I did not find that it seemed a promising affair.

The most bewildering doubts beset me concerning "Trip"—or "Flip"—I can't make out which it is. I hardly think you would propose Flip to me (which is a strong drink) at Noon; and unless the word is "Trip", and means Mrs. Brown, I am on a wide Ocean of conjecture. (Since writing the above, I have looked at your note again, in a sudden burst of hope that it might be "Tripe"—but there is no e). It must be Mrs. Brown!

I am afraid I cannot get out in the middle of the day on Thursday, for I am hard at work with No. 5,[†1] and anxious to get it done. And if I let myself out of my room under such circumstances, I have lost my power over myself for the day. But I will try. If I don't succeed, and you will ask me to come and see you any day next week at 5 or 6 o'Clock, I shall be truly glad. Not that I quite give up Thursday yet.

I thought you were coming back to Highgate, instead of Stratton Street?

With my kindest regards to

T.R.I.P | Ever dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS CARLYLE, 2 JUNE 1852*

MS British Museum.

Tavistock House | Second June 1852

My Dear Mrs. Carlyle.

I have received the MS[†2] safely—and have been a great deal more amused by your note, than I am likely to be by the other contribution.

With my cordial regards to Carlyle

Believe me | Ever Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To GEORGE LILLIE CRAIK,[†3] 2 JUNE 1852*

MS Robert H. Taylor Collection, Princeton.

Tavistock House, Tavistock Square | Second June, 1852.

My Dear Craik.

I was much interested by your note last night, and read the story before going to bed.

I retain it for insertion, with great pleasure.[†4] But if I may venture to add a word of advice to the fair young authoress,[†1] I would found it on my own blotted and corrected sheets, and guard her against supposing that successful Fiction is to be written easily. Patience, attention, seclusion, consideration, courage to reject what comes uppermost, and to try for something better below it—these are the stones I have found in the road, and have learnt to pave the road with.

Very faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Forster is very ill—laid up with rheumatic gout—with no present prospect of getting up, I fear.

To INSPECTOR C. F. FIELD,[†2] 2 JUNE 1852

Summary from Sotheby catalogue, July 1982; MS 1 p.; dated Tavistock House, 2 June 52; addressed Mr Field.

Saying that he is obliged to postpone their expedition that night. Since other occupations require his attention, he proposes the following Wednesday instead. Unless he hears to the contrary he will expect Field at the Household Words Office at 8 o'Clock next Wednesday.

To R. H. HORNE, 2 JUNE 1852*

MS (copy made by Horne) Free Library of Philadelphia, checked from MS at Sotheby's 2½2 July 1983. Address: R. H. Horne Esquire | Beaumont Cottage | College Road | Chalk Farm Lane | Hampstead Road.

Tavistock House | Second June 1852

My Dear Horne.

Our little party on Saturday will be at the Albion by Drury Lane Theatre. The hour, six for half past punctually.

I have remitted the fifty pounds to the Bank of Australasia at Melbourne. Your signature is sent out, and you are described as Mr. Richard Henry Horne, in Coutts's letter of advice. I think it will be advisable to call at the Bank of Australasia,[†3] and mention en passant that you are the gentleman credited with that amount.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

R. H. Horne Esquire.

To HENRY AUSTIN, 3 JUNE 1852*

MS Morgan Library. Address (MS Fales Collection, New York University Library): Henry Austin Esquire | General Board of Health | Whitehall. PM 4 Jun 52.

Tavistock House | Third June 1852 | Thursday

My Dear Henry. I am truly sorry to say I cannot manage to go tomorrow. I have done a very, very poor week's work as yet, and must keep my mind on it. It is not the time consumed. It is the interruption.

Ever affecy.
CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 3 JUNE 1852*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Third June 1852

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I couldn't manage it today—a disappointment, because I never yet saw you the least in the world like a fine lady!

My only consolation is, that I did a good day's work.

The enclosed note, I think puts an end to that case—if you think so too.

Ever Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To W. H. WILLS, 3 JUNE 1852

MS Huntington Library.

Tavistock House | Third June 1852

My Dear Wills.

A hasty note, for I have been at work the whole day, and am (for my sins) engaged to dine with Longman.[†1]

H.W.[†2]

I went over the proof. I could not conceive what "Hope, An Epigram"[†3] meant, and I declare to you I have not the least idea now! Having nothing to put in its place, I could not disturb the Make-up by taking it out.

GUILD.[†2]

You are doing nobly!!! The York idea[†4] is a most admirable one, and will keep us quite right in any case. We must get at least another Thousand Pounds clear.

HORNE'S DINNER.[†1]

We shall be 10, I think. Coote is coming as a guest—and a piano. I would on no account introduce strangers—such as Mr. Hunt[†2]—into so small a party. I know it would never do: most especially with Horne under the circumstances. I have made a tardy exception in favor of Evans as one of the Proprietors of H.W.

Place the Albion—our Albion[†3]—time 6 for ½ past.

Again let me sound the loud timbrel[†4] in your Guild praises.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

I am not quite sure of your Cork[†5] calculations. We will discuss before I answer the letter. Field[†6] I postponed until next Wednesday. It was of little use after all, my going alone—and horribly boreing.[†7]

To [MARK LEMON],[†8] [?2 OR 3 JUNE 1852]

Extract in Goodspeeds Book Shop catalogue, June 1929. Date: clearly about the dinner to Horne; CD would write immediately on hearing from Coote.

Coote accepts, which makes nine at present. I have not heard from Stone. On consideration, I think we may stretch a point in [his][†9] favor. Will you order a piano? A grand, I suppose? But don't let us go beyond a guinea. The No. of guests we shall know tomorrow. I am so sorry to read that about Mac. It seems to me to contain an unnecessary amount of offense, all things considered—and I foresee that it will destroy all pleasant feeling in that direction for a long long time.[†10]

To F. M. EVANS, 9 JUNE 1852*

MS Bradbury, Agnew & Co. Ltd.

Tavistock House | Ninth June 1852

My Dear Evans.

I wish you would write a business-note to this man, saying that you have reported his suggestion to me, and that I feel obliged, but have already taken up the subject and have no intention of pursuing it beyond the limits of the Story now in course of publication &c &c.

Faithfully Yours always

CD.

To JOHN GLADDING,[†1] 9 JUNE 1852*

MS Mr G. B. Gladding. Address: Mr. John Gladding | 20 City Road.

Tavistock House | Ninth June 1852

Sir.

I owe you many thanks for your obliging letter, and sincerely thank you for the confidence you repose in me.

But, being at present, fully occupied, I have no intention whatever of offering myself as a Candidate at the next election.[†2] I have already rejected three proposals,[†3] and prefer to be as useful as I can in my own way.

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. John Gladding

To FRANK STONE, 9 JUNE 1852*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Ninth June 1852

My Dear Stone

Costello (with no intention of aggravating the managerial spasms, but doing it) has written to Wills to say that he can go, he finds, on the next trip.[†4] I have immediately done what you would wish me to do, and have told him that his part shall revert to him if he do go. But don't unlearn it! For I have a strong doubt, even now, of his being able to do the next trip, and a still stronger one of his being available for a supplementary night or so.

Ever Affecy.
CD.

Frank Stone Esquire.

To J. W. BOURKE, 11 JUNE 1852

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House, London | Eleventh June 1852

Dear Sir

I have delayed answering your letter[†1] until the return of the Honorary Secretary to the Guild, Mr. Wills, who has been absent making some arrangements for representations in the North of England. I have now gone over your proposal with him,[†2] and have very carefully considered all the details.

You greatly misconceive the cost of such an expedition, and the number of unseen people necessary to the state of completeness to which our little Theatre has been brought. The expences would be more than twice your estimate.

I am very anxious indeed to visit Ireland in connexion with the Guild, because your assurances only confirm my confidence in the warm-hearted reception we should have; and because it seems but right that Ireland, which sends so many young men into the struggles of literary aspiration here—to say nothing of the Fine Arts[†3]—should be especially addressed in such a cause. For this reason I would have made a great exertion to have effected a trip to Cork with the whole Amateur Company, and to have proceeded thence to Dublin. By going to the two places we might have made the expedition sufficiently remunerative, if the receipts at Cork could have been raised to a larger amount. But, as it is, and on the scale of returns you set before me, I do not feel justified in proposing the hazard to the gentlemen associated. The result in figures, on the creditor side of the account, would scarcely warrant the trouble, wear and tear, and inconvenience.

Allow me to thank you for all the trouble you have taken, and, through you, to acknowledge all the valuable co-operation so readily and cordially proffered.

I have the honor to be | Dear Sir | Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

J. W. Bourke Esquire

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 11 JUNE 1852*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Eleventh June 1852

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I will come to dinner on Sunday with the greatest pleasure. So would Charley—but that he is at Eton.

With my most enthusiastic remembrances to Trip; to whom I feel I am devotedly attached, somehow or other,

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To JAMES THOMSON,[†1] 11 JUNE 1852

MS Mr William H. Scheide.

Tavistock House | Friday Eleventh June 1852

My Dear Sir

I have heard nothing whatever from Mr. Cutler,[†2] but I suppose he is going to send me the papers.[†3]

I have my doubts on the merits of the Bornean proceedings,[†4] and can by no means consent to make the least allusion to them.[†5] Not to mention, that I think the introduction of such a topic in a mixed company, would be extremely impolite and dangerous.

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

James Thomson Esquire.

To MARK LEMON, 12 JUNE 1852

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Saturday Evening | Twelfth June 1852

My Dear Mark

The Gardeners entreat me—though I know they won't be ready with dinner!—to be there by a quarter before 6. I will leave here at ½ past 5, and come round to you, straight.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To JOHN WOOD,[†1] 12 JUNE 1852

MS Princeton University Library.

Tavistock House | Twelfth June 1852.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his Compliments to Mr. Wood, and regrets that his engagements will not admit of his having the pleasure of complying with the request of the Committee of the Society for improving the condition of the labouring classes.[†2]

To MR GREENING, 15 JUNE 1852*

MS Yale University Library.

Office of Household Words | Fifteenth June 1852

Dr. Mr. Greening

You may go to Press with this No. of Bleak House, as soon as you have made the corrections I have marked on the Proof now returned.[†3] Don't send to Mr. Forster.[†4]

I enclose an article for Household Words, to be got into type at once as it is for the next No.[†5]

Faithfully Yours

CD.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 15 JUNE 1852

Mention in John Anderson catalogue No. 786. Dated Tavistock House, Tuesday, 15 June 52.

To THE GOVERNOR OF ST ALBAN'S PRISON,[†6] 16 JUNE 1852

MS University of California, Los Angeles.

Queens Hotel, St. Albans | Wednesday Evening | Sixteenth June 1852.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to the Governor of the Prison, and begs to say that being in St. Albans for a few hours[†7] he will be glad to take the opportunity of seeing the Jail,[†8] if it should not be inconsistent with any of its regulations, and if it would suit the Governor's convenience to admit him at a little before ten in the morning.

To MRS BROWN, 17 JUNE 1852*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Mrs. Brown | Miss Burdett Coutts | Holly Lodge | Highgate.

Thursday Afternoon | June Seventeenth 1852

My Dear Mrs. Brown.

Coming back just now from St. Albans (where I have been looking about me for Bleak House purposes)[†1] I found your pleasant note on my table—with the sincerest pleasure, I assure you.

I have not read the speech—I hope it is well done—but I have strong apprehensions that it may be sadly mangled. I can't help saying that I wish you (and the new Subscriber)[†2] could have heard it; for it was a pretty subject—and that, and the sunburnt faces, worked me up to my best pitch. It made quite a remarkable impression on the audience.[†3]

The possibility of that Mr. Dunn bringing such an action, at any time or under any circumstances, I hold to be another of the Scandals of the law. It is really monstrous.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Brown.

To FRANK STONE, 18 JUNE 1852*

MS Mr C. D. B. Hawksley.

Tavistock House | Eighteenth June 1852

My Dear Stone.

I have been at St. Albans, and unable to answer your note and acknowledge my young friend's sketch,[†4] until now.

I sincerely think it very good indeed; and I particularly observe in it the introduction of that gloomy Cone[†1] in the background. It seems to me, to shew a feeling for the subject, and an instinctive knowledge of what is in keeping with it, which are among the very best imaginative qualities in Art. Pray thank him from me (and encourage him too, in all judiciousness) and tell him that when he becomes a great painter I shall threaten to exhibit this Early Marcus unless he paints me a picture for nothing—which he will be accordingly obliged to do—and which I shall leave, at my death, to the descendants in a direct line of Samuel Carter Hall.[†2]

I thought he might like to see Browne on the same theme.[†3] I therefore send you the rough proof.

Ever affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

Frank Stone Esquire

To THOMAS BEARD, 22 JUNE 1852

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | Morning Herald Office | Shoe Lane.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Twenty Second June | 1852

My Dear Beard. Thursday the first of July, is a holiday at Eton. Are you game for a water party on that day?[†4] Say yes, and Lemon (who is a jolly fellow) shall be our coadjutor and comrade in league against the boys—Fortnum and Mason shall come to the rescue—and Mahogany[†5] shall be impressed.

Ever Faithfully
CD.

Thomas Beard Esquire.

To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, 23 JUNE 1852*

MS Berg Collection.

Office of Household Words | Wednesday Twenty Third June 1852

My Dear George.

This is a very sensible pamphlet, containing some sound advice.[†6] But it is so obviously written as a pamphlet, and is so wide of the Household Words manner (necessarily), that it would be almost as much out of place in these pages, as a live Salmon in the Long walk at Windsor.

Pray thank the writer from me for his obliging offer, and take the trouble to explain to him why I cannot accept it.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

George Cruikshank Esquire.

To JOHN LAURIE,[†1] 26 JUNE 1852*

MS Major J. E. C. Laurie.

Tavistock House | Saturday Evening | Twenty Sixth June 1852.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his Compliments to Mr. Laurie, and begs to thank him for the book[†2] which records his praiseworthy exertions to remedy one of the most monstrous evils of this country, and one of the most grim absurdities ever presented in any country. The neglect of its wretched youth until they become criminals, and cost God only knows how much—in money, waste, and ruin—will begin to sound loudly in many ears that are rather deaf at present, when a new flag shall be floating in Australia and New Zealand.

Mr. Laurie scarcely does Mr. Dickens justice, if he suppose that Mr. Dickens does not use his pen in this matter. He has tried, in most of his writing to present it in some striking light; and it is not excluded from the book he is now publishing.[†3]

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 27 JUNE 1852*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | 1 Stratton Street | Piccadilly.

Tavistock House | Sunday Night | Twenty Seventh June 1852

My Dear Miss Coutts

I am anxious to say to you that when I had exactly Mrs. Brown's illness—the sufferings of which were dreadful, and which I can most truly sympathize with in her—I derived extraordinary relief from a remedy suggested after many failures, by our ordinary medical man. It was, a large pinch of snuff whenever I felt the oppressive and fearful sensation.[†4] Not being a snufftaker, I got some "High Dried Welch",[†1] which is perfectly clean and free from stain. This, and a teaspoonful of sal volatile in a wine glass of water when I awoke with that horror upon me in the night, did wonders. The snuff has certainly an immediate effect on the disordered nerves—or a real effect on their imaginary affection, which counteracts it.

I wish you would tell her this. I recommend it, from an experience so oppressive and shocking to the spirits that I shudder to think of it.[†2] An accidental momentary recurrence of it, now, I should instantly meet with a pinch! Think how easy it is to try, and how very ready the proof.

I write hastily before going to bed.

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

To F. M. EVANS, 28 JUNE 1852

MS Dickens House.

Tavistock House | Twenty Eighth June 1852. | Monday

My Dear Evans.

When we effected our arrangements before I went to Italy, was any Policy of Life Insurance of mine placed in your hands, which I have never had back? I remember no such transaction, but I cannot find anywhere my Eagle policy for £5,000; and it has occurred to my despairing mind as just within the limits of possibility that it may have been deposited with you at that time, without my remembering it.[†3] I effected two Britannia Policies for you, I remember, which I have now discontinued; but I have not the least recollection of placing the Eagle policy in your hands in the meanwhile. Pray enlighten me, for I am utterly confounded.

Ever Faithfully Yours.
CHARLES DICKENS

F. M. Evans Esquire.

To THOMAS BEARD, 29 JUNE 1852

MS Dickens House. Address: Private | Thomas Beard Esquire | Morning Herald Office | Shoe Lane | Fleet Street.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Evening | Twenty Ninth June 1852

My Dear Beard.

The Mail train leaves Paddington at ¼ past 10. AM. At 10 precisely, the only real Inimitable will appear with a cheerful countenance in the Booking Office, to take his place for Windsor (N.B. Not Slough).

I have ordered a box of cold mutton sandwiches, some Captains' biscuits, and a pint and a half of Mild Porter in a bottle. These we shall take with us. And I think—with sich a basket—we shall be as nearly as possible all right?

Ever Affectionately
CD.

Timber's compliments. He has given up all idea of handing down his name and race. He usually sits, with his forelegs (a little bowed) very wide apart, and his head apparently nailed by the left ear to the kitchen door.

To MRS GASKELL, 29 JUNE 1852

MS Dickens House.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Twenty Ninth June | 1852

My Dear Mrs. Gaskell.

I have read these papers[†1] with a mixed feeling. There is much in them that is very good—much that I think excessively injudicious and much too likely to make hypocrites. I cannot say that the impression they leave on me is quite satisfactory. I doubt if Mr. Gaskell would teach children in that way.

You have made such an impression on me as to the repetition of Bulwer's Comedy at Manchester, that I have resolved not to play it. We shall act Used Up, Charles The Twelfth,[†2] and Mr. Nightingale's Diary. The two former are excellent little pieces—especially the first, which is by far the best thing we have ever done. It is a French story, and the idea of it is quite delightful.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To CHARLES KNIGHT, 29 JUNE 1852

Text from MDGH, I, 277, checked from MS Sotheby 2½2 July 1983.

Tavistock House, Twenty Ninth June 1852

My Dear Knight.

A thousand thanks for the Shadow, which is charming.[†3] May you often go (out of town) and do likewise!

I dined with Charles Kemble[†4] yesterday, to meet Emil Devrient the German actor.[†1] He said (Devrient is my antecedent), that Ophelia spoke the snatches of ballads in their German version of Hamlet, because they didn't know the airs. Tom Taylor said that you had published the airs in your Shakespeare.[†2] I said that if that were so, I know you would be happy to place them at the Germans' service. If you have got them and will send them to me, I will write to Devrient (who knows no English) a French explanation and reminder of the circumstance, and will tell him how I thus wrote to you, and how you responded like a man and a—I was going to say, Publisher, but you are nothing of the sort except as Tonson.[†3] Then indeed you are every Inch a Pub!

Ever affectionately
CD.

To SIR JAMES EMERSON TENNENT,[†4] 29 JUNE 1852*

MS Sir John Langham.

Tavistock House | Tuesday, Twenty Ninth June 1852

My Dear Sir James.

I am very much obliged to you for your kind note.

I am in a position of some little difficulty in reference to that meritorious Institution,[†5] and scarcely see my way at present to a description of it. It was undertaken (first proposed to me indeed) by a lady, a distinguished writer,[†6] who went to work con amore. Mr. Wilson, however, notwithstanding my suggestion that the name of the place need not be mentioned, made such an urgent entreaty to me not to pursue the subject, that I immediately abandoned it as a matter of course.[†1] Having brought that earnest volunteer to a dead stop, by blowing cold, I cannot make up my mind to trying to get her into action again, by blowing hot.[†2] And I am still more averse to undertaking the description myself or entrusting it to anybody else, because that would seem but thankless and evasive towards her.

On the whole, I fear I must trust to the chapter of accidents, to give me a good occasion of approaching the theme again.[†3] If Mr. Wilson could have known his own mind at first, I should have been most happy to have rendered justice to it.[†4]

Many thanks. | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Sir James Emerson Tennent.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 30 JUNE 1852*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Thirtieth June 1852

My Dear Miss Coutts.

Many thanks for your note, received last night. I send to know how Mrs. Brown is this morning.

Mrs. Dickens and her sister will come tonight, with the greatest pleasure.
I have arranged to confer with Mr. Stone[†5] on Saturday evening. He enters into the matter—as well he may—with the greatest interest, and begs to call into the Council "an eminently practical neighbour Mr. [Quekett][†6] the Incumbent of Christchurch St. George's in the East."

If it will suit you to see me earlier on Sunday—about your lunch time—I shall be glad. We generally dine early on Sunday, because of our two girls dining with us.

I enclose the Shepherd's Bush book, and Silver's account.[†1] Shall I pay them? Mrs. Morson also wants money for petty cash. Shall I give it to her?

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours
CD.

To LORD JOHN RUSSELL, 30 JUNE 1852

Text from MDGH, I, 277.

Tavistock House, Wednesday, June 30th, 1852.

My dear Lord,

I am most truly obliged to you for your kind note,[†2] and for your so generously thinking of me in the midst of your many occupations.[†3] I do assure you that your ever ready consideration had already attached me to you in the warmest manner,[†4] and made me very much your debtor. I thank you unaffectedly and very earnestly, and am proud to be held in your remembrance.

Believe me always, yours faithfully and obliged.

[CHARLES DICKENS]

July

To MARK LEMON, 2 JULY 1852

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Friday Evening Second July | 1852

My Dear Mark. I send you the books in which you are interested,[†5] and the table of the Circuit.[†6]

But I don't find that Ducket[†7] in Charles the XII has anything to do! There seem to be no words in the part!! I can't find them!!![†8]

Affectionately Ever

CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 3 JULY 1852*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Third July 1852 | Saturday Afternoon

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I am very sorry to hear this about Mrs. Morson.[†1] It is extremely unfortunate.

I am going to dine with Mr. Stone this afternoon. But instead of coming to you tomorrow, I will write from Folkestone![†2] For my Muse has hung fire so much this last week, and I am so persecuted by people with letters of introduction of all kinds, that I really have worried myself (and been worried) into the belief that I cannot write without a change, and am going down there tomorrow morning, to remain until about Wednesday. I hope in that time to explore the neighbourhood (after working hours) and to come back provided with a house.[†3] I feel as if I had been thinking my brain into a sort of cabbage net.

I hope Mrs. Brown is better. I cannot quite satisfy myself whether this warm day will be trying to her or comfortable to her.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To THE DUKE OF DEVONSHIRE, 3 JULY 1852

MS Devonshire Collections, Chatsworth.

Tavistock House | Saturday Third July 1852.

My Dear Duke of Devonshire.

The last Guild trip, comes off next month. We start on Sunday the 22nd of August, and shall be absent either eleven days or a fortnight. It is yet uncertain which; but most decidedly, in no case, beyond a fortnight.[†4]

Pray don't answer this! If Mr. Coote should be, and could be—&c &c &c &c.[†5] I really have not the hardihood to do more than let this hint loose upon the summer air. Even as I do that, the paper seems to take a rosy tint. As well it may!

A smell of hay comes in at my open windows, and makes me still more penitent for writing to you at this season of the year.

Ever Yours most Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

The | Duke of Devonshire

To JOHN KNOWLES, 7 JULY 1852*

MS (draft) Morgan Library.

Tavistock House, London | Seventh July 1852

My Dear Sir

I have just come back from Folkestone, and find your note of the day before yesterday awaiting me.

The 1st. of September next, is the day on which the Amateur Company of the Guild of Literature and Art purpose acting again, in pursuance of the requisition they have had the pleasure to receive in Manchester.

[†a]I beg to thank[†a] you for your obliging offer of the gratuitous use of your handsome Theatre for the purpose; but as [†b]we have arranged to act on our own Stage and with our own scenery &c, and as these are not adaptable to a regular Theatre (which I explained on a previous occasion to a gentleman who wrote to me on your behalf) I have already accepted the gratuitous offer of the Free Trade hall.[†b]

The last paragraph of your letter is expressed, rather as if I had left some former communication of yours unanswered. I beg to remind you that I replied to your former favor on this subject as explicitly as possible[†1]

To THE HON. RICHARD WATSON, 7 JULY 1852

MS Huntington Library.

Tavistock House | Wednesday Evening, Seventh July | 1852

My Dear Watson

I have just come home from Folkestone, and am truly concerned to find your note here. The subject was so far from escaping my recollection that, several times lately, I have had it in my mind to ask you whether you recollected my volunteering and whether you would like me to come. But I settled within myself, as you said nothing about it that there might easily exist some little local reasons or arrangements that rendered it undesirable. I am now more vexed than I can tell you, to find that you would have liked me to be there, for I can most honestly and heartily say that no one in the world could feel a livelier interest in your success than I, as no one can feel more sincerely attached to you. And whether I ought to knock my own head against the chimney piece for not having been at the Nomination, or whether I ought (in the spirit) to give yours a gentle tap against the same object for being so horribly considerate as not to ask me before, I am not clear. I really take it to heart that I did not know of this sooner, and have had more than half a mind to quarrel with Catherine or Georgina—as if they were to blame!

I hope you are safely in, and that a new MP of the right sort will dine with me on Sunday. The conduct of the Derby people about Maynooth[†1] is worthy of them—and I don't know how one could better express political baseness of the worst kind.

If I were to tell you half of my annoyance at not having been with you to day,[†2] you would think the heat had made me fretful. But I am quite sore about it, and I think it must[†3] be your fault!

Ever Affectionately Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

The Honorable Richard Watson.

To THE REV. H. CHRISTOPHERSON,[†4] 9 JULY 1852

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House, Tavistock Square | Ninth July 1852

Sir.

I have received your letter of yesterday's date,[†5] and shall content myself with a brief reply.

— VI - 707 —

There was a long time during which benevolent societies were spending immense sums on missions abroad, when there was no such thing as a Ragged School in England, or any kind of associated endeavour to penetrate to those horrible domestic depths in which such schools are now to be found; and where they were, to my most certain knowledge, neither placed nor discovered by the Society for the propagation of the gospel in foreign parts.

If you think the balance between the home mission and the foreign mission justly held in the present time—I do not. I abstain from drawing the strange comparison that might be drawn, between the sums even now expended on foreign missions, and the sums expended in endeavours to remove the darkest ignorance and degradation from our very doors, because I have some respect for mistakes that may be founded in a sincere wish to do good. But, I present a general suggestion of the still-existing anomaly (in such a paragraph as that which offends you) in the hope of inducing some people to reflect on this matter, and to adjust the balance more correctly. I am decidedly of opinion that the two works, the home and the foreign, are not conducted with an equal hand; and that the home claim is by far the stronger and the more pressing of the two.

Indeed, I have very grave doubts whether a great commercial country holding communication with all parts of the world, can better christianise the benighted portions of it than by the bestowal of its wealth and energy on the making of good Christians at home [†a]and on the utter removal of neglected and untaught childhood from its streets, before it wanders elsewhere.[†a] For, if it steadily persist in this work, working downward to the lowest, the travellers of all grades whom it sends abroad, will be good, exemplary, practical missionaries, instead of undoers of what the best professed missionaries can do.[†1]

These are my opinions, founded, I believe, on some knowledge of facts and some observation. If I could be scared out of them, let me add in all good humour, by such easily-impressed words as "Anti-christian" or "irreligious",[†2] I should think that I deserved them in their real signification.

— VI - 708 —

I have referred in vain to page 312 of Household Words for the sneer to which you call my attention.[†1] Nor have I, I assure you, the least idea where else it is to be found.

I am Sir | Your faithful Servant

CHARLES DICKENS

The Reverend Henry Christopherson

To THE EDITOR OF THE TIMES, 9 JULY 1852

Text from The Times, 10 July 52.

Tavistock House, Tavistock Square, | Friday, July 9.

Sir,

I observe in The Times of this day a letter signed "One of your most Constant Readers," complaining (I have no doubt with the best reason) of a certain printed slip—an advertisement—which he found artfully enclosed between the leaves of a number of Household Words.[†2]

It is unnecessary for me to assure you that nobody connected with the publication of Household Words has the least knowledge of this disgraceful effusion,[†3] or has had the least part in placing it where your correspondent found it.

This mode of advertisement is frequently resorted to by newsmen. Nor have I, or any other editor, any remedy or protection against the practice that I know of, except the exposure of the offender. If your correspondent will oblige me with his name and address, and will induce his newsman to inform him from what wholesale dealer in London he receives his supply of Household Words, I will use my utmost endeavours to give the public, through your journal, the name and address in full of the person, whom they should by no means employ.[†1]

I am, Sir, your faithful servant,
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN KNOWLES, 10 JULY 1852†

MS Dr and Mrs Gordon F. Madding.

Tavistock House | Saturday Tenth July, 1852

My Dear Sir

You will find that your letter of yesterday's date is quite unnecessary—except for publication perhaps—if you will call to your remembrance the question you have already asked me, and the answer I have already given you to it.

You wished to know if the Amateur Company of the Guild of Literature and Art intended to act in Manchester on the 1st of September, for the benefit of that Institution. To which craving for information on your part, I very plainly replied Yes, with all needful particulars as to the how, when, and where.

I cannot accept your assistance, as you surely know by this time (if you ever will consent to know it on any terms whatever), and I am going to bear your opposition with as much fortitude as I can exercise.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Knowles Esquire.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, [?11 JULY 1852]*

MS Morgan Library. Date: between 3 July, when he first heard of Mrs Morson's candidature for the Foundling Hospital, and 25 July, when he referred to her not being elected. On 4 July he was in Folkestone; of the two intervening Sundays, the earlier, 11 July, seems the more likely, following a discussion with Stone on the 10th.

Tavistock House | Sunday Morning

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I hope and trust Mrs. Brown will now do better. We are all very much concerned at her being so ill, but I have no doubt it is better for her disorder to have its full way than to linger about her as it has been doing.

I had a full discussion last night with Mr. Stone and the neighbour whom he called in.[†1] I think everything appears promising and comparatively easy for the great experiment.[†2] I will send you a note round on Wednesday, to ascertain how Mrs. Brown is, and whether I shall call on the Thursday afternoon.

I understand Mrs. Morson's endeavour to better her condition, to resolve itself into her being a Candidate—taking the chances of success or failure—for the Office of Matron to the Foundling;[†3] the salary of which is £100 a year.

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To THE REV. THE HON. S. G. OSBORNE,[†4] 13 JULY 1852*

MS Private.

Tavistock House, Tavistock Square | Tuesday Thirteenth July 1852.

Dear Sir

I write to you hastily to save the post, after having been occupied all day.

The exposure of the offender will be ample punishment, and (I have little doubt) will stop the practice.

It is pretty clear to me that I have now got at the man. Whittaker's house is a very respectable one, and has given me full particulars. But, there are two booksellers at Blandford—one is Mr. Shipp,[†5] and the other (if I remember the name correctly) Mr. Heyling.[†6] Will you let me know the name of the bookseller who supplies Household Words to you? Not that he is in the least inculpated, but because Whittaker's house receives its supply from two other dealers; and to have positive evidence through which dealer's hand your number passed, we must know which of the local booksellers supplied you.

I have scarcely a doubt that the man who inserted the slip (which I have) is Strange,[†7] of Amen Corner, the publisher of the offensive book itself.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Reverend S. G. Osborne

To FRANK STONE, 15 JULY 1852

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Thursday Fifteenth July | 1852.

My Dear Stone

If you are disposed for a stroll this evening, I shall be at home after dinner.

Ever affecy.
CD.

To MISS CLARKE,[†1] 17 JULY 1852

Text transcribed by Prof. Edgar Johnson from New York Tribune.

Tavistock House | July 17, 1852

My Dear Miss Clarke

I am afraid you will have set me down in that diary of yours—for I have no doubt you are an angel of the recording species[†2]—as the falsest of mankind. If so, pray drop a tear upon the page and blot the entry out[†3]—for I don't deserve it.

I have not been able to send you sooner the promised list of our theatrical engagements. But I can do so now, and here it is:
Monday, 23rd. August, Nottingham
Wednesday, 25th August, Derby
Friday, 27th. August, Newcastle
Monday, 30th August, Sheffield
Wednesday, 1st. September, Manchester

I think you would find the last-named place the best.[†4]

I enclose the letter to the Prison Governor I spoke of.[†5]

Our address until the Winter will be 10, Camden Crescent, Dover.[†1]

Believe me always | Faithfully yours,

CHARLES DICKENS

To AUGUSTUS TRACEY, 17 JULY 1852*

MS Fales Collection, New York University Library.

Tavistock House | Seventeenth July 1852

My Dear Tracey.

I give this letter of introduction to Miss Clarke, a distinguished American Authoress, who is seeing all the sights in London that are to be beheld by mortal vision,[†2] and whom I particularly wish to initiate into the best-kept of prisons. So, of course, I beg her to come to yours![†3] I am concerned for the national honor, as she has seen Newgate.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Lieutenant Tracey.

To CHARLES COOTE, 17 JULY 1852*

MS Mr Peter Goodricke.

Tavistock House | Seventeenth July 1852

My Dear Sir

I wrote to the Duke (as you and I arranged) on the subject of your accompanying us in the concluding trip. He wrote a reply that is like himself and like no other man in the world.

We shall be away, perhaps eleven days, perhaps a fortnight. We shall leave town on Sunday the 22nd. of August. The time and place will be duly made known to you. On the previous Monday the 16th., Tuesday the 17th., and Wednesday the 18th., we shall be rehearsing at the Lyceum from 3 until 8. I have made several changes in the bill; one of which is, the reduction of the Comedy[†1] into 3 acts,[†2] and the putting up of two farces each night.[†3]

I shall be at 10 Camden Crescent, Dover, until the Rehearsals begin.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Coote Esquire

To JOSEPH ELLIS, 17 JULY 1852*

MS Bodleian Library.

Tavistock House | Seventeenth July 1852

Dear Mr. Ellis.

I quite agree with you in the matter of the Charivari, and will not lose sight of the subject in Household Words.[†4]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To F. M. EVANS, 17 JULY 1852*

MS Bradbury, Agnew & Co. Ltd.

Whitefriars | Saturday Seventeenth July 1852

My Dear Evans.

I came down here to see you about the letter to the Times, which requires caution.[†5]

The state of the American case, is, that the money is made up, and that you had better pay yours to Murray.[†6] I have sent him my first £100 today.[†7] Crampton[†8]

writes that there is no doubt whatever, of the Treaty being passed, & that he is even willing to give £500 himself.[†1]

My address is 10 Camden Crescent, Dover.

Faithfully Yours
CD

To CHARLES KNIGHT, 17 JULY 1852*

MS Mr Edward S. Moore III.

Tavistock House | Seventeenth July 1852

My Dear Knight.

I am very much pleased with the Shadow,[†2] which I dare say you have in proof by this time. The enclosed[†3] is very curious, and quite true enough for us at any rate.

Ever affecy.
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Knight Esquire.

To CHRISTOPHER LONSDALE,[†4] 17 JULY 1852*

MS Yale University Library.

Tavistock House | Seventeenth July 1852.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Lonsdale, and begs to thank him for his obliging note and its accompanying music.[†5]

To SIR JOHN POTTER, 17 JULY 1852*

MS Manchester Central Library. Address: Sir John Potter | Manchester.

Tavistock House | Seventeenth July, 1852

My Dear Sir John.

I have been out of town these last few days, and take the earliest opportunity of replying to your letter.

By the Second of September I shall have gone through so much heat and exertion in the course of ten days acting and travelling, that I hope you will not want me to speak on the occasion of the opening of the Library.[†1] It would really be, under the circumstances, a serious penalty.

But I will attend the interesting ceremony with the greatest pleasure, and I shall be happy to convey any similar invitation to the gentlemen associated with me.

If you decide upon Thursday the second of September and should wish to write to me to that effect, may I beg you to have the kindness to address me at 10 Camden Crescent, Dover.

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Sir John Potter.

To MRS HARRIET BEECHER STOWE,[†2] 17 JULY 1852

Text from Mrs H. B. Stowe, Uncle Tom's Cabin, or Life among the Lowly, with Bibliography by George Bullen, Boston, 1882, Introduction, p. xvii.

Tavistock House, London, | July 17, 1852.

Dear Madam,

I have read your book[†3] with the deepest interest and sympathy, and admire, more than I can express to you, both the generous feeling which inspired it, and the admirable power with which it is executed.

If I might suggest a fault in what has so charmed me, it would be that you go too far and seek to prove too much. The wrongs and atrocities of slavery are, God knows! case enough. I doubt there being any warrant for making out the African race to be a great race,[†1] or for supposing the future destinies of the world to lie in that direction; and I think this extreme championship likely to repel some useful sympathy and support.

Your book is worthy of any head and any heart that ever inspired a book. I am much your debtor, and I thank you most fervently and sincerely.[†2]

CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Harriet B. Stowe.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 17 JULY 1852

Extract in T. F. Madigan catalogue (c. 1930-1); MS 2 pp.; addressed Tavistock House, 17 July 52.

Although the poor boy's[†3] writing is admirable, considering the circumstances in which he has been placed, I am strongly inclined to think that the less he is encouraged to do in that way for the future, the happier he will be. I would most decidedly gratify his own inclination which appears to me to be a proof of his own good sense, and send him to Australia.

To HENRY AUSTIN, 18 JULY 1852*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Sunday Eighteenth July 1852

My Dear Henry

I can't make out from your letter whether you propose to do that subject yourself. Will you? I think it a very good one, if pointedly and lightly put. If you would rather not, I will endeavour to innocculate[†1] Morley.[†2] But I think it would be best in your hands.

I am going to Dover tomorrow morning (10 Camden Crescent) for three months. But I shall be at the office every Wednesday. Will you come and dine there next Wednesday at half past five, and discuss the matter?

Ever affecy.

CD.

To W. H. WILLS, 18 JULY 1852*

MS Huntington Library.

Tavistock House | Sunday Eighteenth July 1852

My Dear Wills.

I suppose there is no doubt that the application at Birmingham was duly made in my name?[†3] I say thus much, because I did not appear there before the bench, or enter into any bond, or behold in the flesh any sureties. All of which I did at Shrewsbury.

I am a little dashed by their making any point at Manchester of such nonsense.

At halfpast 8 tomorrow morning—

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To THE EDITOR OF THE TIMES, 19 JULY 1852

Text from The Times, 20 July 52.

Tavistock House | July 19.

Sir,

Reverting to the subject of the discovery, by one of your correspondents, of an indecent handbill surreptitiously inserted between the leaves of a number of Household Words[†4] (as I understand it has been inserted in several other publications), and to my promise to endeavour to discover to whom the public are indebted for such obscene favours, I beg to state that your correspondent has privately communicated with me, and that I have carefully followed the clue he has given me. I find the following are the facts of the case:—

The number of Household Words in question was forwarded to the country dealer from whom your correspondent received it through the highly respectable wholesale house of Messrs. Whittaker and Co.[†1] It left the Household Words office, of course, without the indecent handbill, and the indecent handbill was not inserted by Messrs. Whittaker and Co., and it was not inserted by the country dealer.

But Messrs. Whittaker and Co., in their ordinary course of business, received that number of Household Words from Mr. Strange, jun., of Amen-corner, Paternoster-row,[†2] and the name of Mr. Strange, jun., of Amen-corner, Paternoster-row, appears at the foot of that indecent handbill as the publisher of the book which it recommends to the public.[†3]

I am, Sir, your faithful servant,

CHARLES DICKENS

To CHARLES KNIGHT, 21 JULY 1852

Extract in Sotheby catalogue, July 1983; MS 1 p.; dated Household Words Office, 21 July 52; addressed Charles Knight.

Expostulating over an editorial error in which the title for the article Night and Day had been replaced by that of Knight's contribution Shadows.[†4] I cannot imagine how a thing so preposterous came about, but pray believe that some demoniacal and asinine combination of accidents alone is to blame.

I am at 10 Camden Crescent Dover, where I shd be delighted to see you.

Ever affecy

CD.

To C. M. YOUNG,[†1] 21 JULY 1852

Text from J. C. Young,[†2] A Memoir of Charles Mayne Young, 1871, II, 158-9; (aa) corrected from facsimile in Maggs Bros catalogue No. 522 (Summer 1929).

Office of Household Words | [a]Wednesday Evening Twenty First July 1852

My Dear Young.

I have gone carefully over the enclosed papers, and am very sorry to say that I can make no use of them here. They have none of the qualities that are essential for Household Words. The writing is very agreeable and lady-like; but there is no novelty of observation or charm of expression, or plain force of purpose, or compactness of treatment, to separate it from hundreds upon hundreds of similar contributions that are for ever coming here. The lion and the spaniel is not, as the writer supposes, a new story—and could be better related in two pages than in ten. (Besides which, the concluding reflections[a] take it for granted that the lion really is a very brave animal, which some wise naturalists of later times have seen reason to doubt.) "The Bittern" is an essay on the ordinary essayical model, which tells the reader nothing previously unknown, and which could only be made acceptable for the sake of what it does tell, by that information being communicated in a picturesque and special way. Exactly the same objection applies with at least equal force to the essay called "The Victories of Love." "The Village Home," and "The Brother and Sister," are children's stories, and quite out of the road of a publication addressing so large an audience as this of ours does—in which the constant endeavour is, to adapt every paper to the reception of a number of classes and various orders of mind at once.

I enter into these prosing details because you take the papers out of the ordinary category, by being interested in them, and because you have really interested me, too, by what you have told me of the writer. I have considered the probabilities of their being accepted elsewhere, and really cannot suggest a periodical (able and willing to pay for them) that I think likely to receive them. Whether such publishers for young people as Messrs. Darton & Co., of Holborn Hill,[†3] or Harris, of St. Paul's Churchyard,[†4] would think them adapted to their purpose, I doubt—but I cannot, honestly, awaken a better hope. In this I may be mistaken, and I should be very glad to know it.

If you could see the sub-editor's basket of proffered contributions for one week, you would not wonder—if you do now—at my having a heavy sense of the responsibility of encouraging a writer to proceed on insufficient grounds.

My dear Young, | Ever your faithful and true Friend,
CHARLES DICKENS

P.S. If the lady[†5] should wish to send me anything else through you, I will read it most readily, and with a hearty desire (as I have had in the case of the present papers) to accept it if I possibly can.

To THOMAS BEARD, 22 JULY 1852

MS Dickens House.

10 Camden Crescent, Dover | Twenty Second July 1852

My Dear Beard.

This is to certify that the undersigned has taken this pleasant and commodious Family Residence for eleven or twelve weeks.[†1] Also, that there is a capital spare room; and that if you don't make a longer stay than you did last year,[†2] you'll find yourself rather falling into disrepute. The Theatrical campaign will occupy a fortnight, beginning on the 22nd. of August. I mention this, as a guide to your arrangements, as I an't a going to stand your walking into the Cyder Cup and cold punch in my absence. No no my boy. You must be looked arter.

I hear of two small green objects with an ancient and fish-like smell[†3] proceeding from their surfaces—which are not piles—or water marks—having been seen on the beach at Broadstairs. I am inclined to think they must be the Baldwinian twins.[†4] The oldest Hoveller[†5] says that he has never seen any thing like 'em.

Ever Faithfully
CD.

To MISS MARY BOYLE, 22 JULY 1852

MS Morgan Library.

10 Camden Crescent, Dover | Twenty Second July, 1852.

My Dear Mary

This is indeed a noble letter. The description of the family is quite amazing. I must return it myself to say that I HAVE[†6] appreciated it.

I am going to do Used Up at Manchester, on the 2nd. of September. O think of that! With another Mary!!![†7] How can I ever tell her that I love her. How can I ever say "DEAR[†1] Joe, if you like"! The voice may feebly frame the falsehood but the heart—the heart, M Wurzel—will have no part in it.[†2]

My dear Mary, you do scant justice to Dover. It is not quite a place to my taste, being too Bandy[†3] (I mean musical—no reference to its legs) and infinitely too genteel.[†4] But the sea is very fine, and the walks are quite remarkable. There are two ways of going to Folkestone, both lovely and striking in the highest degree; and there are heights, and Downs, and country roads, and I don't know what, everywhere.

To let you into a secret I am not quite sure that I ever did like, or ever shall like, anything quite so well as Copperfield. But I foresee (I think) some very good things in Bleak House.[†5] I shouldn't wonder if they were the identical things that D'Israeli sees looming in the distance.[†6] I behold them in the months ahead, and weep.

Watson seemed, when I saw him last, to be holding on as by a sheet-anchor to Theatricals at Christmas. Then—O Rapture!—but be still my fluttering heart.

This is one of what I call my Wandering days, before I fall to work. I seem to be always looking at such times for something I have not found in life, but may possibly come to, a few thousands of years hence, in some other part of some other system. God knows.

At all events I won't put your pastoral little pipe out of tune by talking about it. I'll go and look for it on the Canterbury road among the hop-gardens and orchards.

Ever Faithfully Your friend,

JOE

To MRS MORSON, 22 JULY 1852*

MS Dr A. A. Silverman.

10 Camden Crescent, Dover. | Twenty Second July 1852

Dear Mrs. Morson

Have the goodness to send a parcel containing materials to be made up into clothes for a young woman whom I have accepted, addressed to the care of G.A. à Beckett Esquire, Police Court Southwark; and to write that gentleman a note, by post, stating that such a parcel is coming by parcels delivery, and that you will let him know when our Australian ship shall have sailed and we can take the young woman in.

Do not fail to let me know the result of the Foundling Election,[†1] by post on Saturday.

Faithfully Yours

CD.

To CHARLES KNIGHT, 23 JULY 1852

Summary in Sotheby catalogue, July 1983; MS 1 p.; dated 10 Camden Crescent, Dover, 23 July 52; addressed Charles Knight.

CD will be delighted to see him and it will not interfere with his work. He has corresponded with Potter about the opening of the Free Library, Manchester. He hopes to act there for the second time during the next trip, since will make an immense difference to receipts. He also wants to have a night at Liverpool. Will Knight please let him know when to expect him on these crags. Mentioning the paper on Richard Cromwell, originally part of another paper, entitled Our Doubles; he had separated them, as the Richard Cromwell paper was misplaced.[†2]

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 25 JULY 1852

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street | Piccadilly | London.

10 Camden Crescent, Dover | Sunday Twenty Fifth July 1852

My Dear Miss Coutts.

We hope Mrs. Brown is better? Any bulletin will be thankfully received.

I hear from Mrs. Morson that she is not elected, and that you have given her great joy by consenting to retain her. You have given me scarcely less, for I feel how kind and how right it is, and am sure she will prove worthy of it.

The Bishop of Cape Town[†3] has written me a note, proposing to call on me at Tavistock House at 2 on Wednesday next.

I must send you the enclosed (received yesterday evening) from Charley. Not only because he has done so well, but because it is such a brilliant boy's-letter. The immense and overweening importance of the boatrace, and the necessity of returning to it with that tabular statement, amused me very much.

I am sure you will be glad to hear that Mr. Stone[†1] (who is one of the Examiners at the East India College, and volunteers an examination periodically, at Mr. Trimmer's at Putney) writes me that he had occasion just now, to mention Walter with special commendation. I am much pleased to hear it, as I have always thought him a little slow—though I have never made the mistake of attempting to quicken him, I must add in self defence.

We are very pleasantly situated here in a very cool house. I suppose there is no Chance of your coming this way?

With kindest regards

Dear Miss Coutts | Ever Most Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

I have two girls ready, and am to see another on Wednesday.

To THOMAS LITTLEDALE,[†2] [?24-25 JULY 1852]

Mention in next.

To MARK LEMON, 25 JULY 1852

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

Dover, 10 Camden Crescent | Twenty Fifth July 1852

My Dear Mark. A word. I have taken up the correspondence on your suggestion—written to Littledale, noting all things needful—proposed Saturday night the 4th. September for the performance[†3]—and begged him to put the Secretary in communication with Wills.

I shall look out for a portly form on Wednesday.

Ever affecy.

CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 28 JULY 1852*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Wednesday Afternoon | Twenty Eighth July 1852

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I write a hasty line before going back—sincerely hoping that Mrs. Brown is better, and that you have got to Highgate.

I received the enclosed at Dover this morning. It seems very touching. Would you like to do any thing in such a case.[†1] If you would, and will tell me so, I can get the strictest and most complete enquiry made into it immediately. If, for a thousand reasons, you cannot consider it (which is very possible indeed) do not trouble yourself to write.

Dear Miss Coutts | Ever Most Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To W. H. WILLS, 29 JULY 1852

MS Huntington Library.

Dover | Thursday Twenty Ninth July 1852

My Dear Wills.

Miss Coutts writes me this morning, that she will willingly assist this case if it should turn out to be perfectly genuine. Will you, on receipt of this, write a letter to the applicant, stating that you are in my confidence, and making an appointment with him—not delaying it, as the matter seems to press. The thing is, to have such proofs and references and documents or something, from him, as shall render deception perfectly impossible.[†2] The thing to be said to him, is, that the case is beyond my means, but that I have an affluent and generous friend to whom I think I can recommend it usefully, if[†3] it be thoroughly proved. Bear in mind that he may be a begging letter writer of the worst suit.[†4]

If you will send me your account of him by any convenient means you like, I will lose no time in communicating with Miss Coutts again. But we must be thoroughly sure of the facts before I can take any money from her.

The Sunderland bill (if we play there) and likewise the Liverpool bill, I must see a proof of before they are issued. Two parts will have to be changed in each.[†5]

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To RICHARD QUIN, 30 JULY 1852*

MS Benoliel Collection.

10 Camden Crescent, Dover | Thirtieth July 1852. Friday

My Dear Quin.

I received your kind letter only this morning.[†1] I never in my life received one that so amazed and shocked me.

I cannot bear to think that our dear Watson whom I truly loved in my heart, is dead, so long as there is the least chance of hope.[†2] I know I need not ask you—but I can't help asking you—to let me know what you hear, and to give us any account you can of your afflicted sister. Pray direct straight here.

He dined with us on the very day before he went away, and I never saw him—we all said so, afterwards—in such good spirits and so happy. And O so many plans we had, that day, for the future!—

Don't fail to write again my dear fellow. Ever Faithfully Yours

CD.

August

To MISS MARY BOYLE, 1 AUGUST 1852

Mention only in N, II, 405.[†3]

To DR WILLIAM BROWN, 1 AUGUST 1852*

MS Morgan Library.

10 Camden Crescent, Dover | Sunday First August 1852

My Dear Mr. Brown

I am truly obliged to you for your friendly note, which I have received as a most acceptable mark of your interest and kind remembrance.

It grieves me to say that it is indeed my dear friend Watson who is dead. This day three weeks he dined with us before going abroad, in unusually good spirits and full of plans for future enjoyment down at Rockingham. He went to Homburg to join Mrs. Watson (who had not been well), and go on with her and the children to Lausanne for a month; where we have all passed many happy days together. He was taken suddenly ill with violent inflammation of the bowels, and died (quite easily) in four days. I was warmly attached to him, and believe he was as true a friend as I have ever had. He was a thoroughly good man, of a most amiable and affectionate nature, and as simple hearted as a child. My respect for him was equal to my love for him, I really held him in my heart.

We had hoped before now to receive better accounts of Mrs. Brown, and to hear that she was herself again. But I have no doubt that she finds this unusual summer very trying. We get sea breezes here; but when I was in town last Wednesday I thought London almost intolerable. About Drury Lane and in such parts of the unsavoury neighbourhood of the Household Words office, there was such a hot combination of odours as an Italian town might have produced. I look forward with something like horror to the final Guild expedition on the 21st. of this month, when we go to Nottingham, Derby, Newcastle, Sunderland, Sheffield, Manchester, and Liverpool; at each of which places I have to be dressed fourteen times every night! But I hope great good will come of it in the end.

With our kindest regards to Mrs. Brown and yourself.

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. Brown Esquire.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 1 AUGUST 1852

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street | Piccadilly | London.

10 Camden Crescent, Dover | Sunday First August 1852

My Dear Miss Coutts

I have instituted—through my sub Editor Mr. Wills, who is a most conscientious gentleman, and well accustomed to every sort of enquiry—the most searching examination into the case of the Clergyman Mr. Richards.[†1] He has produced a number of letters (a very affecting one from his wife among the number) and a quantity of references, principally to clergymen. One of them being a clergyman at Ham, of whom we had some knowledge Mr. Wills went down and saw him, among several others. The representations made in Mr. Richards's letter, he fully and entirely corroborated; adding that he had the highest opinion of him and confidence in him. He also said that he was a sensible and moderate clergyman—not tractarian—and that he was a man of ability, and that his preaching was far above the average. So much so, that this Ham gentleman had great hopes for him of some good to himself finally resulting from his having a license to preach in London.

I do not think there is any room whatever to doubt that he has faithfully described his case. I need not observe that we have made all these enquiries with as much delicacy as care, and that no one has any idea of your being in any way connected with them.

Will you let me know by return of post what you will do for him, and whether I shall come to you for the money on Wednesday forenoon when I come to town? I am sorry that I cannot be at the Committee tomorrow, but I am steeped in work.—

I write a few lines to Mr. Brown by this post, in answer to a kind note of his, referring to the death of my dear friend Watson. Poor dear fellow he was with us this day three weeks, so happy, and so full of Christmas plans for Rockingham!

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To JOHN FORSTER, [1 AUGUST] 1852

Extract in F, VII, ii, 569. Date: He had clearly received the news of Watson's death on 31 July; and, according to Forster, he wrote his next letter to him (8 Aug) "after only 7 days" (F, VII, ii, 569).

Poor dear Watson! It was this day two weeks[†1] when you rode with us and he dined with us. We all remarked after he had gone how happy he seemed to have got over his election troubles, and how cheerful he was. He was full of Christmas plans for Rockingham, and was very anxious that we should get up a little French piece[†2] I had been telling him the plot of. He went abroad next day to join Mrs. Watson and the children at Homburg, and then go to Lausanne, where they had taken a house for a month. He was seized at Homburg with violent internal inflammation, and died—without much pain—in four days. . . . I was so fond of him that I am sorry you didn't know him better. I believe he was as thoroughly good and true a man as ever lived;[†3] and I am sure I can have felt no greater affection for him than he felt for me. When I think of that bright house, and his fine simple honest heart, both so open to me, the blank and loss are like a dream.

To CHARLES KNIGHT, 1 AUGUST 1852

MS Yale University Library.

10 Camden Crescent, Dover | Sunday First August 1852

My Dear Knight.

I don't see why you should go to the Ship,[†4] and I won't stand it. The State Apartment will be occupied by the Duke of Middlesex[†5] (whom I think you know) but we can easily get a bed for you hard by. Therefore you will please to drive here next Saturday evening. Our regular dinner-hour is ½ past 5. If you are later, you will find something ready for you.

If you go on in that way about your part, I shall think you want to play Mr. Gabblewig.[†1] Your role, though a small one on the stage,[†2] is a large one off it, and no man is more important to the Guild, both on and off.

My dear friend Watson! Dead after an illness of four days! He dined with us this day three weeks. I loved him in my heart, and cannot think of him without tears.

Ever Affectionately

CD

Charles Knight, Esquire

To AUSTEN HENRY LAYARD, 1 AUGUST 1852

MS British Library.

10 Camden Crescent, Dover | Sunday First August 1852

My Dear Layard.

I am only just now in receipt of your letter, owing to my being here on a three months loitering by the sea.

I can most sincerely assure you that there are very few men whom I would sooner welcome into Parliament than you—as you should have found, if I had been an elector for the place of your representation.[†3] But what you ask me,[†4] I cannot possibly do, by reason of my being very hard at work preparatory to the last Guild trip on the 21st. which will take a fortnight, and a very great amount of exertion and trouble. This, in the perspective, has obliged me to parcel out my time more closely than usual; and I could not make a new engagement in the meanwhile, with the least regard to my labors of love.

But I hope you—or somebody—will tell the Aylesbury people how sincerely glad I should have been to have told them what I think of you. Perhaps I shall have some more hopeful opportunity of doing so, under your escort, one of these days.

My dear friend Watson—as I dare say you have heard—is dead. I had a great love for him and am deeply grieved. He dined with us this day three weeks, and was so happy—I cannot bear to think of it.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To W. H. WILLS, 1 AUGUST 1852

MS Huntington Library.

10 Camden Crescent, Dover | Sunday First August 1852

My Dear Wills.

You have anticipated how deeply grieved I have been by the loss of my dear friend. I had heard from Mrs. Watson's brother of his lying at the point of death, before it was mentioned in the paper. He dined with us this day three weeks, full of projects for future happiness in the house where we have been so merry, and which is now so desolate. I loved him in my heart, as one of the truest and most affectionate of men.

I am very much obliged to you for taking so much trouble about that afflicted clergyman. I have now reported favorably of his case, and have no doubt that you may make a final appointment with him at the office, for Wednesday afternoon.

H.W.[†1]

I thought our Honourable Friend[†2] would be a success. It seems to be making a great noise.[†3]

I don't agree with you as to the Angel sketch,[†4] which is very curious and good. I have accepted it by itself, but not as one of a series.

The Liverpool bill I have altered. As to Sunderland (supposing that performance to come off)[†5] Costello will write to you directly (at my request) to say if he can play there. If yes, the bill will require no alteration. If no, then Coe for Lord Loftus in that bill (Smart,[†6] Mr. Miller) and Stone for Mr. Nightingale.[†7]

I shall be glad to know as soon as possible about Sunderland, with a view to Lord Carlisle.[†8]

Ever Faithfully Yours

CD.

W. H. Wills Esquire.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 3 AUGUST 1852

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street | Piccadilly | London.

Dover, 10 Camden Crescent | Tuesday Third August 1852

My Dear Miss Coutts.

The sum named in the Clergyman's letter as the extent of the embarrassments which have placed him in a condition of so much suffering is a hundred pounds. Your recollection is quite accurate.

Since I wrote to you, I have made some further enquiries (at his request), and they fully establish the results of the former examination.

Perhaps you will send to me at the Household Words office tomorrow forenoon, instead of Tavistock House, as I am likely to be kept at the office some hours.

We sincerely hope that Mrs. Brown will begin to move in good sound earnest now. I should think nothing so likely to do her good as change. The country about Streatham is very pretty.

Our kindest regards to her

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS P.S.[†1] In giving the Clergyman the money, may I tell him from whom it comes?

To THE AMATEUR COMPANY [EARLY AUGUST 1852]*

MS (draft)[†2] Morgan Library. Date: CD had cut the comedy by 11 July (To Coote, 17 July, fn); to allow time for five rehearsals before starting the tour on 22 Aug suggests that CD probably wrote this draft in early Aug.

Guild of Literature and Art, | July or August 1852

Sir.

I beg [†a]in calling your attention to the table of the final arrangements[†3] on the other side[†a] to inform you that with the object of lightening the Comedy, Mr. Dickens (with Sir Edward Lytton's concurrence) has reduced it into three acts.[†4] To prevent confusion the parts will all be newly copied, and yours[†5] shall be forwarded to you in the course of a few days.

As the calls will necessarily be quite new, and the intervals between them much shortened, it will be essential to rehearse the Comedy in its altered state, once in London. The two new pieces[†6] which it is proposed to play at Manchester[†7] will also require to be carefully rehearsed, about three times. It is proposed that these 5 Rehearsals shall take place within the week or ten days immediately preceding, the time of starting. You shall have timely information of them.

I am requested to add that Mr. Dickens . . . hopes you will have the [†b]kindness to undertake the little part of Colonel Reichel.[†8] And after "book", add, "See page 36".[†b†9] in ——— and ————, in ————. "——beg to inclose you the book".

†1[Add here, to the ladies, to Mr. Egg, Mr. Bell, & Mr. Cunningham.] But I believe there is no change in the words of your part.†2

GUILD OF LITERATURE AND ART.

ARRANGEMENTS FOR THE CONCLUDING EXPEDITION.

SUNDAY, 22nd	August	Leave Euston Square by the 10 A.M. train for Nottingham.	H T
MONDAY, 23rd	"	Act at Nottingham.
TUESDAY, 24th	"	Leave Nottingham for Derby.
WEDNESDAY, 25th	"	Act at Derby.	H
THURSDAY, 26th	"	Leave Derby for Newcastle.
FRIDAY, 27th	"	Act at Newcastle.	H Q
SATURDAY, 28th	"	Leave Newcastle for Sunderland, and Act at Sunderland.	H
SUNDAY, 29th	"	Leave Sunderland for Sheffield.
MONDAY, 30th	"	Act at Sheffield.	H R b
TUESDAY, 31st	"	Leave Sheffield for Manchester. Public Dinner to the Guild at Manchester.
WEDNESDAY, 1st	Sept.	Act at Manchester	H
THURSDAY, 2nd	"	Opening of the great Free Library at Manchester. —Guild invited. Then to Liverpool.

FRIDAY, 3rd	"	Act at Liverpool.	HOTE ADEI

the Hote
Perform

SATURDAY, 4th " Return home.

N.B.—For hours of starting from each town, and time of arrival and departure of the London post, see Bed-room Lists in the sitting-room of each Hotel.[†1]

To THE EARL OF CARLISLE, 5 AUGUST 1852

MS Lord Howard of Henderskelfe.

10 Camden Crescent, Dover | Thursday Fifth August 1852

My dear Lord Carlisle.

'Peared to me (as Uncle Tom would say) until within these last few days, that I should be able to write to you joyfully accepting your Saturday's invitation after Newcastle, in behalf of all whom it concerned. But the Sunderland people have rushed into the field, to propose our acting there on that Saturday—the only possible night. And as it is the concluding Guild expedition, and the Guild has a paramount claim on us, I have been obliged to knock my own inclinations on the head—cut the throats of my own wishes—and bind the company, hand and foot, to the Sunderland Lieges. I don't mean to tell them, now, of your invitation, until we shall have got out of that country. There might be rebellion.

We are staying here for the Autumn. Is there any hope of your repeating your visit to these coasts?[†2]

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The | Earl of Carlisle.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 5 AUGUST 1852

MS Morgan Library. Address: To be forwarded | Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street | Piccadilly | London.

10 Camden Crescent | (N.B. Not 32 Camden Terrace) | Dover. Fifth August 1852

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I have safely received the one hundred pounds—your noble gift to Mr. Richards—and have myself placed it in his hands. As he assumed that the friend whom I did not mention was a gentleman, and spoke of the friend as "him", I acted on that suggestion and did the same. He hopes that he has obtained a curacy in Regent Street.[†1] This will bring him to London; and he seems sincerely anxious that I should know all about his proceedings after he comes here. I shall hear of him again, I have no doubt.

You remember Mrs. Goldsmith of Oliver's family, to whom you were very kind sometime ago,[†2] and who behaved so exceedingly well in foregoing half the sum she might have had, when she found it was not actually wanted for the purpose she had supposed it would be necessary for?[†3] Enclosed is a letter from her, which I think I ought to shew you, though I am very much indisposed to do so. I can give her half the money she wants, from a little sum I have in hand for such purposes.

Poor Watson was buried yesterday, in his own Church.[†4] She is a woman of great courage and understanding, and of a well disciplined though very affectionate nature. I hope she will find comfort and resignation in sources that she has not been accustomed to neglect while happy. She has four children (the eldest eleven years old) and expects to be confined sometime hence—which is very sad. She has come home, her brother writes me, far more tranquilly than they could have hoped, and has her children about her, and means, from the first, to live with them at Rockingham—whither she went, straight. I am so glad to think that she can associate her home with his grave.

Our best regards to Mrs. Brown, of whom we are extremely glad to hear such hopeful tidings.

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

To MARK LEMON, 5 AUGUST 1852

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

Dover | Fifth August 1852

My Dear Mark

I cannot send you the cut comedy,[†5] because I destroyed the draught alterations, and Coe has the only Prompt book. He is out of town. I have told Forster to tell Bulwer from me that I don't think it possible to alter the play successfully, without the making of some addition to the plot that will necessitate new incidents.

Poor dear Watson was dead, when the paragraph in the paper appeared. He was buried in his own church, yesterday. Last Sunday three weeks (the day before he went abroad) he dined with us, and was quite well and happy. She has come home—is at Rockingham with the children—and does not weakly desert his grave, but sets up her rest by it from the first. He had been wandering in his mind a little before his death but recovered consciousness, and fell asleep (she says) quite gently and peacefully, in her arms. She is in the family way.

I loved him very much, and God knows he deserved it.

Ever affectionately

CD

To THE HON. MRS RICHARD WATSON, 5 AUGUST 1852

MS Huntington Library.

10 Camden Crescent, Dover | Fifth August 1852

My dear, dear Mrs. Watson.

I cannot bear to be silent longer, though I know full well—no one better I think—how your love for him, and your trust in God, and your love for your children, will have come to the help of such a nature as yours and whispered better things than any friendship can, however faithful and affectionate.

We held him so close in our hearts—all of us here—and have been so happy with him, and so used to say how good he was, and what a gentle, generous, noble spirit he had, and how he shone out among commoner men as something so real and genuine and full of every kind of worthiness that it has often brought the tears into my eyes to talk of him—we have been so accustomed to do this, when we looked forward to years of unchanged intercourse, that now, when everything but Truth goes down into the dust, those recollections which make the sword so sharp pour balm into the wound. And if it be a consolation to us to know the virtues of his character, and the reasons that we had for loving him, O how much greater is your comfort who were so devoted to him and were the happiness of his life!

We have thought of you every day and every hour. We think of you now, in the dear old house, and know how right it is, for his dear children's sake, that you should have bravely set up your rest in the place consecrated by their father's memory, and within the same summer-shadows that fall upon his grave. We try to look on, through a few years, and to see the children brightening it, and George a comfort and a pride and an honor to you; and although it is hard to think of what we have lost, we know how something of it will be restored by your example and endeavours, and the blessing that will descend upon them. We know how the time will come when some reflection of that cordial, unaffected, most affectionate Presence which we never can forget, and never would forget if we could—such is God's great mercy—will shine out of your boy's eyes upon you, his best friend and his last consoler, and fill the void there is now.

May God who has received into his rest through this affliction as good a man as ever I can know and love and mourn for on this earth, be good to you, dear friend, through these coming years! May all those compassionate and hopeful lessons of the great teacher who shed Divine tears for the dead bring their full comfort to you! I have no fear of that. My confidence is certainty.

I cannot write what I wish—I had so many things to say—I seem to have said none. It is so with the remembrances we send. I cannot put them into words.

If you should ever set up a record in the little church, I would try to word it †asimply†a, and God knows out of the fullness of my heart, if you should think it well.†1

My Dear friend,
Yours with the truest affection and sympathy
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN THOMPSON, 5 AUGUST 1852

Extracts from MS Bernard Halliday, and from John Wilson catalogue No. 15 (1974).

10 Camden Crescent, Dover. | Fifth August 1852

John.

I enclose the letter for Mr. Laffin. In it, you will find a grey pattern, with a pin in it. That is the color that I want the boots to be.
He asks Thompson to show it to the bootmaker[†2] and see if he can get the stuff.

To MR LAFFIN,[†3] [?5 AUGUST 1852]

Mention in To Thompson, 5 Aug 52.

To HENRY AUSTIN, [?8] AUGUST 1852*

MS Morgan Library. Date: Misdated by CD; he was probably writing on Sun 8 August.

10 Camden Crescent, Dover | Sunday Sixth August 1852

My Dear Henry.

The only objection to Wednesday is, that on Monday the 16th. Tuesday the 17th. and Wednesday the 18th. I shall have to be in town for Rehearsals; and on Saturday the 21st. I leave here for the final Guild trip. This will limit your visit, and will cut me out of three days of your company. But if you and Laetitia will balance against this disadvantage (to me), the present convenience of your being able to get away, we shall be delighted to receive you.[†4] On the three Rehearsal days, Catherine and Georgina will be here, of course.

I am so hard at work, with a view to this confounded trip, that I couldn't manage Folkestone on Wednesday, nor do I go up to town. But what I would recommend Letitia to do, is, to come down (in the Ladies Carriage) by the morning express at ½ past 11 from London Bridge. There is no change in the carriage for Dover—she will be here at 2—and they will meet her at the Railway. Then you can come on from Folkestone, as you purpose, by the evening express.

Will you let me know, by return, whether we shall expect you on Wednesday—Pump (I mean Stone) being here, and requiring to be billeted if you do.

Best loves | Ever affecy.

CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 8 AUGUST 1852

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street | Piccadilly | London.

10 Camden Crescent, Dover | Sunday Eighth August 1852

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I have safely received the £10 note, your kind donation to Mrs. Goldsmith, and have remitted it to her. I am glad you think so well of the case. It certainly is helping those who help themselves.

There must be some odd electrical disturbance in the air, I think. Everybody is complaining of being more or less nervously affected. Mr. Forster (who has gone, for a change, to Tavistock House)[†1] fluctuates like Mrs. Brown, and makes slow progress.[†2]

Our united regards to her and Mr. Brown. I am glad Brighton did him so much good.

Dear Miss Coutts | Ever Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To JOHN FORSTER, [8 AUGUST 1852]

Extract in F, VII, ii, 569. Date: 8 Aug according to Forster.

Poor d'Orsay![†3] It is a tremendous consideration that friends should fall around us in such awful numbers as we attain middle life. What a field of battle it is!

To W. H. WILLS, 9 AUGUST 1852*

MS Huntington Library.

Dover, Monday Evening | Ninth August, 1852

My Dear Wills.

There is that kind of mutiny here (respectfully conducted, but still in a revolutionary spirit) on the subject of this last trip, that I suppose I must take them.[†1] And, taking them, I suppose I must take Anne second class.[†2] Therefore in your arrangements if you will book the whole trio for the whole round, I don't think you will be far out.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To CHARLES COOTE, 12 AUGUST 1852*

MS Mr Peter Goodricke.

10 Camden Crescent, Dover | Twelfth August 1852

My Dear Sir

I have had the pleasure of receiving your note here to day, and send by this post to London to order the Music you mention.[†3] It shall come down with us.

Looking forward to the gratification of seeing Mr. Charles's[†4] countenance shining in the orchestra and elsewhere,

I am Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Coote Esquire

(Over)

(continued)

To W. H. WILLS, 12 AUGUST 1852†

MS Huntington Library.

10 Camden Crescent, Dover | Twelfth August, 1852 | Thursday

My Dear Wills.

H.W.[†5]

I am sorry, but Brutus sacrifices unborn children of his own as well as those of other people[†6]—the Sorrows of Childhood, long in type and long a mere mysterious name, must come out. The paper really is, like the celebrated ambassadorial appointment,[†7] "too bad".

Sitting down this morning to Morley's "boys to mend", I couldn't take to it on the short notice,[†1] and thought of the enclosed instead.[†2] You shall have the rest (about three slips) by tomorrow's post.

I will also go over the No.[†3] and send it at the same time.

—That Hop subject of last year.[†4] Is Sala in town? He might do it very well, if he be. The time is coming on again. If he be not in town, could Thomas[†5] be got up to it?[†6]

GUILD.[†7]

I am delighted to hear such cheering accounts.

After reading the enclosed letter from Coote, will you instruct Johnson to get the Music mentioned in it, and take it down when we all go.

You are "quite[†8] right my dear Wills",[†9] about Sloman and his extra man.

[†a]GENERAL GAMMON[†7]

Madame Steinberg[†10] is an impudent bitch.[†11] If you should not have written her yet—though I dare say you will have done so—return her book,[†12] and say I will take care of her letter.[†a]

ASPECTS OF NATURE.[†7]

We have had a tremendous sea here—steam packets in the harbor, frantic, and dashing their brains out against the stone Walls.

— VI - 739 —

ART.[†1]

Stone boring my life out[†2] with doubts whether he shall have Mrs. Stone to Manchester—also with Charles XII.

EMINENT AUTHOR.[†1]

Women in blue veils, turning out at 6 A M and waylaying him as he goes to the Shower Bath.

CHARLES KNIGHT.[†1]

[†b]Recently here, and now gone down to see White (Reverend James). Georgina complains that he "philanders"—I don't know what that involves, or where it ends—and also that he is "an old Donkey". He didn't present himself in that light to me.[†b†3]

DOVER THEATRE[†1]

open.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

W. H. Wills Esquire

To SIR RODERICK MURCHISON,[†4] 13 AUGUST 1852

MS Private; seen before partial destruction in Prestwick air-crash Dec 1954; fragments (aa, bb) MS Yale University Library.

10 Camden Crescent, Dover | Friday Thirteenth August 1852

My Dear Sir Roderic

Many thanks for your kind note, which has been forwarded to me here. The Presidential address[†5] has not come with it; but I shall be in town for a few hours on Monday, and shall bring it back to read—with pleasure and interest, I am very sure.

[a]Our curlpaper correspondent is a Maniac, I suppose? There seems to be an attraction in me for all the mad people. They will take me into their confidence. One woman in[a] Scotland has left me such an immense amount of imaginary property that I think of retiring on it.

The people at the Australian Diggings ought to send you a few waggonloads of gold as a testimonial.

Very faithfully [†b]Yours

CHARLES DICKENS[b]
Sir Roderic Murchison

To GEORGE SCOTT,[†1] 13 AUGUST 1852†

MS Huntington Library.

10 Camden Crescent, Dover | Thirteenth August 1852

My Dear Sir

I am sorry I don't know Dr. Vaughan,[†2] but I have not the least acquaintance with him—never even saw him. Otherwise, I should have been truly glad to have had the pleasure of complying with your request.

Your amusing account of the Ancients of Staple Inn,[†3] brings to my mind some old knowledge I once had of the Ancients of New Inn.[†4] Perhaps I may be able to make something of them one of these days.[†5]

Mrs. Dickens and her sister are very sorry to hear that Mrs. Scott has been ill. They unite with me in kind remembrances to her and to you. (I suppose she has not been eating any Wild Boar lately).

As to the Blacks,[†6] I expect to hear of his being Dictator of the Italian Republic—when its founded.[†7] We have received no intelligence of them for I don't know how long.

My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

George Scott Esquire.

To F. M. EVANS, 18 AUGUST 1852*

MS Bradbury, Agnew & Co. Ltd.

Office of Household Words | Wednesday Eighteenth August 1852

My Dear Evans

Mr. Joyce conducted himself here, yesterday, in a manner which I can on no kind of consideration endure.[†8] I have taken the night to think about it, and have had some talk with Mr. Forster on the subject this morning. I am not much given, I hope, to undue self-assertion; but in such a case as this, my endurance of such astonishing impertinence would be a roundabout way of making myself ridiculous.

If you enquire into the matter of some new blinds ordered by Mr. Wills, you will find that Mr. Joyce returned—to the publisher—the young man in the office downstairs, who I suppose allowed me to come up on sufferance this morning—Mr. Wills's authority[†1] for the payment of the money, and positively refused his gracious sanction to the purchase. I am very glad I did not happen to come in at the time. My remonstrance might have taken rather a strong character. The milder representation I now make to you, is, that in allowing a person of such gross conduct any such power of interference with any gentleman representing me, you treat me in a very scurvy manner, and neglectfully expose me, when I am all-unconscious of it, to behaviour which no other house in London, or between it and China, would think of permitting.

Your manner of conducting your own business, or of offending booksellers by boorish treatment and incivility, is of no great moment to me, further than insomuch as it may damage my books as much as such things can. But my coming into, and going out of, a place where Mr. Joyce is to the people employed the sovereign Chesterfield[†2] of the establishment, is another thing. And therefore I must beg you, in the plainest and most positive manner, to keep Mr. Joyce away from here, or I will have no business done here. Upon this I have thoroughly made up my mind. And not upon my own view of the case alone, for, when I mentioned it to Mr. Forster this morning, he was naturally in amazement.[†3]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

F. M. Evans Esquire.

To DR SHERIDAN MUSPRATT, 19 AUGUST 1852

Text from N, II, 410.

Dover | Nineteenth August 1852

My Dear Dr. Muspratt,

I am sorry to say that on my next visit to Liverpool, I shall be as little of a free agent as on my last,[†4] and for the same reason. I shall have no end of business to attend to (at the close of a fortnight's hard work) and cannot hope to make any visit, anywhere. Moreover, I must return to them, immediately after the performance.

Faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To J. ROCKCLIFFE,[†1] 19 AUGUST 1852*

MS Johns Hopkins University.

Dovor. Nineteenth August 1852

Sir.

I can only say, in reference to your letters to Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton, that I forwarded to him those which you sent to me for that purpose. I think it very likely that letters from unknown correspondents may go to him, as they come to me, by hundreds; and that attention to them may often be impossible, consistently with the least regard to any other pursuit in life.

For myself I have but to add that if I had any kind of post or patronage to confer (which I have not), I should be at no loss to find well known and well tried persons to confer it upon. If you offer any composition for insertion in Household Words, it will be readily accepted if it be suitable to that Journal, and will not be accepted if unsuitable.[†2] Private circumstances and personal considerations can have no place in such business.

Your obedient Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

J. Rockcliffe Esquire.

To WILLIAM ALLINGHAM, [19] AUGUST 1852

Mention in To W. H. Wills, 19 Aug 52.

To W. H. WILLS, 19 AUGUST 1852*

MS Huntington Library.

Dover, Nineteenth August 1852

My Dear Wills.

H.W.[†3]

No. 1 is from Allingham. I have answered it, and (I suppose) explained satisfactorily.[†4]

No. 2 is from Hunt, concerning an alteration to be made in Kilspindie.[†5]

No. 3 is for that huge fishing-roll of papers. Will you send them back with a polite line.

GUILD.[†3]

Manager's legs useless, and feet swollen.

Ever Faithfully
CD.

Over

H.W. AGAIN[†1]

In the boys to mend,[†2] there is a passage (about the second paragraph from the beginning I think) to the effect that we have seen something of Ragged Schools from their first establishment, and have never seen one[†3] in which the teaching was not very injudicious. This is perfectly true, but it might damage them. Alter it to rarely seen one

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 20 AUGUST 1852*

MS Morgan Library.

Dover, Friday Twentieth August 1852

My Dear Miss Coutts

I call with this letter, the morning after date; in case I should not find you in Stratton Street, where I shall enquire about you and Mrs. Brown. Enclosed, are Charley's papers.

After calling on you, I shall go on to Shepherds Bush. At night, I start on the last Guild pilgrimage of a fortnight's duration.[†4]

Ever Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 21 AUGUST 1852*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Saturday Twenty First August | 1852

My Dear Miss Coutts.

Charley's money safely received. A thousand thanks.

I would refer the case of the Duchess of Richmond's[†5] protegée to the Chaplain and Governor of the Prison.[†6] If they report encouragingly, I would take the girl. If you approve of this, and will merely return me the Duchess's letter, I will write to the Chaplain at once. I observe, however, that she writes of her being discharged on the 9th. of this month.

There is no doubt of Mrs. Chisholm's plan.[†7] It does a great deal of service, and deserves support.[†8]

Mr. Stone[†1] I apprehend will be ready for any Wednesday afternoon you may suggest, on notice of a week or so.

I have just come from Shepherds Bush where all was well and in perfect order. I told Mrs. Morson that I thought she had best not call the next Committee—there being no one in town—but send the bills to me here. I should very much like, before the winter comes on, to pave that back yard with flagstones, if you don't object.

Ever Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

We are all so interested about Mrs. Brown—and so disappointed to hear that she has not got on faster. I was not without a hope that I might find her in town with you and looking brisk and happy again.

To F. M. EVANS, 21 AUGUST 1852†

MS Yale University Library.

Athenaeum | Saturday Morning August Twenty First | 1852

My Dear Evans.

I think it right, Mr. Joyce coming to the Household Words office no longer, that you should distinctly inform the publisher[†2] why he is removed. Firstly, because of the unbecoming position I have been made to occupy, within the knowledge of a young man employed in that subordinate capacity; and secondly, because I can easily foresee, otherwise, the probability of a damaging impression getting abroad that I have a very small part in the affairs of the journal.[†3] Much more unlikely rumours get into existence, on slighter grounds.

In regard to Mr. Joyce's connexion with you, as I have no doubt that he possesses many excellent qualities which have gained him your confidence, I should exceedingly regret being the cause of a separation between you; and I have therefore to express my earnest hope and entreaty that it may not take place. At the same time I must represent to you that if his temper induce him, on no provocation, to behave so coarsely towards me whom he may be supposed to have some impulse to treat with consideration, generally, it is reasonable to suppose that under business vexations he is not very delicate in his treatment of the dealers in my books. I would ask you to caution him on this head, and moreover to exercise some vigilance over him.

Of yourself and Bradbury I will only say that your letter is, in every particular, most honorable, manly, and satisfactory.

Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

F. M. Evans Esquire

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 25 AUGUST 1852†

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street | Piccadilly | London.

Derby, Wednesday Twenty Fifth August | 1852.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I received your letter here this morning, and write by this post to the chaplain of the Petworth House of Correction, making all needful enquiries into the girl's case. I enclose the Duchess's letter.

I am extremely concerned to hear so poor an account of Mrs. Brown, whose condition must be almost as distressing to you, I fear, as to herself. But the glimpse of hope in your postscript, gives me some encouragement.

The night before I left town (last Saturday) I had a note from Lord Lovelace[†1] to tell me that Lady Lovelace[†2] was dying,[†3] and that the death of the child in Dombey had been so much in her thoughts and had soothed her so, that she wished to see me once more if I could be found.[†4] I went, and sat with her alone for some time. It was very solemn and sad, but her fortitude was quite surprising; and her Conviction that all the agony she has suffered (which has been very great) had some good design in the goodness of God, impressed me very much.[†5] She wished to live till next Saturday, to see one of her boys who is absent.[†6] I fear she may not have that natural hope realized.[†7]

The comedy you don't approve of, goes very well now. I have reduced it into three acts. I wish you could see my farce. It is very droll and pleasant, and puts all the people into such good humour that they cannot express it sufficiently.[†8]

In case you should have any occasion to write to me while I am away, I send you the official travelling list.[†1]

With kindest regards

Dear Miss Coutts | Ever Most Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts

To THE CHAPLAIN, PETWORTH HOUSE OF CORRECTION, [25 AUGUST 1852]

Mention in last.

To JOHN FORSTER, [24-27 AUGUST 1852]

Mention in To Forster, 29 Aug 52. Date: presumably shortly after the beginning of the Guild's tour on 22 Aug.

Intending [but forgetting] to enclose a printed notice taking Two o'Clock in the Morning out of the playbills.

To THE DUKE OF DEVONSHIRE, 27 AUGUST 1852

MS Devonshire Collections, Chatsworth.

Newcastle | Friday August Twenty Seventh | 1852

My Dear Duke of Devonshire

I was exceedingly sorry to miss you yesterday, when you did me the honor to call at the Hotel. I had been to see the Arboretum,[†2] and passed you on your way out of the town, but could not attract your attention as you went by.

We were all so happy to see you the other night, and it was so natural to us to have you there in your old place at the Rehearsals, that the Company made me promise to tell you of the pleasure you gave us by your kind attendance. They were anxious to join in some mark of their grateful and cordial recognition of your presence, when you came in; but I believed that I best consulted your wishes by avoiding it.

We are doing wonderfully well, and I believe all our houses will be crammed. The receipts of one night at Manchester will probably be from six to seven hundred pounds. We could have had two great nights here (they tell me) with the greatest ease, but we cannot possibly alter the arrangements now. Your band quite spoilt us the other night for all local bands,[†3] though Coote does wonders with them through the aid of a persistent politeness which keeps them grinding away, the whole afternoon, in a manner wonderful to behold.

I met Lord Carlisle at the Railway Station here, yesterday. He is coming to the play to night, after joining an antiquarian botheration at Alnwick this morning.[†1] The archaeological gentry departed from our hotel magnificently got up for the purpose at 9 o'Clock. There were some portentous white cravats among them, and an awful looming of spectacles that appeared to me to threaten a tremendous day.

We thought the Derby people very quick and intelligent—though I doubt if we should not have showered golden opinions on any Audience which had you in the foreground. They put us in high spirits, and I hear they were most thoroughly pleased.[†2]

Mrs. Dickens and her sister beg me to present their compliments. And all the company unite in a perfect shout of loyalty towards their first and best friend. All the working-men who travel with the Theatre were at Devonshire House, and I wish you could have seen how even they were making surreptitious chinks in the Proscenium to look at you at Derby.

My Dear Duke of Devonshire | Ever Yours | Most Faithfully and obliged

CHARLES DICKENS

The | Duke of Devonshire

To F. M. EVANS, 29 AUGUST 1852*

MS Mrs G. Bowes.

Sunderland | Sunday Twenty Ninth August 1852

My Dear Evans.

As I should probably have had the half year's accounts by this time if I had been in town (perhaps you will let me find them at Tavistock House when I return) I write to say that I shall be glad if you can pay half the balance into Coutts's next Saturday.[†3] The purchase of my house, delayed by the Duke of Bedford's people for a twelvemonth,[†4] is to be then completed, and I want the money if you can conveniently manage this arrangement.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

F. M. Evans Esquire.

To JOHN FORSTER, [29 AUGUST 1852]

Extract in F, 1872-4, II, xvii, 368-72. Date: written from Sunderland on 29 Aug, according to Forster.

[†a]The enclosure forgotten in my last was a little printed announcement which I have had distributed at the doors wherever we go, knocking Two o'Clock in the Morning bang out of the bills. Funny as it used to be,[†1] it is become impossible to get anything out of it after the scream of Mr. Nightingale's Diary.[†a] The comedy is so far improved by the reductions which your absence and other causes have imposed on us, that it acts now only two hours and twenty-five minutes, all waits included, and goes "like wildfire", as Mr. Tonson says.[†2] We have had prodigious houses, though smaller rooms (as to their actual size) than I had hoped for. The Duke was at Derby, and no end of minor radiances.[†3] Into the room at Newcastle (where Lord Carlisle was by the bye) they squeezed six hundred people, at twelve and sixpence, into a space reasonably capable of holding three hundred.[†4] Last night, in a hall built like a theatre, with pit, boxes, and gallery, we had about twelve hundred—I dare say more.[†5] They began with a round of applause when Coote's white waistcoat appeared in the orchestra, and wound up the farce with three deafening cheers.[†6] I never saw such good fellows. Stanny is their fellow-townsman; was born here; and they applauded his scene as if it were himself.[†7] But what I suffered from a dreadful anxiety that hung over me all the time, I can never describe. When we got here at noon, it appeared that the hall was a perfectly new one, and had only had the slates put upon the roof by torchlight over night. Farther, that the proprietors of some opposition rooms had declared the building to be unsafe, and that there was a panic in the town about it; people having had their money back, and being undecided whether to come or not, and all kinds of such horrors. I didn't know what to do. The horrible responsibility of risking an accident of that awful nature seemed to rest wholly upon me; for I had only to say we wouldn't act, and there would be no chance of danger. I was afraid to take Sloman into council lest the panic should infect our men. I asked W.[†8] what he thought, and he consolingly observed that his digestion was so bad that death had no terrors for him! I went and looked at the place; at the rafters, walls, pillars, and so forth; and fretted myself into a belief that they really were slight! To crown all, there was an arched iron roof without any brackets or pillars, on a new principle! The only comfort I had was in stumbling at length on the builder, and finding him a plain practical north-country man with a foot rule in his pocket. I took him aside, and asked him should we, or could we,

prop up any weak part of the place: especially the dressing-rooms, which were under our stage, the weight of which must be heavy on a new floor, and dripping wet walls. He told me there wasn't a stronger building in the world; and that, to allay the apprehension, they had opened it, on Thursday night, to thousands of the working people, and induced them to sing, and beat with their feet, and make every possible trial of the vibration. Accordingly there was nothing for it but to go on. I was in such dread, however, lest a false alarm should spring up among the audience and occasion a rush, that I kept Catherine and Georgina out of the front. When the curtain went up and I saw the great sea of faces rolling up to the roof, I looked here and looked there, and thought I saw the gallery out of the perpendicular, and fancied the lights in the ceiling were not straight. Rounds of applause were perfect agony to me, I was so afraid of their effect upon the building. I was ready all night to rush on in case of an alarm—a false alarm was my main dread—and implore the people for God's sake to sit still. I had our great farce-bell rung to startle Sir Geoffrey instead of throwing down a piece of wood,[†1] which might have raised a sudden apprehension. I had a palpitation of the heart, if any of our people stumbled up or down a stair. I am sure I never acted better, but the anxiety of my mind was so intense, and the relief at last so great, that I am half-dead to-day, and have not yet been able to eat or drink anything or to stir out of my room. I shall never forget it.[†2] As to the short time we had for getting the theatre up; as to the upsetting, by a runaway pair of horses, of one of the vans at the Newcastle railway station with all the scenery in it, every atom of which was turned over; as to the fatigue of our carpenters, who have now been up four nights, and who were lying dead asleep in the entrances last night; I say nothing, after the other gigantic nightmare, except that Sloman's splendid knowledge of his business, and the good temper and cheerfulness of all the workmen, are capital. I mean to give them a supper at Liverpool, and address them in a neat and appropriate speech. We dine at two today (it is now one) and go to Sheffield at four, arriving there at about ten. I had been as fresh as a daisy; walked from Nottingham to Derby, and from Newcastle here;[†3] but seem to have had my nerves crumpled up last night, and have an excruciating headache. That's all at present. I shall never be able to bear the smell of new deal and fresh mortar again as long as I live.

To THE DUKE OF DEVONSHIRE, 30 AUGUST 1852

MS Devonshire Collections, Chatsworth.

Sheffield | Monday Afternoon | August Thirtieth 1852.

My Dear Duke of Devonshire.

We were all going on in a state of great contentment here, when your announcement to me that you would have been with us tonight but for the Queen,[†1] put us all into an ill-humour—made us as disloyal as the Guild can be—and turned our milk into gall.

I cannot tell you how much I feel your kindest of notes, and what a strong, inhuman sort of constraint I put upon myself when—thanking you with all my heart—I virtuously resolve to take my unwilling (and rather rebellious) wife and sister in law, home, on Saturday. But I have, in arranging this trip, stretched my spare time to its utmost limits; and unless I got back to Dover and its quiet walks with all possible speed, there could assuredly be no Bleak House for October.[†2] Two days delay at such a time would make a week's difference to me in my settling to work. I have no choice in the matter and am dragged away.

My dear Duke I think I need not assure you that there is no one in the world whom I should be better pleased to visit before going home—as there is no one whom I respect and esteem more than you, or to whom I am half so well content to be a debtor. But you can have, at the best, a very imperfect idea of my virtue in not instantly yielding to your delightful proposal.

I wish you could have been at Manchester or Liverpool to see Used Up, in which I have a part that I thoroughly enjoy.[†3] But I shall store up a vague hope that I may act in that pleasant piece, with you foremost in the audience,—"one of these days".

Here has Coote been ill all day, and taking all manner of strange mixtures from the chemist's,—but still bland with the local band, and throwing them into the most tremendous perspirations.

Mrs. Dickens and Miss Hogarth beg me to send their best compliments and thanks; and I am My Dear Duke of Devonshire

With the utmost truth | Your faithful and devoted
CHARLES DICKENS

The | Duke of Devonshire

To ALFRED DICKENS, [30] AUGUST 1852

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Date: misdated by CD; Monday was 30 Aug.

Sheffield Monday | Twenty Ninth August 1852

My Dear Alfred

On arriving here last night, I found your letter. I will do all that is possible for you, but you have no idea, when you write at this time of day, what our audiences are. You may form some conception when I tell you that in the last places[†4] at Manchester—one part of the house alone—eleven hundred people are booked. I will get you and Helen[†1] in, somehow and somewhere;[†2] but it will be very difficult, and not a single free admission is given. You will find me at the Free Trade Hall until 3. After that, at the Royal Hotel.

I am sorry Helen will not see the comedy, which, as a picture, is something quite unprecedented. We play it here tonight for the last time. But she will see more amusing pieces, though not so dazzling to the eye.[†3]

Kate and Georgina are with me, & send their loves.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, [30] AUGUST 1852

MS Lytton Papers. Date: clearly Monday 30 Aug.

Sheffield, Monday Morning | Twenty Ninth August 1852

My Dear Bulwer.

Your letter reached me here, only last night. I have been very anxious to speak with you about what is to be said at the dinner. It appears to me extremely important to be general about the Guild, and to set store by the practical and plain arrangements [†a]into which it will enter[†a] for provident purposes—implying that all these are now to be settled, on careful discussion and consideration. All our people think with me, and all understand that they are not to commit us to points of detail.[†4] I write in great haste, having a Rehearsal of our Manchester pieces to attend to.

Our address at Manchester will be the Royal Hotel. You and I will no doubt have sufficient opportunity at the Athenaeum before dinner, to arrange our scheme of operations. It mainly rests with you, as you will necessarily anticipate anything that can be said on the subject.

We have been received with prodigious enthusiasm everywhere.

Ever Cordially Yours

CD.

September

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 2 SEPTEMBER 1852

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street | Piccadilly | London.

Adelphi Hotel Liverpool. | Thursday Evening Second September | 1852

My Dear Miss Coutts.

Your account of Mrs. Brown makes me very anxious. Surely it is a singular illness, requiring investigation from a great many points of view. Don't you think it might be well to take Southwood Smith's opinion? Mr. Brown knows best,—but Southwood Smith's experience and observation of all the eccentricities of fever, are so great that I should think him extremely likely to have seen cases like it.

My sanitary Institution has this particular feature that you CAN'T[†1] subscribe to it.[†2] You must be a shareholder. You are only responsible to the extent of your shares. The object in this, is, to assist the poor to help themselves, and not to pauperize them. I will cause the papers descriptive of the Society, to be sent to you. I have no doubt of its being worthy of support.[†3]

I sent you a paper from Manchester this afternoon, with a report in it of a dinner to the Guild.[†4] With that gallant people at my back—as they always are—I have a more fervent hope than ever, of setting right at last what is very wrong in my calling. I have the object so deeply at heart, and so strongly feel the advantage I have in my present power in such matters (which involves a great duty) that I am in a desperate earnestness that I think must produce something. I am afraid you hardly think with me now—but you will.

I wish you could have seen the opening of the Free Library for the people, at Manchester today.[†5] Such a noble effort, so wisely and modestly made; so wonderfully calculated to keep one part of that awful machine, a great working town, in harmony with the other![†1]

We acted—not the dismal Comedy, but Used Up and the Farce—to some 4000 people last night,[†2] and finish here tomorrow night.[†3] I shall be in town at 12 on Monday—going to Dover—and shall call to ask after Mrs. Brown.

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [?4 SEPTEMBER 1852]

Extract from F, VI, V, 519-20. Date: written as CD "was setting foot in the train that was to bring him to London", according to Forster; i.e. on 4 Sep.

Bulwer spoke brilliantly at the Manchester dinner, and his earnestness and determination about the Guild was most impressive.[†4] It carried everything before it. They are now getting up annual subscriptions, and will give us a revenue to begin with. I swear I believe that people to be the greatest in the world.[†5] At Liverpool I had a Round Robin on the stage after the play was over,[†6] a place being left for your signature, and as I am going to have it framed, I'll tell Green to send it to Lincoln's-inn-fields.[†7] You have no idea how good Tenniel, Topham, and Collins have been in what they had to do.[†8]

To HENRY AUSTIN, 5 SEPTEMBER 1852*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Sunday Fifth September | 1852

My Dear Henry.

Will you be so kind as now to instruct Cubitt's foreman to proceed immediately to the strengthening of the Schoolroom floor? I don't care how many pillars they put in the Kitchen, so that the floor be made soundly and undeniably dance-proof. (I suspect they will find one of the great beams cracked.)

2ndly. They had best set a good serviceable modern dining-room stove in the dining room. The present old one won't hold out.

And 3rdly. As you go out at the back door in the hall, the water, in wet weather, collects at the bottom of the steps. I think they had better pave with flag-stone that little bit, so that it may come flush with the top of the slope and throw the water off into the drain.

I am half dead.—Going back to Dover tomorrow.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To HENRY AUSTIN, 6 SEPTEMBER 1852

Mention in next.

To HENRY AUSTIN, 6 SEPTEMBER 1852*

MS Morgan Library.

Dover, Monday Evening | Sixth September 1852.

My Dear Henry.

After writing a note to you this morning which will probably be forwarded to you from the Board Office by to-night's post, I called at the said office on another matter. Miss Coutts is very anxious to take preventive measure, against the cholera down in her part of Westminster,[†1] and would take it as a great favor if you and Dr. Smith could meet the clergyman of her church, any day of the week but Wednesday—see what he has to shew—and then see her in Stratton Street and advise her. I think this may tend to good on all hands if you can manage to do it. If you make an appointment, address the Reverend Mr. Tennant, Residence, St. Stephen's Church Westminster.[†2] He wears a sanctified waistcoat,[†3] but is a practical little man and means as well as a man in such a waistcoat can.

I never can for the life of me remember what the name of the Poor Dwelling Improvement Society whereof Gatliffe is the Secretary, is,[†1] or where it is[†2]—though I am a shareholder.[†3] If you can enlighten me, I think I may get them a good shareholder in the person of Miss Coutts.

I write in great haste, having just come down, and the post being on the move.

Ever Affecy.

CD.

To MRS J. S. CUMMING,[†4] 7 SEPTEMBER 1852

Extract in Barnet J. Beyer "One Hundred Collectors' Items" n.d. (c. 1928); MS 1 p.; addressed Mrs. J. S. Cumming; dated 7 Sep 52.

You will, I hope, consider it a sufficient reply to your enquiry if I answer that I presume most writers of fiction write, partly from their imagination; and partly from their experience; and that in the work to which you refer, I have had recourse to both sources.

To MRS GORE, 7 SEPTEMBER 1852†

MS Berg Collection.

10 Camden Crescent, Dover | Tuesday Seventh[†5] September 1852

My Dear Mrs. Gore.

I came back here—with your letter I suppose. We both arrived at about the same time.

I heard of the excellent little Dutchman[†6] when I went home for a few hours last Saturday fortnight—divined what he really was—and tried to find him out. But he had left no address on his card, and I was in London for only a day. Imagine the hopelessness of finding such a needle in such a haystack! If you ever write to him or his, tell him how truly gratified I should have been to have received such a visitor, and his noble homage. I sincerely regret to have missed him.

As to our meeting—you and I—at shorter intervals than a twelvemonth and a day, I wear a green willow wound several times round my hat, in hopelessness.[†7]

Seriously I have long learnt the lesson that when I have a book to write I must give it the first place in my life, and an undivided mind. I have become content to set the pains and care it requires, against the pleasures of society (otherwise than in a sparing degree) and to put my fictitious companions in the upper place at feasts. I am rather less of an Anchorite than Robin Hood was—if he ever were at all, which the wise deny—but when I have work to do, I must be as free. So may you come to like Bleak House as well as its predecessors! And I shouldn't wonder! For I see a something "looming in the future"[†1] that looks pretty.—Which word reminds me to beg you to give my love to Miss Gore.[†2]

So you want a godchild. May I never have the opportunity of giving you one! But if I have—if my cup (I mean my quiver) be not yet full—then shall you hear again from the undersigned Camel that his back is broken by the addition of the last overbalancing straw.

What strange Kings those were in the Fairy times, who, with three thousand wives and four thousand seven hundred and fifty Concubines, found it necessary to put up prayers in all the Temples for a prince as beautiful as the day! I have some idea—with only one wife and nothing particular in any other direction—of interceding with the Bishop of London to have a little service in Saint Pauls beseeching that I may be considered to have done enough towards my country's population.

The Sketches of English Character[†3] shall be mine among the Kentish hops, the next time I go up to town. Thank you for the recommendation and your welcome letter.

Dear Mrs. Gore | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Gore.

To J. G. GRANT,[†4] 7 SEPTEMBER 1852

Mention in Henry Hellssen catalogue, Copenhagen, Jan 1958. MS 1 p.; dated Dover, 7 Sep 52.

Thanking him heartily for an article he had written.[†5]

To DAVID LEITCH,[†1] 7 SEPTEMBER 1852

MS Dickens House. Address: David Leitch Esquire | Derwent Bank | Derwent Water | Cumberland.

Dover, Seventh September 1852

Sir.

The contents of your parcel shall have my early attention.

And your generous offer of service shall be duly made known to the Members of the Guild when they assemble in London in November next.[†2] In the meantime allow me, *un*officially to thank you for it, and to assure you that I am truly sensible of the spirit in which it is made.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

David Leitch Esquire.

To [G. H. STRUTT],[†3] 7 SEPTEMBER 1852*

MS University of Kentucky.

Dovor, Seventh September 1852

My Dear Sir

I answer your kind note on the first morning after my return to the seaside from the whirl and bustle of the late expedition.

Your Saturday meal shall not be damaged; though I am bound to say that I fully believe Mr. Wilkinson[†4] to have been guilty of a gross injustice and illiberality; and I must add that there is scarcely anything I am disposed to treat with less forbearance than a personal injustice from the pulpit, where the declaimer has all the talk to himself.[†5]

However, I forgive Mr. Wilkinson as he has been the means (I hope) of making you and me better known to each other, and of causing me to receive (I know) a very pleasant letter. I leave Mrs. Dickens to explain to Mrs. Strutt how her husband is transformed into a starling who "can't get out"[†6] again, yet awhile, on any terms. And believe me I look forward to your redeeming your promise of coming to see us in town.[†1]

To WILLIAM BRADBURY, 9 SEPTEMBER 1852*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: W. Bradbury Esquire | Bouverie Street | Fleet Street | London.

10 Camden Crescent, Dover | Thursday Evening Ninth September | 1852

My Dear Bradbury.

I am very much obliged to you for your considerate note, and heartily glad to see your familiar old handwriting.[†2]

I sent, the day before yesterday, addressed to Evans, a very short preface[†3] to the Cheap Edition of the Christmas books—short, because I really have nothing to say! This is all I have to add to the last Number;[†4] and I leave your experience and taste (for when did they ever fail to help me in such matters!) to render the making-up a triumph of art.

With all friendly feelings and good wishes,

Believe me Ever | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

W. Bradbury Esquire.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 9 SEPTEMBER 1852*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street | Piccadilly | London.

10 Camden Crescent, Dover | Thursday Ninth September | 1852.

My Dear Miss Coutts

On leaving you the other day, I went straight to the Board of Health, but found Dr. Southwood Smith out, and Mr. Austin at Hastings.[†5] I immediately wrote to the latter, and to day receive his reply—in which he says

'I have written to Dr. Smith and to Mr. Tennant, to fix One o'Clock on Friday for the visit to Westminster, and hope that time will suit them, and that we may be able to effect the desired preventive measures.'

As I told him you would wish to see him and Dr. Smith, afterwards, I presume they will come on to you.

Earnestly hoping that Mrs. Brown is at any rate not going backward, and with kindest regards,

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To FRANÇOIS REGNIER, 11 SEPTEMBER 1852

MS Comédie Française.

Dover, Eleventh September 1852

My Dear Regnier.

As we arranged that I should write to you in English instead of French as heretofore, and as you are such a capital Englishman, voici my first English billet!

Mr. Gordon who is the bearer of it, is a most particular friend of mine, and a gentleman greatly distinguished in Edinburgh. He comes with his charming wife[†1] to Paris, for only three or four days. If you will render them your good offices at the Français[†2] and shew them the Coulisses[†3] some morning, I shall be deeply obliged to you.

I have received your kind present my dear friend. It is most welcome to me as a mark of your remembrance, for there are very few people whom I love so well, and whose genius I esteem so much. I write in haste. My wife and Miss Hogarth send you and Madame Regnier a thousand regards.

Ever Faithfully Yours | My Dear Regnier

CHARLES DICKENS

À Monsieur Regnier

To EDWARD CHAPMAN, 12 SEPTEMBER 1852*

MS Benoliel Collection.

10 Camden Crescent, Dover | Twelfth September 1852 | Sunday

My Dear Sir

I have not the least objection to this gentleman being allowed to do what he wants to do.[†4] I think we cannot do better than give him the permission.

When the last half year's accounts are ready, will you have the goodness to post them to me here?[†5]

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Edward Chapman Esquire.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 12 SEPTEMBER 1852*

MS Morgan Library.

10 Camden Crescent Dover | Sunday Twelfth September 1852

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I send you the Prospectus of the sensible and really useful Society.[†1] I hope you saw Dr. Southwood Smith and Mr. Austin yesterday, and that there are things to be done in Westminster which can be easily done.

We should be very glad to hear of Mrs. Brown if you had a moment to spare, one of these days, in the midst of your many occupations.

Ever Most Faithfully Yours
CD.

To HENRY AUSTIN, 13 SEPTEMBER 1852*

MS Morgan Library.

10 Camden Crescent Dover | Thirteenth September 1852

My Dear Henry.

Your letter gives me great pleasure, because I have a strong hope of enlisting that best of creatures[†2] in the good cause;[†3] and of doing no end of service to it, sooner or later, through her invaluable aid.

I quite agree with you about the two pillars, and do not question the advisability of having them. In the W.C matter, and all other such matters, I would rather you ordered what you think best. I am sure to be pleased with your decision. The ceilings of course to be done.

That slate has never been quite right since Cubitt's people left the roof.

We are perpetually expecting you here. I have continual visions of meeting you in the street with the Mayor and Town Council—Scavengers—Beadles—and other local plenipotentaries.[†4] I have a small suggestion to make when you come, relative to their suffering a very capital part of the Beach to be converted into a dusthole—which seems a weakness in the Corporation.

Ever affectionately

CD.

P.S. I had with me in the late expedition, a box of Southwood Smith's premonitory-symptom pills. I believe Coote the Director of the Orchestra was in an advanced stage—a very advanced stage indeed, and desperately ill—when they acted on him like a charm.

To JOHN FOWLER, 13 SEPTEMBER 1852†

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: Mr. John Fowler | 50 Occupation Road | Sheffield.

10 Camden Crescent Dover | Thirteenth September 1852

My Dear Sir

Let me assure you—briefly, but most cordially—in acknowledging the receipt of your kind note, that I am abundantly satisfied with the result[†1] of the Sheffield performance,[†2] and that no one can have received more pleasure from our visit than I derived from it.

And for your invaluable help, rendered doubly delightful by the manly and modest manner in which it was given from your heart, I am most truly indebted to you.[†3]

With all friendly wishes | Believe me | Very faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. John Fowler.

To JAMES C. SHAW,[†4] 13 SEPTEMBER 1852*

MS Mr H. E. Quick.

10 Camden Crescent Dover | Thirteenth September 1852

Sir.

I am exceedingly sorry to say—not only that I am prevented by many occupations from meeting the mechanics employed in your Company[†5] at Ashford, on Saturday next, but from suggesting any early time at which I can hope to have that pleasure.[†6] I am, however, so interested in their design, and feel so much that I am naturally associated with them in some degree from connecting my annual sea-side enjoyments with the South Eastern Line, that if I can serve them by spending an evening with them in the Christmas holidays, I will gladly do it.

Or, if they would prefer to defer their project until the Summer or Autumn of next year, I am theirs then. Or, if they can begin without me and will trust to the chances of our meeting in the fulness of time, I shall be equally well pleased. I would not absolutely refuse their request, if I can possibly help it.

I am Sir | Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

James C Shaw Esquire.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 14 SEPTEMBER 1852

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street | Piccadilly | London.

Dover, Tuesday Night | Fourteenth September 1852

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I have just heard of what you will have been long prepared for, but what I fear will cause you, notwithstanding, some natural distress.[†1] I was walking at Walmer this afternoon, and little thought that the great old man was dying or dead.[†2] He had been a steady friend to an uncle of Mrs. Dickens who was Colonel of Engineers here;[†3] and his son[†4] left word, a little while ago, while we were at dinner, that the Duke was dead.

I believe that what you write about Westminster is the whole truth and force of that subject, and that there is no better way of doing good, or of preparing the great mass of mankind to think of the great doctrines of our Saviour. If I were to try to tell you what I foresee from your lending your aid to what is so practically and plainly christian with no fear of mistake, your modest way of looking at what you do would scarcely believe me. But you will live to see what comes of it, and that will be—here—your great reward.[†5]

I felt, when I came back, that I had so much to do with Bleak House that it was not safe for me to contemplate doing nothing next Wednesday. So I proposed to Mr. Stone[†6] for that day week. As soon as I receive his answer I will write again.

I am glad Southwood Smith will have an opportunity of considering Mrs.

Brown's case. The results of a great man of that peculiar experience, must be useful in so delicate a matter—if only as confirming your faith in what is being done.

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours
CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 20 SEPTEMBER 1852

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street | Piccadilly | London.

10 Camden Crescent Dover | Monday Evening September Twentieth | 1852.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

When I received your note this afternoon, I intended to write to you tomorrow (after waiting for the morning's post, and getting nothing to the contrary by it) to tell you that although I wrote to Mr. Stone as we agreed, I have received no answer from him and suppose he is still out of town.

I will now propose Wednesday week, which will quite suit me. In the Shepherd's Bush matter, a great deal seems to me to depend upon the possibility of getting the two houses under one roof as it were, and managing them with the same staff and at no increased expence for supervision. If that could be done, I should think it might be very desirable to increase the capacity of the Home. But this of necessity so depends upon the nature of the premises that I should like to see them before further considering the subject. If you would like to see them too, perhaps we could go out there on the same Wednesday?

I am quite delighted with your letter, for the double intelligence of your sister[†1] and Mrs. Brown, makes me feel as if you were throwing down your late troubles altogether, like Christian and his different bundle in the Pilgrims' Progress. Heaven grant that it may be so, and that we may soon have Mrs. Brown in a good contradictory humour again! I long to have a disagreement with her.

With kindest loves

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

I had a long talk with Charley before he went back, in which he behaved in such a manly manner and shewed himself to be such a fine fellow, that he rather disturbed my judicial equanimity. He told me that he would certainly like the Army. I told him, in return, that he must consider the practical difficulties and drawbacks of the life, as well as the bright side. I set both fairly before him, and he then said he would like time to consider, as he would wish to understand himself and do right. So I settled to go and take a walk with him next month, & decide the question in a perfectly open and unreserved confidence.[†2] He is the best of boys now, and I hope will not be among anything but the best of men.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 21 SEPTEMBER 1852*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street | Piccadilly | London.

10 Camden Crescent Dover | Tuesday Twenty First September | 1852.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I have received the enclosed from Mr. Stone this morning. I do not answer it as to tomorrow week, without first hearing from you. But it appears to me that our making the appointment would be useless, and that I had better look out in some other direction. I am going to walk to Sandgate[†1] this morning with Mr.

Austin—who is down here, assisting the town authorities to devise some sanitary measures of which the place stands much in need[†2]—and will have a talk with him.

I hope you are well at Brighton—or will be, by the time when this shall reach you—and that it will agree with Mrs. Brown. As it is often an uncertain place with invalids and makes them restless, I hope you will not be dispirited if she don't seem quite so well there.

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?19-21 SEPTEMBER 1852]

Text from F, VII, ii, 569. Date: on hearing of Mrs Macready's death (18 Sep), according to Forster; therefore not later than 21 Sep when the announcement was in The Times.

Ah me! ah me! This tremendous sickle certainly does cut deep into the surrounding corn, when one's own small blade has ripened.[†3] But this is all a Dream, may be, and death will wake us.[†4]

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 23 SEPTEMBER 1852

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street | Piccadilly | London.

Dover, Thursday Twenty Third September | 1852

My Dear Miss Coutts.

The whole Public seems to me to have gone mad about the funeral of the Duke of Wellington.[†5] I think it a grievous thing—a relapse into semi-barbarous practices—an almost ludicrous contrast to the calm good sense and example of responsibility set by the Queen Dowager[†1]—a pernicious corruption of the popular mind, just beginning to awaken from the long dream of inconsistencies, monstrosities, horrors and ruinous expences, that has beset all classes of society in connexion with Death—and a folly sure to miss its object and to be soon attended by a strong reaction on the memory of the illustrious man so *mis*respected.

But to say anything about it now, or to hope to leaven with any grain of sense such a mass of wrong-doing, would be utterly useless. Afterwards, I shall try to present the sense of the case in Household Words.[†2] At present, I think I might as well whistle to the sea.

I quite concur with you as to Mr. Stone and the Westminster project.[†3] The survey is actively going on. Do you think you can let me know, by Tuesday, whether you will go to Shepherd's Bush on Wednesday? If not, a note to the Household Words Office on Wednesday forenoon will do as well. I shall be there, at 11.

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To MRS GRETTON,[†4] 23 SEPTEMBER 1852*

MS Mrs Stuart Chevalier.

Dover, Thursday Twenty Third September 1852

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mrs. Gretton, and regrets that he cannot have the pleasure of accepting the enclosed paper; mainly, because the general subject of which it treats has been for some months confided to another and an old contributor to Household Words, who is now in Australia.[†5]

In case Mrs. Gretton should at any time desire to offer any other contribution to Mr. Dickens, it shall receive his readiest attention. He begs to impress on Mrs. Gretton that for the purpose of Household Words if facts or experiences be the theme, the attractive manner of their presentation is of great importance.[†6] Like a good appearance, it is a letter of recommendation, and may fairly be required by so large an audience.

Mr. Dickens begs Mrs. Gretton to do him the favor to present his kindest regards and cordial remembrances to Mrs. Trollope.[†1]

To MRS MORSON, 23 SEPTEMBER 1852*

MS Miss Grace Hughes. Address: Mrs. Morson | Urania Cottage | Near The White Horse | Shepherds Bush | London.

10 Camden Crescent Dover | Twenty Third September 1852

Dear Mrs. Morson

I shall probably see you next Wednesday. Will you get prepared, in the meantime, an estimate of the cost of paving the back yard with flag-stones.

Ever Yours

CD.

To HENRY AUSTIN, 25 SEPTEMBER 1852*

MS Morgan Library.

Dover, Twenty Fifth September 1852

My Dear Henry.

Don't you think that before Cubitt's men take their departure they may as well paint—not merely wash, but paint, stone-color—the side of the little house by the dining room windows. I fear it will look shabby and patchworky as the winter comes on. If you decide to give them the instructions to do it, please tell them they must do it so as not to spoil that bed.

Ever Affecy. Henry Austin Esquire.CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 29 SEPTEMBER 1852*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street.

Office of Household Words | Wednesday Twenty Ninth September 1852 | Quarter to one

My Dear Miss Coutts. I leave this note before going away from here, in case any note should be brought here from you.

Not having heard from you as to any appointment for our going to Shepherds Bush to day, I am induced to believe that you are prevented (not, I hope, by Mrs. Brown's being worse) from going. And as I find among my letters one from Mr. A Beckett proposing two new girls, I think it better to occupy what remains of my day's time in going to his Police Court to see them, than in going to Shepherd's Bush without you.

I shall leave town by train at half past 4—returning here for a few minutes first. On Monday I am going to Boulogne for ten days or a fortnight, and then I am coming home.

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [SEPTEMBER 1852]

Extract from F, VI, iv, 513. Date: Sep 52 according to Forster.

That was very good indeed of Sala's.[†1] He was twenty guineas in advance, by the bye, and I told Wills delicately to make him a present of it. I find him a very conscientious fellow. When he gets money ahead, he is not like the imbecile youth who so often do the like in Wellington-street and walk off, but only works more industriously. I think he improves with everything he does. He looks sharply at the alterations in his articles, I observe; and takes the hint next time.[†2]

October

To RICHARD FRIEND,[†3] 1 OCTOBER 1852

MS John Rylands Library.

Camden Crescent Dover | First October 1852

Sir.

I can only assure you, in reply to your letter, that I will respect your confidence, and that I receive it as a mark of your trust in me.

But I do not think the request you prefer, by any means a reasonable one; and I must, for many sufficient reasons, decline to entertain it.

You show great good sense (if I may be allowed to say so) in turning your thoughts to your profession[†1] rather than to authorship, and I cordially wish you well.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Richard Friend.

To FREDERICK H. JOHNSON,[†2] 1 OCTOBER 1852*

MS Public Museum and Art Gallery, Sunderland.

Dover | Friday First October 1852

Dear Sir

Allow me to thank you and the other gentlemen to whom I am so much indebted for their kind assistance at Sunderland, for the very gratifying letter I have had the pleasure of receiving from you.

I can most cordially and honestly assure you that the Amateur Company have quite an enthusiastic remembrance of their Sunderland audience; and that its members, one and all, derived quite as much gratification from their memorable evening in that town, as they can possibly have given to the most generous of their assembled friends.

I am Dear Sir, with many thanks to you and the gentlemen then associated with you,

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Frederick H Johnson Esquire

To ALFRED TENNYSON,[†3] 1 OCTOBER 1852*

MS Yale University Library.

Dover, First October 1852.

My Dear Tennyson.

I have received your note here, only to day. It would have given me the heartiest pleasure to have welcomed a young Tennyson[†4] to this breathing world[†5] wherein he is much wanted—on so good an occasion as his christening[†6]—but that I have engaged to go to Boulogne on Sunday for a fortnight. I shall drink his health on the fifth!

As your letter bears no address, and as I cannot call your residence to mind, I send this to Moxon's[†1] care.

Ever Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Alfred Tennyson.

To THOMAS BEARD, 2 OCTOBER 1852

MS Dickens House.

10 Camden Crescent Dover | 2nd October 1852

My dear Beard

We have been expecting you day after day, these six weeks. The usual familiars have been in despair, and I have wondered incoherently—though not without speculations on the total impracticability of the Baldwinian Navy.[†2]

This is to instruct as to our new whereabout.

Our time of three months being up here, the children[†3] return home, and we go tomorrow morning, for a fortnight, to Boulogne. There, at the Hotel des Bains, we have made all arrangements for our guest the gallant Englishman; and there (with a cribbage-board) we shall expect you. Write and say when you are coming. The tidal train from Folkestone (see list for hour, which varies each day) will only lengthen your journey two hours in all.[†4] It is not a bad place by any means, and I hope you will like the novelty.

In haste | Ever Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Beard Esquire.

To HENRY AUSTIN, 4 OCTOBER 1852*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Angleterre | H. Austin Esquire | Board of Health | Whitehall | London.

Hotel des Bains, Boulogne. | Monday Fourth October 1852.

My Dear Henry.

As I had occasion to go from Dover to town on Saturday afternoon, and came from town straight here yesterday morning by way of Folkestone, I did not receive your letter and the Report accompanying it,[†1] until I got here. I do not expect to return home for a fortnight; but, as I should be very glad to help the Sanitary cause, if possible, will you see Wills—shew him this letter—explain to him what you think possible to be done, popularly, with the subject—and ask him to deliver it over immediately to Morley if he and you together see the way to a paper on it.[†2] This will save my writing him a long letter, and will save time.

In haste | Ever affectionately Henry Austin EsquireCD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 4 OCTOBER 1852*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Angleterre | Miss Burdett Coutts | White Hart Hotel | Reigate | Surrey.

Hotel des Bains, Boulogne. Monday October Fourth 1852

My Dear Miss Coutts. It was not Mr. Stone[†3] we were to have visited last Wednesday (according to the understanding I had), but Shepherd's Bush. Not having heard from you by mid-day on Saturday when your last letter was on its way to me, I was uneasy lest you should be in some new trouble, and so started from Dover to Stratton Street. There, I saw Webb,[†4] and heard where you were and how you were, and then went out to Shepherd's Bush. They were all going on quietly and comfortably. The girl from the Hospital had been brought back by Mrs. Morson that Afternoon. Finding the bills in arrear, and that she wanted a little money too, I went over the accounts and paid them all. Including a Draper's bill for three months and a Carpenter's bill for the same period, and four pounds odd for petty cash to Mrs. Morson, they amounted, as you will see when you next look at the book, to some Seventy Pounds. I also saw all the girls who go away next, and booked two of them among our cases, who were not yet duly entered. My impression—formed, however, without actually going over the adjoining premises—is, that it would be difficult to make one establishment of the two houses, and that if you should at any time think of enlarging the Home, it might be easier and much cheaper, to enlarge our present house. I should amazingly like (you know my infirmity in the arrangement way) to carry out some notions that have come into my head with that view, including the small improvement of more than doubling the height of the long room!

I am going to work tomorrow morning, and purpose remaining here while I write the next No. of Bleak House.[†5] It will probably take me until this day fortnight. As soon as I have done I shall return home—the children have already gone home—and then perhaps you will be able to look at the house that is to let.

With kindest regards to Mrs. Brown—and to Mr. Brown, who has got rid of his Neuralgia I hope,

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

P.S. I know the country in which you are staying, and the house too. We had a very bad passage over, and I feel as if I had exchanged my eyes for two brass bullets.

To W. C. MACREADY, 5 OCTOBER 1852

MS Morgan Library.

Hotel des Bains, Boulogne. | Tuesday Night Fifth October 1852

My Dearest Macready.

I received your melancholy letter[†1] while we were staying at Dover, a few days after it was written. But I thought it best not to write to you until you were at home again, among your dear children.

Its tidings were not unexpected by us—had been anticipated in many conversations—often thought of, under many circumstances. But the shock was scarcely lessened by this preparation. The many happy days we have passed together came crowding back; all the old cheerful times arose before us; and the remembrance of what we had loved so dearly and seen under so many aspects—all natural and delightful and affectionate and ever to be cherished—was—how pathetic and touching you know best!

But my dear dear Macready this is not the first time you have felt that the recollection of great love and happiness associated with the dead, soothes while it wounds. And while I can imagine that the blank beside you may grow wider every day, for many days to come, I know—I think—that from its depths such comfort will arise as only comes to great hearts like yours when they can think upon their trials with a steady trust in God.[†2]

My dear friend, I have known her so well—have been so happy in her regard—have been so light-hearted with her—have interchanged so many tender remembrances of you with her when you were far away, and have seen her ever so simply and truly anxious to be worthy of you—that I cannot write as I would, and as I know I ought. As I would press your hand in your distress, I let this note go from me. I understand your grief, I deeply feel the reason that there is for it, yet in that very feeling find a softening consolation that must spring up a hundred thousand fold for you. May Heaven prosper it in your breast, and the spirits that have gone before; from the regions of Mercy to which they have been called, smooth the path you have to tread alone! Children are left you, your good sister[†1] (God bless her) is by your side, you have devoted friends, and more reasons than most men to be self-reliant and stedfast. Something is gone, that never in this world can be replaced, but much is left and it is a part of her life, her death, her immortality.

Catherine and Georgina who are with me here, send you their overflowing love and sympathy. We hope that in a little while, and for a little while at least, you will come among us who have known the happiness of being in this bond with you, and will not exclude us from participation in your past and future.

Ever My Dearest Macready with unchangeable affection,

Yours in all love and truth

CHARLES DICKENS

To W. H. WILLS, 5 OCTOBER 1852†

MS Huntington Library.

Hotel des Bains, Boulogne | Tuesday Fifth October 1852

My Dear Wills.

H.W.

I don't intend to come to town as long as I remain here. I thought you understood this, from our conversations at Dover. I am curious to see Horne's MS,[†2] and hope it will come out well.

I observe that Tauchnitz's bill[†3] appears to be due to day. I enclose it. Will you pay it to my account at Coutts's, enquiring whether its non-presentation to day affects it, and explaining how it is.

GUILD.

I would certainly proceed according to Phillips's[†4] advice.

If you got Forster's[†5] account[†6] from Henry's[†7] statement or in Henry's writing, don't pay it. I will write to him myself in that case, assuming that it is an unauthorized proceeding. I think it monstrous, and doubt whether in any case we ought to pay it without protest, out of money that is not ours. Upon my word I do not think it would be an endurable item to place on record in the accounts. Conceive twelve men doing the like "To one hundred and forty four lace cravats, and 72 pair of lace ruffles, £74..8..0. Washing £12.12..0"

!!!

[†a]D.N.

I recollect Morton[†1] well. Met him in Fleet Street, some 12 months ago. Have not seen a paper since Saturday, and want to know the details. I infer them from your general reference, and am quite amazed and shocked.[†a†2]

WEATHER.

Very stormy, and a prodigious sea running.

BLEAK HOUSE.

Just begun.

Remembrances to Mrs. Wills and you from my two ladies.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To W. H. WILLS, 7 OCTOBER 1852

MS Huntington Library.

Hotel des Bains, Boulogne | Thursday Seventh October 1852

My Dear Wills. I send you the proof of the No.[†3]

Taboo'd (for the present, certainly) the Poem.[†4] I think it very bad.

See to the dashes in the article on Epitaphs.[†5] They are at present innumerable. Graves and Epitaphs would be a better name.

I have been very carefully considering the question of Horne's Diary. It is clear to me that nobody might could would or should understand what it means, if we were to print this portion by itself,[†1] quite ignorant of what is to follow or when it is to come. It would never do without something—at least, something—of the Voyage, either in the same Number or in the following one. Therefore, at any risk of Howitts MS[†2] making its appearance in print somewhere,[†3] hold this portion back,[†4] and insert Penny Wisdom[†5] (which is very interesting and good) in its stead.

I shall be glad to hear whether my general objection has already presented itself to you?

Morley's (I suppose) resumé of the Prairie book,[†6] is as well done as a paper of that kind can be. Quite a model.[†7]

The Babbleton Book Club,[†8] very weak. A kind of imbecile thing that seems to want crutches.

I never heard of such a business altogether, as you unfold in that Morton case.[†9] When I met him in Fleet Street, he told me the whole story of the Duel:[†10] I know the Murderer[†11] too.

Ever Yours

CD.

To W. H. WILLS, 7 OCTOBER 1852

MS Huntington Library.

Hotel des Bains Boulogne | Thursday Night Seventh October | 1852

My Dear Wills.

I think it best, in case of any miscarriage, to advise you that I returned the proof of the next No.[†12] in a packet by Steamboat from here to Folkestone this afternoon.

I don't quite understand from your letter what Taüchnitz wants to know. Will you answer him, in English, and give him the explanation he requires—for me, in my absence?

The Shot Tower by Waterloo Bridge ought to make a good article. The Bridge itself—bridges of London in general—would be a fine subject for Sala—[†a]in another article.[†a] If the Waterloo Bridge people would give us a little information about the change in their affairs since the Railroad—and would let us lay hold of one of their Night Toll-takers, a very fine thing might perhaps be made of it. I wish you would look into the subject, and see whether it will do for me, before you lay Sala on.[†1]

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [EARLY OCTOBER 1852]

Extract in F, VII, ii, 569-70. Date: no doubt about a week after his crossing to Boulogne on 3 Oct.

I never saw a better instance of our countrymen than this place. Because it is accessible it is genteel to say it is of no character, quite English, nothing continental about it, and so forth. It is as quaint, picturesque, good a place as I know; the boatmen and fishing-people quite a race apart,[†2] and some of their villages as good as the fishing-villages on the Mediterranean.[†3] The Haute Ville, with a walk all round it on the ramparts, charming. The country walks, delightful. It is the best mixture of town and country (with sea air into the bargain) I ever saw; everything cheap, everything good; and please God I shall be writing on those said ramparts next July![†4]

To MESSRS BRADBURY & EVANS, 11 OCTOBER 1852*

MS Rosenbach Museum and Library.

Hotel des Bains, Boulogne | Monday Night, Eleventh October | 1852

My Dear B and E.

I send you the first 16 slips of the No.[†5] Please advise me with all dispatch of its safe receipt, as I shall be anxious to know that it has come safely.

You can send me the proof here, by parcel direct. As I expect to be home next Monday, I shall probably bring the remainder with me instead of sending it.[†1]

Take care of my MS for me. You have some in hand—at least I have not seen it at the H.W. Office, though you may have sent it there.[†2]

Ever Yours faithfully

CD

To W. H. WILLS, 12 OCTOBER 1852

MS Huntington Library.

Hotel des Bains, Boulogne | Tuesday Twelfth October 1852

My Dear Wills.

H.W.

The No.[†3] to which you refer in your letter of yesterday's date received this morning, has not yet reached me. I will go over it when it comes.

I have thought of the Christmas No., but not very successfully, because I have been (and still am) constantly occupied with Bleak House. I purpose returning home either on Sunday or Monday, as my work permits, and we will, immediately thereafter, dine at the office and talk it over—so that you may get all the men to their work.

The fault of Prince's[†4] poem, besides its intrinsic meanness as a composition, is, that it goes too glibly with the comfortable idea (of which we have had a great deal too much in England since the Continental commotions)[†5] that a man is to sit down and make himself domestic and meek, no matter what is done to him. It wants a stronger appeal to rulers in general to let men do this, fairly, by governing them thoroughly well. As it stands, it is at about the Tract Mark (Dairyman's daughter &c) of political morality.[†6] And dont think that it is necessary to write down to any part of our audience. I always hold that to be as great a mistake as can be made.

I wish you would mention to Thomas, that I think the paper on Hops[†7] extremely well done. He has quite caught the tone we want, and caught it in the best way.[†8]

In pursuing the Bridge subject,[†9] I think it would be advisable to look up the Thames Police. I have a misty notion of some capital papers coming out of it.[†10] Will you see to this branch of the tree, among the other branches.

GUILD.

I hope Gye didn't let you have Covent Garden; for the effect of our Proscenium within that one would be so vehemently ludicrous that I think Peek[†1] would be grinned out of the field by our own carpenters.[†2]

—Talking of whom, I am quite delighted with the idea of Sloman's house.

MYSELF.

To Chapman I will write. My impression is that I shall not subscribe to the projected Hood monument, as I am not at all favorable to such posthumous honors.[†3]

Ever Faithfully W. H. Wills Esquire.CD.

To W. H. WILLS, 13 OCTOBER 1852

MS Huntington Library.

Hotel des Bains, Boulogne | Wednesday Night October Thirteenth | 1852

My Dear Wills

The No.[†4] coming in after dinner, since my letter was written and posted, I have gone over it.

I am grievously depressed by it; it is so exceedingly bad. If you have anything else to put first, don't put Sala's[†5] paper[†6] first. (There is nothing better for a beginning in the No. as it stands, but this is very bad.) It is a mistake to think of it as a first article. The article itself is [†a]in the main[†a] a mistake. Firstly, the subject requires the greatest discretion and nicety of touch. And secondly it is all wrong and self contradictory. Nobody can for a moment suppose that "sporting" amusements are the sports of the PEOPLE[†7]—the whole gist of the best part of the description is to shew that they are the amusements of a peculiar and limited class. The greater part of them are at a miserable discount (horse-racing excepted which has been already sufficiently done in HW) and there is no reason for running amuck at them at all. I have endeavoured to remove much of my objection [†a](and I think have done so)[†a] but, both in purpose and in any general address, it is as wide of a first article as anything can well be.[†8] [†b]It would do best in the opening of the No.[†b†9]

About Sunday in Paris there is no kind of doubt.[†1] Take it out. Such a thing as that Crucifixion, unless it were done in a masterly manner, we have no business to stagger families with. Besides, the name is a comprehensive one, and should include a quantity of fine matter. Lord bless me, what I could write under that head!—

Strengthen the Number, pray, by anything good you may have. It is a very dreary business as it stands.

The proofs want a thorough revision.

In haste, going to bed, | Ever Faithfully

CD.

I return the wretched man's letter—evidently mad—I know nothing about him.[†2]

Over

I want a name for Miss Martineau's paper.

TRIUMPHANT CARRIAGES[†3] (Or triumphal)
DUBLIN STOUTHEARTEDNESS
PATIENCE AND PREJUDICE.

Take which you like best.

To MESSRS COUTTS & CO., 18 OCTOBER 1852*

MS Signore Francesco Pertile.

Office of Household Words, | Monday Eighteenth October | 1852

Messrs. Coutts and Co.
Gentlemen.

Be so good as to deliver my banking-book to the Bearer,

CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN WATKINS,[†4] 18 OCTOBER 1852

MS Yale University Library.

Office of Household Words, | Monday Eighteenth October 1852

Sir.

On my return to town I find the letter awaiting me, which you did me the favor to address to me, I believe—for it has no date—some days ago.

I have the greatest tenderness for the memory of Hood, as I had for himself. But I am not very favorable to posthumous memorials in the Monument way,[†1] and I should exceedingly regret to see any such appeal as you contemplate, made public;[†2] remembering another public appeal that was made (and responded to) after Hood's death.[†3]

I think that I best discharge my duty to my deceased friend, and best consult the respect and love with which I remember him, by declining to join in any such public endeavour as that which you (in all generosity and singleness of purpose, I am sure) advance. I should have a melancholy gratification in privately assisting to place a simple and plain record over the remains of a great writer, that should be as modest as he was himself;[†4] but I regard any other movement in connexion with his mortal resting-place as a mistake.

I am Sir | Your faithful Servant

CHARLES DICKENS

John Watkins Esquire.

To PROFESSOR RICHARD OWEN, 19 OCTOBER 1852

MS Benoliel Collection.

Office of Household Words | Tuesday Nineteenth October 1852

My Dear Owen.

I am just home again for the winter, and saw Forster last night. He perfectly overwhelmed me with delight by telling me you had intimated to him that you might sometimes find leisure to write some familiar papers on Natural History, yourself, for this Journal.[†1]

It would be in vain for me to attempt to tell you with what pride and pleasure I should receive such assistance, or what high store I should set by it. If you will give me such gratification, and render the work such a service, you can't (I must honestly say) enhance the regard and respect in which I hold you already,[†2] but you can and will afford me inexpressible satisfaction.[†3] —And in all business particulars, I think I may confidently count on your finding no fault with such an association.

Believe me Ever | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Professor Owen.

To THE REV. JAMES WHITE, 19 OCTOBER 1852

Text from MDGH, I, 288-9.

Office of "Household Words", Tuesday, Oct. 19th, 1852.

My dear White,

We are now getting our Christmas extra number together, and I think you are the boy to do, if you will, one of the stories.

I propose to give the number some fireside name,[†4] and to make it consist entirely of short stories supposed to be told by a family sitting round the fire. I don't care about their referring to Christmas at all; nor do I design to connect them together, otherwise than by their names, as:

THE GRANDFATHER'S STORY.
THE FATHER'S STORY.
THE DAUGHTER'S STORY.
THE SCHOOLBOY'S STORY.
THE CHILD'S STORY.
THE GUEST'S STORY.
THE OLD NURSE'S STORY.[†5]

The grandfather might very well be old enough to have lived in the days of the highwaymen. Do you feel disposed, from fact, fancy, or both, to do a good winter-hearth story of a highwayman?[†1] If you do, I embrace you (per post), and throw up a cap I have purchased for the purpose into mid-air.

Think of it and write me a line in reply. We are all well and blooming.

Are you never coming to town any more?[†2] Never going to drink port again, metropolitaneously, but always with Fielden?[†3]

[†a]Love to Mrs. White and the children, if Lotty be not out of the list long ago.[†a]

Ever faithfully, my dear White.

CHARLES DICKENS

To HENRY AUSTIN, [?19 OCTOBER 1852]

Envelope only, MS Dickens House. Address: Henry Austin Esquire | General Board of Health | Whitehall. PM OC 19 1852.

To [PROFESSOR RICHARD OWEN],[†4] 21 OCTOBER 1852

Extract in Carnegie Book Shop catalogue No. 68. MS 1 p.; dated Tavistock House, 21 Oct 52.

We shall be very happy indeed (Mrs. Dickens, her sister, and I) to come to you that afternoon.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, [?22] OCTOBER 1852

MS Morgan Library. Date: misdated by CD; Friday was 22 Oct in 1852.

Tavistock House | Friday Twenty Third October 1852

My Dear Miss Coutts.

As soon as I came home this week (and consequently, before I received your kind note) I set off to see Mr. Austin, on the Westminster Question.[†5] But I found him gone to Wales on a Visit of sanitary inspection, though soon expected back. He is not yet returned. When he "turns up"—as my friend Mr. Micawber might observe—I will have some talk with him, and should like to see you with him whenever you can appoint a time. I understand the merits of the great encounter of the Windmills,[†1] as Mr. Austin stated them to me at Dover. If you were successful in the Quixotic attack, you would be saved a very large, and (I am quite convinced) an unnecessary expence. But the scheme must not be paralyzed by the encounter, whether or no.

Your description of the placid Doctor[†2] makes me laugh in a most ridiculous manner whenever I think of it. I always feel inclined to take him by the throat and squeeze the words he won't say and won't be helped to (for if you suggest them he positively refuses to take them but goes floundering on in the profoundest contentment), out of him by force. He is an excellent creature, however, and knows what he is about far better than he seems to—which is not saying much for him, but I mean a great deal more.

We are greatly relieved, and very glad, to hear that Mrs. Brown continues to mend. I have effected, and am effecting, several small improvements in the internal arrangements here, which I shall hope to hear both your and her commendation of, by the glow of a winter fire. I bought at Boulogne, a little figure for my study chimney-piece which was the sign of a tobacconist's shop, and which, for the most grotesque absurdity, I consider unrivalled.[†3]

Tomorrow I am going to Shepherd's Bush. Charley and I hold our council at Eton on Wednesday.

With kindest and truest regards

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

I am glad you liked the paper on Graves and Epitaphs. Since I came back I have been busily projecting a great variety of subjects for Household Words.

To CHARLES EDMONDS,[†4] 22 OCTOBER 1852

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, Oct 1980; MS 1 p.; dated Tavistock House, 22 Oct 52; addressed Charles Edmonds.

Saying that of the little list of books sent to Edmonds the day before I do not want the Latin Dictionary and Gradus. I thought my boy at Eton had mine, but I find them safe upon my shelves.

To THOMAS BEARD, 23 OCTOBER 1852

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Place | Edgeware Road.

Tavistock House | Saturday Twenty Third October | 1852

My Dear Beard

We have now come home for good, and I hope shall see you soon and often.

In proof of the steadiness of the Inimitable, I enclose you a letter I sent by John to the Morning Herald Office three weeks ago. He heard you were in Ireland and brought it back again.[†1]

Ever Heartily Yours Thomas Beard EsquireCD

To E. W. LANE,[†2] 23 OCTOBER 1852

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House, London | Saturday Twenty Third October 1852

Dear Sir

Cordially concurring in the views you so well express in the interesting letter you have done me the favor to address to me, I have had great pleasure in instructing the Agent in Edinburgh to send you every week two copies of Household Words.[†3]

I cannot help remarking that I doubt the expediency of your choice of books in one particular. I question the propriety of putting the Pilgrim's Progress in the hands of mad people unless upon the homoeopathic principle of alleviating a disease with a medicine that very often causes it.

I am Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Edward W. Lane Esquire

To MRS MICKELSON,[†1] 23 OCTOBER 1852

Text from N, II, 424.

Tavistock House | Saturday Twenty Third October 1852

Mr. Charles Dickens is sorry to inform Mrs. Mickelson in reply to her letter of application, that his vote for the Orphan Working School[†2] has long been promised.

To LOVELL A. REEVE, 23 OCTOBER 1852*

Text from transcript, Huntington Library.

Tavistock House | Saturday Twenty Third October | 1852.

My Dear Sir,

I had not seen the book to which you so kindly call my attention.[†3] Pray accept my cordial thanks for your remembrance, and for the gratification it has given me.

Faithfully yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Lovell Reeve Esquire.

To JOHN CHAPMAN, 25 OCTOBER 1852

MS Mr W. A. Foyle.

Tavistock House | Monday Twenty Fifth October 1852

My Dear Sir

My friend Mr. Justice Talfourd has asked me what is his best mode of sending a couple of books[†4] to Professor Felton[†5] at Cambridge Massachusetts. Can you help me to advise him?

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Chapman Esquire.

To HENRY AUSTIN, 27 OCTOBER 1852*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Wednesday Twenty Seventh October | 1852

My Dear Henry.

Can you meet me, on the Westminster matter,[†1] at Miss Coutts's in Stratton Street, tomorrow (Thursday) at a quarter past two. If you don't answer, I shall expect you.

Affectionately Always

CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 27 OCTOBER 1852*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street | Piccadilly.

Tavistock House | Wednesday Twenty Seventh October | 1852.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I will be with you tomorrow, at 2 o'Clock. Mr. Austin has returned, and I will ask him if he can meet me at your house at a quarter past 2—which will leave us a quarter of an hour for other matters.

I send you, numbered in their order, three letters from a certain poor lady. I know nothing of her, but I thought the first one genuine, and sent a discreet messenger to see her and her house—of which he reported most favorably. I thought it just possible that you might approve of the case; but of course I have made no kind of reference to you, and have encouraged no hopes whatever.[†2]

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To THE REV. W. ADDINGTON NORTON,[†3] 27 OCTOBER 1852

Text from N, II, 424.

Tavistock House, Tavistock Square | Twenty Seventh October 1852

Sir.

I feel much indebted to you for your obliging note, and beg to thank you for it very sincerely.

Allow me, also, to acknowledge receipt of the pamphlet[†1] you have been so good as to send me; which I have read.

I feel bound to say to you, plainly, that I have not the least doubt of the girl's being an impostor,[†2] and I would beg to offer two remarks to you on your introduction to her narrative.[†3] The first is, that there are innumerable cases on record, clearly showing that the mere pleasure of deceiving has been sufficient "motive" for a vast number of impostures, and that it is quite unnecessary to seek for any other—particularly in the cases of sick girls and young women.[†4] Secondly, that Dr. Samuel Johnson is by no means "the greatest of human authorities" on such a point as that to which your quotation from Boswell refers,[†5] but was, on the contrary, singularly easy of belief in almost anything out of the common way, so that it purported to be connected with the invisible world. Mr. Macaulay very truly writes of him that he was in the habit of sifting with extreme severity the evidence for[†6] all stories which were merely odd; but that when they were not only odd but miraculous, his severity relaxed,[†7] and he began to be [credulous][†8] precisely at the point where the most credulous people begin to be sceptical.

I am Sir, | Faithfully yours

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To THE DUKE OF DEVONSHIRE, 29 OCTOBER 1852

MS Devonshire Collections, Chatsworth.

Tavistock House | Friday Twenty Ninth October 1852

My Dear Duke of Devonshire

Being now at home again, I cannot forbear writing to thank you for that most wonderful portrait you have done me the kindness to send me—the only perfect likeness, I think, I ever saw in my life![†9] It is quite astonishing.

After trying you with the greatest severity in every kind of aspect and position, I have suspended you at last in the hall; where a beaming little gas lamp something higher than yourself shines on you after dark, and makes you radiant. If I were to tell you how much good it does me, to see you every time I go up or down stairs, you would never believe me. But, for such a welcome and delightful reminder of one whom I hold in the highest esteem and gratitude, pray accept my warmest thanks.

We are making up the Guild accounts, and I hope they will come out very well. We have not yet succeeded in selling the Theatre and scenery, though we are endeavouring to captivate a man from Australia, who looks at them with a longing eye, but seems afraid of the price.[†1]

Of course you have been reading Uncle Tom's Cabin? I don't know whether Uncle Tom is a little too celestial, or whether I am a little in the opposite direction; but, 'bating such things, it is an uncommonly fine book, and full of the highest power.[†2]

As I am writing with a cold, too ridiculous to be more particularly referred to in its weeping and gasping intensity, I had best leave off while I have not yet wept over the present sheet of paper. My whole room looks swollen and giddy, and it seems to be incessantly raining between me and the books.

My Dear Duke of Devonshire | Ever Yours faithfully and obliged
CHARLES DICKENS

The | Duke of Devonshire

To CHARLES MANBY, 29 OCTOBER 1852*

MS Dickens House.

Tavistock House, Tavistock Square | Friday Twenty Ninth October | 1852

My Dear Mr. Manby

Stanfield and I are coming to the Adelphi next Tuesday.[†3] If you should have a box to spare that night, we shall be glad to occupy it.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Manby Esquire.

To THE MARQUESS OF DOURO,[†1] 30 OCTOBER 1852

Mention in next.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 30 OCTOBER 1852

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Thirtieth October 1852

My Dear Miss Coutts.

On coming home from the Household Words office last night, I found Lord Douro's note, asking me to call there yesterday or to day. I was about writing this morning to say I was quite laid up with my cold and would come on Monday, when I received your letter relative to your being there on Monday.[†2] I have written Ld. Douro to that effect, and said I will call between 12 and 1 on Monday, while you are there.

I went out yesterday to Fulham, and occasioned the most frightful consternation in Auckland Cottage by unexpectedly appearing in the rain. A large young family fled from the back parlor, on a visitor being announced, and took refuge (with their mother) at the top of the stairs—where they stood, as I saw from the passage, like so many Ostriches—with their heads hidden, but their legs plainly visible; and I think I never saw so many legs listening at once, as while I enquired for Mrs. Brayne.[†3] Being shewn into the vacated back parlor, I was there presently confronted by the wrong Mrs. Brayne, a muscular lady with very large bones, to whom I timidly intimated my profound conviction that she was not the ancient Artist you had described to me. She replied, "no doubt it was her mother in law I wanted", and withdrawing, sent in a little bright-eyed old lady in a grey and mulbery-colored knitted polka, whom I perceived to be the right Mrs. Brayne. She shewed me the copy. I apprehend there is not much choice of a frame, for it must be fitted in a case to shut up, or it would fade in no time; being a kind of work that will not bear much exposure to the light. I therefore advised her to make the gilt flat frame within the case something wider than usual, and pointed out to her another slight alteration in the usual measurement of such things, which increases the effect. The whole to be fitted in a morocco case. This, I settled she might proceed to do, after Tuesday, if in the meantime she heard nothing to the contrary.[†4]

I send you Mr. A. Beckett's last letter in reference to the girl of whom I spoke to you. There is something in it (that about her telling the children stories) that I connect so strangely with her bruised face when I saw her, that I fancy it will interest you too. She was here with her father (a very decent man indeed, and very sorrowful about her) this morning, and I will give Mrs. Morson all needful instructions today.

This brings me to another point about the Home, which I have had in my mind a good deal since I was last there. Talking with Mrs. Morson about Susan Matcham's illness, I found (what I have found before) that they are strangely indifferent to one another in sickness, and hardly seem to have the least natural tenderness for the sufferer. Now in their own lives outside, they are so very different in this respect—being generally extremely compassionate—that I take this to be somehow or other, our fault in a great measure; and considering the subject further, I am inclined to think that this indifference springs out of our doing too much. What I would propose to try, is, that while Mrs. Morson neglects nothing of her kindness and vigilance to a sick young woman, the very circumstance of there being somebody sick in the house, shall be made to change (as it would in any ordinary house) the regular domestic occupations, and that she shall make Nurses of the whole party, one after another, and let them in regular turns sit by the bedside and tend the girl who is ill. I should greatly wish to try this plan, for there is something shocking (and in any other point of view that I can think of, unaccountable) in their being so remiss in one of the most natural feelings of humanity. I shall be going out to the Home on Monday after I see you, and will explain all this to Mrs. Morson in its full force, if you approve. It is very desirable to get this right if we by any means can; not only because it is so wrong in itself, but because so many occurrences are constantly taking place among girls of Anne Johnson's stamp for instance, shewing tenderness in sickness and death which is an uncomfortable thing to set against their being quite hard-hearted to one another in the Home.

I saw the writer of the letters I sent you,[†4] yesterday evening—a lady in manners—well educated and sensible, and evidently trying very hard. I found that five and twenty pounds would pay her rent, and enable her to compound for some of her more pressing little debts; but I could not satisfy myself that a smaller sum was likely to be of real service to her. So I gave her £25. We settled how it was to be applied, and she is to write me a letter setting forth in detail what she has done with it, presently.

Lastly, and to conclude this long epistle, I cannot tell you how much I thank you for writing to Charley. It is what I could have most wished, and what I know will be of service and encouragement to him above all things. In sending him the letter, I have consulted his inclinations about the time of leaving Eton, and have told him to write to me on that head.

Mr. Trimmer's prospectus I enclose.

With kind regards to Mr. and Mrs. Brown (and three cheers for Boulogne) ever

Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

I think of doing something about the Thames Police,[†5] and had some of the Toll takers at Waterloo Bridge at the office yesterday to put some questions to them about their experience of suicide.[†1] Their answers were rather curious. Almost all the attempts are by women—a man, quite a rarity.

To PROFESSOR RICHARD OWEN, [?19-30 OCTOBER 1852]

Mention in the Rev. Richard S. Owen, Life of Richard Owen, 1894, I, 391. Date: sent by Owen to his sister Catherine on 30 Oct 52 ("I enclose an autograph of Charles Dickens").

Referring to a paper written by Professor Owen on Poisonous Serpents for Household Words.

To HENRY MORLEY, 31 OCTOBER 1852*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Tavistock House | Sunday Thirty First October 1852

My Dear Sir

I feel exceedingly obliged to you for your earnest note, which is most acceptable and gratifying to me, and for your labor of love. I am prepared by the extracts I have seen from its pages, to read it with the warmest sympathy and interest.[†2]

It is very disagreeable to me to connect a subject which has nothing but pleasure in it, with a faint shadow of dissatisfaction. But as I was about to write to you, and as it would be ridiculous to succeed this note by another, tomorrow or next day, I must do that violence to my inclination.

I am afraid you do not give sufficient consideration to some of your papers in Household Words. They are not to be done without trouble; and the main trouble necessary to them, is, the devising of some pleasant means of telling what is to be told. The indispensable necessity of varying the manner of narration as much as possible, and investing it with some little grace or other, would be very evident to you if you knew as well as I do how severe the struggle is, to get the publication down into the masses of readers, and to displace the prodigious heaps of nonsense and worse than nonsense, which suffocate their better sense. I know of such "perilous stuff"[†3] at present, produced at a cost about equal to the intrinsic worth of its literature, and circulating six times the amount of Household Words.[†4]

My confidence in the ability of such people to receive and relish a good thing, is so far from being in the least shaken by this knowledge that I only feel the more strongly that the good thing must be done at its best. And what I particularly want to impress upon you is, that it is not enough to see a thing and go home and describe it, but that the necessity is, for ever upon us of patiently considering how to describe it, so as to give it some fanciful attraction or some new air. I have kept back the gold-refining paper,[†1] because it is exactly like a hundred other papers we might shake into a drawer together; merely shewing the reader what is to be seen as the Peep-Show man does. And encumbered with that monotony, I am perfectly clear that the information contained in Household Words would fall short of its mark for ever.

I was particularly pleased with the Pic Nics in the Prairies, which I thought very spiritedly and admirably done.[†2] But frequently it appears to me that you do not render justice to your many high powers, by thinking too slightingly of what you have in hand, instead of doing it, for the time being, as if there were nothing else to be done in the world—the only likely way I know of, of doing anything.

My Dear Sir | Very faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Henry Morley Esquire

November

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 1 NOVEMBER 1852

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Coutts | White Hart Hotel | Reigate | Surrey.

Tavistock House | Monday Evening | First November 1852

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I waited for you at Lord Douro's today, until a quarter before two. I pointed out those peculiarities[†3] we spoke of, to Mr. Adams,[†4] and he made some alterations in that part of the face—I think (and I hope you will think) greatly to its improvement. I also found, according to my eye, the mouth much too tight, and a general want thereabout of a suggestion of flexibility.[†5] This the sculptor also worked upon.

It seems to me that the best and most hopeful thing that can possibly be done now, is to let the sculptor alone. The bust is far more like than any I have seen, and strikes me as possessing very great merit.[†1]

I went to the Home afterwards, and made the enclosed memorandum, on a calculation, about the Marks.[†2] I told Mrs. Morson that we would not announce the value, until after the departure of the next party. I thought it would prevent—or might prevent—any little inconsistencies. There had been some indications of a small assault by Stallion[†3] upon the brownish-yellow girl, Youngman.[†4] Both had behaved with perfect submission, except in the heat of a moment—both were in fault—and I had both in, and pointed out to them how wrong they were and told them to be friends.

On then coming home to dinner, I found the enclosed from Charley. He hits exactly my apprehension—that retaining him there[†5] in that unsettled state, might be a mere loss of time. Shall I write to his "Dame"[†6] and Tutor,[†7] saying it is probable he will leave at Christmas?[†8] I shall wait for your answer before doing so.

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 2 NOVEMBER 1852*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Second November 1852

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I knew nothing of the accident until I received your note just now, or I should have put myself into another train and come down as soon as I could have got down to assure myself that you were safe. I am much obliged to you for writing, otherwise I should have been thrown into all manner of uneasiness and anxiety on taking up the paper this morning.[†1]

Is it not an extraordinary instance of Railway negligence, that Mr. Peto the Railway Contractor[†2] wrote a letter to the Times (as long ago as last spring, if I remember right), wherein he said that unless the People in this company's employment changed their system this identical accident MUST[†3] happen at this very place?[†4] I recollect his letter the more perfectly, because I myself standing at the Canterbury Station one day, saw a similar accident saved by a hair's breadth; two trains being endangered by the very same proceeding.

I believe there are no people on the face of the earth but the English, who would have walked up the platform with their carpet bags and parcels as you describe. It is most extraordinary. Our soldiers or sailors would walk up to a battery in exactly the same way.

Ever Dear Miss Coutts Most Faithfully Yours
CD.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 2 NOVEMBER 1852

Mention in Dobell catalogue No. 273. MS (3rd person) 1 p.; dated 2 Nov 52.

To MRS BROWN, 3 NOVEMBER 1852*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Third November 1852

My Dear Mrs. Brown.

I cannot receive your kindest of notes without thanking you for it most heartily, and assuring you that it is really precious to me as a mark of your earnest interest and friendship. Mrs. Dickens is anxious that I should say as much—or more, if I could—from her.

I do not doubt that Charley has chosen well, and I know that he has sincerely tried to do right. I trust in God that he will be a fine fellow and a good man; and that I may have the happiness of living to see him fulfil the hopes of his best friends.

Mr. Forster is out again, but I doubt his being in a very healthy condition. He has gone down for a day or two to see Macready, who bears himself manfully, as he always does, but has turned old and grey. I fear his eldest boy will soon follow the mother, and I am afraid Macready does not see how ill he is.[†1]

The children are all blooming, and in high spirits. Mr. Stone was with us for a week or two at Dover, and painted a very pretty little picture of Mary and Katey,[†2] which I hope I shall shew you soon.

They send their loves, and so do Mrs. Dickens and Georgina. So do I with all my heart.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Brown.

To THE REV. W. G. COOKESLEY, [?3 NOVEMBER 1852]

Mention in To Miss Coutts, 3 Nov.

To WILLIAM EVANS, [?3 NOVEMBER 1852]

Mention in next.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 3 NOVEMBER 1852

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Third November 1852

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I have written to Mr. Cookesley and Mr. Evans, telling them that Charley will leave at Christmas for the purpose of going to Germany.[†3]

I shall be very much obliged to you if you will enquire about the German Master. I think the French will be comparatively easy, for his ear was well used to it when he was young, and he could speak quite fluently when we were in Switzerland and in Paris. Mamey and Katey have a french Governess[†4] every day, and we could easily make a conversation class of the whole four (Charley being the fourth) in the holiday time.

I am quite vexed about the State Funeral.[†5] I think it is altogether wrong as regards the memory of the Duke, and at least equally wrong in the Court estimate it implies of the People. The nonsense of the Herald's College and Lord Chamberlain absurdities,[†6] keep his own soldiers away; the only real links of sympathy the public could have found in it are carefully filed off; and a vulgar holiday, with a good deal of business for the thieves and the public houses, will be the chief result.

You will see an account of an Irish Workhouse in the current No. of Household Words,[†1] which seems to me rather a good commentary on the rampant Irish nonsense (and worse) about the Saxon.[†2]

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

If you can spare me your box at Drury Lane once or twice during Jullien's Concert season,[†3] I shall be very glad to use it.

To CHARLES MANBY, 3 NOVEMBER 1852

Extract in N, II, 426; MS 1 ½ pp.; dated Tavistock House, 3 Nov 52.

I know a bassoon by sight pretty well and have some reason to, having had a part of my childhood haunted by musical instruments of every description.[†4] "Brass bound"[†5] applies to the man, not the instrument.[†6]

To HENRY MORLEY, 3 NOVEMBER 1852*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Tavistock House | Third November 1852

My Dear Sir

Your frank letter is exactly what I expected from you, and is very agreeable to me.

Let me by all means confirm you in your desire to avoid the alteration of papers by other hands, in which you have no interest. I quite agree with you that it is a great waste of time—a very irksome task—and altogether a most unprofitable proceeding. I would at all times infinitely rather that you originated a subject than that you so employed yourself for Household Words.[†1] Nor will it ever give me the least surprise or annoyance if, finding that one of these second hand topics is not to your taste, you plainly say so.[†2] Henry Morley Esquire

To W. H. WILLS, 3 NOVEMBER 1852

MS Huntington Library.

Tavistock House | Third November 1852

My Dear Wills

Forster wants the book Ecclesia, in which the ballad is, sent to his chambers for him.[†3] Of course he makes out that there is a positive merit in having made the blunder, and that if it really had been the old ballad, his intention would have rather failed upon the whole. I have taken the liberty of assaulting this conclusion between the eyes, and knocking it over heads and heels.

I send with this, the sheet of Bleak House paper.[†4]

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To THE VERY REV. H. H. MILMAN,[†5] 4 NOVEMBER 1852*

MS Robert H. Taylor Collection, Princeton.

Tavistock House, Tavistock Square | Thursday Fourth November 1852

My Dear Sir

I feel extremely obliged to you for your kind note, and receive your offer as a compliment rendered doubly welcome and acceptable by coming from you. Not the less so, because, wishing to observe the ceremonial of the Duke's public funeral in another phase, I have made engagements which do not leave me at liberty to avail myself of your esteemed remembrance.[†1]

Allow me to thank you with great cordiality, and to remain with much respect and regard

Very faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

The Reverend | The Dean of St. Pauls.

To W. C. BENNETT, 5 NOVEMBER 1852*

MS Robert H. Taylor Collection, Princeton.

Tavistock House, Tavistock Square | Friday Fifth November 1852

My Dear Sir

I am happy to accept your verses, and will so time their publication in Household Words as to bring it as close as possible to the day of the funeral.[†2]

I have ordered them to be printed, and will send you a proof, with a word or two marked here and there where I think you might possibly strengthen the line.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. Bennett Esquire.

To RICHARD THOMSON,[†3] 5 NOVEMBER 1852*

MS Bishopsgate Foundation.

Tavistock House | Fifth November 1852

Dear Sir

I have read The London Tavern past and present,[†4] and think your antiquarian notices of it very agreeable and pleasant.[†5] If our friend Mr. Bathe[†6] gets such a business as I wish him (and as he deserves) he will presently pull down all the houses on his side of the way between Leadenhall Street and the old South-sea House,[†1] and make that trifling addition to his present establishment.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

James Thomson[†2] Esquire.

To W. H. WILLS, [?4-5 NOVEMBER 1852]

MS Huntington Library. Date: He was "fresh from reading" Mrs Gaskell's ghost story on 6 Nov (To Mrs Gaskell, that day); he must have received it on the 4th or the 5th.

My Dear Wills.

I don't think there's enough in Thomas's story.[†3]

Miss Craik's (an improvement)[†4] will do perfectly for one of our ordinary Nos. We won't put it in the Xmas No. if we can get a better.[†5] Her imitation of me is too glaring—I never saw anything so curious. She takes the very words in which Esther speaks, without seeming to know it.[†6]

I have not a shadow of a doubt about Miss Martineau's story.[†7] It is certain to tell. I think it very affecting—admirably done—a fine plain purpose in it—quite a singular novelty.[†8] For the last story in the Xmas No. it will be great.[†9] I couldn't wish for a better.

Mrs. Gaskell's ghost story, I have got this morning—have not yet read.[†10] It is long.[†11]

To W. H. WILLS, 5 NOVEMBER 1852

MS Huntington Library.

Tavistock House | Friday Fifth November 1852

My Dear Wills.

Do you think it would be worth while to publish the enclosed,[†1] with an alteration here and there, in next Wednesday Week's Number—so as just to catch the Funeral? I hate the thing myself, but it might go down with a good many.[†2] I can't quite decide. What do you think? Let me know, and let me have the MS back, in the course of this morning. The sooner, the better.

Further, let me see the proof of the No.[†3] we did last night, before it goes to press. I have a misgiving that I altered a word in Morley's paper,[†4] which I intended to realter, but did not.

In the matter of the Rappings, I think a good name for the paper would be The Ghost of the Cock Lane Ghost.[†5] If Morley looks to that precious business, in the Annual Register, he will find (if I understand your account) that the two spirits are greatly alike.[†6] I was thinking that would be a good title. But it is a great thing in such a case to shew that the imposition is an old and exploded one.[†7]

Spirits far above proof

Ever Faithfully W. H. Wills Esquire.CD.

To MRS GASKELL, 6 NOVEMBER 1852

MS John Rylands Library.

Tavistock House | Sixth November 1852

My Dear Mrs. Gaskell.

A very fine ghost-story indeed. Nobly told, and wonderfully managed.[†8]

But it strikes me (fresh from the reading) that it would be very new and very awful, if, when the narrator goes down into the parlor on that last occasion, she took up her sleeping charge in her arms, and carried it down—if the child awoke when the noises began—if they all heard the noises—but only the child saw the spectral figures, except that they all see the phantom child.*[†1] I think the real child crying out what it is she sees, and describing the phantom child as shewing it all to her as it were, and Miss Furnivall then falling palsy-stricken, would be a very terrific end.[†2]

What do you say to this? If you don't quite and entirely approve, it shall stand as it does. If you do quite and entirely approve, shall I make the necessary alteration in the last two MS pages, or will you?

It is a grand story, and the very thing for the Xmas No.

In great haste Ever Faithfully Yours

CD.

(* The real child in a kind of wildness to get at it all the time, and held by the nurse.)

To W. H. WILLS, 6 NOVEMBER 1852*

MS Huntington Library.

Tavistock House | Sixth November 1852 | Saturday

My Dear Wills.

Forster has invited himself to dinner—for the more effectual drawing-out of the superintendant,[†3] and for his greater ease and happiness.

King of Siam—related to the elephant, I suppose—a great fellow.[†4]

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To MRS GASKELL, 9 NOVEMBER 1852

MS John Rylands Library.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Ninth November 1852

My Dear Mrs. Gaskell.

I see your meaning; but I think a striking change may yet be made—generally to the effect of my first suggestion—and all you want, preserved nevertheless. I have considered it well, and still feel (subject of course to your agreeing with me) that the turn is greatly weakened by their all seeing those figures.

What I would propose to do, is, to leave the story just as it stands for a week or ten days—then to come to it afresh—alter it myself—and send you the proof of the whole, and the manuscript (your original manuscript) of the altered part; so that if you should prefer the original to the alteration, or any part of the original to any part of the alteration, you may slash accordingly.

Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Arnold.[†1] P.S. I make this proposal, as knowing what I mean, better than I can describe it.

To THE DUKE OF DEVONSHIRE, 11 NOVEMBER 1852

MS Devonshire Collections, Chatsworth.

Tavistock House | Thursday Evening | Eleventh November 1852

My Dear Duke of Devonshire.

As I never write to you without having to acknowledge some new kindness on your part, and as I cannot bear the idea of voluntarily assisting you to be weary of me, I will give an air of novelty to this note by not thanking you at all.

I am in the happy condition of accepting your offer, for myself and mine, with the greatest pleasure. (The Dean and Chapter did me the kindness to invite me to the Funeral, but I could not contemplate the waiting in St Pauls, with any sort of philosophy, and pleaded other engagements.)

I send on the other side—emboldened only by your free license—a fearful list of twelve! It is reducible to any smaller number. Those who are not of my name, are of the Guild as you will see.

My Dear Duke of Devonshire | Ever Yours faithfully and obliged

CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Dickens
Mrs. C.D.
Her Sister.
Mary Dickens
Kate Dickens.
Charles Dickens Junr.
Augustus Egg
Mr. Wills
Mrs. Wills
Frank Stone
Mrs. Stone
Miss Stone.[†2]

(On summing up the above, I feel—after Sterne—as if the Recording Angel—a fallen one—ought to drop a tear on the entry and blot it out for ever.[†3] It seems so horribly long.)

To THE REV. DR HAWTREY, [?12] NOVEMBER 1852

Text from N, II, 429. Date: misdated by CD; Friday was the 12th in 1852.

Tavistock House, Tavistock Square | Friday Thirteenth November 1852

My Dear Dr. Hawtrey.

If it is not against the rules, may I ask for leave for my boy to see the Funeral Procession on Thursday, as I have an opportunity of putting him into an excellent place for the purpose?

If you will allow him to come home on Wednesday Evening, he shall be duly returned on Thursday Evening.

I was concerned to hear the other day that you had met with some inconvenience from an accident. I sincerely hope you are quite recovered.

Very faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To T. F. DILLON CROKER,[†1] 13 NOVEMBER 1852

MS University of Michigan.

Tavistock House, Tavistock Square | Thirteenth November 1852

Dear Sir

I am much obliged to you for your little book.[†2] Complying with your request with pleasure, I send you the enclosed note.[†3]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

T. F. Dillon Croker Esquire. I beg my kind regards to your father.

To W. H. WILLS, [?13 NOVEMBER 1852]

MS Huntington Library. Date: 13 Nov seems the last date on which CD could have gone through HW, No. 139, published 17 Nov.

My Dear Wills

You were to have sent me the Rapping advertisement,[†4] and have forgotten it. Therefore you must go over the enclosed slip carefully, before you return it to the Printers, and fill in such blanks as I have indicated in my alterations on the margin. I will go through the No.[†1] tonight at 7, either here or at the office as you prefer—or if you will dine here at ½ past 5, better still, and we will do it after dinner. Let me know.

Faithfully Ever
CD

(Over)
I have just got the enclosed from Lord Normanby's brother at Florence.[†2] There is not much in it, but the subject—the Bible prisoners, man and wife—attracts so much attention just now, that I think it worth a push to get it into this Number.[†3] [†a]/Will you send the enclosed slip of the Deeds of Wellington to Mr. Bennett 65 Cheapside, saying that I have not time to write to suggest any slight alterations, but will he correct and return it, and if he should observe a line halting anywhere, make it bolder if he can./[†a]

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 19 NOVEMBER 1852

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Royal York Hotel | Brighton.

Tavistock House | Friday Ninteenth November | 1852

My Dear Miss Coutts.

First, about the Home.

Shall I write to the woman at Boxley near Maidstone whose letter you enclosed to me in your last?[†4]

It has been necessary to discharge Stallion who turned out to be[†1] a ferocious temper, and probably would have done some serious damage to somebody if she had remained. Little Willis from the Ragged School having tried her hand at the Key and Bible business[†2] (in bed and in the dark, knowing it to be wrong) I told Mrs. Morson that unless she behaved very well, she should have no Marks for a month. After a day or two I went out, and she requested to see me, and said—I wish you could have seen her come in diplomatically to make terms with the establishment—"O! Without her marks, she found she couldn't do her work agreeable to herself"—"If you do it agreeable to us", said I, "that'll do".—"O! But" she said "I could wish not to have my marks took away".—"Exactly so," said I. "That's quite right; and the only way to get them back again, is to do as well as you can".—"Ho! But if she didn't have 'em giv' up at once, she could wish fur to go".—"Very well", said I. "You shall go tomorrow morning."

Both these dismissals had a very good effect in the house, particularly on the new girl from Mr. A Beckett: who was a little dubious, and to whom I speak very seriously, telling her that if she once got outside the gate we knew, better than she might think for now, what she would give, if she could, to come back. Mr. Tracey, having sent Stallion, discharged her. She had no clothes of her own, and, it being a very wet day, they gave her an old but decent bonnet and shawl—which she immediately threw away in the Lane. To provide for such a case again, I told Mrs. Morson to buy at a slopseller's, the commonest and ugliest and coarsest (but still clean and whole) woman's dress that she could possibly purchase, and invariably to keep such a thing by her. It occurs to me that they will be very beneficially astonished when we have occasion to bring it out.

All the rest doing very well, and no complaints.

I cannot by any means find out the truth about Kelly's soup-kitchen, because it is not in action. But it was certainly found that the Soup Kitchen and Hospice in Leicester Square[†3] had an effect directly the reverse of that which he predicts, and assembled the sturdy vagrants from all quarters. His convictions on the subject are so extraordinary, that I would strongly advise you to do nothing yet, but to let me keep my eye a little while upon the place. With that view, I retain the letter.[†4] I can hardly compass the possibility of its having the anticipated result, but we will fairly see.

In the matter of Household Narrative, I think, on looking back to the previous numbers, that there is nothing to be done, as to the Duke's Memory, beyond a general account of the Funeral Ceremony—unless there be anything that you would like to add about his character. If you will send me anything, of course I will take care to append it in the right place.[†1] I came home yesterday in time to write an article for the next No. of Household Words[†2]—which I had kept open for the purpose, and which is now at press, of necessity—objecting to the whole State Funeral,[†3] and shewing why.[†4] I will send you a proof—tomorrow night, I hope—thinking you may like to read it.

The Military part of the show, was very fine.[†5] If it had been an ordinary Funeral of a great commander, it might have been impressive. I suppose for forms of ugliness, horrible combinations of color, hideous motion, and general failure, there never was such a work achieved as the Car.[†6]

It will be a great satisfaction to us, to know that Mrs. Brown keeps well. I have been so busy, leading up to the great turning idea[†7] of the Bleak House story, that I have lived this last week or ten days in a perpetual scald and boil.

With kindest regards

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To THE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, 19 NOVEMBER 1852*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Friday Nineteenth November | 1852.

My Dear Lord Shaftesbury.

I send you the enclosed documents from the lady you are so kind as to nominate.[†1] She conceives them to be necessary to the purpose.

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The | Earl of Shaftesbury.

To PROFESSOR RICHARD OWEN, 20 NOVEMBER 1852

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Saturday Twentieth November | 1852.

My Dear Owen.

What do you think, as a general subject for a series of papers, of some articles describing the peculiarities and points of interest of many of the animals in the Zoological Gardens, under some such title as

Private lives of public friends

I think they would be very good in such hands as yours.[†2]

Faithfully Yours ever

CHARLES DICKENS

Professor Owen.

To HENRY AUSTIN, 21 NOVEMBER 1852*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Sunday Twenty First November 1852

My Dear Henry.

The enclosed occurred to me as a useful thing to leave on record about the State Funeral.[†3] I think it may have a good effect hereafter.

I don't want it returned. As it will not be published 'till Wednesday, don't, until then, shew it out of your office. But Chadwick, Southwood Smith, and Lord Shaftesbury can see it (if you would like to shew it to them) as soon as you like.[†4]

Ever affecy.

CD.

To JOHN T. LAWRENCE, 22 NOVEMBER 1852†

MS Yale University Library.

Tavistock House, London | Twenty Second November 1852

My Dear Sir

[†a]I enclose the five little books for my five friends.[†1] If you will kindly undertake to distribute them, you will give them a new worth.[†a]

Mrs. Dickens and her sister unite with me in kindest regards and remembrances to your sisters and all your family. And I am always My Dear Sir with much regard

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

John T Lawrence Esquire.

To THE HON. MRS RICHARD WATSON, 22 NOVEMBER 1852

MS Huntington Library.

Athenaeum | Monday Twenty Second November | 1852.

My Dear Mrs. Watson.

Having just now finished my work for the time being, I turn in here in the course of a rainy walk, to have the gratification of writing a few lines to you. If my occupations with this same right hand were less numerous, you would soon be tired of me: I should write to you so often.

You asked Catherine a question about Bleak House. It's[†2] circulation is half as large again as Copperfield![†3] I have just now come to the point I have been patiently working up to in the writing, and I hope it will suggest to you a pretty and affecting thing.[†4] In the matter of Uncle Tom's Cabin, I partly though not entirely agree with Mr. James.[†5] No doubt a much lower Art will serve for the handling of such a subject in Fiction, than for a launch on the sea of imagination without such a powerful Bark; but there are many points in the book, very admirably done. There is a certain St. Clair,[†6] a New Orleans gentleman, who seems to me to be conceived with great power and originality. If he had not "a Grecian outline of face"[†7]—which I began to be a little tired of in my earliest infancy—I should think him unexceptionable. He has a sister too, a maiden lady from New England,[†8] in whose person the besetting weaknesses and prejudices of the abolitionists themselves, on the subject of the Blacks, are set forth in the liveliest and truest colors and with the greatest boldness.[†1] She (I mean Mrs. Stowe) is a leetle unscrupulous in the appropriation way. I seem to see a writer with whom I am very intimate (and whom nobody can possibly admire more than myself) peeping very often through the thinness of the paper.[†2] Further I descry the Ghost of Mary Barton, and the very palpable mirage of a scene in the Children of the Mist;[†3] but in spite of this, I consider the book a fine one with a great and gallant purpose in it, and worthy of its reputation.[†4]

I have written for Household Words of this next publication-day, an article on the State Funeral, shewing why I consider it altogether a mistake to be temperately but firmly objected to; which I daresay will make a good many of the admirers of such things highly indignant. It may have right and reason on its side however, none the less.

Charley and I had a great talk at Dover about his going into the Army, when I thought it right to set before him fairly and faithfully the objections to that career, no less than its advantages. The result was, that he asked in a very manly way, for time to consider. So I appointed to go down to Eton on a certain day at the beginning of this month, and resume the subject. We resumed it accordingly at the White Hart at Windsor, and he came to the conclusion that he would rather be a merchant, and try to establish some good house of business, where he might find a path perhaps for his younger brothers, and stay at home, and make himself the head of that long, small procession. I was very much pleased with him indeed; he shewed a fine sense and a fine feeling in the whole matter. We have arranged therefore, that he shall leave Eton at Christmas, and go to Germany after the holidays to become well acquainted with that language—now most essential in such a walk of life as he will probably tread.

And I think this is the whole of my news. We are always talking of you at home. Mary Boyle dined with us a little while ago, and Spencer Lyttelton came shortly before her, one Sunday. He seemed to be all wrong with Lord Spencer,[†5] and his wasted existence altogether, filled me with a dismal sort of uneasiness.[†6] You look out, I imagine, on a waste of water.[†7] When I came from Windsor, I thought I must have made a mistake and got into a boat (in the dark) instead of a Railway Carriage. Catherine and Georgina send their kindest loves. I am ever with the best and truest wishes of my heart, My Dear Mrs. Watson, Your most affectionate friend

CHARLES DICKENS

To THE REV. JAMES WHITE, 22 NOVEMBER 1852

Text from MDGH, I, 291.

Office of Household Words, Monday, Nov. 22nd, 1852.

My dear White,

First and foremost, there is no doubt whatever of your story[†1] suiting "Household Words." It is a very good story indeed, and would be serviceable at any time. I am not quite so clear of its suiting the Christmas number, for this reason. You know what the spirit of the Christmas number is. When I suggested the stories being about a highwayman, I got hold of that idea as being an adventurous one, including various kinds of wrong, expressing a state of society no longer existing among us, and pleasant to hear (therefore) from an old man. Now, your highwayman not being a real highwayman after all, the kind of suitable Christmas interest I meant to awaken in the story is not in it.[†2] Do you understand? For an ordinary number it is quite unobjectionable. If you should think of any other idea, narratable by an old man, which you think would strike the chord of the season; and if you should find time to work it out during the short remainder of this month, I should be greatly pleased to have it.[†3] In any case, this story goes straightway into type.

[†a]What tremendous weather it is! Our best loves to all at home. (I have just bought thirty bottles of the most stunning port on earth, which Ellis of the Star and Garter, Richmond, wrote to me of.)[†a]

I think you will find some good going[†4] in the next "Bleak House."[†5] I write shortly, having been working my head off.

Ever affectionately yours.

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To JOHN LEECH, 23 NOVEMBER 1852

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: John Leech Esquire.

Tavistock House | Twenty Third November 1852

My Dear Leech.

If you should be disposed for a "Hout" next week—a day at Brighton or anywhere else where we could find change, a good walk, and fresh air—I am the boy for such an admirable purpose! And if, in such a case, you will let me know what days next week are likely to be your best for the purpose, I will forthwith "propoge" an excursion and fix all needful time and place.

Ever Faithfully Yours

CD.

John Leech Esquire.

To JOHN LEECH, 24 NOVEMBER 1852

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: John Leech Esquire | 31 Notting Hill Terrace.

Tavistock House | Wednesday Evening | Twenty Fourth November 1852

My Dear Leech.

I have no doubt whatever that a day out on Thursday in next week, will serve the almanack beyond measure. And, joking apart, if you can think of any place more likely to produce a Wrinkle[†1] than Brighton—though its the Man you will be out[†2] Sir, in which the suggestion lies as I take it—we will go to such place in preference. On Sunday at two I shall expect you. I will then be armed with a Bradshaw, and we will concert our diabolical purpose in detail.

We must not allow this extra mile[†3] to be any barrier to our old meetings. Life is not long enough to admit of any more Turnpike Gates in it than are there of necessity.

Master Beard will dine with us on Sunday,—and I trust in the Lord will not mention the Hounds.[†4]

Ever Faithfully Yours

CD.

To MARK LEMON, 26 NOVEMBER 1852*

MS Douglas Library, Queen's University, Ontario.

Friday Twenty Sixth November 1852

My Dear Mark

In case you should have the will and power to fly to human refuge from this weather, I write to say that I am at the Athenaeum the whole afternoon, and open to any kind of engagement, festive or dramatic or both.

Ever affecy.

CD

I send a Duplicate of this to Gordon Street.[†5]

To MARK LEMON, 26 NOVEMBER 1852

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

Friday Twenty Sixth November 1852

My Dear Mark

In case you should have the will and power to fly to human refuge from this weather, I write to say that I am at the Athenaeum the whole afternoon, and open to any kind of engagement, festive or dramatic or both.

Ever affecy.

CD

I send a duplicate of this to Whitefriars.

To MRS DONOVAN,[†1] [?LATE NOVEMBER 1852]

Mention in To Miss Coutts, 3 Dec. Date: probably written during the week before the letter to Miss Coutts.

To JOSEPH ELLIS, 30 NOVEMBER 1852

MS Bedford Hotel, Brighton. Address: Mr. Joseph Ellis | The Bedford Hotel | Brighton.

Tavistock House, Tavistock Square | Tuesday Evening Thirtieth November | 1852.

Dear Mr. Ellis.

I shall be obliged to you if you will order one of your excellent little dinners to be prepared for Mr. Leech and me, on Thursday afternoon next, at half past four. We contemplate a walk on the Downs that morning, and shall arrive at the Bedford in due time.

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 30 NOVEMBER 1852

MS (fragment) Dickens House. "Tavistock House | Tuesday Evening | Thirtieth November 1852."

To [?F.K.] HUNT,[†2] NOVEMBER 1852

Extract in Autograph Prices Current, I, 50 (1914-16); MS 1 p.; dated Tavistock House, Nov 52.

In reference to a letter he has received that contains a mention of Mr. Hunt.

December

To MRS GASKELL, 1 DECEMBER 1852

MS John Rylands Library.

Office of Household Words | Wednesday First December 1852

My Dear Mrs. Gaskell.

I send you the proof of the Old Nurse's Story, with my proposed alteration. I shall be glad to know whether you approve of it. To assist you in your decision, I send you, also enclosed, the last slip but one, where the alteration begins. Of course if you wish to enlarge, explain, or re-alter, you will do it. Do not keep the proof longer than you can help, as I want to get to press with all despatch.

I hope I address this letter correctly. I am far from sure. In haste,

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Cranford???[†1]

To THE GENERAL COMMITTEE OF THE ROYAL LITERARY FUND, 1 DECEMBER 1852

MS Royal Literary Fund.

Tavistock House | First December 1852

I beg to certify to the Committee of the Literary Fund, that I know Miss Maria Goodluck as the authoress of a little book of poems for children (dedicated to myself),[†2] which I consider to possess a good deal of merit, though its pretensions are very small and modest. I can also strongly recommend her to the committee's favorable notice, as struggling hard to maintain a sick and afflicted sister, and as really striving to avoid such applications as that which she is now compelled to prefer to their excellent Institution.[†3]

CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 3 DECEMBER 1852

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Friday Evening Third December | 1852.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I have held a Council today with Mr. Austin and our rapid light-comedy friend the Doctor,[†4] on the subject of the Westminster Improvements.

The matter is now in this state. The survey and plans are completed, and the detailed estimates made out, for "the block" of houses lying between Willow Street and Cobourg Row, which stand in great need of efficient drainage, connected with good water supply. This district includes rather less than a third (at a rough calculation) of the whole district; and the estimates for the necessary improvements make the total cost (for 150 houses) £420.

These houses belong to about eighteen proprietors, of whom the greater part are reasonably well off; and the largest of these proprietors, one Mr. Bennet,[†1] appears to be a decent man. Now on going into the question carefully, it appears to us unreasonable that you should pay (if it can possibly be avoided) for the permanent improvement of their property. Our course we therefore propose to take thus:—Mr. Austin will see this Mr. Bennet, and the next large proprietor or two, and point out to them that for the sake of their poor tenants you have gone to the trouble and expence of having these surveys and estimates made, and of shewing them for how little money they can greatly improve the dwellings. If he find them reasonable, we then propose to put it to them that with such help and encouragement they ought to pay for the alterations on their property, and to use their influence with the smaller proprietors to do the like. (If they seem reasonable, we think it may be well to hold a little private meeting of them all, and talk to them). As it is a regular ingredient in that helpless state of ignorance, to suppose that sanitary improvement is very dear instead of very cheap; and as it is most likely that they will therefore plead a doubt of the estimates; we then propose to say "you may set your minds at rest on that score, for we guarantee to you, on the part of Miss Coutts, that they shall not be exceeded—in other words that if there be any excess, she will pay it." If it should turn out to be absolutely necessary to the good work that you should do more in the first instance, we can consult with you further on that point. But it seems so right that this should be our first attitude, and I feel so confident of your thinking so, that I have set this scheme in motion.

Our light-comedy friend Young Rapid, and Mr. Austin, are now inclined to think that if we could ask the sanction of the Commissioners of Sewers to this portion of the improvements, with the proprietors' consent and co-operation, they would not throw many obstacles in the way. And we could go to them with this portion of the plans and estimates only, and (their authority obtained) could go to work, while the remainder of the plans and estimates were yet being made out.[†2]

No more at present on that point. I now come to the Home.

Everything is quiet and comfortable there. I paid the bills for last month, which (with £5 petty cash to Mrs. Morson) amounted to £43..16..0.[†3] I wrote to the woman near Maidstone and she came up here with her daugher—a girl of only 16. She is a very decent woman, whose name is Donovan. Her sister's name is Wallis, and her sister wrote the letter to you, in consequence of Mrs. Donovan's "not being a scholar". The girl comes from a bad school (where I dreamed my first dreams of authorship when I was six years old or so), namely Chatham, and I think she may be of rather a shrewish temper; but it is undoubtedly a case to make trial of, and I have given Mrs. Morson instructions to fetch the girl.[†1]

—No more about that, and now I come to Charley. Dr. Hawtrey has broken up the school a few days before the time, in consequence of the vast quantity of outlying water in the neighbourhood;[†2] and the said Charley appeared with his boxes to day. The Doctor was very sorry to part with him, and, in proof of his popularity, he brought home nineteen presents of new books from boys. I enclose you his tutor's letter concerning him. The fee to which he refers, is one of three sets of fees amounting to Thirty Pounds[†3] which are paid by boys on going away. I quite agree with him on the gross and disagreeable nature of such transactions in such a place, and feel quite uncomfortable in complying with the custom. The companion fee of fifteen pounds to the Tutor, is one of ten pounds to the Doctor. I asked Charley when he gave me notice a week or two ago that these would have to be paid, whether he paid the Doctor's fee himself? He said "Yes. The way it was, was this. The boy called on the Doctor to say Good bye, and the Doctor went and stirred the fire, and the boy put ten pounds on the table"!

We hope Mrs. Brown continues to do well, and that you get brighter weather where you are (and where I dined yesterday!) than we get here. I look forward to sending you next week, a week or more before its publication, the extra Christmas No. of Household Words. It has cost me some pains, and I think is very pretty.

With kindest regards | Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours Miss
Burdett Coutts. CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS MORSON, 3 DECEMBER 1852*

MS Miss Grace Hughes.

Tavistock House | Friday Evening Third December | 1852.

Dear Mrs. Morson.

Will you send clothes as usual to Mrs. Donovan
at Mr. Ball's[†4]
24 Browne Street, Queen Street
Edgeware Road

—for her daughter (a small girl of 16) whom I have accepted for admission? And will you also make an early appointment to fetch her. The mother seems to be a very decent woman who comes from near Maidstone; and as she may not have many opportunities of seeing the girl, and as it may do the girl some good, I have told her you will let her come out and see her in the Home before she (the mother) goes back into the country, if she speaks to you on the subject.

I think the girl may have a temper; but it is decidedly a case to try.

Faithfully Yours

CD.

To MRS GASKELL, 4 DECEMBER 1852*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Tavistock House | Saturday Fourth December 1852

My Dear Mrs. Gaskell.

I have received yours and its enclosures, safely, this morning.

I have no doubt, according to every principle of art that is known to me from Shakspeare downwards, that you weaken the terror of the story by making them all see the phantoms at the end. And I feel a perfect conviction that the best readers will be the most certain to make this discovery. Nous verrons. But it is greatly improved, and in making up the Xmas No. finally to day, I shall of course be careful to preserve the New Ending, exactly as you have written it. (I had considered that point about the child's describing what she saw, but had regarded the child as under a supernatural impulse to do so.)

You will find it, I think, a very pretty No. As soon as some copies are "worked" and pressed, I will send you one, a week or so in advance of its publication.

Your introduced reference on the child's part to the Lady of the Fells,[†1] strikes me as particularly good and picturesque.

Ever Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To THE GENERAL COMMITTEE OF THE ROYAL LITERARY FUND, 4 DECEMBER 1852*

MS Royal Literary Fund.[†2]

Tavistock House | Saturday Fourth December 1852

Gentlemen.

I did not anticipate when I had the honor of addressing a few words to you the other day, in recommendation of a poor Authoress,[†3] that I should so soon have occasion to trouble you again; and still less, that I should have the painful task of bearing my poor testimony to the appeal of a gentleman who has written so well as Mr. Charles Whitehead.[†4]

On a former occasion when I had a seat at your board, I believe I stated to you my knowledge of Mr. Whitehead's position, and the admiration with which I had read his writings long before.[†1] Not to trouble you with a recapitulation of his case, I beg most earnestly to commend him once again to your favorable consideration, as a follower of literature by profession, who has done much and suffered more, and for whose misfortunes I entertain the liveliest sympathy.[†2]

I have the honor to be | Gentlemen | Your faithful Servant

CHARLES DICKENS

The Committee of The Literary Fund

To HENRY AUSTIN, 6 DECEMBER 1852*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Sixth December 1852

My Dear Henry

Miss Coutts is delighted with our move and all its details, and is so far from objecting to having Tennant's finger in the Sanitary pie in this stage of its baking, that she wishes it. Will you act accordingly.

Ever affectionately Henry Austin Esquire.CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 6 DECEMBER 1852†

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Sixth December 1852

My Dear Miss Coutts.

A few words in answer to your note received this morning.

We arranged (though I omitted to say so) to take Mr. Tennant into council. The work would be done under the direction of the Board of Health, and the proprietors forewarned that they could not possibly interfere—their doing so, would be detrimental both to its efficiency and its cheapness, and could not on any consideration be allowed.

I will come to you, on your coming to town, whenever you appoint. (The afternoon would be best for me if equally convenient to you, as I am now again shut up in Bleak House). Charley and his two sisters will be delighted (and more) to come to Brighton for a day, whenever you appoint. I thought it best not to see Mr. Engelbach[†3] until I could take Charley with me. We will see him together, before I see you.

I was in Brighton last Thursday, but only dined and departed.

Of course I have nothing to say, about what don't concern me!—

I wish you could have seen a piece called Masks and Faces, which they are now playing at the Haymarket.[†1] It is delightful, and worthy of the best days of the stage.[†2]

With kindest regards

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To MRS GASKELL, 6 DECEMBER 1852*

MS Manchester Central Library. Address: Mrs. Gaskell | Plymouth Grove | Manchester.

Tavistock House | Monday Sixth December 1852

My Dear Mrs. Gaskell.

Pray don't, in any corner cupboard of your mind, put away the least doubt or disparagement of the story. I read it carefully on Saturday (when I made up the Number finally) and did so with the greatest interest and admiration. My "nous verrons"[†3] was quite an honest one, leaving the question open—and I quite perceive the difficulties you suggest.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 9 DECEMBER 1852

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts.

Tavistock House | Thursday Ninth December 1852

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I know a certain Chevalier Bernhard Taüchnitz, at Leipzig, whom I think an extremely likely man to suggest a good place for Charley. He is a publisher by profession (the largest, I believe, in Germany), but is a gentleman of great honor and integrity too, and well acquainted with all the most celebrated men of letters in Europe. I have had many transactions with him, referring to all my books, and am well acquainted with him personally, and with his thoroughly good reputation besides.

I thought of him before, when Mr. Engelbach occurred to you. If you approve, I will write to him now. But I shall do nothing until I know that you think well of it.

Ever Most Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To THE REV. JAMES WHITE, 9 DECEMBER 1852

Text from MDGH, I, 292-3.

Tavistock House, Thursday Evening, Dec. 9th, 1852.

My dear White,

I hear you are not going to poor Macready's. Now, don't you think it would do you good to come here instead? I say it would, and I ought to know! We can give you everything but a bed (all ours are occupied in consequence of the boys being at home), and shall all be delighted to see you. Leave the bed to us, and we'll find one hard by. I say nothing of the last day of the old year, and the dancing out of that good old worthy that will take place here (for you might like to hear the bells at home); but after the twentieth, I shall be comparatively at leisure, and good for anything or nothing. Don't you consider it your duty to your family to come? I do, and I again say that I ought to know.

Our best love to Mrs. White and Lotty—happily so much better, we rejoice to hear—and all.

So no more at present from

THE INIMITABLE B.

To W. H. WILLS, 9 DECEMBER [1852]

MS Huntington Library. Date: 9 Dec was Thursday in 1852.

Tavistock House | Thursday Ninth December

My Dear Wills.

I am driven Mad by Dogs, who have taken it into their accursed heads to assemble every morning in the piece of ground opposite, and who have barked this morning for five hours without intermission—positively rendering it impossible for me to work—and making what is really so ridiculous, quite serious to me. I wish, between this and dinner, you would send John to see if he can hire a gun, with a few caps—some powder—and a few charges of small shot. If you duly commission him with a card, he can easily do it. And if I get those implements up here tonight, I'll be the death of some of them tomorrow morning.[†1]

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 11 DECEMBER 1852*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Saturday Eleventh December | 1852.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I have forwarded your note to Mrs. Morson, and will see the girl shortly after her arrival.

Yesterday, I received the enclosed note from Mr. Austin, in answer to one of mine designed to freshen up Young Rapid.[†1] Would you wish to pursue the subject he opens? I know the Court very well, and it is one of the most intensely miserable in London, at present.[†2]

Ever Most Faithfully Yours Miss Burdett Coutts.CD.

To HENRY AUSTIN, 11 DECEMBER 1852*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Saturday Eleventh December | 1852.

My Dear Henry.

Miss Coutts is at Brighton. I have written to ask her whether she would like to pursue the subject you open. Her reply I will communicate to you, as soon as I get it.

Ever affecy.

CD.

To HENRY AUSTIN, 11 DECEMBER 1852*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Eleventh December 1852 | Saturday Night

My Dear Henry.

Will you read the enclosed and let me know whether you will undertake to get the commission executed, and (if so) when I may expect to receive the—chest—or box—or whatever it will be?[†3] The money "may be heard of, at the Tavistock Arms", when wanted.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 14 DECEMBER 1852*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Fourteenth December | 1852

My Dear Miss Coutts.

The enclosed is from Mr. Austin about the instruments.[†4] I presume you will like to have the complete equipment he describes, but I have delayed giving the final order until I hear from you. Will you therefore let me have one line by return of post?

Ever Most Faithfully | Yours Miss Burdett Coutts.CD.

To HENRY AUSTIN, 14 DECEMBER 1852*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Fourteenth December 1852 | Tuesday

My Dear Henry.

I have little or no doubt that the order you describe,[†1] is what Miss Coutts means. But as I would like to be sure, I have written to her at Brighton to ask the question. If you will tell me to whom I shall write to say Yes—I suppose tomorrow—I will do so.

She says she would certainly like to know about the Fever houses.[†2] I think if the matter could be brought to bear quickly, it might be done—but not otherwise.

Ever affecy. Henry Austin Esquire.CD.

To J. H. NIGHTINGALE,[†3] 14 DECEMBER 1852*

MS Private. Address: J. H. Nightingale Esquire | Mail Newspaper Office | Liverpool.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Fourteenth December | 1852

Dear Sir

I am much obliged to you for your pleasant little farce,[†4] which is very good and well-timed, and exceedingly compact.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MESSRS MACMILLAN,[†1] [10-15 DECEMBER 1852]*

MS Mr W. S. G Macmillan. Date: other letters before CD's in same album, thanking Macmillans for copies of Evans's sonnets, are dated from 10 Dec on; the sonnets were published before 15 Dec.

Gentlemen

I am much obliged to you for your note, and for the Sonnets.[†2] I have read them with very great pleasure, and they seem to me to give strong evidence of no common merit in a new writer.[†3] I wish he had chosen any other subject—for it strikes me that no topic ever considered since the earth was without form and void, has been so exhausted as the Death of the Duke of Wellington. This, however, may be some grievous peculiarity in my judgment.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Macmillan & Co.

To MRS BROWN, 16 DECEMBER 1852

MS Morgan Library. Address: Mrs. Brown | Miss Burdett Coutts | Royal York Hotel | Brighton.

Tavistock House | Thursday Sixteenth December | 1852.

My Dear Mrs. Brown

You may faintly imagine my astonishment on receiving your packet last night. The enormous number of letters that come here from all parts of the earth, render general instructions necessary that nothing is to be taken in, on which postage requires to be paid. But of course there are exceptions perpetually,—as in the present inscrutable instance.

A servant whom I have had for twelve years, and who had attained to an almost preternatural sagacity in these things, having left me to be married (and to keep the Household Words office), has been replaced by a pastoral youth under whose administration I feel my brain reeling. Pray tell Miss Coutts of his horrible incapability. What can she have thought of my not answering such a letter at once! The idea of having lived for a fortnight with such a cool appearance upon me, makes me almost desperate, and impels me to shake the innocent cause of my degradation in the eyes I most care for.

Between 4 and 5 tomorrow, I will appear in Stratton Street. When I hope I may not be "REFUSED"[†1] too.

Ever Dear Mrs. Brown | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN LEECH, 16 DECEMBER 1852

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: John Leech Esquire | 31 Notting Hill Terrace | Notting Hill.

Tavistock House | Sixteenth December 1852 | Thursday

My Dear Leech.

Oddly apropos of our vague intentions, I have received a note from White informing me of a "Testimonial" that is going to be given to him down there, on Thursday the 23rd.[†2] Could you manage to go down on Wednesday the 22nd.—walking from Ryde as we proposed—and return on Christmas Eve? The Evening of the 23rd. we might, if so dispoged, pass at Ryde or Portsmouth.

If you can contrive this, I am good for the enterprise, and will arrange the times and place of meeting. Reply as soon as you can.

Ever Faithfully John Leech EsquireCD.

To MRS GASKELL, 17 DECEMBER 1852

MS John Rylands Library. Address: Mrs. Gaskell | Plymouth Grove | Manchester.

Tavistock House | Friday Seventeenth December | 1852

My Dear Mrs. Gaskell.

I received your kind note yesterday morning with the truest gratification, for I am the writer of the Child's Story[†3] as well as of the Poor Relation's.[†4] I assure you, you have given me the liveliest and heartiest pleasure by what you say of it.

I don't claim for my ending of the Nurse's Story that it would have made it a bit better. All I can urge in its behalf, is, that it is what I should have done myself. But there is no doubt of the story being admirable as it stands, and there is some doubt (I think) whether Forster would have found anything wrong in it, if he had not known of my hammering over the proofs in making up the No., with all the three endings before me.

With kind regards to Mr. Gaskell[†1]

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Gaskell.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 18 DECEMBER 1852*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Eighteenth December 1852

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I send you Charley's papers, and the list of instruments.[†2] I observe in the latter that that terrific Theodolite of which I spoke, and the instruments for taking levels, are the giants of the groupe.[†3]

Ever Most Faithfully Yours
CD.

To WILKIE COLLINS, 20 DECEMBER 1852

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Monday Twentieth December | 1852

My dear Collins.

If I did not know that you are likely to have a forbearing remembrance of my occupations, I should be full of remorse for not having sooner thanked you for Basil.[†4]

Not to play the Sage or the critic (neither of which parts, I hope, is at all in my line) but to say what is the friendly truth, I may assure you that I have read the book with very great interest, and with a very thorough conviction that you have a call to this same art of fiction. I think the probabilities here and there require a little more respect than you are disposed to shew them,[†5] and I have no doubt that the Prefatory letter[†1] would have been better away;[†2] on the ground that a book (of all things) should speak for, and explain, itself. But the story contains admirable writing, and many clear evidences of a very delicate discrimination of character.[†3] It is delightful to find throughout that you have taken great pains with it besides, and have "gone at it" with a perfect knowledge of the jolter-headedness of the conceited idiots who suppose that volumes are to be tossed off like pancakes, and that any writing can be done without the utmost application, the greatest patience, and the steadiest energy, of which the writer is capable.[†4]

For all these reasons, I have made Basil's acquaintance with great gratification, and entertain a high respect for him. And I hope that I shall become intimate with many worthy descendants of his, who are yet in the limbo of creatures waiting to be born.

Always faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. Wilkie Collins Esquire.

P.S.
I am open to any proposal to go anywhere any day or days this week. Fresh air and change, in any amount, I am ready for. If I could only find an idle man (this is a general observation) he would find the warmest recognition in this direction.

To THE HON. MRS EDWARD CROPPER,[†5] 20 DECEMBER 1852

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Monday Twentieth December 1852

My Dear Madam

I am much concerned to hear of Lord Denman's illness.[†6] He is one of the noblest spirits in the world, and I have ever held him in great honor and regard.

I should not return your confidence in the spirit in which I most sincerely receive it, if, after reading your last letter,[†1] I forbore to explain a few facts referring to the unfortunate subject of our correspondence, which may be interesting to you. Pray understand—I am sure you will—that I make no complaint whatever. I utterly remove Lord Denman from my mind as connected with any unconscious misrepresentations affecting myself, and, when I allude to them, only think of him as I have always known him.

Mrs. Jellyby gives offence merely because the word "Africa", is unfortunately associated with her wild Hobby.[†2] No kind of reference to Slavery is made or intended, in that connexion. It must be obvious to anyone who reads about her. I have such strong reason to consider, as the best exercise of my faculties of observation can give me, that it is one of the main vices of this time to ride objects to Death through mud and mire, and to have a great deal of talking about them and not a great deal of doing—to neglect private duties associated with no particular excitement, for lifeless and soulless public hullabaloo with a great deal of excitement, and thus seriously to damage the objects taken up (often very good in themselves) and not least by associating them with Cant and Humbug in the minds of those reflecting people whose sympathies it is most essential to enlist, before any good thing can be advanced.[†3] I know this to be doing great harm. But, lest I should unintentionally damage any existing cause, I invent the cause of emigration to Africa.[†4] Which no one in reality is advocating. Which no one ever did, that ever I heard of. Which has as much to do, in any conceivable way, with the unhappy Negro Slave as with the Stars.

In the article on Slavery in Household Words,[†1] there is this emphatic conclusion. "Americans might so abolish Slavery as to produce with little or no cost—probably with profit to themselves—results incomparably greater than have been attained by England with a vast expenditure of money. Our cousins are capable of great works, and a great work lies at their door. Heartily glad shall we be when they shall begin to leave off whipping their Negroes, and shall set steadily to work to whip the Britishers in the results to be obtained out of enlightened efforts to give the Slave freedom both of mind and body. This Victory over ourselves America may win, and England shall be foremost in the celebration of her triumph."[†2]—Will you look to the pamphlet republished from the Standard, and see if you discover the least recognition of such words as these?[†3]

Why does the article (of which I wrote no part, but the high and genuine praise of Mrs. Stowe's book)[†4] argue the question so temperately and mildly?[†5] I have been in America, and know the Americans very well. I may have been plainer and bolder among them on this question—at all times steadily refusing, even in the Slave districts, to compromise it or gloss it in the least—than most English travellers while there.[†6] Of that, I say nothing. But the American Slave Owners are an extremely proud and obstinate race—I suppose the most obstinate race on the face of the Earth. If I wanted to exhibit myself on this subject, I know perfectly well that a few pages of fiery declamation in Household Words would make their way (wafted by the Anti Slavery Societies) all over the civilized earth. But I want to help the wretched Slave. Now I am morally certain that when public attention has been called to him by pathetic pictures of his sufferings and by the representation in deservedly black colors of his oppressors, the way to save him, is, then to step in with persuasion and argument and endeavour to reason with the holders, and shew them that it is best, even for themselves, to consider their duty of abolishing the system. I can imagine nothing more hopeless than the idea, while they are smarting under attack, of bullying or shaming them.[†7] You might as well fire pistols at the Alps. Further than this, I apprehend there will soon be a War in Europe. The only natural alliance for England then, is with America. If the Slavery issue should then be so full of green wounds as to hold America aloof, I think I plainly see that the great mass of our people will say, "we have thrown this great and powerful friend away for the sake of the Blacks"—and that the Blacks will for a long time afterwards have a very small share of popular sympathy. All these points I take into consideration to the best of my ability, wrong or right.

The pamphlet complains of my calling Mrs. Stowe's book, a work of fiction.[†1] I believe I have done my part in presenting truths under that guise, but I never heard my books called by any other name, and I never wrote that I was mortally aggrieved or injured by their bearing that designation. To say of Mrs. Stowe's book that it has "Occasional overstrained conclusions and violent extremes",[†2] is a great offence. But I call it a very overstrained conclusion and a very violent extreme, and a damaging absurdity to the Slave himself, to set up the Colored race as capable even of subduing the White. I pointed this out to Mrs. Stowe herself, who replied to me that she had not that intention.[†3] In her execution, however, I still think it to be there. But greatly admiring the book, and highly sympathizing with its purpose, I entered into no details of objection but enthusiastically commended it. I have been assured on reasonably good authority—Mrs. Stowe's—that she was animated to that task by being a Reader of mine. It is not very reasonable—do you think it is?—to turn it as an angry weapon against me.

The pamphlet, being angry with me on these wholly mistaken grounds, objects that I come in at the Death of chancery and might have attacked it before.[†4]—The most serious and pathetic point I tried with all indignation and intensity to make, in my first book, (Pickwick) was the slow torture and death of a chancery prisoner.[†5] From that hour to this, if I have been set on anything, it has been on exhibiting the abuses of the Law.[†6]

I have no right to say exactly four words of objection to Uncle Tom's Cabin (amidst the most ardent praise of it) because I converted Mr. Scrooge by a Christmas Dinner.[†1] It is as much a fact as the Docks at Liverpool—for there is the printed book which cannot be unprinted—that I converted Mr. Scrooge by teaching him that a Christian heart can not be shut up in itself, but must live in the Past, The Present, and the Future, and must be a link of this great human chain, and must have sympathy with everything. Suppose I were to take it into my head to claim to have converted Mr. Scrooge by a street doorkey, or a patent Mangle, or an Elephant, or a Monkey. Could I possibly, while the print and paper lasted, alter the fact in the least?

Pray do not, therefore, be induced to suppose that I ever write merely to amuse, or without an object. I wish I were as clear of every offence before Heaven, as I am of that. I may try to insinuate it into people's hearts sometimes, in preference to knocking them down and breaking their heads with it (which I have observed them apt to resent,—and then they fall upon the object and do it an injury) but I always have it. Without it, my pursuit—and the steadiness, patience, seclusion, regularity, hard work, and self-concentration, it demands—would be utterly worthless to me. I should die at the oar, and could die a more contemptible and worthless death in no man's eyes than in my own.

My Dear Madam | Very faithfully Yours

Mrs. Cropper.

To W. F. DE CERJAT, 20 DECEMBER 1852*

MS Berg Collection. Address: W. F. De Cerjat Esqre. | Lausanne | Switzerland.

Tavistock House, London | Monday Evening Twentieth December 1852.

My Dear Cerjat.

I am much concerned to hear that you have not been well this winter, and most sincerely hope you are well again—well enough to keep a merry Christmas and come gaily into a happy New Year, with the heartiest and friendliest loves of me and mine towards all your house.

Looking to the date of your last letter, I feel as if I were a perfect ruffian of a correspondent; but I really think so often of my friends in writing my books, and have the happiness of knowing they think so much of me in reading them, that I have a sort of stupid sense as if they served for letters, and accounted for my having little time for that kind of writing—though I cannot bear to be thought neglectful by those whom I warmly esteem, and am perpetually writing to them direct too,—in my good intentions.

If you have had half as much Wet in Switzerland as we have had in England, you must have been washed by this time something nearer to the Lake than when I left Lausanne. For two months it has been incessantly raining.[†1] At last, however, we have had a noble afternoon; and now the stars are shining brightly out of a clear blue sky. So I for one, am willing to let byegones be byegones, if they will only conduct themselves as their name implies.

I feel as if I ought to ask you about the question of a new Ministry that everybody is fussing about here,[†2] for I know how much you lookers-on at the game, see of the hands, and how closely you follow them. Apart from any political feeling, I think the evasion, shifting, and juggling, with which Ld. Derby's government took office has, for many years if not for ever, materially damaged the character and honor of public men in England, and alienated the great mass of people from any lingering disposition to believe in them. I am therefore glad of their downfall, as the only scrap of moral to a very sorry fable.[†3]

So much for public matters, about which you and I in my happy Lausanne days generally used to contrive to agree in the main. Of private affairs, I dare say poor dear Mrs. Watson will interest you and Mrs. Cerjat most. She is living, quiet and secluded, at Rockingham, of which the greater part is mournfully shut up, and will be until the eldest boy shall come of age in the fulness of time.[†4] She has become very tranquil and resigned, and in everything conducts herself like the admirable creature she is. We write to one another pretty often, but I have not seen her since dear Watson's death, and am not likely to, now, until after her confinement—which she expects in February.[†5] I heard from her last, some fortnight ago; and I was happy to find her interested again in many outward matters. She has been sketching a stained-glass window, to be put up in their little church near his Tomb. I cannot quite remember whether I have written to you since his death. He dined here on the day before he left town, and I never saw him in such good spirits, or so full of plans of hospitality and enjoyment for the future.

I have taken Charley from Eton, and am going to send him to Germany, as I want him to be Master of the language.—I am very closely occupied, but am already looking forward to the completion of Bleak House in August, and to bachelor wanderings afterwards, into Switzerland and Italy.[†6]—We are all well, thank God—thriving, and happy. I hope you will see the Xmas No. of Household Words, which has some very pretty stories in it—the first two, mine.[†7]—I was much struck by what you wrote me of the treatment of the Brute Creation.—My Dear Cerjat these are the mere heads of a note, but if they serve to suggest to you that you and yours are much in my head—and heart too—they will have done what I most want them. With heartily affectionate regards, Ever Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

(No room for the flourish!)

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 20 DECEMBER 1852*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Monday Evening | Twentieth December 1852

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I have written to order the instruments as you request. My whole moral Being is now absorbed in intense curiosity to know what shape and what size the chest will be. I represent it to myself as like a Grand Piano without the legs.

I cannot make the sum total of Charley's bills (memorandum enclosed)[†1] and the Shepherds Bush bills, your total.[†2]

Fearing that my not saying so might involve some other account in confusion, I think it right to mention the total incapability of my arithmetic to get at your result.

With kindest regards to Mr. and Mrs. Brown

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

To JOHN LEECH, 20 DECEMBER 1852

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: With a bottle | John Leech Esquire | Notting Hill Terrace.

Tavistock House | Monday Evening | Twentieth December 1852

My Dear Leech.

Firstly. I suppose that but for your profound confidence in the brilliant undersigned, you might by this time have imagined that he was oblivious of promises made at Cocks in Fleet Streets,[†3] after expeditions to Brightons. Not so, however, as you will be fully prepared to hear. Tennyson's poems are out of print, and reprinting in a new Edition in one Volume.[†4] When that Edition emerges from the Press, it will bloom on Notting Hill. The strong water distilled from the cherry of the Black Forest, is, I am astounded to discover, all gone. But I send in its stead, a bottle of a sweet wine of rare perfection, made from the Muscatelle Grape. Drunk with ice, or ice pudding, you will find it most delicious—with a generous and fragrant smack of the bright sun in it, that I have very seldom tasted. It was presented to me some years ago by a Merchant (this sounds, I find as I write it, like the Arabian Nights), and is really an uncommon—shall I say, Article.

Secondly. I don't think White is to be managed at the end of the month, because I have to be producible on the 29th.[†1] and also on the 31st.[†2] (when I hope to dance a Sir Roger or so, with Mrs. Leech). But on the 30th. or at any other time with these reservations, I am more than ready for a "Hout"—being in a state at present, of blackguard reckless idleness (I left off work yesterday) more easily to be con[†3] &c &c &c &c Ever Heartily Yours John Leech Esquire.CD.

To WILLIAM SCHOLEFIELD,[†4] 20 DECEMBER 1852*

MS Private.

Tavistock House | Twentieth December 1852 | Monday Evening

My Dear Sir

I am much obliged to you for your kind note, and wish it were in my power to avail myself of either or both of your agreeable proposals.

But it is so essential to me, at that period of the month, to have my time entirely at my own disposal and to keep my own company uninterrupted, that I shall only be able to go to Birmingham an hour or two before the dinner,[†5] and shall have no choice but to return in the course of that same night.

I am not mistaken, I think, in my remembrance of our last meeting when I believe that you knew and had a regard for Macready. He is much afflicted. Almost as soon as he was established in his beautiful retirement at Sherborne, his wife fell very ill, and, after lingering some time, followed their eldest daughter to the grave. His eldest son, for the same dread complaint, is now sent to Madeira. On the very day he sailed, his third son was sent home from school unexpectedly—as I fear, to die.[†6]

My Dear Sir | Very faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

William Scholefield Esquire.

To FRANK STONE, 20 DECEMBER 1852

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Twentieth December 1852 | Monday Evening

My Dear Stone.

Every appearance of brightness! Shall I expect you tomorrow morning? If so, at what hour?

I think of taking Train afterwards, and going down for a walk on Chatham Lines. If you can spare the day for fresh air and an impromptu bit of fish and chop, I can recommend you one of the most delightful of men for a companion. O he is indeed refreshing!!!

Ever Affecy. Yours

CD.

To CAPTAIN E. E. MORGAN, 22 DECEMBER 1852*

MS Mrs M. C. Armstrong.

Tavistock House, London | Twenty Second December 1852

My Dear Captain Morgan.

I was delighted the other day to see your hand writing again, and immediately smoked a Cigar in your honor.[†1] The children fell to work upon the biscuits with exceeding vigor, and you were (and usually are) almost as often in our mouths as either of those commodities.

All your friends here, have been quite amazed at your not sailing over the salt sea, backward and forward, perpetually. For when you began to talk about retiring from the watery plough, we all said "Lord bless you, he is going to begin to be always aboard ship now"; but our wisdom was at fault.[†2] If you don't reappear soon, we think of building a joint stock clipper to be called the Defiance, and for evermore cutting you out.

All sorts and conditions of men[†3] send you their regards. My wife and her sister send their loves, Mrs. Morgan permitting. They are particularly anxious to know how the young lady is who took the dry one.[†4] You see her frequently, I have no doubt.

Very Cordially Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To BERNHARD TAUCHNITZ, 22 DECEMBER 1852

Extract from Kurt Otto, Der Verlag Bernhard Tauchnitz, 1837-1912, p. 52.

Tavistock House, London, December 22nd, 1852.

Perhaps you may be able to advise me on a subject that now occupies my mind. If you can, I feel sure you will, in your kindness.

My eldest boy, who is now sixteen, I have just taken from Eton (I daresay you know the great public school there, by name) with the intention of sending him to Germany, where I wish him to acquire the language perfectly. He is a clever, well-educated boy of sixteen years of age, and was at first designed for the army; but he has a preference for mercantile pursuits.

Now, I wish to place him with some German gentleman, in whose family he would live happily; would obtain a scholarly knowledge of German and French (of the latter he knows a good deal already); would be overlooked and taken care of, as every boy requires to be; and would not lose what he has already learned. I think this would be greatly preferable to sending him to a German University; but I do not know of any such Tutor for him, or how, or where, I am likely to find one [on][†1] whom I could thoroughly rely. Is it in your power to help me with your advice and recommendation?[†2] Pray forgive my troubling you.

To [MR COLLINS],[†3] [?23 DECEMBER 1852]

Mention in next.

To W. WILKIE COLLINS, 23 DECEMBER 1852†

MS [aa]Morgan Library; [bb]Yale University Library.

[a]Tavistock House | Twenty Third December 1852

My Dear Collins

I am suddenly laid by the heels in consequence of Wills having gone blind without any notice—I hope and believe from mere temporary inflammation. This obliges me to be at the office all day to-day, and to resume my attendance there tomorrow. But if you will come there tomorrow afternoon—say, at about 3 o'Clock—I think we may forage pleasantly for a dinner in the city, and then go and look at Christmas Eve in Whitechapel—which is always a curious thing.[a]

[b]I enclose you an odd note received Yesterday Evening from a namesake of yours. I have answered it, by giving my correspondent the piece of information[†4] required.

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. Wilkie Collins Esquire[b]

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 23 DECEMBER 1852*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Twenty Third December 1852

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I received the enclosed this morning. It is one of those letters that I think I ought to send to you, though always recognizing the great probability of your really being unable to pursue the subject.

I am happy to say that the little piece of business between the Sun and myself, came off with the greatest success.[†1] I took Mr. Stone with me, thinking Mr. Maclise might be hardly patient enough. The Artist who operated,[†2] is quite a Genius in that way, and has acquired a large stock of a very singular knowledge of all the little eccentricities of the light and the instrument. The consequence of which, is, that his results are very different from those of other men. I am disposed to think the portrait, by far the best specimen of anything in that way, I have ever seen. Some of the peculiarities inseparable from the process—as a slight rigidity and desperate grimness—are in it, but very greatly modified. I sat five times. It is not come home yet, as it is waiting for a case; but I hope you will be pleased with it. I shall have a request to make to you when you come back to town again, if you think well of the picture, which I hope and trust you will not refuse.

Your mysterious letter would have driven me to Shepherd's Bush instantly, but that the Sub Editor of Household Words has suddenly and without the least notice gone blind (from temporary cold, I hope) and involved me in such a heap of confusion as you may faintly imagine when such a Mill is stopped in full whirl.

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

To MARK LEMON, 24 DECEMBER 1852

MS Benoliel Collection.

In the Forlornest Mess I ever saw. | Christmas Eve 1852.

My Dear Mark. We have been punctual to our tryst. You may hear of [us][†3] at Simpson's[†4]—where we go for a Rabbit.

Ever Yrs.

CD

To W. H. WILLS, 24 DECEMBER 1852

MS Huntington Library.

Office of Household Words, | Christmas Eve 1852

My Dear Wills.

I have gone carefully through the Number[†5]—an awful one for the amount of correction required—and have made everything right. If my mind could have been materialised, and drawn along the tops of all the spikes on the outside of the Queen's Bench prison, it could not have been more agonized than by the Golden Vale;[†1] which for imbecility, carelessness,[†2] slovenly composition, relatives without antecedents, universal chaos, and one absorbing whirlpool of jolterheadedness, beats anything in print and paper I have ever "gone at" in my life.[†3]

I shall come and see how you are, tomorrow. Meantime everything is in perfect trim in these parts, and I have sent down to Stacey to come here and top up with a final interview before I go.

Just after I had sent the Messenger off to you yesterday concerning the toll-taker memoranda,[†4] the other[†5] idea came into my head—and, in the most obliging manner, came out of it.

Ever Faithfully Yours

CD.

Here is Mark perpetually flitting about Brydges Street[†6] and hovering in the neighbourhood—with a veil of secresy drawn down over his chin, so ludicrously transparent, that I can't help laughing while he looks at me.

To MISS MARY BOYLE, 25 DECEMBER 1852*

MS Mr Robert K. Black.

Tavistock Farm | Christmas Day 1852

My own darling Mary.

No end of merry Christmases and Happy New Years to you my gal!

Missis being out I don't wait for her to write respecting of the young woman as you proposes for to make me acquainted with[†7] but my dear Mary I doe assure you that there an't a many young women as I should so much like fur to know as her which You will I hope my own tell her that much from him as is still yourn and knowing as you ant no cause to be jealous for all that I am certain beforehand as I shall a Door her O Mary wen you come to read the last chapter of the next number of Bleak House I think my ever dear as you will say as him what we knows on as done a pretty womanly thing as the sex will like and as will make a sweet pint for to turn the story on my heart alive for such you are[†1] and so no more at present but yourn in Sir Rodger dee Coverley and reels as long as we can bear it and say to that young woman my always Imbraceable Mary as I hopes To dance with her much for I do A preciate on her and likeways my Rosy Posy for such it is well known you ever must be and let me see the man as says no to it and it will be the worse for is Ed and so I tell him candid i have had cast I on pillers put undersneath the dancing room which will prevent you and her from falling intoe the Kitching my ever blue ming Mary

To THE REV. THEODORE BUCKLEY,[†1] 25 DECEMBER 1852*

MS Mr P. J. Radford.

Tavistock House | Christmas Day 1852

My Dear Sir

Pray accept my thanks for the book[†2] you have had the kindness to send me.

And allow me to remind you that Mrs. Dickens hopes to see you on Friday evening the 31st. at 9 o'Clock.[†3]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Reverend Theodore Buckley

To WILLIAM J. CLEMENT, 25 DECEMBER 1852*

MS Yale University Library. Address: W. J. Clement Esquire | The Council House | Shrewsbury.

Tavistock House | Christmas Day 1852

My Dear Clement

First and foremost, Mrs. Dickens and her sister send you and yours their heartiest wishes—with mine united to them—for many many Merry Christmases and Happy New Years to you all.

Secondly, I cannot sufficiently thank you for your splendid present, which is the wonder and admiration of all beholders, and occupies at this moment a proud position on the Dining Room sideboard.[†4] I am more sensible than I could readily tell you, of the genial and cordial feeling with which I know it comes to me, and which will ever make our first meeting at Shrewsbury a most delightful recollection to me.[†5]

As I shall have tomorrow, to write to the Birmingham Dinner Committee, I will take care that you have a ticket, come what come may.[†6] I will write to you again as soon as it is to be got; and I shall look forward to the happiness of shaking hands with you there, and being within speaking distance all the time if possible.

My Dear Clement | With true regard | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

William J Clement Esquire

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 25 DECEMBER 1852†

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street.

Christmas Day, 1852

My Dear Miss Coutts.

May God bless you, and send you and all who are dear to you a long bright store of Merry Christmases and happy years!

I cannot resist the temptation I feel to send you the result of the interview between myself and the Sun.[†1] I am so anxious that you should like it if you can. It came home last night, and Mr. Stone has been prowling about it and hovering round it this morning with such intense satisfaction, that I suppose it must have something good in it. I don't pretend to such a knowledge of my own face, as I claim to have of other peoples' faces.

With kind regards to Mr. and Mrs. Brown

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To G. LINNAEUS BANKS,[†2] 26 DECEMBER 1852

Text from Aris's Birmingham Gazette, 23 Oct 1869, p. 4.; ([aa]from MDGH, I, 296.

Tavistock House | Sunday, Twenty-Sixth December, 1852.

My dear Sir,

I will not attempt to tell you how affected and gratified I am by the intelligence your kind letter conveys to me.[†3] Nothing could be more welcome to me than such a mark of confidence and approval from such a source, nothing more precious, or that I could set a higher worth upon.

I hasten to return the gauges, of which I have marked one as the size of the finger, from which this token will never more be absent as long as I live.[†4]

With feelings of the liveliest gratitude and cordiality towards the many friends who so honour me, and with many thanks to you for the genial earnestness with which you represent them,

I am, my dear Sir, | Very faithfully yours,

CHARLES DICKENS

G. Linnaeus Banks, Esq.

[a]P.S.—Will you do me the favour to inform the dinner committee that a friend of mine, Mr. Clement, of Shrewsbury, is very anxious to purchase a ticket for the dinner, and that if they will be so good as to forward one for him to me I shall feel much obliged.[a]

To FRANK STONE, 27 DECEMBER 1852*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Monday Twenty Seventh December | 1852.

My Dear Stone.

Even the Inimitable can make a mistake. Amazing fact!

But I have been engaged these six weeks, to Lemon for tonight!!! Confused by the Christmas and Sunday coming together, I had not the least remembrance of its being Boxing night, and should probably not have thought of it but for his reminder this moment received. I am irrevocably pledged to a Dinner and a Pantomime.[†1] Stanfield is of the party, and I hope may remember it better than I did. I am really sorry to have made such a ridiculous blunder.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To MRS COWDEN CLARKE, 28 DECEMBER 1852

MS Goodspeed's Book Shop. Address: Mrs. Cowden Clarke | 27 Porchester Terrace | Bayswater.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Evening | Twenty Eighth December 1852

My Dear Mrs. Clarke.

This comes from your ancient (and venerable) manager,[†2] in solemn state, to decide the Wager.[†3]

The Host's Story[†4] is by Edmund Ollier—an excellent and true young poet, as I think.[†5]

You will see a turning-point in the two green leaves this next month, which I hope will not cause you to think less pleasantly and kindly of them.[†1]

And so no more at present, from Yours always

Very faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Cowden Clarke.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 28 DECEMBER 1852*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Evening | Twenty Eighth December 1852

My Dear Miss Coutts

You will see by the enclosed, that the Instruments—not waiting for the new instructions—have already gone to your house.

I am extremely pleased that you think so well of the miniature.[†2] And in fact, I am altogether pleased and contented, having been to a dinner of poor people today[†3] (no business of yours, as you say to me) which has sent me home in a good humour with the world in general, and where I am only sorry you were not.

I hope Mrs. Brown is by this time better again, and with kindest regards to her and Mr. Brown, am ever dear Miss Coutts

Most Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To THE REV. SEPTIMUS HANSARD,[†4] 28 DECEMBER 1852

Extract in John Wilson catalogue No. 33 (1978); MS (3rd person): 1 p.; dated Tavistock House, 28 Dec 52; addressed The Rev. Septimus Hansard.

Sending a contribution towards the emigration expenses of Mr William Grant[†5] . . . in consequence of having heard from Grant that Mr Hansard is so kind as to receive such help for him.

To W. H. WILLS, 29 DECEMBER 1852

MS Berg Collection.

Tavistock House | Wednesday Twenty Ninth December | 1852.

My Dear Wills.

It is evident that Horne (notwithstanding his outfit of Tent, Cart and what not) has abandoned the Digging idea,[†1] and already begun to live upon the reserved Fund sent out to insure his capability of return.[†2] I am afraid this looks unpromising.

One of his poems (Sir Hawkwise) very indifferent. The other (a Christmas piece) must of course stand over now.[†3]

I am concerned to see that he supposes the arrangement with Mrs. Horne never to have been discontinued.[†4] I think it would be best if you would send for her and see her on the subject; seriously representing to her that her secrecy and reserve[†5] have rendered it impossible for either you or I[†6] to approach the question, or at all to divine what has been in her mind respecting it.[†7] I have not the least objection to your saying this as strongly as you like, and representing to her that you know you express my opinion. The arrangement I suppose must be resumed. She is staying with Miss Gillies[†8] at Highgate and was here the day before yesterday. If it will give you no inconvenience to see her,—don't delay. She may otherwise write to Horne with the matter in abeyance, and involve us in the Devil's own confusion—(Here I fall upon my knees, and ask your fair Secretary's[†9] pardon for my intemperate language.)

I was obliged to go yesterday, to an Annual One o'Clock dinner to poor people, given by Miss Coutts,[†1] which detained me later than I expected and prevented my calling on you. To day I have to get to work on the Child's History,[†2] and afterwards to go to Shepherd's Bush, and after that to preside at the dinner which you ought to assist at.[†3] The whole of the performances to conclude with a whitlow on my right forefinger, which makes it difficult for me to write, to dress my self, to brush my hair, take my bath, shake hands with anybody, or do anything.

I number all the papers I send, to prevent your falling into pits of confusion.

No. 1 is from one Caudle[†4]—to whom I have a dim idea that we gave some money for Emigration purposes.[†5] The two papers (newspapers) along with it, are, I suppose, the papers to which he refers. There is nothing to be done on that head, as I take it.[†6]

No. 2 are Murray's[†7] hints.[†8] I see no objection to using chapter 5 as final Hints, and not using chapter 4 at all.[†9] Please to observe that these chapter numerals belong to his MSS, and have nothing to do with my present indexing for your clearer understanding.

No. 3 is a letter, referring (I suppose) to the nine hundred and ninety nine thousandth Colonial Ass who wanted us to print in H.W. some saw-dusty Literature out of the Port-Something Journal. You may recollect the case. It is needless for me to see the man who writes. So I hand him over to you.

I don't think I can finish the Child's History in one morning, for I have got my favorite ruffian Henry the Eighth to deal with.[†1] Will you let me know, by John, your proposed Make-Up for the next No.[†2] I don't see, among my proofs, any good first article.[†3] Child's Play is the smallest beer I ever saw brewed from such strong materials.[†4] Don't leave out the Dirty old man.[†5] He is capital.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To LEWIS GAYLORD CLARK, 30 DECEMBER 1852*

MS Dickens House.

Office of Household Words, | Thursday Thirtieth Decr. 1852

My Dear Clark.

I write to you in haste—and with a hurt hand—as I shall be away tomorrow, and might otherwise lose the Steamer.

It not being easy to remit the £40[†6]—or 200[†7] Dollars—exactly as you suggest, my bankers Messrs. Coutts & Co. have credited you with that sum at Messrs. Barclay and Livingstone's[†8] in New York. You will merely have to apply for it, and pay it (if you will be so kind) to Mr. Carpentier.[†9]

I am much pleased with "the little tome",[†10] and particularly with that part of it to which you call my attention.[†11] But we never *re*publish anything in these pages (if I know it), and to make this exception would be against the whole design of the Journal. Nor do I think that any London publisher would be likely to venture on a reprint of a book that is not a continuous story. I have spoken to mine, and they say certainly not.

Mrs. Dickens unites with me in kind regards to Mrs. Clark.[†1] I hope you may be able to read this, but my hand is poulticed and bandaged.

Faithfully Yours Ever

CD.

Fifty thousand loving remembrances to my dear Irving.[†2]

To JOHN JAFFRAY,[†3] 31 DECEMBER 1852*

MS Private.

Tavistock House | Thirty First December 1852

My Dear Sir

I am truly obliged to you for your kind note received this morning, and for the ticket in behalf of Mr. Clement, who is one of the most hearty, hospitable, and generous of men.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Jaffray Esquire

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, [?LATE 1852]*

MS Mrs Margaret B. Marshall. Date: second half of 1852 on signature; content implies that CD is in London, hence probably after 18 Oct.

I am sorry to say that I am already engaged for the day you so kindly name to me, and that I cannot escape. I write a very short note, in order not to lose the Monday Morning post.

Believe me | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To THOMAS CHAPMAN, 1852

Envelope only. Mention in Stanley Gibbons Auctions catalogue, 16-17 June 1977. Addressed Thomas Chapman; dated 1852.

To CHARLES ROSS,[†1] [1852]

Mention in American Prices Current, v, 1919-21. Dated 1852.

To MARK S. O'SHAUGHNESSY,[†2] [?1850-2]

Mention in O'Shaughnessy to Forster, 12 June 72. Date: most likely in the early years of HW, but after Nov 50 (see below).

Replying to his remonstrance about CD's insertion in Household Words of articles calculated to be offensive to Roman Catholics[†3] and to deprive them of the pleasure and advantage otherwise derivable from such a publication.

[For Addenda, see p. 860.]

Addendum

To EDMUND FRY,[†1] 25 APRIL 1850*

MS Private.

Devonshire Terrace | Twenty Fifth April 1850.

My Dear Sir

I have the pleasure of enclosing you half a dozen autographs.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Edmund Fry Esquire

P.S.
I feel bound to add that although I yield to no one in a horror of war, and all its miseries and wrongs, I do not think the proceedings of the Peace Societies calculated to advance the end they have in view.[†2]

Corrigenda

To F. M. EVANS, [?25 APRIL 1851]*

MS Mr A. Surtees. Full text of To Evans, ?25 Apr 51 (see p. 367) now available. Date: clearly the note mentioned in To Evans, 27 Apr 51, written on Friday night, but delivered on Saturday. On mourning paper.

Devonshire Terrace | Friday Night.

My Dear Evans

Do you know of anyone who keeps prettily bound copies of Copperfield? Does Chapman for instance? I want one (not in the common binding if possible) at the office in the course of the day to send away by Railroad.

Ever Yours | CD.

.

To F. M. EVANS, 30 NOVEMBER 1851*

MS Mr A. Surtees. Full text of To Evans, 30 Nov 51 (see p. 552, where dated ?8-11 Dec 51) now available.

Tavistock House | Sunday Thirtieth November | 1851.

My Dear Evans. I send you the Child's History, revised, with all needful papers thereunto appertaining. I have read it with a good deal of pleasure!

You now want King John. When do you want him?

Faithfully Ever | CD.

Volume VII

1853 – 1855

1853

January

To CLARKSON STANFIELD,[†1] 2 JANUARY 1853

MS Dartmouth College, New Hampshire.

H. M. S. Tavistock | 2nd. January 1853

Yoho old Salt!—Neptun' ahoy!—You don't forget, messmet, as you was to meet Dick Sparkler[†2] and Mark Porpuss[†3] on the fok'sle of the good ship Owsell Words[†4] Wednesday next ½ past 4? Not you, for when did Stanfell ever pass his word to go anywheers and not come! Well. Belay my heart of oak, belay. Come alongside the Tavistock same day and hour, 'stead of Owsell Words. Hail your shipmets, and they'll drop over the side and jine you, like two new shillings a droppin into the Purser's pocket. Damn all loblolly boys[†5] and swabs,[†6] and give me the lad with the tarry trousers which shines to me like di'mings bright![†7]

To J. V. STAPLES,[†8] 5 JANUARY 1853

Text from N, II, 443.

Tavistock House, Tavistock Square. | Fifth January 1853

My Dear Sir,

I beg to explain to you in reply to your sensible letter that I have purposely disencumbered the Child's History[†9] of dates (though I think it mentions more dates than you suppose) in order to increase its romantic and attractive air. It is my hope, by presenting the truth in an agreeable and winning form, to lead young people to take an interest in the dates belonging to it, and to pursue it further.

I could not therefore embody more figures in the text of the little History without a departure from my original intention.[†10] If any striking way should occur to me of adding a reference to the periods of the principal events, to the last volume, I will consider it.[†1]

Faithfully Yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To CLARKSON STANFIELD, 6 JANUARY 1853

Mention in catalogue of Library of Jonas Skougaard, Oslo, 9 Sep 1969; MS 1 ½ pp.; dated 6 Jan 53; addressed Clarkson Stanfield.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS,[†2] 7 JANUARY 1853

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Mivart's Hotel[†3] | Brook Street.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS
Friday Seventh January 1853

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I have been down to this Saint Mark's District[†4] today, as a reasonably bad day on which to see it at its worst, and have looked well over it. It is intensely poor in some parts; and chiefly supported by river, wharf, and dock, employment; and by some lead mills. In one corner is a spot called Hickman's Folly[†5] (a Folly it is much to be regretted Hickman ever committed), which looks like the last hopeless climax of everything poor and filthy. There is a public house in it, with the odd sign of the Ship Aground,[†6] but it is wonderfully appropriate, for everything seems to have got aground there—never to be got off any more until the whole globe is stopped in its rolling and shivered. No more road than in an American swamp[†7]—odious sheds for horses, and donkeys, and vagrants, and rubbish, in front of the parlor windows—wooden houses like horrible old packing cases full of fever for a countless number of years. In a broken down gallery at the back of a row of these, there was a wan child looking over at a starved old white horse who was making a meal of oyster shells. The sun was going down and flaring out like an angry fire at the child—and the child, and I, and the pale horse, stared at one another in silence for some five minutes as if we were so many figures in a dismal allegory. I went round to look at the front of the house, but the windows were all broken and the door was shut up as tight as anything so dismantled could be. God knows when anybody will go in to the child, but I suppose it's looking over still—with a little wiry head of hair, as pale as the horse, all sticking up on its head—and an old weazen face—and two bony hands holding on to the rail of the gallery, with little fingers like convulsed skewers.

I have no doubt that there would be innumerable claimants upon any little fund sent to the Incumbents,[†1] but that may be said with equal truth of twenty places in a breath. There are no better sort of residents whatever—and never have been as I take it; which would account for the smallness of the sum in hand for purposes of charity. I am afraid it is not a promising place in which to try such an experiment as we have so much discussed.[†2] There is no lack of little houses to let, but there is no large space of ground; and I think the place too bad to attempt to make an Oasis in. It would be of no use to touch a limb of Hickman—his whole body is infected, and would spoil the mended part. An act of parliament would be necessary to clear the place. (There may be some such power in existence, for I observed the "Bermondsey Improvement"[†3] announced like an official thing on a church wall). Jacob's Island[†4] adjoins Hickman's Folly, and I see that the ditch I described in Oliver Twist has since been filled up. If you would like to see the place, I shall be glad to shew it to you any afternoon. Or I will see the Incumbent[†5] if you desire it.

———

I cannot make out the money account in detail, because you have Charley's bill,[†6] and I forget the precise amount. I however enclose the sum in compound addition duly drawn up, and it only wants that Item and its results to be complete.

I would have given any thing that you had seen my Birmingham people yesterday, for I don't think it possible to imagine such a scene quite accurately![†7] I have promised at the end of the year, if all go well, to read the Christmas Carol to the Town Hall full of working people[†8] (the Salver[†9] and diamond ring were not confined to that class); and if there were any hope of your seeing them then, I think I could assure you of one of the most remarkable sights that this country could produce.

— VII - 4 —

I asked the Mayor[†1] about the church experiment[†2] you mentioned. He said it had failed—had not been required or warranted, as he considered, by the local circumstances—and was being gradually abandoned. I had not the opportunity of asking the same question of Archdeacon Sandford;[†3] for he sat at some distance from me at the public dinner there was—and he made such a speech about a certain Writer's books[†4] by the bye, that I think you must have heard the cheering at Mivart's—but the Mayor was quite confident, and spoke of the thing as a matter of fact.

With best regards to Mrs. Brown[†5] | Ever Dear Miss Coutts

Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

To ARTHUR RYLAND,[†6] 7 JANUARY 1853

Text from A. Langford, Modern Birmingham and its Institutions, 1873, I, 252-3.

Tavistock House, Tavistock Square, | Friday, 7th January, 1853.

My dear Sir,

Mr. Banks[†7] being so good as to come down to the railroad last night with the keys of the salver case, which had been forgotten, I mentioned to him something that had occurred to me, and which I meant to have communicated to you.

As I begged him to do so for me, I need only say that I would read the Christmas Carol next Christmas, (we being, please God, all alive and well,) to the Town Hall folk, either on one or two nights.[†8] I should particularly desire, in any case, to have large numbers of the working people in the audience. I should like to do it in some way for the benefit and to the advantage of the new Institution, and yet I should like the working people to be admitted free.[†9] If you approve, and can in the mean time devise some means of doing this, to the advancement of the great object, I am entirely in your hands.

It would take about two hours, with a pause of ten minutes about half way through. There would be some novelty in the thing, as I have never done it in public, though I have in private, and (if I may say so) with a great effect on the hearers.[†10]

— VII - 5 —

I was so inexpressibly satisfied last night by the warmth and enthusiasm of my Birmingham friends, that I feel half ashamed this morning of so poor an offer. But as I had decided on making it to you, before I came down yesterday, I propose it nevertheless.

Believe me, always, | Very faithfully yours,

CHARLES DICKENS

Arthur Ryland, Esq.

To WILKIE COLLINS,[†1] 8 JANUARY 1853

MS Widener Collection, Harvard.

Tavistock House | Saturday Eighth January 1853.

My Dear Collins.

While Pickwick was yet in course of publication, Oliver Twist was begun in monthly portions in Bentley's Miscellany. The first chapter of Oliver Twist appeared concurrently either with the tenth or eleventh Number of Pickwick.[†2] They then went on together until Pickwick was finished.[†3]

Faithfully Yours Ever

CHARLES DICKENS

W. Wilkie Collins Esquire.

To ARTHUR RYLAND, 8 JANUARY 1853*

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: Arthur Ryland Esquire | Birmingham.

Tavistock House | Eighth January 1853.

My Dear Sir

I have received your telegraphic message this morning. You may make any use you please of my letter.[†4] I am wholly at your disposal in the matter of the proposed readings, and only want to make them useful and agreeable to the town.

Faithfully Yours Ever

CHARLES DICKENS

Arthur Ryland Esquire.

To HENRY AUSTIN,[†1] 10 JANUARY 1853*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Monday Tenth January | 1853.

My Dear Henry

Can you ascertain for me, through any of your medical Inspectors or other authorities, whether Leipzig[†2] is a pretty healthy place? I am thinking of sending Charley there, but first wish to know something on this important point.[†3]

Ever affectionately

CD.

To LEIGH HUNT,[†4] 12 JANUARY 1853

Extract from Anderson Galleries, No. SN 1624; MS 1 p.; dated Tavistock House, 12 Jan 53.

Referring to Hunt's proposal to "open up" Kensington. The papers, to be effective in Household Words, should not be longer than about five pages or five and a half.[†5]

To G. LINNÆUS BANKS, 13 JANUARY 1853*

MS Yale University Library.

Tavistock House | Thursday Thirteenth January | 1853.

My Dear Sir

The best answer I can send to your note, is the plainest. The plainest is an exact statement of what I said to you on the platform last Thursday night.

It was this:—That I wished to help the proposed new Institution[†6] by reading one of my Christmas books, next Christmas, in the Town Hall; and that as I particularly desired also, to have a large Audience of working people, I would, to ensure both objects, read two evenings or even three if it should be necessary, as a mark of my great interest in, and respect for, the town. That I had intended to communicate this proposal to Mr. Arthur Ryland but had not had an opportunity. Therefore, you being so kind as to come down there with the keys of the Salver-case, I made it to you, and would you be so kind as to inform him of what had passed between us? This I twice asked you to do, and this I distinctly understood you twice to promise. Therefore, in writing to Mr. Ryland on the next day but one, I assumed that he would have seen you, and that you would have communicated to him what I had said.

I had (I may observe) told Mr. Forster[†1] and Mr. Wills,[†2] on our way down to Birmingham, of my intention of making this offer to Mr. Ryland if I found an opportunity in the course of the day. I proposed to make it to him, not because he was connected or unconnected in this or that way with the dinner of that day, but because I knew him to be much interested in the projected Institution, and because I had received the greatest help and attention from him when I was in Birmingham with the Guild.[†3] The opportunity did not present itself; and I was saying as much to them on our way to the Railroad, a very few minutes before I met you.

In reference to the announcement in the newspaper.[†4] I thought it injudicious and premature; not calculated to serve the object, so long in advance; and certainly calculated to overwhelm me with communications, impossible to be complied with, from other places.

I hope that no shade of difference or discord may be cast on any one, by a little project from which I trusted that we should all derive some pleasure; and that any misconception between you and Mr. Ryland will be easily smoothed away—if for no other reason, in consideration for

Yours faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

George Linnæus Banks Esquire

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 13 JANUARY 1853*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Thirteenth January 1853.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I found the enclosed printed extract,[†5] yesterday, in a prospectus of the Society for improving poor dwellings, to which I do not belong.[†6] Lord Ingestre[†7] appears to be the great light of this one, and I rather doubt him after his determined championship[†8] of Capt. Warner's[†1] long range.[†2] You will see, now, what the Bermondsey Improvement business I mentioned in my note about Hickman's Folly, means.[†3]

I also enclose a note from Mr. Austin, received last night, about Leipzig. Dr. Sutherland[†4] is one of the Board's most trustworthy advisers, and I think his opinion a very sound one.[†5]

I was unfortunate in not being able to get to the Ragged School[†6] last night; but I was shut up in Bleak House from 10 to 5, and then had to go to the Household Words office until 9.

Ever Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 13 JANUARY 1853*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Mivart's Hotel | Brook Street.

Tavistock House | Thursday Thirteenth January | 1853.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

The gentleman for whom I want to get the best introductions I can obtain, in Melbourne, is Mr. Richard Henry Horne,[†7]—who some years since wrote an epic poem of great merit called Orion[†8]—who is the Author of a very pretty book which I know you read, called The Poor Artist[†9]—and who has written many things in Household Words.[†10] I am far from sure that he took a wise step in emigrating;[†11] but there he is in Melbourne, and I very earnestly desire to aid him there if I can.[†12]

Ever Most Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To W. BRIDGES ADAMS,[†1] 14 JANUARY 1853

MS Private; seen before destruction in Prestwick air-crash Dec 1954.

Tavistock House. | Friday Evening Fourteenth January | 1853.

My Dear Sir.

Christmas merry-makings, combined with the business of most seasons, I hope will excuse my delay in answering your note.

It would be impossible, I think, reasonably to champion the idea you set forth, without having an accurate knowledge of the precision of all the estimates, and the fidelity of the calculations on which the commercial results of the scheme are based; and this would be more within the province of The Builder[†2] than of Household Words. For obvious reasons also, I am particularly careful of joint-stock schemes—of which I am daily asked to expound some scores.

Lightly and plainly stated, I should be very glad and willing to make known the leading features of your friend's design,[†3] if it would suit you so to describe them. But I do not think I could well do more in its present stage. The analogy between it and the Model Lodging Houses—or Dwellings—for families of smaller means,[†4] might be very efficiently pointed out.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. Bridges Adams Esquire.

To MISS CAROLINE FEARON,[†5] 14 JANUARY 1853*

MS Dr J. H. Austin, Birmingham.

Tavistock House, London | Fourteenth January 1853.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Miss Fearon, and begs to inform her that Gable College[†6] really exists—but is not described in the paper to which she refers, under its own name—and is limited, under certain peculiar conditions, to the reception of the sons of clergymen.[†7]

He will endeavour to enlighten Miss Fearon on the topics on which she very reasonably looks for information from Household Words.

He cannot undertake to answer her remaining (and first) enquiry; not because he receives her confidence and kind feeling of personal interest with anything but pleasure, but because it is often impossible for him even to acknowledge the receipt of the letters of his incredibly numerous correspondents, and always impossible to address dissertations to them.

To W. C. MACREADY,[†1] 14 JANUARY 1853

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Friday Night | Fourteenth January 1853.

My Dearest Macready.

I have been much affected by the receipt of your kindest and best of letters; for I know out of the midst of what anxieties[†2] it comes to me, and I appreciate such remembrance from my heart.

You and yours are always with us however. It is no new thing for you to have a part in any scene of my life. It very rarely happens that a day passes without our thoughts and conversation travelling to Sherborne.[†3] We are so much there, that I cannot tell you how plainly I see you as I write.

I know you would have been full of sympathy and approval, if you had been present at Birmingham,[†4] and that you would have concurred in the tone I tried to take about the eternal duties of the Arts to the People.[†5] I took the liberty of putting the Court and that kind of thing out of the question, and recognizing nothing but the Arts and the People. The more we see of Life and its brevity, and the World and its Vanities, the more we know that no exercise of our abilities in any Art, but the addressing of it to the great ocean of humanity in which we are drops, and not to bye-ponds (very stagnant) here and there, ever can or ever will lay the foundation of an endurable retrospect. Is it not so? You should have as much practical information on this subject now, my dear friend, as any man.

My dearest Macready I cannot forbear this closing word—I still look forward to our meeting as we used to do in the happy times we have known together, so far as your old hopefulness and energy are concerned. And I think I never in my life have been more glad to receive a sign, than I have been to hail that which I find in your hand-writing.

Some of your old friends at Birmingham were full of interest and enquiry.[†6] Kate and Georgina send their dearest loves to you and to Miss Macready,[†7] and to all the children. I am ever and no matter where I am—and quite as much in a crowd as alone—my dearest Macready

Your affectionate and most attached friend

CHARLES DICKENS

To BERNHARD TAUCHNITZ,[†1] 14 JANUARY 1853

Extract from Curt Otto, Der Verlag Bernhard Tauchnitz, 1837-1912, Leipzig, 1912, pp. 52-3.

Tavistock House, London, January 14th, 1853.

While he[†2] is well looked after (as all boys require to be) I wish him to be not too obviously restrained, and to have the advantages of cheerful and good society.... I want him to have an interest in, and to acquire a knowledge of the life around him, and to be treated like a gentleman though pampered in nothing. By punctuality in all things great or small, I set great store.

To H. T. TUCKERMAN,[†3] 14 JANUARY 1853†

MS Huntington Library.

Tavistock House | Friday Evening | Fourteenth January 1853.

Dear Sir

I have the pleasure of remembering you very well,[†4] and am happy to reply to your note.

I cannot undertake to answer for any other periodical than Household Words, as I have not the least connexion with any other such miscellany. But I can assure you, in reference to that journal, that it is always open to good contributions, and always happy to receive and pay for them. Of course their acceptance depends on their suitability to its pages, and their being in unison with its general tone, spirit, and objects.[†5]

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Henry T. Tuckerman Esquire

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 16 JANUARY 1853*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Sunday Sixteenth January | 1853.

My Dear Miss Coutts

I will make an appointment with Mr. Galasher[†6] for one day in this week now coming, and will endeavour to get out of him all that you want to know.[†7]

I have not yet received Mrs. Matthews'[†1] references, but have told her to get one direct from Professor Sedgwick.[†2]

To Tauchnitz at Leipzig, I have written, asking him now to enquire, and let me know whom he can most highly recommend for Charley. I have given him a minute detail of what is wanted.

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

To MESSRS BRADBURY & EVANS,[†3] 17 JANUARY 1853

MS Mr H. Le Roy Edgar.

Tavistock House | Seventeenth January 1853.

My Dear B & E.

I find that Mr. Stone,[†4] next door but one here,[†5] did not receive his Bleak House this month; and that a similar omission has once before occurred in his case. You remember that some time ago,[†6] I had to call your attention to the same complaint made by Mr. Carlyle.[†7] I think this new matter requires looking into, as a porter, judiciously ringing the changes on his Delivery-list, and pocketing twenty numbers or so a month, may perhaps be making himself comfortable at our expense and casting an appearance of carelessness on our business too.

Faithfully Yours always

CD.

Messrs. Bradbury & Evans

To WILKIE COLLINS, 18 JANUARY 1853

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Tuesday January Eighteenth 1853.

My Dear Collins.

If you should be disposed to revel in the glories of the eccentric British Drayma, on Saturday evening, I am the man to join in so great a movement. My money is to be heard of at the Bar of the Household Words, at five o'Clock on that afternoon.

Gin Punch is also to be heard of at the Family Arms Tavistock, on Sunday next at five, when the National Sparkler will be prepared to give Lithers[†8] a bellyfull, if he means anything but Bounce.

I have been thinking of the Italian project; and reducing the time to two months—from the 20th. October to the 20th. December—see the way to a trip that shall really not exclude any foremost place, and be reasonable too.[†1] Details when we meet.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To [THE REV. G. F. GALAHER], [17-19 JANUARY 1853]

Extract in S. J. Davey's catalogue (1888); dated Tavistock House. Address: clearly to the Rev. G. F. Galaher: see To Miss Coutts, 16 Jan. Date: CD was probably writing early in the week before Sun 23 Jan, by when he had seen Galaher (To Miss Coutts, that day).

I offer no apology for writing to you. My name may possibly be not unknown to you, and I am sure that my object will be in any case a sufficient excuse.

A lady, a friend of mine, who has the means of benefiting her fellow creatures, unites the best practical inclinations so to employ them, has some idea that she might do a great deal of good by erecting at her own cost some sanitary dwelling houses for the poor in several miserable parts of London. I have been looking lately at Hickman's Folly (which I believe is in your parish), and the neighbourhood thereabouts; and should be glad to have a little conversation with you on the subject, if you will allow me that pleasure.

May I beg to inquire whether my calling on you on Saturday next at Two o'clock, or on Monday next at half-past Three would suit your convenience? And will you have the goodness to let me know which day will be more agreeable to you? If both should be unsuitable, I shall be happy to keep any appointment you may propose for any other day or hour next week.

To SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON,[†2] [?20 JANUARY 1853]

Mention in To Coote, 24 Jan 53. Date: since Lytton was in Paris, CD had probably written four or five days earlier.

To THE HON. MRS EDWARD CROPPER,[†3] 21 JANUARY 1853

Text from D, xxx (1934), 120.

Tavistock House, | January 21, 1853.

Dear Mrs. Cropper

I think it better on full consideration to send you the enclosed letter[†4] back without reading it. I have set forth to you the truth of the subject, and have utterly dismissed Lord Denman's[†5] part in it from my mind. What he has written and what I have done, nothing can change. The only one thing in abeyance is the question whether injudicious partizanship will awaken reaction against the slave.[†1] That we shall all see for ourselves—too soon I think—and the perusal of your brother's[†2] letter could assist none of us. I say again, I have cleared my mind of Lord Denham's last opinion of me. I know I deserve his former and wiser judgment, and I cancel the rest for ever.

My dear Mrs. Cropper, | Faithfully yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

To J. B. CARDALE,[†3] 22 JANUARY 1853

Text from N, II, 445-6.

Tavistock House | Twenty Second January 1853

My Dear Sir,

I saw your baker's man this morning using the corner just outside our gates into the Square, for his private purposes—very objectionable under my windows, and not agreeable to any of us. I spoke to him on the subject, and told him that I knew you would sanction no such conduct. He was very impertinent, and I gave him the information that I should let you know it; also that I should, on all our behalfs, give him into custody under the Police Act[†4] if I saw him do it again. He was rather urgent to know what I should do "if I was him,"—which involved a flight of imagination into which I didn't follow him.

Faithfully yours,
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To [MARK LEMON],[†5] [22 JANUARY 1853]

Extract in Dodd Mead catalogue No. 90; MS 1 p.; dated Tavistock House, Saturday night. Date: no doubt the Sat week before Mon 31 Jan, when CD, Lemon and A'Beckett went to the Britannia.

On the last night of the old year, A'Beckett[†6] spoke to me about our promise to go to the Britannia Saloon.[†7] I think Monday is the best night. As you will probably see A'Beckett today, will you arrange with him? This next Monday week would suit me perfectly if convenient to him and you. We must dine at ½ past 4—that French house[†8] you spoke of might be a good place?

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 23 JANUARY 1853*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House. | Sunday Twenty Third January 1853.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I have seen Mr. Gallaher (an Irishman I am sorry to say[†1]) and have gone over his Parish with him. The result I shall be happy to tell you whenever you may appoint. I am going to the House of Detention tomorrow at 2, to see a girl for Shepherds Bush—and Tuesday is the Committee day.[†2] I have no other appointment just now.

I have not the least idea who the writer of the enclosed letter[†3] is—or who the Mr. Stevenson[†4] referred to, is—or of anything about it.

Ever Most Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To CHARLES COOTE,[†5] 24 JANUARY 1853*

MS Mr Peter Goodricke. Address: Charles Coote Esquire | Chatsworth.

Tavistock House | Twenty Fourth January 1853.

My Dear Sir

Before I could reply to your letter, I had to write to Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton. He was in Paris, and I have but now received his answer.

I am sorry to say he thinks the Song too slight for publication detached from the play;[†6] and therefore, very unwillingly (but in justice to himself, he says) with-holds his consent to its being set to Music. He has evidently made up his mind against the publication of the words, and is quite decided on the subject.

I have looked over several books; but have not found in any, the sort of words you want. I have inclined towards two or three pieces, but, on looking at them again, have seen reason to alter my opinion. It is an extremely difficult search; and I am disposed to think that you will be reduced to the necessity of getting what you want, written for you by some accustomed hand, used to writing for Music.

Suppose you were to get from the Duke's Librarian[†7] one or two collections of "Specimens" or "Beauties" of the older poets, first,—and were to look through them. If you were to turn over such a book of extracts, you might light on things that would suit you. Nobody's consent would be wanted, and they would cost nothing.

Mrs. Dickens and her sister send their kind regards.[†1]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Coote Esquire.

To MESSRS DUNCAN, FLOCKHART & CO.,[†2] 24 JANUARY 1853*

MS Macfarlan Smith & Co.

Tavistock House, London | Twenty Fourth January 1853.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his Compliments to Messrs. Duncan, Flockhart & Co., and begs to say that as he cannot send them a Post Office order for the amount in which he is indebted to them (being obliged to make it payable to a christian name) he begs to enclose a half sovereign, and to beg the favor of their giving the little surplus to any distressed person.

To JOHN FORSTER, [LATE 1852-LATE JANUARY 1853]

Extract in F, XI, iii, 837. Date: between first reference to such a plan (To Wills, 12 Oct 52) and the writing of "Down with the Tide" (HW, 5 Feb 53, VI, 481).

I am going out to-night in their boat with the Thames Police.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, [?25 JANUARY 1853]*

MS (fragment) Morgan Library. Date: between 30 Oct 52, when Susan Matcham's illness first referred to, and 18 July 53, the story of her discharge; probably 25 Jan, after Committee (To Miss Coutts, 23 Jan 53).

that it was necessary to discharge Susan Matcham—a girl who has always interested me as much as any girl we have ever had, and for whom I am still very sorry. There was, however, no kind of alternative open. As she was ill, we sent her to St. Thomas's Hospital. I am afraid her course will be a short one, and she will die miserably.[†3] I accepted the House of Detention girl (a workhouse case, but they think very well of her there), and she is to come early next month. All the rest doing well. Some good letters received from abroad, which I will bring you.

With kindest regards to Mr. and Mrs. Brown

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

To CLARKSON STANFIELD, 26 JANUARY 1853*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Tavistock House | Wednesday Twenty Sixth January | 1853.

My Dear Stanny.

I am truly concerned to receive your mournful intelligence, for although I know that your poor son's death[†1] releases him from a hopeless state, most distressing to you to have contemplated and to him to have endured, I am sensible that it cannot but be, for the time, a shock to an affectionate heart like yours. I heartily sympathize with you my dear friend in resigning him to the mercy of God and that blessed Saviour in whom we all trust humbly, according to our several ways.

Ever affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Clarkson Stanfield Esquire.

To MRS GORE,[†2] 27 JANUARY 1853*

MS University of Texas.

Tavistock House. | Twenty Seventh January 1853.

My Dear Mrs. Gore.

I really cannot tell you how much you have gratified me, both by your unexpected compliment,[†3] and by your unaffected manner of rendering it. Your kind note gave me one of the most agreeable surprises I have ever received, and I can honestly and heartily assure you that you could have distinguished no one by this mark of remembrance who could have been more sensible of it than I am, or who could have set a higher value upon it than I do.

I should have written to you immediately on the receipt of yours. But I wished to acknowledge the safe arrival of the book at the same time, and it only reached me last night.

It is a trite thing to say how proud I am at heart, to be so esteemed by a writer of such power and humour who knows humanity so well, and dissects it so wittily—so I won't say it, and you will consider the present paragraph blotted out.

My Dear Mrs. Gore | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To WILKIE COLLINS, 28 JANUARY 1853

MS Morgan Library.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS
Friday Twenty Eighth January 1853.

My Dear Collins.

Many thanks for the enclosed letter. I do not, however, on reading it, find anything in it that I have not already got in those "set up" masses of Australian matter[†1]—except the story of the bonnet. Said story, alone, would scarcely do. Therefore I think it better (and fairer to the writer too) not to take it out.

Your Free Trade solution of that Enigma, I feel at once to be an inspiration. It was no doubt Free Trade going somewhere by Railway—clearly to some manufacturing town in the North—to a meeting I should think.[†2]

That damage was just ten shillings—[†a]Scusa!—dieci Roberti. E miracolosa, la vostra Italiana, amico mio. Per Baccho! Bisogna ricordarmi della mia! L'ho quasi dimenticato. Sette anni fa—credo—era stabilito in Genova?—Nove—nove!—O Dio.[†a]

Lemon à Beckett, et moi, nous allons, Lundi prochain a la Salle Britannique (Britannia Saloon). Voulez-vous nous accompagner, mon cher? Oui? Ecrivez donc à Lemon, et dites-lui "Je serai charmé et flatté de faire un des convives a cette reunion spirituelle! Commandez (mon cher Citron) le diner pour 4 personness[†3] au lieu de 3." Le petit diner aura lieu a l'Albion[†4] (perfide) a 5 ¼ heurs—en haut—en particulier. [†b]Vive Napoleon et sa femme![†b†5]

To JAMES STANSFELD,[†6] 28 JANUARY 1853†

MS Auckland Public Library.

Tavistock House | Friday Evening | Twenty Eighth January 1853.

My Dear Sir

I am sorry that I cannot comply with the request you do me the honor to prefer.[†7]

Into the reasons (not quite unknown to M. Mazzini)[†8] which I might still have for declining, even if my time were not, as it is, completely occupied, it is unnecessary for me to enter.[†9] I am so unable to encroach upon my present limited leisure for rest and relaxation, by attending public meetings, that I have but one such engagement between this and Christmas.

My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

James Stansfeld Esquire

To HENRY AUSTIN, 31 JANUARY 1853*

MS Morgan Library. Address (envelope, MS Private): Henry Austin Esquire | General Board of Health | Whitehall. PMJA 31 1853.

Athenaeum | Monday 31st. January 1853.

My Dear Henry

Can you contrive to come with me to Bermondsey on Wednesday afternoon (Thursday if more convenient to you) to look at a site for a Model House? I will call on you at any time you may appoint, and take you there. Will you come home afterwards, and dine. A word in reply, to Tavistock House.

In haste Ever affecy.

CD.

February

To HENRY AUSTIN, 1 FEBRUARY 1853*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | First February 1853.

My Dear Henry

At 3 on Thursday, I will be with you.

Affecy. Ever

CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 1 FEBRUARY 1853

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Evening February First 1853.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I found the foregoing scrap[†1] in the Times of to day, as I was reading it just now after dinner. Perhaps you may have seen it, but I send it. I had written a most savage and Zoological roaring on the subject, for Household Words,[†2] this very morning (in pursuance of our parting talk yesterday)—and suppose it must now go among the lost treasures of mankind.

The Board of Health being engaged in some pressing enquiries at Croydon, Mr. Austin proposes Thursday instead of Wednesday, for the Bermondsey expedition. As that evening is usually my revising evening at Household Words, I will come in at Stratton Street on Friday Evening if that will suit you. I shall conclude that it does, unless you tell me that it does not.

Your note of last night suggests that we might adopt this, as a very good, practical, safe, and sound plan.[†1] First build the house. Then, before it is inhabited, make it known through a sensible handbill, plain to the commonest capacity (and well circulated in the neighbourhood) that it will be shewn [†a]and explained,[†a] to all decently behaved people, on certain days. And then, to all who come, and to all the little tradesmen and so forth in the neighbourhood, give another little bill which shall be the history of the objects of the house—which shall state that they are easily attainable, in a considerable degree, by the humblest landlords; to †a the improvement of †a their own property, the greater happiness and health of their tenants, and their own peace of mind when they come to think about it—and which shall inform them in conclusion, that on a certain day and hour in every month †a any small proprietor †a will find in that Model House two or three gentlemen assembled, for the purpose of shewing him at how small an expence he can improve the houses he now lets—of giving him friendly advice—and even of assisting him to do what is right, if he will only do it. I think this, done from the 'Vantage ground of the house itself which they can see and touch like so many Thomases, would be a discreet means of using your generosity to the best account. Perhaps you will think of it too.

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

I am sorry to say that Susan Matcham is neither at St. Thomas's Hospital, nor at Guy's. Mr. A Beckett sent this morning, and she had not been received at the one or the other.†2

To SARAH, LADY LYTTELTON,†3 5 FEBRUARY 1853*

MS Mr Richard Moore.

Tavistock House | Saturday Fifth February 1853.

Dear Lady Lyttelton

We most heartily rejoice in the intelligence you have so kindly sent me, and unite in loving remembrances to our dear friend.†4 That the child should be a daughter†5 seems so comforting and good, that your letter gives us a new delight in that announcement. We had been wishing that it might be so, very often.

May God bless them both, and make them so happy in each other in the years to come that this late affliction,†1 though so heavy, may be lightened from this hour—as I hope and believe it will. That seems to be but consistent with the noble spirit and religious trust the sufferer has shewn under its shadow.†2

Mrs. Dickens and her sister beg me to present to you their best regards and thanks, in which I cordially join.

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The | Lady Lyttelton.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 7 FEBRUARY 1853*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Seventh February 1853. | (And my Birthday)

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I think I would recommend leaving Mrs. Matthews[†3] alone, for the present. It seems a case like Mrs. Goldsmith's[†4]—quite genuine and not at all liable to abuse. We shall probably hear more from her respecting the remaining boy, bye and bye.[†5]

Many thanks for your offer of the votes.[†6] I shall be very glad indeed to have them. I return the card, in case you should forget the child's name.

I must send round tomorrow evening, to enquire how you are. I should be relieved by knowing in one line from you or Mrs. Brown, that Lord Campbell[†7] has made short work of Mr. Dunn[†8]—as I very confidently expect he will.[†9] The more I have thought of the circumstances under which the action is brought, the more flagrant and shameful the thing becomes. A more striking illustration of what I deliberately believe to be the only intelligible and consistent principle of the English law—the principle of making business for itself—could scarcely be conceived.[†10]

Poor Mr. Forster is laid up again. Rheumatism in his eyes and both feet. He has been in bed since Tuesday, and I see small present chance of his getting up again.

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

To DR JOHN ELLIOTSON,[†1] 7 FEBRUARY 1853*

MS Widener Collection, Harvard.

Tavistock House | Seventh February 1853.

My Dear Elliotson

I am very truly obliged to you for the loan of your remarkable and learned lecture on Spontaneous Combustion;[†2] and I am not a little pleased to find myself fortified by such high authority.[†3] Before writing that chapter of Bleak House,[†4] I had looked up all the more famous cases you quote (as I dare say you divined in reading the description);[†5] but three or four of those you incidentally mention—two of them in 1820[†6]—are new to me.[†7] And your explanation is so beautifully clear, that I could particularly desire to refer to it several times before I come to the last No. and the Preface.[†8]

May I keep it carefully by me until the Summer?[†9] I can warrant myself most reliable in all matters connected with the preservation of papers, and should have it under my hand at any time. Or shall I return it to you, first copying it?—which I do not like to do without your permission.

It is inconceivable to me how people can reject such evidence, supported by so much familiar knowledge, and such reasonable analogy. But I suppose the long and short of it, is, that they don't know, and don't want to know, any thing about the matter.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To W. H. WILLS, 8 FEBRUARY 1853

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS
Tuesday Eighth February 1853.

My Dear Wills.

I think the best way will be for you to make an appointment with Collins, and talk to him on the subject of the enclosed. I don't quite understand from his letter that you explained to him that I doubt the subject of hereditary insanity—not with an eye to the feelings of the public in general, but with a consideration for those numerous families in which there is such a taint. The force of my objection lies in that range of the subject only.

On the whole I am disposed to think that it will be best to accept his offer of a new story instead.[†1] And it is desirable to explain to him that a story within a story—as this is—is complicated and difficult for our peculiar purpose.[†2]

I think there are many things, both in the inventive and descriptive way, that he could do for us if he would like to work in our direction. And I particularly wish him to understand this, and to have every possible assurance conveyed to him that I think so, and that I should particularly like to have his aid.[†3] See if he cannot strike out one or two subjects while with you, to begin upon.

Will you give Mr. Brownlow[†4] a call one day when you are near there? Seeing in the enclosed card that he was interested in a child's election for the St. Ann's Schools,[†5] I got Miss Coutts's votes—also enclosed. But I can't find the child's name in the List, and consequently can't set a No. against his name.

Ever Faithfully
CD

To THOMAS COE,[†1] 9 FEBRUARY 1853*

MS Fales Collection, New York University Library. Address: Mr. Coe.

Tavistock House | Ninth February 1853.

Dear Mr. Coe.

If you will be so good as to send me one ticket for the Dress Circle[†2] in return for the enclosed, we shall be quits.

I blame myself for not having answered your former letter. Let me assure you that in the Guild campaign, I had the greatest pleasure in your assistance[†3] and that of Mrs. Coe,[†4] and that the cheerful good-humour with which it was always rendered, greatly enhanced its value and made it particularly agreeable. I shall always be interested in your welfare, and should hope by all means to enlist your services if I were ever to engage in such a design again.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 9 FEBRUARY 1853*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Ninth February 1853. | Wednesday Evening

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I think of turning the tables on Mr. Dunn and bringing an action for damages against him. It must have been he who prevented my doing anything yesterday, and not over-much (in spite of determined efforts) today.

Pray give Mrs. Brown my best thanks for bringing her most welcome news[†5] this morning. I am so sorry not to have seen her. But I was in such a Bearish condition when I withdrew from human ken this morning, that they were afraid to come to me!—

I hope to be able to get to Mr. MacGregor[†6] tomorrow or Friday. I have seen Archdeacon Sinclair,[†7] and have a small budget to communicate from him.

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To SPENCER T. HALL,[†1] 9 FEBRUARY 1853*

MS Private.

Tavistock House | Ninth February 1853.

Dear Sir

I received your book[†2] safely, this day. If (as I believe) I have the pleasure of being a subscriber to it,[†3] Mr. W. H. Wills Household Words office will be happy to forward my subscription on receiving a business-line from you to that effect.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Spencer T. Hall Esquire.

To W. H. WILLS, 15 FEBRUARY 1853*

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS
Tuesday Fifteenth Feby. 1853.

My Dear Wills.

Enclosed is a Poem which I suppose slipped out of the other papers I sent you this morning.[†4]

Forster's corrected Proof of the Seventy Eight Years ago, I shall have tomorrow. Put that article down therefore for this next No.[†5]

White[†6] will dine here with us on Thursday.

Ever Faithfully
CD.

W. H. Wills Esquire.

To DR F. H. F. QUIN,[†7] 17 FEBRUARY 1853

Text from Edward Hamilton, A Memoir of Frederick Hervey Foster Quin, M.D., privately printed, 1879, p. 50.

Tavistock House | 17th Feb., 1853.

My dear Quin,

I am truly sorry that I am engaged to a christening dinner at Chiswick on Saturday,[†1] where I shall appropriately appear after your invitation (in accordance with the catechism) as an outward and visible sign of an inward and spiritual grief.[†2]

Ever faithfully yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To W. H. WILLS, 17 FEBRUARY 1853

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS
Thursday Night Seventeenth Feby. 1853.

My Dear Wills.

I have gone over the proofs and made the best of the names. I don't like Forster's paper[†3] to lead off with, but don't think Sala's[†4] better. Also I am restless about Hobson[†5] and doubt the expediency of going back to so poor a thing—as, if I had a weak leg, or a game eye, I don't think I would call attention to it. But I leave Hobson, not to confuse the Proof. There are awful haltings in the Poem,[†6] but I have made the best of it.

Faithfully Ever

CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 18 FEBRUARY 1853*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street | Piccadilly | London.

Tavistock House | Eighteenth February 1853.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I think the enclosed from Germany (as I hope you will think it) very satisfactory.[†7] I hope to send Charley off, rather before than after the end of this month.

What shall I do, in reference to this other enclosed from Mrs. Matthews?—Send her how much?[†8]

I have seen Mr. MacGregor and will write to you again as soon as I am out of Bleak House for the month.[1[[sic]]†9]—I am very near the door.

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

To MRS GASKELL,[†1] 21 FEBRUARY 1853

Text from N, II, 448.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS

Monday Twenty-First February 1853

My Dear Mrs. Gaskell,

I take the earliest opportunity of answering your letter—for I have been so closely occupied since its receipt, that this is the first disengaged morning on which I have found time to read the enclosed papers.

I am sorry to say that I cannot have the pleasure of accepting them. They possess no kind of characteristic to render them available. Between ourselves—and not for the information of their authoress[†2]—they are of that intensely dreary and commonplace description to which, not even the experience of this place reconciles my wondering mind. Everybody could write such things, I imagine; but how anybody can contentedly sit down to do it, is inscrutable. Don't you feel the same astonishment? People don't plunge into Churches and play the Organs, without knowing the notes or having the ghost of an ear. Yet fifty people a day will rush into manuscript for these leaves only who have no earthly qualification but the actual physical art of writing.

Wills is ill,[†3] and I am at this moment sitting (up to neck) in a quagmire of these productions.

Ever faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To SAMUEL CARTWRIGHT,[†4] 24 FEBRUARY 1853*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Tavistock House. | Twenty Fourth February 1853.

My Dear Cartwright.

With the greatest pleasure. I book myself for the 22nd. of March at 7.

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Samuel Cartwright Esquire.

To MRS MORSON,[†1] 24 FEBRUARY 1853*

MS Dr A. A. Silverman.

Tavistock House | Twenty Fourth February 1853

Dear Mrs. Morson

I enclose you £5 petty cash. I will leave the bills for a day or two, until I shall have seen Miss Coutts.

Faithfully Yours
CD.

To G. H. LEWES,[†2] 25 FEBRUARY 1853*

MS Mrs Carrington Ouvry.

Private

Tavistock House | Twenty Fifth February 1853.

My Dear Lewes.

Liebig[†3] is a great man, deserving of all possible respect, and receiving no greater deference from any one than from me. But I cannot set his opinion—his mere opinion and argument—against full scientific evidence of a fact.[†4] That evidence appears to me to exist, on the subject of what is called (rightly or wrongly) spontaneous combustion. If I take anything on evidence, I must take that. I have the greatest regard for, and admiration of, Owen.[†5] But if I had such evidence of the existence of a Sea Serpent as I have of cases similar to Krook's, I could not for a moment set even his ingenious argument against such human experience.

In the beginning you rather hastily (and not quite, I think in all good humour, with that consideration which your knowledge of me might have justified) assumed that I knew nothing at all about the question—had no kind of sense of my responsibility—and had taken no trouble to discriminate between truth and falsehood.[†6] Now the object of my note is simply to assure you that when I thought of the incident—which came into my mind, as having that analogy in it which is suggested at the end of the chapter[†1]—I looked into a number of books with great care, expressly to learn what the truth was.[†2] I examined the subject as a Judge might have done. And without laying down any law upon the case, I placed the evidence impartially before myself, the Jury, as I will place it before you.

Into the argument it appears to me quite unnecessary, with such evidence, to enter. No one can suppose that such a death comes of any normal or natural condition of the body. No one can know what astonishing change has taken place in the body when it arrives at that pass; because the body is in the main destroyed. The difficulty of consuming a human body by ordinary fire (which is enormous) exaggerates beyond all bounds the impossibility of accounting for the deaths of this catalogue of people[†3] by any ordinary means. I know very well that phosphuretted hydrogen gas will burn when it is almost surrounded by water.[†4] I also know that this gas is not usually formed in human beings, and I likewise know that of every human being so many pounds of water form a component part.[†5] But I know that before such a death can take place, there must be a stupendous disturbance of the usual functions of the body; and to tell me that if the gas were not there, and the water were all there, or other usual proportions and balances were preserved, the body could not be consumed, is merely to tell me in other words that if I be always quite well, I shall never die; or that if I retain the sight of both eyes, I cannot possibly be blind.

The question is a question of evidence. Have people been found almost consumed, when there were no external agencies by which they could have been reduced to that state? If so, have there usually (not without exception, but usually) been pervading circumstances of age, sex, or previous habits, or all three,[†6] suggesting the presence of pretty uniform conditions, essential to the extraordinary law (extraordinary, that is to say, within our small experience) governing such cases?

Refer to an article by Pierre Aime Lair[†7] in the Journal de Physique,[†8] or to the sixth Volume of the Philosophical Transactions[†9] where it is presented in another article by Alexander Tilloch.[†10] You will there find a number of cases—all of women in the decline of life.[†1] Refer to the Annual Register for 1773[†2] for the case of Mary Clues[†3]—a woman of fifty, and a drunkard. To the transactions of the Royal Society of London for the case of Grace Pitt[†4]—a woman of sixty: not stated to be a drunkard, but not likely to have been a lady of very temperate habits, as she got out of bed every night to smoke a pipe, and had drunk an immense quantity of spirits within a few hours of her death. Refer to Le Cat[†5] for the case of Madame Millet who got drunk every day.[†6] He lived in the house, and minutely states the case. And besides his being a man of very high scientific and medical reputation, there was a certain M. Chretien, a surgeon, who examined what remained of the body on the spot where it was consumed,[†7] and gave his evidence in detail before the Tribunal of Justice that found the woman's husband guilty of her murder; though a High Court of Appeal, expressly on the ground that it was a case of spontaneous combustion and on the irresistible strength of the evidence, acquitted him.[†8] Refer to the Life of Bianchini prebendary of Verona[†9] to observe that the overpowering evidence of the death by these means of the Contessa Baudi[†10] (a most exact and minute account of the smallest particulars of which case he drew up with judicial precision and formality) quite devoted him to the theme afterwards: so important did it appear to him in Medical Jurisprudence, and so strong was his apprehension that its not being credited might lead to the conviction of innocent persons. This old lady was not a drunkard, but had been in the habit of bathing in great quantities of Camphor.[†11] Refer to the Journal de Medicine Vol LIX, for the case of a woman at Aix (a little drunke[n][†12] old woman),[†13] also minutely reported by M. Rocas, a surgeon who saw the cindery body and the room before they were disturbed. Dr. McCormac[†1] of Belfast (formerly a student at the Hotel Dieu in Paris) wrote to me, a few days since, "Dupuytren[†2] whose experience in burns was immense, was wont indeed, to consider the burns from human combustion, by some termed spontaneous, as a sixth form of burns".[†3] I could refer you to more cases, but these are enough. And throughout them there is apparent, not only the same general set of circumstances before death, but the same general appearances afterwards. Opinions on the subject, supporting me, and opinions of great practical men, I could give you by the score. But I lay them all aside, even those of the best lecturers and writers on Medical Jurisprudence[†4] (though those I might fairly impress, as being founded on the evidence); but the evidence is enough for me; and so far from making any qualifying statement in the Preface to Bleak House[†5] I can only say that I have read your ingenious letters with much pleasure—that I champion no hypothetical explanation of the fact—but that I take the fact upon the testimony, which I considered quite impartially and with no preconceived opinion.

Ever My Dear Lewes | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

G. H. Lewes Esquire

To FRANK STONE, 25 FEBRUARY 1853*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Twenty Fifth February 1853.

My Dear Stone.

I received a note from Cardale the other day, reminding me that the garden-lengthening accounts had not been paid. I then requested Cubitts[†6] to make the three out separately, which they had not originally done. They have complied this morning, and I send you yours.[†1]

Ever Affecy.

CD.

To HENRY AUSTIN, 26 FEBRUARY 1853*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House. | Twenty Sixth February 1853. | Saturday

My Dear Henry

I enclose a Cheque for Forty Pounds on account of the St. Stephen's matter.[†2] Pray don't scruple to let me know when there is anything to be paid.

I have seen MacGregor (the Chairman of the South Eastern) on the subject of that piece of ground, the Mud Field.[†3] The clergyman's[†4] information[†5]

To G. H. LEWES, 27 FEBRUARY 1853

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

Tavistock House | Sunday Morning | Twenty Seventh February 1853

My dear Lewes.

I cannot help laughing—though I am really vexed—at a preposterous mistake which my hand-writing must have occasioned. When I have been long at work on my own manuscript, I write so illegibly and strike out so remorselessly, that at such times my hand (as I well know) is anything but a plain one. Look back to my note, and I think you will certainly find that there is no such word as "not", before "in all good humour." There most positively and unquestionably was no such word in my mind, and I cannot believe that it has got into the note without my observation. There may be a "but", or there may be an erasure; I cannot sufficiently remember the context, to suggest what the marvellous sign may be—but this Deponent maketh oath and saith it is not[†6] "Not".[†7] The meaning is, that I (the undersigned) in all good humour make that observation. I am as thoroughly persuaded of your good humour in the matter as I am of my own, and I am at once amazed and concerned to find how easily a meaning becomes changed.

I am very unwilling to request that you will not publish my note; because my old regard for you, and our old association, take it out of the category of ordinary communications.

But my objection originates in my own knowledge of the amazing correspondence of which I am the daily victim, and of the attempts that would certainly be made (if I departed in this instance from my invariable rule) by the smaller fry, to draw me into other explanations and statements—and if I wouldn't be drawn, to assume that I allowed judgment to go by default, because when Mr. Lewes &c. &c. Mr. Dickens not only &c. &c. but actually &c. &c. &c.

If you would like, in any article of your own, to set forth this objection and the reasonable necessity of it; and to refer to a private note you had received from me under the exceptional circumstances of our being old friends; and in that manner to quote its contents; I don't know that I should have the resolution still to ask you not to do so.[†1] But although no one save myself can imagine the full extent of the grounds I have for never stepping out of my picture-frame to address the spectators, I know your sense and candor will give me credit for their being very strong indeed when I assure you that I would infinitely rather be unheard in this regard.

Set me right about that Not, with yourself, whatever you do.

Ever My Dear Lewes | Faithfully Yours

CD

G. H. Lewes Esquire

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 28 FEBRUARY 1853†

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS
Monday, Twenty-eighth February, 1853.

My Dear ———,[†2]

It is my misfortune that I can only consider papers offered for insertion here, with one plain and direct reference to their suitability to these pages. If I could take any other circumstances into account, I should have a prodigious staff of contributors, of great merit in various other capacities but unfortunately possessing such slender pretensions to appear in print, that they would speedily settle this benevolent journal.

The lady who has written the paper I unwillingly return, appears to me to have some talent for description; but I am afraid she does not quite distinguish between what is easily written and what is easy writing. A world of patience, labor, and care, separates the two. The paper contains a quantity of words and a mustard seed of matter. The constant address to the reader is a tiresome avoidance of any Art in saying what is to be said, of which we have the most wearisome experience here at least a hundred times a week. But the boy and his mother are very well observed and very well described; and if the sketch had in it any other phase of peasant-life, of equal merit in the setting forth, I should be glad to accept it. I don't know what the lady may be able to tell in this regard, nor would I by any means urge her to try once more, for she might still be wide of the mark. But I feel it right to say thus much.

I would advise her further, for ever and a day to dismiss the Gentle Reader as a monster of the Great Mud Period, who has no kind of business on the face of the literary Earth; to remember if she sit down to write for a journal like this, that she is just an English woman writing the English language for a large English audience, and to consider whether she cannot get on in such an aim without German lines and French words; to forget herself as utterly as the Gentle Reader, and only to remember what she is describing.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [?FEBRUARY 1853]

Extract in F, VII, ii, 571. Date: apparently written shortly before leaving for Brighton on 2 Mar.

What with Bleak House and Household Words and Child's History and Miss Coutts's Home, and the invitations to feasts and festivals, I really feel as if my head would split like a fired shell if I remained here.

To PROFESSOR O. C. MÜLLER,[†1] [?FEBRUARY 1853]

Mention in To Miss Coutts, 1 Apr 53. Date: written when Charley Dickens left for Leipzig, to learn German, at the end of Feb.

Giving him a description of Charley's character.

March

To R. H. HORNE, 2 MARCH 1853*

MS University of Texas. Address (in Wills's hand): By Overland Mail via Singapore | R. H. Horne Esquire | Captain Chisholm | Swanston Street | Melbourne | S. Australia.

Household Words Office, Wednesday Second March 1853.

My Dear Horne. We (that is, Wills and I) intend to dispatch this letter by the Overland Route, and have clearly settled in our own minds that it is to reach you with most triumphant speed. All well. I met Mrs. Horne[†2] the other day at Highgate,[†3] looking in excellent health. She saw the old year out with us,[†4] and is as well and happy as Julia[†5] has any right to be in the absence of her Falkland.[†5] Bulwer's

Comedy[†1] is acting at the Haymarket.[†2] I attended two Rehearsals, to give them the business, but have not had the heart to see it from the front. Kate and Georgina went on the first night, and returned with greatly increased admiration of the distinguished amateurs. A miserable being of no note, enacts Colonel Flint.[†3] Nothing is changed for the better[†4] but the drunken scene of Topham's[†5] part,[†6] which I am told is very humourously done by Buckstone.[†7] If you had seen the dense conventionality of some of them at the Rehearsal! Mr. Stuart, who does the Duke,[†8] actually steamed with conventionality—I saw it passing off from the pores of his skin. Nor could I by any means persuade them that when the Duke was saying to Wilmot[†9] what would infallibly cost him his ducal head if it were overheard, he would not be likely to keep two servants with their ears at the Keyhole. As Mr. F. Webster the Prompter convincingly remarked to me,

"we never have two servants appear at a door in flat when there is an entrance, without reappearing when there is an exit". So the Duke endangered his head according to theatrical precedent, and spoke his concluding speech before the servants and in the doorway (to get under some gas) wherein, as you remember, he remarks, by way of small talk, that he has trusted Ld. Wilmot with his life. The houses are very bad, but all the Theatres are doing wretchedly. Buckstone succeeds to the Lesseeship of the Haymarket at Easter.[†10] He has engaged Miss Cushman[†11] and Helen Faucit,[†12] and there are rumours of Tragedy.[†13] We have not yet sold our Guild Theatre.[†14] Are now going to put it up by Auction. Forster has had another Rheumatic attack of great violence—has been in bed a month—and still lies there.

I have been placed in a situation of great perplexity and difficulty by the Digger's

Diary[†1]—of which we had in type, at one time, 84 Columns[†2]—and the man not aboard ship at the London Docks until within the three last. It was quite out of the question to print it in that state, for it would have been a violation of all our understanding with the public and must have most seriously damaged Household Words. Therefore I was under the necessity of cutting it to shreds and getting it all into two portions, both of which are published.[†3] Even in this reduced state people complain that it is too long, considering that it has not yet begun with Australia.[†4] I am waiting with anxiety for another Ship. If we do not receive some more MS soon, we must close it up with such matter of fact and fancy as we can get together. But I hope for better luck in the speedy receipt of dispatches from you, and when they actually refer to Australia I shall not be so afraid of their length.[†5] The Digger's Wedding we made a separate Chip of.[†6] As it did not occur to you while writing, that these objections would infallibly arise, I am afraid they will be unexpected now. But I had no alternative in the matter, and was obliged to act decidedly, with only one reference—to the interests of the Journal.

Wills is going to add some specimen of his penmanship to this sheet.[†7] He too has been twice ill with bad eyes, and now wears a pair of huge dark spectacles in which he looks something between a Stone-breaker on the highway, and an intensely profound Professor of Boredom generally. I picture you in my mind like a Frontispiece to an adventurous book—in your uniform—on your charger (he rearing, of course)—with your escort in the background, and you encouraging them with drawn sword.[†8] I am glad to find you so cheerful and hopeful,[†1] which is the right thing and will bring its fulfilment. A postcript[†2] in one of your letters has played the very Devil with my intellects and kept them frying ever since. "Plans all changed. Gone to the Manillas."[†3] What can it mean! So I read it, but I have kept it to myself. Must[†4] you write on curlpaper? If not, for the love of Heaven write on something else. You have no idea what bewildering inscrutability we become scared and dazed with—Mad to read, and not able to do it. Your letters are like a particular dream I have sometimes, where I am in a strange country and want to read important notices on the walls and buildings, but they are all in an unknown character.

I am going to Brighton today for a fortnight. Kate and Georgina are already gone. Hearing I was about to write to you they begged me to send their loves and kindest remembrances. I particularly plume myself on the cherry brandy. Ahem! My idea! Have you foregathered with Bumptious[†5] again, and did the Intermediates[†6] really throw his dog[†7] overboard after all? Because if they did, I am ready to subscribe to a Testimonial to the whole body.

Charley is on his way to Leipzig, to live in a Professor's house and get a perfect knowledge of the language. The Jollypostboy[†8] and the others are all thriving. Everything else is as it used to be. All our Guild men enquire after you on all occasions. I met Bulwer this morning in Piccadilly, who did the like. He has been very ill indeed with a violent abscess in his hand, and was crawling about with his hand in a sling, for the first time since his attack three weeks ago. We have had tremendously cold weather and a great deal of snow—ice on the Serpentine—North Easterly gales—broken legged old gentlemen on pavement slides.[†9] To day there is a great thaw, and London looks as if it had a gigantic dirty nose.

Wills cuts in here. Ever My Dear Horne Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To R. R. MADDEN,[†1] 2 MARCH 1853*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: R. R. Madden Esquire | 7 Panton Square | Haymarket.

Tavistock House. | Second March 1853.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his Compliments to Mr. Madden, and begs to say that he has no letters of the late Countess of Blessington[†2] in his possession, which he feels justified in making public.[†3]

To THOMAS SANSOM,[†4] 2 MARCH 1853

Mention in Maggs Bros catalogue No. 433 (Christmas 1922); MS 1 p.; dated Tavistock House, 2 Mar 53; addressed Thomas Sansom.

Declining the invitation of the Roscoe celebration committee.[†5]

To MISS COLTHURST,[†6] 3 MARCH 1853†

MS Colonel Richard Gimbel.

Brighton | Third March 1853.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his Compliments to Miss Colthurst and begs cordially to thank her for her very obliging note. He is exceedingly sensible of her considerate remembrance and her kind offer; but as there are now several pairs of small legs in the habit of running about his garden in town—a temptation which no raven[†7] could possibly withstand—and as it also contains a tame seagull—whose eyes it would be a point of duty with any raven to pick out—he thinks it best, with an eye to the greatest happiness of the greatest number, to decline the pleasure Miss Colthurst proposes to him. He does so reluctantly, and is not the less indebted to her.

To T. M. GREENHOW,[†1] [?3 MARCH 1853]

Mention in To Miss Coutts, 4 Mar. Date: Greenhow had received CD's note on 4 Mar (Greenhow to CD, MS Morgan).

To THOMAS CARLYLE, 4 MARCH 1853

MS National Library of Scotland.

1 Junction Parade, Brighton | Friday Evening March Fourth 1853.

My Dear Carlyle.

Your letter has been forwarded to me here—I am at work on the seashore for a fortnight by way of change—this evening. To my great vexation, for there are very few men I can so ill afford to miss on any occasion as you.

The Secretary of the Literary Fund is Mr. Octavian Blewitt,[†2] and the office is in Great Russell Street Bloomsbury, at the corner of Bloomsbury Square. In support of the applicant's[†3] appeal, a letter from himself will be necessary setting forth his case, and one of recommendation from you.[†4] If he be in such health that he can go out of doors, he will receive from Mr. Blewitt, every possible attention and guidance. If he be not forthcoming, a word from you to the same gentleman would be all powerful. If you feel the least difficulty in moving in the matter or the least desire to avoid it, send the case to me, and I will do so, gladly. Lastly, if three guineas will be of any help to our unfortunate brother, I will place them at your disposal for him on your telling me that you will receive them.

In his application, he must mention his literary claims; that is, he must state what books he has written, or what other literary work he has done.[†5] It is also expedient—if his claims be strong—that he should mention the nature of his present difficulties, and that such a sum would give him hope of conquering them.[†1] I particularly recommend him to see Mr. Blewitt if possible. He may make any use of my name. I am not now one of the relieving board,[†2] but I belong to an amazing body called the Council[†3]—whose functions I have never been able to discover[†4]—and I believe my name would quicken a dull Ear if his claim were addressed to any such.

I shall be here until next Tuesday Week, when I return straight home. Believe me heartily sincere in saying that I am wholly at your service in such a case, and that the word "trouble" is not in my vocabulary.

I send this off in a hurry, to save the post.

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Carlyle Esquire.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 4 [MARCH] 1853†

MS Morgan Library. Date: misdated 4 Oct by CD.

1 Junction Parade, Brighton | Friday Fourth October 1853.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

†a1st. Case:—Mr. Burgess†5 is a common begging-letter writer—Fourpost bedstead in his room—admirable steak on the fire—handsome wife—two extraordinarily jovial children—shelves, full of glasses crockery ware, children's toys &c &c—cupboard full of provender—coals in stock—everything particularly cheerful and cosey. It was such a clear case (he was not at home himself; I think must have stepped out to fetch the beer) that I caused enquiry to be made of the Mendicity Society. They knew him well, and will send me down a report of his life and career, tomorrow.†5

2nd. case:- The lady at Holloway was with her sick husband. Everything scrupulously clean—except the husband. They were in a back parlor, very barely furnished. She has two additional pupils in her little school, and one other private pupil. They have got on up to the present time, but are again so pressed by those small creditors, that certain friends of hers have determined in their small way, to assist her husbands†6 with the few pounds necessary to pay the expenses of taking the benefit of the Insolvent Act. They deplored this with much apparent sincerity, saying that all the creditors, except the baker, were very little tradesmen who would suffer by the loss. They estimate their debts at £50. They were very hopeful and quiet—complained of nothing—asked for nothing—and said that on the whole their creditors had been very patient and considerate.

3rd. case. I have written a note of enquiry to Mr. Greenhow at Newcastle, and shall probably receive his answer tomorrow.†a

It is beautifully fine and bright here, though very cold out of the sun. The weather, wonderfully propitious†1 for walking, but hardly so for authorship as I have not yet made what can be called a beginning.†2

It is quite clear to me that you are all to be pitied for being in London.

With kindest remembrances, in which Mrs. Dickens and her sister join,
Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 5 MARCH 1853*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street | Piccadilly | London

1 Junction Parade, Brighton | Saturday Fifth March 1853.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I enclose you the report (much too lenient) concerning Mr. Burgess.[†3]

In the Soldier dwelling house matter,[†4] I have caused enquiry to be made on the points we arranged, and I am very glad to find that the nearest school is your own St. Stephen's School,[†5] which is within five minutes walk of the piece of ground that has been purchased. Francis Street (the place in question) is a little way behind the school.[†6] On considering the matter, I rather think that the Duke[†7] would not have persevered in his objection, on further reflection. It is probable that he had in his mind Colonels' tailoring emoluments[†8] and other perquisites, to which (as being very profitable) the objection really would apply. But the profit by way of interest on any share that an ordinary Officer would be likely to take, would be so exceedingly small, that I cannot regard it as likely to influence any soldier's mind. For example, my interest on a £25 share in the Society for improving the dwellings of the Poor,[†1] is about fifteen shillings a year.[†2] However, the example of devoting the interest to Educational purposes is a fine one;[†3] and your school being the nearest, seems to make it particularly appropriate.

By way of consolation to those who are absent from Brighton, I may remark here that it is pouring of rain—is very misty—and is blowing. That I have the rheumatism in my back, and was seized in the night (for Mrs. Brown's particular companionship) with my old horrid nervous choaking; to grapple with which fiend, I am going out to buy some of that snuff.[†4]

Dear Miss Coutts. | Ever Faithfully Yours

CD.

To MRS GEORGE HOGGE,[†5] 5 MARCH 1853*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

1 Junction Parade, Brighton | Saturday Fifth March 1853

My Dear Mrs Hogg.

Your letter has been forwarded to me here, where I am staying for a few days.

Apart from the pleasure I should have in hearing from you under any circumstances, I have a melancholy satisfaction in letting you know that I never can let you know how sorry I was to lose the happiness of seeing you at Tavistock House. The sight of your handwriting is a poor substitute for the sight of your fair self, but I receive it as an unexpected gratification and give it the warmest welcome.

I send four specimens of my sign-manual. If you should ever want more, pray let me know.

Mrs Dickens and Miss Hogarth send their kindest regards.

Ever Dear Mrs Hogg | Very Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 6 MARCH 1853

MS Morgan Library.

Brighton | Sixth March 1853.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I am afraid that "green" is not very verdant, and is near (if I have it in my mind correctly) to a most horrible smell of rotten skins.[†1] But I will look at it as soon as I come back, and then report further.

The case you extracted from the paper, is one of the most pitiable class of offences, and one to which the benevolence of the Home would be thoroughly well extended. But the concealment of the birth of a child being a misdemeanour, the poor creature must be tried and sentenced.[†2] As she will not be committed for trial (so I see by the report you enclosed)[†3] until after the lapse of a week, it would be premature to move now. On my return, I will communicate with the Magistrate,[†4] and with the Chaplain of the Prison in which she is, and try—supposing the case be a good one—if we cannot get her after a short imprisonment.[†5] I think we may contrive to do it.

Dear Miss Coutts | Ever Faithfully Yours

CD.[†6]

P.S. Charley has written from Cologne. He could not go on by the Rhine, as it was full of ice. Was to go to Hanover next day, and to Leipzig next day. He was very happy, he said, "except being from home".

To W. H. WILLS, 6 MARCH 1853*

MS Huntington Library.

1 Junction Parade, Brighton | Sunday Sixth March 1853.

My Dear Wills.

I think, all things considered, that we have got out of the Theatre difficulty to admiration.[†7] I am heartily pleased, and congratulate you with all my heart on the near approach of the accountant.

The only remaining piece of intelligence I have, is that I have not been well since I have been here!!! But a vigorous application to Cockle's antibilious Pills[†8] has ensued, and I hope I am all right again.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

W. H. Wills Esquire.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 7 MARCH 1853*

MS Morgan Library.

Brighton, Monday Evening | Seventh March 1853.

My Dear Miss Coutts

I find that Mr. Greenhow[†1] of Newcastle is not the gentleman I supposed.[†2] But I enclose his letter[†3] in reply to my note of enquiry.

I have not got that Holloway Lady's[†4] letter here. If you wish to do anything with her before I come back, however, and will let me know what,—I will take care to have it carefully done. Ever Faithfully Yrs.

CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 8 MARCH 1853*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street | Piccadilly | London.

Brighton | Tuesday Evening, Eighth March | 1853.

My Dear Miss Coutts

Thinking you may derive a moment's amusement from the enclosed letter (by no means a state document) from Charley to Mary, I send it. I am curious for the next, which will contain the first impressions of the Doctor[†5] he is to live with. Mary and Katey came down here today, to stay until we return, and brought it with them.

The weather is softened—even these desolate regions—and shews its softened state by raining perpetually.

With kind regards from all, to Mr. and Mrs. Brown

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To MR MINCHEN,[†6] 8 MARCH 1853

Extract in Rains Galleries catalogue, Mar 1936; MS (3rd person) 1 p.; dated Brighton, 8 Mar 53; addressed Mr. Minchen.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Minchen, and begs to say that he is only acquainted with one published system of shorthand (Gurney's),[†7] and is therefore quite unable to decide upon the relative merits of different systems.

To W. H. WILLS, 9 MARCH 1853*

MS Huntington Library.

Brighton, Wednesday Ninth March | 1853.

My Dear Wills.

GUILD.[†1]

I don't at all like the look of Webster's[†2] letter.[†3] I think it would be best to see him at once. I never heard of any letter of agreement whatever, but I swear to the understood and expressed terms.

H. W.[†1]

My brother Alfred[†4] is here, and I will send up any odds and ends I have, by him this evening.

PERSONAL.[†1]

We have had a long and full letter from Charley. I don't therefore think it worth while for Johnson[†5] to come down. He can post his account of the expences to me. Pray let him know that Charley highly praises his attention and usefulness.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To J. B. CARDALE, 10 MARCH 1853*

MS Dickens House.

Junction Parade, Brighton | Thursday Evening Tenth March 1853.

My Dear Sir

My recollection of the agreement certainly was not what you describe, and was what I have described. But the agreement itself of course over-rides all other considerations; and I write to Messrs. Cubitt by this post, to say that I understand they have received it from you, and to request them to divide the expense strictly in accordance with it.

I assure you I would far rather pay the whole cost, than have the least question about it.

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

John B Cardale Esquire.

To MESSRS W. CUBITT & CO., [10 MARCH 1853]

Mention in last.

To JOHN FORSTER, [10 MARCH 1853]

Text from F, VII, ii, 571*n*. Date: clearly the day after the adjourned inquest (see below), held on 9 Mar.

Great excitement here about a wretched woman who has murdered her child.[†1] Apropos of which I observed a curious thing last night. The newspaper offices (local journals) had placards like this outside:

CHILD MURDER IN BRIGHTON INQUEST
COMMITTAL OF THE MURDERESS[†2]

I saw so many common people stand profoundly staring at these lines for half an hour together—and even go back to stare again—that I feel quite certain they had not the power of thinking at all connectedly or continuously, without having something about it before their sense of sight. Having got that, they were considering the case, wondering how the devil they had come into that power. I saw one man in a smock frock lose the said power the moment he turned away and bring his hob-nails back again.

To W. H. WILLS, 10 MARCH 1853

MS Huntington Library.

1 Junction Parade, Brighton. | Thursday Night Tenth March 1853.

My Dear Wills.

[†a]I have gone through this No.[†3] carefully (as you will see, on looking through my marks—I have been obliged to query twice or thrice, really not understanding what is meant) and am quite out of heart with it.

Sala, very poor. One of the noblest subjects that can be written on, with really nothing in its treatment. Quite above him.[†a†4]

A Doctor of Morals,[†5] impossible of insertion as it stands.[†6] A mere puff for Hill,[†7] with all the difficult parts of the question blinked, and many statements utterly at variance with what I am known to have written.[†8] It is exactly because the great bulk of offences in a great number of places are committed by professed thieves, that it will not do to have Pet Prisoning[†1] advocated,[†b] without grave remonstrance and great care.[†b] That class of prisoner is not to be reformed. We must begin at the beginning and prevent, by stringent education and supervision of wicked parents, that class of prisoner from being regularly supplied as if he were a human necessity.

Do they teach trades in Workhouses,[†2] and try to fit their people (the worst part of them) for Society? Come with me to Tothill Fields Bridewell,[†3] or to Shepherd's Bush, and I will shew you what a workhouse girl is. Or look to my walk in a workhouse (in H. W.)[†4] and to the glance at the youths I saw in one place, positively kept like wolves.[†5]

Mr. Hill thinks prisons could be made nearly self-supporting.[†6] Have you any idea of the difficulty that is found in disposing of Prison-Work? Or does he know that the Treadmills didn't grind the air because the State or the Magistracy objected to the competition of prison labor with free labor, but because the work could not be got?

I never can have any kind of prison discipline disquisition in H. W. that does not start with the first great principle I have laid down, and that does not protest against Prisons being considered per se. Whatever chance is given to a man in a prison, must be given to a man in a refuge for distress.[†7]

The article in itself is very good, but it must have these points in it; otherwise I am not only compromising opinions I am known to hold, but the journal itself is blowing hot and cold and playing fast and loose, in a ridiculous way.

That heap of chips is quite out of the question. Vegetable Miracles had better be made a separate article, and called Receipt of Fern Seed[†8]—which is a phrase of Falstaff's.[†9]

The Australian Article had better be called, I think, Lost and Found at the Gold Diggings.[†10] It, too, is very poor.

As to La Galite,[†11] it looks like a wretched translation from a wretched original, and I can say no more of it. But observe the horrible injudiciousness of leaving in it, at page 89, that reference to the Slave Dealer,[†12] after all the howling there has been about that infernal African who could wear his chains in peace—and be damned to him.[†1]

Starting a paper in India[†2] is very droll—to us. But it is full of references that the public don't understand, and don't in the least care for. Bourgeois, brevier, minion, and nonpareil, long primer, turn-ups, dummy advertisements and reprints, back form, imposing stone, and locking up, are all quite out of their way and a sort of slang that they have no interest in.[†3]

Let me see a revise when you have got it together, and if you can strengthen it—do.[†4] I mention all the objections that occur to me as I go on—not because you can obviate them (except in the case of the Prison paper) but because if I make a point of doing so always, you will feel and judge the more readily both for yourself and me too,[†b] at the same time, "one and indivisible",[†5b] when I take an Italian flight.

YOU[†6]
How are the eyes getting on?
ME.[†6]

I have been at work all day.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To F. M. EVANS, 11 MARCH 1853

Facsimile([aa]), extract and summary in Edmund D. Brooks, Minneapolis catalogue, n.d.

[a]1, Junction Parade, Brighton, | Eleventh March 1853.

My dear Evans,

I have gone through the accounts[†7] and find them in all respects intelligible, explicit, and plain. It is indeed a noble and glorious balance,[†8] and expanded my chest considerably (I don't mean any pun) at breakfast time this morning. Fifteen hundred pounds to-day, and the rest on the 10th. of April (in remembrance of the Chartists,[†9] I suppose?) will suit me perfectly.[a]

Expressing his wish to entertain Mr. Bradbury and Mr. Evans in his regular French country house at Boulogne.[†10]

I suppose we are to consider our agreement terminated at the conclusion of Bleak

House.[†1] [a]I would like you and Bradbury in the meantime to consider how you would propose to arrange our future relations. I am ready at any time to meet you in anything you may suggest, and to conclude any agreement we may think reasonable.[†2] I can most heartily say, that all our intercourse has been one of pleasure and satisfaction to me and that I have been very happy in it. I hope we shall never terminate our business engagements until that printer in stone who will have to be employed at last, shall set up over our last binding in boards.[†3]

F. I. N. I. S

I have been writing my head off all day and have got to that state in which my pen won't be plain.

With kindest regards to Bradbury and remembrances from all here,

Ever my dear Evans, | Faithfully yours,

CHARLES DICKENS[a]

To W. H. WILLS, 12 MARCH 1853*

MS Huntington Library.

Brighton | Twelfth March 1853. | Saturday Morning

My Dear Wills.

Sala's angler's public house[†4] is so excellent, that you certainly had best put that first in this present No.[†5] You can leave off, if it will make a better No., before the waterside public house.[†6]

Don't dictate business letters to Johnson, as I heard you doing the other day. The orthography of the letter I have received this morning, is a very sufficient reason for this caution.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 13 MARCH 1853*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street | Piccadilly | London

Brighton, Sunday March Thirteenth 1853.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I have not the original letter "obliviated" by the "human" to whom it was addressed,[†1] here. But since I wrote to Mr. Greenhow, I have received a second note (enclosed) from the same lady, which may answer the purpose.

I shall be in town tomorrow night or Tuesday, and will present myself in Stratton Street as soon as Bleak House is shut up for the month—which I hope will be before the week.[†2]

Most beautiful weather here!—We have no doubt that it is raining hard through a thick fog in London.

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

To MR WEST,[†3] 16 MARCH 1853*

MS St Pancras Public Libraries.

Tavistock House | Sixteenth March 1853.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his Compliments to Mr. West, and begs to assure Mr. West that he knows no such person as James Allen, and never employed any one of that name.

To BENJAMIN WEBSTER, 17 MARCH 1853*

MS Houghton Library, Harvard.

Tavistock House. | Seventeenth March 1853.

My Dear Sir.

Since my return from Brighton where I have been staying this last fortnight, Mr. Wills has mentioned to me what has passed between yourself and him in reference to Not so bad as we seem.[†4]

First, as to the question of the terms agreed upon,—I have consulted Mr. Forster's recollection of what passed at your house on the evening when they were arranged, and I find that it exactly tallies with mine. The price being fixed,[†5] it was suggested that the Amateur Company should retain the Play a year. I objected that the many engagements of the gentlemen concerned, and their inability to go out of London with it without previous extra exertion in their own pursuits, rendered that time (in my mind) insufficient. Two years were then suggested, and you fully and entirely concurred in that term being fixed.

Secondly, as to any reduction of the price agreed upon. I am sure I need only suggest to you that I cannot alter the terms agreed upon for a play of Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton's. But if you wish to make any representation to him on this head, I would beg you to write to himself at Knebworth.

When you shall have clearly settled in your mind what the honorable and plain course in this case is, I shall be glad to hear from you. And then, allow me to say, the Guild has not the least wish to press you for the money you will have to pay. If you will merely admit of the accounts being made up by giving your note for it at such a date as may suit your perfect convenience, it will be quite satisfactory.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Benjamin Webster Esquire.

To W. H. WILLS, 18 MARCH 1853

MS Huntington Library.

Tavistock House | Friday Eighteenth March 1853.

My Dear Wills

When I came home last night, I found the enclosed from Brockedon[†1] on the India Rubber article.[†2]

It must be closely enquired into, and I should wish to have, separately, whatever Mr. Dodd[†3] may have to say on each head in which the fact is stated to be distinctly against him. Because if it should turn out—which it may not—that he has again committed and misled us, immediately after the Gold and Silver diets,[†4] it is quite clear it won't do. Nothing can be so damaging to Household Words as carelessness about facts. It is as hideous as dulness.

Ever Yours
CD

To JAMES M'GREGOR, 21 MARCH 1853†

MS Auckland Public Library.

Tavistock House | Monday Twenty First March | 1853.

My Dear Sir

I have forborne to trouble you on the subject of the piece of ground by the Bricklayer's Arms,[†5] at the corner of Swan Street and Willow Walk,[†6] because Miss Coutts was out of town and I wished her to see it before I proceeded further.[†7] She has now seen it and thinks well of it; and my object, briefly, is to know how we can get it?

I shall be happy to come to you at any time you may appoint.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

James MacGregor Esquire.

To MRS HENRY BICKNELL,[†1] 28 MARCH 1853

Text from N, II, 455.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS
Monday Twenty Eighth March 1853

My Dear Mrs. Bicknell,

That very agreeable friend of yours whom I met at your good father's[†2] (and whose name to my everlasting confusion I forget) laid me under a willing promise to obtain for her some information respecting a cheap Lending Library on a small scale. Will you let her have it, as enclosed, with my remembrance and regard?

The same to your inferior half[†3] and to the smaller portions of yourself, never forgetting my little pet.

Very faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 28 MARCH 1853*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street.

Tavistock House | Monday Twenty Eighth March | 1853.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

Caroline Canlon once wrote you a very pretty letter describing her home in the Forest, with an odd passage in it about the Cat at her elbow.

It is not among the letters in the box or in my keeping, and I should very much like to conclude the Household Words article with it.[†4] Have you got it? If you have, I write in the profound conviction that your surprising development of the organ of Order, will enable you to find it in a moment!

Ever Most Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To BENJAMIN WEBSTER, 28 MARCH 1853

Extract in T. F. Madigan Monograph No. 1; MS 1 p.; dated Tavistock House, 28 Mar 53; addressed Benjamin Webster.

I thought it right to forward your letter addressed to myself[†5] to Sir E. B. Lytton, thinking that course would be satisfactory to you and might save you trouble. I now enclose you his reply, which I hope may assist you in coming to a decision.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 30 MARCH 1853*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street | Piccadilly.

Tavistock House | Wednesday Thirtieth March 1853.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I send you the Home article,[†1] which perhaps you will look over before I come tomorrow—when I will bring the Society of Arts[†2] paper,[†3] and also consult you in reference to a communication I have had from Mr. MacGregor.

There is nothing very difficult to understand, in the corrections in the home Proof, except the following alarming hieroglyphic.

—which simply means, that what it refers to, is to be struck out. I mention this, because you will see the mystic sign dancing all down the side of Caroline Canlon's letter, which the printers have taken it into their wise heads to punctuate elaborately—thereby destroying its simplicity.[†4]

Dear Miss Coutts. | Ever Most Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To DR J. J. GUGGENBÜHL,[†5] 30 MARCH 1853*

MS Dickens House.

Tavistock House | Wednesday Morning | Thirtieth March 1853.

My Dear Sir

Since my return to town I have been so constantly occupied that I have not been able to enjoy the gratification I had promised myself in seeing you. And I am sorry to add that I have an engagement this morning which obliges me to go out.

But if you should, by good fortune, be disengaged to day, and if you would kindly excuse so short an invitation, it would give Mrs. Dickens and myself unusual pleasure to see you at dinner at a quarter before 7. Dr. Elliotson dines with us, and another English friend (lately from Switzerland)[†6] who takes a strong interest in all such objects as you have at heart.

My Dear Sir | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Dr. Guggenbuhl.

To MARK LEMON, 30 MARCH 1853

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

Tavistock House | Thirtieth March 1853.

My Dear Mark.

I shall be glad to go into that subject[†1] with you again and give you the best advice in my power, at your convenience. Here, at any time before 6 to-morrow afternoon, or at any time on Friday, or at any time before 6 on Saturday or at any time after One on Sunday.

Ever affecy.
CD.

To FRANK STONE, 30 MARCH 1853*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Thirtieth March 1853.

My Dear Stone.

If you should be disengaged and disposed to look in here this evening, you will find the Leeches[†2] and Townshend[†3] and Elliotson and the German Doctor[†4] who established the famous Hospital for Cretins.

Ever affecy.
CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 31 MARCH 1853*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts.

Tavistock House | Thursday Thirty First March 1853.

My Dear Miss Coutts

I should be very sorry to lose the Article[†5] now, and wish you would read it again (before I come tonight at half past six) with a view to the removal of that apprehension of yours. It might be taken away from all connexion with you immediately, by substituting "founder" for "foundress", and speaking of the originator, always, as a man. Or, such an artifice might be used, as "two maiden sisters", or "an old lady", or anything that would remove it from you.[†6] What correspondence it may occasion Household Words is a matter of indifference for there is a perpetual spring-tide of letters setting in in that direction. Any allusion to the locality is needless and can be taken out.[†7] I will answer for so changing all the references to you, as that nobody shall have the least clue. Having written the paper, and finding it so interesting, and having made a place for it in the Number now in hand, I should be glad to keep it, if you feel your apprehension quite overcome—otherwise, of course not. But I think you may be certainly and safely put out of the prospect altogether.

Ever Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

To BENJAMIN WEBSTER, 31 MARCH 1853*

MS Houghton Library, Harvard. Address: Benjamin Webster Esquire | Theatre Royal | Adelphi.

Tavistock House | Thirty First March 1853.

My Dear Sir.

I accept your suggestion[†1] in so far as it relates to Mr. Manby,[†2] with the greatest satisfaction and readiness; having perfect confidence in him and an old regard for him.

But I would rather not act in this matter[†3] myself. I would prefer to entrust it to Mr. Wills. I have spoken to that gentleman on the subject, and he will be happy to arrange for meeting Mr. Manby at any time and place that may suit his convenience.

My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Benjamin Webster Esquire.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?MARCH 1853]

Extract in F, VII, ii, 570. Date: at a time when he was overstrained, "not unfrequently", according to Forster, complaining of overwork; probably at the end of March.

Hypochondriacal whisperings tell me that I am rather overworked. The spring does not seem to fly back again directly, as it always did when I put my own work aside, and had nothing else to do. Yet I have everything to keep me going with a brave heart, Heaven knows!

To THOMAS DIXON,[†4] [?MARCH 1853]

Mention in To Dixon, 4 Apr. Date: clearly shortly before that letter.

To MR ROBERTS,[†1] [?FEBRUARY-MARCH 1853]

Mention in a letter from the Rev. John Clay to CD, Preston, March 1853, given in W. L. Clay, The Prison Chaplain: a Memoir of the Reverend John Clay, 1861, p. 325.

Giving his observations on some papers sent to him.[†2]

April

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 1 APRIL 1853

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street | Piccadilly.

Tavistock House | First April, 1853.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

Mr. Broderip[†3] is the man. He is rather a distinguished Naturalist besides having long been a very good magistrate. I know him intimately. He is getting a little old now, but will do anything and everything in his power. He has often begged me to give you the assurance; but I have not troubled you with it—reserving it for any occasion when you might want his aid.

I concur in all your suggestions as to the Home article, and will devote this evening to it. Everything shall be stated as you wish and I will take care to relieve it of all the little points in doubt. I clearly see the way to smoothing them down. Though it will not be published for a fortnight, it must be got to Press now. But it shall not leave my hands until it is perfectly discreet.

Charley certainly seems, I hope and believe, to be admirably placed. I am quite certain they will take as much care of him as could be taken of him here. When he left me I wrote to Professor Müller[†4] a description of his character and his little weak points; and I read it to Charley himself, in order that he might know the confidence that was established between them. They seem to have come together in the most natural manner possible.

I am so dreadfully jaded this morning by the supernatural dreariness of Kaye[†5] Shuttleworth[†6], that I feel as if I had just come out of the Great Desert of Sahara where my Camel died a fortnight ago.

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

To MARK LEMON, 1 APRIL 1853

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House, Friday Night, First April 1853.

My dear Mark. Consider this rough draft.[†1] I would not make it longer, were I you—or at all events much longer—unless on indispensable and absolute necessity. Ever affect CD.

To W. H. WILLS, 1 APRIL 1853*

MS Huntington Library.

Tavistock House | First April 1853.

My Dear Wills. You can't make up this No.[†2] in hand with any certainty—so dont try—until I shall have gone over the Home article this evening. Miss C is a little afraid of it—shrinks from being so personally connected with it—and suggests many alterations. They will not improve the paper by any means; but on such a question of feeling, nothing is to be said.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To JOHN JAFFRAY,[†1] 2 APRIL 1853

Extract in Winifred A. Myers Ltd catalogue No. 8 (1972); MS 1 p.; dated Tavistock House, 2 Apr 53; with envelope addressed to John Jaffray, Journal Office, Birmingham.

[I have read your] agreeable letter with much interest, and accept with gratification the honour conferred upon me.[†2] CD is glad the Banquet was attended with good results.[†3]

To MR TIDBURY,[†4] 2 APRIL 1853*

MS University of Texas.

Tavistock House | Second April 1853.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his Compliments to Mr. Tidbury, and begs to say that his engagements prevent his accepting the dinner-invitation with which he is honored through Mr. Tidbury's letter.

Nor can he have the pleasure of accepting the office proposed to him,[†5] as his leisure does not admit of his undertaking any new public functions, and as he has resolved never to connect himself, in name alone, with any Institution.

To THE DUKE OF DEVONSHIRE,[†6] 3 APRIL 1853

MS Devonshire Collections, Chatsworth.

Tavistock House | Sunday Third April 1853.

My Dear Duke of Devonshire.

I am very sensible of your kindness, and shall indeed be delighted to dine with you on the twentieth and renew my personal acquaintance with the well-remembered rooms, evermore associated in my mind with your noble readiness to serve the arts,[†7] and your innumerable determined ways of making me happy.

Bulwer has been very ill, but I hope he may be better by that time. Mr. Forster has been confined to his chamber too, for many weeks.[†8] Mr. Topham is sketching in Spain.[†9] With these exceptions, I think the whole of the old party are in a vigorous condition. I am rejoiced to hear such excellent accounts of yourself. Mr. Coote was so eloquent on the subject that I almost suspected him of an intention to make your health the subject of a triumphal march.

My Dear Duke of Devonshire
Ever Yours faithfully and obliged
CHARLES DICKENS

The | Duke of Devonshire

To THOMAS DIXON, 4 APRIL 1853

MS Kyoto University of Foreign Studies.

Tavistock House London | Fourth April, 1853.

Dear Sir

I am quite distressed, I assure you, that my note should have given you a moment's uneasiness. I do not recollect its terms, but it was one of many, and my correspondence is so very large that my business notes are necessarily brief. You may be perfectly certain that nothing in your communication to me required the least apology, or was received in any other spirit than one of friendliness and interest. Trust me I must be greatly changed, before I can resent the remembrance of "a tired mechanic after his day's labor", or his confidence in me. I cannot remember how I led you to a conclusion so painful to me, but I think the fault must somehow have been mine, and I am very sorry for it.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Thomas Dixon Junr.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 9 APRIL 1853*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Ninth April, 1853.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

Being hard at work again, I had quite forgotten the enclosed until I received your reminder.

It is still doubtful, I think, whether there has been reasonable time for a letter to be received in Anne Johnson's[†1] case. But there can be no harm in making the enquiry. She is quite ready to go out, I should say.

I hope Mr. and Mrs. Brown are both better. I have been endeavouring to impress upon the mind of Mr. Sydney Smith[†2] that he knocked up Mrs. Brown, but he is so proud of the card[†3] that he merely grins—with a rather unfeeling expression on the whole.

Perhaps you will let Mr. Brown know that I don't expect him to be quite well until he has had some more of my iced gin punch. I have known it to be very efficacious in innumerable similar cases.

I heard from Charley the day before yesterday. He is now in the Professor's house, and much dismayed, both by the German language, and by my giving him "two or three months" to learn it in.

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

To THE REV. WILLIAM GASKELL,[†1] 10 APRIL 1853

MS John Rylands Library. Address: The Reverend William Gaskell | Plymouth Grove | Manchester.

Tavistock House | Tenth April, 1853.

My Dear Sir

I should be very happy, I assure you, to take up that I.O.U. and render the least help to your sanitary movement[†2] (for I have, from the first, taken a warm interest in that vital subject), if it were reasonably within my power. But since I got rid of the heavy demands upon my leisure, made by the Guild, I have accepted no public engagement whatever; being entirely and completely occupied with Household Words and Bleak House; and being so anxious to devote myself to the latter without interruption, that as soon as the weather settles I shall leave London for some months expressly for that purpose. I enter into these particulars as an assurance to you that I am in earnest, and that if I were available for any kind of public assemblages just now, I would respond to your invocation most cheerfully.

Mrs. Dickens unites with me in kind remembrances to Mrs. Gaskell and yourself, and I am—overleaf, for the purposes of the indispensable flourish—

Always Very faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

The Reverend William Gaskell.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 11 APRIL 1853*

MS Morgan Library. Address: If at Richmond, to be forwarded | Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street.

Tavistock House | Monday Night | Eleventh April, 1853.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

Mr. A Beckett the magistrate, having received the enclosed letter, took pains to verify it—saw the girl[†3]—and applied to me today with a view to the Home. I had an interview with the girl at his Police office, and certainly think it a case we should do well to receive. I should have taken her at once, under more ordinary circumstances; but thought it best to make it known to you. They kept her long over their usual time at the Magdalen[†4]—a year and ten months.[†5]

She was very neatly dressed, and has evidently made a tremendous struggle to preserve a decent appearance. I do not think her particularly delicate, naturally, and have no doubt that we should make a great change in her robustness, in a very little while. How she could be so neat, was a marvel to me. She made little of her own case, and merely said, in reference to her being pale, that she had had "a very hard winter".

She describes herself as not by any means a common needle-worker. Will you let me know, without delay, whether I shall take her in?

Another case became known to me at the same Police Office, of honest and affecting distress. Two sisters, one over fifty, the other over forty,[†1] the daughters of an old naval Lieutenant, fifty six years in the service. They are afflicted with failing eyesight, are not skilful, and have earned some five shillings a week between them at the commonest needlework. They made no application to Mr. A Beckett themselves; but some kind neighbour, aware of their terrific distress, did so for them. After examining[†2] their case, he gave them what he could from the Poor box. Although they are in debt for rent, their present poor landlady will not turn them out. Neither would a former land lady (whom they left of their own accord, to come nearer to their wretched work) to whom they owed Three Pounds. But it is an extraordinarily good circumstance in their case that they have since, even in their dire need, paid thirty shillings of it. I cannot imagine that it would be of any use to send these unhappy women abroad,—but if you should think it advisable to give them anything, I can answer for Mr. A Beckett being very conscientious in seeing it thoroughly well applied. It is one of those cases in which the goodness of the poor towards the poor,[†3] stands out so beautifully that you would suppose the men about the Police Court had never seen distress or known imposture; they appear to feel the facts so much.

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 12 APRIL 1853*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Twelfth April, 1853.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I will take in the case with all speed, and place the Five Pounds in Mr. A Beckett's hands. And I will think of your truly kind and good suggestions in reference to those poor sisters.

I can come down on Sunday, if you will tell me your dinner hour. I would come before, but I am too hard at work to be able to stir.—And indeed—on second thoughts—I think upon the whole I had better wait till you come home. I am so very closely occupied. I hope to finish on Monday or at latest next day.[†4]

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

To MRS MORSON, 12 APRIL 1853*

MS Dr A. A. Silverman.

Tavistock House | Twelfth April 1853

My Dear Mrs. Morson

Without delay, please send clothes for "Louisa Cooper, care of G. A. à Beckett Esquire, Police Court Southwark", and at the same time write and make an early appointment for calling there, and fetching the girl. I may mention to you that it is a peculiar case—closely enquired into—and strongly recommended. She was a year and 10 months in the Magdalen and gave the greatest satisfaction. She was seduced, but has never done anything else wrong—has tried very hard to subsist by needlework, and can not do it, though she is a very good worker—she has suffered much from want, and will need good food and nourishment.

Faithfully Yours

CD.

To MRS GASKELL, 13 APRIL 1853

MS John Rylands Library. Address: Mrs. Gaskell | Plymouth Grove | Manchester.

Tavistock House | Thirteenth April, 1853.

My Dear Mrs. Gaskell.

I have joyfully sent the Cranford last received,[†1] to the Printer's, as I shall joyfully send its successors yet to come.[†2] As to future work, I do assure you that you cannot write too much for Household Words, and have never yet written half enough. I receive you, ever, (if Mr. Gaskell will allow me to say so) with open arms. In your Ghostly visions, don't forget—though it seems a long while beforehand to say so—the next Christmas Round of Stories, on the plan of the last![†3]

You shall collect Cranford when you please, and publish where you please.[†4] My dear friends Ruth[†5] and Mary Barton,[†6] I can put no limitations on.[†7] Their visits are too like those of angels.

Ever Yours faithfully

CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN HARDWICK,[†8] 13 APRIL 1853*

MS Mr L. C. Staples.

Tavistock House | Thirteenth April, 1853

My Dear Hardwick

Unless you let me know that you have any conflicting engagement, I will bring my mother to your house to make that declaration,[†1] on Friday afternoon at 5 o'clock.

Very faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

John Hardwick Esquire.

To W. H. WILLS, 14 APRIL 1853*

MS Huntington Library.

Tavistock House | Thursday Fourteenth April | 1853.

My Dear Wills.

GUILD[†2]

I said 4[†3] on Saturday with a view to my work. I doubt if I can get to Wellington Street by 3, but I must try as you have sent out the summonses. (I almost think it might be better to meet, instead, on Wednesday at ½ past 5 before going to Devonshire House.)[†4]

H. W.[†2]

I shall be engaged this afternoon, as Macready is coming here. Nor can I positively fix any time tomorrow but the evening. You had better send me the proof, and call on me tomorrow evening (if you can) after your dinner. Or I will be at the office on Saturday at ½ past 4. As you prefer.

I could not manage Colchester[†5] next Tuesday, but could do so on Tuesday week, if that be another of the regular days. In the meantime we might see Highgate[†6] as already proposed. I think the best way will be for you to write to Conolly,[†7] saying that I shall be able to decide on the 21st. after seeing Highgate, whether a visit to the other place too, be necessary.[†1] If so, and the following Tuesday be a regular day, I would make that visit then.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

Have you asked Morley[†2] whether he feels his way to the assize subject? The Circuits are nearly over, and the article should be got up.[†3]

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 15 APRIL 1853*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Star and Garter | Richmond | Surrey.

Tavistock House | Friday Fifteenth April 1853.

My Dear Miss Coutts

I think you may like to see these few further particulars of the two sisters, and also to know how reliable Mr. A Beckett is, in thoroughly looking into such a case.

I hope Mrs. Brown's parti-colored World is turning satisfactorily on its axis.

Ever Most Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts

To THE DUKE OF DEVONSHIRE, 17 APRIL 1853

MS Devonshire Collections, Chatsworth.

Tavistock House | Sunday Seventeenth April | 1853.

My Dear Duke of Devonshire.

I should try in vain to tell you how happy I am to be so assured as you have assured me, that I did right in the matter I revolved so much.

I am going to ask a favor—which, with you, is so exactly like bestowing one that I feel almost magnanimous! We have, staying here (arrived a little before his expected time) an old friend of mine who is the Sheriff of Edinburgh,[†4] and a nephew of Rutherford the late Lord Advocate.[†5] He is a distinguished man in Edinburgh (as you may suppose from his post) and married one of Professor Wilson's[†6] daughters,[†7] but has always been true to the Liberal side; to which he has done good service. Moreover he is well known to the Guild, having once been honorary Secretary for us when we played in Edinburgh.[†8] If you would allow Mrs. Dickens to bring him on Wednesday evening, he would be very proud of the honor—and would not be left here.

Forgive me!

My Dear Duke of Devonshire
Most Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The | Duke of Devonshire.

To MARK LEMON, [17 APRIL 1853]

MS Benoliel Collection. Date: clearly same day as next.

Tavistock House | Sunday.

My Dear Mark,

Are you alone today? Because Gordon has arrived, and we should be delighted to see you. What do you say? I have rather a notion that I should like a little G. P.[†1]

Affecy. Yours

CD.

To MARK LEMON, 17 APRIL 1853

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

Tavistock House | Sunday Night | Seventeenth April 1853[†2]

My Dear Mark.

Gordon is all aGog[†3]—and Magog[†3]—for an out tomorrow night. Let us meet at H. W. at from 5 to ¼ past, and find something queer to see.

R.S.V.P. being lined through, I should say no necessity for an answer.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To THE DUKE OF DEVONSHIRE, 18 APRIL 1853

MS Devonshire Collections, Chatsworth.

Tavistock House | Eighteenth April, 1853.

My Dear Duke of Devonshire

As you are so kind as to mention the vacant place at dinner, and as Mr. Gordon is well known to all the Guild party, I have given him the great benefit of the doubt, and have had that invitation artfully filled up. What an Idiot I must have been yesterday not to have mentioned his name in my note!—But in a frenzied state of interest in Bleak House,[†4] I had got up at 5, and gone furiously to work, so that at about noon I was comparatively insensible. So I hope you will excuse me.

Ever Yours faithfully and obliged

CHARLES DICKENS

The | Duke of Devonshire.

To J. C. D'ARNAUD GERKENS,[†1] 19 APRIL 1853

MS Herr Godfried J. A. Bomans. Address: À Monsieur: | Monsr. J. C. d'Arnaud Gerkens | The Hague.

Tavistock House, London | Tuesday Nineteenth April 1853

Dear Sir

Your Consul General has had the kindness to forward to me, your most interesting and gratifying letter, and its accompanying representation, by your pencil, of some of the chief characters in David Copperfield.[†2]

I can honestly express to you my great admiration of the delicacy and tenderness with which you have illustrated my book. I have examined your drawings with great pleasure and shall preserve these proofs of your sympathy with the creatures of my imagination, with great pride. Their conception is so quiet and gentle, and their execution so free, that they unite two qualities which I very rarely find in similar designs.

Accept my heart felt thanks, and the assurance of my high estimation and regard.

Dear Sir | Very faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Monsieur J. C. d'Arnaud Gerkens.

To CHARLES MANBY, 19 APRIL 1853*

MS Houghton Library, Harvard.

Tavistock House | Nineteenth April, 1853.

My Dear Mr. Manby

I have to acknowledge the receipt of your obliging note of yesterday's date with its enclosure.[†3] In reference to which, I may observe that Mr. Wills is perfectly correct in his reference to the "strong opinion" I entertain; and that if he had added that I have been utterly amazed by his account of the tone in which this matter has been negociated on behalf of Mr. Webster, he would have written what may not be much to the purpose, but what is undoubtedly true.

Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Manby Esquire.

To MISS FLORENCE MARRYAT,[†1] 19 APRIL 1853*

MS Mr C. V. Bliss.

Tavistock House | Nineteenth April 1853.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Miss Florence Marryatt and begs to say that he will be happy to subscribe for five copies of her song.[†2] If they be delivered to Mr. Wills at the Household Words office, he will pay the subscription.

To MISS HARRIET MARTINEAU,[†3] 19 APRIL 1853*

MS University of Birmingham.

Tavistock House | Nineteenth April, 1853.

My Dear Miss Martineau.

I must write a few words in reply to your note; first, for the pleasure of corresponding with you, however briefly;[†4] and secondly to say how very starry and stripy our little Bleaburn experience[†5] appears to me to be.

I am anxious to see the result of your Comte labors.[†6] I require a good deal to counterbalance your total abstinence from Household Words for so long a time,[†7] and have a selfish disposition to be mighty critical.

I still hope you may be able to lend your powerful and useful aid to Shuttleworth's scheme.[†1] Between ourselves, I do not think it will be carried out with the expedition we could fondly hope for. And so much depends upon the manner in which the money (when raised) is laid out,[†2] and on the ability with which the topics are handled, that I would rather, for one, have it delayed than indifferently achieved.

In this next No. of Household Words you will find a little paper called "Home for homeless Women", which I think will interest you. It contains the results of my own experience in the active management of the Institution to which it refers.

Macready dined here a few days ago. He is much changed, and still liable to be greatly affected by incidental reminders of his late misfortunes.[†3] Still, on the whole, he is better and happier than I had feared he would be.[†4]

To OCTAVIAN BLEWITT, 22 APRIL 1853*

MS Royal Literary Fund.

Tavistock House | Twenty Second April, 1853

My Dear Sir

As I do not require any tickets for the Dinner,[†5] I return the enclosed.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Octavian Blewitt Esquire

To CHARLES KNIGHT,[†6] 22 APRIL 1853

Extract in Sotheby catalogue, July 1983; MS 1 p.; dated Tavistock House, 22 Apr 53; addressed Charles Knight.

Never heard of a party. Coote expressly said the Duke only intended to invite in the evening the ladies of his own family. Stone's mysterious manner conferring with Grieve who knew nothing of it nor had any lady of his been asked. Nor had Telbin, Haghe or Pitt. Would have as soon expected to have found the stake at Charing Cross, or the Lion from the top of Northumberland House in the drawing room, as Jerrold.[†7]

To MRS MORSON, 23 APRIL 1853*

MS Dr A. A. Silverman.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS
Saturday Twenty Third April 1853

Dear Mrs. Morson

I am coming out on Monday probably in the morning—to shew the Home to a gentleman.[†1] We will confer then.

Faithfully Yours
CD.

To MR MACKENZIE,[†2] 24 APRIL 1853

MS Houghton Library, Harvard.

Tavistock House | Twenty Fourth April, 1853.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his Compliments to Mr. Mackenzie, and has the pleasure of replying to his enquiry.[†3] Mr. Dickens is the writer of the paper in question.

To FRANK STONE, 25 APRIL 1853*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Twenty Fifth April 1853.

My Dear Stone

Townshend is coming here this evening, and I am going to read him the next No. of Bleak House.[†4] If that vortex of dissipation in which you live, should have a gap in it at 8 O'Clock, we shall be the gainers. And if your ladies[†5] would care to be of the small audience—ditto.

Ever affecy.

CD.

To MISS BLAKE,[†1] 27 APRIL 1853*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House, London | Twenty Seventh April 1853.

Madam

I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your earnest note, and a volume of very interesting poems.[†2] Allow me to thank you cordially, for both.

I became a subscriber to the large edition of M De Lamartine's[†3] works,[†4] but I regret that I cannot (in the midst of innumerable claims) take any shares in the project to which you so generously invite my attention.[†5] I am every day under the necessity of writing some reply (often very many replies) of this nature to esteemed correspondents, and I trust you will find in this circumstance a sufficient explanation.

I am Madam | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Blake.

To CHARLES BONER,[†6] 27 APRIL 1853

Text from N, II, 458.

Tavistock House, London | Twenty Seventh April 1853

My Dear Sir,

I beg you to accept my cordial thanks for your most acceptable and gratifying letter, and your picturesque book.[†7] I have read both with unusual pleasure and I can honestly assure you that I am proud of the privilege of having beguiled some of your leisure hours. It is a great happiness to be held in the remembrance of so generous a reader and so good a writer; and believe me, I esteem it highly.

My Dear Sir, | Yours faithfully and obliged,

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 27 APRIL 1853*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Twenty Seventh April, 1853.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I am heartily rejoiced to read the enclosed[†1]—the more so, as I do[†2] understand it!!!!!!! If he had had any goods, they would have been taken in execution under another absurd machine called a Fi Fa;[†3] but having nothing but himself, he is taken in execution under our friend Ca Sa[†4]—which is no relation to our dear little Casa Wappy.[†5]

I heard of the proceedings at the Confirmation[†6] from Mr. Tracey, whom I saw on Monday.

I will call for Mr. Brown in good time on Saturday tell him.

And I shall sustain myself through the Academy Dinner afterwards, by the comfortable hope that this fellow Dunn will never get out again.

Ever Faithfully Yours Dear Miss Coutts

CD.

To JOHN ANGUS,[†7] 29 APRIL 1853*

MS Audrey Barnes, Ohio.

Tavistock House, Tavistock Square | Friday Twenty Ninth April 1853.

Dear Sir.

Our friend Gordon has given me hopes of your being disengaged on Sunday next, and joining our family dinner at half past 5 (punctually). Allow me to assure you that if you will give Mrs. Dickens and myself the pleasure of your company, we shall be delighted to see you.

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

John Angus Esquire.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 29 APRIL 1853*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Friday Night | Twenty Ninth April, 1853

My Dear Miss Coutts

I think it best to send the letter on to Young Rapid,[†8] and have therefore instructed your servant where to take it.

If you will tell me (when you know it) the exact time for the Home flight,[†1] I will then arrange with Dr. Hodgson[†2] for the temporary house. It cannot be got in that neighbourhood without a distinct agreement as to time. Cubitt's foreman has been out there, and is making an estimate of the cost of the Improvements. When he brings it to me, I will bind him as to the length of time they would occupy.

I find this is only half a sheet of paper. Pray excuse it.

I think the Giant who said Fie fi fo fum, must have been an impersonation of the Law.[†3] Grinding Jack's bones to make his bread, looks so like it!—[†4]

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

To MRS GEORGE HOGGE, APRIL 1853

Envelope only, MS Walter T. Spencer. Address: Mrs Hogg | Bilney | Lynn | Norfolk. PM AP 53.

To JAMES PAYN,[†5] [APRIL 1853]

Mention in James Payn, Some Literary Recollections, 1884, p. 43. Date: presumably soon after the appearance of Payn's "Gentleman Cadet" in HW on 9 Apr.

Asking Payn's permission to give his name to the Governor of the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich as author of "Gentleman Cadet".

To THE GOVERNOR[†1] OF THE ROYAL MILITARY ACADEMY, WOOLWICH, [APRIL 1853]

Mention in James Payn, Some Literary Recollections, 1884, p. 42 Date: presumably soon after the appearance of Payn's "Gentleman Cadet"[†2] in HW on 9 Apr.

Informing the Governor, in answer to his letter, that the author of "Gentleman Cadet" had been a cadet at the Military Academy.

May

To MRS COWDEN CLARKE,[†3] 2 MAY 1853*

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds. Address: Mrs. Cowden Clarke | 27 Dorchester Terrace | Bayswater.

Tavistock House. | Second May 1853

My Dear Mrs. Clarke.

Many thanks for your kind note and its enclosure. I fear we shall have but few leisure evenings in this month—intend to save any next month for a quieter life—but if we get a chance, the London Institution[†4] shall hear of it.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Cowden Clarke

To MISS EMMELY GOTSCHALK,[†5] 2 MAY 1853

Text from N, II, 458-9.

Tavistock House, London. | 2nd May 1853

My Dear Miss Gotschalk,

I should have written you long ago, it was not because I have exhausted my stock of advice for one situated as you are, and having said all I can say to soothe and strengthen you. The chances and changes of the world deprive all of us of friends, rob all of us of many hopes and loves we have cherished, make breaks and gaps in all our lives, and strip away many leaves and boughs from every tree under which we have delighted to sit.

But the journey is ever onward and we must pursue it or we are worthy of no place here. Whether yours shall be happy or unhappy rests (as it seems to me) mainly with yourself.

I shall never forget you and will always be interested in you. But this is a world of action, where everyone has a duty to fulfill, a part to play. And, my dear girl, if you sit down by the wayside to think and grieve, those who are dearest to you will be swept on in their better course, until they are lost and gone. It will be a poor comfort to you when you grow old, to think how you might have borne them company and done them good. Many a child grows into a giant and acorns into oaks.

With the little figure of Hebe,[†1] which you sent me, standing on the table near me, I shall never forget you and will always be interested in you.

Always faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To C. P. RONEY,[†2] 2 MAY 1853†

MS Dickens House.

Tavistock House, London, | Second May 1853.

My Dear Roney.

A journey to Ireland, occupied as I am at present, would not be much more easy to me than a journey to the Moon.[†3] The enclosed answer to the card[†4] you have been so kind as to forward, is the only one within my power.

I am glad to hear such good accounts of your doings and prospects. Give my enduring regard and remembrance to James[†5] when you meet, and tell him that I have often felt curious to know whether any remembrances of old times were revived in him by any parts of David Copperfield.[†6]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

C. P. Roney Esquire.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 3 MAY 1853*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Star and Garter | Richmond | Surrey.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Third May 1853.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

Besides having my Edinburgh man[†7] here, I had dim foreshadowings of some impending engagement yesterday which I could not make a substantial thing until Mrs. Dickens came up with a paralyzing reminder of the awful Lord Mayor. With whom I dined accordingly.[†1]

I cannot set about the house at St. Peter's or Broadstairs,[†2] without having from Mrs. Morson on paper, a statement of the least No. of beds she can do with. It may be necessary to take two small houses, side by side, to secure the requisite amount of beds. Further, I must know the exact time at which the house will be wanted, or we cannot, in that country, hire it. For these reasons, will it not be better to wait another week or ten days? I am in daily expectation of Cubitt's estimate, and, when we get that, they must state what time they will require, and must be restricted to it. There will be no difficulty at all in choosing among such houses as are to be let every season, for there is nobody there before July. But I must be able to give the Vicar,[†3] a business-like note of all our requirements.

Anne Johnson will do better in the end, I think, without that young man.[†4] It would never do, clearly, to apply to his brothers for any information under such circumstances.

Mr. Brown will have told you of the Westminster proceedings.[†5] They are so entirely out of Mr. Tennant's[†6] way, and he uses such a very little hammer instead of a mallet, that he must never be left to himself in it. It is like a pigeon taking the chair at a meeting of Bulldogs.[†7]

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

To MRS GASKELL, 3 MAY 1853

MS John Rylands Library.

Tavistock House | Third May 1853.

My Dear Mrs. Gaskell,

The subject is certainly not[†1] too serious, so sensibly treated.[†2] I have no doubt that you may do a great deal of good by pursuing it in Household Words. I thoroughly agree in all you say in your note; have similar reasons for giving it some anxious consideration; and shall be greatly interested in it. Pray decide to do it. Send the papers as you write them to me. Meanwhile I will think of a name for them, and bring it to bear upon yours,[†3] if you think yours improvable. I am sure you may rely on being widely understood and sympathized with.

Forget that I called those two women,[†4] my dear friends! Why if I told you a fiftieth part of what I have thought about them, you would write me the most suspicious of notes refusing to receive the fiftieth part of that. So I don't write—particularly as you laid your injunctions on me concerning Ruth. In revenge I will now mention one word that I wish you would take out, whenever you reprint that book. She would never—I am ready to make affidavit before any authority in the land—have called her seducer "Sir," when they were living at that hotel in Wales.[†5] A girl pretending to be what she really was, would have done it, but she—never![†6]

Ever Most truthfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Gaskell.

To FRANK STONE, 3 MAY 1853*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Evening, Third May 1853.

My Dear Stone.

I think Houdin[†7] the conjurer is at Sadlers Wells. If you should happen by any chance not to be in the Vortex, and would like to wind up this glorious day in a suitable manner, I am to be heard of as above.

Ever affecy.
CD.

To PROFESSOR and MRS BEECHER STOWE,[†1] 3 MAY 1853*

MS[†2] Yale University Library.

Tavistock House. | May 3rd. 1853.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Dickens request the pleasure of Professor & Mrs. Beecher Stowe's company at dinner on Saturday, May 14th. at ¼ before 7 o'clock.

To C. C. FELTON,[†3] 4 MAY 1853*

MS Robert Taylor Collection, Princeton.

Tavistock House | Fourth May 1853.

My Dear Felton

Welcome a thousand times to your mother's arms!—

I am seized with a horrible desire to present you to Forster (who is going to dine here today, by a capital coincidence)[†4] as Professor Stowe!!! We have all been so bored by that amiable personage[†5] that I feel it is my "mission" to do this[†6]—and not my mission to be disappointed in the joke. I hope you may receive these presents in time to be prepared.

We have a box for a good french Conjuror in the evening.[†1] Tomorrow afternoon I am on town—a sort of roving Oyster[†2]—with Mr. Lemon the Editor of Punch. Pray have no engagement but to come with us.[†3]

Ever Most affectionately Yours

CD.

To THE DOWAGER COUNTESS OF ESSEX,[†4] [?EARLY MAY 1853]

Mention in Lady Essex to CD, 15 May 53.[†5] Date: presumably a week or two before that letter.

To EDWARD CHAPMAN, 5 MAY 1853

Extract in Sotheby catalogue, Dec 1981; MS 2 pp.; dated Tavistock House, 5 May 53; addressed Edward Chapman; ending and signature reproduced in facsimile in catalogue.

The balance certainly seems rather small for the large sale, but I observe the cost you mention and see nothing to object to in the account.

Asking him to pay the balance into Coutts's bank,[†6] settling the Oliver Twist account with Bradbury and Evans as usual.

Referring to the disagreeable serial books,[†7] and the accounts of Household Words; they are invariably so rendered, examined, and paid. And there is never any confusion or complaint.

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FULLARTON,[†1] 5 MAY 1853*

MS Mr R. J. Blackmore.

Tavistock House, London | Fifth May 1853.

Dear Sir

Allow me to thank you for your interesting letter and its accompanying book.[†2] I shall enter on the perusal of the latter with a strong predisposition to be pleased, and with a lively faith in its possessing some genuine merit. For the tone of your communication is at once so frank and modest, so independent and unpretending, that I cannot receive it as a part of my every-day correspondence. I am proud of your good opinion and remembrance, I assure you, and derive a real gratification from what you say of my writings.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Fullarton Esquire.

To MARK LEMON, 5 MAY 1853

Facsimile in John Wilson catalogue, 1984.

Tavistock House | Thursday Fifth May 1853

My Dear Mark

My jolly American has arrived, and will be with us this afternoon at 5. You will find him one of the easiest and most natural of fellows.

Ever affecy
CD

To D. MITCHELL,[†3] 5 MAY 1853*

MS Mills College, California.

Tavistock House, London | Fifth May 1853.

Dear Sir.

Your letter has given me very great pleasure in its earnest and genuine nature. I thank you for it with all my heart.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

D. Mitchell Esquire

To CLARKSON STANFIELD, 5 MAY 1853*

MS University of Kentucky.

Tavistock House | Fifth May, 1853.

My Dear Stanny

A certain Greek professor from America, whom I greatly liked when I was there and whom I wish to please now he is here,—he being one of the jolliest and simplest of men, and not at all starry, or stripey,—is going to dine with me at the Trafalgar, Greenwich next Thursday. Will you and Mrs. Stanfield[†1] join our little party? As I want to shew him the Hospital,[†2] I would propose to meet at the Household Words, at ¼ before 3 for 3. Say "yes, for self and partner" like a genuine A. B.[†3] as you are.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To FRANK STONE, 5 MAY 1853*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Fifth May 1853

My Dear Stone.

The Muse

W i l l N o t [†4]

be propitiated this morning. What are you going to do?

Ever

CD

To E. M. WARD,[†5] 5 MAY 1853*

MS Yale University Library.

Tavistock House | Fifth May 1853.

My Dear Ward.

As an Early hour will suit your convenience,[†6] let me say at from half past nine to ten, on Saturday morning.

Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

E. M. Ward Esquire.

To MARK LEMON, 6 MAY 1853

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Friday Sixth May 1853

My Dear Mark

Can you manage to come in on Sunday at ½ past 1, to see Miss Kelly[†1] about this infernal benefit.[†2]

Affecy. Ever

CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 7 MAY 1853*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Saturday Seventh May 1853.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

Shall I enquire into this case? We are full; but some girls will soon be going away, and we could take it in: having the little room at our disposal. Will you return me the letter with your reply.

My Dear Miss Coutts | Ever Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

To J. P. HARLEY,[†3] 8 MAY 1853†

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Tavistock House | Sunday Eighth May, 1853

My Dear Harley

[†a]Mr Lemon and I are interested in getting up a little benefit early next month[†a] for Miss Kelly—most probably at the St. James's Theatre. We have for a committee The Duke of Devonshire, Duke of Leinster,[†4] Duke of Beaufort,[†5] Stanfield, Young,[†6] &c. The bill is a very easy one (she playing herself) and we think it will do the design great service if you will nominally (we have a man ready to do all the writing work),[†7] act as Secretary. Send me a line round to say Yes, and we will meet about it soon.[†1]

Faithfully Yours Ever

CHARLES DICKENS

J. P. Harley Esquire

To JOHN DE GEX,[†2] 9 MAY 1853*

MS Yale University Library.

Tavistock House. | Ninth May 1853.

My Dear De Gex.

I am sorry that I cannot possibly do it.[†3] I have declined every sort of public engagement this year, with the single exception of the Academy Dinner[†4] and my own Theatrical Trusteeship.[†5] My attention is so fully occupied just now, that I am going to retreat for some months, early in June, to work in peace and quiet—an absolute impossibility in London at this time of the year when all the nations of the earth bring letters of introduction and Britannia is for ever asking her children out to all manner of social endurances.

Ever Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John De Gex Esquire

To FRANÇOIS REGNIER,[†6] 9 MAY 1853

MS Comédie Française.

Tavistock House | Monday Ninth May 1853.

My Dear Regnier.

I meant to have spoken to you last night about a matter in which I hope you can assist me—but I forgot it. I think I must have been quite bouleversé by your supposing (as you pretended to do, when you went away) that it was not a great pleasure and delight to me to see you act!

There is a certain Miss Kelly, now 62 years old, who was once one of the very best English actresses, in the greater and better days of the English Theatre. She has much need of a Benefit,[†7] and I am exerting myself to arrange one for her on about the 9th. of June—if possible at the St. James's Theatre. The first piece will be an Entertainment of her own, and she will act in the last. Between these two (and at the best time of the night) it would be a great attraction to the public, and a great proof of friendship to me, if you would act. If we could manage, through your influence and with your assistance, to present a little French Vaudeville—such as Le bon homme Jadis[†1]—it would make the Night a grand success.

Mitchell's[†2] permission I suppose would be required. That I will undertake to apply for, if you will tell me that you are willing to help us, and that you could answer for the other necessary actors in the little French piece—whatever the piece might be, that you would choose for the purpose. Pray write me a short note in answer, on this point.

I ought to tell you that the Benefit will be "under distinguished patronage". The Duke of Devonshire, The Duke of Leinster, The Duke of Beaufort, &c &c are members of the Committee with me, and I have no doubt that the audience will be of the Elite.

I have asked Mr. Chapman[†3] to come to me tomorrow, to arrange for the hiring of the Theatre. Mr. Harley (a favorite English Comedian whom you may know) is our Secretary. And if I could assure the Committee tomorrow afternoon of your cooperation, I am sure they would be overjoyed.

Votre tout devoué
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 10 MAY 1853

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Tenth May 1853.

My Dear Miss Coutts

Your account of Anne Johnson has interested me very much indeed. I fancy that her disappointment in respect of that young man, may have more to do with her state of mind than she supposes; but it is a great thing to have that voluntary confession from her, and I shall hear Mrs. Morson's account of her interview with her mother, with great curiosity and compassion—I suppose it will not break the mother's heart to take the younger daughter away from her?[†4]

A considerable correspondence about the Home has poured in upon Household Words.[†5] I have kept the best part of it for you to read. The object has generally been, either to see the place or to subscribe towards its support. I have invariably answered on the first point that to give any further information would be to interfere with the discipline of the establishment and impose useless trouble on the Superintendents. On the second point, I have of course replied that subscriptions are not accepted.

The post that brought me your note this morning, brought me the enclosed. Shall I do any thing more?

Mr. Lemon the Editor of Punch, came to me privately on Sunday, to say that he had received a bitter letter from some man in Westminster—a lawyer of some sort, as he thought—complaining of the proposed improvements,[†1] and of "being put by Miss Coutts under the parsons".[†2] Mr. Lemon had destroyed the letter as an impertinence, before he thought that I should probably know something about the subject, and might have liked to see it. He could not remember the writer's name, but I think from what he did recollect of the man's statement of his own case, I could pick the gentleman out if he should come to one of the Meetings. I mention this, as an additional reason for your giving Mr. Tennant a hint (if you think well of it) to be practical and business-like above all things, and not on any account to talk to them as if they were children.[†3]

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours
CD.

To MISS FANNY KELLY, 10 MAY 1853*

MS Doheny Memorial Library, California.

GUILD OF LITERATURE AND ART
Tuesday 10th May 1853.

My Dear Miss Kelly.

I think it will be best for you to meet us here, if you can, on Saturday at ¼ before 4. Harley acts as nominal Secretary with pleasure. I have taken the St. James's for the 9th. of June.[†4] Bring as many large names with you for the Committee, as you can.[†5]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To PETER CUNNINGHAM,[†6] 11 MAY 1853

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Tavistock House | Eleventh May 1853.

My Dear Cunningham.

I have a little domestic party at Greenwich tomorrow, to shew the place to one Mr. Felton—a Greek Professor from America—for whom I had a great regard when I was across the Water, and who is a noble fellow.

Will you join us. Pray do. We dine at the Trafalgar. Punctually at 6.

But we assemble (if you can manage that too) at the Household Words office at a quarter to 3, to go down and see the Hospital. Which Stanfield undertakes to shew.

A word in answer, and let it be—Yes.

Ever Cordially
CD.

Peter Cunningham Esquire

To C. C. FELTON, 11 MAY 1853

MS Berg Collection. Address: C. Felton Esquire | Morley's Hotel | Trafalgar Square.

Tavistock House | Eleventh May 1853.

My Dear Felton.

I can give you perfect consolation. There is not the least hurry to night.[†1] We should not in any case have gone before ten or past, and we shall wait for you with the greatest repose. Therefore you have no occasion to be brief in that achievement of eloquence which will be long remembered.[†2] Do not on any account give them less than an hour and a half. Mention the Mississippi. They will be rejoiced to hear of Niagara. Take them out on the Prairies. Don't forget the red man. I foresee that you will wind up with the star-spangled banner—but let me entreat and adjure you, first to tell them something of a few of the most remarkable men in the Country.

Seven reporters (I am told) will attend from The Times; relieving each other every five minutes. Arrangements have also been made for telegraphing to Manchester, Birmingham, and Liverpool, the moment you are on your legs. You will forgive their not firing the Tower guns—but this is such an infernally aristocratic country.

Ever affectionately

CD.

P.S. I shall be in the Gallery.

To MRS MORSON, 11 MAY 1853*

MS Miss Grace Hughes.

Tavistock House | Eleventh May 1853.

Dear Mrs. Morson.

Yes.[†3]

Faithfully Yours

CD.

To MISS FANNY KELLY, 12 MAY 1853

Mention in N, II, 461.

To GEORGE HODDER,[†1] 15 MAY 1853

MS Indiana University Libraries.

Tavistock House | Sunday May Fifteenth 1853.

My Dear Sir

Will you write (as in the other cases) to Wright,[†2] asking him to act for Miss Kelly's benefit? Observe—If you have heard from Mr. Arnold[†3] that Charles Matthews[†4] will not undertake to get up Jenkins in Gretna Green,[†5] ask Wright if he will do it. If you have not heard from Arnold, don't tell Wright yet, positively what we want him to do—but send him the letter.

Faithfully Yours

CD.

George Hodder Esquire.

To AUGUSTUS TRACEY,[†6] 15 MAY 1853*

MS University of Texas.

Tavistock House | Sunday Fifteenth May 1853.

My Dear Tracey.

Will you have the kindness to send one of your intelligent officers round your domain with Professor Felton from America—a friend of mine for whom I have a great regard—and Mr. Shimmin[†7] who accompanies him.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MESSRS M. & N. HANHART, 16 MAY 1853

Text from N, II, 462. Address: M. & N. Hanhart | Lithographers | 64 Charlotte Street | Rathbone Place.

Tavistock House | Monday Sixteenth May 1853

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Messrs. Hanhart, and begs to assure them that he accepts with great pleasure the elegant specimens of their art which they have had the kindness to send him. The tenor of their note is extremely gratifying to him, and gives the works[†1] a new interest in his eyes, beyond their own great beauty and ingenuity.

To MRS MATTHEWS, [17 MAY 1853]

Mention in To Miss Coutts, 19 May 53. Date: On 18 May Mrs Matthews thanked CD for his "letter of yesterday" (MS Morgan).

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 19 MAY 1853

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Star and Garter | Richmond | Surrey.

Tavistock House | Nineteenth May 1853. Thursday

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I think that must be all a mistake about that Suffolk baby your nephew,[†2] because (it is a remarkable fact) we have in this house the only baby[†3] worth mentioning; and there cannot possibly be another baby anywhere, to come into competition with him. I happen to know this, and would like it to be generally understood.

I return Mrs. Morson's letter. It is a very nice child (not being a baby) and will be very pretty and very like the sister.[†4] All was quiet on Tuesday. I paid the bills, and administered encouragement to the vicious Cranstone who seems to have been trying to do better. Also to Campbell who has her head shaved

(in consequence of her hair falling off) and is low spirited in consequence. As well she may be, looking something between the knob on the top of a pair of tongs—a Chinese—and a scraped dutch cheese.

I have Cubitt's plan for the new bedroom, and a small sitting room (which Mrs. Morson says would be necessary, at cleaning times, with the increased number). It is sensible and practicable, and the estimated expence is £275. The whole could be erected (but of course not dried for occupation) in six weeks. Will you "seriously incline"[†5] your mind to the subject, and decide when it shall be done? I am anxious to arrange it all, as I shall be flying to Boulogne, and more peaceable work than London admits of at this time of year even to a paragon of seclusion like myself, early in June. And further. Cubitt's foreman is much distressed that we have no regular supply of water at Shepherd's Bush. He has craved leave to "look into it" and see what it would cost. Which I have ventured to give him.

Now, will you read the enclosed from Mrs. Matthews (in answer to questions of mine)[†1] and tell me what I shall do.[†2] Your view of the Scandinavian book[†3] is mine, and therefore(?) I thought it very humourous. Why a man who is for ever fainting away, should be making himself limper with Scandinavian poetry, is one of those extraordinary mysteries that the mind cannot fathom.

Being rather limp myself with working since ½ past 5 this morning, I will leave off.

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS FANNY KELLY, 19 MAY 1853

Extract in Maggs Bros catalogue No. 497 (1927); MS 1 p.; dated Tavistock [House], 19 May 53.

I have never heard anything about the Deserter[†4] being played in four pieces,[†5] nor do I conceive it possible to adjust such a point in that high-handed way, without knowing what else is going to be done, and who is going to do it.

To JOHN BRITTON,[†6] 20 MAY 1853*

MS Mr Ashley W. Olmsted.

Tavistock House | Twentieth May 1853

Dear Sir

On the day to which your kind note referred, I was hard and fast at work. I have only just now emerged, to make preparations for a flitting to the French coast, for the quieter and more peaceable conclusion of the book I have in hand.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Britton Esquire.

To W. J. CLEMENT,[†7] 20 MAY 1853*

Text from typescript, Huntington Library.

Tavistock House | Twentieth May 1853.

My Dear Clement,

I have received your letter with very great pleasure. It is delightful to read such cordial words, and to be so heartily and kindly understood. I hope you will find Woodcourt's part in the end of the story, in keeping with what has pleased you so much. I think it will be pretty, and not ungraceful towards his profession.[†1] As to the opposing parsons[†2]—God help them. The world seems to me, to be on its way to leaving their ignorance a little behind.

I don't think I could have resisted your invitation on any feebler grounds than Bleak House. But I wish to finish the story with great care,[†3] and it is almost impossible to be as secluded as one could desire (though I am very rigid in that respect), in London at this time of the year. The letters of introduction alone that are brought to me, would constitute a reasonable amount of business for one man. Hence we are going off in the beginning of June to Boulogne, where I purpose to remain until October; and both Mrs Dickens and I hope that you and Mrs Clement may be coming that way in the course of the Autumn. It is in a country, and is in itself a place, the beauties of which are scarcely known to English people. Odd bits about it that I know of, are as picturesque as Naples—and it is thriving and industrious, and not like that horribly degraded place otherwise.

I shall send you our address as soon as we are fixed there. In the meantime and always, I do assure you that one of the happiest incidents for which I am grateful to the Guild is its having brought you and me into personal friendship.[†4]

With kindest regards to Mrs Clement, in which Mrs Dickens joins,

I am ever My Dear Clement, | Very faithfully yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Talfourd[†5] a little disjointed and incoherent just at present.

To FRANÇOIS REGNIER, 20 MAY 1853

MS Comédie Française.

Tavistock House | Friday Twentieth May 1853.

My Dear Regnier

I am heartily obliged to you for your kind letter respecting Miss Kelly's benefit. It is to take place on Thursday the 16th. June—Thursday the 9th. (the day originally proposed) being the day of Ascot Races, and therefore a bad one for the purpose.

Mitchell, like a brave garçon as he is, most willingly consents to your acting for us. Will you think what little French piece it will be best to do, in order that I may have it ready for the bills?

Ever Faithfully Yours | My Dear Regnier
CHARLES DICKENS

Monsieur Regnier.

To DR WILLIAM BROWN,[†1] 21 MAY 1853

MS Morgan Library. Address: W. Brown Esquire | 1 Stratton Street | Piccadilly.

Tavistock House | Saturday Twenty First May 1853.

My Dear Sir

I would not bring forward the proposition of advancing a third of the money,[†2] unless on the extremest necessity. For I am inclined to doubt whether the disadvantages of a principle so objectionable, would not counterbalance the advantages of the improvements.

I will call for you in Stratton Street at 3 on Monday, and in the meantime will consider the matter carefully. I think it very important to consider these two points, in reference to Mr. Arnold's[†3] suggestion.

1. Whether, if we offer a third, the class of persons who would accept it will not immediately get it into their heads that they have only to stand out and get half, or more—in short, to be bribed into consenting? (Which I greatly fear.)

2. Whether the better class of opposing persons who are not so base, would be in the least shaken in their objections by such an offer? (Which I rather doubt).[†4]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

W. Brown Esquire.

To JOHN KENYON,[†5] 21 MAY 1853*

MS Boston Public Library.

Tavistock House | Saturday Evg. Twenty First May | 1853.

My Dear Kenyon.

I am extremely sorry to be prevented from dining with you, and entirely (I blush to add) through my own fault.

This afternoon's post has brought me a letter from an Edinburgh friend of ours[†6] who was staying with us three weeks ago, and left with a serio-comic engagement to return this very day, and bring another friend with him to dinner. We had so entirely dismissed it from our minds that my ladies are out; and yet there is no kind of question that it was a bargain. So here I am waiting for them! And I shall never breathe a word of my narrow escape from committing myself, unless you compromise me at some odd time or other.

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Kenyon Esquire.

To E. M. WARD, 21 MAY 1853*

MS Mr W. A. Foyle.

Tavistock House | Twenty First May 1853.

My Dear Ward

To my unspeakable terror I received the enclosed yesterday morning. What can I have done in the oval way, I wonder![†1]

Yours Distractedly
CD.

E. M. Ward Esquire

To E. M. WARD, 22 MAY 1853

MS Winifred A. Myers (Autographs) Ltd.

Tavistock House | Sunday Twenty Second May 1853

My Dear Ward.

Will Thursday suit you? As early as you please. Say at 10.

Faithfully Yours always
CD.

E. M. Ward Esquire

To JOHN LEECH, 23 MAY 1853

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: John Leech Esquire | 32 Brunswick Square.

Tavistock House | Monday Twenty Third May | 1853

My Dear Leech.

On looking at my book, I am inclined to propose next week for our jaunt, if convenient to you. Name any day but Tuesday. Might it not be better to go down to Gravesend by Steamboat, if the fine weather should continue?

I shall dine at the Household Words office on Thursday at ½ p 5, and afterwards go to see the Savages at Hyde Park Corner.[†2] Will you come and dine then and there—and not forget it? In that case we might solemnly arrange the proceedings of the Lady-Day.

Ever Faithfully Yours

CD.

We spun a table in the most extraordinary manner last night.[†1] Mamey, Katey, their governess, I, Catherine, Georgina, "Mon cher Regnier", et Madame Regnier. The Pembroke table in my study gamboled like an insane elephant (with a prodigious creaking) all round the room!!![†2]

To MR GRIMES,[†3] 24 MAY 1853

MS Berg Collection.

Tavistock House, London | Twenty Fourth May 1853.[†4]

Mr. Charles Dickens sends his compliments to Mr. Grimes, and begs to thank him for his curious and interesting communication; the spirit of which, Mr. Dickens very cordially appreciates. Two kindred characters are already represented in Bleak House,[†5] which makes the letter more agreeable.

To THE REV. W. MALKIN,[†6] 24 MAY 1853*

MS Rosenbach Museum and Library.

Tavistock House London | Twenty Fourth May 1853

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his Compliments to the Reverend W. Malkin, and begs to acknowledge the receipt of his obliging communication. It will give Mr. Dickens great pleasure to subscribe to so curious and interesting a work.[†7]

To MRS MORSON, 25 MAY 1853

Extract from Robert K. Black catalogue No. 13 [Feb 1947 or 1949]; MS 2 pp.; dated Tavistock House, 25 May 53.

Requesting Mrs Morson to call at the magistrates court to rescue a young girl accepted as a new inmate of the Home. Please to summon the committee.

To AUGUSTUS TRACEY, 27 MAY 1853*

MS University of Texas.

Tavistock House | Twenty Seventh May 1853.

My Dear Tracey.

Are you fortunately disengaged at Six tomorrow, Military time?[†1]

If so, will you come and dine here, to meet the gallant Colonel.[†2] We have no party whatever.

In haste | Always Heartily Yours

CD

To MISS FANNY KELLY, 28 MAY 1853

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: Miss Kelly | 30 Moscow Road | Bayswater.

Tavistock House | Saturday Twenty Eighth May 1853.

Dear Miss Kelly.

On the question of your own acting, as you make it a matter of feeling I can say nothing.[†3] On the question of now abandoning Free and Easy,[†4] I can only say that if—knowing it to be Charles Matthews's[†5] suggestion; having seen how Harley was gradually got to play a particular part in it;[†6] and having the other day sat by, and seen actors and managers written to, concerning other particular parts in it—you don't think it unreasonable, nothing I can say could make it appear so.

Faithfully Yours always

CD.

Miss Kelly.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 29 MAY 1853*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Sunday Twenty Ninth May | 1853.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I send you the enclosed from Mrs. Matthews, acknowledging the last letter I wrote to her on your behalf.

Always Most Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To W. H. WILLS, 30 MAY 1853*

MS Huntington Library.

Tavistock House | Monday Thirtieth May 1853.

My Dear Wills.

I find, to my great vexation and distress, this morning, that they have kept from me[†1] that Frank[†2] (the cleverest of all the children) stammers so horribly as to be quite an afflicted object.[†3] You were saying last night that you would see Dr. Arnott[†4] today. I should particularly like to ask him whether he can recommend any one to cure the child. I did know a Mr. Hunt[†5] whose system is admirable,—but he is dead. Will you ask Dr. Arnott what would be the most convenient time for Catherine to bring the boy to him for his advice, tomorrow morning?

I am unfortunately engaged to go to Maidenhead today, but I shall be back tonight.

Faithfully Ever

CD.

To THE SOCIETY FOR IMPROVING THE CONDITION OF THE LABOURING CLASSES,[†6] MAY 1853

Mention in The Builder, May 1853.

June

To JOHN FORSTER, [6 JUNE 1853]

Mention in Forster to Miss Kelly, 7 June 53[†7] (Anderson catalogue No. 1628, 1 Feb 1922).

To LADY EASTLAKE,[†1] 11 JUNE 1853†

MS University of Texas.

Pavilion, Folkestone | Saturday Eleventh June 1853.

My Dear Lady Eastlake.

I have been ill and in great pain—six days in bed, for the first time in my life—or I should have answered your note before now. But I take the earliest opportunity of assuring you, from this breezy place on my way to Boulogne, that it will give me great pleasure to send you my proxy paper for young Brown:[†2] Whom success attend!

Since Monday last, I have been shaving a man every morning—a stranger to me—with big gaunt eyes and a hollow cheek—whose appearance was rather irksome and oppressive. I am happy to say he has at last retired from the looking-glass, and is replaced by the familiar personage whom I have lathered and scraped these twenty years. He (the last-named) sends you his best regards, and begs to say that he lives in the hope of another talk with you on subjects ghostly and dreamy, and that he respectfully denies unto the death the assumption that mad people won't drown.

Dear Lady Eastlake | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

My regards to Sir Charles.[†3]

To E. M. WARD, 11 JUNE 1853

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

Pavilion, Folkestone | Saturday Eleventh June 1853.

My Dear Ward.

The day on which I was unfortunately disabled from sitting to you was the first of six I passed in bed, where I underwent great pain and became extremely weak. I am happy to report that I am now growing vigorous again, and am on my way to Boulogne. But I fear there is no chance of our getting on with the picture until my return in the winter. My study is dismantled, the carpet taken up, the curtains taken down, and the bloom (for the time being) as much gone off that flower as this one which indites these presents.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

E. M. Ward Esquire

To MESSRS BRADBURY & EVANS, 11 AND 12 JUNE 1853

MS Dickens House.

Pavilion, Folkestone | Saturday Eleventh June 1853.

My Dear B & E.

I send you, above, the lettering for the plates;[†1] and am grateful and happy to report myself immensely better.[†2] I had a little walk yesterday afternoon—ate and drank well, and slept well—am much stronger, and am fast getting back my old face. I feel aches and pains when I sit up to write, but they are rapidly diminishing.

As there is no post-delivery in town tomorrow, I mean to keep this open, to send you another bulletin before I go across.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CD.
Sunday Morning

Still better and stronger, I am happy to say, and bracing myself up for the great attempt of Tuesday morning.[†3] If I can only manage to sit at it long enough at a time, I have great hopes of doing the No. yet, please God. A fine quiet morning—wind gone round from the East to the West—and all looking well for the passage across.

CD.

To MARK LEMON, 12 JUNE 1853*

MS Mr H. C. D. Whinney.

Pavilion Folkestone | Sunday Twelfth June 1853.

My Dear Mark.

I have laughed over your letter[†4] this morning until I became quite an impersonation of Falstaff's wonderful simile, and my face was "like a wet cloak ill laid up".[†5] My sober and serious advice in the matter is the plainest possible. Dissolve the Committee,[†6] let the thing go off, leave her to form another Committee, and never have anything more to do with her.[†7]

I do not think the popular excitement is so great as to render our implied pledge to the public, of much importance. I do think—and indeed thoroughly know—that nothing of a satisfactory nature can ever be done with Miss Kelly, and that she is not to be trusted.[†1] Therefore I would decidedly let her go. The only points I take to be of importance, are, that she should know what money-charges there are against her, and that she should understand that it is hopeless to think of enlisting you and me for example, for any future occasion. I have not the least objection to your mentioning my opinion in full to such of the Committee as may assemble on Monday, if you think it at all desirable to do so. She volunteers an opportunity for our getting out of the business, and I have not a shadow of doubt that it is best got out of.

I am happy to report myself as looking like myself, and as being very much better and stronger. We are going across at ¼ to 2. My address will be the Hotel des Bains until I get a house, when I will send you the address. Kate unites with me in love to yourself and Mrs. Lemon and all the pets.

Ever My Dear Mark | Affectionately Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Mark Lemon Esquire.

To JOHN FORSTER, [13 JUNE 1853]

Extracts in F, VII, ii, 571 and IV, 590-1. Date: first extract 13 June according to Forster; second extract evidently same letter. From Boulogne.

Thanking Heaven for escape from a breakdown. If I had substituted anybody's knowledge of myself for my own, and lingered in London, I never could have got through.

He had taken a house on the high ground near the Calais road; an odd French place with the strangest little rooms and halls, but standing in the midst of a large garden, with wood and waterfall, a conservatory opening on a great bank of roses, and paths and gates on one side to the ramparts,[†2] on the other to the sea. There was a capital proprietor and landlord,[†3] by whom the cost of keeping up gardens and wood (which he called a forest) was defrayed, while he gave his tenant the whole range of both and all the flowers for nothing, sold him the garden produce as it was wanted, and kept a cow on the estate to supply the family milk. If this were but 300 miles farther off, how the English would rave about it! I do assure you that there are picturesque people, and town, and country, about this place, that quite fill up the eye and fancy. As to the fishing people (whose dress can have changed neither in colour nor in form for many many years), and their quarter of the town cobweb-hung with great brown nets across the narrow up-hill streets, they are as good as Naples, every bit.

To W. H. WILLS, 13 JUNE 1853

MS New York Public Library.

Boulogne. | Monday Thirteenth June 1853.

My Dear Wills.

You will be glad, I know, to hear that we had a delightful passage yesterday, and that I made a perfect phænomonon of a dinner. It is raining hard today, and my back feels the damp; but I am otherwise still mending.

I have signed, sealed, and delivered a contract for a house (once occupied for two years by a man I knew in Switzerland)[†1] which is not a large one, but stands in the midst of a great garden, with what the landlord calls a "forest" at the back; and is now surrounded by flowers, vegetables, and all manner of growth. A queer, odd, French place—but extremely well supplied with all table and other conveniences, and strongly recommended. The address is

Chateau des Molineaux[†2]

Rue Beurepaire

Boulogne[†3]

There is a coach-house, stabling for half a dozen horses, and I don't know what.

We take possession this afternoon, and are now laying in a good stock of creature-comforts. So no more at present from

Yours Ever faithfully

CD

Mrs. Dickens and her sister unite in kindest regards.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, [?14][†4] JUNE 1853

Mention in Sotheby's catalogue, Apr 1876; MS 4 pp.; dated 4 June 53.

To W. H. WILLS, 18 JUNE 1853

MS Comtesse de Suzannet.

Chateau des Molineaux Boulogne
Saturday Night, Eighteenth June 1853

My Dear Wills.

H. W.[†5]

I have gone over the No.[†6] and now return it. Thomas,[†7] very well—but might have been a little more picturesque. Costello[†1] good enough as far as it goes, but it don't go to the Camp, and therefore is at present a coup manqué. If you put Forster in his place, call it The Power-Loom.[†2] If you have a tolerably lively process article, it would be better than Country News.[†3] Look well to that portion yet to come of Sala,[†4] which I have not got.[†5]

BLEAK HOUSE.[†6]

Thank God I have done half the No.[†7] with great ease, and hope to finish on Thursday or Friday next.[†8] O how thankful I feel to be able to have done it, and what a relief to get the No. out!

MONEY.[†6]

I enclose a cheque for £20.

GENERAL MOVEMENTS OF INIMITABLE.[†6]

I don't think (I am not sure) I shall come to London until after the completion of Bleak House No. 18[†9]—the No. after this now in hand—for it strikes me that I am better here at present. I have picked up in the most extraordinary manner, and I believe you would never suppose to look at me that I had had that week or half an hour of it. If there should be any occasion for our meeting in the meantime, a run over here would do you no harm, and we should be delighted to see you at any time. If you suppose this place to be in a street, you are hugely mistaken. It is in the country, though not more than ten minutes walk from the Post office, and is the best doll's house of many rooms in the prettiest French grounds and the most charming situation I have ever seen—the best place I have ever lived in, abroad, except at Genoa.[†10] You can scarcely imagine the beauty of the air on this richly wooded hill side. As to comforts in the house, there are all sorts of things, beginning with no end of the coldest water and running through the most beautiful flowers down to English footbaths and a Parisian Liqueur-stand. Your parcel (frantic enclosures and all) arrived quite safely last night. This will leave by steamer tomorrow, Sunday, evening. There is a boat in the morning, but having no one to send tonight I can't reach it; and tomorrow being Sunday it will come to much the same thing.

I think that's all at present,

Ever My Dear Wills | Faithfully Yours

CD.

W. H. Wills Esquire.

To FRANK STONE, 23 JUNE 1853

MS Benoliel Collection.

Chateau des Molineaux | Rue Beaurepaire, Boulogne
Thursday Twenty Third June 1853.

My Dear Pumpion.[†1]

I take the earliest opportunity after finishing my Number—ahem!—to write you a line, and to report myself (thank God) brown, well, robust, vigorous, open to fight any man in England of my weight, and growing a moustache. Any person of undoubted pluck in want of a customer, may hear of me at the bar of Bleak House, where my money is down.

I think there is an abundance of places here that would suit you well enough, and Georgina is ready to launch on voyages of discovery and observation with you. But it is necessary that you should consider for how long a time you want it, as the folks here let much more advantageously for the tenant, when they know the term—don't like to let, without. It seems to me that the best thing you can do, is to get a paper of the South Eastern Tidal Trains—fix your day for coming over in five hours (when you will pay through to Boulogne at London Bridge)—let me know the day—and come, and see how you like the place.[†2] I like it better than ever. We can give you a bed (two to spare—at a pinch three—) and shew you a garden and a view or so. The town is not so cheap as places further off, but you get a great deal for your money, and by far the best wine at tenpence a bottle that I have ever drunk anywhere. I really desire no better.

I may mention for your guidance (for I count upon your coming, to overhaul the general aspect of things) that you have nothing on earth to do with your luggage when it is once in the boat, until after you have walked ashore. That you will be filtered, with the rest of the passengers, through a hideous, whitewashed, Quarantine-looking Custom House, where a stern man of a military aspect will demand your passport. That you will have nothing of the sort, but will produce your card with this addition—"Restant à Boulogne, Chez M. Charles Dickens, Chateau des Molineaux." That you will then be passed out at a little door, like one of the ill-starred prisoners on the bloody September night,[†3] into a yelling and shrieking crowd, cleaving the air with the names of the different hotels—exactly seven thousand, six hundred, and fiftyfour, in number. And that your heart will be on the point of sinking with dread, when you will find yourself in the arms of the Sparkler of Albion.

All unite in kindest regards.

Ever affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

(I thought you might like to see the flourish again).

To WILKIE COLLINS, 24 JUNE 1853

MS Morgan Library.

Chateau des Molineaux | Rue Beaurepaire, Boulogne
Friday Twenty Fourth June 1853.

My Dear Collins

I hope you are as well as I am, and have as completely shaken off all your ailings. And I hope too that you are disposed for a long visit here. We are established in a doll's country house of many rooms, in a delightful garden. If you have anything to do, this is the place to do it in. And if you have nothing to do—this is also the place to do it in to perfection.†1

You shall have a Pavilion room in the garden, with a delicious view, where you may write no end of Basils.†2 You shall get up your Italian as I raise the fallen fortunes (at present sorely depressed) of mine. You shall live, with a delicate English graft upon the best French manner, and learn to get up early in the morning again. In short, you shall be thoroughly prepared, during the whole summer season, for those great travels that are to come off anon.†3

Do turn your thoughts this way. Coming by South Eastern Tidal Train (there is a separate list for that train; the time changing every day as the tide varies) you come in five hours. No passport wanted. Mrs. Dickens and her sister send their kind regards, and beg me to say how glad they will be to see you.

†a[

W. Wilkie Collins Esquire.

Our united remembrances to your mother†4 and brother.†5

To PETER CUNNINGHAM, 24 JUNE 1853

MS Benoliel Collection.

Chateau des Molineaux | Rue Beaurepaire, Boulogne
Friday Twenty Fourth June 1853.

My Dear Cunningham.

A note—Cerberus like—of three heads.

First, I know you will be glad to hear that the Manager is himself again.†6 Vigorous, brown, energetic, muscular. The pride of Albion and the admiration of Gaul.

Secondly, I told Wills when I left home, that I was quite pained to see the end of your excellent bowl of Punch[†7] altered. I was unaffectedly touched and gratified by the heartiness of the original; and saw no earthly, celestial, or subterranean, objection to its remaining—as it did not so unmistakeably apply to me as to necessitate the observance of my usual precaution in the case of such references, by any means.[†1]

Thirdly, if you ever have a holiday that you don't know what to do with, Do come and pass a little time here. We live in a charming garden in a very pleasant country, and should be delighted to receive you. Excellent light wines on the premises, French cookery, millions of roses, two cows (for Milk Punch), vegetables cut for the pot and handed in at the kitchen window, five summer houses, fifteen fountains (with no water in 'em) and thirty seven clocks (keeping, as I conceive, Australian time; having no reference whatever to the hours on this side of the globe).

I know my dear Cunningham that the British Nation can ill afford to lose you; and that when the Audit office mice are away, the cats of that great public establishment will play.[†2] But pray consider that the bow may be sometimes bent too long, and that over-arduous application, even in patriotic service, is to be avoided. No one can more highly estimate your devotion to the best interests of Britain than I. But I wish to see it tempered with a wise consideration for your own amusement, recreation, pastime. All work and no play may make Peter a dull boy as well as Jack. And (if I may claim the privilege of friendship to remonstrate) I would say that you do not take enough time for your meals. Dinner for instance you habitually neglect. Believe me this rustic repose will do you good.[†3] Winkles also, are to be obtained in these parts, and it is well remarked by Poor Richard[†4] that a bird in the Handbook[†5] is worth two in the bush.

Ever Cordially Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Peter Cunningham Esquire.

To J. B. CARDALE, 26 JUNE 1853

Extract in N, II, 469.

Pray return the five shillings to the poor man, as you so [considerately][†6] suggest.[†7] I should be pained indeed to take it from him, and so, I am sure would Mr. Stone be.[†8]

To JOHN FORSTER, 26 JUNE [1853]

Extracts in F, VII, iv, 591-3 and n. Date: second and third extracts probably same letter as first, dated 26 June; clearly 1853. From Boulogne.

26th of June.

O the rain here yesterday! A great sea-fog rolling in, a strong wind blowing, and the rain coming down in torrents all day long.... This house is on a great hill-side, backed up by woods of young trees. It faces the Haute Ville with the ramparts and the unfinished cathedral—which capital object is exactly opposite the windows. On the slope in front, going steep down to the right, all Boulogne is piled and jumbled about in a very picturesque manner. The view is charming—closed in at last by the tops of swelling hills; and the door is within ten minutes of the post office, and within quarter of an hour of the sea. The garden is made in terraces up the hillside, like an Italian garden; the top walks being in the before-mentioned woods. The best part of it begins at the level of the house, and goes up at the back, a couple of hundred feet perhaps. There are at present thousands of roses all about the house, and no end of other flowers. There are five great summer-houses, and (I think) fifteen fountains—not one of which (according to the invariable French custom) ever plays. The house is a doll's house of many rooms. It is one story high, with eight and thirty steps up and down—tribune wise[†1]—to the front door: the noblest French demonstration I have ever seen I think. It is a double house; and as there are only four windows and a pigeon-hole to be beheld in front, you would suppose it to contain about four rooms. Being built on the hillside, the top story of the house at the back—there are two stories there—opens on the level of another garden. On the ground floor there is a very pretty hall, almost all glass; a little dining-room opening on a beautiful conservatory, which is also looked into through a great transparent glass in a mirror-frame over the chimney-piece, just as in Paxton's[†2] room at Chatsworth;[†3] a spare bed-room, two little drawing-rooms opening into one another, the family bed-rooms, a bath-room, a glass corridor, an open yard, and a kind of kitchen with a machinery of stoves and boilers. Above, there are eight tiny bed-rooms all opening on one great room in the roof, originally intended for a billiard-room. In the basement there is an admirable kitchen with every conceivable requisite in it, a noble cellar, first-rate man's room and pantry; coach-house, stable, coal-store and wood-store; and in the garden is a pavilion,[†4] containing an excellent spare bed-room on the ground floor. The getting-up of these places, the looking-glasses, clocks, little stoves, all manner of fittings, must be seen to be appreciated. The conservatory is full of choice flowers and perfectly beautiful.

But the landlord—M. Beaucourt—is wonderful. Everybody here has two surnames (I cannot conceive why),[†5] and M. Beaucourt, as he is always called, is by rights M. Beaucourt-Mutuel.[†1] He is a portly jolly fellow with a fine open face; lives on the hill behind, just outside the top of the garden; and was a linen draper in the town, where he still has a shop, but is supposed to have mortgaged his business and to be in difficulties—all along of this place, which he has planted with his own hands; which he cultivates all day; and which he never on any consideration speaks of but as "the Property." He is extraordinarily popular in Boulogne (the people in the shops invariably brightening up at the mention of his name, and congratulating us on being his tenants), and really seems to deserve it. He is such a liberal fellow that I can't bear to ask him for anything, since he instantly supplies it whatever it is. The things he has done in respect of unreasonable bed-steads and washing-stands, I blush to think of. I observed the other day in one of the side gardens—there are gardens at each side of the house too—a place where I thought the Comic Countryman[†2] must infallibly trip over, and make a little descent of a dozen feet. So I said "M. Beaucourt"—who instantly pulled off his cap and stood bareheaded—"there are some spare pieces of wood lying by the cow-house, if you would have the kindness to have one laid across here I think it would be safer." "Ah, mon Dieu sir," said M. Beaucourt, "it must be iron. This is not a portion of the property where you would like to see wood." "But iron is so expensive," said I, "and it really is not worth while—" "Sir, pardon me a thousand times," said M. Beaucourt, "it shall be iron. Assuredly and perfectly it shall be iron." "Then M. Beaucourt," said I, "I shall be glad to pay a moiety of the cost." "Sir," said M. Beaucourt, "Never!" Then to change the subject, he slided from his firmness and gravity into a graceful conversational tone, and said, "In the moonlight last night, the flowers on the property appeared, O heaven, to be bathing themselves in the sky. You like the property?" "M. Beaucourt," said I, "I am enchanted with it; I am more than satisfied with everything." "And I sir," said M. Beaucourt, laying his cap upon his breast, and kissing his hand—"I equally!" Yesterday two blacksmiths came for a day's work, and put up a good solid handsome bit of iron-railing, mortised into the stone parapet.... If the extraordinary things in the house defy description, the amazing phenomena in the gardens never could have been dreamed of by anybody but a Frenchman bent upon one idea. Besides a portrait of the house in the dining-room, there is a plan of the property in the hall. It looks about the size of Ireland; and to every one of the extraordinary objects there is a reference with some portentous name. There are fifty-one such references, including the Cottage of Tom Thumb, the Bridge of Austerlitz, the Bridge of Jena, the Hermitage, the Bower of the Old Guard, the Labyrinth (I have no idea which is which); and there is guidance to every room in the house, as if it were a place on that stupendous scale that without such a clue you must infallibly lose your way, and perhaps perish of starvation between bedroom and bedroom.

Provisions are scarcely as cheap as I expected, though very different from London: besides which, a pound weight here, is a pound and a quarter English. So that meat at 7*d.* a pound, is actually a fourth less. A capital dish of asparagus costs us about fivepence; a fowl, one and threepence; a duck a few halfpence more; a dish of fish, about a shilling. The very best wine at tenpence that I ever drank—I used to get it very good for the same money in Genoa, but not so good. The common people very engaging and obliging.

To W. H. WILLS, 27 JUNE 1853

MS Huntington Library.

Boulogne, Monday Twenty Seventh June | 1853.

My Dear Wills.

There was no letter from you in the parcel that came last night with the enclosed. That was all right, I suppose?

I have made various marks here. The Poem is so very poor, that it had better come out bodily,[†1] until we have a very strong number. The metre is so wretchedly made out.

Pull at the Pagoda Tree,[†2] very good. Provisionally Registered,[†3] very good. It is rather unfortunate that we have so many foreign subjects[†4] but it can't be helped I suppose. If we have never had Cause and effect,[†5] I think it a better title for the Carlsruhe story. St. Vorax's singing birds[†6] will stand over.[†7] With a Chip, you won't want it.[†8]

I am sorry to see that a corrected proof I once gave you of young Jerrold's[†9] two gentlemen[†10] has been mislaid. I recollect it, and my corrections, perfectly, by one stupendous absurdity that stands in the paper as it is.[†11] I wish you would tell me in what part of the town or country you know gentlemen of the present day to live under "Golden Domes".[†12] Because it is new to me, and I think a description of these Mansions might make a good paper.

I will send you the History of England in good time for the next No.[†13] and will afterwards write another paper if I can think of a subject.[†14] I will then refer to the letters you sent me yesterday, which I have not time to do this morning. Will you post the enclosed.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

It has been blowing so hard here, that I am going down to look at the Sea—with the intention of stopping the children at Folkestone by telegraphic message[†1] if feasible.

To PETER CUNNINGHAM, 28 JUNE 1853

Text from N, II, 471

Boulogne | Tuesday, Twenty Eighth June 1853

My Dear Cunningham,

We are delighted to hear of your good intentions. As you can come any day after Sunday, I should say, Monday. Only let me know when, and we will be at the Custom House. You will want no passport; "restant à Boulogne chez M. C. D., Château des Moulineaux" is a sufficient response when you are asked for one. Bring some work. I shall go at it every day until lunch, and after that period shall become a sybarite with surprising constancy. Will you ask B & E to give you my Bleak Houses No 17 to bring with you.

Ever Cordially,

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To LEIGH HUNT [?28 JUNE 1853]

Mention in next.

To W. H. WILLS, 28 JUNE 1853*

MS Huntington Library.

Boulogne. | Tuesday Twenty Eighth June 1853.

My Dear Wills.

H. W.

I send you Hunt's article which will do very well, made into such lengths as will suit us.[†2] Get it into type. And read my letter to him, enclosed, before you post it.

I send also, the Child's History.

Self.

One or two letters to post, enclosed. One or two of those you sent me, returned, with a note of request to W. H. W. written in pencil on each.

I sent a telegraphic message to Folkestone yesterday, to stop the children from coming on; the weather was so boisterous and the sea so high. It did not reach them until they were embarked with all the luggage, and there was not time to get them out. They came on therefore, and had a very bad passage and were horribly sick; but we were glad they came, after all.

I can't remember that I have any news, so I suppose I have none.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

Thomas's Covent Garden Market?[†1]

To H. K. BROWNE,[†2] 29 JUNE 1853

MS Dickens House.

Chateau des Moulineaux, Rue Beaurepaire,
Boulogne Twenty Ninth June 1853.

My Dear Browne.

First, I beg to report myself, thank God, thoroughly well again. I was truly sensible of your hearty note, and of the right good will with which you fell to work at the plates under those discouraging circumstances.

Secondly, I send the subjects for the next No.[†3] Will you let me see the sketches[†4] here, by post.

Thirdly, I am now ready with four subjects for the concluding double No.[†5] and will post them to you tomorrow or next day!!!!!!!!!!!

Fourthly, I wish you would so contrive your arrangements—if so dispoged—as to come and pay us a visit here. I don't know whether you know Boulogne well; but, well known, it is a very capital place, with quite as much that is quaint and picturesque among the fishing-people and their quarter of the Town, as is to be found (if you'll believe me in a whisper) at Naples. We purpose remaining here until the middle of October—have a queer Doll's house of many rooms—and really beautiful gardens. I think you would like it, and be amused, and would find much worthy of note and afterwards useful in these parts. Now I have in contemplation, on Monday the 22nd. of August to do the best French dinner that can be done in these regions, to celebrate the conclusion of Bleak House.[†6] Unto which festival, Bradbury, and Evans, and Lemon, stand pledged to come over. Can you not, on such good notice, arrange to come with them, and to remain after them—taking a good week or fortnight of fresh air and change. We shall be truly delighted to receive you. Consider O man of business, and at your leisure reply.

Address as above.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Hablot K. Browne Esquire.

To WILKIE COLLINS, 30 JUNE 1853*

MS Morgan Library.

Boulogne | Thirtieth June 1853. | Thursday

My Dear Collins.

I am very sorry indeed to hear so bad an account of your illness, and had no idea it had been so severe. I can't help writing (though most unnecessarily I hope), to say that you can't get well too soon; and that I warrant the pure air, regular hours, and perfect repose, of this place, to bring you round triumphantly. You have only, when you are sufficiently restored to defy the D—octor and all his works, to write me a line, naming your day and hour. My friend Lord Wilmot[†1] will then be found at the Custom House.[†2]

Ward's[†3] account of me was the true one. I was thoroughly disabled—in a week—and doubt if you would have known me. But I recovered with surprising quickness—positively insisting on coming here, against all advice but Elliotson's—and got to work next day but one as if nothing had happened.

And what was the matter with me? Sir—I find this reads like Dr. Johnson directly—Sir, it was an old, afflicted

K I D N E Y [†4]

—once the torment of my childhood, in which I took cold.—[†5]

July

To JOHN FORSTER, [3 JULY 1853]

Extract in F, VII, iv, 593. Date: 3 July according to Forster. From Boulogne.

Fancy what Beaucourt told me last night. When he "conceived the inspiration" of planting the property ten years ago, he went over to England to buy the trees, took a small cottage in the market-gardens at Putney, lived there three months, held a symposium every night attended by the principal gardeners of Fulham, Putney, Kew, and Hammersmith (which he calls Hamsterdam), and wound up with a supper at which the market-gardeners rose, clinked their glasses, and exclaimed with one accord (I quote him exactly) VIVE BEAUCOURT! He was a captain in the National Guard, and Cavaignac[†1] his general. Brave Capitaine Beaucourt! said Cavaignac, you must receive a decoration. My General, said Beaucourt, No! It is enough for me that I have done my duty. I go to lay the first stone of a house upon a Property I have—that house shall be my decoration. (Regard that house!)

To MARK LEMON, 3 JULY 1853

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds. Address (envelope, MS Benoliel Collection): Angleterre. | Mark Lemon Esquire | 11 Gordon Street | Tavistock Square | London. PM 3 JUILL 53.

Chateau des Moulineaux | Rue Beaurepaire, Boulogne.
Third July 1853.

My dear Mark

I think you may like to know under my own hand that I am Myself again, and in a highly vigorous condition; working, walking, eating, and drinking—my bottle of wine a day—at tenpence.

Also that I propose to hold the great dinner for which you have accepted a general invitation—here—in these premises, on Monday the 22nd. of August. I hope you will be able to stay a few days, and that B and E at that dull business-time of the year will be able to do likewise. If Mrs. Lemon[†2] could manage to accompany you, Kate begs me to say with her love (to which add Georgina's and mine) that it would give us the greatest pleasure to see her. But we have our misgivings touching the strong grasp of the baby[†3] on the shores of Albion.

Such miserable objects as the children arrived, you never beheld! They had a very bad passage, and were all manner of toad-like colors. I was unspeakably ashamed of the whole race. The luggage I had not the heart to look upon—but I am told it overflowed the customhouse and lay in a sluggish pool upon the wharf. The horse and little carriage came by boat from London. Dimly, in the long perspective of a windy street, I saw the horse swinging in the air, in course of disembarkation—with thirty or forty Natives screeching at him and Cooper[†4] forlornly exposed to the fury of the populace. I immediately turned, fled into the country, and did not venture home until night, when the animal was—somehow—stabled.

I cannot say too much of our little country house, which, for my purpose, is perfectly delightful. It stands in gardens of its own on a broad hillside, and has its own millions of flowers, shady little woods, bowers for smoking, kitchen gardens, gasping gold fish in fountains that will not[†5] on any consideration play, and other rustic delights. There is a clock in every room, and I am inclined to think that we keep correct Australian time—which I believe is about ten or twelve hours different from French or English calculation.

When I take a flight to London, I shall not fail to give you a day or two's notice, in the hope that we may dine together. Meanwhile "make a note of" the twenty second of August. Peter[†1] is coming here to-morrow, on a visit. I have ordered toast and water to be prepared for him. My landlord M. Beaucourt Mutuel—whose whole soul is in this place and has really done wonders with it, besides ruining himself to begin with—observed me this morning, putting writing materials in a bedroom in a pavilion in the garden, destined for Peter. "For a friend M. Beaucourt", said I, "who is coming to see us to-morrow." M. Beaucourt immediately pulled off his grey cap with one hand, laid his other hand upon his breast, and replied "I am glad of it. Eh my God! He will see the Property." (He never mentions the place by any other name on any account.)

Mamey and Katey are in a state of dreadful anxiety that it should be explained to Lally and Betty,[†2] with no end of loves, that they will write to them per Peter. Will you say as much? And will you receive this—not as a letter, for that would be such a prodigious flight of imagination, but [†a]as a hearty shake of the hand, From Yours my dear old boy, always affecy. CD. Kind loves and regards from all.[†a]

To W. H. WILLS, 4 JULY 1853

MS Huntington Library.

Boulogne. Monday Fourth July 1853.

My Dear Wills.

This No.[†3] will require a good deal of alteration.

In the first place, Morley[†4] must go first, beyond all question. In the second place, Morley and Sala[†5] should by no manner of means go together.[†6] In the third place, the Roving Englishman[†7] must come out bodily; since, apart from the slovenliness of the article, some of the statements are much too strong for me to commit myself to, without a positive knowledge of the facts.[†8] Lastly, I think you have too much History of England at one time, and would do better to print one chapter in this No. and one after a week's interval.[†9]

[†a]Be very careful what you fill up with. And also, if you please, to revise the revise of the Child's History—taking care that it is pointed for sense.[†a]

[†b]How two men can have gone, one after the other, to the Camp, and have written nothing about it,[†10] passes my comprehension. I have been in great doubt about the end of Sala. I wish you would suggest to him from me, when you see him, how wrong it is. Surely he cannot be insensible to the fact that military preparation in England at this time means Defence.[†1] Woman, says Sala, means Home, love, children, mother. Does he not find any protection of these things in a wise and moderate means of Defence; and is not the union between these things and those means one of the most natural, significant, and plain, in the world.[†b†2]

Mrs. Dickens and her sister have gone to look after Peter, while I prepare my parcel.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

Pray get something done in notice of the enclosed.[†3] I have forgotten it this long time.

To H. K. BROWNE, 6 JULY 1853

MS Private.

Boulogne, Mercreday[†4] Juil-ly 6, 1853.

Mon cher Brune.

If I express myself, not altogether in the perfect English of your country, pardon me for tout-ce que je fais. J'ai si longtemps demeuré—on the Continent—que j'ais presqu'oublié my native tongue.

My friend, il me parait—that the esquisses seront—admirable—when they shall be finished according to your so wondrous power of art.[†5] I them return—ci-enclos. Yet I am enchanted of the hope you give me—de vous reçevoir chez moi à Boulogne!

There is great deal of wind here, almost all the days. Madame et Mademoiselle themselves remember of that Englishman, Brune the immortal, and to him send a thousand friendships.

Receive | My aimiable Brune | The assurance
Of my distinguished consideration. | Votre tout devoué

DICKENS[†6]

À Monsieur | Monsr. H. K. Brune

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 10 JULY 1853

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Holly Lodge | Highgate | London.

Boulogne Sunday Tenth July, 1853.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I have not been in London since I left it, ill, or I should have endeavoured to see you there. Nor do I think at present, that I shall journey in that direction until about the twentieth of next month. I am getting my book done in peace, and am (thank God) very vigorous and very brown.

I can't quite make out—my fault no doubt!—the name of the applicant, of Cambridge Terrace, Liverpool Road. If it be Perry, I never heard of her husband. If it be Herry, I never heard of him. If it be Sherry, I have heard of him—but only in connexion with the Spanish Wine trade. If it be Flerry, I never heard of him. If it be Jerry, I have never heard of him. And if it be Henry, Benry, Stenry—Werry or Merry—I never heard of him.

We are all very well indeed, I am happy to say, and hear constantly from Charley who is beginning to make head with his German. The Baby who defies competition, almost disappeared to the naked eye, under the effects of a very bad passage across; but he has since recovered, and is—as he was—unapproachable by any baby whomsoever. The laudable vanity of parents and Aunts,[†1] in some weak-minded instances induces a belief that there are Babies worthy to hold a candle to him; but this is an innocent delusion and engenders feelings gratifying to the individuals, of which one would be sorry to deprive them.

I am always hoping and expecting to hear of you at the Hotel des Bains[†2]—scarcely the less, I think, because you speak of your party as fixed. For there is an occasional eccentricity (I have observed) in some people's movements.

We all unite in kindest regards, in which Mr. and Mrs. Brown (broad faced I hope?)[†3] are well remembered. I look forward to shewing you, here, the most ridiculous suite of children's rooms ever imagined—an absurdity of which I am quite proud to be the temporary owner—and a very good one in practice too.

There are rumours here, that the English Hay Market has been surprisingly affected by a sudden glut in the article of New hay. It is thought to have been thrown in from Highgate, and I have no doubt is the Holly Lodge contribution.

They speak of 715,428,673,904000 tons. But I suppose this to be a little exaggerated?

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

I have seen a very good occasion for giving the poor schoolmistress that Ten Pounds which we agreed to hold in abeyance.

To W. H. WILLS, 10 JULY 1853*

MS Huntington Library.

Boulogne | Sunday Tenth July 1853.

My Dear Wills. Cunningham is coming home tomorrow—will be in town at night—and will bring the No. with my corrections on it, with him.

A haunted house,[†4] very carelessly revised by the Printer. Sir John Barleycorn[†5] I have not altered in one respect in which I wish you would look to it. Do not mention Allsopp by name on any account. There has been far too much puffery by that firm.

Let people find out who is referred to, if they choose. But it won't do to puff their names.[†1]

In presence of the Sword,[†2] I think Good. Literary Ladies' Maid,[†3] passable. Honorable John[†4] it is quite clear must not go into the same No. with a haunted house.[†5]

Look to the printing of the No.

There is a gleam of Puseyism about St. Vorax[†6] that I don't like.

All well. I am at work again on B. H.[†7] and getting capital materials together for the Autumnal article, our French Watering-place.[†8]

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To W. H. WILLS, 11 JULY 1853*

MS Huntington Library.

Boulogne | Monday Eleventh July 1853.

My Dear Wills.

I send you among these papers Hunt's proof duly cut—with a line across slip 6 where I would stop the first article.[†9] I will think whether it is desirable to change the name of this first paper of the series.[†10] But I rather think not.

This is the only proof you sent me.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To ARTHUR RYLAND, [?EARLY OR MID JULY 1853]

Summary from Minutes, 18 July 53, MS Birmingham and Midland Institute. Date: presumably shortly before the Institute's meeting.

Repeating his offer of reading one of his Christmas Books for the benefit of the Birmingham Institute and enquiring what arrangements the Committee of the Institute proposed to make.

To W. H. WILLS, 17 JULY 1853

MS Huntington Library.

Boulogne, Sunday Seventeenth July | 1853

My Dear Wills.

You will find a great many corrections of mine in the enclosed proof.[†1]

Nothing can improve the design of Miss Lynn's[†2] story[†3] (which I think very bad) but I have altered the wording of it, to avoid its looking, as it did, exactly like an indifferent translation. Unless you have promised anyone to put in that letter of Charles The First, leave it out.[†4]

See that my corrections are all attended to.

You say you have a stronger Poem. If so, and you can get it into this No. instead of the Sonnet,[†5] it will be a decided improvement. Marie's Fever is so twaddly that I should like to see something stronger in the place of a Literary Lady's Maid.[†6] The No. becomes horribly weak in that place.

Will you be so kind as to hand the enclosed yourself to the little bright red round man in the inner room at Coutts's. I generally hand them the paymaster General's Draft for Poole's quarterly pension,[†7] but, as it is payable to me, I cannot receive it until I come to town. Therefore I had best advance the money.

I will probably write you on one or two other small matters, tomorrow.

Look at the enclosed from Hunt. I declare I don't know what to say, and have not answered it! Can you devise any means of getting out of the matter "privately and confidentally"?[†1]

The 22nd. of August will suit us perfectly; but you had better come on the Saturday or Sunday previous, in case the passage should be queer. And we hope you will both be able to stay longer than a week.

Leech and Mrs. Leech arrived here yesterday Evening in a Devil of a gale. Everybody ill—Doctors called in upon the boat (but not for them, I am glad to say)—and a most miserable scene altogether.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

Lounging through Kensington.[†2] | is the best name, I think, for that paper.[†3]

To JOHN FORSTER, [?17 JULY 1853]

Extract in F, VII, iv, 595. Date: no doubt shortly after Leech's arrival on 16 July. From Boulogne.

Leech says that when he stepped from the boat after their stormy passage, he was received by the congregated spectators with a distinct round of applause as by far the most intensely and unutterably miserable looking object that had yet appeared. The laughter was tumultuous, and he wishes his friends to know that altogether he made an immense hit.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 18 JULY 1853

MS Huntington Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street | Piccadilly | London.

Chateau des Moulineaux, Boulogne | Eighteenth July, 1853. Monday

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I am glad to hear those girls are well away at last.

Susan Matcham is the handsome girl whom it was necessary, under very flagrant circumstances indeed, to discharge; but who, being ill at the time of her discharge, had five shillings given her for coach-hire, together with a letter of recommendation to the House Surgeon—either of St. Thomas's or Guy's Hospital: I forget which.[†4] She went away with the greatest gratitude, protesting that she would immediately repair to the hospital, and that she was deeply sensible of the kindness with which she was treated. She never went near the place, and has not been heard of, since. My own impression is, that she went to some male acquaintance with whom, by some means unknown to us, she had communicated while in the Home. She came originally from a London hospital—had had a long illness while with us—and had been most tenderly nursed and restored. I believe the acquaintance before-mentioned, to have hung about the house, and to have seen her more than once.[†1]

If those other cases referred to, should appear to be of a good kind, I think it would be well to take them. But it is desirable to know their circumstances. I have just received an application, apropos of the article in Household Words, respecting two girls—sisters. The circumstances stated, are of a terrible kind; but I doubt the expediency (from what I observe in the letter) of pursuing the matter, at all events until I can see the writer.

It has been blowing great guns here—raining great water-spouts—hailing sugar loaves, and going all up and down the glass in four and twenty hours. We are at present expecting snow.

The baby sends his pity (for the pretended baby), his forgiveness, and respects.

Dear Miss Coutts | Ever Most Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 20 JULY 1853†

MS Huntington Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Holly Lodge | Highgate | near London.

Boulogne, Chateau des Moulineaux | Wednesday Twentieth July 1853.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I dare say you can easily call to mind Mrs. Warner the actress.[†2] Will you read the enclosed portion of a note I received (in a parcel from London) from Mr. Macready, only this morning. It is just within the bounds of possibility that you may have some power of nomination somewhere, that might be well bestowed on such a case.[†3] But I need not say (of all people) that I know what a slender chance there is of such a thing.

When you have read the note, will you write me one word, as I do not like to answer it, leaving any ray of hope open in my direction, which I should probably have to blot out by the next post or so.

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

To W. H. WILLS, 20 JULY 1853*

MS Huntington Library.

Boulogne | Twentieth July 1853.

My Dear Wills.

I can't understand how it is that I received from you at noon to day, a parcel with your note in it dated on the 18th. and saying that you had not yet heard from me. I sent my parcel[†1] up by the boat of Sunday evening. A parcel that went by the same conveyance, and was directed straight to B & E, was received in due course. How my parcel comes to have [been][†2] behind hand with you, and how yours come to be so grievously behind hand with me, I cannot understand. Can you make out, or find out, where the fault lies?

Further, can you give Fonblanque[†3] the bit of information he wants as per inclosed. I have not the reference here.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

W. H. Wills Esquire.

Same day ½ past 4. Your telegraph message just received, and another since sent in answer. I made great changes in the Proof—especially in Miss Lynn's story[†4]—and returned it in the usual way.[†5] I have now sent down to Barnard[†6] to know whether he has the least idea how it can have failed.

Same day ½ p 5. Barnard explains that Captain Barlow[†7] is away from the London Bridge Terminus, and that the parcel is (no doubt) lying there, unforwarded, in his absence. He knows the Captain for certain to be away. Your last parcel to me was delayed by an accident which occasioned the sending of all dispatches round by Calais, and kept them back, one day.

To JOHN FORSTER, [24 JULY 1853]

Extract in F, VII, iv, 593-4. Date: 24 July according to Forster. From Boulogne.

I may mention that the great Beaucourt daily changes the orthography of this place. He has now fixed it, by having painted up outside the garden gate, "Entrée particulière de la Villa des Moulineaux." On another gate a little higher up, he has had painted "Entrée des Ecuries de la Villa des Moulineaux." On another gate a little lower down (applicable to one of the innumerable buildings in the garden), "Entrée du Tom Pouce." On the highest gate of the lot, leading to his own house,

"Entrée du Château Napoléonienne." All of which inscriptions you will behold in black and white when you come. I see little of him now, as, all things being "bien arrangées," he is delicate of appearing. His wife[†1] has been making a trip in the country during the last three weeks, but (as he mentioned to me with his hat in his hand) it was necessary that he should remain here, to be continually at the disposition of the tenant of the Property. (The better to do this, he has had roaring dinner parties of fifteen daily; and the old woman who milks the cows has been fainting up the hill under vast burdens of champagne.)

We went to the theatre[†2] last night, to see the Midsummer Night's Dream—of the Opéra Comique. It is a beautiful little theatre now, with a very good company; and the nonsense of the piece was done with a sense quite confounding in that connection. Willy Am Shay Kes Peer; Sirzhon Foll Stayffe; Lor Lattimeer; and that celebrated Maid of Honour to Queen Elizabeth, Meees Oleeveeir—were the principal characters.

Outside the old town, an army of workmen are (and have been for a week or so, already) employed upon an immense building which I supposed might be a Fort, or a Monastery, or a Barrack, or other something designed to last for ages. I find it is for the annual fair, which begins on the 5th of August and lasts a fortnight. Almost every Sunday we have a fête,[†3] where there is dancing in the open air, and where immense men with prodigious beards revolve on little wooden horses like Italian irons, in what we islanders call a roundabout, by the hour together. But really the good humour and cheerfulness are very delightful. Among the other sights of the place, there is a pig-market every Saturday, perfectly insupportable in its absurdity. An excited French peasant, male or female, with a determined young pig, is the most amazing spectacle. I saw a little Drama enacted yesterday week, the drollery of which was perfect. Dram. Pers. 1. A pretty young woman with short petticoats and trim blue stockings, riding a donkey with two baskets and a pig in each. 2. An ancient farmer in a blouse, driving four pigs, his four in hand, with an enormous whip—and being drawn against walls and into smoking shops by any one of the four. 3. A cart, with an old pig (manacled) looking out of it, and terrifying six hundred and fifty young pigs in the market by his terrific grunts. 4. Collector of Octroi[†4] in an immense cocked hat, with a stream of young pigs running, night and day, between his military boots and rendering accounts impossible. 5. Inimitable, confronted by a radiation of elderly pigs, fastened each by one leg to a bunch of stakes in the ground. 6. John Edmund Reade,[†5] poet,[†1] expressing eternal devotion to and admiration of Landor,[†2] unconscious of approaching pig recently escaped from barrow. 7. Priests, peasants, soldiers, &c. &c.

To W. C. MACREADY, 24 [JULY] 1853

MS Morgan Library. Date: CD's Aug clearly an error for July: see To Miss Coutts, 20 July.

Chateau des Moulineaux, Boulogne | Sunday Twenty Fourth August 1853.

My Dearest Macready.

Some unaccountable delay in the transmission here of the parcel which contained your letter, caused me to come into the receipt of it, a whole week after its date. I immediately wrote to Miss Coutts, who has written to you, and I hope some good may come of it.[†3] I know it will not be her fault if none does. I was very much concerned to read your account of poor Mrs. Warner, and to read her own plain and unaffected account of herself. Pray assure her of my cordial sympathy and remembrance, and of my earnest desire to do anything in my power to help to put her mind at ease.

We are living in a beautiful little country place here, where I have been hard at work ever since I came, and am now (after an interval of a week's rest) going to work again, to finish Bleak House. Kate and Georgina send their kindest love to you and Miss Macready and all the rest. They look forward, I assure you, to their Sherborne visit,[†4] when I—a mere forlorn wanderer—shall be roaming over the Alps into Italy.

I saw the Midsummer Night's Dream of the Opéra Comique, done here (very well) last night. The way in which a poet named Willyim Shay Kes Peer, gets drunk in company with Sir John Foll Stayffe—fights with a noble hight Lor Lattimeer (who is in love with a maid of honor you may have read of in history, called Meees Oleevia), and promises not to do so any more, on observing symptoms of love for him in the Queen of England—is very remarkable. Queen Elizabeth too, in the profound and impenetrable disguise of a black velvet mask, two inches deep by three broad, following him into taverns and worse places, and enquiring of persons of doubtful reputation for "the sublime Williams", was inexpressibly ridiculous. And yet the nonsense was done with a sense quite admirable.

I have been very much struck by the book you sent me. It is one of the wisest, the manliest, and most serviceable, I ever read. I am reading it again with the greatest pleasure and admiration.[†5]

Ever Most affectionately Yours | My Dear Macready,

CHARLES DICKENS

W. C. Macready Esquire.

To W. H. WILLS, 25 JULY 1853

MS Huntington Library.

Boulogne | Monday July Twenty Fifth 1853.

My Dear Wills.

H. W.

I received your parcel last night, and return the proof by this afternoon's boat, with a good many corrections in it. Sala's article[†1] is so badly printed, that I have been obliged to put a query here and there, really not understanding what is meant.

If I can[†2] write an article this week, I will.[†3] But I am so full of the close of Bleak House that I can't, for the life of me, get at a good subject for H. W. as yet.

Dixon's paper[†4] admirably told, though nothing new in it.

GUILD.[†5]

I think the reduction of Johnson necessary—but I would do it on not less than a month's notice.

THINGS IN GENERAL.[†5]

I hope to begin my double No.[†6] next Monday. If I can get it done in good time, that is to say by the 18th. or 19th. I shall come over with it myself. Of this I will advise you, however, in due course.

Dr. Storrar's[†7] opinion of Forster gives me great concern, though it has (as I think you know) certainly been mine for some time. I do not myself believe that Elliotson, pre-occupied with other things, has the least idea of the serious nature of his position. And I am strongly inclined to think that the best course I can take is to write privately to Elliotson, and represent to him my impression of the necessity of his positively ordering Forster away.[†8] What do you think of that?

Ever Faithfully

CD.

Haydn is the Dictionary of Dates man. This is (I think) the third time he has acted towards me in that honorable, and, within my experience, unprecedented manner.[†9]

[†10]A Literary Ladies Maid[†11] and Corporation Dreams,[†12] coming together, make me thrill and shudder with indescribable anguish.[†13]

To W. H. WILLS, 27 JULY 1853

MS Berg Collection.

Boulogne, Wednesday Twenty Seventh July 1853.

My Dear Wills.

There will be either three or four more—as nearly as I can judge, four more—of these slips, to complete this article.[†1] I will send you the rest, please God, tomorrow, by the post at night.

I have also thought of another, to be called Frauds upon The Fairies[†2]—apropòs of George Cruikshank's[†3] editing.[†4] Half playfully and half seriously, I mean to protest most strongly against alteration—for any purpose—of the beautiful little stories which are so tenderly and humanly useful to us in these times[†5] when the world is too much with us early and late;[†6] and then to re-write Cinderella according to Total-Abstinence, Peace-Society, and Bloomer[†7] principles, and expressly for their propagation.[†8]

I shall want his book of Hop o'my thumb[†9] (Forster noticed it in the last Examiner)[†10] and the most simple and popular version of Cinderella you can get me. I shall not be able to do it until after finishing Bleak House, but I shall do it the more easily for having the books by me. So send them, if convenient, in your next parcel.

Acknowledge the safe receipt of this MS.[†11]

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 28 JULY 1853*

MS Morgan Library.

Boulogne, Twenty Eighth July 1853.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

But one word. I cannot tell you what I think and feel about your noble kindness to Mrs. Warner[†1]—I would hardly do so if I could—but it seems a relief to my mind to say how it urges me on to do what I can't and don't do.

I saw in the Times that that Rascal's[†2] case before the Insolvent Court was adjourned until yesterday.[†3] Pray do let me know when it is all over.

I have heard of our new Home cases.

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

August

To DR WILLIAM BROWN, 1 AUGUST 1853*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Angleterre. Affranchie. | William Brown Esquire | Miss Burdett Coutts | Holly Lodge | Highgate | near London.

Boulogne, | First August 1853.

My Dear Mr. Brown

I am very much obliged to you for your kind letter, as I was most anxious to hear about Miss Coutts, after the intolerable impressment of her into the Insolvent Court by that detestable ruffian.[†4] He cannot be too vile for my belief in him. A fellow so unmanly and audacious must be a scoundrel in the grain, from the top of his head to the sole of his foot. And apart from the insolence of that examination

(which I believe to be utterly illegal from beginning to end)[†5] I hold the Commissioners to be Paragons of Asses for not dismissing his petition in the outset as impertinent and irrelevant. Nobody shall tell me that they need have entertained it, with that glaringly false and ridiculous declaration of the cause of his Insolvency staring them in the face.[†6]

We are delighted to hear that there is hope of your passing through Boulogne so soon,[†7] and I am glad to think that it will be in the Fair time. I am told it is a pretty sight, and great preparations are now being made for it outside the Haute Ville. It begins on the Fifth, and lasts a fortnight.

I took a trip to Amiens the other day,[†1] where there is a great deal done for the health and comfort of the working people which we might copy to advantage.[†2] The more I look about me the more convinced I become, that if we would only condescend to amuse our people a little more, they would drink and do worse a good deal less.[†3]

Being hard at work finishing my book, I write short letters; otherwise I should explode at this point, like a shell, on the subject of the English law in general, and the instance this Dunn affords of its leaving grievous delinquents alone.[†4] Therefore I may congratulate you on the necessity I am under of going out to refresh myself with a walk, and shattering the peace of my sister in law instead.

With our united kindest remembrances to Miss Coutts and to Mrs. Brown,

Believe me always | Very faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

William Brown Esquire.

To W. H. WILLS, 1 AUGUST 1853

MS Huntington Library.

Boulogne, First August, 1853.

My Dear Wills.

I return the No.[†5] which is a very good one indeed. Look to the general printing and punctuation of the second article, and also of Sick Grapes.[†6]

Enclosed is a chapter of Child's History.[†7]

In your next parcel will you send me

Vergani's Italian Grammar[†8]

A Pocket Italian and English, and English and Italian, Dictionary.
An Italian Dialogue Book.

You will get them all at De Porquet's in Tavistock Street[†1] by the office. Don't send Punch in my parcels.

I am now going, tooth and nail, at Bleak House. If I get done in time, I shall certainly come over. But it entirely depends upon my work.

I have just come back from Amiens, after a two days' trip. Your parcel was delivered here, last night, just as I came home.

Ever Faithfully

CD

To W. H. WILLS, 4 AUGUST 1853*

MS Huntington Library.

Boulogne | Fourth August 1853. | Thursday Evening

My Dear Wills

I send a hasty line to say that your parcel arrived safely today, but had no letter from you in it. It does not appear, from the contents of the parcel, that any such letter was necessary, or supposed to be there. But I send this, in case of any omission.

Faithfully Ever

CD.

To W. H. WILLS, 5 AUGUST 1853

Text from R. C. Lehmann, CD as Editor, 1912, pp. 112-4.

Boulogne | Friday Evening, Fifth August, 1853

My Dear Wills,

I am too much occupied with the conclusion of "Bleak House"—just getting fairly into it—to go, with a pen, over the No.[†2] without delaying it. I therefore send the corrections of the "Child's History" chapter enclosed, and, without returning the proof in a parcel, will herein note my objections.

In the first place the No. is an awfully and solemnly heavy one—and, if you have any kind of means to that end by you, must really be lightened.[†3] I read it last night, and had a Nightmare. I doubt if anything so heavy (except stewed lead) could possibly be taken, before going to bed.

1st. "Justice to Bears".[†4] The name won't do. We have already had "Justice to the Hyaena".[†1] "BROTHER BRUIN" would be a capital name, I think[†2]—thus introduced:

"The bear symbolises savage and primitive equality, and is therefore the aversion of the aristocracy." Such is the clue to ursine facts, according to Passional Zoology, which subject, and M. Toussenel's treatment of it, we now resume. It would appear that Mr. Sneak, in "The Mayor of Garratt",[†3] had much reason in him when he addressed the rough personage of the piece as Brother Bruin.[†4] Was he not a Bear and a Brother?

"Here again"—M. Toussenel exclaims—"is another"—[†5]

Then read the proof—you, W. H. W.—with an eye to this fact—that it wants to be made clearer all the way through, that it is M. Toussenel who is speaking, and not H. W. conducted by C. D.[†6]

Secondly, the first stage to Australia.[†7] There is a forlorn attempt at humour about the Deputy Inspector General (page 584) that cannot be too ferociously decapitated. Pray have nothing about a detective in that connection; it looks like weakly and palely hanging on Mr. Bucket. Damn "here they are" at page 585—and dele it too. "And the onus of the idea task strangles every newly born smile that struggles for existence"—at page 584 again—strike out with a pen of iron.[†8] Look at the whole paper.

If the "Glimpse of Dublin" be not by Allingham, strike it out.[†9] If it be, hold it over.

"Gore House"[†10] is very poor. Page 591, first column. Stop at the Graces, and dele the rest of that paragraph.[†11] It is Skimpole, you know—the whole passage.[†12] I couldn't write it more like him.

I have forgotten "Licensed to Juggle".[†13] Look to the slang talk of it, and don't let "Ya" stand for "You."[†14]

The "Stereoscope"[†15] is dreadfully literal. Some fancy must be got into the No. if John writes an article for it himself (I mean our John:[†1] not Forster). I should have thought the greater part of it written by McCulloch,[†2] edited by Rintoul.[†3]

I am going out for a walk, after a punishing day's work.

Ever faithfully,

C. D.

P.S.—Brighten it, brighten it, brighten it!

To MRS BROWN, 7 AUGUST 1853

MS Morgan Library. Address: Angleterre. | Mrs. Brown | Miss Burdett Coutts | Holly Lodge | Highgate | near | London.

Chateau des Moulineaux, Boulogne | Sunday Seventh August 1853.

My Dear Mrs. Brown.

Thinking (as you may suppose) a good deal about that ruffian[†4] lately, I had considered your question before I received it from you. I say, without hesitation, that I would not prosecute him for the Perjury he has committed in swearing to the Schedule.[†5] I would have him before a Magistrate on his recommencing any annoyance, but I would not run the hazard of making a Martyr of him (even with the ill-conditioned, addle-headed, or malevolent Idiots who could alone have any consideration for such a scoundrel), coupled with all the annoyance and uncertainty of our monstrous Law.

I am very sorry that I did not see the Daily News,[†6] and cannot see it here. But I have written to town for it. I saw, with a thrill of pleasure (in the Times report of the Judgment) that a generous movement of irrepressible indignation pervaded the crowded court when his conduct was—feebly—described.[†7]

As to the Asinine Commissioner's[†1] compliments, they are of a piece with so much unreason and sheer rottenness of the same kind, that I feel as if I could strike my head against the wall, in the insupportability of bearing it. That kind of gingerly balancing of black against white, has become one of the Judicial and Parliamentary common-places. And we shall perish of common-places at last, if we don't mind what we are about—or if Prince Albert and his relations, interposing in Foreign affairs, leave us any good name or any good thing, long, to perish out of.[†2]

I should very much like (and I have often thought so) to state this Dunn's case, as from a public knowledge of it, in Household Words.[†3] I think I could cast a little more reproach and disgrace about the gentleman than the Judges do.[†4] I wish you would ask Miss Coutts to think at her leisure whether she sees any objection to it.

And pray tell her that if I were called upon to describe her hand-writing I should say—Round, full, clear, intelligible, always distinctly made out, very upright, and generally resembling a school-copy in copper plate.[†5]

I am confident, and I will die in the confidence, that the Insolvent Commissioners had no right to entertain that man's petition, when they had it in legal evidence before them that it was stated on a false oath.

With kindest regards from all, | Dear Mrs. Brown | Most Indignantly

And Ferociously | Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

P.S. I hope you will not be shocked when you come here, to see an eminent Englishman of our acquaintance with a Moustache.[†6]

To W. H. WILLS, 7 AUGUST 1853

MS Huntington Library.

Sunday Seventh August 1853. | Boulogne.

My Dear Wills

On the night of the day I wrote to you about there being no letter in the parcel—no, the next night—I received the letter from Barnards office, by itself, "without note or comment".

I like the notion of the Snow Giant[†1] (which would be a good name) though the end is out of the question. It begins to trail off, at the smallpox part. Ask Miss Costello what it is translated from, and whether it is literally translated. If otherwise (of which there is very little hope) I think it might be well altered for the Xmas No.

Ollier's ballad[†2] will do.

I would hold Kensington[†3] over,—certainly for a No. O Heaven, Hunt's not lounging,[†4] and being in earnest!!!

[†a]Can't possibly write autographs,[†5] until I have written Bleak House. My work has been very hard since I have been here; and when I throw down my pen of a day, I throw down myself and can take up neither article.[†a]

Ever Faithfully

CD.

[†b]P.S. My head is so pre-occupied, that I have forgotten two leading points of my note.

First. Will you send me, in a post letter, a £20 note for the enclosed.[†6]

Secondly. Will you [at][†7] once make an enquiry into the Day Chancery Cause,[†8] As—when was it instituted?

How much nearer is it now to its completion.

What has been spent in costs?

How many Counsel appear—about—whenever the Court is moved.[†9]

You did ask this for me before, but I made no note of it. I should like to glance at it in the Preface. Of course I will in no degree whatever, commit your informant; nor shall I even mention the cause by name.[†1] But I wish to be within the facts.[†b]

To W. H. WILLS, 9 AUGUST 1853*

MS Huntington Library.

Boulogne | Ninth August 1853. | Tuesday

My Dear Wills

I have received the £20 note, safely.

One important point in the Day case, missed in your answers, though I hope not in my queries. Amount of costs incurred?

Ever Faithfully

CD.

W. H. Wills Esquire

To H. K. BROWNE, [?EARLY AUGUST 1853][†2]

MS Widener Collection, Harvard. Date: Initials point to 1853-5, therefore Bleak House; wording suggests not long before completion of final double No., at press by 19 Aug.

I hope the Frontispiece and Vignette[†3] will come out thoroughly well from the plate, and make a handsome opening to the book.

Ever Faithfully

CD.[†4]

To ARTHUR RYLAND, [?EARLY AUGUST 1853]

Summary from Minutes of the CD Readings Sub-Committee, 15 Aug 53, MS Birmingham and Midland Institute. Date: presumably shortly before the Sub-Committee's meeting.

Offering to read on two or three nights and leaving the selection of books to the Committee, his one condition being that on one night he should read to a great body of the Working People.

To W. H. WILLS, 11 AUGUST 1853*

MS Huntington Library.

Boulogne | Thursday Evening | Eleventh August 1853.

My Dear Wills.

In your last letter, you said there was a parcel coming, by the Train which would bring the said letter. I therefore think it necessary to let you know that I have received no such parcel yet. I waited until bed time last night, under the impression that it would come. But it did not come; and whether it ever left Wellington Street North, or whether the Mermaids are reading H. W. and combing their hair with the seals of the brown paper, I am undecided.

In haste | Ever Faithfully

CD.

To W. H. WILLS, 12 AUGUST 1853*

MS Huntington Library.

Boulogne | Friday Twelfth August 1853.

My Dear Wills. At the cost of a heavy postage—tomorrow being Saturday with a late boat, your parcel so long delayed (have you any idea how?) and your visit coming on—I think it best to return the Proofs[†1] thus.

Sala's First article,[†2] very good. The same fault in Equine analogies[†3] as in Brother Bruin. Make it clear whose doctrines those are.[†4] Take out Penny News[†5] (excruciating; it must be reserved for a first rate No.) and get in the Coombe with this brilliant name

An Irish Stew.[†6]

I will write again after hearing from you. Will you tell Forster that I only got his letter in your parcel, towards bed time last night?

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To W. H. WILLS, 15 AUGUST 1853

MS Huntington Library.

Boulogne, Fifteenth August 1853 | Monday

My Dear Wills

No. 179.[†7] "Want Places" not in inverted commas as a title.[†8] Pray substitute something for Houses of business.[†1] Which is wretched, and contradictory. (I fear I am writing—it just strikes me—about a No. that is worked.)

No. 180 I will try to return tomorrow.

I see no objection whatever to Sala's pursuing that subject,[†2] as long as his matter is good.

I hope to dine at H. W. on Thursday at ½ past 6. I shall be due at London Bridge at 6—purposing to write the last little three-page chapter[†3] of Bleak House, in town[†4]—and will come straight on in a constitutional Cab.[†5] Perhaps Forster will like to dine with us.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To ARTHUR RYLAND, 22 AUGUST 1853†

Text from Minutes, 29 Aug 53, MS Birmingham and Midland Institute.

Chateau des Moulineaux Boulogne | Monday Twenty Second August 1853.

My dear Sir.

I have had the pleasure of considering your letter, and beg to mention two points that I desire to suggest to the Committee.

The exertion of reading in so large a place being very great, I would wish to have a night's interval between the first & second reading. I would not disturb the third on any account, but I should like to begin on the Tuesday and rest on the Wednesday. Can this be managed?

The nights would then be, the 27th the 29th and 30th

In reference to the choice of the book for the second night, I have to make my second suggestion. "The Cricket on the Hearth"[†6] would answer exceedingly well for the purpose in a smaller place; but the Town Hall at Birmingham requires a more dramatic, and forcible subject.

I have not the least doubt of this. The best book would be "The Chimes"[†7] or "The Haunted Man".[†8] I could make the greatest effect with "The Chimes" which I read privately on several occasions at the time it was written and know the power of, with an audience.

When the Committee shall have had leisure to discuss these details again, I shall be happy to hear from you.

Always my dear Sir | Very faithfully yours

CD.

Arthur Ryland Esqe

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 27 AUGUST 1853

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Bains de Vichy | Auvergne.

Boulogne, Saturday Twenty Seventh August | 1853.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

A thousand thanks for the powders, which I received (to my unbounded amazement) as I was sitting at breakfast in the solitary desert of Tavistock House.[†1] I took two, in strict observance of the directions, and came back triumphantly. There was hardly a ripple on the sea, but I have half a mind to believe that the powders had some hand in that.

I found time to get to Shepherds Bush, where all was going on quietly; one of the delinquents having been just apprehended and being then under remand.[†2] The little girl from Petworth is an extraordinary case of restless imposture and seeking after notoriety; but there are chances (not desperate chances, I think) of something better being made of it.

Your packet I sent safely to Stratton Street as soon as I arrived in town.

I have just finished my book (very prettily indeed, I hope)[†3] and am in the first drowsy lassitude of having done so. I should be lying in the sunshine by the hour together, if there were such a thing. In its absence I prowl about in the wind and rain. Last night was the most tremendous I ever heard for a storm of both;—I fear there will be sad shipwrecks in the newspapers a few days hence.[†4]

The article in the Daily News[†5] was written by my Sub Editor Mr. Wills (who makes those enquiries sometimes, and finds the cupboards of begging letter writers full of provender) in conjunction with the Editor of the paper.[†6] He has nothing to do with it (I mean the Daily News) himself, but rushed into the subject con amore.

Not having an atom of news to tell, I am troubled with doubts of the justification I have for sending this sheet of paper so far. My publishers have had their festivity here and are gone;[†7] I am looking up my Italian again preparatory to my Autumn trip; Christmas numbers of Household Words already importune me to make them all right before I go; and that is all I know—except that I have misty visions of meeting you somewhere by the Alps, and a kind of absolute certainty of dining with you at Townshend's! I hold to my purpose of leaving here on the tenth of October, and going straight to Lausanne by Paris and Geneva.

You have seen, I dare say, that disagreeable account of Mr. and Mrs. Norton[†1] at the County Court.[†2] It is very odd that they should have become a public topic so soon after our speaking of them as we did. (This reminds me that I send by the same post a letter for Kaye[†3] Shuttleworth, on which I place your name conspicuously for greater certainty's sake.)

I shall look forward to hearing how you like Vichy—how large Mrs. Brown's face gets in that air—and how those airy plans of yours seem to be shaping themselves out in the far perspective. Mrs. Dickens and her sister, and all the children, send immense packets of messages and loves.—The baby defies competition I need not observe.

The Birmingham people are arranging those readings I promised to give them.[†4] They expect to get five hundred pounds for their new Institution (a splendid idea of a Mechanics Athenaeum) therefrom. I am going to read three nights in the Christmas week—to two thousand working people only, on the Friday—the Christmas Carol. You heard the beginning of Bleak House.[†5] I wish (and did wish very heartily) you had been here the night before last, to hear the end.

With kind regards to Mr. and Mrs. Brown

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

To SIR JAMES KAY-SHUTTLEWORTH, [27 AUGUST 1853]

Mention in last. Date: sent by same post as that letter.

To INSPECTOR C. F. FIELD,[†1] 27 AUGUST 1853

Extract in John Wilson catalogue, No. 53 (1984); MS 1 p.; addressed Mr. Field; dated Boulogne 27 Aug 53.

Telling Field that he is staying in Boulogne for the summer and Wills has just brought him his letter. As I have no kind of connexion with any miscellaneous paper or periodical except Household Words, he cannot serve him in any other direction. But he hopes to call attention to Fields's new sphere of action[†2] in Household Words.

To do this, he wants to see Field in London in about a fortnight. Wills will ask him to call and make an appointment. Heartily wishing him success.

To THE HON. MRS RICHARD WATSON, 27 AUGUST 1853

MS Huntington Library. Address: Angleterre. | The Hon: Mrs. Watson | Rockingham Castle | Northamptonshire.

Villa des Moulineaux, Boulogne.
Saturday Twenty Seventh August 1853.

My Dear Mrs. Watson

I received your letter—most welcome and full of interest to me—when I was hard at work, finishing Bleak House. We are always talking of you; and I had said, but the day before, that one of the first things I would do on my release, would be to write to you. To finish the topic of Bleak House at once, I will only add that I like the conclusion very much and think it very pretty indeed. The story has taken extraordinarily—especially during the last five or six months when its purpose has been gradually working itself out. It has retained its immense circulation from the first; beating dear old Copperfield by a round ten thousand and more.[†3] I have never had so many readers. (We had a little reading of the final double No. here the night before last, and it made a great impression, I assure you.)

We are all extremely well, and like Boulogne very much indeed. I laid down the rule before we came, that we would know nobody here, and we do know nobody here. We evaded callers as politely as we could, and gradually came to be understood and left to ourselves. It is a fine bracing air, a beautiful open country, and an admirable mixture of town and country. We live on a green hill-side out of the town, but are in the town (on foot) in ten minutes. Things are tolerably cheap, and exceedingly good; the people very cheerful, good-looking, and obliging; the houses very clean; the distance to London, short, and quickly traversed. I think if you came to know the place (which I never did myself until last October, often as I have been through it) you could be but in one mind about it.

Charley is still at Leipzig.[†4] I shall take him up, somewhere on the Rhine, to bring him home for Christmas, as I come back on my own little tour. He has been in the Hartz Mountains on a walking tour, and has written a Journal thereof which he has sent home in portions. It has cost about as much in postage as would have bought a pair of ponies.

I contemplate starting from here on Monday the 10th. of October; Catherine, Georgina, and the rest of them, will then go home. I shall go first, by Paris and Geneva, to Lausanne—for it has a separate place in my memory. If the Autumn should be very fine (just possible after such a summer) I shall then go by Chamounix to Martigny,[†1] over the Simplon, to Milan. Thence to Genoa, Leghorn, Pisa, and Naples. Thence, I hope, to Sicily. Back by Bologna, Florence, Rome, Verona, Mantua, &c to Venice, and home by Germany; arriving in good time for Christmas Day. Three nights in Christmas week, I have promised to read in the Town Hall at Birmingham, for the benefit of a new and admirable Institution for working men, projected there. The Friday will be the last night, and I shall read the Carol to two thousand working people—stipulating that they shall have that night entirely to themselves.

It just occurs to me that I mean to engage for the two months odd, a travelling servant. I have not yet got one. If you should happen to be interested in any good foreigner well acquainted with the countries and the languages, who would like such a Master, how delighted I should be to like him!

Ever since I have been here, I have been very hard at work: often getting up at day break to write through many hours. I have never had the least return of illness, thank God, though I was so altered (in a week) when I came here, that I doubt if you would have known me. I am redder and browner than ever at the present writing, with the addition of a rather formidable and fierce moustache.—[†a]Miss Coutts dined here a week or two ago, on her way to the baths of Vichy. She asked very earnestly after you.[†a]—Lowestoft I know by walking over there from Yarmouth, when I went down on an exploring expedition previous to Copperfield.[†2] It is a fine place. I saw the name "Blunderstone" on a direction-post between it and Yarmouth, and took it from the said direction-post for the book.—We imagined the Captain's[†3] ecstacies when we saw the birth of his child[†4] in the papers.—In some of the descriptions of Chesney Wold, I have taken many bits, chiefly about trees and shadows, from observations made at Rockingham.[†5] I wonder whether you have ever thought so! I shall hope to hear from you again soon, and shall not fail to write again before I go away. There seems to be nothing but "I" in this letter; but "I" know my dear friend that you will be more interested in that letter in the present connexion, than in any other I could take from the Alphabet.

Catherine and Georgina send their kindest loves, and more messages than this little sheet would hold. If I were to give you any hint of what we feel at the sight of your handwriting, and at the receipt of any word from yourself about yourself and the dear boys and the [†b]precious little girls,[†6] I should begin to be sorrowful—which is rather †cthe tendency†c of my mind at the close of another †clong book.†c I heard from Cerjat†1 two or three days since. He †d[ ]†d †edefection of that Pump†2 of a Mr. Baird†3†e †f[Goff†4]†f by the bye, lived in this house, two years.

Ever My Dear Mrs. Watson | Yours with true affection | and regard

CD.†b

To THOMAS BEARD,†5 28 AUGUST 1853

MS Dickens House.

Villa des Moulineaux, Boulogne.
Sunday Twenty Eighth August 1853.

My Dear Beard

Having finished my book, I lose no time in reporting progress, and expressing the hope we all have that you will not be so unmindful of the precedents as to let another season go by, without coming to see us.

We have a charming doll's country-house here, of many rooms, with large and extremely pretty gardens—all fluttering and frisking in the shadows of no end of trees, but within ten minutes walk (regular advertisement distance) of the Post Office. French cookery. Excellent light wines. Conservatory to smoke in &c &c &c.

I purpose going on into Italy on Monday the 10th. of October. Any time between this day and that, which will suit you, will suit us perfectly. Your bed is always aired and ready, and you can't come too soon or go too late.

The Baldwinian sea Powers†6 were observed (I hear) at Spithead in great force. May their profoundly unreasonable Majesty be propitious for escapement from Shoe Lane!†7

I think you know what a fine month September usually is? But it really ought to be a finer month than usual this year, seeing how it has rained and blown in these parts since June.

All unite in loves. Wills and his wife are here. Wills took a warm bath yesterday—which, in his own words, "prostrated" him. He crawled home at the rate of half a mile an hour, and then madly and with a horrible imbecility on which comment would be superfluous, tried to set himself up with—†aSeltzer Water!†a

There is no home news beyond this, except that the baby's name is The Plornishghenter, and that the Inimitable wears a Satanic and gloomy moustache.

Ever Heartily Yours | My Dear Beard

CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Beard Esquire.

To THOMAS WEDDLE,[†1] 29 AUGUST 1853*

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Weddle Esquire | Inland Revenue Office | Coventry.

Boulogne | Twenty Ninth August 1853

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Weddle, and begs to say that his engagements do not leave him leisure to comply with the request which Mr. Weddle does him the honor to prefer.[†2]

September

To JOHN FORSTER, [?EARLY SEPTEMBER 1853]

Mention in To Landor, 8 Sep 53. Date: CD presumably wrote shortly before 8 Sep, when he thanked Landor.

Asking Forster's advice as to when he should thank Landor for dedicating Imaginary Conversations of Greeks and Romans to him.

To SIR JAMES KAY-SHUTTLEWORTH, [?1-5 SEPTEMBER 1853]*

MS (fragment) The Hon. Mrs Charles Leaf. Date: probably soon after the publication of the final No. of Bleak House on 31 Aug and before he left for London on 6 Sep.

it may be best to send them[†3] direct to the Household Words office 16 Wellington Street North, Strand. But I shall be here until the 10th. of October, if you see any reason for still preferring to forward them to this address.

I hope the concluding double No. of Bleak House may fall in your way. It has interested and affected me very much, and I have an idea that it is worth reading!

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Sir James Kay Shuttleworth

To MRS CHARLES DICKENS, 7 SEPTEMBER 1853

MS British Library.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS,
Wednesday Seventh September 1853.

My Dearest Catherine.

We had a most miserable passage yesterday; the sea (very high) washing over us the whole way: nearly everybody ill (I among the number); and the boat so intolerably crowded that nobody had room to be ill in—but very few could get near the side—and the condition of things that resulted was most distressing. Collins, who was not ill and was raised aloft on a high pile of luggage, said that the after deck where the ladies were lying wet through, in all directions, looked like an immense picnic party with everybody intent upon a pigeon pie of her own—from the immense number of white basins. When these were all in use, the steward produced a sloppail and two buckets, round each of which a prodigious family party assembled. I had a man, roaring like a lion with sickness, on each of my shoulders, and, as my place was a little corner by the leeward paddle box, every basin, pail, and bucket in the boat was emptied (at least twelve times each) over my head. We got to town at a quarter past 7.

The nursery is done at home. The draining of the little house[†1] looks as if it would not be done for a month, and all that portion of the courtyard is, for the time being, destroyed.

As I forewarned you, Forster's day for Macready's must be a Saturday.[†2] I have therefore added a postscript to your letter[†3] (so written and in such ink that it is no great matter what you say therein, as I defy Macready to read it), importing that on F's account the day is changed to Saturday the 22nd. of October.[†4]

The West End of London is entirely deserted, and no business whatever is being carried on. I went to three shops this morning, for some things I want to wear. Blackmore the tailor[†5] was at Brighton. Butler the tailor[†6] was playing the piano among some mignionette boxes, in the bosom of his family. Only two subordinates were in attendance at Beale's the hosier's,[†7] and they were playing at draughts.[†8]

I am not yet clear as to my day of return, but I think it will be Saturday or Sunday. That mainly depends however, on my ability to work here, which at present is altogether non-existent. I will write again by Friday's Post.

With love to Georgina and all the darlings

Ever affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Wills's box was discovered (at London Bridge) to have been left behind at Folkestone.

To W. C. MACREADY, 7 [SEPTEMBER 1853]*

MS Yale University Library (written inside flap of envelope of Mrs CD to Macready: see last). Date: clearly 7 Sep 53: see last. Address: W. C. Macready Esq. | Sherborne House | Sherborne | Dorsetshire.

London, Wednesday 7th.

My Dearest Macready. I add a postscript to thank you for your delightful note on the completion of B.H—not the least of the joys of completing it—and to say that I have seen Forster, who suggests as an improvement on Catherine's suggested day, Saturday the 22nd. of October. As I had full power to change the day according to his necessities, will you now understand Saturday the 22nd. to be the day appointed for Catherine and Georgina coming to you, instead of the following Monday.

Ever affectionately Yrs

CD

To WALTER SAVAGE LANDOR, 8 SEPTEMBER 1853

Text from MDGH, I, 313-14.

Tavistock House, London, Sept. 8th, 1853.

My dear Landor,

I am in town for a day or two, and Forster tells me I may now write to thank you for the happiness you have given me by honouring my name with such generous mention, on such a noble place, in your great book.[†1] I believe he has told you already that I wrote to him from Boulogne, not knowing what to do, as I had not received the precious volume, and feared you might have some plan of sending it to me, with which my premature writing would interfere.

You know how heartily and inexpressibly I prize what you have written to me, or you never would have selected me for such a distinction. I could never thank you enough, my dear Landor, and I will not thank you in words any more. Believe me, I receive the dedication like a great dignity, the worth of which I hope I thoroughly know. The Queen could give me none in exchange that I wouldn't laughingly snap my fingers at.

We are staying at Boulogne until the 10th of October, when I go into Italy until Christmas, and the rest come home.

Kate and Georgina would send you their best loves if they were here, and would never leave off talking about it if I went back and told them I had written to you without such mention of them. Walter[†2] is a very good boy, and comes home from school[†3] with honourable commendation.[†4] He passed last Sunday in solitary confinement (in a bathroom) on bread and water, for terminating a dispute with the nurse by throwing a chair in her direction. It is the very first occasion of his ever having got into trouble, for he is a great favourite with the whole house, and one of the most amiable boys in the boy world. (He comes out on birthdays in a blaze of shirt-pin).[†1]

If I go and look at your old house,[†2] as I shall if I go to Florence, I shall bring you back another leaf from the same tree as I plucked the last from.[†3]

Ever, my dear Landor, | Heartily and affectionately yours.

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To LORD JOHN RUSSELL,[†4] 8 SEPTEMBER 1853

Extract in American Book Prices Current (1939); MS 2 pp.; dated Tavistock House, 8 Sep 53; addressed Lord John Russell.

Coming home from Boulogne for a couple of days before going to Italy until Christmas, I went down to Pembroke Lodge.[†5]

To WILLIAM ALLINGHAM,[†6] [9] SEPTEMBER 1853

Text from N, II, 486. Date: Friday was 9 Sep in 1853.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS.
Friday Eighth September 1853

My Dear Sir,

I should be glad indeed to have your help in the next Christmas Number, which will be on exactly the same plan as the last. If you will give it a place in your thoughts, and give them a place upon paper, I am sure you will do something to enrich it.[†7]

I seem, I daresay, to take old Time by his forelock.[†8] But it will be necessary for us to have the copy for that Number in the office not later than the first of December.

Faithfully Yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, [9] SEPTEMBER 1853

MS Morgan Library. Date: Friday was 9 Sep in 1853. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Bains de Vichy | Auvergne.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS
Friday Eighth September 1853.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

Your account of Vichy gave me a chill from which I have not yet quite recovered. A dim oppressive sense of windy discomfort[†1] has been upon me ever since, and I feel inclined to try to warm myself at a bright hard hearted little fireplace which produces nothing but smoke. Concerning Mr. and Mrs. Hall[†2]—S. C. I presume to be the Christian Initials—I in confidence renounce that amiable couple as the most terrific Humbugs known on earth at any period of its history.[†3] And as to their being in my confidence, or knowing my affairs, I can only say that it must be in a magnetic, Table moving, or Spirit rapping, way[†4]—wholly without any participation of mine—and altogether unaccountable and supernatural.

I have written to Mrs. Morson this morning, to say I will come to Shepherds Bush tomorrow. I passed your house yesterday, and it looked tremendously dull—if that is any comfort to you. Painters were at work in Mr. Brown's,[†5] and a man on a tall thin pair of steps much spotted with whitewash was at work in the middle window of the dining room, according to the usual manner of that class of operative—scraping a little, looking about him a great deal, and singing the dreariest song I ever heard. I suppose that part of London never was so empty. In search of two or three little things I wanted for my trip, I went to one of my tailor's who lives in Piccadilly. He couldn't bear the silence and had gone to Brighton. I went to another of my tailors who lives in Clifford Street Bond Street. He had given up business altogether, for the time, and was playing the piano upstairs, surrounded by his family and mignionette boxes. I then went to my hosier's in New Bond Street, and found the establishment reduced to two of the least illustrious of the "young men", who were playing at draughts in the back counting house. This is really the experience of a solitary traveller in those regions at eleven o'Clock yesterday forenoon.

I didn't take the powders this last passage, and it was a most forlorn one; the sea washing over us the whole way, the boat rolling violently, and so filled—with appointed sight-seers whom the renown of your Presidential friend[†1] had brought over, in a vain hope of seeing the original head-dress that sets the fashion just now[†2] and pulls up the feminine eyelid into the temples—that there was no room to be ill in. It was the most disastrous scene of that kind in which I ever acted a prominent part. The after-deck was covered (in several places two or three deep) with wet ladies; and so prodigious was the number of white basins, and so intent were the drooping heads upon them, that once when I caught a general view of the scene as the vessel made a dive to the bottom of the Channel, it looked like an immense Pic Nic to which everybody had brought an exclusive pigeon pie. As usual, the moment I set foot upon the pier at Folkestone (where I was received with an encouraging cry of "O, ain't[†3] he green!") I felt as if I were no relation whatever to the drooping and draggled idiot who had come over in my name.

It is dark now, and raining hard—good suitable circumstances in which to devise a Christmas number, which is my present employment.[†4] If you should be in Paris on the 10th. of October, I shall hope to know it beforehand, that I may have the happiness of seeing you (and confounding you by naming T H E [†5] baby) on my way through. With kindest regards to Mr. and Mrs. Brown,

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To MRS CHARLES DICKENS, 9 SEPTEMBER 1853

MS British Library. Address: France. | Mrs. Charles Dickens | Villa des Moulineaux | Boulogne Sur Mer.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS,
Friday Ninth September 1853.

My Dearest Catherine.

I received your letter this morning, when I had just done breakfast in company with—whom do you suppose?—

Gordon![†6]

He turned up here yesterday, and told Wills that unless he heard to the contrary he should go with his portmanteau to Tavistock House at ½ past 10 at night. Our people here being otherwise employed, I was prevented from communicating with him; and when I went home at 12, I found him lying in Georgina's bed! But this is not the worst of it. He had asked Wills when I was going back to Boulogne, and, on Wills's saying "On Sunday", said he should go back with me. But this is not the worst of it yet. For this morning he made some confidences to me respecting Mrs. Gordon's being in a nervous and excited state of mind sometimes, and unfolded an arrangement they had made together for coming (very kindly) to us at Boulogne for a week!! I answered of course that we should be very glad to receive them, though we should have to turn them out while the Whites[†1] were with us. And the matter stands thus. He is to come back with me on Sunday—to return here on Tuesday to meet his wife—and to bring her to Boulogne for a week, on Wednesday or Thursday!!! I certainly could have dispensed with this company.

Beau B[†2] has been in a fearful state respecting the non appearance of Bleak House at Boulogne. The responsibility is his, but the real fault is Joyce's.[†3] B. B. was extremely anxious yesterday that I should exonerate him "to the ladies". Which I hereby do.

The half year's accounts[†4] have appeared, and are two hundred pounds behind Evans's estimate; the sum I have to receive, being £2,300.[†5] I have made up my mind, for this reason and considering the cost of my trip, not to have any party at Christmas but the children's—the rather as the house will just have been got into good order again. We will have some musical evenings instead, and distribute them over a few months.

I have bought a Portmanteau at which I expect and shall require Anne[†6] to fall into fits of admiration. It is a very ingenious thing, and by far the best I have ever seen.

The Guild are going to give their manager a swell dinner at the London Tavern.[†7] It is to come off on Tuesday the 4th. of October, so I shall return from that expedition with Egg[†8] and Collins. I am going to advertize in the Times for a travelling servant.

I have given your letter to Wills, and will bring back whatever may be handed to me in the course of tomorrow. Will you ask Georgina to prepare, on Sunday, our friend Commissionaire Van Loo[†9] of the Hotel Bruxelles. I shall bring over the prodigious portmanteau; though the things from the hosier's, and some travelling shoes, and a little case from Mechi's,[†10] will not have arrived.

This is all the news. But I rely on the great Gordon intelligence being sufficiently astounding to supply the place of a good deal of gossip.

With love to Georgina and the darlings, and a request to the Plornishghenter to keep up his spirits until Sunday,

Ever affectionately

CD.

I have not felt the least inconvenience since Tuesday. From which I infer that it is much the best plan to be sick at once and make an end of it.

To MRS MORSON, 9 SEPTEMBER 1853*

MS Professor D. S. Hopkirk.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS
Friday Ninth September 1853.

Dear Mrs. Morson

Being in town for a couple of days I will come out to see the Home to-morrow morning.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Morson.

To F. M. EVANS, 10 SEPTEMBER 1853*

MS University of Texas.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS
Saturday Tenth September 1853.

My Dear Evans,

I sincerely regret to say that many circumstances seem to have conspired to prevent my coming to London on the great family occasion you have before you. I am afraid it is quite impracticable. But I shall not forget most heartily to drink to your son[†1] and to you, and to wish you a long range of years of health and happiness. I am sure he is a good fellow, and I am sure you are another. And none of your attached friends can hope more ardently than I do, that in the honorable conduct of your children in life, and in their love and affection at home, you may find at once your highest compensation for the loss of their excellent mother,[†2] and your gentlest and dearest remembrance of her.

I should have felt all this—without saying it perhaps—if I could have been with you. I shall not feel it the less cordially at my Boulogne distance, believe me.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

F. M. Evans Esquire.

To EDEN WARWICK,[†3] 10 SEPTEMBER 1853*

MS Mr Michael Silberstein.

Tavistock House, Tavistock Square, London.
Saturday Tenth September 1853.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Eden Warwick, and begs to thank him cordially, for his obliging and interesting communication in reference to the Court of Chancery.[†4]

To ARTHUR RYLAND, [?EARLY-MID SEPTEMBER 1853]

Summary in Minutes, 19 Sep 53, MS Birmingham and Midland Institute. Date: CD was written to after the Committee meeting on 29 Aug and his reply reported to the meeting on 19 Sep 53.

Agreeing to read the Cricket on the Hearth on the second night of his Readings at Birmingham.

To J. T. DELANE,[†1] 12 SEPTEMBER 1853

MS The Times Newspapers Ltd.

Villa des Moulineaux Boulogne | Monday Twelfth September 1853

My Dear Delane

I am very much obliged to you, I assure you, for your frank and full reply to my note. Nothing could be more satisfactory, and I have today seen Mr. Gibson[†2] and placed my two small representatives[†3] under his charge. His manner is exactly what you describe him. I was greatly pleased with his genuineness altogether.[†4]

We remain here until the tenth of next month when I am going to desert my wife and family and run about Italy until Christmas. If I can execute any little commission for you or Mrs. Delane[†5]—in the Genoa street of Silverworkers[†6] or anywhere else—I shall be delighted to do so.

I have been in the receipt of several letters from Macready lately, and rejoice to find him quite himself again—though I have great misgivings that he will lose his eldest boy yet, before he can be got to India.[†7]

[†a]Mrs. Dickens and her sister are proud of your message, and beg their kind regards to be forwarded in return; my other half being particularly comforted and encouraged by your account of Mr. Gibson. In this charge I am to include Mrs. Delane, who I hope will make an exchange of remembrance and give me hers for mine.[†a]

I never saw anything so ridiculous as this place at present. They expected the Emperor ten or twelve days ago, and put up all manner of triumphal arches made of evergreens—which look like tea leaves now, and will take a withered and weird appearance hardly to be foreseen, long before the twenty fifth, when the visit is vaguely expected to come off.[†1] In addition to these faded garlands over all the leading streets, there are painted Eagles[†2] hoisted over gateways and sprawling across a hundred ways, which have been washed out by the rain and are now being blistered by the sun, until they look horribly ludicrous. And a number of our benighted compatriots who came over to see a perfect blaze of fetes, go wandering among these shrivelled preparations and staring at ten thousand flag-poles without any flags upon them, with a kind of indignant curiosity and personal injury quite irresistible.

With many thanks | Very faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To F. M. EVANS, 13 SEPTEMBER 1853

Mention in Chas. B. Sawyer's catalogue, June 1925; MS 2 pp., dated Boulogne. Date: 13 Sep 58, according to catalogue; impossible since from Boulogne; of his three residences, 1856 ended before 13 Sep; Evans was with him in 1854; therefore 1853.[†3]

To W. H. WILLS, 14 SEPTEMBER 1853

Text from N, II, 487.

Boulogne | Fourteenth September, 1853

My Dear Wills.

H. W.

I send you Frauds on the Fairies[†4]—which I think (between ourselves) ADMIRABLE. Both merry and wise. When you send proofs, send two.

You shall have some more Child's History[†1] in the next parcel.

COURIER.

I have been greatly diverted by your account of the Impracticable applicants. I await Kaub[†2] with interest. Mrs. Watson has written to me of another strongly recommended (by her father Lord George Quin[†3] with whom he travelled) and now at Paris: but Kaub shall have his fair chance, and if I fully like him, I will take him, supposing the other not to precede him.

FAMILY.

Send kindest regards.

Ever faithfully

[CD]

To THOMAS BEARD, 18 SEPTEMBER 1853

MS Dickens House.

Boulogne, Sunday Eighteenth September | 1853.

My Dear Beard

We shall indeed be delighted to see you on Thursday, and I hope you will so arrange your stay as that we may return together on the 1st. or 2nd. of October, when I shall have to go to town. Of this when we meet.

You must be passed through the custom house, like something to drink through a Strainer, on your arrival, without human help. But you will have no need to say anything whatever, if you be forearmed with one of your cards, whereon is legibly written

Restant chez M. Charles Dickens

Villa des Moulineaux

Boulogne

If you deliver that to a warlike functionary of Saracenic aspect, to whom you will be presented in an inner chamber and who will be engaged in marking cabalistic signs on the passports of your fellow Voyagers who are provided therewith (you want none) he will pass you on as a matter of course. At a few inches' distance you will be waylaid by three implacable Gauls who will lay hold of your great coat, and ask "Est-ce que Monsieur ait quelque chose a declarer?" Hereupon you will blandly smile, and reply "Rien"—(therein not imitating Forster, who, the other day, not at all understanding the enquiry, said after a moment's reflection with the sweetness of some choice wind instrument "Bon jour!"—and was immediately seized).

These Gauls, relenting, will then pass you through a little door into the outer air, where you will be received with yells from an infuriated populace, exactly like the unfortunate prisoners of September.[†4] A manly arm will then dash the multitude aside—you will be saved—and find yourself on the bosom of the Sparkler of Albion.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

P.S. The Plornishghenter's compliments. The boat leaves Folkestone that day at a quarter past one. You will reach Boulogne between 3 and 4. Have your luggage labelled Boulogne at London Bridge, and you have—and can have—nothing more to do with it.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 18 SEPTEMBER 1853

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Hôtel Bristol | Paris.

Villa des Moulineaux, Boulogne. | Eighteenth September 1853.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

Mr. Collins will be very sensible, I know, of your kind recollection and invitation. (You remember his father,[†1] by the bye? I think I recollect to have seen him at your parties.)

But "we are"—not seven, like Wordsworth's children[†2]—"three". Mr. Egg the painter is the last of the party. Therefore I think the best thing I can do, will be to leave them quietly at our hotel after dinner, and then come round to yours. I do not think we shall remain a day in Paris. Firstly, because I have not the smallest interest in your amiable friend,[†3] or in the flowers that grow on the graves of the murdered; and secondly because we have made the staunchest and most inviolable of compacts to dine with Townshend on a certain day.[†4] Furthermore I particularly want Mr. Egg, who is so fine and picturesque an artist and has never been farther than Holland, to see some good Swiss interiors and backgrounds. And with this view, if the season should be tolerably open, we shall make a push for Chamounix[†5] and try to get the short way through the snow thence to the Simplon.—Not to mention my having vague Swiss notions in my mind myself,[†6] and therefore wanting to look about me!

I will bring the box, with the greatest pleasure. It would be best for your housekeeper to send it—with the key—to Tavistock House on Wednesday the fifth of October. Will you charge her to send the letters separately, in order that I may put them in my pocket? The book I will not forget. If you should think of anything else you want, pray let me know.

I got out of the Deserted Village[†7] (leaving the other man who was there, behind me) as safely as could be expected, and had a really delightful passage back! I had not previously believed in such a thing, but—I—enjoyed—it.

Until the first or second of October any commission will find me here. Between that and the sixth, in town. Do you see Household Words in Paris? If not, I will send you two papers I should like you to read. The first, called Frauds on the Fairies, I think would amuse you, and enlist you on my side—which is for a little more fancy among children and a little less fact. The Second, called Things that cannot be done,[†8] relates to the efficiency of the Law in the impossible case of a man taking up the trade of deliberately persecuting a Lady until she will buy him off with money—shews in short how such a thing could not by any possibility be, in this age and country.

With kindest regards to Mr. Brown and our dear Obstinacy,

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

This place was decorated, three weeks ago, for the Emperor. All the triumphal arches (made of green boughs) have faded, and look exactly as if they were made of tea leaves.

To THE EDITOR OF THE TIMES, 18 SEPTEMBER 1853

MS Comtesse de Suzannet.

Boulogne | Eighteenth September 1853.

To The Editor of The Times

Sir.

I observe two statements from a country paper, copied into your columns of Saturday last, and therefore made important. They represent me as having availed myself of the experiences of that excellent Police Officer, Mr. Inspector Field, in Bleak House,[†1] and also as having undertaken to write the said excellent officer's biography.[†2] Allow me to assure you that amidst all the news in the Times, I found nothing more entirely and completely new to me than these two pieces of intelligence.

Your faithful Servant

CHARLES DICKENS[†3]

To W. H. WILLS, 18 SEPTEMBER 1853

MS Huntington Library.

Boulogne, Sunday Eighteenth Septr. 1853.

My Dear Wills.

I return you the No.[†4] with a good many corrections in pencil on it—some queries, where it is so badly printed that I cannot understand what is meant.

I have put two crosses against an expression in Ollier's poem[†1]

——— and yet it is not night

—which you may remember in an older line, preceded by the words "The moon is up".[†2] If he be accessible, ask him to alter it.[†3]

The titles will stand

Frauds on the Fairies[†4]
Tribunals of Commerce[†5]

(here again I have queried the concluding paragraph, which should be rather a suggestion, I think, than such an absolute statement)[†6]

Bucharest[†7]
Starlight in the Garden[†8]
The Great Saddleworth Exhibition[†9]
Dead Reckoning at the Morgue.[†10]
A Child's History of England.
The whole requires to be carefully gone over.

I send you another short article for the next No., chiefly apropos of Mr. Dunn's case.[†11]

The enclosed letter to Mr. Henry Morley came in yesterday's parcel—I suppose clearly by mistake. I send it back again.

COURIER.

Edward Kaub will bring this. He turned up yesterday, accounting for his delay by waiting for a written recommendation, and having at the last moment (as a foreigner not being an Englishman) a passport to get. I quite agree with you as to his appearance and manner, and have engaged him. It strikes me that it would be an excellent beginning if you would deliver him a neat and appropriate address, telling him what in your conscience you can find to tell of me favorably as a master, and particularly impressing upon him readiness and punctuality on his part as the great things to be observed. I think it would have a much better effect than anything I could say in this stage, of and from myself. And I shall be much obliged to you if you will act upon this hint forthwith.

W. H. WILLS.

No letter having arrived from the popular author of the Larboard Fin,[†12] by this morning's post, I rather think one must be on the way in the pocket of Gordon's son—whom, between ourselves, I don't at all want. If Kaub calls for this before

Young Scotland[†1] arrives, you will understand if I do not refer to an unreceived letter. But I shall leave this open, until Kaub comes for it.

CHARLEY FIELD[†2]

is of course an evasive humbug.[†3] Accept that story—but Lord to see how he has spoilt it!!! I will re-write it, and send it you back.[†4]

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To MRS GASKELL, 19 SEPTEMBER 1853

MS John Rylands Library.

Household Words | Nineteenth September 1853.

My Dear Mrs. Gaskell.

No. I won't give any outline. Because anything that you like to write in the way of story-telling, when you come out of that tea-leaf condition will please me.[†5] All I say, is, it is supposed to be told by somebody at the Xmas Fireside, as before.[†6] And it need not be about Xmas and winter, and it need not have a moral, and it only needs to be done by you to be well done, and if you don't believe that—I can't help it.

With regards to Mr. Gaskell | always Faithfully Yours

CD.

To W. H. WILLS, 20 SEPTEMBER 1853

MS Huntington Library.

Boulogne, Tuesday Evening (just before dinner)
Twentieth September 1853.

My Dear Wills.

I am extremely sorry to hear about Forster's sister,[†7]—at the same time I thoroughly understand all you relate about him, and dont[†8] think it at all unfeeling in you to observe it.[†9] For Who on earth could help doing so!

I have just received your letter, and think Kaub appears so completely to mistake his position and functions in that ridiculous charge for expences, that I wish you would be so kind as to send for him at once and tell him that I shall not take him unless it is distinctly understood between you and him that I shall hereafter reduce them, and deduct as much of this bill from his wages as I know to be right. Otherwise I know this bill to be ample ground for declaring off, and I most positively do so. I am thoroughly well acquainted with the practice and the expectations of the best Couriers, and on all grounds of common sense and justice I reject such extortion. Therefore unless you find that he perfectly understands, and that he unconditionally submits, please see one of the other applicants of whom you thought favorably. His address is 4 King Street, Grosvenor Square.

I write hastily for this express purpose, and will write again tomorrow.

Faithfully Ever

CD.

To W. W. F. DE CERJAT, 21 SEPTEMBER 1853*

MS Mr Philo Calhoun.

Villa des Moulineaux, Boulogne | Twenty First September 1853. Wednesday

My Dear Cerjat.

A short note of two heads—as it is soon to be followed by a third head supposed to be a rather long one.

First, I received your letter in due course. And as you were so very thoughtful of me beforehand, and gave me my choice in the matter, I made no sign to the lady at the Hotel. Not only because I was intensely occupied at that time, rising very early and working late, but also because I know no one here. It would be impossible for one so notorious as I am to live in this place and not know everybody—except on the cast iron condition of knowing nobody. That refuge I have taken from the first, and consequently have been able to live in peace here. If the lady and spouse had been friends of yours whom you had commended to me, of course I should have sought them out straightway. But I understood your letter (I hope) and acted accordingly.

Secondly. Townshend tells me that you have been libelling me by doubting my intention of coming to Lausanne next month on my way into Italy. To overwhelm you with confusion and repentance, I hereby give you to understand that I start on the 10th.—Monday the 10th. of October, one thousand eight hundred and fifty three—and come straight to the dear old place; where I shall have a delight in shaking hands with you again, not easily to be expressed. I am looking forward to the happiness of a reunion for a few hours, with great impatience and expectation.

Mrs. Dickens and her sister send their kindest affectionate remembrances to you and Mrs. Cerjat,[†1] and bind me to say "that they envy me, and that they think it's a shame!" I heard from Mrs. Watson a week ago. Very much improved, thank God, and very cheerful.

It was necessary to kill Lady Dedlock, and to kill her so. I had intended it from the first, and everything worked to that end.[†2]

I shall not take the effect off my appearance in person, by saying anything more.

Ever My Dear Cerjat affectionately Yours

CD.

To LORD JOHN RUSSELL, 21 SEPTEMBER 1853

Text from MDGH, I, 316-17.

Villa des Moulineaux, Boulogne, | Wednesday, Sept. 21st, 1853.

My dear Lord

Your note having been forwarded to me here, I cannot forbear thanking you with all my heart for your great kindness. Mr. Forster had previously sent me a copy of your letter to him, together with the expression of the high and lasting gratification he had in your handsome response.[†1] I know he feels it most sincerely.

I became the prey of a perfect spasm of sensitive twinges, when I found that the close of "Bleak House" had not penetrated to "the wilds of the North" when your letter left those parts.[†2] I was so very much interested in it myself when I wrote it here last month, that I have a fond sort of faith in its interesting its readers. But for the hope that you may have got it by this time, I should refuse comfort. That supports me.

The book has been a wonderful success. Its audience enormous.

I fear there is not much chance of my being able to execute any little commission for Lady John[†3] anywhere in Italy. But I am going across the Alps, leaving here on the tenth of next month, and returning home to London for Christmas Day, and should indeed be happy if I could do her any dwarf service.

You will be interested, I think, to hear that Poole lives happily on his pension,[†4] and lives within it. He is quite incapable of any mental exertion,[†5] and what he would have done without it I cannot imagine. I send it to him at Paris every quarter. It is something, even amid the estimation in which you are held, which is but a foreshadowing of what shall be by-and-by as the people advance, to be so gratefully remembered as he, with the best reason, remembers you. Forgive my saying this. But the manner of that transaction, no less than the matter, is always fresh in my memory in association with your name,[†6] and I cannot help it.

My dear Lord, | Yours very faithfully and obliged

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To JOHN FORSTER, [?21] SEPTEMBER 1853

Extract in F, XI, iii, 828*n*. Date: Sep 53, according to Forster; probably written the same day as, or soon after, last.

Lord John's note confirms me in an old impression that he is worth a score of official men; and has more generosity in his little finger than a Government usually has in its whole corporation.

To THE HON. MRS RICHARD WATSON, 21 SEPTEMBER 1853†

MS Huntington Library.

Boulogne Wednesday Twenty First September 1853.

My Dear Mrs. Watson.

The Courier was unfortunately engaged. He offered to recommend another, but I had several applicants and begged Mr. Wills to hold a grand review at the Household Words office, and select the man who is to bring me down as his victim. I am extremely sorry the man you recommend was not to be had. I should have been delighted to take him.

[†a]—Skimpole. I must not forget Skimpole—Of whom I will now proceed to speak as if I had only read him, and had not written him. I suppose he is the most exact portrait that ever was painted in words! I have very seldom, if ever, done such a thing. But the likeness is astonishing. I don't think he could possibly be more like himself. It is so awfully true, that I make a bargain with myself "never to do so, any more". There is not an atom of exaggeration or suppression. It is an absolute reproduction of a real man. Of course I have been careful to keep the outward figure away from the fact; but in all else it is the Life itself.[†1] This in confidential reply to your enquiry.[†a]

I am finishing the Child's History and clearing the way through Household Words in general before I go upon my trip. I forget whether I told you that Mr. Egg the painter, and Mr. Collins, are going with me.

The other day I was in town. In case you should not have heard of the condition of that Deserted Village,[†2] I think it worth mentioning. All the streets of any note were unpaved, mountains high, and all the Omnibuses were sliding down alleys and looking into the upper windows of small houses. At eleven o'Clock one morning, I was positively alone in Bond Street. I went to one of my tailors, and he was at Brighton. A smutty faced woman among some gorgeous regimentals half finished, had not the least idea when he would be back. I went to another of my tailor's,[†3] and he was in an upper room, with open windows and surrounded by mignionette boxes, playing the piano in the bosom of his family. I went to my hosier's, and two of the least presentable of the "young men" of that elegant establishment, were playing at draughts in the back shop. (Likewise I beheld a porter pot hastily concealed under a Turkish dressing gown of a golden[†4] pattern). I then went wandering about to look for some ingenious portmanteau; and near the corner of St. James's street, saw a solitary Being sitting in a trunk shop, absorbed in a book which on closer inspection I found to be Bleak House. I thought this looked well, and went in. And he really was more interested in seeing me when he knew who I was, than any face I had seen in any house—every house I knew, being occupied by painters—including my own. I went to the Athenæum that same night, to get my dinner, and it was shut up for repairs. I went home late, and had forgotten the Key, and was locked out.

Preparations were made here, about 6 weeks ago, to receive the Emperor who is not come yet. As they chiefly consisted of triumphal arches made in green boughs which have utterly withered, the town seems to be expressing its loyalty through the extraordinary medium of tea leaves. Meanwhile our countrymen (deluded over in the first excitement) go about staring at these arrangements, with a personal injury upon them which is most ridiculous. And they will persist in speaking an unknown tongue to the French people, who will speak English to them.

Kate and Georgina send their kindest loves. We are all quite well. Going to drop two small boys here, at school with a former Eton Tutor highly recommended to me.[†1] Charley was heard of, a day or two ago. He says his professor[†2] "is very shortsighted, always in green spectacles, always drinking weak beer, always smoking a pipe, and always at work". The last qualification seems to appear to Charley the most astonishing one.

Ever My Dear Mrs. Watson Most affectionately Yours

CD.

To MR WATSON,[†3] 24 SEPTEMBER 1853

Extract in Stewart Kidd catalogue, Oct 1929; MS (3rd person) 1 p.; dated Office of Household Words, 24 Sep 53.[†4]

Mr. Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Watson & begs to thank him for his letter of the 22nd inst in which he points attention to the malachite found in certain Cornish & Irish mines, in reference to an article on the subject which appeared in the current number of the Household Words.[†5]

To FREDERICK DICKENS, 25 SEPTEMBER 1853*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Villa des Moulineaux, Boulogne | Sunday Twenty Fifth September 1853.

My Dear Frederick.

It has come into my head several times lately, that I omitted to answer a letter of yours received some time back, in the midst of very hard work and constant occupation.

I am not unacquainted with the invention to which it referred. But I think it is rather an ingenious toy, applicable only to very slight purposes of printing, than a means of producing books and voluminous masses of composed type. For this reason, I thought it best to avoid going to see it; as the gentleman now interested might have been disappointed by my doing so—or sending anyone on my behalf—and doing no more.

I fully intended to have written you this, for your own satisfaction, at the time.

But I put off, in the pressure I have mentioned—and then was ill—and then came here, and have been here and at work ever since.

Always Affectionately
CHARLES DICKENS

To W. H. WILLS, 25 SEPTEMBER 1853*

MS Huntington Library.

Boulogne | Sunday Twenty Fifth September | 1853.

My Dear Wills.

H. W.[†1]

I return the No.[†2] (much in want of press-corrections), and have done what I could to it. Morley's story[†3] is horribly confused, but will be made a little plainer by the new setting-out I have marked occasionally. I cannot possibly suggest any way of making it better, after he has got it into his head in that strange manner.[†4] I thought of The Dutch Witch for a name—but was thrown off it again by the Amber Witch.[†5] Then I thought of Dutch Spirits. But on the whole I think it will be best to leave it as it is.

I send herein the whole remainder of the History of England.[†6] You had better let B and E know that you have it all—and also have it all got into type presently, that I may find it ready for correction when I come up, about this day week.

THINGS IN GENERAL.[†1]

I hope Kaub will not go wrong again,—though I am discouraged about him, I must say. I quite understood your reason for paying him, and that there was nothing else to be done.

Gordon[†7] is so extraordinarily cool in his arrangements, that I was quite delighted at your not being able to receive him to supper. It inspired me with a particular satisfaction.

It is blowing and raining here today, astoundingly. If I can think of anything to please myself, I hope to do something for the Xmas No. this next week, now that I am free of the Child's History. I have deferred our French Watering Place, as an easy thing to write while I am away.[†8]

We have only Beard here.

With kindest regards from all | Ever Faithfully

CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?SEPTEMBER 1853]

Extract in F, VII, ii, 571. Date: between finishing Bleak House in the third week of Aug and leaving for Italy on 10 Oct. Perhaps same letter as next.

Describing the weeks between finishing Bleak House and leaving for Italy as a fearful reaction and prostration of laziness, only broken by the Child's History.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?23-25 SEPTEMBER 1853]

Extract in F, VII, ii, 571. Date: CD sent the last sections of A Child's History to Wills on 25 Sep.

I finished the little History yesterday, and am trying to think of something for the Christmas number. [†a]After which I shall knock off; having had quite enough to do, small as it would have seemed to me at any other time, since I finished Bleak House.[†a]

To THE REV. JAMES WHITE, 30 SEPTEMBER 1853

Text from MDGH, III, 141-2.

Boulogne, September 30th, 1853.

My dear White,

As you wickedly failed in your truth to the writer of books you adore,[†1] I write something that I hoped to have said, and meant to have said, in the confidence of the Pavilion among the trees.[†2]

Will you write another story for the Christmas No.? It will be exactly (I mean the Xmas No.) on the same plan as the last.[†3]

I shall be at the office from Monday to Thursday, and shall hope to receive a cheery "Yes," in reply.

Loves from all to all, and my particular love to Mrs. White.

Ever cordially yours

[CHARLES DICKENS]

October

To HENRY AUSTIN, 2 OCTOBER 1853*

MS Morgan Library.

Household Words Office | Sunday Second October 1853.

My Dear Henry.

I shall be in town until Thursday morning. Unless I hear from you to the contrary, I will call upon you at your office tomorrow (Monday) at 2 o'Clock.

Affectionately Ever

CD.

Henry Austin Esquire.

To MR WINCKWORTH,[†1] 3 OCTOBER 1853

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, July 1978; MS (3rd person) 1 p.; dated Tavistock House, 3 Oct 53.

Ordering medicines to fill the accompanying case of bottles ... one with Laudanum, one with sal volatile, and one with the best powdered ginger ... also a large box, as it is to travel with us it should be strong, of the pills according to Dr. Southwood [Smith]'s prescription which is in Mr. Winckworth's possession.[†2]

To MRS CHARLES DICKENS, 5 OCTOBER 1853

MS British Library. Address (envelope, MS William Miller): Mrs. Charles Dickens. | Villa des Moulineaux | Boulogne Sur Mer.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS,
Wednesday Fifth October 1853

My Dearest Catherine

I write just before post-time to say that Stanny positively swore last night that he must and would come back with me to Boulogne! I have waited all day, in the expectation of receiving a penitent letter from him to say that he has no such serious intention, but none has arrived. From which I conclude (though I still hardly believe it) that he is serious.

If he comes, he had better have the room in the House—Egg the lower floor of the Pavilion—and Collins the Upper—with such touching up thereof as the disposable means of the Chateau will admit of.

The dinner[†3] was a most amazingly gorgeous and brilliant affair—four immense red scaffolds covered with gold plate—turtle cooked in six ways—astonishing wines—venison—pines—all manner of luxuries. Forster is a very uncomfortable and restless Chairman, or it would have been perfect. Imagine our being 13 after all;[†4] Topham not having returned[†5] and Charles Knight being ill!

I hope we may have a better passage than I expect, tomorrow. Loves to Georgina and the darlings.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To F. L. SEILER,[†1] 5 OCTOBER 1853

MS Dr Hans Seiler. Address (in unknown hand): Prusse | Herr Seiler (Pfarrer) | Polknitz | bei | Arneburg.

Tavistock House, London | Fifth October 1853.

My Dear Sir

Having been in France for some months, I have only just now received your kind and interesting letter. I hasten to thank you for it with all my heart, and to assure you that it has given me the highest and truest gratification. To be so esteemed in your quiet parsonage, and to be so honored there as a friend, is a great happiness to me. I thank God for such fame, and set a higher value on it than on any other kind of distinction.

I believe I have few English prejudices which prevent me from respecting all that is to be respected in other countries. I have a particular regard for Germany, and interest in the noble German people. My eldest boy is now in a Professor's house at Leipzig; one of my great desires being that he should perfectly understand the rich language in which you write to me so pleasantly.

I send my love, dear Sir, to all the inmates of your house, and beg to assure them that in so remembering me, they have handsomely repaid the pleasure it has been my high privilege to give them.[†2]

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [?6 OR 7 OCTOBER 1853]

Extract in F, VII, ii, 571. Date: "a week before his departure" on 10 Oct, according to Forster; but more likely after his return to Boulogne on the 6th, since he had been seeing Forster until then.

I get letters from Genoa and Lausanne as if I were going to stay in each place at least a month. If I were to measure my deserts by people's remembrance of me, I should be a prodigy of intolerability. Have recovered my Italian, which I had all but forgotten, and am one entire and perfect chrysolite[†3] of idleness.

To WILLIAM BRADBURY, [8] OCTOBER 1853

Envelope in Sotheran's catalogue, July 1953. Address: W. Bradbury Esquire | 11 Bouverie Street | Fleet Street | London. PM Boulogne 8 Oct 53.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 8 OCTOBER 1853

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Hôtel Bristol | Paris.

Boulogne, Saturday Eighth October | 1853.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

No seeds arrived before I left town. A parcel is coming over tomorrow. They may be in that.

I hope to bring some first rate Cider, and some ditto Perry. Also some reliable information of the kind you want.

I was at the Home on Tuesday. All was going on quietly.

As you kindly contemplate the invasion of your table by the whole Italian Triumvirate, and as I know you will find Mr. Egg very modest and agreeable, I think I ought to give "Co" the great pleasure you so considerately offer that part of the Firm, as well as "Self".[†1] But as we shall not be presentable by your dinner hour on Monday, and as we shall not go on to Strasburgh[†2] until Wednesday morning, I would propose, if you approve, that we dine with you on Tuesday.

I expect to be at the Hotel Brighton[†3]—if there be any room there—which there never is.

A letter from Charley this morning. He seems to be doing thoroughly well with the German language. In proof of which, he sends me all manner of compositions, translations, journals, and other performances, of which I can't read a word!

I have a game to shew you, which will interest you if you never saw it. We have been playing it here of an evening, [†a]with the greatest success. I think it will put our friend O[†4] (if you will say as much to her from me) on the alert.

All unite in kindest regards. You will be sorry to hear that the Beauty, Size,

and Vigour,

of the Baby

are the admiration of the entire population of Boulogne, without any distinction of race or country.

Ever Dear Miss Coutts Most Faithfully Yours

CD.[†a]

To F. M. EVANS, 8 OCTOBER 1853*

MS University of Texas.

Boulogne, Saturday Eighth October | 1853.

My Dear Evans.

Many thanks for your letter. I knew you were only prevented by business from coming my way, and I should have called in Whitefriars but for being incessantly occupied during my short stay in town.

I do not think I can further abridge the Child's History, without doing it damage. I would decidedly give the public the benefit of the larger quantity, but I would print the third Volume closer, so as to increase its apparent size (as well as its real consumption of paper) as little as possible.[†1]

I have corrected all the proofs from Household Words. For press, I think you had best send them for revision both to Wills and Forster.

Always Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

F. M. Evans Esquire.

To W. H. WILLS, 9 OCTOBER 1853

MS Huntington Library.

Boulogne, Sunday Ninth October 1853.

My Dear Wills.

Many thanks for your kind letter, both on my own behalf, and on that of the unprotected females. They are sincerely sensible of your offer, and Mrs. Dickens begs me to say that she will not hesitate to give you all the trouble in her power!

I write before the arrival of Mark, but leave this open in the meanwhile in case I should then have anything to add. On the second half of this sheet,[†2] I send my line of March as far as Lausanne, whence I will write again. I shall not expect (unless in some extraordinary case) to hear from you before I get there.

When the sheets of the 3rd. Volume of the Child's History come to you (as they will) will you put a few words into His Sowship's life,[†3] where his writings are referred to, to the effect that he wrote, [†a]among other things,[†a] about Witches, in whom he was (as such a wrong-headed Dolt ought to have been) a strong[†4] believer.[†5] I somehow forgot to put this in to the MS. Likewise, you will find it stated that after the Gunpowder Plot some Catholics were for safety in the fens of Lincolnshire. It ought to be, the fens of Ely.[†6]

I don't remember that I have anything more to add—except that the Moustaches don't look a bit better than they did. The failures[†1] desire their kindest regards. I shall come back, I hope, with no end of good things in my mind for H. W. Meanwhile and always, believe me Very heartily Yours. CD

To W. H. WILLS, [?10 OCTOBER 1853]*

MS Berg Collection. Date: 1851-5 on initials; the only major journey on which CD started on a Monday in this period was to Italy on 10 Oct 53.

My Dear Wills. You know all about this man, no doubt. Will you send him back the enclosed,[†2] in the usual way.

Ever Faithfully
CD.

In haste—starting—Monday Morning.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 11 OCTOBER 1853

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Hotel Bristol.

Hotel de Londres[†3] | Tuesday Eleventh October | 1853.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I send a basket containing half a dozen pints of the best cider, and half a dozen pints of the best Sherry.

I also send with this, the French Bible—no such thing as a limp one was to be got—the two last Nos. of Household Words, and two articles on Cider.[†4] That in the bound "Domestic Economy" book is written, I am assured on careful enquiry, by one of the very best practical authorities on the subject. Cassell's account of the Dublin Exhibition[†5] will reach you at the same time.

I received your kind note last night, but we arrived late. I will take the chance of finding you at home in the course of this forenoon.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To MRS CHARLES DICKENS, 13 OCTOBER 1853

MS British Library. Address: Angleterre. Mrs. Charles Dickens | Tavistock House | Tavistock Square | London.

Hotel de Paris,[†1] Strasbourg | Thursday afternoon, Thirteenth October | 1853.

My Dearest Catherine. I think you will like to hear from me in this early stage of the proceedings, and therefore write; having just seen and heard the clock in the Cathedral achieve its usual noon performance.

We got here at 7 last night. We left Paris at a quarter past 8 in the morning, and travelled all day (the distance is nearly 300 miles) by the very best Railroad I have ever seen. We dine today at half past 2, and go on at half past 4 by the Railroad to Basle. We are due there before 10, and go on tomorrow morning early.

Paris is very full, extraordinarily gay, and wonderfully improving. Thousands of houses must have been pulled down for the construction of an immense street now making from the dirty old end of the Rue de Tivoli, past the Palais Royal, away beyond the Hotel de Ville.[†2] It will be the finest thing in Europe. The quays by the riverside are Macadamized and as clean as Regent Street. Indeed the general improvement in the essential articles of what is to be seen and what is to be smelt, is highly remarkable.

There was a Prince[†3] dined at Miss Coutts's (where we had a very pleasant evening) who told me that Austria will not allow travellers to come straight into the Austrian dominions in Italy, from Switzerland;[†4] and that, in consequence, one must enter Italy by Sardinia.[†5] If this be true, as I suppose it must be, we shall either have to try the Great St. Bernard and the Val d'Aosta, or to go all round by Lucerne, from Lausanne, to cross the Great St. Gothard. The aforesaid Prince was so good as to undertake to try to get an exemption in our favor. We shall hear the result at Lausanne, but I by no means expect him to succeed.

We had not time for the Theatre at Paris, but we went all over the town. Smale[†6] presented himself at the Hotel of course!—with an article for Household Words which is now in my portmanteau!![†7] We were at the Hotel de Londres in the Rue Castiglione—a second rate affair and a poor dinner, but very good beds.

It is a most delightful day here—bright and fine and fresh. I hope to hear you had as good a day for the passage and got home triumphantly. I shall be anxious to know how you managed it, when I come to Lausanne. Tell Georgina by the bye with my love, that I shall expect to hear from her too, pretty often.

So far, Edward has done very well indeed.[†8] He seems to understand his work—puts my things out in a scientific manner—and is attentive, quiet, and willing. I think we shall get on very well together as a Triumvirate, though I rather incline to the belief that Collins is the better traveller of my two associates.[†1] He takes things easily and is not put out by small matters—two capital requisites. We have begun to dine in the public rooms (which is amusing enough) and we make a drawing room of my bed chamber. Last night we had a game at Whist, with Dummy, enlivened by Kirschwasser and the old Rhine wine I used to call for—Forster. Egg continues his Italian lessons. He has a bitter bad memory, but is so anxious to get on that I think he will, after some fashion. Our great joke is, at all times and on all occasions, to ask him what is Italian for slippery[†2]—a word which he never can by any means get out.

I shall write to Charley, if I can, this morning. My best love to Georgina, Mamey, Katey, Sidney, Harry, and the Plornishghenter. Also to Forster and to Lemon, both of whom I suppose you will soon see,

Ever My Dearest Catherine | Most affectionately Yours

CD.

I forgot to say in its right place that I saw Poole at Paris. He looks quite fresh and well—and is, if possible, more disagreeable than ever.

To MRS CHARLES DICKENS, 16 AND 17 OCTOBER 1853

MS British Library. Address: Angleterre. | Mrs. Charles Dickens | Tavistock House | Tavistock Square | London.

Lausanne, Sunday Sixteenth October 1853.

My Dearest Catherine. We arrived here last night at about 9, and took up our quarters at the Falcon—a most admirable house. I went down by Rosemont,[†3] to Ouchy,[†4] soon afterwards, and was amazed to find how strangely I have forgotten my way about this place. I had no idea (but a wrong one) where Cerjat's was,[†5] or where Haldimand's[†6] was—was quite at a loss in the town itself—and have at this moment no remembrance whatever where the banker's is!

To day, I found that Townshend had made such preparations to receive us as really rendered it impossible to avoid staying with him. So we struck our tent at the Falcon[†7] by one o'Clock, and came to Mon Loisir[†8]—just below Rosemont—where I write this. We then went off to Cerjat's,[†9] and found all the family in the old drawing room of the Watson's time.[†10] Mrs. Cerjat just the same as ever, but very deaf. Cerjat, thin and very grey. The daughters,[†1] blooming and pretty. One a good deal like Katey. All enthusiastically delighted to see me.[†2] Then I went on with Cerjat to Haldimand's. Haldimand in the meantime had set off in his char a banc after me, and on the way I met Goff and his wife[†3]—living at Champitet and looking just the same. I came back here to find Haldimand, and we have been sitting over a lunch table ever since; roaring with laughter, disputing, discussing, and contradicting, in exactly the old way. I was both surprised and delighted to find him exactly the old Haldimand—excited and enraptured beyond all description by our meeting again. Cerjat says he will be like this for a few weeks—then will be taken with a black humour, seclude himself for a time, and be seen by no one. He has a strange idea that he is too poor to lay out money on Elysée,[†4] and the house is all but falling down in consequence.

An English gentleman, a Colonel Sanderson,[†5] is living at Rosemont. He spends his winters at Nice and is just going away. Madame D'Or[†6] is dead, and the property has fallen into other hands. We are going tomorrow in Haldimand's carriage to Chillon. After which a grand dinner and evening party come off here. On Tuesday at 11 we go by the steamer to Geneva, and next day to Chamouni.[†7]

A Prince who dined at Miss Coutts's told us that in consequence of a dispute with Switzerland concerning refugees from Austria, Austria would not admit English travellers coming from Switzerland, and that our first appearance in Italy must be made in Sardinia. This would prevent our crossing the Simplon. Last night, I found here a note from Miss Coutts, enclosing another from the Prince, stating that he had endeavoured to get me excepted but it could not be done, and if we went that way the "consequences would be disagreeable". Here, they deny any such thing.[†8] I cannot decide what to do; the Great St. Gothard being far out of the way, and the St. Bernard very doubtful of being clear enough from Snow to cross. When you write, make no allusion to this, or to any political occurrences whatever, as I think my letters may be opened. I shall take what may seem the wisest course, and not listen to unreason either way. As soon as you receive this, write to me, Poste Restante, Genoa. We must turn up there, somehow or other, to get on Southward in Italy.

We came here by Berne, which is a very picturesque place indeed—clean—comfortable—and the very spot for a Swiss summer residence. A hired carriage, and a very comfortable one, brought us post from Basle in two days. Edward goes on excellently. I am afraid to praise new brooms, but he is most attentive and cheerful in everything—a capital Valet—always as smart as he was at Boulogne—and unpacks and packs with a perfect Gift of silence and swiftness. The triumvirate preserve an excellent understanding. Egg works away hard at the Italian, taking a lesson yesterday which lasted from 10 to 4.[†1] He cannot remember what he learns—which is a little against him. Collins eats and drinks everything, gets on very well everywhere, and is always in good spirits. We have as yet, marvellous to say, met no English people whom we have known.

As I must accompany them to Chillon tomorrow, and as we shall have enough to do to get back by the banquet hour, I shall post this in the morning; adding one line (I hope) to say that I have heard from you. I did not send to the Poste Restante today, as I calculated that your letter could hardly have reached here so soon, and I did not want to be disappointed.

With a thunderstorm and five hours' rain the night before last, the weather has been generally in our favor until today. To day it has been grey and black, and raining from time to time, and the Fond du Lac has not shewn to the advantage I could have wished. It is singular that both Egg and Collins complained this morning, as I used to do, of the depressing influence of the air.

Will you tell Wills with my best regards, that I shall write to him, after I get to Genoa. To Forster that I will write to him on the first opportunity. Give both the same caution that I give you, in reference to any allusion to foreign politics. Wills will be pleased to hear, in addition to what I have already reported of Edward, that I balanced his book for the first time this morning, and it might have been kept by a Book-keeper. Also that after we left Strasbourg, I looked at the Paris and Strasbourg bills—thought them rather large—and pointed out to him in what respect. I was quite satisfied from his manner that he had got nothing out of it, and he has exactly attended to those items since. His German has been very useful in German Switzerland. He speaks french as well as he speaks English. His Italian remains to be proved.

I long to hear of the dear children; and of your safe arrival at home. Give my love to Georgy, and to Mamey, Katey, Sydney (whom Haldimand particularly enquired for) Henry, and the Plornishghenter. I don't think I have mentioned that Mrs. Goff looked very young and really pretty, this morning. Townshend reports Lausanne society rent into two terrific factions on the subject of Baird's[†2] marriage.[†3] Cerjat spoke to me of it this morning as a blow to him, but sensibly abstained from blaming anybody or lamenting further. He and the Goffs seem on perfect good terms. Cerjat was with me when I met them.

I think I have now exhausted my small budget of news. Rosemont looks just the same, and very pretty. Between this and Berne is a high hill called the Jorat.[†4] It froze on the top of it as we crossed last night, but was warm here. This evening it is damp (raining now) and chilly.

Ever Most affectionately

CD.

A general sentiment expressed this morning, that Georgina ought to be married. Perhaps you'll mention it to her!—

Vevey. Monday Morning. Delighted to receive your letter before starting, and to receive such good accounts of all. You will have heard from me from Strasbourg. I will write again soon. God bless you all.

To JOHN FORSTER, [20 OCTOBER 1853]

Extracts in F, VII, iii, 578-9. Date: 20 Oct according to Forster. From Chamounix.

Describing the enjoyment of their Swiss travel. Great attention and cleanliness at the inns, very small windows and bleak passages, doors opening to wintry blasts, overhanging eaves and external galleries, plenty of milk, honey, cows, and goats, much singing towards sunset on the mountain sides, mountains almost too solemn to look at; the country everywhere in one of its finest aspects, as winter began to close in. They had started from Geneva the previous morning at four, and he had again noticed the ill-favoured look of the people in the valleys owing to their hard and stern climate. All the women were like used-up men, and all the men like a sort of fagged dogs. But the good, genuine, grateful Swiss recognition of the commonest kind word—not too often thrown to them by our countrymen—made them quite radiant. I walked the greater part of the way, which was like going up the Monument. That day they had been up to the Mer de Glace, finding it not so beautiful in colour as in summer, but grander in its desolation; the green ice, like the greater part of the ascent, being covered with snow. We were alarmingly near to a very dismal accident. We were a train of four mules and two guides, going along an immense height like a chimney-piece, with sheer precipice below, when there came rolling from above, with fearful velocity, a block of stone about the size of one of the fountains in Trafalgar-square, which Egg, the last of the party, had preceded by not a yard, when it swept over the ledge, breaking away a tree, and rolled and tumbled down into the valley. It had been loosened by the heavy rains, or by some woodcutters afterwards reported to be above.

The only place new to him was Berne: a surprisingly picturesque old Swiss town, with a view of the Alps from the outside of it singularly beautiful in the morning light. Everything else was familiar: though at that winter season, when the inns were shutting up, and all who could afford it were off to Geneva, most things in the valley had a new aspect. At Lausanne where they took a day or two's rest, he had the gladdest of greetings from old friends; and the wonderful manner in which they turned out in the wettest morning ever beheld for a Godspeed down the Lake was really quite pathetic.

He had found time to see again the deaf, dumb, and blind youth[†1] at Mr. Haldimand's Institution;[†2] but, in his brief present visit, the old associations would not reawaken. Tremendous efforts were made by Hertzel[†3] to impress him with an idea of me, and the associations belonging to me; but it seemed in my eyes quite a failure, and I much doubt if he had the least perception of his old acquaintance. According to his custom, he went on muttering strange eager sounds like Town and Down and Mown, but nothing more. I left ten francs to be spent in cigars for my old friend. If I had taken one with me, I think I could, more successfully than his master, have established my identity.[†4] The similarly afflicted little girl, whom he had also seen before, had been after some trial discharged as an idiot.[†5]

To MRS CHARLES DICKENS, 20 AND 21 OCTOBER 1853

MS British Library.

Hotel de Londres, | Thursday Night Twentieth October 1853.

My Dearest Kate. We came here[†6] last night after a very long journey over very bad roads, from Geneva, and leave here (for Martigny, by the Tete[†7] Noire)[†8] at 6 tomorrow morning. Next morning early we mean to try the Simplon.

After breakfast today we ascended to the Mer de Glace—wonderfully different at this time of the year from when we saw it[†9]—a great portion of the ascent being deeply covered with Snow, and the climbing very difficult. Regardless of my mule I walked up and walked down again, to the great admiration of the guides who pronounced me "an Intrepid." The little house at the top being closed for the winter, and Edward having forgotten to carry any brandy, we had nothing to drink at the top—which was a considerable disappointment to the Inimitable, who was steaming with perspiration from head to foot. But we made a fire in the snow with some sticks, and after a not too comfortable rest came down again. It took a long time—from 10 to 3.

The appearance of Chamounix at this time of the year, is very remarkable. The travellers are over for the season, the Inns are generally shut up, all the people who can afford it are moving off to Geneva, the snow is low on the mountains, and the general desolation and grandeur extraordinarily fine. I wanted to pass by the Col de Balme,[†10] but the snow lies too deep upon it.

You would have been quite delighted if you could have seen the warmth of our old Lausanne friends, and the heartiness with which they crowded down on a fearfully bad morning to see us off. We passed the night at the Ecu de Geneve,[†1] in the rooms over our old rooms—at that time (the day before yesterday) occupied by the Queen of the French (ex I mean)[†2] and Prince Joinville[†3] and his family.[†4] I think I did not tell you, apropos of Lausanne, that Dor is married again, and is Prefet of the town and one of its greatest nobs.[†5]

Tell Sydney that all the way here from Geneva and up to the Sea of Ice this morning, I wore his knitting: which was very comfortable indeed. I mean to wear it on the long mule journey to Martigny tomorrow.

We get on extremely well.[†6] [†a]Egg sometimes wants trifles of accommodation—in a place like this, for instance—which could hardly be got in Paris, and Collins sometimes wants to give people too little for their trouble.[†7] But a word puts it all right in a moment.[†a] Edward continues as before. He had never been here, and I took him up to the Mer de Glace this morning and had a Mule for him.

I shall leave this open, as usual, to add a word or two on our arrival at Martigny, as I should gain nothing by posting it here. We have had an amusingly absurd incident this afternoon. When we came home, I saw added to the hotel—our old hotel,[†8] and I am now writing in the room where we once dined at the table d'hote[†1]—some baths, cold and hot, down on the margin of the torrent below. This induced us to order three hot baths. Thereupon, the keys of the bath rooms were found with immense difficulty, women ran backwards and forwards across the bridge, men bore in great quantities of wood, a horrible furnace was lighted, and a smoke was raised which filled the whole Valley. This began at half past three, and we congratulated each other on the distinction we should probably acquire by being the cause of the conflagration of the whole village. We sat by the fire until half past five (dinner time) and still no baths. Then Edward came up to say that the water was as yet only "tippit"—which we suppose to be tepid—but that by half past 8 it would be in a noble state. Ever since, the smoke has poured forth in enormous volume, and the furnace has blazed, and the women have gone and come over the bridge, and piles of wood have been carried in, but we observe a general avoidance of us by the establishment which still looks like failure. We have had a capital dinner, the dessert whereof is now on the table. Soup, beefsteak admirably cooked, boiled fowl and rice, roast leg of Chamois, roast leg of mutton, and a pudding served in a blaze of rum. When we arrived, at nearly seven last night, all the linen in the house, newly washed, was piled in the sitting room—all the curtains were taken down—and all the chairs piled bottom upwards. They cleared away as much as they could, directly, and had even got the curtains up again at breakfast this morning.

I am looking forward to letters at Genoa, though I doubt if we shall get there (supposing all things right at the Simplon) before Monday night or Tuesday morning. I found here last night what Forster would call "Mr. Smith's"[†1] Story of Mont Blanc,[†2] and took it to bed to read. It is extremely well and unaffectedly done. You would be interested in it. [†a]I am obliged to leave off to go to the fire and warm myself, for where I am sitting it is very cold. Collins (with his short legs stretched out as far as they will go) is reading, and Egg writing in a marvellous Diary of an aggravatingly small size and unearthly shape, concerning the materials of which he remembers nothing, but is perpetually asking Collins as I write, about the names of places where we have been, signs of hotels we have put up at, and so forth—which Collins with his face all awry, blowing old snuff down one nostril and taking new snuff up the other, delivers oracularly.[†a]

Martigny Friday afternoon Twenty First October. Safely arrived here after a most delightful day, without a cloud. I walked the whole way. The Scenery most beautifully presented. We are in the Hotel where our old St. Bernard party assembled.[†3] Love to Georgina, and to Mamey and Katey, and Sydney and Harry, and the Plornishghenter of the many merits. I should like to see you all, very much indeed. Ever affecy. CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 25 OCTOBER 1853

MS Morgan Library. Address: Francia | Miss Burdett Coutts | Hôtel Bristol | Paris.

Hotel de la Villa,[†4] Milan | Tuesday Twenty Fifth October 1853.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

When I came to reflect at leisure on what the Prince had said at dinner, I felt convinced that he must labor under some complicated (and I had almost added here, peculiarly Parisian) mistake. Firstly, because travellers crossing the Simplon enter Italy by the Sardinian State, and secondly because travellers crossing the St. Gothard not only come direct from the obnoxious Swiss Canton—which in the other case they do not—but enter Italy at once by an Austrian portal. When I got to Lausanne I made enquiries whether Austria interposed any difficulties in the way of English travellers entering Italy by the Simplon. Nobody knew, or had ever heard, of any such thing. The Courier of the Mail, who had just come across, utterly rejected the idea; saying that they took passengers, and passed and met travelling carriages, every day. Thus confirmed, I resolved to come by the Simplon—and did. We crossed it on Sunday, when there was not a cloud in the sky, and when the most sublime Sunday service the mind can well imagine pervaded the tremendous silence and grandeur of the whole distance. That night we lay at Domo D'Ossola, and yesterday we came on here. Both at the Austrian frontier and at the gate of Milan we were received with the greatest politeness and consideration. I am bound to say that I never knew the usual Passport and Custom-House regulations more obligingly enforced. So here we are.

We stayed two days with Townshend very pleasantly indeed, and I had the gratification of receiving your note with the Prince's kind enclosure—for which pray thank him in my name—and also of further hearing of you from our host himself, who beamed "like one entire and perfect"[†1] soft smile when he produced your hand writing. My old Lausanne friends were all so cordially happy to see me that I felt half ashamed of myself for being liked so much beyond my deserts. Our stay there disposed of, we went on to Geneva and so to Chamounix, which, at this time of the year—no visitors, the hotels shutting up, and all the people who can afford it going away—is far more primitive and interesting than as one usually sees it. We went up to the Mer de Glace through pretty deep snow, warmed ourselves at a wood fire on the ice, came down again and stayed a day in the valley, left Mont Blanc at 7 in the morning just reddened on its utmost height by the sun and without a cloud upon it, and crossed to Martigny. These achievements (with a variety of gymnastic exercises with a pole, superadded) I performed on foot, to the infinite satisfaction of the Guides, who pronounced me "A strong Intrepid", and were of opinion that I ought to ascend Mont

Blanc next summer. I told them in return that it had become such a nuisance in my country[†2] that there was some idea of authorizing Paxton to take it down and re-erect it at Sydenham.[†3]

We go on to Genoa by the Mail tomorrow, where some more of my old friends expect me and are going to hold a small festival on the great occasion. I find my companions so unused to the notion of never going to bed, except in large towns, that Sicily is already erased from the trip, and Naples substituted for its utmost limit. We shall return too, for shortness, by the way of Paris—where I shall probably take up Charley about the 8th. or 9th. of December. If you should have leisure to write me a few lines within ten days or so—[†a]or say a week[†a]—after the receipt of this, Poste Restante Rome will find me. After that, Florence. After that, Venice. After that, Genoa again, as we shall return by way of Marseilles.

It is so strange and like a dream to me, to hear the delicate Italian once again, and to recover the knowledge of it (such as it is) which I almost thought I had lost! So beautiful too to see the delightful sky again, and all the picturesque wonders of the country. And yet I am so restless to be doing—and always shall be, I think, so long as I have any portion in Time—that if I were to stay more than a week in any one City here, I believe I should be half desperate to begin some new story!!!

My two companions have gone out to see the Cathedral and to kill off some other Lions. Mr. Egg's face fell prodigiously when we passed the Cathedral last night, and he said with a pathetic access of despondency "that he should never be able to do it under a month". I wait for his report on that subject before I close this note. In the meanwhile I can't help saying, for want of more interesting news, that he was very solicitous some year or two ago, to marry Georgina. It would have been a good thing for her, as he is an excellent fellow, and is well off, over and above his professional reputation which stands high. But she said No, though they are very good friends.[†1] I took no other part in the matter than urging her to be quite sure that she knew her own mind. He is very far her inferior intellectually; but five men would be out of six, for she has one of the most remarkable capacities I have ever known. Not to mention her being one of the most amiable and affectionate of girls. Whether it is, or is not a pity that she is all she is to me and mine instead of brightening up a good little man's house where she would still have the Artist kind of life she is used to, about her, is a knotty point I never can settle to my satisfaction. And I have been trying to untwist it in my mind on the road here, until it will persist in ravelling itself[†2] out on this paper.

———————

They have come back from the Lions, and Mr. Egg is very anxious I should explain to you that the Cathedral is so "tremendously elaborate" as to render it impossible that he could make any such sketch of it as he would like you to have, in the time available. He hopes you will go to see his pictures on our return, and that he may be able to do something else and something into which he can "throw himself" with greater heartiness of satisfaction, as a reminder of the country we have passed through.[†3] They both beg me to send their compliments and acknowledgements of your great kindness.

Dinner time and post time being now at hand together, I break off with my love to O, and friendly regards to Mr. Brown. I will write again, probably from Rome.

Ever dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To MRS CHARLES DICKENS, 25 OCTOBER 1853

MS British Library.

Hotel de la Villa, Milan. | Tuesday Twenty Fifth October 1853.

My Dearest Catherine.

The road from Chamounix here takes so much more time than I supposed (for I travelled it day and night, and my companions don't at all understand the idea of never going to bed) that we only reached Milan last night, though we have been travelling twelve and fifteen hours a day.[†4] We crossed the Simplon on Sunday, when there was not (as there is now) a particle of cloud in the whole sky, and when the Pass was as nobly grand and beautiful as it possibly can be.[†5] There was a good deal of Snow upon the top, but not across the road, which had been cleared. We crossed the Austrian Frontier yesterday, and, both there and at the gate of Milan, received all possible consideration and politeness.

I have not seen Bairr[†1] yet. He has removed from the old hotel to a larger one at a few houses' distance. The head waiter remembered me very well last night after I had talked to him a little while, and was greatly interested in hearing about all the family and about poor Roche.[†2] The boy we used to have at Lausanne, is now seventeen and a half—very tall, he says. The eldest girl, fifteen—very like her mother, but taller and more beautiful. He described poor Mrs. Bairr's death (I am speaking of the head waiter before mentioned) in most vivacious Italian. It was all over in ten minutes, he said. She put her hands to her head one day, down in the Courtyard, and cried out that she heard little bells ringing violently in her ears. They sent off for Bairr who was close by. When she saw him, she stretched out her arms, said in English "Adieu my dear!" and fell dead. He has not married again—no, and he never will. She was a good woman (my friend went on) excellent woman, full of charity, loved the poor, but "un poco furiosa"—that was nothing!

The new hotel is just like the old one. Admirably kept, excellently furnished, and a model of comfort. I hope to be at Genoa on Thursday morning, and to find your letter waiting for me. I will write you again from there, as soon as I shall have accurately sketched our route, and know exactly how you can address without fear of my missing the letters. We have agreed to drop Sicily, and to return home by way of Marseilles. Our projected time for reaching London is the 10th. of December.

As this house is full, I dare say we shall meet some one we know at the table d'hote today. It is extraordinary that the only travellers we have encountered since we left Paris, have been, one horribly vapid Englishman and wife whom we dropped at Basle, one boring Englishman [†a]like Hayward[†a†3] whom we found (and thank God left) at Geneva, and two English maiden ladies whom we found sitting on a rock (with parasols) the day before yesterday, in the most magnificent part of the Gorge of Gondo, the most awful portion of the Simplon—there awaiting their travelling chariot, in which, with their Murray, their parasols, and a perfect Shop of Baskets, they were carefully locked up by an English servant in sky blue and silver buttons. We have been in the most extraordinary vehicles—like Swings, like boats, like Noah's arks, like barges and enormous bedsteads. After dark last night, a Landlord where we changed horses, discovered that the baggage would certainly be stolen from questo porco d'uno carro—this pig of a cart—his complimentary description of our carriage—unless cords were attached to each of the trunks, which cords were to hang down so that we might hold them in our hands all the way, and feel any tug that might be made at our treasures. You will imagine the absurdity of our jolting along some twenty miles in this way, exactly as if we were in three shower baths and were afraid to pull the string.[†4]

We are going to the Scala tonight, having got the old box belonging to the hotel, the old key of which is lying beside me on the table. There seem to be no singers of note there now, and it appears for the time to have fallen off considerably.[†1] As I write to Georgina by this same post, and want to vary the contents of the two letters—so distributing my scanty news over each as to avoid repetition—I shall bring this to a close; hoping that I may have more interesting jottings to send you about the old scenes and people, from Genoa, where we shall stay two days. You are now, I take it, at Macreadys.[†2] I shall be greatly interested in your account of your visit there. My love as usual to Mamey, Katey, Sydney, Harry, and the darling Plornishghenter. We often talk of you all.

Edward's Italian is (I fear) very weak. When we began to get really into the language, he reminded me of poor Roche in Germany. But he seems to have picked up, a little, this morning. He has been unfortunate with the unlucky Egg; leaving a pair of shoes (his favourite shoes) behind in Paris, and his flannel dressing gown yesterday morning at Domo D'Ossola. In all other respects he is just as he was.

Egg and Collins have gone out to kill the Lions here,[†3] and I take advantage of their absence to write to you, Georgina, and Miss Coutts. Wills will have told you I dare say, that Cerjat accompanied us, on a miserable morning, in a heavy rain, down the Lake. By the bye, the wife of one of his cousins,[†4] born in France of German parents, and now living in the next house to Haldimand's, is one of the most charming, natural, open-faced, and delightful women I ever saw. Mrs. Watson's cousin, Madame de Something or other,[†5] who lives at Mount Vernon, which we once went over,[†6] is set up as the great attraction of Lausanne; but this capital creature shuts her up altogether. We have called the real belle, ever since, the early closing movement.

I am impatient to get letters from home. Confused ideas are upon me that you are going to White's, but I have no notion when.[†7] Smale's paper[†8] was impracticable, but (strange to say) not at all bad; some things in it being really well done. Take care of yourself, and God bless you.

Ever most affectionately CD.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 25 OCTOBER 1853

MS Dickens House. Address: Inghilterra. | Miss Hogarth | Tavistock House | Tavistock Square | London.[†1]

Hotel de la Villa, Milan | Tuesday Twenty Fifth October 1853.

My Dear Georgy.

[†a]First of all, the main thing I have to tell you, is, that the word describing a sparkling wine—the word synonymous with Mousseux[†2]—which I vaguely remembered at Boulogne but could not recal,[†3] turned up at Domo D'Ossala, the very first Italian place we stayed at. As follows:
INIMITABLE[†4] (To Waiter). [†b]C'e un vino che vido scritto sulla carta, "Vino d'Asti". C'e il vecchio vino che ho spesse volte[†5] bevuto—un vino come champagne—non e vero?
WAITER[†4] (To Inimitable) Si Signore. Un vino bianco, Italiano—un vino spumante.
INIMITABLE[†4] (apart)—Ecco la parola! L'ho trovato![†b]

The next thing you will be interested in hearing of, is the progress of the emulative moustaches of the two other members of the Triumvirate. They are more distressing, more comic, more sparse and meagre, more straggling, wandering, wiry, stubbly, formless—more given to wandering into strange places and sprouting up noses and dribbling under chins—than anything in that nature ever produced, as I believe, since the Flood. Collins has taken to wiping his (which are like the Plornishghenter's eyebrows) at dinner; and Egg's are not near his nose, but begin at the corners of his mouth, like those of the Witches in Macbeth. I have suffered so much from the contemplation of these terrific objects from grey dawn to night in little carriages, that this morning, finding myself with a good looking glass, and a good light, I seized my best razor, and, as a great example, shaved off the whole of the Newgate fringe from under my chin! The moustache remains, and now looks enormous; but the beard I have sacrificed as a dread warning to competitors—which I am bound to add does not produce the least effect; they merely observing with complacency that "it looks much better so".[†a]

I have walked to that extent in Switzerland (walked over the Simplon on Sunday, as an addition to the other feats) that one pair of the new strong shoes has gone to be mended this morning, and the other is in but a poor way; the snow having played the Mischief with them. [†a]I saw the deaf dumb and blind youth at Lausanne on the morning of my departure. Tremendous efforts were made by Hertzel,[†6] to impress him with an idea of me and the associations belonging to me. It seemed in my eyes quite a failure, and I very much doubt if he had the least perception of his old acquaintance. Meanwhile he was always (according to his old custom) muttering strange eager sounds like "Town" and "Down" and "Mown"—which Townshend, in a most ludicrous manner, wrested into an irrepressible desire on the poor fellow's part to articulate his name. As he evidently had no more idea of Townshend than of any lamp post in London it was so extraordinarily absurd that I laughed disgracefully and could not be stopped. The interview terminated by Townshend's buying every object down in that dismal little place where we used to see the boy at work—he perpetually coming back again for that purpose (when we were wild to get away, lest we should lose the boat) and saying, in the oddest french "Combien cette choselà?—Oh!—Voulez-vous donc avoir la bonté d'envoyer cet objet chez-moi?—Et cet autre objet—combien?—Oh!—

Vrai-ment!—Voulez-vous donc envoyez—cet objet—aussi—chez moi—Mon loisir"—We forced him out at last, and I left ten francs to be spent in cigars for my old friend. If I had taken one with me, I think I would have established the association more successfully than his master. The similarly afflicted child, the little girl, whom we saw there, was discharged after some trial as an Idiot, and was hardly remembered when I asked after her.[†a]

On the Swiss side of the Simplon, we slept at the beastliest little town,[†1] in the wildest kind of house, where some fifty cats tumbled into the corridor outside our bedrooms all at once in the middle of the night—whether through the roof or not, I don't know; for it was dark when we got up—and made such a horrible and terrific noise that we started out of our beds in a panic. I strongly objected to opening the door lest they should get into the room and tear at us; but Edward opened his, and laid about him until he dispersed them. At Domo d'Ossola we had three immense bedrooms (Egg's bed twelve feet wide!) and a Sala of imperceptible extent in the dim light of two candles and a wood fire; but were very well and very cheaply entertained. Here, we are, as you know, housed in the greatest comfort.

We continue to get on very well indeed together, [†a]though I am rather confirmed in general suspicions I have long entertained that other men in general (and Collins in particular) spit and snort rather more than I have ever found it necessary to do—particularly in the early part of the day.[†a] We really do admirably. I lose no opportunity of inculcating the lesson that it is of no use to be out of temper in travelling, and it is very seldom wanted for any of us. Egg is an excellent fellow and full of good qualities—I am sure a generous and staunch man at heart. He is not above the average, intellectually; but I believe he is, in a good and honorable nature.

I shall send Catherine from Genoa a list of the places where letters will find me. I shall hope to hear from you too, and shall be very glad indeed to do so. No more at present. Ever most affectionately CD.

To MRS CHARLES DICKENS, 28 AND 29 OCTOBER 1853

MS British Library. Address: Inghilterra | Mrs. Charles Dickens | Tavistock House | Tavistock Square | London.

Croce di Malta,[†2] Genoa | Friday Night, Twenty Eighth October 1853.

My Dearest Catherine. As we arrived here later than I had expected (in consequence of the journey from Milan being most wearily slow) I received your welcome letter only this morning. I write this before going to bed, that I may be sure of not being taken by any engagement off the post time tomorrow.

We came in last night between 7 and 8. The Railroad to Turin is finished and opened to within twenty miles of Genoa. Its effect upon the whole town, and especially upon that part of it lying down beyond the lighthouse and away by San Pietro d'Arena is quite wonderful. I only knew the place by the lighthouse; so numerous are the new buildings, so wide the streets, so busy the people, and so thriving and busy the many signs of commerce. Today I have seen the De La Rues,[†1] the Gibbs's,[†2] the Browns,[†3] and the Thompsons[†4]—the latter of whom live at Nervi,[†5] fourteen or fifteen miles off, towards Porto Fino. First of the Browns. They are just the same, except that Mrs. Brown's face is larger and fuller, and her hair rather grey. As I rang at their bell she came out walking, and stared at me. "What! You don't know me!" said I. Upon which she recognized me very warmly, and then said, in her old quiet way "I expected to find a ruin, we heard you had been so ill. And I find you younger and better looking than ever. But its so strange to see you without a bright waistcoat. Why haven't you got a bright waistcoat on?" I apologized for my black one, and we went upstairs, when "Yeatsey" presently appeared in a hideous and demoniacal night dress; having turned out of bed to greet his distinguished countryman. After a long talk, in the course of which I arranged to dine there on Sunday early, before starting by the Steamer for Naples, and in which they told me every possible and impossible particular about their minutest affairs, and especially about Gibbs's marriage,[†6] I set off for Gibbs's at Quarto. I had found letters from him here, and he had been here over and over again, and had driven out no end of times to the Gate to leave messages for me, and really was (in his strange uncouth way) crying glad to see me. I found him and his wife in a little uncomfortable country house overlooking the sea, sitting in a small summer house on wheels, exactly like a bathing machine. I found her rather pretty, extraordinarily cold and composed, a mere piece of furniture talking broken English. Through eight months in the year, they live in this country place. She never reads, never works, never talks, never gives an order or directs anything, has only a taste for going to the Theatre (where she never speaks either) and buying clothes. They sit in the garden all day, dine at four, smoke their cigars, go in at 8, sit silent till 10, and then go to bed. The greater part of this I had from Gibbs himself in a frantically unintelligible confidence in the garden; the only portions of which that I could clearly understand were the words "and one thing and another", repeated one hundred thousand times, [†a]and a repeated damning of the eyes of his mother in law[†7] as a Bitch.[†a] He described himself as being perfectly happy, and seemed very fond of his wife. "But that," said Brown to me this morning, looking like the figure-head of a ship with a nutmeg-grater for a face; "that he ought to be and must be, and is bound to be—he can't help it."

Then I went on to the Thompsons, and found them living in a beautiful situation, in a ruinous Albaro-like[†1] Palace.[†2] Coming upon them unawares, I found Thompson with a pointed beard,[†3] smoking a great German pipe, in a pair of slippers—the two little girls,[†4] very pale and faint from the climate, in a singular untidy state—one (Heaven knows why) without stockings—and both with their little short hair cropped in a manner never before beheld, and a little bright bow stuck on the top of it. Christiana said she had invented this head gear as a picturesque thing[†5]—adding that perhaps it was—and perhaps it wasn't. She was greatly flushed and agitated,[†6] but looked very well and seems to be much liked here.[†7] We had disturbed her at her painting in Oils;[†8] and I rather received an impression that what with that, and what with Music,[†9] the household affairs went a little to the wall. Thompson was teaching the two little girls the multiplication table,[†10] in a disorderly old billiard room with all manner of messes[†11] in it. [†a]Going over the house I found in a back room out of the Sala, in the arms of a regular Genoese old witch, a hideous weazen little infant, like the Mummy of a Monkey, who, Christiana said, was Fanny's.[†12] And wouldn't I like to see Fanny? I said Yes, and she sent after Fanny, but poor Fanny never appeared.

She is sadly at a discount—lives in a little place in Genoa, on a hundred a year allowed by her father, and is seen by nobody. Even her marriage itself is so illegal, that her husband can dissolve it at any time if he should take the desire into his head.[†a]

SATURDAY.[†1]

Having obtained a gracious permission from the lady of the School, I am going to shew my companions the Sala of the Peschiere[†2] this Morning. We dine at Gibbs's in the Strada Serra to day. Mrs. Curry[†3] too I will manage to call upon, and I will leave a card for Butler.[†4] It is raining intensely hard in the regular Genoa manner, so that I can hardly hope for Genoa's making as fine an impression as I would desire. Our boat for Naples is a large French Mail Boat, and we hope to get there on Tuesday or Wednesday. If, the day after you receive this, you write to me Post Restante Rome, it will be the safest course. Five days later, write Poste Restante Florence. You refer to a letter you supposed me to have received from Forster—to whom my love. No letter from him has come to hand.

I will resume my report of this place in my next. In the meantime I will not fail to drink dear Katey's health today.[†5] Edward has just come in, with mention of an English boat on Monday Morning, superior to French boat tomorrow, and faster. I shall enquire at Gibbs's and take the best. When I next write, I will give you our route in exact detail. [†a]Georgy's message from you concerning the Gordons, hardly surprises me though it does make me very indignant. I think I never heard of anything so gross.[†a†6]—I am pleased to hear of Mr. Robson's[†7] success in a serious part,[†8] as I hope he will now be a fine actor.—I hope you will enjoy yourself at Macready's, though I fear it must be sometimes but a melancholy visit.

[†a]The people here seem, of course, to quarrel a good deal among themselves, and so far as I can make out—Thompson seems to be the great dull obstacle in everybody's way, somehow or other. His son,[†9] now in England again, is[†10] universally described as having been a fearful youth—delivering opinions on all kinds of subjects as if he were sixty, reducing Gibbs's spirits, depriving him of his appetite, and wasting him away. This is his own account. He lived for the month together in the house of his mother in law[†11] without speaking to her; and one of his choicest amusements was to hold her baby out of a top window as if he were going to drop it into the garden, while she stood screaming below.[†a†1] Good bye my dear, and believe me ever most affectionately CD.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 29 OCTOBER 1853

Composite text, from MDGH, I, 320-2 and Forster, VII, iii, 579; ([aa]and summaries only in F. Address (envelope MS Yale University Library): Inghilterra. | Miss Hogarth | Tavistock House | Tavistock Square | London. PM 29 OTT 53.

Croce di Malta, Genoa, Saturday, Oct. 29th, | 1853.

My dearest Georgy,

We had thirty-one hours consecutively on the road between this and Milan, and arrived here in a rather damaged condition. We live at the top of this immense house, overlooking the port and sea, pleasantly and airily enough, though it is[†2] no joke to get so high, and though the apartment is rather vast and faded. His reappearance created a sensation. He and his companions were warmly greeted and jovial hours were passed among his old associates.

The old walks are pretty much the same as ever, except that they have built behind the Peschiere on[†3] the San Bartolomeo hill, and changed the whole town towards San Pietro d'Arena,[†4] where we seldom went. The Bisagno[†5] looks just the same, stony[†6] just now, and with very little water in it. The[†7] Vicoli[†8] stink exactly as they used to, and are fragrant with the same old flavour of very rotten cheese kept in very hot blankets. The Mezzaro[†9] pervades them as of yore.[†10] The old Jesuit college[†11] in the Strada Nuova is under the present government the Hotel de Ville, and a very splendid caffé with a terrace garden has arisen between it and Palavicini's[†12] old palace. [a]Pal himself has gone to the dogs.[a†13] Another new and handsome caffé has been built in the Piazza Carlo Felice, between the old caffé of the Bei Arti[†14] (where Fletcher[†15] stopped for the bouquets in the green times,[†16] when we went to the 's[†17] party), and the Strada Carlo Felice; and the Teatro Diurno had new stone galleries and seats like an ancient amphitheatre. The old beastly gate and guardhouse on the Albaro road are still in their dear old beastly state; and the whole of that road is just as it was. The man without the legs is still in the Strada Nuova; but the beggars in general are all cleared off, and our old one-armed Belisario[†18] made a sudden evaporation a year or two ago. I am going to the Peschiere to-day. The puppets[†1] are here, and the opera is open, but only with a buffo company, and without a buffet. We went to the Scala, where they did an opera of Verdi's, called "Il Trovatore,"[†2] and a poor enough ballet. The whole performance miserable indeed.[†3] I wish you were here to take some of the old walks. It is quite strange to walk about alone. Good-bye, my dear Georgy. Pray tell me how Kate is. I rather fancy from her letter, though I scarcely know why, that she is not quite as well as she was at Boulogne. I was charmed with your account of the Plornishghenter and everything and everybody else. Kiss them all for me.

Ever most affectionately yours

CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?29-30 OCTOBER 1853]

Extracts in F, VII, iii, 580. Date: probably the same day as last or day after.

Describing the Palazzo Peschiere as converted into a girls' college; all the paintings of gods and goddesses canvassed over, and the gardens gone to ruin; but, O! what a wonderful place! He observed an extraordinary increase everywhere else, since he was last in the splendid city, of life, growth, and enterprise; and he confirmed his first conviction that for picturesque beauty and character there was nothing in Italy, Venice excepted, near brilliant old Genoa.

To MRS CHARLES DICKENS, 30 OCTOBER 1853

MS British Library. Address: Inghilterra | Mrs. Charles Dickens | Tavistock House | Tavistock Square | London.

Genoa, Sunday Thirtieth October 1853.

My Dearest Catherine.

This is merely a business letter, containing the sketch of our movements that I have at last been able to make. I send them from here, as we leave for Naples tomorrow morning by the Peninsular and Oriental Company's English Steamer the Valletta; and to go on before doing so, would occasion a week's delay. It is not very important, but you may naturally like to know where we are.

Leave Genoa, Monday 31st. October
Arrive at Naples, Wednesday 2nd. November
Leave Naples, Tuesday 8th. November
Journey to Rome, three days.
Arrive at Rome, Thursday 10th. November
Leave Rome, Wednesday 16th. November

Journey to Florence, four days
Arrive at Florence, Saturday 19th. November
Leave Florence (including Railroad trip to Pisa and back) Tuesday 22nd. Novr.
Journey to Venice, three days.
Arrive at Venice, Thursday 24th. November.
Leave Venice, Monday 28th. November.
Reach Turin (by Parma and Verona) about the 1st. of Decr.
Then straight home, over the Mont Cenis, to Lyons. On by Railway to Paris and Boulogne.

If on the fourth day after you write to Florence, you write to Venice, and if after about the same interval you write to Turin, and if after about the same interval again you write to Paris, I THINK[†1] the letters will all fall as pat as possible. Will you let Georgy understand these arrangements too.

If you should have any wish or necessity to write at any other times, Wills can always ascertain for you how many days post it is to any of these places. It might, indeed, be always desirable for you to know when your letters will reach them.

Mrs. Gibbs quite came out yesterday. So did Mrs. Brown (in a different manner) by violently attacking Mrs. Thompson after dinner, for painting ill in oils when she might be playing well on the piano. We dine with the Browns today. It rained hard all yesterday, but is finer this morning. We went over the Peschiere in the wet afternoon. The garden is sorely neglected now, and the rooms are all full of boarding school beds, and most of the fireplaces are closed up; but the old beauty and grandeur of the place were in it still. Lady Walpole[†2] by the bye is living alone (or with some Austrian lover) at Florence. Mrs. Brown told me yesterday it was officially sworn before Brown that Lord Walpole[†3] used to drag her downstairs by her long hair, and throw burning logs of wood at her as she lay at the bottom!

This will find you, I suppose at Sherborne. My heartiest love to dear Macready, and to Miss Macready, and to all the house. I hope my Godson[†4] has not forgotten me. With love to Georgy, ever most affectionately yours CD.

Send Wills a copy of the moves and dates, with my kindest regards. I will think of Charley (from whom I have heard here) and soon write to him definitely. At present I think he had better join me at Boulogne. I shall not bring the little boys over, as, if we keep our time, it would be too long before Christmas Day.

November

To MRS CHARLES DICKENS, 4 NOVEMBER 1853

MS British Library. Address: Inghilterra | Mrs. Charles Dickens | Tavistock House | Tavistock Square | London.

Hotel des Etrangers,[†1] Naples | Friday Night November Fourth 1853.

My Dearest Catherine. We arrived here at midday—two days after our intended time, under circumstances which I reserve for Georgina's letter, by way of variety—in what Forster used to call good health and sp-p-pirits. We have a charming apartment opposite the sea, a little lower down than the Victoria[†2]—in the direction of the San Carlo Theatre[†3]—and the windows are now wide open on an English-summer night. The first persons we found on board, at Genoa, were Emerson Tennent,[†4] Lady Tennent,[†5] their son[†6] and daughter.[†7] They are all here too, in an apartment over ours, and we have been constantly together in a very friendly way, ever since our meeting. We dine at the table d'hôte—made a league together on board—and have been mutually agreeable. They have no servant with them (which is odd for people of their condition) and have profited by Edward. He goes on perfectly well—is always cheerful and ready—has been sleeping on board, upside-down I believe in a corner, with his head in the wet and his heels against the side of the paddle box—but has been perpetually gay and fresh.

Cottrel is no longer here, and is out of the partnership in the bank with Iggulden.[†8] Said Iggulden called before we had been here two hours, but we were out.[†9] As soon as we got our luggage from the Custom House, we packed complete changes in a bag, set off in a carriage for some warm baths, and had a most refreshing cleansing after our long journey. There was an odd Neapolitan attendant—a steady old man—who, bringing the linen into my bath, proposed to "soap me." Upon which I called out to the other two that I intended to have everything done to me that could be done, and gave him directions accordingly. I was frothed all over with Naples soap, rubbed all down, scrubbed with a brush, had my nails cut, my corns cut, and all manner of extraordinary operations performed. He was as much disappointed (apparently) as surprised, not to find me dirty, and kept frequently ejaculating under his breath "O Heaven how clean this Englishman is!" He also remarked that the Englishman was as fair as a beautiful woman—but there, he added, the resemblance ended.

Some relations of Lord John's,[†1] going to Malta, were aboard ship, and we were very pleasant. Likewise there was a Mr. Young aboard—an agreeable fellow, not very unlike Forster in person—who introduced himself as the brother of the Miss Youngs[†2] whom we knew at Boulogne. He was musical and had much good fellowship in him, and we were very agreeable together also. On the whole I became decidedly popular, and was embraced on all hands when I came over the side this morning. We are going up Vesuvius, of course, and to Herculanaeum and Pompeii,[†3] and the usual places.[†4] The Tennents will be our companions in most of our excursions, but we shall leave them here behind us. Ridgway[†5] is not here, and Mr. Temple[†6] our Minister is away on leave, so we shall have (which I am heartily glad of) no dining out, I hope. Naples looks just the same as when we left it, except that the weather is much better and brighter.

[†a]Gibbs's wife made a much more agreeable impression on me, on the whole, than she seems to have made on the Genoa people, who are however (like most small communities) scandalous and quarrelsome, and not much given to exaltation of small merit. I called on Mrs. Curry on Sunday. They live in an apartment in a very clean new large house on the Acqua Sola. I smelt dinner on table, and did not go on. Curry has a chance again, in being agent for the Peninsular and Oriental Company's boats on this station. He came alongside when we left Genoa but did not see me. He looked much the same as ever, except in being (as I thought in the hasty glimpse I had of him) more red and bloated. He seems to do the business in a "smart" American sort of way, not likely to keep him firm in it, I fear.[†a] On the day before we left Genoa, we had another dinner with Gibbs at his country place at Quarto. He was the soul of hospitality, and really seems to love me. You would have been quite touched if you could have seen the honest warmth of his affection. On the occasion of this second banquet, Egg made a brilliant mistake that perfectly convulsed us all. I had introduced all the games with great success, and we were playing at the "What advice would you have given that person?" game. The advice was, "Not to bully his fellow creatures". Upon which Egg triumphantly and with the greatest glee screamed out "Mr. Brown!"—utterly forgetting Stuarta's[†7] relationship which I had elaborately impressed upon him. The effect was perfectly irresistible and uncontroulable; and the little woman's way of humouring the joke was in the best taste and the best sense. While I am upon Genoa I may add, that when we left the Croce the landlord in hoping I was satisfied, told me that, as I was an old inhabitant, he had charged the prices "as to a Genoese." They certainly were very reasonable.

Mr. and Mrs. Sartoris[†1] have lately been staying in this house, but are just gone. It is kept by an English Waiting Maid who married an Italian Courier, and is extremely comfortable and clean.

You will be amazed by the form of this letter. After I had begun it I found I had not separated two sheets—this thin paper being difficult to separate—and I tore them asunder and made the present botch. As the sides, however, are paged atop, I hope you will read it easily. Our being behind our projected time here, will make us two days later than the programme I sent you (probably) at all the other places in our route, but the places will be the same; and the letters I shall find at them will only be a little older. I am getting impatient to hear from you with all home news, and shall be heartily glad to get to Rome, and find my best welcome and interest at the Post office there.

That ridiculous Miss Cunningham and her mother were at the hotel at Leghorn the day before yesterday, where the mother (an old lady) lies so ill from the fright and anxiety consequent on her daughter's efforts at martyrdom,[†2] that it is even doubtful whether she will recover. I learnt from a lady friend of Miss Cunningham's on board the Valetta, that all this nonsense originated at Nice, where she was stirred up by Free Kirk parsons-itinerant, any one of whom I take her to be ready to make a semi-celestial marriage with. The dear being who told me all about her was a noble specimen—single, forty, in a clinging flowered black silk dress which wouldn't drape, or bustle, or fall, or do anything of that sort—and with a leghorn hat on her head, at least (I am serious) six feet round. The consequence of its immense size, was, that whereas it had an insinuating blue decoration in the form of a bow in front, it was so out of her knowledge behind, that it was all battered and bent in that direction—and viewed from that quarter, she looked dead drunk. [†a]She had designs on an ancient Lieutenant in the Navy, in charge of the Mails. The Lieutenant responded. They have gone on to Malta together, and I think must be married there.[†a]

[†b]I w[ill write agai]n soon, and I hope I prove a pe[rsisten]t correspondent. My best love to Mamey and Katey, and Sydney the King of the Nursery, and Harry, and the dear little Plornishghenter. I kiss almost all the children I encounter, in remembrance of their sweet faces, and talk to all the mothers who carry them. I hope to hear nothing but good news from you, and to find nothing but good spirits in your expected letter, when I come to Rome. I already begin to look homeward, being now at the remotest point of the journey, and to anticipate the pleasure of return. Ever most affecy CD.[†b]

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 4 NOVEMBER 1853

Text from MDGH, I, 322-5, but with some revision from F, VII, iii, 580; ([aa]only in F;([bb] only in MDGH.

Hôtel des Étrangers, Naples, | Friday Night, Nov. 4th, 1853.

My dearest Georgy,

Instead of embarking on Monday at Genoa, we were delayed (in consequence of the boat's being a day later when there are thirty-one days in the month) until Tuesday. Going aboard that morning at half-past nine, we found the steamer more than full of passengers from Marseilles, and in a state of confusion not to be described. We could get no places at the captain's table, got our dinners how we could on deck, had no berths or sleeping accommodation of any kind, and had paid heavy first-class fares! To add to this, we got to Leghorn too late to steam away again that night, getting the ship's papers examined first—as the authorities said so, not being favourable to the new express English ship, English officered—and we lay off the lighthouse all night long. The scene on board beggars description.[†1] Ladies on the tables, gentlemen under the tables; [a]bed-room appliances not usually beheld in public airing themselves in positions where soup-tureens had been lately developing themselves;[a] and ladies and gentlemen lying indiscriminately on the open deck, arrayed[†2] like spoons on a sideboard. No mattresses, no blankets, nothing. Towards midnight, attempts were made by means of an awning and flags to make this latter scene remotely approach an Australian encampment; and we three lay together on the bare planks covered with our coats. We were all gradually dozing off when a perfectly tropical rain fell, and in a moment drowned the whole ship. The rest of the night was passed upon the stairs, with an immense jumble of men and women. When anybody came up for any purpose we all fell down; and when anybody came down we all fell up again. Still, the good-humour in the English part of the passengers was quite extraordinary. There were excellent officers aboard, and the first mate lent me his cabin to wash in in the morning, which I afterwards lent to Egg and Collins. Then we and the Emerson Tennents (who were aboard) and the captain,[†3] the doctor, and the second officer went off on a jaunt together to Pisa, as the ship was to lie at Leghorn all day.

The captain was a capital fellow, but I led him, facetiously, such a life all day, that I got almost everything[†4] altered at night. Emerson Tennent, with the greatest kindness, turned his son out of his state room (who, indeed, volunteered to go in the most amiable manner), and I got a good bed there.[†5] The store-room down by the hold was opened for Egg and Collins, and they slept with the moist sugar, the cheese in cut, the spices, the cruets, the apples and pears—in a perfect chandler's shop; in company with what the—'s[†6] would call a "hold gent"—who had been so horribly wet through overnight that his condition frightened the authorities; a cat; and the steward—who dozed in an armchair, and all night long fell headforemost, once in every five minutes, on Egg, who slept on the counter or dresser. Last night I had the steward's own cabin, opening on deck, all to myself. It had been previously occupied by some desolate lady, who went ashore at Civita Vecchia. There was little or no sea, thank Heaven, all the trip; but the rain was heavier than any I have ever seen, and the lightning very constant and vivid. We were, with the crew, some two hundred people; with boats, at the utmost stretch, for one hundred, perhaps. I could not help thinking what would happen if we met with any accident; the crew being chiefly Maltese, and evidently fellows who would cut off alone in the largest boat on the least alarm. The speed (it being the crack express ship for the India mail) very high; also the running through all the narrow rocky channels. Thank God, however, here we are. [b]Though the more sensible and experienced part of the passengers agreed with me this morning that it was not a thing to try often. We had an excellent table after the first day, the best wines and so forth, and the captain and I swore eternal friendship. Ditto the first officer and the majority of the passengers. We got into the bay about seven this morning, but could not land until noon.[b] We towed from Civita Vecchia the entire Greek navy, I believe, consisting of a little brig-of-war, with great guns, fitted as a steamer, but disabled by having burnt the bottoms of her boilers out in her first run. She was just big enough to carry the captain and a crew of six or so, but the captain was so covered with buttons and gold that there never would have been room for him on board to put these valuables away if he hadn't worn them, which he consequently did, all night.

Whenever anything was wanted to be done, as slackening the tow-rope or anything of that sort, our officers roared at this miserable potentate, in violent English, through a speaking-trumpet; of which he couldn't have understood a word under the most favourable circumstances. So he did all the wrong things first, and the right things always last. The absence of any knowledge of anything not English on the part of the officers and stewards was most ridiculous. I met an Italian gentleman on the cabin steps, yesterday morning, vainly endeavouring to explain that he wanted a cup of tea for his sick wife. And when we were coming out of the harbour at Genoa, and it was necessary to order away that boat of music you remember, the chief officer (called aft for the purpose, as "knowing something of Italian,") delivered himself in this explicit and clear manner to the principal performer: "Now, signora, if you don't sheer off, you'll be run down: so you had better trice up that guitar of yours, and put about."†1

[b]We get on as well as possible, and it is extremely pleasant and interesting, and I feel that the change is doing me great and real service, after a long continuous strain upon the mind; but I am pleased to think that we are at our farthest point, and I look forward with joy to coming home again, to my old room, and the old walks, and all the old pleasant things.

I wish I had arranged, or could have done so—for it would not have been easy—to find some letters here. It is a blank to stay for five days in a place without any.

I don't think Edward knows fifty Italian words; but much more French is spoken in Italy now than when we were here, and he stumbles along somehow.

I am afraid this is a dull letter, for I am very tired. You must take the will for the deed, my dear, and good night.

Ever most affectionately[b]

[CD.]

To CHARLES DICKENS JNR, [4-7 NOVEMBER 1853]

Mention in To Mrs CD, 14 Nov. Date: written from Naples.

Giving him the choice of where to meet them in France.†1

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 13 NOVEMBER 1853

MS Morgan Library.

Rome, Sunday Night Thirteenth November 1853.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

On sending to the Post Office here this morning—we arrived last night—I was delighted to find your letter awaiting me. I read it with the greatest pleasure, in spite of the heavy drawback of counsel's advice; and cannot deny myself the further pleasure of writing to thank you for it.

We came from Genoa to Naples—I ought rather to say, went—in the Valetta Steamer, an English ship placed upon this route chiefly to convey the Overland India Mail from Malta to Marseilles, when it becomes due. Our countrymen and women, and the men and women of all other European regions, are so much attracted by the fame of this ship, that we found it when we went aboard perfectly crammed. There were about forty passengers, without any berths, blankets, seats at dinner, or other accommodation in the way of eating, drinking, or sleeping—the whole having paid heavy first class fares. The first night, we lay on the planks of the deck, with thirty seven unfortunates—of whom thirty two declared all night, that they would write to the Times in the morning. You never saw so ridiculous a scene. Insane attempts to make pillows of carpet bags, hat boxes, and life buoys—wild endeavours to screen ladies off with flags, which invariably fell down as soon as they had tied their heads up in extraordinary dimity machines taken out of reticules elaborately worked in worsted—and in the middle of the night a perfectly tropical rain which swept the whole ship clear in a minute and crowded us all together on the Cabin stairs, where we remained all night; whenever any desperate creature came below, all tumbling down; and whenever any other desperate creature ascended to the deck, all tumbling up again. As a distinguished Englishman in my way, I became the brother of all the Officers in half an hour, and set off with them next day (we being detained at Leghorn four and twenty hours) to see Pisa. Which expedition I made with the comfortable assurance that the Valetta could never go without us, while the Captain was in our Company. He was so much affected by our sufferings that next night he put Mr. Collins and Mr. Egg in the store room (opened for the occasion) where they slept on little dressers, with the pickles, spices, tea, fruits, and a very large double Glo'ster cheese in cut—the whole forming a combination of smells of which they were profoundly innocent after they had been there (it was under water too) five minutes, but which, to my senses, has left a general flavour of Chandlery and Grocery about them ever since. I was superbly lodged in the Steward's Cabin; that potentate sitting in an arm-chair all night, and resigning his bed (four feet and a half by one and a quarter) to me. It was very comfortable though the Engine was under the pillow, and the wall extremely nervous, and the whole in a profuse perspiration of warm oil. At Naples, I found Layard[†1]—with whom we ascended Vesuvius in the Sunlight, and came down in the Moonlight, very merrily. Talking of Italian, I must mention that Emerson Tennent and his family were of the party—they had been in the Valetta—and that he stopped the Expedition indignantly, a little way up the Cone, to demand "a church" for his daughter. He meant a chair; but he persisted in, and insisted on, having "Una chiesa"[†2]—to the unspeakable amazement and consternation of the forty screeching Vagabonds who formed our escort. My heart misgives me in relating this story even to you, for he wanted to turn his son out of his bed (and stranger still the son wanted to turn out too) when he heard of my lying on the deck. But we laughed about it so ridiculously afterwards, with Layard, that I can't help this little bit of treason.

There has been a wretched business with young Brinsley Norton[†3] (the youngest living son of that unhappy marriage) at Naples. He has recently turned Catholic, and married a Peasant girl at Capri,[†4] who knows nothing about anything—shoes and hairbrushes included—and whom he literally picked up off the beach. They told me about it at the Embassy. He had not been married a fortnight when I was there.[†5] One of the attachés had just seen him in his "Island home", translating Longfellow's poems which he is supposed not to understand in the least, into Neapolitan—of which he knows nothing—for the entertainment of his wife—who couldn't possibly comprehend a line under the most favorable circumstances. His brother[†6] is supposed to be going to marry a sister of the young lady's, and altogether it seems to be a most deplorable affair.

It was very hot at Naples, and I bear some highly ornamental marks of mosquito bites. The same men, with the same instruments, were singing the same songs, to the same tunes, all along the Seashore in the morning, as when I was there Nine years ago. Affairs with France looked queer, and the French Ambassador left while I was there, in high dudgeon.[†7] It made considerable talk. Verdi is still the rage. In a poor enough Opera of his[†1]—very well done indeed, at San Carlo—there was a Prima Donna[†2] who I think will soon make a great success in England. Pompeii has greatly increased in interest of late years; several fine houses having been excavated, and one being left imperfectly dug out, with the ruined and broken roof still upon it—which gives a perfect and admirable idea of the process of destruction.[†3] Meanwhile Vesuvius looks on very peaceably—for the present.[†4]

I hope to be at Turin on the fifth of December, and to leave it on the sixth, and then to come on very rapidly indeed. I shall hear from Charley there, and learn whether I shall find him waiting at Paris or at Boulogne—or even at Lyons, though I don't think the last place likely. I was amazed by the life and enterprise in Genoa, and the increase in the place since I lived there. If it goes on in the same way, long, its old commercial greatness will be renewed again.

I admit that they do not speak very clearly or sweetly, about Milan and in that country; but they can if they choose, and they do choose when a stranger speaks to them. The language has a pleasant sound in my ears, however spoken almost, which no other has except my own. That preposterous Miss Cunningham was at the hotel at Leghorn when I was there—in attendance on her mother, who seems likely to be the only British Martyr of that hollow, ill considered, vain, wrong-headed proceeding.[†5] I understand that she always objected to her daughter's taking such propagandism upon herself, and that her alarm and anxiety have made her very seriously ill.

With my kindest regards to O[†6] and to Mr. Brown, now and ever My Dear Miss Coutts Most Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 13 NOVEMBER 1853

Text from MDGH, I, 325-9, (ªªquoted in F, VII, iii, 582-3.

Rome, Sunday Night, Nov. 13th, 1853.

My dearest Georgy,

We arrived here yesterday afternoon, at between three and four. On sending to the post-office this morning, I received your pleasant little letter, and one from Miss Coutts, who is still at Paris. But to my amazement there was none from Catherine! You mention her writing, and I cannot but suppose that your two letters must have been posted together. However, I received none from her, and I have all manner of doubts respecting the plainness of its direction. They will not produce the letters here as at Genoa, but persist in looking them out at the post-office for you. I shall send again to-morrow, and every day until Friday, when we leave here. If I find no letter from her to-morrow, I shall write to her nevertheless by that post which brings this, so that you may both hear from me together.

One night, at Naples, Edward came in, open-mouthed, to the table d'hôte where we were dining with the Tennents, to announce "The Marchese Garofalo."[†1] I at first thought it must be the little parrot-marquess who was once your escort from Genoa; but I found him to be a man (married to an Englishwoman) whom we used to meet at Ridgway's. He was very glad to see me, and I afterwards met him at dinner at Mr. Lowther's,[†2] our chargé d'affaires. Mr. Lowther was at the Rockingham play,[†3] and is a very agreeable fellow. [a]We had an exceedingly pleasant dinner of eight, preparatory to which I was near having the ridiculous adventure of not being able to find the house and coming back dinnerless. I went in an open carriage from the hotel in all state, and the coachman, to my surprise, pulled up at the end of the Chiaja. "Behold the house," says he, "of Il Signor Larthoor!"—at the same time pointing with his whip into the seventh heaven, where the early stars were shining. "But the Signor Larthoor," returns the Inimitable darling,[†4] "lives at Pausilippo."[†5] "It is true," says the coachman (still pointing to the evening star), "but he lives high up the Salita Sant' Antonio, where no carriage ever yet ascended, and that is the house" (evening star as aforesaid), "and one must go on foot. Behold the Salita Sant' Antonio!" I went up it, a mile and a half I should think. I got into the strangest places, among the wildest Neapolitans—kitchens, washing-places, archways, stables, vineyards—was baited by dogs, answered in profoundly unintelligible Neapolitan, from behind lonely locked doors, in cracked female voices, quaking with fear; could hear of no such Englishman or any Englishman. By-and-by I came upon a Polenta-shop in the clouds, where an old Frenchman, with an umbrella like a faded tropical leaf (it had not rained for six weeks) was staring at nothing at all, with a snuff-box in his hand. To him I appealed concerning the Signor Larthoor. "Sir," said he, with the sweetest politeness, "can you speak French?" "Sir," said I, "a little." "Sir," said he, "I presume the Signor Loothere"—you will observe that he changed the name according to the custom of his country—"is an Englishman." I admitted that he was the victim of circumstances and had that misfortune. "Sir," said he, "one word more. Has he a servant with a wooden leg?" "Great Heaven, sir," said I, "how do I know! I should think not, but it is possible." "It is always," said the Frenchman, "possible. Almost all the things of the world are always possible." "Sir," said I—you may imagine my condition and dismal sense of my own absurdity, by this time—"that is true." He then took an immense pinch of snuff, wiped the dust off his umbrella, led me to an arch commanding a wonderful view of the bay of Naples, and pointed deep into the earth from which I had mounted. "Below there, near the lamp, one finds an Englishman, with a servant with a wooden leg. It is always possible that he is the Signor Loothere." I had been asked at six, and it was now getting on for seven. I went down again in a state of perspiration and misery not to be described, and without the faintest hope of finding the place. But as I was going down to the lamp, I saw the strangest staircase up a dark corner, with a man in a white-waistcoat (evidently hired) standing on the top of it, fuming. I dashed in at a venture, found it was the place, made the most of the whole story, and was indescribably popular.[†1] The best of it was, that as nobody ever did find the place, he had put a servant at the bottom of the Salita, to "wait for an English gentleman." The servant (as he presently pleaded), deceived by the moustache, had allowed the English gentleman to pass unchallenged.[a]

The night before we left Naples we were at the San Carlo, where, with the Verdi rage of our old Genoa time,[†2] they were again doing the "Trovatore." It seemed rubbish on the whole to me, but was very fairly done. I think "La [Penco],"[†3] the prima donna, will soon be a great hit in London.[†4] She is a very remarkable singer and a fine actress, to the best of my judgment on such premises. There seems to be no opera here, at present. There was a Festa in St. Peter's to-day,[†5] and the Pope[†6] passed to the Cathedral in state. We were all there.

We leave here, please God, on Friday morning, and post to Florence in three days and a half. We came here by Vetturino. Upon the whole, the roadside inns are greatly improved since our time. Half-past three and half-past four have been, however, our usual times of rising on the road.

I was in my old place at the Coliseum this morning, and it was as grand as ever.[†7] With that exception the ruined part of Rome—the real original Rome—looks smaller than my remembrance made it. It is the only place on which I have yet found that effect. We are in the old hotel.[†8]

You are going to Bonchurch I suppose? will be there, perhaps, when this letter reaches you? I shall be pleased to think of you as at home again, and making the commodious family mansion look natural and home-like. I don't like to think of my room without anybody to peep into it now and then. Here is a world of travelling arrangements for me to settle, and here are Collins and Egg looking sideways at me with an occasional imploring glance as beseeching me to settle it. So I leave off. Good-night.

Ever, my dearest Georgy, | Most affectionately yours

[CD]

To EMILE DE LA RUE, 14 NOVEMBER 1853*

MS Berg Collection.

Rome. Hotel des Iles Britanniques | Monday Fourteenth November 1853.

My Dear De la Rue.

After making all calculations in the most vigorous detail, and checking them off, and ticking them off, and correcting them, and re-correcting them, and blotting them horribly (which somehow seems to make them more imposing and authentic), I am in a condition to tax your kindness to engage our places with the Courier from Turin into France, on Tuesday the 6th. of December. We are four in all, you know. If there be a Coupé which holds three, the said Coupé for us, and a place anywhere for my man, will be the thing. But if the Courier himself rides in the Coupé and leaves only two places there (which I hope is not the case, but which is the case on the Milan road) then I think it will be best to take all the four places together in the other compartment. Will you secure the four seats as in your better knowledge you best know how; and may I hope at the Poste Restante Parma, on Thursday the 1st. of December, to find a note from you telling me all about it, and whom I shall pay at Turin for the outlay incurred. With so long a notice I hope there is no reasonable chance of our being anticipated for the day I have mentioned—Tuesday the 6th. But if we should be, by any unlikely chance, then we must take the day next after that—the Wednesday—rather than the day before it, the Monday.

We are in the old hotel (no longer kept by Meloni) in a very comfortable apartment looking down on the Piazza del Popolo. The Electric Telegraph[†1] shoots through the Coliseum like a sun-beam—in at one ruined arch, and out at another. It looks, otherwise, as it grandly looked when your Visual Ray last beamed upon it. I find the other ruins of old Rome something smaller than I left them. At Naples, the same Vagabonds with the same hats, crushed in the same manner, were singing to the same instruments, the same songs with the same conventional jocularity, all along the seashore, as when I was last there.[†2] I became in five days quite exhausted with "Ma sposa Carolina", and its eternal Refrain "Quant'e bella, quant'e buona!"—but there was a wonderfully fine Prima Donna at the San Carlo—La [Penco][†3]—who I think will soon make a great success in Paris and London. They told me at the Embassy where I dined one day, the strangest story of Brinsley Norton, the youngest living son of that ill-fated marriage. He had just turned Catholic, and married a common bare-footed girl off the beach at Capri, with whom I believe he had previously achieved all matrimonial conditions, the Ceremony excepted. She was said to possess a maritime, large-eyed, gentlemanly, piratical style of beauty, but to be intensely dirty and to have no sort of idea concerning a hairbrush. For this young bride he was translating Longfellow's poems—which he is supposed not to understand at all—into Neapolitan—which he don't know a word of—intensely to the boredom and disconcertment of the Lady who had no desire to hear anything about them. He was described as sitting on a Rock somewhere, doing this, while an Aunt of the bride's was perpetually staring up at him from a sort of kennel (which is the family mansion) under the impression that he would suddenly endeavour to escape. His property consists of Two Pounds a week, allowed him by his brother. I am afraid the knowledge of all this will not comfort his unhappy mother.

Give my love to Madame De la Rue and tell her that it was a great happiness to me to see her again even for so short a time, and to see her looking so well and to find her in her old brave spirits. I have had a letter from Georgy here, making all kinds of enquiries after her. And in remembering me to all our friends, pray do not forget to do so very heartily to Gibbs, whose earnest and affectionate hospitality I shall always remember with the liveliest pleasure. We couldn't make out his flag, tell him, though we all three looked out hard for it. In all such messages Mr. Egg and Mr. Collins desire to bear their parts. Pray tell Mrs. Gibbs with my kindest regards that I don't think Egg has ever recovered that triumphant success of his at the "What Advice" game. It has languished on his mind, more or less, ever since.

Looking forward to a sight of your handwriting at Parma,

Always My Dear De la Rue | Most Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS CHARLES DICKENS, 14 NOVEMBER 1853

MS British Library.

Rome. Monday Fourteenth November 1853.

My Dearest Catherine. As I have mentioned in my letter to Georgy (written last night, but posted with this) I received her letter without yours—to my unbounded astonishment! This morning on sending again to the Post office, I at last got yours. [†a]I am rather surprised that I got it at all, for I do assure you that the illegibility of my name on the address would endanger it at any Foreign post office. How any frenchman or Italian could ever make out the first necessary condition—that my name begins with a D—I cannot imagine. I apprehend that it had been laid aside in positive despair. However, here it is,[†a] and most welcome it is with all its contents.

[†a]I forget whether I told you that Ridgway was not in Naples, though he was expected every day. I left a card for him at his old quarters. He is said to have grown very old; to have no teeth, and to be afflicted with a perpetual trembling and shaking of the head. He gives dinners as of old, and has his old cook.[†a] I found Layard at Naples, who went up Vesuvius with us and was very merry and agreeable. He is travelling with Lord and Lady Somers;[†1] and Lord Somers being laid up with an attack of Malaria Fever, Layard had a day to spare. [†a]Now for a story which will not comfort Mrs. Norton in her distress.

You remember Capri, an Island near Sorrento out in the Sea of the bay? In this Island lives one Mr. Reeford[†2] who has written some Italian papers in Household Words;[†1] and to this Island, and this gentleman, the young men about the Embassy, and other young Englishmen with nothing particular to do, have been accustomed to resort, in admiration of the Capri girls. Young Brinsley Norton, two and twenty years old and living on two pounds a week allowed him by his brother, had married not a fortnight before I arrived, a bare-footed girl off the Beach, with whom he had previously fulfilled all matrimonial conditions except the ceremony. The better to do this, he had first turned Catholic; his brother Fletcher having become one long ago, and entertaining (it is supposed) considerable ideas of himself marrying a sister of the bride—with whom he too has been on intimate terms. They told me all about it at the Embassy, where I dined. Mrs. Brinsley has no idea of a hair brush and is said to be extremely dirty—which her young husband particularly admires, observing that it is "not conventional." He was described to me as usually sitting on a rock, translating Longfellow's poems—which he is supposed not to understand in the least—into Neapolitan—of which he don't know a word—for the entertainment of his wife, who has not the least desire to hear anything about them. He appears to be a Young Ass, with certain incoherent inherited ideas concerning the Mantle of Sheridan.[†2] Another Booby of the name of Cayley[†3] (you remember his father, and his mother who was pretty and is dead)[†4] lately disguised himself[†5], without the least necessity, as a Sicilian Mariner with legs operatically naked, and rowed away in the dead of night with another young Capri Virgin[†6]—who would have gone, with the greatest cheerfulness and without any opposition from her relations and friends, in the blaze of noon. Mrs. Brinsley has an aunt with a distaff, and a touzled old knot of dirty grey hair, on the usual model. She forms one of the family party, and I suppose will appear in Chesterfield Street May Fair[†7] one of these days.

I met at the Embassy, a brother of Mrs. Medhurst's:[†8] an agreeable fellow. I saw

Dr Roskilly too, whom perhaps you remember.[†a†1] Craven,[†2] who was Lord Normanby's[†3] Secretary of Legation in Paris, now lives at Naples and is married to a French lady.[†4] He was very hospitable and hearty, and seemed to have vague ideas that something might be done in a pretty little private Theatre he has in his house. [†b]He is the man of whom Fanny Kemble used to be fond.[†b†5] He told me that she and the Sartoris's were here, on odd terms of half avoidance and half association.[†6] I have also heard of Thackeray's being here[†7]—I don't know how truly. I shall keep myself as close as I can. Lockhart is here, and I fear very ill. I mean to go and see him.

We are living in the old hotel, which is not now kept by Meloni, who has retired. I don't know whether you recollect an apartment at the top of the house, to which we once ran up with poor Roche to see the horses start in the race at the Carnival time?[†8] That is ours, in which I at present write. We have a large back dining room, a handsome front drawing room looking into the Piazza del Popolo, and three front bedrooms—all on a floor. The whole costs us about four shillings a day each. The hotel is better kept than ever. There is a little kitchen to each apartment, where the dinner is kept hot. There is no house comparable to it in Paris, and it is better than Mivarts. We start for Florence, post, on Friday morning. And I am now bargaining for a Carriage to take on to Venice.

Edward is an excellent servant, and always cheerful and ready for his work. He knows no Italian, except the names of a few things, but French is far more widely known here, now, than in our time. Neither is he an experienced Courier as to roads and so forth; but he picks up all that I want to know, here and there, somehow or other. I am perfectly pleased with him, and would rather have him than an older hand. Poor dear Roche comes back to my mind though, often.

I have written to engage the Courier from Turin into France, for Tuesday the 6th. of December. This will bring us home some two days after the 10th. probably; but some of the intermediate distances are heavy, and it would not be safe to take the places for an earlier day. I wrote to Charley from Naples, giving him his choice of meeting me at Lyons, at Paris, or at Boulogne. I gave him full instructions what to do if he arrived before me, and he will write to me at Turin saying where I shall find him. I shall be a day or so later than I supposed on the nearest calculation I could make when I wrote to him; but his waiting for me at an hotel will not matter.

From Forster I have not heard a word since I have been away, and (stranger still) I have heard nothing from Wills. Perhaps I shall, before I leave here.

We have had delightful weather, with one day's exception, until today, when it rains very heavily and sullenly. Egg and Collins have gone to the Vatican,[†1] and I am "going" to try whether I can hit out anything for the Xmas No. Give my love to Forster and tell him I dont write to him until I hear from him.

I saw an account of Abraham's acquittal[†2] in Galignani.[†3] Though I was very glad of it as far as he was concerned, I was very sorry that nobody bore the penalty of so heavy a piece of negligence as Somebody did most indubitably commit.[†4]

I never walk about the streets of any of these places, without an idea that I shall stumble upon Black.[†5] I have not done so yet. Neither have I come upon any English whom I know, except Layard and the Emerson Tennents—who will be here on Thursday from Civita Vecchia, and are to dine with us. The losses up to this point have been two pair of Shoes (one mine, and one Egg's) Collins's Snuffbox,[†6] and Egg's dressing gown. We have some profound discourses on Art, Color, Tone, and so forth. But I keep out of the way when pictures are in question, and go my own path.

The mosquitoes, and fleas, and I don't know what other monsters, have bitten me in a most remorseless manner. At Naples, my forehead was rather like Bell's;[†7] and I have now got an arm in a wonderful condition. We observe the Managerial punctuality in all our arrangements, and have not had any difference whatever. I observe that the expences occasionally make the Neophytes wink a little, and that the shirts do a good deal of duty.

Mrs. Reid's[†8] apartment over the way, brings Susan[†9] to my mind, and she brings poor Mrs. Macready, and she brings Sherborne. I cannot wonder at what you tell me of your visit, but it is very melancholy. I am glad you asked Katey in the spring. I will write to Macready if I get a chance; but it is very difficult indeed to do more than write home, flying about in this way and usually getting up in the middle of the night. Moreover I am particularly anxious to overcome the difficulties of so unsettled a life, and do something for the Xmas No.[†1]

I have been reserving this side, all through my letter, in the conviction that I had something else to tell you. If I had, I cannot remember what it is. I introduced myself to Salvatore[†2] at Vesuvius and reminded him of the night when poor Le Gros[†3] fell down the mountain. He was full of interest directly, remembered me very well, put on his gold banded cap and went up with us himself. He did not know that Le Gros was dead, and was very sorry to hear it. He asked after the ladies, and hoped they were very happy. To which I answered, Very. The cone is completely changed since our visit—is not at all recognizable as the same place—and there is no fire from the mountain though there is a great deal of smoke. Its last demonstration was in eighteen hundred and fifty.

I shall be glad to think of your all being at home again, as I suppose you will be soon after the receipt of this. Will you see to the invitations for Xmas Day, and write to Laetitia.[†4] I shall be very happy to be at home again myself and to embrace you—for of course I miss you very much: though I feel that I could not have done a better thing to clear my mind and freshen it up again, than make this expedition. If I find Charley much ahead of me, I shall start on through a night or so, to meet him, and leave the others to catch us up. I look upon the journey as almost closed at Turin. My best love to Mamey and Katey, and Sydney, and Harry, and the darling Plornishghenter. We often talk about them, and both my companions do so with interest. They always send all sorts of messages to you, which I never deliver.—Did you know that both Mr. and Mrs. Irving[†5] of Genoa are dead?—Miss Coutts writes me that it is Counsel's opinion that she had better not prosecute that Scoundrel[†6] again "unless she is attacked"—an almost incredible piece of coolness even in the Law.

God bless you. Take care of yourself. | Ever most affectionately CD.

To SIR JAMES EMERSON TENNENT, 14 NOVEMBER 1853

MS Berg Collection. Address: Sir James Emerson Tennent | &c &c &c | Aux soins de | Monsr. R. Lowe, Consul Britannique | Civita Vecchia.

Hotel des Iles Britanniques | Piazza del Popolo, Rome

Monday Fourteenth November 1853.

My Dear Tennent.

As I never made a good bargain in my life—except once when, on going abroad, I let my house on excellent terms to an admirable tenant who never paid anything[†7]—I sent Edward in to the Casa Dies yesterday morning, while I invested the premises from the outside and carefully surveyed them. It is a very clean large bright-looking house at the corner of the Via Gregoriana; not exactly in a part of Rome I should pick out for living in, and on what I should be disposed to call the wrong side of the street. However, this is not to the purpose. Signor Dies has no idea of letting an apartment for a short time—scouted the idea of a month—signified that he could not be brought to the contemplation of two months—was by no means clear that he could come down to the consideration of three. This of course settled the business speedily.

This hotel is no longer kept by the Meloni I spoke of, but is even better kept than in his time, and is a very admirable house. I have engaged a small apartment for you, to be ready on Thursday afternoon.[†1] At two piastres and a half—2 ½ per day—sitting room and three bedrooms; one double-bedded and two not. If you should like to change to ours, which is a very good one, on Friday Morning, you can of course do so. As our Dining room is large, and there is no table d'hote here, I will order dinner in it for our united parties at 6 on Thursday. You will be able to decide how to arrange for the remainder of your stay, after being here and looking about you—two really necessary conditions in Rome.

Pray make my kind regards to Lady Tennent and Miss Tennent, and your good son who became houseless for my sake. Mr. Egg and Mr. Collins desire to be also remembered.

It has been beautiful weather since we left Naples, until today when it rains in a very dogged, sullen, downcast, and determined manner. We have been speculating at breakfast on the possibility of its raining in a similar manner at Naples, and of your wandering about the Hotel refusing consolation.

I grieve to report the Orvieto considerably damaged by the general Vine failure, but still far from despicable. Montefiascone (the Est wine you know) is to be had here; and we have had one bottle in the very finest condition, and one in a second rate state. The Coliseum in its magnificent old decay is as grand as ever—and, with the Electric Telegraph darting through one of its ruined arches like a sunbeam and piercing direct through its cruel old heart, is even grander.

Believe me always | Very faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Sir James Emerson Tennent.

To JOHN TAYLOR SINNETT,[†2] 16 NOVEMBER 1853

Mention in Meridian Bookshop Inc., catalogue No. 48; MS 1 p.; dated 16 Nov 53; addressed John Taylor Sinnett.

Declining an offer for a series of papers.[†3]

To W. H. WILLS, 17 NOVEMBER 1853

Text from MDGH, I, 333-4.

Rome, Thursday Afternoon, Nov. 17th, 1853.

My dear Wills,

Just as I wrote the last words of the enclosed little story for the Christmas number just now, Edward brought in your letter. Also one from Forster (tell him) which I have not yet opened. I will write again—and write to him—from Florence. I am delighted to have news of you.

The enclosed little paper for the Christmas number[†1] is in a character that nobody else is likely to hit, and which is pretty sure to be considered pleasant.[†2] Let Forster have the MS. with the proof, and I know he will correct it to the minutest point. I have a notion of another little story, also for the Christmas number.[†3] If I can do it at Venice, I will, and send it straight on. But it is not easy to work under these circumstances. In travelling we generally get up about three; and in resting we are perpetually roaming about in all manner of places. Not to mention my being laid hold of by all manner of people.

KEEP "HOUSEHOLD WORDS" IMAGINATIVE! is the solemn and continual Conductorial Injunction. Delighted to hear of Mrs. Gaskell's contributions.[†4]

[†a]Yes by all manner of means to Lady Holland.[†5] Will you ask her whether she has Sydney Smith's[†6] letters to me, which I placed (at Mrs. Smith's[†7] request) either in Mrs. Smith's own hands or in Mrs. Austin's?[†8] I cannot remember which, but I think the latter.[†a]

In making up the Christmas number, don't consider my paper or papers, with any reference saving to where they will fall best. I have no liking, in the case, for any particular place.

All perfectly well. Companion moustaches (particularly Egg's) dismal in the extreme. [†a]Kindest regards to Mrs. Wills.[†a]

Ever faithfully.

[CD]

To JOHN FORSTER, [?17-20 NOVEMBER 1853]

Extracts in F, VII, iii, 583-5. Date: probably a two-part letter, sent as one: the main part from Rome, which they left in the early hours of 18 Nov; the last part between Bolsena, where they spent the night of the 18th, and Florence, reached on Sun 20th.

At Rome they found Lockhart,[†1] fearfully weak and broken, yet hopeful of himself too; smoked and drank punch with David Roberts, then painting every day with Louis Haghe[†2] in St. Peter's;[†3] and took the old walks. The Coliseum,[†4] Appian Way, and Streets of Tombs, seemed desolate and grand as ever; but generally I discovered the Roman antiquities to be smaller than my imagination in nine years had made them. The Electric Telegraph now goes like a sunbeam through the cruel old heart of the Coliseum—a suggestive thing to think about, I fancied. The Pantheon I thought even nobler than of yore. At the Opera they were amused by a party of four Americans who sat behind them in the pit. All the seats are numbered arm-chairs, and you buy your number at the pay-place, and go to it with the easiest direction on the ticket itself. We were early, and the four places of the Americans were on the next row behind us—all together. After looking about them for some time, and seeing the greater part of the seats empty (because the audience generally wait in a caffè which is part of the theatre), one of them said "Waal I dunno—I expect we aint no call to set so nigh to one another neither—will you scatter Kernel,[†5] will you scatter sir?"—Upon this the Kernel "scattered" some twenty benches off; and they distributed themselves (for no earthly reason apparently but to get rid of one another) all over the pit. As soon as the overture began, in came the audience in a mass. Then the people who had got the numbers into which they had "scattered," had to get them out; and as they understood nothing that was said to them, and could make no reply but "A-mericani," you may imagine the number of cocked hats it took to dislodge them. At last they were all got back into their right places, except one. About an hour afterwards when Moses (Moses in Egypt[†6] was the opera) was invoking the darkness, and there was a dead silence all over the house, unwonted sounds of disturbance broke out from a distant corner of the pit, and here and there a beard got up to look. "What is it neow sir?" said one of the Americans to another;—"some person seems to be getting along, again streeem." "Waal sir" he replied "I dunno. But I xpect 'tis the Kernel sir, a holdin on." So it was. The Kernel was ignominiously escorted back to his right place, not in the least disconcerted, and in perfectly good spirits and temper. The opera was excellently done, and the price of the stalls one and threepence English. At Milan, on the other hand, the Scala was fallen from its old estate, dirty, gloomy, dull, and the performance execrable. He had heard when first in Genoa that the finest Marionetti were in Rome; and now, after great difficulty, he discovered the company in a sort of stable attached to a decayed palace.[†1] It was a wet night, and there was no audience but a party of French officers and ourselves. We all sat together. I never saw anything more amazing than the performance—altogether only an hour long, but managed by as many as ten people, for we saw them all go behind, at the ringing of a bell. The saving of a young lady by a good fairy from the machinations of an enchanter, coupled with the comic business of her servant Pulcinella (the Roman Punch) formed the plot of the first piece.[†2] A scolding old peasant woman, who always leaned forward to scold and put her hands in the pockets of her apron, was incredibly natural. Pulcinella, so airy, so merry, so lifelike, so graceful, he was irresistible. To see him carrying an umbrella over his mistress's head in a storm, talking to a prodigious giant whom he met in the forest, and going to bed with a pony, were things never to be forgotten. And so delicate are the hands of the people who move them, that every puppet was an Italian, and did exactly what an Italian does. If he pointed at any object, if he saluted anybody, if he laughed, if he cried, he did it as never Englishman did it since Britain first at Heaven's command arose—arose—arose, &c.[†3] There was a ballet afterwards, on the same scale, and we really came away quite enchanted with the delicate drollery of the thing. French officers more than ditto.

I have been led into some curious speculations by the existence and progress of the Malaria about Rome.[†4] Isn't it very extraordinary to think of its encroaching and encroaching on the Eternal City as if it were commissioned to swallow it up? This year it has been extremely bad, and has long outstayed its usual time. Rome has been very unhealthy, and is not free now. Few people care to be out at the bad times of sunset and sunrise, and the streets are like a desert at night. There is a church, a very little way outside the walls, destroyed by fire some 16 or 18 years ago, and now restored and re-created at an enormous expense.[†5] It stands in a wilderness. For any human creature who goes near it, or can sleep near it, after nightfall, it might as well be at the bottom of the uppermost cataract of the Nile.[†6] Along the whole extent of the Pontine Marshes[†7] (which we came across the other day), no creature in Adam's likeness lives, except the sallow people at the lonely posting-stations. I walk out from the Coliseum through the Street of Tombs to the ruins of the old Appian Way—pass no human being, and see no human habitation but ruined houses from which the people have fled, and where it is Death to sleep:[†1] these houses being three miles outside a gate of Rome at its farthest extent. Leaving Rome by the opposite side, we travel for many many hours over the dreary Campagna, shunned and avoided by all but the wretched shepherds. Thirteen hours' good posting brings us to Bolsena (I slept there once before),[†2] on the margin of a stagnant lake whence the workpeople fly as the sun goes down—where it is a risk to go; where from a distance we saw a mist hang on the place; where, in the inconceivably wretched inn,[†3] no window can be opened; where our dinner was a pale ghost of a fish with an oily omelette, and we slept in great mouldering rooms tainted with ruined arches and heaps of dung—and coming from which we saw no colour in the cheek of man, woman, or child for another twenty miles. Imagine this phantom knocking at the gates of Rome; passing them; creeping along the streets; haunting the aisles and pillars of the churches; year by year more encroaching, and more impossible of avoidance.

To CHARLES COOTE, 21 NOVEMBER 1853*

MS Mr Peter Goodricke. Address: Inghilterra. | Charles Coote Esquire | Devonshire House | Piccadilly | London.

Florence, Monday Twenty First November 1853.

My Dear Sir

I hasten to say that I found your letter here this morning, awaiting me; and that I accept the compliment you so kindly propose to confer upon me,[†4] with the greatest readiness and the liveliest pleasure. I will add no more, in order that this may not be delayed.

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Coote Esquire.

To MRS CHARLES DICKENS, 21 [NOVEMBER] 1853

MS British Library. Date: misdated by CD, clearly Nov. Address: Inghilterra | Mrs. Charles Dickens | Tavistock House | Tavistock Square | London. PM 21 Nov Firenze.

Florence, Monday Twenty First December 1853.

My Dearest Catherine. I find no letter from you here, though I find one from Forster dated on the fifteenth. Neither is there any from Georgina. If they don't come to hand by tomorrow, I shall miss them; for, early next morning, we start for Venice. We came here from Siena, last night, after a heavy two days journey post to that place from Rome. We have had three wet days now, in six weeks!

On Friday night we slept at Bolsena—in the house on the shore of a dismal lake, in a densely afflicted Malaria country, where you and I and poor Roche once passed a night.[†1] I never saw such dirt, neglect, and wretchedness, even in Italy. There was nothing to eat in the house but some sour bread, a pale fish, two or three pears, and an Omelette; nothing to drink, but some sour country wine. However, we made a great fire, and strengthened the country wine with some brandy (we always carry brandy) and mulled it with cloves (we always carry cloves), and went to bed, and got up before 5 and breakfasted on our own tea (we always carry tea), and came away in the dark. At Radicofani[†2] where we bought some cold meat for lunch, the same beggars as of old came swooping down the same hill; and the same man who I formerly said was like Samuel Carter Hall, told the same story in the same manner and wouldn't go away. The wind blew in the waste country, as it did—but not quite so hard—on the day when Roche and I hung on to the carriage, to prevent its being blown over. And altogether it was very much like the same day.[†3]

Collins's moustache is gradually developing. You remember how the corners of his mouth go down, and how he looks through his spectacles and manages his legs. I don't know how it is, but the moustache is a horrible aggravation of all this. He smooths it down over his mouth, in imitation of the present great Original, and in all kinds of carriages is continually doing it. Likewise he tells Egg he must "cut it for it gets into his mouth"—and he and Egg compliment each other on that appendage. To make the thing still more ridiculous, Edward, either incited by example or stimulated by failure, is growing a moustache too! The Fine Arts afford a subject which I never approach; always appearing to fall into a profound Reverie when it is discussed. Neither do I ever go into any Gallery with them. To hear Collins learnedly holding forth to Egg (who has as little of that gammon as an artist can have) about reds, and greens, and things "coming well" with other things, and lines being wrong, and lines being right, is far beyond the bounds of all caricature. I shall never forget it. On music too, he is very learned, and sometimes almost drives me into a frenzy by humming and whistling whole Overtures—with not one movement correctly remembered from the beginning to the end. I was obliged to ask him, the day before yesterday, to leave off whistling the Overture to William Tell. "For by Heaven," said I, "there's something the matter with your Ear—I think it must be the cotton—which plays the Devil with the commonest tune." He occasionally expounds a code of morals, taken from modern French Novels, which I instantly and with becoming gravity Smash. But the best of it is, that he tells us about the enormous quantities of Monte Pulciano and what not, that he used to drink when he was last here, and what distinguished people said to him in the way of taking his opinion, and what advice he gave them and so forth—being then exactly Thirteen years of age.[†4] On this head, Egg is always very good, and makes me laugh heartily.

All these absurdities are innocent enough. I tell them in default of having anything else to tell. We are all the best friends, and have never had the least difference.

I saw Lockhart in Rome, who was extremely glad to see me. He is fearfully changed, even from the depths of his changed state—is hollow and yellow—decrepid and scant of breath. They say he is low about himself, but he was cheerful to me, and said he was "beginning to get better." I doubt his ever rallying. Davy Roberts was painting in St. Peters with Louis Haghe. He had not been very well internally, and was anxious that Mrs. Bicknell should know I had seen him, thoroughly set up. I wish you would drive out there one day,[†1] and tell her that he smoked his cigar and drank his punch with us, last Thursday evening. He was the very picture of robustness and joviality, and never left off talking from the moment of his coming in to his going away again. Here we are at the Gran Bretagna—almost opposite to the house we stayed at—on the other side of the Arno. It is a very fine and large hotel. Extremely clean and comfortable. We have an elegant apartment on the second floor. The only drawback is, that an aspiring young lady with a voice, begins to practise her scales at the foot of my bed, at a quarter before 8. All the time I was washing and dressing this morning, she made my very tooth brushes vibrate.

Having had a request to that effect from Lady John,[†2] I am going to call on Lord Minto.[†3] I suppose I must also do the attentive to Mrs. Trollope.[†4] And at Landor's[†5] I must call, on the old man's account.[†6] I forget whether I told you that I found time at Rome to do a little story for the Xmas No. and that I have another in my mind, which I hope to do at Venice. Further, I forget whether I told you that we don't return by Genoa, but by Turin, as on the whole the shortest way. It is getting cold now, which is a great comfort. It was far too hot at Naples.

The Tennents were to have dined with us at Rome on Thursday, and we waited half an hour for them—but they were detained (I suppose) at Civita Vecchia, for they did not appear before we left. Give my best love to Georgy, and tell her that if letters from you should come tomorrow, I will then write to her. From which you will both know that I received them. I have now heard twice from Forster. He complains of Wills as not consulting him enough, and is evidently very sore in that connexion. Wills seems to be blundering, so far as his correspondence is concerned; for he tells me nothing of Household Words, its contents, the state of the accounts on the Audit Day, or anything else that I naturally want to know.

My love to Mamey, Katey, Sydney, Harry, and the Plornishghenter—all of them, with you, I hope to see now within three weeks. At Turin I shall hear from Charley where he joins me. I will write on to him before I come up with him, wherever that is.

I have a long business letter to write to Wills, and must therefore leave off. Ever most affectionately CD.

You are at Bonchurch now, I suppose. But I can't understand why your letters should be late, for all that. A capital opera at Rome, and the finest of Marionetti. French officers and soldiers all over Rome of course. And very strange they look there.—

To W. H. WILLS, 21 NOVEMBER 1853

Text from MDGH, I, 334-7.

Florence, Monday, Nov. 21st, 1853.

My dear Wills,

H. W.

I sent you by post from Rome, on Wednesday last, a little story for the Christmas number, called "The Schoolboy's Story." I have an idea of another short one, to be called "Nobody's Story," which I hope to be able to do at Venice, and to send you straight home before this month is out. I trust you have received the first safely.

Edward continues to do extremely well. He is always, early and late, what you have seen him. He is a very steady fellow, a little too bashful for a courier even; settles prices of everything now, as soon as we come into an hotel; and improves fast. His knowledge of Italian is painfully defective, and, in the midst of a howling crowd at a post-house or railway station, this deficiency perfectly stuns him. I was obliged last night to get out of the carriage, and pluck him from a crowd of porters who were putting our baggage into wrong conveyances—by cursing and ordering about in all directions. I should think about ten substantives, the names of ten common objects, form his whole Italian stock. It matters very little at the hotels, where a great deal of French is spoken now; but, on the road, if none of his party knew Italian, it would be a very serious inconvenience indeed.

Will you write to Ryland if you have not heard from him, and ask him what the Birmingham reading-nights are really to be?[†1] For it is ridiculous enough that I positively don't know. Can't a Saturday Night in a Truck District, or a Sunday Morning among the Ironworkers (a fine subject) be knocked out in the course of the same visit?[†2]

If you should see any managing man you know in the Oriental and Peninsular Company, I wish you would very gravely mention to him from me that if they are not careful what they are about with their steamship Valetta, between Marseilles and Naples, they will suddenly find that they will receive a blow one fine day in The Times, which it will be a very hard matter for them ever to recover. When I sailed in her from Genoa, there had been taken on board, with no caution in most cases from the agent, or hint of discomfort, at least forty people of both sexes for whom there was no room whatever. I am a pretty old traveller as you know, but I never saw anything like the manner in which pretty women were compelled to lie among the men in the great cabin and on the bare decks. The good humour was beyond all praise, but the natural indignation very great; and I was repeatedly urged to stand up for the public in "Household Words," and to write a plain description of the facts to The Times.[†1] If I had done either, and merely mentioned that all these people paid heavy first-class fares, I will answer for it that they would have been beaten off the station in a couple of months. I did neither, because I was the best of friends with the captain and all the officers, and never saw such a fine set of men; so admirable in the discharge of their duty, and so zealous to do their best by everybody. It is impossible to praise them too highly. But there is a strong desire at all the ports along the coast to throw impediments in the way of the English service, and to favour the French and Italian boats. In those boats (which I know very well) great care is taken of the passengers, and the accommodation is very good. If the Peninsula and Oriental add to all this the risk of such an exposure as they are certain to get (if they go on so) in The Times, they are dead sure to get a blow from the public which will make them stagger again. I say nothing of the number of the passengers and the room in the ship's boats, though the frightful consideration the contrast presented must have been in more minds than mine. I speak only of the taking people for whom there is no sort of accommodation as the most decided swindle, and the coolest, I ever did with my eyes behold.

Kindest regards from fellow-travellers.

Ever, my dear Wills, faithfully yours

[CD]

To EMILE DE LA RUE, 25 NOVEMBER 1853*

MS Berg Collection.

Venice, Friday Twenty Fifth November 1853.

My Dear De la Rue.

I had no idea of writing to you again until I reached Parma; but I want to draw on my bankers, Coutts's, at Turin for a hundred pounds; and it occurs to me that as I may have to wait on your business-correspondent there to pay the Courier's charges for places, I had best draw through them—if you will inform them previously that they will not be ruined by the transaction.

I have no letter of credit with me, for I brought only circular notes[†2]—which have run out faster than I expected, as I have made a few purchases. Nor could I get a letter of credit forwarded to Turin, according to my calculations of time and distance, sufficiently soon to be of use. Therefore I want your banking-recommendation. Will you kindly tell me, in a line addressed Poste Restante Turin, how I shall proceed, to get the sum I have mentioned there?

All this I ask you, as we have the other mighty transaction concerning the places, or of course I should have written to Gibbs for the money,—he being Coutts's regular correspondent. Pray tell him so when you see him, with my heartiest regards to him and kindest remembrances to Mrs. Gibbs. Mr. Egg and Mr. Collins join in both.

I am giving you so much trouble that I am afraid your optic nerve—or shall I call it Visual Ray?[†1]—will begin to be fatigued by the sight of my handwriting. But you cannot give me a greater pleasure than by "troubling" me in return, if I can ever be useful to you in the little town in which I reside.

We have got on admirably in our tour, and have had but two wet days since we left dear old Genoa. On the other side, I send a small packet of trouble for Madame De la Rue.[†2] How I wish I were coming back by Genoa, to see you both again! But perhaps we may meet in England before long.

My companions entertain the liveliest and pleasantest recollections of the happy hours they passed in your society, and unite in the warmest remembrance[s] to you and Madame De la Rue, as well as Mr. and Mrs. Gibbs.

My Dear De la Rue | Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To CHARLES DICKENS JNR, 25 NOVEMBER 1853*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: Charles Dickens Esqre. Junior | Bei Professor Dr. O. C. Müller | 6 Tauchaer Strasse. | Leipzig. | (2. Treppen Hoch).[†3]

Venice, Friday Twenty Fifth November, 1853.

My Dear Charley.

I write shortly and hastily, not to lose a post. I found your letter here, this morning.

I think you decide quite right, in naming Paris as our meeting place. I apprehend (being now more able to calculate times and distances as I get nearer the places) that I shall not reach Paris before the 9th. or 10th. of December. But I shall come straight through from Lyons (probably waiting only a few hours in Paris) and will not lose an available hour, between Turin and that place.

It appears to me that the best thing you can do will be, not to go to the Hotel Brighton at all, but to sleep at some decent Hotel—or take your bedroom therein—where there is a good table d'hôte, and then go and see Miss Coutts at the Hotel Bristol in the Place Vendômme.[†4] She will take care of you for the rest of your time, I have no doubt.

I will write to you, from Chambertin or Lyons, addressed to her care as soon as I know by what Train I shall come; so that if it arrive in the daytime you may meet me. Supposing (which is not at all likely; for she writes me I shall be sure to find her there) Miss Coutts should have left Paris, explain about your letter to the Manager of the Hotel Bristol, and you will be sure to get it and to meet with all help and attention. If—observe this—if I dont find you at the Railway Terminus on my arrival, I will drive to the Hotel Bristol and ask where you are to be found.

I have not seen a paper for ages, and know none of the news you tell me about. Frank and Alfred will come home on the 23rd. We shall be too soon for them.

Ever Most affecy

CD.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 25 NOVEMBER 1853

MS Berg Collection. Address: Inghilterra. | Miss Hogarth | Tavistock House | Tavistock Square | London.

Venice, Friday Twenty Fifth November 1853.

My Dearest Georgy.[†a] I received your capital letter just now on sending to the Post Office, and read it with the greatest pleasure. I think you will not find that I shall neglect anything you "leave" for me to do and see when I come home!

Kate's letter, written and posted at Bonchurch at the same time, I received with yours. But the missing letter addressed to Florence has not yet come to hand. Tell her with my best love that I therefore defer writing to her, until tomorrow, in the hope that I may then be able to say I have received it. I left instructions at the Hotel that it should be applied for again after the next post came in, and forwarded here. It could hardly have been here this morning, as we left before the Courier and travelled as fast.[†a]

We found an English carriage from Padua at Florence, and hired it to bring it back again. We travelled post with four horses all the way (from Padua to this place there is a Railroad) and travelled all night. We left Florence at half past 6 in the morning, and got to Padua at eleven next day—yesterday. The cold at night was most intense. I don't think I have ever felt it colder. But our carriage was very comfortable, and we had some wine and some rum to keep us warm. We came by Bologna (where we had tea) and Ferrara.[†1] You may imagine the delays in the night when I tell you that each of our passports, after receiving 6 Visés at Florence, received, in the course of the one night, Nine More, every one of which was written and sealed; somebody being slowly knocked out of bed to do it every time! It really was excruciating.

Landor had sent me a letter to his son, and on the day before we left Florence I thought I would go out to Fiesoli[†2] and leave it, so I got a little onehorse open carriage and drove off alone. We were within half a mile of the Villa Landora and were driving down a very narrow lane, like one of those at Albaro, when I saw an elderly lady coming towards us, very well dressed in Silk of the Queen's blue, and walking freshly and briskly against the wind at a good round pace. It was a bright, cloudless, very cold day; and I thought she walked with great spirit, as if she enjoyed it. I also thought (perhaps that was having him in my mind) that her ruddy face was shaped like Landor's. All of a sudden the coachman pulls up, and looks enquiringly at me. "What's the matter?" says I. "Ecco la Signora Landora!"[†3] says he. "For the love of Heaven, don't stop!" says I. "I don't know her—I am only going to the house to leave a letter—Go on!" Meanwhile she (still coming on) looked at me, and I looked at her, and we were both a good deal confused, and so went our several ways. Altogether, I think it was as disconcerting a meeting as I ever took part in, and as odd a one.[†1] Under any other circumstances I should have introduced myself, but the Separation made the circumstances so peculiar that I "didn't like".

The Plornishghenter is evidently the greatest, noblest, finest, cleverest, brightest, and most brilliant of boys. Your account of him is most delightful, and I hope to find another letter from you somewhere on the road, making me informed of his demeanour on your return. On which occasion, as on every other, I have no doubt he will have distinguished himself as an irresistibly attracting, captivating, May-Roon-Ti-Goon-Ter. Give him a good many kisses for me. I quite agree with Syd[†2] as to his ideas of paying attention to the old gentleman.[†3] H.[†4] not bad, but deficient in originality. The usual deficiency of an inferior intellect with so great a model before him. I am very curious to see whether the Plorn remembers me on my reappearance.

[†a]A very good thing in two letters received from Wills and Forster at Rome. Forster tells me on the one hand how he has an account to give me of Wills and Miss Martineau together which will entertain me for evermore; and Wills writes that Forster with Miss Martineau was grand beyond description.[†5] Each so gloriously innocent of what the other writes.[†a]

I meant to have gone to work this morning and to have tried a second little story for the Xmas No. of Household Words, but my letters have (most pleasantly) put me out, and I defer all such wise efforts until tomorrow. Egg and Collins are out in a Gondola with a Servitore di Piazza; [†a]where, I have no doubt, Collins, unchecked by inattention and reveries on the part of the Inimitable, will deliver an entire course of Lectures on Art. He gave us by the bye, in a Carriage one day, a full account of his first love adventure. It was at Rome it seemed, and proceeded, if I may be allowed the expression, to the utmost extremities—he came out quite a pagan Jupiter in the business. Egg and I made a calculation afterwards, and found that at this precocious passage in his history, he was twelve years and some odd months old.[†a]

You will find this but a stupid letter, but I really have no news. We go to the Opera wherever there is one,[†6] see sights, eat and drink, sleep in a natural manner two or three nights, and move on again. Edward was a little crushed at Padua yesterday. He had been extraordinarily cold all night in the Rumble, and had got out our clothes to dress, and I think must have been projecting a five or six hours sleep, when I announced that he was to come on here in an hour and a half to get the rooms and order dinner. He fell into a sudden despondency of the profoundest kind, but was quite restored when we arrived here between 8 and 9. We found him waiting at the Custom House with a gondola, in his usual brisk condition.

It is extraordinary how few English we see. With the exception of a gentlemanly young fellow (in a consumption I am afraid) married to the tiniest little girl in a brown straw hat, and travelling with his sister and her sister—and a consumptive single lady travelling with a maid and a Scotch Terrier christened Trotty Veck—we have scarcely seen any, and have certainly spoken to none, since we left Switzerland. These were aboard the Valetta, where the Captain and I indulged in all manner of insane suppositions concerning the straw hat—The Little Matron we called her; by which name she soon became known all over the ship. The day we entered Rome, and the moment we entered it, there was the Little Matron, alone with Antiquity—and Murray—on the wall. The very first church I entered, there was the Little Matron. On the last afternoon, when I went alone to St. Peters, there was the Little Matron and her party. The best of it, is, that I was extremely intimate with them, invited them to Tavistock House when they come home in the Spring, and have not the faintest idea of their name.

There was no table d'hote at Rome, or at Florence; but there is one here and we dine at it to day, so perhaps we may stumble upon somebody. I have heard from Charley this morning who appoints (wisely) Paris as our place of meeting. I had a letter from Coote at Florence, informing me that his Volume of "Household Songs" was ready, and requesting permission to dedicate it to me. Which of course I gave.

I am beginning to think of the Birmingham readings. I suppose you won't object to be taken to hear them? This is the last place at which we shall make a stay of more than one day. We shall stay at Parma one, and at Turin one [†b](supposing De la Rue to have been successful in taking places with the Courier into France for the day on which we want them; [†c]he was to write to bankers at Turin to do it)[†b†c] and then we shall come hard and fast home. I feel almost there already, and shall be delighted to close the pleasant trip and get back to my own Piccola Camera—if, being English, you understand what that is!

[†a]I am afraid you must have been fishing for a compliment when you talk about the postage of your letters; so I shall punish you by saying that indeed it does come heavy and that I would propose, if you see no objection, to make your mind easy on that score by stopping it out of your quarter.—Due I suppose—by the bye?

I cannot remember what Egg (to whom I will give your message when he comes back presently) called a Bird yesterday, in his second or third endeavour to explode a Substantive on a waiter. But it was something compounded of English and French with an Italian termination—something like Birdoisella. I never in my life saw any one naturally so slow to learn. He speaks of it himself as being something quite remarkable. He understands much more than you would suppose of what is said, but it is such a painful effort to him to acquire anything, although I have really taken pains to explain it with the greatest clearness and patience, that I doubt if he understands now, in the least, about the Verb "To be" being conjugated with itself instead of with the Verb "To have". Collins perpetually breaks into French (though sagacious in the last degree about Italy, Italian, and the Italians), and takes that tongue under his particular protection. He is much troubled with a "tightness" in his inside, and is always reporting on its condition to us.[†a]

[†b]My best loves and kisses to Mamey, Katey, Sydney, Harry, and the noble Plorn.

Last, not least, to yourself—and many of them.[†b] I will not wait over tomorrow, tell Kate, for her letter; but will write then, whether or no. Ever My Dearest Georgy

Most affectionately Yours

CD.

[†a]P.S. I have thought a good deal about Christiana, whom you mention. Her excitability and restlessness are a positive disease.—In defending her painting to me against the charges of Mrs. Brown,[†1] she said—so fast, that she seemed to leave out all small words—"Assure you Mr. Dickens—shall see my pictures yet—in Exhibition in London Royal Academy.—Play great deal better since painted than ever did—positively great deal better. Painting's poetry and Music's poetry, and poetry breaking out of a person in one, breaks out in the other—naturally—must be so!" Gibbs shewed me a letter he had received a few weeks before from Thompson; introducing it in a speech half an hour long, of which I understood nothing but that the desire of his life—and one thing and another, you understand—(there he put his finger against the side of his nose) was to live in peace; and that if you took him as you found him, well and good; and that if you didn't—bene—siamo due![†2] The said letter referred to some "misunderstanding", arising out of Thompson's son in law[†3] having made observations to Madame Somebody, on the subject of his nose: implying in a general way that it was long enough for Mrs. Thompson to lead him by it—which she did. It was a prodigious letter, of four close sides of paper. Gibbs had endorsed it outside, in a neat round business hand.

"Twaddle! Twaddle!! Twaddle!!!"

This had evidently relieved his mind, immensely.[†a]

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 27 NOVEMBER 1853

MS Mr Roger W. Barrett.

Venice. Sunday Twenty Seventh November, 1853.

My Dear Miss Coutts. I had a letter from Charley yesterday, in which he wisely elected to meet me at Paris. As I think he may be there, one or two days before me—my day will be, as well as I can calculate, either the 9th. or the 10th. of December—I have told him where you are, and as soon as he has housed himself he will call on you. I have also told him that I will try and write him a letter from Lyons, letting him know by what train I shall come into Paris, in order that he may meet me at the Railroad, if I do not arrive in the night. The said letter I will address to him with your permission—I mean without it—to your care. And if I should by any means miss him at the Railway, I will come to the Hotel Bristol to ask where he is. I suppose we may stay one night in Paris, but that will depend on our not having been previously detained on the road. For they will be anxiously expecting me at home, and I shall want to get quietly into my own room for a few days, with a view to my Birmingham Readings. Seeing that I have, for such a purpose, left the little books some years behind.

We have now had three days rain in two months. It is very cold, but very fine. We posted from Florence to Padua, to take the Railroad for this place, and travelled all night, to get an extra day here. It was most severely cold. Our passports had had, each, six bran new Visés at Florence. In the course of that one night they had, each, Nine more[†1]—written, and stamped, and sanded, and blotted, and blurred, with every conceivable description of utterly illegible formality. Every time, some drawbridge had to be let down, and somebody had to be knocked up. So that I really did at last begin (though the sweetest of travellers) to think it was a little overdone. Again I must say of the Austrian Frontier, and of the arrangements here, that we experienced greater politeness than in any other part of Italy; the duty strictly done, but the doers of it, being treated like gentlemen, invariably responsive, explanatory, and courteous.

For our prodigious sojourn of four days we have established a highly imposing Gondola, rowed by two men in a modestly alarming livery, who are very strict in observing all the old stately forms. Last night we proceeded to the Opera[†2] in our gallant bark, with an enormous—Christmas Pantomimic—lantern in the prow. When we landed, the chief of our two Gondolieri went before, with this terrible machine, and lighted us—not only up to the Theatre door, but up the Staircase, through[†3] the brilliantly lighted passages (where the lantern became a mere twinkle) and into the box. I don't know that I ever in my life felt more absurd, and I certainly was never so anxious to shave anybody as I was to shave my two companions: whose moustaches, being in their feeble infancy, did not at all accord with the magnificence of this triumphal entry. What I suffered all night, from the fell misgiving that the lantern would reappear, or what temptations were upon me to drop into the pit, I will not wring your heart by describing. But at the end of the ballet, when there was still another act of the Opera to come, I opened the box door a very little way, and peeped out—with the intention of sneaking away if the coast were clear. The instant I looked into the passage, the lantern—beaming and radiant—burst out of a corner and blazed into the box again! There was nothing for it but to go back in the same State. I saw nobody laugh; which was my only comfort.

Everything here and elsewhere, of the beautiful kind, looks as I left it nine years ago. Except that I found the old ruins of Rome (the Coliseum excepted) smaller than my imagination had made them in that space of time. I went to see Lockhart at Rome, where, as perhaps you know, he is passing the winter. He is dreadfully changed, even in his changed state, and I should think his recovery very very doubtful. Yet he was cheerful about himself too, after we had walked to and fro in the sunlight a little while, and spoke of himself as "going to be better."

I am sorry to see that there have been some disturbances in Lancashire, arising out of the unhappy strikes. I read in an Italian paper last night, that there had been symptoms of rioting at Blackburn. The account stated that the workers of that place, supposing some of the obnoxious manufacturers of Preston to be secreted "nel palazzo Bull" assembled before that Palazzo, and demanded to have them produced; and that thereupon, "La Signora Lawson,[†4] padrona del palazzo Bull", appeared at a window and assured the crowd that they were not within. I suppose the Palazzo Bull to be the Bull Hotel, but the paragraph gave no hint of such a thing.[†1]

(I wish you would come to Birmingham and see those working people on the night when I have so many of them together.[†2] I have never seen them collected in any number in that place, without extraordinary pleasure—even when they have been agitated by political events).

Among the vast multitude of beggars we have seen, there came up one, at nightfall—at a poor little place on the Roman side of Siena—carrying another, a disabled youth—and very heavy—on his back. After begging in the usual manner, and with great volubility for some time, and getting nothing (nobody having any small money of the country) he suddenly jerked his burden into a dirty little doorway, and walked off. The burden tumbled down like a sack of flour, and lay there, apparently quite used to it. I suppose he is picked up whenever a carriage is seen coming, and thrown away when there is nothing going on. Another beggar at the same place persisted so long (we were Waiting for horses) that I remonstrated, and said "My good man I have told you twenty times that I have no little money. Why do you take so much trouble in vain? Why don't you go home and get to bed?"—"Sir", said he, "I'll give you change"—"Well, but if you can give me change, you can't be very poor."—"O yes I am. I have not eaten for five days"—"And still got change in your pocket?"—"Truly yes, what is a man to do? I must keep change, for English travellers. English travellers are my only property, and they never have change."

Although the Grand Canal is undeniably romantic, and the window at which I am writing (close to the Piazza of St. Mark) has a noble view of it, my feet are so intensely cold that I must take them to the fire. The unromantic wind is blowing from the East, and, there being a crack in the wooden part of the balcony casement (prodigiously picturesque from the outside) through which I can see the whole of the Trieste Steamboat with a very dirty Turk on board, I am, fortunately for my "gentle reader", prevented from going on into another sheet. Which I had had serious intentions of doing.

My kind regards to Mr. Brown, and to O. Pray mention to the latter that I am collecting some materials for a pitched battle with her on my return. I expect to be dreadfully puzzled by some of your specimens of the curious game[†3] when I am so happy as to see you all again.

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS CHARLES DICKENS, 27 NOVEMBER 1853

MS British Library.

Venice. Sunday Twenty Seventh November 1853.

My Dearest Catherine. Again no news whatever of your missing letter, though this day's post brings me one from Forster. I thought, on reconsideration I would wait over yesterday, on the chance of its arriving today. But nothing can be heard of it, and I suppose I may now give it up for lost.

I have no news to tell, in addition to what I have already told Georgina. We are rather grand here—our sitting room is the room I had, nine years ago;[†1] and looking at its spacious proportions now, I can hardly imagine how I ever occupied it alone—and are very tidy and comfortable. We tried the table d'hote (with one young English ass, and a french lady and gentleman) but found it so poor that we now dine in our own apartment. We keep a Gondola of our own, and a very swell turn out it is, with two Gondolieri in very neat livery.[†2] Among the other old customs that belong to private Gondolas, is the usage that when you go to the play, the chief of your two Gondolieri lights you up to your box with an enormous lantern. Last night we were at the Opera, and this ceremony was observed with great state, through brilliantly lighted passages, where the lantern, big as it was, became a mere twinkle. Imagine the procession—led by Collins with incipient moustache, spectacles, slender legs, and extremely dirty dress gloves—Egg second, in a white hat, and a straggly mean little black beard—Inimitable bringing up the rear, in full dress and big sleeved great coat, rather considerably ashamed. There was a very fair opera and a capital ballet. We had taken beforehand the best box on the first tier in the centre of the house. The whole damage was about seven and sixpence English. This was at the second Theatre. Tonight, we are going to the first and largest—though it is Sunday.

We still see no English, and in short no anybody except the people of the place—which denomination comprises, here, all the seagoing peoples of the earth. They told us to day in the Doge's Palace that there was an English Artist copying one of the Pictures—Il Signor Artink. After much consideration we think it must be the Signor Harding,[†3] a water-color painter.

We resort of a night to the Caffé Florien[†4] on the Piazza of St. Mark, which is said to have been open all night for I don't know how many years. There, we temperately drink punch before coming home to bed. I have done (finished yesterday) the second little paper for the Christmas No., which I immediately posted to Wills. I hope he will receive them both, safely. Imagine this:—I have now been two months away, and I have not received the least account of one single paper that has been put into Household Words, except a vague allusion to a story of Mrs. Gaskell's. Nor have I the least idea of anything that was developed at the Audit Meeting—of the state of the accounts—of the reported condition of H. W.—of the sum placed to my credit—or anything else. I know just as little on all these heads, as Egg or Collins.

From what Georgina says, and from what Forster indicates that he supposes you to have told me, I infer that your stay at Bonchurch was sufficiently disagreeable. But you know my old principle; that there are very few people indeed, in whose house it will ever do to stay. Such social confidence requires in the hosts, ease, tact, good humour, liveliness, and above all hospitality and generosity.—I am afraid the last is hardly as general a quality as I once hoped and believed it to be. I am quite certain it is not to be found under White's waistcoat, and I wonder you ever went there.

It is the drollest thing in the world to see Egg and Collins burst out into economy—always on some wretched little point, and always on a point they had previously settled the other way. For example. This morning at breakfast, they settled that there was no need for them to have the Servitore di Piazza today. I waited until the discussion was over, and then said "But when we met at dinner yesterday, you told me you had engaged him."—"O yes, so we did—almost—but we don't want him and it will be all the same." It is then eleven o'Clock. Downstairs we all go. In the hall, is the Servitore. To whom Collins—in Italian, of which Georgy will give you an adequate idea—expounds that they don't want him. Thereupon he respectfully explains that he was told to come, has lost his day, and has been waiting an hour. Upon that, they are of course obliged to take him; and the only result of the great effort is (as it always is) that it has been a profoundly mean, and utterly fruitless, attempt at evasion. We brought some good tea with us from Genoa, and if you could have seen them, when it was first going to be used, devising how a teapot and boiling water were to be got from the Hotel for nothing, you would never have forgotten it. Of course I clinched the matter very speedily by ordering tea for one (tenpence in price) which we didn't use. Egg is always reasonable on all such points if he is spoken to, seriously. And he is a good little fellow. But there is a ridiculous contrast sometimes between their determination to have good things and their tremendous readiness to complain—and their slight reluctance in paying afterwards.

I saw by an Italian paper last night that there had recently been some threatening demonstrations in connexion with the Strikes, at Blackburn in Lancashire. The paragraph mentioned that the operatives of Blackburn supposed some of the obnoxious Preston manufacturers to be housed "in the Palazzo Bull," and that it became necessary for "La Signora Lawson, padrona of the Palazzo Bull" to appear at a window, and assure them it was not the case. I suppose the Palazzo Bull to be the Bull Hotel, but there was no hint of such a thing in the newspaper.

You were "quite right" in your reply to the Lawrences[†1] at Birmingham. This mention of whom, reminds me that I don't even know what the nights are on which I am to read! I have been turning over in my mind for some time, an improvement in the Study, which I wish you would have completed at once.

A covering for the mantelpiece—covered shelf you know, like that in the drawing room, and a trifle broader than the mantelpiece now is—of green velvet, about the color of the green leather to the bookcase, or a trifle darker if necessary—with a green fringe intermingled with red. The form of the fringe to be, in little, something of the shape of the cornice-fringe of the curtains—so as to carry that idea, through. The green should be of a tint that will carry through both the bookcase green and the carpet green—generally—so that the greens will all tone in. Get an estimate from Shoolbreds,[†1] and then have it made and put up. The glass will have to be raised, you know, and put upon the shelf—as in the drawing room.

I will write again (shortly probably) from Turin, before we start for France and England. And if our quick rate of travel home will enable me to write from Lyons or from Paris, I will try to tell you, after seeing Bradshaw, on what day and hour to send the little carriage for Charley and me to the Dover Railway.—You don't say by the bye that you have bought the Plornishghenter's donkey and pannier.

To which glorious and noble youth, my love and a kiss. Also to Georgy, and to Mamey and Katey. Further to Sydney and Henry. Last but not least to yourself. Whom I hope so soon to see in a blooming state. Ever most affectionately CD

To JOHN FORSTER, [28 NOVEMBER 1853]

Extract in F, VII, iii, 585-7. Date: 28 Nov, according to Forster.

The fine weather has accompanied us here, the place of all others where it is necessary, and the city has been a blaze of sunlight and blue sky (with an extremely clear cold air) ever since we have been in it. If you could see it at this moment you would never forget it. We live in the same house that I lived in nine years ago, and have the same sitting-room—close to the Bridge of Sighs and the Palace of the Doges. The room is at the corner of the house, and there is a narrow street of water running round the side: so that we have the Grand Canal before the two front windows, and this wild little street at the corner window; into which, too, our three bedrooms look. We established a gondola as soon as we arrived, and we slide out of the hall on to the water twenty times a day. The gondoliers have queer old customs that belong to their class, and some are sufficiently disconcerting.... It is a point of honour with them, while they are engaged, to be always at your disposal. Hence it is no use telling them they may go home for an hour or two—for they won't go. They roll themselves in shaggy capuccins, great coats with hoods, and lie down on the stone or marble pavement until they are wanted again. So that when I come in or go out, on foot—which can be done from this house for some miles, over little bridges and by narrow ways—I usually walk over the principal of my vassals, whose custom it is to snore immediately across the doorway. Conceive the oddity of the most familiar things in this place, from one instance: Last night we go downstairs at half-past eight, step into the gondola, slide away on the black water, ripple and plash swiftly along for a mile or two, land at a broad flight of steps, and instantly walk into the most brilliant and beautiful theatre conceivable—all silver and blue, and precious little fringes made of glittering prisms of glass. There we sit until half-past eleven, come out again (gondolier asleep outside the box-door), and in a moment are on the black silent water, floating away as if there were no dry building in the world.

It stops, and in a moment we are out again, upon the broad solid Piazza of St. Mark, brilliantly lighted with gas, very like the Palais Royal at Paris, only far more handsome, and shining with no end of caffès. The two old pillars and the enormous bell-tower are as gruff and solid against the exquisite starlight as if they were a thousand miles from the sea or any undermining water; and the front of the cathedral, overlaid with golden mosaics and beautiful colours, is like a thousand rainbows even in the night.

I am more than ever confirmed in my conviction that one of the great uses of travelling is to encourage a man to think for himself, to be bold enough always to declare without offence that he does think for himself, and to overcome the villainous meanness of professing what other people have professed when he knows (if he has capacity to originate an opinion) that his profession is untrue. The intolerable nonsense against which genteel taste and subserviency are afraid to rise, in connection with art, is astounding. Egg's honest amazement and consternation when he saw some of the most trumpeted things was what the Americans call a "caution." In the very same hour and minute there were scores of people falling into conventional raptures with that very poor Apollo,[†1] and passing over the most beautiful little figures and heads in the whole Vatican because they were not expressly set up to be worshipped. So in this place. There are pictures by Tintoretto in Venice, more delightful and masterly than it is possible sufficiently to express. His Assembly of the Blest[†2] I do believe to be, take it all in all, the most wonderful and charming picture ever painted. Your guide-book writer, representing the general swarming of humbugs, rather patronises Tintoretto as a man of some sort of merit; and (bound to follow Eustace,[†3] Forsyth,[†4] and all the rest of them) directs you, on pain of being broke for want of gentility in appreciation, to go into ecstacies with things that have neither imagination, nature, proportion, possibility, nor anything else in them. You immediately obey, and tell your son to obey. He tells his son, and he tells his, and so the world gets at three-fourths of its frauds and miseries.

December

To EMILE DE LA RUE, 1 DECEMBER 1853*

MS Berg Collection.

Parma, Thursday First December 1853.

My Dear De la Rue

I found a capital letter from Gibbs on sending to the post office here this morning

(I will write to him from home), but, in lieu of your familiar characters, received a portentous looking document in print, informing me that a letter from Genoa was stopped on the frontier in consequence of not being prepaid, and that on my paying certain Centimes I could have it where I chose. I chose Turin, and wrote an instruction for it to be forwarded to the Poste Restante there. I hope to be at the Hotel de l'Europe, Turin, about mid day on Sunday.

Consequently, I know nothing yet about the places taken with the Courier, and am rapidly getting grey from anxiety! As you would expect to hear from me here, I write these hasty lines to let you know what has come to pass, and to say that I am going on, expectant (and grey) to Turin. My V. R.[†1] has been fearfully disappointed in not seeing that elegantly small caligraphy which I know so well.

I forgot to tell you that a few hands have imitated our pious example, and cast stones on the grave of the poor Pilgrim Countess.[†2] But it is forlorn and wild and weedy, and the transverse part of the little black cross is broken away.

My love to Madame De la Rue.

Ever Faithfully Yours My Dear De la Rue
CHARLES DICKENS

PS I find I shall be at Turin, most probably on Saturday about mid-day. I supposed Sunday, but since writing the above, think we shall be four and twenty hours earlier.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 4 DECEMBER 1853

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Hotel Bristol | Paris.

Hotel de l'Europe,[†3] Turin | Sunday Fourth December 1853.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I found your kind letter awaiting me at the Post Office here; on my arrival yesterday evening. Through the kindness of a Genoese friend, I had beforehand engaged the Courier over the Mont Cenis to Lyons,[†4] for Tuesday the 6th. and I hope this will so bring us to Paris as now to enable me to propose to dine with you on Saturday next. My fellow travellers beg me to thank you for your remembrance of them, and to assure you of the gratification with which they respond to it.

I have another favor to ask of you. It is, that you will allow one of your servants to engage an apartment at an hotel, to be ready for us on our arrival. We want an apartment of four bedrooms (Charley's included) and sitting room. As we shall probably leave Paris on Sunday morning, and as I suppose it to be still very full, it will be a great comfort not to have to drive here and there, seeking a shelter. The difficulty is, that, there being no information here concerning the boats up the Saone,[†5] or the Railway from Chalons[†5] to Paris, I do not know whether we shall arrive in Paris on the Friday, or on the Saturday morning; but it would be best, perhaps, to take it for granted that Friday will be the day. I was once at the Hotel Bristol, en garçon,[†1] and remember some very good bachelor-apartments looking on the Rue St. Honoré. Perhaps one of them might be vacant for our purpose. Any way, we will drive to the Hotel Bristol, and I will send my servant in, to ask for yours. From whom we shall know our destiny.

I write in haste, for I understand that the Post goes out rather early. My love to O, and kindest regards to Mr. Brown. Mr. Egg and Mr. Collins desire their best compliments.

I find little letters here from Mamey and Katie, in which they describe The Baby as being now—but I, of all people, should not rend your feelings, so I say no more.

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

P.S. If, in our fast travelling, I have time to anticipate myself by the post, I will still write to Charley, naming the train by which we come; and will address the letter to your care.

To EMILE DE LA RUE, 4 DECEMBER 1853*

MS Berg Collection. Address: À Monsieur: | Monsr. Emile De la Rue | Messrs. De La Rue Freres | Genova.

Hotel de l'Europe, Turin | Sunday Fourth December 1853.

My Dear De la Rue.

This morning before I was up, I received your welcome letter dated yesterday at 2 o'Clock. And while I was at breakfast, there were brought to me from the Post Office your other welcome letter dated "Genoa 2 X"—(Good Heaven how I wonder what that means![†2]) and the cruising letter which ought to have come to Parma and never did. The consequence of which combination of pleasure, is, that my hair is already beginning to recover its usual tone, and that I beam like the morning.

A thousand hanks for all the trouble you have so kindly taken. Everything is exactly as I could have wished it to be if I had been the possessor of Fortunatus's wishing-cap.[†3] Everything homeward is made perfectly easy to me, and I have the gratification (at second hand though) of this parting gossip with you into the bargain.

I diffuse myself with infinite pains through Household Words, and leave very few papers indeed, untouched. But Kensington Church is not mine, neither have I ever seen it. It is some paper that came to hand (unless I make some extraordinary mistake) after I left England. I conclude from the title that it is by Leigh Hunt, who has done some other papers on Kensington in the same transcendant journal.[†4] The only things I have written since I have been away, are two little stories for the Christmas Number; whereof I wrote one at Rome, and one at Venice.[†1] My sub Editor writes me of an admirable little poem done for that same number (which will be published in about a fortnight from this date)[†2] by a Lady,[†3] and also of a fine story for the same Number, done by Mrs. Gaskell who wrote the novels "Mary Barton" and "Ruth". I mention these little things as they may interest you and Madame De la Rue when you come to see them.

I am going to send you, please God, from England, a Bleak House in its real original form.[†4] I don't know whether you have read my Child's History—which contains the Truth respecting certain English Kings, whom it has been thought a kind of religious gentility to lie about. I will send that too, though I have my doubts whether it may not have earned the honor of being taboo'd by the Infallible Church.

After sleeping with much strange company (chiefly Mules and Chickens) and being bitten all over by every species of flea (of which I count, up to this time, seven thousand four hundred and thirty two distinct kinds) it is agreeable to have a quiet two days in this house. I find it hard though to be so near to dear old Genoa without coming back; and, if the Railroad had been finished,[†5] I think I certainly should have done so, if you had not come here.

It has been intensely cold from Venice to this place, and is freezing hard here. There is a good deal of Snow upon the mountains too. On the whole, I expect to blow my nose several times between Turin and Lyons.

I found a lot of letters from England here, with very little news in them. The main piece of intelligence is, that bread was "going to be" eighteenpence the four pound loaf,[†6] and every other eatable thing in proportion; but that extraordinarily fine weather in November had enabled the farmers to sow a quantity of Spring wheat, and had encouraged brighter hopes.

Ever My Dear De la Rue | Most Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

P.S. I left our old enemy St. Francis,[†7] feebly sprawling over all manner of galleries in his old maudlin way.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?4 DECEMBER 1853]

Extracts in F, VII, iii, 587-8. Date: probably soon after reaching Turin on 3 Dec (wrongly given by Forster as 5 Dec).

Turin they found, with a brightly shining sun, intensely cold and freezing hard. There are double windows to all the rooms, but the Alpine air comes down and numbs my feet as I write (in a cap and shawl) within six feet of the fire. This is a remarkably agreeable place. A beautiful town, prosperous, thriving, growing prodigiously, as Genoa is; crowded with busy inhabitants; full of noble streets and squares. The Alps, now covered deep with snow, are close upon it, and here and there seem almost ready to tumble into the houses. The contrast this part of Italy presents to the rest, is amazing. Beautifully made railroads, admirably managed; cheerful, active people; spirit, energy, life, progress. In Milan, in every street, the noble palace of some exile is a barrack, and dirty soldiers are lolling out of the magnificent windows—it seems as if the whole place were being gradually absorbed into soldiers. In Naples, something like a hundred thousand troops. "I knew," I said to a certain Neapolitan Marchese there whom I had known before, and who came to see me the night after I arrived,[†1] "I knew a very remarkable gentleman when I was last here; who had never been out of his own country, but was perfectly acquainted with English literature, and had taught himself to speak English in that wonderful manner that no one could have known him for a foreigner; I am very anxious to see him again, but I forget his name."—He named him, and his face fell directly. "Dead?" said I.—"In exile."—"O dear me!" said I, "I had looked forward to seeing him again, more than anyone I was acquainted with in the country!"—"What would you have!" says the Marchese in a low voice. "He was a remarkable man—full of knowledge, full of spirit, full of generosity. Where should he be but in exile! Where could he be!" We said not another word about it, but I shall always remember the short dialogue.[†2]

I am strongly inclined to think that our countrymen are to blame in the matter of the Austrian vexations to travellers that have been complained of. Their manner is so very bad, they are so extraordinarily suspicious, so determined to be done by everybody, and give so much offence. Now, the Austrian police are very strict, but they really know how to do business, and they do it. And if you treat them like gentlemen, they will always respond. When we first crossed the Austrian frontier, and were ushered into the police office, I took off my hat. The officer immediately took off his, and was as polite—still doing his duty, without any compromise—as it was possible to be. When we came to Venice, the arrangements were very strict, but were so business-like that the smallest possible amount of inconvenience consistent with strictness ensued. Here is the scene. A soldier has come into the railway carriage (a saloon on the American plan) some miles off, has touched his hat, and asked for my passport. I have given it. Soldier has touched his hat again, and retired as from the presence of a superior officer. Alighted from carriage, we pass into a place like a banking-house, lighted up with gas. Nobody bullies us or drives us there, but we must go, because the road ends there. Several soldierly clerks. One very sharp chief. My passport is brought out of an inner room, certified to be en règle. Very sharp chief takes it, looks at it (it is rather longer, now, than Hamlet), calls out—"Signor Carlo Dickens!" "Here I am sir." "Do you intend remaining long in Venice sir?" "Probably four days sir!" "Italian is known to you sir. You have been in Venice before?" "Once before sir." "Perhaps you remained longer then sir?" "No indeed; I merely came to see, and went as I came." "Truly sir? Do I infer that you are going by Trieste?" "No. I am going to Parma, and Turin, and by Paris home." "A cold journey sir, I hope it may be a pleasant one." "Thank you."—He gives me one very sharp look all over, and wishes me a very happy night. I wish him a very happy night and it's done. The thing being done at all, could not be better done, or more politely—though I dare say if I had been sucking a gentish cane all the time, or talking in English to my compatriots, it might not unnaturally have been different. At Turin and at Genoa there are no such stoppages at all; but in any other part of Italy, give me an Austrian in preference to a native functionary. At Naples it is done in a beggarly, shambling, bungling, tardy, vulgar way; but I am strengthened in my old impression that Naples is one of the most odious places on the face of the earth. The general degradation oppresses me like foul air.

To MRS CHARLES DICKENS, 5 DECEMBER 1853

MS British Library. Address: Inghilterra | Mrs. Charles Dickens | Tavistock House | Tavistock Square | London

Turin, Monday Fifth December 1853.

My Dearest Catherine. We arrived here on Saturday afternoon, having made capital progress from Parma (it being hard frosty weather) and having also had the good fortune of just catching a train for this place, at Alessandria.[†1] De la Rue, through his agents the bankers here, had (as he promised in Genoa) taken every possible precaution for our getting on to Lyons. I arranged long ago, to leave here tomorrow; and I found the whole Courier's carriage which carries the Mail, and which is very difficult to be got, punctually secured for us. So we start from here over the Mont Cenis, tomorrow afternoon at 5 o'Clock and go straight through to Lyons. I cannot ascertain here about the boat up the Saone, or about the times of the trains from Chalons to Paris; but we are engaged to dine with Miss Coutts on Saturday, and, unless you hear to the contrary, I shall come home by the Tidal Train from Paris on Sunday Morning. Wills will tell you at what hour it comes in at London Bridge on that day, and when the carriage should be there to meet me.
I may write to say that I shall come on Monday instead; but I do not think this at all likely, to the best of my present means of judging.

It is extremely cold, but Turin is a charming place—gay, bright, busy, and crowded with Inhabitants. There is a large and most beautiful Theatre,[†1] where we saw the Prophete[†2] last night—not well sung (except Viardot's[†3] part,[†4] by Madame Stoltz)[†5] but admirably put upon the stage, and done by an immense number of people. The handsomest streets and squares I ever saw, are in this place. And the great range of Alps, now covered with snow, overhanging it, are most splendid to behold.

I have many arrangements to manage, and the Abercombys[†6] to call upon, and many letters to write; and therefore—being happily so near home as to time—must make this but a short epistle. I am anxious to close it with putting something to you, very seriously and affectionately, which I think deserves your particular attention.

Nine years have gone away since we were in Genoa. Whatever looked large in that little place may be supposed in such a time to have shrunk to its reasonable and natural proportions. You know my life too, and my character, and what has had its part in making them successful; and the more you see of me, the better perhaps you may understand that the intense pursuit of any idea that takes complete possession of me, is one of the qualities that makes me different—sometimes for good; sometimes I dare say for evil—from other men. Whatever made you unhappy in the Genoa time had no other root, beginning, middle, or end, than whatever has made you proud and honored in your married life, and given you station better than rank, and surrounded you with many enviable things. This is the plain truth, and here I leave it.

But since the time[†7] when you constrained me to make that painful declaration of your state of mind to the De la Rue's,[†8] I have been, in all the correspondence I have ever had with him, deeply impressed by the delicacy and gratitude which has invariably restrained him from the least allusion to it, and has always led him to references to you and the children which none but a generous and affectionate man could possibly have been so natural and so instinctively manly in. I come back to Genoa after that long time, and find her, with all the change upon her of those many years of suffering[†9]—and all the weariness of attendance, night and day, upon her foolish sick mother who wears out everybody near her body and soul—alluding in the same manner to you—easily, gratefully, and full of interest—from the first moment of my setting eyes upon her, to her sending some brooches Egg and Collins had commissioned her to buy, yesterday, and begging to be recalled to Mamey's and Katey's remembrance, and to send her love to you and Georgina. Now I am perfectly clear that your position beside these people is not a good one, is not an amiable one, a generous one—is not worthy of you at all. And I see that you have it in your power to set it right at once by writing her a note to say that you have heard from me, with interest, of her sufferings and her cheerfulness—that you couldn't receive her messages of remembrance without a desire to respond to them—and that if you should ever be thrown together again by any circumstances, you hope it will be for a friendly association without any sort of shadow upon it. Understand above all things, that I do not ask you to do this, or want you to do this.[†1] I shall never ask whether you have done it or not, and shall never approach the subject from this hour. My part in it was settled when we were in Switzerland, and there an end. But I am confident that if you could do this without any secret reservation in your own mind, you would do an unquestionably upright thing, and would place yourself on a far better station in your own eyes, at one time or other. And I am absolutely confident that they both deserve it, and would both be very sensitive to it. But I most earnestly repeat, for all that, that it would be utterly valueless and contemptible if it were done through a grain of any other influence than that of your own heart, reflecting on what I have written here.

I wonder whether you will have done the study mantelpiece by Sunday morning!—I hope so. Understand that if I come on Sunday, I will not write again. My best love to the darlings. I take Charley to be now on his way from Leipzig—and if I may judge of his weather by ours, he will have a mighty cold journey of it. Looking forward to meeting you so soon, Ever My Dearest Catherine Most affectionately Yours

CD.

To FRANÇOIS REGNIER, [10 DECEMBER 1853]*

MS Comedie Française. Date: 10 Dec was Saturday; either date or day must be CD's error; probably the latter, since he told Catherine he would cross on the Sunday morning[†2] (To Mrs CD, 5 Dec) unless she heard otherwise, and there is no later letter.

Paris, Sunday Evening | Tenth December 1853.

My Dear Regnier.

You will be surprised by my being in Paris and not seeing you,—but I am merely passing through it on my way from Italy towards home, or I should have seen you of course.

This will present to you my friend Mr. Brown who is staying in Paris with my most esteemed friend Miss Burdett Coutts. I particularly wish him to see the Foyer and other mysteries of the Français.[†1] If you will have the kindness to shew them to him, I shall be very much indebted to you. You remember when I last saw them, one intensely hot summer day, with our good friend Maclise, under your guidance?[†2]

A thousand kind remembrances to Madame Regnier and the two brave little boys.[†3]

I suppose Poole deposits his nightly pinch of snuff on the marble nose[†4] still?

Ever My Dear Regnier | Very faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS COWDEN CLARKE, 14 [DECEMBER] 1853

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds. Address: With a book. | Mrs. Cowden Clarke. Date: misdated by CD; clearly Dec.

Tavistock House | Wednesday Fourteenth November 1853.

My Dear Mrs. Cowden Clarke.

You remember the flowers you sent me on the day of the publication of the first of these pages?[†5] I shall never forget them. Pray give the book a place on your shelves, and (if you can) in your heart. Where you may always believe me, Very Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To WILKIE COLLINS, 14 DECEMBER 1853

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Fourteenth December 1853. | Wednesday

My Dear Collins.

In making out our accounts, I find these items in my pocket-book.

"At Venice, I lend Collins in money £5.

"At Turin, I lend Collins in money—Blank.

Will you enlighten me at once on this latter head, and in reference to some mysterious unformed remembrance I have, concerning Napoleons and Petty[†6] Cash?[†7]

To [EDWARD MOXON],[†1] 14 DECEMBER 1853*

MS Lincoln Public Library.

Tavistock House | Wednesday Fourteenth December | 1853.

My Dear Sir

The translator who has achieved the accompanying little book,[†2] has sent it to me to send to Tennyson. Which I take it into my head I can best do, by sending it to you.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS W. H. WILLS, 14 DECEMBER 1853

MS Huntington Library.

Tavistock House | Fourteenth December 1853.

My Dear Mrs. Wills.

I have brought you home a trifling brooch in the silver filigree-work, which has no value of itself but which I hope may find some in your honest eyes, as a little sign of remembrance from your excellent husband's attached friend and fellow-workman.

Always Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Wills.

To ALFRED DICKENS, [?MID-DECEMBER 1853]

Mention in John Waller catalogue, No. 95; addressed Alfred Dickens, dated 1853; with envelope. Date: probably mid-December.

Inviting him for Christmas Day.

To CHARLES KNIGHT, 15 DECEMBER 1853

Extract in Sotheby catalogue, July 1983; MS 1 p.; dated Tavistock House, 15 Dec 53; addressed Charles Knight.

Has received the books[†3] and note with pleasure. As to Knight's being an old friend CD denies it altogether; he is in all good things by at least fifty years the youngest man I know.

To WILKIE COLLINS, 16 DECEMBER 1853

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Friday Sixteenth December 1853.

My Dear Collins. I have gone carefully over the accounts, and send you your result on the other side. I do not confuse it with details, nor have I put it in the form of a balance sheet; but have made it as general and clear as I can.

All the bills (if you should ever want them) are preserved, together with Edward's book.[†1]

I began to arrange as soon as I got home, and fell on the Xmas No. tooth and nail. I am pleased to hear that you are coming to Birmingham,[†2] and will send you a one fare pass in due time. Come by the Morning Express at half past 9, and I believe you will find our mysterious friend The Last Appeal,[†3] in company with Beard, at the Euston Station.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. Wilkie Collins Esquire

MEMORANDUM.[†4]
The Total expences (deducting, of course, all charges incurred for Edward and Charley) have been, in French Money 9,510 francs. That is, in English money £380.8.4—or, say in round numbers £380.10.0.

One third share of this sum, is—	£126.16.8
You have actually contributed—	90. 0.0
Leaving a balance for you to pay, of	£ 36.16.8
To which is to be added, Money lent	£ 6.15.0
Making a Total for you to pay, of	£43.11.8

To CHARLES ELLIS,[†5] 16 DECEMBER 1853

MS Chas Ellis & Co.

Tavistock House, Tavistock Square | Friday Sixteenth December 1853.

Dear Mr. Ellis

I shall be glad to have, at your convenience, 3 dozen of the fine light dry Port I had last from you—2 Dozen of the Metternich Hock, cheapest seal—2 Dozen of a sparkling champagne of a dry quality—and 2 Dozen genuine old Claret in Magnums if you have such a rarity by you.

I had some chablis from you some time ago, which I did not like at first, but which turned out extraordinarily good after being kept—I think a year or two. If you have any such Wine now, or any light Moselle that you can surely recommend as good-drinking by next May or June, I shall be glad to take some. But as I should want it only for ordinary use, I could not go to a high price for it.

I have been in Italy and am only just come home, or I should have made my wants known to you sooner.

Faithfully Yrs
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Ellis.

To W. J. CLEMENT, 18 DECEMBER 1853†

MS Carl H. Pforzheimer Library.

Tavistock House | Sunday Eighteenth December | 1853.

My Dear Clement.

I am delighted to receive your cordial letter—though I cannot get to Shrewsbury; for our children are all at home, and my eldest boy will return to Germany in a few weeks, and I like to observe them in their merriment (without interfering with it) and see that they get on well.

But I should be much pleased to know that you heard me read the Carol, and I do hope therefore that you will come to Birmingham. The nights of reading are:

Tuesday 27th.—Carol
Thursday 29th.—Cricket
Friday 30th.—Carol

The Friday is for the working people, and I should think will be by far the most interesting evening. I shall be, with Mrs. Dickens and her sister, at the Hen and Chickens. If you intend to go, I would advise you to write to Arthur Ryland of Birmingham (mentioning me as your friend) concerning your seat or seats.

In haste | Very heartily Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

William J Clement Esquire

To MARCUS STONE,[†1] 19 DECEMBER 1853

MS University of Texas.

Tavistock House | Nineteenth December 1853.

My Dear Marcus

You made an excellent sketch from a book of mine,[†2] which I received (and have preserved) with great pleasure. Will you accept from me, in remembrance of it, this little book.[†3] I believe it to be true, though it may be sometimes not as genteel as History has a habit of being.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To SIR FITZROY KELLY,[†1] 20 DECEMBER 1853

Extract from Christie's catalogue, 8 Mar 1978; MS 1 p.; dated Tavistock House, 20 Dec 53, addressed "My Dear Sir Fitzroy".

Tavistock House, | Twentieth December 1853

Saying that he is obliged for the friendly invitation but regrets he is already engaged. He had experienced much attention and kindness from Sir William Temple when at Naples nine years ago and was disappointed not to see him again when at Naples the other day.

To DR LYON PLAYFAIR,[†2] 20 DECEMBER 1853*

MS Royal Institution.

Tavistock House, Tavistock Square | Tuesday Twentieth December | 1853.

My Dear Sir

I have read your speech[†3] with very great pleasure. And as I thoroughly agree with you in your views of Mechanics' Institutions,[†4] I shall most certainly urge them by all means in my power on the Birmingham people in their present important enterprise.[†5]

But there is another view of the subject which has been strongly impressed on my notice in my experience of the shortcomings of these establishments—which is not small. They have fallen into an accursed habit of looking round for external patronage—of abandoning the self reliance which should be a main part of their existence—and lashing themselves into frothy speech-makings under the presidency of Lords. One of the natural results of this perversion of their duty, is, that the Working Man has never had his proper share in their management—has been required to give a great deal of confidence where he received very little—and so has been missed and lost. Now I want the Birmingham people, from the first, to appeal to the working man's sense and spirit; to give him his rightful share in the management of this place; to associate him therein with his Employer, to the enduring advantage and improvement of both.[†1]

But we are to remember that he is to be won, and that his family are to be won too—or again the thing fails. His amusement therefore, as well as his instruction, I take to be an object of vital importance.

I shall be much interested in talking with you on the subject—and I hope in acting with you too.[†2] If you will name any time on Friday before three, or on Saturday either in the day or evening, when I could have the pleasure of receiving you here, I will arrange accordingly.

My Dear Sir Very faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Dr. Lyon Playfair

To CHARLES ELLIS, 23 DECEMBER 1853

MS Chas Ellis & Co.

Tavistock House | Friday Twenty Third December | 1853.

Dear Mr. Ellis

I enclose you a crossed cheque for the Metternich Wine.[†3] I have not yet tried the sample of port, but will communicate with you after doing so.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MARK LEMON, 24 DECEMBER 1853

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Christmas Eve 1853.

My Dear Mark

A merry Christmas and a happy New Year to you and yours!

Will you give me a call on Monday Morning, to arrange with me (for Ireland,[†4] whom I dare say you will be kind enough to see when I am at Birmingham) about the little Theatre?[†1] We had a Rehearsal to day[†2]—I have got in some capital old Stager dodges and scraps of music—and I think it will be very pretty and droll.[†3] Really very good.[†4]

Betty,[†5] my dear Sir, is—I say it emphatically—an Actress!!!

Ever Affectionately
CD.

To THE REV. G. H. HINE,[†6] 26 DECEMBER 1853

Mention in American Book Prices Current, 1977; MS 1 p.; dated 26 Dec 53; addressed Mr Hine.

Agreeing with his correspondent's remarks.

To MESSRS LETTS, SON & STEER,[†7] 26 DECEMBER 1853*

MS New York University Library.

Tavistock House | Twenty Sixth December 1853.

Dear Sirs

Accept my annual thanks for your pleasant annual remembrance.[†8]

I finished the Child's History in accordance with its original plan; desiring to close it when its romantic character could not be easily preserved.[†1]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Letts Son and Steer.

To ARTHUR RYLAND, 28 DECEMBER 1853*

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: Arthur Ryland Esquire | Birmingham.

Hen and Chickens[†2] | Wednesday December Twenty Eighth | 1853.

My Dear Sir

We are extremely obliged to you for your kind invitation, and should have sincere pleasure in accepting it, if we had not already declined invitations from Mr. Lawrence[†3] and Mr. Mason,[†4] on the ground that with a view to tomorrow and Friday, I must keep myself quiet to day.[†5] I assure you that I do a great violence to my own inclinations in not coming to you; but I have a strong misgiving that if I were "to let myself go", and be as genial as I feel disposed to be, my voice would not hold out for two consecutive nights of that very large place.[†6]

My Dear Sir | Very faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Arthur Ryland Esquire
Mrs. Dickens, Miss Hogarth, and Mr. Wills desire their kind regards.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?31 DECEMBER 1853]

Extract in F. VII, ii, 572. Date: presumably the day after the final reading on 30 Dec. From Birmingham.

Telling Forster that his three public readings in Birmingham had been to nearly six thousand people.[†7]

To [?CHARLES KNIGHT],[†1] [?LATE DECEMBER 1853]

Extract in Manchester Notes and Queries, 22 Mar 1890, VIII, 205. Date: This clearly refers to the incorporation of the Guild of Literature and Art, for which a Bill had been prepared by 6 Feb 54 (To Layard, that day); the first approach must have been made several months before.

I must allow that my faith in the House of Commons, as to most subjects, is of a most limited nature, and that I regard it with a feeling that keeps me on all occasions as far from it as I can put myself. As to literature I suppose that assembly to care as much for it as a shovel full of mud out of the Thames. You will gather from these premises that I should approach it in the name of our Art with the greatest unwillingness, and with the absolute certainty beforehand of being shocked and evaded. But I would not leave you to go there alone and will take service with you in the cause.

1854

January

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 2 JANUARY 1854

MS Berg Collection. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Bedford Hotel | Brighton.

Tavistock House | Monday Second January 1854.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

We have just come home from Birmingham—where I would have given no small sum if you had been. If you could have seen the two thousand five hundred work-people on Friday night, I think you would have been delighted.

Mrs. Morson came here early this morning, to announce the disappearance of one of the girls over the garden wall, immediately after church yesterday. She had just come home from service, and bodily vanished in her cloak and bonnet and best gown. This is not the worst disappearance she came to announce in great trepidation. She is going to be married![†2]

I will tell you the circumstances under which she is to change her condition, when I see you. I think them very reasonable and sensible, and creditable both to herself and her husband that is to be. He proposes the end of February for the event. Of course she has no idea of leaving until she can be replaced, but of course "she would rather not put him off, if she can help it."

I have no idea where you are, and am going down to Stratton Street with this, to get enlightenment from Webb.[†3] Will you tell Mr. Brown with my regards that I have been wondering whether he means to renew his acquaintance with the only Gin-Punch known to Mankind, next Friday?[†4] I found the children getting up a dull Charade for the occasion, and have altered Tom Thumb for them instead.[†5] Tom is to be represented by one of our tiniest babies—the smallest size but one—who has a most remarkable ear for Music. It will be very droll, and they will all look like little pieces of China. They have derived considerable notions of punctuality and attention from the parental drilling. The under-signed is to enact the Ghost, and Mr. Lemon (as great a child as himself) the queen of the Giants.

I leave it to the last my dear Miss Coutts to wish you many happy years, chiefly because, as I cannot do it heartily and affectionately enough, it seems mere nonsense to try. Will you include O†1 in this abortive demonstration and complete failure?

If you are at Paris, how cold you must be. If you are at Brighton, how cold you must be. If you are anywhere, how cold you must be! I persevered in the cold bath at Birmingham, notwithstanding its being frozen; and not only escaped the least hoarseness or sense of fatigue from three nights of three hours each in that enormous hall (which requires a great effort) but felt as if I could have gone on for three weeks.

My Dear Miss Coutts | Ever Most Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To MRS GASKELL, 2 JANUARY 1854†

MS Berg Collection.

Tavistock House | Monday Second January 1854.

My Dear Mrs. Gaskell.

In wishing you many happy and prosperous years, I want to thank you, cordially, simply, and affectionately, for your valuable aid to Household Words during my absence abroad.†2 I have read what you have written there with true interest and emotion; but I have felt the spirit which induced you to write it, even more.

You will soon receive (or perhaps you have already done so?) a business letter from Wills, involving a proposal which I earnestly hope you will consider favorably and accept.†3

Mrs. Dickens and Georgina (who have been with me to Birmingham) send their loves. I beg my kind regards to Mr. Gaskell, and with good wishes to the children am in all truth

Your faithful friend and admirer

CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Gaskell.

To JAMES GRANT,†4 3 JANUARY 1854

Extract in Maggs Bros catalogue No. 790 (1949); MS 1 p.; dated Tavistock House, 3 Jan 54.

States that he had not read any of Grant's books.†5 Even if I had done so, I should have been under the necessity of begging to excuse myself from complying with your request. I am shy of obtruding my opinions on bodies with which I have no connexion;[†1] and could only do so in such an instance as this, on personal knowledge and intimacy.

To ARTHUR HELPS,[†2] 3 JANUARY 1854

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Third January 1854

My Dear Sir

I too have a very pleasant remembrance of the evening to which you refer. And your name is so much a part of it, that I required no other reminder.

I shall take counsel with our "Friends",[†3] with the greatest interest in the subject that occupies their thoughts. Sanitary improvements are the one thing needful to begin with;—and until they are thoroughly, efficiently, uncompromisingly made (and every bestial little prejudice and supposed interest contrariwise, crushed under foot) even Education itself will fall short of its uses.[†4]

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Arthur Helps Esquire

To SIR JAMES EMERSON TENNENT,[†5] 3 JANUARY 1854

Facsimile ([aa]) and extract in Christie's catalogue, Dec 1988; MS 2 pp.; addressed Sir James Emerson Tennent.

[a]Tavistock House | Tuesday Third January 1854

My Dear Sir

I have read the draught of the article on the proposed treaty of Copyright with America,[†6] designed to be substituted for the Sixth article of the Convention;[†7] and I consider it decidedly advantageous to English Authors, and can have no doubt of their generally receiving it in that light. I may be supposed to have a considerable interest in the question, and I am satisfied with it myself. On principle I object to any limitation whatever of an Author's right in his own works; but, as the law of England confiscates his property when his successors most need it,[a] I have no right to quarrel with America for requiring him to establish his title to it within three months.

The provision as to the stereotyping or printing a book being done where it is republished, being reciprocated, does not seem unreasonable.[†1] He had mentioned this to his printers, Messrs. Bradbury and Evans, and they concurred with him. Thanking Tennent for his courtesy.

To MRS MORSON, [4 JANUARY 1854]

Mention in next.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 4 JANUARY 1854

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Wednesday Fourth January | 1854.

My Dear Miss Coutts

I was the Committee yesterday, and, it being the close of the year, send you the book.

Rhena Pollard, that girl from Petworth jail, had been (as is supposed) the companion of the girl who ran away last Sunday,[†2] and had, in a most inveterately audacious manner, threatened Mrs. Morson that she would leave—had pretended indeed, that she waited for the Committee day, as a kind of obliging favor on her part. Accordingly I summoned Mrs. Morson when the girl appeared in her turn, and said "Mrs. Morson this is the girl who wants to go, I believe"—"Yes."—"Take her at her word. It is getting dark now, but, immediately after breakfast tomorrow morning, shut the gate upon her for ever." I think the girl was more taken by surprise, and more seized with consternation, than anybody I have ever seen in that place. She begged and prayed—was obliged to be taken out of the room—went into the long room, and, before all the rest, entreated and besought Mrs. Morson to intercede for her—and broke into the most forlorn and dismal lamentations. I told Mrs. Morson to give her no hope or relief all night—to have the rough dress down and air it in the long room—and this morning, if the girl again besought her in the same way before all the others, to pause and send to me. This she did. I wrote back a letter, which I arranged with her yesterday that she should read to them all. I put the case in the strongest and plainest manner possible, and said that you supported that Home, to save young women who desired to be saved and who knew the misery and degradation out of which they were taken—that it was not the place for those who audaciously slighted the shelter of the only roof interposed between them and the great black world of Crime and Shame—and that I would not, nor would any of the gentlemen who assisted you in its management allow its blessings to be thus grossly trifled with. As it was the great forgiving Christmas time, she was to give this girl one more trial; but only on the condition that if she ever repeated her threat in any way, she was to be instantly discharged. Also that all the rest were to understand that your consent had been obtained to this principle being in all cases severely and firmly carried out. We pitied such deluded creatures, and knew the remorse that always came upon them as soon as they were outside the gate; but the greatest object of our pity was the miserable girl in the streets who really would try hard to do well if she could get into the Home, and whose place was unjustly occupied by such a girl as this.

Both in words yesterday and in the letter to day, I was as emphatic as I could possibly be. I think you will approve of the wretched young creature's having one more chance in this bitter weather—but in a just remembrance of what is due to the Home and its Supporter, I could not have given it to her, if she had been other than a stranger in London, and an utterly friendless speck in the world.

Snow two feet deep in the streets today!

Dear Miss Coutts | Ever Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To PETER CUNNINGHAM, 5 JANUARY 1854

Extract in Meredith Janvier catalogue No. 10; MS 2 pp.; dated HW Office, 5 Jan 54.

Your seasonable letter and book[†1] has already given me the greatest pleasure and will give me more ... hope we may live to pipe the inquiries to one another (as old men and old friends) whether we remember when the first volume came out![†2] and whether we recollect one night at Liverpool[†3] when Sir Thomas Lawrence—no, Sir David Wilkie—no Wilkie Collins and young Cunningham[†4] who had so much work to go through to qualify himself as a guide to London, sat up all night with Mrs. Sloman the actress[†5] and Mr. Coe[†6] the master carpenter, and went to Berkhampton,[†7] no to Bonningham,[†7] no, to Birkenhead[†7] before breakfast to bathe.

To WALTER SAVAGE LANDOR, 7 JANUARY 1854

Text from MDGH, I, 343.

Tavistock House, January 7th, 1854.

My dear Landor,

I heartily assure you that to have your name coupled with anything I have done is an honour and a pleasure to me.[†1] I cannot say that I am sorry that you should have thought it necessary to write to me, for it is always delightful to me to see your hand, and to know (though I want no outward and visible sign as an assurance of the fact) that you are ever the same generous, earnest, gallant man.

Catherine and Georgina send their kind loves. So does Walter Landor, who came home from school with high judicial commendation and a prize into the bargain.

Ever, my dear Landor, affectionately yours.

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To THE DUCHESS OF SUTHERLAND,[†2] 7 JANUARY 1854

Extract in John Heise catalogue No. 2452; MS 2 pp.; dated Tavistock House 7 Jan 54.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to the Duchess of Sutherland and hopes she will have the kindness to excuse the present note, as its object is to recommend to the Duchess of Sutherland a very good servant who seeks the recommendation of Mr. Dickens, and so well deserves it that he does not feel himself satisfied in refusing it. The young man who believes there is a vacancy ... is a German who has been abroad with Mr. Dickens as a travelling servant for the last three months.†3

To MRS COLDEN,†4 8 JANUARY 1854

MS Columbia University Libraries.

Tavistock House | Sunday Night, | Eighth January 1854

My Dear Mrs. Colden.

Life is not long enough for any little misunderstanding among friends who are really friends at heart; and where there is true regard and an affectionate remembrance of past times, it is a Shame that any should subsist.

Pray do not judge me by the omission of a form. I saw today that you thought I might have been to see you, sooner. You have no idea what the pressure upon me has been since my return home from abroad, or how accustomed I am, through the consideration of those who know me best, to disregard little forms for realities.

I came to see you as soon as I had cleared away a number of demands upon my time, and was free to say—as I should have said if you had not been so frosty with me at first—"where shall I go with you, what companionship can we project together, how will you use me in this great place that I know something about." I might have merely shewn myself, a fortnight ago. It is perfectly true, though I had not thought so before today. Pray forgive me and forget it.

You may have heard from Jeffrey†1 how earnestly and habitually I have always spoken since I was in America, of my love for you and yours. If the good Doctor†2 had not come in like Summer today and set me up again, I should have felt under the necessity of speaking on that head for myself.

Now do dismiss all but that, and let us be as cordial as when I left you a dozen years ago. If there be any blame, I take it all; if there be any slight, you shall have it all. Let it be past in any case.

My Dear Mrs. Colden | Always Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To DR HENRY BENNET,†3 9 JANUARY 1854*

MS Mr A. Reuter.

Tavistock House | Ninth January 1854

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Dr. Henry Bennet, and begs to say that he will be at home on Friday at half past one.

To MRS COLDEN, 9 JANUARY 1854

MS Columbia University Libraries.

Tavistock House | Monday Ninth January 1854

My Dear Mrs. Colden.

I cannot tell you how glad I am I wrote to you, and that my unfortunate (and most unintentional) omission has been set right. But before you forget it, pray do me the mere justice of diminishing the time one half. My first impulse when I came home that Sunday night, was exactly what you suppose. "Good God!" said I, "I must go and see them directly."—"You can't," said Catherine and Georgina both together, "for they are going to Brighton tomorrow for a few days." My own Birmingham expedition consumed another week. Take a fortnight off the month on these two accounts, and you really will not do too much.

With kindest regards to your sister and the Doctor, and with most sincere pleasure in the restored warmth of the weather,

Believe me My Dear Mrs. Colden | Not a neglectful | And Callous |
Ruffian, | But your old friend | Quite unchanged
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 10 JANUARY 1854*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Bedford Hotel | Brighton.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Tenth January 1854.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I send you, by this post, the Examiner you wanted.[†1]

I omitted to tell you the other day, that I happened to dine at Talfourd's with Fitzroy Kelly,[†2] a day or two after I came home; and that I asked Kelly about your trees—of course without mentioning you. The Highway authorities have the power to lop them, as yours are lopped, provided you have received ten days notice to lop them yourself and have not done it. The power is exercised under an Act intended to preserve public roads and paths in a good state; and the remedy against said authorities, if they proceed illegally, is "an action of trespass"!

I apprehend that some previous warning to your gardener, or to some one at Holly Lodge, must have been considered by the Highway authorities in this case, a sufficient legal notice, to justify their proceeding.

Have you thought of the Shepherds Bush money and salaries?

With kindest regards, | Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To MRS MATTHEWS, [?11 JANUARY 1854]

Mention in To Miss Coutts, 13 Jan.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 13 JANUARY 1854*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Friday Thirteenth January 1854.

My Dear Miss Coutts

I wrote to Mrs. Matthews as we agreed, merely saying that I had seen my friend and begged to enquire what she wanted towards the outfit and passage of her Son? I have received in reply, the enclosed letter.[†3] It is not quite satisfactory to me, though I hardly know why. What would you wish me to do?

Tomorrow I will send you all the particulars concerning Charley.

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To FREDERICK GREW,[†1] 13 JANUARY 1854

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House, London | Thirteenth January 1854.

My Dear Sir

I beg, through you, to assure the Artizans' Committee in aid of the Birmingham Midland Institute, that I have received the Resolution they have done me the honor to agree upon for themselves and their fellow workmen,[†2] with the highest gratification. I awakened no pleasure or interest among them at Birmingham, which they did not repay to me with abundant interest. I have their welfare and happiness sincerely at heart, and shall ever be their faithful friend.

Your obedient Servant

CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Frederic Grew.

To EDWARD KAUB, 13 JANUARY 1854*

MS Yale University Library.

Tavistock House | Thirteenth January 1854

Edward.

I have received a note from the Duchess of Sutherland to day, in which she says "she will not fail to see the person I have so advantageously mentioned, as soon as she comes to town." She is already negociating with another (she adds) but even if engaged will see you, as it may be of some use to you. And she begs me to tell you to leave your direction with the housekeeper at Stafford House. This you had better do, immediately. You had better write upon the same paper "Left by the direction of Mr. Charles Dickens." It will be well for you to see the housekeeper if you can, and give it to her.

Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MARK LEMON,[13] JANUARY 1854

MS Benoliel Collection. Date: Friday was 13 Jan in 1854.

Tavistock House | Twelfth January 1854 | Friday.

My Dear Mark.

As you know the man, will you be kind enough to pay this bill for me? I have added a Guinea to it, for Mr. Ireland[†1] himself. It is not clear to me but that the horse's head, or the umbrella, or both, were sent back to the Adelphi. Being charged as mine will you ask the question, and, in case they were sent back, direct them to be restored?

The baked Irish Stew-time next Monday, is 5. Perhaps we shall meet in the meanwhile. If you happen to be disengaged this evening, I am ready for anything dramatic.

Ever affectionately
CD.

To GEORGE STRUTT,[†2] 13 JANUARY 1854*

MS Private.

Tavistock House, London | Thirteenth January 1854.

My Dear Sir

I have more than once considered the Diabolical Agency nonsense,[†3] and have always come to the conclusion that it was best left alone. Notoriety is what its sponters[†4] and professors most want; and I am strongly indisposed to help them to it.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

George H Strutt Esquire

To THE HON. MRS RICHARD WATSON, 13 JANUARY 1854

MS Huntington Library.

Tavistock House. | Thirteenth January 1854. | Friday.

My Dear Mrs. Watson.

On the very day after I sent the Christmas No. to Rockingham, I heard of your being at Brighton. I should have sent another there, but that I had a misgiving I might seem to be making too much of it. For, when I thought of the probability of the Rockingham copy going on to Brighton, and pictured to myself the advent of two of those very large envelopes at once at Junction House at breakfast time, a sort of comic modesty overcame me.

I was heartily pleased with the Birmingham Audience, which was a very fine one. I never saw, nor do I suppose anybody ever did, such an interesting scene as the Working-people's night. There were two thousand five hundred of them there; and a more delicately observant audience it is impossible to imagine. They lost nothing, misinterpreted nothing, followed everything closely, laughed and cried with most delightful earnestness, and animated me to that extent that I felt as if we were all bodily going up into the clouds together. It is an enormous place for the purpose; but I had considered all that, carefully, and †a—I believe—†a made the most distant person hear, as well as if I had been reading in my own room. I was a little doubtful before I began on the first night whether it was quite practicable to conceal the requisite effort; but I soon had the satisfaction of finding that it was, and that we were all going on together, in the first page, as easily, to all appearance, as if we had been sitting round the fire.†1

I am obliged to go out on Monday at 5, and to dine out;†2 but I will be at home at any time before that hour that you may appoint. You say you are only going to stay one night in Town; but if you could stay two, and would dine with us alone on Tuesday, that is the plan that we should all like best. Let me have one word from you by post on Monday Morning.

Few things that I saw when I was away, took my fancy so much as the Electric Telegraph piercing like a Sunbeam right through the cruel old heart of the Coliseum at Rome. And on the summit of the Alps among the eternal ice and snow, there it was still, with its posts sustained against the sweeping mountain winds by clusters of great beams—to say nothing of its being at the bottom of the Sea as we crossed the Channel.†3

With kindest loves | Ever My Dear Mrs. Watson | Most Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 14 JANUARY 1854

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Bedford Hotel | Brighton.

Tavistock House | Saturday Fourteenth January 1854

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I have had a long talk with Charley this morning. Before I proceed in that matter, I will first shew you what I have paid for him at Leipzig during the past year, and then I will give you an abstract of the Professor's[†4] letter concerning him.

Payments	£	s	D
Three quarter's board &c	63.	15.	0
Lessons in German, Music and drawing	11.	0.	0
Pocket Money, bath and literary subscriptions, Hartz[†5]-Mountain-Walk, and general miscellaneous item	21.	5.	0
Total.	£96	0.	0

The Professor in his letter says that Charley has attained to a good knowledge of German (M. Taüchnitz in his letter, says he speaks "a very good German indeed"), but that if he were to leave Germany now, he thinks he would soon forget what he has acquired. That he and Taüchnitz have both decided that it is not advisable to send him to the Commercial School; firstly, because he must be a perfect German before entering it; secondly, because "I do not think that the extraordinarily great and formal severity and very rigorous discipline which is enforced in that establishment would suit the character and individuality of your dear son". That he loves him heartily, and finds him much improved in many little things that displeased him at first; but that he does not find in him a desire to study, and that he (the Professor) "is not quite certain that to be a merchant, is his earnest and fast determination." That he begs me, in sending Charley back, to send with him my opinion on this subject, clearly; as, if that be his real desire, "he must next employ himself in the necessary studies, Arithmetic, Writing, Mercantile knowledge, &c". And that the usual way in which young men attain this aim, is by entering a counting-house, learning business practically, and forming business habits.

I will add next, without the least reservation or embellishment, the result of my own observation of Charley. He is very gentle and affectionate, particularly fond of his sisters, very happy in their society, and very desirous to win the love of those who are dear to him. His inclinations are all good; but I think he has less fixed purpose and energy than I could have supposed possible in my son. He is not aspiring, or imaginative in his own behalf. With all the tenderer and better qualities which he inherits from his mother, he inherits an indescribable lassitude of character—a very serious thing in a man—which seems to me to express the want of a strong, compelling hand always beside him. Nothing but the conviction formed in his infancy that it must be done, renders him attentive to the little points of punctuality and order required of him at home. I believe him to have fewer active faults than ninety nine boys out of a hundred at his age; but his virtues and merits all want activity too. (When I told him this morning that when I was a year older than he, I was in the gallery of the House of Commons;[†1] and that when I was his age, I was teaching myself a very difficult art,[†2] and walking miles every day to practise it all day long in the Courts of Law;[†3] he seemed to think I must have been one of the most unaccountable of youths.)

We sat down gravely this morning, to discuss the Professor's letter, and the future. Nothing could be more frank, amiable, and expressive of a sincere anxiety to do right, than his manner. But when I pressed him closely as to the Professor's doubt of his "earnest and fast determination", it was perfectly plain that he was doubtful of it himself. Not so much because he inclined to any other, as because he knew that he wanted determination altogether. I put before him the impossibility of his making any way whatever in mercantile pursuits, without the knowledge necessary to the calling; I shewed him that the same truth held good with reference to the bar, or with reference to anything; and that such knowledge was only to be got by a stedfast[†4] devotion to its acquisition, and by continuous persevering patience and pains from day to day. I told him (as I told him at Eton when he asked me) that I thought the Army a poor pursuit for a young man of no property,[†1] and that I doubted if it would bring him to much self respect, contentment, or happiness, in middle life; but I said that for those who were incapable of steady application, it was a better thing by far than failure in any of the many better callings. He still repeated what he had said to me at Eton, and did so in the most modest and affectionate manner; but I deemed it advisable to close our talk thus:—"I don't think Charley that you have really and sincerely made up your mind with the earnestness necessary to a point on which your whole future life depends; and you had better think of it very seriously, and come to me again on Wednesday morning".

I am afraid my dear Miss Coutts this is a long and tedious story, and I know it is one that I would tell to no one else; but your interest in my dear boy, and my desire that you should know all about him just as I know it, will be—I hope and believe—its sufficient excuse. Ardor in anything that anybody's right hand finds to do, is so important in my sight and includes so much, that I may, with some unconscious impatience, exaggerate Charley's one great want. But if I do, your better judgment will restore the balance.

I remember too, that the Eton system is a particularly bad one for such a character,[†2] and that a year is not a long time in which to improve upon it. But before you and I speak upon the subject or come to any decision on it, I want you to know the fact as I see it. I should be very undeserving of the friendship which I value as one of my dearest and best possessions, and which I never can reflect upon without a quickened heart, if I could charge myself with the slightest shortcoming on this head.

Always My dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

Walter is 13 next month. I will advise, on the direct appointment question,[†3] both with Mr. Stone[†4] and Mr. Trimmer.[†5] I hope he will do his duty steadily, anywhere.

To LIEUT. COLONEL THE HON. C. B. PHIPPS,[†1] 14 JANUARY 1854*

MS Winifred A. Myers (Autographs) Ltd.

Tavistock House, Tavistock Square | Fourteenth January 1854

My Dear Sir

When the Queen and His Royal Highness Prince Albert had the kindness to express their interest in the general scheme of the Guild of Literature and Art, I had the honor of writing to you to beg that whenever it should come to be matured, I might venture to submit its details to your notice.[†2]

Their arrangement has been a matter of great difficulty, involving the consideration of many interests and needs, the pursuit of the higher object through a patient course of present usefulness (to which principle I have myself attached the highest importance), and the consideration of a vast number of contingencies, in which the advice of a skilful actuary has been frequently indispensable.

Even now, in taking the liberty of enclosing to you the plan which is the result of all these deliberations,[†3] I have to add that its publication and operation are for the present suspended by the Law's rendering it necessary that a scheme so comprehensive should be established under a special Act of Parliament. This we hope to obtain in the course of the next ensuing session;[†4] and in the meantime, as a proof that we have not been idle, and therefore undeserving of the Queen's and His Royal Highness's condescension, I trouble you with the present communication.

I have the honor to be | My Dear Sir | Your faithful and obliged Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

Colonel The Hon. C. B. Phipps.

To DR GEORGE WILKES, 14 JANUARY 1854

Extracts in Anderson Galleries catalogue, Dec 1933 (aa) and Charles Hamilton Galleries catalogue No. 92 (1975) (bb); MS I p.; dated Tavistock House, 14 Jan 54; addressed Dr. Wilkes.

[a]If Wednesday next will suit you for our projected entertainment with Mr. Lemon, I will call for you that afternoon (at an hour which you shall be apprised of in good season)[a] ... [b]we will walk over to the great Theatre in the daytime, dine en garcon at the Household Words office which is close by, and wind up before and behind the curtain at the Adelphi.[b†5]

To MISS MARY BOYLE,[†1] 16 JANUARY 1854

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Monday Sixteenth January 1854

My Dear Mary.

It is all very well to pretend to love me as you do—Ah! If you loved as I[†2] love, Mary!—but when my breast is tortured by the perusal of such a letter as yours,[†3] Falkland,[†4] Falkland Madam, becomes my part in the Rivals, and I play it with a desperate earnestness.

As thus:

FALKLAND[†5] (to Acres).[†6] Then you see her Sir, sometimes?

ACRES.[†5] See her! Odds beams and sparkles,[†7] yes. See her acting, night after night.

FALKLAND (aside and furiously). Death and the Devil! Acting, and I not there? Pray Sir (with constrained calmness) what does she act?

ACRES. Odds monthly nurses and babbies! Sairey Gamp and Betsey Prig. 'Which wotever it is my dear' (mimikin) 'I likes it brought reg'lar and draw'd mild'.—That's very like her.

FALKLAND. Confusion! Laceration!—Perhaps Sir, perhaps she sometimes acts—ha ha!—perhaps she sometimes acts, I say—eh Sir?—a—ha ha ha!—a Fairy? (with great bitterness)

ACRES. Odds gauzy pinions and spangles, yes! You should hear her sing as a Fairy. you should see her dance as a Fairy. Tol de rol lol—li—tol—liddle diddle (Sings and dances) That's very like her.

FALKLAND. Misery! While I, devoted to her image, can merely write a little now and then, or pensively read aloud to the people of Birmingham! (To him). And they applaud her, no doubt they applaud her Sir. And she—I see her!—curtsies and smiles! And they—curses on them!—they laugh, and—ha ha ha!—and clap their hands—and say its very good. Do they not say its very good Sir? Tell me. Do they not?

ACRES. Odds thunderings and pealings, of course they do! And the third fiddler, little Tweaks of the County town goes into fits. 'Ho ho ho, I can't bear it' (mimicking) 'take me out! Ha ha ha! O what a one she is! She'll be the death of me. Ha ha ha ha!'—That's very like him!

FALKLAND. Damnation! Heartless Mary! (Rushes out.)

Scene opens, and discloses coals of Fire, heaped up into form of letters, representing the following inscription

When the praise thou meetest
To thine ear is sweetest
O then

[†a]REMEMBER
JOE![†a†8]

(Curtain falls)

To W. W. F. DE CERJAT, 16 JANUARY 1854

Text from MDGH, I, 346-8

Tavistock House, Monday, Jan. 16th, 1854.

My dear Cerjat,

Guilty. The accused pleads guilty, but throws himself upon the mercy of the court. He humbly represents that his usual hour for getting up, in the course of his travels, was three o'clock in the morning, and his usual hour for going to bed, nine or ten the next night. That the places in which he chiefly deviated from these rules of hardship, were Rome and Venice; and that at those cities of fame he shut himself up in solitude, and wrote Christmas papers for the incomparable publication known as "Household Words." That his correspondence at all times, arising out of the business of the said "Household Words" alone, was very heavy. That his offence, though undoubtedly committed, was unavoidable, and that a nominal punishment will meet the justice of the case.

We had only three bad days out of the whole time. After Naples, which was very hot, we had very cold, clear, bright weather. When we got to Chamounix, we found the greater part of the inns shut up and the people gone. No visitors whatsoever, and plenty of snow. These were the very best circumstances under which to see the place, and we stayed a couple of days at the Hôtel de Londres (hastily re-furbished for our entertainment), and climbed through the snow to the Mer de Glace, and thoroughly enjoyed it. Then we went, in mule procession (I walking) to the old hotel at Martigny, where Collins was ill, and I suppose I bored Egg to death by talking all the evening about the time when you and I were there together. Naples (a place always painful to me, in the intense degradation of the people) seems to have only three classes of inhabitants left in it—priests, soldiers (standing army one hundred thousand strong), and spies. Of macaroni we ate very considerable quantities everywhere; also, for the benefit of Italy, we took our share of every description of wine. At Naples I found Layard, the Nineveh traveller, who is a friend of mine and an admirable fellow; so we fraternised and went up Vesuvius together, and ate more macaroni and drank more wine. At Rome, the day after our arrival, they were making a saint at St. Peter's; on which occasion I was surprised to find what an immense number of pounds of wax candles it takes to make the regular, genuine article. From Turin to Paris, over the Mont Cenis, we made only one journey. The Rhone,[†1] being frozen and foggy, was not to be navigated, so we posted from Lyons to Chalons, and everybody else was doing the like, and there were no horses to be got, and we were stranded at midnight in amazing little cabarets, with nothing worth mentioning to eat in them, except the iron stove, which was rusty, and the billiard-table, which was musty. We left Turin on a Tuesday evening, and arrived in Paris on a Friday evening; where I found my son Charley, hot—or I should rather say cold—from Germany, with his arms and legs so grown out of his coat and trousers, that I was ashamed of him, and was reduced to the necessity of taking him, under cover of night, to a ready-made establishment in the Palais Royal, where they put him into balloon-waisted pantaloons, and increased my confusion. Leaving Calais on the evening of Sunday, the 10th of December;[†2] fact of distinguished author's being aboard, was telegraphed to Dover; thereupon authorities of Dover Railway detained train to London for distinguished author's arrival, rather to the exasperation of British public. D. A. arrived at home between ten and eleven that night, thank God, and found all well and happy.

I think you see The Times, and if so, you will have seen a very graceful and good account of the Birmingham readings.[†1] It was the most remarkable thing that England could produce, I think, in the way of a vast intelligent assemblage; and the success was most wonderful and prodigious—perfectly overwhelming and astounding altogether. They wound up by giving my wife a piece of plate, having given me one before; and when you come to dine here (may it be soon!) it shall be duly displayed in the centre of the table.[†2]

Tell Mrs. Cerjat, to whom my love, and all our loves, that I have highly excited them at home here by giving them an account in detail of all your daughters; further, that the way in which Catherine and Georgina have questioned me and cross-questioned me about you all, notwithstanding, is maddening. Mrs. Watson has been obliged to pass her Christmas at Brighton alone with her younger children, in consequence of her two eldest boys coming home to Rockingham from school with the whooping-cough. The quarantine expires to-day, however; and she drives here, on her way back into Northamptonshire, to-morrow.

The sad affair of the Preston strike remains unsettled;[†3] and I hear, on strong authority, that if that were settled, the Manchester people are prepared to strike next.[†4] Provisions very dear, but the people very temperate and quiet in general. So ends this jumble, which looks like the index to a chapter in a book, I find, when I read it over.

Ever, my dear Cerjat, heartily your Friend

[CD]

To T. N. TALFOURD, 16 JANUARY 1854*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Monday Sixteenth January 1854

My Dear Talfourd.

Receiving your book[†5] this morning as I was taking my usual seat in my own room,

I could not forbear cutting the leaves immediately, and stopping every now and then to dip into it luxuriously.

The spirit and truthfulness of the descriptions have an uncommon interest for me, knowing (as I do) both the places[†1] and you so well. But such pleasant remembrances are refreshed in me by the close of the book, that I cannot help writing off this note to tell you what pleasure the two last pages have given me.[†2]

Let me add to this, that I have been particularly impressed by the Preface, which I think in the happiest feeling and the happiest taste. It is an example to all of us, at once of modesty, and of that genial disposition to be pleased which is one of the finest qualities to be found in the heart of Man.[†3] If I had been in a bad humour before reading it, it would have restored me directly. As it is, it has cleared away the fog of the morning and brightened the day.

Ever affectionately Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To SIR JAMES EMERSON TENNENT, 16 JANUARY 1854*

MS Sir John and Lady Langham.

Tavistock House | Monday Sixteenth January 1854

My Dear Tennent.

You may rely upon me most implicitly.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Sir James Emerson Tennent.

To THE HON. MRS RICHARD WATSON, 16 JANUARY 1854

Mention in Anderson Auction catalogue No. 1006 (Oct 1913); dated 16 Jan 54.[†4]

To J. P. HARLEY, 17 JANUARY 1854*

MS Berg Collection. Address: J. P. Harley Esquire | 14 Upper Gower Street.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Seventeenth January 1854

My Dear Harley.

Are you disengaged next Sunday?
If so be
As you are free,

Will you dine with us at 6? We have not a party, but Webster and Stanfield are coming.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

J. P. Harley Esquire.

To MRS MATTHEWS, [?18 JANUARY 1854]

Mention in next.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 18 JANUARY 1854

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Bedford Hotel | Brighton.

Tavistock House | Eighteenth January 1854

My Dear Miss Coutts.

Your letter is as wise as it is kind, and I am sure it is impossible to say more of it than that. I quite agree with you in every particular. I must be but an unreasonable and insensible creature indeed, if I did not.

Charley re-appeared in my room this morning, and told me that he had thought of it all very much, and that he was quite resolved and determined in his wish to devote himself to mercantile pursuits. We had a little talk together, in which (profiting by your observations) I encouraged him as much as possible, and he left me as if he were far more comfortable in his mind on the subject. He is a very good boy indeed, but I feel sure that I do not mistake his character.

Your speaking to him will have great weight with him, I do not doubt. Don't you think it will be advisable to send him back now, within a fortnight or so? On what terms to send him back—that is, how I am to answer the Professor's queries about finding a counting house for him—I am anxious to consult with you. But I am disposed to think that it will be best to send him back to the Professor's house, to study German and Arithmetic, until Midsummer. I am not clear that he is likely to do much good in Germany after that. Whether he might then go, into some place of business in France for a little while, to furbish up his French, may be worth considering. I rather think his practical initiation into business had better be in some busy town here. The inducement to application on his return to Germany, might be the prospect of his coming home to begin life.

I rather think the Professor is a regular stolid German grub, and that he and Charley have got to the best understanding of which they are capable together. His books, his piano, and his pipe, seem to shut out the prospect of their ever coming any closer.

It has occurred to me that in the short remainder of his holidays, the best thing I can do for Charley will be to send him down to the Household Words office for some three hours every day. There is a great deal of correspondence there, and I will get Mr. Wills to dictate some letters to him, and make him abstract some of the innumerable letters and papers that are to be read, and find occupation for him that will require his attention. When you shall have seen Charley, and I shall have seen you, I think it will then be best, for the present, to send him back—always supposing that you are of the same opinion.

I was at Shepherds Bush yesterday, and found everything quiet and favorable. In Tracey's prison last week, I found Hannah Myers (who is there again) sitting next the last girl who robbed the Home. I send £35 to Mrs. Matthews, with an intimation that this closes the correspondence.

I will not attempt to tell you how much I felt your letter and how highly I prize it. It would be hopeless to begin on such a theme after all these years.

With kindest regards to Mr. and Mrs. Brown

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To CHARLES KNIGHT, 18 JANUARY 1854

Extract in Sotheby catalogue, July 1983; MS 1 p.; dated Tavistock House, 18 Jan 54; addressed Charles Knight.

CD is delighted to double the sum already collected.[†1] Is there no better way of helping the old man? Cannot think of any for that kind of poverty unless there is a way of enabling the women to earn more by a slight extension of their little means.

To ARTHUR RYLAND, 18 JANUARY 1854

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: Arthur Ryland Esquire | 18 New Steine | Brighton.

Tavistock House, London | Eighteenth January 1854

My Dear Sir

I am quite delighted to find that you are so well satisfied, and that the enterprise has such a light upon it. I think I never was better pleased in my life than I was with my Birmingham friends.

That principle of fair representation of all orders, carefully carried out, I believe will do more good than any of us can yet foresee. Does it not seem a strange thing to consider, that I have never yet seen with these eyes of mine, a mechanic in any recognized position on the platform of a Mechanics' Institution?[†2]

Mr. Wills may be expected to sink, shortly, under the ravages of letters from all parts of England Ireland and Scotland, proposing Readings. He keeps up his spirits, but I don't see how they are to carry him through.

Mrs. Dickens and Miss Hogarth beg their kindest regards, and I am My Dear Sir with much regard too,

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Arthur Ryland Esquire.

To D. F. MACCARTHY,[†1] 19 JANUARY 1854*

MS (in Wills's hand) Mr J. Stevens Cox. Address: D. F. MacCarthy Esqre | 29 Blessington St. | Dublin.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS
19 January 1854

Mr Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr MacCarthy, and begs to thank him for the volume of Ballads, Poems and Lyrics[†2] which he was so good as to send, and which Mr Dickens accepts with much pleasure.

D. F. MacCarthy Esquire

To JOHN FORSTER, [20 JANUARY 1854]

Extracts in F, VII, i, 564-5. Date: 20 Jan 54 according to Forster and confirmed by heading in CD's hand "Friday January 20th. 1854" (MS V & A).

I wish you would look at the enclosed titles for the H. W. story,[†3] between this and two o'clock or so, when I will call. It is my usual day, you observe, on which I have jotted them down—Friday! It seems to me that there are three very good ones among them. I should like to know whether you hit upon the same.[†4]

1. According to Cocker. 2. Prove it. 3. Stubborn Things. 4. Mr. Gradgrind's Facts. 5. The Grindstone. 6. Hard Times. 7. Two and Two are Four. 8. Something Tangible. 9. Our Hard-headed Friend. 10. Rust and Dust. 11. Simple Arithmetic. 12. A Matter of Calculation. 13. A Mere Question of Figures. 14. The Gradgrind Philosophy.[†5]

To CHARLES COOTE, 21 JANUARY 1854*

MS Mr Peter Goodricke. Address: Charles Coote Esquire.[†1]

Tavistock House | Saturday Twenty First January | 1854.

My Dear Sir

I have this morning received the Household Songs,[†2] and hasten to thank you for them. I am happy to see my name in that association,[†3] and intend to sit down this evening and hear them all, one after another, from beginning to end.

With all good wishes | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Coote Esquire.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 23 JANUARY 1854

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Twenty Third January 1854

My Dear Miss Coutts

Here is the letter of acknowledgement from Mrs. Matthews.[†4]

I am delighted to hear that you are ascending in the scale of constructed animals!—and I shall expect half a dozen words when you come to town, telling me when I may have the satisfaction of contemplating your re-establishment in the cook and butler, housemaid, kitchen maid, scullery maid &c &c &c forces.

You will be glad I am sure to hear that Mr. Wills gives me the best account of Charley at Household Words. He says he is very quick and extremely attentive—"knocks off" writing from dictation, with great vigor—copies with all possible exactness—makes abstracts of Manuscripts cleverly—and is as willing and punctual as it is possible to be. He is proud of being so employed, and I think it does him great good.

As you leave it to me to proceed, I will prepare him to go back, next Wednesday Week; and I will tell him that on condition of his working hard at his German and at Arithmetic, he is not likely to be at Leipzig more than 6 months. I will also write to the Professor at once—and to Taüchnitz—to the same effect. We shall have time to discuss the next step (by we, I mean you and I) before he leaves Leipzig; but I am strongly of opinion that he will get as much good out of the Professor, with this impulse, in six months as he would otherwise get in twelve. You will be able to see him, I hope, before he goes? Of course he is not tied to a day or two, if it should not suit you to see him within the time I have mentioned.

I have fallen to work again. My purpose is among the mighty secrets of the world at present; but there is such a fixed idea on the part of my printers and copartners in Household Words, that a story by me, continued from week to week, would make some unheard-of effect with it, that I am going to write one.[†1] It will be as long as five Nos. of Bleak House, and will be five months in progress.[†2] The first written page now stares at me from under this sheet of note paper. The main idea of it, is one on which you and I and Mrs. Brown have often spoken; and I know it will interest you as a purpose.

Here is your Bleak House too, modestly waiting to be presented.[†3] But what would be the use of my sending it to Stratton Street when there was no butler or other male or female administrator in the house!

With kindest regards | My Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To PROFESSOR O. C. MÜLLER, [23 JANUARY 1854]

Mention in last. Date: no doubt same date as next.

To BERNHARD TAUCHNITZ, 23 JANUARY 1854

Extract from Curt Otto, Der Verlag Bernhard Tauchnitz, 1837-1912, Leipzig, 1912, p. 53.

Tavistock House, Monday night, January 23rd, 1854.

It was a matter of real regret to me that I was abroad when you were in London. For it would have given me true pleasure to have taken your hand and thanked you with all heartiness for your friendship. I hope to do so on the occasion of your next visit, and also that it will not be long before you return here.

Mrs. Dickens and her sister unite with me in best regards to yourself and family.[†4]

To SHIRLEY BROOKS,[†1] 25 JANUARY 1854

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

Tavistock House | Twenty Fifth January 1854 | Wednesday Evening

My Dear Sir

I have read your little book concerning our friend the Autograph,[†2] with very great pleasure. I have not travelled in more agreeable company this many a long day. It is full of good writing, good observation, good humour, and good sense.[†3]

I almost begin to believe that I really am, in the common acceptation of the term, a religious character as to the Austrian Police. I do damn them and everything and everybody belonging to them, with such extraordinary heartiness—and am so Brimstonian and devoid of charity towards them—and have such complacency and satisfaction in this frame of mind—that I think I must be a popular preacher, and the book you rescued[†4] a volume of my sermons (published by subscription, with a portrait of me in my robes, as I appeared going up the pulpit-stairs with my little black book under my arm and my hair curled.)

While I am thanking you, I must take the liberty of saying that a poem of yours I saw in Punch a little while ago, is as delicate and well-turned a piece of satire of that kind as I know.[†5]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Shirley Brooks Esquire.

Are you getting ancient? My friend is"drawing" immense sums I believe.[†6]

To MISS EMMA HARDING,[†1] [?25 JANUARY 1854]

Mention in To Wills, 25 Jan 54.

To ROBERT RAWLINSON,[†2] 25 JANUARY 1854

Text from The Times, 6 Feb 80.

Tavistock House, | January 25, 1854.

My dear Sir,

I assure you that we are all extremely sensible of your kind remembrance, and much indebted to you for your invitation.[†3] But, though reasonably loyal, we do not much care for such sights, and consequently feel that you ought to bestow the places you so obligingly offer us on some more deserving objects. The last ceremony of that kind I ever saw was the Queen's coronation, and I thought it looked poor in comparison with my usual country walk. As to Parliament, it does so little and talks so much that the most interesting ceremony I know of in connexion with it was performed (with very little state indeed) by one man, who just cleared it out, locked up the place, and put the keys in his pocket.[†4]

My dear Sir, very faithfully yours,

CHARLES DICKENS

Robert Rawlinson, Esq.

To W. H. WILLS, 25 JANUARY 1854*

MS Huntington Library.

Tavistock House | Twenty Fifth January 1854

My Dear Wills

Will you look at the enclosed note from Miss Emma Harding, and my reply? I spoke to you about her papers at Boulogne, and thought they had been returned ages ago. Please pack them off, together with my note, to her address at once.

I want (for the story I am trying to hammer out) the Educational Board's series of questions[†5] for the examination of teachers in schools.[†6] Will you get it.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT,[†1] [?JANUARY 1854]

Mention in To Forster, 16 May 54. Date: probably one of the refusals to give a reading mentioned to Forster on 27 Jan 54, in answer to requests following the Birmingham readings of Dec 53.

Declining to give a public Christmas reading in Colchester.

To JOHN FORSTER, [27 JANUARY 1854]

Extract in F, VII, ii, 572. Date: 27 Jan 54 according to Forster.

After correspondence with all parts of England, and every kind of refusal and evasion on my part, I am now obliged to decide this question—whether I shall read two nights at Bradford for a hundred pounds.[†2] If I do, I may take as many hundred pounds[†3] as I choose.[†4]

To HERBERT INGRAM,[†5] 27 JANUARY 1854*

MS Mrs H. H. C. Ingram.

Tavistock House | Friday Night Twenty Seventh Jany | 1854

Dear Sir

With great reluctance I am obliged to throw myself on your forgiveness, and to beg to postpone my visit to you. I am obliged to go into the North tomorrow morning,[†6] and I do not see the possibility of my returning before Monday night at the earliest. Our two friends[†7] who were to have accompanied me to your house, will testify that I am one of the most punctual of men. But this is an engagement of business which only arose in this definite shape today, and which comes between me and pleasure most unexpectedly.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

—Ingram Esquire

To JOHN LEECH, 27 JANUARY 1854

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Friday Night Twenty Seventh Jany. | 1854.

My Dear Leech.

Read the enclosed!![†1] Having read the fatal missive, will you wet the adhesive on the envelope and give it back to French[†2]—I suppose to take to the place where it is addressed. You will answer for me that you never knew me break an engagement before, except when Mr. Pitt was invited by the Duchess of Gordon to dine in the Indian manner.[†3] The excuse is no excuse, but a literal truth. I am off two hundred miles in the morning, and do not see how I can possibly get back before Monday night. It is no excursion of pleasure, but real Household Words business[†4]—nor had I any idea of going, until today.

With kind regards to Mrs. Leech, who I am glad to hear is herself again,

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Leech Esquire

To MARK LEMON, 27 JANUARY 1854*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Friday Night Twenty Seventh Jany. | 1854

My Dear Mark

I am obliged to write and put Mr. Ingram off. Wills and I are away a couple of hundred miles in the morning—as you may suppose on business and nothing but business—and I do not see how we can be back before Monday night. You know I would not break an engagement on light grounds.

In haste | Ever affecy.

CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [29 JANUARY 1854]

Extract in F, VII, i, 567. Date: the day after his going to Preston on 28 Jan.

I am afraid I shall not be able to get much here.[†5] Except the crowds at the street-corners reading the placards pro and con; and the cold absence of smoke from the mill-chimneys; there is very little in the streets to make the town remarkable.[†6] I am told that the people "sit at home and mope."[†1] The delegates with the money from the neighbouring places come in to-day to report the amounts they bring; and tomorrow the people are paid. When I have seen both these ceremonies,[†2] I shall return. It is a nasty place (I thought it was a model town); and I am in the Bull Hotel,[†3] before which some time ago the people assembled supposing the masters to be here, and on demanding to have them out were remonstrated with by the landlady in person. I saw the account in an Italian paper, in which it was stated that "the populace then environed the Palazzo Bull, until the padrona of the Palazzo heroically appeared at one of the upper windows and addressed them!" One can hardly conceive anything less likely to be represented to an Italian mind by this description, than the old, grubby, smoky, mean, intensely formal red brick house with a narrow gateway and a dingy yard, to which it applies.[†4] At the theatre last night I saw Hamlet,[†5] and should have done better to "sit at home and mope" like the idle workmen. In the last scene, Laertes on being asked how it was with him replied (verbatim) "Why, like a woodcock—on account of my treachery."[†6]

To UNIDENTIFIED SANITARY ASSOCIATION, [LATE JANUARY 1854]

Mention in To Gaskell, 5 Feb 54. Date: "a week" before that letter.

Declining to address the Association, because of work.

February

To AUGUSTUS TRACEY, 1 FEBRUARY 1854*

MS University of Texas.

Tavistock House | Wednesday Night | First February 1854

My Dear Tracey

I have seen Miss Coutts, and I will come down to you tomorrow (Thursday) afternoon at from ½ past 3 to 4. I suppose our fair friend[†1] could go to Holly Lodge next morning per omnibus, if I should think it desirable?

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To THOMAS BEARD, 2 FEBRUARY 1854

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Place | Edgeware Road.

Tavistock House | Thursday Second February 1854

My Dear Beard

Next Tuesday is my birthday. We purpose on that great National occasion going down to Waite's[†2] at Gravesend, and there dining at 5 O'Clock. Will you join us? Or do you think you could manage a whole holiday? In that case we would go freshly down by Steamer early in the morning, walk to Rochester, and return through Cobham Woods—taking a clean pair of boots, for comfort's sake, in a carpet bag.

If the Griffin[†3] does not put his hoof in the business, I think this would be pleasant.

Ever Faithfully
CD

P.S. The other day I heard the nurse say to the Baby, "Master Plornish Maroon, there's your pa a callin for you."

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 2 FEBRUARY 1854

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Thursday Night | Second February 1854

My Dear Miss Coutts.

You will be disappointed in the appearance of Mrs. Marchmont the Shepherd's Bush Candidate.[†4] She has none of the brightness of Mrs. Morson, is common looking, and lumpish. But she is quietly confident herself, and Tracey is so certain of her that he staggers me. His domain is so extremely well kept, and he is such an admirable administrator, that I have no right to think him wrong when he expresses such absolute confidence. But I must add (with the risk of contradiction by experience, before me) that I never should have derived that confidence myself, from any feature in this "good lady's" face.

She could be put under Mrs. Morson's direction immediately, and could form herself during the rest of Mrs. Morson's stay.

I have received the enclosed letter and accounts as you see them, from Mr. Austin.[†1]

My Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 3 FEBRUARY 1854*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Friday Third February 1854

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I will see Elliotson, and ascertain the name. From his description, I think it must be a poor lady with the singularly inappropriate name of Goodluck.[†2]

I would certainly see Mrs. White,[†3] and make a comparison between her appearance and that of Mrs. Marchmont. I cannot say, however, that Mrs. White's testimonial seems to have much bearing on what we want in her. And I am a little afraid of that intensely respectable family!

I have paid, besides Charley's accounts which you have:

Mrs. Matthews	£35.	0.	0
The poor schoolmistress[†4]	10.	0.	0

In reference to the £40 paid on account of the Westminster business,[†5] I find in my banking book that a cheque for £40 drawn for you (I use the cabalistic sign in such a case "Trust, B.C.") was paid on the 7th. March. That, I have no doubt, was the cheque for Mr. Austin, which, by his note, would seem to have been drawn on the 27th. February. Now on the 4th. of March, I find by the same banking book, that you repaid me £132. 5. 5.[†6] As I have not the least recollection of your owing me this £40, I think it must have been included in that amount. How does this seem to you—when you have got over the head ache occasioned by these terrific figures?

My Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

To COVENTRY PATMORE,[†1] 4 FEBRUARY 1854*

MS Dartmouth College, New Hampshire.

Tavistock House | Fourth February 1854

Dear Sir

I am exceedingly reluctant to send you back the enclosed Verses,[†2] for there is matter in them that I think very good indeed, and your own opinion of them naturally has weight with me. But I cannot satisfy myself that the case is so fairly stated, as to justify me in presenting it in that strong contrast—the rather as any little injustice in such a regard, invariably damages the cause intended to be served.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Coventry Patmore Esquire.

To THOMAS BEARD, 5 FEBRUARY 1854

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | Morning Herald Office | Shoe Lane | Fleet Street.

Tavistock House | Sunday Night | Fifth February 1854

My Dear Beard.

Unless the day on Tuesday should be what the Americans call "a reglar Down Easter", I purpose taking the Blackwall Train which leaves Fenchurch Street at 12—and you know (I believe) that a little thing won't put me off. In case of your being by any accident (which Fate and its attendant Griffins forbid!) detained, there is a train from London Bridge Terminus at 2, and another at 3..40. Hostelry, Waite's Hotel Gravesend. Dinner hour, 5.

Ever Cordially Yours
CD

Thomas Beard Esquire

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 5 FEBRUARY 1854

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Sunday Fifth February 1854

My Dear Miss Coutts

Here is Dr. Elliotson's reply, in reference to the poor ladies.[†1] I was not wrong in my supposition that the name must be Goodluck.

Most Faithfully Yours
CD.

To THE REV. WILLIAM GASKELL, 5 FEBRUARY 1854

MS John Rylands Library. Address: The Reverend William Gaskell | Plymouth Grove | Manchester.

Tavistock House | Fifth February 1854

My Dear Mr. Gaskell.

I assure you with great reluctance that I am really unable to do what you ask me.[†2] I have so much to do, and add so many items of business in the sanitary way (both physical and moral) to the regular occupations of my life, that I am positively afraid to encroach by a hair's breadth on my rest and recreation. I know that my compliance with your request would only occupy me a couple of days or so, after I should have decided what to do; but the consciousness of having departed from my enforced principle and pledged myself to anything new, would worry and beset me from that moment, and not only put me off from that task but hamper me in every other. I hold my ability to do my work as a pleasure, on this tenure; and I never have been able, and never shall be able, to lighten its conditions. I was obliged to give this same explanation to another sanitary body seeking my assistance, only a week ago. I believe I repeat it, in one form or other, at least a thousand times a year.

I hope you understand me, and that you feel that I do not merely excuse myself.

You do not say that Mrs. Gaskell was delighted with the external aspect of Paris,[†3] but I suppose I may take that for granted. I am sorry, however, that her first impressions were not formed on a fine evening in the early summer,[†4] with the whole City turned inside out, and all its inhabitants sitting out of doors. Will you tell her on her return (if you see her before I do) that I have had all the calculations she wanted,[†5] exactly made; and that I will send them if she waves her pen as a token that she will like to have them.

Mrs. Dickens and Miss Hogarth send their kindest regards.

Believe me | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Reverend William Gaskell.

To MRS GRETTON,[†1] 5 FEBRUARY 1854

Extract in David J. Holmes catalogue No. 27 (1990); MS 1 ½ pp.; dated Tavistock House, 5 Feb 54; addressed Mrs Gretton.

The arrears of business consequent on my foreign trip, coupled with Christmas holidays and home-expeditions to Birmingham and Preston, have prevented my reading the Blind Man's Wreath until very lately.... I retain it for early insertion in Household Words.[†2]

To DR LYON PLAYFAIR, 5 FEBRUARY 1854*

MS Imperial College of Science and Technology.

Tavistock House | Sunday Fifth February | 1854

My Dear Dr. Playfair.

I am very much obliged to you for your thoughtful remembrance in reference to the enclosed leaf from our good friend's Log.[†3]

I cannot say that any amount of usage reconciles me to the publication of small platitudes about myself personally, which have nothing in them, which from their very nature can have nothing in them, and which cannot (I conceive) have the faintest earthly interest for any human being. There is something, to me, so intensely ludicrous in being the helpless hero of these blanks in the gossip-lottery, that I always feel as if I were being shaved against my will with a street door scraper, and having my hair combed the wrong way with a garden rake, when I read them. I liked the Captain very much however, and I know he means well, and I really have not the moral courage to ask him to blot me out.[†4]

Believe me | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Dr. Lyon Playfair.

To CLARKSON STANFIELD,[†1] 5 FEBRUARY 1854

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Tavistock House | Sunday Night Fifth February | 1854.

My Dear Stanny.

Unless it should rain cats, dogs, pitchforks, and Cochin China poultry,—the Train which leaves Fenchurch Street at 12 on Tuesday and arrives at Blackwall (to meet a Gravesend boat) at ¼ past 12, is my means of going down. In case of very bad weather, or our not meeting through any other cause, observe that there is a Gravesend train from London Bridge Terminus at 2, and another at 3..40. The Rendezvous is Waite's Hotel, Gravesend, and the dinner hour 5.

Ever Affectionately
CD.

Clarkson Stanfield Esqre.

To JAMES WATES,[†2] 5 FEBRUARY 1854*

MS Boston Athenaeum.

Tavistock House | Sunday Fifth February 1854.

Mr. Charles Dickens sends his Compliments to Mr. Waite, and begs to say, that he wishes to have prepared in a convenient private room on Tuesday next the 7th. a good dinner for eight persons[†3] at five o'Clock punctually—some champagne ready in Ice—&c &c. As the party will probably come down early in the day, for a walk, he begs that there may be a good fire in the room by noon. He will be glad to receive one line in answer by return, to assure him that this note has not miscarried.

To R. J. LANE,[†4] [?6 FEBRUARY 1854]

Mention in To Lane, 9 Feb 54.

To A. H. LAYARD, 6 FEBRUARY 1854

MS British Library.

Tavistock House | Monday Sixth February 1854

My Dear Layard.

An Act of Parliament is necessary for the Incorporation of our Guild of Literature and Art,[†1] and Mr. Coates[†2] has prepared a short bill for the purpose.[†3] It will want a second name on its back besides Bulwer's; and he and I (Bulwer is my antecedent here) agree that it could not have a better or more appropriate one than yours. I have told Mr. Coates the Parliamentary Agent, that I thought I could answer for you. If the Committee on the Standing Orders decide to suspend them in its favor, the bill will be printed I believe in the course of this week.

Always Very Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Austen H. Layard Esquire

To PETER CUNNINGHAM, 7 FEBRUARY 1854

Text from N, II, 541.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Morning Seventh February 1854

My Dear Cunningham.

I know you must be going out to dinner somewhere today, but be false to somebody and dine with me at 5, at a hurried little spread of half a dozen, at Waite's Hotel, Gravesend. It's my birthday. I am going down by Blackwall train at 12, then by boat—for a walk's sake. There is a North Kent line train at 2, and another at 3.40.

Ever affecy. Yrs.
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 7 FEBRUARY 1854*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Holly Lodge | Highgate.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Seventh February 1854 | (My birthday)

My Dear Miss Coutts.

Will you read the enclosed letter, and give me your opinion on the expediency of my seeing the girl to whom it refers. I am inclined to do so, as a great deal must depend on the degree of her weakness. But if you should have any objection to the sort of case, then I had best leave her alone.

I cannot tell you how concerned I am that you should have the least cause of vexation, at this late hour, with Mrs. Morson. Or how curious I am to know what the cause is.

It is very perverse of you to have your Westminster party on Thursday, for it is my Household Words day, and my Sub Editor is ill, and I fear I shall not be able to get away before the evening. If I should be agreeably disappointed however, I will not fail to present myself.

May Marchmont prosper! I quite agree with you that so strong a recommendation from Tracey ought reasonably to turn the scale in her favor. I should attach hardly any importance to such a recommendation from our other Governor:[†1] but coming from him, I think it must have something in it. She is large—and also flabbier than I could wish.

Always Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

To MESSRS L. & H. NATHAN,[†2] 7 FEBRUARY 1854*

MS L. & H. Nathan Ltd.

Tavistock House, London | Seventh February 1854.

This is to certify that Messrs. Nathan of Titchbourne Street Haymarket London, were employed to make dresses for the performances of the Amateur Company of the Guild of Literature and Art, which were under my direction; and also that they have been similarly employed by me on many other occasions, public and private. They have always given me the utmost satisfaction. I can highly recommend them as excellent makers of costumes and fancy dresses—as being in all respects obliging, punctual, and reliable, and reasonable in their charges.

CHARLES DICKENS

To CLARKSON STANFIELD, 7 FEBRUARY 1854

Mention in catalogue of Library of late Jonas Skougaard, Oslo, Sep 1969; MS 1 p.; dated 7 Feb 54.

To MRS WILLS, 8 FEBRUARY 1854*

MS Mrs Edmond Kapp.

Tavistock House | Eighth February 1854

My Dear Mrs Wills.

Pray let me know how the Invalid is, this morning. I was very sorry indeed to miss him yesterday.

Ever Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To MESSRS BRADBURY & EVANS, 9 FEBRUARY 1854*

MS Yale University Library.

Tavistock House | Thursday Ninth February 1854

My Dear B and E.

I wish you would consider whether there is any thing wanting in this advertisement.[†1] It looks plain, to me.

Always Faithfully Yours

CD.

To HENRY BURNETT,[†2] 9 FEBRUARY 1854*

MS Mr Edward S. Moore, III. Address: Henry Burnett Esquire | 98 Upper Brook Street | Manchester.

Tavistock House | Ninth February 1854

My Dear Burnett.

You must not damage yourself by your delicacy towards me. When you feel that you have no escape (if the case should ever strongly arise again) leave it to me to get out of the botheration as well as I can.

I have received the Captain's letter of introduction, and the lady is coming tomorrow.[†3] Of course the acceptance of her papers must entirely depend on their own merits and suitability to Household Words, and therefore she has as much real reason for coming as for going to the top of St. Pauls. However, she is one of ten thousand.

I am sorry to hear that you have had so much trouble;—but I should entreat you under any circumstances on no account to think of the repayment of that trifle[†4] until you grow rich—or to think that I think of it.

Catherine and Georgina send their loves. We were all very much pleased to find Charley[†5] such a rosy, well mannered, good frank boy.

Faithfully Yours ever

CHARLES DICKENS

Henry Burnett Esquire.

To LOUIS D'ELBOUX,[†1] 9 FEBRUARY 1854†

MS Princeton University Library. Address: Louis Delboux Esquire | Park Road | Freemantle | Southampton.

Tavistock House | Ninth February 1854

Dear Louis

I have never heard of my intention to visit the Ordnance Map Office,[†2] nor do I hear of many of my intentions until they come to me for my astonishment. But if that subject ever should be treated in Household Words, I will take care that you suffer no injustice in its pages.[†3]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To FREDERICK GYE,[†4] 9 FEBRUARY 1854*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Tavistock House, Tavistock Square | Ninth February 1854.

Dear Sir

You may perhaps have a general knowledge of the sad case of Mrs. Warner,[†5] formerly of Covent Garden and Drury Lane Theatres, who is dying of cancer in one of its most terrible forms, but who may yet linger for months in a state of hopeless suffering.[†6]

The Queen has been extremely kind to her, and a small committee of gentlemen have endeavoured to do something to put her mind at ease with reference to the wants of her own dire illness and of her family.[†7] It is in contemplation to have a Benefit for her which the Queen would patronize—I ought rather to say, the idea is under consideration. One of the first questions that have arisen, is, whether it would be practicable to get Covent Garden Theatre for one night—say the first off-night after its being opened for the next opera season. Before proceeding further, I have undertaken to ask you whether you could make it consistent with your arrangements to render this unfortunate lady so great a service.[†8]

Allow me to assure you that I am quite sensible of the magnitude of this petition, as well as of the very many reasons that may render it impossible for you to entertain it. I cannot refuse to accept the trust of writing to you, but I beg you to understand that I discharge it with every consideration for the many demands on a gentleman in your position.

Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

Frederick Gye Esquire.

To R. J. LANE, 9 FEBRUARY 1854

MS Mr W. A. Foyle.

Tavistock House | Ninth February 1854

My Dear Lane

Your note of Monday's date crossed the note from the Lord Chamberlain's office[†1] which (with all befitting ceremonies) answered the note from the Board of Green Cloth.[†2] I assure you that we should have been very happy to come, if we had not been hampered with an unlucky engagement. I said, when the invitation (here, I mean yours) was produced, "We will go!" upon which they set up a shrill cry of "Go! How can[†3] we go! Don't you know[†4] we're engaged?" I had previously told them all about Percy Street,[†5] so I said we had no business to be engaged—though I had made the engagement myself.

But we will all hope for a more auspicious horoscope before long.

Very truly Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard J Lane Esquire.

To THE REV. WILLIAM VALENTINE,[†6] 9 FEBRUARY 1854

Extract in Carnegie Book Shop catalogue No. 200; MS (3rd person) 1 p.; dated Tavistock House, 9 Feb 54.

Mr. Dickens has a great objection to associating himself, merely in name, with anything and would feel such a proceeding particularly discourteous in the case of so justly eminent a man.[†7]

To MRS GASKELL, 10 FEBRUARY 1854

Mention in American Art Association catalogue, Nov 1925; MS 1 p.; dated Tavistock House, Friday Evening, 10 Feb 54.

To FREDERIC OUVRY,[†1] 10 FEBRUARY 1854*

MS Ivor L. Poole Ltd.

Tavistock House | Friday Night Tenth February | 1854

My Dear Sir

I wrote to Mr. Layard as a matter of course, as soon as it was settled that his name would be an appropriate and good one for the bill.[†2] He immediately assented and is quite prepared. I write to Mr. Coates by this post, to tell him so.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Frederic Ouvry Esquire

To THOMAS COATES, [10 FEBRUARY 1854]

Mention in last.

To MESSRS COUTTS & CO., 13 FEBRUARY 1854*

MS The Earl of Harrowby.

Tavistock House | Thirteenth February 1854

Messrs. Coutts and Co.

Please to deliver my banking-book to the Bearer,—

CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 14 FEBRUARY 1854*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Holly Lodge | Highgate.

Tavistock House | Fourteenth February 1854

My Dear Miss Coutts

My faculties have not been greatly taxed to discover that in the De Foe case, as in all others, you are always like yourself and nobody else.

Mr. Charles Knight found the old man out, and came to confer with me on the matter. It is a perfectly genuine unaffected business. He has a wife and daughter who take in washing—he has had many children—they are poor—very clean and very industrious—and make no wry faces. The old fellow does not even pretend to have any particular literary interest in his illustrious Ancestor. He said he had read Robinson Crusoe once (!) but confinements and funerals came very expensive, and his had been a working life, and he had never had much time for anything else. Of his relationship there is no kind of doubt. Mr. Knight went into the case very carefully, and satisfied himself on that head by the plainest evidence.

A few of us are allowing them now £12 a year.[†1]—I say "a year"—but I ought rather to say we have some £20 in hand altogether, and are dealing out at that rate. Your ten will be a most noble Godsend, and will be most gratefully regarded by all.

I was out at Shepherds Bush on Saturday all day, making up the book. I want to confer with you about that little Rhena Pollard who has got the better of the establishment as yet by persisting in telling me the most audacious lie; but who must be brought to book somehow.

This leaves me in the act of cracking my head over my new story.

Dear Miss Coutts | Ever Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

I will enquire about Mrs. Goldsmith, directly.

To CHARLES KNIGHT, 14 FEBRUARY 1854

Summary in Sotheby catalogue, July 1983; dated Tavistock House, 14 Feb 54; addressed Charles Knight.

Miss Coutts will give the Defoe family ten pounds a year and CD will be the banker.

To FREDERICK GYE, 15 FEBRUARY 1854

MS Private.

Tavistock House | Fifteenth February 1854

Dear Sir

I am sorry that I was not at home when you did me the honor to call here.

If you will oblige me by letting me know when I can see you at the Theatre, I will arrange to call upon you there at any time most convenient to yourself. I am very anxious to discharge myself of this responsibility as soon as possible, for the accounts I receive from day to day of the poor lady[†2] are most affecting.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Frederic Gye Esquire.

To C. J. WHITMORE,[†1] [?MID-FEBRUARY 1854]

Mention in Whitmore's address to the annual meeting of the Ragged School Union, 7 May 1877 (Ragged School Union Quarterly Record, July 1877, II, 98). Date: Whitmore stated that some years before, a week after "Nobody's Child" appeared in HW, he wrote to CD. There is no such article, but he almost certainly referred to W. B. Jerrold's "Anybody's Child" (4 Feb 54, VIII, 551), on the uncared-for waifs on the London streets, confusing the title with "Nobody's Story" in the Christmas No. of 1853.

Replying to Whitmore's suggestion that he could show him "Nobody's Child"; a kind letter, saying he could not take up all "Nobody's" children, but would see this particular specimen.[†2]

To MESSRS BRADBURY & EVANS, [MID-FEBRUARY 1854]

Mention in last, fn. Date: no doubt the same day or a day later.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 16 FEBRUARY 1854*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Holly Lodge | Highgate.

Tavistock House | Sixteenth February 1854

My Dear Miss Coutts

The enclosed is from Mrs. Goldsmith. Poor lady, I had no idea that she had suffered this heavy loss.[†3]

Ever Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 16 FEBRUARY 1854*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Holly Lodge | Highgate.

Tavistock House | Thursday Sixteenth February | 1854

My Dear Miss Coutts

The £15 I have safely received enclosed in your note, and will duly apply as you desire. Of course I shall be delighted to discharge my trust in reference to Dr. Elliotson.[†1]

I have sent you a note this morning from Mrs. Goldsmith. You will receive it after this, I suppose.

I take this opportunity of sending Bleak House. I have been taken away from my work this morning in endeavouring to reconcile managerial jealousies and bring about a serviceable benefit for Mrs. Warner. Her husband brings me accounts of her illness, so exquisitely painful that I ache afterwards from head to foot.

Ever My Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

I think it a pity Mrs. Morson took that step—but under all the circumstances it seems to me nothing graver than a hasty error of judgment.

To CHARLES KNIGHT, 16 FEBRUARY 1854

Summary in Sotheby catalogue, July 1983: MS 1 p.; dated Tavistock House, 16 Feb 54; addressed Charles Knight.

CD will come to hold proposed council[†2] with pleasure. But cannot dine out before Saturday 25th.[†3]

To R. R. MADDEN, 16 FEBRUARY 1854*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House London | Thursday Sixteenth February 1854

My Dear Sir

I hope I can shew you at once why it was necessary to take out those passages in the letters which you desire to restore.[†4]

When I came home from Italy, the first time, I wrote a little book called Pictures from Italy. The greater part of its contents I had written home in letters while I was there. Getting these sketches together, I remembered among others which had amused me in the writing, those passages which have attracted your attention; and I said to Lady Blessington "I remember having written such and such things to you. Do you think you have the letters by you?"[†5] She had, and lent them to me, and those extracts were published verbatim in the volume. They are extremely well known to a large number of readers (the Volume has been since republished in my cheap edition), and it would unquestionably do your book no good to present them at second hand.[†6]

I assure you that I have no letters of Lady Blessington's by me which possess the kind of interest you describe.[†1] They all refer to occasions when we have been together, and to people we have been unreserved about, or to other affairs of a confidential nature. I should be most happy to render you the least assistance if it were within my power.

My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Dr. Madden.

To DR F. H. F. QUIN, 16 FEBRUARY 1854*

MS Mr Brian Lake.

Tavistock House | Sixteenth February 1854

My Dear Homo.[†2]

Can you (and will you) dine here on Sunday week the 26th. at 6 o'Clock? No party—not more than half a dozen whom you know.

Faithfully Yours

Dr. Quin.

To MRS YOUNG,[†3] 16 FEBRUARY 1854†

MS Yale University Library.

Tavistock House | Sixteenth February 1854

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mrs. Young, and begs to express his regret that the accompanying paper is not adapted to Household Words. It is like any ordinary essay—using the word ordinary in the sense of its being designed for publication anywhere—and has nothing in common with the pervading spirit he tries to preserve in that journal. It is so removed from it that he finds himself unable to suggest what would bring it nearer. The indifferent administration of justice in India, and the heavy exactions to which the native population is exposed, have been already touched upon in Household Words in a dramatic account of a court of law,[†4] and in another article called a Pull at the Pagoda tree[†5]—or The Great Indian Bean Stalk[†6]—he does not accurately remember which, at the moment.[†7] The Indian Furlough regulations have also been treated of.[†8] It is necessary for such a purpose, to present some special evil in an animated life-like manner—as a thing seen by the writer, or going on before the reader. It is not enough to tell that India is misgoverned in this respect or in that (which everybody knows), but the aim of such pages is to shew a striking instance as a play might shew it. Thus in the case of Soldiers' Wives, of which Mrs. Young spoke, as a subject of which she had personal knowledge. It would be comparatively useless and hopeless to tell in a general didactic way, in Household Words, that soldiers' wives suffer such and such great inconveniences. But an account of them, written like a soldier's wife, and presented as by a woman who had actually undergone them, would be quite another thing.[†1]

To MARK LEMON, 17 FEBRUARY 1854*

MS Salisbury House Library, Iowa.

Tavistock House | Friday Seventeenth February 1854

My Dear Mark

I meant to have asked you last night for Tom Taylor's[†2] address[†3]—but the one absorbing interest drove it out of my head.

Ever affecy

CD.

To MRS GASKELL, 18 FEBRUARY 1854

MS John Rylands Library.

Tavistock House | Eighteenth February 1854

My Dear Mrs. Gaskell.

I am sorry to say that I am not one of the Zoologicals,[†4] or I should have been delighted to have had a hand in the introduction of a child to the lions and tigers. But Wills shall send up to the gardens[†5] this morning and see if Mr. Mitchell the Secretary[†6] can be found. If he be producible, I have no doubt that I can send you what you want, in the course of today.

Such has been the distraction of my mind in my story that I have twice forgotten to tell you how much I liked the Modern Greek Songs.[†7] The article is printed and at press for the very next Number as ever is.

Don't you put yourself out at all, as to the division of the story[†8] into parts. I think you had far better write it in your own way. When we come to get a little of it into type, I have no doubt of being able to make such little suggestions as to breaks of chapters, as will carry us over all that, easily.[†1]

My Dear Mrs. Gaskell | Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MARK LEMON, 20 FEBRUARY 1854

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Monday Twentieth February 1854

My Dear Mark

Will you note down and send me any slang terms among tumblers and Circuspeople, that you can call to mind?[†2] I have noted down some—I want them in my new story—but it is very probable that you will recall several which I have not got.

Ever affectionately
CD.

To MESSRS W. CUBITT & CO., 22 FEBRUARY 1854*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Wednesday Twenty Second February | 1854.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Messrs W Cubitt & Co. and begs to say that he will pay to their account at Smith Payne's a cheque for the amount of his account, on the third of March.[†3]

To JOSEPH ELLIS,[†4] 23 FEBRUARY 1854*

MS Mrs K. M. Jonas. Address: Mr. Joseph Ellis | Bedford Hotel | Brighton.

Tavistock House. | Twenty Third February 1854

Dear Mr. Ellis

I would assist you (as I hope I have no need to say) in reference to the subject of your letter, if it were at all in my way or within my power. But I have not had the least connexion with the Daily News for years and years—since it was a few months old, in short—and have never once addressed anybody belonging to it, on any subject connected with it.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To WILKIE COLLINS, 24 FEBRUARY 1854

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Friday Night | Twenty Fourth February 1854

My Dear Collins

Sitting reading tonight, it comes into my head to say, that if you look into Montaigne's journey into Italy (not much known now, I think, except to readers), you will find some passages that would be curious for extract.[†1] They are very well translated into a sounding kind of old English, in Hazlitt's translation of Montaigne.[†2]

If you are disengaged next Saturday, March the 4th. and it should be a fine day, what do you say to making it the occasion for our Rochester trip?

Faithfully Yours always
CD.

W. Wilkie Collins Esquire

To [?GEORGE G. CASS],[†3] 25 FEBRUARY 1854*

MS Mr Brian Lake.

Tavistock House London | Twenty Fifth February 1854.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Cass, and begs to say that his engagements render it impossible that he can entertain Mr. Cass's request. He has to add, in all good humour, that it is not his custom to go out upon hire.

To SAMUEL PHELPS,[†1] 25 FEBRUARY 1854†

MS Rosenbach Museum and Library.

Tavistock House | Twenty Fifth February 1854

My Dear Sir

You will not have to pull down that wall.[†2] I am sorry to inform you that the difficulties in the way of the Queen's coming to Sadlers Wells, are insurmountable.[†3] But a very just reference is made to you and the Theatre, in Colonel Phipps's letter.[†4]

Will you come here tomorrow an hour before dinner—that is to say, at 5—and let us again review the circumstances and see if we can hit out any hopeful plan of paying these good people.[†5] I feel almost terrified at the idea of their losing their money.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Samuel Phelps Esquire.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 27 FEBRUARY 1854*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Monday Twenty Seventh February | 1854

My Dear Miss Coutts.

Is your Drury Lane box disengaged for tonight? If it be, will you let me have it. I have a morbid curiosity to see a new phase that is to be presented there,[†6] in the decline of a place that I once had a great interest in, and have had my hand in through many a long hour.[†7]

Tomorrow is the Committee day at Shepherd's Bush. If you could manage to be there under these circumstances of change, I think it would be serviceable. I begin to hope that Wallace[†1] may stop.

Ever Most Faithfully Yours
CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?FEBRUARY 1854]

Extract in F, VII, i, 565. Date: written, according to Forster, "in the course of [Hard Times] and after a few weeks' trial" at producing weekly Nos. To Lemon, 26 Feb, shows that he was already writing the third.

The difficulty of the space is C R U S H I N G . Nobody can have an idea of it who has not had an experience of patient fiction-writing with some elbow-room always, and open places in perspective. In this form, with any kind of regard to the current number, there is absolutely no such thing.[†2]

March

To JOHN KENYON, 1 MARCH 1854*

MS Fales Collection, New York University Library.

Tavistock House | First March 1854

My Dear Mr. Kenyon

I am sorry to say that I am engaged on the seventh. I had dim misgivings on the subject when your note arrived while I was dressing this morning, and so did not answer it until my two flappers[†3] were up. They received my enquiry with shrill reproaches, and the present missive is the forlorn result.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Kenyon Esquire

To MARK LEMON, 1 MARCH 1854

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | First March 1854

My Dear Mark

If I were not unfortunately engaged, I should have had the greatest pleasure in dining with Madame Celeste[†1] today. For you know what a high opinion I always have of her good sense and thorough knowledge of her art. But the short notice floors me—though I have half a mind to back out of my previous "bespeak".

Ever affecy.
CD.

Over[†2]

I think Webster mad in that speculation[†3]—just stark mad.

To CHARLES EDMONDS,[†4] 2 MARCH 1854*

MS Mr Laurence H. Eldredge.

Tavistock House | Second March 1854

My Dear Sir

I have gone through your second edition[†5] with great pleasure, and am surprised to find how much you had done to add to the interest of the book. I admire the genuine spirit in which you have done it, and wish some other editors I know of were as hearty and as honest.

Accept my thanks for your note and the book, and Believe me

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Edmonds Esquire.

P.S.

Mr. Willis[†6] is not ruined yet, I observe, though he seemed rather bent on being destroyed by some unknown person or persons when there was a meeting in the Strand on the great Bickers and Bush[†7] question.[†8]

To FREDERICK DICKENS, 3 MARCH 1854

Mention in N, II, 543 (from catalogue source); MS 1 p.; dated Tavistock House, 3 Mar 54.

Making an appointment.

To ALFRED WALLIS,[†1] 5 MARCH 1854

Mention in catalogue of Library of late Jonas Skougaard, Oslo, Sep 1969; MS 1 p.; dated 5 Mar 54.

To C. H. BLACKWOOD,[†2] 6 MARCH 1854*

Text from transcript by Walter Dexter, checked from MS Christie's, July 1971.

Tavistock House, London | Sixth March 1854

Dear Sir

Allow me, in acknowledging the receipt of your very obliging letter, to assure you that I am truly sensible of the worth of the confidence and esteem which are implied in its proposal.

I regret however, that I cannot consent to be put in nomination for the honorable post to which your communication refers.[†3] I never seek any distinction; nor can I, on any private intimation, consider the possibility of accepting this one.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles H Blackwood Esquire.

To MARK LEMON, 6 MARCH 1854

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Monday Evening Sixth March 1854

My Dear Mark

Would you like a day down to the sea—Dover for instance—any day this week? A stroll and a breeze? Any day but Thursday (when I dine[†4] with old Charley Kemble)[†5] would suit me. I am, all the week, on a regimen of fresh air.

Ever Affecy.

CD.

To MESSRS BRADBURY & EVANS, 7 MARCH 1854

MS Berg Collection.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Seventh March 1854

My Dear B and E.

Throughout Hard Times, will you arrange when you get the corrected revises back from me (I now send those of the two first parts)[†6] to have then pulled, for my reference copy at work, a proof folded in any easy form for reference that may not give much trouble to your people. I want to avoid the botheration, both of the long slips, and of having to cut my working copy out of the Nos. week by week.

Faithfully Yours always

CD.

To CLARKSON STANFIELD, 7 MARCH 1854*

MS Yale University Library.

Fok'sle | H. M. S. Tavistock | Tuesday 7th. March. Noon.

We're a goin', Old Salt—Mark and me, mind you—this prsent night, aboard o' that 'ere piratical craft the Britannia,[†1] as we were aspeaking on the last time we hailed one another on a theatrical cruise, the wind being then N. W. by W. and we going through the water at the rate of 7 knots. Will you come alongside the Albion lying in Little Russell Roads,[†2] at 5 punctual? Say yes. Don't be a sodger, but hoist your Blue Peter like a geniwine A B, and don't skulk under hatches like a damned sea-lawyering, cuttle-fishing, loblollyboying, Swab.[†3]

Dick

To THE REV. JAMES WHITE, 7 MARCH 1854

Text from MDGH, I, 350-1.

Tavistock House, Tuesday, March 7th, 1854.

My dear White,

I am tardy in answering your letter; but "Hard Times," and an immense amount of enforced correspondence, are my excuse. To you a sufficient one, I know.

As I should judge from outward and visible appearances, I have exactly as much chance of seeing the Russian fleet reviewed by the Czar as I have of seeing the English fleet reviewed by the Queen.[†4]

"Club Law" made me laugh very much when I went over it in the proof yesterday. It is most capitally done, and not (as I feared it might be) too directly. It is in the next number but one.[†5]

Mrs. [Crowe][†6] has gone stark mad—and stark naked—on the spirit-rapping imposition. She was found t'other day in the street, clothed only in her chastity, a pocket-handkerchief and a visiting card. She had been informed, it appeared, by the spirits, that if she went out in that trim she would be invisible. She is now in a madhouse, and, I fear, hopelessly insane.[†1] One of the curious manifestations of her disorder is that she can bear nothing black. There is a terrific business to be done, even when they are obliged to put coals on her fire.

[Bulwer][†2] has a thing called a Psycho-grapher, which writes at the dictation of spirits. It delivered itself, a few nights ago, of this extraordinarily lucid message:

X. Y. Z!

upon which it was gravely explained by the true believers that "the spirits were out of temper about something." Said [Bulwer][†2] had a great party on Sunday, when it was rumoured "a count was going to raise the dead." I stayed till the ghostly hour, but the rumour was unfounded, for neither count nor plebeian came up to the spiritual scratch. It is really inexplicable to me that a man of his calibre can be run away with by such small deer.

À propos of spiritual messages comes in Georgina, and, hearing that I am writing to you, delivers the following enigma to be conveyed to Mrs. White:

"Wyon of the Mint[†3] lives at the Mint."

Feeling my brain going after this, I only trust it with loves from all to all.

Ever faithfully

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 8 MARCH 1854*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Holly Lodge | Highgate.

Tavistock House | Wednesday Night Eighth March | 1854

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I send you a note I have received, from Mrs. Goldsmith. I do not understand it as requiring any answer, and have written none. Perhaps you know as little about the cottages the poor lady mentions, as I do.

With kind regards, Ever dear Miss Coutts

Most Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

We heard from Charley yesterday. Quite well, and working with his emancipation before him.[†1] Very indignant with his Professor for "always blowing-up England."

To MRS CARLYLE,[†2] 9 MARCH 1854*

MS New Brunswick University Library.

Tavistock House | Ninth March 1854

My Dear Mrs. Carlyle.

Your experiment was not a fair one. If you will be so kind as to instruct your maid, one night when you have gone to bed and don't expect it, to set your own house carefully on fire in several places, and then to light up Carlyle from head to foot and get him to rush to your be[d]side with the intelligence, I have reason to hope (from enquiries I have made into the subject) that you will be satisfactorily grey in the morning.

Although Miss Anderson's[†3] tale, however carefully I might have condensed it, would have been at any time very seriously too long for Household Words, and especially now when I am about to write a long story therein which will last five months, I would nevertheless have accepted it with great pleasure, for the good there is in it, if the fair-haired child had not been that lady's, stolen away. This commonplace incident is fatal to the story. An elephant could not have stopped up the way to the Printer's, more obstinately.

But I sincerely think that Miss Anderson has qualities which should make her a good writer, if she add to them patience and a determination to work steadily. If she should try again, I shall be very glad indeed to read the result.[†4] I would counsel her not to try at too much—not to think of getting a book into a few pages—and above all things to make her people express themselves as people do in the real world. The more she can forget herself and remember them, the better for all parties. I would strongly advise her not to have too much to do—by name—with the real, the ideal, the beautiful, the infinite, and so forth. She has real tenderness and a very quick perception. If she will give these fair play, if she will concentrate them with all her heart and soul (seven eighths won't do) on any one incident or purpose, if she will hammer that incident or purpose out with a hand that never wanders to anything else while it has that thing to do, I think she may find her account in her work. But she must discard a half-dreamy state between sleeping and waking, and be content to take infinite pains, with her eyes wide open. Whatever she writes about must be going on before her, and must make her laugh or cry immeasurably more than any body else. She must (as far as I know) thoroughly convince herself of its reality before she can hope to convince any one else of it.

I send Carlyle herewith, my love, a large Newfoundland dog, a blood-hound whose bay is very fine, three Cochin China cocks and thirteen hens, and a Cockatoo. When you want the Cockatoo to scream louder than he always does, please aggravate him with a red handkerchief; but I hope you will find his natural noise sufficient—particularly as he is always pleased when the dogs fight, and they generally fight all day. They only howl at night.[†1]

Dear Mrs. Carlyle | Very faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To EMILE DE LA RUE, 9 MARCH 1854

MS Widener Collection, Harvard.

Tavistock House, London | Ninth March 1854.

My Dear De la Rue.

A letter which under the insane direction of the Postmaster General went in some wild manner after William Granet[†2] and never found him, having come back again in the coolest manner, I rise to explain—as they say in our English House of Commons.

The main purport of that letter was to assure you in the strongest manner that I believe Elliotson never attended an insane patient in his life. I never heard of his having such a case, and I know that it would be as much out of the usual course of his practice as out of yours or mine. I hope you will tell Madame De la Rue. I understand, and should really myself sympathize with, her instinctive objection if it had any foundation in fact. But it has none. She is entirely mistaken.[†3]

It was considered, when I came home, such a great thing that I should write a story for Household Words, that I am at present up to the eyes in one. It is to be published in Household Words, weekly, through five months, and will be altogether as long as five Nos. of Copperfield or Bleak House. I did intend to be as lazy as I could be all through the summer, but here I am with my armour on again.

The spirit rapping rottenness is fading away, after having done a world of harm, and driven divers and sundry out of their five wits. There is a certain Mrs. Crowe, usually resident in Edinburgh, who wrote a book called the Nightside of Nature, and rather a clever story called Susan Hopley.[†4] She was a medium, and an Ass, and I don't know what else. The other day she was discovered walking down her own street in Edinburgh, not only stark mad but stark naked too. She said the Spirits had informed her that if she walked out with a card in her right hand and her pocket-hand kerchief in her left—and nothing else—she would be invisible. But she was not surprised (she added) to find herself visible, because she remembered that in opening the street door, she had changed the card into the left hand and the pocket hand kerchief into the right! She is now under restraint of course.[†5] Bulwer is one of the true believers. He had a great party last Sunday, whereat we assisted; and it was rumoured towards the ghostly hour "that a Count was going to raise the dead". However, the Count didn't appear, and we came home. Bulwer has a machine called a Psycho-grapher, said to write at the dictation of Spirits. A fair blue-stocking then present informed the Inimitable undersigned that she had been there a few nights before, when the spirits wrote the following highly sensible communication

"X. Y. Z"

Upon which the true believers said, "the Spirits were out of temper about something"!

War is the one word here.[†1] I suspect it will be a little less popular this time next year, when the cost of War is practically understood. Everything is very dear, and the doubling of the Income Tax already occasions a growl.[†2] I saw Collins the other day who was anxious to be remembered to Madame De la Rue and you, whenever I should write. Egg has been shut up for some time, working at his picture for the next Exhibition[†3]—and living on the reputation of his never to be forgotten Sally at Gibbs's.[†4] Mrs. Dickens and Georgy send their loves, and the former wants to know whether Madame De la Rue ever received her letter about the Italian dishes"?[†5]

We have still some idea that you may both be coming over this year. It has been extremely cold here, and Charley writes from Leipzig that there has been nothing but ice and snow. The Spring flowers are coming out now, however, and this morning it is sunny and warm.

A Beast of a letter, My Dear De la Rue, but take the will for the deed.

Ever affectionately Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS WARNER, [9 MARCH 1854]

Mention in next.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 9 MARCH 1854

Extract in Autograph Prices Current, I (1914-16); dated 9 Mar 54.

I have communicated what I fear will be a very grievous disappointment to Mrs. Warner only this morning.[†6]

To WILLIAM ALLINGHAM, 11 MARCH 1854*

MS J. & S. Graphics, Inc.

Tavistock House | Eleventh March 1854

My Dear Sir

Many thanks for the "small book of Verses".[†1] I hope its success will be a good encouragement to you, and a happy beginning of the enterprise that brings you to London.[†2]

With all good wishes, | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

W. Allingham Esquire.

To PETER CUNNINGHAM, 11 MARCH 1854

MS Comtesse de Suzannet.

Tavistock House | Saturday Eleventh March 1854

My Dear Cunningham

Being down at Dover yesterday, I happened to see the Illustrated London News lying on the table, and there read a reference to my new book[†3] which I believe I am not mistaken in supposing to have [been][†4] written by you.

I don't know where you may have found your information, but I can assure you that it is altogether wrong. The title was many weeks old, and chapters of the story were written, before I went to Preston or thought about the present Strike.[†5] The mischief of such a statement is twofold. First, it encourages the public to believe in the impossibility that books are produced in that very sudden and Cavalier manner (as poor Newton[†6] used to feign that he produced the elaborate drawings he made in his madness, by winking at his table);[†7] and Secondly in this instance it has this pernicious bearing: It localizes (so far as your readers are concerned) a story which has a direct purpose in reference to the working people all over England, and it will cause, as I know by former experience, characters to be fitted on to individuals whom I never saw or heard of in my life.

I do not suppose that you can do anything to set this mis-statement right, being made; nor do I wish you to set it right. But if you will, at any future time, ask me what the fact is before you state it, I will tell you, as frankly and readily as it is possible for one friend to tell another, what the truth is and what it is not.

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To CHARLES ELLIS, 13 MARCH 1854

MS Private.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS
Monday Thirteenth March 1854

Dear Mr. Ellis

I don't care so particularly for the Port as to lay any of it down; having a good deal as it is, in a small cellar.

I want for this place, some good light champagne not exceeding about 50/- per dozen cash price.[†1] If you have such a wine that you can really recommend me, I shall be glad to take 6 dozen as soon as you can send it. We have been in the habit of having it here, from a house in the City; but I dare say you can do it much better.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS[†2]

To MISS EMMELY GOTSCHALK, 13 MARCH 1854*

MS Private. Address: Miss Emmy Gotschalk | 13 Alfred Place | West Thurloe Square | Brompton.

Tavistock House | Monday Thirteenth March 1854.

My Dear Miss Gotschalk.

Either on Saturday next at 3, or on Sunday at half past 1, I shall be very happy to see you. Your last note interested and pleased me, greatly.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Emmy Gotschalk.

To MARK LEMON, 15 MARCH [1854]

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds. Date: 15 Mar was Wednesday in 1854.

Tavistock House | (Price only Five Thousand Guineas)
Fifteenth March, Wednesday

My Dear Mark

I think of going down to Ramsgate tomorrow, by quick train at ½ past 12, and returning so as to be back in town by 10 at night—dining near the Pier in the meantime.

How are you engaged? Can you come?

Ever affectionately Yours | The Floorer of Opposition | and Smasher of Chairmen.[†1]

To MR WARD,[†2] 16 MARCH 1854*

MS (in Wills's hand) Dickens House.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS
16 March 1854

Mr Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr Ward and begs to thank him for his letter of the 4th. Instant respecting the burial of Henry the Fourth.[†3]

Mr Dickens will take the earliest opportunity of taking the subject into consideration.[†4]

To W. J. CLEMENT, 17 MARCH 1854*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Tavistock House | Seventeenth March 1854

My Dear Clement. He[†5] had bought his own tomb sometime before. He had a particular fondness for the spot, which is in the Norwood Cemetery. I was to have appointed a day to walk with him and see it, but thought—God help us all!—that there was time enough.

You know what an extraordinary house it is—not less so under these circumstances than under any other—but more so. I only know accidentally, that he is to be buried on Monday. The hour has not come to my knowledge, but if you decide to make the journey here, I can of course ascertain it.

If you come, pray stay with us. Send me a telegraph message, mentioning, in that case, by what Train you come. You will find us quite alone.

Very faithfully Yours Ever

CD.

W. J. Clement Esquire

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 17 MARCH 1854*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Seventeenth March 1854

My Dear Miss Coutts

I warmly feel your kind note. The suddenness of the intelligence[†1] was quite overwhelming. I was walking in Covent Garden on Monday Afternoon when the evening papers were just out, and Mr. Lemon met me and told me what had happened. I got into a Cab directly and drove to the house; and they only knew there, even then, that he had been reported through the Electric Telegraph to have been suddenly taken ill.

We had two engagements to keep together. One was, to go and see a little farm he had purchased in the Isle of Sheppey. The other—to walk to his grave! He was very fond of it, he said, and accustomed himself to associate it with a day of rest. It is in the Norwood Cemetery, where he will be buried of course.

I send you a few lines I have written in remembrance of him, for next week's Household Words.[†2]

It is a mercy O[†3] did not seriously hurt herself. A lady-friend of ours broke her leg at about the same time in very much the same manner. Do you think it would be good for her to hear half an hour of my new story? It contains the dawn of the idea and is not at all distressing—yet. If you would like it, as the publication begins tomorrow fortnight, I would come up any evening in the meantime, except Wednesdays.

Dear Miss Coutts | Ever Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

I have received an account of a case for the Home, from the Curate of Hammersmith.[†4] The girl is to come here tomorrow morning.

To CHARLES KNIGHT, 17 MARCH 1854

Text from MDGH, I, 351-2 ([aa]corrected from Sotheby catalogue facsimile, July 1983).

[a]Tavistock House | Seventeenth March 1854[a]

My Dear Knight.

I have read the article with much interest. It is most conscientiously done, and presents a great mass of curious information condensed into a surprisingly small space.[†1]

I have made a slight note or two here and there, with a soft pencil, so that a touch of indiarubber will make all blank again.

[a]And I earnestly entreat your attention to the point (I have been working upon it, weeks past, in Hard Times) which I have jocosely suggested on the last page but one. The English are, so far as I know, the hardest worked people on whom the sun shines. Be content if in their wretched intervals of leisure they read for amusement and do no worse. They are born at the oar, and they live and die at it. Good God, what would we have of them![†2]

Affectionately Yours always

CD.[a]

To JOHN POOLE, 17 MARCH 1854*

MS New York Public Library.

Tavistock House | Friday Seventeenth March 1854

My Dear Poole.[†3] He is to be buried—poor fellow—on Monday. In the Norwood Cemetery. He had chosen the place himself, and had the Grave made.[†4]

I heard it as suddenly as you. I went instantly to Russell Square. An electric message had been sent up, and she[†5] had gone to Stafford. He died instantly. He had risen a few moments before, and, while he spoke standing, was observed to speak indistinctly. It is supposed that he felt some strange sensation, and rose to shake it off. He slid slowly down, and died.

His son Tom[†6] had breakfasted with him that morning, and he had been out walking before breakfast. He had been in his usual health and his usual spirits. Dining with Wightman[†7] and his son on the previous day, he had talked of some of his old friends after dinner. I was one of them.

It is impossible as yet to say how she feels it. She shows very little emotion. She took her youngest daughter, Kate, with her to Stafford. They were afraid to ask if he were dead, and they paid a man to shew them the way from the station to the town. As he went before them, he turned and said "This is a sad thing, this death of Judge Talfourd!" Seeing her change, he said "What? Did you know him then?" She replied, very distinctly, "A little."

You shall have the Examiner[†1] without fail. The little remembrance on the other side, is, of course, mine.[†2]

We are all well, and they send you their loves. I am very busy and write in a few moments before post time.

Faithfully Yours always

CD.

To LADY TALFOURD, 17 MARCH 1854

Extract in N, II, 547-8 (from catalogue source); dated Tavistock House, 17 Mar 54.

When I heard, on Monday afternoon, of the bereavement we both in our far different places so heavily deplore.... I have not obtruded myself upon you, for I well knew (or have hoped so) that if I could be of the smallest service or comfort to you, or anybody dear to you, you would instinctively trust my love to my dear departed Friend.

I have written a brief remembrance of him for the Household Words of next week.... It consists of only a few plain words out of my heart, but they may speak to yours.[†3] God comfort you.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, [18 MARCH 1854]*

MS Morgan Library. Date: the Saturday before Talfourd's funeral on 20 Mar. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Holly Lodge.

Tavistock House | Saturday Night

My Dear Miss Coutts.

A very old friend of poor Talfourd's at Shrewsbury, has sent me an electric telegraph message saying he is coming here tomorrow, as he wishes to see his grave before it is closed. He is to be buried on Monday.—I don't feel sure that this friend will be gone that evening, and I should prefer another if it will suit you as well. Shall we say Tuesday? Or if that will not do, Friday? I will call tomorrow to arrange this.

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

To PETER CUNNINGHAM, 18 MARCH 1854

MS Dickens House.

Tavistock House | Saturday Eighteenth March | 1854

My Dear Cunningham

Here it is.[†1] I should have asked you to take one with you when you were here yesterday, but I had not then got them from the printer.

Cordially Yours always

CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 20 MARCH 1854*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Twentieth March 1854

My Dear Miss Coutts.

The enclosed letter looks to me as if it might refer to a good case. I should be disposed to help the writer with a pound or two, if it should turn out to be so. Would you? I have not sent to enquire yet, but Mr. Wills is ready to descend upon the family suddenly.

You can tell me tomorrow.

Always Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To HENRY HEARN,[†2] 20 MARCH 1854*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: Henry Hearn Esquire | Buckingham.

Tavistock House, London | Monday Twentieth March 1854

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his Compliments to Mr. Henry Hearn, and begs to express his regret that his engagements render it impossible for him to have the pleasure of accepting the invitation of the Buckingham Literary and Scientific Institution. He assures Mr. Hearn that he declines it solely for this reason, and not for any want of interest in the Association, or because of the modesty of its pretensions.

To FREDERICK DICKENS, [?MARCH 1854]

Mention in T. E. Weller to CD, 23 Mar 54 (Appx C). Date: no doubt shortly before Weller's letter written after Frederick had shown him CD's.

In reply to Frederick's request for advice, discouraging his wife Anna (née Weller) from entering the musical profession. †aAllowing Anna to be 20 times a better player than

Christiana†1 she would still be far behind the leading Pianists of the time.†a Adding criticism of Christiana as a player and Mrs Weller as her teacher.†2

To T. E. WELLER, 24 MARCH 1854*

MS (copy in Weller's hand, enclosed in Weller to Christiana Thompson, [?26 Mar 54]) Mrs Sowerby.

Tavistock House 24 Mar | 54

Sir

I should be sorry to write an ungracious word to you. This note closing our correspondence need be very short; I am glad to have so small a chance of stumbling upon one by accident.†3

It is necessary to set you right—for my own satisfaction—on one point.

I have exactly the same feeling towards your daughter Christiana now as when I first saw her.†4 I never admired her more, or had greater pleasure in her abilities than when I saw her in Italy a little while ago.†5 But there is a wide gulf of difference, recognized by most of the sane persons I have known, between the graces and talents that justly captivate in private, and their power of competition in public performances with the picked artists of Europe.

This difference applicable both to learning & teaching I pointed out to my brother in a perfectly unreserved letter, which he was quite free to shew to you or to publish at Charing Cross, if he considered it the act of a gentleman to do so. The opinions to which I referred for the first & last time as strengthening my advice to be extremely cautious in the avoidance of rash assumptions were not mine and would have been valueless if they had been mine. I have not the least knowledge of music I only love it.

Your obedient Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

T. E. Weller Esq.

To W. H. WILLS, 24 MARCH 1854*

MS Dartmouth College, New Hampshire.

Tavistock House | Friday Night Twenty Fourth March | 1854

My Dear Wills.

I particularly wish to have the subject to which the accompanying papers (just received)†6 refer, done at once. Will you let Morley know that I shall feel greatly obliged to him if he will write a little paper on it for our immediate publication.[†7] He will be perfectly fair and just, of course; but I hope he will not turn the equitable balance, one hair's weight in favor of the Mill Owners.[†1] I spoke to you once before on this question. I have the strongest feeling of indignation and horror on the subject. I would rather not be on the jury, or I would have sat down and written about it myself, tonight.

Faithfully Always

CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 25 MARCH 1854*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Saturday Twenty Fifth March 1854

My Dear Miss Coutts.

Will you read the accompanying note which Mr. Wills sent me up last [night],[†2] as his usual day's report. The Mrs. Dannan[†3] of whom he writes, is the Governess lady, whom you have twice or thrice befriended, and whom I saw some two years ago and described to you.

Always Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

To [JAMES BOORNE],[†4] 27 MARCH 1854

Text from Reading Mercury, 1 Apr 54.

Tavistock House, 27th March, 1854.

Dear Sir.

I am very sensible of the feelings with which the directors of the Reading Literary, Scientific, and Mechanics' Institution[†5] do me the honour of offering me the office of which I know my deceased friend[†6] to have been very proud.

Proposed to me in remembrance of his affectionate regard, I cannot do otherwise than accept it, with a melancholy gratification.

I beg to forward my subscription as a life member, and to assure the directors of my cordial interest in the establishment, and my heartfelt gratification in their association of me with the ornament they have lost.[†7]

I have the honour to be, dear Sir,

Your faithful servant,

CHARLES DICKENS.[†8]

To MRS GASKELL, 27 MARCH 1854*

MS Robert H. Taylor Collection, Princeton. Address (envelope, MS John Rylands Library):
P.S. | Mrs. Gaskell | Plymouth Grove | Manchester. PM MR 27 1854.

Tavistock House | Monday Twenty Seventh March 1854

My Dear Mrs. Gaskell.

I too have been in a state of dismay and wonder on the subject of your paper,[†1] until a few words in your note received this morning suggest to me what I apprehend must[†2] have become of it.

"Postpaid", you say. "In one tenpenny and one twopenny stamp. (I should have thought it was heavier.)"

Hereupon a horrible idea seizes me that it must have been insufficiently prepaid, and therefore at the door of this establishment. I suppose more letters come here than to the Home Office. All letters not paid (and they are very numerous) are returned into the Postman's hands as a matter of course. My servant cannot recollect that on Saturday week, that particular day, any such case occurred; but he remembers there having been several lately, and on one morning three or four. I therefore compass in my mind this horrible possibility.

REFUSED!!!

—Horrible, only on account of its absurd character. Because, in such a case, the paper is beyond doubt recoverable. We will send to Rowland Hill[†3] immediately, to enquire, but it may perhaps be sent back to you in the meantime. If so, pray let me know and let me have it again, without delay.

Edwin Landseer[†4] brought that game here some nights ago, and we played it with immense success. Mrs. Dickens and her sister send their kindest regards.

My Dear Mrs. Gaskell | Ever Faithfully Yours

CD.

To THE GENERAL COMMITTEE OF THE ROYAL LITERARY FUND, 27 MARCH 1854*

MS Royal Literary Fund.

Tavistock House | Monday Twenty Seventh March 1854

I beg to state to the Committee of the Literary Fund, that I am acquainted with the merits of the two sisters Miss Maria Goodluck and Miss Louisa Goodluck, and that I know them to be worthy of all assistance and relief. They are the authoresses of several little books, and some of their verses for children are of unusual merit.[†5] Further, I can add from my knowledge of Dr. Elliotson who has been a most generous and earnest friend to them, that any grant the Committee may be pleased to make in their behalf will be thoroughly well used, and devoted to their permanent advantage.[†1]

CHARLES DICKENS

To BERNHARD TAUCHNITZ, 27 MARCH 1854

Extract from Curt Otto, Der Verlag Bernhard Tauchnitz, 1837-1912, Leipzig, 1912, p. 53.

Tavistock House, March 27th, 1854.

You have seen the announcements, no doubt, of my new story in Household Words. Would you wish to anticipate it or to have any particular and separate arrangement made respecting it? I shall be very happy to do any thing you may wish.[†2]

To MRS HARRISON,[†3] [?LATE MARCH 1854]

Mention in To Miss Coutts, 31 Mar 54. Date: probably shortly before To Miss Coutts, 29 Mar.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 29 MARCH 1854*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | 1 Stratton Street | Piccadilly.

Tavistock House | Wednesday Afternoon | Twenty Ninth March 1854

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I have just received the enclosed from Mrs. Harrison.

Always Most Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To [RICHARD] ROGERS,[†4] 30 MARCH 1854*

MS Dickens House.

Tavistock House | Thirtieth March 1854.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Rogers, and begs to say that his engagements prevent his complying with the request of the President and Committee of the London Coffee and Eating House Keepers' Association.[†5] His time is fully occupied, and the very limited number of public invitations he can accept, out of the very large number proposed to him, is already completed for this season.

To AUGUSTUS TRACEY, 30 MARCH 1854*

MS University of Texas.

Tavistock House | Thirtieth March 1854

My Dear Tracey.

Thanks! Indiscretion itself,[†1] in capital letters forty feet high.

Ever Yours

CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 31 MARCH 1854†

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | 1 Stratton Street | Piccadilly.

Tavistock House | Thirty First March 1854

My Dear Miss Coutts

Unluckily, I am engaged to go down to Maidstone early on Monday Morning, to walk from that place to Gravesend through Cobham woods.

I cannot, I confess, believe that Mrs. Harrison said nothing to Wallace about taking her into her service. It will be best, I think, to answer her letter, and I will do so with all possible plainness. I was careful in acknowledging her first communication on the subject, to observe those points which have presented themselves to your mind. She quite understands from me, that she is doing no sort of service to you or to any one interested in the Home.

My Dear Miss Coutts | Always Most Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To WILLIAM BRADBURY, [?MARCH 1854]

Mention in To Wills, 30 July 54. Date: CD says he wrote to Bradbury on the "placard's" appearance: probably during the month before Hard Times began (1 Apr).

Objecting to a hideous placard all askew, invented in Whitefriars for Hard Times.

April

To MARK LEMON, 4 APRIL 1854

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS

Tuesday Fourth April 1854

My Dear Mark.

We want (Wills and I) to ask you a question or two about Frederic.[†2] If this should find you, can you come round here any time before the Guild Meeting at 4?

Ever affecy.

CD.

To SAMUEL PHELPS, 4 APRIL 1854*

MS Rosenbach Museum & Library. Address: Private | Samuel Phelps Esquire | Sadlers Wells Theatre.

Private

Tavistock House | Fourth April, 1854

My Dear Sir

Mr. Forster and I have considered the truly painful subject[†1] on which you spoke to me this morning—as far as it is possible to consider anything so surprising and out of reason—and I am sorry to say that the only conclusion we can come to, is but a poor and lame one.

Mr. Forster thought, at once, of one of the gentlemen whose names came into my head this morning. (The other I understand to be at a discount just now, with the enthroned majesty[†2] of the seventh Dramatic Heaven.) But this insurmountable difficulty then presented itself, that even if he were willing to accept the office of Mediator, he would certainly be prevented from doing so, by having no credentials. In whose name is he to act? Who, under such circumstances, would allow his name to be used as authorizing a pathetic representation to Mr. Kean?[†3] I would not do so, myself, on any consideration[†4]—I should as soon think of going down on my forehead to the King of Borrioboola[†5]—and I find I am not peculiar in this feeling. If the dreadful necessity of the case, and its most affecting circumstances, will not of themselves do the wretched little service, what gentleman can sue in formâ pauperis for such a thing? And without being directly commissioned by some one he knows, how can we expect any friend of Mr. Kean's,[†6] to speak to him on the subject?

We think that there is nothing to be done but for Mr. Warner[†7] to write Mr. Kean a letter distinctly telling him that the rent is demanded, and that an execution is impending, and plainly putting before him the responsibility of such an outrage being inflicted on this unfortunate lady while there are funds in hand, contributed for her relief and support.[†8] I write this note for your eye only; but I take my part in this advice—simply because, in circumstances so incomprehensible on the one hand and so distressful on the other, there seem to be no other human means of moving a step further.

Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

Samuel Phelps Esquire.

To WILLIAM BRADBURY, 5 APRIL 1854

Text from N, II, 548.

Tavistock House | 5th April 1854

A capital sign indeed;[†1] and I am very much obliged to you for so promptly sending it up to me.

Faithfully Yours always

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To EDWARD CHAPMAN,[†2] 5 APRIL 1854*

MS Yale University Library.

Tavistock House | Fifth April, 1854

My Dear Sir

I have gone over the accounts,[†3] and find them plain and clear.

Have the goodness to pay the balance due to me,[†4] to my account at Coutts's, and to pay half the profits of Oliver Twist Cheap Edition,[†5] to Bradbury and Evans as usual.

I share your apprehensions as to the probable effects of the War, on books.[†6] However, we will hope for the best, and not begin to croak until we are positively nipped in some fleshy place.

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Edward Chapman Esquire.

To ALEXANDER DOLAND,[†7] 5 APRIL 1854

MS Garrick Club.

Tavistock House | Fifth April, 1854

Sir.

I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your obliging letter of Saturday last, and to enclose a cheque for £22:1:0 the amount of my entrance fee and subscription for the current year as a member of the Garrick Club.[†8]

Do me the favor to assure the committee that I am very sensible of their cordial welcome, and that I shall be very happy to take the chair at the anniversary Dinner[†1] on the 22nd in compliance with the request they do me the honour to prefer.

I am Sir | Your faithful Servant

CHARLES DICKENS

Alexander Doland Esquire.

To HENRY MORLEY, 5 APRIL 1854*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Tavistock House | Fifth April, 1854

My Dear Sir

I receive the eminent Doctor[†2] with open arms, as a thoroughly good old fellow most genially and cordially presented; with everything about him "in a concatenation accordingly."[†3]

Mrs. Dickens unites with me in kind regards to Mrs. Morley,[†4] the radiant daughter,[†5] and the father who (of course) will never spoil her.

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Henry Morley Esquire.

To OCTAVIAN BLEWITT, 5 APRIL 1854*

MS Royal Literary Fund.

Tavistock House | Fifth April 1854 | Wednesday Evening

Dear Sir

As I do not attend the Dinner,[†6] I return the tickets.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Octavian Blewitt Esquire.

To A. H. LAYARD, 6 APRIL 1854*

MS British Library.

Tavistock House | Sixth April, 1854

My Dear Layard

Poor Wilson's death[†7] leaves a vacancy in the Guild Trustees, which I am sure cannot be better filled than by you, as I know all the rest of us will think.[†1] Don't trouble yourself to answer this. I shall put your name in at a venture, on your general permission to make you serviceable. You will find yourself in the best company, in letters, science, and art.[†2]

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Austen H. Layard Esquire M. P.

To DR W. P. ALISON,[†3] 7 APRIL 1854*

MS Rosenbach Museum & Library. Address: Favored by Samuel Phelps Esquire. | Dr. Alison | Edinburgh.

Tavistock House, London
Friday Evening Seventh April | 1854.

My Dear Dr. Alison.

My friend Mr. Phelps who is coming to Edinburgh to fulfil an engagement at the Theatre,[†4] is an accomplished gentleman deserving of all recognition as a thoroughly good public instructor.[†5] I really know no one in Edinburgh to whom I could so heartily desire to present him as yourself. I am sure you will be interested in him, and I know that such public services as yours enlist his warmest sympathy.[†6]

Believe me always | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Dr. Alison.

To J. G. M. BURT,[†1] 7 APRIL 1854

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, 4 Oct 1977; MS 1 p.; dated Tavistock House, 7 Apr 54; addressed Dr Burt, Edinburgh.

Introducing his friend Mr Phelps. In his public capacity I dare say you already know and like him, but I am sure you will like him at least as well in his character of a private gentleman. I am really anxious that he should make friends in Edinburgh, and I should be heartily glad if he enrolled you among the number.

To ROBERT CHAMBERS,[†2] 7 APRIL 1854*

MS Rosenbach Museum & Library. Address: Favored by Samuel Phelps Esquire. | Robert Chambers Esquire | Edinburgh.

Tavistock House, London | Friday Evening, Seventh April | 1854.

My Dear Mr. Chambers.

I wish to present Mr. Phelps to you. He comes to Edinburgh to fulfil a theatrical engagement, and probably is already known to you as an ornament of the stage. But, as a thoroughly good public Instructor and an accomplished gentleman who tries hard to devote his art to its best and highest purposes, he is particularly worthy of your consideration. Claiming it on such grounds I know he will have it, and I therefore write this note to you in his behalf with a kind of freemasonry.

Mrs. Dickens and her sister unite with me in kindest regards to Mrs. Chambers[†3] and all your family.

Believe me | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Robert Chambers Esquire.

To J. T. GORDON, 7 APRIL 1854

Extract in Sotheby's catalogue, Oct 1980; MS 1 p.; dated Tavistock House, Friday Evening, 7 Apr 54.

Sending a letter of introduction to the actor Samuel Phelps. Mr Phelps (of whom we have often spoken together) has been regretting to me that he missed seeing you ... in Edinburgh.

To LADY MURRAY,[†1] 7 APRIL 1854*

Text from transcript by Walter Dexter.

Tavistock House | Friday Evening | Seventh April 1854

My Dear Lady Murray,

Mr. Phelps will not be unknown to you by name and reputation, for I believe he is already well known in Edinburgh as an excellent actor.

But as a friend of mine and as an accomplished gentleman, pray let me introduce him to you and commend him to your consideration.

With kind regards from all here | My dear Lady Murray
Very faithfully yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

To THE REV. WILLIAM SEWELL,[†2] 7 APRIL 1854*

MS Bodleian Library.

Tavistock House | Friday Seventh April, 1854

My Dear Sir

It is certain that we differ in many respects, and that I find them stated in the book of Sermons to Boys[†3] for which I am indebted to your kindness. But it is equally certain, I hope, that we agree in many more, and therefore can agree to differ too.

I am gratified by your remembrance and hope we may both long try to do our best towards the improvement of the education of all classes. I observe in your sermons, many protests that are greatly needed against the foremost of the evils now prevalent in most of our public schools.[†4] They are, if you will permit me to say so, sound, humane, and wise.

If I ever find myself in your neighbourhood, I shall not fail to thank you in person for your book and its accompanying very welcome note.

My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Reverend William Sewell.

To RICHARD MONCKTON MILNES,[†1] 8 APRIL 1854*

MS Trinity College, Cambridge.

Tavistock House | Saturday Night Eighth April 1854

My Dear Milnes

I am extremely sorry to say that I find myself obliged to be out of town on Monday, and unable to attend the Theatrical Fund dinner. It is the first I have missed since the Institution began,[†2] for I have always had a great interest in it. I do not write to you in the vain belief that you will sorely miss me, but because when Mr Cullenford[†3] the Secretary was here this morning, I did not know I should be prevented from coming. And as I remember him to have said that he had an appointment with you tomorrow morning, I send this hasty note, fearing that some pleasant task (in the toast way) might otherwise be reserved for me, and that my absence might thus confuse the arrangements.

Believe me always | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Monckton Milnes Esquire.

To MRS GORE, 10 APRIL 1854*

MS Berg Collection.

Tavistock House | Monday Tenth April, 1854

My Dear Mrs. Gore.

I think it right (unless you should still wish it, after reading this note) not to communicate your secret to Bradbury and Evans.[†4]

Because they are not publishers, except to a very few people with whom they are already closely associated, and because I perfectly know that they have not the least idea of ever travelling beyond that margin.[†5] It would interfere with their business as Printers—would necessitate a trade they have decided not to engage in—and would be opposed to the plans on which I know they proceed, because they have consulted me respecting them. It is quite an understood thing that their publishing for me—for Paxton[†6]—and within certain confined limits for the gentlemen associated with Punch (out of which their connexion with Thackeray arose)[†7] is the utmost extent of that part of their undertakings.

It is ten years since I resolved to confine myself to them, and I therefore have not the least influence with any other publisher—so to speak, with any publisher. I will make your proposal to them if you should wish it after this explanation, and can guarantee their fidelity and trust-worthiness. But with this knowledge aforehand, in my mind, I don't think I ought to proceed so far without your renewed authority.[†1]

I write hastily, before going into Kent for a pedestrian day.

My Dear Mrs. Gore | Very faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To MESSRS BRADBURY & EVANS, 12 APRIL 1854

Mention in N, II, 549.

Requesting the first payment in advance of £500, then overdue, for Hard Times.[†2]

To W. H. WILLS, 12 APRIL 1854†

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS
Wednesday Twelfth April 1854

[†a]My Dear Wills.

H. W.

I have given Miss Berwick's[†3] Knight errant,[†4] the benefit of the doubt and sent it to the Printer's. The Spring lines I re-enclose. I would decline them, on the ground that after the Spring Sonnet[†5] we have settled Spring for this year.

Look at this letter from Mrs. Gaskell. Did you send it this morning—omit all mention of it by mistake—and send it in consequence of having received it with the missing paper?[†6] It has no date, but it must be old, I infer, because the Mr. Fairbairn[†7] matter[†8] is all arranged with her. I had a number of letters by this morning's post, and did not look at this until I had destroyed the envelope. I can't answer it, without first communicating thus with you, for I can't in the least understand it.

C. W.[†9]

Between ourselves if you had gone to the other establishment[†10] you would not have got out of the Quack line,[†1] but in all other respects it is as different a house as you can easily imagine—bright, cheerful, roomy, airy, and gay. Mrs. Wilson a very agreeable woman, and everything else in a concatenation accordingly. Moreover, Wilson does not begin with that violence, but brings you by easy stages, even to the sheet.[a†2]

I know all the walks for many and many miles round you, and delightful walks they are. I suppose you are already getting very stout, very red, very jovial (in a physical point of view) altogether.

Mark and I walked to Dartford from Greenwich, last Monday, and found Mrs. [a]Honner[a†3] acting the Stranger[†4] (with a strolling company from the Standard Theatre)[†5] in "Mr. Munns's Schoolroom".[†6] The stage was a little wider than your table here, and its surface was composed of loose boards laid on the school forms. Dogs sniffed about it during the performances, and the carpenter's highlows[†7] were ostentatiously taken off and displayed in the Proscenium. We stayed until a quarter to ten when we were obliged to fly to the Railroad, but we sent the landlord of the hotel down with the following articles:

1	Bottle	superior	old port
1	Do.	Do.	Golden Sherry
1	Do.	Do.	best french brandy
1	Do.	Do.	1st. quality Old Tom Gin
1	Do.	Do.	Prime Jamaica Rum
1	Do.	Do.	Small still Isla Whiskey

1 kettle boiling water, Two pounds finest white lump sugar
Our cards
1 Lemon
and
Our Compliments.

The effect we had previously made upon the Theatrical company by being beheld in the first two chairs—there was nearly a pound in the house—was altogether electrical.

My ladies send their kindest regards, and are disappointed at your not saying that you drink two and twenty tumblers of the limpid element, every day. The children also unite in "loves", and the Plornishghenter on being asked if he would send his, replies "Yes—Man". Which we understand to signify cordial acquiescence.

Forster just come back from lecturing at Sherborne.[†1] Describes said lecture as "Blaze of Triumph".[†2]

H. W. AGAIN

Miss—I mean Mrs.—Bell's[†3] story very nice. I have sent it to the Printer, and entitled it The Green ring and the Gold Ring.[†4]

This apartment looks desolate in your absence—but O Heavens how tidy!

J. W.[†5]

Mrs. Wills supposed to have gone into a convent at Somers Town.[†6]

[a]B AND E

Never paid the £500![†7] Consequently I had notice yesterday that I have overdrawn my account at Coutts's. Whereof I have given them notice today, in strong terms.[a]

My Dear Wills | Ever Faithfully Yours

CD.

To E. W. COLE,[†8] 13 APRIL 1854

Text from the Minute Book of the Newsvendors Benevolent and Provident Institution.

Tavistock House | 13th. April 1854

Sir,

I most willingly and readily give the Committee of the Newsvendors' Benevolent and Provident Institution the authority they do me the honor to solicit through your letter. They are at perfect liberty to announce my willingness to become the President of the Institution[†9] and my unaffected desire to help by any slight services within my power the useful and industrious class for whose advantage it is established. I cannot be indifferent to their claims, and I thank them for their confidence.

I am Sir | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. Edwd. Wm. Cole

To CHARLES KNIGHT, 14 APRIL 1854*

MS Mr William Brodsky.

Tavistock House | Fourteenth April 1854

My Dear Knight

I assure you from my heart that those kind words gratify me beyond expression. I shall always be proud of them and thoroughly sensible of their worth. They give me true pleasure—as you knew they would, I am sure, when you wrote them.[†1]

Ever affectionately yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Knight Esquire

To JOHN G. BALL,[†2] 15 APRIL 1854*

MS Dickens House.

Tavistock House | Saturday Evening | Fifteenth April 1854.

Sir.

Like the previous correspondent to whom you refer in your letter, I think your kind idea would fail in practice. Let us all do what we can in that way as quiet individuals; let us always advocate such principles to the best of our opportunities and abilities; and I believe and hope we shall do better than by taking any amount of pledges or forming a whole army of societies.[†3] Sow the seed. It will come up in the spot where it is sown—it will be carried on wings we know nothing of, into chance places—not a grain of it will ever die out.

Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

John G. Ball Esquire.

To THE REV. DAVID LAING,[†4] 15 APRIL 1854*

MS Yale University Library.

Tavistock House | Saturday Evening | Fifteenth April 1854

My Dear Sir

First, of the Governesses Dinner.[†5] I fear I cannot undertake to attend it, even with a regard to the circumstances personal to yourself, which render it interesting to me.[†1] I am so much occupied, and find my regular rest and exercise so essential to my pursuits, that I make hardly any public engagements of that character, and have of late years greatly narrowed my private dinings out. There is no medium for me. I must either do scarcely anything in this way, or I must do more than is reasonable.

Secondly, as to that most urgent and terrible question of our neglected youth in connexion with our penal system. I hope I have never left it alone since I first began to be known. I have never (that I know of) lost an opportunity of presenting it in some striking aspect and in strong colors. And with God's leave I never will.

Thirdly as to Parliament. I have often been invited to go there,[†2] but have always been restrained by two considerations. Firstly, I cannot afford it. And secondly, I believe I am more useful in my present place than I could ever be there.

You write so earnestly and plainly that I reply in the same tone. After your dinner is over, I shall be happy to make an appointment for our having some talk together, if you should still be that way disposed. It is my custom to retire from London every year when it becomes the centre of the general invasion—that is to say, in June—and to stay away all the Autumn. But I purpose remaining until about the middle of that month.

My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Reverend David Laing.

To HENRY MORLEY, 15 APRIL 1854*

MS Dickens House.

Tavistock House | Saturday Evening | Fifteenth April, 1854

My Dear Sir

The enclosed is from a sensible and serviceable man.[†3] If you think there is really any little item in our account with the Society in question[†4] (of which I am a member) to be carried to its credit, I know you will not forget it in the next paper you write for Household Words in which said item can be handsomely figured.[†5]

You affected me deeply by the paper itself.[†1] I think it absolutely impossible that it could have been better done.

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Henry Morley Esquire.

To B. W. PROCTER,[†2] 15 APRIL 1854

Text from MDGH, I, 354.

Tavistock House, Saturday Night, April 15th, 1854.

My dear Procter,

I have read the "Fatal Revenge."[†3] Don't do what the minor theatrical people call "despi-ser" me, but I think it's very bad. The concluding narrative is by far the most meritorious part of the business. Still, the people are so very convulsive and tumble down so many places, and are always knocking other people's bones about in such a very irrational way, that I object. The way in which earthquakes won't swallow the monsters, and volcanoes in eruption won't boil them, is extremely aggravating. Also their habit of bolting when they are going to explain anything.

You have sent me a very different and a much better book; and for that I am truly grateful. With the dust of "Maturin"[†4] in my eyes, I sat down and read "The Death of Friends,"[†5] and the dust melted away in some of those tears it is good to shed. I remember to have read "The Backroom Window"[†6] some years ago, and I have associated it with you ever since. It is a most delightful paper. But the two volumes[†7] are all delightful, and I have put them on a shelf where you sit down with Charles Lamb again,[†8] with Talfourd's vindication of him hard by.[†9]

We never meet. I hope it is not irreligious, but in this strange London I have an inclination to adapt a portion of the Church Service to our common experience. Thus:

"We have left unmet the people whom we ought to have met, and we have met the people whom we ought not to have met, and there seems to be no help in us."[†1]

But I am always, my dear Procter,

(At a distance), | Very cordially yours

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 16 APRIL 1854

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts.

Tavistock House | Sunday Morning Sixteenth April | 1854.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I went out to Shepherds Bush yesterday, and found them all in a very unsettled and unsatisfactory state, mainly owing to Frances Cranstone.[†2] Louisa Cooper and Ellen Venns complained of her that she was so constantly irritating and mischief-making, that it was impossible for "the quiet ones" to get on at all—that they had been made perfectly miserable (as indeed they looked)—that Cranstone was making a party in the house, against all who were disposed to do well—and that whenever Mrs. Marchmont's or Mrs. Macartney's[†3] back was turned, there was no disguise about it. Louisa Cooper in particular said that the last new-comer already felt this disturbing influence, and that the last but one (Ellen Stanley) seemed to be going in Cranstone's way as a mere matter of necessity. That the house was perfectly changed and made unlike anything it had ever been within her knowledge of it, and that she felt that whoever should have the misfortune to be sent out in the same ship with this girl never could hope for peace and quiet. Upon receiving this complaint from the two best conducted girls in the house, I referred both to Mrs. Macartney and Mrs. Marchmont, who said they had no doubt of its truth, but that the girl was so extraordinarily sly in getting others into trouble and keeping herself out of it—just an inch outside—that they could never catch her. I then had Cranstone in, and told her, positively once for all, that such conduct could not be allowed—that it would be monstrous to advise you to send out a girl so suspicious and full of mischief—and that unless she altered altogether in the next ten days my recommendation to the Committee would be to discharge her; which I was perfectly sure, they would do: such complaint against her, still existing. Hereupon she went back, into the long room protesting and lamenting; and that moment (you may see what her influence is) up gets Eliza Wilkin, that girl with the unhappy Father, and boldly says before them all "If you please Mrs. Marchmont, if Frances Cranstone is to go I wish to go." I immediately had her in, and said "You want to go?"—"Yes Sir".—"Then Mrs. Marchmont please to write to her father and tell him she is to be discharged on Monday." And I went into the long room and said before the others "If that unhappy father of yours does not come here by Monday afternoon, you will be discharged alone."

Soon after I left, Cranstone broke out against Louisa Cooper with that violence, that Louisa Cooper (half frightened to death) intreated to be locked up for safety.

Which was done. Cranstone then demanding to go straightway, and Mrs. Marchmont not knowing whether she ought to let her, Cranstone made proclamation to the establishment that she intended in the meanwhile "to be a Devil". Upon which Mrs. Marchmont locked her up in another room.

Early this morning comes Mrs. Marchmont to me, to know what to do. I told her, immediately to discharge Cranstone, and to do with Wilkin exactly as I had announced before the girls. I think this will crush the bad spirit summarily, for Mrs. Marchmont said that Wilkin's being taken at her word, evidently struck the rest with amazement and consternation.

This is a new instance to us, not only of the necessity, but the true kindness of firmness. If we had discharged Cranstone on that old occasion we should have saved Wilkin. Now, that wretched creature says that she and Cranstone have "always kep' together, and that they mean to go together, and that she has been tired of the place this long time". It would have been better to lose a wilderness of Cranstones.†1

The gates being rotten and falling away, I got an estimate from Border the Carpenter†2 for a new pair. They will be within £10, and I told him to get on with them.

Mrs. Marchmont is naturally a little disturbed by these proceedings; but her way will be made much easier, she hopes, after this example.

Quite an official report this!

My Dear Miss Coutts always most faithfully Yours

CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 18 APRIL 1854*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts.

Tavistock House | Eighteenth April 1854 | Tuesday

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I fear that Wilkin won't go out.†3 She said she had it distinctly in her intention to bear Frances Cranstone company.†4 But I will repair to Shepherds Bush, and take care to have the father produced here, where I can speak to him quietly.

Friday with the greatest pleasure. Only say where, and when. Macready's second daughter†5 (his eldest now, poor fellow) will be staying here; but I suppose we may bring her?

I think nothing that has ever occurred at Shepherd's Bush has disappointed me so much as Wilkin's defection at last.

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

To LADY TALFOURD, 18 APRIL 1854

Mention in N, II, 553.[†1]

To W. H. WILLS, 18 APRIL 1854

MS Huntington Library.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Eighteenth April 1854

My Dear Wills.

H. W.

I will go over the No.[†2] when it comes, and write to you again after doing so. There is a capital paper by Sala in proof, called Tatterboy's Rents.[†3] I wish you would write to him from me, and tell him by all means to pursue the subject, as he intimates an idea of doing at the close of the article.[†4]

C. D.

I am in a dreary state, planning and planning the story of Hard Times (out of materials for I don't know how long a story), and consequently writing little.[†5] Mark and I had it in contemplation to come down to Worcester next Monday and ask you to meet us there instead of our coming to Malvern: which would have given us from five to six hours together at the Inn. But I am afraid I shall not be able to spare the day. Macready is coming to town today, and I have unavoidable engagements all the week which will greatly hamper me. Moreover I am greatly anxious to keep ahead. But—

W. H. W.

—It appears to me that you must most decidedly stay at Malvern a full month. I don't think you can put the cure to any rational and fair test in a shorter time. If you decide to do that, Mark and I will overhaul our respective logs (excuse nauticality, but I have been reading a soul-stirring Drama called the Larboard Fin, which looks to me like an undiscovered play by Shakespeare, surreptitiously modernized), and will make another appointment for next week. You are now in the Black and Blue stage. I don't apprehend that you are likely to come to a Flesh colored complexion in less than four weeks. You are not Green yet—and that takes time.

W. H. W. (brought up)

You refer in a maddening manner, to something you don't enclose in your letter. What do you mean by it.

T. R. Haymarket.

I went there to see the Easter piece[†1] last night, and I never beheld anything so dreary.[†2] The agonies of Mrs. Fitzwilliam[†3] and Buckstone were positively most distressing to see. Everything went wrong, and was bad if it had gone right. Once, before a pair of flats (clouds), Mrs. F waved a golden patent hearthbroom, about five and twenty minutes, without anything happening. Then she and Miss Featherstone[†4] and Young Farren[†5] came down to the Float, and sang and pattered all the rest of the piece—got it off at once—and after another long interval a Carpenter was disclosed in a celestial place (but swearing awfully) and a man in black, supposed to be unseen, seized some red fire and wildly lighted it up. Buckstone meantime[†6] perfectly idiotic and imbecile with grief, laid his head on Mrs. Fitzwilliam's bosom.[†7] was there, and perpetually said "My dear Dickens, Good God what does this mean?" To which that eminent man replied, after the manner of Commodore Trunnion[†8] "Hold your tongue and be damned!" For we were sitting over the stage.

J. F.

B and E.

Have paid the £500.

All the Family

Send kindest regards.

Ever My Dear Wills | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS HANNAH LAWRANCE,[†9] 19 APRIL 1854*

Text from typescript, Huntington Library.

Tavistock House | Nineteenth April, 1854.

Mr Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Miss Lawrence, and begs to say he will be happy to read the papers Miss Lawrence has by her, if she will have the kindness to forward them for his perusal.[†10] He thinks the idea Miss Lawrence describes, a very suitable one for Household Words;[†1] but of course the manner of its execution is important.

To W. H. WILLS, 20 APRIL 1854†

MS Berg Collection.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS
Thursday Twentieth April 1854

My Dear Wills.

H. W.[†2]

I have gone very carefully over the whole No.[†3] and sent it down to Arry. It is a very good one, I think, and I see no occasion to alter the course of the making-up, or to change any paper. The titles are improved. I think I must have taken out almost as much as is required. If you have to take out more, take it from Dr. Pablo after his marriage and the loss of his wife's fortune.[†4]

Mrs. Gaskell's missing paper has turned up at last, and is in the printer's hands.[†5]

W. H. W.[†2]

It is quite clear that you must stay at Malvern a month, and come back a miracle of health [†a]and (comparative) virginity.[†a] There is not the least difficulty in the way, nor have I, really, more to do than at another time, though I need not say to you that I should be more than willing to do it if I had. It appears to me from the materials on hand that we are quite safe for good numbers.

GENERAL INTELLIGENCE[†2]

You know my man Cooper?[†6] Steady stupid sort of highly respectable creature? Seven children. Eldest boy 13 years old, "working" (I can't conceive how) at a mathematical Instrument Maker's "down at Westminster." On Tuesday night, the boy did not come home. Mother half distracted, and getting up at 5 in the morning to go and look for him. Father went out after breakfast, to do likewise. Boy had been sent on an errand, had punctually performed the errand, and been heard of no more. Father conferring with Policeman on disappearance, up comes strange boy saying that how he as eerd tell, as a boy is a lyin in the "Bonus",[†7] as was run over. Wretched father goes to the Bonus (attached to the Workhouse, I suppose) and finds his child with his head smashed to pieces! He was walking on some planks by the roadside, a plank tilted, he fell under a coal waggon as it was advancing, and was picked up as Dead as Adam. I cannot get it out of my mind—as Forster would say.

My neighbour's, Mr. Cardale's, daughter[†1] married this morning, and I obliged to leave home at what the newspapers always call "an early hour of the morning" to avoid distraction. All the women and girls in my house, stark mad on the subject. Despotic conjugal influence exerted to keep Mrs. Dickens out of the church. Caught putting bonnet on for that purpose, and sternly commanded to renounce idiotic intentions. Bride reported by our Confectioner (envious and a Roman Catholic) to have the gift of Tongues.[†2] It probably will disappear now; [†a]being, as I take it, a manifestation of what may be called uterine[†3] religious sentiments.[†a] —Mark has just come in, and sends all manner of regards. Time of our visit still uncertain, in consequence of Hard Times, and great pressure of Wooden-Headedness on gifted author.

Kindest remembrances from all at home.

Ever My Dear Wills | Most Faithfully

CD.

To MRS GASKELL, 21 APRIL 1854

MS John Rylands Library.

Tavistock House | Twenty First April 1854

My Dear Mrs. Gaskell

I safely received the paper[†4] from Mr. Shaen[†5]—welcomed it with three cheers—and instantly dispatched it to the printer, who has it in hand now.

I have no intention of striking.[†6] The monstrous claims at domination made by a certain class of manufacturers, and the extent to which the way is made easy for working men to slide down into discontent under such hands, are within my scheme; but I am not going to strike. So don't be afraid of me. But I wish you would look at the story yourself, and judge where and how near I seem to be approaching what you have in your mind.[†7] The first two months of it will shew that.

I will "make my will" on the first favorable occasion. We were playing games last night, and were fearfully clever.

With kind regards to Mr. Gaskell

Always My Dear Mrs. Gaskell | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To MARK LEMON, 21 APRIL 1854

MS Benoliel Collection. Date: 21 Apr 54 was a Friday, not Saturday; letter makes it clear he was writing that day.

Tavistock House | Twenty First April, 1854 | Saturday

My Dear Mark,

You needn't answer this note until we meet tomorrow.

Are you engaged on Sunday? If yes, there an end. If no, will you come down to Folkestone? I want to meet Georgina and Anne there, who will be returning from Boulogne. There is a train at halfpast 10 in the morning. We could have several hours there, and so return with them as to be in town again at ¼ before 12 at night.

Ever Affectionately

CD.

To MARK LEMON, [22 APRIL 1854]

MS Benoliel Collection. Date: clearly the day after last.

Tavistock House | Saturday.

My Dear Mark

It must be tomorrow, because Georgina and Anne go to Boulogne today and return tomorrow; the tide serving admirably for the purpose, and it being but fair to Beaucourt to see his upper house on the top of the hill,[†1] at once. I am wery sorry you have been and gone and asked those two men.[†2]

I should think that room at the G. would be rather warm today with that amount of people in it.[†1]

Ever Affecy.

CD.

To WILKIE COLLINS, 24 APRIL 1854

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Monday Twenty Fourth April, 1854

My Dear Collins. I met the Colonel[†2] at the Water Colors[†3] on Saturday, and asked him if he would assist in scattering the family dinner next Sunday at ½ past 5 as usual. Will you jine us Sir?

Beaucourt's house above the Molyneaux, on the top of the hill—free and windy—not so bijou-ish, but larger rooms, and possessing a back gate and a field—secured by the undersigned contracting party, from the middle of June to the middle of October. I hope you will write the third Volume of "that" book,[†4] there.

Townshend coming to Town on the 12th. of May. Pray Heaven he may not have another choral birthday,[†5] and another frolicultural* cauliflower.[†6]

Ever Faithfully

CD.

* I think this word a bold one. It is intended for floricultural.

To HENRY MORLEY, 24 APRIL 1854*

MS Winifred A. Myers (Autographs) Ltd.

Tavistock House | Twenty Fourth April, 1854

My Dear Sir

Here is another letter on the last subject.[†1] It seems to be a Devil of a Society at correspondence, and I hope it may be equally energetic in all its other provinces.

Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

Henry Morley Esquire

To MISS HANNAH LAWRANCE, [?LATE APRIL 1854]

Composite text ([aa]from Chicago Book & Art Auction Inc. catalogue No. 29; ([bb]from Chaucer Head Book Shop Inc. catalogue No. 12; MS (3rd Person) 1 p. Date: presumably following up his letter to Miss Lawrance of 19 Apr, after reading her papers.

Saying [a]that he will be very happy to accept the London Bookseller[†2] for Household Words, but that he does not think the court lady[†2] so desirable an acquaintance,[a] [b]as that kind of memoir is already widely known, and has been popularised on more than one occasion within the past few years.[b]

To B. W. PROCTER, 29 APRIL 1854*

MS Private.

Tavistock House | Twenty Ninth April, 1854 | Saturday

My Dear Procter

I highly value your kind note, and have derived the purest gratification from it. The charming verses[†3] I have dispatched to the printer; and I shall look forward to the dropping in of your "mites", with no common interest,[†4] believe me.

Always Cordially Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To W. [J.] CLEMENT, 30 APRIL 1854

Extract in American Art Association catalogue, May 1925; MS 2 pp.; dated Tavistock House, 30 Apr 54; addressed W. I. Clement.

We have abandoned the design.[†5] The Oxford Circuit resolving to have their own testimonial and to unite with no friends outside,[†6] we considered that we were not justified in incurring the risk of small success ... convinced me that dear Talfourd's memory was best honored, and his fine nature best remembered, in the leaving alone of his fair name.

To LOVELL REEVE,[†1] 30 APRIL 1854*

MS Mr Lauriat Lane Jr.

Tavistock House | Sunday Thirtieth April 1854

My Dear Sir

I am much obliged to you, and to Mrs. Lovell Reeve,[†2] for your kind invitation. I have so strong an intention of coming to see the flowers, that I think it probable I may not come—for I generally find, at this time of the year, that I go nowhere whither I mean to go, and go everywhere whither I don't mean to go. For which reason, I fly to the seaside in June, and there work in peace until the winter.

But I have preserved the ground-plan; and if I don't use it, it will not be my fault.

My Dear Sir | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Lovell Reeve Esquire

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, [SPRING 1854]

Extract in Goodspeed's catalogue, Mar 1921; MS 1 p., with envelope; dated 1854. Date: 1854 in catalogue; "spring" in letter.

I assure you that I am happy to enclose the autograph for the amiable lady. In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and seal this present spring morning on the day and date first above written.

May

To [?THOMAS] BOND,[†3] 3 MAY 1854

Extract in N, II, 556 (from catalogue source); dated Tavistock House, 3 May 54.

My Dear Bond.

It will be necessary to take immediate measures of the most energetic sort, for stopping that Irish Newspaper piracy[†4] that Lemon will have told you of. When I got injunctions in the Carol case,[†5] I almost lost them because I had quietly submitted to be robbed in like manner before.

Let our Tuesday meeting be at ½ past 4,[†1] and we will dine at ½ past 5.

Faithfully Yours always
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To DR WILLIAM BROWN, 3 MAY 1854*

MS Morgan Library. Address: W. Brown Esqre. | Hotel Bristol | Paris.

Tavistock House | Wednesday Third May 1854

My Dear Mr. Brown.

That idiotic St. George[†2] must have eaten of the insane root,[†3] before he could possibly have been at a loss to decypher my signature—well known to be a miracle of legibility. If it had been Miss Coutts's indeed, I should not have wondered!

I will write to him, and ascertain whether there are any circumstances which may serve as a set-off against the age.[†4]

I heard from Regnier only a couple of days ago. He writes that he is coming to London (to act, I suppose) for only eight days. He does not say when, but I have no doubt you will find him before he leaves Paris.[†5]

If you see Poole in the street, I shall be glad to know when you come back, whether he looks very drunk, or only in his chronic state of brandy.

Everybody is going about, asking everybody else for War News. Nobody has any.[†6] There is a story that the Government with infinite wisdom selected Napier's pilots for the North Sea, from among the Deal men who never saw it; and that now it has been necessary to ship off a lot of Pilots from Newcastle who know the North sea thoroughly. Same report describes Napier[†7] as not venturing to trust himself to Danish Pilots (the only practical men available out there), fearing they might betray the ships to wreck and ruin.[†8] Neither report warranted genuine by your present correspondent.

Charles Mathews has been to me this morning to tell me that his bankruptcy will make him a new man, and that he "only" wants capital, to set the Lyceum going.[†9] I asked him about six weeks ago what sum would clear him, and he said Six Thousand Pounds. This morning I observed him airily mounting up to somewhere about five and twenty. He asked me if I would confer an everlasting service on him by "looking into" the receipts and profits of the Theatre, and its means of repaying a Lessee. And he went away shaking hands with me with his right hand and respectfully poking me in the waistcoat with his left, exactly as he goes off the stage.[†1]

Will you mention to Miss Coutts that in boasting of having left this country in my debt, she is too secure. I think under the last National treaty I can sue her in Paris. The subject is in the hands of my solicitor.

With kindest remembrances to her nevertheless, and also to Mrs. Brown,

My Dear Mr. Brown | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

[†a]Which is not in the least like Wickell,[†2] I am confident.[†a]

To WILLIAM FAIRBAIRN, 3 MAY 1854[†3]

MS Berg Collection.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS

Wednesday Third May 1854

My Dear Sir

Your card having been brought down here to me this morning, I am induced to believe (and not for the first time) that you have been the subject of a ridiculous mistake in my house.

When you did me the favor to call with Mrs. Gaskell's note, you left no address on your card. Mrs. Dickens heard me regretting this, and saying that I did not know where to call upon you. On the same day (last Saturday) she went to an Exhibition of French pictures,—and there found an Artist-friend talking "with Mr. Fairbairn from Manchester".[†4] Instantly, she made an amiable dash at that gentleman, and said I had been in a desolate state because he had not left his address. Upon which he said "My address is the Reform Club", and she came home triumphant.

As soon as I was told of this, straightway I wrote to "—Fairbairn Esquire, Reform Club"—entreating him (in other words, you) to dine with us at 6 on Thursday, tomorrow. To which—Fairbairn Esquire replied that he could not possibly have that pleasure, as he was going away immediately. I fell into a reverie on receipt of this note, and could not make out why Mr. Fairbairn who had come to town officially for the Literary Fund dinner,[†5] should be going away in such a matter-of-course manner before it took place.

Now, your card making its appearance from Tavistock House this afternoon, strengthens me in a suspicion that you are not the Mr. Fairbairn whom Mrs. Dickens overwhelmed with affection, but that the subject of her interest was Mr. Fairbairn from Manchester whom I have the pleasure of knowing. Therefore I send this note to Mr. Blewitt's care, repeating my unceremonious invitation for tomorrow, and begging you to re-arrange my overthrown mind by having the kindness to write me a few words in the morning, addressed to Tavistock House.

My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

—Fairbairn Esquire.

To MARK LEMON, 3 MAY 1854*

MS Berg Collection. Address: Mark Lemon Esquire | Gordon Street.

Tavistock House | Wednesday Evening Third May 1854

My Dear Mark.

I am sorry to have missed you today, and very much obliged to you for the information of the Irish piracy[†1]—which must be summarily stopped.

Pray come and dance a Sir Roger, or a reel, or other madness, tomorrow night. And then let us fix another day in the Country.

And dine with us at the office—on the occasion of our half yearly audit, and (I hope) Wills's return without the lump in his stomach,—on Tuesday at ½ past 5. Gorgeous new paint and paper &c &c &c.

Ever Affectionately

CD.

To W. H. WILLS, 4 MAY 1854

MS Huntington Library.

Tavistock House | Thursday Fourth May 1854

My Dear Wills.

H. W.[†2]

I have gone over No. 217,[†3] and returned it to Whitefriars. But the latter part of it requires improvement in the matter if possible—not the less, because Mrs. Gaskell is conceited and heavy.[†4] The Navy of Naples is really not worth putting into even the best of Nos.[†5] English spoken (which I have called Broken Language)[†6] is very poor. And those two papers together, are an awfully impotent conclusion.[†7]

YOU[†1]

I am delighted to hear such gallant accounts, and have had the street door widened to admit you on Monday.

I[†1]

Growling in a general way.

In haste | Ever Faithfully

CD.

P.S.

MARK[†1]

Invited for Tuesday at ½ p 5.

B AND E[†1]

Informed that the Meeting is at ½ p 4.

To MARK LEMON, 10 MAY 1854

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Tenth May 1854

My Dear Mark,

Tomorrow, I would propose.[†2] We can arrange plans in the morning, if you will come round about 10. Or I am free this evening, and going for a saunter, and would meet you anywhere at any reasonable hour. In which case, send me word up here before ½ p 7.

Affecy. Ever

CD.

To CHARLES DE LA PRYME,[†3] 12 MAY 1854

Text from N, II, 556-7.

Tavistock House | Twelfth May 1854

My Dear Sir

The case particularly attracted my attention at the time of its occurrence, and I remember the circumstances very well.

I fear I cannot, as representing the private Institution to which the young woman does not seek admission, promote the views of the gentlemen who are so worthily interested in her. Our next emigrants are going—not to Australia, but to the Cape of Good Hope. Even if they were bound for Australia, I hardly know how we could be useful there, to a passenger whom we could not confide to our friends out there, with the usual assurance that she had undergone the usual probation for such a time. I am strongly inclined to think that without it, she would do better alone than in company with any of our young women, even if the means of associating her with any of them presented themselves.

I would recommend you to select her destination, and then take her passage through some very respectable London agents. Silver and Company in Bishopsgate Street (I think, but the firm is well known) are the House with whom our shipping transactions are arranged. What is called an "Intermediate Passage"[†1] is of the safest and best kind for her. When you know whither she was bound, I think I might be able to obtain for her a letter to the Bishop of that place,[†2] or some other influential person, relating her history in confidence—with a view to her obtaining a suitable situation.

Supposing she applied for admission to the Institution with which I am associated, she could remain there perhaps a year, before going abroad. In the meantime she could be taught such useful things as it might appear desirable for her to know in the way of household work, needlework, and so forth. She could then be sent out without testimonials—would no doubt get a situation—and would probably marry and be happy. I understand her not to seek admission into an Institution. If she did, she would certainly be eligible for the one in question, and I would see her and consider her case if she applied to me.

Dear Sir, | Faithfully Yours

[CHARLES DICKENS][†3]

To CHARLES DE LA PRYME, 12 MAY 1854

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

Tavistock House | Twelfth May, 1854

Dear Sir

Although the Institution in question is a very different one indeed from any you have seen, I agree with you that it would be best for this young woman not to enter on that kind of probation.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

C. De la Pryme Esquire.

To A. A. WATTS,[†1] 13 MAY 1854*

MS (copy) Royal Literary Fund.

Tavistock House | Thirteenth May/54

Dear Sir

I know Mr H—[†2] well and have a great respect for him.

But I am sorry to assure you that his case would not come within the province of the Guild of Literature and Art, even if it could stretch out its hand, without incurring legal penalties, which it cannot until the private Bill necessary to its legal incorporation shall have passed both Houses of Parliament and become law. It is a Provident institution whose benefits are only attainable by its own members, and although any professional follower of literature can become a member on the easiest terms, still it would not (I apprehend) be able to grant him a sum of money as a gift. If this were its object I cannot imagine that it would have a chance of success, with an enormously rich Institution like the Literary Fund already in existence.[†3] But as I have said it is impossible for it even to publish a prospectus, or admit a member until the act is obtained without incurring Penalties enough to ruin it. The late alterations in the laws of benefit Societies[†4] put it back a twelvemonth or so in the act of its birth. The Bill is now before the Lords and I hope may be obtained by midsummer.[†5]

Dear Sir yours faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [14] MAY 1854*

MS (copy in Mrs Forster's hand) Huntington Library. Date: Sunday was 14 May in 1854.

Tavistock House | Sunday Thirteenth May 1854

My Dear Forster,

I write a hasty line before going to Church, to say that I thought the lecture exceedingly good, last night[†6]—full of interest and admirably sustained—I think you exaggerate the praise of Strafford,[†7] because I cannot doubt that besides being a man of great abilities he was a proud, ill-tempered arrogant man who would rather have one nominal superior in the King, than several competitors in the persons of the men he elevated. Moreover, I don't believe his administration in Ireland[†1] to have been even a financial marvel, when its violently overbearing nature is taken into account. But these are points of opinion; and I know the old rule that when you write Mr. Smith's biography you are to conceive a violent affection for Mr. Smith and invest him with all the old cardinal virtues and several new ones.

I don't know whether it is worth while observing that the fevers of those times were not only occasioned by "the undrained London of that day" but by the quantity of woods about it in all directions. A popular audience, however would be interested in knowing that from the same cause, exactly the same fever and ague obtain in America now.

In several slight places, I observed a tone a little like a schoolmaster teaching very young children, which I think a London audience would undoubtedly be resentful of. "You will perhaps understand"—"To tell you what the condition of Ireland was at this time, would in this place of course be impossible"—"Wentworth's administration in Ireland lasted so many years, and I will tell you" &c "I have told you how fond of field sports he was in his youth"—"For I have told you that he had one friend in that English court"—"I wish you to place yourselves in imagination outside the old Hall of Westminster"—Such things I would unquestionably take out.[†2] Nor would I so emphasize the fact (for the same reason) of my having set History right about him, at four and twenty.[†3]

It is extremely difficult to suggest where it could be reduced, though—again, for a London audience—I suppose it must be unlike our friend Lemon.[†4] I should be inclined to cut it, however, [in] the first half-hour.

These small particulars are the only points I would reconsider, and I only mention them because I make myself one of the London audience to whom they are offered. In all other respects—as a striking picture of the man and the time—as comprising a vast quantity of authority into a small space—and as very eloquently dis-coursing about a history full of interest and vital consequences—it seemed to me to be most excellent.

Ever affecy.

CD

To JOHN FORSTER, 15 MAY 1854*

MS (copy in Mrs Forster's hand) Huntington Library.

Tavistock House | Monday Morning | Fifteenth May 1854

My Dear Forster

I really am particularly sorry that Mr. Smith[†5] should grate upon your ear. I merely cited him as the first thing that came into my head as serving to put the hint lightly and to avoid any appearance of seeming to lay down the law.

Although I think I could have written a pretty accurate account of the Lecture when I came away on Saturday night I should have made up my mind last night (on reading your note carefully), that my impression of it was not truly balanced, but for your allusion to Carlyle. Now do let me (and you know that it is impossible for any one to admire him as a great original genius and a most admirable writer, more than I do) remind you that the extraordinary peculiarity of his mind always is a respect for power when it is exercised by a determined man.[†1] Some years ago when I was not familiarly acquainted with his writings, I said to you, after meeting him one night in your rooms with Emerson,[†2] that it was an anomaly I could not get out of my mind, to hear him immensely lauding even the present Emperor of Russia.[†3] You know how the same curious distortion, if I may call it so, in one I so much respect—pervades everything he does, and your mention of him strengthens me in my impression that I came away on Saturday with the general deduction from your lecture correctly in my mind. I feel strongly on the subject, because, apart from your having done the other men so nobly, I hold that in these things Death and Time should make no manner of difference. A Tyrant is always a detestable creature, publicly, however virtuous privately, and is always a creature to give no quarter to. Spare him two hundred years after he is dead, and you don't know what you do towards the birth of his successor next year.

I never supposed for a moment that you meant the other little points to be dictatorial. But they sounded so in my ears and where would be the use or manliness of my sitting there if I didn't say so?

The audience were constrained, not knowing what to do—and truly half-a-dozen such people are in a difficulty in such a case when they are dealing with truth and not fiction—but you are greatly mistaken—I say this most seriously and plainly—if you doubt their having been very much struck by what they heard. I can answer for my people, whom I don't take to be particularly patient in such matters; and I walked home with Wills and his wife, and we talked of it in a very grave manner all the way. I am sure that they were all sincerely interested. For myself I can honestly say that if I had not been set thinking about it all and deliberating about it afresh, I should not have made even the shadow of a suggestion I have started. As to Smith, he was merely a stupid illustration and may be put into the limbo of all bad jokes.

Ever affecy.

CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [16 MAY 1854]

Text from F, VII, ii, 572. Date: 16 May 54, according to Forster.

The objection you suggest to paid public lecturing does not strike me at all. It is worth consideration, but I do not think there is anything in it.[†4] On the contrary, if the lecturing would have any motive power at all (like my poor father this, in the sound!) I believe it would tend the other way. In the Colchester matter I had already received a letter from a Colchester magnate; to whom I had honestly replied that I stood pledged to Christmas readings at Bradford[†1] and at Reading,[†2] and could in no kind of reason do more in the public way.[†3]

To HENRY AUSTIN, 17 MAY 1854*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Wednesday Seventeenth May | 1854.

My Dear Henry

I have done the needful this very evening, and only write this note as an assurance to you that there has not been a moment's delay on my part.

Affecy. Yours always

CD.

To THE MASTER & WARDENS OF THE VINTNERS COMPANY,[†4] 17 MAY 1854*

MS Houghton Library, Harvard.

Tavistock House | Seventeenth May, 1854.

Mr. Charles Dickens begs to express his regret that a prior engagement prevents his having the pleasure of accepting the invitation with which he is honored by the Master and Wardens of the Vintners Company.

To HENRY AUSTIN, 19 MAY 1854*

MS University of Texas.

Tavistock House | Friday Nineteenth May 1854 | 10 O Clock A. M.

My Dear Henry.

I have just received the enclosed, and lose no time in sending it down to you.[†5]

It seems to me that your best course will be, immediately to address a short memorial to Lord Palmerston[†6]—though I fear the thing you want,[†7] will not be done. I don't know him well enough to address him privately on the subject.

I may mention, between ourselves, that I know this Government do nothing for one another; and that what one man has to settle or give, another does not interfere with. Lord John[†8] himself shewed me this, not long ago, in a curious manner.[†9]

If you want to see me, I shall be at the Household Words office until ½ p 12—here, after ½ p 5.

Ever affecy

CD.

To THE REV. WILLIAM HARNESS,[†1] 19 MAY 1854

Text from MDGH, III, 159-60.

Tavistock House, Friday Evening, May 19th, 1854.

My dear Harness,

On Thursday, the first of June, we shall be delighted to come. (Might I ask for the mildest whisper of the dinner-hour?) I am more than ever devoted to your niece,[†2] if possible, for giving me the choice of two days, as on the second of June I am a fettered mortal.

I heard a manly, Christian sermon last Sunday at the Foundling[†3]—with great satisfaction. If you should happen to know the preacher of it,[†4] pray thank him from me.

Ever cordially yours,

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To SIR JOSEPH PAXTON, 19 MAY 1854*

MS Private.

Tavistock House | Friday Nineteenth May, 1854

My Dear Paxton

I am particularly anxious to get three admissions to the Crystal Palace for Monday next, for some friends of mine just going away to America. I hate to ask for any such thing; but this is a special case to me, and I shall be very much obliged to you indeed, if you can manage such a service.

Always Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Sir Joseph Paxton.

To MRS COLDEN, 22 MAY 1854*

MS University of Texas.

Tavistock House | Monday 10 Minutes past 12 | Twenty Second May, 1854

My Dear Mrs. Colden

The undersigned Prodigal and Wretch is in a state bordering on distraction.

The tickets[†1] have not yet arrived. I wrote to Paxton for them on Saturday—sent down to Sydenham yesterday, not receiving them—messenger saw him, and brought back word that they were Posted.

Still they do not appear. Prodigal's despair and madness ensues. In his aberration, he sends his own ticket for one—in case that should be of any kind of use. It is not to be given up, but brought back.

Enclosed you will find a handfull of hair, torn out wildly by the roots.

Ever Frantically

CD.

To R. A. ESSERY,[†2] 22 MAY 1854*

MS Mr John Greaves. Address: R. Aubrey Essery Esqre. | Swansea.

Tavistock House, London | Twenty Second May, 1854

Mr. Charles Dickens sends his compliments to Mr. Essery, and begs to say that he cannot entertain Mr. Essery's request.[†3]

To WILKIE COLLINS, 23 MAY 1854*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Twenty Third May, 1854.

My Dear Collins

I shall be delighted to see my name in that good company, and am very heartily sensible of the feeling in which I know you "propose" to put it there.[†4]

Always Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 23 MAY 1854

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Hotel Bristol | Place Vendôme | Paris.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Evening Twenty Third May | 1854.

My Dear Miss Coutts

I was at Shepherds Bush to day (Committee Day), and paid the bills, and transacted all the usual business.

Mr. Tennent[†5] and I were the Committee.

Mr. Tennent had previously spoken to Goldsborough and Campbell, in reference to their refusal of the places proposed by Mrs. Boyle.[†1] As he wished, however, that we should again go into the subject, we did so. For Goldsborough, there appeared not the least justification. In Campbell's case it did appear that the young woman had a real dread that she was not fit for the work which seemed to be required from her. We took pains to get at the truth; and taking into consideration the kind of illness that she sometimes has upon her, coupled with her old mental suffering, the great efforts she has undoubtedly made to controul herself in the Home, and the affliction she was really in, lest she should not be understood to wish to do all she believes she can; we saw great reason for distinguishing between her case and Goldsborough's. We therefore, after consulting both with Mrs. Marchmont and Mrs. Macartney separately, as to her usual conduct, called her back, and told her that we felt justified in reporting kindly and considerately of her refusal, to you. I think well of her, sincerely; but I do not believe her to be equal, either mentally or bodily, to the general run of our girls.

I asked Goldsborough what work she supposed she was to do, when she went abroad? To which majestic enquiry she replied with a very limited sense of Committee dignity, "that she didn't suppose, Mr. Dickerson, as she were a goin to set with her ands erfore her". Louisa Cooper when her turn came for appearing, expressed herself very properly and discreetly about the Home and the benefits she had received in it (under the impression that she would have sailed before our next meeting), praised Mrs. Marchmont's kind conduct highly, and said that, being new, she had more to bear than she ought to bear, or than Mrs. Morson ever would have borne, from "some of 'em". This vague description gradually settling itself down into Goldsborough and Stanley, we enquired into the conduct of the former again, and finding that it was undoubtedly provoking, and that she took advantage of her being first on the list and at the top of the table to incite the rest, I particularly told both ladies to bear no misconduct whatever from her, but on her disregarding their authority in any marked way, immediately to let me know. And upon that I will discharge her.

Stanley,[†2] on being remonstrated with for general defiance, told Mrs. Marchmont last night that she meant to go and that she (Mrs. Marchmont) was to say so, to day. Upon that we had them in together; and Stanley beginning a long story about "Which blessed will be the day when justice is a-done in this ouse." I said that the only thing we had to do with, was whether she had said she meant to go. To which she rejoined that she had, and that she could turn her hand to anything, she thanked the Heavenly Powers! I remarked that the only thing she had to turn her hand to, at present, was to going; and that she would understand she was to withdraw before tomorrow evening.

The rest were all well and well behaved. Stanley will be an excellent riddance, and I think Goldsborough will earn her discharge. Of course she will not have it otherwise. But she seems to me pretty sure to do us no credit under any circumstances.

"Hall General Dealer" proposes to take the field. Bagster[†3] has insane ideas about the value of the grass that is to grow between this and Midsummer. Not to despise his efforts to get something out of that piece of land, we arranged that Hall should have the field from Midsummer, at the rent paid (or not paid) by the last tenant.

Rhena Pollard had been troublesome, but was recommended to mercy. General neatness of establishment, greatly improved.

I must make an end of this long story, or you will dread my hand writing. Kind regards to Mr. and Mrs. Brown, and best remembrances from all here.

Holly Lodge, from the outside, looking beautiful. (I have just been arranging a very small freehold not far from it, where my little child Dora, of the ill-omened name,[†1] is to lie under the sun instead of remaining in a Vault;[†2] and whither my many walks in that neighbourhood will take me, I suppose, at last.)

From "my" lane[†3] the other day, your hawthorns were a sight to see. The heath in bloom, delightful too. And the lopped trees—even the lopped trees[†4]—really look very little the worse, now the leaves are out.

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

To GEORGE CRUIKSHANK, 24 MAY 1854

Extract in Hodgson's catalogue, May 1919; MS 1 ½ pp.; dated 24 May 54.

Refusing a request to sign a memorial of which he knew nothing.[†5] Your name would have removed the latter objection, but your illustrious sign-manual was not there.

To AMÉDÉE PICHOT,[†6] [?24 MAY 1854]

Mention in next.

Thanking him for his book.[†7]

To FRANÇOIS REGNIER, 24 MAY 1854*

MS Comédie Française.

Tavistock House | Wednesday Twenty Fourth May | 1854.

My Dear Regnier.

I have been very much amused by your speculations on the subject of Pichot's book. I have written to thank him for it, and look forward to reading it next month, lying on my back among the corn-fields on the sea-shore. For, in the blessed rest and early hours of my annual country summer-life, that pen of which you write such kind things is laid down early in the day, and I feel magnificently idle for hours together—sometimes for days—sometimes, even for weeks.

We are hoping that you may be able to dine with us tomorrow. But I know that with "repetitions" and representations, you are busy enough when you come to London.[†1]

Pray commend us all, with many kind regards, to Madame Regnier when you write to "that good wife".

Le Vieux Poole sends me a letter now and then, that looks very drunk, and sprawls and tumbles all over the paper. I suppose he still puts his pinch of snuff on the nose of that bust in the Foyer?[†2]

Forster is quite well again. Macready is coming here in three weeks or less, to stay a few days with us. I fear his eldest son will die before long.

My Dear Regnier | Always Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To FRANK STONE, 24 MAY 1854*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Wednesday Twenty Fourth May | 1854.

My Dear Stone

Will you come in and dine on Friday at ½ past 5? There will be nobody here but poor Willy Macready,[†3] who I fear is in a bad, bad way.[†4]

Ever Affecy.

CD.

To JOHN LEECH, 26 MAY 1854

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: John Leech Esquire | 32 Brunswick Square.

Tavistock House | Friday Twenty Sixth May, 1854

My Dear Leech.

The colder morning light makes my work loom larger, than in the mellower evening tints (rather pretty that!). I therefore write to say, you know my punctuality—don't wait for me a moment at the Athenaeum tomorrow—if I am not there at four consider me here at sixes and sevens—if I can be there, I will.

Faithfully Always

CD.

To THE REV. JAMES WHITE, 26 MAY 1854

Text from MDGH, III, 160.

Tavistock House, May 26th, 1854.

My dear White,

Here is Conolly in a dreadful state of mind because you won't dine with him on the 7th of June next to meet Stratford-on-Avon people,[†1] writing to me, to ask me to write to you and ask you what you mean by it.

What do you mean by it?

It appears to Conolly that your supposing you can have anything to do is a clear case of monomania, one of the slight instances of perverted intellect, wherein a visit to him[†2] cannot fail to be beneficial. After conference with my learned friend I am of the same opinion.

Loves from all in Tavistock to all in Bonchurch.

Ever faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To W. P. FRITH,[†3] 27 MAY 1854

Text from W. P. Frith, My Autobiography and Reminiscences, 1888, III, 379.

Tavistock House | May 27, 1854.

My Dear Frith,

Most unfortunately I am engaged on both days. The reason is, as we leave town on the seventeenth, that Mrs. Dickens is in the meantime picking up all manner of conditional engagements, and firing me off like a sort of revolver.

Ever faithfully yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS COZENS-HARDY,[†4] 29 MAY 1854*

MS Fales Collection, New York University Library.

Tavistock House, London | Twenty Ninth May, 1854.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his Compliments to Miss Cozens Hardy. In reply to her enquiry he begs to say that he gave the lines in question to the deceased Lady Blessington (for whom he wrote them), and that he believes she published them, either in the Keepsake or the Book of Beauty, for 1845.[†5] He has not the means of reference at hand, and has not an exact remembrance on the subject.

To MESSRS FAUDEL & PHILLIPS,[†1] 29 MAY 1854*

MS (in Wills's hand) Kent County Archives. Address: Messrs Faudel & Phillips | 38/40 Newgate Street.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS
29 May 1854

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Messrs. Faudel & Phillips, and begs to thank them for the Boston Schools Report[†2] they were so good as to forward at the request of Mr. Norton.[†3]
Messrs Faudel & Phillips

To MRS MATTHEWS, [LATE MAY 1854]

Mention in next.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 30 MAY 1854*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Hotel Bristol | Place Vendôme | Paris.

Tavistock House, London | Thirtieth May 1854

My Dear Miss Coutts.

The enclosed is from that terribly benighted Clergyman who couldn't make out my signature.[†4] In order that I may answer it, will you let me know what you think of the case—as soon as you conveniently can?

I am very much moved by your offer of the Tree.[†5] Perhaps you will let me say a word to the Gardener about it, when you come back. I had been considering what green thing to put there, but it must be something that can thrive, planted in a tub or box. I have chosen a great flat stone, as the least pretending and the most enduring exterior of a grave, and it must be stood upon the stone within the railing. There is a wonderful view of the giant city from the spot. They never allow the birds to be frightened there, and they sing delightfully.

Did you see a paper called the Quiet Poor,[†6] in the Household Words some few weeks ago?

—Another enquiry. You remember that Mrs. Mathews,[†7] the curate's wife, to whom you were so kind? She has written twice within this last fortnight, for more money—with a pertinacity that does not give me a high opinion of her. I have replied that I can undertake to make no further statements to "my friend", and that she must consider the correspondence finally closed.

I hope to decamp for Boulogne on the 17th. Macready is coming to stay here for a few days, before we go. His eldest son (about two and twenty now, I think) is just home from Madeira for the summer. A fine, handsome, gentle, good fellow—but I very much doubt if he will see another summer.[†1] Elliotson told me last night—at Townshend's by the bye—that he believed the whole family to be more or less affected by the same disease.[†2]

His name brings me to enquiry No. 3. Is the money for the two poor ladies[†3] to be paid for June, or did it stop in May? I cannot exactly remember.

Will you mention to O,[†4] that I perceive every Engine of puffery in motion for the Sydenham Palace, and that I expect to be more disgusted by the new botheration than I was with the old one.[†5] Mr. Brown's friend Regnier is acting here, and the French Theatre under Lafont[†6] is an immense success.[†7]

I know that Market well. And as to our accounts—if you will give me your word and honor to come home and take no advantage of me—I will stretch a point and trust you till you return.

Kindest remembrances.

My Dear Miss Coutts | Always Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To MARK LEMON, 30 MAY 1854

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Thirtieth May 1854

My Dear Mark.

Collins wants to make a day in the country with us, next week. What do you say to Thursday in next week?

Ever Affecy.

CD.

To W. C. MACREADY, 30 MAY 1854*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Thirtieth May 1854 | Tuesday Evening

My Dear Macready.

This is a brief impassioned reminder that you are looked for in these parts, with managerial punctuality, on the 12th. of June. I have asked Elliotson and Townshend (an accomplished man, who has written better of Mesmerism than any one else),[†1] to dine here next day. For I have a strong belief that if you try that remedy, under good superintendence, on Henry[†2] it will do him an amount of good that nothing else will, humanly speaking; and you may be moving in this direction when you come to town.

I cannot tell you how pleased we have been with Willy, or how much I like him. I think he is the most engaging and the best balanced compound of modesty and manliness, I ever saw. And it was very cheering to observe, as to his health, that although he was here in excessively bad weather and when the change from Madeira must have been severe, he stood it well, and looked bright.

Kate and Georgy unite with me in kindest love to Miss Macready, and to the four darlings at home.

Ever my Dearest Macready Most affectionately Yours

CD.

To FRANK STONE, 30 MAY 1854†

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Thirtieth May 1854

My Dear Stone.

I can*not* stand a total absence of ventilation, and I should have liked (in an amiable and persuasive manner) to have punched Townshend's head, and opened the Register stoves.[†3] I saw the supper tables Sir, in an empty state, and was charmed with them. Likewise I recovered myself from a swoon, occasioned by long contact with an unventilated man of a strong flavor from Copenhagen, by drinking an unknown species of celestial lemonade in that enchanted apartment.[†4]

[†a]I will read Mr. Rippingille's[†5] paper[†6] without delay, and communicate with him thereupon.[†a]

I am grieved to say that on Saturday I stand engaged to dine—at three weeks' notice—with one Buckle.[†1] Not the jockey,[†2] but a man who has read every book that ever was written (and written one, I believe, that never was read) and is a perfect Gulf of information.[†3] Before exploding a mine of knowledge he has a habit of closing one eye and wrinkling up his nose, so that he seems to be perpetually taking aim at you and knocking you over with a terrific charge. Then he loads again, and takes another aim. So you are always on your back, with your legs in the air.

How can a man be conversed with, or walked with, in the County of Middlesex when he is reviewing the Kentish Militia on the shores of Dover, or sailing, every day for three weeks, between Dover and Calais?

Ever affecy.

CD.[†4]

To W. H. WILLS, 30 MAY 1854

MS Huntington Library.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Thirtieth May, 1854

My Dear Wills.

I think Thomas's story,[†5] very good indeed. Close, original, vigorous, and graphic. It strikes me that I see better things in it than he has done yet.

An alteration occurs to me—easily made—which I think would[†6] greatly improve it, in respect of interest and quiet pathos, and a closing sentiment of pleasure to the Reader. It should be delicately expressed that the man (admirably described) who comes a courting Miss Furbey is the old lover who has always been faithful. I think Miss Furbey might have always had a miniature of him, [†a]hanging up, or in a pet drawer and sometimes brought out[†a]—taken when he was a young man; and that when the narrator begins to observe him and his visits, she should still see in the grey hair and the worn face something of that portrait.[†7]

I wish you would make the suggestion, in my words. Beg him not to delay the story, for I don't like to keep anything of so much merit, out of print.

The young poet[†8] is not quite to any purpose at present, but I would certainly encourage him.

Ever Faithfully

CD

[†b]Death's Doors[†1]
Will be a better name for Morley's paper than the one I gave it yesterday.[†b]

To J. L. RICKARDS,[†2] 31 MAY 1854*

MS John F. Fleming Inc.

Tavistock House | Thirty First May 1854

Dear Sir

I wish to preserve between us, some little outward and visible remembrance of your generous Mexican adventure—the adventure for which I was unconsciously responsible![†3] Will you do me the favor to accept my own copy of a book for which I have a particular affection?[†4] In the assurance that you will like it none the worse for coming from my study shelves, I beg you to accept it with my thanks and good wishes.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

J. L. Rickards Esquire

To E. M. WARD, 31 MAY 1854*

MS Mr W. A. Foyle.

Tavistock House | Thirty First May 1854 | 5 'O Clock afternoon

My Dear Ward.

Although your note is dated Monday Evening, it is only just now delivered here. I am sorry that the day you name, will not suit me; but I hope that either Monday the 12th. or the following Tuesday Wednesday or Thursday, may be convenient to you.[†5]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

E. M. Ward Esquire

June

To FRANK STONE, [1 JUNE 1854]

Mention in next.

To FRANK STONE, 1 JUNE 1854*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Thursday First June 1854

My Dear Stone

As Mr. Rippingille addressed his note to you, I think it best to address my official reply to you. You will find it in the large envelope sent herewith, along with his proffered contribution and the paper aforesaid.

In the paper itself, there is no merit whatever. Even its orthography is loose.

Affecy. always
CD.

To MARK LEMON, 2 JUNE 1854

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Friday Second June 1854

My Dear Mark

If you are at home on this Blue-Devilous[†1] afternoon and inclined to go anywhere to see anything, I am your man from 7 o'Clock.

Ever affecy.
CD.

To HENRY MORLEY, 3 JUNE 1854

MS Princeton University Library.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS
Saturday Third June 1854

My Dear Sir

Will you notice the remarkable circumstance mentioned in the accompanying report and Lord Shaftesbury's note? Do not trouble yourself to do more with the subject than you feel it will bear. A chip if nothing else.[†2]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Henry Morley Esquire

To OCTAVIAN BLEWITT, 5 JUNE 1854*

MS[†1] Royal Literary Fund.

Tavistock House | Fifth June 1854

My Dear Sir

Will you have the goodness officially to record that I tender my resignation as a Member of the Council of the Literary Fund.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Octavian Blewitt Esquire.

To W. H. HARRISON,[†2] 5 JUNE 1854*

MS Percy Dobell & Son.

Tavistock House | Fifth June 1854

My Dear Sir

I owe you many thanks for your considerate note—pray let me pay them—and I am rejoiced to hear such excellent accounts of the children of our good friend.[†3] It is delightful to know that their mother is so comforted.

My Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. H. Harrison Esquire.

To JOHN ABSOLON,[†4] [?5 JUNE 1854]

MS Morgan Library (ending, signature and subscription only). Date: presumably not long after the Act received the Royal Assent on 2 June 54.

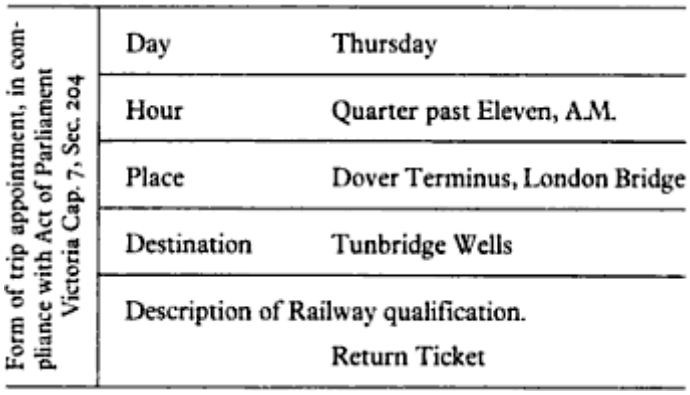
Presumably sending him a copy of the Act incorporating the Guild of Literature and Art.[†5]

To WILKIE COLLINS, 6 JUNE 1854

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Sixth June 1854

My Dear Collins



Form of trip appointment, in compliance with Act of Parliament Victoria Cap. 7, Sec. 204
	Day	Thursday
	Hour	Quarter past Eleven, A.M.
	Place	Dover Terminus, London Bridge
	Destination	Tunbridge Wells
	Description of Railway qualification.	Return Ticket

(Signed) CHARLES DICKENS

Entd.

To JOHN HILLS,[†1] 6 JUNE 1854

Mention in American Book Prices Current, 1939, p. 294; MS 1 p.; dated Tavistock House, 6 June 54.

Sending him a cheque.[†2]

To J. T. SINNETT, 6 JUNE 1854*

MS Miss H. R. Jackson.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Evening | Sixth June 1854

My Dear Sir

Many thanks for your note, which is particularly welcome and acceptable to me. I will look to the paper to which you invite my attention.[†3]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Taylor Sinnett Esquire

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT,[†1] 6 JUNE 1854*

MS Winifred A Myers (Autographs) Ltd.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Sixth June 1854

Dear Sir

I suppose the mistake to which your note refers, to have occurred in Mr. Wills's parcel. My proofs are correct, except that I have two of them.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To WILKIE COLLINS, 7 JUNE 1854

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Seventh June 1854

My Dear Collins

Mark has got something in his foot—which is not Gout of course, though it has a family likeness to that disorder—which he thinks will disable him tomorrow. Under these circumstances, and as this inclement season of summer has set in with so much severity,[†2] I think it may be best to postpone our expedition. Will you take a stroll on Hampstead Heath and dine here, on Sunday instead? And if yes, will you be here at 2?

Ever Faithfully
CD.

To PETER CUNNINGHAM, 7 JUNE 1854

MS Berg Collection.

Tavistock House | Seventh June 1854

My Dear Cunningham.

I cannot become one of the Committee for Wilson's statue,[†3] after entertaining so strong an opinion against the expediency of such a memorial in poor dear Talfourd's case.[†4] But I will subscribe my Three Guineas, and will pay that sum to the account at Coutts's when I go there next week, before leaving town.

The Goldsmith,[†5] admirably done throughout. It is a book I have long desired to see done, and never expected to see half so well done. Many thanks to you for it.

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Please to observe the address at Boulogne.

Villa du Camp de Droite.

To W. H. WILLS, 9 JUNE 1854*

MS Huntington Library.

Tavistock House | Friday Ninth June 1854

My Dear Wills.

GUILD[†1]

Proof of Address returned corrected, herein.

Letter from unknown man, also enclosed.

Phipps's letter also returned. I will not fail to write to him as soon as I can have one of the little books[†2] to send him.

H. W.[†1]

I think your idea about Procter (his letter also enclosed) the best possible.

I send a little Poem[†3] that will do. If we have used the name I have bestowed upon it, I will give it another.

W. H. W.[†1]

Very sorry to hear that you have been so ill. But the weather has been of that astounding character that I wonder any one is well.

We should meet twice next week, before I go to Boulogne. I am not likely to come over until I have finished Hard Times.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 10 JUNE 1854*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Saturday Tenth June 1854

My Dear Miss Coutts.

We have asked Townshend, and Dr. Elliotson, and the Crystal Palace,[†4] and two or three friends of Macready's whom you know more or less, to dine here on Tuesday at half past six. I don't know whether you are going out just now, but it will give us very great pleasure if you will come here on that day. I need not go through the form (I hope) of writing separately to Mrs. Brown, for of course we assume herself and Mr. Brown to be included in the plural "You". This need not at all interfere with our seeing the room.

Commending this humble petition to your favorable notice, and recovering from the clatter of the general skurrying away of this house to Sydenham,[†1] I return to imbrue my hands in the life of Mrs. Gradgrind.[†2]

My Dear Miss Coutts | Ever Most Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts

To MISS EMILY LANE,[†3] 10 JUNE 1854*

MS Sir John Nicholson. Address: Miss Emily Lane | 29 Queen's Road | Regents Park.

Tavistock House | Sunday Evening Tenth June 1854

My Dear Miss Emily.

I have not been able to answer your nice note sooner, because I have been very busy, writing to you in another way.[†4] And I hope you will read what I have been writing.

I went to see the Pony, but I only saw what the Americans call a Human (with a black eye, and vexed) knocking down the pony's establishment savagely, with a hammer. In a cart near him, full of flat boards with yellow Lyres painted on them, was an Animal with a promising eye, who I think must have been The Sagacious. I hope it was, because the flies were worrying him, and he deserved that for his impropriety about the baby. All the learned Ponies I have been acquainted with, have been fond of low jokes. The Horses know better.

The real learned quadrupeds familiar with all sorts of knowledge, are the Pigs. But they have ventured into a combination to keep it quiet, on account of their great dislike to employment. The Learned Pig[†5] (I think you must have heard of him, but at all events he was a beloved and honored friend of your papa's) let the secret out, and they held a Meeting to consider whether they should murder him. But when they remembered that he was kept all day long, shewing Fortunes on the cards, spelling, and telling what o'Clock it was, they thought it Punishment enough.[†6] He soon overdid himself and died.

I know the man who took care of your papa's arm,[†7] well. And I call him a far better gentleman than ever George The Fourth was.

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

I should like to see the learned
Pony who could sign his name like that

Miss Emily Lane.

To MARK LEMON, 11 JUNE 1854*

MS Trinity College, Cambridge.

Tavistock House | Sunday Eleventh June 1854

My Dear Mark

Upon the whole I would recommend you, not to try this Play. The story is extremely well disposed through the five acts, and there are many points of strong dramatic interest that would be sure to tell. On the other hand, though I think I see in many places that you have been bringing your knowledge of the stage to bear upon it lately, the evidences of its being written by a young and unpractised hand are numerous. Young Lemon[†1] halted in the great speeches; his men were hardly up to their positions in the story, in what they said; he told the same thing twice, and in dangerous places; he did, in a word, much that his distant relation sixteen stone four, would not have done by any means. Now it is not Young Lemon who would come to judgment for these things, but Sixteen stone four; and S. S. F. being in a prominent editorial position, I think would not strengthen it by reversing the classic model of piety and taking Young Lemon on his shoulders.[†2]

I scarcely doubt that Phelps would do the Play. Macready will look it over, I am sure, if you like. What do you say to trying while he is here, if his opinion accord with mine?[†3]

Affecy. always

CD.

To J. SCOTT RUSSELL,[†4] 12 JUNE 1854*

MS Berg Collection.

Tavistock House | Monday Twelfth June 1854

My Dear Scott Russell.

It has come into my head that by presenting my brother Alfred to you, I may possibly help him to some engineering employment (which he is very anxious to obtain), and at the same time make you acquainted with a practical and persevering fellow who may be of use to you.[†5]

He has been bred to engineering from his boyhood, and has been, for some years back, engaged in the construction of some lines in Yorkshire, now finished. He has high testimonials and sound recommendations, and only wants—his old duties being satisfactorily discharged—to enter upon new duties in an earnest way. I have it very much at heart to help him to attain this object if I can.[†1]

Anything about himself that you may want to know, he will tell you with no waste of words.

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

J Scott Russell Esquire

To JOHN FORSTER, 13 JUNE 1854

Extract in Charles Retz Inc. catalogue No. 14; MS on inner flap of envelope; dated 13 June 54.

Here's another Number.[†2]

To MARK LEMON, 14 JUNE 1854

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Fourteenth June 1854

My Dear Mark

I hope you keep in the same mind as to going to Folkestone with us on Saturday. I purpose going by the 4.50 Express,—and we might meet at 3, and chop at the Cock[†3] as in the ancient dramatic times.

Will you come in on Friday, and dine at 6. I know Macready will be pleased to see you, and we shall be otherwise alone.

Ever Affecy.
CD.

To THE DIRECTORS OF THE ROYAL GENERAL THEATRICAL FUND, [?MID-JUNE 1854]

Summary in Minutes of the Special Meeting of Directors, 20 June 54, MS Royal General Theatrical Fund. Date: a few days before 17 June, since the Special Meeting of 20 June had been called on 17 June, presumably prompted by this letter.

Stating that he had been to the City to receive the Half Yearly Dividend due and invest the amount, but was unable to do so, because no Trustee had been appointed instead of the late Mr. Justice Talfourd;[†4] advising that the Directors should at once proceed to the selection and election of some gentleman to that office; and also suggesting the names of

Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton, William Macready and Clarkson Stanfield as the most eligible persons.[†1]

To FREDERIC OUVRY, 16 JUNE 1854*

MS Private.

Tavistock House | Thursday Sixteenth June 1854

My Dear Sir

Wills has shewn me your letter dated the day before yesterday,[†2] and I wish to say to you—privately and individually of course—that in the event of Mr. Dilke[†3] joining the Guild, I consider it will become a question for the consideration of the Council whether they shall hear whatever he has to propose, or not. That any of us can possibly settle beforehand that he is not to be heard, and that we can have nothing to [do] with the appropriation of the wealth of the Literary Fund, seems to me to be assuming the whole case.[†4]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Frederic Ouvry Esquire

To HENRY COLE,[†1] 17 JUNE 1854*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Seventeenth June 1854

Dear Mr. Cole.

Although I date from here, I have in fact retreated to Boulogne to pass the summer in the society of your friend Mr. Gradgrind and others, free from the disturbances of London. Otherwise, very readily responding to your good humour,[†2] I should have lost no time in calling on Mr. Redgrave.[†3]

I often say to Mr. Gradgrind that there is reason and good intention in much that he does—in fact, in all that he does—but that he over-does it. Perhaps by dint of his going his way and my going mine, we shall meet at last at some halfway house where there are flowers on the carpets,[†4] and a little standing-room for Queen Mab's Chariot[†5] among the Steam Engines.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Henry Cole Esquire.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?JANUARY-17 JUNE 1854]

Extract in F, VIII, ii, 638. Date: 1854, according to Forster; before 18 June, as he implies that it was not written from Boulogne.

Alluding to one kind of experience described in Copperfield and identifying it, through the drawbacks of his present life, with his own: the so happy and yet so unhappy existence which seeks its realities in unrealities, and finds its dangerous comfort in a perpetual escape from the disappointment of heart around it.

To MRS GASKELL, [15] AND 17 JUNE 1854

MS John Rylands Library. Date: Misdated by CD; Thursday was 15 June.

Tavistock House | Thursday Evening Sixteenth June | 1854

My Dear Mrs. Gaskell.

I have read the MS[†1] you have had the kindness to send me, with all possible attention and care. I have shut myself up for the purpose, and allowed nothing to divide my thoughts. It opens an admirable story, is full of character and power, has a strong suspended interest in it (the end of which, I don't in the least foresee), and has the very best marks of your hand upon it. If I had had more to read, I certainly could not have stopped, but must have read on.

Now, addressing myself to the consideration of its being published in weekly portions, let me endeavour to shew you as distinctly as I can, the divisions into which it must fall. According to the best of my judgment and experience, if it were divided in any other way—reference being always had to the weekly space available for the purpose in Household Words—it would be mortally injured.

I would end No. 1—With the announcement of Mr. Lennox at the parsonage

I would end No. 2—with Mr. Hale's announcement to Margaret, that Milton-Northern is the place they are going to. This No. therefore would contain Lennox's proposal, and the father's communication to his daughter of his leaving the church.

I would end No. 3—With their fixing on the watering-place as their temporary sojourn.[†2]

I would end No. 4—With Margaret's sitting down at night in their new house, to read Edith's letter.[†3] This No. therefore, would contain the account of Milton, and the new house, and the Mill Owner's first visit.

I would end No. 5—With the Mill-Owner's leaving the house after the tea-visit.[†4] This No. therefore would contain the introduction of his mother, and also of the working father and daughter—the Higgins family.

I would end No. 6—With Margaret leaving their dwelling, after the interview with Bessy when she is lying down.[†5]

These Nos. would sometimes require to be again divided into two chapters, and would sometimes want a word or two of conclusion. If you could be content to leave this to me, I could make those arrangements of the text without much difficulty. The only place where I do not see my way, and where the story—always with a special eye to this form of publication—seems to me to flag unmanageably, without an amount of excision that I dare scarcely hint at, is between Nos. 2 and 3, where the

Dialogue is long—is on a difficult and dangerous subject[†1]—and where, to bring the murder out at once,[†2] I think there is a necessity for fusing two Nos. into one.[†3] This is the only difficult place in the whole 114 sides of foolscap.[†4]

As nearly as I can calculate, about 18 sides of your writing would make a weekly No. On about this calculation, the MS I have, would divide at the good points I have mentioned, and pretty equally. I do not apologize to you for laying so much stress on the necessity of its dividing well, because I am bound to put before you my perfect conviction that if it did not, the story would be wasted—would miss its effect as it went on—and would not recover it when published complete. The last consideration is strong with me, because it is based on my long comparison of the advantages and disadvantages of the periodical form of appearance.

I hope these remarks will not confuse you, but you will come out tolerably clear after a second reading, and will convey to you the means of looking at your whole story from the weekly point of view. It cannot, I repeat, be disregarded without injury to the book.[†5] All the MS that I have—with the exception I have mentioned and allowing a very reasonable margin indeed for a little compression here and there—might have been expressly written to meet the exigencies of the case.

Saturday Seventeenth June.

That my calculations might be accurate, I thought it well to stop my note and send eighteen of your sides to the Printer's (I took them out at random) to be calculated. Their estimate exactly accords with mine. I have therefore no doubt of its correctness.

Is there anything else that I can tell you, or anything else you want to ask me? Pray do not entertain the idea that you can give me any trouble I shall not be delighted to encounter.

My address is,

Villa du Camp de droite

Boulogne Sur Mer

—where I shall be anxious to hear from you that you comprehend this long dull story of mine. That you may the more easily do so, I will make it no longer.

Have you thought of a name?[†6] I cannot suggest one without knowing more of the story. Then perhaps I might hit upon a good title if you did not.

Ever My Dear Mrs. Gaskell | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

P.S. I have never thanked you for Mr. Gaskell's lectures,[†1] which I have read with uncommon pleasure. They are so sagacious and unaffected, and tell so much that is interesting.

To W. C. MEATES[†2] AND J. M. HUCKLEBRIDGE,[†3] 17 JUNE 1854*

MS Dickens House.

Tavistock House | Seventeenth June 1854

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his Compliments to Mr. Meates and Mr. Hucklebridge, and begs to say that his occupations render it impossible for him to have the pleasure of accepting the invitation with which he is honored by the Committee of the Pimlico Literary Institution.[†4]

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 18 JUNE 1854

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | 1 Stratton Street | Piccadilly | London.

Folkestone | Sunday Eighteenth June 1854

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I called upon you yesterday between 1 and 2, and should have called on Friday but that I was all day at Shepherd's Bush making up the book.

They were going on very well indeed. The girl from St. James's Workhouse—where she had been temporarily sent, until an Asylum could be found for her—the daughter of the Vestry Clerk of St. Pancras[†5]—I forget whether her name is McMillan or McGahey—spoke to me about her never having been accustomed to hard work, and hoping she might get a nurse's place when she emigrated. I said all that was needful to be said on the subject, as to her requiring to be used to house work, whatever capacity she might hereafter fill; and added that I would mention what she had said, to you. She did not urge it by way of complaint at all, and was on the housework then. She has been better brought up than the usual run of our inmates.

I sent a man on whom I could depend, to look after Frances Cranstone. The place is over by Whitchapel.[†6] He brought back such an odd account of the house being one of four or five neat little houses, with a man and his wife—apparently—in the parlor whom he "saw doing nothing, through the blinds"—and further of the people having just moved in, and being quite unknown both at the Police Station and the public house, that Mr. Wills's curiosity was piqued and he offered to go himself on Monday, and pay a visit to Cranstone in the kitchen if it should tend to elicit the truth. I confided the mission to his discretion, and will write you the result. He is sure to know all about it, somehow or other.

Did you mean, in your instructions to Mrs. Marchmont respecting the fetching of the Wiltshire girl, Trim, from the Railway Station, that you wished Mrs. Macartney to go instead of Mrs. Marchmont, and that you wished to substitute an Omnibus for the usual Fly? It rather seems to me that, with a view to the discipline of the place, the first impression should be of the principal Superintendent; also, that there are many reasons which render a public conveyance very objectionable. Of course I did not interfere, but I thought Mrs. Marchmont scarcely understood what her directions in this respect were.

Mr. Trimmer of Putney after due consideration, has answered the question respecting Walter. Mr. Stone fully concurs. The opinion is that he is decidedly a subject for the direct appointment, and that he would not come off with any high distinction at Addiscombe—where, in that case, he would merely go as a form, and escape what are supposed to be great objections and disadvantages in the College to such a boy.[†1] They confirm my belief that he is very steady and good, and will always do his duty with great punctuality and a high sense of responsibility, but that he has no uncommon abilities, and least of all in the sciences of mathematics and fortification which would alone enable him to get into the Engineers. Mr. Trimmer therefore says he has no doubt whatever on the subject.

I have received a letter, through Mr. Lemon, respecting your next presentation to the St. Anns Society School at Brixton, and soliciting it for a girl. I suppose it is already bestowed? I only want to answer, according to fact.

The payments I have made, respecting which your mind was so uneasy while you were under the protection of the French Govt. are,

3 months Dr. Elliotson's poor ladies[†2]	15.	0.	0
Eliza Wilkin's father	3.	0.	0
Shepherd's Bush in May, as pr. book	41.	0.	0
	£59.	0.	0

I think that's all.

Whenever you go to the Bank, you can place it to my credit. Or I shall be in town, I hope, towards the end of next month, and will write beforehand to notify the important fact of my appearance. It depends on my completion of Hard Times.

Townshend was in a state of great excitement yesterday, at the prospect of your dining with him. The Crystal Palace shares, I hear, have been going down fearfully, since the opening.[†3] Perhaps your lunching there, yesterday (as I suppose you did) will bring them up again.[†4]

—I am a Spanish Merchant,[†5] and I deal, I am rejoiced to say, in a sunny morning and a dead calm. For which reason I am going across presently, with Mrs. Dickens and Georgina who are with me, and give me all sorts of messages. The children are coming over direct from London Bridge, on Tuesday. My address is, Villa du Camp de droite, Boulogne.

With kindest regards to Mr. and Mrs. Brown, and a horrible desire to have the sole and entire direction of the furnishing of that wonderful little room,[†1]

Ever Dear Miss Coutts
Most Faithfully Yours
CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 22 JUNE 1854

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street | Piccadilly | London.

Villa du Camp de droite, Boulogne.[†2] | Thursday Twenty Second June 1854

My Dear Miss Coutts.

That is a most infamous proceeding[†3] on the part of Mr. St. George.[†4] These people who are so horribly charitable at other people's expence, and who will commit any duplicity in furtherance of their object—which they call a good one—are among the worst of Imposters. The Bailiff in the Good Natured Man says of his Follower "he's a good deal in need of assistance, and as I can't afford to assist him myself I must get you to do it, Master."[†5] Which seems to me, in comparison, a respectable thing.

Here is the report of my Sub Editor and Factotum concerning Cranstone.

"She has been living, since she left the Home, with a single man, to take care of his three children. He is the first floor. There are other lodgers in the House, and I doubt the respectability of the parlor but can't swear against it. She has had the entire management of his little household, to the paying of the weekly bills. She has been honest, but she has not wanted for meat, drink, or lodging—though she has been wretchedly deficient in washing: having been idle and dirty 'to a unbelievable degree'. Her charge left her her liberty to such an extent that 'she couldn't abear fur to have any one put over her'—especially my informant, a bright clean goodlooking woman in mourning, who only came last Friday week, either as the widower's new wife or sister; I am not sure which, and could not well ask. Consequently, last Sunday, "Miss Cranstone 'in an artful way' asked leave to go out for an hour, and up to the date of my visit (4 P. M. Wednesday June 21st.) had forgotten to return."

It seems pretty clear that it will be best not to answer her letter. I would not send it to the Mendicity, I think, for they might trouble you.

It is delightful to hear about Watts.[†6] She tastes like a sweetmeat after the St. George physic.

We will look after your little friend if he appears. You cannot think what a delightful cottage we have got. The rooms are larger than those in the old house, and there are more of them; but the oddities are almost as great, and the situation—on top of this hill, instead of three parts down it—is most beautiful. We have a field behind the house, with a road of our own to the Column[†1]—unbounded air—capital garden—and all for five guineas a week. I anticipate shewing it to you sometime in the Autumn, with great pleasure. And there are a variety of ingenious devices in the Robinson Crusoe way, effected by the undersigned (who I think has moved every article of furniture in the house, since Monday afternoon) which must be studied, to be appreciated.

The Camp is not a mile off, and I have been in terror lest I should hear the drums. I went over, yesterday, to reconnoitre the enemy. It is a very curious and picturesque scene. The 3 or 4000 soldiers now here, are building mud huts thatched with straw, for the 50 or 60,000 who are to come. I should think there are about 100,000 trusses of straw piled up ready for use; and the 3 or 4000 men (lazier than any men I ever saw) are constantly wheeling little barrows of earth about—containing twelve tablespoon fulls each, as nearly as I can estimate. Except that nobody is brisk, it looks like the opening of some capital French play.

Our children arrived on Tuesday by the London boat, in every stage and aspect of sea sickness. When I saw them land (Sydney with an immense basket, and a Custom House Officer in a cocked hat much bigger than the child, looking into it) Flight seemed the only course open to me. The Nurse was prostrate, and (generally speaking) was carried by the Baby instead of carrying him. That wonderful young creature was the admiration of the sternest Mariner aboard—which I never heard of a Suffolk Baby[†2] yet—in consequence of the gentleness with which he was perpetually looking out of a white basin and, in the intervals of his paroxysms, pitying his family and attendants. They arrived after dark, with 27 packages, whereof 5 prodigious chests belonged to Mamey and Katey's governess, who is a Frenchwoman, and so small that I should have thought a hat box might have contained her entire wardrobe. In the dead of the night, when we were all asleep, a vigilant Custom House Agent appeared with 22 of those picturesque but screeching women who look after the baggage. The hill being extremely steep, they had harnessed themselves with ropes to the 27 packages. The tremendous uproar is inconceivable.

The Crystal Palace people, I venture to predict, will find the general English Sense revolt against those monstrous pretences.[†3] I had a very clever paper sent to Household Words, representing, with very good sarcasm, the hard case of Madam Tussaud of the Wax Work,[†4] for whom the Archbishop of Canterbury had never said prayers in Baker Street. I thought it best not to use it, but the point was well put and would [have][†5] told.

This is my first effort (No, my second) in penmanship of any kind, since I have been here. I suppose I shall get to work tomorrow, but at present I seem never to have done anything in the way of Authorship.

With kind regards to O[†1] and Mr. Brown, Ever Dear Miss Coutts Most Faithfully Yrs.

CD.

To W. H. WILLS, 22 JUNE 1854

MS Huntington Library.

Villa du Camp de droite | Thursday Twenty Second June 1854

My Dear Wills.

I have nothing to say, but, having heard from you this morning, I think I may as well report all well.

We have a most charming place here. I think the finest situation (Genoa excepted) I ever lived in, and the best Cottage house. It beats the former residence all to nothing. We have a beautiful garden with all its fruits and flowers, and a field of our own, and a road of our own away to the Column, and everything that is airy and fresh. The great Beaucourt hovers about us like a guardian genius, and I imagine that no English person in a carriage could by any possibility find the place.

Of the wonderful inventions and contrivances with which a certain Inimitable Creature has made the most of it, I will say nothing until you have an opportunity of inspecting the same. At present I will only observe that I have written exactly 72 words of Hard Times since I have been here.

Many thanks for the Cranstone information which is quite conclusive.

As to your account of Frederick,[†2]—though it makes me laugh, it makes me feel disposed to tear my hair off. That he should ever have been such a double-distilled Ass as to marry that girl, or have anything on earth to do with that Family! The great thing to be hoped is, that she will never go back to him,[†3] and that her father and mother[†4] may fly with her—and the Devil with all of 'em—to the Antipodes.

The children arrived on Tuesday night per London boat, in every stage and aspect of sea-sickness. With them, Lally and Betty Lemon, whose parents and guardians had discreetly packed two dozen pairs of bran new stockings in their luggage. Duty on said stockings, 8 francs.

The camp is about a mile off, and huts are now building for (they say) 60,000 soldiers. I don't imagine it to be near enough to bother us.

If the weather ever should be fine, it might do you good sometimes to come over with the proofs on a Saturday when the tide served well, before you and Mrs. W.

make your annual visit. Recollect, there is always a Bed, and no sudden appearance will put us out.

Kind regards. | Ever Faithfully

CD.

Mr. Davey[†1] may well stand over, 'till I return. I will tell you something apropos of that.[†2]

I shall be curious to hear the end of Frederic's[†3] domesticity. Get him, if you can, to shew you the letter he will receive from his wife's father. O what a letter that will be!

To JOHN FORSTER, [?22 JUNE 1854]

Summary in F, VII, iv, 595. Date: June 1854, according to Forster; probably same day as To Miss Coutts and To Wills.

Describing the Villa as a cottage or chateau (to him convertible terms) on the much cherished property, placed on the very summit of the hill with a private road leading out to the Column, a really pretty place, rooms larger than in the other house, a noble sea view, everywhere nice prospects, good garden, and plenty of sloping turf.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?LATE JUNE 1854]

Extract in F, VII, iv, 595*n*. Date: Thackeray and his family were in Boulogne from 26 June; since Forster refers to the "early weeks" of CD's residence, end of June most likely.

Thackeray and his family were at Boulogne in a melancholy but very good chateau[†4] on the Paris road, where their landlord (a Baron)[†5] has supplied them, T. tells me, with one milk-jug as the entire crockery of the establishment.

To DR GEORGE WILKES, [?MAY-JUNE 1854]

Mention in To Mrs Colden, 4 Aug 54.

Informing him that William Birch's address was Pudlicote.[†6]

July

To MRS GASKELL, 2 JULY 1854*

MS Berg Collection.

Villa du Camp de droite, Boulogne | Sunday Second July, 1854

My Dear Mrs. Gaskell

To avoid the "confusedest" climax, I will endeavour to shape my letter as formally as an Act of Parliament.[†1]

I did not observe the address[†2] of your former note (being impatient to read the story), and had not the faintest idea that you were in town.

Nor had I any ambition to interpose my own words of conclusion to any of the divisions. I merely wished to smooth everything for you as much as I possibly could, and to present any little harassing necessities in their easiest light.

Margaret Hale is as good a name as any other; and I merely referred to its having a name at all, because books usually have names, and you had left the title of the story blank.[†3]

Hard Times will be finished in Household Words, please God, either on Saturday the 12th. of August, or on Saturday the 19th. of August. I think its successor should begin not later than Saturday the 2nd. of September.

But I cannot so well give you the opinion you require (as to whether I should think the risk of beginning before the entire MS is in hand, too great), now, as when I shall have read some more of the story. If you will kindly let me have at the office in London by the 25th. of July what more of it you can then spare, I will read it at once, and write to you finally on the point.[†4]

I dwelt on the necessity of my considering the capacity in the story itself of being divided as such a work for such a purpose must be divided, because I am under an imperative necessity on that head, which I can no more change than I can change the weather or my tenure of life.

I never saw but one bill[†5] with which I had anything to do, and I immediately directed the Printers (who rather plumed themselves on the invention) to issue no more, and to cancel what they had. I should propose to advertize the story, exactly as I allow my own stories to be advertized;[†6] and I assure you that I have a very considerable respect for my Art and a very considerable respect for myself.

Dear Mrs. Gaskell | Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

P.S. I infer from your letter that you would like to have the MS you sent me, returned. With this view, I placed it under seal at the office; and I write to Wills by this post, begging him to put it in a parcel and forward it to you without delay.

To W. WALTON,[†1] 2 JULY 1854*

MS Mr J. F. Fields.

Boulogne, Villa du Camp de droite | Sunday Second July 1854.

My Dear Sir

I have just received your letter here. This house is on the top of the hill above my last house,[†2] and the gate is a little beyond that gate. If you return this way,[†3] we shall all be happy to see you if you will report on what day we may expect you to dinner at ½ p 5.

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

W. Walton Esquire.

To W. H. WILLS, [2 JULY 1854]

Mention in To Mrs Gaskell, 2 July 54. Date: same day as that letter.

Asking him to post Mrs Gaskell's MS back to her at once.

To THE REV. MATTHEW GIBSON, [4] JULY 1854

Text from N, II, 565. Date: misdated by CD; Tues was 4 July.

Villa du Camp de droite | Tuesday evening, Third July 1854

My Dear Sir.

I should have had the greatest pleasure in dining with you on Thursday, but that I am unfortunately engaged to two friends[†4] who are coming through on that day and whom we expect here.—Believe me,

Very faithfully yours

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To W. H. WILLS, 9 JULY 1854*

MS Huntington Library.

Boulogne | Sunday Ninth July 1854

My Dear Wills.

H. W.[†1]

I was sorry yesterday, on the arrival of yesterday's No.[†2] to see Bohemia[†3] in it. I had carefully altered the proof here. There are several things in the paper that ought not to be there;[†4] and the title—used up at every minor Theatre in England[†5]—is in the highest degree objectionable.

Your parcel with the Proof of No. 226,[†6] was marked outside, [†a]Too Late for the Tidal Train.[†a] Consequently it did not come until next day; arriving here, yesterday evening.

I return the Proof now. See that there are no mistakes in my corrections. The Hard Times pages[†7] to Forster, directly.[†8]

Shot Through the Heart,[†9] I positively (it may be that I am addled by Hard Times) do not understand.[†10] If it be meant that the young Count and the Forester's daughter were brother and sister, and had been loving each other incestuously,[†11] it is intensely disagreeable. The whole story reads to me exactly as if it had been found in a Madhouse.

Wholesome Conclusions it would be the wildest imbecility to publish, in the present impossible-of-comprehension-state of that whole question.[†12] Something must decidedly be substituted for this paper—as Shot through the Heart should give place to something else if you have anything else.[†13]

French Waiter,[†14] dismal, but just passing muster.

The French Lawyer[†15] (proof altered and returned) will do, in part, for the replacing matter you want.[†16] It is very well, and I have put a capital title to it.[†17]

SELF & CO.[†1]

I hope to be done, about Wednesday or Thursday Week. Am very much in need of rest. Head very hot. Sometimes nervous.

House and garden better than ever. All inmates hearty.

Not knowing whether I am expected to address this to Captain Barlow or no, I send it straight to you.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

Another MS No. of Hard Times,[†2] enclosed.

To WILKIE COLLINS, 12 JULY 1854

MS Morgan Library.

Villa du Camp de droite, Boulogne
Wednesday Night Twelfth July 1854

My Dear Collins

Bobbing up, Corkwise, from a sea of Hard Times, I beg to report this Tenement—AMAZING[†3]!!! Range of view and air, most free and delightful—hill-side garden, delicious—field, stupendous—speculation in haycocks already effected by the undersigned, with a view to the heaping-up of a "Home" at Rounders.[†4]

I hope to finish and get to town by next Wednesday night, the 19th. What do you say to coming back with me on the following Tuesday? The interval I propose to pass in a career of amiable dissipation and unbounded license in the metropolis. If you will come and breakfast with me about midnight—anywhere—any day—and go to bed no more until we fly to these pastoral retreats—I shall be delighted to have so vicious an associate.

Will you undertake to let Ward know that if he still wishes me to sit to him,[†5] he shall have me as long as he likes, at Tavistock House on Monday the 24th. from 10 AM?[†6]

I have made it understood here, that we shall want to be taken the greatest care of, this summer, and to be fed on nourishing meats. Several new dishes have been rehearsed, and have come out very well. I have met with what they call in the City "a parcel"[†7] of the celebrated 1846 champagne.[†8] It is a very fine wine, and calculated to do us good when weak.

The Camp[†1] is about a mile off. Voluptuous English authors reposing from their literary fatigues (on their laurels) are expected, when all other things fail, to lie on straw in the midst of it when the days are sunny, and stare at the blue sea until they fall asleep. (About 150 soldiers have been at various times billeted on Beaucourt[†2] since we have been here—and he has clinked glasses with them every one, and read a MS book of his father's[†3] on Soldiers in general, to them all).

I shall be glad to hear what you say to these various proposals. I write with the Emperor in the town[†4] and a great expenditure of tri-color floating thereabouts,[†5] but no stir makes its way to this inaccessible retreat. It is like being up in a balloon. Lionizing Englishmen and Germans start to call, and are found lying imbecile in the road half way up. Ha-ha-ha!

Kindest regards from all. The Plornishghenter adds Mr. and Mrs. Goose's duty.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

The Cobbler[†6] has been ill these many months, and unable to work—has had a Carbuncle in his back, and has it cut three times a week. The little dog sits at the door so unhappy and anxious to help, that I every day expect to see him beginning a pair of top boots.

To THOMAS CARLYLE, 13 JULY 1854

MS British Library.

Villa du Camp de droite, Boulogne
Thursday Evening Thirteenth July 1854

My Dear Carlyle

I am going, next month, to publish in One Volume a story now coming out in Household Words, called Hard Times. I have constructed it patiently, with a view to its publication altogether in a compact cheap form.[†7] It contains what I do devoutly hope will shake some people in a terrible mistake of these days,[†8] when so presented. I know it contains nothing in which you do not think with me,[†9] for no man knows your books better than I. I want to put in the first page of it, that it is inscribed to Thomas Carlyle.[†10] May I?

Another thing. We are living here, in a queer, airy, lonely French house on the top of a windy hill—quite aloof from all Hunters of Lions before the Lord[†1] (or the Devil), and yet as fresh and natural a place as ever you saw, within 7 hours of London Bridge. Can you give me anything in the way of that plain burly hope that alone condescends to come out of you, that you and Mrs. Carlyle could come and pass a week with us in September? If you tell me Yes, she and Mrs. Dickens shall be a Commission to settle the rest, and so my love to her and you.

Affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

P.S. I wouldn't flourish to you, if it were not the nature of me.[†2]

To W. H. WILLS, [13] JULY 1854

MS Huntington Library. Date: misdated by CD; Thurs was 13 July.

Boulogne, | Thursday Fourteenth July 1854

My Dear Wills. Your note received, and your parcel expected.

I am so stunned with work, that I really am not able (in sending off my own parcel hurriedly) to answer your questions—I mean, not able to consider them. I doubt if there will not be too much of Hard Times, to admit of the conclusion all going in together.[†3] There will probably be either 14 or 15 sides of my writing. But the best thing will be for me to come over with it, the moment I have finished. [†a]On Wednesday night at a quarter past ten,[†a] I hope to be at London Bridge. But if I should find on Monday (though I hardly expect it) that I can come on Tuesday night instead, I will let you know as much by[†4] Monday's post.

The MS now sent, contains what I have looked forward to through many weeks.[†5]

The advertisement[†6] will simply be

On such a day will be published

Complete in One Volume, price five shillings,

— VII - 369 —

HARD TIMES[†1]

By Charles Dickens.

I will send B & E the two first books[†2] in your returned parcel.

Ever Faithfully

CD

Call the Guild again, for Monday Week.[†3]

To THOMAS BEARD, 14 JULY 1854

MS Dickens House.

Villa du Camp de droite, Boulogne | Friday July Fourteenth 1854

My Dear Beard

Will you dine with me at the Garrick, next Friday—this day week—at a quarter past 6? I want to report the glories of this eagle's nest on the top of the hill, and to impress your mind with the family sentiment that you ought to have a month's holiday this year.

Ever Cordially Yours

CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, 14 JULY 1854

Extract in F, VII, i, 566-7*n*.

Tavistock House. Look at that! Boulogne, of course. Friday, 14th of July, 1854. I am three parts mad, and the fourth delirious, with perpetual rushing at Hard Times. I have done what I hope is a good thing with Stephen, taking his story as a whole; and hope to be over in town with the end of the book on Wednesday night.... I have been looking forward through so many weeks and sides of paper to this Stephen business, that now—as usual—it being over, I feel as if nothing in the world, in the way of intense and violent rushing hither and thither, could quite restore my balance.

To W. H. WILLS, [15] JULY 1854

MS Huntington Library. Date: misdated by CD; Sat was 15 July.

Boulogne | Saturday Night Fourteenth July 1854

My Dear Wills.

HARD TIMES.[†1]

The enclosed batch of print tied up with string, to Whitefriars at once, if you please.

H. W.[†1]

My corrections are rather slightly made, and the No.[†2] wants carefully going over for plain pointing and setting out.

The CP[†3] by RS[†4] is very well done, but I cannot make up my mind to lend my blow to the great Forge-bellows of puffery at work.[†5] I so heartily desire to have nothing to do with it, that I wish you would cancel this article altogether, and substitute something else. As to the guide-books, I think they are a sufficiently flatulent botheration in themselves, without being discussed.[†6] A lurking desire is always upon me to put Mr. Laing's[†7] speech on Accidents to the public, as Chairman of the Brighton Railway, against his pretensions as a chairman of public Instructors and guardians.[†8] And I don't know but what I may come to it at some odd time. This strengthens me in my wish to avoid the bellows.

When you want a parcel to reach me at once (if ever) I think you had better write outside, so much for Immediate Delivery. Because my friend Barnard[†9] keeps them all[†10] cooling, four or five hours. And I don't know that he can be reasonably expected under the circumstances, to do anything else.

I[†1]

Hope to get up to town on Tuesday night with the close of Hard Times. Will write again on Monday night. Meanwhile, all other matters stand over without mention, except.—

GUILD[†1]

The table of Sickness Fund premiums requires extension—or a plain explanation appended that it presents the Minimum of Provident Investment under that head, and that so much is the Maximum.[†1] Without such addition it looks ludicrous.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To W. H. WILLS, 17 JULY 1854

MS Huntington Library.

Boulogne, Monday July Seventeenth | 1854

My Dear Wills

I am happy to say that I have finished Hard Times this morning.[†2] I purpose coming over tomorrow, arriving at London Bridge at a quarter past 10 at Night.[†3] Will you tell Cooper to be there, in waiting for me.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 19 JULY 1854*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS
Wednesday Nineteenth July 1854

My Dear Miss Coutts

I find, as to Saturday,[†4] that my examined conscience will not acquit itself of an engagement (I had forgotten it) to Mr. Forster, supposing him well enough[†5] to claim its fulfilment. To prevent that Monitor from being overworked, I dispatch this timely note.

Lady Beecher[†6] is 62![†7]

Dear Miss Coutts | Ever Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

To MRS CHARLES DICKENS, 19 JULY 1854

MS British Library. Address: Mrs. Charles Dickens | Villa du Camp de droite | Boulogne Sur Mer.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS
Wednesday Nineteenth July 1854

My Dearest Catherine

The appearances of the passage were better than the reality. There was a great deal of motion about half way over—many basins in requisition—and Lally[†1] hideously sick. However, we had a quick passage and a fine one, and my fellow-travellers left me at Ashford[†2] in excellent preservation.

I have seen Miss Coutts (with whom I dine tomorrow); and Forster, who is low[†3] and under physic, but I think will escape this time; and Willy Macready, whom I met in Regent Street; and W. C. Macready, whom I went up to see at the Great Western Hotel,[†4] and who goes away tomorrow. London is intensely disagreeable. Very hot, close, suffocating, and oppressive.[†5]

After a busy day, I am now (at ½ p 5) off to the Garrick, where I expect to find Collins and am pretty sure to find Peter[†6] and Albert.[†7]

You may draw money to pay the bills. Don't draw more than you really want, as I find my account at Coutts's, low.[†8]

The house looks very dismal, but clean. Love to Georgina, and to Mamey, Katey, Walter (who arrived rather sooner than you expected, as I judge by the place in which I saw his boat),[†9] Franky, Ally, Syddy, Harry, and The Plornishghenter. I think it would have been agreeable to have brought the Madgenter[†10] to town with me.

Ever affecy.

CD.

To JULES BENEDICT,[†11] 20 JULY 1854*

MS Private. Address: Jules Benedict Esquire | 2 Manchester Square (narrow black border).

Tavistock House | Thursday Twentieth July 1854

My Dear Benedict.

I have been away in France, working hard in retirement, or your note would not have remained thus long unanswered.

Believe me, if I wrote a song for anyone to set, I would rather do it for you than for anyone I know; both because I have a great personal regard for you, and a genuine admiration of your genius. But I cannot do it. What I do, I do in the main because I can't keep it—it will come out of me, somehow—but, in the midst of my occupations, the idea of undertaking any new task not of my own projecting (however slight) would worry me into a dislike of it and a dissatisfaction with my manner of executing it.

If Mrs. Dickens were in town, she would heartily join me (and so would her sister) in kind regards to yourself and your pretty daughters. So I act as her substitute and send them on her behalf.

My Dear Benedict | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Jules Benedict Esquire

To J. B. BUCKSTONE, 20 JULY 1854

MS Berg Collection.

Tavistock House | Twentieth July 1854

My Dear Buckstone

I have been working hard in a French country house, for some weeks, or your note would not have remained so long unanswered. Crossing over on Tuesday afternoon, I brought your Spanish Dancers[†1] with me—whose complexions then looked like old cheeses, from sea-sickness. I am glad to hear that they came to hand safely,—and I hope they may prove to be strong in drawing,[†2] as well as dancing.

The Fund[†3] could not have done better, I think, than they have done in the selection of their new Trustee.[†4]

I have no Chairman in my eye.[†5] Can't think of anybody. Have been tormenting my brains without the slightest success.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

J. B. Buckstone Esquire

To WILLIAM CARLETON,[†6] 20 JULY 1854

Text from David J. O'Donoghue, The Life of William Carleton, 1896, ii, 187-8.

Tavistock House, | Twentieth July, 1854

My Dear Sir,—I beg to assure you that when you had the—not mistaken—kindness to address to me the gratifying letter referred to in your late communication to the editor of Household Words, dated on the 15th of this month, I was working hard on the French coast, where I remained five months, and then travelled into Italy. On my return to London last Christmas, Mr. Wills, the gentleman who wrote to you on my behalf, mentioned that he had explained my absence to you, and I looked forward to the pleasant chance of seeing you at some other time. If I had supposed for a moment that you did not fully understand the impossibility of answering the letter myself, I would never have rested until I had made it known to you.

For pray believe, my dear sir, that very few things are more precious to me than the approval and regard of a writer so truly, justly distinguished as yourself.[†1] I receive it as one of the greatest honours of my life, and treasure it with sincere appreciation and gratitude. I am fortunate in not having unconsciously presented myself to you once more in an unfavourable light. In the height of the season, when London is full, I cannot live in it and pursue my calling (always my first consideration), and was again in France, and only happened to come over here yesterday, and have your second letter handed to me.

With many thanks for the proposal contained in it, will you allow me to ask the favour of your sending me those papers to read.[†2] I have arranged for them to be forwarded to me within a few days of their receipt at the Household Words office. I hope I need not add that they shall have my earliest attention. Believe me, my dear sir,

With admiration and respect, | Very faithfully yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

To MARK LEMON, 20 JULY 1854

MS Benoliel Collection.

H. W. | Thursday Twentieth July 1854.

My Dear Mark.

I am going to the Drury Lane Opera[†3] with Miss Coutts tonight, but will contrive to get to the Albion by from 10 to ½ past.[†4] Will you be there? I believe Collins is going to call here presently, and I will ask him to join us.

Ever Affecy.
CD.

To MRS BROWN, 22 JULY 1854*

MS Morgan Library.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS
Saturday Twenty Second July 1854

My Dear Mrs. Brown.

I have been in a dreadful state of mind this morning, all along of your mysterious letter. What it can be in Sloane Street—whether a bust—a statue—a marble boy in need of explanation—has been running strangely in my head. And I can't[†1] go and set myself right, because I have been occupied until now (3 o'Clock) and am engaged to go out of town with the invalided Forster, and Stanfield.

What can it be! And it overwhelmed you too!

What
C A N [†2]
It Be!!!

Yours Desparingly[†3]
CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 22 JULY 1854*

MS Morgan Library.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS

Saturday Twenty Second July 1854

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I send you the Proofs.[†4] They are not corrected, and I dare say will here and there contain something mysterious; but on the whole I hope they are sufficiently plain to read.

And I hope you will read them, and like them—a little.

Will you kindly give the enclosed[†5] to its address.

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 22 JULY 1854

MS Robert H. Taylor Collection, Princeton.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS
Saturday Twenty Second July 1854

My Dear Georgina.

I have been expecting you, and still imagine that you will certainly come by tomorrow night's boat. Indeed, it appears to me that unless your mother[†6] positively renounces the idea[†1] (which I see she will not), you had better come, whether or no, and get the thing disposed of. If you appear, I shall abandon the idea of going to Folkestone on Monday Evening, and shall arrange to bring you back with me by that route. What you are wanted for, is merely (I apprehend) your signature. If the document be ready, your attendance will be very short.

I never in my days beheld anything like your mother's letter, for the desperation of its imbecility. What she imagines would be done—might, could, or should be done—by her insuring her life, I cannot conceive. I should like to know what her ideas may be, even of the practicability of her doing such a thing in any office—and of the cost of it, at her age and in her state of health.

I shall be at Tavistock House all Monday until the afternoon, for I have made an appointment to sit to Ward[†2] in my room that day. But as I should like to give Collins very early notice if we don't go down to Folkestone that night, I think you had best write to me by return of Post, and say whether you are coming or not. Will you do so? Your letter will be, in any case, an hour or two ahead of you. And if I find that I am going—on your account—to sleep at Tavistock House on Monday night, I can then start Cooper off to Hanover Terrace.[†3]

Neither you nor Catherine did justice to Collins's book.[†4] I think it far away the cleverest Novel I have ever seen written by a new hand. It is much beyond Mrs. Gaskell,[†5] and is in some respects masterly. Valentine Blyth[†6] is as original and as well done as anything can be. The scene where he shews his pictures,[†7] is full of an admirable humour. Nor do I really recognize much imitation of myself.[†8] Old Mat is the thing in which I observe myself to be most reflected,[†9] but he is admirably done. In short, I call it a very remarkable book, and have been very much surprised by its great merit.

Tell Kate with my love that she will receive tomorrow in a little parcel, the complete proofs of Hard Times. They will not be corrected, but she will find them pretty plain. I am just now going to put them up for her. Tell her also (as she likes such news) that Albert[†10] informed me in bearded confidence at the Garrick, that Marion Ely[†11] is engaged—young barrister—marriage not to come off at present, in consequence of shortness of funds. I saw Grisi[†1] the night before last in Lucrezia Borgia[†2]—finer than ever. Last night, I was drinking gin slings till daylight with Buckstone of all people—who saw me looking at the Spanish dancers and insisted on being convivial. I have been in a blaze of dissipation altogether, and have succeeded (I think) in knocking the remembrance of my work out.

Loves to all the darlings, from the Plornish-Maroon upward. London is far hotter than Naples.[†3]

Ever affectionately

CD.

Oh!—Something else for Catherine!—She is described in Mrs. Stowe's book;[†4] which Forster,[†5] in a languid state of rheumatico-colchico-hiccoughy-frowsy-aperient-medical-mystery, informed me yesterday he had "been obliged to assault, dreadfully".[†6] Mrs. Stowe is of opinion that she is "large", I believe.

To MISS HARRIET HANCOCK,[†7] [?18-25] JULY 1854

MS Huntington Library. Date: presumably book sent 18-25 July, when he was in London.

H. H. | From | C. D.
July 1854—

To keep your innocence company, here is Cowper's: whose "Task"[†8] I accordingly set you. I fear you may find it a heavy one!

To MRS GASKELL, 26 JULY 1854

MS John Rylands Library.

Villa du Camp de droite, Boulogne
Wednesday Twenty Sixth July, 1854

My Dear Mrs. Gaskell.

Having finished my story and got to London, a week earlier than I had expected, I brought back the continuation of your MS[†1] to read here. Confining myself as in my last note, strictly to the business of the subject (that I may be the better understood), I proceed, first, to say how I would divide it.

I would make five weekly parts of it.[†2] The first to close with the end of the strike conversation held by Margaret and her father with Mr. Thornton. The second to close with the receipt of the dinner Invitation. The third to close with Margaret's leaving Higgins's house after Boucher has charged his miseries upon Higgins and the Union. The fourth to close with her being admitted into the Mill on the day of the Riot, and the porter's shutting the gate. The fifth to close with the end of the Thornton declaration scene, and the end of the MS I have.

The fifth part would be a long one,[†3] but the interest and action are strong, and it would not be too long. It appears to me that the conversation in the first part is unnecessarily lengthy, and I think that portion—not only as a portion, but as a part of the book—would be very materially improved if you would not object to make some curtailment in the printed proof.[†4]

North and South appears to me to be a better name than Margaret Hale. It implies more, and is expressive of the opposite people brought face to face by the story.

I should be happy to begin the publication at once,[†5] having so much MS in hand. I should advertize[†6] the tale as to be completed in about 20 weekly portions,[†7] and as being by the Author of Mary Barton. These particulars, and its name, would be all that the announcement need state. By the expression "at once," I mean on Saturday the Second of September, nominally: but really on the preceding Wednesday—the No. being always actually published on Wednesday, though dated Saturday.

I do not understand whether you permit me to divide the story with chapters. But I believe you are aware that it will at least be necessary to begin every weekly portion as a new chapter.[†8]

May I ask you to be so good as to reply to me, as soon as you can, whether you are content to have the story announced as I have proposed. It is very important that early advantage should be taken of all the usual channels of literary advertisement. There is no time to spare.

My Dear Mrs. Gaskell | Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

To LIEUT. COLONEL THE HON. C. B. PHIPPS, 26 JULY 1854*

MS University of Kentucky Libraries.

Villa du Camp de droite, Boulogne
Wednesday Twenty Sixth July 1854

My Dear Sir

I write to you (from a little cottage I have here on the top of a breezy hill) to beg the favor of your allowing me to call your attention to the accompanying Prospectus of the Guild, now incorporated by Act of Parliament,[†1] and regularly at work. Since I forwarded to you the first rough draught of the Institution, its scheme has been matured, and every possible liberality of principle established.[†2] If you will be so kind as to read the short address with which the pamphlet[†3] opens, you will see exactly why the prospective Foundation is not yet made a subject of detail.[†4] You remarked upon this circumstance when I last had the pleasure of communicating with you,[†5] and I am naturally anxious to present to you, therefore, the real purpose and object with which detail on that head is at present avoided.

I am always My Dear Sir

Yours faithfully | and much obliged
CHARLES DICKENS

Colonel The Hon: C. B. Phipps.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?26 JULY 1854]

Extracts in F, VII, iv, 595-6. Date: after 25 July, when CD returned to Boulogne.

Watching the progress of the Northern Camp[†6] as it increased and extended itself along the cliffs towards Calais, he was startled by the suddenness with which the French soldiers overran the roads, were billeted in every house, made the bridges red with their trowsers, and sprang up on the pier like fantastic mustard and cress when boats were expected, many of them never having seen the sea before. The good behaviour of the men reconciled him to their presence and their ingenuity delighted him. The quickness with which they raised whole streets of mud-huts, less picturesque than the tents, but (like most unpicturesque things) more comfortable, was like an Arabian Nights' tale. Each little street holds 144 men, and every corner-door has the number of the street upon it as soon as it is put up; and the postmen can fall to work as easily as in the Rue de Rivoli at Paris.

Baggage-wagons ploughing up his favourite walks, and trumpeters in twos and threes teaching newly-recruited trumpeters in all the sylvan places, and making the echoes hideous, tried his patience a little. But this had its amusement too. I met to-day a weazen sun-burnt youth from the south with such an immense regimental shako on, that he looked like a sort of lucifer match-box; evidently blowing his life rapidly out, under the auspices of two magnificent creatures all hair and lungs, of such breadth across the shoulders that I couldn't see their breast-buttons when I stood in front of them.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, [30 JULY 1854]

Mention in To Wills, 30 July 54, as one of two letters enclosed, the other presumably being To Yates. Date: same day as To Wills.

To W. H. WILLS, 30 JULY 1854

MS Huntington Library.

Boulogne, Sunday Thirtieth July 1854

Dear Wills.

H. W.[†1]

I return the No.[†2] The over-matter[†3] was not in the parcel. Therefore I don't know what it is.

Turkish Seamanship,[†4] as a separate article of one Column, is ridiculous. It must be a chip.

If you have anything else of merit, I greatly doubt the expediency of closing the No. with that Back Ways to Fame.[†5] I suppose it to be by Morley. But it is dreadfully heavy. It would do in another place and at another time, but I feel it to drag most wearily here.

You had better get into this No. the following advertisement.[†6]

NEW TALE[†1] by the Author of MARY BARTON,[†1] to be published Weekly in HOUSEHOLD WORDS.[†1]

On Wednesday the 30th. of August will be published, in Household Words, the First Portion of a New Work of Fiction, called

NORTH AND SOUTH.[†1]

BY THE AUTHOR of MARY BARTON.[†7]

The publication of this story &c[†8]

(according to the first announcement of Hard Times, at the end of No. 206).[†1]

The advertisement must always stand, afterwards, like the[†2] old Hard Times advertisement.[†3]

I have begged Mrs. Gaskell to send you some MS for the printers to get up. B and E must do what they think necessary in the advertizing way, but, if they bill the walls, they must be very careful only to have the plain, good, sensible bills used in the case of Hard Times, that we had at the office. She objects to any bill if it can be dispensed with; and altogether refuses (and no wonder) to be connected with a hideous placard all askew, invented in Whitefriars for Hard Times, and concerning which phenomenon I wrote to Bradbury on its appearance.

Parcel for Whitefriars, enclosed. Also two letters for post.

FAMILY[†4]

All well, and the Meteor Flag[†5] a tremendous success. Collins sends regards.[†6]

Ever Faithfully

CD

To EDMUND YATES,[†7] 30 JULY 1854

MS Robert H. Taylor Collection, Princeton.

Boulogne, Thirtieth July 1854

My Dear Sir

I have brought your book[†8] away, with other pleasant gifts of that nature, to read under a Haystack here. If I delay thanking you for it any longer, I am afraid you may think, either that I have not got it or that I don't care for it. As either mistake would be really painful to me, I send this small parcel of thanks to London in a Household Words packet, and beg to express a hope that I shall have the pleasure of seeing you under my London Haystack (metaphorical for ceiling) when I return home for the winter.[†1] And in the meantime I hope you may like Broadstairs[†2] half as well as I do.

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS[†3]
Edmund H Yates Esquire

To MRS GASKELL, 31 JULY 1854

MS John Rylands Library.

Villa du Camp de droite, Boulogne
Monday Thirty First July 1854

My Dear Mrs. Gaskell.

I merely confined myself to the business-part of our communication, because you seemed a little to resent my doing anything else. Your pleasant letter blows all that seeming, away in a breath. So here I am in my own natural proportions with all my imperfections on my head.[†4]

I have given out the announcement in the manner we have agreed on, for beginning on Saturday the Second of September—that is (as I have already said) nominally: the real day being the Wednesday previous to that date. I cannot positively reply about the Bills. My own impression is, in every case, that they do no good. But it is a publisher's question, and I have told Bradbury and Evans that if they consider it must be done—why then it must. But I have laid this injunction on them—that the advertizing is in no case to be different from that of Hard Times as I approved of it.[†5] And I am sure you will find that to be as unobjectionable as such a thing can be.

Will you send up to London, addressed to Wills, the MS I had at first, and returned to you? We will have a quantity of it got into type, and I will merely divide it into chapters. If I ever have a suggestion to make, I will intimate it on the proof in pencil. You will take no notice of it, if you don't approve of it. Those Cranford Critics[†6] I think must be the identical people who are very much shocked at present (as I learn from the commissioner of Bankrupts at Bristol)[†7] by my being confined for debt in York Castle, in consequence of bill transactions with the Duke of Devonshire. I believe I am going to get out under the Insolvent Act, but I am not yet certain.

We have an immense Camp here, with I don't know how many thousand men in it. The best of the business is, that although it is within a mile of this house, we know nothing about it, except from reading the Times.[†1] For the glory of England, I have hoisted the Union Jack on a haystack. If you happen to come into these parts, and see the flag of your country floating on the top of an exceedingly high hill, you will know the spot where your countryman will be proud to receive you. There is a fête tonight[†2]—of which there is a regular summer series here—"Dedicated to the children." It is one of the prettiest little sights I ever saw—managed by a committee of tradesmen and others, who transact all the business of the night with the intensest energy and devotion. A public enclosure, something like a London Square, is the scene of operations. It is lighted up, very elegantly; and there is an orchestra, and a puppet theatre, and a lottery, and a fire-balloon, and a capital display of fireworks, and a donkey-race (Jockies attired in the English manner), and a match of jumping in sacks. For the adult visitors, there is also a Refreshment Saloon, all Looking-glass and parti-colored calicoes fluted into rays, where a singular refreshment called "A Bzandee Gzogz"[†3] is sold. The charge per head for the whole of the entertainments is Fivepence. You might suppose, from the manner in which he goes to work, that Five Hundred Pounds wouldn't pay the drummer.

I am dreadfully lazy (after finishing Hard Times), and lie so much on the grass, reading books and going to sleep, that I am afraid I observe a new illegibility in my handwriting? Catherine and Georgina send their kind remembrances. I am much afraid that Forster is going to be laid up again. He was very queer indeed, and looking queerer, when I was in town. Yesterday I had a note from him with a very indifferent account of himself, and describing his state (as I observed it generally to be, when I last saw him) according to the symptoms that preceded his last two illnesses.[†4]

My Dear Mrs. Gaskell | Very faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [?30-31 JULY 1854]

Extracts in F, VII, iv, 595*n* and XI, iii, 826. Date: first extract from "another of his letters", according to Forster; soon after To Forster, 26 July. Second extract about a week before To Forster, 6 Aug.

On a sunny day the white tents, seen from a distance, looked exactly like an immense washing establishment with all the linen put out to dry.

I have got an idea for occasional papers in Household Words called the Member for Nowhere.[†5] They will contain an account of his views, votes, and speeches; and I think of starting with his speeches on the Sunday question.[†1] He is a member of the Government of course. The moment they found such a member in the House, they felt that he must be dragged (by force, if necessary) into the Cabinet.

To THE REV. E. TRIMMER, 31 JULY 1854

Mention in Chas. J. Sawyer Ltd catalogue No. 80, June 1925; MS 1 p.; dated Boulogne, 31 July 54.

Regarding the education of Walter Dickens.

August

To W. H. WILLS, 2 AUGUST 1854

MS Huntington Library.

Boulogne Wednesday Second August 1854

My Dear Wills.

In the next parcel will you send me both volumes of this book?[†2]

I will endeavour to come off my back (and the grass), to do an opening paper for the starting No. of North and South.[†3] I can't positively answer for such a victory over the idleness into which I have delightfully sunk, as the achievement of this feat; but let us hope.

During a fête[†4] on Monday Night, the Meteor Flag of England (forgotten to be struck at Sunset) was—stolen!!!

Chadwick[†5] seems to have brought his career to a noble conclusion at last.[†6] When the united bores (and the political economists) give him a piece of plate and a dinner, will you put me down for Twenty Five Pounds and a Speech.

Manage the proofs of H. W. so that I may not have to correct them on a Sunday. I am not going over to the Sabbatarians, but like the haystack (particularly) on a Sunday morning.

I should like John[†1] to call on M. Henri, Townshend's servant, 21 Norfolk Street Park Lane, and ask him if, when he comes over here with his master, he can take charge of a trap, bat, and ball.[†2] If yea, then I should like John to proceed to Mr. Darke's, Lord's Cricket Ground,[†3] and purchase said trap, bat, and ball, of the best quality. Townshend is coming here on the 15th.—probably will leave town a day or two before.[†4]

Pray be in a condition to drink a glass of the 1846 champagne, when you come.[†5]

I think I have no more to say at present. I cannot sufficiently admire my prodigious energy in coming out of a stupor to write this letter.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To W. H. WILLS, [?3 AUGUST 1854]

Telegram mentioned in To Wills, 3 Aug. Date: same day as letter.

About the advertisement of North and South.

To W. H. WILLS, 3 AUGUST 1854*

MS Huntington Library.

Boulogne | Thursday Third August 1854

My Dear Wills. You will probably have received some MS from Mrs. Gaskell when this reaches you. I returned a negative answer as to the immediate appearance of this advertisement, by telegraph today, merely because I thought a week unimportant and considered it as well to be on the safe side. But I have settled the matter with her (as far as it is possible to settle anything with her), and do not distrust our beginning punctually.

Please to take out the parenthesis in the advertisement,[†1] in accordance with my correction. It is enclosed.

I have not a word of news.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To MRS COLDEN, 4 AUGUST 1854

MS Bowdoin College Library.

Villa du Camp de droite, Boulogne
Friday Fourth August 1854

My Dear Mrs. Colden

I am going to send this note to London by my next Household Words parcel, to be posted there.[†2] I mention this in the outset, to account for a possible discrepancy between its date and its receipt. It is the first I have written, except on business,[†3] since I finished my Hard Times a fortnight ago.

We are perched upon the top of a steep hill on the seashore, in the midst of fields and gardens, where there is always a delightful air blowing. The house is a regular triumph of French domestic architecture—being all doors and windows. Every window blows every door open, and all the lighter articles of dress and furniture fly away to all points of the compass. A favorite shirt of mine went to Paris (as I judge from the course it took) this morning. The Camp is about a mile off. We hear nothing of it, except when wretched little soldiers, training to be trumpeters, come and blow their lives away, in hopeless practice at their instruments, outside our gate. I expect a little recruit from the South (who makes cracked and wheezy attempts at all the Regulation calls, six hours a day, under the tuition of two prodigious Giants covered with shaggy hair) to breathe his last with his trumpet, about Saturday or Sunday next.

As to you, I can imagine how happy you all are to be at home again—how heartily you were received by all your friends—how delightful you found the old familiar objects and faces—and how you are now cooling yourselves in some delightful retreat up the North River,[†4] or at some of those Springs[†5] where I seem to remember a little shaking of hands occasionally taking place. The Doctor must have been profoundly astonished by a mysterious note he got from me just as he left town, informing him "that William Birch's address was Pudlicote." I cannot conceive what he supposed this portentous and ghostly communication to mean. It was Elliotson (at Tavistock House with him on the same evening)[†1] who had asked me for the address; but this William Birch being a friend of Macready's,[†2] I somehow got it into my head—and fixed it tight there—that it was the Doctor who wanted it for some inscrutable purpose.

Talking of Macready, let me tell you that he stayed a week with us before we left town—which was on the 16th.[†3] of June. Going over to London with the last sheets of my book, a fortnight ago, I found him there again. I begin to doubt if his own health be at all strong, but he is in excellent spirits just now, in consequence of having obtained a Writership[†4] for his eldest son at Ceylon—almost the only place in the World where he has a chance of living. He sails next month. Under the best of circumstances, the father and son are little likely to meet again in this world, but the appointment fills them both with Hope and pleasure.

Mrs. Stowe's letter was pleasant, but—may I whisper it?—I thought, a little conceited in its affectation of humility.[†5] Her Moony Memories are very silly I am afraid. Some of the people remembered the most moonily are terrible humbugs[†6]—mortal, deadly incarnations of Cant and Quackery.

I am very anxious to know what is to become of the Massachusetts Slavery Question,[†7] on which a great deal of importance to the whole world seems to hang. It is sad to consider such a state of things. I know of nothing in the world presenting such a prodigious moral phenomonon[[sic]], as the whole proceedings of the last audacious seizure at Boston,[†1] in a country existing under the great declaration of Independence.[†2]

When I was in London the other day, the weather was extraordinarily and intensely hot—hotter than has been known for years and years. One morning, I suddenly (the temperature being then most violent) found an icy coolness come upon me, accompanied with a general stagnation of the blood, a numbness of the extremities, great bewilderment of mind, and a vague sensation of wonder. I was walking at the time, and, on looking about me, found that I was in the frigid shadow of the Burlington Hotel.[†3] Then I recollected to have experienced the same sensations once before, precisely in that spot.[†4] A curious case this, don't you think?

And by the bye, will you tell the Doctor with my love, that he is greatly missed in the low and vicious haunts[†5] of London. I looked in, on the evening of the same day, at one of these profane places;[†6] and the habitués appeared to wonder where the american gentleman was. The american gentleman reminds me of Felton,[†7] who came to Tavistock House soon after you left. He had been everywhere and seen everything, but appeared to me to have looked at nothing.[†8] He had a general impression that Rome was a failure,[†9] and that Edinburgh was "the drollest" place he had ever seen!!! I know it pretty well, but it never yet presented itself to me in that aspect. However, he thought it so droll, that he burst into fits of laughter in speaking of it. I cannot imagine why a man should think the Modern Athens an immense practical joke.

I meant to have tried to tell you with how much pleasure and interest we saw you again, after our long separation and its many changes—and how much we have talked of you since—and how blindly we have made up our minds that we shall laugh and talk together again, in a year or two—and that the Atlantic is a mere—what shall I say?—joke—like Edinburgh. But on such points (as on all occasions of leave taking) I am a miserable coward and positively can not bear to open my mind. So let me pass instead to the Baby's body, which is in wonderful condition, perpetually running about on two mottled legs, and falling down on jagged stones that never hurt it. All the other children are in amazing blood likewise. Modesty forbids that I should refer to myself more explicitly, than to remark that I am of a deep coffee color from lying on my back in the sun, since I finished my story and betook myself to Idleness—which already seems a year ago.

Kate and Georgina unite with me in most affectionate loves to yourself and your sister[†1] (O what a wonderful guesser she was, on that stupendous night[†2] when she came out with a brilliancy of which legends will survive while the drawing room lasts!), and the Noble Doctor (who wouldn't throw snow upon his head that Burlington day), and your sister in law,[†3] and Grace and Hatty.[†4] We purpose remaining here until the middle of October and then going home; but you will all be with us wherever we go.

Kill a calf in my name and let him be a fat one, for I am a repentant prodigal of the largest dimensions. Indeed I am My Dear [†a]Mrs. Colden Yours most faithfully and affectionately,

Though | Once | Condemned | As | The | Abandoned | and
Stony | Hearted | Ruffian[†a]

To MESSRS BRADBURY & EVANS, 6 AUGUST 1854

Mention in unidentified catalogue cutting; MS 2 ½ pp.; dated Boulogne, 6 Aug 54.

Concerning the number of subscriptions[†5] for Hard Times,[†6] and desiring presentation copies[†7] to be sent to Shirley Brooks, Albert Smith, and Lady John Russell.

To MRS BROWN, 6 AUGUST 1854

MS Morgan Library. Address: Angleterre | Mrs. Brown | 1 Stratton Street | London.

Villa du Camp de droite, Boulogne | Sunday Sixth August 1854

My Dear Mrs. Brown.

I received your kind note last night (stress of weather in the Channel delayed it),[†8] and I think I should certainly have come over, for the pleasure of such an occasion[†9] in such company, if I were not the unfortunate victim of a highly inflamed Ear.[†1] It has been very wet here for two days, and I suppose I have taken cold in the course of my long walks in the rain. Whatever the cause, the effect is very painful; and after feeling disposed to tear my ear off in the night, I am now going to hide my anything but diminished head (for it is swollen very big) in a cammomile poultice.[†2]

Pray give my kindest regards to Miss Coutts and thank her heartily for her remembrance of me. I should have been delighted to come, under more auspicious circumstances. (The obvious practicability of introducing a joke here, about a good ear for an opera, warns me off the subject).

As to Industrial Exhibitions,[†3] big or little, I am disgusted with them and think of turning Misanthrope.

My Dear Mrs. O | Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Dickens and Georgina and all the house send best regards.

To FRANÇOIS REGNIER, 6 AUGUST 1854*

MS Comédie Française.

Villa du Camp de Droite, Paris[†4] | Sunday Sixth August 1854

My Dear Regnier.

My friend and neighbour Mr. Stone—whom you know, both personally and as a Painter of repute and a member of our Royal Academy—is coming to Paris[†5] with his wife and daughter, for a week. He will bring this to you—not with the least idea of troubling you to shew him any Lions, or anything else, but with an interest in shaking hands with you as a brother Artist.

Mrs. Dickens and her sister send their kindest regards to Madame Regnier and yourself, in which I cordially join.

Le vieux Poole. Il vit toujours n'est-ce-pas?—Et il boit un peu, possiblement?

My Dear Regnier | Always Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 6 AUGUST 1854

Extract from C. F. Libbie catalogue, Apr 1890; MS 1 p.; dated 6 Aug 54.

Make me a patron if you like though I very much dislike the word. In so doing I know you will make [me] the patron of a failure.[†1] If these things cannot be done without patronage, they will never, never, never, be done with it.[†2]

To JOHN FORSTER, [?6 AUGUST 1854]

Extract in F, XI, iii, 826. Date: Aug 54, according to Forster; a week later than To Forster, 30-31 July, to give time for his objections; and cf. To Wills, 7 Aug (see below).

About the idea for papers in Household Words called "The Member for Nowhere", I give it up reluctantly, and with it my hope to have made every man in England feel something of the contempt for the House of Commons that I have.[†3] We shall never begin to do anything until the sentiment is universal.

To W. H. WILLS, 7 AUGUST 1854

MS Huntington Library.

Boulogne, Monday Seventh August, 1854.

My Dear Wills.

H. W.

The No.[†4] is very poor as it stands. I would make it up as follows. Whatever you want to take out, you can take from Miss Lynn. The punctuation and dashing[†5] of whose story requires[†6] particular attention.

A little more harmony[†7]
Catchpennies[†8] (without the Chip heading)[†9]
Pastimes and Plays[†10]
Lile Jack (new name[†11] on the proof)
Faithful Margaret (Miss Lynn)
More Splendid than a[†12] Badger[†13]
Back Ways to Fame.[†14]

Of the omitted articles, I have to observe; First of Sidney's,[†1] that it is such careless slip-slop as to be almost unintelligible, and quite[†2] unuseable unless the second part be much better; secondly of the poem,[†3] that there is absolutely nothing whatever in it; and thirdly, of the Roving Englishman[†4] that it is of the same order, besides being conceited—and consequently had better be distributed at once.[†5]

Sala is very good. Don't run him too close in the money way.[†6] I can't bear the thought of making anything like a hard bargain with him.

If you have received Copy from Mrs. Gaskell[†7] (as I suppose you have by this time) add the advertisement I sent you,[†8] to this Number.

I am turning the Xmas No.[†9] in my mind.

—And am very anxious to know whether Morley has really come into his fortune.[†10]

HARD TIMES[†11]

I was vexed to see in the Examiner, the advertisement of the H. W. Volume, with the parenthesis in it which I took out.[†12] I suppose it stood in all the weekly papers? Surely there was time to correct it.

GENERALITIES[†11]

The Meteor Flag was received with rapture, and is now flying at the Masthead—to the honor and glory of England, and the confusion of the thief.

I have had a violent cold in my right ear, and am excewting[†13] the present act of correspondence with my head tied up.—Had poppy-heads[†14] at a boiling temperature, appended to my own imaginative sconce, all day yesterday.

I have a notion of an article for H. W. (by myself, to be called It is not generally known)[†1] for which I want somebody to go over the file of the Times, and note in the Debates every night all through the Session, every personal attack and personal discussion between Hon Mems—who they were—on what night it happened—and what it was about. [†a]The fewest[†a] words of description will suffice for me. Now do you think you can get me such a thing done, at once? Otherwise the article would be out of date.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To MRS BROWN, 9 AUGUST 1854

MS Morgan Library.

Villa du Camp de droite, Boulogne. | Wednesday Ninth August, 1854

My Dear Mrs. O.

I had been saying that I hoped you would write me an account of Grisi's farewell,[†2] so when your welcome letter came this morning and I read the description aloud (I trust with becoming emphasis and discretion), I was not only regarded with great favor as having so much that was interesting to tell, but was looked upon as a small Prophet too. It is always a very melancholy thing to take leave of anything or anybody[†3]—I have a remarkable weakness and infirmity in the matter of saying Good byé on any occasion—and upon the whole I begin to be glad now, or I try to persuade myself so, that I was not there! It is not a slight thing to let a Genius go, out of any sphere; and out of that bright one where people are never really sick and never really die, but come back tomorrow superior to all the hard conditions on which we hold life,[†4] it is a sad sensation to see any one depart into real existence.

—As the bright side of which, I beg to report my ear all right again—except being blistered all over, exactly as if it had been burned—and my head no longer tied up in a black silk bundle. I relapsed into my usual beauty, yesterday.

Townshend (from whom I hear today) is more happy I think in his Stratton Street reception and appreciation[†5] than he has been in anything for years; and I believe nobody alive has a more exalted admiration of Miss Coutts. I wish I had been with him in one of the smaller rooms in Stratton Street, or in Holly Lodge, at twilight, when there were no strangers among us. He has the finest collection of Ghost stories I ever heard, and his quiet way of telling them gives them a peculiar effect. But he wants, in a Zoological manner, to be poked and aggravated up to the mark.

I have been thinking of the furnishing of that room, and see it all in my mind's eye. If you adhere rigidly to the points adjusted by the Conference, resolutely breaking the Upholsterer's heart and regarding all his tears with a countenance of flint, it will be the perfection of snugness, completeness, and comfort. If you give the Upholsterer his own way in the slightest matter, you are lost.

Many thanks for your letter. With best regards to Miss Coutts, and a heap of kindest loves and remembrances from all here,

Ever Dear Mrs. O | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

You remember Serjeant Bellasis's[†1] priestly friend who imitated a donkey in the Pulpit?[†2] I find him to be (not a Frenchman or an Italian, as I had supposed) but an Irishman with a terrific brogue. Which explains the story at once.

To R. H. LOVE,[†3] 9 AUGUST 1854

Mention in American Art Association catalogue May 1916; MS (3rd person, probably in Wills's hand) 1 p.; dated Office of Household Words, 9 Aug 54.

Thanking him for a letter suggesting the opening of public institutions at a low charge.[†4]

To W. H. WILLS, 9 AUGUST 1854

MS Huntington Library.

Villa du Camp de droite, Boulogne | Wednesday Ninth August 1854

My Dear Wills.

H. W.[†5]

I would decidedly put in the Advertisement of North and South.[†6] Then I would write to Mrs. Gaskell, saying that you had heard from me you were to receive a batch of MS for press; and that not having done so, you were uneasy (fearing it might have miscarried) and therefore wrote to say none had come to hand.

I will not maintain my opinion of the Volume-Advertisement, against yours and Evans's united. But I should like it better, if the parenthesis were not so excessively demonstrative, and stood simply thus: (Containing HARD TIMES).[†7]

Sorry to hear that there is not so much personality on record as I had hoped for, because it may damage the idea of the article.[†1] But Nil Desperandum! You may find more, as you advance in your labors.

I wish you would send friend Barnard here, a set of Household Words[†2] in a paid parcel (on the other side is an inscription to be neatly pasted into Vol I before sending) with a post-letter beforehand from yourself, saying that I had begged you to forward the books: feeling so much obliged to him for his uniform attention and politeness. Also, that you will not fail to continue his set, as successive volumes appear.

Your account on Bradbury authority of the Volume, is capital.

I[†3]

think that's all at present.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To F. M. EVANS, [12 AUGUST 1854]

Mention in To Wills, 12 Aug 54. Date: the same day.

To JOHN THOMPSON, [12 AUGUST 1854]

Mention in To Wills, 12 Aug 54. Date: probably that day.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, [12 AUGUST 1854]

Mention in To Wills, 12 Aug 54, as "the American letter". Date: probably that day.

To W. H. WILLS, 12 AUGUST 1854

MS Huntington Library.

Villa du Camp de droite, Boulogne | Saturday Twelfth August 1854

My Dear Wills.

INCLOSURES.[†3]

There is a letter for John in the parcel, also a letter for Evans. Also the Barnard inscription.[†4] The rest are for the post;[†5] the American letter to be paid.

H. W.[†3]

A much better No.[†6] than the two or three last.

I enclose a list of the new names, involving one change in the order of the articles. I have bothered and worried at the Poem[†7] (which is neither English, nor verse) hoping to make something of it, but have not succeeded after all. Strike it out. If I can fuse into it an idea I have of its natural end, you shall have it in the next parcel. If you hear no more of it, give it up as unmendable.

I am not sure whether we have used the title, A Flight with the Birds.[†1] If we have, call the paper Wings and Toes.[†2] But the name I have given it is a much better one if I have not used it before.

Leave three pages—or a Column less—open for me in the next No.[†3] I will write an article at once, and post it to you. Of course I would do anything I could, to make your holiday the easier and longer.[†4] Therefore, count upon me for two articles[†5] (which will relieve you of the first article for two numbers) in the intervening time. You shall have the first one—probably on Tuesday. The second, I will buckle to as soon as Townshend shall be gone from here.[†6] He comes, that day.[†7]

GUILD[†8]

It is discouraging and vexatious, that the men should be so unreasonable[†9]—though I think the National Provident[†10] very like the-as-yet-unchanged-man[†11] in not making it easier to the members of the Council.[†12] As to Forster if he ever makes that rheumatic remark to me,[†13] I'll choak him with a highly indigestible piece of my mind.

HOLIDAY[†8]

I shall be glad to hear, as soon as you know, whether you arrange to come with Mrs. Horne on the 28th. If not, I must meet her at Folkestone, for I would not on any account that she should lose a day of her short vacation after her hard work.[†14] Neither must she be allowed to pay her own charges.

I[†8]

write in a hurry, to get the parcel off.

Ever Faithfully

CD

To W. H. WILLS, [16 AUGUST 1854]

Mention in To Mrs Gaskell, 17 Aug 54. Date: written the day before that letter.

Instructing him to forward Mrs Gaskell's MS to her without delay.

To MRS GASKELL, 17 AUGUST 1854

MS John Rylands Library. Address: Angleterre | Mrs. Gaskell | Plymouth Grove | Manchester.

Villa du Camp de droite, Boulogne
Thursday Seventeenth August 1854

My Dear Mrs. Gaskell.

I sent your MS[†1] off to Wills yesterday, with instructions to forward it to you without delay. I hope you will have received it, before this notification comes to hand.

The usual festivity of this place at present—which is the blessing of soldiers[†2] by the ten thousand—has just now been varied by the baptizing of some new bells, lately hung up (to my sorrow and lunacy) in a neighbouring church.[†3] An English lady was godmother;[†4] and there was a Procession afterwards, wherein an English gentleman carried "the relics" in a highly suspicious box, like a barrel organ; and innumerable English ladies in white gowns and bridal wreaths, walked two and two,[†5] as if they had all gone to school again. At a Review on the same day, I was particularly struck by the commencement of the proceedings, and its singular contrast to the usual military operations in Hyde Park. Nothing would induce the General Commanding in Chief, to begin, until chairs were brought for all the lady-spectators. And a detachment of about a hundred men deployed into all manner of farmhouses to find the chairs. Nobody seemed to lose any dignity by the transaction, either.

With kindest regards | My Dear Mrs. Gaskell | Faithfully Yours always

CD.

To THE REV. WILLIAM HARNESS, 19 AUGUST 1854

MS Princeton University Library.

Villa du Camp de droite, Boulogne
Saturday Nineteenth August | 1854.

My Dear Harness.

Yes. The Book came from me.[†1] I could not put a memorandum to that effect on the title-page, in consequence of being here.

I am heartily glad you like it.

I know the piece you mention,[†2] but am far from being convinced by it. A great misgiving is upon me that in many things (this thing among the rest) too many are Martyrs to our complacency and satisfaction; and that we must give up something thereof, for their poor sakes.

My kindest regards to your sister,[†3] and my Love (if I may send it) to another of your relations.[†4]

Always Very faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

The Reverend William Harness.

To W. H. WILLS, 19 AUGUST 1854

MS Huntington Library.

Boulogne Saturday Nineteenth August 1854

My Dear Wills.

H. W.[†5]

I have gone over the No.[†6] and now return it. Look to the punctuation of Miss Martineau[†7] and Miss Lynn.[†8]

I don't see anything in the Children in the Wood, except a power of making nothing out of a most beautiful story. The enclosed little poem by Townshend,[†9] is far better (I have two more in hand), and will improve the No. as a substitution for the present.

It is clear that North and South must begin at the top of page 61[†10]—and on Mrs. Gaskell's title page (now in her possession) there is a motto from Tennyson,[†11] which I think ought to be prefixed to it. Will you write and ask her for it immediately.

It must always be resumed on the top of that page.[†12]

I am alarmed by the quantity of North and South.[†1] It is not objectionable for a beginning, but would become so in the progress of a not compactly written and artfully devised story. It suggests to me (but I may be wrong) that the Whitefriars casting-off was incorrect.[†2] Therefore will you do what follows.

The enclosed key is the key of the round writing table in my study. In the drawer of that table, facing you as you stand looking at the table, in front of it with your back towards the windows, are two bunches of keys. One has only three cellar keys, which you have nothing to do with (unless you are thirsty); the other is a bunch of several keys. When you have found which key on that bunch will open the drawers of the writing table with the Cabinet on it, by which I always sit to work and on which my envelope case always stands when I am at home, apply that key to the third drawer from the top, nearest to the fireplace, and in that drawer you will find a rough slip of notes in my writing, concerning the divisions of Mrs. Gaskell's story: and (if I do not mistake) a note from yourself, stating the Whitefriars estimate of quantity. If you cannot read my notes for your own guidance, let me have them in the next parcel: and at any rate bring them when you come.

†a I will go to work, please God, on my new article,†3 next Monday.†a

GENERAL NEWS.†4

I am perfectly astounded by the Lewes story,†5 and have been immensely hot upon it.

We have had three short but strange illnesses here—two among the women servants, and the third last night in Georgina who seemed to be suddenly attacked with Tic in the head, but is greatly better this morning. The rest of the story when you come.

I enclose some letters for the post.

Cooper and his charges came to hand last night.†6 Ever Faithfully

CD.

To HENRY AUSTIN, 20 AUGUST 1854*

MS Morgan Library.

Villa du Camp de droite, Boulogne | Sunday Twentieth August 1854

My Dear Henry.

I have, of course, been looking with anxiety to all the proceedings of the new Hall-broom.†1 I congratulate you most heartily on your appointment,†2 but scarcely had a doubt of its taking place, because I verily believe that they could do nothing without you. Nevertheless, your account of Tom Taylor†3 is delightful to read—is most honorable to him in all respects—and will always inspire me with a great respect for him.†4 It puts one in spirits to know of a man behaving generously and nobly, like a man.

I hear that the Government has sustained tremendous damage from its conduct in the matter of the Hall appointment†5—that appeals have been made to the consideration of its supporters in deprecation of attacks before the Parliament was prorogued,†6 that would shake it severely, out of doors†7—but that unspeakable contempt has been generated—and that this meanness will probably be more fatal to the Administration in the end, than a much greater delinquency might have been. It seems to me the vilest thing on a little scale, that ever I heard of. And I think you will have terrific botheration from it, close in around you bye and bye.

We are in a very fine situation here, on the free top of a hill. I wish you could see the place. You talk of going into Devonshire. Don't you think you and Lætitia could manage to come here, on or after the 20th. of next month? From that time until the middle of October, we shall have a beautiful room with no claim upon it; and you can work here, if need be, as hard as you like. Do think of this propojal[[sic]], and let me know what you both say in reply. [N. B. A trap, bat, and ball, on the Premises, and a fine field to play in.] Port every night, parcel communication every day, electric telegraph every minute.

I cannot bear to think of Southwood Smith[†1]—"this man", as your President[†2] called him,[†3] in a manner that I thought so gentlemanly and in all respects becoming, in the Debate. You are far more confident than I am, as to the Government doing anything for him.[†4] I fear there is scarcely a chance of it.

They overmarched some weak Regiments in concentrating the troops on this place; and mortified some unfortunate Soldiers' feet, and superinduced Diarrhea or cholera or both, among them. I believe they are all, now, healthy.[†5] The Camp was at first not well kept; but it is rigidly clean now, and, being on the brink of the sea and on a wonderfully dry soil and hill sides, I should think ought to be far healthier than any Barrack. Two of our women were taken in a queer way last week, but I drove them both raving mad immediately, with opium and ether[†6]—and with the greatest success! The perverseness of that class and their unholy joy in eating and drinking what is bad for them, are wonderful phenomona.[†7]

Kate and Georgina unite in loves to yourself and Lætitia, and we all hope you will be able to come and see us. Children in full bloom and wonderfully well.

Ever affectionately

CD.

In Household Words for the 1st. of September,[†8] is an article called "It is not generally known". I have administered a pinch of Cayenne to the nose of Lord Seymour[†1]—which I doubt his liking.

To MRS GASKELL, 20 AUGUST 1854

MS John Rylands Library.

Villa du Camp de droite, Boulogne
Sunday Twentieth August 1854

My Dear Mrs. Gaskell

I have just received from Wills, in proof, our No. for the 9th. of September containing the Second Part of North and South,[†2] as it originally stood, and unaltered by you.

This is the place where we agreed that there should be a great condensation, and a considerable compression, where Mr. Hale states his doubts to Margaret.[†3] The mechanical necessities of Household Words oblige us to get to press with this No. immediately. In case you should not already have altered the proof and sent it to Wills (which very possibly you have: and in that case forgive my troubling you) will you be so kind as to do so at once. What I would recommend—and did recommend—is, to make the scene between Margaret and her father relative to his leaving the church and their destination being Milton-Northern, as short as you can find it in your heart to make it.

I have made a break at Lennox's going away, and begin a new chapter (not a new weekly part, you understand) with "He was gone."[†4]

I omitted in my last to thank you for the Edwin Chadwick story:[†5] which appears to me the most wonderful story in the world.

My Dear Mrs. Gaskell | Always Very Faithfully Yours

CD.

To W. H. WILLS, 20 AUGUST 1854

MS Huntington Library.

Villa du Camp de droite, Boulogne
Sunday Twentieth August 1854

My Dear Wills.

H. W.[†1]

It is perfectly plain to me that if we put in more, every week, of North and South than we did of Hard Times,[†2] we shall ruin Household Words. Therefore it must at all hazards be kept down.

[†a]I hope the first portion is not printed Part I.[†3] It ought to be, "Chapter".[†a]

The amount you have got into 233,[†4] is quite out of the question. But this is the part from which a great deal was to be taken out. You may possibly have received the Proof from Mrs. Gaskell so altered. But in case you should not have received it, I write to her by this post, begging her to send you the cut down proof immediately.

Sala's Sunday Out,[†5] is poor enough.

I will return the No.—probably by tomorrow's boat.

YOU[†1]

will let me know in the course of the week, how you decide to come, on Monday the 28th. so that we may be on the look-out for you.

I[†1]

write hastily: having several letters to dispatch.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To MESSRS BRADBURY & EVANS, [23 AUGUST 1854]

Mention in next. Date: written the same day.

To W. H. WILLS, 23 AUGUST 1854

MS New York Public Library.

Boulogne, Wednesday Twenty Third August 1854

My Dear Wills.

H. W.[†1]

I send you my second article.[†6] A new subject with us,[†7] and founded upon some excellent evidence you forwarded to me a little while ago, in reference to the County Courts.[†1]

The enclosed from Mrs. Gaskell,[†2] I received this morning. Don't run beyond the present end of the second part, whatever she takes out. She can't take out too much. And bring me all of her story that is in proof, with you.

C. D.[†3]

Will you tell John to take from the bottom drawer of my wardrobe in my dressing room at home, the red shirts and the buff shirts, and to ask Mrs. Wills (on his knees) if she can find a place to pack them in, when she comes over? Further, will you bring me a little bottle of our friend Sainsbury's[†4] Essence of Ginger[†5]—and as large a bottle as you can stow away anywhere, of Burnett's Disinfecting Fluid?[†6]

XMAS NO.[†7]

We will, please God, settle together here.

ALL[†3]

well.—I expected to have heard from you.

WEATHER[†3]

charming. With cool breezes.

EVER[†3]

Faithfully

CD.[†8]

Over

Evans has again made me overdraw my account, by not paying the Hard Times money.[†9] I was inexpressibly vexed to receive Coutts's notice[†10] this morning, and have written to Whitefriars.

To HENRY CAREY,[†11] 24 AUGUST 1854*

MS Dickens House.

Ville du Camp de droite, Boulogne | Thursday August Twenty Fourth 1854

Dear Sir

Your letter has been forwarded to me in my summer retreat. I assure you that it has given me pleasure to hear from you, and that I have read your communication with interest.

I think it possible that I may have considered the powers and purposes of Fiction, a little longer and a little more anxiously and attentively, than your lady friend.[†1] To interest and affect the general mind in behalf of anything that is clearly wrong—to stimulate and rouse the public soul to a compassionate or indignant feeling that it must not be—without obtruding any pet theory of cause or cure, and so throwing off allies as they spring up[†2]—I believe to be one of Fiction's highest uses.[†3] And this is the use to which I try to turn it.

Nevertheless I promise myself the pleasure of reading your books.[†4] I am much obliged to you for the orders[†5] you send me, and will not fail to use them.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Henry Carey Esquire

To W. H. WILLS, 24 AUGUST 1854

MS Huntington Library.

Boulogne Thursday Twenty-Fourth August, 1854

My Dear Wills.

H. W.[†6]

There seems to me, to be far less difficulty about Mrs. Gaskell's story, than you suppose.[†7] You know what we want in a No. You can have of the 45 Columns as much set up as will make about 2 Nos.[†8] and send it to me to divide. As to waiting for the Proofs, it simply cannot be done. You must tell Mrs. Gaskell, in so many words, when you must have the proof back, or go to Press without it. As to Forster, put him entirely out of the question and leave the settlement of any such dispute to me:[†9] saying to him, merely that it was necessary to go to press, and that I persisted in going to press. (See P.S.*[†10] above.)

The real difficulty is in the reckless casting-off at Whitefriars, and upon this point I must beg you to make, from me, a grave representation to [†a]Bradbury and Evans[†a] that it is impossible to proceed if such tricks are played with us. When I read the beginning of this story of Mrs. Gaskell's, I felt that its means of being of service or dis-service to us, mainly lay in its capacity of being divided at such points of interest as it possesses. Rejecting my own estimate on that subject, I referred it to them, the Printer's (of course) for a correct one. A statement was furnished to me in reply, which turns out to be entirely wrong. If I had known how it was to turn out, and that when they said in Whitefriars "white", they mean "black", or when they said "Ten" meant "Twenty", I could not, in my senses, have accepted the story. I want to know what the Masters in Whitefriars say to this mode of doing business. It is a matter of perfect indifference to me what anybody else says. They enter into a certain agreement with us, upon their fidelity and exactness in discharging which, we rely. I want to know what they say to not discharging it and to shirking and shuffling it off, anyhow. And I say to them, that I am perfectly convinced there is not another house in the trade to which I could refer a question so vital to a periodical, who would lazily mislead me altogether.

You will have received an article from me this morning. You have in hand the Eastern Tale[†1] you think so well of (I have not seen it yet, the parcel not having arrived), and (I suppose) other available matter. Can't you make up another No. at once; assuming North and South not to exceed an average portion of Hard Times by more than a Column or two?[†2] Then, if you bring another No. with you, surely you will be easy, and well beforehand.

I am unspeakably vexed by all this needless trouble and bewilderment. There is no more reason for it, than there is for a Calomel pill[†3] on the top of the Cross of St. Pauls.

Ever Faithfully

CD

[†b]*Your P.S. informs me that all the 45 Cols are set up. If they are in your parcel, I will divide them and return them with the Proof.[†b]

To W. H. WILLS, 24 AUGUST 1854*

MS Huntington Library.

Boulogne | Thursday Evening. | Twenty Fourth August 1854

My Dear Wills.

H. W.

I enclose the No.[†4] and the proof of the nice little Eastern Story. Morley's paper,

Faces,[†1] would have been best, first. But I suppose you cannot make up the No. that way? Look to Sidney.[†2]

You call the Poem,[†3] Townshend's, but I know nothing about it. Nor can I at all understand the part of it against which I have set marginal lines. You had better get it altered and made plainer. You can put in Townshend's The True Voice,[†4] if you want a poem.

SELF[†5]

Will you let John get the two books for which I enclose a correspondent's orders[†6]—who says they are the finest books that ever were written[†7]—even by himself.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To TWO UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENTS, [28 AUGUST 1854]

Mention in next. Date: no doubt written the same day.

To W. H. WILLS, 28 AUGUST 1854*

MS Huntington Library.

Villa du Camp de droite, Boulogne
Monday Twenty Eighth August 1854

My Dear Wills.

H. W.[†8]

There is a pretty plain objection to the No.[†9] which may be easily remedied. With that long Eastern story in it, Notes from the Lebanon[†10] (in itself very small beer) should give place to something not Eastern.[†11] Morley's paper[†12] (returned in proof[†13] herewith) being comfortable on the whole, as shewing that Society is better and happier than it was, does not strike me as open to the objection you suggest.[†14]

GENERALITIES[†1]

I send two letters for the Post, and two cheques for John to pay in at two banking houses[†2]—where they will give him acknowledgements for the money.

Anne's soul is in arms[†3] to be satisfied that John took the collars of those shirts to Mrs. Wills, as well as the collars[†4] themselves.

Will you bring another ball for the trap.

You do not tell me how you mean to come.[†5] I suppose by Folkestone, but let me know. We are all expecting you and your charges.[†6]

Faithfully Always

CD.

To FRANK STONE, 29 AUGUST 1854*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Villa du Camp de droite | Tuesday Twenty Ninth August | 1854.

My Dear Stone.

I received the enclosed from Regnier,[†7] yesterday afternoon.

Ever affecy.

CD.

To JOHN THOMPSON, 29 AUGUST 1854

Mention in Bernard Halliday catalogue, n.d.; MS 1 p.; dated 29 Aug 54; Address (envelope, MS Private): Mr. John Thompson | Household Words Office | 16 Wellington Street North | Strand | London. PM Boulogne 29 Aug 54.

Giving directions about the gasfittings at Tavistock House by Scholl the gasfitter.[†8]

September

To JOHN FORSTER, [?3 SEPTEMBER 1854]

Extract in F, VII, iv, 596 and n. Date: shortly before Prince Albert's arrival in Boulogne on 5 Sep.

As the visit of the Prince Consort approached, Beaucourt's excitement became intense. The Villa du Camp de Droite was to be a blaze of triumph on the night of the arrival.

The meteor flag of England, which he had carried over from England, he set streaming over a haystack in his field. Whence it can be seen for miles and miles, to the glory of England and the joy of Beaucourt. CD now hoisted the French colours over the Union Jack in honour of the national alliance; the Emperor was to subside to the station of a general officer,[†1] so that all the rejoicings should be in honour of the Prince; and there was to be a review in the open country near Wimereux,[†2] when at one stage of the maneuvres (I am too excited to spell the word but you know what I mean) the whole hundred thousand men in the camp of the North were to be placed before the Prince to show him what a division of the French army might be.[†3] I believe everything I hear. It was the state of mind of Hood's country gentleman after the fire at the Houses of Parliament.[†4]

Beaucourt, as one of the town council, receives summonses to turn out and debate about something, or receive somebody, every five minutes. Whenever I look out of window, or go to the door, I see an immense black object at Beaucourt's porch like a boat set up on end in the air with a pair of white trowsers below it. This is the cocked hat of an official Huissier, newly arrived with a summons, whose head is thrown back as he is in the act of drinking Beaucourt's wine.

To THE REV. MATTHEW GIBSON, 3 SEPTEMBER 1854

MS Robert H. Taylor Collection, Princeton.

Villa du Camp de droite | Sunday Third September 1854

My Dear Sir.

In returning the two boys,[†5] I beg to say, that I have exercised Frank in English reading—every morning for some weeks past—generally with a very good effect on his tendency to stutter. I think it would be advantageous to him, if he could continue this.

As he wants a little strengthening, will you be so kind as to give directions for his having a tumbler of bottled porter[†6] with his dinner, every alternate day?

And if you approve, I wish them both to learn to dance.

Mrs. Dickens unites with me in kind regards to yourself and Mr. Bewsher. I am unfortunate not to have seen you yet, but have been constantly engaged.

My Dear Sir | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Reverend M. Gibson

To ALFRED DICKENS, [?EARLY SEPTEMBER 1854]

Mention in To Austin, 6 Sep. Date: shortly before that letter.

To HENRY AUSTIN, 6 SEPTEMBER 1854

MS Morgan Library.

Villa du Camp de droite, Boulogne. | Wednesday Sixth September 1854

My Dear Henry.

[†a]I have written to Alfred as you suggest. No one can doubt the wisdom of your instinctive anxieties on his account.[†1] I have felt them fully, but have an instinctive dread of giving advice "gratis".[†a]

Any Saturday on which the tide serves your purpose (next Saturday excepted)[†2] will suit me for the flying visit you hint at, and we shall be delighted to see you. Although the Camp is not above a mile from this gate, we never see or hear of it, unless we choose. If you could come here in dry weather, you would find it as pretty, airy, and pleasant a situation as you ever saw. We illuminated the whole front of the house, last night[†3]—eighteen windows—and an immense palace of light was seen sparkling on this hill top, for miles and miles away. I rushed to a distance to look at it, and never saw anything of the same kind half so pretty.

The town looks like one immense flag—it is so decked out with streamers—and as the Royal Yacht[†4] approached yesterday—the whole Range of the Cliff-tops lined with troops—the artillery matches in hand, all ready to fire the great guns, the moment she made the Harbor—the sailors standing up in the Prow of the Yacht—the Pringe[†5] in a blazing uniform, left alone on Deck for everybody to see—a stupendous silence, and then such an infernal blazing and banging as never was heard[†6]—it was almost as fine a sight as one could see under a deep blue sky. In our own proper illumination, I laid on all the servants, all the children now at home, all the Visitors (it is the annual Household Words time)[†1] one to every window, with everything ready to light up, on the ringing of a big dinner bell by your humble correspondent.—St. Peter's on Easter Monday[†2] was the result!

Best loves from all | Ever affecy.

CD.

To WILLIAM BRADBURY, 9 SEPTEMBER 1854†

MS Henry Sotheran Ltd.

Villa du Camp de droite, Boulogne | Saturday Ninth September 1854

My Dear Bradbury.

You can scarcely imagine how sorry I am, and how distressed we all are, that you are so prevented from coming here. The absence of your face, familiar on all such occasions through so many years, will make a blank in my heart, twenty times as large as in the circle round the table.[†3] As to Mrs. Dickens, she was presiding over the arrangement of your bedroom [†a]when your unexpected letter arrived; and at that very minute, an easy bedside chair was on its way up from the town, bespoke some days ago for the greater comfort of "Beau B."[†4]

But as you are, thank God, so much better—and as you mean to be twenty times better yet, after this illness, than you were before it; which I foresee is your intention—I am resolved to look only at the bright side of the case. Therefore I congratulate you heartily, my friend, on your energetic recovery (which is worthy of Whitefriars), and include your good wife in the sentiment, and fully expect to hear of you at the top of Snowdon or some other mountain in about ten days time.[†a] In all remembrances and good wishes, Mrs. Dickens and Miss Hogarth, and Wills and his wife (dreadfully fond of one another), most cordially unite. You will not be forgotten in a bumper on Tuesday, and we will give it all the honors possible—and impossible.

My Dear Bradbury | always Very faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

W. Bradbury Esquire

P.S. I observe that Mrs. Wills has been, for the last three days, getting up an entirely new bonnet of a blazing and destructive quality. I don't expect to see her come out in it now.[†5]

To JOHN FORSTER, [10 SEPTEMBER 1854]

Extract in F, VII, iv, 596-7. Date: 10 Sep according to Forster.

All Boulogne turned out for Prince Albert's arrival, but I had by this cooled down a little, and, reserving myself for the illuminations, I abandoned the great men and set off upon my usual country walk. See my reward. Coming home by the Calais road, covered with dust, I suddenly find myself face to face with Albert and Napoleon,[†1] jogging along in the pleasantest way, a little in front, talking extremely loud about the view, and attended by a brilliant staff of some sixty or seventy horsemen, with a couple of our royal grooms with their red coats riding oddly enough in the midst of the magnates. I took off my wide-awake without stopping to stare, whereupon the Emperor pulled off his cocked hat; and Albert (seeing, I suppose, that it was an Englishman) pulled off his. Then we went our several ways.[†2] The Emperor is broader across the chest than in the old times when we used to see him so often at Gore-House,[†3] and stoops more in the shoulders. Indeed his carriage thereabouts is like Fonblanque's.[†4] He described the town as one great flag[†5] for the rest of the visit. He contributed largely to the success of the illuminations by leading off splendidly with a hundred and twenty wax candles blazing in his seventeen front windows and visible from that great height over all the place. On the first eruption Beaucourt danced and screamed on the grass before the door; and when he was more composed, set off with Madame Beaucourt to look at the house from every possible quarter, and, he said, collect the suffrages of his compatriots.

It was wonderful to behold about the streets the small French soldiers of the line seizing our Guards[†6] by the hand and embracing them.[†7] It was wonderful, too, to behold the English sailors in the town, shaking hands with everybody and generally patronizing everything.[†1] When the people could not get hold of either a soldier or a sailor, they rejoiced in the royal grooms, and embraced them. I don't think the Boulogne people were surprised by anything so much, as by the three cheers the crew of the yacht gave when the Emperor went aboard to lunch.[†2] The prodigious volume of them, and the precision, and the circumstance that no man was left straggling on his own account either before or afterwards, seemed to strike the general mind with amazement. Beaucourt said it was like boxing.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 15 SEPTEMBER 1854

Mention in Goodspeed's catalogue No. 129 (1919); dated 15 Sep 54.

To E. M. WARD, 15 SEPTEMBER 1854

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.[†3]

Villa du Camp de droite, | Boulogne | Fifteenth September 1854

My Dear Sir

The Hotel is the Hotel des Bains.[†4] I have ordered you an apartment consisting of a sitting room, two double-bedded bedrooms, and one small bedroom. Your name I have duly deposited in the Bureau of the Hotel, with an intimation that you and your family will arrive on Tuesday Evening.[†5] I have said nothing about the term of your stay, in order that you may be free to arrange as you shall see best.[†6]

When you have filed through the Passport office and got yourself and train duly filtered into the street, you need do nothing but vociferate for Le Commissionaire de l'hotel des Bains. If you have a list of your luggage, and your keys, ready for that potentate, you can then repair to the Hotel without giving yourself the least trouble or having a portmanteau on your mind.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

E. M. Ward Esquire.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?16 SEPTEMBER 1854]

Summary in F, VII, iv, 595*n. Date:* soon after Thackeray left on 13 Sep.

Thackeray had tired of Boulogne and gone to Spa, and on his return, after ascending the hill to smoke a farewell cigar with CD, left for London.[†1]

To THOMAS MITTON, 17 SEPTEMBER 1854*

MS Houghton Library, Harvard.

Villa du Camp de droite, Boulogne
Sunday Seventeenth September 1854

My Dear Mitton

You will not, I think, have supposed me to be unmindful of our arrangement, because I have not written sooner. I have had my business-people here (Evans, Wills, &c) and write as soon as we have a clear house. Also, I have had the hope that Laetitia and Henry would come, and that you would come with them; but I find that they abandon the idea. Now, if you would make up your mind to come alone, and to stay as long as you can manage to be away, I am pretty sure you would be pleased and amused with the place. You have nothing in the world to do, but to get a list of the South Eastern Tidal Trains, fix your day for coming straight through (sea passage only two hours), let me know, and find me waiting for you. In common with all the other passengers, you would have to pass through an office, where a man in a cocked hat would be sitting behind a counter with a pen in his hand. To that man in that cocked hat, you would say in English "I have no passport Sir", and would deliver your card with this writing under your name

Restant chez M. Charles Dickens
Villa du Camp de droite
Boulogne.

The man in the cocked hat would instantly dismiss you (he knows English perfectly well) a soldier would look at your greatcoat if you carried it on your arm—which you would politely submit to—and you would then be passed out at a little door where you would find me. The boat is English, the passengers are English, everything is English up to that time. Having seen your luggage labelled "Boulogne" at London Bridge and put in the train, you have nothing on earth to do with it—can have nothing to do with it, on account of Custom House regulations—until I lay hold of it, knowing where to find it. If you will trust yourself to these easy circumstances, we shall be very glad indeed to see you.

Reply.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

In haste to save | the post.

To DR O. C. WALTER, [?17 SEPTEMBER 1854]

Mention in To Walter, 21 Sep 54. Date: probably Sunday, 17 Sep.

Asking advice about Mary's illness.

To DR O. C. WALTER, [?18 SEPTEMBER 1854]

Mention in To Walter, 21 Sep 54, as "telegraphic postscript". Date: probably the day after his letter.

A more urgent request for advice.

To JOHN FORSTER, [18 SEPTEMBER 1854]

Mention in next. Date: probably written the day before.

Telling him Mary was taken with the English cholera.

To W. H. WILLS, 19 SEPTEMBER 1854*

MS Huntington Library.

Boulogne | Tuesday Nineteenth September 1854

My Dear Wills.

Of course I will do all the various things you set forth,—except vote for that Governess,[†1] being already engaged. Will you write a line to Serle,[†2] and ask him exactly what he wishes in reference to Esther Elton's[†3] husband?[†4] I don't know any resident at Nice, and I never saw the gentleman in question in my life; but anything short of a statement of personal knowledge of him, I will say with pleasure if it is shewn me what I can say that will be of the least advantage to him.[†5]

I managed to write to Forster yesterday, to tell him that Mary was taken with English Cholera[†6] very severely, at midnight between Sunday and Monday. Thank God she is quite herself now—though in bed, of course—and recovering most happily and admirably. He will tell you how it all was, if you care to hear. It was a very alarming time.

I will write to you again, on Thursday. This scrap of paper[†1] came the readiest to my hand before going out to walk.

Kindest regards to Mrs. Wills. | Ever Faithfully

CD.

To E. M. WARD, 20 SEPTEMBER 1854

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

Villa du Camp de droite
Wednesday Evening Twentieth September | 1854

My Dear Ward.

I am sorry I missed you this morning.[†2]

Before you conclude any arrangements for your stay in, or departure from, this place, I should like to say a word to you.[†3]

I would have called this evening but that Dr. Elliotson, who is staying near you, comes up to dine with me. If I don't see you in the meanwhile, I will call on you between 2 and 3 tomorrow. I shall be at home all this evening, and delighted to see you in the event of your strolling out.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

E. M. Ward Esquire.

To DR O. C. WALTER,[†4] 21 SEPTEMBER 1854*

MS Mr W. A. Foyle.

Villa du Camp de droite, Boulogne | Twenty First September 1854

My Dear Sir

I cannot tell you how truly obliged to you I feel, for your honest and kind advice. I am very much indebted to you, and thank you most heartily. Another time will come, I hope, before long, when we may revisit the old place.[†1]

The ludicrous possibility of the telegraphic postscript arriving before the letter, presented itself to my mind when I dispatched it. But not being sure what the post office arrangements were, I thought it best to be on the safe side—suddenly remembering to have heard Baldwin[†2] complain that Captain Carnac's house[†3] was ill drained.

Mrs. Dickens and Miss Hogarth unite in kindest regards to Mrs. Walter and yourself. Believe me with much regard

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

O. C. Walter Esquire.

To W. H. WILLS, 21 SEPTEMBER 1854

MS Huntington Library.

Boulogne, Thursday Night Twenty First Septr. | 1854

My Dear Wills

H. W.

I return you the No.[†4] which is a very fair one. Some of Mrs. Gaskell's dialogue in execrable taste,[†5] but I will not bring a correspondence upon you by touching it.

To Holidays at Madame Grondet's[†6]—yes. I have altered it a little here and there, and return the proof.

Costello[†7] really good.

SELF AND FAMILY.[†8]

Mary is quite well again thank God, and has never had the slightest unfavorable symptom since she turned the awful corner.

I enclose a letter to be posted for Augustus.[†9]

In your next parcel will you send me the 2nd. edition of Forster's Goldsmith[†10] from the last bookcase against the wall opposite the fireplace, in my study. If I remember, it is on the second shelf from the mahogany slab outside the glass—on the second above it, I mean.

I have nearly exhausted the cigarettes[†1] I brought here. Will you use the enclosed key to open the drawer in the round table you opened before—take out the same bunch as before—find another key on it, that opens the corresponding table nearest to the drawing room—and in a drawer (I think the middle drawer on the lefthand side, nearest to the sliding book-door) you will find a cigar box with bundles of Cigarettes in it. If you take out 4, tell John to put them in some little common box, go to the Herald office, and ask Beard if he will bring them over; he will doubtless do so, unless he should have already left to come to us.[†2] In that case, please send them in your next parcel.

Ever My Dear Wills Faithfully Yours CD.

To AUGUSTUS [DICKENS], [21 SEPTEMBER 1854]

Mention in last. Date: written the same day.

To THOMAS BEARD, 23 SEPTEMBER 1854

MS Dickens House.

Villa du Camp de droite, Boulogne
Saturday Twenty Third September | 1854

My Dear Beard.

Catherine is at last persuaded that October really IS[†3] the finest month in the year at the seaside—though she is not yet quite converted to that other axiom concerning the salutary effects of going to bed at 8 o'Clock.[†4]

You shall be received on Wednesday with open arms. And if you don't come for a much longer stay than you made last year,[†5] I shall cut off the "Cu-ra-çoa and Biskits",[†6] as a mark of my dissatisfaction.

All you will have to do in that official strainer through which you are filtered on landing, will be to say (in English if you prefer it) "Monsieur, I have no passport", and to produce your card with this written on it—"Restant chez M. Charles Dickens, Villa du Camp de droite, Boulogne." You will be passed on, immediately. As soon as you are let out, by the cocked hats, at a little door, exclaim majestically "Monsieur Van Loo!"[†7] A Being, of semi-official, semi-military aspect, with a capacity of speaking English, will then appear, to whom you will deliver your card, your key, a verbal description of your portmanteau, and the Magic name of your host. Smiles will illuminate his visage; you will have no more trouble about your baggage; and will pass lightly on, until cheered still further by a countenance radiantly expressive of intellect and benevolence.—Need I say whose!

The weather has turned deliciously cool,[†1] and fires are pleasant here. Though your visit has been so long postponed,[†2] I hope you may be here after all in the most agreeable time of this year.[†3] We had a bright day yesterday with a sharp North wind blowing,—the perfection of a noble Autumn day. It has been very hot through the summer, though at this height the air has been almost always fresh.

I will not detract from the agreeable effect I shall produce upon you, by letting off any small news at present. We shall all be most heartily glad to see you—which is no news, and may therefore be mentioned.

The Plornish Maroon is in a brilliant state; beating all former babies into what they call in America (I don't exactly know why) sky-blue fits.[†4] He thinks you will be interested with the Camp, in reference to which the most ridiculous thing I know, is the practice of the Trumpeters—of whom there appear to be about two to every Private. These unfortunates have been dispersed, all through the summer, in lonely corn-fields, bean crops, pasture-lands, and bye places of all sorts, incessantly blowing their lives away, and never doing any one of the calls right. One weazen little burnt up youth from the South,[†5] practised on the road outside our garden gate, all through July and August, when the heat was intense. Two shaggy and immense creatures with enormous beards—so broad across the chest, that you couldn't take into your eye their two rows of buttons at once—instructed him. They marched up and down gravely, with him between them. Without the least effort, they blew such prodigious blasts that the old High Town shook to every note. Then they left off, eyed this Imbecile severely, and he broke into a miserable little cracked abortion of a brazen wheeze, and trembled with the effort. I suppose him to have gasped himself into the Hospital, and to be now no more.

Ever My Dear Beard | Most Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Beard Esquire

To JOHN BATE CARDALE, 23 SEPTEMBER 1854*

MS Dickens House.

Villa du Camp de droite, Boulogne
Saturday Twenty Third September 1854

My Dear Sir.

I cannot tell you how very sorry we all are, to learn that we are to lose you and your family as neighbours.[†6] Our intercourse has been so exceedingly agreeable, and the good understanding between us has been so pleasant a part of our occupation of that corner, that our faces lengthened very much at breakfast when I read your announcement aloud this morning. Our remembrance and good wishes will go with you, wherever you settle.[†1]

I am much obliged to you for your offer of the piece of ground; which I should certainly desire to hold possession of, if it were only because my study-window commands it. I do not know whether you may approve of the idea I am about to suggest or may consider it feasible; but if you would like to be relieved of it altogether, and I could purchase a new lease of it for my term at a tolerably easy rate in ready money, I should be inclined to do so. The Duke of Bedford's solicitors gave me a new original lease at a peppercorn rent, of Tavistock House, to simplify the title. If I could come to a similar arrangement in respect of the piece of ground, it might possibly be considered of advantage to the property, as well as convenient to me.

Supposing this cannot be done, I will rent it from you—say at first for seven years.

As you will probably be in town sooner than I, and as it may be convenient to your arrangements to settle this point, I write by the present post to my solicitor Mr. William Loaden[†2] 28 Bedford Place, repeating to him what I have herein said to you, and giving him authority on the subject in case you should communicate with him.

I see by yesterday's paper[†3] that the landing of the Army[†4] was safely and quietly effected. This must be a great relief to you, for I observe that the boats of your son's ship held the post of honor.[†5]

Mrs. Dickens and her sister unite with me in kind regards to Mrs. Cardale and all your family.

Believe me My Dear Sir | Very faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

John B Cardale Esquire

To WILLIAM LOADEN, [23 SEPTEMBER 1854]

Mention in last. Date: written the same day.

To THOMAS MITTON, 23 SEPTEMBER 1854

Extract in N, II, 589 (from catalogue source); dated Villa du Camp de droite, Boulogne, 23 Sep 54.

I do not at all anticipate coming to London until I return for the winter. Wills having been here for a fortnight, I have had ample opportunity to confer with him on Household Words business (besides exchanging a parcel every week) and it must be something quite unexpected, that would take me across the channel.

Therefore you cannot do better than arrange to come alone, which is perfectly easy.

The weather has turned quite cold here (which is a great thing, after the hot summer) and I hope it may be bright and dry when you come. You will probably find Beard here—and perhaps Egg the artist, who is a very nice little fellow.

To E. M. WARD, 25 SEPTEMBER 1854

MS Professor Aileen Ward.

Villa du Camp de droite | Monday Twenty Fifth September | 1854

My Dear Ward.

I can't sit today, being occupied with Household Words. But tomorrow at 2, I propose instead.[†1]

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

E. M. Ward Esquire

To W. H. WILLS, 25 SEPTEMBER 1854

MS Huntington Library.

Boulogne, Monday Twenty Fifth September | 1854

My Dear Wills

I really am quite shocked and ashamed on looking at the new No.[†2] to find nothing in it appropriate to the memorable time.[†3] I have written a little paper[†4] To Working Men[†5] which I hope may do good, and I send it to you enclosed.

But I am so painfully impressed with a sense of our being frivolous,[†6] that [†a]if you have not already got to press with No. 237,[†a†7] I entreat you to unmake it and put this article first.[†8] Forster will correct it, if you give him the copy, quite accurately I am sure; therefore it would only involve a delay of a few hours. Even if but a few 237's were printed, it would be better to cancel them—stop—and get this paper in.

No. 238 and the parcel, I will send by tomorrow morning's boat.

In haste Ever Faithfully

CD.

To W. H. WILLS, 25 SEPTEMBER 1854

MS Huntington Library.

Boulogne, Monday Night Twenty Fifth September | 1854

My Dear Wills.

I have gone over the No.[†1]—which is so badly printed and so villainously read, that I have been obliged to query here and there: the sense being somewhere else.

The Ghost of Pit's Pond[†2] is not the thing for a first article.

Morley has done what he could for the Cookery,[†3] but it is inherently conceited and stupid. I went over it before reading the Conscript article,[†4] and put in a clause respecting the inferior strength of the French people as compared with the English. Now, do look at those two articles, with a reference to the consistency and reliability of the Journal in which they appear! Says Cookery, the wonderful Maltese laborers (whom I don't in the least believe in) live on coarse barley bread. Says Cookery further, English people neglect oatmeal. Says Conscript, French soldiers live on barley and oats, and are therefore below the mark![†5] The whole bestiality of the Cookery thing, from first to last, being—dull Whole Hog.[†6] Not content with shewing that we might improve our commonest Cookery, cheaply, [†a]and make enforced shortcommons at least savoury,[†a] it sets up the notorious shortcomings and weaknesses of other countries as a model for us, and is more ignorant of the enormous difference made by the different requirements of different climates, than the Plornish Maroon is. Moreover, the exaggerated praise of the meatless dishes is done in a wooden-headed ignorance of the English ways of thinking, which is a recipe for raising up antagonism—the only sound recipe in the paper. I don't even find in it the common humble usefulness of the Liebig[†7] recipe for making beef tea. Ex gra:—Steep a pound of beef in a pint of cold water, for four hours. Then put the beef and water on a brisk fire for a few minutes until they begin to bubble and boil. Then take them off, and let them stand until cool, when the beef is to be taken out. It will be found by that time to have deposited its utmost virtue in the water—which is the strongest and most nutritious beef tea that can possibly be made.

I think this bit of common sense might be insinuated into the article when you soften down the points[†1] so glaringly objectionable.

There are 6 &c's in the compass of one Column of the Chinese Francis Moore.[†2]

The Poem[†3] is a thousand times worse than nothing, and won't do.

GUILD.[†4]

I return the cheque book, with several cheques signed.

HOME.[†4]

All quite well, thank God. The Theatre took fire[†5] yesterday at about halfpast eleven, and is burnt down. Weather, cool, bright, and delicious. Empress arrived this afternoon.[†6]

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To W. WILKIE COLLINS, 26 SEPTEMBER 1854

MS Morgan Library. Address (on mourning paper): Angleterre | W. Wilkie Collins Esquire | 17 Hanover Terrace | Regents Park | London.

Boulogne, | Tuesday Twenty Sixth September 1854

My Dear Collins.

First, I have to report that I received your letter with much pleasure, and have since loved to dwell upon the image of the Samaritan Keeley.[†7]

Secondly, That the weather has entirely changed. It is so cool, that we have not only a fire in the drawing-room regularly, but another to dine by. The delicious freshness of the air is charming, and it is generally bright and windy besides.

Thirdly, that Vincent's[†8] intellectual faculties appear to have developed suddenly—he has taken to borrowing money; from which I infer (as he has no intention whatever of repaying) that his mental powers are of a high order. Having got a franc from me, he fell upon Mrs. Dickens for five sous. She declining to enter into the transaction, he beleaguered that feeble little couple, Harry and Sydney, into paying two sous each for "tickets" to behold the ravishing spectacle of an-utterly-non-existent-and-therefore-impossible-to-be produced Toy theatre. He has eaten stoney apples until he has had diarrhoea, and has harbored designs upon his fellow creatures until he has become lightheaded. From the couch rendered uneasy by these disorders, he has arisen with an excessively protuberant forehead, a dull slow eye, a complexion of a leaden hue, and a croaky voice.[†1] He has become a Horror to me, and I resort to the most cowardly expedients to avoid meeting him. He, on the other hand, wanting another franc, dodges me round those trees at the corner, and at the back door; and I have a presentiment upon me that I shall fall a sacrifice to his cupidity at last.

On the Sunday night after you left, or rather on the Monday Morning at halfpast one, Mary was taken very ill. English Cholera. She was sinking so fast, and the sickness and diarrhoea were so exceedingly alarming that it evidently would not do to wait for Elliotson. I caused everything to be done that one had naturally often thought of, in a lonely house so full of children, and fell back upon the old remedy;[†2] though the difficulty of giving even it, was rendered very great by the frightful sickness. Thank God she recovered so favorably that by breakfast time she was fast asleep. She slept 24 hours, and has never had the least uneasiness since. I heard—of course afterwards—that she had had an attack of sickness two nights before. I think that long ride and those late dinners had been too much for her. Without them, I am inclined to doubt whether she would have been ill.

Last Sunday as ever was, the Theatre[†3] took fire,[†4] at half-past eleven in the forenoon. Being close by the conventicle of the eminent Groves,[†5] it showered hot sparks into that Temple through the open windows. Whereupon the congregation shrieked and rose, and tumbled out into the street;[†6] Groves benignly observing to the only ancient female who would listen to him, "I fear we must part", and afterwards being beheld in the street—in his robes, and with a kind of sacred wildness on him—handing ladies over the kennel into shops and other structures where they had no business whatever, or the least desire to go. I got to the back of the Theatre, where I could see in through some great doors that had been forced open, and whence the spectacle of the whole interior, burning like a red hot cavern, was really very fine, even in the daylight. Meantime the soldiers were at work "saving" the scenery—by pitching it into the next street; and the poor little properties (one spinningwheel, a feeble imitation of a watermill, and a basketfull of the dismalest artificial flowers, very conspicuous) were being passed from hand to hand with the greatest excitement, as if they were rescued children or lovely women. In 4 or 5 hours the whole place was burnt down, except the outer walls. Never in my days did I behold such feeble endeavours in the way of extinguishment. On an average I should say it took about ten minutes to throw half a gallon of water at the great roaring heap; and every time it was insulted in this way, it gave a ferocious burst, and everybody ran off.[†7]

Beaucourt has been going about for two days in a clean collar—which phenomonon evidently means something, but I don't know what. Elliotson reports that the great Conjuror[†1] lives at his hotel, has extra wine every day, and fares expensively. Is he the Devil? The old old story[†2] has returned to London with his family—previously insisting on killing, of cholera, an old lady in the town, whom I am told by the chemist is alive and very comfortable—not that he bore her any ill will, but because I was hopeful that the equinoctial winds and the blessed change in the weather would restore the general health. I have heard from the Kernel[†3]—wa'al, Sir—sayin' as he minded to [†a]locate himself with us for a week.[†4] I expected to have heard from him again this morning, but have not. Beard comes Tomorrow.

Kindest regards and remembrances from all. Ward lives in a little street between the two Tintelleries. It strikes me that he ought to have Mrs. Ward up before a Magistrate for keeping him in bodily fear.[†5] The Plornish Maroon desires his duty. He had a fall yesterday—through overbalancing himself in kicking his Nurse.

Ever Faithfully

CD.[†a]

To DR JOHN ELLIOTSON, 27 SEPTEMBER 1854*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Boulogne | Wednesday Twenty Seventh September | 1854.

My Dear Elliotson.

I return Mr. Twining's[†6] MS. Pray be so kind as to thank him for giving me the opportunity of reading it.

I have the highest respect for his objects, and, generally, concur in them with all my heart. But I have not the least faith in the plan by which he seeks to attain them. No association ever was, or (as I think) ever will be, able wholesomely to influence or govern a Theatre. Several opinions, it is true, influence the acceptance or rejection of plays at the Français;[†7] but they are the opinions of trained dramatic[†8] Artists, thoroughly acquainted with the peculiar necessities and machinery of the stage, and perfectly aware of what it can and what it cannot convey to an audience.

If the Ortho Dramatic Society[†1] were ten thousand strong, and had all the learned Societies fused into it, the Public would still judge for itself, and put plays in its own lists according to its own discretion, and be perfectly indifferent to the Society's classification. The drama has declined and Actors have most grievously declined; the improvement of both, rests with the great body of the people, and can never be achieved by any self-constituted body.

As to the proposed Address, I dont know who would undertake to write it according to the Ortho Dramatic Society's recipe; but I am much mistaken if any competent writer would accept his directions from any such tribunal. It might set a good many writers to work by paying them—but its funds should be very large, for it would find it necessary to pay the readers too.

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Dr. Elliotson.

To JAMES NASH, 29 SEPTEMBER 1854*

MS Mr A. F. Doyle.

Tavistock House, London. | Twenty Ninth September 1854.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Nash, and begs (by desire of their good friend Mr. Serle) to forward to him the enclosed few words by way of certificate; sincerely wishing that it were in his power more directly to influence the prosperity and happiness of Mr. Nash and his excellent wife.

He begs to assure Mr. Nash of his strong interest in their welfare, and of his heartfelt desire to promote it. "Esther Elton" is never forgotten in his house, but is often spoken of with the affectionate admiration which has never cooled in Mr. Dickens's breast, since she calmly took her place as an example to all her family.[†2]

Twenty Ninth September 1854.

I greatly regret that I know no English family in Nice at this time, and consequently cannot give Mr. Nash any direct letter of recommendation, to serve him in that place. I heartily wish it were in my power to do so, for his reputation as a competent and thoroughly well-informed Teacher is known to me beyond all doubt,[†3] and I have a great respect for him, and a high opinion of him. Without having had the pleasure of his personal acquaintance (his duties having kept him at a little distance from London), I have for some years past been interested in him as the worthy husband of a most exemplary wife to whom I have long been in the relation of Guardian. Her marrying so good a man was a great satisfaction to me at the time, and has been a source of unalloyed comfort and pleasure to me ever since. I have his welfare and her's very earnestly at heart, and I very poorly express my confidence in them when I bear this testimony to their qualifications and worth.

Mr. Nash's solid accomplishments for tuition are of the best order; and his eight years of service at Mitcham as a National Teacher, won him the esteem of all who were acquainted with his honorable usefulness.

CHARLES DICKENS

To T. J. SERLE, 29 SEPTEMBER 1854

Text from N, II, 593, checked from MS Sotheby's, 29 Oct 1968.

Boulogne | Friday Twenty-Ninth September 1854

My Dear Serle,

I send this short note to let you know that immediately on receiving your suggestion through Mr. Wills, I have written to Mr. Nash exactly to the effect you recommend, and have posted my willing testimony in his favor, to Nice.[†1]

Always very faithfully yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To W. H. WILLS, 29 SEPTEMBER 1854

MS Huntington Library.

Boulogne, Friday Twenty Ninth September | 1854

My Dear Wills.

I somehow lost a day, and conceived—indeed, still mistily believe—that I sent you the Address to Working Men on the Monday Night.[†2] The No.[†3] will be greatly improved by the changes you mention.

Evans[†4] will bring you this, and two letters for the post, enclosed, and one for Forster. Will you pay the enclosed £10..0..10 at your convenience, and ask at the same time how many Terms I have to keep before being qualified to be called?[†5] I have no belief whatever that I shall ever keep them now; but I should like—for the gratification of an innocent curiosity—to know how many I have kept, after all the boredom I have suffered in that noble Institution of my country.

Mr. Gaskell's letter raises a rather difficult question.[†6] I think I would reply to him that Mrs. Gaskell is free to act in the matter—so far as we are concerned—as she thinks best: always supposing that her precautions as to time, render it impossible that whatever she sends out there in advance, can get back here, before its ordinary publication here. But I would add that we (I, if you like) think it very doubtful whether she would ever derive any pecuniary benefit from such an arrangement which would counterbalance the risk of such a transaction with such people.

Wonderful fine weather here. Kindest regards from all.

—Reverting to H. W. I observed a paragraph, either in the Examiner or the Illustrated London News the other day, to the effect that there had been "a large and influential meeting at Manchester" with a view to the prevention of Boiler explosions,[†1] and their consequent injuries to workpeople. Now, as we opened that subject, plainly and boldly, we ought to pursue it:[†2] commending the Manufacturers for any endeavour in that wise that deserves commendation, and enforcing the principle of the workpeople being always protected from accident, by every human precaution. By losing or delaying so apposite an occasion for pursuing a subject we have opened, we lose a chance and waste our power.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?29 SEPTEMBER 1854]

Extract in F, VIII, ii, 638. Date: "four months" before CD went to Paris in Feb 55, according to Forster; CD's reference to "nine or ten weeks" rest, since finishing Hard Times (17 July) points to late Sep; hence probably letter mentioned in To Wills, 29 Sep.

I have had dreadful thoughts of getting away somewhere altogether by myself.[†3] If I could have managed it, I think possibly I might have gone to the Pyreennees (you know what I mean that word for, so I won't re-write it) for six months! I have put the idea into the perspective of six months, but have not abandoned it. I have visions of living for half a year or so, in all sorts of inaccessible places, and opening a new book therein. A floating idea of going up above the snow-line in Switzerland,[†4] and living in some astonishing convent,[†5] hovers about me. If Household Words could be got into a good train, in short, I don't know in what strange place, or at what remote elevation above the level of the sea, I might fall to work next. Restlessness, you will say. Whatever it is, it is always driving me, and I cannot help it. I have rested nine or ten weeks, and sometimes feel as if it had been a year—though I had the strangest nervous miseries before I stopped. If I couldn't walk fast and far, I should just explode and perish.

October

To RICHARD MONCKTON MILNES, [1 OCTOBER] 1854*

MS Private. Date: Sunday was 1 Oct in 1854.

Villa du Camp de droite, Boulogne | Sunday Thirtieth Sept. 1854

My Dear Milnes.

I received your enclosure this morning and am sorry you did not execute your intention of coming into these parts.

My publishers will send you in the course of the week, a little book[†1] from me. I hope you will like it in its new form, better than in its old one.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Monckton Milnes Esquire

To W. H. WILLS, 4 OCTOBER 1854

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

Villa du Camp de droite, Boulogne
Wednesday October Fourth 1854

My Dear Wills.

H. W.

It is quite clear that Mr. Carleton's request[†2] cannot be complied with. I think it will be best for you to reply that you have forwarded his letter to me, as he requested; and that you write, as if I wrote, participating in the pain I should myself feel in having to convey to him the assurance that the publication is burdened with as much expense in the way of such advance, as it can possibly bear; and that, in the discharge of my first duty towards my fellow proprietors,[†3] I cannot increase the outlay.

[†a]I am very much afraid that whatever business comes within Mr. Holdsworth's[†4] sphere of action must be very badly done. It is important to see to this. It is not likely that other people are punctually and precisely dealt with, if I am not. Besides the absurd way in which I have received our numbers through the whole summer—getting the stamped Edition,[†5] over and over again, by post, on the very day after, or on the day but one after, I have received a parcel which should have contained the unstamped No.[†6]—I have at this moment not received the last week's No. at all (I don't speak of to-day's—last week's)[†7] and have had two Narratives!

There is a suggestion of bungling and messing in all this, which alarms me. There is no such thing as a man who does one part of plain business ill, and the rest well.[†a]

I will return you Carleton's letter when I return the parcel now to come.

GUILD.[†1]

I have not executed the Warrant of Attorney,[†2] because the Consul[†3] is an old fool (and a Scotch fool) and I hate to go to him. I suppose I shall be home in about a fortnight. Will that do? If you really want it sooner—why then I must encounter the Scotchman, very much against my will.

SEBASTOPOL[†1]

The announcement of its being taken,[†4] at the Review[†5] here last Saturday, was very fine. We were very near the Emperor and Empress, and she kissed the dispatch[†6] (she is a pretty, graceful, slight little woman) in a very natural and good way. It is extraordinary to know through the evidence of one's own senses, however, that the personal enthusiasm and devotion of the Troops, is enormously exaggerated in the London papers.[†7] Their coldness was, to me, astonishing—so much so, as to be, under all the circumstances, almost irritating.

Egg and Muster Beard beg to be kindly remembered.

All The Family

Ditto, and all well.

[†b]Tom Taylor and Mr. Reade[†8] have for some time appeared to me to be the great (Dramatic) Humbugs of the age.[†1]

Young Toole[†2]

had admirable qualities in the old Mathews vein, and I am very sorry he should have so degenerated.[†b†3]

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To THOMAS MITTON, 5 OCTOBER 1854

Text in N, II, 594, checked from MS E. Joseph & Chas J. Sawyer.

Villa de Camp de droite, Boulogne | Thursday Fifth October 1854

My Dear Mitton

Wednesday the Eleventh will do perfectly well for us, as we have no intention of returning home until the following week. My term here expires on the Nineteenth.

Therefore, on Wednesday the Eleventh, we shall expect you.[†4] I hope the weather may be sufficiently bright to give you a fair idea of the lightness of the air. But it has been so extraordinarily fine that we must anticipate a little wet. It blew a gale of wind last night and is very lowering this morning, so I hope we may get it over before you come.

Kind regards from all. | Ever Faithfully

CD.

To MESSRS HAMILTON & THORBY, [6 OCTOBER 1854]

Mention in next. Date: written the same day.

To W. H. WILLS, 6 OCTOBER 1854*

MS Huntington Library.

Boulogne | Friday Night Sixth October 1854

My Dear Wills.

H. W.[†1]

I have gone over the No.[†2] and return the proofs. The Game Season at Sprüt,[†3] and Paris on Wheels,[†4] I have marked respectively 1 and 2, as their due order of usefulness to us. The Game Season is very considerably No. 1.

The Scattered Family[†5] I have tried to reduce to reason, but it is so fearfully complicated that I am still dissatisfied with it, and fear it cannot be made to do. The poem[†6] in the No. is of the shadiest quality also; but all the meaning that is in it, comes out of it—which is something.

Reserve Miss Lynn[†7] for a No. of very hearty and genial subjects.[†8] I don't know how it is but she gets so near the sexual side of things as to be a little dangerous to us at times.[†9]

I would decidedly put Holidays at Madame Grondets[†10] into the No., even if it involve the taking out of Mr. Whittlestick[†11] this once—for two reasons. Firstly, because it is good and true in itself; secondly, because it must follow its predecessor now, or Madame Grondet becomes, to a large mass of readers, an inexplicable antecedent.

SELF.[†1]

Some letters enclosed. Hamilton and Thorby[†12] are a Spanish Wine-house, removed within a year or so—I think to Little Tower Street but am not sure. I believe their address is in the Address-book in the Hall desk at Tavistock House. If not, perhaps you will find it in the Directory.[†13]

Poole's receipt I enclose, signed.

H. W. AGAIN[†1]

Mrs. Young's paper[†14] (her card enclosed) I brought to you at the time of its receipt, begging you (with reference to our article called Troops and Jobs at Malta,[†15] which had just appeared) to return it—as I remember to some No. in Mornington Place, with a polite reply that it had been anticipated. Does this bring it to your mind?

YOUR PARCEL[†1]

Contained Sealed Letters—on which account the Custom House here stopped it, and sent for me, and could have fined me but wouldn't. I gave my promise that no more sealed letters should be so sent to me with my knowledge. So don't send sealed letters.

ALL[†1]

send kindest regards. I write in haste, as the parcel must be left out for Cooper tonight.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [8 OCTOBER 1854]

Extracts and summaries in F, VII, iv, 597-600; apparently all from same letter. Date: 8 Oct 54, according to Forster.

I was at the Review yesterday week, very near the Emperor and Empress, when the taking of Sebastopol was announced. It was a magnificent show on a magnificent day; and if any circumstance could make it special, the arrival of the telegraphic despatch would be the culminating point one might suppose. It quite disturbed and mortified me to find how faintly, feebly, miserably, the men responded to the call of the officers to cheer,[†2] as each regiment passed by. Fifty excited Englishmen would make a greater sign and sound than a thousand of these men do.... The Empress was very pretty, and her slight figure sat capitally on her grey horse. When the Emperor gave her the despatch to read, she flushed and fired up in a very pleasant way, and kissed it with as natural an impulse as one could desire to see.

On the night of that day [30 Sep] Dickens went up to see a play[†3] acted at a café at the camp, and found himself one of an audience composed wholly of officers and men, with only four ladies among them, officers' wives, and as to kindness and consideration towards the poor actors, it was real benevolence.

Another attraction at the camp was a conjuror,[†4] who had been called to exhibit twice before the imperial party; the Frenchman scorned help, stood among the company without any sort of apparatus, and, by the mere force of sleight of hand and an astonishing memory, performed feats having no likeness to anything CD had ever seen done, and totally inexplicable to his most vigilant reflection. So far as I know, a perfectly original genius, and that puts any sort of knowledge of legerdemain, such as I supposed that I possessed, at utter defiance.

You are to observe that he was with the company, not in the least removed from them; and that we occupied the front row. He brought in some writing paper with him when he entered, and a black-lead pencil; and he wrote some words on halfsheets of paper. One of these half-sheets he folded into two, and gave to Catherine to hold. Madame, he says aloud, will you think of any class of objects? I have done so.—Of what class, Madame? Animals.—Will you think of a particular animal, Madame? I have done so.—Of what animal? The Lion.—Will you think of another class of objects, Madame? I have done so.—Of what class? Flowers.—The particular flower? The Rose.—Will you open the paper you hold in your hand? She opened it, and there was neatly and plainly written in pencil—The Lion. The Rose. Nothing whatever had led up to these words, and they were the most distant conceivable from Catherine's thoughts when she entered the room. He had several common school-slates about a foot square. He took one of these to a field-officer from the camp, decoré and what not, who sat about six from us, with a grave saturnine friend next him. My General, says he, will you write a name on this slate, after your friend has done so? Don't show it to me. The friend wrote a name, and the General wrote a name. The conjuror took the slate rapidly from the officer, threw it violently down on the ground with its written side to the floor, and asked the officer to put his foot upon it, and keep it there: which he did. The conjuror considered for about a minute, looking devilish hard at the General.—My General, says he, your friend wrote Dagobert,[†1] upon the slate under your foot. The friend admits it.—And you, my General, wrote Nicholas. General admits it, and everybody laughs and applauds.—My General, will you excuse me, if I change that name into a name expressive of the power of a great nation, which, in happy alliance with the gallantry and spirit of France will shake that name to its centre? Certainly I will excuse it.—My General, take up the slate and read. General reads: DAGOBERT, VICTORIA. The first in his friend's writing; the second in a new hand. I never saw anything in the least like this; or at all approaching to the absolute certainty, the familiarity, quickness, absence of all machinery, and actual face-to-face, hand-to-hand fairness between the conjuror and the audience, with which it was done. I have not the slightest idea of the secret.—One more.

He was blinded with several table napkins, and then a great cloth was bodily thrown over them and his head too, so that his voice sounded as if he were under a bed. Perhaps half a dozen dates were written on a slate. He takes the slate in his hand, and throws it violently down on the floor as before, remains silent a minute, seems to become agitated, and bursts out thus: "What is this I see? A great city, but of narrow streets and old-fashioned houses, many of which are of wood, resolving itself into ruins! How is it falling into ruins? Hark! I hear the crackling of a great conflagration, and, looking up, I behold a vast cloud of flame and smoke. The ground is covered with hot cinders too, and people are flying into the fields and endeavouring to save their goods. This great fire, this great wind, this roaring noise! This is the great fire of London, and the first date upon the slate must be one, six, six, six—the year in which it happened!" And so on with all the other dates. There! Now, if you will take a cab and impart these mysteries to Rogers,[†1] I shall be very glad to have his opinion of them.[†2]

To W. H. WILLS, 10 OCTOBER 1854*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Boulogne, Tuesday Tenth October 1854

My Dear Wills.

H. W.[†3]

You may have seen a letter, published in the Times a few days ago—a letter on sanitary subjects—signed "A Civil Engineer".[†4] Evidently written by some malcontent, retained by the bad water companys[†5]—since distinctly denied as to a positive assertion of fact, by a man at Dartford[†6]—and replied to again today,[†7] by Farr.[†8] The whole communication being a desperate effort to bolster up the sinking villainous system.[†1]—I particularly wish you would cut out all appertaining to this, and put it in Morley's hands, together with anything and everything that may follow on like subjects, entreating him to lose no occasion of giving us a serviceable article on homes and health.[†2] and furthermore urging him to keep his eye on those Sewers Commissioners,[†3] who in a World of balderdash, really talk more rotten filth, and let their Engineer write more and sit on all manner of dregs and hear more read, than all the Sewers of London contain. [†a]Take care Godwin[†4] does not anticipate us[†5] in these useful duties.[†a]

I set my heart on doing the real good of not allowing the remembrance of the cholera to die away,[†6] even in the louder miseries and appeals of War[†7]—under which (it needs no foresight to perceive) the Do Nothings[†8] will endeavour to shelter themselves for the next ten years.

MYSELF[†9]

To MARK LEMON, 13 OCTOBER 1854

MS Benoliel Collection.

Villa du Camp de droite, Boulogne | Friday Thirteenth October 1854.

My Dear Mark.

As I shall be sending a parcel[†1] to Wills tomorrow, I indite this hasty note to day. I dare say you won't get it until Monday.

I have made up my mind to forego the walking part of the expedition home, and to come straight home by way of Folkestone on Tuesday next, arriving in town (please God) at midnight. For I have considered that an expedition from London, in our old way but in some new direction, may be a better day's "Hout" than that we had proposed: the rather as it will be more easily arranged for our mutual convenience. So I shall hope to see you on Wednesday Morning, if you should by that time have recovered the effect of the Memorial of Bankers Merchants and others to Mr G. V. Brooke.[†2]

Loves from all, | Ever affectionately

CD.

To FRANK STONE, 13 OCTOBER 1854

MS Benoliel Collection.

Boulogne | Friday Thirteenth October | 1854

My Dear Stone.

As I shall be sending a parcel to Wills tomorrow, I write this note today, to put into it—with a lively probability before me of your not getting it until Monday.

Having some little matters that rather press on my attention, to see to in town, I have made up my mind to relinquish the walking project, and to come straight home (by way of Folkestone) on Tuesday. I shall be due in town at midnight, and shall hope to see you next day—with the top of your coal cellar mended.[†3]

Everything that happens here, we suppose to be an announcement of the taking of Sebastopol. When a church clock strikes, we think it is the Joy-Bell, and fly out of the house in a burst of nationality—to sneak in again. If they practise firing at the Camp, we are sure it is the artillery celebrating the Fall of the Russian, and we become enthusiastic in a moment. I live in constant readiness to illuminate the whole house. Whatever anybody says, I believe. Everybody says, every day, that Sebastopol is in flames. Sometimes the Commander in chief[†1] has blown himself up, with 75,000 men. Sometimes he has "cut his way through Lord Raglan",[†2] and has fallen back on the advancing body of the Russians—142,000 strong—whom he is going to "bring up" (I don't know where from, or how, or when or why) for the destruction of the allies. All these things, in the words of the Catechism,[†3] "I steadfastly believe",[†4] until I become a mere driveller—a moon struck, babbling, staring, credulous, imbecile, greedy, gaping, wooden-headed, addle-brained, wool-gathering, dreary, vacant, obstinate Civilian.

Ever My fellow countryman | Affecy.

CD.

To W. H. WILLS, 14 OCTOBER 1854

MS Huntington Library.

Boulogne, Saturday October Fourteenth | 1854

My Dear Wills.

H. W.[†5]

Rather a gloomy No.[†6] Miss Martineau pretty well,[†7] but grimly bent upon the enlightenment of mankind, and quite absurdly overdoing American Education.[†8] I have taken out that passage about paper instantly rising 20 percent if the Newspaper Stamp were taken off,[†9] for I think it a hazardous assumption to broach so very positively.

Dodd as bad as need be.[†10] Nothing in it.

We are better without a Poem[†11] than with a Poem without an idea. Don't put in The Best.[†12]

It appears to me that this is not only a very bad No. for Miss Lynn's paper,[†13] but a very bad time.[†14] Somehow, this Balzac-imitation in poking with a little knife into the social peculiarities of France seems ungraceful, ungracious, and inopportune just now. We can't afford to make mistakes which people feel to be mistakes almost without knowing why. Mars Alamode,[†1] comes painfully upon the Battle Field accounts in the Times;[†2] and as I don't think that an Englishman wants to dissect a Frenchman's love, at present, I would rather say nothing about France unless I had plenty to say about its gallantry and spirit.[†3] I cannot remember the subject of the paper I returned you in proof last week; marked No. I,[†4]—but it would be much better than Miss Lynn. I have a confidence in this French Love awakening a vague impression of our being ill conditioned and inopportune. Pay for it, and let it stand over.

I am sorry to hear of the Sale dropping,[†5] but I am not surprised. Mrs. Gaskell's story, so divided, is wearisome in the last degree. It would have had scant attraction enough if the casting in Whitefriars had been correct; but thus wire-drawn it is a dreary business. Never mind! I am ready to come up to the scratch on my return, and to shoulder the wheel.[†6]

ARRY.[†7]

Appears to me to have conducted himself in that matter,[†8] like a sharp gent—or in other words like an abominable Rascal. But what are B and E about? If the facts be plain, why don't they, for their honor, release the patent in England to the real Inventor?[†9]

FAMILY.[†10]

All well. I hope to be at Tavistock House, about Midnight on Tuesday.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

Over

Possibly the note marked "Lady Bell"[†11] may suggest a subject for Morley.[†12] Her brother is Sir Charles Shaw,[†1] for many years the first Surgeon at the Middlesex Hospital. She lives with him. If you want the Report alluded to,[†2] write to him for it.

To MARK LEMON, [?19 JUNE-16 OCTOBER 1854]

Text from N, II, 469. Date: dated 1853 in N, but must be after the trip to Italy of Oct-Dec 53; therefore probably during his stay at Boulogne between 19 June and 18 July or 28 July and 16 Oct 54.

Boulogne

My Dear Mark

I have a novelty in the sporting way to tell you of, which happened during our trip to Italy, which was this: In the course of this trip, during which I have been to all manner of places, and slept with all manner of singular companions (chiefly mules and chickens), I became fearfully interested in certain companies I was continually falling upon in the country—Naples and Rome—companies of sportsmen, usually about six strong, got up in a most sanguinary and alarming manner—immense moustaches, prodigious beards, jet-black hair, incredible boots, fearful sombrero hats, and imitation English shooting-coats, with cuffs like gauntlets. They wore immense shot-belts, carried prodigious game-bags slung over one portly shoulder, and under the other carried heavy double-barrelled guns, and were supplied, on an average, each man with from four to five pounds of gunpowder. They were always eating great meals at little rustic public-houses, clinking their glasses tunefully together, sitting with their legs as wide apart as they could be conveniently got, and talking about the pleasures of la caccia (the chase).

It was in these hostelries that I invariably saw them, and I could not conceive what their game was. I never saw any flying thing (dragons having gone out before my time) nearly large enough for their pretentions. Lions, I knew there were none in Italy; wild bears of a sufficiently aspiring breed I had never heard of. It really preyed upon my mind, and whenever I came upon a knot of these hunters, ever invariably talking of la caccia, I looked in the yards, and behind the doors, and in the vineyards, and every place for the carcases of the slain, which I never found. About a week ago I went to a dirty little tavern, within a dozen miles of Sontpere,[†3] and again I find these amusing men. This time they were six in number—ammunition quite stupendous in quantity—no quarter legibly inscribed on their faces, destruction in their manner, as they clinked the glasses and talked about la caccia. Now, when I went into this house, I had seen sitting under a grape-vine outside an extremely sleepy peasant, who had rested a long pole against the house itself. On the top of this long pole, and tied to it, was a dismal owl, laid with one cheek against the house, without the slightest regard to his being alive, whitewashing one of his large eyes in an involuntary and heartbreaking manner, and looking, on the whole like an English judge in full costume, drunk, penitent, and drooping. As I passed this sleepy peasant and this dismal owl I wondered what on earth they could be there for. Coming in, and sitting down among the sportsmen, it occurred to me by inspiration that they belonged to each other. I went out with a tumbler of wine—too weak to be further mentioned—gave it to the sleepy peasant, and spoke with him. Thereupon I learnt that la caccia was this: The party go out in great dignity, following the peasant and the owl. When the peasant comes to a place where there are numbers of small birds, he hoists up the pole and exposes the owl. The insane little fools immediately gather together from all quarters to deride the owl. The sportsmen then let off, with all possible speed, barrels right and left, and blow the idiots to pieces, occasionally shattering the owl instead. If any piece of a bird large enough to cook is left hanging together, which is not often, it is subsequently dressed and eaten. The owl catches cold, I believe, and dies early.

It occurs to me you might get this up in Sussex[†1] as a new field sport, and therefore I send the recipe.

Ever affectionately yours

[CD]

To [?LUDOVIC PICARD],[†2] [?19 JUNE-16 OCTOBER 1854]

Extract in [Samuel John Davey], "Pseudo Autograph Collectors", The Archivist, and Autograph Review, II, 24 (July 1889). Date: 1854 from Boulogne, according to Davey, therefore between 19 June and 18 July or 28 July and 16 Oct.

Boulogne | 1854

Voici encore de bons remèdes contre votre affliction! Surtout, on doit se souvenir constamment de la bonté du grand Dieu, des beautés de la nature, et des si touchantes felicités et misères de ses pauvres voisins dans cette vie de vicissitudes. Voici encore une manière de s'elever le coeur et l'ame, depuis les tenèbres de la terre jusqu'a la claritê du ciel! ... Courage, Courage; C'est le voyageur faible qui succombe et qui meurt C'est le brave homme qui persevère, et qui poursuit son voyage jusqu'à la fin. Votre cas a été le cas d'une immense foule d'hommes, dont les coeurs courageux ont été victorieux, triumphants, heureux.

To EDWARD CHAPMAN, 20 OCTOBER 1854*

MS Mr Brian Lake.

Tavistock House | Twentieth October 1854

Dear Sir

I was concerned to hear when I was at Boulogne that you had been severely ill; and I am sorry, on now returning home, to receive the confirmation of the story under your own hand. However, I hope you have come back from Wales, as strong as a Welsh poney and as gay as a Welsh Milkmaid.

The balance[†1] is what theatrical people call "shy",[†2] but we must make the best of it and charge the deficiency to the Emperor of Russia.[†3] Have the kindness to pay the amount to my account at Coutts's and believe me

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Edward Chapman Esquire.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 20 OCTOBER 1854*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Bedford Hotel | Brighton.

Tavistock House | Twentieth October 1854. Friday

My Dear Miss Coutts.

Calling at Stratton Street yesterday to report myself Returned, I found you were at Brighton. Of course I had foreseen that you could not possibly be in town, knowing that we are always like the gentleman and lady in the weather-glass.

Do look at the enclosed from Cranstone.[†4] There is a remarkable kind of ability in it,—but I suppose it would be useless to write her any reply?

If you approve, I will recommence our Committees at Shepherds Bush, on the first Tuesday in next month. I have let the field to Hall with whom we deal.

We have been living on the top of our Boulogne Hill, away from all news; and I have come back, a perfect Innocent. A faint impression is upon me that Mr. Brown is in Germany. O is with you of course, and to her I beg to send my love. Her French friend[†5] is up in the Market[†6] just now, so I suppose she is in spirits.

I am afraid to ask whether the room is done, because I had no confidence in her stedfastness—or yours—and am dreadfully afraid of your having been beguiled into snares by the Upholsterer.

Dear Miss Coutts | Always Most Faithfully Yours
CD.

To DR JOHN EPPS,[†1] 20 OCTOBER 1854

Mention in Autograph Prices Current, I, 51 (1914-16); MS 1 p.; dated Tavistock House, 20 Oct 54.

To J. PLUMMER,[†2] 20 OCTOBER 1854*

MS (in Wills's hand) Mr E. C. Coppins.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS
20 October 1854

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Plummer and begs to thank him for the offer of articles on deafness; but regrets to add that he cannot accept it[†3] being very deeply pledged for the insertion of articles which will take a long time to exhaust.
J. Plummer Esqre.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 26 OCTOBER 1854†

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Bedford Hotel | Brighton.

Tavistock House | Twenty Sixth October 1854

My Dear Miss Coutts.

But for the sake of our consistency in cross purposes, I should have liked very much to have seen you when you were in town (after all this length of time) if it had been only for a minute.

Cooper's[†4] very good letter I return.[†5] Poor little thing, I hope she will flourish out there.[†6]

I am sorry you are in a Maze about the article to Working Men[†7]—which was written by a friend of yours. Its meaning is, that they never will save their children from the dreadful and unnatural mortality now prevalent among them (almost too murderous to be thought of), or save themselves from untimely sickness and death, until they have cheap pure water in unlimited quantity, wholesome air, constraint upon little landlords like our Westminster friends[†8] to keep their property decent under the heaviest penalties, efficient drainage, and such alterations in building Acts as shall preserve open spaces in the closest regions, and make them where they are not now. That a worthless Government which is afraid of every little interest and trembles before the vote of every dust contractor,[†1] will never do these things for them or pay the least sincere attention to them, until they are made election questions and the working-people unite to express their determination to have them, or to keep out of Parliament by every means in their power, every man who turns his back upon these first necessities. It is more than ever necessary to keep their need of social Reforms before them at this time, for I clearly see that the War will be made an Administration excuse for all sorts of shortcomings,[†2] and that nothing will have been done when the cholera comes again. Let it come twice again, severely,—the people advancing all the while in the knowledge that, humanly speaking, it is like Typhus Fever in the mass, a preventable disease—and you will see such a shake in this country as never was seen on Earth since Sampson pulled the Temple down upon his head.[†3]

I wish you would read, in next week's No. of Household Words,[†4] an article called Our French Watering Place[†5] (with a portrait of my Boulogne landlord),[†6] and a Poem called The Moral of this Year.[†7]

If you will let me know when the room is ready, I shall be delighted to convey my critical eye into the midst of it.

The conclusion of your note has greatly agitated my mind. "With all kind regards and—" then a wonderful word, which I at first thought was "Nelsons", but which I now make out to be [†a]"Pelows".[†a] What is a [†a]Pelow?[†a] What am I to do with it? To whom am I to give it? Does it require an answer? Is any Pelow supposed to be enclosed, or was it left out by mistake, or can it have dropped out at the Post Office? I never was so disturbed by doubts and difficulties.

With kind regards to Mr. and Mrs. Brown—and as Many Pelows as may be agreeable to them,

Dear Miss Coutts | Ever Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

Our Committee day will be Tuesday the 7th. of November.

To MISS ELIZA GROVE,[†1] 26 OCTOBER 1854

Extract in Emily Driscoll catalogue No. 13 (1951); MS 1 p.; dated 26 Oct 54.

Thank you cordially for your pretty little book[†2]—which my younger children are reading with great pleasure, and which I have read with scarcely less pleasure myself.

To JOHN SAUNDERS,[†3] 26 OCTOBER 1854

MS New York Public Library.[†4]

Tavistock House | Twenty sixth October 1854

Dear Sir

I have had much gratification and pleasure in the receipt of your obliging communication. Allow me to thank you for it in the first place, with great cordiality.

Although I cannot say that I came without any prepossessions to the perusal of your play[†5] (for I had favorable inclinings towards it before I began), I can say that I read it with the closest attention, and that it inspired me with a strong interest, and a genuine and high admiration. The parts that involve some of the greatest difficulties of your task, appear to me to be those in which you shine most. I would particularly instance the end of Julia, as a very striking example of this.[†1] The delicacy and beauty of her redemption from her weak rash lover,[†2] are very far indeed beyond the range of any ordinary dramatist, and display the true poetical strength.

As your hopes now centre in Mr. Phelps, and in seeing the child of your fancy on his stage,[†3] I will venture to point out to you—not only what I take to be very dangerous portions of "Love's Martyrdom" as it stands, for presentation on the stage; but portions which I believe Mr. Phelps will speedily regard in that light, when he sees it before him in the persons of live men and women on the wooden boards. Knowing him, I think he will be then as violently discouraged as he is now generously exalted; and it may be useful to you to be prepared for the consideration of those passages.

I do not regard it as a great stumbling-block, that the play of modern times best known to an audience,[†4] proceeds upon the main idea of this: namely that there was a Hunchback who, because of his deformity, mistrusted himself.[†5] But it is certainly a grain in the balance when the balance is going the wrong way, and therefore it should be most carefully trimmed. The incident of the ring is an insignificant one to look at over a row of gaslights, is difficult to convey to an audience, and the least thing will make it ludicrous.[†6] If it be so well done by Mr. Phelps himself as to be otherwise than ludicrous, it will be disagreeable.[†7] If it be either, it will be perilous, and doubly so because you revert to it.[†8] The quarrel scene between the two brothers in the third Act, is now so long, that the justification of blind passion and impetuosity—which can alone bear out Franklyn, before the bodily eyes of a great concourse of spectators, in plunging at the life of his own brother—is lost.[†9] That the two should be parted, and that Franklyn should again drive at him, and strike him, and then wound him, is a state of things to set the sympathy of an audience in the wrong direction and turn it from the man you make happy, to the man you leave unhappy.[†1] I would on no account allow the artist to appear attended by that picture, more than once.[†2] All the most sudden inconstancy of Clarence[†3] I would soften down. Margaret must act much better than any actress I have ever seen, if all her lines fall in pleasant places;[†4] therefore I think she needs compression too.

All this applies solely to the Theatre. If you ever revise the sheets for readers,[†5] will you note in the margin the broken laughter and the appeals to the Deity?[†6] If, on summing them up, you find you meant them all, I would leave them as they stand, by all means. If not, I would blot accordingly.

It is only in the hope of being slightly useful to you by anticipating what I believe Mr. Phelps will discover—or what, if ever he should pass it, I have a strong conviction the audience will find out—that I have ventured on these few hints.[†7] Your concurrence with them generally, on reconsideration, or your preference for the Poem[†8] as it stands, can not in the least affect my interest in your success. On the other hand, I have a perfect confidence in your not taking my misgivings ill; they arise out of my sincere desire for the triumph of your work.

With renewed thanks for the pleasure you have afforded me, I am Dear Sir

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

John Saunders Esquire.

To W. H. WILLS, 27 OCTOBER 1854

MS Huntington Library.

Tavistock House | Friday Night Twenty Seventh October | 1854.

My Dear Wills.

I am truly sorry to hear of your poor Mother's death.[†1] What you said last night had prepared me to receive the sad news; and when I was told of a messenger being sent here to enquire for you this morning, I felt that the end was come.

Don't worry yourself about a first article for the next No. I will have one ready,[†2] please God.

Mrs. Dickens and Georgina unite with me in kindest regards to Mrs. Wills. Pray let me say that if in this sudden emergency you want any ready money, I shall consider it a breach of the confidence and friendship between us, if you seek it in any quarter where you have to pay interest for it.

Ever Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

W. H. Wills Esquire.

To FREDERICK MAYNARD, [22-28 OCTOBER 1854]

Mention in To Miss Coutts, 17 Nov 54. Date: CD wrote after his return from Boulogne and appointed Maynard to see him the "following Sunday", 29 Oct; the letter cannot be earlier than the previous Sunday, 22 Oct.

Saying he had scarcely any hope of helping him in so difficult a matter, but being unwilling to seem to slight so peculiar a confidence, CD will see him if Maynard would call on the following Sunday.

To W. H. WILLS, 29 OCTOBER 1854*

MS Huntington Library.

Tavistock House | Sunday Twenty Ninth October | 1854.

My Dear Wills.

Mr. Gaskell anticipates what I recommended you to say. I would write in reply, that the quantity shall be increased by all means;[†3] at the same time impressing upon him the vital importance of faith being kept with the public.[†1] You must observe however, that Mrs. Gaskell is so far free from blame that she had from me the results of that precious Whitefriars casting-off. And of course they put her, as they put me, utterly wrong.

I never was so bothered about anything of the kind, as about Mr. Freer's[†2] letter. For I really cannot afford to relieve such cases, and yet I cannot bear to send him empty away. Will you write him a note saying he is right in supposing there was no address to his first letter, and making an appointment with him at your convenience—with the view of shewing him how besieged, and ascertaining what small sum (if any) will be really hopefully useful to him.

Cheque for £50 enclosed,[†3] and the letters returned.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 30 OCTOBER 1854†

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Bedford Hotel | Brighton.

Tavistock House | Thirtieth October 1854

My Dear Miss Coutts.

[†a]On Wednesday at exactly half past two, I will go and see the room. This will leave time for the Upholsterer to know of the visit.

I enclose you a letter this morning received from that Mrs. Matthews the Clergyman's wife. I do not think it right to be in receipt of it without making its contents known to you, but she is very persevering indeed.[†a†4]

My portmanteau is directed to be packed. I think the Orkneys, perhaps, will be a likely situation. Especially as I am told that the Pelows are very fine there.

Ever Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

To W. H. WILLS, 30 OCTOBER 1854*

MS Huntington Library.

Tavistock House | Monday Night October Thirtieth | 1854

My Dear Wills

John made a mistake. I instructed him to ask you "whether we dined at the office tomorrow"—and he was to come and tell me Yes or No. I would on no account have proposed any engagement to you.[1[[sic]]†5] Therefore if you have the least desire to go home, or the least thing to do there, pray send me up a note as soon as you get this, to say "We don't dine." It will make no sort of difference to me. If I don't hear from you, I shall conclude that we do dine. But pray understand my share in the proceedings.

In haste | Ever Faithfully

CD.

November

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 1 NOVEMBER 1854*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Bedford Hotel | Brighton.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS
Wednesday First November 1854.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I have been to look at the little room,[†1] and call in here while I am out, to write you the result of my inspection. The Upholsterer, I should observe, being out of town was not producible on the notice he had received, and therefore I did not see him.

The fitted couches and writing-table are exceedingly good and satisfactory, but the general compactness of this important part of the room is greatly marred by there being nothing in the little piers on either side of the looking glass opposite the door. It is quite clear to me that there ought to be, in each of these narrow piers, a long tasteful piece of drapery, falling from the curtain-cornice as a part of the curtains. It would hold the whole together, and make the rest tell for a great deal more than at present.

The little bookcase in the glass opposite the fire must positively have below it a table—of convenient depth in reference to the size of the room—always to stand there, as if it were a part of that bookcase. Firstly, because the bookcase as it stands, is quite insanely perched in the air, without appearing to have any root in the ground—which is always disagreeable; and secondly, because there must be no table in the middle of the room, or you destroy the fireside. Two, or at most three, odd chairs is all the room will bear, grouped about the hearth. If the front of this table were curved, it would be agreeable and convenient too.

I observe a Pedestal for a Bust, over the writing table between the windows. Any bust of life-size will be too big for the place, and the modest subject of that bust will become obtrusive.

Lastly, the Carpet is not at all in keeping. It should be something—of a small pattern of course—in dark chocolate or russet, with maybe a little green and red. The eye would rise from a dark warm ground, with great pleasure, to the light walls and the rich-colored damask.

You will understand of course that I don't lay down these things as infallible Canons of Taste, but merely as things that my eye misses, and that I should think essential to completeness if the room were mine. It seems to me at this moment, just short of being complete.

Your housekeeper and I compared notes respecting New York, and found that when she sailed for that place, I was on board the ship and went with her as far as Gravesend.[†1] We also talked over, the Baltic Fleet,[†2] the Ventilation of London houses, the general objections to Smoke,[†3] and the best methods of preserving marble chimney pieces. We agreed in everything—from which I infer that she is a highly sensible woman.

With kindest regards to O and Mr. Brown

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

P.S. The Stove is so large and hot, that it wants a false back or sides—a little skilful reduction somehow. I stood near it for a quarter of an hour, and staggered all down Piccadilly.

To W. C. MACREADY, 1 NOVEMBER 1854

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House

First November 1854 | (And a Constitutionally foggy day)

My Dearest Macready.

I thought it better, not to encumber the address to Working Men, with details.[†4] Firstly, because they would detract from whatever fiery effect the words may have in them; secondly, because writing and petitioning and pressing a subject upon members and Candidates, are now so widely understood; and thirdly, because the paper was meant as an opening to a persistent pressure of the whole question on the public, which would yield other opportunities of touching on such points.

In the No. for next week—not this—is one of these following-up articles, called "A Home Question".[†5] It is not written by me, but is generally of my suggesting, and is exceedingly well done by a thorough and experienced hand. I think you will find in it generally, what you want.[†6] I have told the Printers to send you a Proof by Post, as soon as it is corrected—that is to say, as soon as some insertions I made in it last night, are in type and in their places.

My dear old Parr,[†7] I don't believe a word you write about King John![†8] That is to say, I don't believe you take into account the enormous difference between the energy summonable-up in your study at Sherborne, and the energy that will fire up in you (without so much as saying "with your leave", or "by your leave") in the Town Hall at Birmingham.[†1] I know you, you ancient Codger, I know you! Therefore I will trouble you to be so good as to do an act of honesty after you have been to Birmingham, and to write to me, "Ingenuous boy, you were correct. I find I could have read 'em King John, with the greatest ease."

In that vast hall in the busy town of Sherborne, in which our illustrious English Novelist is expected to read next month—though he is strongly of opinion that he is deficient in power, and too old—I wonder what accommodation there is for reading! Because our illustrious countryman likes to stand at a desk, breast-high, with plenty of room about him—a sloping top—and a ledge to keep his book from tumbling off. If such a thing should not be there, however, on his arrival, I suppose even a Sherborne carpenter could knock it up, out of a deal board.—Is there a deal board in Sherborne though? I should like to hear Katey's opinion on that point.

In this week's Household Words, there is an exact portrait of our Boulogne landlord[†2] which I hope you will like. I think of opening the next long book I write, with a man of juvenile figure and strong face, who is always persuading himself that he is infirm. What do you think of the idea? I should like to have your opinion about it. I would make him an impetuous passionate sort of fellow—devilish grim, upon occasion—and of an iron purpose.—Droll, I fancy?

Forster is getting a little too fat, but appears to be troubled by the great responsibility of directing the whole War.[†3] He doesn't seem to me, to be quite clear that he has got the ships into the exact order he intended, on the sea-point of attack at Sebastopol. We went to the play last Saturday night, with Stanfield, whose "high lights" (as Maclise calls those knobs of brightness on the top of his cheeks) were more radiant than ever. We talked of you, and I told Stanny how they are imitating his Acis and Galatea sea,[†4] in Pericles, at Phelps's.[†5] He didn't half like it; but I added, in nautical language that it was merely a piratical effort achieved by a handfull of porpoise-faced Swabs—and that brought him up with a round turn,[†1] as we say at sea.

We are looking forward to the twentieth of next month, with great pleasure. All Tavistock House send loves and kisses to all Sherborne House. If there is anything I can bring down for you, let me know in good course of time. I have a little packet for Mr. Simmons.

Ever my Dearest Macready | Most affectionately Yours

CD.

It is quite delightful to hear of your new Rector.[†2]

To THE HON. MRS RICHARD WATSON, 1 NOVEMBER 1854

MS Huntington Library. Address: The Hon. Mrs. Watson | Rockingham Castle | Northamptonshire.

Tavistock House | Wednesday, First November 1854

My Dear Mrs. Watson

I take upon myself to answer your letter to Catherine, as I am referred to in it.

The Walk is not my writing.[†3] It is very well done by a close Imitator. Why I found myself so "used up",[†4] after Hard Times, I scarcely know. Perhaps because I had intended to do nothing in that way for a year, when the idea laid hold of me by the throat in a very violent manner; and because the compression and close condensation necessary for that disjointed form of publication, gave me perpetual trouble.[†5] But I really was—tired!—which is a result so very incomprehensible that I can't forget it. I have passed an idle Autumn in a beautiful situation, and am dreadfully brown and big. For further particulars of Boulogne, see "Our French Watering Place" in this present week's Household Words,[†6] which contains a faithful portrait of our landlord there.

If you carry out that bright Croydon idea, rely on our glad co-operation. Only let me know all about it a few days beforehand; and if you feel equal to the contemplation of the Moustache (which has been cut lately), it will give me the heartiest pleasure to come and meet you. This in spite of the terrific Puffery of the Crystal Palace:[†7] which appears to me, in respect of puffery and pretence, to be the most gigantic Humbug ever mounted on a long-suffering-people's shoulders. It is a very remarkable thing in itself; but where so very large a building[†8] [is] continually rammed down one's throat, and to find it a new page in the whole Duty of Man,[†9] to go there, is a little more than even I (and you know how amiable I am!) can endure.

You always like to know what I am going to do, so I beg to announce that on the 19th. of Decr. I am going to read the Carol at Reading, where I undertook the Presidency of the Literary Institution on the death of poor dear Talfourd.[†1] Then I am going on to Sherborne in Dorsetshire, to do the like for another Institution which is one of the few remaining pleasures of Macready's life. Then I am coming home for Christmas Day. Then I believe I must go to Bradford in Yorkshire, to read once more to a little fireside party of 4,000.[†2] Then I am coming home again, to get up a new little version of The Children in the Wood[†3] (yet to be written by the bye) for the children to act on Charley's birthday.[†4]

I am full of mixed feeling about the War—admiration of our valiant men—burning desires to cut the Emperor of Russia's throat—and something like despair to see how the old cannon smoke and blood-mist obscure the wrongs and sufferings of the people at home. When I consider the Patriotic Fund[†5] on the one hand, and on the other the poverty and wretchedness engendered by cholera,[†6] of which, in London alone, an infinitely larger number of English people than are likely to be slain in the whole Russian War,[†7] have miserably and needlessly died—I feel as if the world had been pushed back, five hundred years.

If you are reading new books just now, I think you will be interested with a controversy between Whewell[†8] and Brewster,[†9] on the question of the shining orbs about us, being inhabited or no. Whewell's book is called "On the plurality of Worlds";[†10] Brewster's, "More Worlds than One".[†11] I shouldn't wonder if you know all about them. They bring together a vast number of points of great interest in Natural Philosophy,[†1] and some very curious reasoning on both sides—and leave the matter pretty much where it was.[†2]

We had a fine absurdity in connection with our luggage, when we left Boulogne.[†3] The Barometer had within a few hours fallen about a foot, in honor of the occasion, and it was a tremendous night—blowing a gale of wind, and raining a little deluge. The luggage (pretty heavy, as you may suppose) in a cart drawn by two horses, stuck fast in a rut in our field, and couldn't be moved. Our man, made a Lunatic by the extremity of the occasion, ran down to the town to get two more horses to help it out, when he returned with those horses and carter B, the most beaming of men; carter A, who had been soaking all the time by the disabled vehicle, descried in carter B the acknowledged enemy of his existence—took his own two horses out—and walked off with them! After which, the whole set-out remained in the field all night, and we came to town, thirteen individuals,[†4] with one comb and a pocket handkerchief. I was upside-down during the greater part of the passage.

Dr. Rae's[†5] account[†6] of Franklin's[†7] unfortunate party[†8] is deeply interesting[†9]—

but I think hasty in its acceptance of the details[†1]—particularly in the statement that they had eaten the dead bodies of their companions.[†2] Which I don't believe. Franklin on a former occasion was almost starved to death—had gone through all the pains of that sad end and lain down to die—and no such thought had presented itself to any of them.[†3] In famous cases of Shipwreck, it is very rare indeed that any person of any humanizing education or refinement, resorts to this dreadful means of prolonging life. In open boats,[†4] the coarsest and commonest men of the shipwrecked party have done such things; but I don't remember more than one instance in which an officer has overcome the loathing that the idea has inspired.[†5] Dr. Rae talks about their cooking these remains too.[†6] I should like to know where the fuel came from.[†7]

Kindest loves and best regards.

Ever My Dear Mrs. Watson | Affectionately Yours

CD.

To MR O'CONNOR, [?1 NOVEMBER 1854]

Mention in next. Date: probably written the day before.

Saying that since the Home was a private institution he did not feel justified in admitting Mr O'Connor without Miss Coutts's sanction, and she would not be in town until next week; instead CD enclosed the description of it in HW.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 2 NOVEMBER 1854*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Bedford Hotel | Brighton.

Tavistock House | Second November 1854.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I don't like the look of this letter,[†1] and still less of the Pamphlet[†2] that came with it. Therefore I replied that as the Home was a Private Institution I did not consider himself[†3] justified in admitting him without your sanction, and that you would not be in town until next week.

I enclosed him the description of it in H. Words,[†4] as the best information I could give him.

Always Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

To DR F. H.F. QUIN, 2 NOVEMBER 1854

Text from Edward Hamilton, A Memoir of Frederick Hervey Foster Quin, M.D., privately printed, 1879, pp. 50-1.

Tavistock House; | 2nd November, 1854.

My dear Quin,

I am vexed; but the devil insists upon it. I am engaged on Tuesday, weekly business engagement[†5] that must come off. My only other engaged day next week is Thursday. But don't put off the Dr.—. I will try to get away early on Tuesday, and come to you for what an American I knew in Virginia[†6] used to call "the wine cup." He came to me one morning (with his collars turned down) and said "Waal, sir; a number of our smartest citizens located in this town desire to jine in crushing a friendly wine-cup with you this present sun-down, and in heering you give utterance to any sentiments that you may think calc'lated toe gratify Columbia's sons."[†7]

Ever yours,

C. D.

To FRANK STONE, 2 NOVEMBER 1854†

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Thursday Second November 1854

My Dear Stone

Perhaps you will kindly write me a Notice of Wilkie,[†1] for Household Words? I think it would be gratifying to him.[†2]

Humphrey Clinker is certainly Smollett's best. I am rather divided between Peregrine Pickle and Roderick Random—both extraordinarily good in their way, which is a way without tenderness—but you will have to read them both, and I send the first Volume of Peregrine as the richer of the two.

Ever affecy.

CD.

To JOHN SCOTT RUSSELL, [3 NOVEMBER 1854]

Mention in next. Date: no doubt written the same day.

To WILKIE COLLINS, 3 NOVEMBER 1854

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Third November 1854

My Dear Collins

I don't know that Scott Russell is a Director of the Brighton Line[†3]—though he is very likely to be—but I suppose you do? If so, I enclose a note for him. If he is not, I will write to somebody else with pleasure. In case of his not being the right man, pray tell me so.

I am glad you like the portrait of Beaucourt so well.[†4] It was very pleasant to do, and I hope it may be of some service to him in the letting of his houses.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To DR F. H.F. QUIN, [3 NOVEMBER 1854]

Text from Edward Hamilton, A Memoir of Frederick Hervey Foster Quin, M.D., privately printed, 1879, p. 51. Date: See To Quin, 2 Nov.

Bow Street Station House;[†5] | Friday Morning.

What ARE you a doin' on? Didn't I tell you in my note yes'day that Thursday was my only other engaged day. Blow'd if you an't enough to make a cove go and knock his ed agen the wall that aggerarvation you are.

To CLARKSON STANFIELD, 3 NOVEMBER 1854

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Tavistock House | Friday Night Third November 1854

My Dear Stanny

First of all, here is enclosed a letter for Mrs. Stanfield. Which if you don't immediately and faithfully deliver, you will hear of in an unpleasant way from the Station House[†1] at the curve of the Hill above you.[†2]

Secondly, this is not to remind you that we meet at the Athenæum next Monday at 5;—because none but a Mouldy Swab as never broke biscuit or lay out on the for'sel yard arm in a gale of wind, ever forget an appointment with a Messmet.

But what I want you to think of at your leisure, is this. When our dear old Macready was in town last,[†3] I saw it would give him so much interest and pleasure if I promised to go down and read my Xmas Carol to the little Sherborne Institution which is now one of the few active objects he has in the life about him, that I came out with that promise in a bold—I may say a swaggering—way. Consequently on Wednesday the 20th. of December, I am going down to see him, with Kate and Georgina: returning to town in good time for Christmas, on Saturday the 23rd. Do you think you could manage to go and return with us? I really believe there is scarcely anything in the World, that would give him such extraordinary pleasure as such a visit. And if you would empower me to send him an intimation that he may expect it, he will have a daily joy in looking forward to the time (I am seriously sure) which we whose light has not gone out, and who are among our old dear pursuits and associations, can scarcely estimate.[†4]

I don't like to broach the idea in a careless way, and so I propose it thus and ask you to think of it.

Ever Most affectionately Yours

CD.

Clarkson Stanfield Esquire

To MRS CLARKSON STANFIELD, [3 NOVEMBER 1854]

Mention in To Stanfield, 3 Nov 54 (either from CD or Catherine). Date: same day as last.

To MARK LEMON, 4 NOVEMBER 1854

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Saturday November Fourth | 1854.

My Dear Mark.

Stanny and Forster—both perfectly insane with a desire to dine at the Wellington[†1]—meet me, for an evening out, at the Athenæum on Monday at 5. Will you come?

Ever Affecy.

CD.

To LEIGH HUNT, [?EARLY NOVEMBER 1854]

Extract in F, VI, vii, 550-1. Date: CD's "explanation" of his basing Skimpole on Hunt must precede, probably by only a few days, Hunt's letter to him of 8 Nov: see To Hunt, 13 Nov.

Separate in your own mind what you see of yourself from what other people tell you that they see.[†2] As it has given you so much pain, I take it at its worst, and say I am deeply sorry, and that I feel I did wrong in doing it. I should otherwise have taken it at its best, and ridden off upon what I strongly feel to be the truth, that there is nothing in it that should have given you pain. Everyone in writing must speak from points of his experience, and so I of mine with you: but when I have felt it was going too close I stopped myself, and the most blotted parts of my MS. are those in which I have been striving hard to make the impression I was writing from, *un*like you. The diary-writing[†3] I took from Haydon,[†4] not from you. I now first learn from yourself that you ever set anything to music, and I could not have copied that from you. The character is not you, for there are traits in it common to fifty thousand people besides, and I did not fancy you would ever recognize it. Under similar disguises my own father and mother are in my books, and you might as well see your likeness in Micawber.[†5]

To ARTHUR RYLAND, 6 NOVEMBER 1854*

MS Mrs Quinney. Address: Arthur Ryland Esquire | Birmingham.

Tavistock House | Monday Sixth November 1854

My Dear Sir

With the greatest pleasure. And I shall expect you from 1 until 2, unless—which I should prefer very much—you will dine with us alone, at ½ past 5 instead.[†1] In that case let me know as much in one line.

In haste | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Arthur Ryland Esquire

To W. C. MACREADY, 8 NOVEMBER 1854*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Eighth November 1854

My Dearest Macready.

I was talking to Stanfield the other day of our intended visit to you next month, and, after thinking of it for a day, he said that if his health remained all right (he seems to be subject to some little disorder, which is half internal and half nervous, I think) he most positively would come with us for the pleasure of such a meeting with you. I suppose you can stow the dear old boy away in some odd corner? And if you write him a line to the Green Hill, Hampstead, telling him you expect him, it is more likely to keep his disorder off, than any remedy I know.

Ever affectionately
CD.

P.S. It is well known to my intimates that I have been boring them all to death for several years, by repeatedly declaring and vowing that I WOULD[†2] go up the Nile. All I have got to say in reference to Willy's pleasant idea, is, that—

If YOU'll[†2] go, I'll[†2] go![†3]

Come. What do you say to that?

To J. ALFRED NOVELLO,[†1] 8 NOVEMBER 1854*

MS Dickens House. Address: J. Alfred Novello Esquire | 69 Dean Street | Soho.

Tavistock House | Eighth November 1854

Dear Sir

The reply[†2] would be, that in the instances you refer to, paper is used as part of a manufacturing process; and that paper used for printing and reading, does not fall within that definition.[†3] I am not seeking reason in Red Tape—or I should beg my next of kin to convey me to Bedlam—but I perceive this would be the official gabble, and have no doubt the House of Commons would cheer it.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

J. Alfred Novello Esquire

To [THOMAS NESBITT],[†4] [?27 OCTOBER-8 NOVEMBER 1854]

Summary from South Eastern Railway Mechanics' Institute Minutes Book, 9 Nov 54 (MS PRO). Date: between the Institute's Council Meetings of 26 Oct and 9 Nov.

Stating that his numerous engagements at Christmas[†5] prevented him from accepting the invitation to the South Eastern Railway Mechanics' Institute's Soirée at Christmas, but that if any time shortly before or after Easter would suit the Mechanics in the Company's employ they would be heartily welcome to his aid.[†6]

To MRS EDWARD WALLER,[†7] 9 NOVEMBER 1854*

MS Mrs T. Evans. Address: Mrs. Edward Waller | 7 Lion Terrace | Portsea.

Tavistock House | Ninth November 1854.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his Compliments to Mrs. Edward Waller, and begs to assure her that she has been imposed upon. He has not been within fifty miles of Portsmouth, these five years,[†8] and has never in his life sent any one there, to make any enquiries about anybody.

He is but just come home from France, and has not yet had an opportunity of ascertaining whether his mother has any remembrance of the old nurse in question.†1

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 9 NOVEMBER 1854

Extract in Carnegie Book Shop catalogue No. 51; MS (3rd person) 1 p.; dated Office of Household Words, 9 Nov 54.

Rejecting a manuscript as not suitable for Household Words.

To WILKIE COLLINS, 11 NOVEMBER 1854*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Saturday Eleventh November | 1854

My Dear Collins.

If this day week, Saturday the 18th. will suit you for the British Jurywomen†2 at the Strand Theatre, let us meet at the Garrick at 5 o'Clock that day.

Faithfully Always

CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 11 NOVEMBER 1854*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Holly Lodge | Highgate.

Tavistock House | Eleventh November 1854

My Dear Miss Coutts

I am ashamed to make the stupid confession that, in burning the envelopes of some notes last night, I idiotically burnt the order for the Drury Lane box!

Will you kindly write me another for the same night, Monday the Thirteenth?†3

Ever Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

To HENRY MORLEY, 11 NOVEMBER 1854

MS Dickens House.

Tavistock House. | Eleventh November 1854

My Dear Morley.

It occurs to me that you may find an interest in the subject of the book I send you[†1] with this, and may like to write something upon it.

That you may know how I come by it, I send you (in it) the author's letter to me.

I have no desire to praise him or blame him, otherwise than according to his merits.

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Henry Morley Esquire

To ALBERT SMITH, 12 NOVEMBER 1854

MS Mr W. A. Foyle.

Tavistock House | Sunday Morning | Twelfth November 1854

My Dear Smith.

I imagine you in Paris this morning (where I wish myself too), the subject of that queer sensation born of quick travelling,[†2] which will poke your Garrick dinner of yesterday down a perspective of at least three weeks,[†a] and fill your head with the strangest incoherencies concerning days of the month.[†a]

Will you come and dine with us next Thursday at a quarter past six? We have no party of an Easterly or bleak nature[†3]—no flavor of genteel company—only half a dozen people whom you know very well, and a family circle of Stanfields taking care of George's[†4] pretty little wife.[†5]

I suppose you will receive this on Tuesday morning, when—my mind misgives me—that Liqueur-case[†6] will have been playing the very Devil with your peace of mind. To steady your out-travelled wits, permit me to recall myself to your remembrance by observing that I am the intellectual party to whom you presented a Dutch cheese lately; [†a]also that the Thursday to which I have alluded, is the very next Thursday that is to come.

It is extremely pleasant to me to read such a hearty piece of justice to Boulogne, as the enclosed. We are thoroughly agreed about that capital place.[†1] I return the "cutting", because I know you are a prodigious fellow for storing up scraps.[†a]

Cordially Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Albert Smith Esquire.

To LEIGH HUNT, 13 NOVEMBER 1854

MS Iowa University Library.

Tavistock House | Thirteenth November 1854

My Dear Hunt.

No. I won't come and take tea with you[†2]—and I'll tell you why. If I do, I foresee that that leg of mutton which has never come off,[†3] will walk again into the misty future, like a vagrant trotter as it has proved itself to be. Therefore I am non-producible except on this my dunghill. Name your day, and we will have no one but Forster, and I will place a little pill-box on wheels[†4] which staggers about town with Mrs. Dickens, at your disposal, to bring you here as snugly as it can, and take you home again.[†5]

I should have written to you sooner, but that I did not feel quite sure of my available days. I am "now in a condition to state" (as they say on the Treasury Bench[†6] when they don't mean to say anything) that any day between the 21st. of this month and the 2nd. of December, both inclusive, I am muttonable at half past five. Forster having to direct the whole war,[†7] and being troubled in his mind with doubts whether the ships have been as well brought into action before Sebastopol as he intended, is in a fearful condition on Thursdays and Fridays.[†8] Consequently if you can avoid those days for his (and the world's) sake—do.

Faithfully Yours always

CD.

Leigh Hunt Esquire

To LEIGH HUNT, 15 NOVEMBER 1854

MS Iowa University Library.

Tavistock House | Wednesday Evening | Fifteenth November 1854

My Dear Hunt.

It perversely happens that Tuesday next, won't suit Forster. Will that day week, suit you? If so, the Pillbox shall attend you at a little after 4. Don't reply, unless to suggest another day. Not hearing from you, I shall consider Tuesday week the day for the softest of Stews.[†1]

Very faithfully Yrs.

CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 16 NOVEMBER 1854*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts.

Tavistock House | Sixteenth November 1854

My Dear Miss Coutts

The enclosed two letters relate to the case of Mrs. Matthews. The first (received a few days ago) is from herself; the second (received this morning) is from the rural Dean.[†2]

What shall I do now?

Ever Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

I have a very unusual and remarkable case to represent to you. I will write its full particulars, tomorrow.
Miss Burdett Coutts.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 17 NOVEMBER 1854

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Friday Seventeenth November 1854

My Dear Miss Coutts

I send you the astonishing story[†3] to which I referred in my note of yesterday. I have regularly paged it,[†4] to prevent confusion. You will find it easy to read, I hope, and not half as long as it looks.

Always Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 17 NOVEMBER 1854

MSS Morgan Library ([aa]) and Berg Collection.

[a]I received the following letter,[†1] from a Correspondent quite unknown to me, while I was at Boulogne. I think, in the beginning of October.[a†2]

On my return to town, I wrote to the young man, representing to him that I had scarcely any hope of helping him in so difficult a matter, but that I was unwilling to seem to slight so peculiar a confidence, and that I would speak with him on the subject, if he would call on the following Sunday at a certain hour. That was, Sunday the 29th. of October.

At the appointed time, he came. I found him a very quiet, youthful-looking young man of two or three and twenty, with the appearance of being much younger. He was very becomingly and suitably dressed, in black; and his manner and his whole account of himself were in perfect accordance with his letter. He cried, at several points of our conversation: but he sat in my room with his back to the light, and always made an effort to hide it, and was evidently relieved when I appeared not to notice it.

To make the least of the wretched story, I will only set down here that the person with whom his sister lived so long, was engaged in commerce, and was ruined. The sister seems to have done a great deal for him, in the management of his house and accounts, and some of his relations declared, when he fell into difficulties, "that she was the only true friend he had". He was quite reduced to poverty when they parted, and he is far away now and lost sight of, altogether. She has known nothing about him these many years.

She had only one course of life open to her then, and she has pursued it ever since. She has a child; a little girl of two years old, to whom she is devoted. Although she is what she is, in the very house to which this brother goes home every night of his life, he has an unbounded respect and love for her, which presents one of the strangest and most bewildering spectacles I ever saw within my remembrance.

She educated her younger sister, who is a Nursery-Governess.[†3] The mother (with whom they had a miserable home) is living, and has a small situation in Kensington Workhouse.[†4] The young man said he had no consideration for his mother and no love for her. That this elder sister of his had been such a mother to him, always, as he thought few boys had; and that the gratitude and affection with which she had inspired him and his younger sister, "couldn't be described". There is no doubt of this being true. I really had a difficulty in collecting myself to understand that in the tremendous circumstances of their daily existence, she has not fallen in this brother's respect.[†5]

He represented her as two or three and thirty;[†6] as having acquired no accomplishments; but as having had a good plain education, and being a good housekeeper. He said, she loved her child in the most passionate manner imaginable.

When the break-up took place, it was impossible for the young man to continue under his articles, because he was then unable to support himself without a Salary—which, while articled, he was not to receive. His articles were cancelled, therefore (no part of the premium being returned), and he obtained a situation as Architectural Draughtsman—which he holds now—at One pound fifteen per week.[†1] This class of people have no rise or advance, he says; but are at last, what they are at first. If he could make enough to keep his sister and her child he would be heartily thankful, and they would joyfully maintain home together, and he would ask no help. He had tried all sorts of things in despair. He had written, only a week or two ago, to Mr. Wigan of the Olympic Theatre,[†2] applying for a situation to take checks at the door of an evening, to eke out his income. There was nothing he wouldn't do, to change his sister's life. Not that it had corrupted her—if I would only see her, I should know, before I had spoken to her five minutes, what a nature she had. (And so he began to sob, and said she was the best—the kindest—the least selfish—I don't know what.)

To try how the shock of a separation they had evidently never thought of, would affect him, I asked him if she had ever thought of being sent abroad—to the Cape—to America—to Australia? He was quite stunned by the idea of parting from her, and asked me, Oh Mr. Dickens, did I consider how the natural ties between them must have been strengthened by this time! I said what I have said so many times to the Home people, and I urged him to consider that if (as he had said) she would do anything for her child's sake, she would do that thing on occasion, hard as I admitted it to be. He didn't know, he answered. He believed she would do almost anything—but she had never thought of this—she was almost as fond of him as he was of her—he couldn't hastily pledge her to such a separation as she had never had in her thoughts. "Ask her", said I. He was going out, and came back, and said "Mr. Dickens, I know it would be utterly in vain to ask her to leave her child behind her"—"No one would propose that", said I. "Let us suppose that she was to take it with her."

This is all I know, as yet. I have not replied, nor have I seen her. I will do both, if you feel interested, and I don't disguise that I hope you do. But I have told the story very coldly, in comparison with the impression, it has made upon me. I asked the young man whether there was any one who could speak of his sister besides himself and herself? He replied "Dr. Lavis[†3] of Westminster had attended her, was interested in her (he felt sure), and would know the truth of what he had told". This Dr. Lavis is the medical attendant at Tracey's prison, and I know him very well.

I cannot be right, without seeing the girl, of course; but I think that if anything could be done for her, or for her brother, here, it would seem that they had a better chance together than apart.

If you wish to pursue the case, I would first see the Doctor—then her. In any case I cannot let it rest; for the position of this brother—his perception of his sister's disgrace, and undiminished admiration of her, and the confidence he has grown up in, of her being something good, and never to be mentioned without tenderness and deference—is a romance at once so astonishing and yet so intelligible as I never had the boldness to think of.

[a]I made up my mind not to tell you all this, if I had any reason to doubt the strength of their sincerity. On Wednesday—having done nothing but keep quiet in the meanwhile—I received the two following letters.[a†1]

To W. H. WILLS, 18 NOVEMBER 1854*

MS Huntington Library.

Tavistock House | Saturday Eighteenth November 1854

My Dear Wills.

GUILD.[†2]

I cannot get to the Meeting;[†3] but it matters little, as it is only preparatory to the real one.[†4] The thing to state is, what has been strongly objected to us, as being obviously pauperizing and destructive of the independence of life assurance[†5]—to point out that the Bye Law cannot be altered without a meeting of the whole body—to agree upon the manner of the alteration—to make known the day of meeting—and to add that we will then be prepared with the draft of an advertisement for the papers,[†6] setting forth the substance and purpose of the correction made by the whole body.

The terms of the alteration must be settled today, in order that that question may have been disposed of by the Council before the Members come together.

H. W.

I send you an amusing letter for the edification of your leisure.

We dine on Tuesday,[†7] I suppose?

Ever Faithfully
CD.

To EDWARD CHAPMAN, 20 NOVEMBER 1854

Text from N, II, 606.

Tavistock House | Twentieth November 1854

Dear Sir.

I shall be glad to have the set of Lever's Works.[†1] Generally speaking I like alterations of form very little, and imitations of anything still less. But I will consider your suggestion[†2] between this present year 1854 and the good time coming[†3] (perhaps) when the peaceful arts shall be heard of again.

Faithfully Yours,
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To W. H. WILLS, 20 NOVEMBER 1854

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS
Monday November Twentieth 1854

My Dear Wills

It has occurred to me that I am rather strong on Voyages and Cannibalism,[†4] and might do an interesting little paper[†5] for next No. on that part of Dr. Rae's report; taking the arguments against its probabilities. Can you get me a newspaper cutting containing his report?[†6] If not, will you have it copied for me and sent up to Tavistock House straightway.

I don't know what Forster quite expects to ensue from Mr. Bull's Somnambulist,[†1] but, I think, the Downfall of the Ministry at least. Ever Faithfully CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 20 NOVEMBER 1854†

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Holly Lodge.

Tavistock House | Monday Evening | Twentieth November 1854

My Dear Miss Coutts.

[†a]As you are in the wild rural-police condition[†2] you so affectingly describe, I think it right to acknowledge the safe receipt of £71. 0. 0.[†a]

Who can the old woman be! Who[†3] can the one armed man be!! Who[†4] can the dwarf be!!! What[†5] can the empty Terrace-house be!!!![†6] I feel inclined to send out for a little straw, stick it in my head and shoes, and go theatrically mad directly.

[†a]I must come up tomorrow—for my sanity's sake—at between 2 and 3, or about 3, on my way to the Household Words office.

I write incoherently, partly because of your distracting note, and partly because I am in a wilderness of books into which I have been looking all day, with the intention of shewing (in reference to Dr. Ray's[†7] report) that the probabilities are all against poor Franklin's people having dreamed of eating the bodies of their companions.[†8] The case is curious and interesting, and (I hope) calculated to soothe the minds of their surviving friends.

Can O be the—but no, she can't be the one-armed man—and the Dwarf is out of the question—and as to an empty house—but my mind is wandering again.[†a]

Ever Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

To FRANK STONE, 21 [NOVEMBER] 1854*

MS Benoliel Collection. Date: misdated by CD; Tues was 21 Nov 54; reference to Aberdeen confirms.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Twenty First December | 1854

My Dear Stone

I send you in, as agreed, my little compliment to Lord Aberdeen.[†9] I expect to be made a Baronet, about the middle of next week.

Ever affecy.

CD.

To MARK LEMON, [?22 NOVEMBER 1854]

MS Benoliel Collection. Date: Nov 54, according to N; if so, Wed 22 Nov (see below).

H. W. Office | Wednesday afternoon

My Dear Mark

If you will come round and take your Grog at 7 ½ you will find our business over. I suppose there are 2 stalls?[†1] I thought it was a box, and encouraged Forster with a gleam of hope.

Ever affecy.

CD

To CHARLES EDMONDS, 23 NOVEMBER 1854

Extract in David J. Holmes catalogue No. 13 (1985); MS 2 pp.; dated Tavistock House, 23 Nov 54; addressed Charles Edmonds.

I will keep all the books, and am very much obliged to you for the trouble you have taken. I do not require any others on the subject: my enquiries (as you will see next week) being merely directed to one point.[†2] On the other side is the autograph for my fair friend unknown. If there were a more recent portrait than the Nickleby one,[†3] in existence, I would send it to you also with great pleasure. But there is none, for I have an objection to beholding my head staring at mankind out of the printshop windows.

To AUGUSTUS TRACEY, 25 NOVEMBER 1854*

MS University of Texas.

Tavistock House | Twenty Fifth November 1854

My Dear Governor

I don't know where Dr. Lavies (the elder, as I understand) lives;[†4] and I want to ask him a question concerning a family who have made a curious communication to me. That question I have asked in the enclosed note; and if you can spare what you always call "a trusty officer" to put the said note in the hands of the said Doctor as soon as may be, you will take another round turn[†5] upon the regard-tackle of

Yours nautically
CHARLES DICKENS

Lieutenant Tracey.

To DR JOHN LAVIES, [25 NOVEMBER 1854]

Mention in last. Date: no doubt written the same day.

To CHARLES KNIGHT, 27 NOVEMBER 1854

MS Mr W. A. Foyle.

Tavistock House | Twenty Seventh November 1854

My Dear Knight.

As we are nearing December, and as I was disappointed in my hope of seeing you at dinner at the office last Tuesday Week, I enclose poor old Defoe's ten pounds.[†1]

Affecy. Yours ever
CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Knight Esquire.

To W. H. WILLS, 27 NOVEMBER 1854

MS Huntington Library.

Tavistock House | Monday Twenty Seventh November | 1854

My Dear Wills

As I have had a letter from no less a person than Leigh Hunt(!) asking me to give him something soft to eat tomorrow, let us dine at the office, if convenient to you, on Wednesday—a day later than our usual day.

Do you think you can manage to discover by any means where Lady Franklin[†2] is now?[†3] I should like to send her those articles, when I have revised the second one.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To [THOMAS NESBITT], [?LATE NOVEMBER 1854]

Summary from South Eastern Railway Mechanics' Institute Minutes Book, 28 Nov 54 (MS PRO). Date: CD's letter was presented to the Institute's Council Meeting, 28 Nov.

Wishing the Mechanics in the South Eastern Railway Company's employ to fix their own time for the Soirée he was to attend.[†4]

To MARK LEMON, 29 NOVEMBER 1854

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Wednesday Morning | November Twenty Ninth 1854

My Dear Mark

I said I would send you my two papers about Franklin's party. The first is in the No. of H. W. enclosed;[†1] the second in the slips enclosed. When you have read the latter, will you let me have them again?

What hour tomorrow?

Ever affecy.

CD

To LADY FRANKLIN, 30 NOVEMBER 1854*

Text transcribed by Miss F. J. Woodward from MS then in possession of Mrs Maud Rawnsley.

Tavistock House, London | Thirtieth November, 1854.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Lady Franklin, and begs to forward two articles he has written on a subject of deep interest to her; the first of which is published in 'Household Words' today;[†2] and the second of which, will appear next week.

Mr. Dickens hopes that he need offer no other apology for desiring that Lady Franklin should receive these printed remarks from his hands rather than in the usual public manner; than the assurance of his heartfelt sympathy, and his profound admiration for the character of Sir John Franklin.

To J. B. BUCKSTONE, [?30 NOVEMBER 1854]*

Mention in To Phelps, 11 Dec 54. Date: presumably a day or two before To Buckstone, 1 Dec.

Enquiring whether Buckstone would produce Saunders's Love's Martyrdom, with Phelps and Miss Faucit in the leading parts.

December

To J. B. BUCKSTONE, 1 DECEMBER 1854

Mention in American Book Prices Current, 1939; MS 2 pp.; dated 1 Dec 54.

Mentioning a projected pantomime.[†3]

To EDWARD CHAPMAN, 1 DECEMBER 1854

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Friday First December 1854

Dear Sir

Will you send a complete set of my Cheap Edition[†1]—as forwarded from me for the troops in the Crimea[†2]—to Arthur Smith[†3] Esqre. Egyptian Hall Piccadilly.[†4]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Edward Chapman Esquire

To THE HON. MRS RICHARD WATSON, 1 DECEMBER 1854

MS Huntington Library.

Tavistock House | Friday First December 1854

My Dear Mrs. Watson

I am sorry to say that I am afraid of making an engagement for this day week.[†5] I come to the conclusion with great reluctance; but, on the next day the Christmas Number of Household Words[†6] must be upon the Steam Engine, printing; and I have been so much disappointed in the nature of the Contributions as yet received, that it will require my utmost care and assistance. I think I am certain to be occupied on the Friday, all day. And sorely against my will, I must reserve myself for this piece of work.

I have been prevented by the same cause from coming to Brighton, which I confidently expected to have done. To mend the matter, I took it into my head to be violently interested in writing two papers on Dr. Rae's report concerning Franklin; wherein you will see strung together some of the most extraordinary cases of shipwreck I know. This has helped to drive me up into the corner in which I at present stand at bay—with this Christmas Bull trying to toss me.

I hope Oriental Place[†7] has conducted itself with a gorgeousness worthy of its name? The last time I stayed at Brighton[†1] I was brayed and brassily blasted into imbecility of mind, by German bands.

Kate and Georgina send their kindest loves.

Dear Mrs. Watson | Ever Most Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To W. C. MACREADY, 4 DECEMBER 1854*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Monday Fourth December | 1854

My Dear Macready.

[†a]Non saro padrone. Et perche? Non capisco gl'abitanti di Sherborna la piccola.[†a] You shall do what you think best.[†2] I hate to draw back from anything. If the price be really too high for the people—which it may be—why not have it lower, or have two prices?[†3] Twenty five pounds for the library would be better than nothing.[†4] Cannot Cain and Abel confer, instead of killing each other? Can't we all be in good humour on the occasion—especially as it will be so near Christmas? If not, why then let us be ferocious. Have we not Hiren here![†5]

But I'd rather have Syren (without the tearing consequences)[†6] if possible.

Again I say, [†b]do what you think best, and you shall bind me.[†b] Institution Reading, Sherborne House Reading, or No Reading. I can come to you, I suppose, as a Numble Individgle, if it comes to that, without reading at all?

I don't like an arena that should reconcile all these things, to be the arena of contest if it can possibly be helped. I received your note this morning. And write very hastily, after a day's work, to save this post.

Ever Most affectionately

CD.

Let me know what you decide on.

To MARK LEMON, 6 DECEMBER 1854

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Wednesday Sixth December 1854.

My Dear Mark

I hope you go with us to Rochester tomorrow.[†1] Our North Kent Train starts from London Bridge Terminus, at 12 o'Clock.

Affecy. Ever

CD.

To W. C. MACREADY, 6 DECEMBER 1854*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Sixth December 1854.

Dearest of the Irascibles.

All right. I heartily hope the Sherbornians will justify the concession,[†2] and cast quantities of live coals on their own heads.[†3]

My hair is all standing on end at the idea of 2 o'Clock in the day for such a purpose![†4] It is a tough job, and I own that I want night and false light. Reconsider that point. If it be really indispensable,[†5] the amiable Writer is not the person to object;—but how he is ever to be got up to the scratch at 2 o'Clock in the day, is positively unknown to him. I am quite serious in this, though I do beguile the thing I am by seeming otherwise.[†6]

You will want to know perhaps, how long it takes. In a great space like the townhall at Birmingham,[†7] which requires (as you know) great distinctness, and where the people make great delays by laughing and applauding, it consumes, with an interval of ten minutes about half way through, two hours and three quarters. I think the working-people made it even longer.[†8] But in the smaller sphere of Sherborne the Shabby, I should hope I might rattle it off in two hours and a half.

I receive enthusiastic letters from Birmingham,[†9] relative to your Readings there. I did not myself feel that the people in the remote gallery were difficult to hold by the heart.[†10] And Wills (who went up for the purpose) told me that he, and all the rest, could hear every inflexion of the voice with perfect distinctness. The oddity of the place was, he said, that the solitary figure looked so extraordinarily small.

I hope you mean to dine with us next Sunday.

Ever Most Heartily and affecy.

CD.

To J. E. NORRIS,[†1] 6 DECEMBER 1854*

MS Miss Violet M. Newman.

Tavistock House, London | Wednesday Sixth December 1854

Dear Sir

I am exceedingly obliged to you for your kind invitation, but regret that I cannot possibly have the pleasure of visiting Halifax this Christmas. Even at Bradford[†2] I go to an Hotel, in order that I may leave as soon as I shall have done what I have engaged to do, without inconvenience to anyone.

Mrs. Dickens desires me to present her kind regards.

With many thanks for your proffered hospitality

I am dear Sir | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

J. E. Norris Esquire.

To ARTHUR RYLAND, 6 DECEMBER 1854*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Wednesday Sixth December 1854

My Dear Sir

I will take care to give your letter to Miss Coutts.[†3] I have heard from Bulwer Lytton on the subject of your request,[†4] and he says (what I have no doubt is true), that he has so many proposals made to him of that kind, and is so troubled by having to make a speech, and is so unwilling to have engagements impending over him, that he cannot respond as he would desire to do.

It occurs to me, to ask you a question personal to myself. My eldest boy, now 18, comes home from Leipzig tomorrow. He wishes to enter mercantile life, and I am casting about for the best opening for him. He has been educated at Eton, has lived two years in Germany, and his name is my name, and he is an accomplished and creditable fellow.[†5] I want to place him in some thoroughly good house of business where he would be esteemed, and where he could make his own way. Do you know of any such house in or about Birmingham?[†6]

Very faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Arthur Ryland Esquire

Mr. Macready tells me that he certainly could not have read a Play in Birmingham, and that he found it extremely difficult "to get hold" of the large gallery.

To MARK LEMON, 8 DECEMBER 1854

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Friday Eighth December | 1854

My Dear Mark

We were close at your heels last night, but you had vanished with a celerity worthy of—what shall I say?—a better cause.[†1]

As I was coming home, it occurred to me to say, don't speak to Jerrold[†2] on the Cowell[†3] subject until I shall have had an opportunity of speaking to you.

Ever affecy.

CD.

To MARK LEMON, 9 DECEMBER 1854

MS Benoliel Collection.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS
Saturday Ninth Decr. 1854.

My Dear Mark

I think, in that case I had better not make any appointment for after dinner. Our Making up is very difficult—and I'll take a nap over the fire—and go back to work again.

So do you dispose of yourself without reference to me.

Ever affecy.

CD.

To GEORGE BEADNELL,[†1] 11 DECEMBER 1854

Text from N, II, 608.

Tavistock House | Monday Eleventh December 1854

My Dear Sir.

I assure you that if I could in any reason comply with this request,[†2] I would do so, for your sake. But it hails and blows such applications on me. I declare to you that for three hours this very morning, I have done nothing but incessantly answer such correspondents. I am at this moment pledged to several readings; and when I move beyond their circle, there are several large towns that have a claim upon me, and which are all tearing at me like so many Zoological creatures before dinner.

I was delighted to hear from Mrs. Dickens that you are a phenomenon of robustness, but I should have been better pleased to have seen you with my own eyes.

Believe me, always very faithfully yours,

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To SAMUEL PHELPS, 11 DECEMBER 1854

MS Rosenbach Foundation. Address: Private | Samuel Phelps Esquire | Theatre Royal Sadlers Wells.

Tavistock House | Monday Evening | Eleventh December 1854

My Dear Mr. Phelps.

Mrs. Martin[†3] immediately sent the play[†4] to Buckstone. I immediately wrote to Buckstone[†5] as you and I agreed.[†6] Buckstone immediately wrote to me, to ask to hold the question over[†7] until his Pantomime is out;[†8] he being in a dismal condition of environment by Fairies and Carpenters. To that reasonable entreaty I replied with amiability, and he will come to me when his holiday ship is fairly afloat. You shall of course hear from me in due course, without delay.

I want you to do my children a kindness for their little Christmas Play.[†9] Will you ask your Prompter to lend me your Prompt book of Fortunio,[†1] and a Piano-copy of its Music,[†2] if you have such a thing?[†3]

Very faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Samuel Phelps Esquire.

To ARTHUR RYLAND, 11 DECEMBER 1854*

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: Arthur Ryland Esquire | Birmingham.

Tavistock House | Eleventh December 1854

My Dear Sir

I really cannot tell you how much obliged to you I feel, for your great interest and kindness. Your letter is so valuable to me for the clear and practical light in which it presents its subject, that I wish to give it my attentive consideration for a few days. I will then write to you further.

I have a real affection for Birmingham and the Birmingham people, and it would be an unspeakable satisfaction to me if I could associate myself with the town through my boy.

Believe me always | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Arthur Ryland Esquire.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 11 DECEMBER 1854

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Holly Lodge | Highgate.

Tavistock House | Monday Night Eleventh December | 1854

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I have been asked to give you the enclosed letter†4 from Birmingham. I replied that I would do that much, accompanying it with no other remark than that I knew the Institution to be the best in England and of national importance.†5

I have to day seen Mrs. Thompson, the sister of the young man whose letters I sent to you,†6 and in reference to whom I received the enclosed report from Dr. Lavies. The kind of life she leads, is far from being as bad as you might suppose, and, to prevent its being worse than it is, she has parted with everything in the way of personal ornament. She would willingly go to the Cape,†7 and I have the strongest belief that she would do well. I plainly see, and therefore feel bound to mention, that her child is the one great occasion of her desiring to retrieve the past.

She is rather small, and young-looking; but pretty, and gentle, and has a very good head. Her manner was exceedingly natural to the circumstances in which I saw her, and she greatly strengthened my previous disposition to be interested in her. I feel confident that there can never have been much evil in her, apart from the early circumstances that directed her steps the wrong way.

She could not be placed on a level with our Shepherd's Bush girls. Her manner, character, and experiences, are altogether different.

It is a very remarkable case. I very much wish you would see her, and judge for yourself of its peculiarity. There is nothing about her from which you could suppose she had come to this. You might see her and her brother a thousand times—you might meet them in the street, every day in the year—and only notice them as brother and sister who were no doubt living together and taking care of one another. I cannot get the picture of her, out of my head. I particularly wish that you could see her and speak to her.

Supposing she were sent abroad, and her child were to die there soon, I am doubtful whether she would not come back—unless†1 she had found an opening for her brother and he had gone out to her.

Perhaps you will tell me on Wednesday, when I can speak to you on this case, and also about Charley—in reference to whom I should like to shew you a letter I have from Birmingham.[†2]

The Poor Travellers have not yet emerged from the Steam Engine. As soon as they appear, they shall wait on you. I hope you will like my little story, as the First of them. It has made such an impression on the Staff, that I think there must be something in it!

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

To THE MAYOR OF SHEFFIELD,[†3] 13 DECEMBER 1854

MS Berg Collection.

Tavistock House, London | Thirteenth December, 1854

Dear Sir

My engagements render it impossible for me to have the pleasure of complying, at present, with the request of my Sheffield friends.

But if they should desire to renew their application to me, early next Autumn, with a view to a reading next Christmas;[†4] I will do my best to return them a favorable reply.

With many thanks for your proffered hospitality, I have the honor to be

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

The | Mayor of Sheffield.[†5]

To JOHN FOWLER,[†1] 13 DECEMBER 1854*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Tavistock House | Thirteenth December 1854

My Dear Sir

I assure you that for three days past, I have done little more than answer letters similar to that which you have enclosed to me.[†2] They come in such enormous numbers, that I can no more comply with their entreaties than I can divide myself into fifty men.

But I have said to Mr. Fisher, in the enclosed letter of which perhaps you will kindly take charge, that if the application of my Sheffield friends be renewed next Autumn with a reference to next Christmas, I will do my best to send a favorable reply.

My Dear Sir | Very faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. John Fowler

To SAMUEL PHELPS, 13 DECEMBER 1854*

MS Rosenbach Foundation. Address: Samuel Phelps Esquire | 8 Canonbury Square | Islington.

Tavistock House | Thirteenth December 1854

My Dear Mr. Phelps.

I will take care that Buckstone does not delay, when his Pantomime is well out. I am bound to add, that I do not think he has the least desire to procrastinate.

Many thanks for your kind proposal in reference to the Fortunio Music, which I shall be very glad to have at the time you mention. Could I have the Prompt Book sooner—say, tomorrow?

Mr. Macready has been here the last two or three days. He is looking very well, but complains of his asthma. He has just gone home.

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Samuel Phelps Esquire

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 14 DECEMBER 1854*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts.

Tavistock House | Thursday Fourteenth December | 1854

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I thought it best not to shew Charley the letter from Birmingham[†3] until you should have read it.[†4] As it dwells, sensibly, on the pains he will have to take, I shall be glad to give it him to read now, if you can conveniently enclose it to me.

I wish you and Mrs. Brown were coming to Reading on Tuesday.[†1] You are such a noble audience, that you would be the next best thing to positive inspiration.

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours
CD.

To JOHN THOMPSON, 14 DECEMBER 1854*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Tavistock House | Fourteenth December 1854

John.

Please to get me, from Mr. Lacy's,[†2] and to let me have before dinner-time tomorrow, the book of a play called

Fortunio[†3]

—which was published by Berger of Holywell Street.[†4]

CHARLES DICKENS

To ARTHUR RYLAND, 16 DECEMBER 1854*

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: Arthur Ryland Esquire | Birmingham.

Tavistock House, London | Sixteenth December 1854

My Dear Sir.

I perfectly coincide in the opinions you so kindly gave me in your letter of the Seventh of this month. I have no doubt that the best thing my boy can do, is to acquire a general knowledge of business—first, at all events—in a place like Birmingham.[†5] I would rather that he had his initiation in that neighbourhood than in any other, because I greatly prefer its people, as well as highly estimate its importance.

Therefore I accept your most friendly offer of assistance, cordially and gratefully. If you will, at your leisure, endeavour to advance my wishes with any house that you know to be an eligible one for the purpose, your opinion of it will be conclusive with me. After Christmas I will always hold myself in readiness to come to Birmingham whenever you may let me know that you think you have found what I want; and of course I will bring the Merchant that is to be, with me.

When I see you, I want to talk to you about a small disappointment I have, in my item in the receipts for the benefit of your Institution.[†6] I hoped to have made it £500. Is not the balance to be got,[†7] one of these days?

My Dear Sir | Very faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

Arthur Ryland Esquire.

To DR JOHN RAE, [?16 DECEMBER 1854]

Mention in next. Date: presumably written the same day.

To W. H. WILLS, 16 DECEMBER 1854*

MS Huntington Library.

Tavistock House | Saturday Sixteenth December | 1854

My Dear Wills.

I would fence off this paper of Morley's[†1] (which is quite out of the question), by writing him that we have done with Xmas for this year.

Enclosed is the conclusion of Dr. Rae's paper,[†2] which must go into the No.[†3] that we are to revise on Monday. We had best dine at the office on Monday[†4] at ½ past 5. I will try to get down and do the work before dinner, if you will have the Proof ready in good time.

The enclosed letter for Rae, please send round to its address.[†5] I forget the No. but you have it.

Will you tell John to get me 3 solid blotters, folio size, and three smaller size.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To WILKIE COLLINS, 17 DECEMBER 1854

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Sunday Seventeenth December | 1854

My Dear Collins

Many thanks for your note. As I rode home in the Hansom, that Gravesend night,[†6] one or two doubts arose in my mind respecting the Cowell facts; and before breakfast on the following morning, I wrote to Mark, begging him to say nothing to Jerrold from me, until I should have satisfied my mind. I am so sorry at heart for the working-people when they get into trouble and have their wretched arena chalked out for them with such extraordinary complacency by small political economists, that I have a natural impulse upon me, almost always, to come to the rescue—even of people I detest, if I believe them to have been true to these poor men.

I am away to Reading[†7] to read the Carol, and to Sherborne, and—after Christmas Day—to Bradford in Yorkshire. The thirtieth will conclude my public appearances for the present season, and then I hope we shall have some Christmas diversions here. I have got the children's play into shape, so far as the Text goes (it is an adaptation of Fortunio): but it has not been "on the stage" yet. Mark is going to do the Dragon[†1]—with a practicable head and tail.[†2]

Ever Yours

CD.

To MISS ADELAIDE PROCTER, 17 DECEMBER 1854

Text from MDGH, I, 374-6.

Tavistock House, Sunday, Dec. 17th, 1854.

My Dear Miss Procter.

You have given me a new sensation. I did suppose that nothing in this singular world could surprise me, but you have done it.[†3]

You will believe my congratulations on the delicacy and talent of your writing to be sincere. From the first, I have always had an especial interest in that Miss Berwick, and have over and over again questioned Wills about her. I suppose he has gone on gradually building up an imaginary structure of life and adventure for her, but he has given me the strangest information! Only yesterday week, when we were "making up" "The Poor Travellers," as I sat meditatively poking the office fire, I said to him, "Wills, have you got that Miss Berwick's proof back, of the little sailor's song?"[†4] "No," he said. "Well, but why not?" I asked him. "Why, you know," he answered, "as I have often told you before, she don't live at the place to which her letters are addressed, and so there's always difficulty and delay in communicating with her." "Do you know what age she is?" I said. Here he looked unfathomably profound, and returned, "Rather advanced in life." "You said she was a governess, didn't you?" said I; to which he replied in the most emphatic and positive manner, "A governess."[†5]

He then came and stood in the corner of the hearth, with his back to the fire, and delivered himself like an oracle concerning you. He told me that early in life (conveying to me the impression of about a quarter of a century ago) you had had your feelings desperately wounded by some cause, real or imaginary—"it does not matter which," said I, with the greatest sagacity—and that you had then taken to writing verses. That you were of an unhappy temperament, but keenly sensitive to encouragement. That you wrote after the educational duties of the day were discharged. That you sometimes thought of never writing any more. That you had been away for some time "with your pupils." That your letters were of a mild and melancholy character, and that you did not seem to care as much as might be expected about money. All this time I sat poking the fire, with a wisdom upon me absolutely crushing; and finally I begged him to assure the lady that she might trust me with her real address, and that it would be better to have it now, as I hoped our further communications, etc. etc. etc. You must have felt enormously wicked last Tuesday,[†1] when I, such a babe in the wood, was unconsciously prattling to you. But you have given me so much pleasure, and have made me shed so many tears, that I can only think of you now in association with the sentiment and grace of your verses.

So pray accept the blessing and forgiveness of Richard Watts, though I am afraid you come under both his conditions of exclusion.[†2]

Very faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To MARK LEMON, 18 DECEMBER 1854

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House. | Eighteenth December 1854

My Dear Mark.

We'll think of it.

The train S T A R T S [†3] at 10 minutes before 1 tomorrow.[†4] Wills will take your ticket.

Will you instruct the parts (when copied) to be sent to Charley? He knows what to do with them.

Ever affecy.

CD.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 19 DECEMBER 1854

Mention in C. F. Libbie catalogue, Feb 1909; MS 2 pp.; dated 19 Dec 54.

To ARTHUR RYLAND, 22 DECEMBER 1854

Extract from W. R. Hughes, A Week's Tramp in Dickens-land, 1891, 144.

What you write with so much heartiness of my first Poor Traveller is quite delightful to me. The idea of that little story obtained such strong possession of me when it came into my head, that it cost me more time and tears than most people would consider likely. The response it meets with is payment for anything.[†1]

To JAMES BOORNE, 23 DECEMBER 1854

Extracts in Christie's catalogue, June 1987, checked from MS Christie's; dated Tavistock House, 23 Dec 54; addressed James Boorne (misread in catalogue).

Assuring him that he had no need to explain, since he had a great deal to do.[†2] I never never for a moment accused you in my thoughts of the slightest omission.

The result of the night is very gratifying indeed, and fills me with pleasure.[†3]

There is no hope of Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton. He told me, only the other day, that he was quite bewildered by such applications, and that to have a speech hanging over him was to cast a shadow on his daily life. We resolved never to ask any such service of each other, and your letter binds me for the first time to keep my promise.

To THE REV. W. TENNANT, 23 DECEMBER 1854*

MS Mr Alfred C. Berol.

Tavistock House | Twenty Third December 1854

My Dear Sir

I am going to Bradford in Yorkshire to give a Christmas Reading[†4] to some three thousand people, or I should have been very glad indeed to have attended Miss Coutts's Dinner.[†5]

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Reverend W. Tennant

To WILKIE COLLINS, 24 DECEMBER 1854

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Christmas Eve 1854

My Dear Collins

Here is a Part in Fortunio—dozen words[†6]—but great Pantomime opportunities—which require a first-rate old stager,[†1] to devour Property Loaves.[†2] Will you join the joke and do it? Gobbler,[†3] one of the seven gifted servants, is the Being "to let". There is an eligible opportunity of making up dreadfully greedy.

I am going to read the piece to the children, next Tuesday at half past two. We shall rehearse it at the same hour, every day in the following week—dress rehearsal on Saturday night the 6th.—night of performance, Monday the 8th.

I am just come back from Reading[†4] and Sherborne,[†5] and go to Bradford on Wednesday morning: returning next day.

If you should chance to be disengaged today, here we are—Pork with sage and inion at half past five.

Ever Faithfully
CD.

W. Wilkie Collins Esquire.

To T. J. SERLE, 24 DECEMBER 1854

MS Mr Peter Brandt.

Tavistock House | Twenty Fourth December 1854

My Dear Serle.

I doubt the expediency of moving in this matter,[†6] because I doubt the possibility of confining the movement to men whose grateful recognition would be really acceptable. I have not the opportunity of sounding Forster, for he is out of town for his Christmas week; but I have a strong belief that he would feel as I do.

Your letter reached me only last night; I have been away since Tuesday morning; if I had been in town, I would have answered it immediately.

Very faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

T. J. Serle Esquire

To THOMAS BEARD, 26 DECEMBER 1854

MS Dickens House.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Twenty Sixth December | 1854

My Dear Beard

Will you come and dine with us next Sunday, to see the Old Year out? Time, half-past 6 sharp.

Ever Heartily Yours
CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 26 DECEMBER 1854

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Holly Lodge | Highgate.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Twenty Sixth December | 1854.

My Dear Miss Coutts

Many many merry Christmases and Happy New Years to you, and all of you!

I am glad you like the baskets. May they help to make you tidy!

Mrs. Dickens is coming to tell you that we hope you and Mr. and Mrs. Brown will be able, this year, to see the children's Fairy-play. As Charley's birthday falls on a Saturday, we mean to keep it on Monday the 8th. when will be presented Fortunio and his seven gifted Servants, by the entire strength of the Company.

As for me, I am away to Bradford, whence I shall get back just in time for the Commercial Travellers on Saturday.[†1] The Reading night was a most rapturous affair. I send you a paper containing a little account of it.[†2]

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours
CD.

I wish you could see the five and twenty children under training[†3]—and the gravity and business of the proceedings.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 26 DECEMBER 1854*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Twenty Sixth December | 1854.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

Since I wrote to you this morning, I have received the letter you will find tied up with the accompanying pamphlet.[†4] I don't know whether you may think it a case for some help—it seems a fearfully hard one.

And I should think the writer a simple man—if I may judge from his belief in my ability to help him to a living of Three Hundred a year!!!

Ever Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

To MRS CHARLES DICKENS, 28 DECEMBER 1854

MS British Library.

Bradford, Yorkshire | Thursday Twenty Eighth December 1854

My Dearest Catherine.

We arrived here pleasantly enough, though we were nearly an hour behind time, and the journey was cold. As we came northward, it snowed. A little snow is lying here now. It is a dark dingy place; but we are established in the landlady's little drawingroom at the George Hotel,[†1] and it is a bright neat little room. I have a comfortable small bedroom adjoining, except that it looks into what I thought yesterday afternoon was an old rabbit-hutch, but which I suspect this morning to be a back street.

The Hall is enormous.[†2] They expect to seat tonight, 3,700 people![†3] I do not however, think it at all a difficult place. It is lighted along the upper cornice, like the Philharmonic Rooms at Liverpool,[†4] and must be very fine when full. Going to look at it last night, I found arrangements made for seating 60 people, in two rows, behind me. These (on which the committee immensely prided themselves), I instantly overthrew: to the great terror and amazement of the bystanders, who inquired in a dismal manner "Where was the Mayor[†5] to go then?" I said the Mayor might go—anywhere—but must not come near me.

A letter this morning from the Sherborne Mr. Fitzgerald,[†6] who (thank Heaven!) is kept away. No news of Fletcher.[†7] Among certain delegates who are to come from Leeds,[†8] I see Scroope Ayrton's name.[†9]

Our train is due at King's Cross, at 4 tomorrow afternoon. Will you send Cooper and French there, at about a quarter before the hour? Wills and I are now going out to re-inspect the platform arrangements. We were at the Theatre last night[†1]—much better than usual.

My love to Georgy—and to Mamey Katey, Charley, Walter, Frank, Alfred, Sydney, Harry, and the Gocter.[†2]

Ever affectionately

CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [28 DECEMBER 1854]

Extract in F, VII, ii, 572*n*. Date: 28 Dec, according to Forster.

He wrote from Bradford, The Hall is enormous, and they expect to seat 3700 people to-night! Notwithstanding which, it seems to me a tolerably easy place—except that the width of the platform is so very great to the eye at first.

To CHARLES KNIGHT, 30 [DECEMBER] 1854

Text in MDGH, I, 349-50, checked from MS Sotheby's, July 1983. Date: reference to Bradford shows this is Dec 54.

Tavistock House | Thirtieth January 1854

My Dear Knight.

Indeed there is no fear of my thinking you the owner of a cold heart.[†3] I am more than three parts disposed, however, to be ferocious with you for even writing down such a preposterous truism.

My satire is against those who see figures and averages, and nothing else[†4]—the representatives of the wickedest and most enormous vice of this time—the men who, through long years to come, will do more to damage the real useful truths of political economy, than I could do (if I tried) in my whole life—the addled heads who would take the average of cold in the Crimea during twelve months, as a reason for clothing a soldier in nankeen[†5] on a night when he would be frozen to death in fur[†6]—and who would comfort the labourer in travelling twelve miles a day to and from his work, by telling him that the average distance of one inhabited place from another in the whole area of England, is not more than four miles. Bah! What have you to do with these!

I shall put the book[†1] upon a private shelf (after reading it), by Once upon a time.[†2] I should have buried my pipe of peace and sent you this blast of my war-horn three or four days ago, but that I have been reading to a little audience of three thousand five hundred, at Bradford.[†3]

Ever affectionately yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To [?W. H. WILLS],[†4] [?1854]

Text from N, II, 547. Date: given as 1854 by N, but with no authority.

THE RESPONSE

Air: "Isabel"

At the Hou-ou-sehold Words at ha-alf past fo-ur
I'll be found, I'll be found, I'll be found
When if it don't blow it will certainly pou-ur
I'll be bound, I'll be bound, I'll be bound!

But whom you expect besi-i-des Lemming
I dont know, I dont know, I dont know
But I'll write to old Stanny R.[†5] & Lemming
I'll do so, I'll do so, I'll do so.

You haven't got time I sup-po-o-o-ose
To walk out to that Blades[†6]
If you do not produce your old no-o-o-ose
I'll send him a line with all spee-e-e-e-e-e-e-e-eed.[†7]

1855

January

To W. HARRISON AINSWORTH,[†1] 3 JANUARY 1855

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

Tavistock House | Wednesday Morning | Third January 1855

My Dear Ainsworth

I am inexpressibly mortified to find that we are engaged to day.[†2] I never do remember such things on a sudden, when a pleasant proposal is made to me by an old friend. It flashed upon me as I was coming home, and they have been devoting breakfast-time, here, to wondering how I could have forgotten—and why I didn't remember—and what I could ever have been thinking of, not to bear in mind that they had said "we know you won't want to go, when the time comes"—and other dismal aggravations of that sort. I send this to the club[†3] immediately after breakfast, in the hope that it may catch you before you order dinner.

Give me another chance, another day.

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

William Harrison Ainsworth Esquire

To MISS MARY BOYLE, 3 JANUARY 1855

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Third January 1855

My Dear Mary

This is a word of heartfelt greeting in exchange for yours, which came to me most pleasantly and was received with a cordial welcome. If I had leisure to write a letter, I should write you, at this present, perhaps the very best letter that ever was read! But, being in the agonies of getting up a gorgeous Fairy play for the Postboys[†4] on Charley's birthday (besides having the work of half a dozen to do as a regular thing), I leave the merits of that wonderful epistle to your lively fancy.

—Enclosing a kiss, if you will have the kindness to return it when done with.

I have just been reading my Christmas Carol in Yorkshire, to a little party of 3,700 people. Should have lost my heart to the beautiful young landlady[†5] of my hotel (age, 29: dress, black polka jacket[†6] exquisitely braided), if it had not been safe in your possession.

Many, many happy years to you! My regards to that obdurate old Wurzell[†7] and his Dame,[†8] when you have them under lock and key again.[†9]

Ever affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Mary Boyle.

To W. W. F. DE CERJAT, 3 JANUARY 1855

MS Yale University Library. Address: William F. de Cerjat Esquire | Elysée | Lausanne | Switzerland.

Tavistock House, London | Third January 1855

My Dear Cerjat. When your Christmas letter did not arrive according to custom, I felt as if a bit of Christmas had fallen out and there was no supplying the piece. However, it was soon supplied by yourself, and the bowl became round and sound again. I most heartily agree with you as to that wretched defaulting servant. I should have done precisely the same if the case had unhappily been my own, and should have felt perfectly clear in my conscience that I did right, according to the brightness of such lights as I am able to burn.

The Christmas No. of Household Words, I suppose will reach Lausanne about Midsummer. The first ten pages or so—all, under the head of the first poor Traveller—are written by me; and I hope you will find, in the story of the Soldier which they contain, something that may move you a little. It moved me not a little in the writing, and I believe has touched a vast number of people. We have sold 80,000 of it.

I am but newly come home from reading at Reading (where I succeeded poor Talfourd as the President of an Institution), and at Sherborne in Dorsetshire, and at Bradford in Yorkshire. Wonderful audiences,—the number at the last place, 3,700! And yet, but for the noise of their laughing and cheering, they "went" like one man.

The absorption of the English mind in the War, is—to me—a melancholy thing. Every other subject of popular solicitude and sympathy goes down before it. I fear I clearly see that for years to come, domestic Reforms are shaken to the root; every miserable Red Tapist flourishes the war over the head of every protester against his humbug; and everything connected with it, is pushed to such an unreasonable extent that, however kind and necessary it may be in itself, it becomes ridiculous. For all this, it is an indubitable fact, I conceive, that Russia must be stopped, and that the future Peace of the World renders the War imperative upon us.[†1] The Duke of Newcastle[†2] lately addressed a private letter to the newspapers,[†3] entreating them to exercise a larger discretion in respect of the letters of "your own correspondents"; against which, Lord Raglan protests as giving the Emperor of Russia information for nothing,[†1] which would cost him (if indeed he could get it at all) fifty or a hundred thousand Pounds a year. The communication has not been attended with much effect, so far as I can see.[†2] In the mean time I do suppose we have the wretchedest Ministry that ever was—in whom nobody not in office of some sort, believes—yet whom there is nobody to displace. The strangest result, perhaps, of years of Reformed Parliaments,[†3] that ever the general sagacity did not foresee.

Let me recommend to you, as a Brother reader of high distinction, two comedies, both Goldsmith's. She stoops to conquer, and The good-natured man. Both are so admirable, and so delightfully written, that they read wonderfully. A friend of mine, Forster who wrote the life of Goldsmith, was very ill a year or so ago,[†4] and begged me to read to him one night as he lay in bed—"something of Goldsmith's". I fell upon She Stoops to Conquer, and we enjoyed it with that wonderful intensity, that I believe he began to get better in the first scene, and was all right again in the Fifth Act.

I am charmed by your account of Haldimand, to whom my love. Tell him, Sydney Smith's daughter has privately printed a life of her father[†5] with selections from his letters; which has great merit, and often presents him exactly as he used to be. I have strongly urged her to publish it, and I think she will do so about March.[†6] Townshend is conducting himself like a Trump, evidently; and I only wish I could look in at one of those little suppers he so well knows how to manage, and join you in a trio of Champagne.

My eldest boy has come home from Germany—to learn a business life at Birmingham (I think) first of all. The whole nine are well and happy. Ditto Mrs. Dickens. Ditto Georgina. My two girls are full of interest in yours; and one of mine

(as I think I told you when I was at Elysée)[†1] is curiously like one of yours in the face. They are all agog now about a great Fairy-play, which is to come off here next Monday. The house is full of spangles, gas, Jew theatrical tailors,[†2] and Pantomime Carpenters. We all unite in kindest and best loves to dear Mrs. Cerjat and all the blooming daughters. And I am, with frequent thoughts of you and cordial affection, Ever My Dear Cerjat, Your faithful friend CD.

P.S. We heard from Mrs. Watson yesterday. She has her boys at Rockingham, but is low spirited and depressed at this time of the year.

To MESSRS LETTS SON AND STEER, 3 JANUARY 1855*

MS Dickens House.

Tavistock House | Third January 1855

Dear Sir

I have the pleasure of again thanking you for your annual remembrance,[†3] with all good wishes.

The old cover[†4] holds out gallantly, and indeed is as good as new.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Messrs. Letts Son and Steer

To DANIEL MACLISE, [1-3 JANUARY 1855]

Mention in John Anderson Jr catalogue No. 260; MS 2 pp.; dated London, 1855. Date: shortly before the production of Fortunio, 8 Jan.

Saying that some twenty five children are going to act Fortunio, and that he is taking great pains with it.[†5]

To PETER CUNNINGHAM, 4 JANUARY 1855

Text from N, II, 617.

Tavistock House | Fourth January 1855

My Dear Cunningham

I ought to have let you know before—but quite forgot, which pray excuse—that I want to postpone our next Saturday's dinner engagement at the office. Dress Rehearsal of the young Company demands the managerial presence!

Ever Cordially Yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To MESSRS BRADBURY & EVANS, 5 JANUARY 1855*

MS Dickens House.

Tavistock House | Fifth January 1855

My Dear B and E.

Here is another letter from the French translator who would be,[†1] whose proposal you answered. He seems to be a nice fellow and I have not replied to his letter, nor do I think (unless you think differently), that you need do so. But pray look at what he says of the law of the case.[†2] Because we seem to be wrong, and it is important that we should be right. If there is any doubt on the subject, we had better get it cleared up.

Faithfully Always

CD.

Messrs. Bradbury and Evans.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 5 JANUARY 1855*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Holly Lodge | Highgate.

Tavistock House | Fifth January 1855

My Dear Miss Coutts.

As I know you and Mrs. Brown will be pleased to learn what I learned last night, I anticipate Monday's opportunity[†3] of telling you that 80,000 Poor Travellers have been sold. I should have called 20,000 less,—the times considered,[†4]—a very reasonable burst.

Ever Most Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To ARTHUR RYLAND, 5 JANUARY 1855*

Text transcribed from MS by the owner, Mrs Quinney.

Tavistock House. | Fifth January 1855

Dear Sir

Wednesday in next week will suit us perfectly, and we will dine at 6 o'Clock. I will only ask Mr. Wills or someone whom you know equally well, before whom we can speak quite freely.[†1]

Very faithfully Yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

Arthur Ryland Esquire.

To A. L. SAUL,[†2] 5 JANUARY 1855*

Text from copy entered in the Minutes of the Commercial Travellers' Schools, 5 Feb 1855.

Tavistock House | 5th Jany. 1855.

Dear Sir,

I have received your letter with the highest satisfaction, and I beg to assure your Board of Management[†3] that it affords me real pleasure to have been of any slight service to them.[†4]

Faithfully yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. A. L. Saul.

To J. B. BUCKSTONE, 7 JANUARY 1855*

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

Tavistock House | Seventh January 1855

My Dear Buckstone

I have seen Mr. Saunders to day,[†5] and have written to Phelps to answer these two enquiries. Firstly, whether he could come to the Haymarket immediately after Easter? Secondly, what his terms would be? His reply I will send to you when I get it. If you decide on dispensing with him, it will give you the opportunity I dare say.

In the meantime, would it not be well for you to write to Mrs. Martin?

There were two weak points in reference to your friend[†6] yesterday.[†7] Firstly, I would not have addressed that letter to the Committee.[†8] Secondly, Mr. Archdeckne[†9] cut the matter too short by too suddenly withdrawing him.[†10] I was prepared to mention the points that I thought we ought to consider before going to the ballot, when his withdrawal deprived me of all possible excuse for saying one word.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

J. B. Buckstone Esquire

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 7 JANUARY 1855*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts.

Tavistock House | Sunday Seventh January | 1855.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

If Dr. Skey[†1] should be with you tomorrow, pray assure him that it will give us very great pleasure if he will accompany you here.[†2]

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To SAMUEL PHELPS, 7 JANUARY 1855

MS Rosenbach Foundation.

Tavistock House | Sunday Seventh January 1855

My Dear Mr. Phelps.

Buckstone has redeemed his promise, and has read and carefully considered Mr. Saunders's play. I have both heard from him and seen him on the subject; and he is quite willing to do it at the Haymarket, if all questions of cost can be adjusted with a reasonable reference to the depth of his purse.

He would prefer to bring it out immediately after Easter.[†3] I want your reply to two questions. Firstly, would your arrangements admit of your appearing at the Haymarket, say on Saturday the 14th. of April?[†4] And Secondly, on what terms would you go there.

If you will give me your reply on these points, I will communicate it to Buckstone: with whom (of course) I hold any such communication, in confidence. In the meantime I consider nothing in reference to the play, changed, and regard it as still under your acceptance.

Always Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Samuel Phelps Esquire.

To J. R. PLANCHÉ,[†1] 7 JANUARY 1855

Text from The Recollections and Reflections of J. R. Planché, 1872, II, 158.

Tavistock House | Sunday, Seventh January, 1855

Dear Planché

My children have a little story-book play under paternal direction once a year on a birthday occasion. They are going to do "Fortunio" to-morrow night, with which I have taken some liberties for their purpose.[†2] If you should happen to be disengaged, we should be delighted to see you, and you would meet some old stagers whom you know very well.[†3] We all know you to be on such familiar terms with the fairies that the smallest actor[†4] in the company is not afraid of you.

I am obliged to appoint a quarter past 8 (I mean that for an eight) as the latest hour of arrival, because the theatre is almost as inconveniently constructed as an English real one, and nobody can by any human means be got into it after the play is begun.[†5]

Very faithfully yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

J. R. Planché, Esq.

To DAVID ROBERTS, 9 JANUARY 1855*

MS State Historical Museum, Moscow.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Ninth January 1855

My Dear Roberts

On Saturday the Twentieth at half past Six, with very great pleasure.

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

David Roberts Esquire

To FRANCESCO BERGER,[†1] [10 JANUARY 1855]

Extract in Boesen catalogue, No. 162; MS 2 pp.; dated Tavistock House, 1855, also mention in American Book Prices Current, 1902, dated 10 Jan 55. Date: the reference to Charley clearly links this to Ryland's visit, 10 Jan 55 (see To Ryland, 5 Jan).

I hope the opportunity you desire[†2] will present itself naturally before long. I cannot make an express appointment for the purpose just now, as I am quite uncertain whether I may not be called out tomorrow or next day with Charles, on the business of placing him in some house of business.

To THOMAS CONSTABLE,[†3] 10 JANUARY 1855*

MS Winifred A. Myers (Autographs) Ltd.

Tavistock House, London | Tenth January 1855

Dear Sir

Many demands upon my time and several short absences from London have combined to delay my acknowledging the receipt of your letter and its accompanying volumes,[†4] until now. Let me beg you therefore to excuse these tardy thanks.

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Constable Esquire

To MISS MARIA GOODLUCK, 10 JANUARY 1855

MS Mr Arnold Palmer.

Tavistock House | Tenth January 1855

Dear Madam.

Allow me to have the pleasure of enclosing a small subscription towards the charges of your little Volume.[†5] It is a charming book, admirably calculated to do good to the readers whom it addresses.

I am sorry to add, that I cannot advise you on the point you submit to me. It falls within your publisher's province,[†1] and he is likely to understand it far better than I do.

Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Maria [Goodluck][†2]

To FRANCIS VALCKENBERG,[†3] 10 JANUARY 1855*

MS Mr P. J. Valckenberg.

Tavistock House | Tenth January 1855

Dear Sir

I beg to offer you my sincere condolences on the loss of your good and amiable brother.[†4] Before I received your kind letter, I had read the announcement of his death in the Times,[†5] with great regret.

I feel very sure that his orphan children could not easily be in better or truer hands than yours. May God assist and prosper you in the discharge of your trust, and make them a source of happiness to you in the time to come!

With heartfelt sympathy and all good wishes, Believe me

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Francis Valckenberg Esquire.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 10 JANUARY 1855

Mention in Stan V. Henkels catalogue, collection of Joseph Henry Dubbs; MS 2 pp.; dated 10 Jan 55.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 12 JANUARY 1855

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Holly Lodge | Highgate.

Tavistock House | Friday Twelfth January 1855

My Dear Miss Coutts.

On Wednesday Evening, Mr. Ryland of Birmingham came here, and we had a long and careful discussion as to Charley. He had made extensive enquiries in his town, and had no doubt of the feasibility of placing Charley in Scholefield's house—Scholefield[†6] being one of the present Members for Birmingham, and a very agreeable and worthy man, whom I know. But there appeared to be no doubt (and Mr. Ryland himself laid stress upon this, as another result of his enquiries), that the Birmingham business is not the business of a general merchant[†7]—is exceptional and peculiar—and belongs to that particular place; the Merchants who send Birmingham goods all over the world, living elsewhere, and trading on a large scale in all manner of other merchandize too. Now, what Charley most wants to acquire, is, a knowledge of general business—of home and foreign markets—and of home and foreign men. Whereas at Birmingham he would only gain a knowledge of Birmingham business, Birmingham ways, and Birmingham men. Mr. Wills, who has a good plain head in all such matters, assisted at the Council, and we all three came to the conclusion that it would be best to begin with a London house, and then (supposing no opening should present itself in the Turkey direction you spoke of—though I hope for such a thing), to give him a year or so in Liverpool as an active port where a vast deal of business is done. Wills was rather for beginning with Liverpool; but Mr. Ryland was strong on two points: first, on the advantage of beginning in London where the tone of commerce is higher and more responsible; secondly, on the great advantage of a youth's being at home, in the outset of his career. Wills has to go to Liverpool on another business next Monday, and I have begged him to see some people we know there, and take their opinion also.

I think I could address myself to no first-rate London Merchant's house, at so great an advantage as through some introduction of yours. Will you kindly think of it? I am very anxious not to lose time. I particularly wish to see Charley actually in the path he is to follow—though I will take care that he is not idle in the meantime. Indeed he wishes to be employed and is glad of my making employment for him.

I have appointed Mrs. Thompson[†1] (as we agreed) to be at Shepherd's Bush at ½ past 11 tomorrow.[†2] She wrote a very good letter in reply[†3]—very grateful, and, I cannot but think, very honest.

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To SAMUEL PHELPS, 12 JANUARY 1855*

MS Rosenbach Foundation.

Tavistock House | Twelfth January 1855

My Dear Mr. Phelps.

I have read the play[†4] through. I cannot say that I think the writing of it very good, or the plot very natural or probable. But there is a good deal of merit in it; it is decidedly interesting; would act (I think), better than it reads; and, unless I am much mistaken, would succeed with your audience.

In suggesting a slight change or two, I only suggest such changes as are easily made. The incident of the forgery, and the character of Hornbeam (which last I understand but dimly), I say nothing of, as I accept them perforce as inseparable from the constitution of the child.

But a prose play of this present time, must not evade the plain prose speaking of this time; and therefore, wheresoever there is an attempt to give the dialogue a removed and quaint turn, I advise you by all means to substitute the speech of the real men and women who will come to see the play. Strike out "'tis", and "'twere", and all roundabout inversions of plain sentences, with a ruthless hand. Why does the lady say, at the Portrait-painter's, "Come! Our veils!"? She is not in Spain or Italy. If she have any reason to be afraid of mentioning or shewing a bonnet, you have a decided reason to be afraid of the play altogether.

The Guildhall and all belonging to it, being very generally discovered not to be what they were in Richard Whittington's time,[†1] but to have degenerated into a Sham and a Humbug,[†2] I would be very chary of mentioning that highly respectable building—the more especially, because in the real life of this time, a man like Tyrrel would indubitably see it at the Devil before he would have any association with it. It is understood to mean Sir Peter Laurie,[†3] Mr. Ex Sheriff Nicol,[†4] My Lord Mayor Moon,[†5] and the like. For similar reasons, let "the citizens press to see" them and Richard the Third[†6]—not Tyrrel.

I would disembarrass the compact between Tyrrel and Lord Self, of that article respecting his altogether abandoning his daughter after her marriage. I take it to be an unnecessary remove into the regions of the Preposterous.

I would on no account call him Lord Self, but would give him a high-sounding Peerage-like name. In the opening of the third act when he starts at the word "lie" and tries to refine it away, an opening for a few words of good honest satire is lost, I think, by his not instancing Diplomacy as the genteelest example of what he means, and the brightest precedent he can possibly cite.

In the beginning of the Play, and all through it, I would say as little about signing a marriage-contract, as can be said with clearness. It is the most dreadful theatrical document I know; and is, I suppose, the oldest Stager on earth. I always give myself up for lost when it is mentioned, and I usually observe the audience about me to become desponding at the same awful moment.

With these touches I would bring the play out, boldly. And I believe the chances are ten to one that you will strike Home with it.

Always Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Samuel Phelps Esquire

To THE REV. MATTHEW GIBSON, 15 JANUARY 1855*

MS University of California, Los Angeles. Address: The Reverend M. Gibson | Rue de l'Oratoraie | Haute Ville | Boulogne Sur Mer.

Tavistock House, London | Fifteenth January 1855

My Dear Sir

My friend Mr. Egg the painter, Associate of the Royal Academy, has asked me to forward the enclosed letter to you. It refers, I believe, to a wish entertained by a brother of his,[†1] to place one of his sons under your charge.[†2] I lose no time in sending it on by the earliest post.

My Dear Sir | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Reverend M. Gibson

To JOHN DILLON,[†3] 19 JANUARY 1855

Text from N, II, 618.

Tavistock House | Nineteenth January 1855

Dear Sir

I am truly obliged to you for your kind note.

I would on no account bring you here, but shall be happy to call on you as you suggest.[†4] Not to name Monday (that you may have time to get the better of your distressing complaint), I will come to you on Wednesday morning at eleven o'clock, unless in the meantime you advise me to the contrary.

Dear Sir Faithfully Yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To WILKIE COLLINS, 20 JANUARY 1855*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Twentieth January 1855

My Dear Collins

Are you keeping your eye on the Marylebone Theatre?[†5] I am good for throwing myself on town, any night next week except Saturday.[†6] I should like to take the occasion of reviving the subject of a week or so in Paris.—About the middle of February?

Faithfully Ever

CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 21 JANUARY 1855

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Sunday Twenty First January | 1855.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

First, as to the hot Closet.[†1]

It happens that Mr. Tracey's being worn out,[†2] a new man is now erecting a new successor to it. This man is ingenious in his trade, and his name and style are William Jeakes,[†3] of 51 Great Russell Street Bloomsbury. He never has made such a thing to be carried away and put together, but he is positively sure he can. He thinks it should be 6 feet square, and 7 high, made of iron with an outside covering of wood. He would propose to attach a copper to it for the boiling of water with which to wash on the spot where the apparatus for drying would be. The water in this copper would be always kept hot by what would otherwise be the waste heat of the closet. He would undertake that twenty five minutes should effectually dry the whole of the closet's contents, so that it might be filled with wet clothes, bandages &c, every five and twenty minutes during the day. He would number all the pieces and component parts, "so that any one who could put a gun-carriage together, could put this machine together with perfect ease". (This, in answer to my enquiry whether it would be necessary to send a man out with it). It would be an expensive thing to make in this way—he supposes at a round guess it might cost a hundred and fifty pounds—it could be got ready in three weeks. A drawing, specification, and contract, would be of course prepared if you were to pursue the idea. And in that case I would see my very intelligent Turkish friend[†4] immediately—who knows this Country quite as well as he knows that, and is intimate with our best officers. He also knows Scutari[†5] very well.

Secondly, Mr. Hardwick wrote to me the other day from Marlborough Street,[†1] about a girl[†2] (whom he had committed for seven days as a disorderly, but about whom the Police seemed to have been hasty and mistaken, it afterwards appeared), whom he was so anxious to get into the Home that he was supporting her in the meanwhile at the Jailer's house,[†3] out of the poorbox. The Jailer brought her here, by my appointment. I was not so propitiated by her manner as Mr. Hardwick was, and requested that the account she gave of herself should be closely enquired into. It turning out to be true when this was done, I did not feel justified in objecting to her; and Mrs. Marchmont will fetch her, next Wednesday.

Thirdly, I have made some further enquiries as to Charley, and am assured that he should decidedly learn what he has to learn, in London. Barings,[†4] I am assured, would be the best house for him; but, to obtain him the full advantages derivable from his being instructed in all its departments, Mr. Bates[†5] or Mr. Russell Sturges[†6] (the two principal and most active partners), must be personally interested in him. Do you know either of these gentlemen? If you could introduce me to either of them, I would strike straightway. As a public personage, I should not particularly mind addressing either of them on the strength of their public knowledge of me; but of course I would rather have the advantage of such a presentation to them. I am delighted to tell you that Charley has quite surprised me at the Household Words, where he appears every morning at 10. He writes an excellent business letter, with a system and clearness that are really remarkable, and which, without experience, are quite a gift. Also in this last week, he has abstracted the contents of 600 letters, and made a note of the purport of each on the back—as I am pretty sure that not five boys in a hundred could. And he is naturally so quick that he confounds Mr. Wills, by knocking off what he calculates will occupy him a day, in two or three hours.

I have been over to Wimbledon and seen Mr. Brackenbury[†7] with whom Willy Latouche[†8] was. Walter is to go there next Wednesday Week for two years; and I have little fear of his passing the examination for the direct appointment[†9] as soon as he is old enough—which will be at the expiration of that time. (I don't think I ever saw boys more closely stowed than at that eminent Grinder's bye the bye).

I have no idea where you are, but I know you must be warm! The little foundlings[†1] had such red noses this morning, that it made one colder to look at them. Your friend the cold shower descended like a storm of frozen hail, previously, but I was certainly the warmest person in church.

We all unite in kind regards to Mr. and Mrs. Brown if they are with you. I don't know whether you observe that it becomes clearer from day to day, that the Times are distinctly making out their case as to the condition of the Army.[†2] It is also lamentable to see (from their opponents who would by no means confirm them if they could help it, but are now forced to do so) that the winter-clothing sent out with so much blowing of trumpets, is absurdly inefficient.[†3]

Dear Miss Coutts | Ever Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

Miss Burdett Coutts

To MARK LEMON, 22 JANUARY 1855

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

Tavistock House | Twenty Second January 1855

My Dear Mark.

I have a three weeks old engagement for next Saturday, to go and see a Pantomime[†1] with Lord Smith (as I believe they call him in Switzerland). The faithful Stanny has rushed to the rescue and will go too—having been maddened by accounts that have reached him of mechanical wonders at the Britannia. Will you go too? Place of meeting, Garrick. Time of dinner (I will order something) a quarter past five. You clearly must go, whatever else you may have in contemplation. Will you undertake to write to Lane?[†2]

Ever affecy.

CD.

I don't congratulate you on the Baby,[†3] because I can't bear to be congratulated on my own Babies.

To JOHN DILLON,[†4] [?22 JANUARY 1855]

Envelope in album, Sotheby's catalogue, Oct 1978; addressed John Dillon Esquire | 104 Fore Street | Cripplegate; postmarked PM [ ] 2 1855. Date: first part of postmark illegible; probably Jan: see below.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 25 JANUARY 1855

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | The Admiralty House | Portsmouth.

Tavistock House | Thursday Night | Twenty Fifth January 1855

My Dear Miss Coutts.

Your letter having come in while I was reading by my fire, I have shut up my book, to come to my table and answer it at once.

I am told there cannot possibly be a better person for our purpose than Mr. Bates. If you will send me a letter to him (with his address[†5] upon it), mentioning that I wish to place my son who has been at Eton and in Germany, in their universally respected house, I will lose not a moment in leaving it for him with my card. And, since you so kindly mention the point, I have no doubt that a line (I should be inclined to say, at once) from yourself to Baring, would be of incalculable service. I have not the least doubt of that.

The drying apparatus, I will immediately proceed with—cautiously. And I will in the first place signify to the Artist that a distinct specification and contract are essential to any further consideration of the subject. I am quite of your opinion as to the expediency of sending a workman with it. Let me add that Tracey's opinion on all such points is an undoubtedly good one, and he says "he does not believe it to be possible to send to Scutari, a more thoroughly serviceable thing".

In the main, there is very little difference (if any) between you "politically" on the War subject, and me politically. I think Lord Raglan's position, tongue-tied as he is, a very painful one;[†1] but I think the stern necessity of preventing a repetition of these dreadful—and altogether needless—disasters, over-rides every other consideration. To be sure—that does not justify the Times in being hard on himself,[†2] but the reverse! Looking to the other newspaper correspondents, and seeing them at last forced upon confirmation of the Times accounts after so long denying them, I have a dreadful belief that the Army will be really (virtually) no more in another six weeks. I become particularly uneasy when I find the Public so apathetic to the inefficiency of the Government.[†3] It is a new and unhealthy symptom—the kind of unnatural lull that precedes an earthquake—and I mistrust there being something sullen working among the people, which we don't at all understand. It is manifest that the system of our Service anywhere, civil or warlike, is not to rally the best men round the national standard, or to know where to find them;[†4] and there is no safety for us until we do begin to cruize about in the Victoria and Albert,[†5] far out of the official cordons[†6] in which we are all in danger of perishing together. I have made up my mind that what one can do in print to wake the sleepers, one is bound to do at such a serious juncture. And I have fired off a small volley of red hot shot, in Household Words next week.[†1]

Enclosed, are all the Mrs. Thompson papers that I have: including two notes from herself[†2] which you have not seen.

As to the good old Admiral,[†3] what he has got to do, is the most difficult thing he (or any Napier) can be required to do—keep quiet.[†4] I don't think there is any disposition in the public mind to do him an injustice,[†5] but quite the contrary. There has been a slight re-action occasioned by the injudicious friends he had before he went away;[†6] but I believe there is a great general fondness for him and trust in him. I should like to see and hear him, very much.

I have been ploughing daily, through deep Snow about Highgate, Hampstead, and Hendon—and saw Holly Lodge the day before yesterday with a powdered[†7] head, and a great white fur-cloak on. The condition of the streets to day, is inconceivable—mud and mire, in many places a foot deep. Mr. Stanfield and I were going down Wellington Street North, the other night, in his little Carriage, on one of our Theatrical Expeditions[†8] to undiscovered Theatres,[†9] when I took occasion to protest against the infamous paving there, and the jobbing little local boards,[†10] and to say that so many horses fell down opposite Household Words that I hardly ever saw the office door without a horse in it. He laughed at this, and next moment both our horses plunged head-foremost at that establishment, like impatient contributors. The crowd seemed to think it was our doing, and, when we got out to help, said "they should have thought we were hearty enough to walk."

[†a]We unite in remembrances to Mr. and Mrs. Brown. I feel a certain equanimity in your being at my birthplace,[†11] though I can't say I usually care much about it. I was taken away from there when I was two years old and went back when I was thirty; but I had certainly carried a little picture of it, wonderfully accurate, away with me, and knew a particular Parade-ground[†1] (my nurse must have been fond of soldiers) minutely. This reminds me to observe that the intelligence of the Baby is becoming miraculous.

Dear Miss Coutts | Ever Most Faithfully Yrs.

CD.[†a]

To ARCHIBALD DALRYMPLE,[†2] 27 JANUARY 1855*

MS Chicago University Library.

Tavistock House | Twenty Seventh January 1855

My dear Sir

It is the same Mr. Forster, one and indivisible.[†3]

I beg to be cordially remembered to Mrs. Dalrymple,[†4] and also to assure you that your note required no apology.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Archibald Dalrymple Esquire

To MRS GASKELL, 27 JANUARY 1855

MS John Rylands Library. Address: Mrs. Gaskell | Plymouth Grove | Manchester.

Tavistock House | Twenty Seventh January 1855

My Dear Mrs. Gaskell.

Let me congratulate you on the conclusion of your story;[†5] not because it is the end of a task to which you had conceived a dislike (for I imagine you to have got the better of that delusion by this time), but because it is the vigorous and powerful accomplishment of an anxious labor.[†6] It seems to me that you have felt the ground thoroughly firm under your feet, and have strided on with a force and purpose that MUST now give you pleasure.[†7]

You will not, I hope, allow that not-lucid interval of dissatisfaction with yourself (and me?) which beset you for a minute or two once upon a time, to linger in the shape of any disagreeable association with Household Words. I shall still look forward to the large sides of paper, and shall soon feel disappointed if they don't begin to reappear.[†1]

I thought it best that Wills should write the business-letter[†2] on the conclusion of the story, as that part of our communication had always previously rested with him.[†3] I trust you found it satisfactory? I refer to it, not as a matter of mere form, but because I sincerely wish everything between us to be beyond the possibility of misunderstanding or reservation.

Dear Mrs. Gaskell | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Gaskell.

To THE DEAN OF PETERBOROUGH,†4 29 JANUARY 1855*

MS Mr A. O. Davis. Address: The Very Rev. | The Dean | Peterborough.

Tavistock House, London | Monday Twenty Ninth January | 1855.

My Dear Sir

I feel particularly obliged to you for your earnest letter. Allow me to assure you that it has afforded me great gratification, and that I now look forward with a new interest to my visit to Peterboro'.†5

If I should decline your hospitable and most agreeable invitation when we renew our correspondence in the Autumn, it will only be because I rarely travel alone on such occasions, and almost invariably appoint some friend to join me at the local Hotel. Two or three Volunteers already propose to be of my audience next Christmas, and I shall probably shorten even my short stay by going round to Rockingham. But I do not the less appreciate your kindness, I entreat you to believe.

My Dear Sir | Yours faithfully and obliged
CHARLES DICKENS

The Very Reverend | The Dean.

To ARTHUR RYLAND, 29 JANUARY 1855

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Tavistock House | Monday Twenty Ninth January | 1855

My Dear Mr. Ryland

I have been in the greatest difficulty—which I am not yet out of—to know what to read at Birmingham. I fear the idea of next month is now impracticable. Which of two other months do you think would be preferable for your Birmingham objects? Next May, or next December?†6

Having already read two Christmas books at Birmingham,†1 I should like to get out of that restriction, and have a swim in the broader waters of one of my long books. I have been poring over Copperfield (which is my favorite), with the idea of getting a reading out of it, to be called by some such name as "Young Housekeeping, and Little Emily". But there is still the huge difficulty that I constructed the whole with immense pains, and have so woven it up and blended it together that I cannot yet so separate the parts as to tell the story of David's married life with Dora, and the story of Mr. Peggotty's search for his Niece, within the time. This is my object. If I could possibly bring it to bear, it would make a very attractive reading, with a strong interest in it, and a certain completness.[†2]

This is exactly the state of the case. I don't mind confiding to you that I never can approach the book with perfect composure (it had such possession of me when I wrote it), and that I no sooner begin to try to get it into this form, than I begin to read it all and to feel that I can't disturb it. I have not been unmindful of the agreement we made at parting, and I have sat staring at the backs of my books for an inspiration. This project is the only one that I have constantly reverted to, and yet I have made no progress in it!

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

Arthur Ryland Esquire.

To THOMAS BEARD, 30 JANUARY 1855

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | 42 Portman Place | Edgeware Road.

Tavistock House | Thirtieth January 1855.

My Dear Beard.

Wednesday the Seventh of February is the Birthday of that illustrious creature who &c &c &c.

You remember our keeping it in a jolly sort of way, at Gravesend last year? Will you come and do likewise, this year? I shall order The festive Banquet to be spread at 5, but propose to go down for a walk (accompanied by a dry pair of boots), by North Kent Train from London Bridge at 12 at Noon.

Ever Faithfully
CD.

Thomas Beard Esquire.

To WILKIE COLLINS, 30 JANUARY 1855*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Thirtieth January 1855.

My Dear Collins

Don't forget Wednesday in next week—Seventh of February—Birthday of that illustrious Englishman whose creations—&c. &c.

Festive Banquet ordered to be spread at Wate's, Gravesend, at 5 to the moment.

Ever Faithfully
CD.

To DOUGLAS JERROLD, 30 JANUARY 1855*

MS Mr Douglas Jerrold.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Thirtieth January 1855.

My Dear Jerrold.

On a birthday of mine now weceding (as poor dear Talfourd would have said), into the hoawy mists of a gwacious past, we dined together at Rochester—and next morning had that interview in the Snow with the Beastly old Warder of the Castle, which will always perplex my mind. Last year, I improvised a little dinner on the same National occasion at Wate's Hotel at Gravesend, which was very snug and very merry. Wednesday in next week, the 7th. of February, is the anniversary day. Will you come and dine at the said Wate's at the said Gravesend, at exactly five o'Clock? I shall be about the neighbourhood in my Seven League Boots all day, and you will find a good fire (and somebody by it, I have no doubt) at any period of the afternoon.[†1]

Ever Faithfully

CD.

Douglas Jerrold Esquire.

To MARK LEMON, 30 JANUARY 1855

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Tavistock House | Thirtieth January 1855.

My Dear Mark

Next Wednesday—I mean February the Seventh—is my Birthday. If you can alter your Punch day[†2] for the occasion, come down to Gravesend as we did last year. I shall order dinner at 5, but propose to go down for a walk (with a bag), by North Kent train from London Bridge at 12.

Ever affecy.

CD.

To MARK LEMON, [30 JANUARY 1855]*

MS John F. Fleming, Inc. Date: clearly same day as last.

My Dear Mark

I wrote to you this morning, to say we start from the North Kent Station at London Bridge, at 12. I have ordered dinners (for 4)[†1] at Wate's at Gravesend at 5.

—Dressing to go out

Ever affecy

CD

To JOHN EVERETT MILLAIS,[†2] [30] JANUARY 1855

Text from J. G. Millais, The Life and Letters of Sir John Everett Millais, 1899, I, 249. Date: J. G. Millais gives 13 Jan, but the meeting referred to took place on 29 Jan.

Tavistock House | Tuesday, January 13th, 1855.

My Dear Sir,

I send you the account of the fire brigade,[†3] which we spoke of last night.[†4]

If you have in your mind any previous association with the pages in which it appears (very likely you have none) it may be a rather disagreeable one.[†5] In that case I hope a word frankly said may make it pleasanter.

Objecting very strongly to what I believe to be an unworthy use of your great powers, I once expressed the objection in this same journal. My opinion on that point is not in the least changed, but it has never dashed my admiration of your progress in what I suppose are higher and better things. In short, you have given me such great reasons (in your works) to separate you from uncongenial associations, that I wish to give you in return one little reason for doing the like by me. And hence this note.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MARK LEMON, 30 JANUARY 1855*

MS Private.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Night, Thirtieth January | 1855.

My Dear Mark. I am alone with a cold, and upon my word nothing would be more pleasant to me than a game of Cribbage with you. So come on Macduff—[†1]

Ever affectly.
CD

To LEIGH HUNT, 31 JANUARY 1855

MS British Library. Address: Leigh Hunt Esquire | 7 Cornwall Road | Hammersmith.

Tavistock House | Wednesday Night Thirty First January | 1855.

My Dear Hunt.

I will not let another month go out, without writing you a few words. I thought to have made application to your teapot long since, and in so doing to have answered your note in the only legitimate way; but, I have been so put about, and railroaded, and expressed, and business-pressed, since the day of its date, that my life has been a perfect whirl.

At Christmas-time I generally do what little I can to help some useful educational Institutions for the people in large towns. Redeeming Autumn promises, I have been, since we met, in Berkshire, Dorsetshire, and Yorkshire. In the intervals and snatches of these expeditions, I have had all my children at home for the holidays—have been to Pantomimes—and have got up our Annual Fairy Play at home, in which we all "go on" down to the Baby. My eldest boy, newly home from Germany, has required a good deal of my attention, as he has to be armed against the Demon Idleness and started in busy life. For my second boy, destined for India, I have had to find a new probationary tutor.[†2] He has only this very day departed from the parental roof, with a plum cake, a box of marmalade, a ditto of jam, twelve oranges, five shillings, and a gross of tears. I sit down to night (with the Influenza), and am going to Paris next week!—I don't mention such trifles as that great humming-top Household Words, which is always going round with the weeks and murmuring "Attend to me!" Or a committee on which Forster and I are now engaged with matters of considerable importance to Literary Men[†3]—but I do honestly assure you that I have been busy.

I expect to make a stay in Paris of not more than ten days or a fortnight, and I hope when I come back to shake hands with you speedily.

You have read Brewster and Whewell?[†4] (Don't send them back—I will fetch them). I thought it curious, both being so learned and ingenious, that they should dismiss one, after all, pretty much as they found one.

A Genoese friend of mine[†5] has just sent me a great tin tube, full of prints of brave incidents in the Piedmontese War of Independence against the Austrians.[†1] I have as strange a sensation in seeing these signs of Spirit and Freedom in those drowsy old towns, as I had some fifteen months ago when I went back to Genoa, and found it a stirring busy place, with miles of new Parisian-looking streets staring boldly at the Strada Nuova and the Strada Balbi—a soldierly Municipal Guard on duty at the Municipal Hall—and a Band playing National airs on the Terrace-Garden of a Coffee-House which, when I had last been there, was the great Seminary of the Jesuits.[†2] There was a Rat in the courtyard of the empty house once the Governor's (a Russian in my time), at Albaro;[†3] and there were cheap newspapers in the streets, and the People were talking Politics!

Always Faithfully Yours

C. D.

Leigh Hunt Esquire

February

To PETER CUNNINGHAM, 1 FEBRUARY 1855

MS Dickens House.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS,
Thursday First February 1855

My Dear Cunningham

Next Wednesday is my Birthday again. So the years go round! Will you repeat the little party of last year on the same day, at Wate's at Gravesend? Dinner hour, 5 to the moment.

Ever Faithfully Yours

CD.

To MRS GASKELL, 1 FEBRUARY 1855

MS John Rylands Library.

Tavistock House | Thursday First February 1855.

My Dear Mrs. Gaskell.

Your letter places me in a helpless position.[†4] I have no choice left me by you, but to receive it as though I had nothing to do with Household Words. I consider myself bound by your request, and I shall faithfully observe it unless you release me.

If you do release me, I shall direct a cheque for another £50 to be forwarded to you. Nothing else will take place at the Household Words office, and the cheque will be sent as a matter of course, and so disposed of. If you do not release me from the obligation of silence, I can do nothing. I think you should know (it may make you less reluctant to let me stir), that I suggested the sum already sent, myself, and that the draft was drawn at my direction. If the Publishers of Household Words had published the book, I should have known all the points of the case.[†1] Knowing them now from you, I may be by no means sure that Mr. Chapman takes the right course with the book.[†2]

Mrs. Dickens shall be duly instructed about the Child-Garden,[†3] and will see it, I am sure, with pleasure and interest. There was a certain Baroness[†4] here the other day, who was strongly interested in some such system. She was a German Baroness, and lived (I suppose) in a Castle somewhere—to which stronghold she has returned.

Chorley[†5] was kind enough to ask me to meet you on Friday next week.[†6] But I am going to Paris for a few days, and was obliged to decline his agreeable invitation, in the belief that I may probably go that very evening.

Dear Mrs. Gaskell | Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

To WILKIE COLLINS, 3 FEBRUARY 1855*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Saturday Third February 1855

My Dear Collins

On looking to Bradshaw, I find that if we go by Boulogne, Sunday the 11th. will suit us admirably. We shall leave London Bridge at a quarter to 11 in the forenoon—cross at a quarter to 3—and get to Boulogne about 5. We can then have my two small sons[†1] to dinner at the Hotel des Bains, and go on to Paris at ½ past 12 on Monday.

This seems easy I think?—I write to Regnier to day.

Faithfully Ever

CD.

To MRS GASKELL, 3 FEBRUARY 1855*

MS Houghton Library, Harvard.

Tavistock House | Third February 1855

My Dear Mrs. Gaskell

All that I meant to suggest was, that, when you judge of what your story ought to have yielded to you, by putting two payments together—one, Mr. Chapman's, and one Household Words[†2]—it may be necessary to consider both sides of the question, and not only to enquire whether Household Words does well, but whether Mr. Chapman does well too. In the words you quote about Bradbury and Evans as publishers,[†3] I quite concur; and I perfectly remembered the tenor of the enclosed from Mr. Wills[†4] before I re-read it this morning.

Now, do allow me to say at the office, "Send Fifty Pounds to Mrs. Gaskell". No word of explanation is necessary there, and it is thoroughly well known to all concerned that such points end with me. Let me assume this—which will prevent a renewal of the subject between you and me;—On Wednesday next, you not forbidding me in the meantime, I shall give those instructions, and neither you nor I need notice them in the least.[†5]

When you come to town, will you send me in one line, your address.[†6] If I am not gone, I will call on you directly. If I am gone, I will arrange for your note being opened, and my Paris address (which I don't know yet), being sent you. Then perhaps, when you arrive on the other side of the water, you will let me know where to find you.

If the weather is as cold at Manchester as it is here, it is Polar. Everybody is miserable besides about the Crimea. I have an old belief that our Political Aristocracy will ruin this land at last, and altogether London looks gloomy.

My Dear Mrs. Gaskell | Very faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To MARK LEMON, 3 FEBRUARY 1855

MS Benoliel Collection.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS,
Saturday Eveg.[†1] 3rd. February 1855

My Dear Mark

At the Committee,[†2] I found Stanny, who (of course) seduced me away from my home, and with which hoary ruffian I am going to dine at the G.[†3] at 5. He is bent on your joining us on a theatrical excursion; "Tom"[†4] being in attendance. Send me a word up by Bearer, to say that you will join the old Salt, and the undersigned Genial Oil.[†5]

Ever affecy.

CD.

To FRANÇOIS REGNIER, 3 FEBRUARY 1855

MS Comédie Française.

Tavistock House, London | Saturday Evening Third February | 1855

My Dear Regnier

I am coming to Paris for a week, with my friend Collins—son of the English Painter who painted our green lanes and our cottage-children so beautifully.[†6] Do not tell this to le vieux Poole. Unless I have the ill-fortune to stumble against him in the street, I shall not make my arrival known to him.

I purpose leaving here on Sunday the 11th. but I shall stay that night at Boulogne, to see two of my little boys who are at school there. We shall come on to Paris on Monday the 12th. arriving there in the evening.

Now mon cher, do you think you can, without inconvenience, engage me, for a week, an apartment—cheerful, light, and wholesome—containing a comfortable salon et deux chambres à coucher. I do not care whether it is in an Hotel or not; but the reason why I do not write for an apartment to the Hotel Brighton,[†7] is, that there they expect one to dine at home (I mean, in the apartment) generally, whereas as we are coming to Paris expressly to be always looking about us, we want to dine wherever we like, every day. Consequently, what we want to find, is, a good Apartment, where we can have our breakfast but where we shall never dine.[†8]

Can you engage such accommodation for me? If you can, I shall be very much obliged to you. If the apartment should happen to contain a little bed for a servant I might perhaps bring one; but I do not care about that at all. I want it to be pleasant and gay, and to throw myself en garçon on the festive diableries[†1] de Paris!

Mrs. Dickens and her sister send their kindest regards to Madame Regnier and you, in which I heartily join. All the children send their loves to the two brave boys[†2] and the Normandy Bonnes.

I shall hope for a short answer from you, one day next week.

My Dear Regnier | Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [3 AND ?4 FEBRUARY 1855]

Extracts and summary in F, XI, iii, 826 and F, VIII, ii, 638. Date: first extract 3 Feb 55, according to Forster; second extract probably 4 Feb, an exceptionally foggy day.

The break-down in the Crimea embittered his radicalism. I am hourly strengthened in my old belief, that our political aristocracy and our tuft-hunting are the death of England. In all this business I don't see a gleam of hope.[†3] As to the popular spirit, it has come to be so entirely separated from the Parliament and Government, and so perfectly apathetic about them both, that I seriously think it a most portentous sign.

You will hear of me in Paris, probably next Sunday, and I may go on to Bordeaux. Have general ideas of emigrating in the summer to the mountain-ground between France and Spain. Am altogether in a dishevelled state of mind—motes of new books in the dirty air, miseries of older growth threatening to close upon me. Why is it, that as with poor David, a sense comes always crushing on me now, when I fall into low spirits, as of one happiness I have missed in life, and one friend and companion I have never made?[†4]

To ARTHUR RYLAND, 4 FEBRUARY 1855*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Sunday Fourth February 1855

My Dear Mr. Ryland

I have established a very large pencil, and an extra copy of Copperfield, and have blunted my feelings, and will try what I can do, in earnest—steadily keeping in mind your comforting suggestion that the audience in general may be not unreasonably supposed to know the current of the tale.

Only this very day (which is so intensely foggy here, that it is like night), I have had a long talk with Mr. Bates, of Barings House, about Charley. I assure you that with the mere removal of the scene from Birmingham to London, he told me most emphatically as the result of his own experience and success, all that you told us here, as to failure being the result of want of practical knowledge, beginning at the very beginning and extending through a multitude of details. His confirmation was quite remarkable in the closeness with which it tallied with your advice.

Pending a decision, I keep Charley tolerably employed at the Household Words office, where I find him very quick, with a natural facility of writing systematic and terse letters, and with a considerable power (unusual at his age), of abstracting the pith of any document from a mass of words. In reference to a commercial life, I have again impressed upon him what he had already stored up from you, and entreated him to take time to be quite sure, of himself, and of his ability to enter with lasting interest—real interest—into the necessary details; warning him that unless he makes sure of that beforehand, we shall only end in disappointment and loss of precious time.

He is very much interested by your kind invitation, and particularly wishes to accept it for a few days. He seems to think that those busy sights, which are quite new to him, would be very useful to his mind just now. I am quite of his way of thinking; and if you will give the signal when he shall come, he will very thankfully obey the same. I am going to Paris, myself, about this day week, and he might leave home at about the same time. Would Monday The twelfth or any time thereabout, suit you? If you will fix a day at your own convenience, I will accept your kind proposal with many thanks, both on my own part and on his.

Best regards from Mrs. Dickens and her sister.

My Dear Mr. Ryland | always Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Arthur Ryland Esquire

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 6 FEBRUARY [1855]

MS Morgan Library. Date: Misdated 1854 by CD; clearly 1855.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Sixth February 1854

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I have instructed the maker, since the receipt of your letter this morning, to proceed with the warming—I mean drying—apparatus. The mysterious pattern on the back of the drawing has nothing to do with it, I suppose.

If I may advise, I would by no means get Mr. Manby to look at the thing until it is completed. I know him very well indeed, and he is an ingenious fellow; but the moment this man[†1] receives a suggestion, however slight, the responsibility is divided and you give him a something to escape upon in case anything should go wrong. It being his trade to make such things, and he having been just now selected for such work at Tracey's great prison, I would leave him alone—if it were my case—until he has done his work.

Charley seems to be a more difficult matter than one would suppose. On Sunday I saw Mr. Bates, and had a long talk with him, in which he was extremely sensible and straight-forward. He said, in confidence, that Barings' House is now full of young men—gentlemen's sons—whom he does not even know by name. That it is impossible in such a place to teach them business—that they chiefly copy letters, and the like—and that they go away as wise as they come. That nine failures out of ten, among merchants, take place because they don't know their business; and that very few do know it, and therefore very few thrive. That the only real education would be to begin at a Broker's in Mincing Lane[†2]—know sugars, coffees, drugs, cottons, all manner of things, by sight and touch—then pass through a counting house (after perhaps a couple of years) which would be very easily done, and then be fit for anything. All this and a good deal more, he wound up by saying that he did not believe he himself possessed any remarkable qualities, and that he referred his own success, mainly to his having been one of the few who did all this.

It is remarkable that, as to the Birmingham business, my Birmingham friend Mr. Ryland had said so exactly the same, here, that I could have believed the two people had heard each other, and that the second was copying the first.

Yesterday I received a letter from the managing Partner in that other highly commended house of Huth and Co.[†3] in which he says that it would give him the greatest satisfaction to do anything for a gentleman &c whose writings &c—but adds that he really believes their house is "too large" to be really serviceable to my son—again offering exactly similar advice to Mr. Bates's.

In the meantime I am becoming gradually idiotic on the subject. Pending Mr. Bates's speaking to some Broker, I have pointed out to Charley the kind of drudgery essential to the calling (but without saying that I think it will scarcely call into action the best sort of power he possesses—though I have a misgiving on that head), and have told him to think again and be certain he is still in earnest. Early next week, he is going down to stay with Mr. Ryland for a few days, and see the Birmingham Lions. Such things being quite new to him, we think may be useful in helping him to a decision.

I am going to Paris on Saturday or Sunday, and perhaps on to Bourdeaux[†4]—having motes of new stories floating before my eyes in the dirty air, which seem to drive somewhere in that direction.[†5] I shall not be above a week or ten days gone.

Can I do anything for you with your friend on the ricketty throne,[†1] or anywhere else?

The latest joke is, that it is very bad weather for the Ministry to be out in. Considering the thaw, and the knee-deep slush in the streets, it is meritorious enough.[†2]

With kindest regards to Mr. and Mrs. Brown

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

To WILLIAM JEAKES, [7 FEBRUARY 1855]

Mention in Jeakes to CD, 8 Feb 55 (MS Morgan Library). Date: the day before that letter.

About the construction of the Drying Closet for Scutari Hospital.

To WILKIE COLLINS, 8 FEBRUARY 1855*

MS Morgan Library.

Hotel Tavistock | Jeudi Fevrier 8, 1855

Mon cher Collins

Voici la reponse de notre ami Regnier. J'ai repliqué "je prendrai donc, mon cher, l'appartement au troisième."[†3] C'est la meilleure chose que l'on peut faire sous les circonstances, n'est-ce-pas?

Votre fidele
DICKENS

To ROBERT FERGUSON,[†4] 8 FEBRUARY 1855

MS Wordsworth Trust.

Tavistock House, London | Eighth February 1855

Dear Sir

I beg to assure you in reply to your letter that I have not the least intention of visiting Durham, and that my avocations and engagements render it impossible that I can have the pleasure of complying with the request you do me the honor to prefer on behalf of the Carlisle Mechanics Institution.

I am Dear Sir | Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

Robert Ferguson Esquire

To JOHN HARDWICK, 8 FEBRUARY 1855*

MS Mr P. J. Radford. Address: John Hardwick Esquire | Ulster Terrace | Regents Park.

Tavistock House | Eighth February 1855.

My Dear Hardwick.

Our ladies have great apprehensions that Susan Mayne[†1] is in the family way. On the other hand, our usual medical attendant at the Home is rather of the contrary opinion. A fortnight or so will probably decide the question; but if she should be in this state, it will be necessary for her to be taken away as soon as the fact is ascertained. In that case, I shall be obliged (most reluctantly) to turn her upon your hands again. As the matter would necessarily be painful to Miss Coutts, and Mrs. Marchmont the lady who superintends the Home is naturally uneasy about it, I have directed her, if her misgivings should be confirmed, to write to Mr. Welsh and ask him to remove the unfortunate object of your sympathy. If she should not be in the family-way after all (which I earnestly hope she may not be), then Welsh will hear nothing and need do nothing.

My Dear Hardwick | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Hardwick Esquire.

To FRANÇOIS REGNIER, 8 FEBRUARY 1855*

MS Comédie Française.

Tavistock House, London | Thursday Evening Eighth February | 1855

My Dear Regnier

Your kind letter arrives, just as I am going out to dinner.[†2] I lose no time in answering it, and thanking you heartily for the trouble you have taken on my account.

I will engage, if you please, the apartment au troisieme at the Hotel Meurice. I foresee that I shall be speedily invaded there by le vieux Poole; but I must bear my Fate.

We shall arrive, if the train is not lost in the Snow, on Monday evening about 7; and if you will kindly order dinner for two as well as the fires, it will be a great comfort to find such preparations made for the two cold Englishmen.

In haste | Ever My Dear Regnier | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 9 FEBRUARY 1855

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street.

Tavistock House | Ninth February 1855.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I enclose a letter I received last night from the drying-apparatus maker, which seems, in a plain practical way, to anticipate what you had had in your mind in thinking of Mr. Manby.[†1] I have written in reply that I shall be much interested in seeing the machine at work, and that I dare say you will go too.

Yesterday I was at Shepherds Bush, where Mr. Chesterton also made his way somehow, through the Snow. All was going on well, and Rhena Pollard was the subject of a specially good report. Mrs. Marchmont called my attention to the state of the carpets in her and Mrs. Macartney's rooms, and also of the matting in the long-room. They are all in rags, and very ill-looking. I told her to get an estimate from the shop we deal at, of the cost of some strong plain dutch bedroom carpeting,[†2] and also of a new piece of matting of the present tough quality.

The drying-room has been boarded, but Mr. Marchant[†3] has not yet sent the stove in. Now, I suggest that he should not send it in at all, as originally designed, but that the drying stove should be such a one as will heat the water for a common bath to be fixed beside it. Our round shallow baths are worn out; they are at the best, imperfect substitutes for a good bath; and, now that the place is boarded, a bath could be fixed in the corner, beside the stove, without being in anybody's way. With a cistern outside and the water laid on (very easily done), we should have that great aid to health and cleanliness at a small expence.

I enclose the list of bills for the month.[†4]

The actual departure of Goldsborough[†5] and Fisher has brightened up Campbell with hope, and has evidently had a good effect upon them all.

In the matter of Charley, I am heartily glad that you have heard from Mr. Bates, and I hope he will lead us out of the fog. Charley himself says that he is not in the least alarmed by the What-not[†6] Bales. He is very anxious to make a beginning. And so, indeed, is his father.

Supposing the Snow between Paris and the Interior to be not more than twenty feet deep, I hope to bring you some little Souvenir from the place of your old remembrance.[†7] My address in Paris will be the Hotel Meurice.

It snowed here, incessantly and heavily, the whole day yesterday. I returned from Shepherd's Bush, like Lot's Wife after she became the pillar of Salt.[†8] On Wednesday (my birthday) I walked from Gravesend to Rochester between walls of snow varying from three to six feet high, through which a road had been hewn out by men.[†9] Yesterday evening I went out at 7 O'Clock to dine with Cartwright (I always feel a strange satisfaction in doing at least that much to my own teeth in his house), and could hardly get out at my own door, or in at his.

Walter reports joyfully of his new school.

With kindest regards to Mr. and Mrs. Brown

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

To W. JEAKES, 9 FEBRUARY 1855*

MS Mrs N. Bell.

Tavistock House | Ninth February 1855.

Mr. Charles Dickens sends his compliments to Mr. Jeakes, and begs to say that he will feel much interested in seeing the drying machine at work when it is completed, and that he will propose to Miss Burdett Coutts to see it also.[†1]

Mr. Dickens is going to France, but purposes returning home within a fortnight from this time.

To MISS KING,[†2] 9 FEBRUARY 1855

Text from MDGH, III, 162.

Tavistock House | Friday Evening, Ninth February, 1855

My Dear Miss King

I wish to get over the disagreeable part of my letter in the beginning. I have great doubts of the possibility of publishing your story[†3] in portions.

But I think it possesses very great merit. My doubts arise partly from the nature of the interest which I fear requires presentation as a whole,[†4] and partly on your manner of relating the tale. The people do not sufficiently work out their own purposes in dialogue and dramatic action. You are too much their exponent; what you do for them, they ought to do for themselves. With reference to publication in detached portions (or, indeed, with a reference to the force of the story in any form), that long stoppage and going back to possess the reader with the antecedents of the clergyman's biography,[†5] are rather crippling. I may mention that I think the boy (the child of the second marriage) a little too "slangy."[†6] I know the kind of boyish slang which belongs to such a character in these times; but, considering his part in the story, I regard it as the author's function to elevate such a characteristic, and soften it into something more expressive of the ardour and flush of youth, and its romance. It seems to me, too, that the dialogues between the lady and the Italian maid are conventional but not natural.[†1] This observation I regard as particularly applying to the maid, and to the scene preceding the murder.[†2] Supposing the main objection surmountable, I would venture then to suggest to you the means of improvement in this respect.

The paper is so full of good touches of character, passion, and natural emotion, that I very much wish for a little time to reconsider it, and to try whether condensation here and there would enable us to get it say into four parts.[†3] I am not sanguine of this, for I observed the difficulties as I read it the night before last; but I am very unwilling, I assure you, to decline what has so much merit.

I am going to Paris on Sunday morning for ten days or so. I purpose being back again within a fortnight. If you will let me think of this matter in the meanwhile, I shall at least have done all I can to satisfy my own appreciation of your work.

But if, in the meantime, you should desire to have it back with any prospect of publishing it through other means, a letter—the shortest in the world—from you to Mr. Wills at the Household Words office will immediately produce it. I repeat with perfect sincerity that I am much impressed by its merits, and that if I had read it as the production of an entire stranger, I think it would have made exactly this effect upon me.

My dear Miss King, | Very faithfully yours

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To F. PHILLIPS,[†4] 9 FEBRUARY 1855*

MS Royal General Theatrical Fund.

Tavistock House | Friday February Ninth 1855

Sir

I have this morning received your letter of yesterday's date.

The Trustees of the General Theatrical Fund[†5] have no official voice or seat in the administrative Committee. They neither accept nor reject the Members of the Institution, and have no knowledge of their individual cases.[†6]

If I were disposed, on a perusal of your papers, to over-step my functions and ask the committee for their counter-explanation, it appears to me that you yourself would present a sufficient obstacle to my taking any such course. For I read in your statement that you have "placed the whole affair in a lawyer's hands," and that it has become the subject of "arbitration."[†1] I am neither lawyer nor arbitrator in the case, and am bound to assume that the lawyer has taken care that the arbitration shall be properly conducted.[†2]

I am Sir

&c.

Mr. F. Phillips.

To W. H. WILLS, 9 FEBRUARY 1855

MS Huntington Library.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS,
Friday Ninth February 1855

My Dear Wills.

I want to alter our arrangements tomorrow, and put you to some inconvenience.

When I was at Gravesend t'other day,[†3] I saw, at Gads Hill—just opposite to the Hermitage[†4] where your charmer Miss Lynn used to live[†5]—a little Freehold to be sold.[†6] The spot and the very house are literally "a dream of my childhood", and I should like to look at it before I go to Paris. With that purpose I must go to Strood[†7] by the North Kent at a ¼ past 10 tomorrow morning. And I want you, strongly booted, to go with me! (I have the particulars from the Agent.)[†8]

Can you?—Let me know. If you can, can you manage so that we can take the Proofs with us? If you can't, will you bring them to Tavistock House at dinner time tomorrow, ½ past 5. Forster will dine with us, but no one else.

I am uncertain of your being in town tonight, but I send John up with this.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To W. H. WILLS, [10 FEBRUARY 1855]

MS Huntington Library. Date: the day after last.

Tavistock House | Saturday Morning

My Dear Wills.

You will find a letter from me at the office when you come this morning, which I wrote on the chance of your being at home last night.

This present note, I beg to say, contains

THE LATEST INTELLIGENCE[†1]

I have resolved (the Snow considered) not to go to Gad's Hill to day, but to come to the office as we at first arranged. I will then speak to you about the little Freehold—perhaps ask you to look at it for me! Don't mention it to Charley. Ever Faithfully CD.

To MRS WINTER,[†2] 10 FEBRUARY 1855

MS Huntington Library.

Tavistock House | Saturday Tenth February 1855.

My Dear Mrs. Winter.

I constantly receive hundreds of letters, in great varieties of writing all perfectly strange to me, and (as you may suppose) have no particular interest in the faces of such general epistles. As I was reading by my fire last night, a handfull of notes was laid down on my table. I looked them over, and, recognizing the writing of no private friend, let them lie there, and went back to my book. But I found my mind curiously disturbed, and wandering away[†3] through so many years to such early times of my life, that I was quite perplexed to account for it. There was nothing in what I had been reading or immediately thinking about, to awaken such a train of thought, and at last it came into my head that it must have been suggested by something in the look of one of those letters. So I turned them over again,—and suddenly the remembrance of your hand, came upon me with an influence that I cannot express to you. Three or four and twenty years vanished like a dream,[†4] and I opened it with the touch of my young friend David Copperfield when he was in love.

There was something so busy and pleasant in your letter—so true and cheerful and frank and affectionate—that I read on with perfect delight until I came to your mention of your two little girls.[†1] In the unsettled state of my thoughts, the existence of these dear children appeared such a prodigious phaenomonon, that I was inclined to suspect myself of being out of my mind, until it occurred to me that perhaps I had nine children of my own! Then the three or four and twenty years began to rearrange themselves in a long procession between me and the changeless Past, and I could not help considering what strange stuff all our little stories are made of.

Believe me, you cannnot more tenderly remember our old days and our old friends than I do. I hardly ever go into the City, but I walk up an odd little court at the back of the Mansion House, and come out by the corner of Lombard Street. Hundreds of times as I have passed the church there[†2]—on my way to and from the Sea, the Continent, and where not[†3]—I invariably associate it with somebody (God knows who) having told me that poor Anne[†4] was buried there. If you would like to examine me in the name of a good-looking Cornish servant[†5] you used to have (I suppose she has twenty-nine great grandchildren now, and walks with a stick), you will find my knowledge on the point correct, though it was a monstrous name too. I forget nothing of those times. They are just as still and plain and clear, as if I had never been in a crowd since and I had never seen or heard my own name out of my own house. What should I be worth, or what would labour and success be worth, if it were otherwise!

Your letter is more touching to me from its good and gentle association with the state of Spring in which I was either much more wise or much more foolish than I am now—I never know which to think it—than I could tell you if I tried for a week. I will not try at all. I heartily respond to it, and shall be charmed to have a long talk with you, and most cordially glad to see you, after all this length of time.

I am going to Paris tomorrow morning, but I purpose being back within a fortnight. When I return, Mrs. Dickens will come to you, to arrange a day for our seeing you and Mr. Winter[†6] (to whom I beg to be remembered) quietly to dinner.[†7] We will have no intruder or foreign creature on any pretence whatever, in order that we may set in, without any restraint, for a tremendous gossip.

Mary Anne Leigh[†8] we saw at Broadstairs[†9] about fifty years ago. Mrs. Dickens and her sister, who read all the marriages in all the papers, shrieked to me when the announcement of hers appeared, what did I think of that?[†10] I calmly replied that I thought it was time. I should have been more excited if I had known of the old gentleman with seven thousand a year, uncountable grown up children, and no English grammar.

My mother has a strong objection to being considered in the least old,[†1] and usually appears here on Christmas Day in a juvenile cap which takes an immense time in the putting on. The Fates seem to have made up their minds that I shall never see your Father when he comes this way.[†2] David Lloyd[†3] is altogether an Imposter—not having in the least changed (that I could make out when I saw him at the London Tavern),[†4] since what I suppose to have been the year 1770 when I found you three on Cornhill with your poor mother,[†5] going to St. Mary Axe[†6] to order mysterious dresses—which afterwards turned out to be Wedding garments. That was in the remote period when you all wore green cloaks, cut (in my remembrance) very round, and which I am resolved to believe were made of Merino. I escorted you with native gallantry to the Dress Maker's door, and your mother, seized with an apprehension—groundless, upon my honor—that I might come in, said emphatically, "And now Mr. Dickin"—which she always used to call me—"we'll wish you good morning!"

When I was writing the word Paris just now, I remembered that my existence was once entirely uprooted and my whole Being blighted, by the Angel of my soul being sent there to finish her education![†7] If I can discharge any little commission for you or bring home anything for the darlings whom

I cannot yet believe to be anything but a delusion of yours, pray employ me. I shall be at the Hotel Meurice—locked up when within, as my only defence against my country and the United States—but a most punctual and reliable functionary if you will give me any employment.

My Dear Mrs. Winter I have been much moved by your letter; and the pleasure it has given me has some little sorrowful ingredient in it. In the strife and struggle of this great world where most of us lose each other so strangely, it is impossible to be spoken to out of the old times without a softened emotion. You so belong to the days when the qualities that have done me most good since, were growing in my boyish heart that I cannot end my answer to you lightly. The associations my memory has with you, make your letter more—I want a word—invest it with a more immediate address to me—than such a letter could have from anybody else. Mr. Winter will not mind that. We are all sailing away to the sea, and have a pleasure in thinking of the river we are upon, when it was very narrow and little. Faithfully Your friend

CHARLES DICKENS

To SIR JOSEPH OLLIFFE,[†1] 13 FEBRUARY 1855*

MS Fitzwilliam Museum.

Hôtel Meurice, Paris | Tuesday Thirteenth February | 1855

My Dear Olliffe

I came to Paris last night, on my way to Bordeaux where a little business takes me. Mr. [Wilkie Collins][†2] the writer, who is my travelling companion, has a misgiving that he wants "advice". I am sure he does; and I therefore write this to leave when I call upon you, in case you should not be at home, to ask you if you will let me know in one line when I may bring him round to you.[†3]

I beg my kind regards to Lady Olliffe.[†4]

Very faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Sir Joseph Olliffe

To SAMUEL PHELPS, 13 FEBRUARY 1855

MS Rosenbach Foundation.

Hôtel Meurice, Paris | Tuesday Thirteenth February 1855.

My Dear Mr. Phelps.

I left town on Sunday, on a ten days' or fortnight's visit to France, and had not had time to write a line to you.

A note I received from Buckstone a day or two before I came away, leads me to infer that some communication had taken place between you and him on the subject of Mr. Saunders's play; and that you knew before I did, that Mrs. Martyn's[†5] arrangements could not be made to tally with yours, and that the Haymarket project could not be carried out.[†6]

What I wish to communicate to you in this condition of the matter, is, that I will see Mr. Saunders as soon as I return, and immediately afterwards convey to you his wish as to the Play's remaining in your hands. There has not been the least delay on our side. Buckstone's note to which I have referred, was in answer to one of mine, urging him to report progress.

The Exhibition building is fast approaching to completion here,[†7] and great things are expected in the way of a prodigious influx of visitors.[†8] If Mitchell carry out the idea you mentioned to me, and if it be well executed, I imagine that an English

Theatre will be a hit.[†1] All the French Theatres are at work as usual, and everybody seems to go to all of them, though the Snow lies thick and the cold is severe. What a model people!

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Samuel Phelps Esquire

To FRANÇOIS REGNIER, 13 FEBRUARY 1855*

MS Comédie Française.

Hôtel Meurice | Tuesday Thirteenth February | 1855.

My Dear Regnier.

I am extremely sorry to have missed you to day. We returned, five minutes after you had called.

The apartment is excellent. Nothing could be better, or more exactly what I wished to have.

Do not hurry yourself in the morning. I shall not go out until I have seen you, nor have I anything to call me out until the middle of the day.

With kind regards to Madame | Ever My Dear Regnier | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To JOHN FORSTER, [?13-14 FEBRUARY 1855]

Extract in F, VII, v, 604-5. Date: CD arrived in Paris on the evening of 12 Feb; he had seen Lemaître act before 16 Feb (To Miss Hogarth, that day); probably 13 or 14 Feb.

Incomparably the finest acting I ever saw, I saw last night at the Ambigu.[†2] They have revived that old piece, once immensely popular in London under the name of Thirty Years of a Gambler's Life.[†3] Old Lemaître[†4] plays his famous character,[†5] and never did I see anything, in art, so exaltedly horrible and awful. In the earlier acts he was so well made up, and so light and active, that he really looked sufficiently young. But in the last two, when he had grown old and miserable, he did the finest things, I really believe, that are within the power of acting. Two or three times, a great cry of horror went all round the house. When he met, in the inn yard, the traveller whom he murders, and first saw his money, the manner in which the crime came into his head—and eyes—was as truthful as it was terrific. This traveller, being a good fellow, gives him wine. You should see the dim remembrance of his better days that comes over him as he takes the glass, and in a strange dazed way makes as if he were going to touch the other man's, or do some airy thing with it; and then stops and flings the contents down his hot throat, as if he were pouring it into a limekiln. But this was nothing to what follows after he has done the murder, and comes home, with a basket of provisions, a ragged pocket full of money, and a badly-washed bloody right hand—which his little girl finds out. After the child asked him if he had hurt his hand, his going aside, turning himself round, and looking over all his clothes for spots, was so inexpressibly dreadful that it really scared one. He called for wine, and the sickness that came upon him when he saw the colour, was one of the things that brought out the curious cry I have spoken of from the audience. Then he fell into a sort of bloody mist, and went on to the end groping about, with no mind for anything, except making his fortune by staking this money, and a faint dull kind of love for the child. It is quite impossible to satisfy one's-self by saying enough of such a magnificent performance. I have never seen him come near its finest points in anything else. He said two things in a way that alone would put him far apart from all other actors. One to his wife, when he has exultingly shewn her the money, and she has asked him how he got it—"I found it"[†1]—and the other to his old companion and tempter, when he was charged by him with having killed that traveller, and suddenly went headlong mad and took him by the throat and howled out, "It wasn't I who murdered him—it was Misery!" And such a dress; such a face; and, above all, such an extraordinary guilty wicked thing as he made of a knotted branch of a tree which was his walking-stick, from the moment when the idea of the murder came into his head! I could write pages about him. It is an impression quite ineffaceable. He got half-boastful of that walking-staff to himself, and half-afraid of it; and didn't know whether to be grimly pleased that it had the jagged end, or to hate it and be horrified at it. He sat at a little table in the inn-yard, drinking with the traveller; and this horrible stick got between them like the Devil, while he counted on his fingers the uses he could put the money to.[†2]

To FRANÇOIS REGNIER, 14 FEBRUARY 1855*

MS Comédie Française.

Hôtel Meurice | Fourteenth February 1855

My Dear Regnier

Collins not being very well has seen Dr. Olliffe, and the Doctor has given him some strong medicine, and has cautioned him not to go out in the snow for two or three days, except in a carriage and then well wrapped up. I think therefore, mon cher, that we had better postpone our visit to the Musée[†1] and the Hôtel de Ville[†2] until Saturday. If I do not see you or hear from you to the contrary in the meantime, we shall expect you on Saturday at the same hour—2 o'Clock.

Always My Dear Regnier | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MRS WINTER, 15 FEBRUARY 1855

MS Huntington Library.

Hôtel Meurice, Paris | Thursday Fifteenth February 1855.

My Dear Mrs. Winter. (I had half a mind when I dipped my pen in the ink, to address you by your old natural Christian name.)[†3]

The snow lies so deep on the Northern Railway, and the Posts have been so interrupted in consequence,[†4] that your charming note arrived here only this morning. I reply by return of post, with a general idea that Sarah will come to Finsbury Place[†5] with a basket and a face of good-humoured compassion, and carry the letter away, and leave me as desolate as she used to do.

I get the heartache again when I read your commission, written in the hand which I find now to be not in the least changed, and yet it is a great pleasure to be entrusted with it, and to have that share in your gentler remembrances which I cannot find it still my privilege to have, without a stirring of the old fancies. I need not tell you that it shall be executed to the letter—with as much interest as I once matched a little pair of gloves for you which I recollect were blue ones.[†6] (I wonder whether people generally wore blue gloves when I was nineteen, or whether it was only you!) I am very very sorry you mistrusted me in not writing before your little girl was born;[†7] but I hope now you know me better you will teach her, one day, to tell her children, in times to come when they may have some interest in wondering about it, that I loved her mother with the most extraordinary earnestness when I was a boy.

I have always believed since, and always shall to the last, that there never was such a faithful and devoted poor fellow as I was. Whatever of fancy, romance, energy, passion, aspiration and determination belong to me, I never have separated and never shall separate from the hard hearted little woman—you—whom it is nothing to say I would have died for, with the greatest alacrity! I never can think, and I never seem to observe, that other young people are in such desperate earnest, or set so much, so long, upon one absorbing hope. It is a matter of perfect certainty to me that I began to fight my way out of poverty and obscurity, with one perpetual idea of you. This is so fixed in my knowledge that to the hour when I opened your letter last Friday night, I have never heard anybody addressed by your name or spoken of by your name, without a start. The sound of it has always filled me with a kind of pity and respect for the deep truth that I had, in my silly hobbledehoyhood, to bestow upon one creature who represented the whole world to me. I have never been so good a man since, as I was when you made me wretchedly happy. I shall never be half so good a fellow any more.

This is all so strange now, both to think of, and to say, after every change that has come about; but I think, when you ask me to write to you, you are not unprepared for what it is so natural to me to recal, and will not be displeased to read it. I fancy,—though you may not have thought in the old time how manfully I loved you—that you may have seen in one of my books a faithful reflection of the passion I had for you, and may have thought that it was something to have been loved so well, and may have seen in little bits of "Dora" touches of your old self sometimes, and a grace here and there that may be revived in your little girls, years hence, for the bewilderment of some other young lover—though he will never be as terribly in earnest as I and David Copperfield were. People used to say to me how pretty all that was, and how fanciful it was, and how elevated it was above the little foolish loves of very young men and women. But they little thought what reason I had to know it was true and nothing more nor less.

These are things that I have locked up in my own breast, and that I never thought to bring out any more. But when I find myself writing to you again "all to your self", how can I forbear to let as much light in upon them as will shew you that they are there still! If the most innocent, the most ardent, and the most disinterested days of my life had you for their Sun—as indeed they had—and if I know that the Dream I lived in did me good, refined my heart, and made me patient and persevering, and if the Dream were all of you—as God knows it was—how can I receive a confidence from you, and return it, and make a feint of blotting all this out!

As I have said, I fancy that you know all about it quite as well as I do, however. I have a strong belief—there is no harm in adding hope to that—that perhaps you have once or twice laid down that book, and thought "How dearly that boy must have loved me, and how vividly this man remembers it!"

I shall be here until Tuesday or Wednesday. If the snow allows this letter to come to you in the meantime, perhaps it would allow one to come to me "all to myself", if you were to try it. A number of recollections came into my head when I began, and I meant to have gone through a string of them and to have asked you if they lived in your mind too. But they all belong to the one I have indulged in—half pleasantly, half painfully—and are all swallowed up in that,—so let them go.

My Dear Mrs. Winter | Ever affectionately Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

[†a]I wonder what has become of a bundle of letters I sent you back once (according to order)[†1] tied with a blue ribbon, of the color of the gloves.[†a]

To MISS GEORGINA HOGARTH, 16 FEBRUARY 1855

Text from MDGH, I, 385-7. Address (envelope, MS Yale University Library): Angleterre | Miss Hogarth | Tavistock House | Tavistock Square London.

Hotel Meurice, Paris, Friday, Feb. 16th, 1855.

My dear Georgy

I heard from home last night; but the posts are so delayed and put out by the snow, that they come in at all sorts of times except the right times, and utterly defy all calculation. Will you tell Catherine with my love, that I will write to her again tomorrow afternoon; I hope she may then receive my letter by Monday morning, and in it I purpose telling her when I may be expected home. The weather is so severe and the roads are so bad, that the journey to and from Bordeaux seems out of the question. We have made up our minds to abandon it for the present, and to return about Tuesday night or Wednesday. Collins continues in a queer state, but is perfectly cheerful under the stoppage of his wine and other afflictions.

We have a beautiful apartment, very elegantly furnished, very thickly carpeted, and as warm as any apartment in Paris can be in such weather. We are very well waited on and looked after. We breakfast at ten, read and write till two, and then I go out walking all over Paris, while the invalid sits by the fire or is deposited in a café. We dine at five, in a different restaurant every day, and at seven or so go to the theatre—sometimes to two theatres, sometimes to three. We get home about twelve, light the fire, and drink lemonade, to which I add rum. We go to bed between one and two. I live in peace, like an elderly gentleman, and regard myself as in a negative state of virtue and respectability.

The theatres are not particularly good, but I have seen Lemaître act in the most wonderful and astounding manner. I am afraid we must go to the Opéra Comique on Sunday.[†1] To-morrow we dine with Regnier and to-day with the Olliffes.

"La Joie fait Peur,"[†2] at the Français,[†3] delighted me. Exquisitely played[†4] and beautifully imagined altogether. Last night we went to the Porte St. Martin[†5] to see a piece (English subject) called "Jane Osborne,"[†6] which the characters pronounce "Ja Nosbornnne." The seducer was Lord Nottingham.[†7] The comic Englishwoman's name (she kept lodgings and was a very bad character) was Missees Christmas. She had begun to get into great difficulties with a gentleman of the name of Meestair Cornhill, when we were obliged to leave, at the end of the first act, by the intolerable stench of the place. The whole theatre must be standing over some vast cesspool. It was so alarming that I instantly rushed into a café and had brandy.

My ear has gradually become so accustomed to French, that I understand the people at the theatres (for the first time) with perfect ease and satisfaction. I walked about with Regnier for an hour and a half yesterday, and received many compliments on my angelic manner of speaking the celestial language. There is a winter Franconi's[†1] now, high up on the Boulevards, just like the round theatre on the Champs Elysées,[†2] and as bright and beautiful. A clown from Astley's[†3] is all in high favour there at present. He talks slang English (being evidently an idiot), as if he felt a perfect confidence that everybody understands him. His name is Boswell,[†4] and the whole cirque rang last night with cries for Boz Zwillll! Boz Zweellll! Boz Zwuallll! etc. etc. etc. etc.

I must begin to look out for the box of bon-bons for the noble and fascinating Plornish-Maroon. Give him my love and a thousand kisses.

Loves to Mamey, Katey, Sydney, Harry, and the following stab to Anne—she forgot to pack me any shaving soap.

Ever, my dear Georgy, most affectionately yours

[CD.]

P.S.—Collins sends kind regards.

To W. H. WILLS, 16 FEBRUARY 1855

MS Huntington Library.

Hôtel Meurice, Paris | Friday Sixteenth February 1855

My Dear Wills

I received your letter yesterday evening. The posts are delayed,[†5] the roads feet deep in snow, the cold is intense, and going on to Bordeaux appears to be out of the question. I have not yet seen the list of trains and boats, but purpose arranging to return about Tuesday or Wednesday. In the meantime I am living like Gil Blas[†6] and doing nothing.[†7]

I am very much obliged to you indeed, for the trouble you have kindly and promptly taken about the little Freehold. It is clear to me that its merits resolve themselves into the view and the spot. If I had more money, these considerations might—with me—over-top all others. But as it is, I consider the matter quite disposed of—finally settled in the negative—and to be thought no more about. I shall not go down and look at it, as I could add nothing to your report.

Paris is finer than ever, and I go wandering about it all day. We dine at all manner of places, and go to two or three Theatres in the evening. I suppose, as an old Farmer said of Scott, I am "makin mysel", all the time;[†1] but I seem to be rather a free and easy sort of superior Vagabond.

I live in continual terror of Poole, and am strongly fortified within doors; with a means of retreat into my bedroom always ready. Up to the present blessed moment, his staggering form has not appeared.

As to yesterday's post from England,[†2] I have not at the present time the slightest idea where it may be. It is under the snow somewhere, I suppose, but nobody expects it and Galignani[†3] reprints every morning leaders from the Times of about a fortnight or three weeks old.[†4]

Collins, who is not very well, sends his "penitent regards", and says he is enjoying himself as much as a man with the weight of a broken promise[†5] on his conscience can.

Ever My Dear Wills | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

W. H. Wills Esquire

To MRS CHARLES DICKENS, [17 FEBRUARY 1855]

Mention in To Miss Hogarth, 16 Feb 55. Date: the day after that letter.

Telling her when he might be expected home.

To LADY OLLIFFE, 18 FEBRUARY 1855

Extract in N, II, 631, from catalogue source.

Hotel Meurice, Paris | 18th February 1855.

Delighted to have this three-cornered wave of your hand[†6] at parting. I have set my grosser hand to this work[†7] with unusual pleasure. Think of me sometimes until we meet again.

To SAMUEL WILDERSPIN,[†1] 22 FEBRUARY 1855*

MS Dr Young. Address: Samuel Wilderspin Esquire | Moor Cottage | Wakefield | Yorkshire.

Tavistock House, London | Twenty Second February | 1855.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his Compliments to Mr. Samuel Wilderspin, and regrets that he cannot possibly comply with Mr. Wilderspin's request.[†2]

To MRS WINTER, 22 FEBRUARY 1855

MS Huntington Library.

Tavistock House | Thursday Twenty Second February 1855

My Dear Maria.

The old writing is so plain to me, that I have read your letter with great ease (though it is just a little crossed), and have not lost a word of it. I was obliged to leave Paris on Tuesday Morning before the Post came in; but I took such precautions to prevent the possibility of any mischance, that the letter came close behind me. I arrived at home last night, and it followed me this morning. No one but myself has the slightest knowledge of my correspondence, I may add in this place. I could be nowhere addressed with stricter privacy or in more absolute confidence than at my own house.

Ah! Though it is so late to read in the old hand what I never read before, I have read it with great emotion, and with the old tenderness softened to a more sorrowful remembrance than I could easily tell you. How it all happened as it did, we shall never know on this side of Time; but if you had ever told me then what you tell me now, I know myself well enough to be thoroughly assured that the simple truth and energy which were in my love would have overcome everything. I remember well that long after I came of age—I say long; well! It seemed long then—I wrote to you for the last time of all, with a dawn upon me of some sensible idea that we were changing into man and woman, saying Would you forget our little differences and separations and let us begin again? You answered me very coldly and reproachfully,—and so I went my way.[†3]

But nobody can ever know with what a sad heart I resigned you, or after what struggles and what a conflict. My entire devotion to you, and the wasted tenderness of those hard years which I have ever since half loved half dreaded to recall, made so deep an impression on me that I refer to it a habit of suppression which now belongs to me, which I know is no part of my original nature, but which makes me chary of shewing my affections, even to my children, except when they are very young.[†4] A few years ago (just before Copperfield) I began to write my life,[†5] intending the Manuscript to be found among my papers when its subject should be concluded. But as I began to approach within sight of that part of it, I lost courage and burned the rest.[†1] I have never blamed you at all, but I have believed until now that you never had the stake in that serious game which I had.

All this mist passes away before your earnest words; and when I find myself to have been in your mind at that thoughtful crisis in your life[†2] which you so unaffectedly and feelingly describe, I am quite subdued and strangely enlightened. When poor Fanny died (I think she always knew that I never could bear to hear of you as of any common person) we were out of town,[†3] and I never heard of your having been in Devonshire Terrace—least of all in my room! I never heard of you in association with that time, until I read your letter to day. I could not, however—really could not[†4]—at any time within these nineteen years, have been so unmindful of my old truth, and have so set my old passion aside, as to talk to you like a person in any ordinary relation towards me. And this I think is the main reason on my side why the few opportunities that there have been of our seeing one another again, have died out.

All this again you have changed and set right—at once so courageously, so delicately and gently, that you open the way to a confidence between us which still once more,[†5] in perfect innocence and good faith, may be between ourselves alone. All that you propose, I accept with my whole heart. Whom can you ever trust if it be not your old lover! Lady Olliffe asked me in Paris the other day (we are, in our way, confidential you must know) whether it was really true that I used to love Maria Beadnell so very, very, very much? I told her that there was no woman in the world, and there were very few men, who could ever imagine how much.

You are always the same in my remembrance. When you say you are "toothless, fat, old, and ugly"[†6] (which I don't believe), I fly away to the house in Lombard Street which is pulled down, as if it were necessary that the very bricks and mortar should go the way of my airy castles, and see you in a sort of raspberry colored dress with a little black trimming at the top—black velvet it seems to be made of—cut into vandykes—an immense number of vandykes—with my boyish heart pinned like a captured butterfly on every one of them. I have never seen a girl play the harp, from that day to this, but my attention has been instantly arrested, and that drawing room has stood before me so plainly that I could write a most accurate description of it. I remember that there used to be a tendency in your eyebrows to join together; and sometimes in the most unlikely places—in Scotland, America, Italy—on the stateliest occasions and the most unceremonious—when I have been talking to a strange face and have observed even such a slight association as this in it, I have suddenly been carried away at the rate of a thousand miles a second, and have thought "Maria Beadnell!" When we were falling off from each other, I came from the House of Commons many a night at two or three o'Clock in the morning, only to wander past the place you were asleep in. And I have gone over that ground within these twelve months,[†1] hoping it was not ungrateful to consider whether any reputation the world can bestow, is repayment to a man for the loss of such a vision of his youth as mine. You ask me to treasure what you tell me, in my heart of hearts. O see what I have cherished there, through all this[†2] time and all these changes!

In the course of Saturday I will write to you at Artillery Place,[†3] sending the little brooches and telling you when Catherine will come—not forgetting the little Niece,[†4] though I don't expect her to remind me of Somebody or Anybody. And now to what I have reserved for the last.

I am a dangerous man to be seen with, for so many people know me. At St. Paul's, the Dean and the whole chapter know me. In Paternoster Row[†5] of all places, the very tiles and chimney pots know me. At first I a little hesitated whether or no to advise you to forego that interview or suggest another—principally because what would be very natural and probable a fortnight hence, seems scarcely so probable now. Still I should very much like to see you before we meet when others are by—I feel it as it were, so necessary to our being at ease—and unless I hear from you to the contrary, you may expect to encounter a stranger whom you may suspect to be the right person if he wears a moustache. You would not like better to call here on Sunday, asking first for Catherine and then for me? It is almost a positive certainty that there will be no one here but I, between 3 and 4. I make this suggestion, knowing what odd coincidences take place in streets, when they are not wanted to happen; though I know them to be so unlikely, that I should not think of such a thing if any one but you were concerned. If you think you would not like to come here, make no change. I will come there.

I cannot trust myself to begin afresh, or I should have my remembrances of our separation, and think yours hard to me. I remember poor Anne writing to me once, (in answer to some burst of low-spirited madness of mine), and saying "My dear Charles, I really cannot understand Maria, or venture to take the responsibility of saying what the state of her affections is"—and she added, I recollect, God bless her, a long quotation about Patience and Time. Well, well. It was not to be, until Patience and Time[†6] should bring us round together thus—

Remember. I accept all with my whole soul, and reciprocate all.

Ever Your Affectionate friend

CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 23 FEBRUARY 1855*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS,

Friday Twenty Third February 1855

My Dear Miss Coutts.

This is to enquire whether you are at home. I am; the Road to Bordeaux from Paris, being blocked up with Snow. If you are in Stratton Street, I will call at any time tomorrow before 5 that may suit you best.

With kind regards

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

To LIEUT. GENERAL SIR CHARLES PASLEY,[†1] 23 FEBRUARY 1855*

MS British Library.

Tavistock House | Friday Twenty Third February 1855

Dear Sir Charles.

I have been in Paris, but find your note on my return and immediately answer it.

If I should be so fortunate as to be disengaged on the day you may propose, I assure you it will give me very sincere pleasure to accept the occasion of becoming known to your son[†2]—in whom I am already much interested, both by your account and by our friend Elliotson's.

I had the pleasure of calling on you in the autumn, at your Boulogne Hotel; but you were gone away,[†3] and they vaguely reported that you had left for Switzerland.

Believe me | Very faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Lieutenant General Sir Charles W Pasley

To MISS KING, 24 FEBRUARY 1855

Text from MDGH, III, 164.

Tavistock House, 24th February, 1855.

My dear Miss King

I have gone carefully over your story again,[†4] and quite agree with you that the episode of the clergyman[†1] could be told in a very few lines. Startling as I know it will appear to you, I am bound to say that I think the purpose of the whole tale would be immensely strengthened by great compression. I doubt if it could not be told more forcibly in half the space.

It is certainly too long for "Household Words," and I fear my idea of it is too short for you. I am, if possible, more unwilling than I was at first to decline it; but the more I have considered it, the longer it has seemed to grow. Nor can I ask you to try to present it free from that objection, because I already perceive the difficulty, and pain, of such an effort.[†2]

To the best of my knowledge, you are wrong about the Lady at last, and to the best of my observation, you do not express what you explain yourself to mean in the case of the Italian attendant.[†3] I have met with such talk in the romances of Maturin's time[†4]—certainly never in Italian life.

These, however, are slight points easily to be compromised in an hour. The great obstacle I must leave wholly to your own judgment, in looking over the tale again.

Believe me always, very faithfully yours

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To AUGUSTUS TRACEY, 24 FEBRUARY 1855*

MS University of Texas.

Tavistock House | Twenty Fourth February 1855

My Dear Tracey

I have just come home from Paris and found your letter on my table—for which, many thanks!

The drying-closet for Scutari is being made. I have been greatly prepossessed by Mr. Jeakes.

Faithfully Yours always

CHARLES DICKENS

If I can get to the Athenæum from another engagement on Monday, I will not forget your request.[†5]

To MRS WINTER, 24 FEBRUARY 1855

MS Huntington Library.

Tavistock House | Saturday Twenty Fourth February | 1855.

My Dear Mrs. Winter[†1]

I have had fearful suspicions on my way home from Paris, that those little bits of velvet which are worn round the neck, ought to fasten with a sort of clasp; but the disinterested merchant with whom I executed your Commission, assured me that the little ornaments I enclose were the right things, and would adjust such bits of velvet, "of a manner very ravishing". He was so rapturous in the expression I translate, so excessively voluble on the subject, and so injured in his honor by my harboring the least doubt, that I meekly submitted to him.

So here they are, right or wrong. The smaller one with the blue stones, I designed for your little girl; the other for yourself. You must let me give them to you. They are of no worth, except as a remembrance.

I should have brought your baby a toy, but that the only packable toys I saw, were all hideous—saucer eyed creatures bursting out of boxes—and dreadful old men and women with inflamed noses.

Catherine proposes to come to you on Tuesday at between halfpast two and three, when a day must be arranged for your and Mr. Winter's dining with us. And while I think of it, pray let me expressly stipulate for your bringing Margaret's daughter[†2] with you. What you say of her makes me wish to see her very much, and I should venture to send my love to her by name, if I could make out whether you call her Pebby—or Pebbly—or Mebby—or Webbly. Being quite unable to settle this point to my satisfaction (though you write with such astonishing plainness), I send my love to her as your niece and her mother's child.

Believe me ever | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Winter.

To SIR JOSEPH OLLIFFE, 25 FEBRUARY 1855

MS St Pancras Public Libraries (Highgate Branch).

Tavistock House, London | Twenty Fifth February 1855 | Sunday

My Dear Olliffe

As soon as I came home, I communicated with Playfair[†3] on the subject we spoke of. The best report I can make, is to send you his written account of the question.[†4] Here it is.

The thaw here (which began yesterday morning) is of a very earnest description. Everything is weeping. All the buildings have severe colds in their heads, all the window-sills are in the first stage of measles,[†1] all the water pipes are bursting, all the streets are great black heaps of mud.

Five hundred thousand pairs of pattens[†2] are now going to Church, and the Bells are making such an intolerable uproar[†3] that I can't hear myself think.

[†a]Mrs. Dickens and Georgina send innumerable loves to Lady Olliffe (I add my own), and[†a] I don't know what is to be done to her if she ever comes to London again without writing word of her arrival.

Believe me always | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Sir Joseph Olliffe

To ARTHUR RYLAND, 26 FEBRUARY 1855

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: Arthur Ryland Esquire | Birmingham.

Tavistock House | Twenty Sixth February 1855

My Dear Mr. Ryland

Charley came home, I assure you, perfectly delighted with his visit to you, and rapturous in his accounts of your great kindness to him.

It appears to me that the first question in reference to my reading (I have not advanced an inch in my Copperfield trials by the bye), is, whether you think you could devise any plan in connexion with the room at Dee's,[†4] which would certainly bring my help in money up to £500. That is what I want. If it could be done by a subscription for two nights for instance, I would not be chary of my time and trouble. But if you cannot see your way clearly to that result in that connexion, then I think it would be better to wait until we can have the Town Hall at Christmas. I have promised to read, about Christmas time, at Sheffield and at Peterboro'. I could add Birmingham to the list then, if need were. But what I want is, to give the Institution in all £500. That is my object, and nothing less will satisfy me.

Will you think it over—taking counsel with whomsoever you please—and let me know what conclusion you arrive at. Only think of me as subservient to the Institution.

My Dear Mr. Ryland | always Very faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Arthur Ryland Esquire

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 27 FEBRUARY 1855*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street.

Tavistock House | Twenty Seventh February 1855

My Dear Miss Coutts

Brighton—no I dont mean Brighton—Ramsgate—at least not Ramsgate but Pardon, Pardon!

I said I was disengaged on Brighton—I mean Saturday. I had not put down in my pocket book that I had positively pledged myself to go to a Theatre in the Bedford Hotel[†1]—I mean, City—to see a certain Miss Glynn.[†2] The promise was obtained from me, three Brightons—I mean weeks—ago; and only this morning I remembered it. I am really bound to go, as the night was fixed upon the faith of my promise.

I should be perfectly distracted if I didn't hope that although you never—let me emphatically repeat it, and call Mrs. Brown to witness—never!—make a mistake, you will still forgive a miserable driveller.

Ever Faithfully Yours

CD.

To MADAME PULSZKY,[†3] 27 FEBRUARY 1855*

MS National Széchényi Library, Budapest.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS,
Tuesday Evening Twenty Seventh Feby. 1855

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his Compliments to Madame Pulszky, and begs to express his great regret that the accompanying Verses are not adapted to the purposes of Household Words.[†4] He may be allowed to add that he has read them with much interest notwithstanding, and that he did not require even the word of his respected friend Sir Charles Lyell,[†5] to be prepossessed in favor of so esteemed a correspondent as Madame Pulszky.

To W. HARRISON AINSWORTH, [28 FEBRUARY 1855]

Mention in To Cartwright, 28 Feb 1855. Date: written the same day.

Inviting him to dine and meet Tauchnitz.

To JULES BENEDICT, 28 FEBRUARY 1855*

MS Dickens House.

Tavistock House
Wednesday Evening | Twenty Eighth February 1855

My Dear Benedict.

A German friend of mine—Tauchnitz of Leipsig—is flying through London, and is coming to dine here tomorrow at half past 6. I have a romantic idea (being of a poetical temperament) that you may by some wonderful chance be disengaged on this railroad-notice. If you should be and will come so unceremoniously, I shall hold myself evermore under an obligation to my German friend for procuring me the pleasure of seeing you.

Believe me always | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Jules Benedict Esquire

To SAMUEL CARTWRIGHT, 28 FEBRUARY 1855*

MS Stanford University Library.

Tavistock House | Wednesday Evening | Twenty Eighth February 1855

My Dear Cartwright

I have a romantic idea (which I cherish as a proof of my natural buoyancy), that you may by some wonderful chance be disengaged tomorrow. A German friend of mine is flying through London, and I write to Ainsworth and David Roberts to come and dine at half past six. If you come too, I shall consider myself a kind of Seer. If you don't, I shall respect the gallantry with which I volunteered on the present Forlorn Hope.

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Samuel Cartwright Esquire.

To DAVID ROBERTS, [28 FEBRUARY 1855]

Mention in last. Date: written the same day.

Inviting him to dine and meet Tauchnitz.

To DAVID ROBERTS, 28 FEBRUARY 1855

MS Berg Collection.

Tavistock House | Twenty Eighth February 1855

My Dear David Roberts.

I hope to make it quite plain to you in a few words, why I think it right to stay away from the Lord Mayor's Dinner to the Club.[†1] If I did not feel a kind of rectitude involved in my non-acceptance of his invitation, your note would immediately induce me to change my mind.

Entertaining a strong opinion on the subject of the City Corporation as it stands, and the absurdity of its pretensions in an age perfectly different in all conceivable respects from that to which it properly belonged as a Reality, I have expressed that opinion on more than one occasion within a year or so, in Household Words.[†2] I do not think it consistent with my respect for myself or for the art I profess, to blow hot and cold in the same breath—to laugh at the Institution in print, and accept the hospitality of its representative while the ink is staring us all in the face. There is a great deal too much of this among us, and it does not elevate the earnestness or delicacy of literature.

This is my sole consideration. Personally, I have always met the present Lord Mayor on the most agreeable terms, and I think him an excellent one. As between you and me and him, I cannot have the slightest objection to your telling him the truth. On a more private occasion when he was not keeping his State, I should be delighted to interchange any courtesy with that honorable and liberal gentleman Mr. Moon.

Believe me always | Cordially Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

David Roberts Esquire.

March

To MISS HARRIET MARTINEAU, [?1 MARCH 1855]

Mention in next. Date: shortly before that letter.

Concurring with her on the need for teaching domestic subjects in schools.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 2 MARCH 1855*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Friday Second March 1855

My Dear Miss Coutts.

Will you let Mr. Brown know that the designation of "the man"[†3] is

Mr. George Phillips[†4]
From the Factory of Mr. Jeakes
Great Russell Street, Bloomsbury.

I enclose the letter I spoke of, from Miss Martineau.[†5] I wrote her in reply that I thoroughly concurred with her, and that as to you, I knew the point to have attracted your attention[†1] and to have been practically advanced in your Schools.[†2]

Charley's crowning German Memorandum[†3] (also enclosed) was in my pocket to day, but I forgot it.

Dear Miss Coutts | Ever Faithfully Yours
CD.

Memorandum. Charley at Leipzig.
Charley.[†4]

M. Taüchnitz of Leipzig brought me his arrears of the various accounts (from the 3rd of December 1853 to the close of last year), a day or two ago.[†5] The Balancesheet makes the total of his payments to the various Professors &c, £183. 6. 0[†6]

To MARK LEMON, 2 MARCH 1855

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Friday Second March 1855

My Dear Mark.

I have pledged myself in a dread and solemn manner to go to the Standard[†7] tomorrow night, to see—she calls it "recognize"—Miss Glyn, who has forwarded Box for that purpose.[†8] Can you go?[†9] I shall have to be in the City first, and we might meet at any dirty dining-house at ½ past 5.[†10]

A word in answer.

Ever affecy.

CD.

To WILKIE COLLINS, 4 MARCH 1855

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Sunday Fourth March 1855

My Dear Collins.

I have to report another failure on the part of our friend Williams,[†1] last night. He so confounded an enlightened British Audience at the Standard Theatre on the subject of Antony and Cleopatra,[†2] that I clearly saw them wondering towards the end of the Fourth Act, when the play was going to begin.

A man much heavier than Mark (in the actual scale, I mean), and about twenty years older, played Cæsar.[†3] When he came on with a Map of London—pretending it was a scroll and making believe to read it—and said, "He calls me Boy"[†4]—a howl of derision arose from the Audience which you probably heard in the Park,[†5] without knowing what occasioned it. All the smaller characters, having their speeches much upon their minds, came in and let them off without the slightest reference to cues. And Miss Glyn, in some entirely new conception of her art, "read" her part like a Patter song—several lines on end with the rapidity of Charles Mathews,[†6] and then one very long word. It was very brightly and creditably got up, but (as I have said) Williams did not carry the Audience and I don't think the Sixty Pounds a week will be got back by the Manager.[†7]

You will have the goodness to picture me to yourself—alone—in profound solitude—in an abyss of despair—ensconced in a small Managerial Private Box in the very centre of the House—frightfully sleepy (I had a dirty steak in the City first, and I think they must have put Laudanum into the Harvey's sauce),[†8] and played at, point blank, by the entire strength of the Company.[†9] The terrors in which I constantly woke up, and found myself detected, you will imagine. The gentle Glyn on being called for, heaved her snowy bosom straight at me, and the box keeper informed me that the Manager who brought her on would "have the honor of stepping round directly." I sneaked away in the most craven and dastardly manner, and made an utterly false representation that I was coming back again.

If you will give me one glass of hot gin and water on Thursday or Friday Evening, I will come up at about 8* o'Clock with a cigar in my pocket, and inspect the Hospital.[†10] I am afraid this relaxing weather will tell a little faintly on your medicine, but I hope you will soon begin to see land beyond the Hunterian Ocean.[†11]

I have been writing and planning and making notes over an immense number of little bits of paper[†1] and I never can write legibly under such circumstances.

Always Cordially Yours

CD.

* Intended for EIGHT

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 5 MARCH 1855†

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts.

Tavistock House | Monday Morning Fifth March 1855

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I shall be delighted to dine with you tomorrow. But it is Mary's birthday, and Mrs. Dickens and Georgina being under pledges to do the honors to three or four "young persons" on that auspicious occasion, are reluctantly obliged to stay at home.

If I should not be able to come in good time to day, I will not come at all. I find myself compelled to attend to some Household Words business.—I am devising a new tree with the old green leaves, afar off, and it makes me submit myself to Mr. Wills whenever he can lay hold of me—that is to say, a little irregularly. I should very much like however to see the General of that gallant little force,[†2] and (like an old friend of mine)[†3] shall "make an effort".

Will you read the enclosed note,[†4] and let me know in one word if I may say yes, in reply? Of course I will take care about price &c first. I know the machines in question, and they are extremely simple. [They must be, for I can understand them].

My Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 5 MARCH 1855*

MS Morgan Library.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS,

Monday Fifth March 1855

My Dear Miss Coutts

It is very kind of you indeed. I write hastily, hoping to make an end here and get round to Stratton Street before the General leaves you. We are in a heap of conglomerated business.

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

To MARK LEMON, 5 MARCH 1855

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

Tavistock House | Monday Fifth March 1855

My Dear Mark

It's not today. Its this day week.[†1] What are you up to?

I am engaged to dine with Hardwick the Magistrate, today. But if anybody was to come round and particularly propose—in short, anything—down a Railroad or anywhere—I am in a Spring humour and might be false to him.

Ever affecy.

CD.

To MARK LEMON, 5 MARCH 1855

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Monday Fifth March 1855

My Dear Mark.

I will expect you here, from and after 3.[†2]

Ever affecy.

CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?EARLY MARCH 1855]

Extract in F, I, iii, 49. Date: before disillusionment set in: see below and To Mrs Winter, 10 Mar.

I don't quite apprehend what you mean by my over-rating the strength of the feeling of five-and-twenty years ago.[†3] If you mean of my own feeling, and will only think what the desperate intensity of my nature is, and that this began when I was Charley's age; that it excluded every other idea from my mind for four years, at a time of life when four years are equal to four times four; and that I went at it with a determination to overcome all the difficulties, which fairly lifted me up into that newspaper life, and floated me away over a hundred men's heads: then you are wrong, because nothing can exaggerate that. I have positively stood amazed at myself ever since!—And so I suffered, and so worked, and so beat and hammered away at the maddest romances that ever got into any boy's head and stayed there, that to see the mere cause of it all, now, loosens my hold upon myself. Without for a moment sincerely believing that it would have been better if we had never got separated, I cannot see the occasion of so much emotion as I should see anyone else. No one can imagine in the most distant degree what pain the recollection gave me in Copperfield. And, just as I can never open that book as I open any other book, I cannot see the face (even at four-and-forty), or hear the voice, without going wandering away over the ashes of all that youth and hope in the wildest manner.[†1]

To DUDLEY COSTELLO, 7 MARCH 1855*

MS Washington University Libraries.

Tavistock House | Seventh March 1855.

My Dear Costello.

Many thanks for the Color Serjeant's letter[†2] and your previous help.[†3] I am rather more than doubtful after all, whether I shall touch the subject just now.[†4] I do not quite see my way down it.

I think we brought our silent system from America,[†5] and that Belgium and Switzerland took theirs from a combination of the opposite sides of the Atlantic. I can at any time bring you acquainted with every nook and corner of Tracey's prison,[†6] but I am not clear of the interest of the subject you propose. Both the associated silent system and the solitary system have been over and over again described, and those must be very special improvements indeed (I think), which would make the Market of such a very large whole Hog[†1] a good topic for H. W.[†2]

But I dine there[†3] tomorrow at halfpast five. If you are disengaged, will you come there and dine too, and we can talk it over?

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

If Yes, send a line straight to Wills, that he may order another Marrow-bone.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 8 MARCH 1855

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Thursday Eighth March 1855

My Dear Miss Coutts

The address of Mrs. Thompson is, 23 Bute Street Old Brompton.

After I left you yesterday, I went into the City and saw the Secretary of that Protection Institution[†4]—in a sort of china-closet at the back of a first floor in the Poultry.[†5] They clearly want to use the case[†6] as an advertizing Puff of their establishment, and don't desire to part with it—evidently looking upon the girl as so much Capital.[†7] After a short conversation, in which the Secretary enunciated a great deal of perilous nonsense (in reference to which I politely suggested to him afar off, that he knew nothing of what he was talking about), I left the matter thus. That if they ever desired to make application for the girl's admission into your Home, it should be considered, but that the case must even then stand upon its own merits and suitability to your Institution. I would not at any time give them money;—I fear a good deal of trading Cant prevails in the concern.

The price of the drying machine[†8] will be 18 guineas. I have told Mr. Jeakes it must be ready to go with the Drying closet, or you won't have it. I am now pressing upon him the necessity of expediting the Shipment.

I think I have just got the best Ghost story (sent by a lady[†9] for Household Words) that ever was written,[†10] and with an idea in it remarkably new.[†11] My hand is stayed for the moment, however, by an apprehension that the lady cannot have written it. It is so very clever, that I think (though I never saw or heard of it), it must have been written by some wild Frenchman[†1]—and I am trying to find out.

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

To MISS HARRIET MARTINEAU, [8 MARCH 1855]

Mention in next. Date: written the same day.

Explaining Miss Coutts's concern with Whitelands.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 8 MARCH 1855*

MS Morgan Library.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS
Thursday Eighth March 1855

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I have safely received the money here, and will duly settle—indeed have already settled—all the outstanding German accounts. I never thank you on Charley's behalf because—how can I!

Only to day, I wrote again to Miss Martineau, explaining, as well as I could, the pains you had taken at Whitelands[†2]—which I know will be a source of great comfort and interest to her. I shall be delighted to send her what you mention[†3] whenever you give it me. I hope she may live[†4] to receive that additional cheer.

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To JAMES C. SHAW,[†1] [?2-8] MARCH 1855

Summary from South Eastern Railway Mechanics' Institute Minutes Book, 9 Mar 55 (MS PRO) Date: CD's reply to Shaw's letter of 1 Mar: see To Shaw, 17 Mar; reported to the Institute's Council Meeting, 9 Mar.

Offering to read A Christmas Carol and stating that in the event of the Council of the South Eastern Railway Mechanics' Institute accepting his offer, he would require a platform with no one on it but himself and no one behind him.[†2]

To MARK LEMON, 9 MARCH 1855

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Friday Evening Ninth March 1855

My Dear Mark

I feel that I must go.[†3] But if you will say (by your silence in acknowledgment of this), that you will go too, I will wait for you here until you are ready. On reflection, I don't see the least reason why after 8 should not do as well as after 7.

Ever Affecy.

CD.

To FREDERICK MAYNARD, [9 MARCH 1855]

Mention in next. Date: written the day before.

About his sister Mrs Thompson.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 10 MARCH 1855

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street | Piccadilly.

Tavistock House | Saturday Tenth March 1855

My Dear Miss Coutts

I wrote yesterday (necessarily therefore before I received your note), to the brother.[†4] I told him all that you had before you[†5] in reference to the sister, and I said

"let me now particularly impress upon your sister, through you, that on her thorough earnestness, patience, and perseverance, at this point in her life, her own future and that of her child undoubtedly depend." I added that I would see her, or him, or both, any Sunday at half past one. I will take such opportunity of repeating the caution. I stated the case however, in the plainest and strongest manner that I could possibly employ; and I did so in writing, to the end that it might make a more enduring effect, as being always there upon the paper.

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

I enclose a note received this morning, from Miss Martineau.[†1]

To MRS WINTER, 10 MARCH 1855

MS Huntington Library.

Tavistock House | Saturday Morning Tenth March 1855

My Dear Maria.

Your letter was delivered here yesterday evening at halfpast Seven. Being out, I did not receive it until I returned home at Midnight. This answer is necessarily very short, for I have a fear that it may not reach you otherwise.

I think we are pretty sure to be at home before 3 tomorrow. I cannot positively speak for myself, as I am one of a Committee on some public literary business,[†2] which may have to make an official representation some time tomorrow. I have undertaken to say what is necessary to be said, whenever the interview comes off; and it is not impossible (the matter pressing), that Sunday may be profaned for the purpose. I do not think it is very likely however.

Your cold is a very well-disposed one, to improve in such weather, and it has my warmest commendation for being so good. I am so busy that I have not had time to consider whether I took it by sympathy on Wednesday evening[†3]—but I think I heard somebody sneezing at my desk half the day yesterday, who sounded like the incomparable author.

You make me smile when you picture to yourself how weak I might be, and what poor thoughts I might have, and in what unworthy lights it might be my spoiled nature to shew myself. With faults enough to answer for, I believe I have never been that kind of person for a day.

Little Ella shall hear from me on Monday. In the ghostly unrest of going to begin a new book, my time is like one of the Spirits in Macbeth,[†4] and "will not be commanded"[†5]—even by me.

You may be perfectly sure that in writing to me, you write to no one else.

Ever affectionately Yours

CD.

To W. HARRISON AINSWORTH, 12 MARCH 1855

Mention in N, II, 641; dated 12 Mar 55.

Asking him to attend a meeting of the Literary Fund.[†1]

To DR ARNOTT,[†2] 12 MARCH 1855

Extract in Maggs Bros catalogue No. 293 (1912); MS 2 pp.; dated Tavistock House, 12 Mar 55.[†3]

Concerning a meeting of the Literary Fund Society. If you can possibly manage to attend it, even at some little sacrifice of convenience, let me earnestly beg of you to do so.[†4] I know that some statements will be made and changes proposed, of great importance to Literary men, and to the legitimate objects of an Institution intended for their benefit.

To JOHN BLACKWOOD,[†5] 12 MARCH 1855

Text from N, II, 640-1.

Tavistock House | Monday Twelfth March 1855

Dear Mr. Blackwood

The annual general meeting of the Literary Fund will take place at the Society's Rooms, 72[†6] Great Russell Street, Bloomsbury Square, on Wednesday, the day after to-morrow, at a quarter before two o'clock. If you can possibly manage to attend it, even at some little sacrifice of convenience, let me earnestly beg of you to do so.[†7] I know that some statements will be made, and changes proposed, of great importance to Literary men, and to the legitimate objects of an institution intended for their benefit.

Believe me to remain | Faithfully yours

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To PETER CUNNINGHAM, 12 MARCH 1855

Text from N, II, 641.

Tavistock House | Monday Twelfth March 1855

My Dear Cunningham

The Annual General Meeting of the Literary Fund will take place at the Society's Rooms, 70 Great Russell Street, Bloomsbury Square, on Wednesday the day after tomorrow, at a quarter before two o'clock. If you can possibly manage to attend it, even at some little sacrifice of convenience, let me earnestly beg of you to do so.[†1] I know that some statement will be made and changes proposed, of great importance to Literary men and to the legitimate objects of an institution intended for their benefit.

Believe me to remain | Faithfully Yours

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To DR WILLIAM SMITH,[†2] 12 MARCH 1855

Text from N, II, 640.

Tavistock House | Monday Twelfth March 1855

Dear Dr. Smith

The annual general meeting of the Literary Fund will take place at the Society's Rooms, 72 Great Russell Street, Bloomsbury Square, on Wednesday the day after tomorrow at a quarter before two o'clock. If you can possibly manage to attend it, even at some little sacrifice of convenience, let me earnestly beg of you to do so.[†3] I know that some statements will be made, and changes proposed, of great importance to Literary men and to the legitimate objects, of an Institution intended for their benefit.

Believe me to remain | Faithfully yours

[CHARLES DICKENS]

To MISS ELLA MARIA WINTER, 13 MARCH 1855

MS Dickens House. Address: Miss Ella Maria Winter | 12 Artillery Place | Finsbury Square.

Tavistock House | Tuesday[†4] Evening Thirteenth March 1855

My Dear Little Friend.

Only think of my having had your nice little letter one whole week tomorrow, and not having answered it until now! What a careless Rascal I should have been, if I had not been busy all the time. Having been busy all the time, what an agreeable man I am!

I am very glad indeed that you like the small present so much; because it is such a very small present in itself that when you tell me so, I begin to think you like me, and think the present a much better one than it is, for my sake. Once upon a time when the Fairies used to give presents to Queens' daughters (if your Mama had lived in those days she might have been a Queen perhaps, though I don't think she would ever have been a tall one), they used to say at the christenings, "I give this little girl, goodness"—"I give this little girl sweet temper"—"I give this little girl, a tender heart"—and so on. Now I am not a Fairy myself, and indeed I never heard of a Fairy with a moustache and Wellington Boots, and I never gave anything at a christening except a Mug, and I didn't even give that to a cousin of yours[†1] when He was christened; but when I gave you that little brooch, I gave you my best wishes for all sorts of virtues. So, I expect you to grow up the best—and therefore of course the happiest—of tiny women; and when everybody loves you and you come to see a very old gentleman in a black velvet cap, reading a big book in a[†2] (there I am, blotting again!) in a big arm-chair, you will think of these words, and you will find that identical old gentleman to be myself.

I was dreadfully cross on Sunday, when I came home and found you had been here and were gone. My Owl[†3] said "what do you think? She knocked me down, but she didn't hurt me—and she peeped all over the table." When you come again, I will shew you a Raven,[†4] alive and pecking. He will peck little holes in your legs[†5] if you like, and make a complete cribbage-board of each of your stockings. He breaks all the kitchen-windows every day, and flies at everybody except the Cook. What a dear bird he is to be sure.

My little children send you their loves. It's the Baby's birthday,[†6] and he says he don't want many happy returns of the Measles—which he has got at present. He keeps upon his bed, and goes to sleep among, a large cart of real timber drawn by two grey horses—a Noah's Ark with all the animals out walking, in company with Noah Ham, Shem, and Japhet, Mrs. N, Mrs. H, Mrs. S, and Mrs. J—the Camp at Chobham[†7] and four brass cannon—a farm-yard—a box of bricks—a clown in a washing-tub, driving two geese—four crusts of buttered toast—all the cannon-balls (which roll into bed and tickle him)—and I don't know what besides.

Ever affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

(What do you think of that, for a flourish!)
Miss Ella Maria Winter

To OCTAVIAN BLEWITT, 14 MARCH 1855*

MS Royal Literary Fund.

Tavistock House | Wednesday Morning | Fourteenth March 1855

My Dear Sir

As I shall move at the General Meeting today, a Resolution recognizing the necessity of the Literary Fund Society being re-incorporated under a new charter,[†1] will you be so good as to make my intention known to the Chairman[†2] when he takes his seat? My object in making this request, is, that I may be sure to offer the little I shall have to say, at that stage of the proceedings which the chairman shall consider the right one for the purpose;[†3] and may occasion no unnecessary trouble.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Octavian Blewitt Esquire.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, [14] MARCH 1855*

MS Morgan Library. Date: misdated by CD: Wednesday was 14 Mar; but CD's false start on the date of To Ella Winter suggests he was confused about the day on 13 Mar.

Tavistock House | Wednesday Thirteenth March | 1855

My Dear Miss Coutts

I received the enclosed by post yesterday, just as you see it.[†4] What is to be done?

Always Most Faithfully Yours
CD.

To JOHN BLACKWOOD, 15 MARCH 1855*

MS National Library of Scotland.

Tavistock House | Fifteenth March 1855

My Dear Mr. Blackwood

Many thanks for your obliging note. I did more than I had expected yesterday,[†5] and have now a confident hope of greatly increasing the usefulness of the Institution without treading very heavily on any of its favorite corns.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Blackwood Esquire.

To LIEUT. GENERAL SIR CHARLES PASLEY, 15 MARCH 1855*

MS Private.

Tavistock House | Fifteenth March 1855

My Dear Sir Charles

Since you are so kind as to leave the day to me, will you allow me to suggest Friday the Twenty Third for our having the pleasure of dining with you.

It would take a tremendous array of Barons (and Baronesses) to convert me to Prussian Politics.[†1] But I hope this particular Baron[†2] and I may find some far more agreeable subjects in common.

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Sir Charles Pasley

To CHARLES WENTWORTH DILKE,[†3] 16 MARCH 1855

Text from The Papers of A Critic. Selected from the Writings of the late Charles Wentworth Dilke, ed. Sir Charles Wentworth Dilke, 1875, I, 79-80.

Tavistock House. | Sixteenth March, 1855

My Dear Dilke,

You see the Times is striking for us this morning;[†4] we must hold to the Obstructives[†5] now.

Will you send me some facts concerning the founder,[†1] and his original intentions.[†2] I think after all I had better come out in Household Words, with an amiable dash at the enemy,[†3] and that I cannot do better than take that position, which is plainly the one we must maintain in the committee.[†4]

When I went to the Fund yesterday to see Blewitt about calling our committee together,[†5] "O," said he, "I'm very glad to see you, because here's a curious point has arisen, and I want your opinion on it very much. Supposing three or four partners in a firm and the firm to have given ten guineas, one of the partners has not a right to vote has he?" "Oh, dear me!" said I, with the gentlest suavity, "that seems to me to be perfectly clear. If you doubted whether that partner represented the firm in voting, you would write to the firm to ask the question, and on their replying 'yes,' there would be an end of it." "You feel quite certain about that?" said he. "Perfectly," said I.

"Well then," said Blewitt, "here's another curious thing. We think there were people here yesterday holding up their hands who were not members. Did you see P—[†6] here?" "No," says I. "Well," says he, "Sir Henry Ellis[†7] says he saw him, and he is not a member. I myself saw a gentleman, with his back to the door, who, when I offered him a balloting paper, told me he was not a member." "Aye—aye!" says I, with the utmost gravity, "on which side do you suppose these people voted?" "Oh! I say nothing about that," replied Blewitt, colouring, "we have all an equal interest in keeping them out, that's all I mean." "But," said I, "whose business is it to see that none but members are in the room on such an occasion?" Hereupon he coloured again, and said, "Why, if I had proposed to challenge them, Mr. Dilke might have charged me with some sinister object." "But how about ascertaining all that before they got into the room at all?" said I. He then made a proposal on this to which I assented, and we parted with infinite affection.

Believe me, my dear Dilke, | Yours truly,

CHARLES DICKENS

To LOVELL REEVE, 16 MARCH 1855

Text from N, II, 642.

Tavistock House | Friday Sixteenth March 1855

My Dear Sir

Many thanks for your note. I was thoroughly well satisfied with the result of my motion and—so far—am very hopeful of doing good. I am absolutely certain that if the obstructives do not get out of the way and make a free passage to the intentions of the Founder, the plain truth will ride over them and crush the whole thing.

I had my eye on the stragglers, and saw pretty plainly (I think) that a very little finesse in the way of disputing the counting and prolonging the taking of the votes would have turned the scale in favor of Dilke's motion. But with such facts and such a minority, the mere accident of a majority under half a dozen[†1] seemed to me of very small importance.

Faithfully Yours

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 17 MARCH 1855

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street.

Tavistock House | Seventeenth March 1855

My Dear Miss Coutts

Mrs. Thompson and her brother will no doubt be with me tomorrow morning. What am I to do? I only want to know.[†2] I quite agree with you that it is immensely difficult—and yet her position seems plainly to be a perplexed and complicated one.

Charley and I dine with Mr. Bates on Sunday, to confer. Mr. Bates writes me that he can place him in a broker's house, but would like to talk to him first that he may be sure—or as sure as he can be—that he is not *mis*placing him. You have not seen your Turkish friend?[†3]

Perhaps you may like to read the great Ghost Story[†4] before it comes out. I send you my Proof therefore. You have only to put it in the fire. All my corrections are made upon a duplicate, and I don't want it again.

Charley is immensely excited by the opening prospect, and is, I really believe, very earnest to begin. I have lately added to my other little occupations, a determined endeavour to reform a misdoing Institution. If you had seen Sir Robert Inglis in the Chair[†5] (where he was very just and good-natured), beleaguered by your servant for two hours and a half, I know you would have been amused for a week.

O, likewise.

My Dear Miss Coutts | Ever Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

To MRS HAYCROFT,[†1] 17 MARCH 1855*

Text from copy by Walter Dexter. Address: Mrs. Haycroft, | Mile End House, | St. John's, | Worcester.

Tavistock House. | Seventeenth March, 1855.

Dear Madam,

I believe that many such Associations as you propose are already in existence, and I have called attention to the great necessity and advantage of such Institutions. Indeed, I never willingly lose an opportunity of doing so.

Your faithful Servant,

CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Haycroft.

To THE BENCHERS OF THE INN, MIDDLE TEMPLE,[†2] 17 MARCH 1855

Text from Minutes Book of The Honourable Society of The Middle Temple.

Saturday Seventeenth March 1855.

The Petition of Charles Dickens of Tavistock House, Tavistock Square in the County of Middlesex Sheweth that[†3] years ago your Petitioner entered himself a Student of your Honourable Society with the intention of keeping the requisite number of Terms[†4] and being Called to the Bar. That although your Petitioner was at that time a writer of books he did not foresee that literature as a profession would so entirely engross his time and become the business of his life as it has since done and now does; that in the pursuit of his art (both in his own country and in others) your petitioner has been entirely diverted from the pursuit of the law and that he has long had reason to believe that the separation is final. Your petitioner with this experience of his inability to become a law student in anything but in name respectfully begs permission to withdraw himself from the students' list and to have his deposit money[†5] returned to him if your Worships should see no objection to granting him this favour

And your Petitioner as in duty bound will ever pray

(signature) CHARLES DICKENS[†6]

To [JAMES C. SHAW],[†1] 17 MARCH 1855*

MS (fragment) Fales Collection, New York University Library.

Tavistock House, | Saturday Seventeenth March 1855

Dear Sir

Reverting to your kind inquiry of the first of this month, I beg to say that I think Four passes[†2] will be as many as I shall require on the 27th. at the most; and that I shall be glad to have a compartment reserved in the Train which will leave London at 11.30. My impression is, that we shall return by the fast mail Train in the night.

I am much obliged to Mr Cudworth[†3] for his bounteous offer,[†4] for which you will perhaps have the kindness to thank him on my[†5]

To WILKIE COLLINS, 19 MARCH 1855†

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Monday Nineteenth March 1855

My Dear Collins.

I have read the two first portions of Sister Rose,[†6] with the very greatest pleasure. An excellent story, charmingly written, and shewing everywhere an amount of pains and study in respect of the Art of doing such things, that I see mighty seldom.

If I be right in supposing that the brother and sister are concealing the husband's mother,[†7] then will you look at the closing scene of the second part, again, and consider whether you cannot make the indication of that circumstance a little more obscure—or, at all events, a little less emphatic. As by Rose's only asking her brother, once, for leave to tell her husband[†8] or some slight alteration of that kind. The best way I know of strengthening the interest and hitting this point, would be the introduction or mention, in the first instance, of some one other person who might (in the reader's divided thoughts) be the concealed person, and of whom the husband might have a latent dislike or jealousy—as a friend of the brother's. But this might involve too great a change.[†9]

If on the other hand it be not the mother who is visited, then it is clear that you have altogether succeeded as it stands, and have entirely misled me.

How are you getting on? Shall you be up to a day at Ashford tomorrow week? I shall be able to frank you down and up the Railway on the solemn occasion.[†10] Mark (whose face is at present enormous) is going, and Wills will tell us the story of the Bo'sen, whose artful chaff in that sparkling dialogue played the Devil with T. P. Cooke.[†1]

Talking of which feat, I wish you could have seen your servant, last Wednesday, beleaguer the Literary Fund. They got so bothered and bewildered, that I expected to see them all fade away under the table; and the outsiders laughed so irreverently whenever I poked up the chairman that it was quite a facetious business. Virtually, I consider the thing done. You may believe that I am not about to let go, and the effect has far and far exceeded my expectations already. Mark is full of the subject and will tell you all about it.

[†a]Forster doesn't seem to me[†2] to be managing Sebastopol as well as I had expected of him.[†3] I thought he would have stormed the place before now.[†a]

What is Mr. Pigot's address?[†4] I want to leave a Card for him.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To CAPTAIN E. E. MORGAN,[†5] [19 MARCH] 1855

Text from MDGH, III, 176. Date: two days before the Fast day, 21 Mar 55.

1855.

Dear Friend,

I am always delighted to hear from you. Your genial earnestness does me good to think of. And every day of my life I feel more and more that to be thoroughly in earnest is everything, and to be anything short of it is nothing. You see what we have been doing to our valiant soldiers. You see what miserable humbugs we are. And because we have got involved in meshes of aristocratic red tape to our unspeakable confusion, loss, and sorrow, the gentlemen who have been so kind as to ruin us are going to give us a day of humiliation and fasting the day after to-morrow.[†6] I am sick and sour to think of such things at this age of the world.... I am in the first stage of a new book, which consists in going round and round the idea, as you see a bird in his cage go about and about his sugar before he touches it.

Always most cordially yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To HENRY MORLEY, 19 MARCH 1855

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Monday Night Nineteenth March | 1855

My Dear Morley.

I am very much touched by your paper, Frost-bitten Homes.[†1] But between ourselves, I have some uncomfortable suggestion in the way of information concerning that clergyman.[†2] Not desiring to believe all I am told, it still seems to me that he has committed a suppression of the Truth towards us. I wish therefore you would so re-touch the paper, as to make it appear to describe what you saw during the frost—generally—and without allusion to any particular district[†3] in London. I do not like to use my pen upon a paper that is so feelingly done from the heart.

I have another favor to ask of you. I wish to see this place myself. It seems a dreadful thing to have a few shillings in one's pocket and not go there.[†4] If Monday would suit you, let us go at the hour most convenient to you. If it should not, pray tell me so and I will suggest another day. You know the houses, and we need no Ghost to shew us the way.[†5]

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Henry Morley Esquire.

[†a]P.S. As this is to be the first article in the next No. Please return the proof to Henry Bradbury Whitefriars as soon as possible.[†a]

To THOMAS BEARD, 20 MARCH 1855

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | Morning Herald Office | Shoe Lane.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Twentieth March 1855.

My Dear Beard

I am going down next Tuesday (I have been going for three years), to read the Carol to the Railway Workpeople at Ashford. Lemon and Wills are going too. We purpose starting by the 11..30 Fast Train, getting a country stroll, dining at the Inn[†1] (to the dire confusion of various intended hospitalities), and coming home by the Mail in the night. I can frank the party up and down the Railway. If you should be able to spare the day and would like the expedition, will you come?

Cordially Ever

CD.

To OCTAVIAN BLEWITT, 20 MARCH 1855*

MS Royal Literary Fund.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Twentieth March 1855

My Dear Sir

I left on the desk just now,[†2] some little bound books[†3]—I think three—which Mr. Dilke brought down to lend me. Will you have the goodness to let them be given to my servant.

I lost no time in speaking to Mr. Forster, who was shocked and amazed by my account of what you had told me. He says that the Fund[†4] is not expended altogether (as I supposed it to be), but that he fears the trustees have no power to apply any part of it to anybody's use but Jerdan's. He will however, see his co Trustee, Mr. Arden,[†5] at once on the subject, and take his opinion as to that head.

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Octavian Blewitt Esquire.

To MARK LEMON, 20 MARCH 1855

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Night Twentieth March | 1855

My Dear Mark

Can you give me a call at your own time in the morning? I want to settle with you about our return from Ashford.

Ever affecy.

CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 21 MARCH 1855

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street | Piccadilly.

Tavistock House | Wednesday Twenty First March | 1855

My Dear Miss Coutts.

Having (as I told you), so strongly impressed on Mrs. Thompson[†6] that I felt sure she could not convince herself of the necessity of what you required,[†1] and that she had a latent feeling that it was hard upon her—I deemed it prudent after I left you the other day, to decide not to communicate with her for two or three days, in case I should cross any communication from her. The enclosed[†2] arrived last night, and made me very glad that I had kept silent.

There is, of course, an end of it. She strongly confirms my first opinion of her, and I do not doubt her being perfectly truthful. I think she will recover herself somehow, yet.

Ever Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

To HENRY MORLEY, 22 MARCH 1855

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Thursday Twenty Second March 1855.

My Dear Morley

As I apprehend this house to be necessarily in your way,[†3] I will be ready for you on Monday at ½ past 1.

Ever Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Henry Morley Esquire.

To J. L. ALLEN,[†4] 23 MARCH 1855

Mention in Sotheby's catalogue, July 1951; addressed J. L. Allen. Date: "Friday Twenty Third March 1855" (MS Private); misdated 3 Mar in catalogue and 21 Mar in D, XLVII (1951), 200.

Giving notice that he desires to relinquish, on the following Lady Day,[†5] the coach-house and stable which he had been renting at 4 Woburn Mews.[†6]

To MR MOOR,[†7] 23 MARCH 1855

MS Mr W. A. Foyle.

Tavistock House, London | Twenty Third March 1855.

Mr. Charles Dickens begs to inform Mr. Moor that he has no evening to spare to read the Carol, and that he has no terms for doing so.

To W. M. THACKERAY, 23 MARCH 1855

MS Berg Collection.

Tavistock House | Friday Evening Twenty Third March | 1855.

My Dear Thackeray.

I have read in the Times to day an account of your last night's Lecture,[†1] and cannot refrain from assuring you in all truth and earnestness, that I am profoundly touched by your generous reference to me.[†2] I do not know how to tell you what a glow it spread over my heart. Out of its fulness I do entreat you to believe that I shall never forget your words of commendation. If you could wholly know, at once how you have moved me and how you have animated me, you would be the happier I am very certain.

Faithfully Yours Ever

CD.

W. M. Thackeray Esquire.

To WILKIE COLLINS, 24 MARCH 1855

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Saturday Twenty Fourth March 1855

My Dear Collins.

I am charmed to hear of the great improvement, and really hope now that you are beginning to see land.

The Train (an Express one) leaves London Bridge Station on Tuesday at half past eleven in the forenoon. Fire and comfort are ordered to be in readiness at the Inn at Ashford. We shall have to return at half past 2 in the morning—getting to town before 5—but the interval between the Reading and the Mail will be spent by what would be called in a popular musical entertainment[†3] the blink o' our ain fireside

—which reminds me to observe that I am dead sick of the Scottish tongue[†4] in all its moods and tenses.

You have guessed right![†5] The best of it was, that she[†6] wrote to Wills, saying she must particularly stipulate not to have her proofs touched, "even by Mr. Dickens". That immortal creature had gone over the proofs with great pains[†7]—had of course taken out the stiflings, hand-plungings, lungeings, and other convulsions[†1]—and had also taken out her weakenings and damagings of her own effects. "Very well", said the Gifted Man, "she shall have her own way. But after it's published, shew her this Proof and ask her to consider whether her story would have been the better or the worse for it".[†2]

When you see Millais, tell him that if he would like a quotation for his fireman picture,[†3] there is a very suitable and appropriate one to be got from Gay's Trivia.[†4]

Wills informed Georgina the night before last, that his sister (I think you have seen the Virgin), is

"Abnormal"[†5]

—and, after meditating a little while, added that neither she nor her brother "had any business to be born."[†6] From which I infer that Abnormal is a kind of scientific substitute for Ricketty.

Ever Yours | (Normally)
CHARLES DICKENS

I dined with an old General[†7] yesterday, who went perfectly mad at dinner about the Times—exudations taking place from his mouth while he denied all its statements,[†8] that were partly foam, and partly turbot with white sauce. He persisted likewise, in speaking of that Journal as "Him".

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 24 MARCH 1855*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street | Piccadilly.

Tavistock House | Saturday Twenty Fourth March | 1855.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I enclose your paper,[†9] and a note from Miss Martineau[†10] who has returned it to me this morning. I agree in her idea which I think is founded on a strong principle in human nature.[†11] I have no suggestion of my own to offer on what appears to me extremely sound and good in all respects, except that individually I would never refer any one—but especially a child—to the Old Testament when I have the New Testament and its one great figure, for the illustration of every conceivable moral lesson.

I observed in the Scutari letter in the Times yesterday,[†1] that Sutherland[†2] is not to remain there[†3] but is to get on with all expedition to Balaklava.[†4] Unless you obtained that letter from the War Office,[†5] I have some misgivings that there will yet be obstruction in the way of the drying apparatus.

Conceive this!—When they[†6] were examining Mr. Macdonald the Times agent,[†7] they missed (from inexperience in putting questions)[†8] this astonishing piece of evidence.[†9] "I saw Lord Stratford,[†10] and Lord Stratford angrily denied that there was anything amiss in the Hospitals or anything wanted there, and said I had best give him the fund[†11] with which I was entrusted, towards the building of a church"![†12]

Ever Most Faithfully Yrs.

CD.

To W. M. THACKERAY, 26 MARCH 1855

MS Berg Collection.

Tavistock House | Monday Twenty Sixth March 1855

My Dear Thackeray

Many thanks for the extract.[†1] You say it is not much, but I think it is—very much—and I have read it with great emotion.

It was a very large sum to get[†2]—most generously got. I had already given my five pounds before I received your note, but you shall call upon me at any time for another five, when you may have reason to think that a little reserved fund may be timely and useful.

Ever Yours

CD.

To MR MOOR, 27 MARCH 1855

MS Mr W. A. Foyle.

Tavistock House, London | Twenty Seventh March 1855.

Mr. Charles Dickens begs to assure Mr. Moor that he has taken no offence. In replying to Mr. Moor's letter, he merely intended with all possible brevity to explain that he does not read for money or as a commercial speculation.

To DR LANKESTER,[†3] 29 MARCH 1855*

MS Private.

Tavistock House | Thursday March Twenty Ninth 1855.

My Dear Dr. Lankester.

I have been waiting to answer your note, with a dim idea that I might be able in course of time to do something towards setting such an unjust absurdity as you describe right.

It appears, however, to be merely a "practice" with the Committee.[†4] There is clearly nothing in the Charter or in the original design of the Society, so limiting the Grants. I perfectly remember that some years ago when I was a Member of the Committee, a gentleman who had written a variety of scientific papers (Astronomical I think) was considered not qualified for relief, because he had never published

"a Book". I shewed the enormous folly of this objection, and strongly contended against it.[†1] And I feel sure (my impression being confirmed by the Secretary's), that I did obtain him the grant he wanted.[†2]

I am Chairman of the Committee for the New Charter. It is sitting now, and will certainly propose a considerable extension of the Society's usefulness. Its report will have to be made, finally, to a General Meeting of the Members of the Corporation. In making it, I will then add, from myself, such remarks on your communication as I hope will change that system.

Always Very Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Dr. Lankester.

To MRS WINTER, 29 MARCH 1855

MS Comtesse de Suzannet.

Tavistock House | Twenty Ninth March 1855

My Dear Mrs. Winter

Here is a box at the Adelphi for tomorrow night, where I am told a very good piece[†3] is being played. I hope to fill up an empty corner thereof in the course of the evening, but am not quite sure of my movements, as I shall be waylaid by Household Words.

With kind regards. | Always Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mrs. Winter.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 30 MARCH 1855*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street | Piccadilly.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS,
Friday Thirtieth March 1855

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I have enquired about the writer of this letter,[†4] and Mr. Wills has seen him. I did not take to the letter, but I find nothing whatever against the man. I have asked concerning him among people who have employed him, and they give him an excellent character. He himself is intelligent, modest, and industrious. The work he has been accustomed to, is of a grubbing and toilsome kind—and on the inferior class of newspaper[†1]—But he seems to have done it quite honestly and steadily.

It appears that he took a large house (relatively to his circumstances) with a view to his daughter's[†2] keeping a school, and that scholars never came, and that his goods were seized and sold. This catastrophe having occurred since the date of his letter to you, he is now quit of that speculation by having nothing left. As that end would probably have come to it in any case, it is all the better over.

There is no doubt that he is poor and sufficiently meritorious. If you think it well to give him any small sum, I will, of course, gladly take charge of it.[†3]

Ever Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

To MRS MARCHMONT, 30 MARCH 1855*

MS The Dickens Fellowship, Adelaide. Address: Mrs. Marchmont | Urania Cottage | Near The White Horse | Shepherds Bush.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS
Friday Thirtieth March 1855

Dear Mrs. Marchmont.

Yes, as to Tuesday.[†4]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To DR JOHN SUTHERLAND,[†5] [?LATE MARCH 1855]

Mention in Sutherland to CD, 27 June 55 (MS Morgan Library). Date: The Raphael, which took the drying machine, sailed 31 Mar.

A note accompanying a drying machine and its bearer, for the hospital at Scutari, presented by Miss Coutts.

April

To JOHN FORSTER, [?2-3 APRIL 1855]

Extracts in F, 1872-4, III, ii, 50*n*, and F, XI, iii, 826. Date: first extract 2 Apr, date of dinner; second extract 3 Apr according to Forster; third extract early Apr, "a couple of months" after a letter of 3 Feb according to Forster, and CD had proofs of first paper by 13 Apr.

Walking on Hampstead Heath to think over his Theatrical Fund speech he met Lemon, and they went together to Stanfield. He has been very ill, and he told us that large pictures are too much for him, and he must confine himself to small ones. But I would not have this, I declared he must paint bigger ones than ever, and what would he think of beginning upon an act-drop for a proposed vast theatre at Tavistock House?[†1] He laughed and caught at this, we cheered him up very much, and he said he was quite a man again.

The Government hit took immensely,[†2] but I'm afraid to look at the report, these things are so ill done.[†3] It came into my head as I was walking about at Hampstead yesterday.... On coming away I told B.[†4] we must have a toastmaster in future less given to constant drinking while the speeches are going on. B. replied "Yes sir, you are quite right sir, he has no head whatever sir, look at him now sir"—Toastmaster[†5] was weakly contemplating the coats and hats—"do you not find it difficult to keep your hands off him sir, he ought to have his head knocked against the wall sir,—and he should sir, I assure you sir, if he was not in too debased a condition to be aware of it sir."

I have rather a bright idea, I think, for Household Words this morning: a fine little bit of satire: an account of an Arabic MS. lately discovered very like the Arabian Nights—called the Thousand and One Humbugs.[†6] With new versions of the best known stories.[†7]

To A. H. LAYARD, 3 APRIL 1855

MS British Library.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Evening Third April 1855

My Dear Layard

Since I had the pleasure of seeing you again at Miss Coutts's[†8] (really a greater pleasure to me than I could easily tell you), I have thought a good deal on the duty we all owe you of helping you as much as we can.[†1] Being on very intimate terms with Lemon the Editor of Punch (a most affectionate and true-hearted fellow), I mentioned to him in confidence what I had at heart. You will find yourself the subject of their next large cut,[†2] and of some lines in an earnest spirit.[†3] He again suggested the point to Mr. Shirley Brookes, one of their regular corps,[†4] who will do what is right in the Illustrated London News[†5] and the Weekly Chronicle[†6]—papers that go into the hands of large numbers of people.[†7] I have also communicated with Jerrold, whom I can trust, and have begged him not to be diverted from the straight path of help to the most useful man in England on all possible occasions.[†8] Forster I will speak to, carefully, and I have no doubt it will quicken him a little—not that we have anything to complain of in his direction.[†9] If you ever see any new loophole, cranny, needle's-eye, through which I can present your case in Household Words,[†10] I do most earnestly entreat you, as your staunch friend and admirer—you can have no truer—to indicate it to me at any time or season, and to count upon my being Damascus Steel to the core.

All this is nothing; because all these men, and thousands of others, dote upon you. But I know it would be a comfort to me in your hard-fighting place to be assured of such sympathy, and therefore only I write.

You have other recreations for your Sundays in the session, I dare say, than to come here. But it is generally a day on which I do not go out, and when we dine at half past five in the easiest way in the world, and smoke in the peacefullest manner. Perhaps one of these Sundays after Easter, you might not be indisposed to begin to dig us out?[†1]

And I should like, on a Saturday of your appointing, to get a few of the serviceable men I know—such as I have mentioned—about you here. Will you think of this too, and suggest a Saturday for our dining together?[†2]

I am really ashamed and moved that you should do your part so manfully and ever be left alone in the conflict. I felt you to be all you are, the first moment I saw you.[†3] I know you will accept my regard and fidelity for what they are worth.

My Dear Layard | Very Heartily Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Austen H Layard Esquire

To MRS WINTER, 3 APRIL 1855

MS Huntington Library.

Tuesday Third April, 1855

My Dear Maria.

Going down to Ashford this day week, already with a bad cold, I increased it so much by getting into the intense heat consequent upon a reading of three hours[†4] and then coming up in the night (which I was obliged to do, having business in town next morning), that I was very unwell all the week, and on Friday night was so completely knocked up that I came home at 9 o'Clock to bed.[†5] A necessity is upon me now—as at most times—of wandering about in my own wild way, to think. I could no more resist this on Sunday or yesterday, than a man can dispense with food, or a horse can help himself from being driven. I hold my inventive capacity on the stern condition that it must master my whole life, often have complete possession of me, make its own demands upon me, and, sometimes for months together, put everything else away from me. If I had not known long ago that my place could never be held, unless I were at any moment ready to devote myself to it entirely, I should have dropped out of it very soon. All this I can hardly expect you to understand—or the restlessness and waywardness of an author's mind. You have never seen it before you,[†6] or lived with it, or had occasion to think or care about it, and you cannot have the necessary consideration for it. "It is only half an hour"—"it is only an afternoon"—"it is only an evening"—people say to me over and over again—but they don't know that it is impossible to command one's self sometimes to any stipulated and set disposal of five minutes—or that the mere consciousness of an engagement will sometimes worry a whole day. These are the penalties paid for writing books. Whoever is devoted to an Art must be content to deliver himself wholly up to it, and to find his recompense in it. I am grieved if you suspect me of not wanting to see you; but I can't help it; I must go my way, whether or no.

I thought you would understand that in sending the card for the box, I sent an assurance that there was nothing amiss. I am pleased to find that you were all so much interested with the play.[†1] My ladies say that the first part is too painful[†2] and wants relief. I have been going to see it a dozen times, but have never seen it yet, and never may. Madame Celeste[†3] is injured thereby (you see how unreasonable people are!) and says in the Green Room, with a very tight cheek, "M. Dickens est artiste! Mais il n'a jamais vu Janet Pride!"

It is like a breath of fresh spring air to know that that unfortunate Baby of yours is out of her one close room and has about half a pint of very doubtful air per day. I could only have become her Godfather on the condition that she had 500 gallons of open air at any rate, every day of her life. And you would soon see a rose or two in the face of my other little friend, Ella, if you opened all your doors and windows throughout the whole of all fine weather, from morning to night.

I am going off, I don't know where or how far, to ponder about I don't know what. Sometimes I am half in the mood to set off for France, sometimes I think I will go and walk about on the sea shore for three or four months, sometimes I look towards the Pyrenees, sometimes Switzerland. I made a compact with a great Spanish authority[†4] last week, and vowed I would go to Spain. Two days afterwards, Layard and I agreed to go to Constantinople when Parliament rises. Tomorrow I shall probably discuss with somebody else, the idea of going to Greenland or the North Pole. The end of all this, most likely, will be, that I shall shut myself up in some out of the way place I have never yet thought of, and go desperately to work there.

Once upon a time I didn't do such things, you say. No. But I have done them through a good many years now, and they have become myself and my life.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To WILKIE COLLINS, 4 APRIL 1855

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Wednesday Fourth April, 1855

My Dear Collins

I have read the article in the Leader[†1] on Napoleon's reception in England,[†2] with great pleasure and entire concurrence. I think it is forcible and just, and yet states the real case with great moderation.[†3] Not knowing of it, I had been speaking to its author[†4] on that very subject in the Pit of the Olympic[†5] on Saturday night.[†6]

And bye the bye, as the Devil would have it (for I assume that he is always up to something and that everything is his fault—I being, as you know, evangelical), I mislaid your letter with Mr. Pigott's address in it, and "didn't like" to ask himself for it. Do, like an amiably corroded hermit, send me that piece of information again.

I hope the medical authority will not—as I may say—cut your nose off, to be revenged on your face.[†7] You might want it at some future time. It is but natural that the Doctor should be irritated by so much opposition—still—isn't the offending feature in some sort a man and a brother?[†8]

The Pantomime[†9] was amazingly good, and it really was a comfortable thing to see all conventional dignity so outrageously set at naught. It was astonishingly well done, and extremely funny. Not a man in it who wasn't quite as good as the Humbugs who pass their lives in doing nothing else.[†10] I observed[†11] at the Fund Dinner[†12] that the actors are in the same condition about it as they were when we played.[†13] Idiots!

May the Spring advance with rosy foot,[†1] and the voice of the Turtle be shortly heard in the land![†2]

Ever faithfully

CD.

I had a very agreeable letter indeed from our friend Pugh at Ashford.[†3]

[†a]Do you know that Lewes is here again?[†4] whether with any idea of emerging from what Carlyle calls The Pit of TOphet, I can't say.[†a]

To SAMUEL PHELPS, 5 APRIL 1855

MS Rosenbach Foundation. Address: Samuel Phelps Esquire | 8 Canonbury Square | Islington.

Tavistock House | Fifth April 1855

My Dear Sir

After some difficulty, I am assured that matters are now arranged between Mrs. Martin and Mr. Buckstone, for the production of Mr. Saunders's play. I therefore think it right, immediately to relieve you of any further trouble in the matter, and to withdraw the play from your hands agreeably to the understanding between us.

Always Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Samuel Phelps Esquire.

To A. H. LAYARD, 10 APRIL 1855

MS British Library.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Tenth April, 1855

My Dear Layard

I shall of course observe the strictest silence, at present, in reference to your resolutions.[†5] It will be a most acceptable occupation to me, to go over them with you; and I have not a doubt of their producing a strong effect out of doors.[†1]

There is nothing in the present time at once so galling and so alarming to me as the alienation of the people from their own public affairs. I have no difficulty in understanding it. They have had so little to do with the Game through all these years of Parliamentary Reform, that they have sullenly laid down their cards and taken to looking on. The Players who are left at the table do not see beyond it—conceive that the gain and loss and all the interest of the play are in their hands—and will never be wiser until they and the table and the lights and the money are all overturned together.[†2] And I believe the discontent to be so much the worse for smouldering instead of blazing openly, that it is extremely like the general mind of France before the breaking out of the first Revolution,[†3] and is in danger of being turned by any one of a thousand accidents—a bad harvest—the last straw too much of aristocratic insolence or incapacity—a defeat abroad—a mere chance at home—into such a Devil of a conflagration as has never been beheld since.

Meanwhile, all our English Tufthunting, Toad Eating, and other manifestations of accursed Gentility[†4]—to say nothing of Palmerston's,[†5] Graham's,[†6] Wood's[†7] Sidney Herbert's[†8] and the Lord knows who's defiances of the proven Truth before six hundred and fifty men[†9]—are[†10] expressing themselves every day. So, every day the disgusted millions with this unnatural gloom and calm upon them, are confirmed and hardened in the very worst of moods. Finally, round all this is an atmosphere of poverty, hunger, and ignorant desperation, of the mere existence of which, perhaps not one man in a thousand of those not actually enveloped in it, through the whole extent of this country, has the least idea.

It seems to me an absolute impossibility to direct the spirit of the people at this pass, until it shews itself. If they would begin to bestir themselves in the vigorous national manner—if they would appear in Political Unions—array themselves peacefully, but in vast numbers, against a system that they know to be rotten altogether—make themselves heard like the Sea, all round this Island—I for one should be in such a movement, heart and soul, and should think it a duty of the plainest kind to go along with it (and try to guide it), by all possible means. But you can no more help a people who do not help themselves, than you can help a man who does not help himself. And until the people can be got up from the lethargy which is an awful symptom of the advanced state of their disease, I know of nothing that can be done beyond keeping their wrongs continually before them.

I shall hope to see you soon after you come back.[†1] Your speeches at Aberdeen[†2] are most admirable, manful, and earnest.[†3] I would have such speeches at every market cross, and in every town hall, and among all sorts and conditions of men[†4]—up in the very balloons, and down in the very diving-bells.

Ever Cordially Yours

CD.

To J. E. MILLAIS, 10 APRIL 1855

MS Huntington Library.

Tavistock House | Tenth April, 1855

My Dear Mr. Millais

I am very sorry that I cannot have the great pleasure of seeing your picture to day,[†5] as I am obliged to go a little way out of town.

I asked Wilkie Collins to let you know that there is a curious accidental appositeness in some lines in Gay's Trivia.[†6] You will find them over leaf here, to the number of four. The whole passage about a fire and firemen, is some four and twenty lines long.[†1]

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

J. E. Millais Esquire.

Mov'd by the mother's streaming eyes and prayers,
The helpless infant through the flame he bears,
With no less virtue, than through hostile fire
The Dardan hero bore his aged sire.[†2]

To BENJAMIN WEBSTER, 10 APRIL 1855

Mention in Anderson Galleries catalogue, Feb 1922; MS 1 p.; dated Tavistock House, 10 Apr 55.

Introducing the Hon. Edmund Phipps.[†3]

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 12 APRIL 1855*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street.

Tavistock House | Twelfth April 1855

My Dear Miss Coutts

I send you my little suggestions for making the Examination notes[†4] plainer, and not proclaiming them quite so stiffly—as from a Platform.

Enclosed is a note from the man to whom I gave ten pounds.[†5] You may like to see it. I really think it is very well bestowed.

Also a note[†6] from a man named Hayward,[†7] of whom I know nothing. I should have replied (as I do, every day), that I must decline to trouble you on the subject, but for the reference to your father.[†8] Not being able quite to satisfy myself whether or no you would desire to see it on that account, I think it on the whole best to send it to you. There is not the least necessity for your appearing in the matter at all, if you let me have it back soon. I should merely reply as I have already mentioned.

I am going to Shepherds Bush to day, to check off the repairs to be estimated.

My Dear Miss Coutts | Always Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

To SAMUEL PHELPS, 12 APRIL 1855

MS Rosenbach Foundation. Address: Samuel Phelps Esquire | Theatre Royal Glasgow | N. B.[†1]

Tavistock House, London | Twelfth April 1855

My Dear Mr. Phelps

I have throughout been quite sensible (and so, I am sure, has Mr. Saunders), that you have done everything you reasonably could to advance the prospects of Love's Martyrdom. Pray believe that throughout these negociations I have not for a moment thought otherwise.

Very faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Samuel Phelps Esquire.

To W. H. WILLS, 13 APRIL 1855

MS Huntington Library.

Tavistock House | Friday Thirteenth April 1855

My Dear Wills

I send you the No.[†2] with some corrections in the Thousand and One Humbugs.[†3] Look to the punctuation of Soldiers' Wives.[†4]

Do you suppose the letter I enclose to be from the Mr. Holt one has heard of?[†5] Send it me back, with a Yes or No.

I have read your MS attentively, and return it herewith. It has interest, but it seems to me to have one great want which I cannot overcome. It is all working machinery, and the people are not alive. I see the wheels going and hear them going, and the people are as like life as machinery can ever make them—but they don't get beyond the point of the moving waxwork. It is very difficult to explain how this is, because it is a matter of intuitive perception and feeling; but perhaps I may give two slight examples. If the scene where the woman who dies, is lying in bed, were truly done, the conversation between the heroine and the boy would belong to it—could do no violence to it—and whatever it might be about, would inevitably associate itself in the reader's mind with the figure on the bed, and would lead up to the catastrophe that soon happens. If the boy on the outside of the Coach were naturally done, his illness would be a natural thing and one would receive it accordingly. Now, the conversation by the bed is an interruption to the idea of the dying woman, and the dying woman is an interruption to the conversation, and they don't fit. And it is plain that you, the author, make the boy ill because you want him to be ill—for, if the few closing lines of the chapter, referring to him, were taken away, the reader would have no reason whatever to suppose that anything was the matter with him. The Sir Leicester Dedlock of the story and his Mr. Tulkinghorn are open to similar objections, and the whole of the opening is much too long for what it contains.

The scene outside the Coach has a good deal of merit in it, but the same direful want. Consider if you had been outside that coach, and had been suddenly carried into the midst of a Torchlight meeting of that time, whether you would have brought away no other impression of it than you give the reader. Imagine it a remembrance of your own, and look at the passage. And exactly because that is not true, the conduct of the men who clamber up is in the last degree improbable. Whereas if the scene were truly and powerfully rendered, the improbability more or less necessary to all tales and allowable in them, would become a part of a thing so true and vivid, that the reader must accept it whether he likes it or not.

There is merit too in the scene on the top of St. Paul's, and in the Engraver's house—but I still feel that Frankenstein has made the people. You are always getting into the footsteps, too, of a writer I know; and when your own shoes might otherwise leave a plain bold mark, they get so entangled with the prints of his, that the reader, following on the track of both, gets confused and bothered.[†1]

I know it to be in the nature of the case that these objections to the story must inevitably become stronger as it advances, because there the difficulties grow greater. I mention them honestly; firstly, because you want me to do so; and secondly because I usually accept so much and suppose so much, in reading Fiction, that I do not think I find more fault than another, but rather the reverse.

Faithfully Ever

CD.

To [T. W.J. CONNOLLY],[†2] 14 APRIL 1855[†3]

Extract from Maggs Bros catalogue, Autumn 1922; MS 2 pp.; dated Tavistock House, 14 Apr 55.

I have received your book[†4] with very great pleasure. The fact of your being its author is most honourable to yourself.... I feel, as your fellow-countryman, a personal pride in such a work.... I have sent it to a gentleman associated with

Household Words[†1] and I have told him he will gratify me very much if he will go a little out of his way to write an early account of it.[†2]

To JOHN FORSTER, 14 APRIL 1855

MS Victoria & Albert Museum (FC).

Tavistock House | Saturday Fourteenth April | 1855.

My Dear Forster

I cannot express to you how very much delighted I am with the Steele.[†3] I think it incomparably the best of the series.[†4] The pleasanter humanity of the subject may commend it more to one's liking; but that again requires a delicate handling, which you have given to it in a most charming manner. It is surely not possible to approach a man with a finer sympathy; and the assertion of the claims of Literature throughout,[†5] is of the noblest and most gallant kind.

I don't agree with you about the serious papers in the Spectator,[†6] which I think (whether they be Steele's or Addison's) are generally as indifferent as the humour of the Spectator is delightful. And I have always had a notion that Prue[†7] understood her husband very well, and held him, in consequence, when a fonder woman with less show of caprice must have let him go.[†8] But these are points of opinion. The paper is masterly. And all I have got to say is, that if Macaulay[†9] had a grain of the honest sentiment with which it overflows, he never would or could have made so great a mistake.[†10]

Ever affectionately

CD.

To WILKIE COLLINS, 15 APRIL 1855

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Sunday Fifteenth April 1855

My Dear Collins

Hurrah!

I shall be charmed to see you once more in a Normal state, and propose Friday next for our meeting at the Garrick at a quarter before five. We will then proceed to the Ship and Turtle.[†1]

I fell foul of Wills yesterday, for that in "dealing with" the second part of your story,[†2] he had not (in two places) "indoctrinated" the Printer with the change of name.[†3] He explained to me that on the whole and calmly regarding all the facts from a politico-economical point of view, it was a more triumphant thing to have two mistakes than none—and indeed that, philosophically considered, this was rather the object and province of a periodical.

Faithfully Always

CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 16 APRIL 1855*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Sixteenth April 1855

My Dear Miss Coutts

I have to attend a Committee at the Literary Fund to day[†4] (my Reform movement), and as I am in the chair I must necessarily wait until it is over. I doubt if I shall be able to get away by 3, but I will come straight to Stratton Street as soon as I do get away. I should think I may be with you soon after 4. At all events I will come directly.

Ever Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 16 APRIL 1855*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Monday Sixteenth April 1855

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I arrived in Stratton Street at half past three to day, but finding you had company, took fright (being dusty[†1] and Anti Napoleonic),[†2] and came away. Shall I come again tomorrow? If so, tell me at what time.

Ever Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

To ALBERT SMITH, 16 APRIL 1855

Extract from Sotheby's catalogue, 23 June 1902; MS 1 p.; addressed Albert Smith; dated 16 Apr 55.

I hasten to say in reply to your question that I have not a doubt that Drury Lane is too large for the purpose.[†3] A great deal would be lost there, which would be certain to tell in the Lyceum.[†4]

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 18 APRIL 1855*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street.

Tavistock House | Wednesday Eighteenth April | 1855.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

After going carefully over the house at Shepherd's Bush, I thought it best to write out a little specification of the work to be done, and send it to the doer for his estimate of the cost. It is so much better in such a case. I enclose two papers, containing the specifications I drew up, and the estimates for painting and repairing. Will you look at them, approve, and return them to me?

Mrs. Marchmont has seen a very fair Cabinet Piano[†5] for 9 Guineas. I doubt if we are likely to do better. Will you let me know at the same time whether I may tell her to buy it.

I think you did not return to me Mr. Hayward's letter.[†6] Without the address I cannot send him the five pounds.

Always Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

Miss Burdett Coutts.

To JOHN SAUNDERS, 19 APRIL 1855*

MS Huntington Library.

Tavistock House | Thursday Nineteenth April 1855

My Dear Sir

I have been so much engaged these last few days,[†1] that I could not go over the Play[†2] with the needful attention until last night.

All that I have cut and marked in it, I have cut and marked in pencil,[†3] so that it may be easily restored to its former state.

I do not expect you, mind, to accept all my suggestions—but I have made them all with a distinct reason, and always with an eye to stage effects and stage dangers—of which I believe I have some knowledge, and in Mr. Macready's time had frequent occasion to consider.

For example, I am perfectly certain that those words in the mouths of the Ruffians[†4] would make the people laugh; and I am equally certain that the Sheriff-like announcement "Your hour is come!"[†5] to a solemn man, going to be married, would be perilously ludicrous. Bertha and Philip[†6] cannot do too little.[†7] And everybody must, I protest from the heart of the pit and the forehead of the gallery, be less interjectional.[†1]

Margaret's part, I have not touched. It is for Miss Faucit to judge of that.[†2] But I think the pruning-knife indispensable to it, and I still hold that hurting of her wrist to be fraught with all manner of danger.[†3]

When the Play is nearly ready, I will come and see it on the Stage,[†4] if you wish me. The actors will find some points as they advance, which must be treated with the greatest discretion and not flung at the audience.

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John Saunders Esquire.

To MARK LEMON, 20 APRIL 1855*

MS Trinity College, Cambridge.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS
Twentieth April (Friday) 1855

My Dear Mark

I am in a bit of a difficulty. The Pantomime men[†5] have asked me to play Charles Matthews's[†6] part[†7] in a Romantic Idea,[†8] on the Queen's night.[†9] And I think Phipps[†10] has put them up to it.

If you would play the Landlord in the Piece (Mr. Rogueingrain),[†1] I think I would rather do the part—though there's nothing in it[†2]—than do an uncivil thing under the circumstances, and remembering the Guild.[†3] If you could get yourself up to the pitch, I would then reply, "I will play this part, if Mark will play that". Supposing they reply, "but we have a man for that, and dont[†4] know how to get rid of him"—then my condition cannot be complied with, and I am well out of it.

Will you look at the book and let me know in the morning? I must answer without causing loss of time. I remember that the mock Tragedy portion of the character where the Landlord is Count Grimbald)[†5] used to be very funny.

Ever affectionately
CD.

To MARK LEMON, 21 APRIL 1855

MS Comtesse de Suzannet.

Tavistock House | Saturday Twenty First April, 1855

My Dear Mark.

If you remain in the same mind, I will write, excusing myself, and not putting it upon you.[†6] But let us be quite sure we are right.

As to any quarrels in the Fielding,[†7] that involves nothing. A lunatic like Archdeckne[†8] (whom I suppose to be the terrible Dragon of that Symposium) might get in anywhere.

Only two points come into my mind as worth two pence.

First, I certainly have a pleasure in an opportunity of shewing men who talked such nonsense about the Guild actors[†9] (you know what I ever considered it worth), how different and much more generous it is in our nature to be. I confess that kind of superiority to be particularly acceptable to me.

Secondly, I have been waiting for the printing of our Literary Fund Report[†10] to go to Phipps with it as a matter of course,[†11] and endeavour to enlist the Queen's influence very decidedly on that side—which I am strongly of opinion may be done, even to the with-holding of her annual Subscription[†12] if they refuse to be reformed. Now, if I am asked (as I am, in a note from the bothering Albert who is in written communication with Phipps perpetually) to help them "as a compliment which the Queen will appreciate", and unconditionally refuse, I am afraid I may not only do a surly thing, personally towards the Court[†13] (and an ungracious one, after the Guild business), but may by the simplest means in the world damage a great cause. Think of these two heads, because it seems to me that you are rather viewing the thing unconsciously, from the confined area of Maiden Lane.[†1]

It appears to me that a middle course diplomacy will be best—and if you will come round when you come out, I will have the draft of a note ready to shew you.[†2]

Ever affectionately

CD.

To [?ALBERT SMITH], [?21 APRIL 1855]

Mention in To Lemon, 20 and 21 Apr 55. Date: probably written on 21 Apr.

Answering his suggestion that he play in A Romantic Idea before the Queen at Drury Lane.

To MRS WINTER, [?21 APRIL 1855]

Mention in To Mrs Winter, 11 June 55, as written and posted by CD but not received. Date: 21 Apr most likely from CD's known Sunday engagements.

Telling Mrs Winter that he will be out of town that Sunday and for several Sundays in succession.

To DANIEL MACLISE, 24 APRIL 1855*

MS University of Texas.

Tavistock House | Twenty Fourth April, 1855

My Dear Mac.

A thousand thanks for your kind remembrance of the picture.[†3] I send to Green[†4] this morning, to bring it carefully to your Studio.[†5]

Ever Faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

Daniel Maclise Esquire.

To MARK LEMON, 26 APRIL 1855

Text from MDGH, I, 394.

Tavistock House, | Thursday, April 26th, 1855.

My dear Mark,

I will call for you at two, and go with you to Highgate,[†1] by all means.

Leech and I called on Tuesday evening and left our loves. I have not written to you since, because I thought it best to leave you quiet for a day. I have no need to tell you, my dear fellow, that my thoughts have been constantly with you, and that I have not forgotten (and never shall forget) who sat up with me one night when a little place in my house was left empty.[†2]

It is hard to lose any child, but there are many blessed sources of consolation in the loss of a baby. There is a beautiful thought in Fielding's "Journey from this World to the Next,"[†3] where the baby he had lost many years before was found by him all radiant and happy, building him a bower in the Elysian Fields where they were to live together when he came.

Ever affectionately yours
CHARLES DICKENS

P.S.—Our kindest loves to Mrs. Lemon.

To JOHN FORSTER, 27 APRIL 1855

Extract in F, XI, iii, 826. Date: 27 Apr according to Forster.

A country which is discovered to be in this tremendous condition as to its war affairs;[†4] with an enormous black cloud of poverty in every town which is spreading and deepening every hour, and not one man in two thousand knowing anything about, or even believing in, its existence; with a non-working aristocracy, and a silent parliament,[†5] and everybody for himself and nobody for the rest; this is the prospect, and I think it a very deplorable one.

To JAMES GILBERT,[†1] 27 APRIL 1855*

MS Winifred A. Myers (Autographs) Ltd.

Tavistock House | Twenty Seventh April 1855

Dear Sir

In reply to your letter I beg to say that I am not going to take any step that I know of, in reference to the News Vendors' Institution, but preside over the ordinary business of an annual Meeting.[†2] I consider it a part of my duty as the President of the Society,[†3] to receive a statement of that business, only in an official and authorised manner. When the Secretary[†4] shall inform me (as he has already proposed to do in due time), that an appointment is sought from me with this object, I will immediately make one. But I think the observance of this little formality is necessary to my being in an impartial and perfectly fair position.

Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. James Gilbert.

To MARK LEMON, 30 APRIL 1855

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Thirtieth April 1855

My Dear Mark

Don't come later than 7 for the Cigar—because Stanny has turned up suddenly, and is here, and (of course) wants to go somewhere at half price.

Ever affecy.
CD.

To THE REGISTRARS[†5] OF THE ROYAL LITERARY FUND, 30 APRIL 1855

MS Royal Literary Fund.

Literary Fund Society | Monday Thirtieth April, 1855

Gentlemen.

We the undersigned Members of the Corporation, beg you to have the goodness to summon a Special General Meeting[†1] of the Literary Fund Society, to receive and consider the Report of the charter committee.

We are Gentlemen | Your faithful Servants
CHARLES DICKENS
JOHN FORSTER
B. W. PROCTER
W. M. THACKERAY
ROBERT BELL
JOHN FORBES
PETER CUNNINGHAM
A. PANIZZI
JOHN MURRAY
MARK LEMON[†2]

To The Registrars | of the Literary Fund[†3]

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 30 APRIL 1855*

MS Yale University Library.

Tavistock House | Monday Thirtieth April 1855

Dear Sir

I regret that I cannot have the pleasure of accepting the enclosed Poem, but I think quite enough has been said and sung on the subject.[†4]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

May

To EDWARD CHAPMAN, 1 MAY 1855*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Tuesday First May 1855

Dear Sir

I did not write on the subject of the Accounts, as you appointed the next week for the payment of the balance,[†5] and I thought it as well to wait until I could acknowledge its receipt: having nothing else to say that was as much to the purpose.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Edward Chapman Esquire

To CHARLES ELLIS, 1 MAY 1855

MS Messrs Charles Ellis & Co.

Tavistock House | Tuesday First May, 1855

Dear Mr. Ellis

When I altered this house,[†1] I took away two cellars at the back and left but poor cellarage as to space. I brought home wine from Italy the Autumn before last, and from France last Autumn, and really have just now no place to lay down Port Wine in. Otherwise I should have been glad to take a quarter cask of the Wine you mention.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To THE REV. WHITWELL ELWIN,[†2] 1 MAY 1855†

MS Comtesse de Suzannet.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Night First May 1855

[†a]My Dear Elwin—For I will overleap the second formality,[†3] for exactly the reasons which moved you to clear the first[†4] in a style so heartily acceptable to me.[†a]

I am very anxious to do what is generous and right in the matter of the Literary Fund; nor could I easily tell you how glad I should be to effect a change so honorable to us all, without an assault. But I wish you to consider one or two points that I think may present the question in a new light.

I have not been in the habit of attending that dinner[†5]—have only done so twice, in about twenty years.[†6] Consequently my non-attendance is no new or marked thing. Then, observe. If I were there, I could hardly be there without speaking. [†a]The Bishop of Oxford[†1] is not wholly free from that kind of land-seamanship which is expert in weaving and tacking; and he might (I do not say would), execute a manoeuvre[†2] or so which I might feel it necessary to reduce to the level of an ordinary straight-forward comprehension.[†a†3] Supposing this not to be the case, I have still a rather strong misgiving that the authorities would be scared if Mr. Blewitt reported that I had informed him of my intention to come, and that they would very much rather on the whole that I stayed away. [†a]Lastly I must confess for myself, that I could not possibly say anything without referring to my hopes of a change. And I am far from clear that this would be acceptable, however conciliatory and delicate my tone—though of course it would be as harmonious and graceful as is in the compass of the instrument.

On looking back to your note, I see you use the expression—"if you absent yourself from the dinner, merely because the vote has not yet been taken"—which seems to imply that you suppose me to have been habitually or frequently there. On learning how the fact stands, you may perhaps change your opinion. But if you still hold it, it certainly will have weight with me.[†a] The difficulty however, of being sure that I should not be a Nightmare to the management will still remain, unless that Body and I by some means or other be brought to a reciprocal assurance and understanding beforehand.

†aIf Murray†4 be, as I suppose, the third person towards whom you glance, pray make him acquainted, if you think it right, with the contents of this note, and impress upon him that†a I have only one desire—and that is, to act in good humour and good taste, and really hold out the hand of thorough good fellowship to them all. How can†5 I want to work against them in so gallant a cause, if we can but work together!

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Reverend Whitwell Elwin.

To DR. EDUARD ERDMANN,†6 1 MAY 1855*

MS University Library Halle | Saale.

Tavistock House, London | Tuesday First May, 1855

My Dear Sir

I have received your kind and flattering letter with the greatest pleasure; and beg to assure you that your generous interest in my books, fills me with gratification. The little insects of which you write so pleasantly, come out only in summer weather; but I feel certain from your warm-hearted, earnest tone, that all weathers are alike to you, and that your friendly admiration is not the short-lived one of a sunny day. For this reason, and also because your philosophy is of a high and noble sort, I will not admit the justice of that one comparison. But with all the rest of your letter I have a hearty sympathy, and I thank you for it most sincerely.

My Dear Sir | Yours faithfully and obliged
CHARLES DICKENS

Dr. Edward Erdmann.

To MRS GASKELL, 1 MAY 1855

Extract in Anderson Galleries catalogue, 26 April 1916; MS 2 pp.; dated Tavistock House, 1 May 55.

You are at perfect liberty to collect your stories &c in Household Words, and republish them separately.†1

To MR HUTCHINGS,†2 1 MAY 1855

Mention in John Heise catalogue No. 2452; MS (3rd person) 1 p.; dated Tavistock House, 1 May 55.

Sending money for a subscription.[†3]

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT,[†4] 1 MAY 1855*

MS Berg Collection.

Tavistock House | Tuesday First May, 1855.

Sir

I feel very much obliged to you for your courteous note, and think I cannot better acknowledge its spirit than by making the exchange you propose.[†5] I have therefore put my juvenile complaint to the Post-Office, into the fire, and send you this instead. Thinking you might like this all the better if it were associated with one of my books, I transcribe a few words from David Copperfield,[†6] on the opposite side.

Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

"No. I lay in my basket, and my mother lay in her bed; but Betsey Trotwood Copperfield was for ever in the land of dreams and shadows, the tremendous region whence I had so lately travelled; and the light upon the window of our room shone out upon the earthly bourne of all such travellers, and the mound above the ashes and the dust that once was he without whom I had never been."—

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 2 MAY 1855

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street | Piccadilly.

Tavistock House | Wednesday Second May, 1855

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I looked carefully at the Highgate piece of ground the other day,[†1] and I think it on the whole very eligible for preservation as an open space.

These are my reasons.

1. It abuts immediately on the lane[†2] as you go up to the Cemetery, and consequently never could be diminished or built in upon that margin.

2. If the field opposite to it and below your large summer-house belongs to you, that West side of the ground is wonderfully free.

3. The ground itself is so shaped that it seems scarcely feasible to build anything there outside the top wall but one or two Villas on the top of the rise, with lawns or gardens sloping downward to the piece of ground. Which would not at all detract from its beauty, and would not too closely hem it in.

4. The plan of building now carrying out on the East or Small Pox Hospital[†3] side, suggests that in that direction also, the piece of ground will have gardens turned towards it.

Lastly the ground itself is of a wonderfully appropriate shape for an open space,[†4] and is so high in the most ornamental part that the view must always remain. The bottom would make an admirable children's play ground, and the upper part with a few seats and a few more trees would be a beautiful little Park in itself.

When you happen to be at Highgate and to think of it, will you be so kind as to ask your gardener to go and look at my grave[†5]—see where he could plant that tree you proposed to give me (outside the railing, so that it never need be disturbed)—and then explain to the Manager on the ground what he wants to do, and to see how he can get leave to do it? If they want me to pay any more for the spot in which the tree is planted, he can conclude that done. I ask you this favor, because the Manager and I, without the tree or the gardener, might talk about it till Doomsday and get no nearer to a result.

Remind Mr. Brown that the beginning of the fulfilment of my prophecy of yesterday, is the Sheffield Meeting reported in to-days Times.[†6] I begin to hope the Country is waking up. Its doing so, is the only safety for you and me and all well-disposed people.

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

To EDWARD W. COLE, 3 MAY 1855

Text from the Minute Book of the Newsvendors' Benevolent and Provident Institution, 8 May 1855.

Tavistock House | 3rd. May 1855

Sir.

I shall be happy to receive the Deputation[†1] on Wednesday in next week at 5 o'Clock.

Yr. faithful Servt.

(signed) CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. E. W. Cole.

To LADY OLLIFFE, 3 MAY 1855*

MS Mrs E. D. Budden.

Tavistock House | Third May 1855

My Dear Lady Olliffe

You know what a retiring Philosopher your slave is, and therefore you will not be surprised to learn that he has not the faintest idea of adding his personality to the French Exhibition, after flying one hundred miles from the English one.

But we hope to come to Paris at the end of October, and to stay six months. I am living on that hope at present, or I should die of political discontent.

Georgina will write to you as soon as we go to the Seaside (some time in July), and tell you what kind of accommodation we shall want, and where. Perhaps it may so fall out that you may in the course of the Autumn hear of something suitable, going to be free at about our time. If we should be able to discover nothing in Paris to answer our purpose, I have some idea of going to the North Pole. I shall carry your image there if I do, and be—there or anywhere—with a constancy peculiar to myself,

Very Sincerely Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Lady Olliffe

To J. R. PLANCHÉ, 3 MAY 1855

Composite text from facsimile in Sir Merton Russell-Cotes, Home and Abroad: an Autobiography of an Octogenarian, privately printed, 1921, II, 874 (aa) and from The Recollections and Reflections of J. R. Planché, 1872, II, 159.

Tavistock House | Third May, 1855

Dear Planché,

[a]I am delighted with the book,[†1] and will try to write some little article in Household Words[†2] that shall do no violence to it.

There is a remarkable individuality in that curious portrait;[†3] and it is of a most satisfactory nature. She looks like a woman who could tell her stories vivâ voce, as well as write them.

Many thanks.

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS[a]
J. R. Planché, Esq.

To DR PRICE,[†4] 3 MAY 1855*

MS Dickens House.

Tavistock House | Third May, 1855.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his Compts. to Dr. Price, and begs to reply in the affirmative to Dr. Price's enquiry.

To ALBERT SMITH, 3 MAY 1855*

Text from transcript, Huntington Library.

Tavistock House | Third May 1855.

My Dear Smith,

I think somebody—somewhere—must have made some mistake? I have only received vouchers for two dress circle tickets.[†5]

Faithfully always

C. D.

To CLARKSON STANFIELD, 3 MAY 1855

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Tavistock House | Thursday Third May 1855

My Dear Stanny

Mark is unfortunately engaged to dine with Charles Taylor[†1] and some other men, at the very identical G, on the very identical day.

But this is not the worst of it. I—the exact, the unimpeachable, the correct, the balanced-and-worked-by-clock-work Dick—have made a horrible mistake and forgotten a previous claim for tomorrow![†2] But I'll be down with you by ½ past 8. In the meantime I will order your dinner of course—but only for two.

Ever affecy.

CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?2-3 MAY 1855]

Extract and summary in F, VIII, i, 623. Date: CD described his restlessness over beginning Little Dorrit to several correspondents in May and twice wrote that he had been on a "railroad" (To Leigh Hunt, 4 May, and To Miss Coutts, 8 May), which would place this letter slightly earlier.

When about to fall to work on Little Dorrit he excused himself from an engagement he should have kept because the story is breaking out all round me, and I am going off down the railroad to humour it.

To LEIGH HUNT, 4 MAY 1855

MS Comtesse de Suzannet. Address: Leigh Hunt Esquire | 7 Cornwall Road | Hammersmith.

Tavistock House | Friday Fourth May 1855

My Dear Hunt.

I have been so constantly engaged and occupied since I came home from Paris, that I have never (as you know) got to your teapot,[†3] though I have often (as you don't know) paved the road to Hammersmith with good intentions.

I am now, to boot, in the wandering—unsettled—restless—uncontroullable[†4] state of being about to begin a new book. At such a time I am as infirm of purpose as Macbeth,[†5] as errant as Mad Tom,[†6] and as rugged as Timon.[†7] I sit down to work, do nothing, get up and walk a dozen miles, come back and sit down again next day, again do nothing and get up, go down a Railroad, find a place where I resolve to stay for a month, come home next morning, go strolling about for hours and hours, reject all engagements to have my time to myself, get tired of myself and yet can't come out of myself to be pleasant to anybody else, and so go on turning upon the same wheel round and round over and over again until it may begin to roll me towards my end.

In which disjointed state, I am afraid to trust myself to the chance of verbally thanking you for the delightful volume[†1] you have sent me, within so short an interval after its receipt as may save me from the suspicion of having neglected it. Therefore I write to thank you—to assure you that, even in my unlaid-Ghost-like plight, I have renewed with the utmost pleasure my acquaintance with those old friends—and that I hope, for the love of Kilspindie,[†2] to hitch something about them into Household Words that may not be disagreeable to you.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Leigh Hunt Esquire.

To W. H. WILLS, 4 MAY 1855

Extracts from Charles Retz, Inc. catalogue No. 18 and Parke Bernet catalogue No. 405; MS 2 pp.; dated Tavistock House, 4 May 55; addressed W. H. Wills.

Secondly, will you specially ask him[†3] if he will try to do any fanciful thing[†4] in reference to the accompanying book of Leigh Hunt's—that may do it a service. I am anxious about this for reasons[†5] ... Don't lose time about this, for I believe Hunt's race on this side of the moon to be nearly ended.[†6]

To OCTAVIAN BLEWITT, 5 MAY 1855*

MS Fales Collection, New York University Library.

Tavistock House | Saturday Fifth May 1855

Dear Sir

I send you the requisition[†7] signed by ten Members.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Octavian Blewitt Esquire

To FRANK SMEDLEY,[†1] 5 MAY 1855

Extract in Samuel J. Davey catalogue No. 31 (1889); MS 3 pp. Date: Summary and date given in C. F. Libbie catalogue, Apr 1880, clearly refer to same letter; dated 5 May 55; addressed Smedley.

I cannot reconcile it to my heart to publish these details so soon after Miss Brontë's death.[†2] For anything I know they might be saddening and painful to her husband,[†3] and I am not at all clear that I have any right to them. I have a particular objection to that kind of interest in a great mind, which prompts a visitor to take "a good look" at the mortal habiliments in which it is arranged, and afterwards to catalogue them, like an auctioneer. I have no sympathy whatever with the staring curiosity that it gratifies.

And beyond the husband and even the father[†4] of this lady, I cannot help going to herself. It seems that she would have shrunk from this account of her trials, and that such as she wanted given, she has given herself;[†5] and that for the present there is enough said about them.

The subject does not present itself to you in this light, I quite understand; nor do I seek to convert you to my opinions. I state them plainly merely as my sole reason for not retaining the paper.[†6]

To AUSTEN HENRY LAYARD, 7 MAY 1855

MS British Library.

Tavistock House | Monday Seventh May 1855

My Dear Layard.

Will you ask Mr. Lindsay[†7] or any one whom you may know best, associated with the Administrative Reform Society,[†1] to put me down, per you, as a Subscriber of Twenty Pounds.[†2] I will send the money to the Secretary or Treasurer,[†3] as soon as I see one appointed.

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

A H Layard Esquire

To THE GENERAL COMMITTEE OF THE ROYAL LITERARY FUND, 7 MAY 1855*

MS Royal Literary Fund.

Tavistock House | Monday Seventh May, 1855

Gentlemen.

When the Charter Committee was appointed on my motion at the last Annual General Meeting,[†4] I took occasion to say that I should consider it a point of courtesy to communicate the result of that Committee's deliberations to you, before reporting it to a Special General Meeting.

My colleagues in the Charter Committee, which is now prepared with its Report, concurring in my desire to lay the Report before you; I beg on their behalf to let you know that we shall be happy to have the honor of waiting on you, if you should think fit to appoint a time.

As a requisition will in due course be presented to the Registrars, requesting them to convene a Special General Meeting for Saturday the sixteenth of June, will you allow me to suggest that perhaps it may equally suit your convenience and ours, if our interview be appointed for the preceding Wednesday, the thirteenth of June.[†5]

I have the honor to be | Gentlemen | Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

To | The General Committee | of
The Literary Fund.

To CLARKSON STANFIELD, 7 MAY 1855

MS Fales Collection, New York University Library.

Tavistock House | Monday Seventh May 1855.

My Dear Stanny.

I don't know whether you understand our Hampstead engagement to hold for to day? Do you, you saline old Tarpaulin???

Because if you do, Mark is obliged to be in town all the morning and can't manage it. But he proposes to go to the Adelphi to-night[†1] and see Wright.[†2] And we mean to meet here at 5, and get a steak somewhere, before the Theatre.

Now, I am coming up to Highgate at 2.[†3] I will come round to Hampstead, so as to call on you about half past 3. So if you accompany us, you and I will come back to town together. Do you understand?

With this, I send five white handkerchiefs. Five red ones to make up ten,[†4] you shall have tomorrow.

Ever Affectionately

CD.

To THE COLLECTOR OF WATER RATES,[†5] NEW RIVER COMPANY,[†6] 8 MAY 1855

MS Boston Public Library.

Tavistock House, Tavistock Square | Eighth May 1855

Sir

As I observe on my printed form of receipt, that "the Collector attends to hear complaints" on certain days, at the address to which I send this note,[†7] I beg to represent to you that my supply of water is often absurdly insufficient,[†8] and that although I pay the extra service-rate for a Bath Cistern[†9] I am usually left, on a Monday Morning, as dry as if there were no such body as a New River Company in existence—which I sometimes devoutly wish were the case.

I have sent my servant on several occasions to complain at the main source of supply; and a very civil man has attended and "looked at" the cisterns; and for a few days or a few weeks I have had what I pay for; and then I have subsided into my old condition, and the water has been turned off before my tanks are filled. Finding my Bath-Cistern without a drop of the New River in it at this present writing, I must urgently entreat you to represent my case in the proper quarter and have it set right.[†1]

I am Sir | Your obedient Servant

CHARLES DICKENS

The Collector.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 8 MAY 1855

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street | Piccadilly.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Eighth May 1855

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I am delighted to hear of Miss Nightingale's communication to you.[†2] Because I regard the thing as done successfully, now. There will be sad use for it, I am afraid, for I hear that there are forewarnings already of pestilence out there. The closet will be, I really believe, invaluable.

I went up to Holly Lodge yesterday, and saw your gardener again about my Cemetery piece of ground. His idea is ingenious and pretty, but involves the removal of the stone and railing. I am not quite decided, but I think it will be best to leave it, and to have one or two pretty boxes of flowers (such as one would have outside a window), on the stone.

If you have, either at Holly Lodge or in town, so much coach-room that there is any to spare, will you receive my little Brougham[†3] on a visit, when we go to the Seaside? My project is, to make Folkestone our summer-place, so that we may go to Paris (to complete the polishing of Mary and Katey) at the end of October, straight. So I shall relinquish Stable charges[†4] in these Double Income Tax days[†5] of mismanagement and waste, when we leave here. Charley's grandfather and grandmother will keep house for him and be a species of Commission[†6] in the Regal absence. He seems to be very much interested in his occupation, and we all turn out at 7 every morning with an edifying punctuality.

I am in a state of restlessness impossible to be described—impossible to be imagined—wearing and tearing to be experienced. I sit down of a morning, with all kinds of notes for my new book (for which by the bye, I think I have a capital name)[†7]—resolve to begin—get up, and go out, and walk a dozen miles—sit down again next morning—get up and go down a railroad—come back again, and register a vow to go out of town instantly, and begin at the feet of the Pyrenees—sit down again—get up and walk about my room all day—wander about London till midnight—make engagements and am too distraught to keep them—Couldn't go to the Academy Dinner[†1]—felt it impossible to bear the speeches—pleaded Influenza at the last moment—and am at present going through the whole routine, over and over and over again.

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Two old ladies have turned up at Deptford, who are the last descendants (I think Great Grand-daughters) of Samuel Johnson.[†2] Mr. Carlyle has found them—in great poverty, but undemonstrative and uncomplaining, though very old—with nothing to speak of in the wide world, but the plain fir desk on which Johnson wrote his English Dictionary.[†3]

To OCTAVIAN BLEWITT, 10 MAY 1855*

MS Royal Literary Fund.

Tavistock House | Thursday Tenth May 1855

My Dear Sir

I readily defer to the General Committee's opinion and will understand the appointed day to be Wednesday the thirtieth of May.[†4]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Octavian Blewitt Esquire

P.S. | You will make the other Members of the Charter Committee acquainted with this change, of course.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 10 MAY 1855†

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street | Piccadilly.

Tavistock House | Tenth May 1855. Thursday

My Dear Miss Coutts.

The Proof (returned) very good;[†1] the idea excellent.[†2] I wish you would insist on your possessive case being "Miss Burdett Coutts's". I can't conceive why they cut off the last s.

I would decline (if the case were mine) this tremendous riddle about the tortured Noun.[†3] It is one of the most frightful works I ever heard of.

Mrs. Dickens's mother will take Essam[†4] into her service (to live here) if you do not object to her remaining in the Home until the middle of July. If she goes on well, we shall be willing to take her ourselves when we come back. I am sorry to say that an invaluable woman[†5] who has been with us 16 years—abroad and at home, in America and everywhere—is going to be married.

Did I write grandchildren? I have no doubt I did—I meant great god-children. I send you Mr. Carlyle's rough draft of a Memorial to Ld. Palmerston in their behalf.[†6] You need not mind the pencil-marks, which have been observed in putting the Memorial into shape. I think you will be interested in his own account of the case, given in his own odd way.

I shall want it back tomorrow, and shall be delighted to report that you empower me to communicate that small allowance[†7] you have with your usual kindness thought of. I am going to Cartwright at 2 o'Clock tomorrow (he wants to chip for half an hour or so at my teeth, like Old Mortality at the tombstones),[†8] and I will come round to Stratton Street afterwards, on the chance of finding you at home.

—Restlessness worse and worse. Dont[†9] at all know what to do with myself. Wish I had a Balloon.

Ever Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

To WILKIE COLLINS, 11 MAY 1855

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Friday Eleventh May 1855

My Dear Collins

I will read the Play[†1] with great pleasure if you will send it to me—of course will at any time, with cordial readiness and unaffected interest, do any such thing. "I am here" (to adopt Forster's last sonorous form of speech), for that purpose.

I hope to make Folkestone the country quarters for this Autumn. At the end of October, I have an idea of removing the Caravan to Paris for 6 months. I wish you would come over too, and take a Bedroom hard by us. It strikes me that a good deal might be done for Household Words on that side of the Water.[†2]

But we shall have plenty of leisure to talk about this, at Folkestone.

I have seen nothing of Wills since he disarranged the whole metropolitan supply of Gas.[†3] I have a general idea that he must have been upside-down ever since, in some corner,—like the Groom to whom the Sultan's daughter was to have been sacrificed.[†4] He was indeed Great and Grand. I went about the streets all next day, laughing like a Pantomime Mask. I never did see anything so ridiculous.

The restless condition in which I wander up and down my room with the first page of my new book before me, defies all description. I feel as if nothing would do me the least good, but setting up a Balloon. It might be inflated in the Garden in front—but I am afraid of its scarcely clearing those little houses.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 11 MAY 1855

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts.

Tavistock House | Friday Eleventh May 1855

My Dear Miss Coutts

The £20 safely come to hand.[†5]

I am truly touched by your note, because I deeply feel at all times your interest and friendship—can scarcely feel anything more. I am impetuous in my affections at any rate.

Layard has made a mistake.[†6] The men who would run him to death[†7] have wilfully committed all manner of perversions a thousand times, and have no claim upon my sympathy in their unfair pursuit of him, and every claim upon my suspicion and resentment. Take my knowledge of the state of things in this distracted land, for what it may be worth a dozen years hence. The people will not bear for any length of time what they bear now. I see it clearly written in every truthful indication that I am capable of discerning anywhere. And I want to interpose something between them and their wrath.

For this reason solely, I am a Reformer heart and soul. I have nothing to gain—everything to lose (for public quiet is my bread)—but I am in desperate earnest, because I know it is a desperate case.

You will believe that I have no sympathy with any mis-statement of fact, or hesitation in withdrawing it.[†1] I wouldn't be unfair, if I knew it, to any human being. I should hate myself if I were.

You think me impetuous, because I sometimes speak of things I have long thought about, with a suddenness that brings me only to the conclusion I have come at, and does not shew the road by which I arrived there. But it is a broad highway notwithstanding, and I have trod it slowly and patiently. Only believe that,—and you may think me as impetuous as you like. Think me anything you like, so that you write me letters I am so proud of.

Ever Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

To THOMAS CARLYLE, 12 MAY 1855*

MS National Library of Scotland.

Tavistock House | Twelfth May 1855, Saturday

My Dear Carlyle.

Miss Coutts has given me Twenty Pounds for the immediate necessities of the two poor old ladies; having been greatly interested by your draft of the Memorial, which I shewed her. As I shall see you on Wednesday,[†1] perhaps I had best give it you then. In the mean time here it is, and you can anticipate it for the benefit of the good old souls in any way you think right.

With regards to Mrs. Carlyle

Ever Faithfully Yours

CD.

To MARK LEMON, 12 MAY 1855

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Twelfth May 1855, Saturday

My Dear Mark

How about going down to Greenwich[†2] today?

Ever Affecy.

CD.

To MARK LEMON, 12 MAY 1855

MS Benoliel Collection.

Twelfth May 1855.

My Dear Mark

Halfpast three accordingly.

Ever Affecy.

CD.

To AUGUSTUS TRACEY, 12 MAY 1855*

MS University of Texas.

Tavistock House | Saturday May Twelfth 1855

My Dear old Commodore

Whom the Rheumatiz—not gout—
Has so sadly knocked about;
Altho' he is a young 'un for to see—

I am truly sorry to say that I am engaged for next Thursday, and for every day in next week. Otherwise no little thing should have kept us away at such a time. We unite in kindest regards to Mrs. Tracey,[†1] and heartily assure you (which is not needful) that you have not stauncher friends in the world, than in the house and heart of

Yours ever faithfully
CHARLES DICKENS

A very short note, in order that you may get it the sooner.

To NATHANIEL POWELL,[†2] 14 MAY 1855*

MS Fales Collection, New York University Library. Address: Nathaniel Powell Esquire | Bedford House.

Tavistock House | Fourteenth May 1855.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Powell, and begs to suggest that it would greatly improve the appearance of the Front Court if Mr. Powell should think it right to direct his servant to remove any straw that may be dropped before Bedford House, as soon as it falls there. Otherwise it soon gets blown and trodden over the whole garden, and gives it an uncomfortable appearance.

Having twice made this representation to Mr. Powell's servant without any effect, Mr. Dickens ventures to trouble Mr. Powell himself. He does not apologize for doing so, as the Inhabitants of the three houses[†3] have an equal interest in the neatness of the enclosure, and as it is kept in order at their joint expence.[†4]

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 15 MAY 1855

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Fifteenth May 1855

My Dear Miss Coutts.

Shortly to resume the Ninevite question:[†5]

As I said before, Layard made a mistake—was too much ill treated and insulted to be able to repair it then[†6] (which would have required a man with great presence of mind and perfectly free from impetuosity—say, for instance, myself)—and so gave his enemies a handle against him, which they use. I differ from you altogether, as to his setting class against class. He finds them already set in opposition. And I think you hardly bear in mind that as there are two great classes looking at each other in this question, so there are two sides to the question itself. You assume that the popular class take the initiative. Now as I read the story, the aristocratic class did that, years and years ago, and it is they who have put their class in opposition to the country—not the country which puts itself in opposition to them.

My present position with Layard is exactly this. I felt (before the mistake—as I remember, a week or ten days before), that he needed support; I was struck, at your house, to see him so changed and anxious; I happened to come into the knowledge of bitter endeavours and private influences that were at work to put him down; and I wrote to him,[†1] urging him not to be discouraged, telling him that I thought him, in the circumstances of the time, the most useful man in the house; and that I considered it a positive duty to render him all the help I could, short of going there myself.[†2] Such help as I could give him then, I did give him immediately; and he was very sensible of it. He shewed me his resolutions,[†3] some days before he made them known in the house, and in the main I approved. Then came the mistake. We dined together on the very next day[†4] after it, and I besought him for Heaven's sake to be careful. In another day or two, came the City Administrative Reform Meeting, and proposal for establishing an Association. I resolved to become a Member of it, and to give (as a kind of example to a large class), Twenty Pounds. I felt that Layard wanted, and I considered in spite of his error that he deserved, some little backing, and I wrote him a note[†5] saying "Do you tell Mr. Lindsay that the Association may rely upon me to this extent." Last Saturday, in pursuance of an old engagement made weeks before the mistake, he and I dined at Greenwich, with Paxton and some others. Layard then asked me, Had I heard from Mr. Morley,[†6] the Chairman of that City Association, because Mr. Morley had asked him whether he thought I could by any means be got to speak at a Meeting in Drury Lane Theatre,[†7] if they should decide to hold one there? I considered about it, and said, my impression was that I would speak on such an occasion; but that before I could pledge myself, I must first know everything that was intended to be done, and be sure that I approved of it. I made this a text for again impressing upon him the necessity of being careful under so great a responsibility (putting it as my own feeling about myself), and he earnestly assented; adding "If you go, I will go; but not otherwise, I think."

I am anxious to have a perfect confidence with you on the subject; and now you know all I know. If I can exercise any influence with him, I hope it will be to keep him cooler and steadier. No man can move me on such a matter, beyond what I have made up my mind is right. And as to my ever being tempted into any hot public assertion, I believe if you had ever seen me under speechifying circumstances, you would have a perfect confidence in my composure—in short, in my having left that impetuosity—say in Stratton Street.

I should like to consider your deeply interesting idea,[†8] a little longer. I meant this to have been a short note! Enclosed is one from Mr. Carlyle[†1] you may like to see.

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

To WILLIAM F. ROCK, [?EARLY-MID-MAY 1855]

Mention in To Kingsley, 15 May 55. Date: no doubt earlier in the month.

Expressing his readiness to subscribe to a vol. of Edward Capern's poems.

To THE REV. CHARLES KINGSLEY,[†2] 15 MAY 1855†

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Tavistock House, Tavistock Square London
Tuesday Evening Fifteenth May 1855

My Dear Sir

[†a]After I had the pleasure of meeting you at Milnes's,[†3] I was unexpectedly occupied out of town[†4] for a while, and so missed the opportunity of seeing you again—for the time. But pray let me say in the plainest and heartiest manner, that I saw you with the greatest interest, and sincerely hope to know you better.[†a†5]

I have had a letter (from someone in the City),[†6] asking me to subscribe to a volume of the Postman's poems.[†7] I have of course expressed my readiness to do so,[†8] [†a]and this little correspondence has put it in my mind to write to you and ask you to remember what we agreed upon.—I mean, that[†a] if you should see anything from his hand that you think I could have the pleasure of printing in Household Words, at least to let me read it with that object in view.[†1]

With much respect and regard | Believe me | Very faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

The Reverend Charles Kingsley.

To J. B. CARDALE, 17 MAY 1855*

Text from transcript, Huntington Library.

Tavistock House | Seventeenth May, 1855.

My Dear Sir,

Looking at the date of your note as I write, I am afraid you will think that I have been waiting for Spring as a fit season in which to answer it.

Pray accept my having been constantly engaged, as my apology for delay. I have this day forwarded my balance of debt,[†2] to your son;[†3] and Mr Stone tells me that he is in direct communication with you in discharge of his own debt.

If the country[†4] be only one hundredth part as disagreeable as London, it must be a mixture of Siberia and the Desert, in respect of cold and dust.

Wishing you (and all of us) well out of the times, I am, with kindest regards from all here to Mrs Cardale and your family,

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

John B. Cardale Esquire.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 17 MAY 1855*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Seventeenth May 1855

My Dear Miss Coutts.

You shall find that I am not unmindful of your kind and good advice. Observe, that I cannot help Layard's making his attendance at such a meeting,[†5] conditional on mine. I make mine conditional, solely on my agreement in everything proposed to be done by its Managers and Originators—of whom he is not one.

And I think it very likely besides, that the said Originators may be afraid of me, as a man who cares nothing for them and will assert the principle in his own way, and will not be bound by any conditions of theirs. Rely upon it I am in no danger of allowing my single-hearted desire to do what I can towards the saving of us all from unspeakable wretchedness, to be compromised by any little partizanship whatever.

Ever Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 18 MAY 1855*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Friday Eighteenth May 1855

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I must see Mr. Wills before I can tell you the prices of those things—or I should rather say the subscription towards their publication.[†1] He sent them, and I do not remember. But I will let you know on Sunday or Monday.

Ever Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

To HENRY AUSTIN, 19 MAY 1855*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Nineteenth May 1855

My Dear Henry

A walk tomorrow, by all means. At 3 o'Clock P. M. a manly form will be descried advancing along the green level of Shepherd's Bush, and proceeding with a vigorous and noble air in the direction towards Acton.

Ever Affectionately

CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 19 MAY 1855*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street | Piccadilly.

Tavistock House | Saturday Nineteenth May 1855

My Dear Miss Coutts.

Nothing can be better than this. It is in the highest degree cheering to see such a prospect of usefulness for that excellent gift.[†2]

Always Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

To AUSTEN HENRY LAYARD, 20 MAY 1855

MS British Library.

Tavistock House | Sunday Twentieth May 1855

My Dear Layard

If you are not engaged on this day week, the 27th. will you come and dine with us at 6?[†1]—(I mean that unknown sign for six). We shall have only our own family, and Lemon, and perhaps Leech or Tenniel[†2]—who may as well have an opportunity of making the Nineveh Bull a little more like.[†3]

I was delighted to see you looking far more hearty[†4] and less anxious yesterday, than a little while ago. But by Heaven a young man,[†5] with the spirit of England at his back and its heartiest voice cheering him on,[†6] is bound to look his best!

Ever Cordially Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MARK LEMON, 20 MAY 1855

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Twentieth May 1855

My Dear Mark

I am going to preside at the Newsmens'[†7] Annual Meeting,[†8] tomorrow Evening at the Freemasons'[†9] at ½ past 7. I suppose it will not last above an hour. If you have nothing else to do, will you come round after dinner, and go with Wills and me.

Ever affecy.
CD.

To CLARKSON STANFIELD, 20 MAY 1855

MS Mr Robert K. Black.

Tavistock House | Sunday Twentieth May 1855

My Dear Stanny

I have a little Lark in contemplation, if you will help it to fly.

Collins has done a Melo Drama (a regular old-style Melo Drama), in which there is a very good notion.[†1] I am going to act it, as an experiment, in the childrens'[†2] Theatre here—I, Mark, Collins, Egg, and my daughter Mary, the whole dram: pers:[†3]—our families and yours, the whole Audience; for I want to make the stage large, and shouldn't have room for above five and twenty spectators. Now, there is only one scene in the piece, and that—my Tarry Lad—is the inside of a Lighthouse.[†4] Will you come and paint it for us one night, and we'll all turn to and help? It is a mere wall,[†5] of course, but Mark and I have sworn that you must do it.[†6]

If you will say yes, I should like to have the tiny flats made, after you have looked at the place and not before. On Wednesday in this week I am good for a steak and the Play, if you will make your own appointment here; or any day next week except Thursday. Write me a line in reply.

We mean to burst on an astonished World with the Melo Drama, without any note of preparation. So don't say a syllable to Forster, if you should happen to see him.

Ever affectionately Yours

CD.

To MESSRS BRADBURY & EVANS, 21 MAY 1855*

MS Cornell University Library.

Tavistock House | Twenty First May 1855

My Dear B and E.

I think you should begin in your Standing-Lists for next month, with the announcement I send on the other side.[†7] I leave the day doubtful for the present, being not yet quite decided whether to appear at the beginning or end of November—I mean, whether on the Magazine day for November or the Magazine day for December.

Faithfully Ever

CD.

To THE HON. MRS RICHARD WATSON, 21 MAY 1855*

MS Huntington Library.

Tavistock House | Monday May Twenty First, 1855

My Dear Mrs. Watson

I was more vexed on Saturday than I can tell you. But the fault was not mine. On my infallible slate of engagements, was this inscription:

Mrs. Watson here at 3.[†1]

And on the unerring tablet of my remembrance was this quotation from Mrs Watson's lips:

I am always punctual—3.[†1]

Consequently, when I came home (having only run down to the office) at ten minutes before three, conscious rectitude sustained me under your having come and gone. In which proceeding you have no kind of justification. Take my blessing and forgiveness!

They told me what you were saying about Peterborough;[†2] on which subject I have a suggestion to make. In case you should find that Lord Fitzwilliam[†3] has company, don't you think you could be quietly comfortable at the Hotel with Mr. Wills and me? I would then so arrange as to come to Rockingham early on the morning of the day before the Reading, and take you on, the same day, to Peterboro'. Mr. Wills (who is my commissariat and transport service on such occasions), would be already there, and would have seen everything prepared for you.[†4] It is clear that you must come to the Reading, because I intend to read to you only. And it would be an extraordinary pleasure to me to have such an opportunity of passing a few hours with you, if it could be achieved. I have no doubt I shall be in a hurry, whatever I may propose or plan now; for I shall have come from Paris, and shall be going to Sheffield, and thence to Birmingham, and thence to Paris again, at a hand-gallop. But such a plan as this, could not be in the least affected by my fitful proceedings.

I am in the first chapter of a new, long, twenty-number Green book (publication to begin in November), and am in a state of restlessness not to be described or imagined—walking about the country by day—prowling about into the strangest places in London by night—sitting down to do an immensity—getting up after doing nothing—walking about my room on particular bits of all the flowers in the carpet—tearing my hair (which I can't afford to do)—and on the whole astonished at my own condition, though I am used to it. In greater hands than mens',[†1] such states of mind have been moulded, and will have their due allowance some day. Yet I say to myself sometimes when I am a little impatient, "How can you be such an erratic, wayward, unsettled, capricious, incomprehensible Beast? I am ashamed of you!"

My Dear Mrs. Watson | Ever Most Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To CLARKSON STANFIELD, 22 MAY 1855

MS University of Kentucky.

Tavistock House | Tuesday afternoon 6 o'Clock | Twenty Second May 1855

My Dear Stanny

Your note came while I was out walking. Even if I had been at home I could not have managed to dine together today, being under a Beastly engagement to dine at Longman's.[†2] Unless I hear from you to the contrary, I shall expect you here some time tomorrow, and will remain at home. I only wait your instructions, to get the little canvasses made. O what a pity it is not the outside of the Light'us, with the sea a rowling agin it![†3]—Never mind. We'll get an effect out of the Inside—and there's a storm and a shipwreck, "Off"[†4]—and the great ambition of my life will be achieved at last, in the wearing of a pair of very coarse petticoat trousers.[†5] So horroar for the salt sea, Mate, and bowse up![†6]

Ever Affecy.

DICK.

To MARK LEMON, 23 MAY 1855

Text from MDGH, I, 396.

Tavistock House, May 23rd, 1855.

My dear Mark

Stanny says he is only sorry it is not the outside of the lighthouse with a raging sea and a transparent light. He enters into the project with the greatest delight, and I think we shall make a capital thing of it.

It now occurs to me that we may as well do a farce too. I should like to get in a little part for Katey, and also for Charley, if it were practicable. What do you think of "Animal Mag."?[†1] You and I in our old parts;[†2] Collins, Jeffrey; Charley, the Markis; Katey and Mary (or Georgina), the two ladies?[†3] Can you think of anything merry that is better? It ought to be broad, as a relief to the melodrama, unless we could find something funny with a story in it too. I rather incline myself to "Animal Mag." Will you come round and deliver your sentiments?

Ever affectionately

[CD]

To WILKIE COLLINS, 24 MAY 1855

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Twenty Fourth May 1855 | Thursday

My Dear Collins

I shall expect you tomorrow evening at Household Words.

I have written a little ballad for Mary.[†4]—The Story of the Ship's Carpenter and the little boy, in the Shipwreck.[†5]

Let us close up with Mr. Nightingale's Diary.[†6] Will you look whether you have a book of it[†7]—or your part.[†8]

All other matters and things hereunto belonging, when we meet.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 24 MAY 1855

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | 1 Stratton Street | Piccadilly.

Tavistock House | Twenty Fourth May 1855

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I have considered your plan[†9] from every point of view, and I would not try it, until a special occasion shall present itself. God forbid that there should be another great sickness; but there may be, before we grow to be very old, a peace—for example—and I think if some such opportunity were laid hold of, and associated with the design, you would begin at an immense advantage.

I suppose myself writing some little plain appeal to such waterside people, to be circulated among them, explanatory of the project and of its arising plainly out of the teaching of Our Saviour—and I feel that the additional and immediate weight to be got from its being apposite to something current which everybody knew, would be invaluable. You might or might not ask me to do such a thing; but the principle would be the same, whosoever might do it—and of the additional strength to be got in this way, I have not the least doubt. It would afford that kind of immediate illustration which there can be no doubt, I think, that Christ himself invariably took, even from passing people and adjacent objects.

Whereas at present I doubt very much whether you would attract many people who are now indifferent. Some might come, from interested motives; but there is danger of a prevalent suspicion of the object being to keep them quiet, and put grievances out of their minds. Now, going among them with a reference to something directly concerning and touching them all, would overcome this, more than any amount of reasoning and probability.

Pray be within reach of this house about the middle of next month. We are going to do a grown-up Play in the children's theatre, with a smaller audience and a larger stage. Mr. Collins has written an odd Melo Drama, the whole action of which (of course it is short) takes place in a lighthouse. He shewed it to me for advice, and some suggestions that I made to him involved a description of how such a thing ought to be done in a Theatre—and might be done if there were more sense in such places. So we are going to shew Mr. Webster what it means!—and Mr. Stanfield, full of his nautical and theatrical ardor, has taken possession of the Schoolroom, and will really paint and make out an illusion of a very fine kind, as far as his Art goes.

So I entreat you to let nothing interfere with your occupation of the place designed for you—urging the same stipulation on Mr. and Mrs. Brown. I shall be able to let you know the exact day, pretty early next week.

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

P.S. My condition of restlessness is not improved. All the symptoms are very bad. The only new feature is, that I am actually at work and in the middle of No. One.[†1]

To MARK LEMON, 24 MAY 1855

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Twenty Fourth May 1855

My Dear Mark.

I hope you are better this morning? If you will let me administer Cockle[†2] in my own way, I will answer for your being as light as a feather in three or four days.

My infallible Ledger so far failed me last night, that I had not put down in it "Dinner at home" for Saturday. Don't make the appointment with Ireland,[†1] until hearing from me again in the course of the day. I am going to send up to Stanfield to propose Monday. It would be inconvenient to us to have the Proscenium up on Saturday, if it can reasonably be avoided.

I must get over my moustache in Mr. Nightingale's Diary,[†2] as well as I can. I would shave it off, if I were not so soon going abroad.

Ever Affecy.

CD.

If you are going out today, will you undertake to let Nathan know that we shall want our Nightingale's Diary dresses. The strip dresses are mine.[†3]

To MARK LEMON, 24 MAY 1855

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Thursday Twenty Fourth May 1855

My Dear Mark

Please make the appointments for

MONDAY at 4

instead of Saturday. If (as I expect) Collins gives me the Play tomorrow night, you shall have it for the Copyist, the first thing on Saturday morning.

Ever affecy.

CD.

To NATHANIEL POWELL, 24 MAY 1855*

MS George S. MacManus Co.

Tavistock House | Thursday Twenty Fourth May 1855

Dear Sir

On looking at the sides of the gate,[†4] I find that our names and the names of the houses would be too much to look well and be easily legible. Mr. Stone and I have therefore instructed the Painter to make the inscription thus.

1. Tavistock House
2. Bedford House
3. Russell House.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To FRANK STONE, 24 MAY 1855

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Thursday Twenty Fourth May 1855

My Dear Stone

I return Mr. Miller's[†1] letter.

Great projects are afoot here for a grown-up Play in about 3 weeks time. Former schoolroom arrangements to be reversed—large stage and small audience. Stanfield bent on desperate effects, and all day long with his coat off, up to his eyes in distemper colors.

Will you appear in your celebrated character of Mr. Nightingale?[†2] I want to wind up with that popular farce, we all playing our old parts.

Ever affecy.
CD.

To FRANK STONE, 24 MAY 1855

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Twenty Fourth May 1855

My Dear Stone.

That's right!—You will find the words all come back very quickly. Why, of course your people are to come. And if Stanfield don't astonish 'em, I'm a Dutchman. O Heaven if you could hear the ideas he propounds to me—making even my hair stand on end!

Will you get Marcus or some similar bright creation,[†3] to copy out old Nightingale's part for you, and then return the book? This is the Prompt Book—the only one I have—and Katey and Georgina (being also in wild excitement) want to write their parts[†4] out with all dispatch.

Ever affecy.
CD.

To MARK LEMON, [?25 MAY 1855]*

MS Dickens Birthplace Museum, Portsmouth. Date: reference to Nathan suggests shortly after To Lemon, 24 May; handwriting supports. Address: Mark Lemon Esquire | Gordon Street. (not through post).

Tavistock House | Friday Night

My Dear Mark

I will come round to you in the morning, at about 11.

The sum is a swinger. I begin to think we had better try Nathan on hire.

Ever affecy.

CD.

To AUGUSTUS TRACEY, 25 MAY 1855*

MS University of Texas.

Tavistock House | Twenty Fifth May 1855

My Dear Tracey.

We were under an impression—which I swear you gave us—that you were going to weigh anchor on Saturday and beat out to Devonshire. As you said last night that you intended lying in the Downs[†1] some days yet, I make this signal (on the white Serjeant's behalf)[†2] to ask if it be possible that you and your fair wife (who, if I may whisper a word in your ear, looks handsomer every time I see her) and Henry,[†3] can come and dine with us this very next Sunday at 6? We have only Mr. and Mrs. Lemon and two or three other intimates, besides our own family.

Say yes, and I'll make you an Admiral.

I was giddy and out of sorts the greater part of yesterday; but your Port so set me up, that this morning I am beautiful to behold.

Ever Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To FRANK STONE, 26 MAY 1855

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Twenty Sixth May 1855

My Dear Nightingale.[†4]

The Fates seem to have been against my returning this letter.[†5] Twice I have intended to put it in an Envelope, and it positively refused to get into one. If you don't find it enclosed now, don't be surprised—I shall not be.

Ever Yours
HORATIO GABBLEWIG[†6]

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 29 MAY 1855

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Twenty Ninth May 1855

My Dear Miss Coutts

Mr. Stanfield being at present shut up in the Schoolroom[†7] with two of the dirtiest artificers I ever saw—who have been dug out of the profoundest depths of some Theatre, appear to have wallowed in Gas from their infancy, and are now making chalk lines all over the floor, while the distinguished painter coerces them with an umbrella—I am in a condition to report that the Night is Saturday the 16th. of June.[†1] We shall begin punctually at 8 O'Clock and have done soon after 11.[†2] I will send you the Bill in the course of the week. It may be advisable to inform O in reference to my being in an extremely low state in the Lighthouse on account of having something on my mind, that it all ends happily.[†3] (If you should think of anybody whom you would like to bring [†a]or to be asked[†a]—which is just possible—will you let me know soon, and I will perform the needful ceremonies.)

I will note a few questions on common useful knowledge, and endeavour to glean one or two from others.

The subscription to that historical table,[†4] was a Guinea each.

Old Defoe's[†5] wife is dead.[†6] The old man is going on patiently and quietly, and is immensely comforted by your allowance.

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The interlineations in this note, are attributable to my being at work on the new book—which makes me perfectly reckless as to erasures.

To MARK LEMON, 29 MAY 1855

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Twenty Ninth May 1855. Tuesday

My Dear Mark.

I want to know if I may put Grieve[†7] in the bill,[†8] as painting the Scene for the Farce. Will you ask him if I may?

Ever Affecy.

CD.

We shall have to play on Tuesday the 19th. as a third night. It is impossible, we find, to dispose of the List[†9] otherwise.

To CLARKSON STANFIELD, 29 MAY 1855

MS University of Kentucky.

Tavistock House | Twenty Ninth May 1855 | Tuesday Morning

My Dear Stanny

You have not told me whether there are any friends whom you would like to be asked to see the Play. Will you let me know? We think it necessary to get the invitations out.[†1]

The Eastlakes, Davy,[†2] Maclise, the Landseers,[†3] and the Leslies,[†4] are already on our own list.

The Cardinal[†5] wouldn't care for such a thing, I suppose? How as to Mr. and Mrs. Wardell[†6]—or your friend Mr. Jackson[†7]—and others whom we think likely but can't remember. Only let me know, and we will do the rest.

Ever Affectionately

CD.

To FRANK STONE, 29 MAY 1855*

MS Comtesse de Suzannet.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Twenty Ninth May 1855

My Dear Stone.

Here are the Appointments in connexion with the Theatricals.
Dress Rehearsal—Friday 15th. June—at 7
First Night's acting—Saturday 16th. June—at 8
Second Do. Monday 18th. June—at 8

		Rehearsals
Saturday	2nd. June	Each Evening at 7.
Monday	4th. "
Tuesday	5th. "

Thursday	7th. "	But The Lighthouse is always first, and will occupy at least two hours in rehearsing—at first, more.
Friday	8th. "
Monday	11th. "
Thursday	14th. "

Ever affecy.
CHARLES DICKENS

To WILKIE COLLINS, 31 MAY 1855

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Thursday Thirty First May 1855

My Dear Collins

Lemon assures me that the Parts and Promptbook are to arrive to day.[†1] Why they have not been here two days, I cannot for the life of me make out. In case they do come, there is a good deal in the way of clearing the ground, that you and I may do before the first Rehearsal.[†2] Therefore, will you come and dine at 6 tomorrow (Friday) and give the evening to it?

Faithfully Ever
CD.

To AUGUSTUS [DICKENS],[†3] 31 MAY 1855*

MS Mrs S. S. Clephan.

Tavistock House | Thursday Thirty First May 1855

My Dear Augustus

I cannot think of anyone on that route[†4]—which is quite out of my Beat. If I should recall any useful personage in the course of tomorrow, I will write again.

Affecy always
CD.

To MESSRS NATHAN & CO., 31 MAY 1855

MS Boston Public Library.

Tavistock House | Thursday Evening | Thirty First May 1855.

Mr. Charles Dickens begs to inform Messrs. Nathan, that two ladies' dresses will be required for the New Play—one will probably be needed to be made for the purpose entirely new—possibly both. Mr. Egg will sketch them, and the ladies and gentlemen will be all here next Saturday evening between ½ past 7 and 11.

If Messrs. Nathan will come on Saturday evening, everything can be arranged, and they shall have a list of the three nights of performance &c.

Mr. Dickens has taken care of them, as usual, in the Bills.[†5]

To FRANK STONE, 31 MAY 1855*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Thirty First May 1855

My Dear Stone

I am sorry to say that I have not the book—that is to say, producible. Charley and Walter have all my books of that kind—Walter is at Putney[†1]—Charley is in the City, and, though I have been up into his room, I can't see a Virgil there.

Fine weather! I have been sitting during the whole of this delicious day, in a Bower of Roses.

Ever affecy.

CD.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 31 MAY 1855

Mention in Anderson Auction catalogue No. 1000, 5 May 1913; MS (3rd person) 1 p.; dated Tavistock House, 31 May 55.

Contributing a subscription of £5 in favour of Mrs. [Burbury].[†2]

To HENRY MORLEY, [?LATE MAY 1855]

Mention in Morley to Thornton Hunt, 20 Dec 59 (MS Comte de Suzannet). Date: 3 weeks before Morley's "By Rail to Parnassus" appeared in Household Words (16 June 55).

Hoping that Morley would give a favourable notice of Leigh Hunt's Stories in Verse, and expressing his own truest regard for their author.

June

To AUSTEN HENRY LAYARD, 2 JUNE 1855

MS British Library.

Tavistock House. | Saturday Second June 1855

My Dear Layard

I am sorry to say that I cannot possibly attend the proposed Meeting on Thursday,[†3] inasmuch as I have faithfully bound myself to engagements[†4] with a knot of half a dozen men which will hold me that night, and almost every night until after the 19th. of June. I would have adapted all other arrangements to this one, if I had had earlier notice of it; but I cannot—my other arrangements being made—on any account put out, or put off, the people with whom I have entered into a compact that has existed among us before,[†1] and which no one of us has ever broken.

I shall be at home tomorrow evening, and on Monday until 2 o'Clock, and shall be delighted to see you. I will write my adhesion, if Mr. Morley should desire it,[†2] so that it may be made known. And I can "keep", you know, and be exploded on another occasion.[†3] Meanwhile I am constantly putting the subject in as sharp lights as I can kindle, in Household Words—have a little paper for next week's, at this moment at press (called Cheap Patriotism)[†4] quite apropos to Thursday.

In haste | Ever Heartily Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To GEORGE LINLEY,[†5] 2 JUNE 1855*

MS Berg Collection.

Tavistock House | Tavistock Square. | Second June 1855

Dear Sir

It will give me great pleasure—and Mrs. Dickens no less—if you have leisure and inclination to come and see the little Theatricals of which I enclose you a bill.[†6]

I have introduced your name into it, because the words of the song are designed for the Music you wrote to "Little Nell".[†7] One of my young daughters sings it very prettily, and it is a great favorite with all the house—I mean your air; not my words, which belong to the occasion.

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

George Linley Esquire.

Will you oblige me with an early answer, as our space is very small and the demand upon it very large.

To SIR RODERICK MURCHISON,[†1] 4 JUNE 1855*

MS Private (destroyed in Prestwick air-crash, Dec 1954).

Tavistock House | Monday Fourth June 1855

My Dear Sir Roderick

I will come to you[†2] with the greatest pleasure, if you will come to me on the little occasion duly set forth in the accompanying bill. I know what an appreciative audience you are, and hope we may bring you out in force.

Mrs. Dickens extorts a vow from me that I will tell you that we can't get anybody in after 8, and that I will further exhort you to answer swiftly.[†3]

Always Very Cordially Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Sir Roderick Murchison

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 4 JUNE 1855

Extract in T. F. Madigan catalogue, c. May 1935; MS 2 pp.; dated London, 4 June 55.

Apologising for delay in answering his correspondent, but was awaiting the arrival of a magazine referred to therein, but as it has not come he now writes lest you should by any chance suppose me for a moment insensible to such cordial regards as you express.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 4 JUNE 1855

Mention in Howes Bookshop catalogue No. 140; dated Tavistock House, 4 June 55.

Thanking his correspondent for the loan of a book.

To THOMAS BARING,[†4] 6 JUNE 1855

MS Dickens House.

Tavistock House | Wednesday Sixth June 1855

My Dear Sir

I think I ought to let you know that our domestic freak does not come off on Monday next, but on Monday week. In your note, you suppose it to be in contemplation for the former day. If this should be merely a slip of your pen, pray don't take the trouble to reply.

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Thomas Baring Esquire

To MARK LEMON, 6 JUNE 1855

Text from The Unpublished Letters of CD to Mark Lemon, ed. Walter Dexter, 1927, p. 138.

Tavistock House | Wednesday Morning, Sixth June, 1855.

My dear Mark,

In the wardrobe yesterday we made an omission which perhaps you will supply[†1]—some rough oilskin or other wrappers for the sailors.[†2] We must not fail to bring them in very wet.

I hope you have received and read my Literary Fund Report,[†3] and that you like it.

Ever affectionately,
CHARLES DICKENS.

To MARK LEMON, 6 JUNE 1855*

MS Yale University Library.

Tavistock House | Wednesday Sixth June 1855

My Dear Mark

We are horribly short of copies of the Literary Fund Report. I have sent mine to Delane.[†1] Forster has sent his to Counsel.[†2] Will you lend yours to Forster? He will return it to you in a few hours.

Affecy Ever
CD.

To RICHARD BENTLEY,[†3] 7 JUNE 1855*

MS Mr Ashley W. Olmsted.

Tavistock House | Thursday Seventh June 1855

My Dear Sir

[†a]I am anxious to remind you that the Special General Meeting of the Literary Fund to receive the Report of the committee appointed at the last annual Meeting, will be held at Willis's Rooms[†4] on Saturday the 16th. of this month at 2 precisely.

Let me entreat you to attend it,[†5] and that punctually at the appointed time.[†a]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esquire

To PETER CUNNINGHAM, 7 JUNE 1855

Text from N, II, 668-9.

Tavistock House | Thursday Seventh June 1855

My Dear Cunningham

I am anxious to remind you that the Special General Meeting of the Literary Fund to receive the report of the Committee appointed at the last Annual Meeting, will be held at Willis's Rooms on Saturday the 16th of this month at 2 precisely.

Let me entreat you to attend it,[†6] and that punctually at the appointed time.

Faithfully yours ever
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To THE REV. WHITWELL ELWIN, 7 JUNE 1855

MS Dickens House.

Tavistock House | Thursday Seventh June 1855.

My Dear Elwin

Forster has told you (I believe) that I hope you will come to us on the evening of the Saturday on which our unfortunate calling is to be beaten by agglomerated Humbug[†1] (against which however I will sustain its just claims please God, for many a year to come), but has not told you why I want to see you. My reason I enclose in print.[†2] It is a freak I have taken into my head to try how picturesque and real we can be in my children's Schoolroom. The real Theatre is so bad, that I have always a delight in setting up a sham one—besides deriving a pleasure from feigning to be somebody else which is akin to the pleasure of inventing—with the addition of the odd novelty that this sort of invention is executed in company.

Always Very Cordially Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Reverend Whitwell Elwin.

To F. G. FRANCIS,[†3] 7 JUNE 1855

MS Dickens Birthplace Museum, Portsmouth.

Tavistock House, London | Seventh June 1855

Sir.

In reply to your letter, I beg to let you know, that I have already promised to read the Christmas Carol at Folkestone[†4] for the benefit of a popular educational Institution[†5] there, and that I cannot undertake to do so twice. But I should be particularly disappointed if the attendance of working men, on the occasion, were rendered at all difficult; and I shall express to the Directors of the Harveian Institution, my earnest hope that they will endeavour so to arrange their proceedings as to admit the Members of your Society[†6] on very easy terms.[†7]

I am Sir | Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. F. G. Francis.

To ANTHONY PANIZZI,[†1] 7 JUNE 1855*

MS Dr Barbara McCrimmon.

Tavistock House | Thursday Seventh June 1855

My Dear Panizzi

[†a]I am anxious to remind you that the Special General Meeting of the Literary Fund to receive the Report of the Committee appointed at the last Annual Meeting, will be held at Willis's Rooms on Saturday the 16th of this month at 2 precisely.

Let me entreat you to attend it,[†2] and that punctually at the appointed time.[†a]

Very faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Signor Panizzi.

To H. W. PICKERSGILL,[†3] 7 JUNE 1855

MS John Rylands Library. Address: H. W. Pickersgill Esquire R. A. | Stratford Place.

Tavistock House | Thursday Seventh June 1855

My Dear Mr. Pickersgill.

[†a]I am anxious to remind you that the Special General Meeting of the Literary Fund to receive the Report of the Committee appointed at the last annual Meeting, will be held at Willis's Rooms, on Saturday the 16th. of this month at 2 precisely.

Let me entreat you to attend it,[†4] and that punctually at the appointed time.[†a]

Believe me | Very faithfully yours

CHARLES DICKENS

H. W. Pickersgill Esquire

To SIR CUSACK RONEY,[†5] 7 JUNE 1855*

Fragment[†6] in Sotheby's catalogue, May 1986; MS 1 p.; dated 7 June 55; addressed Sir Cusack Roney.

Tavistock House | Thursday Seventh June 1855

Believe me | Very Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Sir Cusack Roney

To BENJAMIN WEBSTER, 7 JUNE 1855*

MS Yale University Library.

Telegraph Message—Tavistock Station
Thursday Evening 7th. June 1855
5..41[†1]
CHARLES DICKENS
Perfect in 3 steps[†2]
And covering himself with Glory[†3]

Benjamin Webster Esquire

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 8 JUNE 1855

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Queen's Hotel | Upper Norwood.

Tavistock House | Eighth June 1855

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I really did think you were lost—and have been in a despondent state of mind about it. Having found you again, I am as well as can be expected (please mention to O), with that Murder on my mind.[†4] —Which reminds me of Dr. Skey.[†5] Pray assure him that I will get him in somehow. The devices I have been making to get space and ventilation would amuse you, if any amount of paper would be sufficient for their description. We are obliged to do it three nights. With Mr. Stanfield's requirements, I can't get in more than 60. And the wildest people hear of it and ask to come—and I am afraid to go out, because I am certain to meet in the next street the person who has never been thought of, [†a]and who ought[†a] of all others never to have been forgotten.

But I am going (by back ways) to Hackney tomorrow, to see, at the Elizabeth Fry Refuge,[†6] two cases for the Home. We have another, as a parting gift, from Mr. Tracey[†7]—of which he thinks highly. I hope one of the Hackney cases will do, but I am doubtful of the other. I only judge at this present writing, however, from a lady's written description.[†8]

I quite agree with you as to preparing beforehand, for your truly Christian design.[†9] It has frequently been in my mind again, and I am strengthened in my first belief that its being pointed by an occasion would be of great service to it.

I wouldn't be going every day to that enormous wilderness, and making a fishing-net of my brain to drag those Courts with, for—well, I would for Mr. Dunn's little bill,[†1] but for nothing less.

With kindest regards

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

To CHARLES FROST,[†2] 8 JUNE 1855

Summary and extract in Precieux Autographes Composant la Collection du President Robert Schuman, March 1965 (re-translated from French); MS 1 3/4 pp.; dated Tavistock House, 8 June 55; addressed Charles Frost.

He has not made an appointment with Frost, since he would wish to save him from a pointless journey. He has not the least plan to go to Hull during the next two years. All the engagements he has undertaken for reading at Literary Institutes until the coming Christmas have been settled for six months. I am now about to start a new book and am totally incapable of taking on anything else.

To MEMBERS OF THE AMATEUR COMPANY, [9 JUNE 1855]

Mention in To Collins, 9 June 55. Date: written the same day.

To WILKIE COLLINS, 9 JUNE 1855

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Saturday Morning | June Ninth 1855

My Dear Collins

I have had a communication from Stanfield since we parted last night, to the effect that he must have the Stage entirely to himself and his men on Thursday Night. I therefore write round to all the Company, to remind them that Monday is virtually our last Rehearsal, and that we shall probably have to do your Play twice, on that precious occasion.

Ever Heartily Yours

CD.

To MARK LEMON, 10 JUNE 1855

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Sunday Morning | Tenth June 1855

My Dear Mark

The Wardrobe-Box has arrived, and I will get the dresses into suits[†1] with you whenever you like.

Affecy. always

CD.

To W. H. WILLS, 10 JUNE 1855

MS Huntington Library.

Tavistock House | Tenth June 1855

My Dear Wills

I have taken time (as I told you I would), to consider the case you put to me the other day;[†2] because, although it immediately presented itself to my mind in one plain light, I wished to be as sure as further consideration could make me, of being right.

My opinion of the matter is formed, you will presently see, entirely with a reference to Household Words. If I do not put your inclinations and desires in a separate place, it is because I assume your best interests to be identified with Household Words.

I think your impulse to take the offer made to you, is altogether a mistake. I think your undertaking the conduct of any other periodical quite incompatible with your position at Household Words—dangerous to its individuality and responsibility—and in every way prejudicial to its interests. I have no course that I can see, but decidedly to object to such an idea.

When you proposed to me the terms of your association with Household Words, you expressly set forth to me the necessity of your giving yourself wholly up to it. Since its establishment, you have frequently shewn me that the demands made by its business on your time, have prevented your writing in it. I am perfectly sure of my own knowledge that it must always draw sufficiently on[†3] all the energies and qualities you possess for the management and conduct of any periodical work. And although I can imagine your having leisure for some literary labor apart from it, now and then, I must hold to the position that its claims are engrossing, and that it must not be put into double-harness with any other periodical editing or sub-editing.

In the case of Hard Times, you made a Speculation with the hope of a large profit.[†4] However natural it may be in you to confound the temporary sequestration of the profits on your share in Household Words, with the worth of the share itself,[†1] it is not so reasonable as that it can at all influence me in this case.

If, in addition to what you now do for Household Words, you were to help in the execution of articles that would admit of such assistance, I should think it quite fair that you should be paid extra for such work.[†2] But I am clear—to repeat it for the last time—that your entertainment of such a proposal as that made to you by Mr. Bruce[†3] is out of the question, and that I must ask you to abandon it.

I have considered the matter in every aspect, with the greatest desire to be moderate and to make all generous allowance. I have not the least doubt that you are mistaken, and that in saying what I now do, I accept an absolute necessity which (in a mistake) you impose upon me.[†4]

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

W. H. Wills Esquire

To SAMUEL MORLEY,[†5] 11 JUNE 1855

Text from Daily News, 14 June 55.

Tavistock House | Monday, June 11, 1855

Dear Sir,

I regret that I cannot attend the meeting at Drury-lane Theatre on Wednesday night,[†6] having a duty to discharge elsewhere, to which I have been pledged for months. I have enrolled myself a member[†7] of the Administrative Reform Association, because I believe it to be impossible for England to hold her place in the world, or long to be at rest within herself, unless the present system of mismanaging the public affairs, and mis-spending the public money, be altogether changed; because I daily see stronger and stronger reason to entertain the conviction that it never will be really amended in any essential respects, until a general determination that it must be, is so extended throughout the country, that it shall make itself plainly heard, even within the very thick party-walls[†1] of the House of Commons; because the steady union of great numbers of earnest men is essential to this result; and because I hope the association will effect such union by honestly instructing the people as to their real wrongs, and their peaceful means of righting them for the common good. You know that literature is my profession—it is at once my business and my pleasure, and I shall never pass beyond it. The association can render me no service but as one of the community, and I join it in no other character, and with no other purpose.

Dear sir, faithfully yours,
CHARLES DICKENS

S. Morley Esq.

To MRS WINTER, 11 JUNE 1855

MS Huntington Library.

Tavistock House | Eleventh June 1855

My Dear Maria.

I answered your last letter but one, almost as soon as I received it, to let you know that I should be out of town that Sunday, and for several Sundays in succession. This note of mine must have gone astray somehow or somewhere, for I posted it myself. It has happened on a former occasion—but only on one—that a letter of mine failed to reach its destination. How this comes to be missing, I cannot comprehend.

Your account of your poor little child is distressing indeed, and makes me heartily sorry for your fatigues and anxieties. I have never had any faith in the homoeopathic system and therefore have never tried it. I am inclined to think that it is principally successful with people who have nothing the matter with them, and that active diseases where there is a vigorous action for evil going on, require more decided remedies. Still, it is indubitably successful in some violent cases even.

I shall be very happy to receive your little token of remembrance,[†2] when you have less care on your mind, and have set your Baby up—as I hope and trust you soon will—twenty times stronger than before. Take care of your Baby's mother, and God bless her.

Ever Faithfully Yours

CD.

To W. H. WILLS, 12 JUNE 1855

MS Huntington Library.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Twelfth June 1855.

My Dear Wills.

There is no fear of our misunderstanding one another.

I should be heartily glad for you to increase your income, and hope I have suggested a means by which you may do so.[†1] My letter (as I thought I expressed in it), does not apply to every conceivable kind of literary occupation, but particularizes the editing or sub-editing of a periodical not associated with Household Words.

Your zeal and fidelity in all respects, of course I have never doubted. How could I!

Faithfully Yours Ever

CD.

To WILLIAM HOWITT, 13 JUNE 1855

Mention in Catalogue of Collection of Ferdinand Julius Dreer, Philadelphia, 1890; dated 13 June 55; addressed William Howitt.

To MRS WINTER, 13 JUNE 1855[†2]

MS Huntington Library.

Tavistock House | Wednesday Thirteenth June 1855

My Dear Mrs. Winter.

I am truly grieved to hear of your affliction in the loss of your darling baby.[†3] But if you be not, even already, so reconciled to the parting from that innocent child for a little while, as to bear it gently and with a softened sorrow, I know that that not unhappy state of mind must soon arise. The death of infants is a release from so much chance and change—from so many casualties and distresses—and is a thing so beautiful in its serenity and peace—that it should not be a bitterness, even in a mother's heart. The simplest and most affecting passage in all the noble history of our Great Master, is his consideration for little children.[†4] And in reference to yours, as many millions of bereaved mothers poor and rich will do in reference to theirs until the end of time, you may take the comfort of the gracious[†5] words "And he took a child, and set it in the midst of them."

In a book by one of the greatest English writers,[†6] called A Journey from this World to the next, a parent comes to the distant country beyond the grave, and finds the little girl he had lost so long ago, engaged in building a bower to receive him in, when his aged steps should bring him there at last. He is filled with joy to see her—so young—so bright—so full of promise—and is enraptured to think that she never was old, wan, tearful, withered. This is always one of the sources of consolation in the deaths of children. With no effort of the fancy, with nothing to undo, you will always be able to think of the pretty creature you have lost, as a child in Heaven.

A poor little baby of mine,[†1] lies in Highgate Cemetery—and I laid her, just as you think of laying yours,[†2] in the catacombs there, until I made a resting-place for all of us in the free air.

It is better that I should not come to see you. I feel quite sure of that, and will think of you instead.

God bless and comfort you! Mrs. Dickens and her sister send their kindest condolences to yourself and Mr. Winter. I add mine with all my heart.

Affectionately Your friend
CHARLES DICKENS

To OCTAVIAN BLEWITT, 15 JUNE 1855*

MS Royal Literary Fund.

Tavistock Square | Friday Fifteenth June 1855

My Dear Sir

I have promised to Sir E. Bulwer Lytton, to ask you to send him another printed summons for the Meeting tomorrow,[†3] to his house No. 1 Park Lane. He has accidentally destroyed the first, and fears he may have some difficulty in getting in without any.[†4]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Octavian Blewitt Esquire

To THE ACTING INSPECTOR OF POLICE,[†1] 15 JUNE 1855*

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

Tavistock House | Friday Fifteenth June 1855

Mr. Charles Dickens begs to inform the Acting Inspector of Police that he is going to have some theatrical entertainments at his house, tomorrow (Saturday) and on Monday and Tuesday Evenings; and that he wishes to have a Policeman in attendance each night from 7 to 12, to direct the setting down and taking up of carriages, and to prevent the intrusion of any stragglers into the enclosure before the house. Mr. Dickens will of course be happy to pay any charge that may be occasioned.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 19 JUNE 1855

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Nineteenth June 1855

My Dear Miss Coutts

I dispatch a hasty report to you and O. The audience were not so demonstrative last night as on Saturday, and the Corps Dramatique were disposed to think them "flat". I observed however that they were crying vigorously, and I think they were quite as much moved and pleased as on Saturday, though they did not cheer the actors on so much—except in the Farce.[†2] Everybody played exactly as on the previous night—including Mr. Forster, who buffeted the guests (I am informed) in the same light and airy manner. Mrs. Stanfield was mollified, and certainly seemed to have been hustled out of the house on Saturday Night, like a species of pickpocket. Lady Beecher[†3] was evidently very much impressed and surprised, and Mrs. Yates[†4] said (with a large red circle round each eye), "O Mr. Dickens what a pity it is you can do anything else!"[†5]

Longman the bookseller[†1] was seen to cry dreadfully—and I don't know that anything could be said beyond that!—

I shall send you another Report tomorrow. Georgina and I are now going to ticket the seats again.

Ever Dear Miss Coutts Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

To ROBERT HUNT,[†2] 19 JUNE 1855*

MS Yale University Library.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Nineteenth June 1855

Dear Sir

I have never had any personal knowledge (that I can recall), of Mr. Doogood,[†3] but I know him to have occupied the position you describe.[†4] I cannot but think that the Proprietors of the Daily News would assist him in his unhappy circumstances,[†5] for I understand that they are usually liberal towards their faithful servants when afflictions come upon them.

I regret to add that I do not know of any Fund or Institution available in such a case.

Allow me to assure you that your letter requires no apology, and that your name needed no commendation to me.[†6]

Dear Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Robert Hunt Esquire

To MRS TROLLOPE,[†7] 19 JUNE 1855

MS[†8] Free Library of Philadelphia.

Tavistock House, | Tuesday Morning, Nineteenth June | 1855

My Dear Mrs. Trollope

I was out of town on Sunday, or I should have answered your note immediately on its arrival.[†9] I cannot have the pleasure of seeing the famous "Medium"[†10] tonight, for I have some Theatricals at home. But I fear I should not in any case be a good subject for the purpose, as I altogether want faith in the thing.[†1] I have not the least belief in the awful unseen World being available for evening parties at so much per night. And although I should be ready to receive enlightenment from any source, I must say that I have very little hope of it from the Spirits who express themselves through Mediums, as I have never yet observed them to talk anything but Nonsense—of which (as Carlyle would say),[†2] there is probably enough in these days of ours, and in all days, among mere mortality.

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To BENJAMIN WEBSTER, 19 JUNE 1855*

MS British Library.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Nineteenth June 1855

My Dear Webster

Lemon seems to think you have some idea of seeing the Play again, tonight. This is to give you notice that you are expected, and that your seat is reserved; so (as the warrants run),[†3] herein fail not at your peril.

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Benjamin Webster Esquire

To SAMUEL BROWN, 20 JUNE 1855*

MS Gordon College, Wenham, Mass.

Tavistock House | Wednesday Twentieth June | 1855

Sir

In reply to your obliging enquiry,[†4] I beg to say that I shall be glad to have six tickets[†5] for the Dress Circle of boxes and two for the platform.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Samuel Brown Esquire

To CLARKSON STANFIELD, 20 JUNE 1855

MS Yale University Library.

Tavistock House | Wednesday Twentieth June 1855

My Dear Stanny

I write a hasty note to let you know that last night was Perfectly Wonderful!!![†1]

Such an audience! Such a brilliant success from first to last![†2] The Queen had taken it into her head in the morning to go to Chatham,[†3] and had carried Phipps with her. He wrote to me, asking if it were possible to give him a quarter of an hour.[†4] I got through that time before the Overture, and he came—without any dinner—so inflamed by eager curiosity. Lemon and I did every conceivable absurdity, I think, in the Farce; and they never left off laughing. At supper I proposed your health,[†5] which was drunk with Nine times Nine, and three cheers over. We then turned to at Scotch Reels (having had no exercise), and danced in the maddest way until 5 this morning.

It is as much as I can do, to guide the pen

With loves to Mrs. Stanfield and all, | Ever Most affectionately Yours

CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 21 JUNE 1855

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Holly Lodge | Highgate.

Tavistock House | Twenty First June 1855

My Dear Miss Coutts

I am happy to report the Crowning night, a greater success than either of the others! Everything was in complete and thorough train—the audience were brilliant in their recognition—the actors were in great spirits—and some five and twenty of us danced the maddest Scotch Reels, with all the steps conscientiously executed, until 5 O'Clock in the Morning.

To sum up all. Charley was off to the City at a quarter before Nine, and the House (that one room excepted), was in its usual condition at Noon. We were not much tired yesterday; but I feel to day, for one, like my Invalid-friend in the Farce[†6]—with two pains (and nothing else) to represent my arms, two more instead of my legs, and a broad pathway of Fatigue-lumbago down my back.

I expect the Postman on this beat, to sink under the fatigue of delivering letters of enthusiasm from the three audiences. They come showering in every hour.

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

To MRS DAVENPORT,[†1] 21 JUNE 1855*

MS Dickens House.

Tavistock House | Twenty First June 1855

Mr. Charles Dickens begs to assure Mrs. Davenport that he has no influence with the Literary Fund, and is unable to advance the object she has in view.[†2]

To HENRY MORLEY, 21 JUNE 1855

Extract in H. S. Solly, The Life of Henry Morley, 1898, p. 225.

I think your idea of an almanac[†3] an excellent one.

To SIR RODERICK MURCHISON, 21 JUNE 1855*

MS Mr W. A. Foyle.

Tavistock House | Twenty First June 1855

My Dear Sir Roderick

The defaulter blushes—but the beaten one pleads. I was quite knocked up yesterday, after four nights[†4] Theatricals—had no legs—no head—no voice—nothing to bring to Greenwich[†5] but a suit of clothes. I gave in, of sheer imbecility.

Faithfully Yours always

Sir Roderick Murchison

To HENRY AUSTIN, 22 JUNE 1855*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Friday Evening | Twenty Second June 1855

My Dear Henry.

Agreeably to our Compact, here is a Platform Ticket for Drury Lane, next Wednesday.[†6] If you would like to go with Jacob Dale of the Eddystone Lighthouse,[†7] write him a line addressed 11 Gordon Street Gordon Square, and I am sure he will be delighted to have such company.

Ever affecy.

CD.

To DAVID ROBERTS, 22 JUNE 1855*

MS Yale University Library.

Tavistock House | Twenty Second June 1855 | Friday Evening

My Dear Roberts.

My attention was first called to the subject of Mr. Howell's[†1] communication,[†2] by one of his colleagues in the Inspection of Factories.[†3] I will hand the papers[†4] Mr. Howell has been kind enough to forward to me through you, to the gentleman to whom I entrusted the writing of the Articles that have already appeared in Household Words.[†5] They have occasioned a private correspondence between me and a Manchester Mill Owner,[†6] one of the Association[†7]—angrily begun on his side, and temperately continued on mine—in which I think his Union[†8] did not get the better of

Yours Ever

CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 23 JUNE 1855†

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Holly Lodge | Highgate.

Tavistock House | Twenty Third June 1855

My Dear Miss Coutts

[†a]I have a heavy complaint to make against you (which I only knew of, when my people returned from Holly Lodge yesterday); and I cannot rest until I make it.

How could you entertain the shadow of a desire to be here last Tuesday night, and not tell me? As if there could be any possible circumstances in which it would not have been a delight to me to make room for you and yours! Why, I had my brother[†1] among the audience that night, who would have come out with the greatest readiness, on the lightest hint of my desire, and who, with any of half a dozen young men in the audience, would have had a greater interest in being allowed to stand behind the scenes than in sitting before them. I thought nothing would have vexed me in connexion with the Play after its going off so well and pleasing everybody so much, but I declare I could knock my dull head against the desk I write upon, for not having asked you if you would care to see it again. It was really in diffidence that I did not, for I could not imagine (and I thought about it when we were sitting in the Theatre on Monday), that you could have a thought that way, and not express it. And I felt as if it would be a kind of taking advantage of your feeling for it, to propose to you to come again.[†a]

I can never forgive you. And as to O[†2] who might have rectified your omission by the softest whisper in my ear—I renounce her!

Dear Miss Coutts | Ever Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

I am going to speak at Drury Lane next Wednesday. I don't think I shall do anybody any harm—but I feel a little vicious against Lord Palmerston.[†3]

To MRS TROLLOPE, 23 JUNE 1855

Text from N, II, 674. Address (envelope, MS Berg Collection): Mrs Trollope | 6 Allen Terrace | Kensington. PM JU 25 1855.

Tavistock House | Twenty Third June 1855

My Dear Mrs. Trollope

I would rather not enter on the investigation under such circumstances.[†1] If I felt myself at liberty to repeat a conversation,[†2] I could present my reason far more plainly. But I do not consider that I have the right to do so.

Very faithfully yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To WILKIE COLLINS, 24 JUNE 1855

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Sunday Twenty Fourth June 1855

My Dear Collins.

I am delighted that I have this one Ticket to spare, out of six that I got for Home. If you will be at the principal door in Brydges Street,[†3] a little before a quarter to 7, and will there meet my people as they come up, and go in with them, you will find your place secured. The Secretary writes me that it is necessary to be early,[†4] to avoid calling attention to this fact, as other places are not secured.

I am rather flustered about the thing just now, not knowing their ways or what kind of Audience they are, or how they go on at all. But I'll try them, and the best can do no more.

I have broached a move Kensington wards,[†5] for changing their arrangements altogether—dropping the Farce—putting their piece second—and playing The Lighthouse (original cast and Scenery) first.[†6] I don't know whether anything may come of it, but I thought it well to make a discreet point that way. This for the present is entirely between ourselves.[†7]

Will you tell your brother with my regards, that I write to Townshend by tomorrow morning's Mail. I am not quite sure where he is.[†1]

Ever Yours

CD.

To THE REV. CHAUNCY HARE TOWNSHEND, [25 JUNE 1855]

Mention in last. Date: the day after that letter.

A letter on behalf of Charles Collins.

To EDWIN CHADWICK, 26 JUNE 1855*

MS University College Library.

Tavistock House

Twenty Sixth June 1855 | Tuesday Evening

My Dear Mr. Chadwick

My impression is, that I had best keep clear of the technical points; for I think the audience will get enough of them from others, and would be disappointed if I did not rather dash at them—by "them", I mean the audience themselves. I therefore think I shall generally go for the broad object, and the broad defence, of such an Association.[†2] I have received the Proof you kindly sent me.[†3]

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Edwin Chadwick Esquire

To DR JOHN EPPS, 26 JUNE 1855*

MS Miss Julia Rosenthal.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Twenty Sixth June 1855

Dear Sir

Allow me to acknowledge the receipt of the books[†1] you have had the kindness to send me, and to thank you for them.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Dr. Epps.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 27 JUNE 1855

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Stratton Street | Piccadilly.

Tavistock House | Wednesday Twenty Seventh June 1855

My Dear Miss Coutts.

Will you call for me here, on Monday at a quarter past 2. I will then pilot you to Alsatia[†2]—the Printers' is on the Fortunes of Nigel ground.[†3]

I am sorry for what occurred in Hyde Park,[†4] but it is an illustration of what I endeavoured to put before you in reference to to-night's Association—I mean the extraordinary ignorance on the part of those who make the laws, of what is behind us, and what is ever ready to break in if it be too long despised. I have said to any one in Parliament whom I know and have happened to see, since Ld. Robert Grosvenor[†5] brought in that bill, "how can you be so mad as to let it creep on? There is no power in the Country that can enforce it if it be passed; the people are going wild by being worried on the subject; they have suffered an amount of cruel denial and discomfort through the last Sunday bill,[†6] which you don't or won't understand; and it is wonderful to see you rushing on to riot and disturbance as you are". Some don't understand how things can be so, many more don't care, and the dangerous result is brought about that the people get no hearing until they break out into tumult—and then the business is done in a moment.

If Ld. Robert Grosvenor were so ignorant as to bring in that bill on the requisition of any fanatic people whomsoever, he is simply the last man who ought to represent Middlesex—which I hope he will never do again.

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

To J. L. ALLEN, 28 JUNE 1855*

MS Yale University Library.

Tavistock House | Thursday Twenty Eighth June 1855

Sir.

Allow me to apologize to you for my mistake. I fully believed I had paid the stable Rent to last Lady Day. Finding no such entry in my banking book, I beg to enclose a cheque for the amount,[†1] and shall feel obliged if you will send me a receipt.

I am Sir | Your obedient Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

J. L. Allen Esquire

To LEIGH HUNT, 28 JUNE 1855

MS Iowa University Library.

Tavistock House | Thursday June Twenty Eighth 1855

My Dear Hunt.

Do not, I beg you, suppose that I have been unmindful of your letter. I have been more busily engaged than I could easily tell you, and have not until this day seen my way to an evening when I can pass an hour at Hammersmith. Next Monday evening, please God, I will pause in my walk, at 7 Cornwall Road.

But I hope you will not now think it necessary to renew that painful subject with me.[†2] There is nothing to remove from my mind—I hope, nothing to remove from yours. I thought of the little notice[†3] which has given you (I rejoice most heartily to find), so much pleasure—as the best means that could possibly present themselves of enabling me to express myself publicly about you as you would desire. In that better and unmistakeable association with you by name, let all end.

Faithfully Yours always
CD.

To LEIGH HUNT, 28 JUNE 1855

MS Iowa University Library.

Tavistock House | Twenty Eighth June 1855

P.S. To my note of this morning

Not Monday—Tuesday

To JOHN FORSTER, 29 [JUNE] 1855

Composite text from MDGH, 1882, III, 165-7, ([aa] from F, 1872-4, III, 49-50*n*. Date: Forster and MDGH both give March, obviously in error.

Tavistock House, Friday, 29th March, 1855.

My dear Forster,

[a]I have hope of Mr. Morley—whom one cannot see without knowing to be a straightforward, earnest man. Travers,[†1] too, I think a man of the Anti-corn-law-league order.[†2] I also think Higgins[†3] will materially help them. Generally I quite agree with you that they hardly know what to be at;[†4] but it is an immensely difficult subject to start, and they must have every allowance. At any rate, it is not by leaving them alone and giving them no help, that they can be urged on to success.[a]

Higgins told me, after the meeting on Monday[†5] night, that on the previous evening he had been closeted with [Lindsay],[†6] whose letter in that day's paper he had put right for The Times.[†7] He had never spoken to [Lindsay] before, he said, and found him a rather muddle-headed Scotchman as to his powers of conveying his ideas.[†1] He (Higgins) had gone over his documents judicially, and with the greatest attention; and not only was [Wood][†2] wrong in every particular (except one very unimportant circumstance), but, in reading documents[†3] to the House, had stopped short in sentences where no stop was, and by so doing had utterly perverted their meaning.[†4]

This is to come out, of course, when said [Lindsay] gets the matter on.[†5] I thought the case so changed, before I knew this, by his letter and that of the other shipowners,[†6] that I told Morley, when I went down to the theatre, that I felt myself called upon to relieve him from the condition I had imposed.[†7]

For the rest, I am quite calmly confident that I only do justice to the strength of my opinions, and use the power which circumstances have given me, conscientiously and moderately, with a right object, and towards the prevention of nameless miseries. I should be now reproaching myself if I had not gone to the meeting, and, having been, I am very glad.[†8]

A good illustration of a Government office. ———[†1] very kindly wrote to me to suggest that "Houses of Parliament" illustration.[†2] After I had dined on Wednesday, and was going to jog slowly down to Drury Lane, it suddenly came into my head that perhaps his details were wrong. I had just time to turn to the "Annual Register,"[†3] and not one of them was correct!

This is, of course, in close confidence.

Ever affectionately

[CD]

To THE REV. HUGH REED,[†4] 29 JUNE 1855*

MS New York Public Library.

Tavistock House | Twenty Ninth June 1855

Dear Sir

Before I make an appointment as you request, will you allow me to beg that you will have the goodness to let me know in writing, what the subject is to which you desire to call my attention. My leisure not keeping pace with my inclination, and my ability to serve any cause being dependent on my not distributing myself over too many, I am obliged to lay down this rule. You would understand its positive necessity better, if you could imagine—or if any mortal credulity could—the number of my correspondents.

Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

The Reverend Hugh Reed.

To BENJAMIN WEBSTER, 29 JUNE 1855[†5]

Mention in Sotheby's catalogue Jan 1883; MS 1 p.; dated 29 June 55.

To MESSRS BRADBURY & EVANS, 30 JUNE 1855*

MS British Library.

Household[†6] Words | Thirtieth June 1855

My Dear B and E.

Miss Coutts is unwell, and, having a child's Party to day and a swell Party on Tuesday, is afraid of knocking herself up by coming to W. Friars on Monday. She therefore wishes me to postpone the arrangement.

But I suppose the steak will come off, just the same?

Ever Faithfully
CD.

To W. C. MACREADY, 30 JUNE 1855

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Saturday Thirtieth June 1855

My Very dear Macready.

I write shortly, after a day's work at my desk, rather than lose a post in answering your enthusiastic, earnest, and young—how young, in all the best side of youth!—letter.

To tell you the truth, I confidently expected to hear from you.[†1] I knew that if there were a man in the world who would be interested in, and who would approve of, my giving utterance to whatever was in me, at this time, it would be you. I was as sure of you as of the Sun this morning.

The subject is surrounded by difficulties, the Association is sorely in want of able men, and the resistance on the part of all the Phalanx who have an interest in corruption and mismanagement, is the resistance of a struggle against Death. But the great first strong necessity is to rouse the people up—to keep them stirring and vigilant—to carry the War, dead into the Tent of such a creature as this Lord Palmerston,[†2] and ring into his soul (or what stands for it), that the time for Dandy insolence[†3] is gone for ever. It may be necessary to come to that law of Primogeniture (I have no love for it), or to come to even greater things; but this is the first service to be done, and unless it is[†4] done, there is not a chance. For this, and to encourage timid people to come in, I went to Drury Lane the other night—and I wish you had been there, and had seen and heard the people!

The Association will be proud to have your name and gift.[†5] When we sat down on the stage the other night, and were waiting a minute or two to begin, I said to Morley the Chairman (a thoroughly fine earnest fellow) "this reminds me so of one of my dearest friends—with a melancholy so curious—that I don't know whether the place feels familiar to me or strange". He was full of interest directly, and we went on talking of you until the moment of his getting up to open the business.

They are going to print my speech in a tract-form,[†1] and send it all over the country. I corrected it for the purpose, last night.

Forster and I (between ourselves) don't quite agree on public matters, and I make an occasional rush at him which rather damages our concord, for a little while now and then. We are all well. Charley in the City, all the boys at home for the holidays, three prizes brought in triumphantly (two from the Boulogne Waters and one from Wimbledon),[†2] I taking dives into a new book, and runs at leap-frog over Household Words,—and Anne going to be married[†3]—which is the only bad news.

Catherine, Georgina, Mary, Katey, Charley, and all the rest, send multitudes of loves. Ever My Dearest Macready with unalterable affection and attachment, Your faithful friend,

CHARLES DICKENS

P.S. I am going to try my hand at the Address on the Envelope, but without the least expectation of ever doing it right.

P. P.S. The first word sews me up. Is it Tun? Tam? or Tom?[†4]

July

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 2 JULY 1855*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Holly Lodge | Highgate.

Tavistock House | Monday Second July 1855

My Dear Miss Coutts.

The Printers are sorely disappointed, and so am I—and heartily sorry for the cause of your postponing your visit.

I lose no time in letting you know that I have arranged with Colonel Waugh[†5] of Campden House, this morning, that we will play the Lighthouse there next Tuesday, the 10th.[†6] It is a charming little Theatre.[†7] If you intend to take any tickets, pray send to Mitchell's[†8] soon.

Ever Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

To MESSRS BRADBURY & EVANS, 4 JULY 1855

Mention in Dickens Exhibition, New Dudley Gallery catalogue, 1909 (lent by W. T. Spencer); MS 1 p.; dated Tavistock House, 4 July 55.

To JOHN LEECH, 4 JULY 1855

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House | Fourth July 1855

My Dear Leech.

I saw Egg yesterday, and he told me what you had told him you saw of the Police in Hyde Park.[†1] I cannot rest—I really cannot—without urging you in the strongest manner, to write a letter to the Times[†2] to day with your name and address,[†3] stating the plain fact.[†4] It is what a public and known man is bound to do.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To THOMAS BEARD, 6 JULY 1855

MS Dickens House. Address: Thomas Beard Esquire | Morning Herald Office | Shoe Lane | Fleet Street.

Tavistock House | Friday Sixth July 1855

My Dear Beard

I have conceived a capital plan for initiating you into the oddities of the Coulisses[†1] at Campden House; but it will involve your being there two evenings, and, on the first evening (Monday) rather early.

The Swell-Amateurs[†2] who do the Afterpiece,[†3] have so wholesome a dread of the Inimitable, and the Inimitable is so strict about the keeping of the Stage, that the said Inimitable feels bound to uphold his own laws. Therefore he considers that everybody who is "behind", must have something to do in that sacred ground. Now, if you will do the wind (it is only to turn the handle of a machine), there you are—in office!

But, in order to blow with distinguished merit, it will be necessary on Monday Evening (when there is a Dress Rehearsal) to rehearse the storm before the people come in, under the auspices of Charley whom I have trained to the government of the Elements.[†4] On that night it would be necessary to be at Campden House by 6. Can you manage that? On the following night, 8 would be a sufficiently early hour. Charley will be dining, I dare say, somewhere near Shoe Lane;[†5] and he shall call for you, there or anywhere, if you will give me your directions.

If you could have seen me yesterday, with a wretched Idiot[†6] (of large property), who was yaw-yawing through the part of a French Viscount,[†7] with a walking stick of private life—how it was necessary to take his walking stick away from him, and impound the same—and how he was pulled up, and driven on, and pushed in, and turned round, and forced on, and taken off, like a sort of Image; until at last he fell into a kind of moral drunkenness, and staggered about in mere moon-struck imbecility—you would have wondered as much as I did (or, I suppose, he did), why the Devil he ever came there.[†8]

Ever Cordially

CD

To LEIGH HUNT, 6 JULY 1855*

MS Boston Athenaeum. Address: Leigh Hunt Esquire | 7 Cornwall Road | Hammersmith.

Tavistock House | Friday Sixth July 1855

My Dear Hunt.

The inscription[†1] needs no qualification or explanation—and shall have none, if I know it.

Tear up the piece of paper I wrote for you,[†2] and substitute the enclosed card. I would recommend you (we do not begin quite so soon as I had expected), to be there at 10 minutes past 8.

Ever affectionately yours

CHARLES DICKENS

P.S. | I don't know when I have talked so much at a sitting, as with you on Tuesday Night.[†3] Either there is some remarkable chirruping quality in your tea—or in you—for I seem to have been transformed into a sort of Cricket.

To THE REV. R. TABRAHAM,[†4] 6 JULY 1855*

MS Huntington Library.

Tavistock House, London | Friday Sixth July 1855

Sir.

I regret that I cannot advise you, in reference to the literary compositions you describe.[†5] If I were disposed to accept that delicate responsibility, the number of correspondents who address me on such subjects would alone render it a matter of physical impossibility. You will the better understand this, when I assure you that I count them by hundreds, not by scores; and that to answer such communications, however briefly, is a very serious encroachment on my leisure.

I am only able to consider your letter, as the Conductor of Household Words. I fear the writings you mention would not be adapted to the present requirements of that publication, and therefore I do not think it right to encourage you to offer them for acceptance at its Office. But I can give you the assurance that whatever is proffered there is honestly read, and that it is always as much my pleasure as my interest to avail myself of the services of a good Contributor.

I am Sir | Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Rev. R. Tabraham.

To WILKIE COLLINS, 8 JULY 1855

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Sunday Eighth July, 1855

My Dear Collins

I don't know whether you may have heard from Webster,[†1] or whether the impression I derived from Mark's manner on Friday[†2] may be altogether correct. But it strongly occurred to me that Webster was going to decline the Play,[†3] and that he really has worried himself into a fear of playing Aaron.[†4]

Now, when I got this into my head—which was during the Rehearsal—I considered two things—firstly, how we could best put[†5] about the success of the piece more widely and extensively even than it has yet reached, and secondly how you could be best asserted[†6] against a bad production of it hereafter, or no production of it. I thought I saw, immediately, that the point would be to have this representation noticed in the Newspapers.[†7] So I waited until the Rehearsal was over and we had profoundly astonished the family, and then asked Colonel Waugh what he thought of sending some cards for Tuesday to the papers. He highly approved, and I yesterday morning directed Mitchell to send to all the morning papers, and to some of the weekly ones—a dozen in the whole.[†8]

I dined at Lord John's yesterday (where Meyerbeer[†9] was, and said to me after dinner "Ah mon ami illustre! Que c'est noble de vous entendre parler d'haute voix morale, a la table d'un Ministre!"[†10]—for I gave them a little bit of truth about Sunday,[†1] that was like bringing a Sebastopol battery among the polite company)—I say, after this long parenthesis I dined at Lord John's and found great interest and talk about the Play, and about what everybody who had been here had said of it.[†2] And I was confirmed in my decision that the thing for you was the Invitation to the papers. Hence I write to tell you what I have done.

I dine at home at ½ past 5 if you are disengaged, and shall be at home all the evening.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To W. H. WILLS, 8 JULY 1855*

MS Huntington Library.

Tavistock House | Sunday Eighth July 1855

My Dear Wills

I have tried for the last three days, to knock out something for Household Words;[†3] but—whether I want a subject, or am dull, or am put out by the clearing away of my books and papers, preparatory to our departure[†4]—I have been quite unable to please myself with a start.

It will be necessary for us to settle the next No.[†5] on Wednesday, as I am going to Oxford on Thursday,[†6] and shall only be back here to go down to Folkestone. Therefore we will give the greater part of Wednesday to H. W. and will dine at the office.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To ROBERT BIGSBY,[†7] 10 JULY 1855

Text from N, II, 678.

Tavistock House | Tenth July 1855

Sir.

Allow me to thank you for the pamphlets[†8] you have had the kindness to send me, and for your obliging note.

I hope I never fall off from my duty of assisting the claims of literature and of its professors. The subject to which you call my attention rests with the latter themselves.

Your faithful servant
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 10 JULY 1855*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Holly Lodge | Highgate.

Tavistock House | Tuesday July Tenth 1855

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I enclose you a note I have received from Dr. Sutherland, in reference to the Drying Machine.[†1]

Faithfully Yours always
CHARLES DICKENS

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 10 JULY 1855*

MS Private.

Tavistock House | Tuesday Tenth July, 1855

My Dear Sir

I have duly placed my sign-manual in your interesting little book. And I return it, sincerely reciprocating your kind wishes that we may be better acquainted.

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 11 JULY 1855*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Holly Lodge | Highgate.

Tavistock House | Eleventh July, 1855

My Dear Miss Coutts.

Nothing can be better.[†1] It seems to me, to be about the only solitary "administrative" thing connected with the War, that has been a success!

Ever Most Faithfully Yours
CD.

To HENRY AUSTIN, 12 JULY 1855*

MS Morgan Library.

Tavistock House | Thursday Twelfth July 1855

My Dear Henry.

I will send the little carriage down, to lodge in your coach-house, next Saturday.

Having made a wild engagement to row up to London from Oxford (I have not the least idea why I am going to do such a thing), I am off this afternoon, to return on Sunday Evening. On Monday Morning we go to Folkestone; I shall usually be in town every Saturday.

With loves to Lætitia | Ever affectionately

CD.

To RICHARD BENTLEY, 12 JULY 1855*

MS Berg Collection.

Tavistock House | Twelfth July, 1855

Dear Sir

I am not particularly proud of the performance[†2] to which your obliging note refers, and shall be sufficiently contented to pay the deficit[†3] for the privilege of possessing myself of the copies on hand.

I am going to Oxford this afternoon, and thence to Folkestone. But I purpose being in town on Saturday the 28th. and shall be happy to see you on that day, at the Household Words office at 1 O'Clock, if that time will suit your convenience.[†1]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esquire.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 12 JULY 1855†

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Holly Lodge | Highgate.

Tavistock House | Thursday Twelfth July, 1855

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I only know one thing of this man[†2]—and I am afraid it is not to his advantage. Last week, I received a letter from him, almost the counterpart of that which he now addresses to you. His mention of poor Talfourd,[†3] means nothing. The chief employment of Talfourd's confidential Clerk was to prevent his taking his hat off his head, or his watch out of his pocket, to give it in his kindness to would-be poets by whom he was ever beset. I never heard of this man's verses,[†4] I thought his writing from the Post office at Bath (which I see is the address he gives you also), very suspicious, and I do not think it is a case deserving of relief.[†5]

I had written thus far, when I received your enclosure of Mr. Sinnetts's[†6] letter. He is a man to whom I have given a sovereign now and then; but I never saw him, and only know him to be one of the hangers-on of the skirts of the press—literally a "penny a liner". That he is a rather speculative gentleman, you may infer from another letter[†7] of his, addressed to me which I enclose in his to you now returned. I send it for your amusement, and have never answered it. I doubt if his treatise[†8] would ever be published, if you subscribed to it; and I have practical reason to believe that if you began to give him anything, you would find him a persevering correspondent. Further, he seems to me to be getting into the begging-letter system as a regular business.[†1]

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

I have lately had two more excessively urgent letters from that Mrs. Matthews,[†2] the wife of the Clergyman near Kendal.

To W. H. WILLS, 12 JULY 1855

MS Huntington Library.

Tavistock House | Thursday Twelfth July 1855

My Dear Wills

There is no doubt whatever, that the Wife's story is written by a very remarkable woman.[†3] I am quite clear that there is strong reason to believe that a great writer is coming up in this person, whoever it is.

The story is extremely difficult of adaptation to our purpose, but I think I see a way to doing it in four parts.[†4] It would require, however, to be condensed in the beginning, and I believe the catastrophe to be altogether wrong.[†5] That part must be re-written if I accept it, and I should particularly like to see the writer on that subject.

If you have the means of communicating readily with the lady—I assume the writer to be a lady—I will see her at the office on Monday at 11, if that day and hour should suit her convenience. In the event of her living in the country, I suppose I must write; but I would prefer an interview. I think there is a surprising knowledge of one dark phase of human nature,[†6] throughout this composition; and that it is expressed, generally, with uncommon passion and power.

You may quote as much of this—part or all, as you like—in writing to this author, and I particularly wish you would add that the story only came under my perusal this morning.

I enclose another MS[†7] which will be enquired for at the office. The lady's name[†8] and address I have marked in pencil upon it. I have written to her and declined it.

Faithfully Ever

CD.

I have seen Evans here just now, about their change in the Heading.[†1] It must stand as it is until the end of the Volume,[†2] and I will tell you on Monday how I propose it shall then be.

Enclosed is a draft for 12/6 which you can place to my credit in our account.

To UNKNOWN LADY, [12 JULY 1855]

Mention in To Wills, 12 July 55.

To MR MERITON,[†3] [15 JULY 1855]

Mention in To Wills, 22 July 55.

Declining to read his MS by the date requested by Meriton.

To JOHN CASTLE,[†4] 16 JULY 1855*

MS National Library of Scotland. Address: John Castle Esquire | 13 Broughton Place | Edinburgh.

Tavistock House, London | Sixteenth July 1855

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Castle, and begs to say that he paid the subscription[†5] for which Mr. Castle writes, several days ago.

To WILKIE COLLINS, 17 JULY 1855

MS Morgan Library.

3 Albion Villas, Folkestone | Tuesday Seventeenth July, 1855

My Dear Collins.

I find at this moment that I have begun on a sheet of paper which has another beginning at the other end.[†6] Never mind.

Walter goes back to School on the first of August. Will you come out of school to this breezy vacation, on the same day—or rather this day fortnight, July 31*st.,* for that is the day on which he leaves us and we begin (here's a Parent!) to be able to be comfortable. Why a boy of that age[†7] should seem to have on at all times, 150 pair of double soled boots, and to be always jumping a bottom stair with the whole 150, I don't know. But the woeful fact is within my daily experience.

We have a very pleasant little house overlooking the sea, and I think you will like the place. It rained, in honor of our arrival, with the greatest vigor yesterday. I went out after dinner to buy some nails (you know the arrangements that would be then in progress),[†1] and I stopped in the rain, about half way down a steep crooked street[†2] like a crippled ladder, to look at a little Coachmaker's[†3] where there had just been a sale. Speculating on the insolvent coachmaker's business and what kind of coaches he could possibly have expected to get orders for in Folkestone, I thought "What would bring together fifty people, now, in this little street at this little rainy minute?" On the instant, a brewer's van, with two mad horses in it, and the harness dangling about them like the trappings of those horses you are acquainted with, who bolted through the starry courts of Heaven,[†4] [†a]dashed by me,[†a] and in that instant such a crowd as would have accumulated in Fleet Street, sprang up magically. Men fell out of windows, dived out of doors, plunged down courts, precipitated themselves down steps—came down waterspouts instead of rain, I think—and I never saw so wonderful an instance of the gregarious effect of an excitement.

A man, a woman, and a child, had been thrown out, on the horses taking fright and the reins breaking. The child is dead, and the woman very ill but will probably recover, and the man has a hand broken and other mischief done to him.[†5]

Let me know what Wigan says. If he does not take the Play, and readily too, I would recommend you not to offer it elsewhere. You have gained great reputation by it, have done your position a deal of good, and (as I think) stand so well with it, that it is a pity to engender the notion that you care to stand better.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To MISS EMILY JOLLY,[†6] 17 JULY 1855

MS Free Library of Philadelphia.

3 Albion Villas, Folkestone, Kent | Tuesday Seventeenth July, 1855

Dear Madam.

Your manuscript entitled a Wife's Story has come under my own perusal within these last three or four days. I recognise in it such great merit and unusual promise, and I think it displays so much power and knowledge of the human heart, that I feel a strong interest in you as its writer.

I have begged the gentleman who is in my confidence as to the transaction of the business of Household Words, to return the MS to you by the post which (as I hope) will convey this note to you. My object is this. I particularly entreat you to consider the catastrophe.[†1] You write to be read, of course. The close of the story is unnecessarily painful—will throw off numbers of persons who would otherwise read it, and who (as it stands) will be deterred by hearsay from so doing—and is so tremendous a piece of severity, that it will defeat your purpose. All my knowledge and experience, such as they are, lead me straight to the recommendation that you will do well to spare the life of the husband, and of one of the children.[†2] Let her suppose the former dead, from seeing him brought in wounded and insensible—lose nothing of the progress of her mental suffering afterwards when that Doctor is in attendance upon her—but bring her round at last to the blessed surprise that her husband is still living, and that a repentance which can be worked out, in the way of atonement for the misery she has occasioned TO the man whom she so ill repaid for his love, and made so miserable, lies before her. So you will soften the reader whom you now as it were harden, and so you will bring tears from many eyes, which can only have their spring in affectionately and gently touched hearts. I am perfectly certain that with this change, all the previous part of your tale will tell for twenty times as much as it can in its present condition. And it is because I believe you have a great fame before you if you do justice to the remarkable ability you possess, that I venture to offer you this advice in what I suppose to be the beginning of your career.[†3]

I observe some parts of the story which would be strengthened, even in their psychological interest, by condensation here and there. If you will leave that to me, I will perform the task as conscientiously and carefully as if it were my own. But the suggestion I offer for your acceptance, no one but yourself can act upon.

Let me conclude this hasty note with the plain assurance that I have never been so much surprised and struck by any manuscript I have read, as I have been by yours.[†4]

Your faithful Servant
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Emily Jolly.

To SAMUEL BROWN, 18 JULY 1855

Extract in Charles De F. Burns catalogue, Oct 1956; MS 1 p.; dated 1855. Date, addressee and summary in Anderson Galleries catalogue, Mar 1927; dated Folkestone, 18 July 55; addressed Samuel Brown.

I do not consider myself at liberty to disclose the sources from which the information you desire is derivable.

To THE REV. MATTHEW GIBSON, 18 JULY 1855

MS Robert Taylor Collection, Princeton.

3 Albion Villas, Folkestone | Wednesday Eighteenth July, 1855

My Dear Sir

I write to let you know that I am going to send you another boy when Alfred and Frank return after these holidays—Sydney Smith, eight years old. I am much pleased with the general progress of his brothers, and hope they will all do you justice.

In reference to Sydney, I wish to prefer the special petition that he may not, as to his writing, "be put back into strokes". He has learned from his Aunt to write very well—not copies, but letters. He has for some time conducted a large imaginary correspondence with scores of people, and I have a great repugnance to the idea of his ardor in this wise being damped by a process of drudgery; the rather as he is an odd child, with a great deal of originality and character in him which struggles against a certain slowness in learning.

We all unite in kindest regards. And I am

My Dear Sir | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To HENRY AUSTIN, 21 JULY 1855*

MS Morgan Library.

Folkestone, Saturday Twenty First July 1855

My Dear Henry

Let me thank you very much for your kind note. Not being in town to make an agreeable little trip of it, I really had a delicacy in entertaining the idea of your going yourself to Gad's Hill.[†1] But I accept your considerate offer with the greatest readiness, and could be so well satisfied with no one else.

When you and Lætitia come to see us here (as we have decided that you will), I think you will be charmed with the place. The country is delightful, and has some of the very best walks that I have ever taken.

I am cooling down from theatricals and speechmakings, to my new book.

Loves from all. | Ever Affectionately
CD.

To MISS EMILY JOLLY, 21 JULY 1855

MS Mrs Marian G. Valentine.

3 Albion Villas, Folkestone | Twenty First July, 1855

Dear Madam

I did not enter, in detail, on the spirit of the alteration I propose in your story; because I thought it right that you should think out that for yourself if you applied yourself to the change. I can now assure you that you describe it, exactly as I had conceived it; and if I had wanted anything to confirm me in my conviction of its being right, our both seeing it so precisely from the same point of view, would be ample assurance to me.

I would leave her new and altered life to be inferred.[†1] It does not appear to me, either necessary or practicable (within such limits), to do more with that.

Do not be uneasy, if you find the alteration demanding time. I shall quite understand that, and my interest will keep. When you finish the story, send it to Mr. Wills. Besides being in daily communication with him, I am at the Office once a week; and I will go over it in print, before the proof is sent to you.

Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Miss Emily Jolly.

To MRS JULIA SCHWABE, 22 JULY 1855

Text from N, II, 682.

Folkestone | Sunday Twenty Second July 1855

Dear Mrs. Schwabe

I have this morning received your letter and box of papers. The arrival of such a heap of documents leaves me but one course.

It is incumbent on me to represent to you that I cannot enter on the examination of a case which requires to be pursued through such a labyrinth. I had begun to read the account of Miss Doudet's trial,[†2] but I now abandon it in despair. My life is a busy one, my thoughts are intently set upon a new book, I am surrounded by occupations which have their plain ends and uses, I have innumerable correspondents who have a right to my punctuality and attention, and I cannot plunge into this sea of distraction. I have no other impression of Miss Doudet's case, than I have of any other case in which a person has been tried and found guilty and has been in no wise benefited by an appeal. That she does not want friends,[†1] your generous devotion[†2] and that of the lady whom you mention,[†3] sufficiently assures me. To waste my energies in turning from the work and duty that I have clinging to my sleeve,[†4] to wander through a maze like this, would be to write my life and purpose in the seasand now lying before my window.

I will immediately send the whole of the papers to the Household Words Office in London, addressed to you, to the care of Mr. Wills there. That gentleman will send them on to any address you may forward to him for that purpose.

Faithfully Yours
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To E. M. WARD, 22 JULY 1855

Mention in Anderson Galleries catalogue, 1 Feb 1922; MS 1 p.; dated 22 July 55.

A letter of thanks.

To ROBERT BROUGH,[†5] [22 JULY 1855]

Mention in next. Date: no doubt written the same day.

To W. H. WILLS, 22 JULY 1855

MS Huntington Library.

Folkestone, Sunday Twenty Second July 1855

My Dear Wills

I have been so very much affected by the long story without a title[†6]—which I have read this morning—that I am scarcely fit for a business letter. It is more painfully pathetic than anything I have read for I know not how long. I am not at all of your opinion about the details. It seems to me to be so thoroughly considered, that they are all essential and in perfect keeping. I could not in my conscience recommend the writer to cut the story down in any material degree. I think it would be decidedly wrong to do so; and I see next to nothing in the MS, which is otherwise than an essential part of the sad picture.

Two difficulties then remain, which I fear are insurmountable as to Household Words. The first is, the length of the story.[†1] The next is, the nature of the idea on which it turns.[†2] So many unhappy people are, by no fault of their own, linked to a similar terrible possibility—or even probability—that I am afraid it might cause prodigious unhappiness, if we could address it to our large audience. I shrink from the responsibility of awakening so much slumbering fear and despair. Most unwillingly therefore, I come to the apprehension that there is no course but to return it to the authoress.[†3] I wish however that you would in the strongest language convey to her my opinion of its great merits, while you explain the difficulties I now set forth. I honestly think it a work of extraordinary power, and will gladly address a letter to her, if she should desire it, describing the impression it has made upon me. It might perhaps, help to soften a publisher.

Miss Lynn's story[†4] shews to considerable disadvantage, after such writing. But it is what she represented it in her draught, and it is very clever. Now, as it presents (to cursory[†5] readers) almost the reverse of the Medal whereof Miss Jolly presents the other side,[†6] I think it will be best to pay for it at once, and, for the present (say even for a few months), to hold it back;[†7] not telling her the exact reason, but merely saying that we are pledged first to the insertion of other stories in four parts, already accepted. Miss Jolly's is more wholesome and more powerful, because it hits the target which Miss Lynn goes a little about,[†8] with a rifle-shot in the centre of the Bull's-eye, and knocks it clean over. Therefore it should have precedence—both on its own account and ours.

But observe. I do not conceive it possible that Miss Jolly can alter her story within the time you mention. What I want done to it, is much too delicate for such swift jobbing-work. I question on the other hand, whether it may not be politic just now, to have one monthly part without a long story[†1]—merely for the sake of variety.

My thoughts have been upon my book since I came down, and I do not know that I can hit upon a subject for the opening of the new Volume.[†2] I will let you know, however, by tomorrow night's post.

When I came back from Oxford last Sunday night, I found a letter from the Mr. Meriton you speak of (dated either on that day or the Saturday night) coolly requesting to have the [†a]then enclosed[†a] MS read and returned by the Monday Evening, when he would send for it. I wrote a short note, declining to undertake to peruse it on such terms—and put it up at the office on the Monday Morning—and there gave it to John to take to Tavistock House in the course of the day, "where it would be called for". Pray see who is to blame for there being any more trouble about it.

I have written to Mr. Brough, whose paper[†3] will do. I expect my brother[†4] down today, and, if he comes, will send it and the pathetic story up to you by him.

Miss Lynn's notions of a criminal trial are of the Nightmarest description. The prisoner makes statements on oath, and is examined besides![†5]

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 26 JULY 1855†

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Holly Lodge | Highgate | London.

Folkestone, Thursday Twenty Sixth July | 1855

My Dear Miss Coutts.

I am coming to town on Saturday for the day, and will call upon you about Midday if you should happen to be in town. If not, will you send me a note to the Household Words office, letting me know what days in next week I may give the Printers the choice of? In either case let me know where you are, and how.

Lighthouses have faded into the Past, and I am hard at work on my new book—looking at the sea as I write, and climbing all the Hills on the Downs when I have done, as if I had never known that lady wi' the long black Dress and the long White hanging-sleeves.[†6]

With kind regards to O[†7]

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CD.

To MRS JENNINGS,[†1] 26 JULY 1855*

MS Dickens House.

Folkestone, Kent | Twenty Sixth July, 1855.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mrs. Jennings, and begs to say that her note has been forwarded to him here, this day.

Miss Burdett Coutts's Home is not established for the reception of such cases as Mrs. Jennings describes. But it has sheltered and reclaimed such young women among others, and if Mrs. Jennings will send Mr. Dickens the history of the case in which she kindly interests herself—the circumstances and nature of the theft, the parentage and education of the girl, her term of service &c—Mr. Dickens will be able to decide (and will at once decide), whether it is sufficiently within the rules to render it desirable that he should see the applicant.[†2]

Mr. Dickens will be in town on Saturday Morning. If Mrs. Jennings will address her reply to him at the Household Words Office 16 Wellington Street North, Strand, it will save time.

To EDWARD CHAPMAN, 27 JULY 1855*

MS Fales Collection, New York University Library.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS,
Saturday Twenty Seventh July 1855

My Dear Sir

Will you please to send a set of my Cheap Edition,[†3] Carriage Paid, addressed to William Evans Esquire, Eton.[†4]

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Edward Chapman Esquire

To RICHARD BENTLEY, 28 JULY 1855*

MS Berg Collection.

OFFICE OF HOUSEHOLD WORDS,
Saturday Twenty Eighth July 1855

Dear Sir

I am exceedingly sorry to learn by your note that you are not well.[†5]

I enclose you the cheque[†6] for the copies of the Village Coquettes, and shall feel obliged if you will have the goodness to send them in a parcel, here, with "From Mr. Bentley", outside.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Richard Bentley Esquire

To MESSRS NATHAN & CO., 28 JULY 1855*

MS L. & H. Nathan Ltd.

Folkestone | Twenty Eighth July, 1855.

Mr. Charles Dickens begs to inform Messrs. Nathan that he is quite satisfied with their letter and its statement of account. The ladies' dresses having been on hire six nights,[†1] the account will stand thus.

Farce Bill	3.	6.	6.
Ladies' Dresses	6.	6.	0.
Mr. Nathan's attendance	1.	10.	0
	£11.	2.	6

For this amount Mr. Dickens encloses a cheque.[†2]

August

To MISS BURDETT COUTTS, 1 AUGUST 1855*

MS Morgan Library. Address: Miss Burdett Coutts | Holly Lodge | Highgate | London.

Folkestone, Wednesday First August | 1855.

My Dear Miss Coutts.

Our correspondence is of the most astounding description! I was in town all day Saturday—heard nothing from you—and received your note to day![†3] My head aches at the immensity of the absurdity. It is now too late to arrange with the Printers (who have had their eyes wide open in expectancy ever since Saturday), for this week; for, both to day and tomorrow, I must be at work here, or break Mr. Wills's heart. If I don't hear from you to say No, I will come up to Holly Lodge between 2 and 4 on Saturday Afternoon. If I do hear from you, I will be obedient to anything you tell me.

Ever Dear Miss Coutts | Most Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

To [MESSRS BRADBURY[†4] & EVANS], 4 AUGUST 1855

Mention in Parke-Bernet Galleries catalogue No. 321, 3 Dec 1941; MS 1 p.; dated London, 4 Aug 55.

Regarding the printing of a book.

To MISS HARRIET HANCOCK, 4 AUGUST 1855*

MS Huntington Library.

This is the best I can do in the Italian direction.[†1]

Servitore umilissimo.

C. D.

Saturday Fourth August 1855.

To C. C. FELTON, [6 AUGUST 1855]

Mention in next.

Introducing a friend of Frank Stone's, about to go to the United States.

To FRANK STONE, 6 AUGUST 1855*

MS Benoliel Collection.

Tavistock House |—(There's an Idiot!) | I mean Folkestone
Monday Sixth August 1855

My Dear Pumpion.

Read the enclosed letter to Felton. On consideration, I have felt that the real way to do this poor gentleman[†2] a service. I write and receive so many general letters of introduction across the Atlantic, of which nothing ever comes or is expected to come, that I think this will be worth a whole bundle of such formalities.

Ever Sparkling

CD.

To ALBERT SMITH, 8 AUGUST 1855

Extract in Dobell's catalogue, Oct 1926; MS 1 p.; dated 3 Albion Villas, Folkestone, 8 Aug 55; addressed Albert Smith.

Chamouni[†3] shall have my sovereign,[†4] willingly, and you shall come down here to "collect it"; whenever you feel disposed for a quiet Sunday rest, write and tell me so. I have been away for a few days, or would have answered your note sooner.

To MESSRS BRADBURY & EVANS, [10 AUGUST 1855]

Mention in next.

Saying he had cut off the name of the story from the first proof-slip.

To MESSRS BRADBURY & EVANS, 10 AUGUST 1855*

MS Mr H. E. Quick.

Folkestone, Friday Night | Tenth August 1855

My Dear B and E.

In making up my parcel to day, I made a mistake of larger dimensions than the Parcel. I told you I had cut off the name of the story.[†1] I forgot to do it. Please cut it off with your own official shears, from the first slip.

Ever Faithfully Yours

CD.

To HENRY AUSTIN, 12 AUGUST 1855*

MS Morgan Library.

Folkestone, Sunday Twelfth August | 1855.

My Dear Henry.

I am heartily obliged to you for so kindly taking so much trouble in the Gad's Hill matter, and for putting me in such complete possession of the facts. I am going up to town tomorrow morning, and will communicate all particulars to Wills, and empower him to offer £1500. It is the sum I originally mentioned to him as what appeared to me a fair price. I would give £1750 or £1800, but I think not more. I doubt their taking it.

Would it be a very difficult job, in new-slating the roof, to carry those low garrets up, four or five feet higher? If I became the purchaser and it could be easily done, I should certainly be disposed to do it.

You see, I cannot afford to buy the place for my own occupation, or it might be worth more to me. I can only regard it as an investment, and test it by the return it would give me in money, for so much money laid out.

Our little boys go to school on the 1st. of September. Both with a view to the room they occupy, and to the noise of their boots on the wooden stairs (apparently 150 pair), I propose your visit to come off, after they are gone. Now, any day after the last of this month, will be convenient to us for its commencement. And if you will arrange your plans accordingly, and will let me know what they are when you and Lætitia shall have settled them, we shall consider the matter arranged and shall look for your coming. There are charming Down-walks here.

Loves from all. | Ever affectionately

CD.

We shall be able to give you a little Dressing-Room, in which you can work if you wish.

To JOHN FORSTER, [?12-14 AUGUST 1855]

Extract in F, XI, iii, 827. Date: placed by Forster with 1855 extracts; refers to press report of 30 July and 9 Aug.

About an enquiry, he said, O what a fine aspect of political economy it is, that the noble professors of the science on the adulteration committee[†1] should have tried to make Adulteration a question of Supply and Demand![†2] We shall never get to the Millennium, sir, by the rounds of that ladder; and I, for one, won't hold by the skirts of that Great Mogul of impostors, Master M'Culloch![†3]

To MISS HARRIET PARR,[3[[sic]]†4] [14 AUGUST 1855]

Extract in F, XI, iii, 824. Date: Folkestone, 14th of August 1855, according to Forster.

I read your tale[4[[sic]]†5] with the strongest emotion, and with a very exalted admiration of the great power displayed in it. Both in severity[†1] and tenderness I thought it masterly. It moved me more than I can express to you. I wrote to Mr. Wills that it had completely unsettled me for the day, and that by whomsoever it was written, I felt the highest respect for the mind that had produced it. It so happened that I had been for some days at work upon a character externally[†2] like the Aunt.[†3] And it was very strange to me indeed to observe how the two people seemed to be near to one another at first, and then turned off[†4] on their own ways so wide asunder.[†5] I told Mr. Wills that I was not sure whether I could have prevailed upon myself to present to a large audience the terrible consideration of hereditary madness, when it was reasonably probable that there must be many—or some—among them whom it would awfully, because personally, address.[†6] But I was not obliged to ask myself the question, inasmuch as the length of the story rendered it unavailable for Household Words.[†7] I speak of its length in reference to that publication only; relatively to what is told in it, I would not spare a page of your manuscript. Experience shows me that a story in four portions is best suited to the peculiar requirements of such a journal, and I assure you it will be an uncommon satisfaction to me if this correspondence should lead to your enrolment among its contributors.[†8] But my strong and sincere conviction of the vigour and pathos of this beautiful tale, is quite apart from, and not to be influenced by, any ulterior results. You had no existence to me when I read it. The actions and sufferings of the characters affected me by their own force and truth, and left a profound impression on me.[†9]

To J. B. TOLLPUTT,[†1] 14 AUGUST 1855*

MS Private. Address: Mr. J. B. Tolputt | 13 Guildhall Street.

Folkestone, Tuesday August Fourteenth | 1855.

Sir

I regret that I cannot possibly have the pleasure of complying with your request. I am very busily occupied with my own pursuits, and have already made as many promises to read for the benefit of Institutions, as I can redeem within the next year and a half. So many applications similar to yours are made to me, that it is often a serious encroachment on my time to answer them, however briefly. In these facts, and not in any indifference on my part, lies my excuse.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Mr. J B Tollput.

To UNKNOWN CORRESPONDENT, 14 AUGUST 1855*

MS Mr P. J. Valckenberg.

Folkestone, Kent. | Fourteenth August, 1855.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his Compliments to the Author of the Wife's Trials,[†2] and begs to say that he has just now safely received that book, together with the author's two esteemed letters. His having been travelling a little, has delayed the receipt of the volumes.

Mr. Dickens feels bound to state that he does not entertain the strong opinions on the general subject,[†3] which are so earnestly expressed in his correspondent's first note. His observation and experience have not led him to such conclusions, except in individual cases; on the whole he has found the husband enduring little less than the Wife.[†4] But he is open to conviction, and promises himself the pleasure of reading the Wife's Trials with as unbiassed a mind as its author can suppose a husband to possess.

He begs very cordially to thank the author.

To LORD LYTTELTON,[†1] 16 AUGUST 1855*

MS The Right Hon. Viscount Cobham.

Folkestone, Kent. | Thursday Sixteenth August, 1855

Dear Lord Lyttelton.

Your note and the enclosed[†2] were forwarded to me here, this morning. I hasten to reply to you.

Although there is no doubt that Mr. Macready was opposed in certain quarters for rigorously weeding out that great indecency, he persisted throughout his management;[†3] and his example (like most good examples), has not died out.[†4] Mr. Webster when Lessee of the Haymarket[†5] (formerly one of the worst Theatres in London, in this respect), rescued the Saloon and passages from the defilement, and made

The House quite reproachless in that particular. I have not seen any violation of the same rule, at the Adelphi,[†6] which is now under his management. Within these few months, I was at two Theatres in the City,[†7] of a sufficiently common sort as to their prices, but conducted with the greatest propriety. In both, the Saloon was merely a quiet place of refreshment; and in one, the Managers themselves attended in it between the pieces, to see that it was cheaply, respectably, and properly administered. The consequence was, that small tradesmen with their wives and children were taking their coffee or what not there, with as little offence as in their own homes. Generally, there is a striking improvement in all London Theatres as to this matter.

In France and Italy, within my experience, there has never been any such association between the Theatre and the open pursuit of that miserable calling. In Paris last February, I found a new little Theatre[†8] open for Pantomime and comic singing and dancing, where I observed a number of women who were evidently of that class; and I afterwards learned that the upper tier of boxes had the speciality of being addressed to them. Still, even there, they were of the Audience, and conducted themselves like the rest of the Audience, and nobody was obliged to know the Truth.

When the custom began to die out of our London Theatres, a certain Dancing Establishment arose (I mean a Ball Room) which great numbers of Women regularly frequent.[†1] Great order is observed there, but it is understood to be a place where this allurement is always to be found, and to which few resort for anything else. I think the Police has shewn a sound discretion in not interfering with it, and that it drains off the stragglers who might otherwise be found in some Theatres where the Managers are not much troubled with sensitive feelings. It is always to be borne in mind that, in a great City, Prostitution will be somewhere. Something is gained when it is by itself, and is in a degree under the restraint of a sort of social opinion.

The days when the Slips of English Theatres, and the Saloons, were habitually devoted to this display, are on the whole decidedly gone. The neighbouring houses which the women maintained, have almost disappeared. I have not for a long time seen any glaring obtrusion of Prostitution at any Theatre I have visited.

Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The | Lord Lyttelton

To F. O. WARD,[†2] 17 AUGUST 1855

Extracts in Walter T. Spencer, Forty Years in My Bookshop, 1923, p. 128([aa]), and N, II, 685 ([bb]); dated [a]"Folkestone, Friday 17th August, 1855."; salutation "My Dear Ward"[a].

[b]I am engaged in a practical sanitary move, [a]working, walking, and sea-watering here, and only going into the great Oven for Household Words purposes[b], and coming away again as soon as I have baked that weekly bread.[a]

To LADY DUFF GORDON,[†3] [18 AUGUST 1855]

Envelope only,[†4] MS Free Library of Philadelphia. Address: Lady Duff Gordon | Esher | Surrey. PM 18 AUG 1855.

To HENRY AUSTIN, 19 AUGUST 1855*

MS University of Texas.

Folkestone, Sunday August Nineteenth | 1855.

My Dear Henry.

Saturday the 8th. of September will suit us admirably—Couldn't possibly be better. Therefore we shall expect you on that day by the boat from Boulogne.

No news yet from Gad's Hill—There is almost always a cool breeze in these parts—houses shaken yesterday, by the firing at Boulogne[†1]—Camp at Shorncliffe[†2] composed, generally speaking, of the most hideous blackguards[†3] these eyes ever did rest upon. Out of King William Street Strand, I never beheld such Phrenology.

Ever affectionately

CD.

Loves from all to Lætitia.

To MESSRS BRADBURY & EVANS, 19 AUGUST 1855

Mention in John Anderson Jr catalogue No. 343; dated 19 Aug 55; addressed "My dear B. & E.".

Referring to No. I of Little Dorrit.

To JOHN FORSTER, [19 AUGUST 1855]

Extracts in F, VII, i, 623-4. Date: 19 Aug according to Forster.

As to the story I am in the second number,[†4] and last night and this morning had half a mind to begin again, and work in what I have done, afterwards.[†5] It occurred to him that, by making the fellow-travellers at once known to each other, he missed an effect. It struck me that it would be a new thing to show people coming together, in a chance way, as fellow-travellers, and being in the same place, ignorant of one another, as happens in life; and to connect them afterwards, and to make the waiting for that connection a part of the interest.[†1]

To THOMAS BEARD, 23 AUGUST 1855

MS Dickens House. Address (envelope, MS Private): Thomas Beard Esquire | Morning Herald Office | Shoe Lane | London PM 24 Aug 55.

Folkestone | Thursday August Twenty Third, | 1855

My Dear Boreas.[†2]

I hope it may not be uninteresting to you to receive the following

Report.[†3]

The Down-Lands in this neighbourhood—principally consisting of a chain of grass-covered hills of considerable elevation—are enchantingly fresh and free.

The Punch and Cyder Cup are in the highest perfection.

The room intended for the reception of Boreas, is always ready.

The host of Boreas, having nothing particular to do—except a new book, twenty months long—Household Words—and other trifles—has taken to expend his superfluous vitality in a swarming up the face of a gigantic and precipitous cliff in a lonely spot overhanging the wild sea-beach. He may be generally seen (in clear weather)[†4] from the British Channel, suspended in mid-air with his trousers very much torn, at fifty minutes past 3 P. M.

(Signed)
CHARLES DICKENS

To MISS ANNE BROWN, 23 AUGUST 1855

Text from N, II, 685.

Folkestone | Thursday Twenty Third August 1855

My Dear Anne

I cannot tell you how grieved I am to lose you,[†5] or what an affectionate remembrance I shall always preserve of your friendship and fidelity during sixteen years.

In addition to the enclosed little present from Mrs. Dickens and myself, pray accept the accompanying small box from me.[†6] I have had its contents engraved with my initials, thinking they may one day have some slight value as a remembrance of me, which does not belong to themselves.

I hope you may be very happy, and may think you have reason to recollect me half as kindly as I shall recollect you through the rest of my life.

Faithfully your friend
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To MRS JENNINGS, 26 AUGUST 1855*

MS Dickens House.

Folkestone, Kent | Twenty Sixth August, 1855.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mrs. Jennings, and begs to say that the case[†1] is one of a very difficult kind, and that he can give no opinion as to its reception into Miss Coutts's Home, without having some knowledge of the girl's appearance and manner. As he is not just now certain when he will be in town again, he has mentioned the matter to the Superintendent, and has begged that lady to be in the way, in case she should receive a day's notice from Mrs. Jennings that the girl is to be brought for her to question, and to report upon to Mr. Dickens. Her name and address are, Mrs. Marchmont, Urania Cottage, near The White Horse, Shepherd's Bush.

To THE HON. ROBERT LYTTON,[†2] 26 AUGUST 1855*

MS Universiteits-Bibliotheek, Amsterdam.

Folkestone, Kent. | Sunday Twenty Sixth August 1855

My Dear Sir

The Bearer of this, my friend Mr. Wills who is my other self in Household Words, comes to Paris[†3] to get together a little information that we want for those pages.[†4] I give him this note to you, in the assurance that if you can assist him in his object, you will kindly and readily do so—his object being mine.

I think of passing this next winter in Paris, when I hope we shall have the pleasure of often seeing you.[†1]

Believe me | Very faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Robert Lytton Esquire

To SIR JOSEPH OLLIFFE, 26 AUGUST 1855†

MS Guildhall Library, London.

Folkestone, Kent. | Sunday Twenty Sixth August, 1855

My Dear Olliffe.

A friend of mine will call upon you with a note, next Wednesday or Thursday morning, who comes to Paris from me, with an object I can explain on this side of paper.

His name is Mr. Wills, and he is my sub-Editor and confidential right hand in Household Words. I want to shew our ridiculous Corporation[†2] how improvements are made in Paris; and he is to get the materials for an interesting account of those now in progress there.[†3]

If you can think of any one to whom you can introduce him with this view, or if you can put him in any way of knowing what he will tell you he wants to know, I shall be heartily obliged to you.

Georgina is writing to Lady Olliffe,—and I think by this Post. I suppose you are all half dead of the Queen,[†4] and that the Parisians don't find Her Majesty particularly handsome.

Maclise and Joe[†5] were last heard of, going up to the top of Vesuvius in the blazing sunlight of August (if you ever heard of such a thing), and afterwards dropping on beds at Naples in a state of insensibility.[†6]

Ever Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

Sir Joseph Olliffe

To RAIKES CURRIE,[†1] 28 AUGUST 1855

Text from N, II, 686-7.

Folkestone | Tuesday, Twenty Eighth August 1855

My Dear Sir

Being at Deal yesterday, I could not answer your friendly letter last night; though I assure you I feel very truly obliged to you for it, and am far indeed from being indifferent to your kindness.

I cannot come to you tomorrow, or I would have gladly availed myself of the privilege you offer me of bringing Mr. Wilkie Collins (who is our only visitor now) with the family caravan. But just because I was in town on Saturday and at Deal yesterday, I am obliged to keep myself in my own room until tomorrow afternoon. I have lately fallen hard at work upon a new book, and, when I am so engaged, I am always by myself from 9 to 2. It is a part of my necessary habit to go out and walk afterwards, until 5. My dinner time, bed time and whole time, I arrange according to the system that experience has shewn me to make my work easiest and happiest; and while I myself do this during eight months of the year, in London, with as much constancy as one can reasonably exercise in such a place, I do it rigidly for four months in the country; never going anywhere except upon an idle country jaunt. It is not that a day or a week is an object to me; but that I cannot comfortably do what I want to do, unless I am systematic in my own way.

These are details that I never trouble anybody with; and I only inflict them upon you, because I feel responsive to your hospitality and want to explain myself for not appearing so. I hope within a week to come over to Sandling Park[†2] with Mrs. Dickens and make my personal acknowledgments. If I may hope in the meantime to have unceremoniously shewn you how I am obliged to lay a number of my own inclinations on my desk every day and how rare my deviations are, I shall have got rid of a positive uneasiness.

Wonderful legends are afloat here of the great success of last Wednesday's festivities.[†3]

Believe me my Dear Sir | Faithfully yours

[CHARLES DICKENS]

September

To THE DEAN OF PETERBOROUGH, 1 SEPTEMBER 1855

MS Mr Alfred C. Berol.

Folkestone, Kent | Saturday Evening First September 1855

Dear Sir

Resuming the correspondence I had the pleasure of holding with you some time since,[†1] I beg to say that I shall be happy to read my Christmas Carol at Peterborough, on the evening of Tuesday the 18th. of December.

As I shall stay there but a few hours and shall probably be accompanied by at least two friends,[†2] I shall not be able to have the honor of accepting your hospitality; but I feel greatly obliged to you for offering it.

When the arrangements for the occasion shall begin to be in progress, may I beg you to refer their active director[†3] to my friend Mr. W. H. Wills, of the Household Words Office, London. Mr. Wills will give him every information he may desire as to the time the reading will occupy, and as to my own little requirements with a view to position &c.

I am Dear Sir | Very faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

The Very Reverend | The Dean of Peterborough

To W. H. WILLS, 1 SEPTEMBER 1855*

MS Huntington Library.

Folkestone | Saturday Night | First September 1855

My Dear Wills

I found the Pavilion[†4] nearly full, on receipt of your letter (I am afraid we are quite so), but Mrs. Breach[†5] warranted a room on the 3rd. floor. In said room you will find this welcome to your native shores,[†6] and the enclosed from Mrs. Wills—which you will like a great deal better. Seek me when you are restored in the morning, at 3 Albion Villas, on the Cliff, four doors from the church.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To W. H. WILLS, 4 SEPTEMBER 1855*

MS Huntington Library.

Folkestone | Tuesday Fourth September 1855

My Dear Wills.

I write these few lines, on the chance of their reaching you somewhere.

There is a paper by a Mrs. Jenkyn[†7]—Mrs. Gaskell's friend—which I promised to read, and which the Authoress has written to me about from Paris.[†8] It describes some religious procession abroad somewhere. Will you take care that it is not returned in the ordinary way? If it won't do, I must write a line with it.

I agree with you, touching Miss King.[†1] Will you write her a line to the effect that after reading the paper yourself and thinking it not suited to us, you referred it to me and found that I reluctantly arrived at the same conclusion? Charley shall bring it to the office when he comes up next Monday.

I have tarnished the copper-key, and hope to circulate 30,000 extra[†2] among the Coppersmiths.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To BERNHARD TAUCHNITZ, 5 SEPTEMBER 1855

Text from Curt Otto, Der Verlag Bernhard Tauchnitz, 1837-1912, Leipzig, 1912, p. 53.

Folkestone, Kent, Wednesday, Septbr. 5th, 1855.

As we arranged that I should let you know as soon as my plans for a new book were completed, I beg to inform you that I purpose beginning, on the 30th. of November next, a new work in 20 monthly numbers, of the length and form of David Copperfield, Bleak House, etc.

I wish to entrust it to you, for continental purposes, as far as I possibly can; and I shall be glad to hear from you at your leisure on the subject.[†3] My address will be here, until the middle of October.

All my family desire to be kindly remembered to you and yours, and Charles in particular is very desirous to be gratefully mentioned.

To W. H. WILLS, 5 SEPTEMBER 1855

MS Huntington Library.

Folkestone, Wednesday Fifth September, | 1855

My Dear Wills.

I have a very strong misgiving that the White Feather[†4] is plagiarized from an old paper in Blackwood[†5]—one of the stories in the Nights at Mess,[†6] I think. I am perfectly sure that there is a well-known paper, originally published in Blackwood, working out the same idea. White is coming here to a Lodging tonight, and I will consult his remembrance about it—indeed, I don't know but it was his writing—in the meantime the White Feather must stand over, and I have put in, in its place, Miss Lynn's Winifred's Vow.[†7] Which is a very pretty story indeed.

It is, however, three Columns shorter; and as you have not sent me any list of the Articles in hand, I cannot suggest how to fill up the deficiency. There is, however, ample time for you to communicate with Morley on the subject.[†1] They shall have my paper[†2] at Whitefriars, I hope on Saturday Morning—at latest on Monday.

I hope you are enjoying your holiday.[†3]

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To MR GARDINER,[†4] 7 SEPTEMBER 1855*

MS Mr Peter Harries.

Folkestone, Kent. | Seventh September 1855

Mr. Charles Dickens sends his compliments to Mr. Gardiner, and begs to say that he does not remember to have subscribed to the Mesmeric Infirmary,[†5] otherwise than as a donor of Three Guineas. He begs Mr. Gardiner to inform him what subscription the Memorandum left at his house in town, refers to.

To W. H. WILLS, 11 SEPTEMBER 1855

MS Huntington Library.

Folkestone, Tuesday Eleventh September 1855

My Dear Wills. I do not write because I have anything to say—for I have nothing—but merely to let you know that I have received your unanswered letters.[†6]

The White Feather taboo, on the ground of its strong resemblance, in idea, to the Sir Frizzle Pumpkin Story. I don't think it at all trenching on the Fair Maid of Perth,[†7] but in respect of the Frizzle it is a plagiarism.

As the French Editorial Phalanx[†8] do not reply to your letter but write as if they had never received it, I think it will be best not to answer this letter at all.

Mrs. Wills can answer the military woman[†8] as she thinks best—either to the effect that she knows it is of no use to ask me, or that she has asked me, and finds me to be much too busily engaged with my own pursuits. Anyhow, I am not going to do what the martial woman wants.

I am just now trying to settle to No. 3 of the new book—a hideous state of mind in which I walk down stairs once in every five minutes, look out of window once in every two, and do nothing else.

Mrs. Gaskell, fearful—fearful.[†1] If I were Mr. G. O Heaven how I would beat her!

Peter Cunningham has been staying at the Pavilion (and dining here) since Friday. He went up by Maidstone and Rochester yesterday, and we walked over Blue Bell Hill[†2] with him. At Paddock Wood we found that his own particular Audit Office messenger had been cut to pieces by a Locomotive on Friday night.[†3]

So no more at present from Yours always
CD.

To PETER CUNNINGHAM, 12 SEPTEMBER 1855

Extract in Parke-Bernet catalogue No. SN 1352. MS. 3 pp.; dated Folkestone, 12 Sep 55; addressed P. Cunningham.

We must put our shoulders to the wheel and come forward ... throwing ourselves into the tide, and a going with the stream ... I had quite forgotten the reference to Tiddy Doll,[†4] though I value Humphrey Clinker better than anyone.

To JOHN LEECH, 12 SEPTEMBER 1855

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: John Leech Esquire.

Folkestone, Wednesday Twelfth September | 1855.

My Dear Leech.

I send this Dispatch round, to report myself as rather tied just at present to the Austins—as taking crawls rather than walks—and having the regular habits you so well know how to appreciate (ha ha!) broken in their main gymnastic respects. But better times are in store; and I will report them also, as soon as they shall be on view.

Ever Faithfully
CD.

John Leech Esquire

To MARK LEMON, 12 SEPTEMBER 1855

MS Brotherton Library, Leeds.

Folkestone | Wednesday Twelfth September | 1855.

My Dear Mark.

I am heartily obliged to you for sending the Telegraph Message, which was received here with tremendous excitement, and disseminated all over the place.

Legends were in circulation at the breakfast table that you were likely to appear last Sunday. Plorn Senior[†1] said, No. "For", observed that remarkable man, "if he had meant to come, he would have written to me, and I should have been at the Station to meet him."

Best loves from all.

Ever affectionately

CD.

To WILLIAM AXON,[†2] [16 SEPTEMBER 1855]

Mention in To Giles, 16 Sep 55. Date: probably written the same day.

Stating he has not leisure to comply with his request, proposed by Mr Giles, to read at the Chester Institution.

To JOHN FORSTER, 16 SEPTEMBER 1855

Extracts in F, VII, ii, 572-3*n* and VIII, i, 624. Date: second extract also 16 Sep, according to Forster.

16th of Sept. I am going to read for them here, on the 5th of next month, and have answered in the last fortnight thirty applications to do the like all over England, Ireland, and Scotland. Fancy my having to come from Paris in December to do this, at Peterborough, Birmingham, and Sheffield[†3]—old[†4] promises.

I am just now getting to work on number three:[†5] sometimes enthusiastic, more often dull enough. There is an enormous outlay in the Father of the Marshalsea chapter,[†6] in the way of getting a great lot of matter into a small space. I am not quite resolved, but I have a great idea of overwhelming that family with wealth.[†7] Their condition would be very curious. I can make Dorrit[†8] very strong in the story, I hope.

To F. G. FRANCIS, [MID-SEPTEMBER 1855]

Text from N, II, 678. Date: before CD saw him: see To Wightwick, 24 Sep.

Tavistock House, London

Sir.

You must not suppose that I have forgotten the correspondence between us[†9] as to the Reading I am about to give at Folkestone for the Harveian Institute. I have now settled the date, and made arrangements for the same, and hope the members of your Society will be admitted on very favourable terms. As soon as your arrangements are made, let me know.

Yours faithfully
[CHARLES DICKENS]

To THE REV. WILLIAM GILES,[†1] 16 SEPTEMBER 1855

MS New York University Library. Address: The Reverend William Giles | Netherleigh House | Chester.

Folkestone, Kent. | Sunday Sixteenth September, 1855

My Dear Mr. Giles

I think you will perceive, on a very brief reconsideration of the matter, that you have written to me rather hastily. It will perhaps occur to you when I faintly suggest such a possibility, that—supposing me ever to have seen or heard of your returned letter—I could scarcely divine from whom it came, without opening it. And your offence being that it was not opened [†a](for I could not have refused it if I had opened it),[†a] the personal nature of the outrage would seem to disappear.

Hundreds of letters from every conceivable kind of person of whom I have no sort of knowledge, on every possible and impossible subject with which I have nothing to do, are addressed to me every week of my life. All those that are paid, my servant takes in. All those that are not paid, he refuses—and refuses twice, because the Post Office has a regulation directing such letters to be offered twice. I can only suppose that your letter was unstamped, or was too heavy for its stamp. I only know that in the ordinary course of a very plain business arrangement without which I could never get through a day, it fell short of me; and that no trace of its existence was ever insinuated into my innocent head until it ached with wonder at your odd suspicions this very morning at breakfast.

I cannot do what the Chester Institution[†2] want me to do, simply because I am asked to do the like some fifty times a week. Five such letters I have answered this morning, and many more in the course of this last week. I have written to Mr. Axon, saying that I have not leisure to comply with his request preferred to me through you. Pray do not suppose that this is malice-aforethought and deliberate treason against my old tutor.

And now I hope you are in a good humour again, and think better of me.

Always Faithfully Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

The Reverend William Giles

To THOMAS LAXTON,[†1] 16 SEPTEMBER 1855*

MS Berg Collection. Address: Thomas Laxton Esquire Junr. | Literary Institution | Stamford.

Folkestone, Kent | Sixteenth September | 1855.

Mr. Charles Dickens presents his compliments to Mr. Laxton, and begs to say that he cannot have the pleasure of complying with the request preferred to him in Mr. Laxton's letter. He is busily occupied with his own pursuits, and it will take him at least two years to redeem the few promises he has already made to read for the benefit of Mechanics' Institutions.

To THE HON. MRS RICHARD WATSON, 16 SEPTEMBER 1855

MS Huntington Library. Address (MS Mrs Victoria Beddy): The Hon. Mrs. Watson. | Rockingham Castle | Northamptonshire. PM SP 18 1855.

Folkestone, Sunday Sixteenth September 1855

My Dear Mrs. Watson.

This will be a short letter, but I hope not unwelcome. If you knew how often I write to you—in intention—I don't know where you would find room for the correspondence.

Catherine tells me that you want to know the name of my new book. I cannot bear that you should know it from anyone but me. It will not be made public until the end of October;[†2] the title is,

NOBODY'S FAULT.[†3]

Keep it as the apple of your eye—an expressive form of speech, though I have not the least idea of what it means.[†4]

Next, I wish to tell you that I have appointed to read at Peterboro', on Tuesday the 18th. of December. I have told the Dean that I cannot accept his hospitality, and that I am going with Mr. Wills to the Inn. Therefore I shall be absolutely at your disposal, and shall be more than disappointed if you don't stay with us. As the time approaches, will you let me know your arrangements, and whether Mr. Wills can bespeak any rooms for you in arranging for me? Georgy will give you our address in Paris as soon as we shall have settled there. We shall leave here, I think, in rather less than a month from this time.

You know my state of mind, as well as I do—indeed, if you don't know it much better, it is not the state of mind I take it to be. How I work, how I walk, how I shut myself up, how I roll down hills and climb up cliffs, how the new story is everywhere—heaving in the sea, flying with the clouds, blowing in the wind—how I settle to nothing, and wonder (in the old way) at my own incomprehensibility. I am getting on pretty well—have done the first two numbers—and am just now beginning the third; which egotistical announcements I make to you, because I know you will be interested in them.

All the house send their kindest loves. I think of inserting an advertisement in the Times, offering to submit the Plornishghenter to public competition; I to receive £50,000 if such another boy cannot be found; and to pay £5 (my fortune) if he can.

Ever My Dear Mrs. Watson

Affectionately Yours
CHARLES DICKENS

To W. H. WILLS, 16 SEPTEMBER 1855

MS Huntington Library.

Folkestone, Sixteenth September 1855

My Dear Wills.

Scrooge is delighted to find that Bob Cratchit is enjoying his holiday in such a delightful situation; and he says (with that warmth of nature which has distinguished him ever since his conversion) "Make the most of it, Bob; make the most of it!"†1

†a[I am just getting to work on No. 3 of the new book, and am in the hideous state of mind belonging to that condition.]†a

Among the list of matter in hand, you will find Peter the Great,†2 by Peter of the Audit Office.†3 He says there are some "new and curious facts"†4 in it. I have not read it, but sent it straight to Arry.

What about the Paris paper?†5

I have not a word of news. I am steeped in my story, and rise and fall by turns into enthusiasm and depression.

Couldn't a fight be got up between the female-Major and Mrs. Gaskell?†6

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To W. H. WILLS, 18 SEPTEMBER 1855

MS Huntington Library.

Folkestone, Tuesday Night, September Eighteenth | 1855

My Dear Wills.

THE ERARDS.[†1]

I don't know that I have the least knowledge of Mr. Robertson,[†2] though he addresses me as "Dear Dickens". I send you his letter. Will you answer it to the effect that the article is accepted (it is a very good one for us). I send it to Arry to be printed, by this post. It should go into the next No. made up, as it is apropos of the Queen's late visit to Paris[†3] and will get out of date. Will you take care that Hogarth has it to look over, in order that there may be nothing in it against his positive knowledge.

THE RIVAL QUEENS[†4]

I am sorry to say, Taboo. I will enclose it to Holdsworth, with instructions to retain it for your directions.

The Old Cathedral City[†5]

I will try to read to-morrow.

Out of Town

(an article of mine for next week's No.).[†6] I sent Breach of the Pavilion[†7] a Proof of it, and he is in the Seventh Heaven of Delight and wants 500 copies of the No. Will you instruct Holdsworth to send them down on the Tuesday night by the Mail Train, so that Breach may have them on the Wednesday Morning;[†8] and will you forward him a note from yourself to Breach, to go in the Parcel, to the effect that you have the pleasure of forwarding them at my request and begging his acceptance of them. (He was so extraordinarily kind to me when I was ill,[†9] that I am glad of the opportunity of being able to make the little present.)

You

I suppose are fat and rosy

I am in the variable state consequent on the beginning of a new story

You and I

I suppose will foregather before long.

Ever Faithfully

CD.

To CHARLES DICKENS JNR, [19 SEPTEMBER 1855]

Mention in To Wills, 23 Sep 55. Date: "immediately" after receiving a letter from Mr Bates of Baring's.

Telling him that Baring's had an immediate vacancy for him.

To W. H. WILLS, 20 SEPTEMBER 1855*

MS Huntington Library.

Folkestone, Kent | Twentieth September 1855

My Dear Wills.

These Presents[†1] will greet you on your return home.

No. 1 relates to the Whistler at the Plough. I have no objection to making him any small advance you think right, if your knowledge of what has taken place between you interposes no bar.

No. 2 is from a man of whom (as you may suppose when you read it), I have no remembrance. If you will write to him in the usual way, saying that I am busily writing out of town, and that you will see him at the office such a day—enough.

No. 3 a paper that won't do. By Mrs. Gaskell's friend Mrs. Jenkyn.[†2] Her address is the Rue de Clichy, Paris. I forget the No. Perhaps you have it in the Address book. If so, let her know by post that I find it unfortunately not suited to us. If you have not got her direction, send the note (and the paper with it), to the care of Mrs. Gaskell.

No. 4 is the Haunted House.[†3] In respect whereof, I quite agree with you, though with great regret.

Faithfully Ever

CD.

To HENRY MORLEY, 21 SEPTEMBER 1855

MS Benoliel Collection.

Folkestone, Friday Night | September Twenty First, 1855

My Dear Morley.

I don't understand Wills's reference to me concerning Mrs. Gaskell's story,[†4] because I have no other knowledge of it than that he shewed me the first part, and that I have received no more. But he will be home tomorrow (Saturday) evening, as I learn from himself; and I have no doubt you will find the matter easy if you will kindly communicate with him on Sunday or Monday.

I heard (from the small bird who usually sings such songs) that you were seen here a while ago, talking to your little girl[†5] on the pier, and calling her (so the bird makes affidavit), a "Honey-Pot". I wish you had brought her up the Cliff to a Sanitary establishment always to be known by having all the windows open, and soap and water flying out of all the bedrooms.

Faithfully Yours

CHARLES DICKENS

Henry Morley Esquire

To JOHN LEECH, 22 SEPTEMBER 1855

MS Benoliel Collection. Address: John Leech Esquire.

Folkestone, Saturday | September Twenty Second 1855

My Dear Leech

If you are dispoged for a walk today, I'll "call" at from 2 to ½ past. Could get no walk to speak of, yesterday—being at work until halfpast Four.

Faithfully Always

CD.

To JOHN FORSTER, [23 SEPTEMBER 1855]

Extract in F, VII, ii, 573*n. Date:* 23 Sep 55, according to Forster.

I am going to read here, next Friday week. There are (as there are everywhere) a Literary Institution and a Working Men's Institution,[†1] which have not the slightest sympathy or connexion. The stalls are five shillings, but I have made them fix the working men's admission at threepence,[†2] and I hope it may bring them together. The event comes off in a carpenter's shop,[†3] as the biggest place that can be got.

To W. H. WILLS, 23 SEPTEMBER 1855

MS Huntington Library.

Folkestone, Sunday Twenty Third September | 1855

My Dear Wills.

H. W. 289[†4]

Sportsmanship in Earnest,[†5] for the first article most decidedly.

I wish you would ask Sala so to remodel that paper[†6] on the Kensington Gardens

Band,[†1] as not to argue the question with so ridiculous an antagonist as the Sentinel,[†2] and not to refer to the Verses.[†3] What their writer wants is notoriety, and why should we give it to the Blockhead. Sala's description is very pretty—perhaps he may see something else, to amplify it a little. But what I wish to do, is, not to argue the question and elevate these Sentinels and their preposterous Sentry-boxes. I wish you would explain to him what I mean, and tell him that I want to rest the subject upon its common sense and common humanity,[†4] without reference to any braying Jackass with a head—and nothing in it.

You have something to substitute, no doubt?

Nor would I just now put in From Kraiova through Orsova[†5]—though it may be paid for. If for no other reason, because there is a reference to Mazzini in it.[†6] I have a great regard for him, but this is not exactly the time to call him "A Keen Player"—with his Manifesto to the Neapolitans,[†7] in our hands.

Where is Peter the Great? Where is Erard?

I should like to see the re-modelled No.[†8]

I[†9]

cannot very well come up to town before Saturday, as I am very hard at work, and rather slowly. But I will arrange to come on Saturday, and on Saturday Week. Will that do for you, Bob?[†10]

I send you No. 2[†11]—not corrected. When you have read it, let Forster have it.

And I think that's all I have to say this morning. Except

CHARLEY.[†9]

On Wednesday I got a letter from Mr. Bates saying that when he recommended

